C. of C. Establishes Travel Bureau

The Chamber of Commerce office is establishing a Travel Bureau for the benefit of the tourists who come thru Lamesa, and also our local people who are taking trips into other sections. The bureau will contain official state highway maps of every state in the Union and descriptive literature of all of the great resorts, parks, historical places, and many of the larger cities. Highway maps and literature from Mexico and Canada will also be available.

Information as to road conditions, shortest routes, and other general travel news, may be obtained through the office. Official time table and schedules of the bus lines, railroads and airways are being obtained and will be available to those who desire such information.

It is the wish of the Chamber of Commerce manager that the people of this locality take advantage of this service and is asking that when our visitors come to town and are seeking information that they be directed to the Chamber of Commerce office. Meeting on New Farm Legislation Is Scheduled June 7th

Leaders of farm organizations from all over the United States recently met in Washington to frame an improved farm program. The proposed new legislation would replace the present farm program which was enacted in 1936 to operate for a period of two years. A meeting will be held at Big Spring, Monday, June 7th, at 10:00 a. m. for the purpose of discussing and explaining the provisions of the new bill. Representatives of the Texas Agricultural Association will be present at the meeting to discuss the new bill. A committee from Texas Agricultural Association represented the interests of the Texas farmers when the bill was framed in Washington.

The new bill is of vital interest to every business man and farmer of Dawson county, and as many as possible should attend the meeting at Big Spring. Farm leaders feel that this bill is the greatest thing ever proposed for farmers, and want everyone to have a thorough understanding of its provisions and operation.

The newly organized Dawson County Agricultural Association urges everyone interested to attend. The local association membership carries membership in the Texas Agricultural Association and affiliation with the Federal Farm Bureau Federation. It is the request of Joe M. Peterson, president, and T. D. Randle, secretary-treasurer, that as many as possible of the local association members attend the meeting Monday.

Aims of the proposed new bill are: First—to secure and maintain parity prices on agricultural crops. Second—to maintain a normal supply through the ever normal granary plan in the interest of the consuming public. Third—to conserve the soil by adjusting production.

Some important points of the new bill are as follows: 1. Parity prices for farmers insuring parity purchasing power. 2. Soil building and soil conserving practices are required. 3. Diversion is required when the supply exceeds the normal demand. 4. Marketing quotas for all farmers so into effect when the supply exceeds normal by 15 percent. 5. Loans are available to cooperating farmers when the above quotas go into effect and when needed. 6. Adequate supplies are assured consumers at all times through adjusted production and the ver-normal granary plan at stable prices. 7. Contracts are made with farmers. The first one for a 3 year period. 8. Import tariff automatically reduced when prices go above parity. 9. The bases will be adjusted in accordance with tillable acreage, topography, type of soil, and production facilities. 10. Benefit payments will be materially increased so that farmers will attain parity.

At the present every part of the county has received plenty of moisture and what is needed now is some real summer weather which will allow those who have not yet planted to get a crop started, and growing crops would be materially benefitted by warmer weather.

Safety Unit of Highway Patrol To Be Here June 7th

Paying their second courtesy call in the past twelve months, the special trained unit of the Texas Highway Patrol will swing into this section beginning in June for one of their popular motor vehicle safety appliance check ups according to information made public here today by Captain W. W. Legge of the Lubbock district.

The flying squadron of good will and courtesy evangelists will arrive in this city on June 7 according to the Lubbock Patrol leader. A number of innovations have been added to the program this year including the big white radio and loud speaker equipped Patrol Ambulance which recently made a record run from Beaumont to New London school disaster with Sergeant Ross Dickey at the wheel.

The Patrol will spend three weeks in this district, will visit a dozen cities carrying their message of safety to motorists. The program is strictly one of courtesy and is designed to assist motorists in keeping check of their brakes, lights, horn, muffler, steering gear and windshield visibility.

We received such wholehearted cooperation from the officials and citizenship of this district last year that members of the Patrol were extremely anxious to return," Captain Legge stated, adding that "we expect to find a much lower percentage of defective cars as compared to the first program held in this section in 1936. I am informed from Chief Phares at Austin that 36 cities are now on the waiting list for this program and I feel that we are fortunate in being able to bill the crew for Lubbock this early in the year. It will enable many vacation-bound motorists a splendid opportunity to receive a free check of their cars thus probably preventing many unnecessary accidents and possible tragic vacation sequences."

The following Lamesa firms are co-operating with the State Highway Department in sponsoring this safety drive: Vaughn Chevrolet, Jack McLaughlin, Alamo Service Station, Arnett Motor Company, Morris and Martin, Key Motor Company, and Lamesa Auto Company.

Ministerial Ass'n To Hold Saturday Services

The Ministerial Association of Lamesa and county kindly request the help of the citizens of the town and county in carrying this on; requesting the officers to help reserve this hour from three till four p. m. each Saturday on the court house lawn to be used by the Ministerial Association for this purpose.

