T. Boone Pickens not surprised by crude prices

By Jim Malewitz
Texas Tribune

INTERVIEW

Crude oil prices are plunging, but T. Boone Pickens isn't surprised. The billionaire oilman has seen plenty of spikes and dips during more than 60 years in the industry, including some he predicted. Texas is producing more oil than it has in 30 years, and pumping twice as much as it did just three years ago. It now accounts for more than one-third of all U.S. production. The surge, however, comes as a stagnant global economy slows demand.

West Texas Intermediate oil, the U.S. benchmark, has traded recently in the low-$80-per-barrel range, the lowest price since 2012 and a more than 20 percent drop since last June. For companies and countries highly dependent on oil money, the prospect of idled rigs and choked-back production has stirred fears about plummeting profits. So what's next for Texas' oil and gas industry? The Tribune asked Pickens, chairman of the hedge fund BP Capital Management and former CEO of Mesa Petroleum.

After politely declining a cup of coffee — a drink he has never tasted, at his grandmother's instruction — the 86-year-old discussed oil prices and other issues: natural gas-powered vehicles, natural gas exports and efforts to ban hydraulic fracturing in Denton.

The following is an edited and condensed transcript of the interview.

TT: These sliding oil prices have stirred plenty of concerns within the U.S. oil industry. Will they fall much further?

Pickens: I think it can go down further. I don't think it's going to go to $60, but wouldn't be at all surprised if it went down in the $70s.

TT: What does that mean for Texas and its boomtowns?

Pickens: There was an old bumper sticker back in '86, it said "Dear God, just give us one more boom, and we promise not to piss it away."

TT: In drilling towns like Midland and

Texas Senate's top insurgent becomes its chief

By Will Weissert

AUSTIN — When Dan Patrick first got to the Texas Senate in 2007, his tone and style were so combative that a Republican colleague decided a Cosa Nostra-like lesson was in order for the tea party darling.

After Patrick delayed legislation he supported, Sen. John Corona took a toy pony-on-a-stick, lopped off its head and left it on Patrick's chair — recalling the iconic scene from "Godfather II."

An in-your-face conservative radio talk show host, Patrick has long relished being a Senate troublemaker, picking fights and injecting folksy passion into the Legislature's otherwise staid, tradition-bound upper chamber. But after voters resoundingly elected him to run the Senate on Tuesday, Patrick promised to be "the lieutenant governor of all people" — a softer approach that would defy his polarizing political history and could help reconcile his hard-line campaign promises with those of Republican Gov.-elect Greg Abbott.

It's a fine line Patrick faces between effectively governing and pleasing his ardent grassroots supporters.

"Looking at Dan Patrick's history and who got him elected, his base wants red meat and I believe Patrick will deliver it," said Elliot Shapleigh, an El Paso Democrat who once sat next to Patrick in the Senate and served from 2007 to 2011.

While Texas' next governor has emphasized Hispanic outreach, Patrick vowed to secure the Texas-Mexico border at all cost and stop immigrants' "illegal invasion." The two may also differ on how deeply to cut taxes and best overhaul public education. Democrats fear Patrick will resurrect his push to rid the Senate of a rule enabling the minority party to block especially contentious legislation from consideration during the upcoming session.

George W. Bush gives 50-50 odds Jeb runs in 2016

WASHINGTON — Former President George W. Bush is giving even odds about whether another Bush will try to occupy the White House.

Brother Jeb, a former Florida governor, is "wrestling with the decision" of running for the Republican nomination for president in 2016, George W. Bush says.

"I think it's 50-50," the former president told CBS' "Face the Nation."

"He and I are very close. On the other hand, he's not here knocking on my door, you know, agonizing about

Margilee B. Williams

Margilee B. Williams, 87, formerly of Amarillo, died Friday, November 7, 2014.

Memorial services will be today at 2:00 p.m. in the Llano Mausoleum Chapel in Amarillo. Arrangements are by Boxwell Brothers Funeral Directors, 2800 Paramount Blvd., Amarillo, Texas.

Margilee Williams was born October 31, 1927 in Dobbs Ferry, New York to Henry and Isola Bufkin. She went HOME to be with her heavenly Father, whom she dearly loved, on November 7, 2014.

The family moved to Dallas, Texas during her high school years where she graduated from Highland Park High School. Mom graduated from the University of Texas, with honors, in 1950 with a BA in English. While in Austin, Mom met Larry Williams and they were married in December of 1949. Larry Jr. was born in December of 1950, and after Dad graduated from UT, the family moved to Midland, TX where Alan was born. The family then settled in Amarillo where their third son, Greg, was born.

Marge & Larry were lifelong members of Paramount Terrace Christian Church where they were very active. She was a stay at home mom and was supportive of Dad's various business ventures. While her boys were in school, Mom was a substitute teacher in the Amarillo Public Schools. Later, she had a very successful career with Avon, earning many sales awards. Mom worked her territory diligently to have a little extra "mad money".

Mom and Dad traveled extensively. They loved to cruise and took multiple trips to various destinations around the world.

After Dad passed away in 1990, a new phase of mom's life began. She missed dad terribly. In 1993, she was the founding president of the Amarillo Chapter of Widowed Persons Services. It is still thriving today. She also spent much time managing Dad's business interests and was a terrific bridge player, playing whenever the opportunity arose. Mom's love of travel continued after Dad's passing, with trips to various interesting places accompanied by her sons and friends.

In 2010, Mom moved to Midland to be closer to family. She lived independently until mid-2012 when she needed more help in day-to-day activities. Her family will be forever grateful to those who helped Marge continue to enjoy life. A special thank you to Karen, Veronica, Lucy, Lupe, Pearl and Sharene who lovingly cared for Mom.

Margilee was predeceased by her parents, husband, Larry and grandson, Cole. She is survived by her sons, Larry Jr. of Amarillo, Alan (Dianne) of Midland and Greg of Austin. Grandsons Justin (Jamie) and Jason (Charissa) of Wylie, TX, and Chandler of San Francisco, CA. Great-grandchildren are Emily and Avery Williams, and Jadon Williams of Wylie, TX.

Memorials may be sent to a charity of choice. Sign the online guestbook at www.boxwellbrothers.com.

Schirra's pioneering space camera to be auctioned

By Eric Berger
Associated Press

HOUSTON — One day about 50 years ago, according to legend, astronaut Wally Schirra walked into a Houston camera store and changed how humanity viewed itself.

That's because Schirra bought a Hasselblad 500C camera, a state-of-the-art model used by professional photographers, to take in space. And during his October 1962 flight, Schirra snapped some of the earliest glamour shots of Earth.

"For the first time an astronaut didn't bring a camera into space just to record data," Robert Pearlman, one of the country's leading experts on space collectibles, told the Houston Chronicle. "This camera was brought to capture images of the Earth to share with the world."

Schirra's successful modification of an off-the-shelf Hasselblad led to a long relationship between NASA and the Swedish camera company, and nearly all of the iconic Apollo photos from the moon were taken by astronauts using modified Hasselblads.

For these reasons, Pearlman says, there will be considerable excitement around the Nov. 13 auction of Schirra's Hasselblad, both from space and photo buffs.

The Boston-based auction house, RR Auction, plans to announce the camera auction Tuesday. Although the firm has set a preliminary estimate of $50,000 to $100,000 for the camera, Pearlman, who runs the website CollectSpace, believes the Hasselblad will fetch considerably more, perhaps as much as $1 million.

Schirra was the fifth American astronaut to reach space, flying in a Mercury capsule that made six orbits before splashing into the Pacific Ocean.

During the initial U.S. spaceflights — the first two of which lasted only about 15 minutes — NASA was more concerned about getting its astronauts home in one piece than taking pretty pictures. The space agency, in a race with the Soviet Union, focused on achievements, not public relations activities.

