

Pampa's ambulance in hock

By JEFF LANGLEY
Staff Writer

Metropolitan Ambulance Service of Pampa is still in business today, but sale of the company is pending, according to an ambulance official.

The private, emergency ambulance company has no phone, no communications pagers, one ambulance remains impounded by a local car dealer, and a local tire company wants to be paid for new tires and repairs to an ambulance during 1981.

All of the equipment was lost due to non-payment of bills, according to the companies who want to be paid.

The emergency phone at Metropolitan was yanked by the phone company April 22.

When the emergency ambulance number, listed on the inside cover of the Pampa phone book, is dialed, an operator intercepts the call. A recording then informs the caller that the number has been changed. The number that the recorded message now lists for Metropolitan is actually the number of the Pampa Police Department.

Police must now relay emergency calls to Metropolitan over two-way radio.

Police officers also have served as ambulance drivers during Metropolitan's current financial crisis.

Metropolitan has a joint contract with the city and county for ambulance runs. Taxpayers subsidize the ambulance service with $5,600 per month.

The ambulance contract expires in September, but some have questioned whether or not the company is presently holding up its end of the ambulance contract, since the service does not have a phone.

The city has not officially discussed the ambulance situation during Metropolitan's financial crisis. Since Metropolitan's phone was jerked, the city commission has not placed the issue on its agenda for consideration.

Tuesday's commission meeting, which will be commissioner's third regular meeting since Metropolitan lost its phone, does not list the issue on the agenda.

"There has been lots of discussion, but it has not been placed on the agenda," City Manager Mack Wofford said today.

However, Wofford hinted that Tuesday's commission agenda could be amended to consider the ambulance contract.

Gray County Commissioners, who pay an equal share of the ambulance subsidy, also have not officially discussed the ambulance contract, but County Judge Carl Kennedy previously

Woman killed

Charred furniture in a lonely living room is all that's left after a fire killed the occupant of this Pampa house

Sunday night. Neighbors worked to put out the blaze, but it was too late to save the woman inside.

Fire kills Pampa woman; While neighbors try to help

By DAVID CHRISTENSON
Staff Writer

Carol M. Capell, 70, 1013 N. Wells, died Sunday in a fire at her home Sunday at about 6:50 a.m., despite efforts by neighbors to stop the blaze.

A neighbor, Irvin Down, reported the fire while another neighbor, Pat Mitchell, attempted to quench the fire with a garden hose.

According to fire officials, the fire was primarily confined to the living room sofa, where Capell was lying. Officials believe it was caused by a dropped cigarette. Smoke damage was reported in the rest of the house.

Mitchell managed to stop the flame from spreading, but was unable to get close enough to the blaze to reach Capell because of heat and smoke.

Fire officials said Mitchell "caught it in the incipient stage" and firemen took only 40 minutes to finish putting out the fire.

Capell was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge. She was reportedly the sole tenant in the house.

Graveside services for Capell will be at 2:30 p.m. today in Claude Cemetery with the Rev. Joseph Turner, pastor of First Presbyterian Church of Pampa, officiating. Burial will be under the direction of Smith Funeral Home of Panhandle.

Booby-trapped car kills 14 in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A bomb placed under the seat of a French Embassy secretary's car was blown up by remote control seconds after she drove into the embassy compound today, killing 14 people in the latest of a string of terrorist attacks on the embassy and its staff, police said.

The bomb was detonated by a remote control device in the hands of "one or more people watching the car" from no more than 55 yards away, said a police spokesman, who asked not to be named in accordance with government regulations.

The bomb exploded at 8:10 a.m., when dozens of people are usually lining up at the embassy gate to apply for visas. Rescue workers on the scene and local security guards said at least two of those killed were embassy guards and many of the others were visa applicants.

The driver of the car, a French widow who worked as a secretary in the embassy's economics section, was among those killed when the powerful bomb went off. She was identified as Anna Cosmidis by embassy spokesman Andre Janier, and a police spokesman said she presumably was unaware of the bomb. Janier said 10 people were killed and 20 injured. But Lebanese police put the total at 14 dead and 15 injured.

At least 10 of the victims were blown to pieces by the explosion, the police spokesman said. Severed limbs were lying near the wreckage of the car. Within five minutes of the blast, several blood-covered survivors had been carried into private cars and rushed to hospitals.

Pools of blood covered the sidewalk at the embassy compound gate. Young men with tears streaming down their faces were helped away from the scene, and a middle-aged man searching for a missing friend screamed in Arabic, "By the Prophet Mohammed, help me!"

Janier said Mrs. Cosmidis was well-known to the guards at the gate.

"The guards gave her permission to enter the compound because her car is recognized and everyone knows it," he said.

Both Janier and Lebanese police said they did not know who was responsible for the bombing. But Agence France Presse, the French news agency, said it received a telephone call 50 minutes after the blast in which the anonymous caller said "all explosions" in West Beirut in recent days were the work of "The Holy War Organization."

The group has not been heard of before. The caller said there would be more bombings "in revenge for our people in Tripoli and the southern district in Beirut." Both Tripoli, a city in northern Lebanon, and the Beirut district have been scenes of fighting between local militias in recent weeks.

The bomb exploded at 8:10 a.m., when dozens of people are usually lining up at the embassy gate to apply for visas. Rescue workers on the scene and local security guards said at least two of those killed were embassy guards and many of the others were visa applicants.

Public asked for views on possible electric rate increase

By JEFF LANGLEY
Staff Writer

Pampa City Commissioners will consider accepting a rate increase request from Southwestern Public Service Company and will hear final reading of an ordinance calling for a special election to amend the city charter at their regular meeting at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall.

A public hearing to discuss the proposed electric rate price hike will be held before the city considers the request Tuesday. Pampa City Manager Mack Wofford said anyone who wants to comment about the proposed increase will be given an opportunity to speak at the commission meeting.

A steering committee of 66 Texas cities, including Pampa, recommended that the cities accept a nine-percent average increase in the price of electricity. The figure reflects a compromise between SPS and the cities.

The electric company previously requested an average increase of 12.7 percent.

Under the proposal the average residential customer's bill would increase 10.68 percent.

The electric price hike would become effective July 1.

The Public Utilities Commission of Texas in Austin must give final approval of SPS's rate request.

The special election to amend the Pampa City Charter will be held August 14.

Commissioners want to amend the charter five ways:

- allow commissioners to make appointments to commission or mayoral vacancies;
- change ward boundaries to reflect current population;
- allow commissioners to move within the city limits, while retaining their old ward positions on the commission;

- index expenditures required for competitive bids to state levels;
- require bonding for certain city employees.

Wofford said the city's effort to call the charter change election must be approved by the Justice Department.

In other action commissioners will consider nine zoning changes, recommended by the Planning and Zoning Commission, and will consider payment of city bills.

British take Falklands airstrip: Thatcher rejects Pope's offer

An Argentine soldier is taken prisoner by a Royal Marine after the capture of Port San Carlos over the weekend.

The Associated Press British newspapers reported today that commandos seized a heavily defended Argentine airstrip on the Falkland Islands, and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher rejected Pope John Paul II's call for a truce.

In Falkland Channel, British seamen were battling to save their frigate from fires ignited by Argentine rockets. The frigate, which was not identified, was hit in another day of fierce air battles over the islands Sunday as British forces struggled to expand the foothold they established at Port San Carlos.

Mrs. Thatcher told the pope Britain will not stop fighting for the Falklands until Argentina withdraws from the British colony it seized April 2.

"Our cause is just," she told the pontiff in a message delivered by Britain's ambassador to the Vatican.

John Paul asked leaders of Argentina and Britain over the weekend to call a cease-fire. He is to visit Britain on Friday, the first such trip by a pope. Vatican officials said the six-day trip may be cut short but not canceled despite the Falklands conflict.

In Brussels, eight of 10 Common Market nations voted at Britain's request to extend indefinitely the week-long renewal of sanctions against Argentina scheduled to expire tonight. As in the previous extension Ireland and Italy abstained but pledged not to undermine the sanctions by buying more Argentine goods than normal.

Britain's Defense Ministry refused to confirm the newspaper report its forces had recaptured Goose Green airstrip, 20 miles south of Britain's invasion site of San Carlos on East Falkland. An estimated 1,000 Argentine troops were dug in around Goose Green.

Energy Department dismantling plan ready

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of behind-the-scenes maneuvering, the Reagan administration is finally sending Congress its plan for dismantling the Energy Department.
 Elimination of the Cabinet agency created under the Carter administration had been made a campaign issue by Ronald Reagan, who contended government involvement had only worsened the nation's energy problems.
 Reagan was scheduled to sign a letter transmitting his dismantlement plan to Congress at a White House ceremony today attended by several key senators and Cabinet members.
 The plan, which transfers most Energy Department functions to the Commerce Department, is a good deal different from the package the administration first unveiled in December. That proposal met with heated opposition, particularly from Republican committee chairmen in the Senate who have jurisdiction over the current Energy Department.

 The administration has spent the past five months trying to hammer out a plan that would satisfy their objections.
 One of those most opposed was Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, chairman of the Armed Services Committee. Tower led a group of senators who sent the administration a letter questioning whether Commerce was the proper agency to handle nuclear weapons production for the military, which makes up about half of the Energy Department's budget.
 Tower complained that the weapons program would be buried in the business-oriented Commerce Department.

 To keep that from happening, the new plan puts the weapons program under a deputy secretary of commerce for defense production. Under the plan, that new deputy secretary would have equal stature with a deputy secretary who will supervise all other old Energy Department functions.
 DOE officials said the various changes have satisfied the key Republicans who had objected, including Sens. James McClure of Idaho, Robert Packwood of Oregon and William Roth of Delaware.
 Roth, chairman of the governmental affairs committee, has agreed to sponsor the measure, which is given a good chance of Senate passage.

Three students win top music honors in banquet Saturday

By DAVID CHRISTENSON
 Staff Writer
 Crispin Bradsher, Cheryl Whitmarsh and Larry Sturgill were awarded scholarships at the high school's Pride of Pampa Band banquet Saturday evening in the M.K. Brown Memorial Auditorium.

Bradsher and Whitmarsh were awarded the Nona S. Payne band scholarships of $1,000 apiece. Bradsher was also recognized for his work as 1981-1982 band council president.
 Bradsher is planning to major in music at Southwestern State University in Weatherford, Okla. Whitmarsh is planning to major in music business at West Texas State University.

Larry Sturgill was awarded the $200 John Phillip Sousa Scholarship. Sturgill was also selected as outstanding private brass student.

In other awards, Chris Leonard was voted outstanding marcher, Dinna Orina was voted outstanding girl musician, and Mark Loeffler was chosen as the outstanding boy musician. These award winners were selected by the votes of other band students.

Loeffler was also picked as the outstanding private student in woodwind instruments.

Loeffler and Wendy Orina were presented with a commendation for their achievement as All-State Band musicians. Two hundred all-state students are chosen from the top two percent of high school band members in Texas, and perform for the Texas Music Educators Association convention in San Antonio each year.

China is moving towards Russia

PEKING (AP) — Three years after China's tilt toward the United States, the world's most populous nation is ready to make limited improvements in its relations with the Soviet Union.

Trade, cultural and sports relations are some of the areas in which modest progress is expected.

China wants to position itself between the superpowers and chart an independent course as the standard bearer of the Third World, Chinese and foreign analysts say.

