Confession

WASHINGTON — Former world champion boxer Sugar Ray Leonard acknowledged Saturday that he resorted to cocaine and alcohol in the early 1980s after an eye injury appeared to end his boxing career. Leonard, 34, who has appeared in nationally broadcast anti-drug public service announcements, said he indulged in cocaine for three years, quitting in early 1986. "It was wrong, it was childish, it was stupid," he said at a news conference.

KING OF PRUSSIA, Pa. — Solid-waste recycling is now at a crucial point in terms of its long-term viability, according to William D. Ruckelshaus, the chairman of Browning-Ferris, one of the largest trash haulers in the country. The public enthusiastically supports the concept at the moment, and that support is reflected in laws intended to prod industries to use more recycled materials. That increase in demand is prompting an increase in collections and the development of processing plants like the one in King of Prussia, Penn. "Economics will take over and the system will be self-sustaining," he said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Weatherman Willard Scott plans to take a break from watching the skies to announce the stars at a Grand Ole Opry show in Detroit. Scott will join Opry performers Ricky Skaggs, Minnie Pearl, Bill Monroe and Holly Dunn for a show at Detroit's Fox Theater on Thursday, Opry spokesman Tom Adkinson said Saturday. The show is the first of a rare 10-state Opry tour. The Opry normally is presented in Nashville, where the country music program has originated since 1925. As guest announcer, Scott, the weatherman on NBC's "Today" show, will introduce performers as they take the stage. "Just love the Opry," Scott said. "This is a dream come true actually to be part of the show."

Day of renewal

■ At St. Peter's Basilica in Rome, the pope celebrates Easter.

By Mary Beth Sheridan
Associated Press Writer

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II presided over the lighting of a special Easter candle in a darkened St. Peter's Basilica on Saturday night to usher in Christianity's holiest day of the year.

The lighting of the white candle, which stood more than four feet tall, opened a service commemorating the resurrection of Jesus Christ after his crucifixion on Good Friday.

Thousands of pilgrims lit small white candles of their own as the pontiff led a procession to the altar of St. Peter's Basilica, the largest church in Christendom.

After a deacon chanted three times "Lumen Christi" — Light of Christ — and the pope placed his candle at the altar, the lights of the basilica were switched on. The candles at the Easter vigil symbolized the risen Christ.

"Everything is renewed through love, which, on this Easter night, is revealed as stronger than death and sin," said the pope, sitting in white robes on an altar decked with sprays of yellow flowers.

"Facing the day made by the Lord, the church hopes for each of you the realization of the promise of the prophet Ezekiel: that the Lord give you a new heart and fill you with a new spirit."

Following tradition, the vigil Mass included several baptisms. This year, 26 people, including three Americans and an 8-year-old Italian girl, were chosen to be baptized by the pope.

After the ceremony, the pope had little time to rest before Easter morning, when he celebrates an open-air Mass in St. Peter's Square.

At noon, he gives his "Urbi et Orbi" (to the city of Rome and the world) message from the balcony overlooking the square.

Stars serve homeless

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Steve Allen, actress Tyne Daly and game show host Alex Trebek were among more than a dozen celebrities who helped serve early Easter dinners Saturday to about 5,000 homeless people.

The volunteer force dished out honey-baked ham and gravy, mashed potatoes, green beans, corn, rolls and apple pie at the downtown Los Angeles Mission.

Spring, the season of renewal, is exemplified in the resurrection of the Easter story. Children decked out in holiday finery, like 6-year-old Ashley Cox, daughter of Kelly and Lynn Cox, will attend special services throughout the city today.

Lack of takers perplexes phone officials

■ Less than 3 percent of Southwestern Bell's Midland, Odessa customers have signed up for new extended-area calling service.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

A Southwestern Bell official expressed concern over the low number of Midland and Odessa customers signing up to reach out and touch each other without paying long-distance charges.

With extended area calling service (EAS) scheduled to go on line Monday, few have taken advantage of the service, Linda Clements, a Midland-based Southwestern Bell spokeswoman, said last week.

"We need some customers to change to extended area calling service," Ms. Clements said. "We still feel there is a desire and need for EAS."

Southwestern Bell officials last August said 26 percent of residences and 30 percent of the businesses in Midland and Odessa must subscribe for the service to be profitable.

As of Friday, only 1,700 residences and 534 businesses, fewer than 3 percent of Midland and Odessa customers, had signed up for EAS, Ms. Clements said.

"It's low but it's not alarming," she said. "If those numbers are like that 30 days from now, it would be alarming.

"We're hoping for about 50 percent, which would total about 43,000 customers."

Ms. Clements blamed the low subscription figures on customer hesitance to sign up until the service becomes operable.

"We attribute a lot of it to apathy," she said. "Human nature is not to do anything until it's available."

Customers also may be having reservations because they will receive new telephone numbers, all of which will start with a "5," she said.

However, those who wait until after May 15 to sign up will not have their new numbers listed in the 1991-92 directory.

School finance 'monster' just won't go away

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Like the psychopathic villian Jason in the endless series of horror movies, school finance equalization is a monster the Texas Legislature can't seem to kill.

In May 1984, a group of 13 school districts and families filed a lawsuit against the state and the commissioner of education, William N. Kirby, contending that the way the state finances public education is unconstitutional. The case was styled "Edgewood v. Kirby," after Edgewood school district, one of the plaintiffs, located near San Antonio.

After the case proceeded through verdicts and appeals for more than five years, the state Supreme Court ruled on Oct. 2, 1989, that the system was unconstitutional.

Now, seven years after the suit was filed, the Legislature still hasn't overpowered the demon that threatens to

After clear-cut victory in Mideast, a messy aftermath

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — As the nightmare continued for the 18 million people of Iraq last week, President Bush sought to put a period at the end of the Persian Gulf war, but it would not end.

Indeed, the United States' "clean win," as Gen. Colin L. Powell, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, had termed it, was being soiled by the bloodbath it had unleashed inside Iraq.

A victorious George Bush, who had exhorted the Iraqi masses to overthrow Saddam Hussein in the wake of his defeat on the battlefield, decided after a long meeting with his senior advisers on Tuesday morning that there had to be a limit to U.S. intervention in Iraq's internal affairs.

After having pointedly warned Baghdad not to use poison gas or combat aircraft anywhere in Iraq, warnings that had encouraged the rebellion, Bush pulled up short when Iraq continued to fly combat helicopters against the insurgents.

The rebels said they could not stand up to that kind of attack, and asked to use captured Iraqi jets to fight back. Bush again said no.

The end of Bush's ambiguity toward the fate of the rebels spawned criticism that he was consigning the Iraqi people to murderous retribution, something the West was not willing to tolerate in Eastern Europe.

The situation was only complicated when the allied commander, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, wondered aloud in a television interview whether history would second-guess Bush's decision to stop the war just as he, Schwarzkopf, was hours away from annihilating the Iraqi units that are now engaged in bringing dissident towns and cities to heel.

Thousands upon thousands of Iraqi refugees streamed into the American-held territory in southern Iraq and they reported that more refugee convoys were on the way.

They included Iraqi army deserters who said they had refused orders to gun down women and children, and civilians who told of unspeakable atrocities against members of their families.

The Pentagon spokesman, Pete Williams, said Iraqi soldiers were still surrendering faster than the allies could send home the soldiers taken prisoner during the fighting.

In addition to more than 60,000 Iraqis in prisoner of war camps, there were 25,000 civilian and military refugees in the American occupation zone, with the prospect that more violence and social breakdown inside the country could flush many times that number toward the borders.

In the north, a ragtag army of Kurdish rebels that effectively controlled Iraqi Kurdistan prepared for a battle for survival against the Republican Guard, which reclaimed Kirkuk after it fell to the rebels earlier in the week, but kept a tenuous hold on the city.

MESSY: Crackdown soils 'clean win'

Some analysts wondered whether a harsh Iraqi crackdown in Kurdistan would trigger the same kind of exodus that occurred in September 1988, when Baghdad sought to crush Kurdish forces that had collaborated with Iran during the Iran-Iraq war.

During that campaign of repression 100,000 Kurds, fearing death and chemical weapons, fled into neighboring Turkey and Iran.

Now, a month after the shooting stopped, as the United Nations prepares to vote on a formal cease-fire resolution, a number of Iraq watchers wonder if this is the beginning of the end for the rebellion and for the return of stability to Iraq.

"What we have now is worse than what we had when Iraq was in Kuwait," said Christine Moss Helms, an Iraq scholar who has advised both the White House and the Pentagon during the crisis. "We have a situation where we entered the region to put down the Iraqi threat, and we spent $80 to $100 billion to do it, we ejected the Iraqis from Kuwait, but what did we get for it? We still don't have Saddam Hussein out of power and now we have this deteriorating situation on the frontier between the Persians, the Arabs and the Turks."

The core issue for Ms. Helms and for a number of other Mideast analysts was whether the United States and its allies went too far in devastating Iraq's armed forces and key elements of the country's civilian economy, encouraging a premature uprising that may be doomed to fail.

Referring to the Bush administration, Ms. Helms said, "I think they'll lose either way: the longer they stay, anti-Americanism will increase throughout the Arab and Muslim world and if they leave, all these forces, rolling on their own momentum," will encourage an extended low-intensity war within Iraq where none of the contenders for power will be strong enough to prevail and where interested outsiders in Iran, Turkey and Syria will play behind the scenes to protect and advance their own interests.

"If Iraq continues to disintegrate," Ms. Helms said, "it may be unstoppable, it may have a momentum of its own and the implications of the fragmentation of Iraq will go far beyond its borders" and affect the stability of Iran, Turkey and Syria.

Whatever the implications, it seemed certain that Bush, despite last week's White House pronouncement on neutrality, could not escape involvement in Iraq's internal affairs.

To the contrary, Bush is set upon a course both to pressure Iraq's internal political structure and hobble its oil-exporting capabilities and to control the flow of basic technology into the country.

Military power by its nature creates demands to use it, and as long as Saddam is in Baghdad, under pressure economically as instability reigns in much of his nation, the prospects for future crises in the region will remain.

The White House and Pentagon have made clear that the moment a cease fire is signed, about 100,000 U.S. Army troops from the VII Corps will pull out as soon as possible and relinquish their occupation responsibilities to a U.N. observer force and Red Cross officials.

Boots firefighting effort fails for lack of water

GREATER BURGAN OIL FIELDS, Kuwait (AP) — Five thousand gallons of water is a lot in the desert, but not enough to put out an oil well fire.

Boots and Coots Co., a Houston-based oil firefighting team, tried twice Saturday to snuff the first of 600 Kuwaiti oil well infernos, but failed both times for lack of water.

■ More world news/8A

"We'll try again, not to worry," said Boots Hansen, the silver-haired boss of the company, one of three U.S. oil firefighting teams in the emirate. "We'll have to make a few modifications, but we're not that disappointed."

Their efforts showed that firefighters could be largely impotent until they have an unlimited supply of water from the Persian Gulf.

Hansen said his attempts had been mostly an experiment, to see if his crew could put out fires with a limited water supply from fire trucks.

It could take up to three years to put out all the fires, officials say.

Warmer weather in sight

Staff Report

The Permian Basin is expected to return to spring-like conditions today after a cool and cloudy Saturday, meteorologists at the National Weather Service office at Midland International Airport said.

The forecast for today calls for sunny skies, with a high in the mid 60s. Winds will be from the south to southwest at 10 to 20 mph. Tonight should be mostly clear, with a low near 40.

Monday is expected to be mostly sunny, with a high in the mid 70s.

Saturday's high was 57, compared to the date's record of 94 set in 1946. Saturday's low was 40. The record low for today's date is 16 degrees, set in 1931.

STATE

Winter returned to Northwest Texas on Saturday as an upper-level disturbance brought light snow and a few areas of light rain to the Panhandle and as far eastward as San Angelo.

Snow accumulations of 1½ to 3 inches were common across the western high plains and northern Panhandle with mostly an inch or less over the remainder of the High Plains.

Cloudiness moved slowly east and southeastward across the state. Meanwhile, low and high level clouds moving across South Texas from the southeast resulted in partly to mostly cloudy skies over the western and central portions.

An area of high pressure at the surface was keeping skies clear in the east and southeast.

Temperatures were in the 50s in most areas but ranged from 34 degrees at Dalhart and Lubbock to 80 degrees in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

The wind was generally from the east and northeast at about 10 miles an hour with gusts of 20 to 25 along the coast, where a small craft advisory was in effect for the offshore waters.

Forecasters expected clearing skies Sunday and highs in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

A spring storm dumped snow Saturday in parts of Colorado and across the Oklahoma and Texas panhandles, and dusted sections of New England, Pennsylvania, Virginia and New Mexico.

The storm left 41 inches of snow at Cuchara, Colo., in the 24 hours up to 10 a.m. Saturday. Up to 6 feet of snow accumulated in the Cuchara Pass; 12 inches fell at Wootten Ranch, 9 inches at Walsenburg and 8 inches at Trinidad and Beulah.

Overnight snowfalls across the Oklahoma panhandle included 4 inches at Boise City. Snowfall over the Texas panhandle included 2 inches in Bushland, Dalhart and Hereford.

Rain fell in central Florida, helping douse all but one of about 20 wildfires that destroyed two houses and two mobile homes Friday.

There was little rainfall across the rest of the nation. Snowfall during the six hours up to 1 p.m. EST included 1 inch at both Boston and Amarillo, Texas, and 2 inches at Dalhart, Texas.

The Associated Press contributes to this report.

MONSTER: New finance plan due Monday

shut off state funds to public schools in Texas on Monday.

The state will face state District Court Judge Scott McCown in Austin at 9 a.m. on Monday, the court-ordered deadline to solve the problem, with nothing in hand to show the court.

The original ruling said the framers of the Texas constitution called for "...an efficient system of free public schools."

As long as the state provided the bulk of the money, constitutional questions were at a minimum. But schools also get money from local property taxes. As legislators refused to increase state taxes to provide money for schools, or for any other purpose, they shifted more of the burden onto local property taxpayers.

Currently, schools get about $15 billion a year, with $7 billion, or 46 percent, coming from local property taxes. About $6 billion comes from the state and the rest from federal sources.

The high court said because the state relies so heavily on property taxes, the finance system discriminates against school districts without much property to tax.

Residents of districts with oil and gas wealth, utilities and expensive homes to tax pay rates as low as 20 cents per $100 of valuation and still produce thousands of dollars more per pupil than property-poor districts where residents pay as much as $1.70.

The court said this system is not "efficient," because so much property in the state is not taxed at a proper rate to operate a state public education system.

State Comptroller John Sharp, whose office issues allotment checks every month for school districts, said that in comparing the state's 1,047 school districts, the richest district can raise nearly 500 times more money per student for every 1 cent of tax assessed than the poorest district.

Sharp said Laureles, the wealthiest district, is expected to spend about $33,600 per student this school year, while Edcouch-Elsa, the poorest district, will spend less than $4,000.

As Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said, if the state had an extra $5 billion or more to put into the school system, it could bring poor school districts up to the level of the more wealthy. But the state already has an estimated budget deficit of $4.5 billion for the next two years just to provide state services at current levels.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock has proposed a tax reform plan that would replace property taxes with a state income tax to raise money for schools and to cover the deficit.

Most legislators know the only other options are to add even more to the overburdened sales tax and property tax, but they will not support an income tax until Texans understand and accept the idea.

In its 1989 decision, the court gave the Legislature until May 1, 1990, to come up with an equitable plan. The district court extended that deadline as lawmakers struggled through four special sessions before approving a bill in June of 1990 that former Gov. Bill Clements would sign.

The Legislature approved one bill that almost everyone thought would pass the court's definition of efficiency. But because it required raising taxes, Clements, a Republican, vetoed the bill as being too costly.

Lawmakers then approved a bill that put less money into the system. The plaintiffs, led by the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, or MALDEF, went back to court. MALDEF is a national nonprofit group that promotes the civil rights of Hispanics.

On Jan. 22 of this year, the Supreme Court agreed with MALDEF in Edgewood v. Kirby II that the bill was unconstitutional because it did not tax all the wealth for all the school children. The plan did not include the top 5 percent of the richest districts in Texas, which have 15 percent of the wealth.

Legal experts and legislators believed at the time that the court, in a 9-0 decision, had made a very strict ruling that left few options.

Parker, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, began work on stringent legislation, much to the dismay of administrators and school officials at rich schools districts, particularly in the Dallas area.

Parker's proposal to eliminate all local property taxes and support schools with a statewide property tax died a quick death after school board and administration organizations rebelled, along with many citizens, at the mere words "statewide property tax."

With the most simple and effective method of providing state revenues ruled out, Parker had to try again.

The first problem, legislators said, was that the April 1 deadline was ridiculously short. It did not allow time, for example, to get constitutional amendments on the ballot before voters. Because of existing constitutional law about taking money from one school district to give to another, an effort solely through state legislation is bound to be complicated.

The Supreme Court added to the confusion with an unprecedented ruling on Feb. 19 that seemed to back off from its strict prohibition of "local enrichment." The court said once an efficient system was in place, school districts could raise additional property taxes for local use. But it did not indicate how much local enrichment it would allow before the system would be out of balance again.

The 5-4 decision was part of a ruling to deny a rehearing of the case, and it came after a group of representatives, led by Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, asked for clarification of some of the issues. Dissenting justices said such an "advisory" opinion was unconstitutional and tampered with the legislative process.

But the damage was done. The ruling opened the door for increased squabbles between rich and poor districts. Gov. Ann Richards cited that ruling as one reason the diverse interests in the case simply could not get together.

Parker's bill, which the Senate already had approved, was complex enough. The House used the advisory Edgewood ruling to tack on amendments that made the bill even more complicated.

A 10-member Senate-House conference committee, appointed to work out differences, came up with a bill so cumbersome and awkward that Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice, and chairwoman of the House Public Education Committee, described it as "an ugly baby, but the only baby we've got."

Any plan that does not come up with additional money would require "leveling down" by taking some money from rich districts. Lt. Gov. Bullock estimated the conference committee bill would have added almost $14 billion to current school revenues during the next five years from the state and local property taxes, if districts raised property taxes to recover lost money and to take advantage of the program.

The Senate approved the measure Tuesday. But with the Monday deadline looming on the horizon, the House shot down the bill Wednesday, with 54 of 58 Republicans voting against it.

Attorney General Dan Morales filed a motion with the district court Friday asking for an extension on the deadline to June 1.

On Monday the state will find out if it has any more time before the court orders it to stop funding an unconstitutional school program.

Will the monster ever die?

In 1990, in a similar case, the New Jersey Supreme Court threw out 17 years of court-ordered school finance reform in that state and ordered the legislature to start over again.

Senate leaders tout day-after-deadline plan

AUSTIN (AP) — It would be a day late and cost $2.2 billion, but Senate leaders have a plan that could send Gov. Ann Richards a school finance reform bill as ordered by the Texas Supreme Court.

Lawmakers adjourned for the Easter weekend without passing a bill, despite the Supreme Court's Monday deadline for them to devise a reform plan. The Legislature is not due back in session until Tuesday.

The court directed that state spending on public education stop Monday if lawmakers miss the deadline for coming up with a plan to give rich and poor school districts access to about the same funding.

A House-Senate conference committee worked out a bill that was approved by senators last week but rejected by the House.

So Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and Senate Education Committee Chairman Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, have said senators may on Tuesday consider an earlier school finance bill passed by the House.

If the Senate approves that bill, it would go directly to the governor.

The House passed the bill in February, after being told it would cost about $1.2 billion over the next two years.

But Senate analysts now estimate the House bill's cost to the state at $2.2 billion. They attribute the difference to a drafting error in an amendment.

The conference committee bill has a $1.2 billion price tag.

Like the conference committee bill, the House measure would shift local property tax revenue from wealthier to poorer school districts within new taxing regions drawn largely along county lines.

The conference committee plan provides for a governing board in each region. The House bill does not.

School districts could raise more local property tax money to enrich programs under the House bill than under the conference committee measure. The House bill also provides more state aid for school construction.

Both bills set a minimum local tax rate per $100 property valuation, starting at 60 cents.

The House bill's rate would climb to 80 cents in four years, and the conference committee bill's rate would increase to 90 cents over the same time period.

LACK: Extended calling is flat-rate service which will be a combination of Odessa and Midland numbers, she said. The communities no longer will have individual directories, she said.

Midland customers without EAS will be listed separately from those in Odessa, while all EAS subscribers in the area will be included in both cities' listings.

Southwestern Bell notified customers of the optional EAS through bill inserts mailed in early March.

"We had a flurry of signups the first couple of days after the letters went out," Ms. Clements said.

Mayor Carroll Thomas, who was among a number of community leaders who pushed for the service, said word of mouth will be EAS' best advertising.

"People will sign up for it as soon as they hear how useful it is," Thomas said. "It takes time for new things to catch on. I can't help but think it will grow."

In fact, he said he was pleased with the sign-up figures so far.

"Those numbers don't sound all that bad to me," he said. "That's quite a few businesses."

Ms. Clements said that if subscriptions are still low in about a month, Southwestern Bell will begin a marketing campaign.

The campaign, she said, could include telemarketing, mailers and advertising through the media.

EAS was made possible in April 1989, when the Public Utilities Commission approved allowing non-metropolitan areas such as Midland-Odessa to qualify for the service.

The PUC in January gave its approval for EAS to begin operating here.

Customers opting for EAS pay a flat monthly rate and can call anywhere in Midland and Odessa without paying long-distance charges for each call. Those without the service can call an EAS user toll free.

Residential service costs $5.85 monthly, which brings the total monthly service charge from $9.10 to $14.95.

It costs $13.80 for a one-party business line. Businesses with multiline hunting, whereby a call is rolled over to another line if the preceding line is busy, pay $16.30 per line.

Those with a PBX system, in which calls come to a central switchboard and then are routed to extensions, are billed an extra $21.80. Users of a hotel/motel trunk system pay $13.80.

STATUS: Gaining accreditation takes years

dence in what we do and increase our ability to respond to public needs," saod Lee, who is coordinating the effort. "I feel it will make us a professional police force."

But to gain the accreditation is no simple task.

More than 900 standards — outlined in an 84-chapter book — must be met.

The Midland Police Department began the laborious process in November of 1989.

The first step — almost completed — was to review existing policies and ensure compliance. As a result, a new police manual of procedures to accommodate the commission's standards will be issued to officers in June.

"It will be much bigger, with many more procedures and guidelines," Lee said. "It will be a benefit to the guys on the street. If they are operating within those procedures their liability is reduced."

"There will be clear-cut guidelines on what their job is," Lee said.

But issuing more guidelines obviously doesn't guantantee compliance.

"We must supply documentation to prove we are doing what we say we are doing in our manuals," Lee said.

He expects this self-assessment phase of the program to be completed in September.

That will be followed by a mock on-sight inspection.

"Officials from three or four accredited stations in the state will come to look at our files and see if we are in compliance with the standards," Lee said.

These assessors will issue a report of their findings to the Police Department and any necessary adjustments will be made. If needed, a second mock inspection will follow.

The official site inspection is targeted for January 1992.

The commission will send three or four people — trained in such inspections — from across the country.

"These assessors will also interview officers, look at our equipment and look at everything we have," Lee said.

But not only will the commission scrutinize the department, but Midlanders also will have their say.

"The assessors will hold a public meeting where citizens will be invited to make comments about the Police Department — both pro and con," Lee said.

"If everything goes right, the assessors will make a final report to the commission. When they leave we will know basically what the recommendation is," Lee said.

Police and city representatives will have to make a final presentation to the commission in Tucson, Ariz. — probably in March 1992 — subject to review.

Cost for attaining accreditation totals about $15,000, Lee said.

Accreditation is granted for five years, subject to proof of continuance of standards each year. After that, a law enforcement agency must apply for reaccreditation.

Currently, the Midland Police Department is one of 62 Texas law enforcement agencies seeking accreditation.

Nationwide, only 164 agencies out 32,000 are accredited

The Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies is a non-profit, non-governmental organization. Based in Fairfax, Va., the commission was formed through the combined effort of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives, National Sheriff's Association and the Police Executive Research Forum.

Maintaining a stringent set of standards is a growing concern of law enforcement agencies.

"More and more departments are (seeking accreditation) because of the increasing liability on looking for more cleanly defined procedures for their officers to work under," Lee said.

Serving the people, an accredited agency will "provide better police service and quicker response time for calls to service," Lee added.

Accounting of Marcos' assets turns up precious little

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — After a five-year hunt through the courts and banking systems of three continents, the Philippine government has uncovered yachts and paintings and silver services and a few hundred million dollars, but not much more of the $5 billion or more Ferdinand E. Marcos is said to have stolen from his country.

As the six-year term of President Corazon C. Aquino nears its end next year, a touch of desperation has entered the search and her government has begun talking of cutting its losses and making deals with Marcos' widow, Imelda.

Lawyers and government officials involved in the search now say it will probably never be known just how much Marcos, who died in Hawaii in 1989, stole from the Philippines during his 20 years as president. Whatever the total, they say, it is now clear that only a small portion will be recovered.

Caesar Parlade, a former member of the agency seeking to recover the Marcos funds, the Presidential Commission on Good Government, put the possible total recovery at $1 billion to $1.5 billion.

"There is a large gap between what was stolen and what remains," he said in an interview. "If you look at the records you find that on one of her trips Imelda was able to spend $6,000 on the first day for chocolates. That is the kind of lifestyle that used up the money."

In the Philippines, peremptory confiscations of property, deals with some of Marcos' "cronies" and scores of civil suits have won the government about $100 million in cash and another $100 million in assets that range from horses to hotels and from planes to sugar plantations.

In the United States, the government has recovered banks, buildings and assorted baubles from the Marcos residences. It has succeeded, in a Los Angeles court, in freezing the Marcos assets worldwide. But it failed in New York in a case brought by American officials to convict Mrs. Marcos of racketeering in the purchase of properties with stolen government funds.

The biggest single haul could come in Switzerland, where the Supreme Court ruled recently that the Philippine government is entitled to recover $350 million in Marcos bank accounts in that country.

The pursuit of the Marcos wealth began with wads of cryptic documents that were left scattered through Malacanang Palace in Manila when Marcos and his entourage fled on the night of Feb. 26, 1986.

With her first presidential decree after seizing office in a nearly bloodless "people power" uprising, Mrs. Aquino promised her people she would track down and recover the wealth and use it to help rebuild her country, one of the poorest in Asia.

The recovery was seen as a symbol of the moral crusade with which she came to power, and her first commissioner of the recovery effort, Jovito Salonga, now the Senate president, offered no quarter.

"A deal would amount to saying that it is all right for an official to steal, so long as he is ready to share his loot with the state later — if prosecuted," Salonga said then.

It was he who first estimated the Marcos wealth at $5 billion or more, and Manila has stood by that estimate even as it scales back its goals and begins to talk of making deals.

Within the Philippines, the government moved to seize the assets of Marcos and his associates, but many of these became entangled in complicated court challenges as the wealthy men in the Marcos camp hired the nation's best lawyers.

For the assets the government did recover, Parlade now urges quick disposal, worrying that they could pose "a great temptation" for Marcos-style corruption by the next president.

Abroad, the suit in a federal court in Los Angeles froze the Marcos assets and resulted in an order under which Mrs. Marcos must submit an accounting of any expenditures over $10,000. Officials within the Philippine commission said Mrs. Marcos continues to spend freely, maintaining that her money comes from one of her daughters.

Most other efforts have proved unproductive, however, as the Philippine government discovered that Marcos was a virtuoso in hiding his money in accounts everywhere from Lichtenstein to the Cayman Islands.

Some investigators who have been involved with the wealth-recovery effort say the inefficiency and political infighting that has characterized the Aquino government may have cost the nation millions of dollars in potential recoveries.

The presidential commission was itself accused of corruption almost from its first days, and has labored under controversy. Although few of the accusations have been proved, a number of the commission's fiscal agents have been charged with corruption and removed.

But Parlade, reflecting on the commission's difficulties, said, "From what I have seen, it is not corruption; it's ineptness."

And while the commission floundered, Parlade said, some Marcos assets have dropped dramatically in value. The Redwood Bank in San Francisco, for example, has depreciated because of bad investments from $40 million to about $6.5 million. The California Overseas Bank in Los Angeles, which was once worth $30 million, is now worth no more than $14 million, he said.

New drug czar to change strategy

WASHINGTON (CNS) — President Bush's new commander in the war on illicit drugs hints at a new battle plan that places more emphasis on prevention and treatment of abuse.

"Every year we get a new crop of youngsters that reach the age that they could begin to experiment with drugs, and we've got to make sure that we educate them away from the use of drugs. Every year we'll have some new addicts, unfortunately, and we've got to provide the treatment for those who are prepared to receive it," Bob Martinez says.

A former Florida governor and close Republican ally of the president, Martinez last week formally began his new job as director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

In an interview, Martinez said he hopes to be judged on his actions in office, not his past reputation as a law-and-order governor.

He described himself as less of an innovator and more of an administrator than his well-publicized, controversy-seeking predecessor, William Bennett, who was the nation's first drug czar.

"You make changes as experience dictates and as new ideas come along. But the important thing here is to meet the goals that are in this strategy," Martinez said. "That's going to become a major feature of this office, is to have good monitoring of how we're all doing."

Bush indicated he expects the 56-year-old Washington neophyte to move federal drug policy in new directions that may satisfy its detractors.

"Bob Martinez understands that we cannot defeat drugs through law enforcement alone," Bush said at Martinez's Rose Garden swearing-in ceremony last Thursday. "Any long-term solution also depends on successful education and treatment."

After the Senate confirmed his nomination, Martinez made his first public speech before a group of state drug treatment officials in Salt Lake City, another signal that the administration could reduce its heavy reliance on interdiction.

"I don't think there is a shortage of allies. It's making certain that the voices of allies are heard here on the Hill and elsewhere in Washington. I think we can get that done," Martinez said.

Under Bennett, 70 percent of federal anti-drug spending was devoted to stemming the drug supply and only 30 percent to reducing demand for drugs.

Bennett aggressively defended that formula; Martinez says he wants to change it.

"We take him at his word," said William Butynski, executive director of the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors.

"The talk is nice. I hope that the budget reflects the talk," said Kevin Zeese, vice president of the liberal Drug Policy Foundation and among Martinez's most vociferous critics before his Senate confirmation. "The fact that he feels the need to say these things is promising. Maybe he is trying."

Bush has recommended $11.6 billion, an 11 percent increase in federal anti-drug spending, for the fiscal year that will begin Oct. 1. It preserves the 70 percent set aside for law enforcement.

Martinez said he will concentrate this year on selling that plan, but develop new ideas for next year's anti-drug strategies, which would be carried out in the fiscal year that begins in October 1992.

He said it was premature to discuss personnel or structural changes in his 160-employee agency. The top officials are holdovers from the Bennett regime, a staff Martinez described as "impressive."

Martinez also dismissed suggestions that he cannot swim in the rough waters of Cabinet-level politics at the White House.

"If you go back into the neighborhoods of this country, they have not relinquished their concern with drugs and with crime. So we have to be certain that the sounds of the neighborhoods are not muted here in Washington," Martinez said. "Hopefully out of all of that we can maintain a high level of visibility and energy."

The recycling of America gains materials, momentum

KING OF PRUSSIA, Pa. (NYT) — The first thing everyone needs to know about recycling, said Charles F. Oyler, is the difference between trash and recyclable materials.

Oyler is the recyling manager at the big materials recovery center in suburban Philadelphia. The center is operated by Browning-Ferris Inc.

A material recovery facility is a key element in the recycling chain. Materials that have been discarded are brought in to be separated, decontaminated and compressed into bales for shipment to mills that can make them into new products.

The factory processes about 125 tons a day of paper and cardboard, steel and aluminum cans, glass and plastic bottles. All have been separated from outgoing solid waste to preserve their value.

"There is no practical way to process completely mixed materials," Oyler said. "Once something is mixed with trash, it becomes trash."

Homeowners are asked to place their newspapers and glass, aluminum, steel and plastic in a container separate from other trash. Similarly, offices participating in the state-mandated recycling program are asked to collect high-grade papers and other recyclables away from other wastes. On collection day, the trash goes to a landfill; the recyclables go to Browning-Ferris.

According to William D. Ruckelshaus, the chairman of Browning-Ferris, one of the largest trash haulers in the country, solid-waste recycling is now at a crucial point in terms of its long-term viability. The public enthusiastically supports the concept at the moment, and that support is reflected in laws intended to prod industries to use more recycled materials.

That increase in demand is prompting an increase in collections and the development of processing plants like the one in King of Prussia. "If the infrastructure gets put into place, with collection systems, processing centers and end-user markets, then it will not matter if the current 'feel good' attitude subsides," Ruckelshaus said. "Economics will take over and the system will be self-sustaining."

One self-sustaining part of the recycling business is aluminum. Since remelting aluminum takes only 5 percent of the electric power to extract metal from bauxite ore, aluminum companies have been recycling for more than 20 years.

Aluminum is the most valuable material in the solid waste stream. A ton of crushed, baled cans commands $1,000 to $1,100 from mills. In contrast, similar loads of old cardboard boxes are worth $25 to $90, according figures compiled by Recycling Times, a publication of the National Solid Waste Management Association. Glass, separated by color, is valued at from $40 to $60 a ton.

According to the Aluminum Association, a trade group, 54.9 billion aluminum cans totalling 9.65 million tons were recycled in this country last year. That represented a recycling rate of 63.6 percent, the group said, up from 60.8 percent in 1989.

"If the infrastructure gets put into place, with collection systems, processing centers and end-user markets, then it will not matter if the current 'feel good' attitude subsides. Economics will take over and the system will be self-sustaining.'

— William D. Ruckelshaus, chairman, Browning-Ferris Inc.

Steel has been recycled for generations. Indeed, the entire steel mini-mill industry is based on scrap, largely recovered from old cars and appliances.

But steel cans used to package food products have a thin coating of tin on the inside to prevent the formation of rust, and the tin was viewed as a contaminant because it caused blemishes on the surface of sheet steel. The drive to reduce solid waste in landfills has increased steel-can recycling.

The amount of tin on cans has declined from about 20 pounds per ton of steel 20 years ago to 4½ to 5 pounds today, said William Heenan of the Steel Can Recycling Institute, another trade group.

As a result, it can be added directly to steel furnaces in limited amounts without causing problems. He said steel-can recycling has risen from 5 billion cans in 1988 to an estimated 9 billion last year. It is now priced at $40 to $70 a ton, depending on location.

All of these materials are sideshows, though, to paper and paperboard products. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, paper-based products, which include cardboard boxes, newspapers, computer printouts and tissue products, constitute the largest single element of solid waste — about 40 percent.

Clean paper products can be recycled, within limits. Cardboard boxes can become new boxes, while some mixed grades of paper, including brown shopping bags, can be reformed as the fluted middle layer inside cardboard. Old newspapers can be made into new newsprint and the paperboard used for boxes of dry cereal.

One of the problems with the early recycling programs of the late 1980s was a glut of old newspapers that depressed the price to the point where communities had to pay to have them hauled away. To an extent, the glut continues; old newspapers, magazines and brown bags can cost $25 a ton to dispose of on the East Coast.

But those economics can be changed by adding value. "We upgraded our news by pulling out the bags and the slick magazines," Oyler said. "We never had to pay to move it."

Nevertheless, Browning-Ferris officials say that, with the exception of aluminum, the prices now being paid for recycled materials would not pay the costs of collection and processing.

But when the savings of $70 a ton in landfilling fees that do not have to be paid are added to the equation, it becomes a viable business. Ruckelshaus observed that recycling may not make economic sense in states like Texas, where disposal fees are as low as $4 a ton.

Upgrading the quality of materials coming into the garbage recycling plant involves a combination of machine separation and handpicking. Most of the people doing the handpicking are paid slightly above the minimum wage. Incoming containers are dumped on a conveyor which passes under a rotating magnet that pulls out all the steel cans. The rest of the material drops onto a vibrating screen that has slots three-quarters of an inch wide, to remove small pieces of broken glass.

The material is then fed into an air blower that separates the lighter aluminum and plastic from the remaining glass. The aluminum cans are flattened and blown by air into a truck while the plastic bottles are collected for later baling.

The glass containers drop onto another conveyor where workers separate them by color. Clear glass is generally the most valuable while green, which is used mostly in beer bottles, varies the most widely in price. It is now worth as little as $10 a ton in the northeastern states but fetches as much as $60 on the West Coast.

The quality of incoming material is important, and Browning-Ferris officials say they try to conduct an education campaign before starting curbside or commercial collection programs.

Things like telephone books, gummed labels and air freight envelopes have no place in containers intended to collect office papers.

"We take two pictures of loads as they come in and we give one to the driver," Oyler said. If a shipment is contaminated, it is accepted the first time, but someone from the company warns the shipper. "The second time we charge them for disposal."

Storms sweep N.C. man away

ARCADIA, N.C. (AP) — A man who was swept away by a rain-swollen creek a day before his wedding Saturday remained missing, authorities said.

Saul White Jr., 28, disappeared after a car his fiancee was driving slid off a wet road in Davidson County Friday night and plunged into Muddy Creek, about 80 miles west of Raleigh.

His fiancee, Janet Stanley Johnson, 38, escaped out a car window and swam to safety, Highway Patrol trooper Barry Hower said.

Elsewhere in North Carolina, residents began cleaning up and assessing damage from tornadoes, high winds and heavy rain that pounded much of the state on Friday.

High winds damaged up to 100 homes in the central town of Asheboro earlier in the week.

Idaho OK's peyote

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Indians can legally transport the hallucinogenic drug peyote to reservations for religious ceremonies and health purposes under a new state law that goes into effect July 1.

Gov. Cecil Andrus on Friday signed into law a bill allowing Indians to transport the drug, a controlled substance obtained from the button-like tops of a small cactus. Twenty-three other states have similar laws.

Federal law already allows Indians to use the drug on reservations.

The new state law will allow Indians to transport peyote to Idaho's five reservations if they can show it was legitimately obtained. Tribal leaders say peyote has medicinal and sacramental uses.

Tribal leaders estimate that as many as 2,500 Idaho Indians belong to the Native American Church.

Albanians prepare to vote

KRUJE, Albania (AP) — Communist leaders freed more than 250 political prisoners Saturday on the eve of the nation's first multiparty election after 46 years of Stalinist rule.

The 258 detainees released join 123 political prisoners freed two weeks ago, said Arben Puto, a human rights activist. He said 27 political prisoners still remain jailed.

Premier Fatos Nano had pledged to free all political prisoners before the parliamentary elections, which culminate Albania's transition from decades of isolationism and hard-line rule.

Both the Communists and newly formed opposition groups expressed confidence in the final days of the campaign in this mountainous country of 3.2 million people.

In Kruje, like in many other northern cities and towns, support is strong for the Democratic Party, the Communists' strongest challenger.

Backers — including some soldiers wearing the Communist red star on their caps — on Saturday flashed V-for-victory signs, the Democrats' rallying symbol.

Communist President Ramiz Alia also has predicted victory. His Party of Labor still has widespread support in rural areas, where about two-thirds of the nation's 1.9 million voters live.

The elections Sunday will seat a new 250-member People's Assembly, or parliament. Albania is the last of the Eastern European nations to hold multiparty elections since the collapse of Communist rule in the region.

The Communists are contesting 243 seats, while the Democratics are campaigning for all 250.

The Republican Party — seen as a compromise between the Communists and Democrats — is contesting 165 seats. The Agrarian and Ecological parties are fielding only a handful of candidates.

The parliament will name the president, adopt a new constitution, and tackle the economic problems that have led to protests and a wave of refugees fleeing the Balkan nation.

Opposition parties were legalized in December following four days of student unrest.

The Democratic Party has won support through its semi-weekly newspaper, limited appearances on state TV, and campaign rallies around the mountainous country.

The Democrats also have been helped by Albania's deepening economic crisis which many, even traditional Communist supporters, blame on the government.

The Communists say Albania must move to a free-market economy, but slowly. The Democrats want sweeping and immediate privatization and land reform.

About 20,000 desperate Albanians, mainly young people, fled to Italy by ship in February in search of Western prosperity. A small number returned after finding harsh conditions in the port-side refugee compounds.

About 200 Albanians fled to Yugoslavia on Saturday near Debar, about 220 miles south of Belgrade, the Yugoslav Tanjug news agency reported.

Another 1,000 Albanians gathered along the border hoping to cross, the agency said.

Yugoslav authorities said they would stick to the policy of returning refugees to Albania. Already, more than 1,000 Albanians have been returned.

In northern towns such as Kruje, placards for the 4-month-old Democratic Party fill windows.

"It can't get any worse," said Astra Dollma, a 32-year-old bank clerk in Kruje, about 30 miles north of the capital, Tirana. "Meat, two or three times a week, bread, a few vegetables, and nothing else. ... We're waiting to see what the Democratic Party will offer us."

She said she wasn't expecting overnight changes if the Democrats win, but "something must move."

Kruje, which grew around the castle of medieval Albania's national hero, Skanderbeg, seems to be a fortress of support for the Democrats.

Even in Valias, a nearby mining town where Alia in January doubled miners' wages from $1 a day after they went on strike, support for the Democrats appears strong.

"Alia did something to solve our problems and we cheered him," said miner Selim Masha. "But it was only symbolic. In fact, he's just like all the other Communists, and we have worked for them for 45 years and gained nothing."

About two-thirds of Valias' workers were card-carrying Communists three months ago, Masha said. But he predicted victory for the Democrats on Sunday.

Safet Kalemi, another miner, tore up his Party of Labor card and handed it to Western reporters as they left Valias.

Support for the Communists is stronger in the south, where Albania's Stalinist founder, Enver Hoxha, was born.

Alia sounded confident of victory on Friday when he spoke before a hand-picked group of supporters from his Tirana electoral district.

However, he appeared less certain at a news conference, at which he called for a coalition government, regardless of the election results.

Hundreds of foreign observers are in Albania to monitor the election.

France celebrates Camembert

VIMOUTIERS, France (AP) — Cheese-makers and connoisseurs Saturday celebrated the 200th anniversary of Camembert, one of France's best-known epicurean specialties.

To receive the cherished label of authentic Camembert, the soft and slightly smelly cheese must be made from unpasteurized milk that cannot exceed 100 degrees during the aging process. It also must be made in Normandy from local milk.

Francois Michel of the Normany chamber of commerce said health regulations in some countries, including the United States, hinder the export of real Camembert.

The Normandy Milk Union estimates 10,000 of the 119,000 tons of Camembert consumed a year are produced from raw milk. The rest is pasteurized.

According to popular legend, the cheese was invented in 1791 by Marie Harel, a farmer's wife living in the village of Camembert.

Harel got the idea from a Roman Catholic priest hiding at her farm from anti-clerical radicals of the French Revolution.

The priest suggested she make a soft, Brie-like fromage instead of the traditionally harder Norman cheeses. The result was an immediate hit with the local population.

In 1863, Napoleon III introduced it in his court.

German unity spurs protest

LEIPZIG, GERMANY (CNS) — In an angry crowd of tens of thousands gathered recently in this eastern German town, a thin, pale man hoisted an unusually hostile banner. It said: "Kohl — only Hitler was worse."

In the midst of a sea of faces, he cheered on his furious companions as they called for a march on Bonn and the resignation of Chancellor Helmut Kohl, only months ago the beloved champion of German unity.

Today, Kohl's political future is in doubt after nearly a decade in office. The man who once told both Germany's that "nobody will lose" from unification is faced with a citizenry that thinks everyone is losing.

Soon they must pay a tax — one he promised never to impose — to help cover the bill for unity, which some estimates put at $600 billion by the year 2000. Unemployment is at 30 percent, driven by a largely unskilled workforce of former East Germans, and is expected to rise.

Six months after East and West Germany became one nation, Germany is falling into a deepening crisis of spirit spurred by growing economic problems likely to bring more civil unrest.

"Kohl promised that no one would live worse than before," said Bernhart Kavier, a Dusseldorf union organizer who helped stage the Leipzig rally. "But now after unification, most live worse than before."

An organizer of the Leipzig protest said a mass march on Bonn could take place this spring. Demonstrations nationwide are expected to grow is size and frequency this summer after layoffs and rent hikes take effect.

A particularly ugly by-product of unity is increased attacks on foreign workers, who are blamed for taking away the few jobs left to former East Germans.

In a small town south of Leipzig last month 20 thugs, armed with iron bars and heavy sticks, beat up residents of a home for foreign refugees who held low-paying jobs that might otherwise go to Germans.

