Bentsen tells GI Forum Bush 'misses the mark'

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen counterattacked Republicans on the defense issue Saturday, accusing them of "poisoning defense policy with partisan politics."

The Texas senator appeared at a meeting of the American G.I. Forum, a Hispanic veterans organization, two days after George Bush told the same group that Michael Dukakis was for "unilateral disarmament." Bentsen told the group the Republican accusations missed the mark.

"Mike Dukakis supports a strong national defense. I'm strong on defense. The Democratic party is willing to pay the price to defend freedom," he said.

"But," he said, "We won't ever, never wink at corruption in the Pentagon. And we won't ever, never allow your hard-earned tax dollars to be used for kick-backs to consultants."

The $299.5 billion defense bill vetoed last week by President Reagan was supported by the Secretary of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Bentsen said.

When Reagan vetoed it and Bush hailed the action, "they said 'no' to a strengthened role for the military in stopping drug traffic.... They said 'no' to a 4.1 percent pay raise for our service men and women. They said 'no' to the biggest defense budget in history," he said.

"Unfortunately, They also said 'yes' to poisoning defense policy with partisan politics," he said. "Decisions on national defense are now being based on the latest political poll at the White House," he said.

Bentsen received an enthusiastic welcome from the group, but the 400 or so people who listened filled less than half the auditorium.

Bentsen, himself more conservative than Dukakis on defense and foreign policy, did not respond specifically to Bush's attacks on Dukakis' defense positions, including opposition to new nuclear weapons systems. He also made no mention of the Senate's current wrangling over aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, which the senator supports but Dukakis opposes.

The American G.I. Forum is a 150,000 member organization of Hispanic veterans formed after World War II, and Bentsen made a general pitch for support from the Hispanic community.

Recovery amazing after boy's brain pierced

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — An 11-year-old boy is expected to recover fully from an accident in a which a rod pierced his skull just below his right eye and punched through his brain and up against the back of his skull.

Brian Swartz was bicycle riding with his brother along a country road near the Cumberland County town of Newville last week when his bike struck a hay rake along the road, puncturing a tire and pitching him forward onto the metal rod, which his father said was part of the rake.

While his brother Jerry, 15, rushed to a nearby house for help, Brian lifted himself from the rod and, feeling dizzy, lay down on the ground.

"It was just scary," Brian said. "I pulled myself off — I guess I didn't realize what I was doing."

"I was scared I was going to die," Brian said. "It was close."

The boy's father, Jerry, soon arrived and he and his wife, Deborah, placed ice, towels and a damp cloth over the wound and took Brian to Carlisle Hospital, about 10 miles away. Brian was treated in the emergency room and transferred to Polyclinic Medical Center in Harrisburg.

"It's unbelievable," said Dr. Hugh Knight, who treated Brian at Carlisle.

Attorney criticizes client's shooting

The condition of a 51-year-old Midland man shot by a police detective was upgraded to fair late Saturday, less than 24 hours after he was felled by two bullets when he allegedly aimed a revolver at the officer.

Howard Mitchell, address unavailable, was listed in fair condition late Saturday at Odessa Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said. He was being treated for two gunshot wounds to the chest and neck area.

Meanwhile, his Midland attorney, Tom Morgan, said Saturday the use of deadly force by Det. Brian Bogart was "not justified."

The comment prompted an immediate reaction from Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, who said he was irritated by Morgan's insistence so soon after the event that Bogart acted improperly.

"Since Mr. Morgan has so much information concerning the case already, we would anticipate a supboena will be issued so he can appear before the grand jury," Schorre said.

NCNB has trouble in name game

By HOLDEN LEWIS

EL PASO (AP) — The week-old NCNB Texas National Bank is running into legal problems with similarly named banks.

State District Judge Bill Moody in El Paso on Friday signed a temporary restraining order, shortly after a $10 million suit challenging the name was filed by a local NCNB competitor, called Texas National Bank.

The order was the second legal maneuver since banks in three Texas cities began complaining about the similarity of the names.

Charlotte-based NCNB Corp. last week bought out Texas subsidiaries of financially troubled First RepublicBank Corp.

Big Spring artist Coy McCann works on a mural designed to depict Big Spring's heritage and to mark the western boundary of the city's downtown revitalization project.

Western mural may spur revitalization in Big Spring

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — The artist is a cowboying rancher who paints like a coyote stalks: when he feels like it or when he gets hungry enough.

"I eat like a coyote," said artist-sculptor Coy McCann. "I sort of live like a coyote. When I get hungry, I eat. When I get tired, I sleep."

And when he feels like painting and sculpting, even though it may be midnight, he paints and sculpts.

McCann and his painting sidekick, Pinky Arnold, have spent untold hours and even more brushing strokes to come up with a colorful Western mural to grace a 1929 brick wall. The work depicts Big Spring's heritage and landscape within a rocky gorge between foothills of the Cap Rock Escarpment

"This is part of me," he said of the multi-colored mural, which shows the buffalo, the American Indian, the Spanish conquistador, the horse, the railroad, the mule, the farmer plowing, and the cowboy herding Longhorn cattle. "Everybody doesn't realize what comes out of you (in a work of art) — your heart and soul," he said.

While McCann is putting his talent and labor into the mural, Big Spring civic leaders hope that a form of prosperity and revitalization of the downtown area somehow will emerge.

The scheme is to build up and spruce up a 16-square-block downtown area which is served by merchants who have not folded up in wake of the oil bust of the early 1980s or moved their wares and services to shopping malls and shopping centers in the suburbs.

The core of downtown Big Spring is highlighted by the Howard County Courthouse, City Hall and Municipal Auditorium, the Howard County Public Library, lawyers' offices, banks, printing shops, abstract-and-title offices, and the historic but abandoned 15-story Settles Hotel of 1929 origin.

Though downtown buildings are about one-third vacant, the area has a quaintness enhanced by The Record Shop, which nostalgically delves into the dusty past, and The Doll Museum, though closed, evokes childhood muses.

And city planners and visionaries — including Teri Quinones, downtown coordinator for the revitalization project called The Downtown Renewal Plan — envision a Railroad Plaza to help set a tone: a spirited downtown that captures the flavor of the town's early times.

The old Texas & Pacific Railway Co. laid its tracks through Big Spring in the early 1880s. The locomotive helped turn an early settlement of buffalo hunters and wheelwrights into a railroad town and headquarters for ranching and livestock-shipping operations.

"There is still a strong economic base downtown," said Ms. Quinones. "The retail is an important part of downtown, but that's been mostly weakened by the economic downfall."

Council preparing to face facts — and raise taxes

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Here's the kind of news safer sent by mail then given in person — the city of Midland is planning a tax increase.

According to city officials, the news should come as no real surprise, given how the local economy was battered by crashing oil prices which, in turn, whiplashed real estate values.

Come Tuesday, Council is expected to call for a 6.85 cent tax increase — about 7.22 percent (operation and debt obligation) — over the current effective rate of 43.8 cents per $100 valuation. Based on the most current estimates, a homeowner with a valuation of $54,380, for example, will pay $28.66 more annually.

Council will consider funding Midland's five operating funds — general, water, airport, sanitation and golf course — at a total of $57.3 million in 1988-89, compared to $55.1 million this year if adopted.

For City Council, the last two fiscal years have been a game of chutes and ladders — as valuations decreased costs increased.

Three years ago, Midland had every right to collect its equivalent property rate during the downturn, but chose not too. Instead, it held the rate, cut services and slashed personnel.

In the process, it conducted itself in the same manner as the industry that gave it birth and boom — do more, on less, with less.

Councilwoman Oralia Corrales, who isn't crazy about a rate increase, says the city can no longer put it off. "We we're the only entity three years ago which didn't raise taxes," said Corrales. "We've been conscientious...we've been frugal."

During the downturn, the city eliminated 100 jobs, mostly through attrition.

The city never replaced those jobs and Corrales said during that time services never faltered. Residents were getting more for their money, from fewer employees earning less.

To compensate for that, council agreed about five months ago to restore pay cuts among wage and salaried employees amounting to a little more than $400,000.

It then had to answer a jump in fringe benefit costs of $217,000, add four full-time salaried positions and seven other part-time employees at a cost of $175,000, and pay $90,000 in merit raises and job reclassifications.

According to Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor, personnel accounts for 71 percent of the general fund — $19.9 million of a total $28.1 million.

"We think it (a tax rate increase) should come as no real surprise...we can't reduce expenses anymore without compromising services."

City Councilman Gordon Marcum II agreed: "It's a tough decision. We cut as much as we could. It's certainly not an easy thing...no one wanted to do it, but we have to face the facts."

Hispanics decry official English proposal

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — Hispanic Republican leaders spoke out Saturday against including an Official English resolution in the national platform of the GOP, saying it is wrong and offensive.

"Do not underestimate the importance this issue has in the decisions Hispanics and other minorities will make in November. This amendment will cost us the presidential election if we allow it to be included in the national Republican platform," said Celina Garza of Houston, a member of the Harris County Republican National Hispanic Assembly.

"Let us realize that Official English and English Only is about restricting languages other than English. It is about disenfranchising minority citizens," Ms. Garza told a news conference.

She noted that presidential candidate George Bush has come out against Official English and English Only.

Robert Estrada of Dallas, an adviser to Bush's campaign, also criticized the Official English proposal, which is part of the state GOP platform.

But he added, "I think without any question George Bush is going to carry Texas against Michael Dukakis." He said voters are attracted to Republican stands for such issues as jobs, a strong national defense and education.

Texas Republicans who in the March primary overwhelmingly endorsed a non-binding referendum to make English the official state and national language were "misguided," said Estrada, who was national director in 1984 of the Hispanic campaign for Reagan-Bush.

"We think it touches some chords, some emotions that are very raw, and brings back a lot of the vestiges of discrimination that many of us grew up with and felt personally," he said.

"If our fellow Republicans that are not Hispanics understood that they unknowingly touched these raw nerves by supporting this kind of thing, I think a future referendum would turn that vote around."

Andres Tijerina of Austin, a member of the Mexican American Republicans of Texas and the Hispanic assembly, said the concept is opposed whether it is called English First, English Only or Official English.

"Whatever you call it, when you get right down to the heart of it, it's racism. It's offensive," Tijerina said.

Proponents of Official English have emphasized that theirs is not a move to make English the only language spoken. They have said it will promote unity and help address the problem of illiteracy.

"Hispanics know that we must be proficient in the use of English to be successful in this country. We do not need an amendment to the state or national constitution to make English the official language," Ms. Garza said.

Firefighters arrive after seven 911 calls, 19 minutes

WEBSTER (AP) — The owner of a house destroyed in a fire said it took seven calls to a 911 emergency number and 19 minutes to get firefighters to his burning home.

A Webster Police Department spokeswoman acknowledged the dispatcher was confused about whose jurisdiction the fire was in and first notified the wrong agency.

Nobody was hurt in the early morning fire Friday, which destroyed David Mann's Webster-area home.

"I was running around, trying to figure out where the fire department was and watching my house go up in flames," said Mann, a chemical engineer at Amoco's Texas City plant and owner of the four-bedroom, brick home.

An explosion in the garage awakened Mann and he managed to get his wife and 7-month-old son out safely.

"I would be storming mad if anything had happened to my wife or baby. I'm very upset that my whole house was lost when it should have just been my garage," he said.

A Webster police dispatcher, whom police would not name, took the first 911 call at 1:41 a.m. and took six more calls up to 2 a.m., said Ann Carter, supervisor of support staff for the police.

The dispatcher first contacted Harris County about the fire, Ms. Carter said.

"There was a confusion as to whose jurisdiction it was. She assumed they (the county) were handling it," she said.

Harris County, however, does not have a fire department.

Painting believed to be by English master

AMARILLO (AP) — It took almost 40 years for anyone at the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum to notice a large oil painting of an elderly lady.

Now the painting may attract international notice as art historians try to determine whether it is a long-lost work by 18th-century English master William Hogarth.

The museum's art curator, Michael Grauer, believes it is.

He found the portrait leaning against a backroom wall at the museum in Canyon and has spent almost a year trying to prove its authenticity.

He thinks the 50- by 40-inch work is a long-missing portrait called "Portrait of Mrs. Richard Hogarth." Hogarth, who lived from 1697 to 1764, painted the portrait of his mother, Anne, in 1735.

The museum received the work as a gift in 1948 from the late James D. Hamlin of Farwell.

"This is a major, major find," Grauer said. "Not only has it been lost for more than 80 years but it is one of Hogarth's larger paintings and an extremely important work because it's of his mother."

However, one expert on British painting is skeptical that the painting is by Hogarth. Nevertheless, Malcolm Cormack, paintings curator at the Yale Center for British Art in New Haven, Conn., said Friday he plans to send a photograph of the museum's painting to a colleague in England for his opinion on the origin of the work.

"I'm not sure it is by Hogarth," Cormack said. "I'd be very surprised if it were by Hogarth."

He said the composition of the portrait and the way the hands and dress were painted is not indicative of Hogarth's style.

"The painting of the face doesn't look like Hogarth," Cormack said. "He's much better than that."

The Yale museum has 11 Hogarth paintings in its collection, he said.

While researching the painting, Grauer found that, according to major monographs on Hogarth, the whereabouts of "Portrait of Mrs. Richard Hogarth" have been unknown since 1901.

Grauer said he had difficulty authenticating the museum's work because the woman's face apparently had been repainted sometime between 1901 and 1929, when Hamlin purchased the painting in London.

Ultraviolet and infrared photography revealed the original face under the retouchings, Grauer said. Over the past few months, the painting has been cleaned and the retouchings removed by the museum's painting conservators, David Spangler and Kathryn Hird.

"Hogarth's mother came alive under the hands of David and Kathryn," Grauer said. "I had documentary evidence to prove its authenticity but needed the physical evidence to make it conclusive and they provided that."

The restored painting will go on public display either sometime this fall or with the Hamlin collection in February, according to Grauer.

If the painting turns out to be authentic, the Panhandle-Plains museum could get a boost by having it in their collection, said museum director Ryan Smith.

State budget cuts have slashed the museum's operating budget.

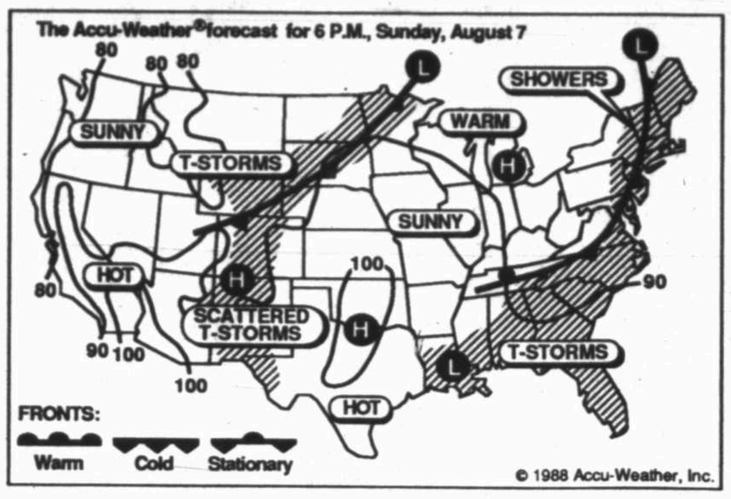
WEATHER SUMMARY



Warm temperatures to continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Temperatures will remain warm with a slight chance of thunderstorms expected through the weekend, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport.

Sunday will be mostly fair with a less than 20 percent chance of evening thunderstorms. The high will be in the mid-90s, with winds from the south 10-20 mph and gusty.

Sunday night will be mostly fair with a less than 20 percent chance of evening thunderstorms. The low will be near 70.

Monday will be fair with a high in the mid-90s.

Saturday's high of 93 was 14 degrees cooler than the record high, which was set in 1964. The record low of 61, which was set in 1936, was just two degrees cooler than Saturday's low of 63.

STATE

Hundred-degree temperatures gripped the Lone Star State Saturday as an upper level ridge of high pressure built across the state.

Most of the 100-plus temperature readings spread in a band across North Texas, said Ed Delgado of the National Weather Service.

Near record-breaking temperatures of 103 degrees were recorded in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and in Wichita Falls. McAllen had 104 degrees, while Waco hit 105 degrees and Victoria reached 101.

Hot temperatures and high humidities produced heat index values ranging from 96 at Childress to 113 at Longview and Waco.

Elsewhere in the state, temperatures were mostly in the 90s, except in the 80s in the Panhandle and areas west of the Pecos. The afternoon extremes ranged from 79 degrees at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to the 105 degrees at Waco.

Meanwhile, moist tropical air and afternoon heating helped form scattered showers and thunderstorms over the eastern third of the state. Some heavy rains also were scattered in the Trans Pecos area and the Permain Basin.

The weather service forecasts partly to mostly cloudy skies through Sunday, with isolated to widely scattered showers and thunderstorms. Highs Sunday will be mostly in the 90s and low 100s, except 80s along the upper coast.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered over wide sections of the eastern half of the nation Saturday, with some rain also in the Southwest, and a cold front brought almost autumn-like cool relief to part of the northern Plains.

Showers and thunderstorms were widespread ahead of a slowly moving cold front that curved from New York state into the middle Mississippi Valley.

Thunderstorms were scattered over parts of central and eastern New York state, with heavy rain reported at Albany. Showers and a few thunderstorms spread from western and central parts of Pennsylvania into much of Kentucky.

Parisian train rams barrier

PARIS (AP) — A passenger train rammed into a barrier at the end of the line in Paris' Gare de L'Est station Saturday, killing one person, injuring 57 and trapping some victims for more than two hours, authorities said.

It was the second major train crash in Paris in six weeks.

Rescue workers used electric saws, hammers, pliers and cutters to extract those caught in the wreckage. Doctors standing by administered local anesthetics.

Raoul Vigier, a spokesman for the Paris fire department, said nine victims were in serious condition. He said all nine spent 2½ hours trapped in the wreckage before rescue workers could free them.

The fatality was identified only as a man in his 30s who was dead when rescuers reached him in the wreckage.

There was no information on how many people were on the train.

The four-car train arrived at the station at 1:10 p.m. from Chateau Thierry, 60 miles northeast of Paris. A railroad employee who saw the accident from about a dozen yards away said the train appeared to be traveling about 12 mph.

The first car slammed into the retaining barrier at the end of the line, pushing up over top of it and twisting at a right angle. All of the seriously injured were in the first car. The other three cars and the engine, which was in the rear, remained on the rails.

"I saw, in the last 10 meters, that it was not going to stop," said the employee, who did not want to be identified. "I watched it. There was a big shock, then a flash caused by the overhead electrical contact wire.

"In one second, I saw the train climb, then straddle the terminal buffer. There was a moment of panic. The shock blew out the windows of the car."

Vigier said most of the injured suffered cuts, bruises, broke bones and shock.

The cause of the accident was not known. Two investigations were launched — a judicial inquiry and an internal investigation by the state-run railroad's experts. Railroad officials refused to speculate on the cause, but employees at the scene said some sort of brake failure appeared to be the cause.

On June 27, a passenger train lost its brakes and crashed at about 45 mph into another train in Paris' Gare de Lyon station. Fifty-six people died.

The driver in Saturday's crash was working in the small cabin at the front of the train but escaped serious injury. He was in a state of shock as he answered questions from railroad investigators, officials said.

The fire department sent more than 100 rescue workers to the scene.

None hurt when train derails

ELSBERRY, Mo. (AP) — Twelve cars of a freight train derailed Saturday and struck a tank of diesel fuel that caught fire, forcing the evacuation of about 300 people, authorities said. No injuries were reported.

A 15-block downtown area was evacuated and traffic was rerouted around the town because of the fire and potential chemical hazards, said Cape Girardeau Fire Chief Jerry Reineke, who was acting as public information officer for the incident.

The fire was extinguished late Saturday afternoon, and firefighters said they believed the evacuees would be able to return home late Saturday or early Sunday. The number of evacuees remained unclear, as Reineke and others at a command post gave out figures ranging from 200 to 1,000, with 300 the latest estimate.

The 113-car southbound train from Galesburg, Ill., to St. Louis derailed about 6:45 a.m., said Burlington Northern Railroad spokesman Brian Sweeney.

Several cars hit the diesel tank, knocking off a valve and allowing diesel fuel to spill, said Reineke. The spilled fuel and several rail cars carrying lumber products and piping caught fire, he said, but there was no explosion as authorities earlier reported.

The cars also damaged a grain elevator and a storage tank containing anhydrous ammonia, a potentially hazardous material, but that tank was not leaking.

MURAL

Step by step, Ms. Quinones is focusing on efforts to drum up community-wide support to restore historic Big Spring amid subdued economic times, when the population has dipped but is expected to reach 24,000 by 1990.

One step is to fund the proposed Railroad Plaza on Main Street, near the current railroad yard. The plaza is to feature vintage railroad cars and a caboose to house speciality shops, restaurants and exhibits, and an amphitheater.

"WE'RE HOPING this will serve as a catalyst for private property owners to improve their buildings," and, Ms. Quinones said, particularly to restore building facades.

"We're trying to set an example," she said of the plaza and other projects outlined in The Downtown Renewal Plan. The plan's backers include the city of Big Spring, Howard County, the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce, and the Industrial Foundation of Howard County.

The drawback, common to most of West Texas, is lack of available capital funds.

"In rough times, downtown renovation is probably a luxury," Ms. Quinones said. A city's priorities, such as water needs, police and fire protection, and street maintenance, must be maintained.

And if the Downtown Renewal Plan's supporters are successful in helping bring the Railroad Plaza project into reality, then other projects would be taken on. A major project, for example, would be seeking investors to convert the old Settles Hotel into a retirement center.

And artist Coy McCann's mural at Gregg and Third streets near the chamber of commerce in west downtown, is meant to be an inspirational step toward restoring and re-vitalizing downtown Big Spring. He is donating his time and talent to paint the mural.

"My father and mother always contributed to the community one way or another," said McCann, 37, "and this is my way of doing it. I wanted to give the community something, and I have talent. I always did want to do something large. The larger the better."

WHATEVER McCANN does, he does as he is moved. He'd like to sculpt in Italian marble — to sculpt from life-size to bigger than life.

He prepares his sculptures mainly through the "lost-wax method" and paints in whatever medium "strikes" his fancy — pencil, pen, oils, acrylics, watercolor. His approach runs the gamut: from realism to surrealistic to abstract.

"If anybody asks me if I'm good," he said, "I tell them I am. I don't strut. But you've got to believe in yourself.

"It's a rough life being an artist," he lamented. "Don't let your sons grow up be artists, Momma. It's a rough old life. It's a little bit of a curse — not really, but kind of. You (as an artist) have to come down to reality part of the time."

And it's difficult to sell art in the artist's hometown, he said.

"I can't sell art consistently here," McCann said, "but in Santa Fe, they probably would (sell)."

McCann, who did not study art in college, discovered his gifts for painting at age 6 when, unlike today, he was a bit sickly and found time to draw.

His artful learning has been by doing and by keen observation of art in America and in Europe, where he admired art from the Louvre museum in Paris to the Vatican Palace in Rome. "I never did read the (how-to) books about it (painting and sculpting). I just done it," he said.

"I'm a spitting cowboy one moment and in the Louvre the next," McCann said. "It made tears come to my eyes when I went there (to the Louvre in 1984)."

And art, which McCann said he sees and senses everywhere in and out of nature, strikes him this way:

"Whether you like it or not is not important," he said. "It changes things. I'm an artist in my heart and soul."

TAX

In comments prepared to accompany the city's 4-inch-thick proposed budget, City Manager Fred Poe said he expects the general fund will need an additional $1.24 million or a 4.62 percent increase for the upcoming fiscal year.

Poe, too, cites personnel as the single-largest cost. "We tried hard to keep these increases down to 4 percent, but I sincerely believe any further reductions will necessitate a reduction in services."

Second to employee costs is a package of capital expenditure items showing an increase $359,596. Among the largest: $54,000 for street maintenance, $33,000 for building maintenance, $32,000 for the new telephone system, $31,000 to the balance Hogan Park Golf Course budget; and $16,000 in payments to the Midland Central Appraisal District.

McGregor said the city also plans to add four officers to its police force — something residents have clamored for. Police Chief Richard Czech had requested as many as 10.

By bringing effective rate in line with current real estate prices, Poe estimates a shortfall in the general fund of $2.76 million.

While the requested tax increase will generate $990,000, Poe said the city still will be required to tap about $1.8 million from surplus. "A tax increase isn't the most pleasant news, but I see no way to avoid it."

Actually the total tax increase, inclusive of debt service, will run about 7.22 percent.

Finance Director Troy Gifford said the city has been meticulous in its approach to raising taxes.

"To continue to have sound, stable financial management and be able to meet the requests and demands for services, I believe some increase will be necessary."

Council members agree that one reason they chose to hold the line on taxes was the state of the economy — in particular, the burden placed on average taxpayers making ends meet.

Marcum said that while costs associated with drilling dropped with tumbling petroleum prices, the city was still paying top dollar for various purchases that never fell in line.

The slide in real estate values — which Marcum said in have dropped an average of 4 percent to 5 percent yearly — also didn't help. Based on net assessments, market worth, which peaked at $3.05 billion in 1985 (a year after the county's reappraisal), then nose-dived. By 1987, those valuations amounted to $2.60 billion.

Corrales said the city also is pressured by other factors that could haunt it in the future. Insurance costs (Midland is self-insured) have risen in the area of self-help through private agencies, such as Clearview Hospital and chiropractic costs, not to mention the plunge in sales tax revenues.

Because the city is seeking more than 3 percent above the effective rate, it is required by law to hold a public hearing. That hearing has been scheduled for Aug. 18.

If there are no changes, council is expected set the tax rate and adopt the budget Aug. 23.

BENTSEN

"You will see an administration committed to good jobs at fair wages — not just along the East and West coasts, but here in Corpus Christi, in the Rio Grande Valley...in the barrios of Los Angeles," he said.

Hispanics are important in the 1988 election, he said. "You are strongest in the states where this election could be decided — here in Texas and in California."

He poked at Bush's promise to put a Hispanic in his Cabinet.

"Hispanic Americans aren't maneuvering for a Cabinet post," he said. "What they're saying is...'Don't do us any favors — just put is where the action is.'"

Some in the group had been critical of Dukakis for not appearing. Bentsen, a native of the Rio Grande valley and a bomber pilot in World War II who has a long relationship with the group, tried to deflect that criticism.

Speaking in Spanish, he said he had asked group president Hector P. Garcia why the vice presidential candidate was not sufficient. Garcia told him, he said, "Oh, Lloyd, you're not important. You're family."

Bentsen received 90 percent of the Hispanic vote in his last Senate campaign in 1982. In addition to seeking the vice presidency, Bentsen is on the ballot in Texas for re-election to the Senate.

Bentsen's stop in Corpus Christi was part of a one-day campaign sprint. He was stopping next in Kentucky at a big picnic before returning to Washington.

SHOOTING

"Since he has so much personal information about the incident, we will subpoena him."

Mitchell was shot about 12:30 a.m. by Bogart outside the Bojangles Club, 3709 W. Wall St., according to a report of the incident. Deputy Chief Billy Ray gave this account of the shooting:

Bogart, who was in plainclothes working on a burglary investigation, was on foot outside of the club when he arrested a man for public intoxication. Mitchell, who apparently witnessed the arrest while sitting in his pickup truck, then drove toward Bogart.

"This person then got involved," and the officer saw a .38-caliber handgun on the man's lap, Ray said. Mitchell pointed it at Bogart, and when he refused to drop the gun, the officer fired twice from his nine-millimeter automatic, Ray said.

Mitchell did not fire his gun, but managed to drive east on Wall Street toward downtown. In the 2600 block, his vehicle crashed, and he subsequently was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital and later transferred.

Bogart was not harmed in the shooting, Ray said.

Morgan, who was hired Saturday morning by Mitchell's family, said he would conduct his own investigation of the shooting.

"The use of deadly force was not necessary, but I cannot go into details, or any facts, at this time," the attorney said.

Investigators, including members of a shooting team who conduct an inquiry any time an officer fires a weapon, had not determined why the man pointed his gun at the officer, Ray said.

However, Mitchell "must have known" Bogart was a police officer, said Ray.

Bogart was placed on adminstrative duty pending the outcome of the investigation.

Charges of aggravated assault of a peace officer and unlawfully carrying a weapon were pending against Mitchell, according to a statement released by police.

BANK

In its charter, the new institution and its branches are named NCNB Texas National Bank. Company officials have said they will use the name NCNB Texas in advertising and marketing.

Moody's order bans NCNB Texas from using the names "Texas National," "Texas National Bank," or "TNB" in advertisements or promotions for the bank within a 50-mile radius of downtown El Paso.

In the suit, the El Paso bank accuses NCNB Texas National of "direct infringement, usurpation and appropriation" of the Texas National name. Plaintiffs contend that the similar names would confuse customers and cause irreparable harm.

Clarification

A story in Saturday's Reporter-Telegram pertaining to local screening of the film, "The Last Temptation of Christ," implied local United Artists Theaters managers confirmed no UA theater nationwide would show the movie.

The local managers quoted were speaking about their specific theaters.

STATE IN BRIEF

Grand jury rules man committed suicide

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A Tom Green County grand jury has closed its investigation on the death of a local landscaper ruling he committed suicide but acknowledging someone tampered with the body before police arrived.

Grand jurors issued the ruling Friday and indicted no one in connection with the March 22, 1987 death of Jeffrey Dale Mazuk. Mazuk's paritally clothed body was found at a ranch near Christoval.

The grand jury heard four witnesses, including two psychiatrists who treated Mazuk. But grand jurors said they "could draw no conclusions as to who tampered with the body based on the available evidence."

Tom Green County District Attorney Dick Alcala said the panel's nine-sentence report would be the last official word in the case unless new evidence surfaces.

J. Willis Johnson, a prominent San Angelo rancher and businessman who had employed Mazuk, found Mazuk's body on a secluded part of a ranch he owns.

He declined Friday evening to comment on the grand jury action, saying he had not been informed officially.

Hundreds call for justice

HEMPHILL (AP) — Several hundred people gathered Saturday at the Sabine County courthouse in a call for justice in the alleged beating death of a black jail inmate, who died two days after his arrest Christmas night.

Three white lawmen were acquitted last month on charges they violated the civil rights of Loyal Garner Jr., whose death has sparked charges of racism in this East Texas town.

No arrests or incidents were reported involving those who attended the protest march, which ended at about 1 p.m., Sabine County sheriff's officials said.

Those who converged on Hemphill staged a march to the courthouse, where several people gave speeches blasting what they called a lack of justice in Garner's death.

Members from various NAACP groups in Texas and Louisiana planned the march and demonstration shortly after the three men were acquitted in a two-week trial in this town of about 2,000.

Record tampering seen

AUSTIN (AP) — An inspector for a national accreditation team saw an employee tampering with the records of a mentally retarded resident at Austin State School, raising more questions about the institution's record-keeping, according to a published report.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders was sent notification of the incident Friday by attorneys representing residents at the school, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

The attorneys asked Sanders to order his court monitor to conduct a full and immediate investigation of possible falsification of records at the institution.

The attorneys also are asking the Dallas judge to order Austin State School "to immediately stop any records alterations, additions, falsification, or destruction."

Accurate records on retarded people and their treatment are essential to authorities in determining whether they are getting proper care and services.

Bustamante asks for probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Albert Bustamante has asked for a congressional investigation of Pentagon plans to disband a central agency that handles maintenance at five San Antonio-area military installations.

Bustamante, in a letter to the head of the General Accounting Office this week, said the Air Force informed his office that it had decided to disband the agency without conducting a cost analysis first.

The San Antonio Real Property Maintenance Agency, SARPMA, has approximately 2,900 employees, including about 700 temporary workers, an Air Force spokesman said.

Bustamante fears those workers will be the most likely to lose their jobs if the SARPMA restructuring goes through as planned, said his spokesman, Henry Chalmers.

Clements urges higher workers comp pay

DALLAS (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements wants the Texas Legislature to perform "major surgery" on workers compensation laws because the state's employers pay among the highest rates for workers compensation in the nation.

Improving the Texas business climate requires that the state reduce insurance premiums paid by employers and improve benefits for injured workers, Clements said in remarks prepared for a speech Friday to a group of business executives.

"Texas employers pay among the highest rates for workers compensation in the nation, adding to their cost of doing business," Clements said in his speech to the Dallas Business Leadership Rally.

"But, at the same time, Texas is one of the 10 lowest states in terms of benefits received by injured employees."

Clements used the rising rates paid by the General Motors Corp. assembly plant at Arlington as an example, in making his most detailed plea yet for statutory change in the system.

"The GM plant in Arlington pays nearly $2,000 per employee annually in workers comp premiums," he said. "But at the GM plant in Doraville, Ga., the rate is only $122, and at their operation is Wilmington, Del., the cost is $135.

"Frankly, this is intolerable," Clements said. "These high premiums could force many of our businesses to leave Texas and set up shop elsewhere. It's clear that major surgery is needed to get this system ini shape and to ensure a healthy business climate in Texas."

The governor urged business leaders to "get the Metroplex behind this critical fight," which will begin when the 71st Legislature convenes in January.

Clements said businesses should express their opinions to the Joint Select Committee on Workers Compensation Insurance.

In June, GM Personnel Director Ronald Lee told the joint committee that the plant's 1988 workers comp insurance bill rose almost $2 million, to $7.4 million, from the $5.5 million paid in 1987.

Bankrupt Texas hospital goes on auction block

GORMAN (AP) — Bidders could choose from stainless steel forceps to ambulances as a tiny hospital battling $500,000 in debts was auctioned Saturday.

The Blackwell Memorial Hospital in Gorman, about 85 miles southeast of Abilene, shut its doors in September 1986 and became the first hospital in Texas to file for bankruptcy last January, said James Miears, vice president of the South Eastland County Hospital District, which governs the closed institution.

The hospital's 39 beds and hundreds of pieces of equipment were to be sold.

Under the bankruptcy provisions, the hospital district must accept bids on all items, except the building and kitchen equipment — two items expensive enough for the district to choose their price, Miears said.

"We will take bids on real estate and kitchen equipment, but we have the option to refuse the bids," he said.

The district's board has decided on an acceptable price for the building, but Miears said it is unlikely to be sold because it is located in a residential are.

Mothers Should Be Home For Their Children.

Nothing could be more like home than having a baby in your own private Labor/Delivery/Recovery room—the new LDR's—at Women's & Children's Hospital. We've opened up a whole new childbirth option for mothers that comes with all the comforts of home.

Designed for low-risk births, our LDR's look every bit like professionally decorated bedroom suites. Just like home. Or, at a fine hotel. You'll find comfortable furnishings, a private bath, and even a restful easy chair in this beautifully-appointed birthing environment. State-of-the-art equipment and supplies necessary for childbirth have been thoughtfully hidden from view, but are ready and available when needed.

When you're admitted to an LDR, you will remain there throughout the birth process and recovery period. You may be supported by your husband or other chosen "coach." After you've welcomed your new child, and visited with siblings, family and friends, you'll be moved to your hospital room for the remainder of your stay.

The LDR's offer a cozy, secure place for you and your family to experience and celebrate one of life's most private moments. Call 334-8200 at ext 297 for a tour or more information about The Birth Place and the physicians on staff here. Then, come to Women's & Children's Hospital for the warmest welcome you can give your baby. You'll feel right at home.

Investment banker named to Cabinet

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, displaying his usual unbridled optimism, welcomed his newest Cabinet choice, Nicholas Brady, to "what just might be the most active six months of our administration."

But analysts said they will be very much surprised if the New York investment banker serves as anything but a caretaker treasury secretary in the administration's closing months.

They said they expect no new policy initiatives and predicted that Brady's only task will be to make sure nothing derails the economy and jeopardizes George Bush's election chances.

Brady, co-chairman of Dillon, Read & Co., a Wall Street investment house, was nominated by Reagan on Friday to replace Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, who is stepping down to take command of Bush's presidential campaign.

The president waited until after the financial markets had closed to make the announcement to minimize the impact. But Baker's impending resignation and Brady's selection had been open secrets for weeks and the markets had taken both in stride.

In fact, the dollar has been on a steady rise since the end of June, bolstered by good news on the U.S. trade deficit and better-than-expected American economic growth.

Further evidence of the good economic performance came on Friday with the government report that unemployment stood at 5.4 percent in July, up only slightly from the 14-year-low of 5.3 percent the month before.

Analysts said Brady's basic goal will be to make sure that the government doesn't do anything inadvertently to unsettle financial markets.

"The main objective is to keep things stable and prevent any mistakes that would look bad for the Bush campaign between now and November," said Michael Penzer, senior economist at Bank of America in San Francisco.

Because he served briefly as a senator from New Jersey, Brady is expected to win easy Senate confirmation, but he will not take office until mid-September at the earliest, after the required background checks and hearings are completed. Until he takes over, the Treasury will be run by M. Peter McPherson, the deputy secretary.

Brady is expected to be in place in time to represent the United States in late September at meetings of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund in West Berlin. The finance ministers of the world's seven largest industrial countries will also convene at that time to review developments since the Toronto economic summit.

However, those meetings had not been expected to feature any new initiatives even before Baker's departure. The Toronto summit in June was little more than a prolonged farewell for Reagan as the other world leaders bided their time waiting to see what the U.S. elections bring.

"The blunt fact is that nobody is particularly concerned about what this administration has to say. The world is waiting to see what the new administration does," said Robert Dederick, chief economist at Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

There is always the chance that Brady will be called upon to deal with some unforeseen market crisis, similar to last year's October crash.

But analysts say that with his long background on Wall Street, Brady is well equipped to handle such an occurrence. In fact, Brady was the man the administration turned to after the Oct. 19 crash to head up a fact-finding group to recommend reforms.

The Brady commission called for major changes in the financial market regulatory structure, recommendations that were largely ignored by the free-market administration. However, Brady is not expected to try to change the administration's position on this issue.

The fact that Brady is unlikely to launch any new initiatives in the coming six months does not mean that there are not plenty of economic problems to be addressed by a new administration.

The biggest problem is the still huge federal budget deficit and the related U.S. trade deficit. The national debt more than doubled during Reagan's eight years in office and those huge borrowing needs helped to turn the United States into the world's largest debtor country.

That means that foreigners now own more in U.S. assets than Americans own overseas. Many economists believe this situation has left the U.S. economy extremely vulnerable to foreign investors. Unless the next administration makes substantial progress quickly in reducing the budget deficits, a loss of foreign confidence could trigger an economic slump, these analysts fear.

Brady could well be the man making those decisions. Just like Baker, he is a longtime friend of Bush and is the leading candidate to serve as Treasury secretary in a Bush administration.

If Bush does win the election, analysts said they would expect Brady to continue many of the economic initiatives launched by Baker, who won widespread praise during his 3½-year tenure for his initiatives to develop closer international economic coordination between the seven summit nations.

A 12-car Amtrak train derailed Friday afternoon near Saco, Mont. The train was carrying about 375 people and traveling at 79 mph when it derailed.

Investigators probe Amtrak derailment

SACO, Mont. (AP) — Thirteen passengers and an Amtrak employee remained hospitalized Saturday after a 12-car train derailment that was blamed on tracks warped by near-100-degree heat.

The train, en route from Chicago to Seattle, was traveling at 79 mph when it derailed Friday, toppling at least five of nine passenger cars and throwing passengers from their seats, leaving 165 injured, authorities said.

Hospitals treated and released 149 passengers, said Sue Martin, an Amtrak spokeswoman in Washington, D.C.

The train was carrying about 375 passengers and a crew of 10 to 15, Amtrak officials said.

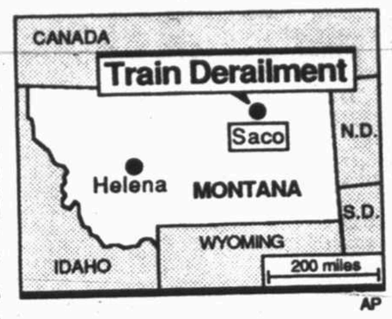
The engineer said the derailment was caused by deformed rails near this northern Montana farming community.

A secondary track near the derailment site was cleared late Friday, allowing rail traffic to go through, Martin said. Crews planned to spend the weekend repairing the twisted track.

Amtrak made arrangements Saturday to get passengers to their destinations.

About 85 passengers left nearby Glasgow, Mont., on a bus for Spokane, Wash., and other passengers planned to fly to their destinations, Martin said.

"It's sort of a difficult situation because the airport at Glasgow is not a commercial airport," she said. "It's an old Stragetic Air Command facility that's normally used for test flights. So it's a matter of getting things prepared for flights in and out of there. We've been working throughout the night with a charter company and airport officials to find out exactly what kind of aircraft we can use out of there."



AP

Some passengers decided to remain in Glasgow and take a westbound train Saturday, Martin said.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board and Burlington Northern Railroad, which owns the track, were due Saturday, Martin said.

Assistant conductor Dennis Cotton said the cars hardest hit by the derailment were the dining car, the dorm and sleeper coaches.

"The first thing that happened was a brief jerk, a slowdown and people in the aisles went sailing by," said Jim Matuska, a passenger from Girard, Ill. "The car was beginning to tilt.

After conviction, Biaggi resigns from House

NEW YORK (AP) — Rep. Mario Biaggi, facing the prospect of years in prison after his second conviction on corruption charges in a year, tearfully resigned from Congress "with sadness but no regrets" and a defiant claim of innocence.

Biaggi

"Not a single penny, gift, trip, not a share of stock, ever came to me," Biaggi, 70, declared as he announced his resignation Friday.

A federal jury on Thursday convicted the 10-term Bronx Democrat of racketeering, extortion and bribe-taking involving the Wedtech Corp., a military contractor that made payoffs to get government work. He faces up to 20 years on the top count.

"Today I actually ended a career in public service that has spanned almost 50 years," going back to his days as a mailman, an emotion-choked Biaggi told reporters crammed into his Bronx office.

Once the city's most decorated police officer, Biaggi served 20 years in Congress and was so popular in his district he was considered likely to win again this year, even with his convictions. But he quit the race, too.

Biaggi said he was resigning his office because his appeals will take too much time for him to serve effectively in Congress. "I wouldn't be able to give my constituents all the time they deserve," he said.

Biaggi, however, was under pressure to step down: the House next month was to consider expelling him for his earlier, unrelated federal conviction of taking an illegal gratuity and obstructing justice.

Biaggi said his resignation was effective immediately and he had asked party leaders to strike his name from the September primary ballots. He had filed on both the Democratic and Republican lines.

Two other men were running in the Democratic primary for Biaggi's seat: state Assemblyman Eliot L. Engel and former Assemblyman Vincent Marchiselli. No one but Biaggi was running as a Republican. Democrats outnumber Republicans 8 to 1 in the district.

"For us, he was a good man," said John Russo, 66, who sat with three friends on a bench outside an apartment building a few blocks south of Biaggi's office Friday. "I'm going to vote for him if I can."

"He did a lot for the people...It's unfortunate that he got involved in something improper," said Aimo Niskanen, 39. Although he believed Biaggi "took the money," he said, "I would vote for him."

Biaggi's wife and three children joined him as he announced his resignation in the storefront office, its walls lined with photographs and plaques commemorating his career. Some office workers wept as he spoke.

"I leave with the knowledge that I always worked hard for people and tried to make a difference in their lives," Biaggi said. He fought to hold back tears as he neared the end of his four-minute statement.

Valve taken out to prepare shuttle for test

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The small valve that halted the test firing of the space shuttle Discovery's main rocket engines was being removed Saturday to prepare the ship for another try at the hot-fire test.

That test could come as early as mid-week, but NASA officials declined to set a date until the work is completed.

"We've got a schedule laid out, we know what we have to do, we have access to the engine and we're slowly, very carefully, making our way down to the valve," said Kennedy Space Center spokeswoman Lisa Malone.

A replacement hydrogen bleed valve, flown from NASA's engine facility in Mississippi, was on hand.

According to the schedule, the old valve assembly that closes a one-inch line was to be out by midnight Sunday. The engine work was proceeding around the clock with three shifts of mechanics.

The task was time consuming because a maze of structures, pipes, wiring and other materials had to be moved out of the way in the cramped aft section of the orbiter before workers from engine-maker Rocketdyne could get to the faulty valve.

When the new valve is installed, all that piping and other material will have to be put back, panels replaced and work scaffolding removed.

The space center told its employees that work is expected to be completed Tuesday. Whether the firing test could be scheduled for Wednesday remained to be determined.

Last Thursday's scheduled test firing was aborted microseconds before ignition because computers sensed that the hydrogen bleed valve, on the No. 2 engine, was about one-fourth open. It was supposed to be nearly closed at that point.

The valve is used to circulate liquid hydrogen at 423 degrees below zero Fahrenheit to cool other engine parts before ignition, but it must be closed when hydrogen pours into the combustion chamber at the rate of 1,035 gallons a minute during firing.

"Engineers determined the valve's position indicator was not giving the correct information to the engine controller," Miss Malone said, referring to an onboard computer.

"The valve was actually closing as it should have been in the last seconds of the countdown," she said, "but the indicator said the valve was open more than specifications say it should have been at that time — which is just milliseconds prior to engine ignition."

Since the indicator sensor and the valve are in the same assembly, engineers decided to replace both.

Republicans prepare for political changing of guard

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans usher out the Ronald Reagan era and usher in George Bush and his vice presidential mystery guest next week at a national convention scripted with Democratic mayhem in mind.

Bush goes to the four-day convention in the New Orleans Superdome as the unquestioned nominee of his party — the fruits of a stunningly strong primary campaign — yet still in the process of emerging from Reagan's shadow. He hopes to use the week, as well, to begin chipping away in the public opinion polls that show him well behind in the race for the White House.

"This is the first time that the vice president has been first and center in front of the American people explaining his own beliefs, priorities and goals," says Lee Atwater, his campaign manager. "Conventions are transforming events and we're convinced the more the American people know about George Bush...the more they will like him."

One GOP strategist, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Bush high command is aiming to reduce Democrat Michael Dukakis' lead in the polls by half, to somewhere under 10 points, by the time the convention ends.

To accomplish that, Republicans have designed a prime-time show designed to depict Dukakis as a liberal throwback and foreign policy novice. At the same time, they want the spotlight to begin shining on Bush after his years in Reagan's shadows.

"Part of our convention will be to contrast the experienced leader (Bush) against the governor of Massachusetts," says Craig Fuller, Bush's chief of staff.

The contrast is likely to begin with President Reagan's speech to highlight the convention's first night a week from Monday. It will include an address by former United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, who roused Republicans four years ago with her scathing reference to Walter F. Mondale and the "blame America first Democrats."

Texas Sen. Phil Gramm, a leading light of fiscal conservatism, is on the roster of speakers as a counter to the heavy Texas influence at Dukakis' convention last month, but also to rip into Dukakis on economic issues.

Reagan leaves the convention city Tuesday morning and Bush arrives a few hours later in a carefully orchestrated political two-step designed to symbolize the changing of the Republican guard. The man who twice won the White House by landslide will not appear on the convention stage with his vice president, although the two are expected to campaign side-by-side before the summer ends.

"We're trying to communicate the notion that we're going to run on the record that has been established over the last seven and a half years, but that George Bush recognizes that he can build on that record," says Fuller.

"Part of the transition of the week, part of the movement from the record to articulating how an experienced leader like George Bush can make America better is creating a little separation. Tuesday is that break."

There is no doubt that Bush controls the convention. He effectively wrapped up the GOP nomination with a spectacular string of primary victories on Super Tuesday March 8. Television evangelist Pat Robertson is the only rival to arrive in New Orleans with delegates pledged to him — 93 as compared with Bush's 1998 — and an aide says they will be released.

The aide, Barbara Gattullo, said Robertson will have his name entered into nomination only if Republican National Committee officials signal their approval. He will address the convention during Tuesday's prime time session.

Thus the only mystery of the convention centers around Bush's running mate, and the vice president says he'll make the suspense last as long as possible.

More than a dozen names have been floated as potential partners for the race against Dukakis and Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. The roster includes Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, both of whom Bush defeated for the presidential nomination.

The other contenders include Sens. Dan Quayle of Indiana; William Armstrong of Colorado; Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas; John Danforth of Missouri and Alan Simpson of Wyoming. Also on the list are Govs. John Sununu of New Hanpshire, Carroll Campbell of South Carolina; James Thompson of Illinois and Thomas Kean of New Jersey, who delivers the keynote address at Tuesday night's convention session.

Others mentioned as possible partners for Bush are former Senate Republican Leader and White House Chief of Staff Howard Baker as well as Richard Thornburgh, a former governor of Pennsylvania recently nominated as attorney general.

California Gov. George Deukmejian notified Bush last week he was not interested.

Bush's choice is certain to be ratified on the final night of the convention. But conservatives have signalled they might try to raise the Superdome roof if the pick doesn't meet with their approval.

"He has to have a vice presidential nominee who unifies the party," says Rep. Newt Gingrich, a five-term conservative congressman from Georgia. "They will run the risk of real problems if they pick someone who offends the conservative wing of the party. They don't want to spend all day (Thursday) fighting the vice presidential nomination."

NATION in brief

Governors open annual meeting

CINCINNATI (AP) — Presidential politics was overshadowing affairs of the states Saturday as the nation's governors opened a four-day meeting with an agenda that included appearances by President Reagan and Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis.

Reports on education and "Making America Work" were scheduled for release at the annual meeting of the governors but neither was likely to knock the 1988 campaign off center stage.

Presiding over the meeting was Republican Gov. John Sununu of New Hampshire, who has had a long, bitter fight with his Massachusetts neighbor, Dukakis, over the Seabrook nuclear power plant. Dukakis played a key role in blocking licensing of the facility that sits on the New Hampshire seacoast near the Massachusetts border.

Dukakis planned to attend the closing session of the conference on Tuesday and also meet with Democratic governors.

Reagan, who has promised to "do everything I can" to elect Vice President George Bush his successor, was to address the governors at a luncheon on Monday.

For the president, it would be his last governors' conference in an official capacity. Reagan was a regular at the meetings during his eight years as governor of California and met with the governors at the White House during their annual winter meetings in Washington.

Children turn in parents

TITUSVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Two brothers who told police marijuana plants were growing behind their house said they turned their parents in because they didn't want their 15-month-old sister "to grow up with that."

"I just told (police) we had witnessed marijuana plants growing in a shed," said Timothy Gustafs, 11.

"We were a little scared because we didn't know what was going to happen," added his brother, Christopher, 9.

Their mother, Cathleen Joyce Smith, 28, and stepfather, Leo David Smith, 29, were charged with possession and cultivation of marijuana, said Lt. Don Nettles, head of the Titusville Police Department's narcotics division.

The Smiths were taken to jail Thursday and later released on bond. The boys and their 7-year-old sister went to stay with their father in Massachusetts, while the Smith's baby remained at home.

Policy under scrutiny

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — America's second-largest convenience store chain "acted properly" in denying medical coverage to employees who become sick or injured due to AIDS, self-inflicted wounds or alcohol or drug use, a company official says.

State officials are reviewing the policy by Phoenix-based Circle K Corp., which employs 26,000 people in 27 states, said Phil Austin, director of the Arizona attorney general's civil rights division.

"There are concerns being raised, and we are exploring them," Austin said Thursday. He said the policy could violate state and federal laws barring discrimination based on sex or a handicap.

"We have not broken any statute that I'm aware of," said Charles Shoemaker, an attorney and vice president for Circle K. "We'll review the matter. But I do feel we've acted properly."

The policy, reported Friday in The Wall Street Journal, drew angry reactions from civil libertarians and gay rights groups.

The Oregon Civil Rights Commission ruled that a similar policy by a chain of car dealerships violated federal laws forbidding sex discrimination, on the grounds that most people with acquired immune deficiency syndrome are men.

Cardinal laid to rest

DETROIT (AP) — Cardinal John Dearden, leader of the Detroit diocese of the Roman Catholic Church for 21 years, was remembered Friday by Pope John Paul II for his "tireless dedication to the gospel."

Dearden died Monday of pancreatic cancer. He was 80.

Before the Mass of Resurrection, Archbishop Pio Laghi, the pope's emissary in the United States, read a telegram from Rome to the 1,300 people who packed the Cathedral of the Most Blessed Sacrament.

The telegram made special mention of Dearden's work with "the people of Detroit and to the poor."

The church quickly filled with mourners and a tent was set up outside wth five television monitors for the overflow crowd.

'Bambi' film mixed up

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — About 50 children and parents waiting in a theater for the movie "Bambi" to begin got a jolt when Arnold Schwarzenegger, dressed in a loincloth and surrounded by bare-breasted women, appeared on the screen.

Parents complained to the management and were told that the R-rated "Red Heat" had accidentally been loaded into the projector Thursday instead of the G-rated, 1942 animated Disney classic.

"It was a mistake, and it's been taken care of," said Mike Baty, division manager for General Cinema, which operates the Towne East Cinema.

Members of the audience were given refunds and free movie passes.

Smithsonian reverses no-sell policy on carved ivory

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Smithsonian Institution gift shops will sell ivory carvings by Alaskan natives despite objections from animal rights groups, who fear the sales will lead to the wanton slaughter of the Pacific walrus.

Carved walrus ivory will appear in museum gift shops beginning late this year, Smithsonian Undersecretary Dean Anderson said Friday.

The Washington, D.C.-based museum-and-research complex has not sold any ivory since a special exhibition four or five years ago, partly because of intense opposition from groups including the Humane Society of the United States, Smithsonian officials said.

However, the Smithsonian said it had changed its position at the urging of the Eskimo Walrus Commission, which tracks walrus populations, and Alaska Gov. Steve Cowper.

In a letter to Smithsonian officials, Cowper argued they have a mission to support native cultures as well as wildlife conservation.

"Ivory carving is an incidental and traditional use of the animal, and in some cases, is an important part of the village economy," Cowper wrote June 29.

The ivory comes from the Pacific walrus, which is not endangered or threatened and which is killed by natives for food. The ivory is carved mostly by Eskimos, but is also crafted by Indians and the Aleuts.

The carvings will be accompanied by a statement explaining their origin and saying that they provide a livelihood for Alaskan natives, Smithsonian Secretary Robert Adams said. The statement also explains the Smithsonian's dual concerns for conservation and the preservation of indigenous cultures.

Adams said the Smithsonian has been caught in a cross fire on the issue.

"We could not justifiably seek to avoid all controversy by simply excluding the sale of such materials," he said in a July 29 letter to Cowper.

Animal rights and environmental groups fear the Smithsonian's market for carved ivory will provide an incentive for illegal killing of walrus, said Christine Stevens, secretary of the board for the Monitor Consortium. The Washington, D.C.-based organization represents about 30 such groups.

"We're very much concerned about wasteful killing of walruses for the use of their tusks for ivory carving," Ms. Stevens said. "We all support subsistence use of walruses for native people who need them to eat, and all use of the tusks and the skins in that case. But we're very much concerned with promoting a commercial use.

"We're afraid this move by the Smithsonian Institution is going to lead to people violating the Marine Mammal Protection Act," she said.

Administration to announce stand on Democratic Contra aid plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is taking the weekend to study a $27 million humanitarian aid proposal for Nicaragua's Contra rebels before announcing whether it will support the Democratic plan.

President Reagan's national security adviser, Colin Powell, took the proposal back to the White House with him late Friday after a series of negotiating sessions on Capitol Hill. But by day's end, the bipartisan support its authors had hoped for was still proving elusive.

Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, said Republican senators would meet Monday afternoon to discuss the package and announce their verdict. "We are worried about the adequacy of the action contemplated by this," he said.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., offered the aid proposal as an amendment to a Pentagon spending bill and aimed for a vote on the measure on Monday.

The proposal would continue current flows of U.S. humanitarian aid to the anti-Sandinista rebels through next March, and provide for a quick vote on resumption of military aid later this year under certain tightly circumscribed conditions.

Rarely has a bipartisan agreement on Contra aid been achieved in the seven-year history of the divisive and emotional issue. Lawmakers on both sides said they were anxious to maintain pressure on the leftist Sandinista government to make democratic reforms and conclude a longterm peace agreement with the Contras.

