Tornadoes' toll rises

Grim search continues; thousands homeless

ANDOVER, Kan. — Like blows from a scythe, more than 70 tornadoes slashed through seven states Friday night, killing at least 29 people, including 17 or more in this small town on the Kansas prairie ringed by horse farms and wheat fields.

The authorities said that they expected the toll to mount as the digging-out continued, and that thousands of people had been left homeless, 1,500 of them in Andover alone.

Besides Kansas, where one of half a dozen major twisters tore 40 miles from the town of Clearwater to El Dorado in the south-central part of the state, tornadoes touched down in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa.

Many had spun off from the major storms throughout the seven states.

In Wichita, Kan., hospital officials confirmed at least five deaths, as well as two in separate communities southeast of Wichita. Twisters killed another three people across the state line in northern Oklahoma.

One tornado left cars "rolled up like little balls" in the community of Copan, Okla., just south of the Kansas border, said Larry Topping, the fire chief in Bartlesville.

Several tornadoes also touched down in southeast Nebraska, damaging at least 11 houses.

Hail the size of golf balls pummeled parts of Arkansas, knocking out power to thousands of homes and businesses.

ZAKHO, Iraq — The first 250 Kurdish refugees moved into a new U.S.-built camp on Saturday, and U.S. officials expressed hopes that others could soon be coaxed into returning to their homeland in northern Iraq. The first arrivals, all able-bodied men, were brought by helicopter to the new camp outside Zakho from the sprawling, squalid settlement of Isikveren high in the mountains spanning the Turkish-Iraqi border./9A

LIMA, Peru — A cholera epidemic that has killed 1,500 people is spreading through South America, and doctors say it may take tens of thousands more lives. "It is very difficult to imagine it ending soon."/7A

King for a day

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Stephen King set aside his horror at the recent antics of rabid admirers and came to face his No. 1 fan — all 3,000 of them. King read from a forthcoming novel and answered questions from eager fans in an appearance Friday to benefit Syracuse University's creative writing program. He came on stage to a standing ovation, camera flashes and howls of delight from fans who paid as much as $35 for a seat. King has had his own troubles with readers recently, and in his appearance at Syracuse's historic Landmark Theater, he talked of the pluses and minuses of his popularity. "I've made millions," he said, but popularity has made him "a lightning rod for crazy people. I had one drop by to visit my wife last week." King said he had to increase security at his home in Bangor, Maine, after a San Antonio man was arrested in the house March 20.

Midlanders roll up sleeves to put Christmas in April

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

When summer passes and there is a nip in the air this Christmas, Doris Snodgrass will remember a warm day in April when she was given a gift too big to fit under any tree.

"My grandson and I will be warm this Christmas," Ms. Snodgrass said, smiling as members of Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity swarmed over her frame house at 504 E. Daoka in south Midland.

"The doors and windows have been so drafty. It gets cold in the winter," the 69-year-old woman said. "And I live on a fixed income. There is nothing left after I pay the bills. I could never have done this myself. My income just wouldn't allow it."

Even as she spoke, the weathered and ruined door frame was being torn away from beams of her front door, and volunteers in the yard were preparing a new door to be mounted when the frame was rebuilt.

Women and children painted eaves, kitchen cabinets and the kitchen ceiling as the tiny woman surveyed the flurry of activity from a sofa in the living room.

"We've been out here since about 8 a.m.," said church member Niran Kellogg, one of the thousands of volunteers who participated in Midland's Christmas in April project.

The scene at Ms. Snodgrass' house was repeated at about 250 other homes in Midland.

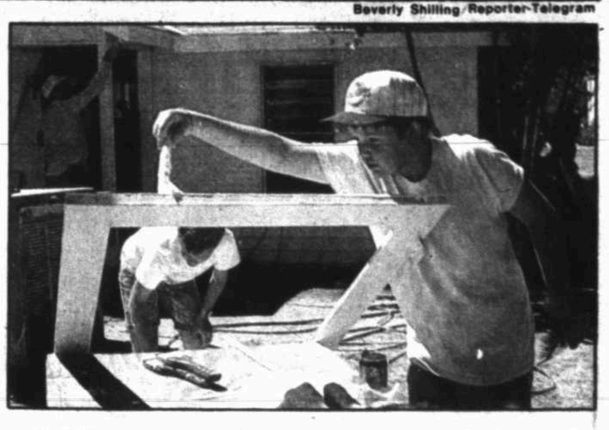

Some houses needed minor repairs while others required extensive overhauls. Bobby Trimble, Christmas in April president, said he expected

Health costs put squeeze on millions

By Tamar Lewin
N.Y. Times News Service

Long a gnawing worry of the poor, medical expenses and health insurance are now a source of mounting anxiety for millions of middle-class Americans — healthy or sick, insured or not.

For a growing number of people, insurance status has become the pivotal factor in important personal decisions, trapping some people in jobs they do not want and forcing others to forgo needed medical care.

One spreading phenomenon is known as "job-lock" — fear of changing jobs because of a medical history that, in today's more stringent insurance market, would probably prevent a worker's acceptance by a new health plan. Cancer patients or those with chronic diseases are most vulnerable.

Anna Wu Work, 36, a molecular biologist, says it is only her health coverage that keeps her working full time as a researcher at the City of Hope National Medical Center in Duarte, Calif., when she would rather spend more time with her daughters, Elizabeth, 4, and Kelsey,

'Killer' bees: Texans face stinging fears

ALAMO (AP) — New signs posted at the otherwise tranquil Santa Ana National Wildlife Refuge give hikers and bird watchers something new to worry about among the thick vegetation: "Bee Aware. This is an African Bee Area."

A swarm of Africanized "killer" bees captured just outside the refuge two weeks ago confirmed the onset of a spring invasion from Mexico. It ushered in a new, unwelcome era in South Texas.

Tall City's tabloid space-ball mystery takes twist

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Despite reports to the contrary, space balls have not been landing in Midland.

At least that's the word from Jerri Betz, who supposedly found a 25-pound alien orb in her Midland vegetable garden.

Although she denies ever setting foot in the Tall City, she doesn't deny finding the mystery ball. And the Florida Times-Union and Jacksonville Journal newspapers back up her story.

"I really felt that it was something that belonged to the government that was so highly classified that they couldn't reclaim it," said Ms. Betz, a real estate developer in Jacksonville, Fla.

According to a March edition of the Weekly World news, a Florida-based supermarket tabloid, Ms. Betz and her son Terry found the shiny metal sphere in their Midland garden within the past six months.

Ms. Betz says her son found the ball, but nowhere near Midland. And a lot longer than six months ago.

That would explain why recent attempts by the Midland Reporter-Telegram and the syndicated news show "Hard Copy" to locate the Betzes locally have met with failure.

Both the newspaper and the television show responded to the Weekly World News article with stories about Midland's apparent attraction for balls of unknown origin.

A "Hard Copy" film crew was in Midland on April 5 trying to track down the Betzes, to no avail. Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas, interviewed extensively for the space-ball segment, could offer no explanation of the Weekly World News story.

The "Hard Copy" crew left without cracking the space-ball mystery, concluding that the tabloid article was nothing more than a hoax.

TWISTERS: Crews carefully moved wreckage from the trailor park flew over Andover in a helicopter, issued a state disaster declaration, the first step in getting federal assistance for the stricken areas.

"What I saw made me heartsick," she said. "The devastation is more widespread than I had anticipated. The suffering must be intense."

A tornado tossed a hospital wing about 60 yards across McConnell Air Force Base outside Wichita and blew apart the base legal office.

The Pentagon said 13 people were injured, but did not say how seriously, and added that about 100 family housing units, the hospital, gymnasium and child-care center were destroyed.

Kansas lawmakers evacuated the Capitol before tornadoes hit Topeka. The Kansas House ended its session in the middle of a debate and fled the building when a tornado touched down in the northeast part of the city Friday night. No damage or injuries were reported.

In this town of 5,000 people, residents began mourning their dead and repairing their lives Saturday.

Mark Gauld, his wife and their two small daughters rode out the tornado in the corner of a small storm cellar on their horse farm just outside of town.

The wind peeled off the roof of the shelter, hoisting it into the dark, thick air. Then a blast of dirt and water poured in on the family.

"It sounded like a freight train on top of you," Gauld said Saturday. "In probably 30 seconds it was over, but it was the longest 30 seconds of my life."

Mayor Jack Finlayson of Andover said there was a warning 20 to 30 minutes before the tornado hit. Vehicles with public address systems drove through the town and the trailer park, issuing warnings.

By 3:30 p.m. Saturday, search operations were suspended for the day and residents were told they could return to the park, under strict orders to search only the immediate area of their homes for belongings. The mayor issued a 9 p.m. curfew. "We don't want looters in there," he said.

Asked if there were more than 17 deaths, the mayor replied, "I don't know if there are more, but I am optimistic."

One man caught outside when the storm hit was killed by a car hurtling through the air. A woman was killed when a piece of wood ripped into her torso.

The twister, up to a quarter-mile wide, demolished the Golden Spur Mobile Park Home. Some 300 trailers were destroyed.

On Saturday, the park looked like a scrap heap as the sun danced off the tons of mangled metal and broken glass.

"The whole thing looks like it was put in a blender," said Dr. William G. Eckert. "There was a degree of force here that is undescribable. There was a car bent around a tree like a pretzel."

Eckert spent most of Friday and Saturday trying to identify the dead. A makeshift morgue was set up in the Hope Community Church in Andover.

Unlike the mayor, Eckert said the storm hit without warning. "Basically there was no warning of the storm," he said. "One of the sirens was out."

Kenneth and Alberta Wheeler were warned by their son who called them from a bowling alley. "It's coming your way," the son said. "You better go into the basement right now."

Mrs. Wheeler was baking an apple pie. Her 74-year-old husband was in the yard. They got downstairs just before the storm tore a wall down and ripped away the roof of their two-bedroom house. "It happened so damned fast," Mr. Wheeler said.

Their granddaughter, Holly Nelson, 33, said the couple had lived in the house for 47 years.

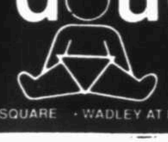

"They've lost everything in a matter of minutes," she said. "I was raised here."

Salvadoran leaders reach reforms pact

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Salvadoran officials and rebel leaders agreed Saturday for reforms in the government and armed forces, but did not reach a cease-fire in the 11-year-old civil war, a U.N. mediator said.

The accord, reached after more than three weeks of talks in Mexico City, addresses changes in the nation's military, legislature and judiciary. A cease-fire and other issues were dropped from the agenda after the talks began.

U.N. mediator Alvaro de Soto said the pact also calls for a U.N.-appointed commission to investigate human rights violations in El Salvador since 1980.

Gramm labels questioners 'sore losers'

The State

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm contends "sore losers" are raising questions about possible conflicts of interest involving his Senate banking committee position and his wife's job as head of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

At issue is Gramm's role in a turf battle between the CFTC and the rival Securities and Exchange Commission, and his possible ascension in a subcommittee that oversees the SEC.

The Texas Republican, a forceful advocate for legislation strengthening the CFTC's regulatory powers, helped kill an amendment last week favored by the SEC that would have allowed sellers of new hybrid securities to decide who would regulate them.

Instead, the Senate adopted legislation considered a victory for the CFTC.

The bill strengthened the agency's powers and divided authority over the hybrid instruments based on a mathematical formula. CFTC Chairwoman Wendy Lee Gramm had proposed the compromise, but SEC Chairman Richard Breeden, a bitter rival of Mrs. Gramm's, opposed it.

"There are a lot of sore losers in this business," Gramm said when asked about grumblings by some Democrats about his role in the Senate battle.

"It's always easier for some people to say 'I lost because of the political influence of so and so,' rather than say 'I lost because I was wrong.'"

Gramm said he doesn't see his role on the banking committee and his votes in favor of the CFTC as a conflict of interest.

"I represent Texas, not myself, and my interest is in trying to promote economic growth and the well-being of Texas," Gramm said.

"Besides, my wife doesn't appear to need my help; she got 65 votes in the Senate," Gramm said, referring to the 65-33 vote against the amendment sponsored by Sens. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., and Christopher Bond, R-Mo.

Mrs. Gramm also dismissed questions of conflicts with her husband, saying the Agriculture Committee has primary jurisdiction over her agency.

"Phil and I will agree or disagree," she said in an interview. "But very frankly, there are lots of times when I don't even know what he thinks about an issue. We don't talk about these issues. We both have busy lives; there are a lot more important things going on to talk about at home."

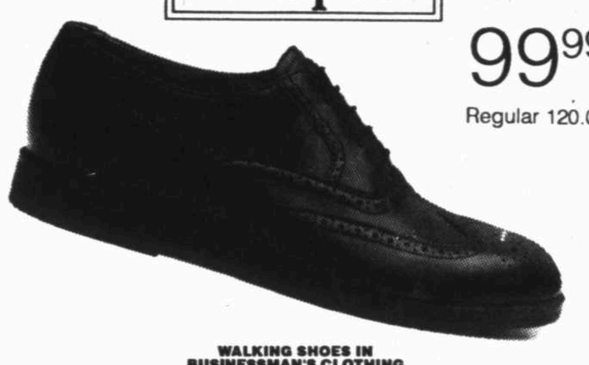

Gramm may have an opportunity to move into the ranking Republican slot on the securities subcommittee of the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee. That panel oversees the SEC, a situation that could bring more conflict-of-interest allegations.

The SEC has sought in recent years to broaden its authority by taking control of some of the financial products regulated by the CFTC.

The securities subcommittee has also considered legislation that would affect stock and commodities futures markets.

The Senate Agriculture Committee has jurisdiction over the CFTC.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Via Associated Press GraphicsNet

Cloudy, 70s, chance of rain

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with less than 20 percent chance of showers, mainly during the morning hours. The high will be in the mid-70s and winds will be southerly 10-20 mph in the morning, shifting to west 20-30 mph and gusty in the afternoon, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is expected to be clear with a low in the mid-40s.

Monday's forecast is for partly cloudy skies with a high in the mid-70s, the NWS said.

Saturday's high was 84, compared with the record high of 95, set in 1974.

The record low for today's date is 31, set in 1934.

STATE

Thunderstorms lingered in Northeast Texas Saturday evening, the remnants of a system that triggered tornado watches in Uvalde and Cass counties. Texas skies ranged from sunny in West Texas to mostly cloudy elsewhere.

Drier air was moving into the state behind a stationary cold front stretching from southern Arkansas to Laredo in South Texas. However, rain ahead of the front was falling on already-saturated ground, prompting officials to issue a flash flood watch for much of East Texas. A tornado watch for East Texas was cancelled when the activity moved into Arkansas and Louisiana.

Temperatures were in the 60s in the Pahandle, 70s across the South Plains and 80s and 90s elsewhere.

Winds were northerly behind the front and a southeasterly ahead of the front. Wind speeds were generally 10 to 15 miles an hour with higher gusts in some areas. Guadalupe Pass had gusts over 70 miles an hour.

NATION

Thunderstorms reverberated through much of the South and Midwest on Saturday, and snow totaling up to 8 inches accumulated in the parts of the Rockies.

Meanwhile, calmer weather returned to Kansas and Oklahoma, where tornadoes cut a swath of death and destruction. Bulldozers on Saturday cut through twisted wreckage in an Andover, Kan., trailer park hardest hit by tornadoes that killed at least 27 people. More than 1,000 people were left homeless.

Hundreds of homes were destroyed as at least 30 twisters ripped across Kansas and 18 through Oklahoma Friday night. Twenty-four people died in Kansas and three in Oklahoma. More than 200 people were injured.

All told, the National Weather Service reported that at least 71 tornadoes touched down Friday, reaching from Nebraska into Texas, Iowa and Missouri.

Thunderstorm wind gusts removed the roof from a house at Prairie du Chien, Wisc., Saturday morning, damaging trees and downing power lines.

Snowfall in Wyoming by Saturday morning totaled 3 inches at Story. Overnight snowfall included 8 inches in the higher passes of northern and central Colorado and 8 inches of new snow in the mountains of northwest Utah.

On Saturday afternoon, showers and thunderstorms were falling in parts of Texas, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky and West Virginia. Storms also hit parts of Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota, as well as the Dakotas and parts of Montana and Idaho.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

HEALTH: Insurance becomes source of anxiety

almost 1.

She is afraid to leave her job or ask for part-time work, because she was treated for an early stage of breast cancer three years ago, and needs health insurance in the unlikely event of a recurrence.

"It's a special time," Dr. Work said, "and I want to be with my children, especially since I know I might not be there forever. But the one thing I can't do now is quit, because I have insurance here and I'm uninsurable if I leave."

Most Americans still have health insurance. But as the nation's medical costs soar, more and more people are being squeezed financially or abandoned altogether by insurers.

Their fears, and the vaguer disquiet of many well-insured people who see awesomely high bills for common medical procedures, are becoming important new forces for change in the nation's health system.

"We've gotten to the point where everybody is scared," said Robert J. Blendon, a professor at the Harvard School of Public Health who is an expert on public opinion and health policy.

"Everyone has heard these terrible stories about some middle-class working person they can identify with who had no insurance and got into an awful situation."

If concerns about health insurance are an emerging obsession for America's middle class, it is stories like Brent McRae's that shape the worst nightmares.

McRae was 27 and only two months into the new sales job that made him move to California from Texas in 1988 when he began to lose weight and feel ill. After five weeks of testing and finally surgery, he was found to have colon cancer.

The bills were more than $100,000. But after his release from the hospital, he found out that the insurance he was still paying for through his former employer in Texas had been canceled because the employer had not sent his premiums to the insurer.

"To this day, I have no idea who kept the premiums," McRae said, "but that was just the beginning."

During his time in the hospital, McRae passed his new employer's 90-day waiting period and became eligible under the company's insurance for coverage of the six months of chemotherapy that he faced, at $700 a week — or so he thought.

"Five weeks into the chemotherapy," McRae said, "with a catheter imbedded in my chest, I walk into my oncologist's office, and he sits me down, puts his hand on my knee and tells me there's been no payment because John Hancock is denying coverage, saying the cancer was a pre-existing condition, even though it hadn't been diagnosed when the coverage began. Then he said he could no longer bankroll my treatment."

McRae went without chemotherapy until he got new insurance, and last year had further surgery because the cancer had spread to a new part of the colon.

"At one point in the middle of the whole thing, I hit bottom, between having cancer and being told I had no insurance, and I tried to commit suicide," he said.

But his story has a happy ending: For the last year he has been cancer-free, and last month, in an out-of-court settlement, the former employer and the two insurance companies paid his medical debts and legal fees.

Most Americans still have health insurance coverage, either through their jobs or, if they are elderly or poor, through Medicare or Medicaid.

But some 33 million Americans, 13 percent of the population, most of them lower-income workers or their families, live without this basic necessity of modern American life. And tens of millions more have such limited policies that they are at risk of financial devastation.

Even those numbers underestimate how many people are at risk and the scale of public insecurity. In a recent 28-month period, a Census Bureau study found that more than one in four Americans went at least a month without coverage. The proportion was higher still among black and Hispanic Americans.

"If you ask people about their coverage, 30 percent say they're not sure their current insurance would cover a major bill."

BEES: Swarm ushers in new, unwelcome era

must learn to live with and respect them, scientists say.

"Should we be scared?" asked Nancy Colver, a Canadian visitor to the refuge, while on a bird watching trip in the subtropical Lower Rio Grande Valley last week. She and her husband paid little attention to the warning signs as they ventured into the forest.

Scared, no. Alert, yes, said Dennis E. Prichard, manager of the 2,088-acre refuge, who advises visitors: "If you see bees, avoid them. Give them a wide berth."

It's a genuine concern at Santa Ana with its 130,000 visitors a year and ideal habitat for bees. Sooner or later, Prichard believes the highly defensive bees will attack, and possibly kill, someone.

Scientists have trapped and destroyed at least 10 swarms of the bees in the past two weeks along a 200-mile stretch of the border from Brownsville to Laredo, two of them in the Bensten State Park in Hidalgo County.

A swarm trapped last October near the border city of Hidalgo was the first one trapped in the United States after crossing the Rio Grande from Mexico.

The October swarm prompted a quarantine in the state's eight southernmost counties, from which no bees may be moved. A trapping in Laredo last week extended the quarantine to 11 more counties.

Citizens in South Texas appear to be more wary of bees than before the spring swarming season began. Fire departments throughout the region have been called on to exterminate wild bee swarms, a task they rarely performed in the past.

The Africanized bees are descendants of African queen bees that escaped from an experiment in Brazil in 1957 and began breeding with the more docile European bees normally used for agriculture in the Americas. They have since spread through much of South America, Central America and Mexico.

They retain the fighting, survival characteristics that European bees used to have before humans began breeding the European variety to make honey and pollinate crops. Africanized bees earned the "killer" label because of their tendency to launch mass stinging defenses against intruders.

Because they are hard to manage and devote much of their energy to swarming and creating new colonies, farmers and beekeepers fear their economic damage more than their stings.

MYSTERY: Why were the area's trees dead?

(From 1A)

Not an unwarranted conclusion, considering the sort of articles featured in the Weekly World News. Stories about a woman who's been chewing the same piece of gum for 31 years and U.S. Navy pilots using a captured UFO to vaporize targets in Iraq made the front page of the March 19 issue.

But Ms. Betz, who saw the "Hard Copy" episode that featured the space ball mystery, called the Reporter-Telegram to say there was some truth — however twisted — to the Weekly World News account.

She said her son, then 21, found a basketball-size silver object during a surveying expedition in Florida in the spring of 1974.

"He took it up to his room and about two or three weeks later the ball started making noises," she said. "Other people observed that the ball did strange things."

The ball's strange behavior, she said, included moving around seemingly under its own power.

The find generated international interest, she said. It wasn't long before the media as well as UFO buffs were swarming around her home on Fort George Island near Jacksonville.

Bill Baker, who was an aerospace correspondent for CBS radio in Florida at the time, recalled doing several stories about the "magic ball."

"The story was really quite simple," said Baker, now a Dallas computer consultant. "They found that metal ball and it had some peculiar attributes that seemed quite mysterious at that time."

Baker said he handled the ball and that it did, indeed, move around when placed on a flat surface.

"If you put it on a level, glass-top table, it would oscillate," he said, speculating that the earth's magnetic field induced the motion. X-rays revealed that the sphere was hollow, he said, and contained objects in an internal cavity.

The Betzes turned the ball over to the U.S. Navy for analysis, he said, but Navy examiners drew few conclusions about the object.

"They released it later and said they couldn't find anything deadly about it ... and that it didn't belong to them."

There had been speculation, Baker said, that the ball was a piece of secret equipment that the Navy had somehow misplaced.

Other studies — conducted by scientists from as far away as Northwestern University near Chicago — also proved inconclusive, he said.

"Nobody ever resolved what it was," Baker said, but a lot of people wanted to try their hand at solving the mystery.

"It turned into a circus, as you can well imagine," he said. "The (Betz) family became singularly oppressed by the number of phone calls."

Among the correspondents drawn to the story were reporters from the Florida Times-Union and the now-defunct Jacksonville Journal.

In April, 1974, Jacksonville Journal reporter Helen Bates wrote that the Betz ball was magnetic and that it would veer to the right or left after being rolled in a straight line.

Later Times-Union stories — read over the phone to the Reporter-Telegram by Times-Union librarian Maryann Sterzel — recounted the Navy's efforts to determine the nature of the ball.

Eventually, according to news reports, officials of a Jacksonville paper mill said the ball appeared to be part of a boiler blowout valve "used widely in pulp mills throughout the country."

An April 24, 1974, UPI story quoted a Taos, N.M., artist who said the ball was actually part of a sculpture he'd been working on. The artist said he lost the ball during a trip to Florida in 1971.

Ms. Betz said she was surprised by the attention generated by the her son's discovery — attention that climaxed, according to the Times-Union, with a $750,000 offer from a Louisiana oil company to buy the ball.

But Terry Betz didn't want to sell, Ms. Betz said. So the pair stored the ball "in a safe place" and tried to resume a normal life.

Once the Betzes "put the lid" on the mystery ball, as Bill Baker put it, the furor died down.

But questions remain in Ms. Betz's mind about the orb's origin. She is not convinced that government examinations of the ball were above board, and she's not certain the ball in her possession now is the same one her son found. She thinks the ball may have been switched, but she can't prove it.

All she is sure of is that no one — not even the paper mill officials — offered a satisfactory explanation of the ball.

Why, she wonders, were all the trees dead in the area near where the ball was found? Why couldn't the Navy determine the process by which the seamless, hollow sphere was manufactured?

They were questions resurrected by the the April 12 "Hard Copy" episode, Ms. Betz said.

"I was shocked," she said of the renewed publicity. "I have tried so hard to get away from this."

Nevertheless, she said, she wanted to let the people of Midland — now forever linked to the space-ball story — know that she is not the figment of a tabloid writer's imagination.

"I'm very respected in the Jacksonville community," she said. "I don't want people to think I'm ashamed of any of this — I'm not."

SPIRIT: About 3,000 volunteers participate

about 3,000 volunteers to participate in the project. About $150,000 was raised from the community in the form of donations to pay for supplies.

Right down the street from Ms. Snodgrass, dozens of Exxon employees worked steadily, replacing a roof at 910 W. Dakota.

Volunteers of all ages cheerfully dispensed soft drinks and nails to workers. The scene resembled an outdoor get-together, especially with Exxon employee Van Gravitt flipping burgers on a charcoal grill.

"Aren't these bluebonnets gorgeous," one woman said, noting neat rows of bluebonnets surrounding the house, some lining the sidewalk. "All the house needs is a little fixing up," she said as she carried a sack of tools to workers in the back yard.

Robert Soga of Exxon said that about 50 to 60 of his fellow employees signed up to work on the project.

"We actually came out here a few weeks ago to inspect the house and started removing the roof yesterday," Soga said. "We've done a lot of electrical work and are finding out what else needs to be done as we go. For example, we think it may be worth it to cover up the siding in places with masonite rather than just painting it."

Soga said he was impressed with the number of people willing to give up a Saturday to spend it doing hard physical labor in the hot sun.

"We have people here representing every group of our company — field operators, production groups — and we've got a lot of family members out here today," he said.

Soga said people most impressed with the annual project are Exxon employees who have recently transferred to Midland. "They are just amazed at the level of involvement a community has in projects like these," he said.

Another Midlander expressing amazement, was homeowner Juanita Young.

"Oh, this is just like Christmas," she said, as members of Trinity Presbyterian Church dismantled the framework on her house, hauled shingles up for the new roof and repaired it inside and out.

"I'm 73 years old. I've been in Midland forever and this is just the most beautiful thing I've ever seen," Ms. Young said. "I'm as happy as I can be."

Ms. Young said that her house, located at 306 S. Jackson St., was a gift given to her by the late Fred and Juliette Turner, former owners of the Turner Mansion (now Museum of the Southwest). "I moved to Midland in 1936," she said. "I worked for the Turners for many years, and now a piece of my history is being repaired."

As Ms. Young spoke from her front yard, surrounded by all her worldly possessions, woodwork was ripped from the interior of her house and tossed out the window. Seeing the house being dismantled in places didn't faze the homeowner, however.

"It's going to look just like a new house when it's finished," she said, beaming. "These people are so nice and this is just ... so beautiful."

Guy Hendrickson of Trinity Presbyterian Church said, "We are completely redoing this house, inside and out."

"I came from Houston and this is my first time being involved in this project," Hendrickson said. "This whole town needs this. It's good for the homeowner. It's good for Midland and it's good for the entire community. It's a complete 'win' for everybody."

Hendrickson said he was surprised at how much work could be accomplished by dozens of workers in just one day.

"It only takes one Saturday a year to do this," he said. "If you stop and think about it, think of what you can give back to the community in just one day."

While Ms. Young said her shining moment would be stepping into her newly completed home, Hendrickson also was anticipating that same moment.

"I can't wait until we are done, knowing what this house looked like before we started," he said. "We will be able to look at it after it's done, step back and say: 'We helped make something in this community a little better.' "

And while the volunteers obviously were motivated by the spirit of giving on the sunny spring day, Ms. Young also reflected the spirit truly reminiscent of the Christmas season.

"I am going to donate whatever I can to this project," she said. "I am going to give what I can to help someone else get a beautiful house, too."

■ Cruise ship gambling proposed

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Cruise ships offering off-shore gambling would be able to coast the Texas shoreline without federal intervention if a bill proposed by a Corpus Christi lawmaker is passed.

Under the bill proposed by Rep. Eddie Cavazos, D-Corpus Christi, gambling would be permitted three miles from shore, undercutting federal jurisdiction which begins 12 miles out.

Justice Department officials announced April 16 they would begin enforcing a 1947 law requiring gambling cruise ships to either remain at sea for at least 24 hours or dock at a foreign port during each trip.

Officials said they were giving cruise ships three months notice before cracking down. Enforcement would affect cruise-ship lines operating out of Galveston, Freeport and Port Isabel.

Cavazos' bill is opposed by the owners of the Corpus Christi Greyhound Race Track, who say cruise-ship gambling would hurt their business.

"If gambling is allowed at three miles, why not do it at dockside?" said R.C. Allen, managing general partner of the race track. "That way, it wouldn't take a $25 million ship."

■ Appeals court stays execution

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A convicted killer scheduled to be executed before dawn Tuesday has been granted a stay by a state appeals court.

Justin Lee May, 44, had been scheduled to die by injection for the 1978 slaying of Jeanetta Murdaugh, 43.

But the Texas Court of Criminal appeals postponed his death sentence for the third time on Friday to allow the court time to study May's claim that he has been inaccurately portrayed as a triple murderer.

May said he only has admitted killing one person.

Mrs. Murdaugh, who was shot twice in the head, and her 43-year-old husband, Frank, were slain during a June 1978 robbery of the Western Auto Store they owned and operated in Freeport. May was never tried in the man's death.

In his writ of habeas corpus, May claims the state incorrectly portrayed him at trial as having been involved in a triple homicide inside a Houston bar shortly after the Murdaughs were slain.

May was indicted on capital murder charges in connection with the deaths of those bar patrons, but the charges were reduced to one count of murder after May agreed to plead guilty in one man's death.

■ Aid available for victims of floods

HARLINGEN (AP) — Federal help is now available for repair or replacement of public facilities in Cameron, Jackson and Victoria counties that suffered flood damage following recent heavy rains.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency allows city and county governments and certain qualified private non-profit organizations to seek assistance.

Disaster aid can also be directed toward public facilities such as bridges, roads, schools, levees and public buildings, said Alton Ray, FEMA federal coordinating officer.

A briefing is scheduled for 2 p.m. Tuesday at the Best Western Harlingen Inn on how to seek funds. A later meeting will be scheduled for Victoria.

"It is impossible to assign a dollar value to the amount of property lost or to the amount that will be needed to restore those losses," said Ed Laundy, Texas state Coordinator for the recovery program.

"Estimates are made, but the actual dollar loss will not be known until the last damaged bridge and road are rebuilt."

Federal disaster aid in Cameron County began with the April 12 declaration by President Bush that a disaster had occurred. Brazoria, Jackson, Victoria and Willacy counties were added to the declaration on April 23.

Officials said a toll-free number (1-800-462-9029) has been set up to help field calls.

■ Thousands attend Bob Wills Day

TURKEY (AP) — Thousands of Western swing music fans from California to the Carolinas gathered in this Texas Panhandle town Saturday to enjoy fiddle-pickin', two-steppin' and all the barbecue you can eat on Bob Wills Day, a tribute to the "King of Western swing."

The horde of visitors, who donned cowboy hats and boots for the 20th annual celebration, showed that young and old-time music lovers have not forgotten Wills, who died 16 years ago.

Wills, who left his barber's chair in Turkey to pursue a musical career, went on to popularize his own brand of country music that came to be known as Western swing.

The day was highlighted by performances from several former members of the Texas Playboys.

The Playboys, a band created by Wills in the 1930s, remained popular for nearly 50 years by employing more than 60 musicians who never altered the band's unique mix of black blues, Dixieland jazz and hillbilly music.

"The beat is the same today as when I danced to it 50 years ago," said Eddie McConnell, an 80-year-old resident of Plainview. "I haven't missed one of these Bob Wills Days in 20 years. And it hasn't lost any of its glamour."

Proposed legislation threatens public's right to know

AUSTIN (AP) — Parents, property owners, concerned citizens and news reporters across the state use the Texas Open Meetings and Texas Open Records laws to try to find out what government tries to hide.

But Texas legislators this session are considering an unprecedented number of bills that could restrict the flow of information to the public.

"The public's right to know is one of the cornerstones of our democracy," said Tom Smith, director of Texas Public Citizen.

"It is the tool that allows people to decide whether their institutions are functioning properly, or whether those institutions have been captured by special interests that they are designed to regulate," Smith said.

Public watchdogs are concerned about the volume, changing shape and unknown reach of the bills being proposed.

Texas Media, a coalition of seven statewide news organizations, has checked about 1,000 pieces of legislation.

The coalition has given 86 bills a high-priority status, meaning those measures will be watched carefully through the legislative process for possible assaults on open government.

That is nearly four times the number of high-priority bills from the 1989 legislative session.

"We've been so busy trying to put out fires ... there are some important bills in there that we've had to pass up," said Nick Voinis, chairman of Texas Media.

Don Adams, an Austin lobbyist who represents Texas Media, said most people believe the issue doesn't affect them. But he added, "If you could explain it to them in small groups, I think they would be concerned."

One measure the media group is watching would keep secret information about tax breaks and other incentives used to lure businesses into the state.

The bill was designed for the Texas Department of Commerce to use in its effort to recruit business, despite recent allegations of improper expenditures by the agency.

A second bill along the same lines would keep secret the marketing packages offered by city-run visitors and convention bureaus.

Other proposals would:

■ Allow school districts to withhold for three weeks the names of finalists for school superintendent.

■ Exempt from public disclosure the criminal records of potential horse racing track license holders, if the records were obtained from federal sources.

■ Expunge arrest records of people acquitted of criminal offenses.

Sometimes, little-known bills affecting open government pass without debate or explanation by legislators.

For example, the House two weeks ago approved a bill on its "routine" calendar that would prohibit a person from using motor vehicle accident information provided by a law enforcement agency to contact the accident victim, or members of their family.

Rep. Bill Carter, R-Richland Hills, said his bill targets "ambulance-chasing attorneys and chiropractors," and wouldn't affect news reporters collecting information for a story.

But in 1989, a similar law passed that its authors said was designed to keep security companies from soliciting business from crime victims. Several law enforcement agencies interpreted the law to mean that crime victims names, and the location of crimes, could not be given to news reporters.

That law caused a furor in the media — some newspapers published editions that had blank spaces where a crime story would have been. It quickly was repealed.

Some say the bills are pouring in because previous defenders of open government laws, most notably Kent Caperton in the Senate and Juan Hinojosa in the House, have retired from the Legislature.

While the battle for information is frequently waged between reporters and state officials, the issues affect the general public.

Residents claim unfinished project caused flooding

HOUSTON (AP) — Residents near Greens Bayou in northeast Houston are suing the Harris County Flood Control District and 15 other defendants for an incomplete flood control project they say led to severe downstream flooding two years ago.

Fifty-six residents and the owners of a mobile home park filed the lawsuit Friday in connection with record flooding in May and June 1989. The plaintiffs say if a storm water detention area on the bayou were completed as planned, it would have held back water dumped into the bayou through a series of ditches built in 1987.

Two plaintiffs, John and Kaydene Jordan, had 3 feet of water in their house during the May flood and 6 feet during the June flood. Mrs. Jordan said there is "no doubt in my mind" that the ditches contributed to the flooding.

"I know that they have caused a lot of water to pour in there (the bayou), because we had never had this problem before," Mrs. Jordan said. The couple estimated their total loss at $200,000, about half of which was covered by flood insurance.

"We still have not recovered from it," she said. "It was really a blow to us."

The lawsuit, filed by Houston attorney Jim Blackburn, alleges that the flood control project was done negligently.

As we begin to age the changes in our appearance are very subtle. We think it is stress or fatigue, too many suntans, or from having worked outdoors for many years. Our skin begins to shown these subtle changes around age thirty, but there is a wide variation in how fast and when people age. It is a combination of genetic and environmental factors that determine this for us. Cosmetic surgery does not turn back the clock and make our skin and facial features younger, but it can help someone "look good for his or her age". A consultation with a qualified physician is the first step if you are considering cosmetic surgery.

Emotional stability is one of the most important factors to have well established prior to undertaking any aesthetic surgery. Facial cosmetic surgery can enhance your appearance but improvement in self-confidence and much of the "success" of the surgery is up to the patient. Lastly, when contemplating facial cosmetic surgery one should candidly discuss their expectations prior to undergoing any procedures.

"I'm a junior at MHS, planning to going to college to major in pre-medicine.My grades are good enough, but I'm afraid of competing with kids from other schools. You see, our science labs were last remodeled about the time of the polio vaccine, in 1957. That really stinks! I can't vote for my own future, yet. But you can. Please vote for me."

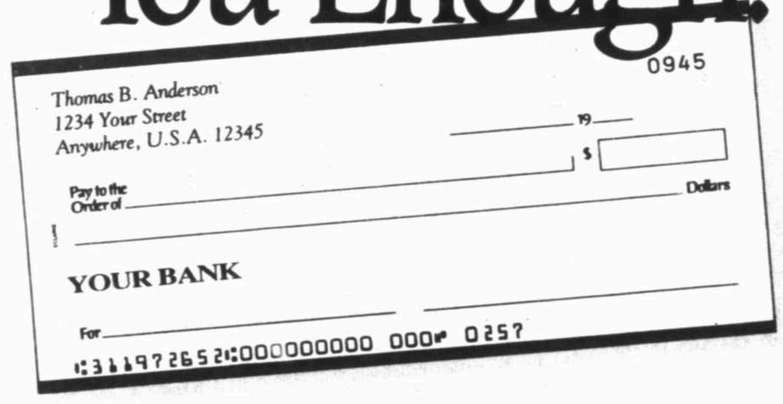

The condition of our science labs at both high schools as well as Lee Freshman High School, must be improved. Conditions at Lee Freshman do not meet TEA accreditation standards for the upper level science courses being offered. Both high school science classrooms do not meet many safety codes. Overall the need for the proposed improvements cannot be underestimated. In the last two years the Houston , El Paso and Lubbock Independent School Districts as well as the Dallas Independent School District, in April of this year, have been placed on "advised" status, due to similar problems that now exist in our own district. This could jeopardize the accreditation of all future Midland graduates, making entry into colleges in and out of state difficult.

Cholera threatens millions in Latin America

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A cholera epidemic that has killed 1,500 people is spreading through South America, and doctors say it may take tens of thousands more lives.

Polluted ocean waters and infected travelers have carried the disease along the Pacific Coast from Colombia to Chile. The rain-swollen Amazon River is carrying it from the mountains of Peru to the heart of Brazil, the largest and most populous nation in Latin America.

"This is the world's worst cholera epidemic in this century," said Dr. Horacio Lores, an epidemiologist with the Pan American Health Organization. "It is very difficult to imagine it ending soon."

Hiroshi Nakajima, director of the World Health Organization, has said cholera threatens 120 million Latin Americans living in unhygienic conditions, a quarter of the region's people.

The Pan American Health Organization estimates the epidemic will affect at least 6 million people and kill 42,000.

Dr. David Swerdlow of the Enteric Diseases Branch at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said the fact that this is the South America's first cholera epidemic in 100 years causes additional worry.

"After cholera hits an area that hasn't had it in a century, you have a high attack rate," he said. "These people are not immune. And after that, two things can happen: it can go away or it can become endemic, when it just stays around."

'This is the world's worst cholera epidemic in this century.'

— Dr. Horacio Lores, Pan American Health Organization epidemiologist

Cholera appeared in January in Peru's northern ports. It spread through poor Andean towns to the highland jungle along the upper Amazon basin, killing at least 1,250 people and infecting 3 percent of the nation's 22 million people.

Neighboring countries restricted cross-border travel and barred most Peruvian products, but the disease reached coastal Ecuador by early March.

It spread rapidly in swampy shantytowns around Guayaquil, Ecuador's largest city. By April, the first deaths had been reported in Chile and in the towns of coastal Colombia.

Epidemiologists say controlling the spread of cholera in South America is nearly impossible, in part because infected people move easily across the largely unpatrolled borders.

Colombian officials blame one outbreak on cocaine traffickers flying north from the Peruvian jungle, where most of the world's coca leaf is grown.

Only four cases have been confirmed in Brazil, a nation of 150 million people, but officials there expect the Amazon will spread cholera to Indian tribes, settlers and eventually to the densely populated Atlantic Coast.

