Venezuela Welcomes President

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — President Carter arrived in Venezuela today on the first stop of a two-continent trip and, speaking fluently in Spanish, he told its people Senate approval of his second Panama Canal treaty would "be a cause for celebration."

Surprising those who expected him to make his arrival remarks in English, the president also declared: "There is no stronger tie than the devotion we share to freedom." He mentioned specifically individual freedom and human rights.

"Every time the rights of any individual in the world are violated,, our own rights are endangered," Carter said.

By speaking in Spanish, the president avoided the embarrassing translation errors that plagued his visit earlier this year to Poland. Carter's statements were broadcast live on Venezuelan radio and television.

Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez said in a welcoming speech that the U.S. Senate, in its Panama Canal deliberations, is "determining the destiny of hemisphere relations." The Senate has approved a treaty Carter signed guaranteeing the canal's neutrality and is deliberating ratification of another pact yielding control of the waterway to Panama.

Perez warned Carter of "the concern we have in Latin America" that Senate action might undermine "the Panama Canal initiative." He said ratification of the two treaties would open "a new era of cooperation between Latin America and the United States."

Carter smiled at the remarks. He began his reply by declaring that ratification of the second treaty would "be a cause for celebration in the United States"as much as it would be a cause for celebration in Latin America.

He said his journey to Latin America and Africa, the first of at least three overseas trips he plans this year, shows the United States is aware of the importance of the developing nations in a changing world.

The president's blue and silver Air Force One jet touched down in a stiff wind at Simon Bolivar International Airport, nestled between the Caribbean Sea and the Avila Mountains.

Moments earlier, a street sweeper had cleaned the tarmac.

No civilians were in sight.

On his first day in Venezuela, the president arranged to place a wreath at the tomb of national hero Simon Bolivar, in the nave of the National Pantheon, a century-old Spanish renaissance-style church dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

Later, he and President Carlos Andres Perez set aside more than two hours for talks about U.S.-Venezuelan relations. Topics included energy and economic cooperation, human rights, curbing the spread of nuclear weapons and restraints on arms trade.

International topics on the Carter-Perez agenda included the impact of oil prices on the world economy and politics in Africa. Venezuela provides much of the U.S. oil supply. Carter will visit Africa before returning to Washington next week.

Carter is popular here because of the human rights crusade he has championed during his campaign and in the White House.

Egypt Snubs Israeli Bid For New Talks

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israeli government has eased its stand on the crucial issue of Palestinian self-determination in the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, and is reported thinking about sending Defense Minister Ezer Weizman to Cairo to try to revive the peace negotiations with Egypt.

But Egyptian officials in Cairo responded to the report of new Israeli flexibility by saying it was not enough.

A proposal broadcast Monday by Israeli state radio moved closer to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's demands by agreeing to "participation" by the 1.1 million Palestinians of the two occupied areas in determining their own future.

Nonetheless, Egyptian Foreign Ministry officials who preferred to remain anonymous said today that the Israeli idea was "unacceptable" because it did not mention the aspirations for a homeland of the almost 2 million Palestinians living outside Israel.

"That takes us nowhere," one official said. "It leaves out the whole Palestinian issue which is the core of the Mideast conflict."

The Israeli proposal is patterned on a U.S. formula that the Palestinians of the occupied areas "have the right to participate in determining their own future." However, it falls short of the full self-determination demanded by Sadat, a formula that Israel fears would result in an independent state controlled by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Instead, the broadcast said, "the Arabs of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza region (would have) the right to participate in the determination of their own future" in negotiations among "Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the Arabs of Eretz Israel."

Judea and Samaria are the ancient Jewish names for the West Bank, while Eretz Israel is the Jewish name for Israel plus the West Bank and Gaza. The earlier Israeli proposal provided for Arab autonomy in the two occupied territories, but under continued Israeli control for at least five years.

Weizman did not deny reports in the Israeli press that he may be going to Egypt to try to reopen negotiations for a withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Sinai Peninsula as part of a peace agreement. Asked "When are you leaving?" he replied, "I don't know."

Meanwhile, Ashraf Ghorbal, Egypt's ambassador to the United States, arrived in Cairo with a letter from President Carter to Sadat and a verbal message from Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, Egypt's Middle East News Agency reported.

Ghorbal would not comment on the contents of the messages, but they were believed to contain American proposals for resuming the peace talks between Israel and Egypt and a report on Prime Minister Menachem Begin's visit to Washington last week.

Begin's new proposal apparently came in response to reports that Carter might make public details of the dispute between them during their talks.

In south Lebanon, French paratroopers of the U.N. peacekeeping force set up two buffer positions between Israeli and Palestinian forces on approaches to the guerrilla-held port of Tyre after more than two hours of negotiations with guerrillas.

Food Prices Give Boost To Inflation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Food prices increased 1.2 percent in February for the second consecutive month, pushing overall consumer prices up 0.6 percent during the month, the government reported today.

Beef prices led the upward march in food costs, rising 4.1 percent during the month, while higher prices also were reported for pork, poultry and cereal and bakery products. Prices of foods sold in grocery stores increased 1.3 percent.

The steep rise in food prices, which started late last year and has been attributed in part to severe winter weather, has caught the Carter administration by surprise.

It is the major factor in what appears to be a worsening inflation rate in the economy, even though the overall 0.6 percent increase in consumer prices in February was down slightly from the 0.8 percent gain in January.

If continued for 12 months, the February increase in consumer prices would result in price inflation of slightly more than 7.2 percent, compared with the administration's inflation target for the year of 6.1 percent.

Administration officials say food prices may rise as much as 8 percent this year, up from the 6 percent increase projected just a few months ago.

In addition to food, consumers also faced sharply higher prices in February for fuel and utilities, up 0.8 percent; medical care, up 1.3 percent, and new and used cars, ahead 0.7 percent and 2.1 percent, respectively.

The only significant decline in prices during the month was for clothing, down 1 percent following a small gain in January. However, apparel services such as laundry and dry cleaning services increased 1 percent.

Transportation costs increased 0.6 percent and entertainment prices advanced 0.7 percent. Costs of housing were up 0.6 percent, down slightly from the January rise of 0.8 percent.

The Labor Department said its consumer price index for all urban consumers in February stood at 188.4 percent of the 1967 average of 100, meaning that goods costing $100 11 years ago had risen in price to $188.40 last month.

The department also said the buying power of workers' paychecks declined in February for the third consecutive month, although the drop of 0.2 percent was not nearly so bad as the record monthly 3.1 percent fall in purchasing power in January.

It said real spendable earnings of workers in February were 1 percent higher than in February 1977, despite the recent monthly declines. But just five months earlier, in October, earnings were 4.7 per-

Ex-Officers Sentenced At Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Three former Houston policemen were sentenced today to one year in prison for violating the civil rights of a young Mexican-American who died while in their custody.

They could have been sentenced to life imprisonment.

In handing down the sentences, U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling, who presided during the federal phase of the trial, said: "This was a situational offense that will not happen again. Any long period of time in prison for these three men would have no impact on the Houston Police Department, where I think the real problem lies."

The officers were given 10-year suspended sentences on a felony count, with five of those years under probation. The year they must serve in a federal penitentiary came on a misdemeanor civil rights violation conviction.

Mrs. Joe Luna Torres, mother of the dead man, said after the sentencing, "We received one slap in the face at the state trial in Huntsville. We received another slap in the face today. We have no more cheeks to turn. I am so disappointed."

There was no indication where the officers would serve their prison term, nor when it would begin. They will remain free on bond until their incarceration.

About 50 persons protested outside the Federal Court Building after the sentencing became known, carrying placards and shouting: "Stop police brutality."

Two of the officers — Terry W. Denson, 27, and Stephen Orlando, 21 — had been tried earlier in state court on murder charges. They were convicted of negligent homicide by a jury which set their sentence at one year probation.

Then the federal government stepped in and Denson, Orlando and Joseph Janish, 22, were tried before a federal court jury and found guilty on two civil rights violations.

They were charged in connection with the death of Joe Campos Torres, 23, a former serviceman and self-proclaimed karate expert whose body was found floating in a bayou near city police headquarters in May 1977.

CAB Splits New Route

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Civil Aeronautics Board today granted Braniff Airways and Texas International Airlines tentative authority to provide nonstop service between Las Vegas, Nev., and Dallas-Fort Worth.

The board made the authority tentative in order to give the carriers concerned a chance to comment on the award of the route to two airlines instead of one.

A CAB law judge had recommended that the new authority go to just one carrier, Braniff. Delta Air Lines already flies nonstop on the route.

The board said it selected two airlines to "enhance the prospects that low fares will remain in the market." Braniff said it would offer a 37½ percent discount on normal coach fares on the route, and Texas International proposed a "casino fare" at about one-half the normal ticket price.

The CAB granted the authority for three years, saying that will give it time to determine if the two airlines are maintaining the low fares.

Possible Missile Bases In Area Under Study

AMARILLO (UPI) — The Air Force is studying sites in six Panhandle and South Plains counties as potential bases to station nuclear missiles designed to foil a surprise Soviet attack, a newspaper reported today.

The Amarillo Globe-News said the Air Force conducted soil sample tests late last year and early this year in Bailey, Lipscomb, Dallam and Deaf Smith counties in the Panhandle and northern South Plains to determine how the land would react to a direct nuclear blast.

Other tests were conducted in the southern section of the South Plains and in far West Texas.

After the soil studies are completed, the Air Force will make real estate studies, environmental impact statements and hold public hearings, said Clairborn Crain, an assistant to Rep. Jack Hightower, D-Texas.

The sites are being studied as potential bases in the early 1980s for the proposed MX intercontinental nuclear missiles. The missile system, if approved by the Carter administration, would cost about $40 billion, making it the most expensive weapons system ever developed.

The MX missile system involves a mobile capability designed to confuse an enemy as to the exact location of the missiles at any given time. The theory behind the system is that enough of the MX missiles would survive a surprise attack by enemy ICBMs to launch a devastating response.

The Air Force conducted the soil tests by drilling holes 15 feet deep and setting off a small detonation to determine the soil density. The four counties gave the government permcssion to conduct the tests.

"They wanted to know what would happen if an enemy missile hit the ground here," said Bailey County Judge Glen Williams. "All they did was drill some holes in the ground and check the density of the soil."

Other Texas counties involved in the testing are Culberson, Cochran, Reeves, Pecos and Gaines.

Car Repairmen Ponder Impact Of Proposed Federal Controls

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Congressional talk of nationwide regulations on the automobile repair industry has garagemen apprehensive about how the industry might be affected, a new car dealership service department manager said Monday in Lubbock.

"There are a lot of people who are out to take people, and that's all," said Jerry Smith, service manager at Fenner Tubbs Co. "There's a lot of that that goes on, and it needs to be stopped for sure."

But he said regulations would be more effective and philosophically more desirable to him in the form of city ordinances than federal law.

"It depends on what length they go to or what steps they take, as to what my reaction would be to it," he said of possible federal action. "If you're not careful, everybody's going to spend all their time in court over everything."

He described a recent instance in which the dealership turned in a New Mexico service station-garage to its parent major oil company and played a role in getting it closed after a customer was bilked there.

Smith said a 79-year-old Lubbock woman stopped there in a new car and was told the car had defective brakes and shock absorbers and a faulty alternator. She paid $400 for repairs when in fact the only "repair" was painting over the alternator with silver paint.

"They didn't do anything but paint the alternator and gas up her car," he said. "They did gas up her car, and I guess got that right."

Leon Fink, service manager at Villa Olds, noted that Dallas and Houston have city ordinances regulating automobile

Expenses Climb In School Races

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Attorney Brad Crawford has the biggest campaign chest, but fellow candidate Claude Dollins has spent the most money so far in the race for seats on the Lubbock Independent School District board of trustees.

Campaign finance reports filed by Monday's state-ordered deadline show thus far in the board's Place 1 election, Dr. John Ray Jr. has received donations of $250 and spent $922; Bill Warren has collected $360 and spent $325; and Lynn Stafford has accepted contributions of $3,186 and spent $2,150.

In Place 2, Donna Muldrew reported contributions of $1,096 and expenditures of $1,091; Edith O'Brien, contributions of $1,173 and expenditures of $647; Dollins, contributions of $2,210 (including a $1,000 loan to himself) and expenditures of $3,482; and Crawford, contributions of $4,191 and expenditures of $2,573.

Place 2 candidate Robert Lowery has yet to file a report. He was unavailable for comment today.

Also, Place 1 incumbent Joan Ervin missed the deadline. She indicated this may have been an oversight by her campaign volunteers and said the report would be filed "as soon as possible" this afternoon.

The reports filed Monday cover the period from Feb. 20 through March 22.

In the heated — and expensive — Place 2 race, Crawford had reported $2,785 in contributions and $761 in expenditures prior to Feb. 20. For the most recent reporting period, he lists $1,406 in additional donations and $1,813 in more expenses.

Crawford's contributions for the current period include $575 in donations of more than $50 and $831 in donations of $50 or less. His largest contributors for the reporting period were John Cristmann III, $75; and Toby Foster, Mrs. Roy K. Furr, Sam C. Arnett III, L.G. Wil-

Hongisto Eyes Mayor's Chair

CLEVELAND (AP) — Richard Hongisto, fired as Cleveland's police chief by Mayor Dennis Kucinich, says he has not ruled out the possibility of running for mayor in the event of a recall effort.

Hongisto said he has been approached about entering the race by several people trying to collect the 37,000 signatures needed to force a mayoral election.

Kucinich fired Hongisto, formerly sheriff of San Francisco County, last Friday on grounds he failed to substantiate his allegation that the administration tried to pressure him into making unethical decisions.

Lion-Hearted Lilies

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

A few years ago, with the lily bulbs still in the ground, the area was blacktopped.

The pastor of the church, the Rev. John Taylor, wrote in a recent church bulletin: "The world forgot the lilies, but the lilies did not forget the world. They pushed and shoved, moaned and groaned until they were able to shoot a sharp stem through the ugly old black stuff.

"Little by little, endurance won out until now, after several years, the lilies have won a great victory — they have pushed their way out of the grave," he wrote.

Before church trustees extend a porch onto the blacktop, the lilies will be moved to another part of the church yard.

City Mayors Rap, Praise Carter Plan

By JONATHAN WOLMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's big-city mayors pulled a political reversal in the East Room of the White House, first criticizing, then embracing President Carter's urban policy.

Just before Carter outlined his $8.3 billion urban strategy Monday, the U.S. Conference of Mayors issued a statement saying it was "a significant step in the right direction, but contains too little in new funds and raises new questions about the role of local government."

Almost immediately, however, Conference president Lee Alexander recanted. Following Carter's speech, the Syracuse, N.Y., mayor stood at the East Room podium and said an "inspiring" briefing by Carter aides had convinced him the policy is "a bold step forward."

The mayors apparently reversed field after administration officials warned that it is unlikely Congress, already facing a $61 billion deficit budget, will look at all favorably on increases in urban spending beyond what Carter has proposed.

The mayors, urban activists and state officials gave Carter almost unqualified praise for tackling the urban morass in the first place.

The only angry criticism came from county officials who felt suburban residents were ignored. "While the urban policy purports to be a new partnership, in reality it has the potential of putting central cities and their suburbs in unhealthy competition for limited federal resources," said Terrance Pitts of Milwaukee County, Wis.

Carter's policy relies heavily on about 160 improvements in 38 existing programs. Aside from creation of a National Development Bank, he also proposed a handful of job-creation programs and several initiatives that direct urban aid to neighborhoods.

"The deterioration of urban life in the United States is one of the most complex and deeply rooted problems we face," Carter said.

Critics of the program focused on its limited spending.

"In philosophical terms it's marvelous, but as an economic program it's inadequate," says Jerry Wurf of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes. "Unfortunately, urban America is mainly in need of economic stimulation, not philosophy."

Concern over proposals for housing and jobs spending came from the Senate Banking Committee. A staff aide, who declined to be named, said, "It's a matter of concern that he really proposed nothing for housing other than $150 million for rehabilitation loans."

Richard L. Lesher, president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, praised parts of the program as holding out "great promise" but added, "the business community is concerned, however, at the potential for increased federal deficit, regulation, bureaucracy and proliferation of programs and agencies . ..."

The National Governors Association praised the plan for its use of incentives to reward states that develop urban strategies of their own. But the governors said the $200 million worth of incentives seemed meager and they vowed to oppose Carter's proposal to eliminate anti-recession assistance for states.

Fight Expected On Urban Plan

By JONATHAN WOLMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's urban policy: what's in it for you?

Potentially, city parks, neighborhood health clinics, outdoor art fairs and job programs.

Those are some of the goals of President Carter's urban policy revealed Monday — an $8.3 billion strategy relying heavily on financial incentives for business investment in distressed cities.

But before the Carter policy has any effect, the spending programs must pass Congress. Most will be debated as part of the fiscal 1979 budget, which will be considered this spring to take effect Oct. 1.

Much of the new spending can be expected to draw criticism on Capitol Hill. Of the $8.3 billion, $4.4 billion is in new spending requiring congressional approval.

Key members of both the House and Senate have previously indicated they will study carefully a proposal to create a national development bank to provide subsidies for businesses building or expanding in distressed areas. There also is concern on the Senate Banking Committee over a $150 million housing rehabilitation loan program.

The urban policy's various job programs, some of which would require congressional appropriations, are aimed at the hard-core unemployed and at youths aged 18 to 24.

Carter would also make $150 million available for parks, community basketball courts and swimming pools.

"There are too few parks and recreation areas in the cities," says White House domestic adviser Stuart Eizenstat. "And those that exist are in an advanced state of decay."

Eizenstat, a former high school basketball star, says new facilities such as basketball courts "will break up the tedium and give kids a useful outlet" for their energy.

Under Carter's $20 million Liveable Cities proposal, grants from the National Endowment for the Arts could finance neighborhood arts groups and underwrite projects such as outdoor art fairs.

In Atlanta, Liveable Cities money already is paying for a program to paint murals on city buildings.

Such efforts are relatively inexpensive — compared with the billion-dollar public works program or $1.5 billion in business-stimulating tax credits Carter proposed Monday — but they are integral parts of his effort to make cities "a more attractive place to live and work."

Carter also expressed hope that the federal government can help "marshal the thousands of Americans who want to contribute their time and energy" to neighborhood improvements.

ACTION, the federal volunteer agency, wants $40 million to match the needs of neighborhood groups and volunteers with special skills, an attorney or a carpenter, for example. The agency also would provide grants averaging about $5,000 to neighborhood groups for "dress up" projects. The money would pay for equipment such as paint and brushes, or trees and sidewalk flower beds.

A $15 million HUD program would directly aid neighborhood rehabilitation groups in addition to the proposed $150 million for housing rehabilitation loans.

A $50 million Community Health Center proposal would finance clinics in poor urban neighborhoods lacking adequate medical care.

A $150 million proposal would provide the first spending increase since 1974 for social service programs — such as day care for working mothers and Meals on Wheels for the elderly.

Some $200 million of new mass transit money would be earmarked for providing bus connections "from the point where (current) mass transit routes end to where the jobs are," Eizenstat said.

Missile Sites Under Study

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah is under consideration to become a launching site for the Air Force's proposed MX missile system, the successor to the Minuteman, Rep. Gunn McKay, D-Utah, said Monday.

A vast, underground network of launch facilities could be built in Beaver, Iron and Millard counties, McKay said.

McKay spokesman David Carle said in a telephone interview from Washington that the MX missile program could cost between $30 billion and $40 billion. He said Utah is one of 10 states being considered for the facilities, the other states include California, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Kansas, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado and Nevada.

McKay said the Air Force is considering several modes of launch, but the most preferred would be from a vast network of tunnels from which the mobile missiles could be operated. That way, the enemy couldn't pinpoint the actual launch site, said the congressman.

The Army Corps of Engineers is gathering real estate data in the areas under consideration for a report to be completed by July 15, McKay said.

Fierce Custody Battle Shuffles Child From Alaska To Pacific

By ROBERT WELLER

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The custody battle for 5-year-old Scotty Mackay got so fierce at one point that the boy was taking a suitcase to breakfast, expecting he would be shuffled off to yet another home.

Since the death of his mother in a mysterious bombing in 1976, Scotty has lived with his mother's brother, his father, his father's sister, a friend of his father and a state court judge.

The case came to court again today when Scotty's wealthy father, Neil Mackay, 55, a lawyer who made his money in real estate, faced contempt charges for spiriting his son out of Alaska without court permission.

Robert Wagstaff, Scotty's court-appointed lawyer, says the case is the most unusual he has seen.

It is a case that reads a little like a Robert Louis Stevenson adventure: Taken by his father to the Pacific in violation of the court order, Scotty was the subject of an island-hopping search by up to 13 detectives. He was finally found on an island described by Stevenson as "the pearl of the Pacific."

His trip home from the Pacific involved court orders and counter-orders and island hops by tramp steamer and amphibious plane.

Scotty's father and Muriel Pfiel, who resumed use of her maiden name, were divorced in February 1975. Miss Pfiel, wealthy in her own right, got custody of the boy, then almost 2 years old. A battle ensued over visitation rights.

Miss Pfiel, 41, was killed Sept. 30, 1976, when a bomb exploded in her car in a downtown parking lot. The crime remains unsolved.

Her brother, Robert Pfiel, picked up Scotty, quickly filed adoption papers and refused to allow Mackay to see Scotty.

Mackay got a court order giving him custody, but the state Supreme Court intervened to order a full custody trial.

During the custody trial, which began in April 1977, there was testimony that Mackay suffered psychological problems as a result of taking barbituates prescribed for injuries suffered during World War II, in which he served as a fighter pilot.

Dr. Allan Leider, a Seattle psychiatrist, testified: "Mackay wants the child to love him, but fears the child will think he had something to do with his mother's death." Leider said the boy had told Mackay: "I don't like you anymore — the police are going to come and take you away in handcuffs."

Mackay, fighting tears, testified: "I see things in my boy that ... I see in myself. Some are good, some are bad. But I want to be with him, watch him grow and nurture him as he grows."

Citing testimony on Mackay's psychological problems, Superior Court Judge Roy Madsen ruled May 6 that Mackay was an unfit parent. At the judge's request, Mrs. Willis and her husband agreed to take custody of Scotty.

However, the Willises gave Scotty to Mackay one month later. They said Mackay had harassed them and Scotty had accused them of taking him from his father.

Mackay was allowed to keep Scotty, pending a hearing, but he was ordered to stay in Alaska unless he posted a bond and got court permission to leave.

In December, as another custody hearing approached, Mackay took Scotty to Hawaii without permission or bond. He was ordered to return, cited for contempt and fined $1,000 for each day Scotty was outside Alaska. The court also ordered Scotty returned to the Willises, who have since gotten into a dispute with Mackay.

When Hawaii tried to enforce the Alaska order, Mackay and Scotty disppeared. After a month-long search, detectives found Mackay in Honolulu under an assumed name. He refused to say where Scotty was, adding "Scotty's in great shape ... If people would just get off his back and mine, we'd have a great life."

Mackay failed to appear at a hearing the next day and was arrested. Scotty was then found on Majuro in the Marshall Islands.

Private detective Scott Goodenow went to pick up Scotty, but was blocked by a court order granted to a friend of Mackay, Roger Cotting. Goodenow got a counter order, but by then he said Cotting and Scotty had fled by amphibious plane to the atoll of Likiep and Cotting had filed papers to change Scotty's name to John Cotting.

A second detective found Scotty on Likiep and took him by tramp steamer to Kwajalein.

Goodenow picked him up there but when the plane carrying Scotty and the detective stopped on another island en route home, Cotting had an order from a local judge ordering the boy off the plane pending a hearing.

When that judge suffered a fatal heart attack, a second judge said Scotty could leave and the 5-year-old finally arrived home last week.

Mackay returned the next day and was ordered to avoid contact with Scotty and pay for a 24-hour guard on the Willis home. And he was ordered to post $500,000 bond to assure compliance with court orders.

Scotty's lawyer, Robert Wagstaff, says the boy is in good physical shape. The detective who returned him to Alaska said of the boy: "He knows what's going on and is confused. He doesn't want to talk about it."

Soviets Face Nuclear Power Problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russia's nuclear power development program has fallen seriously behind schedule because of industrial shortcomings, U.S. intelligence sources say.

The sources, who asked not to be named, indicated the Russians may try to get more help from Western countries.

Analysts filed a secret report recently saying the Soviet Union's goal of achieving 18,400 megawatts of nuclear generating capacity by 1980 "probably will be missed by a wide margin," probably by about 3,000 megawatts.

Soviet heavy industry cannot meet commitments to provide the necessary reactor components, the U.S. intelligence report said, adding that the Soviet Union has been willing to buy nuclear equipment from the West.

The new report comes at a time when other intelligence appraisals speak of shortfalls in Soviet agriculture and steel production.

The Russians are said to be building a new production plant on a 1,600-acre site at Volgodonsk, from which nuclear reactor units are supposed to be available starting in 1981. Much of the equipment for this plant is being bought in the United States and Italy, intelligence sources said.

But slow construction is reported to have set back Soviet plans for this factory complex by one or two years.

Meanwhile, U.S. intelligence officials said the Russians are committed to supply nuclear power plants to some of their Eastern European allies in Finland. Czechoslovakia is said to be building components for Hungary and East Germany to fulfill some of the commitments Russia cannot meet.

Despite its production problems, Russia has sent teams of Soviet technicians and engineers to start setting up a nuclear power station in Cuba.

According to intelligence reports, the Soviets have promised to get two 440-megawatt reactors into operation in Cuba by 1985.

Russia, which has been propping up Cuba's economy, is said to have granted Cuba loans for this work at 2 percent interest to be repaid in 15 years.

He knows from experience there is no easy answer.

Never before have cities faced more problems and decisions than today. During Lubbock's past four years, city councilman Alan Henry has demonstrated his intelligence, maturity and fair judgement in helping make thousands of important decisions vital to our future. He knows about the problems of high utility costs, inflation, taxes, traffic problems and growing pains and crime ... he's been working on them for years. And he's learned there is no easy answer.

It is Alan Henry's approach to city government that is most important. He has proved he is effective and unselfish when considering these important decisions. He holds our future most important. Contrast this attitude with that of his opponent, who doesn't pay his city-school personal property tax because he is "not particularly for that tax".

Hot Campaign Shaping Up In Texas' 21st District

By RICK SCOTT

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A hot campaign is shaping up for the Republican and Democratic nominations in Texas' huge 21st Congressional District — an area that is larger than 19 of the United States.

The battle is for the U.S. House seat being vacated by Rep. Bob Krueger, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate seat now held by Republican John Tower.

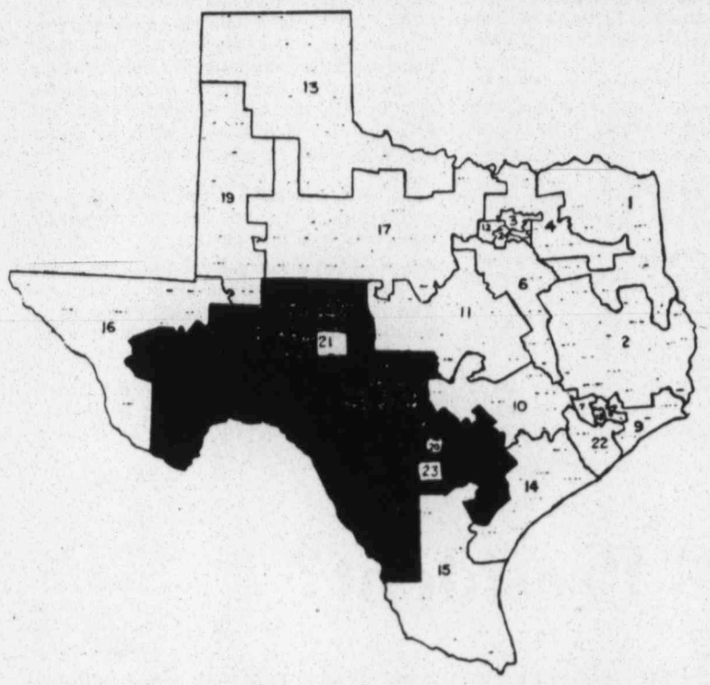

Krueger is finishing his second two-year term in the House.

Five Democrats are campaigning for their party's nomination in the May primary. Four Republicans are seeking the GOP nomination.

In the 20th District, which lies entirely inside San Antonio, longtime Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, a Democrat, is assured re-election to his ninth consecutive term. He has no opposition in either his party primary or the November general election.

Rep. Abraham Kazen, also a Democrat, is a prohibitive favorite to win renomination and re-election to a seventh term in the 23rd District, which includes an area south, east and west of San Antonio. He faces a newcomer in the primary. There are no Republican candidates and the Raza Unida candidate is unopposed in the primary.

HOT CAMPAIGN — Shaded area of the map locates the 21st Congressional District where a hot campaign is expected between Republicans and Democrats to elect a representative to fill the seat which Rep. Bob Krueger is vacating to seek the Democratic nomination for the Senate seat now held by Sen. John Tower. (AP Laserphoto)

But the 21st District is assured a new face in Washington when the 96th Congress begins next January. The district includes all of 28 counties and parts of four more including northern Bexar County (San Antonio). It sprawls over 47,262 square miles — much of it sparsely populated brush and desert area.

Former State Sen. Nelson Wolff is considered by most observers to be the leader in the Democratic primary contest. He lost in 1974 to Krueger, but this year claims to have the financing and party organization necessary to win.

Other Democratic candidates include Hondo Mayor Woodrow Glasscock, banker Paul Dahlgren and educators Steve Clark and Joe Sullivan.

In the Republican primary for the 21st District Bobby Locke is seeking his party's nomination for the second time. He won the nomination in 1976 but lost to Krueger in the general election.

The GOP primary favorite is newcomer Tom Loeffler, a lawyer and rancher from Kerrville and a one-time aide to Tower who once also worked as a congressional liaison in the Ford White House. Loeffler claims the backing of the district's GOP leadership.

Other Republican candidates are San Antonio lawyer Neil Calnan, 35, a former assistant U.S. attorney who lost the 1976 nomination battle to Locke; and veterinarian Wallace Larson, another newcomer to politics.

All the candidates in both primaries assert their conservatism.

DEMOCRATS:

Wolff, a 37-year-old rancher and lawyer who lives in the San Antonio suburb of Leon Springs, has traveled extensively in the district which includes San Angelo. Del Rio and half of the Big Bend area. He maintains the United States must eliminate wasteful bureaucracies and strengthen its defense. He supports development of atomic energy supplies. Wolff says imported beef products should be clearly labeled for consumers and that export markets should be expanded.

Glasscock has made development of water resources in the district one of his chief themes. He has called for a comprehensive water plan to help not only agriculture, but urban areas as well. He supports a phased deregulation of natural gas prices in the nation. He states that government spending is the major cause of inflation. He also supports a strong national defense, a strong Social Security program and reduced federal taxes and bureaucracy.