China clearly is not playing a "Russian card" because of Sino-American differences over Taiwan, say the analysts. And China is not aiming for fundamental improvement in its political ties with the Soviet Union, they add.

The Chinese have been wary of Soviet overtures for normalization and border talks, saying deeds of reconciliation, not sentiments of socialist brotherhood, will determine future Sino-Soviet relations. They still call the Soviet Union the "sower of discord" and the major threat to world peace.

At the same time, China for months has been distancing itself from the United States in foreign policy, especially toward the Third World.

It still regards the United States as a political friend and a strategic and economic partner. But it has been reassessing U.S. strength and the congruity of Sino-American interests since the re-emergence of the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.
 China now denounces both the United States and the Soviet Union as "superpowers" and "hegemonists," terms once reserved exclusively for the Soviets. It denounces both U.S. support for Britain and Soviet support for Argentina in the Falklands crisis.

"It is saying, in effect, 'a pox on both your houses,'" said one European analyst. "China wants to be part of neither camp but a power in the Third World."

While distancing itself from the United States, China's leaders apparently have decided to improve relations with the Soviet Union in specific areas. The reason, they say, is to create a better environment for China's modernization, to reduce border tensions and to take advantage of the Siberian market.

China has agreed to increase trade with the Soviet Union 47 percent this year. It also agreed to trade across the Manchurian border to reduce border tensions and improve the market for its light industrial goods. In February, China initiated a new trans-border container shipping agreement.

A limited, unofficial exchange of scholars appears to be increasing. China has invited the first Soviet track and field team in 16 years to compete in Peking in an international meet next month. Last Friday, Chinese and Soviet officials honored two dead Soviet painters at a gathering in Peking.

"There's no love lost between the Chinese and the Soviets," said one Western observer. "But the Chinese are very pragmatic. Why not a limited, non-political improvement that benefits the Chinese and frees them from focusing their energies on the Sino-Soviet border?"

Reagan urges house to okay GOP budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, having won a 1983 budget blueprint to his liking from the Senate, is pressuring the House to ignore Democratic leaders and follow the same course.

But as the House begins voting today to sort through a dizzying array of seven separate budget outlines and 68 amendments, neither Democratic nor Republican leaders can claim a majority for the plans they are pushing.

They agree, however, that it won't be easy getting votes for the election-year decisions necessary to keep the 1983 budget deficit below $182 billion. That's the deficit that congressional and administration experts say could probably be expected without action on Capitol Hill.

The plans before the House contain "no first choices for political people. All of the choices are second choices at best — third, fourth and fifth choices more likely," says House Budget Committee Chairman James R. Jones, D-Okla.

The Democratic-controlled House is beginning work as the Republican-controlled Senate has completed action on a $784 billion 1983 budget outline.

After a week of often bitter partisan debate, the Senate voted 49-43 along party lines Friday night for a package that calls for tax increases of $23 billion in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1 and $107 billion over three years.

It also projects deficits of $116 billion in 1983; $92 billion in 1984 and $65 billion in 1985.

Reagan, in a radio address to the nation Saturday, said the Senate had taken "responsible action," adding, "I would have liked more reductions in spending but at least it's another step in the right direction — the direction we started to go last year."

The president also told his listeners that if they "want interest rates to come down and the economy to get going," they should tell their congressmen to vote for a budget outline drafted by House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois.

Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., replied that the proposals Reagan supports, including the administration's planned military buildup, will give the nation the "economic equivalent of Vietnam."
 Under a complicated set of parliamentary ground rules the House adopted for the budget debate, there will be three main contenders from among the budget alternatives under consideration.

School board - to consider roofing bids

The Pampa school board will consider only two items at its regular meeting at 5 p.m. Tuesday in the Carver Educational Center.

The board will consider bids for two items.

The first bid involves major roofing projects at several Pampa schools. The board wants two separate bids for the roofing work: one bid with standard materials, and one bid using urethane.
 The board said previously that an energy study of the roofing materials will be considered in awarding the bids.

The second bid involves copier paper for the 1982-83 budget. Total price of the copier paper is $33,610. Two firms have been recommended for the paper bid, Graham Paper Company and Connell Stationary Company. — Jeff Langley

Mexico phone rates change

Long distance telephone rates for calls to many Mexican cities have been changed by a restructuring of telephone "distance bands," Gary Stevens of Southwestern Bell reports.

Distance bands are based on the mileage from the U.S. border to the city called. The restructuring, Stevens said, is to bring charges for calls to Mexico in line with similar distance calls within the United States, and to more accurately reflect the company's expenses in making the call.

Under the restructuring, rates for calls to points within 430 miles of the border will increase, while calls to more distant Mexican areas will be lower.

Off-peak discounts on time past the first three minutes is also part of the rate changes, Stevens added. After the first three minutes, the charge on calls between 7 and 11 p.m. weekdays and 7 a.m. and 11 p.m. Saturdays drops by 40 percent. From 11 p.m. Saturday until 5 p.m. Sunday, the rate after the first three minutes gets a 60 percent discount.

The initial three-minute charge is not affected by the discounts.

Tents to remain part of inmate housing

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas prison officials, attempting to reduce a swelling inmate population, could be battling the same problem by mid-1984 unless changes are made in the next 21 months, a study says.

The study was developed by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's office and published in Sunday's editions of The Houston Post.

The Texas Department of Corrections officials closed the prison doors May 10 in an effort to comply with a federal judge's order for sweeping reforms. The prison was reopened a week later, but TDC officials imposed restrictions on 16 urban counties.

The study said U.S. Army tents now used to house 4,100 inmates will be used in varying degrees through the summer of 1984 to help ease overcrowding.

The tents were introduced a year ago as a temporary measure to reduce the number of inmates kept in a cell after U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice ordered sweeping changes in the prison system. At that time, officials predicted the tents would not be needed more than a year.

According to the study, the TDC will be forced to house another 120 inmates in tents next month. By October, the study said, there will be 2,000 more inmates admitted to the TDC's 19 units than bed space available in permanent facilities.

Last week, Gov. Bill Clements said he expected construction programs to furnish housing for 5,300 more inmates by Sept. 1, allowing inmates in tents to be moved to permanent facilities and leaving room for another 1,200 prisoners.

But the study said that even with tents, massive construction programs and controlled admission the TDC may face another population crunch with 21 months.

The study projected the population in February 1984 could exceed bed capacity by at least 1 inmate. That would put the state again in violation of Justice's order to provide at least 40 square feet of living space per inmate.

According to the TDC building program, about 8,400 beds will be added by September 1983 and another 1,244 by June 1984. However, officials projected there would be 2,570 more inmates than available bed space by September 1983 and 4,926 by June 1984.

The figures assumed the TDC will not allow the prison population to exceed bed capacity, which includes tents now being used; and that the TDC would admit 400 inmates more than are discharged, an aide told the Post.

Special session takes up tax, college building

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — State lawmakers headed back to town today to abolish a tax that doesn't really exist and to find a way to pay for more college buildings. But before they go home they also may be looking for money for prison cells.

Gov. Clements ordered today's second special session of the 67th Legislature but was waiting for a state prison board report that, he said, would determine whether he will open the session to the topic of prison construction.

So far the only topic on the agenda, set by Clements, is repeal of the 10-cent state property tax. The 1979 Legislature said the tax should be collected on a .0001 assessment ratio. That ratio made the tax too small to bother collecting.

The state prison situation boiled into a crisis recently when overcrowding forced officials to close the gates to new inmates. The prisons have been reopened on a limited-admission policy.

W.J. Estelle, state prison director, said the special session could help out by approving $48 million for a new prison.

The property tax matter got special attention after several state universities dependent on the tax for construction money sued, saying the Legislature could not abolish a tax set up by the state constitution.

Clements, advised that the colleges probably would win the lawsuit, has told the Legislature to approve a constitutional amendment to kill the tax. The amendment would be passed on to voters in November.

If the tax is killed, Clements wants the special session to come up with a one-time "catch-up" fund to help the 17 non-Permanent University Fund colleges meet backed-up building needs.

Even if the Legislature focused only on tax repeal and a one-shot appropriation for 17 state colleges that need construction money, the session would take "probably a week," said Rep. Bill Presnal, D-Bryan.

Presnal had his House Appropriations Committee in session Friday to hear college presidents' what buildings they need. The Legislative Budget Board has recommended spending $160 million.

Legislators with pet projects want Clements add several items to the agenda. Clements legislative liaison, Jim Kaster, said he had seen such requests.

Sen. Walter Mengden, R-Houston, proposed initiative and referendum and a bill prohibiting "social promotions" in public schools.

Rep. Dan Kubiak, D-Rockdale, wants $5 million to fight fire ants. State employees want medical insurance coverage. And Rep. Bill Blythe

R-Houston, wants to offer a proposal giving Cle Lake City the right to disannex from Houston.

The cost of all this lawmaking would be $61.00 per day.

Legislators in June 5 primary runoffs also would rather be campaigning.

New trial ordered in 12-year-old smuggling case

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — A federal judge who granted a new trial to a man convicted of a drug conspiracy charge will be asked next week to release him on bond while the government decides if it will try the case again.

U.S. District Judge George Kazen on Saturday vacated the 1970 conviction of Richard Rumsel and ordered a new trial to begin July 5. Rumsel said he fled to Canada 12 years ago after he was wrongfully convicted on the charge.

Houston attorney Jim Moriarty, who represents Rumsel, said he will ask Kazen to set bond.

Rumsel said he fled to Canada 12 years ago to avoid serving a five-year sentence handed down by a Laredo jury after his conviction on a charge of conspiring to smuggle Mexican marijuana into Texas.

He was arrested at the New York-Canadian border last December as he was returning to his home in Ottawa from a business trip to New York.

Rumsel said during a hearing last month before Kazen that he was not involved in a conspiracy to smuggle nine pounds of marijuana into the United States.

"My opinion is pretty lengthy, and there were other issues considered, but the primary reason I'm setting aside the conviction and ordering a new trial is inadequacy of defense counsel," Kazen said.

Rumsel said during the hearing that he selected a defense attorney by "thumbing through the Yellow Pages."

The defendant's father said his son "is just tremendously elated" by Kazen's decision.

"This is the right step in the right direction," said Jack Rumsel of Omaha, Neb. "We're revived. We're new people."

Rumsel was charged with conspiracy to smuggle marijuana after a former friend from Dallas, Felix H. Tucker Jr., was arrested in March 1970 as he attempted to cross the Texas-Mexican border with nine pounds of marijuana hidden in his truck.

Tucker, who initially told authorities he had acted alone, later implicated Rumsel and testified against him in return for a probationary sentence.

Laredo lawyer Roger C. Rocha said at last month's hearing that he did not obtain copies of conflicting statements that Tucker made to U.S. Customs agents.

In December 1970, after Rumsel posted bond to appeal his conviction, he fled to Canada along with his infant son and wife. The appeal later was denied.

Rumsel changed his name to Eric Rumsel and began a new life in Canada by opening a successful ceramics supply business in Canada.

But Rumsel was stopped routinely at the border last December. Customs agents ran his name through a computer, found the outstanding warrant and arrested him.

Although federal prosecutors could not be reached for comment, Kazen said the government "certainly could choose" not to retry Rumsel.