The first Brazilian Indian infected lives near Leticia, a large Colombian riverport where cholera has struck.

A woman near Sao Paolo, Brazil's largest city, is suspected of having the disease and officials expect it to reach the huge shantytowns soon.

"The miserable conditions of the shantytowns" around Brazilian cities "convert them into virtual incubators of the disease," said Dr. Mauro Marzochi, of Brazil's National School of Public Health.

Poverty increases the difficulty of fighting cholera, the epidemiologists say.

In the Peruvian mountains, for instance, fewer than one family in five has running water. On the coast, fewer than half the households have sewers.

Cholera bacteria are passed along mainly in food and water contaminated by feces.

Doctors say it is easy to teach most people how to avoid the disease, but millions of Latin Americans cannot afford fuel to boil the water they drink. Millions more, especially in isolated Andean towns and jungle villages, have never been taught how to guard against sickness.

Governments fear cholera will further impoverish their nations. Peru says the epidemic may cost it $1 billion this year in lost exports, canceled tourism and extra medical costs.

In some cases, fear of economic loss has helped spread the disease, doctors say.

Sales by Peru's important fishing industry plummeted after the Health Ministry warned that seafood caught in polluted coastal waters often is contaminated.

President Alberto Fujimori responded to industry pressure by eating raw fish on television. Doctors soon reported sharp increases in the numbers of cholera cases and deaths.

Fujimori eventually dismissed Health Minister Carlos Vidal for refusing to retract warnings against eating fish.

■ President fires minister over student death

SEOUL, South Korea — President Roh Tae-woo fired his home minister Saturday following a public outcry over the death of an anti-government demonstrator who was beaten by police.

The nation's opposition political parties and major dissident groups demanded that Roh fire his entire Cabinet, and students in three cities held demonstrations to protest the death of Kang Kyung-dae, a 20-year-old college student.

Kang died Friday after he was severely beaten by police in a clash outside Myungji University in Seoul. Four police officers were arrested Saturday after confessing to beating the student with iron pipes, the prosecutor's office said.

Home Minister Ahn Eung-mo, who is in charge of police and security operations, was unable to address the lawmakers because opposition politicians screamed and yelled, demanding that he leave the podium, news reports said.

In an unusually swift move, Roh later fired Ahn and expressed "deep regrets" over Kang's death.

■ China raps U.S. probe of trade practices

BEIJING — China criticized the Bush administration Saturday for including Beijing's trade practices in a special review that could lead to punitive tariffs on exports to American markets.

The decision by U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills on Friday began a six-month legal process that could result in trade sanctions against China, India and Thailand for inadequately protecting intellectual property rights, such as copyrights and trade secrets.

In a statement carried on the nationally televised evening news, the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade said China had taken steps to protect such rights and should not have been targeted for the special investigation.

■ Effort to release hostages 'ripe'

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Lebanon's most influential Shiite Muslim cleric was quoted Saturday as saying efforts to release Western hostages have "reached an advanced stage of ripeness."

But Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah said the solution "will not be discussed in Lebanon."

A report in a leftist newspaper accused the United States of dissuading other nations from giving financial aid to Lebanon pending the release of the 13 hostages.

Fadlallah's remarks coincided with a three-day visit to Syria by Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani.

The hostages were expected to be a central issue in the talks between Rafsanjani and Syrian President Hafez Assad, Lebanon's main power broker with 40,000 troops stationed in the country.

■ Slovak movement splinters amid turmoil

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — The largest political group in the turbulent Slovak republic split Saturday after weeks of dispute over regional autonomy and economic reform.

The separation of the Public Against Violence movement into two factions increases the political friction in Czechoslovakia's eastern republic, where authorities are debating how much autonomy to seek from the federal government in Prague.

Public Against Violence and its Czech republic counterpart, Civic Forum, spearheaded the country's anti-Communist revolution 18 months ago, but the Slovak group had been paralyzed by the policy disagreements in recent months.

■ Soviets angered by shortage block street

MOSCOW — A crowd angry over a six-month spell without milk in stores blocked a main street in the eastern Siberian city of Chita on Saturday, Tass reported.

The official Soviet news agency said virtually all food products are in short supply in the city of 350,000 people, which is near the Mongolian border.

Shots fired at hotel where Chamorro attends reception

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Gunmen sprayed automatic-weapons fire at the wall surrounding a hotel poolside terrace where President Violeta Chamorro was attending a party early Saturday, but she was not injured.

"I'm all right, thank God," Mrs. Chamorro told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from her home. She said "only God knows" whether the attack was directed at her.

"Nobody scares me. I'm not going to be intimidated," she said.

Interior Minister Carlos Hurtado said two people — a Costa Rican and a Panamanian — were 'very slightly injured" from shrapnel wounds. He did not say if they were inside the hotel.

An earlier statement from the ministry did not say whether the incident was considered an attempt on Mrs. Chamorro's life.

Police said two men in a speeding pickup truck opened fire with AK-47 combat rifles from a street that runs alongside the Inter-Continental Hotel.

Fifteen bullet holes pockmarked the wall surrounding the hotel pool. Two bullets penetrated the wall, and at least eight other bullets left holes in the ceiling and wooden beams of an adjacent restaurant.

Mrs. Chamorro, who was attending a niece's wedding reception, said she was on the open-air dance floor at poolside when the attack occurred.

"We all heard these big bursts of gunfire and commented on it, but everybody just kept dancing. I continued dancing normally," Mrs. Chamorro said.

Presidential spokesman Danilo Lacayo said Mrs. Chamorro went home shortly after shooting.

Hurtado said the pickup truck sped through town with the gunmen shooting into the air. Witnesses said the truck left the city on a highway that leads south.

"I just hope this kind of thing doesn't continue happening, because what we want for this country is reconciliation and peace," said Mrs. Chamorro.

Mrs. Chamorro's husband, civic leader Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, was killed in January 1978 by gunmen believed to be acting under orders of dictator Anastasio Somoza.

Refugees begin arriving at U.S.-installed camp

ZAKHO, Iraq (AP) — The first 250 Kurdish refugees moved into a new U.S.-built camp on Saturday, and U.S. officials expressed hopes that others could soon be coaxed into returning to their homeland in northern Iraq.

The first arrivals, all able-bodied men, were brought by helicopter to the new camp outside Zakho from the sprawling, squalid settlement of Isikveren high in the mountains spanning the Turkish-Iraqi border.

"We thought we would never come back to Iraq," said refugee Obaid Ali, 21. Some of the men kissed the ground upon landing, a U.S. officer said.

In addition to those brought in by helicopter, a few refugees began returning from the mountains on their own, on foot. British Royal Marines Lt. Col. Jonathan Thomson said 110 people passed through a checkpoint on Saturday morning alone.

But reporters saw Iraqi Kurdish guerrillas blocking some would-be returnees, telling them it was not yet safe in the "safe haven" being set up by allied forces.

Among those making their way down from the mountains through rough terrain were children, the elderly, people on crutches and parents carrying infants and a few possessions. Many returning Iraqis looked thin and their clothes had been reduced to rags during their stay in the primitive camps on the mountains.

"Everybody smile. You're back home," Sgt. 1st Class Gilbert Shadow of Oconomowoc, Wis., an Army Special Forces member, told a group of refugees who sat cross-legged in the grass.

The arriving refugees settled in, drinking cans of fruit juice and eating military field rations called Meals Ready to Eat, MREs. Others rinsed their faces and slurped handfuls of clean water from a tank among the tents.

Shadow said more men had volunteered to come to the camp than the helicopters could carry.

He said the men were "ecstatic" when they first caught sight of Zakho from the air, and some of the men kissed the ground when they landed.

Only men, rather than whole families, are being brought to the camp initially. Allies officials hope the refugees will want to bring their families in when they have decided for themselves they are not in danger from Iraqi forces.

On the edges of the unfenced camp, U.S. Marines are manning mortar positions, and there are allied troops in the hills and low ridges beyond.

Groups of 250 men will be transported from the mountains to the camp daily until the population reaches 1,000.

After that, if the Kurdish leadership is satisfied with the conditions, women and children will be brought down en masse as fast as tents and other facilities for them can be put up, officials say.

In the meantime, Turkish officials are moving some of the refugees from the mountain camps to better-equipped settlements at lower elevations.

About 1,000 refugees have been moved to a new camp at Gunyazi, near Semdinli in southeastern Turkey, Turkish state radio said Saturday. Another camp at Silopi is scheduled to receive a total of 30,000 refugees.

At Zakho, the arriving refugees quickly volunteered to help set up more tents. British marines showed them how, and some were so eager that they pounded in the aluminum stakes with their shoe heels.

More than 700 tents have been already set up. The first 1,000 of them will be able to accommodate 5,500 people, officials added.

Eventually, officials envision tent housing for up to 25,000 people.

However, refugee officials say they hope many of the displaced Kurds will return directly to the homes they abandoned last month, fleeing Saddam's army after the failed Kurdish uprising.

Zakho, for instance, was a city of more than 50,000 before the uprising. Now its population has dwindled to 5,000 to 10,000.

Military officials were trying to convince the Kurdish guerrilla leaders that Zakho is safe for their people after the departure Friday of almost all of Saddam's police.

"As long as there is tyranny and injustice, people will not go down," said Khorshid Hassad Mohammed, 41, a builder, who had made his way downhill to Dashtatakh, where an asphalt road begins, from Isikveren.

"I want to go home. Zakho is better to live in," said one 12-year-old girl, Hayam Haji.

Thomson, the British Royal Marines lieutenant colonel, hosted a meeting of guerrilla leaders at his unit's headquarters. Later, several of the guerrillas drove through Zakho trying to spot any lingering undercover police.

"Once they see the tide has turned against them, they'll leave," Thomson said of the Iraqi police.

In other developments, Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz said Saturday that friction with Iraq's Kurdish minority could be eased if the United States and its allies stop meddling in Iraq's domestic affairs.

Aziz, on a state visit to Algiers, said the West was trying to destabilize Iraq.

Kurdish rebel leaders said after talks in Baghdad last week that the government had agreed in principle to give the Kurds autonomy where they live in northern Iraq under a 1970 accord that was never carried out.

France called for a meeting of the five leading U.N. Security Council members — France, China, Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union — to examine the situation in Iraq in light of those Kurdish-government talks.

A diplomatic source in Paris, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the meeting would concern humanitarian action. He did not elaborate.

EC ministers meet to discuss Kurds' safety

MONDORF-LES-BAINS, Luxembourg (AP) — Officials from France and Britain on Saturday proposed the United Nations take security initiatives to encourage hundreds of thousands of Iraqi Kurdish refugees to return home.

"The Kurds demand more security," French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas said following an informal meeting of European Community foreign ministers in this resort town. "The United Nations must be involved in returning the Kurds."

Dumas proposed the U.N. Security Council meet to examine conditions in Iraq. French officials said a U.N. security guarantee would force Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to respect a domestic accord on possible Kurdish autonomy.

British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd suggested a "U.N. police force" to assure the Kurds they will be safe once they return to their cities.

"We cannot keep our troops there forever and purely humanitarian personnel probably would not do the trick in terms of persuading the Kurds they could return in safety," said a British official who asked not to be identified.

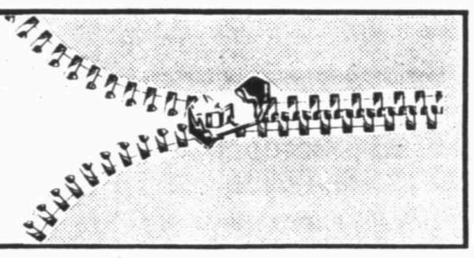

"We think there is a good prospect that in (the Iraqis') present weakened political state they would agree to this," the official said.

Such a force would replace about 9,000 U.S., British, French and other allied troops now providing protection for Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq.

A 1,440-member U.N. peacekeeping force began arriving last week along the Iraqi-Kuwait border, where tens of thousands of Shiite Muslim refugees have gathered.

More than 2 million Kurds and Shiites fled their homes after their uprisings following the Persian Gulf War were crushed by Saddam.

At what cost does U.S. oust Saddam?

By Patrick E. Tyler
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. intelligence community this month completed its first full assessment of war damage in Iraq, and the numbers were sobering: $30 billion to rebuild the infrastructure of roads, bridges, power plants and oil installations; five years to repair the electrical grid; months to get water purification plants working; shortages of chlorine and grain, depleted livestock and acute shortages of medicine.

The question for the Bush administration is what should Saddam Hussein be allowed to do about it?

After nine months of trade sanctions and economic blockade, the United States and its allies still exert absolute control over the levers of Iraq's economy.

Two months after the shooting stopped, Saddam has not been allowed to sell a single barrel of oil, his principal source of national income.

While a long and meticulous inspection program goes ahead to verify that Iraq has destroyed its weapons of mass destruction, Washington and its allies will retain enormous power over Iraq's 18 million people, many of whom are refugees in their own land, many of whom are hungry, sick or traumatized by war.

Therein lies the quandary for the Bush administration — how tightly to squeeze Iraq, and when to let up.

THIS NEXT STEP may determine the long-term survival of the man Bush has been able to defeat in every way except one: Saddam remains in power in Baghdad. If not victory, as Milton's dark angel said, it is yet revenge.

By all accounts, the initial inclination in the White House is to tighten the screws, using as justification Saddam's repression of the Kurds in northern Iraq and his disingenuous accounting of the ballistic missiles, chemical weapons and nuclear materials he is hiding.

President Bush reaffirmed on Friday his central post-war policy goal. "There will not be normal relations with this man as long as I'm president of the United States," he declared, adding that "it's only terror that's keeping him in power" and "we want him out of there."

The critical question for U.S. policy will be whether to undertake a controlled strangulation of Iraq's economy as part of a strategy to topple Saddam, or a loosening of the noose that allows Saddam to rescue his people from the deprivation and destruction of the war.

Strangulation inevitably brings more human suffering and will prevent Iraq from making a down payment on reparations to Kuwait, whose civilian and oil economies suffered untold billions in damage from the Iraqi occupation.

STRANGULATION WOULD also prolong the damage being done to the economies of Jordan and Turkey, which had strong trading ties with Baghdad before the war.

But allowing Iraq to open the valves of its formidable oil industry would only strengthen Saddam as the leader who can still deliver at home.

It would also allow him to fulfill his obligation to pay war damages in Kuwait and perhaps launch him once again into the Arab political arena he still aspires to dominate.

There were strong indications at week's end that Bush and his senior advisers were getting ready to calibrate their postwar campaign.

"My impression is that they are at the thinking stage and not at the clear formulation stage," said one senior analyst who participates in the interagency groups that feed options to Bush and his senior national security aides.

In another indication, a senior administration official was asked whether the United States would look favorably on Iraqi requests to export oil.

The official said that would depend upon a lot of things, "Such as first of all, there will be a big difference in approach to it whether Saddam Hussein is in power or not."

Whatever course Bush takes, constructing and then managing a postwar strategy for Iraq will be complicated and full of risks.

"IT'S NOT CLEAR to me how long this population can hold out with these sanctions," said one government specialist on Iraq. "They still seem to be eating, but we need to get electricity going for water purification, they need chlorine and simple things you could give them."

He added that because of the threat of cholera and other diseases, "They need vaccines and medicines massively and immediately."

Without elaborating on where administration policy was going, one senior adviser said, "Oh, we're not going to let Iraqis starve."

Still, no one in the administration foresaw the scale or intensity of the Kurdish crisis, which has left thousands dead.

Even if the ropes were taken off Iraq's economy, intelligence estimates say the country's oil revenues would not be able to cover the reconstruction bills or pay down the $80 billion in foreign debts piled up over the last decade.

By the end of the current decade, Baghdad's shortfall is forecast at between $100 billion and $170 billion. Just to pay the interest on its debt this year, Iraq needs $8 billion.

One CIA estimate says that with minimal investment, Iraq could be exporting 1 million barrels a day within three months. And, the study adds, with a $1.5 billion investment to repair bomb-damaged pumps, Iraq could be shipping 2.7 million barrels a day of crude oil to the world markets by the end of 1992, assuming the West cooperates by selling Baghdad the oil-sector equipment and spare parts it desperately needs.

IN CONTEMPLATING a long-term pressure campaign to drive Saddam from power, one part of Bush's calculus must be whether any amount of pressure can dislodge the Iraqi leader from his seat as absolute ruler in a totalitarian police state.

Last month, a special intelligence assessment suggested that Saddam's regime was "diseased" and he was not likely to last more than six to 12 months.

But in the ensuing weeks the intelligence community has altered its view, based on the observation that the Iraqi army has remained loyal to Saddam and that violent insurrection that flared in the north and south never made it to the capital.

In an important respect, the spontaneous uprising in the predominantly Shiite Muslim south and the northern Kurdish provinces may have only served to reinforce Saddam's appeal as a strong central figure able to prevent ethnic and regional pressures from splitting the nation apart.

To the Sunni Muslim minority that has run Iraq in this century, Saddam still is the only thing standing between them and the anarchy of disintegration; the only thing holding together the unruly ethnic and religious warren on the fertile and oil-rich land of Mesopotamia.

To be sure, many Iraqis would prefer a change at the top, but taking on Saddam's security apparatus has long been regarded as a suicidal proposition.

FROM THE MOMENT the war ended and Bush opposed an initial Iraqi request to sell oil to buy food and medicine, there was every indication that Saddam sensed Washington's pressure game and has maneuvered to counter it.

After five days of secret negotiations in Baghdad last week, Saddam struck a tentative accord with Kurdish guerrilla leaders to end the state of war in the north and to cooperate in bringing 2 million Kurdish refugees back from the borders with Iran and Turkey under new security guarantees.

Whether the pact survives the scrutiny of the Kurdish community, it demonstrated Saddam's focus on dividing his internal opposition as the first step in his political recovery at home.

His next step will be to divide the international coalition that effectively controls his economy.

Iraq's export pipelines through Saudi Arabia and Turkey are the key to his economic recovery. Saudi Arabia, whose ruling family has dedicated itself to Saddam's downfall, has the least interest in rushing to reopen the valves on the oil terminal it allowed Iraq to establish on its Red Sea coast in 1989.

But Turkey continues to suffer the effects of lost trade with Iraq. Aside from the hefty pipeline fees it once earned, Turkey misses the lucrative market Iraq provided for its exports and the barter payments that arrived in the form of 4,000 tanker trucks carrying Iraqi crude oil for Eastern Turkey's refineries.

JORDAN ALSO would suffer from an extended embargo against Iraq. Bereft of friends among the oil-rich Arab gulf states that fought Iraq while Jordan stayed on the fence, King Hussein's severe economic problems will only intensify in coming months.

NASA heads confidently into final hours of countdown

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA headed into the final hours of its second countdown for space shuttle Discovery's "Star Wars" research mission with high hopes for a Sunday morning liftoff.

Workers began loading more than a half-million gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen into Discovery's external fuel tank late Saturday night. Liftoff was scheduled for 6:01 a.m. CDT.

Mission managers halted the first countdown when a pressure sensor on one of the main engines failed as the fuel tank was being filled for a Tuesday launch attempt. The sensor was replaced, and the new part tested fine.

Before that, cracks on crucial door hinge mechanisms caused a 1½-month delay.

"We've solved our problems that we had, and we're very optimistic at this point," NASA test director Al Sofge said Saturday.

Still, at least one program director couldn't help but worry just a little.

"We've been set back several times, so there's a lot of anxiety," said Michael Harrison, a research official for the Strategic Defense Initiative, better known as "Star Wars."

Weather forecasters said early morning fog put the chance of an on-time liftoff at only 20 percent. The fog was expected to lift, however, increasing the odds of a launch later in the morning to 90 percent.

Mission commander Michael Coats and his crew spent Saturday reviewing their flight plans again. Two of the seven astronauts also flew trainer jets.

NASA flight directors consider it one of the most complex shuttle missions ever. Work will be nonstop; the crew will split 12-hour shifts during the eight-day flight.

It will be the 40th flight of a space shuttle and the second launch this year — the second this month, in fact, unless the launch is delayed beyond Tuesday. Atlantis lifted off April 5 and returned six days later after its crew placed an astronomical observatory in orbit.

Harrison, the spacecraft's program director, expects the intricate and finely timed shuttle and spacecraft maneuvering to be "a real space ballet." The crew has trained twice as much as is standard for a mission to accomplish all the tricky turns.

The spacecraft, commanded by remote control by the astronauts, also will examine chemicals and gases sprayed into space.

Demographers: What to call a suburb of a suburb

By Dirk Johnson
New York Times News Service

Some demographers have come up with a fitting, if rather unwieldy name for these growing regions: Non-metropolitan adjacent counties. In other words, they are the rural counties just beyond the metropolitan ring.

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — About an hour's drive south of downtown Denver, the suburban glass office towers along Interstate 25 finally give way to green pastures, naked hillsides and a distant view of Pike's Peak.

The local cattle, stretched out comfortably in fields along the road, mark time by watching the passing automobiles. From these peaceful acres, the noisy metropolis seems a world away.

But suddenly, around the next bend in the road, there are several clusters of expensive new homes, hundreds of them, along with some golf courses and recreation buildings. Is this a suburb? A small town?

By whatever name, new residential communities in places like Douglas County are growing as fast as a prairie fire. Since 1980, the county's population has jumped by 140 percent, faster than all but Flagler County in northern Florida.

The growth of these rural regions is made possible by the burgeoning job base in the suburbs. Towns like Castle Rock, too far from the urban sprawl to be considered a suburb, yet too suburban-like to be considered a traditional small town, could almost be considered suburbs of suburbs.

"The growth of places like this, whatever you want to call them, is one of the larger demographic stories of the past decade," said Carl Haub, a demographer for the Population Reference Bureau in Washington. "The concept of suburban is almost becoming outmoded, since they have become such large employment centers. And that has allowed people to push farther out into the rural regions."

Just as demographers have not quite gotten around to naming the phenomenon, they have not quantified it either. Many residents of outlying counties continue to work in big cities an hour or more away, in the traditional suburban commuter pattern.

But more and more are finding suitable employment in the suburbs themselves, and this is the group at the heart of the new growth pattern.

People can live in the small towns of Orange County in New York, for example, and commute to jobs in White Plains or other towns in suburban Westchester County, where employment has jumped 16 percent in the last decade.

In Chicago's western suburbs, the explosion of high-paying jobs means that a pin-striped worker can retreat to a farmhouse in rural DeKalb County. And the growth of jobs in Denver's south suburbs means that an employee can be saddling a horse in Castle Rock 45 minutes after shutting off the computer terminal at work.

Some demographers have come up with a fitting, if rather unwieldy name for these growing regions: Non-metropolitan adjacent counties. In other words, they are the rural counties just beyond the metropolitan ring.

According to a study by the Department of Agriculture, rural counties that border metropolitan regions grew twice as fast in the 1980's as did more distant counties.

From the perspective of people who live there, these are places that offer the best of both rural and metropolitan worlds.

Evan McCullom, for example, earns a good salary at the Martin Marietta Co.'s gleaming office building in the Denver suburb of Littleton, just 30 minutes away from the country home in Castle Rock where his three boys are growing up in a small-town atmosphere.

"My boys can roll down the hills, ride their bikes anywhere," said McCullom. "You see red foxes and elk in the neighborhood. My wife, Jeanne, knows the people in the stores in town by name, and they know hers. We're not a suburb. And yet, we're close enough to the metropolitan area to take advantage of it."

By their presence, of course, the newcomers change the fabric of the small town. And at some point, after enough people have discovered such a rural region, it ceases to be rural. It becomes suburban, part of the ever expanding metropolitan ring.

"It's the small town, Mayberry-like atmosphere which attracts people in the first place," said Steve Boand, the mayor of Castle Rock, himself a relative newcomer. "The great challenge is to manage the growth in a way that we don't lose that feel."

Boand and his family live at the old Scott Ranch property, now called The Woodlands subdivision, where about 200 houses have been erected on land where cattle grazed only a few years ago.

In general, the newcomers to these small towns have more money and schooling than the old guard. They often have different ideas about the way local government should be run, or the kinds of classes that local schools should offer.

"The newcomers will transform these areas as soon as they arrive," said Haub. "It's not really small-town life that people want. They don't really want a mom-and-pop general store. They want the kind of selection they're used to. And they don't want the rural-type schools. They want schools that will get their kids into Harvard or Yale."

In recent years, as corporate centers have sprouted like cornstalks from the rich black earth an hour west of Chicago, sleepy little suburbs like Naperville have become boomtowns.

And now the countryside west of the suburbs is dotted by fancy subdivisions with three-car garages just a stone's throw from old wood farmhouses.

The school district in Burlington, Ill., a crossroads in the cornfields about a half-hour northwest of Naperville, now gets children from both kinds of homes.

And their parents, who may wear white collars to offices in Naperville or overalls to the south 40, do not always agree about the style of education.

When it came time to build a new high school, the newcomers wanted the school to have a swimming pool, something considered by most suburban districts as an essential.

The longtime residents of Burlington, meanwhile, said they had gotten along just fine without a pool for many generations.

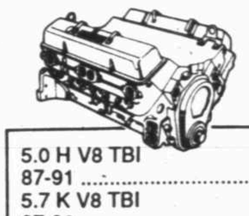

They considered such frills to be hifalutin. The new school, to be opened in the fall, will do without a swimming pool.

But the changing curriculum at Burlington reflects what is happening in this region. Classes like animal husbandry and clubs like the Future Farmers of America are part of the past. The school has added classes in computer technology and the German language.

"You have different sets of values," said Rich Perry, the principal at Burlington Elementary School, who recalls the days when many of the children took days off from the classroom to help with the harvest.

"It's not that one is better than the other, just different," he added. "And those differences sometimes mean a conflict."

Eighteen hurt when car plows into bicyclists

CARTHAGE, N.C. (AP) — A car spun out of control and plowed a pack of racing bicyclists Saturday, hitting some and causing a massive pileup that injured at least 17 riders.

"It hit the pack going sideways," said cyclist Allen Pritchard, 19, of Myrtle Beach, S.C. "It was chaos."

Up to 90 cyclists crashed, said Trooper W.D. Waters. Eighteen people, including the driver, were treated for injuries.

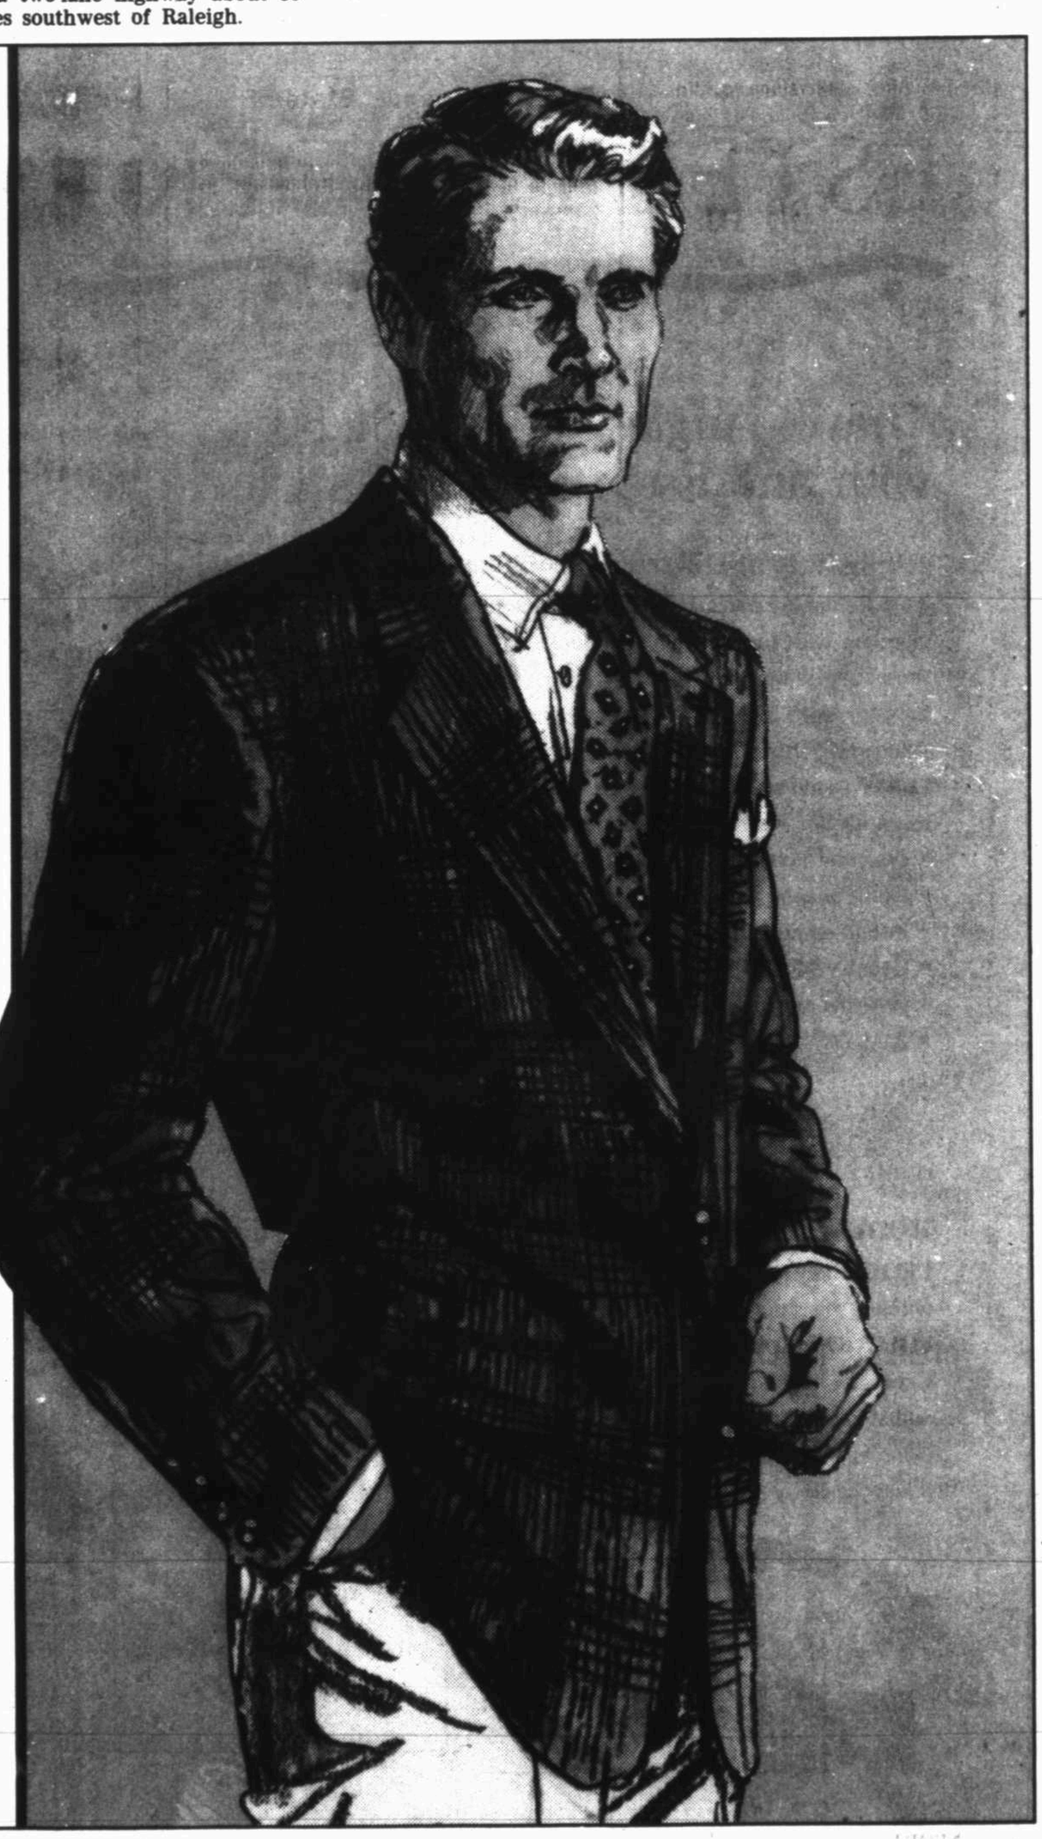

Sherri L. Bennett, 19, of Cameron was charged with careless and reckless driving and improper vehicle equipment, Waters said. The car had faulty brakes and slick tires, he said.

Four people taken to Moore Regional Hospital in Pinehurst underwent surgery, a hospital spokesman said. The others, including Bennett, were treated and released.

The 16th annual Tour de Moore, a 109-mile race, was canceled after the pileup. The accident occurred on a two-lane highway about 50 miles southwest of Raleigh.

Logan advances to state

■ Midland Lee's Traci Logan — after missing out on the state track meet last year — finally reaches her goal, while some local younger athletes show promise for the future.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — District 4-5A gave a sterling performance at Texas Tech's Fuller track Saturday in the Region I track meet, but there were enough tears, near misses and missed curfews to send emotions in search of a way to swing.

In all, 4-5A qualified 11 individuals and three relays for the state meet in Austin. District runners also won 10 events. Odessa High won the boys team title by two points (60-58) over Sherman while Abilene High's girls placed second in the team race (83-69) to Fort Worth Dunbar.

Midland Lee's girls tested the range of emotions one can feel in such events.

Junior Traci Logan, making good on a promise from a near miss here last year, qualified for the state meet with a winning and career best time of 44.57 seconds in the 300 hurdles.

However, Lee sophomore TaNisha Mills placed third in the 400 meters after leading most of the race. She fell at the finish line trying to hold off Arlington Martin's Adeyinka Whiteside. Dunbar's Zenita Davis won the event with a state best 55.23 while Mills was 57.27.

"TaNisha just went out too fast and tightened up," Lee track coach Van Tom Whatley said. "She was a full second faster the first 200 meters than Friday and that's just being nervous and a sophomore. She wanted it and tried to get it, but it wasn't the smartest race."

Logan's hurdle race followed immediately and Whatley was concerned about how she would react to the Mills finish.

"That could bother a lot of people, but Traci was on a personal mission," Whatley said. "She was so close last year and missed, and she wasn't going to go through that again."

Logan countered, "I didn't feel I had it won until I crossed the finish line and no one was in front of me. I thought, 'I'm going to state.'

"I was really scared after what happened to TaNisha. I was afraid that I

Perales, whose 71 on Friday put her five shots in front of Fort Worth Southwest's Heather Hass, added a 72 Saturday for a 143 total as the five-stroke lead held up.

Missions defeat Angels 8-3

By Bill Price

Midland Angel manager Don Long keeps an index card file of opposing batters on his desk, and whatever gems of knowledge are in it worked fine through seven innings Saturday as the Angels faced San Antonio for the first time this season.

But Midland was coming off a grind at Wichita that saw it lose five straight against the Wranglers and made the Haloes thin in pitching. That enabled the Missions to capitalized on a pulled back muscle of reliever Doug Robertson, as San Antonio broke a 3-3 tie and exploded for five runs in the eighth for an eventual 8-3 victory at Angels Stadium.

The win kept San Antonio ahead of the cellar-dwelling Angels, as the Missions won their fifth straight to go 5-10 for the year. Midland lost its eighth in a row to move to 4-12 in the Texas League Western Division.

The Angels got their best outing of the season from No. 1 starter Mike Butcher (0-3), who got into a couple of jams but still left the game after six innings with a tied score: Then Robertson came into the game to start the seventh, sitting the Missions down 1-2-3. But somewhere along the line he developed back pain.

Rebels rebound once again

■ Justin Firkins' homer, double and three RBIs leads a group of back-up Rebels over San Angelo as the playoff-bound bunch from Midland Lee displays its depth.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

With the District 4-5A baseball championship in safe keeping before the first pitch was thrown, Midland Lee head coach Jesse Benavidez gave his lesser-used players a chance to prove themselves in the regular-season finale against San Angelo — and prove themselves was exactly what they did.

Backup catcher Justin Firkins hit a three-run homer and a double, while designated hitter Mark Seidenberger was 2-for-3 with two RBI as the Rebels came back from multiple-run deficits three times to record a wild 10-9 win over the Bobcats Saturday at Johnson Field.

"Hey, those guys are just as hungry as anybody else," Benavidez said of his substitutes-turned-starters. "They moved the ball around with their bats and kept fighting back. And that's the main thing, knowing that's the kind of baseball we have got to play in the playoffs."

The Rebels, ranked ninth in the state as of Tuesday, were digging their way out of a hole the entire game. The Bobcats got two runs in the top of the first inning when Justin Bryan rocked Lee starter Brian Tomlin for a two-run home run to left field. After going in order in the first, the Rebs cut the lead to 2-1 when Seidenberger looped a single to shallow centerfield to drive in David Sullivan, who got to third on a wild pitch and was running for Firkins after the catcher bounced the ball off the right field fence for a double.

San Angelo pulled away again with a run in the third, only to see Lee come back to tie the game in fourth as Seidenberger got his second RBI by driving Brad Brunson home, then eventually took home on a wild pitch.

A two-run double by Shea Morenz not only sent Tomlin to the showers in the fifth, but also gave the 'Cats a 5-3 edge. However, the "Cardiac Kids," as Benavidez has come to call his team, exploded for four runs in bottom of the fifth to go

San Antonio spurred, Rockets grounded

Spurs, Warriors even; Houston down 2-0

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Golden State's upset victory over the San Antonio Spurs gave Don Nelson's Warriors the home court advantage in their NBA playoff series.

It certainly didn't make Nelson confident.

"We played a near-perfect game," Nelson said after his team beat San Antonio 111-98 Saturday. "We are probably going to have to come back here for a Game 5 ...

"That's if we play well and win one in Golden State."

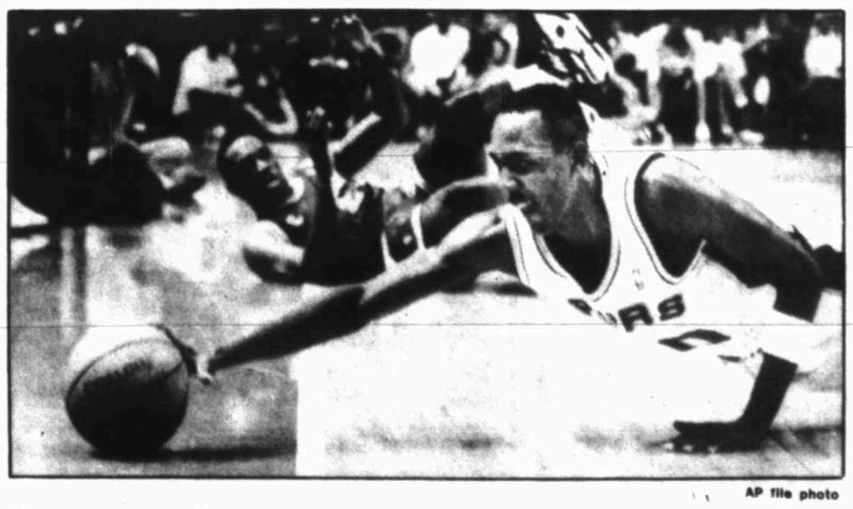

The Warriors, who lost 130-121 on Thursday, tied the best-of-5 series at 1-1. The teams travel to Oakland for the third and fourth games of the Western Conference playoff series.

Chris Mullin had 27 points and led a 10-0 third-quarter run for Golden State. The Warriors, who held a 55-47 lead at the half, opened the third period with 10 straight points and led by as many as 19 in the quarter. Mullin had 10 points in the period.

"I know if I take good shots, eventually they're going to fall for me," Mullin said. "The main thing was we were able to control the tempo."

Tim Hardaway added 20 points for Golden State, while Mitch Richmond and Sarunas Marciulionis each had 16. Marciulionis got 12 of his in the second period.

TRACK: Reb pair qualifies for state would have TaNisha on my mind and not on the hurdles. But I'm glad I'm going to Austin. It's my turn."

Lee sophomore Takeira Strambler also felt a major sting of disappointment, finishing third in the long jump with a career best 18-1½. She was in second place and headed for Austin until El Paso Del Valle's Traci Kirtley went from 18-0½ to 18-6 on her last jump to win the event and send Strambler to third place.

Lee's Rosie Eaden matched her career best in the high jump with a 5-2 to earn a fourth place and that seemed to charge her interest for next year.

"I can do better and I've got two more years to do it," Eaden said.

Midland High's Cynthia Redic failed to make the shot put finals despite a 35-6 effort in the preliminaries.

Odessa High's boys had a field day, winning four events. Brad Givens won the 200 in 21.24 while Davorick Taylor won the 100 with a 10.66 to go with the high jump victory (6-8) by Ryan Ledlow on Friday. OHS also had a record setting 40.65 in the sprint relay. OHS' 1600 relay finished fourth, but was on the way to winning it when Dallas Cowan stepped on the track curb to lose several fluid strides.