Until Schirra's flight the astronauts had no cameras, or inexpensive ones. In February 1962, when he became the first American to reach orbit, John Glenn brought a 35mm camera into space. But in terms of photograph quality the Hasselblad, a $450 camera at the time, was a game changer because its wider images captured more of the Earth's curvature.

Until his death in 2007 Schirra maintained the story that he bought the Hasselblad in a Houston camera store. Although there's no receipt or official documentation to back that up, Schirra's account makes sense, Pearlman said.

During the Mercury missions NASA was in the process of moving control of human spaceflight from Langley Research Center in Virginia to Houston. Schirra's family moved to Houston in 1961, and his flight was the first one in which the city welcomed an astronaut back home.

Schirra's flight laid the groundwork for future missions during the Gemini program in which astronauts began taking photographs of other astronauts in space, especially outside the capsule during spacewalks.

"The public was fascinated by those pictures of humans in space," said Jennifer Levasseur, a curator of photography at the Smithsonian National Air and Space Museum.

"There's a realization at NASA that it's not only important to take pictures of Earth but people too, because that's what people can relate to."

That leads directly to the iconic images of Apollo astronauts on the moon, most of whom left their cameras on the lunar surface. To conserve weight for the trip back to Earth they only brought back the camera's magazine that held the film.

Rural areas near Fort Worth divided over sludge

Associated Press
FORT WORTH — The city of Fort Worth's treated waste has served as fertilizer in nearby agricultural areas for more than two decades, but new residents are raising a stink.
 The Texas Commission on Environmental Quality calls it "sewage sludge" and it comes from every household, business and manufacturer in the city at a rate of about 90 tons per day, according to the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

 The sludge is "such a good resource with a bad smell," said fifth-generation farmer Todd Kimbrell Jr. "If people can put up with the temporary smell, the benefits are endless." But some say the city isn't being a good neighbor. The population in rural counties in North Texas has as much as tripled in recent years.

 "The agricultural areas benefited from using the biosolids for many years, but some of those areas experienced urban growth," said Luann Langley, a resident of Hill County. In May 2013, TCEQ received a petition from Ellis County, about 55 miles southeast of Fort Worth, to prohibit the land application of sludge within 3 miles of a city limit.

 In response, the Austin-based commission launched a study of the odors and the biosolids process and created new rules for applying sludge that took effect in October. They include requiring odor control plans, keeping the product at least 750 feet from homes and creating a new biosolid rating that takes odor into account.

 Officials also asked residents to keep track of which days and times they smelled the odors and how offensive they were.

 Langley fills out her form almost daily.
 The Fort Worth Water Department's Buster Fichera says the smell of the biosolids has worsened because of water conservation. He's launched a $6.5 million project to reduce the odor.

FROM WIRE REPORTS

SAN ANTONIO Meteor group says fireball reported in Texas

People in Texas have reported seeing a fireball, possibly a meteor, traveling through the night sky.
 The American Meteor Society reported on its website that it had received more than 200 reports about a bright fireball over San Antonio at 8:45 p.m. on Saturday.

According to the meteor society, witnesses reported an extremely bright green light that rivaled the brightness of the sun.

Residents from the Dallas area down south to Corpus Christi also reported seeing the fireball.

In dashcam video provided to KENS-TV in San Antonio by the Hewitt Police Department, a large bright light can be seen streaking across the sky.

The National Weather Service in San Antonio says there are no confirmed reports on whether the possible meteor landed somewhere.

SAN ANTONIO Police: Man claimed relative died, sold her home

Authorities are accusing a San Antonio man of selling a relative's home after falsely claiming the woman had died.
 The San Antonio

Express-News reported police began investigating Stephen Guajardo in August after he sold the house.

According to an arrest affidavit, Guajardo presented documents claiming his relative had died in July 2013. The 89-year-old woman is still alive and living in another state.

Police said Guajardo's relative had a brother with two daughters but that Guajardo falsified documents to say the brother, who had died, had no children and that Guajardo was the brother's sole heir.

Guajardo sold the home in August for $8,000, even though the home was appraised at $22,910 in 2013.

Guajardo faces four charges, including theft of an elderly person and tampering with government records.

SAN JUAN Facebook page leads police to phone theft ring

Authorities say a Facebook page helped lead to the arrest of members of a South Texas cellphone theft ring.

The Monitor of McAllen reported that four men were arrested after undercover officers bought some of the stolen cellphones.

Investigators learned about the theft ring after getting information about a Facebook page called "La pulga online," or "the flea market online" that was being used to sell the stolen phones.

San Juan Police Chief Juan Gonzalez said Saturday the men had stolen 65 cellphones and $500 in cash during recent separate burglaries of two Cricket Wireless stores.

The four men are facing charges of burglary and engaging in organized criminal activity.

ARLINGTON 3 die in suspected drunken-driving crash

Three people have been killed in a North Texas crash involving a suspected drunken driver.

Police said 38-year-old Eldrick Westbrook ran a red light early Sunday in Arlington before hitting another vehicle with four people inside. The vehicle spun into a traffic light pole, killing one person at the scene. Two others were taken to a hospital but died of their injuries. The fourth person suffered non-life threatening injuries.

Spokeswoman Tiara Richard said the three people who died as a result of the crash are women in their early to mid-20s.

Westbrook has been charged with three counts of intoxication manslaughter and is in custody at the Arlington city jail. His bail has not been set. It was not immediately clear whether he had an attorney.

George W. Bush says dad pondered skipping 2nd term

By Emily Schmall
Associated Press

DALLAS — George H.W. Bush seriously considered not running for re-election in 1992 even though he loved his job, according to a new book written by former President George W. Bush.

A complimentary account of his dad's presidency and glimpse into his personal life, "41: A Portrait of My Father," is scheduled to hit shelves on Tuesday, when the two will make a rare joint appearance at the elder Bush's presidential library in College Station, Texas. The Associated Press purchased an advance copy.

The book, which Bush kept under wraps until last summer, examines his father's decision to launch the first war in Iraq in 1991, his early failures in politics and his stinging defeat to Bill Clinton in 1992. It also relates personal anecdotes, including how the elder Bush struggled with the death of his daughter, Robin.

George H.W. Bush, now 90, pondered not running for a second term because he felt his role was creating undue scrutiny of his son.

"I was not trying to finish what my father had begun," as some have suggested," he wrote.

The book also includes a portrait of the elder Bush created by his son as part of his collection of oil paintings of world leaders.

In the author's note, Bush says his account is not objective but rather "a love story — a personal portrait of the extraordinary man who I am blessed to call my dad."

conservative in his estimate than another family member. Jeb Bush's son George P. Bush said two weeks ago it was more likely than not that the former Florida governor would move forward.

George W. Bush is promoting "41," a book about his father, former President George H.W. Bush.

"One of the lessons you learn from George H.W. Bush is that you can go into politics and still be a good father," George W.

Neil Bush, who was facing a federal lawsuit, according to the book.

"It killed him to see Neil singled out because he was the President's son," Bush wrote.

The elder Bush also hesitated because he had developed an irregular heartbeat and was exhausted, Bush added.

Although other biographies have described the relationship between father and son as sometimes strained, Bush, 68, describes their "worst argument" as arising after he drove home drunk from a tennis match, a decision his father met with a disapproving silence.

The author does not delve deeply into his own turn in the White House but makes clear that he considered his father a key adviser. He also disputes the assertion that he went to war in Iraq because of the conflict during his father's presidency.

"I was not trying to finish what my father had begun," as some have suggested," he wrote.

The book also includes a portrait of the elder Bush created by his son as part of his collection of oil paintings of world leaders.