Kazen noted that Rumsel were arrested today on a similar charge "not only would he have a clear shot for probation, the government probably wouldn't even prosecute it."

WAITING FOR ADOPTION CHANCE. Helen Hughs, who began waiting at noon Friday for her chance at adopting a baby from the Hope Cottage Children's Bureau in Dallas, was eighth in line today when the private agency opened its doors to take applications from the more than 60 couples waiting in line. Hopeful parents line up for chance at adoption DALLAS (AP) — Couples who lined up for a weekend wait to adopt a child — not just any homeless child, but a healthy white baby — were to get their chance at the Hope Cottage Children's Bureau today.

For the first time in two years, the private adoption agency was scheduled to open its adoption program by signing up the first 100 couples on a first-come, first-served basis. People started lining up Friday for a 72-hour wait to apply. By Sunday, hopeful parents in lawn chairs, many accompanied by their children, lined the walkway to the office building.

One couple brought a camper, another pitched a tent. About 67 couples took numbers and answered periodic roll calls to keep their places in line Sunday.

"The issue today is that all of these people want Anglo, healthy infants," said Sonja Romanowski, program director at the agency. "This is still the American dream. What's happening is that American reality is starting to come up more and more often."

Children with "special needs" — black, bi-racial, physically or emotionally handicapped, or older children — are available for adoption now. There's no need to stand in line to give these children homes, she said.

Ms. Romanowski said that about half of the 51 children placed last year were black, Mexican-American, or of mixed racial background.

But the number of available white infants is declining, she said, because most young or unmarried women keep their children today. Ten years ago, 80 percent to 90 percent of the 400 mothers annually served by the cottage relinquished their babies.

"Now, it's completely flopped, and of that 400, only 10 percent give up their children,"

Ms. Romanowski said.

Pam and Jim Hastings were first in line at 8 a.m. Friday, followed closely by Clifford and Barbara Bond, who brought a camper loaded with groceries.

In 1980, the Bonds stood in line to place an application. They eventually were rewarded with the adoption of a daughter, Meredith.

While waiting Sunday, the Bonds planned to celebrate Meredith's second birthday and make one wish. As Meredith blew out the candles on her birthday cake, the Bonds wished for a brother or sister for their blond, blue-eyed daughter.

"We think it's worth spending a few hours waiting in line during the weekend because it will cut months off the time we'll spend waiting for a brother or sister for Meredith," said Bond, a bank vice president. "People spend days in line waiting for (Dallas) Cowboys tickets. A child is certainly worth more than that."

The weekend vigil was just the beginning of the wait for a baby. Parents are interviewed and counseled before they are approved for a placement. Limits the couple places on the child — a preference for blond hair, a boy or girl — delays adoption. Ms. Romanowski said.

The children who will be placed have not been born yet, she said, because "our philosophy is that it's easier for adults to wait than for a child. We want to have a bank of families available."

Ms. Romanowski said that the agency generally restricts its adoptive homes to people in the Dallas area, or within two hours' driving distance.

The prospective parents also were restricted to couples who live in Dallas County, or the North Texas cities of Plano or Lewisville. Women had to be 21 to 40 years old, and men 21 to 45.

Farmers hope to import workers

BRIGHTON, Colo. (AP) — Area farmers have received permission from the federal government to bring several hundred "documented" farm workers from Mexico to fill temporary jobs — if United States citizens don't want the work.

The decision comes on the heels of "Operation Jobs," in which the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service rounded up several thousand illegal aliens in nine cities, including about 500 in Colorado, for deportation.

That effort was touted by the Reagan administration as an effort to free jobs for U.S. citizens.

Farmers in Adams County told federal and state Job Service officials they need more workers in their fields than they can hire locally.

Dave Rangel, a Job Service Center employee here, said Sunday that farmers must demonstrate a need to import the workers — and then will have to wait about three months to make sure that a national recruitment process doesn't turn up U.S. citizens willing to take the jobs.

He said about 10 Brighton-area farmers hope to employ about 350 Mexican workers in temporary jobs this year. Already, he said, about 200 Mexican residents are working in the area.

"The practice of importing 'legal' Mexican farm workers began four years ago in Colorado, he said, but Brighton is the only farming area still hiring such workers.

He said the Mexican residents will be paid $3.93 per hour, and farmers also must provide them with adequate housing, visas, passports and transportation. It costs a farmer about $163 per worker to bring a

Texas congressmen considering various federal budget proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of the Conservative Democratic Forum have joined with House Republicans to draw up a 1983 federal budget proposal, but many of the "Boll Weevils" seem to like a couple of other propositions better.

Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, of Stamford is the chairman of the Boll Weevils and one of five of its members who sat in on the five arduous days of meetings in which was forged the "bipartisan" compromise to be offered by Rep. DeLatta, R-Ohio.

But he and Rep. Kent Hance, D-Texas, of Lubbock also are listed as supporters of the "Balanced Budget Substitute," which will be offered by Rep. John Roussetot, R-Calif., and several colleagues, including Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, of Houston.

"And I like the Miller proposal. It has a lot of merit. I very well might vote for it," Stenholm adds.

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., is a liberal, but Stenholm finds much to like about his plan, which has been called the "Pay As You Go" budget.

Miller said lawmakers from opposite ends of the political spectrum — conservative Rep. Sam Hall, D-Texas, of Marshall and liberal Mo Udall, D-Ariz. — have told him they like his proposition.

"Several Boll Weevils have said if my proposal is still alive at the end, they would support it over the Latta substitute," Miller said.

Boll Weevils have shown a strong dislike for the proposal their party leadership prefers, the budget reported out of the House Budget Committee by its chairman, Rep. Jim Jones, D-Okl. They also oppose a version sponsored by Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., which amends the Jones budget by giving more money to social programs.

Under the floor rules for the budget debate this week, members can vote for or against four substitute amendments and still have a chance to vote later on the Latta, Panetta or Jones proposals.

Voting for one of the four early versions will let lawmakers go on the record at no risk for a balanced budget, which most members say they want. If it passed, they still could vote for another proposal later. Under the rules, if more than one budget proposal passes, the last proposal to do so would be the winner.

entitlement checks at 1982 levels for the 1983 fiscal year. This year's cost of living raise for Social Security benefits would be implemented as scheduled.

"We have an overriding problem in this country that overrides Democrats and Republicans. Americans say they want to buy cars and new homes. The reason they don't is because of the high interest rates," Archer said.

"If we don't bring interest rates down dramatically, and soon, we are facing high unemployment and even greater numbers of bankruptcies. The greatest stumbling block to reducing interest rates and putting Americans back to work is the incredible prospect of a $100 billion deficit in fiscal year 1983."

It won't be easy to balance the federal budget in 1983, "but I am convinced we in Congress have no other choice. If interest rates don't come down, our problems are only beginning," Archer added.

To preserve the third year of the tax cut, as much as possible, and to get more military spending, the Boll Weevils yielded to the demand by moderate Republican "Gypsy Moths" for more money for social programs.

The proposal Archer backs would balance the budget next year, with a need for $20 billion in new revenues. Miller's would result in a $109.4 billion deficit next year, a $37.4 billion deficit in 1984 and a $27 billion surplus in 1985.

Archer said the proposal he has joined on with Roussetot and others would freeze all federal salaries and

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

Information Act needs no tuning

Congress set out last year to do some fine-tuning of the Freedom of Information Act, but the bill now before the Senate Judiciary Committee goes clear off the dial. In attempting to make the act less vulnerable to abuse, the bill would seriously undermine its usefulness as a tool for the public to keep tabs on the government.

The FOI Act will never be perfect, because government agencies will always quarrel with journalists, scholars, investigators, and others over what the public has a right to know and what the government has a right to keep secret for one reason or another. Since the Act was passed in 1966, people on both ends of the tug-of-war have compiled their lists of objections to its provisions and procedures.

Businesses have complained that inside information they supply to regulatory agencies can be obtained by competitors under the Act. Agencies have complained about the expense of complying with requests for information. Above all, the CIA and the FBI have complained that the Act can force them to disclose information damaging to national security or law enforcement.

More than a few of the complaints from the government side strike us as warranted. The law now permits a judge to review sensitive documents and decide whether an agency is justified in classifying them as secret and denying an FOI request to see them. That system seems to be working. The government seems to be suffering more harm and embarrassment from deliberate or accidental leaks of information than through the FOI act.

As for the costs, the Senate bill may satisfy that problem by allowing agencies to impose fees for filling extensive requests for information, thus discouraging frivolous use of the Act. It is in the area of national security and law enforcement that the bill swings the pendulum too far in the direction of protecting government secrecy.

Under the bill, the Attorney General would be empowered to make entire categories of information exempt from the Act — "terrorism, organized crime, or foreign counterintelligence." As sensitive as those areas may be, this would relieve the Justice Department of any need to establish that release of information in those broad categories would somehow be harmful.

Further, federal agencies which may now withhold information that would "interfere with enforcement proceedings" would be able to withhold any information "relevant to enforcement proceedings." This is an invitation to build a fence around files as encompassing as one's definition of "relevant" can make it. Under the present law, an agency can withhold information that "would disclose" a confidential source. The bill would protect information that would "tend to disclose" a source, allowing an agency like the FBI to conceal aspects of an investigation that may be several steps removed from the identity of an informant.

We find no fault with the bill's attempt to deal with the problem of foreign agents who pose as journalists or scholars to use the FOI Act to probe for information in sensitive areas of the U.S. government. It would give an agency the right to question on whose behalf an individual is making an FOI request.

The Freedom of Information Act establishes that the government must have a bona fide reason to withhold information from the public it serves. There is nothing wrong with that principle. The Senate, however, is threatening to amend the Act in a way that would allow agencies to hide behind smokescreens of excuses to avoid compliance with legitimate requests for information.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has been attempting to work out compromises with civil libertarians, journalists and other critics of its bill. Unless some of its objectionable features are changed, the bill would represent a sharp setback for the cause of public access to information the public deserves to know.

Middle East developments

Contrasting Israeli actions sent a dramatic message to the Arabs and to the world recently. Even as the Begin government took the final steps to complete Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula under the terms of its peace settlement with Egypt, Israeli planes were bombing Palestinian strongholds south of Beirut, Lebanon.

The Israeli action adds tension to an already tense situation, a chief danger being Syria and Israel could come to blows. But in the juxtaposition of striking the PLO with forcibly evicting Israeli zealots from the Sinai, Prime Minister Menachem Begin also communicated with his troublesome domestic front.

These are difficult, trying times for the Israelis. Many of them believe Begin made a bad bargain at Camp David. They feel more insecure than ever with their final withdrawal from the insulating expanse of the Sinai, which provided an essential margin for defense after the surprise Egyptian attack in 1973. To the north, the PLO and occupying Syrian troops are posing what Israel sees as a serious military threat.

Moderate Arabs, on their part, are angry about what they see as Israeli aggression. And they blame the United States for backing Israel.

In the occupied West Bank terrorism and disorder are weakening hope for an autonomy that could provide maximum freedom for West Bank Arabs while assuring future security for Israel.

The Israelis share a special feeling these days of loneliness in the final Sinai pull-out. With President Carter out of office and President Anwar Sadat assassinated, Prime Minister Begin alone remains of the original Camp David cast to carry out its terms. Israelis are naturally worried that Egypt's new government under President Hosni Mubarak could become hostile once it repossesses the Sinai.

