Economy takes priority as 98th Congress opens

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The search for solutions to the soaring unemployment and swollen federal deficits will dominate the new 98th Congress where Democratic House leaders have gained more power to control what happens in the chamber.

Although the economy is the No. 1 priority, other difficult problems — many lingering from last year — still must be solved.

The unfinished work includes propping up the Social Security system, setting new air pollution standards, investigating natural gas pricing, and adjusting farm support payments.

Congress convened Monday to begin a two-year session. The opening was mostly ceremonial, with little real work scheduled until after President Reagan makes his State of the Union address Jan. 25.

But Democratic House leaders succeeded in getting the House to approve several rules changes, included one which will make it harder for members to attach to spending bills legislation on issues like abortion, school busing, or military and foreign aid.

Republicans complained they will be muzzled by the changes, but Democrats say they will make the House run more efficiently.

Democrats also removed Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, from the Budget Committee. Gramm was one of the so-called "Boll Weevils," a group of Southern Democrats who frequently supported the Reagan administration's economic policies.

In preparing for business ahead, congressional leaders quickly made it clear that no matter what issues are unsettled, the economy would be addressed first.

"The time for waiting for jobs has passed," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., who was elected to his fourth term as speaker on Monday. "The time for action for jobs is at hand. The federal government must not bide its time waiting for an economic recovery. It must take those steps necessary to ensure a strong recovery."

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said he plans to develop a legislative agenda aimed at tackling economic problems well in advance of Reagan's speech.

"The first job has to be to get the economy going," Baker told reporters Monday.

With unemployment at 10.8 percent in November, House Democrats are likely to renew their push for a public service jobs program, with support in the Republican-controlled Senate. Baker has vowed that "there will be a jobs program" in the 98th Congress, whether Reagan supports it or not.

The House approved a $5.4 billion jobs program in the closing hours of the 97th Congress; the Senate adopted a more modest $1.2 billion version. Both were dropped in the face of a veto threat.

Congress also must start over in writing a federal budget, this one for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. High unemployment, however, has cut tax revenues while forcing federal spending up.

As a result, economists are predicting that the deficit in the 1984 budget may reach $200 billion, forcing lawmakers to choose between cutting domestic programs or defense to narrow the gap.

Congress also must worry about the financing crisis of the Social Security system, which it put off dealing with in the last session by permitting borrowing among the three trust funds for one year.

A bipartisan presidential commission has until Jan. 15 to recommend a blend of tax increases and benefit reductions to make up the $150 billion to $200 billion it says will be needed through this decade to keep the system afloat.

If Congress fails to act, it is estimated the retirement fund will be unable to meet benefit checks by July.

Congress also must deal with reauthorization of the Clean Air Act. Lawmakers wrestled with the problem all through the last two years, but were unable to reach a compromise.

The deadline for compliance with air quality standards was Dec. 31 under the old law, and more than 140 counties face possible federal sanctions, including construction bans and cuts in federal aid, if that deadline isn't extended soon.

Natural gas prices also could be an explosive issue in the session's early months. Quirks in the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act are causing dramatic increases in gas prices for many homeowners this winter, and pressure is on Congress to make corrective changes quickly.

In an effort to help the nation's declining rural economy, farm-belt congressmen are preparing for a third major commodity price support debate in as many years.

U.S. resumes supplying of paraquat

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government, in a move officials claim could cut marijuana imports by 70 percent, is going back into the business of helping foreign producers spray their pot plants with the weed-killer paraquat.

But marijuana smokers won't have to worry if they inhale smoke from contaminated marijuana because the risk of lung damage is "virtually non-existent," according to a government statement.

Imported marijuana accounts for about 90 percent of the U.S. supply.

Congress banned the government from getting involved in foreign paraquat operations from 1978 until the end of 1981 because of concern that paraquat could harm a smoker's lungs. At the time the ban was imposed, the government was helping Mexico kill its marijuana crops with paraquat.

But the ban was lifted 13 months ago after congressmen considered evidence that paraquat was not harmful. Before formally deciding to proceed, the State Department prepared an environmental impact statement.

"The department concluded that the overall benefits of using paraquat would significantly outweigh the potential problems of the herbicide," the State Department said in a statement.

"We estimate that marijuana supplies from foreign countries may be permanently reduced by as much as 60 to 70 percent if herbicide eradication is conducted," it said.

The statement added: "As with any commodity, reduced supplies result in higher prices. This would be particularly important with regard to school age children who would be less likely to afford a drug price increase."

The department estimated it would cost about $19 million to provide training and equipment for the spraying of about 75,000 acres.

Shooting scene

Houston police officers Monday gather evidence at the shooting scene in the emergency room admitting area at Ben Taub Hospital. A man who shot a security guard and grazed an off-duty officer later was shot by police.

Emergency room shaken by shootout

HOUSTON (AP) — Dozens of hospital workers and patients ran for cover or hid under desks when a man seeking treatment in an emergency room was wounded in a shootout with two policemen, officials said.

It was the second shooting at the Ben Taub General Hospital in less than three weeks.

Billy Ray Clark, 29, was shot in the stomach Monday after wresting a .38-caliber gun from a hospital security guard's holster and shooting two officers, police said.

"It was complete bedlam," said Wanda Hebert, a clerk in a nearby office who crawled under a desk when she heard the shots about 1:45 p.m. About 50 people were in the vicinity.

Clark was was listed in poor condition after undergoing surgery at Ben Taub, a huge medical complex that includes M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute, where a cancer specialist was shot to death in his office last month.

Police have made no arrests in the Dec. 17 killing of Dr. Fred G. Conrad, 53, who was shot six times in the head, neck and shoulder as he sat in his office.

In Monday's incident, witnesses said Clark pulled a .38-caliber pistol from the holster of Robert McMenomy, an off-duty Texas Medical Center police officer, and shot him in the stomach. He later fired a shot that grazed Houston Police Officer James H. Legg in the head.

McMenomy, 31, who was working as a security guard at the hospital, was listed in critical condition. Legg, an 18-year veteran with the Houston department, was in fair condition.

"The first shot went wild. The second shot hit him (McMenomy) in the stomach and he fell backwards and started screaming. He screamed about eight times and nobody could get to him," said Ann Siford, 52, of Shephard, Texas, who was at the hospital to check on a friend.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This article is third in a series explaining some implications of one of the most massive corporate dismemberments in history, the breakup of AT&T's Bell System, scheduled for Jan. 1, 1984.

Today's article details how and why Bell is being broken up.

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

Divestiture. Webster's Dictionary defines it as the compulsory transfer of title or disposal of interests (as stock in a corporation) upon government order.

In early 1984, American Telephone and Telegraph (AT&T) will split into a national company and seven regional holding companies, divesting itself of the 22 Bell Operating Companies (BOCs).

The out-of-court divestiture agreement was approved in August 1982 by U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene.

Each BOC will become part of a holding company, and a slimmer, restructured AT&T will be out of the local phone service business. It will shed about 75 percent of its assets, which total $145 billion. It will lose 60 to 70 percent of its staff.

One thing changed by the FCC order is that local operating companies, like Southwestern Bell, now are restricted to sell or lease only those telephones that they had in stock as of December 31, 1982. A few less popular models of phones may be unavailable late in 1983.

AT&T sold $51 billion in products and services this year, making it sixth in sales among U.S. companies listed in Dun's Business Rankings.

OVER A MILLION people work for Ma Bell in its present structure.

With annual sales of nearly $6 billion, the Southwestern Bell subsidiary of AT&T ranks 79th in sales among companies in Dun's Rankings.

Southwestern Bell is big, and seems healthy when compared to other BOCs, or to regional-grouped Bell companies. It has a bright future on its own — if management and know-how are sufficient for more growth.

Bell System Breakup

Third in a Series

Midland, said Bell spokesman Jay Allen, has grown to be the hub of this area's telephone network; the city continues to be a high priority service area for Southwestern Bell.

Southwestern Bell will continue to ask for rate increases, especially since it will not have other AT&T profit centers to lean on.

BELL ALSO WILL ask the PUC to up rates because of "inflation, tax depreciation changes and the desire for a better profit margin," according to an article on Bell-Texas PUC hearings.

BOCs will be able to make some additional money by charging all customers a long-distance access fee, and some money will flow in from all the long-distance services, including US TEL, SPRINT, MCI, and AT&T Long Lines.

What's uncertain is how much customers will have to dish out in order to keep Southwestern Bell healthy — as it is today — and keep the local phone systems operating.

BOCs will have to make money, beefing up local profit centers in order to keep their stock — in separate regional issues — from falling on the 1984 New York Stock Exchange.

The whole battle to divest AT&T of Southwestern Bell and other local affiliates has been heating up since the mid-70s.

MCI COMMUNICATIONS, a scrappy Washington, D.C. firm that sells communications services and long distance calls for consumers, sued Bell twice — winning a $1.8 billion damage award because Bell effectively barred them from the industry.

Money has never been better spent. MCI became a high-valued over-the-counter stock, and the MCI and Justice Department suits — along with others — have gradually opened the field to competition.

In the U.S., this industry — according to Business Week — has revenues of $75 billion each year. It's expected to double in the next five years.

In January, the Justice Department and AT&T announced they had

— Betty Sheeler

Betty Sheeler resigns county position

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Betty Sheeler, who five months ago lambasted the Midland County commissioners for their blase-to-indifferent attitude toward two county-run federal housing programs which she oversaw and effected some satisfaction, has resigned.

"I'm really just not pleased doing this work for the county anymore," Ms. Sheeler said Monday. "When your effectiveness is diminished, your enthusiasm is diminished."

In a terse letter dated Dec. 29, Ms. Sheeler informed County Judge Bill Ahders and the four commissioners that she was resigning as coordinator of housing for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD's) $1.6 million program to upgrade one of Midland's windowpane areas and as executive director of the rent subsidy program. Both jobs pay her $1,350 monthly.

"Dear Gentlemen," her letter read, "This is my resignation, effective Jan. 15, 1983, from the positions.... This notice complies with the terms (two-week notice) of the agreement for personal services expected.... Very truly yours, Betty Sheeler."

Attached to the typewritten letter of resignation was a penned noted to Ahders: "I do appreciate your assistance and the confidence in me which you voiced publicly several times."

Related story, Page 1C

Ms. Sheeler's discontent apparently stemmed from the commissioners' seeming indifference to and discouragement of her seeking additional federal grants to help rehabilitate or upgrade some of Midland's more impoverished areas, such as the windowpane area.

That area in south central Midland is so-named for it is surrounded by the city of Midland, is without city water and sewer services and is occupied by many poverty-level people. The HUD program is repairing housing and is building a day care center in Taylor Park. It calls for water and sewer lines and paved streets and gutters.

Ms. Sheeler got involved in the federal rent-subsidy program as a gratis community service project three years ago; she was paid nothing for the first year. The second year, she was given a token salary. With the less-than-unanimous approval of the Commissioners' Court, she was instrumental in gaining the $1.6 federal Community Developmment Block Grant (CDBG) for the county in 1981.

Last July, as the three-year program was well underway, she tendered her resignation as an officer and director of the Midland Housing Association and confronted the commissioners, who exhorted her to stay on. Then, on

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Rain is forecast by the National Weather Service for Tuesday, stretching from the Pacific Northwest into the Rocky Mountains. Snow is predicted for mountainous western regions of Idaho, Montana and Wyoming.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it should be sunny and warmer Wednesday with a high in the mid-50s. Westerly to northwesterly winds are expected to breeze through at 5-15mph.

Meanwhile, tonight should be clear and cold with the low in the mid-20s. Southwesterly winds 5-10 mph.

Monday's high of 36 fell short of the record high of 70 set in 1977, and the overnight low of 22 was quite a bit warmer than the record low of 8 set in 1959.

Odessan killed in shooting at motel

ODESSA — An unidentified 27-year-old Odessa man is dead after being shot several times at a West 2nd Street motel early today.

Police, who are witholding the victim's name pending notification of relatives, said a suspect taken in for questioning was later released after evidence at the scene indicated the shooting was a case of self-defense.

The shooting occurred after the victim knocked on the suspect's door at the Antlers Motel, 1102 W. 2nd, Apt. 16, shortly after 4 a.m, it was reported to police. The suspect said he went to the door and the victim opened fire with a pistol after telling him, "You're dead."

The suspect said he tried to close the door while returning the fire with a .45 caliber automatic. The victim was hit several times and was pronounced dead at Medical Center Hospital at 5:35 a.m. Justice of the Peace Manuel Valles has ordered an autopsy.

Police said at least one bullet passed through the door from the outside and that the case would be turned over to the grand jury for further investigation.

Two robberies reported in Odessa

ODESSA — In one of two robbery reports to police here Monday, Tommy Digby, no street address available, said three men he had picked up in the downtown area about 9:20 p.m. robbed him of his car an hour or so later.

Digby told officers he and the men drove around drinking for a while when he decided to drop them off and go home. Instead, he was forced to give up his 1976 Buick after one of the trio grabbed him and threatened him with a knife. They were described as two white men and an Indian in their mid-20s.

Shortly before 10 p.m., a clerk at Sparky's Grocery & Deli, 706 S. Grandview Ave., reported he had been robbed at gunpoint by two Mexican men who fled after taking an undisclosed amount of money from the cash register.

The clerk said the men had their faces covered and one of them was armed with a small caliber automatic pistol. One of them wore a red bandana with a white design over his face, while the other had his face covered with a gray ski mask and was wearing a green jumpsuit. Both were in their early 20s.

Odessa man arrested on felony drug charges

ODESSA — Police and sheriff's department narcotics agents arrested a 34-year-old Odessa man on felony drug charges Monday after they raided his northside residence about 5:30 p.m.

Arrested was Bill L. Wildermuth of 5335 N. Grandview Ave. Police said they executed a search warrant issued earlier in the day by Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore and found nine pounds of marijuana in the house, along with a small amount of heroin.

Wildermuth remained in the city jail this morning and bond was expected to be set later today.

Jewelry, cameras, luggage taken in burglaries

In burglary complaints to city police, Mohammed Sheybani of 3811 Crestgate Ave. said jewelry, a camera, luggage and other items worth in excess of $4,000 were taken from his house after someone kicked in two doors to gain entry sometime Monday.

Kay Higgins of 5101 N. A St. told officers jewelry valued at $700 was stolen in a break-in of her apartment Sunday, and Gene Thompson of 2607 Boeing said a jar containing $300 in coins was missing from his residence. A bedroom window was broken to gain entry.

Flood damage may reach $200 million

By The Associated Press

Dry weather is giving four flood-weary Southern states a much-needed breather, but volunteers patrolled sandbag dikes today where some waters are still rising and officials began adding up damage that may reach $200 million in Louisiana alone.

Up to 18 inches of rain fell on portions of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas during a two-week period beginning at Christmas. The ensuing floods inundated well over a million acres of lowlands, forcing about 10,000 people to flee their homes and causing at least three deaths and 250 injuries, officials said.

President Reagan, during a 1½ hour tour of the Monroe, La., area Sunday, promised he would respond favorably — and quickly — to any requests for federal aid.

Inspectors from the Federal Emergency Management Agency arrived Monday in Monroe to begin totaling damage claims that will determine the extent of federal assistance. The total may not be known for several weeks, officials said.

Damage in Ouachita Parish, which includes Monroe, was estimated at $81 million, Treen said. Statewide damage could reach $200 million, the governor said.

Harry Borah, with the agency's National Flood Insurance Division, said 300 household flood claims have been filed through a temporary office in Monroe.

"Because of the depth of the water in these homes, and the amount of time the water has remained in the homes, and the high cost to repair them," damage claims in the Monroe area probably will be higher than the national average, Borah said.

The average flood claim has been close to $3,000 for contents and $3,000 per building where the agency underwrote flood insurance, he said.

Although forecasters said rain could return to the region about Friday, officials said they were holding their own against the floodwaters.

Monroe Mayor Robert E. Powell said Monday that waters remained steady around that northeast Louisiana city of 60,000.

"We've all got that optimistic view that maybe we can survive it," Powell said. "But if we have bad weather, it could all come back."

The Ouachita River, which runs through the center of Monroe, and the Red River, which flows from Arkansas through Alexandria in Rapides Parish in central Louisiana, were not expected to crest until Thursday or Friday — well above flood stage.

Rapides Parish Civil Defense Director A.J. Gambordella said volunteers were still maintaining their vigil on the dikes.

Most rivers in southwestern Louisiana were receding Monday as were those in Arkansas, officials said.

The Tombigbee River was expected to crest above flood stage Wednesday near Demopolis in southern Alabama while the Mississippi River wasn't scheduled to crest at Greenville, Miss., until Saturday, officials said.

City to bury debris despite dioxin threat

TIMES BEACH, Mo. (AP) — Waterlogged debris from recent floods will be promptly buried in a landfill — even though it may contain the toxic chemical dioxin — because it is already "a sure health hazard," officials say.

Patrick J. Breheny, regional director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, said the stinking trash from flooding of the Meramec River last month is a more immediate threat to the community than soil contaminated by dioxin.

"The failure to move the existing solid waste is a sure health hazard. The other is a possible health hazard that can't be determined for several weeks," Breheny said Monday. "So we're balancing a sure health hazard against a possible health hazard."

Tests conducted along roads in this community of 2,200, a St. Louis suburb, showed dioxin contamination to be at levels of up to 100 parts per billion before December's devastating floods.

Anything above a level of one part per billion is considered to be hazardous. The dioxin, a byproduct of several chemical manufacturing processes, was in waste oil sprayed on unpaved Times Beach streets more than a decade ago.

Although the effects of dioxin are disputed, certain types have been proven to cause cancer, birth defects and liver damage in animals.

Breheny said federal funds would pay for 75 percent of the trash removal cost and the state would pay for the rest.

The announcement on trash removal — possibly beginning as early as this week — was made after about 25 federal, state and local officials met Monday to discuss the cleanup problem.

Also at the meeting were officials from the Environmental Protection Agency, which plans later this week to conduct tests on the flood debris as well as further tests on city streets.

"We can't delay moving the debris," Breheny said. "The mayor has told me that people are really getting hot and are ready to move the debris themselves."

Piles of the junk, comprised mainly of soaked furniture, bedding and household goods, have left a stench over the town and offer new homes to rodents, officials said.

Fred Lafser, director of the Missouri Department of Natural Resources, said debris from the flood-stricken town will be hauled to a sanitary landfill and buried in an isolated area beneath 12 to 24 inches of soil.

If the trash later is found to be contaminated by dioxin, it will be moved to a hazardous wastes landfill, Lafser said. Neither Lafser nor Breheny was able to estimate costs.

As the officials were meeting, the first of more than 100 families still homeless from last month's floods began moving into mobile homes provided by the federal government.

Under a disaster declaration made Dec. 10 by President Reagan, 15 counties in Missouri are eligible for federal flood-recovery funds.

Reagan's MX panel seen as political ploy

WASHINGTON (AP) — By appointing a bipartisan commission to study the MX missile, President Reagan is trying to take the issue out of the political arena to improve the weapon's chances of survival, administration officials say.

"The president is interested in getting a consensus and congressional approval for a basing mode for the MX, rather than re-fighting the 1980 campaign," said one official who asked to anonymous.

The 11-member commission named by Reagan Monday to review his strategic weapons modernization program and MX basing alternatives includes Harold Brown, who was defense secretary under President Jimmy Carter, and James Woolsey, undersecretary of the Navy in the Carter administration.

The only representative from the Reagan administration's Defense Department is Dr. Marvin Atkins, director of offensive and space systems. Atkins will not be a voting member of the commission, but will serve as an executive officer.

Asked why the new commission did not include any top officials of the Defense Department, one administration source said, "The intention is not to give the president pre-cooked advice."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's staff prepared the recommendations that led to the president's decision last November to base 100 MX missiles closely together.

Last month, Congress rejected the "dense pack" basing plan, which faces even tougher going in the 98th Congress because of an increase in the number of Democrats. Three of the five members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff had also opposed "dense pack."

Although Weinberger originally favored other basing concepts, especially the idea of placing MX missiles on long-endurance airplanes, he ultimately came around to the closely spaced basing idea, sources said.

They added that Weinberger has strongly indicated he still believes "dense pack" is the best basing plan to assure the survival of U.S. intercontinental ballistic missiles against possible Soviet surprise attack.

"When Weinberger gets his mind made up on something, he rarely changes it," said an official, who refused to be identified. "Nobody wants to lose the MX through rigidity."

"The commission probably will come to the same conclusion as the Defense Department did, that is, the closely spaced basing plan is the best one to assure MX survivability," said one Pentagon source, who also refused to allow his name to be used.

The Justice Department "has not 'opposed anything material' " in the reorganization plan, said Telecommunications Week.

Transfers, assignments, deeds, leases, sharing agreements, termination agreements, mutual releases and other agreements are detailed in the plan:

"END OF DECEMBER (1983) — Transfer asset ownership, dividending of stock, assumption of liabilities and assignment of personnel to their post-divestiture employing companies."

"Jan. 1, 1984 — As of (that date), AT&T will have divested itself of all ownership interests in the Bell System's exchange, exchange access and directory operations."

In this fashion BOCs like Southwestern Bell will be severed from the AT&T structure, and states will continue to regulate telephone service through agencies like Texas' Public Utilities Council.

Oct. 25, she was hired in a 3-1 vote to head up the two federal programs for a $16,200 yearly salary.

"Write me down as opposed," Commissioner Win Brown had said. "I'm against the whole (federal) program." Three months earlier, Brown had assured Ms. Sheeler, "I'm not questioning your integrity whatever."

And Commissioner Durward Wright said there would be "no fruition unless you are there...I have complete trust in you." Said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis at the time: "I think it would be somewhat disastrous for us to change horses in midstream." He recommended that a contract be worked between her and commissioners to entice Ms. Sheeler to oversee the programs. They won her back. "Let her have the headaches," Ahders had said.

But Ms. Sheeler felt she never got the backing, although the blessings were voiced, from the commissioners.

"I'm not sure what they want," she said.

Just who will succeed Ms. Sheeler hasn't been determined yet and neither have the commissioners accepted or rejected her resignation. "There's no dearth of people who are available" to oversee the programs, she said.

Ahders spoke well of Ms. Sheeler:

"She worked at the outset in trying times...I don't have anything but good to say about her."

Gramm may resign, run in GOP special election

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Phil Gramm, who was dropped from the House Budget Committee by Democratic leaders, is planning to resign his seat and run as a Republican in a special election, according to a published report.

The Dallas Times Herald, in today's editions, quoted several sources close to Gramm as saying that the College Station congressman has been considering the option for several weeks and has laid plans for informing key supporters of his intentions.

Phil Gramm

The newspaper reported that one source said that Gramm justified the move by saying: "My old mammy said if you're elected as a Democrat, you should serve as a Democrat. I don't want to be a Democrat, so I'll go back and run as a Republican."

Gramm refused to discuss his plans further, the newspaper reported, saying, "I have looked at many options, but I have not made a final decision."

The Steering and Policy Committee voted 26-4 on Monday against giving Gramm another term on the Budget Committee.

Gramm said he would return to his district today and that he expected to announce by Wednesday his decision on whether to switch parties.

Earlier in the day, Gramm, a former professor of economics, sipped coffee behind a desk adorned with the American and Texas flags and acknowledged, "There's no question about the fact that I face a real dilemma."

"If I'm taken off the (Budget) Committee I would have a difficult time continuing to serve as a Democrat. On the other hand, I was elected as a Democrat."

Gramm said he grew up in a Democratic family and that when he first ran for the House in 1978, "I never gave any thought to running as a Republican. It just basically didn't seem at that time to make an difference. I knew what I wanted to do."

What he wanted to do was promote the kind of conservative economic policies eventually embraced by President Reagan. His alliance with Reagan on budget issues angered a number of Democrats. But some say it was his style, as much as his positions, that led to Monday's vote in the Steering and Policy Committee.

For the committee, said Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, "he's a symbol. In the second place, he's an example. In the third place, he just irritated everybody so much by always being on the tube with the White House people and by participating in the plotting sessions...

"In other words, it's one thing to vote the other way (with the Republicans)," said Wilson. "It's another thing to rub the leadership's nose in it, so to speak."

Gramm believes that such explanations are just a smokescreen.

"The House leadership would desperately have people believe that the problem is me," Gramm said. "They are very much afraid that their action will send a signal to the country that says, "We won't tolerate an activist conservative.'"

Wilson, a member of the Steering and Policy Committee, said he nominated Gramm for another term on the Budget Committee at the request of members of the Texas delegation, after a motion to renominate all members of the committee except Gramm.

The Steering and Policy Committee recommendations are expected to be approved Thursday by the full House Democratic caucus.

Rep. Jim Wright of Texas, the House majority leader, said he did not regard Gramm as having been "kicked off" the Budget Committee.

"No member has any expectation of staying on Budget," said Wright. "It is a prize...It is a gift bestowed by one's colleagues for responsible behavior."

Gramm said, "It punishes me for praeticing in Washington what I preached at home. That may be unusual, but I didn't know it was a crime."

Last month, Gramm received a letter from Reagan inviting him to join the Republican Party.

"I sent it to my mother," said Gramm. "My mother takes all these crticisms of me very personally. She doesn't understand politics. And so somebody saying something nice about me for a change, she'd appreciate."

East Texas author creates fantasy world

CHIRENO, Texas (AP) — Ardath Mayhar lives in a typical rural East Texas setting, but she works in a world of imagination, writing science fiction.

Her house sits on wooded acreage in this community near the Attoyac River. A swarm of cats, one companionable dog and two goats live on the place with Mrs. Mayhar and her husband of 24 years, Joe, who operates a Nacogdoches service station. The farm atmosphere ends at the front door.

Inside, Mrs. Mayhar taps out her books at an electric typewriter, listening to tapes of Mozart or Beethoven. The characters that take shape on her pages exist light years away from East Texas, and their stories unfold only in the imagination.

She writes full time, several hours a day, and has published five books this year, including two reprints of previous works.

Her most recent books are set in distant galaxies, and her characters are better than ordinary. Mrs. Mayhar says she likes to keep the plots suitable for young readers.

"I like to write about people as they can be, not as they are," she said. "My books are for a general readership. Three books by the Atheneum Publishing Co. are in a young adult (student) series. All of my books, not just those three, are suitable for young readers."

Mrs. Mayhar creates treacherous worlds for her characters, but in those worlds good combines with courage to win out over evil.

Her "Golden Dream: A Fuzzy Odyssey," features the Fuzzies, which are furry, 2-foot-tall creatures that walk upright and are at least as intelligent as humans.

She wrote "Golden Dream" at the request of an editor at Ace Books in New York, the book's publisher. The Fuzzies were invented by the late H. Beam Piper, and Ace asked Mrs. Mayhar to continue the series. She invented a language for the little creatures, who inspire affection and loyalty in humans.

Characters in "The Runes of the Lyre," published in September by Atheneum, communicate by linking minds. Music from a lyre wakes from centuries of sleep an ageless race of people to fight against evil.

These books and her two previous ones are set in distant galaxies. Fantastic plots and living adventures abound. Her characters feel joy and pain, grow fatigued and disheartened and fight with righteous rage. The reader identifies with their feelings, especially in "Runes."

Mrs. Mayhar, the mother of two sons and two stepsons, all now grown, said she has not stopped learning since she stopped her formal education on graduation from Nacogdoches High School.

She operated a Nacogdoches County dairy for 15 years, and was a newspaper proofreader, reading and studying all the while. She has studied seven different languages, as well as geology, sociology, genetics and ecology.

Mrs. Mayhar made her first literary sale, a poem, at the age of 19.

AP Laserphoto

Ardath Mayhar is surrounded by four of the many science fiction books she has written. Mrs. Mayhar lives in Chireno, a typical East Texas town, and writes about characters that exist light years away.

"I soon found out there was little monetary reward for writing poetry, but that was what interested me. Twenty-five years later I wrote my first fantasy science fiction, and I was hooked," she said.

"I had discovered what interested me more than poetry, and I could even sell my work."

But the poetry still creeps into the descriptive passages of her books, in names, language and bits of verse.

Medicaid overcharges being investigated, paper says

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas attorney general's office is investigating suspected Medicaid overcharges in "dozens" of nursing homes, The Dallas Morning News reported today.

State welfare officials said audits indicate that overcharges could constitute about 3 percent of the Medicaid reimbursements paid to Texas nursing homes each year, the newspaper reported.

Nursing homes in the state are expected to receive nearly $500 million in reimbursements this year, according to Merle Moden, director of rate-setting for the Department of Human Resources Medicaid program.

Three percent of the reimbursements expected this year would constitute about $12 million to $13 million in overcharges.

The attorney general's office began an investigation several months ago that resulted in misdemeanor charges being filed Dec. 28 against a defunct San Antonio-based chain of nursing homes, The News reported.

Pleasure trips to Las Vegas, Nev., and six-packs of beer helped inflate cost claims filed by the Carriage Square Nursing Home Inc., said Assistant Travis County Attorney James Rader.

Rader filed the charges against Carriage Square based on information provided by the attorney general's welfare-fraud unit, The News reported.

In another instance, auditors found that a Dallas-area nursing home listed a Ferrari automobile and a twin-engine Cessna under costs of doing business, Moden said.

Rader said expense and income reporting by nursing homes is a widespread problem that my be costing taxpayers millions of dollars a year by inflating amounts used in the Medicaid reimbursement formula.

Medicaid is a federal-state program that provides medical care for many people who cannot pay for such services on their own. DHR bases its Medicaid reimbursement rate on summaries of costs claimed in four categories of expenses: administration, patient care, facility costs and dietery expenses.

Rader's four complaints against Carriage Square charge the corporation with 19 counts of tampering with government documents by misstating costs in reports to the DHR, the newspaper reported.

The charges carry a maximum total of $40,000 in fines, Rader said.

Moden said auditors found the corporation's 1981 reports on operating costs included expenses for a fishing trip to Port Aransas, a flight to Las Vegas, six-packs of beer and groceries for corporate officials.

Herman Hoffman of San Antonio, identified by Rader as chief executive of Carriage Square, could not be reached for comment, The News reported.

Moden said similar problems have cropped up in audits of other nursing homes, adding that finding a report that is "real clean" is "relatively rare."

The agency is considering rules, similar to those used in California, that would reduce all nursing-home reimbursement rates by the average overcharge percentage, Moden said.

"The problem may be systemic, and if we don't pry it out, we may be uniformly paying too much," he said.

Advertising pays off for Border Patrol

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — An aggressive advertising program has paid off for the U.S. Border Patrol, which has been flooded with applications for its 300 to 400 job openings, an official says.