Dahlgren says he believes inflation is the most serious problem facing the nation today and that the federal government should establish an "anti-inflation policy." He has called for a permanent income tax reduction. He supports a gradual deregulation of natural gas prices to be overseen by regulatory agencies that would prevent windfall profits. He supports "welfare reform" and promises to keep close contact with his constituency through regional offices.

Clark, a native of San Antonio making his first bid for public office, supports a decentralization of government and local control of public schools. He wants stronger fixed prison terms for convicted criminals. He says he supports "free enterprise" and critizes "liberals" who have tried to "subvert the meaning of the word 'poverty.'"

Sullivan, 49, who lost primary battles to Krueger in 1974 and 1976, is a psychology teacher at San Antonio College. He says he intends to keep running until elected and would like to apply some psychology on the U.S. Congress. He favors deregulation "of just about all business." He supports a strong national defense.

REPUBLICANS:

Loeffler, 31, has stirred some controversy by supporting West Texas ranchers who claim they have to kill federally protected golden eagles to protect their livestock. He is stressing his experience in Washington working for Tower and former President Ford. He claims to have fought already to protect Texas interests in business agriculture and petroleum. He contends he is the only candidate with day-to-day Washington experience.

Locke, 38, the unsuccessful GOP nomineee in 1976, opposes ratification of the Panama Canal treaty. A businessman, he takes a hard conservative line on most issues: reduce federal taxes, tougher sentences for criminals, a stronger military, deregulation of oil and gas prices and a mandatory balanced federal budget. He says the United States should use its agricultural strength as "a major tool" of its foreign policy.

Calnan, 35, who lost to Locke in the 1976 primary believes government's primary responsibility is to provide the strongest national defense. He believes in "a fiscally conservative, economy-minded government restricted by reason and the Constitution." Stopping inflation he believes must begin with stopping the growth of the federal budget.

Larson, 49, says he backs the "big stick" policy in foreign relations. He wants a strong national defense. He opposes the Panama Canal treaty. He wants a constitutional amendment to outlaw forced busing of school children for desegregation purposes. He is against creation of a federal consumer protection office. He opposes gun control, deficit federal spending, the Equal Rights Amendment and national health insurance.

In the 23rd District Democratic Rep. Kazen will face newcomer Martin P. Ross in the party primary. Kazen's campaign has been extremely low key and has ignored Ross' presence.

The 28-year-old Ross labels himself "a self-taught political economist. He advocates a "crash program" to develop nuclear energy and a repeal the National Environmental Protection Act. He is opposed to the decriminalization of marijuana.

Gus Mata of San Antonio is unopposed for La Raza Unida Party congressional nomination in the 23rd District. There is no Republican candidate.

Argentine Soybeans Hit High Mark

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Argentine soybean production climbed to a new high of 1.4 million tons during the 1976-77 season, up 101.4 percent from the previous year, reports the Economy Ministry.

The record yield has been followed by a 41 percent increase in soybean acreage for 1977-78, compared to 1976-77.

Laker Plans Extra Flight To New York

By ALEX FRERE

LONDON (UPI) — Freddie Laker's walk-on Skytrain service between London and New York has been so successful the airline will initiate a second daily flight beginning Saturday.

The airline, which celebrated its first half-year of service Sunday, announced the no-reservation trans-Atlantic service had turned a profit of nearly $1.5 million and said it would add the extra daily flight.

"We are delighted with the success," a Laker spokesman said. "Over the past six months almost everyone who wanted a ticket has got one. The concept of being able to turn up, buy a ticket and take off has worked just as we said it would."

Since the inaugural flight Sept. 26, Skytrain's DC-10 service has carried 97,763 passengers, filling an average of 78.26 percent of the available seats on each flight. The round trip fare is $245.

Skytrain's success followed a six-year campaign by Laker to persuade the British government to allow cut-rate trans-Atlantic travel.

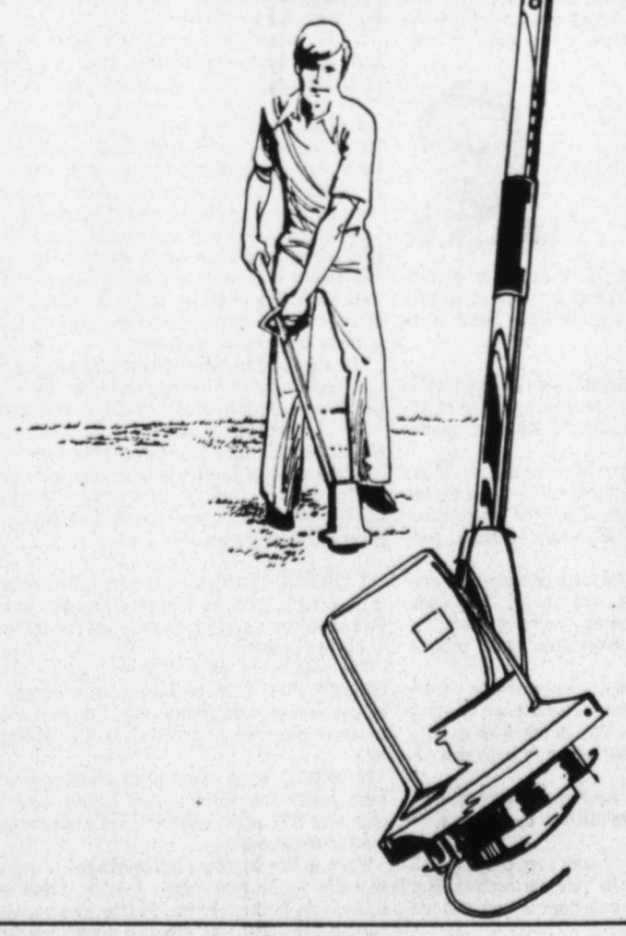

A total of 345 tickets go on sale each direction every morning for Laker's DC-10 flights between London and New York.

Beginning April 1 there will be an additional 189 seats sold for a second daily flight on a Boeing 707 in each direction. It will leave London's Gatwick airport at 2:15 p.m. and New York's Kennedy Airport at 7 p.m.

The popularity of the new service forced all the other airlines on the route to introduce competitive stand-by and budget fares not only to New York but also to a dozen other U.S cities.

"We are looking forward to a good summer peak period for Skytrain," the company spokesman said. "Don't forget that the other airlines will only have a few stand-by tickets on sale each day because their flights will be booked up with regular fares. But we will be selling 534 tickets every day in each direction starting April 1."

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

No News Is Bad News

SINCE IT'S a matter of Marxist dogma that inflation is not supposed to happen in a Communist society, the fact that after a year's absence on Soviet shelves coffee has reappeared selling for more than four times ($12.73 per pound) what it cost previously isn't news.

And that's not particularly surprising. There are a lot of things besides inflation that aren't supposed to happen in a Communist society...such as crime. Which must make numbers of Soviet citizens who are victims of muggings, beatings and worse wonder exactly what it is then that is happening to them.

STREET CRIME is reported on the increase in the USSR, to the concern of authorities unsure as to how to prevent its spread and to deal with its causes.

Much of the violence is committed by young people, under 18, many of them school dropouts and unemployed.

Street gangs led by older youths prey on old people, women and children. As detailed at length in a New York Times account, these gangs make their own weapons, knives and zip guns, and prowl parks and lonely nighttime streets for likely victims.

It sounds like what the United States and other Western nations have experienced. But there is one major difference in the Soviet situation.

Crime or even the existence of a crime problem is not news as far as the Soviet press is concerned.

IN THE United States in particular, media over-publicizing of crime is often blamed for inciting others to criminal acts and compounding the problem.

The opposite is the Soviet case.

It is official Russian policy to keep all unsolved crime out of the newspapers and broadcasts to avoid alarming the public. As a consequence, however, an uninformed public is easier to victimize.

Unaware of danger, many potential victims venture into areas the prudently informed would avoid.

Therefore, victims of the most recent Soviet "non-existent" crime wave probably would—if they could—testify that what we don't know can indeed hurt us.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

Traffic: Choke, Snarl

SPRING HAS SPRUNG: The swallows are back at Capistrano, the farmers are back on the farm, the miners are going back into the mines—and the politicians are getting ready to go back on their words.

The City of Boulder has banned the use of City funds for travel to a convention in a state which has not approved the Equal Rights Amendment.

At last, the taxpayers are getting some good out of the ERA!

"I'M NOT LOOKING to get my name in the paper," the caller said, "but this town is slowly but surely choking to death on traffic and I wonder who can do something about it?"

A salesman who moved here nine or ten years ago, the caller recalled "there was talk at that time of an east-west expressway along 37th or 38th Streets and then on to the downtown area. Whatever happened to that idea?"

What happened, mainly, was that nobody ever came up with any money. Spooked by opposition from some of those whose homes might have been in the path of such an expressway, city and Chamber of Commerce officials never pushed it.

More importantly, they knew the effort would be futile. Of higher priority, because 90 percent federal funding would be possible, was getting Interstate 27 extended across the city from north to south.

IF THIS NORTH-south expressway could be built, the reasoning went, it would form one leg of the suggested E-way from southwest Lubbock to downtown Lubbock.

The rest, or some alternative solution to the east-west traffic problem, would follow.

Well, the I-27 extension finally was authorized—but the planning process is agonizingly slow and the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation doesn't seem to be in any hurry about it.

Meanwhile, as my caller pointed out, all of the dire predictions of a decade ago are coming true: Lubbock is beginning to choke on its clogged traffic arteries.

"I THINK THE town certainly needs to do something to get out of the horse-and-buggy days," the man added.

"Sure, they're widening intersections and things like that, but there's no way you'll ever be able to move as much traffic as we have, smoothly, until you can eliminate the stops at traffic signals. That requires an expressway."

He is right, of course.

The fact is that every other city of any size in Texas long since has had the benefits of one or more expressways—some of them even double-decked—while the powers that be have patted Lubbock on the back and said, in effect, "go away, boy, you bother me."

Representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, City Council and County Commissioners Court appeared before Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's subcommittee in Washington the other day to talk about the need for two highway projects out of Lubbock.

One would be extending I-27 southward and the other would be four-laning Highway 114 from Dallas through Lubbock into New Mexico.

This never has been formallly proposed to anyone, but by re-routing Highway 114 from about Reese Air Force Base to Ralls, curving it to the south away from the Texas Tech campus (down 38th Street?) and then eastward through the Roosevelt community to Ralls, we could solve a lot of traffic problems hereabouts.

MY OWN THOUGHT is that the Highway 114 project might be our best hope for an east-west expressway through the city.

The problem is both political and financial. We are entitled to our share of the funds that Congress and the Texas Highways and Public Transportation officials control. That's the financial part of the problem.

The political part, in answer to my caller's question, is to get the funds to which we are entitled.

Holmes Alexander:

Will He Ever 'Be' President?

ST. CROIX, Virgin Islands—Americans here can't make hide nor hair of Jimmy Carter. True, the Virgins are atypical of the whole America. This is a very strange community of rich vacationers and retirees and black persons in four varieties.

One, the Cruzons, who live almost entirely on the welfare state. Two, the Puerto Ricans who make up 90 percent of the technicians and laboring class.

Three, the "snowbirds," from the North who sop up the salt spray and sunshine. Fourth, the "aliens" from other Caribbean Islands, who do domestic work and make the resort system work, but have no vote.

As matters stand, the black population governs through the chief executive and legislature, and also does most of the heavy and manual labor.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY here about Carter is what many of us think and say on the Mainland. "When's he going to be President?" He certainly had every chance of seeing the approaching coal strike and the industrial tie-up it has brought about.

There were early visible choices for him. He could have had the Taft-Hartley aligned to warn the workers, the seizure procedure to warn the operators, the nationalization of the industry, as a warning to the general public of what the outcome could be.

For America is heading the way that Laborite Britain went, the way of national socialism. But to the tell the workers, the operators and the American people such hard truths, Jimmy Carter must "be President."

HE INHERITED—indeed, he sought—an almost impossible job. America is a staggering giant. Government has swollen to an unmanageable size. Industry is obsolete, and is out-matched by foreign manufacturers.

Everywhere the export markets are receding from our grasp. Both our onetime allies and enemies have surpassed us, or soon will do so.

In order to resist pressure from faint-hearted allies, local peace-mongers and budget-trimmers, Carter needs a set of nerves never required of a former Georgia governor. In the most imperative sense, he must "be President" and call the shots while yet there is time.

"Three more years," moaned a vacation tycoon. "Is there any Republican in sight to beat Carter next time."

This question, mournfully asked, nearly always brings up the name of Gerald Ford, whose steady, uninspired leadership looks very good by comparison with the uncertainty that Carter has not dissipated in his first year.

The once-electrifying name of Ronald Reagan no longer flutters Republican pulses. Reagan's age is against him, and the Panama Canal issue is dead as dodo. Sen. Howard Baker was a wait-and-see man when his party needed a leader on the canal matter.

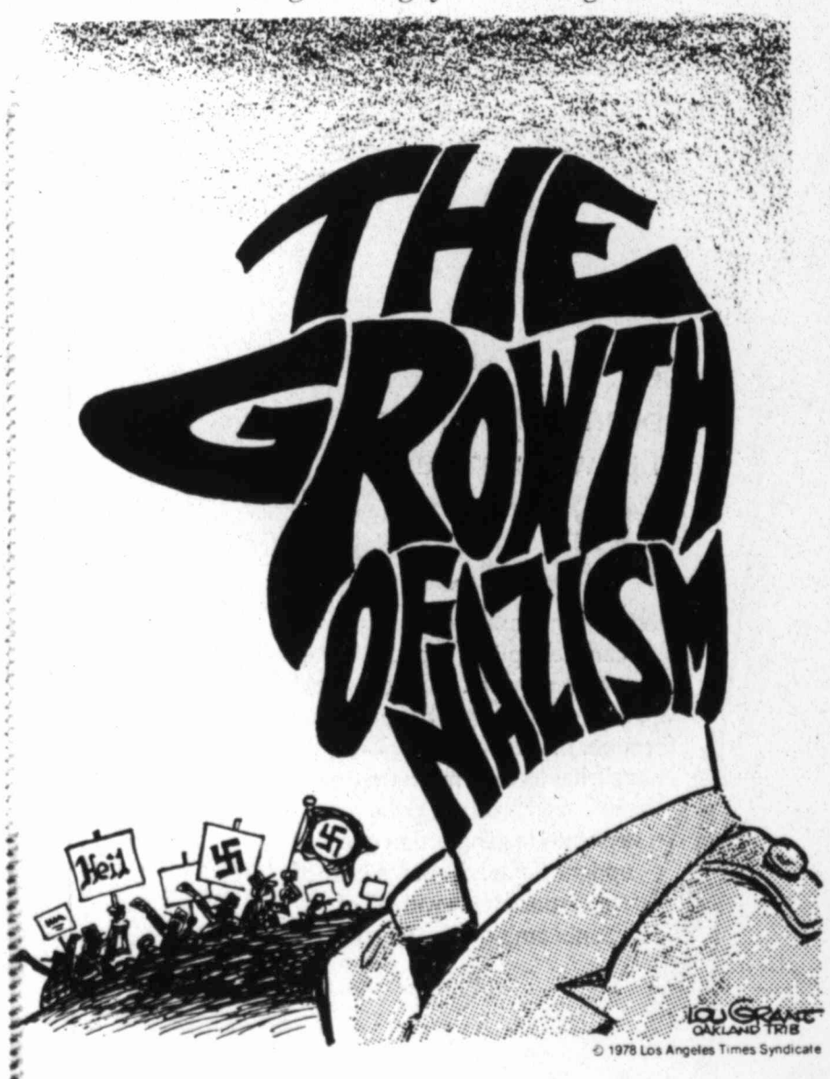

John Connally writes me that he hasn't decided when or what office to run for. Connally is probably the strongest Republican at this writing.

But when Virgin Islander visitors are told that Jimmy Carter is likely to be a one-termer, but that his successor looks to be a Democrat, Gov. Jerry Brown of California, the dismay is written clearly on the faces of Mainlanders with the wherewithal to be winter vacationers.

"Gov. Brown? But isn't he a kook?" That is sure to be the big question for the next Presidential campaign. Will the Democrats nominate a kook?

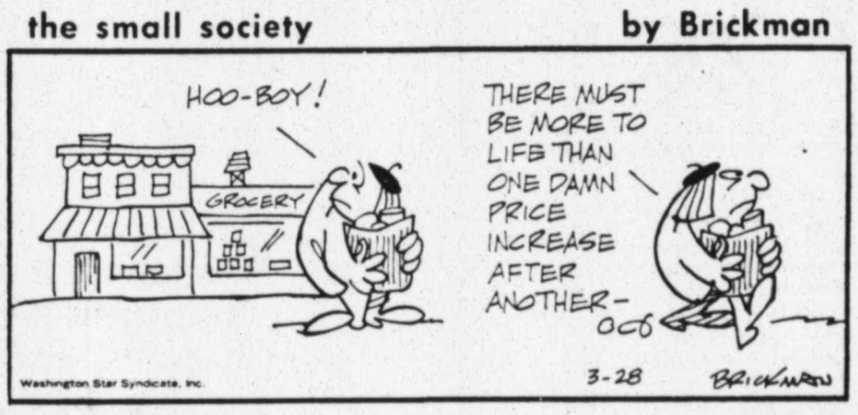

Meanwhile, the country has to live on. So the nearer question is "When will Carter start to be President?"

Sylvia Porter:

Is The Family Farm Vanishing Species?

(Second In A Series Of Five Columns)

YOU, A CITY consumer and in the vast majority of Americans in this era, can only begin to understand the gallant farmers recently driving tractors in protest caravans in major cities across the nation, if you gain some knowledge of what farming is like in the U.S. today and how dramatically it is changing in character.

The first crucial fact all of us must grasp at the start is that while prices we pay at the retail counter are rising again and will be up in 1978 by at least 4 to 6 per cent to the highest peaks ever, not much of this money will be translated into higher income for the farmers.

It will "disappear"—as it usually does—into the middle, into costs of processing, packaging, transportation, labor charges all along the line, etc.

A FULL 99 per cent of all U.S. farms are still family projects from start to finish, but there are many huge corporations in agribusiness. In general, corporations play a major role only in fruits, vegetables and parts of the poultry industries.

But you will find very large farms, some incorporated, some not, in many states. Large-scale hog-feeding operations are emerging in the Midwest, for example. Heavy use of machines, fertilizers and pesticides are as much a part of family farming as corporate operations.

The standard measure of farm size today is not the number of acres owned or cattle raised but the value of production sold or the sales category.

The "classic family farm," as an illustration, reports annual sales between $20,000 and $100,000; the average farm family in this sales class disclosed a net before-tax farm income of $13,000 in 1976, with about 3 per cent of this from direct government payments.

A SECOND CRUCIAL fact about this scenario is that farm incomes fluctuate between boom-bust to a much greater degree than the incomes of nonfarm earners.

The reasons are easy to grasp; weather alone critically alters farm production and changes in output compel wide price swings. The margin between oversupply and undersupply is exceedingly thin.

In 1972-73, when world food production fell, farm prices and incomes rose rapidly—only to plunge in 1977 as the result of good crops through most of the globe.

When in Kansas City a few weeks ago, I was repeatedly asked how much I knew about the squeeze on farmers in the middle-sales category particularly and I was asked in urgent words to report to you that their production costs are continuing to rise while prices to them drop.

And it doesn't matter "whether I produce a lot or a little," is the way one deeply worried farmer put it to me.

IT IS AGAINST this background that many farmers are turning to other sources of income. Today, nearly 60 per cent the income of farmers in this country comes from non-farm sources!

At the lower end of the income scale, the trend is toward full or part-time jobs in factories; at the top, the reliance is more on investments.

"On the whole this trend toward part-time farming is a plus," explained Ken Farrell, acting administrator for the Agriculture Department's Economics, Statistics and Cooperative Services, to my Washington associate, Brooke Shearer.

"It means that the agriculture economy is becoming integrated into the larger economic community of the country. No longer do large numbers of people have to rely purely on farm income as a source of support.

IT GIVES THEM greater flexibility and security. But it also means that no single government policy can adequately solve the economic problems of farmers."

Among those "economic problems" is the high cost of farmland, particularly affecting fulltime farmers. As farmland prices have soared in the past several years, it is more difficult for these farmers to increase the size of their operations to take advantage of big machinery. It also is harder for young people to enter farming.

Almost 40 per cent of all the land in agricultural production today is leased. The farmers working this land neither own it nor receive the prime tax advantages of the actual landowners.

Most notable of these tax benefits is that when farmland is sold at a profit, the gain is treated for income tax purposes as a long-term capital gain and therefore taxed at a favorable rate.

Tomorrow: Complex price support programs.

John D. Lofton:

Antidote To Dr. G's Snake Oil

WASHINGTON—In Paris, France, in what I think was a spoof, the Association for the Promotion of Humor in International Affairs has awarded Harvard economist John Kenneth Galbraith a Noble (that's N-o-b-l-e) Prize for his "North Dakota Plan" to solve international disputes.

The "plan" proposes that all borders should be redrawn to conform to the shape and size of the Flickertail State, thus providing "straight, unmistakable frontiers which would cut right through every animosity, however cherished."

His "plan," Galbraith points out, would remove great-power rivalry by liquidating great powers and would contract at least the naval dimensions of the arms race by the only possibility means of reducing navies—the elimination of coastlines.

Well, now, Dr. Galbraith's "North Dakota Plan" may indeed be a put-on.

LAST YEAR ON public TV, the Amazing Dr. G hosted a show which he wrote, titled "The Age of Uncertainty"—a series on economic issues in which, as William Buckley has noted, he took the opportunity, "in his genial but mischievous way, to thread the beads of history so as to festoon, one more time, his lifelong mistress, the state."

Upset when he was told by the producers of this show that no alternative viewpoints would be necessary because Galbraith was so good, Dr. Gerald Musgrave, a research fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institute, protested.

Believing, correctly, that since Galbraith's views are so unremittingly hostile to capitalism, and so adulatory to statism, that is would be a travesty to allow his opinions to be portrayed as uncontroversial, Musgrave sought out opposing points of view.

The producers subsequently acceptd these challenges to Galbraith, and they ran at the end of each episode.

These alternatives to Galbraith have just been published in paperback form—"The Galbraith Viewpoint in Perspective"—and they demolish virtually everything this self-confessed socialist has to say about anything.

Refuting Galbraith's version of the legacy of Karl Marx, Dr. Sidney Hook, professor emeritus of philosophy at New York University, says:

"THE FAILURE OF Marx's economic theories about development of capitalism in the West is evidence of his defective legacy.

"He predicted the pauperization of the working classes. Yet the workers reached levels of affluence never attained before.

"He predicted the disappearance of the middle-classes and the polarization of society between a handful of plutocrats and the impoverished masses. But the middle classes still flourished and, politically, Main Street today is at least as important as Wall Street.

"Marx said the workers have no fatherland and predicted they would never fight for home and country. But they have always fought.

"He predicted that the Socialist Revolution would first come in the highly industrialized West. It actually came where his own theories declared it impossible, in the most backward countries of the world.

"On the other hand, Marx failed to predict what did happen—the rise of totalitarianism and the emergence of the welfare state. Some legacy!"

IN CONTRAST TO Galbraith's view that colonialism was a failure, Peter Duignan, head of African Studies at the Hoover Institution, points out:

"Colonialism was extremely effective in diffusing modern science and technology to backward societies. Wherever they went, the imperialists built the economic infrastructure of roads, harbors, and railroads.

"They brought medical and educational services, modern agriculture, and mining. The colonialists created the museums, archives, libraries, research institutes, universities, and schools found in every colony...

"Everywhere, colonial governments were small, efficient, and honest. Never have so many people been ruled so well by so few with so little fuss as during the colonial period in India and Africa.

"The successor states have mostly become one-party dictatorships or are ruled by the military."

COLONIALISM HAD to end, says Duignan. All people have the right to rule themselves. But Galbraith's account is unhistorical and distorts the record.

"On balance, colonial rule benefited the colonized," Duignan declares. "I agree with Karl Marx, who said it was a progressive force drawing backward societies into civilization."

"The Galbraith Viewpoint in Perspective" tells everything you ever wanted to know about John Kenneth Galbraith but were afraid to ask. It's a long-overdue antidote to the socialistic snake oil the good doctor has been peddling lo these many years.

Jest For Fun

A Crescent, Ia. woman recently received a letter from her cousin in California about a so-called "simplified" tax return.

There are just four questions to be answered on the form: "How much did you make? How much did you spend? How much is left? How soon can you send it in?"

Reputation Concerns Dominica

By PETER ARNETT

ROSEAU, Dominica (AP) — Strongly warning Americans not to visit, a major Caribbean guidebook calls it "a beleaguered fragment of paradise."

Neighboring islanders shake their heads when the name comes up. "A country ruined by its politicians," muttered one Barbadian.

And the few foreigners who do visit are likely to hear street calypso singers such as Byzeye warbling banned lyrics such as this:

"The country set like a time bomb to burst,

"So before you die pay your burial fee first."

The country so unflatteringly portrayed is Dominica, the last untamed Caribbean island. Weighed down with an unenviable record of violent crime, political extremism and economic recklessness, this 298 square miles of ragged mountains, unexplored valleys and tortuous roads will become the newest nation in the Caribbean, with the British Parliament likely to grant it independence this year.

Second In A Series

As they emerge from British rule, the leaders of Dominica's 80,000 people are discovering their country is so little known it is often mistaken for the more highly developed, Spanish-speaking Dominican Republic a couple of dozen islands to the northwest.

A much greater liability, they are finding, is Dominica's dark international reputation, traceable perhaps to the first Cariz Indian inhabitants who fought off Christopher Columbus in 1493 and bloodthirstily prevented European settlement for almost 300 years.

More recently, the black power movement that flowered in many formerly British Caribbean possessions became manifest in Dominica in the "Dreads," a band of bearded, raggedly dressed anarchists who butchered five tourists in 1974-1975 before fleeing into the hills.

Leading Dominicans now write off the Dreads. "By and large the movement is dead," said Emile Lancelot, the government's press officer. "Once there were around 150 Dreads, now less than 50. And they are restyled as Rastafarians, and their main concerns are meditation and ganga" — a powerful form of marijuana.

Nevertheless, the government, concerned about its image, attempted to suppress news of the vicious slaying of an American last October. The machette-wielding bearded assailant claimed to be a Dread and was tried and found guilty but insane. Visiting American officials were shocked to learn that the Roseau morgue keeper made a tidy sum selling views of the butchered body to the local population.

Recent visitors to Dominica, however, found government officials, business leaders, and politicians eager to dispel their country's threatening image. Premier Patrick John has told visiting diplomats that Dominica's good name was "outraged" by reports of violence.

The leader of the opposition Freedom Party, Mary Eugenia Charles, daughter of a wealthy banker, said in an interview that "our black power problems are over."

Visitors to the capital of Roseau, a faded 19th century-looking town of around 12,000 people, found passers-by friendly and helpful, with none of the antiforeign feeling seen in Jamaica and Trinidad, two former British territories already independent.

As difficult to dispel as its violent reputation is Dominica's image as a radical in eastern Caribbean politics, not only backward and corrupt and ill-led, but susceptible to penetration by Cuba.

Partly as an attempt to calm suspicion by foreign governments and investors, Premier John in January dramatically fired two cabinet ministers who, he charged, conspired to align Dominica with Cuba after independence. He said he acted "to allay local fears and external anxiety that our country is becoming communist."

But local opponents point out that notorious radical Roosevelt Douglas, jailed in Canada in the 1960s for a bombing and a brother of one of the ousted ministers, still operates openly. He has created a Cuba-Dominica friendship committe, set up cells in areas for independence and travels the Caribbean espousing Marxist causes.

The government has made it clear that in the international political arena it would support the Third World when it became independent, lining up with leftist Guyana and Jamaica on local issues.

"Many of our youths are obsessed with the idea of socialism, and when they return from overseas trips point to Cuba as the better way," press officer Lancelot said. "And why shouldn't we embrace some of those things? But we will never embrace any ideology whole hog."

But like other socialist leaders in the Caribbean, John and his followers are learning that earlier hopes of considerable aid from the communist bloc will not be materializing.

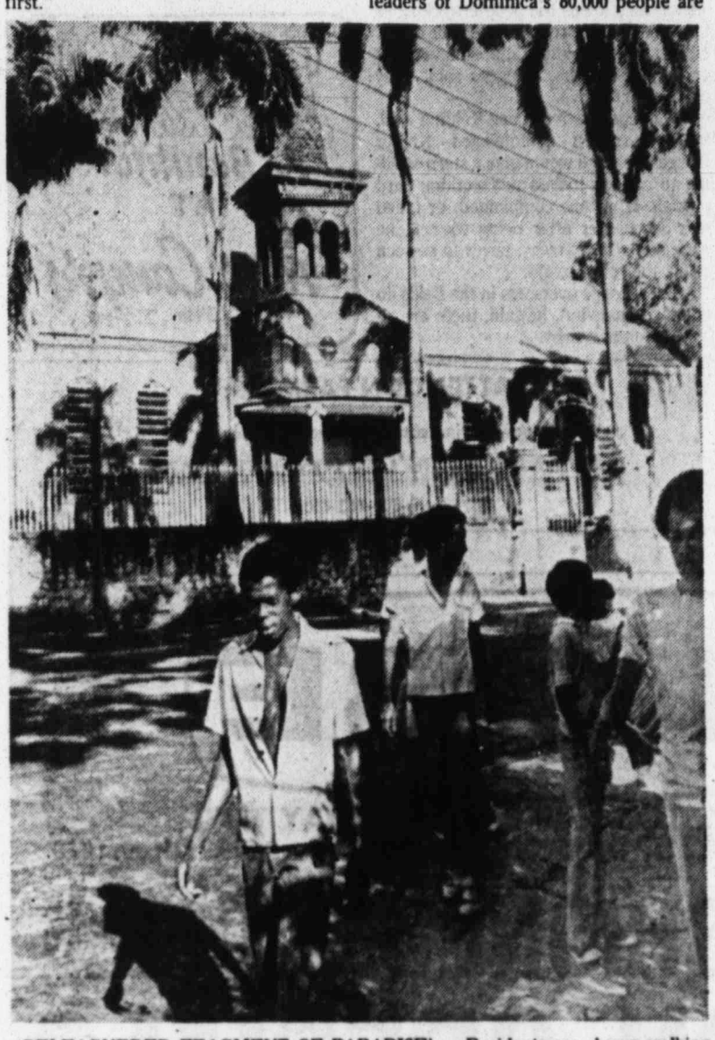

They will have to to modify their rhetoric to gain Western help. And the island, the Caribbean's most backward, is near bankruptcy.

Dependent on imports of most commodities, Dominicans pay high prices. At 13.50 eastern Caribbean dollars for a 5-pound bag of rice, a Roseau housewife pays 10 times more than one in New York.

Economist Jerome Barzey said exports of bananas and limes will never bridge the trade gap. "Basically, by coming independent we will be trading one form of colonialism — political — for another — economic," he said.