In December, an Angolan man died after 50 former East Germans, bearing knives and gas pistols, attacked him and seven other Africans, local media reports said. The leftist Berlin newspaper, Die Tageszeitung, noted the "passivity" of Germans standing nearby when it happened.

"We will have more problems in East Germany with right-wing violence," predicted Wolfgang Scheremet, a professor at the German Institute for Economics. Throughout Europe, he said, the disenfranchised "are susceptible to right-wing ideologies."

At the moment, most former East Germans could be described as disenfranchised. Increasingly, they are referred to as a "second class."

While western Germany retains its extraordinary affluence, easterners suffer from steep hikes in food and housing prices. Rents in what was formerly East Germany are expected to increase by as much as several hundred percent when subsidies are lifted this summer.

The eastern part of Germany is losing jobs at a shocking rate because their industries are outmoded and inefficient. Kurt Biedenkopf, Prime Minister of the eastern state of Saxony, reportedly expects half of the eight million workers there to lose their jobs.

"We are better off politically since the change," said Doris Gerecke, an elderly woman at the Leipzig demonstration. "But economically we're worse off."

Kavier said "there is a kind of social apartheid here in Germany."

"In one country, we have two systems of social rights, and East Germans are not going to stand it any longer," he said during an interview in Leipzig's broad square. "It's not a question of going back to the former system. But democracy has to have social content."

Leipzig was the site of major demonstrations that led to the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989. But now angry Leipzigers have turned from politics to economics. The recent rally is to be followed by regular marches against unemployment.

One problem is that jobless eastern workers have little chance of getting new positions in slick, state-of-the-art companies in western Germany.

Easterners are trained on equipment outdated everywhere but the former Communist bloc. They have little experience with disciplined work habits and self-starter ethics in western Germany. Easterners' second language often is not English, but Russian.

"We have to learn a whole new way of working," said Edelgard Strassberger, who is trying to fit into western business culture by taking government-funded retraining courses.

"We are learning to think for ourselves," she said."Before when we worked in teams, we just followed the ideas of the group leader."

There is prejudice against the easterners. The Ossies, as they are called, are easily identifiable by the drab, cloddish clothing often worn in socialist countries.

The Bonn government underestimated the degree of economic crisis in former East Germany. Before unification, Kohl predicted recovery would be quick. But now economists say it will take anywhere from five to 15 years.

"German economists assumed that just applying market principles would lead to a quick recovery," said Manfred Gortemaker, an historian at Berlin's Free University. "But people in the west underestimated the terrible state of the economy in the DDR (former East Germany)."

Scheremet said "East Germany is comparable to a developing country."

Workers' tragedy inspires playwright

■ Deaths of 18 illegal aliens in railroad boxcar outside El Paso rivets Lubbock writer.

By William Kerns
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

LUBBOCK (AP) — Newspaper headlines cry out tragedies every day, but one of those stories hit young Lubbock playwright Rudolph V. Alvarado squarely in the gut during the blazing hot Texas summer of 1987.

Nineteen Mexican workers risked their lives — 18 of them eventually losing their lives — while being smuggled into the United States.

Mind you, illegal aliens make a run for the north every day. Many are caught and deported; some never make it past the desert or the river. But these 18 men died horrible deaths while locked in a railroad boxcar, and Alvarado wanted to know why they even took the chance.

He put the answers to his questions in an original one-act play, "El Norte," which premiered in March at Texas Tech University's Lab Theater. Another performance will be given in April at the Lubbock Arts Festival.

The event that riveted Alvarado occurred July 2, 1987, at Sierra Blanca, east of El Paso. Eighteen men were found dead locked in the steel-walled boxcar in stifling 120-degree heat.

One man survived by using a spike to punch a hole through the floor and breathe through the opening; others apparently died trying to claw through the wood-lined door.

Mike Williams, a Border Patrol spokesman, described the scene to The Associated Press: "There's blood on the floor. Some of their tongues are chewed, their mouths are chewed. It's a gruesome sight."

Miguel Tostado Rodriguez, 21, the man who survived, told the AP through an interpreter: "People started dying little by little, little by little. They started fighting with each other because they were desperate for breath and for water. ...."

Alvarado wasn't there, but he found himself visualizing the scene.

"I saw a report where they were pulling the men out, and I saw a hand sticking out of a pile. And I wanted to be the man that hand belonged to. As an actor, I could put myself inside another person. But to get to know the men who climbed into that boxcar, I felt like I had to write about them. It nagged at me, but I still didn't do it until after I talked to a man from that same area around El Paso.

"He said that people were hurt because after these deaths became old news and were not in the headlines anymore, everyone just forgot about the men who died. There are illegal aliens who die in boxcars or in the desert all the time. We don't even see them as people anymore, just statistics."

So Alvarado — who had acted, directed and even owned his own theater, but never before had written — sat down and tried to find understanding by inventing doomed characters.

He began by focusing on what it

AmWest's Rollover IRAs. Nothing taxing about 'em.

If you have a CD maturing, your company has terminated your pension or profit sharing plan, or you have changed jobs, you may receive a large cash payment. You can keep it, and be forced to pay income taxes and possible penalty taxes.

Or you can open an AmWest Rollover IRA.

Just put the money from your old plan into an AmWest Rollover IRA within 60 days and all taxes on the money will be deferred. You pay no taxes until the money is withdrawn from your AmWest account. Unlike a regular IRA, there are no limits on the size of the lump sum payment that can be placed into a Rollover. And, at AmWest, there are no set up fees.

So if you've recently received a payout, call your local AmWest branch or customer service at 1-800-776-4286 and rollover. It's simple. In fact, there's nothing taxing about it.

was like inside that stifling boxcar, allowing each character a short monologue which would explain why he was there. "Some of them came for a better life, some of them to help their families. And some of them just wanted to drive the big cars, you know? And they could only do that in America."

Talking with Mexican workers at an Immigration Service office in Lubbock also helped his characterizations, Alvarado said. "My Spanish is shaky, but I began to hang out there and talk to the guys in line. I talked with one man who admitted he had crossed the border not once or twice, but almost 20 times. He'd get caught, get sent back to Mexico, then try again. And when I asked him why, he just said, 'Because the women are here, the jobs are here, the cars are here — and there's nothing else to do in Mexico.'

"Our conversation helped me finish the monologues I was writing."

Alvarado, who'll turn 30 on April 14, is working toward a master's degree in playwriting at Tech. When he presented his monologues to Tom Jones, head of the playwriting program, he was challenged to expand them into a full-fledged play.

"Really, the monologues were just an exercise to get to know the individual people anyway," said Alvarado. "But when it came time to write the play, it came very easily to me because I already knew what motivated all of the characters."

The current production is not cast with Hispanic actors.

"I wanted a Hispanic cast," Alvarado said when asked about it. "It would have been nice. But it didn't work out that way. But I have to say that the people in this play are all outstanding actors, and they've worked hard to make the characters their own. ... I'd love to see 'El Norte' performed by an all-Hispanic cast, though. God willing, someday it will be."

Alvarado has no plans to expand this particular play further in theatrical terms. He hopes to see it performed in a few other Texas cities, then will submit it for publication. "I see definite screenplay possibilities," he admitted, "but I think I'll set it aside for a while first. I'll have to think about it."

He also found himself giving a lot of thought to the title. He originally had called the play simply "America" — and that one word, used in the connotation of this sort of fact-based tragedy, all but guaranteed that the play would be viewed as a political statement, he felt.

"I had to ask myself a question," Alvarado said. "As an actor, as a director, as a playwright, did I want to make this political? Did I want to make it look like I was pointing the finger of blame at the United States for these men's deaths? My answer was, no.

"This play is about people caught in a bigger-than-life situation. I wanted people to leave remembering the individuals, not the concept. ... These characters spoke to me. They did. Through them I learned about the conditions where they lived, and about how they viewed the north. And 'El Norte' — the north — just seemed to reflect better what I was trying to say."

Still, Alvarado says he does want to make a difference with this play. "This is a new play, but I'd still like to think it could do that. I just don't want to have to point any fingers to do that.

"These people that died in that boxcar, they were all just like us, man. Except they were willing to risk everything for a better life.

"All I want to say is let's not forget about them. Let's not forget that this thing happened."

Alvarado and his wife, Sonya — also a writer, director and actor — opened a Lubbock theater, The Actors' Trading Post, in 1985, debuting with critically acclaimed productions of "True West," "Extremities" and "Pvt. Wars."

Financial and family commitments — the Alvarados have a 7-year-old daughter and a 6-month-old son — found Alvarado eventually taking a lengthy hiatus from theater. The Actors' Trading Post closed in 1987. Alvarado took a job at Southwest Federal Savings Association and eventually returned to school.

In the process, he also came to grips with what he wanted from life. "I've been involved in theater for a long time, but now I feel like I've found my niche, where I belong. I still love to act and direct and, to tell you the truth, I'm hungry to get back on stage in a role. But being a playwright, man, that's where it all begins. And I think all of my experience as an actor, a director, a designer, all those things, they help me as a writer."

Billy Bob's celebrates 10th anniversary with April foolery

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press writer

FORT WORTH (AP) — Billy Bob's Texas, "the world's largest honky-tonk," celebrates its 10th year of redneck revelry Monday with, appropriately, an April Fool's bash.

Heaven knows who, what or how many will show up for a free evening of entertainment with "Redneck Mother" Ray Wylie Hubbard on stage.

But the gala could be tame by Billy Bob's standards.

That's because Billy Bob his ownself won't be there, nor will Merle Haggard, who once spent $12,732.50 on a round of drinks for 5,095 of his closest friends.

The group guzzle, a whiskey promotion, was a Billy Bob's record, as was the 16,000 bottles of beer consumed by a sellout crowd who came one night to hear Hank Williams Jr.

Unlike Haggard, Hank didn't pick up the bar tab.

Fickle legend George Jones no-showed Billy Bob's four times, then recorded a hit called "No Show Jones." When he finally did show, he led off with the song and brought down the house.

Billy Minick, the current general manager, says Billy Bob's traditionally kept two tickets on hold for Elvis Presley, just in case, but turned them loose last November.

"We had to sell 'em for the Garth Brooks concert," he smiled.

On three occasions, CBS television taped "early" New Year's Eve parties at Billy Bob's for inclusion in the network's live New Year's Eve telecasts.

And then there was the night . . .

Such is the lore of honky-tonk historians, whose zesty blend of fact and fiction adds to the mystique and mythology of this one-time cattle barn turned beer joint.

It was April Fool's Day 1981 that Billy Bob Barnett and his pal Spencer Taylor opened the club in the landmark Stockyards District on the city's unruly North Side.

Friends said Billy Bob set the date so if something went wrong at the opening he could shrug it off as an April Fool's joke.

Despite some well-chronicled ups and downs, one or two involving Billy Bob himself, the club quickly became a sudsy showcase for the nation's country and western entertainers.

Besides Hank and Merle and George and Garth, Billy Bob's still books such top acts as George Strait, Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Alabama, Randy Travis, Reba McEntire, The Judds, Tanya Tucker, Barbara Mandell, Clint Black, Lee Greenwood and Ricky Van Shelton.

In one of its banner years, 1986, Billy Bob's was named America's best C&W venue.

Still, the record box office gross was Bob Hope, who appeared with Johnny Cash in 1981 on New Year's Eve. As he stepped from his limousine that night, Hope glanced across the Stockyards complex at the ancient Northside Coliseum and said:

"I played that building in 1939."

Among the non-C&W headliners have been ZZ Top, The Beach Boys, Marvin Gaye and Bo Diddly.

Pam Minick, the manager's wife and the advertising director, said ZZ Top was booked four days in advance in December 1981 and still filled the house. A decade later, Garth Brooks was booked two months in advance and sold out in three days.

Ten years ago, Larry Gatlin and the Gatlin Brothers kicked off a five-day "Grand Opening" that included stints by Janie Fricke and the old outlaw duo of Willie and Waylon.

With its 42 bar stations, restaurant, oversized dance floor and live indoor bull riding, the club was a huge hit, so much so that a tradition was born.

Fire marshals still ride shotgun on big nights to limit crowds to 6,000 at any one time.

"Billy Bob's was making about $1 million a year every year it was open," says Steve Murrin, long the unofficial mayor of the Stockyards area and now a co-owner of the club. But it was crippled by an enormous debt service.

Money problems hastened the departure of Taylor, and Billy Bob called it quits during an ice storm in January 1988. He closed the doors and eventually took his marbles and memories to New Orleans.

The blackout at Billy Bob's lasted 10 months.

"The Stockyards' image was disproportionately damaged by the closing," Murrin said. "It became absolutely vital that we get Billy Bob's back open in some shape or form."

The club first reopened on a limited basis in late 1988 and then staged a "Grand Reopening" on April Fool's Eve in 1989. One could argue that folks returned not out of loyalty to Billy Bob's but headliner Willie Nelson, who could draw a crowd in a West Texas outhouse.

"But with 5,400 people coming in here," Pam Minick said at the time, "it lets a lot of people know we're open and back in business. We need to get the ball rolling."

Although Billy Bobless, the club is now open seven days and six nights a week and sees itself more as a "family entertainment center" than a beer joint.

But its bread and butter is still longnecks, rednecks and country stars with their boozy ballads lamenting lost love, cheatin' hearts, lyin' eyes and honky-tonk angels.

"Right now, as far as bringing in top C&W acts, we're again the top game in town, Dallas or Fort Worth," says Murrin. "In the booking trade, we own the market."

Said manager Minick: "We're doing something right. I don't know what the hell it is, but people enjoy it."

So cut the cake and strike up the band. It's April Fool's Day at Billy Bob's.

Patriot vets relive Persian Gulf heroics

EL PASO (AP) — After a Patriot missile made history in mid-January by shooting down an Iraqi Scud missle headed for the air base in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, the soldiers in charge of the Patriots exploded in a raucous celebration.

It was the first time the Patriot missile system had ever shot down a missile in combat. Soldiers cheered, and high-five hand slaps were plentiful in the Saudi Arabian night among members of Alpha Battery, which is based at Fort Bliss, Texas.

"People were coming out of bunkers celebrating. You defied death," said Warrant Officer Terry Hall, 26, in charge of keeping the battery's Patriot system in working order. "It's the most incredible feeling. I hope I don't have to do it again."

Hall and two other members of Alpha Battery described their war experiences on Friday at Fort Bliss' McGregor Range, about 35 miles northeast of downtown El Paso. It's where Patriot batteries go through desert training.

The Saudi celebrations, they said, were repeated several times during the 42-day Persian Gulf war as Alpha Battery shot down five other Scud missiles and hit debris from two other Scuds knocked out by Bravo Battery, another Fort Bliss Patriot battery in Dhahran.

The Patriot's first war success came Jan. 18, just after 4:30 a.m., Saudi Arabia time.

The Scud attack caught the battery by surprise, Hall said. It occurred just as the battery was about to go out of its highest alert status.

"He'd (Saddam Hussein) fired on Israel, and we thought it was over," said Hall, who was inside the cramped van housing the Patriot's computers and the soldiers who opertate them.

"We knew when he was getting ready to fire (a Scud), and we knew when he fired, but this one snuck in on us," Hall said.

Suddenly, the Patriot computer picked up the Scud missile and automatically fired a Patriot missile.

"When the missile was launched, I was hoping it took the thing out. But it wasn't combat-tested — there was that doubt."

Debris from the 37-foot Scud missile fell only about 1,000 feet from Alpha Battery's compound.

"It took three to four days to sink in that we could've died" if the Patriot hadn't worked, Hall said.

Abuse problems

Leonard, in divorce proceedings made public Friday, acknowledged that he used alcohol and cocaine during the 1980s, following an eye injury that appeared to have ended his boxing career.

Tarpley, already with two strikes against him under the National Basketball Association's substance abuse policy, was arrested Friday night for investigation of drunk driving. According to the arrest report, Tarpley threatened officers after being stopped for driving 63 mph in a 35 mph zone.

Rebels runnin' no more

Duke pulls off year's big upset

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Duke's second chance at UNLV was the Runnin' Rebels' last at college basketball immortality.

Recouping from a 30-point loss in last year's NCAA championship game, the Blue Devils won a game they were given as much chance of winning as drawing an inside straight at the gaming tables.

They beat top-ranked UNLV 79-77 on Saturday to end the Runnin' Rebels' dream of a repeat title and an undefeated season.

Christian Laettner, the only Duke player who played well in the 103-73 loss last season, made two free throws with 12.7 seconds to play to give Duke (31-7) its final margin.

UNLV came downcourt with one final chance at keeping its dreams alive, but Anderson Hunt's 3-pointer with 2 seconds to play bounced off the rim.

Hunt was hugged by his teammates. Duke players celebrated. And UCLA stayed the last school to repeat in 1973, and Indiana in 1976 remained the last unbeaten champion.

The Runnin' Rebels' 45-game winning streak was ended two games short of where they had hoped.

Duke will play Kansas, a 79-73 winner

'Hawks down Tar Heels, 79-73

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Dean Smith was out of the game and North Carolina was out of the Final Four.

Pupil Roy Williams taught Smith, the teacher, a lesson Saturday: It's frustrating to play Kansas when the underdog Jayhawks are rolling toward a national championship.

The Jayhawks outshot, outrebounded and outplayed the Tar Heels for a 79-73 victory that moved them within one victory of their second national title in four seasons.

Smith, who was Williams' boss for 10 years, got so upset near the end that he was tossed from the game after getting his second technical foul. North Carolina officials said it was the first time since 1977 that Smith had been ejected.

In the last two weeks, Kansas, seeded third in the Southeast Region, has beaten the No. 2 (Arkansas), No. 3 (Indiana) and No. 4 teams (North Carolina) in the country.

Had top-ranked UNLV beaten Duke in the second semifinal, the Jayhawks would've had an opportunity to complete a 1-4 sweep.

In 1988, Danny Manning led Kansas on an improbable run to the national championship. This time, there are no All-Americans like Manning, just a collection of undersized, overlooked no-names like Adonis Jordan and Richard Scott.

Mark Randall and Jordan each scored 16 points for Kansas, while Scott, a freshman substitute, had 14 for the Jayhawks (27-7).

Hubert Davis led North Carolina (29-6) with 25 points.

After North Carolina star Rick Fox fouled out with 35 seconds left and the Tar Heels trailing 76-71, Smith walked

Last-place Abilene drops first-place Lee

By Bill Price

Coming into Saturday's District 4-5A game against Abilene High, it had seemed that Johnson Field was a place where the Midland Lee Rebels could not lose.

In Lee's two other district games on its home field, the Rebs came from behind in the last inning to beat both Midland High and Odessa Permian by one run.

That was not the case against AHS, though. The cold, blustery weather appeared to break Johnson Field's spell over visiting teams, as the Eagles were the ones who posted the seventh-inning heroics to break a 5-5 tie and take a 6-5 victory, their first district win of the year.

The loss made Lee 12-7 for the sea-

Virginia, Tennessee meet in ladies' final

■ Dreaming of free throws helps Tonya Cardoza and Virginia, while Tennessee continues its stranglehold on Stanford.

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — For Tonya Cardoza, it was a dream come true. For Connecticut, it was a nightmare.

Cordoza, who scored 16 points in leading Virginia to a 61-55 NCAA Final Four semifinal victory over Connecticut Saturday, sank four free throws in the final 22 seconds.

"I had a dream last night about shooting free throws," Cardoza said. "There was no particular opponent. I just recall seeing myself at the line shooting free throws.

The victory sent Virginia (30-2) into Sunday's title game against Tennessee, 68-60 winners over Stanford.

Connecticut finished the season at 29-5.

Virginia, which led 34-24 at the half, increased its lead to 14 points — 45-31 — as Heather Burge scored 10 of her 13 points.

Virginia, which shot only 35 percent from the field, got only 11 points from high-scoring Dawn Staley, who was hobbled with leg cramps.

"I think I'm going to have to come out and be more selective," Staley said of Sunday's game.

Connecticut coach Geno Auriemma credited his defense with holding Virginia in check.

"If you'd told me we were going to hold them to 61, I'd of told you we were going to win," he said.

Connecticut cut the deficit to 50-47 in a rally led by Meghan Pattyson's six points. Virginia then got five points, three on free throws, while holding Connecticut scoreless for the next 2:26, making it 55-47.

Virginia's Lady Cavaliers celebrate.

Connecticut scored the next four points on free throws and Stacey Wetzel hit a field goal, making it 55-53 with 28 seconds left. Cordoza's free throws and a basket at the buzzer by Melanee Wagener closed the scoring.

Wendy Davis led Connecticut with 17 points and Kerry Bascom had 14.

Bascom, whose outside shooting and defensive rebounding had keyed several Connecticut victories during the season, played only 13 minutes in the first half after picking up three fouls.

"There were 14 or 15 minutes to go in the first half when I got my third foul," Bascom said. "I took myself out of the game mentally. I kept thinking, 'Should I go in and rebound or not?' "

Bascom had 14 rebounds.

Tammi Reiss had 15 points for Virginia and Heather Burge scored 13.

Rain, cold wreak havoc on Soviets, other tracksters

By Joe Wyatt

SAN ANGELO — Just moments after the running of the 100-meter finals, an ear-shattering clap of thunder sounded a premature end to the 33rd San Angelo Relays Saturday.

Lightning and steady rain in and around San Angelo Stadium forced thin clads into sweat suits and sent onlookers scrambling for cover and cars as the Relays were halted early for the first time in the meet's storied history.

No teams were crowned following the stoppage, but winners in five divisions will receive trophies through the mail.

San Angelo Relays

Converse Judson took first with 84 points in Division I (6A). Other rain-shortened winners were Austin Reagan, 63.33 in Division II; Wylie, 79 in Division III; Munday, 62 in Division IV; and San Angelo Glenn, 111 in the 9th grade division.

Despite overcast, wintry conditions, some sterling individual performances were turned in early at the meet, which featured the first visit to Texas by a high school track team from the Soviet Union.

And the Soviets were hot, both on the track and literally.

"I train sometimes outside in snow, so this is very warm here," distance runner Nikanorov Victor, 14, said through a translator after he captured the Division I 3200-meter run in 9:59.09.

The Soviet team, from Ryazan, USSR, also had one of two meet records set on the day as Martinov Iliya triple jumped 47-9.75.

The other record went to Stanton's Jeremy Stallings, whose 1:57.41 in the 800 bettered the Division IV meet mark by over two seconds.

"I wanted to break the record," said Stallings, a sophomore who neared his personal best 1:55.9 with the effort. "I held back the first lap into the wind and over North Carolina, in Monday night's championship game.

Laettner finished with 28 points and it was his yeoman work off the boards which allowed Duke to stay in the game and hold nine leads in the second half.

UNLV (34-1) trailed in the second half this season for a total of 1 minutes, 21 seconds. Now, it will trail forever.

UNLV took a 76-71 lead with 2:31 to play, when George Ackles tipped in his own shot to cap a 6-0 run.

Bobby Hurley, plagued with stomach problems in last year's game in a poor performance, hit a 3-pointer 15 seconds later to cut the lead to two.

The Runnin' Rebels were called for a 45-second shot-clock violation with 1:24 left and Duke's Brian Davis drove the baseline for a three-point play and a 77-76 Duke lead with 1:02 left.

The Hoosier Dome crowd was cheering as it hadn't expected to late in a UNLV game. This was usually blowout time for the Rebels. Not this time, though.

Stacey Augmon missed a shot for UNLV, but Larry Johnson was fouled trying to convert the rebound with 49 seconds left. He missed both free throws, but a lane violation on Duke's Thomas Hill gave him another chance at the second and he made it to tie the game.

Duke ran down the shot clock, settling for a drive by Hill with 15 seconds to play. The shot missed, but Laettner grabbed the rebounds, was fouled and made both for the final points.

Duke had been no stranger to the Final Four, making its fourth consecutive appearance and fifth in six years. The Blue Devils had never left with a trophy and now they would get a chance to walk off the court with one on Monday night.

Win or lose in the final, ending UNLV's winning streak — the fourth-longest in Division I history — will remove some of the sting of last year's rout for Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski.

"It was one of the really great basketball games," Krzyzewski said. "Our kids hung in there the whole time, we just happened to play defense on the last exchange.

"We did it by not listening to anyone except Coach K and the coaching staff," Laettner said. "We went into the game thinking we could win and we went out on the floor and did it today. We had a good game plan, we played our game. And we just played really tough, very intense out there."

UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian said he hoped that Johnson would get a chance at a winning 3-pointer in the final seconds. Johnson brought the ball upcourt, passed to Hunt and never got the ball back.

"They played better than we did, they deserved to win, it was a great win for Duke and a tough loss for UNLV," Tarkanian said. "I just feel so bad for the kids, because they're the greatest group of kids I've ever been around. I just hurt inside for them."

Hunt finished with 29 points, the same as in in last season's title game, when he was named MVP. It was the absence of his backcourtmate over the final four minutes that made a huge difference.

Greg Anthony drew his fifth personal foul with 3:51 left when he was called for a charge. The basket was disallowed, and UNLV had lost its point guard and defensive specialist for crunch time.

WOMEN: Lady Vols beat Stanford for third time

(From 1B)

Virginia led 34-24 at the half. The Cavaliers went ahead 15-6 with 13:51 left in the half after a layup by Cardoza. The 9-0 run was fueled by six of Cardoza's 12 first-half points.

Connecticut closed to 25-20 with 3:47 remaining as Davis hit nine of her 12 first-half points. Virginia took its biggest lead of the half with a 9-3 run that made it 31-21 with 51 seconds left.

Virginia coach Debbie Ryan said her team would not practice Saturday night in preparation for Sunday's game.

"We're going to rest," Ryan said. "I don't think practicing will help at all."

Tennessee 68, Stanford 60

NEW ORLEANS — Peggy Evans gave Tennessee the lead on a three-point play with 4:39 to go, and Jody Adams and Dena Head hit key free throws down the stretch, giving the Lady Volunteers a 68-60 victory over Stanford and a berth in the championship game of the NCAA women's Final Four.

Tennessee will play Virginia for the title Sunday.

It was the third victory this season for Tennessee (29-5) over Stanford (26-6). The Lady Vols won 95-80 at Knoxville in the opening game for both teams, then won 84-77 on Dec. 30 in the championship game of the Hilton Head Challenge.

Stanford took an 18-17 lead when Val Whiting hit the front of a one-and-one with 5:32 to go in the first half, starting an 11-4 run to finish out the half.

Chris McMurdo scored four points in the run and Kelly Dougherty scored the last six after Tennessee had cut the Cardinal lead to 22-21 on a pair of free throws by Lisa Harrison. Stanford led 28-21 at halftime.

Tennessee tied it 40-40 on a layup by Adams after Stanford's Molly Goodenbour fell down and turned the ball over.

But Stanford went ahead again on a jumper by Whiting and extended the lead to 49-44 on a 3-pointer by Goodenbour with 9:39 left.

With Stanford leading 54-50, Daedra Charles converted a rebound and Evans made her three-point play, giving Tennessee a 55-54 lead.

Charles finished with 16 points, including 14 in the second half. Adams and Head each had 15. Lisa Harrison led Tennessee in rebounding with 12, and Charles had nine.

Sonja Henning and Dougherty each had eight rebounds for Stanford.

Stanford lost 6-foot-3 forward Trisha Stevens in the regionals because of a ruptured tendon in her right knee, and played Saturday without Julie Zeilstra, also 6-3. Zeilstra pulled a calf muscle in pregame warmups.

UNC: Smith ejected in final seconds toward center court and asked referee Pete Pavia, "How much time do I have" to substitute for Fox.

Pavia, who had slapped Smith with a technical in the first half, then hit the North Carolina coach with another technical that resulted in Smith's automatic ejection.

As Smith left the court, he stopped briefly to chat with Williams, shook his hand and congratulated Kansas' players. The big-screen television at the Hoosier Dome then showed Smith smiling as he walked toward the locker room.

"I don't like the way it ended because of the way I feel for the man (Smith) and because I think it takes away from what the kids do," said Williams, who was an assistant under Smith for a decade at North Carolina before going to Kansas in 1988.

Smith, who didn't get any technicals during the regular season, denied that he cursed at Pavia, who has a history of ejecting coaches — including Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs in the championshiup game of the National Invitation Tournament Wednesday night.

"I have every bad habit in the world, but I don't swear," Smith said. "There were 30 seconds left, and it was just my chance to say something to him. It was foolish of him to call it and foolish of me to have some fun."

It apparently was where Smith stood, not what he said, that got him thrown out. Jim Delaney, the NCAA Division I basketball chairman, said Smith was out of the coaching box when Pavia made the call.

"The coach may not be out of the box, even in a deadball situation or substitution in this case," Delaney said. "So basically the call was by the official that the coach was out of the box and the technical foul rule was applied."

Pavia was unavailable for comment.

The Jayhawks outrebounded the taller Tar Heels 51-42 and outshot them 41 percent-38 percent. Randall and Alonzo Jamison each had 11 rebounds for Kansas.

It was the first Final Four meeting between Kansas and North Carolina since their famous 1957 title game, which the Tar Heels won in triple overtime 54-53.

Another unusual twist to this year's game was that Smith went to Kansas — and played on its firstr NCAA title team, in 1952 — and Williams to North Carolina.

Kansas used a 17-1 run to take a 43-34 halftime lead and led the rest of the way. North Carolina closed to 58-57 on a layup by Fox with 8:18 left, and had the ball and a chance to take the lead before a steal by Sean Tunstall.

The Tar Heels never got closer than five points after that.

Hall, Whiles claim high gymnastic honors

Staff Report

RICHARDSON — Two Midland boys were among the top three in the Class II all-around competition of the state gymnastics meet for Class I, II and III age groups.

Competing in the 13- to 15-year-old group, Ryan Hall won first place in the high bar and rings exercises, and finished second in the floor exercise and vault competition. Those victories gave him enough points to claim first place in the all-around competition.

Also in the 13-15 group, Midland's Jared Whiles came in third in all-around points by winning the parallel bars event.

Both boys are members of the Midland Sandstormers, sponsored by the Alamo YMCA, and are coached by David Jones.

Angels lose, 4-2

Staff Report

MESA, Ariz. — The Midland Angels saw their preseason record go to 2-3 Saturday with a 4-2 loss to Canton-Akron, Ohio, here at Gene Autry Park.

Canton-Akron, a AA team in the Cleveland Indians organization, scored its four runs on nine hits while committing three errors. The Angels earned four hits and were credited with one error.

Retired boxer Sugar Ray Leonard confessed to drug, alcohol use in the 1980s at a press conference Saturday.

Leonard admits substance use

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former world champion Sugar Ray Leonard acknowledged Saturday that he used cocaine and alcohol during the early 1980s after an eye injury appeared to end his boxing career.

Leonard, 34, who has appeared in nationally broadcast anti-drug public service announcements, said he indulged in cocaine for three years, quitting in early 1986. "It was wrong, it was childish, it was stupid," he said at a news conference.

"I stand here ashamed, hurt," Leonard said. "I think about my parents, my ex-wife, my kids, people that care for me, my fans that made me ... what I am."

Leonard's confession came after a published report that Juanita Leonard, his wife of 10 years, had accused him during divorce proceedings last summer of physically abusing her while under the influence of alcohol.

The Los Angeles Times, in excerpts from Maryland court records, quoted her Saturday as saying that Leonard also was an occasional user of cocaine.

Leonard, speaking slow and somberly, said, "This is quite painful and quite emotional for me, so please bear with me."

He said reading the article "killed me this morning." His private life, he said, "has never been exposed or disclosed. ... This article indicates the reason why."

The former welterweight and middleweight champion said he began using cocaine after suffering a detached retina in training in 1982 and retired when doctors warned he would lose sight in the eye if he fought again.

"I wanted more," Leonard said. "I wanted that arena. I didn't want anyone to tell me my career had to end.

"Maybe what I should have done was thank God for my blessings," he said. Instead, "I decided to search for a substitute. ... I resorted to drugs and alcohol."

He evaded questions on how often he used cocaine, but said he was not an addict and never needed treatment. He called himself a "recreational user."

"I used it when I felt bad, I used it when I missed not competing at that level," Leonard said. "It was a crutch, something that enabled me to forget."

Leonard denied ever using drugs while training for a fight and said he turned down requests to make anti-drug public service announcements while he was taking cocaine because "I don't lie about myself."

In 1989, Leonard and rival Tommy Hearns appeared together in nationally televised anti-drug public service announcements and made several appearances before school children, urging them to stay off drugs.

Leonard said he quit drugs in early 1986 when he woke up one day and "what I saw in the mirror was scary."

Leonard came back from retirement to beat Kevin Howard in 1984, but shortly afterward announced his retirement from boxing again. In April 1987, he made another comeback, winning the middleweight title from Marvelous Marvin Hagler.

He retired again last Feb. 10, immediately after losing a decision to Terry Norris at New York's Madison Square Garden. He finished with a career record of 36-2-1.

Leonard said he was more worried about the effect of his announcement on his two children than what it might do to his future income from endorsements and commercials.

"I can never ever erase the pain or the scars I have made through my stupidity, my selfishness," he said. "All I can do is say I'm sorry, but that is not enough.

"Here's a young man that had everything in the world from money to fame, glory, a beautiful family and kids," he said of himself. "Why would he do that? It's almost inconceivable."

The published report of Leonard's divorce proceedings quoted his former wife as saying Leonard would come home intoxicated and "throw me around. He at one point would harass me physically and mentally in front of the children."

Leonard said "I'd be lying" to deny he and his wife had ever fought. But he said "that was in our house, between us. Unfortunately, during the proceedings, which are very emotional and very painful, certain things are taken out of context or exaggerated."

Leonard said he hid his cocaine use from his brother, a recovered addict, because "I didn't want him to look down on me."

He said his message to his fans and to kids was "that's not the right road to take. Thank God I'm matured and became productive again and I'm happy again."

Recuperating Maverick threatens police, according to arrest report

Associated Press

DALLAS — Roy Tarpley, the Dallas Mavericks' recuperating star forward who has twice violated the NBA's anti-drug policy, was arrested Saturday on suspicion of drunken driving.

Two Dallas police officers observed Tarpley in his black 1988 Mercedes-Benz traveling 63 mph in a 35-mph zone on a Dallas street about 1 a.m., said police spokesman Ed Spencer.

Tarpley, who was convicted of drunken driving last year, was pulled over and appeared to be drunk, but refused to take a Breathalyzer test or to be handcuffed, Spencer said.

"Tarpley did not want to be handcuffed and indicated he would get physical," Spencer said, reading from the arrest report. "He indicated he would beat the officers and told them if they wanted to handcuff him to call an army."

Tarpley was transferred to the county jail without handcuffs, Spencer said. He posted a $200 bond at 3 a.m. on a charge of investigation of driving while intoxicated, said Dallas County Sheriff's Deputy B.D. Brown.

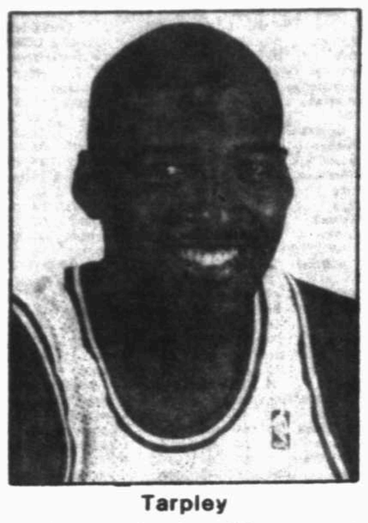
Spencer said police would file a formal DWI charge against Tarpley on Monday.

If convicted, Tarpley could face between 15 days and two years in prison and a fine of up to $2,000, punishments that are stiffer than those for first-time offenders. His refusal to take a blood-alcohol content test also could cost Tarpley a 90-day suspension of his drivers' license.

Drinking alcoholic beverages would be a violation of Tarpley's aftercare program, but the charge doesn't necessarily mean a "third strike" for Tarpley in the NBA's anti-drug program. He will, however, meet with league-approved doctors concerning his aftercare.

He has missed 165 games, including Saturday night's contest in Seattle, during the past three seasons because of injuries and violations of his aftercare.

"We care very much for Roy," Mavericks general manager Norm Sonju said in a statement. "We also respect the job the police have to do. We are confident the police will conduct a fair and thorough investigation. We are not qualified to comment further until the investigation is complete."



Tarpley

Tarpley has an unlisted phone number and was not available for comment.

"It's a tough thing to talk about. Nobody wants to discuss it," said one of his teammates who spoke on condition of anonymity. "I don't want to say what our reaction was, believe me."

The Mavericks said doctors in charge of Tarpley's aftercare program had been notified "and will be meeting with Roy concerning his aftercare." They gave no further details, and officials at the ASAP Family Treatment Center in Van Nuys, Calif., which administers the NBA's treatment programs, did not return phone calls to The Associated Press.

Tarpley has been recuperating from surgery to repair a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee. He suffered the injury Nov. 9 against the Orlando Magic when he came down wrong after a fast-break layup five games into the season.

Tarpley, who has twice been treated for drug and alcohol abuse, was suspended by the NBA on Nov. 16, 1989, after he was charged with drunken driving and resisting arrest on a Dallas freeway. The violation didn't constitute a third strike, but he missed 33 games and lost $240,500 in salary. He was reinstated Jan. 22, 1990.

Tarpley received a two-year probation on Sept. 5, 1990, on the DWI charge. He pleaded guilty and was ordered to pay a $1,000 fine and court and probation costs totalling $215. As part of the plea bargain, prosecutors agreed to drop the charge of resisting arrest, and Tarpley agreed not to pursue litigation against the city for the scrapes and bruises he suffered when he was arrested.

In October 1987, Tarpley admitted seeking counseling for alcohol and cocaine problems, constituting his first violation of the NBA's anti-drug policy.

The second came Jan. 5, 1989, when he told drug counselors at the ASAP Family Treatment Center that he needed help to control his drug problem. He was suspended without pay and went to an ASAP center in Van Nuys, Calif.

Tarpley, 7-0 and 244 pounds, was the seventh pick in the 1986 draft out of Michigan.

Soccer star Maradona shocks fans

Associated Press

NAPLES, Italy — Diego Maradona remained elusive, and his Naples club was silent. But fans and players expressed shock and sorrow that the world's most famous soccer player had used cocaine.

"I have great esteem and respect for Diego," teammate Gian-Franco Zola said Saturday. "I can't believe he took drugs. All Napoli players are upset as a friend is in deep trouble."

Friday, the Italian soccer federation announced that Maradona had tested positive for cocaine. He faces a suspension from six months to two years.

Maradona's wife burst into tears on hearing the news.

"This episode has weighed heavily on us," Giuseppe Incocciati, another of Maradona's teammates, said after Saturday's 1-1 tie with Internazionale of Milan in an Italian league match.

"We all feel involved, above all emotionally."

Careca, a Brazilian and one of Maradona's closest friends on the team, said the players dedicated the game to their captain, who was sitting out a one-game suspension for arguing with referees.

"We love him," said Careca, who scored his team's goal.

"I have faith in him. I tell him to be brave, to overcome in a big way even this terrible episode."

The Naples club kept silent. Maradona himself remained secluded in his Naples home the day after the sensational announcement by the Italian soccer federation, according to Maradona's manager, Marco Franchi.

Azinger maintains lead

Associated Press

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — A couple of veterans on a comeback will be chasing a lanky lad who never went away in Sunday's final round of the Players Championship.

Paul Azinger, one of the PGA Tour's leading performers over the past five seasons, retained the lead with a third-round 69 in near-ideal playing conditions Saturday.

The skinny Azinger, whose victory in the Pebble Beach Classic earlier this season marked the fifth consecutive year he has won at least one tournament, completed 54 holes in 204.

One year later, Musburger a happier man

Associated Press

NEW YORK — When Brent Musburger went to the Final Four last year as the premier sports announcer in television, he had no idea how final it would be.

Musburger

There's still a trace of bitterness in his voice when he talks about his abrupt departure after 22 years with CBS. But one year later, it is tempered by a new job with ABC, and a sweeter outlook.

"We talked it over a lot, me and my brother, and my wife and kids, and I've come to realize this is the luckiest thing that ever happened to me," Musburger said.

"I didn't realize it at the time, but this is like somebody pushes you off a cliff, and you hit a big pile of whip cream at the bottom. And you say to yourself, 'Whoah. Where's this been all the time?' That's what it's been like."

On April 1, 1990, CBS and Musburger parted ways. For 15 years, he had been not only the top announcer at CBS, but one of the most visible men in sports. His five-year, $10 million contract was due to expire the following July, and the network announced that negotiations between CBS Sports president Neal Pilson and Musburger's agent, brother Todd Musburger, had fallen apart.

"My guess is that Pilson told that to some of his upper executives," Musburger said. "But that was not the case at all. There were no negotiations. They were stringing my brother along just to get him to the date when they were going to terminate me. There's no other way to portray this.

"The euphemisms that corporations use don't go down with me. If you get fired, you get fired. I wasn't the first. I won't be the last."

The next day, Musburger worked his final assignment for CBS, UNLV's 30-point blowout of Duke for college basketball's national championship. Exactly a month later, on May 2, he was hired by ABC for $11 million over six years. It represented a slight cut in pay and forced the 51-year-old Musburger to take a step back from the relentless limelight at CBS.

"It's been a completely different rhythm for me, going away from the 'NFL Today' and now away from the basketball tournament," Musburger said. "But it's been a relief when I see some of the problems they've run up against over there with their properties.

"I feel very badly for some of my friends that have been trapped in the budget cutbacks going on."

In the past two years, CBS has spent more than $3.5 billion to acquire rights to sports events, including $1 billion or more apiece for major league baseball, the NFL and the NCAA tournament. CBS admitted losing $55 million on baseball alone last year, principally because of the four-game World Series sweep by Cincinnati, and all the networks lost money on the NFL.

Musburger said that already last spring "you could see the screws tightening. They'd put at risk $3.5 billion, so you could see them starting to focus in. People were getting nervous, antsy, executives were running around talking to each other — all the things that you see in the classic corporate world when things go bad."

The figures for the NCAA tournament aren't in, but some industry insiders have predicted CBS could lose as much as $25 million on that property this year.

"As an organization, we were at a crossroads," CBS executive producer Ted Shaker said. "We were either going to be stronger or end up a year later to be weaker. I think we've strengthened our hand. We decided we had to diversify rather than center everything with one guy."

Shaker said that when Musburger left, other announcers — Greg Gumbel, Pat O'Brien, Jim Nantz and Andrea Joyce to name a few — were able to move out of the shadows and into the spotlight.

"I think it's a credit to them and to CBS that we were able to go on and grow as an organization in this year since Brent went to ABC," Shaker said.

"It was the most difficult decision I've been part of here, and I've been at CBS for 17 years. ... Brent had contributed to CBS in so many ways for so many years, but having one man do all those different things, that period was over when he left. And we wouldn't see it again. He had a unique position in sports television here at CBS, and I'm not sure it will ever be duplicated."

Musburger later accused Pilson and Shaker of carrying out a personal vendetta against him and said "unnamed CBS executives" had tried to destroy his reputation.

Now, Pilson says he has no interest in talking about Musburger, and Musburger seems more interested in talking about his new boss, ABC Sports president Dennis Swanson.

"The conditions are so much better at ABC because you don't have the corporate situation. There's nobody sitting on you every minute to make more money, or just get even, or get a rating," he said.

"This is a different kind of operation. Dennis takes care of his business, and it never filters down to the rest of us. I can't tell you how nice it is to have someone just say, go do an event, and he expects you to be prepared, be there on time and get it done. There's not a lot of second-guessing going on, and I guess that stems from the fact they don't have as many billions at risk."

While the bitterness is fading, Musburger has one lingering disappointment for a lost opportunity. He had been looking forward to doing baseball, a new property for CBS.

"I would have loved to have done baseball, no question about it," he said. "On the other side, I'd done it on radio for eight years, and I'd covered it as a writer in Chicago. I think for a lot of people that never had been around it, the romance is still there. I didn't have the romance about it anymore. I just would have enjoyed being around the game."

And there is another lingering disappointment over the way it ended at CBS.

"I went to work for CBS in 1968, and it's kind of interesting to me that — with such turmoil and change — not one CBS corporate executive ever called me after it was over. I guess they're just in their own world and off again," Musburger said.

"It's nothing that I'm bitter about. I expected it, I guess. That's what happens in the corporate world."

Magic ends Rockets streak at 13

Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Scott Skiles scored 25 points and Orlando set three franchise defensive records Saturday in a 114-82 victory over Houston, breaking the Rockets 13-game win streak.

