Canadian soldiers killed in crash

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — A C-130 crashed into a snowbank and split in two during a landing in a thick, icy fog, killing eight Canadian soldiers heading to a major U.S.-Canadian military exercise, officials said.

The Canadian Hercules C-130 was carrying eight crewmen and 10 special service paratroopers from Edmonton, Alberta, when it crashed just short of the runway at Fort Wainwright's airfield, said U.S. Army Capt. Jim Rodgers.

"The weather was quite bad," said Rodgers. At the time of the crash, he said, a thick, icy fog blanketed the runway and the temperature registered around 60 degrees below zero.

Six of the troops aboard were pronounced dead on arrival at Bassett Army Community Hospital on the base and two others died while receiving treatment at the hospital, Army Maj. Sherrel Mock said.

Three soldiers were in critical condition, one was listed as stable, and the remaining six had minor injuries but were being held for observation, Mock said.

After the crash, Mock said, Canadian officials canceled their forces' participation in the exercise, Brim Frost '89, and recalled remaining Canadian aircraft and servicemen.

Investigators, including explosives experts, examined the wreckage overnight, Mock said. The plane's cargo included training ammunition.

The four-engine Lockheed Corp. turbo-prop aircraft, one of the longest-running planes in continuous production, generally is not designed for the cold weather, said H. David Crowther, vice president of corporate communications in Calabasas, Calif.

■ Alaska's freezing weather continues — 2A

U.S. and Canadian investigators had not determined whether weather caused the crash, Mock said.

"We've been landing aircraft for the past two weeks in the same conditions," said Mock. "The runway, as far as I know, was not icy."

The troop transport plane's last contact with the control tower was at 6:47 p.m. (10:47 p.m. EST). There were no distress calls from the plane before it crashed a few minutes later, Mock said.

The plane split in two after the crash and there was no evidence of fire, Rodgers said.

It was the second of three Canadian planes heading to the exercises Sunday. The first landed safely at Wainwright; the third was diverted to Fairbank's civilian airport.

The plane took off from Edmonton's Namao Base, said Luigi Rossetto, a Canadian Forces spokesman.

The soldiers belonged to Force Mobile Command and were part of a 500-man paratroop force that was to support the 1st Brigade, 6th Infantry Division (Light), in a major land battle that is the centerpiece of the Brim Frost ground exercises near Fairbanks.

About 26,000 servicemen, 120 aircraft and 1,000 vehicles from the U.S. Army, Air Force, Marines, Coast Guard, National Guard, reserve units and Canadian Forces are participating in the cold-weather training exercise.

The giant Lockheed C-130, which has a wingspan of more than 130 feet, is a military workhorse that's used to transport troops and equipment. First delivered to the U.S. military in 1956, they have been involved in several crashes in recent years.

In June, a C-130 plunged into a soybean field about a mile short of the airport in Greenville, Miss., killing six Air National Guardsmen aboard as they completed a series of touch-and-go landings.

A C-130 also practicing touch-and-go landings crashed in September 1986 at Fort Campbell, Ky., killing three of the five National Guardsmen aboard.

Judges may get raises even if they don't work

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fifth of all senior federal judges including former Chief Justice Warren E. Burger stand to collect their largest pay raises in a decade even though they no longer handle any court cases, The Associated Press has learned.

This windfall — increasing Burger's salary by $60,000 to $175,000 a year, for example — stems from a complex retirement system that allows federal judges to reduce their caseloads sharply while still qualifying for active-duty pay increases. In stepping down from full-time duty, they accept a title of "senior judge."

Aside from Burger, the 305 other senior judges also stand to see their salaries rise by about 50 percent unless Congress disapproves the package of raises for top federal officials.

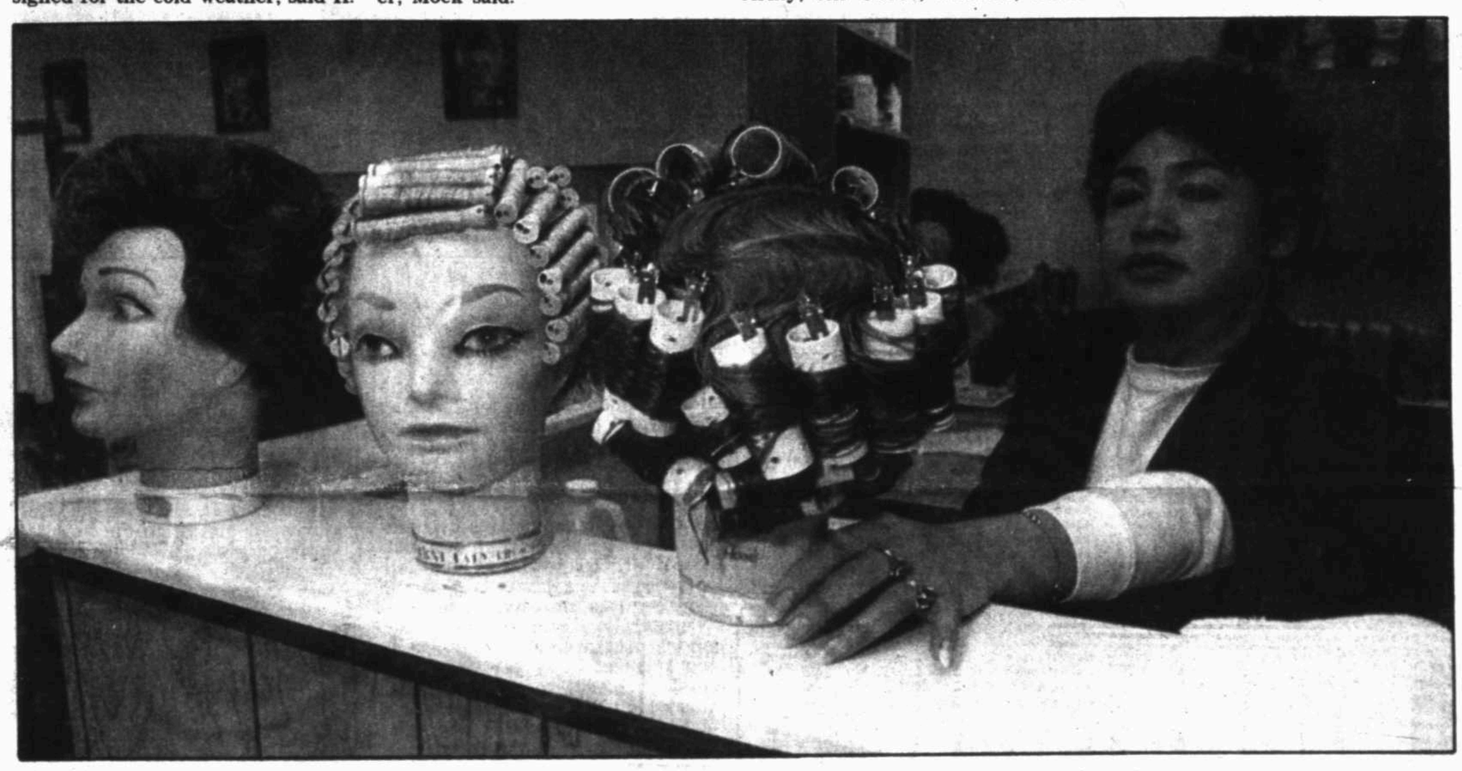

Judges who retire through resignation — the other option provided by Congress — keep for life the same salary they received on their last day of work. In Burger's case, it would have been $108,400.

Senior status is the vastly more popular option, and experts believe the federal court system might be hopelessly clogged without the part-time contributions of these jurists.

But administrative records obtained by the AP indicate that roughly one in five of the nation's 306 senior judges do no judicial work whatsoever. They get the raises but are as hard to find on the bench as the 13 former judges who chose full retirement through resignation.

"It doesn't seem fair," said Rep. Carlos Moorhead, a member of a House subcommittee overseeing the federal judiciary. The California Republican, whose skepticism last year sidetracked a bill to lower the eligibility age for senior status, said, "We need to look into this much further." Congress may want to study "establishing some minimum work to qualify for the raises," he said.

Trucker says collision couldn't be avoided

The driver of a tractor-trailer rig involved in a major Interstate 20 accident late Sunday night told police he didn't see the camper he struck from behind "until it was too late," a Midland Police sergeant said.

Two people remained in critical care and another three were listed in satisfactory condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital after the accident, hospital spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

Listed in serious condition were Joseph Tiffens, 66, of Grand Prairie, who was asleep in the sleeper cab of the rig when the accident occurred, and Arthur Allen, 88, of Oxnard, Calif., one of three people in the camper.

Tiffens suffered chest injuries and Allen suffered multiple trauma injuries to several parts of his body, Ms. Ristom said.

In satisfactory condition with leg injuries and burns was Gary Tiffens, 34, of Irving, the driver of the rig. Also listed as satisfactory were Robert Klingerberger, 31, of Oxnard, a camper passenger who sustained cuts and abrasions, and the driver of the camper, Donna Klingerberger, 60, who also sustained cuts and abrasions, Ms. Ristom said.

Staunch critic of North feels vindicated

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Long before Oliver North's name was synonymous with the Iran-contra scandal, Texas congressman Ron Coleman had misgivings about what the lieutenant colonel was cooking up in the White House basement.

The serious lawmaker from El Paso was ridiculed for his concerns, criticized in direct mailouts across his district for his "anti-administration" positions, and targeted for defeat by national Republicans in his 1986 re-election.

But now, on the eve of North's criminal trial on 12 charges in connection with the Iran-contra affair, Coleman feels vindicated. One of the counts against the former National Security Council aide accuses North of obstruction of Congress, a charge that stems from Coleman's queries more than two years ago.

Coleman involvement in the case began when he read published reports suggesting North was allegedly masterminding a behind-the-scenes operation to secretly help the Nicaraguan rebels during a congressional ban on military aid to the contras.

"My government was accused of doing illegal things. It's my government. If they are doing things that are wrong, they ought to answer them and come clean with the American people," Coleman said last week.

In June 1986, the Democratic lawmaker introduced what is known as a "resolution of inquiry" in the House. He demanded White House documents pertaining to allegations North set up a "secret network of intermediaries" to provide covert assistance to the contras, including military advice and tactics, in apparent violation of the law.

Coleman wanted, he said at the time, "to crack the wall of silence" erected by the White House.

"Did this allegedly secret White House operation deliberatly break the law? If the administration continues its policy of silence, we'll have to get the answer ourselves," Coleman vowed.

"I didn't do it lightly," he said. "I thought it was right and correct for the White House to answer charges being placed in newspaper articles consistently in 1986 that the United States was in violation of its own laws. it is bad for us, for a nation to be charged with that."

American diplomats close mission in Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — U.S. diplomats lowered the Stars and Stripes and closed their mission in embattled Kabul today as departing Soviet troops headed north in what one Moscow envoy said could be the last truck convoy home.

Afghan troops and Moslem guerrillas continue to fight for control of the Salang Highway, the only road linking the capital and the Soviet border.

Insurgents based in Pakistan said Sunday that Soviet bombing and missile attacks along the 260-mile highway had killed 600 civilians and injured 1,200 in the past several days.

"The mangled bodies are still under the debris," the Afghan News Agency, operating from bordering Pakistan by a guerrilla group, said in a telexed statement.

Official Radio Kabul, monitored in Pakistan, said Afghan troops had carried out "successful military operations" with civilians who want to keep the rugged Salang Highway open.

Just north of Kabul on Sunday, a convoy of Soviet soldiers in armored personnel carriers and trucks loaded with missile launchers cruised through a Soviet bunker checkpoint as helicopter gunships hovered nearby, offering cover.

A Soviet diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said, "This could be the last convoy." He refused to elaborate.

Two fighter jets streaked overhead and disappeared behind the snow-covered mountains just beyond the hills surrounding Kabul.

The remaining Red Army troops apparently are leaving on transport planes, completing a withdrawal begun eight months ago under a U.N.-brokered agreement to end the Soviet's nine-year intervention in Afghanistan.

Moscow sent about 115,000 troops into Afghanistan in December 1979 to prop up Marxists who seized power in a coup the previous year.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the mid-30s, and winds be light and southwesterly.

Tuesday will continue fair and warmer with a high in the upper 70s and southwesterly winds gusting from 15-20 mph.

Sunday's high of 56 was 22 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 78 set in 1967. The overnight low of 28 was 20 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of eight set in 1951.

NATION

Strong winds blew across the eastern slopes of the Rockies in Montana, and Santa Ana winds whipped through Southern California today as rain fell across much of the rest of the nation.

The Montana winds gusted up to 65 mph Sunday, and were expected to top 70 mph today. High winds were also forecast for the mountains of northwest Wyoming, where a high wind watch was in effect.

Santa Anas gusted to 30 mph at Fontana and Banning in California, where a wind advisory remained in effect for valleys and areas below mountain passes.

Showers and some thunderstorms extended along a cold front from southeast Texas to northern Louisiana, middle Tennessee and West Virginia.

Rain fell in southern New England, while freezing rain and snow fell in parts of northern New England. Drizzle and fog extended across much of the Great Lakes and the Ohio Valley.

Temperatures remained mild in the eastern two-thirds of the nation. But Alaskans struggled with frozen pipes, food and fuel shortages and wind chills of minus 125 degrees in a record cold spell that showed no sign of relaxing its 2-week-old icy grip.

The coldest place in the state Sunday was McGrath 150 miles west of Mount McKinley, where it was minus 64. It was 61 below zero in Tanana, 60 below in Fairbanks and minus 45 in Deadhorse. In Anchorage, the temperature was 30 below, the coldest January day since 1975.

Elsewhere, today's forecast called for scatered showers and thunderstorms along the Gulf Coast; showers extending from much of the Atlantic Coast to the southern Appalachians and the Tennessee Valley; snow in northern Maine; and rain along the coast of Washington state.

STATE

Dense fog in the Concho Valley area and parts of West and North Texas this morning was to give way to clear afternoon and evening skies.

The National Weather Service reported early morning fog in West and North Texas and a cold front along the Gulf Coast dominated today's weather picture. But clear skies and a light wind were to prevail over much of the state later today.

The NWS forecast mostly sunny skies late today with clear skies tonight over North and West Texas. In South Texas, today's mostly cloudy skies and scattered showers along the coast are expected to give way to partly cloudy skies tonight.

Alaskans suffering food, fuel shortages

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Alaskans struggled with frozen pipes, shortages of fuel and food and wind chills of minus 125 degrees in a record cold spell that showed no sign of relaxing its 2-week-old icy grip.

A high-pressure system with clear skies, stinging cold and wind heading southeast from Alaska's interior, and another high-pressure system moving toward Alaska from Siberia threatened to prolong the cold snap.

"Basically, we can expect the same kind of cold to continue, with temperatures way below normal," National Weather Service meteorologist Dan Keeton said Sunday night. "Any increase in temperature would be slight to moderate by the end of the week."

The coldest place in the state Sunday was McGrath, 150 miles west of Mount McKinley, where it was minus 64. It was 61 below zero in Tanana, 60 below in Fairbanks and minus 45 in Deadhorse. In Anchorage, the temperature was a "balmy" minus 30, the coldest January day since 1975, the weather service said.

During the weekend, 17 all-time record lows fell across the state, Keeton said. "In Dillingham, they just shattered theirs," he said. "It had been 36 degrees below; now, it's 53 degrees below zero."

The normal temperature for January in Fairbanks is minus 13 degrees, according to the weather service.

Wind chills down to 125 degrees below zero prompted warnings that motorists avoid the heavily traveled Parks Highway that connects Fairbanks and Anchorage.

Other problems included fuel and food shortages, power outages, frozen water and sewer lines, congealed fuel oil and grounded planes in rural areas, state officials said.

"There are no immediate life-threatening situations...but there are some communities enduring considerable hardship and inconvenience," the state Division of Emergency Services said Sunday.

Gov. Steve Cowper signed a declaration of emergency Saturday so that state assistance funds will be more readily available if requested.

At King Cove on the Alaska Peninsula, residents with frozen fuel lines were using open buckets of fuel with copper tubing to feed furnaces, officials said Sunday.

Mankotak officials said they were running out of heating fuel, and Lower Kalskag on the Kuskokwim River was running out of fuel and food.

The cold weather and balky hydraulic systems slowed aircraft refueling at Anchorage International Airport. Several freight flights were canceled and 270 passengers aboard a Northwest Airlines flight from Chicago to Tokyo were stranded; after landing in Anchorage to refuel, an engine jammed, officials said.

In Anchorage, firefighters trying to fight fires wrestled with frozen pumps on their trucks and other cold-related problems.

The cold spell heated up business for plumbers, who had long waiting lists of people with frozen water pipes and balky furnaces.

The Red Cross opened emergency shelters in Anchorage and at Port Graham on the Kenai Peninsula. Residents of the Kodiak area borrowed fuel from schools to keep warm.

Workers from the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation clear wreckage from the shoulder of U.S. Interstate 20 after a Sunday night accident near the highway's intersection with Loop 250 West. Pictured in the foreground are remnants of an Oxnard, Calif., camper that had collided with a Dallas tractor-trailer rig.

WRECK

Preliminary police reports said the two vehicles were traveling westbound in the right lane of the interstate about 300 yards before the Loop 250 West exit when the rig struck the camper from behind.

The driver of the rig swerved into the left lane immediately after hitting the second vehicle. The camper, however, fell to the right into a barrow ditch.

The rig skidded down the highway about 100 feet, jack-knifed and landed facing the camper on its left side in the bar ditch.

"The driver of the camper was going to take the exit to get gasoline. Her son, who had been sleeping at the back of the camper, had just left the bed to get into front passenger seat," Midland Police Sgt. Mike Roberts said this morning.

"The (tractor-trailer rig) driver claims he didn't see the camper until he was on top of it, and it was too late to avoid the collision," the sergeant continued.

At the scene this morning, all that remained of the camper was debris after its frame had been towed. The 18-wheeler's cab was visibly crushed, though its cargo — ketchup and canned goods — remained intact and was being loaded into another truck.

No charges had been filed and no tickets had been issued this morning in relation to the accident which reports said occurred at 11:48 p.m. Sunday.

JUDGES

As the law stands now, there is no such minimum. A senior judge may work as much — or as little — as he wants. A federal judge cannot be forced to resign; the Constitution says a judicial appointment is for life.

Under recommendations by then-President Reagan, the highest-paid federal officials will receive their largest raises in a decade on Feb. 8 if Congress does not disapprove.

Comparatively unnoticed in the political controversy over the 50 percent congressional pay raise are equal increases for federal trial judges and raises nearly as generous for the rest of the judiciary.

Federal district judges would see their salaries rise from $89,500 to $135,000; appellate judges from $95,000 to $140,000; and Supreme Court justices from $110,000 to $165,000. Senior judges get the same salaries.

Stephen Gillers, professor of legal ethics at New York University, said he saw no ethical problem for the non-working senior judges but "it may be the statute should be changed. It may be unwise or bad management. It's a question whether the public is getting its money's worth."

Congress created the senior judge category in 1919. By luring older jurists out of their lifetime appointments, lawmakers hoped to ease court workloads and open jobs for younger appointees to the bench.

In large measure, senior judges pitch in just as Congress intended.

As a group, they handle between 10 and 15 percent of all federal cases. "The federal judiciary would be a mess without the help of senior judges," said Frank Coffin, an appeals court judge from Portland, Maine, who plans to maintain a substantial caseload once he claims senior status.

Some, like 91-year-old Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta, are on the bench almost as often as their 750 active colleagues. Tuttle does about 70 percent as much work as the active judges in the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, according to circuit executive Norman Zoller.

Senior status is available to any judge who is at least 65 with 15 years experience or 70 with 10 years. There are now a total of 306, including Burger, said David Cook of the Administrative Office of the Courts.

For those senior judges who do not work, reasons can differ dramatically.

James Noel Jr., a senior judge in Houston, performed his last judicial duty in 1978 when his annual salary was $54,500 — $80,500 a year less than the salary he stands to begin receiving next month.

Noel, 79, took senior status in 1976 when he was 66, after 15 years as a federal trial judge. Asked why he chose senior status and not resignation, Noel told AP, "It was just a matter of choice."

Noel regularly travels to his downtown office to manage his "extensive investments." When asked about his impending pay raise, Noel said, "I was expecting it."

Owen Cox, appointed as a federal trial judge in Texas by President Nixon in 1970, took senior status in 1981. Jesse Clark, the district court's clerk, said Cox did substantial work for most of a year until "his health failed and he had difficulty getting to the office."

"He's been hospitalized for three years. He's on a life-support system," Clark said.

Cox's salary would rise to $135,000 next month. Had he resigned in 1981 his salary would have been frozen at $67,100.

Burger left the Supreme Court bench in September 1986 to serve as unpaid chairman of the commission celebrating the bicentennials of the Constitution and Bill of Rights. He declined to answer questions about his impending pay increase and his judicial workload other than to pass along that, "I'm too busy to sit."

When he retired, his salary was $108,400. Had he resigned, Burger's annual salary would have been frozen for life at that figure. But Burger, who has spent much of his career campaigning for higher salaries for judges, chose senior status. As a result, he qualifies for whatever pay raises are extended to his successors as chief justice.

In 1987, the chief justice's salary was raised to $115,000, and Burger got the increase along with Chief Justice William Rehnquist. Under the new proposal, Rehnquist and Burger each would be paid $175,000.

Soviet diplomats in Kabul say the remaining 15,000 to 20,000 Red Army troops could be gone by the end of the week, about 10 days before the U.N. deadline of Feb. 15.

The guerrillas are not a party to the U.N. agreement and have vowed to overthrow the government of President Najib once the Soviets are gone.

At the U.S. Embassy in Kabul, American diplomats said they would return once peace is restored in this war-torn counry.

"Today we leave at a moment that is both happy and sad," said the charge d'affaires, Jon D. Glassman, after a flag-lowering ceremony in the embassy's snow-covered compound.

"We are pleased that the people of Afghanistan are going to be relieved of their suffering, but we know their struggle is not over. The people of the United States are with them," he said. "We will be back as soon as the conflict is over."

At the ceremony, three Marine guards took down the U.S. flag, folded it and handed it to Glassman.

The State Department last week ordered the 11-member embassy staff to leave, citing fears the Afghan army may not be capable of protecting foreign diplomats once the Soviets leave.

West Germany, Britain, Japan, France and Austria all have withdrawn or are withdrawing their embassy staffs. Italy and some of Moscow's East bloc allies are considering similar action.

Glassman declined to say when the U.S. staff would leave Kabul aboard a chartered flight to India. The airport was closed today due to snow and fog.

After the embassy staff departs, 10 Americans will remain in Kabul. All are missonaries.

The Afghan government has denounced the embassy closures as unnecessary and aimed solely at encouraging the U.S.-backed Moslem insurgents to intensify their fighting.

At a Soviet checkpoint about 12 miles north of Kabul on Sunday, Afghan soldiers paced nervously along the Salang highway as the Soviet convoy rolled past.

"How's everything going?" one Afghan officer was asked.

"Very bad," he said.

Earlier Sunday, Afghan soldiers said, guerrillas had fired on a convoy of about 350 trucks carrying flour, eggs, diesel fuel, gasoline and other supplies down the highway to Kabul. One driver, an Afghan, was slightly injured by a bullet that grazed his leg, they said.

The Soviets have assured the Najib government that they will continue to provide military assistance after the last Soviet troops return home.

Tass said Sunday that a Soviet delegation led by Yuri Maslyukov, a non-voting member of the ruling Politburo, had arrived in Kabul for talks with Najib on Soviet economic aid.

It said the discussion focused on how Moscow would help the Afghans "thwart the opposition's plans to establish an economic blockade of the capital" and that Moscow would supply food, fuel "and essentials."

NORTH

At a news conference to announce his resolution of inquiry, a reporter from a major newspaper scoffed, crumpled up the press release, and told Coleman there was nothing to his concerns, an aide remembers.

Within weeks of filing the inquiry resolution, Coleman noticed a dramatic increase in pro-Contra activity in his far West Texas district, including direct mailouts criticizing his anti-administration position on military aid to the contras.

An aide said there were strong indicators North had worked on pro-Contra television ads aimed at Coleman and other congressional critics of the administration's Central American policies.

At the same time, the Republican National Committee poured thousands of dollars in contributions into the campaign warchest of Coleman's general election opponent, Roy Gillia. And top leaders of Miami-based contra groups, including Alfonso Robelo and Arturo Cruz, visited El Paso before the November 1986 election, which Coleman won handily.

In the meantime, members of the House, acting on Coleman's inquiry, met with North at the White House, where he denied the allegations. North is now charged with making false and misleading statements in connection with that meeting.

Coleman said later that if the White House had answered the questions, he and other congressmen might have "bumped right into" North's alleged scheme to divert profits from Iran arms sales to the contras.

But the people at the White House, Coleman said, "didn't tell us the truth."

Although theft and conspiracy charges have been dismissed against North, Coleman says he's convinced that "very profound charges remain." He says they get to the heart of whether the three branches of government are co-equal "or can people in the basement of the White House disregard laws passed by the Congress of the United States for what they personally believe is in the national interest.

"North made an unprecedented challenge to the U.S. Constitution to suggest the three branches of government are not equal, and that certainly, the legislative one does not need to be preserved," Coleman said.

Now it's up to the courts and a jury to decide. But when the trial begins Tuesday, Coleman won't be sitting in the stands to watch a case that may have a profound impact in the country's history. He did what he could and he doesn't regret it.