Tourism, a basic income for most Caribbean islands, provides a neglible source of money here. Only 1,700 Americans visited in 1977 while nearly 100,000 went to neighboring Guadelupe and Martinique.

Opposition leaders say feeling against independence is growing among the population, which would rather see an improved economy first.

'BELEAGUERED FRAGMENT OF PARADISE' — Residents are shown walking past the 18th century Anglican church in Roseau, capital of Dominica, which is expected to be granted independence by the British Parliament this year. Weighed down by an unenviable record of violent crime, political extremism, and economic recklessness, the island is called a "beleaguered fragment of Paradise" by one major guidebook which advises Americans not to visit. Thyroid Problems Found In Natives

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors continue to discover thyroid abnormalities among Marshall Island natives who were exposed to fallout from a U.S. hydrogen bomb test on March 1, 1954.

While the test at Bikini atoll was more than 100 miles from the natives' atolls, Interior Department officials say seven new thyroid cases have been confirmed in the last 18 months.

Small Mines Suffering Financially

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Mine owner Gil Frederick says it will take 18 months for him to recover from the long coal strike.

While striking miners have received community support, food stamps and gifts of food and cash from around the nation, Frederick has had to get by alone.

There are many other small mine owners like him.

Coal operations producing less than one million tons a year make up "way more than half" the 130-member Bituminous Coal Operators Association but account for only 25 percent of its production, according to BCOA spokesman Morris Feibusch.

Some of the small companies are owned by large parent corporations that can help absorb losses from the 109-day strike. But many are family-owned operations which must succeed or fail on their own.

Frederick owns Capitol Fuels Inc. and F&F Mining Co. jointly with his father and sister. Capitol Fuels operates three underground mines and F&F operates three strip mines.

Their combined production in 1977 was 700,000 tons, a small amount in West Virginia where single mines producing a million tons a year are not uncommon.

"We can't plan any future capital expenditures for the next 16 to 18 months," Frederick said. "It will take us that long to recover."

Since the strike began Dec. 6, Frederick's companies have had no income. He would say only that the losses amount to "many thousands of dollars" and that he has had to borrow heavily to stay afloat.

Because of the strike, he said he has scrapped plans to expand one of his underground mines and open a new one and is thinking about moving his operations from West Virginia to a place where there is a more stable labor force.

He estimates last year's production from the six mines was 58 percent of what it should have been, partially because of the nationwide strike, but largely because of 60 working days lost to wildcat strikes.

However, Frederick said that in the last three years his companies have lost fewer than 20 work days because of complaints originating at his mines. Most of the lost time, he said, was the result of pickets from other locations shutting down his operation.

Although he has not permanently canceled his expansion plans in West Virginia, Frederick said he will not acquire any more leases in the area where he now operates and has obtained leases in "other areas."

"I've talked to several companies in the last couple of weeks who have taken steps to move elsewhere with a more stable work force," he said. "All we want is a stable work force."

Cambodia Stresses Hard Labor

BY PAUL WEDEL

ARANYAPRATHET, Thailand (UPI) — Cambodia today is a vast forced labor camp where work begins at dawn and continues by torchlight until 11 p.m., according to refugees from the Communist-dominated southeast Asian country.

Politics, threat of death, education and even the border war with Vietnam are used to make the people work harder. Then the people watch as the fruits of their labor are trucked away, leaving them hungry, the refugees said.

In Huau, a 38-year-old farmer who escaped to Thailand in February, described a schedule similar to that reported by other refugees from different parts of Cambodia:

— Work begins without food at 6 a.m.

— At 11 a.m. salted rice gruel with boiled vegetables is brought out to the fields for the noon meal.

— Work resumes at 12:30 p.m. and continues until about 6 p.m. when workers return to communal eating halls for another meal of rice gruel.

— At 7 p.m. workers return to the fields to work by moonlight or torchlight.

In Huau, a man who had been a poor farmer before the Khmer Rouge takeover said: "I fled because I just couldn't stand it there anymore."

The only relief from the grinding regimen are political meetings held three times a month in some places and twice a week in others.

The meetings, generally held in the eating halls, are led by Khmer Rouge administrators. The theme of all the meetings is the same, many refugees said — work harder.

"They say the country must be developed — so work harder. Praying to Buddha does no good. The people must work harder. Our soldiers fighting the Vietnamese aggressors must be supported, so everyone must work harder," said 35-year-old Si Nol after 31 months in a cooperative in Kompong Speu, west of Phnom Penh.

School-age children spend at least six hours a day working in the fields along with four hours of study, refugees said.

Children are taught to sing revolutionary songs, said Leng Tokling, who left his wife and two children, aged 6 and 10, behind in a cooperative west of Battambang in early February.

His children were taught to love Angka (The Organization) and to work hard, he said.

In charge of the cooperatives are Khmer Rouge cadre, many in their late teens and apparently fired with the ideological conviction that they must sweep away every vestige of the old easy-going Cambodian life.

Refugees tell of almost no other economic activity in the country except rice farming. All effort is aimed at producing a vast grain surplus.

Last year's harvest was excellent, refugees said, but this year drought has cut production by as much as 50 per cent in some places. Food for the farmers, however, remained at the same level — the absolute minimum.

Heavy trucks line up up shortly after the harvest in Kompong Speu, Si Nol said. "They took away all but the scraps of rice left in the fields and storehouses. We salvaged this for us to eat."

All refugees interviewed told of the transport of rice away from the cooperatives. None knew where it went.

One thing keeps the people working so hard for so little return — fear of death. Khmer Rouge soldiers almost never beat or punish workers, refugees said. They simply kill them.

In his cooperative, Leng Tokling said, the soft-spoken middle-aged Khmer Rouge in charge would give a stern scolding to anyone judged not working hard enough. If anyone complained, or failed to work harder after being warned, he was simply taken away, never to be seen again, the refugee said.

Khmer Rouge overseers in the fields do not carry guns but, he said, there are always soldiers nearby.

Hard work, poor diet and widespread disease have kept the people too weak to think of revolt. Except for a very few cases, Cambodians have tried only to escape Khmer Rouge reign rather than rebel against it.

Refugees say, with good reason, they would have little chance against the tough, wellfed and well-armed young Khmer Rouge troops.

The Khmer Rouge have ruthlessly crushed almost all resistance within Cambodia, with investigations still trying to turn up soldiers or civil servants of the old regime, refugees said. Few expect any change for the better.

Canal Votes Test Solons' Convictions

By ARNOLD SAWISLAK

WASHINGTON (UPI) — One of the evocative stories of professional football is about the rookie who broke all records for pass receiving in college and expects to do the same in the National Football League.

In his first game, he departs the line of scrimmage, gets a skull-shaking helmet slap from a defensive end, a rib-cracking elbow from a linebacker and is knocked flat by a "bump" from a cornerback. As he comes to, he looks up into the grinning faces of his antagonists and the greeting "Welcome to the NFL."

That story ought to be recalled to some of the senators who were on the losing side in the first Panama Canal treaty vote and rushed off the floor to blame it all on "arm-twisting" by the White House.

It is very true that Jimmy Carter, perhaps for the first time since he arrived in Washington, used just about every weapon of persuasion at his command to line up the votes needed to ratify the first treaty. He cajoled, compromised, massaged, flattered and probably made some private promises to get the votes.

By pressing undecided and anti-treaty senators to come to the White House to talk to him personally about their votes, Carter was putting them — especially Democrats — in the uncomfortable personal and political position of having to say no to the president of the United States. That is heavy pressure and no one should mistake it for anything else.

But so far as anyone knows, Carter did not cross the line of accepted political conduct in seeking support. There were no public charges that the administration engaged in the kind of below-the-belt blackmail tactics of the type depicted in some recent Washington novels as par for the course when a president is determined to have his way.

Carter played the game for keeps and won the first test. But there still is another treaty to be considered, and it could be the president who is beaten on the next big vote.

If that happens, it may be the supporters of the treaties who are disposed to blame the outcome on opposition strong arming. Not the least of these likely would be the open threats, some even printed in newspaper advertisements, of well-financed political retribution against pro-treaty senators the next time they come up for election.

But threatening to "get" a senator at the polls for a vote in Congress after the fact is every bit as legitimate as a summons to the Oval Office to influence the decision before it is made. Both are tests of a senator's strength of conviction or level of weakness, as the case may be.

Official Shows Concern Over Lobster Depletion

That may the simplest answer for a simple problem: lobsters are being caught faster than they can reproduce.

The federal government is working on a lobster fishery management plan for the New England Regional Fishery Management Council, the federally-appointed panel that administers fish quotas and helps monitor the 200-mile offshore fishing limit.

The plan was drafted by Thomas Morrissey of the National Marine Fisheries Service, who says he is alarmed by depletion of lobsters in New England waters.

Morrissey won't be specific about the proposal, but said, "At the moment, I don't anticipate quotas being proposed for lobsters."

Some lobster industry spokesmen say it may already be too late to safeguard the New England lobster.

"Overfishing is so bad the industry could be in real trouble in five years," said Edward Blackmore of Stonington, Maine, president of his state's lobstermen's association.

"We increased our fishing effort 2½ times since 1957, but over the years the catch has gradually declined by 30 percent," said Blackmore.

In Massachusetts, Robert Barlow, executive director of the state Lobstermen's Association, said, "It's a known fact we harvest 90 percent of lobsters as they reach legal size and we're heavily overfished."

Lobstermen in Rhode Island reported a "25 percent drop in pounds landed in 1977, compared to 1976," according to Allan Guimond of the Atlantic Offshore Fish and Lobster Association.

HEW Plans Standards On Age Discrimination

By CRAIG A. PALMER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Age is a factor in such diverse government programs as donating blood, arts-in-the-schools and alcoholism treatment, says HEW.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare plans to publish by May 30 the first national standards for determining what constitutes age discrimination in government programs and services.

As a preliminary, Secretary Joseph Califano ordered agency chiefs to review their programs and report on any in which age is a consideration for services or benefits.

Among other things, the department found:

—Blood donors for National Institutes of Health research must be between 17 and 66 though officials said there is no scientific evidence of reasons for the upper age limit. Taking blood from people under 17 is banned in some states and termed child abuse in others.

—Adults in separate U.S. Office of Education adult education and reading improvement projects are defined, respectively, as people who have attained the age of 16 and persons 18 and older.

—The director of a subsidized arts-in-the-schools project thinks the project's age requirements can be discriminatory and that colleges should be added to the schools who benefit from it.

—People under 18 and over 64 are poorly represented in alcoholism treatment centers and other alcohol abuse services supported with HEW money.

Some of those surveyed said they found a potential for discrimination and recommended appropriate changes.

Family planning services in areas of Kansas and Missouri were said to discriminate against teen-agers because clinics will not serve minors without parental consent, said one reply from the U.S. Public Health Service.

Adult education materials tend to be geared to adults 16-35 and the program tends to favor young adults, said program chief Paul Delker.

"Program operation rather than requirements tends to have discriminatory effects," he said.

Arts and Humanities Director Harold Arberg said the arts-in-the-school project is limited to elementary and high schools in such locations as Cleveland, Ohio, and Nampa, Idaho. He recommended the legislation be broadened to cover colleges.

Social Security officials said they would stand pat on cutoff points for retirement, disability and other benefits.

"Experience ... has shown that severely impaired individuals age 62 or over who have been totally disabled for more than a year rarely recover sufficiently to return to work," he said.

The provision for no reexamination after a certain age "saves time and expense for SSA by eliminating additional review of cases in which there is little likelihood of sufficient improvement" to warrant ending disability benefits, he said.

The Age Discrimination Act of 1975 prohibits "unreasonable" discrimination on the basis of young or old age in services subsidized with federal funds, including federal revenue sharing. The law takes effect Jan. 1, 1979.

U.N. Sea Conference Resumes In Geneva

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Round seven of the U.N. Law of the Sea conference opens today with rich and poor nations still far apart on how to share the vast wealth of the oceans.

The United Nations has defined the seas, the ocean floor and its subsoil with its huge resources as "the common heritage of mankind." And the Third World, seeking a new international economic order, has been pressing its claims for a share of that heritage since preparations for the talks began in 1967.

The conference is now in its fifth year, but prospects for the seventh session appear little brighter than the results of the six previous rounds. The industrial nations and the developing countries are still deadlocked on essential points.

At the heart of the dispute are the vast deposits of manganese nodules on the floor of the sea, pebbles rich in manganese, copper, nickel and cobalt believed to be worth billions of dollars.

The advanced industrial countries are preparing technology to scoop up these nodules and have been delaying exploitation in hopes of a Law of the Sea Treaty to regulate the mining.

Companies from the United States, Canada, Britain, Japan and other industrialized states want to begin mining the ocean floor by the early 1980s. Legislation before the U.S. Congress would license American companies to start without a treaty.

The developing countries insist seabed mining must be operated by an international authority that would award licenses to companies that would provide know-how to the authority. The United States and other advanced nations reject this procedure.

The Third World also proposes that the international authority divide potential mining areas equally, one part to be worked by a company or a government, the other by the authority. Details of how this would work have not been made clear.

The Third World countries also are afraid a sudden new wealth of manganese, copper, nickel and cobalt would depress the prices for their own production of these minerals and so want to limit mining in the seas. They insist deep-sea mining must be restricted for the first seven years to an amount necessary to meet the increase in global demand, another aspect opposed by advanced states.

The developing countries want the arrangement reviewed after 20 years, and if the review conference failed to agree within five years, the seabed authority would take over all deep-sea mining.

Other unresolved questions include who should be responsible for controlling pollution and preserving marine environment, what to do about landlocked countries and how much control coastal states should have in their 200-mile economic zones.

More than 40 coastal states already have declared, or are preparing to declare, 200-mile zones in which they restrict fishing by foreigners, or economic zones to control exploitation of the seabed. To avoid confrontation, the conference works under the consensus rule without taking votes on matters of substance. For the same reason, no official records are made of negotiations held in informal meetings.

Zoo Fails To Save Giraffe

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Shlomo the giraffe died early today.

The 15-foot-tall beast, in the prime of life at the age of eight, was unable to get to his feet after collapsing two days ago at the Tel Aviv zoo.

Despite the efforts of a dozen men who talked soothingly to him and tried unsuccessfully Monday to hoist him to his feet with chains and pulleys suspended from a platform, the animal expired on his bed of straw.

Dr. Moshe Avram, the director of the zoo, said he would perform an autopsy to determine the cause of death. He had fallen a week ago, and it was thought he might have been injured then.

Sex apparently was not Shlomo's undoing, as it was for Victor, the 15-year-old giraffe who fell during an attempt to mate last September in an English zoo and died of a heart attack four days later.

Shlomo — the name means Solomon in English — had sired one male and three females in the past four years and was living contentedly with his mate and two daughters.

He fell off a three-foot embankment in his pen last Tuesday but got up and showed no indication of pain.

"Then something happened and on Sunday morning he fell again," Avram reported.

Information Agency To Increase Budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is about to take its second major step in governmental reorganization. But the new agency, while not reducing the government payroll, will increase the government budget.

On Saturday, the United States Information Agency and the State Department's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs will merge to form the International Communications Agency.

The new agency will have about the same number of employees, roughly 8,700, as now work in its two components. Its requested budget for fiscal 1979 is $413 million, as opposed to a combined budget of $348 million for the two agencies that are, in a technical sense, going out of existence.

John E. Reinhardt, who directs the USIA and will head the new agency, said Monday the merger will result in added efficiency. It will mean, for example, that instead of two officials going to Capitol Hill to defend budget requests, there will be only one, he said.

He added that the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs will be provided for the first time with its own overseas representatives, who will come from the USIA ranks.

Reinhardt said there are several reasons a larger budget is being requested for the new agency than for its component parts. One is inflation. A second is a $20 million program to construct more powerful transmitters for the Voice of America, the U.S. government's civilian radio network abroad.

Another USIA official Charles W. Bray, noted that one of the rules Carter laid down for his reorganization team was that no federal employees be fired as a result of a reorganization. That made it difficult at best to reduce the number of workers on the payroll.

Carter's reorganization of the Executive Office of the President did result in a reduction of employees and budget, although the president had never promised in his campaign statements that reorganization would produce those results.

The new communications agency had been recommended to the Ford administration by 1975 by a commission headed by Dr. Frank Stanton, the former president of CBS. Since the new agency operates largely abroad, there were no domestic political constituencies to appease before going forward with the reorganization.

In addition to the VOA and the educational and cultural exchange programs, the new agency will be charged with running the government's news service and libraries abroad as well as with assessing and reporting foreign public opinion.

Wildlife Group Tracks Cats

MONTAGUE TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — State wildlife researchers have begun tracking a pair of bobcats to see if the felines can live in the state from which their species vanished than 70 years ago.

Two of the cats were released Monday, said Bob McDowell, senior wildlife education specialist for the state Division of Fish, Game and Shellfisheries. He said the bobcats, each weighing about 25 pounds, were wearing radio transmitters when they were released, so researchers could monitor their movements.

The male bobcats, each about 18 inches talk, were captured by a hunter in Maine during the weekend after they were tranquilized with darts.

Male cats were chosen for the experiment because they are easier to trap, and they usually travel farther than females, McDowell said.

"We're hoping to get a female but they are much more shy and will dart into a hole in the ground to avoid capture. A male bobcat will standoff the trap dogs," he said.

Bobcats eat small mammals such as squirrels, rabbits, mice and chipmunks which are abundant in the forests of Sussex County, McDowell said.

The cats, innoculated for rabies, pose no danger to children, small cats or dogs, McDowell said.

McDowell declined to say exactly where the animals were set free because he fears people might bother them. The state has labeled the bobcat a protected species, making it illegal to hunt or kill them.

Soggy Grounds Stop Egg Roll

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House Easter egg roll was called off because of soggy grounds from heavy weekend rains, but a big Easter Bunny greeted visitors who were given a tour of the mansion instead.

It was one of the few times that weather prevented the traditional Monday after Easter event that began during the term of Rutherford B. Hayes.

Chief gardener Irwin Williams said the lawn was "just too wet ... it just would have been impossible for the younger kids to roll Easter eggs and you couldn't sit on the ground."

The dozens of hardboiled eggs that had been decorated last week for the contests were not refrigerated, and a spokeswoman said, "I guess we'll just have to throw them away."

Air Force Checking Drug Investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force is checking whether its investigators acted improperly in a drug probe that resulted in 48 civilian employees at a Colorado installation losing their jobs.

Since the incident last summer, the Air Force has reinstated 39 of the workers at the intelligence installation attached to the Buckley Air National Guard Base near Denver.

Some of the dismissed workers have charged that investigators misled them into believing the probe involved possible espionage, and thus got them to admit they occasionally used marijuana.

Hans Mark, an Air Force undersecretary, acknowledged Monday that instructions given the investigators were confusing. "One investigation was for espionage," Mark said. "The other was for drugs."

Thawing Ice Hinders Cleanup In Illinois

A-J News Services

Sunny skies and seasonal temperatures covered most of the country today but rapid thawing in ice-buried Southern Illinois made clean-up operations dangerous and Indiana residents mopped up from a week of flooding.

Gov. James R. Thompson and Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., asked President Carter to declare Illinois a disaster area so federal money could be provided. An estimated $3.5 million damage was inflicted on the state capitol's electrical system in Springfield, and Thompson declared 24 downstate counties disaster areas. Some 1 million people were initially left powerless after the Easter-eve storm.

While officials from the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration toured the area Monday, many areas were still without power and downed tree limbs and power lines were compounding repair problems. The FDAA officials are expected to report to President Carter later this week.

Springfield's municipally owned utility, City, Water, Light and Power, still had 45,000 residents without power since Saturday's storm that glazed the southern half of the state with an inch of heavy ice.

Electrical service may not be restored until after Wednesday to more than 27,000 customers of eight other central Illinois electric cooperatives, who also have been without power since the weekend.

In Indiana Gov. Otis R. Bowen issued an executive order proclaiming the entire state a disaster area and asked Carter to do the same, the first step towards making Hoosiers eligible for federal relief.

Fort Wayne, Ind. residents took advantage of sunny skies and warm temperatures to begin scraping mud from their belongings after more than a week of flooding had sent thousands into temporary shelters.

The governor's order was to allow communities to ask state agencies for help while a federal declaration would provide rent-free federal housing for the nearly 2,000 persons made homeless in Fort Wayne.

In flood-ravaged eastern Nebraska, farmers Monday found the carcasses of 100 head of cattle that drowned in Platte River floodwaters last week.

Elsewhere, diminishing rainfall in the Northeast led the National Weather Service to cancel flash flood watches throughout the region, but the service warned freezing temperatures could make travel hazardous.

The heavy and wet, 8-inch Easter snowfall in New England began a quick melt today as warming temperatures in the region threatened to turn the trickling of icicles into swollen creeks and rivers.

Temperatures climbed into the 60s and 70s in the Northern Rockies and northern Plains states Monday. The NWS said any remaining snow in the region "had a good chance to melt," adding the melting would show up in the form of rising river stages in a number of areas.

But no major flooding was reported even though many Midwest streams and rivers were above flooding stage.

With the end of winter, record-low temperatures were being replaced with record-high temperatures.

Record highs were reported Monday in Missoula, Mont., where 70-degree readings passed the 69 mark set in 1946, and in Boise, Idaho, where temperatures matched a 1953 mercury mark of 71.

A weak upper-level weather system moving into the area is bringing an outside chance of rain for Lubbock and the South Plains tonight and Wednesday.

Temperatures today and Wednesday should be in the middle 70s.

The probability of rain is 20 percent.

If it rains, weathermen expect amounts generally less than a quarter-inch and some isolated heavier storms producing more than a half-inch.

Winds will be southeasterly at 10 to 15 miles an hour today and tonight.

Temperatures tonight should be mild with a low Wednesday morning in the upper 40s.

The low this morning was 45, pleasant but nowhere near the record high minimum of 60 in 1974.

Relative humidity in the next two days is expected to vary from 25 percent in the afternoons to 75 percent early Wednesday morning.

Lubbock has had .23 inch of rain this month and 2.21 so far this year. the total at this point in 1977 was 1.43.

The high cloudiness moved in from the west this morning to cover most of southwestern Texas.

Weathermen attributed the new bank of potential thunderclouds to a surface-level high-pressure system moving slowly eastward and an upper-level low-pressure center over Utah.

Texas skies were mostly clear at dawn today.

Two widely separate cities, Dalhart in the High Plains and Longview in East Texas, were the coldest places in the state with readings of 42.

El Paso was the warmest at dawn with 59.

The second high gaining bull, sired by Arrowhead Emulous and consigned by Blackhawk Angus of Amarillo, had an average daily gain of 3.79 pounds and a 123 ratio. This also is the high indexing bull.

A bull sired by Biffles Emulous 184 and consigned by Richmond Hales of Canyon posted the top weight per day of age, 323 pounds.

Thunder Valley Angus had the high gaining sire group, which had an average daily gain of 3.32 pounds. The group was sired by Pro.

Worth Jones of Happy had the high weight per day of age sire group, sired by Reeds Emulous Bluebird 307, with a WDA of 2.91 pounds.

The top 25 bulls in the test will be sold at 1 p.m. Thursday along with 25 open and bred heifers and 15 show calf prospects.

Wesley Singers To See Life In Eastern Europe

By CARRIE LINE CURTIS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Wesley Singers of Lubbock's First United Methodist Church will be making a summer trip to Eastern Europe for the second time in four years.

The group of more than 60 is scheduled to leave at the end of May for a three-week tour of Russia and Poland.

Harry W. Morgan, president of the Ambassadors for Friendship program, was in Lubbock Monday night to acquaint members of the singing group and their parents with the program.

The idea for the Friendship Ambassadors program began several years ago when Morgan was serving as a roving editor for the Reader's Digest in Czechoslovakia. Czech friends asked him to encourage Americans to travel in Eastern Europe so both cultures could learn more about each other.

Visits between the two cultures began in August 1971, when three American singing groups went on a three-week Czechoslovakian concert tour.

Aware of the success of the program in Czechoslovakia, the Romanian government asked Morgan to develop a similar one in their country. The Romanian government subsidizes the program in its country with a $100,000 grant for the American touring groups.

Private contributions from individuals also fund the non-profit, tax-exempt foundation headquartered in New York City.

Morgan said the extent of the program's success could be measured in a conversation he once had with the president of Romania.

The Romanian president said there never had been any incidents during the tours which would embarrass his country or the United States.

Morgan added that, during the program's beginning, many Eastern Europeans were afraid the American youths would be disruptive or bring drugs into the country.

The Lubbock group is one of 40 from throughout the United States which will participate this year in the program. Groups will travel to Bulgaria, Romania, Poland, the Soviet Union, Egypt and India.

HARRY W. MORGAN

The Lubbock group, which will visit three cities in the Soviet Union and three in Poland, is one of 16 alumni groups who have participated in the Friendship Ambassadors program before. More than 10,000 students from throughout the United States have participated in the program since 1971.

The Lubbock group, which will consist of 57 singers and eight adult chaperones, will leave Lubbock May 31 and return June 21. They will visit Moscow, Leningrad and Riga in the Soviet Union and Warsaw, Kracow and another city in Poland.

Gordon McMillan, who directs the choir group composed of high school and first-year college age youths, said they have been rehearsing their performance routines since the first of the year.

He said the performances will include choreographed Broadway show highlights, contemporary American pop songs with audio-visual projections, and black and white spirituals. McMillan said the group will be singing in churches in Poland and there the group would perform a religious music section.

The choir director said the performances also will include songs which will involve audience participation.

The Lubbock group is attempting through various projects to raise $40,000 to pay half of each student's fare for the Eastern European trip. Friendship Ambassadors pays a portion of the fare, also.

McMillan said a recent production of the musical "Carousel" netted $14,000 for the group. He added that a bon voyage concert will be given by the group May 29 at the Civic Center.

Morgan said one reason for the program's success was the cooperation of the countries where the groups visit. He added that there is a great curiosity and many misconceptions about American youth among Eastern Europeans.

He said that in the past there have been few groups from Eastern Europe visiting the United States in exchange for the visiting American groups. However, the past year there have been more visiting Eastern European groups allowed to travel to the United States.

The Friendship Ambassador program president said there have been several conservatory choirs from Romania in the United States recently and the first dance and song ensemble from the Soviet Union visited the United States in December 1977. Last summer, a group of Polish youth visited in Lubbock.

Morgan said he is arranging a tour for young Soviet Union teachers and journalists later this year and many student leaders from universities and colleges in Eastern Europe have expressed a desire to tour the United States.

Jury Selection Begins In Removal Suit

AMARILLO (AP) — Jury selection begins today in the trial of a removal suit against Potter County Sheriff T.L. Baker, who faces several allegations including the alleged granting of special favors last fall to millionaire murder defendant Cullen Davis.

State District Judge George W. Miller of Floydada denied a defense motion Monday seeking dismissal of the civil suit and refused to grant a change of venue.

The Davis-related allegations stemmed from Davis' celebrated trial here last fall. Davis was acquitted of capital murder charges.

The suit alleges Baker allowed Davis to move about freely and talk to spectators at the trial, including the mother of a juror. Baker also was cited for allowing the sequestered jurors to have liquor, which some county authorities claim was illegal.

Other Davis-related allegations, however, were removed Monday from the suit by Miller.

The charges surrounding the air compressor also were cited in the removal suit, as was Baker's alleged "gross carelessness" in allowing the sexual abuse of a male inmate in the county jail.

Baker also was accused in the suit of authorizing an investigation designed to embarass Jim Durham, an attorney who served as special counsel to the 1977 court of inquiry that investigated the sheriff's department.

Baker had been suspended on Jan. 12, but Miller ordered him re-instated on March 17.

Proposed Tax Measure May Hurt Waterways

By KAREN SOUTHWICK

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Officials in this inland port city fear a congressional tax proposal could deal a devastating blow to the Northeast and Midwest through a vital transportation network — the inland waterways.

Two bills in Congress would enact a users tax on diesel fuel consumed by barges; tax money would be used for maintenance and operation of locks and dams.

Officials say such a tax could more than double the price of diesel fuel used by river barges and result in increased steel and utility costs.

Inland ports like Pittsburgh, the nation's largest, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Memphis, Tenn., grew because of their locations on rivers. Industry followed.

River barges "are not only the cheapest form of transportation, but the greatest conserver of energy and the lowest polluter because they can carry more tons greater distances," said Ed Beachler, director of waterways development for Pittsburgh's Port Authority Transit.

He cited a study by the Iowa Department of Transportation which showed one barge can carry the tonnage handled by 15 jumbo railroad cars or 60 trucks.

One bill, already approved by the House, would add a 4-cent-a-gallon tax by 1979 and 6 cents by 1981, increasing costs $40 million to $58 million.

A Senate bill, backed by the Carter administration, would put a 42-cent tax on each gallon of fuel, more than doubling its current cost of about 35 cents a gallon and adding $350 million to costs. Total revenue generated by the waterways is about $950 million annually, officials estimate.

River people are backing the 4-cent House bill. "This is the lesser of the evils that have been proposed," Beachler said. "We can live with that."

But the 42-cent tax, or an even higher 68-cent tax proposed by the railroads and environmental groups, "would kill Pittsburgh," he said flatly.

The damage would come in increased costs of making steel and other products, resulting layoffs and erosion of the industrial base, and higher utility bills for consumers.

A study by the University of Pittsburgh Department of Economics shows the 4-cent tax would cost Pittsburgh area consumers $3 million annually; the 42-cent tax about $29 million and the 68-cent proposal an additional $47.5 million a year.

About 80 percent of these increases would be for fuel oil, gasoline and coal, all heavily dependent on barge shipment.

The Pitt study said the 42-cent tax would increase the cost of local steel products $2.06 a ton, while the 68-cent tax would hike steel products at least $3.29 a ton.

"Rail rates will surely rise an equivalent amount as water rates paid by shippers increase due to the fuel tax," the study added.

In addition to its economic impact on an area already reeling under the effects of two severe winters and the prolonged coal strike, the waterway users tax is criticized because it excludes coastal and deep water ports.

"I can see a small tax, but if you're going to put it on one, you should put it on all," Beachler said.

If any of the proposals are passed, they will be challenged in the courts, Beachler predicted.

"The impact of any fuel tax, or other form of waterways user charge, will not have a uniform impact..." the Pitt study said. "It will strike selectively by regions."

Beachler said when the U.S. Constitution was ratified in 1789, it included a provision first adopted in the Northwest Ordinance of 1787 guaranteeing the states that the rivers would "forever remain free."

'Business Education' Fells College Man

UNION GROVE, N.C. (AP) — The young man's friends bought him to the temporary hospital at the Old Time Fiddlers' Convention here and told the doctor he had taken some sort of drug.

He rambled continously about going to college. A doctor, trying to determine what substances had been ingested, asked the young man what he had taken. "Mostly business education," came the reply.

So it went at the three-day fiddlers convention which ended early Sunday for an estimated 130,000 persons, most of them young, boisterous and ready for springtime bash.