"This amendment sends a strong signal to the Nicaraguan government that it cannot continue to play fast and loose with the democratic commitments it has made," Byrd said in offering the proposal.

"The Sandinistas have reached a crucial fork in the road. They have to make a fundamental decision in regard to their future course," Byrd said. He said the Nicaraguan government can either continue suppressing political opponents and building its stockpile of Soviet-bloc weaponry, or it can seek political compromise and institute democratic reforms called for in a year-old regional peace accord.

"This legislation is a flexible instrument that can deal with either choice," Byrd said on the Senate floor.

The two sides neared agreement after Democrats offered several "clarifications" in an original aid package they had drafted.

The clarifications included a letter from House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, offering assurances that the House would be given a chance to vote later on sending weapons to the Contras if Reagan makes such a request, and a telephone call by Wright to Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., amplifying the assurances.

The Senate Democratic plan would:

— Send $27 million in new "humanitarian" aid — food, clothing, shelter and medical supplies — to the rebels beginning Oct. 1, when current humanitarian aid is due to run out.

— Hold out the possibility of delivering $16.3 million in stockpiled weaponry to the Contras later this year, but only if Congress agrees to do so in a second vote, probably in September.

— Provide for trade benefits for Nicaragua if peace, combined with democratic reforms, is achieved.

Iraq agrees to cease-fire with Iran before truce

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq's president said Saturday his country will agree to a cease-fire with Iran if Iran promises that it will hold direct talks immediately after the truce. The announcement marked a reversal in Iraqi policy that could clear the way for peace.

There was no immediate response from Iranian officials or from U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who has been meeting with the Iraqi and Iranian foreign ministers in efforts to arrange a cease-fire.

Iraq previously had insisted on direct talks before a truce, which Iran rejected. The result was an impasse in the U.N. talks.

"Invoking what is blessed by God, we extend a hand of friendship and peace to the people of Iran, in spite of the bitterness we feel deep inside for the aggression that has afflicted us," President Saddam Hussein said.

The statement was read by an announcer on national television. A color photograph in the background showed Hussein in military uniform.

The Iraqi News Agency, paraphrasing Hussein's remarks, said he announced that Iraq was ready to cease fire "provided that Iran formally and unequivocally announced its willingness to enter into direct talks with Iran immediately after the cease-fire."

It said another condition was that Iran must announce its approval of "the implementation of all aspects of United Nations Security Council Resolution 598."

Resolution 598 calls for a cease-fire, withdrawal to international borders and an exchange of prisoners of war in advance of talks on a final peace settlement in the 8-year-old Iran-Iraq war.

If Iran still refuses direct talks, it would prove that "it is once more responsible for spilling blood and rejecting the path of peace," Hussein said. In that case, he said Iraq would "never hesitate to cut off the hand of those who encroach upon us and agress our nation."

But if Iran accepts, he said, "We, our great people, the glorious Arab nation and the valiant armed forces of Iraq would be further delighted after having enjoyed the happiness of the great military victory that is based on right and justice."

The Iraqi president said he agreed with proposals by U.N. military experts, who visited Baghdad and Tehran, for the deployment of "international forces" between the Iranian and Iraqi armies on the front.

United with U.S. on peace, Costa Rica divided on means

By REID G. MILLER

An Analysis

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz returns to Central America Monday for the third time in little more than a month in yet another effort to put a U.S. stamp on a year-old peace initiative.

Shultz

He is not likely to do any better this time.

Shultz's latest visit comes a year and a day after the presidents of Nicaragua, Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador and Costa Rica signed a peace plan that has done little to end the region's bloody conflicts.

It also comes a week after Shultz failed to get a strong condemnation of Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government from the other four countries during a meeting with their foreign ministers.

Costa Rica's foreign minister, Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto, signaled the reason for Shultz's failure at a news conference following Monday's meeting in Guatemala City.

"The leadership of Central America will not be abandoned, will not be given up," Madrigal said. "We are very interested in having the Central American countries retain their leadership in this entire effort for peace and democracy."

Shultz also visited the region in June.

The peace plan was designed by Costa Rica's president, Oscar Arias. It earned him last year's Nobel Peace Prize, and he has made it clear he does not want to see it fall into Washington's hands.

After several months of relatively little diplomatic activity, Arias appears to be planning a new initiative of his own.

In a meeting with foreign reporters Friday, Arias hinted he will seek Latin American support this week for political and economic sanctions against Nicaragua for its failure to comply with his plan.

The plan calls for cease-fires in civil conflicts in Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, amnesty decrees in all four countries, democratization, and the lifting of emergency or martial laws.

It also calls for an end to all outside aid to the region's insurgents and an end to use of any country's territory by those seeking overthrow of a neighboring nation.

El Salvador is still gripped by a bloody civil war. A fragile cease-fire in Nicaragua is broken almost daily, and leftist insurgencies still trouble Honduras and Guatemala.

Shultz will meet with Arias upon his arrival here Monday from Bolivia. The secretary flies Tuesday to Honduras and El Salvador to meet presidents of those countries, and on Wednesday both he and Arias go to Ecuador for the inauguration of President-elect Rodrigo Borja.

In Ecuador, Arias will discuss a new initiative with the presidents and foreign ministers of other Latin American nations. He said if he gets the support he seeks, he may announce a new plan shortly after his return.

"My new initiative is to convince the other democracies that we must put pressure on the Sandinistas," Arias told reporters.

Navy looks into radar's reliability

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — More than two months before the USS Vincennes mistakenly shot down an Iranian jetliner, confusing radar signals caused three other American warships to believe they were under attack by non-existent Iranian missiles.

Possibly because no casualties occurred, neither the mix-up during an April 18 skirmish between U.S. and Iranian forces nor a subsequent investigation by the U.S. Central Command headquarters attracted much public attention at the time.

But for the U.S. Navy, the incident raised some of the same questions that officials have confronted in the Vincennes tragedy — whether commanders can depend on information fed to them in a fast-changing combat situation where they must make split-second decisions.

Pentagon sources say a report to be issued this month finds "human error" in the heat of combat caused Vincennes' radar operators to think the Iran Air A-300 Airbus was an attacking fighter.

All 290 aboard died when the plane was shot down July 3 over the Persian Gulf.

The April 18 incident occurred during a one-day mini-war that flared in the southern gulf after the United States attacked three Iranian oil platforms in reprisal for the sowing of mines by Iran.

During the fighting, in which six Iranian naval craft were sunk or disabled, radar operators aboard the U.S. missile frigate Jack Williams picked up signals indicating that Chinese-made Silkworm anti-ship missiles were being fired from the Iranian coast in the Strait of Hormuz.

The ships, which included the destroyer O'Brien and the missile destroyer Joseph Strauss, took evasive action and launched chaff to confuse the missiles' guidance systems.

The Jack Williams' skipper, Cmdr. Edward Mann, and Capt. Donald A. Dyer, who was commanding the three-ship group, told a five-member Pentagon news pool aboard the frigate that four Silkworms were fired over a span of about an hour.

The officers were incredulous when top Pentagon officials later that day said that no Silkworms had been fired.

In a news conference here June 3, the chief of Central Command, Gen. George B. Crist, said a subsequent analysis by electronic warfare experts found no hostile missiles were fired and the radar operators had misread tracks of those fired by U.S. ships and planes.

"What you got was a number of missiles outgoing, a number of laser-guided bombs and missiles coming in from (U.S.) aircraft...hits on the system as they picked up seekers and missiles moving through the air," said Crist.

He said ship commanders had reacted properly because "had they been missiles incoming, and they didn't take the necessary actions, they would have been in trouble."

In response to queries from The Associated Press, spokesmen for the Tampa, Florida-based Central Command said an investigation of the April 18 mix-up found "no evidence of human error, inadequate training or equipment malfunction."

They conceded that the same thing could happen again in similar circumstances but said the report did not make any specific recommendations for change.

"What you had was a combat scenario, which is always characterized by confusion...such a scenario could be duplicated again, in the gulf or anywhere in the world," said Maj. Barry Willey.

"We are changing procedures constantly on the basis of what's learned. All the forces take a close look after something like that," he said.

Some officers have compared the situation to that faced by Vincennes' skipper, Capt. Will C. Rogers III, who has said he would respond the same way if given the same data again.

"The best decisions always depend on the flow of information getting to the top," says Capt. Alex G. Bahan, commander of the amphibious assault ship Dubuque.

Mourners commemorate dropping of bomb on Hiroshima

HIROSHIMA, Japan (AP) — Bells rang out across Hiroshima on Saturday in memory of 78,000 people killed instantly in the world's first atomic bomb attack 43 years ago.

In a ceremony attended by 50,000 people, black-clad mourners placed wreaths on a black granite cenotaph which contains the names of bomb victims on pieces of paper. They ladled water over the cenotaph in a common Buddhist practice showing concern for the deceased.

Many of the bomb victims cried out for water as they died of severe burns.

The cenotaph is in Peace Park, across the Motoyasugawa river from the bombed-out dome of Hiroshima's former industrial promotion center, left as a symbol of the bomb's fury.

It also contains the names of all Hiroshima survivors who have since died. Officials on Saturday added the names of 4,476 survivors who died during the past year, raising the total to 152,650.

Bells rang out at 8:15 a.m., the instant the United States dropped the bomb on Aug. 6, 1945. The uranium bomb, which had the power of 20,000 tons of TNT, exploded at a height of 1,915 feet almost directly over the promotion center.

Three days later, a second bomb was dropped over the city of Nagasaki, leading to the surrender of Japan's military-controlled government and the end of World War II.

"As the only country to experience the calamity of nuclear weapons, the tragedy of Hiroshima must never be repeated," said Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita in a statement read at Saturday's ceremony.

Takeshita, who was unable to attend because of a tax reform debate in Japan's parliament, vowed that under his administration Japan will not manufacture, acquire or allow nuclear weapons into the country.

Hiroshima Mayor Takeshi Araki repeated the city's motto of "No More Hiroshimas" and said worldwide public opinion now favors nuclear disarmament.

He praised the recent nuclear arms agreement signed by the United States and Soviet Union as "a worthwhile historical first step" but said it left too many nuclear weapons in world arsenals.

He also criticized the United Nations for refusing to adopt a resolution calling for comprehensive global disarmament.

A coalition of peace groups issued a statement criticizing Japan for its role in the war and accusing the city's atom bomb museum of neglecting Koreans who were living in Hiroshima and died in the blast.

The group, called the Liaison Committee on the War of Aggression, said the museum refused to exhibit facts about the city's military buildup prior to the bombing.

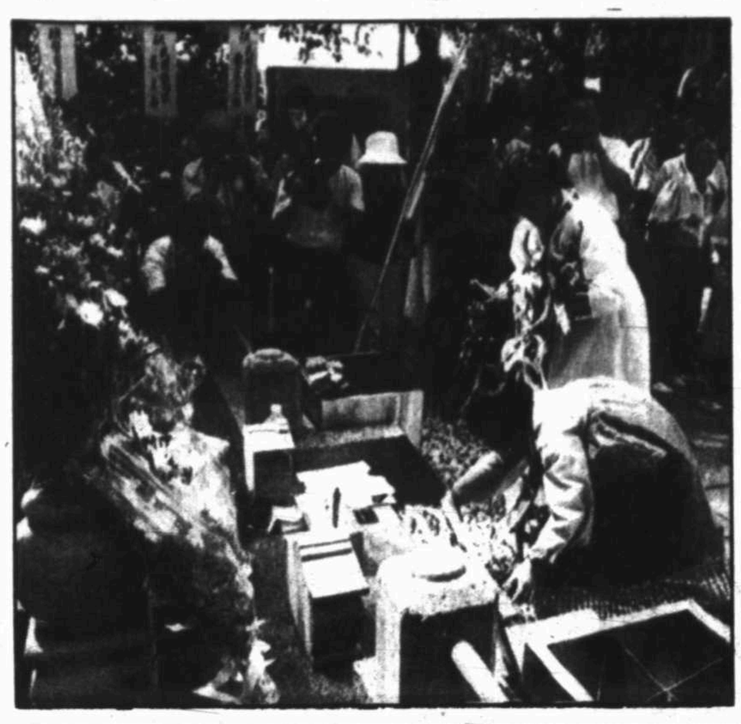
Japan has come under sharp criticism from its Asian neighbors for deleting or altering references to its World War II military actions from school textbooks.

In Seoul, South Korea, about 300 Korean survivors of the bombing attended a memorial service. They said they had been ignored and called for compensation for their injuries from the United States, Japan and South Korea, news reports said.

Many bomb victims stayed away from ceremonies, preferring to mark the occasion in private.

Dr. Itsuzo Shigematsu, chairman of the Radiation Effects Research Foundation, said many victims don't want to remember the day the bomb was dropped because it is too painful.

After nightfall, relatives of people killed in the blast wrote the names of victims on paper floats, then sent the floats down the city's river.



Clad in their traditional attire, young South Korean residents in Hiroshima, Japan lay paper cranes at the monument of the Korean victims of the atomic bomb during a memorial service Friday near Hiroshima Peace Memorial Park, marking the 43rd anniversary of the blast.

Americans demonstrate against nuclear weapons on anniversary

Associated Press

Opponents of nuclear weapons held memorials Saturday on the 43rd anniversary of the nuclear bombing of Hiroshima, and some people who favor a strong defense and nuclear deterrence staged counterobservances.

In Hiroshima itself, 50,000 people attended a ceremony in memory of the 78,000 people killed instantly in the world's first atomic bomb attack.

Actor Martin Sheen was among 64 people arrested at the Nevada Test Site in an anti-nuclear protest. He has been arrested on trespass charges several times while participating in anti-nuclear rallies, which have been conducted with growing frequency at the desert site.

Energy Department spokesman Barbara Yoerg said 100 to 125 protesters turned out for the peaceful demonstration at the desert site 65 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

The protest came 11 days before a planned major nuclear weapon test that will judge the ability of the United States and Soviet Union to measure the size of each other's nuclear tests.

Most of those arrested Saturday were cited after they crossed a cattle guard on a road leading to the main gate of the secret site. Some were arrested after they crawled over barbed wire fences near the entrance to the 1,350-square-mile area. All those arrested were cited for misdemeanor trespass and released after booking.

About 60 people demonstrated at a General Electric aerospace plant in Philadelphia in an observance organized by the Brandywine Peace Community, a religious peace group.

"They had a vigil there," police civil affairs officer William Kern said. "It was just a small peaceful demonstration against the making of nuclear weapons by G.E. in connection with the bombing of Hiroshima."

At Indianapolis, people who believe the bombing of Hiroshima was necessary to end World War II and save many lives gathered at the Indiana World War Memorial during the morning for prayers and a short ceremony.

Kathy Nikou, Indiana spokeswoman for the Washington, D.C.-based Center for Peace and Freedom, said the bombing saved lives because otherwise it would have been necessary to take over Japan island by island.

A second Indiana group gathered later Saturday to hold a Japanese peace lantern ceremony.

"These people (killed at Hiroshima) were not soldiers, and they were not involved in the government," said Jimmie Ilachild, administrative coordinator of the Indianapolis Peace Center.

WORLD IN BRIEF

44 killed in gas explosion in mine

BEIJING (AP) — Forty-four miners were killed when a gas explosion devastated a coal mine in western China's Gansu province, the official Xinhua News Agency said today.

The report said four miners were rescued and that rescue operations were continuing. It did not say if other miners were still trapped in the pit or give other details.

The explosion took place Friday in the Xipo coal mine in Liandan county, Xinhua said.

The accident was the latest to hit China's coal mining industry, which is plagued by disasters, particularly in small privately run mines with inadequate safety facilities.

On July 17, 35 were killed or presumed dead in a gas explosion in an unlicensed mine in rural Yunnan province.

Forty-nine people died in another gas explosion in central China's Henan province on May 29, and more than 50 were killed in a gas blast in Guizhou province, to the south, on May 6.

Gang blamed for slaying

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A prosecutor says he believes that the slaying of a key strategist for opposition presidential candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas was a grudge killing by a criminal gang, not a political assassination.

Cardenas, who finished a strong second in the July 6 presidential elections, contends that Francisco Ovando Hernandez and an aide, Roman Gil Hernandez, were slain by "reactionary elements" seeking to disrupt the elections.

Mexico City Attorney General Renato Sales Gasque said Friday that a gang led by three brothers probably masterminded the July 2 killings in Mexico City in an act of revenge related to Ovando's tenure as Michoacan state attorney general when Cardenas was state governor.

Sales Gasque said his department issued arrest warrants for the three on July 28 in connection with the slayings, although the brothers already were in custody at the Metropolitan Penitentiary in Guadalajara on other charges.

He said Carlos Reyes Servin, Jesus Reyes Servin and Mario Servin Garcia probably planned the slayings. He said police have no suspects for those who actually carried out the slayings.

Ovando, 41, and Gil Hernandez, 28, were shot to death while driving home from a political meeting. Ovando was Cardenas' personal secretary and a congressional candidate in his home state of Michoacan.

Heroin complex seized

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Authorities seized near the Burmese border what is believed to be the biggest heroin refining complex uncovered in Thailand in the past decade, a senior police officer said today.

About 50 policemen armed with M-16 automatic rifles exchanged fire with guards before seizing the complex Friday in the jungle hills of Chiang Dao district of northern province Chiang Mai province, said Maj. Gen. Kovit Wattana.

Kovit, commander of the regional border patrol police, said no policemen were hurt in the gunbattle, after which the 40 to 50 workers in the complex fled into the jungle. No arrests were made.

Kovit said the complex contained 13 small refineries and six big stoves for refining opium. He said police seized about 45 pounds of heroin, 80 pounds of raw opium and 45 pounds of morphine. Opium is refined into morphine, which is synthesized into heroin.

Kovit said authorities were trying to track two hill tribesmen who operated the complex, about 10 miles from the Burmese frontier.

The area is part of the "Golden Triangle," where the borders of Thailand, Laos and Burma converge and which is one of the world's largest producers of illicit narcotics.

IRA claims bomb attack

LONDON (AP) — The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility Saturday for a bomb attack on a British army barracks in West Germany and said Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's condemnation of the IRA was spurring its guerrilla war.

Three soldiers and a civilian suffered cuts and bruises Friday when a bomb ripped part of the roof off the Roy Barracks in Duesseldorf, West Germany.

The bombing raised to 37 the number of British security personnel injured since Monday in IRA attacks in Northern Ireland, England and continental Europe.

Six people have been killed since Monday in the IRA's stepped-up campaign to drive the British out of the predominantly Protestant province and unite it with the Roman Catholic Irish Republic.

Mrs. Thatcher on Saturday called the IRA "enemies of freedom and enemies of justice." She spoke to reporters during a brief stop in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, en route to Thailand for a visit.

Anti-Mafia leader named

ROME (AP) — The government on Friday named a leading terrorism investigator to head its battle against the Mafia and proposed an expansion of judicial forces to operate in major centers of organized crime.

Domenico Sica's appointment as high commissioner came after a team of anti-Mafia investigating magistrates in Sicily announced their resignations last week, saying their work was being obstructed.

Several judges involved with the magistrates' team also accused the government of letting the anti-Mafia effort disintegrate following the conviction of 338 people in a trial of organized-crime leaders last December.

Sica, 56, has investigated many of Italy's major terrorism cases over the past decade including the kidnap-murder of former Premier Aldo Moro in 1978 and the shooting and wounding of Pope John Paul II in 1981.

At Friday's Cabinet meeting, Interior Minister Antonio Gava proposed the government either create a new intelligence agency to aid in fighting organized crime or increase the powers of the high commissioner, Sica.

Local drug task force 'model program'

John Coffel, director of the Texas Narcotics Control Program, was in Midland this week to evaluate the 17-county Permian Basin Regional Narcotics Task Force. He found a program operating so effectively it has been designated a model for other task forces.

A 17-county task force designed to stifle the flow of drugs into West Texas has become a model program less than six months after its formation, a representative of Gov. Bill Clements said this week.

"I am very, very pleased with this task force," John Coffel, director of the Texas Narcotics Control Program said during a visit to Midland Thursday. "I have referred to this group, along with a couple of others, as models for the rest of the state."

Coffel was in Midland for what he termed a "monitoring visit." He met with Art Van Dorn, the commander of the Permian Basin Regional Narcotics Task Force, its board of directors, chaired by Big Spring Police Chief Joe Cook, and dozens of peace officers throughout the area.

"This is what is really exciting, meeting with all of these law enforcement officers gathered for one purpose," Coffel said in an exclusive interview in the downtown office of the task force.

The unit was formed in February of this year after area law enforcement agencies made a successful pitch to Coffel's office for a part of $9.5 million in federal dollars earmarked to fight narcotics trafficking. The group was awarded a $525,000 grant to operate for a year, and set up shop with Van Dorn, a former narcotics officer with the Beaumont police force, as its commander.

The task force was designed as an undercover unit, with officers working in West Texas communities gathering information and making buys of marijuana, cocaine, heroin, and speed, or methamphetamine, from suspected dealers. Van Dorn spoke guardedly about the specifics of the operation.

"We've made cases in 14 of the 17 counties," he said. "We're trying to spread ourselves around as much as possible.

"So far, things are almost identical to expectations. The people here indicated they wanted help with the (drug) dealers, and that's what we've concentrated on."

When "the time is right," the investigators and officers from assisting agencies will make a mass of arrests simultaneously, Van Dorn said.

Vestal accepts call to Atlanta church

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Religion Writer

"I made a commitment a long time ago to follow the will of God.

"And this decision is a decision based upon a conviction of God's will, and that's the bottom line for my life — to follow God's leadership, and I have felt that leadership very clearly.
— The Rev. Dr. Daniel G. Vestal

The Rev. Dr. Daniel G. Vestal, pastor of Midland's largest Baptist church home, First Baptist Church, has received a call to Atlanta to serve as pastor of the Dunwoody Baptist Church.

"I made a commitment a long time ago to follow the will of God," said Vestal, who has served First Baptist here since May 2, 1976.

"And this decision is a decision based upon a conviction of God's will, and that's the bottom line for my life — to follow God's leadership, and I have felt that leadership very clearly," said Vestal, who will be preaching his last sermon as pastor of First Baptist Midland on Sunday, Aug. 21.

"A pastor is a God-called man. You don't go into the ministry because you choose it. God chooses it and calls you. And you don't go to a church just because you think it is a good place to go, and you like it. You go because God leads you there."

Although Vestal is being "obedient and responsive" to God's leadership, he has struggled through the decision making process.

"I love Midland, and I love First Baptist," Vestal said. "I've been here 12 years. I've buried a lot of people, married a lot of people, seen a lot of changes in this community, struggled and suffered, laughed and cried and prayed, and, therefore, I have some deep roots."

He is experiencing "a lot of pain in leaving" because "saying good-bye is not easy," he said. "But I also have a peace that God is leading me to a new field."

God did not lead him to a new endeavor through a vision as he did Paul on the road to Damascus or by writing the message in the sky, Vestal said.

"God speaks in many ways. He speaks in creating new desires and awarenesses."

The Atlanta church has about half the membership of the Midland church and is located within 20 minutes of a population of 350,000.

"That presents me a real challenge because I want to reach as many people as possible for Christ during my ministry," Vestal said. "The church is also very similar to First Baptist Midland in that it is a church that has a vision for world mission and is heavily involved in world mission."

Vestal also feels challenged by the opportunity to deal with a church located within a major metropolitan area because of the complexities and problems inherent in such an area and the call to make the gospel relevant to people living in such an environment.

"From the very first time that the church contacted me, I had a kind of attraction, an intangible, indefinable feeling that this might be something God wants me to do," Vestal said. After visiting Atlanta recently, Vestal knew moving there was the right decision.

He feels his 12 years here have helped prepare him for this move and that he is "more mature" and "more realistic about the complexity of people.

"I'd like to think that dealing with people's lives and problems would have made me more compassionate and more sensitive. I think living through and ministering in times of economic difficulty, watching people lose fortunes, life savings and jobs, has made me a more effective minister."

In this community, Vestal has had the opportunity to deal with some "pretty tough, difficult problems" such as drug and alcohol abuse, housing for low income families and racial issues. He said he is leaving the community with the feeling that "First Baptists in Midland have given more to me than I've given to them."

While in Midland, Vestal has served on the boards of the Midland Commission for Community Development, Midland Pastoral Counseling Center, Midland Human Relations Council, United Way of Midland, Midland Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Clearview Hospital and as president of the Midland Ministerial Alliance.

He recalls 1983 and the collapse of First National Bank as a learning time for him and the church.

"First Baptist responded with faith, hope and love and encouraged people to put their trust in God who is greater than all their human problems. First Baptist has remained a source of strength for people and a resource for help in time of difficulty."

Vestal leaves West Texas feeling positive about his time here and the course on which First Baptist Church is traveling.

"The church is bigger than me, and frankly the Kingdom of God is bigger than one church. The messengers come and go, but the message stays the same. The workers come and go, but the work carries on.

"This church is 100 years old, and it's going to continue to thrive and minister in this city. And I feel that I've been able to link my life with that heritage, and I'd like to be able to think I've made some contributions to it."

He has served the church by being chairman of the Texas Baptist Standard publication, chairman of the Committee on Boards of the Southern Baptist Convention, a member of the executive board of the Baptist General Convention of Texas, a member of the SBC Peace Committee and as moderator of the Midland Baptist Association.

Vestal's educational background includes bachelor and master of arts degrees from Baylor University, a Master of Divinity degree from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in 1970 and a Doctor of Theology degree in 1974, also from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary.

In addition, he is the author of "Pulling Together" and the soon-to-be-released "The Doctrine of Creation," both Broadman Press publications.

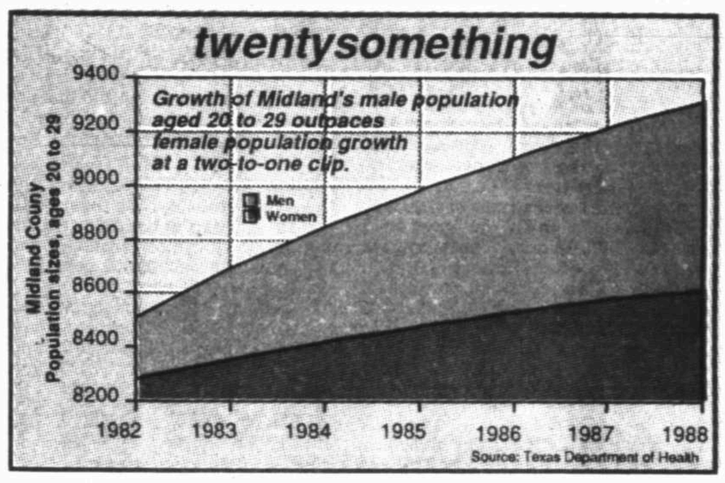
He credits the support of the membership at First Baptist with being instrumental in his successes here.

"Any church is bigger than one man, and a great deal of what I've been able to accomplish here is a credit to this church, to its spiritual strength and to the support it gives its pastor," Vestal said.

"This church has only had three pastors in the last 40 years. That says a lot about this church. It's a mature, strong, loving church. They're going to make sure a pastor succeeds. They have loved me and supported me and helped make my ministry effective."

Each Baptist church is independent, self-governing and autonomous. And the ultimate governing power rests with members of the local congregation. Thus, First Baptist Church will start the same process of looking for a new pastor as Dunwoody Baptist Church.

The process is much like "a courtship and a marriage between two individuals" in that the church looks for a pastor, talks with him, and the two "have to fall in love — decide to make a commitment to each other," Vestal said. "All of that process is guided by prayer and dependence on God to lead both the church and the pastor."



Man! Midland gets more than its share

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland women in their twenties should be having at least twice as much fun as their biological counterparts of similar maturity.

Hard as it may be to believe, there's a man boom in Midland.

Over the past eight years, the number of men aged 20 to 29 has risen by 1,214, while the number of women in the same age group has risen by only 700, according to figures released by the Texas Department of Health.

In 1980, there were actually 10 more women than men in that age group living here.

But according to the TDH's numbers, as the price of oil dropped, so did the number of women wanting to call the Tall City home.

A University of Houston sociologist claims Midland's young man glut reflects a national trend — to the tune of 500,000 extras — created by three factors.

Males were historically more apt to die in infancy, but advances in medical care allow more baby boys to survive, explained Dr. Jim Fowles, a UH human sciences professor.

During the past decade, there has been substantial immigration into the U.S., and Fowles believes more men than women immigrate.

Thirdly, there have been no recent major wars, the sociologist says.

Fowles believes the surplus could drive down the age at which a male marries for the first time because of the competition for fewer women. Traditionally, men marry a woman one or two years younger than themselves, he added.

But while the Houston professor feels the surplus will lead to an exodus of women from work force to home life, a University of Texas at Austin sociologist disagrees.

Women may be pre-conditioned from studies publicized extensively in the media a couple of years ago that claimed their chances of getting married were slim to none if it hadn't occurred by their 30th birthday, explained Dr. William Parker Frisbie, the UT sociologist.

Today, a woman has a choice. Marriage is not essential to her livelihood, Frisbie explained, adding bluntly, however, that the "payoff for her may be greater if she opts for marriage."

Men — faced with the double whammy of having a smaller pool of women to pick from and having some in that pool happy without hubby — may go outside the twenties age-group to find a wife, Frisbie explained.

That scenario could be the only panacea to the resulting "marriage squeeze" a male glut can create, Frisbie said.

One caveat for women here hoping to cash in on the man boom is that the divorce rate is just as solid.

In fact, it appears Cupid is lucky if his arrow hits the side of a barn in Midland.

Statistics can paint false pictures, Frisbie cautioned. It would be incorrect to assume that in 1987 there was a 75 percent divorce rate in Midland because 899 divorces and 1,167 marriages were recorded.

But according to statistics from the Midland county and district clerks, for every four marriages performed in Midland, there have been about three divorces decreed since 1980.

In 1984, there appeared to be a lull in that rate. There were 1,401 marriages and only 654 divorces — the lowest corresponding statistics for the eight-year period.

A Midland district judge who grants divorces every day explained that in 1984, the bust was just beginning and many married couples didn't know what they were going to do.

Acknowledged 318th State District Judge Dean Rucker: "From a judge's perspective, we've been pretty busy."

LULAC, school officials address dropout issue

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The dropout rate of Hispanic youth from Midland schools is 25 percent — or 49 percent,depending on who you ask. But to Midland school superintendent Joe Baressi, the size of the rate isn't the point.

Andres Tobar, the national chairman of the League of United Latin American Citizens Education Committee, was invited to Midland to be the keynote speaker Saturday at the LULAC 1988 scholarship banquet. He said the trip gave him an opportunity Friday to drop in on Baressi.

He presented Baressi with a list of issues the national LULAC office in Washington, D.C. is concerned about — and cited a study by the San Antonio-based Intercultural Development Research Association which estimated that 49 percent of the Hispanics attending MISD schools between 1982 and 1986 dropped out.

"I noted the fact we need more Hispanic teachers, more Hispanic administrators," Tobar, an Edinburg native, said of the meeting. "They need to provide the positive role models for these kids."

Baressi, who also attended Saturday's banquet, said the 49 percent figure is "high," and pegged the actual dropout rate as about 25 percent, which is below the state average.

But, he said agreeing on a dropout rate wasn't the point of the meeting.

"It is atrocious, and is a loss not only to the kids but to everyone," Baressi said.

"Our kids are not flunking out — they are quitting," Tobar said. "What is important is to make sure our kids feel they belong. By doing that, you instill pride in them, and they can successfully complete their (school) careers."

Baressi said the scholarships awarded at the banquet was one of the "plusses" he could name among the 30 percent of the MISD population that is Hispanic.

"It is evidence that Hispanic kids can succeed in our program," he said, pointing out several of the scholarship recipients. "There are opportunities."

Just how much will half-cent levy lower property taxes?

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County's half-cent levy on goods and services is supposed to broaden the county tax base, bringing about a reduction in property taxes.

The taxing question is how much?

"Overall, we'll see a decrease in the property tax rate," surmises County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin. "I suspect it'll go down to about 14 cents."

State Comptroller Bob Bullock estimates the county will get a whopping $4.6 million in sales tax revenues to reduce by 31.5 percent the current property tax rate of 21.07 cents per $100 valuation.

As an added bonus, the county may get some long-sought reserves — a luxury most commissioners haven't seen in a long time.

Ideally, the money would be used to make capital improvements and address the county's space problem, Commissioner Guy McCrary said, citing the need for a new sheriff's complex adjacent to the soon-to-be-constructed 192-bunk jail on the so-called downtown South Superblock.

"That would be one way to address the space problem," he said. "The windfall from the sales tax has given us the capital to do that."

Despite a 6.17 percent reduction in the county tax base from $4.198 billion to $3.939 billion, a 14.43-cents effective tax rate — with the addition of the sales tax — would generate the same amount of tax dollars as last year.

By lowering the tax rate to that level, a homeowner whose property is valued at $75,000 last year, could pay $108.22 — a $49 dollar reduction in property taxes from 1987.

Ad valorem taxes collected by the Midland County Tax Assessor/Collector's office accounted for about $6.16 million — or 70 percent — of the county's operating revenue in 1987. The remaining 30 percent — or $2.64 million — was collected from fines and fees to fuel the county's $13 million budget.

Next year, sales taxes will represent about 35 percent of the county's total revenue, with the remainder coming from property tax and fees.

By law, the ad valorem tax rate is to be reduced to account for the revenue generated by sales tax collections this year. County commissioners in subsequent years are to adjust the effective rate to reflect increases or decreases in those revenues.

The windfall from the sales tax collections is currently being held in an "excess sales tax revenue" fund. Money from this fund can be used only to cover the shortfall in tax collections and other earnings.

After three years, the excess collections can be moved to another account, a "sales tax debt service" fund, allowing the the county to pay its debts. The remainder may be used for unspecified purposes.

Jarnagin said commissioners won't publish next year's annual operating budget until they conclude meetings with the county's 25 department heads.

However, Commissioner Win Brown predicts the increased cost of law enforcement and maintaining the County Jail will cut into the 1989 budget.

"We're going to have to go in and look at that (proposed) sheriff's department budget," said Brown, conceding that the $200,000 cost affixed to hiring 9.5 more jailers is written in stone.

The Texas Commission on Jail Standards ordered the county to hire the additional personnel to bring the recently-renovated County Jail up to state standards.

McCrary agreed that the sheriff's budget will have to be amended for 1988-89 to reflect the rising staffing costs. The court "anticipated that the cost of additional personnel would increase," he said.

In other departments, County Attorney Mark Dettman reported his budgetary "wish list" for 1989 fell about $4,500 — from $416,746 to $412,318.

Dettman attributed the decrease to his eliminating a fourth assistant county attorney position, which he budgeted last year but never filled.

"We have three assistants and we're able to get the job done," he said.

Actor Olmos seen as role model

LAREDO (AP) — Actor Edward James Olmos, whose recent movie role was a teacher who encouraged students to stay in school, delivered his own lines about dropping out to a crowd of more than 2,000 Texas students.

"You are the only reason why you cannot succeed," Olmos told students and parents attending the kickoff of Laredo's Youth 2000 Friday. "I don't care who you are — if you're fat, thin, poor, rich — there are no excuses."

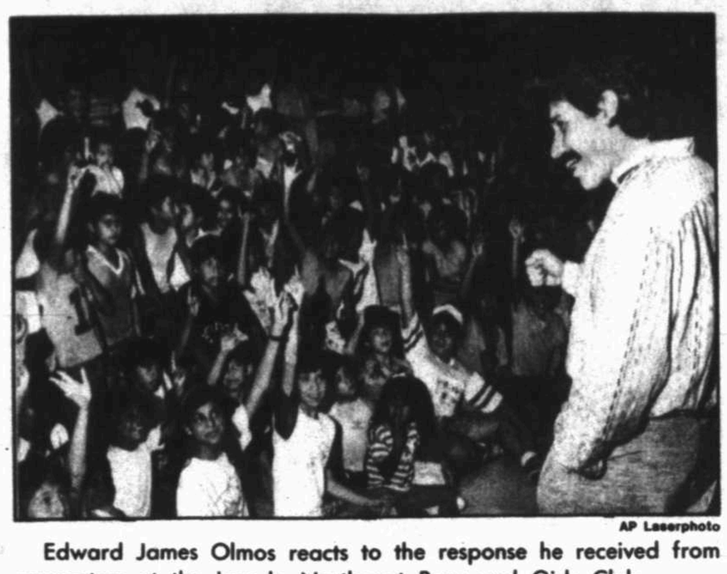
Olmos starred as East Los Angeles mathematics teacher, Jaime Escalante, in this year's film "Stand and Deliver." The real-life Escalante, a Cuban exile, inspired his students to succeed despite great odds.

"Don't stop yourself from anything," he told the group of largely Hispanic students. "Don't stop yourself from dreaming your dreams."

Olmos cheered three students who had decided during the past week to remain in school, despite their backgrounds of broken homes, gang involvement and a lack of positive role models.

"My parents divorced when I was young and neither had a high school degree," Olmos explained in Spanish and English.

"I was the first in my family born in the U.S. I'm from the barrio, just like you see. I'm a vato loco (crazy guy) from East L.A., orale."



AP Laserphoto

Edward James Olmos reacts to the response he received from youngsters at the Laredo Northwest Boys and Girls Club.

Olmos said despite their poor educational backgrounds, his parents inspired him to stay in school.

"The reason I never dropped out of school was as I was finishing junior high, my father started junior high," he said. "And when I graduated from high school, my mother started back to school. And when I was finishing college, my mom graduated from high school. They were incredible examples and that kept me going."

Olmos used Laredo students Eddie Villariny, Diana Zapata and Rachel Flores, as well as himself, as examples for other students that life's difficulties can be overcome.

"Look at Eddie here," Olmos told the audience. "You got the dignity, man. It shows all over. We could make a movie together that would shi-i-i-ne."

Villariny beamed.

Olmos, who stars in the TV series, "Miami Vice," and played the lead in the Hispanic film drama "Zoot Suit," said education and dreams are the keys to keep minorities and the poor from oppression.

"One day we will spend more on education than on defense in this country," Olmos said. "Some people think we need the guns though, but we can beat them another way — with brains."

Olmos told parents at the conference, "your children and their children will be the strongest of any of us. And how will they do it? Con ganas (With desire).

"Do you know that the school in East L.A. in 'Stand and Deliver' has gone from a school about to lose its accreditation to a magnet school — an example to all of California?" Olmos said. "Remember Net Head in the movie? The gang member and class cut up? That character is flying F-16s in real life now."

Williams roast to benefit TSPB

From Staff Reports

An October roast of Midland businessman-rancher-banker Clayton Williams will feature good-natured barbs and brickbats from Texas A&M head football coach Jackie Sherrill, Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

Parade spotlights 52nd XIT celebration

By WENDY E. LANE

DALHART (AP) — Riding, politicking, and barbecue was in large supply Saturday as thousands celebrated the bygone range days of the sprawling XIT Ranch at the 52nd Annual XIT Rodeo and Reunion.

Colorful floats displayed the theme of the State Capitol's 100th anniversary, an event tied closely to the XIT heritage.

It was the construction of the Capitol building in Austin that gave birth to the XIT Ranch. Three million acres of West Texas land were given in 1882 to Charles and John Farwell of Chicago in payment for constructing the Capitol.

The XIT once stretched from Lubbock, past Dalhart to the Oklahoma Panhandle in a 30-mile wide strip. At its peak, it was the world's largest fenced in rangeland.

Although most of the ranch has been sold off in sections, the XIT heritage has been celebrated annually since 1936 with what is billed as the largest amateur rodeo, a four-day event, and free barbecue.

More than 150 cowboys and cowgirls on horseback rode through the streets of this Panhandle town, the population of which swelled almost 10 times to about 60,000 people for the final day celebration.

The array of riders featured a group of fast-trotting showhorses from the Campion Paso Fino Ranch in Canadian, a 15-mule posse of Shriners and Dalhart's own XIT Rangers.

The parade also featured antique cars and state of the art farm equipment.

One pickup with a sign reading "Corn So Fresh The Ears Still Wiggle" tossed out ears of corn to passers-by.

At the rodeo, most of the amateur cowboys went home empty-handed and short the $80 entry fee after taking a fast fall off a bull or bronc.

The rodeo was highlighted by the Pony Express relay race, a contest in which teams of eight riders carrying saddlebags, race head-to-head around barrels. After the final handoff, the rider deposits the saddlebag in a mailbox in the center of the arena.

With an eye to elections in November, local politicians took full campaigned through the huge crowds.

Teel Bivins, a Republican vying for the Panhandle's state senate seat, shed his customary business suit for western garb and rode a horse in the parade. Republican Larry Milner and Democrat Bill Sarpalius, opponents in the 13th congressional district race, also walked the parade route.

"I'm out here politicking," Bivins said in the rodeo grandstands later. "Every politician has to come to the XIT Rodeo."

MALES

Rucker, who formerly practiced divorce and family law before ascending to the bench last February, said by far, financial problems are the chief cause of divorces here.

"There was a great amount of debt and very little property. Credit cards were often charged to the absolute limit," the judge said of the divorce cases he handled as a lawyer.

There is another downside to the man glut, at least from the woman's point of view, explained Paul Cromwell, another sociologist at the University of Texas at the Permian Basin.

A male criminal's career peaks during his twenties. More violent crimes could be expected to occur with the glut, Cromwell said.

"There should be a tremendous increase in the crime rate" if the surplus continues to grow, the UTPB sociologist claims.

"These are your criminals...males and young males."

So as far as dates go, there may be a new meaning in Midland to the term "Saturday night special."

"I didn't think you would have as much dope in small communities," he continued. "It's just as bad in Kermit and Andrews than in Midland or Odessa."

Narcotics, including heroin and cocaine, have been bought from children as young as 10 years of age, Van Dorn noted.

Cook, who chairs the board that oversees the task force, said the operation is "right on schedule."

"Midland and the Permian Basin was one group that showed a large amount of service, an excellent concept, and cooperation between the agencies in the initial application," Coffel said. "That has proven to be true."

The West Texas task force is one of 33 that were formed with the federal dollars. Just before he came to Midland, Coffel was in Austin to announce the statewide effort has led to the confiscation of drugs valued at $216 million since Jan.1.

Through June, the grant program was credited with 2,638 arrests and the confiscation of $1.7 million from persons charged with selling drugs, Coffel said.

The Permian Basin task force this week was able to hire two more investigators, and hopes soon to add Reagan, Crockett and Sutton counties to the area served. It should boost what Coffel has already termed an effective effort, Van Dorn said.

6th-grade problems revealed

AUSTIN (AP) — Sixth-graders placed in middle schools recorded more discipline problems and fewer gains in reading and mathematics than those who remained in elementary schools, according to an Austin school district report.

The report showed that 6th-graders placed on campuses with 7th-and 8th-graders were involved in incidents that led to severe disciplinary measures more frequently than elementary 6th-graders.

It also said high-achieving 6th-grade students in elementary schools performed at a higher level in reading and math than high-achieving 6th-graders at the middle schools.

"We are very concerned about (the report) and we are taking steps," Freda Holley, assistant superintendent for secondary education, told the Austin American-Statesman.

"We are developing plans on how to moderate what we see as a problem. It's premature for me to say for sure what we'll do," she said.

The report also noted the middle school 6th-graders had a 5.27 percent absence rate, compared with 4.52 percent for elementary 6th-graders. The report, conducted by the district's management information department, will be presented to the board of trustees.

Texas section of Ogallala Aquifer rising for second consecutive year

By WENDY E. LANE

SLATON (AP) — Like other farmers in the area, Ronald Schilling pumped water from the Ogallala Aquifer to irrigate his cotton for years without concern about how much he wasted.

But then scientists began predicting that the massive aquifer, a water-soaked layer of sand and gravel lying beneath much of the Farm Belt, would dry up soon after the turn of the century.

"We were irrigating too much in the days when water was cheap and people were wasting it," said Schilling, who farms in Lubbock County.

Now the conservation methods Schilling and others have undertaken — furrow dikes, terracing and improved irrigation technology — not only have helped stop the accelerating decline of the Ogallala's level in this area, they have reversed it for two years in a row.

In the last two years, the aquifer levels in 15 counties surrounding Lubbock have shown a net rise of 1.4 feet, which water management officials call a significant development for the future of irrigated farming.

Strict conservation measures coupled with several years of plentiful rainfall are credited with turning around the depletion of the aquifer, which covers about 36,000 square miles in Texas and extends north and west into seven other states.

"All of the projections were for the area to, in a sense, go out of the irrigation business by the year 2000 or 2010, and we turned it around," said Wayne Wyatt, manager of the High Plains Underground Water District, which oversees water use in 15 West Texas counties.

Named for an Indian tribe that once roamed the High Plains, the 20-million-year-old Ogallala is thought to be the world's largest aquifer in terms of volume. The size of California, it provides irrigation water for the key Farm Belt states of Nebraska, Kansas, Texas and parts of South Dakota.

In Texas, more than 90 percent of the water pumped from the Ogallala is used for irrigation, and the aquifer measures less than 100 feet in saturated thickness, compared with more than 600 feet in parts of Nebraska.

AP

After nearly 50 years of continuous decline — 23 percent between 1936 and 1980 — the aquifer stabilized in 1985 and no change in level was recorded. The 6-inch increase following year marked the first-ever measured rise.

This year the High Plains water district, which tests wells between Lubbock and Amarillo, measured a rise of almost 11 inches in aquifer water stored during 1987 over the year previous.

The 1987 increase represents an increase of 702,000 acre-feet of water in storage, according to the water district.

In Texas, the Ogallala formation originally held about 500 million acre-feet of water. By 1974, it had dropped to 340 million acre-feet.

The past decade taken as a whole also shows how dramatic the reversal has been. While the average annual decline over that period was about 5.8 inches, in the last five years the aquifer showed an average annual rise of eight-tenths of an inch.

Falling farm prices, inflation and higher energy costs during the late 1970s made pumping aquifer water for irrigation more costly. Many farmers switched to dryland cultivation, while others took a closer look at conservation measures.

"We began very rapidly to conduct what we call irrigation application and distribution efficiency tests on the farms," said Wyatt, who oversees the nation's oldest groundwater management district, founded in 1951. "In doing this we could show the irrigator how much water he was actually losing."

New sprinkler technology has helped reduce a farmer's average water loss during irrigation from about 40 percent to 20 percent or less, he said.

Also, many of the region's 17,000 playa lakes — shallow land depressions that fill up with rainwater — have been modified by man to help recharge the aquifer.

Researchers at Texas Tech University in Lubbock are using a system of fabric filters placed in trenches inside a playa lake to test ways of accelerating recharge rates. The filters trap impurities such as clay and allow water to flow into a recharge well, said Lloyd Urban of Texas Tech's Water Resources Center.

Meanwhile, the Ogallala's decline has stabilized in some regions outside Texas, such as western Oklahoma, said Mark Belden, a geologist with the Oklahoma Water Resources Board.

But what is happening to aquifer levels in Texas does not necessarily hold for other states because the aquifer is not a contiguous underground lake as some people imagine it, said John Weeks, a hydrologist with the U.S. Geological Survey in Denver.

In fact, water officials predict lower aquifer levels this year for Kansas and Nebraska because of drought conditions.

If the Texas trend "were to continue for a number of years," however, "this would be very important everywhere," Weeks said.

And while farmers in this area can count on more available water for the time being, Weeks warned that the trend could reverse again.

Nevertheless, Wyatt said the steep drops of past years have probably been stopped.

TDHS to join commissioners as day care center discussed

From Staff Reports

Taylor Park Child Care Center and Texas Department of Human Services officials will meet Monday with County Commissioners to discuss the financially troubled facility, which cares for about 100 children — mostly from low-income homes.

The session will begin at 9 a.m. in the Commissioners' courtroom, located on the second floor of the County Courthouse.

The Taylor Park center's board members have refrained from discussing the nature of the nonprofit corporation's financial difficulties, saying only that officials are seeking private contributions to keep the center afloat.

Construction of the 12,000-square-foot metal-brick-and-mortar building, in the southwest corner of Taylor Park at Goode Street and Griffin Avenue, was a project of Midland County's $1.6 million federal rehabilitation program for an economically-depressed "windowpane" area on the city's south side.

The city of Midland, which contributed $40,000 of its federal Community Development funds toward purchasing equipment and supplies for the center, leased the site to Midland County for $1 per year.

The center, built in 1983, is operated by the non-profit Midland County Child Care Corp. and is funded through private donations and sliding scale fees, meaning children from low-income families pay what they can for the day care service.

In other action, commissioners are expected to:

- Resume budget study for 1989.
- Consider signing a depository contract with NCNB Texas National Bank.
- Open bids on the Midland County Adult Probationer's Rehabilitation Center.
- Consider authorizing the county auditor to advertise for asphalt, emulsion or aggregate and products bids.
- Consider entering into an agreement with Midland College concerning the administration of an alcohol breath testing program.
- Sign a resolution supporting the Good Roads Amendment.

City Council

This week, Midland City Council is expected to call for a tax increase 7.22 percent over the effective rate.

City officials contend that if further budget reductions are made, services will suffer as well.

The proposed 6.48 cent increase would bring the rate to 50.65 cents per $100 valuation.

Over the past three years, council has wrestled with the tax question, only to have it settled by property valuations, which have declined over the same period.

In other business council is expected to:

- Approve plans and specifications for bids on a runway lighting rehabilitation project at Midland International Airport.
- Appropriate additional funds for construction of an administration building at the municipal garage, including the purchase of furniture and furnishings.
- Consider a resolution for bids to excavate an area at the county landfill. The project, expected to cost about $300,000, would add enough space to last three years.
- Hold a public hearing on a specific use permit by John McCormick for sales and consumption of alcholic beverages at a restaurant located at the intersection of Loop 250 and Midkiff Road.
- Continue discussion in executive session on property acquisition for the Lamesa Road project.
- In the same session, continue discussion on a claim by the League of United Latin American Citizens concerning a changeover from at-large to single-member districts.

MISD Trustees

Midland Independent School District trustees will plan to seek bids for the first phase of the elementary school expansion program Tuesday, Aug. 9, at their regularly scheduled board meeting.

Also planned is further study of the proposed 1988-89 school district budget at the meeting which begins at 4 p.m. Tuesday.

After a dinner break, trustees will hear an array of reports dealing with a 1987 graduate study, a summary of the secondary schools' tutorial program, activities at the Alternative Education Center and in the Advanced Placement Program.

'New bank' brings great possibilities

Midland has a "new" banking institution — NCNB Texas National Bank — as a result of the acquisition of First RepublicBank Corp. of Dallas last weekend. But don't expect major changes in the way the former First RepublicBank of Midland did business. Officials of the new bank say the bank's business will be "business as usual."

That's reassuring at a time when the bank's customers may be a little uneasy.

The change occurred because of losses suffered by the Dallas-based banking corporation and North Carolina National Bank submitted the most favorable bid to "save" the failed Dallas corporation.

The purchase appears to be good for all the banking institution's many customers across Texas. NCNB Corp. of Charlotte, N.C. is reported to be one of the healthiest regional banks in the country, and with $26.8 billion in assets is the nation's 18th largest banking firm.

NCNB is also reportedly recognized for its sound management practices. That should help Midland bank customers and bank employees feel comfortable with the new arrangement. Confidence is what's needed. The local bank's name has changed four times in the past decade — from the original First National Bank of Midland at the start of the 1980s, to RepublicBank First National Midland, then to First RepublicBank, and now to NCNB Texas National Bank.

But Texas banking has been subjected to tremendous and adverse changes in the past decade as a result of the oil price decline and resulting effects on the economy in general. The latest change for the parent corporation of the Midland bank offers the opportunity for a new beginning.

Midland bank customers have somewhat unusual needs because of the nature of the oil industry which is so vital to this area. We're confident that NCNB's management is well aware of those specific needs and will strive to meet them in the best manner possible.

We join in welcoming NCNB Texas National Bank to Midland.

Scrappy speaker shows smooth style

WASHINGTON — If Republicans thought they could shake up Jim Wright with a House Ethics Committee investigation, they underestimated his Texas-sized survival instinct. Anyone observing the Speaker of the House closely will find a man undeterred, even energized by opposition.

Jack Anderson

Last month, Wright went on a pre-planned trip to London and, according to confidential diplomatic cables from London to Washington, won over the British, who invented the stiff upper lip.

Judging by the cables we have seen, U.S. Ambassador to Great Britain, Charlie Price, seems ready to nominate Wright for knighthood. And remember that Price is a Reagan appointee and Wright is the chief Democratic bogeyman.

Wright himself raised the issue of the ethics investigation once, Price reported, but "neither his recent publicity nor the close relationship between the Thatcher and Reagan governments seemed to detract from the warmth of Wright's welcome or the depth of the substantive discussions with British leaders of all parties."

Price noted that during Wright's trip, July 1-6, the speaker "met a 'Who's Who' of British politics," including Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Some of them tried to goad Wright into criticizing Reagan, but the Speaker was on his best behavior. "In all his conversations, Wright pointed out the American tradition of refraining from partisan criticism of the administration while abroad," Price cabled.

The test of Wright's zipped lip was the accidental downing of an Iranian airliner by the United States, which occurred while Wright was in London. He must have been sorely tempted to take a shot at Reagan's Persian Gulf policy. But Price reported that Wright held a press conference and "expressed his support for administration policy in the Gulf."

British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe, in a private meeting with Wright, called the incident "an unavoidable mistake." Wright shelved any acid rejoinders and instead told a World War II story about his job on a B-24 crew identifying enemy aircraft. He once mistook an Italian-built plane, used by Japan, for an American P-38. He noticed his mistake, he said, when the Japanese plane started shooting.

Back at home, Wright has continued to look like a man with the wind at his back, not with enemies in his face. Before the Democratic Convention, Wright told us his goal as convention chairman was for the Democrats "to leave Atlanta arm-in-arm, united."

He had to twist a few arms to accomplish that. Sources in the camps of nominee Michael Dukakis and challenger Jesse Jackson admitted that Wright played a key intermediary role in bringing the two together for a harmonious convention.

At the beginning, our sources say, Dukakis' people were out to prove they were in charge and were not going to be manipulated by Jackson. To some Democrats, it looked like the Dukakis staff was picking a fight with Jackson by appearing arrogant. Wright interceded, advising Dukakis and his people that the trouble they were giving Jackson was unnecessary, even if they felt provoked.

Before the convention, Wright told us that he didn't "want it to look like a steamroller" had run over Jackson. Dukakis didn't have to do that, he added. "When you've got the votes, you can afford to be gentle and generous."

By several accounts, a turning point in the convention came when Wright's able political point man, John Mack, met with the Dukakis staff and told staffers their "take-charge" attitude was coming off all wrong. Jackson deserved cooperation. "You don't have to 'just say no' to everything," Mack warned.

Wright was so cozy in his role as party patriarch that his speech on national television looked like an off-the-cuff chat with America. It was.

Wright carefully prepared a speech, but didn't have time to memorize it. He stood at the podium before one of the largest television audiences he is ever likely to face. The TelePrompTers began rolling the speech and, as Wright focused on them, his blinking was imperceptible to viewers. It wasn't his speech. Technicians were rolling the speech of Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd.

Without missing a beat, Wright spoke off the top of his head, undistracted by the words on the TelePrompTer whizzing backward and

STEVE LEVINE

Jackson supporters keeping hope alive

AUSTIN — As the Democratic Party steers toward the middle of the road in its search for an election victory, you gotta wonder what — and who — it's leaving behind.

Levine

With the exception of the Rev. Jesse Jackson's supporters, and we'll get to them in a minute, conformity was the word at last month's national convention in Atlanta. Michael Dukakis' button-down backers mirrored their leader: staid, business-like, driven by form more than content.

Having spent the past eight years looking at the White House from the front gates, you can't blame the Democrats for placing top priority on getting back into power. After all, that's what political parties are all about.

That win-at-all-costs strategy calls for a very conservative campaign. Take no chances. Appeal to the broadest common denominator. The Republicans did it in 1980 and 1984, they say, we can do it this year.