The El Paso border patrol office alone has received 5,000 applications to take the agency's written examination, the first step in getting a job as a patrolman, according to Alan Eliason, chief patrol agent for the Far West Texas area.

"That's an unusually high number," Eliason said Monday.

Half that number usually apply for the examination, which is administered only once or twice a year, he said.

The border patrol has lost about 15 percent of its 3,600 force nationwide through retirements and other normal forms of attrition, officials say.

The El Paso office has about 40 vacancies, 10 percent of its staff, Eliason said.

"We have been aggressively advertising the fact that the exam is scheduled," Eliason said. "We have had a lot of interest."

The agents patrol for illegal aliens along the 3,000-mile U.S.-Mexico border.

Prospective agents also must interview with agency officals and undergo a physical examination, he said.

Bonnie Winner takes her 9-month-old daughter, Elizabeth, for a spin in the family's new go-cart. The two were motoring in a parking lot on the Texas A&M campus at College Station.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Use of steroids may have harmful side effects

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter has asthma and I know from other people with asthma that they have been helped a lot with steroids. Yet my doctor says he would rather not use them. Do you see any reason why one doctor would use steroids and another would not? — Mrs. Y.C., Hartford, Conn.

Dear Mrs. C.: As I've written on other occasions, any drug powerful enough to be effective also has the potential of doing harm. This is true of a drug as common as aspirin, and is certainly true of steroids.

It has been reported, for example, that patients with asthma who use oral steroids may be vulnerable to weakened bones and the development of cataracts. I would assume that your physician is concerned about the possibility of side effects such as these, and therefore hopes to avoid prescribing steroids.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My girlfriend told me that her doctor told her not to get an IUD because she has never ad any children. What does having children have to do with getting an IUD? — Nellie, Springfield, Ill.

Dear Nellie: A woman who uses an intrauterine device (IUD) is more likely to develop an infection known as pelvic inflammatory disease (PID). Should this occur, there is a possibility of tubal obstruction and infertility. Therefore, a number of doctors recommend against the use of IUD's by women who have never had children.

The risk of PID is increased for young women who have several sexual partners. This may simply reflect the fact that young women are more likely to have more sexual partners and may therefore be exposed more to sexually transmitted diseases.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son was operated on a few months ago and the surgery went about as well as could be expected. What frightened me more than the operation was that at one point after the operation he seemed to be delirious. At first even the doctor didn't know what was happening, but later he said it must have been a reaction to one of the drugs my son was getting. Once the drug was stopped, he got better. Does this happen often? — Mr. B.E., Moline, Ill.

Dear Mr. E.: Adverse drug reactions can result in psychiatric illnesses. For example, drugs used in the treatment of high blood pressure as well as some of the major tranquilizers can cause or aggravate depression. Oral contraceptives may have the same effect.

This does not mean these drugs should never be used, but any adverse reaction in a patient on medication should be reported to the physician. Drug-related psychiatric illnesses can often be easily managed.

For Phyllis, Baltimore, Md.: Yes, high-blood pressure is a risk factor for stroke. So are heart disease, diabetes and possibly diet. Some risk factors can be controlled, and the prudent person will work with his or her physician to see that, where possible, this is done.

Taxpayers can help in study of rare frog

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — By checking a box on their state tax return, taxpayers can help count a rare frog they've probably never given a thought to.

The state income tax form has boxes for $2, $5 and $10 donations to help study the disappearing Tarahumara frogs or 1,000 other non-game wildlife species.

Or taxpayers can fill in a blank to indicate a higher donation.

After the state Revenue Department rakes off the first $45,000 for administrative expenses, the donations will go to the state Game and Fish Department, which is conducting the studies.

Three years ago, 70 of the Tarahumara frogs were spotted between Tucson and Mexico.

"Last year, they found one specimen in Arizona, and this year, I think none," said Bruce Taubert, state fisheries chief. "It might have something to do with arsenic or heavy metal in the water."

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: How wonderful that you and I were both born on January 5th! Others sharing this birthday with us include Academy Award winner Diane Keaton, former Vice President Walter Mondale, Pittsburgh football coach Chuck Noll and actress Pamela Sue Martin. In the year ahead, you feel better equipped to deal with life's ups and downs. Avoid looking back. The best is yet to come! Romance remains exciting but takes a back seat to your career. You continue to do more for others than for yourself. Develop new strategies. A change of residence could help a marriage. Children are a source of pride and pleasure.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have strayed from a goal, but mate helps you get back on track. Exceptional luck accompanies those who travel today. A last minute loan restores your peace of mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hide your fears from loved one. You receive a job offer from someone who has been on the sidelines for several years. Avoid a difficult relative for a while.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): When money is involved, get promises in writing. Your fairness pays big dividends. Success takes a bit longer than you had hoped, but the results will be greater too.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone you thought was your friend has been trying to steal your ideas, and maybe even your job. You have a right to expect greater loyalty. People who are bombastic make you tense.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A leadership role would fit you fine, but certain people who have observed your leisure-time antics cannot envision you as a boss. Convince them with deeds, not words.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Working with someone you respect makes you more productive. Some salespeople hurt themselves by coming on too hard. Let up a bit. Romance puts you on a collision course with a friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A mixed bag is indicated at work today. Approach new tasks without any preconceived notions and you will get better results. A social event could set the stage for romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid people who are pushy by tackling those chores that you can handle alone. Romance is exciting and brings you true satisfaction. Answer phone calls and correspondence promptly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can do your career some permanent good this week. Keep your eyes and ears open, but say as little as possible. A relative is successful in clearing up a problem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You should be able to get contract concessions if you act quickly. Friends will provide information not available elsewhere. The news from a distance leads you to take immediate action.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Distractions abound today! Your mind appears to be on something other than work. Try to get back on track. Either solve a romantic problem or break off the relationship.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Mate offers sound advice. Pay attention. This is a day for consolidating past gains, not starting new projects. You need to correct a billing mistake as soon as possible.

Opening lead: Three of ◇.

There was only one women's pair competing in the Open Pair championship at the recent World Bridge Olympiad in Biarritz—Dianna Gordon of Toronto, and Sharyn Kokish of Montreal. Canadians can be proud of their performance in this event. Witness this hand.

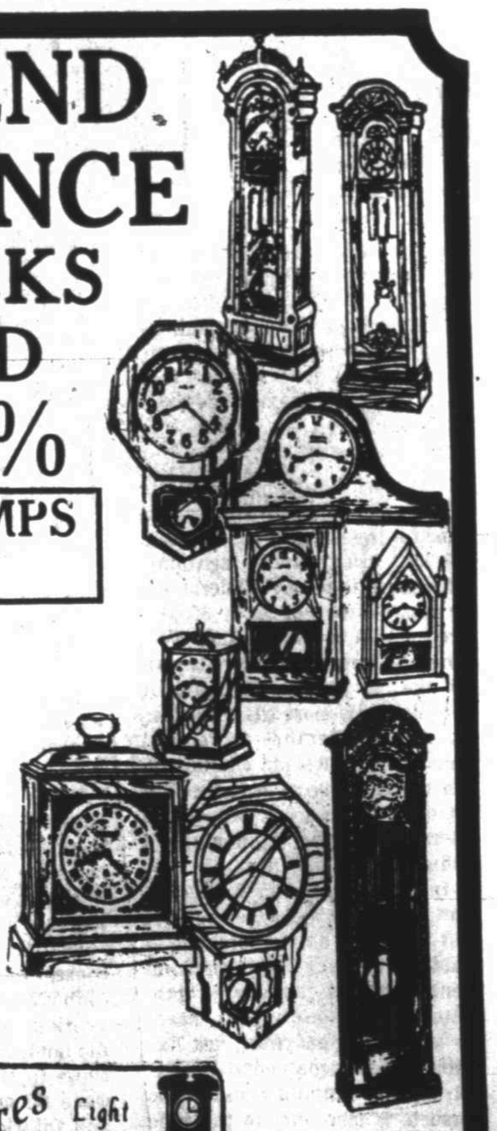

We do not think that, with a good six-card major and an unstopped suit, South should boast about his two no trump opening bid. North transferred to spades and then raised to game.

It is easy to see that this contract should fail by two tricks. But this was a pair championship, and to earn a really good score it was essential that the defenders should collect a three-trick set. Dianna, who earlier in the tournament had won the Mixed Pairs title, got her side off to a good start by leading a diamond, and the defenders raked in the first two tricks. Then Sharyn shifted to club, and a losing finesse allowed the defenders to complete their book.

Now West found the killing defense—she continued with a diamond, presenting declarer with a ruff-sluff. Declarer ruffed in dummy and led trump to the king and ace. West won and gave declarer another ruff-sluff. This time declarer ruffed in hand. He crossed to dummy with a heart and led a trump. Dianna perforce won the queen and now completed declarer's misery by leading her last diamond. No matter what declarer did, East had to score her ten of trumps for the third undertrick and an excellent result.

Genetic board needed

Research into genetic engineering indicates mankind may well be on the threshold of an exciting era during which the genetic makeup of plants and animals can be controlled to a greater degree for the benefit of the population. The implications are astounding for the future health of man, improved food production and the like.

But as with nearly everything that holds promise for mankind, the advancement of genetic engineering also holds a danger. Already researchers have begun to insert genes into mouse embryos to create larger mice.

A recent issue of the magazine, The Nation, spoke of the implications. "Scientists now want to apply what they have learned to other mammals; they hope genetic engineering of cattle, for example, will result in more meat and more milk."

The magazine goes on to note that "what can be done in mice can presumably be done in human beings." That's where perhaps the greatest possibility lies for mankind. By altering man's "genetic building blocks" scientists may be able to give future man greater immunity against disease, better vision and stronger hearts.

But there are reservations by some that man should be delving into the genetic field. They fear that this field of science may lead to the development of real "Frankensteins" — either by accident or design. And, of course, there are religious ramifications.

Consequently, there is a push under way for the formation of a Genetic Engineering Commission to oversee the work of genetic researchers. We think such a commission would be a wise move, provided a proper system of checks and balances was incorporated to give researchers sufficient freedom to perform their work.

Genetic engineering is opening new doors for mankind. We should proceed them, but with care.

Lessons from Miami

The rioting in Miami that left one person dead and at least 20 others injured should serve as an object lesson of what can happen when relations between the police and a community are allowed to sour.

What happened in Miami's predominantly black Overtown district seemed less a case of racially motivated violence than the furious reaction of residents prepared to believe the worst about Miami's police department.

Predictably enough, there are several versions of the incident that touched off the violence in the streets. What is known is that a 21-year-old black man was shot by a Hispanic police officer during an attempted arrest. Multiple investigations by the Miami police and the FBI will presumably determine whether the shooting was justified.

But the subsequent violence and destruction of property probably would not have occurred if more of Overtown's residents had been prepared to give the police the benefit of the doubt until all the facts were known. Obviously, police-community relations were already badly strained even before the shooting occurred.

That fact cannot, of course, excuse any act of lawlessness, much less the rioting in Overtown. But it does underscore the need for all cities — Midland included — to ensure that the best possible police-community relations are maintained.

A greater tragedy would be a failure to learn from these ordeals. The experience of the 1960s should have demonstrated that what happened in Miami could happen in almost any city in the nation.

Another View:

Reagan heaps contempt

The way conservationists saw it, one of the few constructive things that the lame-duck Congress did was add more than 120,000 acres of new wilderness areas to the nation's protected reservoir of forest land and open spaces. Their chamois-shirted chests swelled with a certain pride: The president's opposition had been overcome; Congress at least seemed to be looking after the hikers and the owls and the land.

In fact, at a congressional oversight hearing on Dec. 10, officials from President Reagan's Interior Department were asked pointedly to refrain from hastily trimming back any additional areas that might one day become candidates for protection from miners and drillers and developers.

That's why, with the whistle from jets taking congressmen home for the holidays still echoing, Interior's recent cynical, lightning-quick move to remove federal wilderness protection from 800,000 acres of wild lands including Wyoming's Encampment River Canyon and the barren Bisti Badlands of New Mexico is more than fine-tuning of the inventory of federal lands. It is the Reagan administration thumbing its nose at the will not only of Congress, but of the voters — the ones who don't have drilling rigs in the garage.

Interior Secretary James G. Watt, of course, will take the heat that this back-door operation — "midnight attack," the environmental lobbies called it — generates. But no one should forget for a moment that Watt, just like embattled Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Anne Gorsuch, is marching to the tune played by the president himself and that it is Mr. Reagan who is responsible not only for the bad decision, but its thoroughly cowardly and arrogant timing.

It's no shock that Mr. Reagan wants to unleash developers in the wilderness of America. But the duplicity of his strategy is reaching new heights: His minions said the acreage in question — and nearly twice that much is in his sights — did not qualify for special study status because it was in pieces under 5,000 acres. Conservationists say that federal law allows the status — which makes it difficult to conduct oil and gas drilling — even on small parcels of wilderness that are determined to have special attributes.

Interior's field office in New Mexico, for instance, recently recommended that the 3,520-acre Bisti Badlands be preserved as wilderness. Apparently, however, Mr. Reagan's bureaucrats in Washington know better than the local folks, providing one more example that the president's oft-repeated promises to hand over control to the locals are void where in conflict with administration policy.

Meanwhile, instructions have been sent to the field. If the action goes unchallenged, up to 5 million more wild acres could soon hear the growl of the bulldozer and the whine of the drill bit, music to which they love to dance in Mr. Reagan's Interior Department and White House.

Under other circumstances, perhaps the Bureau of Land Management could be counted on to rescue some of the land. But, with the president's men at the wheel, that's unlikely.

That leaves lawsuits by private conservation groups — the Sierra Club is considering that — or intervention by Congress to preserve the lands as at least potential additions to the wilderness system. Once oil or gas leases are issued, and Interior seems to be moving full-speed ahead, the land automatically will be disqualified for wilderness status. There is undisguised evil afoot. It ought to be stopped. Cold.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Elections pleased House phone operators

WASHINGTON — Older readers may remember a song from a few years back called "Three Coins in the Fountain." Hardworking telephone operators on the congressional switchboard are more likely to remember a two-year struggle that could be called "Three Coynes and a Cohen."

Jack Anderson

Here was the problem: For two years, there was a Congressman named Bill Coyne, a Democrat from Pittsburgh. There was also a Congressman named Jim Coyne, a Republican from Philadelphia.

Both were elected in 1980. Both had offices in the antique Cannon House Office Building — Bill on the fifth floor, Jim on the first. Both were on the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, as well as its subcommittess on economic stabilization and housing and community development. Both were on the House Administration Committee on its policy group on information and computers. Both were also members of the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mixups were understandably endless. Visitors looking for Jim ended up in Bill's fifth-floor office and had to be sent downstairs; Jim estimates that his constituents logged 100 miles in misdirected footwork during the 97th Congress.

The office staffs of both Coynes got used to switching phone calls from innocents who had called asking for Congressman Coyne of Pennsylvania. In the waning days of the lame-duck Congress, for example, Democrat Bill got a call from the Association of Building Contractors expressing confidence that he would vote to rescind the Davis-Bacon wage law, which guarantees union-scale wages on federal contracts. Wrong Coyne: Democrats generally support Davis-Bacon; Republicans generally don't. The contractors wanted Republican Jim.

Then there's Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore. Calls from ever-so-slightly hesitant constituents of either Pennsylvania Coyne — "Congressman uh-Coin, please" would wind up with the Oregon member's puzzled staff. His name is pronounced "O'Coyne."

Then there's Cohen — Sen. Bill Cohen, R-Me. Both Senate and House have the same telephone number. You can see the problem if someone just calls and asks for "Bill Coyne" or "Bill Cohen."

In fact, sources told my reporter Andrea Siegel, that's precisely what happened last summer to a former radio announcer and movie star now known as the Great Communicator. Democrat Bill Coyne of Pennsylvania got an unexpected call from the White House. President Reagan was his usually chatty and friendly self. This was puzzling enough.

But what really baffled the congressman was a remark from the president that he hoped Coyne would support the White House on an anti-abortion bill being considered that day. Coyne said he didn't think the abortion matter was on the House agenda that day.

It turned out, of course, that Reagan had intended his persuasive charm for Bill Cohen in the Senate, which indeed was considering abortion legislation that day.

At least part of the name problem was solved by Pennsylvania voters last November. Bill Coyne was re-elected, Jim Coyne wasn't. That still leaves AuCoin and Cohen, of course. And Jim Coyne may be back in Washington anyway. He's being pushed for chairmanship of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

DOING HIS BIT: Attorney General William French Smith is apparently heeding the president's plea to employers for licking the unemployment problem by hiring "just one worker." Smith is shopping for another cook to replace one who is leaving his four-person retinue of office kitchen help.

The attorney general doesn't want just any hash slinger off the street, though. In the job description published by the Justice Department, the successful applicant will have to assist Smith's chef "in food preparation; setting tables for official functions and meals; serving food both buffet-style and family-style; checking trays and setups for completeness and attractiveness, and washing dishes, pots and pans."

The attorney general's sous-chef will need "the ability to keep things neat, clean and in order ... (and) the ability to use sanitary food handling procedures." The wage scale is $6 to $7 an hour.

PLAYING GAMES: Samuel Pierce, head of the Housing and Urban Development Department, tried some sleight-of-hand to stop the investigation of a proposed action by HUD. Here's what happened:

Late last summer, Congress questioned the wisdom of a HUD plan to consolidate its offices dealing with multifamily housing. So the legislators told HUD it couldn't spend any money on the plan.

Meanwhile, Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., asked the General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, to check the cost-effectiveness of moving a HUD multifamily housing office from Nashville to Knoxville. When the GAO investigators showed up at Nashville, they learned that HUD employees had been told not to cooperate with them.

The reason, according to a HUD spokesman: Congress' refusal to let HUD reorganize the housing offices may also have forbidden HUD from allowing any investigation of a reorganization.

Congressional staffers didn't buy this disingenuous reasoning and forced HUD to open its books to the GAO auditors.

INSIDE REPORT

Filibuster threat silences radio broadcasts

WASHINGTON — While decent opinion was taking the hide off Sen. Jesse Helms for daring to fight President Reagan's gas tax with a filibuster, Sen. Lowell Weicker quietly planted the kiss of death on Reagan's attempted offensive in the international war of words by the mere threat of a filibuster.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Reagan had asked a meager $44 million for U.S. radio broadcasts into Poland and other regions cut off from the outside world by Soviet control of news media. But overriding personal intervention by national security adviser William P. Clark and an unpublicized letter to Senate leaders by Reagan himself, Weicker's filibuster threat in the closing days of the lame-duck session foreclosed action.

One senator's whim means no clarion response to the most concentrated Soviet-controlled jamming ever of Voice of America, Radio Free Europe and BBC broadcasts into Poland. Weicker's contrariness delayed, probably for another year, long-planned bolstering of the U.S. radios.

In contrast, unprecedented high-density Soviet jamming began in mid-December. On Dec. 13, Lech Walesa, freed in late November after almost a year in confinement, smuggled to the Western press a most important speech he planned to make two days later in Gdansk. Walesa knew the junta ruling Poland would not dare let him make the speech, not because it was a call to arms but because its moderation would undercut their campaign to smear him as an enemy of the state.

The leader of the outlawed Solidarity movement leaked the speech because he knew it would never see the light of day in Poland. For Poles to learn of it required getting the speech taken out of Poland so it could be broadcast back by the American radios and the BBC. That was Walesa's sole means of communicating with the people of Poland.

Jamming of Radio Free Europe (beamed at Poland and other Eastern European countries) and Radio Liberty (broadcasting into the Soviet Union) has been intense ever since martial law was imposed in Poland a year ago. But on Dec. 14, jamming transmitters from Western Russia, Poland and Czechoslovakia and East Germany were turned not only against those two radios but also the U.S. government's official Voice of America and, for the first time, the BBC (prompting a British complaint to the Polish government).

On the very day that the Western radios were trying to penetrate the jamming screen with Walesa's message, Reagan's high command in the Senate invited Weicker to breakfast and urged him to withdraw his implicit filibuster threat. Gathered around the table were Sen. Howard Baker, the majority leader; Sen. Paul Laxalt, Republican Party chairman; and Sen. Charles Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

This is one thing the president really wants, Baker told Weicker. The maverick liberal Republican, whose re-election last Nov. 2 was strongly pushed by Reagan despite Weicker's hostility to the administration, was adamant: As chairman of the appropriations subcommittee with jurisdiction over the radios, he would have no part of it.

The next day, Dec. 16, he told the Senate he could not go along with Baker, Percy and Laxalt. The request was brought in "at the last moment not by (a) senator but by the administration," Weicker complained.

But there was last-minute time for other items. Only moments before turning down the radio money, Weicker flashed the green light for funds to finance "a new combined monthly survey of men's and women's apparel" and a special $20 million loan guarantee for a Georgetown, S.C., steel mill — both within his subcommittee's jurisdiction.

Weicker's incarceration of the $44-million fund for the shortwave radios probably means that Reagan will not get the money until the next regular appropriation a year hence. Neither the political nor budget climate will be hospitable to supplemental money bills early in the new year.

Reagan had pleaded for immediate action in the letter he wrote Percy on Dec. 9. He warned that Soviet jamming was reaching "unprecedented intensity"; he charged that Moscow "appears to have launched a campaign of intimidation designed to inhibit Western broadcasting efforts"; he pointed to a "campaign of slander" by the Kremlin against the Voice, Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty.

Weicker wasn't having any of it. For Reagan, that spelled defeat of his plan to hone a singular, often-ignored instrument of foreign policy. For the brave Lech Walesa and his comrades in Poland, the meaning is unpleasant: a message from Capitol Hill that for all its tough words, what happens in Poland's struggle for freedom matters less than the prerogatives of one rancorous senator.

CHARLEY REESE

Life-death struggle seen in hunting

There is a growing anti-hunting movement in the United States. It is made up of hysterics and ignorant people. They wouldn't know a logical argument if they found one in their bedroom.

Charley Reese

After decades of game management which includes annual harvests by hunters, the deer herds are larger now than they were 50 years ago despite an appaling loss of habitat to development.

Sob sisters like Cleveland Amory, one of the more famous animal defenders, apparently have not realized that in the eastern United States there are no longer any natural predators. Without the annual hunts, the deer herds would quickly over-populate and destroy themselves.

Only a person who stays a good distance from reality would think that death by disease, parasites and starvation is kinder than a hunter's bullet. The deer like us are going to die; like us, the only questions are when and how.

Unlike us, deer do not practice birth control nor do they know how to adapt to over-population. Nature provides no retirement villages and no Medicare programs for the furry critters. She just kills the excess with utter ruthlessness.

Vegetarians may logically argue against killing any animal, but those who eat meat or fowl are eating flesh which once belonged to an animal that was slaughtered for their convenience and nourishment. I don't know how they kill cows now, but they used to bash them in the head so we can all enjoy our hamburgers.

Of course with only about 5 percent of the population doing all of the farming, it's easy to see how the urban folks can lose touch with reality. For all I know, many of them may think hamburgers and fried chicken are made in factories. That's no less crazy a notion than the non-reasoning opposition to hunting.

One of the paradoxes of our times is that while technology grows rapidly, large segments of the population are regressing to the Middle Ages. Just visit a bookstore a see how many titles there are on witchcraft, astrology, I-Ching and other such stuff from the days of knights and kings.

I reserve my special scorn, however, for those people who put themselves in a frenzy over seals and deer, but generally ignore the slaughter of their fellow human beings which continues almost non-stop in this crazy world. You're really weird if you are sending money to one of these animal outfits while tens of thousands of children are starving to death.

To sum up, hunting is a scientifically sound and humane tool of modern game management which results in more and healthier wildlife than there would be if hunting were banned. It is an excellent sport for a family to do together and it teaches children not only responsibility of handling a firearm but also the reality of the life-death cycle which is the chief biological characteristic of Planet Earth.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Jan. 4, the fourth day of 1983. There are 361 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 4, 1974, President Richard M. Nixon rejected the Senate Watergate Committee's subpoenas seeking White House tapes and documents.

On this date:

In 1951, North Korean and Communist Chinese forces captured the city of Seoul during the Korean War.

Ten years ago: The United States reported the loss of a 16th B-52 bomber in air raids over Indochina.

One year ago: Richard Allen resigned as the White House national security adviser, and was replaced by William Clark.

Thought for today: "I have found that most people are as happy as they make up their minds to be." — Abraham Lincoln, U.S. president (1809-1865).

Media again ask judge to lift ban on jury interviews

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Four newspapers and The Associated Press again have asked Chief U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions to abandon his ban on interviewing jurors in the U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. murder case.

Lawyers for The San Antonio Express-News, which publishes morning and afternoon newspapers; The San Antonio Light, The El Paso Times and The AP filed motions Monday citing a 5th U.S. Circuit Court ruling last week declaring unconstitutional Local Court Rule 500-2.

Sessions invoked the rule on Dec. 14 to prevent anyone from talking to the nine women and three men who convicted Charles V. Harrelson, Jo Ann Harrelson and Elizabeth Chagra in the judge's death.

Ten of the jurors wept in the jury box as the guilty verdicts were read at the end of the 12-week trial that marked the end of a three-year investigation.

Last week, acting on a previous Express-News challenge to the rule in an immigration case, the 5th Circuit Court found that Rule 500-2 was a violation of freedom of the press and freedom of speech of the jurors.

The 5th Circuit did not issue a writ of mandamus in the separate matter, forcing The Express-News to go back to Sessions in an effort to specifically apply the ruling to the Wood case.

The El Paso Times and The AP already had asked the 5th Circuit for an expedited ruling on their appeal of Sessions' denial of a similar motion filed the day the Wood convictions were returned.

El Paso attorneys Richard Munzinger and Bryan Hall, in their appeal, have asked the 5th Circuit for a stay of Sessions' ban on interviewing jurors.

Reporters for at least three news organizations contacted jurors last week after the rule was declared unconstitutional, and the jurors in turn contacted Sessions' office and were told the ruling did not apply to the Wood case.

Sessions' law clerk, Art Nicholson, said Monday he did not know when Sessions might act on the latest motions. Sessions issued an 11-page ruling on Dec. 21 turning down The El Paso Times and AP's first motion to interview the Wood jurors.

Harrelson was convicted of murder and conspiracy to murder and obstruct justice in Wood's May 29, 1979, murder. Prosecutors contend Harrelson killed Wood for a $250,000 fee from convicted drug trafficker Jimmy Chagra.

Mrs. Chagra was convicted of conspiracy to murder and to obstruct justice, and Mrs. Harrelson was convicted of conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Sessions is scheduled to preside later this month over Chagra's trial on charges of murder and conspiracy to murder and obstruct justice. That trial has been moved to Jacksonville, Fla.

Police shoot man in Detroit after he wounds officer

DETROIT (AP) — A man brandishing a gun on the porch of a home was shot by police after he shot and critically wounded an officer late Monday. It was the third shooting of a Detroit police officer in the past three weeks.

Police went to the home on the city's east side about 10:40 p.m. after receiving reports of a man with a long gun on the porch, said Sgt. Daniel Carr of the Detroit police information unit.

After the officer was shot, police and the gunman exchanged gunfire and the man was shot in the stomach, Carr said.

Carr refused to identify the gunman or the wounded officer.

Committee decides on conflicts of interest

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Legislators need a curb on their appearances before state agencies for money, a subcommittee studying conflicts of interest agreed.

But committee members could not decide Monday exactly what measures were needed.

Recommended alternatives ranged from prohibition of the widespread practice to approval of such appearances but with full financial disclosure.

"Representing clients before a state agency for money, I just don't think that is right," said Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle, a member of the subcommittee of the Public Servant Standards of Conduct Advisory Committee.

The subcommittee approved Earle's motion for full prohibition of a Senate or House member representing a client for money before a state.

Subcommittee members also approved alternatives allowing a legislator to appear before state agencies but only in ministerial matters, and allowing legislators to practice before state agencies, as they do now, but requiring them to report any fees totaling more than $5,000.

"What troubles me is that full prohibition would preclude a lawmaker from helping a client with a sales tax problem for filing a strictly administrative matter," said Jack Gullahorn, Austin attorney and chairman of the subcommittee.

"In the case of lawyers, you might be unduly punishing them," he said.

Rep. Stan Schlueter, a Killeen Democrat who is a proponent of strict reporting, said he had heard from agencies about "pressure being placed on them by lawyer-legislator."

Rival Moslem groups battle for Tripoli

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Moslem militiamen pounded the slums of Tripoli today with artillery, mortar and rocket barrages. Police said the fighting killed 30 people, the highest single-day toll in the 11-week-old battle for control of the northern port.

In Khalde, a southern Beirut suburb, U.S., Israeli and Lebanese negotiators failed in their third round of talks to reach agreement on a negotiating agenda for withdrawing all foreign troops from Lebanon.

Observers say a breakthrough in the talks is unlikely until Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin meets with President Reagan next month in Washington.

At Monday's session, Israel again demanded the first step be the normalization of relations with Lebanon, which, in turn, insisted the talks must first deal with withdrawing an estimated 60,000 Israeli, Palestinian and Syrian troops from the country.

Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem met with U.S. presidential envoy Morris Draper after Monday's session and urged increased American efforts to work out a compromise, the state-owned radio reported. A fourth session is scheduled Thursday in the northern Israeli border town of Kiryat Shmona.

The fighting in Tripoli also wounded 30 people, police said. So far, police say the fighting has claimed at least 133 lives in Lebanon's second-largest city, 50 miles north of Beirut.

Thousands of inhabitants huddled in basements and bomb shelters in Tripoli's seaside slums for a fifth straight day, eking out dwindling food supplies. There was no running water or electricity, police said.

Tripoli hospitals sent out urgent appeals for medical supplies as pro-Syrian Alawite and Palestinian-backed Sunni Moslem militiamen pounded each others' positions in the densely populated Baal Mohsen, Bab el-Tabbaneh and Kubbeh neighborhoods, according to police.

Many victims were killed or wounded when random shells and rockets slammed into their apartments during the battle that has raged without letup since Friday, police said.

Fires burned out of control because fighting prevented fire brigades and civil defense units from reaching the embattled neighborhoods, police said.

Syria maintains a 30,000-man army in northern and eastern Lebanon, ostensibly to police the nation's Moslem-Christian civil war armistice under a 1976 Arab League mandate.

Syria says it will pull out its forces if Israel agrees to withdraw its estimated 25,000 troops from Lebanon. Israel says it will withdraw its troops only after its has guarantees the PLO will not be able to re-establish its base in southern Lebanon near the Israeli border.

Leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organization say their estimated 6,000-10,000 guerrillas in eastern and northern Lebanon would pull out at Lebanese President Amin Gemayel's request. Gemayel has made several public demands for withdrawal of all foreign forces.