The Abilene High girls saw LaRhonda Kendrick repeat as the 200 champion with a 24.36 and also qualified two relay teams for Austin, winning the 800 relay in 1:38.47.

Abilene Cooper's Shemea Broom won the 100 hurdles in 14.99 and the Abilene High boys got a victory from Alex Holland in the 800 with a 1:52.53. Odessa Permian's Brandi Craig was a surprise winner in the high jump with a 5-4.

Of course, Lee's Jovan Tellez qualified for state with a second place in the shot put Friday as did Abilene High's Jay Lowry in the long jump.

Permian's Robert John also upset Plainview's Sammy Walker and Abilene High's Lowry in the 110 hurdles to finish second and earn a berth.

That helped save a disastrous day for Permian. Coach Waymond Griggs scratched three of his athletes from competition and sent them home for missing curfew Friday night.

Gerrod Bergen was taken out of the 100 and 200 while Bergen, Michael Dickson and Lonnie Jones were scratched from the sprint relay. John was also a member of that relay.

"I'm sorry I didn't get to run in the relay, but I feel more disappointed for the rest of the team," said John. "I was glad I was able to run. I knew it would pay off. I think I have a friend in a high place. It's a bit of a miracle."

Permian's Cort Petterson also was scratched from the 300 hurdles, but he thought he didn't qualify Friday and went home.

One thing is for sure: A day at the Region I track meet is never like a day at the office. It's one of the few places where tears and cheers are only moments apart.

GOLF: Cooper girls to represent 4-5A at state

(From 1B)

second at 148, which is good for a trip to the state tournament as the Region I runner-up.

San Angelo's Gidget Tate beat Abilene Cooper's Marcie Edwards in a playoff for third place — and the alternate slot — after each finished at 159.

Midland High senior Linda Malmqvist, a foreign exchange student from Sweden, posted consecutive 81s and wound up sixth at 162.

And Midland Lee sophomore Paula King was ninth with a 170 total.

High wind gusts, which caused scores to soar Friday, disappeared Saturday, and most individual and team scores began to tumble. But Malmqvist, the 4-5A champion, was unable to overcome tendinitis problems in her left wrist which kept her from practicing for over three weeks prior to regionals.

"If I just had been able to practice a little bit beforehand I think I could have played really well," said Malmqvist, the victim of some disastrous three-putts.

"I just couldn't get close to the hole, and then I lost my confidence in my putting. When I missed one I'd lose even more confidence, but I liked the course and everything here was good except for my ability to score well.

"I guess as bad as I played I'm real happy with the score."

"It was really a lot of fun. I just wish I could have played better," said King, who chopped six strokes off her opening-round 88 with an 82 on Saturday.

King started strong on the final 18, and she was just one-over-par in the early going of the round after making a pretty 14-foot birdie putt on No. 5.

"I really thought after that (birdie) I could get back into it, but I messed up right after it — I got a double-bogey — and everything seemed to go wrong after that," King said.

Lewisville-Marcus, led by Kelly Kemper's seventh-place 166, totaled 682 for 36 holes and will head to Austin as the region's top team.

And District 4-5A will be represented at the state meet as Abilene Cooper out-scored league rival San Angelo by 10 strokes to break out of a second-place tie and earn the trip as the only other team under 700.

Cooper, behind fourth-place medalist Marcie Edwards (159), used 691 strokes in all, while San Angelo was third at 701.

Texas A&M, Texas sweep doubleheader opponents

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Conrad Colby singled in Brian Thomas to give Texas A&M a 4-3 victory Saturday over Texas Christian in the first game of a Southwest Conference doubleheader.

The Aggies went on to win the second game, 3-2, sweeping their three-game series with the Horned Frogs.

A&M is now 40-17 overall and 12-6 in SWC play. TCU falls to 30-21 overall and 8-10 in the league.

No. 14 Texas 10-3, Houston 0-2

AUSTIN — Scott Pugh's bases-loaded single in the bottom of the 14th inning pushed 14th-ranked Texas past Houston, to hand the Longhorns a sweep of the Cougars.

Texas won the first game of the doubleheader 10-0, after defeating the Cougars 16-3 on Friday.

Texas is now tied for first with Texas A&M at 12-6, while Houston sags to 8-10 with an outside chance of making the SWC Tournament next month at College Station.

Baylor 2, Texas Tech 1

WACO — Baylor's Frank Toltyn went the distance, holding Texas Tech to four hits and leading the Bears to a 2-1 victory.

Baylor took a 1-0 lead in the third when Michael Briley hit a sacrifice fly to score Mike Bohny, who had led off the inning with a single.

The second game of the scheduled double-header was suspended after 14 innings due to darkness. The score was tied at 2.

Henderson returns to A's lineup

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Rickey Henderson returned to the Oakland lineup Saturday, still showing the effects of a strained calf muscle that sidelined him for two weeks.

Henderson, activated from the disabled list before the game, did not steal a base or spark a rally in the Athletics' 4-3 victory over California. In fact, he went 0-for-4 while batting leadoff and stayed one behind Lou Brock's all-time record of 938 stolen bases.

"My timing was a little off, but I was more concerned about just making it through the day," Henderson said. "I got a couple of good tests, and it felt OK. I think I was more afraid of putting pressure on it at the plate. I'll do better (Sunday)."

Henderson stole his 937th base on opening day. He was later picked off and caught stealing before pulling up lame while running out a grounder on April 11.

When the injury, first thought to be minor, did not improve, the A's placed Henderson on the disabled list on April 21, retroactive to the 12th. Saturday was the first day Henderson could be activated.

Henderson, the American League MVP last season, missed 14 games because of the injury.

Waldorf puts on big show

Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Could Duffy Waldorf be 100 times better in the 1991 Greater Greensboro Open than he was in last year's tourney? He's working on it.

Waldorf, whose third-round 81 last year led to a final score of 300 and a check for $2,562, tied the Forest Oaks Country Club record Saturday with a 9-under-par 63. His 12-under-par 204 total gave him a share of the lead with first-round leader Bob Wolcott and an eye on the $225,000 first prize, a vast change from last year's take-home pay.

"I was thinking 'Well, I've got a lot of improvement to do here in the third round,'" Waldorf said. "I never envisioned improving that much."

The 28-year-old wine connoisseur who turned to golf after a sprained ankle ended his football career in high school turned in a vintage round on the mild, overcast day. Waldorf matched the round turned in by Sandy Lyle en route to his GGO title in 1988, and Waldorf's front nine of 29 broke a tournament mark.

"I'm not sure if I've shot a 29. I did shoot a 28 once," he said of an early '80s performance in a tournament at Bakersfield, Calif.

Wichita Falls wins CBA title

Associated Press

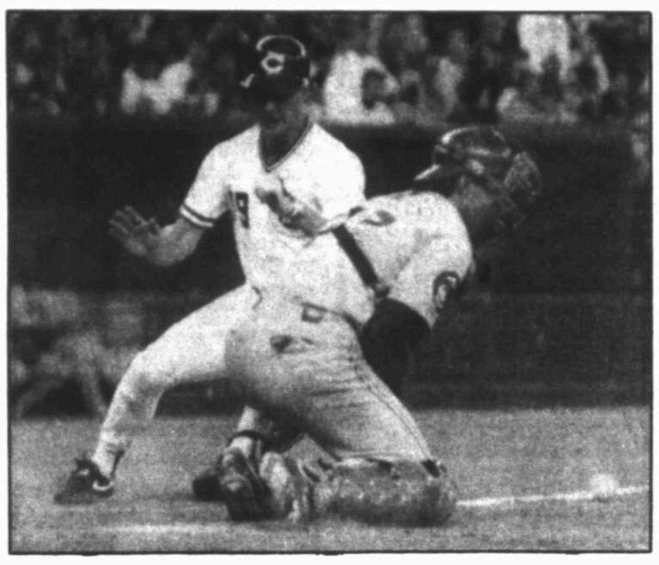

WICHITA FALLS — Ennis Whatley scored 29 points and handed out 10 assists Saturday night as Wichita Falls won the Continental Basketball Association title with a 102-90 victory over the Quad City Thunder.

Whatley, whose 8 rebounds left him two shy of a triple-double, was named the most valuable player in the series, which the Texans won 4-3. He averaged 23.3 points and seven assists for the series.

Other Texans in double figures included Derrick Taylor, who added 24 points and six assists, and Rob Rose, who had 15 points and 11 rebounds.

Wichita was in command throughout the game, taking an 11-10 lead at the 8:49 mark in the first quarter and never trailing again. But the Thunder stayed close and only trailed 26-23 at the end of the period.

The Texans opened the second quarter by scoring seven unanswered points, and eventually built a 15-point lead. Wichita lead 50-36 at intermission.

Pirates wallop New York, 10-1

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bobby Bonilla drove in four runs and Randy Tomlin and Bob Patterson combined on a four-hitter as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the New York Mets.

Bonilla went 3-for-5 with three singles and a sacrifice fly as the Pirates got 16 hits and won for the ninth time in 11 games. He is 13-for-32 in eight road games this season, a .406 average.

David Cone (2-1) lost for the first time in eight career decisions against the Pirates. Cone gave up five runs and nine hits in five innings before he was hit for.

Tomlin (2-0) allowed all four hits, walked one and struck out none. Patterson finished with hitless relief.

Mike LaValliere had three singles and drove in two runs and Curt Wilkerson doubled and singled twice.

Bonilla's run-scoring single gave Pittsburgh the lead in the first, and the Pirates added four runs as they batted around in the second. Orlando Merced, Andy Van Slyke and Bonilla hit RBI singles and another run scored on an error by Hubie Brooks in right field.

Howard Johnson hit his third home run of the year in the bottom of the inning for the Mets' only run.

Pittsburgh added three runs in the seventh off Pete Schourek on an RBI single by Bonilla and a two-run single by LaValliere. Van Slyke and Bonilla hit sacrifice flies in the eighth off Jeff Innis.

NL Roundup

Two of Charlton's first eight pitches were wild, setting the tone for his shortest appearance in four starts.

Charlton, riding a streak of 15 shutout innings, gave up a leadoff single to Jerome Walton, threw a wild pitch, walked Ryne Sandberg, then bounced another pitch to put both runners in scoring position. Grace's groundout brought Walton home.

Charlton walked Gary Scott with two out in the second and Boskie homered over the left-field wall. It was the first homer by a Cubs pitcher since Mitch Williams hit one off Don Aase on Sept. 18, 1989.

Cardinals 2, Expos 1

ST. LOUIS — Montreal lost its seventh straight game as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Expos behind the strong pitching of Ken Hill.

The Expos have scored just one run in their last 35 innings and are 5-13, the worst start in club history. Montreal had just six hits against four pitchers.

St. Louis won for the fifth time in six games as Hill (2-1) allowed four hits in six innings, walked three and struck out one. Cris Carpenter and Scott Terry pitched one inning each and Lee Smith finished for his seventh save.

ANGELS: Sconiers homers for Haloes

the best with what he's got. I think he showed a lot of guts," said Long, who did not know about the injury until after San Antonio had done its damage.

The telling signs came early in the eighth, as Brian Traxler led off with a double to right, then it got worse: a full count base on balls for Brett Magnusson, a sacrifice bunt by Bryan Baar, a two-run single for Braulio Castillo, a single from Jorge Alvarez, a two-RBI double from Steve Finken, then mercifully a flyout to right field before Eric Young tripled for a RBI. Robertson finished his appearance with a walk to Jose Munoz on four pitches.

"I knew he didn't have as good a stuff as he always has, but he didn't give any indication he was hurt," Long said in a disconsolate locker room after the game.

While Robertson took the loss for his first decision of the year, the Mission's Dennis Springer (1-1) picked up his first win as he baffled Angel hitters with his knuckleball. Springer lasted seven innings, giving up four hits and three runs while striking out five.

Angel designated hitter Daryl Sconiers was the only Midland batter who could claim a moral victory over Springer, with a solo home run for the Angels' first hit of the game in the third inning, and a single in the sixth.

"I think we're getting into situations where, when you haven't been winning, everybody is going up there trying to make things happen, especially with runners in scoring position. That's when we really try too much," Long said.

If a bright spot could be found in the loss for the Angels, it was that Butcher finally lasted more than a few innings. In his first three starts, he compiled 10 innings of work and a 19.80 ERA.

Though he walked four and hit two batters Saturday, he struck out four and lowed his ERA by more than five runs, to 14.06. Also, Long wasn't overly displeased with the hit bastmen.

"He was throwing strikes and throwing inside. We tell everybody to throw inside (to back hitters off the plate), and he's been doing it, but probably not as well as he did tonight," Long added.

Leading the way offensively for the Missions were Magnusson with a 3-for-4 performance with two doubles and two runs scored, and Young (2-for-4 with two RBI and the triple).

The Angels will the play the second of their five-game home stand at 6 p.m. tonight, with the Famous Chicken as a special attraction. All five games are against San Antonio.

LEE: District 3-5A foes as of yet undecided ahead 7-5 when Firkins smashed a 390-footer to dead center with Mike Lambert on second and Keith Bell on first.

"I finally got a chance (to play). You just have to take what you can get," said Firkins, who has caught more bullpen pitches than he cares to think about. "He (Bobcat starter Ethan Lopez) started me off with a curveball and made me look real bad, but then he came back with a high fastball. I was just seeing the ball real well today."

As much as Lee proved by coming back twice, San Angelo showed its collective heart in the sixth by burning Lee reliever Julian Urquidez for four big runs before Jeff Johnston put out the fire for the Rebs.

That was the cue for Lee's latest in a string of late-inning comebacks this season. Behind 9-7 with one out, Abel Rodriguez began the rally with a full-count walk, then Todd Robinson singled to right field, moving courtesy runner Smily Hinojos to third. Then with Mike Lambert at bat, Robinson stole second and Bobcat shortstop Johnny Velez missed the throw from catcher David Cedillo, allowing Hinojos to score and Robinson to take third as the ball skittered into center field.

Lambert also drew a base on balls from San Angelo reliever James Carter, putting runners on the corners for Bell. With an 0-1 count on Bell, Carter threw a wild pitch that let Robinson cross the plate to tie the game, then Bell drove a double to left to knock in the game winner.

Johnston shut out San Angelo in the seventh to nail down the win and push his season record to 12-1.

NOTES : In other 4-5A games, Abilene Cooper beat Odessa Permian 3-1 and Odessa High downed Abilene High 12-5. ... In District 3-5A, where Lee and Midland High's playoff opponents reside, Lubbock Monterey and Lubbock Coronado are tied for the league lead at 9-2 each. Monterey beat Amarillo High 10-7 Saturday in Amarillo, dropping the Sandies to 9-3. Amarillo is open Tuesday, while Coronado closes at Amarillo Palo Duro and Monterey hosts Amarillo Tascosa.

Golf legend Byron Nelson won't miss his own tournament.

Health won't sideline Nelson

Associated Press

■ The 23rd annual Byron Nelson Classic, May 2-5.

IRVING, Texas — Byron Nelson couldn't make it to Augusta National Golf Club for The Masters this year, but nagging ailments won't keep him away from the tournament that bears his name this week.

"I wouldn't miss it," said the 79-year-old Nelson. "I'll be there."

The Four Seasons Resort and Club at Las Colinas and its TPC course is just a short drive from Roanoke, Texas, where Nelson has his "Fairway Ranch."

His health problems in recent years were not helped any by an accident in his workshop when he severely cut his hand with a bandsaw. But he's always attended the tournament.

"By being at the tournament is my way of giving something back to golf which has been so good to me," Nelson said.

The GTE Byron Nelson Classic is the only PGA tournament named in honor of a golfer. With his permission and participation, sponsors decided in 1968 to name the tournament for him.

Nelson holds the PGA record for consecutive victories, 11 in 1945 during an amazing stretch of golf from March to August. He won five majors, including The Masters twice, the PGA Championship twice, and the U.S. Open.

The Dallas tournament dates back to 1944 when a young Bryon Nelson won the inaugural event at Lakewood Country Club.

The field at the Nelson Classic is usually one of the most attractive on the PGA Tour. Many pros play in it just because of Nelson.

"A lot of the pros come here because of their respect for Byron," said Ben Crenshaw, who won the tournament in 1983.

The list of winners is most impressive: Tom Watson (four times), Jack Nicklaus (twice), Payne Stewart, Ray Floyd, Lanny Wadkins, Miller Barber, Bruce Devlin, Chi Chi Rodriguez, Craig Stadler, Andy Bean, Fred Couples, and Bruce Lietzke, all since Nelson put his name on the trophy.

The Dallas tournament already had a history of great champions. Besides Nelson, the winners included Sam Snead (three times), Ben Hogan, Don January, Peter Thompson, Julius Boros, Charles Coody and Roberto De Vicenzo.

"There's great history in the Dallas tournament," said Crenshaw, who is something of a golf history buff. "Just look who won it."

Stewart, who played in his first tournament in 10 weeks by finishing fourth at the Heritage Classic in Hilton Head, S.C., was expected to defend his title in the 12th oldest tournament on the PGA Tour.

The 6,767-yard, par-70 TPC course was designed by Jay Morrish with Nelson and Crenshaw serving as player consultants.

Officials of the Salesmanship Club-sponsored event just hope they can get a break from the weather.

Eight inches of rain forced cancellation of the Pro-Am last year and the tournament was shortened to 54 holes. Local radio station helicopters were used to help fan dry the course.

Stewart was 8-under par for the three days the players sloshed along the fairways.

Rocket crashes, burns

Associated Press

PHILDELPHIA — Rocket Ismail, the highest-paid athlete in pro sports, ran like an amateur Saturday.

Ismail finished last in an eight-man field in the 100-meter dash at the Penn Relays.

"I knew what the results would be," said Ismail, the former Notre Dame football star who last week signed a contract worth as much as $26 million with the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

"The way things have gone for me the last 2½ or 3 weeks, I hadn't had a chance to work out. But, what the heck, it was good to participate."

If Ismail fulfills his contract with the Argonauts, he will make more money per year than any athlete in team sports. But on Saturday, he ran for free.

Ismail started strongly and burst into the lead, but the Rocket's engine virtually conked out in the second half of the race. He finished in a pedestrian 10.61 seconds, far behind winner Jon Drummond of Texas Christian (10.23).

Ismail ran the fastest time of the indoor season in the 55-meter dash, but wasn't in shape for the longer distance. It was only his second 100-meter dash as a collegian and his first appearance in the Penn Relays since his high school days in Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

"Talent will get you to 50 meters, but after that, you have to be in shape," Ismail said.

Ismail, who was the Pennsylvania high school champion in the 100 meters, was anxious to compete in front of his homestate fans.

After Derwin Hall of Texas false-started and was ruled out of the race, Ismail protested. Ismail had been guilty of a false start earlier, but was allowed to continue.

"I told him (an official) that if he (Hall) was disqualified, I wouldn't run," Ismail said.

Bulls work on perfecting offense

Associated Press

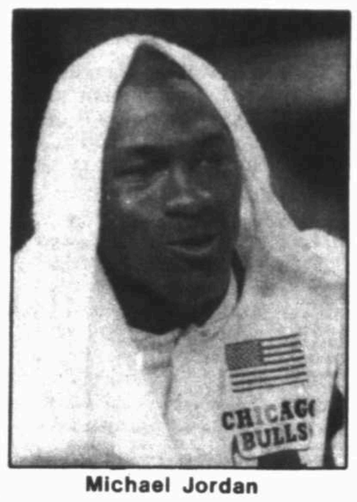

■ New York Knicks at Chicago Bulls, 2:30 p.m., NBC (KTPX-Channel 9).

CHICAGO — Here's some bad news for the New York Knicks, who were handed a 126-85 beating by the Chicago Bulls Thursday night in the opening game of their best-of-five NBA playoff series.

Coach Phil Jackson put the Bulls through an extended workout on offense Friday because "We want better execution than we had Thursday night."

How much better can it get?

The Bulls shot 52.4 from the field on 44-of-84 shots including 6-of-10 from three-point range. Michael Jordan scored 28 points while playing only 32 minutes, Scottie Pippen added 25. The Bulls' much-maligned bench contributed 47 points with B.J. Armstrong getting 18 and Craig Hodges 16.

Michael Jordan

"We started slowly," said Jackson, recalling the Bulls didn't take their first lead until 5:20 remained in the first quarter. "We didn't shoot well. Most of our shots came on layups. We can play better offense than we played. That's why we're practicing offense execution."

Whatever, the 41-point loss was the worst in New York playoff history, exceeding a 130-90 defeat by Philadelphia in 1978. It was the Bulls' biggest playoff victory margin. And they did it by holding the feared Patrick Ewing to six points, the first time Ewing had been under double figures in 227 games.

"I have no quarrel with our defense," said Jackson. "Our defensive effort was great. We had terrific defensive pressure on Ewing."

All of which left Ewing flustered and frustrated and looking forward to Sunday's rematch in Chicago Stadium. Ewing attempted only seven shots, had three of his five fouls in the first 17 minutes and committed five of his team's 27 turnovers.

Those turnovers led to 49 Chicago points.

But much was being made of stopping Ewing, who averaged 26.6 points and 11.2 rebounds this season.

"They whipped us but now, it's all about pride," said Ewing, who said he was tired of hearing about how Bill Cartwright defends him so well because Cartwright knows his moves.

"Let's not get him too riled up," said Cartwright, an ex-Knick who used to practice against Ewing daily. "I know his moves and I know where he's going. We have their plays and calls as they have ours. The idea is to deny him the ball. But I'm sure he'll take more than seven shots Sunday."

Pippen was asked if this could be a short series and he would only say "If we play like we did Thursday night, we'll be all right."

That's for sure. But Jordan warned his teammates about the Knicks' ability to come back.

"Last year Boston killed them in the first two games and they came back to win the next three," said Jordan, who attributed the opening romp to defense.

Out of traction, back in uniform

Associated Press

■ Indiana Pacers at Boston Celtics, 11:50 a.m., NBC (KTPX/Channel 9).

BOSTON — Larry Bird was out of the hospital and on the basketball court Saturday, confident his ailing back would allow him to play in Sunday's second playoff game against the Indiana Pacers.

He also was confident he could improve on his dramatic performance in Friday night's opener. He had 21 points, 12 rebounds and 12 assists and sparked the Boston Celtics down the stretch to a 127-120 victory.

"I just have to be prepared to play my best," he said Saturday. "I feel like I can play better. I feel all right today."

Bird played 41 minutes Friday night, much longer than expected. He had missed seven consecutive games with a painful back before returning for last Sunday's final regular-season game. Then he sat out all four days of practice last week.

After Friday night's game, he spent the night in traction at New England Baptist Hospital. Then he went home for breakfast and to Hellenic College in Brookline, Mass., where the team practiced.

He didn't work out with his teammates but got some shooting in.

Coach Chris Ford, who said he didn't know until shortly before Friday's game whether Bird could play, felt the performance "adds to his legend. It's truly amazing. Anyone who has ever had back pain knows just how difficult it was that he was able to play the way he played.

"I was totally surprised by how well he played."

Indiana played an excellent game for the first 43 minutes. Then Bird led the Celtics on a 10-0 run with four points, three assists, a defensive rebound and a steal that gave them a 120-110 lead with 2:07 left.

The mere presence of Bird, however, doesn't guarantee victory for the Celtics, who are 27-2 in their last 29 home games against the Pacers.

If Boston loses Sunday, it faces the next two games of the best-of-5 series in Indiana, where it has lost its last five games.

The Pacers' strengths were on display for much of the opener — strong penetration by the point guards and accurate outside shooting when they passed the ball back out.

"Our players would sink down into the middle, and (the Pacers) would be able to reverse the ball on the perimeter," Boston assistant coach Jon Jennings said.

Chuck Person, with three 3-point baskets, and Reggie Miller, with two, benefitted from that. But Miller missed all four of his shots in the first half.

"I wasn't aggressive enough in the first half," he said. "The next game I'm going to try to get into it earlier."

Miller still led Indiana with 24 points and Person had 23.

"People think the Pacers are inferior to the Celtics, but the guys on this team don't think so," Person said. "We match up with them fairly well.

"We didn't play up to par, and the Celtics played their best."

Boston's Brian Shaw disagreed.

"I think they gave us the best that they had," he said.

The Celtics were hurt by Rik Smits, who had 17 points and four blocks in 19 minutes, and Detlef Schrempf, who had 15 points and 10 rebounds.

"There were moments that we stopped them, but their versatility is so great they could go to other options," Ford said.

"We have to concentrate on isolations by Detlef and Miller," Jennings said.

The Pacers, second only to the Celtics in free throw shooting during the regular season, also would like to go to the line more. They made 14 of 20 foul shots in the first half, compared to Boston's 15-of-17. But the Celtics were 22-for-26 in the second half, while Indiana was 11-for-13.

Indiana also needs to force more turnovers. Boston had just 10 in the opener.

(From 1B)

The Golden State defense held the Spurs to 32 fewer points than on Thursday, when Willie Anderson had 38 points and David Robinson and Rod Strickland each had 30, as many combined as the entire team had Saturday.

Robinson led the Spurs Saturday with 28 points, 15 rebounds and three blocked shots, while Terry Cummings had 26 points and 12 rebounds and Anderson had 19. Strickland was limited to 8 points.

"They played great — you can't take anything away from them," Spurs coach Larry Brown said. "Everybody they played came up with big shots, big steals and big rebounds. We just never got into the flow of the game."

San Antonio made an unsuccessful comeback effort, moving to within 10 points in the last four minutes of the game.

"We didn't move the ball well all day," Robinson said. "We are not a jump shooting team, and we give them the advantage when we shoot a lot of jumpers like we did today."

Spurs forward Sean Elliot left the game with 6:50 remaining in the second period after breaking his nose. He was expected to play in Game 3 Wednesday.

Elliott collided with Warriors forward Tyrone Hill as Hill made a layup.

Immediately after the game, police reported that a bomb threat was made at HemisFair Arena, prompting the evacuation of the building, though most fans already had left. Players and coaches hurried to leave, and some postgame interviews were held at a nearby hotel.

Lakers 109, Rockets 98

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Vlade Divac scored a career playoff-high 23 points, grabbed 10 rebounds and blocked three shots, leading the Los Angeles Lakers to a victory over the Houston Rockets and a 2-0 lead in their first-round playoff series.

The Lakers can wrap up the best-of-5 series Tuesday night in Houston. If the Rockets win, a fourth game will be played in Houston on Thursday night.

Divac, the 23-year-old Yugoslavian center in his second NBA season, has picked a good time to play his best basketball since joining the Lakers.

In the series-opener, he had 17 points, 11 rebounds and five blocks in his team's 94-92 victory.

The Lakers broke open Saturday's game by outscoring the Rockets 21-8 to turn a slim 78-74 lead early in the fourth quarter into a 99-82 advantage with 5:08 remaining.

Houston wasn't closer than nine points after that.

James Worthy led the Lakers in scoring with 29 points, 14 in the final quarter. Byron Scott had 17 points, Sam Perkins added 14 and Magic Johnson had 13 points and 21 assists for Los Angeles.

Vernon Maxwell led the Rockets with 31 points. He made six of his playoff-record 13 attempts from 3-point range.

Hakeem Olajuwon had 23 points and 11 rebounds and Kenny Smith added 19 points for Houston.

The Lakers led 48-41 at halftime and by nine points four times early in the third quarter before the Rockets, sparked by Maxwell, battled back.

Maxwell scored 11 straight points, the final two on a layup which tied the game 58-all with 6:10 left in the period.

A short jumper by Olajuwon put the Rockets ahead 60-58 before a tip-in by Divac and a three-point play by Johnson gave the Lakers a three-point lead, putting them ahead for good.

Neither team led by more than four points during the rest of the third quarter, which ended with the Lakers on top 74-70.

The Rockets scored the game's first six points and led 11-2 after 2:33 of play.

But then, they went cold, going 5:44 without scoring while the Lakers ran off 14 straight points to take a 16-11 lead.

The Rockets tied the game 16-all before the Lakers scored the final seven points of the first period to take a 23-16 advantage. Houston made just seven of its 24 field goal attempts in the opening 12 minutes.

Suns 102, Jazz 92

PHOENIX — Jeff Hornacek scored 25 points and backup center Andrew Lang added a playoff career-high 20 as the Phoenix Suns rebounded from an embarrassing loss to beat the Utah Jazz and even their series at one game apiece.

The best-of-5 Western Conference series now shifts to Salt Lake City for Game 3 Tuesday night and Game 4 Thursday night.

Utah, which has won only six times in 45 games at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum in the all-time series, routed the Suns 129-90 here Thursday night.

Phoenix has beaten the Jazz in both of their previous playoff series after overcoming first-game defeats. Phoenix won a best-of-7 series in six games in 1984 and a best-of-5 series in five last year.

The Suns shot only 42 percent from the field, but their reserves outscored Utah's bench players 36-15. That helped Phoenix overcome poor shooting by starters Tom Chambers and Kevin Johnson, who were 5-for-17 and 2-for-11, respectively.

76ers 116, Bucks 112 OT

MILWAUKEE — Rick Mahorn's layup broke a tie with 19 seconds left in overtime and Ron Anderson converted two free throws with 2.5 seconds to go as the Philaelphia 76ers beat the Milwaukee Bucks for a 2-0 lead in their playoff series.

Game 3 of the best-of-5 series will be played Tuesday in Philadelphia. No team has come back from losing the first two games of a best-of-5 NBA series at home.

Anderson led the Sixers with 24 points and Charles Barkley had 22 points and 13 rebounds. Alvin Robertson led Milwaukee with 31 points and Jay Humphries had 24.

There were three ties in overtime before Mahorn took a bounce pass from a double-teamed Barkley underneath and scored to make it 114-112.

SuperSonics not about to give up hope

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — All season, the Seattle SuperSonics played the Portland Trail Blazers close only to lose at the finish. Game 1 of their first-round playoff series was no different.

"We know we can play with them" the Sonics' Eddie Johnson said after Clyde Drexler's fourth-quarter offensive explosion lifted the Blazers to a 110-102 victory on Friday night. "We're 0-5 for the year but we know we can win one of these."

Drexler scored a career playoff-high 39 points, 19 in the final quarter. His output was the second-highest ever for a Blazer in a playoff game, one less than Mychal Thompson's 40-point performance against Kansas City in 1981.

Jerome Kersey added 31 points for the Blazers, who'll try to pull within a game of a sweep in the best-of-5 series on Sunday night.

Drexler scored 10 of Portland's final 14 points and made two crucial steals down the stretch. He also had nine assists and seven rebounds.

"He was unbelievable," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "You talk about superstars in this league. Very few guys can do what he did. He just took over."

Seattle had no one who could handle the Blazers' star down the stretch.

"In the end," Sonics' coach K.C. Jones said, "it was Drexler's show."

Seattle never led after the first three minutes. But Portland's biggest margin was just 11 and the Blazers were on top only 98-96 after Seattle's Michael Cage made two free throws with 2:06 to play.

Drexler boosted the lead to four on a driving layup with 1:52 to go, then made it 102-96 with two free throws 24 seconds later.

The Sonics narrowed the margin to four three more times, but could get no closer.

Johnson scored 33, 25 in the second half, to lead the Sonics. Ricky Pierce added 17 and Sedale Threatt had 15 for Seattle.

The Blazers have insisted all week that they expect a tough battle from the Sonics.

"We've been trying to tell you guys all along that this Seattle team is not going to lay down and die," Portland's Buck Williams said.

As happened throughout the regular season series against Seattle, Portland made the big plays down the stretch.

"When we get to the last six minutes, we're really mentally tough," Adelman said. "I don't think it has anything to do with Seattle. In our huddles and timeouts, all we talked about was we must defend, we must rebound. We didn't even talk about offense."

The Sonics bench outscored their Portland counterparts 26-11. The Blazers' reserves were 4-for-14 from the field, 1-for-10 in the first half. Portland playmaker Terry Porter made just one of seven field goal tries.

Still, Portland had enough weapons to win

"What killed us was second shots and turnovers," Jones said. "We did a good job of hanging tough to make a game of it. And we certainly liked the tempo of the game."

Greenwood girls place third 400 relay at region

Staff Report

ODESSA — Greenwood's girls track team came away from Saturday's Class 3A Region I track meet here without a state qualifyer, but it did get a third-place boost from the 400-meter relay team.

Tabitha Stanley, Heather Donnell, Kim Hunnicutt and Brandy Fowler combined for a 50.61 to finish behind Tulia and Crane, respectively.

Alonna Smith, Angela Cooper, Rachael Downey and Nicole Jeffery provided Crane's state-qualifying relay team.

Fowler was also sixth in the long jump with a 16-1¼ effort.

Other Greenwood entrants not qualifying for the finals were Gena Hodges in the 800 and 1600 and Melinda Rose in the high jump.

Alicia Thompson gave Reagan County a state qualifyier in the shot put, heaving the sphere 37-6¾ and capturing second place.

And Crane's Hector Murguia is going to state on the boys side thanks to a second-place 10:06.09 3200-meter run.

In Class A regional track action Saturday in Levelland, Rankin's Jeff Jones finished sixth in the 300-intermediate hurdles and the Red Devils earned another sixth place in the 400-meter relay.

Jones cleared the hurdles course in 42.44, while the relay squad posted a 58.00.

Canadiens still have chance against Bruins

Associated Press

MONTREAL — Shayne Corson, who tied the game late in the third period, scored the game-winner at 17:47 of overtime as the Montreal Canadiens stayed alive in the NHL playoffs with a 3-2 victory over the Boston Bruins on Saturday night.

The victory tied the series at 3-3 and sent it back to Boston for a decisive Game Seven on Monday night.

CHAPS: MC men, women bound for national tourney

(From 1B)

"We had a lot of humidity both days, so we got a good look at our conditioning," MC tennis coach Joe Williams said.

A slight rain delay in Waco hampered playing conditions early in the afternoon. Tyler, site of the national tournaments next month, is normally excessive in its heat and humidity during the national finals.

"The McLennan men played very well and gave us a good match," Williams said. "The women's match was pretty much the same, in terms of a run over. We had one match we let get out of hand, but it all ought to be good preparation to getting them into the national tournament."

Only one match went to three sets in both categories. Adriana Isaza, playing No. 4 singles, defeated Sharon Siddique, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1. David Draper, the men's No. 3 player for MC, disposed of Paco Santillan, 3-6, 6-1, 6-2.

As was the case in semifinal action Friday, both teams clinched victories with five singles wins; doubles teams did not see action because of the wins.

The men's national tournament is May 20-25, the women will play for the national JUCO title the week before, May 13-17. Both tournaments will be held in Tyler.

Final results at the National Junior College Athletic Association Region V tennis tournament, held at the Charlie McLeary Tennis Center in Waco:

Midland College women def. Cooke County Community College, 6-0
(MC women listed first)

1. Myriam Berthe def. Jenny del Valle, 6-2, 6-1; 2. Seiko Ichioka def. Tammy Rose, 6-0, 6-2; 3. Janneke Garos def. Saiko Matsuda, 6-2, 6-0; 4. Adriana Isaza def. Sharon Siddique, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1; 5. Boba Tzvetkova def. Maria Garcia, 6-0, 6-1; 6. Caroline Reynolds def. Linda Hellstrom, 6-1, 6-2.

Midland Collehge men def. McLennan Community College, 6-0
(MC men listed first)

Library's 'friends' need assistance

Sixteenth century Dutch priest and scholar Desiderius Erasmus once noted, "When I get a little money, I buy books; and if any is left, I buy food and clothes."

That seems a particularly apropos thought for the Friends of the Library's current drive to raise $300,000 by June 30 in order to qualify for a challenge grant from Abell-Hanger Foundation. The Friends of the Library organization has already raised $200,000. The grant would fund the first expansion at Midland County Public Library in 30 years and help to relieve crowded conditions. That would mean more space would be available for more books.

In those 30 years the library has grown to include many new features — computers for public use, tapes, a compact disc collection as well as 10 microfilm readers. At the same time the library's stock has been expanded to include genealogical materials, pre-school materials and other offerings important to an active reading public.

Serving the needs of that reading public is Midland County Public Library's primary concern and Librarian Sandra S. Wegner says the expansion project, which is expected to add 20,000 square feet to the facility's floor space, will help it better serve all Midlanders.

Ideally, Midland County would be able build a multi-story all-new library facility that would provide space for all the library's new services and features and include additional space for the county museum, now located in the lower level at Midland County Public Library. But in these tight economic times such a facility — and the resulting cost — would be unreasonable. It's better then that the additional space be acquired through an expansion of the present library facility perhaps with the moving of some library departments to make them better accessible to elderly and handicapped people.

County Commissioner Durward Wright said that several items in the expansion are yet to be determined, but that the final plan will provide a better situation for all facets of the county library.

The expansion, tentatively scheduled to begin in October or shortly afterwards, would also include a major enlargement of the children's department, an expanded mezzanine area, installation of an elevator and construction of a meeting room.

The plan is exciting because it will make Midland County Public Library much more accessible and beneficial to the Midland populace, which is largely well-educated and discriminating in its source material.

Of course the end goal is to obtain more books covering a wider range of information, which will make the county library a much greater resource to the information-hungry public. Information is the business of books and books are the business of Midland County Public Library. The public library is available for use by all those seeking information even when other libraries in the community are closed, she noted.

In a recent letter to the Midland Reporter-Telegram, the librarian noted the importance of libraries. "Democracy," she wrote, "depends on a literate population with access to information. I cannot imagine a progressive community, much less a free nation, without public libraries."

We cannot either. Abell-Hanger Foundation is to be commended for its assistance in making the library expansion possible. For that reason, Midland residents should make their dollars available to help the Friends of the Library reach the $300,000 goal.

Concern persists over Sandinistas

Nicaragua's President Violeta Chamorro won warm applause from Congress and assurances of financial help from President Bush in her U.S. visit last week. But concern persists here over the role of Marxist Sandinistas in her government — and with good reason.

It isn't that anyone doubts Chamorro's commitment to democracy and free-market economics for her poverty-stricken country. But when she took office a year ago after defeating Daniel Ortega, the incumbent and Sandinista leader, she retained Ortega's brother, Humberto, as army commander. She defends the move as a gesture of national reconciliation after years of bitter conflict. But there was a more pragmatic reason: The Sandinistas lost at the polls, but they still had the guns.

President Bush promised to help Chamorro raise $365 million in grants and loans to pay off Nicaragua's debts to international lending agencies and qualify for more credit. But he also pointedly told her he hoped "all elements of Nicaraguan society will work with you for the good of your country."

The remark was a thinly veiled reference to Sandinista influence on Nicaraguan policy a year after their election defeat. They are not only in charge of the military; they are a powerful bloc in the national legislature and dominate the major labor unions, including the government bureaucracy.

The Sandinistas and their sympathizers also have resisted the Chamorro government's efforts to stabilize Nicaragua's shattered economy. This discourages the foreign investment the country needs so desperately.

After their election defeat, Sandinista leaders bragged that they would rule from the bottom. And they will, unless Chamorro stands up to them. At the same time, she must have economic aid from the United States and other free nations that rejoiced in her upset victory.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, April 28, the 118th day of 1991. There are 247 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On April 28, 1788, Maryland became the seventh state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

On this date:

In 1758, the fifth president of the United States, James Monroe, was born in Westmoreland County, Va.

In 1967, heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali refused to be inducted into the Army, the same day Gen. William C. Westmoreland told Congress the U.S. "would prevail in Vietnam."

Shirley Temple Black rallies for Czechs

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — This East European nation is having a tough time going cold turkey from communism to capitalism, but Czechoslovakia will make it.

Anderson

One who believes in the government of President Vaclav Havel is the U.S. Ambassador to Czechoslovakia, Shirley Temple Black. She is bullish on Czechoslovakia's future. Her opinions are not those of a naive girl in curls, but those of a seasoned diplomat with more years in public service than in the movies.

She has won respect by being honest in every instance, even when it was not what the Czech government or people wanted to hear — or the State Department and Bush administration, for that matter. She has also won it by believing in the Czech people.

Several knowledgeable sources credit her with nailing down major deals between the Czechs and reticent American corporations, and cutting through the bureaucratic red tape to make those deals work.

"I'm very aggressive for U.S. business here," Black told us. "There have been a lot of businesses coming out to look — a lot of fishing expeditions and tire-kicking. It's time more signed up."

The Czechs are not asking for handouts, Black is quick to point out. They want trade, not aid. Their burden from the state-run economy can't be lightened overnight by a stroke of the American pen, like the forgiveness of Polish debt, because, ironically, the Communists who once ran Czechoslovakia didn't get into much debt.