In the author's note, Bush says his account is not objective but rather "a love story — a personal portrait of the extraordinary man who I am blessed to call my dad."

Bush said when asked if it's worth putting a family through a presidential campaign. "I put our family through it," he responded.

George W. Bush said he would be "all in" for his brother if he decides to run for the office and would do whatever he asks, even if it's to stay behind the scenes. As for their mother's position that enough Bushes have run for president, he said, "Sometimes her prognostications haven't been very accurate."

OKLAHOMA CITY E-cigarette firm eyes emerging cannabis oil market

As more states approve the medicinal and recreational use of marijuana, an Oklahoma-based electronic cigarette retailer is looking to build a national franchise.

Marijuana is illegal under federal drug laws. But voters in Oregon, Alaska and Washington, D.C., approved ballot measures Tuesday to legalize the recreational use of marijuana, joining Washington state and Colorado.

The growing availability of legal pot opens the door for Tulsa-based Palm Beach Vapors to market a method for producing a cannabis oil product that can be inhaled through a common e-cigarette, according to CEO and co-founder Chip Paul.

"This is a wave that's kind of sweeping the nation," said Paul, whose company is looking to patent the method and has already signed licensing deals in California and Colorado for what it calls the M-System. He said he intends to set up franchise locations in other states.

The use of marijuana is currently illegal in Oklahoma, but the market for cannabis products is projected to grow as more states move to legalize it. Advocates plan a big push for legalization initiatives on 2016 ballots in California, Arizona, Maine, Massachusetts and Nevada, according to Ethan Nadelmann, executive director of the Drug Policy Alliance.

CHIEF

The 64-year-old Patrick has a towering 6-foot-4-inch frame and tent-revival religious fervor. He's a born-again Christian from Houston who sets his alarm daily for 3:33 a.m. to mark Jeremiah 33:3, a Bible verse in which God says: "Call to me and I will answer you and tell you the great and unsearchable things you do not know."

His mix of faith and fierce conservatism prompted Patrick to found the Texas Legislature's tea party caucus in 2010. But his battles against Democrats and mainstream Republicans stretch back further.

On his first day in the Senate, Patrick invoked the Founding Fathers during a lengthy floor speech opposing the "two-thirds rule," a Senate tradition that prevents legislation from being considered unless 60 percent of senators vote to bring it up. After being outvoted 30 to 1, Patrick said, "The most important battles are the ones you fight by yourself."

Patrick could try and scrap the rule again, since, beginning in January, Republicans will control 20 Senate seats, one short of two-thirds.

JoAnn Fleming, a Tyler activist who chairs the citizen's advisory committee to the Legislature's tea party caucus, said criticisms from establishment politicians that Patrick is too combative could actually be strengths since they'll ensure he doesn't move to the middle as he oversees the Senate.

"I've heard (he's confrontational), but the majority of people I've heard that from are people who feel uncomfortable around people who are very strong in their set of beliefs," Fleming said.

After knocking out incumbent Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst in a nasty and expensive four-way Republican primary, Patrick declared that voters had "given us a mandate" to move an already strongly conservative Texas farther right.

PICKENS

From 1A

Karnes City, officials say they aren't too concerned right now, because they've budgeted conservatively, and energy companies have built up too much infrastructure to walk away. But should they be worried?

Pickens: You're not going to have a bust. But I think you will see capital expenditures cut in 2015 and see some rigs go down. You oversupplied gas, and now you've oversupplied oil. Nobody wants to stop drilling. We've screwed ourselves. That's what we did.

TT: Will U.S. drillers ever change that mindset?

Pickens: Who would be the leader? In 1991, when the price of gas went down to a dollar, I announced that I was shutting down a platform in the Gulf of Mexico. Hell, I never got one call saying, "Bully for you — good idea, we'll do the same."

TT: Just the nature of capitalism? Nobody wants to stop pumping first?

Pickens: Probably so.

TT: You've been pushing for us to find more ways to use the large supply of natural gas we've been producing. Texas now has at least 104 natural gas fueling stations — nearly a 50 percent increase over the past year, with 67 more planned to open in 2015. Is that significant progress?

Pickens: I think you're going to go towards more natural gas for transportation fuel. I'm not big on it for the passenger car. For the trucks, yes.

TT: So commercial fleets are the answer because it's easier to get those up to scale, in terms of long-term savings on fuel? Why not the personal vehicles?

Pickens: The stations are in for the trucks. Those vehicles are burning 20,000 to 30,000 gallons a year, and the companies saving $1.50 to $2 a gallon. Personal vehicles don't use enough fuel to get people to buy a more expensive vehicle. And when companies buy natural gas fleets, they can build their own fueling stations.

TT: A lot of people are looking at Denton ahead of its vote on banning hydraulic fracturing within city limits. Many industry representatives claim such a move would create a domino effect, emboldening other communities to do the same. Do you subscribe to that theory?

Pickens: Nobody's told me yet what (fracturing) damages. All it does is increase the resources available to you. It creates jobs and profits and taxes. Now tell me why would you want to shut it down?

TT: Opponents cite fumes, truck traffic noise — some of which can be attributed to the industry's presence in general, not specifically (fracturing). Texas is seeing more disputes between surface and mineral property, particularly as drilling moves into urban areas.

Pickens: Most of it, I think, is generated by lawyers. For $500 an hour, they can come up with some reasons for not doing or doing things.

TT: So you don't think people living right next to drilling sites have any legitimate concerns? Some people in Denton have wells 300 feet from their homes.

Pickens: I'm not going to worry about those people, because you're talking about a handful of people.

TT: Do you think a (fracturing) ban in Denton would affect other towns?

Pickens: If they shut down Denton, Texas, it would mean a lot to those landowners there, but not to anybody else. Can you think, now, how long we've talked about this? We've probably spent more than half of our time here, talking about Denton, Texas, or something like that.

TT: It's one of the biggest stories on my beat.

Pickens: I think our time is best spent on the state of Texas. What do we have to offer that hardly any state in the United States does? It's unbelievable, and we talk about trying to stop it?

Massachusetts town weighs nation's 1st tobacco ban

By Amy Crawford
Associated Press

WESTMINSTER, Mass. — The cartons of Marlboros, cans of Skoal and packs of Swisher Sweets are hard to miss stacked near the entrance of Vincent's Country Store, but maybe not for much longer. All tobacco products could become contraband if local health officials get their way.

This sleepy central Massachusetts town of 7,700 has become an improbable battleground in America's tobacco wars. On Wednesday, the Board of Health will hear public comment on a proposed regulation that could make Westminster the first municipality in the United States to ban sales of all tobacco products within town lines.

"To my knowledge, it would be the first in the nation to enact a total ban," said Thomas Carr, director of national policy at the American Lung Association. "We commend the town for doing it."

Town health agent Elizabeth Swedberg said a ban seemed like a sensible solution to a vexing problem.

"The tobacco companies are really promoting products to hook young people," she said, pointing to 69-cent bubblegum-flavored cigars, electronic cigarettes and a new form of dissolvable smokeless tobacco that resembles Tic Tac candies. "The board was getting frustrated trying to keep up with this."

Citing a report from the U.S. surgeon general, Swedberg said that if tobacco use continues unabated, 5.6 million American children who are younger than 18 today will die prematurely because of smoking. Change, she said, "has to start somewhere."

Brian Vincent would rather it not start with his family-owned grocery on Main Street. Tobacco products, he said, make up more than 5 percent of sales.

A quarter of his customers purchase tobacco, Vincent said, and while they're there, they often pick up a gallon of milk or one of the fresh-baked maple-candied bacon chocolate chip cookies that are displayed by the check-out aisle.

Encouraged by the New England Convenience Store Association, Vincent has been asking customers to sign a petition against the proposal. He has gathered more than 800 signatures so far, and other merchants are on track to deliver hundreds more to town officials this week.