The latest PLO assurances were made by the organization's security chief, Salah Khalaf, who told the Saudi Arabian newspaper al-Madina that the PLO forces in Lebanon were "a card" in Gemayel's hand in the current withdrawal talks.

In Tel Aviv, the Israeli military command said today its forces in southern Lebanon had found nine Soviet-made Katyusha rockets and launchers aimed at Israeli targets. Israel Radio reported five rockets were aimed at Kiryat Shmona and claimed they were intended to disrupt the Lebanon-Israeli talks.

The military command said the other four rockets were found south of Sidon and were aimed at the Israeli army's main base in the area.

Meanwhile, police said Israeli forces arranged a cease-fire Monday night between Christian and Druse Moslem militiamen in the central Lebanon mountain town of Aley, 7½ miles southeast of Beirut. More than 180 people have been killed in the central mountains fighting in the past 11 weeks.

Warsaw Pact leaders gather for meeting

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — As Warsaw Pact leaders gathered for their first meeting under the leadership of Yuri V. Andropov, the Soviet Communist Party warned today that the West would not be able to deploy more missiles in Europe "with impunity."

The meeting of Soviet bloc leaders, delayed from its scheduled early December opening date by the death of Leonid I. Brezhnev, is believed likely to endorse Andropov's proposals for limiting nuclear arms on European soil.

The government and party heads also are expected to address Communist-bloc economic issues.

The conference is Andropov's first trip abroad since he replaced Brezhnev as Soviet Communist Party general secretary on Nov. 12.

Echoing Andropov's contention that the United States is trying to gain a nuclear edge over Moscow, the Soviet party newspaper Pravda said today in a dispatch from Prague that "the policy of gaining military superiority over the Soviet Union has no future.

"Let NATO commanders not hope that someone will be able to put at risk with impunity the life of the peoples in the socialist community. Those over the ocean should not take our peacefulness for lack of vigilance. Let them not try to deceive the masses in the West by fabrications about the alleged 'Soviet threat.'"

Pravda did not mention President Reagan or his proposals for nuclear arms reduction specifically. But it clearly was referring to his "zero option" plan and U.S. arguments that NATO must go ahead with its planned missile deployment to force the Soviets to bargain at nuclear arms talks in Geneva.

Reagan's proposals calls for NATO to abandon its planned deployment of 572 U.S nuclear missiles in Western Europe in exchange for removal of all Soviet SS-20 missiles targeted on NATO nations.

The Warsaw Pact consultative committee did not publicize its agenda, but Communist sources said it would formally approve Andropov's proposal to reduce Soviet medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe to 162, the current level of British and French arsenals.

In exchange, Andropov demanded NATO cancel its missile deployment plans.

The Western allies already have rejected the proposal, announced Dec. 21, on grounds the Soviet SS-20 missiles have triple warheads, giving them a 3-to-1 firepower advantage over the British and French missiles.

The consultative committee, composed of heads of seven national Communist parties, government leaders and other officials, is the coordinating political body for the Warsaw Pact alliance and usually meets every two years.

Besides Andropov and President Gustav Husak of Czechoslovakia, the leaders participating are Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski of Poland, President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania, Janos Kadar of Hungary, Todor Zhivkov of Bulgaria and Erich Honecker of East Germany.

"At the present time the international coordination of the foreign policy of the Warsaw Pact countries has reached such a level that essentially there exists a single foreign policy strategy and level of these countries," the Slovak youth newspaper Smena said.

Smena reported the meeting also would focus on deteriorating relations with the West, including American restrictions on trade and technology exports, and the economic problems of the Soviet bloc.

Some Polish workers boycotting government unions

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Workers at two of Warsaw's biggest factories appear to be boycotting the new, officially sanctioned unions that have been created to replace the outlawed Solidarity labor movement.

About 2,500 new trade unions came into being on Monday, and the official PAP news agency reported that 1,500 more have applied for registration under the law that banned Solidarity and all other independent unions.

With each new union limited by law to individual enterprises, as many as 10,000 are expected to be formed eventually.

But officials at the Ursus tractor factory, one of Warsaw's largest plants, said only a few hundred of the plant's 17,000 workers had joined the new union there. A spokesman at the Huta steel mill, which has about 12,000 workers, said its union had attracted only about 200 members.

The Trade Union Ministry said it had no information on total membership in the new unions.

"You'll have to call each union," said a secretary to Trade Union Minister Stanislaw Ciosek.

Critics charge that the new unions will be too heavily controled by the Communist government, which has suspended martial law but has obtained new legal powers that insitutionalize its tight grip on Polish society.

Military lifts ban on reporter

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The military has lifted the ban it imposed last week on Israel Television's military correspondent for reporting anti-war feeling among Israeli troops in Lebanon, a television spokeswoman said today.

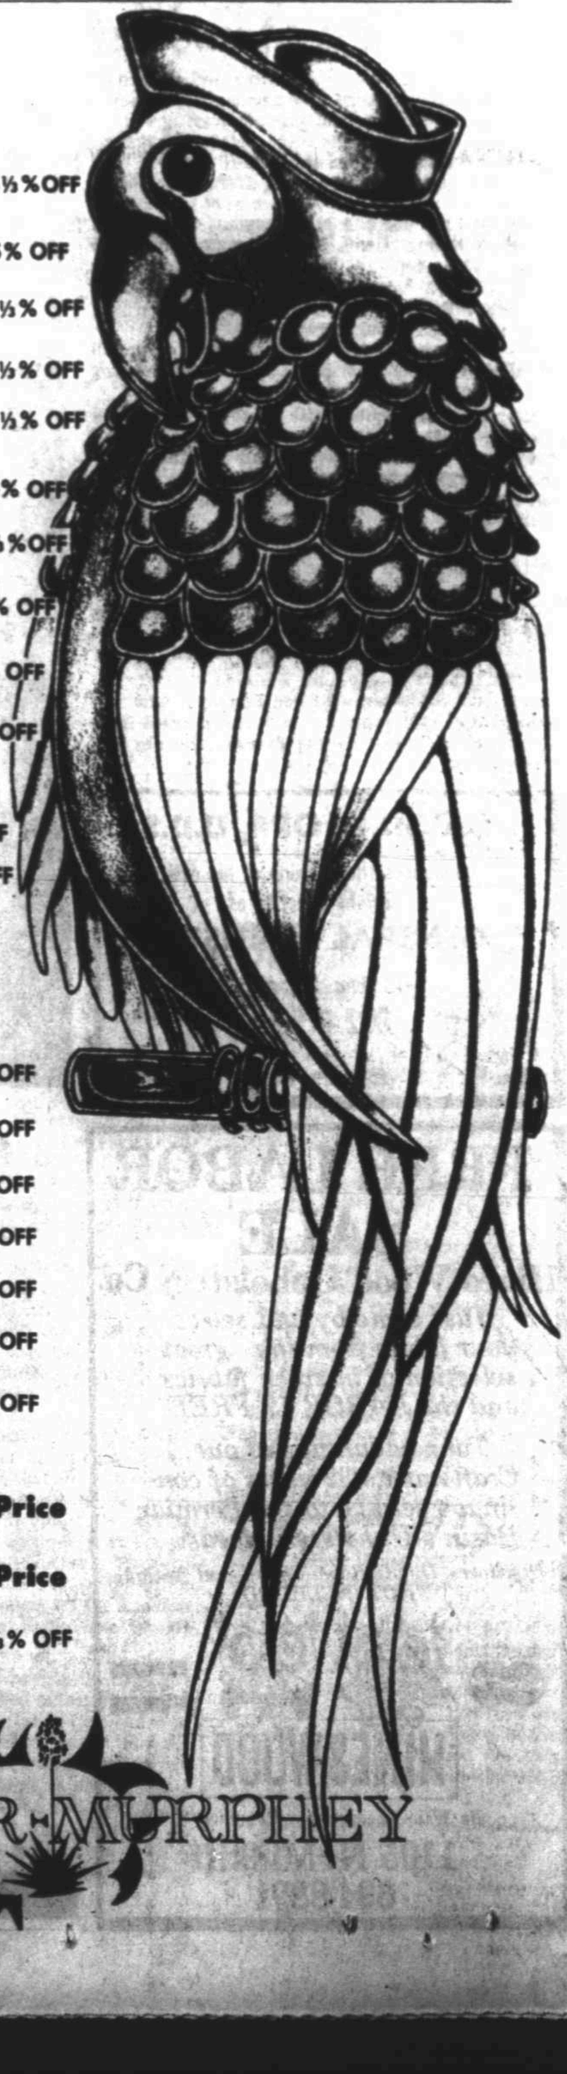

Spokeswoman Ariella Ravdal said the sanction against correspondent Dan Scemama was lifted after a meeting between military spokesman Brig. Gen. Yaacov Even and Joseph Lapid, director general of the Broadcasting Authority.

Economy takes priority as 98th Congress opens

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The search for solutions to the soaring unemployment and swollen federal deficits will dominate the new 98th Congress where Democratic House leaders have gained more power to control what happens in the chamber.

Although the economy is the No. 1 priority, other difficult problems — many lingering from last year — still must be solved.

The unfinished work includes propping up the Social Security system, setting new air pollution standards, investigating natural gas pricing, and adjusting farm support payments.

Congress convened Monday to begin a two-year session. The opening was mostly ceremonial, with little real work scheduled until after President Reagan makes his State of the Union address Jan. 25.

But Democratic House leaders succeeded in getting the House to approve several rules changes, included one which will make it hapder for members to attach to spending bills legislation on issues like abortion, school busing, or military and foreign aid.

Republicans complained they will be muzzled by the changes, but Democrats say they will make the House run more efficiently.

Democrats also removed Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, from the Budget Committee. Gramm was one of the so-called "Boll Weevils," a group of Southern Democrats who frequently supported the Reagan administration's economic policies.

In preparing for business ahead, congressional leaders quickly made it clear that no matter what issues are unsettled, the economy would be addressed first.

"The time for waiting for jobs has passed," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., who was elected to his fourth term as speaker on Monday. "The time for action for jobs is at hand. The federal government must not bide its time waiting for an economic recovery. It must take those steps necessary to ensure a strong recovery."

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said he plans to develop a legislative agenda aimed at tackling economic problems well in advance of Reagan's speech.

"The first job has to be to get the economy going," Baker told reporters Monday.

With unemployment at 10.8 percent in November, House Democrats are likely to renew their push for a public service jobs program, with support in the Republican-controlled Senate. Baker has vowed that "there will be a jobs program" in the 98th Congress, whether Reagan supports it or not.

The House approved a $5.4 billion jobs program in the closing hours of the 97th Congress; the Senate adopted a more modest $1.2 billion version. Both were dropped in the face of a veto threat.

Congress also must start over in writing a federal budget, this one for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. High unemployment, however, has cut tax revenues while forcing federal spending up.

As a result, economists are predicting that the deficit in the 1984 budget may reach $200 billion, forcing lawmakers to choose between cutting domestic programs or defense to narrow the gap.

Congress also must worry about the financing crisis of the Social Security system, which it put off dealing with in the last session by permitting borrowing among the three trust funds for one year.

A bipartisan presidential commission has until Jan. 15 to recommend a blend of tax increases and benefit reductions to make up the $150 billion to $200 billion it says will be needed through this decade to keep the system afloat.

If Congress fails to act, it is estimated the retirement fund will be unable to meet benefit checks by July.

Congress also must deal with reauthorization of the Clean Air Act. Lawmakers wrestled with the problem all through the last two years, but were unable to reach a compromise.

The deadline for compliance with air quality standards was Dec. 31 under the old law, and more than 140 counties face possible federal sanctions, including construction bans and cuts in federal aid, if that deadline isn't extended soon.

Natural gas prices also could be an explosive issue in the session's early months. Quirks in the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act are causing dramatic increases in gas prices for many homeowners this winter, and pressure is on Congress to make corrective changes quickly.

In an effort to help the nation's declining rural economy, farm-belt congressmen are preparing for a third major commodity price support debate in as many years.

U.S. resumes supplying of paraquat

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government, in a move officials claim could cut marijuana imports by 70 percent, is going back into the business of helping foreign producers spray their pot plants with the weed-killer paraquat.

But marijuana smokers won't have to worry if they inhale smoke from contaminated marijuana because the risk of lung damage is "virtually non-existent," according to a government statement.

Imported marijuana accounts for about 90 percent of the U.S. supply.

Congress banned the government from getting involved in foreign paraquat operations from 1978 until the end of 1981 because of concern that paraquat could harm a smoker's lungs. At the time the ban was imposed, the government was helping Mexico kill its marijuana crops with paraquat.

But the ban was lifted 13 months ago after congressmen considered evidence that paraquat was not harmful. Before formally deciding to proceed, the State Department prepared an environmental impact statement.

"The department concluded that the overall benefits of using paraquat would significantly outweigh the potential problems of the herbicide," the State Department said in a statement.

"We estimate that marijuana supplies from foreign countries may be permanently reduced by as much as 60 to 70 percent if herbicide eradication is conducted," it said.

The statement added: "As with any commodity, reduced supplies result in higher prices. This would be particularly important with regard to school age children who would be less likely to afford a drug price increase."

The department estimated it would cost about $19 million to provide training and equipment for the spraying of about 75,000 acres.

Shooting scene

Houston police officers Monday gather evidence at the shooting scene in the emergency room admitting area at Ben Taub Hospital. A man who shot a security guard and grazed an off-duty officer later was shot by police.

Emergency room shaken by shootout

HOUSTON (AP) — Dozens of hospital workers and patients ran for cover or hid under desks when a man seeking treatment in an emergency room was wounded in a shootout with two policemen, officials said.

It was the second shooting at the Ben Taub General Hospital in less than three weeks.

Billy Ray Clark, 29, was shot in the stomach Monday after wresting a .38-caliber gun from a hospital security guard's holster and shooting two officers, police said.

"It was complete bedlam," said Wanda Hebert, a clerk in a nearby office who crawled under a desk when she heard the shots about 1:45 p.m. About 50 people were in the vicinity.

Clark was was listed in poor condition after undergoing surgery at Ben Taub, a huge medical complex that includes M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute, where a cancer specialist was shot to death in his office last month.

Police have made no arrests in the Dec. 17 killing of Dr. Fred G. Conrad, 53, who was shot six times in the head, neck and shoulder as he sat in his office.

In Monday's incident, witnesses said Clark pulled a .38-caliber pistol from the holster of Robert McMenomy, an off-duty Texas Medical Center police officer, and shot him in the stomach. He later fired a shot that grazed Houston Police Officer James H. Legg in the head.

McMenomy, 31, who was working as a security guard at the hospital, was listed in critical condition. Legg, an 18-year veteran with the Houston department, was in fair condition.

"The first shot went wild. The second shot hit him (McMenomy) in the stomach and he fell backwards and started screaming. He screamed about eight times and nobody could get to him," said Ann Siford, 52, of Shephard, Texas, who was at the hospital to check on a friend.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This article is third in a series explaining some implications of one of the most massive corporate dismemberments in history, the breakup of AT&T's Bell System, scheduled for Jan. 1, 1984.

Today's article details how and why Bell is being broken up.

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

Divestiture. Webster's Dictionary defines it as the compulsory transfer of title or disposal of interests (as stock in a corporation) upon government order.

In early 1984, American Telephone and Telegraph (AT&T) will split into a national company and seven regional holding companies, divesting itself of the 22 Bell Operating Companies (BOCs).

The out-of-court divestiture agreement was approved in August 1982 by U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene.

Each BOC will become part of a holding company, and a slimmer, restructured AT&T will be out of the local phone service business. It will shed about 75 percent of its assets, which total $145 billion. It will lose 60 to 70 percent of its staff.

One thing changed by the FCC order is that local operating companies, like Southwestern Bell, now are restricted to sell or lease only those telephones that they had in stock as of December 31, 1982. A few less popular models of phones may be unavailable late in 1983.

AT&T sold $51 billion in products and services this year, making it sixth in sales among U.S. companies listed in Dun's Business Rankings.

OVER A MILLION people work for Ma Bell in its present structure.

With annual sales of nearly $6 billion, the Southwestern Bell subsidiary of AT&T ranks 79th in sales among companies in Dun's Rankings.

Southwestern Bell is big, and seems healthy when compared to other BOCs, or to regional-grouped Bell companies. It has a bright future on its own — if management and know-how are sufficient for more growth.

Third in a Series

Midland, said Bell spokesman Jay Allen, has grown to be the hub of this area's telephone network; the city continues to be a high priority service area for Southwestern Bell.

Southwestern Bell will continue to ask for rate increases, especially since it will not have other AT&T profit centers to lean on.

BELL ALSO WILL ask the PUC to up rates because of "inflation, tax depreciation changes and the desire for a better profit margin," according to an article on Bell-Texas PUC hearings.

BOCs will be able to make some additional money by charging all customers a long-distance access fee, and some money will flow in from all the long-distance services, including US TEL, SPRINT, MCI, and AT&T Long Lines.

What's uncertain is how much customers will have to dish out in order to keep Southwestern Bell healthy — as it is today — and keep the local phone systems operating.

BOCs will have to make money, beefing up local profit centers in order to keep their stock — in separate regional issues — from falling on the 1984 New York Stock Exchange.

The whole battle to divest AT&T of Southwestern Bell and other local affiliates has been heating up since the mid-70s.

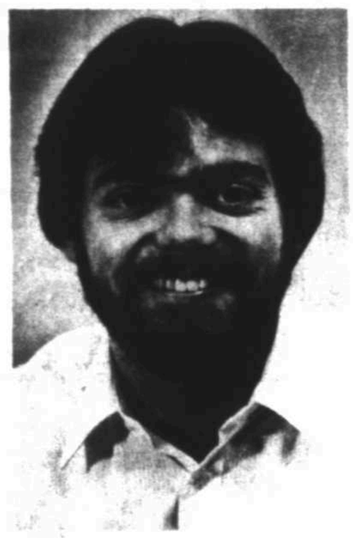

MCI COMMUNICATIONS, a scrappy Washington, D.C. firm that sells communications services and long distance calls for consumers, sued Bell twice — winning a $1.8 billion damage award because Bell effectively barred them from the industry.

Money has never been better spent. MCI became a high-valued over-the-counter stock, and the MCI and Justice Department suits — along with others — have gradually opened the field to competition.

In the U.S., this industry — according to Business Week — has revenues of $75 billion each year. It's expected to double in the next five years.

In January, the Justice Department and AT&T announced they had

Betty Sheeler resigns county position

— Betty Sheeler

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Betty Sheeler, who five months ago lambasted the Midland County commissioners for their blase-to-indifferent attitude toward two county-run federal housing programs which she oversaw and effected some satisfaction, has resigned.

"I'm really just not pleased doing this work for the county anymore," Ms. Sheeler said Monday. "When your effectiveness is diminished, your enthusiasm is diminished."

In a terse letter dated Dec. 29, Ms. Sheeler informed County Judge Bill Ahders and the four commissioners that she was resigning as coordinator of housing for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD's) $1.6 million program to upgrade one of Midland's windowpane areas and as executive director of the rent subsidy program. Both jobs pay her $1,350 monthly.

"Dear Gentlemen," her letter read, "This is my resignation, effective Jan. 15, 1983, from the positions.... This notice complies with the terms (two-week notice) of the agreement for personal services expected.... Very truly yours, Betty Sheeler."

Attached to the typewritten letter of resignation was a penned noted to Ahders: "I do appreciate your assistance and the confidence in me which you voiced publicly several times."

Related story, Page 1C

Ms. Sheeler's discontent apparently stemmed from the commissioners' seeming indifference to and discouragement of her seeking additional federal grants to help rehabilitate or upgrade some of Midland's more impoverished areas, such as the windowpane area.

That area in south central Midland is so-named for it is surrounded by the city of Midland, is without city water and sewer services and is occupied by many poverty-level people. The HUD program is repairing housing and is building a day care center in Taylor Park. It calls for water and sewer lines and paved streets and gutters.

Ms. Sheeler got involved in the federal rent-subsidy program as a gratis community service project three years ago; she was paid nothing for the first year. The second year, she was given a token salary. With the less-than-unanimous approval of the Commissioners' Court, she was instrumental in gaining the $1.6 federal Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) for the county in 1981.

Last July, as the three-year program was well underway, she tendered her resignation as an officer and director of the Midland Housing Association and confronted the commissioners, who exhorted her to stay on. Then, on

AP Laserphoto Map

Rain is forecast by the National Weather Service for Tuesday, stretching from the Pacific Northwest into the Rocky Mountains. Snow is predicted for mountainous western regions of Idaho, Montana and Wyoming.

Temperature should climb into 50s

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it should be sunny and warmer Wednesday with a high in the mid-50s. Westerly to northwesterly winds are expected to breeze through at 5-15mph.

Meanwhile, tonight should be clear and cold with the low in the mid-20s. Southwesterly winds 5-10 mph.

Monday's high of 36 fell short of the record high of 70 set in 1977, and the overnight low of 22 was quite a bit warmer than the record low of 8 set in 1959.

Flood damage may reach $200 million

By The Associated Press

Dry weather is giving four flood-weary Southern states a much-needed breather, but volunteers patrolled sandbag dikes today where some waters are still rising and officials began adding up damage that may reach $200 million in Louisiana alone.

Up to 18 inches of rain fell on portions of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas during a two-week period beginning at Christmas. The ensuing floods inundated well over a million acres of lowlands, forcing about 10,000 people to flee their homes and causing at least three deaths and 250 injuries, officials said.

President Reagan, during a 1½ hour tour of the Monroe, La., area Sunday, promised he would respond favorably — and quickly — to any requests for federal aid.

Inspectors from the Federal Emergency Management Agency arrived Monday in Monroe to begin totaling damage claims that will determine the extent of federal assistance. The total may not be known for several weeks, officials said.

Damage in Ouachita Parish, which includes Monroe, was estimated at $81 million, Treen said. Statewide damage could reach $200 million, the governor said.

Harry Borah, with the agency's National Flood Insurance Division, said 300 household flood claims have been filed through a temporary office in Monroe.

"Because of the depth of the water in these homes, and the amount of time the water has remained in the homes, and the high cost to repair them," damage claims in the Monroe area probably will be higher than the national average, Borah said.

The average flood claim has been close to $3,000 for contents and $3,000 per building where the agency underwrote flood insurance, he said.

Although forecasters said rain could return to the region about Friday, officials said they were holding their own against the floodwaters.

Monroe Mayor Robert E. Powell said Monday that waters remained steady around that northeast Louisiana city of 60,000.

"We've all got that optimistic view that maybe we can survive it," Powell said. "But if we have bad weather, it could all come back."

The Ouachita River, which runs through the center of Monroe, and the Red River, which flows from Arkansas through Alexandria in Rapides Parish in central Louisiana, were not expected to crest until Thursday or Friday — well above flood stage.

Rapides Parish Civil Defense Director A.J. Gambordella said volunteers were still maintaining their vigil on the dikes.

Most rivers in southwestern Louisiana were receding Monday as were those in Arkansas, officials said.

The Tombigbee River was expected to crest above flood stage Wednesday near Demopolis in southern Alabama while the Mississippi River wasn't scheduled to crest at Greenville, Miss., until Saturday, officials said.

City to bury debris despite dioxin threat

TIMES BEACH, Mo. (AP) — Waterlogged debris from recent floods will be promptly buried in a landfill — even though it may contain the toxic chemical dioxin — because it is already "a sure health hazard," officials say.

Patrick J. Breheny, regional director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, said the stinking trash from flooding of the Meramec River last month is a more immediate threat to the community than soil contaminated by dioxin.

"The failure to move the existing solid waste is a sure health hazard. The other is a possible health hazard that can't be determined for several weeks," Breheny said Monday. "So we're balancing a sure health hazard against a possible health hazard."

Tests conducted along roads in this community of 2,200, a St. Louis suburb, showed dioxin contamination to be at levels of up to 100 parts per billion before December's devastating floods.

Anything above a level of one part per billion is considered to be hazardous. The dioxin, a byproduct of several chemical manufacturing processes, was in waste oil sprayed on unpaved Times Beach streets more than a decade ago.

Although the effects of dioxin are disputed, certain types have been proven to cause cancer, birth defects and liver damage in animals.

Breheny said federal funds would pay for 75 percent of the trash removal cost and the state would pay for the rest.

The announcement on trash removal — possibly beginning as early as this week — was made after about 25 federal, state and local officials met Monday to discuss the cleanup problem.

Also at the meeting were officials from the Environmental Protection Agency, which plans later this week to conduct tests on the flood debris as well as further tests on city streets.

"We can't delay moving the debris," Breheny said. "The mayor has told me that people are really getting hot and are ready to move the debris themselves."

Piles of the junk, comprised mainly of soaked furniture, bedding and household goods, have left a stench over the town and offer new homes to rodents, officials said.

Fred Lafser, director of the Missouri Department of Natural Resources, said debris from the flood-stricken town will be hauled to a sanitary landfill and buried in an isolated area beneath 12 to 24 inches of soil.

If the trash later is found to be contaminated by dioxin, it will be moved to a hazardous wastes landfill, Lafser said. Neither Lafser nor Breheny was able to estimate costs.

As the officials were meeting, the first of more than 100 families still homeless from last month's floods began moving into mobile homes provided by the federal government.

Under a disaster declaration made Dec. 10 by President Reagan, 15 counties in Missouri are eligible for federal flood-recovery funds.

Oct. 25, she was hired in a 3-1 vote to head up the two federal programs for a $16,200 yearly salary.

"Write me down as opposed," Commissioner Win Brown had said. "I'm against the whole (federal) program." Three months earlier, Brown had assured Ms. Sheeler, "I'm not questioning your integrity whatever."

And Commissioner Durward Wright said there would be "no fruition unless you are there...I have complete trust in you." Said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis at the time: "I think it would be somewhat disastrous for us to change horses in midstream." He recommended that a contract be worked between her and commissioners to entice Ms. Sheeler to oversee the programs. They won her back. "Let her have the headaches," Ahders had said.

But Ms. Sheeler felt she never got the backing, although the blessings were voiced, from the commissioners.

"I'm not sure what they want," she said.

Just who will succeed Ms. Sheeler hasn't been determined yet and neither have the commissioners accepted or rejected her resignation. "There's no dearth of people who are available" to oversee the programs, she said.

Ahders spoke well of Ms. Sheeler:

"She worked at the outset in trying times...I don't have anything but good to say about her."

Authorities call end to search for man buried in avalanche

STANLEY, Idaho (AP) — Search teams say it could be late spring or early summer before the body of a snowmobiler can be recovered from the mountain area where he was presumed killed in an avalanche.

After two days of searching in the remote mountains of south-central Idaho, authorities Monday halted their efforts to find Don Aldous, in his 30s, of Clayton, Idaho.

Officials said Aldous and his brother, Lynn, were trapped Saturday when their snowmobile apparently triggered an avalanche. Lynn struggled out of the heavy snow and alerted authorities.

The threat of still more avalanches in the Sawtooth National Recreational Area about 17 miles southeast of this Idaho city prompted Custer County Sheriff Morgan Haroldsen to halt the search.

Ed Waldapfel, national forest service spokesman, said Haroldsen made the decision after emergency crews reported that a minor slide occurred in the area Monday.

"He just can't risk the lives of others going in there again," Waldapfel said.

Weekend temperatures in Stanley, a few miles away, dipped to 25 degrees below zero during the weekend. The area received more than 2 inches of snow since Sunday night and it was snowing Monday with winds making visibility difficult.

Aldous was presumed dead and his body probably won't be recovered until the snow melts, Waldapfel said.

Eight searchers were at the avalanche site Monday but took shelter in a one-room cabin because of the weather conditions. About 25 snowmobiles ferrying more searchers into the area were sent back, he said.

Officials said the snow was up to 30 feet deep, covering a 35-acre area, 300 yards wide and 500 yards long.

Reagan's bipartisan MX panel seen as political ploy

WASHINGTON (AP) — By appointing a bipartisan commission to study the MX missile, President Reagan is trying to take the issue out of the political arena to improve the weapon's chances of survival, administration officials say.

"The president is interested in getting a consensus and congressional approval for a basing mode for the MX, rather than re-fighting the 1980 campaign," said one official who asked to anonymous.

The 11-member commission named by Reagan Monday to review his strategic weapons modernization program and MX basing alternatives includes Harold Brown, who was defense secretary under President Jimmy Carter, and James Woolsey, undersecretary of the Navy in the Carter administration.

The only representative from the Reagan administration's Defense Department is Dr. Marvin Atkins, director of offensive and space systems. Atkins will not be a voting member of the commission, but will serve as an executive officer.

Asked why the new commission did not include any top officials of the Defense Department, one administration source said, "The intention is not to give the president pre-cooked advice."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's staff prepared the recommendations that led to the president's decision last November to base 100 MX missiles closely together.

Last month, Congress rejected the "dense pack" basing plan, which faces even tougher going in the 98th Congress because of an increase in the number of Democrats. Three of the five members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff had also opposed "dense pack."

Although Weinberger originally favored other basing concepts, especially the idea of placing MX missiles on long-endurance airplanes, he ultimately came around to the closely spaced basing idea, sources said.

They added that Weinberger has strongly indicated he still believes "dense pack" is the best basing plan to assure the survival of U.S. intercontinental ballistic missiles against possible Soviet surprise attack.

"When Weinberger gets his mind made up on something, he rarely changes it," said an official, who refused to be identified. "Nobody wants to lose the MX through rigidity."

"The commission probably will come to the same conclusion as the Defense Department did, that is, the closely spaced basing plan is the best one to assure MX survivability," said one Pentagon source, who also refused to allow his name to be used.

The Justice Department "has not 'opposed anything material' " in the reorganization plan, said Telecommunications Week.

Transfers, assignments, deeds, leases, sharing agreements, termination agreements, mutual releases and other agreements are detailed in the plan:

"END OF DECEMBER (1983) — Transfer asset ownership, dividending of stock, assumption of liabilities and assignment of personnel to their post-divestiture employing companies."

"Jan. 1, 1984 — As of (that date), AT&T will have divested itself of all ownership interests in the Bell System's exchange, exchange access and directory operations."

In this fashion BOCs like Southwestern Bell will be severed from the AT&T structure, and states will continue to regulate telephone service through agencies like Texas' Public Utilities Council.