But in their better moments, the Israelis can believe that Egypt will abide by the peace settlement in its own best interest and that, with the huge Egyptian army out of the war equation, Israel no longer faces extinction from any combination of Arabs.

Considering how little influence the United States can exert over the PLO and Syria, the continued mobilization of military strength in Lebanon promises to be the flashpoint for the next Middle Eastern conflict. U.S. pressure on Israel alone cannot avert this clash, which must be seen as but an extension of the state of war that has never ceased to exist between the PLO, Syria and Israel.

For the immediate future, therefore, the most constructive role for the United States, along with understanding Israel's problems, would be to cooperate in fulfilling the Camp David provision for a Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank. There will be no hope for this without compromise by the Palestinians as well as the Israelis.

As intractable as the West Bank problems are, they at least are well-defined and well focused, compared with the dangerously complex situation in Lebanon. There may never be a better time than right now for Israel, Egypt and the United States to renew the Camp David process and collaborate closely in some mutually acceptable West Bank arrangement.

By ROBERT WALTERS

EMMAUS, Pa. — "We don't have any corporate planes," says Robert J. Teufel, president of the thriving publishing firm based here. "But we have more corporate tractors than anybody in the business."

That's not the only distinction enjoyed by Rodale Press, Inc., an unconventional yet highly successful company whose profitability is exceeded only by its dedication to physical fitness and personal self-sufficiency through organic gardening and farming, do-it-yourself home improvement, solar energy, natural food and vitamin therapy.

"We're working toward helping people become more self-reliant, to take control of their lives and to decrease their dependence on agribusiness and the medical profession," says Jan Hooker-Haring, a Rodale spokeswoman.

The goal is self-reliance

Promotion of a constantly growing agenda of public policy goals is far more than a futile windmill-tilting exercise for the company, which last year reported $98 million worth of gross sales, a marked increase from its 1980 income of $80 million.

Rodale's six magazines and two newsletters have a combined paid circulation of 5 million. In addition, it publishes 40 to 50 new books annually and last year sold 3.5 million of these volumes.

The oldest of these magazines is Organic Gardening, founded in 1942 by J.I. Rodale, who zealously promoted the belief that food would be far more nutritious — and could be produced efficiently — if growers eschewed the use of artificial fertilizers and chemical pesticides and herbicides.

For decades, farmers and agronomists belittled that approach as unfeasible if not ludicrous. Two years ago, however, the U.S. Department of Agriculture produced a report that cautiously endorsed organic farming.

The concept needs more study, the USDA report said, but it holds the potential to "produce the necessary quantity and quality of food and fiber without adversely affecting our soil resources and environment."

Organic Gardening has 1.4 million subscribers, surpassed among Rodale magazines only by Prevention, with a circulation of 2.4 million and a tradition of promoting vitamins, minerals and other food supplements as the secret of good health.

Those claims, long disputed by nutritionists, are quietly being toned down by Rodale Press, a company that has become increasingly respectable as outsiders accept more of its once-unconventional notions while it abandons the last vestiges of the often eccentric philosophy of its late founder.

Other magazines and their circulations include New Shelter, a do-it-yourself monthly, 625,000; Bicycling, 30,000; Spring, a just-launched women's monthly, 350,000; and New Farm, 75,000.

Those magazines differ from other periodicals in one important respect: every recipe, home-improvement project and gardening suggestion carried in their pages must meet rigorous standards imposed by experts in Rodale's workshops, research kitchens, greenhouses and fields scattered throughout this community in east-central Pennsylvania.

The centerpiece of Rodale's research operations is a sprawling 305-acre farm near the small town of Maxatawny, Pa., where dozens of specialists work in the areas of agronomy, horticulture, nutrition and aquaculture.

Their goal, says Rodale, is "to discover, perfect and implement new systems for growing, processing, storing and distributing food — systems that are energy-efficient, economical, ecologically sound, healthful and practical."

That includes everything from "vertical gardens," specially constructed by Rodale researchers for big-city apartment dwellers, to 12-foot-wide circular tanks designed for suburbanites willing to try backyard catfish farming.

Elsewhere on the farm, extensive experiments are being conducted with amaranth, an obscure plant indigenous to Central America, that is being touted as a high-protein, high-fiber grain resistant to heat and drought. Amaranth is not only nutritious but has "a sweet, nutty taste," says Rodale.

It's all part of an extraordinary program to enhance the world's food supply. "We're in a game with nature," says Robert Rodale, the company's chairman and son of its founder, "and nature bats last."

Firmness, not fear

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN

The outbreak of fighting in the South Atlantic forces Western nations to consider the moral contest of policy decisions. Indeed Western countries are considering this matter in relation to nuclear defenses against threatened aggression.

The strict pacifist view is that war is never justified. However, Western nations, with their Judeo-Christian background, long have rejected that view. Today, to be sure, pacifism is being preached by groups that in effect have revived the old "Better Red Than Dead" slogan of the 1950s. These groups are presenting a litany of the horrors of nuclear conflict in order to convince people in the West that they should not attempt to provide a nuclear deterrent to Soviet military power.

Historically, Western societies have subscribed to the doctrine of the "just war" advanced by St. Augustine.

Resistance to Nazi aggression in World War II certainly fitted St. Augustine's description of a "just war." Had the pure pacifist position prevailed in the 1940s, much of the world would have been turned into an Auschwitz. The entire Jewish population of the world would have been exterminated by Hitler in a global holocaust.

The London Times recently addressed the subject of the moral context of defense policy, pointing out that "the Christian sanction which legitimizes the use of force to repel aggression against one set of neighbors is that it would lead to a lesser evil, when the greater evil is that more suffering would ensue from a failure to resist that aggression." It added that "it is not therefore an exception to the rule of loving thy neighbor, so much as a part of the rule itself."

It is well to consider such matters because people become confused in the world of danger in which they live today. No sensible leader seeks war if it can be avoided in an honorable way and with security preserved. As the Times noted, "the one exception to the commandment 'Thou shalt not kill' is that which entitles people to participate in the preservation of security of their fellow men." Indeed, on a secular level, the United Nations charter recognizes the national right of self-defense.

It is this right that many of the unilateral disarmers seek to deny. They would make fear the guiding basis for human action. Certainly, there is much to fear today in a world of nuclear armaments, but man has always had to live with fearful threats. The Greeks who stood firm against the Persian hordes almost half a millennium before Christ were as much threatened with extinction as modern men in a nuclear age. In classical times, entire populations were destroyed by conquerors. Fortunately for Western civilization, the ancient Greeks stood firm against the Oriental despots. Freedom survived as the basic value of Western society.

If there is a moral obligation in the Western world, it is to resist those counsels of fear that call for yielding to contemporary despots.

ART BUCHWALD

A dry run

Unlike most people, I take Civil Defense very seriously. While the evacuation plan for Washington hasn't been fully worked out, I know what we're supposed to do. When the sirens go off, we're all to get in our automobiles, grab our credit cards and head for Lickety Split, West Virginia.

The other evening around five o'clock I decided to take a dry run. I came home and told my wife, who was in her housecoat and curlers.

"Get in the car, we're going to have a practice evacuation drill."

"Let me get dressed first."

"You don't have time. Do you think when the real thing happens, the Russians are going to wait for you to get all gussied up? Grab the credit cards and let's go."

"What credit cards should I take?" she asked.

"American Express, Visa, Master Charge and Diner's Club," I told her. "If we use up our credit line on one, we can switch to another."

"Do you have gas in the car?" she wanted to know.

"I have half a tank."

"That won't get us to Lickety Split."

"I'm sure if the real thing happens, the Civil Defense people will have emergency gasoline trucks all along the highway. After all, they can't expect us to evacuate Washington during an atomic bomb attack and not supply the petrol. Now stop talking and get in the car. We have to pretend this is not a drill."

As soon as we got near Key Bridge, we found cars bumper to bumper. We moved 10 feet every five minutes.

"What's going on?" my wife wanted to know.

"It's normal rush hour traffic," I explained.

"If it's like this now, what's it going to be like when they try to evacuate the entire city?"

"They'll have National Guardsmen on every corner to move the traffic along," I said. "It wouldn't surprise me if they emptied Washington in 20 minutes. The Soviets are in for a shocker when their missiles hit Ground Zero and find nobody there."

We made it over the Key Bridge in 45 minutes and moved smoothly along the George Washington Parkway at 25 miles an hour until we hit the Beltway and were slowed down to 15.

"I guess you didn't get out of town as fast as you had hoped," my wife said.

"That's because this is just a drill. When people know they're racing against a Soviet ICBM, they'll be doing 80 miles an hour."

"How do we get to Lickety Split?" my wife asked.

"I guess the Civil Defense people haven't put up their signs yet. Where's the map?"

"We don't have a map of West Virginia."

"I told you to always keep a map of West Virginia in the car. You never listen to anything I tell you."

She started to cry. "Let's go back."

"We can't go back until the Civil Defense people tell us it's safe. Washington, as far as this drill is concerned, has been completely vaporized."

By asking directions from 40 people, we finally got to Lickety Split six hours later.

It was dark, and no one was on the streets. We knocked on the door of a farmhouse. A man carrying a shotgun answered it.

"Hi," I said, "we're from Washington, D.C., and we were told to come to Lickety Split in case of an atomic attack. We thought we'd arrive early and look the place over just to see where we'd be comfortable."

"You got just one minute to get off my farm."

"Don't shoot. Haven't you heard from the federal Civil Defense people? You're supposed to open your homes to us until they can rebuild the capital."

"Thirty seconds."

"We'll sleep in the barn," I pleaded.

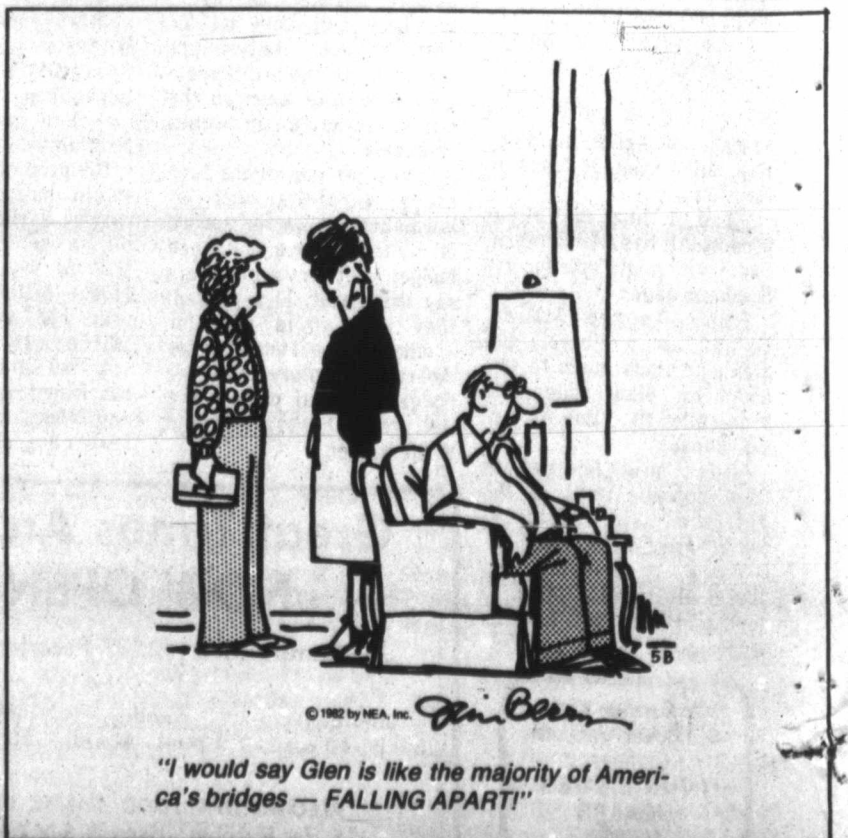

"We're not proud."