The Magic led 26-12 after the first quarter, the lowest yield in Magic history. Houston got no closer than eight points in the second quarter and trailed by at least 10 throughout the second half. Houston tried to apply full-court pressure in the fourth period, but Orlando outscored the Rockets 36-22.

Orlando's swarming defense frustrated the Rockets. Houston hit 31 of 101 floor shots for 30.1 percent, erasing the previous low of 36.7 percent for an Orlando opponent, by Sacramento on Jan 7. The Rockets missed all 15 of their 3-pointers, with Vernon Maxwell coming up empty on eight attempts.

The 82 points was one less than Sacramento's total against Orlando in January that had been the Magic's record.

Skiles made seven of 14 shots and had 14 assists as Orlando hit 42 of 78 shots for 53.8 percent. The Magic have won five of their last six games.

Reserve Jerry Reynolds had 18 points and Jeff Turner added 14 points and 12 rebounds.

Houston's Akeem Olajuwon left with 5:59 remaining in the first half with three fouls, with four rebounds and no points after missing five shots. He finished with 12 points and 11 rebounds, but missed 10 of 15 shots.

The Rockets' starters combined to make only 23 of 71 shots, 32.4 percent. Houston had averaged 109.6 points a game during its 13-game win streak.

Otis Thorpe led the Rockets with 13 points and 16 rebounds.

Knicks 130, Nets 117

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — John Starks made his first nine shots and scored 25 points as the New York Knicks snapped a four-game losing streak with a victory over the New Jersey Nets.

The Knicks hit 33 of their first 42 shots and finished 55 of 86, 64 percent.

New York, which swept the season series with New Jersey, took the lead for good 10:23 into the game by reeling off seven straight points. The spurt included a three-point play by Patrick Ewing and baskets by Kiki Vandeweghe and Maurice Cheeks.

Bucks 104, Hawks 96

MILWAUKEE — Frank Brickowski had 23 points and a career-high 17 rebounds and Fred Roberts matched his season high with 23 points, leading the Milwaukee Bucks past the Atlanta Hawks.

Jay Humphries added 22 points and Alvin Robertson had 19 for the Bucks. Dominique Wilkins had 27 points and 13 rebounds and Spud Webb scored 19 points in Atlanta's third straight loss.

The Hawks, who need three victories to clinch an Eastern Conference playoff position, have lost eight of their last 10 games.

The Bucks improved to 29-7 at home and are 23-8 at home against the Hawks since the 1980-81 season.

Duane Ferrell made two free throws and John Battle hit a jumper at the start of the fourth quarter to close the Hawks to 81-80. But Humphries made his fourth 3-pointer of the night and Roberts put in a rebound basket to put the Bucks up 86-80 with 9:40 left.

Spurs 130, Nuggets 116

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson scored 31 points to lead seven San Antonio players in double figures and the Spurs rolled to their fifth straight victory.

The Spurs increased their Midwest Division lead to one game over idle Utah and two games over the Houston Rockets. San Antonio, which has won 10 straight at home, gave the Nuggets their 31st road loss in 34 games.

The Nuggets led 26-13 when Robinson ignited a 21-6 San Antonio run with eight points, giving his team a 34-32 lead at the end of the first quarter.

Midway through the second quarter, Robinson again sparked a San Antonio rally with nine points, helping the Spurs break away to a 57-43 advantage with 5:26 left before the half.

SuperSonics 115, Mavericks 102

SEATTLE — Shawn Kemp scored 23 points as the Seattle SuperSonics moved within four games of clinching a Western Conference playoff spot with a victory over the Dallas Mavericks.

Ricky Pierce and Eddie Johnson each contributed 19 points for Seattle, which leads the Los Angeles Clippers by seven games with 11 to play in a battle for the conference's eighth and last playoff spot.

Pierce scored 11 points in the fourth quarter with Kemp on the bench most of the time with five fouls.

Herb Williams led Dallas with 31.

Dallas lost its fourth straight game on the same day that Roy Tarpley, the Mavericks' star forward who twice has violated the league's anti-drug policy, was arrested on suspicion of drunken driving.

Blazers 121, Timberwolves 91

PORTLAND, Ore. — Danny Ainge scored 19 points and Buck Williams 18, including 14 in the decisive first half as Portland beat Minnesota, the Trail Blazers' sixth straight victory.

Tony Campbell had 26 points and Pooh Richardson 23 for the Timberwolves, who have lost 18 of their last 19 on the road.

Leading 44-36 midway through the second period, Portland went on a 10-0 run with Ainge hitting a 3-pointer.

Thunder rolls past 'Hawks

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Kerwin Bell passed for 341 yards and four touchdowns Saturday night, leading the Orlando Thunder to a 58-20 WLAF victory over the Raleigh-Durham Skyhawks.

Bell, the league's leading passer, hit 29 of 44 passes before leaving with two minutes remaining in the third quarter. In two games, the former University of Florida quarterback has thrown nine touchdown passes.

The Thunder improved to 2-0 in the new league, averaging 46.2 points a game. The Skyhawks fell to 0-2.

The Thunder opened the game by recovering an on-side kick. Charlie Baumann kicked a 48-yard field goal seven plays later and Orlando went on to score the first 30 points.

Baumann had two more field goals and halfback Eric Mitchell threw a 53-yard touchdown pass to Bruce LaSane. Bell followed with a 16-yard touchdown toss to LaSane and a 27-yard scoring strike to John Simpson.

Fire 17, Surge 10

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — John Miller returned an interception 99 yards for a touchdown late in the third quarter, giving the Birmingham Fire a victory over the Sacramento Surge in the WLAF.

The crowd, estimated at 16,500, was considerably smaller than the estimated 53,000 at Legion Field last week for the Fire's opener. Temperatures that dipped near freezing — and the NCAA tournament semifinals — could have affected the turnout.

Miller's interception came with the game tied 10-10 and the Surge driving for the go-ahead score.

But on second and goal from the 6-yard line Sacramento quarterback Mike Elkins threw a pass that Miller caught just outside the Fire end zone.

Perryton native wants his manager's job

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Mike Hargrove isn't sure whether John McNamara will retire as manager of the Cleveland Indians this year, next year, or five years from now. But when he does, Hargrove wants the job.

"It's only human to play 'what if.' But you know, it's not set in stone that Mike Hargrove is going to be the next manager," said Hargrove the Indians' first base coach. He is regarded as most likely to succeed McNamara.

Before the Indians signed McNamara to a two-year contract in November 1989, Hargrove, a native of Perryton, Tex., was very much in the running for the job. A former Cleveland first baseman, Hargrove coached and managed in the Indians' farm system for four years. He won manager of the year honors twice in that time.

Team president Hank Peters, however, decided Hargrove needed a little more seasoning, and he chose the experienced McNamara. On the same day, Hargrove was appointed first base coach.

Hargrove understood the thinking, but he takes nothing for granted.

"All I can do is do the best job I can as first base coach and Johnny Mac's right-hand man," Hargrove said. "When the time comes that he steps down, if that opportunity presents itself, I've got to take advantage of it, here or wherever it's at."

Meantime, Hargrove is studying everything McNamara does.

"There isn't much that's happened in this game that hasn't happened to Johnny Mac," Hargrove said. "I'm crazy if I don't keep my eyes and ears open and watch how he does things."

Pack picks up Tomczak

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — The Green Bay Packers said Saturday they had reached a contract agreement with quarterback Mike Tomczak, a Plan B free agent from the Chicago Bears.

Contract terms were not disclosed.

Sing praises — Christ is risen!

At times one may wonder how a promise, a kiss in a garden, 30 pieces of silver, an official sentence of death and an empty tomb have been able to hold so much of the world's population transfixed for nearly 2,000 years. Those items constitute the elements of a great mystery.

Yet today, Christians the world over will once again attend sunrise services and worship in churches in a profession of faith that they know the answer to the mystery: Jesus Christ, the Savior.

This carpenter known as Jesus lived so long ago that many would claim He could not possibly wield any influence on today's society. But congregations of His faithful gather weekly and more frequently in His name to proclaim His kingdom and worship Him in direct contradiction to the claim that His influence has faded.

And in a thousand different ways every day, numerous individuals find other ways that the humble carpenter known as Jesus Christ is still having a dramatic impact on their lives — in high-rise offices in big cities, on playgrounds filled with children, on the field of battle and elsewhere. The evidence is overwhelming: Jesus Christ is as alive today in the world as he was 2,000 years ago when he walked among men on the Earth and performed miracles!

Today, as Christians throughout the world gather in churches to proclaim the resurrection of Jesus Christ, the Earth itself is awakening from the "death" of the winter months in a symbolic renewal of life.

Our world turns daily through new conflicts; wars begin and end, hardships mount and tragedies occur. But Christianity promises that the grave is not an end but a beginning, and that Jesus Christ is our strength and our salvation. Through death, we find everlasting life and the Savior's promise fulfilled.

The "mystery" has been solved. Easter is the fulfillment of Jesus Christ's promise. The grave could not hold Him and it will not hold us. Mankind will find its victory in His loving embrace. Life is everlasting!

Happy Easter!

Intent of grand jury bill is questionable

For all their campaign talk of putting away the criminals, it's certainly worth noting which side of the fence a good many of our state legislators actually come down on. Accused criminals would find the single biggest legal boon to come their way in decades in the grand jury bill being pushed by supporters of House Speaker Gib Lewis.

If the grand jury measure is enacted, Texas prosecutors suddenly will have a much tougher time winning indictments of accused drug dealers, violent criminals and white collar racketeers.

There are people who would argue the changes nevertheless are legitimate from a civil libertarian point of view. But the Legislature's sudden interest in civil liberties has appeared as if from nowhere in the immediate wake of the House Speaker's own problems over accusations of official corruption.

The proposed measure would radically change grand jury rules, for the first time allowing lawyers to accompany their clients on appearances before grand juries. . . .

The bill being proposed by the Gib Lewis group is a very radical departure from the oldest traditions of the law.

What is most distressing is the obvious connection between Speaker Lewis' struggle with Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle and this measure.

The Speaker's own personal legal problems seem to be putting him and a good many of his colleagues in the Legislature in a position that could not be described as the side of the angels.

Space-station project has questionable value

Sometimes less is more; more often, less is less. Consider NASA's downsized space-station project, which many scientists claim is now too small to be of any real use.

Last week the Bush administration gave its support to the redesigned project, which cut its original $37 billion price tag by about 15 percent. According to the National Research Council, that would cut its value as a research tool by closer to 100 percent, because it no longer would carry enough people or equipment to accomplish its main scientific goals.

Dan Quayle is no rocket scientist himself, but he was quick to dismiss these experts' criticisms. The real importance of this project is "to further America's leadership in exploring space," the vice president said.

To boldly go where no nation has gone before: a noble goal. But Captain Kirk — er, Quayle — may be overlooking a few unpleasant earthbound considerations, such as the bloated federal budget deficit. If Congress balked last year at spending $37 billion for a modest scientific return, why would it want to spend $31 billion for what may now be a negligible scientific return? . . .

If a space station is a good idea, let NASA build one that will actually be of some use . . . But don't cut corners on a station that won't be able to do the job for which it originally was designed. One Hubble Space Telescope fiasco is enough.

Amin is living in comfort in Saudi Arabia

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia — The Saudis are eager to get their hands on Saddam Hussein so they can try him for his treachery. Yet, living undisturbed in sanctuary in this Red Sea port is one of the most despicable butchers in history — a man who had the limbs chopped off his ex-wife, a man who once stored the heads of his enemies in his freezer so he could berate them, a man who chided Adolf Hitler for "killing too few Jews."

Anderson

Idi Amin Dada, the one-time Ugandan dictator, makes Saddam look like an amateur. Amin tortured and murdered between 100,000 and 300,000 of his own people and, in a ceremony to gain power over his enemies, ate some of their body parts. His eight-year reign of terror ended when he was overthrown in 1979 by an army of Tanzanians and Ugandan rebels.

And when he had nowhere else to turn, Saudi Arabia took him in. Even Moammar Gadhafi, the "mad dog of the Middle East," washed his paws of Amin. Gadhafi first let Amin find shelter in Libya, and then threw him out. When the full extent of Amin's butchery became broadly known, Gadhafi publicly apologized for having supported him.

But not Saudi Arabia. The porcine Amin lives in luxury in Jeddah, having gotten away with mass murder. The difference between Saddam Hussein and Idi Amin is that Amin, a Muslim, was careful not to brutalize other Muslims.

The only people who were safe in Uganda, with a population of 12 million, were the country's 800,000 Muslims and the Nubians from southern Sudan. The Muslims were Amin's religious kinsmen and the Nubians became his thugs and torturers. Sporting flowered shirts, bell-bottom trousers and sunglasses (even at night) the Nubians helped Amin eliminate about one in every 50 Ugandans.

Under ancient Muslim rules regarding hospitality and sanctuary, the Saudis felt obliged to give Amin asylum. But Saddam is another story. He is a Muslim whom the Saudis once called "brother." They gave him billions of dollars to fight against Iran (not an Arab nation). But when he chose last August to invade a brother country, Kuwait, he was condemned in Saudi Arabia as an "enemy of God." Instead of sanctuary like Amin, Saddam can expect execution if he ever falls into Saudi hands.

If Saddam had chosen to attack Israel instead of an Arab country, things might have been different. Amin, on the other hand, was always politically correct if morally repulsive. The Saudis were not unhappy when Amin led other African nations in breaking relations with Israel.

There were so many bodies to dispose of during Amin's reign that his men tossed them into the Nile to be eaten by crocodiles. But there weren't enough crocodiles so the bodies floated ashore for all to see. About 30 of them clogged Uganda's key dam and had to be extracted by scuba divers so the electrical generators could be started up again.

Compared to Amin, Saddam Hussein's megalomania would have been tame, except Saddam had something that Amin didn't — an army. He could threaten vital U.S. interests and Amin could not.

To our knowledge, the United States never pressed the Saudi government to extradite Amin back to Uganda to stand trial. Nor did the United States send half a million armed Americans to Uganda to liberate the people there from Amin.

Suffering through long movies on the brain

The Academy Awards put me in mind of movies. Here are some thoughts that movies put me in mind of while watching them, usually on a VCR years after everybody else has seen them:

Baker

"Death in Venice" — This is a pretty movie and it's doing a nice job of creating the funereal air of Thomas Mann's story. But it is long. Long, long. Long. When did movies start lasting forever?

"Paths of Glory," one of the best ever, takes less than 90 minutes.

"The Maltese Falcon," another super job, is only slightly longer. Nowadays two hours and a half is routine . . .

Venice full of plague! Hey, I'd forgotten this: Dirk Bogarde is suffering. Long. The audience is suffering.

Idea for horror-flick: The usual weird aliens infect Hollywood with a monstrous endless-movie plague so all America will doze while invaders from . . .

"Driving Miss Daisy" — This movie scares me. I'm afraid to have an opinion. If I like it I'm probably a racist who enjoys seeing a black man work as a servant. If I don't like it I'm probably a white supremacist who hates to see a white woman treating a black man as a human being. Why do I let myself get trapped into seeing movies like this?

"Kindergarten Cop" — Movies like this make me ashamed. I know I shouldn't be having a good time, but I am anyhow. It's like drinking martinis. Gin destroys your liver, Schwarzenegger destroys your mind. I know that, yet here I am, enjoying it. Guilt, guilt, guilt! What'll I tell people: Keep mum about seeing this movie or try for regular-guy bonus points by confessing I like Schwarzenegger? Oh-oh, Arnold is going to hit that lousy husband! Ooh! Well, he deserved it.

Why don't video shops carry those un-profound, unspiritual 1930s baseball movies that starred Joe E. Brown? Where do the dead baseball players hang out after the autumn corn harvest? What's a great actor like James Earl Jones doing in a movie like this? Not in a class with those elegant Yellow Pages commercials of his: "This is the book that got Bubba cooked." Tells the story effectively, economically. That's movie-making. Back in the corn, eh?

"The Cook, the Thief, His Wife, and Her Lover" — It's depressing to realize I'm watching this without getting sick. I'll never go to a movie again.

"Night of the Iguana" — Am I really thinking this? I can't be. But I am. I can't stop it. It's going to pop out: Richard Burton was a terrible actor. There, I've thought it! Richard Burton was a terrible actor, a really terrible actor!

"And Then There Were None" — OK, so 10 people unknown to each other are so desperate for company that they accept an invitation from a complete stranger to come to dinner at his place on this remote island, and as they are murdered, one by one, little Indian figurines painstakingly hand-carved apparently by the murderer . . . I can't believe I'm looking at this. Let's check out Arsenio Hall.

"Last Exit to Brooklyn" — It's probably called something like "post-neo-realism." Maybe it's plain old German expressionism. What in the world are these people supposed to be doing? Maybe it's post-modern German expressionism. This is Brooklyn? No wonder Manhattan people never go over there. What's a nice actor like Stephen Lang doing in this nutty Teutonic Brooklyn? Wait a minute: it's probably Brechtian. That's it, I'll bet: neo-Brechtianism.

"Hairspray" — Baltimore again. A really funny movie! John Waters' Baltimore this time. Waters shows us that what's popularly thought to be beauty is really grotesque, but he's amused by this, not disposed to indict American society for appalling taste. Reminds me: Must soon write another column indicting American society. Keeps the franchise.

GEORGE WILL

First springtime rays bring forth the bats

WAUCHULA, Fla. — When the hubbub of life over in Avon Park sets your nerves jangling, you can drive down the undulating road to this hamlet set in the center of Hardee County, in the center of the peninsula, midway between most places. Here, far from Florida's beachfront condominiums and flashy tourist attractions, the Hardee Wildcats are hosting the St. Alban's Bulldogs, who are down from Washington, rounding into shape for the high school baseball season.

Will

The night is cool but the coffee at the concession stand is hot and strong and a smattering of high school girls wearing shorts and tans and orange satin Hardee jackets glow beneath the lights. After a rocky start, this trip has righted itself.

Picture this. Since September about three dozen teen-age boys — a critical mass of critical masses — have put up with school and winter so they could get down here for the pleasure of eating badly and playing ball. And it has rained. They are living on donuts, pizza and, 'round about midnight, nachos from the Circle K store out on the highway that is sown so thick with fast-food joints that just a drive down it elevates your cholesterol. Furthermore, something in (or perhaps not yet in) these creatures causes them to express emancipation from parents by dropping Doritos into the retentive shag of a Days Inn motel carpet.

There are serious sides — well, slivers — to the trip. For example, the shortstop was sent south packing a stack of 3 x 5 cards containing SAT vocabulary words. One afternoon found him standing at a pay phone along U.S. Route 27, getting a long-distance vocabulary quiz, administered by his father, as the 18-wheelers whined by hauling oranges north.

The other night the Bulldogs were rolling, 9-1, over Avon Park's Red Devils. (An adequate name, but not up there with Toledo's Mud Hens or the old drug company semi-pro team, the Paregorics). Then the wheels fell off. A relief pitcher found the plate moving around on him and a Red Devil homered over the best outfield fence sign in America: "Beef and Baseball." (That's it. That's enough. It is put there by a local ranch that understands the two basic food groups.)

Anyway, there were eight Red Devil runs, then extra innings, before the Bulldogs won. It was a victory doubly sweet because it came on hallowed ground: Tom "Flash" Gordon of the Kansas City Royals began his ascent to glory from Avon Park's pitcher's mound.

The Bulldogs win again the next night in Wauchula. After the game the Wildcats grab rakes and restore the infield's smoothness, getting the everyday sport ready for tomorrow. The Bulldogs sprawl on the wet grass for a critique from their coach. He is wise beyond his years (26 of them) and bilingual, fluent in English and a dialect, baseball.

"In our sun-down perambulations, of late," wrote Walt Whitman in 1846, "through the outer part of Brooklyn, we have observed several parties of youngsters playing 'base,' a certain game of ball. We wish such sights were more common among us." Whitman didn't have long to wait.

Lincoln interceded for boys whose ballgame had been shooed off the White House lawn. The Civil War, which moved millions of young men hither and yon, acquainting them with the variety of American experiences, simultaneously spread baseball like honey across bread. It has been everywhere ever since: When Geronimo escaped from a reservation near Fort Apache, soldiers had to stop a baseball game to saddle up.

For many fans this spring, the flavor of the dawning baseball season is being soured by the well-publicized tantrums of a few players at the pinnacle of baseball's steep pyramid. They are childish men who wonder aloud whether they can be "motivated" by a mere $2 million or so. But down at the pyramid's broad base, where baseball is perennially renewed, boys still play for the sheer exhilaration of mastering the satisfying pressures of this pretty game that they play in front of small, quiet crowds, mostly family and friends, after a scratchy recording of the national anthem and before late-night pizza back on the highway.

Soldier son would have loved parade

I would like to express my appreciation and heart felt thanks to the many citizens and merchants in Midland who made the Victory Parade so special and successful. It was truly heart-warming to us as a family, with a son still in Saudi Arabia, to hear the applause and cheers as we drove the parade route with our sons picture on our vehicle. The only thing that would have made the day perfect would have been to have him here in person to see the outpouring of patriotism and appreciation that we witnessed. So for him I say thank you to all of you who took the time to participate in or watch the parade.

There is one thing, however, that I think must be pointed out. Some of our troops are now home, but unfortunately not all of them can be here with us for many more months.

Even though the major hostilities seem to be over right now, our troops won't really be safe until they are all back on friendly soil. There are still hostile forces to deal with and dangers from mine fields to be faced.

Those of us here need to remember that its not over until they all come home. Please continue to write and let them know that you are still behind them. Our son has said that the mail from home has really slowed down since the cease fire was called. We still need everyone to write and send their support to the brave men and women who are still over there.

Our forces could be in Iraq for many months, as Colin Powell said today. So, please, don't forget about them just because the television doesn't have war coverage 24 hours a day now.

If anyone is interested, our son's address is as follows: PFC James Trimble, 456-79-4396, 377 QM Co. (PS) Operation Desert Storm, APO New York, NY 09734.

I know he would appreciate your letters and prayers.

People of Midland made parade a hit

Thank you, Midland! You've done it again — you have responded to the call of duty! The Salute The Troops Victory Parade was 100 percent successful because of one thing, the people of Midland.

A special thanks to the Midland Reporter-Telegram and to the City of Midland for sponsoring the parade at the request of the parade committee; then to the individual participants, the group participants, the thousands of spectators and the news media. Our local and area radio and television stations were most supportive in spreading the parade information, along with the tremendous coverage of the Midland Reporter-Telegram before and after.

Another special thanks is due to the Midland Independent School District for having all of their junior high, freshman school, and high school bands participate, to the Greenwood ISD for its high school band, and to the local and area military personnel, who so graciously supported the parade with their men and artillery.

Getting to know the local support groups and hearing about their loved ones serving in the Persian Gulf was a highlight for this parade committee. Is there any place in the world better to live than Midland? We don't think so! The cooperation, the enthusiasm, and the participation for the parade proved that Midland people are the best! A spectacular attraction of the parade was the number of children participating. This parade is one they will remember for a lifetime. What better memories could they have in becoming great Americans?

It was our pleasure to plan the parade and to work with the community in making it happen. Welcome home, troopers, and God bless each of you as you so proudly represent our great United States of America.

Fly ribbons until all soldiers are home

As a parent with a serviceperson in the Persian Gulf, I want to thank you for your wonderful response to the Support The Troops Parade and Rally. I was truly touched by the sheer numbers of people who lined the parade route and the response to the service people and their families and friends. I want to thank all of the coordinators of the parade and all of the organizations who participated in it. It was truly a sight to behold.

There is no way I can convey to you all the feelings of pride and gratitude for your expressions of support. Your feelings were obvious not just by your presence, but by the flags, the red, white and blue clothing and the expressions on your faces.

For most of the parade route we were able to capture on moving film your applause, well wishes and smiles. For those of our service persons who were not yet home and therefore unable to see for themselves, we have managed to capture the spirit of this day. I further wish to thank everyone for all the beautiful yellow ribbons and flags I see around town. I do hope that you will keep them flying until they all come home. Someone told me that they had taken their ribbon down because they had become an eyesore, but I truly believe that beauty is in the eye of the beholder, and I believe to a returning serviceperson they will be gorgeous. On behalf of military families, we salute you Midland. God bless you all.

War comparison highly arguable

In reply to Marilyn Weaver (March 10), she needs to get all the facts before making such an assumption. She did a great disservice to all our brave men and women who fought and died for our country in Vietnam. She inferred that because there were drugs and alcohol available, our troops were not able to do their jobs and that might have played a part in losing the war. These were professional soldiers, sailors, and airmen who did a fine job (under the circumstances) and were sober!

It is not fair to compare Vietnam with the Persian Gulf war. The conditions were so different. In Vietnam, we were fighting the communists, who had an endless supply of troops, in a jungle with extensive underground tunnels. There was a demilitarized zone, where our troops were not permitted to cross. It was a ground war with limited air support. It was a very unpopular war with biased and negative reporting by the media and no support from the American people. In comparison, the gulf war lasted two months, with a limited ground war and great support from home.

My brother served in the 25th Infantry in Vietnam from 1969-70. The only thanks he got when he returned home was to have his luggage stolen at the Los Angeles airport. He changed into civilian clothes immediately because he would not be welcomed in his uniform.

One wonders what the outcome would have been if Vietnam had been a declared war with major air support and support for our troops from the American people. It is good that we have supported our men and women in the gulf war. It is about time that we say thank you to the Vietnam veterans for a job well done.

Kathy Thompson
Midland

How insensitive can you get?

Mrs. Marilyn Weaver wrote a note that was printed in your paper on March 10. In that note she inferred that all the troops who served in Vietnam were drunkards and dope addicts. How insensitive can a person get? Apparently Mrs. Weaver didn't have a loved one serving in Vietnam. I did. My only son, serving our country in the Air Force was in Vietnam from July 1967 to August 1968. Stationed first at Da Nang, then later at what was at that time Cam Ranh Bay. While serving in that "unpopular war" my son was awarded two Air Force Medals of Commendation for Meritorious Service. Sots and "dopeheads" aren't likely to win honors of that kind. My son? Just one of thousands.

Master Sergeant Thomas L. McClain served in our Air Force 20 years 1956-1976. He passed away Oct. 15, 1982, at Fitzsimmons Military Hospital in Denver, Colo. — a victim of cancer. He was buried in the Fort Logan National Cemetery with full military honors. He left his wife, three children, mother, his only sister and four nieces. Each and every one of us resents very much any remark that denigrates not only him but every person whether living, dead or missing in action, who served in Vietnam.

God bless each and every one of them — and all our troops serving anywhere in the world. That God may bless and keep our wonderful country free forever is my prayer.

I don't expect you to print this, but I want to thank you for the privilege of speaking my mind.

Shame on you, Mrs. Weaver.

Letter not meant an an aspersion

Good grief! I wasn't casting aspersions at Vietnam vets. I simply stated that the atmosphere there was vastly different from Saudi Arabia. Small wonder they had such a terrible experience in Vietnam.

There is plenty of blame to go around, but no one blames the troops, certainly not now that more of the whole story is being revealed.

Citizens not seeing signs of distress

The failure of the school bond last fall brought to my attention that many citizens do not understand the needs of our community's schools. In order to get to the facts before the May 4 election, I would like to share what I have found:

1. Our elementary and junior high schools are desperately and indisputably over crowded.

2. A multi-purpose center is a "bare-bones" gym. PE is a state requirement from the first grade on.

3. The high school science facilities are out-dated and unsafe according to Texas law. If we do not comply with the necessary updating, MISD stands to lose accreditation. This means our graduates will not qualify to attend most, if any, four-year universities.

4. The Alternative Center provides a second chance for high school students to graduate. With the state requirement changes over the past ten years, completing high school has become harder. For whatever reason, some students find themselves off the regular track. The alternative is to offer an education to them instead of the grim prospects of unemployment or crime. A large percentage of Texas inmates do not have a high school diploma. It costs many tax dollars each year to house state prisoners, as well as support the unemployed. The Alternative Center is an investment to prevent such life-long dependence.

5. Property owners are the only people taxed for this bond. Those persons 65 and over are eligible for a property-tax freeze.

6. With both items passing, property tax will increase 4¢ per $100 valuation. This roughly translates to adding $1.43 a month on a $53,210 property. If one item passes, our taxes will not increase.

7. All possible alternatives have been researched and studied over the past two years by the school board, citizens and administrators. This includes the use of empty buildings, split day sessions, rearranging the grade levels of the students, and multi-track year round schools. Junior high will be overcrowded with the multi-track in 1995.

Hopefully, both items will pass on the May 4 bond election. This is certainly a small contribution for the benefits our students and community will receive. If only one item passes, there will be no tax increase, but which child do you choose to ignore? This total bond supports the best for our children and our community, economically and responsibly. Our courageous school board now presents a bond for very realistic needs. These citizens have volunteered countless hours looking into the present and future needs of our schools and our community, to take us into the next century. Let our community take charge in preparing our children today for their leadership tomorrow.

Please vote for both items on the May 4 school bond election.

Idle hands lead to feeble heads

I have heard so much talk of late concerning the need for more classroom space and a new school. I have to speak out about my feelings for the education my children are receiving.

For the past four years my oldest child has not really been "taught" the basics, but rather tutored on the TOSS tests, TAAS tests, CAT tests and what other tests might be administered to check the level of achievement of our students.

As a matter of fact, just this year (during the week of open house) one of the teachers made the statement to parents, "This year we will be taking the TAAS test. I will be given early in the year so we won't be able to prepare the students for testing." What's to prepare for? If students have been thoroughly taught, there should be no need to "prepare" for any kind of achievement tests!

Another unusual event occurred after the TAAS test results were in. As we know, our children didn't score as well as we would have liked. So one of my child's teachers was pulled from her normal classroom responsibility to begin working with the eighth grade students on reading. Why? I think because those students will be taking the TAAS test next year as ninth graders. So, already the "tutoring" has begun. My goodness, you would think by this time these students would already be well versed on reading. What have they been doing the last eight years?

The week of March 18, most of our students were taking the CAT tests. You got it: the entire week before my child had no homework because they were "preparing for the CAT test." But that's nothing, there generally isn't homework anyway — "the teacher gave us time in class to do it." Sounds to me like there isn't very much class time spent on lecturing and discussing.

There was a very interesting article in the September 1990 Readers Digest entitled "Give Your Child An Edge." Just to quote a portion of it, Herbert J. Walbert, professor of education at the University of Illinois in Chicago stated, "the most effective and economical way to improve U.S. education would be to give more meaningful homework." The article went on to state, "homework is valuable for other reasons, too. It teaches students self-discipline and self-direction, cultivates good study habits and fosters initiative."

So while coming down "hard" on the need for more classrooms, let's not get "soft" on the reasons we have school in the first place.

LETTERS

Dial 1-411-THANK-YOU

Mayor Carroll Thomas has proclaimed April 1-7 as National Telephone Operators Appreciation Week.

The telephone operator is constantly available and ready to assist our city's citizens. During times of emergency, these dedicated individuals offer their skills and expertise to help benefit those in need.

For over 100 years, telephone operators have served faithfully, and it is fitting that we recognize these individuals for their dedication to personal service.

We are asking that you and your readers take a few seconds of your time sometime throughout the week to say "thank you" to these men and women who provide the human link in our ties to connect our city with the rest of the world.

Saying, 'So long, Permian Basin,' hasn't been easy

The Permian Basin has been my home for the past seven and a half years, so saying goodbye isn't going to be as easy as I thought. I came here as a rookie reporter right out of college eager to take the world by storm ... well, at least Midland-Odessa and the surrounding communities.

Looking back makes me cringe; I was so green and made the usual mistakes, but the people here were patient and supported me as I developed in my profession as a television anchorwoman. I will never be able to thank the people of the Permian Basin enough for their warmth and generosity in making me feel welcome here, for allowing me to really feel at home in West Texas.

I wasn't born and raised here, but I'm a Texan by choice and this is my home. I was married here, went through the death of my brother and grappled with the tremendous responsibility that comes with a job like mine, all with your help and compassion.

It's funny, when I try to explain to someone who's never been to West Texas just how unique and special you are, I don't think they ever truly understand, but you and I know.

Now, though, it's time to move on. My husband, Kevin, and I have a wonderful opportunity and we are moving to East Texas where we look forward to a bright and rewarding future. It's an exciting time, but also a sad time. I'm going to miss you. I appreciate this opportunity to say goodbye and to thank you from the bottom of my heart.

Weight of special interests threatens to flatten peace

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Lack of support from ungrateful Arabs, self-serving Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and anti-American Third World countries now have President Bush, who won the Iraq war so quickly, on the verge of losing the peace.

Hearst

Having originally urged the Iraqi people to rise up and overthrow the Iraqi tyrant, promising that U.S. air power would knock out of the skies any aircraft that attacked rebel forces, the president came to the conclusion America's best interests would be served by letting Saddam Hussein remain in power, at least temporarily.

United Nations Security Council support for military action against Iraq was based on limiting the war to Kuwait's liberation. In the beginning, there was no intention on the part of the U.S.-led allied military to intervene to help the Iraqi people overthrow Saddam's regime.

However, use of U.S. fighter planes to shoot down Iraqi helicopters that were attacking rebel forces in violation of the cease-fire agreement encouraged the freedom fighters to believe they could count on American military aid. President Bush said last Aug. 30 he would be happy if the Iraqi people dumped Saddam by almost any means. As recently as March 15, Secretary of State James Baker issued in Moscow a new warning to Iraq against using combat helicopters to suppress Shiite and Kurdish rebels. However, the Kremlin served notice it will not support any further use of allied military force against Iraq.

Now it seems likely the revolt against Saddam will be crushed with barbarian ferocity unless Iran, and possibly Syria, supplies the Kurds in the north and the Shiites in the south with massive quantities of weapons.

Saudi Arabia, Egypt, China and France, as well as other U.N. coalition countries, have made it clear they do not support intervention in the Iraq civil war. They fear it would lead to the disintegration of Iraq, with the Kurds, Turkey, Syria and Iran grabbing a piece of the multicultural country. Iran might establish a puppet Islamic enclave on the Iraq border which could be dominated by Teheran. To avert this danger, President Bush has opted for supporting the territorial integrity of Iraq even at the cost of letting Saddam remain in power, although he predicts the villain will be ousted by the end of this year, and perhaps sooner.

Meanwhile, the original warm relationship between the president and Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of the Desert Storm allied forces, has been clouded by disagreements that could have potentially serious political consequences. The popular general's brilliant direction of the military campaign amazed the world by causing the Iraq army in Kuwait to flee toward Iraq or surrender by the hundreds of thousands.

"Stormin' Norman's" dazzling unsuspected end run with his strongest U.S., British, French and Saudi forces into northern Kuwait and the Iraq border area caught most of the Iraq invasion army in a trap where air and tank artillery fire wiped out men and weapons. The war was won then. However, there were still thousands of Iraqi troops and a lot of mechanized weapons ahead of the allied front line. Gen. Schwarzkopf wanted to go after them. He told TV interviewer David Frost last Wednesday night that the allied forces had the fleeing Iraqis "in a rout" and could have continued "to rain great destruction on them." However, President Bush wanted to announce the end of the war. Clearly disappointed, the general said the president's decision left escape routes open for the fleeing Iraqis to get out with most of their military equipment. In an effort to put out the political brush fire over the disagreements with Gen. Schwarzkopf, President Bush telephoned the victorious Desert Storm commander and told him not to worry about the incidents. The president assured Gen. Schwarzkopf he had "the full support and confidence" of his commander-in-chief.

Friday morning Gen. Schwarzkopf told reporters he had apologized to the president, saying he was "extremely sorry" for his "poor choice of words," adding that he supported the president "100 percent."

Meanwhile, there is growing speculation in Washington that Gen. Schwarzkopf may be the Democratic presidential nominee at the end of President Bush's second term, assuming he is re-elected.

BASEBALL: Lee falls from first son, and was its first in 4-5A to give the Rebels a 4-1 mark. AHS is now 8-8 overall.

In other district action Saturday, San Angelo defeated Odessa Permian 4-3 to pull even with the Rebels in the 4-5A standings, while the non-district game between Odessa High and Big Spring was canceled because of inclement weather.

On Thursday, MHS defeated Abilene Cooper 8-5. The Bulldog win combined with the Lee loss moved 5-1 MHS to the top of the league standings by ½ game with an .833 winning percentage.

And even though Saturday's win for the Eagles may not vault them into playoff contention, AHS head coach Doug Plymer naturally was not surprised.

"I've been telling people all along that we're not as bad a team as everybody thinks. We were tied with Midland High in the sixth, with were ahead of Cooper in the sixth and we were ahead of Permian. Our problem has been being able to hold a lead," Plymer said. "Having an open date earlier this week had a lot to do with that because we were able to regroup."

Lee head coach Jesse Benavidez agreed with Plymer by saying "just because a team is 0-4 doesn't mean they can't play ball."

Early in the game it looked like the Rebels would live up the unbeaten district record they owned before the first pitch, as Lee scored one run in the first and four in the third.

The Rebs' first run came after David Sullivan reached base on a fielding error by Eagle shortstop Tony Vasquez. Sullivan stole second base with Shane Greeley at bat to put himself in scoring position, then Greeley ripped a nearly-foul shot down the third base line for an RBI double.

Lee's big third inning began innocently enough for AHS, as the Rebels got two quick outs on a fly ball and a caught stealing. But Greeley changed all that with a base on balls from Eagle pitcher John Moreno.

Greeley took second base on a wild pitch by Moreno, then, with the wind blowing from right field, Brad Sanders drove him in with a double to left field. Keith Bell followed with another double to left to scored Sanders.

Smily Hinojos came up next and hit a slow chopper to third for an infield hit, a play on which Eagle third baseman Eddie Gonzales misthrew to first to allow Bell to score after taking third and Hinojos to advance to second. Sophomore pitcher Julian Urquidez then took a shot to left, moving Hinojos over to third, where he scored on Sean Salois' hit down the line to left.

But the 5-0 lead proved not to be enough, as AHS pecked away with one run each in the fourth and fifth innings, then rattled Urquidez in the sixth with three runs on three hits, a walk, an error and a hit batsman.

The Eagles then added the game winner in the top of the seventh as sophomore shorstop Craig Copeland, who replaced the injured Vasquez in the fourth, smacked his second RBI single in as many at-bats, sending Barry Reese across for the lead.

The bottom of the seventh, which had previously been so kind to Lee, bore nothing but ill will for the Rebs this time. After Allen Chase reached on an error, Sullivan popped a bunt attempt up to first baseman Robbie Duran and Chase was thrown out at second as Greeley got on base with a fielder's choice and Sanders popped out to Duran.

Moreno went the distance for the win to make his record 4-0, while Urquidez picked up the loss to go to 3-2.

Local netters compete in Bell festival

Staff Report

HURST — Even though the local high school tennis teams took the Easter holiday off, five local girls competed in the L.D. Bell Tennis Festival here Friday and Saturday.

In Division I girls singles, Leslie Beck defeated Duncanville's Jill Lewis 6-0, 6-4 before bowing out with an injury in the next round.

In Division II girls singles, Kristi Petteway and No. 4 seed Stacy Stroman both won two matches before being eliminated.

Finally, in Division II girls doubles Mabry Kniffen and Joann Kelly moved all the way to the bracket semifinals, but were stopped 6-0, 3-6, 7-5 by Lancaster's team of Reames-Park.

planned to take control in the second lap, and that's about what I did," he said.

Midland Lee collected just 24 points to tie Del Rio for eighth place, but the Rebels' shot-put strengh emerged once again.

Scott McLeod gave Lee a first in the event when he launced his second shot in the finals 53-4.75 — a personal best.

"I just didn't think about it," McLeod said. "It was pretty cold, so we did a lot of running to get warmed up, then we threw. I just hit it," he said.

Rebels Jovon Tellez and Keith Boyd were fifth and seventh in the shot, respectively.

Demon Robinson gave Lee a second place in the 100 with a 10.57, just behind Odessa High's Davorick Taylor, who needed 10.53 in the rain. And Lee's 400-meter relay team was fifth at 43.50.

Midland High's eight-point day underlined the proverb that when it rains, it pours.

MHS pole vaulter Jack Kelso and Brandon Gawlik of Odessa Permian were the only Division I entrants to clear 13-0, and the pair was about to settle the matter of first place when the rains came.

Kelso took the first chance, but the wet pole escaped his grasp during the approach and he never left the ground. As he backed up for another try, he noticed his stopper was missing from the bottom of his pole and the rain increased during an inpromptu search for the lost equipment.

Finally both vaulters agreed that under the conditions each should retire, and Gawlik was awarded first place for fewer misses.

"It was just too dangerous to continue," Gawlik said.

"We'll get to take this up again in district," Kelso said.

Here are the winners plus District 4-5A area boys that finished in the top six places at the 33rd San Angelo Relay's Saturday at

The decade of the '90s is the Age of Wellness.

At least, Glyndon Ruth Kimbrough thinks so, and she is determined to do her bit to heighten the consciousness of individual responsibility toward doing — or not doing — those things required to be healthy. It's called "preventive medicine."

The notion, even the concept, has been around a long time.

And it requires a bit of doing on the part of the individual.

In the main, wellness hinges on wholesome eating habits, adequate exercise, the ability to manage stress, weight control, low fat and no tobacco.

And some people, from Mrs. Kimbrough's vantage point, bear more responsibility than others.

"It's morally wrong," Mrs. Kimbrough said, "to be a fat, smoking, nurse or doctor, or dietitian or health-care professional."

Ideally, those folks should be role-models.

Mrs. Kimbrough, a 43-year-old wellness educator, previously was a medical-center administrator and motivational-self-esteem leader who was overweight and a three-pack-a-day cigarette smoker. Today, she is a healthy ex-smoker.

And she has no patience with those doctors who "sit back in their offices and they smoke, put their hands on their big bellies, and they say they are dedicated to health."

"No, they're not," Mrs. Kimbrough said.

And, in her zeal for preventive medicine, Mrs. Kimbrough launched Wellness Professionals, Inc., which, through educational programs and health-risk appraisals, suggests wholesome lifestyles to produce healthier individuals, a productive workforce, and to keep health-insurance costs down by dramatically cutting down on the incidence of illnesses.

"What my company is doing, nobody else does here." Her company's staff will advise on health and wellness programs for industry, ways to contain health-care costs, reduce insurance claims, and minimize workers compensation liability.

Were more people to eat properly, exercise more, better control their weight, reduce fat and salt intake, and handle stress well, "there wouldn't be half the people" in the hospitals throughout the country.

According to current trends, she said, by 2020, the cost of employee "health benefits" will just about equal payroll.

And, Mrs. Kimbrough added, "no matter what disease you have,

Trinity School science teacher Silas "Si" Daugherty introduces lithium into a Bunsen burner flame, turning it red, while student Julius Howlett looks on. Today is Bunsen Burner Day, which marks the birthday of the scientist who invented the flammable gas burner.

Bunsen's invention still used

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Several Trinity School students got a jump on celebrating Bunsen Burner Day last week when they watched their teacher experiment with placing several elements into a smokeless flame.

It's Easter Sunday and that means bunnies and Bunsen burners, namely because the inventor of the gas burner is honored nationally today.

March 31 marks the national holiday set aside to note the 1811 birthday of Robert Wilhelm Eberhard von Bunsen. Bunsen invented one of the most indispensable instruments to chemists and chemistry students.

The Bunsen burner, which produces an intensely hot flame, is used along with a spectrum chart to identify chemical elements.

"Watch what happens when I add lithium," said Silas "Si" Daugherty, Trinity chemist and physics teacher.

As Daugherty cautiously placed a wire with a white substance on it into the flame, it turned from blue to brilliant red.

Voyager co-pilot strives to accomplish dreams

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Aeronautical pioneer Jeana Yeager lives her life to the fullest.

"I find something I want to do and go after it," she said in a recent telephone interview. "I won't be left out. And, I don't want to live my life and sit back and wish I had gone and done something, been somebody.

"I never want to regret having done or not having done something. I want to live my life as full as I can."

Yeager

Ms. Yeager, co-pilot with Dick Rutan on the Voyager, speaks about their around-the-world non-stop unrefueled flight at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and Library Hall of Fame. As part of the H.B. Fuqua Distinguished Lecture Series, Ms. Yeager's talk, "Around the World: Making Your Dreams Come True," is free and open to the public.

Four days after the flight, President Reagan presented Ms. Yeager with the nation's 16th Presidential Citizen's Medal of Honor.