Wednesday: MCI service pioneered cut-rate long-distance calls.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, January 5, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: How wonderful that you and I were both born on January 5th! Others sharing this birthday with us include Academy Award winner Diane Keaton, former Vice President Walter Mondale, Pittsburgh football coach Chuck Noll and actress Pamela Sue Martin. In the year ahead, you feel better equipped to deal with life's ups and downs. Avoid looking back. The best is yet to come! Romance remains exciting but takes a back seat to your career. You continue to do more for others than for yourself. Develop new strategies. A change of residence could help a marriage. Children are a source of pride and pleasure.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have strayed from a goal, but mate helps you get back on track. Exceptional luck accompanies those who travel today. A last minute loan restores your peace of mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hide your fears from loved one. You receive a job offer from someone who has been on the sidelines for several years. Avoid a difficult relative for a while.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): When money is involved, get promises in writing. Your fairness pays big dividends. Success takes a bit longer than you had hoped, but the results will be greater too.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone you thought was your friend has been trying to steal your ideas, and maybe even your job. You have a right to expect greater loyalty. People who are bombastic make you tense.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A leadership role would fit you fine, but certain people who have observed your leisure-time antics cannot envision you as a boss. Convince them with deeds, not words.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Working with someone you respect makes you more productive. Some salespeople hurt themselves by coming on too hard. Let up a bit. Romance puts you on a collision course with a friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A mixed bag is indicated at work today. Approach new tasks without any preconceived notions and you will get better results. A social event could set the stage for romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid people who are pushy by tackling those chores that you can handle alone. Romance is exciting and brings you true satisfaction. Answer phone calls and correspondence promptly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can do your career some permanent good this week. Keep your eyes and ears open, but say as little as possible. A relative is successful in clearing up a problem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You should be able to get contract concessions if you act quickly. Friends will provide information not available elsewhere. The news from a distance leads you to take immediate action.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Distractions abound today! Your mind appears to be on something other than work. Try to get back on track. Either solve a romantic problem or break off the relationship.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Mate offers sound advice. Pay attention. This is a day for consolidating past gains, not starting new projects. You need to correct a billing mistake as soon as possible.

There was only one women's pair competing in the Open Pair championship at the recent World Bridge Olympiad in Biarritz—Dianna Gordon of Toronto, and Sharyn Kokish of Montreal. Canadians can be proud of their performance in this event. Witness this hand.

We do not think that, with a good six-card major and an unstopped suit, South should boast about his two no trump opening bid. North transferred to spades and then raised to game.

It is easy to see that this contract should fail by two tricks. But this was a pair championship, and to earn a really good score it was essential that the defenders should collect a three-trick set. Dianna, who earlier in the tournament had won the Mixed Pairs title, got her side off to a good start by leading a diamond, and the defenders raked in the first two tricks. Then Sharyn shifted to club, and a losing finesse allowed the defenders to complete their book.

Now West found the killing defense—she continued with a diamond, presenting declarer with a ruff-sluff. Declarer ruffed in dummy and led trump to the king and ace. West won and gave declarer another ruff-sluff. This time declarer ruffed in hand. He crossed to dummy with a heart and led a trump. Dianna perforce won the queen and now completed declarer's misery by leading her last diamond. No matter what declarer did, East had to score her ten of trumps for the third undertrick and an excellent result.

Use of steroids may have harmful side effects

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter has asthma and I know from other people with asthma that they have been helped a lot with steroids. Yet my doctor says he would rather not use them. Do you see any reason why one doctor would use steroids and another would not? — Mrs. Y.C., Hartford, Conn.

Dear Mrs. C.: As I've written on other occasions, any drug powerful enough to be effective also has the potential of doing harm. This is true of a drug as common as aspirin, and is certainly true of steroids.

It has been reported, for example, that patients with asthma who use oral steroids may be vulnerable to weakened bones and the development of cataracts. I would assume that your physician is concerned about the possibility of side effects such as these, and therefore hopes to avoid prescribing steroids.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My girlfriend told me that her doctor told her not to get an IUD because she has never ad any children. What does having children have to do with getting an IUD? — Nellie, Springfield, Ill.

Dear Nellie: A woman who uses an intrauterine device (IUD) is more likely to develop an infection known as pelvic inflammatory disease (PID). Should this occur, there is a possibility of tubal obstruction and infertility. Therefore, a number of doctors recommend against the use of IUD's by women who have never had children.

The risk of PID is increased for young women who have several sexual partners. This may simply reflect the fact that young women are more likely to have more sexual partners and may therefore be exposed more to sexually transmitted diseases.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son was operated on a few months ago and the surgery went about as well as could be expected. What frightened me more than the operation was that at one point after the operation he seemed to be delirious. At first even the doctor didn't know what was happening, but later he said it must have been a reaction to one of the drugs my son was getting. Once the drug was stopped, he got better. Does this happen often? — Mr. B.E., Moline, Ill.

Dear Mr. E.: Adverse drug reactions can result in psychiatric illnesses. For example, drugs used in the treatment of high blood pressure as well as some of the major tranquilizers can cause or aggravate depression. Oral contraceptives may have the same effect.

This does not mean these drugs should never be used, but any adverse reaction in a patient on medication should be reported to the physician. Drug-related psychiatric illnesses can often be easily managed.

For Phyllis, Baltimore, Md.: Yes, high-blood pressure is a risk factor for stroke. So are heart disease, diabetes and possibly diet. Some risk factors can be controlled, and the prudent person will work with his or her physician to see that, where possible, this is done.

Taxpayers can help in study of rare frog

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — By checking a box on their state tax return, taxpayers can help count a rare frog they've probably never given a thought to.

The state income tax form has boxes for $2, $5 and $10 donations to help study the disappearing Tarahumara frogs or 1,000 other non-game wildlife species.

Or taxpayers can fill in a blank to indicate a higher donation.

After the state Revenue Department rakes off the first $45,000 for administrative expenses, the donations will go to the state Game and Fish Department, which is conducting the studies.

Three years ago, 70 of the Tarahumara frogs were spotted between Tucson and Mexico.

"Last year, they found one specimen in Arizona, and this year, I think none," said Bruce Taubert, state fisheries chief. "It might have something to do with arsenic or heavy metal in the water."

AP Laserphoto Map

Rain is forecast by the National Weather Service for Tuesday, stretching from the Pacific Northwest into the Rocky Mountains. Snow is predicted for mountainous western regions of Idaho, Montana and Wyoming.

Temperature should climb into 50s

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it should be sunny and warmer Wednesday with a high in the mid-50s. Westerly to northwesterly winds are expected to breeze through at 5-15mph.

Meanwhile, tonight should be clear and cold with the low in the mid-20s. Southwesterly winds 5-10 mph.

Monday's high of 36 fell short of the record high of 70 set in 1977, and the overnight low of 22 was quite a bit warmer than the record low of 8 set in 1959.

A volcano that spewed lava fountains 200 feet into the air in two eruptions could blow yet a third time, say scientists at Hawaii Volcanoes National Park observatory were keeping a close watch on Kilauea Volcano.

Flood damage may reach $200 million

By The Associated Press

Dry weather is giving four flood-weary Southern states a much-needed breather, but volunteers patrolled sandbag dikes today where some waters are still rising and officials began adding up damage that may reach $200 million in Louisiana alone.

Up to 18 inches of rain fell on portions of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas during a two-week period beginning at Christmas. The ensuing floods inundated well over a million acres of lowlands, forcing about 10,000 people to flee their homes and causing at least three deaths and 250 injuries, officials said.

President Reagan, during a 1½ hour tour of the Monroe, La., area Sunday, promised he would respond favorably — and quickly — to any requests for federal aid.

Inspectors from the Federal Emergency Management Agency arrived Monday in Monroe to begin totaling damage claims that will determine the extent of federal assistance. The total may not be known for several weeks, officials said.

Damage in Ouachita Parish, which includes Monroe, was estimated at $81 million, Treen said. Statewide damage could reach $200 million, the governor said.

Harry Borah, with the agency's National Flood Insurance Division, said 300 household flood claims have been filed through a temporary office in Monroe.

"Because of the depth of the water in these homes, and the amount of time the water has remained in the homes, and the high cost to repair them," damage claims in the Monroe area probably will be higher than the national average, Borah said.

The average flood claim has been close to $3,000 for contents and $3,000 per building where the agency underwrote flood insurance, he said.

Although forecasters said rain could return to the region about Friday, officials said they were holding their own against the floodwaters.

Monroe Mayor Robert E. Powell said Monday that waters remained steady around that northeast Louisiana city of 60,000.

"We've all got that optimistic view that maybe we can survive it," Powell said. "But if we have bad weather, it could all come back."

The Ouachita River, which runs through the center of Monroe, and the Red River, which flows from Arkansas through Alexandria in Rapides Parish in central Louisiana, were not expected to crest until Thursday or Friday — well above flood stage.

Rapides Parish Civil Defense Director A.J. Gambordella said volunteers were still maintaining their vigil on the dikes.

Most rivers in southwestern Louisiana were receding Monday as were those in Arkansas, officials said.

The Tombigbee River was expected to crest above flood stage Wednesday near Demopolis in southern Alabama while the Mississippi River wasn't scheduled to crest at Greenville, Miss., until Saturday, officials said.

City to bury debris despite dioxin threat

TIMES BEACH, Mo. (AP) — Waterlogged debris from recent floods will be promptly buried in a landfill — even though it may contain the toxic chemical dioxin — because it is already "a sure health hazard," officials say.

Patrick J. Breheny, regional director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, said the stinking trash from flooding of the Meramec River last month is a more immediate threat to the community than soil contaminated by dioxin.

"The failure to move the existing solid waste is a sure health hazard. The other is a possible health hazard that can't be determined for several weeks," Breheny said Monday. "So we're balancing a sure health hazard against a possible health hazard."

Tests conducted along roads in this community of 2,200, a St. Louis suburb, showed dioxin contamination to be at levels of up to 100 parts per billion before December's devastating floods.

Anything above a level of one part per billion is considered to be hazardous. The dioxin, a byproduct of several chemical manufacturing processes, was in waste oil sprayed on unpaved Times Beach streets more than a decade ago.

Although the effects of dioxin are disputed, certain types have been proven to cause cancer, birth defects and liver damage in animals.

Breheny said federal funds would pay for 75 percent of the trash removal cost and the state would pay for the rest.

The announcement on trash removal — possibly beginning as early as this week — was made after about 25 federal, state and local officials met Monday to discuss the cleanup problem.

Also at the meeting were officials from the Environmental Protection Agency, which plans later this week to conduct tests on the flood debris as well as further tests on city streets.

"We can't delay moving the debris," Breheny said. "The mayor has told me that people are really getting hot and are ready to move the debris themselves."

Piles of the junk, comprised mainly of soaked furniture, bedding and household goods, have left a stench over the town and offer new homes to rodents, officials said.

Fred Lafser, director of the Missouri Department of Natural Resources, said debris from the flood-stricken town will be hauled to a sanitary landfill and buried in an isolated area beneath 12 to 24 inches of soil.

If the trash later is found to be contaminated by dioxin, it will be moved to a hazardous wastes landfill, Lafser said. Neither Lafser nor Breheny was able to estimate costs.

As the officials were meeting, the first of more than 100 families still homeless from last month's floods began moving into mobile homes provided by the federal government.

Under a disaster declaration made Dec. 10 by President Reagan, 15 counties in Missouri are eligible for federal flood-recovery funds.

Oct. 25, she was hired in a 3-1 vote to head up the two federal programs for a $16,200 yearly salary.

"Write me down as opposed," Commissioner Win Brown had said. "I'm against the whole (federal) program." Three months earlier, Brown had assured Ms. Sheeler, "I'm not questioning your integrity whatever."

And Commissioner Durward Wright said there would be "no fruition unless you are there...I have complete trust in you." Said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis at the time: "I think it would be somewhat disastrous for us to change horses in midstream." He recommended that a contract be worked between her and commissioners to entice Ms. Sheeler to oversee the programs. They won her back. "Let her have the headaches," Ahders had said.

But Ms. Sheeler felt she never got the backing, although the blessings were voiced, from the commissioners.

"I'm not sure what they want," she said.

Just who will succeed Ms. Sheeler hasn't been determined yet and neither have the commissioners accepted or rejected her resignation. "There's no dearth of people who are available" to oversee the programs, she said.

Ahders spoke well of Ms. Sheeler:

"She worked at the outset in trying times...I don't have anything but good to say about her."

Authorities call end to search for man buried in avalanche

STANLEY, Idaho (AP) — Search teams say it could be late spring or early summer before the body of a snowmobiler can be recovered from the mountain area where he was presumed killed in an avalanche.

After two days of searching in the remote mountains of south-central Idaho, authorities Monday halted their efforts to find Don Aldous, in his 30s, of Clayton, Idaho.

Officials said Aldous and his brother, Lynn, were trapped Saturday when their snowmobile apparently triggered an avalanche. Lynn struggled out of the heavy snow and alerted authorities.

The threat of still more avalanches in the Sawtooth National Recreational Area about 17 miles southeast of this Idaho city prompted Custer County Sheriff Morgan Haroldsen to halt the search.

Ed Waldapfel, national forest service spokesman, said Haroldsen made the decision after emergency crews reported that a minor slide occurred in the area Monday.

"He just can't risk the lives of others going in there again," Waldapfel said.

Weekend temperatures in Stanley, a few miles away, dipped to 25 degrees below zero during the weekend. The area received more than 2 inches of snow since Sunday night and it was snowing Monday with winds making visibility difficult.

Aldous was presumed dead and his body probably won't be recovered until the snow melts, Waldapfel said.

Eight searchers were at the avalanche site Monday but took shelter in a one-room cabin because of the weather conditions. About 25 snowmobiles ferrying more searchers into the area were sent back, he said.

Officials said the snow was up to 30 feet deep, covering a 35-acre area, 300 yards wide and 500 yards long.

WASHINGTON (AP) — By appointing a bipartisan commission to study the MX missile, President Reagan is trying to take the issue out of the political arena to improve the weapon's chances of survival, administration officials say.

"The president is interested in getting a consensus and congressional approval for a basing mode for the MX, rather than re-fighting the 1980 campaign," said one official who asked to anonymous.

The 11-member commission named by Reagan Monday to review his strategic weapons modernization program and MX basing alternatives includes Harold Brown, who was defense secretary under President Jimmy Carter, and James Woolsey, undersecretary of the Navy in the Carter administration.

The only representative from the Reagan administration's Defense Department is Dr. Marvin Atkins, director of offensive and space systems. Atkins will not be a voting member of the commission, but will serve as an executive officer.

Asked why the new commission did not include any top officials of the Defense Department, one administration source said, "The intention is not to give the president pre-cooked advice."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's staff prepared the recommendations that led to the president's decision last November to base 100 MX missiles closely together.

Last month, Congress rejected the "dense pack" basing plan, which faces even tougher going in the 98th Congress because of an increase in the number of Democrats. Three of the five members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff had also opposed "dense pack."

Although Weinberger originally favored other basing concepts, especially the idea of placing MX missiles on long-endurance airplanes, he ultimately came around to the closely spaced basing idea, sources said.

They added that Weinberger has strongly indicated he still believes "dense pack" is the best basing plan to assure the survival of U.S. intercontinental ballistic missiles against possible Soviet surprise attack.

"When Weinberger gets his mind made up on something, he rarely changes it," said an official, who refused to be identified. "Nobody wants to lose the MX through rigidity."

"The commission probably will come to the same conclusion as the Defense Department did, that is, the closely spaced basing plan is the best one to assure MX survivability," said one Pentagon source, who also refused to allow his name to be used.

The Justice Department "has not 'opposed anything material' " in the reorganization plan, said Telecommunications Week.

Transfers, assignments, deeds, leases, sharing agreements, termination agreements, mutual releases and other agreements are detailed in the plan:

"END OF DECEMBER (1983) — Transfer asset ownership, dividending of stock, assumption of liabilities and assignment of personnel to their post-divestiture employing companies."

"Jan. 1, 1984 — As of (that date), AT&T will have divested itself of all ownership interests in the Bell System's exchange, exchange access and directory operations."

In this fashion BOCs like Southwestern Bell will be severed from the AT&T structure, and states will continue to regulate telephone service through agencies like Texas' Public Utilities Council.

Wednesday: MCI service pioneered cut-rate long-distance calls.

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, January 5, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: How wonderful that you and I were both born on January 5th! Others sharing this birthday with us include Academy Award winner Diane Keaton, former Vice President Walter Mondale, Pittsburgh football coach Chuck Noll and actress Pamela Sue Martin. In the year ahead, you feel better equipped to deal with life's ups and downs. Avoid looking back. The best is yet to come! Romance remains exciting but takes a back seat to your career. You continue to do more for others than for yourself. Develop new strategies. A change of residence could help a marriage. Children are a source of pride and pleasure.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have strayed from a goal, but mate helps you get back on track. Exceptional luck accompanies those who travel today. A last minute loan restores your peace of mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hide your fears from loved one. You receive a job offer from someone who has been on the sidelines for several years. Avoid a difficult relative for a while.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): When money is involved, get promises in writing. Your fairness pays big dividends. Success takes a bit longer than you had hoped, but the results will be greater too.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone you thought was your friend has been trying to steal your ideas, and maybe even your job. You have a right to expect greater loyalty. People who are bombastic make you tense.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A leadership role would fit you fine, but certain people who have observed your leisure-time antics cannot envision you as a boss. Convince them with deeds, not words.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Working with someone you respect makes you more productive. Some salespeople hurt themselves by coming on too hard. Let up a bit. Romance puts you on a collision course with a friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A mixed bag is indicated at work today. Approach new tasks without any preconceived notions and you will get better results. A social event could set the stage for romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid people who are pushy by tackling those chores that you can handle alone. Romance is exciting and brings you true satisfaction. Answer phone calls and correspondence promptly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can do your career some permanent good this week. Keep your eyes and ears open, but say as little as possible. A relative is successful in clearing up a problem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You should be able to get contract concessions if you act quickly. Friends will provide information not available elsewhere. The news from a distance leads you to take immediate action.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Distractions abound today! Your mind appears to be on something other than work. Try to get back on track. Either solve a romantic problem or break off the relationship.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Mate offers sound advice. Pay attention. This is a day for consolidating past gains, not starting new projects. You need to correct a billing mistake as soon as possible.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Use of steroids may have harmful side effects

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter has asthma and I know from other people with asthma that they have been helped a lot with steroids. Yet my doctor says he would rather not use them. Do you see any reason why one doctor would use steroids and another would not? — Mrs. Y.C., Hartford, Conn.

Dear Mrs. C.: As I've written on other occasions, any drug powerful enough to be effective also has the potential of doing harm. This is true of a drug as common as aspirin, and is certainly true of steroids.

It has been reported, for example, that patients with asthma who use oral steroids may be vulnerable to weakened bones and the development of cataracts. I would assume that your physician is concerned about the possibility of side effects such as these, and therefore hopes to avoid prescribing steroids.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My girlfriend told me that her doctor told her not to get an IUD because she has never ad any children. What does having children have to do with getting an IUD? — Nellie, Springfield, Ill.

Dear Nellie: A woman who uses an intrauterine device (IUD) is more likely to develop an infection known as pelvic inflammatory disease (PID). Should this occur, there is a possibility of tubal obstruction and infertility. Therefore, a number of doctors recommend against the use of IUD's by women who have never had children.

The risk of PID is increased for young women who have several sexual partners. This may simply reflect the fact that young women are more likely to have more sexual partners and may therefore be exposed more to sexually transmitted diseases.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son was operated on a few months ago and the surgery went about as well as could be expected. What frightened me more than the operation was that at one point after the operation he seemed to be delirious. At first even the doctor didn't know what was happening, but later he said it must have been a reaction to one of the drugs my son was getting. Once the drug was stopped, he got better. Does this happen often? — Mr. B.E., Moline, Ill.

Dear Mr. E.: Adverse drug reactions can result in psychiatric illnesses. For example, drugs used in the treatment of high blood pressure as well as some of the major tranquilizers can cause or aggravate depression. Oral contraceptives may have the same effect.

This does not mean these drugs should never be used, but any adverse reaction in a patient on medication should be reported to the physician. Drug-related psychiatric illnesses can often be easily managed.

For Phyllis, Baltimore, Md.: Yes, high-blood pressure is a risk factor for stroke. So are heart disease, diabetes and possibly diet. Some risk factors can be controlled, and the prudent person will work with his or her physician to see that, where possible, this is done.

Taxpayers can help in study of rare frog

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — By checking a box on their state tax return, taxpayers can help count a rare frog they've probably never given a thought to.

The state income tax form has boxes for $2, $5 and $10 donations to help study the disappearing Tarahumara frogs or 1,000 other non-game wildlife species.

Or taxpayers can fill in a blank to indicate a higher donation.

After the state Revenue Department rakes off the first $45,000 for administrative expenses, the donations will go to the state Game and Fish Department, which is conducting the studies.

Three years ago, 70 of the Tarahumara frogs were spotted between Tucson and Mexico.

"Last year, they found one specimen in Arizona, and this year, I think none," said Bruce Taubert, state fisheries chief. "It might have something to do with arsenic or heavy metal in the water."

There was only one women's pair competing in the Open Pair championship at the recent World Bridge Olympiad in Biarritz—Dianna Gordon of Toronto, and Sharyn Kokish of Montreal. Canadians can be proud of their performance in this event. Witness this hand.

We do not think that, with a good six-card major and an unstopped suit, South should boast about his two no trump opening bid. North transferred to spades and then raised to game.

It is easy to see that this contract should fail by two tricks. But this was a pair championship, and to earn a really good score it was essential that the defenders should collect a three-trick set. Dianna, who earlier in the tournament had won the Mixed Pairs title, got her side off to a good start by leading a diamond, and the defenders raked in the first two tricks. Then Sharyn shifted to club, and a losing finesse allowed the defenders to complete their book.

Now West found the killing defense—she continued with a diamond, presenting declarer with a ruff-sluff. Declarer ruffed in dummy and led trump to the king and ace. West won and gave declarer another ruff-sluff. This time declarer ruffed in hand. He crossed to dummy with a heart and led a trump. Dianna perforce won the queen and now completed declarer's misery by leading her last diamond. No matter what declarer did, East had to score her ten of trumps for the third undertrick and an excellent result.

Alabama bit by big bad Florida Gator

The Alabama basketball team went into so-called "Alligator Alley" — and got eaten alive.

"Let's face it, Florida is big and strong. We're not a tall and physical team. We are more of a finesse team. It was their strength versus our finesse, and they won out," said Alabama Coach Wimp Sanderson after his fifth-ranked team was upset 89-85 by the Gators in Gainesville.

It wasn't just another victory for the Gators, it was a program-builder for a Norm Sloan team that had its worst record in the school's history last year, 5-22.

"I've always said one game doesn't make a season, but this game has to help us the rest of this season," said Sloan.

Forward Ronnie Williams scored 22 points and sophomore center Eugene McDowell added 18 points and provided mature play under the boards to help Florida's cause.

Added Alabama's Ennis Whatley: "They shot the lights out. They executed real well and did what they had to do to win. We expected them to be strong inside."

Nabe Palmer, who had 18 points for Florida, hit six crucial foul shots during the final minute to preserve the Gators' lead. The previously unbeaten Crimson Tide, now 8-1, had been coming off last week's spectacular 94-73 victory over Georgetown.

Alabama's top scorer was Terry Williams, who had a game-high 25 points.

In other games involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 2 Memphis State walloped the University of Baltimore 103-57; No. 3 Kentucky trimmed Mississippi 72-60; No. 7 St. John's whipped Seton Hall 79-62; No. 10 Arkansas stopped Nebraska 64-58; 12th-ranked Tennessee clipped Georgia 87-76; 13th-ranked Louisville turned back Cincinnati 64-58 and No. 16 North Carolina State hammered Fairleigh Dickinson 111-76.

Top Ten

Keith Lee collected 22 points, four assists and a game-high 11 rebounds and Bobby Parks scored 24 points to lead Memphis State over the University of Baltimore. The victory was the 10th for the undefeated Tigers, the best start in the school's history.

Jim Master scored 23 points and Melvin Turpin added 17 as Kentucky rallied from 10 points down in the first half to trim Mississippi. Master had a pair of long baskets as Kentucky outscored Mississippi 16-4 in the last 7:31 of the first half to take a 28-26 halftime lead.

Kentucky then rolled to a 70-54 lead on Mel Turpin's dunk with 1:33 remaining in the game.Mississippi's Carlos Clark led all scorers with 25 points.

Billy Goodwin scored a career-high 28 points, including 17 in the second half, to lift St. John's over Seton Hall. Goodwin's second-half binge helped the Redmen break away from a 31-31 halftime tie.

"I thought Billy Goodwin picked us up unbelievably," said St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca. "He was responsible for keeping us in the game."

St. John's 12-0 start is the best in the school's history since the 1949-50 season.

Alvin Robertson scored three baskets and fed guard Darrell Walker for another during a key two-minute stretch to ignite Arkansas over Nebraska.

Nebraska had overcome a 14-point deficit to take a 50-49 lead when Robertson hit an eight-foot bank shot that gave the Razorbacks a 51-50 advantage. He followed with a 10-foot jumper to counter two free throws by Nebraska's Lenard Johnson.

Robertson stole the ball and passed to Walker, who gave the Razorbacks a three-point lead. A 14-footer by Robertson capped the surge that gave Arkansas a 57-52 lead with three minutes remaining.

Second Ten

Tyrone Beaman scored a career-high 24 points as Tennessee stopped Georgia. Beaman, who has averaged just 6.8 points a game this year, and Dale Ellis, who finished with 23 points, dominated a second-half romp that saw Tennessee lead by as many as 18 points.

Rodney McCray had 15 points and eight rebounds, and blocked eight shots as Louisville beat Cincinnati in a physical battle. The Cardinals won the game from the free throw line, hitting 21 of 27 shots.

"I knew it was going to be physical," said McCray. "They definitely are the most physical team we play. When they box out, they do put contact on you and they box out well."

Freshman guard Ernie Myers scored 22 points and four other N.C. State players scored in double figures as the Wolfpack romped over Fairleigh Dickinson.

N.C. State guard Dereck Whittenburg scored 21 points and forward Thurl Bailey added 16 as both seniors topped the 1,000-point level for their careers. Terry Gannon added 17 points and Lorenzo Charles 10 to the Wolfpack attack.

Southwest Conference

After Texas Christian had rolled past Texas 70-54 on Monday night, Weltlich was asked who was Texas' most valuable player in the game.

"I don't possibly see who it could be," Weltlich replied. "On our TV show we pick a player of the week. This week we might have to run a campus scene."

Texas Christian, off to its best start in 25 years, lifted its season record to 10-2, while Texas fell to 5-6 in a game that was shown on television in Texas, Arkansas and Michigan.

TCU jumped to a 2-0 lead on Joe Stephen's 25-footer, and the closest Texas came was a 4-4 tie as the Horned Frogs — cheered by their fans as the "Killer Frogs" — fought off a Texas comeback bid in the second half.

TCU, starting an all-senior lineup, was led by Stephen with 20 points, Arnold with 19 and Darrell Browder with 16. TCU sub Jeff Baker, a 6-foot-4 senior, led all rebounders with 10.

Texas, which has no senior starters, got 17 points from 6-7 junior Bill Wendlant, but he only had two in the second half. Carlton Cooper and Don Ellis each had 10 for Texas.

Weltlich was asked if it seemed that every time Texas takes one step forward, it takes two backward, and he said, "Tonight it seemed like three."

"Texas is not that bad," said TCU coach Jim Killingsworth. "They've got some good athletes, and they're going to beat some teams in this league."

Walker may need surgery; Indiana No. 1

COLLEGE FOOTBALL — Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker's left shoulder, injured in Saturday's Sugar Bowl game in New Orleans, will be examined to see if surgery is needed, according to the Georgia Bulldogs' head trainer. "It's possible that he might have to have surgery," said head trainer Warren Morris. "We're going to go back and take a look at him and check it out, but we don't know anything right now."

Southwest Texas State football coach John O'Hara has been hospitalized here because of chest pains he suffered shortly before a weekend staff meeting, authorities said Monday. O'Hara, who was named to the Southwest Texas State post in December, was taken out of intensive care in Seton Hospital and listed in satisfactory condition Monday, a hospital spokeswoman said. Doctors still were not sure what caused the chest pains O'Hara experienced Sunday, said Barbara Neid, assistant director of nursing.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL — Undefeated Indiana remained atop the AP college basketball poll for the second consecutive week, gaining 52 of a possible 60 first-place votes. Indiana, 10-0, received 1,191 points in the poll, which saw the top four teams maintain their positions and saw defending national champion North Carolina return to the Top 20 after a two-week absence.

PRO FOOTBALL — National Football League players found something extra in their paychecks Monday — the "money now" bonuses negotiated as part of the collective bargaining agreement signed last month. About $62 million in cash bonuses were disbursed by the 28 teams to the approximately 1,500 players on the active or inactive rosters or injured reserve lists. Rookies receive $10,000, second-year players $20,000 and third-year veterans $30,000. All players with four or more years of service receive $60,000 apiece.

Mark Moseley, the record-breaking place-kicker for the Washington Redskins, was named Most Valuable Player in the National Football League by The Associated Press. Moseley, who shattered Garo Yepremian's record of 20 consecutive field goals, was a narrow winner over San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts, receiving 35 of the 84 votes cast by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters in becoming the first kicker to win MVP honors. Marcus Allen of the Los Angeles Raiders finished a distant third.

Joe Gibbs, who guided the Washington Redskins to the best record in the National Conference in 1982 and into the National Football League playoffs for the first time since 1976, was named Coach of the Year today by The Associated Press. Gibbs was a runaway winner, garnering 49 of the 84 votes cast by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Tom Flores, coach of the Los Angeles Raiders, was second with 14 votes, followed by Tom Landry of the Dallas Cowboys with six.

SKIING — The World Cup women's downhill supergiant ski event, scheduled for Jan. 8-9, was canceled Monday because of a lack of snow. Heinz Krecek, spokesman for the organizers, said that despite 600 truck loads of snow which were carted onto the ski slopes overnight, the competition cannot be staged, "because the snow just melts away and a further rise of temperatures is forecast for the next few days."

PRO BASKETBALL — Forward Kiki Vandeweghe of the Denver Nuggets, who averaged more than 35 points in five games last week, has been named National Basketball Player of the Week. The 6-foot-7 Vandeweghe, who moved up to fifth in the league in scoring with an average of 24.2 points per game, capped his week with a 49-point performance in Denver's 127-125 victory over Phoenix Saturday night.

HOCKEY — Philadelphia Flyers center Bobby Clarke, who scored four goals and seven assists in four road victories last week, was named on Monday as National Hockey League Player of the Week. Clarke, 33, is the Flyers' top scorer with 14 goals and 38 assists and is tied for seventh place among the league's top scorers.

