Q—Years ago, the Alamo was the top tourist attraction in Texas. Is it still? If not, what is the top tourist attraction in the state?

A—According to the highway department's travel and information division, the Alamo continues to be the top attraction in Texas. Big Bend ranks second.

NEXT COMPETITION — Sarena Wright, reigning Miss Snyder, has been diligently preparing for the Miss Texas Pageant slated for July 14 in Fort Worth. However, a week of activities prior to the "big night" kicks off Monday with an interview before five judges. (SDN Staff Photo)

Miss Snyder set for competition in state pageant

By Shirley A. Gorman
SDN News Editor

Eighteen-year-old Sarena Wright, Snyder's representative in the Miss Texas Pageant, is to begin competition in the interview portion of the week-long pageant on Monday.

Miss Wright was to leave Snyder en route to Fort Worth early Saturday morning because pre-pageant activities were to get underway in Fort Worth Saturday night when Wright was to appear on Johnny High's Country Music Review.

She is the second Miss Snyder to compete for the Miss Texas crown since the local pageant was revived a couple of years ago.

Wright has been preparing for the state pageant for the past several months. Her itinerary is filled with activities which all 72 contestants will take part in.

Pageant activities will be held in the Tarrant County Community Center. Contestants have been divided into three groups, "A," "B," and "C." Wright is in Division C.

Highlights of her schedule include: a private interview at 7 p.m. Monday, the evening gown competition at 8 p.m. Wednesday, the talent competition at 8 p.m. Thursday, and the swimsuit competition 8 p.m. Friday. At 8 p.m. on Saturday, July 14, the top 10 will be selected.

Wright, who hails from Hamilton, has just completed her freshman year at Western Texas College. Preparation for the Miss Texas Pageant has included

Burn victim serious but said 'stable'

A 41-year-old Snyder man, burned in an oil field accident Friday, was listed in serious but stable condition Saturday morning at Lubbock University Medical Center.

Hospitalized is Jimmy Wilson, who was transported by emergency helicopter Friday morning after suffering second and third degree burns over 25 to 30 percent of his body.

Wilson was burned when flames ignited as he was preparing to pump oil from a local well site into a hot oil truck. Officials said the hot oil truck was owned by BHP Petroleum.

The cause of the fire, reported at 7:20 a.m. Friday, was still under investigation as of noon Saturday, according to a spokesman with the fire depart-

Local FFA students to attend 62nd annual state convention

Members of the Snyder chapter of Future Farmers of America will attend the 62nd annual Texas FFA Convention in Lubbock this week.

Mark Stansell, president of the Snyder FFA chapter, and chapter advisors Coke Hopping and Bob Hand will be among those attending the convention, which will include representatives from over 940 chapters throughout the state.

A special event of the convention is the awarding of 906 Lone Star Farmer Degrees. Stansell, Terry Leatherwood and Jimmy Kitchens will be recipients from Snyder.

Shawna Stipe, Dell Blackwell and M'Lys Lloyd will be voting delegates from Snyder. Other local FFA chapter members attending will include Jimmy Kitchens, Bobby Cawthron, A'Lise Lloyd, Robert Kimmel and James Henderson.

Jeff Rash, state FFA president from Gilmer, will preside. He will be assisted by vice presidents Henderson from Snyder, David Cobb from Lubbock Cooper, Ken Ullrich from Katy, Stacy Gilbert from Electra, Michelle Schertz from Krum, Tracy Pitcox from Brady, Bill Clifton from Cleburne, James Huggins from West Sabine and Trace Blair from Calallen.

State officers are to arrive at noon Sunday at the Holiday Inn Civic Center. Activities continue through Monday evening for state officers. The convention gets underway for an estimated 5,000 students at 2 p.m. Tuesday with a special session which includes the presentation of Lone Star FFA Degrees.

The state officers will conduct a vesper service at 8 o'clock that evening.

The convention and program will resume at 9 a.m. Wednesday, July 11, with a presentation of the American, Texas and FFA flags. Dr. Victoria Bergin, deputy commissioner of curriculum and program development, will bring greetings from the Texas Education Agency. This will be followed by the election of the National FFA officer candidate from the Texas association.

Keynote speaker will be Donnell Brown, national FFA president from Thockmorton. Brown was the state FFA president during the 1988-89 school year.

Stars of Texas awards program will begin at 7 p.m.

Gorbachev forces congress to drop evaluation plans

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Saturday forced the Communist Party congress to drop a plan to evaluate each member of the party's ruling Politburo, warning the move would "bury the party."

Despite rampant criticism of his policies by the largely hard-line congress, meeting for its sixth day, the Soviet leader showed his mastery of the delegates by pushing through the reversal.

"If you want to bury the party, to split the party, then continue on this way," he told delegates. "But think hard."

Before its afternoon break, the congress voted 2,557-1,393 for an individual thumbs-up or thumbs-down vote on each Politburo member. Delegates later reversed themselves 2,495-1,515 after hearing Gorbachev's opinion.

Gorbachev cited a note from the delegation from northern Arkhangelsk that said: "There is no need to evaluate each Politburo member. The Politburo, according to the rules, is an organ of the leadership, and the leadership is collective."

Instead, the congress agreed to evaluate as a whole the work of the policy-making Central Committee, and within it the 12-member Politburo.

Evaluating each Politburo member separately would have broken a tradition of regarding the body as a collective entity. The idea brought criticism in the corridors of the Kremlin's Palace of Congresses from reformist delegates.

Heroes, heroines highlight upcoming Noah fundraiser

Heroes, heroines and villians will again be afoot in Snyder next Saturday, July 14, as Noah Project stages its second annual melodrama-fundraiser.

After last year's sold-out show in Towle Park Barn, this one has been moved to Scurry County Coliseum.

On Saturday, the hero will be Pecos Bill, otherwise known as Joee Gainer. As for heroines, Emily Hataway will take the stage as Slue-Foot Sue.

Which leaves only the villian, in the personage this year of Tom Holcomb, leader of the Dirty Dan Gang.

These three top the list of 12 cast members under the direction of Mike Dennis.

Other characters are Kay Hopper as Granny, Franklin Pruitt as the Old Timer, Dahl Howard as Clever Coyote, Howard Limmer as Boots, Jeff Fowler as Fleas, Tiffany Fowler as the school marm, Terry Bowden as Blue Duck, Erin Rambo as Becky, Marcia Dennis as the widow Quackenbush, Paula Bowden as Conchita and Gail Northcott as Lily Grouch.

The melodrama will follow a meal scheduled to begin at 6 p.m. It will feature smoked sausage on a bun, potato salad, root beer and cookies.

There will be drawings during the meal for over 50 door prizes which have been donated by local merchants.

Between the meal and the melodrama, a musical interlude and sing-along is planned. Leading it will be Dr. Wylie "Buff" Hearn and Sam Robertson.

The melodrama is to begin about 7 p.m. Tickets for the entire evening are $6 for adults and $3.50 for children age 10 and under.

Advance tickets are encouraged and can be purchased at Bar H Bar Western Wear, The Shack, Blanche's Bernina and Ezell-Key Feed and Seed.

Bandanas will be given to anyone who purchases at least four advance tickets as long as the supply lasts, and melodrama-

Permits reflect $51,000 in construction for June

Building permits issued in June reflect over $51,000 in construction for the city, according to the monthly building inspector's report.

Permits for construction included ones for a commercial building, three mobile homes, new additions, carports and alterations. Building valuation was noted at $51,100, for which $312.66 in fees were collected.

Total valuation amounted to $51,266.29, including various other electrical, plumbing and zoning permits, for which a total of $693.16 was collected.

For the fiscal year to date, permits have reflected some $588,242 in construction, compared to $1,627,358 for the fiscal year last year.

Among permits issued in June were one to Ricky Graham at 1809 17th St. for a shop, one to Nancy Brunson at 1400 23rd St. for a mobile home, one to Jeff Laurena at 2205A 21st St. for an addition; another to Bobbie Earnest at 2209 26th St. for a mobile home, and one to Houston Ballard at 1601 Ave. K for a carport.

Others included one to Ernie Naegele at 2400 42nd St. for an alteration, one to Patsy Hart at 3404 Irving for a carport, and one to Charles Doty at 3112 38th Pl. for an alteration.

The feller on Deep Creek says, "Remember in the good ole days when an air conditioner was a cool breeze under a shade tree."

The guys in the coffee shop said there are some things about the "good ole days" that weren't all that hot...'er great. Living without an air conditioner was one of them.

Brothers Bill and I.E. Martin remembered that their dad always admonished them to get up and start to work early--while it was still cool.

"That meant we got in a couple of hours of extra work," the Dunn natives said. "When it got hot, we just kept on working."

Harold Denson, another favorite son of Dunn, says he remembers hot. "When I was a kid we used to feed the chickens cracked ice to keep 'em from laying hard-boiled eggs."

And Ernie Sears, the bird watcher, says it's been so hot over on Denison that his feathered friends are blowing on the worms before they eat 'em.

It's been hot, but it could get warmer unless there's some rain soon. You'll know it's serious when they outlaw water skiing on Lake Thomas because the skiers are kicking up too much dust.

Speedy Prince said he burned the hamburgers on July 4th--and he had forgotten to light the charcoal.

And the first story-teller doesn't have a chance. David Gist says he was using a chain while doing some yard work. He went into the house for a drink of water, and when he returned, the chain had crawled off into the cool of a shade.

Some researchers at A&M say humor is the only way to beat the heat. A good rain, or the first blue norther may even be better than a good attitude.

In Brief

Gets probation

BARTOW, Fla. (AP) — A social worker who allowed a foster child to return to his parents' home, where he was killed for soiling his pants, plans to appeal after being placed on three years' probation, her lawyer says.

Margaret Barber, 62, who could have been sentenced to up to five years in prison, was the first employee of the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services ever criminally convicted over the handling of a case.

Readmitted

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Doctors will monitor Stormie Jones' liver function and medication levels after the world's longest surviving recipient of a heart-liver transplant was readmitted to Children's Hospital.

Stormie, 13, of White Settlement, Texas, was listed in fair condition early today. She returned to Children's Thursday, said Pamela Bardy, a spokeswoman for the hospital.

"She's in good spirits, and she's up and running around the hospital like she always does," Ms. Bardy said.

Hand of friendship extended to Gorbachev

LONDON (AP) — The NATO allies pledged Friday to sharply reduce both nuclear and conventional defenses in Europe, extending "the hand of friendship" to Mikhail S. Gorbachev and the rest of Eastern Europe.

Solemnly, President Bush and his 15 Western alliance partners assured the Soviet leader, who is under attack from left and right at the 28th Communist Party Congress in Moscow, that they hold "no aggressive intentions" and "will never in any circumstance be the first to use force."

In Moscow, Gorbachev said he was ready to accept the leaders' invitation to address a meeting of the Western alliance, probably in December. And Soviet foreign ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said, "We welcome the results of the (NATO) session."

But Gorbachev could take little comfort from Bush's comment that he had "big problems" with the idea of direct Western economic aid to the Soviet Union — a subject likely to dominate the Houston economic summit where Bush and many of the other Western leaders were flying after the NATO meeting.

In London, the allies agreed to shrink their arsenal of battlefield nuclear weapons — in tandem with Soviet action — and relegate them to highly unlikely last-resort use.

They also said, in their windup communique, that "once negotiations begin on short-range nuclear forces, the alliance will propose, in return for reciprocal action by the Soviet Union, the elimination of all its nuclear artillery shells from Europe."

They also decided to field smaller and restructured ground forces, in the newest sign that NATO's 40-year job of containing potential Soviet-bloc aggression was nearing a successful end.

One shift in NATO doctrine, away from a quarter-century threat to use nuclear weapons promptly if attacked, drew most of the notice. More subtle but also significant was the decision to abandon the strategy of massing troops up against the East-West frontier, switching to smaller mobile units further back.

"Allied leaders will have maximum flexibility in deciding how to respond to a crisis," the communique said.

And, in a surprise move designed to allay one of Gorbachev's deepest concerns, the NATO allies agreed to set a limit on the size of Germany's military forces. That could mean a cut of more than 160,000 soldiers from the combined troops of East and West Germany after merger.

However, despite Gorbachev's still-unsuccessful effort to pump life into the Soviet economy, Bush distanced himself from a plan devised by West Germany and France to provide Moscow with a bountiful package of direct financial assistance that could run into billions of dollars.

"I have big problems with that one," Bush said. "I think the American people do," because of the Soviet Union's financial support of Cuba and because of its military spending at home. But the president said he would consider credits or technical help for the Soviets.

The economic summit next week, bringing together leaders from the seven richest democracies in the world, will have Gorbachev's economic restructuring program at the top of the agenda.

Bush said he hoped his resistance to direct U.S. assistance would not impede Gorbachev, who this week gave himself a two-year deadline to succeed.

"I have spoken very fondly and enthusiastically about what he's trying to do in terms of reform," Bush said at a news conference after the allied leaders adopted their history-making "Declaration on a Transformed North Atlantic Alliance."

The document's many concessions to Moscow, which won support even from cautious British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, reflected a joint judgment that "the Soviet Union has embarked on the long journey to a free society."

Together, the allies offered a pledge of non-aggression to each of the seven members of the Warsaw Pact. One of the innovative decisions taken at the summit was to establish liaisons to those that wish to establish closer political links to Western Europe.

The gesture seemed tailored to Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland, all of which have adopted democratic governments while maintaining tenuous ties to Moscow.

Fetus parts will be displayed during El Paso pro-lifers trial

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The severed parts of fetuses will be among evidence shown to jurors next week when the first of 144 El Paso anti-abortion protesters go on trial on trespass charges.

Both sides of the abortion controversy readily concede that such evidence could have an emotional impact on a jury.

"It's important that people realize the reason that people sit in front of the doors of the abortion clinics is not flippant," said Steve Shorrock, director of El Pasoans For Life. "They do it because there's another life at stake."

The protesters were arrested in the fall of 1989 outside a clinic that offers abortions. The demonstrators were charged with criminal trespass or obstructing a passageway, both Class B misdemeanors.

If convicted, they face six-month jail sentences or $1,000 fines.

Jury selection in the trial of Maria Partido, the first defendant to be tried, begins Monday.

County Court-at-Law Judge Jack Ferguson denied a motion last week to exclude evidence such as fetuses and pictures of fetuses.

Ferguson also denied a motion by County Attorney Joe Lucas to limit the evidence and testimony to whether the protesters trespassed.

Lucas said that means the defense is free to present evidence on a wide range of issues, including when life begins. He said the ruling means each trial could last two to three weeks.

Shorrock of El Pasoans for Life said the graphic presentation will help tell "what abortion is all about, and why we do what we do."

Anti-abortion protestors are good at fanning emotions to take attention off women, said Ray Silva, executive director of Planned Parenthood, which provides birth control and family planning information.

Instead of fetuses and pictures of fetuses, Silva said, pictures of unwanted, abused children should be displayed because the anti-abortion people "don't care after they're born."

The first shot of the Spanish-American War rang out April 22, 1898, when the USS Nashville captured a Spanish merchant ship off Key West, Fla.

Desert littered by illegal dumpers

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Clint Porter, an El Paso sheriff's deputy, has spent much of his time in the past nine months looking for dumpers who turn stretches of the desert into illegal landfills.

Some days, Porter may catch seven people dumping trash, and on other days, no one. On most days, he finds fresh truck tracks next to some newly dumped debris.

"Most people I have caught were real surprised," Porter said.

Since October, Porter and Malcolm Standish, another deputy who works the El Paso's upper valley, are the county's Desert Watch — a 9-month-old program to stop people from trashing the desert.

Meanwhile, a six-man environmental enforcement team has been fighting desert dumping inside the city limits for seven months.

The results: The sheriff's deputies have given out 127 citations for illegal dumping from October through May. The city's team has handed out 36 tickets from December through early June.

Plenty of others get away.

Some areas of the desert are so trashed, they resemble open garbage dumps.

Porter said he can look out at about 200 acres in an area in East El Paso and see nothing but construction materials.

The desert patrol and volunteer cleanups are the only way the desert is cleaned. The city and county have no plans to clean up the desert litter.

Louisiana House overrides abortion veto

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Abortion foes stepped up pressure on the Louisiana Senate to follow the House lead and override Gov. Buddy Roemer's veto of the toughest state abortion bill in the nation.

The House voted 73-31 late Friday to reject Roemer's veto. It was the first time even one chamber of the Legislature had overridden a veto this century.

But the outcome of the Senate vote was in doubt. Anti-abortion forces have only until midnight Monday to line up the necessary 26 votes.

Sen. Allen Bares, a supporter of the bill, acknowledged to his colleagues Friday night that abortion foes do not have the necessary two-thirds majority of the 39-member Senate. The Senate voted to adjourn the session.

Proponents of an override were already at work, buying full-page ads in New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Lake Charles newspapers featuring a message from Mother Teresa of Calcutta, who sent a telegram to Roemer in favor of the bill.

The bill passed two weeks ago would allow abortion only to save the life of the mother. Doctors could get up to 10 years in prison for performing an abortion.

The bill was written to challenge the 1973 Supreme Court decision Roe vs. Wade that recognized the right to an abortion.