"I'm glad I did it. I'd do the same thing for any administration.

'Mississippi Burning' revives controversy

By STRAT DOUTHAT

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. (AP) — "Mississippi Burning," the new movie that depicts the murders of three civil rights workers 25 years ago, may never play in the small Mississippi farm town where the bloody episode took place.

"Some people have asked me to show it but I've also had church groups threaten to boycott me if I do," says Lula Ellis, the owner of Philadelphia's only movie theater. "I haven't made up my mind."

Folks in Philadelphia, population 6,800, are ambivalent about having to relive one of the most sensational events of the civil rights era.

Even Cecil Price, the former Neshoba County sheriff's deputy who went to prison for his role in the 1964 slayings of James Chaney, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner, said he hasn't decided whether he will see the Orion Pictures film, recently released across the country.

"I'm trying to lead a different life now and I just wish all that stuff hadn't been dredged up again," said the 52-year-old Price, who served four years of a six-year sentence.

"I'm sure everybody involved wishes it had never happened," he added. "We just want to forget about it."

Philadelphia Mayor Charles McClain echoed those sentiments.

"I think most people know what happened here," McClain told a visiting reporter. "Why don't you all just let us alone?"

McClain, who operates a local funeral home, said many changes have taken place in Philadelphia during the past quarter century.

He cited the county's integrated school system, the black city policemen and firemen, and the city's black alderman — there also are four whites on the City Council — as evidence that Philadelphia is not the same place it was when the murders occurred.

"PEOPLE HERE don't understand why Philadelphia is being singled out. Govs. George Wallace and Ross Barnett, the whole region, was standing up to what was happening back then. There were all those busloads of Northerners coming down here, telling us what do to ...."

"Besides," he continued, "it was just coincidence that the murders happened here. The people who were killed were outsiders and the people who did it were, too. It's as if a jetliner had crashed here and the people of Neshoba County were held responsible."

But retired special agent Joseph Sullivan, who led the FBI investigation into the murders, has another view of the case.

"Neshoba was an incredibly closed and racist county," he said, when contacted at his Manhattan home.

"The county's law enforcement officers knew what was happening, the blacks and Indians in the county were almost supine, and practically none of the whites in Philadelphia would cooperate with us in solving the case; we found that almost every adult white male in the county had connections with the Ku Klux Klan."

Sullivan said he recently had seen "Mississippi Burning" in New York.

"It's a good cowboys-and-Indians movie but bears little resemblance to what actually occurred," he said. "If anybody wants to know what really happened they should read Florence Mars' book."

The book, "Witness in Philadelphia," was published in 1977. The author, now 65, was one of the few Philadelphia residents who would cooperate with the FBI.

"IT WAS CLEAR something terrible was happening in Philadelphia," she said recently, while recalling the days when practically the entire county was involved in a conspiracy of silence.

Mars, a member of a prominent Neshoba County family, testified before the federal grand jury investigating the murders. She also spoke out against the Klan and urged local officials to acknowledge what had happened in Philadelphia.

As a result, the Klan staged a boycott of her stockyard that forced her out of business.

Mars says there have been many tremendous and positive changes in her community since the Jim Crow days when blacks were likely to be beaten or even hanged for angering a white person.

But she also says some people steadfastly refuse to admit the community did anything wrong.

"Of the 18 people that eventually were arrested and charged in the case, nine were from Neshoba County," she noted. "And that included the sheriff, the sheriff-elect and the chief deputy."

The other nine were from the Meridian and Laurel, to the south of Philadelphia.

"And they were invited to come into the county," observed Beatrice Cole, an 85-year-old black woman from nearby Mount Zion. She still vividly recalls watching a group of Klansmen beat her husband nearly to death on the night of June 16, 1964, just five days before the murders of Goodman, Chaney and Schwerner.

"WE HAD JUST come out of church and the whites were waiting for us," she said. "They thought we'd been having a meeting with Schwerner to talk about registering Negroes to vote but it was just a regular church meeting, that's all."

The Klansmen, some wearing black robes, dragged her husband, J.R. "Bud" Cole, from his car and began beating him with clubs.

"I got down on my knees a few feet away and started praying," Mrs. Cole said. "The leader saw me and told the others not to kill my husband."

Later that night, the Mount Zion Methodist Church was burned to the ground.

"Nothing was ever done about the fire, nor about the beating of my husband," Mrs. Cole said. "That's the way things were."

The Coles did meet with Goodman, Schwerner and Chaney on the 21st. The three had come to Mount Zion from their home base in Meridian to investigate the burning of the church.

Earnest Kirkland, who lives near the Coles, was the last friendly face that the three workers were to see.

"They ate Sunday dinner at my parents' house that afternoon," Kirkland said. "Then they gave me a ride down the road to a friend's house and headed back to Meridian, but they never made it."

What happened was that Price had been tipped off that the three were in the county. He arrested them on a traffic charge and took them to the Neshoba County Jail.

CHANEY, a 21-year-old black man, was from Meridian. Schwerner, 24, and Goodman, 20, were from New York. Goodman, a summer volunteer, had arrived in Mississippi the previous day.

After being held for several hours the three prisoners were permitted to post bond. But when they left the jail, escorted by Price, a Klan group intercepted them, killed them and buried their bodies in an earthen dam on the outskirts of town.

The FBI found the bodies 44 days after the killings. They were guided by a tip from an informant who was paid $30,000.

The informant was never identified.

"But everybody was suspicious of everybody else," Mars recalled. "And for months everybody was watching to see if anybody bought a new car or started spending money they shouldn't have."

When the state of Mississippi failed to prosecute the case, the federal government stepped in and charged 18 men with conspiring to violate the victims' civil rights. Eventually, seven were convicted and given sentences ranging from three to 10 years.

Lawrence Rainey, the Neshoba County sheriff at the time of the murders, was acquitted. The jury was unable to reach a verdict in the case of E.G. "Hop" Barnett, the sheriff-elect.

Rainey now works as a security guard in Meridian. Barnett is retired, and Price is employed as a driver at a Philadelphia trucking company owned by Olen Burrage, on whose land the bodies were found.

Burrage, who was among those tried and acquitted, declined to discuss the case, as did Barnett.

BUT RAINEY, who is employed by a black-owned company, still maintains his innocence. He said the news media have always portrayed him as a racist but as sheriff he merely upheld the law, as he saw it.

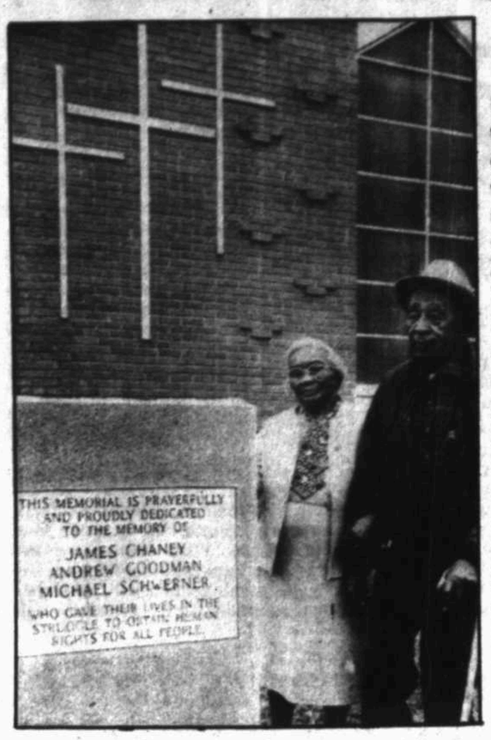

Rainey, who was hounded from several jobs by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, also said he doesn't expect "Mississippi Burning" will cause him any problems, given that he is employed by a black man now.

Carolyn Goodman, Andrew Goodman's mother, says she thinks a greater effort should be made to remember what happened in Mississippi 25 years ago "so nothing like that will ever happen again."

The city of Philadelphia, however, has done nothing to commemorate the deaths. Mayor McClain says he sees no need for any observations or monuments "since the victims were all outsiders."

"Really, there isn't much talk about what happened any more," said Earnest Kirkland, now 55. "The only white person who ever mentioned it to me was a young boy out at the plant where I work.

"He asked me, 'Did it really happen?' I started to tell him to go ask his daddy but I just said, 'Yeah, it really happened.'"

J.R. "Bud" and Beatrice Cole show the memorial marker in Neshoba County, Miss., to James Chaney, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner, civil rights workers murdered in 1964. They are standing in front of the Mount Zion Methodist Church, burned by the Ku Klux Klan five days before the murders. The night of the burning, Klansmen beat Cole as he left a meeting at the church.

ag-nos´tik

agnostic — (noun) The word "agnostic" can be traced back to the ancient Greek word "agnostos" meaning "unknowing," "not knowing" or "unknowable." It was probably first used in its modern sense by T.H. Huxley in 1869. "Agnostic" refers to someone who maintains a continuing doubt about the existence or knowability of a God or any ultimates. Generally, an agnostic is seen as a neutral thinker, unwilling on available evidence to affirm or deny the existence of a higher being.

Likely Democratic Party chief both an outsider, insider

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald H. Brown, the establishment lawyer who played a key backstage role in Jesse Jackson's anti-establishment presidential campaign, is poised to take the spotlight himself as the first black to head a major political party in the United States.

Brown

Brown's ascension to the Democratic Party chairmanship became all but certain last week when he was endorsed by his chief rival for the post.

It was a remarkably swift triumph for the 47-year-old political veteran who grew up in Harlem but attended predominantly white schools on New York's Upper East Side.

His parents were graduates of Howard University, one of the nation's premier black colleges, but they sent their only child to Middlebury College in Vermont, where he was one of the few blacks. He now serves on the college's board of trustees and is chairman of the board of the Kennedy Institute for Politics at Harvard.

Brown worked for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and studied law under Mario Cuomo. His ties to the Democratic Party's liberal wing are firm, and were cited by opponents to his bid for the party chairmanship.

Former Rep. Jim Jones of Oklahoma, who said he was remaining in the race at least long enough to assess if he had a chance to win, said the question for Democrats is "whether we're going to be perceived as mainstream or to the left of the mainstream."

The breakthrough for Brown came when Richard Wiener, chairman of the Michigan Democratic Party, abruptly announced, "I am ending my campaign for Democratic National chair."

"From the outset of my campaign, I have stated that the next chair of our party would be either myself or Ron Brown — and properly so. By taking this action today, I believe that this race has effectively ended and that Ron Brown will achieve a first-ballot victory."

The Democratic National Committee will elect the new chairman on Feb. 10.

In a statement thanking Wiener for his support, Brown said, "I now have more than enough votes to win the chair of the DNC. I am very, very pleased and look forward to leading a united party for the next four years."

He said his first priority would be "to reach out to all Democrats. Our strength as a party depends upon our ability to appeal to Americans in every region with a message of strength and hope."

The only other candidate remaining in the race was former Rep. James Stanton of Ohio, who had no immediate comment on the latest development.

Assuming that Brown succeeds Paul G. Kirk Jr. as chairman, he may face tough sledding achieving his goal of uniting the party, particularly in the South.

"Ron is probably the most qualified guy in the race," said Florida Democratic Party chairman Charles Whitehead. "But the perception in this state is that Ron is Jesse's and Ted's and labor's guy...It poses a political problem a little bit in Florida."

But Whitehead said he would do "anything I can to help Ron overcome that perception."

Less amenable to a Brown victory was Alabama chairman John Baker, who has said it would represent a triumph for the "ultra-liberal" wing of the party. Baker said he would ignore a national party headed by Brown.

Southern opponents of Brown argued that election of a liberal as chairman would drive from the Democratic Party those whites who have remained loyal — a dwindling bloc in recent elections.

Brown has portrayed the opposition to his candidacy as racially motivated.

"People will look you in the face and say you have the credentials for the job, but...," he said. "It is race-conscious behavior."

He said the only way to overcome that attitude is "to put light on it and make people address it."

For a decade Brown moved smoothly through the capital's corridors of power, winning ready acceptance when he ran the Urban League's Washington office and then as Kennedy's general counsel and staff director on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

He was deputy manager of Kennedy's unsuccessful challenge of President Jimmy Carter for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

When that campaign ended, Brown accepted an offer to become a partner in one of the capital's major law firms. With clients that included the Japanese electronics industry and the government of Haiti, Brown earned a six-figure salary and drove a Jaguar.

He and his wife, Alma, have a son, Michael, who is in law school, and a daughter, Tracy, who is a senior at Boston College.

While pursuing his lucrative law practice, Brown remained active in Democratic Party affairs.

Jackson was rebuffed when he tried to recruit Brown to manage his presidential campaign. But in May 1988, when only Jackson and Michael Dukakis remained in the race, Brown agreed to serve as Jackson's convention manager.

While Democrats were certain Dukakis would be their nominee they were troubled by the question, "What does Jesse want?" Jackson was sending mixed signals about the vice presidential nomination and his demands for platform planks.

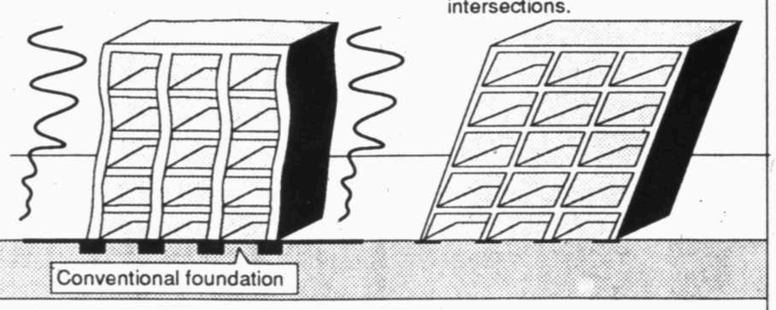

But Brown managed to deflect a potentially divisive platform debate over Middle East policy and was instrumental in arranging the convention's closing-night show of unity, when Jackson and his family joined Dukakis at the podium.

Methods Of Earthquake Engineering

Buildings are designed to resist the downward force of gravity and the pressures of wind and weather. In an earthquake, the shaking and vibration in the ground damages buildings by straining and distorting the structure in unusual directions and ways. In earthquake-prone regions, several methods are used by engineers to limit earthquake damage to buildings.

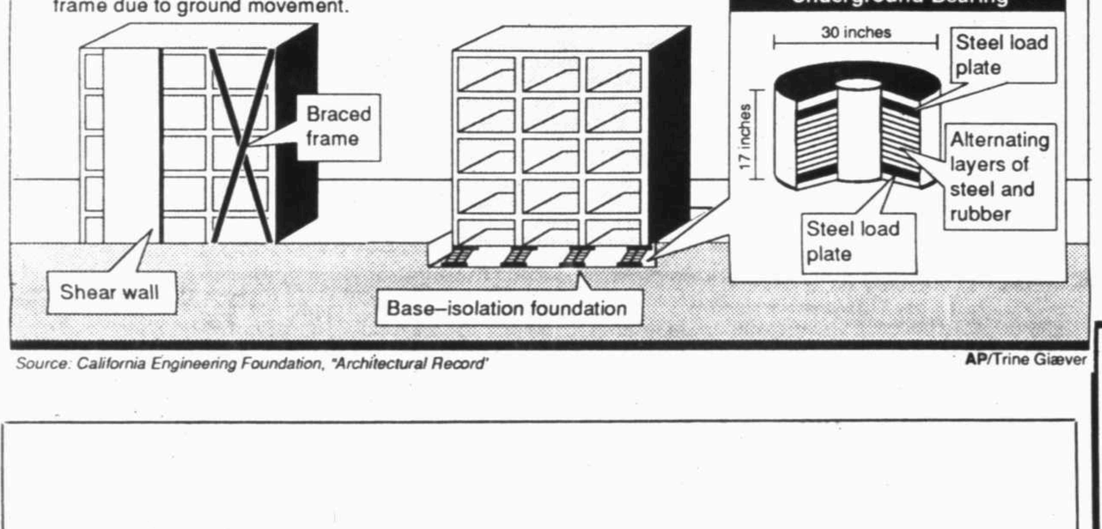

Conventional Structure
The ground movement of the earthquake is amplified in the upper floors of a building with conventional foundations.

Moment–Resisting Frame
This flexible frame absorbs and distributes energy through the columns and beams which are rigidly connected at their intersections.

Shear Wall and Braced Frame
Both features add strength to the frame and resist distortion and damage to the building's frame due to ground movement.

Base–Isolation Structure
Base–isolated foundations shift in such a way that forces are not amplified on the upper floors because the layers of rubber and steel in the underground bearings help the building shift with the ground movement.

Shock absorbers for buildings may limit economic loss in quakes

ONTARIO, Calif. (AP) — Many buildings in earthquake-prone areas should be constructed atop rubber shock absorbers to protect office contents such as computers as well as human lives, experts are telling major U.S. corporations.

"It's not adequate anymore to just think about stopping building collapse," says Robert J. Kuntz, president of the California Engineering Foundation, a nonprofit education group that sponsored a two-day conference to make engineers aware of the shock absorbers.

"You've got to protect the hundreds of millions of dollars of equipment inside these buildings and allow the enterprise to remain functional," he said. "This goes beyond protecting life and limb."

Kuntz and others urged companies in quake-prone areas nationwide to consider building new low- and medium-rise buildings — and even refurbishing old ones — using "seismic base isolation," which involves placing large, flexible shock absorbers between a building and its foundation.

The meeting drew about 100 engineers and officials from major corporations and government institutions including the Air Force, Rockwell International, TRW and Hewlett-Packard Co. It was sponsored by Kuntz's group, the National Science Foundation, the California Manufacturers Association and others.

Participants took buses to nearby Rancho Cucamonga to tour San Bernardino County's 4-year-old, $32 million Foothill Communities Law and Justice Center.

The five-level courthouse was built atop 98 cylinder-shaped rubber shock absorbers, or bearings, which measure 30 inches across by 17 inches high and are made of alternating layers of rubber and steel, said Douglas Way, of Base Isolation Consultants, the San Francisco firm that designed the system.

It was te first U.S. building and largest in the world to be built on the shock absorbers, and was designed to withstand a "great" quake measuring 8.3 on the Richter scale on the San Andreas Fault 12 miles away.

Engineers usually make buildings resistant to quakes by strengthening them and bolting them down solidly. But even if buildings resist collapse, the businesses inside can be crippled by damage to computers and other equipment, Kuntz said.

The shock absorbers are appropriate only for buildings up to about 12 levels, said civil engineer professor James Kelley, of the University of California at Berkeley. Taller buildings vibrate more slowly during major quakes and don't require the devices, which also might make the skyscrapers vulnerable to tipover, he said.

Japan now has about 20 buildings on shock absorbers, Salt Lake City has two, New Zealand one, and a planned University of Southern California hospital also will be built upon them, Kelly said.

Less advanced shock absorbers, unacceptable by U.S. standards, are beneath some buildings in China, France, Mexico and Yugoslavia, he added.

Rep. George Brown Jr., D-Calif., criticized the American construction industry for failing to keep competitive with Japanese builders in using the shock absorbers.

"The United States has done quite well in making new advances in earthquake engineering. We have not done as well in using this new knowledge to make buildings safer," Brown said, adding they should be used in new buildings and nuclear power plants.

"At this rate in 20 years...we'll just buy earthquake-resistant buildings from Japan," he added.

Many corporations haven't considered base isolation technology because it is new and expensive, Kuntz said.

Kelly said the shock absorbers add about 5 percent to the cost of a new building, but that the devices buffer a building from shaking so much that costs of reinforcement could be reduced.

The prevention of damage also makes them economical, said Alexander Tarics, president of Base Isolation Consultants.

Major and great quakes, those measuring 7 to 8 or more on the Richter scale, could cause $20 billion to $100 billion damage in Southern California and $40 billion to $60 billion in losses in northern California, not to mention thousands of deaths.

Salinger: Castro thought invasion was imminent

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

MOSCOW (AP) — At the height of the Cuban missile crisis, Fidel Castro was convinced a U.S. invasion was imminent and urgently asked Soviet leader Nikita S. Khrushchev to launch an immediate nuclear strike against the United States, a key Soviet source reportedly told some American colleagues.

The Cuban leader was said to have sent his message to Khrushchev after spending the night of Oct. 26, 1962 in the bomb shelter of the Soviet embassy in Havana, so convinced was he that war was about to break out.

Castro supposedly told Khrushchev the invasion would come within 48 hours.

The account from the Soviet source was relayed by Pierre Salinger, who was President Kennedy's press secretary at the time of the 1962 crisis. It came from a weekend meeting in Moscow of U.S., Soviet and Cuban participants and scholars who have studied the world's brush with nuclear war 26 years ago.

Salinger would not identify the Soviet official, who was said to have imparted the information in a private conversation, and the account was later denied by at least two Soviets who took part in the conference.

Among the revelations for Americans attending the session was a Soviet general's disclosure that 20 missiles and warheads — which he said constituted one-third of his country's nuclear arsenal at the time — were on Cuba at the time. However, he and another Soviet official said the warheads had not been mounted on missile launchers and were not ready for firing.

An American source said, however, that he and other former U.S. officials learned for the first time at the conference that the warheads not only were on the island but could have been mounted and fired within hours. The source asked not to be identified.

The New York Times today quoted unnamed Americans as saying the report about Castro requesting the nuclear strike originated with Sergei Khrushchev, son of the former Soviet premier. It said Sergei Khrushchev subsequently denied making the comment.

The report also was denied by Aleksandr I. Alekseyev, Soviet ambassador to Cuba in 1962.

Salinger, in a telephone interview with The Associated Press and on ABC News, for which he is a special correspondent, said the conference that brought together participants from all three sides for the first time showed the world was "closer to nuclear war than we believed at that time."

Other participants said the discussions also disclosed the Soviet nuclear arsenal was smaller than American intelligence believed at the time and that there were four times more Soviet troops in Cuba than the Kennedy administration thought.

A Cuban official disclosed that 270,000 Soviet and Cuban troops had been ready to go to war with the United States and that 100,000 casualties were expected, former U.S. Defense Secretary Robert McNamara said Sunday.

At a news conference wrapping up the conference Sunday, he said the figures on Cuba's war readiness and casualty estimate were provided by Jorge Risquet, a member of Cuba's ruling Politburo.

McNamara said that of the troops, 40,000 were Soviet, four times higher than U.S. intelligence estimated at the time.

Risquet cited the figures to show his country seriously believed that a U.S. invasion of his island was imminent. McNamara said no such invasion was ever contemplated, but speaking of the Cubans, he added: "If I had been in their shoes, I would have believed the same thing."

American officials have said they were never sure whether any Soviet nuclear warheads had actually reached Cuba but that they assumed they had.

Col. Gen. Dmitri A. Volkogonov, director of the Defense Ministry's Institute of Military History, said 20 Soviet nuclear warheads were on Cuba during the crisis and another 20 were headed there aboard a Soviet ship that was caught in the U.S. naval blockade.

Volkogonov made the remarks in a closed session of the conference Saturday, and they were reported to the AP by Raymond Garthoff, who was a State Department official at the time of the crisis.

Garthoff, now a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution in Washington, said Volkogonov reported 20 nuclear missiles were on Soviet territory targeted at the United States.

The total stockpile of Soviet nuclear warheads designed to fire on the United States at that time was 60, Garthoff quoted Volkogonov as saying.

Volkogonov said the warheads in Cuba were not ready for firing, and Viktor G. Komplektov, a deputy Soviet foreign minister, said their presence on the island did not mean they would be put on launchers in preparation for attack.

"At no time, not before, not during the beginning of the crisis, or in the most acute moments of the crisis, neither from the Soviet command there in Cuba nor in Moscow was there, or could there have been an order to mount nuclear warheads on the missiles," he told reporters.

Three people killed in Beirut bombing

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A car bomb exploded today in Christian east Beirut as right-wing Phalange Party chief George Saade drove by in a motorcade. Police said three people were killed and 17 wounded.

They said Saade, 57, escaped unscathed though his car was damaged.

Saade was riding in a bullet-proof Alfa Romeo and escorted by three carloads of bodyguards. Two bodyguards were among those killed.

No group claimed responsibility for the attack. Saade's party is a major force in the Christian camp that has been fighting against Syrian-backed Moslems in the nearly 14-year-old civil war.

The motorcade was on a wide boulevard near a cemetery in the Furn el-Shubback residential district when a red Renault packed with 110 pounds of TNT blew up, police said.

As ambulances raced back and forth at the scene, a woman dressed in black ran over glass shards littering the street screaming hysterically.

"Where is he, where is my cousin," she shouted as tears welled down her face. "I lost my only son in a damned car bomb last year and now my cousin."

Rescuers then told her that her cousin, one of Saade's bodyguards, had suffered only minor injuries.

About 10 cars were destroyed in the blast, including two vans belonging to Middle East Airlines, the country's national carrier.

An hour after the blast, Saade reassured his partisans in a statement broadcast live over the Phalange's radio station, Voice of Lebanon.

"My car was destroyed but I wasn't hurt, praise be to God," Saade said.

"I don't believe I was the target of an assassination attempt because no one could possibly have known that I was going to be driving through this particular area," Saade added.

"The route I took this morning is not the road I usually take to my office," Saade said. "I decided only minutes before leaving my house to take this route to visit (police chief) Brig. Antoine Nasr to offer my condolences for the death of his mother."