In a star-crossed set of circumstances, Black was in Prague in August 1968 when the Soviet tanks rolled in to crush the brief "Prague Spring" movement. She was there to ask Czechoslovakia to join an international Multiple Sclerosis Society. It was a frightening time and she was forced to hole up in her hotel. "Nothing crushes freedom as substantially as a tank," she remembered.

The following year, President Nixon appointed her the U.S. delegate to the United Nations, and in 1974 she became the ambassador to Ghana. President Bush made her ambassador to Czechoslovakia in the summer of 1989, when neither was aware of the momentous changes about to occur in Eastern Europe.

When Black arrived that fall, she lost no time in meeting with top dissident, playwright Vaclav Havel. They were clandestine meetings. "It was dangerous for dissidents to meet the ambassador," she explained, but well worth it for both sides. She used their information to press for better treatment of political prisoners.

And she could not resist needling the Communist government. She insisted on having her license plate read with her initials, "STB," just to irritate the government. These are the same initials for the dreaded former Czech secret police.

In late October 1989, Black was out jogging in yellow Reeboks around Prague and ran into a pro-democracy demonstration. The anti-Communist Czechs were so fervent that they didn't notice the petite ambassador being pressed up against a plate glass window in the crowd. "I am not very tall," she said. "And I remember thinking I might get knocked down and that will be the end of me." It seemed ironic to her that she might be trampled by pro-democracy fervor. But she eased her way out of the crowd, taking two and a half hours to get back to her residence a few miles away.

Today, Black and Havel have a close working relationship. He consults with her, and she listens to his needs, trying to be supportive where America and Czechoslovakia have mutual interests.

Striking a blow for the increase of ignorance

The dumbness is spreading, so naturally they are closing the libraries.

"A few muddled thinkers," they said, "wanted to close the schools. They said that since the schools were the source of the dumbness while the libraries were keeping learning from going out of style, it was the schools we ought to close."

Baker

I said clearer heads had presumably proven that the schools were the best defense against dumbness.

"No," they said, "we all agreed that the amount of dumbness coming out of the schools was staggering. However, the schools do keep children off the streets five or six hours a day."

Did they, then, regard the schools as child-care institutions? "Not just child care," they replied. "The schools also create financial benefits. By supplying driver education, the schools lower the auto accident rate, thus holding down costs of car insurance and medical care."

While conceding that these were valuable fruits of schooling, I asked if they thought child-care service, even when coupled with reduced insurance and medical costs, justified the heavy tax burden of keeping the schools open.

"Moreover," they went on, "don't overlook the vital job the schools are doing by concentrating a high percentage of our armed youth in an environment safely isolated from the milieu of the average taxpayer."

I agreed it was wise to keep our armed youth in the discipline of the schoolhouse. But why put this risk on teachers, the unarmed portion of the student body and students who are slow on the draw?

"Are you suggesting the schools should give fast-draw training?" they asked. "Because if you are, you obviously don't know about the desperate shortage of fast-draw instructors."

Perhaps if they fired the teachers who were spreading most of the dumbness, I said, they could use the payroll saving to have them retrained at a fast-draw teacher's college.

"You are very innocent," they said, "and it tries our patience. If we fire our best dumbness-spreading teachers, the consequences would be nasty. A strike by union teachers would close the schools, cutting off child-care services, condom supply and driver education, thus enraging taxpaying parents, creating an epidemic of venereal disease, causing a boom in the birth rate, setting off an upward spiral in the cost of auto insurance and flooding our shopping malls with Uzi-toting students."

Might it not also stop the spread of the dumbness?

"Exactly," they said. "And then wouldn't we be in a pickle! Without the spreading dumbness, there would be no rotten education system to blame for the failure of our magnificently paid corporate leaders to stay competitive with Japanese, Germans and Koreans.

"What's more," they said, "without the spreading dumbness, politicians would have no pretext to gull the voters by calling themselves education presidents and education governors and education mayors and proclaiming dynamic new programs for stopping the dumbness while announcing that somebody else will have to pay for it."

I observed that the luckless "somebody else" was invariably the same dumbbell who believed education presidents could enrich life for everybody without spending another dime. Fortunately, I noted, there were still a few people smart enough to know when they were being duped.

"Now you see why we closed the libraries," they said.

GEORGE WILL

Liberalism has become unpalatable to many

WASHINGTON — I subscribe to many small journals and to the Small Journal Theory of History, which is: Such publications are incubators of the large ideas that are history's propellant. The recent founding by some liberals of The American Prospect was politically significant as a sign that at least some of the liberal remnant have noticed how important The Public Interest has been in the vigor of conservatism.

Will

The new issue of The American Prospect grapples with a subject that has helped to make liberalism unpalatable to many Americans. In "Delectable Materialism," Michael Schudson, a sociologist, defends America's "consumer culture" from its critics, most of whom are liberals.

However, for as long as a high level of consumption has been possible, moralists have treated it as problematic. Schudson identifies five forms of disapproval.

Two are imports from Europe. The socialist criticism is that consumerism rests on exploitation of workers and, if they are allowed to participate in it, it enervates them, sapping their ardor for social transformation. The aristocratic criticism of consumerism is an aesthetic of snobbery: mass tastes are necessarily low.

Three other criticisms of consumerism are home-grown. The Puritan version faults consumption as a distraction from spirituality. The Quaker version condemns the multiplication of commodities as an offense against simplicity. The republican criticism is that the absorption of individuals in private satisfactions saps civic virtue.

The hostility toward consumer culture that has seeped into contemporary liberalism is an amalgam. There is Puritanism in liberal guise, as when Jimmy Carter, in his 1979 speech on America's malaise, said many Americans "worship" consumption and do not know that "consuming things does not satisfy our longing for meaning."

Advertising, liberal critics say, is today's ubiquitous instrument of social control. It is necessary to sustain capitalism once "natural" appetites are sated. Absent advertising to manufacture "artificial" consumer demand, the system would sag into stagnation.

Actually, the proliferation of doctrines attempting, in vain, to discourage consumerism (Puritan, Quaker, republican) suggests that American consumers need scant encouragement from advertisers.

The transformation of liberalism into a doctrine of condescension can be dated from the publication in 1958 of John Kenneth Galbraith's "The Affluent Society."

The idea that today's prosperity was brought into being by something bogus (advertising) and is bad in effect (the "worship" of misplaced "meaning" that Carter lamented) produced not only an unappealing agenda but, quite naturally, an undemocratic political process for pursuing it. Litigation was preferred to legislation as courts rather than Congress became the liberals' preferred instruments of social change. After all, if the people are debased in their tastes and barely rational in decision-making, then institutions that are representative should for that very reason be avoided.

Liberalism became a style of disdain, soon describing America as not only vulgar but sick, racist, sexist, imperialist. Liberalism began telling Americans that many of their desires (for big cars, neighborhood schools, and lots more) did not deserve respect.

Schudson says it is time to go "beyond the snickering, joking and invariably hypocritical posturing of most criticism of consumer culture" and to recognize "a certain dignity and rationality in the desire for material goods." Contempt for consumer culture is generally an affectation of comfortable people addicted to the pleasures of condescension. A generation late, the liberal readership of "The American Prospect" has been shown why this politically off-putting idea is also a moral mistake.

Proposed Gay-Lesbian Alliance Club at college

Some sexuality creates monster

Concerning the article on April 16 regarding western attitudes toward sexuality, I will not presume to express a personal opinion on sexual promiscuity and homosexuality, but I would suggest we observe the monster these have created in our society in AIDS and other social diseases.

I think these facts alone should be a guideline as to whether our laws should encourage or discourage these activities. And I cannot understand why we would not do everything possible to discourage them among our youth and on our college campuses.

Homosexuality and sexual promiscuity cannot be considered totally a moral issue when they have contributed so heavily to the decline in the health of the youth of our nation.

Alternate lifestyle offensive to God

I hope the majority of the students at Midland College will vote thumbs down for the Gay/Lesbian Alliance Club on campus. Homosexuality is blatant disrespect toward God. What man calls "alternate lifestyle" God calls an abomination.

I choose to believe God's word over man's. God's word is as true today for our 1990's generation as it was for our ancestors. Let's not have an abominable club associated with our college. Let's honor God in all facets of our community.

This letter is in response to the article in the newspaper April 16 about the possibility of forming a Gay/Lesbian Alliance Club.

Mrs. Elaine Golden
Midland

Gay-lesbian club concerns reader

Regarding your recent (April 16) article on the "talk show" at Midland College addressing the public perception of homosexuality, I would like to voice my concerns. Ronnie Anderson, a student from the University of Alabama, stated that "some people don't want to eat restaurant food prepared by homosexuals." May I quote from "Gays, Aids & You" by Rueda and Swartz, "Ninety percent of active homosexuals have hepatitis B due to oral/anal practices and rectal sodomy. Other diseases resulting from sodomy and homosexual practices are fecal incontinence (weakening of the sphincter muscle of the recipient) and liver disease due to hepatitis B; also, "Gay Bowel Syndrome" (acquisition of parasites due to unsanitary practices involving ingestion of human waste) which affects at least 40 percent of the male homosexual population."

We have enough diseases to battle without inviting additional ones brought about by a chosen lifestyle, which is contrary to nature. And let's not down-play the role of homosexuality in the epidemic of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. Unfortunately, the condom has proven not to be the cure-all.

I feel it would be in the best interest of our state if Texas remains "one of the few" to uphold its present sodomy laws.

Also, has our college not gotten along very well thus far without condom machines installed in the restrooms? Can birth control devices not still be purchased at any drug or grocery store in town?

Why does a Gay-Lesbian Alliance Club need to be formed at our Midland College? Can't those interested in such a club form independently, without involving our campus? I am concerned about active recruitment of our students.

Let's concentrate on academics and activities beneficial to our student body. As one of the panelists aptly stated, "This is a community college." We need to maintain the highest of standards.

Pittman will work hard for hospital

I commend the Midland Reporter-Telegram on endorsing Jean Pittman in the District Five race for the Midland County Hospital Board of Directors. Jean is a practical, straightforward person whose experience in business and many health-related civic activities can be of great benefit to the entire Midland community.

Jean is recognized for her unselfish commitment to every activity she undertakes. She will work hard to see that quality health care is available to all Midlanders while taxes are kept as low as possible.

Jean Pittman will offer creative solutions to the many complex issues facing our hospital district and I encourage voters in District five to elect her on May 4.

Jeff McCormick
Midland

Why didn't Pittman vote in election?

Public records indicate that David Mandell and Michael Roadcup, candidates for the District 5 seat on the Midland County Hospital District Board of Trustees, each voted in the recent hospital bond election, which was hotly contested.

These same records also indicate that the third candidate for this board, Jean Pittman, did NOT vote in that election. Why not? The electorate deserves to know before the election.

Bill Larkin
Midland

Voters encouraged to elect Pittman

Jean Pittman offers the business experience and civic interest in local health issues that qualify her to serve on the Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors.

Jean is a long-time Midland resident who operates her own business and still has had time to offer distinguished service on the local boards of the American Heart Association, Samaritan Counseling Center and Hospice. She is a creative problem-solver who is dedicated to having high quality health services available to all Midland residents while keeping taxes as low as possible.

Jean is especially well-suited to represent Midlanders on the Board of Directors and I encourage residents of District Five to vote for her on May 4.

Appreciation week honors volunteers

For more than 85 years, men and women have been volunteering to help children from single-parent homes by becoming Big Brothers and Big Sisters. The adults are carefully screened, selected and matched then serve as mentors and role models as well as provide the Little Brothers and Little Sisters with friendship and guidance.

The week of April 21-27 has been designated National Volunteer Appreciation Week and I would like to express my gratitude and appreciation, not only to the many wonderful volunteers who give of themselves but also to everyone who supports this worthy and very necessary activity. Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Midland has been helping children from single-parent homes in Midland since 1975. Currently, over 130 children are matched, but more than 140 children continue to wait for that special volunteer. For the children that could benefit from the services of Big Brothers/Big Sisters, the need is great!

If you know someone who volunteers as a Big Brother of Big Sister, express your appreciation for the work they are doing and perhaps consider becoming a volunteer yourself.

Prosecute killers, not owners of guns

A violent man with problems killed someone. A law was passed requiring gun registration. How futile this law is since guns are sold every day in gun shows and newspaper ads. No registration is required. But more importantly, why not prosecute the killer? If one of my dogs bites a mailman I don't give the dog counseling and put a chain on the other dogs.

John Hinckley tried to kill Ronald Reagan and James Brady. So they want me to wait 15 days before I can buy a gun. The Asians who killed the people in California in the Good Guys store waited 15 days. Again, why not prosecute them? They did the crime, not me.

I suggest an irrevocable death penalty upon conviction of murder or aggravated assault. It is deserved, necessary and just at that point. Do you really think Hinckley or Charles Manson or Henry Lee Lucas could be counseled into being OK neighbors? Prompt executions are the best education for progressive criminals.

It's frustrating to see criminals so protected and defended by the judges. Why can't they find a letter of the law that will prosecute rather than defend? I thought jails were supposed to be uncomfortable places. But some judges think criminals deserve better sleeping quarters than some poor families. Let's pass judgment against the lawbreakers, not the law followers.

Reader appreciates concern of police

I want to comment on the article in today's paper (Reporter-Telegram April 17) on the crackdown on intoxication.

Thank you Midland Police Dept. for taking the time to assist the TABC. This is better than having to hurry to the scene of a terrible traffic accident caused by a drunken driver who perhaps wiped out an entire family.

Thank you Police Chief Richard Czech for your concern on this issue.

I noticed in this article Bruce Riley of Riley's Night Club said he has become afraid to drink and drive. This is what we all hope to see, that everyone becomes afraid to drink and drive. Look at the lives that will be saved. Thank you again.

Most teachers, kids against longer year

I'm writing you about a subject that everybody I know, teachers and kids, hates even thinking about, all-year-long school.

I understand that we will have breaks during the year, but I still don't like it. It may be hard on some students, like for one thing, grades of many students might come down, since practically everybody has been used to the regular schedule. The system that we use today has been around for many, many years, and has worked out fine. Another thing is there might be even more high school drop-outs.

This is the way I feel, and if this does happen I know most everybody will not like it at all.

Proposed bond issues for schools

Poor schools will hold Midland back

I felt sick as I read the two letters to the editor opposing the school bond issue in the April 21 edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. I wonder if the people who are against any new taxes, regardless of the consequences, have visited any of our overcrowded and, in some cases, substandard schools. Yes, our children can "survive" in crowded conditions and without adequate libraries, science facilities, or even multipurpose rooms, but I want my children to do more than "survive" in Midland's educational system.

Please visit some of the schools and see for yourself how serious a problem we face. If either one of the propositions fail, Midland will continue to fall behind other school systems. Companies and families will not want to relocate to a town where education is considered unimportant. A school system with a poor reputation will hurt our pocketbooks far more than extra taxes amounting to a few dollars a month.

More taxes haven't increased scores

Since 1985 the Midland Independent School District has increased school taxes by some 43 percent. Many would argue that this increase was due only to declining property values, others would argue the increases were needed to keep apace with current educational trends and still others would argue that the increase has gone to support a grossly bloated administrative bureaucracy. No one would argue that these increases have failed to improve the quality of education that Midland's children have received. Test scores are down, dropout rates are up and administrative excuses run rampant.

The taxpayers are now being asked by Dr. Baressi and the school board to believe that by doubling our bond indebtedness we can improve test scores. The logic that better buildings and more administrative personnel make better students makes no sense at all. Better curriculum and better teachers make better students.

The taxpayers of Midland must send the message to the school board that we expect them to concentrate on building the minds of our children, not poorly conceived physical edifices. Just say NO to the May 4 school bond proposals.

Children deserve better environment

As a concerned citizen, parent and taxpayer of Midland, I favor both school propositions. Last November I visited four different schools to view the overcrowding problem. I was overwhelmed.

Santa Rita has more than 800 children stacked on top of each other and 500 of those children share four bathrooms. Classrooms in the hallways, conference rooms and workrooms that are for storing equipment are certainly not the best learning environments.

Travis Elementary has a nice facility except it is totally full right now with 100 more sixth graders coming next year.

Sam Houston Elementary was about the worst school we visited. The library is about the size of a small classroom, not allowing for all the books the children are required to have.

The cafeteria houses the strings class on the stage, PE class and janitors setting up for lunch all at one time. The food service manager's office is in the bathroom.

At Goddard Junior High, the hallways are so crowded you will get trampled if you stop. Many kids don't even try to go to the bathroom during the day because the long lines will make them late for class. Lunch is a zoo! Teachers monitor the crowd so it is not totally out of hand. The kids have to wait outside, no matter what the weather, until they can get in. We timed the last group of kids and they had about 8-10 minutes to go through the line, find a seat and eat before classtime. All this is not only difficult for the kids but also the faculty.

This community should look past the few dollars it will take each year and vote for both propositions. My husband and I were both educated in the Midland schools. We had a chance for a great education and we want to see others have that same chance. Each of you should investigate for yourself, you might be surprised at what you find.

This problem does not just affect the children, teachers and parents; it affects the entire community. Take a look at our future. I believe all our children deserve the very best learning environments. Overcrowding is not going away, it will only get worse. Vote yes for Proposition 1 and 2.

America's economy beginning to look brighter

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Our victory in the gulf gave us fresh faith in our political and military capabilities. Now, I'm glad to say, the signs are that we're also beginning to recover our economic self-confidence, even though the recession is still with us.

Hearst

Only a few months ago, many of the people who are supposed to know about such things were warning that America was headed for a banking crisis comparable to the run on the banks during the depression era.

It was hard to get through a day wthout some TV commentator or Washington columnist making chilling prophecies about the imminent collapse of our financial system.

But in the same way that the international banking crisis of the '80s, brought about by defaulting borrowers in Latin American and the Third World, turned out to be less disastrous than predicted, it now appears that our domestic banking troubles, as well as the savings and loan debacle, will prove manageable, after all.

Some banks are still in hot water, and the depressed real estate market means a lot of questionable loans remain outstanding.

But as the Wall Street Journal noted last week, the worst of the crisis is probably behind us.

The dimensions of the problem may have been exaggerated from the start, despite the serious strain put on federal bank deposit insurance by the insolvency of a number of big banks. The fact of the matter is, 87 per cent of U.S. banks made a profit last year, despite bad debts.

The crisis could even prove beneficial in the long run. It is leading to a shakeout of the banking system and inducing bankers to return to some of the fundamental principles of their line of work — like being more prudent about whom they lend to and on what collateral.

This bodes well for a return to steady growth and prosperity for the rest of this decade and beyond.

So does the fact that American consumers are better off than we are often led to believe.

The media have bombarded us with stories of how the average American is too saddled with debts and too strapped for cash to help get the country out of the recession.

Well, according to the latest economic statistics that have come my way, American households are currently earning twice as much from the interest on their savings as they are spending on repaying their debts.

In other words, the frequently heard assertion that American families are going broke is a myth.

John Paulus, the chief economist of Morgan Stanley, one of our biggest investment banks, estimates that assets owned by U.S. consumers increased by $6 trillion between 1985 and 1990. Debt during the same period rose by only $1.5 trillion, he says.

Undoubtedly, individual assets have declined in the past year because of the slump. But the average person is still way ahead.

As Irwin Stelzer, one of our more reliable economic analysts, put it last week, "The notion American consumers are so broke that they won't start spending when their incomes (again) begin to rise is wrong. In fact, they are richer than ever, in terms of relating what they own to what they owe."

The rise in the stock market and the recovering international strength of the dollar reflect resurgent confidence in our economy, both at home and abroad.

Even some of our most persistent pessimists now concede that reports of the "death" of American industry have been grossly overdone.

The New York Times, usually one of the pack that can be counted on to bemoan America's headlong economic decline, featured a long report the other day declaring that America is "no longer an industrial has-been," but has undergone "a quiet revolution" that has produced a 75 per cent increase in U.S. manufactured exports in the past five years.

The revolution wasn't so quiet. It's just that the Times hadn't heard about it.

The Times said the lower dollar of recent years, by making U.S. goods less expensive for foreigners to buy, was a factor in the export boom.

But signficantly, it then added, "More enduring are the sweeping . . . changes undertaken by U.S. managers and workers to revive factory productivity."

The Time's story radiated optimism.

"The United States is even more competitive in manufacturing costs than it was in the late '70s, when its trade . . . was balanced and exports were booming," it said.

"American factory productivity — which has remained the highest in the world — has been jackrabbiting along in the '80s. Rising at an average rate of 3.6 per cent a year, output per hour . . . has been advancing faster than in the '60s and nearly three times as fast as in the '70s."

Nothing the Times reported should come as much of a surprise to regular readers of this column.

Still, it's good to see the Times and others proclaim their new-found faith in our future. Better late than never, I always say.

Agency seeks changes from DISD

Lower status may cause loss of funds

By Joseph Garcia

The Dallas school district "is not providing a quality education for all its students" and must take hundreds of corrective steps to improve its performance, according to a Texas Education Agency accreditation report given to school board members.

The education agency plans to downgrade the school district's standing, placing its accreditation in advised status.

The state will require 34 district-wide changes and more than 800 improvements at specific schools. It has 11 days to decide whether it will challenge any part of the preliminary report, a copy of which was obtained by The Dallas Morning News on Thursday.

The corrective steps called for in the report range from reducing class sizes at more than 30 elementary schools to providing better achievement test information to schools and making sure they know how to use those results.

Some of the problems noted in the report are the same concerns listed in the school district's 1987 accreditation report — a fact that state officials stressed.

If the DISD fails to correct its problems, the agency could declare the district unaccredited. In that event, the school district could lose its state funding or surrender control to state officials.

The state education commissioner will appoint an independent monitor to make sure that the school board is addressing the deficiencies noted in the report and is keeping to its roles of policymaking and evaluation. The report criticized trustees for being too involved in day-to-day operations and for dominating the administration's time with board meetings.

The cut in accreditation could [illegible]

"A hopefully objective party came in and said some schools are not performing," said Elva Rodriguez, chairwoman of the district's Hispanic advisory committee. "It should not lead us to do anything but act. Maybe we can put aside the differences and do that."

But, she added, "It's unfortunate that someone had to come in and tell us."

Sandy Kress, chairman of the school board-appointed Commission for Education Excellence, said, "It's no time to be defensive."

The education agency's 1,133-page, five-volume report paints a bleak picture of the school district and many of its schools. The findings were based on a weeklong visit in November by more than 100 education agency officials and 700 educators hired as observers.

The report stresses the poor performance of Dallas students on state-mandated achievement tests when compared with other children in the region and across the state.

"The number of students — more than 26,000 — attending classes on low-performing campuses is a matter of serious concern," the report stated. The education agency defined low-performing schools as those where fewer than 60 percent of the students passed the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills, or TEAMS, last year.

That number of children is larger than the enrollment of all but 19

"The number of students — more than 26,000 — attending classes on low-performing campuses is a matter of serious concern."

— state repo

November review was Dallas' first since the state began examining actual performance in addition to simple compliance with rules and regulations.

But state officials found that more than two-thirds of the 17 problems noted after the 1987 visit were still problems.

Leaders in the other urban school districts in Texas who have seen their accreditation downgraded — Houston and El Paso — said the state's action should not be played down. Houston regained full accreditation in 1988, a year after the district was placed on advised status.

El Paso educators still bear disparaging jokes when they travel to conferences.

But lowered accreditation may not mean the end of the Dallas Independent School District's good standing in the eyes of all outsiders.

Joseph O'Keefe, a vice president in the municipal finance department at Standard & Poor's, said the school district's bond rating would not necessarily suffer as a result of the education agency's report.

Even if the school district is required to spend great sums of money to address the problems cited by the state, its strong financial ratings could be saved. But it is too soon to say for certain, Mr. O'Keefe said.

"If they can still perform as well financially as they were in the past," he said, "then potentially we could keep the rating."

When Standard and Poor's evaluated the school district, the bond-rating firm tried to look at future expenses that the district might incur. If the firm did its job, Mr. O'Keefe said, many of the expensive projects required by the TEA should have already been forecast by Standard & Poor's.

STATE'S MANDATES FOR DISD

Following is a summary of 34 districtwide corrective actions that the Texas Education Agency outlined for the Dallas Independent School District in its preliminary report. In all cases, the district would have to submit evidence that the required plans are not only designed but also implemented.

Plans or reports would be required on:

District improvement. The plan to be approved by the board of trustees, should contain an outline for site-based planning. The improvement plan should include needs, goals and timelines, and a system for evaluating whether objectives have been met.

Curriculum problems. The plan must show that teachers are using current curriculum documents.

Help for students with limited English skills.

Needs of migrant students.

A procedure to ensure all plans for special education students are being implemented.

Use of test data. The state is seeking proof that all schools get categorized by students' ethnicity, gender and economic levels and that principals and teachers know how to use the data.

Grading problems.

Improvement of middle school performance levels.

Improvement of equal education opportunities by eliminating tracking systems and other potentially discriminating policies.

Neighborhood schools. The district should determine whether the district is unintentionally fostering the perspective that neighborhood schools are inferior to academies and submit plans to correct possible problems.

Student-teach[illegible]

satisfactory teachers.

Spending on legal fees and board travel expenses. The district would be directed to address community criticism on such issues.

Bidding policy. The district would be directed to submit evidence that the board has contacted the TEA's legal division for interpretation of the district's bidding policy.

Funding to improve facilities and ensure their continued upkeep.

Providing appropriate classroom space.

Adjusting facilities to reduce class sizes.

Improvement of computer and science laboratories.

Improvement of library facilities.

Improvement of school security.

Providing physical facilities for students assigned to special education.

Staff restructuring based on specific problems cited at individual schools.

Disbursement of funds to schools. The plan should include the participation of administrators, teachers and patrons, allowing teachers to help develop budgets.

Following are mandates involving the school board. The board would be required to:

Submit all school board agendas and tape-recorded proceedings to the state's division of accreditation.

Develop a policy statement to ensure that trustees will not act in an administrative capacity concerning school district business and will not make unauthorized visits to schools.

Since 1988, four school districts' accreditation in Texas have been put on "advised" status. The El Paso, Lubbock and Houston school districts were cited prior to this year with the Dallas Independent School District, the nation's eighth largest school system, having been cited in April of this year. If failing to correct their problems the TEA could declare the district unaccredited. In that event, the school district could lose its state funding or surrender control to state officials.

Our science facilities at Midland High School have not been updated since 1957, pre Sputnik, and Lee High School's classrooms were built in 1961. State mandated requirements for space and safety have changed dramatically over the last few years, requiring immediate attention. Lee Freshman High School, in response to community input offers upper level science classes, but the facilities do not meet TEA accreditation standards. These classrooms are 700 square feet while state guidelines call for 1400 square feet for high school science instruction.

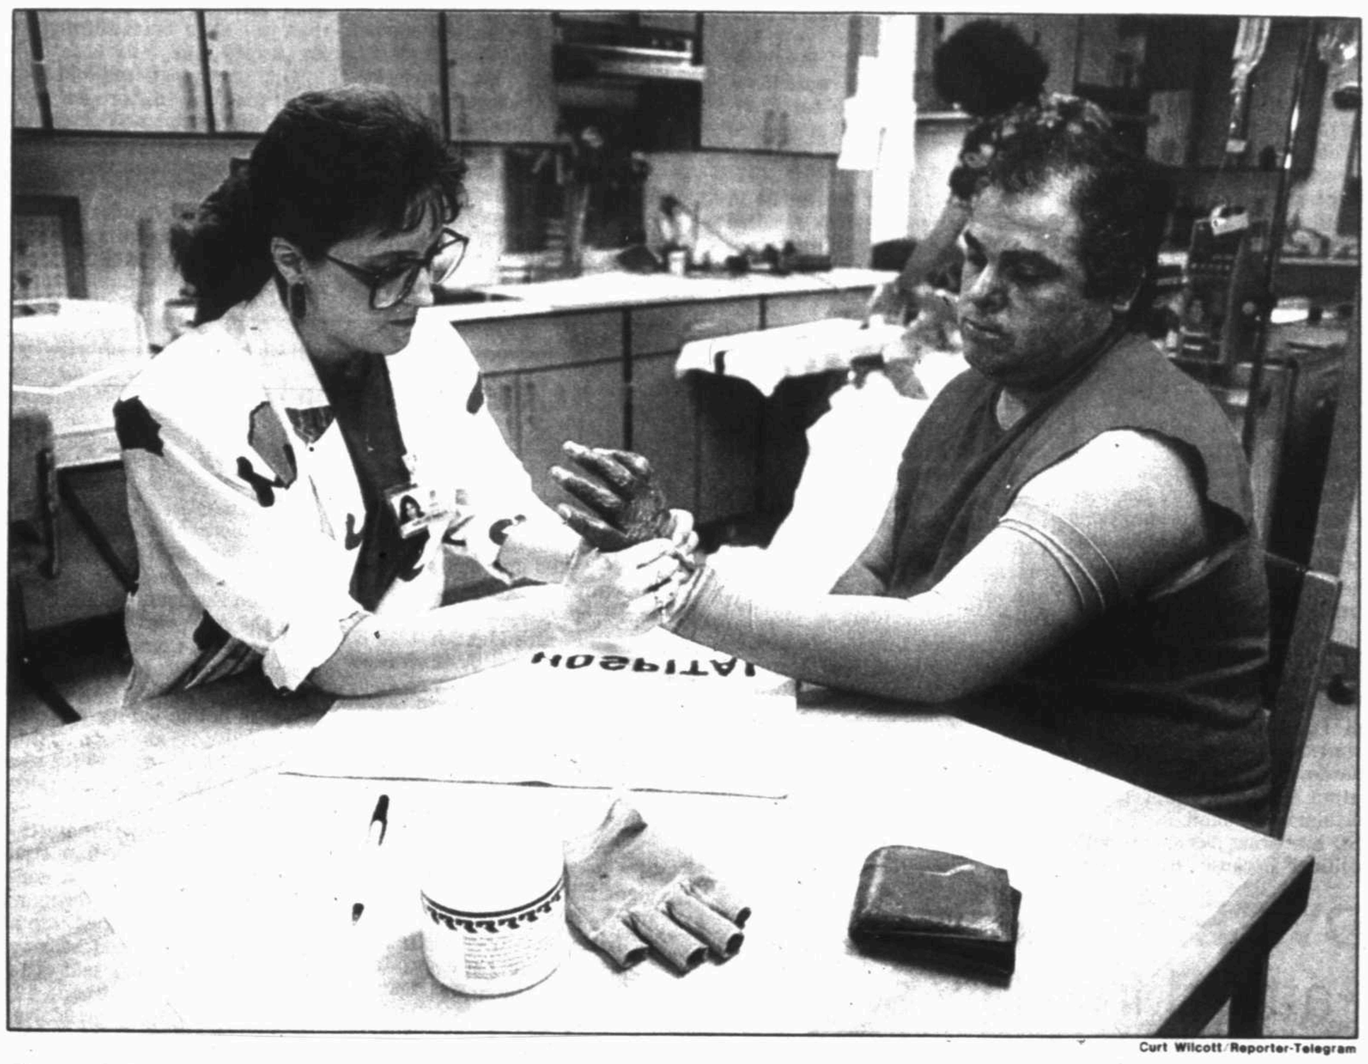

As Midlanders, we cannot afford to have our accreditation put on "advised" status.

Patients discover motivation

■ Progress is slow, but gradually builds up.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The main thing is not to give up.

Lu Hulsey knows it and practices moving forward moment by moment, day by day.

Jodie Hogue, who is just a beginner in her recovery from a stroke, is coming along despite her frustrations.

Both are in occupational therapy at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center in Midland.

And both, like burn patients Art Nunez, 47, and Julia Blaylock, 37, seek encouragement from each other, their families, friends, and their therapists to recapture the vigor or their former selves.

They encourage themselves, too.

Ms. Hulsey, a 51-year-old human-resources worker for Exxon Co. USA in Midland, suffered a paralyzing stroke last January.

Today, she is "doing real well." She is walking, slowly, and she is talking, haltingly. And she is progressing, which is a measure of a well-lived life.

The hospital therapists are working with her.

"They have great ways to motivate you," Ms. Hulsey said. "They really become like good friends: a blend of sympathy and pushing. And it works for me really well."

While progress is slow, sometimes hardly noticeable, it builds up.

"It's awfully hard not to be discouraged," Ms. Hulsey said. "I think we all probably go through a lot of anger" and rhetorically toss out the "Why me, Lord?" question. "I didn't find it real easy to pick up and try to do things, but it's gone well."

Because of her encouragement, she is encouraging others through the rekindling of a support group for stroke victims and victims of other disabilities and their families.

In her life and in that of others, the support group will fill a void, since she has been longing for "someone to talk to who could relate to what happened to me."

Margret "Jodie" Hogue, who recently retired from the newspaper business, collapsed from a stroke about two weeks ago. She gets around in a wheelchair just like Ms. Halsey did at first.

Occupational therapist Cynthia "Cindy" Brosig, 34, was "forcing," or at least helping, Mrs. Hogue to move her paralyzed left arm.

"Just think, Jodie," quipped Ms. Blaylock, "No pain, no gain."

Mrs. Hogue was suffering through the exercise and the pain.

"Not getting any mercy, are you?" kindly asked Ms. Brosig.

Mrs. Hogue was aware of that.

"They work you from the time you get up (in the morning) until they put you in bed at night," Mrs. Hogue said softly and almost inaudibly. Like Ms. Halsey, her strength is bound to pick up, as therapy continues.

Police gain patrol time

■ New response unit takes reports by phone.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A program created in November to take some police reports by telephone has given street officers more time for patrol as well as improve their response time, police officials said.

Officials had hoped the Telephone Response Unit (TRU) would decrease reports taken by patrol officers by about 20 percent, leaving them more time for priority calls.

The program turned out to be more successful than predicted.

"Last month we (TRU) took approximately 40 percent of police reports that came through the department," said Midland Police Lt. Tommy Wilkins. The unit completed 496 reports in March.

When the program began, officials expressed concern whether people would be responsive to giving a report by telephone rather than having an officer in person.

"When a person calls in and they want to see an officer, we'll send one out. Some people like that personal contact," Wilkins said.

In addition, if a TRU officer feels an officer's presence would be helpful, one is dispatched.

"If there is a crime scene or some evidence, we will send someone out there," Wilkins added.

Otherwise, TRU officers — on duty around the clock — take information-only type reports and reports where the crime solvability factor is not increased by an officer's presence.

"The public seems to be really receptive to it. We ask if they want to see an officer but most rather give it over the phone," Wilkins said.

Midland Police Sgt. James Nettles agreed.

"It helps the citizen. It's a little more convenient for them," Nettles said. "If it's a matter of filling out a piece of paper, it's better done over the phone," he said.

"It is a time saver for everyone concerned," Nettles said.

"Officers have more time to patrol the trouble spots, and more time to spend on a major call," Nettles said.

Although the program is busy, the unit got off to a slow start, Nettles said. The number of calls in the first two months of the program were about equal to the amount received in one month now, he said.

In addition, the unit is still working out a few wrinkles to better serve the public, Nettles said.

Since the program began Nov. 1, 1990, the unit has taken more than 17,250 calls and made more than 2,000 crime reports.

Reports are made for such things as runaways, burglaries, thefts, lost property and criminal mischief.

But TRU does more than reports, taking more than 14,350 information calls since the program's inception.

In addition, the unit handles walk-ins at the police station, releases for vehicle impoundments, house watch requests and press releases for the news media.

Young lawyers plan free legal seminar

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Law school will cost you a pretty penny. And legal advice isn't often cheap, either.

But Midlanders will be able to attend law school free of charge next weekend, thanks to the Midland County Young Lawyers Association.

Using a $750 grant from the Texas Young Lawyers Association, the local group — a division of the county bar association — is staging a free legal seminar featuring local attorneys.

"This is the first time we've ever attempted it in Midland," said Jan

Governor orders TABC to alter hiring practices

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards has ordered the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, under fire for allegations of nepotism and discrimination in hiring, to devise a new equal employment plan within 30 days.

Richards gave the order Friday hours after she received a special report from her ombudsman and general counsel that was highly critical of the TABC for not hiring enough women and minorities.

The report also faulted the commission for having too many relatives working together. Some 9.3 percent of the TABC work force is related directly or by marriage.

The investigation was spurred by complaints from the Austin branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

According to the report, 36 — or 4.9 percent — of the agency's 735 employees are black. That is "far below African American representation in the Texas civilian labor force of 11.2 percent," the report said.

While 28.9 percent of TABC employees are women, the report said, 41.6 percent of the civilian work force is female.

GARY OTT

Our heroes should know when exit time arrives

Perhaps the newspaper headline put it best. It was simple and to the point. It said:

"The Spring of Fallen Comebacks."

Ott

The story and photos that ran underneath the headline detailed the efforts of four aging athletes who had attempted to defy the odds by recapturing their youth against men almost half their age.

Each failed.

At one time or another, all four had been a legend. You don't have to be a sports junkie to recognize the names. George Foreman. Mark Spitz. Jim Palmer. Bjorn Borg. In their prime, they had it all. Fame and fortune were their constant companions.

They were heroes.

Then one by one each did what all star athletes are forced to do when they reach a certain age. They retired. They still had their money, but the limelight was no longer there for the taking. Younger men came along and took their place.

And life went on. For several years, in fact.

Our new heroes had names like Tyson and Clemens and Edberg and Jordan. They became the newest millionaires and dominated the sports pages. Foreman, Spitz, Palmer and Borg drifted into the past, fond memories from another era.

Then something very strange happened.

These four intensely proud men decided their time had not passed. They looked to the playing field and determined they could still compete. At least in their own minds.

Maybe it was the money. The big bucks do have a way of luring grown men, even over-the-hill heroes, back into a world of make-believe games. Suddenly 42 doesn't seem all that old for a man to climb into the ring and do battle with a heavyweight boxer 14 years his junior.

So what if he gets knocked around a bit? If someone is willing to pay him $12 million for his trouble, the pain of being struck repeatedly to the face doesn't seem to linger quite as long.

Yeah, maybe money does have something to do with these ill-fated comeback attempts.

But is it the only reason?

Probably not.

There is something called ego, a mental condition that is particularly prevalent in athletes. It is as though their minds cannot accept the fact that their bodies can no longer perform certain feats.

They remember how it used to be ... the glory, the adulation, the cheering crowds. They want to experience that natural high again. And again. And again. It is like a narcotic. They become addicted.

When you think about it, it is understandable. We — the adoring public — place our athletes on unrealistic pedestals. We want them to be bigger than life. Not only do they live in the past, so do we. We want to remember them as they were, not as they are.

So the former superstars, with our encouragement, try to rekindle old dreams. Far too often, though, the mind says "yes" while the body says "no."

Their performance, as a result, becomes a mere shadow of its old self.

Perhaps the saddest case was Willie Mays, the "Say-Hey Kid" who was one of baseball's all-time greatest players. And most loved. In his prime, he could do it all. Hit for power or for average. It didn't matter. Willie Mays excelled at both.

And on defense, there was none better. He roamed centerfield like no one before or since. He was like a cat, waiting to pounce on his unsuspecting prey. Historians still marvel at his over-the-shoulder catch in the 1954 World Series.

He became the quintessential Hall of Famer.

America's youth, both black and white, dreamed of becoming the next Willie Mays.

He was a true American hero.

So what happened?

He forgot to retire. Instead of walking away from the game while he was on top, Willie Mays continued to hang around long after his beloved talents had dwindled to dreadfully low levels. During the final years of his career the man in centerfield was not Willie Mays. He was a cheap imposter.

Hopefully, fans could distinguish between the two.

But if they couldn't, Willie Mays must bear a portion of the blame. He should have known when to say good-bye.

It is not always an easy thing to do, but the real heroes know when that time arrives. They tip their hats and fade into our memory banks.

Here's hoping George Foreman, Mark Spitz, Jim Palmer and Bjorn Borg make that final exit with their heads held high.

They deserve to be remembered as champions.

And we have a right to expect nothing less of them.

Don't spoil our memories, guys. They are too good to waste.

THERAPY: Patients help each other

(From 1B)

"It's worse than working for the newspaper," Mrs. Hogue quipped. "You have to beg for mercy."

Early into her recovery, Mrs. Hogue was exposed to simple games and drawings to gauge her perception, logic and reasoning and to stimulate her thought processes.

"They make you play idiotic games that your grandchildren could beat you at," sighed Mrs. Hogue.

Therapist Mrs. Brosig didn't disagreed.

"Some of them seem kind of juvenile," she said. "That's true."

Ms. Blaylock was impressed with the spirited and youthful encouragement of the therapists.

"After you have had a traumatic experience, you are depressed," said Ms. Blaylock, who longs for her work as a relief lease operator for Chevron Oil Company. "I'm used to working and not sitting around."