But as the American voting public shrinks — as fewer adults register to vote and fewer registered voters bother to vote — it seems both parties are directing their messages toward a smaller and smaller segment of the populace. Again, it makes sense. That's who votes, and votes win elections.

That still leaves two questions, one practical and one philosophical.

First, can the Democrats win by offering a slightly less radical version of Republicanism, moderated by a call to high ethical standards? The Nov. 8 election results will answer that one for us.

Second, and more importantly, what about the political apathy running rampant in this country? Can either party afford to abandon more and more folks who think all politicians are crooked men and women who don't care about the average Joe? Can our system of government afford that?

And those questions bring us back to Jesse Jackson. While race had a lot to do with Jackson's successes and eventual defeat in the nominating process, his campaign went much further than race. His populist platform attracted disaffected Americans of all colors.

Jackson took chances. He called for higher taxes. He pledged no first use of nuclear weapons. He supported Palestinians' right to self determination. Those stances turned off too many of the political regulars, the button downs who still control the process.

By rejecting Jackson and his platform, the Democrats and their no-risk strategy have lost a chance to broaden the party. They're calling for Reagan Democrats to come home but telling a perhaps-even-larger segment of the populace to stay away.

Jackson backers chanted "Keep hope alive" 'till the bitter end. While some Dukakis supporters took that as a slap at their man, Jackson campaign leaders say they've adopted a long-range approach. Keep hope alive for '92 or '96, they say, continue to mobilize the left-behinds until our political strength matches our moral strength.

Two recent scenes here in Austin say he may have a chance. Walk the University of Texas campus and see the freshly scrubbed faces heading into the business and engineering buildings, the young conservatives both parties are courting.

But walk the residential streets and see the next generation, the shaggy teenagers whizzing by on their skateboards. Their clothes say "Up yours!" to conformity, and their sneers dare the adult world to make them toe the line.

The neighborhood kids bring back recollections of the flower children of the '60s. The Age of Aquarius went far beyond free sex, heavy drugs and loud rock 'n' roll. It harnessed rebellion, forcing an out-of-touch establishment to stop an unpopular war and start caring about people and ecology and justice.

Of course the political embodiment of that movement, George McGovern's disastrous 1972 presidential campaign, burned up in one of the worst Electoral College defeats in U.S. history.

Survivors of that era, however, see hope in Jesse Jackson. They think maybe Jackson's got the political savvy to make it work next time, to capture the anger that keeps many adult Americans out of the voting booth and gives the skateboard kids the confidence to stare down those that glance nervously at their ponytails and wild garb.

That's a formidable force if caught and directed, a dangerous one if left untended.

RUSSELL BAKER

This new generation's smarter than the last!

Every time you turn around there seems to be another generation taking over. They are always smarter than the generation they are taking over from.

Russell Baker

I remember when my generation took over. Everybody said how much smarter we were than the generation that was being taken over from.

We commented on it ourselves. You couldn't blame us. All the reading material we picked up noted how much smarter we were than the generation about to be put out to pasture.

It was in Bugs Baer's column and Walter Winchell's. Magazines like The Literary Digest, American Boy and Delineator always had a piece. "New Generation Smartest Yet" was the usual title.

We used to sit around on the campus at high school conjugating irregular French verbs and sneering at the foolish way the outgoing generation had messed up everything by writing the Versailles Treaty and electing Herbert Hoover.

In no time at all the dumber generation was finished, through, washed up, kaput. Softies among us said it was cruel that they had nothing to do anymore but sit around listening to their arteries harden.

Time magazine assured us sympathy for the wrinkling was misplaced. They were the generation that spawned Hitler and the Depression. They were pretty good at spawning, but they weren't smart enough to spawn anything that wasn't bad news.

Were we to weep because they weren't as smart as we were? Come off it, said Gabriel Heatter, H.V. Kaltenborn, and NBC commentators on both the Red and Blue networks: surveys showed that 97 out of 100 members of the decrepit generation weren't smart enough to conjugate the future tense of the French verb "faire."

Next thing you know, what's this? Another smarter generation already taking over?

Yes, that was the meaning of that snorting laughter we heard when we told them, the oncoming smarter-than-ever generation, to can that racket so we could hear Kaltenborn deliver the news.

That wasn't racket, that was music, they said, and the times they were a-changing, and we had to get out of the way if we couldn't lend a hand.

The handwriting was not on the wall, but the gray was on the skull, the blubber was on the waistline, and the lines were etched deeply in the face.

It did no good to protest, to cry, "What's this 'etched deeply' nonsense about what age does to your face? Etchings are what women went up to men's apartments to admire, whereas these are merely the depressing symptoms that their possessor is not as smart as the wet-behind-the-ears generation."

No, it did no good to cry that, even if you could have cried the entire speech before losing the audience's attention, which was unlikely because, due to the unexampled brilliance of the generation arriving on the scene at that very instant, attention spans no longer had to last more than a half-second.

This was the smartest generation yet. Though we gave way sullenly, we understood the justice of being taken over from. Though we had been so much smarter than the generation that made the Versailles Treaty and Depression messes and couldn't conjugate irregular French verbs, we had been too dumb to see that love was the answer to the whole darned thing.

There are always softies in every latest generation, but our generation didn't deserve any more sympathy than the really dumb generation we'd taken over from just a few weeks, it seemed, ago. As Rolling Stone and Mother Jones pointed out, we hadn't either the moral strength or the musical know-how to repudiate Frank Sinatra.

What's more, as many an abashed parent trenchantly admitted during therapeutic group wallows at confessions-of-dumbness seminars, 97 out of 100 members of the dilapidated generation couldn't play a single chord on a guitar.

Practically right away — how about this, generation fans! — here comes a whole new generation. Naturally, it is the smartest yet. Yes, sad to say, the old generation being taken over from deserves having this brilliant new generation put the boot in.

Who made the mess we're in, anyhow? Who was so dumb they didn't know how to save the country from being taken over by greedy, materialistic, selfish, cheating yuppies? It was the generation now being taken over from, that's who.

Let them sit sadly now in lonely rooms fingering the cracks appearing in the old snapshots of themselves at Woodstock. No sympathy, please, for the makers of the mess.

Luckily there is always a new, smarter generation to take over. This week is no exception, alas.

U.S. should leave Noriega to Panamanians

NEW YORK — A supposed new move by the Reagan administration against the odorous Panamanian dictator, Manuel Antonio Noriega, exemplifies all that is wrong with "covert action" — and that's a lot.

Wicker

First, the plan was not closely held. Partially as required by law, partially to clue in the anti-Noriega opposition in Panama, perhaps to assure that the plan would be "leaked" to its political credit in the United States, the administration briefed numerous congressional leaders and Panamanian political figures and let word of the project spread widely within its own ranks.

Second, the new move against Noriega was immediately leaked to The Washington Post — perhaps by congressional leaders opposed to it, or who thought it too little and too late, or who wanted to help George Bush's election prospects; perhaps by administration sources who wanted it known that anti-Noriega efforts were continuing. The Post cited both administration and congressional sources.

That's par for the course. Any "covert" action scheme with the least political implication is almost always leaked — because someone wants it exposed and stopped; or because someone wants an administration or an agency to get political credit for it; or both. The leak then confronts the White House with a bad choice: lie about the matter, which runs the risk of having the lie exposed; or confirm the story, in which case the word "covert" loses its meaning.

In this case, instead of indignantly denying that the Reagan administration would secretly meddle in another nation's affairs, and officially disclaiming responsibility, administration sources confirmed the Post story. Even President Reagan, instead of denying it, only said he couldn't talk about it.

Those who confirmed, moreover, were quite informative. They said the planned operation was not military in nature, that it was designed to bolster the Panamanian opposition, and that the CIA was "assisting" in carrying it out.

So Panamanians now know, or have reason to think, that anything harmful or suspicious or helpful to anti-Noriega forces that happens in their politics or economy is the result of the Reagan administration's "covert" action. If Panamanians don't understand that yet, Noriega will see to it that they soon do.

They know, too, or he will soon inform them, that they are under assault by the CIA — a dirty set of letters almost anywhere in the Third World — and that the gringos in Washington again are trying to dictate to independent Panamanians who their leaders should be.

Thus, the self-defeating result of this supposedly "covert" action will be to strengthen Noriega, inflame anti-Americanism in Panama and raise false expectations in the United States that he is about to be ousted. Bush may get a political lift, however, from renewed talk of administration action against Noriega.

Who can be sure, in the shadowy world of covert politics, that that was not the purpose of the exercise? Or is the administration desperate to dramatize its new opposition to a dictator who was for too many years on the CIA payroll and who was useful in supplying the Contras in Nicaragua?

Worse than all of the above, however, is the likely consequence throughout Latin America. Already, most leaders in that region disapprove of direct U.S. efforts to rid the hemisphere of Noriega. The new "covert" action involving the CIA is sure to be regarded south of the Rio Grande as another in the long, despised history of U.S. intervention in the affairs of sovereign Latin nations.

Worse yet, this is another instance of the United States doing what it has no legal or moral right to do. The Panama Canal makes Noriega's country of special importance to the United States. A drug dealer and probably a murderer, he is a particularly reprehensible dictator. His ample funds may have tainted some other Latin American political leaders, inhibiting regional action.

But a democratic nation, supposedly devoted to the rule of law and the self-determination of peoples, has no right to destabilize or subvert even governments we disapprove, or to try to change — much less kill or kidnap — even undesirable leaders. Noriega is undoubtedly an SOB, but he's not our SOB; if he's to be thrown out of power, it should be up to Panama and its Latin neighbors to do it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Aug. 7, the 220th day of 1988. There are 146 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 7, 1782, George Washington created the Order of the Purple Heart, a decoration to recognize merit in enlisted men and noncommissioned officers. The medal fell into disuse after the American Revolution, but was reinstituted in 1932.

On this date:

In 1789, the U.S. War Department was established.

In 1882, the famous feud between the Hatfields of West Virginia and the McCoys of Kentucky broke out. (By the time the feud ended, about 100 men, women and children had been killed or wounded.)

In 1912, the Progressive Party nominated Theodore Roosevelt for president.

Five years ago: Some 675,000 employees represented by three unions went on strike against American Telephone and Telegraph Company. (Contract agreements were reached in the following weeks, the last one on August 28.)

BILL MODISETT

Are candidates' politics or personality more important?

Modisett

If you're anything like me, you probably read a newspaper and a magazine to keep up with what's going on in the world, and watch television partly for the tiny slices of information it contains but mainly for a diversion from the problems of today.

You probably come across one or more polls from time to time that presume to tell you not only what you're supposed to be thinking about this issue or that, but also, based on that data, what everybody else in the country is thinking.

I'm not knocking polls. In the narrow realm that they serve, they probably do a great job of whatever it is they try to do. They simply do not provide enough information to be truly valuable to me in determining why people do what they do.

Why, for example, do people vote for a president the way they do? A typical poll may indicate that you are a white, middle-class, American between the ages of 34 and 68, and that you voted for Ronald Reagan because you wanted him to bring back respect to the United States abroad by kicking the Soviets, outmaneuvering the Japanese on trade and by corralling the federal deficit. That may be the way you vote, but I don't think so.

I think that Americans are a little more elemental than that. I think they vote for a president because they believe he is basically good and honest, but that he's not above being a good "poker player" with adversaries, that he will be courageous and tough in a battle, and fair to the little guy.

But those are my interpretations of how people choose to operate. They're not actual decisions rendered by living, breathing Americans.

So, I want to run my own Midland Presidential Poll. You can take part, if you want. The only requirement is that you be of voting age and that the answers are yours and not what someone else told you to say. You don't even have to sign your entry if you don't want. Just place a check beside the appropriate blocks, mail it to me at P.O. Box 1650, Midland, 79702, and I'll tally and publish the results, if any:

■ In November, I'll vote for ( ) George Bush, ( ) Michael Dukakis, ( ) Write-in, ( ) Won't vote.

■ Major reason for supporting this candidate: ( ) Will be tough with the Soviets, ( ) Will support the oil industry, ( ) Will support farmers, ( ) Will support Contras, ( ) Will support the poor, ( ) Because my daddy was a Democrat and so am I, ( ) Because my daddy was a Republican and so am I, ( ) Because this candidate was formerly from Midland and I'm an old friend of his, ( ) Because this candidate will toss some "plums" to Texas, ( ) Because ... (fill in blanks).

■ Under the leadership of this man, government will in the next four years: ( ) Improve the quality of my life and the lot of other Americans overall, ( ) Help keep the government off our backs. Government is truly out of our control, but this candidate is so much better than the other one that it isn't even funny, ( ) Put us all in the poorhouse, so it doesn't really matter who's in the White House.

■ I'm not voting in November because: ( ) I don't like either candidate, ( ) We'll be in a war regardless who's elected, ( ) I'll be deer hunting that day — all day, ( ) Elections are rigged and our ballots don't count anyway, ( ) There are too many elections.

Well, there you go. Again, this isn't a scientific poll, but I do want you to respond if you want. This will tell me more about what Midlanders are thinking than most of the other polls do and, besides, it will tell me whether or not anybody's reading this column!

Film disturbs Christians because Jesus is God

Many who are not Christians or who are not part of the mainline Christian community may have difficulty understanding why so many Christians are in an uproar over the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ."

You see, Jesus Christ was not just a man, He was and is God. No other religion has this as its base and it is a fact that is spoken directly to by the Bible. In Isaiah 7:14, written 700 years before Christ was born, this was prophesied "Therefore the Lord Himself will give you a sign: Behold, a virgin will be with child and bear a son and she will call His name Immanuel" (Immanuel means God with us). Jesus Himself stated this fact in John 10:30 "I and the Father are one." In Colossians 2:9, God, speaking through the apostle Paul, says, "For in Him all the fullness of Deity dwells in bodily form."

Because Jesus is God, He cannot be the way He has been depicted in this movie. In Hebrews 4:14,15 we are told, "Since then we have a great high priest who has passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God...For we do not have a high priest who cannot sympathize with our weaknesses, but one who has been tempted in all things as we are, yet without sin." Hebrews 7:26 states "for it was fitting that we should have such a high priest, holy, innocent, undefiled, separated from sinners, and exalted above the heavens."

Because Jesus was a man, He was tempted just like us. Because Jesus is God, He lived a perfect life, and never yielded to temptation. Because Jesus was sinless, He was the perfect sacrifice to a holy God for the sins of man. Hebrews 9:14 tells us "how much more will the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without blemish to God, cleanse your conscience from dead works (sin) to serve the living God."

Therefore, "He became to all those who obey him the source of eternal salvation." No mere man could do this, only God.

Angels deserve thanks for gift of kindness

I would like to take this opportunity to say "thanks" to the Midland Angels Baseball Club for giving a little of themselves prior to their Friday evening game at Angel Stadium July 22.

My 7-year-old daughter, April Panter, has cerebral palsy and has been in a wheelchair since birth. Her favorite sport is baseball and after moving to Midland three months ago, we've followed the Angels and enjoyed their games tremendously.

A member of the ball team, Dan Grunhard, presented April with a baseball autographed by all the Angel players prior to Friday night's game and it truly "made her day." What a wonderful way to promote baseball and the City of Midland! April has always cheered for the ball team but now it's taken on a new meaning.

Thanks again, Angels, for caring and taking the time to show it!

Dukakis seeks to ban all guns, even rifles

Let me begin by saying that I don't usually talk politics, but I cannot keep quiet about one issue. An issue that has been, for the most part, kept quiet. That is Gov. Dukakis' stand on gun control.

I am amazed at how many people I talk to that seem surprised that Gov. Dukakis wants to ban all guns. Not only pistols, or "Saturday night specials," but all guns, including shotguns and deer rifles. As a hunter and a shooter, guaranteed by the United States Constitution, as well as my own state Constitution, I feel that the people should be made aware of what faces them should the Democrats win in November.

I personally own several guns and hunt a great bit. Contrary to what most other states believe about Texans, we are not all as wild as portrayed on Connie Chung's special, "Guns, Guns, Guns." I am a Christian, a member of Bible Baptist Church. I am not a bad guy; I just want to preserve my right to own and bear arms. Not only for self protection, but the pleasure of just going shooting and hunting.

Gov. Dukakis wants to take this away. Not only does he want to take away my means of self protection, he wants to parole and give weekend leaves to convicted criminals, and leave us helpless. Even the law cannot be in your bedroom in the wee hours of the morning.

At the State House Annual Gun Hearings, on June 18, 1986, Dukakis stated, "Arming ourselves in response to violence is something I am opposed to and will do everything I can to stop it. I don't believe in people owning guns, only police and military." But he paroles and gives weekend passes to convicted criminals so that they can commit more crimes against a defenseless populace.

Gun owners in this state and all over this great country should consider all the facts carefully.

For Gov. Dukakis, banning all privately owned firearms remains priority one. Come this November, vote wisely.

Using military to fight drugs jeopardizes civilian freedoms

By THOMAS E. SZUBA

Thomas E. Szuba has lived in Midland for nine years, after having moved from Kansas City, Mo. He is an independent electrical engineer.

About a month or so ago, both houses of Congress in Washington, D.C., passed legislation which, if finally enacted into law, would utilize military units in the war on drugs. Be forewarned my friends and citizens, our freedoms are being placed in serious peril by allowing the military to control civilian activities. Right now, someone is working out the bureaucratic details of establishing an operational detachment of military personnel that will have the authority granted to them, by law, to stop civilians, if they are suspected of being involved in drug-related activities.

Sounds great. By George, we will finally be able to exert enough muscle against those dope-dealing scum to put a stop to them.

Wrong! This won't accomplish a thing. Except to cause the purveyors of this filth to find different methods of bringing the junk into my city. This methodology is a never ending, escalating merry-go-round.

The use of military personnel to control civilian activity has always proven to be a serious mistake. Civilian criminal activity is a matter to be handled only by civilian police. That is why they are there, to handle civilian problems. The military of this country has never ever been allowed to control our civilian population except at the outbreak of general war. I am not a historian, but I believe these times were limited to our American Revolutionary War (when Washington himself successfully resisted being set up as a military dictator after the conflict), the American Civil War (there were 1,000 people killed in New York when the military quelled conscription riots at the beginning of the conflict), and World War II (when our military rounded up so many Japanese Americans and put them in internment camps for the duration of the war). This was an atrocity committed against our civilian population by the military that to me is as bad as anything the "enemy" did.

Recent history...does anyone remember Kent State? This is what "Military Mentality" can do for us. This is not intended to insult or degrade the individual man or woman in the service of our country. Military units can commit serious human rights violations, and if caught, only one man, the commanding officer or some other scapegoat, will be held accountable.

Individual soldiers were only following orders and are not held responsible. Therefore, they are far more likely to squeeze the trigger than a civilian police officer. Police officers are held directly responsible. Therefore, those in the military are far more likely to squeeze the trigger than a civilian police officer. Police officers are held directly responsible whenever they squeeze the trigger and are investigated by police and civilians to the best of our human abilities to ascertain the prudence of their actions. That limits human error to "one man, one gun" not "one man, 40 guns."

Military activity will start with big drug busts on the high seas and some successes along the coast line and boarders with our neighbors to the north and south. But then you will hear of an attack on a marijuana farm in Utah, a drug lab in Tennessee, a marijuana field in Kansas. The military will no longer be operating "just in our coastal waters or along the borders" and what won't be publicized nationally will be the small detachments left behind "temporarily" to monitor that particular location. Other things not publicized will be the cases of mistaken identity, or improper target identification or overzealous troop activity.

Before this century is over there will be enough troops garrisoned around the country to control the urban areas and enough of them could be corrupt to the point that they would follow a corrupt leader who could be a politician in Washington. This person would one day don a military uniform and announce his "presidency" if he wasn't already the president, and with his loyalist troops make his assertions, "the law."

The folks reading this who are younger than myself, may chuckle in disbelief that someone would write this imaginative tale. The folks reading this that are older than myself, may shiver with the reality of the parallel to the late '30s in Hitler's Germany. His "Brown Shirts" only beat up on the "enemies" of the Fatherland.

Different words, different circumstances, but the outcome can easily become the same. Only a fool could not look around in our own times — let alone past history — and see that every petty- to world-class dictator that ever came to power has used the military to control civilian activities.

The government should provide military equipment and the training to use it to the civilian police, if that's what it takes to fight drugs, but leave the military out of it! We don't need military intervention in our own domestic activities to win the war against drugs. There are other solutions.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 700 words or less.

Hussein's rejection of responsibilities for West Bank a dramatic gesture

PARIS — King Hussein's renunciation of Jordan's responsibilities for the West Bank and Gaza is the most dramatic gesture in the Arab-Israeli impasse since Anwar Sadat flew to Jerusalem offering peace.

Lewis

Consequences remain to be seen. But, like Sadat's brilliant move, it is already forcing open all the congealed assumptions, confronting Palestinians, Israelis and outside players with a whole new set of questions.

Evidently Hussein had been preparing his surprise for some time as his frustration with the Middle East impasse mounted. He was embittered with Yasser Arafat, especially after the PLO leader agreed and then reneged on a joint negotiating strategy in 1987 in the context of an international conference.

He gave his Arab partners a not-so-subtle warning in his speech to the Algiers summit meeting in June. There, after a long memorial to the historic ties between Jordan and the West Bank reaching back before the establishment of Israel, he pointed out how much Jordan continued to provide for the West Bank and Gaza.

The whole legal, police and banking infrastructure remains intimately tied with Jordan, whose currency circulates freely. Jordan pays the salaries of more than 18,000 civil servants, the large majority of them teachers, and supports hospitals, charities, professional organizations, religious courts and other institutions.

Jordan provides the right to its passport and direct access to the Arab world for West Bank people and produce, the king reminded.

But, he said, if the Arabs still reproached him for seeking hegemony on the West Bank, he was prepared to give up these responsibilities. Then, last week, he successively announced withdrawal of Jordan's West Bank development program and dissolution of the lower house of its parliament, where Palestinians elected before 1967 had half the seats. The final cut came last Sunday.

For Palestinians under Israeli occupation, the vast majority supporters of the PLO, it was a dazzling blow full of uncertainties. For the PLO leadership, it was a shock almost beyond comprehension. They have been meeting frantically in Baghdad to figure out what to do.

The PLO is simply not equipped to take over Jordan's administrative functions. As one Palestinian radical said, "It's an organization for liberation, not for management, and it isn't much good at either one." Despite their pledges at Algiers, the oil-rich Arabs have not provided big new subsidies to Arafat, making clear they have no intention of giving him a blank check. Nor can anyone suppose that Israel would let the PLO operate in the West Bank as it has permitted Jordan.

For Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel, it only serves "to prove that the Palestinian people is an invention for the propaganda purposes of Arab leaders." But when Hussein declared "Palestine is not Jordan," it was also a warning to Israeli right-wingers not to dream of a solution where the Palestinian homeland would be confined to the east bank of the river.

For Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and the Labor party, it canceled the long-nourished "Jordanian option" of ceding some territory in return for peace. It will be easy for Likud to ridicule Peres' proclaimed policy in the electoral campaign, though the Labor leader has tried to put a good face on it by saying: "It all depends on Israel. If we win the elections, the Jordanian option will exist again."

There may be something in that. The king's move will demonstrate to Palestinians that no matter how much they dislike him, the PLO is quite incapable of meeting more than their emotional needs. It shouldn't be excluded that after a few months of confusion and distress, they will turn to him and that he will open his arms to them again.

But the situation, and everyone's understanding of realities, will necessarily have changed. One Arab diplomat commented, "Hussein has transformed it from an Arab-Israeli issue to a Palestinian-Israeli issue." It was in reaction to the Arab summit meeting in Amman last fall, where the Iran-Iraq war was the priority issue and the Palestinians' fate was scarcely addressed, that riots and demonstrations erupted leading to the uprising in the West Bank and Gaza. The youth decided they must act for themselves.

This was fateful week for U.S. interests in Central America

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — This was a fateful week for the future security of the United States in Central America.

At issue in Congress was the question of whether a democratic political system will be restored in Nicaragua or whether the Sandinista Marxist dictatorship will consolidate its power and allow that country to become another Cuban-type beachhead for Soviet military power on this continent.

Fearing the Republicans will blame them during the presidential campaign for wrecking the peace talks by cutting off military aid to the Contra freedom fighters, Senate Democrats produced a plan that would provide $27 million in humanitarian aid — food, clothing and medicine — for the freedom fighters but no military supplies to enable them to resume military pressure against the Managua regime if it violated the cease-fire agreement.

The White House quickly, and rightly, rejected the Democratic proposal and continued consultations with congressional leaders to get assurance of some standby military aid without the veto the Democratic senators were demanding on delivery of such aid.

The Democrats obviously hoped that if they could snare Republican senators into a humanitarian aid only deal, they could keep the Nicaraguan issue out of the presidential campaign. That would avoid the embarrassment of a divided Democratic leadership with Gov. Michael Dukakis strongly opposing all aid to the Contras as "illegal and immoral" while his vice presidential choice, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, was publicly declaring his "conscience" makes him support aid for the freedom fighters.

Dukakis' position — that we should desert the freedom movement, stop trying to pressure the Sandinista regime into restoring a democratic political system, and let the Central American countries settle their own problems — strikes me as almost juvenile. It shows an incredible lack of understanding and knowledge of what the Nicaraguan crisis is all about.

Hasn't he paid any attention to what the Soviet bloc has been doing in Nicaragua?

Doesn't he realize the Soviets, with the help of Castro Cubans, East Germans, Libyans, and Palestinian Arab fanatics, have built Nicaragua's army into the most powerful military force in Central America?

Isn't he aware the Sandinistas have been exporting revolution to neighboring Central American countries and that the publicly proclaimed goal of their extremists is to establish anti-American, Marxist regimes throughout Central America?

His apparently naive attitude toward the potential threat in Central America to our own security is alone enough for me to question the wisdom of voting for him unless he wakes up to reality between now and Nov. 8th.

Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., proposed $20 million in standby military assistance for the Contras, but the Senate Democrats, led by Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts want help limited to humanitarian aid while efforts are made to resume the peace talks.

What they overlook is that butter without guns will not enable the already demoralized and dwindling freedom fighters to resume the military pressure that led President Daniel Ortega, the ruthless Communist leader, to agree to a cease-fire and direct talks with the Contra leaders.

With military aid to the Contras cut off, Ortega soon began reneging on his promises to restore a democratic political system and the peace talks collapsed as it became clear he had no intention of giving up power.

When, in order to get our aid to the Contras cut off, Ortega agreed to participate in the cease-fire and peace talk plan promoted by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, I predicted in my column that the Nicaraguan dictator would never agree to give up power and would stall the negotiations until they collapsed.

President Arias, who frequently criticized the skeptics, conceded this week that "Nicaragua has unfortunately failed us."

If Gov. Dukakis becomes president and handles the Sandinista problem as weakly and naively as he has been handling it during his campaign, I predict he will eventually share Arias' disillusionment.

Sign-up continues

From Staff Reports

Monday begins the final week of early registration for Midland College's fall semester. Those planning to take credit courses this fall should visit the Student Center between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. according to the following alphabetical order: A-E on Monday, F-L on Tuesday, M-R on Wednesday and S-Z on Thursday.

During early registration, students are able to select their exact class schedule, pay fees, and buy books. Those completing all those steps won't have to return to the campus for any additional processing until classes begin.

"Those students who registered during the past three weeks and didn't pay fees must do so by Thursday at 5 p.m. or they will be dropped from the class rolls. This would necessitate their enrolling again," said Dr. Don Cates, assistant dean of students and registrar.

Cates noted that reponse to the new early registration system has been good. "The advantage for the students is they are able to select their exact classes and class times, pay fees, and buy books during just one visit to the campus. For the administration, early registration provides a better indication of which classes are going to be taught and which subjects need to have extra sections created."

During the week of Aug. 15-18, time permits will be issued in the Student Services Office in the Administration Building to those students who didn't early register or failed to pay fees by the Aug. 11 deadline. The time permits assign students a specific time to report for registration on Aug. 23 or 24.

Classes begin August 29, and the college will observe Sept. 5 as a holiday.

Bulletins listing fall courses are available at the college, at all Midland banks, the Midland County Library, and the Midland Chamber of Commerce office. Information about fall courses also may be obtained by calling 685-4501.

T-shirt painting offered

A T-shirt painting class will be offered to persons 55 and over from 10 to 12 on Wednesday at the Senior Center, 2500 Delano. There will be a $3 charge per person and you are asked to bring your own T-shirt. For more information, you may call Christie McFarland at the Center 699-5023.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

PTA leaders attend seminar

Thirty seven members representing Midland Parent-Teacher Associations were among several hundred PTA leaders who attended the Texas PTA 1988 Summer Leadership Seminar July 16-18 in Austin.

Featured speaker was Gen. (U.S. Army Ret.) Richard E. Cavazos, the first Hispanic of any of the Armed Forces to wear four stars, who spoke at the July 17 general meeting held at the LBJ Auditorium.

State PTA President Kathryn Whitfill presided at the general sessions.

Among the topics covered at the workshops for the statewide PTA leaders were programs on AIDS education, Project 2000, parenting, alcohol/drugs, child lures, PTA membership, liability insurance, legislation, child and youth safety, learning disabilities, health and fitness, self-esteem, and others.

Alma Thompson, Midland City Countil PTA President, and 36 local unit PTA Presidents and members of PTA Boards attended this leadership training. Information covered included the operation of a non-profit organization, new tax laws, up-coming legislation concerning children and child safety.

One of the most popular speakers was Ken Wooden, developer of the Child Lures program. Several local PTAs hope to bring him or his representative to Midland.

Drug conference set

Texans' War On Drugs (TWOD) announced that its annual Adult Leadership Conference, with the theme, "Partnership For a Drug-Free Texas," will take place October 20-22 at the Stouffer Hotel in Austin. New program offered

A new program leading to certification as a psychological associate or licensed professional counselor will be offered at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin this fall.

The Master of Arts in Psychology, a 45-hour program with specialization in clinical psychology and applied human development, offers advanced training in clinical psychology, counseling skills, human development, program evaluation, and research methodology.

The clinical psychology specialization is aimed at training students in the assessment and treatment of emotional disorders, self-injurious behaviors, and intellectual deficits.

The applied human development specialization is aimed at training students in theory, research and problem solving methods to optimize individual competence and behavior within the family, peer group, school and community.

Students desiring to become Psychological Associates may choose to concentrate in either of the two specialization areas, whereas students desiring to become Licensed Professional Counselors should specialize in clinical psychology.

The M.A. in Psychology prepares students to work in mental health centers, juvenile detention camps, drugs abuse centers, child service agencies, specialized school services, residential treatment facilities, and family counseling agencies.

MAKING YOUR FINANCES FIT

from Patteann Daniel

Don't (ES) Cheat Yourself

Escheat: the reverting of property to the government when there are no legal heirs. That's what the dictionary says. And almost every state has laws directing that banks, insurance companies, and such turn over unclaimed property. Depending on the state and the financial institution, this may refer to accounts that are inactive for 5 to 25 years. Billions of dollars are involved.

An inactive account is not necessarily one that's been abandoned. It may just be neglected; it might even be yours. It's advisable to keep a close eye on your bankbooks, and present them for interest at least once a year.

When actor W.C. Fields died, they say, he had scattered his fortune in so many bank accounts that some have not been found to this day.

List your assets. Don't forget insurance policies, including those paid for by your company, plus any interest you may have in profit-sharing or pension plans.

If you move, be sure to get back any security deposits you've made.

Don't neglect your safe deposit box. Pay the rental regularly, or its contents may be deemed abandoned.

In some states, you can recover property from the state. You'll need proof of ownership and other information.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

'Mature Student Orientation' designed for older collegians

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

Still not sure about whether you want to attend college with all those teenagers? Since the average age at MC is about 29 years, you wouldn't be alone.

But a "Mature Student Orientation" on Thursday, Aug. 11, is especially for those of you who haven't attended college or have been away for several years.

A college counselor, Dr. Elizabeth Robinette-Merckle, will conduct the orientation from 1:30-2:30 p.m. Thursday, explaining how to succeed, study tips, student services, and ending with a tour of the campus.

There's no charge, but you are asked to call 685-4566 in advance to register and get the room assignment.

And since Dr. Robinette-Merckle herself returned to college after being away for some time, she knows what you are facing...and how you feel about the prospect.

• • •

If it seems the new early registration has been going on forever, you aren't too far off. But it's really just been three weeks, and there's just one more week for the early registration system to be in operation.

Those planning on taking credit courses this fall should come to the Student Center between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. according to the following alphabetical schedule: A-E on Monday, F-L on Tuesday, M-R on Wednesday, and S-Z on Thursday. During one visit you can take care of paperwork, see counselors, register for specific classes, pay fees, and even buy books.

Students who registered early during the past three weeks and didn't pay their fees, must do so by Thursday or they will be dropped from class rolls. This would necessitate their re-registering Aug. 23 or 24.

Prospective students who don't register this week can obtain time permits during the week of Aug. 15-19, assigning them times to come for official registration on Aug. 23 or 24. Time permits will be issued in the Registrar's office, Administration Building.

Fall semester classes will begin Aug. 29.

Two business seminars are being held this month under auspices of the Midland Economic Development Center at Midland College and the Permian Basin Private Industry Council. The seminars are free and will be conducted at Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane. Each one starts at 7 p.m. and lasts until 9 p.m.

The seminar on Monday, Aug. 8, is entitled "Business Feasibility Studies" and the one on Monday, Aug. 15, is "Developing a Business Plan."

Purpose of the seminars is to assist business owners or those who are thinking about starting businesses. The programs will explain factors involved for starting businesses, expanding operations, entering new markets, and introducing new products.

Although there's no charge, those wishing to enroll are asked to call Midland College at 685-4657 to register.

Co-sponsoring the seminars with Midland College are the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Midland Chamber of Commerce, Permian Basin Private Industry Council, Service Corps of Retired Executives/Active Corps of Executives, Small Business Administration, and Students in Free Enterprise.

Graduation ceremonies for the 1988 Vocational Nursing, Respiratory Therapy, and Radiography classes are scheduled for 7 p.m. Thursday in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Most of the graduates already have been employed locally, although they still have to sit for the state exams to become licensed or registered.

The one-year Vocational Nursing program was one of the first instituted by Midland College and has provided hundreds of well-trained nurses to the health care field since it began. The Respiratory Therapy program operates both one-year certificate and two-year associate degree programs, while Radiography is a two-year associate degree program.

Applause is due for the students, but also to their dedicated instructors and to the health care facilities in the Permian Basin which provide clinical sites for students as a vital part of their training.

A story last week by Reporter-Telegram assistant sports editor Terry Williamson lamented the loss of a Midland College basketball signee to the University of Houston.

It points up a problem which all the junior college coaching profession battles. There actually are two problems. One is that the National Junior College Athletic Association doesn't have a national letter of intent, binding on all members of the NJCAA. Region V of the NJCAA, which includes all of Texas and two schools in New Mexico now has a regional letter. This prevents a player from signing with one Texas junior college and then deciding to go play at another.

Second, the junior college have no protection at all from NCAA schools, which don't recognize NJCAA signings. Thus the player in question signed with Midland, re-took his college entrance test and had a score above the NCAA minimum, which allowed him to sign with Houston.

What is happening now because of Proposition 48, the NCAA rule which requires high school students to have minimum ACT or SAT test scores, is that many players are signing with a junior college as a hedge against not passing the college entrance exam. If they pass, they can renege on their junior college signing and go to a university. If they don't pass, they have their junior college scholarship to fall back on. Otherwise, they would have to pay their own way to a university and be ineligible for a year.

Proposition 48 also requires that a high school graduate entering a junior college and participating in athletics must graduate from that junior college in order to transfer to a university, unless the athlete is willing to sit out a year.

For the most part, Proposition 48 does what it was designed to do: admit only those student-athletes capable of passing regular university courses. But it also treats the junior colleges somewhat unfairly. Of course, junior colleges also are free to sign high school students who have signed with universities, but that doesn't happen often.

Frequently seen on campus are many almost-tame rabbits. Mostly cottontails, they have been born and reared among the humans on campus and are so accustomed to people you can walk within a few feet of them.

However, they also have no fear of other animals. As a result, some of them have been caught and killed by dogs which are brought to the campus by their humans and turned loose to romp at will. This is distressing to students and employees, who would prefer that visiting dogs be kept on leashes.

High school choir camp to begin August 15 at Odessa College

ODESSA — Registration for Odessa College's annual high school choir camp is slated from 2 to 4 p.m. Aug. 14 in the recital hall of the Jack Rodgers Fine Arts Building.

'Tough-guy' actor Ralph Meeker dies

Meeker

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ralph Meeker, whose portrayal of cocky tough guys had him teamed with such stars as John Wayne, Jimmy Stewart and Henry Fonda in a career on stage, screen and television, is dead. He was 67.

Meeker died of a heart attack Friday at the Motion Picture and Television Hospital in Woodland Hills. He had been admitted to the hospital 11 months ago, said spokeswoman Jean Ferris.

He had suffered a series of strokes over the past eight years, said Jim Bacon, a longtime friend.

Meeker, who originated the role of the disillusioned drifter Hal Carter in William Inge's Pulitzer Prize-winning Broadway play "Picnic" also portrayed the hard-bitten detective Mike Hammer in the movie "Kiss Me Deadly"

He appeared in more than 50 movies and dozens of Broadway plays, and starred for two years in the 1960s television show "Not for Hire."

Born Ralph Rathgeber in Minneapolis on Nov. 21, 1920, Meeker got into pictures through his success in "Picnic," which opened on Broadway in 1953.

Some of Meeker's films included "The Dirty Dozen" and "Brannigan" with Wayne and "The Naked Spur" with Stewart.

Funeral services are scheduled Tuesday at the Motion Picture and Television Hospital chapel, said Meeker's former wife, Colleen.

Meeker is survived by his wife, Millie.

PHILMONT, N.Y. (AP) — Residents in Oliver North's hometown have decided to cancel the second annual "Oliver North Day."

"He's kind of dropped out of sight," Mayor Philip Mossman said. "Instead we'll just have our community day on August 27."

Mossman, who organized last year's parade and celebration for North, a leading figure in the Iran-Contra scandal but who is remembered fondly here as "Larry," said North has not forgotten his hometown.

"He sent a letter in June to his 1963 graduating class from Taconic Hills High School when he couldn't attend the reunion," Mossman said.

North didn't attend last year's celebration because the FBI advised him that "there would be a lot of nuts here for Ollie North Day," Mossman said.

About 2,000 people lined the parade route, some carrying placards that read "Our Larry, Right Or Wrong." But about one third of the onlookers carried signs critical of North.

Mossman, who runs a local tavern in addition to acting as mayor, said a local group establishing a legal defense fund for North has raised about $40,000.

"But he won't be needing much money now," said Mossman, who predicts President Reagan will pardon North after the November election. "That'll be it, the president will pardon Larry right afterward."

BARNSTABLE, Mass. (AP) — Joan Kennedy, former wife of U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, has been scheduled to stand trial Sept. 13 on a drunken driving charge.

The trial date was set Thursday after a telephone conference between her attorney, Patrick Butler of Hyannis, and Assistant Barnstable County District Attorney Richard Piazza.

Mrs. Kennedy, 51, has pleaded innocent.

She was arrested and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol July 5 in Craigville on Cape Cod after the car she was driving hit a fence, police said. She escaped injury.

Mrs. Kennedy refused to take a breath test after the crash, Piazza said. Refusal to take the test means an automatic 120-day suspension of her driver's license.

Mrs. Kennedy was fined $200 and her license suspended for six months in 1974 after she pleaded guilty to drunken driving in Virginia.

Mrs. Kennedy, who joined Alcoholic Anonymous, divorced Kennedy, D-Mass., in 1983.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton has taken a lot of ribbing over his lengthy speech at the Democratic National Convention, but he told a group of students about his most embarrassing moment.

"In the 1970s when I was campaigning for Congress in a Rogers parking lot in front of about 100 people I split my pants wide open," Clinton said Friday.

Clinton, speaking to about 600 first- to eighth-grade students attending a summer program for gifted students, said he likes to look at the bright side of why his convention speech went twice as long as it was supposed to.

"It was interrupted a lot by applause but basically it was my fault," he said.

Clinton also told the students about his social life.

When asked if he went on dates, Clinton said, "With my wife, yes."

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Aug. 5, 1988.

KEY SENATE VOTE

Senate clears trade bill. The Senate made the final move on long-awaited trade legislation Aug. 3, clearing for the president's signature a sweeping revision of U.S. trade law. The lopsided 85-11 vote caps more than three years of bipartisan effort in the House and Senate.

The trade bill is identical to one passed overwhelmingly by the House July 13 and is nearly identical to a measure vetoed by President Reagan May 24. Democratic leaders offered the revised trade bill in June, omitting two key provisions sharply criticized by the president: one requiring notification of plant closings and mass layoffs and another restricting Alaskan oil exports.

With the removal of the two controversial provisions, quick passage of the new trade bill seemed likely, but the Senate held off on a floor vote until the president's announcement Aug. 2 that he would let a separate plant-closing notification bill become law.

The revised trade measure extends presidential authority to negotiate trade agreements; expands benefits to workers hurt by unfair imports and dislocations; streamlines controls of exports of high technology to Soviet-bloc countries; and beefs up export promotion, education and training programs.

Supporters of the trade bill praised its scope in promoting U.S. competitiveness abroad, strengthening the president's role in trade negotiations, and promoting the interests of both workers and businesses. "Our workers should not have to wait until our trade deficit approaches disaster levels before the government acts," said George J. Mitchell, D-Maine. "Our businesses should not have to hope for a dangerous trade deficit before they can be assured that our laws will be enforced. We need a trade policy...now." Opponents of the bill acknowledged the need for trade reform, but insisted the measure before them would neither remedy a high trade deficit nor help to open foreign markets. Instead, they feared, it would increase the federal deficit and injure U.S. trade policy by encouraging punitive action against trading partners. "I cannot support a bill which would needlessly complicate...foreign relations," said Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., "and perhaps dampen our nation's economic growth." Voting for the trade bill: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).

Voting against: None.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

House agrees to continue homeless aid. Brushing aside token opposition, the House Aug. 3 approved, 333-80, a bill calling for hundreds of millions of dollars in aid to the nation's homeless.

The measure would reauthorize 15 programs created under last year's Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act. Spending under the bill would total about $642.5 million in fiscal 1989. The bill would cost an estimated $1.3 billion over two years if the programs were fully funded in 1989 and allowed to grow with inflation in 1990.

Senators are currently working on their own version of a homeless aid bill, which is expected to provide less funding than the House's.

The administration opposed the bill, saying it supports reauthorizing only parts of the McKinney Act. President Reagan's budget requested $195 million for seven programs in the bill and nothing for the rest.

Proponents of homeless aid claimed the bill was necessary to provide emergency assistance to people out on the streets. "This bill represents the continuing commitment by Congress to assist the homeless....(I)t expands upon and perfects the initial McKinney Act," declared Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas.

However, opponents argued that federal assistance to help the homeless was not the solution to the problem. "(T)he McKinney Act has done nothing to mitigate the homeless problem or offer any long-term solutions....Instead, with this legislation, we are creating a permanent homeless infrastructure," said David Dreier, R-Calif.

Voting for the homeless aid bill: Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D).

Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R).

Paired No: Boulter (R).

House approves $1.25 billion for Japanese-Americans. The House followed earlier Senate action by approving a House-Senate compromise bill giving $1.25 billion in reparations to Japanese-Americans interned during World War II. The 257-156 vote Aug. 4 sent the measure to the president.

Each surviving internee would receive $20,000 under the bill.

Heirs of internees who die after the bill becomes law would receive payments in limited instances, but descendants of other internees would not be eligible for reparations. The bill also provides $21.4 million in compensation to Aleuts, who were evacuated in 1942 from their native islands off the coast of Alaska.

In the past, President Reagan has opposed the bill as unnecessary and too costly, but now says he will sign it.

The measure's proponents spoke of the need to redress the terrible wrong that had been done to Japanese-Americans in the name of U.S. security during World War II. "Governments make mistakes...(W)hat distinguishes our form of government from others is that in a democracy based on the inherent constitutional rights of individuals mistakes must be acknowledged and compensation awarded," Rep. Patricia F. Saiki, R-Hawaii, stated.

Opponents took no joy in arguing against the proposal, but they found the idea of relatively small individual payments an inappropriate response to the misdeed. "It seems to me that to support this bill...one must find a cause and effect relationship...I simply cannot match (the) proclaimed sensitivity with the very arbitrary, cold, mechanistic formula contained in this bill. Those two things...do not properly recognize the nature of the wrong," Norman D. Shumway, R-Calif., suggested.

Voting to compensate World War II Japanese-American internees: Gonzalez (D).

Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D).

Paired No: Boulter (R).

House OKs tax measure. The House Aug. 4 approved, 380-25, tax legislation that would correct drafting mistakes in the 1986 and 1987 tax laws that have plagued accountants and tax attorneys and embarrassed the Congress.

The bill would keep alive expiring tax breaks for employer-provided educational assistance, research expenditures, low-income rental housing and employment of handicapped and disadvantaged workers.

Voting for the tax corrections bill: Smith (R), Combest (R), Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D).

Man to serve time for sexual assaults on boys

AUSTIN (AP) — A 38-year-old man was sentenced to shock probation in prison and one year in jail, after pleading guilty to two counts of sexual assault on a child and one count of attempted sexual assault on a child.

William Kelsey, who told prosecutors he wanted the death penalty, pleaded guilty to the criminal charges Friday.

State District Judge Jon Wisser sentenced Kelsey to 10-year prison terms for each sexual assault, but suspended them and ordered him to serve 165 days in state prison before being placed on probation.

On the attempted sexual assault charge, Wisser ordered Kelsey to serve one year in Travis County Jail after being released from prison.

Kelsey, who has been in jail since his arrest in June, confessed to befriending boys he found fishing or playing in secluded areas near creekbeds, and then sexually assaulting them, said Patricia Robertson, assistant Travis County district attorney.

Aviatrix Pancho Barnes featured in TV movie

By SUZANNE GAMBOA

DENTON (AP) — In the autobiography of test pilot Chuck Yeager, pioneer flyer Pancho Barnes is recalled by her colleagues as a foul-mouthed hell-raiser with a face "like a bucket of worms."

Actress Valerie Bertinelli portrays the portly debutante-turned-adventure-seeker in "Pancho Barnes," a new television movie about her free-style life. The movie's producers admit it was not casting for physical resemblance.

"The joke here is Charlie looks more like her when he puts on his wig," said publicist Joyce Brooks, referring to "King Charlie" Hillard, a Fort Worth car dealer and aerobatic pilot who performs some of the flying stunts for Ms. Bertinelli in the movie.

The memoir of the famous test pilot, "Yeager," attributes the colorful description of Pancho's appearance to Yeager's friend Russ Schleeh.

Executive producer Blue Andre says she sees no problem with casting Ms. Bertinelli in the role.

"There are no actresses that looked like Pancho Barnes looked," said Ms. Andre, producer of the award-winning television movie "A Time To Live" starring Liza Minelli. "Also we are not trying to do a docu-drama...this is based on her character and the spirit of it is what we hope to capture."

It took four years of combing through letters, photos, aviation books and other research materials before Ms. Andre was ready to film the three-hour feature, being shot this summer entirely in Texas with largely in-state crew, staff and actors.

Her subject, "Pancho," was born Florence Leontine Lowe. The granddaughter of Thaddeus Lowe, a scientist who used hydrogen balloons for artillery observation in the Civil War, she tossed aside her genteel rearing and her marriage to the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes to pursue her true love — flying.

She became one of America's top-rated female pilots and the principal stunt pilot for many Hollywood movies.

In 1930, she flew her Travelaire Mystery Ship at an average speed of 196.19 mph to wrest the world's speed record for women from Amelia Earhart.

But Pancho Barnes was better known for the rowdy hospitality she offered to the greatest pilots of her era at her California desert hangout, Pancho's Fly Inn. It later became known as the Happy Bottom Riding Club, and eventually was swallowed by the expansion of Edwards Air Force Base.

Ms. Bertinelli acknowledges she doesn't look like the woman she'll be portraying but notes she grew up with three brothers and is very much a tomboy.

"They sent me the script and I said, 'Yeah, she's a really cool woman,' and then I read Chuck Yeager. God! The way he talks about her," Ms. Bertinelli said. "When I talked to Chuck Yeager, I said, 'What is it about Pancho that men loved so much?' He goes, 'Uh, uh, pilots. Pilots loved her.' "

With at least 25 vintage aircraft that rent for an average $5,000, and expert stunt pilots, the film's flying scenes could be just as action-packed as Ms. Barne's life.

In one stunt, Hillard, doubling for Ms. Bertinelli, maneuvers a World War I Stampe, with a wing span of 30 feet, through the 50 feet-wide opening of a steel hangar. Exiting through the rear, he accelerates upward to avoid nearby lean, but sturdy cactus.

The hangar stunt actually was performed by Paul Mantz in 1935.

"The problem is Pancho is no longer here and we know she did do some work in some Howard Hughes movies, it's just that no one documented what she did so they just lifted one stunt out that was pretty famous," said Hillard, president of national Eagle Aerobatic Team.

But the adjustments in history don't bother Hillard, who located the planes as aviation coordinator for the film. "I think this is going to be a neat little film. I think it's going to be one of the best aviation films ever done."

Many of the planes used for filming were stored at Hartlee Field, a grassy airstrip in this North Texas city once used as a World War I training field.

The field, operated by the non-profit Fighting Air Command, houses a museum of vintage aircraft that are maintained in flying condition, said Allan Clark, airport manager and museum director.

Scenes also are being filmed in Oak Grove, Dallas and Forney and will wrap up in Galveston at the end of August.

"The thing that allows us to do a picture like this is because we do have a single sponsor and because they do want it to be that much more special and that much more special takes that much more time and that much more money," Ms. Andre said.

The Chrysler Showcase Presentation is a Blue Andre Production made in association with Pancho Productions and distributed by Orion Television.

Progress Notes In Medicine

By TULSI DYAL SINGH, M.D.
Family Practitioner

PAIN RELIEVERS

Over-the-counter pain relievers come under a variety of names, strengths and claims. Basically, there are three groups of medications: 1) Aspirin 2) Acetominophen and 3) Ibuprofen.

Aspirin products are Bayer, Anacin, Bufferin, Vanquish, Excedrin and Ecotrin.

Acetominophen products are Tylenol, Panadol, Anacin-3 and Datril.

Ibuprofen products are Advil, Ibuprin, Nuprin, Haltran, Medipren, Pamprin IB and Midol 200.

All three groups are effective for mild headaches, fever and minor aches and pains, and there is little difference in their effectiveness.

When there is inflammation of a joint as in arthritis, or in a sprain, or where there is injury with swelling, Ibuprofen is the most effective, followed by Aspirin. Acetominophen has no anti-inflammatory properties.

Ibuprofen is the most prescribed medication for menstrual cramps and I recommend it as the drug of choice for that symptom, and also for dental pain.

Keep in mind that these are drugs and should be treated as such. They all have their side effects: none is completely safe. A number of people are allergic to Aspirin and they would also be sensitive to Ibuprofen. And, do not give children Aspirin if they have a viral illness or chicken pox.

My personal choice for an over-the-counter pain reliever is Acetominophen, except when a pain reliever is needed for the specific conditions mentioned earlier. But Acetominophen also needs to be used with care if there is any risk of liver disease as in the case of heavy alcohol drinkers.

A, B, C, AND D OF SKIN CANCERS

Skin cancers are on the rise partly because of an increasing outdoor lifestyle. The most serious is malignant melanoma and the following list outlines the criteria for immediate evaluation:

A. Asymmetry. One-half of the mole has a different shape from the other half.

B. Border irregularity. The edges are ragged, blurred or notched.

C. Color. Shades of black, blue, brown and red are present.

D. Diameter. Greater than 6 millimeters, or the size of a pencil eraser. Any sudden increase in size is a significant concern.

Other warning signs are scaliness, oozing, bleeding, pain, itchiness, or spread of pigment around or away from the mole.

FOOT PAIN: PLANTAR FASCIITIS

Plantar fasciitis is a common injury, due to overuse. It occurs in runners, athletes and even in sedentary types who perform an unusual amount of activity such as climbing or jumping. It produces pain in the heel or arch of the foot and is due to inflammation of the plantar fascia, which is a dense fibrous band of connective tissue on the underside of the foot. It runs from the heel and fans out to the base of the toes. It acts as a tension band to support the arch and provides push-off power during walking, running and jumping.

Landing heavily on your feet, as in jumping, running and power walking, and landing on hard surfaces irritate the fascia. Also, shoes that fit too loosely allow the pad of fat between the fascia and the sole of the foot to spread and thin out, thus diminishing the protection that the fascia gets from the fat pad, and permits increased transmission of impact to the fascia.

These injuries lead to plantar fasciitis, which presents as heel or arch pain. The first few steps in the morning usually cause the most pain.

Treatment includes relative avoidance of impact activities, stretching the Achilles tendon to ease the tension on the plantar fascia, anti-inflammatory medication and properly fitting shoes with good arch supports and heel padding.

Cortisone injections should be avoided because the pain relief is only temporary, and cortisone may cause degeneration and rupture of the fascia.

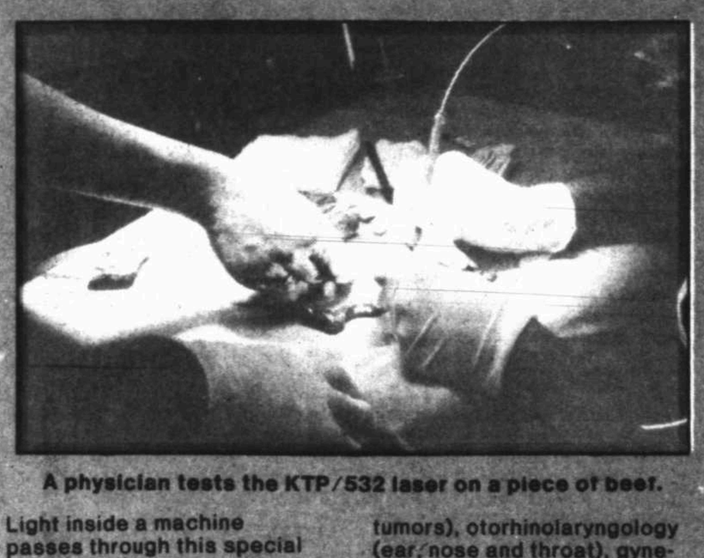
Uses Vary For New Laser Machine

Five years ago, if a woman needed gynecological surgery, she could plan on a five-to-seven day hospital stay after major surgery and a longer recuperation period at home.

Today, with purchase of a KTP/532 surgical laser by Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, that operation may be reduced to a minor procedure that can be done on an out-patient basis.

Physicians and Surgeons Hospital is the only facility between El Paso and Dallas to have a KTP/532 laser. It surpasses all other surgical lasers in its uses, according to Roger Middaugh, sales manager with Laserscope, the laser's manufacturer. On the first day in use at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, Dr. Luis Montaldo used the KTP/532 for gynecological procedures and Dr. Nick Shroff used it for urological procedures.

The laser consists of a laboratory-grown crystal composed of potassium (K), titanyl (T), and phosphate (P).



A physician tests the KTP/532 laser on a piece of beef.

Light inside a machine passes through this special crystal and is seen by the human eye as green.

Its uses are varied. The Food and Drug Administration has approved it for dematology and plastic surgery (removal of port wine stains and tattoos) urology, otology (the ear), laryngology (soft tumors), otorhinolaryngology (ear, nose and throat), gynecology intra-abdominal (endometriosis), gastroenterology, lower tract and intrauterine gynecology and general surgery.

Patients who have laser surgery experience less bleeding, pain and swelling. One such instance where the KTP/532 is used is in an inner-operative laparoscopy. A surgeon will enter the abdomen with pencil-sized probes through one or more tiny punctures. A telescope inside the laparoscope gives a clear view of the internal organs. The laser beam is inserted through another opening, allowing the physician to make bloodless incisions through tissue, coagulate bleeding tissue or eradicate tumors by vaporizing them.