Raiders suspend three including former Chap

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Texas Tech will open Southwest Conference basketball play Wednesday without its leading scorer and rebounder, who was suspended with two other starters for disciplinary reasons.

Seniors Charles Johnson and Joe Washington and sophomore Dwight Phillips will be suspended for the rest of the season, but will remain on scholarship, Tech Coach Gerald Myers announced Monday night.

Those suspensions, along with the departure of freshman guard Tim Ford, leave the Red Raiders with eight squad members for its final 17 games.

"It's going to make us pretty shorthanded," Myers said. "We've got eight guys left. We'll be fairly young, but we've been playing a lot of players. A lot of these boys who are left on the team have been in starting roles."

Myers' team now is made up of one junior, three sophomores and four freshmen.

Johnson, a 6-6 forward from Midland, Texas, was averaging 16.5 points and 8.6 rebounds per game. He also led the team in assists, with 27, and in steals, with 28.

Myers said the three suspended players broke curfew and other training rules he would not specify.

"There's no drugs involved in it. I don't want people speculating about that ... This situation that they're suspended for had come up before. I had talked to them about it before."

Perkins kept his priorities, didn't he?

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The contrived Super Bowl Tournament — come one, come almost all — will simply have to get along without the New Jersey Giants and their happy-go-lucky coach, Marse Ray Perkins. Somehow, it will survive.

Marse Ray is Alabammy-bound and isn't it nice that he won't have the bother of postseason games to interrupt his recruiting efforts?

The sweetheart Giants think of everything, don't they? Right down to the houndstooth hats the players gave Marse Ray as going-away gifts. With them in place and the proper gravel applied to his voice, Perkins should be able to do a spiffy imitation of Bear Bryant.

Good ol' Bear. Taught Marse Ray everything a man needs to know about football. You know, the important stuff like the work ethic and commitment to the team.

Those were the values Marse Ray brought to the Giants and it was a package they bought. Forget a combined 10-22 record in his first two yeers on the job. Do you think the Jersey Turnpike was built overnight?

THE GIANTS, one player observed, were like F Troop when Marse Ray took over. They were funny but the coach didn't smile much, because, hey, football is serious stuff.

Last year the pieces started falling into place and New Jersey reached the playoffs for the first time since 1963 — so long ago that the franchise still was called New York then. Marse Ray's system was working.

The new year was full of promise, until the team had to go out and play. New Jersey lost its first three games. Because of the strike, it was a losing streak the Giants needed 11 weeks to compile.

Do not lose faith, counseled the coach. Remember, commitment and the work ethic. Sure enough, it paid off. New Jersey won its next three games, beating powerhouses like Detroit, Houston and Philadelphia. The Giants were on their way.

SUDDENLY...oops, there went the rug. Marse Ray had heard the siren's song, country and western version no doubt, and decided to take his commitment and work ethic down south, back to his roots. He would follow Bear's tracks at Alabama.

Not to worry. He would not leave the Giants high and dry. No way. What kind of commitment would that be, anyway? No siree. New Jersey would have his wisdom on the sidelines for as long as this season lasted.

The next week, the Giants lost to Washington on a Mark Moseley field goal with four seconds remaining. It was as gut-wrenching a loss as a team could take. It tore up Perkins so much he went straight to Tuscaloosa the next day for a press conference. The subject was not the National Football League.

A WEEK later, in their own private version of Can You Top This, the Giants lost again in the final 27 seconds — after going ahead with 1:04 to play.

The team was self-destructing, playing its way out of a party that invited just about everybody else. Only a crazy-quilt tie-break formula kept the Giants technically alive. It was a far-fetched combination that didn't quite come off. Atlanta spoiled the scenario by getting beat up by New Orleans, pushing Detroit into the playoffs ahead of the Giants.

Priorities, after all, are priorities.

Mahre leads World Cup

PARPAN, Switzerland (AP) — Steve Mahre of the United States took over the lead after the first run of the year's first World Cup race after his brother Phil, the reigning champion, was disqualified for a gate fault.

Phil had posted the fastest first run clocking with 48.79 seconds on the 59-gate, 166-meter drop course. But he had trouble shortly before the end.

New accounts debut Wednesday

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Less than a month after introducing the new money market account to their customers, Midland banks and savings institutions are gearing up again to introduce yet another new product — the SuperNOW account.

The new accounts make their debut Wednesday morning. They were given a green light two weeks ago by the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee (DIDC), the people behind the gradual deregulation of the banking industry.

Basically, the SuperNOW is a cross between the regular NOW account and the money market account.

Like its predecessor, the NOW, SuperNOW offers unlimited checking privileges and is available to individuals or sole proprietorships only. Like the money market account, it requires a minimum initial deposit and minimum balance of $2,500. There may or may not be check writing fees charged to the account, depending on the bank or thrift which offers it.

For customers, the SuperNOW gives an additional choice of what to do for personal savings and checking.

For banks and S&Ls, it means preparing additional computer programs to handle the accounts, training personnel, setting interest rates to be paid, and getting advertising strategies ready.

Informing the public, which is already becoming somewhat confused with the rapid changes occurring in the banking industry, is the main priority, however.

"To inform the public is quite an art in itself," said Janice Ham, customer services officer at Western State Bank. "We've been bombarded with phone calls on this, as well as on the money market accounts."

Texas America Bank's marketing director, Kathy Atkin said, "The MMA is an investment account, not geared to checking transactions. The SuperNOW is a checking account for big balance customers.

"The thing we are going to stress is that you need to sit down with your banker and decide what's best for you. It depends on the number of checks you write and on the average balance you keep in your account."

Midland banks and thrifts wouldn't say Monday what interest rate they will pay on the SuperNOW, but the rate will be slightly less than the money market accounts, which pay from 10 to 11 percent locally, and more than the regular NOW accounts, which pay 5 1/4 percent and do not require a minimum balance.

The interest rate paid on SuperNOWs will be tied to the money market itself, with which they compete for the consumer's dollars, and will also closely reflect what the competiton is paying. Midland financial institutions will be setting their rates Wednesday morning in response to those factors.

"It probably won't pay as much as the money market account (MMA) introduced Dec. 14, because there is a checking account involved," according to Jerry King, vice president-marketing at First City National Bank (formerly Midland National). "We develop a rationale for pricing based on our costs to maintain the account, but in the final analysis, it relates back to our competition."

Determining the interest rate to be paid on the SuperNOWs is a process involving executives from the administration, marketing and operations departments of the bank or thrift.

Once they arrive at a figure, it still isn't guaranteed, but will go up or down as the rate is adjusted daily. "The customer should know that he will always earn the best rate the bank or S&L can pay that day," Atkin said.

Customers with high account balances of at least $2,500 are allowed to write only three to six checks a month on MMAs, but they will be able to write an unlimited number on the SuperNOW. This is a convenience which will likely cost something each month, however, because it increases the paperwork costs of the bank or thift.

The new account is the latest in a series of moves sanctioned by the DIDC to bring fresh money into banks and savings and loans and create a banking industry more competitive with money market funds offered by stock brokers.

"When you look at these two accounts (SuperNOW and money market account), where there's no limit on the interest rate you can pay, we are in effect deregulated," said King. "There's not a whole lot left to deregulate, other than to remove the minimum deposit requirement."

Money market rates down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Starting today, savings institutions may pay no more than 8.576 percent interest on six-month money market certificates.

Also today, commercial banks may pay 8.326 percent on those certificates.

The limits had been 8.653 percent at savings institutions and 8.402 percent at banks in the past week.

Those rates are linked to yields on short-term Treasury securities, which declined slightly in Monday's auctions, marking the fifth straight weekly drop for six-month T-bills.

About $5.8 billion in new six-month Treasury bills were sold at an average discount rate of 7.946 percent, down from the 8.051 percent of last Monday.

In addition, the government sold about $5.8 billion in three-month bills at an average rate of 7.896 percent, down from 7.975 percent.

The yields, a measure of the cost of government borrowing from the public, were the lowest since the Oct. 18 level of 7.762 percent for six-month bills and the Dec. 20 level of 7.857 percent for three-month bills.

Rates for six-month bills have declined in five straight auctions, though three-month bills recorded small increases on Dec. 13 and Dec.t27.

New accounts hold $52 billion

NEW YORK (AP) — The money market accounts that banks and savings institutions began offering Dec. 14 held an average of $52 billion through Dec. 22, the Federal Reserve Board said.

The accounts are the first offered by financial institutions to carry no interest limit. Many banks are paying between 9 percent and 11 percent on the accounts.

Many industry analysts had expected the accounts to draw about $30 billion. The Federal Reserve, which cautioned that its figures were preliminary estimates, said the accounts held an average of $30 billion the first two days they were offered. The $52 billion reported Monday was an average through Dec. 22.

It still remains to be determined where those funds came from. Some banks have said a large portion of it was transferred from other lower-paying accounts within their institution. Part of it came from the money market mutual funds.

Analysts explain M1 drop

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's money supply fell $2.4 billion in mid-December, only its third decline in the last 12 weeks, the Federal Reserve Board reported.

Analysts said almost all of the drop in M1, a measure of funds readily available for spending, represented a flow of funds leaving checking accounts at banks and savings institutions into deposits in new money-market accounts established Dec. 14.

Investors appeared disappointed with the Fed report, even though the central bank has said repeatedly it has deemphasized the importance of M1 in setting monetary policy.

The price of long-term government bonds, which falls when interest rates rise, dropped $5 for each $1,000 in face value following the release of the report at 4:15 p.m. EST.

Donald Maude, chief financial economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., said traders were expecting an even greater drop in M1. He said the unexpected surge in the new money-market accounts indicated a broader money supply measure, known as M2, would show sharp growth in December.

M1 is reported weekly, but M2 is reported monthly.

Too fast growth in the money supply, it is feared, could rekindle higher levels of inflation. Too slow growth in the money supply could choke off economic activity.

Factory orders up 0.7 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for new manufactured goods rose 0.7 percent in November after plunging 4.1 percent the previous month, the government said.

Shipments, too, were up from October, and manufacturers whittled down their inventory backlogs for the 11th month in the past 12, the Commerce Department report said Monday.

Economists inside and outside government said the orders gain was good news. But they noted how much smaller it was than the October decline.

Robert Ortner, Commerce's chief economist, said an increase in orders "is always a good result," but he added, "It was somewhat a drop in the bucket, and we need a lot more drops."

He said the report showed new orders lagging behind shipments for the 16th straight month. Until that pattern changes, he said, it will be hard for manufacturers to increase production and hire back laid-off workers.

Builders spending much more

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the biggest one-month gain in nearly two years, spending on new construction by U.S. builders jumped 3.5 percent in November, a government report said.

There was a 5.8 percent gain for residential construction alone, the latest encouraging sign of revival in the long-depressed housing industry, the Commerce Department said. Other government reports have shown house sales and housing starts also rising steadily as interest rates have declined in recent months.

Taken together, the reports have renewed the hopes of government officials as well as builders and private analysts that housing may be an important force in pulling the nation out of the long recession.

The October-to-November gain was 1.9 percent after being adjusted for inflation.

The increase in construction spending, in light of other recently encouraging news on housing, "is not surprising but it also is a very good sign," said Robert Gough, vice president of Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass.

House construction is picking up, he said Monday, "simply because of the decline in mortgage interest rates in the past four months."

Steel mill operations better

NEW YORK (AP) — Operations at U.S. steel mills improved slightly last week after falling to their lowest rate in 50 years, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported.

But estimated steel production of 72.4 million tons for all of 1982 fell 40 percent from the 120.8 million tons produced in 1981, the industry group said Monday.

Steel production rose to 898,000 tons in the week ended Jan. 1, an increase of 2 percent from the previous week's 880,000 tons, the institute reported.

The previous week's production was the lowest since such record-keeping began in 1962. Each of the last two weeks were shortened by holidays, with some mills closed for the entire period.

The industry's production amounted to 30.4 percent of capacity during the week, compared with 29.8 percent in the previous week, the lowest rate of mill use since 1932, when it averaged less than 20 percent for the full year.

Production in 1982 used an estimated 47 percent of capacity, compared with 78.3 percent in 1981.

Bankers cannibals, Wall Street says

Copley News Service

Wrong. They're a bunch of cannibals, according to Wall Street.

Alarmed that banks are cannibalizing themselves — and each other — by offering ridiculously high rates on new savings deposits, Wall Street has been hammering bank and savings & loans stocks.

Investors fear that the deregulation of banks and the effective elimination of interest rate ceilings — leading inexorably to the end of the 5¼ percent passbook savings account — will lead to rate wars and market share battles that will penalize financial institutions' earnings.

Wall Street worries that the banks will be like the airlines — once their libidos are liberated, their judgment will vanish, and severe problems (a la Braniff) may ensue.

Indeed, when the new money market accounts came out Dec. 14, there were some egregious cases of runamuckitis. James Carter of Wall Street's Merrill Lynch noted some weird behavior in the Sun Belt, particularly the Southeast.

NCNB Corp. initially "promised to pay double the existing money market fund rate — the offer subsequently had to be rescinded," said Carter.

"While the North Carolina competition was quick to match the NCNB rate, the Atlanta banks decided to play 'one better,'" noted Carter.

First Atlanta came out with a rate of 18.65 percent — based on the year the bank was founded. Then, "the local competition followed almost immediately, moving to 21 percent and up," said Carter (not the same James Carter who once was our president and hails from that area of the country). Quickly, however, the banks dropped those rates, he noted.

There have been sharp regional differences. In the stable and conservative — and economically ailing — Middle West, rates began in the sensible 8.5 to 9.5 percent range. There wasn't much rate competition in the Northeast, either, partly because the large banks there are heavily wholesale, international and industrial institutions. Even the Texas banks kept their heads for the same reason — consumer business is not that important to these institutions.

True to form, California was a little kinky: Leader Bank of America came out offering 11¼ percent, plus other inducements, and other banks went along, to the extent their financial position permitted.

Throughout the United States on the day after the money market accounts were introduced, the average was a surprisingly high 10.34 percent, according to a survey by Bank Rate Monitor, a newsletter.

In a spot check of smaller banks, the highest rate it found that day was 21 percent, paid by Commercial Bank of Cobb County, Marietta, Ga.

Noting this wacko behavior, the stock market reverted to the shrink — that is, despiteously squeezed the bank stocks down to size. The savings & loan stocks, which had almost tripled during 1982 as interest rates came down, were divebombed by 11.5 percent in the second week of December. Regional banks plunged 10.7 percent the same week, according to Standard & Poor's group rankings.

Nobody expects the banks to keep their rates this high very long. These are merchandising ploys to gain market shares. But on the other hand, the insanely low air fares offered after deregulation were not expected to last that long, either. Generally, bankers are considered reasonably good managers — but they can go bonkers, as their loans to Mexico attest.

Realizing that any temporary sanity lapse will penalize earnings, analysts are marking down future bank earnings forecasts. They are concerned about two kinds of accounts: The money market accounts are savings accounts, hence require only a 1 percent reserve. The "Super-NOW" checking accounts with no interest rate ceiling, to be introduced Jan. 6, require a 12 percent reserve requirement — hence rates should not soar so high, whatever the competitive pressures.

George M. Salem of Wall Street's Prudential-Bache reported he is "shaving, not slashing 1983 earnings estimates." He is reducing next year's earnings forecasts for large regional banks by only 2 to 4 percent.

Ronald Mandle of Wall Street's Paine Webber Mitchell Hutchins is lowering forecasts on the big consumer banks such as Bank of America and First Bank Systems by 4 to 6 percent, but only shaving forecasts for big wholesale banks such as Citicorp and Manufacturers Hanover by 1 to 3 percent.

Most analysts say banks' margins will suffer — as will prices of their stocks. James G. Ehlen Jr. of Wall Street's Goldman, Sachs foresees "a major shift in the liability structure of many consumer-oriented banks" that could be "chaotic" when interest rates are rising.

"We believe investors should avoid consumer-oriented regional bank stocks until the marketplace has evaluated the significance of these new deposits. We look for a 10 to 15 percent price correction among these stocks," said Ehlen.

Recession takes toll on banking industry

By The Associated Press

The recession took its toll on the banking industry in 1982 as bank failures reached a 42-year peak, but the latest government reports point to an improving economy.

Federal banking regulatory agencies said Monday that 43 banks failed last year, the highest number since 1940. Also, 46 savings and loan associations were merged with government assistance — the highest yearly total ever.

The most widely publicized bank failure last year was that of Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma. Its collapse was linked to energy loans that went sour as the economy weakened and the oil industry fell deeper into a drilling and price slump.

Alan Whitney, spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., said eight of the 43 bank failures last year involved mergers of mutual savings banks. There were 10 failures in 1981, including three mergers of savings banks.

Meanwhile, the Commerce Department issued two reports that showed new strength in factory orders and construction spending.

The department said orders to factories for new manufactured goods rose 0.7 percent in November after plunging 4.1 percent the previous month. Robert Ortner, the Commerce Department's chief economist, called the pickup in orders "a good result."

But he added, "It was somewhat a drop in the bucket, and we need a lot more drops."

The report showed new orders lagging behind shipments for the 16th straight month. Until that pattern changes, Ortner said, it will be hard for manufacturers to increase production and hire back workers.

In a separate report, the Commerce Department said construction spending in November rose 3.5 percent. That followed a revised increase of 0.4 percent in October and was the biggest one-month gain in nearly two years.

There was a 5.8 percent gain for residential construction alone, the latest encouraging sign of revival in the long-depressed housing industry. Other government reports have shown house sales and housing starts also rising steadily as interest rates declined in recent months.

The report said the value of new construction begun during November reached an annual rate of $237.2 billion, the highest level since the $238.1 billion of July 1981. The percentage gain over October was the biggest one-month increase since a rise of about 5.5 percent in January 1981.

In other economic developments:

—The American Iron and Steel Institute said operations at U.S. steel mills improved slightly last week after falling to their lowest rate in 50 years the previous week. Production rose to 898,000 tons in the week ended Jan. 1, an increase of 2 percent. But estimated production of 72.4 million tons for all of 1982 was 40 percent lower than the 120.8 million tons produced the year before.

—The Federal Reserve Board reported that money-market accounts which banks and savings institutions began offering Dec. 14 held an average of $52 billion through Dec. 22. The accounts are the first offered by financial institutions to carry no limit on interest. The Fed said the accounts attracted an average of $30 billion for the first two days they were offered.

—Stock prices went into a sharp decline Monday as Wall Street began a new business year. Losses were particularly large in financial services, technology, airline and auto issues. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, up about 5 points in early trading, closed down 19.50 at 1,027.04 because of the afternoon selloff.

AG rules on gas royalties

AUSTIN BUREAU

AUSTIN — Attorney General Mark White has ruled that "the state's royalty on gas is calculated on the basis of the market value of the gas produced, but is in no event less than 'the price paid or offered to the producer.'"

The ruling came on a request from Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong regarding interpretation of state leases on lands dedicated to the Permanent School and Permanent University funds.

"There is no basis in law," White wrote, "for the treatment of the sale as, in effect, two sales at different prices, one of that percentage of the gas equal to the state's royalty percentage and one of the remainder of the gas produced."

White said that the state is entitled to, at minimum, its royalty percentage of the total consideration including any severance tax reimbursement received by the lessee/producer, "without regard to how that total is calculated."

The attorney general said "the instant question arises only where the state has elected to take its royalty in cash rather than in kind," and deals with calculating royalties "due for gas produced from state leases where the state's lessee sells the gas pursuant to a contract which provides that the purchaser reimburse the lessee for any severance tax paid in regard to the production of that gas."

Court finds for brewery

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A federal appeals court has ruled that a Texas woman was fired from a brewery because she failed to do a good job — and not because she was black.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Monday rejected Barbara Carter's claim that she was the victim was racial discrimination by the Miller Brewing Co. and also declined to award her attorney's fees.

One hand killed, two injured during Kent County well fire

CLAIREMONT, Texas (AP) — One oilfield worker was killed and two others were hospitalized in very critical condition after a fire they were using to warm themselves ignited a well, authorities said.

Three other workers also were injured in the Monday afternoon explosion, officials said.

Sparks from the fire ignited fumes in the producing well about 15 miles northwest of this snow-covered West Texas community, Kent County Sheriff's Deputy Phil Standefer said.

The fire, which broke out about 12:35 p.m., was under control in about 35 minutes, Standefer said.

"The fire pretty well burned itself out," he said Monday afternoon. "They're trying to keep it cool now so they can close it back up."

David Brecheen, 32, of Snyder was pronounced dead at the scene by Kent County Justice of the Peace Louie Hilton.

Standefer identified the injured as Bob Milton, 29, Jerry Moore, 41, Henry Wood, 25, Lloyd Israel 25, and William Pohlman, 40, all of Snyder.

Wood, who was burned over 75 percent of his body, and Israel, who was burned over 99 percent of his body, were flown from Cogdell Memorial Hospital in Snyder to Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas, according to Gail Anderson, a spokeswoman at the Snyder hospital.

The other three men were listed in satisfactory condition at Cogdell, she said.

ClayDesta's
Insured
Money Market
Account

Nobody pays you a higher rate for a similar investment.

No brokerage account. No other bank. No savings and loan.

Nobody.

And high interest is only one of the advantages you get with ClayDesta's Insured Money Market Account.

- Your investment is insured to $100,000 by the FDIC. No brokerage account can give you that security.
- You enjoy easy access to your money. You can make unlimited personal transfers to and from your Insured Money Market Account. And you can write up to three checks per month, or arrange for three pre-authorized drafts or phone transfers.
- You can open an Insured Money Market Account with a minimum deposit of only $5,000. Some similar accounts require an initial deposit of $20,000.

High yield. High liquidity. Accessibility. Security. ClayDesta's Insured Money Market Account gives you the best of everything.

But then, isn't that what you're used to?

To find out more about the ClayDesta Insured Money Market Account, call Roberta Gordon or Pam Harkins at 683-2265.

Holes of trouble

These little puddles of water at the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Midkiff Road may hold more danger than expected. Due to the weekend's cycle of freezing and thawing temperatures, Midland streets deteriorated, resulting in many complaints from residents and additional city crews working the streets.

Midland drivers should beware of potholes

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Midlanders, unaccustomed to the snowy landscape and icy, slick streets, have another obstacle to watch for when they venture out in their cars. Potholes, the source of many major complaints and often blamed on the considerable construction around town, can lurk under snow and ice — and cause considerable damage to the car's shocks and the driver's nerves.

While ruts in city streets may be dangerous and frustrating all year round, the freezing temperatures, followed by thaws, can add to the breakdown of the asphalt.

"It's the freeze-thaw-freeze action," said Mike Butler, assistant director of public works for the City of Midland. "That cycle really tears up the base and causes the streets to deteriorate."

Although all of the major thoroughfares are constantly surveyed for the predatory potholes, Butler said that following the heavy snow early Saturday morning, thawing afternoons and the nights' deep freezes, two intersections have especially dangerous depressions.

Specifically, drivers should be aware of cavernous cavities at the intersections of Wadley Avenue and Midkiff Road and Wadley Avenue and Tarleton Street, he pointed out.

"If you approach any intersection that has a lot of water standing in it, you should be cautious — there could be a pothole," he warned.

Pothole crews regularly survey the major thoroughfares but the city depends on calls from the community about others located on off-streets. "We send them out looking because we know some of the major thoroughfares will have some deterioration," he said. "When we get calls from the public, we start routing them there.

"We ran three additional pothole crews today," Butler said Monday. "We ran a total of five pothole crews and we normally run two. Also, we'll run a (two-man) standby crew tonight."

The crews pour an asphaltic coal mix in the holes so the surface will be smooth again, he explained, adding that the mix is temporary.

"A lot of people wonder why they see us out there filling one one day and the next day the pothole is there again. But we go out and put the asphaltic coal mix in the potholes so the surface will be rideable again. Then we go back out and put a permanent patch in when the water is gone."

The pothole is enlarged to a square shape before the permanent filling is placed, he added.

Butler urged citizens to report any dangerous holes in the streets to city officials. "If (people) will call us with their potholes, we'll get out there as fast as we can."

Smith willing to forego car for deputies' raises

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The sheriff was willing to give up a new car for himself and to place rural traffic control on a low priority in exchange for more pay for his deputies.

"I'm approaching this from a businessman's point of view," said Sheriff Dallas Smith, who told the Midland County Commissioners' Court on Monday he was interested in "getting returns on money" expended on salaries. "Pay me what you think I'm worth."

He's budgeted in 1983 for $33,348, which includes a 10 percent raise over his $30,288 salary of last year. "It doesn't bother me that some of my men (supervisors) will be getting a bigger percentage than I'm getting."

If Smith were to forego his raise, some of his supervisors, who are budgeted for up to $31,300 in '83, would be drawing a bigger paycheck than he is getting. The proposed pay raise for his deputies is 8 percent.

"I need a captain more than I need a car," the sheriff said.

Smith, who has slots for 52 deputies this year, has a 1983 projected budget of about $1.8 million.

The sheriff cited his chief jailer, Capt. Bennie Cureton, as a prime example of a good business investment. "It's the lesser of interest in law enforcement," he said of a jailer's job...I think it is an excellent return." Cureton, he said, is "doing the job well."

Earlier in the discussion when Smith was seeking to increase his budget, the commissioners noted the need for more visible patrol cars in the rural areas. "It has a deterrent factor," County Judge Bill Ahders noted of marked patrol units.

The discussion focused on traffic violators on county roads in developing areas. "Some of the violators will be people living in those areas," said Smith.

"The violator may be your neighbor down the street," said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis.

Smith said his patrol units would make arrests on driving-while-intoxicated offenders and other flagrant violators but would not be as "stringent" as Texas Department of Public Safety troopers in, for example, stopping speeders.

In a discussion on cost cutting, the sheriff, for example, noted that "the federal government is giving us cheese and powdered milk."

The sheriff said food for the jail's 80 to 100 prisoners isn't purchased at wholesale prices, since the quantity isn't sufficient to warrant wholesale prices.

"It seems we ought to be getting some preacher's discounts on that (food)," said Davis.

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Staff Artist: Jan Drake

A recent study shows higher ratings from the public for the Department of Public Safety.

While Texans generally are satisfied with the courtesy and professionalism they receive from the three major law enforcement agencies in the state, they give the Department of Public Safety higher marks than they grant local police and sheriff's departments.

Those are the findings of a recently completed Sam Houston State University criminal justice study titled "Public Perceptions of the Police in Texas."

The study, which offered no explanation as to why the DPS ranks higher in the public eye, was compiled from replies by 1,345 persons who responded to a survey sample of 2,000 Texas residents who had some form of contact with law enforcement officers in the state during 1981.

THE MAJORITY of respondents — 81.2 percent — were white. Blacks represented 6.5 percent, while Spanish-surnamed respondents comprised 10.9 percent of the total. The remaining 1.4 percent were of other racial and ethnic origins.

Fifty-two percent of the respondents were male and 48 percent were female. Their median age was 39 and their "contact" with police agencies ran the gamut from being stopped for traffic violations to being jailed on various felony and misdemeanor charges.

Fifty-four percent of the total survey respondents, which also included victims and witnesses of crime, had one thing in common, however: Their contact with police was traffic-related in one form or another.

In summary, DPS troopers garnered an 82 percent positive rating for professionalism; sheriffs' departments and city police departments tied at 65 percent each in that category.

OTHER STUDY categories included fairness, competence, dedication, honesty and courteousness.

The favorable ratings gained by the three law enforcement agencies for those criteria broke roughly along the same lines as the ratings they received in the professionalism category.

While pay, training emphases and leadership qualities vary widely among individual law enforcement agencies across the state and no doubt account for some of the rating disparity between those agencies and the more standardized DPS, the consensus of officers and officials alike is that it stems in large measure from innate differences in the type of contact a DPS trooper has with the public, compared to the type of contact made by police and sheriff's officers.

Troopers are primarily involved with traffic violators and accident victims, according to Midland DPS Capt. Bobby Chaffin. By contrast, deputies and police officers have far more dealings on the steamier side of life and are called out to handle everything from bar fights to family disturbances, things a trooper seldom sees in the line of duty.

"IN A FAMILY disturbance, you can't win," said Chaffin, a 24-year veteran of the DPS. "You normally wind up with both parties mad at you."

Sheriff Dallas Smith, himself a former DPS trooper, basically agrees that differences in job requirements are going to produce different perceptions of job performance.

"But," said Smith, "that doesn't answer all of it. A lot depends on the quality of the officer. You get what you pay for. Back in 1977 when the basic pay was $750 a month, we got a $750 man. Some of them were certainly fine men, but the percentage increases with higher salaries."

Noting that troopers mainly encounter people they'll never see again, whereas police often deal with the same faces day in and day out, city police detective Lt. Earl Luckey said:

"The DPS has a high rating just like the feds, and for much the same reason. The more distance between the police and the public, the better the perception; the closer, the worse. And we handle probably 50 calls to their one."

EXCEPT ON WEEKENDS when they're allowed to return home, according to Chaffin, all DPS recruits eat, work and train together for an intensive 18-week period at the same place: the DPS academy in Austin.

This creates an overall cohesiveness and largely uniform pattern of job behavior in the DPS that can't be achieved among the hundreds of relatively independent police and sheriff's departments in the state.

For starters, recruits learn not to use flash words when they stop an errant driver. For instance, instead of telling the motorist why he's been stopped, troopers introduce themselves and say something like:"The reason you're being contacted tonight, sir, is...."

They then proceed to ask for identification, advise the motorist what action will be taken, take the action, explain what the motorist needs to do and make their departure on a friendly note by wishing him a good night or a safe trip.

"That approach puts things on a professional, businesslike level and reduces (driver) defensiveness," said Chaffin. "If it's followed pretty closely — instead of 'Where's the fire?' — 99 percent of the people respond in like manner."

Survey questions about crime in general produced results showing that 54 percent of the respondents felt crime had grown worse in their communities during the past three years, with 52 percent saying they expect it to get even worse in the next three years.

And 77 percent said they believe court rulings regarding law enforcement had hindered police efforts to control crime.

A snowfall may look like a winter playland, but the resulting ice is hazardous for people of all ages, and especially older women.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

That blanket of white powder may be a beauty of nature, but it's also a potential accident arena — especially the day after a snowstorm.

Although most of the snow on the streets has melted, Midlanders should beware — a chunk of black ice could be lurking in the shaded spots of the city.

Over the weekend Midland Memorial Hospital recorded 20 fall accidents occurring on snow or ice, including five on Monday morning with more expected, according to a spokesperson at MMH emergency room.

"My clinic was full this morning (Monday)," said Dr. Jerry L. Cochran, a Midland orthopedic surgeon. "Usually the next morning after a freeze there's an avalanche of people in here."