We wish to thank all for your friendly cooperation in the past in this matter and ask your kind cooperation in the future. It is done for the benefit of the public, and it is to be carried on without any public collections. No one gets any money for any service rendered on these occasions.

CLUB MEMBERS IMPROVE HOMES BY REMODELING

Club Member to Improve Kitchen
Mrs. O. G. Kelly, president of the Fairview home demonstration club will improve her kitchen as demonstrator in the club. At present her kitchen is a space 9 by 12 feet, with a door leading on to a west porch, 2 half windows in the north side, a door leading on to an east porch, and a door leading to the dining room on the south.

The wall on the west end of the kitchen will be removed and the porch closed in to provide sufficient space in the kitchen to serve family meals. The old bought cabinet will be replaced by a more modern and efficient built-in cabinet; shelves on which numerous articles are now stored will be removed; the range will be replaced by an oil stove; the trips to and from the well will be eliminated by the installation of a sink; and the floor, woodwork and walls will be given suitable and attractive finishes. Such improvements will insure the preparation of meals with little friction.

Study Center Provided By Demonstrator

"I have located a table that I can use for my study center," remarked Marie Duff, bedroom demonstrator in the Klondike 4-H club. The table was on the verge of being junked when Marie made inquiry about using it. Giving it to her was good riddance of bad rubbish. When it is reworked and refinished, it will make an attractive and useful piece of furniture for the bedroom. At the table will be placed all writing materials and a book or two.

Boxes Help To Solve The Problem of Clothing Storage

The problem of keeping adequate space for the storage of clothing in current use is being met by Mrs. R. W. Mitchell, wardrobe demonstrator in the Klondike home demonstration club by the use of boxes. The winter clothing for herself and her husband will be mended, cleaned and wrapped in newspapers and placed in boxes. Each box will be labeled according to its contents. Clean it will kill all moth eggs, and the newspapers will keep out all moths. They dislike the ink.

Has Hand Woven Coverlet 100 Years Old

Helen Balch, bedroom demonstrator in the Munger 4-H club, will have a "standard" bed as will all demonstrators, but a spread which is much different. Her bed will be covered with a handwoven coverlet that is more than 100 years old.

A standard bed means meeting the following requirements: Bedstead in good condition, box type of springs and completely covered, a slat for each row of coils in the springs, a comfortable mattress and mattress pad, a mattress cover, four sheets 3 yards in length, four pillow protectors and four pillow cases, warm light weight covering and a suitable spread.

Mrs. J. L. Kidd talked of accidents in the kitchen; Mrs. O. W. Neill the dangerous bedroom; and Mrs. W. P. Davis on special child hazards.

The next meeting will be in the home of Mrs. R. C. Moore at 3 o'clock June 9. Miss Phenix will be present to give a demonstration on kitchen utensils and their care.—Reporter.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL

This is to certify that my little boy, 6 years old, had the flu, then measles, then contracted pneumonia for 10 days in both lungs. Then inflammation set up and the doctor advised me to take him to Lamesa and have the inflammation drawn off. I decided to take him to Dr. Shoulitz and just before I got to Dr. Shoulitz I thought he was dying as did Mr. and Mrs. Crapp. Dr. Shoulitz examined him and told me he would see what he could do for him and if he did not see some change in a short time he would leave it up to me, but thank the Lord it wasn't but a few minutes until he began to get relief and in less than 24 hours the pneumonia was broken and his temperature went down, and he has gotten better every day from the start. I have had him here nine days and am taking him home feeling fine. I think if Dr. Shoulitz can handle cases like this in as short a time, you sufferers would not make a mistake in giving him a trial.

May Old Age Assistance Checks Ready

With May checks for approximately 126,000 needy aged ready for mailing, payments this month are being delayed until the Federal Grant is received from Washington, W. A. Little, acting director of the Old Age Assistance Commission reported today.

"Our understanding is that the Social Security Board is waiting for a deficiency appropriation from Congress and that all the other states are in the same position that we are in. We will mail the May assistance checks immediately upon receipt of the Federal matching funds. This might be in a day or so, or it might be a week before the grant reaches Austin. When you consider that more than 100,000 needy aged are waiting for their assistance warrants to pay grocers, rental agents, etc., the seriousness of this delay becomes apparent. I ask that people who deal with the aged give them due consideration until the checks can be released," Little said.

He added that the federal money is generally received between the first and tenth of the month. He said that the Texas share of May payments is waiting in the State Treasury.

"Our grant has been approved already for the April-May-June quarter, and we have received and disbursed funds for April. But we have heard nothing of the May-June part of the allotment," he declared.

The approved grant for the April-May-June quarter totals $2,539,807.73 and the April third of it already received and disbursed was $846,602.58.