David Sutton, a spokesman for Richmond, Virginia-based Altria Group Inc., owner of the nation's biggest cigarette maker, Philip Morris USA, called the proposal a "bad policy" that will harm local employers.

"We believe businesses should be able to choose which products they carry," Sutton said. "If the ban were to be implemented, adult tobacco and e-vapor consumers could shift their purchases to neighboring stores. The proposed regulations, if enacted, would fundamentally alter these businesses and would likely cost Westminster jobs."

Republicans are at crossroads with Hispanics

■ Data indicates winning a larger number of Hispanics equals wins in some states, but can Republicans follow up in 2016?

Republicans are enjoying a well-deserved victory lap. But when it comes to the touchy subjects of Hispanic outreach and immigration reform, they still seem a tad confused about the road ahead.

Ground zero for this confusion is the Southwest, the region of the country where most Mexicans and Mexican-Americans live. These groups represent about two-thirds of the 54 million Hispanics in the United States, and more than half of the estimated 10 million to 12 million Hispanic voters who are likely to cast ballots in 2016. This subset carries additional weight because — unlike Puerto Ricans and Dominicans who are dependable Democratic voters, and Cuban-Americans and many from Central America who tend to vote Republican — Mexicans and Mexican-Americans are up for grabs. While they still vote nearly 7:1 for Democrats, a trend that continued in the recent midterm elections, they're basically conservative voters who have shown a willingness to cross party lines to support moderate Republicans who make the effort to reach out to them.

RUBEN NAVARRETTE

Washington Post Writers Group

And, in those contests, when Mexicans and Mexican-Americans vote for Republicans in the range of 35 percent to 40 percent, Democrats often lose. Unfortunately for the GOP, this doesn't happen often enough — in large part because of the party's clumsy handling of the immigration issue, which often comes across as anti-Hispanic. Some Republicans recognize this, and they want to make changes. Others stubbornly insist that the party isn't doing anything wrong and resist reaching out to voters who don't typically favor Republicans.

Which brings us to the confusion. The election results didn't do anything to settle the ongoing debate between two factions of the GOP — the one that thinks the party can only survive by bringing in different types of voters, and the other that believes the party will never survive if it waters down its message and abandons its core constituents.

The day before the election, I was speaking to one of the nation's most influential conservative thinkers who happens to live in Colorado. She seemed to be complaining that Rep. Cory Gardner, the Republican Senate candidate who defeated incumbent Democratic Sen. Mark Udall in that state, was not conservative enough. She was especially frustrated that Gardner had spent months playing the Democrats' game of "Hispandering" — reaching out to an ethnic group that accounts for a fifth of Colorado residents. Media reports that surfaced after the election confirmed that Gardner made a significant pitch to Hispanic voters, and he certainly wasn't alone. The Republican National Committee, which sent workers to 11 states with large Hispanic populations, dispatched three full-time Hispanic outreach coordinators to Colorado.

On the other hand, after Gardner's victory, I heard a pair of conservative radio hosts boast that the senator-elect had run a "flawless" campaign with a strategy that should serve as a model for other Republicans going forward. They didn't specifically mention Hispanic outreach but they didn't have to. It was an integral part of the winning strategy.

The same radio hosts also crowed about the runaway re-election victories by two rising stars in the Republican Party: New Mexico Gov. Susana Martinez and Nevada Gov. Brian Sandoval. Martinez beat her Democratic opponent by nearly 15 points, and Sandoval — who earned 70 percent of the vote in his race — walloped his Democratic rival by more than 40 points. Even in states where most Hispanics are registered Democrats, both of these Republicans got more than 40 percent of the Hispanic vote.

But here's where it gets interesting. In the past, both Martinez and Sandoval have openly called for comprehensive immigration reform. In fact, Martinez went so far as to mock Mitt Romney's half-baked suggestion in 2012 that illegal immigrants might "self-deport" if the climate in the United States became inhospitable.

And speaking of Romney, before the election, the former Republican nominee confidently declared that an immigration reform bill was "going to happen" if Republicans captured the Senate. And yet now that the GOP has done just that, conservatives who oppose what the right wing prefers to call "amnesty" insist that the GOP's election victories are a clear mandate against passing such a bill. But, if those voters who support immigration reform put any stock at all in what Romney said, and felt more comfortable voting Republican because of it, the opposite might well be true.

For Republicans, winning races was easy. It's sorting out these contradictions and uniting around common goals that will be difficult.

OUR VIEW

Contested races allows for discussion of important issues

Someone needs to come to the rescue of the Texas Democratic Party. As we write this, we are aware of two points. Texas is a politically conservative state, and there really wasn't a scenario that was going to change that on Election Day. Another GOP sweep was inevitable, and for those keeping track, it has been two decades since a Democrat won a statewide race.

You may be wondering why this matters. Texas residents need the party to matter during election season. This is not because the editorial board or a large percentage of Midlanders care for the policies of the Texas Democratic Party. This community is right of center, and that works for us.

So why does it matter? Midlanders and Texans need to hear more from those running for office, and the weakness of the Texas Democratic Party is preventing that from happening.

Locally, with the exception of justice of the peace Precinct 3, there was not a Democrat to be found on the ballot. There weren't any Democrats running in three of the highest-profile races on the local ballot — U.S. House, state Senate and state House — and therefore there wasn't a need for the GOP representatives to campaign for another term. There was no need for them to take part in debates, no need for them to take questions about what is on their agenda, and no need to be on the record about the big issues of the day.

We have said this many times. Elections aren't about wins and losses as much as about the discussion of issues. There weren't any contested races in Midland with the exception of one school board race.

And statewide, the weakness of the Democratic Party also was on display. Dan Patrick, Texas' next lieutenant governor didn't come to Midland for even one public event on the road to Election Day. We think it is worth repeating that the man who will become arguably the most powerful man in Austin did not go on the record in Midland about how he was going to lead on education, health care, etc. He didn't have to say what he envisioned Kel Seliger's role would be on the Education committee next legislative session. He didn't have to say a word, except for his well-placed 30-second television advertisements.

We hope the Texas Democratic Party finds its identity. We hope the party stops writing off West Texas as a region that doesn't matter. We hope the party uses its influence to help find candidates in regions such as West Texas, so all parties are represented and so we can have real discussions about the future.

Local Democrats must demand that their party field candidates. We believe that Tuesday's turnout wouldn't have been so dismal — 51 percent — if there were more contested races.

The Texas Democratic Party needs to transform itself to what Texans want, not what it sees in its leaders in Washington.

The party can't let its gubernatorial candidate be defined by a social issue such as Wendy Davis was (abortion) and then do nothing while Davis ran such an abysmal campaign. The Texas Democratic Party is hoping to catch lightning in a bottle. It doesn't happen that way. Until the party works for the long term and realizes it must be represented in all of Texas, Election Day will turn into "Groundhog Day," and the same thing will happen over and over again.

And because competition is not only healthy but required for a better place, we hope things change. Our community and state will be better for it.

Politics is about doing what's right

■ Administration may be wishing it had already issued executive action on immigration

Back in July, when President Obama was deciding whether to take executive action on immigration before the midterm elections, I got into one of those cable-news debates that offer the president unsolicited advice from the unqualified.

I argued that the move would boost Hispanic turnout and rally a depressed Democratic base. Yes, it might hurt some vulnerable Democratic candidates, but it would cement Hispanic loyalty to the party in the long run: "It's a question of whose interest is he looking out for?"

My opposite, Bloomberg News' Mark Halperin, countered against "inflaming" the Republican base. "There's almost no competitive races where the Hispanic vote is going to be decisive," he argued, and "there are a lot of Democratic strategists who say, 'This will hurt our chances in the midterms. Why not wait until November to do it?'"