"Fifteen seconds."

My wife pulled me away from the door towards the car.

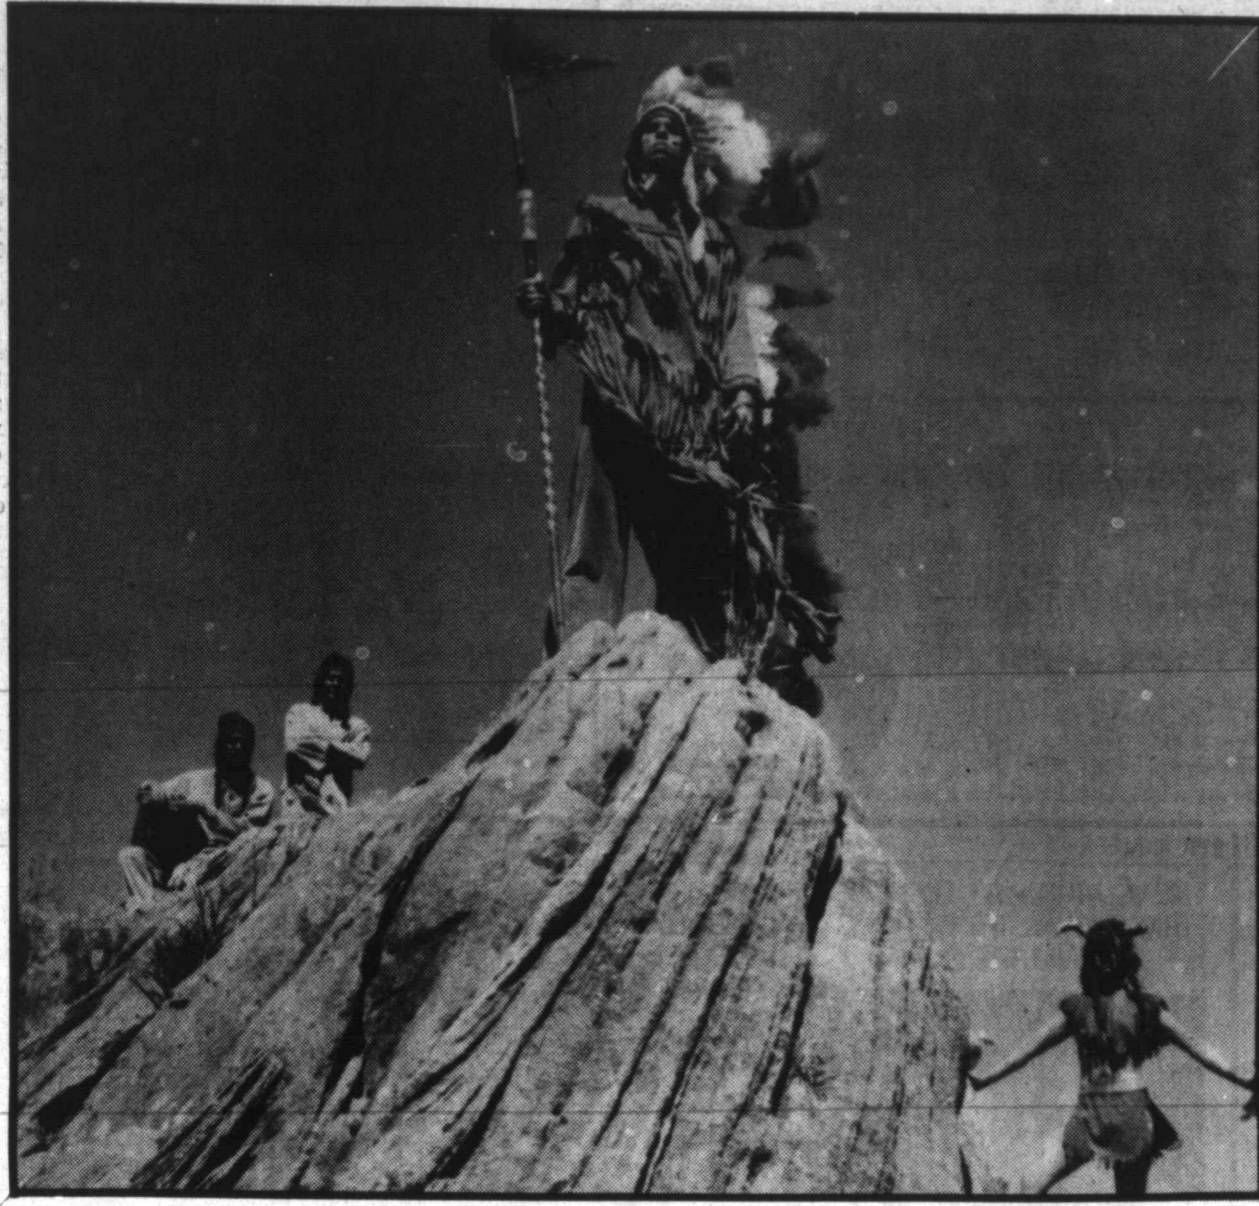

"I'm reporting you to the Federal Emergency Management Administration," I yelled at him. "You're making their atomic war evacuation plan into a farce."

Dear Abby Abby discusses her reruns

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Over the years readers have written to request a rerun of a certain letter or column. Many have told me that they have carried a favorite clipping around for so long that it has become yellowed with age and too worn to read. While some letters are valued for their humor, others are a painful reminder of the consequences of thoughtless behavior.

Twenty years ago I printed a letter signed "Too Late," and judging from the number of requests I've had to run it again, that letter obviously touched a sensitive nerve with a great number of Dear Abby readers.

"Too Late's" poignant plea says something about the way some folks treat their aging parents, and what it says is not very pretty:

"DEAR ABBY: I am the most heartbroken person on earth. I always found time to go everywhere else but to see my old gray-haired parents. They sat at home loving me just the same. It is too late now to give them those few hours of happiness I was too selfish and too busy to give, and now when I go visit their graves and look at the green grass above them, I wonder if God will ever forgive me for the heartaches I must have caused them.

"I pray that you will print this, Abby, to tell those who still have parents to visit them and show their love and respect while there is still time, for it is later than you think. — TOO LATE"

The above letter has been rerun in my column no less than half a dozen times, and each time it appeared, I've been deluged with requests to repeat it. Even though times have changed since I first started writing this column, many things have remained the same, and I find that some letters are as pertinent and helpful today as they were 25 years ago.

My purpose in writing this column has always been to provide my readers with information, advice and entertainment. In the past, I have repeated columns on Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's, Mother's Day and so forth, usually, but not always, identifying them as reruns. There have been other letters that in my opinion have carried an important message and also deserved to be repeated. The best explanation for repeating a special letter is this: Some personal problems have endless variations, and over 25 years I've seen hundreds of them. If I recall and have an "old" letter that addresses itself exceptionally well to one of those problems, I've republished it as the most effective way of illuminating an issue. My ultimate goal, after all, is to be maximally effective and interesting.

Because of the recent publicity given to the rerunning of published material, I shall make it a policy to identify all letters that have been previously published.

Appropos "repeats": Tomorrow I will rerun a column on the Living Will, a document a person can sign to let his loved ones know that should he ever become terminally ill with absolutely no hope for recovery, he will not be kept alive by artificial means.

Although I have publicized the Living Will at least a dozen times, I still get letters from readers saying they read about it "a few years ago" but paid little attention to it at the time, and now they need to know how to get one.

I am told that I have been responsible for putting the Living Will into the hands of nearly 5 million people both here and abroad. I consider this an important public service.

So while some readers may find reruns boring, dull or a waste of space, others find them invaluable. It's difficult to please all of the people all of the time, but if I please most of the people most of the time, then all the time and energy I have put forth in writing this column will have been worthwhile.

Loneliness -- the fear of love

BY DAVE BRUMMETT, MDiv

One of the most frequent complaints heard in this writer's office is that of loneliness, an inability to communicate those things which are important to us. Few individuals understand reasons for loneliness to occur and fewer learn to cope with loneliness.

Ira Tanner, in his book Loneliness, The Fear of Love, mentions degrees and levels of loneliness. There is loneliness of the unfamiliar. This includes new people, new surroundings when trust has not been established. Then, there is loneliness of the familiar when something, such as trust or communication has broken down.

It is important to remember and to believe that the opposite of loneliness is trust, the feeling of being related to someone significant on the trust level. Should trust diminish, a loss is confronted. This loss is in sharing oneself on an equal level, being confused with contradictions of expectations hearing one thing and seeing another behaved. Loneliness can surface in and out of relationships.

From time to time, some people find themselves lonely with others close to them. Sometimes these people have been dishonest with themselves and with someone else. Inner trust has been in conflict with oneself. That can present serious mental anguish: depression, guilt, suicidal ideation, grief and total isolation. To betray inner trust, a person forsakes and denies himself. Trust prevents mental jeopardy and loneliness.

Individuals who are dependent experience loneliness and promote good, mental health. The first is called closure, a clearing or cleansing of one's emotional state of mind. It is helpful to share with one's closest companions each day appreciations and resentments. Clear out the feelings. At most, if done regularly, thirty minutes will suffice. Most of us are surprised afterward. Sleep comes easy. The sun is not as dim the next morning. Yesterday has been finished and today is a new and unexperienced. The mind is clear and clean to appreciate the adventure.

Second, forgiveness is important. An important rule to follow is: I will not get even, even if I feel entitled to it - I will not find fault, nor will I blame. The ultimate blackmail in a relationship is to withhold forgiveness, which prompts loneliness.

Third, touch is healing. Yes, it's difficult to ask for touch, a hug, to be held. Everyone wants to be touched and few are honest enough to attain it. Touch is a free gift. It is an offering of oneself to prevent loneliness.

Fourth, presence is intimate. There is comfort in knowing someone is present. Their breathing can be heard, energy is radiant, silence is golden. Most of us feel safe, secure, relaxed in the intimacy of person's presence.

Fifth, in order to prevent loneliness, have fun, share spontaneous feelings out loud. Fun can happen when alone or with friends. Unless there are times of fun, loneliness penetrates. Keep time to enjoy oneself and life all around.

Sixth, spiritual acceptance is healthy. Some call it the sixth sense, holiness, Christianity or belief in God. Whatever it is called, it is an important 1-3 of the total human. Recognize your spirituality and loneliness will vanish. It is certain; help is present in spirit!

The final way to prevent loneliness is through sexual expression. People are know who express anger and other repressed feelings through sex. If the emphasis is on performance, divorced from feelings of appreciation, intimacy, deep feelings of loneliness can emerge. Sexuality is a normal expression one's unique individuality. Romance, holding hands, hugging, reproducing are sexual. The healing factor belongs to intimacy, two persons sharing equally and totally in human sexuality. It prevents loneliness.