Mr. Dyess is leading the singing in the revival meeting at the First Methodist church. Rev. J. E. Kenby, who is doing the preaching in the revival, was also a visitor with the club.

Miss Pauline Bulsterbaum, county school superintendent, was the principal speaker for the luncheon, and gave some interesting facts about the rural school system in the county. Miss Bulsterbaum stated that there are 26 rural schools in the county, employing a total of 96 teachers, and involving an annual expenditure of about $90,000. She further stated that there are two affiliated rural high schools in the county, Klondike and Ackerly, and that Klondike has 17½ credits and Ackerly 16. Both are four year high schools. Seven rural schools in the county are applying for standardization this year. Thirteen buses are operated by the schools in the county.

BORDEN COUNTY FARM AND RANCH NEWS

By E. R. McLeroy, County Agent

Weldon Street, 4-H club member of the Mesquite community, has purchased a feeder calf from the A. M. Clayton herd in Borden County. This calf will be fed along with several choice feeders of Weldon's selections from his father's herd of Hereford cattle. Weldon is beginning his third year of beef calf feeding, and has shown a clear profit on both previous feeding projects during the past two years.

R. R. Lancaster, Pasture Specialist of the Texas Extension Service was a visitor in Borden County during the past week. Mr. Lancaster spent all of one day gathering types of plants and obtaining information relative to range conditions in the county.

Clifford Thompson, State Performance Engineer was also a visitor in Borden County last week. Mr. Thompson is supervisor of plane table mapping of farms in this area in connection with the Agricultural Conservation program.

Another general rain over Borden County has made it possible for planting of crops to proceed without further delay. The government rain gauge at Gall registered 63 inches over the past week. Two inches of rain were reported at Mesquite and 1.75 at Berry Flat.

Preparations are being made to handle an outbreak of grasshoppers in Borden County. A shipment of 14 tons arsenite will be received within the next few weeks to be used in mixing of sawdust and 180 gallons of sodium poison bait for grasshopper control. A central mixing station will be established in Gall in the event of a serious infestation of grasshoppers within the county. The supplies of sawdust and poison are being furnished to counties in this area through Federal aid in Grasshopper Control.

Lions Club In Regular Meeting

The Lions Club met at its regular meeting Wednesday noon, at the Plaza Hotel, with 26 members and visitors present. Estelle Billingsley gave a reading and sang a solo. Tony Dyess, who is directing the singing at the First Methodist church during the revival sang two solos accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Carl Rountree.

A report of the nominating committee was read, and announcement was made that the report would be voted on next Wednesday, at which time other nominations could be made from the floor. Joe Matthews was presented as a new member and received the Lions badge, at which time the initiation ceremony was performed.

Miss Georgia Mae Williams, who has been attending Texas State College for Women at Denton, is here to spend the summer with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Williams.

SUPERFEX

THE "MIRACLE" REFRIGERATOR FOR RURAL HOMES

USES NO ELECTRICITY
...no running water
...has no moving parts
...makes cold from kerosene

Just touch a match to the burners once each day. That's all you have to do. Everything else is automatic. Your foods stay safely cold. You can freeze a plentiful supply of ice cubes—make unusual chilled salads and frozen desserts. And it's all done so quietly and at such little expense that you can scarcely believe your own eyes.

Burners in use about 2 hours to produce 24 hours or more of refrigeration Superfex makes cold by burning kerosene and uses very little of it. The burners stay lighted for about two hours, then go out automatically. This makes all the cold you need for a whole day and night! Superfex, with its short burning time, brings you modern refrigeration in its most economical form.

8 years on the market

Though you may now be reading about Superfex for the first time, it has been on the market for more than eight years. And those that were bought at the very beginning are still operating as efficiently as they did when new. But that's not at all surprising. Superfex has no moving parts. Not a single one! It's built to last a lifetime. And this year's models are greatly improved—they are still more efficient—still more convenient—still more beautiful. Their modern design and cream-white porcelain finish go perfectly with any kitchen decorative scheme. And the shelves are adjustable; you can move them about to accommodate even the largest turkey!

New Drivers' Law Signed by Governor

A remodeled drivers' license law, signed by Governor Allred Thursday put in the hands of the public safety department a new weapon for its war against street and highway traffic accidents.

The bill, authorizing suspension or revocation of licenses after a hearing before a court of competent jurisdiction and requiring examination after a 90-day period of all new applicants for licenses, became effective when the Governor affixed his signature.

Persons applying for the first time for licenses within the 90-day period can qualify by giving evidence of satisfactory operation of an automobile for at least a year. It was said unofficially that an affidavit to this effect would be sufficient but final determination of policy remained with the Public Safety Commission.

The department must institute suspension or revocation proceedings within 20 days after an offense.