"So," asked the host, "why are they even considering it?"

Replied Halperin: "My sources and I, we can't figure it out."

Maybe they can now. The president declined to act on immigration before the election. But all the Democratic Senate incumbents in red states whom he was trying to protect lost anyway. There's evidence that the combination of low Hispanic turnout and lower Hispanic margins for Democrats doomed some Democratic candidates, including Charlie Crist, who lost his gubernatorial race in Florida, and perhaps Sen. Mark Udall, who lost his re-election bid in Colorado.

Worse, the fading ardor Latinos showed for Democrats raises the possibility that this reliable constituency — crucial to the party's prospects in 2016 and beyond — is slipping away. Now Obama, to avoid even more trouble with Latinos, has vowed to take unilateral action on immigration by year-end, even though GOP leaders say that will "poison the well" with the congressional majority. As the NBC News political team speculated: "Given the current situation, we think the White House wishes it went ahead and issued that executive action back in the summer."

There is a lesson here that goes beyond immigration: Obama would have been better off if he had done what he thought was right and let the politics take care of themselves. When Halperin, co-author of the best-seller "Game Change," and Democrat strategists called for postponing executive action, they were looking at politics as a game, moving pieces to maximize numbers after the next election. But politics is not just always a game of winning the next election. It's about doing, as Obama belatedly remembered Wednesday, "what I think is best for the country."

Instead, his political calculation turned out to be too clever by half, and he wound up setting back a worthy cause without helping Democrats at the polls. "You repress the vote in the Latino community and what did you come up with?" Rep. Luis Guterrez, D-Ill., asked rhetorically during a news conference in Chicago on Wednesday, according to an account in Politico. He called the loss an "indication about what happens when you try to toy with your principles and your beliefs."

In Florida, the Hispanic share of voters dropped to 13 percent from 17 percent two years ago. Because Latinos favored Crist over Republican Gov. Rick Scott by 20 percentage points, that was likely enough to cost Crist victory in a close race.

In Colorado, where Republican Sen.-elect Cory Gardner made a big play for Latino votes and Democratic incumbent Udall did little until the last minute, a Wall Street Journal analysis found that of the 21 counties in the state where Hispanics are at least one-fifth of the electorate, in 20 of them Gardner did better than the 2010 Republican Senate nominee. That year, Latino voters were credited with Democratic Sen. Michael Bennet's narrow win in the state.

Nationally, Hispanic turnout slipped to 8 percent of the electorate from 10 percent in 2012 and level with 2010, despite the exploding Latino population. Democrats got 62 percent of the Hispanic vote, better than a dreadful 2010 showing but well below the 71 percent Obama got in 2012. In the Texas governor's race, Republican Greg Abbott got 44 percent of the Hispanic vote, and in the Georgia governor's race, Republican Nathan Deal got 47 percent. In Kansas, Republican Gov. Sam Brownback won the Latino vote, 47 percent to 46 percent, exit polls show.

This doesn't necessarily mean that Obama's delayed action on immigration caused Democrats' problems with Latinos, nor does it mean Tuesday's results would have been dramatically different if he had acted sooner. But it does make a case for worrying more about what's right than what's expedient.

GOP's midterm rout shapes 2016 presidential race

By Ken Thomas and Steve Peoples
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The 2016 presidential race was about the new Republican-controlled Congress even before the polls closed Tuesday night.

As the GOP rout became clear late on election night, would-be Democratic front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton found herself with a ready-made foil in the Republican-led Congress that begins next year just as a few high-profile senators seized on their new status as a springboard into 2016.

Some Republican governors already have begun to try to distance themselves from unpopular congressional leaders in both parties.

"I think governors make much better presidents than members of Congress," said Gov. Scott Walker, R-Wis., who just won his third election in four years and is contemplating a presidential bid.

Republicans are facing their most unpredictable presidential primary campaign in a generation, while Clinton remains the overwhelming favorite for Democrats who are reeling from heavy losses in last week's midterm elections.

Republicans successfully tied Democratic candidates to President Barack Obama at every turn, winning Senate races in Colorado, Iowa and North Carolina, usually competitive states in presidential elections. Even before polls closed, ambitious GOP began casting Democrats' struggles as a referendum on Clinton as well as Obama.

"In many ways, she was the big loser on Tuesday because she embodies everything that's wrong with Washington," Walker told NBC's "Meet The Press" on Sunday, echoing the attacks of his ambitious GOP colleagues in recent days.

As many as a dozen Republicans are considering presidential runs after a dominant midterm performance that many consider the first step in retaking the White House.

Strategists report an early burst of activity among prospective candidates, who are taking initial steps to create super political action committees and nonprofit organizations that would allow them to begin raising campaign money even before they announce their intentions.

While it wasn't technically a campaign ad, the 2016 primary season saw its first television special over the weekend.

An hourlong documentary featuring retired brain surgeon Ben Carson, a conservative favorite little known on the national stage, ran in more than two dozen states Saturday and Sunday. The program, which likens Carson to former President Ronald Reagan at times, was produced by Carson's business manager, Armstrong Williams, who noted that Carson didn't pay for the nationwide run that included states such as Iowa, South Carolina and Ohio.

"Make no mistake, he's seriously thinking about running," Armstrong said.

Also thinking of running are at least three first-term senators who will begin next year in the Senate majority: Sens. Marco Rubio of Florida, Ted Cruz of Texas and Rand Paul of Kentucky. Some have adopted a bipartisan tone in the midterm's aftermath, although the likelihood of continued Washington gridlock poses political risks for the trio as Congress' approval ratings hover near all-time lows.

"I want to get things done," Paul told The Associated Press in an interview, although he was among the first to attack Clinton last week, casting his party's midterm success as a referendum on Clinton as much as Obama.

Paul planned to meet with advisers this coming week to map out his plans for the next few months. He insists he will not make a final decision about the 2016 presidential contest until next spring.

"There's a lot of personal gnashing of teeth with family trying to decide if we're willing to go through this," Paul said.

The primary season takes another big step forward later this month when the Republican Governors Association meets to elect a new chairman in Florida.

All eyes will be on Walker, with the outgoing chairman, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, passing the reins to another ambitious governor.

'Mama' entertains crowd for fundraiser

By Marilyn Harrison

The actress known as "Mama" to millions of TV viewers recently entertained a crowd of breast cancer survivors and other guests with stories of her years in show business. Vicki Lawrence was the featured speaker at the eighth annual Pink the Basin Luncheon Oct. 30 at the Horseshoe.

The former Miss Fireball of Inglewood, California, related how she and Carol Burnett met in 1966 at a firefighters' pageant and then developed a close friendship after she was chosen to appear on "The Carol Burnett Show."

A reporter wrote that Lawrence bore a striking resemblance to Burnett, and at her mother's insistence, the younger woman sent the newspaper article to the comedian. Burnett appeared at the pageant and met her look-alike. At that time, she was looking for an actress to play her younger sister on her upcoming show, and after several auditions, Lawrence got the part. She said that being mentored by both Burnett and fellow cast member Harvey Korman was much like being a student at the "Harvard School of Comedy."

Her portrayal of Mama on the show led to the spin-off "Mama's Family." In addition, she reprised the Mama character on stage in "Vicki Lawrence and Mama: A Two-Woman Show."

Lawrence said that although she and her close friends have not been affected by breast cancer, she was glad to be able to share her story.

Her talk, titled "Life Is Much Too Serious To Be Taken Seriously," was preceded by a style show featuring fashions from Julian

HALEY RECEPTION

One of the most enjoyable parties of the fall season is the opening reception at the Haley Memorial Library & History Center for the Art Show and Sale of new works by four Midland artists, who are known collectively as the Southwest Impressionists. They are Don L. Parks, Charles N. Pruitt, Mary Rasmussen and Doris Spires.