Another major advantage of the KTP/532 is its flexible fiberoptics. It can be used in neurosurgery because of its ability to precisely remove tissue with minimal mechanical and thermal damage to surrounding tissue. In gastroenterology, the flexible fiber of the laser can be directed through a fiberoptic endoscope to place the physician close to polyps and obstructions. Growths in the esophagus, stomach, duodenum, colon and rectum can be treated through the endoscope with the laser.

Bedwetting: An Embarrassing Problem

By KIRBY TARRY, M.D.
Pediatric, Adult Urology

Bed-wetting for 5 to 7 million children is a common occurrence. While it causes embarrassment for the children and frustration for the parents, help can be found in the form of various strategies the child can learn.

Medically termed "nocturnal enuresis," bed-wetting affects 10 percent of all five year olds and 5 percent of all 10 year olds. A recent study of 1,092 children in New Zealand indicates the problem can be traced to heredity. This study showed that youngsters who wet their beds at night often come from families in which a parent or other close relative had the same childhood problem.

Other traits of bedwetters revealed in the study included a higher incidence among boys than girls, a slower maturity rate and toilet training started after 18 months of age.

Physicians now realize that children who wet the bed often are able to hold less urine in their bladders and have difficulty sensing and holding against bladder contractions.

The often-recommended form of advice in the past has been to let the child outgrow it, and most children will overcome their problem.

If it is still occurring past the age of six, the child may need help from a pediatrician or urologist.

In some children, medical conditions such as diabetes, urinary tract infections or urological abnormalities may be the cause of the bed-wetting.

It is noted by parents of bed-wetters these children sleep more soundly than other children. It is believed that bed-wetting occurs during the deepest phase of sleep, which occurs early in the evening.

Strategies to help children overcome their problem include:

— Changes in the evening routine: Limit liquid consumption several hours before bedtime. Have the child use the bathroom twice before going to bed, once an hour before bedtime and the second time just before bedtime. In cases where the wetting occurs in the early part of the evening, the parent should awaken the child and get him to the bathroom an hour after going to bed.

— Begin bladder strengthening exercises: Bed-wetting usually occurs because the bladder muscle that holds back urine relaxes involuntarily during sleep. The child can learn two sets of bladder strengthening exercises. In one set, the child is encouraged to delay going to the bathroom as long as possible after first noticing the urge to urinate. This will increase the bladder's ability to hold urine and promote improved muscle resistance to bladder contractions. The second set involves having the child stop his stream while voiding.

— Use bed-wetting alarms: These devices are moisture-activated and ring after some wetting has occurred. However, some children can sleep through the noise.

— Develop a positive approach: Children don't wet the bed intentionally and it can create problems of self-esteem for the youngster. Authorities agree that scolding, shaming and punishing are ineffective ways to handle the problem. The child can learn responsibility by changing the bed sheets, assisting in laundering pajamas and airing out the room.

One suggestion is to place a large calendar in the child's room on the wall and the child can mark whether he had a Dry (D) or Wet (W) night. Positive incentives might include allowing the child to stay up a little later the evening after having a dry night or having a "special time" with the parents on dry mornings.

Persistent bed-wetting won't change quickly; it takes months to see improvement. And for those children who still can't overcome the problem, the parents may want to consult a professional who is experienced in the treatment of bed-wetting. Some physicians prescribe Tofranil, which changes sleep cycles in such a manner that it will dramatically reduce bed-wetting.

Parents need to remember that just as children master various skills at different ages, so too there are natural differences in the age at which they will overcome bed-wetting.

Rules Change On Choking Child

By URMILA GUPTA, M.D.
and PREM P. GUPTA, M.D.

Methods for assisting a choking child have been revised and approved by the Committee on Accident and Poison Prevention, American Heart Association and American Red Cross.

The procedures for removing a foreign object from an airway differs for an infant and a small child.

If the choking victim is a small child, the procedure begins as follows:

— Apply a series of six to 10 abdominal thrusts — Heimlich maneuver — until the foreign body is expelled. The child should be placed on his or her back with the rescuer kneeling next to him and placing the heel of one hand on the child's abdomen in the midline between the umbilicus and rib cage. The maneuver should consist of a rapid inward and upward thrust.

— If the obstruction causing the choking is not removed in this manner, the rescuer may open the victim's mouth using the tongue-jaw lift. This draws the tongue away from the back of the throat and may help relieve the obstruction. If the foreign body can be seen, it may be extracted by a finger sweep. However, blind sweeps could cause further obstruction.

— If no spontaneous breathing results, the rescuer should try to ventilate the victim. If this is unsuccessful, a series of six to 10 abdominal thrusts should be repeated.

— The preceding three steps should be repeated while also seeking aid.

The procedures for a choking victim that is an infant are as follows:

— Place the infant face down on the rescuer's forearm in a 60-degree head-down position with the head and neck stabilized. The forearm should be resting firmly against the rescuer's body for additional support.

— Using the heel of the hand, give four blows to the back high between the shoulder blades.

— If the obstruction is not jarred loose, turn the infant over and rest him on a firm surface. Deliver four rapid chest thrusts (similar to cardiac compressions) over the sternum using two fingers.

— If breathing is not resumed, open the airway using the tongue-jaw lift technique and attempt to see the foreign body.

— If there is no spontaneous breathing, attempt ventilation by using four breaths by mouth-to-mouth or mouth-to-mouth-and-nose technique.

Call Of The Water May End In Drowning

With the final days of summer bearing down on everyone, the cool waves of a pool seem to call one into the refreshing water. Unfortunately, young children also feel the call of the pool (or lake) and wander into the water alone, too often discovered later as a victim of drowning.

Drowning has become the second leading cause of accidental death in children and the second leading cause of years of potential life lost, according to a July 15, 1988, article in the Journal of the American Medical Association. The article was written by Dr. James P. Orlowski, Pediatric Intensive Care with The Cleveland Clinic Foundation.

Looking at all causes of death in children, drowning is surpassed only by motor vehicle accidents and cancer, he wrote. However, this figure doesn't include the toll in morbidity from brain damage caused by near-drowning accidents. About a third of all survivors are moderately to severely neurologically damaged, according to the JAMA article. Near-drowning accidents are estimated to be 500 to 600 times more common than their fatal counterpart.

It is the home swimming pool that is the culprit in a majority of drownings of young children. The JAMA article recommended all home pools be surrounded by a fence that would exclude all children four years of age and younger. "It has been estimated that properly fenced-in swimming pools would decrease swimming pool drownings in children by 80 percent," the JAMA article noted.

Summer isn't the only time of year drownings occur. Stories making headlines in recent years have come from near-drownings in ice-cold water in which children had been submerged for a long time. The JAMA article recounted one incident in which a 2½-year-old girl recovered after being immersed 66 minutes in ice-cold water.

"Our upper limits for normal recovery from anoxia (lack of oxygen) are five to seven minutes, with 12 to 14 minutes of anoxia almost always resulting in neurological disability or death," noted the JAMA article.

But good outcomes are the exception rather than the norm in these ice-water drownings.

Whether it be summertime or winter, the ultimate prevention of childhood drownings is adult supervision of children in and around water, Dr. Orlowski noted, and that is something which "is difficult to teach and impossible to legislate."

'A Spoonful Of Sugar'

The diagnosis was clear: "Droopitis Jours d'August." In plain English it translates into The Dog Days of August.

The malady had hit Physicians and Surgeons Hospital and was spreading like an epidemic. The signs were all the same: Excessive yawning; run-down sense of humor; constant staring into the ozone; and energy level so low that being run over by a Mack truck would have felt like a "pick-me-up."

Treatment for this malady is simple: ice cream sundaes. The hospital Dining Room was turned into a Treatment Room on Wednesday, Aug. 3.

Rick Subia chooses his dosage of ice cream while Carmen Cross works on the toppings.

Minimum dosage was two spoonfuls of ice cream. Employees designed their own form of medication.

Barry Switzer

Boswoth clothes-lines OU program

DALLAS (AP) — Oklahoma University football players freebased cocaine the day of a game and steroid use was commonplace when he was on the team, Brian Bosworth says in his autobiography.

"The Boz: Confessions of a Modern Anti-Hero," also details other NCAA violations, which the All America linebacker said took place while he was at the school, the Dallas Morning News reported.

The News obtained an advance copy of the book, which is planned for release next month. The 252-page book was written with Rick Reilly of Sports Illustrated.

The book also tells of running back Buster Rhymes shooting a machine gun off an OU dormitory balcony to end a snowball fight.

Bosworth said in the book that while he was on scholarship, he lived in a $500-a-month condominium with a big-screen TV and two cars parked outside.

BOSWORTH, writing that the football program bordered on anarchy, said that Coach Barry Switzer did not discipline players who broke the law or circumvented NCAA rules as long as the team won.

"Some guys, especially some of the city guys, would freebase a lot of cocaine," Bosworth wrote. "One day, I happened to see them doing it on the day of the game.

"If you were a star on the University of Oklahoma football team, you could do just about anything you wanted. You had no rules."

The 23-year-old Bosworth left Oklahoma after his graduation in May 1987, disdaining a fourth year of eligibility, and was picked by the Seattle Seahawks in the NFL supplemental draft. He signed a 10-year, $11 million contract.

Bosworth, asked by The Associated Press to elaborate on his charges after Saturday's Seahawk workout, declined to talk about the book. Calls to Switzer's office Saturday went unanswered, and phone calls to his home received a busy signal or a recorded message which ended with the coach saying, "have a nice day."

Gary Wichard, Bosworth's business manager, characterized the book as giving a true picture of big-time college football, or at least what transpired at Oklahoma from fall 1982 through spring 1987.

"Before saying anything publicly, I want to have an opportunity to look at the entire book," Oklahoma athletic director Donnie Duncan told the Morning News.

Midland defeats El Paso

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

The Midland Angels finally broke out of the doldrums Saturday night, downing the El Paso Diablos 9-3, a welcome debut for newly-named interim manager Mark Wedimeier.

Mike Fetters pitched six strong innings and the Angel offense combined for 11 hits to lead Midland to only its second victory of a still young month of August.

The win snaps a four game losing streak and moves the Angels to within one-half game of first place in the Texas League's second-half race. Both the Diablos and San Antonio Missions, co-owners of first place, lost Saturday night to knot the Western Division race up even tighter.

Wedimeier was named Saturday evening as the Angels' new interim-manager, replacing Tim Kelly, who replaced Max Oliveras. A sort of roving instructor for the California Angels' farm system, Wedimeier's most recent stint was leading the Union Laguna club in the Mexican League.

Kelly will resume his role as pitching coach and Oliveras will continue to ride the aluminum, sitting out a 15-day suspension following his role in "The Bump," an incident with Texas League manager Todd Freese during the Angels' last home stand.

THE TOP seven hitters in the Midland lineup Saturday combined for 10 of the Angels' 11 hits and eight of their nine runs. The Angel offense was so consistently and thoroughly productive, only the catching combo of Erik Pappas (0-for-2) and Mike Knapp (0-1) failed to contribute at the plate.

Fetters, too, was impressive on the hill, although he let down in the middle innings, his self-professed problem all season long.

At 6-7, Fetters foiled batters time after time with a blazing fastball, striking out nine, including fanning the side in both the first and third innings.

ANGEL SHORTSTOP Jim Opie smashed his fifth home run of the year, a powerful two-run shot over the deepest part of the right-center-field wall which also scored Jeff Manto.

Manto, with two doubles and two RBI, finished 2-for-4 with one run scored. His two runs batted in moved to 93 his league-leading RBI mark.

Manto's first double of the night came in the Angels' three-run third inning.

With an unsafe 2-1 lead going into the bottom half of No. 3, Jim McCollom reached on an error by the Diablo third baseman. After stealing second, McCollom came home on a single by Lee Stevens. Jesus Alfaro doubled and Manto drove in both Stevens and Alfaro with his initial two-bagger.

Whiteside spoils everybody's fun

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Steve Whiteside hadn't played the Midland Men's City Tournament for nine years before entering this weekend's competition. His opponents may petition for his exclusion in future years.

That's because the former Texas A&M golfer shot his second consecutive to take an eight-stroke lead going into today's final round. Jamie Winkel is second at 142 after shooting a one-over par 72 on holes nine through 27.

But Winkel doesn't have any illusions about catching Whiteside.

"When we started the tournament, I knew we were playing for second," Winkel said. "Steve's the best player in town.

"You can hit the ball in some funny places, but he's too smart a player to give up that many strokes."

Whiteside birdied four holes on the front nine to solidify his three-stroke lead after the first day. But he really stepped away from the field when he eagled the 11th hole — No. 20 at HPGC. His only bogies were on his fourth and 14th holes.

The huge lead allowed Whiteside to play things somewhat safe.

Tigers hose Hot Sox, 4-2

Alexander, Nokes make it 4 in row

DETROIT (AP) — Doyle Alexander showed again Saturday there's nobody better when the money's on the table.

Matt Nokes hit a two-run homer that backed Alexander's seven-hit pitching and the Detroit Tigers beat Boston for the fourth straight time, 4-2, matching the Red Sox's longest losing streak of the season.

"I always want to finish strong," said Alexander, who went 9-0 after coming to Detroit late in the 1988 season, helping the Tigers win the American League East. "You check my record from about the end of August on. It's probably as good as any in baseball."

The victory increased the Tigers' first-place lead over Boston to four games in the division. The Red Sox entered the five-game showdown series riding the crest of a 19-1 streak under Manager Joe Morgan, who took over after the All-Star break. Boston is now 19-5 under Morgan.

"It was frustrating today," Morgan said. "All the balls we hit good, the wind wouldn't guide them. Like the guy said: 'We couldn't spit a drop.' The worm has turned for us right now. When it happens that way you just have to ride it out. That's all there is to it."

Alexander, 11-6, who struck out six and didn't walk a batter, is unbeaten in his last seven outings at Tiger Stadium, going 5-0 over that stretch. He is 7-2 in his 11 starts at home this season and 12-2 in 17 lifetime starts here as a Tiger.

"Alexander is effective because he spots the ball well, has a lot of different arm angles and he's smart out there," said Boston's Marty Barrett, who went hitless in four at-bats. "He never throws the ball down the middle of the plate. He makes you hit his pitch.

"You think, 'I'm going to get a couple of hits off this guy today' and the next thing you know you're taking a shower and wondering what happened."

Wes Gardner, making his eighth start since being forced into the Boston rotation by an injury to Jeff Sellers, allowed four runs on nine hits in 6 2-3 innings. Gardner walked five and struck out six.

"We've been fighting an uphill battle the whole time we've been here," Barrett said. "The Tigers are a great team. They're not in first place by accident.

"But, who knows? Maybe by having this hot streak at home they'll go out on the road and lose a few next week."

The Tigers play three in Texas and three in Boston next week.

"I don't like a five-game series like this," Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said. "One club gets going and it makes everybody nervous.

"I still honestly believe it's going to be a fight between three clubs (Detroit, Boston and the New York Yankees) and it's going to be settled the last three games of the season."

The Tigers led 4-0 before Todd Benzinger's two-run homer in the Boston seventh.

Cowboys blow one to Chargers

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Babe Laufenberg engineered three touchdown drives in the final 7:30 to rally the San Diego Chargers to a 24-21 exhibition victory over the Dallas Cowboys Saturday night.

Laufenberg, the third San Diego quarterback, threw a 15-yard scoring pass to Lionel James with 1:50 remaining to cap the comeback.

The winning score was set up when Dallas running back Mark Higgs fumbled and defensive lineman Les Miller recovered at the Cowboys' 18.

Laufenberg threw a 9-yard touchdown pass to Darren Flutie with 7:30 remaining and then directed a 16-play, 71-yard drive that ended in Tim Spencer's 1-yard scoring run with 2:02 remaining.

Dallas had a chance to tie or move ahead in the game's final moments, but top draft choice Michael Irvin fumbled after catching a pass and safety Demetrious Johnson recovered at the Chargers' 18-yard line.

Laufenberg completed 13 of 23 passes for 149 yards and two touchdowns in the fourth quarter.

Laufenberg has been in the NFL since 1983 but has never thrown a pass in a regular-season game.

For Dallas, Steve Pelluer and Kevin Sweeney each threw for touchdowns, and Irvin had a scoring catch.

The Cowboys scored 14 points after San Diego turnovers.

Mark Vlasic, one of four quarterbacks in the Chargers' camp vying to succeed the retired Dan Fouts, came on in the third quarter but had his second pass intercepted by cornerback Everson Walls.

Dallas quickly extended its lead to 21-0 as Sweeney passed 31 yards to Ray Alexander for a touchdown.

San Diego's first score came with 55 seconds remaining in the third quarter, when Vince Abbott kicked a 34-yard field goal.

Dallas took a 14-0 halftime lead on Darryl Clack's 1-yard scoring run and Pelluer's 15-yard touchdown pass to Irvin, the Cowboys' No. 1 draft choice out of Miami.

It was a tough San Diego debut, meanwhile, for quarterback Mark Malone, the former Pittsburgh starter who endured nearly two years of abuse from Steelers fans before being liberated in an offseason trade that brought him to the Chargers.

For Wrigleys, CUBS, it's time to stop fighting City Hall

Grimes

Monday is the night.

Not only is Monday night the only time in 11 years that all numbers on the date are the same, but it's the night that one of baseball's most hallowed traditions is shattered.

The Chicago Cubs playing night ball at Wrigley Field is almost as bad as the designated hitter rule in that other league. Or is it?

There comes a time when you can't fight City Hall any more. The Citizens United for Baseball in Sunshine (CUBS) has reached that point — City Hall, in this case, being the Tribune Co., owners of the Cubbies, and the all-too-powerful TV networks that almost forced the Cubs to play their 1984 divisional playoffs in St. Louis.

CUBS FEELS like the near North Side neighborhood in which Wrigley Field is located will be irreparably damaged by night baseball. Ten years ago, I might have felt the same way.

When I made my first of three appearances in Wrigleyville in April, 1978, we stepped off the "El" (that's the Elevated Train, for you West Texans) into an area that looked as though it had seen better days.

Grungy was the first word that came to mind. Maybe not quite as bad as the area around Comiskey Park, on the South Side of the same city, but it didn't seem much better at the intersection of Clark and Addison Streets, especially when some 11-year-old tried to take my friend's purse (bad move, kid).

I made two more trips to Wrigley three years later. Couldn't perceive any differences in the neighborhood then, but they say things have changed dramatically in the last seven years.

FROM A blue-collar, family-oriented neighborhood, Wrigleyville has changed into a yuppie heaven of sorts. White-collar singles have displaced long-time residents of the Waveland Avenue apartment buildings just across the street from the famed manual scoreboard in center field.

These newer residents may not be so averse to being kept up late at night by the cheer of the crowd. Also, they may not be bothered by the bedlam that generally erupts outside any big league park once the final pitch is thrown.

Maybe, maybe not.

If it's a choice between keeping the Cubs at Wrigley and moving them to Schaumburg, Addison or Kankakee, I say let 'em play at night.

Fenway Park in Boston has near as much tradition as Wrigley (more, say some). Yet the Red Sox have been playing under the lights since June 13, 1947.

Comiskey Park is even older than Wrigley Field, but do you think White Sox management cared on June 14, 1939? That's when the first night game was played at 35th and Shields.

Tribe tops Texas to end tailspin

From Wire Reports

ARLINGTON, Texas — Brook Jacoby hit a two-run homer off the top of the left-field wall to snap a fourth-inning tie Saturday night as the Cleveland Indians beat the Texas Rangers 5-3, ending a six-game losing streak.

John Farrell, 12-7, allowed eight hits, struck out three and walked two in seven-plus innings. Farrell has pitched into the sixth inning in each of his 32 career starts. Doug Jones pitched two innings for his 25th save.

Charlie Hough, 9-13, pitched his eighth complete game but gave up 12 hits, the most he has allowed in 673 career appearances. Five of the hits were for extra bases.

Texas lost for the fifth time in six games.

Jacoby's home run, his eighth, followed Cory Snyder's double. Snyder, who had three hits, hit a run-scoring single in the eighth for a 5-2 lead before Gino Petralli's RBI single in the bottom of the inning.

Cleveland went ahead 2-0 in the first on consecutive RBI doubles by Mel Hall and Snyder.

Texas tied the score in the bottom half when Pete Incaviglia' single scored Oddibe McDowell and Ruben Sierra also scored when center fielder Joe Carter misplayed the ball.

AP-DN-08-06-88 2230CDT

Yankees 5, Twins 3

NEW YORK — Rickey Henderson hit a tiebreaking sacrifice fly in the seventh inning and stole three bases as New York stopped a four-game losing streak and ended the Minnesota's four-game winning string.

The Yankees remained in third, four games behind AL East-leading Detroit, matching New York's largest deficit this season.

With the score tied 3-3, Luis Aguayo drew a leadoff walk in the seventh from Mark Portugal, 1-2. Randy Velarde bunted into a forceout, but Rafael Santana singled and Henderson followed with a long fly to center. Jack Clark hit his 21st homer in the eighth.

Steve Shields, 2-3, pitched 2 2-3 scoreless innings for the victory and Dave Righetti struck out Kent Hrbek for his 17th save.

A's 5, Mariners 4

Jose Canseco has 40-40 visions.

The major league home run leader became the 11th player in major-league history to hit 30 home runs and steal 30 bases in the the same year when he got his 30th stolen base Saturday in Oakland's 5-4 victory over the Seattle Mariners. Canseco has 31 homers and his trying to become the first player to hit and steal 40 in the same season.

"It's very realistic, hitting nine homers in the next two months," Canseco said.

"If you see the way he's hit his 30 home runs and stolen his 30 bases, the numbers have meant a lot," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said.

Eric Davis of the Cincinnati Reds reached the 30-30 mark last Aug. 2 — the first of four to join the club in 1987 — and finished with 37 homers and 50 steals.

"That right there proves the homers are going to be the toughest," Canseco said.

Canseco's steal led to the winning run. Dave Henderson led off the ninth with a single against Mike Jackson, 6-3. Canseco forced Henderson and stole second, went to third on Jackson's wild pickoff throw and scored on Mark McGwire's sacrifice fly.

"The way he did it today wasn't just icing on the cake, it may even make the whole cake," La Russa said.

McGwire, who had three hits, leads the majors with 16 game-winning RBI. Terry Steinbach drove in three runs.

Gene Nelson, 7-3, pitched two perfect innings.

Royals 11, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — Mark Gubicza allowed three hits over eight innings, striking out a season-high 10, and four Royals hit solo home runs — Kurt Stillwell, Jamie Quirk, Danny Tartabull and George Brett. It was the 250th of Brett's career.

Gubicza, 14-6, allowed only Fred McGriff's 27th homer of the season in the second inning before Steve Farr pitched a hitless ninth.

Soccer players back from European tour

From Staff Reports

Twenty Midland youth soccer players returned recently from a grueling, yet marginally successful two-week tour of Europe.

The Midlanders were members of the Dallas Flames, one of 125 soccer teams from more than 30 countries which took part in Denmark's Dana Cup and Sweden's Gothia Cup.

The Flames' '76 team (representing boys born in 1976) lost in the quarterfinals of both events.

Midland's Ross Hunter captained the '76 team of Jeremy Hernandez, Jeramy Inman, Toby Walker, Steve Mize, Peter Allen, Davey Van Houten and Sean Parnell, all of Midland.

In the Dana Cup, the only goal against the Flames was the one that Norway scored to eliminate the 76ers.

In the Gothia Cup, the '76 team defeated Peru 2-0, Sweden 7-0 and tied Finaland, 0-0. By virtue of goal differential, the Flames advanced to the quarterfinals, but lost to Italy, 2-0.

Sisters Molly and Missy Starr made the trip. Missy was a member of the girls' 19-under team which lost to Sweden, 2-1, in the Gothia finals.

"Everything went really as expected," said Steve Parnell, public relations director for the Midland Soccer Association. "We were told by several coaches that if America's teams ever combined their skill level with their level of aggression, they would dominate."

Although it took the better part of the trip to learn, skill and aggression accounted for the Flames' Gothia success.

Parnell, who served as a medic/cab driver, was responsible for transporting the walking wounded to hospitals in Denmark and Sweden. In the first week, Parnell said, five Flame members suffered broken bones.

Brandon Lang, goalie for the Flames '75 team, broke a thumb the first week and had to play on offense — a position he hadn't played in several years — in the second week in Denmark.

Lang responded with a goal to lead the '75 team to the consolation finals.

A SNOWBALL fight in 1984 outside the athletic dormitory that ended abruptly when Rhymes fired "about 150 rounds out of an Uzi machine gun," wrote Bosworth.

"Somebody hit him with a snowball. He got a little upset," Bosworth wrote of Rhymes. "So right in the middle of the fight, Buster went up to his room, opened his door, and let fly with this Uzi above all their heads. Just a few innocent warning blasts."

Sonny Brown, a member of the team that year was contacted Saturday at Houston Oilers' training camp in San Marcos, and asked about the incident. "No, that didn't happen," Brown said. "He might have pulled it (the gun) out and waved it, but he didn't fire any rounds."

Brown, one of four captains during his and Bosworth's final year at Oklahoma, said of Switzer's discipline, "He was loose with the players. He wasn't like a drill sergeant. If we went out of line, he'd let you know about it."

BROWN was named most outstanding back in the 1986 Orange Bowl, when Oklahoma defeated Penn State 25-10 for the national championship.

Of steroids, Brown said, "Maybe that stuff went on, but I never saw any of it."

Bosworth was suspended from the 1987 Orange Bowl because a drug test detected the presence of a steroid in his system. Bosworth said he took the steroid under a doctor's care and before the NCAA had ruled the drug illegal. But his teammates weren't as careful, he wrote.

"Steroids were about as common as Anacin in our lockerroom. I'd guess about half the guys on the team took them just to look good ... and another 20 to 25 percent took them seriously to get strong and put on weight," Bosworth wrote.

He wrote Switzer visited his home "four or five" times, more than the NCAA-prescribed limit of three, "but then so did every other head coach who visited me."

Bosworth said of Switzer he "respected him for a lot of things" and also wrote that the coach "just turns his back" to what his players did off the field.

"He never wanted to know how it was that I was living in a nice $500-a-month condo, watching a big-screen TV, driving a Jeep and a Corvette, and always operating with $2,000 in my checking account," Bosworth wrote.

HE SAID that, while under suspension for steroid use, "I flew down to the Orange Bowl after Christmas — Switzer took care of my ticket, but I still don't know how."

NCAA Legislative Services director Rick Evrard said the ticket would be a violation of NCAA rules. "A student-athlete who is ineligible to participate is not eligible to receive expenses incidental to getting to the event," Evrard said.

McEnroe, Becker clash in finals today

Boris Becker ...knocks off Witsken

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Fifth-seeded John McEnroe downed No. 15 Robert Seguso 7-5, 6-3 Saturday to reach the finals of the $415,000 U.S. Hardcourts tennis tournament.

Earlier, top-seeded Boris Becker ended the surprising run of local favorite Todd Witsken with a 6-1, 4-6, 6-4 victory in the other semifinal.

Becker and McEnroe in Sunday's final.

It was the 29-year-old New Yorker's second match within 15 hours. He didn't complete his 7-5, 6-2 quarterfinal victory against Michael Robertson until 1:30 a.m. EDT after thunderstorms suspended play for 5½ hours Friday.

Seguso won the first game of the second set and, during the changeover, McEnroe received a warning for unsportsmanlike conduct and expressed his disgust by tossing a cup of water on the court.

The action seemed to inspire McEnroe. He held serve, then later broke Seguso for a 3-2 lead.

"I started yelling at the guy in the chair because he wasn't controlling the match, and then John thought I was getting out of hand and he started yelling at me. That just really hacked me off and I started yelling at John," Seguso said. "I don't know what the hell the guy's problem is."

Tempers boiled over again on the changeover as the players exchanged words and Seguso lunged at McEnroe, who was sitting a few feet away. Seguso was restrained by an umpire as he shouted at his McEnroe for talking between points.

He charged McEnroe with complaining about balls that were clearly out and talking between points. McEnroe, who eventually lost a point for the conduct warning, claimed innocence.

Witsken, 24, thrilled the sellout crowd during his first career meeting against the world's fifth-ranked player by rallying after a slow start.

The West German used his powerful serve to dominate the 28-minute first set, allowing Witsken just seven points in the first five games.

"After losing the first set he was very loose," Becker said. "That probably brought him back in the match."

Witsken, from nearby Carmel, Ind., shook off his early jitters and won the first game of the second set at love.

"Each game that I lost on my serve in the first set they were pretty close games, so I knew if I could get a little tougher and keep him off the net I could do all right," Witsken said.

He had two break points on Becker's next service game, but fell back to deuce as Becker served consecutive aces. The game went to deuce three more times before Witsken netted a forehand return and Becker tied the set 1-1.

Witsken, 24, began hitting the lines with accurate passing shots against a charging Becker for a crucial service break that gave him a 4-3 lead. He lost his serve again at 15 as Witsken took the second set to level the match.

"I thought he played extremely well," Becker said. "He made very difficult shots look easy."

In the third set, Witsken was broken in the seventh game when Becker punched a forehand volley deep in Witsken's backcourt. Becker then held serve at love to take a 5-3 lead.

Refusing to fold, Witsken took advantage of Becker's unforced errors to win the ninth game and prolong the 2-hour, 10-minute match. But Becker reached back for an ace to go up 30-15 and gained match point when Witsken's forehand sailed long. He advanced to the final when Witsken netted a service return.

"I knew it was going to be tough to break him so I just wanted to concentrate on holding my serve," Witsken said.

Wins against Bahamian Roger Smith, Australian Simon Youl, No. 6 Aaron Krickstein and 13th seed Jim Pugh helped Witsken, a three-time college All-American, advance to his first semifinal since January 1986.

Becker has lost just two sets in his first tournament since losing the men's singles final at Wimbledon on July 4.

TIGERS

Luis Salazar singled in the Detroit third, moved up on a sacrifice by Jim Walewander and scored on Dave Bergman's two-out double.

"They're catching the breaks right now," Barrett said. "But that's all right. If somebody had told me at the All-Star break that nobody would be ahead of us today but the Tigers, I'd have been pleased."

The Red Sox were one game over .500 and nine games out of first place at the All-Star break.

Pat Sheridan hit a two-out single in the Detroit fifth, went to third on Alan Trammell's single and scored on a single by Bergman. Gardner walked Dwayne Murphy to load the bases but, after a visit to the mound by Morgan, got Chet Lemon to pop up on the first pitch.

Darrell Evans led off the Detroit sixth with a walk and rode home on Nokes' 14th home run, a towering shot off the facing of the third deck in right field.

"All home runs feel good, but when you hit one like that, you know you've done everything right," said Nokes, who has broken a season-long slump to hit in seven of his last 10 games.

Mudd's birdie streak leads St. Jude

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Jodie Mudd strung together three straight birdies on the back nine Saturday to overtake Tim Simpson and grab a one-stroke lead after three rounds of the $953,842 St. Jude Classic.

Mudd, a six-time runner-up who is still seeking his first PGA Tour win, chopped two strokes off par on the front nine, pulled even with Simpson with birdies at the par-4 14th and par-3 15th, then grabbed the lead with a birdie on the par-5, 545-yard 16th.

The former Georgia Southern All-American broke a string of two straight 68s with Saturday's 67 and was at 13-under-par 203 going into Sunday's final round.

Mudd and Simpson, who shot his third straight 68 to finish at 204, began the third round in a three-way tie for the lead with Peter Jacobsen, who matched par with a 72 and was at 208.

David Rummells, who shot a 66, was alone in third place at 205.

U.S. Open winner and defending St. Jude champion Curtis Strange and Tom Kite were at 207.

Simpson, who won the 1976 Southern Amateur on the Colonial Country Club's 7,282-yard course, closed out his front nine with three straight birdies to go to 12-under and take a two-stroke lead at the turn.

Simpson, bidding for his second career PGA Tour victory, birdied the third hole before finishing the front side with three straight birdies.

But the 1985 Southern Open winner could only match par on the back nine, offseting a bogey at the par-3 12th hole with a birdie on No. 15.

Charles, Player tie for lead in Seniors

MEDINAH, Ill. (AP) — Bob Charles shot a 70 and defending champion Gary Player had a 71, two of only five sub-par rounds Saturday, to share the third-round lead at the U.S. Senior Open.

Charles, a native of New Zealand, and Player, of South Africa, sidestepped the problems that befell second-round leader Billy Casper and their other pursuers at the championship for players 50 and over. Both were at 1-under-par 215 after three trips around Medinah Country Club's No. 3 course.

Charles, a left-hander and the Senior Tour's leading money-winner, had three birdies and a bogey, while Player birdied No. 2 and made 17 pars. His only birdie came after a 6-iron tee shot left him three feet from the cup on the 169-yard hole.

Casper, the 1983 champion and the only player to break par on each of the first two days, started the round bogey-double-bogey, limped into the turn with a 40 and finished with a 76 for a 216 total, tying him with Lou Graham.

Casper had to rally for his share of the runner-up spot. He bogeyed Nos. 14 and 15 to go 2-over for the tourney, but birdied No. 16 and sank a wide-breaking 25-foot putt for another birdie on No. 17.

Graham, who began the day tied with South African Harold Henning at 143, three shots behind Casper, struggled to a 73. Graham won the 1975 U.S. Open at Medinah.

Bruce Crampton shot a 70 to finish at 217, along with fellow Australian Peter Thomson and Orville Moody.

Three tied in Bradley golf

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Pat Bradley and Jody Rosenthal caught early leader Dot Germain with birdies on the back nine Saturday to finish with 15 points and lead the field into an 18-hole final-round shootout at the $400,000 Pat Bradley International LPGA tournament.

All three golfers won $5,000, and will be among 18 players who will compete Sunday for a $62,500 first prize. The 36-player field in Saturday's third round was cut in half, with Janet Anderson beating Sherri Steinhauer in a playoff for the last position.

Germain, a North Carolina native whose Greensboro home is 20 minutes from the Willow Creek Golf Club course, steadied her game after a roller-coaster start.

After a 39-minute rain delay, Bradley caught Germain with a birdie at the par-5 16th hole when her putt hit the back of the cup, popped into the air and landed in the hole.

Rosenthal hit a sand wedge to within eight feet of the pin and made her birdie to join the tie.

"This week seems long because every day seems like match play," Germain said. "You really have to get up for every day in a little different way than you used to."

Correction

The North Central Little League team will be representing Midland at the state tournament in Waco this week. A headline in Saturday's edition identified the Midland team as Mid-City.

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Teaff likes Aggies; Tech's Dykes can dream, can't he?

Williamson

They said it in the Southwest Conference.

Baylor's Grant Teaff on who he favors to win the SWC title this year: "I pick A&M out of respect for the fact that they've won it three times in a row. That doesn't mean they are the best team or that they will be there at the end of the year. But they deserve to be there now."

Texas Tech's Spike Dykes on his title chances: "The great thing about football is that it's sort of nice to dream."

New SMU coach Forrest Gregg, who doesn't even see a game until 1989, addressing writers at a press conference: "My job today is to introduce our returning lettermen. I am now through."

Arkansas' Ken Hatfield on the SWC race: "You can bet that every coach here - no matter what he might say publicly - has figured out a way his team can win the conference."

Texas' David McWilliams on the fact that star running back Eric Metcalf failed to make the Olympic team: "My wife and kids are a lot happier now that they know Eric's going to be here. Blitz, my dog, is happy, too. I'm disappointed that Eric did not make the Olympic team. But having him with us solves a lot of questions. And I wasn't the one who put those lead weights in his shoes."

TCU's Jim Wacker: "We do have the best team we've had since I've been here. Now we need luck. You've got to have luck. How else do you explain the success of people you don't like?"

Houston's Jack Pardee, hoping to add on to the 3-0-1 finish of last year: "Maybe we can get it rolling and go right through our schedule. If we don't, we might not win a game. Right now, we're not that good and not that bad."

A&M's Jackie Sherrill on rumors floating around that he will become the next head coach of the Houston Oilers: "I can say I'm flattered, but it's not a reality. I have a job at A&M and we haven't finished the job. I was in San Marcos (site of the Oilers' training camp) because I have a lot of former players there."

Gregg again: "I'm often asked, 'How are things at SMU?' Well, compared to what? I've never gone through anything like this and I hope no one ever has to again."

Rice's Jerry Berndt: "We have seven defensive returning starters from last year, but that's not saying much since we gave up 487 yards a game. I hope by the end of pre-season practice some of those players will be beaten out."

Baylor's Teaff: "We have a chance to mature and develop into a good team. This team will be a little bit unpredictable because of inexperience. Hopefully, they'll be unpredictable in a positive sense and win more than we're supposed to."

Houston's Pardee on the difference from coaching in the pros and college: "In college we are responsible for the players 24 hours a day. We have to see that they go to class, go to sleep, see that they eat, and yet, we spend so little actual time with them on football. The time element you have with the people on football is the greatest difference."

Rice's Berndt: "I read just the other day that we are supposed to go zero-for-11, so I really hope we beat someone we're not supposed to beat."

Fly Fishers have the last laugh

From Staff Reports

When the Permian Fly Fishers Club was organized back in March, there were some snickers about "where in West Texas do you fly fish?"

You don't. You go to Colorado or New Mexico as eight members of the Permian Fly Fishers did for three days of fishing at Lobo Lodge in Chama, N.M.

Bill Elgin informs that the Lobo Lodge controls 17 miles of private stream and the actual site of the lodge is five miles north of Chama.

"The largest catch was an 18-inch rainbow but there were 10 to 16 inchers, too," Elgin said.

The club plans a fall trip to Ruidoso, probably Bonita Lake and stream.

Making the trip to Chama were Bob Kretzler, Jerry Moritz, Dave Watkins, Jim Gillespie, Bill Ellison, Dean DeTar, John Bartos and Elgin.

The club meets the second Tuesday of each month. The site varies. Anyone interested in joining, contact Elgin at 694 7398.

Fly Fishing in West Texas? What's so unusual?. We have a Flatlanders' Ski Club...

TODD WOODARD, former Outdoor writer for the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has been named editor/associate publisher of Texas Fishermen magazine in Houston. Woodard is a native of Crane and is an avid fisherman and hunter. The Texas A&M graduate is a nationally ranked competitive shooter, qualifying for the 1988 Olympic tryouts in three events.

Woodard, who also has been an outdoor columnist for the Southwest Airlines magazine, left the MRT to become an associate editor of Field and Stream, where he has been employed for 3 1/2 years....

THE RUIDOSO Parks and Recreation dept. is stocking 200 rainbow trout from 16 to 19 inches and over the next nine months will add 800 trout of the same dimensions in streams and rivers around Ruidoso, N.M....

PURGATORY and five other Colorado ski areas have jointed forces to create the Rocky Mountain Snowboard Series Association to promote six competitions for amateur and pro snowboarders during the 1988-89 season....The events will follow NASBA rules. Other areas involved are Wolf Creek, Copper Mountain, Crested Butte and Eldorado....

A BOWHUNTER education course is being offered 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Aug. 20 at the Central Recreation Center in San Angelo. Pre registration, $8, is required at the San Angelo City Recreation Dept....

THE HIGH Sky Bass Club's next tournament will be Aug. 20-21 at Oak Creek with Ike Pate's Sportsman's Lodge the headquarters....In the July tournament, Richard Kleinhans took top honors with four fish weighing 7.83 pounds at San Angelo.

Dow Scott was second, two for 4.88 pounds, and Claude Bass, three fish at 4.18, was third....Virginia Wade took women's honors with a 1.87 pound catch while Pam Busbee and Lue Kirby were next....Youth Division laurels went to Grey Turner with perch scaling 3.29: Matthew Nobles was second....

JAMES Montgomery won first place in the West Texas Bass Classic at Lake Spence, earning $12,000 for his 6.27 catch. The tournament drew 549.

Striped bass, mostly in the intermediate range, dominated the Spence scene last week while catfish was "in" at Lake Thomas. A.D. and Robert Goodwin of Brownwood landed the biggest striper at Spence, 27 1/2 pounds and Tom Tidwell, San Angelo, took a 17-pound yellow....

Brook Chandler, 6, Midland, landed a nice string of crappie while Allison Chancler, Midland, took a 3 1/2 pound cat. Midland's Scott Ko brought home four stripers, the largest 11 1/2 pounds.

At Thomas, Sam Froman, Big Spring, hauled in a 23-pound yellow off his trotline. Crappie fishing at the lake was fair to good in 20 feet of water off the rocky areas, black bass fair along the brushy spots while yellow, blue and channel cats were good on trotlines. Channels also were hitting rod and reel baits as well.

Dickerson leads Colts to victory

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Eric Dickerson ran 6 yards for a touchdown on the only offensive series he played as the Indianapolis Colts rolled to a 20-7 exhibition victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers Saturday night.

The Colts built a 17-0 halftime lead and held off the rebuilding Bucs with rookie Chris Chandler at quarterback in the second half.

NFL

Indianapolis drove 78 yards in nine plays after the opening kickoff, capped by Dickerson's sweep of right end less than five minutes into the game.

Mike Prior's interception and 23-yard return to Tampa Bay's 8-yard line set up George Wonsley's 8-yard touchdown run on the first play of the second quarter for a 14-0 lead. Dean Biasucci added two field goals.

Rookie Bill Ransdell directed the Bucs' only scoring drive — a 11-play, 75-yard march culminated by Kerry Goode's 7-yard run with 9:44 left in the third period.

Bears 20, Dolphins 17

CHICAGO — Mike Tomczak's 25-yard touchdown pass to Jim Thornton and Eric Starr's 1-yard replay touchdown rallied the Chicago Bears past the Miami Dolphins.

Tomczak directed a 72-yard touchdown drive, capped by the TD pass to Thornton, to open the second half.

Starr, a rookie out of North Carolina, appeared to be stopped at the goal line but television replays showed he had broken the plane of the goal line and the Bears were awarded the touchdown, putting them ahead early in the final peeriod.

Miami wide receiver James Pruitt scored a pair of touchdowns in the first half on passes of 14 yards from Dan Marino and 24 yards from Ron Jaworski.

Miami linebacker Hugh Green suffered a broken left rib in the third quarter and will be out for three weeks.

Browns 13, Lions 10

CLEVELAND — Ozzie Newsome caught a 7-yard scoring pass from Bernie Kosar, and Jeff Jaeger kicked two field goals to lead Cleveland over Detroit.

Newsome, who did not catch a scoring pass last season for the first time in his NFL career, leaped in the end zone to grab the first-quarter pass from Kosar.

Eagles 23, Jets 12

PHILADELPHIA — Rookie quarterback Don McPherson scored a touchdown in his pro debut to lead Philadelphia past the sluggish New York Jets.

McPherson, an All-American last season at Syracuse who was not taken until the sixth round after insisting that he wanted to play quarterback, played the second half. He was 4-for-10, hitting rookie wide receiver Todd White three times for 50 yards before sneaking over from the 1.

After the Jets took an early lead when James Hasty returned a blocked field goal 71 yards for a score, Philadelphia took a 13-6 lead on two field goals and a 1-yard scoring flip from Randall Cunningham to Mike Quick.

Falcons 34, Patriots 30

FOXBORO, Mass. — Bret Clark's fumble recovery in the end zone with 1:08 left in the first half gave Atlanta the lead for good, and the Falcons survived two TD passes by Doug Flutie to beat New England.

The Patriots were driving toward a go-ahead touchdown as Flutie moved them from their 41-yard line to a first down at the Atlanta 21. But on the next play, center Pete Brock snapped the ball before Flutie was ready and Carter Wiley recovered for the Falcons with one minute to play.

Clark's recovery gave the Falcons a 14-13 lead. and Brian Davis made it 17-13 with a 53-yard field goal as the first half ended.

The Falcons increased the lead to 27-13 on a 20-yard field goal by Pat Broussard and a 1-yard touchdown run by Kenny Flowers on the first play of the fourth quarter.

Scott Campbell and Chris Miller threw touchdown passes for Atlanta. Teddy Garcia kicked three field goals for New England.

Giants 34, Packers 3

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Perry Williams returned an interception 45 yards for a touchdown and Jeff Hostetler, Joe Morris and George Adams ran for touchdowns as the New York Giants smothered Green Bay.

LA's Woodson gets his respect

HOUSTON (AP) — All Tracy Woodson wanted from Nolan Ryan was a little respect.

"I just wanted to get respect and not have him treat me like a number-seven hitter," Woodson said after his two-run fourth inning single Saturday night led the Los Angeles Dodgers past the Houston Astros 5-3.

Last year, Woodson homered off Ryan for his first big league home run.

"I figured he would remember last year and try to blow me away," Woodson said. "He hasn't made me look bad yet."

Woodson's game winning hit came with two outs and on a two-strike count.

"It looked like Ryan had him," Los Angeles manager Tommy Ladorda said. "He had struck out Pete (Pedro Guerrero) and (John) Shelby and had a 0-2 count on Woodson. That was the big hit for us. That's the thing we were doing to get us in first place. The last week or so we haven't been getting the two-out hits and Houston has."

Houston fell to 3½ games behind the Dodgers in the National League West.

"I'm not worried," Astros manager Hal Lanier said. "We're in the thick of things, we just need to score more runs tomorrow."

Tim Belcher, 8-4, had shut out the Astros on four hits through seven innings, but Glenn Davis and Terry Puhl singled with one out in the eighth and Kevin Bass followed with his 11th homer. Jay Howell set down five of the last six batters to earn his 14th save.

Nolan Ryan, 8-9, has lost four straight decisions to the Dodgers and is 11-19 lifetime against Los Angeles. The right-hander struck out six in seven innings. Ryan, the all-time strikeout leader, increased his league-leading total to 163 for the season.

Los Angeles took a 2-0 lead in the fourth. Kirk Gibson led off with a walk and Mike Marshall doubled. Two outs later, Mike Scioscia was walked intentionally and Woodson singled home Gibson and Marshall.

Steve Sax reached on an infield hit in the fifth, stole second and scored on Gibson's single.

Mets balk to victory over Bucs

Associated Press

Relief ace Jim Gott was hardly a stopper for the Pittsburgh Pirates Saturday night.

Gott's major league record-tying three balks in the eighth inning scored two runs and set up a third as the New York Mets opened up a six-game lead in the National League East by beating Pittsburgh.

All three balks were for failing to come to a stop.

The balks "were obvious, they were very flagrant. And I should know what a balk looks like as many times as our pitchers got called for them in the first 2½ months," said Mets manager Davey Johnson. "They obviously were the big plays.

"There was no question he was balking."

Pirates manager Jim Leyland was much more skeptical.

"I'm a professional and I'm not going to second guess the umpires' decisions," Leyland said. "But it's frustrating to a manager at times when a pitcher throws four pitches and gets called for a balk on the fifth. That's what I don't understand."

Gott, 5-4, had balked just twice in his previous 44 games.

The Mets, trailing 3-1 after Pittsburgh's three-run sixth inning, got a run back in the seventh on pinch-hitter Lee Mazzilli's RBI single.

Bob McClure, 2-3, pitched a scoreless seventh in relief of Dwight Gooden. Randy Myers allowed singles to Sid Bream and R.J. Reynolds to start the ninth and was replaced by Roger McDowell, who earned his 11th save.

Expos 5, Cardinals 4

ST. LOUIS — Tom Foley hit a two-run triple, and Otis Nixon added a two-run double as Montreal continued its hex over St. Louis.

The Expos are 10-2 against the Cards this season and have won 11 of their last 13 games. They also have won 14 of their last 16 on the road.

Rookie Brian Holman, 2-3, allowed five hits over five innings for the victory. Tim Burke pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his 12th save.

Danny Cox, 3-8, was the loser. The Expos got three runs off Cox in the first inning. Nixon led off with a single, Dave Martinez singled him to third, and Tim Raines drove in the first run with a sacrifice fly.

Cubs 7, Phillies 4

CHICAGO — Al Nipper allowed five hits in 5 1-3 innings to win for the first time since May 24 and reliever Pat Perry hit his first major-league home run as Chicago defeated Philadelphia.

Rafael Palmeiro extended his hitting streak to 16 games with an RBI single off Mike Maddux, 3-2, in the fifth inning.

Nipper, 2-4, has made only three starts since beating Atlanta in May.

Perry allowed Lance Parrish's two-run single with two outs in the ninth and was replaced by Rich Gossage, who earned his 11th save of the season and 300th of his career. Gossage is second on the all-time saves list behind Rollie Fingers, who has 341.

Padres 4, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Dennis Rasmussen allowed six hits in eight-plus innings to beat his former Cincinnati teammates for the third time since being traded June 8.

Rasmussen, 10-7, retired the first 10 batters of the game, striking out the side in the second and third innings. The left-hander struck out eight and walked two to win for the eighth time in nine decisions with San Diego.

Mark Davis relieved after Eric Davis opened the ninth with a single and earned his 19th save in 23 opportunities.

Keith Moreland's single in the sixth inning drove in the go-ahead run against Jose Rijo, 11-7. The hit scored Roberto Alomar, who had tripled.

Braves 7, Giants 2

ATLANTA — Pete Smith allowed five hits in six innings to win for the first time since July 4 and Lonnie Smith singled twice and doubled to lead a 14-hit attack.

It was Atlanta's third straight victory, tying its longest winning streak of the season.

Smith, 4-11, struck out three and walked two. He was 0-3 in his last five starts. Jose Alvarez allowed two hits and struck out six in three innings to earn his first major-league save in 42 appearances.

The Braves scored a run in the first against San Francisco starter Atlee Hammaker, 5-4.

ANGELS

JUST FOR grins, Midland added another two runs in the seventh. C.L. Penigar walked, stole second and came home on a double by McCollom. McCollom later scored on El Paso's second wild pitch of the evening.

In the top of the first, a wild pitch by Diablo starter Jim Hunter brought home Penigar. Penigar singled, stole second and went to third on an error by Diablo catcher Angel Rodriguez before scoring on the wild throw.

Second baseman Ruben Amaro was credited with the game winning RBI, driving in Tom Alfredson in the second.

ANGEL NOTES: Pitcher Chris Collins was re-assigned to Class A Palm Springs following Friday night's game. In 21 games for Midland, Collins was 5-10 with a 7.31 ERA. Filling his spot on the roster will be Phil Venturino, who has pitched for Class AAA Edmonton this season. Venturino compiled a 6-2 record and 6.28 ERA in 61.2 innings for the Trappers. Last year at Midland, Venturino was 11-6 with a 5.51 ERA in 26 starts ... With his two doubles Saturday, Jeff Manto now has 26 extra base hits and 48 RBI in his last 44 games ... Jim McCollom extended his hitting streak to 12 with a 2-for-4 performance. Since the streak began July 24, McCollom is hitting .463 (19-for-41).

SOCCER

Other Midlanders on the '75 team included Donnie Trentham, Paul "Mano" Fuentes and Tommy Tipton.

"As expected," Parnell said, "competition for the older boys bracket was extremely tough as soccer is the national sport for most of the countries we played." Midland also sent players for the under-16, 17-18 and under-19 teams, all of which were eliminated early.

Parnell said the playing surfaces ranged from a pitiful "black clay" in Sweden to the "most lush grass I've ever seen" in Denmark.

"It was a real Spartan existence," Parnell said.

"We had 77 of us stay in a gymnasium the first week and 120 of us in one gym the second week. We had two toilets and five showers between us. It was wall-to-wall sleeping bags."

Regardless of the cramped arrangements, Parnell said the MSA looked upon the excursion as a success and a "socially maturing" trip.

Plans are in the works for a return engagement next year. The MSA will announce later this fall when tryouts for the '89 Flames tour will be held.

American sets mark

DOVER, England (AP) — Gary Antonick of Virginia Beach, Va., swam the English Channel on Saturday in eight hours, 46 minutes, the Channel Swimming Association confirmed.

Antonick, 25, set out at 7 a.m. local time from Shakespeare Beach, Dover, on the south coast of England and swam to the north coast of France, reaching a point between Cap Gris Nez and Calais, the association said.

An American woman, Penny Lee Dean of California, holds the speed record across the channel. She crossed from Shakespeare Beach to Cap Gris Nez, July 29 1978 in 7:40.

Discovering new state

NM's hidden secrets revealed

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

It was a trip like most trips. The Mrs. broke her wrist. The car windshield was shattered from top to bottom, almost as though from a Bob Feller or Nolan Ryan fast ball. On second thought, location is more suggestive of Rex Barney or Ryne Duren heat.

Five rolls of color and another five rolls of black and White were shoved into the L.L. Bean camera jacket, but since the San Juans and Sangre de Cristos had been visited so often before, it was like putting on a comfortable old shoe.

The theory was that there would be four rolls of b&w and four of color left over for the winter ski trip.

Well, so much for careful planning.

IF IT WEREN'T for Mavis Murphy, maybe none of this would have happened. While admiring her watercolors at the Assembly of Arts booth in May, came the slow realization that in the haste to get to Taos or Durango, a lot of New Mexico was being missed.

It resulted in riding the High Road to Taos twice and the Turquoise Trail coming back to Texas in addition to the traditional riding the rails, and dining at historic hotels mining town hotels.

Along the way, we wound up "on location" twice and visited an historic church famed for collecting crutches and not so famed for the cats in its belfry.

Another photo of an old mission or church and I may have to wear a white collar.

It used to be that the floor show at Las Vegas' Plaza Hotel could be a hanging in the park across the street, where Tom Mix once made movies. But they cut down the tree a few years back. Across the Plaza, too, is The Imperial, Vincente Silva's around-the-clock saloon-gambling joint from which his gang of 40 New Mexican bandits operated with impunity back in the '80s and '90s.

The tales about Silva make the Kid from down state seem like a choir boy.

IN DURANGO, dinner at the Strater is naturally followed by the melodrama in the Silver Dollar Theater and as proof, perhaps, that Durango is just a summer extension of Midland, one enthusiast who had just purchased his melodrama ticket was telling friends he hoped this was as good as the Summer Mummers he saw in Midland....

A night in Ouray brought an introduction to the Coachlight, another hotel rescued from the past, and the trout might have been the best meal of all.

Encouraging was the fact that work was being done on the Beaumont Hotel, a classic edifice that begs to be brought back to life. However, the Ouray building inspector informed that the building was owned by a rich woman in Illinois, who has done a little repair work, but has no plans for any extensive restoration.

The high point, no pun intended, of the Ouray visit of course was the jeep ride up into Yankee Boy Basin famed for its wild flowers and the double water falls, the ones used in the Coors ads, so we were told.

THE TRAIL up is marked by the still operating Camp Bird Mine, famed for its losing stands with avalanches; ghosts of diggings past, including Sneffles, once a town of 2,000 miners, and hikers and campers taking advantage of the clear rush of mountain water for a trout bout.

Bill, our Texas driver-guide, then returned the long way, switchbacks that climbed high into Governor's Basin. Look 2,000 feet below and see the road you've just come over and the jeep is leaning in that direction, even the roll bars aren't much comfort.

Bill mentioned that Black Bear Pass, his favorite, route to Telluride wouldn't be open for another week because of snow, so he was asked about the trail that disappeared around a bend.

"Is that trail impassable because of the snow?" he was asked.

"No it just ends," he said. "However, it's the road they used to take to Telluride in the old days. It was so precipitous they'd have to get off their horses and lead them over the pass."

If jeeps aren't your bag, go by llama, "you do the walking and leave the lugging to the llamas." It's a new outdoors service out of Ouray.

FOR THOSE who haven't been to Chama lately, the 67-mile Cumbres, Toltec Scenic Railroad operated by the states of Colorado and New Mexico now has comfortable coach cars with big windows. Previously, passengers rode in converted box cars, although a couple of box cars are still hooked on for sight-seeing and the convenience of photo bugs.

The railroad depends on volunteer help and club members come in from as far away as San Diego, Denver and Kansas City to spend a few days helping out around the yards.

The Cumbres, Toltec originates a one trip a day out of Chama and another out of Antonito. Travelers may go all the way or reach the lunch stop at Osier and come back. Apparently, the fire on the trestle this spring during the filming of a movie was quickly repaired with the filming company footing the tab.

Four trains daily make the run from Durango to Silverton, starting at 7:30 a.m. with a two-hour lunch lay over in Silverton. Reservations are suggested, but 16 tickets daily are held out for the 8:30 a.m. train.