He said he believed the car bombing was aimed at disrupting efforts by the Arab League to resolve a political crisis that threatens to formalize the partition of the country.

An Arab League committee is in Tunis trying to reconcile Moslem and Christian government leaders to resolve the crisis that has prevented parliament from electing a head of state.

The term of President Amin Gemayel's, a Christian, ended Sept.23.

Police say 116 people were killed and 488 wounded in 20 car bombings in Lebanon last year.

Cruise missile unit deactivated

MOLESWORTH, England (AP) — The first NATO cruise missile base to be disarmed under provisions of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty was officially deactivated today.

The depot, operated by the U.S. Air Force 303rd Tactical Missile Wing, had been one of two in Britain for storing American cruise missiles. The last of the base's 16 operational missiles and two spares were removed in November.

They were among the 2,700 Soviet and U.S. land-based nuclear missiles with ranges of 300 to 3,000 miles to be scrapped by 1991 under terms of the nations' arms control treaty.

"To me, this is a milestone of the INF treaty. This was the first operational cruise missile unit to be inactivated," said Maj. Gen. Marcus Anderson, commander of the 3rd Air Force.

However, he said, there is always a little sadness in seeing a unit deactivated. "A unit takes on an identity and a pride in doing its job," Anderson said.

The 600-acre site at Royal Air Force Base Molesworth in Cambridgshire, 50 miles north of London, was designated as a depot in 1980, along with Greenham Common in Berkshire, 50 miles west of London.

The depots were designated for the storage of 160 American cruise missiles but Molesworth never reached its full complement of 64. It will remain a U.S. base, although officials have not yet said how it will be used.

The Defense Ministry said the Greenham Common depot will close later. The 96 missiles there are to be removed sometime this year.

The cruise missiles began leaving England Sept. 8, less than a year after they arrived at Molesworth. All were flown to Davis Monthan Base in Tucson, Ariz., to be destroyed under the watch of Soviet inspectors.

The warheads do not have to be destroyed under the treaty, and U.S. officials said they eventually will be returned to the United States.

The Soviets began removing some of their SS-20 missiles targeted at Western Europe in February 1988. The first American missiles, nine Pershing 2s, were removed Sept. 1 from a base in West Germany.

The first cruise missiles arrived in Europe in November 1983.

Ortega to announce 1989 economic plan

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega can expect little support from Nicaragua's business community — support he sorely needs to salvage an economy in crisis — as he unveils his government's economic plan for 1989.

The austerity package Ortega was to announce today reportedly includes a three-month wage and price freeze aimed at curbing inflation, which the president says reached 20,000 percent last year.

The Sandinista government has desperately sought the support of capitalists and workers to brake Nicaragua's rapid slide into economic chaos.

"There's a general awareness that the problem belongs to the whole country," and that the government alone cannot rescue the economy, said Bayardo Arce, a member of the ruling Sandinista National Directorate.

"We must establish a harmony of interests, outlining the responsibilities of the government, private enterprise and workers, so we can face the country's problems," he said in an interview.

On Dec. 31, the president announced sweeping budget cuts for the Defense Ministry and security forces.

Opposition leader Enrique Bolanos, a cotton grower and former president of the Superior Council of Private Enterprise, said Nicaraguan business leaders would not support the plan because they distrust the Sandinistas.

"The government is saying to us, 'We're drowning, toss us a lifesaver,'" Bolanos said in an interview. "But this time all we're going to throw them is an anvil, so they finish sinking."

A meeting Saturday between Ortega and labor groups that was to be open to the news media suddenly was closed, indicating negotiations were not going as smoothly as the president had hoped.

During a similar meeting Jan. 15, labor leaders complained about numerous layoffs of government workers.

Sharp currency devaluations and official price hikes have cut Nicaraguans' purchasing power. This month, the official exchange rate has gone from 920 cordobas to the dollar to 2,300 cordobas per dollar. The minimum wage is 3,748 cordobas a day, about $1.63.

The price of a liter of milk rose from about 54 cents at the beginning of the month to 87 cents. Effective today, a gallon of gasoline sells for $2.08, up from 87 cents.

The Sandinistas blame Nicaragua's economic crisis on the war with U.S.-supported Contra rebels that began in 1981.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Elephants hunt for calf

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Fifty angry elephants invaded a remote forest village twice last week and destroyed several huts while searching for a missing elephant calf, United News of India reported Sunday.

The calf had fallen into a 23-foot-deep well when the herd was being chased by Forest Department workers in the Salboni forest, 70 miles west of Calcutta, the news agency said. The workers were trying to shoo away the herd that had arrived in the area two months ago, damaging crops and frightening villagers.

The elephant calf was trapped in the well for 24 hours while villagers prevented forest workers from rescuing it, UNI said.

In the meantime, the elephant herd thundered into the village in search of the calf, UNI said. No one was injured during the elephants' two forays, but residents fled from their houses, the news agency said.

The villagers subsequently permitted Forest Department workers to rescue the calf. The elephants resisted further attempts to chase them out of the region. UNI's report from the remote area did not give the village's name.

Earthquake hits Sicily

ROME (AP) — An earthquake on Sunday shook the region around Mount Etna in eastern Sicily, causing minor damage to roads and buildings but only one injury, the Italian news agency ANSA said.

Scientists said the epicenter of the quake, which measured 3.3 on the Richter scale, was was along the Ionian coast about 18 miles north of Catania and near Mount Etna, the highest active volcano in Europe.

ANSA said the only person reported injured during the quake was a 16-year-old boy who suffered contusions from falling plaster.

The agency said officials closed a portion of the highway between Catania and Messina because of quake damage, and that several other roads were cracked.

Soviets sell satellite photos

New York Times News Service

Government and private experts who analyzed close-up photographs of the Earth sold by the Soviet Union have concluded they were taken by satellites placed in orbit for military spying rather than scientific research.

American experts said that sales of the photos came as a surprise because Soviet military space operations were normally kept secret and that the development shows such aspects of the Soviet military were undergoing rapid change.

"This is really new thinking," said Dr. Peter D. Zimmerman, physicist analyst at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in Washington, who heads an effort to analyze the photos. "I didn't think they'd make pictures available that had been used for military purposes." The best of the Soviet pictures revealed objects on the Earth as small as 5 meters, about the length of a full-size car.

Wolves maul Iranians

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Hungry wolves driven by Iran's severe winter to search for food in cities have mauled 13 people near the western city of Bakhtaran in the last two nights, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported Sunday.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, said police officers and officials of the environmental protection organization have been deployed to prevent further attacks.

Freezing temperatures and snowfalls have forced wild animals and birds to flock to other towns in many regions over the past two weeks, IRNA said.

Earlier this week, state-run Tehran Television showed jackals and foxes scavenging for scraps in streets on the outskirts of the capital.

Diplomat's wife slain

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Police said Sunday they were looking for the assailant who beat to death the wife of a U.S. Embassy official and poured boiling water on her 9-month-old daughter.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Ross Petzing said Robert S. Cookson, a communications technician, returned home from work Friday and found his 35-year-old Thai wife, Lawan, dead and the child injured.

Police said the embassy had asked authorities not to disclose details of the investigation.

Petzing said Cookson, 46, was nearing the end of his fourth year in Bangkok. At the request of the family, Petzing declined to disclose Cookson's hometown.

The child, Jennifer, was being treated in a hospital for second-degree burns, he said.

Spacecraft closer to Mars

MOSCOW (NYT) — The Soviet spacecraft Phobos 2 entered into orbit around Mars bringing it closer to landing on the Martian moon Phobos.

The mission is the first in the Soviet Union's program to land a man on Mars in the next 25 years.The unmanned spacecraft's braking engine fired at 3:55 p.m. Moscow time (7:55 a.m. EST Sunday), thrusting the craft into orbit after a trip of more than a half-billion miles, the official news agency Tass said.

Communist offer tempting Solidarity

By offering to discuss Solidarity's return to legal status, the Communist Party is opening the way for what could be the first meaningful opposition movement in the Communist Bloc. But Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa is wisely urging the labor union to exercise caution in dealing with the Communist rulers' about-face from their 1981 military-backed ban on the 10 million member labor movement.

The Communist Party may only be trying to co-opt Solidarity to gain support for reforms to deal with admitted economic failures that include acute food shortages, sky-high inflation and a $39 billion foreign debt.

The government has offered to legalize Solidarity if it refrains from strikes for two years, declares loyalty to communism and rejects further financial aid from the West. Mr. Walesa quickly rejected a strike prohibition.

Solidarity has good reason to hold on to its wallet while negotiating with the government. The union became the first independent labor movement ever permitted in the Soviet bloc when the government signed an agreement legalizing it in August 1980. That pact proved to be only a scrap of paper 16 months later when Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski ordered a military crackdown on the union, jailing its leaders.

Legalization of Solidarity would be unprecedented in that it could mark the first time a member of the Communist bloc countenanced parliamentary opposition. And it would document anew the abject failure of a government-controlled economy.

Iraq playing deadly

As if the chemical weapons scare in the Mideast was not sufficient beforehand to rattle the nerves of any rational person, now comes word that Iraq is going further in this game than mere poison gases. It aspires to germ weapons, according to reports.

No effort should be spared by the United States and other democratic powers to either verify or disprove this information. The potential for death and regional destabilization, not to speak of the sparking of war, is immense if biological weapons really are being developed by Saddam Hussein, the ruthless dictator of Iraq. Our government is said to have determined that he is completing a plant to manufacture them, and has expressed this country's private displeasure to the Baghdad government. The Reagan administration seemed unwilling, in its last days, to embarrass Iraq by making a public issue of the matter, which now is George Bush's worry.

We suspect he has furrowed a brow over it already. The reports tell of an underground facility to produce biological bombs that can kill or incapacitate victims with deadly diseases such as typhoid fever, cholera, anthrax and other maladies. Of course the Iraqi regime denies it, but that government has been notable for lies in such matters, as in the case of its earlier attempt to make atomic weapons deep underground. That vision was demolished in 1981 by pinpoint bombing by Israeli warplanes. Today, the world may be thankful for their amazing accuracy.

Hussein is notable also for using the maximum killing power he can get his hands on. He employed a variety of poison gases, not only on opposing Iranian troops but, as that war ended, against Kurdish separatists in his own Iraq, killing thousands of them in towns and villages. Now the Iraqi Kurds fear he will use biological weapons against them. He must not be allowed to have that capacity. And any Western companies that might be helping Iraq toward such an achievement should be identified and censured by public opinion and official actions.

Another View:

International view

Foreign policy intrigues politicians because, unlike domestic matters, it's fun. Or was, once, when domestic policy was a separate subject.

Latin America, for example, used to seem comfortably remote. It could be mistakenly romanticized as a region interesting chiefly because of gauchos and guerrillas, coups and dictators. But the attractions of policy abroad faded in the glare of hard problems at home: debt, deficits, drugs, environment and more. Then came the realization that those subjects are international as well. So it helps to hear from reality merchants like the Inter-American Dialogue, a collection of the hemisphere's best thinkers. Liberal, conservative, U.S., Latin American, their report is a brilliant summary of such challenges and how to address them.

Consider debt. Alarms have been ringing for years at the accumulation of U.S. federal budget deficits, so heavily financed by foreign investment that no country owes more abroad than the United States. But the alarms sound in ears made tone-deaf by prosperity. Debt overburden has induced a different numbness in Latin America. It's the kind that comes from six years of deep depression, astronomical inflation, rising poverty and the further ills induced by economic trauma.

A society so plagued cannot be productive. It cannot adequately educate its children or provide basic services. Quick fixes are increasingly addictive — drug use, and the sudden riches possible in illegal drug trading. Environmental protection becomes a deadly joke, as in the clearing of Brazilian rain forests for immediate profit despite the harm to the global atmosphere. Urban decay accelerates the Inter-American Dialogue points out that air pollution in every major Latin American city is greater than in any U.S. city. These trends threaten to stifle many still-young Latin democracies.

This report is more than a wringing of hands. Aptly titled "Consensus for Action," it is invaluable as a readable, bipartisan, multinational response to hemispheric crises. Get it from the Inter-American Dialogue, 1333 New Hampshire Av. N. W., Washington, D. C. 20036.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Jan. 30, the 30th day of 1989. There are 335 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 30, 1948, Indian political and spiritual leader Mahatma Gandhi, who had led his country to independence from British rule through his philosophy of non-violent confrontation, was murdered by a Hindu extremist. Before dying, Gandhi blessed his assassin.

On this date:

In 1649, England's King Charles I was beheaded.

In 1798, a brawl broke out in the House of Representatives in Philadelphia, as Matthew Lyon of Vermont spat in the face of Roger Griswold of Connecticut.

Former Navy surgeon again under fire

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department is pressing an investigation of an anonymous tip that former Navy surgeon Donal Billig bribed a military panel to let him out of jail. Federal investigators recently subpoenaed Billig's bank records.

Jack Anderson

In one of the most sensational court-martials of the century, Billig was convicted in 1986 of involuntary manslaughter and criminally negligent homicide in the deaths of three patients. Billig had been chief of cardiothoracic surgery at Bethesda (Maryland) Naval Hospital. Details of botched heart surgery and Billig's legal blindness in one eye were among the evidence at the court martial.

But a Court of Military Review overturned the conviction last April and freed Billig from a four-year prison sentence on the grounds that the prosecution had not proved its case.

One month later, the Defense Department hotline received four anonymous calls from someone believed to work for the military. The tipster told investigators that Billig used another person to pass bribes to one or more judges on the Court of Military Review, according to court papers filed by the Defense Department.

Initial attempts to confirm the anonymous allegations met with "mixed results," according to Defense Department papers filed in court. That may explain why investigators want to look at Billig's bank records.

The Defense Department inspector general's office wants Billig's records dating from August 1982 — the date when investigators say Billig first met the person who allegedly passed the bribe, according to an affidavit signed by Richard Messersmith, an agent for the Defense Criminal Investigative Service. The subpoena does not indicate who is accused of acting as the bag man.

August 1982 is also the month that Billig first walked into a Navy recruiting office looking for a job, just days after the Air Force refused to recruit him because of his eyesight, according to evidence presented at the court-martial. The Naval recruiter who accepted Billig was later convicted of misconduct for concealing information about the doctor's record as a civilian surgeon.

Federal District Court Judge Herbert Maletz granted the subpoena for the bank records over the protest of Billig's lawyer, Joseph Levin. Levin told our associate Stewart Harris that Billig opposes the subpoena because the government's investigation is based on anonymous telephone calls. In court papers he calls them "poison pen telephone calls."

The Defense Department is also attempting to subpeona the bank records of Billig's wife Bonnie, but the judge has not yet ruled.

After the Court of Military Review learned of the bribery investigation, it appointed its own "master" to investigate the circumstances surrounding the decision to overturn Billig's conviction. An interim report filed with the court by the master, Judge Walter T. Cox III, says, "To date, no one has revealed any information that causes me to believe that judicial misconduct occured..."

Since his successful appeal, Billig has won the right to practice medicine in Texas.

COMPROMISING POSITION — The National Rifle Association will look for a way to wriggle out of a compromise it made during the closing hours of the last congressional session. When Congress was debating the omnibus drug bill, it considered imposing a waiting period before handgun buyers could pick up their new guns. The NRA objected. Instead, their lobbyists proposed giving gun dealers automatic access to crime computers so they could know before a sale if the buyer was a felon. Liberals worried that system might violate the buyer's civil rights, so a compromise was struck and the NRA lobbyists agreed to it.

The new drug law orders the attorney general to come up with a system for gun dealers to immediately check the records of gun buyers. But that system may involve direct contact with the police. And now the NRA is aghast that the police may be consulted before each gun purchase.

Bush 'foot-dragging' on START wise move

WASHINGTON — President Bush's refusal to rush into a quick strategic nuclear treaty (START) may be explained by Moscow's alarming refusal to permit U.S. inspection of the Votkinsk plant that produced medium-range SS-20 missiles banned by the INF treaty.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

The heart of that much-acclaimed treaty outlawing U.S. Europe-based Pershing IIs and Soviet SS-20s is "a permanent continuous monitoring system" to be established six months after the treaty's effective date. Yet not once since the treaty took effect June 3 has the U.S. been able to take an X-ray picture of missiles emerging from the Votkinsk plant to assure that they are not SS-20s.

The intermediate range SS-20 is a look-alike of the much more powerful SS-25, a single-warhead mobile missile with intercontinental range. Votkinsk appears to have produced about 125 SS-25's since last June, but there is no way to prove that SS-20s were not mixed in with them. What's more, a loophole in the treaty could lead to their unmonitored production for the foreseeable future.

If the Soviets are prepared to make a mockery of the sanctified verification mechanism in the INF treaty (perhaps without Gorbachev's personal connivance), the warning is clear. Beneath the political upheaval in the Soviet Union, the old game of cheating on life-and-death treaties continues as before.

Consequently, Bush deserves better from enthusiasts of detente and arms control who accuse him of foot-dragging on START. His caution about rushing to rescue Mikhail Gorbachev's stalled perestroika with quick-fix trade-and-financial aid is also commendable.

The facts are known only to a handful of top officials. The Soviets refuse to accept the powerful U.S. X-ray technology for "pictures" that would reveal the inside of missile cannisters.

That has forced the U.S. to strengthen weaker X-rays permitted by the Soviets with computer "enhancers" using highly advanced software. But there, too, the Kremlin balks. It demands the right to inspect the computers and the software. That would amount to an transfer of technology, not only counter to U.S. policy but barred by U.S. law.

Given the Soviet blocking of the powerful X-rays, installing the verification process guaranteed by the INF treaty is delayed for an indeterminate period. That opens the possible loophole in the eyes of skeptics who see a black purpose in Soviet foot-dragging.

The treaty provides that if a missile plant has been closed for one year by June 1991, on-site inspection is no longer permitted. Accordingly, if verification is still delayed until June 1990, Moscow could then close the Votkinsk plant for one year and reopen it to secret, illegal production of the SS-20 in June 1991 — without on-site inspection or fear of detection.

In addition to X-ray pictures, two other ways for the U.S. to assure compliance are badly tainted. One is measuring the missile's length, a process not yet agreed to by Moscow although it was supposed to start last August. The other, weighing the missile, has become a source of such bitter U.S.-Soviet dispute that the U.S. abandoned it.

The alarming inability of the U.S. to get explicit Soviet conformity to INF verification provisions has only recently come to the attention of a handful of leading senators. They include Robert J. Dole, the Senate Republican leader, and Jesse Helms, senior Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee. Members of the Senate and House Intelligence Committees will soon be told.

A letter this week from one senator to Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Director William F. Burns asks this pointed question: "How effective is this system?" The obvious answer — not effective enough — shows why many members of Congress warned throughout the debate over the INF treaty that its verification procedures were not tight enough.

It would not be easy for the U.S. to retaliate against the Soviets. The U.S. is not producing any missile comparable to the banned Pershing II. Thus Soviet inspection rights at the old Pershing II plant near Salt Lake City, now producing the third stage of the giant MX missile, give Moscow nothing because there is nothing to give.

U.S. renewal of Pershing II production could be readily detected by Soviet spy planes — if the KGB had not already learned of it from the pages of the Congressional Record.

The Pershing II is moot anyway. Under no conceivable conditions would West Germany agree to accept it back, and West Germany is the only place where it could perform a political and military function for the Western alliance. Not so the SS-20, which threatened all Europe.

All this justifies that George Bush has been more skeptical about the rosy cast recently placed on U.S.-Soviet relations by the man he served for eight years. But now he faces the need to tell the unpleasant truth: Ronald Reagan's oft-repeated injunction to combine verification with trust is being violated in enforcement of his most celebrated diplomatic achievement.

CHARLEY REESE

Demos in Congress added to refugee lines

If I were George Bush, I would tell the mayor of Miami, who is worried about the flood of Central American refugees, to take the matter up with the liberal Democrats in the Congress. After all, they are responsible for the refugees.

Charley Reese

For eight years, conservatives have been warning that if the United States allowed the Sandinistas to establish a communist, totalitarian government in Nicaragua, the refugees would come to the United States.

The liberal Democrats, by killing aid to the Nicaraguan democrats resisting communism, have allowed the establishment of a communist state. The refugees are on the way.

In the last campaign, a few people felt impelled to come forward and define their liberalism in defense of the L word. They usually blathered about compassion, but they forgot to mention that the signal characteristic of the modern liberal is naivete.

Daniel Ortega, the head dictator of Nicaragua, has been a Marxist-Leninist all of his adult life. It is naive to believe, as liberals claim to believe, that Ortega will one day be, like Saul of Tarsus, struck by a blinding light and instantly decide that what he really wants to be is democratic.

Ortega is a communist and from the beginning, with help from Cuba and the Soviet Union, he intended to establish a communist dictatorship and that is exactly what he has done. Furthermore, he has followed the communist pattern so consistently that you really do have to have been born yesterday not to have recognized it a long time ago.

Come to power in a coalition. Eliminate the non-communists. Set up the party as the ruling elite to which the army belongs. Trump up a phony Yankee threat to justify militarizing the nation. Set up a propaganda net in the United States to paralyze U.S. action.

When Anastasio Somoza, whom liberals will tell you was a horrible man, was in power, there were no Nicaraguan refugees, but there were functioning opposition parties, and an opposition press. With Ortega in power, there are 500,000 refugees and more to come out of a population of barely 3 million. The human rights organization that regularly blistered Somoza has been thrown out of the country and is now ignored by the American press.

When Somoza was in power and fighting for his life, he had an army of about 13,000 with three old World War II tanks. Ortega has an army of 60,000 with 110 Soviet tanks, mobile artillery, mobile bridging equipment, and the most advanced Soviet helicopter gunships. He is obviously making plans to receive advanced fighter planes as well as deepening certain ports.

He has plans — we know because the number two guy in the defense ministry defected — for an army of 500,000 including reserves, which is absurdity. He has no support from the majority of Nicaraguans. The Nicaraguan resistance had begun operating entirely inside Nicaragua, certain evidence of popular support, when the liberal Democrats in Congress stabbed them in the back by cutting off all U.S. aid.

Liberals have run the U.S. economy into the ground and they are running U.S. security into the ground. They offer us, domestically, a welfare state and for foreign policy, appeasement of tyranny and betrayal of democrats.

There are going to be lots and lots of refugees in the United States — not only Nicaraguans but Panamanians, Costa Ricans, Hondurans, and Guatemalans.

The message the liberal Democrats in Congress sent to Central America in gigantic neon letters is: We will not help you prevent a communist takeover of your country.

The sorry history of communism's advance since 1945 continues and it will end when the United States ends and is replaced by the People's Republic of North America.

Thanks to liberals, that may not be too far off in the future.

Investigation of alleged wiretaps under way in Cincinatti

NATION

CINCINNATI (AP) — The city and a grand jury are investigating allegations that the phone company and police illegally wiretapped hundreds of phones, including those of Black Muslims, a federal judge and a billionaire.

The taps, the subject of a U.S. District Court trial that began last month, allegedly were placed to allow police to monitor investigations and to eavesdrop on suspected subversives.

"There are allegations that these things happened 10 years ago, but I have a feeling that the evidentiary trail is cold," said Mayor Charles Luken. "The city doesn't have any records to indicate that these things happened."

Still, the mayor has directed City Manager Scott Johnson to conduct an internal investigation into charges that a secret Cincinnati police intelligence unit cooperated with Cincinnati Bell Telephone Co. on illegal wiretaps. A federal grand jury also is investigating the allegations.

Johnson said Friday he planned to hire private investigators to help with the probe.

But two of the nine city council members — Democrat Peter Strauss, and Republican John Mirlisena — are calling for a special prosecutor, contending that the city's plans are inadequate.

"To give it credibility it should be totally independent. The only time our people should be in the room is when they are being questioned," Mirlisena said.

Cincinnati Bell and its parent company, Cincinnati Bell Inc., deny knowledge of such illegal eavesdropping or that they participated in or authorized any such activity.

The allegations were raised by two former Cincinnati Bell employees — Leonard Gates, a supervisor fired in 1986 for insubordination, and ex-repairman Robert Draise, who quit as part of a plea bargain in 1979 after he was charged in connection with an illegal wiretap.

Gates and Draise said Cincinnati Bell security officials ordered them to install more than 1,200 illegal wiretaps between 1972 and 1984. The men said the wiretaps were put in place to help security supervisors and Cincinnati police.

Those whose telephones allegedly were tapped include a Black Muslim organization, U.S. District Judge Carl Rubin of Cincinnati and billionaire Cincinnati financier Carl Lindner Jr.

Police officials have denied the wiretapping.

But former policemen Harold Mills, Gary Simpson and Elmer Dunaway, and former Hamilton County Commissioner Allen Paul last year filed a $112 million lawsuit against Cincinnati Bell Inc., its officers and directors and the phone company, alleging that their phones were illegally tapped.

The lawsuit, whose U.S. District Court trial began in December, was filed as a class action on behalf of everyone whose telephones might be shown to have been illegally tapped.

Cincinnati Bell during the past two weeks responded with two countersuits seeking a total of $4 million countersuit. One of the countersuits denies any involvement in illegal wiretaps. The other accuses Gates and Draise of lying and trying to hurt the company.

Gates and Draise responded that Cincinnati Bell is merely trying to get back at them for making their allegations public.

The $112 million lawsuit recently was amended to include the city as a defendant. The city filed a motion Jan. 26 denying the allegations and asking that the lawsuit be dismissed.

