White Deer rodeo slated

WHITE DEER — With a burst of flame from a mesquite barbecue pit, residents here are getting ready for the annual White Deer Rodeo, Thursday through Saturday at the rodeo grounds.

The amateur rodeo will begin at 8 p.m. nightly. Festivities begin at 5 p.m. Thursday with a pit barbecue, featuring the kettle-brewed "Cowboy Coffee." For the next two days, nearly 2,500 pounds of beef, wrapped in muslin, will cook slowly in a pit while residents prepare nearly 200 pounds of beans and untold gallons of iced tea.

Members of the Amarillo Skydiving Club will perform at the Rodeo Grounds at 7 p.m.

A dance, featuring the Westwind band of Amarillo, will follow each rodeo performance at a new outdoor band shell and dance floor south of the arena.

Saturday's festivities will feature a parade through downtown at 4 p.m. Featured in the parade will be the 1985 Riding Club Queen, Staci Thompson, a junior at White Deer High School, as well as community floats and riding clubs.

Homemade ice cream will be sold by Psi Sigma Beta Sorority.

Israel frees 100 Moslems

ATLIT, Israel (AP) — A group of 100 Lebanese prisoners freed from an Israeli military jail today crossed the border into Lebanon to return to their homes, U.N. officials said.

The prisoners, mostly Shiite Moslems, were among hundreds whose release had been demanded by Shiite extremists who hijacked a TWA plane last month, killed a U.S. Navy man and held 39 Americans hostage for 17 days.

Traveling in three Israeli buses, contacted at Naqoura, headquarters of the U.N. peacekeeping force in South Lebanon. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

Israel radio reported that the Red Cross, as was the case in previous prisoner releases, was overseeing the operation as the freed men boarded buses to carry them back to their towns and villages.

Israeli military sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said most of those freed today were members of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God group, which is engaged in an internal power struggle with the mainstream Shiite militia Amal headed by Nabih Berri.

Davar, an Israeli newspaper, reported that the estimated 330 inmates remaining at the prison would be released in three groups at two-week intervals. Israeli sources said the next group probably would be freed in about two weeks.

Prisoners, dressed in blue-and-white track suits, boarded three buses at the prison 50 miles north of Tel Aviv on the Mediterranean coast.

They were among 1,200 Lebanese and Palestinians who had been transferred to Israel from the Ansar prison camp in southern Lebanon in April.

Arab and Western governments, including the United States, as well as the International Red Cross, protested the move, claiming it violated the Geneva Conventions against transferring prisoners of war across international borders.

Israel maintained that the detainees were not prisoners of war, saying that Israel and Lebanon were not in a declared state of war when the prisoners were taken. Most were picked up in raids carried out by the Israeli army in southern Lebanon before most of Israel's occupation force was withdrawn in June.

The prisoners were accused of participating in acts against the Israeli forces or their allies during the 1982-85 occupation, but none have been formally tried or convicted.

Radical Shiites who hijacked a Trans World Airways jetliner on its way from Athens to Rome last month demanded release of the Atlit prisoners. The hijackers killed a U.S. Navy diver and held 39 passengers hostage for 17 days.

Israel refused to give in to the hijackers demands, saying the release of the Atlit prisoners was part of an ongoing process linked to security in southern Lebanon.

On July 3, three days after the TWA hijack ended, Israel released 300 of the prisoners. Thirty-one were let go during the hijacking.

Israel has freed 807 of the prisoners since they were moved to Israel.

Four prisoners interviewed by The Associated Press at the prison complained Tuesday about strict military discipline, but said they had not suffered any systematic abuse and had received adequate food, shelter and medical care.

Seven-state raid nets 120 drug busts

CHICAGO (AP) — Raids by law officers in seven states, Puerto Rico and Mexico led to the arrest of 120 people and confiscation of 47 properties in a crackdown on a "Mexican connection" authorities say has pumped heroin into the United States for two decades.

More than 400 state and federal agents took part in the raids Tuesday in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Texas, Colorado, Florida, California, Puerto Rico and Mexico, authorities said.

One of those arrested was Jesus

Herrera-Diaz, described as "a chieftain of the Herrera organization in Chicago," which authorities say is part of a ring involving thousands of people. Many of those arrested in Indiana were members of the Zambrana family, which is allied with the Herreras, authorities said.

Drug Enforcement Administration officials believe the Herreras have been operating since the early 1960s, growing opium in the Sierra Madre Occidental around Durango, Mexico, refining it and shipping heroin north.

"We're not dealing with small quantities," said DEA Agent Phillip E. Jordan in Dallas. "We're dealing with multi-kilo distributions. We're dealing with the godfathers of organized crime in Mexico who use the Juarez-El Paso area to smuggle their narcotics into the United States."

"This shows the importance El Paso plays in the Mexican connection."

Eight people were arrested in El Paso, Texas, which sits across the Rio Grande from Juarez, Mexico.