THE MAVIS Murphy trail of embarrassment-...what else when someone who came from Yorkshire, Eng., introduces you to your own country... began after shooting a seldom photographed, almost lost in the weeds, church at Arroyo Secco and the Rancho Taos St. Francis of Assisi church, which probably has been the subject of more photos than Marilyn Munroe.

On to the High Road to discover Las Trampas around a bend in the road, another church dating back to the early 1800s. It won't soon be forgotten since it was here that the Mrs. slipped on some pebbles while standing on an embankment talking to a woman from Brooklyn in front. She sat down, hard. The temptation for a sermon on skiing was wisely stifled.

Mining ghost camps in the sky.

The little bar beside the road with so many colored bottles and mirrors that it could have been mistaken for a shrine, had a customer at 9:30 a.m., but no ice to relieve what at first was suspected to be a sprained wrist. The friendly bartender suggested the general store in town just up the road.

Truchas is perched on the edge of a high mesa. Mt. Truchas, New Mexico's second tallest peak, is the backgroud to the east, and to the west green slopes swiftly drop to the Rio Grande, winding somewhere amongst the sharp red ridges in the valley below, offering a dramatic contrast of terrain.

After purchasing a package of ice, the lady behind the counter wanted to know, "Did you see the picture?"

"What picture?"

"The Beanfield Wars, they filmed it here," and from her enthusiasm, she must have been in it.

THE MURPHY trail wound its way down into the valley to Chimayo where the Trujillos, several generations of weavers, demonstrated their craft with an informal tour of the premises.

Not far away, El Santuario chapel, built in 1813 or so around a hole in which a crucifix of South American origin was found, is a tourist magnet.

The discarded crutches in the room attest to the curative powers of the earth where the crucifix was found.

El Santuario's priest is from Spain and marvels at the serenity of the setting and peace visitors find here.

What he may not know is that he has cats in his belfry. A wiry red cat climbs the ladder leading from the ground to one of the belfries and waits, probably for an unsuspecting bird.

The Mavis inspired Ghost Town Turquoise Trail begins on route 10 a few miles outside of Santa Fe and meanders south, east of the Sandia Crest.

Cerillos, where turquoise once was mined, as long as 500 A.D., lies in a cottonwood grove a half mile west of the highway along the Santa Fe railway.

The main street is the dusty dirt of your favorite western novel or movie and lined with an antique shop, a few saloons, hotel, a mercantile establishment, complete with traditional overhangs, and at the far end a church...a couple of horses at a hitching post and it would have been like being in another century. In fact, Disney once used it for a TV series set about Elfego Baca, a notorious New Mexico gunman.

THE OLD coal mining town of Madrid is a few miles down the road and probably rates as the worst ghost town visited since the trip to Jerome, Ariz., a couple of years ago.

Madrid has abandoned and decaying company houses for authenticity, but the shops, the coal mine tour, the summer repertory theater, and artists and craftsmen indicate there are those determined to keep alive the ghost.

Just beyond is Golden, the site of an 1830 gold rush that languished for lack of water. It's promise, however, attracted U.S. Grant and Thomas Edision, but the gold is still awaiting a yet undeveloped technology.

On a hill beside the highway, easily missed for the traveler who isn't alert, is the little mission, built in the late 1830s to honor St. Francis of Assisi. Hand carved gravemarkers, many fenced by worn pickets, mark the cemetery in front of the mission. Inside is a hand carved figure of the mission's patron saint. It was brought to New Mexico by ox cart in the early 1700s and stood originally in a Santa Fe cathedral. Another statue of St. Peter, a primitive cement carving, is believed to have been done by one of the Italian miners.

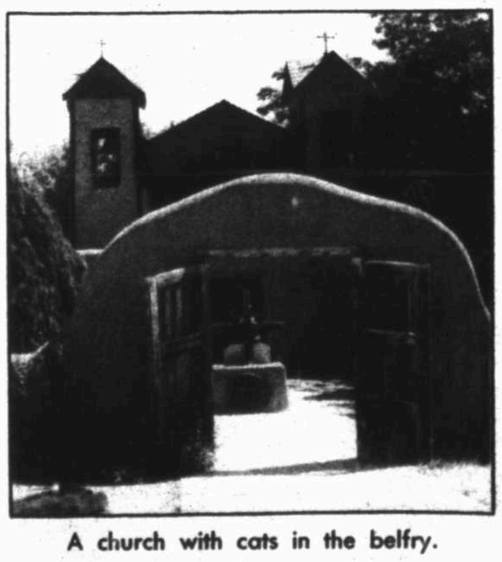
Golden, a town of 22 stores and 100 homes in 1845, busier than Santa Fe, is reduced to 14 families whose main concern is the vandalism of wandering scavengers.

These are some of the ghosts towns of the turquoise trail. Still, Willard, Cedarvale, and Corona ..... located in the wide open and storm tossed skies of central New Mexico... are actually more ghostly...and they aren't supposed to be.

Whatever you do, get an up-to-date road map. A couple years ago, the High Road out of Taos was State 3, now it's 518. .

South of I-25 to Albuquerque, state 14 is now something else 518, or thereabouts, and central New Mexico is no place to get on the wrong road.

If you like poking around in the past, or the past in the present, you'll find the trip worthwhile, and if you are an artist, like Mavis....



A church with cats in the belfry.

Grossman, Rehe advance

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Amateur Ann Grossman of Grove City, Ohio, qualifying for a championship series final for the first time, beat fourth-seeded Rosalyn Fairbank 6-4, 2-6, 6-2 Saturday in the semifinals of the $100,000 Virginia Slims of San Diego tournament.

In the other semifinal, second-seeded Stephanie Rehe of Highland, Calif., overpowered amateur Deborah Graham of Fountain Valley, Calif., 6-2, 6-2.

Grossman, 17, will play Rehe in Sunday's finals. Rehe also reached the finals in 1986, where she lost to Melissa Gurney.

Rehe, ranked 25th in the world, lost her first two games before breezing past the 17-year-old Graham, ranked 315th.

"It wasn't one of my more pretty matches, but I'm happy to win," said Rehe, 19, who is starting her fourth year as a professional. "She had some problems with her serve. I just concentrated when she was hitting, and she madez:JHJseeking her second championship of the year. She won a $50,000 tournament in Taipei, Taiwan, in April.

Grassland Estates new subdivision developed by SBC Corporation

On the west horizon of Midland a new subdivision - Grassland Estates - is beginning to rise against the Midland skyline. Appropriately named, to reflect the ranching heritage of the Scharbauer family and encompassing the history of the land as well as the future. The master plan of this area already includes Scharbauer Elementary school, with 110 residential lots ready for construction.

SBC Corporation is responsible for the development of Scharbauer ranch land which is located all around Midland. According to Doug Henson, president, at the present time they are concentrating on the land west of Loop 250, south of Wadley and north of Highway 80.

"SBC Corporation is dedicated to being a long term land development company who is committed to the changing needs of the Midland community," explained Henson. "We are an affiliate corporation of Scharbauer Brother & Co. which is a Texas corporation that is owned by the children of Clarence Scharbauer, Jr. - Clarence III, Douglas, Chris and Pamela Ruth. The four children and myself are the only officers and directors of the corporation"

Although Henson is a native Midlander, he didn't become associated with the Scharbauer family until he began working at First National Bank. With a B.A. degree in Industrial Management from Texas Tech University, Henson worked in the Marketing division of the bank from 1969 until 1981. He then left the bank to pursue his own interest in real estate development and began to encourage the Scharbauer family in real estate development and not just ranching.

Between 1981 and 1984, Henson and URS Engineers, a national land use planning firm, were retained as consultants to the family and developed a master plan for the Scharbauer land holdings adjacent to Midland.

"The family decided that the plan was viable, the economic study said 'west growth' was the natural way for the Midland community to grow and the SBC Corporation was chartered in October of 1984," said Henson.

During this same time period, Midland Independent School District began a search for a site for a new elementary school in west Midland. SBC Corporation felt that an elementary school is a "magnet" for a new subdivision. The land was purchased for Scharbauer Elementary and an additional junior high school when needed.

Next, the Midland Memorial Hospital District approached the Scharbauers about the need of an alcohol and drug treatment center. According to the master plan, a 40 acre tract of land was designed for a future medical facility, with 10 acres being used for the construction of Clearview Hospital.

"After the completion of the elementary school in 1985, the local, state and national economy fell apart and it was decided to put the subdivision on hold," stated Henson.

Although plans for Grassland were set aside, during 1986 property within Westridge Park was deeded for Sam's Wholesale Club and a new mall site was planned. Because of the economy, the Deauville Corporation who was handling the mall property could not get any lenders to commit to the mall. "Sam's was the only tenant not concerned about the recession throughout the state," explained Henson. "SBC decided to also provide for future regional retail and the Westridge Park addition was developed, with Sam's as its anchor."

While the Grassland Estates was "on hold", SBC Corporation continued to keep demographic figures on the Midland community and in January of 1987, a trend was beginning to develop which showed that the housing demand of homes in excess of 2,500 square feet was going to outplace supply during the second quarter of 1988.

In September of 1987, it was decided that the time was right to get the proposed subdivision out of "moth balls" and began the infrastructure - sewer, water, streets, cable, telephone, etc. - were begun.

Henson said that with Midland growing at approximately three percent a year which is a solid stable rate of growth, they see that their "forecast" is becoming true. "Trinity Estates, Polo Park and Crestgate are beginning to fill up and the first home at Grassland is nearing completion and a second home is already under construction."

Grassland Estates has been designed in three stages and Phase I consists of 110 out of 1,249 total preliminary platted lots. Most of the lots are approximately 85 by 125 feet and are priced at $22,000 to $25,000, depending on location. These lots were designed to include a backyard big enough for a children's play area and the alleys are wider for better access to the rear entry garages.

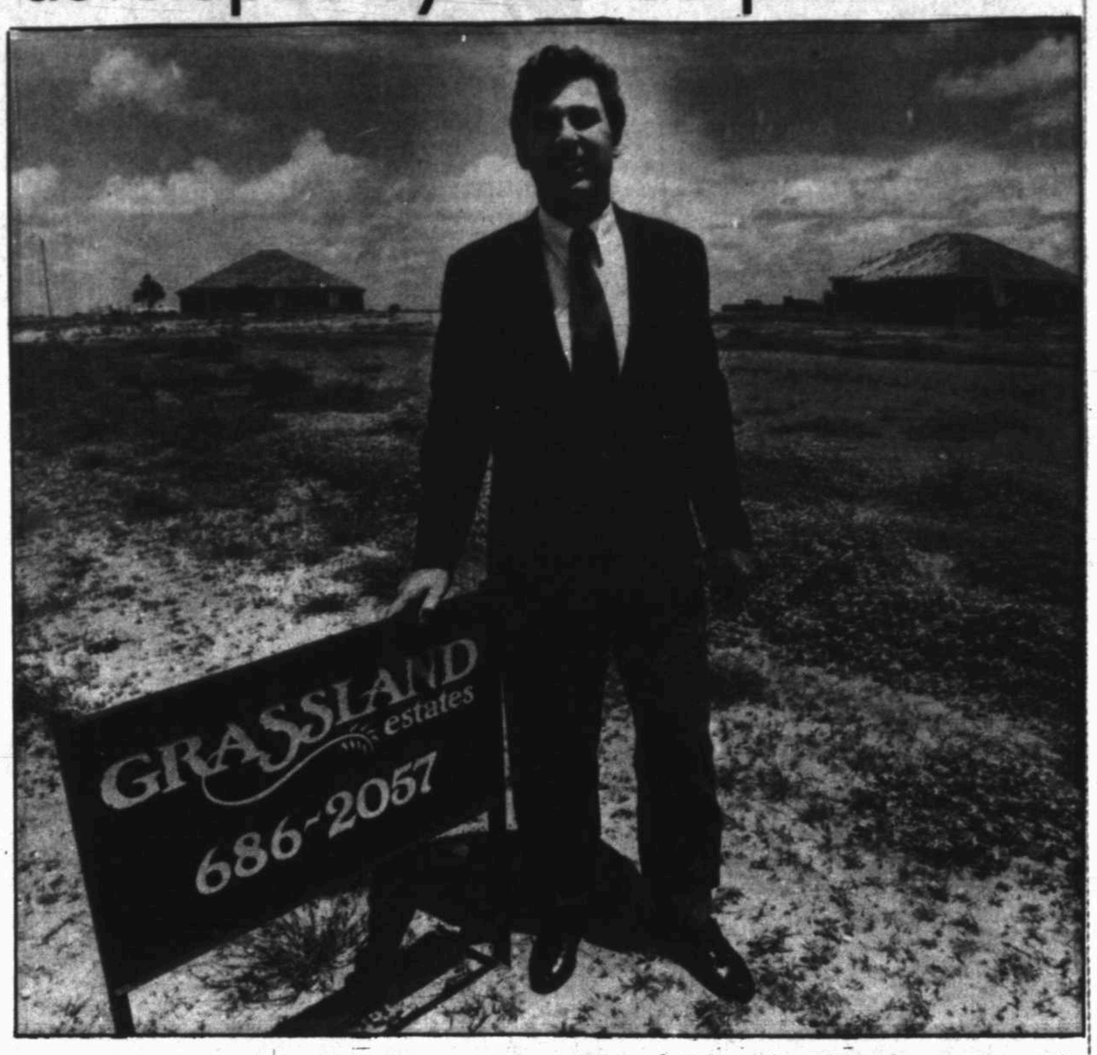
A circular street system, exquisite landscaping and the location will make this a desirable subdivision.

"The location of Grassland is ideal for a person who is investing in an executive style home, who works in downtown, Claydesta, or the area between Midland and Odessa, and who wants the assurity of controlled growth. It is also a new subdivision that is in the Lee High School district. We also feel that the circular street system, the elementary school and the new park will help build unity in this neighborhood," said Henson. "Our lots are larger to accommodate this executive type of home that we have planned with landscaping throughout the subdivision. The landscaping we have planned will be native to this area and will require less water. For example, the grass we have planted is equally as attractive as bermuda but requires one-third less water."

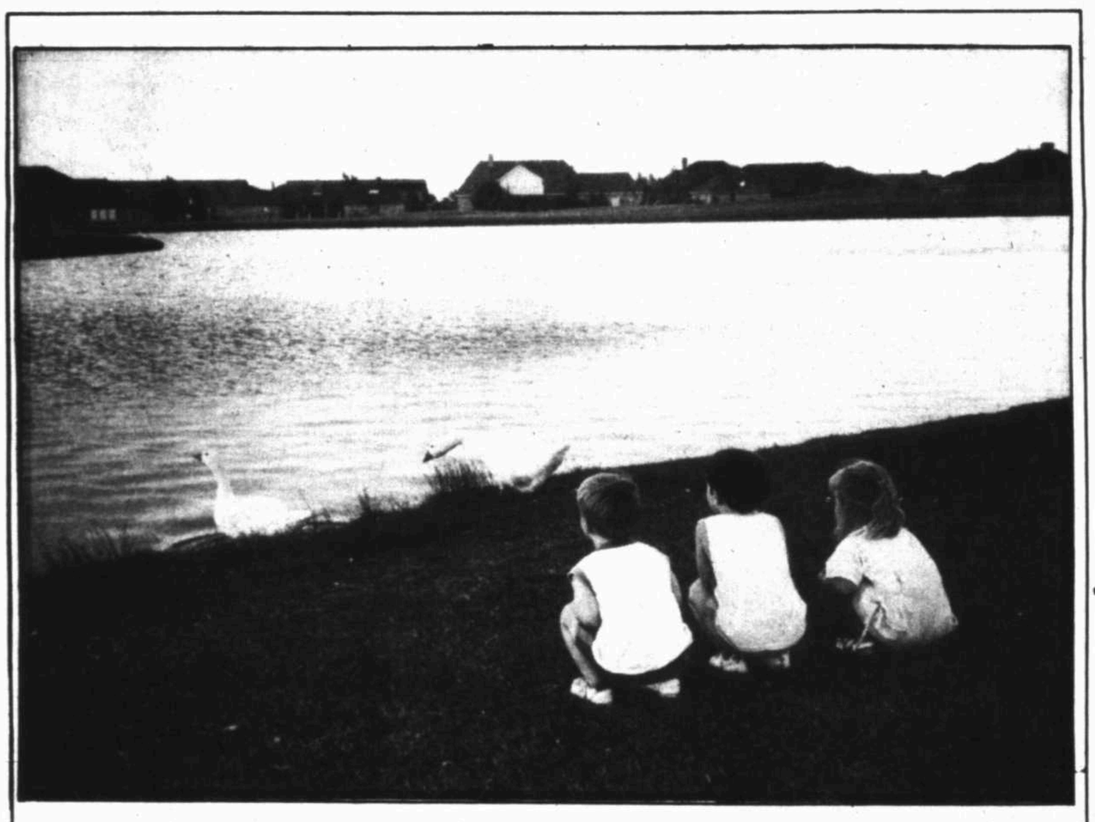
To take virgin land and develop it is a great challenge to Henson. He is very proud to be with a family who is committed through "thick and thin" in making decisions that will have a definite effect on the future of Midland. By 1991, he feels that Phase II will be ready to begin construction and that it will take possibly eight to 12 years for the subdivision to expand from Highway 191 to Wadley.

As to the future, Henson explained that the master plan for the area west of Loop 250 has many possibilities - from an urban center to a sport complex - depending on the needs of Midland. "With the recent dedication of the UTPB Economic Diversication Energy Center, we have seen another example of the Scharbauer family dedication in seeing that the future has a chance to grow and prosper."

Through these many opportunities, the Scharbauer family and Henson have assisted in the betterment of a region west of Midland. Grassland Estates is only one of the creations that will be visible on the west horizon for many years to come.

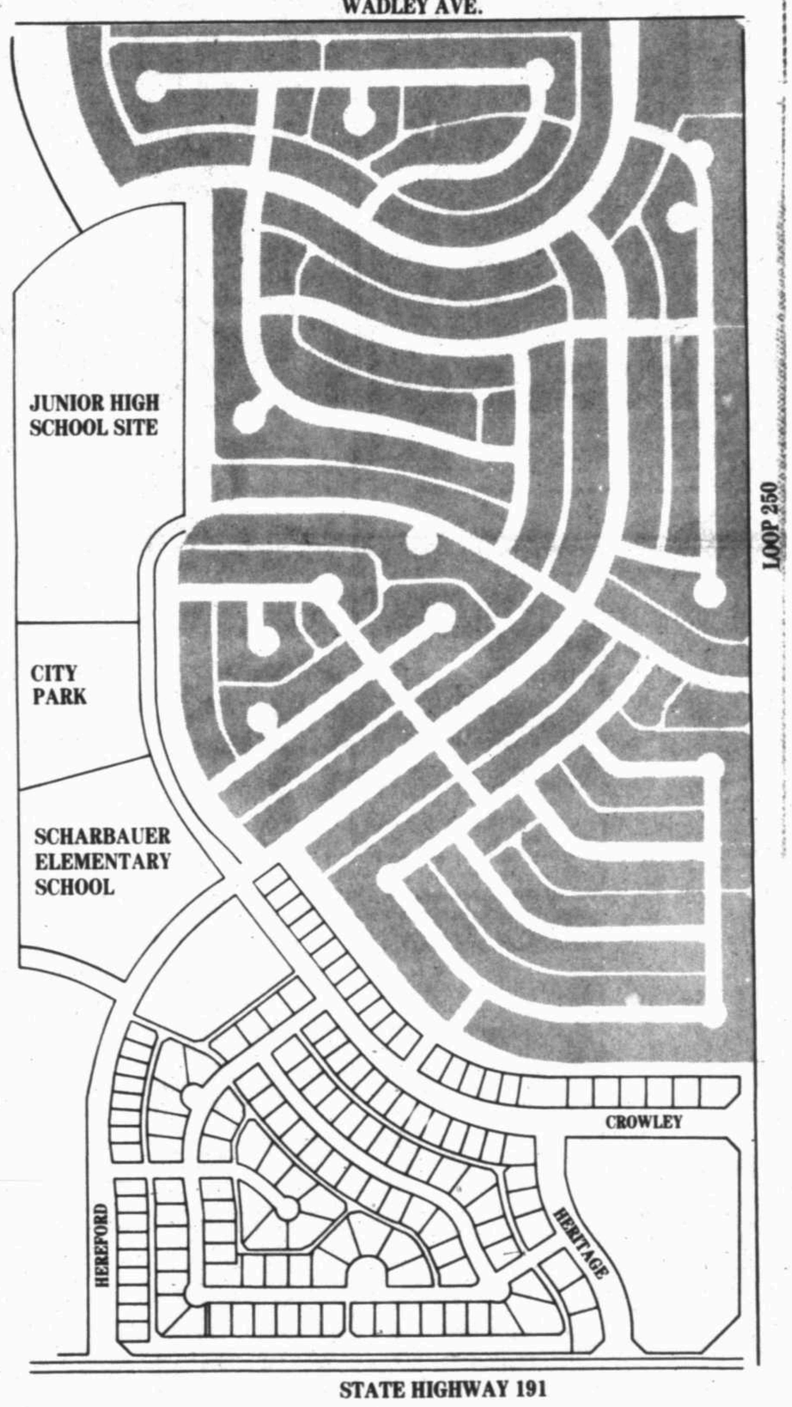


Doug Henson, president of SBC Corporation, is pictured in front of two homes that are being built at Grassland Estates. Phase I of the subdivision consists of 110 residential lots for executive style homes that will have approximately 2,500 square feet.



Children can be seen everywhere in Green Tree Country Club Estates, either playing kickball or feeding the geese. Jordan Freeman, age 3, is pictured here with his twin brother and sister, Kevin and Caroline, age 3 1/2, recently by one of the lakes on the golf course. They are the children of Rusty and Andrea Freeman.

Chaparral, Realtors has many properties open today from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m. throughout the subdivision.



This map shows all the phases of development in Grassland Estates. Phase I of Grassland Estates, which is the site of the current construction, is located west of Loop 250 and north of Highway 191. The shaded area of the map includes planned, future development.

Scharbauer Elementary is just a bike ride away from Grassland Estates and a new city park and a fourth junior high school is adjacent to the area. Grassland Estates, an exclusive but convenient residential community, is the place to live in the future.

Green Tree Country Club Estates has unique look, community spirit

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Through the past nine years of my evening walks, I have observed Green Tree Country Club Estates grow from a cotton field into a subdivision with a unique community spirit.

In preparing this article on the quality of life at Green Tree for Chaparral, Realtors, I reflected on how much the subdivision has grown and changed during this time.

Upon entering Green Tree from the south entrance, I immediately noticed the wide variety of homes that have been designed to suit many individuals homeowner's needs. From large executive homes to stucco townhouses to Victorian homes, this subdivision is unique due to the many architectural styles it exemplifies.

Many of the homes are located on the golf course and have a breathtaking view of the course and the surrounding lakes.

The beautiful landscaped yards are truly captivating as you walk and try to identify the many different types of blooming flowers. All of the homes that I see on a regular basis have well manicured lawns due to the many homeowners that work constantly in their yards to achieve this perfection.

This enables many people to get out of the house and meet their neighbors, not only to unify the neighborhood as well as to share new gardening tips. The committee which decides the "yard of the month" has a very difficult job indeed.

Even though one can't help but notice the peaceful atmosphere of the neighborhood, many people jog, walk or bicycle their way around the outer circle of the subdivision for their daily exercise. Other couples just stroll along holding hands and catch up on each other lives.

During my walks, I have observed everything from a small child learning to ride a new bike to older children having a neighborhood game of kick ball to teenagers gathering in a yard to visit.

One homeowner I talked to said they couldn't imagine living any place else in Midland. In addition to living on the golf course, one of his favorite things about Green Tree is watching the ducks waddle across the course in their pecking order with the geese following closely behind. He wonders where else a person can experience this time of atmosphere.

Moving to Green Tree helped another resident adapt to West Texas. She enjoys the "green" beyond her backyard and living on one of the private cul-de-sacs gives her children room to play.

After living in many large cities, she added that she enjoyed the friendship and closeness she and her children have with her neighbors.

Green Tree Country Club Estates is not just a style of living but a way of life. Being a resident has never been more affordable than it is today. Chaparral, Realtors has many properties located throughout the subdivision open today from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m. Walk through many of the homes and experience the community spirit this subdivision has to offer.

Corporate or third party properties

Q. What does it mean when my Realtor refers to a house as a third party or corporate listing?

Muldrow

A. Let us first establish what a third party is. Employee Relocation companies, commonly referred to as a third party, are firms which are retained by corporations to assist in the transferring of employees from one location to another. Some of the larger Employee Relocation firms are Travelers, Merrill Lynch and Homequity.

A "third party or corporate" property is the home of a transferred employee which is purchased by the relocation company in order to free up the employee's equity and responsibility for that property enabling him to purchase a home in his new location. This is essential to a corporation; the process enables a transferee to be on the job, when and where needed, with the family unit intact, resulting in a more effective employee.

Once the acquisition of the home has taken place, the relocation firm acts as a third party between the transferee and a purchaser on behalf of the employee's corporation.

Total costs to a company for transferring an employee are in the range or $35,000 to $40,000, so it is not a process initiated without definite need and purpose, and must be accomplished as smoothly and timely as possible.

Q. Are there advantages to buying one of these properties?
A. There are advantages to purchasing a third party listing. First, these properties are usually conditioned for a quick sale because the longer they are in the inventory of the relocation company, the greater the cost to the corporation. All major systems including heat, air and kitchen appliances should be in working order, the property should be clean, the yard maintained, and often painting and recarpeting are done if necessary to put the home in quick resalable condition.

More improtantly the property should be competatively priced because the figure paid the transferee for this home has generally been determined by two appraisals and a Broker's Price Opinion from a local broker. The home is nearly always marketed at this price or within very close range.

There are also disadvantages to purchasing a third party property. First, in a transaction of this type there is no personal contact with the seller so the buyer has little opportunity to learn of special features or amenities a home may have. Second, the purchaser will be negotiation with a company having no emotional involvement in the property, but rather operating within set formulas based on acqusition costs, time in inventory, repair costs, etc.

Q. How do third party listings differ from REO properties?
A. The primary distinction between third party listings and REO properties, meaning real estate owned, is who has title to the property. Third party listings are owned by employee relocation firms, REO properties are generally owned by mortgage companies, banks, and mortgage insurance companies such as Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the FDIC.

These firms obtain title to properties through foreclosure, and at times are reluctant to spend additional money to recondition and prepare these properties for resale. Consequently, many of these properties are being sold on an as-is basis.

Q. How does Langston Realtors obtain third party listings?
A. Langston Realtors is a member of the prestigious Travelers Realty Network, a sister company to the Travelers Location Company, both owned by the Travelers Companies of Hartford, Connecticut. Therefore, Langston assists Travelers Relocation with Broker Price Opinions and the marketing of Midland Properties in their inventory. Travelers Relocation Company serves over 400 corporations with many being among the Fortune 500.

To be a member of the Travelers Realty Network, Langston has to meet and maintain stringent requirements of performance on sending and servicing referrals, on professionalism in relocation services, and on dedication to the real estate industry. It also had to attain a major share of the MLS market.

To secure the Travelers Relocation Company listings, Langston had to meet equally stringent standards for maintenance and marketing the properties, Langston has also been selected by numerous other relocation companies to list their properties in Midland.

Muldrow is the Corporate Department Director for Langston Realtors. His duties include the management and marketing of "third party" and REO listings.

Entrepreneurship, home ownership growing, thriving in Permian Basin

Phil Allard, owner of Gatherline Gas Company, has spent the last couple of years building his own company in Midland. He furthered his commitment to Midland when he bought his first home recently through Connie Powell, an associate of Don Harvey, Realtors.

Phil was born in Sweetwater, Texas where he graduated from Sweetwater High School in 1970. Phil then attended the University of North Texas where he completed his degree in business with minor studies in personnel management.

Following his graduation, Phil was hired by Roadway Express and worked in the trucking business for them in Fort Worth for one year. He then entered their sales force where he remained for the next three years.

Having grown up in the Permian Basin, however, Phil had just enough oil in his veins to be drawn back to this area and into the oil and gas business. Phil's old college roommate lived in Odessa and he had come to know a number of people who lived in Midland. This made moving to the Midland/Odessa area much easier.

Phil began here with Bob's Casing Crews, a service company that provided casing crews for drilling rigs. With this experience and later experience he gained working for Aztec Gas and Energy Industries, Phil greatly increased his knowledge of pipelines, compressors and the industry as a whole.

After realizing the future potential that might be possible in the natural gas business, Phil decided to take the first step of the proverbial thousand mile journey and start his own business. In 1986, he built his first gas pipeline in Pecos County. That line originally connected only 2 gas wells but today connects 6.

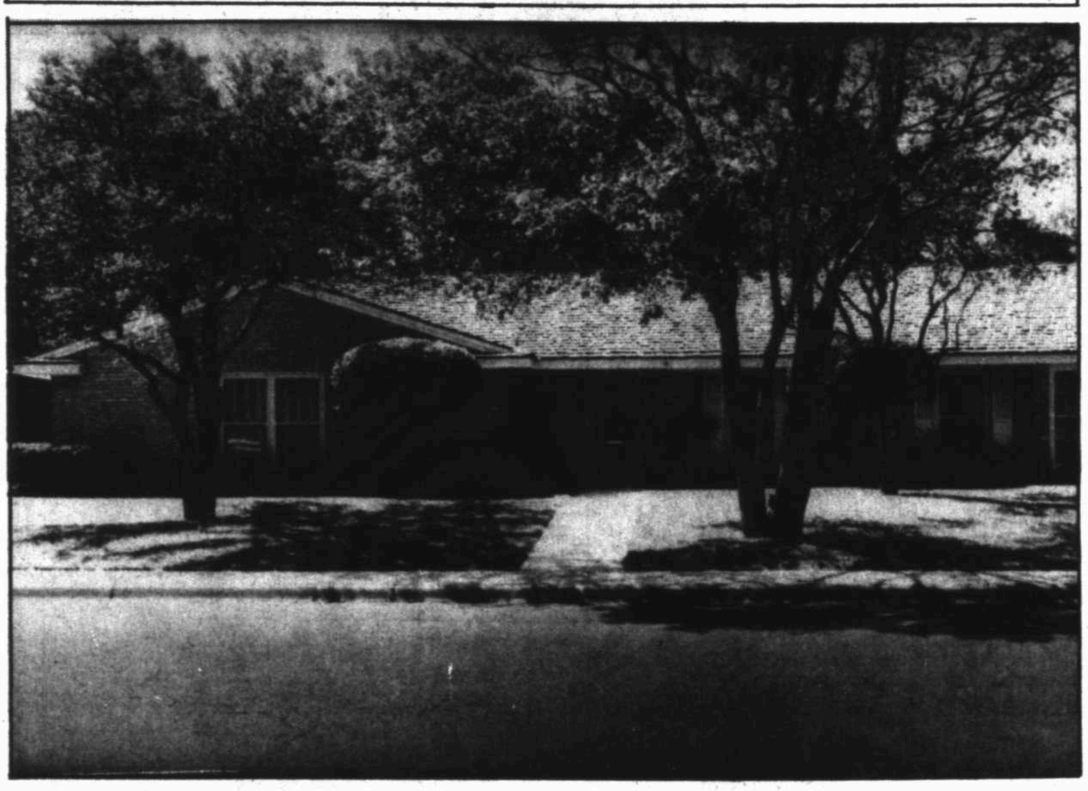
Phil is also a partner in Pecos Gas Operators, a company which markets natural gas compressors for Crawford Enterprises. Last year Phil completed a 3.2 million dollar order for just one client alone.

"I'm very optimistic about the future of the natural gas industry," said Phil. "While drilling for natural gas has subsided drastically over the last few years and reserves have dwindled, the stage is set for a real increase in market demand. Competition from foreign natural gas production does not affect our market as much as OPEC affects the petroleum industry," Phil added. "In addition the cost of importing liquified natural gas is still cost prohibitive."

"One of the most important features of natural gas is the fact that it is literally the cleanest burning abundant fuel available," said Phil. "In fact, I strongly feel that the environmentalists and the natural gas industry should work closely together to increase the move toward greater natural gas use in order to reduce the burning of other hydrocarbon fuels and that continues to seriously damage our atmosphere."

When asked about his latest commitment, the purchase of a home here, Phil said, "I've been looking for about one and a half years, and Connie Powell had the patience and perserverance to stick with me all that time. Connie helped me decide what I was really looking for. Connie is very professional, works hard and doesn't ever forget about you. With all my sales experience, I can really appreciate that."

Phil said he's looking forward to a very successful future in an industry that is destined for growth and an area that is destined to be a part of and benefactor of that growth.



This lovely home is located in the Warwick addition and features four bedrooms and three baths. The home has aged live oak trees and lush flower beds.

Traditional home in Warwick addition being offered by RE/MAX of Midland

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

RE/MAX of Midland has an attractive Harold Schull home in the exclusive Warwick addition. The four bedroom and three bath home has a formal living and dining room and a spacious family room.

The formal living room is to the right of the home's entrance. This room is big enough to accommodate a large sofa and a sitting area between two windows which have a picturesque view of the front yard. The living room flows into the formal dining room which is also brightened by a large window. A dining room table which could seat eight guests could easily fit in this room, as well as a china cabinet and server.

The entrance hall leads into the family room which has a tile floor and a brick fireplace. This is a very comfortable room and is ideal for family members to share a favorite television show. A sliding glass door leads to the beautifully landscaped backyard. A covered patio expands from the master bedroom to the breakfast room and is great for summer entertaining of friends with an outdoor barbeque.

One of the unique features of this home is the cozy breakfast room which has a built-in server for storage of silver and displaying everyday china. A sliding glass door affords a lovely view of the landscaped flower beds that line the backyard.

The breakfast room is separated from the kitchen by a small hall which also leads into the formal dining room. Double doors on one wall open to reveal a large, walk-in pantry.

The design of the U-shaped kitchen is very functional and is highlighted by a garden window above the kitchen sink. The kitchen appliances include a General Electric double oven and stove top, and a Kitchen Aid dishwasher. The kitchen also has a desk with a cabinet above for storage of cookbooks, bills, and letters.

The spacious utility room is adjacent to the kitchen and has a-half bath. The utility room features a drain in the vinyl floor, space for a freezer and a large storage closet for winter coats, golf clubs and fishing poles. A door from the utility room leads to a side yard and another door leads to the two car garage with automatic door openers.

The four bedrooms are located to the left of the entrance hall. The hall bath has two sinks and a shower-/tub. The bath has two concealed medicine cabinets and access to a large walk-in closet in one of the bedrooms.

Three of the bedrooms are large enough to accommodate king size beds and have over-sized closets with built-ins. One of the bedroom has a sliding glass door which opens on to the backyard.

The master bedroom offers a wonderful retreat for couples at the end of the day. It also has a door which leads to the backyard patio and the design of the master bath is wonderful. The bath has two dressing area with walk-in closets and a separate cabinet for storage of shoes. The dressing areas are connected by a bathing area which includes a built-in shower and tub.

The other amenities of this traditional style home are a sprinkler system, crown molding, and security system. The home contains over 3,000 square feet and is being offered by RE/MAX of Midland for $231,000.

TIPPING

Text by ELIZABETH EDWIN

Many Midlanders may have noticed a sign recently posted at the Midland International Airport informing patrons that the service tip for porters is 50 cents a bag. Although this sign may be offensive to some people, others may find it helpful. The reason: many people do not know what constitutes a proper tip for a service rendered.

According to Webster's New World Dictionary, a tip — in this context — is defined as, "to give a small present of money to (a waiter, porter, etc.) for some service; gratuity." Webster's defines gratuity as, "a gift of money, etc., esp. that given over payment due for a service rendered; tip."

By this definition, many people argue that a tip is a gift — an extra, if you will — for the quality of service rendered, and that a gift is something that is given freely, not required. Therefore, it should be up to each individual to choose how much of a "gift" to give. This group of tippers believes they should determine if they will tip, and if so, how much it will be, not have signs posted telling them how much of a tip they owe.

However, for those who find tipping practices confusing and their lack of knowledge about who and how much tip embarrassing, guidelines for what is the proper tip are always welcome.

Some say there is a lot more to tipping than just putting out a little extra money. There are certain people who consistently seem to overtip. This is embarrassing and annoying to almost everyone — except the waiter and his stockbroker. Other have a tendency to undertip. This is usually attributed to stinginess or ignorance of what the proper tip should be. Then there are always the people who tip the right amount, but in the wrong way.

Unfortunately, no matter what you think of the practice of tipping, it is basically a part of the system. A good attitude to practice in giving a tip is to never act as if you are giving away the house, but rather always as if a dollar were a dime. The tip will be accepted with must more appreciation that way.

IF AT all possible, a tip should be given privately and quietly, and an adding "Thank you" is always appreciated.

In most instances, tipping in the United States is an accepted and expected practice. However, there are places, such as China, Iceland, Tahiti and the Soviet Union, where tipping in either officially not legal or is considered an insult.

If traveling in another country, your best bet is to ask a native what the tipping practices are. Although travel books also may be helpful, be aware that customs change (sometimes rapidly), and by asking at your hotel or inquiring with a business associate you will be more assured current tipping procedures.

Because tipping is an established custom in this country, there is little reason to try and fight it. The main reason for its acceptance is probably that the salaries of those we tip are often very low. To make a living wage, they must be built up by the tips received. And, because it has been a custom for so long, it is almost obligatory now.

Generally speaking, a tip should be around 15 percent of the bill. However, this is not always true.

According to "The New Esquire Etiquette," by the editors of Esquire magazine, there are five classes of tips: thank you tips, insurance tips, protection tips, subtle extortion tips and insulting tips.

"Thank you" tips are given for service rendered that you are appreciative of. If you were very impress with the service, then it is appropriate to give a little more than the normally expected amount.

"Insurance tips" also could be referred to as "please do right by me," "Please don't make a fool of me," or "spare me the details" tips. These are usually given before a service is rendered when you are asking for something particularly difficult or special, when you are at someone's mercy to get what you want, or when you are letting it be known that you expect the best treatment possible. These types of tips could almost be "misconstrued" as bribes to get what you want. There is no guarantee that once your money is taken that the service you expect will indeed fulfilled to your expectations, but that is a chance that must be taken. This type of tipping is recommended more for big-money tippers, not for those who dole out average-size enticement.

"PROTECTION TIPS" range from handing a dollar or two to a boy in a parking lot to "watch your car," to slipping a bill to hotel desk clerk when you expect him to be discreet. These are tips given without explicit instruction of what is expected, but rather with an understood reasoning of what is to be done.

"Subtle extortion tips" are those that are given simply because that is what is done, such as when you leave a party and a doorman hales a cab for you. Although you could very well get your own cab, that is something that is simply not "done." Therefore, you tip the doorman and chalk these expenses up as a normal cost of the evening out.

"Insulting tips" usually occur when someone offers a tip to someone who does not or is ordered not to except tips. Overall, the worst that can happen if you offer a tip to one of these individuals is that you might be momentarily embarrassed or confused, but you'll be a few dollars richer than you expected — so there is a bright side.

In "The New Esquire Etiquette," a TV-service man said, "The only reason anyone is ever 'insulted' by a tip is because it's not up to the standard of what they think the tip should be. And that's the truth!"

So in lieu of that attitude, your best bet is to offer the tip as if you were asking a favor. If it is accepted, great. If it is rejected, accept the rejection and offer a thank you.

In general, people who never should be tipped include: airline employees such as flight attendants, pilots and porters who wear an airline uniform; head waiters who do little more than greet you, seat you and turn you over to the section waiter; professionals and craftsmen.

If you want to offer a tip to someone who generally does not accept tips, be a little sly in your offering. Offer a couple of dollars to the person and say, "Thanks for the great job, let me buy you a drink." This approach leaves the door open, making it easy for the person to accept the money without feeling insulted or like he is taking money above what is due to him.

IF YOU are in a situation where you are confused as to whether to tip or not, there are often clues present.

If there is a small tray present, the person probably does not expect it to be empty upon returning to pick it up. How your change is returned to you also can be a clue as to what is expected. Example: If your bill is $9.85, you pay it with a $20 bill and your returned change is a $10 bill and 15 cents, the person does not expect a tip. However, if your change is given to you as a $5 bill, five $1 bills and 15 cents, a good guess would be that a tip is expected. If you are in a situation where you suspect your change was given to you in a manner to high-pressure you into giving a larger tip, simply ask for change.

In a restaurant, generally, 15 percent of the check, including drinks, is considered an appropriate tip. However, there are a few exceptions.

If the amount of the bill is very low, a good rule of thumb is that a tip should never be less than 25 cents per person at a table, no matter what the bill is. For example, if two people go out for coffee and the bill is $2, the tip should be 50 cents, not 30 which would equal 15 percent of the bill.

If you purchase a bottle of wine and you are served by the wine steward, the wine steward is entitled to at least 10 percent of the wine check (but that amount should never be less than a dollar) and your table waiter should receive 15 percent tip on the remainder of the bill. In most cases, the wine steward will have to be personally tipped because he will not collect his own check. When the wine is served by your waiter, tip him 10 percent for the wine and 15 percent for the remainder of the check, or a straight 15 percent for the entire bill.

THIS MAY bring to question the built-in gratuities that many restaurants employ. This practice consists of a restaurant adding 10 to 20 percent of service charged to your bill in lieu of tipping. In this system, waiters and waitresses are put on a salary and the service charge in added to the original bill to help offset the increase in salaries for these people.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT-HARRISON

The Midland Center was filled to capacity last Sunday evening for a party honoring Ruth and Dr. Charles Lutrick in appreciation of their many years of ministry and in recognition of Charles' retirement after 13 years as senior minister of First United Methodist Church.

The event climaxed a round of festivities, which have been given for the couple since Charles announced his retirement plans. They will be moving to Lubbock in the near future.

The special evening began with a covered dish dinner furnished by the congregation. Dinner music was provided by the Dow Jones Average.

The program included several selections by mezzo-soprano Susan Graham, a member of the church, who came back from New York City especially for the occasion; a proclamation declaring "Charles Lutrick Day" in Midland, and a "roast" by several of Charles' parishioners, present and former staff members, fellow clergy and his mentor, the Rev. Jordan Grooms of Amarillo.

All the aforementioned led up to the surprise event of the evening. After the couple were presented a scrapbook filled with cards, letters and messages from their numerous friends and a piece of porcelain sculpture, Charles was handed a whistle with the instructions to blow it three times for something special to happen. As he did so, a silver gray 1988 Buick Park Avenue, topped with a giant bow, was driven into the center and presented to the pair.

Besides the congregation, of the 500 or so sharing in the bittersweet occasion were members of Ruth's and Charles' families, including their children, Linda (Mrs. Gary) Matsler of Floydada, David Lutrick of Redding, Calif., and Chuck Lutrick of Fort Worth, and Charles' father, Ed Lutrick of Abernathy, as well as local and out-of-town friends.

IT WAS GOOD to see former Midlanders, Cindy and John Michael Warburton, while they were in town for a week's visit recently. John Michael is now technical/director/lighting designer for the Chattanooga Little Theatre, a position he previously held with the Midland Community Theatre.

Cindy's parents, Dottie and Jack Fox, and her sister and brother-in-law, Cissy and Ken Colston, hosted a fun party at the Foxes' home in honor of the couple and their guest, Patti Ballard, the Chattanooga theatre's office manager.

Among those stopping by were Anna Marie and Ed Volger, Cherry Jones, Sharyllyn Shaw, Joan and Ted Noel, Michael Spicer, David Hidinger and Charles Taylor.

During the evening, a phone call was made to Brett Batterson in Chattanooga. Also a former MCT staff member, he is now a set designer with the theatre there.

NEIGHBORS HOSTED a come-as-you-are luncheon to honor Margaret (Mrs. W.F.) Beuck, while packers were preparing her household goods for the move to her new home in Fort Worth.

Meeting in the home of Ruth (Mrs. August) Wenck, the group enjoyed assorted sandwiches, mock pink champagne and raspberry cream, along with lots of nostalgic conversation.

Margaret and her late husband first came to Midland in 1949, but spent interim periods in South America, California and Canada. She has maintained her home at 3003 Sentinel Drive for the past 33 years.

Others sharing in the occasion were Sheila Green, Mae (Mrs. D.L.) Cass, Tina Cass, Rosemary (Mrs. Norbert) McIntyre, Judy (Mrs. James) Pilgreen and Judy (Mrs. David) Howard.

NELL BARRINGTON, wife of J.E. Barrington, district governor of Lions International Multiple District 2-A1, was honored recently with a district-wide reception by the Lioness 700 Club of Midland.

The event was held in the home of the club president, Betty Whitmire. Special guests were former first ladies of the District 2-A1 and Bess Baker, who was the charter president of the Lioness 700 Club when it was established in 1955.

Mr. and Mrs. Barrington recently returned from the Lions International Convention in Denver. They will make an official visit to each of the 69 Lions Clubs and eight Lioness Clubs in the district during the 1988-89 year.

SHAWN ANN STILLWAGON of Texarkana, Texas, granddaughter of Dorris Stillwagon of Midland and the late George C. Stillwagon, was honored at a series of parties both in Midland and Texarkana prior to her July 16 marriage to Marc Sangelli. She is the daughter of Doug Stillwagon of Houston and formerly of Midland.

The weekend of partying here was highlighted with a cocktail buffet given by Mrs. Stillwagon at Midland Country Club to honor the couple.

In addition, Junia and Gale Stoddard hosted a dinner party in their home, and a brunch was held in the home of Donnie (Mrs. Stanley) Weiner. Co-hostesses for the latter event were Dorothy (Mrs. Larry) Melzer, Helen (Mrs. Hoy) Harrison and Ann (Mrs. Russell) Estes. Sue (Mrs. Frank) Houghton entertained with a Sunday morning breakfast at Midland Country Club.

Parties in Texarkana included a bridesmaids' dinner given by Shawn's sister, Sheree Stillwagon.

The couple are now at home in San Antonio, where the groom is attending medical school, and the bride plans to attend UT-San Antonio.

Most private clubs employ this policy, and many restaurants use it for parties of eight or more. However, the policy of including the tip in your bill may become more and more common due to tax-law changes that require restaurants to pay FICA tax on the staff's earning and their tip income. If you suspect that the tip has been included as a service charge in bill, don't hesitate to ask for confirmation, then tip or don't tip accordingly.

At a nice restaurant or night club, you may come into contact with several people who should be tipped. If you purchase drinks at the bar, the bartender should usually receive 15 percent of the amount of your bill. A hat-check or coat-check attendant should receive around a $1 a garment, a little more if the coats are bulky or if you ask for special care of a garment. More expensive places also employee restroom attendants. Usually 25 cents to 50 cents per visit is adequate. If there are cigarette girls, flower girls, or other novelty type attendants, expect to tip them about $1 as well.

For a doorman who helps you into your car, generally $1 is acceptable. However, if the doorman hails a cab for you, particularly if the weather is bad, a little more would be appropriate.

At hotels there are several people who expect tips. The doorman who takes your luggage from the car to the desk should be tipped 50 cents to $1 a bag (depending on the amount of luggage you have), as should the bellboy who carries your luggage from the desk to your room. Any other service you ask of a bellboy should also be tipped — such as paging someone, giving directions somewhere or delivering a message — and $1 is usually appropriate, unless the favor is difficult or very time-consuming.

A person who delivers room service, your cleaning, a message, flowers or other such items to your hotel room also should receive $1 tip. However, if your room needs towels or other amenities that should have already been provided, you need not tip the person who brings these items.

At most hotels, chambermaids are not tipped. If your stay is for a long period of time, however, it is acceptable — and appreciated — to leave a marked envelope with a tip of $5 or so per week of your stay. If the stay lasts two or three months, a tip could also be given to the manager to be distributed to the housekeeping staff.

For taxis, the tip should be 15 percent of the fare, but usually should not be less than a dollar. If the cab driver goes out of his way for you, such as returning your brief case you left in his cab or making an extra effort to get you somewhere as quickly as possible, your appreciation should be reflected in your tip.

For hairdressers, manicurist and barbers, 15 percent of your total bill is usually sufficient. As with other services, if your have asked for special attention in some way, your tip should be a little higher.

Airport porters usually expect 50 cents a bag and shoe-shine attendants usually receive 15 percent of their service price.

For more personal services, such as tour guides, drivers, interpreters and stenographers, a gift is more highly prized than cash. If you are traveling out of the United States, usually a gift from your country is appreciated, and certainly more thought of than a quick purchase from the hotel gift store.

Foreign plants growing across North America

Copley News Service

It's the attack of the killer plants!

Scientists say North America is being overrun by close encounters of the botanical kind.

Predatory alien plants are sneaking onto the continent, hiding in the feedbins of livestock and the bottom of old ships.

Some dangerous species were even brought to the New World because of their beauty or supposed food value.

But now they're showing their true colors.

In both North and South Carolina, African witchweed already has gobbled up 200,000 acres of farmland, reducing crop yields by 50 percent.

In Idaho, common Russian crupina plant crept across 30,000 acres of rangeland that cattle once grazed upon.

In Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi, invading vines of the dread Japanese kudzu have swallowed 7 million acres of trees, houses, railroad cars and anything else that sits still long enough.

Modern herbicides have little effect, so the U.S. Department of agriculture says natural insect predators of certain alien plants will have to be imported next.

You may even know a few aliens yourself, such as the graceful dandelion flower, dog fennel, which Johnny Appleseed accidentally planted along with his orchards, crabgrass, blue chicory, Queen Anne's lace and even the famous giant palm trees of California.

Tobacco heir helps others quit smoking

Copley News Service

Patrick Reynolds is blowing smoke in the face of a longtime benefactor.

The heir to the R.J. Reynolds tobacco fortune has been traveling the country full time these days with an unlikely message: "Butts out."

"I'm motivated by all the death in the world caused by smoking," said Reynolds, who is marketing a stop-smoking program based on behavior modification techniques. "I want to do everything I can to keep people from smoking."

During the past two years, he has become an eloquent spokesman against what he calls "poisonous weed." He has delivered hundreds of anti-smoking speeches under the auspices of the American Lung Association, the American Council on Science and Health and the National Foundation for Cancer Research, and testified before Congress at hearings on whether to ban cigarette advertising.

Turning over a new leaf was easy to do, said the handsome, 39-year-old actor.

His father, R.J. Reynolds Jr., died at 58 of emphysema. Patrick Reynolds vividly remembers seeing his father lying with sandbags on his chest to exercise his diaphragm.

"My father could hardly breathe," said Reynolds. "My memories are of a man always short of breath and counting the time he had left to live."

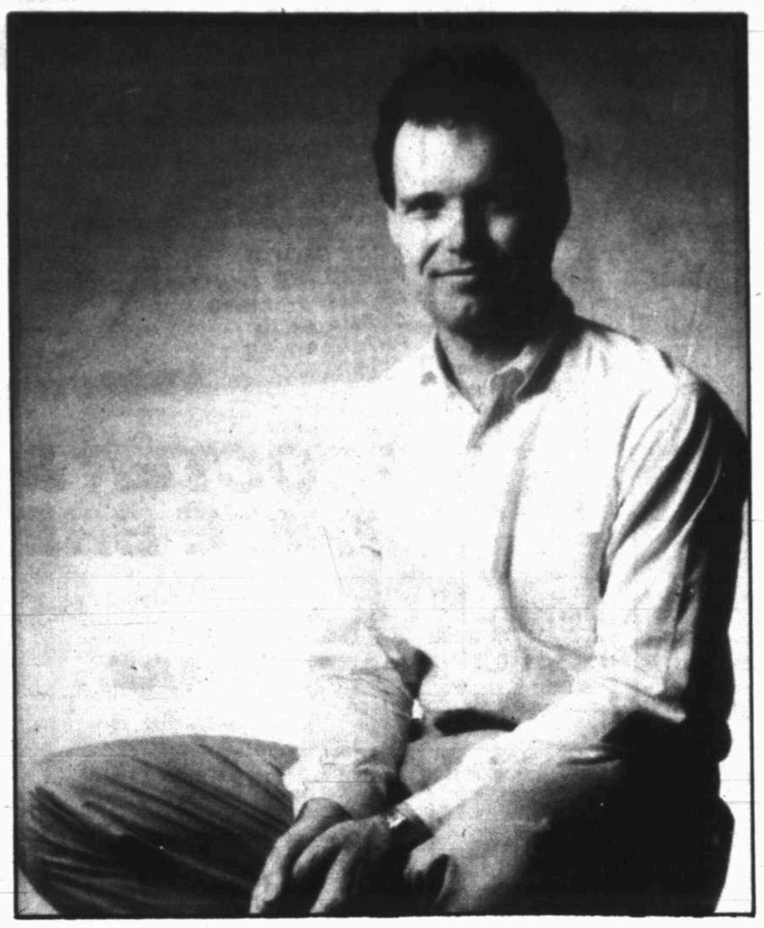
OTHER MEMBERS of his family who developed complications that he attributes to smoking include his mother (heart disease) and his grandfather's two sisters (cancer and emphysema). His grandfather, who chewed tobacco, died of pancreatic cancer.

Surprisingly, that didn't stop Reynolds from becoming a cigarette "addict." As a freshman at the University of California at Berkeley, he took up the habit in order "to attract girls and be cool," he said.

He soon developed a pack-a-day regimen that he couldn't break. Acupuncture, hypnosis — even electric shock therapy — didn't keep him away from that next puff.

"It took me 16 years to quit," he said, with a tinge of frustration in his voice.

Reynolds snuffed out his last smoke using his own behavior modification program. That was in 1984, and for the next two years he did plenty of soul-searching about his relation to the business founded by his family.



CNS Photo

Patrick Reynolds

His studies on the tobacco industry convinced him that cigarette companies — including R.J. Reynolds — pitch their advertising to young people because, he said, more than 90 percent of smokers cement their smoking habits before they turn 20.

"When my grandfather began at the turn of the century to market Camels, among other tobacco products, he had no way of knowing that smoking caused cancer and lung and heart diseases," Reynolds said. "But I had overwhelming evidence that it did. And I realized that I had to do something to stop the suffering."

FIRST, REYNOLDS divested himself of his holdings in the tobacco business, selling shares worth about $2.5 million.

Then he spread the word to anti-smoking groups that he was available as a speaker. An avalanche of requests immediately poured in. Reynolds soon found himself working as an adviser to the American Lung Association, an honorary member of the World Health Organization and one of the anti-smoking lobby's stars.

If these activities left most of his family smoldering, Reynolds has won the support of some scientists and politicians bent on putting the tobacco industry's lights out.

Reynolds, said Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, "has distinguished himself as one of the nation's most influential advocates of a smoke-free America in his lectures, television appearances and congressional testimony."

Unlike some anti-smoking militants, Reynolds doesn't favor outlawing tobacco.

"I wouldn't presume to tell anyone what they could or couldn't do," he said.

However, he supported the recent ban on smoking in airplanes and said he favors increasing cigarette taxes and enacting stringent clean indoor air laws.

He also hailed the growing number of liability lawsuits being filed against tobacco companies.

"I was ecstatic about the case earlier this month that went against a cigarette manufacturer," he said, referring to a federal jury's verdict that held the Liggett Group liable in the lung cancer death of a New Jersey woman, Rose Cipollone.

The jury found that Liggett failed to warn of the health risks of smoking before warnings were required on cigarette packs in 1966. In advertising before 1966, the company had misled the public by suggesting that smoking was safe, the jury concluded.

ANTONIO CIPOLLONE, the husband of the late woman, was awarded $400,000 in damages. It was an unprecedented decision — in more than 300 similar lawsuits filed since 1954, tobacco companies had not lost a claim or paid damages.

"This is just the beginning," Reynolds said.

Because of a new business venture and a full calendar of speaking engagements, Reynolds has put his acting career on hold.

He came to Hollywood in the mid-1970s, where he landed a small role in Robert Altman's film "Nashville" and later starred in the science fiction film, "The Eliminators."

Last February, he sold his Beverly Hills home and moved to Chicago, where his company is located, to oversee the marketing of his behavior modification kit.