In addition, in May 1987, the Voyager Team was awarded the Collier Trophy, one of the most coveted aeronautical honors in America. Ms. Yeager is the first female recipient since the award was established in 1911.

Ms. Yeager, now 38, found the experience of being the first woman to receive this award, "Awesome. Very awesome.

"Women have contributed so much to the history of aviation, and there's other areas of technology that women have contributed to. I'm very proud and very honored. I wouldn't give it up for anything, but it surprises me, too, because there's so much more that's been done."

Ms. Yeager remembers how it felt to successfully complete the flight.

"It's such a wonderful, proud feeling. You know you put so much work into it, and you know what it took to make it happen, and then it does."

Actually, horses — not planes — were the Fort Worth native's first love.

"Now I keep them around just because I love them," said the diminuitive pilot, who is currently completing her helicopter certification.

Ms. Yeager's talk at the Petroleum Museum will center on the adventures of the Voyager, which started its flight of the globe's maximum circumference the morning of Dec. 14, 1986, completing its course in 9 days, three minutes and 44 seconds. The flight, accomplished from an aircraft cabin 3½-feet wide by 7½-feet long, carried the two on a 25,012-mile journey into aviation history.

"Primarily, I just tell about the adventures of the Voyager, the details of what happened during the project and about the flight. Then, I open it for a question and answer to find out about the areas that people really want to know about," said Ms. Yeager, who devoted herself exclusively to the testing, developing and flying of the Voyager beginning in March 1981.

GARY OTT

Politics could ruin a great professional reputation

Isn't it strange how time heals old wounds?

Case in point. A brief item moved on the Associated Press wire service the other day that stated: "Longtime Texas political activist Liz Carpenter said she favors a comeback attempt by former President Jimmy Carter and hopes the Democratic Party will nominate him to challenge incumbent George Bush next year."

Ott

Ms. Carpenter, former press secretary to Lady Bird Johnson, went on to say that Carter now enjoys "great affection from the people as ex-president" and would pose the biggest challenge to Bush in 1992.

As a longtime admirer of Mr. Carter, I have only one thing to say about this suggestion.

Don't do it, Jimmy.

No matter how inviting they make it sound, don't do it. Keep your ego in check. Let the Dick Gephardts and Al Gores fight this one out. Stay on the sidelines and bask in the glory of being a popular past president. Lord knows, you deserve it.

Think about it. Remember all the abuse you took back in 1980 about being an indecisive wimp? The tacky jokes? The political cartoons? The unflattering caricatures? Pretty painful, wasn't it? Well, it'll all resurface if you choose to get back into the political arena. The sharks are waiting. And, their teeth are every bit as big as yours.

I repeat. Don't do it. Sit this one out.

I'm not sure why I like Jimmy Carter so much. He obviously wasn't one of the country's all-time greats. His likeness, I feel reasonably certain, will never appear on Mount Rushmore. Nor will history books rank him up there with George Washington and Abe Lincoln. It is unlikely, in fact, that his name will even be mentioned in the same breath as Franklin Roosevelt or Harry Truman. Instead, Jimmy Carter is destined to linger somewhere in the middle.

Terms like "mediocre" and "average" will be used to describe his presidency. Long on intentions, short on results. That's Jimmy. A nice guy who couldn't quite pull it off.

Still, I am fond of him. In hindsight, there are several reasons why, I suppose, including:

■ He is a Democrat who had enough guts to tell Teddy Kennedy to take a flying leap and I wish more people, both Democrat and Republican, would do the same.

■ He is from Georgia, and so are my parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles, nieces, nephews and cousins. Granted, that doesn't necessarily qualify a person to be president, but neither does being a resident of Massachusetts, which seems to be where every Democrat is from these days.

■ He invited Willie Nelson to pick and sing at the White House. Most presidents bring in opera singers to perform, but not Jimmy. Now be honest. Who would you rather listen to while attending a stuffy state dinner: Willie Nelson or Luciano Pavarotti? I thought so.

I could go on, but I'm getting away from my original point . . . which is, Jimmy Carter should NOT run for president again. Why? Because he would get killed, that's why. George Bush would chew him up and spit him out.

And in doing so, Carter's current image of being a terrific ex-president would be destroyed forever. As it is now, everyone seems to love him. He's become a born-again hero. News magazines publish glowing articles about him. World leaders seek out his advice on international issues. Public opinion polls show his popularity to be at an all-time high.

Like I say, time heals old wounds.

But when you think about it, what has happened to Carter is not all that unusual. Americans — as a general rule, at least — are a forgiving people. We may attack public figures while they are in the spotlight, but after they retire, our view of them mellows.

We tend to remember their good points instead of their faults. We glorify their feats, often embellishing reality with our fantasies. They become bigger than life. Despite our cynicism, we still long for heroes. So we look to the past.

That's why many of us consider Joe DiMaggio the greatest big leaguer of all time, Ben Hogan the best golfer, Bogart the best leading man, Hemingway the greatest writer, Marilyn Monroe the ultimate Hollywood beauty, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers the most stylish dance team.

In our dreams, the youngsters of today can't compare with the legends of old.

So, Jimmy, remain in the background. It is the best way to enhance your reputation. When the pundits say, "Run, Jimmy, run," do so, but make sure it is as far away from the political arena as possible.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

DEATHS

Frances O. Tatsch

Frances O'Bannon Tatsch, a Midland resident for 26 years, died Friday in a local hospital.

Tatsch

The body will be at Ellis Funeral Home today.

Burial will be Tuesday at Restland Memorial Park in Dallas. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of local arrangements.

She was born Dec. 19, 1920, in Crawford.

Survivors include her husband, Orbry Dee (O.D.) Tatsch; one son, Charles Orbry Tatsch of Austin; one daughter, Mary Ellen Frith of Midland; one sister, Ann Burgess of McGregor; one brother, Robert O'Bannon, Jr., of Yucaipa, Calif.; three grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren.

She was preceded in death by one son, James Dee Tatsch; her father, Robert O'Bannon; and her mother, Mary O'Bannon.

C.B. 'Bill' Coleman

Masonic graveside services for C.B. "Bill" Coleman, 92, of Midland, will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday in the International Order of Odd Fellows Cemetery in Norman, Okla. Local arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Coleman died Friday at his residence.

He was born July 18, 1898, in Centerville. He was reared near Coleman and Kenne, Texas. He was an independent drilling contractor. He began oil field work during his youth. He helped drill many wells in Oklahoma, Kansas and Vernon, Ill.

He met and married Nelda Mullins of Prague, Okla., in 1928. They moved to Midland in 1947. While in Midland he co-owned and operated Coleman and Tabor Drilling.

He had contracts with all the major oil companies.

He retired 40 years ago.

Survivors include his wife; and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to Cal Farley's Boys Ranch.

Marie Lancaster

Services for Marie Lancaster, 60, of Midland, are pending with Hamilton Funeral Home in Hamilton, Ala. Local arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Lancaster died Friday in a local hospital.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Satisfactory

Staff reports

A 33-year-old woman injured Friday in an armed robbery was in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital Saturday night, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Police said Reba Chambliss, a clerk at the Phillips 66 gas station and convenience store at 3006 Garden City Highway, was struck with a tire iron during a robbery at the store around 8:10 p.m. Friday.

The condition of another clerk reportedly injured in the robbery was not available. Hospital officials were unable to confirm that the clerk, described only as a 27-year-old woman, had been admitted.

Police were searching for two black males, both in their 20s, in connection with the robbery. Witnesses said the first man was about 6 feet tall, slender, and wearing black pants and a white shirt. The second man was described as slender, about 5 feet 7 inches tall, and wearing black pants and a striped shirt.

Garbage fire

ODESSA — A garbage fire that began Thursday morning at the city landfill burned into its third day Saturday, with fire crews employing bulldozers in an effort to halt the flames, Odessa Fire Department officials said.

Firefighters from three fire trucks continued to fight the blaze Saturday night, officials said. Fire department dispatchers said they did not know how long the fire was expected to burn.

Officials said the fire has been contained to the landfill, which is located about a mile north of Kermit Highway on FM 1936. No estimate on the size of the area burned was available.

The fire started around 10:20 Thursday morning when someone dumped smoldering debris into the landfill, officials said.

New bureaucrat confronts abortion

By Faith Keenan
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — S. Forest Moore, according to those who knew him in San Antonio, Texas, was "a darn good doctor" and a man of courage and commitment.

His daughter's son, William R. Archer III — an obstetrician-gynecologist like his grandfather — also is described by a former mentor as a "competent, caring physician" and "a man firm in his convictions."

But a critical line divides the generations: Ironically, the grandfather approved of abortions while the grandson refuses to perform the procedure.

Moore's views led him in 1973 to open an abortion clinic in San Antonio.

Archer's anti-abortion stand helped him land a job in the Bush administration.

Archer, a Houston native and son of Rep. Bill Archer, R-Houston, became Deputy Assistant Secretary of Health for Population Affairs on March 11. The office oversees the federal government's family planning and adolescent pregnancy programs, which together have a 1991 budget of $152 million in federal funds.

'You don't get any help, advice, or guidance from it. You get either grief or lack of attention. So the best you can hope for is lack of attention.'

— Jeannie Rosoff, President of Alan Guttmacher Institute

For a decade, it has been well known that only those ardently opposed to abortion need apply for the job of managing the family planning and adolescent pregnancy programs. Those managers were seen as the government's anti-abortion point people, turning the office into a virtual epicenter of abortion-related controversy.

The office was responsible for promulgating what detractors called the "squeal rule," which required that parents be notified when teen-age offspring sought contraceptives from federally-funded clinics. The courts struck down that rule.

Then, in 1988, came the "gag-rule" that banned abortion counseling and referrals at family planning clinics. That also was challenged, and the U.S. Supreme Court is expected to decide by July whether it is constitutional.

Such attempts to shape federal guidelines have caused Jeannie Rosoff, president of the Alan Guttmacher Institute, to call the Population Affairs office "an instrument of harassment." The institute is a research agency connected to Planned Parenthood, which sanctions contraception and abortion.

"You don't get any help, advice, or guidance from it," said Rosoff. "You get either grief or lack of attention. So the best you can hope for is lack of attention."

Archer said that he and his grandfather were close despite their divergent views on abortion. But in his new position he's not likely to receive the same, gentle treatment from those who disagree with him as he did from his grandfather.

Nabers Cabaniss, the last person to hold the job, called it the "last job a normal person would want."

So why did Archer give up a lucrative private practice in Northern Virginia to move into a job that pays about one-third of his usual, previous income and promises verbal fireworks?

In an interview at his office here, Archer attributed his decision to a sense of civic duty and to his belief that he can improve lives through health care policy.

Although he speaks in the elliptical style of an academic, he delivers a basic but intense message: "I like people."

Part of improving lives, he said, will be upholding the effort to rid family planning clinics of what he considers a bias toward abortion.

Pro-choice advocates argue, however, that counselors do not encourage abortion, but rather insist that health care providers discuss the full range of medical options legally available to a pregnant woman. That includes abortion.Archer said he has never performed an abortion.

"I had grown up with an attitude that I couldn't kill a bird, so how could I kill a child?" explained the slightly built, bearded physician.

Archer is a Roman Catholic and attended parochial primary and secondary schools. His mother, Patricia Mills, Rep. Archer's first wife, said in a telephone interview from Florida that this background shaped her son's anti-abortion views.

Grandfather Moore, who died in 1979, was not affiliated with any religion, said Mills. Her father and her son did not debate abortion, because "their views were so divergent that they probably figured they better not get into an argument."

Archer's father also strongly opposes abortion. But, while the senior Archer is the ranking Republican on the powerful, tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, both men say the congressman had nothing to do with the doctor's political appointment.

Dr. Archer — "Reyn" to his friends, an abbreviated form of his middle name, "Reynolds" — explained that he had dated Cabaniss and learned about the vacancy when she told him she was leaving the post to get married.

Reyn Archer and Dr. Moore agreed that women should have the right to make their own decisions about pregnancy, but their convictions led them to opposite positions.

Marilyn Chrisman, president of Nova Health Systems in San Antonio, worked with Moore. "He was a man of courage and commitment ... very much an advocate of people being able to make informed decisions and their own choices," she said.

The science teacher noted that the yellow color of the flame was produced from the unburned gas.

He also said that Bunsen's work with the spectrometer allowed scientists to identify a substance or determine its chemical composition by analyzing its color spectrum, especially since no two substances have the same spectrum.

Daugherty said that identifying spectrums helped to advance scientific study. "One of Bunsen's friends was able to analyze the light in the sun and conclude that it was helium from spectrum study," he said.

The science teacher said candles or hot plates are now more commonly used in classroom experiments because they are safer than Bunsen burners. But, nonetheless, Trinity seventh grade students are allowed several days of Bunsen burner use and study.

"There is an analytical machine now which can analyze colors in samples, and all kinds of other gadgets," Daugherty said. "But science is like cutting through a parking lot, you have to know where you are going to start and where you will end up before taking shortcuts.

"There are lots of gimmicks in science just like in advertising," he added. "But you don't want students to see the gimmick and miss the message."

"And," the teacher added and grinned, while his two high school students, passed their hands over the cool cone of the flame in a show of bravado. "I can't imagine getting through high school without ever having had the opportunity to play with a Bunsen burner."

YEAGER: Co-pilot lives life to fullest

(From 1C)

"So many people followed the program, and there was something special about it to so many people in the world. I tell them about what was important to them and share with them as much as I can."

In addition to setting aviation records, the flight proved significant because it was accomplished by private citizens with a big dream and a small amount of money. The flight's success stands as testimony to what Ms. Yeager finds vital to living life to the fullest.

"To believe in yourself, your own capabilities. You are the one who is the self-limiting factor. If you listen to others that are telling you that you can't, and you believe that, then you never will achieve anything, but the limiting factor comes within yourself. If you tell yourself that you can, then you can achieve anything that you set your mind and heart to. You, as an individual, can make a difference."

FOOD: Wellness teacher works for better health

you practically have to be ready to die before it's covered by your insurance carrier."

So, she figured, her services in the marketplace are timely.

Mrs. Kimbrough said she could make a "bigger impact on people's lives" by "pushing wellness," by raising "corporate consciousness" on the benefits of a healthy workforce, and by identifying healthy and detrimental lifestyles.

And companies, in encouraging wellness, may offer monetary incentives to employees who project some degree of health: keeping body weight within range, maintaining blood pressure under 140 over 90, keeping total cholesterol count under 225, wearing safety belts while traveling, exercising at least three times a week, and cutting out tobacco use.

And in encouraging people to be responsible in selecting healthful food choices, Mrs. Kimbrough teaches people to count calories and to figure fat intake rather than teaching "This is good food, and this is bad food.

"The reason you teach calories and label-reading is so that you don't have to play God in their universe," she said.

"You don't want to have to be responsible for what's right and what's wrong. You want to give them the tools to make better choices for themselves."

Though "fat is fat is fat" when it's calorie-counting time, not all fats are the same to the heart and rest of the cardiovascular system.

"Fat is fatter than carbohydrates and protein," she said. "There are only four calories per gram for carbohydrates," including grains, fruits and vegetables, and protein. "There are nine calories per gram for fat."

And she offered a rule, suggested by the American Heart Association: No more than 30 percent fat in diets. From the product label, the percentage of fat in a food may be computed by noting the calories per serving and grams of fat per serving, multiplying the grams of fat by nine to determine the calories from fat. Then, to figure the percentage of fat, divide the calories from fat by the calories per serving.

Her teen-age daughter does this in her shopping by reading product labels and putting only food items in the basket that contain less than 30 percent fat and which, according to the labeling, sugar is not the first, second or third ingredient.

"'Do you believe what those people are buying?' her daughter will exclaim. "'All the fat people have fattening stuff.'"

"Animal fat is just as fattening as polyunsaturated fat and monounsaturated fat whether it's canola or lard. Canola, which is a "good" oil, is in the mustard seed family and is monounsaturated.

"They are all the same calories," she said. But there are other issues," including nutrition and heart-harming foods, in shopping and eating.

"Fats to avoid are the saturated fats, which make blood-cholesterol levels rise and cling to our arteries." She recommends avoiding lard, hydrogenated cooking oils, and coconut and palm oils.

"Most people don't know how to eat," she said. "Their eating habits are very poor. They eat too much fat, too much salt, too much sugar."

And an educated, informed consumer who is cognizant of what he or she is buying and eating can acquire the "tools to play God," Mrs. Kimbrough said.

"You are letting them play God in their on universe by giving them the education and experience of making better choices" so that they can make healthful choices to lead healthy, happy lives."

Study of count continues a year after 'Census Day'

By Lyn Miller

Approximately one year ago, questionaires were sent to Midlanders, providing an opportunity to be "counted" in the upcoming 1990 census.

This mammouth undertaking of the U.S. Census Bureau involved the counting of approximately 250 million people and 106 million housing units.

Official population counts released early this year by the U.S. Census Bureau for "Census Day," April 1, 1990, set forth the following comparison for West Texas cities:

Midland, 1980 population of 70,525, 1990 population of 89,443, a 26.8 percent increase; Odessa, 1980 population of 90,027, 1990 population of 89,699, a .3 percent decrease; Abilene, 1980 population of 98,315, 1990 population of 106,654, an 8.4 percent increase; San Angelo, 1980 population of 73,240, 1990 population of 84,474, a 15.3 percent increase; Lubbock, 1980 population of 173,979, 1990 population of 186,206, a 7 percent increase; and Amarillo, 1980 population of 149,230, 1990 population of 157,685, a 5.6 percent increase.

Midland County realized a population of 106,611 in the 1990 Census count with a makeup of 69.9 percent white, 21.4 percent Hispanic, and 7.8 percent black.

Texas already has qualified for three new congressional districts, for a total of 30 congressmen in 1992, as a result of the 1990 Census.

The social and economic pulse of the nation is taken by the Census. Information obtained from the Census is used, not only to determine state legislative boundaries, but also to determine compliance with the Voting Rights Act and amendments, the allocation of funds from federal grant programs, the identifying of areas requiring bilingual education, the assessing of the need for equal employment opportunity programs, and the establishment of occupational and vocational education programs.

The need for a census arose 200 years ago in the United States, during Colonial days, when the 13 colonies broke ties with Great Britain and the new nation determined to divide the expense of the Revolutionary War equally among the people.

In 1787, the Census was made a part of the U.S. Constitution, providing for enumeration to be made within three years after the first meeting of the U.S. Congress and, as directed by law, every subsequent term of 10 years.

Due to some challenges for undercount or overcount, any corrected counts for the 1990 Census are due to be published by the United States Department of Commerce no later than July 15 of this year.

The City of Midland expresses its appreciation for the cooperation of its citizens in the completion of the 1990 Census.

Lyn Miller, an employee at City Hall, coordinates the information for this column.

Planned Parenthood to hear guest speaker

Paul D. Williams of Fort Worth will be Planned Parenthood's guest speaker 7 p.m. April 6 at Midland Country Club. The local organization will be celebrating the 75th anniversary of Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

Williams

The local affiliate, Planned Parenthood of West Texas, Inc., is celebrating its 26th year of service to the community.

Williams will discuss the history and future of family planning and his involvement in the movement.

Williams' involvement with Planned Parenthood spans more than 10 years and includes service at both local and national levels. He is a member of the Board of Directors of Planned Parenthood of North Texas and is the vice president of operations for the Texas Electric Service Division of TU Electric.

He is a graduate of the Leadership Ft. Worth program, serves on the boards of the Ft. Worth Metropolitan YMCA, the Private Industry Council, Huguley Hospital and is an elder in his Presbyterian Church.

The theme of the event is "Planned Parenthood: A Tradition of Choice for 75 Years."

For more information on the event call 563-2530.

Lawmaker questions purchases

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee chairman said he will look into purchases by the Teacher Retirement System, where the state comptroller said leaders spent more than $700,000 to furnish the agency's new headquarters.

"I'm concerned about it, and I think there will be a lot of questions that need to be answered," Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, said Friday.

State Comptroller John Sharp Thursday gave the agency a "silver snout" award, saying top management had "their noses buried deep in the public trough."

Ronald Douglas, the Retirement System's acting executive secretary, said the purchases were reasonable and there was no wrongdoing.

He characterized the expenditure of $235,000 on art objects as an investment, and said the investment will increase in value.

Montford said, "There is a new attitude of careful scrutiny in government spending. I don't think government needs to be all bleak and dismal, but in this day and time, we have to be very careful about things like that."

THE BORDEN SEMINARS — NO. 1 IN THE WORLD!
LOSE WEIGHT FOREVER
ONE NIGHT PROGRAM
Charles Borden's EternaSLIM™
$39.99 Complete!
FREE REINFORCEMENT
Charles H. Borden Charles H. Borden, Jr.
If you've been waiting for the EternaSlim program to come to your town, it's here! EternaSlim, a 90 minute one-night program, is part of the largest organization of its kind in the world.
You can attend the EternaSlim program one time and lose 20-30-40-50—UP TO 150 POUNDS! The EternaSlim program offers permanent, pleasurable weight loss without dieting. There are no pills, shots, mixes, packaged foods or "weighing in". Best of all, you won't worry about food.
The EternaSlim program uses scientific, group hypnotherapy. Please, don't confuse this with stage hypnosis — it's not the same! You will be wide awake, and totally in control. You won't say or do anything against your wishes. You will remember everything.
The EternaSlim hypnotherapy program eliminates the desire for sweets, starches and fast foods. You won't want oily, greasy, rich or fried foods. The EternaSlim program uses powerful hypnotherapy that takes away the craving for between-meal and after-dinner snacks. You won't eat them because you won't want them!
Your subconscious mind controls what you desire . . . crave . . . and eat. Post-hypnotic suggestions eliminate desire, craving, even change the way foods smell and taste. After the EternaSlim one-night program, many find "forbidden foods" don't look, smell or taste good. Most important, the desire and craving is gone! You'll eat less, eat smaller amounts and stop when you're full. It happens subconsciously, almost automatically. You can lose weight permanently without dieting, without thinking about food. And it will be fun!
EternaSlim is inexpensive: Just $39.99 complete and we offer group discounts. There are no contracts, no extra seminar costs. Plus the EternaSlim seminar offers FREE REINFORCEMENT if you ever regain lost pounds. EternaSlim is a 90 minute, complete-in-one-night program.

Life isn't easy...
now getting help is.
Glenwood provides comprehensive psychiatric counseling as well as treatment for drug and alcohol addictions.
Two newly introduced programs at Glenwood now make getting help even easier. Our Day Treatment Program offers weekday help for those with emotional, drug or alcohol problems; leaving weekend and evening time free for friends and family.
And a new chemical dependency program, called STEPS AT NIGHT, offers evening care to adults who have daytime work or household responsibilities. This new program provides help without hospitalization, time flexibility, and reduced costs, too.
Call Glenwood for a free and confidential consultation. We're available 24 hours a day.

Gun and knife association schedules show in Midland

Staff Report

The Texas Gun & Knife Association will be holding its second 1991 show in Midland on April 6-7 at the Holiday Inn Convention Center.

Celebrating its 12th year of existence, the Texas Gun & Knife Association presents shows in cities all across the state.

Collectors and exhibitors throughout the area buy, sell and trade guns, knives and other accessories. In addition, the shows offer a selection of wildlife art, historical artifacts, Indian and military memorabilia, "Texana" items and a display of gold and silver jewelry.

Don Hill, president of the Texas Gun & Knife Association, is staff writer for Knife World Magazine. Hill also designs knives in his spare time.

This is the second of three shows scheduled for Midland in 1991. Times for the show are 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, April 6, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sunday, April 7.

The public is invited.

Local orators advance to zone

Staff Report

Amanda Thiebaud and Kirk Whitehead of Midland have won their division of the Optimist International Oratorical Contest sponsored by the Optimist Club of Midland.

The two delivered orations on the subject "If Only."

Meredith Morgan and April Yeates won second-place and runner-up prizes, respectively, in the girls' division. Brian Pitre and Trey Morris took second-place and runner-up honors in the boys' division.

Each will progress to zone competition, winners of which will go on to district competition to vie for $1,500 scholarships.

Judges for the contest were Roger Bednar from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and Charles Taylor of the Westside Church of Christ and Rhonda Sawyer from Midland Christian School. The timer was Toastmaster David Hess of Odessa.

Optimist International awards a total of $150,000 in scholarship prize money annually to oratorical contest winners nationwide.

Parents say school liable for injuries

FORT WORTH (AP) — Parents of two children hurt in the collapse of a classroom ceiling believe the Glen Rose school district should pay the medical bills.

Patricia Campfield said that her 13-year-old son, Thomas, has been treated for an injured shoulder.

"The school is denying that they are responsible," she said Friday.

Cherry Stephens said her 12-year-old son, Johnny, will be in a cast for a month because he suffered a cracked ankle.

Sesame Street Live to perform at Chaparral Center

By H.A. Tuck

Two major events are scheduled at Chaparral Center this week. There's the annual presentation of Sesame Street Live on Tuesday and Wednesday, followed on Saturday with the sixth annual Texas vs. U.S.A. Junior College All-Star game.

Tuck

This year's Sesame Street Live show is entitled "Let's Play School", with performances on Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. (tickets priced at $6.50); and on Wednesday at 4 p.m. (tickets $7) and 7:30 p.m. (tickets $8 and $9.50).

You may purchase tickets at Chaparral Center on Monday. Tickets are cash unless you wish to use a charge card, for which there's a small extra fee. Charged tickets may be ordered also by calling 685-4584 during business hours.

The All-Star game is one of the best known in the country, drawing 20 of the top sophomore junior college players in the nation for a 7 p.m. game Saturday that draws scores of university coaches.

Sponsored by the Midland Jaycess, the event also includes a banquet at Holiday Inn Country Villa on Friday night. Nolan Richardson, head basketball coach at Arkansas, will be the guest speaker. Tickets for the banquet are priced at $15 each or $25 per couple.

Tickets for the game are $6 and $4. They may be purchased at Chap Center or from members of the Jaycess.

Playing for the Texas All-Stars will be Midland College's Carroll Boudreaux. Since about half of the Texas stars are from the Western Junior College Athletic Conference, there'll be lots of familiar names on the court at gametime.

Midland College has a post-Easter holiday on Monday. Except for Chaparral Center, all offices and facilities of the college will be closed on Monday and open again at 8 a.m. on Tuesday.

Upon their return Tuesday, students face four weeks of classes followed by a week of final exams. That's a bit longer than they usually have after Easter, since the holiday came earlier this year.

Chaparral golfers, currently ranked second in the nation, head to Scottsdale, Ariz., for a tournament Monday and Tuesday. The Chaps trailed Central Alabama Community College in a poll of the nation's junior college golf coaches, despite a big win two weeks before the poll over Central Alabama and everyone else in a Florida tourney. Scottsdale ranks fifth in the poll, Odessa is seventh and New Mexico Junior College is 10th.

Sophomore Andrew Coltart is the second ranked individual behind Andy Bathgate of Central Alabama.

Coach Delnor Poss is putting final touches on a large Midland College, College Invitational/Texas Junior College Championship Tournament, which will be held April 8-9 at Mission Dorado.

There's a large showing of art creations currently being displayed at McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Members of the art faculty at Southwest Texas State University are displaying quite a number of their recent creations. The show remains through April 19.

For this weekend, the gallery is open from 1-5 p.m., but closed on Monday. Generally, the hours are 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday, and 1-5 p.m. Sunday. Admission always is free.

Chaparral tennis teams are involved Thursday through next Sunday with Odessa College's National Team Tournament. Twelve teams from Texas, California, and Arizona are scheduled to compete in the event, which should provide lots of great competition at the Odessa College tennis complex.

You can tell it's getting late in the semester. Several of the Continuing Education courses are listed as part two. Many others, however, would like to have you if you know nothing of the subject.

Classes starting this week include: Intermediate Country-Western Dance, Detach With Love, Successful Purchasing Power Techniques, Display Write Four Computer Software, Bookkeeping II, Interior Decorating II, Managing Your Retirement, Quilting II, Silk Flower Arranging II, Intermediate Swing-/Push Dance, Concrete Masonry, and The Art and Fun of Attending Garage Sales.

This is also the final week to register for College Classics Session III courses. Especially for those at least 55, the classes are four weeks in length, mostly meeting in the afternoon, and cost just a single fee of $25 for as many classes as you wish to cram into your schedule. Session III begins April 8.

To register, visit the Continuing Education office in the Administration Building on Tuesday or give them a call at 685-4518. Their offices are being renovated, although most of the noisy, dirty work is out of the way now.

To keep up with what's happening at Midland College, you can call our Cityline information service 24 hours a day. Just call 560-2400, extension 1835 and then any of the nine MC information lines.

H.A Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

He also has starred in numerous TV and stage productions, in addition to having been a sportscaster, a quiz show emcee and host of his own talk show. He recently starred in a musical filmed at Opryland in Nashville, Tenn.

In addition to being a national board member of Junior Achievement, Johnson also is a member of the board of directors of the Pacific Gamefish Foundation.

Currently national chairman of the Resource Development Committee of the University of Illinois Library, Johnson served for 16 years on the board of directors of California Special Olympics and presently is a member of the Save the Books Committee for the Los Angeles Library.

Midlanders can join walk for Multiple Sclerosis

Staff Report

Midlanders are invited to put on their "walking shoes" April 6 and join in the "The West Texas Tumbleweed Walk" to benefit the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

MS is a chronic, often disabling neurological disease that "short circuits" the central nervous system.

The walk is designed for everyone including leisure strollers, exercise pacers or race walkers. It will begin and end at the Museum of the Southwest.

Walkers will meet at the museum at 8 a.m. and embark on a stroll through Midland streets. Tour guides will point out interesting spots and there will be several rest stops along the route. Subway Sandwiches will provide a hearty lunch for walkers at the end of the route.

The route will be wheelchair accessible.

Persons interested in walking are asked to get sign-up sheets to have pledges sponsor them. Prizes will be awarded to the largest team, the craziest team name, the most original team costume, the most family members, the team with the most co-workers and the team with the highest per walker pledge average.

To qualify for team awards, all team members must raise a minimum of $50 or more each and turn in pledges by May 6. Donations are pledged per kilometer.

More than 250,000 walkers are expected to participate in the 250 locations across America. More than 500 walkers are expected to participate in this first-time event for Midland.

At least 40 percent of the funds raised in Midland will be used to fund research and the remaining 60 percent will benefit the West Texas area.

Sponsors of the event are the Midland Reporter-Telegram, American Airlines, Subway Sandwiches of Midland and Odessa, Magic 102.1 FM, KMID-TV, Diet Pepsi and Keebler Cookies.

For more information call 699-7787.

Third College Classics begin classes this week

Staff Report

The third, and final, spring session of College Classics for older adults begins the week of April 8. Sponsored by the Continuing Education Department of Midland College, College Classics are four-week courses designed especially for those at least 55 years of age.

A single $25 fee allows registration in as many courses as desired.

The low fee is possible since all the instructors are volunteers, selected from among the college's personnel as well as individuals in the community.

Eleven courses are scheduled for Session III. Most of them meet an hour, 90 minutes, or two hours during the afternoon one day per week.

Classes being taught during Session III include: Computers and More; Estate Planning; Genealogy; Piano; Pyramids, Olympics, Safaris, and Kiwis; Awareness and Prevention of Sexual Assault; Shopping Smart; Conversational Spanish; Wood Carving; World History Continues; and Writing Can Be Fun.

Persons previously enrolled in Sessions I or II this spring may register by calling 685-4518. Persons who had not registered during either of the previous spring sessions should register not later than April 5 in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building.

Midland College nursing program awarded grant

Staff Report

A $30,000 grant has been awarded the Midland College Associate Degree Nursing Program. The grant was made by the Helene Fuld Health Trust, a foundation based in New York City.

This is the third grant for Midland College's Health Sciences programs from the Helene Fuld Health Trust. Previous grants were primarily for computer assisted instructional hardware and software, plus interactive video equipment.

"We are absolutely delighted to receive another grant from the Helene Fuld Health Trust, especially in view of the expansion of the ADN (Associate Degree Nursing) program," said Dr. Eileen Piwetz, chair of the Health Sciences Division.

For 1991, the Helene Fuld Health Trust made grants to 126 schools of nursing. Requests to the trust this year were received from 377 schools of nursing, totalling more than $25.5 million.

Trustees noted that institutions which have received a grant within the preceeding two years will not be accepted. Midland College last received a grant from the Trust in 1990, so it will not be permitted to make another application until 1993.

Nursing forum set Friday

Staff Report

An open forum on nursing issues is scheduled at Midland College on Friday conducted by the Board of Nurse Examiners for the State of Texas.

The forum is planned from 1-3 p.m., especially for nurse educators, college and university administrators, nursing students, health care providers and employers of nursing graduates.

Conducting the forum will be Kathy Thomas, interim director of education for the state Board of Nurse Examiners. Site for the forum is the Midland College Health Sciences Building lecture hall.

Among the issues which may be discussed are: Board of Nurse Examiners Rules and Regulations on Nursing Educators, problems with nursing education in Texas, future trends in health care that affects nursing practice, nursing competencies needed in the future, and suggestions as to how the Board of Nurse Examiners and nursing programs can address the demands for increasing the number of registered nurses in Texas.

It is suggested that written statements be provided in conjunction with verbal comments.

Dr. Eileen Piwetz, chairman of the Midland College Health Sciences Division, serves as a member of the Texas Board of Nurse Examiners.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Malinda Boon Young will assume a new position in Texas Christian University's development division June 1. Currently an annual fund associate, she will become director of corporate giving and will manage the annual fund and major corporate gift solicitation.

Holder of a bachelor's degree in fine arts from TCU, she was a development officer with TEAM Bank/Las Colinas for three years before joining the Univesity's staff in 1987. The Midland native is active in the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education (CASE).

A three-lecture series at Midland College begins Tuesday.

Sponsored by Students In Free Enterprise (SIFE), the lectures are free and open to the public. All the lectures are being presented at 7 p.m. in Room 104, Occupational-Technical Building.

Lawrence E. Jenkins of Austin is Tuesday's speaker. His title is Education and the Economy in the 21st Century. Jenkins is a member and former chairman of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board. He is a former vice president and general manager of the Austin Division for Lockheed Co.

Jenkins received his B.S. and M.S. degrees in Electrical Engineering from the University of Utah and was a Sloan Fellow in executive management at Stanford University.

He is chairman of the San Antonio Branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas and chaired the Governor's Select Committee on Education in 1988.

Speaking April 23, will be Roger R. Guess, Jr., manager of human resources for Texas Instruments' Midland plant. His topic will be Career Expectations in Competitive Organizations.

Janna King, president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, is scheduled to speak April 30, on Workforce: Critical Economic Development Issues of the '90s.

STATE IN BRIEF

Suspect jailed in child's death

EL PASO (AP) — Police said a 16-month-old girl died after swallowing "extremely, extremely high" doses of opiates, amphetamines and the pain-reliever acetaminophen.

John Reardon, 29, a friend of the child's mother, was arrested and jailed in lieu of $100,000 bond on charges of injury to a child. He is a maintenance worker for an El Paso bowling alley, police said.

The child was rushed to Providence Hospital on Tuesday by Emergency Medical Services, said Lt. Paul Saucedo of the police department's Crimes Against Persons Section.

The child's heart had stopped beating, and she remained in a coma until she died Thursday afternoon, he said.

"Somehow, the child had swallowed extremely high concentrations of opiates, amphetamines and Tylenol," police Lt. Paul Saucedo said.

The child's mother, Loraine Muniz, 30, who has two other children, was not arrested or charged with any crime, Saucedo said. Mrs. Muniz has been separated from her husband for several months and told police that Reardon was helping her care for the child.

Scam draws prison term

AUSTIN (AP) — One of a group of con artists who preyed on elderly people through a home foundation repair scheme was sentenced to six months in prison and 10 years on probation.

Henry Daugherty, 47, of Tomball also was ordered Friday to pay $37,000 in restitution, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

He pleaded guilty to five theft counts and was sentenced by State District Judge Jon Wisser of Travis County.

Daugherty was involved "in a group of people who generally victimized older people," said Assistant District Attorney Wade Russell.

The group usually operated out of motels in Austin and other cities, the prosecutor said. Daugherty was one of five people indicted after an investigation by Austin police and the state attorney general's office.

Two other defendants are still at large, and the remaining two have been sentenced on lesser charges, Russell said.

He said people in the group would ask to look under people's homes, then scare them into thinking they needed drastic foundation repairs. Most were charged at least $2,500, and one was defrauded of about $16,000, he said.

Scalding draws prison

HOUSTON (AP) — A 29-year-old Houston man was sentenced to 85 years in prison for failing to get medical care for his 5-month-old son, who fell or was placed in a tub filled with scalding water.

Jurors also fined Patrick Wayne Babers $10,000 in the death of D'Angelo DeWayne "D.D." Washington.

The baby died on Sept. 29, 1989, 39 hours after he suftered burns over 40 percent of his body in the scalding water. He never was taken to a doctor for medical treatment.

Police detectives said Babers told them that his son somehow pulled a pot of hot water onto himself.

On the witness stand Babers gave a different version. He said he was about to wash linen in the bathtub and had his son in a car seat on the lid of the commode next to the bathtub. He said he left to talk on the telephone and returned to find the baby in the water.

"STATE OF TEXAS

TO: MIGUEL LUIS GARCIA, Respondent,

"You have been sued. You may employ an attorney. If you or your attorney do not file a written answer with the clerk who issued this citation by 10:00 a.m. on the Monday next following the expiration of 20 days after you were served this citation and petition, a default judgment may be taken against you. The petition of MARIA GARCIA, Petitioner, was filed in the 318th Judicial District Court of Midland County, Texas, on the 21st day of March, 1991, against MIGUEL LUIS GARCIA, respondent, numbered 23,696 and entitled 'In the Matter of the Marriage of Maria Garcia and Miguel Luis Garcia and In the Interest of Marisela Garcia, A Minor Child.' The suit requests that the Court grant Petitioner a divorce from Respondent, appoint Petitioner managing conservator of the minor child, and decree such other relief as is requested in the Original Petition For Divorce. The date and place of birth of the child who is the subject of this suit:

Name: MARISELA GARCIA
Birthdate: August 31, 1973
Birthplace: El Paso, El Paso County, Texas

"The Court has authority in this suit to enter any judgment or decree in the child's interest which will be binding upon you including the termination of the parent-child relationship, the determination of paternity and the appointment of a conservator with authority to consent to the child's adoption.

"Issued and given under my hand and seal of said Court at Midland, Texas, this the 25th day of MARCH, 1991.

Vivian Wood, Clerk of the District Court of Midland County, Texas.
By M. MCINTURFF, Deputy."

NOTICE OF PUBLIC SALE

Notice is hereby given that WESTERN NATIONAL BANK, assignee from the FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION, receiver of BANK OF ODESSA ("Secured Party"), intends to sell at public sale in accordance with the provisions of the Texas Uniform Commercial Code for cash the following described property:

500 shares of common stock of Robert E. Sutton Operating Co., Inc. (the "Company"). Certificate No. 4 and 500 shares (hereinafter collectively referred to as the "Shares") of common stock of Robert E. Sutton Operating Co., Inc. (the "Company"). Certificate No. 3, in which property Secured Party holds a Security interest pursuant to the terms of the Security Agreement dated March 30, 1989 between Robert E. Sutton Operating Co., Inc. and the Secured Party and the assignments of said certificates from Robert E. Sutton.

The public sale will take place at the office of Western National Bank, 801 N. Texas, Odessa, Texas, on April 15, 1991 at 10:00 a.m. Odessa, Texas time. The certificates evidencing the Shares are on display and available for inspection at the office of the Secured Party, at West University and West County Road, Odessa, Texas.

Secured Party reserves the right to bid for and purchase the Shares and to credit the purchase price against the expenses of sale and principal, interest and any and all other amounts due and payable to Secured Party pursuant to the terms of any and all promissory secured by the security interest in the Shares.

Prospective bidders are advised the (i) the Shares will be sold only in a single block and will not be split up or broken down; (ii) the certificates evidencing the Shares to be received by the purchaser at the sale will bear a legend to the effect that the Shares have not been registered under the Securities Act 1933, as amended (the "Act"), or any state securities laws and that no transfer of the Shares may be made unless the Shares are registered under the Act and any applicable state securities laws or an exemption from such registration is available; and (iii) the purchaser will be required to provide written representations stating that (a) purchase either alone or with such purchaser's attorneys, accountants or other advisers possesses the requisite business and investment knowledge and experience to effectively evaluate the potential risks and merits of the investment in the Shares; (b) purchaser has sufficient financial ability for and net worth to bear the economic risk of the investment for an indefinite period of time and to withstand a total loss of purchaser's investment in the Shares; (c) purchaser is acquiring the Shares for investment, solely for purchaser's own account, and not with a view to distribution or resale of the Shares; and (d) purchaser will not resell the Shares, except pursuant to an effective registration statement under the Act and any applicable state securities laws or pursuant to an available exemption therefrom.

Prospective purchasers will be furnished, upon request, with such financial information about the Company as is in the possession of the Secured Party.

ROCK-A-BYE BABY

Here is a rocking cradle that will protect and soothe baby, and is beautiful to look at. The hood extends 11" to block drafts. The cradle measures approximately 28" high, 17" wide and 31" long, and a standard nursery pad will fit perfectly. Balanced against tipping, the cradle rocks with the touch of a toe. Full-size traceable patterns, photos and step-by-step instructions guide the amateur through this project.

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by females looking to meet males

I'm a senior citizen. I like to dance, fish, eat, travel. I'm a woman 5'4", 130 lbs., brown eyes and red hair. I would like to meet a gentleman 65-75 years-old with the same interests. Let's talk.
Call Box 3759.

LOOKING For professional male in middle to upper income bracket, as am myself. Caucasian or Hispanic only need apply. Age 25-35 must be attractive, well groomed and have excellent stamina. Must be adventurous and fun loving, like to dance and drink socially. Would like to test drive before purchase, if you know what I mean. (MP-853)

Professional attractive lady, non-smoker, social drinker, early 50s. I am 5'8" tall, a little above average build. Seeking a classy gentleman with sense of humor, who is honest, loves life, is financially secure, and accepts people for what they are. I enjoy many facets of life, too many to mention. Let's discuss more over coffee. Call Box 3755.

Needed: One good square dance partner. Prefer at least 5'10", 50 - 60 years old, must be single, have a good sense of humor and fun loving. I am early 50s, 5'9", attractive blonde female.
Call Box 3756

A lady in her sixties who is neat and petite, active and attractive, healthy and happy, slim and trim, loving and loveable, Christian and Caucasian, and who will respond to all responses would like to meet a healthy romantic Christian gentleman.
Call Box 3763

I'm a woman who is 40 going on 30. Attractive lady. I love to exercise and I'm into fitness/health. I have an active lifestyle and enjoy the outdoors. I have a good sense of humor and enjoy a good laugh. If you're not a joke yourself, call and tell me one!
Call Box 3762

TOO Close to 40 to Fudge! Caucasian Christian single mother, 5'10", wishes to meet tall gentleman 38-45 with ethics, who enjoys C&W music & dancing, 60's Rock & Roll and friendships. Please you must be honest, employed and courageous ! will answer all letters. (MP-851)

Gentleman, are you 45-55? Enjoy a variety of activities - from Country Western music to dancing to quiet tiems by the fireplace? I'm a 45 year-old, 5'7" female looking for an honest and caring gentleman to be a best friend. I'm a professional and own my own home. All replies answered. Call Box 3750

I'm a senior citizen widow who would like to meet a senior citizen gentleman ages 60 to early 70s. A person who has old fashioned manners and knows how to treat a lady like a lady. A neat dresser, well physically and mentally. No smoker or drinker, and must be financially secure.

MALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by males looking to meet females

I WANT a special Lady to hold all night long. She should be intelligent, slender, non-smoker, who enjoys outdoors, theatre, travel, C/W dancing, candlelight dining and being treated like a princess. She should be my best friend and lover in a monogamous, caring, growing relationship, 40's to 50's. Will answer all replies. (MP-845)

NICE LOOKING 31 year old Caucasian male, tall, slim, non-smoker or drinker, tired of living alone and tired of being used. Looking for a good woman 25-42 years old for permanent relationship. I'm not rich, but I do have a good steady job and I own my home. I don't go to bars or clubs and I'm ready to settle down with a good woman. Please respond with phone number. (MP-852)

Single, athletic, Caucasian male, 29 years-old. A sensitive Christian who is professionally employed would like to meet interested female for friendship/romance. Can be very adventurous but tired of going out alone. How about giving me a try. All replies will be answered.
Call Box 3761

SINGLE Black male, 27, 6', 180 lbs., college grad., employed, no kids and wide range of interests. Looking to meet a single black female, age open who is employed and has a sense of humor. Prefer non-smoker. Please send a letter and phone number. Lets be friends. (MP-850)

"NEW TO AREA" I am 34, sensitive, caring guy who many think has everything - educated, successful career, car, house, travel, sports, etc. - but missing that special lady to share life with. Ideally you are smart, pretty, 20's, romantic, aggressive, with a love of life and secure with your own direction. As comfortable in jeans and boots as dress and heels. Please write. Photo appreciated. (MP-849)

HI GALS! I'm a lonely 28 year old man who is looking for a lonely gal who is from the ages of 20-30 years of age. Have a very strange sense of humor. All replies will be answered. I have brown hair and eyes, 5'6". (MP-848)

HI I'm a 6'3", 230 lb guy looking for that special someone, who, like myself, is tired of the hohum scene. I like sports, dancing, movies, kids, romance and moonlit walks. I'm a firm believer that Chivalry is not dead! So if you are between 25 and 35 years of age and like being treated like a lady, contact me.
Call BOX 3752

GOOD Looking 23 year old male never married, Hispanic, but looks are deceiving. I'm 5'7", 150 lbs., like to dance and dining out or making a good home cooked meal when shared with a special person, lots of fun to be with, outgoing, energetic, treat you special, and also romantic, TLC. All replies answered. Photo appreciated. (MP-847)

I'M LOOKING to meet an adventurous, attractive woman under 30 for a possible love/hate relationship. A good sense of humor is a must. I'm outgoing and I consider myself fun to be around and I'm a good C/W dancer. I'm 5'9", 180 lbs., bland hair and blue eyes. Photo's appreciated. (MP-846)

SHUTTERED SECLUSION

By JANICE FORD

The imagery of a sophisticated yet easy retreat comes to mind with a view between the slats of plantation shutters gracing the windows of this week's featured home.

Custom built by Mark Payne, this four bedroom, two living area, two and three-fourths bath home in the prestigious Polo Park subdivision is what comfortable style in the 90s is all about.

Forming a backdrop for the home is manicured landscaping, which includes curbed flower beds and a sprinkler system.

Don Harvey, Realtors share new real estate technologies

"With new technologies affecting different facets of our lives each day, it seems only a matter of course that the real estate industry is beginning to experience its share of changes," said Molly Harvey, graphic design director for Don Harvey, Realtors. "Our company has often been the first in our area to take those major steps when new technologies have become available."

In 1985, it become obvious to Don Harvey, Realtors that computers would be essential for the most effective and efficient management of the business. And, while most other real estate companies were just beginning to think about buying small personal computers for their offices, the company installed an IBM 36 mainframe computer.

This gave Don Harvey, Realtors the capacity to do many things in addition to handling the bookkeeping and accounting and the production of profit and loss statements and management reports. All properties can be accessed through very efficient program formats. For instance, through a residential listing program from any terminal in any building, all that is needed is to type in the first three letters of the street name and enter.

"The screen will then scan and display all possible street names with that beginning," Ms. Harvey continued. "When we find the correct address, we simply enter its numerical prefix. We can then leaf through each page of that file and have all the information available at our fingertips. Of course, if you have the complete address, you can go directly to the file."

The programs being used were specifically written for the company and customized to meet its specific objectives. Each year, and sometimes several times a year, programs are upgraded and improved. "We believe our system and capabilities are on par with many of the larger and more progressive real estate companies across the nation," she stated.

"As we've grown, we've continued to add additional terminals as well as additional standalone systems. We've also expanded our ability to communicate with out-of-state customers and clients. We've been a member of Compuserve since 1987 and started communicating through their system to multiple locations across the country."

In the past couple of months, Don Harvey, Realtors has installed the new HomeTrac programs. With this system the company shares files and communicates all update information on referrals and relocation properties with any of network members anywhere in the country. This eliminates the need for constant phone calls and the continuous mailing of written reports.

One of the most recent areas of innovation involves computer photography and computer graphics. "We've purchased a camera which, in place of film, uses a small computer disc. Instead of capturing a photo image chemically, it stores the the image on the disc in the form of digital information. We can immediately replay all the stored pictures directly through any TV just as you would a film from your VCR."

Ms. Harvey continued, "With this we plan to build a library of available homes which can be sorted by area, price range, etc. We can even mail the disc anywhere to anyone to replay themselves, assuming they have a player. We have also ordered an image capture board so that we can feed the digital information directly into a computer. We can then join the information with our computer graphic programs."

To expand computer graphics capabilities, Don Harvey, Realtors has added another IBM Mini-Mainframe and the and the new generation Hewlett Packard Scanner & IBM Laser Jet Printer. "With this system, we can literally build our own magazine-quality brochures, graphics and advertising pieces," said Ms. Harvey.

"This also allows us to quickly create attractive, high quality brochures for new listings. For example, your listing agent can take exterior and interior photographs of your home, have the pictures developed in one hour and give them to me along with descriptive information. I can then scan the pictures into the computer. From there, I can modify or enhance the picture in a number of different ways in order to maximize the desired effect."

"I can then combine the pictures with the chosen size and style of script and modify the format on the computer screen until we've achieved just the look we desire. With the laser printer, we can then reproduce the completed work on any type of paper or stock we choose."

"Within an hour or two we will have a totally customized high quality graphic of brochure to use for the immediate marketing of your home. The speed and quality of this process will allow us to further improve the efficiency and effectiveness of our service, for the benefit of our customers and clients," Ms. Harvey concluded.

Adobe, Inc.: Environment impacts 1990s real estate market

The public's concern with the environment will translate into added responsibilities for buyers, sellers and lenders in future real estate transactions. Such public awareness has pressured the government to pass strict laws and regulations focused on owners and occupiers of land.

As a result, business decisions and real estate transactions will be greatly affected by the potential liability for cleanup costs of contamination to the air, water, soil or building improvements.

It is not surprising, then, that evaluating and minimizing environmental risks prior to closing a real estate transaction has become a primary concern to all parties involved. A problem exists in the young age of environmental liability because the industry has yet to establish uniform standards; however, the standard of careful "due diligence" to investigate into the environmental condition of a property is fast becoming the norm.

The burden of defining "how much is enough" due diligence is needed in the investigation of environmental risks is clearly placed on the purchaser stepping into the property's chain of title. This burden was established by the 1986 Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act.

Two states, New Jersey and California, typically lead in development of environmental regulations, and they have set examples for other states. New Jersey requires all real estate transfers to include certification to the state that the site is not contaminated or a closure plan to clean up any contamination. Title companies are responsible for effective compliance and implementation of the requirement.

In California, the seller and the real estate agent/broker must fill out and provide to any prospective buyer a real estate transfer disclosure statement stating any knowledge of environmentally hazardous substances or materials. Other states are sure to follow these examples when developing their own laws and procedures.

Environmental liabilities can encompass any type of real estate property from raw undeveloped land to completed developments. All properties, therefore, must be evaluated prior to and in consideration of closing any real estate transaction. Environmental laws and regulations, too, are not limited to present property owners and occupiers of land, for past holders may be found liable as well. In 1980, the Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensations and Liability Act (CERCLA), commonly known as

Bill Jackson

"Superfund" went into effect.

This act imposes liability on current and previous owners and operators of a property for remediation clean up costs of contamination where hazardous substances are present or were disposed. CERCLA was amended in 1986 by the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act (SARA), which provides the Environmental Protection Agency with the means to undertake and enforce response actions when any kind of eminent or substantial endangerment exists as a threat to public health.

Additionally, SARA provides a "safe harbor" for owners who did not have knowledge of or any reason to know the property was contaminated when acquired. This defense against liability, however, is only available if an individual can establish he was an "innocent purchaser," proving that an "appropriate inquiry and investigation" was made to identify any possibility of contamination "prior to" acquisition of the property.

This highlights the necessity for establishing a policy of environmental "due diligence" and risk evaluation from all sides of a real estate transaction, the seller, the buyer and the lender.

Besides the monetary liability associated with the ownership of contaminated property, a far more important moral obligation exists between each of us who live on this planet. Preservation of the environment will assure protection from each of us both in our own economic world and in the world we share with each other.

Bill Jackson of Adobe, Inc. Realtors just returned from Texas A&M where he completed a course titled "Environmental Site Assessment." Please call Bill at 694-9548 for any questions you may have concerning environmental liabilities in real estate transactions.

SHUTTERED: View is easy elegance

(From 1D)

Entrance to the front of the home is gained through a carved filigree solid door, surrounded above and on both sides by gorgeous glass paneling. Atop the door is a half-round window, and to each side is a clear leaded panel.

The first glimpse is of the interior is the gleaming white tiled entry leading to the spacious and plushly carpeted formal living area. Antique white colored built-in shelves on the left side of this room are perfect for book collections and an entertainment center. Recessed lighting and crown moulding here and throughout the home, lend a touch of sparkle.

The back yard can be seen through the living area's large plantation shuttered window.

To the left and behind toward the street is the formal dining area, with room for a large table and chairs and a serving piece. A plantation shuttered window allows light to seep in when the family wants it.

Completing this side of the home are a linen closet and a coat closet, and to the right of the entry, two bedrooms connected by a Hollywood bath. An admirer of dinosaurs would feel at home in the bedroom on the right, which has a window facing the street. A tall, built-in storage area with several shelves gives an organizing boost.

The bath area features a double vanity with shell-shaped basins, honey oak cabinets, a linen cabinet and wallpaper with slate blue, peach and mauve accenting. The shower/tub and toilet are in a separate room with a door which can be closed for privacy.

The connecting bedroom is painted white, and is basically similar to the other, with a walk-in closet, a built-in storage unit and a shuttered window.

Upon return to the entryway a veer to the left leads to the kitchen and breakfast area, which face the family room. A U-shaped work island includes a Jennair, General Electric dishwasher, sink and disposal. Abundant cabinet space, a built-in desk and a General electric self-cleaning oven complete the kitchen.

From the breakfast area, a shuttered window faces the back yard. A striped print wallpaper meets a floral dot pattern about three feet from the bottom of the floor and a border stripe is placed up at the top crown moulding. For storage, a large pantry closet adds useable space.

The versatile family area was designed for good times, easy conversation and warm memories. Classic design in the hearth/ bookcase wall adds flavor. Picture frame paneling above the carved mantle encourages the hanging of a large still life painting. Large bookcases with open space on top for displaying large collectibles are built-in on both sides of the fireplace.

A large window to the back yard reveals a covered patio with a convenient ceiling fan.

This beautiful home also features a sequestered master bedroom and a sequestered fourth guest or child's bedroom.

The master bedroom includes a ceiling fan, two shuttered windows and a recessed sitting area where two additional windows meet for a corner view of the backyard.

The magnificent master bath area features a glass enclosed walk-in shower which is next to a garden tub. Shuttered windows above the tub allow a relaxing look into the back yard. A marble vanity top, honey oak cabinets, a dressing table and two basins are well-lit with with recessed lighting and natural light from a skylight.

Soffiting around the vanity area adds depth and color is derived from a vivid slate blue and wildflower print wallpaper. Two bookcase-style shelves accentuate the storage capacity of the large walk-in closet.

The fourth bedroom, also sequestered, is near the guest bath. This bath includes a walk-in shower, recessed lighting, honey oak cabinets and a diamond pattern blue/brown wallpaper.

Other amenities in this nearly 3,000 square foot three and one-half-year-old home are a water softener and reverse osmosis system, a large utility room, an enclosed workshop area in the garage, and a security system. It is located in the Santa Rita Elementary zone.

Mike Lewis and Associates is listing this home for $169,900.

The living area of this week's featured home offers a spacious and practical area for entertaining, with its large built-in bookshelf and entertainment area. Behind is the formal dining area.

Ruth Young Realtors makes great start in '91, gives sales tips

Ruth Young was the first Realtor in Midland to sell a million dollars worth of real estate in 1991.

Ruth Young, of the Prudential, Ruth Young Realtors, has been named winner of the prestigious President's Circle Award, which was presented to her during The Prudential Real Estate Affiliates' Third Annual National Convention in Orlando, Florida.

More than 3,000 real estate professionals from around the country attended the five day gathering at Marriott's Orlando World Center. The award was presented during special ceremonies to Ruth Young by Will Schwartz, president, The Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, Inc.

Ruth Young entered the real estate field in 1978, and joined The Prudential, Ruth Young Realtors in 1989. Prior to winning the award, she has also been the recipient of numerous awards for top sales and listings from the Midland Board of Realtors as well as Prudential.

The Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, Inc., the real estate subsidiary of The Prudential, began awarding franchises in May, 1988. Since that time, the network has grown to nearly 1,000 offices and 25,000 sales associates nationwide.

For any number of reasons, more people tend to buy and sell in the spring season than any other time of year.

If you're a seller, this means there is a large pool of potential buyers for your home. However, it means there are more homes also trying to attract those buyers. That's why you can't just set back and wait for a sale to happen.

As at any other time of year, it's important that Ruth Young Realtors make your home as competitive as possible. Here's how:

Make a list of your home's good and bad points. The Realtor can be a great help here, because we can see things about your home which you either take for granted or haven't noticed. Where practical, correct the "bad" points you discover when making the list.

1. Create a positive first impression. Make sure the front door is clean and, if needed, freshly painted.
2. Present a neatly trimmed yard. Cut the grass, trim the shrubbery, pull any weeds and free the entire area of clutter and garbage.
3. Open blinds and curtains to allow the maximum amount of natural light. It gives the home a cheery look.
4. Paint faded walls and woodwork, or put up wallpaper to give the home a fresh look. These are small investments that really sell a home.
5. Fix any leaking or dripping faucets. Dripping water can discolor sinks and tubs and indicates faulty plumbing.
6. Take care of any and all minor repairs such as loose doorknobs. These all detract from the value of the home.
7. Avoid the cluttered look. Remove any excess furniture, toys, books, and unnecessary items. It makes the rooms appear smaller.
8. Double check to assure closets and cupboards are neat and organized to show off maximum storage potential.
9. Inspect bathrooms closely. Repair faulty caulking and replace cracked tile. Light a scented candle...it puts the bathroom in the category of delightful.
10. Show off your bedrooms. Use attractive curtains. Keep vanity and dresser tops clear.
11. Restrict pets - preferably out of the house.
12. Permit prospective buyers to look around without insisting on conversation. They are not on a social call.
13. Allow your real estate agent to discuss price and selling aspects of the home, even if you know the answers. Let them do the job for you.
14. Arrange fresh flowers on the table and in the entry.
15. Put on soft music. Keep it soft and keep it low. It works in department stores, so why not in your home!
16. Organize the garage. Hang up tools, get rid of garbage, boxes, and any other unnecessary clutter. Be sure to wash the floor also.
17. Make your home spotless. Clean the rugs, floors, and walls. Dust lamps, lights, tabletops, and even baseboards and heating vents. A clean home soon becomes a sold home!

Ruth Young, winner of the Prudential President's Circle Award.

Set a reasonable price. If you get nothing else from this article, please remember this! Improperly priced homes are slow-movers and no-movers. One of the most common mistakes is to set the price too high, expecting the bargain with a buyer. It's bad strategy because buyers see homes besides yours, and knowing the "market range", they buy homes that are priced right and never get back to over priced homes.

Please call Ruth Young Realtors at 682-7884 for a counseling appointment or market analysis at no obligation.

Common Improvements and Their Payback:

Remodeled Kitchen
80% to 120% Depending on the price range of your home.

Landscaping
50% to 100% The more you spend the more your payback.

Fireplaces
This popular improvement typically returns 100% of cost.

Closets and Built-Ins
Low cost improvements that return 100%

Room Addition
Should return 100% of its cost. Payback decreases to about 50% with the addition of a fourth or fifth bedroom.

Swimming Pools
Expect 0% to 30% return on this expensive addition in most parts of the country.

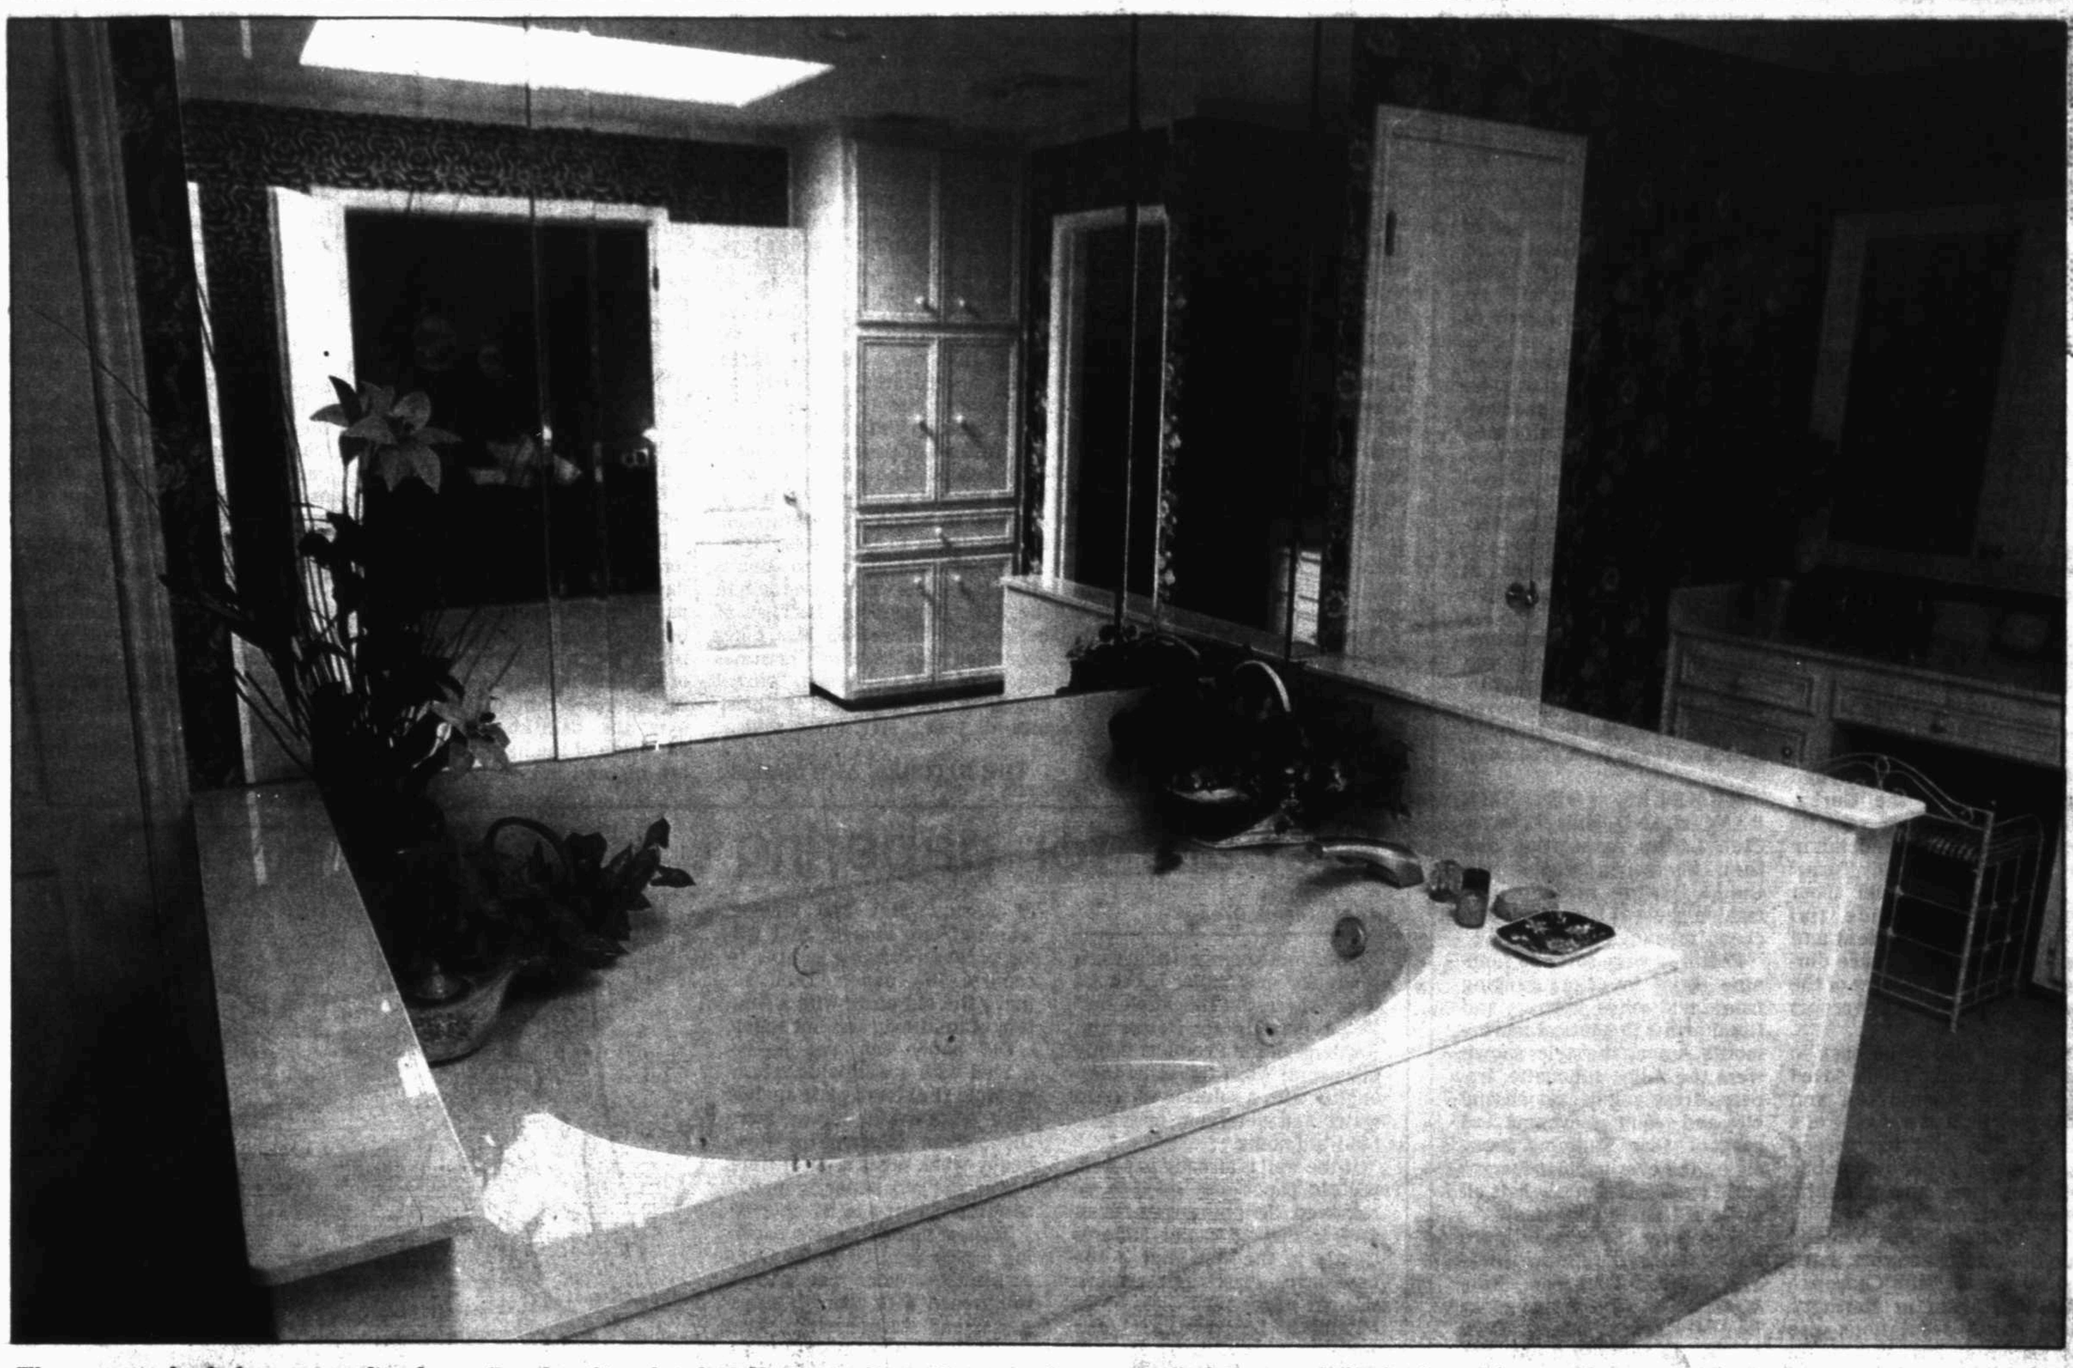
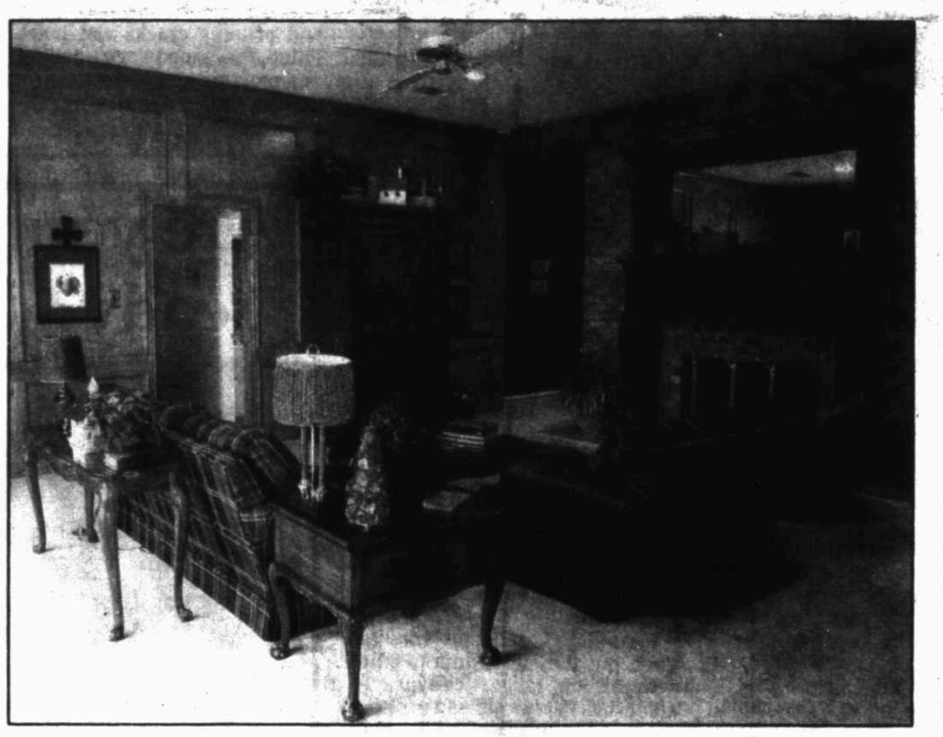
PARADE OF HOMES



The master bath features a hand-cut floral ceiling border. Notice in the reflection the master bedroom and the bath area's coordinating wallpaper over the doors.



The Fikes' den is decorated in deep shades of burgundy and green. The custom-made, solid wood mantel on the fireplace is the focal point of the room and the custom-made armoire functions as an entertainment center.

Decor creates traditional charm

The Midland Junior Woman's Club will present the 22nd Annual Parade of Homes 1-5 p.m. April 21. Tickets are $8.50 and can be purchased from any club member or by calling 694-4976, 684-0993 or 699-7505. Tickets will be available at the Canopy, Gazebo and Kid's Kountry as of April 15. No children under age 12 will be admitted and no tickets will be sold at the door. Proceeds will benefit the Palmer Drug Abuse Program and the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

The home of Deborah and Stan Fikes, 3601 Woodhaven Court, has a new look with a traditional charm.

The couple bought the home a year ago this month, and have since repainted and rewallpapered throughout. Originally, the home was "like a sea of seafoam green, which is a very pretty decorator color, but it just wasn't right for us," Mrs. Fikes said. "I wanted to give each room character and warmth, but I wanted the house to look like we lived here, not like everything was brand new."

Please see HOME/2E

The deep shade of the navy walls is accented by the white trim, which offers the formal living area of the Fikes' home a warm traditional touch. Deborah Fikes' collection of Edna Hibel Mother's Day Plates are displayed over the couch.

The dining room is painted federal blue and features French reproduction furniture and a beautiful brass chandelier.

This view offers a peek at the white marble fireplace in the formal living area.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Reagans' former social secretary entertains

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

McKnight-Harrison

Dallasite Linda Faulkner captivated her audience with behind-the-scenes stories of her White House years at the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's March luncheon meeting.

We could have listened all day as Linda, who was social secretary for former President Reagan and Mrs. Reagan, shared highlights of her career in Washington. With a refreshing approach, she disclosed experiences, ranging from hilarious to disasterous.

Linda planned events honoring royalty, as well as heads of state, and worked with some of the greatest performing artists in the world today.

She described the Prince and Princess of Wales' visit as the most glamorous event while she was with the White House. She also told about going to the Soviet Union to coordinate the dinner hosted by President and Mrs. Reagan for the Gorbachevs in Moscow, an event we recently read about in detail in Mrs. Reagan's book, "My Turn." In addition, Linda told about planning the Presidential events honoring President and Mrs. Mitterand of France during the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty on Governors Island, N.Y.

Although glad to be back in her native state, Linda loved her job in Washington and looks back on it as a chance of a lifetime. She now has turned her attention to her own public relations firm and a public speaking career.

The luncheon menu included Irish Stew and Shamrock Salad and for dessert, Mint Chocolate Chip Ice Cream in Meringue Cups. Table decorations also carried out an Irish theme and included baskets of green and white flowers.

Hostesses for the social hour, which featured Shillelagh Punch, were Lorraine (Mrs. Charles) Coffman, Sara (Mrs. Norman) Fry and Carolyn (Mrs. Larry) Seright.

Spotted in the large crowd were Cindi (Mrs. Mark) Mladenka, a new member of the Association, and Mary Katherine (Mrs. Johnny) Mills, Cathey (Mrs. Thomas) Holland, Janet (Mrs. Mark) Krause, Georgia (Mrs. Carroll) Thomas, Tommie (Mrs. Dean) Strack and Louan (Mrs. Glenn) Rogers.

CONTINUING WITH a tradition in Leon Roe's family, he and his wife, Connie, hosted a St. Patrick's Day Irish Coffee Party at their home.

Ritzie Williford, who teaches dancing, entertained with an Irish clog dance, and Dagmar Kroll furnished traditional Irish Soda Bread.

Enjoying the fun affair were Sandra and Leroy Wegner, Annette and Dick Braun, Ritzie and Jim Williford, Sarah Lew and David Grimes, Ben Hoffacker, Louise and Garland Lang, Marge Woods, Marjorie Tyler, Dagman and Marty Kroll, Patti and Bill Watson, Anne Meyers and Colleen and Vince Scury.

MARGARET AND BOB BERGER and Vera and Paul Weeker traveled to Fort Worth recently for the wedding of their first grandchild. Tracey Berger was married to Ray Harris in Carr Chapel on the Texas Christian University campus.

Tracey is the daughter of Judy and George Blakeman of Fort Worth and Gloria and Walter Berger III of Dallas. The groom is the son of Paulette and Raymond Harris of San Antonio.

The groom's parents entertained out-of-town guests on the evening preceding the wedding at El Rancho Grande Restaurant, and the bride's grandmothers hosted a bridal luncheon at Tours Restaurant on the wedding day. The wedding reception hosted by parents of the bride was held in the Yellow Rose Room in Forest Park.

The couple spent their honeymoon in Silverthorn, Colo., and now reside in San Antonio, where the groom is employed with an architectural firm. Both are Texas Tech graduates.

MEMBERS OF THE RANCHLAND Hills Country Club Ladies Association and their guests enjoyed Julian Gold's "Swing into Spring" fashion show at the March luncheon meeting.

Featured were soft and feminine styles in colors ranging from vivid solids, abstract and floral prints to nautical marine motifs. Among the styles shown were the A-line silhouette, trapeze, dress and jacket ensembles and sequined evening and cocktail wear. Stunning accessories, the ever popular scarves and face-framing straw hats all made a fashion statement.

Models for the occasion were Patty Galbreth, Emma Howard, Marsha Dameron, June McGill, Sandy Wilkerson, Laura Klauss, Nancy Gill, Gayvenda Doughton and Dee Watkins. Vicky Bailey and Kevin Oyenik produced the show. Mike Sherrod provided background piano music.

Among the women enjoying the Italian luncheon at tables decorated with Easter baskets were Kay (Mrs. W.K.) Murphy, Allis (Mrs. W. Earl) Chapman, Melva (Mrs. Charles) Sizemore, Judy (Mrs. Robert F.) Duke and Joy (Mrs. Ron) Cunningham.

A STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER Sundae Party saluting Carrie Henry, Jaclyn Jones and Amy Morris and commissioned by Gayle (Mrs. Doc) Dodson and daughters, Kelly and Jamie, was held recently at the Dodson home.

The celebration was given in honor of the girls' forthcoming graduation from Midland High School. Carrie, caughter of Janice and Bobby Henry, plans to attend Baylor University; Jaclyn, daughter of Kay and David Jones, Colorado State University, and Amy, daughter of Dee and Paul Morris, Texas Tech University.

The honorees' mothers were special guests at the event.

HOME: Details make difference in decor

(From 1E)

Traditional is the style Mrs. Fikes chose for the home's decor. They added outside shutters and leaded windows to give the home a more traditional look from the outside, as well as window flower boxes.

Inside, the four bedroom, four bath home has 3,800 square feet, and now features rich, deep colors throughout to help create the look of warmth Mrs. Fikes was searching for. The foyer opens directly into the formal living area, which is painted a flat navy. The white marble fireplace is the focal point of the room, but there are many other items worth noting. Above the couch is a collection of Edna Hibel Mother's Day Plates that Mrs. Fikes started in 1987 when the couple's daughter, Stacey, was born. The collection currently consists of four plates, and April 21 (the day of the Parade of Homes), Stacey will turn 4 years old and it will be time to add a new plate. There also is a collection of old books and family pieces on the living room mantle.

In searching for the perfect window treatment for the living area, Mrs. Fikes explored many possibilities, but decided on white plantation shutters.

"There is a lot of traffic in this area — coming from the den to the bedroom — so I didn't think drapes would work well. I thought that this area needed something really stunning or something really simple. I decided to go simple and use custom cornices to add the ornate touch," Mrs. Fikes said.

THE WHITE MARBLE fireplace is backed by a brick fireplace in the den or family room, giving the impression of a double fireplace. The den is filled with rich wood paneling and built-in shelves, and is decorated in deep shades of burgundy and green. The solid wood mantle and armoire were custom made in Mexico from pictures Mrs. Fikes had found. The armoire functions as an entertainment center and for toy storage.

"I wanted something to hide this TV, but it's a pretty big one so I had to have something made. The bottom half is full of Stacey's toys. That way she can have them here in the den with us, but they're easy to put away," Mrs. Fikes said.

To Mrs. Fikes, it's the little things that make the big differences in decorating, as is evident if one looks closely at the built-in wood cabinetry at the end of the den. Instead of paneling or a plain wall behind the shelving, Mrs. Fikes has put a fabric covering on the wall in a rich shade of green, adding depth to the display area.

The half-bath just off the den is often called the Christmas room in the Fikes household. Because of her love for the season, Mrs. Fikes decorated this bath in Christmas shades of red and green. "Now I can have one room that is Christmas all year," Mrs. Fikes said.

THE KITCHEN AND breakfast area is large, open and airy. Navy is the background color for the traditional fruit wallpaper, accented by matching fabric window treatments, which have built-in shelves. These shelves, along with the top of the wood cabinetry and the hanging rack over the antique butcher block are perfect areas for Mrs. Fikes to display her many knickknacks. There are several birdhouses which Mrs. Fikes collects and hand-paints in the kitchen and den areas.

"I like a lot of clutter," Mrs. Fikes said. The table and chairs, and hutch in the breakfast area are very special to the family because they are pieces from Fikes' parents home.

The formal dining room is painted federal blue, and is situated between the kitchen and the formal living area.

The master bedroom is painted rose taupe and features French traditional reproduction furniture. The navy floral bedspread has matching cascade drapes which were redesigned from the Fikes previous home to fit this room's windows.

Double-doors open into the master bath. Mrs. Fikes selected a navy-based floral patterned wallpaper and she hand-cut the ceiling border, which adds a beautiful finishing touch to the room. The coordinating wallpaper can be seen in the reflection of the mirrors over the bathtub. Closets flank each side of the bathtub and there are his and hers vanities.

STACEY'S ROOM IS a little girl's dream in powder pink. The scalloped ceiling border of blue and rose flowers was hand-cut by Mrs. Fikes, and the floral pattern is echoed in the her hand-painted designs on the child's white furniture.

The bathroom connected to Stacey's room is a walkway of pink into the extra bedroom. The window treatment in the bath area is particularly cute for a little girl's room. Instead of an ordinary cornice board, Mrs. Fikes fashioned a big, stuffed pink bow above the small shutters.

The extra bedroom is currently decorated with Stacy's beautiful baby crib, complete with canopy, and many of her other baby items.

In the hallway outside the two bedrooms is a framed set of pillow cases that are decorated with tatting and crocheting. They belonged to Fikes great-grandmother.

The fourth bedroom is behind the den and is used as a study. "Since it has its own bathroom, its perfect for Stan to use as an office or for Stacey to watch one of her movies," Mrs. Fikes said.

Although Mrs. Fikes decorated the home, she is quick to point out that she had a lot of help. Ellen Hinson served as a consultant for colors and numerous other decorative ideas throughout the house and Debbie Griffin helped her with most of the window treatments.

The home was built by Bill Brown.

Prepare for papering

Associated Press

The time spent getting walls ready for new paper is crucial to the success of the whole project, reports Better Homes and Gardens Home Products Guide magazine. Wash the walls thoroughly with a solution of warm water and detergent or household ammonia.

If the wall is already papered, the old paper may need to be removed. Stripping isn't necessary if the old paper adheres tightly to the wall. But if the new covering is vinyl, remove the old paper regardless of its condition. Lift a corner of a strip and pull. If the paper backing adheres to the wall, leave it as a liner for the new covering.

Unstrippable papers are more difficult to remove. If water won't cut it, sand the surface so water can penetrate to the adhesive. Apply a mixture of warm water and vinegar (one-half cup vinegar to 1 gallon of water) using a scraper to remove the paper. Then remove the old paste with a solution of mild soap and hot water.

Old paper can also be removed with a wallpaper steamer. Hold the steam plate against each section and scrape away the soaked paper. This slow, heavy work takes a lot of time, but if the old paper is in bad condition, there is no choice.

Wait a month before papering newly painted walls. Gloss or semigloss paint needs to be roughened with coarse sandpaper. Seal water-based paint with a priming coat of glue sizing. This sizing step will pay off when hanging the new paper — it will slide when it needs to and stay put when the work is done.

Unpainted walls need special treatment. Plaster must be at least a month old and then sized. Seal wallboard and other paper-faced surfaces with oil-based primer or two coats of latex primer and then a coat of sizing.

Make wall repairs by sealing and priming cracks and holes. Paint the woodwork, ceiling, and molding and allow time for drying before hanging the covering.

Artist's canvas is fast-food napkins

HONOLULU (AP) — Kalawina gets his art supplies at Burger King, McDonald's or any other fast-food restaurant where he happens to be.

You see, paper napkins are the canvas on which he sketches outdoor scenes.

His pen and ink drawings generally are of Western or Chinese flavor, showing mountains, horses, birds and people. They take between five minutes and a half-hour to finish.

Kalawina — Hawaiian for "Calvin" — has more than 1,000 sketches, not counting the hundreds he has given away. Most were done sitting in a taxicab, waiting for fares.

He doesn't give them away anymore, now that he knows people will pay for them.

Most of the ones he has sold went for $20, but the price is climbing. One woman offered him $90 for a sketch of Don Quixote.

Kalawina, 49, whose real name is Calvin Santos, never took an art lesson. He says he learned by looking at paintings in galleries.

The former musician says he also learned how to play the guitar, piano and bass by watching other people.

"A lot of people tell me they try to draw on a napkin, but they can't," Kalawina said in an interview.

It's all in the technique.

"You cannot press hard," he says. "You've got to have a very light touch and move very fast. I'm doing sculpture work. I'm not drawing."

It's also in the spirit.

"It's not me, it's like someone in me making all these drawings," he says. "It flows from my mind to the napkin."

The spirit, he says, also comes from his family. His great-grandmother was a Navajo Indian, and Kalawina says the Indian way of worshipping nature has been passed to him. He says it is manifested by his inclusion of a bird in every sketch.

Kalawina, who has a wife and three children, has been invited to show his work in Japan, but he says he doesn't have a lot of money to travel. He had to quit his taxi job in January because of declining tourism.

Many local galleries like his work, but they want him to paint with oil on larger canvas. To which his 19-year-old son replies:

"Why be like another artist? You have a talent on the napkins."

Keep glassware clean — but gently

Associated Press

You can keep all your glassware gleaming and in top condition with these tips:

■ Old, finely crafted or delicate glassware requires special care when being washed:

■ It's best to hand-wash fine glassware, one or two pieces at a time.

■ You can reduce the risk of chipping or breaking delicate items by using a dishpan and a drying rack made of plastic or rubber. It's wise to also place a rubber collar around the faucet and a rubber mat or thick towel in the bottom of the sink.

■ The water for washing and rinsing should be fresh and hot.

■ To make glasses sparkle, add a few drops of laundry bluing or ammonia to the suds. Rinse thoroughly.

■ Use a soft brush to clean cut or etched glass.

■ Drain glasses upside down in a dish rack or on a heavy towel.

■ Dry glasses with a linen towel to keep them lint-free. For a less expensive substitute, try a cotton-linen blend with at least 25 percent linen.

■ You can use a dishwasher for everyday glasses, but dishwashing detergent sometimes etches the glass, creating fine scratches that make the surface look cloudy. To avoid etching, try using less detergent and loading fewer dishes. Low water pressure, which keeps the machine from filling completely, is another possible cause of etching.

■ Never wash glasses or fragile glassware in the bottom rack of the dishwasher. Space them on the top rack so they don't touch other dishes or each other.

■ To remove stains from glasses, fill them with water and add 1 teaspoon ammonia, then soak them overnight. Stained crystal can also be soaked in a solution of commercial denture cleaner. Or, try rubbing the stain with baking soda, but don't use abrasive cleaners or scouring pads.

■ To remove hard-water calcium deposits, soak the glassware for a day or two in distilled water with a little vinegar added.

■ To eliminate water spots on your glasses, use a rinse agent;it causes water to flow off in sheets. If your dishwasher doesn't have a dispenser for liquid rinse agent, get a rinse agent in a solid bar that hooks to the upper rack.

■ Smooth tiny chips in glassware by rubbing them with fine, wet emery paper. However, it's better to have fine glassware and crystal repaired by a professional.

■ Should stacked glasses get stuck together, put cold water in the inside glass and dunk the outside glass in warm water. Then gently pry them apart.

■ Store glassware on shelves lined with flannel-backed plastic, heavy paper or rubber mats.

■ Don't store glassware for a long time in newspaper or wood shavings. They can cause sodium oxide deposits on the surface of the glassware, making it hazy.

■ If glassware breaks, pick up the slivers with a damp paper towel.

DEAR ABBY

Passionate affair doesn't include sex

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am married, but I am very much in love with a man who is 20 years older and also married. I believe he cares very deeply for me. Neither of us has any intention of divorcing our spouse. We are extremely close, share intimate moments when we meet, speak to each other two or three times a day, but we do not sleep together.

Van Buren

When we meet clandestinely we hug, talk, hold hands and kiss passionately. We respect each other deeply and have a very unique relationship. My question: Can two people who do not have sex with each other be considered to be having an affair? We are physically attracted to each other, but for a host of reasons, we do not have sex together.

I think we are having an affair, and he thinks we are not. Is there such a thing as an "emotional" affair? When two people are having an affair, is sex always involved? — "GLADYS"

DEAR "GLADYS": You are emotionally bonded. And since you care deeply for each other and express that caring in physical ways — holding hands, hugging, kissing, even though you have never slept together, but meet to carry on clandestinely — I would say you are "having an affair," which could be more appropriately called "an unfertilized romance."