The FBI would say only that millions of dollars' worth of marijuana, heroin and cocaine were seized in the raids, which netted more than 120 of 134 people named in recent federal indictments. Forty-seven pieces of residential and commercial property in the Chicago area were seized, authorities said.

The names of some of those indicted or arrested were withheld for security reasons.

Reader's Digest features former Pampan

A former Pampa resident's heroic efforts to assist a young boy struck by lightning is featured in an article in the current issue of Reader's Digest.

Entitled "Struck by Lightning!," the article describes the efforts of Avril Rush of Arlington in helping to resuscitate an 11-year-old boy struck by lightning at a soccer league game in Arlington.

Rush, the daughter of Albert and Mary Doucette, 2424 Mary Ellen, was attending the game of one of her two daughters on April 7, 1984, when a rainstorm developed over the field.

As she prepared to leave, dashing for her car, she crossed the back of the field where a boy's soccer game was being played.

Nicky Schneider was in midfield, attempting to regain the ball for his team, when a bolt of lightning descended from the sky and struck the youth. Rush was near enough to be hit by an invisible wall of air that knocked her, her daughter and a young friend backward onto the mud and grass.

A woman ran over to the boy and began efforts to revive the boy. Rush joined the woman, and the two of them alternated in administering cardiopulmonary resuscitation procedures until firefighters and paramedics arrived on the scene.

The youth, in a coma but still showing signs of life, was taken to a hospital, where he received treatment toward his recovery. After a year of treatment and therapy, the boy is now back in training for soccer.

The boy's mother thanked Rush for her efforts while both were at the hospital awaiting news from the emergency room. Authorities have credited the heroic efforts of Rush and Linda Casagrande in saving the boy's life.

Rush, a 1965 graduate of Pampa High School, was two months away from completion of her medical school training at the time of the incident. Since graduation from Southwestern Institute at Dallas, she has been in a residency program.

The article on the incident is the magazine's "Drama in Real Life" feature in the August issue

Parks board sets meeting

The Parks and Recreation Advisory Board will meet at 4:30 p.m. Thursday in the City Commission Room at City Hall to discuss Northcrest Park development and renovations at Marcus Sanders Pool.

The board has recommended that the city designate the land near the water tower in the Northcrest Addition as a park and consider plans for development as suggested by residents in the area.

The board also has recommended the city undertake renovation and repairs at Marcus Sanders Pool after the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department turned down a grant application for a new pool and other facilities in the Prairie Village Park.

In other matters, the board will consider accessibility of Central Park to the handicapped and formation of a city volleyball league.

Other discussion items include alternative funding programs for parks projects and improvements at Evergreen Park.

The board will hear reports from Nathan Hopson, director of Community Services; City Manager Bob Hart, and Charlie Smith, technician with the city's Engineering Department.

Before the business items are considered, board members will tour several city parks from 4:30 to approximately 5:15 p.m.