Offenses subject to such action were convictions of negligent homicide, driving while intoxicated, failure to render aid and offenses, previously excluded, as follows: responsibility for any accident resulting in death, personal injury to another or serious property damage; habitual recklessness or negligence; habitual violation of traffic laws; incompetency in driving; unlawful or fraudulent use of licenses, and commission of offenses in another State which if committed in Texas would be grounds for suspension or revocation.

A license may not be suspended for more than a year and drivers have the right to appeal within 30 days except where suspension is mandatory.

The law provides that tax assessors and collectors issue renewal licenses under supervision of the department.

New applicants must submit without cost to an examination including test of eyesight and knowledge of traffic rules and show reasonable ability to operate a car.

Renewals may be secured with-out examination and additional cost.

The law more clearly defines a chauffeur and requires such operators must display a badge plainly upon cap or lapel.

STATE HIGHWAY SAFETY LANE Next Week --- Here

That means State Highway Patrolmen will be in Lamesa stopping and checking all cars to determine whether or not they are safe to operate on our streets and highways. We believe it's a very fine idea.

They will probably test your brakes, lights, horn, windshield wiper, and other things. If they find them O. K. they give you a nice little safety certificate to that effect. If they find anything wrong, they send you to a repair shop to make it right, and ask that you come back for another test. This is all to help you and make our highways safer.

Why not wear the certificate of approval on your windshield? Why not let us check your car thoroughly before the rush starts.

Particularly do we say:

Sen. Connally Favors Extending Low Interest on Farm Loans

Washington, D. C., May 31.—Senator Tom Connally declared early this week that he will actively urge the extension of the 3½ per cent interest rates on certain federal land bank farm loans.

House Bill Number 6763, which would extend the 3½ per cent interest rate, has been favorably reported to the House of Representatives. Unless this or some similar bill is passed before July 1st, the interest rate on such loans will automatically revert to the original higher rate of 4½ to 5 per cent.

Senator Connally's views on the matter are set forth in the following statement:

"I strongly favor and shall insist upon the passage of a bill to continue and extend the 3½ per cent interest rate on federal land bank farm loans. It would be utterly unwise to increase the interest rate on loans to the Federal Land Banks at this time. One of the greatest services which the government can render is to make it easy for farmers to become owners of the land which they till. The establishment of farm homes ought to be one of the cardinal policies of the federal government. Those farmers who have purchased homes and have loans on them in the federal land bank are making earnest efforts to complete their payments and become the absolute owners of the land upon which they live.

"The government can afford to continue the 3½ per cent interest rates on such loans. By doing so it may enable farmers to meet interest payments and to also pay a portion of the principal indebtedness. To increase the interest rate at this time would have the opposite effect.

"In the Senate I shall advocate strongly the enactment of the bill providing for the extension of the 3½ per cent rate."

Mr. Skeet Noret, Lamesa, Texas. Dear Skeet:

I have just learned through a Texas newspaper that you are to attend the Boy Scout Jamboree in Washington.

The other day I attended a breakfast in honor of the forthcoming Jamboree which was presided over by Senator McAdoo, Honorary Vice President of the Boy Scouts of America. Mr. James E. West was present, and everyone seemed to be looking forward to a great time in Washington during the meeting.

My office is in the New House Office Building, Room 1009, telephone number National 3120, Extension 754. The telephone at my place of residence is Decatur 0800, Extension 628.

I note in the paper that others from Lamesa are planning to come to Washington and I am writing them too.

Resurrection River

By William Byron Mowery

© William Byron Mowery, WNU Service.

CHAPTER I—Warren Lovett, thirty-three, junior partner in the powerful Wellington, Parkes & Lovett, Incorporated Mines of Chicago, which engages in questionable transactions, plans to make a secret coup in the Canadian Arctic, where a few years before a rich but inaccessible mining field has been discovered on Resurrection river, which flows into Dynamite Bay. Patricia, high spirited and beautiful daughter of crusty old Jasper Wellington, who is engaged to Warren, decides to accompany him. Over her father's objections, he agrees to take her. They go by plane. Pat meets "Poleon," a French-Canadian prospector who tells her there are only 300 prospectors in the field and that they are hanging on by a thread.

The Story
She had expected to plunge in and help Warren with his work; but he had politely refused to let her help him or to tell her a single word about his business there on Resurrection. It wounded Patricia very deeply to discover that Warren was holding out on her. He and she had been together almost a solid week, on the long trip, yet she knew no more about his secret mission than she had known in Chicago. She had tried earnestly to break down that sense of strangeness between them, but so far she had miserably failed.

She cared little about the mission itself, she only wanted him to be open and warm and honest with her. But she did want that dreadfully, and his evasive silence hurt. Instead of reading, she lay in the hammock in a reverie mood, staring up at the apple-green Arctic sky. Down at Chicago she had thought about Resurrection river, and now on Resurrection she was thinking about Chicago, brooding about it and her life there.