Guests at the Oct. 28 event enjoyed wine and hors d'oeuvres while viewing the artwork.

The high point of the evening occurred when a raffle of four paintings donated by the artists to benefit the library took place. The winners were Virginia Jones, of the Spires painting; Doris Graham, the Pruitt painting; Tom Moore, the Parks painting; and Mary Lynn Parsley, the Rasmussen painting.

Among others seen at the event were Sharon Yeager, Debbie and Mike Hedrick, Penny and Ernest Angelo, Dolores and Al Walvoord, Jheri and Bill Rutter, Jean Kiker, Elaine Gist and her son, John; Dorothy and Jim Morning, Carolyn and Dale Stice, Mary and Bob Beck, Georgia and Carroll Thomas, Norma McGrew and Ann Hathaway.

The show, which is open to the public, continues through Friday. The library is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

STUDIO TOUR SPONSOR EVENTS

The Arts Council of Midland held two sponsor events before its sixth annual Artist Studio Tour on Nov. 1.

Sponsors were invited to meet and visit with the artists Oct. 30 at the new ACM Art Center 1506 W. Illinois Ave. Each artist was asked to bring a piece of art for display at the center offices and studios.

Among the sponsors seen at the event were the Apache Corp. group, including Rosie and Ken Neupert and Lucien Wray; Midland College Foundation group, including executive director Kathy Fletcher, Nick Elderkin, Terry Gilmour and J. Don Wallace; Joanie Holt, Kay Arrell, Anne Bates, Elaine Barnes, Melissa and Sandy Beach, Cheri and Scott Jones and Carol and John Kullman.

Also present were Artist Studio Tour co-chairs Lisa Gandy and Stephanie Rivas and ACM's executive director Danny Holeva. Chef Timm and Taste of 508 catered the event.

On the day of the tour, the sponsors were invited for Muffins & Mimosas at the center. They visited with and viewed the creative work of the five artists at the Art Center — photographer Matt Lankes of Austin; jeweler and painter Sonya Haynie of Odessa; bronze sculptor Jammy Huggins of Seminole; painter

Brad Allen King of Midland; and ceramicist Karen Hembre of Odessa.

Those seen in the crowd were Kathy and Mike Grella, Dr. Mark Cox, Bryan Riggs and Teresa and Paul Cain.

Muffins & Mimosas co-chairs were Carol Kullman and Carla Holeva.

Sixty artists participated in the tour at nine different locations throughout Midland.

GROUP CELEBRATES CHARTER

The Midland/Permian Basin Chapter of ARMA (The Association of Records Managers and Administrators) recently celebrated the 20th anniversary of receiving its charter with a luncheon at the offices of Concho Resources.

The chapter, which was chartered on April 12, 1994, was the first to be selected "Small Chapter of the Year" for three consecutive years, beginning in 1994, and was the first to win the "Special Project" award in 2003 and again in 2006.

Scrapbooks, documents and awards were on display. A congratulatory cake was provided by the Stubbeman, Browder, Sealy and Laughlin law firm and Concho supplied lunch.

Among those in attendance were charter members Lyn Miller, Peggy Brown, Cynthia Mayes and Kate Bushong; former members Colleen Michel, Colleen Grandmason and Emma Terry; and current board members Michelle McCollum, Felicia Stacy and Sonja Lowery.

In honor of the milestone, the chapter received a plaque from Mary Beth Hames, director of the Southwest Region.

CHI OMEGA ALUM

The Midland Chi Omega Alumnae recently met at the home of Audrey L. Curry. Pat Paxton Larson, who is moving to Houston, was given a fond farewell by the other alums.

Following lunch, the women gathered in a large circle to sing "Shades," a favorite song that is shared on special occasions.

During the business meeting, Sonia Ford, president, read a note of thanks to the group from a scholarship recipient.

HIGH SCHOOL REUNION

The year was 1954: post-war, post-depression, the world's strongest military power, a booming economy. It's the year I graduated from El Dorado (Kansas) High School. It was a good time, and later was referred to as the "Fabulous Fifties" or the "Happy Days" decade. The voices of Doris Day, Frank Sinatra, Patti Page and Bobby Darin could be heard singing the hits of the day. Families flocked to the movies (pre-television for most of them) to see Oscar winners such as "White Christmas," "Sabrina" and "Dial M for Murder." And those of a certain age might recall reading such bestsellers as "Not As a Stranger," "Love Is Eternal" or perhaps "No Time for Sergeants."

Most of the class were born the same year as such famous folks as Pope Francis, John McCain, Mary Tyler Moore, Robert Redford, Burt Reynolds and the late, great basketball player, Wilt Chamberlain.

My classmates and I recently gathered in the heartland of America to recall those good ol' days. Much-needed rain spoiled our chance to see the fighting El Dorado Wildcats play in the new state-of-the-art sports facility, but the tailgate party at reunion headquarters allowed for more quality time spent with one another. There was some free time, which class members devoted to sightseeing in the town of population 13,000, and just hanging out together.

I love those random memories of our school days that make me smile no matter what currently is going on in my life. We can't have the old days back, but we do have those memories with us forever. For those reasons, if you have a high school class reunion coming up this year or anytime in the coming years, I strongly urge you to attend. You'll be glad you did.

Local group tours New England

Midlanders Carla McCarty, Phil and Jenny Ebensberger, Kathy Anderson, Marilyn Mathis, Jay Anderson and Justin Anderson recently visited New England to view the fall foliage and visit well-known sites. The trip — organized by Bilberry Tours of Abilene — included stops at the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum, the USS Constitution, Bunker Hill and the site of the Boston Tea Party, all in Massachusetts; the Trapp Family Lodge in Stowe, Vermont; and a Lake Champlain cruise aboard the Spirit of Ethan Allen III. They also visited poet Robert Frost's grave in Burlington, Vermont, and the Bennington (Vermont) Museum, which houses works and memorabilia of Grandma Moses. To see the fall colors, the group traveled across the White, Hogback and Green mountains, the Molly Stark Byway and Kancamagus Pass. Submitted by Phil Ebensberger

No. 5 TCU makes strong playoff statement

LM Otero/AP

Kansas State quarterback Jake Waters (15) is sacked by TCU defensive end James McFarland (40) during the first quarter of Saturday's game in Fort Worth.

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Trevone Boykin and No. 5 TCU have gotten through what should be the hardest part on the field. At least until bowl season.

After four victories over ranked teams in six weeks, the latest a 41-20 drubbing of Big 12-leading Kansas State, the Horned Frogs (8-1, 5-1 Big 12) have made a strong case for one of the four spots in college football's new playoff. Three regular-season games remain, none against teams with a winning record.

TCU coach Gary Patterson was asked the same thing in different ways late Saturday night after a win over his alma mater. He kept responding the same way about where the Horned Frogs stand and if his players will be able to handle it.

"If they can't see what's in front of them, what they're going to do and how they got to do it, then I can't help them," Patterson said. "You have everything in front of you. OK? ... We've now put it there where we have more offense and doing some things we need to do, and here you go."

The Frogs were sixth in the College Football Playoff rankings before dual-threat junior quarterback Boykin ran for 123 yards with three touchdowns and passed for 219 yards and another score to end Kansas State's five-game winning streak. That put TCU in a three-way tie atop the Big 12 standings with the Wildcats (7-2, 5-1) and Baylor (8-1, 5-1), the team responsible for the Frogs' only loss.

TCU was up one spot in the new AP poll Sunday, just ahead of Baylor after the Bears' four-spot jump to sixth. Kansas State was down from ninth to 13th.