In a deposition, police Sgt. Howard Cade — a former member of the secret police intelligence unit — said he participated in four wiretaps while working for the intelligence unit. Cade, a 23-year officer now assigned to the police communications section, said he knew of no court authorizations for the wiretaps.

Only federal judges may authorize installations of electronic eavesdropping equipment.

Cade reportedly received immunity from prosecution in exchange for testifying before the federal grand jury.

Some of the revelations in the depositions have been leaked to Cincinnati news media. Lawyers for Cincinnati Bell and the city have asked U.S. District Judge David Dowd Jr. to seal the depositions from public access pending the trial. Lawyers for the news media oppose those efforts.

Stripper says she performed sexual acts for Swaggart

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A stripper performed explicit sexual acts for Jimmy Swaggart while he was involved with a prostitute, Penthouse magazine says, but the television evangelist's attorney called the story a fabrication.

Swaggart

Catherine Mary Kampen said Swaggart gained her trust as a spiritual adviser, then emotionally manipulated her into acting out his sexual fantasies, the magazine said in its March issue.

"The whole thing's made up," Swaggart attorney's Phillip A. Wittman said Sunday.

Wittman said Swaggart would file a libel lawsuit, probably this week, against the men's magazine.

"Jimmy Swaggart doesn't even know Miss Kampen," said Wittman. "He's never met her, never seen her."

Wittman said Swaggart was returning home to Baton Rouge from a weekend crusade in Atlanta.

According to Penthouse, Swaggart approached Kampen, a homemaker and performer of striptease telegrams, at a roadside telephone in July 1987.

Kampen said Swaggart told her he could help her with her marriage and personal life, and promised to help her financially while demanding she perform sexual acts for him.

Like Debra Murphree, the prostitute whose account Penthouse published in July, Kampen claimed that Swaggart asked her to perform explicit sex acts while he watched.

Murphree said Swaggart wanted her 9-year-old daughter to watch them have sex; Kampen said the evangelist asked to have sex with her 13-year-old daughter.

Like Murphree, who said she was involved with Swaggart from October 1986 until October 1987, Kampen claimed she posed for Swaggart but kept her daughter away from him.

Unlike Murphree, who said she and Swaggart attempted to have sex one time, Kampen told the magazine she and Swaggart never had sex during their six-month relationship.

She said she asked him if he wanted to.

"And he said, 'Oh sure, but that would be cheating. What we're doing here is just playing — it's fun and games, it's not cheating. You understand that, don't you,'" Kampen quoted Swaggart as saying.

Wittmann said his law firm conducted its own investigation of the allegations after Penthouse asked about them more than a month ago.

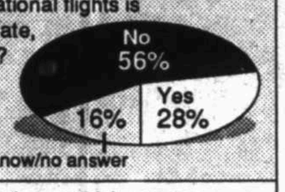

"We advised Penthouse that in our view the story was a fabrication, and we were under the impression that they were not going to release the story," he said.

Media General-AP Poll

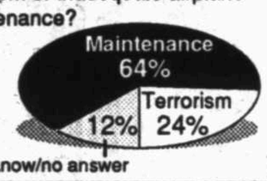

Air Terror

Do you think airline security on international flights is adequate, or not?

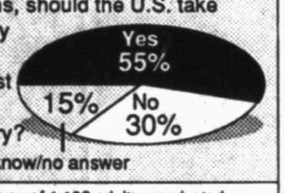

Don't know/no answer

Which do you think poses a greater danger to air travelers, terrorism or inadequate airplane maintenance?

Don't know/no answer

If the United States has proof that another country supported a terrorist group that attacked U.S. citizens, should the U.S. take military action against that country?

Don't know/no answer

The survey of 1,162 adults, conducted Jan. 4-12, had a three-point margin of error.

Poll finds concern over air terror; Poor maintenance is feared more

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans favor tough new anti-terrorist measures, including military strikes, to combat attacks against international flights, but most say poor airplane maintenance is a greater threat, a poll has found.

The national Media General-Associated Press survey found that a majority backed U.S. military strikes against countries that support terrorists only if the support were proved and innocent civilians were not killed.

The poll found opinion sharply divided on whether military retaliation would deter terrorists or spur them. But a majority said the government can stem terrorism, and 57 percent said it is not doing enough now.

The survey of 1,162 adults had a 3-point margin of error. It was conducted Jan. 4-12, after a terrorist bomb downed Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland, killing 270 people.

In response to the bombing, the Federal Aviation Administration ordered U.S. airlines to X-ray all checked baggage on flights from Europe and the Mideast. The poll found support for other steps, some considerably tougher:

■ Ninety-six percent said foreign airlines should be required to X-ray checked baggage.

■ Nearly three-quarters favored requiring airlines to hand-search all checked baggage on international flights, even if that meant passengers had to check in three hours early. That is the practice on El Al, Israel's airline, which has long experience in anti-terrorism efforts.

■ Half of those polled supported banning carry-on luggage on international flights. Such a ban has been used sporadically by British Airways on flights into Belfast, Northern Ireland, during times of political tension.

The survey also found some sentiment for greater public disclosure of terrorist threats against airlines, even if the threats are frequent and unverifiable.

That issue arose when it was revealed that U.S. officials had been warned before the Pan Am attack that a bombing was imminent, but did not publicly reveal the threat. Officials said later that announcing the threats could cripple the airline industry because warnings virtually are received daily.

Respondents were split evenly on the question. Asked if the government should announce all terrorist threats it receives against airlines, even if it gets them daily and cannot tell if they are legitimate, 45 percent said yes, 45 percent said no. The rest weren't sure.

Drug testing weeds out 11,500 recruits

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressionally mandated drug-testing program has prevented more than 11,500 men and women from entering the armed forces during its first seven months of operation, Pentagon statistics show.

That number, while fairly large, amounts to only 3.5 percent of the individuals tested from last June 1 to Dec. 31 and is generating rumblings inside the Pentagon about whether the program is worth the expense.

The Defense Department spent $3.1 million to develop the program and to conduct the tests from June through September, and expects to spend another $4.8 million in fiscal 1989. Congress did not provide any money to start the program, forcing the services to divert money from other parts of their budgets.

The Pentagon completed testing of 322,256 men and women for marijuana and cocaine use from June 1 to Dec. 31 and 331,040 for alcohol abuse during the same period.

The totals differ because the alcohol test is done with a breathalyzer and results are immediate, while the urinalysis for drug use requires laboratory analysis.

The Pentagon reported a "percent positive rate" of 3.5 percent — or 11,279 individuals — for marijuana and cocaine. The positive rate on alcohol tests was only 0.08, or 265 individuals.

By comparison, the latest survey of active-duty personnel found that 4.8 percent had used drugs within the past 30 days.

"The number of recruit positives is well below the active-duty rate, which demonstrates what we already knew — those coming in are no longer aggravating the drug problem," said one defense official, who declined to be identified.

"It's nice to be able to test but it's not cheap. And as time goes on, the number of people who test positive is going to drop as applicants realize that everyone is going to get tested at this point and you can't escape it."

The Pentagon opposed recruit testing from the beginning because of the expense and because once in uniform, all servicemen face periodic, random urinalysis tests. Those tests are credited with helping drive drug use within the military to record low levels.

Military officials also objected to the testing of recruit applicants because the tests would not be random or a surprise; all recruits are tested when they show up at a Military Entrance Processing Command station.

Despite those arguments, Congress embraced legislation sponsored by Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., in 1987 and ordered the Defense Department to begin testing all recruit applicants.

Hollings has described the program as "logical and long overdue," adding: "The time to start catching the users is before they join the armed forces, when the government has no obligation to them."

Former Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci, in a directive last spring implementing the law, authorized the armed forces to give a second chance to individuals who flunk the first test "at service discretion."

He specified, however, that an individual who flunked the test for marijuana or alcohol abuse could not be offered a second chance for six months, and that someone who flunked for cocaine use had to wait at least one year.

Maj. David Super, a Pentagon spokesman, said it was too early for any results to have been compiled on re-tests.

According to the statistics for the program's first seven months, recruits attempting to join the Navy and Army were more likely to flunk the test than those trying to join the Air Force and Marine Corps.

From June 1 to Dec. 31, 4.3 percent of those trying to join the Navy and 4.1 percent of those joining the Army tested positive for either marijuana or cocaine use. By contrast, 2.6 percent of those joining the Marines and 1.1 percent of those joining the Air Force tested positively.

Steinberg remains optimistic

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time since jurors began deliberating his fate a week ago, Joel Steinberg entered the courtroom smiling amid speculation that he had been acquitted of the most serious charge — murder — he faces in the death of his illegally adopted daughter Lisa.

Steinberg, a disbarred lawyer, is accused of fatally beating the 6-year-old girl he and his live-in companion, Hedda Nussbaum, had illegally obtained at birth from a Long Island teen-ager and raised as their own.

The death of Lisa Steinberg, raised in an upper-middle-class family, has focused a new light on the issue of child abuse, and the case has received international attention.

Jurors were to begin their eighth day of deliberations today, amid speculation that they had acquitted Steinberg of second-degree murder and were considering the less serious charges of first- and second-degree manslaughter.

Steinberg faces four charges: second-degree murder; first-degree manslaughter; second-degree manslaughter, and criminally negligent homicide.

Steinberg grinned broadly as he entered the courtroom shortly before 8 p.m. Sunday, when the judge sent the jurors home for the evening. Several hours earlier, the jury had sent out a note asking for clarification of the terms "intent" and "serious physical injury" — elements of manslaughter.

State Supreme Court Justice Harold Rothwax had told jurors not to consider manslaughter unless they unanimously acquitted Steinberg of second-degree murder.

Defense lawyer Ira London said Steinberg, 47, feels the jury is giving him "a fair shake...What we feel good about is that this has not been a lynching."

Today, the jury was to rehear about two hours' worth of testimony they had requested concerning Steinberg's actions between the time Lisa was injured on Nov. 1, 1987, and the next morning, when Emergency Medical Service workers were called and took Lisa to a hospital, where she died several days later.

That testimony includes statements from police officers, EMS workers and hospital employees who had testified about Steinberg's explanations for Lisa's condition and his reaction to her prognosis.

Star Wars chief retiring

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson is retiring after more than five years running the Strategic Defense Initiative, bearing scars from his battles with Congress but still deeply committed to building defenses against nuclear missiles.

That vision has changed substantially since March 23, 1983, when President Reagan called for development of the space-based ballistic missile defense system now commonly known as Star Wars.

Abrahamson, who was heading the shuttle program at the time, said in an interview that he found Reagan's speech "very exciting just from the technical standpoint." The speech "also touched off a very significant debate on our deterrence policy," he said.

The debate, on the feasibility of switching from a policy of purely offensive nuclear deterrence to a mixture of offensive and defensive systems, continued last Thursday during Senate confirmation hearings for Defense Secretary-designate John G. Tower.

Downtown fire takes toll on family business

JACKSONVILLE, Texas (AP) — John B. White watched as firefighters continued to send steady streams of water onto what had been the cornerstone of the family's business.

White was pondering his flagship department store's future after it was destroyed by fire Saturday along with four other businesses in a section of downtown Jacksonville.

"After 54 years (in business), I shouldn't be expected to know what to do right away," White said Sunday. "We've never been burned down before."

White's father, John Jr., opened the store in 1951 and eventually developed a 26-store retail chain throughout East Texas. Locations include Tyler, Nacogdoches, Wills Point and New Boston.

The elder White, 88, brought his family to Jacksonville in 1930. His son said he had not told him about the fire yet. "He's bedridden and I just haven't been able to go over and tell him yet."

White estimated the losses of the store and its contents at $250,000 to $300,000. The store occupied half of what was the first commercial brick building erected in Jacksonville about 63 years ago.

"We have so many options now. We'll have to get with the other businesses and decide what to do," White said.

The blaze started and spread quickly through the building's second floor and into the stores below and the one next door, officials said.

One firefighter suffered a back injury and the owner of a jewelry store ruined in the building complained of chest pains when she saw the fire and was hospitalized.

An investigation into the cause of the blaze was expected to begin Monday, after hot spots in the brick, wood and metal ruin can be cleared.

"There's so much rubble, we'll have to get each hot spot one at a time," said Capt. Joel Moore of the Jacksonville Fire Department.

"With the damage as extensive as it is, it will be difficult to determine the origin and cause of the fire."

Four other retailers, including a jewelry store and two clothing stores within the building and a smoke shop next door, also were destroyed.

The other store owners could not be reached for comment Sunday.

Estimates of losses suffered by the other businesses were not immediately available. About 50 people worked in the stores.

An acetylene tank, used in the jewelry store, exploded and sent a fireball 25 feet into the air during the blaze, which was reported shortly before 10 p.m., Moore said. The roof, two walls and aluminum front later collapsed.

Jacksonville firefighter Ted Hunt injured his back while shifting his weight on a ladder to adjust the spray from a one-man hose, Moore said. Hunt was in stable condition, undergoing tests at Nan Travis Memorial Hospital in Jacksonville on Sunday, officials said.

Darlene Lowell Hudson, owner of Lowell's Jewelry, complained of chest pains after arriving on the scene. She was in the hospital's intensive care unit Sunday in stable condition, a nursing supervisor said.

About 50 spectators watched the clean-up effort Sunday afternoon.

Neighbor's tip led to identities of women

DENTON, Texas (AP) — An alert neighbor provided authorities with a break that led to the identities of two abandoned toddlers, now determined to be related to at least one of two women found fatally bludgeoned in Wise County.

Authorities said Sunday a man they identified only as Pablo believed he knew the women and children. Pablo told police he had seen the women the night before their bodies were found beaten to death in a rural Wise County culvert near Decatur.

The two women's bodies were found early Thursday and the children were found wandering separately a few hours later in neighboring Denton County locations, about 30 miles away.

Denton County Sheriff Kirby Robinson identified the toddlers as cousins, Damion Medina Gamez, 1, and Silvia Rojas Gamez, 14 months.

Robinson said authorities identified one of the bodies through fingerprints on file with the Texas Department of Public Safety as being that of Damion's mother, 22-year-old Claudia Medina, who was also known as Jenata Medina Baltazar Gamez of Frisco.

The identity of the second woman had yet to be established Sunday night, but officials were checking to see if she is Erlinda Martinez Gamez, 27, the missing mother of Silvia Gamez.

Investigators from the Texas Rangers and the Wise County and Denton County sheriff's departments spent most of Sunday night talking with the children's fathers, who are brothers.

The men, who authorities said were not considered suspects at the time, were sent home Sunday night after being questioned extensively with the help of a Spanish-speaking translator.

"They've been released," said Denton County sheriff's deputy Scott Hill. "They're just the fathers of the kids — that's all they are now. Not suspects."

The two men, who told police they live in Dallas, were identified as construction workers Damion Gamez, 28, and Silvio Rojas Gamez, 21. The two men both said they were separated from their wives and children, Robinson said.

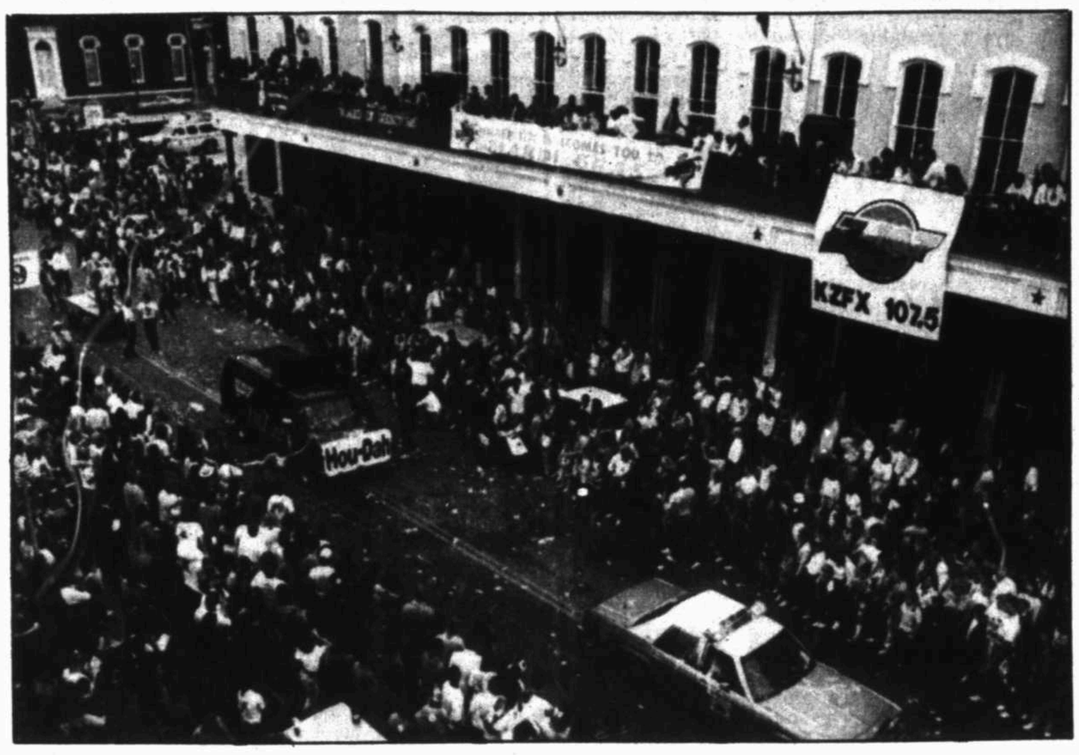

Robinson said at a news conference that investigators began searching for the two brothers on Saturday night after Pablo said he thought he knew the two slain women.

Robinson said the women were seen leaving their Frisco residence in a vehicle, and at least one of the children was seen leaving with them. The women's bodies later were discovered in the culvert by a workman servicing a gas well.

The Gamez brothers surrendered to authorities Sunday afternoon, after learning they were wanted for questioning. The two men told police their wives and small children were missing, Robinson said.

Frisco Police Chief Roger Wingo said authorities searched the Frisco and Little Elm areas for the brothers Saturday because the brothers had listed residences there during previous arrests for public intoxication in his city.

The children have been in foster care since they were found.

Obstetrician tried for sending woman in labor to hospital 170 miles away

VICTORIA, Texas (AP) — A federal administrative judge is expected to decide whether a local obstetrician violated anti-patient dumping provisions when he ordered a woman in labor transferred to a hospital 170 miles away.

The case centers on Rosa Rivera, then 31, who arrived at Victoria's DeTar Hospital Dec. 5, 1986, to give birth to her sixth child.

Dr. Michael Burditt said he ordered Mrs. Rivera sent to John Sealy Hospital in Galveston because he feared her unborn child was growth-retarded and would need more care than could be provided in Victoria.

Transferring the child in his mother's womb was much better than having him make the trip after birth, the doctor said.

Mrs. Rivera never made it to Galveston. She gave birth in an ambulance about 30 miles outside Victoria.

The government contends Mrs. Rivera suffered from very high blood pressure on arrival at the Victoria hospital and that transporting her posed far more danger to her and her unborn child than delivery at DeTar.

In a hearing last week, Burditt was pitted against the U.S. Inspector General's Office of the Department of Health and Human Services, which fined him $25,000 for violating anti-patient dumping provisions of the Comprehensive Omnibus Budget Review Act of 1985.

"I feel like I have to fight it, not only for myself, but for all the other doctors in the country," Burditt, 44, was quoted in the Houston Chronicle Sunday as saying.

U.S. Administrative Law Judge Charles Stratton said he'll probably make his decision in two to four months after reviewing stacks of written testimony and legal briefs submitted in the case.

The Texas Medical Association said the proper way to decide if doctors violate anti-dumping legislation is through the state's peer review process.

A peer review group at DeTar Hospital found that Burditt acted correctly.

The American Medical Association and the TMA each are paying a third of the cost of Burditt's legal defense.

DeTar Hospital made a $5,000 settlement with the Inspector General's Office without admitting guilt in the case.

Testimony revealed that Mrs. Rivera had not received prenatal care prior to her arrival at DeTar Hospital.

When a "non-aligned patient" — an expectant mother without a physician — arrives at the hospital in labor, nurses summon one of the 11 local doctors who deliver babies.

Burditt was called and told the patient was experiencing irregular contractions and extremely high blood pressure.

"I had to assume this patient had been hypertensive through this entire pregnancy," Burditt said.

"If that was indeed the case, there was a very large chance that the infant would be growth retarded. Further, there was a high risk of stroke to the mother and possibly even death to the mother and infant."

When Burditt ordered Mrs. Rivera's transfer, nursing supervisor Jean Herman told Burditt that anti-dumping regulations forbid the transfer of women in labor.

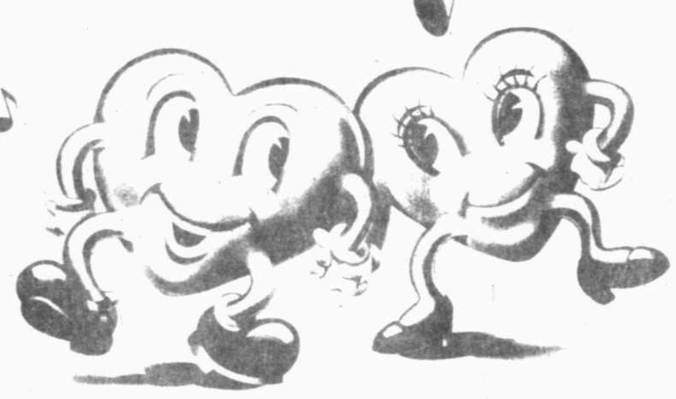

She said Burditt told her: "Until DeTar Hospital pays my malpractice insurance I will pick and choose my patients as I do my private ones."

Burditt admits making the statement, but said it didn't affect his decision about Mrs. Rivera's treatment.

Ms. Herman also said Burditt had a good reputation as a doctor.

Pupils train for life of cosmetology

Linda doesn't mind getting her hair cut by a beginner. Neither does Sharee. Or Yolanda. Or Miss Willey. Or Abbey Normal. They never voice any complaints about being guinea pigs for beginning haircutters because they can't. They're mannequin heads used for hairstyling training at a Midland beauty school.

Aladdin Beauty College on Midkiff Road has been training and turning out cosmetologists for the last 15 years. Enrolling in the school means a substantial committment for those who decide on careers in the beauty industry; students must invest up to a year to learn beauty techniques under a rigorous program that is in turn closely regulated and supervised by the Texas Cosmetology Commission.

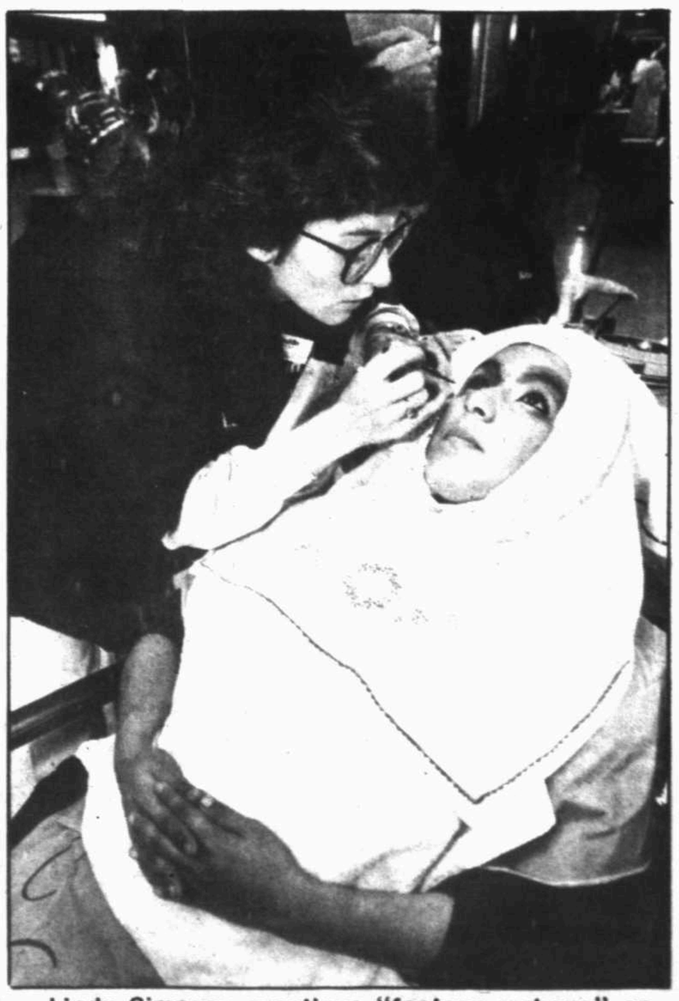

Students can choose from three different curriculums. For 300 hours of training a student can be certified as a manicurist. Fifteen hundred hours qualifies a trainee for a license in cosmetology, and 750 hours of instruction allows a student to qualify as a beauty instructor.

The school's teachers also instruct the students on a wide variety of topics ranging from business management to choosing the right type of footwear. "We want them to have a well-rounded education when they leave here," says Sue Lubke, the school's administrative assistant.

DEATHS

Noble P. Blanton

Funeral services for Noble P. Blanton will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel, with Alfred E. Johnson of North Main Street Church of Christ officiating. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Blanton died Sunday at a local hospital.

He was born Feb. 11, 1906, in Santa Anna and was reared in several Texas cities before moving to Midland. He married Myrtle Carpenter on Dec. 24, 1928, in Midland.