Toward six o'clock she slid out of the hammock and wandered down to the bank of Resurrection, to find Poleon St. Jacques and have him take her on a little "slumming expedition."

"If you can spare a couple of hours, Poleon," she said, "I'd like for you to take me across the river. I'll pay you for the trouble, of course."

"Why, you don't need pay me nutting, Mees Pat. I take you over dere as a frien', jus' lag if I come to Cheecago you take me 'round as a frien'."

Poleon set a near-by canoe to water, handed her in, and with a heave and a cheery "Allons!" he sent the craft dancing out upon Resurrection.

It was a perfect summer day, lazily warm and golden. Butterflies flitted past the canoe, and over the water a legion of dragonflies were snatching up mosquitoes in their trapdoor jaws. Although late evening by clock time, the sun stood as high in the sky as at noon in Chicago. Patricia knew, rationally, that she was in the land of the midnight sun and that there would be no sunset for several weeks; but night had always been so infallible an event that she didn't quite believe it wasn't going to arrive.

The canoe approached the north shore.

Up the beach 300 yards was a cluster of large cabins—the wireless station, land office, Mounted Police buildings and Hudson Bay store.

Poleon skirled the canoe deftly ashore, grounded it, handed Patricia out, and they walked up the bank.

"Heavens, what a hodgepodge!" Patricia thought as she glanced down the camp. The whole place was a disorganized confusion of tents, smoldering fires, men, canoes and chained-up dog teams. In comparison with the two Ontario rushes which she had seen, this camp looked gone to seed. No paths, unsightly refuse everywhere, no organization, no esprit de corps and the men moving about here and there seemed half-hearted, discouraged. Over the whole place hung an air of poverty and defeat.

She asked Poleon, "Am I just imagining things or are these men in the dumps?"

"You're dead right, Mees Pat; dese feller dey are on de dumps. You see dey been here at Dynamite Bay mebbe two, mebbe four year, and all dat tam dey been have to scrape along on leetle or no money, 'cause dey have no chance to trap or trade. Dey're real men, dey're tough outfeet as you never saw, but dey're jus' about ready to give up."

"Why don't they take time off and make some money and get back on their feet again?"

"They didn't dare take time off. Poleon explained. A man had to do 15 days work a year on each claim he held or it would revert to the Crown. Since most of the prospectors owned ten or more claims, it took constant labor and the hardest kind of sacrifice merely to hang on to their holdings."

At the first tent they approached, a tall rawboned prospector was tossing whitefish to his team of huskies. He was in an undershirt and clumsily patched trousers, his hair was unkempt, his face heavily stubbled.

"How do you do, Sam," Poleon greeted, "Mees Pat, dis is Sam Honeywell. Sam, dees is Mees Wellington."

Honeywell awkwardly bowed to Patricia and mumbled, "Pleased to meet you, mam." Lacking Poleon's social ease, he was red-faced with embarrassment.

Presently she and Poleon went on down through the camp. Poleon kept introducing her to man after man till she finally had to make him stop. All of them were painfully embarrassed; all stared at her breeches and cigarette all were respectful in their rough frontier way.

The truth of Poleon's words, "dey're tough outfeet as you never saw," came forcibly home to her. For all their discouragement and raggedy clothes, here were men, real men, the pick of the North. All the weaklings had been weeded out.

It was at the east side of the camp that the incident of Bill Fornier came crashing into her slumming expedition like a thunderbolt.

She and Poleon had stopped to watch a group of men whom Loupe Chiwaughini, the leader of Warren's six metus, had recruited from among the prospectors. They were rolling drums of airplane gas onto a skiff. Patricia soon noticed that one of the men, a stocky weather-beaten miner, was in bad trouble of some sort. He kept wiping the perspiration out of his eyes, and occasionally a fierce gust of pain swept across his bulldog face.

All at once, as he started to push a drum up the skids, he caved in completely and sank down in a heap on the sand.

Poleon sprang in, rolled off the drum which had fallen back on the man's legs, and slipped an arm under his head.

"Steady, Bill," he soothed, as the

"Fashions for Men"

RESURRECTION RIVER (Continued from Front Page) man's eyes flickered open. "Everything's fine-dandy. Dose drum, dey too much for you to wrassle. Lemme take you back to your tent."

"You won't no such thing!" the man refused, weakly. "I can stock it. Soon as this spell kicks over, I'll cut the mustard okay. I got to, Poleon."

"Now, non, Bill! If you jus' got to leave dat money, I'll take your place in de res' of dis job."

Still shaking his head, the man slowly pulled himself together, got up, trudged to the lake edge, soused water over his tangled hair; then came back to the gang and doggedly set to work again.

"What's the matter with that fellow?" Patricia demanded, as Poleon rejoined her. "Is he drunk?"