Slips and falls occur more often the day or two after a snowstorm, when snow has melted and then freezes, Cochran said.

"The common story heard is 'I fell off the back porch' or '...on the way to the mailbox,' " Cochran said.

While fractured wrists and ankles are frequent injuries seen by physicians, older women often break their hips from a fall. Cochran said women over 65 with post menopausal osteoporosis, a loss of calcium of bones, are "skirting danger with death," and should remain indoors during a snow and especially the day after.

"The national average for the chance of these people dying six months after a fall is 30 percent," Cochran said.

Young children and teen-agers are candidates for fractured wrists and sometimes sprained ankles after romping through snow or gliding on the ice.

And that dash across an icy street could result in a fall, producing a painful tailbone.

"But most people break their falls with locked arms and that's why wrists are broken," Cochran said.

He noted that people should avoid wear leather-soled shoes during or after a snow.

"Hiking boots are good and they also protect the toes," Cochran said, adding that another problem during a snow is

Meeting 30 Japanese swimmers after arriving at Midland Regional Airport Monday afternoon is Sharon Seay, a sponsor of the City of Midland Swim Team, who produced a list of activites in which the youngsters will participate during the week. Trying to break a communication barrier with Ms. Seay is Michiru Sekiguchi, 13, a back, free and butterfly competitor. Guests of the COM swim team, the 8 through 18-year-olds will compete in a dual meet with Midland and Odessa swim teams. They also will attend school with their hosts, visit Carlsbad Caverns, shop at Midland Park Mall, be luncheon guests of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and tour the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum between workouts with the Midland swimmers.

University representatives support funding proposal

AUSTIN — Representatives of state-supported universities say they're united in support of a proposed constitutional amendment for college construction funding being proposed by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin.

Under the proposal, the Permanent University Fund would be expanded to provide construction funds for all Texas A&M and University of Texas System components — such as UT-Permian Basin — while providing $125 million annually for non-PUF schools, such as Texas Tech University.

That $125 million would be adjusted for inflation to keep the amount constant. The initial appropriation would be made Sept. 1, 1984.

However, funds would not be limited to construction but could be used for capital equipment, library books and similar needs.

Parker said the emphasis in the past has been on "bricks and mortar," but commented the new proposal was one for "books and mortar." "We have limited ourselves too much" in the past, he commented.

Parker and Delco reported that the governing board of all state-supported colleges have "signed on" to the proposal, although Parker said it could be amended "in the spirit of compromise."

"We know that it is a lot of money," Delco said, but she argued the funding is required to meet higher education needs in Texas.

"We think we've got everybody together on a bill," she said, adding that she feels the measure will be supported by the Legislature and the public.

When asked why prospects appear better in 1983 than in past sessions, Parker cited abolition of the state ad valorem tax which had been used for construction at the non-PUF schools, and said that "desperation" resulted.

"Things got tough enough" that an agreement was reached, he said.

The proposal also provides for Prairie View A&M to receive additional funding from the PUF — $5 million annually for 10 years.

That money will come from the University of Texas' share of the PUF.

Both Delco and Parker indicated Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who has opposed the idea of creating a new dedicated construction fund in the past, has indicated that he would, in Delco's words, "be supportive" of the new plan.

Parker said he had some concerns over a dedicated fund, but noted that "we have dedicated funds for roads. I think it's in order to have dedicated funds for minds."

The proposal also calls for the Legislature or a state agency designated by the Legislature to develop a formula every 10 years for allocation of the $125 million among the eligible institutions.

Those schools could issue 10-year bonds and notes on up to 80 percent of the allocation which they would receive.

Also provided is a five-year review of the allocation formula "so that adjustment can be made in the last five years of the 10-year allocation period on the 20 percent of the allocation not obligated for bond service."

The bonding authority of the Permanent University Fund would be increased from 20 to 30 percent of the value of the fund, exclusive of real estate, in order to serve the needs of the 10 additional institutions which would be included under the PUF.

If approved by the Legislature, the constitutional amendment would be submitted to voters in November.

Officials from UT, Texas A&M, the Texas State University System and various state-supported senior colleges indicated their support for the plan at the Monday press conference.

Despite large snowfall airport stayed open, Banks says

Staff Writer

Many of the frustrated travelers from Midland who held useless airline tickets in hand Saturday morning may have misunderstood the ticket agents who told them they couldn't get home by plane.

Midland Regional Airport was never closed.

Although empty seats in the boarding sections and light traffic around the snowy parking lot indicated differently, the airport actually remained open throughout the weekend.

When flights are canceled due to poor weather conditions people often think that the airport is closed. According to Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation at Midland Regional, the fact is there simply are no arrivals or departures.

"The airport remained open," Banks explained Monday. "We report the conditions on the runway to the airlines and airmen through the FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) flight service. The aircraft pilot makes the decision (whether to land or take off)."

However, with 7 inches of snow deposited on the Tall City and the following freeze Saturday night, few pilots opted to make a stop in Midland.

"Saturday, we didn't have any flights at all," Banks said. "Sunday, we had a few flights late in the day — about three or four. But today we're back to normal."

Banks, who finishes out a 13½-year career as aviation director in Midland at the end of the month, said although the airport wasn't closed during the weekend, there have been times in the past when it was shut down.

"We've had occasions before when it didn't operate, but it was only for maybe one day at a time. This is the worst (snow storm) that I recall since I've been here. What really hurt us was the deep freeze Saturday night with the temperatures around 10 degrees.

"Then yesterday, the temperatures got up and we got vehicles out on the runways. We moved them back and forth all day trying to break (ice and snow) up."

According to Banks, although Midland Regional is short on equipment, that didn't make any difference in speeding up the process of clearing the runways.

"I know a lot of people were unhappy," he said. "They thought we should have had more equipment out there. But we just don't have that equipment. It takes a lot of time to clear that much snow and I don't think that even if we had all that equipment we could've cleared it any faster than nature did."

Banks, who will be succeeded by Victor White as aviation director, said that he was sorry the snow storm hit at the end of his term.

"I regret very much that it had to happen. But there was nothing I could do to speed (the clearing of the runways) up that we didn't do. I'm sympathetic to the people who were delayed and had to change their plans — especially since it was my last month and at the end of Christmas."

Baskin administers oath of office to county officials

By ED TODD

"Is anybody not here who should be here?" inquired Judge Pat Baskin as he was about to line up 11 fellow judges and other elected Midland County officials to administer oaths of office to them at 8:15 a.m. Monday. "I don't know how else to ask it."

Instead of 11 officials, 10 appeared in the courtroom.

Baskin, judge of the 142nd State District Court, set out to administer two sets of oaths as a gallery of spectators, including deputies and clerks of the officials, watched. On the first go-round, County Judge Bill Ahders and Commissioners Win Brown and Wally Craig pledged allegiance to country, state and county, said they would uphold the constitutions of the United States and Texas and law pertaining thereto, and would take no bribes.

Then he set out to administer a similar but somewhat different oath to eight other officials who were either re-elected or elected to office for the first time in the November general election. But they only numbered seven: County Attorney Scott Henderson, Peace Justice Bob Pine, County Treasurer Dee Thompson, District Clerk Vivian Wood, County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry, 318th State District Court Judge Barbara Culver, and County Court-at-law Judge Willie DuBose.

"Well," said Judge Baskin, "I relied on the roll clerk...."

As it turned out, Culp had set aside 9 a.m. — about 45 minutes later — for the swearing-in ceremony and had so marked his appointment calendar. But the brief ceremony was rescheduled from 9 a.m. to 8:15 a.m. Culp, judge of the 238th State District Court since 1977, was not so informed but was sworn in when he reported for work and the ceremony about 9 a.m.

With Culp missing, Baskin read the oath, and the seven officials echoed the verbiage but substituted their own names.

"Will you take your seats for just a minute," Baskin said.

He was succinct in alluding to the duties of the officials and cast a glance toward Ms. Cherry. "I know it's somewhat embarrassing to Rosenelle" to again hear the duty-responsibility minispiel," the judge said. "She been county clerk since she was 11½ years old," he joshed. Ms. Cherry, county's senior employee, has been county clerk since 1951.

"Now," said Baskin, "let's get about the business of serving the people."

County faces deficit spending

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County hasn't yet fallen into deficit spending. But it may follow the worn trail of the federal government if the Commissioners' Court today can't figure out how to match expenditures with incoming revenue.

The commissioners have budgeted $8.5 million for 1983, while the projected general revenue from taxes, fines and fees is $7.9 million. The deficit is more than $600,000.

"We're spending more than we're going to collect," County Judge Bill Ahders noted Monday after Auditor Johnnie Thompson once again had brought impending deficit spending to the attention of the five-member Commissioners' Court.

The commissioners were to convene at 9 a.m. today to resolve the budget by making cuts and by possibly considering reneging on a 10 percent pay raise for the county's 19 elected officials and on an 8 percent salary increase for the approximately 300 hired employees.

The commissioners approved the budget last August and are to "activate" it at the first of the year.

In pointing out that the general fund is inadequate to absorb projected expenditures, the auditor noted that federal revenue sharing funds, which are not included in the general budget, are less than lean.

"Revenue sharing is kaput," Ms. Thompson said. Last year, the commissioners called on the federal funds to pay certain expenses, such as architectural fees. But that back-up is just about gone.

The commissioners then considered hiring a purchasing agent to get bargain buys for the county and to help keep expenses down.

"We're going to have to be frugal," Commissioner Durward Wright said, even after the budget is trimmed to match projected expenditures with incoming revenue.

who supervises four deputies, made an offer to patrol and watch for traffic offenders along county roads.

"In the rural areas, we need a little more presence and visibility (of deputies)," conceded Davis, who noted that "I even stopped a (violating) truck out there and threw my weight around."

But the commissioner seemed to agree that traffic control should be a role played by the sheriff.

The commissioners were approached by Peace Justice Charlie Sprayberry and Bob Pine, who asked that their pay be increased to the level of other "non-lawyer" county officials.

Sprayberry is salaried at $28,200 in 1983, and Pine, at $29,340. Most other officials, such as the county clerk, district clerk, treasurer and tax assessor-collector, are pegged $33,000 to more than $35,000.

"Even though we are precinct officers," said Pine, "the work involved should be considered as much as anything else." Pine said the peace justices spend more time on the job than other county officials.

"I think the pay should be in line with other non-lawyer officials," Pine said.

Sprayberry noted that even though the peace justices are precinct officers, the justices' jurisdiction is virtually countywide. Under the current setup, the justices' Precinct 1 covers about 97 percent of the county.

"There may be good and adequate reason for a lesser salary for the justices of the peace," said Sprayberry. But, he added, the precinct angle wasn't one.

"I'm sure we'll all consider it (pay raise)," said Ahders, who noted that peace justice's salaries traditionally are lower than the pay of other elected officials.

McDaniel appointment makes history

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov.-elect Mark White has made the highest-ranking appointment of a black in the history of his office by naming a woman who works for a Midland company as his legal counsel.

Myra McDaniel, 50, who is currently general counsel for the William B. Wilson Companies of Midland, was chosen for the job because of her talents, White said. "She happens to be a woman."

Mrs. McDaniel, who said she did not know she was making history, noted she would like to make some special contributions to blacks, though she did not know what they would be. She said the appointment forced her to make a decision about becoming personally involved in making government work.

White said the position, which pays more than $50,000 a year, would cause Mrs. McDaniel to take a pay cut.

Mrs. McDaniel has worked for the William B. Wilson Companies for the last year, a Midland-based concern engaged in oil and gas exploration, computer systems, cattle raising and other ventures. She served as assistant general counsel to the Texas Railroad Commission from mid-1981 until taking that job.

From June 1979 to May 1981, Mrs. McDaniel served as chief of the taxation division of the Texas Attorney General's office. She joined the office in 1975 after earning her law degree from The University of Texas.

Her husband, Reuben, is a management professor at The University of Texas.

Dallas pilot injured in plane crash

ORLA — A young Dallas pilot and relative of a Midland woman escaped serious injury after crash-landing his Cessna-T 210 plane on a Farm-to-Market road about 22 miles west of here late Monday afternoon.

Listed in stable condition at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa this morning was 24-year-old Aaron A. Garrett III of 3616 Rosedale, Dallas. He suffered a skull fracture and facial lacerations, according to the Department of Public Safety.

The DPS said Garrett was enroute to Dallas from El Paso when the craft lost power, forcing it down on FM 652 about 4:30 p.m. Monday.The plane sustained extensive nose, wing and belly damage.

Garrett is the cousin of Madeline Norwood, 1415 Sparks, Midland.

frostbite.

"People out here aren't used to a lot of cold weather and will get frostbite," he said. "Parents should keep children's hands dry. When the mittens get wet, they should be changed."

Besides staying indoors, another preventive measure to avoid a slip or fall is to clean off walkways immediately after a snowfall before it has time to turn to slush and freeze.

However, older men who shovel snow should take precautions, according to Cochran.

"Coronaries are seen in middle-aged men who get out there and become overheated while shoveling snow," Cochran said. "They should be careful not to work up a sweat."

School salary legislation prefiled

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation which repeals a section of the Texas Education Code prohibiting salaries for trustees of independent school districts has been prefiled by Rep. Paul Ragsdale of Dallas.

HB 264 would allow the matter of trustee salaries to be decided on a local option basis, an aide said. Trustees may be compensated an amount in relation to the legally-required duties and responsibilities of the office, according to the bill.

Currently, trustees are compensated for expenses but are not paid salaries, the aide said. "The basic idea is to make it a local issue which is up to the voters," he said.

Sound waves are used as kidney stones treatment

By DON CARTER
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Don Klinkel is sitting up in his hospital bed, feeling quite comfortable just a day after major surgery to remove kidney stones. He expects to go back to work in a week.

The only thought that brings a grimace is when Klinkel, 27, talks about having the same kind of surgery seven years ago.

"There was a lot more pain then," he says. "The incision was about this long," he explains, holding his two index fingers about a foot apart. "I was in the hospital eight days that time. And what was really hard was the recovery time — I was out of work five or six weeks."

Klinkel is reaping the benefits of an unusual new type of surgery in which the stones are literally blasted apart with high-frequency sound waves. The big benefits, say doctors, are less pain, a shortened hospital stay and a dramatically shortened convalescence.

Dr. George Brannen, a Virginia Mason Hospital urologist, explains that traditional surgery for kidney-stone removal involves a long incision — just under the ribcage — that runs practically from backbone to navel. The surgeons must cut through three layers of abdominal muscle to get to the kidneys, and that amount of cutting causes severe postoperative pain and long convalescence.

The new "ultrasound" surgery involves a tiny "stab" wound in the lower back — near the kidney with the stones in it.

Brannen works with Dr. William Bush, a Virginia Mason radiologist, who uses a fluoroscope to help direct a thin guide-wire through the hole to the target stone. Successively larger "dialators," which look very much like large, hollow knitting needles, are passed over the guide-wire to enlarge the pathway by stretching rather than breaking tissues.

The final instrument passed over the guide-wire is a "percutaneous nephroscope" — a hollow tube with the approximate diameter of a fountain pen. It has an eyepiece and system of magnifying lenses so the surgeon can see what he's doing. Passed through the tube, the thin ultrasound probe must actually touch the stone before it can be blasted into powder or small fragments, which then are removed by suction, Brannen explains.

In addition to an eyepiece and fluoroscope, Brannen and Bush use microscopic video gear to monitor progress of the surgery.

The doctors, who learned how to perform the operation during a week's visit last fall at the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota, videotaped a portion of Klinkel's surgery that looked a bit like a sequence from "The Incredible Voyage." As they approached Klinkel's stone — which really is about the size of a golf ball — it loomed as large as a strange planet on the video screen. Then came the probe, and POW! — there was an enormous explosion and a big chunk of the planet sent dust off into space like some sci-fi nuclear disaster.

Klinkel's surgery took three hours, mainly because he had a second smaller stone about the size of a pea that was hiding in the small network of tubes that feed urine from the kidney tissue to the central collection cavity. It took some time to snare the stone and bring it down to where it could be blasted.

Ordinarily, a simple stone removal would take about one and a half to two hours, Brannen says, about the same time as conventional stone-removal surgery. However, Brannen notes, the difference in time isn't as important as the difference in pain. "The pain's the big thing," he adds.

Brannen believes the risks — bleeding, infection, loss of kidney, incomplete stone removal — are "about comparable" to those of the conventional surgery. The surgeon's fee for the operation is around $1,500; conventional surgery costs $1,000 to $1,400 in the Seattle area.

Although the art of removing kidney stones has advanced, there is still relatively little knowledge about why some people get them and others don't. The stones are formed from mineral salts — most frequently calcium — in the urine. Some stones are traced to low urine flow; for example, kidney stones are more common in the Southwest, where people are more inclined to dispose of excess fluids through sweat rather than urine.

AT WIT'S END

Has sexual revolution been defeated?

By ERMA BOMBECK

I read a depressing thing the other day. A sex therapist, Debora Phillips, said the sexual revolution in America has been defeated by boredom.

What's depressing to me is I didn't even know it was up for a vote.

She said, "Most couples make love at the end of the day when they are exhausted, after they have taken out the garbage and after they have just argued about money. Lovemaking then becomes as exciting as brushing your teeth."

She said the only real way to get back to an exciting sex life is to put romance and intimacy back into it.

As a layman, I have my own theory. I don't think people are bored with sex so much as they are bored talking about it. The air waves are filled with experts who speak "sensual" fluently. Movies and television promise you bold, frank details never before filmed. Sex manuals clinically define sex, giving it all the excitement of a road map of Toledo. Daily headlines declare the results of some study like, "Researchers Prove Jogging Increases Sexual Desire." (Did you ever see a man covered with sweat or grease up to his elbows who wasn't affectionate?)

"Are bananas really an aphrodisiac?" "Is there sex life after the honeymoon?" "Are tourists ruining the sex life of the blue-footed boobie in the Galapagos?" "Are video games sexually stimulating?"

The sex mystique is gone. As anything you share with the world, it has become commonplace and ordinary. Everyone has a sex life now. It used to not be that way. When I was a child there were people who NEVER had a sex life. My Mom and Dad. My minister. My 6th-grade science teacher. My dancing teacher and anyone I had respect for.

Sex used to be the most wonderful bit of illusion in the world. It was a hushed whisper, a brown paper wrapper, a suppressed giggle in your ear, an embarrassed word, an awkward reference.

Couples made love at the end of the day when they were exhausted, after they had taken out the garbage and after they had argued about money. It probably was as exciting then as brushing your teeth. The only difference is they had nothing or no one to compare it to and figured that was the way it was supposed to be.

I think I liked sex better when it was in the gutter.

Planning needed to prevent condensation

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Every year about this time, the queries pour in about sweating windows and walls. How do you prevent this condition, the result of condensation, and how do you eliminate it?

No one reply would answer everyone's individual question, since each case requires an individual solution. Yet everyone can find his own answer if he understands the principles of condensation.

When sweating occurs — whether it be on a window pane, a wall, a pipe or anywhere else — it is because warm, moist air has settled on a cool surface. It does not take place when warm, moist air rests on a warm, moist surace or when cold air rests on a cold surface. Only when you have the warm, moist air on a cold object do you have condensation, more generally known as sweating.

Now that you know what is causing the trouble, a little thought will show you the solution. Obviously, you must not permit the air to get so moist or you must see that it leaves the house before it has a chance to settle on anything or you must see that he excess moisture is removed from the air or you must change the cold surfaces to warm surfaces. In short, you must do something to prevent the combination of warm, moist air and a cold place on which it can rest.

To prevent the air in your house from getting so filled with water, you must attack it at the sources. There must be some system in the kitchen and the bathroom that immediately gets the moisture to the outside. It can be in the form of vents, exhaust fans or even something so simple as open windows. When the windshield in your car steams up, you turn on the air that rushes across the inside of the windshield or you open the window a bit. The principle is the same.

Another solution to the excessive moisture problem is to remove some of it from the air via a dehumidifier. It can be a simple one or a sophisticated one, depending on the severity of your trouble.

Then, of course, there is the matter of getting rid of cold surfaces. Your windows may need storm windows outside them or some kind of plastic or other material inside them. If the windows remain cold and the air inside the house is warm and moist, you will have sweating.

Remember the fundamentals of condensation and you also will get the answers to the problems of sweating pipes and toilet tanks. Do you have a cold pipe that sweats and drips water to the floor? All you have to do to eliminate the cold surface is to cover it with something that will not be cold. It can be one of the many forms of wrapping material or one of the slip-on foamlike tubes. Now, with no cold surface to cause condensation, the pipe no longer will sweat.

A toilet tank is a problem area because the cold water inside it makes the surface of the porcelain or other material very cold. The warm, moist air usually in a bathroom condenses on the cold tank and causes the dripping with which most of us are familiar. There are a number of solutions for this problem — among them covering the tank with a fabric or having a plumber install a mixing valve so the water in the tank is not completely cold — but the one most often used is to line the inside of the tank with a special material made especially for that purpose. When the tank has been drained and the material glued to the inside, the water let in does not make the outside of the tank cold and there is no condensation.

Getting back to windows, if you have storm windows and there still is sweating on the inside windows, it means the storm windows are not airtight. If the sweating is only on the storm windows, it means the inside windows are not airtight and the moist air is getting through and settling on the storm windows.

(If you fix things around the house, you will find valuable data in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

DEAR ABBY

Hard-working waitresses claim tips are earned

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Please tolerate one more letter on tipping:

Beginning Jan. 1, 1983, federal law requires tipped employees to pay taxes on 8 percent of the company's gross sales whether they actually received the tip or not!

Tipping is not a way to "give the poor dear a gift." Waiters and waitresses are not dumb clods who aren't qualified to do anything else. They are organized, efficient people who can work the socks off the best bureau chief in Washington, D.C.!

Good tippers and non-tippers alike are given good service; older couples living on a fixed income, sharing a hamburger and a baked potato, and children in high chairs who make a terrible mess are treated with the same courtesy as a high roller.

Tips are NOT appreciated because they can be easily pocketed and remain undeclared. Tips are earned. They put food on the table, shoes on the children, gas in the car, pay for an evening at the movies and are dropped in church envelopes.

Good and bad service should be reported to the host or hostess. Good and bad food should be reported to the person who serves it. Restaurants appreciate compliments and criticism. Sign us, your waitress, the restaurant owners and the chef. We're all of those. — KIM, DODGE, MARY, PAULINE, KAREN, CARL, ETC., WINDOM, MINN.

DEAR KIM, DODGE, MARY, ETC.: Generalizations are dangerous. All waiters and waitresses are not efficient, organized and courteous, but most of them work hard and do the best they can and should be rewarded appropriately. Whether or not restaurant owners should pay their help enough so they wouldn't have to rely on the generosity of customers to make ends meet will not be settled here. But one thing is certain: People who work for tips need them, and the paying public should consider a tip a necessity and not a gift.

DEAR ABBY: I am allergic to you! I love reading your column — in fact, it's the first thing I turn to in my newspaper — but before I'm halfway finished, my eyes are watering, my nose is running and I begin to sneeze. Help! — ALLERGIC TO ABBY

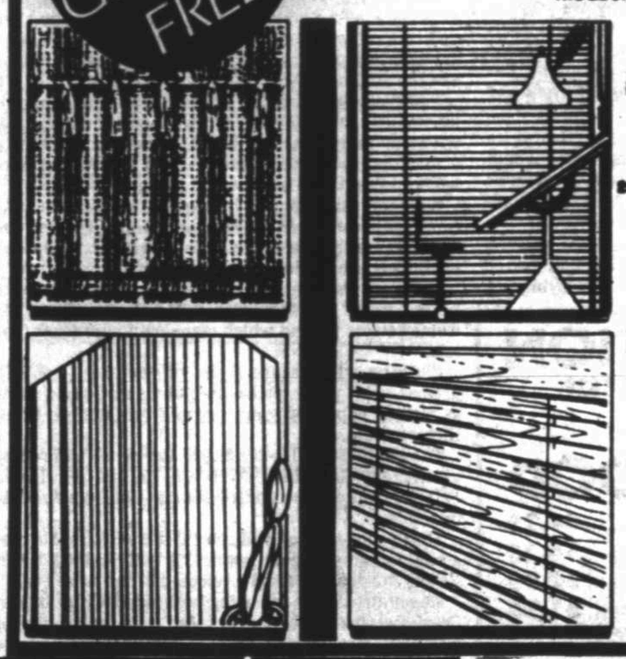

DEAR ALLERGIC: You're not allergic to me; you must be sensitive to the fresh newsprint. Stick your newspaper in a warm oven for a few minutes, or see an allergist. I don't want to lose a reader.

The right side of the brain controls the left side of the body. Therefore, left-handed people are the only ones in their "right mind." — LEFTY

In a sequence from the new James Bond film "Never Say Never Again," the British super-spy, portrayed by Sean Connery, rescues a "damsel in distress" from the clutches of bandits by bearing her away on the back of his steed. Taking the female lead in the thriller is Kim Basinger. Both are performing many of their own stunts. "Sean is such a good rider that I felt quite safe," Miss Basinger said.

'Dukes' do in Raggedy Ann company

By RUTH BONAPACE
Associated Press Writer

EDISON, N.J. — For years, an army of smiling, orange-haired Raggedy Ann dolls, reinforced by 22 varieties of cuddly stuffed toys, marched out of a toy factory in this central New Jersey community.

All seemed well for the dolls' manufacturer, the Knickerbocker Toy Co., and executives expanded the operation by adding a warehouse here and renting plush new corporate offices in nearby Plainfield.

Then, "The Dukes of Hazzard" turned on them.

The trouble started when some of the 60-year-old company's stalwarts, such as teddy bears and fuzzy bunnies, lost popularity. Knickerbocker turned to television for new ideas.

The company invested heavily in a line of products based on one of television's most popular adventure series, "The Dukes of Hazzard." Its faith in the car-racing hillbillies led to the manufacture of an entire line of products based on the show, including tiny cars launched by plastic wristbands.

When two of the serial's principal actors — Tom Wopat and John Schneider — quit last summer, viewers soured on the show and so did retailers. Returned shipments of Dukes toys began pouring into the warehouse.

"'The Dukes of Hazzard' show was all the way up to (number) 3 or 4 in ratings, and we woke up one morning and it was way down," said Jeffrey Holmes, a vice president of Warner Communications, the parent company of Knickerbocker as well as Warner Bros. Television, which produces "Dukes."

Wopat and Schneider settled their contract dispute with Warner Bros. last month and will return to the show later this season, but meanwhile, the program has slipped to near 30th place in the ratings.

"It caught them (Knickerbocker) by surprise. It caught us by surprise. 'Dukes' for a number of years was a very hot product," Holmes said. "You live and die with the success of the show. And in a year like this, with a deep recession, retailers are nervous and quick to cancel orders."

Warner, which took over the company five years ago, announced the day before Thanksgiving it would scrap the toy company, which analysts projected would end the year with a shortfall of up to $30 million.

"Working here you can see they're not making money," said Cliff Jackson, a shipping clerk in Edison and one of 716 employees the company is laying off. "We're shipping it out and getting it back almost as fast."

"What it boils down to was Warner had a problem on its hands with Knickerbocker, of which the decline in popularity of 'The Dukes of Hazzard' was a very important aspect," said Fred Anschel, a Dean Witter Reynolds entertainment analyst. "I would presume they were stuck with a lot of inventory."

The company had come a long way from the day in 1922 when Leo S. White founded a "toy hospital" in New York City. White had a knack for latching onto time-enduring toys that sold well with little or no advertising and the company prospered.

In 1964, White was granted the exclusive rights to Raggedy Ann and Raggedy Andy, dolls based on the books about a lovable rag doll and her brother. He moved the company from New York City to New Jersey two years later and the company began its greatest period of growth.

Hollie Hobbie dolls, Snoopy dolls and a menagerie of Sesame Street characters were added to the inventory. The company's sales catalogue bulged to more than 90 pages.

When the firm folded, it was the largest manufacturer of stuffed toys in the world, according to Warner executives and industry experts.

But as Knickerbocker grew more trendy, its risks soared. Independent analysts suggest Knickerbocker's management did not realize their empire could be hurt by the television ratings game.

"Those things that are no longer very popular do not necessarily mean they will no longer sell," said an executive for Toys "R" Us, the world's largest toy specialty retail chain. "But many stores just try to catch the fads of the times, and when the fad is over they drop it."

The Dukes' fall coincided with the rise of electronic games, which cut into sales of even old standbys like Raggedy Ann, and a general slowdown in the toy industry attributed to the recession, analysts said.

"When the products don't sell according to expectations, the toy industry has moments of great anxiety," said Harold Vogel of Merrill Lynch. "And this year, video games took up a large part of the toy business dollars."

Warner, anticipating a fourth-quarter slowdown and seeking to strengthen its money-losing cable television subsidiary, chose to dump the unprofitable Knickerbocker.

It has sold its most time-tested toys, including the Raggedy Ann, Sesame Street, Snoopy and Walt Disney lines, to Hasbro Industries Inc. of Pawtucket, R.I., which plans to continue their production.

"Stable toys are up some years and down some years, but they're basically dolls that don't lose their popularity," said Holmes. "Raggedy Ann has been around forever. Snoopy has been around forever. And they'll continue to be here."

Boutiques to revive Marilyn's style

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Marilyn Monroe died 20 years ago, but a string of boutiques is reviving the polka-dot blouses, circle skirts and sheath dresses of her era, in hopes that the 1980s woman wants to look like the 1950s star.

The "Remembering Marilyn" boutiques opening this month at 12 Bloomingdale's department stores also will sell memorabilia, including a $6,000 doll complete with a fur coat, gold and diamonds, said Roger Richman, who represents the late actress' estate.

Richman said Monday he expects the boutiques to catch on because of Miss Monroe's enduring mystique and because the era of the 1950s is particularly appealing during economically troubled times.

"I believe that Marilyn Monroe is the embodiment of beauty, talent and sensuality. It is an image that many women strive for and which many men appreciate," he said.

Clothing will feature styles of the '50s — sheath dresses, capri pants, polka-dot blouses and circle skirts as well as copies of some gowns from Monroe films, Richman said.

The boutiques will sell a $6,000 doll manufactured by the Eugene Doll and Novelty Co. Inc. to be released Feb. 8 at the American Toy Fair in New York, Richman said.

The 22-inch-tall doll will sport a full-length sable coat and diamond and gold jewelry. A $450 and a $75 version of the doll will also be released at the same event.

Negotiations also are being concluded with Colorkit Cosmetics Inc. of New York for a complete line of Marilyn Monroe cosmetics and fragrances for release in the spring, Richman said.