Deafness Labeled Incorrectly

By SUSAN GARLAND

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Specialists say as many as one-third of 5,000 institutionalized people in Maryland who are thought to be retarded, brain damaged or schizophrenic may be suffering from deafness instead.

Dr. Hiroshi Shimizu, director of the Hearing and Speech Clinic at Johns Hopkins Hospital, said children with undiagnosed deafness are often labeled slow learners because their hearing problems prevent them from learning and responding to the environment as children with normal hearing do.

But Shimizu said those whose deafness is discovered late may end up suffering from learning disabilities even after the deafness is discovered.

"If the start of training is delayed, it will definitely affect the learning process," Shimizu said in an interview. "The ages of two or three are very important for language learning."

Shimizu offered an example of one child who was first brought to the clinic at the age of six years. She was fitted with a hearing aid and was enrolled in one of several special classes for the hearing impaired in the Baltimore area.

Shimizu said the girl is now eight and not yet ready to go to regular school. If her condition had been diagnosed in infancy, her intellectual development would have proceeded normally and she would have been able to attend first grade in regular school, he said.

But Shimizu said late diagnosis of deafness among children is becoming rarer. Only about one or two children a month visit the clinic whose hearing problems have been discovered late and who, in the meantime, have been labeled as slow learners or retarded.

"It is getting better," he said. "People are becoming more careful about labeling children. We still see from time to time children who are labeled as the slow learner or retarded or brain damaged.

He said there are very few deaf children who are completely deaf.

"We usually find some residual hearing," he said. "So we put the hearing aid on every child who is at least 10 months.

"It's much easier to treat the other things if we discover hearing problems," he said. "If you never hear a language, you have no way to develop language."

Because of the increasing awareness of the problem among parents and doctors, many of the children who come to the clinic with apparent learning problems — such as the lack of response to hands clapping and other sounds — are three or four months old.

Shimizu said audiologists first evaluate the hearing loss by one of two tests.

The first test is called the Conditioning Orienting Response, which uses a colorful doll that lights up every time a sound is produced by the audiologist. The child soon learns to look at the doll when he hears a sound, expecting it to light up.

If the child does not look at the doll when a sound is made, the child may have a hearing problem or other complications.

The Brain Stem Response hearing test can be used on young children or adults who cannot perform a task due to severe mental handicap.

Candidate Sees Gas Price Dip

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock consumers may be able to expect a reduction in the price they pay for natural gas because of new gas discoveries in the state, a member of the Railroad Commission said in Lubbock today.

John Poerner, who was appointed to the commission to succeed Commissioner Jim Langdon, was in the city campaigning to fill that unexpired term which ends in 1980.

The former three-term state representative from Hondo said Pioneer Natural Gas, which serves Lubbock, was one company which had benefited from new discoveries recently.

"January was the first month when Pioneer could meet their demands without causing problems," Poerner said.

And by February, the gas company had an excess — so much so that they offered to sell gas to the city of Minneapolis.

Poerner also brought good news for Lubbock consumers on the automatic fuel cost pass-through. Poerner predicted the Railroad Commission might grant only an 85 percent pass-through to Pioneer if it requests a rate increase in the future. Pioneer is now permitted to pass along 100 percent of increased fuel costs to the consumer.

He said in most recent rate cases, the commission was permitting a pass-through of only 85 percent to encourage further exploration.

Poerner said he thinks Texas could file suit against the federal government if there are federal attempts to allocate intrastate gas supplies.

"We came into the union with our own treaty" and as a republic which was annexed — a method different from all the other states, Poerner said.

Poerner said Texas maintains its own land office and kept ownership of all its lands when entering the union and had successfully defended that ownership in a case involving Texas tidelands.

"We must maintain the ability to control intrastate gas," Poerner said. "If we lose that ability, we must defend it in court.

"We need to protect it — if not in Congress, in court. I for one am ready to fight for it," he said.

The commission filed suit over the federal strip mining act, he said, contending the state already regulates strip mining.

He extolled the successes of the state act which forces reclamation of the strip mined land.

Therefore, he said, the federal law is unnecessary in Texas.

The law would make it economically unfeasible to mine Texas lignite, he said, because the coal is not as valuable as that mined in West Virginia and Wyoming.

Poerner said the federal law would require replacement of the soil in layers, the same way it was removed, whereas Texas' law requires only that the topsoil be reclaimed.

The major problem faced by the commission is "credibility with the average citizen of the state," he said.

Commissioners have a "fine line to walk" to insure the state has adequate energy supplies to meet our needs while protecting the rate payer from unjust prices for the energy, he said.

"We must have the acceptance of the people that we are fair and impartial judges," he said.

Poerner, 45, is the former executive director of the Governor's Committee on Aging and former director of Education Resources of Texas for the Governor's office.

He is a rancher and banker in Hondo.

Poerner faces fellow Democrats Ray Lemmon of Houston, Jake Johnson of San Antonio and Jerry Sadler of Grapeland on May 6. The sole Republican in the race is James W. Lacy of Midland.

Union Pickets Keep Buses Aboard Ship

HOUSTON (AP) — National Maritime Union pickets have kept 25 buses bound for U.S. cities stalled aboard the Soviet cargo ship Skulptor Golubkina.

Representatives of the National Labor Relations Board said they would go into federal court today seeking an injunction to stop the pickets, which have prevented longshoremen from unloading the ship.

Last Friday, Shippers Stevedoring Co. of Houston and the Baltic Shipping Co. of Leningrad filed unfair labor practices charges with the NLRB saying they had reasonable cause to believe the union would induce or encourage stevedoring employees to engage in a strike.

Kirby McDowell, Houston port agent for the NMU, said he would keep pickets at the ship until the ship leaves or a court order forces him to remove them.

The NMU set up the picket lines Monday night protesting the use of U.S. tax money to transport the West German-made buses on a Soviet flag ship.

About 50 persons carrying signs and small U.S. flags marched peacefully at the Goodpasture Terminal gates when the Soviet vessel arrived.

The buses now in port are part of 400 buses built in West Germany for delivery to Houston and other cities, and were financed through a Department of Transportation grant.

A spokesman for AM General Corp., the firm importing the buses, said the Soviets offered the best and cheapest service. The spokesman said AM has no immediate plans to switch to an American shipping line.

McDowell has said there is nothing wrong with the union's informational picket lines.

Argentina Strikes Oil In Atlantic

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The Argentine government has made the first oil strike on its stretch of the South Atlantic continental shelf.

The government oil monopoly, Yacimientos Petroliferos Fiscales, said six different petroleum and gas deposits were found in a 10,164-foot well in the Gulf of San Jorge 1,150 miles south of Buenos Aires.

The announcement said more testing is needed to determine whether the deposits are worth exploiting. YPF and foreign companies are now producing about 380,000 barrels of oil a day, which takes care of 80 percent of Argentina's consumption.

Stock Mart Shows Gain In Trading

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned upward today, reversing a four-session slide.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, off 20.31 points over the past four trading days, was up 1.81 at 755.02 by noontime today.

Gainers took a 6-5 lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Before the opening the government reported that the consumer price index rose at a 7.2 percent annual rate last month, against an 8.4 percent rate in January.

While the February figure wasn't regarded as good news, analysts noted that it was less severe than some Wall Streeters had feared it might be.

And once it became clear that the market was taking the news in relatively steady fashion, buyers interest began to step up late in the morning.

Continental Oil dropped ⅞ to 27 in active trading. The company said a loss in its coal operations because of the winter-long strike would hold down its earnings for the first quarter.

Munford, which reported Monday that it posted losses for the fourth quarter and for all of 1977, fell 2 to 7½.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose .09 to 49.72. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .05 at 128.36.

Volume on the Big Board came to 8.84 million shares as of noontime, against 7.95 million at the same point Monday.

City Council Candidates Cite Different Priorities

By PAULA TILKER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Neither of the Place 1 city council candidates cited the same items in their lists of the three major concerns facing Lubbock.

Mike Stevens and Alan Henry differed on the issues when asked by The Avalanche-Journal to name their outstanding concerns.

In his order of priorities, Stevens listed a traffic dispersal system, rising utility costs and "lack of leadership" in crime prevention.

Henry's concerns, in order of priority, are conservative management of public funds and facilities, negotiations for long-range water supplies and "successful" conclusion of the natural gas rate and pass-through case that will be heard by the city council, probably in July.

The two candidates are seeking the Place 1 council seat that is being vacated by Dirk West, who is a mayoral candidate. Henry, 36, is an insurance agent. The 39-year-old Stevens is a commodities broker.

Both were asked by the A-J for their views on broad issues that may have to be answered by the council in upcoming months.

On the subject of crime, Henry advocated a mass media campaign to acquaint the public with methods of avoiding being victimized.

He also supported a restitution program, saying he believes it would be a "major deterrent" to crimes if the lawbreaker knew he would have to work to repay victims for their losses.

Stevens emphasized the need for a crime prevention unit that would be patterned after successful endeavors in other West Texas cities. Such a unit, he said, would be comprised of policemen who would educate the public on how to protect life and property.

He noted that he has submitted a specific proposal to the police department and city government. But his idea has been ignored, Stevens said.

When asked about fuel cost pass-throughs, Henry and Stevens responded by emphasizing different aspects of the issue.

Henry noted that the council has initiated a utility rate case with Pioneer Natural Gas Co., seeking answers to questions about a possible industrial rate and pass-through costs. He anticipates a successful conclusion in the case, he said.

Stevens charged that the council, of which Henry is a current member, has failed to monitor pass-through charges. As it currently operates, Stevens said, the pass-through system has had a "crippling effect" on the community.

He also proposed a simplified billing form to break down various bill charges.

Having two utility companies competing in Lubbock is "healthy," Henry said. Stevens decried duplication of facilities and what he called lack of planning for Lubbock Power and Light's future.

Stevens said that Community Development block grant funds should not be "juggled" to meet other project costs. He obviously referred to a council decision to use CD money to partially fund a fire station that was to have been built by bond funds. The bond sales have been delayed by court litigation.

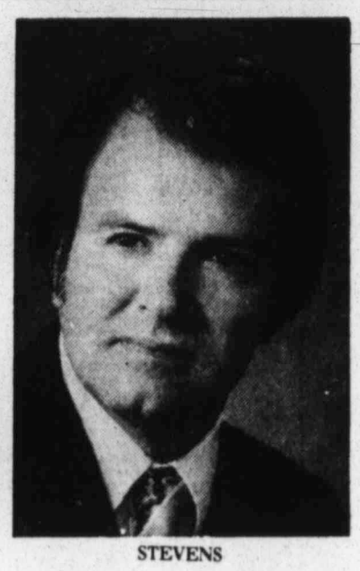

Henry, also noting the use of CD money for a fire station, called it a "special problem." He advocated spending the CD money primarily on housing but said other projects also should be included in the program.

Council Candidates Address Issues

This is the second in a series of interviews with city council and school board candidates running in the April 1 election. Views of the two Place 1 council contestants are presented today. The candidates are listed in the order their names will appear on the ballot.

HENRY

STEVENS

Qualifications

Alan Henry, who has filled Place 3 on the city council for four years, is an insurance agent. He is 36-years-old and lives at 3302 43rd St. He has been secretary of the Food and Fiber National Institute of Achievement, president of the Society for Crippled Children, vice president of the South Plains Association of Governments and regional director of Region II of the Texas Municipal League. He also is a member of the Southwest Rotary Club and American Business Club.

I believe my four years of experience on the city council combined with the other civic and service positions I have held in the community over the past several years plus my background in business management qualify me for the job.

Commodities broker Mike Stevens is 39-years-old. He attended Texas A&M University and Texas Tech University. Stevens, who lives at 3006 69th St., is a member of the management advisory committee of ContiCommodity Services Inc., and the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce, where he chairs the agribusiness task force. He served as a trustee of the Lubbock Osteopathic Hospital and on the county election board. He is the former chairman of the Volunteers of America.

I have a good number of years of business experience as a citizen and taxpayer of Lubbock. I have been successful in my business and civic endeavors in the city. The obvious weakness in our city government has become increasingly apparent to me.

Crime

I have long advocated a concentrated mass media public awareness program into the causes of crime and methods for preventing crime. I advocate continued support for our law enforcement officers and I believe strongly in a program of restitution to victims of crimes. I'm convinced that a major deterrent to many crimes would be for those who would break the law to know that they will be expected to work to repay victims for their losses in addition to other penalties prescribed by law.

No emphasis has been allowed to be put on crime prevention. Other cities have initiated and been successful with crime prevention units. Many crimes such as burglary are not only the easiest to commit and the easiest to prevent but the toughest to solve. Crime prevention units in other cities have been extremely successful in reducing the overall crime index and increasing the conviction rate. I have offered a specific proposal to the police department and to our city government for the creation of such a unit here. So far the reaction has been the same. That is to ignore the proposal as has gone on for several years prior to election time of the massage parlors which promoted open prostitution and even more importantly perpetuated the related problems such as narcotics.

Community Development Funding Policies

The law requires that Community Development (CD) funds be used primarily to benefit low-and moderate-income citizens. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development construes this law to mean that funds can be spent only in low-and moderate-income neighborhoods. I believe that, with these regulations in mind, we should concentrate primarily on housing. But other projects such as street paving should also be included. We have a special problem at this time in that it has been necessary to use CD funds for some projects such as fire stations because the bonds that were voted by the people for these purposes are tied up in court.

The problem with all federal monies is that strings are always attached. Since the current guidelines dictate that the first priority on the use of federal funds be used for housing development, I tend to concur. The matter of juggling monies allocated or voted on for one particular project to another project that may have fallen short has caused serious economic problems within our community and leads to the legitimate question that citizens ask wondering where the money went or what happened to the original project.

Fuel Cost Pass-Through

The city council last fall initiated one of the most far-reaching utility rate cases in the history of Texas. The council has been investigating not only the pass-through but also the rate structure, the price paid for gas purchased from subsidiary companies and the possibility of an industrial rate, which could potentially reduce electric bills. I made the motion to initiate this rate case and look forward to its successful conclusion within the next several months. Any improper charges found in any area of our utility costs will be required to be refunded to the consumers.

On the 20th of each month the gas company sends the figures to City Hall concerning the following month's fuel adjustment. The city then has 10 days in which to say yea, nay or inspect the figures. Our city council has failed to monitor these figures and ensure that the utility billpayers are getting a fair shake. No other individual in this city has the pass-through for their own personal or business expenses and must survive through proper management. I'm not unsympathetic with the problems of the oil and gas industry but the pass-through in its present form initiated by my opponent has had a crippling effect on the businesses and citizens of our community. I would also propose the utilities use a more simplified billing form that would breakdown the various charges on their utility bill.

Utility Company Duplication

As a member of the city council, I am elected to serve on the board of directors of Lubbock Power and Light (LP&L). I intend to continue to do whatever is possible to keep LP&L in a competitive posture. The only people who can alter or eliminate the dual system in Lubbock are the citizens through a charter election. Personally, I believe that competition is healthy.

Our city has been decorated with some 48,000 utility poles costing the taxpayers some $25 million. This is a perfect example of lack of planning on the part of our city fathers. It doesn't make much sense to me to build new power plants with public money that have a built-in obsolescence. It's an absolute fact that natural gas supplies will not be available forever. It kind of galls me to see the kind of money spent on a plant that cannot be converted to coal or another energy form and to cool that plant with fresh water —one of our most valuable resources —rather than sewage water.

Priorities

Number 1: Sound, conservative management of public funds and facilities.
Number 3: Successful conclusion of the natural gas rate and pass-through case.

Number 1: Traffic dispersal system.
Number 2: Rising utility costs.
Number 3: Lack of leadership in crime prevention.

Judge Refuses To Issue Order Stopping Loan Interest Poll

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Democrats cleared up one point Monday but have one more hurdle to clear Thursday before they can start printing the May 6 primary ballots.

District Judge Herman Jones refused Monday to issue a court order stopping the State Democratic Executive Committee from printing a non-binding referendum question on the primary ballot that would ask voters if they appprove increasing the interest rates on loans under $5,000.

Whether the Democrats will be able to take a straw poll on horse race betting comes before another district court judge on Thursday.

"The court should approach any action of a political party with utmost caution," Jones said after a two-hour hearing. "It seems to me that the State Democratic Executive Committee has determined it wants to submit this matter to the voters and I do not find any basis for the court to inject itself."

Both referendum questions were placed on the May 6 Democratic primary ballot at a meeting of the SDEC in Waco on March 13.

The horse race betting question also will appear on the Republican primary ballot. There have been no legal questions raised on the GOP ballot.

Carrin Patman, wife of Sen. Bill Patman, D-Ganado, an opponent of higher interest rates, said she proposed the referendum in the SDEC's legal affairs subcommittee on March 13. It was adopted later by the full committee without dissent.

Mrs. Patman contends that interest rate increases are sought mostly by out-of-state small loan companies who do not want Texas voters to have a say in the decision.

Robert Mansker, SDEC member from Greenville, said he opposed the referendum in the subcommittee because it was "lopsided" and "unfairly presented."

Lloyd Hawkins, Austin, registered lobbyist for Beneficial Finance Co., said it would be "a waste of time" to ask the 1979 Legislature for an interest rate increase if voters approved the referendum.

"It will hurt us immediately if it is even put on the ballot," he said.

Lawyers for Hawkins and others argued that it was unconstitutional for the SDEC, whose primaries are financed partially by state appropriations, to "use public money to influence the legislature for private purposes." He said small loan lenders are affected most because it is the only industry where the legislature directly sets interest rates.

Lawyers for Patman and the SDEC claimed the small loan industry wanted to muzzle voters to keep them from expressing their views.

Views Given By Connally On Carter

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — Former Texas governor, cabinet secretary and GOP statesman John Connally alternately complained about and complimented the Carter administration Monday while remaining shy about his own political future.

Connally said Carter had done a good job in handling the Middle East and a not so good job in handling the nation's energy problems. When asked if he would be a candidate for president in 1980, he said he hadn't decided yet.

"I would say as of the moment the president is doing very well in his handling of the Mideast thing," Connally said in a speech to the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association.

"I think he's recognizing that he has to be evenhanded. I think he recognizes that we are committed to the preservation and protection of the state of Israel, its boundaries."

Connally noted Carter has said the Israelis must withdraw immediately from the southern portion of Lebanon and that the United States will sell planes to Egypt and Saudi Arabia, as well as to Israel.

"And I think all those positions are sound and I hope he stays with them," Connally said. "And I hope the American people say to the Congress that they certainly want the Congress to approve sale of equipment to Saudi Arabia as well as Egypt as well as Israel."

Connally criticized the Carter energy policy, saying oil and natural gas prices needed to be completely deregulated to lessen dependence on foreign oil.

While talking politics, Connally said the most important thing the Republican party had to do was elect legislators, congressmen and governors — but when asked if he would run for president he replied: "I don't know yet. I don't know. I frankly do not know."

He said there was a good chance the GOP could unseat Carter in 1980.

"But that isn't what we need as much as we need a victory in 1978," he said. "We need to elect governors and congressmen and legislators in 1978 a whole lot more than we need to elect a president in 1980.

"We've shown we can elect a president. You know we've done it 16 out of the last 24 years. But it hasn't helped us much, because the ultimate power is in the Congress. That's where the power is in the country. It's in any legislative body."

Not all of the persons in the line of succession to the British throne are "royal," and several of the "royals" are preceded in the line by commoners.

Government Postpones Port Arthur Elections

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department has postponed indefinitely Saturday's city council elections here because it said the consolidation with two neighboring communities diluted black voting strength.

Federal officials said, however, that the objection to consolidation with the bedroom communities of Pear Ridge and Lakeview will be reconsidered if this Southeast Texas city implements "fairly-drawn single member districts."

City Manager George Dibrell said the city is considering filing a suit in federal court asking for a declaratory judgement on Monday's ruling.

Mayor Bernis Sadler said he had "absolutely no comment" on the ruling.

Resolution of the election issue could take up to a year since Port Arthur cannot go to single member districts without a charter election, said Robert Keith, special counsel to the city.

Dibrell said state law will prohibit Port Arthur from conducting a charter election before July.

Black leaders, meanwhile, were elated at the decision.

The Rev. C.O. Hall, said, "I am pleased with the decision, of course, because it was such a long time coming. Single member districts is the only fair election system we can have in this city."

"It doesn't surprise me," said A.Z. McElroy. "I hope we can sit down and find a workable solution. I don't think the community is that far apart."

The Justice Department's objection said: "Consolidation results in a significant dilution of black voting strength in Port Arthur. Our analysis of election returns in Port Arthur elections also reveals an apparent unwillingness on the part of the white electorate to support candidates favored by black voters in the city."

Port Arthur council members got the bad news in a letter signed by John Huerta, acting assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's civil rights section.

Immediatley after hearing of the decision, a local three-judge panel, which was named earlier to hear a black group's suit against the city's election method, delayed Saturday's balloting.

The panel ordered the present council and mayor to stay in office until such time as the question of voter discrimination is resolved.

Dibrell said absentee balloting will continue on two un-related referendum issues.

The Justice Department contended that "because the city council of Port Arthur is elected at large, the necessary effect of the consolidation would appear to be an enhancement of the power of the white majority to exclude blacks from effective participation in the political process."

Railroad Panel Member Denies Personal Gains From Post

By United Press International

A Texas Railroad Commission member is defending himself from allegations he could personally profit from his post, saying he no longer controls his investments in the oil, gas and mineral industries he now regulates.

"Prior to taking the oath of office, I conveyed all of my mineral interest in properties having the potential to produce oil, gas and other minerals regulated by the commission to the Austin National Bank trust department," Commissioner John Poerner said Monday.

"The mineral deed is filed in the Medina County Clerk's office and is available for inspection by the general public and all interested parties."

During the weekend one of Poerner's opponents in the Democratic primary said it didn't matter what kind of trust Poerner's securities were in. Ray Lemmon of Houston said as long as Poerner held the mineral investments — regardless of whether he controlled them — his decisions on the commission would have some impact on the securities.

Lemmon said Poerner was guilty of having a conflict of interest and should either divest himself of those holdings or resign. Poerner, however, indicated he would not resign and challenged Lemmon and all other candidates in the race to open their investments for public inspection.

Poerner said he directed his bank to cooperate with anyone who wanted to inspect his trust.

"I have no control of the property previously held by me and I urge all other candidates in this race to bring forth and describe in detail to the people their holdings," he said. "And I encourage them to dispose of it as I have done."

Poerner was appointed to the commission Jan. 1 to fill the unexpired term of Commissioner Jim C. Langdon, who resigned.

In other campaigns, Gov. Dolph Briscoe said the Texas State Teachers Association should make public its tapes of interviews with himself and Attorney General John Hill.

The TSTA endorsed Hill in the Democratic governor's race, and Briscoe contended Hill won the endorsement by promising a substantial teacher pay raise.

The Texas Educators Political Action Committee refused an earlier request to make the tapes public, saying candidates interviewed by the group had been told the sessions would be confidential.

"Frankly, it is incredible that the tapes should be held in secrecy under these circumstances," Briscoe said. "TEPAC has put itself in a position of stonewalling. This does not render a service to the teachers whom you represent nor to the people of Texas."

In the campaign for the Democratic nomination for state treasurer, Harry Ledbetter again urged an investigation of Treasurer Warren G. Harding's campaign-financing tactics.

Marvin Thomas, Harding's campaign treasurer, resigned last week. Ledbetter said Thomas resigned amid charges he had conspired to illegally influence an upcoming election for a Dallas County judicial post.

"I've tried to warn the voters about Warren Harding and his downtown Dallas political gang ties, and I'm afraid until now some people thought I was just indulging in political rhetoric," Ledbetter said.

GOP Hopeful Using Big Names

HOUSTON (UPI) — A GOP candidate for Texas Attorney General is hoping a mixed doubles of top ranked athletes and top ranked politicans will be enough to give him a winning campaign war chest.

In a fund raising event for Texas candidate James Baker, former President Gerald Ford has agreed to make his tennis debut in matches with circuit stars John Newcombe and Dick Stockton.

"This is the first time he (Ford) has ever competed publicly in tennis," Baker said Monday. "I am honored and delighted President Ford has chosen to visit Houston and help our campaign in this way."

In 1976 Baker reached national prominence in directing the Ford presidential campaign. He then returned to his homestate of Texas to make his own bid for office.

Baker said Stockton, Newcombe and possibly other celebrities will participate in some singles exhibitions at the May 2 event at The Summit. Then Baker and Stockton will team up and take on the duo of Ford and Newcombe in a doubles match.

The event, open to the public at $5 per adult, 50 cents per child and $100 per box, is expected to raise $35,000 to $50,000, Baker said. Box seat holders will be invited to a reception with Ford and other celebrities.

Baker, unchallenged in the May primary, said he expects Ford's visit to be the first of several appearances on his behalf by major national Republican figures, including former California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

He said Stockton and Newcombe will donate their services, which will be reported as in-kind contributions.

Elderly Pianist 'Feels' Music

By CYNTHIA STEVENS

NEW YORK (AP) — Only the magic wand was missing as the silver-slippered pianist dressed in lilac appeared at the Carnegie Recital Hall to play Beethoven from a memory that is the very essence of her 94-year-old life.

Edwine Behre, who helped found a music school in Adamant, Vt., 40 years ago as a "refuge for oppressed people," bent her tiny frame over a Steinway grand and steered her forearms over the keyboard.

Muscular hands, fueled by veins in bas-relief, played a magnificent "Largo e mesto, Sonata Op. 10 No.3," a slow piece technically within the range of aged fingers.

"In some ways old people play better (than young musicans)," she explains to the incredulous. "They understand more. It's a feeling. Other old people tell me they feel they really get the innards of music more than they did.

"Course they don't have the facility," she adds, her fingertips gliding through a soft white nest of angel hair.

"Memory? Oh, I've always played from memory — I just prefer it that way, but I don't think one has to play from memory to be good," Miss Behre says with a humility rare in the artistic.

Offstage, Miss Behre's concentration turns to a hearty good humor and she laughs often. She grows serious only when the conversation turns to music or the "terrible period" of Adolf Hitler's dictatorship in Germany.

German by ancestry, Miss Behre and her writer friend, Alice Mary Kimball, were shocked and ashamed at the Nazis' treatment of the Jews. They founded their school in a small quarry town where they could afford to buy an old building and fix it up, to protect Jews, whom they felt were also being oppressed in the United States.

The school, now an expanded facility, trains music teachers in the summertime and gives a recital here each year.

Miss Behre's devotion to the piano is unquestioned, but she admits having had "a lot of interests. Acting is one. I always wanted to be an opera singer. But I have such a little tiny voice. If I had been an opera singer, where would I be now? At 94 there are no opera singers, I think."

Tracing her history, she recalls, "In my day — after the Civil War — they had the idea we must not touch the grand piano — that's not for little girls!

"They wouldn't let me start to play until I was 8," she complains.

As a teen-ager Miss Behre made a "passionate decison" never to marry and risk having a husband interfere with her music. Several years later she went to Vienna to study with Theodor Leschitizky on-and-off for five years and then returned to New York to teach.

Miss Behre still teaches in the subdued Victorian living room in her apartment of 30 years. Two pianos are on one side of the large room, which lined with dark wooden panels, rows of books and pictures.

The music "is somewhere in my blood. If I couldn't hear or think music, it would be the end," she explains, when asked about her ability to still hear notes so well.

"The last thing a person relinquishes is the apparatus one's used to. I'm used to a musical apparatus. Music is the last thing I will stop hearing. When I get to the point when I have to stop it will be quite sad. I don't know what I'll do then."

Program's Creator Receives Award

PARIS (AP) — "Sesame Street," the internationally-acclaimed children's educational TV program, has earned a prestigious "French connection" for its creator.

Joan Ganz Cooney, president of the Children's Television Workshop, has been awarded the 1977 prize for education by the Institut de la Vie here for her "remarkable work in the field of education" as exemplified by Sesame Street.

The $50,000 prize, voted jointly to Mrs. Cooney and the Educational Broadcasting Division of BBC, has been awarded bi-annually by the Institut since 1973. Past winners have included Swiss psychologist Jean Piaget for his research on child development and French school teacher Marcellin Bachalard, who is cited as an example of teachers everywhere who have devoted their lives to their students.

Critic Calls Revue 'First-Class' Fare

By WILLIAM GLOVER

NEW YORK (AP) — All aboard for "A Bistro Car on the CNR" and some first-class musical fare.

The breezy revue that opened last week at the 48th Street Playhouse originated in Canada and, as "Jubalay," successfully toured the Toronto-Vancouver circuit for two years.

Its quartet of singers, the program vows, typify the casual entertainment once purveyed in the lounge car of the Canadian National Railway's Toronto-Montreal express.

For south-of-the-border spectators, that leads to occasional bits of colloquial confusion, soon forgiven because there's so much brisk joviality and performance quality.

The 23 songs were composed by Patrick Rose, one of the members of the cast and a dapper gent at the guitar and banjo. With him are Henrietta Valor, Marcia McClain and Tom Wopat, clever and lusty vocalists every one.

With lyrics by Merv Campone and Richard Ouzounian of amiable predictability, the material salutes such matters as the terrors of reaching age 30, how to become a bigtime hockey player, the wonders of romance and the necessity of making it in the U.S.A. before becoming a "genuine grade A Canadian Superstar."

As the make-believe train crosses from Ontario to Quebec, two numbers extol "La Belle Province" and rue possible political separation.

Rose's tunes brim with more exuberance than melody, but are directed by Ouzounian at a pace that intensifies their merits and topical contrast. A small, concealed combo backs up the singers with percussive aplomb.

Humorist Works On Radio Comedy Pilot

By JAY SHARBUTT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — National Public Radio offers many things, but not a resident humorist. Mac Calhoun, award-winning surreal vendor at WRFK-FM in Richmond, Va., may soon remedy that.

He's putting together the pilot of what could be a weekly half-hour comedy show for NPR's 192 non-commercial stations, according to Peter Darg, WRFK's program director.

He says the project began shortly after Calhoun's nightly "Nightlife" series of jazz and gently daft satire was twice honored at public radio's eighth annual conference in San Francisco this month.

The show was picked as public radio's outstanding local program for 1977 and also won NPR's cultural drama award.

Which tends to bemuse Calhoun, 28, a slow-talking, deadpan native of Charlotte, N.C. He's only been in radio five years and says before that "I'd been donating blood, mostly" to earn a living.

Mac's "Nightlife," which began on WRFK four years ago, used to feature such cultural events as "The Blue Danube Barn Dance," catering simultaneously to classic and country music fans alike.

"That's no longer on, by popular demand," he said by phone from Richmond.

"But we have been premiering operatic works, like 'Der Flying Buttress' by Porter Wagner. I also like to drop in a public affairs feature now and then, like 'Legums and the Law.'"

He was asked to elucidate, if possible.

"Well, it deals with what you can and cannot do with a consenting vegetable," Calhoun explained.