In 1940 Blanton enlisted in the U.S. Army and was honorably discharged in 1941. He returned to Midland and worked in the construction business as a carpenter. He later purchased eight acres of land south of Midland and began a farming career, which lasted 25 years. Blanton retired in 1977.

He was a member of the North Main Street Church of Christ.

Survivors include his wife, Myrtle Blanton of Midland; and a sister, Mable Gossett of Amarillo.

Mary J. Darnell

Funeral services for Mary J. Darnell were to be at 1 p.m. today at the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Tom Thompson, pastor of St. Paul's United Methodist Church, officiating. Burial was to follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Darnell died Friday at a local nursing home after a lengthy illness.

She was born Oct. 12, 1928, in East Chicago, Ind., and married Walter F. Darnell on July 3, 1948, in East Chicago. The couple moved to Hutchinson, Kan., in 1972.

Mrs. Darnell moved to Midland in 1978 after her husband's death. She was a member of St. Paul's United Methodist Church.

Survivors include three sons, William E. Darnell, Scott E. Darnell and Dennis W. Darnell, all of Midland; a daughter, Karen J. Cunningham Darnell of Hutchinson, Kan.; and three grandchildren.

Pallbearers were to be John Kirk Miller, Larry F. Wright, Michael K. Sweat, Terry L. Sweat, Harry Mueller and Dennis Dunlap.

Vivian Sharp

Services for Vivian Lucille Sharp are scheduled for 2 p.m. Wednesday at First Baptist Chruch in Seminole, Okla., with the Rev. Bob Hammons officiating. Interment will be at Oakwood Cemetery in Wewoka, Okla.

She died Sunday afternoon at a local hospital.

She was born Feb. 11, 1921, in Holdenville, Okla.

Governor backs limit on campaign funds

HOUSTON (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements — the state's all-time champion political spender — says he is endorsing a proposal to place unprecedented limits on contributions to candidates.

Texas has no limit on individual contributions, so the proposed limit of $25,000 annually to any combination of candidates, officeholders or political action committees would force dramatic changes in fund-raising practices. Several political operatives estimated that more than 200 Texans now spread around more than $100,000 a year each in political contributions.

The proposed $25,000 cap would apply only to state races. Congress regulates federal races.

The proposal, to be aired Wednesday at a meeting of Clements' task force on campaign finance reform, also recommends a $10,000 limit on the amount a PAC can give an individual candidate per year, The Houston Post reported Sunday. There is no limit now.

In addition, the draft recommends ending the ban on corporate and labor group contributions to candidates. Ten states prohibit labor contributions, and corporate giving is outlawed in 20 states.

Criticism already is mounting on the proposed campaign limits and on Clements' decision to appoint Secretary of State Jack Rains — a former major contributor to Republican campaigns who has said he is 95 percent certain he will run for governor in 1990 — as task force chairman.

"This is all just a bunch a political bull," Houston attorney Joe Jamail said.

Jamail is among the most generous of Texas political contributors. He estimated he gave more than $300,000 to candidates, PACs and political causes in 1988.

"I'd rather trust John Dillinger than the likes of Clements and Rains to head up a reform effort," Jamail said.

Clements, who has spent more than $30 million on three gubernatorial races, told The Post he is optimistic that a "meaningful" number of reform measures will get legislative approval this year.

Gov. Bill Clements

"I can't say everything in there is going to pass, but I do think there will be a serious effort and much of it probably will," Clements said.

Jamail, who successfully represented Pennzoil Co. in its multibillion-dollar legal battle with Texaco Inc., said Clements wouldn't be pushing reform if Democrats hadn't become as adept as Republicans in raising money.

Ed Martin, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party, said the task force's effort will be tainted by having an all-but-declared GOP gubernatorial candidate as chairman.

"Although he (Rains) may have good intentions, his motivations are going to be suspect," Martin said. "It's interesting that the secretary of state has in essence said he's running for governor, and now he wants to be a crusader. This sounds great if you're someone who wants to use this as a way to get publicity."

A concern to campaign fund reforms is that major contributors like Jamail will skirt the law by finding other ways to make their big-dollar contributions, such as funneling the money through family members or business associates, Martin said.

Lobbyist and campaign strategist George Strong of Houston said limits would come as welcome relief to many contributors who already spend much more than they'd like on candidates.

Clements address to 'move forward'

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements, scheduled to deliver his final State of the State address to lawmakers on Tuesday, will offer a blueprint for the future rather than any sort of swan song, aides say.

"He's a charge-ahead individual. He moves forward, always looking to meet the next challenge. The speech will reflect the energy and enthusiasm he has," said Reggie Bashur, the governor's press secretary.

Clements, 71, is in the last half of what he says will be his last term.

First elected in 1978, Clements was ousted in 1982 by Democrat Mark White. Clements then defeated White in 1986 and moved back into the Governor's Mansion two years ago.

His address, scheduled for a joint House-Senate session at 10 a.m. Tuesday, is "going to reflect the governor's vision of Texas. It's very upbeat, very optimistic," Bashur told The Associated Press.

"He's going to talk in terms of economic development, education, reforms in criminal justice and about budgetary concerns," Bashur said.

"The speech recognizes that we've been through some difficult times, that the state is still in a period of historic transition. We're making progress, we're making headway, but this is a period in the history of the state in which the decisions made now will reflect on the people of Texas well into the 21st century."

Bashur said the governor likely would call attention to the economic transition Texas is undergoing as well as the transition taking place in its government.

"There's the economic transition (away from a dependence on oil and gas) and at the same time many of the institutions are undergoing challenge and change — prisons, public education, higher education. That needs to be addressed by the Legislature," Bashur said.

One thing the governor doesn't plan to do with his address is lay out a budget of his own, his staff said.

Clements late last month said he was adopting the Legislative Budget Board's spending plan as a "starting point for discussion" rather than preparing a separate executive budget for lawmakers.

Lawmakers today start the fourth week of their 140-day session that began Jan. 10. Among other issues expected to remain high on their agenda this week is the prison overcrowding issue.

Clements has proposed building nearly 11,000 new prison beds and paying for the construction with $343 million in state bonds. Some lawmakers have criticized that idea, saying it violates the state's pay-as-you-go philosophy.

Two men jailed in connection with beating death of woman

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Two men remain in the Ector County jail today in lieu of $100,000 bonds each on charges of murder in the beating death of a 30-year-old woman whose body was found north of Odessa early Thursday morning.

According to Ector County Sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss, shortly after midnight Friday, deputies arrested Bobby Paul Cox Jr., 22, 2801 Oakwood Drive, and Charles Wayne Lummus, 31, of Kermit, at the sheriff's office.

Kloss said the two men had been "invited" to come to the courthouse and sign statements concerning the killing of Deborah Lynne Hulsey, 30.

The two men were arraigned before Ector County Justice of the Peace J.E. Pressly following their arrest on charges of murder in connection with the death of the young woman.

The body of Ms. Hulsey was found about 8 a.m. Thursday in the middle of an oil lease road a short distance from U.S. 385, about a mile north of Loop 338.

An autopsy determined the young woman had been beaten to death. Investigators found a large, blood-covered rock, believed to be the murder weapon, a short distance from the body, Kloss said.

According to Kloss, investigators learned Ms. Hulsey was last seen Wednesday night getting into a car occupied by two men near the intersection of East 2nd Street and South Dixie Boulevard. The car she was seen getting into belonged to Lummus, Kloss said today. The two men told deputies they had not known Ms. Hulsey before she got into the car, he said.

Some of the young woman's personal belongings were found in the vicinity of U.T. Permian Basin. Ms. Hulsey lived with her parents in West Odessa, Kloss said.

Police identify man killed Friday

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police today released the name of a 46-year-old man shot and killed late Friday.

This morning, police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon identified the man as Gary Lee Allen, 409 Pittsburg Ave.

The delay in releasing the name of the man, he said, was due to the fact Allen's next of kin reside in Portland, Ore.

Patrol officers investigating a reported argument at the 409 Pittsburg Ave. address found Allen lying face down on the kitchen floor of the residence, according to police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon.

Investigators said Allen had been shot once in the left side of the chest. A .22-caliber pistol was found at the scene.

He was pronounced dead about 12:15 a.m. Saturday by Ector County Justice of the Peace J.E. Pressly, who ordered an autopsy.

Early Saturday, James Dean Miles, 26, who listed no local address, surrendered to Ector County Sheriff's deputies.

He was turned over to police and arraigned on a charge of murder before Acting Municipal Judge Mike Holmes. Holmes set Miles' bond at $25,000. The man later was transferred to the Ector County jail, where he remained jailed in lieu of bond this morning.

The college also has a working beauty salon where students can work on real patrons, although only advanced trainees are allowed to work in the salon. Students, for instance, must complete 240 hours of hair-shaping training before they may work on live models.

As might be expected, once the students have invested a year at the college and become attached to their teachers and the other students, leaving the school can be an emotional experience. When a student has finally acquired enough hours of training a brief, informal ceremony is held in which gifts are presented and everyone says goodbye to the graduate.

FBI, Hispanics meet to settle differences

EL PASO (AP) — Attorneys for Hispanic agents who successfully sued the FBI in a racial discrimination suit believe little will come from a court-mandated status conference today.

Both sides were scheduled to meet at 9 a.m. today before U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton to try to settle their differences over how the FBI will reform itself and compensate discrimination victims, said Tony Silva, attorney for the plaintiffs.

"The plaintiffs don't believe any progress will result," Silva said, adding that Bunton has scheduled a damages hearing starting Feb. 20 in case Silva's prediction comes true. In today's status hearing, Bunton was expected to referee and not make any rulings. He will be able to mandate changes in the Feb. 20 damages hearing.

Bunton presided over a two-week, non-jury trial in the class-action suit last summer and ruled in October that the FBI had discriminated against Hispanic agents in promotions, assignments and working conditions. The suit was brought by El Paso's No. 2 agent, Bernardo "Mat" Perez, and was joined by 311 other Hispanic agents. The FBI has about 400 Hispanic agents.

Following Bunton's verdict, the FBI proposed changing some promotion policies, and paying agents bonuses for upgrading their foreign-language skills.

Silva said the plaintiffs were not satisfied with the FBI's proposals, and plan to submit counter-proposals, including one to pay agents bonuses for foreign-language skills whether or not they upgrade them. Under the FBI's proposal, he said, an agent who enters the FBI at the agency's highest level of fluency would not be paid a bonus because he wouldn't be able to upgrade the skill.

In addition to trying to arrive at a settlement on how the FBI should reform itself, the parties will discuss compensation to discrimination victims and to certain agents who the plaintiffs contend suffered retaliation for joining the lawsuit.

Houston blood bank cited for using banned donors

HOUSTON (AP) — A blood bank that supplies area kidney dialysis centers was ordered to recall two units of blood from donors who tested positive for AIDS antibodies and hepatitis B.

But by the time of the recall, red blood cells taken from each donor already had been given to patients, the Houston Chronicle reported in a copyright story Sunday. The plasma was then recovered and destroyed.

The blood units themselves tested negative in the blood bank's laboratory, but interviewers at the for-profit blood bank, Houston Apheresis Inc., apparently did not check a fail-safe list that identifies donors who had previously tested positive.

The Food and Drug Administration ordered the blood bank to recall the blood last September.

One unit was drawn from a donor who had previously tested positive for antibodies to the AIDS virus and the other from a donor who had tested positive for hepatitis B, the newspaper reported.

After the recall, the FDA sent the blood bank a strongly worded regulatory letter demanding corrections of what District Director Gerald Vince called "serious violations of the federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act." A regulatory letter is one step short of license suspension.

The blood bank's chief executive and owner, Dr. Gregory Reimer, says his bank does a good job. "I think we are singled out by the FDA, I think we are picked on to some degree," he said.

Reimer, a board-certified pathologist, does not deny that sending out the two blood units was a serious lapse. But he said he thinks the previous tests of the two donors were "false positives" and that no one was hurt by the error because the blood units were clean.

Don Healton, spokesman for the FDA in Dallas, said false negatives are extremely rare and said the dispersed blood units in the September case were probably OK. But he said, "I would prefer that they didn't make these kind of mistakes."

FDA spokesman Brad Stone denies Reimer's complaint that Houston Apheresis is being singled out. He says the agency has stepped up scrutiny of all blood banks in response to AIDS.

Use proper care when taking prescription drugs

By SHEILA SOBELL MORAMARCO
Copley News Service

It's hard enough to open a childproof bottle of medicine (unless you're a child, I sometimes think, tongue-in-cheek, when I ask my sons to open a new bottle of pills). Figuring out what the information on the prescription actually means is something else again.

The first word on the prescription is the name of the drug. Next is the dosage form (liquid, capsules, tablets) and the strength (such as 250 mg or milligrams).

Next is the amount you will get (15 capsules, 5 fluid ounces), followed by the directions for use.

These are often abbreviations of Latin words. For instance, ter in die, written t.i.d., means three times a day. The pharmacist will translate this information on the label of the medicine container. The prescription form will also indicate how many times the prescription can be refilled.

It's a good idea to check the prescription before you leave the doctor's office. If there is anything you don't understand, ask about it.

DETAILED INFORMATION for patients does not have to accompany most prescription drugs. But for a few, such as contraceptives and estrogens, the Food and Drug Administration does require a leaflet or brochure that tells about the benefits and risks of these products.

If there is such a brochure with a drug prescribed for you, be sure to read it carefully, and if you have questions, ask your doctor or pharmacist.

Non-prescription drugs must include on their labels information about when and how to take the product, possible side effects or drug interaction. Always read these labels before taking the medicine.

When a new drug is discovered it is patented and given a brand, or trade, name. The drug company has exclusive rights to that product for 17 years.

Almost all states now permit pharmacists to dispense a generic drug instead of a brand-name product if the doctor approves. However, not all drugs are available from more than one company, and not all multisource drugs are "therapeutically equivalent"— that is, behave in the same way in the body.

FDA publishes lists of drugs that identify which ones can be substituted safely. The next time your doctor writes you a prescription, ask if there is an approved generic version of the drug.

CNS Graphic

HERE ARE some tips to help you use prescription drugs safely and effectively:

■ If a drug is not doing what it is supposed to do for you, check with your doctor. You may need a different dosage or a different drug.

■ If you have an unexpected symptom — rash, nausea, dizziness, headache — report it to your doctor immediately.

■ Don't stop taking your medicine just because you're feeling better. You may prevent the drug from doing its work completely.

■ Check drug labels for specific instructions or warnings, such as "do not take on an empty stomach" or "do not take with milk."

■ Check the label, or ask the pharmacist, for storing instructions. Some drugs should be refrigerated, others must be protected from light.

■ Always keep medicines out of the reach of children. Even though most prescription medicines come in childproof containers, children sometimes can open these bottles and swallow the contents. (If you have difficulty opening such safety closures, you can request bottles with regular caps.)

■ Never let another person use your medicine and never take medicine prescribed for anyone else. Your symptoms may look the same, but you may be suffering from an entirely different problem.

■ Never take medicines without checking the label to make sure you're taking the right one. Don't take medicine at night without turning on the light.

■ Don't transfer medicines from the original container. These containers are designed to protect the drugs. Fancy pillboxes are not always suitable.

■ Do not keep prescription drugs that are no longer needed. Destroy leftover medicines by flushing them down the toilet and dispose of containers carefully so children can't get them.

To get the most out of your medicine, you should ask your doctor:

■ What is the name of the medicine? Write it down so you won't forget.

■ What is the medicine supposed to do? (Make the pain disappear? Get to the cause of the pain? Reduce fever? Lower blood pressure? Cure infection?)

■ What side effects might occur?

■ How should you take the medicine? Does "three times a day" mean morning, noon and night? Should you take it before meals, with meals or after meals? If the directions say "every six hours" do you have to get up during the night to take the medicine on time?

■ How long should you take the medicine? If you stop just because you feel good, the symptoms and the disease may recur.

■ Are there other medicines you should not take while you are taking this one?

■ Are there any foods or beverages you should avoid?

■ Can the prescription be refilled without an appointment or does the doctor need to see you again?

DEAR ABBY

Pictures worth thousand words

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The YWCA of Walla Walla, Wash., is putting together a pamphlet on battered women. This pamphlet will be used to solicit funds for our women's shelter and residence. We want to use some pictures of women who have been beaten, but have great difficulty finding any. (Most battered women are afraid to have their pictures published, especially if they are trying to get away from their abuser.)

In March 1986, you ran a letter from "Rae B. in Idaho," a battered woman who had sent you some pictures of herself after she had been badly beaten. She asked you to publish those pictures. You did not publish them, but I hope you will permit the YWCA to use those pictures if you still have them on file.

Helping battered women is one of our YWCA's main projects. — DONNA JONES

DEAR DONNA JONES: I have not seen those pictures since I showed them on the Phil Donahue show (my fault, not theirs), but Rae B. must have another set because she used them as evidence in court. Unfortunately, I have been unable to locate her, but if she reads this, I hope she contacts you. Meanwhile, thank you for sending your family violence report. I think Rae's letter is worth repeating. And here it is:

DEAR ABBY: In March I read a letter in your column from a parent whose daughter had actually been beaten to death by her boyfriend.

I am enclosing photos of myself after the brutal beating I received from my husband of 11½ years. It was the first time he had physically harmed me, although he had threatened me with a knife several times. These past five years I lived in terror of him, but didn't know how to get away without getting myself and my three children killed.

The assault occurred in a public place at 3:30 p.m. I asked him to meet me there because I was going to tell him I was leaving him, and I thought it would be safe. I was wrong. He nearly killed me. In addition to severe body pummeling, I suffered a broken nose, a blowout fracture of my right cheek, severe eye damage, broken teeth, bruises and numerous hematomas on my head, which became swollen to three times its normal size!

Your advice, "File charges, and run as though your life depended on it," was good.

I ran to a shelter provided by the Women's Advocates, a rape crisis and intervention group. I also pressed charges. My husband was sentenced to an indefinite term not to exceed 10 years. He must serve 120 days at a correction facility, where he will be evaluated; then there's a possibility that he will be released.

He offered to give me everything I wanted in the divorce if I would drop the charges against him. I refused. I am glad I stood my ground because now it has been publicly validated that wife-beating is unacceptable.

Abby, you have my permission to use my name and publish these pictures. Do whatever is necessary to let women everywhere know that they do not have to tolerate physical abuse! Urge them to contact the Women's Advocates or other local crisis intervention groups. Don't back off, and above all, never go back! — RAE B. IN IDAHO

DEAR RAE: I cannot publish your pictures, but I can tell you that my staff and I were horrified by them. The damage to your face and body defies description.

Now a word to all women: Under no circumstances should you tolerate a rough shove, a punch, a slap, a twisted arm or any kind of physical abuse from a husband or boyfriend. It's a clear signal that his controlled anger could eventually escalate into more severe punishment.

Most women remain in abusive relationships because they are financially dependent. So, women, complete your education; learn a trade or a profession so you can support yourselves and will never be forced to tolerate abuse because you can't afford to leave.

Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069.

Study: Poor physical fitness triples heart risk in women

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women in poor physical shape are three times more likely to die at an early age of heart disease than are those who keep themselves in good condition, according to a long-term study.

Dr. Lars G. Ekelund, the principal author of the study, said it provides the first strong evidence that exercise protects women from heart disease, just as it does men.

Poor physical fitness "is almost as important as smoking as a risk factor for cardiovascular disease" in women, said Ekelund, a researcher at the University of North Carolina.

The study was based on a 10½-year follow-up of 2,802 women who ranged in age from 30 to 69. The results were presented at the annual meeting of the American Heart Association.

"This had been seen in males. Now it carries over into females," said Dr. Paul L. McHenry of the Krannert Institute in Indianapolis. "This confirms what we all expected."

During the study, women walked on treadmills while their heart rates were measured. Those who are physically fit have lower heart rates while exercising than do people who are in poor shape.

The researchers divided the women into four groups, depending on their heart rates. During mild exercise, those in the most fit group averaged 107 beats per minute, compared with 152 beats among the least fit women.

During the decade of followup, 40 women died of heart attacks, strokes and heart failure. The risk of cardiovascular death was less than 1 percent among the fit women and 2 percent in those who were unfit.

Ekelund said that while much of the difference in physical fitness may be inherited, people can also improve their level of fitness by exercise.

"It has been shown by many studies that you can improve fitness levels by just walking," he said. "Many people could benefit from this. Later, if they felt like they needed more, they could progress to jogging. But the important thing is to have a regular exercise program."

The new findings in women are similar to those reported by the same researchers in a study of men.

Ekelund said the risk of being out of shape is close to that of smoking or high blood pressure.

Being unfit may be more of a problem for women than for men, he said, because less than 20 percent of U.S. women say they get regular physical activity, compared with about a third of all men.

Among other studies presented at the meeting:

■ Consumption of fat by Americans has fallen substantially since the mid-1960s. Dr. Alison M. Stephen of the University of Saskatchewan said people may simply be trimming meat better and throwing away more fat. She said the dietary change may be a major cause of the drop in heart attack deaths that began in the late 1960s.

■ Doctors report progress in developing a variety of devices that clean out clogged heart arteries by shaving, sanding and burning away fatty deposits. All of them are intended to improve or replace balloon angioplasty, a widely used procedure in which doctors reopen clogged arteries by temporarily inflating tiny balloons inside them.

■ The heart disease death rate is declining dramatically among middle-aged white men.

Heartbeat '89 celebrants go 'Back to the Future'

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Although Midland Center appeared to be the site of a '50s class reunion, the 7:30 p.m. event Saturday celebrated the American Heart Association's 'Heartbeat '89. About 350 Midlanders got into the spirit of Heartbeat's theme "Back to the Future," taken from the 1985 film of the same name. Guests sported pompadours, poodle skirts, pony tails, taffeta off-the-shoulder prom dresses, letter sweaters, blue suede shoes and leather jackets, and fashions which ranged from the '50s to the '80s.

Despite the festive atmosphere, the event was staged for a serious cause. Chairman Skeet Doss said Midland is one of Texas' top fundraisers for the AHA, and Saturday's Heartbeat raised $50,000. "It was a huge success and we appreciate everyone's support," Doss said. "The funds raised will go into grants for research, and programs like the CPR (Cardio-Pulmonary Resuscitation) program and other outreach programs in the community."

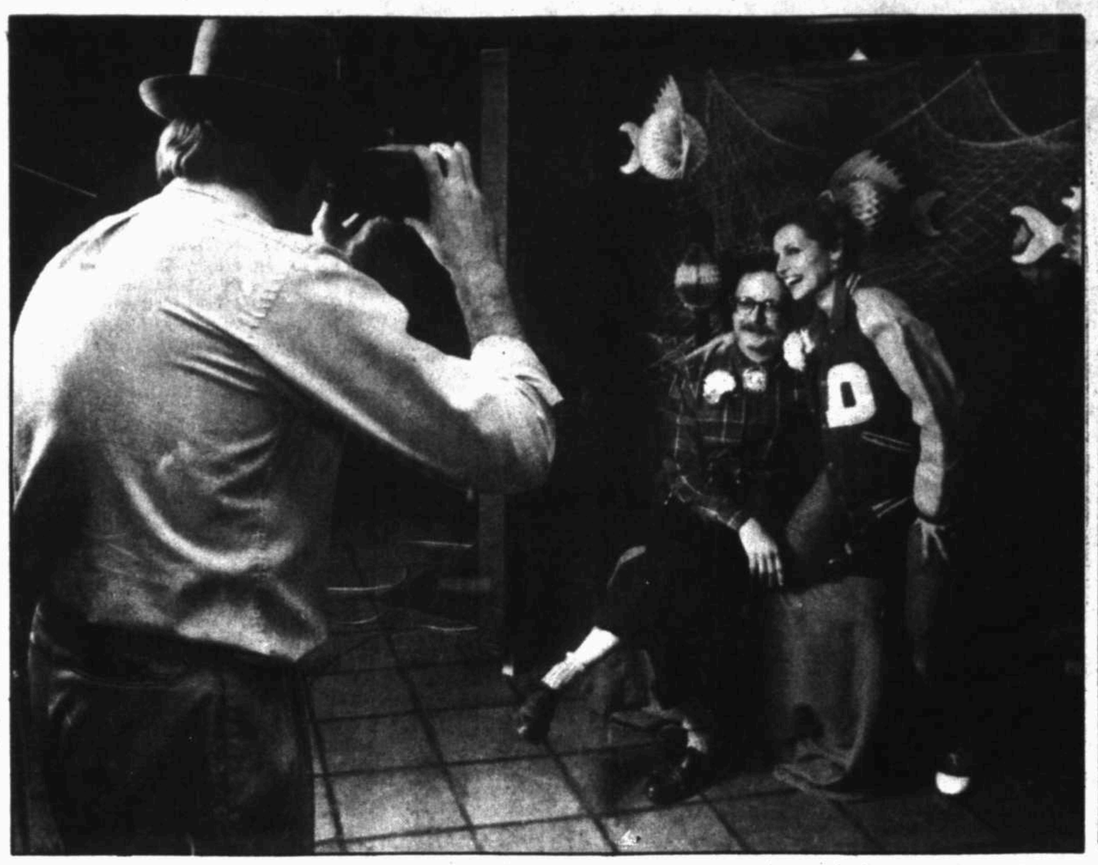

Women were offered white carnation corsages at the entrance of the event. Registration tables fronted wall murals of fish nets, lobsters, seahorses and brightly colored fish, keeping with the theme of "Back to the Future's" '50s prom, "Enchantment Under the Sea." Pink, white and red balloons were tied to tables and an Elvis Poster was framed by a huge crepe paper-bedecked heart, surrounded with twinkle lights. Balloons filled the ballroom and twinkle lights were strewn floor to wall.