"Sacrebleu, non! He seek, poor Bill is a terrible seek man, Mee Pat. It's his side of hem, here"—Poleon rubbed his stomach. "He can't get well, nevair timey, in three or four mont's, he got to die."

"But—but—" Patricia stammered,
"a man who's as sick as that—My Lord, no person should work when he's so sick that he keels over!"

"But Bill got to work, wedder he sle or non," Poleon told her. In a few words he explained Fornier's plight. Formerly a free-trader over Norman way, Bill had been stricken with cancer two years ago. Knowing that his days were numbered, he had left home and come across to Dynamite Bay in hopes that he could make a good strike and so not leave his wife and two little girls penniless.

He had staked five "fine-dandy" silver claims, Poleon said; but now he was going to lose them, for he was flat broke, and his assessment for that year was not completed. He was trying to scrape up a few dollars for grub money so that he could go back to his claims and work off the assessment on at least one or two of them. That was why he had hired out to Lupe Chiwaughimi that afternoon.

Wide wide eyes Patricia stared down at the landwash, at Bill Fornier, struggling with a drum of gas. Here was a man looking death in the face. Forced to do heavy labor with the pangs of death inside him. Getting up from a faint, joking about it, going back to work again when he could barely stumble around.

It seemed a bit ebashty. She had never known that such a thing existed in the world. She suddenly hated the whole camp, wished she never had seen it.

"Poleon!" she cried, whirling away.
"Take me back across the river!" But then she stopped in her tracks. She could go back to her hammock and book, but she would carry with her the picture of a sick man pushing a drum of gas onto a skiff. She could flee, could shut her eyes, but that picture would still haunt her.

She faltered, glanced again at Bill Fornier. An impulse shot into her mind. In that moment, without her knowing, she was stepping into a trap, was thrusting her foot into the more invisible, the crueler babasche, of Poleon's song.

"Go down there!" she commanded Poleon. "Go down and stop that fellow! Make him quit working!" She gave the bewildered Poleon a shove.
"Go on! Bring him up here to me! I want to talk to him."

Chapter III

In the dining tent around eleven o'clock that evening, Warren remarked, over their wine and cigarettes: "Lume Chiwaughimi told me that you gave a sum of money this afternoon, Patricia, to one of the prospectors across the river. If I may say so, indiscriminate charity like that is never wise."

"Good heavens, that wasn't indiscriminate charity! He's in an awfully bad hole, Warren."

"But when you give money outright to an individual, dear, you break down his initiative."

"Initiative be damned!" Patricia burst out, with a touch of anger. "In two or three months Bill Fornier will be dead and what good will this initiative do him then? Besides, anybody who'll work when he can't really stand up, he's got all the initiative he needs." Warren saw that she was angry, and he retreated tactfully. "Your act was very kind-hearted, dear, I'll admit.
But my point is that a very large number of those men over there are in difficulties, and if you start to take that whole camp under your wing—"

"Don't be silly, I don't want to ever see that crazy camp again. As a matter of fact, I'm thinking of going back home in a few days."

She expected Warren to object strongly, but to her surprise he did not object at all.

A few moments later, as he held a match to her cigarette, she asked him abruptly:

"Warren, why did you bring so much money along with you on this trip?"

"What money?"

"Down there in the Chiwaughimi tent. Why, it's a regular pirate's treasure trove! I looked into that chest and saw whole stacks of big yellow banknotes and piles of gold pieces.
You've got at least 50,000 in that trunk."

Warren hid a frown of vexation.
"How did you find out about this?"

"I was looking around in their tent, and Battu Chiwaughimi tried to keep me away from that chest, and that made me curious to know what was in it. So I ordered him to let me see."

Warren flicked the ashes from his cigarette and deliberated a moment.

"About this money, I can very easily—" "Don't!" Patricia stopped him. "I can tell by the tone of your voice that you are going to lie."

"Why, Patricia!" he remonstrated.
"That isn't a very nice word, d'you think?"

"Maybe not, but also it's not very nice of you to be so evasive with me."

"Evasive about what?"

"Your business here at Dynamite Bay!" she shot back. "You've got some big scheme up your sleeve and you won't tell me one truthful word about it."

"I've told you the truth, dear. If you won't believe me, I presume there's no use in my repeating it."

"There certainly isn't!" Patricia agreed; and they dropped that subject too.

Presently Warren remarked, eyeing Patricia narrowly. "I found out, just this afternoon, that there's a former acquaintance of yours here at this place."

Patricia looked up in surprise. "Of mine? Who?"

"You remember Tarlton, don't you—Craig Tarlton?"

Patricia started violently. "Here—at Dynamite Bay—Craig Tarlton?"

"Yes."