Early into her treatment in Lubbock, Ms. Blaylock recalled the excruciating pain when "they were scrubbing my hands. And I asked them to please amputate them because the pain was so severe. I was just crying."

She survived that, and now occupational therapy is getting her arms, hands and fingers to return to their old ways.

"When I first came (to occupational therapy), my fingers wouldn't close," Ms. Blaylock said. "I couldn't close my hand for anything." Now, she said, "I feel that I've done a 300-degree, not quite a 360-degree, turn."

Ms. Blaylock's therapist, Kristie Garnett, "is very encouraging," she said. "I'll laugh and talk and joke around. But down inside, there is a hurt" because she seeks quickly to capture her former life."

Group therapy helps.

"The group milieu, if you will, kind of helps in being able to talk to somebody who has been through the same thing that you have been through," Ms. Brosig said.

"One of my patients told me once that the difference between therapists and doctors is that doctors tell you what's wrong with you, and therapists tell you what's right. I think that's part of our job is to bring out the positive aspects of what the patients do well and to build on those."

Chamber endorses propositions

Staff Report

The Midland Chamber of Commerce board of directors has formally endorsed both propositions in the May 4 Midland Independent School District bond election.

"The Chamber board believes that quality education is essential to Midland's economic development," said Gregg Owens, Chamber chairman. The Chamber board resolution states that "public school facilities are inadequate and impede the ability of public schools to provide the quality of education Midland's children and our economy demand."

MISD is seeking passage of both propositions because "overcrowded conditions and lack of facilities are affecting the learning environment for students."

According to school officials, in 1984 the student population was 17,880. This past fall, enrollment reached 21,000 for the first time — only 500 students shy of 1995 enrollment projections.

Proposition 1 includes a new elementary school and improvements for many schools throughout the system.

Proposition 2 calls for construction of a new junior high school.

Passage of both propositions would results in a $17.16 additional annual tax levy for a $53,000 home.

ADVICE: Public invited to attend free law seminar

(From 1C)

Baker, a prosecutor in the Midland County District Attorney's Office and president of the local young lawyers association. "It's based on a seminar put on by the Dallas young lawyers last year."

That seminar was such a success, Ms. Baker said, that Midland attorneys decided to try one of their own.

"Depending on how well it is received in the county we may make it an annual thing," she said.

The seminar, which the young lawyers association has dubbed "The People's Law School," will feature four attorneys discussing various topics:

- Sarah Fagin of the Lynch, Chapel & Alsup law firm will speak on wills and probate law.
- Chris McCormack, a local attorney who also serves as chairman of the Midland County Democratic Party, will speak on family law.
- J. Brian Martin of the Morgan, Ward, Leeton & Martin law firm will speak on landlord-tenant law.
- Alan Aaron will speak on consumer law and miscellaneous topics.

"These are people who deal with these topics daily," Ms. Baker said. "They know the most up-to-date information about their particular fields."

All the speakers are donating their time, Ms. Baker said.

Casa De Amigos community center, meanwhile, is donating space for the seminar. So the $750 grant from the state association is going mainly to cover printing costs for seminar materials and publicity posters, Ms. Baker said.

The seminar is open to everyone and there is no preregistration.

"We don't want to make it seem like it's only for people who can't afford a lawyer," she said.

Judge John Hyde, who presides over Midland's 238th District Court, said it's important for nonlawyers to have some kind of legal savvy. That's where seminars like the one scheduled for next weekend come in.

"People have questions about the legal aspects of our society," said Hyde, who will moderate the seminar. "I think it's helpful for the bar association to get that information to the community."

The seminar is scheduled for 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday at Casa De Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, but participants will not be required to attend the entire seminar. Light refreshments will be served.

For more information, contact Jan Baker at the Midland County District Attorney's Office, 688-1041.

Spring concert to feature professional equipment

Staff Report

When the Commercial Music Department at Midland College presents its spring concert at 8 p.m. Thursday it might not be what you would expect for a college musical group.

For instance, the concert is being presented in Chaparral Center, complete with professional light and sound equipment. Unlike most concerts at Chap Center, however, this one is free and open to the public.

"Our students are preparing for careers in music, not just as performers but perhaps also working in the production aspects with the staging, the sound, and the lighting," said instructor Rob Hunt.

Student-performers will be presenting several different ensembles for various style of music, such as jazz, rock 'n roll, original heavy metal, and Christian-oriented rock.

MONAHANS — An All-Terrain Vehicle (ATV) went out of control Saturday evening killing one juvenile.

Ramon Navarette, 7, the driver of the ATV, was pronounced dead at Ward County Memorial Hospital shortly after the 9 p.m. accident, according to Department of Public Safety reports.

An ATV is an open lightweight vehicle designed for use on rough, sandy or marshy terrain.

Navarette was driving northbound on the 3600 block of Arizona Street when he lost control of the ATV, the DPS report said. The vehicle crossed into a barbed wire fence and became airborne, the report said. The passenger, Temo Silvan, 12, jumped from the vehicle. Navarette was thrown from the ATV which flipped and landed on him.

Silvan was treated for lacerations and released from the hospital.

FORMULA FOR THE FUTURE
Vision + Planning + Effort = Success

I see Midland as a city on the grow, with plenty of good jobs for anyone who wants to work. This won't happen overnight, but with planning, strong leadership, and efficient, business-like management of our city's resources, it will happen in time.

A first class city deserves a first class airport. I believe expanding airport facilities, attracting new airlines, and extending control tower operations to 24 hours a day crucial to improving our economic future.

We need strong leadership to hasten an economic turn-around, leadership with vision. I would deeply appreciate your vote on May 4th.

TEXAS ELECTIONS '91

Fort Worth mayoral hopeful Ben Boothe rides his horse while campaigning in downtown Fort Worth recently. The former banker says he is gaining ground on the leading candidate, Kay Granger, and says he "may just win this thing."

Fort Worth mayor's race embraces history, humor

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press writer

FORT WORTH — A former high school English teacher from the wrong side of the political tracks appears certain to become the first woman mayor in Fort Worth history.

A victory by City Council member Kay Granger in the May 4 election would give Texas five women mayors in six of its largest cities — Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, El Paso and Fort Worth.

Austin is the exception, and although a woman is on Saturday's ballot there, she isn't expected to make a likely runoff.

"We have women mayors in Texas and they've been successful," Granger said. "Women are consensus builders."

Fort Worth and Austin are two of many Texas cities and other local governmental bodies electing leaders Saturday. Mayor and council races also are being held in San Antonio and El Paso; there's a congressional race in the 3rd District to replace Steve Bartlett, who resigned; and San Antonio has a referendum on water issues and term limits.

Houston, the state's largest city, will elect a mayor in November. Dallas had planned to hold elect a mayor and new council Saturday, but court challenges to the council makeup have delayed the voting indefinitely.

In Fort Worth, Granger, 48, president of her own insurance company, is favored over Ben B. Boothe, 42, the self-styled voice of the "common people" who announced his candidacy on horseback in front of the downtown Fort Worth Club, a place he labeled the "home of the high and mighty."

She has raised more money that her opponents, and has the backing of all the city's civic leaders including current Mayor Bob Bolen, who is not seeking re-election.

While some, including Granger, dismiss Boothe's candidacy as frivolous, the former banker insists he is "dead serious" and is gaining ground daily.

"We may just win this thing," laughed Boothe.

"The one that rides a horse?" Granger asked. "I don't really consider him a serious candidate. Serious candidates have plans, programs and solutions. I haven't heard them."

The new mayor will inherit a city with a struggling defense installation, General Dynamics Corp., and an apparently doomed Carswell Air Force Base. Other issues include crime, slow economic growth and a high infant mortality rate.

Granger, an "eastsider" in a city that traditionally chooses its mayor from the affluent west side, says she welcomes the challenge of coping with such problems.

"I'm looking forward to it," she said. "They are issues that have solutions. This might pull the community together. Fort Worth has always had a great sense of community."

Granger taught high school English nine years before entering the insurance business, and founded her own firm in 1985.

She said her first priority as mayor would be to rescue Carswell from Defense Secretary Dick Cheney's hit list. Failing that, she would search for a new use for the base.

Boothe claims Granger and the "establishment" want to "continue business as usual" in the face of mounting problems. "It's time for change," he said.

A banker for 15 years, Boothe heads a company involved in bank consulting and real estate appraisals.

Free trade, police key issues of El Paso election

By Suzanne Gamboa

EL PASO (AP) — El Paso Mayor Suzie Azar says she has started the state's fourth largest city on the road to progress and wants two more years to see it there. But her challenger says he's more qualified to lead El Paso in an era that could include free trade with Mexico.

Azar

Azar's bid for a second term is threatened by Bill Tilney, 51, a man with 25 years in the foreign service and backing from a prominent businessman and a popular Hispanic official.

She faces two other challengers in the bipartisan race, Mark Lorenzo and Sandra Theodore, who have little financial support. There will be a runoff if no candidate wins a majority of the votes in the May 4 balloting.

The city of El Paso has long suffered from an identity crisis and its residents often feel their distance from Austin makes them a stepchild compared to the state's other major metropolitan areas.

During her term, Azar, 44, hired a lobbyist to represent the city in Austin and has made several trips to Washington, D.C. to bring in federal funds.

"As mayor, I tried to get things started and funded in my first two years," Azar said. "Now we'll really get them going in the next two years. I am proud of the progress we have made. My record speaks for itself."

But with the Bush administration pushing for a free trade agreement with Mexico, El Paso could move to the forefront of Texas' economic future and Tilney said he's the best candidate to shepherd El Paso at that time.

Tilney spent four years as the U.S. consul general in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

'We're talking about a changing world with the U.S. recognizing it has to be more globally involved ... and that reaches down to the city level.'

— Bill Tilney, El Paso mayoral candidate

"We're talking about a changing world with the U.S. recognizing it has to be more globally involved ... and that reaches down to the city level," said Tilney, once a member of former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros' staff.

Azar has said her best achievements during her tenure were adding 100 officers to the police force and cleaning up the environment and she wants to make the two issues priorities again.

Also as mayor, Azar helped negotiate a settlement to an 11-year-old lawsuit between the city and New Mexico over water rights. She was a member of the water utilities board that decided to drop a rule prohibiting the agency from providing sewer and water service to outlying rural neighborhoods, known as "colonias."

"Even if the only thing we accomplished in two years was the change in direction on the water policies, I still would have been very proud of that," Azar said.

She has promised to add another 25 officers to the El Paso Police Department, raising the total to 825 and continue a downtown development plan that included renovation of residential buildings in a historic district.

Her priority in office has been the environment and her achievements include adopting a ban on wood burning, requiring El Pasoans to use only cleaner-burning fuel and establishing an anti-pollution task force.

But many feel she only has not been aggressive enough, not only in the environment but also in economic development.

Tilney said Azar's environmental initiatives have been mostly educational and he said he would have a more "hands-on" approach in addressing border pollution by encouraging joint anti-pollution ventures in private industry.

"I think we are only beginning to deal with some of the problems we have," Tilney said.

Azar only recently hired an economic development director. The previous director resigned shortly after Azar took office.

Tilney, however, is backed by former Mayor Jonathan Rogers, now a banking executive. Azar defeated Rogers in 1989. Tilney has said he will attract high-tech businesses to El Paso if elected mayor.

"I believe El Paso can play an important role at the secondary high-tech level," he said. Tilney said El Paso can try for some of the government and high-tech contracts similar to those that New Mexico State University in Las Cruces, N.M. is getting.

"We could try for governmental contracts to generate a better way of life here," he said.

Tilney has been endorsed by El Paso County Judge Alicia Chacon, who enjoyed widespread support among Hispanics during the March 1990 primaries. Tilney's fluency in Spanish also has helped him win support among Hispanics who make up 65 percent of the population.

Tilney and Azar both support a free trade agreement, but Tilney said the city must proceed prudently.

San Antonio mayoral hopefuls number 10

By Kelley Shannon

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Ten candidates are battling to unseat Mayor Lila Cockrell in a heated race centered around the city's water woes and an attempt to limit terms for elected leaders.

Three mayoral hopefuls, including Mrs. Cockrell, are considered leading contenders in the May 4 election, which features the most crowded mayoral ballot in a decade. If no one receives an majority, a runoff will be held later in May.

Two propositions also are up for a vote.

One would limit the mayor and city council members to two two-year terms. They currently may serve an unlimited number of two-year terms. The other would instruct city leaders to abandon the controversial $180 million Applewhite surface water project.

Mrs. Cockrell, 69, is a veteran politician who took office in 1989. She also was mayor from 1975-81, just before the eight-year tenure of flamboyant former mayor Henry Cisneros, who decided not to seek re-election.

Mrs. Cockrell is trying to convince voters she is solving city budget problems she inherited and is spurring economic development, including increased trade with Mexico.

The candidates who appear to have the best chance at beating Mrs. Cockrell are two of her fellow city council members, Nelson Wolff and Maria Berriozabal.

Wolff, 50, a former state representative and senator, has attacked Mrs. Cockrell's ethics, accusing her of rewarding business friends with lucrative city contracts.

Mrs. Cockrell has denied the accusations and blasted Wolff for playing dirty politics. In the final days of the campaign, she attacked Wolff for saying his district office was funded by private money, although he has used some public funds.

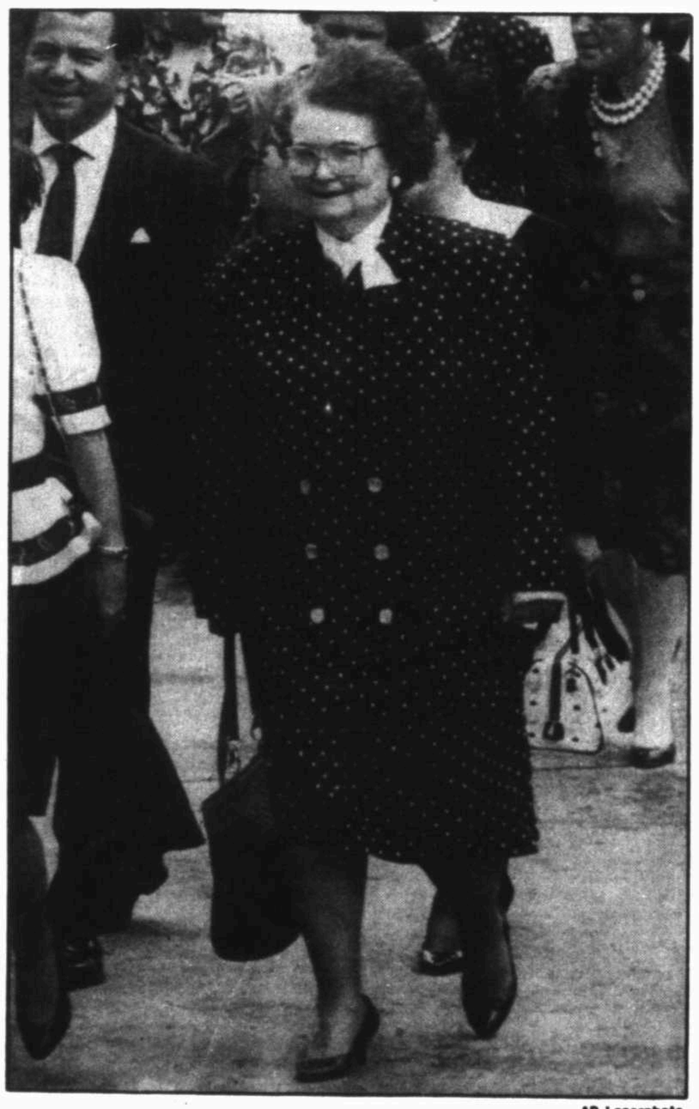

Ms. Berriozabal, 50, a council member for 10 years, has stayed out of the feud. She says the city must educate its work force for the future and promises to hold open house for citizens at City Hall each Saturday.

Jimmy Hasslocher, 49, also has served his council district 10 years and now is running for mayor.

Mrs. Cockrell, Wolff and Hasslocher support the Applewhite project; Ms. Berriozabal does not.

Candidates Kay Turner and former councilman Van Archer are associated with the Homeowner-Taxpayer Association of Bexar County, the group behind the push to abandon Applewhite and limit council terms. The group wants to clear City Hall of longtime politicians.

Ms. Turner and Archer are against Applewhite, which already is under construction on the Medina River in south Bexar County.

San Antonio Mayor Lila Cockrell is running for mayor again, but this time she faces ten opponents. If no one receives a majority of the vote, a runoff will be held later in May.

Other mayoral hopefuls are Lowell "Duke" Embs, 61; Jose Olivares, 60; Eugenio Macias, 54; Will Camps, 54; and Victor T. Hernandez, 42.

2 city officials, 1 mobster, Sinatra want top Austin job

By Michael Holmes

AUSTIN (AP) — Two local officials, a city councilman and a county commissioner, lead the field in Austin's May 4 mayoral election.

But the seven-candidate ballot includes a self-confessed former Mafia hitman and someone named Sinatra — not Frank the singer but Hank the producer of local cable TV shows.

Also running are a library worker, the owner of a vehicle safety inspection business, and a teacher-real estate broker.

All want to succeed Lee Cooke, who is stepping down after a single term in the mayor's chair, one of four City Council seats up for grabs in this election.

If no candidate wins outright, the top two advance to a May 18 runoff election.

The highest profile campaigns have been waged by City Councilman Robert Barnstone and Travis County Commissioner Bruce Todd.

Barnstone, 44, is a developer who won his council seat in 1988 after campaigning on a platform of fiscal reform.

Barnstone said his top priority is demanding accountability in city spending. "I want to direct the government to do what the people want," he said.

Todd, 41, is a certified public accountant who took over his county post in 1987. He has won the endorsements of several local environmental groups and promises, "We must make sure we protect the environment."

While their two campaigns have spent thousands of dollars on advertising, candidate John Johnson earned free publicity nationwide with his announcement that he is a former member of the New Jersey-based Campisi crime family who pleaded guilty to four counts of murder.

Johnson, 53, now runs a hot dog and fajita vending business. But he said he was mobster John Patrick Tully and has been living in Austin for several years under the federal witness protection program.

Johnson contends that he fears local police and entered the mayor's race so that, "If they're gonna hit me, they're gonna hit me out in the limelight."

He likes to wear an American flag around his neck at public appearances and walked off the stage of a candidate debate after claiming that the news media were biased against him.

Sinatra, 45, said he is running for mayor to give him a platform to voice the concerns of citizens and to push for a music channel to promote the Austin music scene. An Austin resident since 1983, Sinatra has produced talk shows for public access cable TV channels.

Also on the ballot are:

—Mae Harris Marion, who hasn't divulged her age, a teacher and real estate broker who taught special education classes, worked in dropout and tutorial programs and is active in the Meals on Wheels program for the elderly.

—Robert Singleton, 38, an employee of the University of Texas Law Library who has been active with several environmental groups.

—Austin Teutsch, 37, owner of Fast Sticker Co., who moved to the city in 1982.

Several issues have arisen during the campaign, with one of the key questions being whether the city should move its airport.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!

Fireplace, family, friends and fun ...

Family and fun are what this home, located on the second tee box in Green Tree North is all about.

A charming brick walk way leads to the front door which opens into a foyer with a view of the huge formal living and dining rooms. Striking wedgewood blue walls trimmed with white molding are complimented by the high ceilings.

Conveniently located between the formal living room and the cozy den is a wet bar. A brick fireplace located in the den makes it a perfect room for family gatherings on those cool winter nights. While in spring and summer, spacious windows offer a lovely view of the golf course. A door from the

in home buying activity

The fuels of lower interest rates, rising apartment rents and a decreasing number of homes for sale are driving our housing market into a surge of pre-spring activity. Contacts in our own office are up 44% over this same period in 1990. We can never remember our phones being busier or more productive.

Interest rates, are firmly entrenched in single digit levels, and seem to be the most important factor in the surge of home sales. Fixed rates of 9% to 9 1/2 % with discounts in the range of 2 to 0 are readily available. According to what we read and to what our associates in the mortgage field tell us, rates should remain in this range for most of the rest of they year. However, most factors indicate that 9% will be the floor on fixed rates. "Individuals waiting for 8% fixed may have a long wait; the secondary market is not going to allow itself to live for 30 years with rates lower than present levels," predicts Suzanne Smith, VP Claydesta Mortgage.

But. hear this: adjustable rate mortgages have reached new lows of 6 1/2% to 7%, with points in the 2 1/4 to 1 1/4 range! Because these mortgages are protected by an annual cap, rates would have to soar dramatically back of the next 2 years to drive the index up enough to put these adjustable mortgages in the range of today's fixed quotes. This should make this program especially appealing to new entrants in the job market who anticipate increasing income levels and to transferees who expect to be in Midland only 3 or 4 years.

More encouraging news on the home financing front is that 95% conventional loans are once again being offered to Midland buyers. According to Smith, conventional investors want back in this area, and are designing programs to compete with the low down payment FHA mortgages. Other new or reintroduced programs available through Claydesta and other companies include mortgages with no tax and insurance escrow deposits, no PMI's and with bi-weekly payments. Additionally, there are non-income qualifying mortgages available with 25% down and mortgage options offered on 5 year calls.

The other factor strongly influencing the surge of our home buying activity is the tightening of our rental market and escalation in rents. City wide reports are not currently available, but a quick survey among several apartment complexes revealed occupancy figures as high as 98% and increases in rent on all new and renegotiated leases.

The final factor fueling home buying activity is anticipation of higher home costs due to decreasing inventories. A nine year trend toward fewer homes on the market has finally culminated in an MLS residential inventory hovering in the 900 range, according to statistics published in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Given the size of our city, we believe this is a very desirable number for both buyers and sellers. To the former, it encourages confidence in the continued value of their purchase; to the latter, it increases opportunities for a quicker sale at closer sale-price to list-price ratios. Most on-the-fence buyers, whether renters or potential "move up" candidates, are not questioning whether home prices will rise, but are questioning "how quickly" and "how much." Over the previous 12 months we have already seen appreciation in some areas due to factors not nearly as positive as the ones we are now experiencing.

While some of the explosive surge of activity in our office can probably be attributed to recent company growth -- ie, 16 additional agents (for a total of 46) creating more listings; creating more calls; creating more sales -- we still believe that most of the increase in activity is due to the buyers' being convinced that now is the time to buy. We have to agree!

Don Harvey, Realtors promotes Midland's Parade Of Homes

Every seller in today's real estate market is interested in finding the most successful company at attracting prospective buyers. Recently Vicky Garrett and Peggy Strong, Associates of Don Harvey, Realtors looked back on what became an exciting marketing strategy for their seller.

A careful plan began over 6 weeks ago with diligent execution. Hints, mystery flyers and messages delivered across the MLS computer appeared, titillating real estate agents across the city.

On April 16, a Parade Of Homes featuring Mark Payne Homes was held in Grassland Estates.

Garrett

Everyone in attendance gained a better knowledge as to why Mark Payne is a builder with a point of difference. While there was a lot of frolic, food and fun, notice was taken of the superior quality product that Mark Payne delivers to each of his customers. His philosophy of life of doing the very best he can shows in the final contentment and happiness of the many he has served. In fact, one of the homes open for inspec-leads from the den to the patio area.

Back inside, the first floor of this beautiful two story brick home includes a spacious master bedroom with a lovely bath featuring a garden tub and an extra large separate shower. A large "his and her" walk in closet also is part of the this suite.

A dream kitchen with plentiful white washed cabinets, mauve counter tops and delightful touches of wallpaper includes a bar and breakfast area near a large window. Two other windows as well as recessed lighting behind the cabinets make this a bright, cheerful room. The kitchen also includes a built-in range and oven, microwave, dishwasher, disposal, compactor and reverse osmosis system. Adjacent to the kitchen is the utility room which includes built-in cabinets.

A lovely oak-trimmed staircase leads to three other bedrooms and two bathrooms on the second floor.

Two of the bedrooms are joined by a compartmental bath which features a double vanity and lots of built-in cabinets, drawers and a laundry hamper. Both bedrooms have spacious double closets.

Another set of built-in cabinets is conveniently located in the hallway leading to the fourth bedroom which has its own private bath.

Professionally landscaped, both the front and back yards have a sprinkler system. A water well is an added convenience for outside irrigation.

tion was 5806 Stonecrest, the home of Rod and Melody Prichard. Not only do Rod and Melody think that Mark Payne is a fantastic builder, but as a friend and next-door neighbor they give him a superior rating. The Prichard's told realtors that in their search for excellence, of which they carefully studied for over a year, Mark Payne was able to fulfill their utmost dreams in the most professional manner one could ever hope to achieve. The Prichards were also most impressed with the courtesy, professionalism and extreme care to details that everyone involved gave to their home.

Mark's choice of sub-contractors is definately the best, according to the Prichards, and the craftsmanship is superior.

Among those in attendance were Doug Henson, Spokesperson for SBC Corporation, the Developer of Grassland Estates. Henson spread the good news on the upcoming clubhouse and pool facilities to be completed in mid-1992 for Grassland Estates. Henson spoke of his appreciation of the working relationship that exists between SBC, Mark Payne Homes and Don Harvey, Realtors. "THE EXCITING MOMENTUM THAT IS BUILDING AT GRASSLAND ESTATES IS FOLLOWING THE MASTER PLAN THAT WILL MAKE THIS THE EXECUTIVE SUBDIVISION FOR THE DISCRIMINATING BUYERS." Henson also announced the immediate expansion of 61 lots to the North.

The highlight of the event came when five participating realtors were selected by a drawing and then given the chance to draw a "Fistfull Of Dollars." Those lucky 5 had 3 seconds to grab as much money as they could with one hand in the container, which held mixed denominations of money adding to to $5,000! Amidst screams and excitement, those drawing were Kay Sutton of Don Harvey, Realtors, Fay Gwyn of Dene Kelly, Realtors, Lana Lucas and Nona Orr of Langston, Realtors, and Bill Lanier of Lanier and Company.

SKETCHES OF THE PAST

With bright eyes and a warm smile, 89-year-old Ethel DesJardins talks about the past with the same enthusiasm she talks about the present. She exudes a happiness and quest for life that is evident in the colors and style of her paintings that fill her home.

Her works of art are dashed in bright, cheerful shades of reds, pinks, greens, blues and purples, and feature mostly landscapes, flowers, ballerinas, children and clowns.

Ms. DesJardins prefers to paint in acrylics rather than oils, "because the colors are brighter," she says. But there was a time when her art work took on a totally different flair.

In the 1920s and 1930s, Ms. DesJardins was a sketch artist for Lester Inc., located in the State Lake Building in Chicago, and she designed costumes for nightclub acts and stage shows.

"The people would come in and have a new song or a new headliner or a new idea of what kind of look they wanted. We would talk about it and then I would make a few sketches," Ms. DesJardins said. "I would submit three or four of my ideas and they would look at them. Sometimes they would love them. Sometimes they would like this top and that skirt, or want something changed. So we would combine the ideas, then go pick out the fabrics. After that, the place would be a madhouse for six weeks.

Ethel DesJardins, 89, enjoys attending the painting classes at Dellwood Senior Center, where two of her works of art are hanging among paintings by other artists who attend the Center.

"The costumes were made to order. When they were through with them, they would come back to us and go into the rental department," Ms. DesJardins said.

Ms. DesJardins' turnaround time for a sketch was only about 24 hours, from the time a client came in with an order for a sketch to the time she had the finished product ready for them to see.

"We had to work pretty fast," she said. "But I didn't do any of the sewing. Once I finished a sketch, it went to the cutters and seamstresses."

She was born in Chicago Jan. 13, 1902, to a Swedish mother and a French father and said she always had an interest in art.

"I always used to sketch around when I was a girl. My mother was very talented in art and my father was in construction and did blueprints, so I grew up with it," Ms. DesJardins said.

In 1918, when she was 16 years old, she started taking art classes half a day and working half a day.

When she first started working at Lester Inc., her job was to design period costumes, but she knew that was not her life's calling. She wanted something more up-to-date.

"There's not much to designing period costumes. That one," she said as she pointed to one of her original sketches depicting a Queen Anne costume, "I didn't design that, that's what she wore."

Ms. DesJardins still has many of her original sketches from the 1920s and '30s and the designs range from elegant evening wear to showgirl style. All of her subjects are female, and all sport

'Floral portraits' depict paintings

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

"Floral Portrait of a Painting," floral arrangements interpreting paintings by Southwestern artists, was the theme for Green Thumb Garden Club's biennial flower show recently.

McKnight-Harrison

"Southwestern Artists: Selections from the Collection of the Museum of the Southwest," an exhibition at the museum, provided the background for 30 arrangements.

Each club member drew for an assignment of a painting from the exhibition to be depicted as to theme, style, or subject interpretation through use of plant material and design. Painting subjects included Indians, horsemen, adobes, pueblo scenes and landscapes.

Each arrangement was displayed on a pedestal near the art work being interpreted. Horticulture entries were judged and displayed in the museum's Solarium.

Top winners were Donna (Mrs. Darrell) Smith, "Best in Show" Award in the Design Division; Carol (Mrs. Robert) Hobbs, "Best in Show" in the Horticulture Division, and Sarah (Mrs. Ron) Holcomb, "The Mary Virginia Saxe Award."

Blue ribbon winners were Beth (Mrs. George) Barton, Marilyn (Mrs. Bruno) Hanson and Mary (Mrs. Jim) Rasmussen. Second place ribbons went to Joy (Mrs. Bill) Seltzer, Ann (Mrs. Don) Wambaugh, Mary Lyn (Mrs. Don) Parsley, Virginia (Mrs. Bob) Jones and Nancy (Mrs. Delmer) Cox. Third place ribbons were awarded to Joan (Mrs. Bill) Henry, Edna (Mrs. Russell) Sexton, Bonnie (Mrs. Carl) Stewart, Wilma (Mrs. Kem) Merren and Lou (Mrs. Jim) Butler.

Blue ribbons were awarded in Horticulture to 24 of the club members.

Patricia Wettstein was chairman of the show. Doris (Mrs. Truman) Spires and Mary Rasmussen are program co-chairmen. Nancy Cox is president of the club.

Judges were Jeanette Van Auken, Mary Watkins and Jean Mills.

THERE IS SOMETHING very special about any milestone birthday, but even more so for Don Varnell's 80th, which he and a host of friends celebrated recently.

What made it exceptional was that the party's instigator was Don's five-year-old pal Brandon Chaffin, the son of Paula and John Caffin.

Although Brandon's grandmother, Pauline Cleveland, was chief party planner, they all agree it was Brandon who came up with the idea.

Gathering in Furr's Cafeteria's Party Room for dinner, the group surprised Don, a 1935 graduate of Texas A&M University, with a marvelous birthday cake, a replica of the Aggie gridiron, complete with goal posts. There also was a king's crown for Don to wear, with Brandon at his side, wearing a smaller crown, one fit for a prince. Balloons and flowers added a festive touch to the occasion.

Guests, in addition to Brandon, his parents, and grandparents, Pauline and Arley Cleveland, were Gertrude Fleming, Allis and Earl Chapman, LaVerne and George Blumentritt, Terri Kendrick, Sue and Bennie Richey, Mary and Lou Greer, Bertha and Ciro Sanchez, Rubalee and H.K. Thomas, Jean Dawkins and Joe Blumentritt.

Mr. Varnell was born on March 27, 1911, in Navarro County, Texas. Moving to Midland in 1951 from Casper, Wyo., he was with Bariod Division of NL Industries until his retirement 22 years ago.

CONGRATULATIONS TO Anna-Margaret Ray and Kerstin Krall, who recently were elected cheerleaders for the 1991-92 school year at Texas Christian University!

The girls also were varsity cheerleaders at Midland High School, where they graduated last spring.

Anna-Margaret, daughter of Nickie and Les Oppermann and Lynne and Charles Ray, is a member of Delta Delta Delta sorority. Kerstin, daughter of Dagmar and Martin Krall, is a Chi Omega member.

LEE HIGH SCHOOL senior Tommy Craddick has been honored at four recent graduation parties.

The first was a luncheon at Chili's, with Lynda (Mrs. Carty) Beal, Sarilyn (Mrs. Bill) Black and Ann (Mrs. Bobby) Page as co-hostesses; the second, lunch at El Chico's hosted by Mary Emma (Mrs. Rob) Bennett, Jeannette (Mrs. Loren) Bryant, Gloria (Mrs. Bill) McGavran, Sandra (Mrs. George) Staley and Denna (Mrs. Allen) McGuire, and third, a dinner held at the home of Sue and Ed Harris and co-hosted by Linda and Rodney Satterwhite, Sue and Dan Secker and Kay and Ralph Arrell.

The latest was a western dance at the Eagles Club, where he shared the honors with four Midland High graduating seniors, Molly Hyde, Marianne Reed, Liz Woodside and David Worley.

The son of Nadine and Tom Craddick, Tommy plans to attend Texas Tech University.

Book uses activities to teach children

By Lyn Blackmon

TEXARKANA (AP) — Martha Morriss' five grandchildren already have begun trying out the activity book she and some friends put together to teach children about this city.

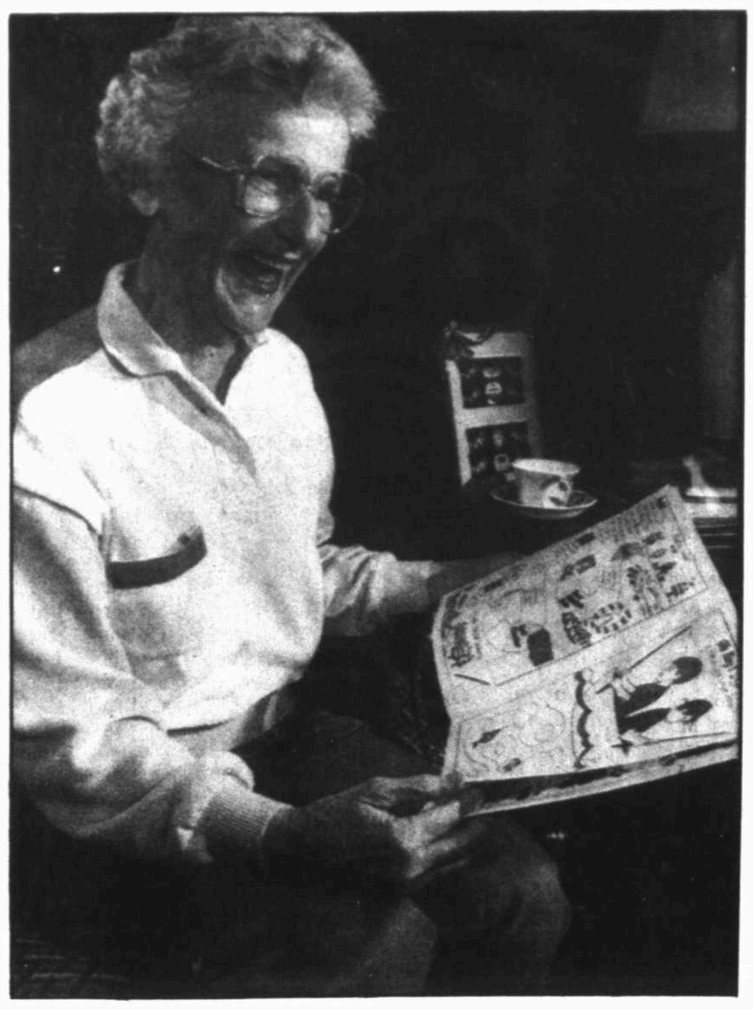

Mrs. Morriss and other members of Women For the Arts decided there was a need for such a book, both for education and as a fundraising souvenir of Texarkana, after visiting other cities. She chaired the committee that decided their story would be told through the eyes of an Indian chief who would walk through town, visiting historic and artistic landmarks.

"We tried several names. 'Chief Texark' just didn't sound right, so we settled on 'Chief Artex,' " which Remica Gray suggested. Barbara Glick said that children liked stickers, so we included stickers to show his shoes and different things he carried," she said, describing the creative process.

"The committee thought that an Indian touring the town tied in with the history of the area would interest boys. We wanted to put some folklore in it, too, so we included a drawing of a quilt as part of a crossword puzzle, and got Jan Rosenburg, the folklife expert of the Texarkana Regional Arts and Humanities Council, to come up with words that would represent items connected with that. Connie (Spears) did a good job of drawing the quilt with the squares of different designs."

The artwork, carried out by professional artist and children's books illustrator Connie Spears, was not simple.

"I went to the Perot Theatre and took pictures of the carpet so we would get it accurate," Mrs. Morriss said. "The architectural details of the buildings — the Perot, the Ace of Clubs House, and the Arts Center — were the most difficult. The artist had to simplify the fancy designs in the moldings and ceilings — it was too complicated for children."

AP Laserphoto

Martha Morriss shows a copy of the coloring book she and several other women put together to teach children about Texarkana's history, geography and arts in a fun way.

She said committee member Amy Cigainero of Texarkana, who teaches art in Mena, Ark., contributed ideas on keeping the book understandable for children.

"She spent four hours telling us what might confuse children and what they would understand. She told us when we drew the map showing Texarkana, to draw all states (Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Louisiana) in completely. Then we added the state flowers, trees and birds for Texas and Arkansas — both states chose mockingbirds. We used the state trees — the pine on the front and the pecan on the back. We were going to use just any pine to represent Arkansas, but we had to find a picture of a loblolly pine to be accurate."

On the front cover, along with the botanically correct pine tree, is the slogan of their organization: "For Arts' Sake," and on the back is its new theme for this year: "Grow With the Arts."

The book's centerfold is the Texarkana Arts Center, with exterior and interior drawings that may be colored, and that also explain the architectural details of the building.

One of the purposes of the book is to raise money for the Arts Center, and the producers hope it will fill a void in local shops where few pictures of the city are available — especially any interior views of buildings — except for the famous postcards of the Texas-Arkansas state line in front of the post office.

Not far from the post office are the Confederate monuments, shown in the book as connect-the-dots pictures.

In one section, children can connect symbols with terms such as piano playing and curtain calls, or the ballet move, "grand jete."

"We really tried to keep everything correct. I found out that what we were calling 'columns' were actually 'pilasters,' which means columns in a wall rather than free-standing. We went back and added the new word. We wanted to make sure everything was right."

The book, which costs $4.50, will be sold at the Perot Box Office, the Women For the Arts gift shop at the Arts Center, and will be available to other gift shops for sale.

Discounts are available to schools; the Arkansas school system already has placed a large order.

Small perks can boost employees' morale

By Michael Kinsman
Copley News Service

Bill Fromm says he can tell more about a company by walking through its parking lot than he can by examining its annual report.

"If you see a lot of reserved spaces for executives in the parking lot, you've got a morale problem," Fromm says.

"The people who come in early and stay late are the ones that notice the empty spaces. Their reward is that they get to walk to the North Forty, past all these empty spaces, on the way to their cars. That creates a morale problem."

Fromm, a Kansas City advertising executive, says there's a direct link between employee morale and profitability that many companies neglect.

If you feel good about your company, he says, you are bound to work harder and the company will prosper accordingly.

We've heard this all before, right? It's that touchy-feely approach to management.

"No, it isn't like that at all," Fromm says. "We're not talking about feeling good. We're not talking about warms and fuzzies. This is about money and profits."

FROMM THINKS there's nothing more important a chief executive can do than pay attention to the needs of his company's workers. He has written a book, "The Ten Commandments of Business and How to Break Them," as a primer for companies to break out of tradition.

Fromm views adherence to the conventional wisdom of human resources as a way of wedding your company's fate to conventional problems and setbacks. He encourages companies to explore alternative ways of building employee morale.

"If your workers are happy, the company will prosper," he says, pointing to a Harvard Business Review study that ties improvement in employee morale to better customer service to customer satisfaction to customer retention.

At the end of that line is increased profitability, Fromm says.

"A 5 percent increase in customer retention is as good as a 25 percent increase in market share," he says. "That shows it's clearly in your company's best interests to keep your employees happy."

Fromm knows that no one single act can inspire dedication from employees. Yet, he does think that if your company demonstrates a determined attitude toward employee welfare, profit gains will not be far behind.

"In recent years, we've seen down-scaling, new technology and attempts to whip people into a frenzy as ways of increasing profits," he says. "But none of these work because they don't pay attention to the needs, desires and fulfillment of workers."

FROMM OFFERS examples of ways to increase employee morale.

One company, he says, found that only about 6 percent of its 8,000 employees had business cards. He encouraged the company to print and issue business cards to each of the other 7,500 workers. Soon, truck drivers, janitors, secretaries, telephone operators and others all had business cards.

"It was the first time most of these people had ever had business cards," he says. For $3 per worker, the company bought a year's supply of business cards and far-reaching good will.