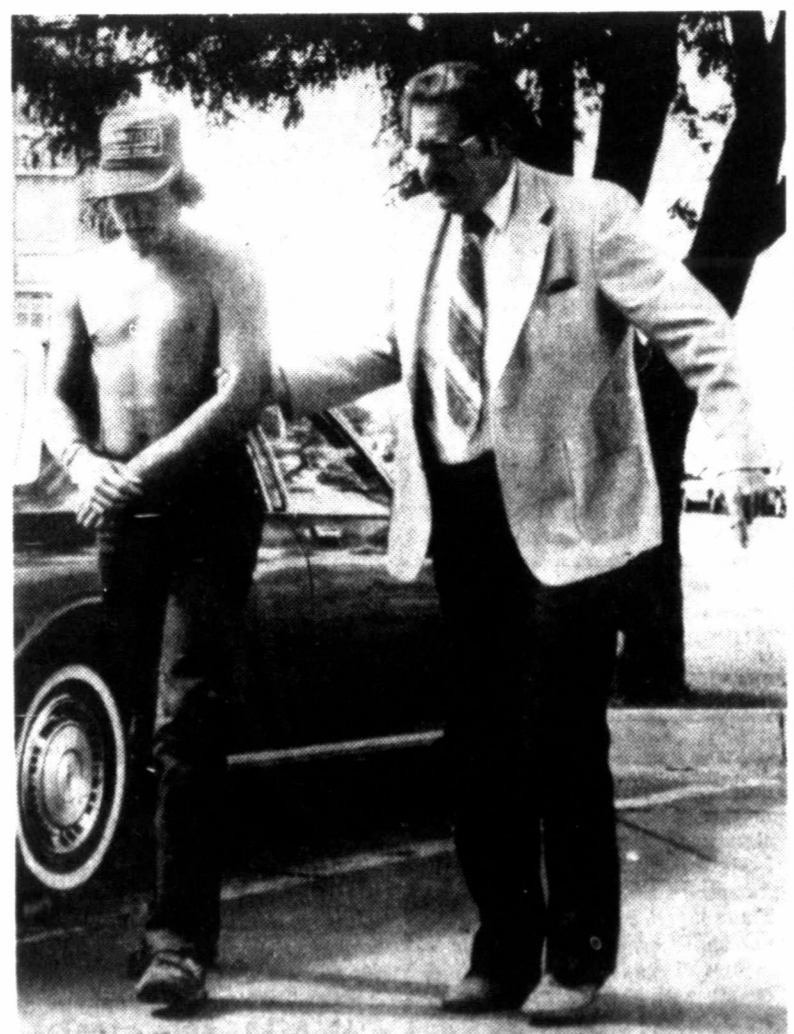

Forgery charged

WHITE DEER — A 19-year-old Phillips man only wanted a soda pop from the Allsup's convenience store here, but Pampa police wanted him on a warrant for allegedly forging $1,124 in checks at a Pampa Allsup's store.

Larry Don Lorenz, 19, was arrested at about 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in White Deer by Pampa police Sgt. Ken Neal, who took him before Carson County Justice of the Peace A.C. Davis. Suspects have the right to have bond set in the county they are arrested in. Lorenz was transferred to Pampa to appear before Gray county J.P. David Potter, who set bond at $5,000.

According to the Pampa Police department, the checks belonged to Steve and Lavonda Fleetwood of Skellytown and were apparently taken from their mailbox. A supervisor at the Allsup's store at Starkweather and Foster reported that in the early morning hours of July 20, three checks — totalling $1,124.98 — were written in exchange for money orders.

After the checks were confirmed as being stolen, a broadcast of the suspect's vehicle, a Chevrolet four-wheel drive pick-up truck, was issued to law enforcement agencies.

Lorenz escorted to arraignment by Sgt. Ken Neal.

Unexpected Kennedy help can't salvage line-item veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even the unexpected help of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy left President Reagan short of the votes needed to break a Senate filibuster on a bill giving the White House line-item veto power.

Kennedy, D-Mass., broke with his liberal allies Tuesday and endorsed a measure that would give Reagan the authority to veto individual portions of spending bills.

"The budget process is in shambles, the deficit is out of control, and Congress is part of the problem," Kennedy said. "Congress has too much control over the purse, and the president has too little."

For the past week, Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., has been leading a group of mostly liberal senators blocking action on the line-item veto bill, which they call a threat to the Constitution. On Tuesday, the filibuster survived a second vote to cut it short, despite Kennedy's support and Reagan's first lobbying since his cancer surgery 10 days earlier.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole said he would try today for a third time to break the filibuster, but he doubted he'd get the 60 votes needed. Tuesday's motion failed by three votes, 57-41. One Republican and one Democrat did not vote.

Another loss could force Dole to remove the bill from consideration to clear the way for other pending legislation. The Republican-controlled Senate has less than two weeks before its August recess.

Reagan has long called for the power to kill individual spending items, saying he would make cuts Congress has been unable to accomplish. He telephoned wavering senators on Sunday and Monday to lobby them.

But Kennedy's support is newly developed.

"It's a dramatic step in the sense that he's not on this issue with most of his liberal allies in the Senate," noted a Kennedy aide, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

Kennedy's position was the first major indication on the Senate floor that the possible 1988 presidential candidate was moving toward the center of the political spectrum, a shift that was foreshadowed in a speech last March in New York.

In that address, Kennedy said many programs supported in the past by Democrats — including public housing and public service jobs programs — were failures.

Kennedy in the past has opposed the line-item veto, including a proposed constitutional amendment. But his aide said Tuesday the senator, concerned about $200 billion-a-year deficits, decided to support the more limited measure proposed by Sen. Mack Mattingly, R-Ga., and co-sponsored by 46 senators.

Under the Constitution, a president must either accept or reject entire bills and cannot veto parts of them.

No quorum for commission meeting

The Pampa city commission has rescheduled its regular meeting for 8:30 a.m. after failing to get a quorum together Tuesday night.

Mayor Sherman Cowan and Commissioner Clyde Carruth showed up for the meeting, joined by a number of city staff members. But Commissioners Bob Curry, Joe Reed and David McDaniel all were unable to attend.

Since the commission cannot conduct any business without a quorum, the mayor rescheduled the meeting for Tuesday, with the commissioners' work session following the business sessions.

WATCHFUL EYES—Riot police keep watch over part of a crowd of over 20,000 who attended the funeral of 15 blacks in Kwa-Thema township in South Africa Tuesday. The 15 were killed in recent protest riots. (AP Laserphoto)

Another 212 detainees now bring total being held to 653

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police said today they had detained 212 people in the previous 24 hours, increasing to 653 the total rounded up in the three days since a state of emergency was declared.

The emergency measures, the first imposed on South Africa in the past 25 years, had led to "a decrease in the number of incidents in which serious injuries or death have resulted, the police claimed in a statement.

The statement said damage to property "has shown a marked decrease."

Police said two more blacks were killed Tuesday in eastern Cape province, bringing the death toll to at least 10 since Sunday. Police opened fire when a crowd of about 150 stoned a patrol — one of five incidents reported in the area.