Aware of Warren's eyes upon her,
Patricia fought to hide her confusion.
She was ashamed of the tell-tale flush which had leaped to her cheeks, but her emotions were in such a whirl that she could not help herself. Craig Tarl-ton was here! She would meet Craig, see him once more! Here in the Arctic Circle she had suddenly run across him, after giving up the expectation of ever seeing him again.

In a few moments, when she could speak evenly, she asked, "What's he doing here, Warren?"

"He's the deputy mining inspector for this Resurrection district. I understand."

Patricia was thunderstruck. So obscure a job in so remote a territory—she could hardly believe it. The world, then, must have beaten Craig. All his brilliance, all his young genius, had come down to this—a routine hack job at a wretched salary.

Or was he a beaten man? It might not be so. He did strange things, Craig Tarlton.

As soon as she could get away she started for her own tent, to escape Warren's questioning eyes and be alone, where she could think more calmly. Her thoughts were still swirling dizzily. Craig was here! She was going to meet Craig again, after the long years.

At the door of her tent she stopped, stood wavering, torn between pride and a desire to see Craig again and see what the years had done to him.
Where was he living? How long had he been at the Bay? Could she somehow manage to meet him and make that meeting appear accidental?

Her thoughts leaped to Poleon, her standby during most of that day. Po-leon could help her.

She whirled impulsively and hurried down to the bank of the Resurrection.
Poleon was brewing tea over an open fire in front of his tent. Patricia accepted a cup, chatted casually a few moments, then led around to her topic.

"Poleon, I hear that your mining inspector is a man called Craig Tarlton.
Do you know him?"

"Out, out, we been close friends long tam, Craig and me."

"I know him too, Poleon. He used to be connected with my father's company."

"My goodness, dat so? Wen was dat?"

"Five—no, six years ago. He was one of our geologists, the youngest and most brilliant man on our staff. In fact he headed our Winnipeg department.
I met him at one of our house parties when he came down to Chicago; and after that I—I saw him—once or twice.
How long has he been here?"

"Four years, come fall."

Patricia shut her eyes in blinding despair. Four years of buried exile, four long years at this Arctic outpost —it meant that the world had beaten him.

She could have sobbed at the contrast between Craig's early genius and his obscurity now. That monumental treasure of his on the Archeozoic rocks of upper Huron—it had led to the discovery of the earliest known forms of life on earth; and he had written it at the age of twenty-three! And that radio "divining rod" which he had perfected while on her father's staff—the patent leases on it had brought in more than a million dollars for Wellington, Parks & Lovett since the time he contemptuously flung his invention at them and vanished.

"Poleon, is he around here now?
Where does he live?"

Poleon gestured across Resurrection.
"He live over dere beyon' de camp.
Right now I tink he doctoring Bill Fornier at Bill's tent."

He went on to tell her that Craig had taken Bill Fornier under his special care and was looking out for him.
It was Craig who had staked those "fine-dandy" silver claims for Bill, because Bill didn't know much about rocks.

How like Craig, Patricia thought, to mother this stricken prospector! How proud he was on the surface, with the pride of genius; but how warm of heart beneath, especially for the under-dogs.

"Take me over there, Poleon," she asked, reckless of consequences. "I want to—Craig and I were—I'd like to see him again. Won't you?"

"Sure, sure," Poleon agreed. "You being ole friend, I bet he lak to see you, too."

They floated Poleon's patched canoe, skirled across Resurrection, landed on the north bank, and walked back through the drogue of trees behind the prospectors' camp.

Poleon pointed at a large cabin up ahead, nestled in a little hollow and half-hidden by miniature pines.

"Dat's hees cabane dere, Mee Pat."

Patricia stopped. "You needn't go with me, Poleon," she bade. She wanted to see Craig alone, not knowing what might break between him and her. "Go back to Sam Honeywell's tent and wait for me, won't you, please?"

When Poleon was out of sight, she stepped behind a rock for a dab of powder and a hasty pat at her hair.
Then she went on toward the cabin, with slow hesitant footsteps. What would he think of her? And she of him? Most likely, she told herself, this meeting would be awfully flat. There was nothing quite so dead as a dead romance.

The little hollow was bare of timber except at the upper end where the cabin stood. Carpeted with reindeer moss, it was a riot of flower colors.
Under the perpetual sun, blue saxi-frage and lupine and Arctic poppies had sprung swiftly into blossom, seizing their few short weeks of summer to grow, bloom and seed.

Halfway up the hollow Patricia came to a granite boulder with the words "Arctic Circle" ciseled into it. A little thrill went through her. Suddenly reminded, she glanced at her wrist watch. Twelve o'clock, midnight—and the sun shining as goldenly as ever on the poppies and blue saxifrage!

A strange region, this Arctic land. "As certain as day and night" was a common saying throughout the world; but that axiom did not hold in this country. Day and night, those two infall-ibles, were not infallible here.