Roemer vetoed the measure earlier Friday because it made no exceptions for victims of rape or incest.

The governor's forces wanted an immediate vote to sustain his veto, but Bares got his colleagues to adjourn.

"This issue is too important to handle this late at night without a hearing," Bares said.

Robin Rothrock, leader of an abortion rights coalition, said earlier she was confident the Senate would sustain Roemer's veto.

"In the Senate we believe that we still have the 15 legislators who voted against the measure when it passed the Senate with 24 votes," she said.

In his veto message, Roemer responded to charges he changed his position on abortion since he was a member of Congress, running for governor, in 1987.

"As a member of Congress, I consistently voted to curb abortion on demand and to protect the life of a fetus," Roemer wrote. "I initially voted for the exception to save the life of a mother, but over the years of struggling with this issue I became acutely aware of the need to except those instances where conception occurred because of rape or incest.

"Women cannot and should not be forced to bear the consequences of these traumatic, illegal acts."

The bill's author, Rep. Woody Jenkins, cited statistics in a House debate that out of more than 15,000 abortions performed in Louisiana in 1987, only one was done to end a pregnancy that resulted from rape.

"He's for killing 15,000 unborn children a year in Louisiana just to make sure that one child conceived in rape is also killed," said Jenkins.

Police spend 9 hours removing fake bombs

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Police and fire officials spent nine tense hours trying to remove explosive devices at two city banks, only to discover the suspected bombs were a fake.

Bomb squad members Friday removed seven devices that resembled crude bombs from bushes in front and back of City Bank on Line Avenue and four from the bushes near the main entrance at Commercial National Bank on Mackey Lane in south Shreveport.

Police believe some of the fake bombs may have been planted as early as Thursday evening by a man demanding money.

The five bundles of what turned out to be road flares and bottles of gasoline at City Bank and four flares at Commercial were taken to a local Federal Bureau of Investigations laboratory for analysis and fingerprinting. No one was injured in either incident.

EPA fines El Paso

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The city of El Paso was assessed the largest fine of its kind Friday for failing to implement an industrial pre-treatment program approved by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The city will have to pay the EPA a $395,000 penalty.

City officials have agreed to correct violations associated with industrial discharge into the city's wastewater treatment system, the U.S. Department of Justice announced.

The Justice Department filed suit against the city last October for violations of the federal Clean Water Act. The violations were due to the city's failure to implement the pre-treatment program at any of its three wastewater treatment plants.

The plants serve about 480,000 people and some 30 industrial users that discharge about 50 million gallons of wastewater daily into the Rio Grande.

The EPA approved the pre-treatment program in October 1982.

Edmund Archuleta, chairman of the Public Services Board, said the fine actually is a penalty on past violations and that El Paso has improved its pre-treatment program. He said he expects the city to be in full compliance by this fall.

"Obviously we're not happy to see any type of fine levied against us," Archuleta said. "But when we first started negotiating (with the EPA) we were looking at fines of $2.5 million. We've received a lot of credit from the EPA because in time we were able to convince them that we have made substantial progress in our program."

In order to prevent discharge of untreated industrial waste, the city is required to comply with national pre-treatment standards, enforce those requirements and take measures to eliminate plant overloads by industrial workers.

Officials from the Department of Justice lodged a consent decree settling the matter on July 2 in U.S. District Court in El Paso.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Can you provide information on fetal alcohol syndrome? What are the causes, and can someone suffering from it be cured?

DEAR READER: Fetal alcohol syndrome is a constellation of symptoms (mental retardation, delayed growth and congenital defects) seen in infants whose mothers abused alcohol during pregnancy. Although the syndrome is usually seen in babies whose mothers drank heavily throughout the pregnancy, less severe degrees of alcohol use are also associated with fetal defects.

Because alcohol is so ubiquitous in our culture, we tend to forget that it is a potent poison, especially to a developing fetus. Thus, most obstetricians warn their patients to abstain from drinking alcohol during pregnancy — most importantly, during the first few months when the embryo undergoes its most crucial growth. Fetal alcohol syndrome is untreatable; it is all the more tragic because it is preventable.

To give you further information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Help II — Mental-/Substance Abuse." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 with their name and address to P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My husband has been diagnosed with cellulitis of both legs from the ankles to the knees and has been told there is no cure. Can you tell us what this is and offer any suggestions?

DEAR READER: Cellulitis is a diffuse, spreading infection of the skin, usually affecting the lower legs. Although the cause is usually elusive, cellulitis often seems to be related to poor circulation. Arterial blockage deprives tissues of oxygen and nutrients, leading to a susceptibility to infection.

Whatever the cause, antibiotics are the best treatment. Large doses may be required. In addition, elevation of the legs and the use of elastic support hose may aid healing.

Your husband should be checked for diabetes, which contributes to infection and poor circulation. Any infection on the feet — such as athlete's foot — can aggravate the condition and should be treated with appropriate anti-microbial drugs.

Also, your husband may need testing, such as arteriography (X-rays of the arteries), to determine if he has circulatory blockage. Such blockage could be helped by surgery to re-establish the normal flow of blood to the extremities.

If your husband's cellulitis doesn't improve with medical (drug) treatment, I think he should request referral to a vascular surgeon. Cellulitis can be treated and cured.

Doctors generally recognize the fact that doctors make lousy patients; sick healers are more difficult to treat than "regular" patients.

There probably are legions of reasons for this phenomenon, ranging from feelings of infantile omnipotence to practitioners' convictions that they know as much — or more — than the treating physician. Doctors, like mothers, are not supposed to become ill. But, of course, they do.

When I first developed a cough last month, I followed my own medical advice. Cough medicine, extra fluids and additional rest would, I told myself, take care of the problem. The body heals itself, right? Well, maybe.

After a week of constant hacking — sometimes to the point of gagging — I decided this persisting dry cough had to go. Like any impatient patient, I wanted fast relief. So, again I took my own advice and rummaged through my supply of drug samples until I found tetracycline, just the antibiotic for my spring infection.

I took the medicine properly, at regular intervals on an empty stomach, knowing full well that my bronchitis — I had diagnosed bronchitis, you see, because the cough had lasted more than a week — knowing that my bronchitis would rapidly clear up.

It didn't. I religiously took the tetracycline, but the cough persisted, even worsened. In addition, I felt rundown. I was hoarse. After especially violent coughing fits, I had difficulty breathing. On occasion, I couldn't talk on the telephone. This, I told myself, was no ordinary upper respiratory infection. After two weeks and a course of antibiotics, I was worse than ever.

I examined the diagnostic possibilities. None of them appealed to me. I stopped smoking my pipe and began to wonder if I had pneumonia or a lung tumor. (Doctors always assume the worst.) Heck, no sense in moaning and groaning. Like any self-respecting healer, I scheduled myself for a chest X-ray at the hospital.

My appearance in the Radiology Department was a cause for gaiety; the delighted technicians had long been waiting for an opportunity to razz me at an unprotected moment. I survived the examination and was comforted by the normal X-ray pictures: no obvious infection, no blood-curdling shadows.

OK, so the tetracycline wasn't the right antibiotic. I began a course of erythromycin, an alternative antibiotic that I was convinced would return me to normal in no time.

No such luck. My cough continued unabated. My wife had to sleep in another room, my secretary regarded me with concern, and I was still unable to carry on a conversation without rasping and croaking. I'd been ill for three weeks and was rapidly becoming exasperated, not only with the cough but with my incompetent medical care.

Early one afternoon, an otolaryngologist colleague was kind enough to squeeze me into his full schedule. By now, I knew the problem was in my trachea and larynx; I suspected its cause was a cancer on my vocal cords. (Remember, doctors usually imagine the worst scenario.)

As I sat, wide-mouthed, waiting for the specialist to look down my throat with a little mirror, I became aware of an overwhelming feeling of vulnerability. I realized this sensation was not only the key to patients' universal discomfort, it was also the answer to why doctors make such lousy patients.

My body, the old carcass I took pretty good care of and expected to remain functional, was letting me down. I was powerless; my health was not really under my control. I was merely a microbe away from being as vulnerable as the equally frightened people I examined every day.

Powerlessness and humility are not qualities coveted by the medical profession and yet, there I was in a role I didn't relish, about to be given information that, I was certain, would be bad news.

Predictably, the examination was normal. The doctor reassured me that the viral tracheal infection, although severe, would eventually disappear without treatment.

That was a week ago, and I'm still coughing. But I'll gladly put up with the hacking and hoarseness now that I'm not my own physician and, therefore, needn't assume the worse. However, I'll remember the vulnerable feeling which, I hope, will help me empathize with the people under my care. Being sick is scary, for both doctors and their patients. Medical insight sometimes comes at unexpected times.

Insurance tycoon against extradition

DALLAS (AP) — Insurance tycoon Robert H. Walker will fight extradition from Barbados, hoping to avoid facing charges that he looted millions from Texas-based insurance companies, his lawyer said.

"He's protested his innocence and instructed me to resist the charges," Barbados lawyer Patterson Cheltenham told The Dallas Morning News.

Walker, 60, was arrested late Tuesday at a Barbados hotel where he had been living with his wife, Anita Zapata Walker, since March 28, Barbados police officials said.

The fugitive Texan had bought the Barbados Beach Village Hotel — or at least part of it — on the west coast of the Caribbean island in March 1989, said inspector David Bourne of the Royal Barbados Police Department.

Walker was being held without bail in Glendairy Prison, the only jail in Barbados, Cheltenham said.

Walker is scheduled to appear at an extradition hearing Thursday before Magistrate Sandra Mason in the Barbados capital of Bridgetown.

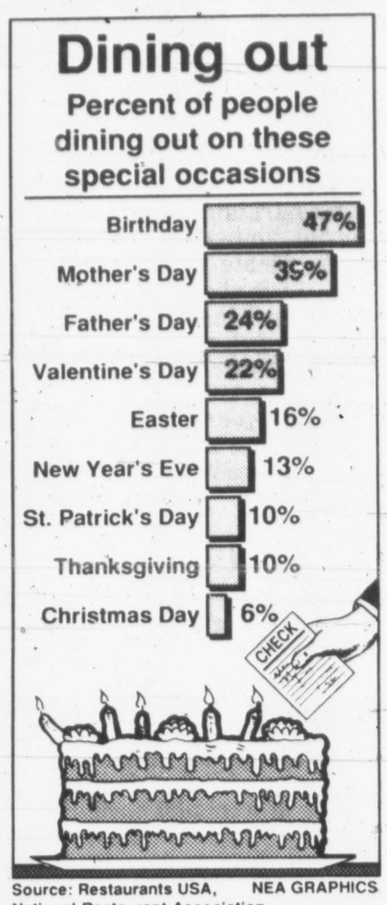

State Board of Insurance authorities said Friday that they are trying to have Walker's assets in Barbados frozen. The state wants the money to repay Texas policyholders and creditors for what authorities allege Walker took.

No one is sure how much money Walker may have in the West Indies nation, but "there are some indications he was spending whole bunches of buckaroos while he was down there," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Leonard Senerote in Dallas.

When Walker lived in Texas, he bought a yacht, expensive cars and two $100,000 sterling silver saddles, among other items.

Senerote said U.S. authorities will attempt to have Walker returned to the United States for prosecution. If Walker is convicted, a judge could order him to pay restitution to the state, the prosecutor said. In addition to criminal charges, several lawsuits are pending against Walker.

Joe Kennedy braved sharks to rescue capsized couple

KAILUA-KONA, Hawaii (AP) — U.S. Rep. Joe Kennedy dived into shark-filled waters to help rescue a couple whose boat overturned in a tussle with a 485-pound marlin, according to Kennedy and the skipper of his charter boat.

Kennedy, on vacation with his twin 9-year-old sons Joseph Jr. and Matthew, was taking part in a fishing tournament Sunday along with U.S Rep. Bart Gordon, D-Tenn., football player Colin Scott, and ex-Washington Redskin player John Wilbur.

The crew of Kennedy's boat heard a distress call on the craft's radio when the charter was about three miles off Kailua-Kona, on the west side of Hawaii island, said Chuck Harlan, captain of the charter boat Kealia.

"The woman said their boat was sinking and she gave four different locations," Harland said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "We saw lights out in the water and continued trolling in that direction."

When they got close, they could see a man and a woman hanging onto an overturned fishing boat, Harlan said.

Kennedy and others on the charter leapt in the water to save the couple. "Joe, Colin and my son Mike jumped in and swam over to the boat," Harlan said.

"I don't know if we got many points for intelligence," Kennedy told the Boston Herald, in a telephone interview Thursday. "It was tiger shark city."

"She was really scared at that point," Kennedy said. "Colin and I grabbed her and swam back to the boat."

The Herald reported the rescued woman was Mildred Akaka, the niece of U.S. Sen. Daniel Akaka, D-Hawaii. Akaka told The Associated Press earlier in the week that he hadn't heard about the incident.

After the rescue, Harlan said, he saw a large marlin jump off to the north. Diving under the capsized boat, he grabbed the vessel's fishing pole, still hooked to the marlin, which apparently had sunk the couples' boat in the first place.

The rescued woman worked the fish a while, then turned the pole over to Wilbur, who eventually landed the 485-pound marlin, Harlan said.

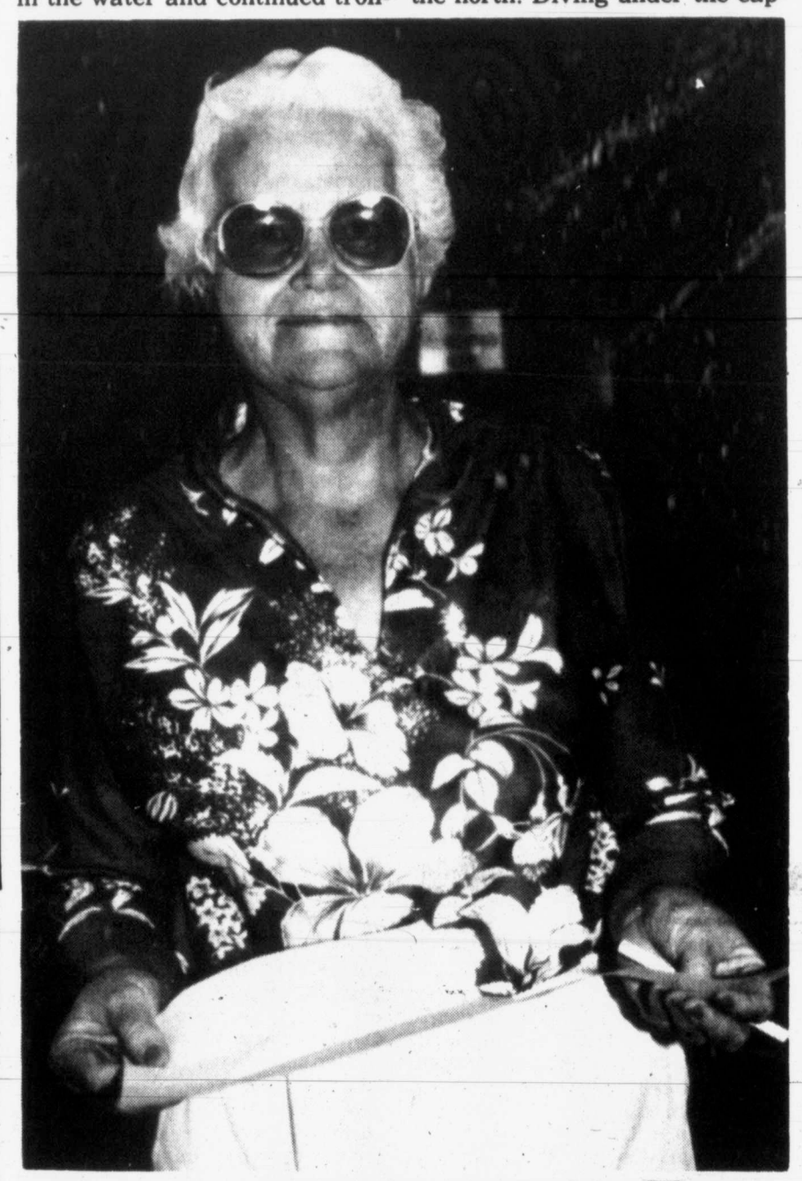

Kennedy said a bleeding 300-pound marlin the couple had caught earlier in the day probably attracted the sharks.

When he spotted the dead fish under the boat, "it kind of nearly gave me heart failure," Kennedy said.

Kennedy, 37, said of the incident, "It was classic 'Old Man in the Sea' stuff."

Kennedy is the eldest son of the late Sen. Robert Kennedy. Since 1987 he has represented the same Massachusetts district that his uncle, John Kennedy, served before becoming senator and later president.

John Kennedy gained fame during World War II for his role in command of patrol-torpedo boat PT-109.

A&M lists best students

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M University has named its honor students for the spring semester of 1990, recognizing some 3,000 students for outstanding academic performance.

Students named to the Distinguished Students List include Laura Kay Shifflett of Snyder.

Those on the Dean's Honor Roll include Shawna Crane and Kelly Glen Thompson, both of Snyder.

The Dean's Honor Roll recognizes students who have maintained at least a 3.75 grade point average (GPA) out of a possible 4.0 during the most recent grading period while being registered for 15 or more semester credit hours. A total of 1,030 students were recognized from a total enrollment of 40,000.