Auburn slipped from third to ninth in the AP poll after losing at home to Texas A&M. The Tigers will also surely fall from their No. 3 spot and K-State from seventh in the new playoff rankings Tuesday night.

Baylor, 12th in the playoff rankings, won 48-14 Saturday at Oklahoma, which fell from 16th to out

Cowboys blowout Jags to snap 2-game skid

By Chris Lehourites
Associated Press

LONDON — Boosted by Tony Romo's return, America's Team became an international success.

Sidelined for one week because of a back injury, the Dallas Cowboys quarterback started in the team's first regular-season game outside the United States, throwing three touchdown passes Sunday in a 31-17 win over the Jacksonville Jaguars.

"We had to win this game," Romo said. Romo originally was hurt two weeks ago, fracturing two small bones in his back. He started in London to help the Cowboys (7-3) snap a two-game losing streak.

Romo completed 20 of 27 passes for 246 yards against the Jaguars (1-9) and finished with a season-high passer rating of 138.8.

The game was played at Wembley Stadium, the home of England's national soccer team. It was the last of three regular-season NFL games this year in the British capital.

The Cowboys have played outside the United States 10 times, but this was the first game that actually affected their

Newman's late pass dooms Gordon at Phoenix

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

AVONDALE, Ariz. — Kevin Harvick dominated a race he had to win to advance to the final round of NASCAR's playoffs, while Jeff Gordon was knocked out when Ryan Newman completed a last-lap pass.

Harvick led 264 laps at Phoenix International Raceway on Sunday to earn an automatic spot next week in the four-man Chase field in the finale at Homestead. He has the Phoenix fall race three years in a row, also won at the track in March and has a record six victories on the mile oval.

Now he takes Stewart-Haas Racing into the championship race next Sunday at Homestead-Miami Speedway, where the four championship contenders will all be seeking their first Sprint Cup title. Harvick came into Sunday ranked eighth in the eight-driver Chase field.

"Wow, I guess that's what it feels like to hit a walkoff in the extra innings," Harvick said.

Gordon finished second, but lost his bid for a fifth Sprint Cup championship when Newman knocked Kyle Larson into the wall on the final lap to finish 11th — and one point ahead of Gordon.

Denny Hamlin, the points leader after finishing fifth, and Joey Logano also advanced. The title will be decided by finishing order among the final four at Homestead.

Failing to advance with Gordon were Brad Keselowski, Matt Kenseth and Carl Edwards.

Logano finished third, Keselowski was fourth and Edwards 15th.

Newman's move on Larson in the final turn made for a stunning shakeup in the points. Winless on the season, his first with Richard Childress Racing, he was aggressive with his pass of Larson to knock Gordon out of the finale.

"I didn't take him out," Newman said. "In a day or two, he'll understand. It's hard to rationalize that, but

OILERS 3 RANGERS 1

NEW YORK — Benoit Pouliot scored the go-ahead goal against his former team midway through the second period and backup Viktor Fasth made 20 saves as the Edmonton Oilers beat the New York Rangers 3-1 on Sunday night. Pouliot got his second goal of the season off a nifty pass from linemate Ryan Nugent-Hopkins at 8:29 of the middle period to put the Oilers ahead 2-1. Pouliot was a key member of the Rangers as they reached the Stanley Cup finals last spring before he signed a five-year, $20-million deal with Edmonton in July. Nugent-Hopkins opened the scoring at 3:19 of the first with his team-leading fifth of the season. Carl Hagelin tied it for the Rangers with 7:26 remaining in the period with his fourth goal. Teddy Purcell's empty-net goal at 1:27 remaining in the game sealed the Oilers' second straight win.

The Rangers lost their second straight. LIGHTNING 4 RED WINGS 3, 90 DETROIT — Steven Stamkos scored twice and Ryan Callahan had the lone shootout goal to lift Tampa Bay to a 4-3 win over Detroit for the Lightning's sixth straight victory. Callahan deked right and got the puck past Red Wings goalie Jimmy Howard to seal the victory, the first during the streak that required extra play. Ben Bishop stopped all three shots he faced during the shootout and made 17 saves to secure his ninth victory of the season. Howard had 27 saves. Detroit trailed 3-2 at the end of the second period thanks to Darren Helm's slap shot goal and Gustav Nyquist tied the game midway through the third with his team-best eighth

MAPLE LEAFS 5 SENATORS 3

OTTAWA — Peter Holland had a goal and an assist as the Toronto Maple Leafs erased a one-goal deficit three times in a 5-3 victory over the Ottawa Senators on Sunday night. James van Riemsdyk, Mike Santorelli, Josh Leivo and David Clarkson also scored for the Maple Leafs, and James Reimer stopped 39 shots. Clarkson had the only goal of the third period and gave Toronto its two-goal lead with 14 minutes to play. Mike Hoffman, Kyle Turris and Mark Stone scored for the Senators, who lost for the first time in regulation at home this season, dropping to 4-1-3 at Canadian Tire Centre.

Although he allowed five goals on 30 shots, Robin Lehner made some brilliant saves including one on Phil Kessel in the third when, while on his stomach, he reached out with his stick to swipe the puck away just before it crossed the goal line. BLACKHAWKS 5 SHARKS 2 CHICAGO — Defense-men Trevor van Riemsdyk, Brent Seabrook and Niklas Hjalmarsson scored in the first period, and the Chicago Blackhawks beat the San Jose Sharks 5-2 on Sunday night. Bryan Bickel added a big goal in the third as the Blackhawks stopped a three-game home losing streak. Corey Crawford made 32 saves, including a nice stop on Patrick Marleau with Chicago nursing a one-goal lead with 7:30 left.

I did what I had to do. I don't like racing that way." Gordon, a four-time winner this season and the points leader for most of the year, was denied a chance to race for his fifth title. "I'm disappointed, I thought if we came out of here second, even if it was to Kevin or Brad, I thought we'd still make it in," Gordon said. "That's pretty disappointing to do all of that and it just makes last week that much more disappointing. I'm going to be thinking about that one for a while."

Newman for doing what he had to do to get into the finale.

"That's the system we have," Gordon said. It was a devastating blow for Keselowski, who leads the series this season with six wins and won a race in each of the first two rounds of the Chase. But he fell into a hole because of a mechanical problem at Martinsville in the first event of this three-race round that he couldn't recover from despite strong finishes at Texas and Phoenix. His mettle was definitely tested, too, as his aggressive driving style angered his competitors and led to two fights in four races. He was fined $50,000 for his post-race behavior at Charlotte last month — actions that caused Kenseth to jump him from behind in the garage — and he and Gordon were both bloodied when the drivers and the teams brawled on pit road after last week's race at Texas. "We gave it all we had, it was a strong run, it just wasn't enough to advance," Keselowski said.

"We did everything but win. We broke down in Martinsville and it was a huge hurdle to overcome and it was probably going to take a win. Fourth wasn't going to be enough, and we knew that coming in." Hamlin, who came to Phoenix tied with Logano for the points lead, won the pole and needed only to finish 11th or better to guarantee himself a spot in the finale. But a broken valve stem caused his right rear tire to go flat under caution immediately after the first round of pit stops. Hamlin had to pit a second time, went from fourth to 35th on the restart, and sounded panicky as he struggled to regain his lost positions. "I'm trying, man, I'm trying," he radioed. "Ten-4 buddy, you don't have to get it all back this run," crew chief Darian Grubb replied. He went a lap down with 236 laps remaining in the race.