"The Reynolds Stop Smoking Program," which retails for $19.88, includes two 60-minute audio cassette tapes narrated by Reynolds, a booklet and a 60-day supply of Beta-Carotene tablets, which he said rebuilds damage done to body tissue by smoking.

And if subscribers to the plan suddenly feel on the verge of a relapse, they can call a support line at (312) 664-2700. The kit also can be ordered by calling the same number.

Reynolds maintained that turning a profit on the kit is secondary to helping people quit smoking. But he also noted that he has invested virtually his entire fortune in the enterprise. "If this doesn't float, my lifestyle will take a definite turn for the worse," he said.

Home-based work becomes profitable for businesswomen

NEW YORK (AP) — Many American women are finding their homes can be a profitable environment.

Of the estimted 2.2 milion Americans who work exclusively at home, some two-thirds of them are women, according to the U.S. Small Business Administration. By the 1990s, home-based businesses are expected to double, the agency adds.

In 1985, female-owned business generated $65 billion in revenues, a 78 percent increase over $36 billion in 1980, while revenues of male-owned businesses increased by 22 percent over the same period.

Indicative of the trend, three of the five 1988 Women of Enterprise Awards winners selected in a nationwide search by Avon Products Inc. and the U.S. Small Business Administration, began their thriving enterprises at home. The awards program was launched last year to salute the courage and determination of self-employed women "who beat odds" to achieve success.

Two of the award winners, M. Charito Kruvant, owner of a multimillion-dollar management consulting firm in Washington D.C., and Mary G. Winston, founder of the largest female-owned janitorial service in Indiana, started their firms in their basements.

A third award winner, Sydney A. Stoeppelwerth of Prairie Village, Kan., who is blind, owns an oil production company and four years ago started a blossoming motivational speaking business. She runs her entrepreneurial ventures from an office in her home.

The other two winners are Laura Balverde-Sanchez, president of New El Rey Sausage Co. in Vernon, Calif., who purchased a bankrupt sausage company and made it profitable; and Susan K. Terry, president of SKT Construction Inc., West Des Moines, Iowa, who started a successful construction business while she was a 23-year-old secretary at a plumbing company.

In 1985, there were 692,000 female-owned businesses in non-traditional fields, a 39 percent increase over 498,000 in 1980, according the the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Effective complaining requires proper technique

Associated Press

The consumer has grounds for a legitimate gripe in one out of every four purchases made in this country, but nearly 70 percent of those who have problems do not complain about them.

The one out of four statistic comes from a recent nationwide study sponsored by the U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs and was cited in an article in the current issue of Redbook, excerpted from "Betsy Ashton's Guide to Living On Your Own," by former television consumer reporter Ashton.

The evidence of consumer ripoffs runs like this: 37 percent of car purchases result in a problem, as do 65 percent of grocery purchases and 39-44 percent of appliance and automotive repairs. Almost one consumer in five pays erroneous utility bills and throws out defective cordless telephones.

Problems do get resolved when consumers speak up, and Ashton lists some do's and don'ts in protecting yourself from consumer abuse. They include:

■ Do not get nasty. In most cases the individual you complain to is not the idiot responsible for your problem.

■ Do not write letters in script unless your handwriting is magnificent. No one can help if your letter is undecipherable.

■ Do not write your life history. Keep a complaint letter brief and to the point. Attach copies of supporting documents.

■ Do not send original receipts with a complaint letter. Send copies.

■ Do not threaten a lawsuit. A better tactic is to say you will take the case to small claims court and do just that.

Here are Ashton's suggestions on what actions will most likely win a solution to your problem.

■ Identify the problem. Know what the problem is, when you noticed it, what you did to correct it and what you want the merchant to do.

■ Gather evidence. Put all documents in one file folder — the original sales receipt, warranty, repair or service orders, canceled checks or contracts. If the complaint involves shoddy workmanship, take photographs.

■ Go back to the store that sold you the item or the shop that did the repair. In a pleasant manner explain the problem and allow the merchant a reasonable amount of time to resolve it.

■ If there is no action or reasonable response, write a letter to the president or owner of the local shop or the president of a national corporation responsible for the product. If you do not know the manufacturer, the "Thomas Register of American Manufacturers" and the "Thomas Register Catalog File" list the makers of thousands of products.

■ If the company does not respond to your letter or if it rejects your request, elicit third party help.

If your problem is with a local store or company, call your local Better Business Bureau.

If your problem is with a service provided by a professional, such as doctor, lawyer, funeral director, plumber, collection agency, etc., your best bet may be to complain to the state board that licenses the person or shop.

If your problem is with a product or service provided by a national corporation, an industry group may have a complaint panel. Check the "Consumer's Resource Handbook," published by the federal Office of Consumer Affairs.

Supermarkets to enter video age

Copley News Service

The lowly grocery cart may be wheeling its way into the video age. A company plans to test-market shopping carts equipped with video screens that will inform shoppers about bargains, recipes and other points of interest.

Information Resources Inc. chairman John Malec says his VideOcart — as he calls it — will make shopping fun and more efficient. Customers will be able to play video games while they wait in lines. And with the push of a button, shoppers can take a number in the deli line from anywhere in the store.

Relationships have 'givers,' 'takers'

Copley News Service

What is the real reason Ronald Reagan often lets Nancy order him around?

It's because Ronnie is a rare "Giver" man married to a "Taker" woman.

In most cases the opposite holds true, according to Bruce Feld, co-author of "The Givers and the Takers."

It sounds absurd, but Feld says givers and takers are almost always attracted to each other. And that can spell trouble unless both parties are willing to compromise.

Feld's advice to Ronnie and other giver-types is simple: Make an effort to take more and be aware of taker tricks like intimidation and guilt.

He says taker types — like Nancy — should be more sensitive to others' needs.

Men's mid-life crisis has fantasies

Copley News Service

It sounds wacky, but a lot of 35- to 45-year-old men have fantasies of being farmers. But not in the literal sense.

The "farmer fantasy" is one of four common fantasies men experience as they go through the mid-life crisis, according to Peter O'Connor in the book "Understanding the Mid-Life Crisis."

If you have the farmer fantasy, it means you have a desire to get back to earth and run your own show.

Another fantasy men have is the "nurseryman fantasy" which reflects the desire to "fertilize," "weed" or "water" the soul.

The "helper fantasy" involves the desire to do some kind of social work. And the "dropping-out fantasy" involves a drastic job change.

Marriage requires interesting little adjustments

By CAROL RUST

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Some very interesting things come out of marriage aside from kids and car notes. Actually, people have kids and car notes many times when they're not married, but they never acquire a cavalier attitude about coat hangers without tying the knot.

I personally grew up during the Worldwide Coat Hanger Shortage, which hit very hard in Shreveport, La., during the '60s and '70s. We tediously folded many clothing items that could just as easily have been slung over a coat hanger but for the fact that there wasn't ONE SPARE COAT HANGER FOR MILES AROUND.

We hung pairs of pants over pairs of pants until the middle of the coat hanger sagged — and THEN we draped several shirts over the top — and a belt or two over the curly part. If there had been a place to hang shoes on them, we would have.

Back in those days, our coat hangers lived long lives and worked hard in the process. They were retired only when they broke into several pieces and someone got tetanus by pricking bodily parts on the sharp edges. That's when we knew it was trash-time for the coat hanger, but we were fully prepared for an interrogation from Mom, who might see a tetanus-laden coat hanger tip poking out of the trash can and ask: "Is that a coat hanger you're throwing away?"

ME: Yep.

MOM: What's wrong with it?

ME: It's in seven pieces and I've even tried gluing it together.

MOM: Well, don't get too careless. They don't grow on trees, you know.

Over the years, I have discovered time and again that my mother was right. Coat hangers don't grow on trees. But after a couple of months of being married, I also have noticed that one simple way to compensate for that fact is to send 42 of my husband's shirts to the cleaners each week and then pick them up. After a couple of months, there are more coat hangers than will ever be needed in the closet for the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

At times, you get the notion those coat hangers are breeding when your back is turned. My husband has been known to throw coat hangers away, five at a time, on a daily basis as if there were nothing to it, as if there weren't people wearing wrinkled clothes in China. I personally have done my part to put a stop to this wasteful practice by scrounging all those cast-off coat hangers out of our trash and storing them in brown paper bags I also have a habit of saving.

You see, I was also growing up during the Worldwide Brown Paper Bag Shortage, which coincidentally also hit very hard in Shreveport, La., during the '60s and '70s.

Trends analyst sedentary adults

Copley News Service

You may be lean and mean today, but your kids are going to be fat and lazy adults, according to the Naisbitt Group in Washington, D.C.

Trends analyst Marilyn Block says today's couch potato kids and teens will be tomorrow's sedentary adults.

And as dual-career couples become more entrenched in making a living, the traditional family meal will all but disappear.

Pillsbury Corp. calls such families "chase and grabbits."

Meanwhile, Block foresees a decline in the traditional two-week vacation.

Because of work responsibilities, she says vacations will consist of long weekends.

Finally, Block isn't sure why, but by the year 2000, 5 percent more adults will remain single.

Divorce rates, however, will remain the same.

Tipping trauma troubles travelers, too

By FRED FERRETTI
Copley News Service

The question is forever asked, and by just about everybody, including myself: When should you tip? How much? These nag, particularly at a time when the traveler is beset by all sorts of whimsical rules and practices with regard to tipping.

It is an easy answer to simply say that a tip is a gesture that demonstrates that you have been pleased with the service extended to you — by a restaurant waiter, a taxicab driver, room service attendant, concierge, tour bus driver, professional guide, parking lot attendant, baggage clerk, bellboy, maitre d'hotel.

But what are we to make of a hotel in Paris these days that adds not only 18.5 percent of your charges to your bill as a "value added" tax, but 15 percent as a tip, which adds up to your charges plus one-third again?

What are we to make of a $2 bread charge at the bottom of a restaurant menu? Why must I tip a maitre'd, and a captain, and a waiter, and a sommelier, for service that except in rare instances — so rare that they are indeed memorable — has been simply adequate?

Why is service added to my room service service, not to mention "cover charges"?

SHOULD I give a guide a tip when I have learned nothing, or when I have been treated to a perfunctory, rehearsed, dull spiel that has been given dozens, scores, hundreds of times before, identically?

Should I tip a cabdriver who, I know, has deliberately taken a roundabout route so that his meter will register an extra $2 or so?

Should I tip the parking lot attendant when he brings me my car, not in sequence, not in turn, but after he has brought the sedans of regulars or favored customers?

It seems that the tip has developed, to our collective disadvantage, into a custom, a habit, rather than a reward that should be striven for, something given for special care, service, effort.

CNS Graphic

What causes all of the above rumination is a burgeoning effort by some congressmen to address what they like to call tax loopholes. They have proposed that employees, such as those whom I have listed above, pay taxes on their tips, and because they do not know, nor can they, just how much an individual collects in tips, they would treat tips as wages and have employers withhold taxes on them. They suggest that employers, by knowing the amount of bills presented, can gauge with fair accuracy what tips were probably paid.

As you might expect, employers in restaurants, hotels, taxi and limousine companies are incensed, simply because of the amount of bookkeeping they would be required to do. And many of them are saying that they will do away with tipping in their establishments and instead add 15 percent, or 20 percent, to bills so that they effectively monitor tip income.

I SYMPATHIZE with them, yet I must applaud Congress. After the fine job our congressmen did in "reforming" our income tax system so that, although we are paying less we are paying more, they now have fertile fields with which to begin anew.

I suspect that when they are finished dissecting the tips of the restaurant counterman down the street, General Electric still will pay no taxes. I suspect that when they are finished taking the government's cut out of the quarters given to parking lot attendants, Armand Hammer still won't feel a thing. But that is the larger question.

How about me and you?

Suppose I have had poor service? A poor ride in a filthy taxicab with a driver who didn't know, as happened to me recently in New York City, where the Empire State Building was? I did not tip him, for many reasons. Congress would care less and say 15 percent of what he should have gotten, so there.

And how about the waiter, to whom I had to beckon two, three, four times to have my water glass refilled?

Or the wine steward who rejected my request for an inexpensive wine and virtually demanded that I spring for a $75 Burgundy? Should I tip him?

What do I do when the restaurant in which I have eaten adds 15 percent, or 20 percent, to my check for service, when I have had none?

WHAT I will do is refuse to pay it. There will be a discussion, perhaps some heat, and in the end I might even be taken to small claims court. What then? I expect I might call my congressman and hire him, on a retainer, to represent me in court. And he would like that, for congressmen like to earn extra money, just like waiters and taxi drivers. Just as Jim Wright and Robert Dole.

And what do I do if I win my case in court? Do I pay my congressman a percentage, a tip? I really don't know. I'll leave that to him.

Motion sickness minor, except to those who suffer

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of Americans are familiar with the symptoms, ranging from dizziness to nausea, of that spectre of the vacation season, motion sickness.

Virtually anyone can succumb to car-, air- or seasickness, says the federal Food and Drug Administration, although the malady seems most common between ages 2 and 12.

Infants rarely suffer from the illness, and susceptibility declines with age, becoming rare over 50, the agency reports.

But anyone with a normal sense of balance, even animals, can suffer. Even codfish placed in a tank on the deck of a ship in rough water became ill, researchers report.

In the ocean, of course, codfish would simply dive into calmer water. That's an option not available to youngsters bouncing in the back seat, or folks leaning over the rail of a ship or strapped into an airline seat.

While doctors say they do not completely understand all the interactions involved in motion sickness, it appears to originate with the inner ear, where liquid-filled tubes help the body maintain balance.

When movement registered in these tubes conflicts with the signals received by the eyes, illness seems to follow.

For example, in one of the most common situations, someone is reading in a car. The ear registers motion, but the eye is fixed on a page. The signals received by the brain disagree: bingo, carsickness.

Generally, the FDA reports, the first symptoms include paleness of the skin followed by yawning, restlessness and a cold sweat. Drowsiness or sluggishness may follow.

This is the point when the victim usually begins to realize that something is awry, and what is likely to follow — excessive salivation, nausea and vomiting.

Though very unpleasant, motion sickness rarely causes severe complications, although it can lead to bad headaches, exhaustion, dehydration and a mineral imbalance.

Travelers can take some precautions to avoid this illness, FDA says:

- Try to place yourself where there is the least motion. In a car, sit in the front seat looking straight ahead. In an airplane, choose a seat over the wing. On a boat, stay in the middle, on deck rather than below.
- If possible, lie in a semireclined position and keep your head as still as possible.
- Look ahead at the horizon or close the eyes, rather than looking at passing scenery or at waves. Placing children in an elevated seat in the front helps them by allowing them to look out through the windshield instead of the side windows.
- Focus attention on something other than motion. Although reading is not recommended, occupying children with toys or coloring, for example, may be better than having them stare out through the side windows.

GATEWAY TO ANNIE'S

Fine European laces, Irish crochet jewelry, antiques, turn-of-the-century furnishings and Victorian houses were so appealing to Annie Gentry that she invested her last $50 into a business which eventually combined her interests in the lace and grace of yesteryear.

When her husband, a photographer and journalist, was out of work in California, Ms. Gentry suggested the couple move to the pine tree laden East Texas town of Big Sandy. They spent the last few dollars of their dwindling funds on advertising a pair of crochet dolls Ms. Gentry designed.

FROM THE TWO DOLLS, named Overall Sam and Sue, an entire enterprise bearing the name "Annie's" began to evolve in Big Sandy.

TODAY, ANNIE'S businesses are nestled in the heart of East Texas, halfway between Dallas and Shreveport, encompassed in six buildings. They include a bed and breakfast inn, a tea room (which received a Texas historical maker after Ms. Genrtry restored it), a gift shop, a pantry shop (with jams, jellies, baked pastries, coffees and teas), a mail order business, an interior design business and an auditorium which houses Annie's Dinner Theatre.

Please see ANNIE'S, Page 2F

The dining room (top) in Annie's Bed & Breakfast in Big Sandy features turn-of-the-century furnishings and decor. The three-story yellow house (top right) houses a gift shop and an historic interiors shop. Annie's Bed & Breakfast (above) is a restored Victorian house with seven gables and 13 guest rooms.

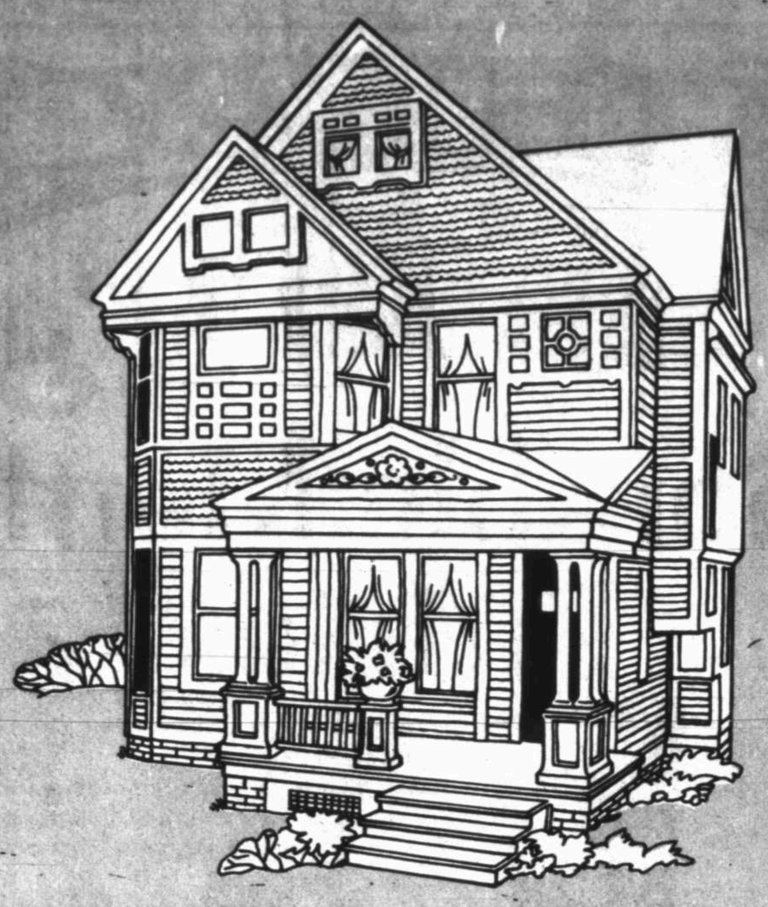
Research, care needed in restoring an older home

Associated Press



Owners of old houses become the custodians of fragile features such as gingerbread, susceptible to water damage; building stone, easily scarred by chemical or abrasive cleaners; and cast-iron bric-a-brac that tends to rust.

Their list of concerns seems epic, embracing everything from rodent infestation to dry rot, spallation, warped doors and efflorescent bricks. If they mess up, they may destroy artifacts of history.

Clem Labine, publisher of The Old-House Journal, cites a British motto: daily care and conservation repair. "If this prescription were followed faithfully," says Labine, "every old building would remain in a perfect state of preservation and restoration would be unnecessary."

Here's a list of maintenance basics recommended by architects and other old-house experts in Country Home magazine.

Learn the lay of the house. Dig up old photos, diaries and records from the local historical society. Read old-house books that tell how to preserve the best features. Consider hiring a building inspector or preservation architect to tour the house and point out trouble spots. Tape-record and transcribe their comments.

"It may sound corny, but you need to understand your older house as well as you do your best friend," says Shirley Hanson, co-author of "Preseving and Maintaining the Old Home."

Visit a home museum to ask about its maintenance program. Pool the information and create a checklist for semiannual inspections.

Ready to look around? Investigate the attic and basement first. They are places where trouble begins. Look for damp spots, rodent access and termite tunnels. Poke an awl into joists and other wood. If it goes in more than one-quarter inch, there may be termites or dry rot.

Evaluate the plantings around the house. Is clinging ivy causing pitting in the brick? If so, sever the roots and allow the plant to wither (don't pull it off). Are lower beds holding water? Are roots from trees and large shrubs cracking the foundation?

Employ binoculars to bring faraway finials, cornices, and crockets into focus. Clear leaves, twigs, seeds and other debris from gutters. Scrutinize painted surfaces for peeling; plaster surfaces for blistering; wallpaper for stains, and brick for efflorescence, or powdery surfaces. Keep an eye out for water. A little condensation on pipes is all that's needed to sustain a horde of termites. Water that collects in poorly drained flower beds is absorbed into the foundation, resulting in so-called rising damp. Water can also leach from backed-up or frozen gutters into the eaves, circumventing the flashing that's supposed to protect the roofing. Water can collect in the cracks of exterior masonry, chipping the surface as it freezes and expands.

Repair rather than replace. The credo of the Technical Preservation Services division of the National Park Service is: "If possible, the original materials of historic building (should) be repaired rather than replaced." Even a joist ruined by termites can be reinforced with new wood on each side. Be prepared to live with cosmetic problems.

Beware of miracle cures. Once people sandblasted their brick and their woodwork. The high-pressure spraying of grit on brick and stone was supposed to expunge dirt, paint, soot and droppings. Unfortunately, sandblasting also zapped natural protective coatings and soon the surfaces of so-treated buildings began to crumble.

For every high-tech balm with untested consequences, there's a home-grown alternative. For example, Eugene J. McNulty, a restoration architect in Annapolis, Md., recommends this simple cure for camp cellars and attics, "Open the windows a crack. A house is like a boat. It has to be ventilated."

Observe good housekeeping. Grit on a floor will wear down the floor. If you keep the exterior of a house clean, sometimes you don't have to paint as often. If you can write your name on the siding, it's time to think about washing that building. Clean the house with a garden hose. Hand-scrubbing with natural-bristle brushes followed by a rinse at low water pressure, 100 to 400 pounds per square inch, seems to be the gentlest way to clean the outside of a historic building.

Bed and breakfast inns offer romantic settings

By MONICA PEREZ
Copley News Service

CNS Photo

Many bed and breakfast inns offer a romantic setting with period furnishings and antiques.

Bed and breakfast: the words conjure up visions of period-piece homes in romantic settings; hosts who are gracious, accommodating and respect your privacy.

According to Arthur Frommer in his "New World of Travel" (Prentice Hall Press), "Today the burgeoning B&B movement found in every major city ... has resulted not simply in lowered costs for accommodations, but in people-to-people contacts that are immensely satisfying and broadening."

Frommer explains that when the movement began in the United States a dozen years ago, each B&B advertised itself in the local media or hung out a sign. But this was inconvenient for travelers who arrived from out of state.

Fortunately, there are now B&B reservations organizations. They make it possible for you to reserve a room in a mansion overlooking the Mississippi or in a Queen Anne cottage on the outskirts of San Francisco. And they inspect the lodgings for quality.

If B&Bing is for you, you may want to join the Bed & Breakfast Registry Guest Club (P.O. Box 8174, St. Paul, MN 55108).

The annual membership includes a copy of "Fodor's Bed & Breakfast Guide," a quarterly newsletter, reservation service and discounts on accommodations.

For more information on B&Bs, ask your travel agent for suggestions or check your bookstore for directories.

WHETHER YOU STAY in a B&B in the United States or abroad, be sure to ask about the number of bedrooms, whether you will have a private bath (or share one with other guests), and if you should bring hand towels.

Ask, too, about the size of the beds, if there is a public room, how large the breakfast is, if they take credit cards, and where you should park your car.

here are thousands of B&Bs across America. They are characterized by hospitality, comfort, cleanliness and personal touches — such as quiche for breakfast, or cinnamon toast, and fresh flowers daily in a bedroom vase.

Here is a sampling of American B&B's from "Bed & Breakfast U.S.A." by Betty Rundback and Nancy Kramer (E.P. Dutton):

Sweet Adeline's (949 F St., Salida, CO 81201): This vintage 1900 Queen Anne home is on the Colorado Inventory of Historic Sites; it is surrounded by the snowcapped peaks of the Rockies.

Roserox Country Inn By-The-Sea (557 Ocean View Blvd., Pacific Grove, CA 93950): This Victorian mansion sits on the edge of the Pacific. Romantic Monterey, with its Lover's Point Park, Cannery Row and Fisherman's Wharf, is nearby.

The Barnacle (Route 1, Box 780A, Long Beach Road, Big Pine Key, FL 33043): This private, self-contained cottage in a tropical setting has views of the ocean. You can scuba dive and fish right off "your own" beach.

Haikuleana (69 Haiku Road, Haiku, HI 96708): This 1850s Hawaiian plantation home is close to secluded waterfalls and beautiful beaches.

Old Hoosier House (Route 2, Box 299-1, Knightstown, IN 46148): The rooms of this 100-year-old home are large, with high ceilings, arched windows, antiques and mementos. A golf course and many antique stores are nearby.

BLUEGRASS BED & BREAKFAST (Route 1, Box 263, Versailles, KY 40383): Choose among a stone house built in 1796, a turreted Victorian in downtown Lexington, or a country home with a view of Thoroughbred horse stables.

Kenniston Hill Inn (Route 27, Boothbay, ME 04357): The hosts of this 1786 white clapboard mansion are former restaurant owners from Vermont. Breakfast specials include zucchini-and-walnut pancakes and vegetable frittata.

Old Cape House (108 Old Main St., Bass River, MA 02664): This 1815 Greek Revival home is close to the beaches, restaurants and the scenic attractions of Cape Cod.

Voss Inn (319 S. Willson, Bozeman, MT 59715): This handsome 100-year-old brick mansion is ideal for a first or second honeymoon; it has elegantly wallpapered bedrooms, brass and iron beds, ornate lighting, Oriental throw rugs and polished hardwood floors.

Bois des Chenes (Oakwoods) Plantation (538 N. Sterling, Lafayette, LA 70501): This circa 1825 Victorian carriage house is on a historic plantation listed on the National Register.

In France there are gites, private homes where you can stay for long or short periods of time. And in Germany when you see the sign zimmer in windows, you know there's a room available — probably without breakfast.

But it is England that has elevated the B&B to near-nirvana.

Among those listed in "The Bed & Breakfast Guide to Great Britain" (Consumer Reports Books) are:

The Old Vicarage (Higham, near Colchester, Suffolk C07 6JY): This is the part of Suffolk where artist John Constable lived and created many of his paintings. Formerly the vicarage to the little church, the home is situated a hundred yards away from a river. Surrounding it are substantial grounds, fields, meadows and gentle wooded hills.

Colonnade Hotel (2 Warrington Crescent, London W9 1ER): Sigmund Freud lived in this 100-year-old Georgian mansion for a short time in the late 1930s. It has the warmth and friendliness of a private home, yet is close to busy London.

Dungrianach (Pulpit Hill, Oban, Argyll PA34 4LX): This 100-year-old Scottish villa is near quiet sea lochs and a famous glass factory. It has spectacular views of the sea and the islands of Kerrera and Mull.

ANNIE'S

"Annie got into the craft market just before it boomed in the early 70s," said Pat Stewart, Ms. Gentry's public relations representative and manager of her retail shops for eight years.

Ms. Gentry's mail order business blossomed and from her profits she purchased the Ashley Phelps Home, a Victorian house built in 1905. Because Big Sandy had few hotels and restaurants, Ms. Gentry's sole reason for this purchase was so her crochet mail order customers would have a place to stay and eat when they came to visit, according to Ms. Stewart. Annie's Tea Room, located in the Phelps House, opened in 1980 and received a Texas Historical Marker in 1982. Ms. Gentry's restorative touches included reshingling the roof with cedar shakes similar to the original ones, rebuilding the porch railing and finishing out the attic, which had never been used.

Ornate chandeliers, Victorian motif wallpaper, hand-tatted place mats, hand-crocheted tablecloths, antiques and antique reproductions were added to the Tea Room. To complete the atmosphere of days-gone-by are waitresses in turn-of-the-century costumes to serve patrons during all meals and afternoon tea time.

"A miniatures shop, with shadow boxes, and a large collection of miniature collectibles, was recently added behind the Tea Room," Ms. Stewart said.

ALTHOUGH ANNIE'S TEA Room had been created for clients of the crochet business, "We soon noticed that many of our customers were tourists," Ms. Stewart said. "Then Annie purchased the Tohill House across the street, which was built as a single story house in 1901."

Ms. Gentry enlarged and remodeled the Tohill House, adding a second and third floor. It was opened as Annie's Bed & Breakfast with 13 rooms, a parlour and a dining room in 1983. Each of the guest rooms are decorated with elegant appointments and each has an old-fashioned refrigerator.

The addition of the bed and breakfast inn was a very timely venture for Ms. Gentry. It was at a time when bed and breakfast inns were springing up all over the country with hundreds listed in guidebooks. Their popularity is due to the cozy, homelike atmosphere they provide, according to "America's Wonderful Little Hotels and Inns," edited by Sandra W. Soule. Ms. Gentry's inn offers visitors a respite from the fast-paced world and includes breakfast with the price of the room.

Ms. Soule said one customer described his favorite bed and breakfast inn as "a wonderful place to get away from the city ... It's clean, quiet, isolated, warm and comfortable. The fireplaces work and the owners seem intent on making your stay happy. They describe dinner specials with smiles, remember you from trip to trip, and are willing to help in any way they can."

ASIDE FROM the accommodations, Annie's offers to prepare a "Gourmet Picnic Brunch" in a wicker basket for $12.95. China, glassware and a tablecloth are included. Lake Hawkins, Lake O' the Pines, or Tyler State Park are nearby picnic sites.

Annie's Attic, which houses a needlecraft shop and Annie's Historical Interiors, an antique furniture shop, are near the tea room and bread and breakfast inn.

Ms. Gentry's needlecraft business mails "Annie's Crochet Newsletter" to more than 200,000 subscribers. It is a full-color bi-monthly brochure of Ms. Gentry's original crochet patterns. Her other publications include a pattern club newsletter with more than 250,000 subscribers, and "Annie's Wardrobe," a newsletter featuring handmade (crochet, knit and sewing) clothing patterns for 50,000 subscribers.

Ms. Gentry's businesses have grown from a single idea to a company that employs 250. While her businesses thrive, Ms. Gentry travels to crochet and doll shows and researches craft ideas all over the world, according to Ms. Stewart.

FROM TWO CROCHETED dolls, Ms. Gentry has created a haven for history buffs, antique lovers and needlecraft enthusiasts. And, Ms. Stewart said for people who dream of escaping to a quiet spot in the country, "Annie's is it."

The following are upcoming Big Sandy events:

■ CHILDREN'S TEA and DOLL SHOW — Children dress up in old clothes, high heels and their mother's old jewels for the tea, according to Ms. Stewart. The tea begins at 2:30 p.m. Monday and adults must be accompanied by a child. Cost of the tea is $3.50 and includes finger sandwiches and tea served in demitasse cups. A doll show of Annie's private collection of handmade dolls will be exhibited from 11 a.m.-3 p.m.

■ ANNIE'S DINNER THEATRE — Presented this Wednesday and Thursday, the dinner theatre will include a three-act comedy presented by the Theatre Project Longview performing group and a gourmet buffet dinner. Cost is $16.95 per person and reservations are recommended.

■ AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY BENEFIT — Sponsored by Annie's, this Aug. 14 wine and cheese tasting event to benefit the American Cancer Society will include tours of Annie's Bed & Breakfast inn and horse and carriage rides.

Big Sandy is located halfway between Dallas and Shreveport, at the intersection of State Highway 155 North and U.S. Highway 80.

Most of Annie's businesses are open 9 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Sunday-Friday (closed Saturday). Some are open evenings. Annie's Bed & Breakfast is open for tours 11 a.m.-3 p.m. Sunday-Friday. For reservations or information call (214) 636-4412.

Historical Buie House provides guests with a self-serve breakfast

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE
New York Times News Service

Within the past decade a good deal has been written about the virtues of bed-and-breakfast lodgings, a concept borrowed from small private hosteleries in Britain. The idea being, of course, that you check into a private home to spend a night or two and awaken to the smell of freshly brewed coffee, homemade muffins and the sounds of birds chirping or a lawn mower whirring outside the window.

From the very first reading, I was not enamored of the idea. Indeed, my feelings bordered on the negative. It all sounded too cozy, too personal, too many intrusions, perhaps, no matter how well meaning. I have always cherished the aloofness, the nothing-but-business feeling, even indifference, of a hotel room. Selfishly, perhaps, I covet my private breakfast in a hotel dining room, newspaper in hand from the nearby newsstand, and members of the service staff keeping their distance while going neatly and efficiently about their business of pouring coffee, serving cereal, eggs, bacon, toast or whatever. And leaving me to my own thoughts.

My attitude was altered perceptibly when I was recently billeted by acquaintances (I do not gladly suffer an overnight stay even in the homes of my friends, and most of them know it) in a bed-and-breakfast establishment, the Millsaps Buie House, a stately mansion on North State Street, a quiet street near the Capitol in Jackson, Miss.

ON MY ARRIVAL late one afternoon, I walked into an elegant, bright, splendid reception room and parlor with tall ceilings and windows hung with lambrequin or other gracefully adorned draperies. I was offered an assortment of appetizers including that most traditional of Southern tidbits, cheese straws.

I then ascended the stairs with their handsome newel posts and handrails to my bedroom, one of 11 in which guests are lodged, furnished with one of the house's oldest antiques, the handsome half-canopied bed of Reuben Webster Millsaps, founder, in 1892, of Millsaps College, a school built to give young Mississippians a quality education in their own state. Millsaps was a banker, financier and benefactor and a major in the Confederate Army during the Civil War.

As a native Mississippian, I found the Millsaps Buie House museum-like but not suffocatingly so; it smacked only faintly of moss and magnolia. It was comfortably furnished with antiques like the peer glass or mirror and the double-seated French dating bench in the parlor. The room also housed that essential for a good Southern upbringing, a grand piano. Almost all the rooms boasted mantelpieces and rosewood chairs, and the furnishings in the other guest rooms were a mixture of antiques and reproductions. Several rooms, upstairs and down, were hung with ancestral portraits.

I learned within an hour that the 100-year-old house was named for the Buies as well as the Millsaps, that the families were linked many years ago by marriage and that the house had survived a Phoenix-like experience less than two years ago. The heirs to the house, descendants of the Buie family, had originally decided to rebuild the house and convert it, perhaps, into commercial office space. Sentiment prevailed, however.

AFTER A GREAT DEAL of consultation with architects and designers, the owners began reconstruction in 1985. Fortunately, as it turned out, they removed most of the existing antiques and placed them in storage. This included the stained-glass door and the door to the parlor. Much of the brass and copper hardware for the doors and cabinets was sent to be polished and cleaned. But in August 1986 fire broke out in the center of the building.

It happened at 6:30 in the evening. Fire trucks arrived in minutes, but it took the firemen a long while to hook up the hoses at a hydrant across the street and half a block away. When the valve atop the hydrant was turned, no water flowed. Backup trucks with water in tanks were dispatched, and four hours later the fire was declared under control.

The small hospice finally opened last December. When I stayed there a few months later I experienced no feeling of claustrophobia or any feeling that my privacy was at stake. There was a large staff including an innkeeper, two associate innkeepers, two night hosts, a night security guard and three chambermaids. The rooms were handsomely equipped with such amenities as bedside radios of modest size and television sets concealed in old armoires and in each bath special soaps and towels of generous size.

One of the principal interior designers was Berle Smith, whose reputation had been established, among other projects, in his involvement in refurbishing Mississippi's antebellum Governor's Mansion, the state's new Capitol and the re-creation of the 1850 Florewood Plantation in Greenwood, Miss.

THE PRESENT OWNERS of the Millsaps Buie House are no strangers to guest accommodations. Their father, James Love, was a hotel keeper in Biloxi.

Breakfasts at the Millsaps Buie House are listed as Continental. They include well-chilled, freshly squeezed orange or grapefruit juice and freshly made pastries (on my first morning visit, I feasted on some of the best walnut horns — rugelach — I have ever tasted). They were made, I was told, from Maida Heatter's recipe (the recipe appears in her book,"Maida Heatter's Book of Great Cookies" (Alfred A. Knopf, 1977), and they contain nuts and spices baked in a cream cheese pastry. In addition there were savory cheese grits offered in a chafing dish and first-quality fruits and berries, plus fresh biscuits and homemade preserves. The coffee, too, was outstanding.

Breakfasts are of the serve-yourself variety, which means that you have to get up and down from the dining table for any desired item, be it a second spoonful of sugar, a fresh napkin, a missing coffee spoon or whatever. Ideally, the management should have a serving person in the dining room to provide small necessities. They should also have a pitcher of ice water at hand, Southern style. I would also recommend that they offer at least one Southern breakfast meat, country ham or sausage.

Room rates at the Millsaps Buie House range from $65 to $95, for one person, $10 more for each additional person in a room, breakfast included. Breakfast is served beginning at 8 a.m.; a social hour with coffee, mineral water, setups and hors d'oeuvres is observed from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m.

The Millsaps Buie House is at 628 North State Street, Jackson, Miss. 39202. The telephone number is 601-352-0221.

Faulty diet reinforces infirmities

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Diet and nutrition are important at any age, but especially for the elderly. Not only does a faulty diet reinforce some of the infirmities of old age, but improper eating habits also may produce unwelcome symptoms which may be wrongly attributed to aging.

Since America has been blessed with a bountiful food supply, poor nutrition among the elderly should not be a major problem — yet it is. Many problems are involved, but probably the most common is losing interest in preparing and eating food. Recent studies show that of a large number of elderly who live alone, only ⅗ of those surveyed had eaten three meals on the day before the interview and that 17 percent had eaten no more than three of the basic foods required for a balanced diet.

It looks relatively simple, yet the selection, preparing, serving and sharing of food items is a complicated action. Economics are not only involved but also a person's past experiences, values and associations. Add to these factors mental, emotional and phusical problems and it becomes clear why this looked upon simple act has beacome a major problem among those older individuals living alone.

Memories of festive family occasions around a table are strong in the minds of many individuals. Sharing meals can be a strong between family members or friends.

Cooking for others also can be a way of showing love or displaying creative talents. Many older women, and some men, are unable to reconcile themselves to preparing a meal for just one person.

An older man living alone may be facing not only his memories of family meals and the sense of loss that accompanies those memories, but also facing his own lack of skills in the kitchen.

Both may need some new skills — whether it be learning to prepare nourishing meals for one, or learning the basics of shopping and cooking. Classes in these topics often are presented at the Senior Citizens Center, YMCA or other non-profit social service agencies.

The nutrition program offered by Midland Senior Activity Center and Casa de Amigos is another option. At noon, Monday through Friday, a hot lunch consisting of a meat item, two vegetables, bread, fruit or dessert and milk is served. Each meal is well balanced and meets USDA requirements. Not only do participants enjoy a nourishing meal, but they share a social occasion with others.

If you have a parent or friend who lives alone, keep a close watch on their eating habits. Older persons may lose their appetites or their dentures may make eating difficult, so carefully monitor regularity and content of your older loved one's meals.

Many older people in seemingly good health are actually undernourished or malnourished because they don't consume necessary nutrients, vitamins and minerals. You can help by being persistent in voicing your concerns about good nutrition.

DEAR ABBY

Smoker can't shake nicotine addiction

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: For years I've been wanting to write to you every time I see your callous answers concerning smoking. I always calmed myself down with the knowledge that you probably never have smoked, so you can't know what it's like.

How I wish there were clinics for smokers, paid for by insurance, like there are for alcoholics and drug addicts, but there aren't any! There's a stop-smoking program here, located in a Catholic hospital, run by a nun who has never smoked in her life who can't possibly relate to the problem faced by smokers who really want to quit. I have tried everything, and it's been one big disappointment after another.

Abby, I hope you will quit beating smokers over the head; we need help, and it just isn't out there.

I am enclosing a clipping from the letters-to-the-editor column of The Arizona Daily Star in Tucson. It says everything I feel because I am walking in this writer's shoes (for as long as I can walk before being bedridden with cancer, emphysema or heart disease).

Please give us smokers a break, and run the letter in your column. — A "CHAINED" CHAIN-SMOKER

DEAR CHAINED: I will. Here it is:

CHAINS OF ADDICTION

I feel very angry when I read articles in the newspaper regarding tobacco companies with lawsuits pending that say an individual smokes because he or she wants to, and therefore their company is not liable for a smoker's death. They are disregarding the fact that nicotine is a highly addictive substance, much like heroin, and that is not a matter of will power or "choosing" to smoke.

Once health is affected, smoking is a cross to bear and causes much suffering and anxiety. Smoking is continued despite good intentions or wishes for a healthier existence, because it is so highly addictive. Many times have I cried out in the night to a God that I much believe in to make whatever changes are necessary inside of me to let go of this destructive habit.

I have tried a non-smoking clinic, psychiatry, addiction counseling, hypnosis, staples in my ear, Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACOA) groups, along with countless attempts at quitting on my own. I moved to a community 10 miles from the nearest store and walked this distance to have a smoke. I have had to give up relationships, desired living space and job opportunities because of this habit. My repeated "failures" have left me with a belief that I do not have the power to change.

I need help and no longer know what to do about this situation. I feel angry, fearful and hopeless. I am afraid because I need an inhaler to breathe and have a long-standing cough. To all young people who are thinking of or just starting to smoke — don't. Denial and rationalization go a long way to paving the road to self-destruction. — PATRICIA VALORE

DEAR PATRICIA AND CHAINED: I have never smoked, but, believe me, I feel your pain. But you are "powerless to change" only if you believe you are.

Some suggestions: Contact your local chapter of the American Cancer Society or the American Lung Association. The Seventh-day Adventists also offer an excellent program to anyone who's serious about quitting the tobacco habit. Help is available, and it's usually free. Go for it and good luck.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

Liver transplant sugery less risky

ORADELL, N.J. (AP) — People with liver disease in need of a transplant need not worry so much about their particular disease, advanced age, extreme youth or prior abdominal surgery as high risk factors for such an operation.

Refinements in surgical techniques have greatly improved survival rates and overall results, says Diagnosis magazine. But, it adds, it is best to try to avoid cirrhosis.

Breakfast clubs take on whole new meaning

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

While everyone makes a flap over the soft drink wars, another one is raging out of control ... the cereal war.

You can't watch television for 10 minutes anymore without a couple coming to grips with what they're eating for breakfast.

"I can't marry you," chides a woman over breakfast. "You don't have enough fiber in your diet."

In another commercial, a young girl pops over to her boyfriend's house in the morning eating a Danish, and when she looks at his bowl of cereal, snaps, "What's that! An experiment?"

There's one couple where the wife picks up an empty box of cereal and says menacingly to her husband, "Did you eat the last of the Cavity Crispies?" You get the feeling their future and the future of their children ride on his answer.

I thought things were bad a few years ago when brother lined up against brother and "Mikey" became the food taster. If he ate it and his head didn't fall in the milk, it was OK for the rest of them to give it a shot. Sounds Shakespearean, but compared to today's competition, it was tame.

I don't know when cereal got to be so important. Maybe when a box of grain that has all the appeal of a tongue wrapped around a silo got to be $2.30 a box.

What we have here, people, is another major parting of the species. Another reason to choose a side. It joins the list of Dukakis vs. Bush supporters, waxed dental floss users vs. unwaxed dental floss users, smokers vs. non-smokers, or whether the song "New York, New York" belongs to Frank Sinatra or Liza Minnelli. The Cereal Civil War has pitted Goodnutrients against the Body Temples of Doomers. You can just about guess which camp my husband is in and which side I'm on.

He passes out pamphlets in airports telling people what is in their hot dogs. Someone once threw me a small, brown, hairy kiwi fruit and I threw a wastebasket over it until it was dead.

It will probably be only a matter of time before I am sneaking off to the basement to eat a cereal loaded with sugar that my kids eat. Or engaging in mouth-to-mouth combat with someone over how I maintain my iron supply without two scoops of raisins in my cereal each morning.

Like religion, politics and family planning, cereal is not a topic to be brought up in public. It's too controversial. But I think about it a lot. The other evening I watched a commercial involving three police officers in a heated discussion about which of their personal cereals gave them the most nutrients.

I got to wondering, if they knew I ate cold apple pie for breakfast, would they be there for me?

Built in Odessa and rated to 50,000 feet, Parker's Rig 201 is going back to work in Anadarko Basin.

Odessa-built rig will tackle deepest gas prospect

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Is the return of Parker Drilling Comany's Rig 201 to the Anadarko Basin an omen of better days to come for deep gas prospects? Only time will tell.

What is known is that, after five years of being stacked, Parker Drilling Co. is taking its deepest rated rig (rated to 50,000 feet) out of storage to drill a 28,500 ft. well in Beckham County, Oklahoma.

Set to spud-in October 1, the well will be the deepest current drilling project in the U.S., and if completed could be the deepest producing well in the world. Parker anticipates it will take 400 days to drill.

Parker declined to reveal the client for reasons of confidentiality, but Oil & Gas Journal is reporting Exxon as operator of the project. Exxon would not confirm the project, but issued a short statement:

"We are drilling wells in the Northeast Mayfield field in conjunction with with recent acquisitions in the area," said Paul Henderson, production manager north for Exxon's Central Production Division in Midland.

The acreage is part of a recent acquisition from Leede Exploration of Denver (formerly of Midland). Earlier this year Exxon acquired deep gas re-

New device could eliminate gas lock

Opens top valve of downhole pumps mechanically, with a probe

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Oil and gas are profitable products for producers, but they don't alway mix for profit — especially in downhole pumps.

Wherever oil is produced there is gas. Pumping oil is productive and makes the operator money. But when gas accumulates in a downhole pump it displaces oil and that can be unprofitable. It's called gas lock.

Gas lock is one of the most insidious of production problems. It is a common interference in the pumping mechanism of artifical lift pumps, and it not only lowers production but increases production costs.

Now a device being marketed by a Midland firm and manufactured by a Midland machine shop could end gas lock problems.

The device called a Stop-lok removes the necessity for sufficient differential pressure to open the top valve of a standard downhole pump by introducing a mechanical trip which opens the top valve on each stroke and allows accumulated gas to escape. Two patented devices, a hydrostatic sleeve and a gas release probe facilitate the operation. Systems are manufactured both for the traveling barrel type of pump and the traveling plunger.

The invention which is now being introduced on the market is owned by Stop-Lok Inc. of Dallas and marketed nationwide by Gas Lok Systems Inc. of Midland. It has been tested successfully on 12 wells resulting in an average production increases of 5 to 145 percent and energy savings of 20 to 50 percent, according to the Department of Energy which provided funding for development of the device, and also bestowed it with an award for energy conservation.

The energy saving aspect of the device also earned its inventor, William A. Jones, an award from the Energy Commission of the State of California.

"We see a fantastic market for this device," said John Riggs, a principal in Gas Lock Systems, a Midland group, which has nationwide marketing rights to the inventions. "Gas lock is a problem in many areas of the Permian Basin, and with the advent of CO_2 projects the need will be even greater," he said.

"If a pump is not operating at least at 80 percent of effeciency, an operator will probably want to evaluate the Stop Lok system," he said.

Riggs, a real estate developer, said he was able to obtain the national distributorship for the new product, because of his friendship with an investor who purchased the patent rights. The group elected not to join forces with a national pump manufacturer strictly for the sake of profits. "We can make more money without them."

Gas Lock Systems will rent the systems for $300 per month, after operators have had a free trial period to determine if they will increase production or decrease operating costs.

Riggs says there is a potential for 50,000 units and that the firm expected to have 1,000 units in the field in the first six months of operation. The devices will be manufactured locally by Newton Machine Works.

Aside from production increases and decreases in operating costs, other advantages claimed for the patented devices are:

- prolonging cage and ball life,
- ability to adjust system at polish rod
- reduces traveling ball failure
- no moving frictional parts

Spanish TV dents networks

Capitalizes on growing hispanic market

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Spanish-only television stations are capitalizing on Houston's burgeoning Hispanic population at the expense of English-only stations that may add more programming geared toward the Hispanic audience.

About 75 percent of metropolitan Houston's estimated 1 million Hispanics are tuned into KXLN-TV and KTMD-TV, which became Houston's newest television station in February.

"We're affecting their (English-language stations) viewership. We're achieving threes, fours, fives, and sixes in Arbitron ratings, which means those viewers are coming from others," said Jose Adan Trevino, president and chief executive of KXLN, which started as a low-power station in 1984 and has been full-power since last September.

"The marketplace is really open for us to develop," said Mauricio Mendez, vice president and general manager of KTMD.

During the May sweeps, CBS affiliate KHOU-TV and ABC affiliate KTRK-TV saw their sign-on to sign-off averages drop a share point each while NBC affiliate KPRC-TV dropped by two. Together, the Spanish stations got a share of four.

A rating is the percentage of all TV households tuned to a particular station, while a share is the percentage of households viewing television at a particular time.

"I think we're looking at a big change when Spanish stations move into the big markets," said KHOU president and general manager Al Howard. "In a market where you see two Hispanic stations come on the air and immediately get four share points, I think you're looking at the wave of the future."

Howard is mindful of predictions that by 2000, Houston's population will be 50 percent Hispanic. "You have to think about that. We've been doing a five-year plan, and we are certainly thinking about it," he said.

KPRC general manager Tom Reiff said his station will continue to add Hispanic-related news and talk shows at a steady pace.

"We've been involved in the Hispanic community and have had a number of Spanish programs before the two (Spanish) stations started," Reiff said.

According to Mendez, 50 percent of the local Hispanic population speaks mostly Spanish, 25 percent is bilingual and another 25 percent is English-only.

It "would be foolish" not to include more Spanish programming on the English-language stations in the future, he said.

Indeed, officials at those stations "are beginning to see the market as something extremely important for the future because, if in 1990 the Houston population is going to be over 1 million residences, you are talking about a very large share of the metro," Mendez said.

Mendez came to Houston from Arizona, where he was vice president and general manager of an independent station in Tuscon, and before that owner of a Spanish radio station in Phoenix.

He said the start-up of Spanish TV stations in Houston was long overdue.

"Houston is the fastest growing Hispanic market in the country," he said from his station located in a former Getty Oil Co. lab in southwest Houston. "From 1985 to 1987, it grew 15 percent and really in the last 10 years, Houston has become a major force in the marketplace. Since 1985, what we've seen in Houston is a continuous, very heavy immigration from Mexico City and urban areas of Mexico and also from Central America."

According to 1985 federal census figures, Houston had the seventh-largest Hispanic population in the nation. In 1987, Strategy Research Corp. recorded 706,500 Hispanics in metropolitan Houston.

Holograms: A novelty that has come of age

John Paul Pitts

Remember those National Geographic covers — the ones that projected a three-dimensional picture? Remember what a novelty they were? Well, the novelty has worn off and holographic technology is fast becoming a major industry in America.

The technology is finding many applications from jet fighters to supermarkets, banknotes and toys. Forcasting a growth rate of 30 to 50 percent per year, analysts expect the industry to achieve $50 million in sales this year, reaching $200 million annually by 1990.

Holograms have been around for a long time, but, plagued by economics and timing, never really came into their own until a few years ago.

Two researchers at the University of Michigan, Emmett Leith and Juris Upatnieks, produced the first hologram 26 years ago, but the cost at the time was just too high to justify practical applications. A few holograms found their way into novelty items like keychains. Remember the ones: Look at it this way and the girl has clothes; turn it slightly and she's naked.

With little application for the then expensive holograms the technology went a different direction.

The aerospace industry adapted a technology called holographic interferometry to monitor stress and flaws in metal. It also came up with an optic scheme that allowed instrument panels to be reflected up in the cockpit into the view of fighter pilots, so that he could shoot and fly at the same time. But probably the biggest use was as a pricing device in supermarkets. The technology allows beams to bend around packages and read barcodes.

As for the once expensive holograms, they can now be produced for a couple of pennies per square inch and credit card companies such as Master Car and Visa use small holoralphic chips to prevent counterfeiting.

Taking a tip from the credit card people, manufacturers plagued by counterfeiting are also considering hologram brands on their products. Items now under consideration include: tennis rackets, toys, greeting cards and books. Observers say holographic chips could eventually be attached to everything we buy — and buy with, says business writer John Anderson.

The U.S. Treasury, after having turned thumbs down on holograms because they wore out too fast and came off currency, is again considering putting them on all U.S. currency, in light of new technology.

International Banknote Co., which prints banknotes, stamps and currency for foreign governments, says it is now making more money from holograms than its traditional products. "Holography is no longer a hula hoop type of thing," says Edward H. Weitzen, president of the firm.

International Banknote, which produces holograms for Visa and Master Card, expects to sell $15 million in holograms this year, with the sales of that single product exceeding the sale of all its other products within two years, says Anderson.

With current sales at $55 million for the hologram industry, analysts forecast that hologram sales will grow at a rate of 30 to 50 percent per year and will top $200 million by 1990.

The first action series of hologram toys were produced by Tonka Corp. in April. Called the "Supernaturals," children are able to see characters in one form, view them from a different angle and see another form.

Hasbro Inc. has also announced a action series, called the "Visionaries" that will have hologram characters. "Holograms add a touch of magic that can't be found in other toys," says Stephen Schwartz, senior vice president of Hasbro.

That magical ability has even brought a religious dimension to holograms. Certain fundamentalists speculate that the antichrist, a world ruler and agent of Satan, will try to deceive the world in the end times by appearing in the sky and claiming to be Christ returning.

Some say the only way he will be able to pull off this deception will be to beam a giant holographic image of himself into the sky.

Analyst has new scheme for stocks

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Though it has proven forbiddingly hard over the years to find a sure-fire system for beating the stock market, lots of people keep trying.

And John Slatter, an analyst at the Cleveland-based brokerage firm of Prescott, Ball & Turben Inc., has come up with an idea that may pique your interest.

Its advantages: It doesn't require a Ph.D. in economics or hours of painstaking research. Nor does it call for constant trading that consumes in taxes and commission costs whatever profits you might make.

Barring an economic disaster, it promises a reasonably generous stream of dividend income as well as the hope of capital gains.

Among its drawbacks: It requires a fair amount of capital, committed for the long haul. It involves buying some stocks that look unappetizing, and probably taking an occasional loss.

Slatter himself is modest in his claims for it. "No mechanical system of selecting stocks is infallible," he says in a recent report describing it.

But on the basis of past evidence, he says, "if you adhere to the regimen strictly, you will have a good chance of outperforming the market."

It works like this: You look up the current dividend yields of the 30 stocks that make up the Dow Jones industrial average, and then invest in the 10 with the highest yields.

Once a year thereafter, you do the same calculation, then sell whichever ones no longer rank among the 10 highest yielders and replace them with the ones that have moved into the top 10.

"In most years, you will have to sell no more than three stocks, which means your commissions and taxes will be minimal," Slatter says.

The system limits risk in a couple of ways: By confining investment to the blue chips in the Dow, and by diversifying among 10 stocks to cushion the impact of bad results from one or two of them.

At the same time, it virtually assures investors a higher yield than what they would get from the Dow stocks as a group.

Furthermore, it serves as a disciplined method of buying stocks that are relatively out of favor.

As Slatter acknowledges, "High yield is often a red flag that indicates something is wrong.

"Some of the stocks in a high-yield strategy will ultimately slash their dividend. In 1982, for instance, Manville eliminated its payout, and the stock skidded from 14⅛ to 10¼, at which point you would have sold it."

But in spite of that misadventure, Slatter calculates, someone using the system would have enjoyed a total return for 1982 of 41.1 percent, compared with a 25.5 percent return for the Dow.

If you started using this system at the end of 1972 and kept at it through mid-May of this year, he says, you would have lost money overall in just one year — 1974. Even then, the minus-2.9 percent result you obtained would have been much easier to take than the 23.4 percent drop in the Dow's total return for the year.

Over the full 15-plus years, the system's average annual return, counting capital gains and dividends, was 18.4 percent — 7.6 percentage points better than the Dow's average return of 10.8 percent.

Slatter says he has not checked to see how the system would have held up in some different era, such as the 1930s. Obviously, no one can say for sure how it might fare in the 1990s.

In any case, he says, an investor who wants to try this strategy needs to follow it to the letter.

"It is mandatory that you buy all 10" of the highest yielders, he says. "If you start cherry picking, you will have no assurance that you are picking the right ones."