A second designation, "Distinguished Student," recognizes students who earned a 3.25 to 3.74 GPR while registered for 15 semester credit hours.

Shifflett graduates

Laura Kay Shifflett of Snyder was one of 3,464 Texas A&M University students to receive a diploma during mid-May commencement ceremonies.

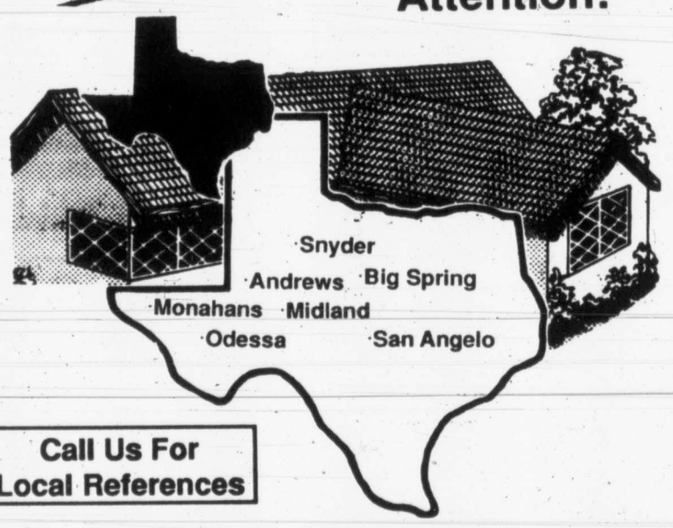

She received a bachelor of science in biomedical science.

Things To Check Before Choosing A Roofer:

- Are they asking for money up front? Giving money before the work is completed is the easiest way to get ripped off.
- Do they have copies of Workman's Compensation & Liability Insurance? Without these the homeowner becomes responsible for any damage to property or injury to workers.
- Always check with your Better Business Bureau or Chamber of Commerce for a reliability and performance record
- Do they offer current references?
- Are they really cheap compared to other roofer's proposals? Remember, the lowest price is not always the best deal. You generally get what you pay for. Bargains are generally problems in disguise?
- Do they offer lien waivers to protect the homeowner from materialman's liens? Without a lien waver the homeowner can still be held responsible for paying for the materials.

Bush, Gorbachev share credit

HOUSTON (AP) — President Bush is sharing credit with Mikhail S. Gorbachev for NATO's decision to tone down its war-fighting doctrine, saying the embattled Soviet leader is entitled to declare "I've been right" in dealing with the West.

Bush said Gorbachev can boast that the 16-nation NATO alliance agreed to overhaul its strategy in direct response to Soviet-sanctioned democratic changes in Eastern Europe.

At the same time, Bush observed, "It was the United States' draft that shaped the new direction for NATO."

Gorbachev "should get on the offensive" against Soviet critics who are angry over the collapse of the Warsaw Pact and the pullback of Red Army troops, Bush suggested Friday at the conclusion of NATO's two-day summit.

Bush was in high spirits as he flew here for two days of diplomatic meetings and Texas-style celebrations before opening the annual economic summit of the seven largest industrial powers Monday.

The president jetted to Houston on a 10-hour nonstop flight from London and the NATO meeting, which swiftly agreed to his blueprint for changes in Western military doctrine to reflect the reduced military threat from Moscow.

Relaxing against the side of a seat on Air Force One, Bush could barely conceal his delight. "You saw what happened to U.S. influence today," he said, pointing to the NATO communique which incorporated his proposals.

Despite his upbeat mood, Bush refused anew to declare the Cold War over.

"I've tried to avoid code words," he said at a post-summit news conference. "The Cold War being over is something that I'd rather not comment on.

"I don't think we're dealing in terms of victory and defeat," he continued. "We're dealing in terms of how do we stabilize and guarantee the peace and security of Europe."

Acting on Bush's suggestions, NATO agreed to shrink its arsenal of battlefield nuclear weapons — in tandem with Soviet action — and relegate them to highly unlikely last-resort use.

The NATO leaders also said that "once negotiations begin on short-range nuclear forces, the alliance will propose, in return for reciprocal action by the Soviet Union, the elimination of all its nuclear artillery shells from Europe."

They also decided to field smaller and restructured ground forces, in the newest sign that NATO's 40-year job of containing potential Soviet-bloc aggression was nearing a successful end.

At his news conference, Bush said that Gorbachev could point to the NATO meeting and say, "They have now changed their doctrine because of steps that I, Mr. Gorbachev have taken."

"If I were him," Bush said, "I'd say, 'I've been right.'"

The president said he would discuss the NATO meeting with Gorbachev in a telephone call over the next couple weeks. Aboard his plane, the president said he recently received a communication from Gorbachev. But Bush merely winked and smiled when asked to elaborate.

Despite prodding from some allies, Bush said he was not ready to join West Germany and perhaps others in rushing financial aid to Moscow to prop up Gorbachev and his sickly economy. Financial assistance for the Soviet Union is expected to be a major topic of discussion at the economic summit.

"I have some big problems with that one and I think the American people do," Bush said.

"If the Germans decide they want to do that, that's their business," he said. "But I have made very clear to those who have spoken to me about this that at this juncture, we have some serious problems, and I've not been under any false colors about that at all."

He said, for example, the Soviet Union is spending too much money on its military. Bush also complained that Moscow is paying a $5 billion subsidy to Cuba each year "to sustain a totalitarian regime that is highly critical of the Soviet Union from time to time."

While objecting to direct financial aid, Bush said, "Perhaps there are ways we can assist them as we go forward with credit or other matters before we go to direct government loans."

"WE'VE CHANGED THE BOGYMAN FROM COMMUNISM TO OBSCENITY. PASS IT ON!"

2 Live Crew concert starts without hitch

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Authorities said no disturbances were reported during either of the controversial rap group 2 Live Crew's performances here Friday night.

The Miami group, at the center of a storm of controversy over obscene lyrics, took the stage Friday for a "clean" show, followed a few hours later by a show for adults only.

The first concert, performed at Mateo Camargo Park, featured sanitized lyrics. Up to 400 concert goers attended.

The adult show, performed at the Hip Bone, got underway at 12:15 p.m.

San Antonio police reported no disturbances and said they were not monitoring the shows.

"If we get any calls, we'll dispatch out there," police supervisor Jean Bennett said early Saturday.

More than 100 people queued outside the Hip Bone at least two hours before the adult show. Police were asking for identification. Up to 1,500 concert goers were expected for the adult concert.

The rappers have a clean and "nasty" version of nearly every song on their controversial "As Nasty As They Wanna Be" album.

The album has sold more than a million copies.

2 Live Crew was scheduled to perform Saturday at the Longhorn Ballroom in Dallas, but city officials on Friday said the private club had the wrong type of license to sell tickets to the public.

The club obtained the proper permit Friday and the show would go on, concert promoter Bill Franklin said.

Franklin complained that the Longhorn was the victim of selective law enforcement. He said several shows, including a jazz festival, had been held at the club in recent weeks without incident.

"If it's wrong now, why was it not wrong then?" he asked.

The band's problems began June 8 when a Florida judge ruled that "As Nasty As They Wanna Be" was obscene. Two days later, two band members were arrested performing at a Miami nightclub.

The Territory of Wisconsin was established by Congress in 1836.

Scurry County 4-H'ers attend SPS camp

Five Scurry County residents recently participated in an electricity camp sponsored by Southwestern Public Service Company. About 80 4-H'ers from throughout the Texas South Plains attended the camp June 25-29 in the Sacramento Mountains south of Cloudcroft, N.M.

The camp featured demonstrations and lectures on basic electricity, safety, wiring and electrical terminology. The students also completed hands-on projects.

County agents and SPS representatives served as advisers and instructors.

Crawfords attend 3-day seminar

Gerald and Mary Lou Crawford of Crawford Real Estate and Appraisal of the Snyder area recently attended a three-day educational seminar in San Antonio.

Presented by Lincoln Graduate Center, the purpose of the Festival of Appraisal Education was to provide an opportunity for appraisers from throughout the nation to further their knowledge on a variety of specialized appraisal topics.

Topics included forensic consulting, ad valorem tax consulting, manufactured housing appraisals and special appraisal projects.

A highlight of the conference was the special honors luncheon speaker, nationally recognized appraiser and author, Henry S. Harrison.

Financial Focus

Over time, professions often develop some general "rules of thumb." The stock market is no exception. The following golden rules of investing may not enhance your wealth, but quoting them should impress your friends.

1. "Never buy a stock that won't go up in a bull market. The insiders are out of it." Since most trading volume is attributed to institutional trading, the "smart" money, for some reason, is not buying. So, stay away.

2. Never sell a stock short that won't go down in a bear market. The insiders have it." A short sale is a transaction in which a person who believes a stock will decline sells it even if he or she doesn't own it. Here again, the feeling is that the big money knows something you don't.

3. "If a stock won't go up in a bull market, sell it short as soon as the market turns to the bear side." For whatever the reason, if a stock can't attract buyers when things are moving up, it will probably be pulled down when the market turns to a bear.

4. "Buy the stock that won't go down in a bear market. It will probably lead the next rise." If you take any of these rules seriously, this should be the one. Such a stock has such strong support, that when an up-market eventually comes, new buying should drive up its price.

5. "Don't buy the 'sympathy' stock. Buy the stock that is going up." Stocks within an industry group tend to move together. If you find one that is not moving with the group, don't buy it simply because it has a familiar name. Buy the ones that are going up. Once again, there is probably a good reason for the lag that you aren't aware of.

6. "When a bull market turns to a bear, sell the stock that has gone up the most, since it will probably react the most." Stocks with the greatest percentage rise also tend to suffer the greatest decline when the market turns. Play the odds.

7. "Also sell the stock that has gone up the least. It couldn't go up, so it will probably go down." Just as rule Number 3 warns, if a stock can't draw buyers, it often attracts sellers.

8. "When a bear market turns bull, buy the stock that has gone down the most and the stock that has gone down the least." Stocks with the greatest declines are generally due for the greatest recovery. The stocks that have gone down the least should be fundamentally strong enough to attract good support in a bull market.

9. "If a stock should be bought or sold, do it as soon as you decide. The market does not consider your trade in its fluctuations." This is a strong recommendation to act with conviction by placing "market orders." These are orders to buy or sell stated amounts of stock at the most advantagious price obtainable after the order is placed.

These market rules were taken from the Forbes Stock Market Course. Like any such "rules," there is often a contrary opinion to match each one. And anyone who considered them the true basis of investing would probably do just as well by throwing darts or flipping coins. However, they do make a good checklist once you have selected a stock based on fundamentals.

Little Leaguers set for Area II tourney

HAMLIN — Snyder Little League All-Stars begin Area II playoff competition here with an 8 p.m. contest Tuesday, July 10, against the winner of the first-round Rotan-Hamlin game set for Monday evening at 8 p.m.

Snyder drew a opening round bye as did Colorado City in the area tourney.

Other teams competing include Stonewall-Kent and Sweetwater who will play each other at 6 p.m. Monday in the first round.

Colorado City will play the winner of that game at 6 p.m. Tuesday.

The championship of the double-elimination event will be decided July 19 at 7:30 p.m.

Mike Jordan, manager of the regular season champion Cubs, is the all-star manager and Alton Patterson serves as coach of the team.

Third Texas track opens for business

BANDERA, Texas (AP) — A crowd numbering more than 5,000 braved thunderstorms and high temperatures Friday to attend the inaugural day of racing at the third Texas track to offer parimutuel wagering.

Voters legalized such betting in 1988.

Bandera Downs joined the Gillespie County Fair and Festival Association track in nearby Fredericksburg as one of two facilities offering the wagering.

G. Rollie White Downs in Brady last year became the first track in Texas to conduct parimutuel wagering since state lawmakers outlawed track betting in 1937. The track, beset by financial problems, closed last December after only 24 racing dates.

Horses from throughout Texas and seven other states ran in 10 scheduled races in quarterhorse and thoroughbred categories at Bandera's Class 2 grounds, limited by the Legislature to 44 racing days per year.

Bandera officials expected to top the record betting handle of $358,000 set July 4 in Fredericksburg, betting window supervisor Kenneth Millrany said Friday.

The Bandera facility, which has undergone more than $6.5 million in renovations in the last two months, boasts 180 betting windows, said Don Rhine, the track's director of publicity. The track can hold almost 5,500 people.

More than 400 workers and volunteers assisted construction crews in ongoing maintenance until the 4 p.m. post time. Racing was scheduled to continue through 10 p.m.

"We're not so concerned about the total amount bet," said Rhine. "We want people to have a good time. If they do they'll come back."

Bandera Downs has scheduled consecutive racing weekends through Oct. 28.

Upgrading of the facility is expected to continue throughout the season, said Don Essary, one of the track's co-owners.

About 70 percent of the races run during the first weekend will feature quarterhorse competition.

Cards' Herzog resigns

St. Louis skipper accepts blame for record

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Whitey Herzog resigned as manager of the St. Louis Cardinals on Friday, taking the blame while admitting he was embarrassed by a team he had made into one of the best of the 1980s.

Herzog, who took the Cards to the World Series three times in the 1980s and won it once, confirmed at a news conference what radio station KMOX already had reported in St. Louis.

"I made up my mind in San Francisco," he said. "I was totally embarrassed by the way our team played. I just feel very badly for the ballclub, the organization and the fans."

The Cardinals were in San Francisco last weekend and lost a three-game series by scores of 3-2, 4-0 and 9-2.

Herzog will be replaced on an interim basis by coach Red Schoendienst, the only man who has won more games as a Cards manager than Herzog. Herzog, in his 11th year as manager, has 822 victories. Schoendienst won 1,028 games in 12 years in the 1960s, '70s and briefly in 1980.

"I don't think that I have done a good job as a manager this year," Herzog said. "I just can't get the guys to play and I think anybody could do a better job than me.

"I'm not going to single out any players. My players are all trying. The effort is there, but sometimes I don't know if the minds are there."

First baseman Pedro Guerrero said he and his teammates were partly to blame for Herzog's resignation.

"I'm kind of shocked about it," said Guerrero, who attended the news conference. "I feel kind of responsible. I know that I haven't done the job that I did last year at this point."

The Cardinals are in San Diego for a series against the Padres, but news of the resignation first broke in St. Louis, where it was reported by KMOX, flagship station of the Cardinals, and television station KSDK.

"When Whitey brought up the subject of resigning several weeks ago, we said 'no,'" Cardinals president Fred Kuhlmann said at the news conference. "But everybody feels it's in the best interests of the team to make a change now."

The Cardinals, who won the World Series under Herzog in 1982 and were National League champions in 1985 and 1987, are 33-47 this season and in last place in the NL East, 14½ games behind the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"I am the manager, and I take full responsibility," Herzog said.

Only Tommy Lasorda, who has managed the Los Angeles Dodgers since 1977, has been with the same team longer than Herzog among active managers.

The team's top officials — Kuhlmann, general manager Dal Maxvill and executive vice president Mark Sauer — flew to California for the announcement.

World Cup Soccer...

Argentina will be without four players

ROME (AP) — Yellow and red cards have made coaches and players turn purple with anger. On Sunday, they will deprive the World Cup final of some of its stars.

In the end, fans around the world will wonder what might have been had referees been more frugal with cards.

For West Germany, it also shows that keeping your cool on the field pays off.

Argentina will have to do without four regulars — including its best striker, Claudio Caniggia — making the World Cup final against West Germany anything but a battle on equal terms.

England was without Paul Gascoigne, its most creative but fickle player in the month-long tournament, for Saturday's third-place game with Italy.

But England also profited from the card-waving. It edged Cameroon 3-2 in overtime when the first African quarterfinalist ever was without four starters because of suspensions.

"It is a concern, a major concern," Argentina coach Carlos Bilardo said. "But there is nothing for us to do about it but find substitutes and play our best."

In its first five matches, Argentina played well over a third of the time against teams with players sent off with red cards. It lost against Cameroon 1-0, even though the opposition had two men ejected — then needed a penalty-kick shootout to beat Yugoslavia, despite having a man advantage for 90 minutes.

So Bilardo has gotten something from the system that depleted his lineup for the final.

FIFA, the world soccer federation, issued orders to referees before the World Cup to clamp down on fouls with more yellow and red cards. The tournament was relatively free of vicious matches — perhaps in part because of the conservative tactics so popular with coaches, but partly, too, because of the increased number of bookings.

Even though the referees came under harsh criticism for the yellow cards, Caniggia and Gascoigne clearly committed unnecessary offenses and have only themselves to blame for weakening their sides.

The most bitter complainer of all was Caniggia, who earned his second yellow card, and subsequent suspension, because of a deliberate hand ball on a routine play.

"My team is in the final and I'm out. That is hard to take," Caniggia said. "The final does not even interest me."

It was also hard to take for Gascoigne. He openly wept after he received his second yellow card for an unnecessary late tackle. At the time, of course, he had no idea he would miss the third-place game, not the championship.

The suspensions came with the style of play. Cameroon played rugged, often brutal defense, which helped it into the quarterfinals. It had two red cards in the opener, when defenders consistently fouled Caniggia and Diego Maradona.