Also Tuesday, Bishop Desmond Tutu pleaded with fellow blacks to halt the killings of other blacks they view as tools of white-minority rule. Police said they also have made about 70 arrests not related to the state of emergency in riot incidents.

Nearly 500 blacks have died in 11 months of rioting against apartheid, South Africa's legal form of racial segregation in which 5 million whites dominate 22 million voteless blacks.

President P.W. Botha imposed the emergency in 36 riot-torn cities and towns, mainly around Johannesburg and in the eastern Cape Province, to try to end the unrest. It is the first state of emergency declared since violence swept South Africa in 1960 after 69 blacks were killed and nearly 200 wounded in riots at Sharpeville.

Col. Jaap Venter of police headquarters in Pretoria said the number of detentions under the state of emergency increased from 441 at 8 a.m. local time Tuesday to 653 24 hours later.

Tutu, the Anglican bishop who won the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, told a crowd of 20,000 who gathered in Kwa-Thema on Tuesday for the funeral of 15 blacks killed in protests.

He referred to a mob's brutal killing of a suspected woman informer at a funeral on Saturday, which was televised in South Africa and abroad. She was stoned and beaten and, still writhing, set on fire.

"If that happens again, I'm going to collect my family and leave this country that I love. Millions of people worldwide support our struggle, but when they saw that on TV, many said, 'Uh, uh, if these people can do things like that, they are not ready for freedom,'" he said.

Most have been shot by police, but increasingly blacks have attacked and slain other blacks they regard as collaborators with the government.

Government won't charge Presser over alleged union payroll scam

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department, after a lengthy investigation of an alleged phony payroll scheme, has decided not to seek an indictment against Teamsters President Jackie Presser, government sources say.

Presser's name has been dropped from the proceedings of a grand jury that has been sitting in Cleveland, the sources said late Tuesday.

The grand jury had been investigating allegations that Presser, who ascended to the helm of the Teamsters in early 1983, had engaged in a "ghost payroll" scheme in his role as secretary-treasurer of Teamsters Local 507 in Cleveland. Presser became Teamster leader when former union president Roy Lee Williams was forced to resign because of a bribery-conspiracy conviction.

Earlier this year, Justice Department field investigators recommended to top officials in Washington that Presser be indicted in connection with the alleged scheme in which people were paid for work they did not perform.

Terry Eastland, spokesman for Attorney General Edwin Meese III, said late Tuesday: "We just don't have anything to say right now" about the Presser investigation.

Meese, who became attorney general in late February, had close ties to Presser during Meese's more than four years as a White House counsel to President Reagan. Presser also threw the support of his union behind President Reagan's election campaign.

Robert Reading Jr., a Cleveland real estate sales manager who headed the grand jury, would not discuss the matter in a telephone interview from his home late Tuesday.

Response will be 'proportionate'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration today issued yet another warning to terrorists and governments that support them, saying its response "will be proportionate to the losses incurred" when Americans are attacked as they were recently in El Salvador.

Responding to a New York Times report that the administration considered attacking a Nicaraguan training base in retaliation for the murder of six Americans in El Salvador last month, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said he would not comment specifically on the story, which was similar to others published earlier elsewhere.

But "the United States will not tolerate terrorist actions against our citizens," the spokesman said. "We will be prepared to take steps."

"We have outlined in firm tones our policy on attacking terrorist centers or those responsible for terrorist attacks," Speakes told reporters at a morning briefing. "That policy remains. The governments responsible understand that. We will take appropriate action."

"The level of our response," the spokesman added, "will be proportionate to the losses incurred. Those that perpetrate such incidents, or governments that support state-sponsored terrorism, are on notice."

Asked if his use of the term "proportionate response" indicates the United States would avenge "an eye for an eye, a life for a life," Speakes said, "We'll make those judgments at the time."

Asked when the United States might act, he replied, "Wait and see."

The administration has been warning of its intention to retaliate against terrorism since President Reagan took office in January 1981.

when he pledged "swift and effective retribution" against those who violate international standards of behavior.

State insurance board considers rate hike

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Insurance is considering recommendations from both its staff and from industry experts that Texas' rates for workers compensation insurance should increase.

During a long hearing Tuesday the three-member board was urged to allow increased premiums to cover increased operating costs, unexpected insurance losses and hot competition within the state.

The board will make its decision later. The state board staff called for a 27.5 percent hike, which would raise premiums paid by Texas employers by about $500 million based on the $1.8 billion insurance sold in 1984.

Industry spokesman said the rate increase should be 40.8 percent, which would increase premiums by $730 million.

"We are just coming out of the most difficult period in the history of the insurance industry," Edwin Budd, chairman of the Travelers Corp., told the board. "During this period, we did suffer painful losses in Texas. In the last three years, we had an operating loss of well over $48 million in our casualty-property business. In 1984, we lost more than our entire payroll. Recently, we have had to put severe restrictions on both new and renewal (workers compensation) business."