In conclusion, begin to listen to the inner feelings or voice. Trust and claim your feelings, ideas. Stop running away from yourself and look within - change - become excited, give boredom away, don't let depression function anymore.

Begin to give to someone because of your worth. Trust yourself and others. Loneliness is the fear to love and to be loved. Love yourself! Love me! Loneliness cannot cope with love!

Darold Haddican named Ambassador of Goodwill

The Texas state poster child for the Muscular Dystrophy Association was commissioned Ambassador of Goodwill by Governor Bill Clements on May 18 in ceremonies at the State Capitol Building.

Seven-year-old Darold Gene Haddican, Jr. of Pampa, Texas will represent MDA statewide this year in missions of goodwill.

"When a group that supports MDA has a state convention, for example, Darold will be invited to attend," says Elaine Flynn, director of MDA's Central Texas District. "Darold will be doing an important job, so it's good that he's such an outgoing child. He's a little shy at first, but once he gets to know you, he likes to talk a lot!"

Darold, a public school first-grader, was diagnosed in September of 1980 as having Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy, one of over 40 neuromuscular diseases covered under MDA's program.

His mother, Mrs. Shirley Haddican, says Darold loves Hot Wheel cars, T. V., playing records and riding his bicycle.

Least favored sports

NEW YORK (AP) — Boxing, football, wrestling and mountain climbing are the sports parents least want their children to participate in, according to a national survey made for the Fitness 3 Council.

The survey finds parents prefer, instead, the non-contact sports of swimming, baseball, basketball and tennis.

Other findings: 79 percent of parents want children to stay in top physical shape, yet less than half feel it important that youngsters engage in organized sports. Furthermore, only 10 percent of parents want children to work hard to become sports stars.

NUMB ARMS, LEGS Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others. Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

- (1) Paresthesias (see above)
- (2) Headaches
- (3) Painful joints
- (4) Numbness in the arms or hands
- (5) Loss of sleep
- (6) Stiffness in the neck
- (7) Pain between the shoulders
- (8) Stiffness of pain in lower back
- (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse the condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals...call for in-Depth consultation in Layman's terms.

As time ticks on, your financial prospects will grow more encouraging this coming year. Be optimistic regarding your material affairs and act like the winner you will be.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You're good at making quick decisions today, but you might not be equally adept in acting upon them. Although you're mentally alert, you could be physically sluggish. Find out more of what lies ahead for you in each season following your birthday by sending for your copy of Astro-Graph, Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) This could be a rather demanding day, with claims filed on your time from family members and outsiders alike. Take care of the home front first.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) A situation about which you are rather hopeful could take some confusing turns today. Don't let what occurs rattle you. You're lucky in the long run.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You're capable of accomplishing that which you set out to do today, but once you get a grip on the situation you may let go of your own volition.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You've heard the adage: "The harder you try, the luckier you get." This will be true for you today, especially in financial or career matters.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Dame Fortune has her eye on you today. Though she might not work things out according to your blueprint, she'll do a far better job for you on her own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) In important one-to-one relationships today, it's essential that you make an extra effort to be fair and cooperative. The dividends will be worth the gestures.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) An opportunity may present itself today to make a friend of someone you know merely on a business basis. Respond when opportunity knocks.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) In order to advance your position in life, it may be necessary to take a calculated risk today. Do so, if the odds are tilted in your favor.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Even if obstacles are placed in your path today in what normally should be a smooth venture, don't let this disturb you. This will open a door to something better.

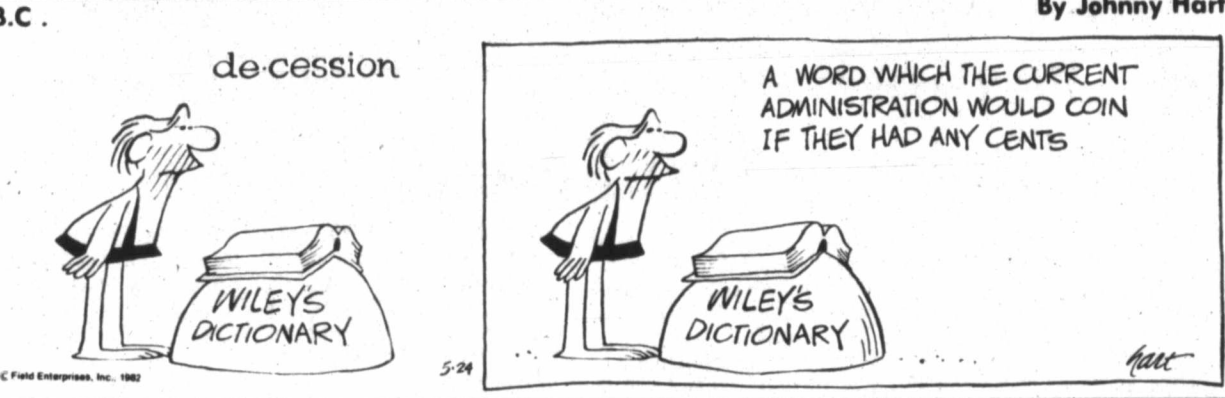

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You will be more effective in presenting your ideas today if you don't belabor your points. Tell what needs to be told and no more.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Put financial matters first on your agenda today and tend to them while you're fresh and alert. Your possibilities for turning a profit lessen as you tire.

Philly outplays Celtics to advance to NBA finals

BOSTON (AP) — The roller-coaster series is over.

When the wild and wacky ride to the National Basketball Association finals reached the end of the line, the Philadelphia 76ers were ready for another spin. The Boston Celtics got off reluctantly.

The much-maligned 76ers rebounded from an 88-75 loss in Philadelphia Friday night to outplay the Celtics for a 120-106 triumph Sunday. That gave the 76ers the Eastern Conference title in seven games and a date in Philadelphia Thursday night for the opener of the best-of-seven NBA title series with the Los Angeles Lakers.

"After Friday night, we were down," said a delighted Harold Katz, the 76ers owner. "I went into the Spectrum as a hero and when I left, they (the fans) could have killed me."

Now, he and his team can go back as the toasts of a town of fickle fans who stick by their teams in success and get down on them in failure.

The series that featured broad swings of fortune began with a 40-point Boston victory. But the 76ers won the next three games. Then the Celtics romped by 29 points in Game 5 before winning again Friday night. The final swing went to Philadelphia with the help, appropriately, of a player who had an up-and-down series.

Sharpshooting Andrew Toney, who had scored 39 points in the fourth game but only three in Game 6, fired in 14 of 23 field goal attempts and 34 points to lead all scorers Sunday.

Julius Erving, subdued outside but happy inside, was a model of calm after scoring 29 points, 20 of them in the second half.

"It was very important for me as leader of our team to reflect the attitude our players have and stand for," he said. "It's very important not to be boastful and maintain our dignity when we win and not be sad embarrassed if we lose."

The 76ers were in control through the game, allowing the defend champions to take only three leads, 7-6 and 32-31. Their poise was contrast to last season's East Conference series in which they too 3-1 advantage over Boston, then bl leads in each of the last three games.

Boston's loss kept intact the jinx champions. Not since the Celtics' their second consecutive title in 1968 has a club successfully defended crown.

Philadelphia reached the final for a third time in six years. Its championship since moving from Syracuse in 1963 was in 1967.

Larry Bird scored six points in a Boston run that cut Philadelphia's lead to 64-62 midway through the third quarter.

Amarillo High wins All-Sports title

Amarillo High has won the District 3-5A sports championship this school year, totaling 65 1/2 points in 15 sports.

Tascosa was the runnerup with 54 points, followed by Palo Duro 39 1/2, Caprock 33 1/2 and Pampa 27 1/2.

Pampa's only district championship came in boys' basketball. The Harvesters went on to win the bi-district and regional titles and advance to the state tournament. A first-place finish counts five points in each sport.

Four points is awarded for second place, three for third, two for fourth and one for last.

Pampa girls' swim team was runnerup while the boys' swim team and the boys' golf team each received three points. The volleyball, girls' track and girls' golf teams each received two points. The boys' tennis team had one and a half points.

Pampa finished last in football, girls' basketball, boys' track, girls' tennis and boys' baseball.

No points are awarded in a sport where a school doesn't enter a full team. The other schools received the usual number of points.

Pampa did a not field a full team in boys' and girls' cross country.

Special Effort wins Kansas Derby

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP)—Unbeaten Special Effort, displaying the awesome power that has made him the top quarter horse runner the past two years, scampered home an easy winner in Sunday's running of the $354,000 Kansas Derby at Ruidoso Downs.

Special Effort is owned by Canadian, Tex. oilman Dan Urschel, who purchased the colt for a reported $1 million last summer and later syndicated him for $15 million.

The speedy colt scored his 11th straight victory by easily outrunning

Go For Bugs in the 400-yard race, hitting the wire a comfortable 2 3/4 lengths in front.

With the victory, Special Effort earned another $122,150 to boost his career earnings total to $1,150,013. As he did in sweeping to nine straight victories as a 2-year-old in 1981, Special Effort put on a devastating kick down the stretch to win the Kansas Derby going away.

Last year Special Effort became the first 2-year-old quarter horse in history to win the juvenile Triple Crown series of the Kansas, Rainbow and All American Futurities. The Kansas Derby is the first of three major races for 3-year-olds run annually at the southern New Mexico track.

Special Effort covered the 400 yards in 20.25 seconds.

As the overwhelming betting favorite, he returned $2.20 across the board.

The Kansas Derby provided few surprises as Special Effort, coming out of the No. 10 post position, immediately drew close to the lead. Special Effort found his best strides at the halfway point of the race and took command.

Fergus wins Atlanta Classic

ATLANTA (AP) — It went in the books as a bogey 5, but it was just the ticket Keith Fergus needed to victory. Fergus still had to sink a 20-foot birdie putt on the first hole of a sudden-death playoff to capture the $300,000 Georgia-Pacific Atlanta Golf Classic Sunday, but it was the 448-yard 15th hole that ruined the day for three other players.

First, there was Wayne Levi taking a quadruple bogey 8 that spoiled an otherwise brilliant performance in which he recorded nine birdies.

Raymond Floyd, the victim of Fergus' playoff birdie, took six shots to complete the toughest hole on the 7,007-yard, par-72 Atlanta Country Club course.

Larry Nelson, the 1981 PGA champion who had led after each of the first three rounds and was tied with Fergus after 14 holes, took a triple bogey 7 and never got back into the race.

"I was very happy to get out with a bogey," said Fergus. "It's the toughest hole on the course."

Only six players still had to play the hole following a 2-hour, 10-minute delay during a severe thunderstorm.

"I really didn't want to go back out there," Fergus said. "We were stiff and didn't have enough time to warm up. We did, though, and now I'm glad we did."

The 15th, a dog-leg right, has a mountain of stone and a water-filled ditch on the right side and a line of trees on the left.

Fergus claimed the $54,000 first prize and the second victory of his career with the playoff birdie after lipping out a 15-foot birdie putt on the 72nd hole for a 69-273.

Floyd, who has been struggling and remains winless this season, had his 18-foot birdie putt stop at the edge of the cup, completing a 68 for his 15-under-par score.

Levi finished alone in third place with a 68-274, and Nelson fell back to fourth at 74-275.

On 15, Nelson drove into the hazard, drove again and eventually reached the green in 4 where he 3-putted.