Logano took a hit when he was penalized for pulling out of his pit stall with the fuel can still attached to his car. He went from second to 26th on a restart with 185 laps remaining. "We'll recover from this," crew chief Todd Gordon said. It put him and Hamlin in the middle of the pack at the same time, and the two waged a furious battle to put themselves in position to be the driver to earn a free pass back onto the lead lap. Hamlin aggressively went three-wide on a restart to pass Logano and take the position, but Logano eventually passed him and was rewarded when the caution came out with 111 laps remaining. Both drivers battled back from a lap down twice and now cruise into Homestead with a title in reach. "I'm playing with house money now," Hamlin said.

HSBC CHAMPIONS: At Shanghai, Bubba Watson won his first World Golf Championship with a stunning turn-around Sunday when he holed a bunker shot for eagle on the 18th hole to get into a playoff, and made a 20-foot birdie putt to beat Tim Clark in the HSBC Champions.

Watson had a two-shot lead with three holes to play until he appeared to throw it all away. He missed the 16th green with a lob wedge and made bogey, and then took two shots to get out of a bunker on the par-3 17th and made double bogey to fall one shot behind a five-way tie for the lead.

Clark was the only player from the five-way tie to join Watson at 11-under 277. He laid up on the 18th and hit wedge to 5 feet for birdie and a 69. In the playoff, his wedge was to the right edge of the green about 25 feet away. The putt was on line, but short.

Couple's pregnancy is no business of critical friend

DEAR ABBY: May I have some advice about a touchy subject? One of my boyfriend's close friends is going through his third bout with cancer and the prognosis is not good. He is married with a healthy 3-year-old son. So imagine our surprise when his wife announced she's pregnant.

This is a decision we do not support. I don't know what they're thinking, but if you are facing the reality that your spouse will not be around much longer, we don't feel it is wise to bring another child into the world who will never know his or her father.

Some of her close friends want to throw her a "sprinkle," and although I am only an acquaintance, I have been invited. How do I handle this? Should I attend and keep my thoughts to myself, decline and/or send a small gift in my absence? I have a hard time making small talk about subjects I don't agree with.

Did I mention she does nothing but complain about how hard her life is now? I'm afraid if I go and get involved, I'll be on the hook down the road when she wants to complain about how hard it is to raise two children alone. — ISN'T MY CHOICE

DEAR ISN'T: Feeling as you do, decline the invitation.

This woman needs friends around her during this painful and traumatic time, and you do not qualify. To send a small gift would be both thoughtful and kind, because I am sure her life is extremely difficult now.

As to this couple having made a decision with which you do not agree, allow me to point out that not all pregnancies are planned, and this may be one of them.

DEAR ABBY: My folks are in their mid-70s and have health problems. My oldest niece, "Riley," will graduate from high school next spring and is considering going to a college near them. My parents recently told me that my brother is suggesting Riley move in with them.

The girl has some behavioral issues and is in counseling. She's not an easy, happy or normal kid. My parents are extremely uncomfortable with the idea, but have not said anything to my brother. I think they are afraid of a fight or causing hurt feelings. He is in denial about his daughter's problems.

I'm concerned about my parents. At their age, I don't think it's fair to expect them to have another teenager in their home, much less one with issues. Is it my place to say something, and if so, what do I say? — LOOKING OUT FOR MOM AND DAD

DEAR LOOKING OUT: You should definitely say something, but not to your brother. Talk with your parents. Remind them that if they're not OK with the arrangement your brother has proposed, it's their responsibility to make plain that because of their ages and their health problems they'll be unable to accommodate his request. Because it's the truth, it shouldn't cause an argument or hurt feelings. Also, your brother will have plenty of advance notice that other living arrangements will have to be made for Riley.

Bidding Quiz

Q 1 — Neither vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ A ♠ A K Q J 10 7 6 5 ♣ A K 8

The bidding:

NORTH EAST SOUTH WEST

2♠ Pass ?

*Weak two-bid, six diamonds, 6-11 points

What call would you make?

A — It is reasonable to hope that partner can hold your diamond losers to one and provide a discard for your low club, or he might even have the queen of clubs. Bid six hearts.

Q 2 — North-South vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ J 3 ♠ K 8 3 2 ♣ K 8 4 3 2 ♣ 10 3

The bidding:

NORTH EAST SOUTH WEST

1♣ Dbl ?

What call would you make?

A — Unless you have a hand suitable for a re-double, you should usually ignore the double and make your normal bid, as though right-hand opponent passed. Bid one diamond.

Q 3 — East-West vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ Q 8 6 5 4 ♠ 9 8 5 6 3 2 ♣ 8 4

Partner opens one no-trump and right-hand opponent passes. What call would you make?

A — You want to play this hand in spades. Your hand might be useless in a no-trump contract, but could well be worth two or three tricks in spades. Should you play transfers, bid two hearts. Otherwise, bid two spades.

Q 4 — Both vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠ A J 9 ♠ A Q J 10 7 5 3 ♣ A 5 ♣ K

As dealer, what call would you make?

A — To consider opening two clubs, the king of clubs should be located in another suit. Open one heart.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, Nov. 10, 2014:

This year you develop a propensity for clarity. Know that others might react strongly to your questions, as they won't be accustomed to revealing so much. Be as diplomatic as possible. If you are single, a relationship could be the result of a heated argument between you and someone else. The chemistry will be overwhelming. If you are attached, understand that your significant other might choose to distance him- or herself rather than becoming involved in a negative conversation. CANCER feels like you do, but he or she can express his or her feelings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★★ You'll ease into a seemingly carefree Monday morning. By midday, you could notice a change in a key person's demeanor. You know how to handle this person, but he or she also knows how to handle you. The trick will be how to avoid a power play. Tonight: Try to relax.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ Your finances continue to be a main priority. How you see a personal matter could change quickly because of an unexpected choice and discussion. This new perspective will lead to more empathy between you and someone else. Tonight: Catch up on a friend's news.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★ You might want to be more circumspect with your budget, as you never really know when there could be a problem. You have a habit of overindulging if you are not careful. Understand what is happening within your immediate circle. Tonight: Pay the bills, then decide.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★★ Defer to others. You might want to assume control, but allowing others to try out their ideas will benefit everyone. It is likely that you'll need to keep some distance from someone who is quite controlling. Tonight: On center stage.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★★ You seem to be pushing past your normal limits. You know what you are capable of, and you will be able to do whatever it takes to get there. You could be amazed by what you can accomplish and by how good you feel expressing your talents. Tonight: Do a vanishing act.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★★ Know when to turn your back on a situation that no longer appeals to you. Understand what could happen if you become too involved and others start reacting. Stay as neutral as possible, and strive for a positive outcome. Tonight: Not everything has to be public knowledge.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★★ Be aware of your options when dealing with others who aren't always as easygoing as you are. Honor a change within a relationship. The other party could be quite different from you and might have different interests. Be smart. Give this person some space. Tonight: On a roll.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★★ Allow yourself to see someone in his or her element. As a result, you might realize how unclear you have been about this individual. He or she could demonstrate a romantic quality, which will add excitement to your interactions. Tonight: Hang out with a favorite person.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★★ You would be wise to encourage others to express their feelings and ideas. You will get a better idea of what you are working with. Keep an eye on a situation to which other parties seem to be adding more emotional significance. Tonight: Be aware of a potential misunderstanding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★★ You might seem strange to many people. Perhaps the reason has to do with them witnessing you transform in a very distinct way. In a sense, they might feel insecure dealing with such a changeable powerhouse. Make the first move. Tonight: Clear out some paperwork.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★★ You can be nurturing, but it is more by choice than an automatic response. You might feel frustrated by everything you need to accomplish. You could be more on edge than you realize. Do not suppress your instincts — deal with them. Tonight: Know when to call it a night.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★★ Your creativity seems to be emerging to an unprecedented level. Be aware that even after you come up with a practical path, others might not be in agreement. Be gracious. It is not always easy to eat crow. Tonight: Let your imagination design the night.