West Germany has played more regally and goes into the final without suspensions.

Navratilova claims ninth title

Becker and Edberg to battle in Wimbledon men's final

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Martina Navratilova won her record-breaking ninth Wimbledon women' championship Saturday, beating Zina Garrison with a Centre Court exhibition of grass-court greatness.

The 33-year-old left-hander outserved, out-volleyed and outplayed Garrison 6-4, 6-1 to finally get the record she wanted most.

To break the mark she shared with Helen Wills Moody, Navratilova gave up the French Open to hone her already devastating grass-court game. She whipped through the first six rounds without dropping a set and got a break when top-ranked Steffi Graf was upset by Garrison in the semifinals.

And on Saturday, before a Centre Court crowd including the Duchess of York, Ivana Trump and Althea Gibson, the last black woman before Garrison to contest a Wimbledon singles final, Navratilova would not let her dream die.

She closed out the match with a service break, going to double-match point on a forehand passing shot and ending it by watching a backhand sail long.

Navratilova threw up her hands in triumph, gathered her gear and raced up the stands to the players' box, where she embraced former champion Billie Jean King, one of her coaches, and close friend Judy Nelson.

There were tears all around. And history was made.

Boris Becker had seen it before.

He was the 17-year-old who shocked everyone in 1985, winning the title as an unseeded outsider by overpowering veteran players.

This time Becker was on the other side of the net, watching Goran Ivanisevic's serves and volleys rocket past and putting up little resistance for nearly two sets before asserting his own power.

"It was one of the best grass-court matches I've ever played," Becker said after his 4-6, 7-6, 6-0, 7-6 victory. "He's got the hardest serve and the best serve of anybody I've ever played."

Becker advanced to his third straight Wimbledon final against Stefan Edberg, who ended Ivan Lendl's latest quest for the only Grand Slam title that has eluded him. Edberg overwhelmed Lendl 6-1, 7-6, 6-3.

Becker defeated Edberg in last year's final, avenging his championship loss to the Swede in 1988. Sunday's match will mark the first time this century the same men have met in three consecutive Wimbledon finals.

When Becker was asked whether Ivanisevic had the makings of a Wimbledon champion, a sparkle came to the eyes of the three-time winner.

"During the match I thought about somebody who was 17 who was playing like that," said Becker, who as an unseeded player defeated Anders Jarryd in the 1985 semifinals and then beat Kevin Curren in the final to become Wimbledon's youngest men's winner.

Ivanisevic came out blazing, notching seven aces in the first set and outslugging a defending champion who seemed flustered by his opponent's power.

When the 18-year-old Yugoslav broke Becker's serve in the 11th game of the second set to take a 6-5 lead, he served for a two-set lead. But Becker rallied to break back, then won the tiebreaker 7-4.

"At 6-5 I was thinking about going two sets up. I was thinking too much and I lost the game," Ivanisevic said. "If I had won the second set, maybe I would have won the third also."

Becker played a nearly flawless third set, losing only seven points, but Ivanisevic rallied to force a tiebreaker in the fourth set. Becker won the last three points to win 7-5.

"I think I have learned some things," Ivanisevic said. "It's nice to play on Centre Court, nice to play a semifinal. I think next time it will be better."

After beating defending champion Steffi Graf 6-3, 3-6, 6-4 to set up Saturday's Wimbledon title match against eight-time winner Martina Navratilova, Garrison said she had been inspired by Gomez's victory in Paris last month.

"The win he had at the French, that helped me so much," the 26-year-old American said. "I've been looking back on that and thinking about the situation he went through and reading all the statements that he said, and it just helped me a lot."

There are several parallels between Garrison and the 30-year-old Gomez, who dabbles in experimental shrimp farming in his native Ecuador.

Both are relative old-timers in an increasingly youth-dominated sport. Gomez beat 20-year-old Andre Agassi for the French Open crown, while Garrison defeated third-seeded Monica Seles in the quarterfinals here, ending the 16-year-old's 36-match winning streak.

Against Navratilova, she faced probably the top grass-court player of them all.

The winningest singles player in Wimbledon history, Navratilova was overpowering in her first six matches, all won in straight sets. She was at her best against fourth-seeded Gabriela Sabatini in the semifinals Thursday, holding off a first-set charge by the Argentine and stubbornly breaking for a 4-3 lead in the second on the way to a 6-3, 6-4 victory.

Canadian leading defending champ

VITTEL, France (AP) — Unlike last year, Greg LeMond will not come out of the first major time trial of the Tour de France as the leader.

In 1989, LeMond shot into the lead on the leg from Dinard to Rennes. But then he was just a few seconds of the pace; this year, he's more than 10 minutes behind Canadian Steve Bauer.

In fact, LeMond went into the lead after all three individual time trials last year, inlcuding the final one, when he snatched victory on the final day by eight seconds over Laurent Fignon.

However, today's 38-mile leg from Vittel to Epinal does give LeMond a chance to cut into Bauer's lead.

"He knows that I am riding well and often I gain a lot of time in the mountains," LeMond said.

"Saturday, I hope I will be first," LeMond said. "I think Alcala will be in the first three or four followed by (Gianni) Bugno, (Miguel) Indurain and maybe (Stephen) Roche."

Bugno won the Tour of Italy this year, Indurain took Paris-Nice and Roche, the 1987 Tour de France winner, won the Four Days of Dunkirk.

Bauer expects LeMond to do well in the race against the clock.

"In the time trial, Greg is the best. But if I make a good race, I can limit the difference," Bauer said.

SISD student athletes may require physicals

All Snyder students in grades 7-12 planning to participate on any University Interscholastic League athletic team need to fill out UIL forms and may need to take a physical according to a release issued Friday by SHS trainer Steve Krueger.

According to the release all incoming seventh graders planning to play in junior high athletics, all ninth graders planning to compete in high school, all students new to Snyder Independent School District wanting to participate in athletics, any SISD student who has not competed in school sponsored sports but plan to do so during the 1990-91 school year and any student who answered yes on questions 1, 4, 5, 6 or 7 on medical history forms will be required to submit to a physical examination.

Exams will be paid for by the school until August 15 and are being given by Drs. Nelson Brice, James Burleson, Bid Cooper, Robert Pierce or Paul Thompson.

Krueger reminds prospective athletes to schedule appointments as early as possible to avoid any problems later and to make sure the needed forms are completed prior to the appointment. Doctors cannot give a physical without the signature of a parent on the paperwork.

Athletes not requiring an examination still need to file the completed forms at the athletic directors' office or with Krueger at Snyder High School, 3801 Austin Ave.

Forms are available at the SHS office or the field house.

Yankees' owner winds up questioning

NEW YORK (AP) — After two days and nine hours, George Steinbrenner finally finished answering Fay Vincent's questions. Now he has 10 more days to submit evidence that he's done no wrong.

The New York owner is being investigated for his tumultuous relationship with former Yankees outfielder Dave Winfield and a New York City gambler named Howard Spira. Vincent also is reportedly taking a wider look at the way Steinbrenner has run the team he bought in 1973.

"The person who knows the facts on this case best is Mr. Steinbrenner," Vincent said. "He's testified for a day and a half and his testimony is the essential testimony. I feel other testimony would be at the option of Mr. Steinbrenner's lawyers and I'm asking them to submit it in affidavit form."

Steinbrenner and Vincent did not reveal what they discussed and gave no hint if the owner was in danger of disciplinary action.

"His testimony was helpful to me in evaluating his situation and his cooperation was complete," Vincent said during a sidewalk news conference. "I will try, depending on the state of the record in front of me on the 16th, to make a decision reasonably quickly."

Vincent, who has authority to do anything "in the best interests of baseball" and the power to issue any penalty up to a lifetime ban, was asked whether he had preliminary opinions in the case.

"Well, I do," he said.

But when asked what opinions he had begun to form, Vincent said: "I'm not going to tell you."

Vincent said the hearing was more informal than a judicial proceeding and that he would be focusing on Steinbrenner's answers.

Stephen E. Kaufman, Steinbrenner's lead lawyer, confirmed the deadlines Vincent had given but did not wish to say what his client would do next.

"I don't think we have any comment to make," Kaufman said.

Steinbrenner, who snuck out of the building on Thursday in freight elevators, went out a side entrance on Friday.

As Steinbrenner left the building, several truck drivers cheered, "Go Steinbrenner!"

Parks and Wildlife sets alligator hunts

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department will conduct public hunts for alligators in four wildlife management areas during September.

Officials said completed applications from prospective hunters must be received at the department's Austin headquarters by 5 p.m. Aug. 6. Applicants selected by drawing must pay a $50 permit fee. A $35 alligator hunting license also is required for each permitted hunter.

Last year, 1,182 people applied for the hunts, with 340 chosen. A total of 169 alligators were harvested.

This year's hunts will be held in the Guadalupe Delta Wildlife Management Area in Calhoun county; the J.D. Murphree area in Jefferson County; the Mad Island area in Matagorda County, and the Old River Unit of the Lower Neches area in Orange County.

A change in rules this year calls for an additional $120 tagging fee to be assessed of those successful hunters who choose to have their alligators tagged for commercial sale.

Manager of animal sanctuary fired

MURCHISON, Texas (AP) — The manager of an animal sanctuary has been fired for his refusal to quit raising livestock, an official said.

Billy Jack Saxon, 52, who served as manager of the Black Beauty Ranch since 1984, refused to abandon his cattle business, said Wayne Pacelle, executive director of the Fund for Animals, which runs the animal sanctuary. Saxon sold off his hogs last year at the ranch's request.

Pacelle said author Cleveland Amory, founder of the New York-based Fund for Animals, "played a major role in the decision" to fire Saxon.

"It's the fact that Billy held a management position at the ranch and was privately involved in an animal exploitation business that caused us to sever the link with him," Pacelle said.

"We tried to make it clear that this was inconsistent with our goal. Billy was a fine manager of animals on the ranch, but he was breeding animals that ultimately would go into slaughter," he said.

Saxon will continue to manage the ranch, however, until his successor is named, Pacelle said.

Saxon maintained that he was not fired, but given "two options: get out of the livestock business or quit here, so I quit."

He said he didn't think raising livestock and working at the sanctuary was a contradiction.

"I do a good job here with the animals," he said. "You can ask anybody. But I'm tired of the publicity. It ain't going to hurt anything but the animals when I leave here."

Saxon said he will continue raising cattle and is thinking about getting back into the hog business, too.

The Athens Daily Review reported in a series of articles in March that Saxon used ranch equipment to haul feed and even to transport livestock to auction.

Pacelle said Saxon was reprimanded for those incidents.

The Black Beauty Ranch is a 604-acre sanctuary about 70 miles east of downtown Dallas. It is home to hundreds of horses, burros and goats in addition to chimpanzees, elephants, foxes, llamas and other animals.

The Fund for Animals also operates a wildlife rehabilitation center in Ramona, Calif., and a rabbit sanctuary in Simpsonville, S.C.

Pacelle said a search for Saxon's replacement has begun. The position is a full-time post.

"In light of this situation, we're trying to find not only somebody that will be a fine caretaker, but also is a model of the cause we are promoting," he said, "and that's to treat animals with respect and compassion."

Tons of hamburgers block freeway Friday

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — An 18-wheeler spilled tons of frozen hamburgers onto sizzling Interstate 35 during lunchtime Friday.

Some of the beef, which was bound for McDonald's fast-food restaurants, was loaded onto another truck by workers who slid on the slippery substance as they tossed the 30-pound boxes to one another.

A front-end loader scraped the leftovers off the roadway.

The 15 tons of beef, some of which was barely braised, is headed for the dump, said officials with McDonald's and Ranger Refrigerated Express Inc. of Dallas, the trucking firm that was hauling the meat to its destination before the midday mishap.

The tractor-trailer was involved in a three-vehicle accident.

Kevin Dougherty, the 31-year-old driver of the truck that dumped a portion of its 300,000 patties onto the freeway, suffered minor injuries in the collision, police said. He was taken to Harris Methodist-Fort Worth, where he was treated and released, a hospital spokeswoman said.

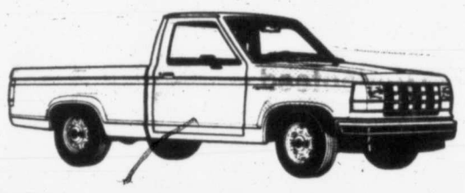

The accident, which occurred about 12:15 p.m., caused a mile-long traffic jam that left motorists stranded.

Astro-Graph

By Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

July 9, 1990

In the year ahead you might participate in an endeavor where you will have a secondary, but rewarding role. In this instance what you'll gain materially will be more gratifying than the spotlight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) This is a good day to start making changes in a situation you feel can be altered for the better. However, try to move slowly and don't attempt to do it in one fell swoop. Major changes are ahead for Cancer in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1.25 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) There are two sides to every story. Try to keep this in mind today so you don't jump to conclusions. A verdict rendered before the facts are in could be erroneous.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's best not to tackle assignments or tasks today where you know going in they are a bit too complicated for you to manage independently. Try to get a skillful assistant to aid you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You might experience a bit of group pressure socially today to go along with something you don't enjoy. Instead of making a big deal about it, let majority rule.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) If you leave something important undone today, it may not bug you so much now, but it could aggravate you later. Try to finish what you start.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You are likely to be more mentally than physically restless today. This situation can be remedied by spending time with imaginative friends with whom you can exchange new ideas.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) An opportunity might present itself today from which you can derive personal gains. Be patient, however, because it might be awhile before the faucet is turned on..

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Appearances are extremely important today and others will judge you by what they perceive you to be. If there is something you want to manage or supervise, act and look like a leader.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) It will take the edge off of things for both you and the recipient if you do something nice for another today and then broadcast your good deed to the world. Be silent.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) This is a good day to review conditions in general that have an affect upon your life. See if you can't upgrade matters with a more progressive and inventive approach.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Focus and priorities will be important today if you hope to achieve something of worth. You might not be able to do all you want to do, so concentrate on the most meaningful.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you feel you haven't been getting your fair share of opportunities lately, it's time to broaden your horizons. New interests and new people could upgrade your life.

July 8, 1990

Don't be downhearted in the year ahead if the fruits for your labors are slow to harvest. Time is your ally, and you will eventually be rewarded in proportion to the efforts you expended.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) There is a possibility of problems today in one of more of your important, personal relationships. The problems might stem from something you do or say rather than from others. Cancer, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1.25 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You might have some extra responsibilities with which to contend today. They are not likely to be pushovers to begin with and a poor attitude could make them even more difficult.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Usually you're a reasonably cautious person, but today you might be inclined to take risks you shouldn't, especially in financial areas where you hope to make a lot from a little.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) An enormous amount of determination and fortitude will be required today in order to fulfill your ambitious aims. If you haven't got the drive, you're not apt to get the brass ring.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You will be greatly influenced by your companions today, so try to avoid negative thinkers. You're bit indecisive yourself and it won't take much to tilt you in their directions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Strive to be penny wise again today. Limit your buying to necessities and try not to assume any new financial obligations or time payments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You might get involved in a situation today where a strong willed companion who believes it's his right to think for everyone might try to make decisions for you as well.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Today you might pride yourself on your cleverness on being able to shift some of your burdens off on to another. Even though this individual says he/she will take care of things, don't bank on it.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Don't build your expectations today on what you hope a big shot says he is going to do for you. This guy could blow up a balloon with all of his hot air.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) There might not be any shortcuts to success for you today, so don't look for easy outs. Put your shoulder to the wheel and forget about attempting to dodge responsibilities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) It's important you strive to see things from the other guy's perspective today and not just solely from your own. An open mind leans itself to learning; a closed mind invites complications.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Continue to be cautious and prudent in your commercial and financial involvements again today. If you're careless or indifferent, there's a possibility you'll come out on the short end.

Baptist editors: alternative news agency possible

DALLAS (AP) — Some Baptist newspaper editors say recent firings at Baptist Press, the Southern Baptist news service, could change it from a credible news agency to little more than a public relations vehicle.

The editors, alarmed by the requested resignations of Baptist Press' two top executives, said Friday that if Baptist Press is changed drastically by the fundamentalist majority, then an alternative news agency for Southern Baptists must be developed.

"We are very concerned about the propaganda aspect of Baptist Press which could develop under new leadership," said Gene Puckett of Raleigh, N.C., editor of the Biblical Recorder, the North Carolina state newspaper.

If Baptist Press is changed, the editors said they want to explore several alternatives, including setting up their own denomination press service through a network made up of the 38 Baptist state newspapers.

The meeting of the Southern Baptist Press Association, which includes the editors of the state Baptist newspapers, continued through noon Saturday.

The purpose of the meeting is to "ensure the free flow of information to the Baptist people," said Dr. Presnall Wood, editor of the Dallas-based Baptist Standard, a weekly newspaper for Texas Baptists.

Fundamentalist Baptists last week asked for the resignations of news director Al Shackleford and news editor Dan Martin of the Baptist Press, the denomination's news service. They accused the two newsmen of bias against the fundamentalists.

Editors of state newspapers, which are not owned by the denomination but rely on its news service, have accused the fundamentalists of seeking to control the news.