Stepping gingerly across the Arctic Circle, she went on to the cabin.

No one answered her knock. She rapped again. No answer. The door was open, so she stepped upon the threshold of Craig's home and looked inside.

The cabin was a one-room affair, but big and airy and light. Patricia caught the sweet smell of sawed pine logs, of which the cabin was built, and the rather pleasant odor of much pipe-smoking. In one corner stood a table holding a microscope in a glass cage, a delicate scales in another cage, a small assay outfit, an array of chemicals; and on the floor beside the table there was a full box of dynamite.

A wing-broken thrush, with its wing neatly splinted and bandaged, was hopping along the window ledge, pecking at bread crumbs which Craig had put there for it.

But it was Craig's books that struck Patricia's eyes. Walls, mantels, shelves and every conceivable niche overflowed with books.

With a strange quivering inside of her she turned to his pipe rack and looked hurriedly at the dozen old meerschaums, searching for the pipe which she had given him that time at God's lake. It was not there.

Through the south window she glimpsed a man coming up the little hollow, a tall rangy figure carrying a satchel like a doctor's. With a gasp she fled for the door. But she was too late—from the woods edge the man looked up and saw her in his doorway.

Intensely mortified that Craig had caught her intruding, she mustered up what courage she could, walked down toward the granite rock, and defiantly waited.

In the weird slant light of the midnight sun Craig Tarlton came on toward her. Often Patricia had fancied meeting him again, but never had she imagined that it would be in so far a land and so strange a place as this poopy hollow in the Arctic.

Beside the boulder that marked the Arctic Circle, Craig confronted her.
One long glance at his face, and all Patricia's fears that he was a man defeated went crashing to the ground.

No man with those penetrating eyes, with that air of personal might, could possibly be defeated. He was still Craig Tarlton, steady and more mature, but otherwise not greatly changed.

His outdoor life had made him hard and virile; and his face was weathered darkly by summer sun and winter blizzard. As usual in the old time, he was bareheaded. The black waves of his hair awoke a storm of memories in Patricia—a canoe, moon-silvered water, the night sounds of the wilderness, her fingers caressing those ripples of his hair. The very clothes he wore—were like those he had worn at God's lake. Everything about him brought back poignant recollections of that God's lake idyll.

"How d'you do?" Craig said coldly, as though to a stranger.

Patricia fought down her trembling emotions. "I—I'm sorry I intruded."

"I resigned because I didn't like the deal that your father was putting across on those Flin-Flon operating companies, Miss Wellington."

Patricia noticed the "Miss." Was he rebuking her for using his personal name?

"Yes, I knew about your run-in with dad, Craig; but why did that keep you from writing to me?"

"I saw no occasion for writing you," he returned bluntly. "You, the haughty heiress, ordered me to forget about God's lake—and I did."

With her girl's pride smarting, Patricia flung back at him, "Well, so did I forget it!" She was seized with an impulse to cut him cold and leave. But she could not force herself to turn away. Instead she made a last desperate bid for a token of warmth from him. "Craig, we don't have to be enemies, do we, because we once were —were friends?" It was on her lips to tell him how bitterly she had regretted that quarrel and how she had moped for a year afterward; but pride kept her from confessing that. "I've often thought about you, Craig, and tried to find out something about you. What have you been doing since you left Winnipeg that time? Mr. Parks told me something about a metallurgy process that you invented, and which made you a great deal of money. You went out west, didn't you?"

Craig answered with a laconic brief-ness. "Yes, west, Vancouver. That was drink of water, and no one answered

"Or were you 'slumming' as you were this afternoon in the camp?" Craig asked.

The case with which he spiked her lie made Patricia angry—at him and at herself. She hated people who could read her, and Craig seemed to be reading her through and through.

"Yes, I was—I was slumming!" she snapped. "I wanted to see whether or not you'd gone native or not."

"And what did you conclude?"

"I concluded that you hadn't."

"Thanks," Craig said dryly.

She waited for him to say something more. To invite her into his cabin. But he did not. It seemed he did not even care to stay and chat with her, for he kept the satchel in his hand instead of putting it down. There was no warmth or friendliness whatsoever in his attitude; no remembrance at all of those twenty days at God's lake. As Patricia met his eyes she was suffused with shame, anger and humiliation.

How could he stand there and look at her so coldly, as though he and she had never seen each other before?
Surely this meeting had brought that hauntingly beautiful interlude back to him. Surely he must be thinking and remembering that he had been her first lover.

She strove to make him talk to her.
"I've always wanted to ask you, Craig, why you resigned from our staff so suddenly. I was thunderstruck when I heard about it." She confessed candidly. "I came back from Italy. I wrote you, I apologized for my picking that quarrel of ours; but you were gone, no one knew where."

"I resigned because I didn't like the deal that your father was putting