DEAR ABBY: I am from a large family — all teetotalers and nonsmokers. We all get together for reunions and celebrations, and alcohol is never a part of it.

Our daughter is engaged to a young man who also has a large family here in town. Most of them drink and smoke. (The women even drink beer straight from the can!)

Our daughter and her fiance plan to be married this summer. We knew they wanted a home wedding here in our home, and we were planning the reception (no alcohol); we have lots of room and were looking forward to it. But recently, they casually mentioned that they would like to have everything at his parents' home. I know what the reception would be like — lots of drinking and smoking.

Abby, if they insist on doing this, I don't think I could bring my family — especially my elderly parents — who would be horrified at a reception of this kind.

If I don't invite my parents, they will be very hurt. Do you have any suggestions on how to get through this and keep everybody happy? — IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR IN THE MIDDLE: There is no way you can mix non-smoking teetotalers with smokers and drinkers, and "keep everybody happy."

Whoever hosts the celebration has the privilege of doing it THEIR way. You could compromise by having a smokeless, non-alcohol wedding at your home, followed by a reception at the home of the groom's parents, where there will be no restrictions.

DEAR ABBY: I have been reading your column for years. Some of the letters you get sound so far out, I wonder if people make them up just to see them in print. How can you tell if a letter is for real or fake? — CAMDEN, N.J., FAN

DEAR FAN: Fake letters usually sound like soap operas with verbatim accounts of conversations, and the writer goes on and on — "creative writing" isn't hard to spot. A name and address is never given, and the writer NEVER says, "Please don't print this."

Let child help decide how to decorate his room

By Ava Van de Water

CNS Photo

Paint and imagination applied to both the wall mural and the sisal floor covering combine to make a creative kids' room.

Chip du Pont still remembers with horror the redesign of his childhood bedroom. The Deerfield Beach, Fla., interior designer was about 6 years old when his family hired a decorator to redo their house — including his room.

Unfortunately, no one consulted young Chip.

They painted two or three walls in dark blue, making already high ceilings appear even higher.

"The room became almost a cave to me," du Pont said. "I wouldn't sleep in the room. I'd sleep with my nanny or with my parents — anywhere but that room."

"I didn't even feel it was my room," said du Pont. "I vowed when I became a designer I would never do that to a child."

But that was in the late 1940s, and now parents and decorators know better.

Many designers working with children's rooms have turned to California interior designer and author Antonio Torrice — the Dr. Spock of the interior design world.

Trained in pediatric psychology, Torrice says children — not parents — should decide how to decorate their rooms. His company, Living and Learning Environments, is based in Burlingame, Calif.

Torrice's simple design approach categorizes a child's decorating needs into the areas of color, choice and convertibility.

LAST YEAR, Torrice published his ideas in the book, "In My Room: Designing for and With Children," coauthored with Ro Logrippo, a San Francisco Bay Area design journalist who has become his partner.

Torrice believes a child's room should be sophisticated and flexible enough to serve him or her from infancy to teenage years, with minimal cost.

"I do not recommend and strongly discourage theme rooms because the child tires of them," Torrice said. "If you want a theme, try to localize it to sheets and pillowcases."

He also believes that colors have a therapeutic effect and should be chosen by the child.

But if you have a hyperactive child, for example, don't overstimulate him with bright colors. Instead, use cool, calming colors such as blue, green or violet. The opposite applies for quiet, shy children. Stimulate them by offering bright colors such as red, orange and yellow.

Torrice does not question his clients' choices of color. Even infants get to play a role in their room's decor — Torrice has them crawl to a rainbow assortment of carpet samples. He even persuaded parents of one toddler to choose purple carpet because their son, who had not yet learned to walk, had crawled to a purple sample three times. The parents — a lawyer and real estate executive — were convinced their son knew what he wanted.

But not everyone is willing to go that far.

"When it comes to infants we disagree," said du Pont, who also has a degree in child psychology. "He believes in choice, I don't."

FOR CHILDREN under age 5, du Pont prefers rooms with the basics in neutral colors and accessories in primary colors to stimulate the young child.

"It's been proven that primary colors stimulate motor and thinking development," he said.

If the child is school age, du Pont sits down with the parents and works out several ideas to propose to the child.

They determine the child's favorite character (perhaps the Muppets, dinosaurs, Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles or Little Mermaid), and then use that as the theme for sheets, wallpaper borders and other accents.

Getting children involved in the process is important so they feel comfortable in their "new" sleeping quarters,

Interior designers also recommend not spending money on expensive things such as children's lamps and other things that will have to be replaced as they get older. Buy things the child can grow with.

The room should be flexible enough to take the child from crib to teenage years with only minor (and inexpensive) changes. To achieve this, du Pont recommends using neutral paint on the walls (white or beige) and putting color in the accessories or wallpaper borders.

If the child wants a brightly painted room, West Palm Beach, Fla., interior designer Marilyn Tully recommends painting one wall in his or her favorite color. After all, "favorites" change with age.

Also look for furniture that will grow with the child rather than buying something you'll have to discard in a couple of years. Try cribs that convert to youth beds, changing tables that convert to bookcases, etc.

AT YOUR LEISURE

By Sue Snelson

It's time to plant some travel flowers -- some that will bloom this summer! And let me tell you where the flowers are blooming...

During July 4th (one all of us will take particular pride in this year), we're offering a very patriotic cruise on Holland American to the union's 49th state, Alaska. Sailing on July 1, we'll visit Ketchikan, Juneau, and take a train to Whitehorse. Call Leila for information on some wonderful discounts.

We're also organizing a fall foliage tour, starting in New York, with Tauck Tours on September 29 (10 days). Tauck is one of the deluxe tour companies we deal with--their trips invariably rate four stars, and deservedly so. Land packages are available from $1725, all-inclusive.

September will be a busy month for yours truly, as I plan to pick up Charles Darwin and tour the Galapagos Islands -- those wonderful South American islets. We'll sail the islands from Kyoto for seven days to Guayaquil. Inland, the trip will be combination bus and rail, going through some volcanic mountains. Please consider joining us on this fascinating voyage to a little-visited but very special part of the world, September 13-23.

Also on September 29, our tour of Eastern Europe will depart. In previous columns I've waxed eloquently about this region and its monumentous transition. We'll return to see what changes have been wrought. Frankfurt, Berlin, Dresden, Prague, Budapest, Krakow, and Warsaw are on the agenda. This one's priced from $2290--call Leila at 684-7428 for more.

Drug may help ease runners' heartburn

Copley News Service

When running causes belching or heartburn, it's probably the result of swallowing air during your workout. The solution: A drug sold under the name of Zantac can block the secretion of stomach acids. Runners taking this drug had less heartburn and belching than when they ran without it, although how Zantac might be used effectively in runners hasn't been determined.

Shopper's wedding guide offers budget bliss tips

By Paula Monarez
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Here comes the bride — and, frequently, there goes the budget.

The average price of a formal wedding is $16,000, according to Bride's magazine.

But it doesn't have to cost that much, according to Denise and Alan Fields. The Colorado Springs duo, who paid $7,000 for their formal wedding, believe a couple can have just as nice a nuptial without breaking the bank.

For example, brides can cut corners by wearing their mother's gown or borrowing from a friend, which would slice as much as $800 off the price of the affair, according to the Fieldses, who have written "Bridal Bargains: Secrets to Throwing a Fantastic Wedding on a Realistic Budget" (Windsor Peak Press; $9.95).

The 252-page consumer book gives tips and advice on all aspects of the wedding — from reduced prices on fancy designer bridal gowns to negotiating the best deal on a ceremony and reception site.

Having the wedding at a city- or county-owned facility, for example, is usually less expensive than at a hotel, Denise said.

Complicating the search for a less expensive wedding is a rise in fraud, Denise noted. Every year, couples nationwide are taken for about $1 billion, the authors estimate. They may lose hundreds of dollars in deposits from bridal shops that go out of business, or they might pay unnecessary cake-cutting fees that can be added by reception halls and caterers and sometimes run as high as $3 per guest.

One safeguard against fraud is to put all deposits on a credit card, Alan said.

"The consumer-protection law covers everything that is put on a credit card," he said. "If a business doesn't comply with what they said they would do or claims bankruptcy, the couple can call their bank or the credit-card issuer.

The issuer is then responsible for taking action against the business that faulted on the deal.

Other budget-conscious wedding tips include:

■ Contacting the Discount Bridal Service, a national bridal-apparel company that offers a 20 percent to 40 percent discount on designer gowns. The Silver Spring, Md.-based company has representatives located throughout the country.

■ Planning the wedding for off-months, such as January, February or November. Couples may be able to negotiate services at a lower price during these times.

■ Not scheduling the wedding for Saturday evening, considered the most popular time. On other days, couples usually can get a discount on the reception room and the band, Alan said.

■ Finding businesses that work out of their homes, such as bakers, photographers and seamstresses. In most cases, the quality is just as good, Alan said. However, do check their references and qualifications.

Furniture designed to throw a curve

Italian Massimo Iosa Ghini's designs feature tipsy porpotions, surprising details

By Ann Jarmusch
Copley News Service

When is a sofa not a sofa?

Answer: When it's a supersonic comet.

When is a stool not a stool?

Answer: When it's a sliding slug.

Furniture gets a little wacky in the hands of Italian designer Massimo Iosa Ghini. His comical designs throw us off balance with their speeding curves, tipsy proportions and surprising details.

Though displayed formally, art-gallery style, Ioso Ghini's collection comes off more like a comedy act with class.

The Batman table greets visitors at the door with a flourish. Up against the wall, the Armadillo chest undulates with ridges and a supporting tail. On a shelf, the compact cruet set looks like a quartet of toy bombs set on end.

Iosa Ghini, 31, was trained as an artist and architect in Florence and Milan. A multifaceted designer of graphics, fabrics and discos (including a Manhattan restaurant/club), he considers himself a child of television and comic books (of his own making).

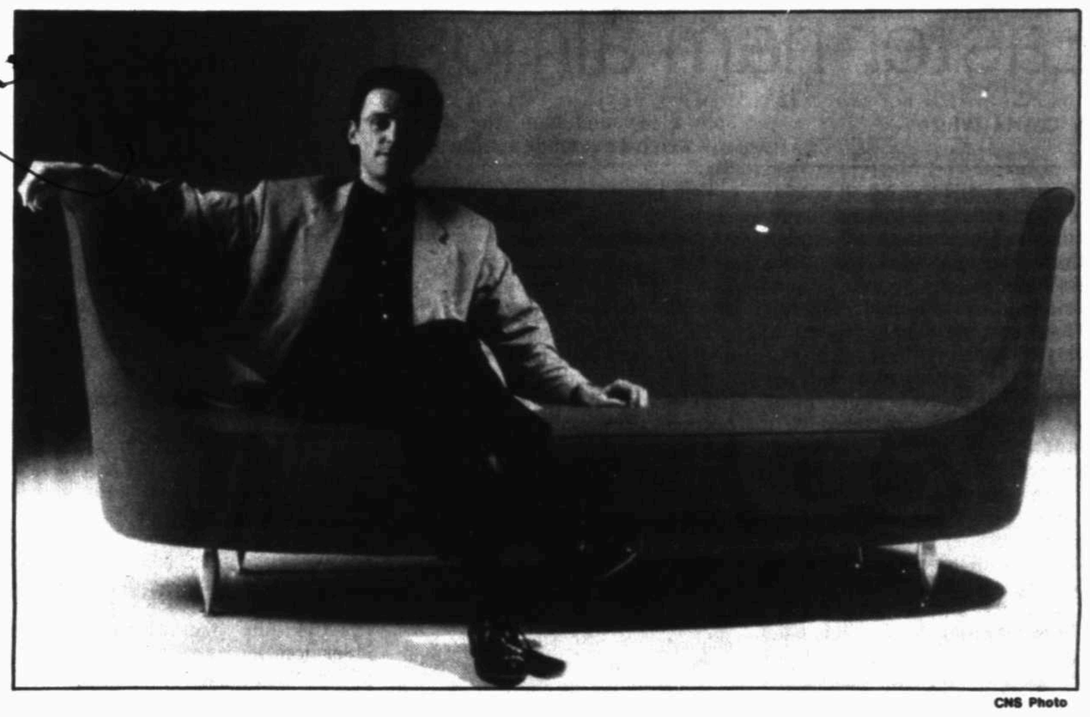
Now living in Bologna, Iosa Ghini is also a cartoonist, and that shows in this parade of 21 friendly objects. His idea of furnishings is zany, verging on hilarious.

Take legs. In the living room Iosa Ghini has dreamed up, legs don't match and he doesn't need four of them. Some kick out with ballerina grace. Others look like lunar landing module legs on round, metal pads. The sluglike stool rests on its own squashy seat that gracefully cascades to the floor.

"It seemed to me ... it wasn't absolutely necessary to go through a rational path to the object," Iosa Ghini has said.

However unconventional, this collection is also elegant and sophisticated, sporting svelte lines and minimal ornament. Playful or not, he uses expensive materials such as leather, mahagony, pear wood and satin-finish silver plate.

Iosa Ghini updates the aerodynamic lines and shapes of early 20th-century Italian futurists. And, like the futurists, he optimistically embraces technology.



CNS Photo

Italian designer Massimo Iosa Ghini creates furniture designs with dramatic curves and surprising proportions.

Into Iosa Ghini's spunky melting pot go the fleet-looking profiles of 1950s tail fins and streamlined toasters and diners. He designs table tops in organic shapes and makes wooden drawer fronts ripple — another steal from the '50s, but this time from free-form styles.

Curved, tubular-steel arms and legs (used decades ago by Russian constructivists and Bauhaus furniture designers) add shiny whiplash to some upholstered pieces.

The whimsical influence of '60s pop art lives on in Iosa Ghini's bold colors — and in the large hole in the middle of the orange Boomerang sofa's seat.

As if all these ingredients aren't spicy enough, Iosa Ghini mocks the self-conscious monumentality of bombastic Fascist architecture with swaggering, staggering forms. Top-heavy pieces look amusingly precarious.

In 1986, young Iosa Ghini showed furniture with the famed Memphis group, but he soon veered off with a dozen or so other designers to found bolidism. (The name comes from the Italian word for speeding object, or, better yet, shooting star.) The bolidists issued a manifesto — which sounds like serious business. But the designs that flowed from it are exhilaratingly offbeat.

The difference between the internationally influential Memphis style and bolidism, Iosa Ghini has explained, is in the approach to shape and line. Memphis designers exploit the junction of jazzy shapes, while bolidists follow a single line in a single direction, keeping it pure.

This idea clearly sends Iosa Ghini's turquoise Satellite armchair and purple Orbita sofa into the stratosphere. In these related designs, the line of the back swoops from the floor, arcs gently, then flows down to end in a curled tail, its tip nestled into the seat cushion.

The silver-plated vessels are even more comical than the furniture. Pitchers lunge forward, teetering on wiggly legs. One vase is a stripped-down, squared-off ode to a Grecian urn; another with sharp fins is named Squalo, or Shark.

Fun for the home, Italian-style, is not cheap. Prices for these 21 prototypes range from $1,050 for the Spartan UFO plate to $6,800 for a luxuriously long leather bench with a disarmingly small back called Vertigine. Translation: giddiness, dizziness or vertigo — and all apply.

The goofy personality of this collection expresses the incongruities, excesses and pace of our era. Objects in space, the designs are moving fast. Going, going, gone.

Area rugs add warmth, color to room

Associated Press

Beyond beauty, area rugs are hard-working design elements. They bring softness and warmth to any hard-surface floor, instantly infuse color and pattern into a space, and make comely cover-ups for soiled or damaged carpet, reports Better Homes and Gardens Decorating magazine.

Whether walking on fragile kilims, woven dhurries or colorful Oriental rugs, most people will want to protect their investments with these measures:

■ Pad all area rugs. This will keep them flat, shapely and resilient. In addition, padding prevents rug color from seeping through onto the floor underneath the carpet.

■ Pick up everyday dirt with a carpet sweeper. Vacuum rugs once or twice a month with a brush attachment intended for wood floors. Be sure to stroke the pile of Oriental rugs gently to prevent wear, and avoid beaters or carpet attachments for all rugs.

■ Turn over reversible rugs once a year. If traffic is heavy on one end, turn the rug end-to-end every three years. To even out fading caused by sunlight, turn the rug several times a year.

■ Remove spots and stains immediately. Consult the rug's care guide for stain and spot-removal information before stains happen.

Home fashion merry-go-round turns again

By Barbara Mayer
Associated Press

Color and pattern changes are inevitable as people tire of the old. Current events and changing interests inspire the new.

Right now, a number of events and attitudes are turning the color wheel in new directions, displacing pastels, floral excesses and shiny fabrics.

Important among them are concern for the environment, a good feeling about natural materials, interest in ethnic designs of Asia, Africa, Latin America and American Indians, and a revival of colors and patterns inspired by the art movements of the 1950s and 1960s.

The trends were cited in programs on home furnishings fabric directions for the 1990s by Ron Splude, color analyst for the Du Pont Co.'s interior textiles department, and by Mary Louise Hawkins, color stylist for Cotton, Inc., the marketing arm of American cotton producers.

"As we move into the new decade, we're seeing a shift toward natural materials and a pared-down style," says Hawkins.

Rustic exposed timbers and joinery can be an appropriate background for an eclectic mix of furniture styles.

WHITES AND neutrals are popular in the bedroom. For example, there's J.P. Stevens' new line of linens for bed and bath called Simply Cotton. The products are chemical-free, undyed and unbleached and come in their natural off-white shade, according to the manufacturer. They require ironing because they aren't treated with permanent press chemicals.

The company hopes to capture the imagination of the environmentally concerned public with the collection in its Utica line. It will be in stores in late spring or early summer at prices of about $40 for a twin set of sheets.

"We have seen a groundswell of interest in natural products free of additives and preservatives and in packaging that is simple, recyclable and biodegradable," says Thomas J. Ward, J.P. Stevens president.

Hawkins says a hand-crafted ethnic style is particularly widespread with colors and prints that suggest the look of kilim rugs, paisley prints and mosaic motifs.

Contemporary art is furnishing two fabric trends. One is for fabrics that depend on texture and surface interest rather than color. Seersucker and pique, which have raised patterning, and solids with small dots are examples. Moving on to more lively patterns, there are many with wavy lines, squiggles and splashes of bright color inspired by the pop art and supergraphics of the 1960s.

COLORS AND designs that are less of a fad and longer lasting are more desirable now than they used to be. Which is why more classic colors are being used in home decorating, according to Barbara Southerland, a decorator in New York.

The more familiar the colors you select, the longer they are likely to give pleasure, she says. She advises steering clear of tricky colors in favor of more classic hues.

"Color is the most important aspect of decorating a room because people remember color far more easily than other things such as furniture or window treatments," she says.

If you are unsure what color to select, you can find inspiration in a box of crayons.

"Not the big box," Southerland says, "but the basic small box we all got when we were 4 and none of the 10 or so colors were weird."

Southerland says the primaries of red, yellow and blue retain their freshness and don't go in and out of fashion the way composite colors such as mauve do.

"A classic pale yellow wall will look good for 10 years," she says. "A lipstick red sofa or cobalt blue chair that looked great new in 1970 would have the same appeal if purchased today."

A formula that is easy to apply includes one or two strong clear colors for furniture and surfaces and neutrals such as beige, pale yellow or gray to keep the room from becoming too intense. Patterned fabrics can mix the shades and bring more life.

THERE ARE schemes men and women both tend to like. One that reminds her of the colors of Italy in summer mixes pale sienna (a kind of peach), terra cotta, pale yellow and a gray-brown she says looks like the stones of Florence.

"Men and women both find it very comfortable," she says, "and it's gorgeous at night."

Another popular combination is gray with white, yellow and black and a touch of red or pink.

If you are unsure of what you prefer, she says the old saw still works of opening the closets to see which colors you usually wear.

Easter ham almost as traditional as Thanksgiving turkey

By Carrie White
N.Y. Times News Service

Easter is still the No. 1 holiday for ham, although it is no longer so dictated by the curing calendar.

In the days before refrigeration, says Robine Kline of the National Pork Producers Council, fall hog killings produced perfectly cured hams for Easter dinners.

Today refrigerators and freezers make ham a year-round meat. But, where tradition prevails, it tends to show up on the dinner table when the Easter holiday hits.

With good reason. A ham feeds a crowd. It's easy to bake, if not already cooked. And carving has become effortless, now that fat and bone virtually have been eliminated.

Even the bone-in ham has been improved by a machine that spiral-slices the meat before you buy it. You don't even need a sharp knife to serve it because the slices practically fall off the bone.

Ham is still salty — it's part of the curing process — but many are less salty than in years past. Several years ago the U.S. Department of Agriculture lowered the amount of salt required by law to cure products. Hams, like other cured foods, benefited.

If you buy ham infrequently, here are some tips from Kline and other sources to guide you with your Easter dinner selection.

TYPES OF HAM

■ Boneless: All bones removed and most of the external and internal fat trimmed away before being fully cooked. Some food experts think boneless hams are less flavorful than bone-in hams; on the other hand, there is little waste with the boneless.

■ Canned ham: Also boneless, the ham has been placed in a can, vacuum-sealed and then cooked. Natural dry gelatin may be added before sealing to absorb the natural juices as the ham cooks.

■ Bone-in ham: May be sold as whole hams, shank and rump (butt) halves or portions, and center slices. May already be cooked and spiral-sliced for easy serving.

HOW MUCH TO BUY

For boneless or canned hams, figure 4 to 5 servings per pound.

For bone-in hams, figure 2 to 3 servings per pound. Bone-in hams generally come whole, shank or butt end. The shank end, or leg end of the ham, is bonier and often less expensive than the butt, or rump half, of the ham.

Some producers compensate for this difference in meatiness. Honeybaked Ham, for instance, splits its hams off-center to give an equal bone-to-meat ratio between the butt end and the shank end. The two ends won't weigh the same, but will have the same amount of meat, says assistant manager Mark Lockridge. "If we split a 15-pound ham, the shank will weigh 8½ pounds and the butt 6½."

Erin Beeson, a manager at HickoryBaked Honey Hams says that a lot of customers like the shank end of the ham because of way it looks. "It comes to a point; the butt end is rounder."

The butt end has a crooked bone and may be a little harder to slice. When HickoryBaked cuts a whole ham in half, it tries to make the butt end a little smaller, about 6 to 7 pounds. "If you order a small ham, you will get a butt end; the shank end usually runs 7 to 10 pounds."

COOKING

Most ham today is fully cooked. However, if not labeled "fully cooked," assume that it needs to be cooked.

For a cook-before-eating ham, heat at 325 degrees to an internal temperature of 160 degrees (about 18 minutes a pound). If desired, apply a glaze the final 30 minutes.

A fully cooked ham needs no additional time in the oven. However, if you prefer to serve it warm, heat it at 325 degrees to an internal temperature of 140 degrees.

SPECIALTY HAMS

■ Country or country-style ham: Slowly dry-cured with salt, then smoked and aged.

■ Black Forest Ham: Traditionally smoked with only fir and pine branches, this ham is boneless, smoky and moist.

■ Westphalian Ham: Originally from Germany, this ham is smoked with juniper twigs and berries over a beechwood fire; known for its heavy smoked flavor. A salty reddish ham, it is sliced paper thin.

■ Prosciutto Ham: From Parma, Italy, this ham has a sweet, delicate smoky flavor and is usually thinly sliced and eaten raw, often as an appetizer. (Because trichinosis is not a problem in Europe, many European hams are heavily cured and eaten raw.)

HAM LEFTOVERS

Refrigerate leftover ham within 1 to 2 hours of cooking. It can be kept refrigerated for 4 to 5 days. Freezing tends to deteriorate the quality of many hams. If you must freeze them, wrap well and store up to two months.

Recycle that ham with these recipes:

FETTUCCINE AND HAM SALAD

¾ pound fully-cooked boneless ham
½ cup diagonally sliced carrots
8 ounces spinach fettuccine
1 small onion, sliced and separated into rings
½ cup tarragon vinegar
¼ cup cooking oil
⅛ teaspoon dried tarragon, crushed
⅛ teaspoon dried basil, crushed

Cut ham into half-inch cubes. Set aside. Place carrots in steamer basket over water and cook for 10 to 12 minutes or until crisp tender. Cook fettuccine according to package directions. Rinse well with hot water. In a large bowl combine ham, carrots, fettuccine and onion. For dressing, in a screw-top jar combine vinegar, oil, tarragon and basil. Cover and shake well. Pour over fettuccine mixture. Toss gently to coat. Chill 2 to 4 hours. Toss again before serving.

GRILLED HAM AND SWISS SANDWICHES

8 ounces thinly sliced, fully-cooked ham
4 ounces Swiss cheese, sliced
8 half-inch thick slices French or Vienna bread
4 eggs
⅓ cup milk
3 tablespoons margarine

For each sandwich, place 2 ounces ham and 1 ounce Swiss cheese between 2 slices of bread. In a mixing bowl beat together the eggs and milk. Dip sandwiches in the egg mixture, turning carefully, until all of the mixture is absorbed. Melt butter in a large skillet or on griddle. Place sandwiches in skillet and cook slowly 8 to 10 minutes; turn and continue cooking until cheese is melted and both sides are golden. Makes 4.

For holiday leftovers, try Ham Loaf with Pistachios

By Pierre Franey
N.Y. Times News Service

It is interesting to look at old cookbooks to see how taste preferences change. I was leafing through a copy of Escoffier published by Crown in 1941 and looked up ham.

There were 32 recipes for ham, including cured ham a la hanoinesse (braised ham with truffles and noodles tossed in butter and pureed onions), mousse of ham, cold souffle of ham and ham smoked over ashes.

This inspired me to make a simple but tasty ham loaf that can be prepared in advance. It begins with 1½ pounds of cooked ham cut into cubes. Chop the ham medium coarse in a food processer.

The seasonings — onions, garlic, mushrooms, celery, salt and pepper — are then sauteed in butter and mixed with the ham, bread crumbs, eggs, sour cream, cumin, nutmeg, parsley and pistachios. The loaf cooks in about 40 minutes.

And while the calendar may say spring, you can't prove it by local produce in Northeastern supermarkets. For now I will seek out the best winter vegetables available.

A simple butternut squash puree seasoned with honey, allspice and nutmeg is a fine accompaniment to the ham loaf. For texture, try a cauliflower salad.

HAM LOAF WITH PISTACHIOS

1½ pounds cooked ham
1 tablespoon butter, plus butter for greasing the pan
½ cup chopped onion
1 teaspoon finely chopped garlic
¼ pound mushrooms, cut in very small cubes
½ cup chopped celery
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1 cup fresh or canned chicken broth
2 cups fine fresh bread crumbs
2 eggs, lightly beaten
¼ cup pistachios
¼ cup sour cream
¼ teaspoon ground cumin
¼ teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
4 tablespoons finely chopped parsley

Preheat the oven to 425 degrees. Cut the ham into cubes and, in a food processor, chop it medium coarse. Set aside.

Melt the butter in a skillet and add the onion, garlic, mushrooms, celery, salt and pepper. Cook briefly until vegetables are wilted. Add the chicken broth; bring to a boil and cook for 3 minutes. Remove and let cool.

Spoon the mixture into a bowl. Add the ham, bread crumbs, eggs, pistachios, sour cream, cumin, nutmeg and parsley. Blend well.

Butter a loaf pan that measures 9x5x2½-inches. Add the mixture and pack well. Smooth over the top and put in the oven. Bake 40 minutes. Remove from the oven and let stand in a warm place at least 10 minutes before serving. Serve hot with sweet relish or chutney.

BUTTERNUT SQUASH PUREE

1 butternut squash, about 2 pounds
Salt to taste
2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon honey
⅛ teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
⅛ teaspoon ground allspice
Pinch cinnamon
Freshly ground pepper to taste

Pare the squash, remove the seeds and cut into 1½-inch cubes. Put in a saucepan, cover with water and add salt. Bring to a boil, cover and simmer for 5 minutes or until tender.

Drain the squash and put it through a food mill or processor. Return the puree to the saucepan and add butter, honey, nutmeg, allspice, cinnamon, salt and pepper. Blend well until smooth. Serve hot.

CAULIFLOWER SALAD

1 cauliflower, about 1 pound
¼ cup milk
Salt to taste
1 hard-boiled egg, peeled, at room temperature
2 teaspoons Dijon-style mustard
2 tablespoons red-wine vinegar
6 tablespoons olive oil
Freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Trim off the leaves of the cauliflower and cut away its core. Put the cauliflower in a saucepan with water to barely cover, milk and salt. Bring to a boil and simmer 15 minutes or until tender but not mushy. Do not overcook. Drain and let cool. Do not chill.

Put the egg through a fine sieve into a mixing bowl. Add the mustard and vinegar. Gradually add the oil, beating briskly with a wire whisk. Add salt, pepper and parsley. Spoon the sauce over the cauliflower and serve.

TRAVEL

Denver home of historical places

By Jacquelyn Peake
Copley News Service

Looking forward to a visit to the Mile-High City? You won't be disappointed.

Denver is one of those vibrant cities that never fails to thrill. Maybe it's the thin, rarefied air. Maybe it's because Denver is a young city, just 141 years old, and is still feeling its oats. Maybe it's that brilliant blue sky that showers sunshine on the city more than 300 days a year.

Whatever the reason, you'll find plenty to do and see in downtown Denver.

Start your tour with a visit to the Denver Metro Convention and Visitors Bureau, 225 W. Colfax Ave. You'll find cheerful men and women there who will give you a downtown city map, brochures of all the major attractions and plenty of help in planning your itinerary.

Here are a few suggestions to make a well-rounded tour of upper downtown Denver. All the attractions listed are within walking distance of the visitors bureau.

■ DENVER FIREFIGHTERS MUSEUM, 1326 Tremont Place.

Like many frontier towns built of hastily erected wooden homes and stores, Denver had its share of fires. So, a well-trained cadre of firefighters and portable firefighting equipment were necessary to the survival of the growing young city.

The history of the valiant men, mostly volunteers, who filled that role during Denver's early days, is recaptured at this unusual downtown museum.

Housed on two floors of a historic 1909 firehouse, the museum contains fire-fighting equipment dating back to a rare 1867 hand pumper. This unit, which was used many times by Denver firefighters, was pulled across the Western plains from Ohio by a team of oxen.

Some of the oldest pumpers were pulled by hand down Denver's streets when the fire alarm sounded. One of these, a high-wheeled 1875 model complete with brass bell and rolled canvas hose, is on display at the museum.

Other antique fire-fighting memorabilia on exhibit include leather helmets, uniforms, trophies and over 200 rare photographs.

The museum is open weekdays 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Admission charged.

CNS Photo

One fascinating stop on a tour of Denver is a visit to the home of the "unsinkable" Molly Brown.

■ THE DENVER MINT, Colfax Avenue between Cherokee and Delaware streets.

This imposing building is the most popular attraction in Denver. Hundreds of thousands of visitors every year join one of the free guided tours the mint offers weekdays, 8 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The tour begins in a glass-enclosed room high above the stamping machines. Here some 60 presses operate around the clock, five days a week, stamping out shiny pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters, half dollars and commemorative coins.

Over 5 billion coins are made here each year by workers who seem amazingly blase about the wealth passing under their hands. As the tour proceeds to other observation rooms, the guides explain the elaborate security measures employed at the mint. These measures are not so much to protect the coins as they are for the much greater treasure hidden deep inside the building's basement.

The greatest wealth of the mint — some $100 billion worth of solid gold bars — lies there, encased in 1,000 tons of steel framework and walls 4½ feet thick. But the tour stops short of the gigantic doors that protect that treasure.

Visitors can see several genuine gold bars on display, however, in the mint's museum. And while the mint offers no free samples of its products, a fine gift shop does have souvenirs to take back home as mementos of a visit to the nation's second-largest storehouse of gold bullion.

■ COLORADO HISTORY MUSEUM, 1300 Broadway.

Colorado has a lusty history peopled with cowboys and Indians, prospectors and madams, sodbusters and trappers.

One town claimed to be sitting on the richest square mile on earth, and a wide-eyed belle started a scandal that reached all the way to Washington, D.C.

This past lives on in a vast museum of Western history that traces the colorful lives, histories and diversities of Colorado's early residents. Along with Indian artifacts and pioneer photographs are an authentic prairie sod house and a gold rush miner's log cabin.

The museum is open Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Sunday 12 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Admission charged.

■ THE COLORADO STATE CAPITOL BUILDING, on the block bordered by Colfax, Grant, 14th and Broadway.

The brilliant golden dome of this replica of the U.S. Capitol is a symbol of the glittering mineral that was the basis for the state's wealth. The entire dome is layered in pure 24-karat gold, contributed to the state by a bevy of proud miners.

From the steps of the Capitol you have a majestic view of the Mile-High City. You're standing exactly one mile above sea level on those steps.

Inside take a moment to admire the priceless wainscoting in the main lobby. It's rose onyx, and the entire world's supply was used to construct this durable and beautiful surface. If you like, trace along some of the dark veins in the rosy stone. You may find the profile of a Thomas Jefferson, Alfred Hitchcock, Franklin Roosevelt or some other famous person in the wavy pattern.

The Capitol building is open weekdays, with free tours every half-hour from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

■ MOLLY BROWN HOUSE, 1340 Pennsylvania St.

The flamboyant Molly Brown, as heroine of the Titanic disaster, is undoubtedly Denver's most famous historical figure. Her story was immortalized a few years ago in a highly fanciful stage play and movie, "The Unsinkable Molly Brown."

An impoverished Irish girl from Hannibal, Mo., Molly landed in Leadville, Colo., in 1887. While working as a clerk in a store there, she met and eventually married a struggling young miner, Johnny (J.J.) Brown.

With their fortune made in gold Molly and J.J. moved to Denver. There the almost illiterate Mrs. Brown tried hard to find a place in Denver society. With plenty of money to spend, she bought and furnished a substantial house in what was then Denver's most fashionable neighborhood.

While her home isn't nearly as grandiose as the one portrayed in the movie, it is a fine example of the ornate style favored by wealthy Denverites in the late 19th century. Heavy velvet draperies, patterned carpets, arches and columns, deeply carved furniture, and fringe everywhere fringe could possibly be attached — it's all there today.

The home is open for tours Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and Sunday 12 p.m. to 3 p.m. Admission charged.

For more information about Denver, contact the Denver Metro Convention and Visitors Bureau, 225 W. Colfax Ave., Denver, Colo. 80202; phone (303) 892-1112.

Earth Day celebration planned at Balmorhea

Staff Report

BALMORHEA — Earth Day celebration in Balmorhea will be April 20-21, with a series of events planned in both the state park and the city of Balmorhea.

Sky divers and scuba divers from all over the area will participate in the event. Westex Skysports will provide ground shuttles from the state part to the airport for anyone wishing to skydive. Tandem dives will also be available, along with video tapings of the jumps. All participating sky divers must register and sign release forms.

Scuba divers can plunge into what is described as "the world's largest (1¼ surface acres) outdoor, open air, spring-fed swimming pool" during the weekend. Air tank refills and some tank rentals will be available at Toyahvale Desert Oasis, located next to the state park. Participating scuba divers must sign in at the park and have a current C card.

Hot-air balloon rides also will be available inside the grounds of the state park.

Boy scouts and other youth groups will have exhibits about ecology and environmental concerns on display.

For the younger set, events will include children's contests on April 20 and relays for older children on April 21.

For non-divers and those who want a to take a break from diving, other activities are planned outside the park in the city of Balmorhea.

Tenth-grade students from Balmorhea school will offer a carwash, and elementary school grade students (grades K-6) will sponsor old-fashioned, horse-drawn buggy rides.

Crafts booths are still available for rent, for $10 each, at Tumbleweed Corner. All craftsmen interested in renting a booth are invited to contact the Desert Oasis in Toyahvale for more information.

Street dance at the Gazebo in Balmorhea will be April 20, and will feature the music of the band, Rio Grande, from Alpine. A barbecue and fajita dinner will be 5-7 p.m. April 20.

Funds raised from all events will benefit the Balmorhea EMS ambulance fund, which will provide emergency medical service for Balmorhea and the surrounding area.

California camping rules changed

Copley News Service

Certain procedural changes for making or canceling California state park camping reservations have been implemented this year.

All family campsites, group campsites, Ano Nuevo Elephant Seal Walks, day-use and scuba diving reservations can be made only by phone through MISTIX. Mail-in reservations no longer will be accepted.

Camping discounts are available to senior citizens, qualified disabled people and disabled veterans when reserving sites through MISTIX. The MISTIX reservation agent must be notified of any discount qualification at the time the reservation is made. The person requesting the site reservation must verify that the price quoted by the agent includes the appropriate discount. Eligibility for discounts will be confirmed upon arrival at the campground.

For more information contact MISTIX Customer Service, P.O. Box 85705, San Diego, Calif. 92138; (619) 452-5956.

Airport X-rays in U.S. pose small danger to film

By Craig Mailloux
N.Y.L. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Getting cameras and film through airport security isn't nearly the hassle that some people make it out to be.

The X-ray machines in use domestically won't harm the usual films that most travelers use today, even with several trips through the machines. I have had film go through the X-ray as many as four times with no ill effects. What you should be careful of is the ultra-high-speed films of 1600 or 3200 ISO.

When going through security, I don't worry about the film that's in the camera, as it will likely only go through the X-ray once. But if you are making a trip with multiple stops, and it concerns you, one easy way to avoid X-ray is hand inspection of film. I have never been refused this request. In those instances, I keep my film in a small pouch, pull it from the camera bag, hand it to the security guard and send the camera bag through the X-ray.

There's no need to have the entire contents of a camera bag inspected. Photographers may waste time having the inspector look at every camera, lens and gadget, when really all they need to check by hand is the film. X-rays won't hurt cameras and lenses.

Traveling internationally can present problems as some countries use higher powered X-rays and they won't do hand inspections. You can request one, but many countries insist on everything being X-rayed.

I generally avoid carrying cameras or film in my luggage, but sometimes it's unavoidable. If I'm traveling overseas, I use lead-lined bags, which are available at most camera stores just for this purpose.

Whenever possible, I get film processed, even while traveling, so that I can see what I have shot and make sure that the cameras worked properly. That also helps because processed film won't be harmed by X-rays.

Choosing best fertilizer important for plants' health

By Deborah A. Benge

Fertilizers can be a mystery. When choosing the best fertilizer for your plants, a trip to the garden center can be overwhelming. And trying to use an organic fertilizer instead of a commercially-produced one can be enough to make you want to skip the whole thing.

Benge

Just so it is not quite so confusing, let me give you a little insight to fertilizers. First, remember that plants, like people, need a balanced diet which includes 16 nutrients. Three are known as major nutrients because they are used in larger amounts than the other nutrients.

A fertilizer product will have three numbers on its label. The first number represents the percent of nitrogen in the product, the second represents the percent of phosphorus, and the third represents the percent of potassium. These percentages are based on 100 pounds of product, so five pounds of a product labeled 20-20-20 would be necessary to get pound of actual nitrogen from the product.

Other ingredients and their explanations may be listed, also, including calcium, iron, zinc and manganese are just a few you might find. Occasionally you will see an S that follows the N-P-K, that represents the sulfur in the product.

N-P-K are used in greater amounts and are most likely to become deficient. Of the three major nutrients, nitrogen is the one most likely to be deficient in this area.

One of the best ways to determine what fertilizer you need is to have a soil test run. A regular analysis soil test will reveal pH, N, P, K, calcium, magnesium, sodium, sulfur and salinity, which will help you determine if you need a complete fertilizer or just a nitrogen fertilizer.

One problem in many well-established landscapes is an overabundance of phosphorus. This may be the result of repeated use of complete fertilizers containing high amounts of phosphorus. Eventually the phosphorus level becomes so high that plant problems, and perhaps a phosphorus-induced iron deficiency, began to occur.

Nitrogen is used in larger amounts than any of the other nutrients. Nitrogen in most of its forms is readily available and easily leached with rain or irrigation water. Some plants, often turfgrass and vegetables, may need supplemental amounts of nitrogen throughout the growing season.

Phosphorus is a nutrient that is not leached or moved in the soil by water, and it is not used in amounts as great as that of nitrogen. Young plants respond well to phosphorus placed in the root zone. If applied to the soil surface, phosphorus will not readily move into the root zone, so putting it there can help. In a vegetable garden, phosphorus can be placed just below the seed (2 inches) by banding it in at planting time.

Potassium is a major nutrient that rarely causes a deficiency problem.

Secondary nutrients of iron and zinc can sometimes be deficient, but this is really a soil pH-related rpoblem rather than a true deficiency. Soil pH levels in this area usually range from slightly to moderately alkaline.

With increased pH levels, nutrients such as iron and zinc become unavailable for plant use. Iron sulfate or iron chelates can correct an iron deficiency. Apply these substances to soil in late winter or early spring, or spray them on to the foliage during the growing season.

Zinc is best sprayed on foliage. When applied to the soil, it quickly becomes unavailable and deficiency symptoms continue. Pecan trees are notorious for requiring zinc sprays.

Next week we will look at some types of fertilizers.

Permian Basin Turfgrass Conference is planned for 8:30 a.m.-4 p.m. April 3 at Ector County Coliseum, Building A, in Odessa. Topics will include turfgrass management in West Texas, white grub management, pathogenic and non-pathogenic turfgrass problems, chemiphobia, fire ants in turfgrass, Don't Bag It, and turfgrass irrigation.

Pre-registration will be at Ector County Extension Office, 1010 E. 8th St. in Odessa or at the door. Pesticide license holders can earn CEUs in different categories.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Watch the war! Cast the movie!

By Erma Bombeck

A few years ago on a book tour, I was lucky enough to cross paths often with author/playwright Garson Kanin. We met on so many radio and television talk shows that we could answer the questions before they were asked.

Bombeck

One morning at a small radio station in Atlanta, "Gar" jarred us both out of a coma when he suggested we forget about our respective books and put together a mythical cast for the Watergate movie that was destined to be made.

Neither of us picked Robert Redford or Dustin Hoffman, the ultimate choices for "All the President's Men." I think I suggested Steve McQueen to play Nixon — only because I liked to look at Steve McQueen.

As you read this, somewhere a young writer is hunched over a word processor frantically putting together the first of a rash of Desert Storm films. Anticipating the mentality of Hollywood, (I would caution you not to be) don't be surprised if the casting seems a little glitzy and a few liberties are taken with the plot.

Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf will be played by Kevin Costner and Michelle Peiffer will be cast as his wife, Brenda. That's a given. At the opening of the film, he will portray a man who enjoys fishing more than generaling and is looking forward to retirement.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Chief of Staff Gen. Colin Powell (played by "L.A. Law's" Blair Underwood) is ambitiously pursuing a place on the Republican ticket to unseat Vice President Dan Quayle, played by Ricky Schroder.

Cut to CNN's Peter Arnett, portrayed by Bruce Willis, who is in Baghdad on a vacation and has a chance to interview Saddam Hussein (Omar Sharif). The interpreter is (to no one's surprise) Kim Basinger, and there is electricity between them. More on that later in the film.

There is a buildup scene to the war with President Bush (Dana Carvey), Defense Secretary Dick Cheney (Wilford Brimley) and Secretary of State James Baker (Peter Strauss). They concur that Gen. Schwarzkopf is the only man to send to the Mideast and assign him Melanie Griffith as his driver. (Whoa!)

When CNN's Wolf Blitzer (Robin Williams) is assigned to the gulf, he uncovers an indiscretion between the general and his driver. He decides to suppress the story, but one day when Peter Jennings (portrayed by Michael Caine) is interviewing Tony Orlando (playing himself), Sam Donaldson (Larry Hagman) breaks in with an exclusive on the relationship.

There will be a story of the war in there somewhere, but you'll have to work to find it. As for Assistant Secretary of State Margaret Tutwiler, sometimes even Hollywood casting can't improve on real life. She'll play herself.

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Telephones services can screen calls

Associated Press

Telephone companies across the country are now offering a variety of new services including some that will screen your calls — and block those from people you don't want to talk to.

Most of the new services work with the phone you already own, according to an article in the Better Way section of the current issue of Good Housekeeping, but many can only be used for local calls, some may require installation fees and others may not be available in all areas. Here is a rundown on them:

If you are not home when someone calls, or if you can't get to the phone before a caller hangs up, the last call made to you will be returned automatically when you dial a special code.

The service works even if you have Call Waiting and choose not to interrupt your conversation to answer a second call. Price: about $5 a month.