Cindy Bohannon and her husband, Paul, said they were impressed with the lavish decorations. "They really went all out, and some of the decorations were so inventive," Ms. Bohannon said, referring to a wall festooned with blue crepe paper "waves" filled with sea life.

The film "Back to the Future" was projected onto one wall, by a projector hidden behind a Mickey Mouse decoration. A brushed chrome DeLorean (Michael J. Fox's time machine in the film), which belongs to Hal and Lenora Freedman, was parked in front of a life-size replica of the courthouse in "Back-to-Future."

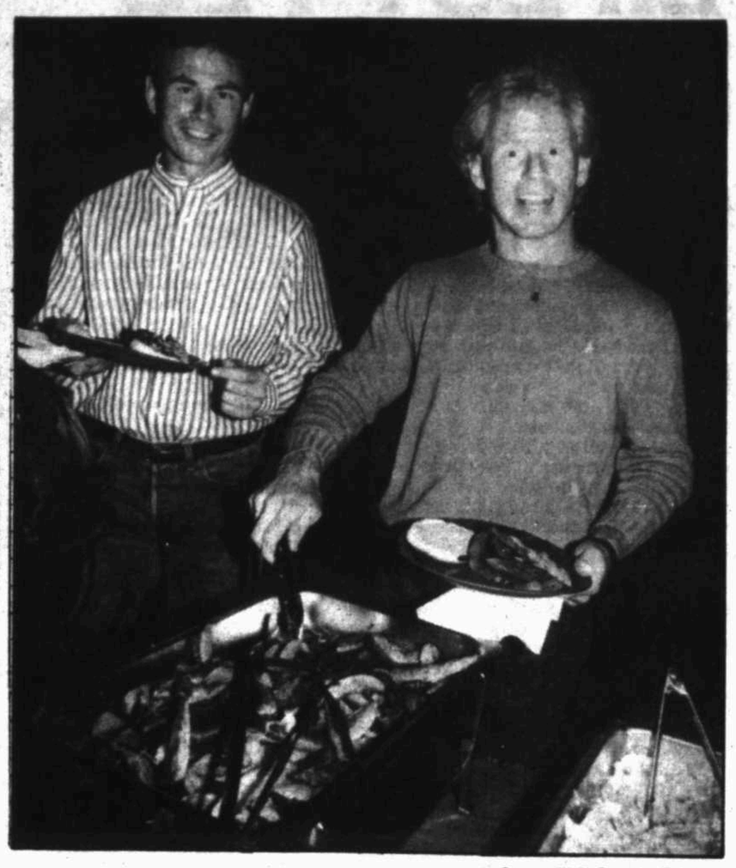

The rock and roll sounds of XKE of Austin began filling the center around 8:15 p.m. Jerry Lee Lewis' "Great Balls of Fire" and the Big Bopper's "Chantilly Lace" were just a few of the '50s favorites played, which inspired partygoers to "cut a rug."

Jeff Sharifi catered the '50s fare of hamburgers, huge steak fries and grilled chicken. Drinks included a flowing rum punch fountain, and an open bar. Women in '50s regalia served ice cream sundaes, root beer and coke floats from a soda fountain. One of the soda fountain servers, Mona Gail Gibson, and her partner Bob Anderson won first place in the jitterbug style contest. "We won a compact disk of 'Back to the Future,'" Ms. Gibson said. "This was the first Heartbeat I've been to, and it's been a lot of fun. It's very well done," she said.

Ms. Gibson also commented on the decorations, saying that the decorators "did a lot with so little."

Chairman Doss said about $450 were spent on the decorations, and many of the supplies were donated. "Debbie Mays also did a tremendous job with the table decorations," Doss said. Other volunteers said that Doss was "a professional at setting up fundraisers," and Doss himself said 'Heartbeat '89 was his fourth Heartbeat event as chairman. He said he has organized "about 13" fundraising events altogether.

Between dance numbers, guests retired to tables covered with red cloths, topped with goldfish crackers and plastic sand pails filled with popcorn. Sponsors' tables were covered with silver lame cloths, and tiny metallic heartshaped confetti.

The event was "great fun" according to Ms. Bohannon. "The band stayed and played two extra songs, and we also had a best costume contest which two men and two women won." Ms. Bohannon also said she thought serving chicken was wise, since it offered partygoers "a heart-healthy choice of food."

The $75 a couple event, also featured a photo booth manned by photographer Don Higgins. Doss, who worked on the event since summer of '88, said AHA members will begin discussing Heartbeat '90 in the summer.

Underwriters of the event were the Abell-Hanger Foundation, The Beal Foundation, Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., The Fasken Foundation and Wagner and Brown.

Cholesterol Busters declare fat-free zone in California

New York Times News Service

SAUSALITO, Calif. — At a sunny Sunday brunch on the terrace of the Alta Mira Hotel here, W. Patrick Holt dug into what could be called the restaurant's Cholesterol Special: steak, fried eggs and french fries.

"I try to eat eggs and red meat every day if I can," Holt said. "Do you think it's bad for me?"

In this picturesque village of 7,500 people across the Golden Gate Bridge from San Francisco, a village that has proclaimed its intention to become the nation's first cholesterol-free zone, such behavior amounts to anarchy.

This is clearly a job for Cholesterol Busters. Enter Fred Mayer, the local pharmacist who founded public health campaigns that are nationally known, including the Great American Smokeout and National Condom Week. Now, if Mayer has his way, nobody here will be asking, "Where's the beef?"

"More than one quarter of adults in the United States have cholesterol levels high enough to put them at risk for a heart attack," he said.

"Our goal is to get people to know their cholesterol levels and demand cholesterol-free foods."

To this end, all 105 municipal employees will have their blood screened on Feb. 14 in a show of solidarity. The ice cream shop is offering a creamless frozen dessert. he pizza parlor is cooking with olive oil and topping its pies with low-fat cheese.

Extremism in defense of health is hardly unusual here in trendy Marin County, but such fitness fundamentalism may seem a little odd coming from the community that supplied bootleg liquor to San Francisco during Prohibition.

"It's a funny public relations move, and there's something to be said for putting humor in the health consciousness drive," said Eric Schrier, editor of Hippocrates magazine, an award-winning health and medical monthly published here.

Despite the counsel given by publications like his own, Schrier said surveys indicated that most people remained confused about crucial issues like the role of high-density lipoproteins, the "good" cholesterol produced by the body that can be increased by exercise, and saturated versus poly-unsaturated versus mono-unsaturated fats.

Holt was far from the only scofflaw in town. Sharing his table, Kelly Griffith was sampling the special of three eggs scrambled with Cajun sausage and hash browns.

Her companion, Joel Tzinberg, was having the eggs Benedict, a dish often described as eggs on eggs. The health of their arteries was not completely blocked from their minds, however. They had been careful to order their whole wheat toast without butter.

John MacDonald, who has been chef at the Alta Mira for four years, says these brunches laden with saturated fat are part of the "traditional menu" for which the restaurant is known. But he has revised his repertory to include dishes without rich sauces and with little salt.

Still, the good intentions of the kitchen are often undermined at the table, where diners frequently add extra salt to their food.

"The husband takes the salt shaker and shake, shake, shake." said William Wachter, owner and manager.

"The wife takes it right out of his hand — shake, shake, shake. They don't even taste the food first."

Mayor Robin Sweeny said response to Sausalito's fat-free philosophy has been overwhelming. Letters have come from all over the country saying, "Good for you," she said.

Businesses trying to merchandise new low-fat products have inundated her with samples, including two cases of cholesterol-free potato chips from South Dakota and grapeseed oil from New York.

Louisville lost its chance for No. 1 and its top player, too.

The third-ranked Cardinals, unable to hold a lead after Pervis Ellison was injured, fell to No. 17 Ohio State 85-79 Sunday.

Earlier this week, No. 1 Illinois and No. 2 Georgetown lost. Louisville's defeat left No. 4 Oklahoma as a possible successor at the top.

Ellison, the team's leading scorer and rebounder, sprained a ligament in his left knee while scrambling for a loose ball just before halftime. Dr. Rudy Ellis, Louisville's physician, said he would determine the extent of Ellison's injury today.

Louisville, 14-3 after its 14-game winning streak got stopped, was ahead 41-37 at halftime. Backup center Felton Spencer played only four minutes in the second half before the 7-footer fouled out.

Jay Burson scored 29 points for the visiting Buckeyes, 15-4.

No. 15 NC State 90, Maryland 67

Rodney Monroe and Brian Howard each scored 21 points and No. 15 North Carolina State overcame a slow start to defeat Maryland 90-67 in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The Wolfpack fell behind 9-0 in the opening two minutes, but rallied to send Maryland to its ninth straight loss. The Terrapins' losing streak is second only to a 21-game slide that finished the 1940-41 season.

Chucky Brown scored 18 points for the Wolfpack, 14-2 and 5-1 in the ACC. Tony Massenburg scored 19 points for Maryland, 6-12 and 0-6.

Michigan 99, Purdue 88

Glen Rice scored 20 first-half points, including three 3-point shots, as No. 10 Michigan, 16-4 and 4-3, raced past Purdue, 9-11 and 2-5.

Rice, Michigan's No.4 all-time scorer, missed only one of his eight shots in the first half. The 6-foot-7 senior forward, who also had five of his team's 13 rebounds in the first half, finished with 34 points.

Notre Dame 64, Temple 60

Jamere Jackson hit three 3-point goals and scored 15 points to help Notre Dame, 10-3, overcome Mike Vreeswyk's game-high 17 against Temple, 9-7.

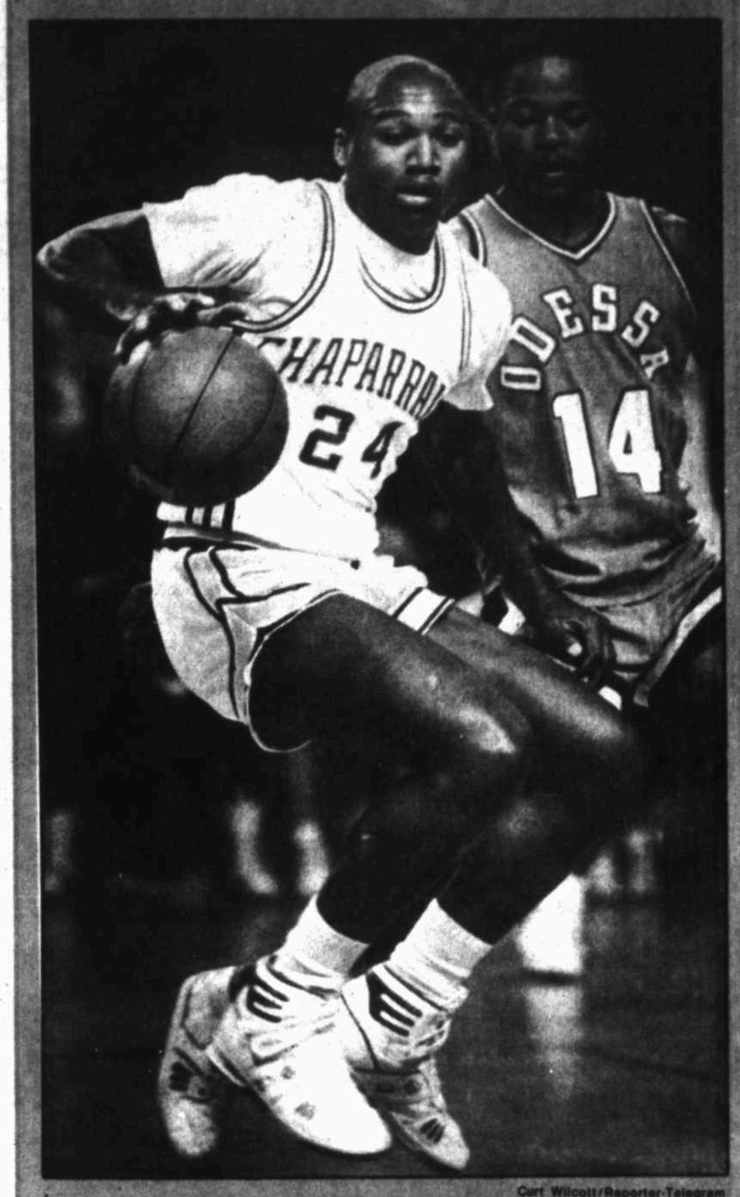

LaPhonso Ellis, whose five points were his lowest point total this season, hit two free throws with 20 seconds remaining to seal the win for Notre Dame, 10-3.

Arizona 72, Stanford 52

Sean Elliott scored 31 points and Arizona shut down Stanford star Todd Lichti as No. 6 Arizona defeated the No. 19 Cardinal to take a two-game lead in the Pacific-10 Conference.

Elliott, averaging 21.7, got 18 of his points in the second half after Arizona led 31-21 at intermission. He was 9-for-13 from the field, hit 12 of 15 free throws and had nine rebounds.

The win left Arizona at 9-1 in the Pac-10 and 15-2 for the season. Stanford fell to 15-5 overall and 7-3 in the conference.

Chaps' Charles McCovery...key to victory

Road games may decide MC's fate

From Staff Reports

In what could be the most important week of the season, Midland College plays two road games against teams which won over the Chaps in their first meetings.

The Chaps go to Big Spring 8 p.m. Monday to play Howard College at Dorothy Garrett Coliseum. Howard won 84-81 in overtime last December at the Chap Center.

Thursday, the Chaps play in Levelland against South Plains College, a threat that has just two losses by a total of three points to the No. 12 and No. 2 teams in the nation.

SPC beat MC 95-82 on the MC court.

MC head coach Reggie Franklin emphasized the importance of having Chaparral fans at both these games. "Howard College will be ready for us, and we need all the help from our fans we can get over there. And with the boosters getting a chartered bus for the South Plains game, we hope to have a lot of Chap fans up in Levelland."

Fans wishing to attend the South Plains game Thursday should call Monday to reserve their seats on the chartered bus. Cost is just $15 per person including a game ticket. The bus leaves the Chaparral Center parking lot at 5:15 p.m. Those interested can call the MC athletic office, 685-4575, or Peggy Johnson at 682-1671.

The Chaps, fourth in the WJCAC, need to finish not lower than that in order to make the Region V tournament.

Odessa is 23-0 and ranked first in the nation. South Plains lost to the Wranglers in Odessa, 81-80, its only conference loss. SPC also lost , 84-82, to the second ranked Jacksonville (Texas) College Jaguars at last November's Chaparral Classic.

Howard College, with a balanced scoring attack, has lost conference games only to OC and SPC.

Five Chaps are averaging double figures in scoring. Tim Owens is 17.5 ppg. Charles "Smokey" McCovery is 16.5, Fred Campbell 13.7, Kethus Hanks 11.5, and Darryl King 11.5. Randy Williams is averaging 9.0. Owens and Campbell are tied for rebounding leader at 7.9 per game, with King getting 6.4. King is the team and conference shot-block leader with 78.

McCovery is the assist and steal leader with 116 and 56. Hanks s second in both those statistics with 38 and 43.

After the road trips to Big Spring and Levelland, the Chaps return home for games against New Mexico Military Institute Feb. 6 and New Mexico Junior College Feb. 9.

Oklahoma takes over AP's No. 1

Associated Press

Oklahoma earned its first-ever No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press college basketball poll today, capping a week that saw the top three teams all lose one game.

The Sooners, 17-2, jumped from fourth to the top spot after victories last week over Colordao and Nevada-Las Vegas and became the third team to be ranked No. 1 this season.

They received 32 of the 66 first-place votes cast by the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters and finished with 1,273 points to edge Illinois in the balloting.

"We're honored and delighted to be ranked first in the poll," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said Sunday night. "I think every team wants to do two things, one, win a national championship and second be ranked first in the AP poll. This is certainly a milestone for our program and our hard work and persistence have finally paid off."

Illinois, which became No. 1 for the first time in 37 years, held the top spot for just one week as the Fighting Illini lost to Minnesota 69-62 before rebounding for a victory over Indiana.

Illinois, 18-1, was named No. 1 on 25 ballots and had 1,226 points.

When Illinois lost on Thursday night, it appeared Georgetown would move up one place to the top spot, but the Hoyas were upset by Louisiana State 82-80 on Saturday.

Louisville was next in line for a chance at No. 1, but the Cardinals lost at home to Ohio State 85-79 on Sunday.

To show the wide range of opinion on who deserved the top ranking, six teams received first-place votes.

North Carolina, 18-3, jumped from seventh to third with four first-place votes and 1,074 points, 19 more than Arizona, 15-2, which improved two places and was named No. 1 on one ballot.

Missouri, 18-3, stayed fifth. The Tigers had three first-place votes and 1,048 points.

Georgetown, which fell to 15-2 with the loss to Louisiana State, dropped from second to sixth with 1,019 points and the final first-place vote.

Louisville was seventh with 1,011 points after having its 14-game winning streak snapped and falling to 14-3.

Florida State, 16-1, moved from 11th to eighth with 797 points and Iowa, 15-3, jumped from 12th to ninth with 651 points, 13 more than Seton Hall, 18-2, which rounded out the Top Ten after being ninth last week.

Michigan dropped one spot to lead the Second Ten and was followed by Duke, North Carolina State, Syracuse, Ohio State, Nevada-Las Vegas, Indiana, West Virginia, Louisiana State and Stanford.

Mark O'Meara, victory in Pebble Beach Pro-Am.

O'Meara birdie edges Tom Kite

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Mark O'Meara, who had not won on the PGA Tour since having consecutive triumphs at the 1985 Bing Crosby Pro-Am and Hawaiian Open, rolled a 10-foot birdie putt right into the center of the 18th cup Sunday to beat Tom Kite by a stroke in the current version of the old Bing Crosby: the $1 million AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

Kite, who admitted he squandered his chances in the middle of his final round when he three-putted the seventh and eighth holes, eventually lost by a shot at Pebble Beach Golf Links for the second time about two months.

Curtis Strange beat Kite with a birdie on the second hole of a playoff in golf's richest tourney, the $5 million Nabisco Championship, on Nov. 14.

O'MEARA, WHO played immediately behind Kite on a warm, windless day at Pebble Beach, knew he had the opportunity to win as he stood over his ball about 90 yards from the pin when Kite missed his birdie putt of 18 feet on the last hole.

After Kite tapped in for par, O'Meara put his wedge shot 10 feet right of the cup for a straight, downhill slider.

The 32-year-old Californian just tapped the ball gently and it went to the bottom of the cup to complete a round of two-under-par 70.

That gave O'Meara 11-under 277 in this tournament, which involves two rounds at Pebble Beach and one each at Cypress Point and Spyglass Hill. Kite, despite bogeys at 7, 8 and 9, carded 69.

Jim Carter, a non-winner in three years on the tour; Sandy Lyle, a Scot, and Nick Price, who is from Zimbabwe, were deadlocked for third at 280.

Steve Jones, the defending champion, was in a four-way tie for sixth at 281.

JONES, WHO won the first two tournaments this year, did get a victory here, though, as he and Dr. James Rheim of San Diego took the pro-am team title with a better ball 33-under-par 255.

This beat Dan Pohl, a pro golfer, and Dan Marino, a pro quarterback for the Miami Dolphins, by one shot. Gary Carter, the Mets' catcher, came in third at 258, playing with Mark Calcavecchia, the winner of the Phoenix Open last week.

The $180,000 victor's check increased his tour career earnings to $2,182,227.

Although he once again lost by the narrowest of margins at Pebble Beach, Kite won $108,000, which moved him past Curtis Strange into No. 3 in tour career earnings behind Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson.

THE 39-year-old Texan has won $4,342,412; Strange, who did not play here this week, has $4,288,593.

"I about had a heart attack when that putt went in on 18," O'Meara said.

But it was a long and trying day on the course for him. O'Meara and the others in his foursome had to wait on every single shot they made after their opening drives at No. 1.

Monday's Question: How many major league baseball teams train in Arizona? Which teams?

Sunday's Answer: Henry Aaron and Willie McCovey earned Hall of Fame honors after growing up in Mobile. Other greats from that city included Billy Williams, Tommie Agee, Cleon Jones and Amos Otis.

1971 — UCLA, behind Curtis Rowe's 28 points, starts their record 88-game winning streak with a 74-61 victory over Cal-Santa Barbara.

1983 — John Riggins rushes for a Super Bowl-record 166 yards on 38 carries to spark the Washington Redskins to a come-from-behind 27-17 victory over the Miami Dolphins. For Riggins, who was voted the game's most valuable player, it was his fourth consecutive 100-yard rushing game during the playoffs, also a record.

Ricky Grace is alive and back at OU

Battles

Ricky Grace is back at the University of Oklahoma with a masters degree as his objective and perhaps a coaching job as his goal.

The former Midland College point guard made it to the last cut with Utah Jazz in preseason. "I thought he had a good chance of making it," said MC Coach Reggie Franklin, "but you never know."

And Mookie Blaylock, the former MC star who is now playing like an All-America at Oklahoma, does he have a chance in the NBA?

"A lot depends on who drafts him," says Franklin. "It has to be a team than needs and wants a point guard with Mookie's skills."

Steve Alford is a good example of what can happen when a collegian is drafted by the wrong team. Alford led Indiana to the NCAA title and was drafted by the Dallas Mavericks. Why remains a mystery. They didn't need him, they didn't want him. And if he had any NBA potential, it was never realized.

And Spud Webb, who led MC to the NJCAA title in 1982, is struggling at Atlanta. One game he played 13 seconds and then contributed substantially to a victory in a later game.

"A trade might be good for Spud, to a team that needs a point guard," says Reggie. And suggestions....is there a team that could use a point guard?

"I think the Houston Rockets could use Spud. It's a team that needs a point guard, but it's a team that keeps drafting forwards."...

The Los Angeles Dodgers farm system posted the best winning percentage in the minor leagues last season, playing at a .581 clip. The Milwaukee Brewers at .533, Montreal at .551 and San Diego at .548 were next. Presumably that means San Antonio, El Paso and Wichita Falls will be tough again in this year's Texas League race. Let's see, all three are in the TL West with the Midland Angels....

The University of Tennessee is studying the feasibility of expanding Neyland Stadium from 91,000 to 110,000 capacity by decking the north stands. So what are you going to do about that, Michigan?....

Quintin Dailey, the one time U. San Francisco and NBAer whose past is somewhat checkered, is thinking of a future as an NBA official....and, after that, a federal judge?....

A new pro football league is drawing interest from San Jose, Hayward, Calif., Seattle, Albuquerque, Cheyenne, Colorado Springs and St. Louis.....Entrance fee would be $10,000....

Did you know that Texas has an entry in the Continental Basketball League?...

It was hard to believe the item in the national publication, Ernie Blake, 75, died of pneumonia a couple of weeks ago. Blake founded and developed Taos Ski Valley, bringing a world class ski resort Texas and the Southwest's doorstep. I never was fortunate enough to interview Blake, but you never skied at Taos without seeing him on the slopes....

le James Cargill, 6-7 and 300, and Sweetwater back Kenneth Norman, 5-11, 180. Norman is projected as a defensive back in college. What's really surprising is that nary a District 4-5A player is listed in Texas' Top 100. Can that be?...

Hedi Vargas, who played last season in the Mexican League, will be the Midland Angels' spring training first baseman when Max Oliveras greets his club in Mesa, Ariz. And Miguel Alicia, with Midland last season, was 4-1 with a 2.25 ERA in the Puerto Rican Winter League....

It's as much fun watching University of Oklahoma basketball games these days as it is watching ACC ball, which is the highest praise this corner can offer. It's ironic, the Sooners play in one of the tougher conferences in the country and play a non-conference schedule that makes their OU footballer brethren shake their heads in "Are-those-guys-crazy-or-something. They'll never get a national ranking that way." No, but maybe an NCAA championship....

JIM MURRAY

Tommy John's Operation Rearm made big winner of has-been

Murray

Which non-player in baseball history made the greatest contribution to the game in terms of victories, playoffs, pennants, World Series he was directly responsible for, part of by proxy?

Connie Mack? Casey Stengel? No, I'm talking of a man who never wore a major league uniform, never managed, never sat in a front office, made a trade, wrote out a lineup or hit a fungo.

I almost said, "never changed a pitcher," but that wouldn't be quite accurate. He changed a pitcher, all right, and thereby hangs the tale.

In the fall of 1974, Tommy John was the most forlorn athlete you will ever see. His team, the Dodgers, were in the World Series but he wasn't. He moped around the fringes, his arm cast in a leather sling, his chin drooping.

THAT YEAR, he had been off to the best start ever in his career. He had 13 wins in 16 starts. He might have been on a Cy Young pace when suddenly his arm snapped like an old guitar. The question was not whether he could ever pitch with it again, but whether he could ever tie his shoelaces or comb his hair.

A dozen Connie Macks can't do anything about that. Tommy didn't even need an agent anymore. Who needs an agent to sell insurance?

What Tommy needed was a miracle. He needed a new arm. Arms are not regenerative. They come two-to-a-customer and they're not issued or hinged to throw curveballs.

Tommy's arm hung down like a broken clock when he went into the orthopedic clinic of Drs. Bob Kerlan and Frank Jobe. Most people thought he would be better off at Lourdes.