Shackleford and Martin "have come under fire from some who would desire to control Baptist Press," Wood said in an editorial in the current issue of the "Baptist Standard." The "Standard" is owned by the Baptist General Convention of Texas.

Fundamentalist and moderate Southern Baptists have been in a political battle for control of the 14.9 million-member denomination for more than a decade.

Fundamentalists, who now control the offices and agencies of the denomination, have vowed to purge its staff and institutions of staff members who do not proclaim belief in biblical inerrancy, the doctrine that the entire Bible is the literal word of God.

Albania says...

Asylum seekers can leave without reprisals

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Albanian legislators Saturday guaranteed that thousands of people who have sought refuge in foreign embassies can leave the hard-line Communist nation without fear of punishment.

About 10,000 pro-democracy demonstrators gathered in a square near the embassies Friday in the largest demonstration of its kind in 45 years of Communist rule, Austria's APA news agency reported. The silent rally dispersed after a brief clash between police and some demonstrators.

The rush on the embassies continued overnight, and there reportedly were up to 5,000 people in more than a dozen missions Saturday.

The Albanian Foreign Ministry on Thursday promised to grant passports to those who have sought refuge in foreign embassies in a desperate attempt to flee their homeland, which borders Greece and Yugoslavia.

But Saturday's parliamentary decree, published by the state news agency ATA, was the first pledge with the force of law that all Albanians in the foreign missions could come out and receive passports without fear of prosecution.

A special Central Committee meeting to deal with the recent disorder continued into its third day Saturday.

Communist leader Ramiz Alia on Friday criticized the thousands of asylum seekers and told the Central Committee that the party would not give up power as Communists had done elsewhere in Eastern Europe.

"The aims and actions of these destructive, anti-democratic and anti-Albanian forces go too far," Alia said in remarks carried by Albania's ATA news agency. "We may be poor, undoubtedly we have difficulties and shortages, but the foreigner has never solved our troubles."

The APA report on the demonstration was sketchy, but no injuries were reported. The news agency has one of the few correspondents in Albania.

Meanwhile, the embassies offering shelter to asylum seekers said sanitary conditions were nearly intolerable.

The number of refugees in the West Germany Embassy doubled to 2,000 overnight, and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher was consulting with his French and Italian counterparts on a resolution to the crisis, the Foreign Ministry in Bonn said Saturday.

ADN said there were 1,500 Albanians in the Italian Embassy and 500 in the French mission.

Some embassies lacked sufficient food and water, and Albanian authorities were not allowing foreign governments to send supplies, Western officials said.

The sometimes-violent rush to the embassies in Tirana, the Albanian capital, this week follows last year's exodus of East Germans to embassies in other East European countries shortly before the fall of their hard-line government.

Under 45 years of hard-line Communist rule, travel for average Albanians has been virtually impossible. But under Alia, who took over after Enver Hoxha's death in 1985, the country of 3.2 million people has increasingly sought ties abroad and has slowly begun to implement reforms.

Exxon Valdez will be returned to service

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The tanker Exxon Valdez, source of the nation's worst oil spill, is headed back to sea after repairs to its shredded hull. But it won't be going back to Alaska and its name will be changed, officials said Friday.

The vessel that spilled nearly 11 million gallons in Alaska's Prince William Sound will be called the Exxon Mediterranean when it returns to duty, due next month, said Exxon Shipping Co. President Gus Elmer.

"Due to declining Alaskan crude oil, the vessel will enter foreign service, most likely loading crude in the Mediterranean or the Middle East. It is consistent with our policy that the vessels be named according to their location," Elmer said.

He declined to say that the environmental disaster in Alaska 16 months ago was a major factor in renaming the vessel and changing its use.

"It is strictly an economics decision," he said.

Alaska environmental commissioner Dennis Kelso, however, said he believes the name change is due as much to public relations as economics.

"I think the key question is what kind of tankers do we have operating worldwide?" Kelso said. "The accident happened here, but it could have happened in Puget Sound or San Francisco Bay — wherever tankers transport crude or its byproducts. What broke down here was the system and the tanker was part of it."

Four listed on honor roll

ABILENE — Two students from Snyder, one from Fluvanna and one from Jayton have been named to the spring 1990 Dean's List at Abilene Christian University.

The Snyder students are Charles Taylor McCormick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Claude McCormick, and Robert Neblett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Peyton Neblett. Both McCormick and Neblett are graduates of Snyder High School.

Others were Eddie Pylant, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rex Pylant of Fluvanna, and Tony Bryant, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chuck Bryant of Jayton. Pylant graduated from Snyder High School and Bryant graduated from Jayton-Girard High School.

To be listed on the honor roll, a student must be enrolled for at least 12 hours and earn a 3.45 or higher grade point average.

THANKS

The Ira PTA would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone who saved Furr's receipts to help us get a computer for the Ira students. We collected a total of $206,579.96. This was more than we could have hoped for. As Stanfield Elementary got a late start on this project, they needed $30,081.00 to get their kids a computer. Ira PTA loaned them the amount needed to reach their goal. Special thanks to project coordinators Lori Haddox and Pam Helm for their long hours spent collecting and adding the receipts. Without the tremendous support of the Ira community and citizens of Snyder, we could not have met our goal.

Tests begin to locate shuttle hydrogen leaks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Critical tests to ferret out the mysterious hydrogen leak that has grounded America's space shuttle fleet are starting this weekend.

Rockwell International, the contractor that built the space shuttles, will test pipes and valves from space shuttle Columbia today and Sunday at the company plant in Downey, Calif.

Engineers at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida, meanwhile, are preparing a leak test on Atlantis, a space shuttle on a launch pad.

William Lenoir, NASA associate administrator for space flight, said Friday the goal of the tests is to find where a leak developed in the maze of pipes and valves used to load liquid hydrogen aboard the shuttles.

Leaks found in May on Columbia and last week on Atlantis caused the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to ground all three of the nation's winged spacecraft. The third craft, Discovery, is scheduled to fly in October if the leak problem is solved.

Meanwhile Friday, an investigative board concluded two days of closed-door hearings here on another major NASA problem, the focusing flaw that disabled the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope.

NASA said the panel, led by Lew Allen, director of the space agency's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, was to determine how a manufacturer ground and polished the wrong prescription into one of two focusing mirrors on the telescope. The mistake has caused the instrument to see the universe as a fuzzy blur.

The mirrors were manufactured by the Hughes Danbury Optical Co. of Danbury, Conn., under a $440 million contract that included $11 million in performance awards.

A report to be published Monday in Aviation Week and Space Technology magazine quotes unnamed sources as saying NASA was offered Air Force facilities to test the telescope mirrors 10 years ago, but the space agency turned down the offer.

But another trade publication, Space Business News, says in a story to be published Monday that NASA was blocked from using Defense Department facilities to test the Hubble mirrors because the same contractor also was making optics for Air Force spy satellites.

Space Business News quotes James Beggs, who was NASA administrator when the Hubble was being built, as saying that "the Air Force wouldn't let us in" to test the Hubble mirrors or to even oversee their manufacture.

Efforts to reach Beggs by telephone for comment were unsuccessful.

Lenoir told reporters there is still no estimate about how long the space shuttles will be grounded. It all depends on how long it takes to find and fix the hydrogen leaks, he said.

A leak discovered on Atlantis during a test on the launch pad last week is similar to one discovered in May on Columbia when that craft was being loaded with liquid hydrogen in preparation for launch.

Columbia was rolled back to the hangar and engineers removed the elaborate plumbing fixture called the umbilical that is used to load hydrogen into the shuttle rocket propellant tank. The fixture was sent to the Rockwell plant in Downey for testing.

On Sunday, Rockwell engineers plan to pump helium, then liquid nitrogen and finally the much colder liquid hydrogen through the umbilical.

Gorbachev gets reversal showing," said Inna Dementyeva, a Moscow delegate. "It's stupid and ugly and inhuman."

But other party members said they backed the decision because it would let future leaders know that they couldn't hide behind "collective responsibility."

"Collective responsibility is no responsibility," said a Byelorussian delegate who identified himself only as Alexander. "And there should be a full renewal of the leadership."

Delegates and reporters standing outside the Palace of Congresses said Gorbachev looked angry when he left following the initial vote. On previous days he stopped to talk with bystanders, but today he went straight to his car.

Congress members had said they expected at least half the Politburo members would get the thumbs down.

Names singled out as most likely to receive negative votes were ideology chief Vadim A. Medvedev — criticized by many as ineffective — and Alexander Yakovlev, considered the most radical member of the Politburo. Yakovlev has been unapologetic for his reformist views before the largely conservative congress.

The evaluations would have had no practical effect, because the congress chooses a new Central Committee, which would have selected a new Politburo anyway. But they clearly would have left a mark on each man's career.

The name-by-name voting also likely would have hurt Gorbachev's position by discrediting some of his allies and helping his rival, Yegor K. Ligachev, who enjoys wide popularity at the congress, delegates said.

eating nutritious food, exercising daily and learning as much about current world events as possible.

She has been staying with Chamber of Commerce Manager Bill Moss and his wife, Judy, this summer. In addition to being close friends, they also serve as her managers.

She also receives support from family and friends.

Wright, who has been singing for years, will perform "Do Ya" by K.T. Oslin.

She will be interviewed by five judges on Monday, including former Miss Texas of 1969 and former Miss America of 1964.

During the evening gown competition, Wright will wear a deep iris-colored gown (purchased in Las Vegas, Nev.) beaded with iris icicle sequins accented by a truffle of feathers at her feet.

For the swimsuit competition on Friday, Wright will wear an aqua-colored suit especially designed for her.

While winning is Wright's goal, she recently said that she is trying "to keep a positive attitude" about the pageant.

To help prepare for her interview on Monday, Wright reads books, magazines and newspapers constantly in order to stay current with the news of the day. At one time she kept a large world map in her dorm room at Western Texas College where she has just completed her freshmen year.

Wright was five when she entered her first pageant, winning $50 and a stuffed animal.

She also entered the Texas Junior Miss Pageant as a teenager. It has since been retitled Texas Young Woman of the Year. She won a college scholarship that year.

Scholarship monies and acquiring pageant experience are what motivate Wright, and others like her, to compete. She credits pageants with helping her learn how "to deal with stress" and she has gained a confidence about herself "that she has never had before."

Wright has one more year at WTC and then she intends to transfer to Texas Tech University where she will pursue a degree in elementary education with a music specialty.

While in Fort Worth, Wright may be reached at this address: Sarena Wright; c/o Miss Texas Pageant; Holiday Inn North Convention Center; 2540 Meacham Blvd.; Fort Worth, Tex. 76106-2311.

Cause of blast still unknown

CHANNELVIEW, Texas (AP) — Fearing for their lives, terrified workers fled the ARCO Chemical Co. plant as a thunderous explosion ripped through the building, killing 17 workers.

"When I heard it, I knew what had happened," said worker Kathryn Cox, who was on a catwalk nearby when the explosion occurred. "I hollered to my people, 'Y'all run, run as fast as you can.'

"I looked back twice and then I just kept running because I knew if it went again, we'd probably get blown up," she said.

The explosion, which could be heard up to 20 miles away, tore through the plant late Thursday night. In addition to the 17 people killed, five others were injured in the blast.

Officials have yet to determine what sparked the devastating blast, which leveled an area the size of a city block. A tank exploded at the plant at about 11:30 p.m. Thursday.

Saturday, investigators with the Occupational Safety and Health Administration planned to sift through the charred wreckage to look for a cause.

"It looks like a tornado or fire went through that area," Assistant Secretary of Labor Gerard F. Scannell said Friday.

Charges follow report to police

After receiving a report that an individual was attempting to break into an apartment, police arrested a 20-year-old Spanish male at 1:23 p.m. Friday at 3009 Ave. N.

The individual was charged with public intoxication and Class B misdemeanor criminal mischief.

Other arrests reported Friday included two Spanish females, ages 28 and 36, taken into custody at the sheriff's office for outstanding warrants involving Class B misdemeanor theft.

In the early morning hours Saturday, a white male juvenile, age 16, was arrested for being a minor in possession at 12:08 a.m.; and two white males were charged with DWI and public intoxication. This arrest occurred at 2:35 a.m. in the 700 Block of East 37th St.

Minor wreck minus drivers

Two driver-less vehicles were involved in a minor accident Friday in the Wal-Mart parking lot.

According to reports, a 1959 Plymouth station wagon rolled into a parked 1988 Chevrolet Baretta.

The station wagon is owned by Doris Vernie Merritt of 1412 22nd St.; and the Chevrolet by Rosa Hernandez of 603 25th St.

Thefts reported

Two minor thefts were reported to police Friday, according to reports.

Delores Davis reported a stolen evaporative cooler at 10 a.m. and Glenda Freeman reported a missing girl's bicycle at 12:21 p.m.

BUILDS AIRPLANE — H.R. "Blackie" Miears finished building this airplane in November. He began the project in 1985 after retiring from Sun Oil Co. The aircraft is considered "experimental" because it is at least 51 percent homebuilt. To receive a permanent air worthiness license, Miears has to complete 25 hours of flight testing. He will then be permitted to have a passenger on board his single engine, two passenger aircraft. Miears has always been interested in airplanes and as a boy he liked to construct model airplanes. In 1951, he learned how to fly. In later years his interest expanded into restoring old airplanes, and he still has at least one plane that he plans to renovate someday. (SDN Staff Photo)

The SDN
Section B

Sun., July 8, 1990

When H.R. "Blackie" Miears retired from Sun Oil Co. in 1985 he could have traveled, taken up a hobby, or sat around drinking coffee with friends, instead he decided to satisfy a lifelong dream and build an airplane.

Since the project began in July of 1986, Miears estimates that he has spent some 2,000 hours building his single engine, two passenger Acro Trainer (serial number 1754) from the ground up.

It also sports late model radio equipment which qualifies it to be flown into larger airports.

Even though this particular design is well developed and has been studied for many years by Piper Research, it is classified as "experimental" because at least 51 percent is "homebuilt."

He painted it orange yellow with a Bahama blue colored stripe. The sanding and painting of the aircraft took many, many hours he said, adding that he chose these colors because that is the color of many super cabs, one of his favorite aircrafts.

Finishing touches were put on the airplane last month, and at the time this interview was conducted, Miears had flown it some three hours. After 25 hours of test flying, Miears said his temporary air worthiness permit will be updated to permanent. But until that happens, he cannot have a passenger on board during one of his test flights.

As Miears continues to test fly his airplane, he will be "adjusting and fine tuning it." After each adjustment he flies the plane. He said recently that he "just about has it."

Until the permanent license is issued he is also limited to flying within a 50-mile radius of Snyder.

The purpose of the 25 test flight hours is to work out all the bugs and kinks before the plane becomes permanently air worthy and passengers are taken on board.

The FAA or Federal Aviation Association regulates homebuilt airplanes so that the public in general is protected, Miears explained.

He used an airplane approved engine and propeller so that he only has to have 25 test flight hours rather than 50.

Regardless, Miears said he "doesn't trust" using non-aircraft approved engines and such because he considers it "risky."

Miears admits to "scaring" his wife, Shirley, the day he took his new plane on its maiden flight because she thought all he was going to do was taxi to the end of the runway.

He said his wife is "skittish" about flying, but even though she does not share his passion she lets him indulge himself.

He said he was very excited though about the first flight and has been thoroughly pleased with how the plane handles.

Miears described his first flight as "beautiful" and said he was pleased that his plane flew like a super cab which is what he had wanted from the beginning.

When selecting the basic plan he intended to purchase, Miears looked for a design which would have (1) slow stall speed; (2) good load carrying capabilities; and (3) handle well in the air.

Once he had made up his mind to build his own airplane, Miears purchased the plans and materials, spending about $25,000 in all. That figure, of course, excludes cost of his labor. However, the straight purchase price of Miears' newly finished airplane would be in the neighborhood of $50,000.

Once Miears acquired the necessary materials, he began constructing various parts of the airplane in his shop at home, and later transferred everything to Winston Field where he put it all together, bit by bit, over a five-year period.

Miears, who is both a qualified mechanic and welder, was able to do most of the work himself simply by following the plans.

However, for technical problems which he sometimes encountered, Miears said he consulted Darrell Mize who manages the local airport. Mize, who is an aircraft and power plant mechanic, provided invaluable assistance.

Miears is also a member of the Experimental Aircraft Association and while building his aircraft, he said he sometimes asked members for advice.

And even though building this airplane was more technical and complicated than Miears first thought, he was able to follow the plans as he tried to work a good three to four hours everyday on it.

He wants to build another airplane just like this one someday, but in the meantime he said he will use his new aircraft for pleasure flying and cross country trips. He said he may also decide to visit some of his relatives who live elsewhere in Texas.

Miears is no stranger to airplanes as he has owned several in past years. He has rebuilt similar fabric airplanes and in 1979 he began to restore a 1979 Aeronca Champ which he later sold.

At present he has a Tri-Pacer which he plans to restore, but he still considers the airplane he built himself as his favorite.

Miears has always been fascinated by airplanes and even though his father was afraid of airplanes and never let him fly in one, it only made Miears more determined than ever to learn to fly.

His father may not have let his son fly, but he did buy him his first model airplane (a rubber band powered airplane) and for years Miears put various models together.