When the number you've dialed is busy, hang up. Then dial a code and the number will be automatically redialed for up to 30 minutes. A special ring lets you know when the number has been reached. This service cannot be used on a cordless phone. Price: about $4 a month.

A service sometimes called Voice Mail or Answer Call is similar to an answering machine — except you don't need to buy the machine. Instead you use your own phone to record and receive messages.

It even works if you are on the phone. Rather than hearing a busy signal, the caller will reach your recorded greeting and be able to leave a message.

There is also a special "mailbox" feature, which takes separate messages for each of the family members using the phone. Each person, by punching in a code, can play back only his or her messages. The service works only with a 12-button touch-tone phone. Price: about $7 a month.

One service lets you know whether or not a phone call is from someone you want to talk to. First you program into your phone the numbers of up to six people you hear from frequently.

Thereafter two short rings will let you know that one of these people is calling. If you have Call Waiting, a special tone will indicate that a "priority" caller is on the line. This service cannot be used on a cordless phone. Price: about $4 a month.

With another service, you can block calls from people you don't want to speak with by programming their numbers into the phone. When they try to reach you, they will automatically get a recording telling them you are not accepting calls. The phone won't even ring in your home. Price: about $4 a month.

Play therapy helps children solve problems

By Janice Ford
Advertising Feature Writer

In a therapist's office, a small boy is playing with a daddy doll and a doll house. He takes the doll, beats it and stuffs it down the chimney. The child was sexually abused a few years ago, at a time when he did not have the vocabulary to articulate his feelings. Following this belated release of anger and identification of feelings, his mother reports improved sleep patterns at home and fewer angry outbursts at his day care center.

This example depicts the reality of play therapy, which in its various forms, enables children to communicate about real life issues.

Play therapy can be mobilized as a healing tool when children are too young to verbalize their anxiety-producing and emotional problems.

Joan Pace, LPC, and Diane Rhoden, LPC, staff counselors at the Samaritan Counseling Center, see many children who need help recovering from emotional problems such as fear, sadness, confusion, anger and rejection.

These issues may stem, for example, from their parents' divorce, or may evolve from various forms of abuse.

While an adult may be able to develop a comfortable relationship with a therapist and talk out problems, said Ms. Pace and Ms. Rhoden, children haven't developed the verbal resources to do so as easily. In play therapy, toys and games represent childrens' words and play is their language.

Samaritan Counseling Center meets needs

The Samaritan Counseling Center of West Texas, Inc., is an ecumenical, non-profit organization which was established in 1973 to help people grow toward greater health and wholeness by providing counseling and psychological services within a Christian perspective.

We believe health is the result of maintaining the delicate balance and harmony between the spiritual, emotional and physical elements in our lives.

During times of stress or life change, this balance may be upset. The result can be personal discord, disrupting family, work, and social relationships.

In response to stress-related problems, the Samaritan Counseling Center utilizes a team approach, bringing together the special talents of the minister, psychotherapist, and/or physician as needed.

Combining these elements, we believe there is a redemptive power at work helping people to overcome the destructive circumstances of life and to find a new wholeness.

Affirming the needs of the whole person — body, mind and spirit — the Center serves as an expression of the love of God through a ministry of helping people under stress.

Our counselors work within the context of each individual's beliefs and no attempt is made to impose personal theology.

The Samaritan Counseling Center has become a major provider of such out-patient services as individual counseling and psychotherapy, marriage and family counseling, group sessions, pastoral counseling, medical consultation, and educational programs.

We also provide various specialized therapy and educational groups such as clergy support and divorce recovery.

Our services are available to anyone regardless of race, sex, or creed. Sessions are available by appointment only. Each session is scheduled for approximately 50 minutes.

A charge is made for cancellations made with less than 24 hours notice as this represents lost revenue to the Center. Emergency situations will be taken into consideration.

The Center is open Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Evening appointments are available by special arrangement. You may schedule your appointment by calling the Center at (915) 563-4144.

If you call other than during regular business hours, you may leave a message on the answering machine.

The Center is located at 10008 West County Road 116, Air Terminal, Midland, Texas. Another office is located in Monahans, Texas.

Teen Challenge takes biblical view concerning addiction

By Chuck Redger
Director, Midland
Teen Challenge

David Wilkerson began working with gang kids in 1958. When drug abuse mushroomed in the 60s Teen Challenge began to work with people having drug and alcohol problems. Rev. Wilkerson's approach was different.

He believed that if a person would turn his life over to Jesus Christ he could be set free from any problem he had. Teen Challenge now has over 100 centers in the U.S. Sixty-seven are live-in programs and the others are counseling and referral agencies.

I began working with Teen Challenge in 1962. I have worked in New York City and San Francisco before coming to Midland nearly 17 years ago.

Teen Challenge takes a biblical view concerning addiction. The Bible states that the problem of drunkenness is sin. Deut. 21:18-21 "If a man has a stubborn and rebellious son who does not obey his father and mother and will not listen to them when they discipline him, his father and mother shall take hold of him and bring him to the elders at the gate of his town. They shall say to the elders, "This son of ours is stubborn and rebellious. He will not obey us. He is a profligate and a drunkard. Then all the men of his town shall stone him to death. You must purge the evil from among you. All Israel will hear of it and be afraid." RELAX! We are not suggesting all addicted people be executed! The point is that God never commanded "sick" people to be put to death.

I Cor. 6:9-11 states: "Do you not know that the wicked will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived; Neither the sexually immoral nor idolators nor adulterers nor male prostitutes nor homosexual offenders nor thieves or the greedy nor drunkards nor slanderers nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God. And this is what some of you were. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God."

Again the Bible states the root of drunkenness, or addiction is sin. Such people have no part in fellowship with God. The good news is that people in the church at Corinth had come out of the above described lifestyles and were living new and changed lives after accepting Christ as Savior.

So, if a person with life-controlling problems can come to God and find a new life, what's the problem? The problem is that mankind's mind or heart is set against God. As the people of Jesus' day said concerning him: "Away with this man!" Luke 23:18.

A case in point is the AIDS epidemic. This is a direct result of man's defiance of the laws of God. Someone has said, "We are not punished for our sins but by them." Could it be God knew such behavior would culminate in a disease that would threaten the very existence of mankind and gave instructions that if followed would prevent suffering and death?

There is a way to stop the spread of AIDS: live moral lives! However, that is an unacceptable solution. I recall the pleading words of the prophet Ezekiel, "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Eze. 33:11.

Why don't some people make it? Why do some people keep going into relapse? I have had to face the issues. I realize some people, perhaps because of body chemical makeup, are more affected by alcohol. Our society seems to say if a person cannot drink alcohol he is sick! With the death and devastation caused by alcohol in our society we should be saying, "If we drink at all we're stupid!"

Many books have been written on the subject of addiction. Almost daily advertisements of these books, audio tapes and videos land on my desk. The more I read the more I see the simplicity of the solution. The way out of addiction is responsible living.

However, many people are not ready to live responsibly. It is too painful. As one young man who was having trouble keeping the rules of the halfway house where he was living said to me, "It's such a hassle to get up in the morning and go to work. Maybe I should just go back to prison. There I don't have to make any decisions." He went back to prison!

I no longer scratch may head and wonder why people don't make it. There is always a good reason. There is something they are refusing to do or deal with. I am tired of the terms "disease" and "treatment." I believe they are misnomers. The programs that call addiction a disease and still have results do so because they stress personal responsibility. The 12 steps of Alcoholics Anonymous are simple, though painful, steps to responsible living.

It's not hard to beat today's system. Just act irresponsible. You are considered sick and in need of treatment and on top of that you have rights!

The Teen Challenge concept is based on four principles:

(1) There is hope for a person with life-controlling problems.

(2) Sin, not drugs, alcohol, etc. is the major root problem.

(3) The only cure for sin and its symptoms (drugs, alcohol, etc.) is Jesus Christ.

(4) Jesus Christ, living within a person, takes the desire for sin out of that person's life.

When the urge to sin is taken out, then the desire for drugs, alcohol, and all manner of deviant behavior is also removed. When the root problem is dealt with, the symptoms also disappear.

Teen Challenge operates a three phase program. Each phase takes approximately four months. Phase 1, induction: The Christian discipleship process begins with Bible study and character development. The students receive extensive personal counseling. Phase II, advanced: practical Christian living is emphasized. Special classes such as "The Christian Family" and "Money Management" prepare the student for productive living in society.

Phase II, reentry: The student secures employment and chooses a church at which to have Christian fellowship. If he does not have a high school diploma, he is requried to start work on a G.E.D.

The program is designed to help the individual become a "whole person:" mentally sound, emotionally balanced, physically well, socially adjusted and spiritually alive.

The students are challenged to work on four relationships.

(1) Their relationship with God. They are encouraged to repent of their sin and by faith accept Jesus Christ as savior and Lord.

(2) Their relationship with authority. Learn obedience and view authority as for their benefit, not against them.

(3) Their relationship with others. Start showing love and concern for others. Make amends to those they have wronged.

(4) Their relationship with themselves and their future. Recognize that God is changing them. Their future doesn't have to be a repeat of their past.

The facilities of Teen Challenge of the Permian Basin for Phases 1 and 2 are located on a 70 acre farm 5 miles south of Midland. There is plenty of opportunity to learn to live and work in a home environment.

Our staff consists of ministers and former drug-alcohol users. Our staff receives approximately 50 hours of in-house training per year. Also, we endeavor to send each staff member to at least one outside seminar each year.

There is no charge for the services of Teen Challenge. We are supported by the contributions of businesses, individuals and churches.

This speech was given before the Judges and County Commissioners of Texas at their convention on March 17, 1988.

Memorial West offers 8 week outpatient program

In the past those who suffer from chemical dependency have had to rely on lengthy inpatient treatment to solve their problem. Since August of last year Memorial West, (formerly Clearview Hospital) has made that help available without leaving their job. Memorial West was the first hospital in the Permian Basin ready to help those who need to stay on the job while dealing with a chemical dependency problem.

This is accomplished through an approved and structured intensive eight week outpatient program, an alternative to the 28-day inpatient program or less restrictive day treatment program that Memorial West offers.

The reason this program was initiated was to offer certain individuals, not yet in the crucial stage of their addiction, the benefits of a highly structured, family oriented, intensive out-patient treatment while continuing to work. Patients can do this by attending 24, three hour sessions of outpatient treatment. These sessions are after normal working hours during the week and on Saturdays. The patient and/or family are also required to attend one hour per week of individual counseling.

The outpatient treatment process is open ended. That is, patients and their families can be admitted at any time to the established program. They will receive all 24 sessions which include education about chemical dependency, and an opportunity to participate in group therapeutic activities which will deal with the emotional elements of the disease.

The participants of the outpatient curriculum are guided through the program by a certified advanced clinical practitioner.

As with the inpatient program, outpatients receive a medical evaluation and counseling. An individualized treatment plan is developed with each patient and discussed with them regularly. The patient's treatment plan is evaluated on a weekly basis with their admitting physician and therapist.

The ultimate goal of the intensive outpatient program is to assist clients to gain the tools necessary to live a chemical free lifestyle and to improve family functioning.

Memorial West is located at West Loop 250 at Thomason Drive in Midland. Call 697-5200 for more information.

Glenwood offers outpatient care

Glenwood Hospital offers new treatment alternatives for those who suffer from alcohol, drug abuse, or emotional problems.

The new programs significantly reduce both costs and disruption of lives for the participants and their families. Both qualify for most insurance coverage.

STEPS at Night provides intensive outpatient treatment for people who are dependent on alcohol or other drugs but do not require 24-hour medical supervision.

The Day Treatment Program meets the needs of many people who need more than weekly out-patient sessions, but who do not need overnight care. A wide range of problems are addressed including emotional issues as well as a combination of problems including chemical dependency.

Both programs provide treatment at a fraction of the cost of in-patient programs, according to Bryan Hale, Administrator of Glenwood Hospital.

The STEPS at Night program meets from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. One weekend per month, Thursday through Sunday, is devoted to intensive family treatment. STEPS (Sobriety Together – Emotionally, Physically, Spiritually) at Night lasts from four to six weeks, according to the needs of the individual. Participants are able to maintain their work schedules and there is minimum interruption of daily schedules for both patients and family members.

The Day Treatment Program provides in-patient services from 8:30 a.m. until 3 p.m. weekdays; it does not meet on weekends. The program allows for increased family involvement and a less restrictive environment than full-time in-patient care. For those who are clinically appropriate, this is an excellent approach to treatment according to Hale.

"Both programs are tailored to address an individual's specific needs," Hale says. "They also help provide a structured transition back into full community involvement."

Following completion of the programs, patients enter an Aftercare phase that provides ongoing support and reinforcement of the new lifestyle.

Both programs include the 12-step approach, education, group and individual therapy," according to Hale. Individuals in the Day Treatment program should have a living situation which provides adequate emotional, physical and financial support outside the program setting.

Admission to both programs can be made by calling Glenwood's Referral Services Office for a free and confidential consultation or as a planned phase of in-patient treatment.

Glenwood Hospital is located at 3300 South FM 1788, between Midland and Odessa at the air terminal. It offers mental health and substance abuse services in various programs for children, adolescents, and adults who suffer from depression, anxiety, behavioral disorders, chemical dependency and other related problems. For more information call 563-1200 or 1-800-527-4901. All calls are confidential.

Glenwood Hospital offers new outpatient treatment programs for clients who cannot take time off from work or school to receive overnight care. Pictured is the lobby/waiting area at Glenwood.

Post-divorce year survival a critical skill

By Janice Ford
Advertising Feature Writer

- The divorce rate has doubled since 1965.
- Demographers project one-half of all first marriages made today will end in divorce.
- Six out of ten second marriages will probably collapse.
- One third of all children born in the past decade will probably live in a stepfamily before they are eighteen years old.

Statistics such as these offered by Midland clinical social worker Linda H. George facilitate a growing need for a person to learn survival skills for the sensitive first year following a divorce.

Grieving after a divorce is common, noted Ms. George. "Divorce is the death of a relationship — a major loss. So you go through the same stages that you go through with any kind of a loss."

These stages involve denial, anger, bargaining, depression and acceptance. "You can flip-flop in all of these stages," she said.

Ms. George offered some suggestions on surviving and recovering during the first year following a divorce:

- Accept support offered by friends and family. On the other hand, she noted, "You must realize that no one can be available for you all of the time. You have to learn to be self-sufficient and be available to yourself."
- Work on getting past your fears and do something you have always wanted to do which is in reach. "I know a woman who took ballet lessons. I know a man who learned to scuba dive. The doing is important, but even more satisfying is the realization that there are fewer limits on you than you thought."
- Be good to yourself. "On the all of the stress scales, divorce is right at the top."
- Don't try to become friends with your former spouse until both of you are ready. "You need to learn to be separate from your ex-spouse before becoming friends with your ex-spouse."
- Know that you are not a failure. "A divorce is a failure, but people can take it very personally. It's a failure of a relationship, but you are not a failure as a person. Understand that the intense hurt will absolutely not last forever — unless you want to believe that life is rotten. If this is the case, you will probably continue to get all the proof you need."
- Be alert to changes in your children. "When you go through such a difficult time for yourself, sometimes it is hard to watch your children. It is important to be aware of changes in them. The better the mother and the father do, the better the children will handle the divorce."

"It's important to understand what is going on with your children and know that they go through a grief and mourning process too."

- Consider getting professional help. "It's a painful crisis, it's grief, it's the death of a relationship. You could use the introspective process to learn about yourself and grow as a person."

PLAY: Toys help kids deal with issues

(From 1F)

"When they have developed a relationship with the therapist," noted Ms. Rhoden, "children will play out their problems in much the same way that an adult would talk them out."

Play therapy and counseling also help children connect their feelings and thoughts to their behavior. "Often children not only don't have the words but they don't really have the awareness of what their problem is," assessed Ms. Pace.

"They might come in and say, 'My parents are getting a divorce and I'm really feeling caught between the two of them.' So they project onto the toys the issues and problems in their lives that they need to work out."

Children in play therapy do, she added, project powerful emotions, such as anger. A child who is angry about the divorce of his/her parents, for example, might have dolls fight with each other.

Counselors and therapists use different approaches to play therapy, depending on the child's age and oral skills.

One method used with young children is non-directive therapy. Explained Ms. Rhoden, "Non-directive therapy works at creating a safe environment for the children. It makes them comfortable enough to play out whatever their problems or experiences are."

As the child plays, the therapist attends to the child by reflecting back what she observes the child doing and the underlying emotion. "If they are beating up on the punching doll, said Ms. Rhoden, "we might say, 'You're really angry today' or 'You're really angry with that toy,' to help them understand what's going on for them." In this way, the play therapy helps the child connect his/her feelings and thoughts to his/her behavior.

Playing in the therapist's office may also represent a refuge from the harsh realities of the child's world. "It's a safe place to release some of that anger without hurting a sibling, a friend or themselves," noted Ms. Pace.

Non-directive, or talk therapy, on the other hand, is used with verbally acute children from ages ten and up, explained Ms. Rhoden. If the problems are too frightening to talk about, a combination of art therapy or therapeutic games designed to deal with issues may be used.

Sessions are confidential, but issues and emotions brought up during therapy may be discussed on a general basis with the parents. Therapy can last indefinitely, but both therapists commented that the average child spends one hour a week in play therapy for two to three months.

Involvement and diligent work with play therapy, in the end, can be a real achievement for a child with emotional problems. Ms.Rhoden feels it can help a child take a positive direction in life.

"Play therapy can teach them how to deal with their problems," she concluded, "before they get to the point of not having anywhere to torn, feeling isolated, being misunderstood and pick up with people who use drugs as a way to cope."

Substance abuse council targets wider audience

In August, 1989, wheels were set in motion to combine the Midland Council on Alcoholism/Drug Abuse and the Odessa Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse to Permian Basin Regional Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse. The finalization of the process was September 25, 1989.

The Midland Council on Alcoholism was started by a group of concerned citizens on November 25, 1958. Dr. Lekisch was the first President and other longtime Midland residents serving included Dr. Jack Walton and Midland High principal Jack Mashburn. With private donations totaling $2200, an office at 105 Allen Building was opened and Mrs. A.O. Vanderford became the first Executive Secretary of the Midland Council. When founded in 1962, the mission of Odessa Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse was mainly educational, including information, consultation and referral for treatment. Over the years the basic mission has remained constant but our target population has expanded to include the general populus — from the cradle to the grave. Alcohol-/chemical dependency is a family problem, thus every member of the family must be part of the target group.

We are unique in that our broad range of services are provided on a strictly neutral basis with no vested interest in any one specific format. The specific groups involved in the Council's programs for expansion include youth, adolescents, adults, elderly, and at-risk populations. These people represent a range of ethnic and economic levels.

The Permian Basin Regional Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse (PBRCADA) currently operates 20 programs for children, adolescents, adults and special populations within 17 counties of the West Texas Permian Basin. A new service available this year includes Employee Assistance Programs. Each EAP is developed by the council with the unique needs of a company combined with recent legal state and federal mandates. Company employees and their family members are covered under the program and assistance is available for alcohol/drug abuse, family crises, legal problems, and other situations which might arise where abuse is evident. For more information on setting up an Employee Assistance program for your company, contact Mary Boswell, 332-2172.

Rig count up

HOUSTON (AP) — The number of working oil and gas rigs showed a slight recovery this week, increasing by three to 911 rigs, Baker Hughes Inc. reported today.

Last week, the count plunged by 40 rigs to 908. Baker Hughes officials said the rig count traditionally falls in the first quarter of the year and continues to decline through March and April, but the company also blamed last week's drastic loss in part on low natural gas prices.

This week's count also exceeds the 893 rigs that were working this time last year.

Among major oil producing states, North Dakota's count increased by three and Wyoming was up by two. New Mexico, Louisiana, Texas and Pennsylvania each gained one rig.

Oklahoma's count was down four, while Michigan and Kansas each lost three. California and Colorado each lost two rigs.

Conoco deal

DALLAS (AP) — Mesa Limited Partnership, led by investor T. Boone Pickens, reached a definitive agreement to sell oil and gas interests in the San Juan Basin to Conoco Inc.

The agreement is for $161 million, about $4 million less than the tentative deal struck between the parties earlier this month.

Mesa spokesman Jay Rosser said the difference occurred from normal accounting adjustments.

Conoco, a subsidiary of Du Pont, also assumes about $2 million in gas imbalance obligations from Mesa in the deal.

Railroad Commission marks centennial

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The powerful Texas Railroad Commission, an agency which oversees the petroleum life blood of the Permian Basin and Texas will celebrate its 100th birthday this week.

Probably the most powerful state bureaucracy in the nation, former Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance is fond of pointing out that, before OPEC, it was the Texas Railroad Commission that controlled the price of the world oil from the 1920s until the 1970s.

Celebrations are planned around the state. In Midland, the district office will celebrate the centennial celebration with an open house Wednesday for the public, and a buffet luncheon for employees and retirees. Austin is planning an open house and an employee reunion.

According to District Director Mark Henkhaus, the office's "primary responsibility is the prevention of pollution and waste in the oil and gas industry. In Midland, we have 20 employees to cover 71,000 oil, gas and injection wells. I like to think we're doing a good job."

Henkhaus, who has been with the Railroad Commission eight years, came to Midland last year from Wichita Falls.

Herman Jones, engineer with the commission and chairman of the district centennial committee, the district — District 8 — stretches from Colorado City in the east to El Paso on the west, Andrews on the north to Big Bend on the south and comprises 20 counties. There were originally 41 counties, but the district was divided into District 8 and District 8A in 1965.

The Midland office has nine employees who spend their time out in the field,

Outlook dim for offshore tanker port

■ Half of the major oil companies involved in an offshore tanker terminal may back out.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A $1.3 billion plan to build an offshore oil port in the Gulf of Mexico to ease supertanker traffic in Galveston Bay is faltering because of lukewarm interest from the oil companies that are supposed to pay for the venture.

"There is definitely an air of pessimism," said Ken Rigsbee, a spokesman for Oklahoma-based Phillips Petroleum Co., which has led the effort to build the offshore port. "The more you learn about the project, the more expensive it becomes."

Executives of the 18 energy companies involved in TexPort — including Coastal Corp., Conoco, Exxon Corp., Chevron Corp. and Marathon Oil Co. — met in Houston last week, where the plan's problems became clear.

The companies were asked at the meeting to approve a $14 million engineering and design contract. But sources at the meeting told the Houston Chronicle that half of TexPort's 18 corporate backers announced their plans to back out.

The remaining nine companies said they did not know whether they could continue to support the project. TexPort officials declined to identify the nine companies.

Because of the size of the investment, TexPort needs at least eight supporting companies to survive, Rigsbee said.

"It doesn't look good," he said.

Rigsbee said the companies will meet again April 21 to take a final vote on whether to proceed with the project.

A massive design effort, TexPort would be capable of moving 2 million barrels of imported oil a day from foreign tankers to undersea pipelines already installed in the Gulf. The oil then would be pumped through the pipelines

Midland firm develops SmartMAP for operators

■ A Midland firm has developed a low-cost, user-friendly computer software package for mapping and profiling oil fields.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

A Midland computer company has developed and is marketing a software mapping package that will be sold worldwide to ARRIS end-users.

Called SmartMAP, the latest ARRIS appliction, was developed by Intelligent Graphics Inc. 1811 W. Wall with the small and independent oil producer in mind.

"The cost is about $10,000 and it is menu-driven so that it doesn't take months of training," said Jim Banniser, who wrote the program. Bannister said the program, which utilizes UNIX/ XENIX platforms, was able to merge a map with a very large database.

J. David Ross, president of Intelligent Graphics said a key feature of SmartMAP was its ability to attach detailed information to every geographic point on a map, enabling the user to manage huge amounts of information with relative ease. "Thanks to the intelligent design automation features of ARRIS, each database can contain up to 33,000 layer and every entity in those layers can be queried and manipulated separately."

The program is alreay in use by several local independents and the Martin County Water District, which uses it to plot possible ground water contamination. It is also used by TU Electric to map powerlines.

Other uses planned for the program include: hazardous waste systems, city planning, tax districts, land management, telecommunications, sales and market-

Oil shale dealt near death blow

■ Continuing losses have caused Unocal to abandon its oil shale efforts in Western Colorado.

Associated Press

PARACHUTE, Colo. — Unocal Corp. has announced that it will suspend production at its $650 million Parachute Creek shale oil project on June 1 because the project is losing money.

The Unocal facility in western Colorado currently employs 480 workers, plus another 200 contractor employees. Company officials said some employees will be laid off in June and additional layoffs may follow, depending on what Unocal decides to do with the project.

Unocal completed the plant in August 1983, intending for it to be the first U.S. commercial-scale oil shale facility. By December 1984, the facility was running its first major production tests.

The plant was designed to produce 10,000 barrels of oil per day from oil shale, but the collapse in oil prices in the early 1980s forced Unocal to scale back the project's ambitious reach and to write off the facility as a loss.

Unocal, however, made its first shipment of synthetic crude oil in 1986 and steadily increased production, reaching 1.5 million barrels in 1989.

Richard J. Stegemeier, Unocal chairman, president and chief executive officer, said operations would be suspended so the Los Angeles-based company can study possible alternatives for the project's future.

"We have operated the project for nearly five years and produced nearly 4.5 million barrels of high quality synthetic crude oil, making this the largest oil shale effort in U.S. history," Stegemeier said Monday.

"During this time we made substantial progress in developing Unocal's shale oil production technology, but we have not been able to achieve sustained production rates high enough to avoid cash losses."

Kuwait may hold opppportunity for Basin

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Pitts

When Senator Phil Gramm was in Midland last week, he pointed out that when the greatest disaster in the history of the oil industry happened in Kuwait, that the government of Kuwait turned to Midland, Texas to find the expertise to get the job done.

"It shows that the best technical people in the oil industry are in the Permian Basin," said Gramm, who was in Midland to attend a briefing by OGS Engineering, who is the prime contractor for reconstruction of Kuwaiti oilfields.

For sure there is an extraordinary concentration of oilpatch talent in the Permian Basin, and that recognition that could land this oil producing empire millions in contracts.

The need is obvious. Approximately 550 or 60 percent of the Kuwaiti wells, each flowing 5,000 to 50,000 barrels daily were blown up by the retreating Iraqi army. Most were, heavily damaged at the well-head, because sandbags were placed over the explosives.

Rebuilding the oilfields will be the biggest oilfield project in the history of the industry. "It is a mess," says Midlander T.B. O'Brien, whose firm OGS Engineering will supervise putting out the fires and putting the wells back into production.

It is a mess that will mean billions for American oilfield service companies and workers. The U.S. Department of Commerce estimates that it may take up to $100 billion to rebuild Kuwait. Moreover, the Kuwaiti government which has more than enough assets stashed around the world to take care of the biggest rebuilding job in modern times, has specified that most of the contracts should go to American firms. In fact, of the first $500 million in contracts already let by the Kuwaiti government, over 70 percent have gone to American firms.

Here is just a sampling of some of the big ticket contracts granted so far: $10 million each to Ford, GMC and Chrysler for vehicles. To Raytheon, $5.7 million for air traffic controls. Boeing and McDonnell Douglas will replace Kuwaiti planes.

On the oilpatch side, Dresser, Schlumberger, Nabors and Parker Drilling are all on line for large contracts for oilfield services and supplies. Halliburton is discussing repairs to the $2 billion Mina Abdullah refinery, Camco has a contract to stockpile and supply drill bits, and Boots & Coots, Red Adair, Bowden Wild Well Control, Safety Boss all have firefighting contracts.

Competition for contracts and jobs is bound to be stiff. T.B. O'Brien says his office receives a stack of resumes and inquiries every day, from unemployed construction workers, oil workers and petroleum engineers throughout the U.S.

So where does one start to land a job or contract in Kuwait and cash in on the billions? Here are some suggestions:

First of all, the Department of Commerce, which is coordinating overall efforts is encouraging American companies to apply for jobs and contracts. This is a good place to start. Send enquiries to: Kuwait Coordination and Follow-Up Center; 1510 H. Street NW; Washington, D.C. 20005. We understand some procurement is being done through this office.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has been awarded a $46 million prime contract for a number of projects and will be issuing some contracts on behalf of the Kuwaiti government. For a list of contracts write: U.S. Army Corps of Engineers; Middle East Division; P.O. Box 2250; Winchester, Va 22601-1450.

Lennox cuts 600 in Fort Worth

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A manufacturer, in the latest round of company layoff announcements here, said it will cut 600 jobs by the end of this year.

Lennox Industries Inc., a Richardson-based maker of air conditioners and other equipment, made the announcement Thursday.

Tarrant County's economy has already been hard hit with thousands of layoffs at General Dynamics Corp.'s Fort Worth Division and Snapper Power Equipment.

Job eliminations at Lennox' Fort Worth office and manufacturing facility are part of the company's consolidation of its nationwide sales force. The cuts also reflect the manufacturing facility's planned shutdown.

The company's sales office in Fort Worth, which doubles as Lennox's Southwest Division headquarters for a five-state region, will close by June, said Lennox spokesman Corwin Hall.

He said operations at the manufacturing plant will be phased out beginning in June and the plant will be closed by the end of the year. The company also makes furnaces and heat pumps.

Hall said some workers will be offered transfers to the company's headquarters in the Dallas suburb, but most of the Fort Worth employees will lose their jobs.

Elimination of Lennox's Fort Worth facilities will help the company streamline sales and administrative operations and eliminate excess manufacturing capacity.

The

Economist has startling ideas about oil prices

■ MIT Professor Emeritus M.A. Adelman has developed the theory of the "efficiency price," the price of oil set by a truly competitive market.

By Peter Passell
N.Y. Times News Service

Saudi Arabia, the muscle behind the international oil cartel, made no secret of its aims at the meeting of OPEC ministers in Geneva recently: keeping the price of a barrel high enough to replenish its war-depleted treasury — but not high enough to weaken the magic kingdom's grip on the market.

America, the muscle behind Saudi Arabia, is of two minds about the price of oil. On the one hand, policy makers worry that low prices would discommode their friends from Abu Dhabi to Houston. On the other, they fret that high prices would slow recovery from the recession and anger voters who believe deep down that Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf was fighting to make the world safe for unleaded regular at $1.06 a gallon.

None of this surprises M.A. Adelman, professor emeritus of economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and perennial gadfly to the energy establishment, who argues that Washington's views on energy have been muddled by a mix of "high policy and low politics."

To Adelman, the right price to pay for oil is the lowest price that would assure an adequate supply for the foreseeable future. And that, he estimates, is a startlingly low $6 to $10 a barrel.

If oil were sold in competitive markets, like cameras or computers, no single producer could hope to influence the price by raising or lowering output. Over the long term, the price would equal the costs to the highest-cost producer able to find a market for its crude.

But plainly, the oil market is not competitive. Roughly one-quarter of the world's production — and more than half the known, low-cost reserves — comes from a handful of Persian Gulf states. Production decisions by Saudi Arabia (and, in the future, perhaps Iraq and Kuwait as well) affect the price of oil.

That has not, however, stopped Adelman from calculating the "efficiency price" of oil, the price that would emerge from a competitive market.

Over a period of weeks or months, he notes, it would pay producers to deliver oil as long as they could cover their operating costs. The competitive price floor, then, would be the price below which the world's high-cost producers — notably Americans — found they would be better off leaving the oil in the ground. And that price, Adelman reckons, may be as low as $5 a barrel and is certainly no more than $10.

In the long run, of course, output from high-cost regions would be bound to decline unless producers believed prices would be sufficient to cover both operating costs and the cost of developing new reserves. But in a competitive market the loss could easily be filled by production from low-cost regions, notably the Persian Gulf.

The OPEC nations alone, Adelman estimates, could profitably produce more than 60 million barrels a day through the 1990s (and perhaps beyond) at just $6 a barrel — three times the quantity they currently deliver at one-third the current price.

George Bush's new world order is not likely to include a blueprint for a competitive oil market. Bush, a former oilman, has never shown much enthusiasm for cheap fuel. Indeed, as vice president, he pressed the Saudis to curb their inclination to prove their power over the cartel by driving the price toward the competitive floor.

And in any case, nothing short of carving Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Iran into a dozen small oil-producing states and then applying America's antitrust laws to OPEC would do the trick. Nonetheless, the Adelman calculations do cast a different light on some current policy questions.

His cost estimates for OPEC make clear that most of the cash going to oil exporters is pure windfall. Policies aimed at squeezing the cartel would thus not be likely to reduce the supply. And it is hard to think of such policies as unfair, unless one happens to believe that Saudi Arabia, Norway and Alaska deserve to be rich at the expense of Brazil, Poland and Oregon.

AP Laserphoto

Saudi Arabia, represented by Oil Minister Hisham Nazer at a recent OPEC meeting, can affect the price of oil, but economics professor M.A. Adelman says the right price is be low enough to ensure an adequate supply.

Natural gas polymerication being studied

A breakthrough in petroleum fuels may be possible by polymerizing natural gas to produce gasoline and diesel.

Research is now going forward to develop this process, which could put OPEC out of business.

America's vast reserves of natural gas on the Alaskan North Slope, offshore and other remote areas could be developed converted to synthetic oil and delivered to markets in the lower 48 states.

Refinery closing hurts Mexican workers

N.Y. Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — A week after this city's largest oil refinery was abruptly shut down to ease a critical pollution crisis, the reasons for that decision still linger in the air.

For blocks around the 430-acre complex in north-central Mexico City, the sharp smell of distilled petroleum still pervades the streets.

The hissing of distant gasses recalls the fumes that billowed from the plant. Even casual passers-by still come away with watering eyes and burning lungs.

But in the company-built housing projects that flank the refinery there is also no mistaking the social costs of a decision that ecologists have hailed as a dramatic, politically courageous effort to save the city's environment.

Once a booming centerpiece of the country's giant government-run oil sector, the 57-year-old refinery and its tract neighborhoods have suddenly been transformed into a monument to the pain of post-industrial adjustment, the first major casualty of a deepening contradiction between further economic growth and the city's public health.

When President Carlos Salinas de Gortari announced on March 18 his surprise decision to close the refinery, government and union leaders asserted that no workers would be dismissed and that most would be transferred to other installations within the state-held energy monopoly, Petroleos Mexicanos, or Pemex.

But since then, government and company officials have acknowledged the impracticality of that promise, confirming that virtually all of the plant's 3,206 refinery personnel will be dismissed.

"We're out on the street, and that's it," said Braulio Palacios Hernandez, a 29-year-old maintenance technician, as he gazed up at a maze of whistling pipes in the refinery's main processing yard. "My grandfather, my father, my brothers, we have devoted our lives to this place — and now, nothing."

For workers in the Mexican oil industry, which has been nurtured and celebrated for decades as a symbol of national sovereignty, the shock of layoffs has been particularly harsh, forcing political and economic reality into a life of guaranteed work, housing and cradle-to-grave benefits.

"They're taking the food off our tables," said Rodolfo Hernandez Guillen, a 30-year-old refinery firefighter. "We asked them not to fire us because we've all got families. We're being forced to sacrifice on behalf of everybody else."

In a company-built neighborhood that includes company schools, company businesses, company recreation centers and up to 20,000 company workers and their dependents, the closing of the refinery also promises to ruin an entire secondary economy that has served the local oil community.

"Everyone that comes in here is from the refinery," said Mercedes Gonzalez, who serves hundreds of oil workers a day at her small restaurant across the street from the pale-green walls of the refinery complex.

"We've been here 24 years," said Mrs. Gonzalez, who like her father before her permits refinery workers to order their tortillas, spicy meat dishes and cold beer on credit, and collects from them only on payday. "What is supposed to happen to us now?"

In a city that has choked for years on some of the foulest air anywhere in the world, the oil workers' complaints have been drowned out by astonished, almost jubilant public praise for the president's action.

"With this decision, the government of Mexico and the authorities of the federal district place themselves at the head of the concrete struggle to reduce pollution in the valley of Mexico, and show that they have heard the voices of the civil society," declared Homero Aridjis of the Group of 100, an environmental organization of prominent artists and intellectuals.

But the popular acclaim for the shutdown has only seemed to add to the sense of abandonment felt in the refinery community. Few accepted the prevailing view of environmental experts that the refinery was a chief source of the city's pollution problems.

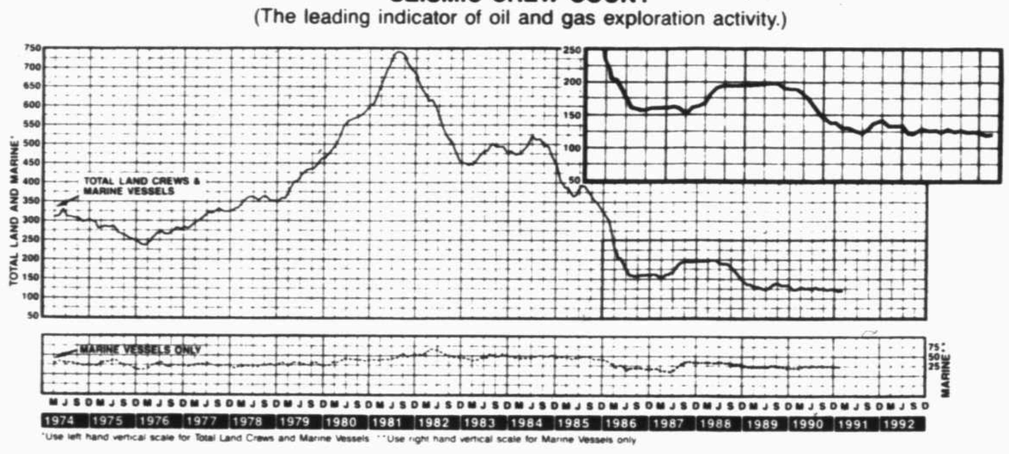
SEISMIC CREW COUNT
(The leading indicator of oil and gas exploration activity.)



Seismic count rises

According to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists, the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters rose in February. The land crew count rose by five to 97 while the marine crew count fell one, for a total of 116 crews. The count is up 4 percent over January's figure.

East Texas company looking to computerize the oil patch

By Tony Floyd

TYLER, Texas (AP) — A Tyler group — consisting of investors, entrepreneurs, petroleum engineers and software designers and programmers — believes the traditionally staid oil patch is ready to move into high tech communications.

Its new software system — Striplogger — developed and marketed by LogWare Limited of Tyler, a subsidiary of Tyler's Compulog Systems, is compatible with all IBM microcomputers equipped with full-color graphics, company officials say.

LogWare's software has the capacity to monitor up to 40 different drilling functions simultaneously, said Clint Hough, LogWare general partner.

Robertson Onshore Drilling Co. of Dallas last month installed Striplogger software and its data-gathering components on the first of seven conventional drilling rigs it has scattered across East Texas.

Company president Doug Robertson, a former official for Delta Drilling Co. of Tyler, said Striplogger provides unprecedented, in-depth electronic data from wellsites that can be transmitted by telephone to geologists and other project officials working in the comfort of their offices miles away.

"Basically, Striplogger gives everyone more up-to-the-minute data to help determine whether to spend more money to continue — or even plug a well," he said. "Geologists are going to be very pleased with the depth of information and convenience of this technology."

He said Robertson Onshore plans to promote the new technology installed on its drilling rigs as an addition to its overall service package for customers.

Striplogger was not developed overnight — or even when oil prices took off in the wake of the Persian Gulf crisis. The system has been on the drawing boards for about five years under the direction of Compulog systems and LogWare researchers and investors.

Traditionally, parent company Compulog Systems has concentrated on oilfield mud logging, defined as the evaluation of geological formations during the drilling process.

Based on that and other data, drilling officials decide whether to proceed and set pipe in a well — or abandon it.

The Tyler company already has received serious inquiries from oil exploration officials around the world, including Brazil, Indonesia, Mexico, Oman, Venezuela and other oil-producing nations. Planning for those presentations is under way, company officials said.

"Before 1985, microcomputer technology wasn't available to do what we wanted to do," Hough said. "The graphics capability in 1985 was very limited — at best.

"During our research, we saw the need for drilling rigs to be computerized," he said.

The system was developed by partners David Pardue and Kent Davis, who brought more than 14 years experience in mid engineering, mud logging and computer programming to the project. Also, Jeff Strout, a former instructor in numerically-controlled industrial equipment — or robotics — at Kilgore College, was brought in during the early developmental stages.

With an extensive background in microcomputer technology, Strout was given the task of incorporating state-of-the-art technology with the practical needs of the energy exploration business, LogWare officials said.

Another key player in the LogWare venture was investor, financial consultant and international marketing coordinator Gene Thrash.

Hough conceded many industry insiders were surprised by LogWare's perseverance in developing new energy exploration technology, especially when depressed oil prices were forcing industry pillars into bankruptcy proceedings.

The company's problems in the early going were compounded by the traditional reluctance of oilmen to embrace new technology, considering the U.S. industry's undisputed world leadership role in that category.

While many perceived those conditions as insurmountable, Hough said LogWare interpreted them as advantages for their venture once a new environment emerged from the '80s crash.

"Granted, oil and gas has been slow in converting to the Information Age," Hough said. "But a new generation is moving in. A lot of the older guys just weren't willing to fight another war to bring the industry back.

"Unlike the older guys, this generation is more computer literate and eager to move the industry into a new age," he said.

Even though it's generally agreed the '80s downturn was the longest and most extensive ever, the oil and gas industry historically has been characterized by extreme cycles of boom and bust, feast and famine, he said.

During hard times, the principal focus for small independents and majors alike shifts to survival, which promotes widespread dismissal of vital research and development projects and technological innovation, Hough said.

"When we started the company, oil had plummeted to less than $10 a barrel. But this company never would have been formed without the downturn," Hough said.

"We wanted to advance this industry to a higher level," he said. "So, from that perspective, the downturn was a blessing because people are always too busy making money during the booms to be innovative."

Because of the simplicity of the Striplogger system, company officials say they do not foresee problems training drilling personnel despite the likelihood that older workers will not be computer literate.

Computer-assisted drilling will accelerate the training process for inexperienced workers, he said, enabling them to acquire essential monitoring skills much faster than before, even though it eventually could remove some of the industry's rich tradition of colorful and vigorous personalities.

In Hough's view, oilfield workers of the future could resemble technicians — not unlike those in any other industry.

"Geologists say this system will render current mud-logging technology obsolete," said LogWare financial consultant Thrash. "By the end of this year we should be on our way — or at least that's our plan."

Congress covered with flurry of rival energy bills

By Keith Schneider
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Lawmakers have responded to the Bush administration's national energy strategy with a flurry of competing proposals to raise gasoline taxes, improve automobile mileage, raise energy efficiency in businesses and homes, open sensitive regions to oil exploration, and spend hundreds of millions of dollars for research on conservation and renewable souuces of energy.

At last count, the House Energy and Commerce Committee was reviewing 68 proposals for revamping federal energy policy, and, in the Senate, four main bills and more than a dozen others have been introduced.

Despite the intense energy expended in making proposals, some of the most influential lawmakers have expressed doubts that Congress will resolve fierce regional, economic and environmental issues and reach a consensus on a final package. The reason: Oil supplies are steady and prices have fallen since the end of the Persian Gulf war.

"At the moment, there are no gasoline lines or brownouts," Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, said last month. "I wonder if we are serious enough about energy to solve the problem at long last."

Even if a bill emerges, staff experts in both houses say it is likely to take five or six months to reach the House and Senate floors.

The conference to resolve differences between the bills will take more time and, if successful, a final measure may be ready before the election in 1992.

Few members of Congress disagree that there is an energy problem. Low prices discourage domestic oil and gas production, economists say, while also encouraging people to waste energy.

The United States is importing nearly half its oil, accounting for half the $108 billion international trade deficit in 1990, according to the Department of Commerce.

Most important, higher imports are vulnerable to costly disruptions of supply. Though the Bush administration insists the Persian Gulf war was primarily a response to Saddam Hussein's aggression, few in Congress doubt that it was also prompted by oil.

What nobody in Congress knows is whether the public views the Persian Gulf war as a call to action on energy policy or as the price a nation must periodically pay to preserve its oil-based way of life.

"Regrettably, we were not wise enough 10 years ago to continue the energy security measures enacted after the oil crises of the 1970s," said Rep. Leon E. Panetta, chairman of the House Budget Committee, who introduced an energy proposal last month that called for establishing a minimum price for oil. "Our dependence has tragically resulted in war. How many times do we have to learn this lesson?"

The debate in Congress will be framed by two issues: whether to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, a 17.9-million-acre wilderness in Alaska, to oil and gas exploration, and whether to raise fuel mileage standards on automobiles by 40 percent.