Richman said the "Remembering Marilyn" boutiques were not specifically timed to take advantage of publicity from the 20th anniversary of Miss Monroe's death on Aug. 5, 1962.

Nor does he expect to benefit from public discussion of how the actress died.

"Publicity like that tends to severely hamper a merchandising program," he said.

A private detective and a man who claims to have been secretly married to the actress have claimed she was murdered because she was about to release secret government information and details of an alleged relationship with then-Attorney Gen. Robert Kennedy.

However, the Los Angeles County District Attorney's office reviewed the evidence and concluded last month that Miss Monroe died as a result of either suicide or an accidental overdose of barbiturates.

The shops will be located in Bloomingdale's stores in Washington, D.C., New York, Philadelphia and New Jersey, Richman said. The New York City boutique will open Jan. 7; others will open Jan. 24.

Part of the royalties will go to Hampstead Child Therapy Clinic in London, in accordance with Miss Monroe's will, said Richman.

Airport resident is chaplain's ward

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A San Diego chaplain says he is the guardian of a mute, hearing-impaired youth who has lived at Los Angeles International Airport off and on for about the last two years, earning food money by retrieving luggage carts for quarters.

Wally Recio, a lay chaplain with Christian Jail Workers, said he cared for the boy for six months before he disappeared last August and would welcome him back.

"It is the same boy," Recio said Monday. "He was awarded to me by the juvenile court here in San Diego. He still has his clothes here, brand new."

Several agencies, including the county Department of Public Social Services and Travelers Aid, have placed Juan in homes, but he always ran away, returning to the airport, where he was last seen Monday.

Recio is not Juan's only benefactor. Mellie Thompson, an airport custodian, befriended the youth more than two years ago when she discovered him sleeping on a floor she was mopping in the middle of the night.

She took him to visit her home and gave him food and clothing to augment what he bought with quarters collected for returning luggage carriers to racks.

"This is wonderful," Ms. Thompson said Monday on learning of Recio. "This is what I've been looking for. I hope it proves out to be something beneficial to him (Juan)."

Juan's origins remain a mystery. He is a short, dark-haired youth who appears to be at least part Indian.

Queen coaxes daughter-in-law Diana back into saddle

LONDON (AP) — Princess Diana, wary of horses since she broke her arm in a childhood fall from a pony, has been coaxed back into the saddle by her mother-in-law, Queen Elizabeth II, according to the Sun newspaper.

Princess Diana

The British tabloid published photos today showing the 21-year-old princess riding a gray horse and said they were taken Monday on the grounds of the queen's estate at Sandringham in Norfolk, where the royal family has been spending the New Year's holiday.

Diana was reported to have vowed never to ride again after her fall at age 10. But the Sun said "gentle persuasion" by the queen and Diana's husband, Prince Charles, finally won her over.

"The queen chose a safe old gray mare to put Diana back in the saddle. Yet it trotted 'round in circles when the princess wanted to go straight," the Sun reported. The paper said the queen shouted instructions to Diana when the horse wandered into the undergrowth.

When the engagement of Charles and Diana was announced in February 1981, Diana said the couple had every outdoor activity in common, "except I don't ride."

NEW YORK (AP) — Dustin Hoffman and Meryl Streep, already greeted by glowing reviews for their latest films, took the National Society of Film Critics' awards for best actor and best actress of 1982.

The society, composed of 42 film critics from national publications, honored Hoffman for portraying an actor who wins a woman's role in a soap opera in "Tootsie." Ms. Streep was chosen for her portrayal of a young Polish woman who survived a Nazi concentration camp in the movie "Sophie's Choice."

Ben Kingsley came in second for best actor for his title role in the movie "Gandhi" and Peter O'Toole came in third for "My Favorite Year."

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Artificial heart recipient Barney Clark has reached a plateau in his recovery although all the trends are "up and positive," a University of Utah Medical Center spokesman said, Clark remained in serious but stable condition today.

Dr. William C. DeVries, the surgeon who implanted the Jarvik-7 in Clark Dec. 2, "told me today that Dr. Barney B. Clark...appears to be at a plateau in his recovery," spokesman John Dwan said Monday.

"He improves slightly each day, but there are no major developments," Dwan said.

Last week, university vice president for health sciences Dr. Chase Peterson said Clark's lungs, improved but still weak, were a factor in the slowness of the retired 61-year-old Des Moines, Wash., dentist's recovery.

EDITOR'S NOTE — U.S. military advisers are working with El Salvador's armed forces in their 3-year-old campaign against leftist guerrillas. Here is a rare look at one adviser, a U.S. Army sergeant, who visits an embattled army post and finds Salvadoran soldiers ill-prepared for combat with modern weapons and tactics.

By ARTHUR ALLEN

dirt into the eyes of a sleepy-looking Salvadoran army private manning a nearby machine-gun nest.

"It looks like I'm going to have to kick some rear ends," the American says, pacing the barracks floor as Salvadoran soldiers lounge around a gaping hole in a wall. The hole is a grim reminder that three weeks ago leftist guerrillas stormed up the hill and killed an officer with a grenade blast.

The 33-year-old U.S. Army sergeant, who took a reporter to the camp on condition he not be named, drops the satchel containing his MP-5 submachine gun and orders 25 peasants to line up in formation for a pep talk. He is angry.

When he last visited the post in the eastern Morazan province, he ordered the peasants — unemployed local men — to clear brush in a 50-yard radius around the hilltop barracks. He planned trenches for that perimeter as an early-warning defense against the guerrillas.

BUT THE SALVADORAN base commander countermanded the adviser's orders, telling the peasants to dig trenches next to the barracks instead.

"Who's paying you?" he shouts at the peasants. The adviser was given money and authorization by the Salvadoran Defense Ministry to pay the local villagers for the work.

He points to the base commander — a young, U.S.-trained Salvadoran lieutenant.

"Lieutenant, what did they teach you at Fort Bragg (in North Carolina)? Dig the trenches lower on the hill."

"Most of these guys haven't got the slightest idea what I'm doing," he says, nodding toward the 50 Salvadoran soldiers posted at this firebase. "The Americans throw these weapons at them, but there's nobody here to tell them how to use them."

The sergeant is overseeing the building of facilities for a secure communications system designed to bypass the wiretap-plagued telephone network.

THE POST IS FLANKED by two rebel camps. It has been attacked twice in the past six months. In the assault three weeks ago, rebels crashed through flimsy defense lines and blasted the barracks, killing an officer.

One of the conditions for the reporter's visit was that he not mention the camp's precise location.

In violation of U.S. regulations, the sergeant carries his West German-made MP-5 submachine gun whenever he travels to the countryside aboard the wobbly French-built Llama helicopter that brought him here.

Under terms of the $81 million U.S. military aid package granted El Salvador in 1982, the 55 American military advisers are prohibited from carrying anything but pistols. One adviser was recalled from duty here after he was filmed carrying an M-16.

The sergeant shrugs when asked about the restriction.

"One of these days this baby's going to crash," he says of the helicopter. "If we don't have this (the MP-5), we'd be stuck."

The adviser says the raw recruits here need more training.

"I'LL BET THIS guy hasn't even zeroed his sight," he says, nodding at a young soldier. He checks the soldier's M-16 rifle and finds it grime-covered, the sight crooked.

"See what I mean," he says.

A U.S.-supplied 60mm mortar lies in a trench. No one knows how to fire it, the adviser says.

"There's not enough of us to train these guys," he says. "We need to get rid of that 55-man limit," referring to another of the congressional checks on U.S. military aid to El Salvador.

American advisers in El Salvador repair aircraft, build communications and defense systems, and train troops. But the sergeant says their role should be greater.

Officials say U.S. ready to approve sale of spare parts to Guatemala

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States, signaling its belief that Guatemala's human rights record has improved, is prepared to approve the sale of $4 million in helicopter spare parts to the Central American country, senior officials say.

The officials, who asked to remain unidentified, said the decision is aimed at demonstrating support for the government of President Efrain Rios Montt, who is facing opposition from conservatives in his country.

State Department deputy spokesman Alan Romberg said no final decision on the sale has been made but other officials confirmed that the announcement of the sale is likely to be made soon.

The Guatemalan request for the spare parts dates back to the regime of President Romeo Lucas Garcia, who was ousted by Rios Montt in a coup last March.

Under Rios Montt, the human rights situation in Guatemala has apparently improved markedly and there has been a lessening of congressional opposition to the sale, said the officials, who asked to remain anonymous.

Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on inter-American relations, has indicated he won't object to the sale.

Barnes is viewed by the administration as a key barometer of congressional sentiment on the proposed sale. "If he doesn't oppose it, it's hard to believe there will be a strong reaction on the Hill," said one official.

Another factor influencing the administration's position is that Rios Montt has promised steps toward restoration of democracy in Guatemala. The military has ruled Guatemala almost continuously since a CIA-supported coup there in 1954.

Guatemala refused to accept American military assistance in 1977, objecting to the Carter administration's complaints about human rights abuses.

No military aid has been sent to Guatemala since then but the Reagan administration has been concerned about a growing guerrilla insurgency there, and the Guatemalan Army's ability to combat it.

Guatemala is regarded as the most strategically important country in Central America, partly because of its proximity to Mexico's oil fields.

President Reagan indicated a shift in the administration's attitude toward Guatemala last month when he met with Rios Montt during a visit to Honduras.

At the time, he praised Rios Montt as being "dedicated to democracy," and said the general has been getting a "bum rap" from his American critics.

A few days before that meeting, Americas Watch, a human rights group which sent an inspection team to Guatemala late last year, issued a lengthy report on the country's human rights. It accused the Guatemala government of waging "total war" on the Guatemalan people.

The report quoted a Guatemalan Army officer as saying last July, "If you are with us, we will feed you. If not, we'll kill you."

Prince chosen to rule Swaziland

LONDON (AP) — A 15-year-old prince has been chosen secretly from the estimated 70 sons of the late King Sobhuza II to become the next ruler of Swaziland in about six years, The Times of London reported today.

It quoted informed sources in Mbabane, capital of the landlocked southern African kingdom, as saying the name of the prince chosen by tribal elders was Makhosetive, meaning in Siswati "King of the Nation."

The Times said he would become king when he reached adulthood in about six years, but tribal priests would determine the exact moment when he was ready to undergo the elaborate ritual of kingship.

King Sobhuza, who assumed the monarchy in 1921 and had as many as 50 wives, died in August at age 83.

The Times said it was not known when the future king would be shown to his estimated 600,000 subjects. But it said there was a precedent in Swazi history for this happening about a year after the old king's death.

Pemex to increase production

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Pemex, the state oil monopoly, will increase petroleum production to 3 million barrels a day in 1983, the company's director general was quoted Monday as saying.

Newspapers quoted him in Monday's editions as saying the increase was necessary to meet growing domestic demand and export commitments.

Soldiers, police hunt for rebels

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — In the biggest military operation since the war for black majority rule ended three years ago, thousands of soldiers and police have fanned out through western Zimbabwe hunting for rebels who killed a dozen people from ambush.

"Those who kill in cold blood must suffer nothing less than death in cold blood," Prime Minister Robert Mugabe said in announcing the operation.

The troops, using armored cars, helicopter gunships and warplanes, are searching for rebels believed to be ex-guerrillas loyals to opposition leader Joshua Nkomo. The government says the rebels have killed 12 people, including two children, and wounded at least 21 others in ambushes since Dec. 21.

Mugabe and Nkomo led rival guerrilla armies in the seven-year war to end white rule in Zimbabwe, formerly the British colony of Rhodesia. They have been jockeying for power and, although Nkomo has disavowed the rebels, the new violence has heightened tensions between their rival political camps.

Mugabe ordered extra troops into the bush after the Christmas Eve slayings of three people in ambushes on cars, buses and on a train. The attacks all took place in Matabeleland, a western province that is a stronghold of Nkomo's followers.

The gangs also destroyed $2.6 million-worth of construction equipment in the Matabeleland town of Tsholotsho last week, Water Resources and Development Minister Cephas Msipa said.

Banditry has been increasing in Matabeleland since Nkomo was fired from the coalition government Feb. 17 for allegedly plotting a coup. Hundreds of his ex-guerrillas have deserted from the national army to become brigands in the bush.

Whites now rarely move around the province unarmed and police have urged them to arm for self-defence.

Tim Gibbs, a spokesman for white farmers and a son of former Rhodesian Governor Sir Humphrey Gibbs, flew to Harare on New Year's Eve and talked with security and government officials.

"They assured us they will do their very best to get this situation under control," he said.

The violence comes as Zimbabwe's 7.5 million people face unprecedented shortages of gasoline and other commodities, a 20 percent devaluation of the national currency and a 38 percent price increase in corn, the food staple.

Violence in the province included the kidnapping of an elderly white farmer and his grandson on New Year's Eve. The attackers killed the man after sending a ransom note to his wife demanding the release of 11 farms confiscated by the government from Nkomo in February after arms were found on them.

Six foreign tourists — two Americans, two Australians and two Britons — were seized last July 23. The kidnappers sent notes to police demanding the release of Nkomo loyalists in detention for links to the alleged coup plot.

U.S. hopes to reach textile agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department says that while negotiations have been difficult it still hopes to reach agreement with China on textile exports to the United States before Secretary of State George P. Shultz visits Peking next month.

Department deputy spokesman Alan Romberg declined to comment Monday, however, on a Chinese statement saying the United States "should bear all the consequences" if it places unilateral restrictions on Chinese textiles.

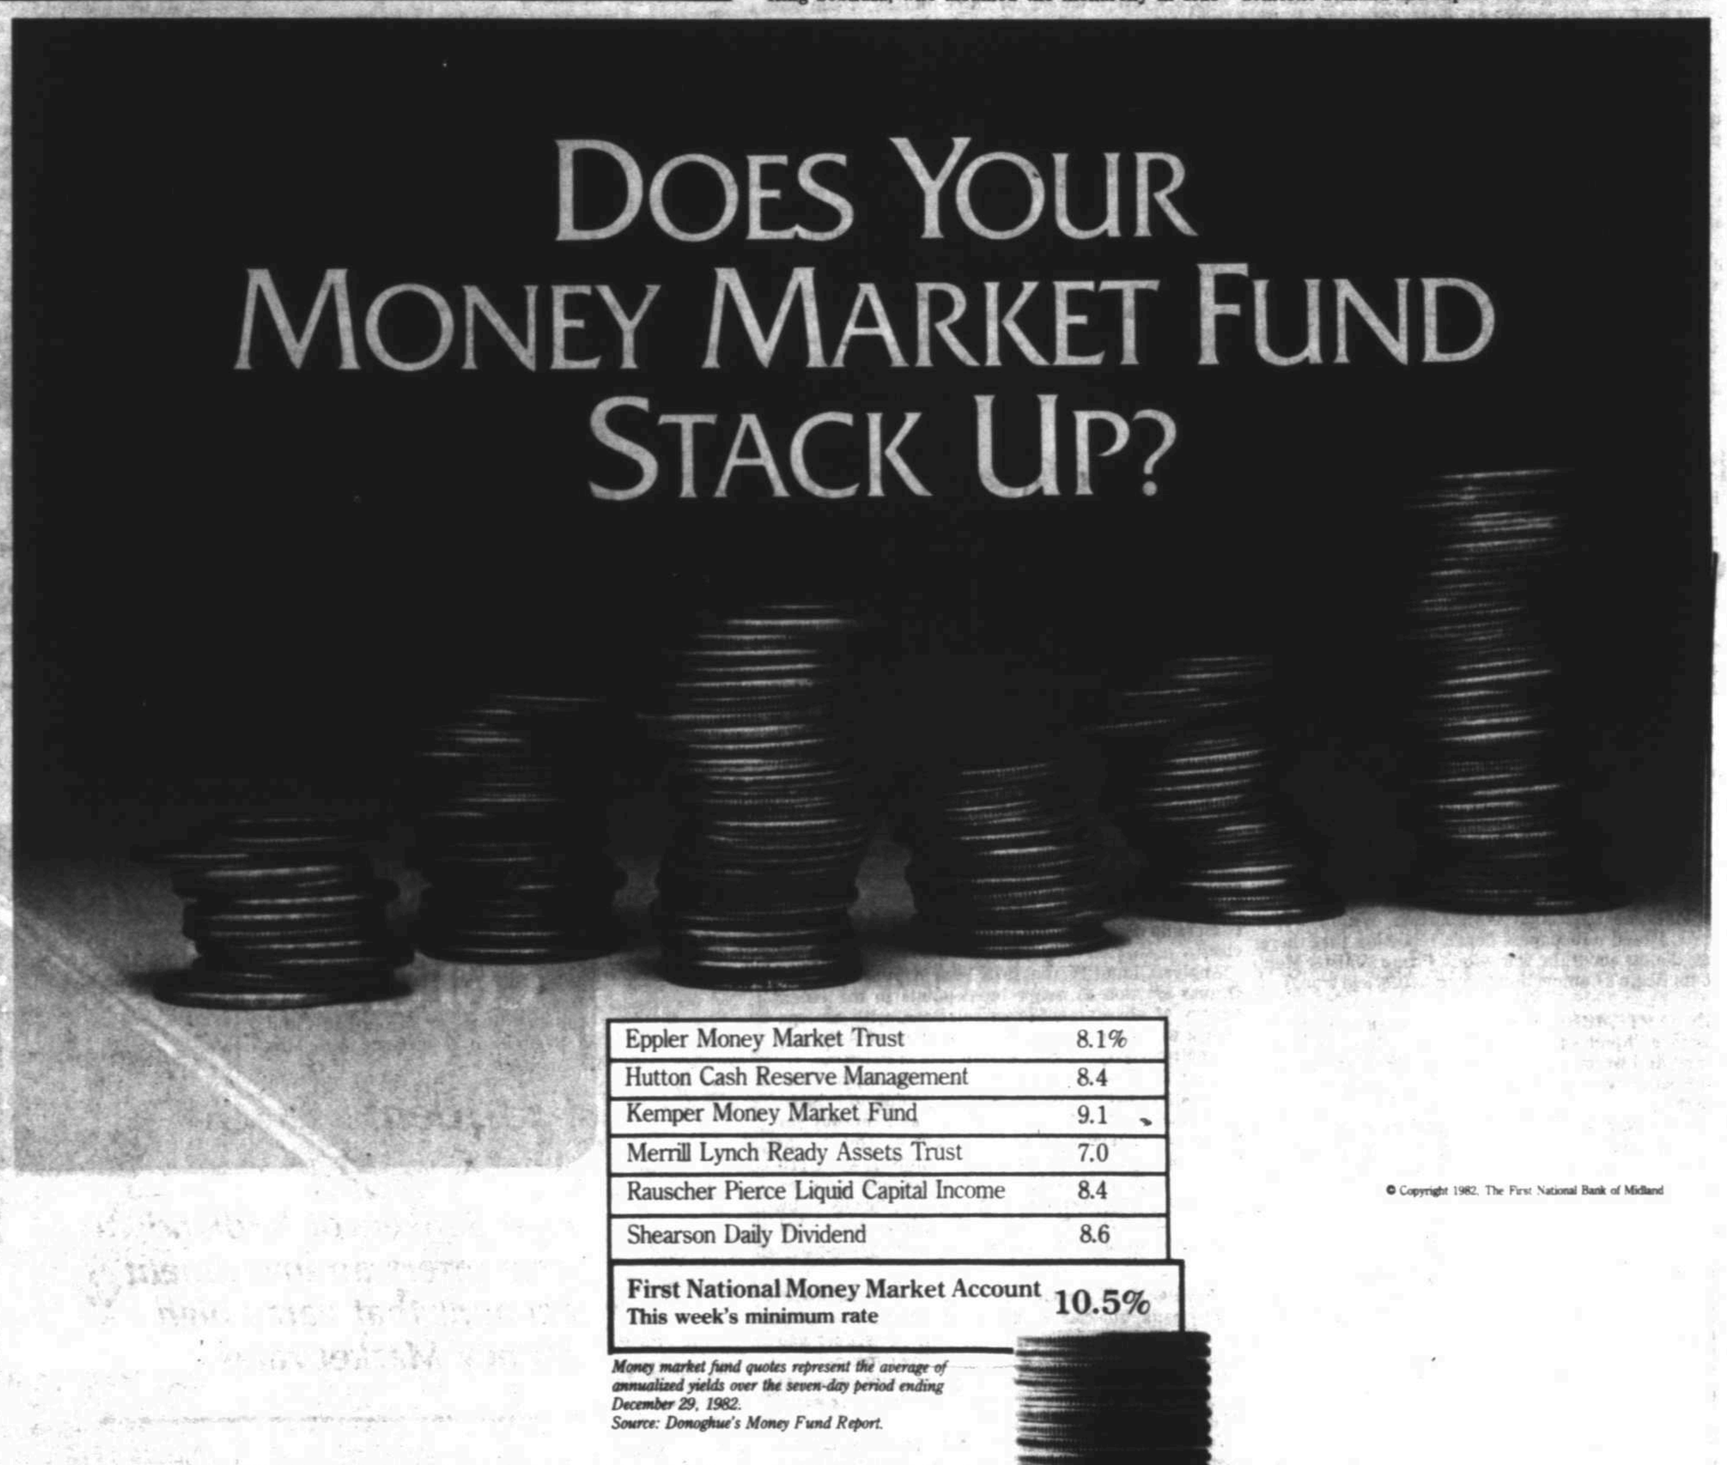

"Because textiles are important to both our economies, the negotiations have not been easy," said Romberg. "It is the U.S. government's sincere desire to continue addressing our textile trade problems for a mutually acceptable agreement as we have done during the past three years."

The United States and China have already held three rounds of negotations toward replacing the two-year pact that expired Dec. 31. Talks are to be renewed Thursday in Peking, with Peter Murphy of the U.S. trade representative's office heading the U.S. negotiating team.

Ann Berry, a trade official, said that if there is no new agreement by Jan. 15, the Reagan administration would impose unilateral restrictions on imports until there is an agreement.

"We need to have some control over imports," she said. She added that the unilateral restrictions would be superseded by a new agreement.

It was understood that such restrictions, if imposed, would set limits on Chinese textile imports similar to those in the agreement that expired Dec. 31.

New governors promise people austere times

By The Associated Press

Faced with rising unemployment and plummeting state revenues, four new governors — three Democrats and a Republican — promised austerity measures and in some cases higher taxes to balance budgets as they took the oath of office.

In California, Gov. George Deukmejian on Monday ordered a cut in state spending and Wisconsin Gov. Anthony S. Earl called for a temporary income tax and higher sales and gasoline taxes.

"It is not a time for wringing of hands and arguing who's to blame," said Minnesota Gov. Rudy Perpich.

It is "a time for joining together, for resolving to be resourceful," said Gov. Dick Bryan of Nevada.

Seventeen new governors were elected in 1982, and four of them were sworn in Monday at three state capitols and a high school auditorium.

In his first executive order, Deukmejian, the Republican, ordered California state spending cut by 2 percent and froze hiring, promotions, transfers and out-of-state travel.

The former state attorney general became California's 35th governor in a ceremony replete with a band and 30-foot flags — pomp that outgoing Gov. Edmund G. Brown eschewed at his first inaugural eight years ago. Brown, who lost a U.S. Senate bid, did not seek a third term.

Earl, 46, offered Wisconsin residents no such hope.

"The pain of Wisconsin's most hurtful economic period since the Depression is with us all," he said as the Legislature prepared to meet today to consider his proposals for higher sales and gas taxes, a temporary income tax and postponement of property tax relief.

Without new state revenues, Earl said, the state faces a $2.5 billion deficit in the 1983-85 fiscal years that begin July 1.

In Nevada, Bryan promised tax reform. Residents will benefit if "we can fashion a tax system that is both stable and fair," he said.

Bryan, 45, said Nevada is facing a period of "great difficulty. Yet, we have every reason to be optimistic about the future."

He was sworn in as the state's 25th governor on the steps of the state Capitol.

Perpich had himself inaugurated in the Hibbing High School auditorium to make a point about education.

"What I'm trying to say is that our schools — and the students in them — must be the foundation of the future, not the cringing hostage of the past," he said as he as he became Minnesota's 36th governor.

Perpich, who was governor from 1977 to 1978, told reporters he believes the state will have to continue the 6 percent sales tax and 10 percent income tax, which rose last Saturday from 5 percent and 7 percent, respectively.

Elsewhere, Democrat Ed Herschler, 64, became Wyoming's first three-term governor when he was sworn in Monday, and Florida Gov. Bob Graham, a 46-year-old Democrat, prepared to begin his second term today.

In the U.S. Virgin Islands, Juan Luis, 42, was sworn in for a second four-year term as governor. His November election victory had been unsuccessfully challenged in court.

After the 1982 elections, the nation's statehouses were split among 16 Republicans and 34 Democrats; 14 of the Democrats were newcomers, although that group included several men who, like Perpich, had previously held the office.

Pennsylvania sheriff saves homes of unemployed

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A sheriff says he wanted to give "a little time" to jobless homeowners by pulling their houses off the auction block, but an attorney says the gesture may have broken the law.

Saying he sympathized with victims of the recession, Allegheny County Sheriff Eugene Coon withdrew 42 owner-occupied houses from an auction list, giving County Judge Nicholas Papadakos time to attempt to organize a moratorium on mortgage foreclosures.

The properties had been scheduled for sale Monday to pay back taxes and overdue loan installments.

Coon's action drew swift praise from officials of the United Steelworkers union, which has an estimated 50,000 members in the county out of work.

"If we don't start doing something for these people, there's going to be a revolution," said Walter Bachowski, director of USW District 20.

"It's tremendous...We're elated," said Andrew Palm, director of USW District 15.

Coon anticipated criticism, although "all we're doing is giving them a little time."

"I expect I'll be hearing from some banks," he said. "There are lawyers running around here screaming their heads off. They get a piece of the action, you know. They're on a percentage basis."

Attorney Bernard Markovitz, who represents lenders, said Coon may have broken the law.

"I don't think it's legal. It's a matter of contract. I don't think Sheriff Coon has the authority to do it," Markovitz said. He called foreclosures "distasteful" but necessary.

He said he advised his clients not to challenge the move in court as long as it was not repeated.

Markovitz said bad loans can hurt small savers as well as big banks.

"These banks are saying most of this money is made up of little people who give the bank their money and say 'Make me some money and protect it,'" he said. "And if the loan's insured, the federal government has to pay, and that's you and me."

Coon said his action also would displease businessmen who routinely buy homes at sheriff sales, pay the liens and resell the properties at a profit.

One man facing loss of his home was Harry Bacus, 28, an Air Force veteran who has been unemployed for 18 months. Although his home was saved by the Veterans Administration, not Coon's action, "I didn't know there were any other alternatives (to foreclosure)," Bacus said. "We were just going to let it go up in the sheriff's sale."

Equal Rights Amendment presented again as first bill in new Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — A second battle over ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment has begun with reintroduction of the proposed constitutional amendment as the first piece of legislation in the new Congress.

"I am designating the Equal Rights Amendment HR1," House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said Monday after being re-elected speaker. The amendment and several other bills were presented as the House opened for business.

Rep. Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, told a news conference the measure has 221 co-sponsors in the House. "It is a priority item of business for the Judiciary Committee and we plan to go full-steam ahead," he said.

Rep. Don Edwards, D-Colo., chairman of the Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights, said he expected the House to pass the amendment by mid-summer.

"I challenge the Republican-controlled Senate to do likewise. Only in this way can the Senate show that it is truly committed to women's equality. Symbolic, piecemeal measures simply will not do," Edwards said.

The amendment would prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex.

"Our biggest problem is the Senate — whether we can get the necessary two-thirds vote there," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo. But, she added, "the extreme right-wing got discredited severely (in the Senate) during the lame-duck session" so should be less of a stumbling block.

President Reagan has opposed the amendment, saying that while he favors equal rights, a constitutional amendment is unnecessary.

The amendment was passed by Congress in 1972, with a 7-year deadline for three-fourths of the state legislatures to ratify it. Congress later extended the ratification deadline to June 30, 1982. However, only 35 states had ratified when that time ran out, three states short of the necessary 38.

"There is a much stronger regional grass roots coalition" now to push for ratification in the state legislatures, Mrs. Schroeder maintained.

"The women's vote proved a critical factor in the recent elections, both at the state and federal levels," she said. "Significant gains have been made in the number of pro-ERA legislators, thanks to women voting en bloc."

In the Senate, a spokesman for Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said the senator was considering whether to hold hearings on the matter.

The spokesman, Mark Goodin, said Thurmond voted for the amendment in 1972. "His position is that it is a matter of extreme importance, but that people are divided over it."

Israeli news media bucks censorship of military to cover war in Lebanon

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel's news media bucked military censorship and their own patriotic feelings to aggressively cover the invasion of Lebanon, producing the first critical reports here of a war as it happened.

"The Israeli press reacted faster than the U.S. press to Vietnam, or the British press to the Falklands," says Ido Dissentshik, chief of the news division at the daily newspaper Maariv. "I'm very proud of the performance of the Israeli press, especially the way we went into the massacre."

But he added, "It's a very difficult decision for a newspaper in Israel to start criticizing a war when our own people are being killed."

The Israelis invaded Lebanon in June to drive out the Palestine Liberation Organization. Within a few weeks, Israeli newspapers began reporting that there were doubts about the war within Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet and among battlefield troops.

IN SEPTEMBER, Lebanese Christian militiamen massacred hundreds of Palestinians in Beirut refugee camps, and Israeli newspapers responded with a wave of investigative reports on Israel's conduct during the slaughter.

As the war has dragged on, public support has declined, with one opinion poll indicating 53 percent of Israelis want an immediate withdrawal of their troops from Lebanon.

The Israeli army, stung by the unprecedented criticism, has struck back: Last week it penalized Israel Television's military correspondent for reporting on anti-war sentiment among combat troops. The army severed contacts with reporter Dan Scemama, meaning he will probably not be escorted or helped with assignments. On Tuesday, the army reversed itself and lifted the ban on contacts with Scemama.

Israel has no constitutional guarantee of press freedom.

PREVIOUS REACTION to the critical press reports ranged from barbed responses from the government — at one point Defense Minister Ariel Sharon suggested reporters were more anxious to go to cocktail parties than to the front — to praise from the International Press Institute, which said newspapers "carried critical analysis and comments unprecedented in war times."

A recent poll, meanwhile, indicated Israelis were split over press freedom: 41 percent of those surveyed favored restrictions on the media and 46 percent said the press had the right amount of freedom.

But Dina Goren, a professor of communications at Tel Aviv University, says, "Israeli society being what it is — highly argumentative, very involved — you can't clamp down on the press...In practice, there is press freedom. This is the political culture now."