Charles Porter, chief actuary for the board, said he considered the staff-recommended 27.5 percent raise "fair and reasonable" and adequate for to cover business risks taken by firms in Texas.

Donald Frahm, president of Hartford Fire Insurance Co., said his firm is represented by more than 600 Texas independent insurance agents. "We have, however, been viewing with increasing concern the deterioration in our Texas underwriting results, both for workers compensation and other lines. During the period from 1980 through 1984, our workers compensation loss ratio has risen from 68 percent to 95.9 percent," Frahm said.

"We have the largest share of the (workers compensation) market in Texas," said Dan Stevens, Dallas, chairman of the Texas Employers Insurance Association "I don't know her to brag or cry."

Bob Davis, Dallas attorney representing the Texas Compensation Consumers Association, questioned all witnesses closely as to whether much of the increased rates was not caused by the intense competition in the state.

Porter said 2 percent of the increase recommended by the staff was caused by a change in state law, effective Sept. 1, that would increase minimum weekly benefits from $35 to $37 a week. Maximum benefits would increase from $203 to $217 a week.

However, Porter said, the remaining 25.2 percent was caused by increased operating costs and losses paid by insurance firms on injuries and deaths reported for employees.

The staff recommendation would allow firms 19.7 percent of their premium income with 80.3 percent reserved to pay expected losses.

However, the staff recommended that 7.2 percent of the cost of expenses come from investment income, not from premiums.

Former area band director now leader of circus band

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — A few years ago, Jim and Jeanne Ann Phillips were teaching music in the Texas Panhandle. Now Gibson is conductor of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus traveling band, and Mrs. Gibson sits in front of him, playing the clarinet in the 15-member ensemble.

Gibson was band director for the Phillips Independent School District from 1980-82. Mrs. Gibson, a native of Shamrock, taught music at Sanford-Fritch elementary school and was a librarian at a Berger elementary school. This summer they were back in Texas with the circus.

Gibson jokingly admits to running away to join the circus some years ago.

He was not a freckle-faced boy in rolled-up jeans, but a student at the University of Texas at Austin. A member of the Longhorn Marching Band, the UT jazz ensemble and symphonic band, Gibson left school in 1972 to "go on the road as a professional musician." He joined the Circus Vargas as the lead trumpet player, and for the next seven years, traveled the country playing trumpet with various circuses. Five of those years he served as conductor.

He returned to the University of Texas in 1979 and received his bachelor of music in education degree in 1980.

Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Baily Circus officials approached Gibson to become music conductor in 1982 — a move that "shocked" the Phillips band director.

"I never expected it," Gibson said. "Jeanne Ann and I used to laugh that Ringling was the only circus we would ever join."

Working with the circus is not all cotton candy, however. Schedules are fast-paced and time often runs short.

"We carry five full-time musicians with us, and I hire 10 more local musicians in each city," Gibson explained. "We usually have about one hour rehearsal time for an almost three-hour show, so we rehearse some and talk the rest of it through."

Circus audiences may not be fully aware that a 200-song musical score — played by the band — accompanies the three-hour, three-ring circus.

"The music sets the atmosphere and mood of the circus," Gibson pointed out. "This becomes really evident if you ever watch an act practicing without music and then see the difference in it."

Circus musicians must play the spectrum of the scale — circus marches, gallops, show tunes, rock and swing.

"The circus band goes continuously, and physically we work hard," Gibson said. "In a symphony, the trumpet player occasionally gets a rest, but not with the circus. I try to stress to the musicians not to spill their guts all the time because it's non-stop."

The 15-member ensemble consists of clarinets, saxophones, trumpets, trombones, tuba, drums and synthesizer.

"There are no silences during the show, even drum roll accompanies the highwire acts," the conductor said. "Many times we will watch the animal trainer as he will set the pace of the music for his act. If he works faster, so do we. We have had to follow a horse that was prancing to make it look like it was in time."

Gibson tells the story about a circus which used records for accompaniment. "I don't know if it's true or not, but I heard during the elephant act, the record started skipping and the elephant wouldn't stop standing and sitting."

Perpetual motion is synonymous with circus life, however.

While 90 percent of the circus people travel by train, Gibson and his wife follow in a fifth-wheel trailer as do about a dozen others in motorhomes and trailers. The Ringling organization includes 135 performers, 100 workers, 50 concession members and 50 staff people. Mrs. Gibson tutors some of the performers' children in their correspondence school work.

"We logged 25,000 miles last year," said Gibson. They spend about a month in rehearsals at Ringling's winter home in Venice, Fla.

"We still call Shamrock home, though, and get back here during every break on the show," the conductor said. Mrs. Gibson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Williams, live in Shamrock.

As for the future, the Gibsons plan to stay with the circus.

"Why would I leave this? I'd have to go back to teaching," he said with mock horror on his voice. "No, this is the life for us."