Jones shuts out Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — New York Mets pitcher Randy Jones knows the good and the hard times very well.

Sunday night was one of the better times as the left-hander shut out the Houston Astros, 2-0, for his sixth win in eight decisions.

Jones, the 1976 Cy Young Award winner, struck out five, gave up one walk and scattered four hits. It was his first shutout in two years.

"But it wasn't that way in 1981," Jones said of his current success. "Last year, I had arm and back problems as well as a broken ankle. Consequently, I was 1-8."

Jones said he wanted the shutout.

"So, last October I worked out getting ready," he said. "I really don't know if I could throw better than I did this year, but that groove I was in in 1976 (22-14 with San Diego) was something that may not happen again. Every fourth day I picked up a baseball and it was a natural."

"After the injuries I didn't think my career was over and Mike Marshall, who was with the club last year, helped me with my screwball and it has been something to enhance my career."

Jones relied on his sinker to force Phil Garner into a fielder's choice with two men on base in the sixth inning. That out effectively quelled the Astros into serious threat in the game.

"It was my first shutout in

Indy 500 to sport fastest lineup

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The 68th Indianapolis 500-mile race, mixing an impressive blend of youth and experience, will take the green starting flag next Sunday.

It will be the fastest lineup in history and, for the first time since 1958, without a defending champion.

The 33-car field was completed Sunday, the fourth and final day of qualifications. Except for a brief practice session Thursday, the Indianapolis Motor Speedway will be closed until race day.

The two weeks of practice and time trials saw a jump in speed from a year ago, when Bobby Unser captured the pole position at 200.546 mph and went on to win his third and most controversial Indy 500.

Teammates Rick Mears and Kevin Cogan, helped by improved engine and chassis designs, led this year's chase for speed and placed identical Penske race cars side-by-side on the front row during the first weekend of qualifications.

First Cogan shattered Tom Sneva's four-year-old qualifying record with a four-lap average of 204.082 mph. Then Mears, the 1979 winner, wrested the pole position from his teammate with a run at 207.004. In practice, Mears recorded a lap at an unofficial Speedway record 208.7.

Four-time winner A.J. Foyt earned a start for a record 25th consecutive Indy race by qualifying next to Cogan on the outside of the front row with an average of 203.332.

Five other drivers, including Sneva and former winners Mario Andretti and Gordon Johncock, also qualified above 200 mph. The entire 33-car field averaged a record 197.740, some 5.2 mph faster than the previous record set in 1978. And the slowest speed among this year's qualifiers, 194.154 by Mears' older brother, Roger, was faster than 24 of last year's starting 33 and far ahead of the 186.008 that brought up the rear a year ago.

Unser, who finally gained recognition as the 1981 champion last fall after a successful appeal of a one-lap penalty, will be the only one of the seven still-active former winners to miss this year's race. He decided to pass up a chance for his 20th straight Indy race in order to work full time as team manager for Mexico's Josele Garza, an obligation he took on in the wake of last year's turmoil.

The last Indy winner not to defend his crown the next year was Sam Hanks, who announced his retirement after the 1957 race. The 48-year-old Unser emphasized, however, that he will drive in other races this season and that he has no intention of retiring.

The other former winners in this year's lineup, both three-time champions, are Johnny Rutherford and Al Unser — Bobby's younger brother — who qualified in the fourth and sixth rows, respectively.

This year's prize package is again expected to total more than $1.5 million. Last year's purse was a record $1.61 million, and first place paid nearly $300,000.

OTEL GUEST. Chicago firefighters rush an unidentified Hilton Hotel guest to an ambulance after fire broke out on the 22nd floor of the hotel Sunday. At least four deaths have resulted from the blaze. (AP Laserphoto)

Chicago Hilton fire investigated

CHICAGO (AP) — A fire that killed four people and injured up to 20 at the Conrad Hilton Hotel might have claimed fewer lives if there had been sprinklers and if guests had stayed in their rooms, a fire official says.

Authorities blamed a smoldering cigarette for the blaze that began Sunday morning on the 22nd floor of the 55-story hotel, which was built in 1927 and is one of the world's largest.

Police Superintendent Richard Brzezczek said a preliminary investigation showed the fire was accidental. An unidentified man believed to have been in the room where the blaze began was questioned by police Sunday night, but early today police said no one was being questioned any more and there were no suspects.

Second Battalion Fire Chief Robert Koujournian said the fire probably could have been contained if the hallway had been equipped with a sprinkler system.

Under the city's fire code, the hotel is not required to have either an alarm system or a sprinkler system, according to Tom Skowronowski, a fire prevention engineer with the Chicago Fire Department.

However, a Hilton official told police the hotel is equipped with an alarm system and that it was activated at the time the fire broke out. Brzezczek said, although some guests said they heard no alarm.

Following a code check of the hotel after the fire, Skowronowski said the hotel was "up to snuff" and added that the building "is in very good shape."

Officials said the victims apparently ran out into the 22nd floor hallway, where the fire had spread from a guest room, and were overcome by smoke.

"If they had had the doors closed and stayed in their rooms, they would have been perfectly safe," Koujournian said. "You can't open your door and invite the stuff in."

Hundreds of people, some in their nightclothes, were evacuated from the hotel, which has about 2,000 rooms.

"I heard a man screaming, and my husband went to the door and saw there was a fire," said Evelyn Law, who was staying on the 22nd floor. "The elevators weren't working. By the time we got to the ground, everyone was screaming and panicking."

One of those killed was identified by Chicago police as Abdelaziz Belal, mayor of the city of Casablanca in Morocco.

However, a man who answered the telephone at the Moroccan National Tourist Agency in Chicago on Sunday night said Belal was the vice-mayor of Casablanca and that his first name was Aziz, not Abdelaziz.

The man, who would not give his name, said Belal was in his early 40s and was in Chicago along with a number of other Moroccans to take part in a cultural program today with Chicago officials.

Jaye Schroeder, a police spokeswoman, identified another of the victims as Bill Launius of Poplar Bluff, Mo., but his age was not given. She declined to identify the other victims pending notification of relatives.

The hotel, built in 1927, is located on Michigan Avenue, on the south end of the Loop.

World of co-op banking is expanding

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

A growing number of Americans are banking at credit unions these days.

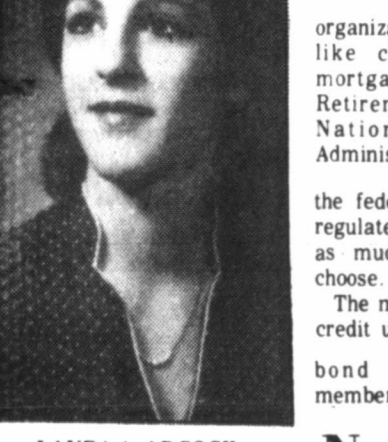

The non-profit financial cooperatives have expanded services widely in recent years to compete with banks and thrift institutions for money and customers. And while the number of credit unions has shrunk by almost 10 percent since 1971, the size of the membership has nearly doubled.

Preliminary figures from the Credit Union National Association, a trade group, show that there were 21,119 credit unions with nearly 47 million members at the end of 1981. There were 3 percent fewer credit unions than there were a year earlier, but there were 6 percent more credit union members.

The credit unions have been helped by changes in federal and state regulations which have lifted interest ceilings and have allowed the member-operated operating costs down by relying heavily on volunteers. Interest rates vary among credit unions. A survey by the Credit Union National Association late last year showed that the average interest rate charged by credit unions on personal loans was just under 16 percent; the average interest rate on auto loans was 15 percent. The average interest paid on all types of accounts — ranging from share-draft checking accounts to high-yield certificates of deposit — was about 8½ percent.

LAURA A. ADCOCK

Laura Adcock receives Cabot scholarship

Laura A. Adcock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Adcock of 2400 Comanche, has been named to receive a Cabot Corporation scholarship.

A 1982 Pampa High School graduate, she plans to attend Texas Tech University at Lubbock in the fall to major in computer science.

Graduating in the top 10 percent of her class, Laura is a member of National Honor Society, Key Club and Fellowship of Christian Athletes, and a three-year member of the Harvester Band. She was 1981-2 football queen and served as senior class vice president.

Each year, Cabot Corporation grants 25 college scholarships, on a competitive basis, to children of its employees in the United States and Canada. Scholarships are for $1,500, renewable yearly based on scholastic achievement, to a maximum of $6,000.

Mushroom tea linked to death

HOUSTON (AP) — An autopsy was scheduled today for a Pearland High School student that died after apparently drinking a tea brewed from wild mushrooms used as a hallucinogen, police say.

Christopher Hall, a 17-year-old senior, would have graduated this week, said Harry Hall, a spokesman for the Harris County Medical Examiner's office.

The teen-ager died Saturday night at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital here, authorities said.

Hall and several other students picked the mushrooms in a pasture near the school and boiled them, apparently thinking "they were (of) a hallucinogenic type and would get a really good high," said Pearland Police Detective Randy Garner.

Garner said Hall became ill soon after drinking the tea. The teen-ager did not tell doctors what he had ingested and was treated for hepatitis, the officer said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Kathryn Grant Crosby, Bing Crosby's widow, says the planned auction this week of 14,000 items that belonged to the famed singer is meant to be "a celebration."

"It's for Bing. It has to be fun because that's what he was all about. It's important to share his things with the people who loved him," Mrs. Crosby said in an interview with People magazine.

Explaining her decision to sell off items ranging from Crosby's 1967 Aston Martin to the couple's bed, Mrs. Crosby, 48, told the magazine, "I was storing furniture everywhere. Some antique-dealer friends said, 'Honey, why don't you have a garage sale?'" The interview was published in this week's issue of the magazine.

Adds daughter Mary Frances, 22: "A lot of people want things that were Dad's, and they don't do anyone any good in the attic."

Mrs. Crosby denies money worries prompted the sale, the magazine reported.

"I have been beautifully provided for by a very loving husband," she said. Crosby died in 1977.

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Former Defense Secretary Melvin Laird told reporters "I expected more excitement" after he was greeted by placards, turned backs and some boos at the University of Wisconsin-Madison commencement.

Laird, 59, received an honorary doctor of laws degree Sunday for his efforts on behalf of the university, despite the 3-1 vote by law students against giving him the honor because of his role in the Vietnam War.

There were only about two dozen protesters, some of them law school students or graduates, holding placards that read "Ship Laird to Vietnam to be Tried by his Victims" and "No Honorary Degree for Imperialist War Criminal." About 200 students and spectators turned their backs on Laird, while the majority of graduates and spectators cheered for him.

The frigate HMS Antelope dies in a ball of flame when an Argentine bomb lodged in the ship's hold exploded, killing a bomb disposal expert. The bomb hit the already damaged ship in air fighting Sunday.

and the ship sank shortly after the explosion as it rode at anchor in San Carlos Bay in the Falkland Islands. (AP wirephoto)

Brits down seven fighters, but lose second frigate to bomb

By The Associated Press

Britain said its jets, missiles and shore gunners shot down at least seven Argentine warplanes as a new battle raged Monday over the British beachhead on the Falkland Islands. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher ruled out a cease-fire sought by Pope John Paul II.

The British Defense Ministry announcement said an eighth Argentine plane was seen leaving the battle trailing smoke and acknowledged the sinking of the British frigate Antelope, which was set ablaze in an air raid Sunday.