He also said "Nightlife" has informed the folks in Richmond that the plays for which Shakespeare got credit actually were written by a distant relative, Sir Toby Barfly.

Sports fans aren't neglected, he added with pride: "Right after the last Super Bowl, we had a pre-game Super Bowl report."

In the opinion of program director Darg, it's high time public radio in America featured a homegrown humorist instead of imports.

"Public broadcasting, for comedy and satire, has been depending almost exclusively on the BBC," he contends. "They dredge out of their archives things like 'The Goon Show.'"

He referred to a popular British radio comedy that starred actor Peter Sellers, among others.

"Those things go back to the '60s, even the '50, but nothing has been done a national basis here," Darg said. "So we're hoping Mac will be the one who finally does it."

During the interview, Calhoun disagreed with the theory that with a few exceptions the once-flourishing art of radio comedy, which gave America such greats as Fred Allen, is dying out.

"Well, there are a lot of radio humorists about," WRFK's staff mind-bender drawled. "But the people who are putting it out are taking it seriously."

Magic Buff Restores Building As Museum

MARSHALL, Mich. (UPI) — It took more than an abracadabra and a presto for Bob Lund to pull the American Museum of Magic out of his hat.

Magic long ago cast its spell on Lund, a former Hearst Corp. employee and Detroit editor for Popular Mechanics and Motor magazines.

Three years ago, he bought a 130-year-old building that used to house a bakery and turned it into a magic museum. The project cost at least $30,000.

The first floor of the museum will open April 1, complete with Lansing prestidigitator Don Kill — the Amazing Killdon — who will escape from a straight jacket a la Harry Houdini.

History buffs have encouraged Lund and his restoration work because of the former Gallaway Bakery's pegged 4-by-12 supports in the basement, which span 75 feet, and the building's curiously curved walls on the second floor.

The restoration work itself was painstaking with layer after layer of baking grease and debris removed to restore much of the structure's original beauty.

Lund first became interested in magic at age seven and has been collecting memorabilia since his teens.

"Part of the joy of owning these things is in showing them," Lund said. "This museum is a vision I've had for a long time and I know it will be a success."

The oldest piece in Lund's collection is a sheepskin record of a real estate transaction signed in 1584 by Reginald Scot, author of "The Discovery of Witchcraft." In his book, Scot explained magic tricks and Shakespeare used the book as a reference for the witches scene in "Macbeth."

Also in the collection are a circa 1877 statue of "The Traveling Magician" by John Rogers and some of Houdini's escape contraptions.

Lund has 9,000 books and pamphlets on magic and 2,500 huge posters.

Before the books could be shelved and the posters hung, the restoration had to be completed.

Dunn said he thought every one of the building's owners had tried to fill the basement.

Judge Granted Immunity

WASHINGTON (AP) — Over the vigorous dissents of three members, the Supreme Court today granted legal immunity to an Indiana judge who approved a mother's request that her unknowing 15-year-old daughter be sterilized.

Reversing a federal appeals court ruling, the court decided that DeKalb County Circuit Judge Harold D. Stump cannot be sued for damages by the sterilized daughter, now 22.

Judges cannot be sued for erroneous — even malicious — decisions unless there was "a clear absence of all jurisdiction," the court said in adhering to a century-old doctrine of judicial immunity.

Even the "tragic consequences" of Stump's actions are not enough to deprive him of such immunity, the court said in an opinion by Justice Byron R. White.

Taking the rarely exercised privilege of reading his dissenting opinion from the bench, Stewart said: "I think what Judge Stump did on July 9, 1971 was beyond the pale of anything that could sensibly be called a judicial act."

"A judge is not free, like a loose cannon, to inflict indiscriminate damage whenever he announces that he is acting in his judicial capacity," Stewart said.

Linda Kay and Leo Sparkman of Kendallville, Ind., sued in 1975 seeking damages for the tubal ligation performed on Mrs. Sparkman four years previously.

Mrs. Sparkman did not find out until 1975 — two years after she married — that she could not have children.

Mrs. Sparkman, then Linda Kay Spitler of Auburn, Ind., was 15 when her mother decided that she had to undergo the operation.

According to Mrs. Sparkman's mother, the teen-ager had begun dating and staying overnight with older youths and men. Mrs. Sparkman's mother said her daughter was "somewhat retarded."

Armed with a legal document in which she agreed to waive any future liability claim against attending physicians and the DeKalb Memorial Hospital, Mrs. Sparkman's mother won Judge Stump's approval to have the operation performed.

The teen-aged girl was told she was going to have her appendix removed. She never personally appeared before Stump before the operation.

Mrs. Sparkman's suit charged Stump with denying her due process of the law and subjecting her to cruel and unusual punishment.

Her suit now will never go to trial, even though the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled last year that Judge Stump had shown "an illegitimate exercise of his common law power."

"Here, a juvenile was sterilized without the taking of the slightest steps to ensure that her rights were protected," the appeals court said.

White's opinion today said, "We cannot agree that there was a clear absence of all jurisdiction ... Judge Stump performed the type of act normally performed by judges ...."

The court's vote was 5-3. Justice William J. Brennan Jr., who was ill when the case was argued, did not participate in the decision.

In another action, the Supreme Court ruled today that the federal government can prosecute acts of extortion involving interstate commerce without having to show that the alleged crime involves "racketeering."

The court unanimously reinstated the conviction of Donald Culbert for attempted extortion. He was was accused of trying to extort $100,000 from the Bank of Marin in San Rafael, Calif., by threatening the bank's president, William Murray.

The FBI learned of the plan through an informant and foiled the plot before Culbert got the money.

Culbert was sentenced to four years in prison.

But the 9th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals threw out the conviction on grounds that the government failed to show that "racketeering" was involved. The appeals court said it was a requirement of the Hobbs Act of 1946, under which Culbert was convicted, that racketeering be proven.

Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall said: "Nothing on the face of the statute suggests a congressional intent to limit its coverage to persons who have engaged in 'racketeering.' Nothing in the legislative history supports the interpretation of the statute adopted by the court of appeals."

Marshall dismissed the contention that there was any requirement under the law to show the existence of "an organized conspiracy" in order to get a conviction.

Marshall also noted that congressional debates over the Hobbs Act were "replete with statements that the conduct punishable under the Hobbs Act was already punishable under state robbery and extortion statutes. Congress apparently believed, however, that the states had not been effectively prosecuting robbery and extortion affecting interstate commerce and that the federal government had an obligation to do so."

Crippled Plane Lands Safely

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — An Allegheny Airlines commuter plane landed safely here Monday despite losing a tire on takoff from Newark International Aiport, airport officials said.

None of the five passengers aboard the plane was injured, officials said.

A spokesman at Wilkes-Barre-Scranton Airport said the pilot wasn't aware the plane lost a tire on takeoff until he was notified by radio.

Japanese Delay Airport Opening

TOKYO (AP) — Violence has again forced postponement of the opening of Tokyo's new international airport, throwing airlines and government officials into confusion.

The billion-dollar airport at Narita, 41 miles northeast of Tokyo, was scheduled to open Thursday after six years of delays, with flights in and out beginning Monday. But Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda decided at a special cabinet meeting that the destruction Sunday by militant foes of the airport, who wrecked the control tower and are threatening more violence, necessitated another postponement.

Transport Minister Kenji Fukunaga said it would take until mid-April to repair the damage to the control tower's radar, communications and weather equipment.

Promising to take "forcefully drastic measures" to protect the airport against future violence, Fukada said the cabinet would meet again on Friday to set a new opening date. The Kyodo news service said it was told the date would be sometime in May.

In New York, spokesmen for the airlines that fly from the United States to Japan — Northwest Orient, Pan American World Airways and Japan Air Lines — said passengers would not be affected by any postponement of the opening of the new airport. The airlines said flights would continue to land at the old Tokyo airport until the new facility opened.

Takenori Kato, chairman of the Public Safety Commission, told reporters it would be difficult to extend the mobilization period for the 14,000 policemen whose presence at the airport for nearly a week failed to prevent the destruction Sunday.

A spokesman for Japan Air Lines said about 20 percent of the airline's equipment had been moved to Narita, and foreign lines were planning to move in during the weekend.

"We're quite happy to wait," said the JAL man. "We don't feel like moving into an airport with a security problem."

About half the 200 customs and immigration officials from Tokyo's old airport, Haneda, had already moved to the new facility.

The Japan Travel Bureau, which handles the largst portion of Japanese foreign tours, had told thousands of customers they would be leaving from Narita after April 2. Now, the officials complained, all those arrangements were disrupted.

The anti-airport militants — who include farmers still angry that their land was used, ultra-leftists making Narita an anti-government issue and environmentalists — vowed to continue their fight until the airport was abandoned.

"We'll employ everything we can. We'll fight until we see the airport abolished," said Issaku Tomura, the farmer who leads the Anti-Airport League.

Tomura returned last week from a two-week trip to Beirut and told reporters he found "similarities" between his group's struggle and the Palestine Liberation Organization's fight against Israel.

The airport originally was scheduled to open six years ago to take most international air traffic, leaving domestic traffic to Haneda. The opening was delayed by demonstrations, riots, attacks and other blocking tactics. Five persons have been killed, 1,800 arrested and some 8,000 injured in 56 incidents of violence.

The successful attack on the control tower Sunday was accomplished under cover of an assault on the police lines by thousands hurling fire bombs and rocks. About 50 of the militants holed up in a four-store concrete blockhouse at the end of the main runway until Monday night, when the police finally drove them out and pulled down a 60-feet steel tower they had put up on the roof to block the flight path.

Only the first phase of construction has been completed at Narita, and the airport is also unpopular because of its distance from downtown Tokyo and because the high-speed rail service that is planned is not finished.

The newspaper Mainichi said today that the airport "cannot and must not be opened before problems are solved regarding its safety, the vulnerability of which was amply demonstrated Sunday."

Absentee Vote Deadline Near

Today is the deadline to cast absentee ballots in Lubbock's city council and school board elections. Offices at City Hall and the Lubbock Independent School District administration building will be open until 5 p.m.

As of noon, 215 persons had voted absentee in the city election — just below the 1976 total of 227 absentee voters.

And 129 persons had voted absentee in the school board election. That compares with 132 absentee ballots cast in the board election two years ago.

Food Price Hike Spurs Inflation

cent above their level of a year earlier, showing the steady erosion of workers' earnings by inflation and higher taxes in recent months.

The 4.1 percent increase in beef prices in February reflects in part the severe winter weather, which has made it more difficult to feed and to move cattle to markets. The same problem has affected prices of pork, up 2.6 percent, and poultry, up 1.6 percent.

Americans looking for a night on the town or other leisure faced higher prices at nearly every turn.

Restaurant prices rose 1 percent in February and alcoholic beverages were up 0.8 percent. Taxicab fares advanced 1.1 percent, bus fares 1.6 percent and airline fares 0.7 percent. Costs of entertainment goods, such as sporting equipment and musical instruments, advanced 0.7 percent during the month.

On the bright side, the Labor Department said there were declines in February for all types of clothing, including mens' and boys' wear, down 1 percent; womens' and girls' wear, down 2.4 percent, and clothing for infants, down 1.1 percent.

Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, said the increase in food prices this year could be at least 2 percentage points higher than the 4 to 6 percent increase earlier projected by the Agriculture Department.

A warning that the entire economy may suffer if inflation continues to worsen came Monday from Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller.

He told reporters the outlook for inflation this year is probably worse than the administration's estimate of a 6 percent overall increase in consumer prices. Prices increased 6.9 percent last year.

Government officials are expressing special worry about a new emergency farm bill passed by the Senate that would increase payments to farmers for taking land out of production. The Council on Wage and Price Stability said the legislation could add between 2 and 5 percentage points to the rate of food price inflation this year.

Miller told reporters that if farmers need additional help, the money should be taken from elsewhere in the budget, rather than increasing overall federal spending by passing a new aid bill.

He urged the administration to consider its proposed $60 billion budget deficit for fiscal 1979 as a ceiling to help restrain inflation. The government also could trim the scheduled federal pay increase this year from 6.5 percent to 5.5 percent, he said.

Growing concern over the rate of inflation was reflected in an Associated Press-NBC News poll that showed it is now the major economic concern of Americans.

The poll, taken on March 21-22, showed that 49 percent of those interviewed considered inflation a bigger economic problem than unemployment. Unemployment was the major concern of 39 percent of those polled.

That represented a reversal of the January AP-NBC poll, which showed 46 percent were most worried about unemployment, compared to 38 percent who named inflation as the chief problem.

More Mines Open Today

By The Associated Press

More union coal miners returned to work today as many of the 10,000 mine construction workers removed pickets upon learning of a tentative agreement on a contract for them.

But in at least one United Mine Workers union district — No. 23 in western Kentucky — construction workers expanded their picketing and forced many of the area's 50 mines to close, said Joe Holland, district executive board member.

Holland said that about three-fourths of the district's 10,000 union miners did not report to work today. "It looks like it's pretty well shut down this morning," he said.

The West Virginia Coal Association said about 1,200 to 1,500 coal miners were blocked by construction pickets this morning, compared to 4,500 to 5,000 on Monday. Of a total of 1,400 mines in West Virginia the only reports of shutdowns came from two mines in the southern part of the state and three in the north.

In Indiana, at least eight mines and one coal shipping operation were again closed by the pickets, who said they would not abandon their line until the tentative agreement was ratified. About 1,800 miners were prevented from going to work.

Most of western Pennsylvania's mines were operating normally today, but several hundred miners were idled at a Bethlehem Steel Corp. mine in Cambria County by construction workers who picketed the midnight shift. The pickets did not reappear at 8 a.m., but the shafts stayed closed.

Three Helvetia Coal Co. mines that had been closed Monday by pickets reopened today in Pennsylvania's Indiana County. The same report came from two Barnes and Tucker Coal Co. mines in Cambria County.

Car Repairmen Ponder Impact Of Proposed Federal Controls

repairs and said they have been effective.

The Lubbock Automobile Dealers Association and the South Plains Better Business Bureau have developed a two-page agreement outlining standardized repair practices to protect customers, Fink added.

"I would just rather stay with local control than have the feds breathing down our necks," he said.

Among practices agreed to by the new car dealers, he said, are furnishing a written estimate on request with expected cost and the time required; obtaining prior authorization for all repair work; furnishing an itemized invoice for parts and service after the work is done; identifying any used or remanufactured parts; maintaining service records for at least a year; and informing the customer if any repairs are sub-let or done outside the dealership service department.

"It's a simplified approach to what Dallas has done through its city ordinance," Fink said.

He added that the guidelines are sufficient from his viewpoint, unless there is an increase in complaints to the Better Business Bureau.

Glen Best, owner of Import Specialists repair company, said a federal law would be good if it would put restrictions on car repairs similar to those on airplanes, with unqualified persons prohibited from doing difficult work.

"It would keep a lot of people from doing their own work on their car when they don't know what they're doing," Best said.

He cited brake repairs as a task that do-it-yourself repairmen often do improperly and thus endanger themselves and other motorists.

Best said he would also support the federal licensing of mechanics.

"The mechanic would be certified on this job, and if he didn't do this job correctly, it would come back to him, and he might be fined or whatever," he said.

Mechanics at Import Specialists, the dealerships and other shops in Lubbock are encouraged to test for certification by the National Institute of Automotive Service Excellence in Washington, D.C.

The private institute offers voluntary, annual certification in various phases of mechanics.

Best said one benefit of national, compulsory licensing would be to reduce "flat-rating," which impels mechanics to work "as fast as possible to make more money on the job."

Hollis Thorne, service manager at Don Crow Chevrolet, said the dealerships already were adhering to the work guidelines before they were formally enacted.

"I am all for this because then your customer knows what to expect," Thorne said.

What is needed now, he said, is a code to cover independent garagemen as well as dealerships.

"I think it would help everybody's feelings," Crow said.

"It's kind of like the bad apple in the barrel. One ruins everybody."

If legal regulations are inevitable, Crow said, he prefers a city ordinance "because each city would be more interested in their own law than the federal government would be" and city control would be more effective.

Billy Reed, co-owner of Rainbow Garage, said the Independent Garagemen and Automobile Servicing Association has between 150 and 200 members in the Lubbock vicinity and promotes good business practices.

Reed attributes public displeasure with the car repair industry in part to inflation that has increased its operating costs.

"Everything has risen in price, and people just automatically think they're getting ripped off due to that," he said.

Reed said members of the garagemen's group guarantee labor and parts and will redo a job for nothing if the labor is defective, or provide new parts for nothing and replace them for the cost of the labor if only the parts are defective.

"I think the ones that probably wouldn't follow through on it would be only about 10 percent of the whole industry," he said.

Burglar Takes Coin Collection

Loss of an expensive coin collection headed the list of costly burglaries and thefts under investigation by Lubbock police today.

John Caraway of 4608 27th St. told police whoever got through a window at his home Monday made off with a collection of silver dollars, valued at $5,680, as well as $1,500 worth of household goods. Reportedly included in the burglar's take were a television set, tape recorders, jewelry and a bicycle.

According to Bobby McCutchin, someone got into his 1101-C 52nd St. apartment during the weekend and stole $4,000 worth of household goods, including clothing, jewelry, tools and small kitchen appliances.

Wanda Wilson of 2724 2nd Place told officers a burglar broke a back door glass to get to $600 worth of jewelry at her home Monday morning.

Whoever broke through a front door at the 2220 29th St., rear, residence of Gary Rush during the past few days reportedly made off with property including a stereo, albums and a calculator. Rush valued the goods stolen at $720.

According to Sammie Bingham, two shotguns, two rifles, a camera and some tools were among the items stolen from his 2404 32nd St. house Monday. Reports indicated entry was gained by prying a rear window.

Deborah Batchelor of 2107-B 35th St. complained that someone stole a $70 .25-caliber automatic pistol from her purse at a 13th Street office Monday.

Mary Moore of 1506 E. 15th St. said a $300 stereo was stolen from her house and Cheryl Denise Martin of 2124 7th St., No. 3, reported her $120 television set missing from her apartment. Both Monday incidents reportedly occurred after someone broke through a window at each residence.

Guy Auxer of 2224 Main St. told police a $325 evaporative air-conditioner was stolen from his back yard Monday.

Albert Rodgers of 5540 18th St. said two men who helped him change a flat tire Monday night subsequently stole a bank bag containing $100 cash and $200 worth of checks. The victim told police he gave the men a ride to a 30th Street address where they grabbed the bag and ran.

A young black man who terrorized a Lubbock woman early Monday may have repeated the incident again Monday afternoon with still another city resident.

Police said the man who terrorized and sexually assaulted a 49-year-old 46th Street resident about 11:30 a.m., may have been the same one who ordered a 23-year-old women to "drop your pants" outside her home about two hours later.

The 46-year-old woman's bizarre episode began, she told officers, when she turned around from her work in a back part of her house to see an 18-to 25-year-old black man standing in her home.

She said the man, clad in overalls and tennis shoes, ordered her to remove her clothing and go to the bedroom. Then he ordered her to lie face down on the bed while he stripped.

Officers said the man reportedly brandished a pearl-handled pocket knife during the ordeal and used it to threaten the woman while sexually molesting, but not raping her.

After dressing, the man took $50 from the woman and fled east from the building. His victim told officers she was so frightened that he might hurt her she offered him the money if he would not harm her in any way.

Less than two hours later, the 23-year-old woman told officers she was cleaning an alley behind her 18th Street residence when an 18-to 25-year-old black man clad in a blue jumpsuit confronted her.

Using much the same terms as the earlier assailant, the man ordered her to take her slacks off, but when she refused he began poking a large stick at her.

The woman said she told the man her husband would soon be home and then grabbed the stick. After a short tug-of-war, the man fled, she said.

In another incident Sunday, 35-year-old truck driver David Truelock told police he and friends were in his pickup outside a 3308 58th St. residence about 9 p.m. Sunday when three men began fighting with them.

Truelock said he was backing the pickup out of the driveway when the men became enraged because they had to slow their vehicle to allow him out of the driveway.

—A $600 stereo, television set and camera from Janie Rodriguez of 2914 Amherst sometime between 2 a.m. Sunday and 6 p.m. Sunday.

—An $80 tape player from Allan Ray Shaver's 1330 62nd St. home between 11:30 p.m. Sunday and 9 a.m. Monday.

—A $1,000 nail gun and compressor from L.C. Hill's 6001 Brownfield Highway business between 2 p.m. Saturday and 7 a.m. Monday.

—About $170 in tools from Dudley Ponell's 1711 Amarillo Highway business.

—At least $1,130 in stereo equipment from Cleva Fay Taylor's 82nd Street and Indiana Avenue business before 12:46 a.m. Monday.

G.C. Stalter told police someone busted through a window to his 50th Street and Avenue A store to get at $500 in novelties and about $60 cash sometime between 8 p.m. Saturday and 10 p.m. Sunday.

Sid Moses of 1213 Ave. G told officers a $400 set of scales was missing from his business Saturday.

Burglars also took a $450 set of tools from Jimmy Rodger's 1319 65th St. home between 11 p.m. Sunday and 7:20 a.m. Monday.

Ambassador To Nigeria Says Visit Will Help Relations

By CHARLES P. WALLACE

LAGOS, Nigeria (UPI) — President Carter's visit to Nigeria will be an opportunity to improve relations with black Africa's strongest economic and military power, U.S. Ambassador Donald B. Easum says.

"I don't foresee any dramatic results," Easum said in an interview Monday. "We have a solid basis for understanding and can move on from there."

Easum said the Nigerian government has been of "great importance" in the framing of the Carter administration's African policy, most recently on the horn of Africa.

Carter arrives Friday in what will be the first state visit by an American president to a black African nation.

The ambassador said Carter and the Nigerian head of state, Lt. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, have achieved a "good understanding" on the question of the future of Rhodesia, South West Africa and the war between Ethiopia and Somalia.

Easum said the talks on Rhodesia probably will focus on the "internal" settlement reached between Prime Minister Ian Smith and three black leaders. The agreement was rejected by surrounding black nations and by guerrillas fighting to topple the Smith regime.

"The Nigerians would prefer that we condemn the internal settlement as unacceptable, but they have accepted our description of it as 'inadequate,'" he said.

The Nigerians have given important backing to American and British attempts to bring the Patriotic Front guerrillas into a comprehensive Rhodesian settlement, but advocate guerrilla war if the Patriotic Front is excluded from the settlement plan.

Economically, Nigeria is America's second most important source of foreign oil after Saudi Arabia and is the economic powerhouse of Africa.

The United States suffered a $5.1 billion trade deficit with the Nigerians last year as a result of oil imports and is seeking ways through investment and sales of technology to reduce the imbalance.

Nigeria also is concerned about the sliding U.S. dollar, the currency of payment for oil purchases, which has substantially reduced its income. One recent repercussion of this shortfall was that Nigeria borrowed $1 billion from a consortium of banks.

Easum said Carter's visit — as with Obasanjo's visit to Washington last October — is "celebrating improved relations" now prevailing between the two governments in marked contrast to the ties under Presidents Ford and Nixon.

Although preparations in Nigeria seemed relatively low-keyed, the positive and negative sides of American policy including Nigeria's unconcealed dislike for the style of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger are being aired in the relatively free press.

The bulk of Carter's work in Nigeria will be carried out Saturday and Sunday in several meetings with the Nigerian leader at his official residence.

Carter had planned to visit the ancient northern city of Kano, but the trip was canceled to give the two leaders more time for talks.

U.S. officials said that in addition to the formal meetings Carter and Obasanjo will attend church together Sunday at Lagos' First Baptist Church.

Like Carter, Obasanjo is said to be a committed Christian and is a member of the Baptist church in Nigeria.

Testimony Prohibited On Estes' Dealings

By DON HARRISON

TYLER (AP) — A state judge prohibited a lawyer for Mississippi promoter Don Trull today from pursuing in open court any alleged business dealings between paroled swindler Billie Sol Estes and Tyler millionaire Billy Pyron.

Trull's defense in a kidnapping trial before Judge Glenn Phillips is that he held one of Pyron's employees and sloshed gasoline around an office in Tyler last Aug. 9 only in an effort to get back $1.5 million he said Estes and Pyron had swindled from him.

Bill May, the Pyron employee Trull is accused of holding against his will, was on the stand today for the second day in a row. Trull's attorney, G. Brockett Irwin, questioned May, but only out of the jury's hearing. The judge sustained the prosecution's objections against pursuing the line of questioning in open court.

May said he was ordered to sign a promissory note dictated by Trull in which Pyron would pay Trull $750,000 — half of the amount Trull said he was owed by Estes.

"Do you recall having a conversation with Mr. Trull about Billy Pyron and Billie Sol Estes?" Irwin asked May, with the jury out of the court.

"This was a direct order," May replied, referring to the promissory note. "I don't call that a conversation."

May told the court Monday Trull threatened "to blow me, himself and the office up" during the four-hour siege. He said the Mississippi businessman "made me believe I was going to die."

Estes has been subpoenaed by defense attorneys, who say they will prove Estes has been engaging in business deals in violation of the strict terms of his parole.

Mays, vice president of Pyron Investments, told the jury Monday: "He (Trull) kept telling me the time was running out and that if I didn't reach Mr. Pyron by phone, he was going to blow the office up and me in it.

"Mr. Trull was very highly excited, shouting all his orders for me to go to my office, to stay in the office, that I wasn't going anywhere, to get Mr. Pyron on the phone and that I didn't have much time," Mays added.

Mays was allegedly held for about four hours.

Defense attorneys suggested to Mays that Trull might have been bluffing, but Mays replied that Trull "made me believe I was going to die."

Eleven witnesses were sworn in Monday, including Pyron, who has maintained he was not involved in any swindles alleged by Trull.

Estes, paroled in 1971 after serving six years of a 15-year federal prison term for his notorious multi-million dollar swindle, has been under investigation by state and federal authorities for his alleged recent business dealings in violation of his parole.

Escapee Tops FBI's List

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The newest addition to the FBI's list of Most Wanted Fugitives is a bank robber and prison escapee named Andrew Evan Gipson.

Gipson's arrest record dates back to 1952. He was most recently convicted of taking part in a bank robbery and in a gun battle in which a Kansas state trooper was killed.

Gipson, 51, escaped fromm the Kansas State Penitentiary last July while serving six concurrent terms of 40 to 90 years under the Kansas Habitual Criminal Law. He had served about nine years of the sentence.

The FBI described Gipson as 5-feet-7, with reddish brown hair and blue eyes. He weighs 130-140 pounds and has numerous body scars and a tattoo featuring a diamond with a dot on his ring finger.

"Gipson should be considered armed and extremely dangerous," the FBI said. "Anyone with information concerning him should take no action other than to notify the nearest FBI office."

DR. LAMB

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — In one of your columns you recommended that a diabetic severely limit starches, sugars and milk. Isn't this in contradiction to the new recommendations of the American Diabetic and Dietetic Associations for greater amount of starches so that the fat content of the diet will be reduced?

DEAR READER — No. The American Diabetic Association wants the fat reduced but that does not require you to use sugars ad starches. There are a lot of other carbohydrates that you should and could use that have a different action in relation to blood sugar (glucose) levels and insulin.

To illustrate the point: if a normal person eats a raw apple containing 50 grams of carbohydrate the blood sugar will not rise at all. Why? Because it is packaged in bulk and it is slowly absorbed into the blood stream. It will not cause a sudden need for insulin to level out the blood glucose level. Now if you drink 50 grams of sugar in water, your blood glucose level will rise sharply because it is immediately absorbed from the small intestine into the blood stream. The concentrated sugar in the intestine and blood sugar response will demand lots of insulin.

It has been shown that eating raw fruits and vegetables can significantly decrease the insulin requirements in diabetics. If you get the majority of your carbohydrates from fresh fruits and vegatables and avoid suagars and starches you will have fewer problems. You can do this and meet the objectives of the ADA to lower the percentage of fat in the diet.

Diabetics will need some milk because it is our main source of calcium. It does contain milk sugar. Another source of calcium and good protein is to use uncreamed (low-fat) cottage cheese. Part of the milk sugar had been lost in the cheese-making process and this avoids some of that problem. It is also a good idea to get your milk with other foods or in the preparation of other foods.

Since you are interested in diabetes I am sending you The Health Letter number 3-11, Diabetes, Diagnosis, Prevention and Management. Others who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me in care of The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Do vitamins have calorie counts? Since taking many vitamins a day: A,D multi-B, Bone Meal, C,E, wheat germ and iron I find I am gaining weight.

DEAR READER — No. Vitamins do not increase your calorie intake. The only relationship vitamins have to calories is that many of them are used to form complex enzymes that are in your cells. These enzymes are used to help break down carbphydrates, fats, amino acids from protein and alcohol. The energy comes from the food and the vitamins merely help to liberate it so it can be used.

So if you are gaining weight you are either eating too much food or you are not as active as you should be — or if you are past the muscle growth years and getting olders you may be losing muscle mass from inactivity.

Woman Denies Charges

By ELMER W. LAMMI

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Accusing a congressman of "character assassination," Suzi Park Thomson is asking for a chance to challenge at an open congressional hearing recent testimony linking her to the Korean CIA.

The Korean-born former congressional aide charged Rep. Donald Fraser, D-Minn., chairman of the House subcommittee on international organizations, with spending more than $1 million on a "witch hunt" that had produced only "innuendo and unproven allegations."

In a letter to Fraser, Mrs. Thomson said: "You have now assassinated my character obliquely and indirectly on two separate occasions," a reference to the panel's recent release of summaries of intelligence reports saying she was connected with the KCIA.

In requesting a public hearing, she said Fraser should "proceed either to put up or shut up."

The House Ethics Committee last year rejected her similar request for a public hearing and she finally testified in secret after being threatened with being held in contempt of Congress if she did not.

The Fraser subcommittee has not asked her to testify in public or private.

Mrs. Thomson, an American citizen, was an aide to Speaker Carl Albert for five years until his retirement in 1976 but has been unable to find another job on Capitol Hill because of her alleged links with the KCIA.

Both former Attorney General John Mitchell and a State Department official have told the Fraser subcommittee of seeing FBI and other intelligence reports indicating some kind of relationship between Mrs. Thomson and the KCIA.

No specific evidence linking her with the KCIA has been produced at the hearings, but some Korean officials have testified the Korean Embassy supplied Mrs. Thomson with liquor for parties at which KCIA agents mingled with members of Congress.

Mrs. Thomson's letter to Fraser did not specifically deny any connection with the KCIA, but in an interview with UPI she replied with a firm "no" when asked if she had ever worked for, received money from or been supplied with liquor by the KCIA or the Korean Embassy.

In the interview, she admitted some Korean officials she invited to parties attended by members of Congress may have been KCIA agents but insisted she did not know that at the time.

"They were just friends," she said.

UK Finally Reaches Goal

ST LOUIS (AP) — The injustice of winning 29 games and hearing only cries of "More! More!" from demanding Kentucky fans evaporated into the biggest smile Joe Hall had smiled all week . . . maybe all year.

"This is what it's all about," the visibly relieved and very happy Kentucky coach told a couple of hundred sports writers squeezed into a makeshift interview room.