THE SPORTS world had reason to become used to surgical wonders performed by the Kerlan-Jobe complex but they couldn't raise the dead.

And the betting was, Tommy's arm had gone to its last resting place, that great bullpen in the sky.

Baseball had seen this scenario before. Guys whose arms have no pulse in them try everything this side of faith healing to get the fastball back in them, but they usually come up 20 miles-an-hour short and can't get anybody out any more.

Which is why, by the time Dr. Jobe got through operating, the game felt as if Tommy John had gone to a laboratory in Transylvania, not Inglewood, for his operation.

And this was really Dr. Frankenstein Jobe who did the work. He didn't operate on the arm, he built a new one. It was joked that if you lifted it up to your ear, you could hear wolves howl.

Pete Rose said it best: "I know they had to give Tommy John a new arm. But did they have to give him Koufax's?"

TOMMY JOHN and his electric arm stunned baseball. He was 33 years old when he returned to the game after surgery and a year-and-a-half in therapy.

He had won 124 games up till then. He was to win 162 afterward.

He had never been in a playoff or World Series prior to his surgery. He was in them almost every year thereafter - 6 playoffs and 3 World Series.

John is pitching yet. He will be 46 in May. The venerable Satchel Paige once wrote a book, "Maybe I'll Pitch Forever." T.J. could write the sequel.

It may be the most extraordinary accomplishment in sports medicine in baseball history. Tommy John had never won more than 14 to 16 games a season with his old arm. With his new one, he was a 20-game winner three times and he won 80 games in one 4-year stretch.

The older he got, the younger the arm got. John's favorite routine was to tell the press, he was 40, but his arm was only 9 years old and getting smarter by the minute.

It is a story to make the scalp prickle. T.J. cannot swat airplanes out of the sky with his arm, or stop bullets, or lift oil trucks - but he can throw ground balls with it.

Lots of pitchers coddle their arms. Shake hands with their other hand, keep a heat pack (or ice) on it overnight. They care for it the way a frontiersman took care of his rifle.

TOMMY John treats his as an equal partner. It may outlive him. He may want to leave it to someone like a family heirloom. It's probably got a thousand more double-play balls left in it and 500 taps back to the mound.

It's the most dramatic surgical triumph of Centinela Hospital's Kerlan-Jobe Orthopedic Clinic, but hardly the only one.

At a seminar at the Sportscasters monthly meeting at Lakeside Country Club the other afternoon, Dr. Jobe was explaining what has happened to sports orthopedists in the past decade of so.

"We've improved socially," he announced wryly. "We used to be the bag ladies of medicine. The neurosurgeons were at the top of the hierarchy. After all, they operated on the brain - and the brain is where the soul is, right?

"The cosmetic surgeons were the stars. Internists were tolerated. We were the ones who put the lights out and locked up. But, all that's changing. A neurosurgeon even spoke to me in the hall only the other day."

Put in Dr. Kerlan: "When my father was a doctor if a sports person came to him and said, 'My elbow hurts when I hit a tennis ball,' my father would say, 'Well, then, stop hitting a tennis ball.' "

When Tommy John came to Dr. Jobe with his arm hanging by one frayed strand of a tendon, Dr. Jobe did not tell him, "Stop throwing baseballs."

BOYS OF SUMMER

Carl Furillo: an appreciation

By ROGER KAHN
N.Y. Times News Service

Gil Hodges was the first to go. Then Jackie Robinson. Next after our brief remission from death, Billy Cox. And suddenly there stood a journalist asking Pee Wee Reese, "How does it feel to be the last person alive from the great Brooklyn Dodger infield?"

I gasped. I was not the one who asked that wicked question. Reese stood his ground and said, in the full flower of his poise: "I don't think about things that way. If I did, I might go crazy."

CARL FURILLO'S death commands such memories to mind. Even as it does I cannot believe Carl Furillo is dead. He was so skilled, so handsome and so strong, I thought he'd be throwing out base runners, some smart, some dumb, until he passed his 100th birthday. Furillo was granted 66 birthdays, that was enough time to brighten life for everyone who took the time to know him.

Quite simply, he was a great player. Some write about his arm, the human cannon. He was not the man you'd first ask to join you in a casual game of catch. Or how he played the right-field wall at Ebbets Field.

THAT WALL, a mystery of dead spots, bounces, angles and planes, was a wonder of baseball before the dream-destroyers wrecked it. Furillo never attended high school. Plane geometry remained a mystery to him. But he knew every angle, every carom. The way Furillo played the wall describes an art form.

Carl Erskine says he was a "Bible hitter." First pitch, anywhere, in the dirt or at the eyes, Furillo took his mighty swing. Why was he, then, a Bible hitter? Erskine says, "Thou shalt not pass." (Numbers 20.)

Furillo gathered 1,910 hits in 15 major league years. He pulled the ball sometimes, or went to right. No one ever banged a baseball harder up the middle. If Furillo ever misjudged a fly I never saw it.

In the whispering rush of memory I hear my father saying: "We'll go out to the ball park early, son. They have a feller who can throw." And so the Dodgers did. A young center fielder. Others came out, thousands of others, long before formal competition started, to watch the warm-up throws. You could hear gasps at Ebbets Field and sometimes, an hour before game time, bursts of applause.

THE DODGERS moved Furillo into right field, making him yield center to the exuberant grace of Duke Snider. Where a dandelion could not grow — right field in Brooklyn — Furillo flowered.

George (Shotgun) Shuba said last week that when Billy Herman would hit fungos in warm-up, he would tell Herman, "You better hit to left field first. I'm not going to throw after that guy."

Doing a retrospective radio program with Roy Campanella I said, "Campy, how did you like that throw off wet grass?"

Campanella remembered certain moist nights. "You know," he said, "I had to go to Carl one time and tell him: 'Please bounce the ball closer to first base. No one in the world can handle that one-hopper the way you're giving it to me.' "

SO THERE was, I suppose, an element of awe. Beyond that, there stood an extraordinary person. I knew Furillo for 37 years. I do not believe he was capable of telling a lie.

Early on he had a hard time accepting the integration of baseball. He grew up in all-white country and was never schooled beyond the eighth grade. But Furillo changed and grew, a quiet man learning from his times.

In 1953, the Dodgers added Jim Gilliam to the roster and a few players complained about another black in an ugly way. I wrote a story using no names, and Buzzy Bavasi, running the Brooklyn Dodgers, said, "Who talked to you?"

"We don't work that way, Buzzy."

"I'll find out," Bavasi said.

BY THIS point Furillo was warming up each night by playing catch with Campanella. He had surpassed his boyhood and grown color-blind.

Into the clubhouse I went and Furillo called me over. "That stuff was years ago," he said. "I was wrong. I got nothing against the colored playing ball."

"I didn't write that you had anything against the colored."

"Bavasi says you did."

"Carl, I swear I never wrote that. I'll show you the story."

"You don't have to swear and you don't have to show me the story, just giving me your word is good enough."

Such seems to be the stuff of friendship, even love. Long afterward, a career later, he mentioned that he was afflicted by chronic leukemia. "Some of the tests are bad," he said, "but you know I never made real money playing ball. So what can I do? I always worked. I got to work."

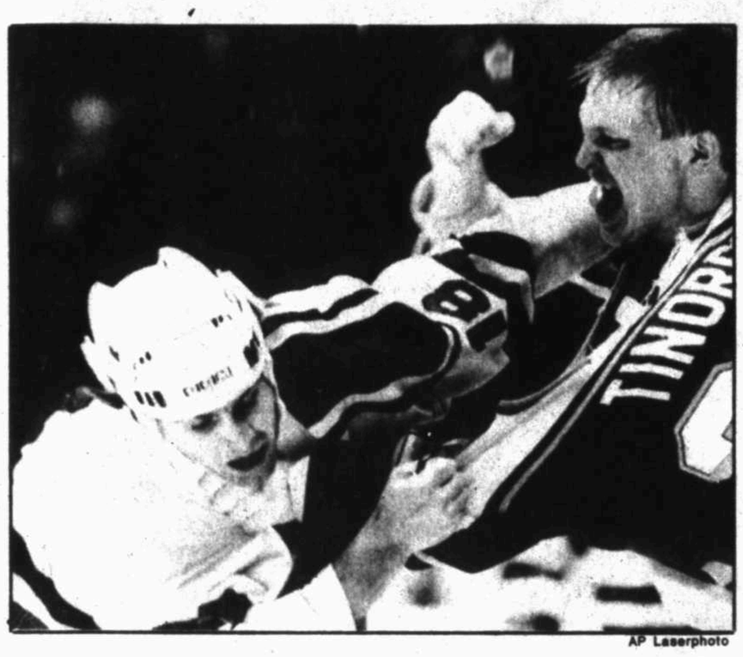

When I last saw this elegant gentleman, he was putting in four nights a week as a night watchman, fighting off leukemia and not complaining. Hell, Carl said, we all have to work, even writers.

IN 1987, I lost a gifted son to heroin. Roger Laurence Kahn had just passed his 22nd birthday. The telephone rang a few days later and the caller said: "This is Pee Wee. You remember I was captain of the team."

I do remember.

"I just want to say," Reese said, "for all the fellers that we are very, very sorry."

Our turns come and go. I mean only to say, for all the fellers, Carl, may you walk in green pastures.

UT, TCU, Arkansas share first in SWC

Associated Press

There's a traffic jam at the top of the Southwest Conference, with Arkansas, Texas and Texas Christian tied with 6-1 records.

The Longhorns used a trap press to roll past Southern Methodist 96-65 in Austin Sunday and gain their share of the lead.

"That is the best 40 minutes of defense we have played in a long time," Texas coach Tom Penders said of his team, which forced 27 SMU turnovers.

"We got off to a good start off the press and I think that kept a lot of them from making the right pass," said Lance Blanks, who led Texas with 23 points.

SWC leading scorer Travis Mays hit his average, scoring 22 points for Texas.

The Longhorns handed Texas Christian its first conference loss, 94-84, in Fort Worth Wednesday.

The Horned Frogs were idle Saturday.

Keith Wilson and Mario Credit each poured in 16 points Saturday to help Arkansas overcome a second-half rally by Rice and defeat the Owls 81-77.

Arkansas improved to 13-4 overall. Rice fell to 7-11 overall and 2-6.

Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson, who was called for two first-half technicals, said he came into the game expecting a big effort by Rice.

"We're glad to get out of here with a victory. We had a 20-point lead and wanted to put the game away," Richardson said. "You just can't compare scores. We beat Baylor by 30 and Baylor beat Rice. That didn't mean anything and I told our players that."

Cunnningham sparks NFC to 34-3 victory

HONOLULU (AP) — Randall Cunningham says he'll be back for next year's Pro Bowl, even if he's not voted into the NFL's all-star game.

"I'm coming back for sure, whether I pay myself or come with the Pro Bowl," the Philadelphia Eagles quarterback said Sunday after winning the Pro Bowl MVP Award in his first trip to the league's season-ending contest.

"Hawaii is great, the weather is nice, the people are nice, there are no negatives here."

In addition to having a fun week, Cunningham completed nine of 14 passes for 83 yards and picked up 49 yards on two rushes to help the NFC to an easy 34-3 victory over the AFC All-Stars.

"I though Herschel (Walker) had a good chance to win it because he had two touchdowns."

Cunningham doubtless earned some MVP votes with his talent for improvising.

On one busted play, he had the ball knocked from his hand, chased around after it and finally grabbed it, then fired an 11-yard completion to J.T. Smith.

Walker, of the Dallas Cowboys, scored on runs of 4 and 7 yards.

Neal Anderson of the Chicago Bears was another offensive standout for the NFC, accounting for 102 yards. He gained 85 yards on 13 carries and caught two passes for an additional 17.

Houston quarterback Warren Moon, in his first Pro Bowl appearance, led the AFC with 13 completions in 20 attempts for 134 yards.

LA's Green, Johnson mesmerize Mavericks

NBA

DALLAS — A.C. Green scored 25 points and Magic Johnson added 20 Sunday, carrying the Los Angeles Lakers to their first victory outside Los Angeles in more than a month, a 118-93 rout of the Dallas Mavericks.

The Lakers outscored Dallas 37-25 in the second period, shooting 71 percent for the quarter to take a 67-43 halftime lead and put the Mavericks away early.

Los Angeles, which beat the Los Angeles Clippers on Jan. 15 but hadn't won a road game since Dec. 13 at Cleveland, built the lead to 30 points early in the third period and coasted to only its second road win in 11 tries.

It was the worst home loss in history for Dallas, whose previous worst was a 126-102 defeat by the Lakers in November, 1980.

Bullets 122, Cavaliers 117, OT

BALTIMORE — Bernard King scored 38 points, the most since he seriously injured a knee nearly four years ago, as the Washington Bullets overcame a 20-point deficit to win in overtime.

King got 10 points in the extra period, eight from the foul line, including two free throws at 2:14 to give the Bullets a three-point lead.

The Cavaliers, whose 31-9 record is the best in the NBA, lost despite a career-high 33 points from Mark Price.

Celtics 121, Heat 103

BOSTON — Kevin McHale scored 21 points, leading six Boston players in double figures, as the Celtics handed the expansion Miami Heat its 20th loss in 21 road games.

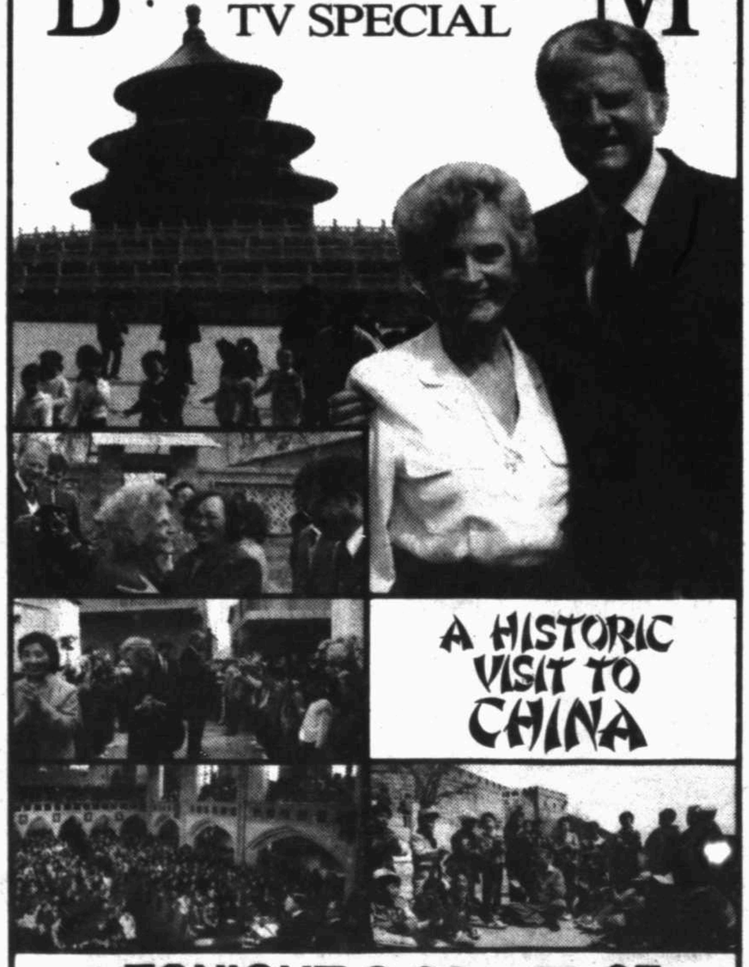

Maitland wins

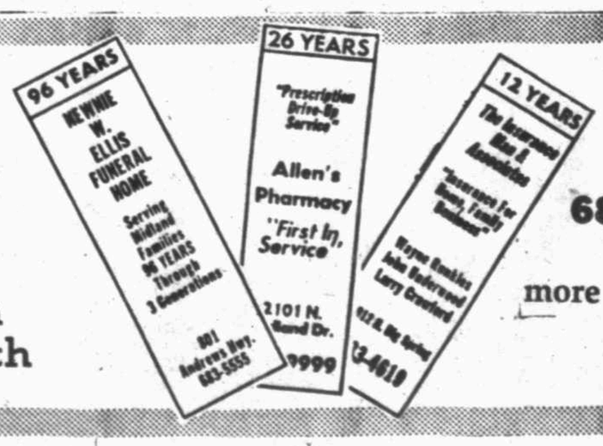

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Jack Maitland of Britain won the 14th edition of the Mount Cameroon run Sunday, finishing ahead of defending champion Reginald Esuka of Cameroon. Maitland covered the 18 miless up the mountain and back down again in 3 hours and 56 minutes and won $3,300. His time for the ascension was 2:29.

The 4,070-meter (13,353-foot) Mount Cameroon is a mist-shrouded peak at the end of a volcanic chain and the highest mountain in west and central Africa.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your uncanny instincts about people are the secret to your success. Focus on long-range goals, putting your energy where your mouth is. Emotional security grows as a relationship matures. Good health should be no problem if you use common sense. Variety and change work in your favor at place of employment. You feel happier with each passing day. In April, you get a chance to broaden your financial base and power.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: author Norman Mailer, comedienne Carol Channing, Dodgers great Jackie Robinson, tenor Mario Lanza, actress Suzanne Pleshette.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are in top form today, turning in an almost-perfect performance. Do not get overly confident, however. Domestic matters require a firm but diplomatic touch. Stand up for your rights.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Impulsive buying can strain both your budget and your relationship with partner. Changes are inevitable and will prove to be a step forward. A platonic friendship deepens into love.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Business affairs may not go according to plan. Your ability to shift gears successfully impresses an influential person. A surprise is part of the picture. Someone repays a favor in a meaningful way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Secret agreements are best avoided now. You will liberate yourself from a negative person or situation. Contact with overseas clients brings welcome financial news. Romance cools. Keep your chin up. Adventure beckons.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New sales techniques meet with a degree of success. Turn to relatives before friends if an emergency arises. A short business trip could prove lucrative. You enjoy meeting new faces.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Straight answers from an authority figure help you make an important decision. You are ready to move ahead. Choose your words carefully when addressing delicate matters. Romance blossoms. Nurture it with tenderness.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Acting footloose and fancy free could lead to domestic problems. Grow up! A youngster looks up to you as a role model. Romance may be rocky but fun.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Influential person asks a huge favor. Expect to be rewarded in tangible ways. Be alert to changes. You need to be more flexible with work associates and family members. Romance is sweet.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An older person will try your patience. Bite your tongue. Cooperation and more TLC will prevent bruised feelings. Continue to keep a close eye on spending. New investment opportunities will present themselves.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may want to run away from everything today. Work is excellent therapy. Many of your wishes will come true when you develop your potential. Learn new technology to boost your earning power.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A much more relaxed atmosphere helps you accomplish a lot at work or home. Get better organized, too, and you will become more productive. A social engagement adds cheer this evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You feel more secure now that you are on better financial footing. An important change is just ahead. Your timing could not be better!

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q63 ♡1083 ◇42 ♣QJ954
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Dbl	1 NT	Pass
Pass	2 ♣	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's cue-bid is still for takeout—had he held a club suit, he would not have doubled originally. Therefore, you can't pass; you must bid your longer of the other three suits. Since you have to choose a three-card suit, make the cheaper bid—two hearts.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J9852 ♡102 ◇Q103 ♣A42
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You have just enough to invite game should partner have a spade fit and a maximum. To start, use the Stayman Convention by bidding two clubs to probe for a major-suit fit.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J9852 ♡102 ◇Q103 ♣A42
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Bid two spades. Since you could have bid two spades directly with a weak hand, this sequence is invitational and forcing to two no trump or three of your suit, assuming you are using the original version of the Stayman Convention. Partner can correct to no trump with a doubleton; raise to three spades with a minimum and three-card support, or four spades with a maximum.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J9852 ♡102 ◇Q103 ♣A42
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—While your hand has been improved by the fact that partner has a four-card spade suit, you don't have enough to commit your side to game. Complete the invitational sequence by raising to three spades, asking partner to bid game with a maximum opening.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A76 ♡A10762 ◇K10854 ♣Void

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—If you find a fit, you are in slam territory; if not, you might not want to proceed beyond three no trump. A jump to three hearts could take the auction too high to allow for orderly investigation, so if two hearts is forcing in your methods, that's all you need do for the moment.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A76 ♡A10762 ◇K10854 ♣Void
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner does not have three hearts, so he must have at least three diamonds. Since a change of suit by you is forcing, just bid three diamonds to see what action partner takes.

Stars make record, TV special for victims of Armenia quake

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A cast of stars including Liza Minnelli and Ben Vereen brought their talents together to record the song "For You, Armenia" and film a TV special to help earthquake victims in Soviet Armenia.

Most of the profit will be given to the Armenian Relief Society for direct donation to victims of the quake that left about 25,000 people dead and 500,000 homeless.

"We can do what we usually do in life to raise money," Miss Minnelli said Sunday before stepping into a recording studio at Paramount Pictures. "We can't do anything politically. When I saw the disaster in Armenia I thought I was going to die."

Pia Zadora, Irene Cara, Connie Stevens, Ray Parker Jr. and members of the Doobie Brothers and Toto were among the nearly 100 performers who collaborated on "For You, Armenia."

The song was written by songwriters Charles Aznavour and George Garvarentz and translated from French to English by Paul Williams.

Michael Masser and Joel Cohen are producing the record and Peter Bogdanovich and Laszlo Kovaes will film the one-hour documentary and a music video.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — David Letterman says he really isn't out to make fun of guests on his "Late Night" show, despite his reputation for being condescending.

"It used to trouble me that people thought our sole purpose for being in business was to make fun of people," Letterman said in an interview in this week's Time magazine.

"Unfortunately, there is no joke that does not make fun of somebody. I try to make it, as often as not, me or the show or somebody in our little group. So if we say something that looks like we're making fun of somebody else, it's in the spirit of everything."

Letterman also said he looks up to NBC colleague Johnny Carson, who gave him his start by letting him be an occasional host on the "Tonight" show.

"He still makes me laugh," Letterman said. "In fact, I don't even watch the 'Tonight' show because how good he is makes me nervous and insecure."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Robert Duvall says he never becomes the characters he plays, no matter how convincing his performances may be.

"You've got to be in touch with yourself, you should be aware of everything," Duvall said in an interview published Sunday in The New York Times.

Duvall plays the heroic old Texas Ranger Augustus McCrae in the eight-hour television adaptation of Larry McMurtry's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel "Lonesome Dove," which CBS will broadcast over four nights beginning Sunday.

The Australian director of the drama, Simon Wincer, said Duvall "does a tremendous amount of digging around, trying to get a handle on a character. He'll read books, find an ex-Texas Ranger or an old sheriff and get them to talk of their experiences, fly people he's studying up to his Virginia place."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Diane Sawyer, news correspondent on CBS' "60 Minutes," is considering jumping to rival ABC to co-anchor a prime-time news show, perhaps with former White House correspondent Sam Donaldson, Newsweek magazine says.

Sawyer, who has three years remaining on her five-year, $6 million contract with CBS, apparently is exploring a loophole in the contract to see if she can make the switch, the magazine reported this week.

• • •

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Lou Christie, noted for his soaring vocals on the '60s hit "Lightnin' Strikes," is striking lightning twice thanks to the movie "Rain Man" and his 1974 hit "Beyond the Blue Horizon."

Christie's song marks a turning point in the hit film starring Tom Cruise and Dustin Hoffman and has provided Christie with new energy.

Christie left show business in 1974 and returned to his hometown of Pittsburgh where he took several jobs, including driving a truck.

Bush criticized for keeping fee option

By PETER T. KILBORN
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Bankers and members of Congress are criticizing the Bush administration for insisting that a fee on deposits remains an option to rescue the savings and loan industry.

A prominent banker, Willard C. Butcher, chairman and chief executive of the Chase Manhattan Corp., issued a statement Sunday calling the deposit fee "unsound public policy."

Both Democratic and Republican members of the Senate Banking Committee expressed concern about the proposal, which would require the approval of the Democratic-controlled Congress.

Sen. James R. Sasser, D-Tenn., noting the "overwhelmingly bipartisan objection" to a fee, said, "For all practical purposes the proposal is politically dead."

"It's like saying that a patient who died on the operating table is expected to fully recover," said Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa.

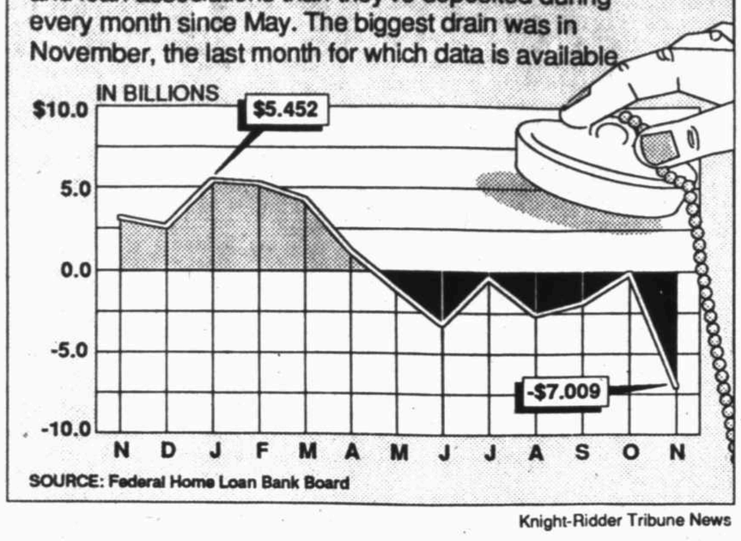

The reaction was prompted by the statements of administration officials on Saturday that they were determined to stick with the option of requiring the banking industry and its customers to help pay to resolve the savings crisis.