The result, he says, was a 10 percent decline in the employee turnover rate during the first six months after the cards were handed out and word-of-mouth advertising as workers spoke with pride about their employers.

Other companies send letters of congratulations to the homes of all employees upon celebration of their job anniversaries. Some companies offer classes in such as wine tasting, horse handicapping, home decoration or home-buying tips as a way of building morale.

Fromm says the primary reason people quit their jobs is because of the lack of recognition they receive for their efforts. A company that adopts an attitude that aims at the needs of its employees will be a step ahead of others.

"Senior management of companies just manage wealth," Fromm says. "It's the employees on the front line who create wealth. The companies that pay attention to the needs and desires of their employees are the ones who will build profits."

Money order resistant to tampering

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Postal money orders were created "to promote public convenience and to ensure greater security in the transfer of money through the United States mails," according to the act of Congress that established them in 1864. But incidents of counterfeiting and tampering with money orders have cost consumers $3.2 million in the last two fiscal years.

Now, the United States Postal Inspection Service has produced a new money order that will make it harder to counterfeit money orders with color copiers or to alter the dollar amounts on legitimate ones.

Millions of Americans use postal money orders to pay bills, to mail money or, since money orders have no expiration date, even for long-term savings. Last year, 154 million money orders were issued for a total of almost $16 billion, said Charles R. Clauson, the chief postal inspector.

The new money orders have a watermark portrait of Benjamin Franklin, distinctive coloring and a security thread that will enable a consumer to determine whether the order has been tampered with by holding it up to the light.

COSTUMES: Designer kept original sketches

(From 1E)

Barbie doll figures and faces befitting the costume. She has kept many newspaper and magazine clippings featuring the finished products of her designs.

"They (the sketches) are fun to look at," Ms. DesJardins said. "Some of them would be very wearable today."

If you ask Ms. DesJardins about her most memorable moment, she will tell you that there really wasn't anything special about what she did. "It was just a job. I worked from 10 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon, which was perfect because Colleen was in school then," referring to her daughter, Midlander Colleen Scury. "I never thought of what I did as being anything glamourous.

"Oh, we were always glad to see a show be a success if we had done the costumes," she added. "But it was just my work day."

"I used to play dress up in the gowns and the fabrics when I was little," Mrs. Scury said. "Of course I didn't have the figure to fill them out then, but I loved to play in them."

And if you ask Ms. DesJardins if anyone famous ever wore one of her costumes, she will tell you she doesn't think so, then list a few names such as Helen Morgan, Harry Richmond and Gertrude Lawrence.

But if you talk with Ms. DesJardins for a while, you will discover that she designed the costumes for six skaters and the principal for the first Ice Follies at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago in 1932 before the show went on the road, that she designed numerous costumes for the World's Fair in 1933 and that a gown she still has the sketch from was worn by the wife of one of the Warner Brothers.

You also might discover that the Ford automobile company flew her to Detroit in 1936 to design a line of elf costumes for the models who stood by the cars during Ford's auto show, and she designed costumes for the Christmas carolers at Marshall Fields.

"We (Lester Inc.) almost always did the auto shows. They usually wanted something real extreme. They either had a theme or they would want a very after five look... Almost anything could be a concept for a show," she said.

"We once did usher and cigarette girl costumes when the Follies came to Chicago," she said.

In fact, she might even tell you about her date with Melvin Douglas.

"They were building the Chicago Theatre in 1923, and Melvin Douglas was selling hats at Marshall Fields. We had gone out for the evening and I lost my petticoat," she said, with a bit of an embarrassed grin. "He was a gentleman, he picked it up with his walking stick. It just slide right off of me."

You also might learn that she married Robert Tamplin in 1924, but she has always worked under her maiden name, as she does today.

'They (the sketches) are fun to look at. Some of them would be very wearable today.'

— Ethel DesJardins
1920s and 1930s costume designer

The ideas for her designs are hers, and hers alone. "I'm not a copier... I would go and see other shows, look through fashion magazines to get ideas," but said she really got most of her ideas, "out of the blue."

Tamplin, her husband, was in credit and sales and she would often travel with him on business trips, including one that spanned from Chicago to Galveston by car.

In 1939, the family moved to Los Angeles where Tamplin retired. The couple moved to Midland in 1976 to be with their daughter, Mrs. Scury, and her family.

In her home, she displays photos of her daughter — ranging from when she was a young girl to her college graduation to a recent portrait — her grandchildren and her great-grandchildren. "I'm their Great Grammy," she said, with a tone of pride in her voice.

Although her hands are no longer steady enough to sketch the precise, detailed lines that create her costume designs, she still enjoys painting and attends the painting class at Dellwood Senior Center almost every Monday.

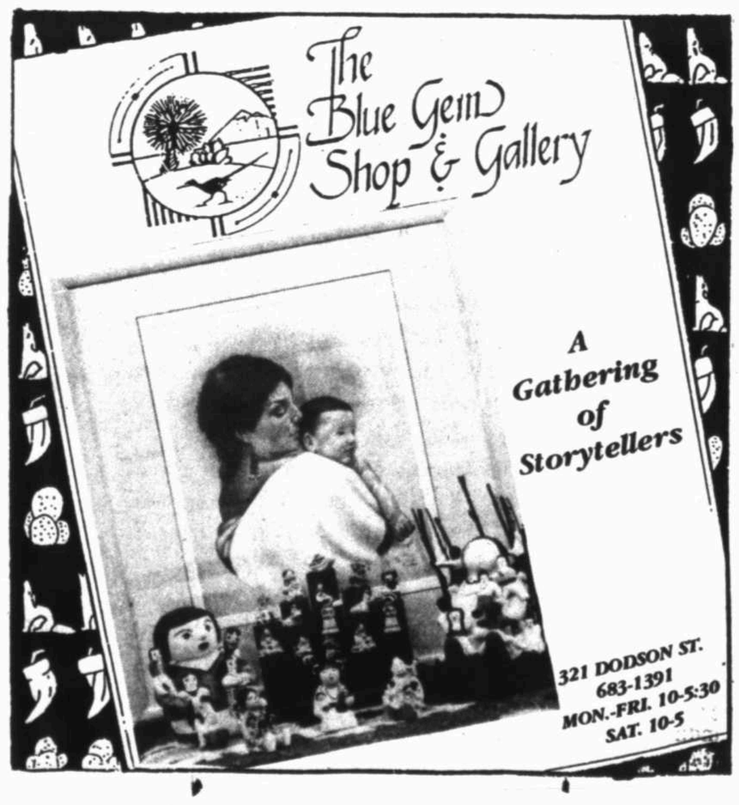

"I like red," she said while talking about some of her paintings, "It's a friendly color. People are familiar with red. A touch of red in a room or in a landscape is nice."

She has several of her paintings framed and hung in her home. Other paintings lay in waiting for her finishing touches ("I'm a great starter," she said.) But all of her works show her style and flair in bright colors. Some of her works can even be seen hanging on the walls of the Dellwood Senior Center among paintings created by other artists at the Center.

She reads the paper every day, "before 10 a.m.," Ms. Scury said, and Ms. DesJardins is well versed on the happenings in the world.

"Sometimes reading the paper makes me sad, all the politics that has gone bad," she said.

But as Ms. DesJardins looked at some of her sketches with a wistful eye and thought back on her life as a costume designer, she said, "I will say it was thrilling to take my sketch, my ideas, have it made up into a real costume and then see an actress or showgirl wear it on stage. That was exciting."

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Area pecan trees need zinc

By Deborah A. Benge

There is a tremendous amount of interest in pecan trees in Midland County, and as a result lots of questions concerning the care of pecan trees. Many home gardeners have at least one pecan tree in their yard and sometimes more. Let's take a look at some of the steps you can take to care for your tree.

Benge

We are past the bud break point on pecans, which is a significant stage of growth for some trees, because some trees in Midland County suffer from zinc deficiency. Zinc is a minor nutrient that pecans can't get enough of in alkaline soil conditions — that's us. Because our soils have a high soil pH, zinc is not available for pecan tree use; therefore, in those trees that suffer from zinc deficiency, zinc must be applied in soliar sprays.

Since it is the new young expanding leaves that take up foliar sprays of zinc, it is important to apply the zinc sprays during the leafing out state. Leaves that have already leafed out and obtained their size cannot take up zinc at that point even if they are undersized due to zinc deficiency. Because of this fact, sprays should be made beginning a bud break and followed by subsequent sprays up until May.

Actually, young trees tend to put on new growth throughout the growing weason and can utilize zinc sprays made every two weeks up until August. More mature trees or trees approaching maturity will only utilize zinc sprays when there are new buds and expanding tissue present, so make one spray at bud break, one in mid-April and one more in early May.

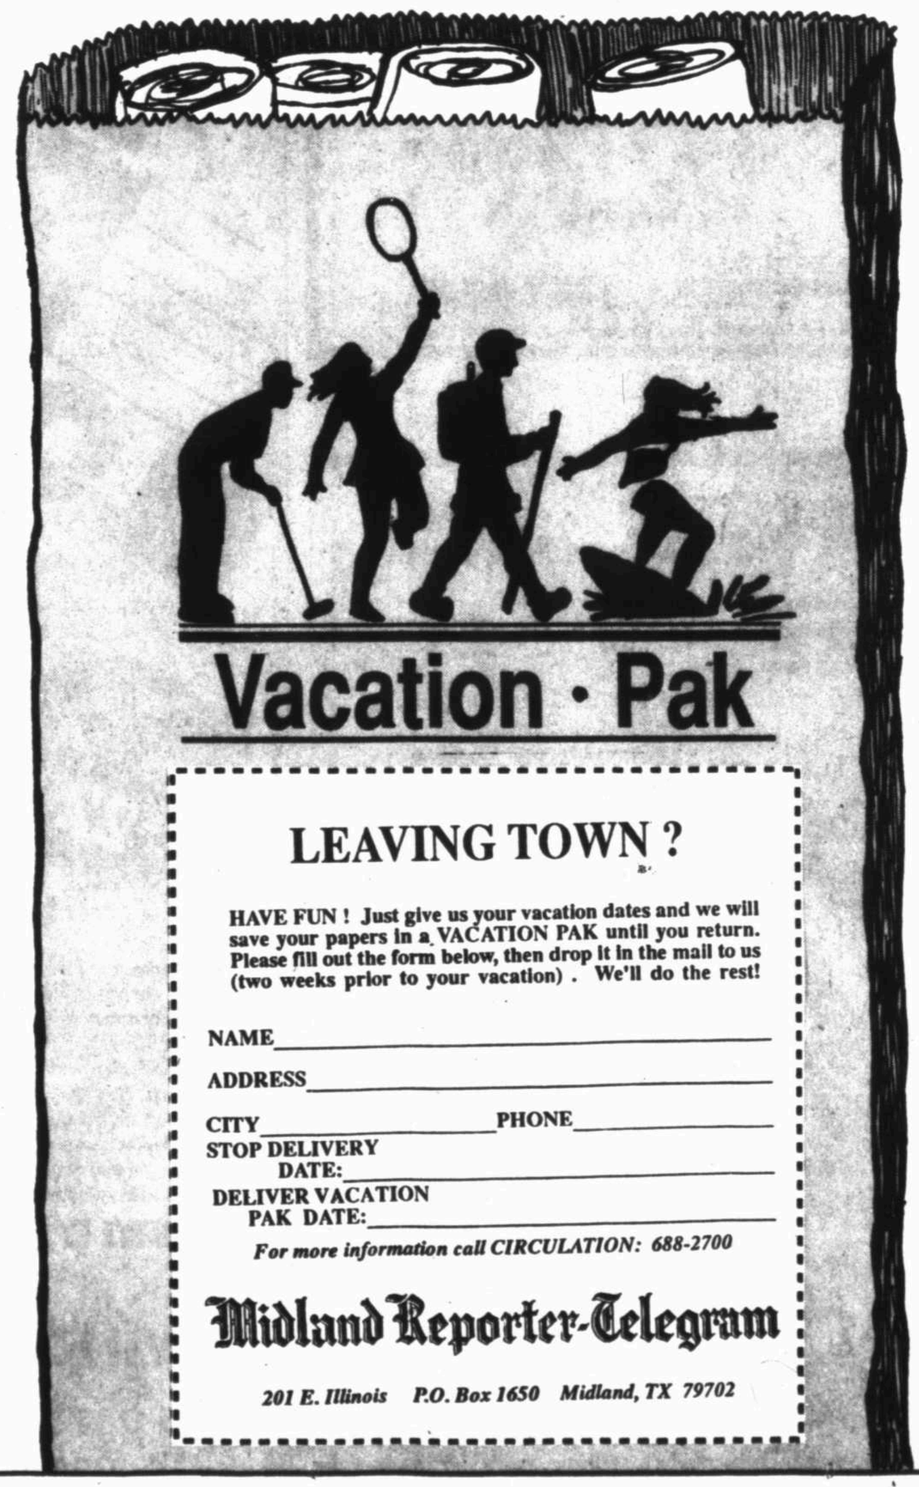

Now, how do you tell if you have a zinc deficiency? The best way to tell is by comparing the leaves on your tree to a tree you know is healthy, perhaps one that is sprayed with zinc on a regular basis. The leaves of a healthy tree will be full size and medium to dark green. The internode space on the new growth stem will be about three inches, that is three inches from one leaf attachment to the next leaf attachment along the stem. In a zinc deficient tree the leaves will be pale, small, mishappened and the internode space will be short, less than two inches from leaf attachment to leaf attachment. This type of growth will give your tree a bunched or tufted appearance.

There are several chelated zinc, zinc nitrate and zinc sulfate products that you can spray on your trees to correct or prevent a zinc deficiency in your trees. Use these sprays early in the morning when there is some moisture on the leaves and in the air, this will facilitate the zinc uptake process by the leaves. Direct sprays to the underside of the leaves, which won't be hard to do since it is the underside that takes up more zinc.

Other concerns that folks have about pecan trees are various pests like pecan casebearer, hickory shuckworm and aphids. Some of thee pests are very difficult to control, like aphids. There is much to be said about these pests, but we will address pecan pests later.

For now, deep watering, fertilizing (if you haven't done so yet) and zinc sprays are the most important things.

Wedding locations reveal couples' imagination

Copley News Service

Couples can get married anywhere. Hobbyists have exchanged vows in hot air balloons, on water skis and on top of mountains. Lovers also have tied the knot at the supermarkets, train stations and laundromats where they met.

There is hope after vows are said

By Alison Ashton

Copley News Service

During their courtship every couple is on good behavior.

During the engagement — with all the pressures of planning a wedding — things can get a little rocky.

After the vows, there are always a few surprises. She never knew he was such a spendthrift. He never knew she was such a slob. As for sex and romance — well, they'd rather not discuss it.

But there are pleasant surprises in store, too. She often comes home to find he's fixed a great dinner. He's happy she doesn't mind when he plays basketball with the guys.

Creating a strong bond doesn't just happen — it takes effort. Bridal Guide magazine offers 12 smart tips on divorce-proofing your marriage:

Communicate with each other. Don't fall into a pattern of reading your spouse's mind or assuming you know what he or she wants.

Married is forever. Don't consider divorce an option.

Put each other first. You first loyalty belongs to your spouse. This will help keep your priorities straight in the face of parental or peer pressure.

Be equal partners. Work as a team on everything from day-to-day living to solving crises. Respect each other's individuality.

EXPECT BUMPS. Stressful times come and go. And they don't always come at the same time for both of you. For example, you might be having a terrible time at work while your partner is scaling up the corporate ladder.

Plan time together. This is especially important when life gets hectic.

Seek help from experts. Get help when you need it. For some couples this means consulting a financial planner; others may need to visit a marriage counselor.

Respect each other's families. Build a pleasant relationship with your in-laws. Try to understand, or at least not interfere with, the dynamics of your spouse's family. Never denegrate your partner's family.

Show forgiveness. Don't bear grudges — be willing to forgive and forget. "Happily married couples don't keep score," says Bridal Guide magazine.

Nurture your love. Courtesy and affection are always appreciated.

Be willing to compromise. Don't worry about winning or losing disagreements.

Have common goals. Plan your future together; working toward mutual goals helps cement a long-term relationship.

PRENUPTIAL JITTERS

Planning a wedding can be considered a litmus test for how well things go when the honeymoon is over.

Pay attention to how you handle conflicts. Are you able to communicate and compromise? Or does the smallest disagreement become a battleground?

This is a good time to practice your negotiating skills. Decide what's really important to you for your wedding and be willing to compromise on the rest.

This is also a time to build a relationship with your future in-laws. It's important to learn to negotiate with them and to stand your ground as a couple.

MONEY MATTERS

Finances are one of the rockiest areas for many couples.

It's important to discuss how you'll handle financial responsibilities before you run into trouble. Discussing money matters during your engagement might seem unromantic, but it will contribute mightily to your security after the vows.

Determine how expenses will be divided. Who will pay the bills? Handle the checkbook? Consider your short- and long-term financial goals.

Some couples like to mix all their funds in a joint account. Others keep their money separate and each partner takes care of different bills. Also consider how you will handle credit cards and savings.

WHERE TO LIVE

Deciding where to live is tied to your finances.

Owning your own home offers security and privacy, as well as a yard and the autonomy to do whatever you want to it. It also can be a financial burden and, you'll soon discover, your own home requires time and maintenance.

Although renting might be more convenient, the money you pay in rent doesn't contribute to your financial security, but to your landlord's.

ROMANCE REDUX

After the honeymoon and once they've settled into married life, some couples find their passion starts to pale. This can be unsettling, especially for couples who courted on a long-distance basis — their dates often were short, passionate reunions.

When the routine of daily life gets overwhelming, romance takes extra effort. Many couples find that small touches are all it takes to ignite a lackluster love life — flowers with breakfast in bed, remembering to pay compliments, calls at work in the middle of the day.

TO PARENT — OR NOT?

This is a big question for every couple. Even if they both want children, a couple has to decide when and how many to have. If a couple is ambivalent, they are constantly re-evaluating whether they want to have children at all.

Supermodel Kim Alexis, who has been married for almost eight years and has two children, recommends waiting a few years before having children.

"It gives you a chance to get to know each other," she says. "And to build a good relationship. It helps when things get tough."

If you wait to have children, consult your doctor about contraception. Options range from birth control pills to condoms, and it could take some experimenting until you find the form that works best for you.

THE TOUGH STUFF

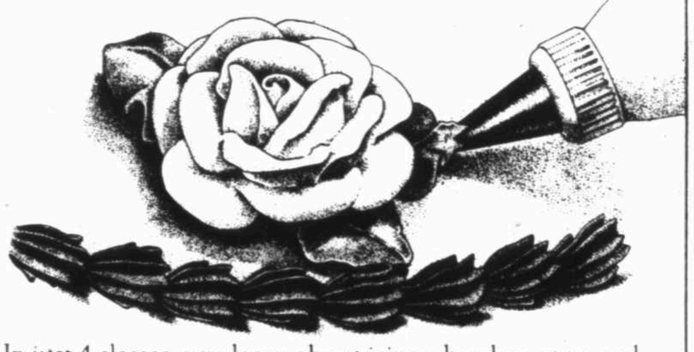

What do you do if you have to criticize your partner? Or if his parents are making too many demands on your time? These are some of the sticky areas you can encounter.

Criticism can be constructive if it's done right. Offer criticism privately, be specific about what bothers you, don't be too emotional and don't be petty. Also consider your timing. Jumping all over your partner after he's had a horrible day at work isn't going to get the results you want.

The same method can work when it comes to problems with your in-laws. Some parents have trouble letting go; couples run into trouble when they continue to see their parents as authority figures.

Work as a couple to present a united front (it helps if you did this while you planned your wedding) and you can nip potential in-law problems in the bud.

By Gina Seay

HOUSTON (AP) — At last Krystal Cox, 5, had found the Ken for her Barbie. He came packaged in a dapper white tuxedo, sporting a cool mustache and neatly sculpted Afro, and his skin was milk-chocolate brown.

"He's cute," she said as she posed him with her pretty black Barbie, as she walked her handsome couple to their fantasy ball.

Cox's mother, Adela Cox, was happy, too, about adding this handsome black Ken to the family's doll collection. He's a rare find, considering how many Christmas seasons she has searched in vain for black dolls for her two daughters.

Store shelves were loaded with blue-eyed blond-haired dolls, Cox said, and the few black dolls she found were usually ugly.

But this season will be different, according to toy manufacturers and store managers. More black, Hispanic and Asian dolls are on shelves everywhere, because the larger toy manufacturers are making more ethnic dolls. Mattel, maker of Barbie, had added Ms. Nigeria and a collection of Summit Barbies — African-American, white, Hispanic and Asian — to its ethnic line. Barbie also has a new Spanish friend, Nia. Two of this season's best-selling dolls, Mattel's P.J. Sparkles and Tyco's Newbown Baby Shivers, are available in white and black versions.

Hasbro continues to make black and white versions of G.I. Joe, and its line includes Cabbage Patch Kids in white and black.

In addition, larger toy stores are carrying more dolls made by smaller companies devoted primarily to producing black and Hispanic dolls. The dolls include the stuffed Huggie Bean line characters by Golden Ribbon Playthings, a "Just Like Me" Nikki doll by Lucky Independent, and Amandla by Olmec.

Demand for these toys has been growing over the past few years, and "It's just taken manufacturers a while to catch up," said Karen Labombarda, regional inventory manager for Toys R Us.

Customers complain when they don't see minorities on the shelves, store managers said.

Toy companies say their black, Hispanic and Asian dolls are not just spray-painted white dolls, a criticism voiced by some parents. Company representatives say they consult pictures and live models before sculpting noses, lips and hair.

Overall, the increased inventory likely will mean that more minority children will find dolls under their trees that bear a flattering resemblance to themselves in skin tone, hair texture and facial features. And this is good, parents and educators say, because these dolls can contribute to building the self-esteem of minority children.

Adrienne Pagel, who started a catalog company to market cultural toys after adopting three Korean children, said, "I'm also doing it for the blond middle-class white kids who have never met someone from South America or who don't know how to relate positively to Hispanic kids."

Why are major toy companies now introducing more ethnic dolls? The answer is demographics and profits.

"We're seeing that black, Asian and Hispanic numbers are growing," said Donna Gibbs, spokeswoman for Mattel, which introduced Christie, the first black doll in the Barbie line, in 1968. "Our goal is to give every child a positive role model."

Census figures and consumer studies show that African-Americans make up 12 percent of America's population, and their birth rate is at least twice that of whites. African-Americans also represent a $150 billion market. Hispanics are the second-largest and the fastest-growing minority in the county.

These markets are becoming too profitable to ignore. The Barbie line alone is expected to generate $700 million in revenues this year for Mattel, said Gibbs.

Many minority parents are just glad to find more of these products on store shelves.

"Children should get an idea of fantasy with their own race," said Adela Cox. "It's a miniature dream world, going to the ball and the beaches, and they should be able to create their own fantasies in their own race."

'Rose's Critters' fill children's hearts

By John Mitchell

WACO, Texas (AP) — The critters cast their magic spell inside Rose Cheatum's head.

Her creations now fill the lonely hearts of select children, and are tangible proof of what can be accomplished amid adversity.

Mrs. Cheatum, 62, of Moody, has suffered from a series of debilitations that have kept her revolving in and out of hospitals all her life. Asthma, arthritis, kidney infections and tumors make it hard for her to move around.

They have yet to deter her commitment.

Though she's never had children, Mrs. Cheatum thinks about them often. It is the prime motivation for her 43-plus years donating books and other gifts to Toys for Tots.

Twelve years ago, she decided to try something different.

The long-time embroiderer used a sewing pattern as a basis to create her own brand of stuffed characters for kids.

"I enjoy working with my hands," Mrs. Cheatum said. "It's just something that grew."

SHE HAS SINCE made more than 225 of the animated animals, which she calls critters.

"They're funny looking," Mrs. Cheatum said of their appeal. "That's what I'm trying to do, is make a kid laugh."

Each is an original. Mrs. Cheatum cuts a combination of various materials that form her pillowed pets. Then she and husband, Glenn, a retired serviceman, spread the scraps around the living room floor and begin mixing and matching.

"She cusses and I discuss," Glenn Cheatum noted.

"I use anything I can get my hands on," she said. "I use most of the same shapes. Sometimes the backs of the guys are a different material. I just make the faces different."

Felt facial expressions vary as the years pass.

"One year I had their tongues sticking out," Rose Cheatum said. "Another year, everybody had one tooth."

She gets some of her inspiration from television cartoons with the sound turned down. For instance, one year, she saw crosses in a television puppet's eyes, and added that effect on her dolls.

"It makes for a little more expression," she said.

When does she know when a particular combination works?

Simple.

"I start laughing," Mrs. Cheatum said.

THE SEWING AND stuffing has become more than a hobby to her. The dolls take about six to eight hours to finish, and Mrs. Cheatum said the steady, therapeutic motions of her hand keep them limber.

"I wanted to do something I could do at home," she said. "This, I can do at my own pace and still feel like I'm doing something."

Mrs. Cheatum used to average about 12 dolls a year, which she passed on anonymously to Toys for Tots.

"I'd just walk in and say, 'I'm one of your elves,'" she said.

Demand increased when a fellow member of the Woodway Extension Homemaker's Club saw her fluffy figures five years ago and thought they would be perfect gifts for children at Waco's Hillcrest Baptist Medical Center.

Jane Godsey, who works in the hospital's coronary care unit, said she knew they could make soft and safe toys for some scared kids.

"Each one has its own personality," she said. "I think that's how each child would look upon them. It's something that a child gets that is truly theirs."

Batches of the dolls are given to Ms. Godsey and passed out on an as needed basis to children entering the hospital's emergency room.

"When the little children come in, some are so upset," she said. "Giving them one of the little critters cheers them up and makes them feel the hospital isn't really such a bad place to be after all.

"They just hug them and love them and feel like, now they're safe," Ms. Godsey said.

McLENNAN COUNTY Extension Service Agent Esther Thomas finds Mrs. Cheatum's gestures especially touching in light of her struggle.

"I admire her because in her physical condition, she still has the will to give," she said.

When the women in the club learned she made the animals, they started saving leftover material. Mrs. Cheatum said she spent a total of about $65 on cotton and material last year.

"I don't mind," she said. "I do this for myself and the kids."

Glenn Cheatum also likes to see his wife staying busy.

"It keeps her out of my hair," he grinned. "As long as she's doing that, she's not thinking there's something for me to do outside."

The words of encouragement are enough to keep her going.

"I'll do it as long as I can do it, I guess," Rose Cheatum said.

She has received thank-you notes from employees at Hillcrest, but Mrs. Cheatum has never been there to watch the animals handed out.

It would be nice to see them distributed, but it's not important, she said.

Her eyes widen, however, when she remembers the Christmas a local news report showed some of her creations among a pile of donated presents being forwarded to needy kids.

"I saw the head of one," she said. "That tickled me. I said, 'Well, there goes a critter.'"

Body odor is no sweat anymore

Associated Press

For years, scientists have been up in arms about body odor. No one was sure what was causing it, but it now seems that nobody will be sweating over the problem anymore.

That's because a team of scientists recently identified the chemical that causes underarm odor. The discovery is expected to help the deodorant industry make better and longer-lasting products.

The odor has been traced to glands in the armpit. These glands produce a small amount of fluids, or secretions, each day.

But it's not the secretions that smell. They're odorless. The odor is caused by billions of harmless bacteria that live on everyone's skin. When the bacteria eat the secretions, they produce a chemical that smells gross.

How did the scientists make the discovery?

They set up a body shop, where six males volunteered not to use deodorant or soap for a week before the study began! (Men are "smellier" because they have more glands than women do.) For the next two weeks, the volunteers wore cotton pads in their armpits.

The researchers then used special equipment to separate hundreds of chemicals from each pad. The scientists sniffed each chemical until they were on the right scent. Now that's what you call following your nose!

DEAR ABBY

Wife's life of secrecy is mystery to her husband

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We have been married for nearly a year. It is the second marriage for both of us, so we aren't exactly kids. I feel that my wife's behavior is questionable, but she argues that she is asserting her independence and her right to privacy.

Van Buren

You be the judge: She refuses to wear her wedding ring or use her married name. She has a post office box where she picks up her mail. (I am not allowed to pick it up for her.)

She owns another home, but the location is kept secret from me. She will go out for an evening and return in the early hours of the next morning, and if I ask her where she has been, she becomes irate.

I am not entirely stupid, and this pretext of "independence" and "right to privacy" adds up to cheating. I love the woman and want to give her the benefit of the doubt, but now I am wondering if she is playing me for a fool. What do you think? — BLINDED BY LOVE IN FLORIDA

DEAR BLINDED: She could possibly justify her unwillingness to wear a wedding ring, and even refusing to use her married name. Desiring her own post office box is not incriminating, but having a home elsewhere and refusing to disclose its location to her husband is more privacy than a married woman needs.

Also, staying out until the wee hours of morning without explanation is just cause for suspicion.

To answer your question: Yes, she is playing you for a fool, so why don't you stop acting like one?

DEAR ABBY: I am a married woman with two young children from a previous marriage. My children lived with their father and his second wife for three years. We now have joint custody.

I get really upset when my children tell me that their stepmother disciplines them for every little thing.

Abby, I do not let my present husband discipline my children because they are not his, and I feel that my ex-husband should follow the same rule. I have told my ex-husband how I feel, but he ignores me, saying that his wife has his permission to discipline my children as she sees fit.

I keep telling my kids that they don't have to listen to their stepmother. How can I convince this woman to leave my kids alone? — THEIR REAL MOM

DEAR REAL MOM: You are being very unfair to tell your children that they don't have to listen to their stepmother. Children need rules and discipline whether they are in the home of their "real" parents or their stepparents. When you undermine the efforts of your husband's present wife to discipline his children, you confuse them. Their stepmother has every right to discipline those children when they are in her care.

DEAR ABBY: You are right: There is much to be said for leaving bad enough alone. Especially when it comes to correcting typographical errors in the newspaper.

The one that comes to mind went something like this: "Mike Morris, a defective on the police force ..." Mike demanded a retraction and correction. He got one. It read: "Mike Morris, a detective on the police farce ..." — WILLIAM J. ROBINSON, TUCSON

AT WIT'S END

Wise parents let kids soar free

EDITORS NOTE: Erma Bombeck is taking a week of vacation. This column orginally appeared in May 1977.

By Erma Bombeck

I was autographing books at one of those little rattan tables in the book department of a Midwest department store when I found myself looking into the saddest eyes I had ever seen.

Bombeck

"The doctor wanted me to buy something that would make me laugh," she said.

I hesitated about signing the book. It would have taken corrective surgery to make that woman laugh. "Is it a big problem?" I asked. (The whole line was eavesdropping.)

"Yes. My daughter is getting married." The line cheered.

"Is she 12 or something?"

"She's 24," said the woman, biting her lip. "And he's a wonderful man. It's just that she could have stayed home a few more years."

The woman behind her looked wistful. "We've moved three times and our son keeps finding us. Some women have all the luck."

Isn't it curious how some mothers don't know when they've done a good job, or when it's basically finished? They figure the longer the kids hang around, the better parents they are. I guess it all depends on how you regard children in the first place.

How do you regard yours? Are they like an appliance? The more you have, the more status you command?

Are they like a used car? You maintain it for years, and when you're ready to sell it to someone else, you feel a great responsibility to keep it running or it reflects on you? (That's why some parents never let their children marry good friends.)

Are they like an endowment policy? You invest in them for 18 or 20 years, and then for the next 20 years, they return dividends that support you in your declining years or they suffer from terminal guilt?

Are they like a finely gilded mirror that reflects the image of their owner in every way? On the day the owner looks in and sees a flaw, a crack, a distortion, one tiny idea or attitude that is different from his own, he casts it aside and declares himself a failure.

I see children as kites. You spend a lifetime trying to get them off the ground. You run with them until you're both breathless ... they crash ... you add a longer tail ... they hit the rooftop ... you pluck them out of the spout. You patch and comfort, adjust and teach. You watch them lifted by the wind and assure them that someday they'll fly.

Finally they are airborne, but they need more string and you keep letting it out. With each twist of the ball of twine, there is a sadness that goes with the joy because the kite becomes more distant, and somehow you know that it won't be long before that beautiful creature will snap the lifeline that bound you together and soar as it was meant to soar ... free and alone.

Only then do you know that you did your job.

TRAVEL

Conventions provide lower-cost vacations

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

Anyone whose travel miles are metered by limited discretionary dollars knows that cheaper airfares mean you can travel further and more frequently. But taking best advantage of greatly discounted fares and airline price wars can be tricky.

Even bargain-priced non-refundable super-saver tickets may be undercut by special promotional fares newly introduced before your date of travel, but you can't take advantage of lower prices once your super-saver tickets are issued.

Often special fares advertised in morning papers are sold out before you get through to your travel or airline agent — even if you are requesting seats weeks in advance.

However, with persistence and some savvy, you'll head for the airport with the best buy in hand.

Some tips to keep in mind when hunting for bargain travel:

■ Establish on-going business relationships with reliable travel agents who understand budget constraints and might alert you to discounts before they're sold out.

■ Travel agents often specialize. Befriend several who are familiar with destinations that most interest you.

■ Read newspapers, preferably early in the day. Make reservations the moment you see special rates. Use telephone automatic redialers to get past perpetual busy signals at airline reservations numbers.

■ Call other airlines to ask if they are matching the competition's discounts.

■ Be flexible. If special fares are sold out on your preferred flight, ask for the same fare on flights earlier or later in the day, on preceding or following days, or from alternative airports. If all are sold out, call later to check cancellations.

■ If you don't feel up to fighting crowds for promotional discounts, choose travel dates and destinations that coincide with conventions and travel on convention coat tails.

Conferences for organizations ranging from the American Society of Women Accountants (New Orleans May 30-June 1) to the Medical Library Association (San Francisco, May 31-June 6) get discount rates for air fares, hotels and car rentals. Attaching yourself to conventions for travel benefits is easy and legal; the savings can be phenomenal.

Airlines typically discount convention travelers' tickets 40 to 45 percent below regular economy fares, or five percent off super-saver fares, from any departure point to the convention city. You may have to take a longer route, but the discounts are valid several days before and after convention dates, so you have some flexibility.

For example, you could hook up with the HOW Design Conference in Miami May 13-15 even if you don't know what it is. You could fly Delta Airlines from Chicago on May 12 and return May 19 for as little as $264.13 round trip. The regular economy fare is $898.

Because airlines base convention discounts on percentages off published fares, you'll always get the best deal available. That's not necessarily true for hotel rates.

Some hotel convention rates might be 30 to 40 percent off rack rates. Others may actually be higher — if convention deals were sealed years ago, when optimistic predictions for economic growth set higher rates. Before booking rooms on convention plans, ask hotels about regular rates and-or other available discounts.

Auto rental agencies also offer discounts. For example, Dollar Rent A Car's rates on sub-compacts with unlimited mileage for the Association of Operative Millers' Convention (Kansas City, April 27-May 5) are $28.80 per day or $145.80 per week, compared with regular rates of $32.50 per day or $150 per week.

To take advantage of convention discounts, you have to know where the conventions are and when. This information is available in a variety of places, including in-flight magazines and trade publications. But the most complete and convenient source is Travel Confidential, a monthly newsletter ($195 for 12 issues; $20 per single copy). Each issue lists about 300 conventions in more than 30 locations. The publishers promise at least 40 percent savings with each trip and guarantee that if you don't save the cost of subscription within six months, you can get a full refund.

Conventions are listed by destinations and dates, along with phone numbers for airline convention desks and reference codes.

When you call, negotiate for the best rates, remembering that tickets for different flights on different days of the week have different prices, and that flexibility gives you an advantage.

For more information contact Travel Confidential, 88 Bleecker Street, New York, N.Y., 10012. Telephone 212-254-1069.

Avoid delays at airport bypacking bags carefully

By Leonard Sloane
N.Y. Times News Service

Air-travel experts are encouraging passengers to pack carry-on luggage carefully to avoid delays during airport security checks.

First, put things that could cause problems during security checks in places where they are easily available. "If you're carrying on appliances or electronics, pack them on top of clothes or in the outside compartments of luggage," said Page Miller, director of marketing services for the Samsonite Corp., the luggage manufacturer. "That way you can get to them faster and without pulling out all your other possessions." In a soft-sided bag, shoes and other heavy objects should be packed in the bottom, opposite the handle.

Though the Federal Aviation Administration reinstated curbside check-in when the war in the Persian Gulf ended, other security measures remain in force. And if you want to get in and out of airports quickly, do not check luggage; you won't have to wait for it to be unloaded.

Whether you check luggage or rely on carry-on bags, airline and airport executives continue to advise arriving early at the terminal: at least one hour before domestic flights and an hour and a half before international flights. One reason is that airport magnetometers, the archways designed to detect metallic weapons, have been made more sensitive, and more people are setting them off when they pass through them carrying such items as car keys and coins. Consequently, it may take a little longer to get to the gate.

Robert K. Ermatinger, executive vice president of the Luggage and Leather Goods Manufacturers of America, a trade association, advised air passengers who must check their baggage "never to use a luggage tag with your name and home address on it, unless it is covered up." Exposed luggage tags can alert potential robbers that you are not home.

"It is preferable to use a luggage tag with your business address or a tag given by a frequent-flier club with a name and an identity number only," he said. "But your name and home address should be attached inside your suitcase."

Thus far, the federal government has been cautious about rescinding security measures.

"Even though the war is over, the tensions are still there," said Ron V. Wilson, director of community affairs for San Francisco International Airport. "So we shouldn't take our guard down."

The restoration of curbside baggage-checking last month has been the only major modification of airport and airline security requirements. Curbside check-in is normally used by as many as a third of all passengers at the country's 435 commercial airports.

Other anti-terrorism measures taken because of the war remain in effect. Only ticketed passengers are permitted to proceed past screening points to the gate areas, and passengers are not permitted access to checked luggage.

Sunset Ranch is bit of old Hollywood

By Jennifer Merin

LOS ANGELES (AP) — On the crest of the hill are huge white letters that spell HOLLYWOOD.

Below is the world's movie mecca.

This area was once nothing but scrub, a familiar setting for many a Western. Today, thanks to careful cultivation, lush lawns and fabulous foliage surround palatial estates of movie moguls.

But glimpses of the Old West are still to be had, if you know where to look. One such outcropping is no more than a stone's throw from the famous HOLLYWOOD sign.

It's Sunset Ranch, located in Beachwood Canyon, a chic residential section nestled in the Hollywood Hills.

North Beachwood Drive meanders upward through carefully cultivated greenery that surrounds elegant dwellings. At its far end, the road turns sharply. The scenery changes abruptly. And there you are — in the Old West.

Beyond an open gate, a red dirt road winds through the scrub to a century-old horse ranch.

The place is as much a survivor of the Old West as its dusty, slow-paced atmosphere suggests. Since it was founded in 1897, Sunset Ranch has had a peaceful, prosperous existence.

Julian Smith, the man who introduced rodeo to Los Angeles, has owned the ranch since 1929. It is currently managed by his grandson, Steven Smith Jr., who rides rodeo throughout the United States and Canada.

Sunset Ranch looks so much like a Western movie set you expect Gene Autry to ride into view singing "I'm Back in the Saddle Again" and kicking up a trail of dust. He might tie Champion to the hitching post outside a weather-worn red building and mosey into the office, an old shack built so close to the mountainside it looks like it might lead to a mine shaft.

From 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, rain or shine, Sunset Ranch's horses (50 to 60 depending on the season) are for hire from the wooden corral across the dusty yard. They're $15 an hour, plus a $10 deposit. Hour-long lessons, Western saddle only, are $35. Equine temperament ranges from patient Ruby to the ever-ready, spirited Alamo.

Riders follow a steep trail up the mountain. Beyond the ridge is the refreshing expanse of Griffith Park, one of the largest public park grounds in any city in the nation. It has 43 miles of crisscrossing bridle paths leading to the observatory, the zoo and other in-park attractions or across the mountains to beautiful downtown Burbank.

Coyote Ridge Indian Trail and other paths with romantic Old West names are clearly marked, and maps of the park are available from ranger stations — or ask for a trail guide from Sunset Ranch to accompany you (no fee, but tips are expected).

Friday nights, rain or shine, Sunset Ranch offers a guided dinner ride across Griffith Park to Viva Mexican Restaurant in Burbank. The ride takes five hours, including 90 minutes for dinner. It costs $25 per person, excluding dinner. Register at 5 p.m. for a 6 p.m. departure; no reservations are accepted. For 15 or more riders, the ranch arranges dinner rides other nights, too.