Newspapers have vigorously denied government charges that their reports showed a lack of patriotism.

But editors admit the war coverage is being handled differently than might have been the case in the early days of the Jewish state, when there was a tendency to soft-pedal criticism of the government.

"WE HAVE MATURED to the point where we can be more candid with the truth," Hirsh Goodman, the Jerusalem Post's military affairs writer, said at a recent symposium honoring the newspaper's 50th anniversary.

"We are Zionists, and our wars are basically wars of Zionist survival," he said, adding that military writers censor their own reports because of their "passionate attachments" to the troops. But, Goodman said, "self-censorship does not mean a lack of willingness to criticize."

Analysts identify the 1973 Yom Kippur War and Begin's election as major break-points in the recent history of government-press relations, with newspapers gradually returning to a tradition of adversary journalism started during British rule in Palestine.

After the heavy casualties of the Yom Kippur War, newspapers blamed themselves for failing to criticize Israel's military and political stance and thereby fostering an exaggerated self-confidence. And by the time Begin ousted the Labor government, even pro-Labor newspapers were criticizing official policies. Begin came to power with no newspaper firmly in his pocket, and since then, his policies have been challenged vigorously in the press.

THE POST IS partially owned by the Labor movement's bank, but claims editorial independence. A co-editor, Erwin Frenkel, wrote that the newspaper had decided to judge Begin's policies "on their merits."

Yedioth Ahronoth, another afternoon daily, takes a right-wing view in editorials but includes communists among its columnists. Meanwhile, Haaretz, long the leading independent paper, has hewed to a liberal editorial line and is a vigorous critic of the war. More to the left are Davar, which claims editorial independence despite being owned by the Labor movement, and Al Hamishmar, published by the Marxist Mapam ally of Labor.

Although newspapers published the most detailed reports on the war, the state-subsidized Israel Radio and Television added information, with Israel TV reporting on coordination between Lebanese and Israeli commanders concerning the refugee massacre.

And Scemama, in the report that triggered the army penalty, showed a half-dozen Israeli soldiers in Lebanon singing a children's song with lyrics of their own: "Come down to us airplane — take us to Lebanon — we will fight for Sharon and come home in a coffin."

Official more than ranchhand

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dennis LeBlanc, a $58,500-per-year Commerce Department official who formerly worked for Ronald Reagan, says he serves as the "middleman between the president and everyone else" on his trips to Reagan's ranch.

LeBlanc, a former bodyguard and chauffeur for Reagan, said he travels to Reagan's ranch in the hills outside Santa Barbara, Calif., whenever the president is there.

LeBlanc, in a telephone interview Monday, said he works side by side with Reagan performing ranch chores and also coordinates the work of various support people who operate communications gear and other equipment.

LeBlanc's comments followed remarks by Reagan's deputy press secretary, Larry Speakes, who was asked at a press briefing about the Commerce Department official.

Asked at his daily press briefing whether Reagan considers it "a proper use of taxpayers' money to pay the salary of someone chopping wood out there," Speakes said, "I think you've overblown it."

The question was prompted by a recent General Accounting Office report that said an unnamed high Commerce official was being paid by the government while doing chores during Reagan's ranch visit.

LeBlanc, associate administrator for policy analysis and development in the Commerce Department's telecommunications and information administration, was subsequently identified as the official in the report.

Reagan will face large deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan plans to seek $30 billion in domestic budget cuts for fiscal 1984 but he still faces a deficit likely to top $175 billion, administration officials report.

Any further narrowing of the estimated red ink for the budget year that begins next October depends on whether the president will drop his opposition to new tax increases and further cuts in his military spending plans, according to officials involved in planning the budget.

The officials, speaking on condition that their names not be used, disclosed the proposed non-defense cuts Monday as Reagan launched a week of intensive meetings with aides and congressional Republicans on ways to stem a deficit that swells with each new estimate.

Administration budget planners now concede the 1984 deficit will exceed $200 billion for the first time if no savings are enacted. Just a few weeks earlier, the administration was talking about a deficit between $150 billion and $200 billion, and last summer, it was predicting a deficit of $93 billion.

When he took office, Reagan promised to eliminate the deficit by 1984. Instead, he is presiding over the largest deficits ever: $110.7 billion in fiscal 1982 and an estimated $185 billion or more this year. The previous record was $66.4 billion in 1976.

The latest red-ink estimate stems from a new internal administration forecast showing weaker economic growth for 1983 than previously expected.

Reagan faces a Jan. 31 deadline for sending his proposed budget to Congress, which may prefer defense cuts and tax increases to further cuts in the same domestic programs it trimmed in 1981 and again in 1982 at the president's urging.

The $30 billion in non-military cuts Reagan has tentatively approved is up slightly from the total contemplated in November, when the president authorized budget director David A. Stockman to find $26 billion in savings.

Officials said larger domestic cuts are now being sought because of the more pessimistic administration economic forecast, which shows 1984 spending — and the deficit — rising faster than previously thought.

"It's like being on a treadmill," one official said. "You have to keep cutting more to keep up with the deficit."

Officials disclosed plans for cutting $30 billion from programs in the wake of a weekend report that Reagan had rescinded most of the $26 billion in cuts he had approved in November. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the report was false.

Budget officials declined to detail the proposed savings, but said they touch on a broad array of domestic programs, including Medicare and Medicaid but excluding Social Security.

Any proposals for making the Social Security system financially sound will await the recommendations of a bi-partisan commission, budget officials said.

The budget cuts now under consideration would not represent actual reductions from spending levels expected for the current fiscal year. To the contrary, overall spending next year is sure to rise from this year's estimate of nearly $800 billion.

Rather, the cuts amount to savings from what the government would spend next year if nothing were done to slow the automatic expansion of programs to keep up with inflation, population growth and — in the case of social welfare benefits — increased unemployment and other fallout resulting from a weak economy.

Officials investigate tainted underwear

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Health officials are searching for the source of toxic chemicals that tainted new underwear and caused painful skin inflammations for five young boys who wore the briefs.

State tests on the cotton Fruit of the Loom brand briefs worn by two of the victims indicated they were contaminated with bis-tributyl tin oxide and tetrabutyl stannane, chemicals used in pesticides and in dyeing operations in the textile industry, said Bruce Tiejema of the Kent County Health Department.

The boys, all under age 10, suffered painful "blistering and swelling of the buttocks and genitals" after wearing the briefs, department spokeswoman Pat Allen said Monday.

The inflammation subsided after the boys stopped wearing the underwear. None was hospitalized, but all were treated by doctors. Two of the cases were reported a month ago, and three turned up last week.

Several hundred pairs of the suspect briefs apparently were sold in November and December by E & J Unclaimed Freight Co., a discount retailer in Grand Rapids, officials said.

"We have no basis for assuming any intentional contamination," said George Pio, environmental health director for the department.

Bill Folkertsma, owner of E & J, said he discarded his stock of the underwear last month after receiving complaints from customers. He said he did not know where he had bought them or how many were sold, but health officials believe 200 to 300 pairs may be unaccounted for.

Fruit of the Loom brand clothing is made by Union Underwear Co. Inc. of Bowling Green, Ky.

Joseph Schenton, vice president of Union's parent firm, Northwest Industries Inc. of Chicago, said the contamination was an isolated incident.

Holes of trouble

These little puddles of water at the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Midkiff Road may hold more danger than expected. Due to the weekend's cycle of freezing and thawing temperatures, Midland streets deteriorated, resulting in many complaints from residents and additional city crews working the streets.

Midland drivers should beware of potholes

Staff Writer

Midlanders, unaccustomed to the snowy landscape and icy, slick streets, have another obstacle to watch for when they venture out in their cars. Potholes, the source of many major complaints and often blamed on the considerable construction around town, can lurk under snow and ice — and cause considerable damage to the car's shocks and the driver's nerves.

While ruts in city streets may be dangerous and frustrating all year round, the freezing temperatures, followed by thaws, can add to the breakdown of the asphalt.

"It's the freeze-thaw-freeze action," said Mike Butler, assistant director of public works for the City of Midland. "That cycle really tears up the base and causes the streets to deteriorate."

Although all of the major thoroughfares are constantly surveyed for the predatory potholes, Butler said that following the heavy snow early Saturday morning, thawing afternoons and the nights' deep freezes, two intersections have especially dangerous depressions.

Specifically, drivers should be aware of cavernous cavities at the intersections of Wadley Avenue and Midkiff Road and Wadley Avenue and Tarleton Street, he pointed out.

"If you approach any intersection that has a lot of water standing in it, you should be cautious — there could be a pothole," he warned.

Pothole crews regularly survey the major thoroughfares but the city depends on calls from the community about others located on off-streets. "We send them out looking because we know some of the major thoroughfares will have some deterioration," he said. "When we get calls from the public, we start routing them there.

"We ran three additional pothole crews today," Butler said Monday. "We ran a total of five pothole crews and we normally run two. Also, we'll run a (two-man) standby crew tonight."

The crews pour an asphaltic coal mix in the holes so the surface will be smooth again, he explained, adding that the mix is temporary.

"A lot of people wonder why they see us out there filling one one day and the next day the pothole is there again. But we go out and put the asphaltic coal mix in the potholes so the surface will be rideable again. Then we go back out and put a permanent patch in when the water is gone."

The pothole is enlarged to a square shape before the permanent filling is placed, he added.

Butler urged citizens to report any dangerous holes in the streets to city officials. "If (people) will call us with their potholes, we'll get out there as fast as we can."

Smith willing to forego car for deputies' raises

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The sheriff was willing to give up a new car for himself and to place rural traffic control on a low priority in exchange for more pay for his deputies.

"I'm approaching this from a businessman's point of view," said Sheriff Dallas Smith, who told the Midland County Commissioners' Court on Monday he was interested in "getting returns on money" expended on salaries. "Pay me what you think I'm worth."

He's budgeted in 1983 for $33,348, which includes a 10 percent raise over his $30,288 salary of last year. "It doesn't bother me that some of my men (supervisors) will be getting a bigger percentage than I'm getting."

If Smith were to forego his raise, some of his supervisors, who are budgeted for up to $31,300 in '83, would be drawing a bigger paycheck than he is getting. The proposed pay raise for his deputies is 8 percent.

"I need a captain more than I need a car," the sheriff said.

Smith, who has slots for 52 deputies this year, has a 1983 projected budget of about $1.8 million.

The sheriff cited his chief jailer, Capt. Bennie Cureton, as a prime example of a good business investment. "It's the lesser of interest in law enforcement," he said of a jailer's job...I think it is an excellent return." Cureton, he said, is "doing the job well."

Earlier in the discussion when Smith was seeking to increase his budget, the commissioners noted the need for more visible patrol cars in the rural areas. "It has a deterrent factor," County Judge Bill Ahders noted of marked patrol units.

The discussion focused on traffic violators on county roads in developing areas. "Some of the violators will be people living in those areas," said Smith.

"The violator may be your neighbor down the street," said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis.

Smith said his patrol units would make arrests on driving-while-intoxicated offenders and other flagrant violators but would not be as "stringent" as Texas Department of Public Safety troopers in, for example, stopping speeders.

In a discussion on cost cutting, the sheriff, for example, noted that "the federal government is giving us cheese and powdered milk."

The sheriff said food for the jail's 80 to 100 prisoners isn't purchased at wholesale prices, since the quantity isn't sufficient to warrant wholesale prices.

"It seems we ought to be getting some preacher's discounts on that (food)," said Davis.

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

While Texans generally are satisfied with the courtesy and professionalism they receive from the three major law enforcement agencies in the state, they give the Department of Public Safety higher marks than they grant local police and sheriff's departments.

Those are the findings of a recently completed Sam Houston State University criminal justice study titled "Public Perceptions of the Police in Texas."

The study, which offered no explanation as to why the DPS ranks higher in the public eye, was compiled from replies by 1,345 persons who responded to a survey sample of 2,000 Texas residents who had some form of contact with law enforcement officers in the state during 1981.

THE MAJORITY of respondents — 81.2 percent — were white. Blacks represented 6.5 percent, while Spanish-surnamed respondents comprised 10.9 percent of the total. The remaining 1.4 percent were of other racial and ethnic origins.

Fifty-two percent of the respondents were male and 48 percent were female. Their median age was 39 and their "contact" with police agencies ran the gamut from being stopped for traffic violations to being jailed on various felony and misdemeanor charges.

Fifty-four percent of the total survey respondents, which also included victims and witnesses of crime, had one thing in common, however: Their contact with police was traffic-related in one form or another.

In summary, DPS troopers garnered an 82 percent positive rating for professionalism; sheriffs' departments and city police departments tied at 65 percent each in that category.

OTHER STUDY categories included fairness, competence, dedication, honesty and courteousness.

The favorable ratings gained by the three law enforcement agencies for those criteria broke roughly along the same lines as the ratings they received in the professionalism category.

While pay, training emphases and leadership qualities vary widely among individual law enforcement agencies across the state and no doubt account for some of the rating disparity between those agencies and the more standardized DPS, the consensus of officers and officials alike is that it stems in large measure from innate differences in the type of contact a DPS trooper has with the public, compared to the type of contact made by police and sheriff's officers.

Troopers are primarily involved with traffic violators and accident victims, according to Midland DPS Capt. Bobby Chaffin. By contrast, deputies and police officers have far more dealings on the steamier side of life and are called out to handle everything from bar fights to family disturbances, things a trooper seldom sees in the line of duty.

"IN A FAMILY disturbance, you can't win," said Chaffin, a 24-year veteran of the DPS. "You normally wind up with both parties mad at you."

Sheriff Dallas Smith, himself a former DPS trooper, basically agrees that differences in job requirements are going to produce different perceptions of job performance.

"But," said Smith, "that doesn't answer all of it. A lot depends on the quality of the officer. You get what you pay for. Back in 1977 when the basic pay was $750 a month, we got a $750 man. Some of them were certainly fine men, but the percentage increases with higher salaries."

Noting that troopers mainly encounter people they'll never see again, whereas police often deal with the same faces day in and day out, city police detective Lt. Earl Luckey said:

"The DPS has a high rating just like the feds, and for much the same reason. The more distance between the police and the public, the better the perception; the closer, the worse. And we handle probably 50 calls to their one."

EXCEPT ON WEEKENDS when they're allowed to return home, according to Chaffin, all DPS recruits eat, work and train together for an intensive 18-week period at the same place: the DPS academy in Austin.

This creates an overall cohesiveness and largely uniform pattern of job behavior in the DPS that can't be achieved among the hundreds of relatively independent police and sheriff's departments in the state.

For starters, recruits learn not to use flash words when they stop an errant driver. For instance, instead of telling the motorist why he's been stopped, troopers introduce themselves and say something like:"The reason you're being contacted tonight, sir, is...."

They then proceed to ask for identification, advise the motorist what action will be taken, take the action, explain what the motorist needs to do and make their departure on a friendly note by wishing him a good night or a safe trip.

"That approach puts things on a professional, businesslike level and reduces (driver) defensiveness," said Chaffin. "If it's followed pretty closely — instead of 'Where's the fire?' — 99 percent of the people respond in like manner."

Survey questions about crime in general produced results showing that 54 percent of the respondents felt crime had grown worse in their communities during the past three years, with 52 percent saying they expect it to get even worse in the next three years.

And 77 percent said they believe court rulings regarding law enforcement had hindered police efforts to control crime.

A snowfall may look like a winter playland, but the resulting ice is hazardous for people of all ages, and especially older women.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

That blanket of white powder may be a beauty of nature, but it's also a potential accident arena — especially the day after a snowstorm.

Although most of the snow on the streets has melted, Midlanders should beware — a chunk of black ice could be lurking in the shaded spots of the city.

Over the weekend Midland Memorial Hospital recorded 20 fall accidents occurring on snow or ice, including five on Monday morning with more expected, according to a spokesperson at MMH emergency room.

"My clinic was full this morning (Monday)," said Dr. Jerry L. Cochran, a Midland orthopedic surgeon. "Usually the next morning after a freeze there's an avalanche of people in here."

Slips and falls occur more often the day or two after a snowstorm, when snow has melted and then freezes, Cochran said.

"The common story heard is 'I fell off the back porch' or '...on the way to the mailbox,' " Cochran said.

While fractured wrists and ankles are frequent injuries seen by physicians, older women often break their hips from a fall. Cochran said women over 65 with post menopausal osteoporosis, a loss of calcium of bones, are "skirting danger with death," and should remain indoors during a snow and especially the day after.

"The national average for the chance of these people dying six months after a fall is 30 percent," Cochran said.

Young children and teen-agers are candidates for fractured wrists and sometimes sprained ankles after romping through snow or gliding on the ice.

And that dash across an icy street could result in a fall, producing a painful tailbone.

"But most people break their falls with locked arms and that's why wrists are broken," Cochran said.

He noted that people should avoid wear leather-soled shoes during or after a snow.

"Hiking boots are good and they also protect the toes," Cochran said, adding that another problem during a snow is

Meeting 30 Japanese swimmers after arriving at Midland Regional Airport Monday afternoon is Sharon Seay, a sponsor of the City of Midland Swim Team, who produced a list of activites in which the youngsters will participate during the week. Trying to break a communication barrier with Ms. Seay is Michiru Sekiguchi, 13, a back, free and butterfly competitor. Guests of the COM swim team, the 8 through 18-year-olds will compete in a dual meet with Midland and Odessa swim teams. They also will attend school with their hosts, visit Carlsbad Caverns, shop at Midland Park Mall, be luncheon guests of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and tour the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum between workouts with the Midland swimmers.

University representatives support funding proposal

AUSTIN — Representatives of state-supported universities say they're united in support of a proposed constitutional amendment for college construction funding being proposed by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin.

Under the proposal, the Permanent University Fund would be expanded to provide construction funds for all Texas A&M and University of Texas System components — such as UT-Permian Basin — while providing $125 million annually for non-PUF schools, such as Texas Tech University.

That $125 million would be adjusted for inflation to keep the amount constant. The initial appropriation would be made Sept. 1, 1984.

However, funds would not be limited to construction but could be used for capital equipment, library books and similar needs.

Parker said the emphasis in the past has been on "bricks and mortar," but commented the new proposal was one for "books and mortar." "We have limited ourselves too much" in the past, he commented.

Parker and Delco reported that the governing board of all state-supported colleges have "signed on" to the proposal, although Parker said it could be amended "in the spirit of compromise."

"We know that it is a lot of money," Delco said, but she argued the funding is required to meet higher education needs in Texas.

"We think we've got everybody together on a bill," she said, adding that she feels the measure will be supported by the Legislature and the public.

When asked why prospects appear better in 1983 than in past sessions, Parker cited abolition of the state ad valorem tax which had been used for construction at the non-PUF schools, and said that "desperation" resulted.

"Things got tough enough" that an agreement was reached, he said.

The proposal also provides for Prairie View A&M to receive additional funding from the PUF — $5 million annually for 10 years.

That money will come from the University of Texas' share of the PUF.

Both Delco and Parker indicated Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who has opposed the idea of creating a new dedicated construction fund in the past, has indicated that he would, in Delco's words, "be supportive" of the new plan.

Parker said he had some concerns over a dedicated fund, but noted that "we have dedicated funds for roads. I think it's in order to have dedicated funds for minds."

The proposal also calls for the Legislature or a state agency designated by the Legislature to develop a formula every 10 years for allocation of the $125 million among the eligible institutions.

Those schools could issue 10-year bonds and notes on up to 80 percent of the allocation which they would receive.

Also provided is a five-year review of the allocation formula "so that adjustment can be made in the last five years of the 10-year allocation period on the 20 percent of the allocation not obligated for bond service."

The bonding authority of the Permanent University Fund would be increased from 20 to 30 percent of the value of the fund, exclusive of real estate, in order to serve the needs of the 10 additional institutions which would be included under the PUF.

If approved by the Legislature, the constitutional amendment would be submitted to voters in November.

Officials from UT, Texas A&M, the Texas State University System and various state-supported senior colleges indicated their support for the plan at the Monday press conference.

Despite large snowfall airport stayed open, Banks says

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Many of the frustrated travelers from Midland who held useless airline tickets in hand Saturday morning may have misunderstood the ticket agents who told them they couldn't get home by plane.

Midland Regional Airport was never closed.

Although empty seats in the boarding sections and light traffic around the snowy parking lot indicated differently, the airport actually remained open throughout the weekend.

When flights are canceled due to poor weather conditions people often think that the airport is closed. According to Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation at Midland Regional, the fact is there simply are no arrivals or departures.

"The airport remained open," Banks explained Monday. "We report the conditions on the runway to the airlines and airmen through the FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) flight service. The aircraft pilot makes the decision (whether to land or take off)."

However, with 7 inches of snow deposited on the Tall City and the following freeze Saturday night, few pilots opted to make a stop in Midland.

"Saturday, we didn't have any flights at all," Banks said. "Sunday, we had a few flights late in the day — about three or four. But today we're back to normal."

Banks, who finishes out a 13½-year career as aviation director in Midland at the end of the month, said although the airport wasn't closed during the weekend, there have been times in the past when it was shut down.

"We've had occasions before when it didn't operate, but it was only for maybe one day at a time. This is the worst (snow storm) that I recall since I've been here. What really hurt us was the deep freeze Saturday night with the temperatures around 10 degrees.

"Then yesterday, the temperatures got up and we got vehicles out on the runways. We moved them back and forth all day trying to break (ice and snow) up."

According to Banks, although Midland Regional is short on equipment, that didn't make any difference in speeding up the process of clearing the runways.

"I know a lot of people were unhappy," he said. "They thought we should have had more equipment out there. But we just don't have that equipment. It takes a lot of time to clear that much snow and I don't think that even if we had all that equipment we could've cleared it any faster than nature did."

Banks, who will be succeeded by Victor White as aviation director, said that he was sorry the snow storm hit at the end of his term.

"I regret very much that it had to happen. But there was nothing I could do to speed (the clearing of the runways) up that we didn't do. I'm sympathetic to the people who were delayed and had to change their plans — especially since it was my last month and at the end of Christmas."

Baskin administers oath of office to county officials

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

"Is anybody not here who should be here?" inquired Judge Pat Baskin as he was about to line up 11 fellow judges and other elected Midland County officials to administer oaths of office to them at 8:15 a.m. Monday. "I don't know how else to ask it."

Instead of 11 officials, 10 appeared in the courtroom.

Baskin, judge of the 142nd State District Court, set out to administer two sets of oaths as a gallery of spectators, including deputies and clerks of the officials, watched. On the first go-round, County Judge Bill Ahders and Commissioners Win Brown and Wally Craig pledged allegiance to country, state and county, said they would uphold the constitutions of the United States and Texas and law pertaining thereto, and would take no bribes.

Then he set out to administer a similar but somewhat different oath to eight other officials who were either re-elected or elected to office for the first time in the November general election. But they only numbered seven: County Attorney Scott Henderson, Peace Justice Bob Pine, County Treasurer Dee Thompson, District Clerk Vivian Wood, County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry, 318th State District Court Judge Barbara Culver, and County Court-at-law Judge Willie DuBose.

"Well," said Judge Baskin, "I relied on the roll clerk...."

As it turned out, Culp had set aside 9 a.m. — about 45 minutes later — for the swearing-in ceremony and had so marked his appointment calendar. But the brief ceremony was rescheduled from 9 a.m. to 8:15 a.m. Culp, judge of the 238th State District Court since 1977, was not so informed but was sworn in when he reported for work and the ceremony about 9 a.m.

With Culp missing, Baskin read the oath, and the seven officials echoed the verbiage but substituted their own names.

"Will you take your seats for just a minute," Baskin said.

He was succinct in alluding to the duties of the officials and cast a glance toward Ms. Cherry. "I know it's somewhat embarrassing to Rosenelle" to again hear the duty-responsibility minispiel," the judge said. "She been county clerk since she was 11⅛ years old," he joshed. Ms. Cherry, county's senior employee, has been county clerk since 1951.

"Now," said Baskin, "let's get about the business of serving the people."

County faces deficit spending

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County hasn't yet fallen into deficit spending. But it may follow the worn trail of the federal government if the Commissioners' Court today can't figure out how to match expenditures with incoming revenue.

The commissioners have budgeted $8.5 million for 1983, while the projected general revenue from taxes, fines and fees is $7.9 million. The deficit is more than $600,000.

"We're spending more than we're going to collect," County Judge Bill Ahders noted Monday after Auditor Johnnie Thompson once again had brought impending deficit spending to the attention of the five-member Commissioners' Court.

The commissioners were to convene at 9 a.m. today to resolve the budget by making cuts and by possibly considering reneging on a 10 percent pay raise for the county's 19 elected officials and on an 8 percent salary increase for the approximately 300 hired employees.

The commissioners approved the budget last August and are to "activate" it at the first of the year.

In pointing out that the general fund is inadequate to absorb projected expenditures, the auditor noted that federal revenue sharing funds, which are not included in the general budget, are less than lean.

"Revenue sharing is kaput," Ms. Thompson said. Last year, the commissioners called on the federal funds to pay certain expenses, such as architectural fees. But that back-up is just about gone.

The commissioners then considered hiring a purchasing agent to get bargain buys for the county and to help keep expenses down.

"We're going to have to be frugal," Commissioner Durward Wright said, even after the budget is trimmed to match projected expenditures with incoming revenue.

who supervises four deputies, made an offer to patrol and watch for traffic offenders along county roads.

"In the rural areas, we need a little more presence and visibility (of deputies)," conceded Davis, who noted that "I even stopped a (violating) truck out there and threw my weight around."

But the commissioner seemed to agree that traffic control should be a role played by the sheriff.

The commissioners were approached by Peace Justice Charlie Sprayberry and Bob Pine, who asked that their pay be increased to the level of other "non-lawyer" county officials.

Sprayberry is salaried at $28,200 in 1983, and Pine, at $29,340. Most other officials, such as the county clerk, district clerk, treasurer and tax assessor-collector, are pegged $33,000 to more than $35,000.

"Even though we are precinct officers," said Pine, "the work involved should be considered as much as anything else." Pine said the peace justices spend more time on the job than other county officials.

"I think the pay should be in line with other non-lawyer officials," Pine said.

Sprayberry noted that even though the peace justices are precinct officers, the justices' jurisdiction is virtually countywide. Under the current setup, the justices' Precinct 1 covers about 97 percent of the county.

"There may be good and adequate reason for a lesser salary for the justices of the peace," said Sprayberry. But, he added, the precinct angle wasn't one.

"I'm sure we'll all consider it (pay raise)," said Ahders, who noted that peace justice's salaries traditionally are lower than the pay of other elected officials.

McDaniel appointment makes history

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov.-elect Mark White has made the highest-ranking appointment of a black in the history of his office by naming a woman who works for a Midland company as his legal counsel.

Myra McDaniel, 50, who is currently general counsel for the William B. Wilson Companies of Midland, was chosen for the job because of her talents, White said. "She happens to be a woman."

Mrs. McDaniel, who said she did not know she was making history, noted she would like to make some special contributions to blacks, though she did not know what they would be. She said the appointment forced her to make a decision about becoming personally involved in making government work.

White said the position, which pays more than $50,000 a year, would cause Mrs. McDaniel to take a pay cut.

Mrs. McDaniel has worked for the William B. Wilson Companies for the last year, a Midland-based concern engaged in oil and gas exploration, computer systems, cattle raising and other ventures. She served as assistant general counsel to the Texas Railroad Commission from mid-1981 until taking that job.

From June 1979 to May 1981, Mrs. McDaniel served as chief of the taxation division of the Texas Attorney General's office. She joined the office in 1975 after earning her law degree from The University of Texas.

Her husband, Reuben, is a management professor at The University of Texas.

DEATHS

Roy L. Breeding

Services for Roy L. Breeding, 67, of 4723 Wilshire, will be at 11 a.m. Wednesday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield, minister of the West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Breeding died Sunday evening in a Midland hospital.

He was born Nov. 10, 1915, in Crosbyton. He lived his early life in the Breckenridge area and moved to Monahans in 1936, where he began working in the oil fields. He also was a resident of Kermit, Odessa and Monahans and lived in Grand Junction, Colo., for five years. He served in the U.S. Army during World War II. He worked in Alaska at Prudhoe Bay from 1970 until his retirement in 1980.

Survivors include his wife, Helen Breeding of Midland; five sons, Michael Roy Breeding and Gary Allen Breeding, both of Midland, James Lee Breeding, Danny Steve Breeding and Terry Dean Breeding, all of Odessa; eight daughters, Betty Ann Groff of Monahans, Kay Warren of Hobbs, N.M., Donna Coe of Grand Junction, Colo., Rhonda Akins of Odessa, Tammy Theaux and Lori Reynolds, both of Midland, Becky Ulmer and Kathy Streater, both of Borger; two brothers, Charles Breeding of Libby, Mont., and Earl Breeding of Odessa; and 26 grandchildren.

Lelburn Langston

KERMIT — Services for Lelburn E. Langston, 43, of Kermit, brother of Christine Roberts of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at United Pentecostal Church with the Rev. J.D. Notgrass officiating. Burial will follow in Kermit Cemetery, directed by Cooper Funeral Home.

He died Sunday in a Kermit hospital.

Langston was born May 12, 1939, in Kermit. He was married to Lyda Stodghill on Dec. 31, 1961, in Kermit. He was an operator for El Paso Natural Gas. He was a member of United Pentecostal Church and a veteran.

Other survivors include his wife, two sons, his mother, a brother and four sisters

E.G. Rogers

Services for E.G. "Pat" Rogers, 60, of Midland were Monday in St. Luke's United Methodist Church with Dr. Jarrell Sharp officiating. Burial was in Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Friday at Midland hospital.

frostbite.

"People out here aren't used to a lot of cold weather and will get frostbite," he said. "Parents should keep children's hands dry. When the mittens get wet, they should be changed."

Besides staying indoors, another preventive measure to avoid a slip or fall is to clean off walkways immediately after a snowfall before it has time to turn to slush and freeze.

However, older men who shovel snow should take precautions, according to Cochran.

"Coronaries are seen in middle-aged men who get out there and become overheated while shoveling snow," Cochran said. "They should be careful not to work up a sweat."

School salary legislation prefiled

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation which repeals a section of the Texas Education Code prohibiting salaries for trustees of independent school districts has been prefiled by Rep. Paul Ragsdale of Dallas.

HB 264 would allow the matter of trustee salaries to be decided on a local option basis, an aide said. Trustees may be compensated an amount in relation to the legally required duties and responsibilities of the office, according to the bill.

Currently, trustees are compensated for expenses but are not paid salaries, the aide said. "The basic idea is to make it a local issue which is up to the voters," he said.

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 12 5/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%. *Principle and Interest only is calculated in monthly payment.