With Jack Givens putting on an awesome display of offensive prowess, firing in 41 points, including his team's last 16 in the first half, the Wildcats subdued a youthful Duke squad Monday night 94-88 in the NCAA championship game in St. Louis' Checkerdome.

"I'm more proud of them as people than as basketball players," Hall said.

For Kentucky, ranked No. 1 virtually the entire season, victory was a must. It had to happen, Hall indicated in a Sunday news conference, or in the minds of Kentucky followers the entire season would be a failure.

So, too, presumably, would have been the careers of four seniors who made up the heart of this Wildcat squad . . . Givens, forward Rick Robey, center Mike Phillips and super-sub James Lee.

Those four were freshmen when Hall's team lost to UCLA in the 1975 NCAA finals. The next year they won the National Invitation Tournament, and last season bowed to North Carolina in the East Regional finals.

In between they had won three Southeastern Conference championships and averaged more than 22 victories per year.

"This is what we've been aiming for," Hall said in the flush of victory. "This is what our fans have been wanting."

After venting his frustrations the day

MVP Givens: The Shots Were Falling, So I Kept Shooting

ST. LOUIS (AP) — "I took one shot in the second half and it hit the side of the backboard and went in," said Kentucky's Jack Givens. "That's the kind of night I was having."

Givens, a 6-foot-4 senior forward from Lexington, Ky., didn't make every shot he threw up Monday night — but he came close enough, hitting 18 of 27 from the floor and finishing with 41 points in Kentucky's 94-88 victory over Duke in the finals of the NCAA basketball championships at the Checkerdome.

Givens scored 23 points in the first half, including the Wildcats' last 16. His performance was only three shy of the championship game record scored by UCLA's Bill Walton against Memphis State in 1973.

"I'd looked at the press guide, but I didn't know what the record was," said Givens. "Bill Walton's a great ballplayer and it would have been great beating him. I'm sure people will remember me for this game, too."

"I was just trying to contribute," said Givens. "The shots were falling in, so I kept shooting. I guess it was just my night. That's the thing about this team. With every game, it's somebody different."

Givens, who writes with his right hand but shoots with his left, was surprised to find the middle of Duke's 2-3 zone open to him.

"We thought they'd play it like Michigan State and fill the middle," he said. "Instead, they left the middle open. I was surprised that (center Mike) Gminski didn't try to come out and block my shots. I wanted the ball anytime I could get it, because I had the shots."

"What are you all going to give me?" a grinning Givens asked while embracing his mother in the flood of TV camera lights.

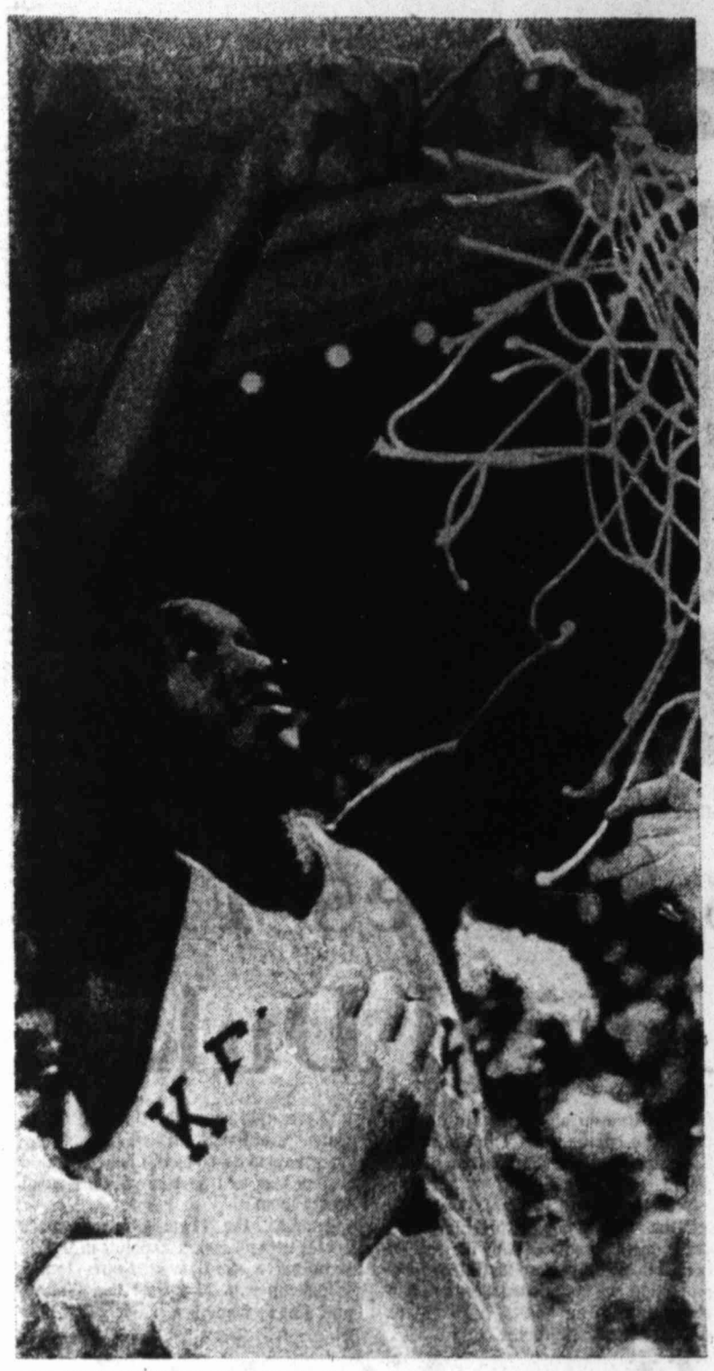

"Honey, you can have anything you want," Mrs. Givens replied.

Givens, who ranks second behind Dan Issel among Kentucky's all-time scoring leaders with 2,001 points, was asked if he planned to celebrate.

"Sure, I'll celebrate," he said. "But right now I've got schoolwork to catch up with. I've got my degree locked up, but there's still a lot of work to be done. Once that's taken care of, I plan to just go fishing and enjoy life for awhile."

Givens, who has spent his summers working in a bank in Lexington, was uncertain about the possibility of a career in pro basketball.

"I'm going to find out what the opportunities are," he said. "It appeals to me, but I've got to give it some thought."

HERSKOWITZ

Renfro Best Since McDonald?

By MICKEY HERSKOWITZ And STEVE PERKINS

Q. Would you please add up the number of new head coaches in the NFL since the end of this season? I would also appreciate a total of coaching changes in the past few years. What I am getting at is that none of these new coaches are black. Eddie Robinson of Grambling evidently was not considered by the Los Angeles Rams. Surely, his age was not a factor, as was proved by St. Louis hiring Bud Wilkinson. Also, please list the black head coaches in the NBA and any black coaches in major league baseball.

—Coley Harris, Los Angeles

A. There have been 10 new coaches named in the NFL this off-season. Since 1970 there have been 87 coaching changes.

There will be more and more black players in the NFL, and inevitably a black head coach.

Q. While watching male tennis players on TV, I have noticed that most all of them have very well-developed leg muscles. Is this due to the playing of the game itself or do they have special exercises to strenghthen their legs?

—Bruce Curtis, Travers City, Miss.

A. Oddly enough, playing tennis is not a good conditioner for tennis. When not in a tournament, the top players engage in what is called "interval training" and "change-of-pace" running programs. The first requires running varius distances between 40 and 100 yards at full speed, with an interval of 10-30 seconds of rest between sprints, depending on the individual's state of conditioning.

The change-of-pace style is exemplified by Stan Smith's regimen after a session of tennis: A run of four laps around the tennis court, the first at full speed, the second at three-quarter speed, the third at half-speed and the fourth at a walk. Smith repeats the sequence of four laps four times. College tennis coaches say this is an excellent and adequate conditioner.

A pick-up basketball game also affords the closest thing to the physical demands of a tennis match.

Q. There was a lot of comment last season about the AFC teams beating the NFC teams. I want to know about National League baseball—who has the edge between the West division and the East division?

—Kelly Watley, Rutherford, N.J.

A. After nine years of divisional play, the West teams have a combined winning percentage of .505 against the East team. It used to be more decisive than that, but lately the East has come on strong. Last season the Phillies, Cubs, Pirates and Cardinals, all had winning records against the West.

Montreal and New York were losers, but the East managed a 230-202 superiority. The Phillies were particularly tough, winning 46 against 26 losses.

Q. Mike Renfro never played on a winning team at TCU, but he made some All-America teams. Do you know what pro scouts think of him and what his chances are in the draft?

—Otis Finlayson, Denton

A. Renfro is regarded as the best "little" receiver since Tommy McDonald's heyday with the 1960 Philadelphia Eagles. But at lest four, and possibly five, wide receivers will be selected ahead of him—Wes Chandler of Florida, Ozzie Newsome of Alabama, James Lofton of Stanford and Carlos Pennywell of Grambling.

That the 5-foot-10-inch Renfro will be selected in the first three rounds is a tribute to his talents.

BASEBALL

NEW YORK — Baseball is terminating its effort to transfer the Oakland A's franchise to Denver and is prepared to play the 1978 season with two franchises in the San Francisco-Oakland area, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn said today. Until the end of last week, it appeared the A's would be sold by Charles O. Finley to oilman Marvin Davis and then be transferred to Denver. But the deal broke down Friday. And after a weekend of trying to piece it back together baseball is pulling out of the negotiations.

TENNIS

MILAN, Italy — Unseeded Peter Fleming upset third-seeded Raul Ramirez of Mexico 6-2, 4-6, 7-5 in the first round of a $175,000 World Championship Tennis tournament. In other matches, Jaime Fillol, Zeljko Franulovic and Kim Warwick rallied from first-set losses and also scored first-round victories.

Fillol of Chile defeated Chris Lewis of New Zealand 5-7, 7-6, 6-2. Yugoslavian Franulovic beat John Lloyd of Britain 3-6, 7-6, 6-4 and Warwick won a battle of powerful serves from fellow Australian John Alexander 6-7, 7-6, 6-1. In later matches, eighth-seeded Wojtek Fibak of Poland trounced Bill Scanlon 6-2, 6-3 and Gianni Ocleppo of Italy upset Australian Phil Dent 3-6, 7-5, 6-3.

BOXING

MEXICO CITY — The World Boxing Council announced that it will crown Ken Norton world heavyweight champion Wednesday in Los Angeles. WBC President Jose Sulaiman said Norton will have 90 days to defend the title against the WBC's top contender, Larry Holmes, who defeated Earnie Shavers last Saturday in Las Vegas, Nev.

The WBC named Norton champion after Leon Spinks refused to defend his title against Norton on March 18. Spinks will fight Muhammad Ali in Africa in spite of the WBC's order that Spinks must first defend his title against Norton. Spinks still is recognized by the World Boxing Association and by New York state.

NEW DELHI, India — K.D. "Babu" Singh, the power behind India's victorious field hockey teams of the 1940s and '50s, died at his home in Lucknow from apparent self-inflicted gunshot wounds. He was 55.

MINEOLA, N.Y. — Dr. Mark Gerard, the veterinarian who is under indictment for switching race horses, pleaded innocent in Nassau County Court to two charges of bribing a witness and tampering with a witness. The 43-year-old doctor was accused of switching a superior Cinzano for Lebon and cashing bets of $77,000 on the winner in a race at Belmont race track last September. He had originally been charged in a nine-count indictment by a Nassau County grand jury.

However, the original indictment was withdrawn Monday by the Nassau County district attorney's office and a superceding indictment containing the two new charges, in addition to the original nine, was accepted by County Court Judge Henderson Morrison. Gerard will remain free on $100,000 bail posted earlier.

Givens Scores 41; 'Cats Upend Duke

before the game, Hall was asked if he might retire to his beloved farm with the title in hand.

"I can't answer that right now," he said of the possibility that the pressures of Kentucky basketball might drive him out of Lexington.

But it all seemed academic as the packed house of 18,721 watched Givens perform his magic. The final score was actually deceptive. Duke, which started two freshmen, two sophomores and a junior, led only once, when Mike Gminski scored the game's first basket.

Everybody seemed nervous at the outset. Each team started with a turnover and with less than three minutes gone Phillips had collected his third foul.

But only about six minutes had elapsed when the bigger, stronger more experienced Wildcats began taking charge.

"We junked our game plan," Hall said. "Hank Iba once told me never to spread your defense from baseline to midcourt; that you would leave a big gap in there around the foul line. Duke was coming out and attacking our guards. We flashed Jack in on the post and they had to guard Jack one-on-one in that area."

Givens, an articulate 6-foot-4 forward, tossed in shots from all over the court. He was unstoppable.

His 16-point salvo in the final 3:52 of the first half sent the Wildcats into intermission with a 45-38 lead.

With 28 seconds left in the game, riding the crest of an eight-point lead, Hall poured his little-used reserves onto the court and let the starters retire to the bench in glory.

But Duke kept coming, and 14 seconds later baskets by Gminski and Ken Dennard sliced the margin to four. Back onto the court came Kentucky's starters. Eight seconds later Lee soared in for a stuff that destroyed whatever slim hopes Duke still had.

"When it got scary I took 'em out and put the kids back in who had done it for us," said Hall with a wide grin.

For Givens, the No. 2 scorer in Kentucky's storied basketball history, it was the highest point total in an illustrious career.

"Give credit to the other guys," he said with a modesty that sounded genuine. "They gave me some great feeds."

"We came very close to playing the total game," said Hall. "We came very close to breaking it open. We just held back a little bit because of the foul problem."

Givens was not the entire Kentucky attack, only about 50 percent of it. Robey battled Gminski almost to a dead heat under the boards and totaled 20 points. Kyle Macy had nine and Truman Claytor and Lee eight apiece.

Gene Banks, a diamond of a freshman, led Duke with 22 points while playing under a death threat. NCAA officials confirmed during the game that extra police protection was summoned after two telephone threats on Banks' life were received at the Checkerdome.

"I was told about the threat after the game," said Banks. "If that's what someone wants to do, so be it. I believe in God and as long as I have my faith, I won't worry about it."

Hogs Nip Irish 71-69 At Buzzer

ST LOUIS (AP) — It was only a consolation game. Neither coach particularly wanted to play it. But for Ron Brewer, the feeling wasn't mutual.

"Notre Dame," he said, "was a big game for us."

The Arkansas star, and the rest of the Razorback players, played the NCAA's third-place consolation game Monday night with championship intensity.

"It was a great thrill to beat Notre Dame," said Brewer, who accounted for the Arkansas victory personally with a 20-foot shot at the buzzer.

"A lot of people think that shot by Ron Brewer was a lucky one," said Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton. "But he's done that about eight or nine times, hitting a last shot to win ball games. He's the one we always want to have the ball when the clock is running out.

"This year he hit a couple just like that for us. He's a clutch player. He's one of the very best players to every play at Arkansas."

Brewer had no doubt about what he was going to do Monday night while sailing downcourt with time running out and the score tied at 69.

"I saw the defense was spread out," noted Brewer. "I decided I was going to take the shot. With five seconds left, I turned my back on my man and backed in. I saw the basket and turned. After I released it, I knew it was going in."

Steve Schall, the pencil-thin Arkansas center, is used to Brewer's role as a minuteman, or to be more precise, a last-second man.

"I knew that he was going to take the last shot," Schall said. He waits for two seconds to shoot. That's what he does. There's no chance for a rebound or a second shot. If it goes in, we win; if it doesn't, we don't."

Along with the glittering Notre Dame image, the Razorbacks were shooting for something else Monday night. More inspiration was provided them by an abdominal injury to forward Jim Counce, who was hurt driving to the basket late in the first half. Counce was taken to a local hospital for overnight observation, although the injury was not believed serious.

"When Jim Counce went out," said Brewer, "we dedicated the game to him."

Brewer finished with 20 points, second to Marvin Delph's 21 as the Razorbacks ended with a fancy 32-4 record. The Fighting Irish, led by Dave Baton's 15 points, concluded the season with a 23-8 mark.

Sutton, dead set against consolation games at a press conference on Sunday, softened his position somehwat Monday night, although he still wasn't thrilled with the proceedings. Notre Dame's Digger Phelps, however, was still adamant in his feelings.

"Win or lose, I just don't like consolation games," he said. "It isn't fair to the kids or the teams. If you're Notre Dame, you never play a consolation game. Just like he (Sutton) said, one of their big wins was over Notre Dame. It's that way for us every game."

By WILL GRIMSLEY
Associated Press Special Correspondent

NEW YORK — It may sound good on the air and look sensational in print, but Chris Evert isn't pleased with being pictured as an automaton on the tennis court — "Little Miss Icycle," "Lady Poker Face," "The Indominatable Machine."

Analysis

"It sounds so negative," the 23-year-old queen of the courts said. "It wouldn't be so bad if people said I was calm and collected. But it makes me sound like such a monster."

Even so, Chris isn't as disturbed as the rest of her family over the public image that has been fashioned by the media.

"My mom gets very upset at the constant reference to me as a cold, impersonal human being," she said. "I don't read the papers that much. Purposely. I don't. It keeps me from getting upset."

After a three-month sabbatical from big time tennis, the world last two weeks player returned to action with appearances the last two weeks at Boston and Philadelphia, losing in her season debut to Evonne Goolagong but bouncing back to beat Billie Jean King at Philly 6-0, 6-4.

"I was a little nervous at Boston," she said. "With all the fanfare about my return, but at Philadelphia I felt very loose and relaxed again. It was great."

Miss Evert's next big test comes in the $125,000 Family Circle Magazine Cup April 11-16 at Sea Pines, S.C., where she will again face up to her growing list of challengers — Miss Goolagong, Mrs. King, Martina Navratilova, Virginia Wade, Rosemary Casals, Tracy Austin and Pat Shriver.

Chris, fresh and exuberant, her hazel eyes flashing with excitement, came to New York Monday to talk about it. She and Stephanie Mills, a young tennis enthusiast who has done 1,200 performances on Broadway as Dorothy in "The Wiz," were featured guests at a luncheon atop one of New York's skyscrapers.

"I don't know why people look upon me as such a cold fish," Chris said. "I am as emotional as anyone on the court. Maybe I just don't show it. I know I don't play the tough points as well as I used to. When I was 16 or 17 years old, I just hit away. Now I often get tentative. I tense up far more than I once did."

Billie Jean King recently told a bunch of New York school kids that Chris was the hardest opponent of all for her to beat. "Chris drives me crazy," Billie Jean said. "It's her style. I play better against a player with some imagination."

What Billie Jean meant was that she fares better against a player with less concentration and stroking discipline.

Miss Evert said the player who causes her the most concern is the graceful Australian, Miss Goolagong, who over the years has been her keenest rival, Chris winning 18 of 30 matches.

"She is so relaxed and loose, when I play her I find myself watching Yvonne instead of the ball," Chris said. "I try to relax the way she does — and that isn't my style."

Chris said Billie Jean seems to "over-compensate" against her. "She becomes overly aggressive, she always is going for the big shot," Miss Evert added.

The world's best woman player is less fearful of Miss Navratilova, the 21-year-old Czech defector who won seven tournaments and 36 straight matches this winter during Chris' layoff, finally losing to 15-year-old Miss Austin.

"I like to play Martina," Chris said. "She plays the big game and is more inclined to make errors. You can attack her backhand. But Tracy is greatly improved since I beat her at Wimbledon. She has grown about two inches. Nothing intimidates her. Right now I rate her in the top five or six women in the world."

Chris said, unlike Billie Jean, she doesn't set goals for herself.

"It creates too much pressure," she added. "I set goals in my mind. I don't think in terms of number of titles. I am very competitive. If I play, I want to be No. 1."

And No. 1 she is.

Phils Will Again Rule NL East Roost

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Since the major leagues went to divisional play in 1969, only the Pittsburgh Pirates have won a half-pennant in the National League three straight times. The Philadelphia Phillies, NL East winners and playoff losers the last two years, are going for three in a row this season.

First In A Series

While the Pirates used to be known as the Pittsburgh Lumber Co., no one has yet coined an appropriate nickname for Philadelphia third baseman Mike Schmidt and left fielder Greg Luzinski, who just happen to form the top 1-2 home run punch in the majors.

In the last four years, Schmidt and Luzinski have combined for 251 home runs — 150 by Schmidt — and that includes just seven by Luzinski in 1974 when he suffered a June knee injury. Schmidt is 28 years old and Luzinski 27, so they will be around to terrorize rival pitchers for some time to come.

Last season, Luzinski slammed 39 homers, drove in 130 runs and finished second to Cincinnati's George Foster in the MVP race, while Schmidt's numbers were 38 and 101.

Schmidt is joined in a classy infield by shortstop Larry Bowa, second baseman Ted Sizemore and first baseman Richie Hebner while Luzinski's outfield mates are the gifted speed merchants center fielder Garry Maddox and right fielder Bake McBride.

The Phillies are three-deep behind the plate with Bob Boone, Tim McCarver and Barry Foote and four-deep in the bullpen — Tug McGraw, Gene Garber, Warren Brusstar and Ron Reed.

If they have a weakness, it's depth in the starting rotation behind Cy Young Award winner Steve Carlton, a 23-game winner, and Larry Christenson. Veterans Jim Lonborg and Jim Kaat are long of tooth and second-year man Randy Lerch is short on experience.

Towering Jim Wright, the American Association's top pitcher, could be the answer, but he had a touch of arm trouble. The Phillies wouldn't mind acquiring a reliable righthander to join the rotation.

Manager Danny Ozark isn't worried about complacency. Despite the successive division titles, the Phils haven't won the pennant since 1950.

"The guys know they should have won it all last year, and I think they'll be out to redeem themselves this season," Ozark warns. "What I mean is, they'll kick themselves in the butt and go to it from the start."

While the Phillies' off-season losses were minimal, the runner-up Pirates, who won 96 games in finishing five games off the pace, lost bullpen aces Rich Gossage and Terry Forster to the free-agent market and traded consistent-hitting Al Oliver to the Texas Rangers for pitcher Bert Blyleven.

The righthanded Blyleven will team up with lefty John Candelaria, giving the Bucs a strong 1-2 pitching punch to send against the Phillies' power. If Jerry Reuss, Jim Rooker, Bruce Kison and free agent Jim Bibby come through and Kent Tekulve, Grant Jackson and Elias Sosa can bring back memories of Gossage and Forster in the bullpen, the mound corps will be a match for anyone.

The Pirates still have some lumber in the bats of NL batting champ Dave Parker, the right fielder; Bill Robinson in left; first baseman Willie Stargell; third baseman Phil Garner and second baseman Rennie Stennett, who must make it back after breaking his right ankle last August. If Stennett's range is limited, he might switch positions with Garner.

But these Pirates are more lightning than lumber. Shortstop Frank Taveras led both leagues with 70 stolen bases, center fielder Omar Moreno swiped 53 and Stennett had 28 as the Pirates piled up 260 steals, tops in the majors.

Duffy Dyer and Ed Ott provide adequate catching, although Dyer has a broken thumb that will sideline him until late April.

The top base-stealer in baseball history, Lou Brock, plays left field for the St. Louis Cardinals. But Brock will turn 39 in June and only 35 of his 900 career steals came last summer. The superstars of this team are catcher Ted Simmons and shortstop Garry Templeton, who batted .322 in his first full season.

But, according to Manager Vern Rapp, "We'll go as far as the pitching takes us."

The pitching starts with 20-game winner Bob Forsch. It might end there, too, unless John Denny, Eric Rasmussen, Larry Dierker and Pete Falcone rebound from disappointing years. Al Hrabosky, the Mad Hungarian, is gone from the bullpen, but the Redbirds have added hard-throwing righthanders Mark Littell and Pete Vuckovich and lefty Dave Hamilton.

The outfield, with Brock, Tony Scott, Jerry Mumphrey and Jerry Morales, acquired from Chicago, is fairly sound and Templeton is part of a solid infield which includes Keith Hernandez at first, Mike Tyson at second and Ken Reitz at third. For the most part, however, the Cardinals lack power and must scratch for runs.

The Chicago Cubs, those perennial also-rans, actually held first place for more than two months last summer before relief ace Bruce Sutter — 62 games, 1.35 ERA — was injured. Without him, the Cubs, who once led by 8½ games, faded badly and finished fourth.

Sutter is back and healthy but the Cubs traded, among others, pitcher Bill Bonham and outfielders Jerry Morales and Jose Cardenal. The newcomers include pitcher Woodie Fryman, who'll be 38 next month, catcher Dave Rader and outfielders Dave Kingman and Hetty Cruz.

Kingman, the feast-or-famine slugger, crashed 26 homers last season while playing with the New York Mets, San Diego Padres, California Angels and New York Yankees, but also struck out 143 times in 439 at-bats. The Cubs signed him as a free agent, and a happy Kingman could go wild in Wrigley Field's friendly confines where he has unloaded some of his more memorable long-balls.

Bobby Murcer is the right fielder with Cruz or Greg Gross in center. Third baseman Steve Ontiveros, shortstop Ivan DeJesus and second baseman Manny Trillo will have to prove their surprisingly good seasons were the real thing. Reliable first baseman Bill Buckner is healthy again and Rader gives the Cubs the everyday catcher they needed.

"If we need anything more, it's probably another starting pitcher," says General Manager Bob Kennedy. Barring a trade, it's 20-game winner Rick Reuschel, Ray Burris and a lot of unproven arms.

The Montreal Expos are on the rise. They have much stronger pitching to go with the brilliant young run-producing outfield of Ellis Valentine, Andre Dawson and Warren Cromartie.

To join reliable Steve Rogers, the Expos added Rudy May and Ross Grimsley. Fireballing Wayne Twitchell is the fourth starter. Darold Knowles, acquired from Texas, is still a first-rate reliever but a return to form by Will McEnaney is virtually a must.

In Gary Carter, Montreal has one of baseball's best young catchers, and the infield includes veterans Tony Perez at first, Dave Cash at second and Chris Speier at short. Larry Parrish and Wayne Garrett will fight it out at third.

Bringing up the rear are the New York Mets, who have gone from clowns in 1962 to world champs in 1969 to last place in 1977. Tom Seaver and Jon Matlack were traded and the "big-name" pitching staff consists of Jerry Koosman, Pat Zachry and Nino Espinosa, with Skip Lockwood in the bullpen.

The Mets have forsaken pitching for punch, but cleanup hitter Steve Henderson, the left fielder, has less than a year in the majors, first baseman Willie Montanez hit only 20 homers in Atlanta's hitter's paradise, catcher John Stearns had a horrible second-half slump, third baseman Lenny Randle is unhappy with his contract and right fielder Elliott Maddox missed most of the last two years with a bum knee.

'Low Blow' From Kuhn Leaves Finley Fuming

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Instead of bats and gloves, the Oakland A's should be equipped with fifes and drums. Their owner, Charles O. Finley, is, after all, one Yankee Doodle Dandy.

Finley has stood up for mom, apple pie and the American way. And that's why the Oakland A's won't be the Denver

Analysis

Whatchamacallits when the 1978 baseball season opens next week.

The A's were signed, sealed and all but delivered to Denver oilman Marvin Davis last week, and if you don't think the deal was nearly set, consider that Davis was ready to start printing tickets. That is close.

There were problems, to be sure. Somebody would have to come up with $3 million to settle Finley's lease with the Oakland Coliseum. And then don't forget as much as $250,000 in legal fees, also payable to the Coliseum people.

But money was not an insurmountable roadblock. One way or another, between them, the various parties involved in this soap opera could have come up with the necessary funds. What finally vetoed the deal was an attempt to slip one by Charley O., something you just don't do.

As part of the agreement to settle the lease, baseball wanted Finley to relinquish the rights to any future litigation. And that would be like asking Charley to light the match for the bonfire Davis planned of the A's gold and green uniforms.

"I will not be coerced into waiving my constitutional rights," said the Oakland owner. "This is a provision they tried to slip in on me and it has nothing whatsoever to do with the sale of the ball club."

But, as far as Finley is concerned, it's enough to block that sale.

"You bet it is," he said. "I won't give up my rights, even if they said it wouldn't cost me a penny to get out of the lease. Even if they said they would give me $10 million, I would never sign such an agreement."

Well, there's no immediate danger of that happening. But baseball insists Finley was informed that if he would agree to the terms, including waiver of any litigation "over events past, present or future," the money settlement could be worked out.

To which Finley replied: "There is no way any red-blooded American would agree to sign such an idiotic agreement that they are trying to force down my throat."

At issue, of course, is Finley's right to sue Kuhn, something Charley does with disturbing regularity. "Why, right now, my attorneys are preparing a suit over the Vida Blue affair," fumed Finley. Asking him to surrender that inalienable right is, if you ask Charley, simply un-American.

Finley, by the way, adds as an aside that he never was told baseball was prepared to accept the major part of the financial burden in the lease settlement. Kuhn insists American League President Lee MacPhail passed along that information over the weekend but Charley says it's just not so.

The sale, which had been pending for months, seemed to be coming apart at the seams over the money issue. Finley had insisted he would not pay more than $1 million to settle the lease. Baseball had suggested he double that contribution, but Charley balked.

When it looked like the sale might be collapsing, baseball decided to drop the money issue and let Finley off for the $1 million. But it insisted that he pay the legal costs involved, indemnify baseball for any claims arising from the transfer and, most importantly to Finley, waive any right of future litigation against baseball.

Charley was having none of that. "Take this provision out and I think this thing can still be put together," Finley said. "But there's no way I'd let them sneak this into the agreement. I've talked to a number of club owners and they all agree that this should have nothing to do with the sale of the club."

When Finley balked, Kuhn dropped the other shoe.

"We are terminating our efforts to work out a solution to move Oakland to Denver," the commissioner said. "Under the circumstances, there's no point in continuing. I was very hopeful, but I think Charley's playing his hand too tough."

But that's always been Finley's style. And, after all, you wouldn't expect Uncle Sam to be an old softie, would you?

Ex-Mets Ryan, Seaver Bombed

By The Associated Press

Every once in a while, the New York Mets probably wish they still had Tom Seaver and Nolan Ryan on their pitching staff. Monday, however, wasn't one of those days.

While Seaver had to leave with a stiff lower back after one inning of the Cincinnati Reds' 2-1 exhibition loss to the Chicago White Sox and Ryan was bombed for eight runs in the second inning of the California Angels' 11-6 loss to the Cleveland Indians. The Mets got six shutout innings from Craig Swan and edged the Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2.

In his next-to-last spring appearance before an opening day assignment on April 6, Seaver yielded a first-inning run on Jorge Orta's double and Lamar Johnson's single and then came out.

"I just couldn't get loose," said Seaver, who explained that he woke up with stiffness in his back. "It's serious in that I didn't get any work in today, but I don't believe it puts me behind schedule. I'll throw three more times before opening day, twice on the sidelines."

Meanwhile, the Indians sent 12 men to the plate in their big inning against Ryan and bombed the fireballer for the second time this spring. Willie Horton was the main culprit with two doubles and four RBI in the inning.