The main trail from Sunset Ranch into Griffith Park branches into a fork just beyond the mountain crest. The left-hand trail winds around the mountain, eventually leading to the HOLLYWOOD sign.

The view is extraordinary.

Sunset Ranch is off the beaten tourist trail. Public buses run up North Beachwood Drive, but not far enough to get you to Sunset Ranch. Cabs cost a fortune. Cars are your best bet to get to the horses — and everywhere else in Los Angeles. At writing time, Dollar Rent-A-Car offers best rates (from $96.92 per week, unlimited miles), but all major agencies have Los Angeles offices.

Cleveland's comeback is well under way

By Tom and Joanne O'Toole
Copley News Service

There was lots of talk about the new developments, hotels and super attractions that were going to revitalize the city of Cleveland. For a while, that's all it was — talk, talk, talk.

Things are different as Cleveland zooms into the '90s. There is still a lot of talk, but there also is plenty happening. Old buildings are being renovated, unsightly areas cleared away, and high-rise office towers and hotels are shooting up — dramatically changing the cityscape. As you look around town you begin to think there has been a windfall of new money.

The money has always been here, and those mainly responsible for the infusion of big bucks into steel and bricks have been making their fortunes here for decades. But now seems to be the time for Cleveland, with the Jacobs brothers and the Ratner family responsible for many of the new projects.

New skyscrapers and top-rated hotels are opening downtown, with others under construction, and still more scheduled for groundbreaking. Voters passed a tax levy for a Gateway Project that will include a new sports stadium and adjacent all-purpose arena.

THE FLATS — originally a smoke-belching industrial waterfront along the Cuyahoga River — has come alive with restaurants, night spots and evening activities. It draws more and more people into the downtown area.

As they come, they are looking for and finding loft apartments, converted warehouse living space and luxury condominiums. People are moving back into the heart of the city, and what they are paying in today's market is a mere pittance compared to what it will be in the future.

The downtown has also debuted additional shopping in the form of the $43 million Galleria, and the more recent $400 million Tower City Center beneath Terminal Tower, which is now home to a trilevel of over 100 stores, shops and restaurants. Here, too, is the main linkage for the Rapid Transit System, moving thousands of passengers every day.

Corridors leading to the city center are being redeveloped, too, with old, crumbling structures being cleared away, and new everything taking their place.

The primary focus in bringing back the downtown is the construction of major hotels, which will attract major conventions, which will bring spendable dollars, which will ... well, you get the idea.

The 491-room Stouffer Tower City Plaza Hotel in the Terminal Tower complex facing Public Square has pumped $37 million into refurbishing its original facility. While there are no announced plans, "it's a possibility" another 300 rooms will be added if other hotels come on the scene. Stouffer's is owned by its parent firm, Nestle USA, which is headquartered in nearby Solon.

THE NEWLY opened 208-room Ritz-Carlton Hotel in the Tower City Center project occupies the top nine floors of a 14-story office building. The prestigious chain is the latest addition to the city's hotels in more than 20 years.

Nearing completion is a 424-room Marriott Hotel, part of the 57-story Society Center, which fronts on Public Square. Its opening will be another in a long series of shots-in-the-arm for Cleveland.

Seven blocks away is the 500-room Sheraton City Centre, which recently has undergone a $7 million refurbishing. It is in the heart of the downtown business district, and adjacent to the Cleveland Convention Center.

On East 12th Street is a 254-suite Radisson Plaza Hotel, just a few minutes walk from Playhouse Square on Euclid Avenue, and the Galleria on East Ninth Street. Over on Lakeside is a 377-room Holiday Inn.

On the drawing boards, and "almost assured" of being under construction is a much-awaited 486-room Hyatt Regency at the soon-to-come 60-story Ameritrust Center — which will be the tallest building in the state. There also is talk of a 205-room Wyndham Hotel in the heart of Playhouse Square, where buildings have already been demolished and land cleared.

With the changing face in the downtown, the 52-story Terminal Tower — long the symbol of the city — and the 45-story BP America Building will no longer be the most imposing structures around the four quadrants making up Public Square.

THE IMPETUS in drawing shoppers back to the downtown was the barrel-vaulted glass-roof Galleria adjoining the 40-story Erieview Tower. Containing two levels of trendy stores — Banana Republic and gadget-filled Brookstone among them — and two popular restaurants, the Galleria was a sounding board a few years ago. When its success was apparent, other things began happening with the downtown retailers.

Higbee's in the Terminal Tower complex, and May Co. in the next block, are the city's two full-line department stores. They put on a fresh face, greatly upgrading their stores to draw suburbanites back into the city, and extending their hours.

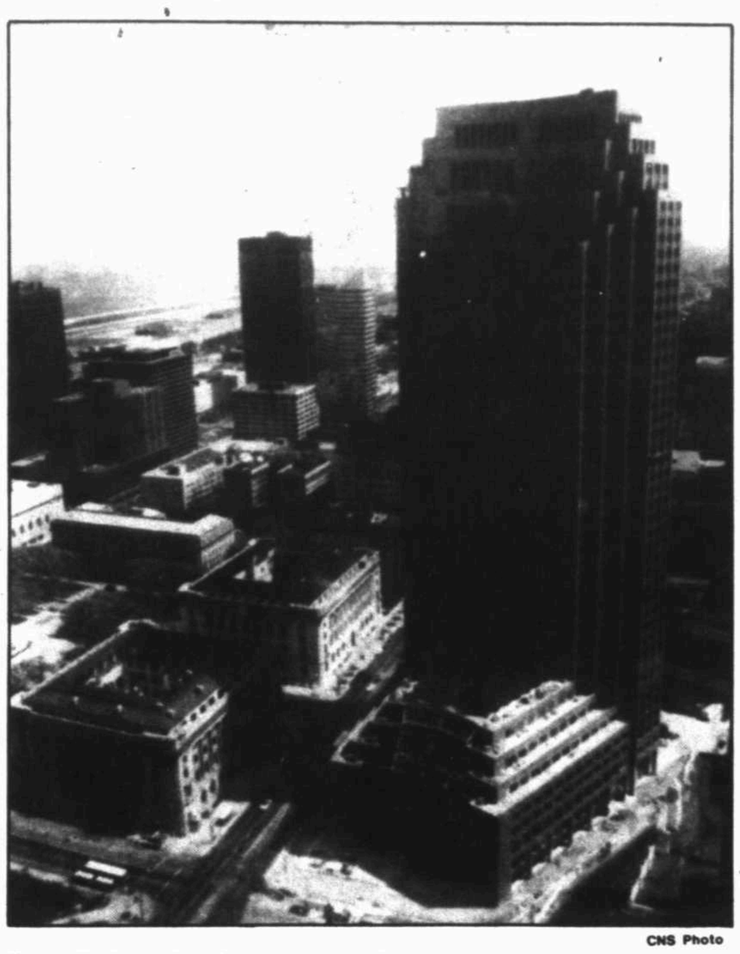

However, the success story for shopping is the magnificent Tower City Center. Fashion greats — Gucci, Fendi, Bally, Liz Claiborne and Brooks Brothers among them — share the dazzling surroundings with a Disney outlet, an 11-screen theater, various artsy spots and good restaurants.

The water-fountained main concourse ("The Avenue") is under the natural light of a three-story atrium. This outstanding addition to the downtown was so anticipated that the opening celebration drew over 2 million people in four days. Next to come is Neiman-Marcus.

PERHAPS THE most important element in putting life back into the downtown has been the rapid development in the Flats on either side of the snaking Cuyahoga River — which more or less divides the east and west sides of the city.

Once the hub of Cleveland's industry and manufacturing, the river route and numerous bridges are still intact, but the structures along the banks where the Cuyahoga meets Lake Erie have become a hot center for upscale dining, entertainment and recreation. During the boating season the river is literally clogged with pleasure craft, and they tie up six abreast at the restaurant docks.

As the Flats expands, more old buildings are being converted to art studios, stores, antiques shops and living space, while new condominiums are becoming not only popular, but a good investment.

CNS Photo

The BP America Building is one of the latest additions to Cleveland's expanding skyline.

On the downtown side of the Flats the best restaurants are Sammy's and the Watermark, while on the other side (water taxis run continuously) are the highly successful Shooters, Club Coconuts, the Powerhouse with its Improv Comedy Club, and Nautica Stage, the 4,000-seat outdoor amphitheater.

The Flats is also home to old standbys like Jim's Steak House and the Harbor Inn. A fun place is Shorty's, where you leap back into the '50s in atmosphere, music, and good old-fashioned hamburgers and malts.

The simple, one-room log cabin of Lorenzo Carter and his family is located along the river. He is considered the first permanent settler of what was then Cleaveland — named after Moses Cleaveland, who came in July 1796. Other daytime discoveries are made by strolling the riverfront boardwalk or sailing on either the Goodtime III or the Star of Nautica.

THE NORTH Coast Harbor, near the foot of East Ninth Steet on the Lake Erie shore, is in the midst of a $900 million three-phase plan. First came a promenade, an eight-acre park, a protected inlet, and moorings for pleasure craft.

This was followed by the William G. Mather Maritime Museum in an iron ore ship at permanent anchor, and the splashy new Captain John's, a ship restaurant. In the works is a new aquarium and an enclosed winter garden. There's also talk of still another hotel.

After what seemed like endless negotiations, a site finally has been decided on, and it now appears that the futuristic Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame and Museum will also be built at the North Coast Harbor. Anticipation runs high for the new attraction, with a guesstimated international annual tourist draw running as high as a million (depending upon whom you listen to).

The city lays claim to being the birthplace for the term "rock 'n' roll," with the late disc jockey Alan "Moon Doggie" Freed first coining the memorable words.

Also along the waterfront is the huge Cleveland Stadium seating more than 80,000, home to the Indians baseball and the Browns football teams. With the passage of a bond levy, a Gateway Project is assured, bringing a new 45,000-seat open-air stadium and a 20,000-seat indoor sports arena.

The $350 million development just south of Public Square will also house a farmers' market, retail outlets, and according to the projectionists, will bring four more hotels to the city, adding another 1,500 rooms.

FOR A SIGHTSEEING break, an interesting stop is at the 1890ish Arcade, with its five tiers of little shops, delis and quick-food restaurants. Natural light streams in through the 5,000-paned, arched glass roof. When opened, it was compared to the great Galleria in Milan, Italy. The place is packed each noontime with executives and secretaries who crowd the little tables to have a cup of soup or a sandwich.

There is great dining in the downtown, with Morton's Steak House in Tower City Center, Gershwin's at the BP complex and the French Connection at Stouffer's Tower City Plaza heading the list. On Sunday a fabuleus brunch is served in Stouffer's lobby (you'll need reservations).

For entertainment there is Playhouse Square along Euclid Avenue, with three elegantly restored, historic theaters seating more than 7,000. The Ohio, State and Palace theaters were showcases of America's vaudeville circuit in the 1920s. With the help of $35 million, decades of decay have been peeled away.

Now the theaters are home to a regular run of Broadway shows, pop musical reviews, comedy and big-name entertainers. Resident theater, opera and ballet companies also perform.

Four miles east of Public Square along Euclid Avenue is the historic Cleveland Play House, the oldest regional legitimate theater in the country (it was founded in 1915). It encompasses three separate theaters, and routinely presents classic productions by well-known authors, as well as new works by up-and-coming playwrights. Plays by Tennessee Williams and Arthur Miller have premiered here. Offering a nine-month season, the theaters are dark during the summer.

San Diego attractions offer 'touching' experiences

By Carol Martinez
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN DIEGO — Bat rays are the new must-touch residents of aquatic interactive pools.

Visitors are no longer content with handling a colorful sea star. They want to touch the sleek and slippery surface of a bat ray.

Two places in San Diego — Sea World and Chula Vista Nature Interpretive Center — offer visitors the opportunity to interact with rays. Animals at both establishments have been debarbed to permit handling.

Bat Ray Shallows is a part of the recently opened Forbidden Reef exhibit at Sea World. The large, shallow tank contains more than 100 bat rays that average 3 feet across. These black animals float through the water, periodically flapping their winglike sides.

Visitors can reach out and put their hands in the cold water — it's 52 degrees — to pet the slimy wings.

"Please keep your hand flat," cautions a guide, who warns that rings could scratch the animals. She also dispenses tidbits of information on the newest residents of the park.

The edges of some of the rays are red and appear to be sore.

"They can't see well and run into the rocks," explained the guide.

A NEARBY STAND offers squid for sale, so visitors can feed the rays. There's also a small pool especially for children who might be frightened by the large pond and its many ray residents. Small-pond denizens include small bat rays and round sting rays. Sometimes, horseshoe crabs are in residence, too.

The Forbidden Reef also is home to leopard sharks, horseshoe crabs and shovelnose guitarfish. These are kept in a separate area and visitors can't touch these animals.

Another group of Forbidden Reef residents that are off-limits to hands-on visitors are the Moray eels. These snakelike animals bob in the water.

But the best viewing of the eel can be found in the Moray Eel Cavern, the underground viewing area. Eery music greets visitors who walk down a lava tunnel to see the aquariums stocked with more than 400 of these creatures. Their mouths are always open, displaying their sharp teeth. It's creepy and definitely the stuff of nightmares.

For souvenir seekers, there's a gift shop near the exhibit. Here, plastic rays can be purchased for $1.59 or $2. Pewter pins featuring rays or eels are $5.95. The shop was out of stuffed bat rays during a recent visit, but they sell for $8 when available. Stuffed eels are not available.

After you experience the Forbidden Reef, you can get drenched with salt water at the Shamu killer whale show or visit any of the numerous attractions and exhibits at the park. It takes at least five hours for a complete tour of the park.

ANOTHER NEW show is Window to the Sea, which opened in fall 1990.

It's a not-quite-up-to-Disney-standards version of Star Tours, complete with talking computers. The seats are stationary, and this sea adventure is actually one long commercial for the park and its many research projects.

All this fun and adventure at Sea World is expensive: Admission is $22.95 for adults and $16.95 for children.

But if you really want to pet rays, there's an alternative. Just eight miles south of San Diego is the Chula Vista Nature Interpretive Center. The admission price is right (free), and it's 50 cents for adults to ride the bus and free for children under age 17. (Donations are accepted.)

Passengers park their cars and board a bus for a short but bumpy ride to the Nature Center in Sweetwater Marsh National Wildlife Refuge.

In addition to the petting pool, which is stocked with rays and a variety of other residents, the center features both indoor and outdoor exhibits on the marshland and its animal residents.

Bird fans can watch a movie called "Scenes From a Salt Marsh" or study exhibits featuring birds. Also there are wooden birds to play with or binoculars to rent ($1 for two hours). With the binoculars, visitors can search for some of the 130 species of birds living in one of the few remaining California wetlands.

Birds to see at Vener Pond include the long-billed curlew, avocet, marbled godwit, Mallard duck and green-winged teal.

Underground nest boxes are available for viewing at the burrowing owl aviary.

IF YOU PREFER fish, there are more than 20 aquariums containing fish unique to the coastal marsh environment. There's nothing as a large as Shamu or as noisy as a seal, but there are California killifish, arrow goby and specklefin midshipman.

The high point of the center is the bat ray/sting ray petting pool. In addition to the rays, there are leopard sharks and shovelnose guitarfish.

The best times to be at the pool are feeding times, which are 10:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. daily. The very friendly rays will take squid and krill right from your hand. None of the residents will bite unless you stick your fingers into their mouths.

It's a perfect chance to compare the slimy ray and the sandpaper-rough shark. You can pet the guitarfish and watch it as it follows the food with its eyes and takes a quick bite. It's a little scary, and a lot of fun, to have these guys kiss your fingers.

Visitors can look inside a mouse house and watch the 13 small, furry residents dash about. There are snakes to watch, including a California boa, a king snake and a rosy boa. There's a southern alligatory lizard, too.

There are no choreographed shows, but you can watch the fat innkeeper worm's gray and pink body move around. Children will enjoy the bioscanner, a camera that zooms in and out on a resting snake.

A small shop offers books, postcards and other items for sale. They even sell the same plastic rays that are available at Sea World. And the very same pewter pins are available for $1 less.

Two places in San Diego — Sea World and Chula Vista Nature Interpretive Center — offer visitors the opportunity to interact with rays. Animals at both establishments have been debarbed to permit handling.

SAN FRANCISCO — The ultimate thinking machine is also the ultimate shrinking machine.

The latest computer that runs the world's most popular business software is as big as a checkbook and weighs less than a pound. It's the HP 95LX, introduced Tuesday by Hewlett-Packard Co. and Lotus Development Corp.

Researchers predict the market for these systems, expected to sell for around $200, will grow from 398,000 units in 1990 to 5.2 million in 1994.

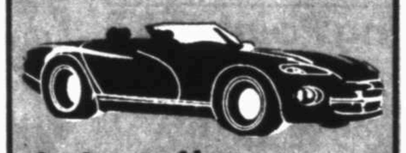

Unlike a laptop computer, the 95LX is not intended to be a general-purpose computer. Because it lacks a normal-sized keyboard, it is not expected to attract people who use a computer for writing. And to keep it light, it doesn't have a disk drive for data storage, instead using memory cards.

Sweet deal

WASHINGTON — World sugar production in 1990-91 is expected to exceed consumption for the first time in six years, says the U.S. Agriculture Department.

Production for the year was forecast at a record 110.7 million metric tons, raw value, up 2 percent from 1989-90 and 770,000 tons more than indicated in the department's November forecast.

The revision reflects improved production prospects in countries such as the United States, Brazil, the European Community — especially France and Germany, excluding the former East Germany — Poland and Turkey, the report said.

Auto action

WASHINGTON — In a bid to understand why the U.S. auto industry is suffering huge financial losses and a competitive decline, a delegation of 45 House members traveled to Detroit to confer with industry and union leaders and to tour factories and research laboratories.

The unusual visit comes at a time when Congress has been weighing new regulations covering fuel efficiency, safety, clean air and trade that could have an enormous impact on the industry.

Leaders of the industry are worried that the cost of meeting new regulations will hamper its efforts to stem the rising tide of competition from Japanese automakers, whose share of the U.S. market continues to grow.

In the coming weeks the Big Three are expected to post a cumulative loss that some analysts believe could reach $3 billion, on top of a fourth-quarter loss of about $2 billion.

The industry's most immediate concern is looming energy legislation that would tighten fuel efficiency requirements. Automakers say the only way to meet the more stringent proposals for new fuel efficiency standards would be to radically reduce the size and weight of most models.

Couple dreams up 'scentsible' notion

■ A Midland couple has created an air freshener that attaches to air conditioners.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

A favorite West Texas pastime — a fish fry — has started a Midland couple on the path to a "fresh" business.

Lacy Ward credits his brother with getting them involved in the air freshener business.

His brother created, and patented, a scented strip that goes on air filters, while Lacy came up with the idea for Fresh Paks, an air freshener that attaches to an air filter in an heating, ventilating, air conditioning (HVAC) system.

"We'd had a fish fry, and we were trying to get rid of the fish smell," he recalled. "We took an air freshener and put it in a refrigerated air unit, but it didn't last long. That's when we came up with the idea for a scented air filter."

In trying to develop a scented air filter, Ward and his wife, Judy, visited with some air filter manufacturers, who convinced them the idea was not practical. That's when they developed the Fresh Pak, a mesh pouch filled with scent-impregnated plastic pellets. A patent is pending on the process.

The couple incorporated Ward Products in the late 1980s, and has been working with five investors — from New Jersey, Austin and Stephenville — to build the company. Currently it employs two full-time and three on a part-time basis.

Judy Ward estimated the company has 50 customers, mostly HVAC companies. The product has been sent to companies in Canada and Jamaica, and recently an order was received from a Japanese company. The initial Japanese order was for 52 cases — there are 36 packages to a case. The Wards figure the total Japanese order will be for 2,100 cases or 75,600 units.

Her husband observed that "If we maintain the sales we have now, we'll have $120,000 in sales this year. With the Japanese order, we expect sales to be $250,000."

Fresh Paks come in two sizes — full size, designed for spaces up to 3,000 square feet, or mini paks, designed for spaces up to 1,500 square feet. The three best-selling scents are Potpourri, Fresh Outdoor and Apple Harvest. The paks are designed to last about a month, depending on how they're used and how often the unit cycles.

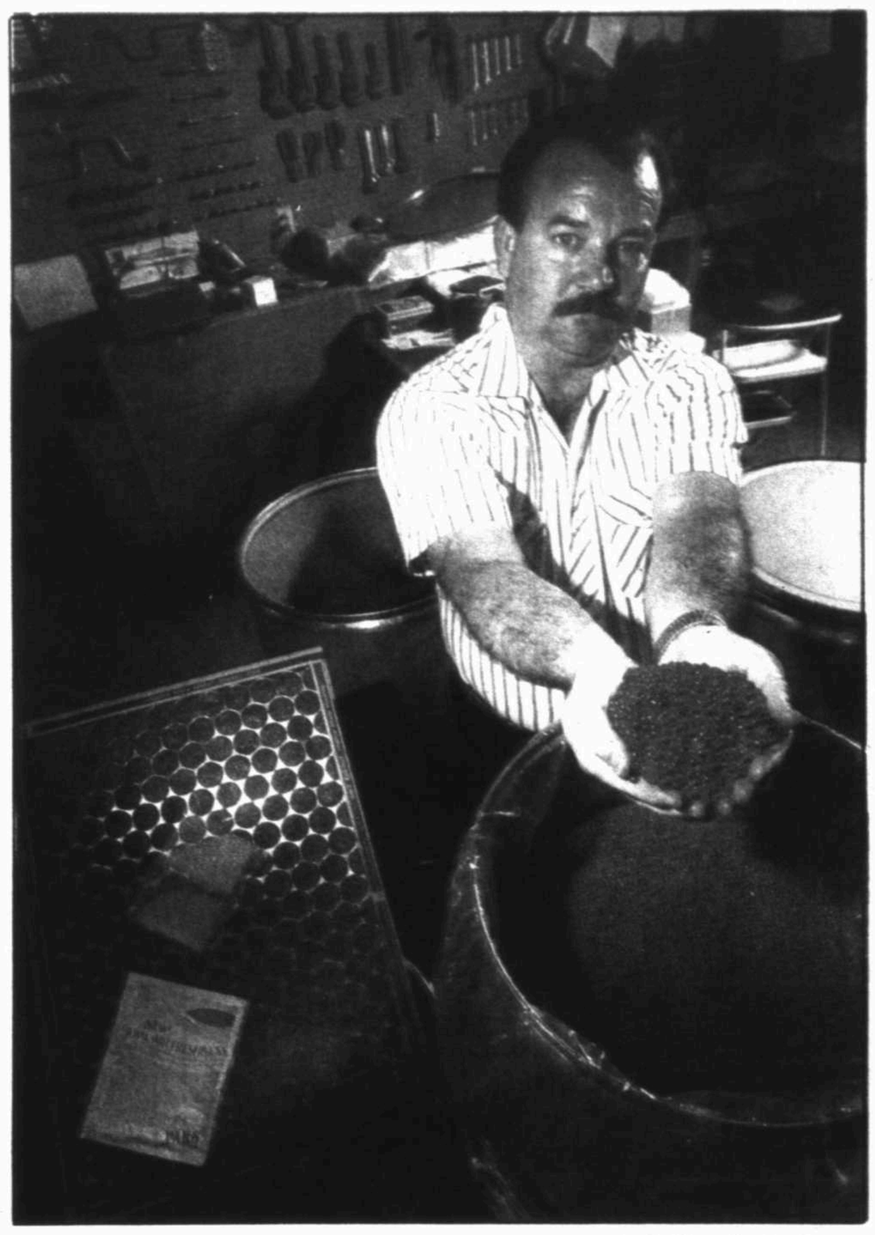

"We wanted to parallel the life of an air filter," Ward noted, adding that the Fresh Paks are out-of-sight in the system, and are non-toxic. "You can eat these pellets," he said. "It's not a good idea and you probably wouldn't enjoy them, but they won't hurt you."

The pellets are manufactured by a company in the Northeast and shipped to the Wards, where they are packaged, packed and shipped.

For all its success already, the company is suffering growing pains. The Wards are looking for a warehouse space to move their operations to — preferably about 1,000 square feet with a small office. As Judy admitted, "I want this out of my house."

And Lacy, who had been with Clay-Desta Communications before devoting his time to Ward Products, now spends his weekdays in Longview, as a salesman with Valueline Long Distance, in order to keep his family — and the business — going.

Caller ID controversy intensifies

■ The controversy over Caller ID continues across the country as the pros and cons of the new telephone service is debated.

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — It seemed like a typical order for Dugout Pizzeria in suburban Canoga Park. But when the driver showed up at the customer's door, there were delivery people from Domino's and other pizza shops. The perplexed recipient refused them all.

Someone got a good laugh.

"Obviously, he wouldn't pay because he didn't order any," said Richard Erdos, Dugout's owner. "But we ended up getting stuck."

■ Midland firm plays role in the Caller ID controversy /6F

Prank calls are a costly and frequent business problem for pizza shops. But Erdos thinks he can cut down on them with a new service proposed by Pacific Bell and GTE, two major telephone companies that serve California.

The service allows him to hook up a box to his telephone that shows a caller's number while the phone still is ringing. With the number it would be easier to check if an order is legitimate.

"It would be a very big help," Erdos said.

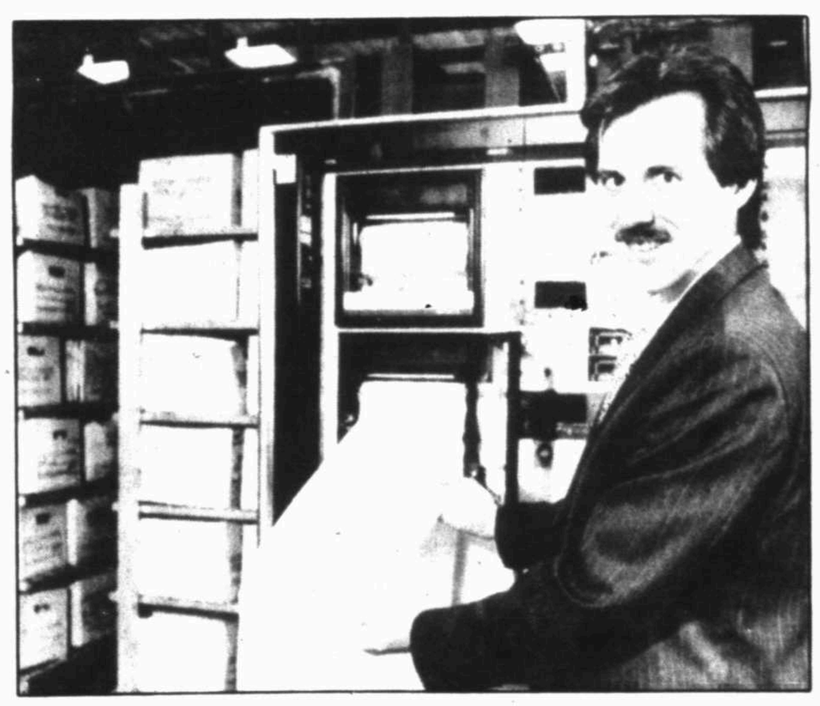

But others question whether the prospect of having your phone number displayed on the other end of the line represents an invasion of privacy.

Caller ID is the most controversial of several services local phone companies have proposed. If approved by the California Public Utilities Commission, Los Angeles consumers may be able to automatically trace bothersome calls, block certain calls from ringing or automatically dial the number of the last call even if the phone was not answered.

Pacific Bell hopes to offer the service in area codes 213 and 818 in Los Angeles and in 415 and 408 in the San Francisco area by next fall. Area codes 707, 714 and 805 will follow in 1992. GTE plans to offer the service in its 805 Los Angeles territory next fall. Next year service in the new 310 area code in Santa Monica will be available, as it will in area codes 818 and 714.

Caller ID is expected to cost residential customers $6.50 to $7 a month. Other new services will tack on $2 to $5 to the monthly bill.

Carpet cleaners restore books and documents

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — When grape juice gets spilled on the living room carpet, one of the dozens of companies that can clean it up is Blackmon-Mooring Enterprises Inc.

When books or valuable documents are damaged by fire or water, one of the handful of companies that can clean it up is, well, Blackmon-Mooring. And the same goes for toxic and hazardous spills.

Started 46 years ago by Scott W. Mooring and William G. Blackmon, who had just graduated from Texas Christian University, the Fort Worth company has over 200 franchises nationwide.

The company has remained in the family, with sons and grandchildren in charge, but most of its $50 million in annual revenue now comes from BMS Catastrophe and EmTech Environmental Services.

The two subsidiaries, each less than 10 years old, are putting the company's cleaning expertise to use outdoors and in emergencies.

Their work ranges from a restoring a water-damaged family Bible to containing chemicals from a train derailment to cleaning up the grime from the fire that consumed several floors of the First Interstate Bank building in Los Angeles three years ago.

"You could go 30, 40, 50 floors above the fire and there would be soot and grime and discoloration and smells," said John Popovich, director of public affairs for First Interstate. "I had no conception of what smoke damage meant. Literally everything had to be cleaned."

BMS Catastrophe, nicknamed BMS Cat, sent 120 people from Texas and hired 1,000 in California to clean the skyscraper. The job is one of the largest it has handled and helped seal the company's reputation for moving quickly with many people to clean up a disaster.

"To the best of my knowledge, everyone in the bank was pleased with their work," Popovich said.

"We can handle any situation," says Michael Milisavljevich, manager of the Blackmon-Mooring warehouse near downtown Fort Worth, a souped-up firehouse for EmTech and archivists' den for BMS Cat.

BMS Cat uses many tools — from cotton swabs to a large freeze-drying chamber — to restore documents and computer disks damaged by fire or water, said engineer Kirk Lively.

Bogus oil deals bilk investors

■ Boiler rooms raked in millions in bogus oil deals as result of the war in the Gulf, authorities claim.

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Authorities today announced raids on 32 businesses that sold bogus oil and gas investments with a promise of big profits from the Persian Gulf War.

More than 3,500 people may have invested $50 million in programs sold through the "boiler room" sales firms in Los Angeles, Dallas and Salt Lake City, said officials from the North American Securities Administrators Association, a watchdog group of state regulators.

"In one instance, a California man who invested a total of $75,000 was told the war would drive up the price of oil so far that he would make at least 35 percent a year and receive royalty checks for 20 to 30 years," said NASAA president John R. Perkins.

Officials reported 10 arrests in 16 states over the last 10 days, and said they expect another 20 arrests as the investigation continues.

The arrests are the result of an eight-month investigation that began shortly after Iraq invaded Kuwait last August and set the stage for the Gulf War.

The 16 states worked together to share information and evidence, said Glenn Pomeroy, North Dakota's securities commissioner.

"There are still several warrants out being served," said G. W. McDonald, chief of enforcement for the California Department of Corporations. "We have obtained over 200 boxes of evidence, weighing over a ton. We have served six cease-and-desist orders."

The charges include securities registration and licensing violations, securities fraud, commodity fraud, telemarketing registration law violations and grand theft.

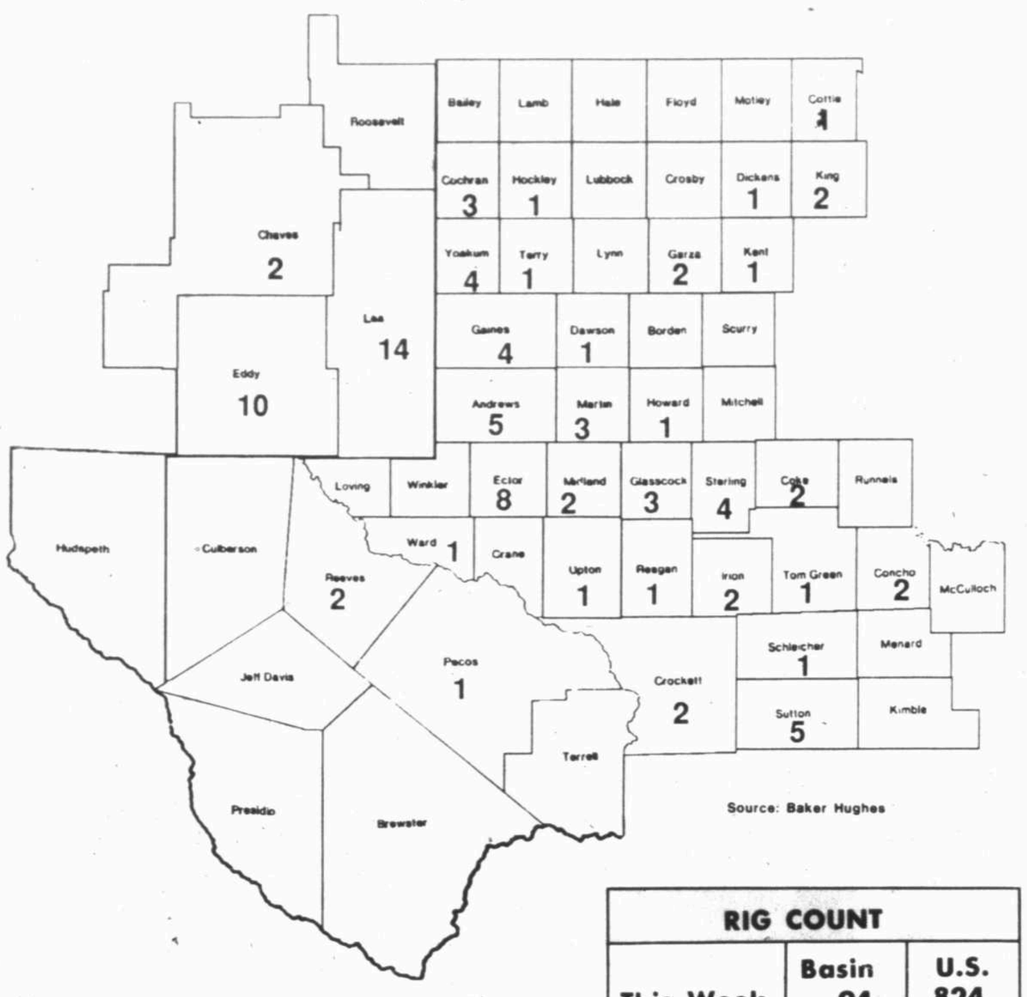

The search warrants were served at 14 firms in California, one firm in Dallas, identified as Intermountain Energy and Exploration, and six in Salt Lake City. Officials said the defendants will be prosecuted in state courts.

The states involved in the investigation were California, Texas, North Dakota, Kansas, Utah, Missouri, Georgia, Alabama, Arizona, Idaho, Pennsylvania, Indiana, West Virginia, Wyoming, New Hampshire and Illinois.

NASAA helps state-level members in investigating and prosecuting swindles involving investments and financial markets.

Valero quarterly profits double

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Valero Energy Corp. more than doubled its first quarter profit because it sold most of its oil production before prices fell during the war.

Valero earned $20.6 million, or 47 cents a share, on revenues of $286.9 million during the quarter that ended March 31, the company announced Thursday. A year ago, the company earned $9.7 million, 22 cents a share, on revenues of $260.4 million.

The company's refining and marketing operations reported operating income of $28.7 million, 46 percent higher than the $19.7 million of last year.

Coastal profits drop 28 percent

HOUSTON (AP) — Coastal Corp., the diversified energy company led by Oscar Wyatt, earned $54.3 million in the first quarter, a 28 percent decline from last year.

The company blamed the performance on a warm winter that slowed natural gas sales and the fall of oil prices at the beginning of the Persian Gulf War.

Coastal's profit for the quarter that ended March 31 was 52 cents a share on revenues of $2.54 billion. During the same quarter last year, Coastal earned $75.6 million.

DENISE A. BODE
President

Independent Petroleum Association of America

The new and first lady president of the IPAA is Denise Bode, an Oklahoma native who has had vast experience in the legislative process as well as being a professional lobbist and a Washington, D.C. business woman.

During here earlier years in Bartlesville, Oklahoma. Ms. Bode had a natural instinct about the energy industry as she lived in the heart of Independent activity. She started working for Senator David L. Boren (D-OK) in 1976 when he was Governor of Oklahoma following her graduation from the University of Oklahoma. Upon Senator Boren's election to the U.S. Senate, she followed him to Washington, D.C. to work as his tax counsel. In Washington she spent many of her evenings attending graduate school for eight years, earning a law degree from George Mason University in 1982 and a master of law degree in taxation from Georgetown University in 1984.

When Denise ventured into the private business sector she became a founding partner of the Washington, D.C. lobbying firm of Gold and Liebengood, Inc., representing a broad range of clients from cattlemen to the National Football League, and in such diverse matters as energy, telecommunications, municipal finance, small business, agriculture, insurance, real estate, pensions and mutual funds. When her appointment as IPAA president was announced, the Washington Post said in a profile story. "Denise Bode's connections with legislators in Oklahoma and other oil producing states and her knowledge of energy issues give her the necessary armor to lead the associations charge on Capitol Hill."

Denise's initial goals are to build the most effective and well respected lobbying team of any industry by developing a team approach among the IPAA's lobbiest; by coalition building with other industry groups outside the energy area; and by spending time educating key players in Congress and the Administration about the role of the domestic producer. She wants to go "high profile" on Independent issues, including the encouragement of positive stories about Independents and in introducing to members of Congress to the role of the Independents.

Mrs. Bode resides in Alexandria, VA with her husband, John and their son, Sean.

Disney blames lower profits on recession

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The Walt Disney Co. said that its earnings for the quarter ended March 31 fell 29 percent as a weak economy and the Persian Gulf war hurt attendance at its theme parks, and box-office flops depressed results from its film division.

Disney said its net income for the quarter, the second of its fiscal year, was $126.6 million, or 95 cents a share, compared with $178.5 million, or $1.29 a share, in the comparable period last year.

Revenues for the quarter were $1.44 billion, an increase of 10.8 percent over the period a year earlier.

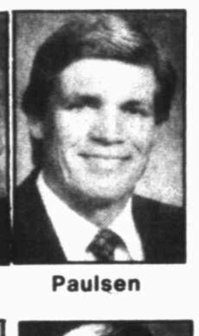

Operating income in the company's theme parks and resorts segment fell 33 percent, to $130.7 million. Revenues in the segment fell 6 percent, to $671.1 million.

The company singled out lower attendance at Walt Disney World in Florida, lower occupancy rates at its resort hotels and the costs of expansion as reasons for the decline.

Cookie couple found fast-track crumby

By Louis Trager
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO – He was an investment banker, she a securities trader.

They chucked the high-powered Financial District life to become their own bosses and live the dream: Building the next IBM-sized empire, from scratch.

They're on their way, starting with cookies, with a style so square it's hip and with employee perks rare in this era of givebacks.

They're Linda E. Rawlings, president, and her husband Kenneth B. Rawlings, chairman and chief executive officer, Otis Spunkmeyer Inc. of San Leandro, Calif.

She's 36 and a former professional dancer from Maine. He was 58 on Saturday. He's a middle-class native of Piedmont, Calif., on his second marriage as well as his second career.

She's the operations chief. He does the marketing and strategic plans.

The company's main business is frozen cookie dough. It's baked fresh at the point of sale in special ovens that the company engineered, builds through an affiliate and provides to its retailing customers.

About 80 percent of Otis' cookie sales are split between mom-and-pop stores and food services – cafeterias at corporations, schools, airports and hospitals. Most of the rest are through convenience stores and fast-food chains.

Sales hit $35 million in 1989 and $53 million last year. They say they are headed to at least $85 million this year.

A national supermarket rollout of the frozen dough is planned over the next two years.

In addition to cookies, a recently purchased muffin business is expected to quadruple its sales this year, to $12 million.

The profit margins from this expanding empire are tasty, but the Rawlings won't divulge dollar figures.

The Rawlings own 80 percent of the business. Outside investors, mostly their friends, and top Otis executives each own 10 percent stakes.

They haven't taken a lot of money out of their company. They've been using the proceeds to expand the business without borrowing.

The Rawlings come off down-to-earth, with earnest discussions of quality and elaborate company programs to promote family values and education.

In the unpartitioned office, most favor shirt-sleeved informality – and snacks from the constant platters of fresh cookies.

The Rawlings are paternalistic bosses.

They're finishing a $150,000 gym and locker rooms for the employee basketball league. They've hired a fulltime coach to help with the complete workout apparatus. And they're set to open an employee day-care center.

The company won't employ smokers. It does wonders for the insurance premiums.

Here, briefly, is how it all came to pass:

■ 1977: A moonlighting Ken Rawlings founds a chain of cookie boutiques – after getting a whiff of such a shop in Southern California and doing research at a University of California-Berkeley library. The name "Otis Spunkmeyer," an inspiration of his 12-year-old daughter, was adopted because it was funky enough to be memorable without being too exotic.