Teachers will get test aid

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' second-largest teacher group opposes the mandatory competency test for teachers but will not go to court to fight it, says the president of the Association of Texas Professional Educators.

Instead, ATPE will help its 42,000 members prepare for both the material covered in the test and the stress the test can cause, Sue McGarvey of Hallsville said Tuesday.

"No teacher in his or her right mind wants to take that test, but it is here. Our association will obey the law," said Mrs. McGarvey.

The Texas State Teachers Association, the state's largest teacher group, has threatened to go to court to block the test, scheduled for next March. Teachers have several months during which to pass the exam.

Teachers who fail cannot remain in the classroom.

"The test is going to show us there are good teachers in the state of Texas. We need to stop talking about going to court, take the tests and get it behind us," said Sue McGarvey, a high school teacher in East Texas.

"We will support the competency test although we do not believe that it is a true evaluation of a teacher's teaching ability. Students must abide by no-pass, no-play and the exit-level test. How can we give tests to our students when we ourselves refuse to take them?" said Mrs. McGarvey.

DOE plan to store nuclear waste criticized in Amarillo

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Critics and supporters of the U.S. Department of Energy's proposal to store nuclear waste in the Panhandle aired their differences at a public briefing where some said the plan could hurt farmland and water sources.

A crowd gathered at the Amarillo Civic Center on Tuesday to talk about the department's proposal to locate the nation's first high-level nuclear waste repository in Deaf Smith County 30 miles west of Amarillo. Two other sites are being considered.

Angela Lamb, district manager of the Texas Department of Agriculture, said the DOE has failed to protect its own laboratory workers from radiation hazards.

"DOE's record for health and safety is about as clear as the Amarillo sky in a heavy dust storm," Mrs. Lamb said.

Other people at the briefing expressed a lack of confidence in the energy department's ability to construct a safe high-level nuclear waste repository in Deaf Smith County, the Amarillo Daily News reported.

Mrs. Lamb said she doubted that the DOE underground waste dump could be constructed without damage to the Ogallala Aquifer and Panhandle farmland.

Deaf Smith County is one of the state's top agriculture producing counties.

Don Hancock, a member of the Southwest Research and Information Center in Albuquerque, N.M., said he does not believe a permanent seal can be constructed in the shaft to insure that the Ogallala and Santa Rosa aquifers would not be polluted and that the water from them would not eventually flood the mine shaft.

The DOE's proposal to freeze both aquifers to drill through them is not proven technology, said Wayne Wyatt, manager of High Plains Underground Water Conservation District in Lubbock.

"They don't know what is going to happen, we don't even know what's going to happen and it could get us all in trouble," Wyatt said.

The DOE is finalizing drafts of its environmental assessments of the area and records of public comment.

The records will be presented in December to President Reagan, who will have to decide whether to authorize further study of proposed sites in Deaf Smith County, Nevada and Washington, said Linda McClain, project manager for the DOE.

Ms. McClain said the study project would bring a number of economic benefits to the Panhandle.

Witness: Pennzoil learned of the Texaco-Getty merger from release

HOUSTON (AP) — A former Pennzoil Co. official said his company found out about the Texaco Inc.-Getty Oil merger through a press release issued in January 1984, days after Pennzoil and Getty had met to discuss a merger of their own.

Baine P. Kerr, retired president of Houston-based Pennzoil, testified in a $15 billion lawsuit trial Tuesday that Pennzoil officials were never informed that other parties were interested or considering buying Getty.

Had they known, Pennzoil would have bid higher, he said.

"In order to keep the deal, we would have been willing to do that," Kerr said about offering Getty more for their stock. "It would have been within our means financially to do that."

Pennzoil claims that Texaco enticed Getty into breaching an earlier agreement Getty had made to merge with Pennzoil. Pennzoil is not asking that the $10.1 billion Texaco-Getty merger be dissolved, but it wants Texaco to pay $7.5 billion in actual damages and $7.5

billion in punitive damages for its action.

The company bases its damage claim on the amount of Getty's oil and gas reserves and Pennzoil's average cost of finding oil and gas. Pennzoil said it would have to spend $7.5 billion to find the 1 billion equivalent barrels of oil and gas that it would have gained in the Getty merger.

Texaco denies the charge, saying that Pennzoil and Getty never had a valid definitive agreement for their proposed merger.

In response to a question from Texaco attorney Richard Miller, Kerr said that Pennzoil Chairman J. Hugh Liedtke informed the Getty Oil directors, the J. Paul Getty Museum and Gordon Getty, the trustee for the Sarah C. Getty Trust, that Pennzoil expected them to live up to the terms of their earlier agreement with the company.

Beyond that, Pennzoil took no other immediate action because it would have been meaningless, Kerr said.

"It was a done deal at this point," he said. "It was done without our knowledge."

Our Tax Deferred Annuities* now pay 10 1/4 %

Everybody knows that there are many investment opportunities around today that pay a handsome rate of interest. The trouble is, in many cases that interest is currently taxable. You can lose up to over half of it to the tax man. So your retirement savings may grow very slowly.