"I had no idea where the plate was," said Ryan, who was a teammate of Seaver's with the Mets from 1968-71. "That's about my par for spring training. My ERA for the spring is usually around 5.00. One year it was 12.00."

This year, it's 8.04. Ryan has been tagged for 15 runs in 15 2-3 innings.

"I know what my problem is," he said. "I have to slow down my delivery a bit."

American League batters wouldn't object to that at all.

Meanwhile, Swan, who is trying to become the Mets' fourth starter behind Jerry Koosman, Nino Espinosa and Pat Zachry, blanked the Pirates on four hits over the first six innings and even singled home the game's first run.

"I'm no longer fighting my weight," saw Swan, "which is progress because I once gained 60 pounds in high school. I even decided to drop Ron Hodges as my roommate this season because he snores too much. I'm at peace with myself, even though I may not be with Hodges."

Elsewhere:

• Cliff Johnson, who entered the game in the sixth inning, drove in six runs with a homer and two singles and rallied the New York Yankees to an 11-7 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

• Eddie Murray had a long home run and an RBI single, leading the Baltimore Orioles to a 5-2 victory over the Texas Rangers.

• The Los Angeles Dodgers' four-game winning streak was ended 5-1 by the Philadelphia Phillies, their victims in last year's NL playoffs. Garry Maddox paced the Phils with two doubles, a single and three RBI.

• Jim Rice drove in four runs with a homer and single, leading the Boston Red Sox to a 9-4 triumph over the Toronto Blue Jays.

• Seattle's opening day hurler, Glenn Abbott, was rocked for eight runs and 10 hits in four innings as the San Diego Padres trounced the Mariners 12-3.

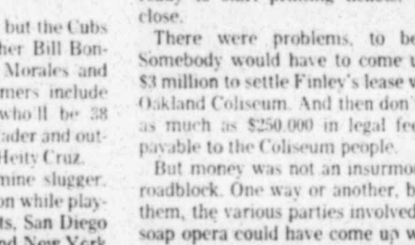

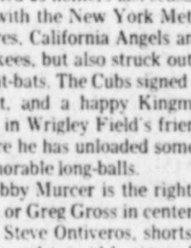

• Home runs by Tony Armas — his fourth of the spring — and Taylor Duncan helped the Oakland A's defeat the Milwaukee Brewers 9-3 while Mike Ivie's two-run double and Jack Clark's two-run triple paced the San Francisco Giants over the Chicago Cubs 5-2.

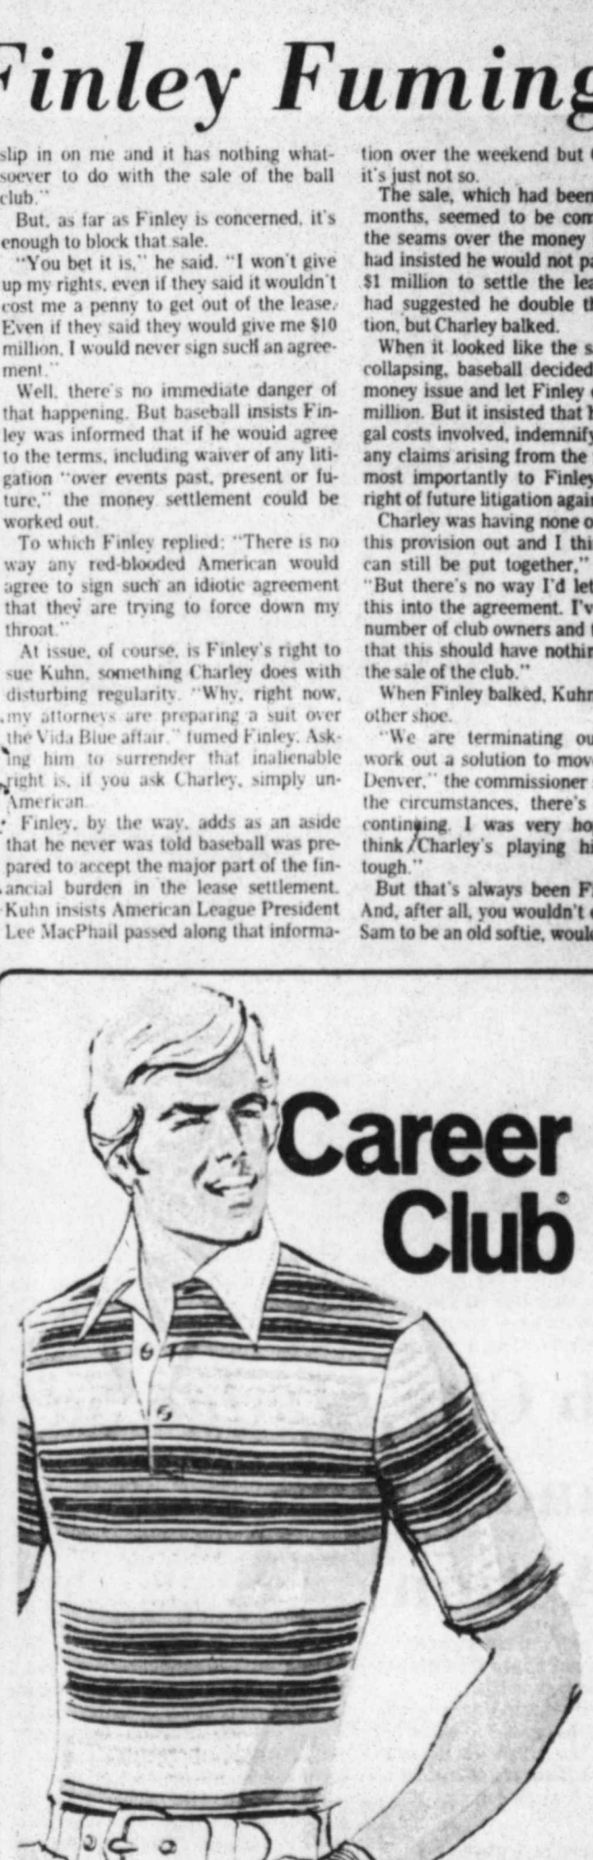

• John Tamargo's two-run single in the 11th inning gave the St. Louis Cardinals a 7-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers and Jesus Alou doubled in the ninth inning and scored on Luis Pujols' sacrifice fly, lifting the Houston Astros over the Minnesota Twins 9-8.

BIG STEAL — Lubbock Christian College All-America centerfielder Darius Copley, who had bunted his way on base, steals second base in the sixth inning of the opening game against Kearney State Monday. Chaparrals Extend Win Streak To 19

By WALT McALEXANDER
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Lubbock Christian College's streak has reached 19, but it took a pressure-packed pinch hit by Kenny Toney in the sixth inning of the opener and a perfectly placed, bases-loaded bunt by Mark Lisle in the ninth inning of the nightcap to preserve the sweep over Kearney (Neb.) State Monday.

Oscar Acotsa and Bob McNicol took diverse paths to victory. Acosta, unbeaten in six decisions, used 131 pitches in winning the opener 4-3, and relief specialist McNicol threw only one forkball to escape a two-on, two-out situation in the ninth and then watched with glee as his mates scored to win 5-4 in the second game.

LCC, which now owns three wins over Kearney this year, will seek to establish a new mark for consecutive wins when the teams vie in another twin bill at 1 p.m. today at Chaparral Stadium.

The 1973 Chaps won 20 straight and the '76 team had a 19-game skein. And this year's edition is now in a position to eclipse both totals, despite the fact that coach Larry Hays admitted, "I don't know when I've seen us play worse in the field. We were just extremely lucky to win both games."

Hays also had words of praise for southpaw Mickey Crump, who toiled for 8 1/3 innings in the nightcap. "He didn't want to come out and I'm glad of that. He was throwing good, but he had thrown a lot of pitches (137), even though the errors (seven) got him in trouble. I thought he did an excellent job. I'm just sorry he didn't get the win."

LCC, now 22-9, had to battle all day with the Nebraskans who didn't play like a 1-12 team. Acosta started out like he was going to throw a pitch for every one of the 250 fans on hand, but after throwing 36 the first frame — including one for a bases-clearing double by Bob Wennersten—the Chap freshman had only to escape minor jams in the fifth and seventh frames.

The Chaps tallied twice in the second on Bobby Doe's RBI single and a bases-loaded walk to Darius Copley. But LCC stranded eight runners—including seven at second and third—the first five innings. In the sixth, Doe led off with a double, took third on an infield out and scored on a wild pitch. Copley then beat out a drag bunt and stole second as Tommy Inman took a called strike.

The Chaps broke on top in the second game as Copley walked to lead off, was sacrificed to second and scored on Tim Leslie's bloop single to right. Kearney took a 2-1 edge in the third on a walk, stolen base, the first of Steve Brigante's three errors, double by Kyle Schrier and consecutive singles by Wennersten and Jerry Donahue.

But three errors and Richard Piper's RBI single knotted things in the Antelope sixth, and it remained that way until the ninth. With one out, Lope starter Frank Ryan, who threw 130 pitches, lost his control, walking Doe and Inman on 3-2 pitches. That brought up Leslie, who had equalled the school record with four hits in the game. But the Texoma Conference's leading hitter and RBI man watched four pitches sail wide and the bases were loaded.

That brought up Lisle, who surprised Kearney by dropping a squeeze bunt and beating it out as the winning run scored.

Lisle's play kept the Chaps perfect in four extra-inning contests this season and ran their mark to 6-3 in one-run games.

McNicol upped his record to 4-1 but was helped out by fellow bullpen ace Randy Vinson who got the second out in the ninth, retiring the only batter he faced.

Hub City Squads In Action

All of Lubbock's three high school baseball teams begin their final week of non-district scheduled today.

Monterey (7-3) plans to stretch its winning streak to five against Pecos at Lowrey Field. Lubbock High (8-3) travels to Brownfield and Coronado (4-8) treks to Lamesa. All three single games start at 4 p.m.

Albeit the teams have played a month of its season, today marks the first Lowrey Field appearance for senior pitcher Derick Hatfield of Monterey. Though only 2-2 on the mound this season, the sidearm right-hander finished last year's regular season 13-0.

Either senior Abel Cardenas or sophomore Andy Vasquez will start for Lubbock High on the mound. Westerner centerfielder Earnest Day has missed workouts since last Wednesday because of an ankle injury and appears doubtful for the game. Senior Donald Beyer will replace Day in center.

Judge Says Houston Schoolgirl Can Play Baseball

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Wheatley high school baseball coach LuGene Jones smiled the first time Linda Williams asked if she could come out for the all-male Wheatley baseball team.

"I wasn't sure if she was serious or not," Jones said. But her seriousness became crystal clear Monday and it was the 18-year-old senior who was smiling.

U.S. Dist. Judge Woodrow Seals issued a preliminary injunction which prevents the University Interscholastic League (UIL) and the Houston Independent School Disrict (HISD) from forbidding her to play on the boys' baseball team.

"The court is of the opinion that at this time the league (UIL) is in violation of her constitutional rights under the 14th Amendment — what we call equal rights," Seals said. "There is no real reason why she should not play baseball with the team."

Jones allowed Miss Williams to work out with the Wheatley team until March 1 when the UIL ruled she could not participate on the boy's team. She filed suit to seek reinstatement to the team.

Seals stressed his ruling involved only one girl at one school and was in no way to be considered a class action for all high school girls to try out for boy's teams.

But the ruling could have a far-reaching impact on future efforts by female athletes who want to try out for a male team.

"We hope this is a signal to the league that if they don't examine their policies, this could be the basis for future cases," said Matthew Horowitz, Miss Williams' attorney. "In terms of other cases, what we hope this does, if others come to us, we can work things out more informally."

Robert Gauss, who represented the UIL at the hearing, said he doubts Seals' ruling will be appealed since Wheatley's baseball season would be over before an appeal could be heard.

No date has been set to hear the suit.

The UIL remains very concerned, however, Gauss said. "They are concerned that the blade will cut both ways," he said. "It could lead to the boys' dominating all sports."

"I'm just happy that I've got a chance to play baseball," she said. "I guess I'll be at practice tomorrow."

And, based on Jones' observations of her performance in pre-season drills, she has an excellent chance of getting to play.

"When she had to quit practicing because of the UIL ruling, we had seven outfielders on the team and she was about my fourth outfielder," Jones said.

Miss Williams first worked out by catching for the pitchers and then came out for the team in February, Jones said.

"I just wish some of the people that say she can't play will take some time off and come out and see her play," Jones said. "There is no doubt that she has the ability to play."

Miss Williams, who also competes in girls' tennis and volleyball, formerly played Pony League baseball on an all-male team as a 14-year-old. She was elected to the all-star team and was a team captain.

Jones said she is an exceptional female athlete. He first noticed fundamentals such as the proper position for throwing a baseball and the accuracy of her throws.

There would be room on the team for the 5-4, 125-pound Miss Williams, Jones said. He can carry 18 players on the team but presently is going with 15.

YOUNGEST ACER

NORWALK, Conn. (UPI) — Rebecca "Becky" Ann Chase, age 8, is the youngest golfer ever to score a hole in one, according to Golf Digest's clearing house. Becky holed her tee shot on the 125-yard par-3 5th hole at Independence, Ore., on Aug. 15, 1977. Youngest previous acer was 9-year-old Susan Thompson of Garden Grove, Calif., in 1973.

Ag Department Says Brazilian Soybean Setback Temporary

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although the Brazilian soybean crop now being harvested is much smaller than in 1977, the Agriculture Department said today that the setback is temporary and that Brazil can be counted on to remain a fierce competitor of U.S. soybean producers in world markets.

Drought and other weather problems have cut Brazil's soybean harvest to around 19.5 million metric tons — about 385 million bushels — or about 12.5 percent below the 1977 harvest.

The reduction is the first time in 11 years that Brazil's soybean production has declined. Rising world demand for soybean meal and oil, higher prices and government incentives have helped boost expansion of the crop in Brazil.

"The setback is not expected to dampen Brazilian interest in soybeans, however," the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said. "Many producers have geared their entire operations to this 'wonder crop' and are not inclined to switch to alternatives such as corn and grain sorghum."

Reports of the reduced soybean crop in Brazil have contributed to higher U.S. soybean prices and a growing export demand. Thus, in a real way, what happens in Brazil affects soybean farmers throughout the United States.

Much of the report, included in the weekly issue of "Foreign Agriculture" published by the agency, was based on information supplied by Leon G. Mears, U.S. agricultural attache in Brazil.

"Over the long run, Brazil can be expected to continue to expand exports of soybean oil and meal as a result of increased crushing capacity now coming on-stream," the report said. Last year the United States produced a record soybean crop of more than 1.7 billion bushels — about quadruple what Brazil produces.

Income Hike Expected

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Government farm economists are close to agreement on a forecast that would substantially increase their estimate of this year's net farm income, an Agriculture Department source said today.

The department earlier had predicted that net income, which peaked at nearly $30 billion in 1973, would remain in 1978 close to the depressed 1977 estimate of $20.4 billion.

A source said, however, that economists preparing a new estimate taking recent crop and livestock developments into account were "leaning" to a revised figure between $23 billion and $24 billion for 1978.

If the new forecast is in that range, it would be the highest net income estimate since 1974 and the third highest on record.

Following the $29.9 billion record set in 1973, net income was reported at $27.7 billion in 1974, $20.8 billion in 1975, $21.9 billion in 1976 and $20.4 billion last year.

In a companion development, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland said Monday that farmers had deposited 252.4 million bushels of wheat in a government-sponsored reserve program through March 24. This is 76 percent of the program goal of 330 million farmer-owned bushels.

The reserve program is designed to help raise market prices by holding grain off the glutted commercial market for up to three years, or until prices reach 40 percent or more above the current $2.25 a bushel support rate.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Soybean and grain futures shot up on the Chicago Board of Trade Monday, as factors such as another downward revision of Brazil's soybean production encouraged general bullish attitudes.

Ice-slicked roads virtually halted country grain movement over the weekend in the Midwest, and power outages caused production cutbacks at soybean processing plants.

Besides the weather-induced buying, figures released after the markets closed for an extended Easter weekend were considered favorable, analysts said.

The weekly soybean crush showed that 19.6 million bushels were processed into soybean oil and meal. Indicating a strong demand for soybean products, the figure was higher than traders had expected.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: A month ago we received an invitation to a wedding in England. (We live in Maryland.) The groom has been a guest in our home on several occasions and we are friendly with his parents.

Yesterday we received word from the groom's mother saying that we would not be included in the very small family wedding group, but were expected at the reception, and she hopes we will "understand."

We were terribly hurt and do NOT "understand." We are on retirement income, and would not consider making such a costly trip for a "reception" only. But if we were invited to the wedding, we would gladly go.

I have already written to tell them that "something has developed" that may prevent us from making the trip, in order to leave it open for the moment.

Are we wrong to feel as we do? What would you do?

FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: I would write to the groom (leave his mother out of it) and tell him that it is customary to invite out-of-town guests to the ceremony, and unless you are included, you must decline. Period.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem that you or one of your readers may be able to help me with. I own several ranches in the Wyoming-Colorado area, and when I meet a city person for the first time and he learns that I'm in ranching, he invariably asks, "How may acres do you have?"

Abby, I consider this a very personal question. It would be like asking someone, "What is your net worth?" or, "How much is in your bank account?"

I realize that they mean no harm, and are just trying to make convesation, but I also feel that how many acres I have is none of their business.

Can you (or one of your readers) suggest an answer that wouldn't hurt their feelings, and at the same time wouldn't give them any information about the size of my operation?

RANCHER

DEAR RANCHER: Any evasive response will do, provided it's given in a friendly good-humord tone. (a) "Too many." (b) "Not enough." (c) "All I can handle."

• • •

DEAR ABBY: I have three healthy, wonderful daughters, ages 7,5 and 3, and they are all beautiful in my eyes. However, the eldest is an exceptionally attractive child with a head full of gold curls, enormous brown eyes and dark long lashes. I know she's pretty, and so does she, and so do her sisters, who happen to be very plain.

My problem, Abby, is the well-meaning idiot who stops me in the supermarket when I am with all three and says, "My, what a GORGEOUS child! She should be in the movies!" Or, "Wow, what a heartbreaker, that blonde will be when she grows up!" (She is 7, and she's already asking me when she is going to start breaking hearts!)

Please comment about people who fuss over one child in the presence of brothers and sisters. It makes it so hard on the others.

Any suggestions on how to handle these idiots? I'm sure other mothers have to deal with it, too.

MIDWEST MOM

DEAR MOM: There is no help for the idiot. You can only try to shut him up by signaling with your face or hand-or your foot, if necessary. But I'll print this in the hope that well-meaning but thoughtless strangers who are overwhelmed by the beauty of a child will think twice before they speak.

Grade School Ink Pens Bring Memories

By JOHN W. NEWTON
Women's News Service

We thought the day would never arrive. It was the end of vacation and we were going into THIRD GRADE. That meant we were going to WRITE WITH INK.

The empty ink wells in our first and second grade classes were symbols of a long-dead past. In our pencil boxes were pen holders, long and gently tapered, some with a cork wrapper for our fingers. And the pen points -called nibs -glistened in their little storage place in those pencil boxes.

I'll never forget Miss Gelman taking stage-center in the classroom and showing us how to put the nib in the holder, then moisten it with saliva before dipping it for the first time. Salivary acid, she said, would slightly pit the nib, making it hold the ink better.

Leaving school that day, I placed my pen carefully point-up, in the small wooden book box mounted under the desk. The next morning, forgetting about it, I stabbed myself in the knee when I carelessly sat down.

But Sally did something worse. Somehow, forgetting instructions, she moistened her pen thinking it was a daily chore, then rushed to the girls' room to wash her blue-black lips and purple tongue.

In thinking of these incidents recently, I decided to make a survey and see if dip pens were still around. I found they are vituarlly impossible to find in neighborhood school supply or stationary stores. A couple of inquiries actually returned the answer they were no longer made.

Teachers today instruct in the use of pens using ball-point units, those incredibly characterless writing tools that leave signatures completely devoid of personality.

As a result, no longer can the lofty position of inkwell monitor be according to children. The inkwell monitor, that boy or girl who every Monday morning made the rounds with a ginger ale bottle filled with ink to replenish that little glass holder in a brass-topped inkwell. And that spring-loaded bottle top, designed to prevent a cascade of ink into the well, which never worked.

And the pen points. The one-center with its spindly point and straight shaft that liberally spotted spelling papers of the heavy-handed. And the two-center, with its slightly bulbous shank and smooth point, which never quailed or faltered when used by the inept.

Some of the less expensive pens we used as children were no more effective than the bits of sharpened bone or stick the ancients charred or dipped into soot to make their glyphs on cavern walls, they were so inferior.

The original feather pen, an ancestor of the old familiar dip pen -the word pen comes from the Latin word "penna," meaning feather -carefully created by their user who tore a likely quill from the stern of a swan and carved his point. In the late 1700s, steel nibs began to come in from Europe and they were mounted in the quills, doing away with the necessity of the user carving his own point. It wasn't until 1860 that steel pens were made in this country.

In any event, we used dip pens until the sixth grade. Then we turned to fountain pens -Waterman or Esterbrooks -and tried to remember to fill them every morning, for ink wells were not used in junior highs. If we ran out of ink, we asked a classmate to "pollenate" us by inserting his pen point in ours and give us a couple of drops of ink.

But with the craze for ball point pens, costing 19 cents and thrown away when the ink supply is exhausted, fountain pens are getting scarce too. Yes, you can get them, mainly with plastic cartridges filled with "writing fluid." But the old fountain pen is disappearing and that can be checked by going into a store and asking for a bottle of ink. A large proportion of school supply stores have simply ceased carrying bottled ink. It's often "writing fluid" in plastic tubes or nothing. Even fountain pen repair centers are becoming scarce.

The Waterman Company, in fact, was purchased by a ball-point pen producer for its facilities and distribution. The name was sold to a European who is now producing Waterman pens for reactionaries such as me at a most favorable rate of profit.

Disappearance of the dip pen has done away with what was once an unlimited reservoir of jokes for professional comedians. The Post Office pen - Remember that fragile bit of steel that would rust almost before your eyes when you plunged it into the corrsive Post Office Department ink?

As a lad, I recall Jack Benny, Fred Allen, and a host of others gibing at post office pens. Now the Postal Service has turned to ball points, too.

My 25-year-old Parker 51 fountain pen with its broad stub point has and continues to serve me well. I simply refuse to lend it to others and it makes a fine, firm signature with much of my cantankerous nature visible in its flourishes.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: A month ago we received an invitation to a wedding in England. (We live in Maryland.) The groom has been a guest in our home on several occasions and we are friendly with his parents.

Yesterday we received word from the groom's mother saying that we would not be included in the very small family wedding group, but were expected at the reception, and she hopes we will "understand."

We were terribly hurt and do NOT "understand." We are on retirement income, and would not consider making such a costly trip for a "reception" only. But if we were invited to the wedding, we would gladly go.

I have already written to tell them that "something has developed" that may prevent us from making the trip, in order to leave it open for the moment.

Are we wrong to feel as we do? What would you do?

FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: I would write to the groom (leave his mother out of it) and tell him that it is customary to invite out-of-town guests to the ceremony, and unless you are included, you must declind. Period.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem that you or one of your readers may be able to help me with. I own several ranches in the Wyoming-Colorado area, and when I meet a city person for the first time and he learns that I'm in ranching, he invariably asks, "How may acres do you have?"

Abby, I consider this a very personal question. It would be like asking someone, "What is your net worth?" or, "How much is in your bank account?"

I realize that they mean no harm, and are just trying to make convesation, but I also feel that how many acres I have is none of their business.

Can you (or one of your readers) suggest an answer that wouldn't hurt their feelings, and at the same time wouldn't give them any information about the size of my operation?

DEAR RANCHER: Any evasive response will do, provided it's given in a friendly good-humord tone. (a) "Too many." (b) "Not enough." (c) "All I can handle."

Extravagant Fancy Food Creations Displayed

By GREGORY JENSEN

LONDON (UPI) — On one table stood the Last Supper carved in salt. Near by was Chief Sitting Bull in brown and white chocolate.

Half of one wall was filled with a three-panel mosaic 18 feet long made of tiny squares of light and dark toast. A lacy windmill sat next to a wickerwork biplane, both made of potatoes.

Entries come from all over the world. The trip this year was hard on some from farflung points.

But more than 400 concoctions remained to prove that if you can think of it, somebody can make it out of something edible.

A life-sized pheasant in marzipan. The "Death of Nelso" sculpted in butter. A church from Harswinkel, Germany, four feet tall and made of sugar. No great purpose is behind this annual display that dates from 1883, war years excepted. It is strictly a banquet for the eye and part of a trade show for catering and hotel businesses.

Crowds this time ogled incredible cakes, three separate Muppet Shows of marzipan, "The Monarch of the Glen" in chocolate and a 10-yard-long table holding decorated hams.

One special class was for Prison Officers' Pork Pie. Entrants had to be prison cooks, producing a pie "to the official dietary scale" using prison farm-grown pork. Some entries looked good enough to eat — though not good enough to go to prison to eat.

Other food designed for serious eating was set out on trestle tables. Dozens of whole salmon were gaudily decorated, scores of lobsters grotesquely postured. Chickens mush in aspic glowed like Old Master paintings.

The salons are necessarily brief. Nearly all entries are perishable. The 1978 one had 165 competitions, split between master chefs and "juniors," apprentices or students.

Apprentice Stephen J. Webb entered a marzipan wicker basket overflowing with roses of the same almond paste. Chef J. S. Evetts won a gold medal for a butter sculpture of three argumentative tramps on a park bench. Both are British.

The show's 220 volunteer judges tried to taste each entry without too much damage to the art work. Each cake, from elaborate three-tiered wedding cakes to fruit cakes shaped like grand pianos, had a slice partly removed.

Public visitors also tasted. Chocolates used as paving stones around Peter Lee's twelve-foot-tall chocolate sculpture of a full flower basket disappeared quickly.

But no one sampled the ferris wheel or bottle of wine in Class 38. Like the cathedral in the same class they were made of potato sticks, potato rings, molded potato and potato chips.

The show's most elaborate entries, "Pulled and Souffle Sugar," were displayed in glass cases. One gaudy pair of fighting cocks had every colorful feather separately made. There were jungle scenes and baskets of sugar fruit and — peering in roundeyed astonishment at the edible sculptures around it — one ruffled little souffle-sugar owl.

The Average Player sees that the hand will make if East has either the king or jack of spades. He wins the opening diamond lead, cashes the ace of trumps and enters dummy with a trump to the jack to finesse the ten of spades.

That loses to the jack and let's suppose West continues with diamonds. Declarer ruffs in dummy and finesses the queen of spades. When that fails, he still has to lose two club tricks for down one. Tough luck!

The Unlucky Expert improves his chances quite a bit. He combines the finesse possibilities with a possible strip and end play. He wins the ace of diamonds and ruffs a diamond in dummy, he returns to the ace of hearts and ruffs his remaining diamond. After drawing the last trump, he cashes the ace of clubs and exits with a club.

East wins and shifts to a spade, and declarer loses a finesse. West returns a club, East wins and returns another spade. Again down one, but declarer would have made his contract if East held either spade honor, or if West had to win either club trick or only had a doubleton club.

WORKOUTS HELP

PARIS, France (WNS) — At 65, how does French actress Ginette Leclerc keep her youthful look and trim figure? "My 88-year-old mother makes me go to the gym with her every day and do the 45-minute workout she wouldn't miss doing even on important holidays," she said. "There we both are, doing push-ups like kids, high kicks like chorus girls, swinging on the bars like circus acrobats and pedalling bicycles like 30-day champions." After the daily session at the Serge Gym on the Rue de Hanovre, Ginette goes to TV rehearsal and mother goes home to do the housework. "Mother promises to keep at it until age 101," added Mme. Leclerc. "Me, I doubt that I shall last that long."

'Saucy' Macaroni, Cheese Recipe Family Pleaser

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: I tried a recipe of yours called Old-time Macaroni and Cheese, but it disappointed my family because it was like macaroni suspended in cheese custard. We like macaroni in a sauce with lots of cheese. I used to buy frozen packages of it, but they're expensive and besides it doesn't seem to be as good as it used to be. Can you give me a recipe for saucy macaroni cheese? — MOTHER OF TWO.

DEAR MOTHER OF TWO: Sorry about that custard-style macaroni and cheese. It really is an old-time recipe, but I guess it isn't the kind you grew up on. So here's a recipe for macaroni plus lots of sauce and cheese. I must warn you, however, that it's not exactly like the frozen bought dish. That was the cheese in the sauce and is extremely smooth. When I've added the cheese to the sauce, it always feels curdy on the tongue. I've used every kind of natural cheese, from Wisconsin to Vermont to Canadian, from mild to sharp to extra-sharp. No matter. The sauce is never satin-smooth. As a result, I've employed another technique and layered the macaroni and cheese and poured the sauce over the top. I hope your family likes this version. 'I do' — C. B.

MACARONI CHEESE

8 oz. elbow macaroni
3 tbsp. butter or margarine
3 tbsp. flour
3 cups milk
¾ lb. mild cheddar cheese, coarsely grated
½ to 1 tsp. salt
Paprika

Cook the macaroni according to package directions using the time suggested for pasta that is to be used in a cooked dish. Drain in a colander.

In a medium saucepan over low heat, melt the butter. Stir in the flour. Off heat, gradually stir in the milk, keeping smooth. Cook over moderately low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and boiling. Stir in the salt.

Spread half the macaroni in a buttered shallow 2-quart glass baking dish (11 3/4 by 7 1/2 by 1 3/4 inches). Sprinkle with half the cheese. Top with the remaining macaroni and then with the remaining cheese. Pour the hot sauce as evenly as possible over the top. Sprinkle with paprika.

Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven until bubbling hot — about 20 minutes. Let stand at room temperature for 5 or 10 minutes before serving.

Makes 6 servings.

The empty ink wells in our first and second grade classes were symbols of a long-dead past. In our pencil boxes were pen holders, long and gently tapered, some with a cork wrapper for our fingers. And the pen points -called nibs -glistened in their little storage place in those pencil boxes.

I'll never forget Miss Gelman taking stage-center in the classroom and showing us how to put the nib in the holder, then moisten it with saliva before dipping it for the first time. Salivary acid, she said, would slightly pit the nib, making it hold the ink better.

Leaving school that day, I placed my pen carefully point-up, in the small wooden book box mounted under the desk. The next morning, forgetting about it, I stabbed myself in the knee when I carelessly sat down.

But Sally did something worse. Somehow, forgetting instructions, she moistened her pen thinking it was a daily chore, then rushed to the girls' room to wash her blue-black lips and purple tongue.

In thinking of these incidents recently, I decided to make a survey and see if dip pens were still around. I found they are vituarlly impossible to find in neighborhood school supply or stationary stores. A couple of inquiries actually returned the answer they were no longer made.

Teachers today instruct in the use of pens using ball-point units, those incredibly characterless writing tools that leave signatures completely devoid of personality.