He said he likes the "freedom, relaxation and visibility" of flying. He learned to fly in 1954 by taking lessons at Winston Field. The first craft he flew was a Taylor Craft.

To maintain his flying license, he said he has to have a physical every three years and he has to keep flying in order to "stay current."

Differences he has noticed in the past 30-plus years he has been flying are that the skies are more crowded today and radio equipment is more sophisticated.

He said the same is true of today's model airplanes which are larger, more sophisticated and radio controlled.

Miears has in past years attended the annual fly-in show in August in Oskosh, Wis., but this year he will be unable to attend. Activities include seminars and a host of flying-related activities.

In addition to being an airplane enthusiast, Miears' other "passion" is raising Christmas trees. It all started some seven years ago when he read an article which suggested that West Texas might be a good place to plant Christmas trees.

His orchard has grown steadily since then.

Miears has a son, a daughter, two granddaughters and a grandson, but none in his family shares his love of flying and his fascination with airplanes.

Originally from Longview in East Texas, Miears moved to Snyder in 1951 from Big Lake. He went to work for Sun Oil Co. in 1951 and retired some 35 years later.

HEAT STROKE
Among sports injuries, heat stroke is the second most common cause of death, reports Emergency Medicine. The symptoms are headache, nausea, dizziness, stumbling. At the first sign, stop activity and rest in shade; keep sipping cool drinks. Water or diluted fruit juice are best. To avoid heat stroke, drink plenty of water before and during activity; a gallon a day may be necessary.

Knowing what to throw

By James Jacoby

Willy Nilly is too shy a declarer to be in the spotlight two days in a row, so we invite you, the reader, to play today's five-diamond contract. Cover the East-West hands and plan the play after the queen of spades lead.

I hope you didn't draw trumps ending in your hand and lead the jack of hearts for a finesse through West. If you did, you were perhaps wise enough to first throw a club away on dummy's other top spade. But you still were set when East won the king of hearts and played back the queen of clubs through your king.

The certain way to make 11 tricks is to establish heart winners so you can discard at least one more club. This must be done without allowing East to gain the lead to attack your king of clubs. So, win the first spade trick in dummy and cash your K-Q of diamonds. Go back to dummy with the ace of hearts and throw your jack of hearts on dummy's other high spade. Then lead the queen of hearts. If East plays the king, ruff and return to dummy's ace of diamonds to play the heart 10 and throw a club. If East plays small, discard a club. Even if West now wins the heart king, your king of clubs is safe from attack, and you still have the ace of diamonds for a sure entry to dummy for the other good heart.

James Jacoby's books "Jacoby on Bridge" and "Jacoby on Card Games" (written with his father, the late Oswald Jacoby) are now available at bookstores. Both are published by Pharos Books.

MILDEW HELP FOR ANTIQUES

You love antiques, but when you bring them into your home, they somtimes bring a musty smell. You may be able to enjoy your antiques without the smell. Here's how:

— To remove musty odors in enclosed parts of the furniture (inside drawers or cabinet doors), first open drawers and doors to air. Next, wash and scrub the insides thoroughly with a mild soap and hot water. Be careful not to soak the wood. Quickly dry damp surface with a towel and leave doors and drawers open for a day or two. When thoroughly dried and aired, spray with a deodorizer or place your favorite sachet of potpourri inside to keep it smelling fresh.

— To rid old wicker of mildew, rub the mildewed spots with a cloth dipped in a mixture of ammonia and water. The cleaning cloth should be squeezed well to avoid saturating the wood, which could discolor it. Give cleansed areas a mild salt-water bath and dry in the sun.

— To clean a mildewed rug or piece of tapestry, take it outside and brush away any loose mold. If you do this indoors, you could inadvertently spread mold spores throughout the house. Vacuum away loosened mold and dispose of vaccuum bags immediately in an outdoor trash can. If an item is badly stained or too delicate to treat, take it to a professional antique restorer.

—To clean dirty, mildewed leather-bound books, use saddle soap. Work a damp sponge into a lather by rubbing it on the soap then apply the sponge on the leather covers in gentle circular motions. Pass a clean, damp sponge over soaped areas until soap is gone, then dry. Buff with shoe cream in a matching color to restore the leathers suppleness.

Sewing program featured at lunch

Snyder Christian Women's Club will meet Wednesday for a luncheon at Snyder Country Club from 11:15 a.m. to 1:15 p.m.

Joni Gainer of Blanche's Bernina will present a special program featuring the latest new ideas in clothes and decorating clothes. She will demonstrate "glitz" which is the most recent applique technique. Rompers, pillowcase dolls, bandboxes, collars, crafts, and gift ideas will also be featured. Special emphasis will be given to bows on all items. Gainer has a degree in fashion merchandising and has previously worked in Abilene.

Special music for the luncheon will be provided by Sharon Streetman.

Guest speaker will be Nancy Gressett of Clovis, N.M.

Reservations are required for both the luncheon and the free nursery. Call Candy at 573-7601 by noon Tuesday. The cost is $7 and includes the meal, speaker and program entertainment. A beverage alone may be purchased for $1.

Christian Women's Club is an inter-denominational organization open to all women in the community. Membership is not required and there are no dues.

THE POPULATION EXPLOSION, by Paul R. Ehrlich. We are supporting the current level of overpopulation only by depleting resources that were created over millions of years — fertile topsoils, ice-age groundwater, and organisms that are working parts of our life-support systems. Unprecedented overpopulation is contributing to the diverse problems we face today. And overpopulation in rich countries such as the United States is more serious than rapid population growth in poorer countries.

Emphasis on video prompts eye care

NEW YORK (AP) — Videos and computers in today's classrooms place even more emphasis than in the past on schoolchildren's ability to see, according to the American Optometric Association.

Recommending a back-to-school eye examination, the association says children hampered by undiagnosed vision problems have to work harder to learn and may have so much difficulty they are categorized as learning-disabled.

Parents are cautioned, however, that examinations that check only to determine if a child sees clearly may miss many vision problems that interfere with learning, such as eye coordination, eye focusing and eye movement.

Recipe Box

Quick-cooking turkey breast tenderloin steaks cut the cooking time of chicken country captain, an old-fashioned Southern favorite, to one-third of the original. The frozen steaks are available year-round in the poultry section of your supermarket.

Turkey Country Captain

2 medium yellow and-or green sweet peppers, cut into thin strips (2 cups)

1 medium onion, chopped (½ cup)

1 clove garlic, minced

1 tablespoon cooking oil

One 14-ounce can peeled Italian-style tomatoes, cut up

½ of a 9-ounce jar chutney (about 1-3rd cup)

2 teaspoons lemon juice

1 teaspoon curry powder

½ teaspoon salt

⅛ to ¼ teaspoon ground red pepper

4 turkey breast tenderloin steaks (1 pound total)

2 cups hot cooked couscous or rice

In a large skillet cook peppers, onion and garlic in hot oil over medium-high heat until vegetables are tender but not brown. Add undrained tomatoes, chutney, lemon juice, curry powder, salt and ground red pepper. Cook, uncovered, about 5 minutes or until some of the liquid evaporates. Add turkey tenderloin steaks; spoon vegetable mixture over turkey. Cover and cook 8 to 10 minutes or until turkey is done. Serve with hot cooked couscous. Makes 4 servings.

SCS Notes

By Mark McDaniel

COVER CROPS FOR THE CONSERVATION RESERVE PLAN

DEFINITION: Establishing and maintaining perennial vegetative cover to protect soil and water resources on land retired from agriculture production.

PURPOSE: To reduce soil erosion and sedimentation, improve water quality and create or enhance wildlife habitat.

CONDITIONS WHERE PRACTICE APPLIES: On land retired from agriculture production including land entered into retirement programs. (CRP).

TERRACES: Terraces with breaks present that are causing water erosion problems that could prevent a stand of grass from being established must be repaired.

BRUSH MANAGEMENT: Brush must be removed and kept out of the area that is entered in the CRP.

DEAD LITTER COVERAGE: Before permanent grass is established, a dead litter crop must be planted and not allowed to produce seed because volunteer plants will suppress the grass plant. If a field already has sufficient cover and is approved by SCS, it can be used as dead litter cover and have grass planted in it.

FERTILIZER: It must be applied when the dead litter cover is planted at a rate of 32-40-0 or according to current soil analysis.

WEED CONTROL: Weeds must be controlled either by mechanical or chemical control.

PLANTING DATES: Cover crop — sorghums, ect... April 1-Aug. 15. Small grains... Aug. 15-Dec. 1. Grasses... Dec. 1-June 1.

CRP CONTRACTS: Contracts must be carried out as written, unless modified, to keep out of violation and termination of said contract.

Remember, it is your responsibility to control weeds, ect. on your CRP fields, but if you need any assistance of any kind, call the Soil Conservation Service at 573-6317.

Groom has increasing role in plans

NEW YORK (AP) — Planning a wedding is no longer the province of the bride, no matter her age or the number of marriages. The bridegroom increasingly has a say, including what his bride will wear.

"The groom comes right into the fitting room and helps to choose the dress," says Jim Hjelm, designer of bridal gowns.

Hjelm spoke recently at a roundtable sponsored by Bride's magazine. The forum, moderated by editor Barbara Tober, explored marriage in the '90s.

Marcy Blum, president of M.L.B. Associates, a special events and wedding planning firm, says of her clientele, "80 to 90 percent of the couples plan together." Which gives her a chance to assess their future. "I can tell early on whether a marriage will fly by how couples react to each others' needs," she says.

Judy Kuriansky, a clinical psychologist and author of "How to Love a Nice Guy," says today's couples are more creative in their efforts to make the marriage work and women are "choosing better. They won't settle for just any man. I see a trend that relationships are more stable."

Dr. Helen Fisher, an anthropologist who specializes in the evolution and future of human sexuality, also says women are the difference. "We have the chance now to make the most interesting marriages in the history of western civilization because women are well educated," says Fisher, author of "The Sex Contract: The Evolution of Human Behavior."

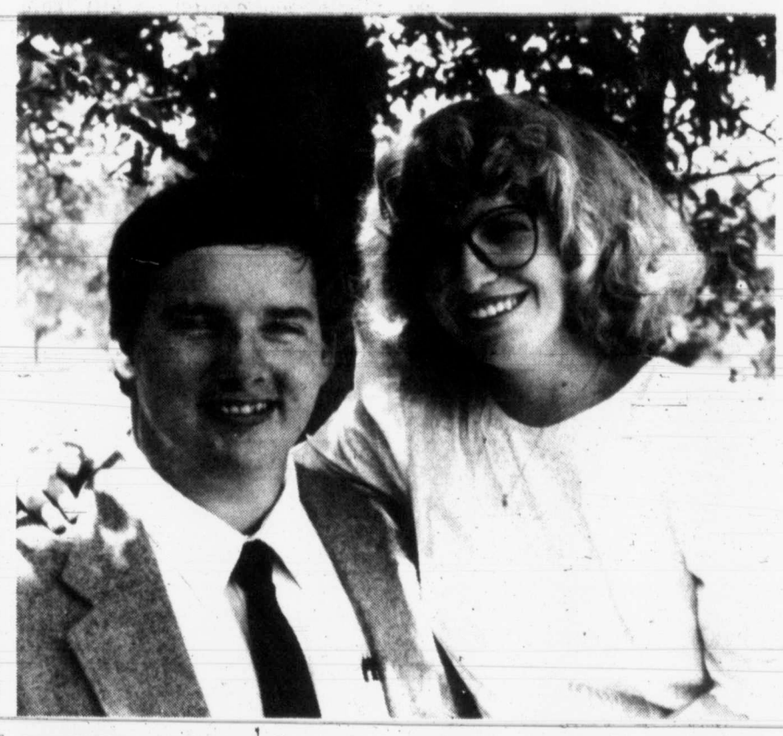

And for those that aren't so interesting?

"Bad marriages can end," she says, "because women today are relatively independent."

Other panelists, all from New York, were Robert Legere, designer of bridal gowns; Sylvia Weinstock, known as "The Tiffany of cake makers," and Herb Rose, banquet director at the Pierre Hotel.

AUGUST WEDDING — Oscar and Mary Garcia along with Don and Von Adams announce the engagement and forthcoming marriage of their children Andrea Jenea and Pty. Off. Mikeal Bertram of San Diego. The couple plans an August 18 wedding. (Private Photo)

SUMMER WEDDING — Cliff and Kathy Hall of Stephenville, formerly of Snyder, and Drs. Tommy and Ruby Barker of Stephenville announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their children, Karmen Ruth and Craig Wayne. Karmen is the granddaughter of Pauline Scrivner of Snyder, Welch Scrivner of Dermott and Mrs. Cliff Hall Sr. and the late Cliff Hall Sr., former Snyder residents. The couple plans to wed at 2 p.m. Aug. 4 at Harvey Baptist Church of Stephenville. (Private Photo)

Consumers urged to buy American

NEW YORK (AP) — A campaign to encourage consumers to buy American-made clothes has begun to pay off, according to an industry group formed to offset the impact of imports on the fashion industry.

"This is more than just 'pocketbook patriotism.' It reflects American consumers' preference for U.S.-made clothing's quality, style and fit — a preference that is also evident in many foreign cultures," says Robert E. Swift, executive director of the Crafted with Pride in U.S.A. Council, a nonprofit industry marketing group formed six years ago.

Swift points to a study made by the Good Housekeeping Institute, which showed that 80 percent of the women interviewed rated American-made clothing as the best quality on the market. Another study by a market research firm, R. H. Bruskin Associates, showed similar approval, with 87 percent of its sampling, and Time Magazine-CNN research shows an 82 percent rating. A survey by Cambridge Reports indicates that the number of U.S. consumers who say they have not purchased a specific product because it was foreign-made has nearly doubled in the last four years.

When the council coordinated "Made in the U.S.A." promotions with retailers like Belk's in Charlotte, the Jones Store in Kansas City, several Dillard's locations in the Southwest, the May Company in Cleveland and Los Angeles, and Thalhimer's in Richmond, sales increases ranged up to 18 percent, according to Swift.

Cod is widest waterway

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. (AP) — Cape Cod Canal is the widest artificial waterway in the world.

It is 480 feet wide and cuts through the 8½ mile strip of land separating Cape Cod from the rest of Massachusetts.

The 32-foot-deep canal decreases the sea route from Boston to New York City by 70 miles. It also enables ships to avoid the dangerous shoals off Cape Cod's eastern coastline. Begun in 1909, the canal opened in 1914.

Greene, James marry in ceremony

Christy Ann Greene became the bride of Randal Ray James at 4 p.m. April 7 in the chapel of First Baptist Church during a double-ring ceremony officiated by Rev. Larry McAden, pastor of Calvary Hill Baptist Church.

Parents of the couple are Larry and Beverly Greene and John and Judy James.

The couple recited their vows before a brass arch flanked by spiral brass candelabra covered in springeria fern and baby's breath. A memory candle, lit by the couple after their vows, stood on a brass pedestal covered in fern and baby's breath.

Jason Greene, brother of the bride, and Jeff James, brother of the groom, served as candle lighters.

Becky Bynum provided music and Royce Hataway sang "Truly" and "The Lord's Prayer."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride chose a romantic styled gown of ivory satin. The bodice of heavily beaded sequins and pearls of Schiffli lace featured a sabrina neckline with keyhole opening adorned with hanging pearls. The puff sleeves of satin were continued with sheer styling and appliques to the wrist. The full skirt, adorned with lace cut-outs, flowed into a ruffled and lace cut-out cathedral train.

To complete her attire, the bride wore a floral half-wreath headpiece accented with pearl side sprays and highlighted with a double pouf and silk illusion fingertip veil.

She carried a freeform, cascading bouquet of ivory, rose and steel blue roses and rosebuds accented by pearl sprays and greenery of sea grass, boxwood, Boston fern and pilea ivy and adorned with satin ribbon streamers in the wedding colors. Attached was an ivory, lace-covered family Bible with an ivory handkerchief given to the bride by her grandmother, Bobbye Greene.

Also included in the bouquet were two, long-stemmed roses which the bride gave to her mother as she walked down the aisle and the other to the groom's mother after the lighting of the memory candle.