At that time, the White House chief of staff, John H. Sununu, said he wanted to rebut previous administration statements indicating that the fee proposal had been abandoned.

Deposits draining out of S&L's

Depositors have withdrawn more money from savings and loan associations than they've deposited during every month since May. The biggest drain was in November, the last month for which data is available.

Wall Street asks: Has bull market returned?

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — To the surprise of almost everybody, and the consternation of more than a few, Wall Street is starting to look as though the great bull market of the mid-1980s is back.

Over the past few trading days, stock prices have staged a runaway rise on heavy volume that evokes vivid images of January two years ago.

In the heady atmosphere that prevailed then, the Dow Jones industrial average broke 2,000 for the first time and finished the month with a net gain of 262 points.

If the market is going to match that performance this month, it will have to get even hotter than it has been in the two January sessions that remain. Some analysts think it is overdue for a breather.

Still, it has been an impressive performance, especially when you consider the uncertainty and skepticism that predominated in the financial world as the new year began.

To many investors, of course, the news is exhilarating, helping to wipe out both the dollars-and-cents losses and the unpleasant memories created by the crash in the fall of 1987.

To others who had been cautiously waiting for "better" investment opportunities, however, it has been a nasty surprise.

Consider the position in which many money managers at investing institutions such as pension funds find themselves.

In the chastened atmosphere that followed the crash, they carefully marshaled cash reserves as a cushion against further trouble ahead. Thus a lot of people were under-represented in stocks when prices took off again.

When your clients have suffered a drubbing in the market collapse, how are they going to take it when you tell them they missed out on the recovery?

Senator: Go after thrift executives

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials trying to bail out the fund that insures deposits in federal savings and loan institutions should go after executives of those institutions who contributed to the problem, and get rid of unsound institutions, the chairman of a Senate Banking subcommittee said today.

"We ought to be seeing to it that those people who are driving around in Jaguars and have big yachts and belong to fancy country clubs come up to the bar now and pay up," Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., said on "CBS This Morning."

"There are a lot of people that were executives of thrifts around the country that are personally liable and we ought to be getting after them," said Dixon.

Icahn, Texaco settle long-running feud

By MICHAEL QUINT
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Texaco Inc. and Carl C. Icahn, its largest shareholder, ended a feud Sunday that for more than a year has entangled them in a bitter struggle over the company's future.

Icahn, who owns 16.6 percent of Texaco, agreed to stop agitating for changes in the company and signed a seven-year agreement barring him from buying more stock or making a takeover bid.

The company announced plans to spend about $2.4 billion on special dividends to shareholders and on purchasing some of its stock.

The two sides reached an accord after a negotiating session between Icahn, one of the most successful corporate raiders of the 1980s, and James W. Kinnear, Texaco's president, that started at 3 p.m. Saturday and did not end until 9 a.m. Sunday.

The session, in White Plains, N.Y., followed a five-hour meeting of Texaco's board on Friday.

"Peace is better than war," Icahn said Sunday after the settlement was announced. "Why fight when they are doing the job I wanted to see done."

After losing a proxy fight last year to be represented on Texaco's board, Icahn continued to push the company to sell assets and reward shareholders.

Over the last year the company has raised $7 billion from the sale of subsidiaries, $2 billion more than it had originally estimated.

The turning point in the talks came on Wednesday, when Texaco agreed to make a major distribution to shareholders rather than making a larger buyback of its stock.

Sources close to the negotiations said Icahn favored a distribution because he was concerned that a share-purchase program would be seen as favoring large, sophisticated investors.

If shareholders approve the agreement at the annual meeting, tentatively scheduled for May, each holder of Texaco stock will receive $8 worth of special dividends per share: $4 of special notes, $3 of cash and $1 of preferred stock.

Texaco said it planned to spend $500 million more by August 1990 to buy back its own stock. Some analysts had expected the company to buy back $1.7 billion worth of its stock.

Icahn's current stake in Texaco, which has 243 million shares, is worth nearly $2.2 billion. Icahn purchased from an Australian investor, Robert Holmes a Court, 12 million shares and the voting rights to 12.1 million shares in November 1987. He has since added to his holdings. The special dividends will bring Icahn an additional $320 million.

Icahn Kinnear

The settlement allowed both sides to claim victory for themselves and shareholders. It leaves open the question of whether Texaco's sale of various subsidiaries to pay for the distribution was in the best long-term interest of the company.

Over the last year, Texaco has raised about $7 billion from the sale of subsidiaries, including about $3.2 billion from Texaco Canada and $1.2 billion from its West German unit.

An additional $1.8 billion was raised from putting its East Coast and Gulf Coast refining and distribution network into a joint venture with the Saudi Arabian government.

Despite the agreement reached Sunday, Kinnear and Icahn have differing opinions about past events. Kinnear has objected to the pressure brought by a shareholder trying to dictate corporate policy, while Icahn has maintained that as an active stockholder he encouraged needed reforms.

Rather than dismembering the company, Kinnear has tried to bring internal reforms and reward shareholders with greater earnings. He does not look with favor at Icahn's activities.

Without Icahn as the largest shareholder, Kinnear said he would "have done most of the same things." He said that Icahn's presence was "a distraction" and that the atmosphere of uncertainty he created "was detrimental in the short term and long term" to shareholders.

Icahn gave Texaco management high marks for making the company "leaner and more productive" as well as for their success in selling assets.

TI announces voluntary job cuts, higher earnings

From Staff and Wire Reports

Texas Instruments Inc. Friday announced introduction of a voluntary program to trim jobs in certain departments and also announced a 4 percent increase for earnings during the last three months of 1988.

The company said all employees in defense systems and electronics; semiconductors; information systems and services; consumer products; and corporate staff will have the option of voluntary termination; early or normal retirement. The company's local semiconductor plant is included in the program.

An enhanced severance package is available to workers opting for voluntary termination and a benefit "bridge" for workers almost eligible for early retirement is also being offered.

"In past experiences, we expect 1 to 2 percent response," said Stan Victor, a spokesman for TI. He said company officials thus expect a cutback of 500 to 1,000 in TI's workforce.

Roger Guess, personnel manager for TI's Midland/Odessa plant said that local response would likely be lower because the overall age and maturity of the local plant is lower than at many of the company's older locations.

Severence pay will be available to eligible U.S. employees through Feb. 10 for terminations and March 15 for retirement options.

The increase in earnings included a pretax charge of $17 million that involve ongoing cost-reduction actions, said officials.

Jerry R. Junkins, chairman, president and chief executive officer, thinks the measures will help keep TI competitive in the tight semiconductor market.

"We will take ongoing cost-reduction actions as necessary to keep our operations aligned with market demand, including a program in the first quarter (of 1989) to reduce employment levels in selected areas of the company's operations," he said.

Texas Eastern rejects bid

HOUSTON (AP) — The move was Coastal's again after Texas Eastern Corp's board of directors unanimously rejected a $2.6 billion cash offer, but Coastal President James R. Paul was not quick to show his hand.

After Texas Eastern called Coastal's buyout offer "clearly inadequate" and rejected it on Sunday, Paul said his company would respond, but wouldn't be making any extensive comment until after documents filed by the takeover target Monday with the Securities and Exchange Commission could be reviewed.

"It's obvious that after two weeks Texas Eastern still does not have a better offer than Coastal's $42 a share," Paul said.

Coastal had announced Jan. 16 it was making a cash tender offer of $42 per share for all of Texas Eastern's outstanding common shares. Since then, Texas Eastern's stock has soared, closing Friday at $48 a share.

The tender offer is set to expire on Feb. 14.

In a special board of directors meeting Sunday, Texas Eastern's board was told by financial advisers they should wait for a better offer.

Dennis R. Hendrix, Texas Easten's president, said Coastal's offer "is clearly inadequate." He said the board's action are designed to protect shareholders from "pressure tactics designed to stampede them into a decision before they can service a better offer."

Hendrix added that the board's decision in no way prevents Coastal from raising its bid.

"If there's only one short-fused bid on the table, shareholders don't have a choice," Hendrix said in a prepared statement, "they have an ultimatum."

In a court hearing last week in Houston, Texas Eastern officials said the company might use a "white knight" to block the Coastal bid and had a list of more than 50 possible buyers.

Coastal officials later suggested that the comment was designed to inflate stock prices and make their offer appear inadequate.

Analysts have said they doubt that there may be a large number of serious contenders to take over Texas Eastern.

Houston-based Enron Corp., which operates the nation's largest natural gas transmission system and long had been considered a possible candidate for a Texas Eastern takeover, will not say whether it is talking to the company.

Oil prices open week lower

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices headed lower this morning after a mixed performance Friday in light, choppy trading.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the March contract for West Texas Intermediate was down 36 cents at midmorning, trading at $17.38. The contract rose 2 cents Friday to settle at $17.74 a barrel, after plunging 40 cents on Thursday.

Among refined petroleum contracts traded on the exchange, February home heating oil closed up 1.43 cents at 51.98 cents a gallon.

Chris McCormack, an energy analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., said that technical factors were largely responsible for Friday's price fluctuations in the absence of any market-moving news.

Oil prices started out stronger, with crude oil up as much as 15 cents a barrel at one point.

Stronger dollar held in check

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose against most major currencies in moderate European trading today, as the market's trend toward a stronger dollar was checked by fears of central bank intervention.

Gold prices were lower.

Traders suggested the market is in a holding pattern until the Group of Seven meeting in Washington Friday. In recent days, only Japan among the group has refrained from intervening to hold the dollar back.

In London, one British pound cost $1.7580 dollars today, less expensive for buyers than Friday's late $1.7655.

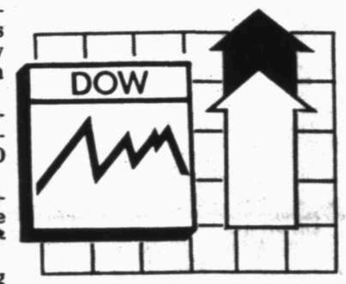

Earlier in Tokyo the dollar rose to 129.73 Japanese yen, up 1.08 yen. In London the dollar traded at 129.75 yen.

Gold bullion prices in London opened at $395.35 a troy ounce, down from the closing price of $398.25 Friday. At mid-morning, London bullion dealers fixed a recommended gold price this morning of $394.30.

Silver bullion traded late in London at $5.86 dollars bid a troy ounce, down from $6.02.

Dow up nearly 90 points for week

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market capped off a week of big gains with another strong advance Friday in the heaviest trading in seven months.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 31.79 to 2,322.86, bringing its gain for the week to 87.50 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by nearly 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board reached 254.87 million shares, up from 212.25 million Thursday and the heaviest total since a 264.41 million-share day last June 27.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $20.51 billion, or 0.72 percent, in value.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Oman prepared to reduce oil exports

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Omani Oil Minister Saeed Al-Shanfari said Monday his country was ready to reduce its oil exports to help stabilize world oil prices following a meeting between OPEC and independent oil producers last week.

The minister's pledge was made in a statement to his country's Arabic-language daily Oman and broadcast by Muscat Radio, monitored in Bahrain.

Meanwhile, Syria said it plans to boost its oil exports from 80,000 barrels a day in 1988 to around 130,000 to 140,000 barrels a day this year.

Oman's announcement followed a meeting last week in London between oil experts from six OPEC countries and 13 non-OPEC countries.

"Oman is ready to reduce its exports within the framework of a general agreement for oil producers outside OPEC," Shanfari was quoted as saying. He did not give any percentage.

World Oil predicts domestic drilling increase

HOUSTON (AP) — Oil and gas drilling in the United States should stage a modest increase this year if prices average $15 per barrel for West Texas Intermediate crude and $1.75 per thousand cubic feet of natural gas, according to an annual survey by World Oil Magazine.

"But as usual, because of oil price uncertainty, the potential exists for a better year — or a worse one," the Houston-based energy trade publication said Friday, basing its comments on a survey of 23 major drilling companies and 220 independent operators in the United States.

World Oil's survey predicts drilling up 2.8 percent for 1989 to 34,120 wells, amounting to 175.2 million feet of hole, up four percent from last year.

The survey also forecast an average rig count of 975, up from the 937 average of the past two years.

TIPRO applauds 'core supply' resolution

AUSTIN (SWN) — The introduction of a House Concurrent Resolution urging President Bush to formulate and implement a national energy policy based on TIPRO's idea of maintaining a domestic energy "core supply" is the first step toward honestly addressing the real energy needs of the United States, John E. Watson, president of the Texas Producers & Royalty Owners Association said.

"We hope President George Bush will act on his expressed concern for maintaining a 'core supply' of domestic petroleum production and use his authority to assure that 'core supply' is preserved," Watson said.

TIPRO has defined the petroleum portion of a "core supply" of energy as being the production of natural gas, natural gas liquids and crude oil at a rate equal to 20 million barrels per day equivalent — the average level of domestic production during 1980-1985 when a reasonable balance between foreign petroleum imports and U.S. production was maintained.

The House resolution — introduced by U.S. Rep. Mike Andrews, D-Houston, and co-sponsored by several members of both parties — would, if adopted, express that it is the sense of Congress that the president should implement a national energy policy based on the "core supply" concept as "an economic and national security imperative."

Price turnaround benefits Permian Partners

HOUSTON (SWN) — Permian Partners L.P. reported results for the quarter ended Dec. 31, and full payment of quarterly cash distributions to Preference Unitholders.

Net income for the quarter totaled $368,000 on revenues of $493,852,000. This resulted in a year-end total revenue of $2,288,685,000 with a net loss of $14,657,000. This turnaround from previous quarters is a result of an improved market related to significantly increased crude oil prices. The posted price for West Texas Intermediate climbed from a low in October of $12.75 to $16.00 per barrel at year end.

James E. Haas, Permian's chairman commented, "It is gratifying to see the improvement to earnings related to increases in the posted price and the increases in demand for domestic crude that we have witnessed in recent weeks.

"Beyond this, the increase in price bodes well for creating a climate that could provide a much needed incentive to increase drilling activity in our market area," Haas said.

MEETING PEOPLE

NOTICE TO MEETING PEOPLE ADVERTISERS

Midland Reporter-Telegram Classified is pleased to offer this unique feature at no cost to you, however, we do ask that you acknowledge all replies as a courtesy to the respondents. This will enable us to continue this feature at no cost to others, like yourself, who desire to meet people with similar interests. Thank you.

ATTRACTIVE grandmother who likes to dance, go to movies, dine out, travel, evenings at home, cooking out, and companionship. Would like to meet attractive male age 50 - 72 to go out with.(MP-101)

NEW to Midland, single, slim, stylishly attractive 49 year old lady with wit, warmth, sense of humor and busy career who enjoys a nice lifestyle, walks, movies, reading, sunset, theatre, dancing, fun people, sight seeing, traveling and would like to meet Mr. Terrific (MP-102)

HEY GUYS. Attractive, vivacious professional female in her early 40's desires to make new acquaintances. I'm fun loving, and have a variety of interests, but my job keeps me socially isolated. Fat pocket book not important, but good sense of humor, sincerity, intelligence, and warmth are. Let's see if we have any common interests. Would love to hear from you! (MP-103)

MALE, mid 30's, professional with graduate degree, loves traveling, music, tennis, and yard work. Too shy to meet women at bars and not extreme enough to meet women at church functions. Would like to meet someone bright, kind, tolerant, opinionated and attractive. Someone who would be comfortable at a ballet. Someone happy enough to be a good friend. (MP-104).

SINGLE white female, 30, no children, master's degree, professional. I drink, smoke, love reading (favorite authors: Larry McMurtry, Stephen King, John Irving), rodeo, C&W music, dancing, snow/water skiing, summer pool lounging, cowboys. Prefer well educated people with no children. I'm blond, 5'8", and 125 lbs. (MP-106)

HEAVY set, neat Christian lady, 50's with nice personality. Would like to become acquainted with intelligent healthy caucasian single man. Love to travel, enjoy learning new things and I play fourty-two. (MP-139)

SINGLE Male 40, stable lifestyle & job. Enjoys health-oriented physical hobbies, golf, weight training, bicycling, dancing, enjoys music & reading. cleancut & decent looking. Interested in sharing relation with special lady between 28 and 40. (MP-117)

NICE looking, caring, white female who enjoys dancing, laughing, and quite evenings. Would like to meet men 21 -28 for romantic relationship. Send photo and phone number when responding please. All replies will be answered. (MP-132)

WOULD like to meet a man 60 -72. Someone to watch TV, talk to and a good friend who is as lonely as myself. I don't go much only to work, I drive & own my home. Would like to share visits & etc. Hope to hear for you. (MP-133)

WOULD like to meet a middle aged male. I'm also middle aged. I work and don't get a chance to meet anyone. I'm a white female, I like almost all sports & County & Western music. I would like to meet someone as lonely as myself. (MP-134)

DEAR MS. "X"? My work schedule has not allowed our paths to cross, but perhaps, this letter will do that. I am not an Arnold Swartzenager nor am I another Danny Devito. I'm at the ripe age of 36, my X-wife has caused some pre-mature graying. Write me a letter so we can meet and share some conversation and companionship. (MP-135)

ATTRACTIVE, full figured widow in early 60's has sense of humor. Many interesting hobbies, pleasant personality. GOOD HEALTH and lots of affection for the right gentleman. Are you single, male, caucasian, with similar interests, in GOOD HEALTH and don't use tobacco, drugs, or excess alcohol? Are you interested? Write today - all letters answered promptly. Full length photo welcome but not necessary. (MP-129).

TO RESPOND TO A MEETING PEOPLE AD

Any ad published in the Meeting People feature can be contacted through the mail. Simply do the following: Each ad has a code number at the bottom. (example MP-101). Put each response in a separate envelope with the code number in the bottom left hand corner, affix the proper postage and seal the envelope. Enclose your envelope(s) and payment of $3.00 per response in a larger envelope, seal it, and affix stamp. Mail larger envelope to:

We will keep all letters sent without the proper forwarding fee for eight days, after which time they will be destroyed.

MALE, 40, lonely would like to meet single lady 35-42 for fun and romance Bowling & fishing are some my interest. Phone & picture with reply (MP-158)

ATTRACTIVE female would like to meet an attractive male 26-35 who likes C&W music and movies. Please submit a photo and phone number when responding. (MP-145)

ROSES are red violets are blue. Need companionship and maybe its you. I am caucasian female in my 20's. I enjoy children and love the outdoors. I love Chows and playing pool; drinking mixed drinks and just shooting the bull. Easy to get along with typical class clown. Write me I won't let you down. (MP-146)

DIVORCED caucasian male, 41, 6'1", blue eyes ready to start life over again. Love to travel, stay at home, work around home & yard, hunting, fishing, movies & more. Wish to meet women 33-45 who want lifetime commitment. Reply with interests, type of work you do, phone number and photo is if you have one. (MP-147)

30 YEAR old professional male seeks female for discreet romantic relationship. I am slim, energetic, romantic and fun loving with a good sense of humor. If you need a little T.L.C., please write me. (MP-148)

WOULD like to hear from single people of all ages to exchange ideas on how to cope with some of the dilemmas of being single in West Texas, (divorce, widowhood, single parenting, etc.) Maybe get your "input" on possibilities of organizing a free (or dirt cheap) singles club. (MP-149)

ATTRACTIVE white male 46, loyal 17 years raised two sons. I am single four months, have nice home in Midland, been tested for aids and any other thing so new friend will be at ease. I like to dance, I don't drink or smoke. I am truly a women's partner, completely strait, affectionate, 6' and trim. (MP-124)

MALE 23 years, look younger, brown hair, hazel eyes, and slim build. Hobbies include sports, music & stereo. I have a great sense of humor, easy to get a long with, from quiet nights alone to just about anything and also a non-smoker. (MP-125)

WANT to meet white family-oriented man, 38-48, who enjoys C&W dancing, travel, sports, cooking out and cozy evenings. Someone who sincerely desires a friend and companion. Smoker and social drinker okay. I am warm, witty, professional, attractive, well-educated, fun-loving, 5'6", green-eyed blond, single mom, 37. I hope you will write me soon. (MP-142)

PROFESSIONAL, well-educated woman, age 44, would like to meet interesting man, age 45-50, who likes variety; from tennis & aerobics to movies & theatre, from football to bridge & backgammon, no avid non-smokers please! Want caring, trusting relationship that could lead to marriage. (MP-143)

ATTRACTIVE, energetic, mature working woman interested in meeting personable man over 35 who has a good sense of humor. I like to travel, dance, cook, walk in the rain, build fires in the fireplace and watch football games. Would love to play golf and oil paint. Photo appreciated. (MP-144)

CAUCASIAN female, employed and in good health, 5'4", and not overweight. I desire to meet caucasian male in early or mid-fifties. Must be Christian, non-smoker, non-drinker, must enjoy home life, even the yard work, and like to go places. Object is friendship and maybe dinner or theater. (MP-126)

WELL, it's worth a try! Attorney, single mom, mid-thirties, loves to dance, jog, read, enjoy 'quiet times'. I would love to meet and get to know: professional man 30's-50, who values friendship, honesty and open communication, has good sense of humor and wants to 'celebrate life' with an optimistic, mature, caring, sincere woman. (MP-130).

I would like to meet an elderly man on S.S. or whatever for friendship with no bad habits and gets as lonely as me. I'm in my sixties. I do drive and work and own my home. I like country music, almost all sports. Sure would like to hear from you: Midland, Odessa and Stanton area. (MP-131).

ATTRACTIVE, creative, warm, witty, articulate, young at heart, romantic, well-educated woman, non-smoker, seeks single man over 55 with sense of humor, romance, zest for life, positive attitudes to share my love of travel, ghost towns, bookstores, theatre, people and other of life's treasures. (MP-129).

INTERESTED in meeting people my age, 24, or prefer any college age. Very open! If you would to know more about my deafness or I recall myself hard of hearing. No problem communicating. If you would like I can teach you sign. I just want to make new friends around Midland. I'm also interested in racquetball, running and soccer. (MP-127)

SINGLE female in early 40's would like to meet single male who are interested in outdoor activities such as golf and snow skiing, but have a romantic side too. (MP-105).

WOULD like to meet a respectable christian gentlemen 60 - 65, about 6 ft. tall and in good health. Who would enjoy art, reading, flowers, conversation, cooking, church and travel. I am 5'10" and age 60, respond so we can meet. (MP-108)

ARE there any females out there who wouldn't mind an inner-racial relationship? If so, I'm 6', cute but not conceited, young and professional minded. I enjoy sports, dancing, and short trips. I don't drink or smoke, but can party. All young females that want a little color to brighten their life. Please respond. (MP-150)

IF you are a classy, stream-lined uninhibited, articulate educated lady who already has it made financially, who prefers fishing to dancing, who likes to share cooking in and dinning out alternating and couch potato football, mingled with quality romance, try me. No alcohol, tobacco users please. I'm 54, under 6', healthy, educated, positive ambitious, caucasian, plain and country. (MP-151)

I'M new in Midland, 29 year old male, I smoke, but don't drink. I read science fiction vpracously and I am very interested in PC's. I abbor most physical exercise and I love to cook and eat. I'm looking for friends and intimates approximately my age with similar interests. (MP-152)

WHAT MAKES GLENWOOD SPECIAL?

This is a question we often hear from applicants. Here are some of the reasons that Glenwood employees say makes Glenwood special.

"Good management, I feel more secure in my job here."
"I have an opportunity to grow here, both professionally and personally."
"Value - that's it. I'm valued here because of the high quality of my work."
"It just feels good to be able to do something good for others."

Glenwood has gained the respect of the community, and because of the commitment we share in being the primary mental health referral center for the Permian Basin, we're growing! Glenwood currently has opportunities for professionals in the following fields:

Registered Nurses - Full-time and PRN positions now available for all shifts. We provide a transition course to psychiatric nursing. Requires current Texas licensure.

Occupational Therapist - An opportunity to plan and implement a complete occupational therapy program and still maintain direct patient contact. Requires a bachelor's degree and current state certification.

Medical Office Assistant - Working in a truly pleasant office environment, this full-time position requires a minimum of one year experience in a medical office, using good office skills of typing, transcription, computer input, and telephone communications.

Lab Technician - A full-time position for a certified lab tech, responsible for all lab operations.

Administrative Assistant - Requires experience in Human Resources, including worker's compensation, recruitment, and benefits; computer/word processing experience a must.

CD Counselor - A full-time position now available. Current C.A.D.A.C. certification preferred; a C.I.T. will be considered dependent upon training status.

We offer competitive salaries and benefits including medical, dental, AD&D and life insurance, federal credit union, sick leave, vacation, profit sharing and savings, and employee stock purchases. And that's just the beginning!

Give Glenwood a call. It could mean a change for the better in your career.

Saddle Club

Chris-

Just wanted to drop you a line to let you know I'm all settled into my new spot at Saddle Club Apartments. And it's just fantastic! This place has everything I need and even more! I never imagined that apartment living could be like this, or I would have moved here months ago. Spacious and affordable. Private, but the people are really friendly. And the amenities are out of this world!

Give me a call soon. Or drop by sometime-I'm sure you'll enjoy it. Life at Saddle Club Apartments is simply...GREAT!