As a result, no longer can the lofty position of inkwell monitor be according to children. The inkwell monitor, that boy or girl who every Monday morning made the rounds with a ginger ale bottle filled with ink to replenish that little glass holder in a brass-topped inkwell. And that spring-loaded bottle top, designed to prevent a cascade of ink into the well, which never worked.

And the pen points. The one-center with its spindly point and straight shaft that liberally spotted spelling papers of the heavy-handed. And the two-center, with its slightly bulbous shank and smooth point, which never quailed or faltered when used by the inept.

Some of the less expensive pens we used as children were no more effective than the bits of sharpened bone or stick the ancients charred or dipped into soot to make their glyphs on cavern walls, they were so inferior.

The original feather pen, an ancestor of the old familiar dip pen -the word pen comes from the Latin word "penna," meaning feather -carefully created by their user who tore a likely quill from the stern of a swan and carved his point. In the late 1700s, steel nibs began to come in from Europe and they were mounted in the quills, doing away with the necessity of the user carving his own point. It wasn't until 1860 that steel pens were made in this country.

In any event, we used dip pens until the sixth grade. Then we turned to fountain pens -Waterman or Esterbrooks -and tried to remember to fill them every morning, for ink wells were not used in junior highs. If we ran out of ink, we asked a classmate to "poilenate" us by inserting his pen point in ours and give us a couple of drops of ink.

But with the craze for ball point pens, costing 19 cents and thrown away when the ink supply is exhausted, fountain pens are getting scarce too. Yes, you can get them, mainly with plastic cartridges filled with "writing fluid." But the old fountain pen is disappearing and that can be checked by going into a store and asking for a bottle of ink. A large proportion of school supply stores have simply ceased carrying bottled ink. It's often "writing fluid" in plastic tubes or nothing. Even fountain pen repair centers are becoming scarce.

The Waterman Company, in fact, was purchased by a ball-point pen producer for its facilities and distribution. The name was sold to a European who is now producing Waterman pens for reactionaries such as me at a most favorable rate of profit.

Disappearance of the dip pen has done away with what was once an unlimited reservoir of jokes for professional comedians. The Post Office pen - Remember that fragile bit of steel that would rust almost before your eyes when you plunged it into the corrsive Post Office Department ink?

As a lad, I recall Jack Benny, Fred Allen, and a host of others gibing at post office pens. Now the Postal Service has turned to ball points, too.

My 25-year-old Parker 51 fountain pen with its broad stub point has and continues to serve me well. I simply refuse to lend it to others and it makes a fine, firm signature with much of my cantankerous nature visible in its flourishes.

JET WRECKAGE ON FREEWAY — The wreckage of a $20 million F-14 Tomcat jet fighter spread over a highway in San Diego, Calif., Monday after the Navy fighter went out of control and crashed on a landing approach to Miramar Naval Air Station. One of the two crewmen was killed. (AP Laserphoto)

NAVY LOSES THREE PLANES — The U.S. Navy lost three planes in separate incidents within nine hours Monday. All were based in the San Diego area. Jet Crashes Stun Navy Officials

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Navy officials were stunned and puzzled by the crash of three San Diego-based Navy jets in separate incidents within nine hours. Two crewmen were dead, a pilot was seriously injured and another crewman was missing.

The first of the crashes occurred about 10:30 a.m. Monday when a $20 million F-14 Tomcat attack plane, one of the world's fastest aircraft, went out of control while making a routine touch-and-go landing approach at Miramar Naval Air Station.

The F-14 crash was the 15th involving the 26-ton, twin-jet plane since it was put into service by the Navy four years ago, a spokesman said. Seven of the F-14s involved were based at Miramar, a major fighter pilot base.

The plane in the latest crash skidded across a busy multilane freeway, struck two vehicles and burst into flames about 3,000 feet from the end of the runway, a Navy spokesman said.

Both crewmen ejected, but the plane's radar intercept officer, Lt. Walt Laskowski, 25, of Cleveland, was killed, the spokesman said. The pilot, Lt. Brian Shaw, 25, of Garden City, N.Y., was in critical condition after surgery at Balboa Naval Hospital.

Two civilians in a truck-trailer rig hit by the plane were treated for cuts and bruises. The driver of a car also hit drove away, apparently unhurt. The freeway was closed for three hours while debris was cleared.

A Miramar spokesman said the plane was on a routine training mission when it crashed. Mark Feldman, a passing motorist, said the jet "was coming in sideways, going up and down like it was doing acrobatics" before it nosed up into the air, ripped up 75 feet of chain link fence, and burst into flame.

The second crash was that of an A-4 Skyhawk fighter, also based at Miramar, which fell into the Pacific Ocean about 50 miles west of San Diego near San Clemente Island at about 1:30 p.m. That plane, too, was on a routine training flight, a Navy spokesman said.

The pilot, Lt. Evan Martin Chanik, 26, of San Diego was rescued at sea by a Coast Guard helicopter and flown to the Naval Hospital, where he was released after treatment for minor injuries.

Then at 7:23 p.m., a Navy S-3A anti-submarine plane from North Island Naval Air Station apparently exploded and crashed into the sea within site of its home tower.

The remains of one crewman were returned to San Diego late Monday night aboard the cutter Point Brower, an official said. But the explosion and impact of the crash was so great it was difficult to determine whether the remains of one or both crewmen had been found, another Coast Guard officer said.

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — A struggle is rumbling within government and scientific communities over who should reap the benefits of government-financed research.

The controversy centers on universities that do research under government grants. The schools have been allowed to license their inventions to private firms for development and marketing.

Money from the licenses has been plowed back into research and development.

The private firms were allowed to keep the licenses only for enough time to earn back their costs of testing and developing the products.

But debate over this policy was spurred recently when the General Services Administration published a model contract in an attempt to coordinate the licensing activities of various agencies.

The Ralph Nader-founded Health Research Group attacked the policy as a giveaway of government-funded research and Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., called for hearings on the policy.

Subsequently the Office of Management and Budget asked GSA to hold up on the policy. GSA Administrator Jay Solomon said he is inclined to go along with the delay, suspending enforcement of the new policy for 120 days.

The National Science Foundation and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare have been approving such license agreements for several years, but they used differing contracts.

So GSA issued its model form to coordinate their activities and to give guidance to any other government agencies which might be considering such an arrangement. It also expands the licensing arrangement somewhat.

Dr. Sidney Wolfe of the Health Research Group charged that the policy would "permit the giveaway of patents whose nature, utility and value are unknown at the time of disposal. ..."

"Of course the government has a function to encourage research. But once this is done some arrangement should be worked out so that the government recoups some of its investment," Wolfe said.

He said that "in a sense it destroys the free enterprise system to have government assume the risks and then when the benefit comes it goes to private enterprise."

On the other side of the issue, however, is Howard Bremer of the University of Wisconsin Alumni Research Foundation.

Bremer, president of the Society of University Patent Administrators, suggested that much technology developed under government grants would never reach the public without the licensing system.

Inventions developed in university programs are usually "very embryonic in nature," Bremer said. Private firms undertake clinical testing and market development of these products, he said, a process which can cost millions of dollars.

For drugs, for example, Bremer said the Food and Drug Administration has strict requirements which must be met before an item can be sold, and the cost of this work is borne by the private firms.

Items which have come to the market through the licensing route include measles vaccine, a pivoting heart valve, the rechargeable heart pacemaker, an improved kidney dialysis system and dozens of others.

Most Accidents Occur At Home

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Half of all the nation's accidental injuries occur at home, says the National Center for Health Statistics.

Of 74.2 million accidents that resulted in at least one injury in 1975, 28.9 percent took place inside the home and 21.5 percent adjacent to it, the center said Monday.

Places of work accounted for 11.7 percent, followed by streets and highways 9.5 percent, places of recreation 8.8 percent, schools 8.2 percent and other places 11.4 percent.

When people were asked by interviewers what they had been doing at the time of the accident, 25.7 percent said they were working, 17.5 percent were traveling and 16 percent were participating in some form of recreation.

The definition of "working" included duties performed while on the job or at home washing the car or mowing the yard.

Spending Plans Clouded By Air Of Uncertainty

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Consumers don't expect business conditions to get much better in the near future, but they don't expect them to get much worse either, a University of Michigan survey shows.

An air of uncertainty continues to cloud spending plans for the average consumer beyond late-1978, says UM's latest Survey of Consumer Attitudes, released Monday.

The survey's Index of Consumer Sentiment, based on a nationwide sample of 1,276 interviews, was 84.3 in February. The index, based on a February 1966 reading of 100, was 83.7 in January.

Fifty-four percent of the respondents expected business conditions to remain the same for the next 12 months rather than to improve or deteriorate, researchers said.

The modest rebound in optimism was largely confined to families with incomes of $10,000 or more, says the survey.

One in 10 respondents said inflation was the main reason they doubt business conditions would improve in the near future.

On the average, consumers also said they expected prices would increase 7.8 percent during the next 12 months — the highest expected rate of inflation the survey has found since the recession years of 1974-75.

Also in February, a greater portion of respondents than at any time in the past three years, 62 percent, said inflation was causing more economic hardship than unemployment.

Confidence in the government's ability to combat inflation, meanwhile, remained at the low levels reached late last year. Just 12 percent rated the government as doing a good job, while 26 percent said it was handling inflation poorly.

Researchers said attitudes toward buying a new car remained unchanged and about equally divided in February 1978.

EPA Seeks Cancellation Of Pollution Standards

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency wants to cancel some aircraft-pollution standards and roll back deadlines for others by as much as five years, saying they range from overly optimistic to impossible.

But in a companion move, EPA intends to tighten air standards for aircraft by 1985 and to impose controls on more planes than are covered by the existing rules. The end result, it says, will be cleaner air by 1990 than the present standards could provide.

"The decision to propose reduction of the stringency of the standards and to extend the time for compliance was made because the necessary technology to meet the standards did not become available quickly enough ...," an EPA spokesman said Monday.

He said compliance with the limit for emissions of oxides of nitrogen, in particular, "is not technically achievable in the forseeable future."

The EPA issued existing standards in 1973, setting a 1979 deadline for limiting emissions of smoke, hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and oxides of nitrogen. The 1973 standards applied to virtually all subsonic aircraft except for helicopters.

Under the revised standards:

— All emission limits would be eliminated for small propeller-driven planes and auxiliary power plants. Only controls on smoke and fuel venting would apply to turbo-prop, turbo-fan and turbo-jet engines used on small airliners. The EPA said it would cost too much to control all pollution from those types of craft.

— 1979 standards for jet engines used in big jetliners such as the DC-8, the 707 and the 747 — the major sources of aircraft emissions around airports — would be delayed to 1981 for hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide and to 1984 for oxides of nitrogen.

— 1981 standards for newly certified aircraft engines in commercial service would be delayed to 1984 for hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide and relaxed for oxides of nitrogen.

To offset the revisions, the EPA plans to propose stringent standards for turboprop engines after 1984 and will require all aircraft engines in commercial service today to be fitted with controls for hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide by 1985.

The end result of the changes will be greater reductions of hydrocarbon and carbon-monoxide pollution at major air terminals than would be possible under the existing standards, the spokesman said.

"New York's JFK Airport, for example, will show a 75 percent reduction in hydrocarbons, a 65 percent reduction in carbon monoxide and an 11 percent reduction in oxides of nitrogen from aircraft by 1990 under the proposal," he said.

City May Hire Firm To Collect Coins

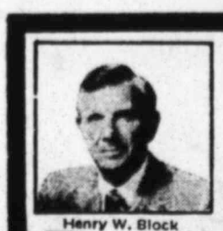

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The city is considering hiring a private firm to collect parking meter coins, after it was revealed that about $3 million in parking meter revenues had been stolen.

Sixteen employees of the parking meter office were arrested last Friday in connection with the theft. Tax Collector Thad Brown was suspended when the arrests were made, but officials said he was not involved. Brown said he would file suit to be restored to his job.

Paving Rule Reinstated

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Developers, not taxpayers, are once again responsible for the cost of paving residential streets in rural Lubbock County.

The paving requirement — an oft-debated measure adopted on split vote in mid-1973 but discarded six months later — was reinstated Monday by the Lubbock County Commissioners Court.

And this time, members of the unanimous court say the decision will stick.

"I hope this is the last time the paving requirement has to come up. We've settled the matter once and for all," said Commissioner Alton Brazell, who during most of his two decades on the court has been alone in advocating more stringent subdivision regulations.

Commissioners Jim Lancaster, Edgar Chance and Coy Biggs — who in recent years have replaced Les Derrick, Arch Lamb and the late Max Arrants on the county governing body — backed the tougher development standards.

The vote was taken Monday afternoon after a public hearing on proposed subdivision regulations drafted to commissioners' specifications by Criminal District Attorney Alton Griffin, the court's legal counsel.

In contrast to previous rules, the new regulations on development of unincorporated land:

—Require developers to pave their streets, or make a guaranty to that effect, before their subdivision plats are approved and lot sales may begin. The old rules allowed developers to install caliche-surfaced streets. That has been a costly proposition for the public, Brazell and Lancaster say, because county taxpayers have had to bear the expense for upgrading those caliche streets to pavement.

—Note that developers must meet the county's private sewage facility regulations as a prerequisite to subdivision plat approval. While the septic-tank rules have been in force since 1975, this is the first time compliance will be tied to the subdivision standards.

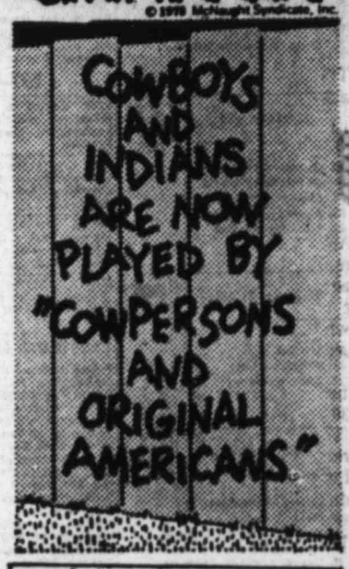

—Emphasize that plats for subdivisions within the five-mile extraterritorial jurisdiction of the City of Lubbock or other municipality must meet the city's standards as well as the county's. This had been mentioned in the previous standards but generally ignored by developers.

The new rules clearly state, "No plat within extraterritorial jurisdiction of any city will be accepted for consideration by the commissioners court unless prior approval by said city is subscribed on the proposed plat."

This provision will require, for example, subdivisions near the City of Lubbock to meet that municipality's standards for alleys — something the county does not otherwise demand. (Cities will not be able to enforce their requirements for curbs, gutters, streetlights or other

By PAULA TILKER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Finance reports filed Tuesday show that, only four days shy of Saturday's city council election, one mayoral candidate reports no contributions or expenditures while two of his opponents list no accepted donations.

Leland Kelly, a 21-year-old downtown businessman, filed a finance report that lists no contributions or gifts and no expenditures since he announced his candidacy Feb. 23.

Advertiser Dirk West reported no contributions. His expenditures during the reporting period lasting Feb. 21 to March 22 totaled $963.56, he reported. That brings his total campaign expenditures to date to $998.55, his statement said.

The fourth mayoral aspirant, Robert Kizer, said in his statement that he received $4,884 in contributions and gifts and a $2,000 loan to bring his total contributions to date to $6,884.90

Kizer, an attorney and building contractor, reported that his expenditures for the reporting period add up to $6,877.50.

Of the two Place 1 contestants, commodities broker Mike Stevens leads in reported campaign contributions and expenditures.

Stevens listed $8,122 in contributions and loans for the latest reporting period, bringing to $12,127 his total accepted donations.

He reported spending $8,647.23. That plus the $2,330.47 reported spent on March 2 bring his total disbursements to $10,977.

Aderton, a retired businessman, reported disbursing $5,257.19 since he announced for office Jan. 3.

Bob Schmidt, a horticulturist, said in his finance report that he received $1,905.47 in donations this month to bring his total contributions to $2,745.47.

Hopefuls For School Board Differ On Voting Districts

Candidates for the Lubbock Independent School District board of trustees entered their last week of campaigning with the realization they agree on most issues — with one notable exception.

At a forum aired Monday night by public television station KTXT, two hopefuls for the board's Place 1 said they would support election of trustees on the basis of geographical representation — that is, a single-member district arrangement instead of the existing at-large, citywide system.

That opinion separates Place 1 incumbent Joan Ervin and challenger Lynn Stafford from candidate Bill Warren, who believes Lubbock is not yet large enough to require designating certain seats on the school board to particular areas of the city.

Dr. John Ray Jr., a pathologist and the fourth candidate for the Place 1 seat, was not present at the forum Monday, sponsored by the Texas Tech University-run television station and the Lubbock League of Women Voters.

The session was moderated by Louise Cummins, state board member for the league and past president of the local chapter. She asked Place 1 candidates their views on election of school trustees by single-member districts.

Mrs. Stafford, an active civic worker and former teacher, said she would support such an arrangement. She suggested that one school board member be elected from each of the city's five high school attendance zones, with two places on the board remaining at-large.

Mrs. Ervin, a trustee for the past eight years, agreed. She said single-member districts would help "maintain a tri-ethnic board, which is very important."

Warren, an accountant with the local office of the state highway department, said he would not advocate any such arrangement — yet. Single-member districts, Warren said, would be effective "when Lubbock becomes large enough that a trustee cannot know what's going on" throughout the entire city. But presently, Warren said, school board members are able to grasp citywide issues.

On most other questions, the three candidates seemed unanimous.

For example, they all believe community participation and understanding are the key to successful implementation of a school desegregation plan.

Warren advocated a "thorough education of the public" about the plan, through small-group meetings; Mrs. Stafford urged "open houses" to allow parents and students to visit schools and more parent volunteer programs; and Mrs. Ervin advocated "workshops and sessions" to explain the plan and get "total citizenry involvement."

The three also agreed Lubbock is not spending enough on education. "It's impossible to spend too much" teaching children, Mrs. Ervin said. Mrs. Stafford advocated putting more emphasis on the basics of reading and math, and Warren urged better evaluation of programs and budget items.

Also at the forum were Place 2 candidates — attorney Brad Crawford, family and marriage counselor Claude Dollins, university instructor Donna Muldrew and junior high teacher Edith O'Brien. A fifth candidate, Robert Lowery, was absent.

The four hopefuls for Place 2, being vacated by school board vice president Bob McKelvy, emphasized voluntary tools of desegregation as part of the district's new plan.

"Integration works best when it's voluntary," said Dollins. Mrs. Muldrew called the district's proposed magnet

Helicopter Firm Pleads Guilty To Eagle Killings

MIDLAND (AP) — A helicopter service and one of its officials have pleaded guilty to charges of illegally killing federally-protected golden eagles during airborne hunts over West Texas ranchland.

The charges grew from an investigation that resulted in the conviction last year of three men for conspiring to hunt the birds from a helicopter over rugged Real County.

The South Texas Helicopter Services pleaded guilty Monday in federal court here to two counts of taking and killing a golden eagle, a misdemeanor punishable by a maximum fine of $5,000 per count.

Alva Dale Barnes, manager and vice president of the helicopter service, pleaded guilty Monday to one count of aiding and abetting the company in taking and killing the eagles. He faces a maximum penalty of a year in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Barnes was released on a $5,000 personal recognizance bond.

Federal prosecutors said in court they were prepared to show that South Texas Helicopter Services, acting through its pilot, had illegally hunted and killed eagles Dec. 10-11, 1975. Prosecutors said that Barnes, as an officer, had given the orders to the pilot.

As a result of the guilty pleas by the helicopter service and Barnes, the U.S. attorney's office agreed to dismiss a perjury charge against Andrew Allen, a former U.S. government predator trapper.

Allen was one of the three men convicted in December of conspiring to hunt golden eagles. He also was convicted of illegaly airborne hunting and of killing golden eagles. He was sentenced to a year's probation and fined $2,000 by U.S. District Judge John H. Wood.

A spokesman for the federal court in Midland said the perjury charge against Allen would be formally dropped when Barnes and the helicopter service are sentenced in April.

Gerald Heintzelman, the helicopter pilot, testified for the prosecution at the December trial that he flew Allen and the two other men on eagle hunting trips on Dec. 10-11, 1975.

AT FENNER'S PLACE

5 REASONS WHY PLYMOUTH VOLARÉ IS AMERICA'S 1ST CHOICE IN WAGONS OVER THE PAST TWO YEARS.

1. HIGH RESALE VALUE.
One reason why Volare's America's first choice in wagons over the past two years is that its resale value is higher than its competition at both Ford and GM

2. PASSENGER ROOM.
Hauling cargo is important, and so is hauling people. Volare seats six comfortably and gives more passenger room than all the new down-sized GM intermediate wagons based on eight key interior dimensions.

3. BIG CAR RIDE.
Volare is the only wagon in its class with a special front isolated transverse suspension system. The system of unique design that delivers a remarkable ride like a big car.

4. LOW PRICE.
You could pay more for some wagons with all the room, comfort and ride of a Volare. Compared to its GM competition, Volare's low price will surprise you.

5. SMALL CAR ECONOMY.
Volare offers big passenger room and spacious cargo area and still does a remarkable job of giving down-to-earth economy, especially in gas mileage. 25/18*

*Based on EPA estimates. Volare wagon with manual transmission. Your actual mileage may differ depending on your driving habits, the condition of your car and its optional equipment.

Spreading Of Manpower Funds Called Confusing

When a reporter writes of "Manpower," he or she usually means job programs funded by the federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA).

CETA is supposed to reduce unemployment and poverty by numerous means, including job training, public works jobs and even programs for alcoholic workers.

It often provides cash directly to job trainees. On-the-job training, with the federal government paying half the wage, is part of CETA. So are job counseling and "linkages" with union apprenticeship programs.

Congress allots CETA money each year to the states. A state's allotment grows if its unemployment or poverty levels increase significantly.

Similarly, the U. S. Department of Labor allocates CETA money within a state partly according to percentages of unemployed and poverty-level people and partly on the basis of the previous year's grant.

Texas' current CETA allotment is $325 million — half of it for public works projects and public service jobs. Comprehensive Manpower services, which have generated most of the headlines, account for $80 million.

But confusion and jargon take charge when you talk about how CETA money is spread around Texas.

Primes may be cities or counties with 100,000 or more people. They may also be coalitions, such as the Coastal Bend Manpower Consortium that includes Corpus Christi and 12 county governments.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe is the sponsor of the BOS, and his office approves each CETA grant in those predominantly rural counties. BOS spending totals about $55 million this year.

Briscoe relies heavily on evaluations of grant proposals by the Texas Department of Community Affairs in parceling out BOS money.

TDCA also administers the BOS grants and flows the money to local Manpower contractors.

Manpower people complained when Briscoe creamed off 20 percent of all BOS funds for the Governor's Office of Migrant Affairs. One reason was a federal requirement that BOS money be divided according to a county's share of Texas' poor and unemployed.

One TDCA employee said dryly, "There aren't many migrants in Grayson County" — certainly less than 20 percent of those eligible for CETA assistance.

The other major category of CETA spending is "state services," accounting for four percent or $3.4 million of Texas' total for comprehensive manpower services.

Briscoe also controls "state services" grants, with advice not only from TDCA but also from his State Manpower Services Council.

Council members represent labor unions, local governments and state agencies that perform Manpower services.

The governor's control stems from his position as chief executive of the state government, the legal sponsor of both BOS and "state services" programs.

Critics say "state services" grants often are tailor-made to attract support from Briscoe from labor and minority groups.

But others believe they provide valuable help to groups that might otherwise be overlooked by local sponsors.

Current state services contractors include one whose records have been seized by the FBI — the United Labor Legislative Committee's Worker Assistance Program — and a Harlingen job-training program whose leaders are under theft indictments.

Rural Development Rules Set

"physical improvements" beyond municipal limits, but only the layout and width of streets.)

In a letter presented by municipal officials at Monday's hearing, city planning director Jim Bertram said he is "very pleased to see the county is taking a positive stand to require standards for subdivisions in rural areas of Lubbock County."

Bertram has complained that without such county regulations, the City of Lubbock through eventual annexations inherits sloppy developments on the municipality's fringe and must spend tax monies to upgrade such subdivisions.

Commissioners inserted passages stating that the "current use for all adjacent properties shall be reflected on the proposed plat" for new subdivisions — a provision that will allow the county to determine whether a proposed development is consistent with surrounding land.

Also at Bertram's suggestion, the commissioners court increased from 100 feet to 110 feet the required minimum width of right-of-way for "section line roads" through subdivisions. The 110-foot standard is the same as the City of Lubbock's.

Brazell said he and other county officials will put together a "step-by-step handbook, based on our new regulations, for people who plan to subdivide land in Lubbock County. This should make it easy for them to understand the law and encourage them to work with the utility companies, health department, our engineering department and the corresponding city departments" in planning subdivisions.

Commissioners said that while they cannot require such coordination — as spokesmen for utilities and the various governmental departments asked Monday — the county will urge developers to voluntarily do so.

Commissioners were particularly pleased with the paving requirement in the new subdivision regulations.

"We want to get away from the old days when a fellow would sell a bunch of lots and tell the buyers the county would pave the streets," said County Judge Rod Shaw.

Lancaster said 90 percent of the complaints he receives "are from people who live in substandard developments and want us to pave their roads." The new requirement should remedy that problem, he said.

While the paving rule "will make it more costly to subdivide, the result will be better quality subdivisions," Brazell added. "And that should benefit not only the homebuyer but also the county and city taxpayer."

Also Monday, commissioner opened 10 bids on a proposed courthouse computer system and referred them to an advisory committee for further study; awarded a $98,700 contract for construction of a computer center in the courthouse; and endorsed a $66,845 grant application for Project Intercept, an alternative school operated by the Lubbock Independent School District and county for problem students.

Program Director Faces State Probe

AUSTIN (AP) — The head of the Texas Department of Community Affairs has invited the executive director of a Houston anti-poverty agency to Austin "to discuss problems" — including nepotism — found by TDCA evaluators.

Ben McDonald sent the invitation by telegram Monday to John Bland, executive director of Houston Employment Area Redevelopment and Training Corp. (HEART).

McDonald also said he would name a "special high-level task force" that would go to Houston and review the criticisms made by the evaluators and advise him on what actions to take.

A TDCA monitoring and evaluation team said in a report dated March 14 that they had found numerous discrepancies, including:

—Indications that counselor Danny Hines assisted the congressional campaign of Rep. Anthony Hall, D-Houston, on HEART time. Hall's father-in-law, Jimmy Middleton, was a director of HEART.

Jimmy Middleton is the brother of Howard Middleton, the program's founder and a Houston black labor leader who was appointed to the Texas Youth Council by Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

TDCA evaluators noted that Hines' activity report of Sept. 9, 1977, said, "Time is also being used taking names on behalf of Anthony Hall, campaign purposes." The words, "campaign purposes," were lined out, and "Recruitment for FY '78" was written in.

—Howard Middleton continued to lead HEART after he and Jimmy Middleton resigned to end a nepotism problem. Board minutes of an Oct. 3, 1977, board meeting showed Howard Middleton — as unpaid consultant — was given "authority to lead the program in all phases except the actual signing of checks."

Evaluators said HEART "should refund to TDCA" all money paid to Christopher Middleton since he was hired on Sept. 27, 1976.

TDCA warned HEART in September that unless the alleged nepotism was not brought to an immediate end, HEART would lose its federal funds. Howard and Jimmy Middleton resigned from the board Sept. 30.

—Howard Middleton's son, Donnell, a former HEART employee, was on the payroll of a consulting firm with which HEART had a contract, signed by Howard Middleton.

Evaluators said this "demonstrates poor program management that is possible (sic) in violation of the CETA Private Gain Assurance."

CETA is the federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act, which funds HEART's $200,000-a-year program of job training and referral.

—A "revealing in-house quarterly documentation" of CETA activities shows neither former executive director Jerry Pruitt or bookkeeper-counselor Martha Gonzalez. Both women, however, charged 70 percent or more of their time to CETA for client services, the evaluators said.

"That portion of time not satisfactorily accounted for should be reduced to an equitable monetary amount and refunded to TDCA," the report said.

Ducats On Sale For Production Of Irish Play

St. Patrick's Day is over, but the Irish magic is slated to make a reappearance when Civic Lubbock Inc. hosts two local performances of "Finian's Rainbow" at 8:30 p.m. April 21 and 22 in the Civic Center theater.

Civic Center executive director Mickey Yerger said the media will be meeting at noon today to discuss the musical production, as it is a "first" of sorts for the city. That is, "Finian's Rainbow" marks the first time four separate local organizations — Civic Lubbock, Texas Tech Music Theater, Lubbock Civic Ballet and Texas Tech University Theater — have combined resources.

Civic Lubbock is hosting the show. Tech music theater director John Gillas is acting as producer and director, and Tech faculty member Kyung Wook Shin will conduct the orchestra. Choreography is by Diana Moore of Lubbock Civic Ballet, and the University Theater will provide costume and technical assistance.

Following expenses, profits, if any, will be shared by Civic Lubbock and Texas Tech University. Jim Toland of the Tech music department said all university profits "will be put toward scholarships."

The cast for "Finian's Rainbow" is made up of community and campus singers, actors and dancers. Many cast members are students from local high schools, junior high schools and elementary schools. Numbering over 65, the large cast reflects the diversity of the community, as well as the strong community interest in the arts.

Manslaughter Charge Filed In Bike Death

The collision killed Mackey Avington Paxton, 24, who was operating the bicycle near the intersection of N. U.S. 87 and Yucca Avenue.

A witness said Miss Williams' auto was traveling north on U.S. 87 when it failed to negotiate a curve. According to reports, Paxton was riding a bicycle approximately three feet west of the east curb line.

The first show of milch goats was held at Exhibition Park, Rochester, N.Y., in September 1913 in conjunction with the sixth annual Rochester Industrial Exposition.

School Race

schools a "tremendous idea." Mrs. O'Brien stressed voluntary busing and allowing students a "choice as to which schools best suit their needs." Crawford also favors magnet programs, provided they are "continuously evaluated and upgraded" to attract students.

To obtain more input from the community, Mrs. O'Brien suggested that school trustees and administrators hold informal "rap sessions" with citizens; Crawford advocated periodic night meetings of the board; Dollins urged evening meetings and stronger personal ties between trustees and teachers and parents; and Mrs. Muldrew supported visits to schools by board members.

The four candidates say they support in theory merit pay — in contrast to the experience-based salary scale for teachers. But most of them said a merit system probably wouldn't work in practice unless teachers are involved in setting up an evaluation procedure.

The candidates also said they support both open-space and self-contained schools, but that parents should have a choice about the kind of program their children should attend.

Lubbock voters will fill the two school board places Saturday.

Six Seeking Berths On Roosevelt Panel

Others vying for the two posts are Norton Willis, 35, a sales manager for the Lake Ransom Canyon housing development; James Walter, a 33-year-old farmer; Cecilia Whetzel, 38, housewife; and Wanda L. Wiley, 31, also a housewife.