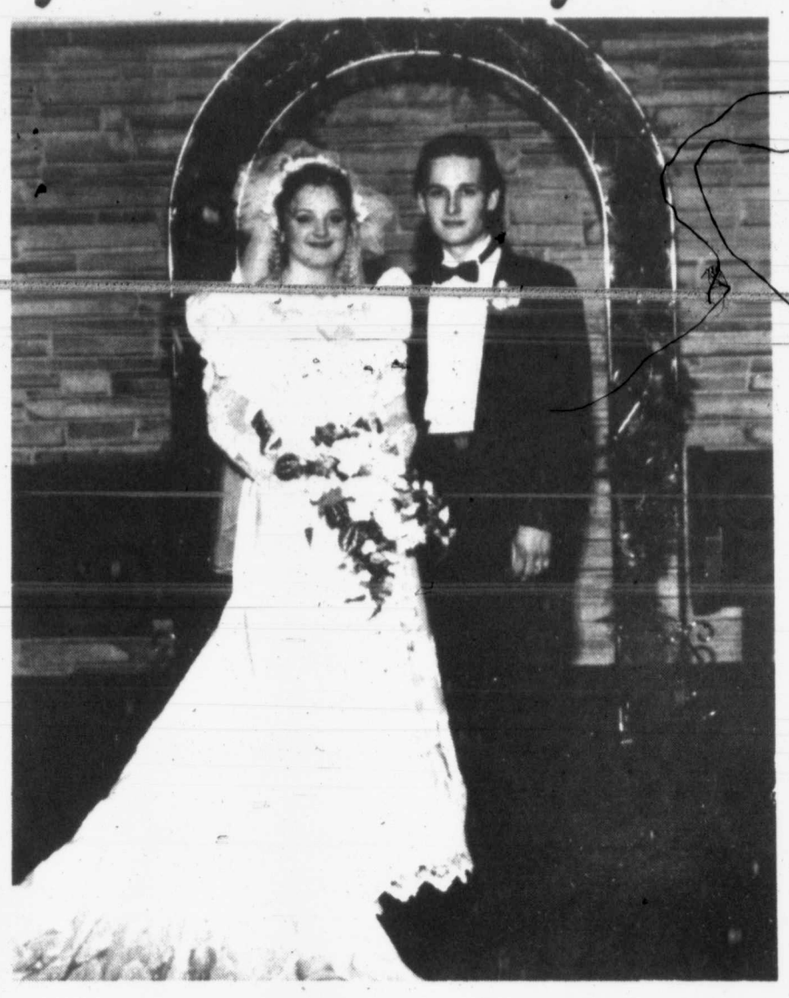

In keeping with tradition, the bridal gown was new, the handkerchief was old. The bride wore a blue garter fashioned by Brenda Lee and diamond earrings borrowed from her mother. She also wore pennies minted in the years of the couples births.

Wendy Hart served as maid of honor. Bridesmaid was Monica Rammage of Dallas, cousin of the bride. They wore gowns of rose lace and satin. The lace bodice featured a sabrina neckline, with Renaissance sleeves and a dropped waistline. The full skirt flowed into a court-length hem.

They carried freeform bouquets featuring a large, open rose accented with small roses and rosebuds in the wedding colors. Satin ribbon complemented the bouqets.

Kara Beka Herrley, cousin of the bride, was the flower girl. She wore a dress of ivory with a fitted bodice and full skirt. She carried a basket of potpourri decorated with rosebuds and ribbons.

She was escorted by her brother Kaleb Herrley, ring bearer. He wore a black designer tuxedo with rose cummerbund and tie. He carried a satin pillow trimmed with satin ribbon made by Earlene Brooks.

MR. AND MRS. RANDAL RAY JAMES
(Harley Bynum Photography)

Ushers were Jason Greene, brother of the bride; Jeff James, brother of the groom; Kevin Phillips of Burkburnett, cousin of the groom; and Brandon Porter of Wellington, cousin of the groom.

Steve Lee served as best man. Ricky Hunter served as groomsman.

Male members of the wedding party wore black designer tuxedos with rose cummerbunds and ties and boutonierres in the wedding colors of rose, steel blue and ivory.

Karen Herrley, aunt of the bride, registered guests at a table covered in ivory lace. The bride's throw-away bouquet and a bridal book made by the groom's mother complemented the table. A framed, quilled wedding announcement, a gift from Jan Thomas, also sat on the table.

A reception followed in the Garden Room at First Baptist Church.

The bride's table was covered in rose with an overlay of ivory lace. A bouquet of roses served as the centerpiece. Small rose mints in the wedding colors and mock champagne were served. Table appointments were silver.

The three-tiered wedding cake with rolled fondant icing was decorated with sugar lace and steel blue satin ribbon. Cascades of roses adorned the top layer of the cake which was designed by Becky Hicks.

Courtney Lowrance and Karrie Billingsley of Victoria served at the table.

A quilt given to the couple by the groom's parents covered the groom's table. The chocolate cake, made by the groom's mother, was horse-shoe shaped. Rose mints and silver appointments also adorned the table.

Kim Dupree and Penny James, sisters of the groom, served.

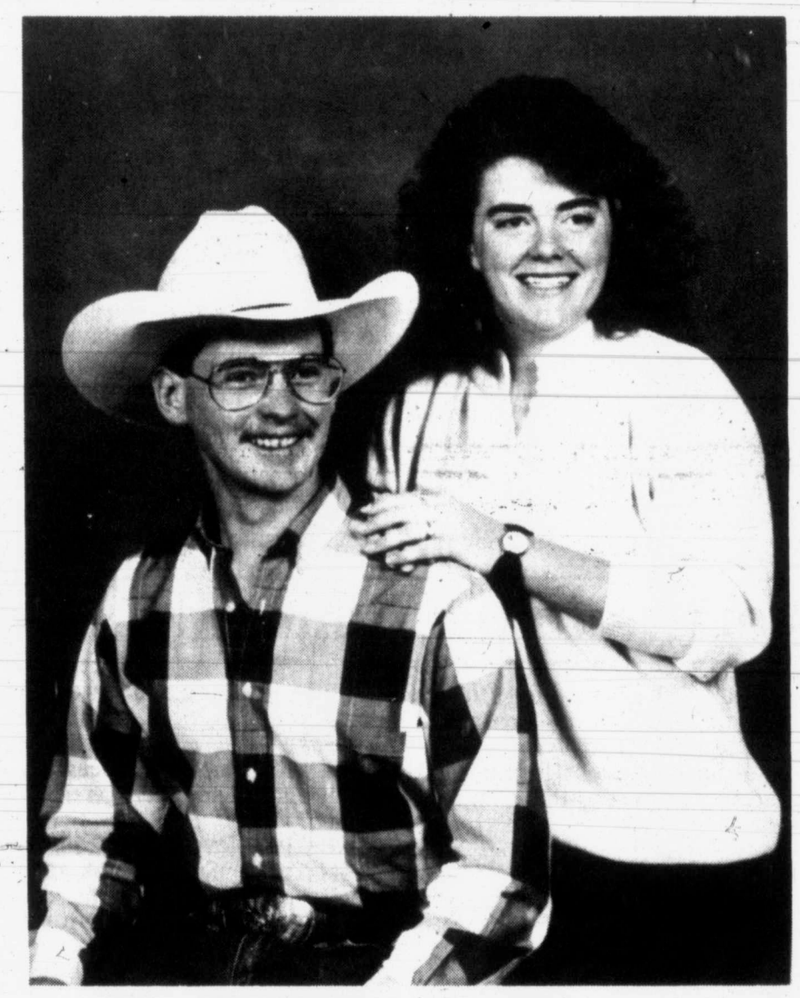

Following a wedding trip to Ruidoso, the couple resides in Snyder.

The bride is 1989 graduate of Snyder High School and attends Western Texas College. She is employed as a secretary at Jack's Roadboring.

The groom is a 1986 graduate of Snyder High School and attended WTC. He is employed by John's Machine Shop.

New menswear designed for males with hulky builds

Here's good news for all you hunks — or is it hulks? — out there.

A new collection of men's clothing has been designed to accommodate the bulging biceps, fearsome forearms and wasp waists common to men who work out.

"The Gladiator collection of fashionable tailored clothing has been thoroughly thought out and designed to address this new body of men," says Mitchel Nichnowitz, president of Botany 500, which distributes the line.

Suit jackets have 8-and 10-inch drops and feature fuller chests and shoulders to define and fit broad shoulders and backs. The sleeves are wide and the armholes are cut to fit large biceps. Trousers are fuller at the thigh and seat, though waists are smaller and have a lower rise to balance the silhouette.

Conventional suits have 6-inch drops, which means a 6-inch difference between the measurement of the shoulders and that of the waist — a size 40 jacket would be paired with trousers with a 34-inch waist. The Gladiator line pairs 42-inch jackets with 32- or 34-inch waist trousers. Popular executive-style suits, sports jackets and slacks are included in the collection.

The country trend continues to grow, and men will find serious-casual jackets, sweaters and pants in rich soft fabrics with napped and suede finishes, in rich autumn colors, in the menswear lines at J.C. Penney stores.

"Men are ready for a break from the fast-lane, city-slick kind of look," says Joe Sapienza, vice president and fashion director at the chain. "It's a whole focus on the ex-urban thing — guys wanting to look like they're going to the country for the weekend."

Went to visit Uncle Elber the other day. You know Elber.

Elber has figured out how the flag can be protected without infringing on the constitution. Could even get past the Supreme Court. Maybe. At least his idea sounds as sane as most I've heard, if you're interested.

When I got out to his place, he, Crazy Joe Hetteremeyer and Smitty Thompson were all sitting on the front porch. They were scooched up in their chairs listening real intently to Elber when I walked up.

"Since the Soo-preme Court and the rest of those guys in Washington won't do nothin' about it, I decided to come up with a plan of how we can get them flag burners," Elber was saying.

"They ought to be stomped on!" shouted Crazy Joe, grinding his boot into the wooden floor, to illustrate.

"They oughta be shot!" yelled Smitty, who made his point by holding up his cane like a rifle.

"How' do you figure, Uncle Elber?" I asked.

"Well, we just get a law passed that says flags are the property of the government," he stated flatly.

"What?" said a surprised Smitty. "Hell, Elber, the durn government IS the problem!"

"I know, I know, but the government's the one with the power, don't you see? And so we use the government's power to punish flag burners."

"You mean stomp on 'em!" shouted Crazy Joe.

"Shoot 'em!" said Smitty, still pointing his cane.

"Well," Elber continued, "What we do is, we pass a law saying flags are government property. Then, instead of buyin' flags, everybody would be rentin' 'em from the government. Except that people would only have rent 'em one time and they could keep 'um as long as they wanted to."

"How the heck would that stop people from burning flags, Elber?" Smitty asked.

"Well, being as they were rented from the government, anybody who burned a flag could be charged with destroyin' government property," said Elber, beaming with pride from his idea. "And they could be penalized."

"Stomped on, you mean!" yelled Crazy Joe.

"Shot!" shouted Smitty.

Well, I thought it was a pretty good idea, but it sounded kinda' minor offense to me and I told him so.

"I thought about that, too," smiled Elber. "The law would be written where the value of the flag would appreciate..."

"Say what?" Joe interrupted.

"Go up in value. Be worth more," I explained, and nodded to Elber to go on with his idea.

"Yep," said Elber, "They would go up in value like Savin's Bonds only a whole lot faster. About 30 minutes after you rented one, it'd be worth a thousand dollars. In an hour, they'd be worth ten thousand."

"Could we rent 'em back to the government then?" asked Smitty. "'Cause if we can, I'll take a dozen."

"No, you danged fool, you can't rent 'em back to the government," said Elber. "They's some dumb people in Washington, but not that dumb. Anyway, the point is, burnin' a flag would be a high-dollar o-ffense and we could punish 'em real good then."

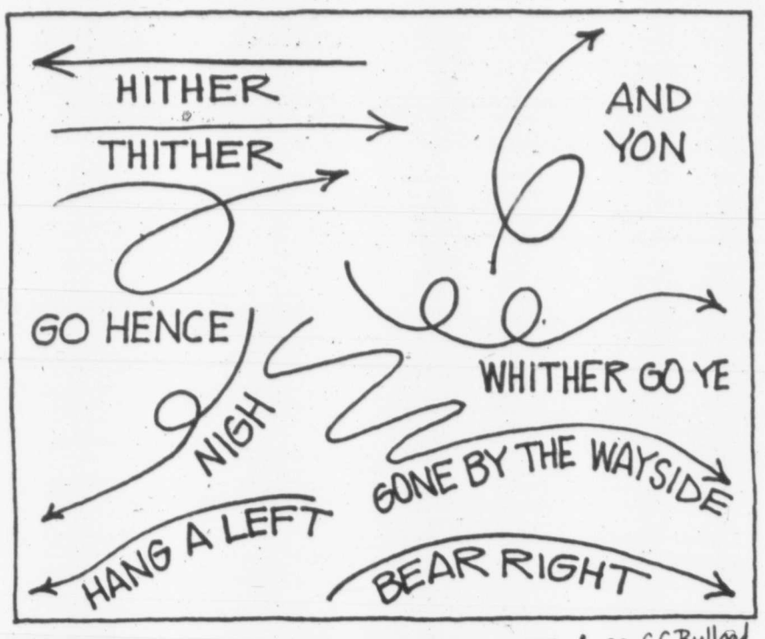

"You mean stomp on 'em!" said Crazy Joe.

"Shoot 'em!" said Smitty, still flashing his cane-gun.

"Well now," said Elber, as he laced his fingers together, put his hands behind his head and relaxed back in the chair. "That's kinda' what I had in mind."

Country Life

By Deanie Francis Mills

Last week I quoted advice from a hundred-year-old book entitled "Wives and Mothers; Information for Every Woman," by Pye Henry Chavasse, M.D. While the book was written for women (and had already gone into its 55th printing by 1890), it contained valuable suggestions on the subject of maintaining good health which are suprisingly modern. Or, to put it another way; we think all this stuff is NEW, but Dr. Chavasse was writing about it a century ago.

The book contains several chapters on the care and raising of infants and children which offers up wisdom that is just as timeless today. "Let a child's home be the happiest house to him in the world; and to be happy he must be merry and cheerful; and he ought to have an abundance of playthings, to help on the merriment. If he have a dismal nurse, and a dismal home, he may as well be incarcerated in a prison, and be attended by a jailor." He goes on to say that there will be plenty of time for sadness in adulthood, but the young "ought to be as playful and full of innocent mischief as kittens."

On the matter of discipline, he writes, "Does ever any man or woman remember the feeling of being 'whipped' as a child, the fierce anger, the insupportable ignominy, the longing for revenge, which blotted out all thought of contrition for the fault or rebellion against the punishment? With this recollection on their parts, I can hardly suppose any parents venturing to inflict it..."

Love is a constant and favorite theme for the good doctor. "Make a child understand that you love him; prove it in your actions — these are better than words; look after his little pleasures — join in his little sports; let him never hear a morose word — it would rankle in his breast, take deep root, and in due time bring forth bitter fruit. Love! Let love be his polestar; let it be the guide and rule of all you do and all you say unto him."

Long before anybody ever heard the words "psychological abuse," Dr. Chavasse wrote against telling children how bad they are. "Do not, in fact, bully him...It will ruin him if you do; it will make him in after years, either a coward or a tyrant." Instead, he encourages that we "give him confidence in himself; rather find out his good points and dwell upon them." He even warns against excessive teasing of a child. ("It will spoil his temper.") And we are admonished to "speak truthfully to your child; if you once deceive him, he will not believe you in the future."

Though there was no television a hundred years ago, Dr. Chavasse wrote that children could not be outdoors too much. "I would rather see him actively engaged in mischief than sitting still, doing nothing." Even cold weather, he wrote, "is the finest tonic in the world."

Dr. Chavasse urged his readers not to shout at their children: "...there must be neither snarling, nor snapping, nor snubbing, nor loud contention towards him. If there be it will ruin his temper and disposition, and will make him hard and harsh, morose and disagreeable...Do not combat bad temper with bad temper — noise with noise," and here, the good doctor gave his best advice, whether for his time or ours, "Be firm, be kind, be gentle, be loving, speak quietly, smile tenderly, embrace him fondly, but INSIST UPON IMPLICIT OBEDIANCE," (his emphasis), "and you will have, with God's blessing, a happy child."

SDN Letters to the Editor

Editor:

I have lived in Snyder since the early 1950s and have had limited occasion to deal with the county-owned Cogdell Memorial Hospital.

Recently, however, my wife spent three weeks in the hospital and then another week. I was surprised and pleased with the very fine treatment given to my family. I don't believe it would have been better anywhere in the world.

It was a long and difficult stay in the hospital for Wanda, and she is doing much better now. But the professional and caring manner in which the hospital staff took care of her needs will always be remembered and appreciated.

Also I want to especially thank Dr. Tom Aycock for his efforts. He is a skilled surgeon and takes maximum time with each patient. Snyder is fortunate to have Dr. Aycock on the medical staff.

I am proud to live in Snyder and have Cogdell Hospital as a very vital part of this community.

Sincerely,
E.D. Walton

Get a lawn mower that fits your lawn

By the Editors
of Consumer Reports

The search for the right lawn mower can be daunting. Sears, for example, offers more than 20 models, from $100 you-push reel mowers to $3,000 20-horsepower tractors and just about everything in between. How do you choose the right mower for your lawn?

In general, say the engineers at Consumer Reports, you don't want a machine that: is back-breaking to manuever; spends more time in the repair shop than working on the grass; is so small it consigns you to extra hours of trudging every weekend, or is too big or too expensive for your needs.

In general, the bigger your lawn, the bigger the machine you'll need. But size isn't the only criterion. A large riding mower could make short work or an acre of flat, unobstructed lawn. But the same acreage, dotted with trees and flower beds, might be easier to cut with a smaller walk-behind mower.

For small lawns, the manual reel mower is a good choice. Lightweight alloys and plastic parts have halved its weight, but otherwise this venerable mower hasn't changed much since Edwin Budding, an English textile-plant foreman, invented it in 1830. Quiet and non-polluting, reel mowers provide some exercise. They have trouble with tall grass, though. They usually cost less than $100.