And he meets Linda. "We used to spend our dates jumping in the station wagon and making deliveries to the stores," she says.

■ 1979: He goes into cookies full time and opens a factory, so he can make better dough than he's been buying.

■ 1983: Linda Rawlings quits her brokerage job, and they marry.

Annual sales from their 25 cookie boutiques were $3 million and the company had just gone into the black. But the Rawlings saw too many chains fighting for too few locations at too-high rents.

So over the next four years, they changed Otis from retailing to wholesaling. And they avoided getting burned, like Mrs. Fields and other cookie rivals.

Wholesaling required hiring a sales force and – control lovers and cost haters that the Rawlings are – creating the company's own national distribution network.

That took a $5 million-investment to get up and running.

Congress fears U.S. free trade

Hearst News Service

MEXICO CITY — Fears that U.S. companies will move to Mexico to take advantage of less stringent environmental and workplace regulations threaten to derail negotiations of a proposed North American Free Trade Agreement, analysts say.

A growing belief that large U.S. employers would "run away" south of the border rather than submit to tougher U.S. regulations has turned many members of Congress against the proposed pact in past months, the sources say.

At the least, analysts say, opponents are likely to force environmental, labor and other "side" issues into the trade negotiations set for summer. If stiff enough, the congressional opposition may scuttle the trade talks.

Worried that the proposed agreement may be in jeopardy, Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari vowed earlier this month that Mexico will not become a haven for environmentally harmful foreign industries.

Citing the health hazard it has posed to Mexico City residents, Salinas last week ordered the closure of the huge, government-owned petroleum complex in the capital. The 57-year-old March 18 plant, named to commemorate the date in 1938 that Mexico's oil industry was nationalized, is thought to have caused as much as 10 percent of Mexico City's severe air pollution.

Bush administration officials would like to begin free-trade negotiations as early as June and finish the talks in six to 12 months. To do so, they need "fast track" authority by Congress that would allow them to proceed without congressional input during the negotiations. Congress would be able to vote for or against the completed trade accord.

Congress has until June 1 to disallow fast-track authority. Such disapproval was once considered extremely unlikely. But growing worries about "runaway" plants heading for Mexico have produced stiff congressional opposition to the fast-track approach.

Proponents envision a free-trade agreement that would meld the economies of the United States, Canada and Mexico. The idea is for U.S. and Canadian capital, meshed with inexpensive Mexican labor and raw materials, to provide stiff competition to trade blocs forming in Europe and the Pacific Rim.

U.S. opponents say a free-trade pact could result in a deteriorated environment and the loss of American jobs as companies move to take advantage of cheaper labor and less strict health and safety regulations.

Organized labor is leading U.S. opposition to the proposed agreement.

But environmental concerns have posed the first serious threat.

"Environment is only an issue because of the runaway plant thing," said Colleen Morton, director of the U.S. Council of the Mexico-U.S. Business Committee, which is lobbying for the trade agreement. "They (members of Congress) are not concerned with Mexico City's air."

The inclusion of environmental and labor issues in the trade negotiations had been opposed by administration officials and supporters of a free-trade agreement.

But stiff lobbying and keen congressional interest in recent months have forced free-trade proponents to change their stance.

Proponents' new willingness to include such issues in the negotiations shows how seriously they are taking the opposition, analysts say.

"Our early hope had been to avoid including side issues in the trade negotiations," said Timothy O'Leary, a spokesman for U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills. "But we have never been set in concrete on the issue."

The first public signal that the trade agreement could be in trouble in Congress came March 7, when Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., requested in a letter to President Bush that the administration come up with a specific plan for dealing with environmental and labor issues related to a free-trade pact. The administration has promised to present such a plan by May 1.

Both Bentsen and Rostenkowski support a free-trade pact with Mexico. Bentsen had said last November that there was no need for non-trade issues to be included in an eventual agreement.

Administration and congressional officials say the "side" issues may either be addressed in the actual free-trade negotiations or in parallel negotiations that will be formally attached to a free-trade agreement.

Mexican officials and other free-trade supporters believe fast-track authority is essential to the negotiation of a trade agreement. Without the fast track, congressional groups could force politically influential industries – such as agriculture and textiles – off the negotiating table.

Environmental groups in the United States believe Salinas' order to close the Mexico City refinery was aimed, in part, at a U.S. congressional audience.

"I'm suspicious that the plant closing was directed as much at the U.S. audience as at the Mexican public," said Paul Speck, a lobbyist for the National Wildlife Federation, which is leading the effort to include environmental issues in the trade talks. "What they are trying to say is that this will be the standard in the future. It's hard to believe."

Last week, Mexican authorities announced other anti-pollution measures, including stricter emission standards for automobiles and factories and the replacement of the capital's aging fleet of taxis and minibuses with cleaner models.

Midland firm has role in Caller ID

■ A call-screening device manufactured by a Midland firm addresses some of the problems of the national Caller ID issue.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

As the Caller ID controversy heats up nationwide, KES Communications Inc., a Midland firm has launched a nationwide public relations push to capitalize on the issue.

KES Communications of Midland claims that its 'Friends Only' call-screening device, which sells for $129, overcomes many of the objections to Caller ID by converting any telephone number into an unlisted number at the push of a button.

While the Midland-made product has been on the market for two years, it was only recently propelled into the limelight by the national controversy surrounding caller indentification devices.

Caller identification is a system that provides telephone privacy by flashing the number of the calling party on a small screen when the phone rings.

Because telephone company lines are used to flash the number on the screen, some groups have called this a violation of wiretap laws, saying that it violates the privacy of the caller. For instance, an individual calling anonymously for counseling may have his or her number recorded by a caller ID system. Citizens who wish to report crimes anonymously could have their number monitored.

Because of this potential for abuse, some courts have challenged the device. Presently, the sale of caller ID systems for the purpose of controlling incoming calls is permitted in only 15 states, and residents in some states have been warned that the installation and use of a caller ID system could be a third degree felony.

However, call control systems such as 'Friends Only' side step the 'wire tap' issue by not flashing the calling number, says Janice Harissis, marketing coordinator for KES Communications. Instead, when the call control device is on, the incoming caller must enter a three digit access code before the phone will even ring.

Harrissis said the company is in the midst of a natiowide public relations program to inform the public about 'Friends Only' and its role in the telephone privacy issue.

FRESH: Making air fresh

(From 1F)

They are also seeking some investors to help finance the growth of this company, and expect to put out a prospectus in the next month to raise expansion funds. As Lacy put it, "We're at the point now where we either grow, or we die."

The next step, addition to raising funds, is to hook up with a contract packager. Lacy would like to hire a West Texas company, but said the closest he has found is in Illinois.

The Wards' product is aimed at a large market. "Fragrance has been dubbed the 'Muzak of the 90's', due to research that links fragrances to positive mental images" Lacy noted. "In the 1990s, more people are working at home. There's an emphasis on time spent at home, and people are concernec about the environmental quality of their home. They're worriec about stale air."

He added that the air freshener market is expected to double in the next five years to more than $1.5 billion, and is changing from traditional air fresheners to environmental fragrances. That is why the company's main customers are HVAC companies.

Fresh Paks have been well received. At a recent home show in Chicago, the product was ranked in the top 30 products, and won a retailers award. And The Wards say they move about 10,000 units to repeat customers each month.

"It's scary, but it's fun, especially since it's a new idea, a new industry," Lacy said. "It would tickle me to know we've played a role in the West Texas economy."

CLEAN: Books restored

(From 1F)

"The most important thing for most companies is the information they have," Lively said.

BMS Cat's hallmark is the 1,500-cubic foot vacuum chamber, where frozen documents are dried in a process that avoids the paper-damaging liquid stage of water.

"When you're talking about somebody's medical record, that can be very important," said Todd Leach, spokesman for Humana Hospital in Fort Walton Beach, Fla., which experienced a major fire in 1988. "They were able to save a lot of those for us."

Depending on the extent of damage, it takes from four days to six weeks to put a load of documents through the freeze drying process.

In restoration, freeze-drying "has become the most sound technique for important documents," said Peter Waters, a conservationist for the Library of Congress.

Waters toured the Blackmon-Mooring plant recently with archivists from BAN, the Soviet Union's state library, located in Leningrad.

Larry Wood, chief engineer for BMS Cat, visited BAN several months ago to learn how it recovered from a 1988 fire that damaged 200,000 books.

He said there are limits to what the company can do.

"We're not claiming to be art restorers," Wood said. "If somebody laid the Gutenberg Bible on my desk, I would call somebody else for help."

ID: Controversy rages

(From 1F)

Technological advances in the telephone companies' software and switching equipment have made such services possible. But deregulation also has played a role.

A regulated company often has no incentive to innovate since its profits are capped, according to Ben Enis, University of Southern California professor of marketing. Now that phone companies have fewer restrictions, new services will be rewarded or penalized in the marketplace on their own merits.

The legacy of regulation, however, is that phone companies do not listen to their customers carefully enough, Enis said. They are trying to introduce new services because the technology is available even though a large number of customers may be alienated.

"It's a technological miracle that they can identify one number from the millions out there," Enis said.

Charles Pruitt: Distinguished artist

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Charles N. Pruitt, who has been named Celebration of the Arts Distinguished Artist for 1991, paints on location. As an artist who captures nature, finding secluded and out of the way locations is a top priority.

This month Pruitt and three other artists who also paint on location made a trip to central Texas to capture the bluebonnets. After carefully chosing a scenic spot overlooking a valley on the Wilson Loop Road outside Kerrville, Pruitt discovered he wasn't the only one who appreciated the view.

"It's very frustrating to think you've got the whole place to yourself and all of a sudden you wind up with a lot of tourists," Pruitt said. "We got there early in the morning and the cars kept coming."

He laughed as he recalled the hundreds of automobiles that passed him that day. Apparently the drive had been written up in some state magazine, Pruitt said, and the result was a freeway full of traffic on this two lane road 35 miles outside of Kerrville. Even the sheriff had to come out to restore order and keep people from infringing on private property.

"It was just a good view, very scenic view, that's where everyone wanted to stop and look," said Pruitt, who painted through a car rally, the sheriff's tour, questions from visitors from Germany and Canada.

Then, along came the Kerrville bus line.

"About 25 tourists jumped out, ran over, and one said, 'What are you doing?'" Pruitt said. After answering questions, Pruitt withdrew. "They stood behind me about 20 feet. Between the noise of the bus and all the people, it was kind of disrupting. I put down my brush and walked down the mountain and got away from all that."

His fellow painters, who already had chosen places further away from the road, teased him when he fled down the hill. The episode evoked a standing joke between artists, especially those who paint outside instead of in their studios.

"You're standing there painting, and that's obviously what you are doing, and people will come up behind you, and one out of 10 will ask you, 'What you are doing?' With people that paint on location it's obvious what you're doing."

He said most people don't ask the question they really want answered.

"Their question is, 'Which direction are you painting?' or 'Which particular scene of this beauty are you painting?' My mother, Mrs. Lonie Pruitt, would wait until about halfway through, and she would say, 'Oh, now I see what you see.' The people behind me don't see what I see until I'm about halfway through. The question comes out, 'What are you doing?'"

Authenticity plays a major role in the reason Pruitt is an outdoors or "plein air" painter.

"There's no other substitute for painting out of doors. All your problems and all your solutions are right in front of you. You don't have a problem. When you work from a photo, you have a problem with distortion and the colors inside the shadows — what color the reflected light is. The camera doesn't pick those things up, and the only way you can get them is working on location."

Pruitt, who was born and raised near the small West Texas farming and ranching community of Colorado City, has been drawing since grade school and was, along with a female student, the school artist when he was growing up.

"My mother had a great influence in giving me an appreciation of nature, and really my painting is just an expression of my love for nature."

Pruitt began selling his work in 1969.

"I was doing watercolors, charcoals and oil paintings. After about 10 years of that, I finally just settled on oil paintings."

Pruitt has a degree, but it's not in art. It's in management. He was administrative manager for a Midland company called Structuremaps Ltd. before becoming a self-employed landman in 1977. Prior to working for Structuremaps Ltd., Pruitt, who moved here with his wife in 1961, worked for Perry R. Bass and Texas Pacific Coal and Oil Co.

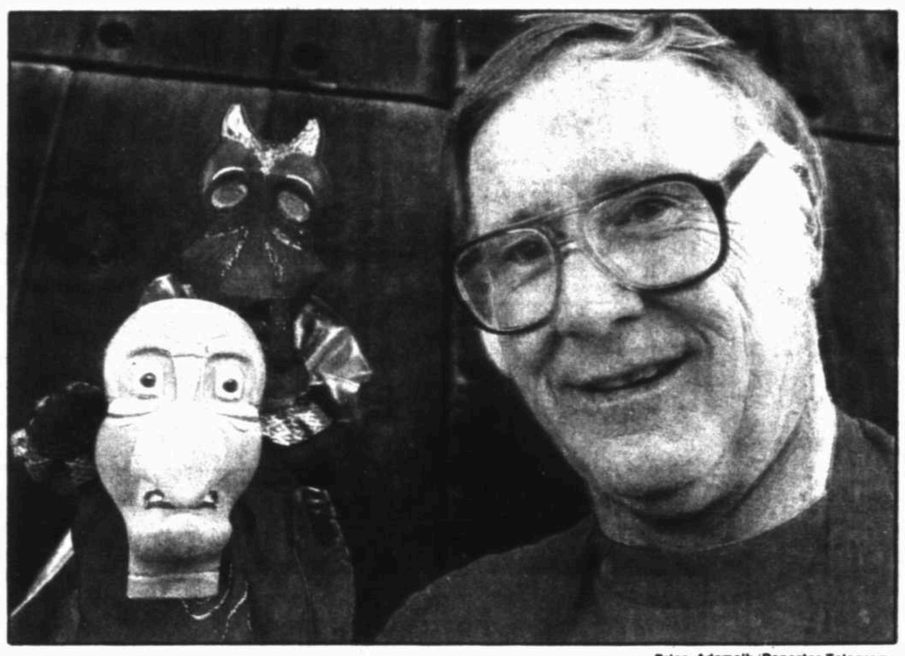

His wife, Glenda, has been a secretary at South Elementary School for approximately 10 years. The couple has three grown children, two of whom live in Midland. Sheila Pruitt teaches at Henderson Elementary School and

The devil has the head of Punch in his clutches as the puppets prepare to spar in the Punch-and-Judy show. Puppet maker and puppeteer Mike Gieb is getting his characters ready to perform for the Globe Theatre of the Great Southwest's annual Renaissance Faire.

Punch and Judy

By Myra Lee Salcedo

ODESSA — When the sawdust stops flying this week "all the world will be stage" as a Renaissance European Village is created on the grounds of the Globe Theatre of the Great Southwest.

And in the theater — billed as the "most authentic replica of Shakespeare's own Globe anywhere on Earth" — Punch and Judy will duke it out in an age-old morality play which harkens back to Italy in the 1600s.

The sawdust has already settled in the workshop behind the theater where Odessan Mike Gieb has spent months carving hand puppets for the Punch-and-Judy Show.

Gieb, a TU Electric employee and former fine arts teacher, hand-carved the finely sculpted head of Punch, complete with hooked nose and beady eyes. The puppeteer, who has a bachelors of fine arts degree in sculpture, has incorporated his artistic skills into works of art which appear to be too smooth to have been crafted from bass wood.

And even before Gieb picked up a single carving tool, he spent hours poring through literature of Renaissance England and making sketches of his puppets.

Gieb studied genre artists of the period and waded through such texts as "The last days of Mr. Punch."

"I even tried to have Punch's beaked nose nearly meet his mouth, which is how it is often described in literature," Gieb said placing Punch's disembodied head on a finger.

"And here's Judy," he said, putting the Music of the Andes

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

The haunting music of the Andes Mountains comes to Midland when Khenany performs for this May's Celebration of the Arts.

Organized in 1981, the group from Cuidad Obregon, Sonora, Mexico, plays Latin American music that is especially found in the Andes Mountains. Although most of the songs are in Spanish, the six-member group also sings in Quechua, the Incan empire language; and in Yaqui, a common language in Cuidad Obregon.

"It's different; it's pretty; and it's fun to play it," said Hermilo Batista, Khenany's founder who first began playing this type of music when he was 13. "Indian music is, for me, one of the most complete music in the world."

The members of the group were first exposed to this type of music through what Keith Rosenblum, an American friend of the group who acts as their U.S. spokesman, calls a "fluke."

"There's a wheat research institute in Ciudad Obregon founded by Norman Borlaug, an American who won the Nobel Prize for his research on wheat and author of 'The Green Revolution.' They have every type of person who deals with the land from throughout South and Central America. The researchers brought their music with them, and some of them had cassettes from Peru and from Equador and from Columbia.

"These guys heard it and liked it. That's how this kind of weird Andean niche in northern Mexico got started. It's just as foreign to Mexicans as it is to us."

Khenany's goal is, Batista said, "To preserve this kind of music played with the original instruments."

The group has assembled an orchestra unique in sound and style, incorporating harmonically Andean instruments: the quena and the charango, the quenacho, zampano (bagpipe); the Venezuelan cuatro and the Argentine drum; the Sonoran tenabaris (butterfly cocoons); the Mexican vihuela and the Michoacan guitarron (large guitar); bongos from the Antilles; the tresillo (a Cuban guitar); maracas made of cowhide with wheat grains inside; wooden claves made of cedar; and the toloche (a stringed instrument made of pine.) The only metal instrument is a traverse flute.

Khenany (Kay-NAH-nee) traces its name to a Peruvian princess and a legend about her love for a Spanish soldier.

During the Spanish conquest, a Spanish soldier, Juan Aranda, fell in love with an Indian princess, Quenani. He and his captain asked for her hand in marriage, but the chief refused because his daughter had been consecrated for a religious life. The two lovers fled, guided by a bird god, Lamballuque.

War between the Indians and the Spaniards was averted by a missionary who convinced the chief that the only guilty persons were Aranda and Princess Quenani. When the cave the lovers were in was surrounded, Princess Quenani prayed to Lamballuque.

She was turned into a bamboo shoot and he was turned into an armadillo. When their pursuers entered the cave, no one was there.

Years passed. The Spanish colonized. When a Spanish poet named Juan traveled to the place where Princess Quenani and Aranda had met, he fell in love with an Indian girl of the Aymara tribe.

She could not speak words of love he would understand because they spoke different languages. She went where the bamboo grew, picked a cane and made a flute called a quena. She made a small hole in the cane

Festival celebrates visual, performing arts

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Talent for the eighth annual Celebration of the Arts May 3-5 comes from as far away as Obregon, Mexico, and as close as next door.

"We have a number of artists who have never participated before," said Kathy Schorr, director of Arts Assembly of Midland, umbrella organization for the arts and COA sponsor. "We're encouraged by that and feel that the word is getting out about the Celebration of the Arts in parts of New Mexico and in other cities in Texas."

In addition to the visual artists, COA features a schedule of performing arts which will appeal to all ages. Back by popular demand will be Austinite Marko Ellinger, a mime, juggler and songwriter, and Scartaglen, a four-member band that plays traditional Irish folk music. Scartaglen will perform a free 8 p.m. concert Thursday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Here for the first time this year will be Khenany, a vocal and instrumental group from Mexico, as well as Patrick Ball, a Celtic harpist. Ball will perform May 5. Also performing throughout the weekend will be local and area talent.

Hours for the festival days are 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday and noon to 6 p.m. May 5.

One of Saturday's events is Run for the Arts, which begins at 8 a.m.

A street dance, co-sponsored by KNFM Radio, Coors and Pepsi, is planned for 8 p.m. to midnight Saturday. Music will be provided by Canyon.

Admission to the arts and crafts show and sale is $2 for adults, $1 for children and free to those under 5. For more information call 687-1149.

For this year's COA, outdoor artists will be housed under tents on Centennial Plaza and the preview party has been expanded. This year's preview party will feature a cocktail buffet and entertainment both inside and outside the center.

Preview party hours remain the same — Friday from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. The $25 admission includes the cocktail buffet. Entertainment will be provided by Circa Woodwind Quintet and Joseph and Theresa.

The honored guest at the preview party will be Charles Pruitt, the COA's Distinguished Artist. A commemorative poster featuring one of his works will be on sale that evening and both festival days.

If the weather is bad, the outdoor events will be moved to the lower level of Midland Center and Saturday's street dance will be held in the Hilton ballroom.

The COA will officially kick off with a media run through the Human Maze at 1 p.m. Friday on the courthouse lawn.

PRUITT: Artist prefers to work outside

(From 1G)

Dian Pruitt is a substitute teacher in the Midland Independent School District. The youngest, Steven, is a senior at Baylor University.

None are artists.

"They all have talents but they are different," Pruitt said. "The son is a singer."

Years ago, Pruitt, who calls himself an impressionist of the Southwest, did not always use the "plein air" or "alla prima" method.

"I painted the traditional Southwest type painting from photos inside. I wanted to lean how to paint outdoors, which was the method that they taught in the New England area."

So he spent several summers studying with George Cherepov of Vermont. He also has studied with outdoor painters Robert E. Wood and Bud Biggs.

"It really does change your style of painting. In most cases you have two and a half hours before the light changes which necessitates a looser style of painting to capture the mood and the values and the masses of whatever you're painting. It's not a very detailed style; it's a loose style because of that.

"Most of the time you put the finishing touches to them when you're back in the studio," Pruitt said, adding that some paintings take several days to complete. "I have gone back to the same place three times at the same time of the day."

He prefers the spontaneity of capturing scenes on location.

"Instead of painting every leaf on the tree, you're giving an impression, and I think the impression is more of a feeling than painting everything in detail."

Pruitt, who maintains a studio and a by-invitation gallery at 2313 Kansas Ave., is represented by galleries in San Antonio, Stephenville, Tucson, Ariz., Carmel, Calif., and New Mexico.

Among the numerous awards he has won, he most prizes the honor by representing West Texas at an art show inside the Capitol Building in Washington, D.C., in 1977.

This year will find him participating in the Texas Arts and Crafts Show in Kerrville in May; the Stanford show July 4; a show at Scott and White hospital in Temple, in September; and a showing of Southwest impressionist work featuring "plein air" artists Doris Spires, Mary Rasmussen, Don Parks and Pruitt at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library beginning Sept. 26.

His most recent honor, in addition to being chosen as COA's distinguished artist, was having his painting "Texas Wheat Harvest" chosen for the Scottsdale Artist School Alumni Show.

"There's only like 150 paintings out of 5,000 alumni that got selected," said Pruitt, who studied under Clyde Aspevig at the Scottsdale Artist School in 1986 and 1987.

Pruitt, who was awarded Best of Show in the 1986 COA, has participated in every COA since the annual event began in 1984.

"I think it's one of the best things Midland does for the artists," Pruitt said, referring to COA. "We have a lot of local talent and some of the best of the local talent in represented there."

"Plum Tree" which was chosen for the COA commemorative poster, was created during a 1989 painting trip to the Hondo Valley and Lincoln, N.M., the latter being where Pruitt found the plum tree.

"I didn't think it was that big of a painting," Pruitt recalled. He was soon to find out others didn't agree. "We put a nice frame on it, and it won a first place award in the COA in 1989."

Pruitt finds it an honor to be chosen as this year's distinguished artist.

"I was very pleased. I think it's more gratifying to be honored by your local area than receiving national recognition for your work. It doesn't happen that much."

Dallas native lands regular role in 'Knots Landing'

DALLAS (AP) — Though Lar Park Lincoln never gave up hope, there were times when the Dallas native wondered whether acting would ever pay the bills.

"I had an unemployment check in my purse when I was hired for 'Knots Landing,' " she said during a recent visit home.

Since joining the "Knots" cast three years ago, she has built an initial two-episode guest-star appearance into a regular role. Her character, Linda Fairgate — a career-driven villainess — has grown in importance this season.

For the past few episodes, Park Lincoln's character has squared off against Paige Matheson (Nicolette Sheridan), another career-driven character.

"You really have to laugh at Linda," said Park Lincoln. "She has no conscience whatsoever. But even though she's a villainess, she has the redeeming quality of being a health nut and a vegetarian."

In real life, Park Lincoln prefers barbecue, if she can find it in Los Angeles. She and her husband of 9½ years, Michael were thrilled to see an ad in a Los Angeles paper for a restaurant that featured "real Texas barbecue." It turned out to be roast beef soaked in sauce and served by a guy wearing a turban.

Park Lincoln, who graduated from Sunset High School in 1979, began her career as a model with the Kim Dawson agency. "I was really too short and Kim turned me down eight times. I think she hired me because I wouldn't leave her alone." It took months for her to get her first job — a makeup ad that only featured her left eye. "I really struggled for a long time to get anywhere," Park Lincoln says.

She always saw modeling as a way to get into acting. She took acting classes and auditioned for the occasional roles available in Dallas. Eventually she headed for Hollywood where she was hired by the William Morris Agency.

During the summer hiatus from filming "Knots Landing," Park Lincoln has done several feature films, including "House II," "Friday the 13th, Part VII" and a yet-to-be released movie called "Fatal Charm."

PUPPET: Teacher uses characters as educational tool

hand puppet on and raising his voice several octaves higher. "Oooooow, Punch!," he cries, bringing the devil into play on his other hand.

In a matter of seconds Gieb deftly switches voices from gravelly to whiney with varied English accents for each puppet.

"Oops, I am getting carried away, aren't I," he laughs, making his puppets nod in agreement.

"Sometimes I forget to change voices between characters," Gieb admits. "It only adds to the show. It makes people say, 'Hey, there is a person back there.' "

Gieb acknowledges that Punch is a batterer. "He beats up on everybody — his wife, the neighbor's dog. He tricks the doctor and the hangman. But then the devil comes along and makes him accountable."

He said that the Punch-and-Judy show was presented as a much more violent comedy to Elizabethan audiences. "We tone it down some, now. The whole scenario involves Punch going after all authority figures. He lies and cheats, but in the end, he must pay."

The puppeteer said Punch, the hand puppet, was fashioned after Pulcinella, a famous Italian puppet. Pulicinella, a hunchback, was characterized as a rogue and a merrymaker.

"Because of his deformity, he was downtrodden and always turning the tables on those he thought persecuted him," Gieb said.

An art teacher for 20 years in New Mexico, Gieb incorporated puppet making into New Mexico schools as an educational tool. The puppeteer lives in Odessa during the week and returns to Ruidoso where his wife resides on weekends. His wife Jamie, makes all the costumes for his puppets.

But Gieb said, the hours he spends on the road and at the Globe is a worthwhile endeavor.

"This year we are going all out for Renaissance Faire (Friday through Sunday). We will have children's games specific to the period, such as a catapult using bean bags and a chance to challenge a knight," he said.

The puppeteer is also the coordinator for the fair and will spend next week getting tents and workshops set up to house people demonstrating crafts of the Renaissance era including knife making, heraldry (armor making) wool cording and making thread on spinning wheels.

Gieb said the Society for Creative Anachronisms will be out in full force presenting performances of proper battle procedures and battles between knights.

"We will also have a petting zoo with animals typical of European villages with animals such as sheep and deer," he said.

Drama students from one of Odessa's magnate schools will read from "Hamlet," jesters will wander amongst fair goers, craftsmen will demonstrate and sell their wares, and turkey legs and buffalo wings will be sold on site.

"The whole concept is to create a little mini theme park of a European village, something we will be able to repeat annually," Gieb said. "Plantersville has its Texas Renaissance Faire, Waxahachie has its Scharborough Faire and West Texas will have the Globe's Renaissance Faire."

In the midst of all the action typical to Merry Old England, Gieb will literally be drumming up interest in his puppet show which will take place on the Globe's indoor stage. "The whole set will be carted in on wheels, which is authentic," Gieb said. "The puppet show sets were the traveling TV sets of their time. I'll have youngsters beating a drum — like they did in the 1600s — to get the audience in here."

Once inside, Gieb will have the audience sit right on the stage. "It really brings them into the performance," Gieb said.

"And then ..., well then it's the age-old battle between good and evil," Gieb said, sliding the devil onto his hand and smoothing out his gold cape.

"Punnnnch," the devil growls, waving his hands, wildly. "Oooooh, Punch."

The Globe of the Great Southwest's Renaissance Faire will be open Friday through Sunday on the grounds of the theater which is located at 2308 Shakespeare Rd., on the campus of Odessa College.

Admission for adults is $4, $2 for children and $2 for senior citizens. Admission prices are good for all three days of the fair.

Musicians using period instruments are encouraged to attend the fair. Craftsmen interested in applying for booth space may call the theatre at (915) 332-1586.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, APRIL 28, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your talent and perseverance make you a leader. A sudden windfall or new investment will improve your financial situation. September finds you pondering a major change on the domestic scene. Romance comes swiftly and unexpectedly in December. Tend to a potential health problem before it gets out of hand. An important partnership can be strengthened in early 1992. Find out what loved one really wants in the long run.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Attending a special reunion will put you in an upbeat mood. Get together with someone you usually see only during working hours. The Sunday papers could give you new employment ideas.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): At-home entertainment holds special appeal today. Limit the amount of money you spend. Family members will be glad to give you a helping hand. Diplomacy helps bridge the generation gap!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Love goes hand-in-hand with understanding now. A family member will champion your cause. Be candid with older relatives. If you unveil your long-range plans, someone may offer financial help.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A good day for paperwork and practical tasks. Demand exclusivity in a current romance. Getting together with one or two cherished friends gives you a fresh perspective.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A lecture strikes home. You resolve to break a bad habit. Family members are appreciative of your efforts. A suggestion from a relative or friend proves quite helpful. Repay a favor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Watch what you say and curb a tendency to be extravagant. Major business transactions should be postponed until tomorrow. An older relative's finances come up during a family discussion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Not a good day for risky real estate deals. A relationship that appeared to be fading could come to life again. Promises of financial support may not be fulfilled. Rely on yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Large gatherings are best avoided today. A family member could foist extra responsibilities on your shoulders. Do not hesitate to ask for a reprieve. Keep any promises you make to small fry.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day to think about the future and your long-term goals. Welcome the views of your mate and other family members. "Friendly competition" in romance is not as innocent as it sounds.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Sharing a spiritual experience will bring you and mate closer. Make amends to someone you may have slighted recently. A bouquet or box of candy could do more than words.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone who is energetic and forceful has great appeal for you now. Protect your position. Thinking logically will help you avoid an embarrassing situation. Romantic emotions may run high tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Think and act in a more positive manner! Clear reasoning will help you emerge triumphant from a difficult situation. Look for opportunities to expand your social horizons.

Opening lead: Ace of ◇

There's no doubt that the most flamboyant player in the world today is Zia Mahmood. The peripatetic Pakistani has decided to make his home in New York, and he was among the star performers at the recent Spring North American Championhips held in Atlantic City, N.J. His team reached the final of the Vanderbilt team event before succumbing to a squad led by Steve Robinson of Washington, D.C.

Zia sat South on this deal from an earlier round in the team event. When his partner made a rather light raise of his club opening bid, Zia wasted no time in getting to game.

In the cold light of day it might seem declarer must lose a trump trick and two in hearts. However, after receiving the helpful, albeit normal, lead of the ace of diamonds; the Pakistani internationalist was quick to prove that appearances can be deceptive.

Declarer ruffed the opening lead and, after cashing the ace and king of trumps to reveal that the defenders had a sure trick there, crossed to the king of spades to take a heart discard on the king of diamonds. Two diamond ruffs were sandwiched around the ace of spades and a spade ruff on the board to bring about this ending:

When declarer now led the eight of spades, dummy's eight of clubs was promoted to a trick en passant. The defenders' three tricks had been telescoped into two, since declarer could not be prevented from taking the table's trump and his ace of hearts.

Book about Titanic may be too oblique

"The Ghost From the Grand Banks," by Arthur C. Clarke. Bantam. 274 Pages. $19.95.

By William J. Castello
Associated Press

■ A Review

The quest to raise the Titanic is projected into the next century, along with advances in mathematics, science and technology, in Arthur C. Clarke's latest saga, "The Ghost From the Grand Banks."

We are projected into the near future at the dawn of the new century. The challenge of raising the Titanic has become far more compelling in that the centennial of its tragic end is fast approaching. Giant corporations compete for the rights to attempt the monumental task. New technology, coupled with the gathering of a very specialized talent pool, brings methodology and possibility into focus.

The story follows the lives of this special group of players, each at the top of his field. The success of this mission relies on one key factor, the expertise of Jason Brady. Brady is an expert in underwater engineering and the recovery of wrecks. He is courted by the two corporations awarded the rights to undertake the recovery attempt. His passage through the pages is the binding element of the plot.

This is a technical tale, as we have come to expect from Clarke. He describes future science with a matter-of-fact certainty that makes it perfectly believable. He bases his technology for the future on the scientific paths being followed today.

His style lists toward the impersonal and, at least in this selection, becomes a little bogged down in technical description and mathematical theory. To the technologically astute reader, his descriptions will prove fascinating. To those less scientifically oriented, the material may be a little too oblique.

This is a book for the science-fiction reader with a taste for futuristic scientific advances. The plot is interesting, but it seems to be used mainly as a vehicle for both the innovations and the actions of the elite group of experts portrayed in the story.

There are a few cliffhangers, but very few. It is not the rock-'em, sock-'em, scare-'em science fiction that many modern readers may have come to expect. It is for fans of the possibilities of the near future, for the generations of fascinated followers of the epic of the Titanic, and for those enthralled by the factual fiction of Arthur C. Clarke.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARIES

Sandra DeFore Wegner

Used magazines are a new business in the foyer of the downtown Midland Country Public Library, 301 W. Missouri. This is the latest Friends of the Library project to benefit the library. At 10 cents apiece, donated magazines are being recycled to new readers. Just about anything sells, but current news magazines get old quickly. Bring your old magazines (Only G rated magazines, of course) to the library and take some new reading material home with you. The Friends have always been willing to take used books for their annual fall book sale and now they will take your old magazines, too.

Cookbooks are always popular at both the Midland County Library and the Midland Centennial Branch Library at Midland Park Mall. Some people are convinced that it is possible to gain weight just by looking at these new selections at the downtown library : "Oh Fudge: A Celebration of America's Favorite Candy," "The Christmas Cookie Book" (get started early), "Thanksgiving Dinner," "Better Homes and Gardens Old-Fashioned Home Baking" and "Justin Wilson's Homegrown Louisiana Cookin'." On the other hand, you might get healthier using these books: "Fish: The Basics," "The Low-Cholesterol Olive Oil Cookbook," or the American Heart Association "Low-Salt Cookbook." Both libraries do not always have the same cookbooks but with our courier service, it is possible to check out books from either library at both locations upon request.

Yellow MISD buses in the parking lot of the downtown library are not uncommon sights. In the first three months of this year over 900 elementary students from area public and private classrooms visited the Children's Department for tours, story times and library use instruction. This doesn't include 10 secondary classroom groups that came to the library for reference work projects, library instruction or tours during the same period. Library videos are frequently shown in Greenwood ISD, MISD and local private schools. The library has teacher loans that allow six week checkout of books. There is a limit to the number of books that may be taken in a few areas.

During the school year when school libraries are closed evenings and Saturdays, the public libraries are open. Midland College students often depend on the downtown library for Saturday library service. Midland UTPB students often use the downtown library because of convenience and for current selections. UTPB's library has suffered drastic book budget cuts in recent years.

The downtown library has a machine that reads aloud. A few years ago the state provided Kurzweil reading machines for the visually impaired at large public libraries. An amazing piece of computerized equipment; the Kurzweil requires several hours of instruction before it can be operated by the public. Use at our library has been very low. If you know someone that might want to use this reader at the library, tell them to call the library for more information.

Writers looking for publishers use the downtown library's current edition of Writer's Market. Some unpublished books and papers, regardless of quality, have a limited potential audience and are difficult to get published. The library's new reference book, Publication Grants For Writers and Publishers, might help. Ask for both books at the Information Desk. Neither book may be checked out.

June 30 is the deadline for the Friends of the Library to match the Abell-Hanger Foundation challenge grant of $300,000 for downtown library expansion and renovation. Construction will be funded by a combination of private donations and county funds from certificate of obligation bonds. The library has not changed its physical size in 30 years, while the number of Midland citizens and their library needs have increased greatly. Please help the Friends reach its fund raising goal. Mail your check for the Expansion Fund to the Friends at P.O. Box 1191, Midland 79702 or bring your contribution to the library.

KHENANY: Group's name based on Indian legend

(From 1G)

each day of the week, thus it had seven holes. The Indian girl was then able to communicate her love through music.

Juan went to the same place and discovered the skeleton of an armadillo. From the armadillo's shell, he made a tiny stringed instrument called a charango.

Thus it is said, the love between Quenani and Arnada lives through the music of those instruments.

Unlike many of its southern neighbors, Mexico has had decades of peace. Its music is more upbeat without the haunting quality found in the music from South and Central America.

Yet, under its lighthearted spirit, Mexico's music also owes a debt to this older musical form which grew out of man's close interaction with his natural world. Still, Khenany has found more of an audience and experienced more appreciation for its music in the United States than in Mexico.

"Because it's a music of mostly the impoverished people of the Andes, it doesn't have a mass following even in the Andes," said Rosenblum, who first heard the group four years ago when he was living in Mexico.

"In other places the music would be considered real political because it would be the music of the poor. For example, it's almost impossible to find this type of music in Lima, Peru, but in the mountain areas, which are the poorest, it is the music of the peasant."

Khenany holds a special place in Rosenblum's heart.

"They actually played at my wedding, and that's how I got to know them. I just figured when I got married that I was entitled to whatever type of music I wanted at my wedding."

At the time he married, Rosenblum was a reporter covering border issues for the Arizona Daily Star in Tucson and lived part of the time in Mexico. He is originally from Illinois and his wife, Liz, from North Carolina, yet they wanted to marry in Mexico. He set out to find a group that played Andean music and discovered Khenany.

"When people went to the wedding, I think they basically forgot that they had gone to a wedding and thought they had been to some type of concert," Rosenblum said. "They were telling us how wonderful the concert was and thanking us for it."

Rosenblum, who had first been exposed to this type of music through the movie "El Norte," asked Khenany members what he could do for them since they had made his wedding so special. He discovered they wanted to play in the United States.

"None of them had Mexican passports. None of then had ever set foot in the United States," Rosenblum said, adding that the experience made him more than passingly acquainted with U.S. immigration laws. "Eventually, we got the right papers, and they came to Tucson. They basically would play at anything for free. Through the years, they have developed a cult following in Tucson."

Celebration of the Arts marks Khenany's first Texas performance.

Trips to the United States are not made without sacrifice. The overnight bus ride for the six members, all of whom work, takes nine hours.

"They come up on a bus, cross at Nogales and travel sardine-style in the back of an old Volkswagon van to Tucson," Rosenblum said. "They have this cult following of elderly and of college students — a certain type of person is struck by the music. There are these Andean music zealots that will show up wherever they are performing."

Keeping up with Khenany is not easy.

"They don't live up here, don't have a manager, don't have an agent," Rosenblum said. "It's all done in a very haphazard way.

"They're Third Worlders. All of them are from very modest backgrounds. Coming to the States and finding people that care about their music has been stunning to them," said Rosenblum.

He said the group plays as a hobby and a way to make extra money in Mexico.

"Even now when they give concerts in Mexico, they don't draw. Mexican music is a lot more cheerful. The instruments are quite different from the wind and percussion instruments used in Andean music. They'd much rather play before an American audience. Their hope is the music will catch on in Mexico itself."

Since first coming to Arizona, the group has recorded three albums, including "Khenany Volume One," which took five years of effort and perseverance. All have been recorded in Tucson and may be purchased by writing Khenany, Box 40564, Tucson, Ariz., 85719.

"Everything's been done by prayer and by fluke. Everything's been done by getting cash advances on VISA and MasterCard. They've taken the gamble, and I've taken the gamble. We take all the money and pour it into buying tapes or another recording session.

"The gamble's paid off. They've probably sold 11,000 cassettes.

"There's no label. They're the label; I'm the label; the label is Khenany. It's all been done giving a concert and having people come up after concerts and say, 'Gee, we'd like to buy your tape.'"

Among the group's goals is recording material in English.

"When they came up initially, no one spoke a word of English, and, at this point, everybody understands a little bit and a couple of them are not ready to teach Shakespeare but they have a good command of English," said Rosenblum, who now writes for the Arizona Republic.

"Their dream really is to do songs in English, to bridge that gap between the foreignness of Spanish and of the Andean culture and be able to sing directly to the minds of Americans."

"The American people love this kind of music, and we hope the people like the kind of music and try to support it," said Batista. "We are happy we are going to play here."