The opening of the refuge was proposed on Feb. 20 by the Bush administration in its national energy strategy and was included in several congressional bills, including one introduced by Sens. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., and Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., the chairman and ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The president's plan also includes removing obstacles to the constructon of nuclear power plants, reducing restrictions on utilities that generate electricity for the wholesale market and simplifying licensing for hydroelectric power plants, along with a modest conservation effort, including encouraging the use of alternative fuels in vehicle fleets.

The nation's largest environmental groups, among them the Sierra Club and the National Wildlife Federation, have vowed to block any effort to drill in the Arctic refuge.

Energy Secretary James D. Watkins promised Johnston in a hearing earlier this month that the president would veto any bill that did not include opening the refuge to oil exploration.

Increasing fuel efficiency in cars was offered by Sens. Richard H. Bryan, D-Nev., and Slade Gorton, R-Wash. It calls for raising average fuel economy in cars from 27.5 miles a gallon currently to nearly 40 miles a gallon, an increase that could save 2.8 million barrels of oil daily, about nine times as much oil as the Arctic Refuge is expected to produce daily, Bryan says.

Environmental groups support the bill. But Samuel K. Skinner, the secretary of transportation, said Tuesday that raising fuel mileage standards would destroy the domestic auto industry and he would urge the president to veto any bill that contained such a provision.

Having watched two of the most important groups in the debate stake out their positions, members of Congress and their top staff experts now wonder how much the White House or the environmental community will compromise or whether either the White House or the environmentalists can afford to be accused of derailing a substantive energy bill.

"The question for Congress is, do you lose people by putting both controversial items in a comprehensive bill or do you gain people by tackling the issues and putting both items in," said Jack Riggs, director of the House Energy and Commerce Committee's Subcommittee on Energy and Power. "That's what we're going to spend a year finding out."

Other proposals are attracting considerable attention as well.

Environmental groups are fond of the bill introduced last week by Sens. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo., and James M. Jeffords, R-Vt. It seeks to improve the energy efficiency of homes, businesses and the federal government but does not mention opening the Arctic Refuge.

In the House, Representative Panetta proposed to control supplies of oil by price strategies. Panetta's bill would set a price floor of $16 a barrel for domestic oil. It would also raise gasoline taxes. Under Panetta's plan, if oil prices increased and then fell back, the government would be able to collect half of the retreat as an additional tax on gasoline.

The administration has said it opposes any new motor fuel taxes.

Rep. Norman F. Lent, R-N.Y., the ranking minority member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, has proposed an energy bill with other House Republicans that is similar to the White House energy strategy.

It would make it easier for utilities to license nuclear power plants with streamlined procedures. The bill would provide tax credits for utilities that generate electricity with renewable energy sources including the sun, wind, and hot water from deep wells.

It also seeks to make it easier for pipeline companies to build interstate natural-gas pipelines.

And Philip R. Sharp, D-Ind., introduced five proposals that would require the government to set new fuel-efficiency standards for utilities, expand the Strategic Petroleum Reserve from a billion to 1.5 billion barrels, streamline regulations for building gas pipelines, and provide tax breaks for utilities that generate electricity with renewable sources of energy.

Valhi selling interest in Baroid

HOUSTON (AP) — More than 17.2 million shares of the oil service company, Baroid Corp., will be sold to the public beginning next month, according to a holding company controlled by Dallas billionaire Harold Simmons.

Simmons

Valhi, a company run by Simmons that is Baroid's largest stockholder, said it plans to sell more than half of its 42 percent stake in Baroid, cutting its stake in the Houston oil service company to 19 percent.

The sale of Baroid shares will begin next month, Valhi officials said.

Analysts said the deal could generate more than $85 million in cash for Simmons, who lost at least $40 million earlier this month when he abandoned a two-year fight to take over Lockheed Corp., the California aerospace giant.

But industry observers guessed that Simmons may be trimming his Baroid holdings to raise cash for a new round of corporate takeovers.

"The sale of Baroid stock appears to be designed to increase his war chest," said Vahid Fathi, an oil service analyst for Prescott Ball & Turben in Cleveland. "Clearly, he's raising money. We just don't know what he's raising it for."

Valhi President Michael Snetzer on Tuesday disputed speculation that Simmons is looking for takeover targets.

Snetzer said the proceeds from the Baroid stock will be used to reduce Valhi's bank debt, which now totals about $275 million.

"With this transaction, the control of Baroid will be returned to the public markets," Snetzer said. "The restructuring and rebuilding of Baroid is substantially complete."

Baroid, spun out of Simmons' NL Industries in December 1988, has in recent months focused on its oil service operations.

Confidence up, but orders for 'big ticket' items down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders for "big ticket" manufactured goods fell again in February as American industry remained mired in recession, but economists took partial comfort from a separate report Tuesday that showed consumer confidence surging in the wake of the Persian Gulf War.

The Commerce Department said that orders for durable goods, everything from appliances to airplanes, dropped 0.3 percent in February, the third setback in the past four months.

But in a sign that better days could be ahead, a closely watched gauge of consumer confidence staged a giant rebound following the war victory, rising to 81 in March from 59.4 in February.

It was the biggest one-month gain in the 24-year history of the survey by the Conference Board, and it bolstered the Bush administration's contention that the quick end of the war will spell a quick end to the recession by giving consumers more faith in the future.

However, private economists cautioned against reading too much into the big jump in sentiment. They said consumers might feel more upbeat, but they are still saddled with heavy debt burdens and weak income growth, reflecting cascading layoffs in many industries.

Bruce Steinberg, an economist with Merrill Lynch in New York, noted that at the same time the Conference Board's confidence survey was showing a big gain, car sales for mid-March were down 11 percent.

"Confidence is up but incomes are down and in terms of the performance of the economy, income levels will be the predominant factor," Steinberg said. "Consumers may have the will but they lack the wallet."

All economists agreed that the signals at present were mixed. While auto sales have failed to rebound, housing, another hard-hit sector, showed tentative signs of life last month with existing home sales, new construction and building permits all posting their first gains in some time.

"Our view is that the pieces for a recovery are pretty much in place and we will get a recovery, certainly by mid-year," said Samuel Kahan, chief financial economist for Fuji Securities Inc. of Chicago.

That view corresponds with the administration's forecast that the recession will end sometime in the April-June quarter.

However, Richard Rahn, chief economist for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said the widespread weakness in manufacturing orders in February raised the specter of further production cutbacks and layoffs in manufacturing.

In the past two years, more than 1 million workers have lost manufacturing jobs with the layoffs totaling 127,000 in February alone.

"Those seeking evidence of an early end to the recession found no encouragement in February goods orders and shipments," Rahn said. "Durable goods production should continue to drop for several months."

The 0.3 percent February drop in durable goods orders followed declines of 1.5 percent in January and a huge 10.1 percent plunge in November. Orders were up 1.4 percent in December.

The decline was centered in a big 10.6 percent plunge in demand for industrial machinery and equipment, a category that had shown a 10.5 percent increase in the previous month.

That weakness offset a 12.6 percent rise in orders for electronic and other electrical machinery and a 1.8 percent rise in demand for primary metals.

Orders for cars, airplanes and other items in the transportation sector showed a barely perceptible rise of 0.1 percent.

The key sector of non-defense capital goods fell by 1.7 percent in February.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Dawson yields 116-barrel discovery

Staff Report

Dawson County has gained a Mississippian discovery with completion of an explorer on the western edge of the Antelope field.

GREAT WESTERN DRILLING, Midland, finaled the No. 1 Hibbert-Dean Estate to flow 116 barrels of 38.2 gravity crude and six barrels of water on a 16/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 100 psi. The well flowed from perforations 9,965 to 10,054 ft., which had been acidized with 15,200 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 569:1.

Permitted as a 10,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,310 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 10,143 ft.

The well topped the Pennsylvanian Reef at 8,479 ft., Mississippian at 9,948, and Fusselman at 10,262 ft. on ground elevation of 2,786 ft. Pay was topped at 9,965 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from south and 1,600 ft. from east lines of Section 30, Block 1, T-6-North, J. Poitevent survey, six miles northeast of Key.

Dawson strike
Great Western Drilling of Midland has tested a 116-barrel Mississippian discovery in Dawson County.

Conoco records Wolfcamp discovery

CONOCO INC. has recorded a Wolfcamp Limestone strike in Glasscock County, on the eastern edge of the Antelope field.

On potential test, the No. 1 E.C. Books pumped 56 barresl of 40.8 gravity crude, 191 Mcfd, and four barrels of water from perforations 8,418 to 8,493 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 56,000 gallons of gel and 90,000 lbs. 16/30 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 3410:1.

Permitted as an 11,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 11,500 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 11,060 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,716 ft., include the Yates at 2,630 ft.; Glorieta at 4,118, Wolfcamp Limestone at 8,408, San Andres at 3,296, and Spraberry at 6,553 ft. Pay was topped at 8,418 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from west and 1,200 ft. from north lines of Section 16, Block 35, T-4-S, T&P survey, nine miles west of Garden City.

Abraxas recompletes Mitchell producer

A former Ellenburger producer in the Westbrook field of Mitchell County has been recompleted as a Wolfcamp discovery.

ABRAXAS PETROLEUM CORP. reentered the No. 6 Brennand "B" and recompleted it to pump 123 barrels of 32 gravity crude from perforations f5,312 to 5,320 ft.

Originally drilled to 8,269 ft., the well was plugged back to 8,080 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 8,262 ft.

The well topped the Wolfcamp formation at 5,312 ft. on ground elevation of 2,198 ft. Pay was topped at 5,312 ft.

Location is 258 ft. from south and 558 ft. from east lines of Section 19, Block 26, H&TC survey, five miles west of Cuthbert.

The well was originally drilled by Kohler Energy Corp.

Irion recompletion nets Canyon find

A reentry in Irion County has yielded a Canyon oil discovery for HONDO OIL & GAS CO. DELAWARE, Roswell, N.M.

The No. 1 Crossroads "3046" was recompleted to flow five barrels of 46.8 gravity crude and three barrels of water on a 14/64 inch choke. The well flowed from perforations 8,162 to 8,288 ft., which had been acidized with 4,750 gallons of acid and fractured with 80,000 gallons of gel and 127,000 lbs. sand. Gas-oil ratio is 40,000:1.

Originally drilled to 10,800 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 10,400 ft., the well was plugged back to 9,280 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,534 ft., formation tops include the Canyon at 8,162 ft., Woodford at 9,194, Silurian at 9,250, Fusselman at 9,342, Ellenburger at 9,438, and Cambrian at 10,718 ft.

Midland firm tests Concho discovery

MARSHALL & WINSTON INC., Midland, has completed a Goen discovery in Concho County, five miles southwest of Eden.

On potential test, the No. 15 McMurtrey flowed 86 barrels of 48 gravity crude and no water on a 12/64 inch choke from perforations 3,666 to 3,670 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 3,800 ft., the well was plugged back to 3,776 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 3,799 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,096 ft. include the King Lime at 2,080 ft., King Sand at 2,906, Strawn at 3,218, and Goen at 3,654 ft.

Location is 1,217 ft. from north and 467 ft. from west lines of ACH&B survey 1, Abst. 1065.

RRC: Legislature sought RRC help in regulating oil industry checking out complaints, witnessing well pluggings and tests, casing cementings and investigating oil spills, pollution, looking for abandoned wells and making routine inspections of oil leases to see no commission rules and regulations are being violated.

When the Railroad Commission was formed in 1891, it was created to oversee the state's railroad system, not to oversee trucking and the state's oil and gas industry.

By 1891, Texas already had a 30-year-old oil industry that began with the first producing oil well in Melrose, drilled in 1859 by L.T. Barnett. In 1870 came the first known gas production in Texas, from a well near Graham.

Near the turn of the century, the Texas Legislature began passing laws designed to prevent wasting oil and gas, but there was no regulatory agency to enforce the laws. And when Spindletop blew in in January 1901, the swarm of would-be oilmen and the flood of production that hit the market sent the Texas oil and gas industry out of control. Thousands of barrels of oil were wasted and water pollution and fires became a severe problem. Finally, in May 1905, the legislature declared a state of emergency over the drilling, operation and abandonment of oil, gas and water wells. Other laws were passed over the next decade, but still there was no way to effectively enforce them.

Pipelines became another problem, as the oil industry began to mature. Much as railroads could charge what they pleased to farmers and ranchers before the Railroad Commission was established, pipelines could charge what they pleased to carry oil to market.

Finally, the legislature turned to the Railroad Commission for help and on February 17, 1917, declared pipelines common carriers and asked the commission to regulate them.

In 1919, the commission's powers were expanded when the legislature passed a law that read "Natural gas and crude oil petroleum shall not be produced in the state of Texas in such a manner and under such conditions as to constitute waste." The law gave the Railroad Commission broad enforcement powers and in November of the same year, it established a set of rules that serve as the framework of today's oil and gas regulatory system in Texas.

The commission did not arrive in Midland until 10 years later, in March of 1929, according to Jones. The commission first opened an office in Big Spring, because of the Forsan and Iatan pools, on August 21, 1928, headed by E.E. Andrews, who held the title of proration umpire. He was joined by W.P. Laughter, chief oil supervisor.

In early 1929, because of growing production in the just-opened Hendrick pool of Winkler County, it was decided Midland would be a more central location for this area and the office was moved to Midland. The first director to office in Midland was H.H. Fitzpatrick, who came from Big Spring. He was replaced by A.B. Capers, who was replaced by Winifred R. Bowden. In 1941, Bowden was replaced briefly by Gordon Bigham, who was then replaced by Walton J. Christian, who worked for the commission in Kilgore when martial law was declared over the East Texas field.

S. Ross Carr replaced Christian who headed the Midland office until 1943 when he was replaced by Ford Fullingim, who was replaced by Joe Greer in 1947. Greer headed the office until his death in 1958, when Jules De Laune took over. In 1965, De Laune was succeeded by Bill E. Watson, who was succeeded in 1976 by Archie P. Farr. Farr headed the office until his death in 1985, when Ron Strong took over. Strong left the commission in 1990 and was replaced by Mark Henkhaus.

The commission's office was originally on the sixth floor of the Petroleum Building, which also opened in 1929. The commission moved to the third floor in 1950 and then, in 1953, to the Edwards Building at 203 N. Main. In 1959, the office was moved to the Oil & Gas Building at 105 W. Wall, Suite 702. In 1980, it moved into the present location at 2509 N. Big Spring.

PITTS: Kuwait opportunities

(From 1G)

Bechtel Corp. is the prime contractor for rebuilding the infrastructure of Kuwait that includes buildings, roads, sewers, and utilities and water systems. They will be hiring data processors, engineers and administrative staff as well as issuing contracts. Contact: Bechtel Corp.; P.O. Box 193965; San Francisco, CA 94119.

The Midland engineering firm of O'Brien, Goins & Simpson (OGS Engineering) will be handling all the firefighting and rebuilding of Kuwait oil fields. This is a task that could amount to over $500 million. OGS is now passing on applications to Houston, but you can send a proposal or resume to OGS Engineering; 550 W. Texas; Midland, Texas 79702. Just write Kuwait on the front of the envelope.

Also, to keep interested parties informed on developments in Kuwait the Overseas Private Investment Council is developing a number of publications and programs. To get on the mailing list write: Information Officer; OPIC; 1615 M Street N.W.; Washington, D.C. 20527.

The process may get complicated, but for those that prevail and make the connection, efforts could result in a high-paying job or contract. One thing is certain there are connections are waiting to be made.

"SmartMAP will allow independent oil companies to very easily profile or contour a field, by accessing databases from a number of sources," said Bannister. "He noted that longitude and latitude data would enable one to automatically spot wells on a map."

He said the program would also allow three-dimensional drawings of reservoirs.

to utilities and refineries on the Gulf Coast.

Proponents of the project, to be located 27 miles south of Freeport, say the port would eliminate much of the tanker traffic in Galveston Bay and the Houston Ship Channel.

That, in turn, would reduce the threat posed by accidents and oil spills, since most of the tanker traffic would be more than 25 miles off the coast.

OIL: Project

(From 1G)

The announcement marks the latest major setback in western Colorado's nearly moribund oil shale industry. The biggest blow occurred on May 2, 1982, when Exxon abruptly shut down its $5 billion Colony shale-oil project and thousands of workers suddenly found themselves without jobs.

Stegemeier said Unocal will discuss possible options for the Parachute project with government and congressional officials. "We believe this technology is important because of oil shale's long-term importance to America's energy future," he said.

Dreams do come true

Midland Community Concerts conducts its 44th season campaign drive Monday through April 13 at the east entrance of ClayDesta Atrium. The drive officially begins with a ribbon-cutting ceremony at 11:30 a.m. Monday. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. Those joining by April 8 will be allowed to attend the final subscription concert of the 1990-91 season. Featured artists for the coming season include the Moscow Balalaikas, Anthony & Joseph Paratore, Carrol McLaughlin, the Dallas Brass and Neal & Leandra.

The place was Chicago. The year, 1920. Dema E. Harshbarger and Ward French dreamed a dream which was to become the Community Concert Association.

The plan was simple, yet hard to sell.

For years, individuals and groups had shouldered the financial burden of bringing quality entertainment to their respective communities. Too often, due to weather, travel conditions and local competition, the concert ran in the red.

Ms. Harshbarger and French wanted to change that by organizing a permanent concert association in every city promoted on a non-profit membership basis through a one-week intensive campaign directed by a professional organizer. By raising the money first, the artists were engaged afterward within the limits of the budget made available. The sale of single admission tickets was eliminated and only members could attend the concerts.

Only 12 cities agreed the first year. Often French and Ms. Harshbarger heard comments like "It's a fine idea, but our town just isn't musical," "Yes, it sounds good, but our town is different" and "Our people just won't buy a 'pig in a poke' " from communities which joined later and encountered success with the plan.

By 1930, an expansion of the organized audience movement was needed. At that time the two leading artist management organizations, Columbia Concerts Inc., and National Artist Service, assumed the responsibility for the expansion, thus providing a foundation that allowed the movement to expand despite the Great Depression throughout the United States into Canada and Nova Scotia.

Midland joined the plan in 1947 and has provided a Midland Community Concerts series every year since.

Ricky Van Shelton

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Singing has been a driving force in Rickey Van Shelton's life since he was a child. Now, after years of hard work, a little luck and faith in himself, Shelton has claimed 14 national awards, cut nine chart topping singles and released three albums, two of which have gone platinum, only to discover stardom carries a heavy price tag.

"Right now, I'm working 70, 80 and 90 hours a week. My days start early morning and end late night seven days a week. I never dreamed I would put in so many hours.

"People see you on stage, they think that's pretty much it," said the 39-year-old heartthrob, whose days are filled with interviews, working with his band, doing sound checks, traveling, cutting promos at radio stations and dealing with people in and out of the show.

"I don't get through till midnight. This business just don't go away."

When he does get home to his ranch outside of Nashville, he said, "I play catch up — pay bills, fix things, oversee things. I just don't have time to do nothing.

"I NEVER have a chance to go on vacation. I don't have a chance to do the things I used to do — visit friends or family.

"I don't get a chance to goof off. Everything I say is a matter of public record. Everything I do is a matter of public record. Life is a whole lot more complicated than it was 10 years ago."

So why doesn't he slow down?

"You're afraid to slow down, plus your name is on so many contracts nobody will let you slow down. You are kind of forced through this thing."

He's learned a valuable lesson along the way.

"It don't take money to make a person happy. I came from the ground up. I never had a decent car to drive. I struggled from pay day to pay day.

"I was happier then than I am now because life was a lot simpler. I've realized that it's not money that makes you happy. Sure everybody wants it; it makes your life easier.

"I know both sides of the fence now. You can buy you a new car and a new, big house, but you can be just as unhappy in it as you are in a wrecked car.

"I JUST WANT to find a way to be happy. If it's living in a shack by a creek, so be it."

Shelton doesn't want to leave the impression he's ungrateful. He's not.

"Everything matters. Every little show on TV; every time on radio; every interview. It's just been a real steady climb since I started.

"I'm thankful to radio stations, fans, reporters — everybody who has something to do with it. Anybody that has anything to do with my career I'm thankful to. You can't do it alone. It takes everybody."

Shelton's awards include:

■ In 1988, the Country Music Association's Horizon Award, Academy of Country Music Award for Top New Male Vocalist, TNN Viewer's Choice Award for Favorite Newcomer and Music City News Award for Star of Tomorrow.

■ In 1989, CMA's Male Vocalist of the Year, Music City News Awards for Male Artist of the Year, Album of the Year for "Loving Proof," Single of the Year and Video of the Year and TNN's Viewer's Choice Awards for Favorite Male Vocalist, Favorite Single and Favorite Video.

■ In 1990, TNN/Music City News Awards for Entertainer of the Year and Male Vocalist of the Year.

Recently, Shelton has cut a gospel album that hasn't been released yet, a fourth album that will be released in May and recorded a duet and video with Dolly Parton.

Recording the duet was difficult, Shelton said. Then he laughed.

"It was hard because I couldn't quit grinning. I had a big ole smile on my face. It was wonderful. I was flattered that she asked me to do that. I was just thrilled because I had been such a big fan of hers. I loved every minute of it."

Shelton sees the purpose of videos, but doesn't enjoy filming them.

"They do a lot of good this day and age. I can't say that I enjoy doing them, although I did enjoy doing that one with Dolly for obvious reasons," he said.

"You have to do the same thing over and over and over and over. Camera people are never ready when you do something spontaneous. They say, 'Do it again.' And you can never do it again to save your life. The days are long; the lights bright. It's hard to do. I have a lot of respect for actors and actresses after doing videos."

SHELTON PREFERS to do what he enjoys most.

"Singing. Walking onto the stage and playing music. That's when I'm happy. When I'm on that stage, all my troubles disappear. All my cares and worries, everything disappears. I don't think about anything but what I'm doing. Like John Conlee, he was a-swinging. Well, I'm a-singing."

Despite being overworked, Shelton saw 1990 as a "real good year.

"I got to sing for the president. Got my own production now, my own stage and everything. And, I paid off my farm, too. That was a real star in my crown.

"That was my first goal after I got my contract, and I took every dime I could spare to pay it off," Shelton said, adding that having his farm paid for was "great. It is a good feeling."

Someday, he knows he'll have the time to spend there that he wants. For now, Shelton said, "I'm just going to continue to do what I'm doing until I can get out of all these contracts, then I will do it my way."

What is Shelton's way?

"In two or three years, slow down, enjoy life, play when I want, where I want and what I want. Go fishing once in awhile. At least cut back to 40 hours a week."

DREAMS: Community Concerts campaign drive begins Monday

community concerts of New York City, a division of Columbia Artists Management," said Em Carnett, publicity chairman for the 1991-92 MCC season, which is holding its membership campaign Monday through April 13.

"The New York-based concert service will supply assistance to the local group conducting an annual membership campaign and act as the booking agent for the local association. Community Concerts, in the last 60 years, has assisted over 1,000 towns in the United States and Canada with the organization and presentation of a concert series under the concept of the 'organized audience plan.'"

Today, Community Concerts is the most extensive plan for bringing together the North American concertgoer and the world's performers. More than 2,000 Community Concerts are presented annually in hundreds of cities throughout the United States and Canada to a total membership audience of 500,000.

Midland's Community Concert series is, Mrs. Carnett said, "Run by Midland citizens interested in promoting the finest entertainment available to be presented to the Midland people."

The 1991-92 season finds the association bringing five acts to town at a cost to members of $25 for adults, $10 for students through high school and $60 for a family membership, which includes two adults and all children through high school.

This year's lineup includes The Moscow Balalaikas, presenting Soviet classics and popular music from other parts of the world on traditional Russian folk instruments; duo pianists Anthony and Joseph Paratore; harpist Carrol McLaughlin playing classics as well as popular music; The Dallas Brass performing on brass, drums, keyboards and xylophone; and Neal & Leandra playing guitar and singing country, folk and gospel songs.

"To be able to bring this caliber of performance to a town the size of Midland at such a remarkable price is made possible through the many volunteers who dedicate their time and efforts to achieve this goal," Ms. Carnett said. "The association is operated entirely with volunteers."

A bonus for new subscribers is free admission to the last concert of the current season — Anna Werner Backmann on April 8.

MCC is conducting its campaign drive Monday through April 13 at ClayDesta Atrium, east entrance. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. For more information call 684-4767. All concerts are held at Midland High School Auditorium at 8 p.m. No admission is allowed without season membership.

Haley art show welcomes new artists

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

'It is one of our main supporting functions due to the fact that we accept no federal or state funds....'

— Yvonne Smith, library curator

Three new artists join the ranks of those whose works have been included in the annual Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library's annual art show and sale.

John Encinias is an impressionist painter from California. Realism painter Michael Stack is from Tucson, Ariz., and sculptor Shirley Thomson Smith is from Oklahoma City, Okal.

The event, set for Saturday, will be held at the Haley Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave., for the first time since 1988.

"We are anticipating a good turnout," said Yvonne Smith, the library's curator. "We have increased the size of the library about 80 percent, so it allows us to use the library for these functions."

The art show and sale still will be smaller than last year.

"We do not have the number of artists participating due to the fact that it will held here in the library, but we've had very good reception from our invitation to the artists and to the people," Ms. Smith said.

Last year, 52 artists entered their work. This year, 32 are participating.

Each artist is allowed three works of art. In the case of Stiha, who is no longer painting, his selections were from existing pieces.

"They have closed his portion of the gallery, and it's under new management, and they have retained the name Stiha Gallery in his honor," Ms. Smith said, adding that his wife, Mrs. Vladan Stiha, said a few of his paintings were on consignment at the gallery, but most of them were in his private collection at home.

The Haley Library show and sale includes, Mrs. Smith said, "Some beautiful paintings. They range from Western to still life."

Mediums include oils, pastels, watercolors and pencil as well as works in bronze and clay. The size limit for paintings is 12 inches by 24 inches due to event being held at the Haley Library. Prices will range from under $550 to more than $15,500.

Reservations, by calling 682-5785, are preferred. The preview begins at 6 p.m. and the drawing at 7:30 p.m. Beside each art work, which has already been priced, hangs a box in which interested parties put their names. The name drawn is the purchaser of the item.

Admission to the event is $50 per person. Cocktails and hors d'oeuvres will be served. Dress ranges from street wear to after five.

The basic purpose of the Haley Library is educational. Within the facility are collections which are open for serious research and study.

The emphasis is on Texas and Southwestern history. The collections of the library represent the more than half century's efforts of J. Evetts Haley, the acknowledged dean of range country historians. The common thread that runs throughout the collections is the life and times of the cowboy and the range cattle industry.

The art show and sale is the Haley Library's major fundraising event each year.

"It is one of our main supporting functions due to the fact that we accept no federal or state funds, so actually it is our largest money-making function. It helps to support the ongoing library itself."

Austin's rebel songwriter Butch Hancock will entertain with songs, guitar and harmonica at the third House Concert at the Museum of the Southwest, Saturday at 8 p.m. For reservations and information, call 683-2882.

Butch Hancock to come to town

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

When Butch Hancock looks back over his 40 something years, he can't find anything he'd change.

"I can't imagine anything I would do differently," the Austin-based singer/songwriter said in a recent telephone interview. "I'd probably go out of my way to make the same mistakes. What do you learn if you don't make mistakes? We learn by contrast. If there's no contrast, we won't be able to tell any difference. We'd just stay in the same place."

Hancock, guest performer at the Museum of the Southwest's House Series Concert Saturday, has hardly been stationary. Better known for his songs captured on seven albums including "West Texas Waltzes," "The Wind's Dominion" and "Firewater Seeks It's Own Level" he produced on his own label, Rainlight Records, Hancock also is a film director, visual artist and photographer.

"It's all part of the same thing — the music and the songs, the photographs, the lyrics, even my tractor driving. I used to drive a tractor for my dad, and that's when I first started writing a lot of songs," said Hancock, who worked a year for his dad, George Hancock, who was in the earth moving business.

Recently, Hancock's main emphasis has been on the month-by-month release of his No 2 Alike tapes and the operation of Lubbock or Leave It, a store in downtown Austin. He did six nights at Austin's Cactus Cafe recording 14 hours of tape with 26 or so Austin musicians. No song appears on the series more than once. Now, he's selling the tapes of the event in a tape-of-the-month club manner.

"It's actually working," said Hancock who found the experience of working with that many different musicians in such a compressed time frame a great experience.

His music invites investigation and confounds explanation.

"Generally, it's going to be mixture of what's commonly called country rock, blues, Tex Mex, folk. About anything else you can think of probably hear little elements of it in our songs from time to time," Hancock said of his 8 p.m. Midland performance Saturday at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

He paused, thinking about his music, before adding, "Something about the Lubbock sound coming up out of the High Plains — dusty windy places — has a little bit of that sound in the music."

Hancock, an Eagle Scout who graduated from Lubbock's Monterey High School, pictures himself as "just a home-grown kid from Lubbock that for some reason or other has wound up with some interesting observations and twists on life, and the language and living in the 20th century, and somebody who can still love driving a tractor and love living in the middle of a city, too."

Hancock, who studied architecture at Texas Tech University, plays the Kerrville Music Festival most years, has been invited back to the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival, has toured outside the United States including Australia, Great Britain, Europe and the Soviet Union.

"Somebody told me years ago, 'Now, Butch, don't go out and spread yourself too thin.' And for some reason that hit me as exactly the thing to attempt to do."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Squire's picnic planned Friday

Three comedians bring their humor to Midland Friday for "A Country Squire's Picnic," set for 7 p.m. to midnight at Midland Center.

The $100 per-couple, by-invitation only event features the talents of Rita Rudner, Dom Irrera and Randy Kagan, in addition to dinner by Foods Fantastic and a silent auction.

Proceeds benefit the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC).

For an invitation or more information call 694-4452 or 699-5868. The event is presented by the Opportunity Center Auxiliary.

ODESSA — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin is hosting a public reception from 7 to 9 p.m. April 12 for the Senior Art Exhibition by Ellen Taylor.

The reception and the exhibit, which is on display now, will be in the Third Floor Gallery.

Ms. Taylor's art work consists of prints, paintings and drawings. Sponsored by Students Programs, Ms. Taylor's exhibit will be on display through April 12.

For more information call 362-8351.

Senior Games planned

KERRVILLE — The second Senior Games is set for May 2-4 at Kerrville.

The 2-mile Fun Run and Pistol Shoot are new additions to the competitive sports events, which include free throw basketball, bicycle, bowling, 5K foot race, golf, horseshoes, race walk, racquetball, softball, swimming, tennis and track and field events. Nonathletic events are bridge and '42.'

A number of social events are planned including a Hill Country hospitality mixer, opening ceremonies, Fiesta Time on the River and Western Swing-Ranch Night.

Registration deadline is April 18. Age for participation is 50 and up. For more information and official entry blanks, write The Senior Games, 1200 Sidney Baker, Kerrville, Texas 78028, or call 1-512-896-1155.

Museum closed today

The Museum of the Southwest is closed today for Easter.

Also, there will be no sky shows at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium today.

Regular hours resume at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

Baird named April artist

Born in British Columbia, Canada, Mrs. Baird has been a Texas resident for 45 years, the last 25 of which she has lived in Midland. She is a member of Texas Watercolor Society, Southwestern Watercolor Society, Watercolor Art Society of Houston, Midland Arts Association and Arts Assembly of Midland.

Her works, which have received numerous awards, have been accepted into many juried shows, most recently in the 15th National Art Show held in Houston this spring. In addition, two of her works were sent to Stavanger, Norway, last June as part of an cultural exchange program sponsored by Houston-Galveston Stavanger Sister Cities Art Society and Watercolor Art Society, Houston.

She is a former student of Warren Taylor, Midland College.

Her watercolors may be viewed at The Woman's Club between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday through Friday through April.

Folk-art exhibit opens

MARFA — "Art of Guatemala," an exhibition of regional folk art and textiles, opens Saturday at the Chinati Art Foundation, Marfa.

The exhibition includes embroidery, primitive looms, handcarved wooden masks and paintings by Guatemalan artisans.

An opening reception is set for 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday at the foundation's main gallery, a converted former Fort D.A. Russell barracks.

The exhibition — designed to be enjoyed by all ages — will remain through October. The Chinati Foundation is a non-profit art institution dedicated to bringing the arts to far West Texas. Donations are accepted.

For more information call 1-729-4362.

AIPB plans style show

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin presents a nostalgic and historical style show, "The Way We Wore," depicting fashion changes from pre-Civil War days to the 1930s.

The hour-long, heritage fasion show and luncheon, celebrating Ector County's Centennial, will be presented at noon, April 18 at Odessa Country Club.

Local models will wear clothing, such as bridal party costumes circa 1891, turn-of-the-century bathing costumes and flapper outfits from the Roaring '20s. Also, there will be Victorian-era day and evening wear on display, as well as a reverse striptease demonstrating the undergarments, such as corsets and bustles, necessary to mould m'lady's figure.

The men, women and children's clothing will be shown from an extensive collection of historic clothing by Pat Starcke from Phoenix, Ariz. Mrs. Starcke has a master's degree in textiles and clothing and has taught textiles in secondary schools and colleges.

In her commentary, she relates the styles of clothing in her collection to the social, political and economic conditions of the corresponding decades and will include historical facts about Midland and Odessa. Fashions will be presented to the accompaniment of historically appropriate music.

Tickets for the luncheon and program are $30 per person. Seating is limited. Reservations need to be made by April 12.

All proceeds go to the Art Institute. Photographs and professional drawings of the historic clothes will be available at the museum.

MCT play opens Friday

Midland Community Theatre presents Ray Cooney's "Run for Your Wife," a London farce about a bigamist taxi driver, opening Friday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The plot in this two-act play includes a mugging incident, two amusingly different plainsclothes cops, a newspaper reporter and a variety of mistaken identities. Bill Schneider, an MCT veteran, plays the polygamous husband.

Others in the cast are Chuck Hendrickson, David Whitaker, Dusty Miller, Jim Barlett, Liz Hight, Layman and Chris Linehan.

For reservations call 682-4111.

Children's series planned

Casa de Amigos will offer its third Children's Performing Arts Series at the historic Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave., beginning April 14.

Sponsored in part by grants from the Arts Assembly of Midland and the ARCO Foundation, Air Jazz, a dance and juggling troupe from Boulder, Colo., will perform April 14; Prairie Dance Theatre, a troupe portraying Native American stories from the Southwest, will perform April 28. Both performances will be presented at 2 and 4 p.m.

Cost to attend both Air Jazz and Prairie Dance Theatre performances is $15 or a single ticket may be purchased to attend either performance for $10. Benefits from the Children's Performing Arts series go directly to the children's education programs offered by Casa de Amigos.

Also available is the opportunity to purchase extra tickets, which are in turn donated back to Casa de Amigos for distribution among the worthy, but less fortunate, youth who might benefit from the opportunity to attend a cultural arts performance.

Casa de Amigos is an ecumenical Christian service center established in 1964, and a United Way member since 1973, whose purpose is to serve the needs of low-income persons of all ages and ethnic backgrounds.

For more information call Casa, 1101 E. Garden Lane, 682-9701.

Book author at AIPB

ODESSA — The creator of "The Very Hungry Caterpillar," "The Very Busy Spider," "The Grouchy Ladybug" and numerous other beloved children's books will be at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University Blvd., Saturday for the opening of an exhibition of his works, "The Art of Eric Carle."

The event is open to the public on a first-come, first-serve basis. Seating will be limited.

Carle will conduct a children's seminar from 10-10:30 a.m. Saturday in the Nelda Lee Gallery of the Art Institute. He will show children how he creates his stories and characters, and he and his audience together will create a story, which he will illustrate.

From 11 a.m.-1 p.m. the author-/illustrator will autograph books.

A hunderd pieces of Carle's original illustrations will be on display at the museum Saturday through April 28, along with banners, created by children across the country and various hands-on gallery activities for children.

The exhibition and Carle's visit are a part of CHILD'S PLAY '91, organized by Junior League of Odessa, Inc., and funded in part by the Odessa Cultural Council.

Admission is free. For more information call AIPB at 1-368-7222.

Town celebrates spring

RUIDOSO, N.M. — Ushering in Ruidoso's three-month "Springtime in the Rockies" activities will be Connoisseur Classic III, a three-day celebration of Southwestern wine, gourmet cuisine and art, to be held Friday through April 7 at various locations throughout Ruidoso.

"New this year will be a weekend-long art gallery exhibition featuring works of area artists and gallery owners," said Frankie Jarrell, event chairman.

For reservatins or tickets call the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce, 1-800-253-2255.

Auditions scheduled

DALLAS — Circle in the Square Theatre School, the actor-training program affiliated with New York City's oldest professional theater, will hold its 10th annual national audition tour this week for the Professional and Summer Workshop programs.

The auditions will be held in Chicago, Ill., Wednesday; Denver, Colo., Thursday; Seattle, Wash., Friday; Los Angeles, Calif., Saturday; and Dallas Monday, April 8.

The school will hold auditions at the Circle in the Square theatre, New York, May 6-9 and June 3-6.

"Students who are selected for Circle in the Square programs study with some of the best actors and directors in New York theater, film and television, while working in the unique, professional environment of a Broadway theater," said a release from the school.

For more information call 1-212-307-2732, or write: Admissions, Circle In The Square Theatre School, 1633 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10019-6795.

Student work on display

The elementary division of the annual Student Art Festival is hanging at the Museum of the Southwest's Fredda Turner Durham Childrens Museum through April 21.

Categories include drawing, painting, sculpture, fibers and textiles, ceramics, jewelry, printmaking, commercial art and collage.

The festival is sponsored by the museum, the Midland Independent School District, the City Council PTA and Las Manos. For more information call the museum, 683-2882.

Haley Memorial Library to host party

The Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library hosts an autograph party for the newly-released hardback edition of "A Texan looks at Lyndon: A Study in Illegitimate Power," Sunday, April 7th, following the library's Spring Art Show and Sale, April 6.

The autograph party will be held 2-4 p.m. Sunday, April 7, in the library.

Written by renowned historian and author J. Evetts Haley, the library's founder, the book was first released in 1964 in paperback and became a "black market" best-seller.

Library officials note that, health permitting, Haley will be on hand April 7th to sign copies of the book

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARIES

Sandra DeFore Wegner
County Librarian

Let's talk Turkey. Better than that, we will let Leila Sigmon tell us about the land of her birth at the Friends of the Library Annual Meeting, April 14.

Consider yourself invited to hear the world traveler and retired MISD teacher share memories and pictures of her native land at 2 p.m., Sunday, April 14, at the downtown library, 301 W. Missouri.

While many of the Friends work on library projects all year, their two big events are the book sale in October and the Annual Meeting.

At this meeting new officers take over and a program is presented for the public and Friends. This year there will be door prizes.

If you aren't a Friend of the Library, this is a good time to join. The libraries of Midland County, downtown and Centennial Branch at Midland Park Mall need your support.

Take advantage of the Friends' invitation, enjoy a fascinating program, get refreshments and, maybe, win a new travel book.

Make plans to register your three- to five-year-old for Story Time at the downtown library, 301 W. Missouri.

On Tuesdays and Wednesdays for five weeks between April 16 and May 15, Marita Richards, librarian, and her puppet friends, will be telling stories in 30-minute sessions between 10-10:30 a.m.

You may enroll your child at the downtown library for either the Tuesday or Wednesday sessions. Registration must be in person beginning at 9 a.m. Monday, April 8. The number of children accepted will be limited.

The library has connections and they are growing. With our ties to the Texas State Library System, we can borrow books and obtain photocopied periodical materials from other libraries in and out of state. It takes from two to three weeks to obtain materials and the network does best with requests for specific titles and articles. Although our local libraries are not network lenders, our library does respond to and make direct requests to other libraries in special circumstances.

Now PLANet, Permian Libraries Area Network, has a new choice to offer library patrons who need materials beyond their home library's resources. Patrons in good standing with their home library may hand-carry a form to any of 13 area libraries allowing them check-out privileges for a limited period. PLANet libraries are the academic and public libraries of Midland, Odessa and Big Spring and public libraries of Andrews, Crane, Lamesa, Monahans and Kermit. Midland County Public Library patrons must have a library card three months before we will issue them a patron in good-standing form.

Paperbacks appeal to many library readers. Their size makes them convenient to carry and, oh, those covers tantalize!

Adult patrons at Midland Centennial Branch Library, Midland Park Mall, check out as many paperbacks as hard cover books.

Some of the paperback categories available in the libraries are non-fiction, young adult, classics, new adult readers, mysteries, westerns, science fiction, fantasy and, of course, romance.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 31, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your proud and dramatic ways will win you the kind of attention that pays off both financially and romantically. Although you think of yourself as a rolling stone, you could suddenly decide to settle down. November is a wonderful time for a wedding! Be willing to invest in the future. A property deal you make in December could be the source of great satisfaction. Postpone expensive vacation travel until early in 1992.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Richard Chamberlain, singer Shirley Jones, actress Rhea Perlman, fashion designer Liz Claiborne.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A hasty decision could threaten your financial security. A gift will help heal an emotional wound. Pooling funds or talents with your pals proves advantageous today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may have mixed emotions and feel at odds with yourself. An inspiring sermon or talk lifts your spirits. Do your serious thinking this afternoon, then seek fun companions this evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Creative work of all kinds enjoys favorable influences. A communication may be very subtle; look for the hidden message. Loved one's body language is very revealing. Back off.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get a chance to put the finishing touches on yesterday's developments. However, there is a need for caution where travel and communication are concerned. A loved one keeps you guessing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your relationship with someone at a distance may require changes in your family plans. An older person provides helpful advice. A candid talk clears the air with those closest to your heart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Practical responsibilities are in the spotlight. Financial dealings with family members or close friends enjoy favorable influences. Write letters to someone away at school.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A breakdown in communications could start the day off on the wrong foot. Later, your interest will be drawn to domestic matters, and that will be fulfilling. Nurture your loved ones with kindness.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You feel ambivalent about one of your favorite interests: travel. Although you would like to plan a trip, family members may have other ideas. A chance to play center stage will be yours tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your social life picks up momentum now. A newcomer encourages you to try something completely different. A personal relationship could be at an important crossroad.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Try to remember a progressive idea that came to you during the wee hours of the morning. Even if you cannot use it today, it will be helpful in the future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Troubling suspicions about a friend or money could preoccupy you until late afternoon. From then on it should be clear sailing. Church or community activities are favored.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Duty calls. You must wind up a weekend project or prepare for tomorrow's return to the work scene. Avoid making promises you cannot keep. Listen to your inner voice when facing tough choices.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ◇

As declarer, you have nefarious characters seated on both sides of you, plotting your downfall. It is your sworn task to do what you can to negate their efforts.

North-South conducted a standard auction to their best spot. With the equivalent of an opening bid and reasonable four-card support, North's forcing jump raise to three hearts was textbook.

West led the two of diamonds, which everyone at the table recognized as a singleton. To show an entry in the lower-ranked side suit, i.e. clubs, East followed suit with the three. Declarer won in hand and, in an effort to sneak a trump through, led a low heart, but there was no fooling West. The defender rose with the trump ace, led a low club to partner's ace and got the diamond ruff. Since declarer still had to concede a trick to the king of hearts, that meant down one.

The diamond lead was doubly disastrous, because it also prevented a fast entry to dummy which would have permitted declarer to take a discard of the club loser on the king of spades. Still, as the cards lay, declarer could have used the spade suit to save his contract.

After winning the first trick, declarer should have cashed the ace of spades, overtaken the queen with the table's king and then led the ten of spades. When East does not cover with the jack, declarer should simply discard the four of clubs—a loser-on-loser play that cuts the enemy communication.

As a result, West would have no way to get to the East hand to obtain a diamond ruff—allowing East to win the first trump would simply mean that West would be ruffing the diamond with a natural trump trick. This Scissors Coup, as the play is called in the trade, would have limited declarer's losers to two trumps and a spade!

Globe schedules Renaissance Fair May 3-5

ODESSA — The annual Renaissance Fair is set for May 3-5 in the Courtyard at the Globe Theatre, 2308 Shakespeare Road.

This family fair brings to the Permian Basin traditional Renaissance games, puppets, food and handcrafts. Fourteenth Century costumed lords and ladies, knights and dames will host the fair featuring jousting, feats of bravery and archery, booths of food and drink and handmade arts and crafts.

Booth space is available for exhibitors. Contact Mike Gieb, chairman, 1-332-1586 for more information.

Three-day admission tickets are $4 and $2. Gourp rates are available.