Electric mowers are best suited for lawns up to about one-quarter of an acre. They are quiet and start with the flip of a switch. But the electric cord limits their range and they aren't as powerful as gasoline mowers. Look for a rear grass catcher and a device to let the cord slide across the handle when you change direction. Electric mowers cost about $120 to $300.

For about one-half acre (depending, of course, on terrain and your willingness to push), a push-type power mower is recommended. The typical basic mower has a 3½ horsepower four-stroke engine and cuts a 20- to 22-inch swath. Variations include a bigger engine (up to 5 horsepower), oversized rear wheels, electric starter and mulching capability. More expensive models have a blade-brake/clutch safety control, which stops the blade quickly but leaves the engine on. This style is also useful for trimming. Cost: $100 to $600.

Also for lawns of one-half acre, and certainly for lawns larger than that, the self-propelled mower is for people who'd rather get their exercise elsewhere. It has the same general design as push-types but the engine also drives the front or rear wheels. It takes some effort out of mowing large or hilly lawns. However, the drive mechanism increases the likelihood of repairs and the mower's weight can make it hard to maneuver in close quarters. They cost generally $200 to $600, but a blade brake/clutch (which you should look for), an electric start and other features can push the price to around $800.

For lawns of more than half an acre, consider the riding mower. The engine, typically 8 to 10 horsepower, is under or just behind the seat. The riding mower can hold a large grass-catcher and typically cuts a 30-inch swath. Most riding mowers have an electric start. Look for one with deadman safety control to stop the engine and blade if you dismount, and one that will stop the engine if you dismount while the mower's in gear. Cost: $1,000 to $2,000.

If your lawn is an acre or more, you might want a tractor. Lawn tractors, the smaller type, typically have a 12- to 14-horsepower engine; garden tractors, a 16- to 20-horsepower engine. The cutting width ranges from 38 to 50 inches. Tractors are not as well suited for steep hills or tight maneuvering as walk-behind mowers. Cost: About $1,000 to $3,500 for a lawn tractor, $2,000 to $5,000 for a garden tractor.

Death Row inmate, woman get married

DALLAS (AP) — A woman who married Texas Death Row inmate Kerry Max Cook says she believes strongly in his innocence and is confident that a review of his case by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals will lead to his freedom.

Cook's father, Ernest Doyle Cook of Jacksonville, Texas, served as the inmate's proxy in the marriage to Ami Joanne Ticer, 20, of Tyler on Wednesday. The two met last year through a third inmate and got their marriage license last week.

"I'm very happy about it. I love him so much," said Mrs. Cook Thursday of her new husband, who has proclaimed his innocence since his 1978 conviction for the mutilation and slaying of a Tyler secretary.

A 1988 investigation by The Dallas Morning News raised questions about Cook's guilt and about the thoroughness of the police investigation into the June 1977 murder of Linda Jo Edwards, 21.

The newspaper discovered that, among other things, at least two key prosecution witnesses changed or recanted their damaging testimony. The newspaper also reported that Tyler police fabricated testimony about a fingerprint on the outside of the victim's apartment that was the only piece of physical evidence linking Cook to the scene.

Tyler police and the office of Smith County District Attorney Jack Skeen repeatedly have declined to discuss their handling of the case, but they have not refuted the paper's findings or explained the lingering questions about the evidence.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals on June 13 granted Cook, 34, a rehearing in his case after twice upholding his conviction. The move is considered rare, and attorneys for the condemned man say they now believe they have enough votes on the court to win a new trial.

Texas prison inmates are allowed to marry by proxy, but prison spokesman Charles Brown said there are no figures kept on how frequently prisoners get married.

"I have no idea who the last one was on death row who got married," said Brown.

Assistant Smith County District Attorney Kevin Henry, who has handled part of the case, reacted to news of the wedding with incredulity.

Former resident pilots glider 600 miles

From Staff, AP Reports

Former Snyder resident Joann Shaw has piloted a Nimbus II glider 600 miles from Hobbs, N.M., to North Platte, Neb., a mark she said will be submitted for certification as a world record for a female glider pilot.

Mrs. Shaw and her husband, Charles, moved to Hobbs several years ago to be nearer the ideal gliding conditions of that area. They were also active glider pilots while in Snyder.

Mrs. Shaw says her record must now be certified by the Federation Aeronautique Internationale in Paris, a process that might take up to three months.

She completed the flight Monday when she landed at Lee Bird Field in North Platte. Her route from New Mexico took her over Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas before she crossed into New Mexico.

"I've wanted to do this for about eight years," she told a reporter for the Associated Press.

"I've never worked so hard in my life. The weather over Nebraska was lousy for gliding," noting high pressure over the state suppressed upward drafts of air, called thermals, needed to keep the glider aloft.

"I would have gone 700 miles if it wasn't for the high pressure," she said.

If certified, Mrs. Shaw said the flight will surpass the current distance record for a woman pilot — 594 miles — set by Karla Karel in Australia on Jan. 20, 1980.

Mrs. Shaw said she also will submit data on her 6½-hour flight for certification as a "distance to a goal" world record for a woman pilot.

In order to establish that mark, she said, she had to declare North Platte as her goal before departing New Mexico at about noon Monday.

She holds the previous distance-to-a-goal record of 528 miles set in 1983.

Mrs. Shaw said she had tried breaking the records 35 times previously in the past eight years.

Materials to be submitted include an instrument carried aboard the glider that proves she didn't land during the flight, Mrs. Shaw said. There also must be statements from witnesses to her landing in North Platte.

Her glider has a 67-ft. wingspan.

Although she declared Lee Bird Field, an airport, as her destination, she was hoping to glide about 25 miles north of North Platte to a private airstrip, which would have been 1,000 kilometers (620 miles).

However, she said the thermals over North Platte were not sufficient to take her to the private airstrip, so she landed at Lee Bird Field.

Her husband, Charles, followed her to Nebraska in a car. They returned to New Mexico and are now preparing for next week's U.S. small glider plane championships in Odessa.

Mrs. Shaw said her flight must be certified first by the Soaring Society of America, which will submit the information to the National Aeronautic Association in Washington, D.C. If that group certifies the flight, the world-record bid will be submitted to the FAI in Paris, Mrs. Shaw said.

Christian Science couple receives probation

BOSTON (AP) — A couple was sentenced to 10 years' probation Friday for allowing their son to die while treating him with Christian Science healing methods rather than taking him to a doctor.

David and Ginger Twitchell were ordered to take their surviving children for regular medical checkups as a part of their probationary sentence for manslaughter.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge Sandra Hamlin rejected a prosecution request that the couple be automatically jailed if they violate any term of the probationary sentence. Instead, if there is a violation, a hearing would be held and punishment would be decided upon then.

The Twitchells, both 34 and lifelong Christian Scientists, faced up to 20 years in prison. Hamlin had indicated Thursday, however, that she did not believe the couple should be behind bars for the 1986 death of their 2½-year-old son, Robyn.

The couple was found guilty of manslaughter Wednesday; their lawyer has said they would appeal.

Under terms of the probation, Hamlin said that American Medical Association standards should be followed for checkups of the Twitchells' three surviving sons and any children they might have in the future. If there was any sign of serious illness, they were to take their children to a doctor.

The judge said she would continue jurisdiction of the case and wanted monthly probation reports.

After a two-month trial, a jury found the Twitchells, former Boston residents now living in New York, guilty of involuntary manslaughter.

The key issue in their trial is one continually debated by legal scholars: Where should the government draw the line on freedom of religion?

Medical experts applauded the verdict, saying it would protect children. "No religion is going to be allowed to be a defense against abuse and neglect," said Dr. Michael Grodin, a pediatrician and medical ethicist at Boston University. "The bottom line is we have to have standards for protecting children."

But Laurence Tribe, a constitutional law expert at Harvard, said the decision reflects a "fundamental unfairness" because the Twitchells thought they were protected by a 1971 state law that exempted spiritual healing from child abuse statutes.

Special Prosecutor John Kiernan said the case was not an attack on religion, but sent the message that parents must protect their children.

Domestic terrorists are still baffling police

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Almost every week since mid-May, bombs blamed on leftists have rocked the Greek capital. But while terror groups have been wiped out elsewhere in Europe, Greece has failed to arrest a single suspect.

Most of the bombings in Greece are believed to be the work of a shadowy group called November 17 or of other groups inspired by them.

November 17 — which takes its name from the day in 1973 when the right-wing military junta crushed a student rebellion — first surfaced in December 1975 with the assassination of Athens CIA station chief Richard Welch.

The United States has called November 17 one of the deadliest terrorist groups in Europe. In the past 14 years, the group has assassinated 14 people, including three U.S. officials.

Despite promises to crack down on terrorism, successive Greek governments — both conservative and socialist — have failed to arrest a single homegrown terrorist.

Experts say November 17's success in evading arrest depends mainly on their own ruthless efficiency, small membership, and a police force that appears to have been unprepared to deal with urban terrorism.

Premier Constantine Mitsotakis, whose conservative New Democracy Party won a slender victory in April's election, has a personal reason to want to do better than his predecessors in stamping out terrorism. Last year, November 17 assassinated his son-in-law Pavlos Bakoyannis.

"If there is any danger to Greece it is from terrorism," the conservative politician warned Parliament in January.

Terrorist attacks here in the mid-1980s with Arab involvement led to claims that Greece was soft on terrorism. In the past two years, there have been no international terrorist incidents. But November 17 and similar domestic groups remain active, even though they have failed to create a broad climate of terror.

"Our problem is domestic terrorism, and that means November 17," a top state security official said in a recent interview.

"They are trying to create the impression that there is widespread terrorism and ... they encourage other groups to copy them," said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

November 17 has claimed responsibility for only two of seven recent bombings. The other attacks have been claimed by a previously unknown group calling itself Popular Rage. No one has been seriously injured in the attacks.

Various reasons are put forth for Greece's failure in combating terrorism.

Conservatives suggest that during the 1981-89 socialist administration the state security apparatus was indecisive.

"As soon as there is systematic work, the necessary political will, and cooperation with all other countries of the world (terrorism) will be confronted," Mitsotakis' daughter, Dora Bakoyannis, said in an interview.

She was elected to her slain husband's seat in Parliament and is one of the premier's closest aides.

The latest state budget has increased funding by 27 percent for the Public Order Ministry. More money and material have been promised to the anti-terrorist units, and the government has pledged to work with foreign intelligence agencies.

The conservatives want to wipe out any impression left from the eight-year socialist administration of Andreas Papandreou that Greece is lax in fighting terrorism.

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing in response to "Flat in Flatbush," who asked: "Do men feel deceived if a woman wears a padded bra — giving the impression that she's a 34B when she's only a 32A?"

Abby, who cares? I wore a 34B padded bra so my clothes would fit naturally on my skinny 5-foot-9 frame — "deceiving men" never entered my mind.

Do men get more sexual excitement and fulfillment from full-breasted women? I can't speak for all men, but I know one who couldn't care less if I look like Twiggy or Dolly Parton. He loves me, not my breasts.

How do men feel about augmented breasts? I can answer only for mine, and honey, he loved me before I had breast augmentation surgery, and he loves me now — no more, no less. More important, I feel better about myself — and he likes that a lot!

So, tell "Flat in Flatbush" to go for the augmentation — but only if she's doing it for herself and no one else.

Boy, I'm glad to get that (weight) on my chest!

DEAR ABBY: Regarding "Flat in Flatbush": One certainly cannot generalize about how "all men" feel about breasts. However, from locker-room talk, I believe that most men are excited by large breasts. (I am!) However, I am also crazy about my small-breasted wife.

As for padded bras: If I went with a girl who appeared to be full-breasted and later discovered that she was wearing a padded bra, I'd be disappointed — but not deceived or upset. And if my wife were to have her breasts enlarged — something I would never presume to ask her to do — I would silently shout "Hooray!"

If a woman decides to have her breasts enlarged, she should not blame the guys who never gave her much attention when she was flat-chested but are now suddenly flocking to her. Men are that way.

So, if bigger breasts make a woman feel prettier, sexier and more self-confident, I say she should go for it, as long as she keeps her head straight and realizes that large breasts, small breasts or no breasts, there's a lot more to a woman than a pair of breasts.

DEAR ABBY: Concerning "Flat in Flatbush" and the padded bra question: I am one man who appreciates looking at a well-endowed woman, but her measurements have nothing to do with her ability to satisfy a man.

Women do not wear padded bras to "fool" men; they wear them so they will look better in their clothes.

I am a small-built man who would love to be built bigger. When I take off my suit jacket, my shoulders go with it. So what? All men's suits have padding in the shoulders. Do women feel cheated or deceived when they discover their Adonis has padded shoulders? I doubt it.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I suffer from asthma and allergies, so when we read this in The Arizona Republic, we could certainly relate to it. We think it deserves a bigger audience, so we're sending it to you. If you agree, please put it in your column.

A.A. IN PEARCE, ARIZ.

DEAR A.A.: The writer, Elin Jeffords, should have no objection to a national audience. I agree, it's well worth the space, and here it is:

"The four of us were seated on the patio of a popular midtown restaurant enjoying coffee and dessert. It was cool and the air was pleasantly fresh.

"Peripherally, I noticed the hostess seating a couple at the table next to us, which was a comfortable distance away.

"Suddenly, it struck us: a blast of one of those heavy-duty perfumes with a name like 'Cyanide' or 'Psychosis.'

"'My gosh,' one of my companions exclaimed. 'What is that?'

"It was the woman at the next table. Every time she shifted position, billows of strong, nauseatingly sweet fragrance wafted toward us. In minutes, we were saturated. It was all we could smell or taste. The luscious desserts were left partly eaten, the coffee half drunk, as we crowded our chairs as far as possible away from the assault while waiting for our check.

"'And they don't allow pipe smoking?' whispered our companion the Pipe Smoker, in amazement, as we headed for the exit.

"The stench clung to our clothes and filled our heads long after we departed. I could only conclude that her companion must have been nose-dead to put up with it."

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday I was told that one of my fellow employees had been killed in an auto accident. Because I handle employee records in my job, after I recovered from the initial shock, I wondered, were her affairs in order?

I know you have addressed this issue before, but I hope you can find the space to ask your readers one more time to plan for the inevitable — death. Ask yourselves: Who will get my belongings — bank accounts, life insurance, retirement fund, family heirlooms, auto and home? Who will be the guardian of my minor children? Where will the money come from to bury me?

I feel that one of the greatest kindnesses that one can do for one's survivors is to spare them the pain of legal and financial nightmares that so often follow a loved one's death.

CALIFORNIA READER

DEAR READER: Although nobody gets out of this world alive, most people tend to postpone preparing for it.

If you are one of those persons, as a favor to those you love, tackle this job at the earliest possible moment.

SDN Letters to the Editor

November through April to plan and organize our 1990 project;

—those who have their Saturday to lend a helping hand to one or more of their Snyder neighbors.

I hope each of you who took part in our 1990 Snyder Neighbors Sharing project feel as good about what was accomplished as I do. The 27 homes repaired by SNS volunteers this year, along with the 16 homes repaired during 1988 and 1989, stand as shining examples of the good the citizens of Snyder can do when we all pull together.

Thanks again to each of you for all you did. We appreciate you!

Yours truly,

To the editor:

As I look at the Fourth of July, what a wonderful heritage, but really what a sacrifice our forefathers made. They were so unselfish, these early pioneers, and the majority were Christians. These men provided a form of government so all men could have freedom to believe as they wished, and would not be in servitude to noone else. They were servants only to God. This is clearly seen by the works they left. Our people seem to be coming to the point of uncaring, and selfish even to trying to destroy Christianity, which gave them their freedom.

We need to look at how our governing bodies, how they were designed to be held by our peers, and each branch of government was designed to check and balance the other. Let us look at our legislature since it holds more members, and should come closer to representing the will of the people. Is this true? As our peers come into power they seem to forget us. They seem to become selfish. Let us look at the House of Representatives. They are already paid (according to the information available to me) a salary in top one percent of all wage earners. They voted themselves a 37 percent pay raise. Their salary in 1982 was $60,662, in 1991 it will be $124,424. Our peers also have a remarkable retirement income. The one they provide for us on Social Security seems to be inadequate for their retirement needs. It appears that as they get power they as a group forget their lowly beginnings. We have been put in debt and give our money away to usury. Interest paid on a debt does not produce anything, and it tends to bring us into servitude. We the low to middle income people work for the government between four and five months before we begin to provide for our families. This seems unreasonable. We ran away from taxation without representation. Are we truly living in a time of taxation with representation?

Considering our great heritage the Senate, House, Supreme Court, President, and we the people, should strive to remember what it is to live in servitude, and how we should be more interested in freedom here, than any other place. Our forefathers fought for our liberty. The great words of Patrick Henry were "Give me liberty or give me death."

I want to give a salute of praise for all those who brought into existence our flag, and all of those who have fought and died to preserve this flag and this nation. True praise should be extended to all who have faithfully fulfilled their work in government. This would be the easiest position to go stale.

Most of all we extend our best thoughts to our young people who honor our flag, and with thoughtful consideration honor each member of our GREAT NATION.

May GOD bless this nation and people.

Yours truly,
Surry H. Gillum