Now, there's a better answer. It's our tax deferred premium annuities. Not only is the rate competitive, but the interest is free from current federal income tax. That means your savings can grow up to twice as fast as a mutual fund, time deposit, or other taxable plans.

Taxes on the income must be paid later, of course. But usually not until retirement, when your income tax bracket will probably be lower. And after your savings kitty has grown.

Our annuities are also ideal for IRA and Keogh plans—because they also protect against disability and provide a retirement income you cannot outlive. Most other plans don't.

And whether it's IRA, Keogh, or other retirement fund, you get our expert knowledge of annuities and our unbeatable service.

These annuities are available through most New York Life Agents. Go ahead, ask. They'll help you to a richer retirement.

Craftmanship is needed

Glancing through a news release on health care in India, I was particularly impressed with a paragraph about the "Jaipur foot," an exceptionally flexible artificial limb developed after 10 years of research at an Indian hospital artificial limb center.

A man demonstrates the limb by sitting cross-legged, leaping up, climbing a tree and jumping 10 feet to a soft landing, smiling proudly all the while. And he should be proud, because this man, more amputees like him, and polio victims are the ones who craft the Jaipur foot and other such limbs using simple tools and supplies.

What I saw in these few paragraphs was not so much about the amazing artificial limb, but about the pride and care that these Indians take in their work. I don't know for certain, but I seriously doubt they are paid exceptionally well for their labor. Yet, possibly because they know firsthand how important their work is to other amputees and polio victims, they do their jobs to the best of their ability—producing a first rate article.

Everytime I see an American made - article sloppily constructed, I feel a pang of regret. There was a time once when we Americans took special pride in what we do. Now with the onset of mass production, quantity has increased dramatically, and quality has decreased just as rapidly.

We have more things to throw away than we know what to do with, and few things that are worth keeping long enough to pass to our heirs.

Take a look at the garbage can. I don't know about you, but this Laramore family needs to take the trash out practically every day. From the condition of the container behind our house, our neighbors have a lot to throw away, too. And I hate to even estimate how many tons of garbage goes to the city dump every day.

I think manufacturers today deliberately make their items to last only a certain length of time (usually the time limit of the warranty), and then be thrown away, so the consumer will buy more. Why spend more money to make an item last longer, when you can make it more cheaply, have it wear out, and the consumer buy more of the product? Elementary, huh?

And it's not just American manufacturers that are showing this type of mentality. I've worked enough places to know that there's a whole lot of people who just "get through the day" at their place of employment, putting forth just enough effort to get by, to get that paycheck.

It's not often that I see people who really take pride in what they do.

As I've said before, any job has dignity. Any job is worth doing to the best of our ability. We ought to put our name on everything we do, like the craftsmen of the past. If we did, it might be more important to us just what we produce, whether it's a manufactured good that's built with pride, a perfectly typed letter, a smooth-running automobile, a clean house, a well-cooked meal, or a newspaper article that's informative and easy-to-read.

'Star wars' plan getting bad rap

A disturbing pattern emerged recently from the media fallout surrounding the 40th anniversary of the explosion of the first atomic bomb in the New Mexican desert.

A typical network report on radio and TV sent something like this: "As America remembers the explosion of July 16, 1945, heralding the atomic age, many scientists today are warning that a new round in the nuclear arms race may be under way—a race to put nuclear weapons in space."

"Nuclear weapons in space." It is a phrase we have heard often in debate over President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, dubbed "Star Wars" in the media. SDI is the president's plan to build a system that will intercept enemy nuclear weapons and destroy them before they reach American soil.

Critics inside and outside the news media have made every effort this week to link SDI with the awesome destructive power of the atomic bomb. There is a connection, but not the one the critics would have us make.

SDI is not about "nuclear weapons in space." Nuclear weapons, as they are commonly understood, involve weapons of mass destruction aimed at human targets such as military bases and cities. By this definition, nuclear weapons were banned from space in 1966 with the signing of the Outer Space Treaty with the Soviet Union.

A space-based missile defense, by contrast, would not use weapons of mass destruction. Instead, SDI would rely on weapons of precision—lasers, particle beams, "smart" rockets carrying conventional explosives—aimed at other weapons, not at human targets on earth. It would be the difference between a car bomb speeding toward a crowded restaurant and a gun used by a policeman to stop the charging car before it wreaks its destructions.

The distinction needs to be understood.

GNP economic garbage

Serious economists share a little secret - the Gross National Product figures that come out each quarter and which dominate the media economic analyses so much, are all too often what computer folks call GIGO: "garbage in, garbage out."

Not only are these numbers routinely revised and "re-jiggled" for up to 3-5 years later, there are those (including this columnist) who wonder if the whole GNP calculation process hasn't become misleading - and potentially dangerous.

For example, five years ago I bought the personal computer on which these columns are composed. It cost about the same as a computer with eight times as much internal memory and ten times as much external disk memory storage would cost today.