The Argentine government admitted the loss of two planes but claimed its raiders did "serious damage" to a troop transport and "damage" to a frigate. The Buenos Aires communique identified neither ship but the Argentine Embassy in Washington said the transport was the converted liner Canberra.

The British Defense Ministry said some ships may have been damaged but gave no details.

The Argentine Joint Chiefs of Staff in an earlier communique claimed one of Britain's carrier-based Harriers was shot down by anti-aircraft fire during a raid on Stanley, the Falklands capital 50 miles east of San Carlos.

British Defense Secretary John Nott claimed more than a third of Argentina's air force has been destroyed in the undeclared war and more ships were arriving to reinforce the British task force.

"There is no question of a truce," Nott told the House of Commons. He said the British still have a difficult fight ahead but "one thing is certain, the days of the occupying Argentine garrison are numbered."

In a later interview with the British Broadcasting Corp., he said "The task force commander has been told to repossess the Falkland Islands at the earliest possible opportunity."

He called the idea of a cease-fire accompanied by negotiations on sovereignty over the South Atlantic islands "absurd." "There's a new situation," he added. "We're not going to talk about sovereignty at the moment we are trying to retake the islands."

In its report on the Antelope, the British Defense Ministry said fires aboard the frigate went out of control despite efforts by the crewmen and they were forced to abandon ship. They were transferred to other vessels, it said, and "there were no further reports of casualties."

The ministry refused comment on a report by Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, that an Argentine bomb had lodged in the Antelope's engine room and exploded when technicians tried to defuse it, killing one person and wounding seven.

It ship was hit while operating in Falkland Sound, which separates the two main islands, West Falkland and East Falkland.

According to the British accounts, Argentine air attacks have sunk two frigates, the Antelope and its sister ship Ardent, and damaged four other warships.

Ambulance quits: fire dept. ready to step in

By JEFF LANGLEY

Pampa's ambulance service bit the dust and folded operations today, but the fire department is ready to step in and respond to emergency calls, city officials say.

Metropolitan owner La Wayne Guengerich asked the city and county to cancel the emergency ambulance contract with Metropolitan "effective immediately."

It is unknown whether or not Guengerich voluntarily asked to fold, or if he bowed to pressure from city officials.

City Manager Mack Wofford said Guengerich presented the letter asking to cancel the contract Monday afternoon.

However, Metropolitan employees said Wofford came by Metropolitan offices Monday morning and asked to see Guengerich. An employee said Wofford and Guengerich left together.

The letter to cancel surfaced a short time after the morning meeting, but Wofford said the termination notice originated with Guengerich.

The agenda of today's city commission meeting was amended to consider the ambulance contract termination request.

Since the emergency contract is a joint, city - county contract, County

Pampa City Commissioners and Gray County Commissioners accepted without comment termination of the emergency ambulance contract with Metropolitan, shortly before press time today. (See story page 2) Anyone who needs an ambulance should call the emergency Pampa Fire Department number at 669-3366.

Judge Carl Kennedy called county commissioners late Monday evening for a special meeting. Kennedy said county bosses will attend today's city commission meeting to officially consider the joint ambulance contract.

Guengerich's request to call it quits is addressed to Pampa Mayor Ray Thompson and Kennedy.

It states: "Gentlemen, this letter is to advise that I request termination of the contract for ambulance service between Metropolitan General, the City of Pampa, and Gray County dated December 26, 1980 effective immediately." The request is dated today, but was submitted to the city and county Monday afternoon.

"Serving the people of Pampa and Gray County has been a genuine pleasure. Sincerely, La Wayne Guengerich, president, Metropolitan General Inc."

Wofford said the fire department will respond to ambulance calls "on a temporary basis," until the city secures another ambulance company.

"We will do our best to provide the best service we can. We have about 16 EMT's (emergency medical technicians) at the fire department," Wofford said.

At short time after Metropolitan made its request Monday, a fully equipped, advanced life support ambulance was leased from the Amarillo ambulance service and delivered to the Pampa Fire Department.

"We are ready — we have the qualified people," Assistant Fire Chief J.D. Ray said after the ambulance was delivered. Ray said personnel might be shuffled to make up for the extra ambulance duty, but he said his department can handle the load.

The ambulance was leased by the city from Amarillo Medical Services, the non-profit organization which runs

Cockrell charged in 'toilet bowl' robbery

Calvin John Cockrell, 25, of 412 McCullough St., was arraigned Monday morning on a charge of aggravated robbery. Bond was set at $25,000 by Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge.

Cockrell is charged in connection with the 8 p.m. Friday robbery of the Crawford C Plus Mart, 304 E. 17th St.

He was transferred from the city jail to the county jail at about 11 a.m. today.

Police said they recovered the money upon his arrest at a trailer home on Kentucky Ave., but a number of checks police called "dirty money" were not recovered from the sewer line of the trailer until Saturday.

Cockrell was reported to be on probation at the time of the arrest.

Aggravated robbery applies to robbery with a weapon, and is a first-degree felony. Suggested bond for the offense is 20 to 30 thousand dollars.

Witnesses said the store was robbed by a man carrying a small caliber automatic and wearing a stocking cap with holes cut out for eyes and mouth.

The man demanded cash and checks from the register. A clerk at the store said the man was "trying not to talk," apparently so that his voice would not be identified later.

As the man left on his motorcycle, another customer approached the store on another motorcycle.

The clerk asked the customer to identify the robber's license plate number, and the customer left and followed the man to the Hi - Land Mobile Home Park on West Kentucky. The pursuer then called police to the scene.

The suspect was shaving in the bathroom of a trailer house in the park when police caught him.

Pampa Police Chief J.J. Ryzman said the couple who lived in the trailer, acquaintances of Cockrell, were removed from the house before the arrest because officers "feared a hostage situation."

A mask, gun and $490 in cash were recovered at the scene of the arrest, and about 50 legible checks from the store were recovered Saturday from the trailer's sewer line when the residents reported the toilet was plugged.

Ryzman said Monday police did not know the value of the checks. "We don't have an amount yet — they're still drying," he said.

Police said the suspect offered no resistance during the arrest.

Dog proposal would allow killing of some Pampa pets

By DAVID CHRISTENSON

Registration fees to generate funds for animal control and a clause allowing immediate execution of "vicious" animals are the big changes in the Committee for Better Animal Control's proposed revision of Pampa's animal control ordinance.

The proposal is an attempt to get tougher on animals and animal owners that violate city laws.

The committee submitted the proposal to the City Commission May 11 on the grounds that the present ordinance is "not only inadequate, but unenforceable."

The city's present ordinance takes up five pages in the city code, while the proposal is about 16 pages long. The proposal is more detailed than the present ordinance.

Registration for all pets in the city would be required under the proposal. The proposed ordinance requires registration fees of $5 for animals that are not sterilized and $2 for sterilized pets. Senior citizen's pet registration fees are $1 per animal.

All dogs over four months old would be required to be registered and given annual vaccinations, and would wear metal certificates of vaccination.

The proposal defines a "vicious animal" as "any individual animal of any species that has, without provocation, attacked or bitten any person or other animal."

Animal control officers would have the discretionary power to immediately kill any animal that falls under this definition unless there is knowledge of an owner.

The proposal also provides a discretionary death penalty for any dogs which have "killed, maimed, chased or worried livestock or fowl" unless the owner is present.

The proposal makes special provision for guard dogs. Any dog with guard training "may be destroyed, if necessary, when such dog is running at large," the proposal says.

A vicious animal may also be ordered removed from the city, and the proposal allows appeals of such orders to a committee consisting of the city manager, the chief of police, the city attorney and the senior animal control officer.

The proposal also provides for quarantine of not less than 10 days if an animal is suspected of having a disease.

Such animals must be examined by a veterinarian or at an animal control office if control officers require it.

Animal nuisances under the proposal are defined as: "excessive barking or howling or the accumulation of animal wastes;" or failure to remove wastes on public walks, recreational areas or the property of another; or animal enclosures offensive to "persons of ordinary sensitivities."

The proposal also defines a kennel or "cattery" as any location housing four or more cats or dogs over the age of four months. Buildings fitting this definition must obtain a kennel or cattery license.

Rains hit north Texas hard and threaten ripening wheat

By TOM ALLSTON

Rains ranging from slight to more than an inch fell over most of the east central Panhandle Monday, posing a threat to farming in the area, while more violent weather continued to batter much of the rest of the state.

The heaviest rain recorded in the Pampa vicinity was just over an inch 14 miles north of McLean, while half an inch or more was logged at Panhandle and Miami. Pampa's official tally was 22 inch.

Elsewhere in the state, however, heavy rains brought continued flooding, and a rash of tornado sightings was reported from West Texas.

A flash flood warning was issued for Dallas, Tarrant and Denton Counties early today after heavy thunderstorms moved into the area. Some street flooding was reported at Haltom City, the National Weather Service said.

A tornado was sighted early today by San Angelo police about 10 miles northwest of San Angelo. There were no reports of injuries although winds gusted to 44 mph as a line of heavy thunderstorms passed through the San Angelo area.

Another tornado dipped into a grain field near Blossom in Northeast Texas. There were no reports of injuries.

A possible tornado was sighted northwest of LaMesa in Dawson County.

There were unconfirmed sightings of funnel clouds near Big Spring and in north Dallas. A funnel cloud was sighted northwest of Stanton, but it retreated back into storm clouds without touching down, authorities said.

Pampa News adds to newsroom staff

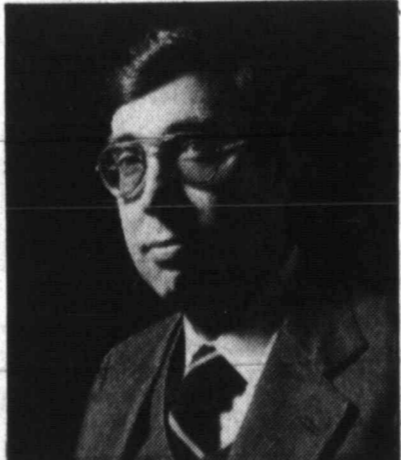

The Pampa News has added three new members to the editorial staff in the past two weeks.

Publisher Louise Fletcher announced the appointment of Anthony Randles as managing editor, Tom Allston as staff writer, and Bruce Lee Smith as staff photographer. The appointments are part of a program to improve the local coverage of the news and to bring a fresh new look to the newspaper.

Randles comes to the News with 18 years' experience in professional journalism. He spent the last year as an award-winning feature writer for the Victor Valley (Cal.) Daily Press, taking two out of three United Press International awards this year for both California and Nevada newspapers. Prior to that, Randles was associate editor of Petersen's Hunting Magazine in Hollywood, an award-winning syndicated columnist for the Anchorage (Alaska) Daily News, and is a noted outdoor magazine writer.

Anthony Randles

Randles is also the author of two non-fiction books and a novel. Tom Allston is a Pampa product, and has come home.

A 1957 graduate of Pampa High School, Allston earned a Bachelor of Science degree from North Texas State University in Denton in 1962. He taught school for four years, then went into journalism, spending five years with the San Angelo Standard — Times as cities and will be treated with dry chlorine when the clean-up project is completed. Rainy weather is slowing the project, but officials estimate lake water will be restored to Pampa within the next two weeks. (Staff Photo by Jeff Langley)