But during the recent amnesty program, 89 percent of the 118,432 applicants processed in Houston were of Hispanic descent, immigration officials say.

Those figures would push Houston's Hispanic population to about 1.3 million — third-largest behind Los Angeles and New York and greater than Chicago, Miami, San Francisco and San Antonio, according to the Hispanic Almanac.

KXLN, Channel 45, owned by Houston-based Pueblo Broadcasting Corp., and an affiliate of Univision, is also on both Houston cable systems. Univision, formerly the Mexican-owned SIN, reaches 83 percent of the nation's Hispanics through 450 stations and cable channels.

"We are into our ninth month of full power, and we are into the third year of our projected revenues," Trevino said.

The station grew from six employees to the current 35 and already has outgrown its 5,000-square-foot office space near the Astrodome.

The station has an hour-long "Canal 45 y la Comunidad" series Friday nights, eight two-minute local news capsules daily and a medical information program on Sunday mornings.

Trevino, a pharmacist and a majority owner of a management company that oversees eight Houston pharmacies, says long-term goals call for the development of a news department.

KTMD, Channel 48, is owned by Telemundo, which has six Spanish-language stations and is planning to open its seventh in San Antonio before the end of the year. Telemundo is represented in 16 markets and reaches about 60 percent of the nation's 18 million-plus Hispanics.

"We are much better than on target with our revenue, our audience, and everything else," said Mendez, whose station also is seen on cable.

"Cable in Houston is more important than you think for Hispanic television because all the way through 1987, the only way that the Hispanic population could get Spanish TV was through cable," he said.

The most popular programs for both stations, by far, are soap operas — novelas.

Channel 48's prime novela drew a 1.1 rating in May.

The latest survey by Strategy Research, which studies only the Spanish markets, showed KTMD with a 25 percent share of the total Hispanic population.

"We thought that was pretty good since we were not on cable at that point," Mendez said.

The station has an hour of news nightly — a full local newscast, followed by the national news produced by the new Telemundo partnership with Cable News Network. It plans to offer an MTV-produced Friday night music video show from New York.

The station also plans to offer an hour-long program along with Houston Community College to teach viewers English.

DRILLING

serves and facilities from Leede for a reported $100 million. Included in the purchase are four wells with 45 million cubic feet per day of capacity, a gas-gathering system, operating rights to a sour gas treating facility and undeveloped acreage. Sources say some of the acreage contained exceptional prospects, simply too good not to drill, and that Exxon's test of the five-mile deep reservoir rocks probably does not signal an increase in activity for deep drilling.

Located in the deepest part of the Anadarko Basin, one well in the Mayfield field (the McCall well) produces from 25,000 feet and is the deepest producing well in Oklahoma. The deepest producing well in the world is in the West Mills Ranch field only 12 miles from the location.

Rig 201 was built in 1981 at Partech (formerly OIME) in Odessa at a cost of $12 million. At the time it was one of two rigs in the world rated to 50,000 feet and was dedicated by then U.S. Secretary of Energy James Edwards. The rig drilled one well to a depth of 29,241 feet in the Anadarko Basin before being idled.

"The rig has been well-maintained and is in remarkable condition," said Tim Colwell, director of public relations for Parker Drilling Co. in Tulsa. "Oddly enough, it is stored not many miles from where it will be drilling." Colwell said the rig is so large that it will take 70 truck loads to move it to the drilling site.

In announcing the major drilling contract, Robert L. Parker, president and CEO for the drilling company noted that Rig 201 was one of 43 rigs the company would retain in an agreement with a consortium of banks. Under terms of the bank agreement 87 percent of Parker Drilling's long-term consolidated debt will be eliminated, while providing for retention of 43 rigs for collateral.

Female firms grow faster

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Women own a third of the small businesses in this country and account for the fastest-growing segment of the small business population.

Popular myth has it that this marks the emergence of the new American woman — well educated, gutsy, independent and no longer content to work for a man.

University of Arizona researcher Vera K. Pavlakovic disputes this. Her work — still in its preliminary stages — indicates that feminism may not be the motivating force behind the growth in entrepreneurship among women, despite some well-publicized success stories of aggressive women executives.

Ms. Pavlakovic, of the UA Division of Economic and Business Research, said she believes the trend is tied more to economics in specific regions of the country than to a new kind of striving, aggressive woman. And she has found that the trend has its dark side as well.

First, despite the overall high rate of growth in businesses owned by women, 20 percent of the states showed a decline in businesses owned by women between 1980 and 1983, she said.

There is no regional pattern to the growth rates, although the New England and Atlantic region has the largest number of states with growth rates of 50 percent or greater, she said.

It appears that economic conditions and the availability of venture capital for women help determine the roles of women in business on a state-by-state basis, she said.

Ms. Pavlakovic also found that 90 percent of the businesses owned by women have only one employee, the woman herself, making them fragile enterprises that can easily fail.

Women most often own establishments that offer business and personal services, she said. These include traditional services such as beauty shops and dry cleaners.

Titans clash over stately Savoy

LONDON (AP) — The Savoy, the Edwardian dream hotel on the Thames that still makes its own mattresses and decorates each room differently, is under siege from a mass-market predator.

The seven-year struggle for the flagship Savoy and its five sister hotels has become a titanic clash of business philosophies represented by two 79-year-old men.

Inside the Savoy Hotel PLC is Sir Hugh Wontner, chairman for 36 years and now a director. He is a former lord mayor of London whose family controls a key 10 percent of Savoy shares.

Banging at the door is Lord Forte, an Italian immigrant whose Trusthouse Forte empire claims to be the world's most profitable hotel and catering company.

The battle, pitting old guard against the new, is the kind of lively confrontation that inspired the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas launched at the adjoining Savoy Theater.

Wontner is a catering adviser to Buckingham Palace, and, to borrow a phrase from "HMS Pinafore," he very much remains an Englishman.

Trusthouse Forte does the catering at Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Downing Street residence and symbolizes the kind of swashbuckling entrepreneurship that Mrs. Thatcher deeply admires.

Wontner's "upper crust" credentials contrast sharply with Forte's hard-driving commercialism. Wontner says quality comes before profit. Forte says they go hand-in-hand.

Wontner wrote in a recent circular to shareholders that "To be sucked into a vast miscellaneous combine like THF, many people consider, would be a disaster for our patrons and our staff. ... There can be no need to gratify Lord Forte's ambitions."

In his 1987 autobiography, Lord Forte claimed the Savoy was falling well short of its potential. He said the group's hotels needed to be refurbished and re-equipped to restore their "old glamour."

"They require a massive injection of capital such as we can provide and which they have not been able to accumulate because of poor profitability," Forte claimed.

Officials at the Savoy, built in 1889, fear a takeover will endanger its uniquely English identity, its discretion and personal service.

"You've got a difference of philosophy, a David versus a Goliath, a small company that is trying very hard not to be part of a great big one," said Giles Shepard, 51, only the fourth managing director of the Savoy in 99 years. "I just don't believe they'll provide quite what we do."

Trusthouse Forte promises to double the Savoy's profits in one year by injecting new money and firing its top management, which it claims is grossly overpaid.

"One of the best hotels in the world ... has been starved of investment and could be a lot better," said Richard Power, personal assistant to Rocco Forte, the 43-year-old heir and chief executive. "We believe that we could make it the best in the world."

The Savoy earned $24 million before taxes last year. Trusthouse Forte, a 44-nation conglomerate, posted pre-tax profits of $306 million last year from its 800 hotels and 3,000 catering outlets.

In 1981, Trusthouse Forte captured 69 percent of the ordinary shares in the Savoy but a complex, two-tier share structure designed by Wontner to repel takeovers left the company with just 42 percent of voting shares, and no representation in the Savoy boardroom.

Trusthouse Forte is suing the Savoy over a 5.7 percent block of shares it wants canceled. It claims Wontner issued the shares fraudulently to strengthen his personal control over the Savoy when he negotiated its only foreign acquisition, the Hotel Lancaster in Paris, in 1970.

The suit is expected to reach court this fall, and if Forte wins, the Wontner group's absolute majority on the board of 50.5 percent will drop to 47 percent and leave the balance of power in the hands of 2,000 independent shareholders.

In a vote July 1, a majority of those shareholders voted to retroactively approve the 5.7 percent share issue, as Wontner had urged them to do, but Trusthouse Forte is confident they can be won over.

Wontner said the shares had been placed in a Swiss foundation to help hotel trainees. The foundation, which had Wontner, his daughter and son-in-law on its board, did not declare its shareholding until October 1986.

Under British company law, shareholdings in excess of 5 percent must be declared.

When it opened, the Savoy was a wonder of the age, with 24-hour room service, speaking tubes on every floor, and 67 bathrooms at a time when its most luxurious rival, the Victoria, had just four.

The hotel still insists on pure linen sheets and towels, keeps separate kitchens on all seven floors, and decorates each of its 300 rooms individually so that no two are identical.

Under Trusthouse Forte, Shepard contended, "I think you'd find some pictures might disappear off the walls, you'd find nice bits of furniture would end up in the auction room. Probably a lot of the reserves of wine in our cellars would be sold and we'd get a standard wine list."

Power denies this, saying: "We allow places to develop their own character, and we market them as a collection, not a brand or a chain."

Basin rig count gains five

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin rig count began an upward swing while the U.S. tally lost ground, according to Baker Hughes of Houston.

The U.S. total slipped nine to stand at 894, while the Basin total rose five to stand at 105.

Lea County, N.M. continues to lead the region, with 24 rigs at work, a gain of three. Andrews County was second with 11 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with eight. Midland County gained one to stand at five this week.

Rig utilization — the percentage of available rigs being used — continued upward for both the Basin and the U.S. The U.S. rate inched up to 24.2 percent while the Basin rate rose to 24.6 percent.

Among major oil producing states, Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming saw the biggest increase with five new rigs each while North Dakota increased by one.

Texas saw the biggest decline with nine, followed by Kansas, eight; Oklahoma, five; California and Michigan, three each; Ohio, two, and Pennsylvania, one. Louisiana saw no change from last week.

TRC BRIEFS

TRC approves nine new pipeline permits in June

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission granted nine permits to operate new pipelines in June, down from 12 granted in May.

Five of the new permits were for gathering pipelines; one was for a trunk transmission line, two were for distribution lines, and one was for a gas plant line.

One operating permit was approved for a pipeline in the Midland area.

West Texas Gas, Inc., Midland, received a permit for two distribution lines — one each Parmer and Deaf Smith counties.

Feagan Gathering Co., Midland, received a permit for a gas plant line in Winkler County.

Railroad Commission fines 14 operators

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission assessed a total of $38,500 in well plugging penalties to 14 oil and gas operators for problems under Commission rules.

The largest of the penalties, $8,000, went to Liberty energy Co., for four wells in Atascosa County.

Other penalties went to Allied Petroleum Corp., $3,000 for a well in Harris County; Melhar Exploration, Inc., $3,000 for a well in Lee County; Sotex Oil and Gas Corp., $3,000 for a well in Frio County. Warrior Management Co., $3,000 for two wells in Jim Hogg County; Canyon Operating Co., $3,000 for a well in Marion County; Petrowarrior Oil and Gas, Inc., $3,000 for a well in Glasscock County; Hayseed Stephens Oil Co., $3,000 for a well in Denton County; American Hydrocarbon Corp, $3,000 for a well in Cooke County; Gene Creswell, $3,000 for four wells in Callahan County; and BKW Petroleum, Inc., $2,000 for a well in Runnels County.

Three companies agreed to penalties without admitting any violation of Commition rules. The Rowden Corp. paid $500 for six wells in Duval County; Thermoil, Inc., agreed to pay $500 for two wells in Zavala County; and Bayport Operating, Inc., paid $500 for a well in Fayette County.

To date in 1988 the Commission has levied more than $610,000 in pollution and well plugging penalties. Last year the Commission assessed some $794,000 in such penalties.

New Rowan rig off to North Sea

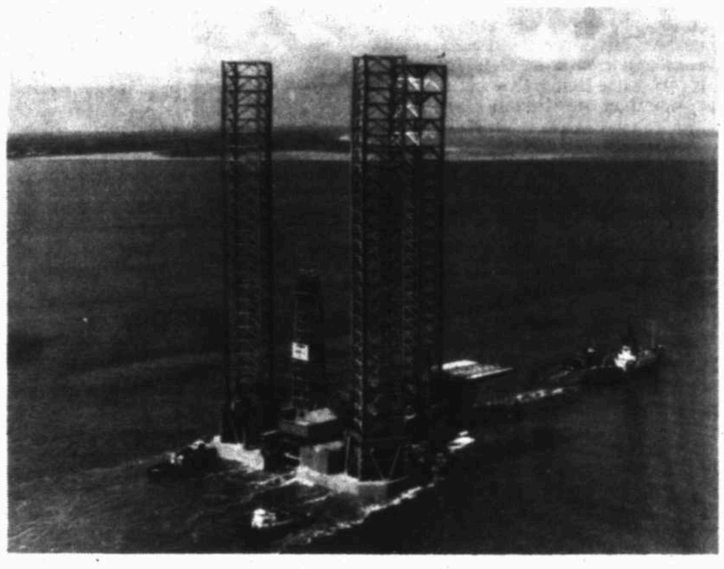
From Staff Reports

HOUSTON — Rowan Cos., Inc.'s Gorilla IV is the most recent rig to leave the U.S. for the North Sea.

Greatly improved economics resulting from a more favorable United Kingdom energy policy has resulted in virtually 100 percent of jack-up drilling rigs in the area, particularly rigs designed for extremely hostile environments, which the North Sea has proven to be with the recent Piper Alpha disaster that killed 160 workers.

Rowan owns and operates a total of four Gorilla rigs. Gorilla I is located in eastern Canada; Gorilla II in the U.K. North Sea; and Gorilla III in the Gulf of Mexico.

Rowan Cos., Inc. serves the petroleum industry as a contract driller, onshore and offshore in domestic and international areas, operates a fleet of charter helicopters and fixed wing aircraft and also engages in petroleum exploration and production.



Mobil may expand Beaumont refinery

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Mobil Corp. is considering a $200 million to $300 million expansion and modernization project at its oil refinery that would mean more job security in the future, a company official said.

If the project is approved, work could begin in 1989, refinery general manager Bill Blackmon said. Mobil's corporate headquarters in New York must approve the plan before final engineering work and construction can begin.

Blackmon said Thursday that he expects Mobil officials to make a decision in July 1989.

The expansion plan includes adding two new processing units that would increase total refinery capacity by 50,000 barrels of oil a day and improve the efficiency of three existing units, he said. Although the refinery can process up to 270,000 barrels of oil a day, it currently processes 245,000 daily.

Hundreds of construction workers would be hired for up to two years for the job, but the increase in the number of permanent jobs would be "maybe 20 to 50 positions," Blackmon said.

The expansion, however, would ensure future job security for employees, he added.

If completed, the expansion project would mean Mobil could process heavier crudes that have a high sulfur content. Those crudes will be in greater supply and at a lower price in the future.

One of the two new units would remove the sulfur. The other unit would produce ingredients used to make premium grades of gasoline, which are Mobil's fastest selling gasoline products.

The project would come on line in 1992, shortly after Mobil finishes installing the third and last phase of its new $50 million centralized control system.

Although the plan has not been approved, Blackmon said Mobil headquarters authorized spending $5 million to study the feasibility of the project.

In addition, Allen Murray, Mobil's chairman of the board, told stockholders at the company's annual meeting in May that Mobil has plans for major improvements in Beaumont.

Mobil, which spends $3 billion each year on capital expenditures throughout its worldwide operations, also has appointed a team of six top management employees to work on the project full time during the next year.

Corrosion said cause of fatal refinery explosion

NORCO, La. (AP) — Corrosion in an 8 inch-wide pipe caused the May 5 explosion at a Shell Oil refinery that killed seven workers, the company said Wednesday.

The pipe, in equipment used break down oil into gasoline, ruptured, releasing 20,000 pounds of hydrocarbons and causing a fire and an explosion felt as far as 20 miles away in New Orleans.

Investigators are trying to find out why the pipe corroded faster than it should have, plant manager Fred Foster told reporters during a tour of the refinery Wednesday.

Checks at other parts of the plant show no danger of a similar explosion, he added.

Seven workers died, and 22 were injured, six critically. Shell said all but one of those critically injured will return to work soon.

Tacoma's close enough to Wall Street for this broker

Clients include 40 largest U.S. companies

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A half century ago, the Russell clan left Wall Street for the much quieter avenues of Tacoma. Today, even though he keeps a minute-by-minute watch on New York markets, George Russell has no desire to trade his view of Puget Sound for Manhattan.

Russell runs the Frank Russell Group of Companies — named for his grandfather — which advises pension funds and other large pools of capital on how to make the most money with the least risk.

Clients include 40 of the largest U.S. corporations — among them, International Business Machines Corp., General Motors Corp., Boeing Co., Hearst Corp. and Xerox Corp. — plus a growing number of foreign companies, foundations, profit-sharing plans and a few very rich individuals.

In all, Russell clients have holdings totaling about $240 billion.

The 56-year-old Russell pioneered the idea of tracking performance of money managers so pension funds can rely on more than just intuition in deciding where to entrust their assets.

The privately held company now employs about 700 people, and has annual revenues "in the neighborhood of $100 million," Russell says.

He's proud of a new home office due to open in downtown Tacoma this fall: A telescope in his current headquarters lets visitors monitor the new building's progress. Moreover, he's proud the company's been able to make it in Tacoma, a city that suits his style.

"I HAD A CHANCE to go to Wall Street, and didn't choose to get into that herd-type thought-process," he said.

"If you're on Wall Street, what you've got is a beeper on your belt, and if you don't answer that beeper 24 hours a day, you're not going to get your bonus at the end of the year.

"We look at it quite differently, and maybe it's because we're in Tacoma. I don't know, but it seems to me that we ought to have the family beeper on the belt and if the family yells for help then the person ought to go solve that problem and then come do the business work."

In his line of work, things "will never improve unless the people that are in charge hire people that are smarter than they are," Russell said.

"If you get the priorities in the right place to begin with as you run a business and you put the people ahead of the business, then they'll eventually realize they can have fun in life, too, and the business will be fun, too."

Russell's office reflects his work-hard-but-have-fun beliefs. Folding doors screen off a narrow, wall-length work area from the rest of the room, which is filled with comfy furniture and photographs of his family, the Northwest and his 60-foot yacht.

The boat, he says, has entertained a lot of clients. "If you come to New York, you go out to a fine restauraunt. In Tacoma, your options are different."

mRUSSELL DEFINES his outfit as "asset management consultants," three words that take him about 30 minutes to explain. "This is not an easy organization to understand," he conceded.

Besides advising the 40 corporate pension accounts, the company gathers and sells statistics on money managers, runs mutual funds for bank trust departments, operates a brokerage house, and offers investment funds and advice for smaller clients, including endowments, foundations and individuals.

It also has developed indexes for measuring stock and real estate performance, including the Russell 2000 and Russell 3000 indexes traded on the New York Futures Exchange.

"If you think of a compass, we pretty much on the consulting side are covering 360 degrees," Russell said.

Doing so has brought his privately held company 25 percent growth in each of the past 15 years, he says.

"The staff he's put together has been helpful to us in deciding what we want to do in making investment decisions," said Al Wolfarth, assistant treasurer for pensions at Monsanto Corp., which has used Russell since 1974. In a field with many good companies, Wolfarth said, "I would refer to the Russell firm as the Cadillac of the industry."

Russell's grandfather, Frank, started the company in 1936 when he retired as a Merrill Lynch broker to come to Tacoma where his son was a newspaper executive. He kept busy as an investment counselor and by running a small mutual fund.

"ALL HIS FRIENDS were in it — there were about 176 stockholders and $300,000 in assets," George Russell said.

Russell joined his grandfather when he graduated from Harvard University in 1958. He took over the firm two months later when his grandfather died.

It prospered, with about 300 salesmen by 1965, selling mutual funds, life insurance and real estate syndication. But, "the fact was that I didn't feel that we were adding any particular value," Russell said. "There were a lot of people doing what we were doing."

About 1968, he says, he began looking at pension accounts, which then were usually in conservative investments and managed by one person, "generally selected for some political reason." A few years earlier, researcher Peter Dietz, later hired by Russell, had come up with a set of formulas for tracking pension fund performance.

In 1969, Russell made a cold telephone call to J.C. Penney Co., and sold the treasurer on a service to provide information on where to put Penney's pension money. Penney was the first client in Russell's core consulting company, which he limits to 40 clients.

More cold calls and word-of-mouth advertising helped the company grow. In 1979, Russell opened a London office and later added offices in Sydney, Tokyo and Toronto. Each foreign office also limits its list of clients, which include Rolls Royce and the largest banks in Australia and Japan.

BY LIMITING clients, Russell says, they get better service and he gets a stable business. In the last 19 years, there have been only 10 changes in the list , he says.

Stock market crash: Good news for graduate schools?

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Applications to enter graduate schools of business administration have dropped since the stock market collapsed last October. But some academic leaders think the over-all effect on MBA programs, especially the better ones, has been slight — perhaps even helpful. Good graduate business schools among the 700 in the nation now must scramble a little harder to attract high-caliber students.

Almost everyone in business in any big Eastern city is acquainted with a few disenchanted young MBA's who lost Wall Street jobs as a result of cutbacks after Oct. 19. Some remain unemployed, while others have found work but at much less than the $100,000 or more they received before the crash.

H.J. Zoffer, dean of the graduate business school at the University of Pittsburgh, says there has been no decline in applications there for either daytime or evening courses.

This year, as usual, the school has picked 250 daytime students from thousands who applied. Pittsburgh's daytime program, Dr. Zoffer pointed out, differs from many because it requires 12 months of continuous study — not the typical two-year program with a summer off. In each of three semesters, the daytime students take 16 credit hours.

Henry Rodkin, director of the executive MBA program at the University of Chicago, reacts negatively when he hears of MBA's who have lost their jobs and now complain that investing in an advanced degree was wasted because they lack big salaries with steady increases.

"I interview each applicant for our program," he said, "and not one has mentioned that he or she expected a doubled or sharply increased salary after obtaining an MBA. They want to expand their knowledge, and they say they need an MBA to add to their operating abilities. They want to grow intellectually."

By May 1, the deadline for applying for the fall semester, applicants for the Chicago executive MBA program had jumped more than 34 percent from last year, he said.

Unlike regular daytime or evening MBA courses at Chicago, the executive program draws mid-career managers who average 36 years of age. Their study is usually paid for by their employers.

Like some other business school administrators, Rodkin believes the downturn in overall applications is temporary.

Edward Lewis, president of St. Mary's College of Maryland, a liberal arts institution, and former associate dean of Cornell University's graduate business school, agrees that evening and executive programs could grow. He also deplores the attitude of MBA's who express interest only in the money-making possibilities.

He recalled a Cornell professor asking 200 MBA students how many were in the program for intellectual stimulation, and the majority of the class reacted with guffaws.

"It's frightening how many students look at it as a quick start for a career and a road to promotion, not showing interest in intellectual aspects," Dr. Lewis commented.

He also thinks that too many business schools fail to teach business leaders how to motivate people and increase productivity.

"My sense is that business schools are remarkably unresponsive to business needs," Lewis said. No wonder, he concluded, that many companies prefer "first-rate liberal arts graduates" instead of new MBA's.

Business Week scandal claims more 'victims'

NEW YORK (AP) — Four more people lost their jobs Wednesday because of suspected insider trading on swiped tips from unpublished copies of Business Week, and a U.S. attorney announced the first criminal probe into the scandal.

R.R. Donnelley & Sons Co., one of the companies that prints the business weekly, said it fired two workers and another quit. The investment firm Advest Inc. said a broker who had been suspended because of Business Week-linked trading resigned.

The developments raised to seven the list of brokers and printers forced out of their jobs because of the scandal, in which an undetermined number of people traded stocks based on stolen tips from the business magazine's "Inside Wall Street" stock-touting column prior to publication.

So-called insider trading — buying and selling stocks based on information unavailable to everyone — is considered fraud under federal securities laws.

Donnelley said it fired a previously suspended employee at its plant in Torrance, Calif., and another worker there resigned. The company also said it fired a second worker at a printing plant in Old Saybrook, Conn., where a production employee was dismissed earlier this week.

"This is not the way we do business," John R. Walter, Donnelley president, said in a statement from the company's headquarters in Chicago.

"We have a long, proud tradition of protecting our customers' materials," he said. "Although a few employees have violated our rules, we continue to have confidence in our more than 23,000 Donnelley employees. We are continuing our investigation, and we will deal severely with any individuals involved."

The firm has said it is considering unspecified legal action against the accused former employees.

Evidence uncovered so far in the scandal suggests some printers distributed or peddled unpublished copies of Business Week to brokers, who bought stocks recommended by "Inside Wall Street" and sold them at a profit after publication had attracted more buyers and raised the price of the stocks.

Stanley Twardy Jr., the U.S. attorney in Hartford, Conn., said he had asked the FBI to investigate "any possible wrongdoing in Connecticut in connection with this matter." He declined to elaborate on the nature or scope of the probe, the first criminal inquiry since the scandal surfaced late last month.

Last week Merrill Lynch & Co. fired a broker from its New London, Conn., office, near Donnelley's Old Saybrook plant, and Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. fired a broker from its Anaheim, Calif., branch, near the Torrance plant. Merrill Lynch also is investigating a second broker.

At least nine investment firms have undertaken internal inquiries into trading possibly connected to the purloined tips and are known to be cooperating with a Securities and Exchange Commission probe of the scandal.

In addition, there have been unconfirmed reports that up to two dozen investment firms are involved.

The scandal surfaced when Business Week, the nation's leading business weekly with a circulation of nearly 1 million, disclosed July 21 that it had long suspected prepublication misuse of "Inside Wall Street" tips.

Then there was $100 oil

DALLAS (AP) — By now, the story is legend. Even Exxon Corp., that corporate colossus, was fooled. Companies of all size and ilk forecasted as the last decade came to a close that a barrel of oil in the next would be worth more than $50, more than $70, even; in some cases, more than $80 and $90.

Grand plans were laid and grand sums of money spent — and borrowed — on the strength of such forecasts. When oil prices began to trak a downward course that most recently has paused at around $15, great minds were left puzzled. Danny conklin of Amarillo was among them, and he had always been conservative in his predictions.

"My lid was at $55 a barrel," said Conklin, chairman of the Independent Petroleum Associaton of America. "I still look at that and have a big hoot."

But no one in the petroleum industry, Conklin included, has stopped divining the future. The nature of the business requires that distant energy prices be guessed at, and the nature of forecasting is that it is too seductive to resist.

"We all still do it," Conklin said. "We just keep in a locked drawer."

Since the embarrassingly amiss prognosticatins of the late 1970s and early 1980s, the game has changed considerably. Exxon, for example, no longer publishes forecasts. Companies that do outline two or more pricing scenarios, and are careful to frame their prophecies in ranges' spanning $2 to $5.

"It (the forecasting debacle) couldn't have helped but sour many executives. But today the most successful companies are the ones that do a great deal of forecasting and strategic planning," said Scott Jones, vice president of Industry Analysis Group, an energy forecasting firm. "What they are trying to do is prevent disaster as a result of oil price volatility, and that takes a lot of planning."

IPAA Chairman Danny Conklin, says it was not hard to predict $100 oil.

For earlier generations of oilmen, volatility was not in the lexicon. With the United Staes the world's most important producer, and the Texas Railroad Commission and similar agencies in other states firmly controlling output in producing regons, the value of a barrel of oil was one of the few constants in life in the United States in the years following World II.

"Then all of a sudden there came the increases, first to $14 then to $18, then to $28, then to $38 and on up, and if you mentally trend that out it's not hard to get to $100 barrel," Jones said. "That's exactly what an econometric model did. It just took history and ran it on out up the scale, and people believed it."

Jones at the time worked for Chase Econometrics, a respected consulting and forecasting firm that predicted in the late 1970s that oil would cost $89 a barrel in 1990. The private sector was no less daring than the federal government, which, after the shock of the Arab oil embargo in 1974 and the jolt of the Iranian revolution in 1979 — two events that helped propel prices to heights previously unimagined — saw nothing intemperate in predictions of $100-a-barrel oil.

"There hadn't been much of a history of the response of supply and demand to price, or vice versa, before 1974," said John Pearson, director of energy analysis and forecasting for the U.S. Energy Information Administration. "We had no real idea how demand would change, and we sure as hell had no idea how supply would change. Our typical forecasting tool was a straight line ruler."

The information administration, the Department of Energy's analytical arm, now employs an "equilibrium model," which operates with a flexible price scale and a set estimate of demand and supply. The price is raised and lowered until demand and supply are in balance, and the equilibrium price is the chief number in the forecast.

But it is hardly coldly scientific. Pearson called the administration's system "a guessing game based on history with judgmental adjustments thrown in." The result is a prediction that prices will range from $15 to $18 a barrel through 1989.

TEXAS BUSINESS

Firm sells 'long distance' help

'Information please' means 'please pay'

DALLAS (AP) — The recipe for business success has been followed hundreds of times.

Find an industry with one big player. Develop a competing service. Underprice your competition and snare customers.

G. Ray Miller changed an ingredient. He brought his product into the marketplace with higher prices and still found enormous success.

In fact, rapid growth is an understatement when describing what has been happening at International Telecharge Inc. in recent months.

The 3-year-old company closed 1987 with revenues of $37 million and then did nearly that much business in the first quarter of 1988 alone. Revenues this year are expected to exceed $200 million and Miller is aiming for $1 billion by 1991.

International Telecharge has nearly doubled its work force since January, from 659 to 1,200. It has outgrown a Las Colinas facility it moved to less than a year ago and plans another move in a couple of months.

Its customer base continues to expand. Its stock was one of the best performers among new issues in 1987. It has its eyes open for acquisitions or mergers to help it grow even more.

So just what is the revolutionary service that International Telecharge is providing? What bubbling market was just waiting to explode?

Long-distance telephone operator assistance.

If you think there's a catch, you're right.

Operator services, performed by American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for more than 100 years, is the newest realm of telephone industry deregulation to hit the United States.

As with long-distance carriers, some business customers can now choose among companies to handle operator assistance for long-distance calls. The main targets are sources of large volumes of such calls — hotels, hospitals and privately owned pay phones.

International Telecharge's main selling pitch to business clients is commissions. It allows hotels, hospitals or private pay phone operators to add a per-call surcharge to their phone calls. The businesses set the surcharge themselves.

AT&T used to pay such commissions but cut them out after deregulation started splintering its business.

By switching calls to International Telecharge, hotels and hospitals earn money, from their phones. Surcharges average about 75 cents a call, although they can range up to $3 in luxury surroundings.

Further, because it is a small "nondominant" carrier, International Telecharge's long distance rates are not strictly regulated.

On average, International Telecharge says its interstate rates range anywhere from 15 percent to 25 percent higher than AT&T's, according to James W. Smith, International Telecharge executive vice president for sales and marketing.

For calls within states, International Telecharge's rates are similar to AT&T's, although they were reduced as much as 30 percent earlier this year because of rising consumer pressure.

Higher prices haven't stunted International Telecharge's business growth because its customers, such as hospital patients, hotel guests or business travelers, generally don't know what the rates are when they pick up a telephone.

And some consumers have not been happy when they discover that their call was more expensive than they thought it would be.

Since mid-January, the FCC has received about 585 complaints regarding about a dozen alternative operator-assistance (AOS) companies, including 131 against International Telecharge, according to Kathy Kneff, who handles the complaints at the Washington agency.

A consumer group has also protested.

"We think it's outrageous for hotels and AOS companies to get together and say, 'Hey, we can charge more than we could before and we have a captive audience, so let's go ahead and rip them off,' " said Michael Heffer, a staff member with Consumer Action, a non-profit group based in San Francisco that specializes in monitoring long-distance services.

The group advocates a cap on surcharges, believing that the market will not keep prices in line if hotel guests or pay phone users can only reach one operator.

"We don't believe that it's a competitive situation. What's being created are a whole series of baby monopolies," said Ken McEldowney, executive director of Consumer Action.

Miller, the man who founded International Telecharge and who serves as its chairman and chief executive officer, brushes aside the consumer complaints as few, considering that International Telecharge now places about 6 million calls a month.

In most presidential election years after-tax profits rise

There is a strong tendency for U.S. corporate after-tax profits to rise in a year with a presidential election. Since 1964, the only decline in an election year for corporate profits from the previous year was in 1980.

Texas is a leader in foreign investments

By JOHN FOWLER

Texas is among the top five states in terms of foreign investment. Yet as economic developers across the U.S. scramble for a new wave of foreign investment in this country, Texas lags behind most states in efforts to secure market share.

Thirty-four states have offices in Japan to stimulate trade and investment from that country and the Pacific Rim. Texas is not one of them. Many states maintain trade offices in Canada, Europe and other countries. Texas has no international presence except in Mexico City.

To take advantage of new opportunities in international trade, the Texas Department of Commerce has proposed to open a state office in Tokyo. It would be headed by Bill Lutrell, TDC's director of international business development, who speaks fluent Japanese and has experience in Japanese business circles. The holdup is, of course, money — specifically, the $500,000 it will take to establish and operate a Tokyo office for the first year.

TDC chairman Ed Vetter and others seeking to fund the Tokyo start-up have turned to the private sector for help. Various local chambers and economic development groups — including Midland — are being asked to contribute to the initial funding. The Austin Chamber of Commerce and Texas Utilities have committed to help fund the program, and other pledges are expected.

The Houston Economic Development Council already is represented in Tokyo through a contract with a subsidiary of the Bank of Tokyo. Houston has indicated it will maintain that office at least through the end of the year, instead of contributing to the state effort.

Compounding the department's efforts to raise funds are the current budgetary constraints of local chambers of commerce. Most are struggling to fund their own domestic programs, with private and public dollars already squeezed as a result of the economic pressures on funding sources, and are scrambling to reexamine priorities in light of scarce resources.

Whether the department is successful in securing private funding for its first overseas trade initiative remains to be seen. But most economic developers agree that a state presence in Tokyo is a vital step in attracting manufacturing investment from Japan and the Pacific Rim, which is expected to grow at an increasing rate in the next few years.

Japanese companies operating in the U.S. employ over 150,000 Americans, most of them on the East and West coasts, but followed closely by Texas. Canada, the United Kingdom, and Western European countries also continue to invest in U.S. capacity, stimulated by the current value of the dollar against other currencies, the ongoing threat of protectionist legislation, and the attraction of the world's most affluent market. Many of these companies also export to foreign markets from their U.S. operations, which further contributes to the reduction of this country's trade deficit.

The private sector funding initiative was set in motion by TDC as a result of business' encouragement to be more aggressive in international trade. Vetter hopes that once the office is up and running and beginning to show results, the legislature will pick up the funding in future budgets of the department. If he succeeds, the state may be on its way to catching up in the global race for international investment and jobs.

John Fowler is president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

General Motors to offer new three-year warranty

By JOHN HOLUSHA
New York Times News Service

DETROIT — The General Motors Corp. announced Wednesday that it would change the warranty it offers on most of its cars and light trucks from six-year, 60,000-mile coverage of basic engine and transmission parts to a more comprehensive three-year, 50,000-mile package.

The change will apply to 1989 models.

The new warranty will cover virtually all the parts on a vehicle, GM said, including air-conditioning and electronic and power equipment.

At present, GM offers this broad coverage for one year or 12,000 miles and then extended coverage for the engine and other power-train parts for six years or 60,000 miles, whichever comes first.

The company will also drop the $100 fee it charged for transferring the warranty to another owner.

But it will continue a $100 deductible fee for warranty work performed after the one-year or 12,000-mile limit is passed.

Owners will remain responsible for oil changes, lubrication and other normal maintenance.

In a statement, GM said it was responding to surveys that indicated that two-thirds of its customers preferred the shorter, more complete coverage.

The new warranty terms have been in effect in Canada since February and have been well accepted, the company said.

GM touched off a warranty war in the domestic industry in early 1987 when it extended a three-year, 36,000-mile power-train warranty to six years and 60,000 miles.

Within a few weeks the Ford Motor Co. had matched GM, while the Chrysler Corp. extended its term to seven years or 70,000 miles.

It was unclear how those companies would respond to Wednesday's action.

Ford said, "We believe our present warranty is a good one and serves our customers well."

But it said it would study the GM action and do whatever was necessary "to keep Ford and Lincoln-Mercury dealers competitive."

Chrysler said that it too would be competitive and that it was studying GM's move to decide on a response.

Warranties have been made more comprehensive as the American car market has become crowded with new entries.

Audi of America, for example, recently extended its three-year, 50,000-mile coverage to include all maintenance, including changes of oil, brake pads and windshield wiper blades.

The auto companies have found that the way service is performed by dealers is an important component in owners' satisfaction with a model.

Some dealers have complained that the limited power-train warranties confused many owners over what was and was not covered.

In a recent survey by J.D. Power & Associates, only one GM brand, Cadillac, ranked in the top 10 of a consumer-satisfaction index.

TELEPHONE

Some stem from honest billing mistakes, he said, but the main gripe is that International Telecharge calls cost more than AT&T charges.

Miller claims operator assisted service has been underpriced by AT&T in the past. And he says calls from convenience locations, such as hotels and hospitals should cost more, much like soft drinks sold from hotel vending machines cost more than the same product sold in a grocery store.

Phones, like a bar or restaurant, should be a profit center for hotels, he said.

"They don't believe that the hotel should make any money off a telephone call, which is absurd," he said.

Miller says his customers also get more for their money.

International Telecharge offers a staff of multilingual operators, speaking not only Spanish but other languages including Vietnamese, Japanese, French and Russian.

International Telecharge customers can charge calls to major credit cards such as Visa and MasterCard. Operators can arrange teleconferences. International Telecharge offers voice messaging. If a line is busy, a caller can leave a message and International Telecharge systems will try to forward it for up to 8 hours. Cost: $3. It also handles emergency calls.

And in some cases, if the hotel or hospital allows it, International Telecharge will pass a call to an AT&T operator if the caller requests the switch, although Miller frankly doesn't like it.

"AT&T has pay phones all over the country and you can't reach me through them. You can only reach an AT&T operator. Is that fair?" he said.

Each day, International Telecharge handles about 230,000 calls from throughout the United States.

All of those calls come into Dallas. They first come through the company's robotics center, a room filled with about 80 personal computers programmed to handle credit card calls when a live operator is not required.

In a room of the historic Magnolia building in downtown Dallas, color-coded screens flash with the activity of the day: a call from a Dunkin Donuts shop in Lynn, Mass.; another from an Amoco gas station in Downer's Grove, Ill.

If an operator is needed, the caller punches a number and the call is automatically switched to International Telecharge's lifeblood, its toll center in Las Colinas.

Here, a labyrinth of office carrels house International Telecharge's operators, a core of mainly young female employees who work in shifts, 24 hours a day.

The company started service with 36 operators early last year and now employs more than 700. Including turnover, International Telecharge has been hiring roughly 100 people every two weeks. Its hardware has grown from 16 workstations to more than 400.

In September, the company plans to move to a larger facility in Carrollton, where it will have 600 operator workstations and 400 robotic workstations. Later this year, it also plans to establish a 300-operator toll center in Puerto Rico to handle traffic to that country, the Carribean and central America.

International Telecharge is one of about 40 alternative operator-assistance companies that have jumped into operator services in the last couple of years. But International Telecharge has emerged as an industry leader, said Joseph Fulvio, director of research for Information Publishing Corp., in Houston.

He recently completed a survey of the alternative operator-assistance industry, estimating that it has captured roughly $400 million to $600 million in revenues, or nearly 5 percent of the market.

International Telecharge stands out because of its heavy investment in hardware and switching equipment, sophisticated operator center, employee training and financial success.

"They're the first firm to really end up in the black based solely on the basis of their operator-service business," Fulvio said.

Owners of public pay phones will get to choose operator assistance service between AT&T, International Telecharge and other alternative operator-assistance providers, much like the public selects long-distance carriers. That's a $3 billion-a-year market, and Miller hopes to snatch 30 percent. That alone would approach $1 billion. The selection process may start later this year.

In the meantime, Miller and International Telecharge President Edmuhd F. Tagg aren't sitting still even with all that's on their plates. They're wanting to secure a long-distance transmission network by either acquiring a long-distance carrier or building a network by installing switches and renting space on fiber optic lines.

Currently, International Telecharge spends about $50 million a year to buy transmission time an long-distance networks from MCI and other carriers.

Miller said the company is hiring an investment house to help find it a partner. He hopes to have a deal by September.

"It's no secret in the industry that we need a network," he said. In any merger, however, International Telecharge would have to be the surviving company, he added.

The 49-year-old Miller is a veteran entrepreneur and takes International Telecharge's rapid growth in stride.

He worked for MCI and later founded U.S. Telephone, another long-distance carrier. It eventually was acquired by United Telecommunications and later became U.S. Sprint. He sarcastically refers to his archnemesis as Alternate Telephone & Telegraph Co.

He said AT&T doesn't really consider him a competitor, and he doesn't consider smaller alternative operator-assistance companies competitors either.

"When you're in a market this big, and you're the only player, if you don't do it rapidly then there will be someone else," he said.

Cordless, coinless pay telephone new power lunch item

By MERETE McDONALD
Copley News Service

The latest in power lunches: Order a phone with your meal — no strings attached.

Restaurants are expanding their daily menu to include The Fone, a cordless, coinless pay telephone for the convenience of their customers.

Developed by Fone America Inc. of Carlsbad, Calif., the mobile phone eliminates the inconveniences of the traditional pay phone: proper change, privacy concerns, and balancing papers while standing in cramped quarters.

It is designed to be primarily an aid to the business public, and users may easily call home or the office from the restaurant table or the bar.

"We thought this was a convenient service for the customer who needs to stay in touch with his business," said Kent Truscott, president and chief executive officer of the company and inventor of The Fone.

The system combines a cordless telephone and a computer-printer that sorts and records the calls, and prints a tape of the costs, which is attached to the restaurant or bar bill.

Restaurants, hotels and clubs have been in the vanguard to sign up for the the cordless phone service, which has been widely marketed only since June 1, Truscott said.

Randy French, general manager of The Brigantine Restaurant in San Diego, said an average of six to 10 customers use The Fone daily.

"People like the idea of being mobile and being able to talk at their table," French said. "I think it's convenient, especially for the business people."

Some people use it as a business tool and other people use it for social purposes, he said. "It appeals to the laziness of human beings of not having to get up to make a phone call."

Although using The Fone costs slightly more than a pay phone, the convenience outweighs the added cost, Truscott said.

Local calls cost 25 cents for the first two minutes; long-distance calls range from 50 cents to $1 per minute.

Besides being a service for restaurant patrons, The Fone generates profit for the restaurant. While a typical pay phone brings in a monthly profit of $15 to $20, Truscott said, The Fone may generate 10 times that revenue to a busy club.

Henkin said Hungry Hunter makes a monthly profit of $50 to $60 on the new service.

Fone America Inc., which was formed in 1985, tested The Fone service before beginning general marketing in June. The firm receives 50 percent of the revenues generated by phone usage.

No recalls, smogs or buyer incentives needed to sell toy cars

DETROIT (AP) — At the research and development offices of these automakers, pushing a test car to the limits means giving it a good shove around a 20-foot plastic proving ground.

In the U.S. toy car industry, Matchbox Cars U.S.A. is one of the Big Three. Last year, the Moonachie, N.J.-based company sold 77 million vehicles — more than Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and General Motors Corp. put together.

The other members of the tiny Big Three — Mattel Inc., maker of Hot Wheels, and the upstart Lewis Galoob Toys Inc., maker of Micro Machines, are heavy hitters in a business devoid of controversy and lawsuits.

"We've never had a recall, we have no smog problems, no safety problems," said Larry Wood, Mattel's top designer of Hot Wheels cars.

Wood spent three years designing cars for Ford Motor Co. in Dearborn, Mich., in the 1960s before joining the Hawthorne, Calif.-based Mattel and downsizing his designs for the pint-size customer.

"When I worked in Detroit, I did a few door handles and tail lights. So far, I've done every Hot Wheels car since 1968," he said.

These days, Wood is designing Hot Wheels' 1990 line, trying to anticipate the car buyers' desires nearly as far into the future as Detroit automakers.

"I think they have gone a little more conservative in the last few years. Now kids seem to like the standard sporty cars," he said.

To anticipate designs, Woods sifts through automotive trade magazines that often offer an advance peek of what Detroit, Tokyo or Stuttgart plan to offer in upcoming model years.

"If Detroit or Japan or Germany come out with an exciting car or different profile, we take a look at it," Wood said.

Matchbox was so taken by Ford's Taurus-Sable design, that it copied the new-age look for its 1-64 scale die-cast miniatures.

"If we see a trend developing in auto design, we will stay with the trend and capture it in our cars," said Jim Walsh, Matchbox marketing director. "Obviously, the Ford Taurus is a pretty sleek design and its something that's caught on with the public."

In September, South San Francisco, Calif.-based Lewis Galoob will offer toy cars that change color in the sun. The new option strays slightly from Galoob's philosophy of keeping its Micro Machines realistic.

"Kids are not crazy for fantasy," marketing manager Marjorie Forrest said. "They don't want a car that doesn't look like a car. Kids today are very sophisticated. They know what a (Lamborghini) Countache is and what a Rolls Royce is."

Galoob expects to sell 45 million vehicles in 1988, just its second year in the market. Its Micro Machines are about 1¼ inches long, smaller than Hot Wheels or Matchboxes, Forrest said.

Sports cars and military and construction vehicles are the hot sellers among the rug-running set.

"Basically, kids like things that are power oriented. The feeling of speed or power is what kids gravitate to," said Matchbox's Walsh.

Adults and children apparently split the purchases evenly, said Mattel's Wood, with children often choosing what they see on television. For instance, a miniature version of the white Ferrari Testarossa driven in "Miami Vice" is one of the most popular toy sellers.

The children show some loyalty toward American-made cars, Walsh says, because that's what they often see on the streets. That loyalty can carry over into their adulthood, he said.

"If they happen to like four-wheel-drive cars as a kid, there's a strong possibility they'll like four-wheel vehicles as an adult," Walsh said. "In my opinion, if you like a particular type of car as a kid, you're apt to grow up and like them."

That's good news for Detroit automakers, who usually charge no royalties to miniature automakers who replicate their cars.

"Anytime you get your product in the mind of the car buyer or a young person, you enhance your reputation," said Chrysler spokesman B.F. Mullins.

"We think it does a lot of good. You get involved in a lot of shelf space in department stores. It also gets young people involved in your product. The bottom line is consideration of your product."

When Chrysler introduced its Caravan and Voyager minivans, it passed out Matchbox versions to the press as souvenirs, Mullins said.

Ford officials review miniatures modeled after their cars to make sure they measure up.

"We want it (a toy) to be very authentic," Ford spokesman Dave Krupp said. "We want it to be accurate in every detail. We consider this child a future car buyer."

And while children are the primary market, collectors also make up small fragment of their sales. Walsh says there are about 20,000 Matchbox collectors in the country, who trade and sell vehicles, some worth up to $200 each.

Overall, the miniature car industry is cruising steadily.

"This is a field that is growing. But do not expect dramatic growth from one year to the next," said David S. Leibowitz, a toy industry analyst for American Securities in New York City.

The cars usually take nine months to get from the drawing board to production, which is usually performed at mini assembly lines in the Orient, Wood said.

Before they reach full production, the miniature car makers often have groups of kids rate them and describe what they like about a particular model.

U.S. workers claim job bias by Asian owners

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer

Roy Carlson had a good job, a huge house and a stable life in Arizona when he traded it all for a dream offer in Silicon Valley. He thought he was kicking off a fresh new career. Two months later, he was out of work.

Mikel Duffy hoped to climb the ladder of high finance with a new job at a New York export-import firm. A year later, convinced she'd never reach the first rung, she quit.

Two tales of job troubles. One West Coast, one East Coast. One veteran, one beginner. But both are among the small but increasing number of Americans who've accused their Japanese or Korean employers of job discrimination.

The explosion of Asian-owned companies has created jobs for Americans but has also generated complaints from workers claiming they were rejected, denied promotion or laid off because of their color, race, sex or ethnic group.

"You should be evaluated for your performance — not what you look like, who you are or your race or sex," said Duffy, one of three women who've sued C. Itoh & Co. (America) Inc., a Japanese company, for discrimination.

Some say cultural clashes arise because the Japanese are unaccustomed to minority workers and female managers. Others call it intentional bias.

Some complaints are in court. The government is investigating others. Some probes have led to financial settlements and new policies.

Honda of America Manufacturing Inc., for example, agreed this spring to pay $6 million to 377 blacks and women after a 3½-year-long investigation by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission concluded the company should have hired them sooner. Honda admitted no wrongdoing.

Most complaints involve Japanese companies, simply because of their dominance of the U.S. market. The cases represent a tiny fraction of 190,000 Americans working for Japanese-owned firms, a number expected to rise to 900,000 by 1995. As of 1986, 539 Japanese manufacturing firms had been established in the United States.

Many business experts insist the Japanese generally are good bosses, known for innovative management and fierce loyalty from workers.

Still, tensions have surfaced when East meets West in the workplace. Some say it's because the Japanese live in a homogeneous society and male-oriented work world.

"They import their own cultural bias," said lawyer Lewis Steel, whose firm has been involved in three cases in which women have charged Japanese companies with job discrimination.

"They run their corporations (here) in a way that really mirrors the structure in Japan," he said. "They have to adapt to our culture. ... It is not easy for them to do that. It was not easy for companies in the South to rid themselves of overt discrimination."

Labor experts note that the record of U.S. firms isn't unblemished. In 1983, for instance, General Motors settled a race and sex discrimination case for $42 million, the EEOC said.

Bias complaints, some pending for two years, include:

— Hirings: Two former executives of NEC Electronics Inc., a microprocessor and semiconductor firm, claim they were unfairly demoted. They assert they'd advised against a policy of dismissing Americans to make room for Japanese workers. When the company removed them from the board of directors, they filed suit and then were fired, according to their breach-of-contract suit.

— Firings: Nine former workers, mostly engineers, have sued Hyundai Electronics America, claiming they were hired to begin a computer division in California but lost their jobs when it closed months later in 1984, although Koreans were transferred within the organization.

The EEOC has also sued the Korean-owned firm, charging discrimination in favor of Korean workers. A lawyer for Hyundai denies the charges, noting the Koreans were trainees, in America temporarily.

Ex-employees aren't mollified. "I disrupted my life to join them," said Carlson, adding he was laid off two months after being guaranteed job security. "They got whatever they wanted from us, and they let us go."

— Promotions: The EEOC in New York is investigating claims Japanese men get preferential treatment and women have no promotion opportunities at The Nikko Securities Co. International Inc., said attorney Susan Ritz, who is representing three women.

In the separate case against C. Itoh, Duffy said she was hired as a clerk two years ago and soon given other duties. When she requested relief from clerical work to tackle new tasks, she said she was told "in a fatherly, reassuring manner, 'No, no, it's OK, if you feel you can't handle this, you can go back to your old job and we can get a man to do yours.'"

The EEOC, however, found no discrimination at C. Itoh and "anyone who possesses the proper job-related skills can be promoted," said lawyer Bill Carmell, representing the company. "I get a little frustrated (with the attitude) since we're a Japanese company, we must have mistreated women."

Another sex discrimination case was resolved in a 1987 multi-million dollar settlement involving Sumitomo Corp. of America and 13 female clerical workers. Sumitomo stipulated it hadn't violated laws.

That settlement ended 10 years of litigation, including a 1982 Supreme Court decision holding that subsidiaries of Japanese firms in the United States are bound by American laws barring job bias.

Three Japanese automakers also have come under EEOC scrutinty. The agency said:

— Nissan is discussing settlement of a race, sex and age discrimination charge.

— Toyota last year agreed to add five minority workers at two California plants and pay $47,880 after a race and national origin discrimination probe.

— Honda in 1987 agreed to pay $457,111 to 85 people following an age bias investigation.

In March, Honda settled a case after the EEOC claimed its hiring practices were discriminatory. In its early years, Honda, based in Marysville, Ohio, hired only people who lived within a 20-mile radius of the plant. The radius was later increased to 30 miles, and the policy was also applied when Honda opened an engine plant at Anna, Ohio.

The 30-mile limit excluded potential workers from Columbus, 35 miles away, which has the region's largest minority population — about 24 percent.

Dallas, Houston lead in Asian businesses

By JOHN BARNETT
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Dallas and Houston lead the country in Asian business ownership, according to a private study.

The Dallas-Fort Worth metro area was first, with 90.3 Asian owned businesses for every 1,000 Asian-American residents, according to the study by Wendy Manning of the University of Wisconsin and William O'Hare of the independent, Washington-based Population Reference Bureau.

Houston was second with 84.9 Asian-owned businesses per 1,000 Asian-American residents, followed by Atlanta with 80.5.

By comparison, the San Francis co-Oakland metro area came in at No. 17 with a 54.6 rate, and Honolulu was No. 29 at 46.6.

Paul Chon, a business consultant and member of the American Vietnamese Chamber of Commerce, said Houston offered many opportunities to Vietnamese who came here in the early 1980s at the peak of the city's boom time.

"We came here empty-handed, but we are very practical," he said. "We would do anything, and we learned the jobs real quick."

Kenneth Li, vice president of the Houston Chinese Chamber of Commerce, said he believes Houston has one of the highest concentrations of Asian businesses because the city attracts people who are willing to take risks.

"Just like the Americans here, we are entrepreneurially oriented," he said.

Li believes that the presence of the Port of Houston and the two major airports in Dallas and Atlanta have fostered the growth of import/export businesses in those cities. New immigrants coming into this area from Asia, particularly Taiwan and Hong Kong, tend to come with enough capital to set up their own business, he said.

Nationally, 64 of every 1,000 Americans own a business, slightly more than the overall Asian American rate of 54.8, the report said.

The researchers ranked the 38 metropolitan areas containing at least 500 Asian-owned businesses and an Asian population of 9,000 or more.

The findings by Manning and O'Hare, based on an analysis of the Census Bureau's 1982 survey of minority-owned businesses and the 1980 national population count, were published in the August edition of American Demographics, a magazine devoted to marketing and population trends.

Is inflation becoming something to worry about?

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — You can always worry about inflation. If it isn't present in fact, it is as a threat. And while the threat might be small, it is always magnified by the number of worriers, which is great.

Inflation today is both a presence and a threat.

As a presence, it is relatively minor, running at an annual rate of about 4 percent in the past year. Relative is a big word, however; relative to the double-digit rates of the 1970s, 4 percent is indeed small.

But even at 4 percent a lot of damage can be done. At 4 percent, for example, a 7 percent savings account earns only 3 percent in real terms, but the tax is applied as if it were 7 percent.

A savings account, by whatever name it is known, therefore becomes mainly a financial technique for staying afloat rather than getting ahead. Four percent inflation cuts your dollar in half within 18 years. Add in taxes, which are always applied to inflated rather than constant dollars, and the time shrinks.

Meanwhile, the cost of things you save for, such as an education for your kids or your own retirement, may have their own private inflation rate. Health care inflation, for example, sometimes runs double the overall rate.

BUSINESS MIRROR

So is 4 percent damaging? It is, if it persists. It is insidious as termites in the rafters: You may not see the damage until it is done. For a while you thought you had something of value; then you found it was sawdust.

Still, by standards of the 1970s, today's inflation hardly qualifies as a present danger. It is the memory of those 1970s, however, that make so many people acutely aware and deathly afraid of the monster.

How could they forget? As recently as 15 years ago, many Americans truly believed that thrift was the way to wealth. They saved their money dutifully, but they lost their shirts. Their bank accounts were plundered.

True, the interest rates they earned were higher than those of today; but the rate of inflation was several points higher than that. Every day in every way they lost more and more of their savings. It was the heist of the century.

While the thrifty lost their assets, the less thrifty grew wealthy. Those who believed in living beyond their means borrowed the money of the savers and paid them back in ever cheaper dollars. They prospered.

This great theft of thrift was even worse than it might appear in a casual glance. The borrowers not only gave back less — rather than more, as might be expected — but the money they borrowed from the savers multiplied.

Remember, inflation makes the value of paper money shrink, but it makes the price of hard assets rise. While the money of the savers was shrinking, the assets of the borrowers were booming.

So much for the notion that thrift begets wealth.

The notion, which had persisted from the first days of the nation, was shattered in the '70s, and the shrapnel is still being picked from the hides of millions of people.

They realize that while 4 percent inflation isn't terrible for a year or two, it is deadly over longer periods of time. And they know too that if 4 percent is tolerated politically, then 8 percent lurks in the future.

A lot of talk about runaway inflation today is mere economic chatter. But some of the fear is real. Millions of once idealistic Americans can show you the scars.

And those scars aren't just in their wallets, but in their psyches, too.

Nation's banks see profits fall

AUSTIN (SWN) — The nation's 13,426 banks reported a profit of $4.9 billion for the first three months of 1988, a 5.6 percent decrease compared to first quarter 1987 earnings of $5.1 billion, according to Alex Sheshunoff, a leading authority on the banking industry. This would have been a record quarter, had it not been for the $1.49 billion aggregate loss by Texas-based First Republic-Bank Corp.

The Midwest was the most profitable region in terms of annualized return on average assets, where banks earned 1.09 percent. Northeastern banks earned the largest dollar profit of any region, $2.5 billion for the quarter, with institutions in New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania accounting for $2.1 billion of the region's profits. Of interest, Texas and Alaska were the only two states in the nation which reported an overall net loss, losing $1.7 billion and $5 million, respectively.

Tobacco crop to reap $160 million

HEMINGWAY, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina's largest cash crop — aromatic, golden tobacco leaf — went to market today as the staccato chant of auctioneers sounded on warehouse floors.

This year's crop was expected to bring $160 million in revenues.

"Overall it's one of the best crops we've had in a long time," said Agriculture Commissioner Les Tindal as he surveyed piles of tobacco at the growers Big 4 Warehouse.

Warehouses here as well as in Mullins, Lake City and Darlington-Timmonsville had opening-day auctions today. Auctions will be held for the first time this year in Loris, Conway and Kingstree on Wednesday.

Observers predicted higher prices in South Carolina than last year's opening day average of $138.58 per hundredweight. For the 1987 season, $151.6 million worth of tobacco was sold.

Early prices at the Star-New Hope Warehouse outside Lake City ranged from $124 to $148 per hundredweight. At Planter's Warehouse in Lake City, some tobacco brought as much as $164.

Gov. Carroll Campbell stopped by Planter's Warehouse, walking along the rows of tobacco as the auctioneers and buyers followed purchasing leaf.

Later, Campbell criticized anti-smoking activists for attacking the crop which he said pumps $300 million, with the ripple effect, into the South Carolina economy.

"If some of these people who are screaming and yelling did as much to fight illegal things — if they shut down the marijuana fields and eliminated the dope — instead of going and trying to beat down something that's legal and has been forever in the United States this country would be a lot better off," he said.

"We've got a good quality crop," said DeWitt Gooden, a tobacco specialist with the Clemson Extension Service. "While weather conditions haven't been ideal this season, recent rains have filled out the tops of the crop."

There were strong opening day sales on Georgia-Florida markets last week — with prices averaging $136.59 per hundredweight. That's up $8.70 from last year.

Cooler weather than normal during the spring left this year's crop about a week behind, Tindal said earlier.

Mismanagement blamed for STNP costs

By ROBERT CULLICK
Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — Mismanagement of the construction of the South Texas Nuclear Project caused it to be at least 35 percent more expensive than other U.S. nuclear power plants being built at the same time, a state's utility consumer advocate study reveals.

Ratepayers in Houston and South Texas should not have to pay the extra costs, which total at least $2.8 billion, said C. Kingsbery Ottmers, the state's public utility counsel. Ottmers' office intervenes in utility regulation cases on behalf of consumer interests.

Houston Lighting & Power Co., the manager of the nuclear construction project, and Central Power & Light, of Corpus Christi, a partner in the plant, have announced they will seek electric rate increases from the Public Utility Commission to recover their construction costs.

HL&P officials expect to ask for a 40 percent rate increase over three years; CP&L will seek an 87 percent increase over seven years.

The PUC, which makes final decisions on rate requests, is a state organization separate from the Office of Public Utility Counsel.

The Public Utility Counsel's report says HL&P was imprudent in constructing the plant, expected to go into commercial operation next week. Energy costs specialist Charles Komanoff compared the capital costs of STNP to those of 27 other U.S. power plants being constructed at the same time.

The analysis, after adjusting for statistical differences among nuclear projects, shows that "STNP's cost continues to exceed typical industry experience by 35-79 per cent." The extra cost was not completely offset by a $750 million settlement the power plant's owners won against Brown & Root, the engineering company that designed the plant beginning in 1972, the report said.

Grandmother makes it big in push carts

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Beverly Duran's 99-year-old grandmother used to tell her how people sold chili from small pushcarts in Albuquerque's Old Town.

Now people coast to coast are selling everything from flowers to pottery, from beach balls to fad items from Ms. Duran's pushcarts.

In 1979, she found herself in college in Boston, a single parent who needed to make extra money. She took odd jobs in historic Faneuil Hall, where pushcarts were part of the atmosphere of the marketplace.

She liked them, but two things struck her: the carts sold nothing from the artistically rich Southwest, and the old-fashioned oak look of the carts themselves would not suit every place.

She started thinking about covered wagon-looking carts for Texas malls; trolleys for those in San Francisco.

The idea eventually led to Carretas, The Cart Company, which she began about two years ago with two pushcarts built in the backyard and a lot of research into building and managing carts.

Ms. Duran says that in the first six months, the business sold about half a dozen carts.

Now, she's president and her son, Steve Lucero, is vice president of a company she estimates will sell at least 200 carts worth $500,000 this year. And she says Carretas is going after contracts that could double the output.

Carretas — Spanish for cart — moved into the Business Innovation Center in Albuquerque in December. The company currently is filling so many orders it had to rent another small building and pull two semi tractor-trailer rigs up to the parking lot to store pieces of carts that are everywhere, she says.

Most of the carts go to glitzy shopping markets and malls around the nation to help meet a growing trend toward temporary tenants.

Pushcarts are mobile and versatile, and Ms. Duran views them as "mini business incubators."

The way America shops is changing, moving away from big retail anchor stores toward specialty retailing, and Ms. Duran says that means mall developers are constantly on the lookout for the new and innovative.

Carts usually are sold to mall developers rather than individual vendors. Developers then rent the carts to the vendors, eliminating the need for small operations to make large capital expenditures.

One of Ms. Duran's customers is Equity Properties and Development in Chicago, which owns more than a dozen malls nationwide.

Sharon Polonia, associate vice president-director of specialty leasing for Equity, says pushcarts allow a shopping center to fill a merchandising void or promote seasonal products.

"The increase in merchandising mix benefits the customers," she says. "If they want flowers, they shouldn't have to leave our center and go to the strip mall across the street."

For example, in an Equity mall close to the beach in Eatontown, N.J., pushcarts and small specialty units line a boardwalk and sell such articles as sunglasses, kites and beachballs.

Ms. Polonia says carts lend themselves to themes or a single line of merchandise, such as selling things that are only pink or only black-and-white or specialty items such as handpainted T-shirts or country-look products.

Things sold off pushcarts largely are impulse items, but Ms. Duran says that's changing as artists and craftsmen discover the cart's possibilities.

And she says individual vendors are beginning to buy carts more frequently as pushcarts become a part of hotels, restaurants, gift shops and airports.

"We've had customers using them in video stores, taking the cart to video parties and serving hot dogs and popcorn off it," she says.

Carretas' wooden carts are generally 3-by-6 and weigh between 100 and 400 pounds. They range in price from about $1,500 to $4,500.

The company has a basic line of pushcarts but Ms. Duran says it is known for its custom-made carts.

She says Carretas can suit the cart to the location. She says she and Lucero do the basic design, often going into a shopping center and picking out an architectural element, such as an art deco arch, that can be incorporated into the pushcart.

The design then goes to Carretas' two artists. Drawings are made and are sent to the customer to make sure it's right. Once the design is approved and dimensions, colors and other details worked out, the order goes to the shop, where a crew of 12 builds and finishes the carts.

Beulah Bookworm (Patricia Wynn), left, listens as Eileen Eyeque (Jodi McElligott) gushes about Dwain Dogood in this scene from the MCT production, which is on stage at the Yucca Theatre until Sept. 3.

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Dwain Dogood ((Tim Rosborough) pours his heart out to Eileen Eyeque (Jodi McElligott) in this scene "Banditry on the Border."

Hero always gets the girl

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"May I rely upon you for guidance?" heroine Eileen Eyeque asks hero Dwain Dogood.

"No," comes the reply from an audience member attending Midland Community Theatre's 40th annual Summer Mummers production, on stage at the Yucca Theatre through Sept. 3.

He's right.

Dogood, a lieutenant in the U.S. Calvary, is a fair-haired, none-too-bright guy who happens to come out ahead at the melodrama's end simply because that's the way melodramas end — the hero gets the heroine.

Miss Eyeque, a school teacher, is never sure whether she's coming or going, but she fits the requirements of the heroine in that she is a pretty little piece of fluff.

So perhaps, after all, the two are perfectly matched in this year's production, "Banditry on the Border" or "They Came to Acuna."

Written by the late William S. Davis in 1965, the script has been, the program states, "updated, maligned, murdered and butchered by committee, 1988."

The script, which poses the question "When did Congress ever make sense?," includes such barbs as:

— "The Mexican economy is so bad it makes being a geologist look good."

— "American women are so rich they have green sunburns."

— "Liquor improves with age — the older I get the better I like it."

— "My first customers and they have about as much money as a Midland oil man."

— "We can steal more from people as entertainers than as bandits."

The melodrama's action takes place in the market place at Ciudad Acuna, along the Mexican-U.S. border, at night at The Bar — Club Mud, in Fort Davis and somewhere on the prairie.

In the "movieola" portion of the melodrama, the villainous bandit chieftain Pancho Basto and his notorious companions, Gordo Gaspacho and Chicken Sukiyaki, invade Midland only to be beated by purses bandied by two ladies on a picnic at Wadley-Barron Park before becoming hopelessly lost in the Wadley Avenue detour via Goldsmith.

Starring in this year's double-cast production, as they are listed in the program, are H. Lee Harrison and Michael B. Trost as the dastardly Basto; Mark "Side Kick" Eells and G. Dave Hidinger as his evil aide Gordo Gaspacho; T. Cholmondley Rosborough and F. Hank Mateo as Dogood; R. Ford Tilley I and Charles Taylor as CLaud Clod, the hero's sidekick and a U.S. Calvary corporel; J. Lynn McElligott and Kathy York Hodges as Miss Eyeque; and Patricia Wynn and Donna Rushing as her schoolmarm friend, Beulah Bookworm.

Gordo Gaspacho (David Hidinger) and Chicken Sukiyaki (David Le Master) plot with the snide and despicable Pancho Basto (Michael Trost) in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's Summer Mummers production of "Banditry on the Border" or "They came to Acuna."

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Supporting roles are played by David LeMaster and David Whitaker as Chicken Sukiyaki, a wandering samurai who joins the bad guys; T.L. Martin and Ken Hilfiker as Ralph Rankhappy, a U.S. Calvary colonel; Stephen Myers and Chris Statton as Neal O'Tipsey, a U.S., congressional independent investigator; B.L.N. Fritz and Lori Skelton as Maria Juana from Tijuana, an innkeeper; Gilley "Shortbread" Estes and Pat "Chocolate Chip" Rattan as Sissy Spacedout; Mona Gail Gibson and Jane "Wawa" Phares as Loraine Neighborly, a TV newsperson; and Col. E. Robert Haskell, Buddy James Fazzio and R. David Hunt, Jr., as Rather Danly, a TV cameraman.

Producer for this year's melodrama is Doug Heck, director is Ron Hughes, stage manager is Karlis Gruzins, assistant stage manager is Beth Rodgers-Carr, technical director is Bill Larkin and the set designers are Ron Aday, Claire Heck and Art Cole.

In addition, the evening's entertainment includes an olio — a series of short sketches presented in music-hall style — immediately following the melodrama.

Those performing in the olio, as listed in the program, include Tori Baca, Billy Cook, Nancy Cook, Carole Cristiana, Barbra Jones, Cherry Jones, Tracy Jones, Jeanne King, Charlotte Larson, Jerry Lopez, Carol Millsap, Sheldon Millsap, Sharon Pearce, Pat Reed, Diane Faulkner, Laura Klauss, Rosborough and Tilley. Gloria Eng, Renee Spicer and Beth Brimer carry the olio cards, which were executed by Betty Edgar.

Produced by Arlen Edgar assisted by Diane McElligott with choreography by Ms. Jones and Cook, olio acts change depending upon who shows up for the night.

Not to be overlooked are the players in the Mummers Pit Band, who catch most of the popcorn thrown during the evening's performance.

For the uninitiated, popcorn is sold at all Mummers performances and audience members throw it at cast members when they do a bad job, a good job, a mediocre job, an excellent job, an awful job. In short, throughout the evening, the melodrama may be viewed threw a barrage of popcorn.

Audience members also throw popcorn at others at their table and those they know at other tables as well as some people they don't know at all. Thus, those who don't want to leave wearing popcorn, sit in the balcony where popcorn throwing is outlawed.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Baskets displayed at museum

"Traditions in Transition: Contemporary Basketweaving of the Southwest Indians," an exhibition of contemporary basketweaving by 27 Indian basketweavers is on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The exhibition illustrates an art form practiced in the Southwest for more than 7500 years and kept alive by the talents of modern day Indian artisans in New Mexico and Arizona.

Traditional tribal styles and minute detail and workmanship in the weaving can be seen in the 31 baskets in the exhibit. Photographs of each weaver with a personal statement about the work, the tools, and materials utilized are also shown.

Basketweaving is traditionally a woman's craft in the Southwestern Indian cultures except for the Pueblo groups where men also create baskets. The skills have been handed down through families or reintroduced by tribal arts and crafts programs.

Some of the most active contemporary weavers are young women, but the majority are women between age 60 and 80. Traditional styles distinguish the baskets of each group, although some designs are borrowed from other cultures or are experiments with new ideas.

The exhibition is on loan from the Programs and Educational Services unit of the Museum of New Mexico, a division of the Office of Cultural Affairs in Santa Fe. It is partially funded by the National Endowment for the Arts Folk Arts Program and the Museum of New Mexico Foundation. The exhibition will be in Midland through Sept. 28.

The Museum is open to the public Tuesdays through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

Soprano will give concert

Soprano Janice Archer presents "Baubles and Bangles" at the Museum of the southwest's Summer Sundays Lawn Concert today.

Show tunes, light opera and songs for children from Puccini, Gershwin, Bernstein and Rodgers and Hammerstein will be presented by Ms. Archer.

Performing with her in duets will be baritone Dr. Bill Lucas. Patricia Harris will be the accompanist.

Currently a voice instructor at Odessa College and soloist and member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, Ms. Archer has performed locally in Midland College opera performances and as soloist with church choirs.

A graduate of Hastings College, Nebraska, in vocal music education and of the University of Missouri at Columbia with a masters of arts in musical studies, Ms. Archer has also studied music and languages in France, Austria and Germany. She has done solo performances with symphony orchestras and in Midland Opera Theater's Opera in the Park.

Lucas, choirmaster at St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, has performed in several European opera houses as well as in the United States.

Ms. Harris is piano instructor at OC and organist and director of music at Odessa's Highland Methodist Church. She has been state piano performance chairman for Texas Music Teachers Association.

The free 7:45 p.m. concert will be held on the front lawn of the museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. Those attending are asked to bring lawn chairs or blankets on which to sit. In case of bad weather, the concert will be held inside the museum.

Mini-triathalon scheduled

DEL RIO — The Second Annual Bud Light Mini Triathlon to benefit Special Olympics will be held Sunday, Sept. 18 from 8 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. beginning at Diablo East Marina on Lake Amistad.

The Mini Triathlon will consist of a 700-yard swim, 15-mile bike race and 3-mile run. The biking and running will take place on highway 90 returning back to Diablo East Marina for the finish.

The event was a success with individual competition last year, thus it now features relay teams as well in an attempt to increase the entries to over 200.

Prizes will be awarded to the top three finalists in both men's and women's individual and relay divisions.

To enter, call or write to Joe Elder, 111 Lowe Drive, Del Rio, 78840 1-512-774-6511.

Palates getting taste of buffalo

JUDA, Wis. (AP) — America's palate apparently is honed to where the buffalo roam, says Duane Helland, who specializes in bison cuisine.

Helland, who owns and operates Helland's Food and Locker Service with his wife, Sue, decided to expand his menu to include the great American bison in reaction to "a changing society," he said.

"People want to eat meat that's low in calories, fat and cholesterol and high in protein," said Helland, who has filled orders for almost 5,000 pounds of buffalo meat.

MCT's set designer gets rave reviews for paint workshop

Temple

"Look at that guy over there," David Layman tells those participating in Midland Community Theatre's painting workshop.

As all heads turn around Dave pours paint on the floor in the construction area of Theatre Midland.

The first person who turns back around says, "I can't believe he did that."

Laughter follows the statement, then another participant says, "This is nice. It feels better than I thought it would."

What a marvelous compliment for a teacher to receive.

Twice this past week Dave Layman, set designer for MCT, conducted a painting workshop. I attended portions of both and came away with the same desire — I wanted to stay.

The workshop provided those who attended with the opportunity to listen to him explain the tools and techniques (including spreading paint on the floor for texture), to watch him demonstrate what he discussed, then to try the same technique themselves. He also had taken the time to prepare some easy-to-read handouts.

When I talked with Dave the next day, he was pleased with the response.

"We've done this twice before, and the turnout had always been very sparse," he said. "Coming into it, I had expected that kind of turnout and was completely washed away by the number of people."

In all, 22 people availed themselves of the opportunity to learn theater painting techniques. Cost? Their time. The workshop was free.

As I listened to him speak and watched him work with the participants, I was reminded of how refreshing it is to learn from a talented individual who enjoys what he is doing and is enthusiastic about passing the information along to others.

MCT is offering the public the chance to learn about costuming and sound this month as well. Mae Dawson will be teaching the costuming workshop and Jon Clark will be covering sound and special effects. For more information on the free workshops call the theater, 682-2544.

I wonder if Dave told those participating in the workshop that he has designed the set for a production opening Thursday off Broadway?

He left today, the first day of his vacation, to oversee putting the show together in New York City. The play, "Ain't Nobody Loves You Like A Mama But Your Mama," a take off of an old jazz tune, will be on stage at the Samuel Beckett Theatre on 42nd Street.

The run will last three weeks. If the reviews are good and the three-week run successful, then it's anybody's guess how long it will play.

The opportunity presented itself when he received a phone call from the director, an old friend, who said he wanted Dave to design the set.

"Of course, I was not about to turn it down and was very excited to help him out."

That director is Raymond Carver, who was head of the theater department at Angelo State University when Dave was doing his undergraduate work there.

Also leaving Midland this week is Michael Spicer, associate director at MCT. The difference between the two is that Dave will be back and Michael won't.

Michael is moving to Milwaukee, Wis., where he will be the artistic director of the Sunset Playhouse. Actually located at Elm Grove, the community theater has one stage on which seven productions a year are staged. Michael will be replacing a man who has been there for 28 years who is retiring.

This year, the Sunset Playhouse plans to stage "Born Yesterday," "Run for Your Wife," "Crimes of the Heart," "The Nerd," "Table Manners" and "10 Little Indians." There, the yearly musical is staged in the summer and the current production is "My Fair Lady."

Congratulations to both.

A reminder to those looking for something to do today. The Museum of the Southwest is hosting outdoor concerts at 7:45 p.m. Sundays. Today's program features Janice Archer and Dr. Bill Lucas.

Last Sunday, the Sun Country Gentlemen Chorus, led by Tom Laney, sang barbershop and The Men's Chorus of Midland, whose leader is Scott Fleming, performed more contemporary music — "doo-wop" and other styles from the '50s and '60s including "The Lion Sleeps Tonight," "All the Gold In California" and "Duke of Earl."

Actually, the Men's Chorus is a new organization. The members have been working behind closed doors getting their voices together for Sunday's first official performance as a unit. As of then, they had not chosen a name.

The weather was great, and those who attended really enjoyed themselves. At least that's the way it appeared to me. I know I did.

One last item, mezzo-soprano Debra Patchell is presenting an 8 p.m. concert Monday at First Presbyterian Church. Debra, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Patchell of Midland, is currently living in Boston and working toward her masters of music at the New England Conservatory.

When Debra stopped by the office this week to leave a picture of herself and some copy on her upcoming performance, she said, "I feel like I'm at a crossroads now. I'm really getting my career going, and I'm singing better than I ever have in my life. It's an exciting place to be. And the most fun for me is just doing it."

Just as with Dave Layman, her enthusiasm could be felt across the space between us. It was contagious.

Mexican artists' graphics at Museum of Southwest

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is hosting an exhibition of graphics by Mexican artists from the 1900s to the 1960s. "Grafica Popular de Mexico" is from a private collection on loan to the museum.

The collector, who knew many of the artists as she was growing up in Mexico City, was given prints by the artists. Later she began to collect on her own. A wide variety of artists and styles is represented.

The collection includes work by Jose Guadalupe Posada, considered the founder of Mexican graphic art; Angel Bracho, painter and graphic artist; Leopoldo Mendez, leader of a major graphic arts workshop and one of the most politically active artists; Alfredo Zalce, muralist and experimenter in techniques; and Sarah Jimenez, a noted contemporary artist.

Subject matter ranges from portraits to scenes of everyday life of the peasants — tortilla makers, laborers in the fields, fishermen with boats and nets, and scenes of the struggle of "the people" for bread and knowledge, for land and freedom.

Jean Hagman, director of the museum, says the exhibition, which includes all types of graphics — etchings, wood cuts, lithographs, serigraphs and engravings — "is an excellent example of art work from our neighboring country, work not often seen in the United States." Viewing the collection also allows the opportunity to see several proofs from the same edition and to note the differences.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

'Die Hard' fast-paced thriller

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Step aside Schwarzenegger, move over Rambo, the new self-mocking one-man destructive force is Bruce Willis in "Die Hard," the action thriller with supercharged batteries.

Willis is John McClane, a tough New York cop who drops by his estranged wife's (Bonnie Bedelia) Christmas office party in a towering L.A. skyscraper. He arrives right after the party is invaded by "Eurotrash" safe robbers posing as terrorists. The celebrants, including his wife, are held hostage on an upper floor. It is up to McClane to start picking off the baddies, led by Hans (Alan Rickman), a bold, vicious villain. McClane slips out of the party undetected and begins attacking the ruthless gang by becoming the "fly in their ointment, the monkey in their wrench."

The "fun" begins when McClane kills the brother of Han's volatile sidekick (Alexander Godunov). Excitement continues when McClane confronts blasted glass, explosions, flames and dangerous metal shafts. The film blends bursts of action with comic dialogue, and is reminiscent of the slicky done "Predator," which should come as no surprise since "Die Hard" has the same director and producers.

All the elements of an action thriller are here. There is the ticking clock — the villains are racing against time to unlock a safe combination. There is a love story and a male bonding segment, plus plenty of punches and machine gun fire. The makers of "Die Hard" were also clever enough to create tension through a feeling of isolation — there are only a few floors in which all the action takes place. And best of all, Willis' character is not your standard one-dimensional tough guy. He has some human qualities (He is afraid of flying and detests computers).

Willis does a fine job portraying a rugged New York cop who persists despite all of the villains sophisticated planning and high tech artillery. He also does well with some humorous dialogue. A great part of the film's appeal is in watching the streetwise cop match wits with the aloof master criminal. And McClane's banter via walkie talkie with L.A. cop Al (Reginald Veljohnson) adds some emotional depth to the film.

"Die Hard" may not always make sense, but everything happens at such breakneck speed that there is no time to think (which is usually dangerous to films of this genre). However, "Die Hard" is escapist, fast-paced entertainment and a must-see for action film fans.

"Die Hard," rated R for lots of violence, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

Cruise saves film with flat plot

Tom Cruise mixes drinks and stirs up the women as hot-shot bartender Brian Flanagan in "Cocktail." Blue-collar Army alumnus Flanagan, a fast talker with all the right moves, bombs out on finding a job on Wall Street because of his lack of education. "I'm willing to start at the bottom," he tells a would-be employer, who replies, "You're aiming too high."

Flanagan ends up taking a job as a bartender where he can "outwork, out think, out scheme and out maneuver" the competition while attempting to get a degree in business in his off hours. His success at a city college is hampered by his sarcastic attitude to his teachers (even if they are deserving of his stinging wit) and the only thing Flanagan gains from his scholastic experience is an ability to write a witty obituary.

Flanagan's cynical and salty mentor, veteran bartender Doug Coughlin (Bryan Brown) tends to drink too much (a deadly occupation for a bartender). He gets falling-down-drunk with his protege, his idea of "training" Flanagan to be a bartender — "an aristocrat of the working class."

Coughlin also encourages the young man to take the easy road to financial success by snagging a rich woman (which Coughlin does himself). However, Flanagan already has a girlfriend, Jordan Mooney (Elisabeth "Adventures in Babysitting" Shue), and he attempts to interest his buddy in starting a business with him. "We can't let a little thing like cash stand in our way," Flanagan says.

Of course, Coughlin's shallow moral standards, which Flanagan indulges in himself, serves to be their downfall. And when Flanagan wrongs his girlfriend, she says "Your sexy little smile isn't going to work this time." But the audience knows she's wrong; Cruise's sexy little smile and devil-may-care grin keep the movie from going flat when the plot fizzles. Despite all of Flanagan's problems, things come too easy for him in this watered down plot, and the ending is obvious before it arrives.

There's no denying that Cruise has genuine movie-star charisma, but he is too cocky to win audience sympathy in the sentimental scenes. Shue fares worse as his love interest in a basically bland role.

The most interesting scenes are of Cruise and Brown performing tricks with tumblers and liquor bottles. But the scenes are too short and pale in comparison to Cruise's lip sync number in "Risky Business." Other scenes of Flanagan spouting poetry are wasted because the poetry is so uninspired. The editing is shaky in spots and the manipulative score, which is used to emphasize emotions that should be in the script, always gets too loud every time there is a big moment for Cruise.

However, Cruise fans won't be disappointed; as one female moviegoer said about the movie, "It's slightly sleazy, flashy, just trashy enough to be entertaining, and Tom Cruise is so-o-o-o sexy."

"Cocktail," rated R for profanity, nudity and sex scenes, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Monkey Shines' has some fun, humor

"Monkey Shines: An Experiment in Fear," opens with the psychological horror faced by a star athlete who becomes a quadriplegic. The athlete, a law student named Allan (adroitly acted by Jason Beghe) is hit by a truck and loses full use of his body from the neck down.

Allan uses his mouth to operate his wheelchair with the aid of a wand. But it is soon evident that he could use some help.

His friend Geoff (John Pankow), a lab scientist who is too free with his needles (injecting himself with drugs as well as his research monkeys), gets a monkey named Ella (Boo) trained to aid the handicap.

All would be well except that Geoff has been using Ella as a guinea pig, injecting her with a serum made from frozen human brain tissue. The monkey's enhanced brain results in some sort of telepathic communication between Ella and Allan. Soon Ella — who makes sandwiches, plays tapes and "does" windows — takes on macabre chores for her master. She begins dispensing with all the people in Allan's life who have wronged him: the girlfriend (Janine Turner) who dumps him after his accident and takes up with his doctor; the doctor (Stanley Tucci), who may have misdiagnosed him; the nurse (Christine Forrest, the real-life wife of director George Romero), who acts like a demented shrew and nearly lets her parakeet poke his eyes out.

Ella's trainer (the attractive Kate McNeil), tries to help Allan to control Ella, and ends up falling in love with him. An explicit sex scene ensues which earns "Monkey Shines" its "R" rating more than any violence. In fact, the amount of gore and violence is minimal (for a Romero film).

Director Romero manages to temper this film with some humor. There are some fun moments when Allan takes Ella to his class, some poignant moments, and — in true Romero style — one scene which made the person next to me jump right out of his seat.

There is some black humor. When Geoff is trying to cheer Allan up about his physical condition he says, "Don't knock it, you get all the good parking places." And in a particularly biting moment, Allan, whose life has become dependent on machinery and computers, says, "Well, I always wanted to be Robby the Robot. I guess I got my wish."

Boo — who should get a special award for Best Acting By a Monkey — is an endearing scene stealer. The value of monkeys who aid the handicapped shouldn't be diminished by this film. There is a disclaimer concerning Helping Hands, the Boston-based organization doing renowned work in training monkeys to aid the handicapped.

Viewers should know that this isn't real life; this is Romeroland. And Romeroland means chills, thrills and humor, and a sex scene you don't want to have to explain to the kids.

"Monkey Shines: An Experiment in Fear," rated R for one heavy sex scene, and violence to man and monkey, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Fisher takes word processor on set

By BOB THOMAS

Already a film legend as Princess Leia in the "Star Wars" epics, Carrie Fisher amazed the literary world last year by producing a book that won not only critical praise, but a place on the bestseller list. "Postcards from the Edge" is a novel about a film actress who enters a rehabilitation clinic to break her addiction to drugs and alcohol.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Already a film legend as Princess Leia in the "Star Wars" epics, Carrie Fisher amazed the literary world last year by producing a book that not only won critical praise, but placement on best-seller lists.

"Postcards From the Edge," now released in paperback, is a novel about a film actress, Suzanne Vale, who enters a rehabilitation clinic to break her addiction to drugs and alcohol. Since Carrie Fisher is a film actress who almost overdosed in 1985 and underwent 30 days of treatment at a Century City detoxification center, interviewers ask whether the book is based on her life.

"A lot of books are partly autobiographical in nature," she replies. "If you don't write from what you know, then you're writing science fiction. Which maybe I'll try, but then they'll say I'm writing about 'Star Wars.'

"The book is partly autobiographical. I did draw from certain situations in my life, but the book isn't (autobiographical).

"I think it makes people more comfortable to think that it all happened, that I kept copious notes. I've certainly done enough movies, so there's my movie sequence. I was in a clinic. But I couldn't have kept notes in that situation; it was too traumatic to keep notes. You're barely there anyway. Most of the other characters are really fiction. It's probably half and half."

Her next book?

"It's going to be about a girl who is interviewed about a book that everybody says is autobiographical." Just kidding, as is her custom.

The new book is tentatively called "Surrender the Pink."

She says the new book is totally fiction and concerns "obsessive relationships, or weird love." She must deliver it next March.

With her newfound discipline, Fisher is likely to make the deadline. She is now working in "The 'Burbs" with Tom Hanks and Bruce Dern, and she takes her word processor to work with her. She is also scheduled to adapt "Postcards From the Edge" for a film by Mike Nichols. But the project has been shelved by the writers' strike.

The 31-year-old Fisher wisecracked her way through an interview at the hilltop home paid for with her "Star Wars" earnings.

She remarked that she came from "a long line of short people who are survivors."

Her parents are Debbie Reynolds and Eddie Fisher, stars of a major scandal of the 1950s. Carrie was too young to remember the headlined events when Fisher abandoned Reynolds for the love of Elizabeth Taylor, who ultimately left him for Richard Burton.

At 17, Carrie Fisher made her film debut in "Shampoo," graphically propositioning Warren Beatty. She dropped out of high school to appear in her mother's nightclub act. At 19, George Lucas chose her to play Princess Leia in "Star Wars." How did she land the role?

"I always like to say that I was in Schwab's drugstore wearing that hairstyle when Lucas walked in and said, 'What other jerk would look appropriate in space?'

"I just tested for it," she said. "I read well with Harrison (Ford). The dialogue was bizarre but I have a weird Pac-Man way of talking that kind of charged through it. They were either going to go for pretty or whatever it is that I have. Which is sort of gritty."

"Star Wars" proved to be the biggest moneymaker up to its time (1977) and Fisher appeared in the two sequels. What did the films do for her?

"Well, they made me financially OK — until I got business managers. They made me a household word, like Ajax. Only I wasn't a household word. Princess Leia was famous and I was sort of adjunct to her. It's an associated fame, sort of. Once again."

Fisher grew up famous, because of her parents. But she found nothing unusual about her upbringing, nor does she think it contributed to her drug problem.

"What happens (in Hollywood) is that you don't see your parents as much, but it's the same as having working parents," she observed. "So I had working parents, and there were divorces. But that happens everywhere.

(Drug problems) can happen anywhere, too. My brother, Todd, had a similar background to me, and he was never a drinker or a drugger. It gets a lot of publicity in Hollywood, and maybe it is more part of this environment. But it's everywhere, though mostly in cities. Who wants to take cocaine and sit around and watch the crops fail?"

Heat forcing more tourists to take to underground

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Maybe the bats have the right idea. A cool, dark cave may be the best place to beat the heat.

Commercial cave operators in southern Indiana and western Kentucky say they've noticed a jump in tourism this week and speculate it may be the heat that's running people underground.

"When the heat wave's been on, our attendance has been up a considerable bit," said Todd Brooks, assistant operations manager of Marengo Cave Park and Campground in Crawford County, Ind.

Brooks said his caves, about 40 miles west of Louisville, Ky., have a constant temperature of 52 degrees.

On Wednesday, when the mercury hovered in the upper-90s but the humidity made it feel well over 100 degrees, 298 people toured Marengo Caves, Brooks said.

Fantasy, science fiction artist to demonstrate work

SANTA ANA, CALIF. — Real Musgrave, noted fantasy and science fiction artist, will give demonstrations of his work and share tales of his world of his friendly wizards and dragons aboard Carnival Cruise Lines "Jubilee" on an eight day Caribbean Cruise which will sail from Miami, Fla., Feb. 26.

The cruise ends March 5. Deadline for reservations is Sept. 15.

Cruise guests booked by Cruise Designers will have the chance to listen to and watch Musgrave as he spins stories of his life as the illustrator of his imaginative creatures, while demonstrating his drawing skills.

When asked about the source of his ideas and if the creatures were his own, he replied "I get my ideas from everywhere, awake and asleep — and yes, the creatures are mine."

As he works, his audience will come to know a civilized dragon who uses his fire breathing apparatus to warm a pot of tea and an old, pipe smoking wizard who can't stand incantations and only enjoys a well cooked meal, a good book and a soft bed.

Included in the gala shipboard activities and cruise events will be shore excursions to Nassau, San Juan and St. Thomas.

Musgrave is married and lives in Dallas. He has won many prestigious art awards and has exhibited work in galleries, universities and shows throughout the United States. He is a sought-after lecturer and is past Chairman of the Board of the National Hall of Fame of Science Fiction and Fantasy.

Fort Concho lives a century later in San Angelo

By RICHARD MC CUNE
Texas Tourist Development Agency

If you've ever looked at the pictures and read stories about surviving old Texas forts, you know that they're all perched on a hill overlooking miles of nothing but miles and miles.

Not necessarily.

While most were located on the leading edge of the Texas frontier as it moved westward, communities were drawn to the protection of the forts from occasional Indian raids and other interlopers.

Such is the case of one of the largest and most prestigious forts of the U.S. Army during the late 19th century, Fort Concho in the city of San Angelo, at the juncture of the Conchos (Greek for "shell") Rivers, surrounded by this burgeoning city in West Texas.

In fact, you need only turn off U.S. 87 if driving through San Angelo to find this registered National Historic Landmark which still is so many things to the city which owns and operates the sprawling facility four blocks from the highway. Signs along the way mark its location.

Now known as Fort Concho Preservation and Museum, the fort was established in 1867 as a frontier post to put down Indian forays and to scout the uncharted territory across an unbelievably broad expanse of Texas, from the Panhandle and Staked Plains to Mexico and beyond.

Today, Fort Concho serves many other purposes, most of them educational programs, city administrative offices and organization facilities.

In a city and country proud of its heritage, one program of broad consequence is the educating of fourth graders from every school in Tom Green County on the lives and schooling of children more than 100 years ago.

Teachers put on their schoolmarm attire, and their charges dress up in suspenders and white aprons. Inside the restored one-room schoolhouse/chapel they're seated on benches along wooden tables, learning their lessons as did children five or six generations ago, including the old standard McGuffey's Reader. Built in 1879, it was the last building erected on the grounds.

Thus, a deeply imprinted recollection of this journey back in time is personally experienced in a manner unmatched by film, video or publication - things taken for granted nowadays - and surely seen as an astonishing contrast which they might never have imagined.

If the mystique of the late 1800s beguiles the schoolchild, there is yet another aura on the 24 acres (once varied from 1,300 to 1,500 acres) on the forts grounds. It is said that just after sundown, if you listen carefully, the plaintive notes of a harmonica and soldiers singing softly can be heard, according to Fort Concho education director Robert Bluthardt, who is so steeped in the history of the fort that you almost can believe he does hear it.

During the century past since frontier days, Fort Concho has seen prosperity and decline, at one time its structures turned over to civilian use for homes, apartments and commercial use. It also has seen various other restorations, notably for quarters of the former West Texas Museum, now Fort Concho Museum since 1930.

San Angelo makes no apology for its existence, originally as a red light district located on Concho Street where an arcade of late 19th century buildings is now located.

At the height of the fort's missions across the new frontier, there were 39 stone and wooden structures on the leased grounds of the military reservation. Today, there are 18 original buildings, such as the headquarters, commissary store, enlisted barracks, officers' quarters and the school/chapel. Four others have been reconstructed, explained Concho librarian Wayne Daniel.

Scheduled for removal is the 1910 Fort Concho Elementary School in the midst of the parade grounds, 500 by 1,000 feet, thus returning the area back to its former proportion when troopers and infantry paraded.

Stopping to tour the grounds is an experience back in time, with many things to see. Maps provided at the headquarters buildings show the way for a self-guided tour. A visit to the library can provide additional historic information.

Two enlisted barracks, one used as a mess hall for the fort's infantry company, include period exhibits of military history, early settlement of Tom Green County and natural history.

On a pleasant day, volunteers and staff who form a 25-member drill unit can be seen in uniform on the parade area, as well as in the barracks museum.

Apparantly, not all military life was policing the rugged west and fighting when necessary.

Back at the garrison, Bluthardt tells of a prank involving several tame bison which were antagonized into charging a soldier waving a white cloth. Soon, they were charging any moving white object, especially the post doctors leaving the hospital in their white clothing, the, er, butt of the joke.

San Angelo has more to see and do, including geographic and historic sites. For more information, contact San Angelo Visitors & Conventions Bureau, 500 Rio Concho Drive, 76903, tel. 915/653-1206.

Fort Concho, in San Angelo, was one of the largest and most prestigious forts of the U.S. Army during the 19th century. Established in 1867, it is now a registered National Historic Landmark.

Travel notes

O.C. Garza, Media Chief,
Tourism Division, Texas Dept. of Commerce

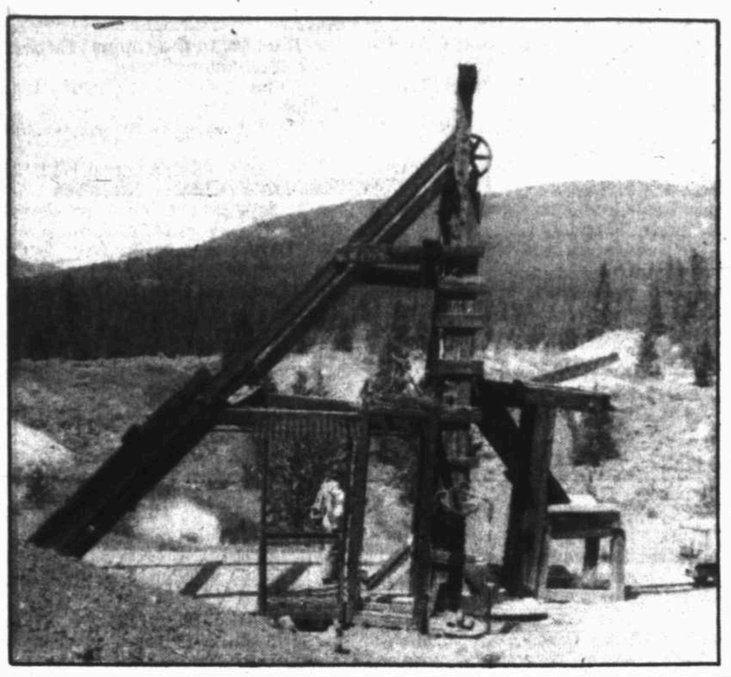
Forts in Texas have been common since the 17th century when the Spanish first built them as protection against Indian attacks. Later, forts were used by the French, the Mexicans, the Republic of Texas, the Confederacy, the United States and several private citizens on the frontier who wanted to protect their property from raiding Indians.

Fort Davis - The need to secure westward travel routes with reliable water sources led the U.S. Army in 1854 to build Fort Davis at Limpia Creek. From the time they approached the site until the 1880s, these troops fought off raids by the Apache and Comanche Indians. Abandoned by the U.S. in 1861, the post was occupied briefly by Confederates. When federal forces returned permanently in 1867, the post was rebuilt with stone and adobe buildings arranged around a 500-foot parade ground. Many post-war troopers were black "Buffalo Soldiers." Some 50 historic structures, restored buildings and ruins are maintained as a National Historic Site with living history programs, a museum and sound show. Located one mile north of the town of Fort Davis on Hwy. 17. Open daily, 915/426-3224.

Leadville's about as high as a city can be



CNS Photo

Rusting equipment and memories are all that remain of the glory of the Matchless Mine, which once yielded $1.5 million in silver ore in one year, near Leadville, Colo.

By BETTY PEACH
Copley News Service

LEADVILLE, Colo. — This frontier mountain town is about as high as a city ought to go. For a coastal dweller, it is about as high as one can go and still breathe without an oxygen tank at the ready.

"Cloud City" is an apt nickname.

Leadville, at 10,132 feet above sea level, is the highest incorporated community in the country. It has the highest airport at 9,927 feet above sea level, the highest golf course, football field and the highest high school. It has a population of 4,000 — give or take a few hardy souls.

Just to set the record straight, Colorado actually has six settlements farther up its Rocky Mountains, but all are smaller and unincorporated. Tincup, for example, is 28 feet higher than Leadville, and the famed mining town of Climax rests at a lofty 11,320 feet.

Leadville is a high point in a Colorado tour, in more ways than one. Although the airport handles only light aircraft, its lone runway is nearly twice as long as those at small airports near sea level.

Historic Leadville is in Lake County in central Colorado, surrounded by ponds, lakes, streams and mountains. The highest peak is nearby Mount Elbert, 14,433 feet above sea level, but not impressively tall from Leadville's point of view.

Many of Leadville's residents do not seem particularly interested in the town's mining background. Those with a historical perspective have collected century-old memorabilia into a small museum on the town's principal street.

Here are miners' tools, faded photographs of grizzled miners, beribboned dance-hall girls, dignified silk-hatted entrepreneurs, and the rough-and-tumble motley mixture of men and women who were attracted to the high country on the promise of wealth.

Leadville, at 10,132 feet above sea level, is the highest incorporated community in the country. It has the highest airport at 9,927 feet above sea level, the highest golf course, football field and the highest high school.

Leadville began in 1860 with the discovery of a rich vein of gold. By the time it ran out in 1864, a few had become very rich, but most left poorer than when they arrived. Finding a monumental vein of silver brought an unprecedented boom. Leadville became the second largest town in Colorado, surpassed only by Denver.

The town's biggest winner was a shrewd man named H.A.W. Tabor, who by 1883 was mining as much as $40,000 daily, and after a year had extracted $1.5 million in silver ore.

A proper, law-abiding, churchgoing citizen, Tabor served as state senator. He also lusted after gold, silver, comforts of the rich and a dance-hall girl who more than made up in beauty what she lacked in education.

He left his pious wife for Elizabeth Doe. Tabor called her "Baby." At the height of his wealth, Tabor kept Baby Doe in the most flamboyant manner of the time — silks and satins, jewels and bows, grand houses and expensive parties. They named their daughter Silver Dollar.

And like a true Wild West story, after 15 years of lavish spending, Tabor's empire and the price of silver collapsed together in 1893. Among his extravagances were two elegant opera houses, one still in use in Leadville, the other in Denver, and a fine hotel in Leadville.

In 1899 Tabor died broke, leaving Baby Doe with nothing but a shack beside the once-prosperous Matchless Mine.

Today, the shack is one of the attractions of Leadville's dead past. The pitiful cabin, sparsely furnished, is a few miles from town, in a scruffy woodland at the top of the mine shaft. Here Baby Doe lived in poverty, and was found frozen in the cabin 35 years after her husband's death. Hers was a legend that lived on in an opera, "Ballad of Baby Doe."

What supports Leadville today is hard to say. Its main street is lined with red sandstone buildings erected in the 1880s and '90s.

The three-story Tabor Opera House, its facade painted bright red, houses shops on its first floor. The four-story, red stone Tabor Grand Hotel, its diagonal entrance on a street corner, has the Tabor restaurant on the first floor.

The day we drove up the winding climb from Vail some 40 miles to the north, Leadville was bursting. A great summer festival was in progress. Horse-drawn hay wagons carried laughing teen-agers in 1890s apparel; cowboys rode their steeds; a 1910 fire truck rolled along and on the sidewalks, ice cream vendors and balloon sellers worked at a hectic pace to accommodate the crowd.

A police officer stopped cars in all directions at the town's lone traffic signal as nearly 100 runners panted past, making their way along a 26-mile course. Those of us from sea level were gulping just to obtain enough air to sit still.

Breathtaking!

Western part of nation paradise not yet lost

By JOE HOLLY
Copley News Service

Space, openness. That's what the West is about. It's so large it makes you feel very small — and yet you can be so close to it.

The West is home to me. I know the land, and I love it. I know the people, because I am one of them.

My West, however, is not of the cities. It's the huge open areas between. It's the place I go to flee the city.

It's a serpentine highway snaking toward the dawn, and I'm the only one on it. It is definitely not the fast lane on the freeway where ultimate driving machines hurl through a brown mist at 15 mph during what's called "rush hour."

Laugh tracks and commercials, gang wars and hard-nosed cops, easy terms and interest rates drive me crazy.

But the West is my psychiatrist. It's a couch 1,500 miles long and 2,000 miles wide, covered, not in Naugahyde, but in an amazing variety of forests, deserts, canyons and lakes.

The West is awesome in the real sense of the word. No one can approach the rim of Arizona's Grand Canyon for the first time and not be moved, nor can anyone help but be impressed on viewing the destructive power of a volcano like Mount St. Helens in Washington, Mount Lassen in California or Kilauea Crater in Hawaii.

Even a dedicated cynic must sense a feeling of hope in the smell of a spring rain or in the sight of a newborn animal's first struggling steps. Only with a sense of wonder can you stand next to a river surrounded by the yellows and golds of autumn watching hundreds of redfish struggle upstream to their spawning grounds — and to their destiny.

The West's variety is so great that a lifetime of exploration couldn't cover it all. The rain forests of the Pacific Northwest are as different from the below-sea-level deserts of the Southwest, as the sandy beaches of Southern California are from the craggy cliffs of Oregon or the Rocky Mountains from the Great Plains.

The fantastic shapes and natural carvings of Bryce Canyon, Zion, Monument Valley and a thousand other marvels in the Southwest's Grand Circle are so remarkable as to be totally unimagined prior to their discovery and disbelieved after — until photographs begin to appear.

And who could have predicted Yellowstone or Yosemite?

The West is a paradise not yet lost. My goal is to cover the West, to marvel at it and to record its wonders on film. I want to drive every mile of highway and dirt road. I want to visit every town and city, park and meadow, lake and river, brook and cranny, and I look forward to meeting the fascinating people who live there.

An integral part of the West is an unwritten code that people help people in trouble. Westerners are strongly independent but quite aware of what the elements can do to a person trapped in them. They help others when they can. Then they leave them alone.

Rich Allen was sitting on a small bridge over a creek in Northern California one afternoon talking about his reasons for being there. He had been a carpenter in Glastonbury, Conn. He had a girlfriend, a savings account and was in hot pursuit of the American dream.

Then the West called.

He quit his job, grabbed his money, mounted his bicycle and answered that call. He had started two months earlier in Edmonton, Alberta, following the Continental Divide to Colorado, and was on his way back to the Northwest to start his final leg down the coast.

He read about the West in Connecticut, and it seemed so spacious he just had to experience it. He was surprised at the friendliness of the people.

"The people I know at home are nice and friendly and all," he said. "But out here, they are different."

Along the way, when fatigue had him, and he questioned his decision to come here, it seemed that someone would always come along and help.

"People have been taking me in left and right," he said. "They have been great."

Pam and Derek Wakefield are a plain, middle-aged couple from England. Derek was a mid-level bureaucrat with weekends off, a comfortable future and the assurance of a pension. But that wasn't enough.

They left — job, house and possessions — and were on their way to Tasmania. They were not going back, and as a last wish before departing the Northern Hemisphere, they wanted to see the American West.

Crosby to stage 'God's Country'

"God's Country," the original outdoor musical prairie drama based on Crosby county history, is celebrating its third year Thursday through Saturday in Blanco Canyon amphitheater, about 10 miles north of Crosbyton on FM 651. Crosbyton is 36 miles east of Lubbock on U.S. 82 and Texas 114.

Performances begin at 8:30 p.m.

Reserved seat tickets may be purchased for $6.42 by mail or telephone. Mail checks to "God's Country," Box 386, Crosbyton, TX. 79322. Call 1-806-675-2331 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays and Saturday mornings.

Ticket holders need to bring stadium seats for maximum viewing pleasure. A special section has been set aside for wheelchair/handicapped. Portable restrooms are on the premises.

A concession stand will be open at 6:30 p.m. at the site with soft drinks, barbecue sandwiches and other items available. Please call 1806-675-2772 for groups of 15 or more.

Several other eating establishments are in Crosby County. A listing of these will be included in mail orders.

The volunteer-based production made its debut in 1986 recognizing the one hundredth birthday of Crosby County as well as the Texas Sesquicentennial.

State railroad to begin run

RUSK — The Texas State Railroad's summer schedule runs Thursday through Monday Aug. 21.

After Aug. 21, the ancient steamers will convert to the Saturday and Sunday schedule for the fall. The lone exception will be the addition of Labor Day, Sept. 5.

The current season will conclude on Sunday, Oct. 30 in order for the trains to be out of the woods before the deer season begins in the area.

Adding a bit of spice to the fall season is the third "Moonlight" run, scheduled from Rusk on Saturday, Sept. 24. That trip, which will include daylight, twilight and darkness, will depart from Rusk at 6 p.m. and return at 10 p.m.

The moonlight trips have proven popular, especially with adults. Efforts are being made to provide musical entertainment for the passengers during the stop at Palestine.

Advance reservations are almost a necessity.

Reservations for all runs may be made by calling the reservation office 1-800-442-8951 (in Texas), or 214-683-2561 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. daily.

Prior to departure in the morning, passengers are given an opportunity to make a tour through the steam locomotive and to take all of the photographs they desire.

Opening lead: Queen of ♠

Declarer has a great advantage over the defenders. He knows when the defenders have enough fast tricks to beat him. That information is not available to the enemy, so they do not always succeed in getting their due.

North's three-diamond response was a transfer to hearts, and his bid of three no trump showed a balanced hand which included a five-card heart suit. South might have been wiser not to have converted to four hearts—three no trump would have been defeated only if the opponents could take five diamond tricks on the go—but, not unnaturally, he was concerned about his wide-open diamond holding.

West led the queen of spades, and declarer was not overjoyed with his prospects. It seemed that he had three sure losers in diamonds and one in clubs. However, the spade lead offered a temporary reprieve. With a good slice of luck, he saw a line that would get him through if the defenders did not find an immediate diamond shift.

Declarer allowed West's queen of spades to win the first trick! From West's point of view, a diamond switch was not attractive, so he continued with a spade despite his partner's discouraging three-spot. That was won in the closed hand, and the king-ace of trumps were drawn. On the remaining high spade declarer discarded a club. After cashing the ace-king of that suit, he continued by ruffing a club on the board. When the clubs split evenly, the long club in declarer's hand was established. He came back to hand with a trump, discarded a diamond on the good club and cheerfully surrendered two diamond tricks—making four-odd!

Writing conference scheduled

From Staff Reports

AMARILLO — Education, information and inspiration will be the key words at the annual "Frontiers in Writing" conference, sponsored by Panhandle Professional Writers and Amarillo College, Friday and Saturday at Amarillo College.

"The difference between a published writer and an unpublished writer is often lack of knowledge rather than lack of talent," says Doris Meredith, president of Panhandle Professional Writers and author of seven published mysteries. "The unpublished writer simply does not know what to do with a manuscript after finishing it. This year's 'Frontiers in Writing' conference informs that unpublished writer what to do next, as well as inspiring the published writer to explore different genres."

The conference opens Friday 5:30 p.m. with a reception and autograph party. A "Meet the Speakers" buffet begins at 7 p.m., followed by keynote speaker Dr. Richard Lederer at 8 p.m.

A nationally acclaimed humorist and linguist, Lederer is an English professor at St. Paul's School in Concord, New Hampshire, and author of the books "Anguished English" and "Get Thee to a Punnery."

Registration for workshops Saturday begins at 8 a.m. on the fourth floor of the Technology Building at Amarillo College. Lederer will speak at 8:40 a.m.

Study groups begin at 9:30 a.m., and will feature Joe Blades, senior editor of Ballantine Books, a division of Random House, who will speak on "The Evolution of a Manuscript;" Judy Alter, director of Texas Christian University Press, on "Please Mom, Not the Alamo Again — juvenile literature;" Robin Rue, an agent from the Anita Diament Agency in New York, on "The Business of Being a Writer;" and William Gentz, former editor of the Christian Writer's Marketplace, on "Writing to Inspire." Study groups with the same speakers will be repeated at 10:30 a.m.

A panel discussion featuring all speakers will follow an awards luncheon in the College Union Building. At 2:45 p.m., study groups will feature Sam Brown, poet and western novelist, who will speak on "Cowboy Poetry: Rhyme on the Range;" Russell Bates, an Emmy award winning scriptwriter, on "Little Big Screen;" Marlys Millhiser, novelist, on "Some Facts About Fiction;" and Tom Clark, managing editor of Writer's Digest, on "Non-Fiction Articles." Study groups will be repeated at 3:45 p.m.

The conference will close at 4:35 p.m. Saturday with a drawing for two tickets courtesy of American Airlines.

Registration at the door for Saturday is $55 for both members and non-members.

For more information on the "Frontiers in Writing" conference, call Panhandle Professional Writers president Doris Meredith at 1-806-352-3889.

Display focuses on Southwest heritage

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — "Family Folklore," a traveling exhibit from the Smithsonian Institution, is on display through Aug. 13 at the Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee in Odessa.

"Family Folklore" is designed to give the appearance of the family album and also incorporates local artifacts and stories that illustrate Odessa's history.

So often folklore is considered the exclusive property of rural and ethnic people, yet folklore truly comes from all social groups and emerges from each family unit. Twenty panels are filled with photographs and text depicting stories, holidays, traditions, and heirlooms to encourage individual involvement.

Museum staff members are working with ECISD summer school teachers resulting in student involvement in two special programs detailing Odessa's family folklore. To enhance the summer ECISD elementary language arts program, over 100 students will tour the exhibition and then document their own family folklore, traditions, and stories with illustrations and text that will be incorporated into the exhibition.

Local students who are eager to tell their family's history, contributed such objects as Christmas ornaments, quilts, Grandpa's watch, or simply a spoon that belonged to Great Grandmother. Oral histories can also be heard as visitors tour this unique exhibit.

The Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service has produced a series of educational materials to enhance the exhibition, and an interviewing guide to teach viewers how to record their own family history is free to the public.

The Museum has planned a series of special free programs in conjunction with "Family Folklore." The last in the series is "Corn — Ears of Plenty," August 9, 1:30 - 3:30 p.m.

With the help of the Texas Department of Agriculture, the program will conclude with a cooking demonstration and unusual snack.