This means the effective computing power per dollar has been multiplied at least 800 percent in five years.

Yet, today's real GNP counts that 800 percent more powerful computer at about 30 percent LESS in deflated (constant) dollar value than it did my old machine back in 1981.

This means the colossal technological and productivity explosion in high-tech hardware and software over the past ten years has largely been ignored in the GNP calculations - so the nation's real output and productivity is probably rising one or two full percentage points higher than the Department of Commerce estimates.

Beyond that you should know that the quarterly GNP estimates themselves are samples of other sample information with only the most tenuous connection to "real" or "hard" data.

Indeed, many of the numbers on which the GNP quarterly estimates are based, such as factory orders for durable goods, retail sales, personal income and spending, are themselves routinely revised month by month by as much as 100-500 percent. They, too, are "estimates" based on "samples" of information.

What is making a growing number of economists skeptical about this process are the apparently significant variations between the "hard numbers" of the real economy and GNP "estimates."

For example, this year the first quarter GNP figures have been revised steadily downward to 0.3 percent growth - or, in fact, no growth at all, and for the first two quarters the average growth rate is now said to be only 1.7 percent - also flat.

Yet, some very contrary "signals" have been coming out of the real world of "hard" economic data. For example: during the first four months of 1985 total federal tax collections soared by an average of more than 12 percent over 1984 - a real growth rate of more than 8.3 percent, one of the highest in history.

Since these revenues arise mainly from payroll deductions and Social Security collections, they are very "hard" evidence that real wages and income are growing much faster than the GNP numbers suggest. The last years in which we enjoyed a real revenue growth level this high were 1976-1978, when the first half GNP rose an average of more than 6.5 percent, nearly five times the current rate.

Furthermore, these "hard" numbers of tax revenues are fully supported by the equally "hard" numbers of total payroll employment as measured by the Labor Department, which in the first quarter rose by a stunning 1,249,000 jobs, an annual rate of nearly 5-million new payroll jobs - a 5.2 percent growth in employment. All that in a no-growth economy?

To put that in perspective, in the last ten years we have exceeded that job-growth rate only twice, in the first half of 1977 and 1978 - and in those two years the GNP grew in the first two quarters at 6.9 percent and 5.6 percent respectively.

In the first six months of 1985, total payroll jobs increased 1,882,000. This 4 percent annualized rate was only slightly less than the 4.5 percent rate in the rip-roaring first half of 1984 when the GNP first-half growth averaged 8.6 percent and federal revenues rose at the real rate of 5.8 percent, substantially LOWER than this year's 8.3 percent.

In order for GNP growth to be as low as 1.7 percent, the Commerce Department is arguing that productivity has been FALLING by more than 3 percent a year for this entire six-month period.

That's possible - but highly unlikely, since even in deep recessions, productivity seldom falls more than 1.5 percent a year. That's why this year's GNP numbers so far are probably wrong.

The danger is that these misleadingly "sluggish" GNP figures have been used to swing Federal Reserve policy, which had indeed been far too tight all during 1984, to the opposite extreme, where money is now growing 12-15 percent a year, risking another wrenching "correctional crisis" down the road. Watch for the Fed to wake up to this and slam on the credit brakes, soon.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, July 24, the 205th day of 1985. There are 160 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On July 24, 1959, during a visit to the Soviet Union, Vice President Richard M. Nixon got into a well-publicized debate with Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev on communism versus capitalism. The confrontation became known as the Kitchen Debate because it took place in a model kitchen at a U.S. exhibition in Moscow.

Ten years ago: An Apollo spacecraft carrying three Americans splashed down safely in the Pacific, ending a mission that included an orbital rendezvous with a Soviet Soyuz spaceship.

Five years ago: Comedian-actor Peter Sellers died in London of a heart attack at age 54.

One year ago: President Reagan told a news conference he had "no plan" for a tax increase the next year despite Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale's assertion that one was inevitable, no matter who won.

The condos keep coming

Builders have to keep building to keep eating. And lenders have to keep lending.

These and other factors conspire to create a boom-and-bust economy in construction.

Pell-mell building also encourages into the industry builders who are less experienced, less qualified and, some, less ethical.

A dozen years ago everybody was building and buying and selling condos.

This was the way to go. Instead of paying apartment rent, make payments instead on "a condo you could own."

A condo promised other advantages of systematized maintenance and potential for resale profit.

The bloom is off that industry. Despite acknowledged exceptions in some cities, in most places unoccupied condos are offered for half-price and are not selling.

What went wrong?

The condo lifestyle is most successful in mid-city Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia and New York. These luxury condos may sell for a million dollars and more. Such tenants are able to demand that the building live up its promises and that its tenants be carefully screened.

Some such condos can be rolled over for a handsome profit.

These are exceptions.

Recently the Wall Street Journal asked around and found that most condo tenants across the country are less than pleased with the arrangement.

Their complaints are many and varied: shabby construction, disagreement with condo associations, resentment of escalating maintenance fees, lack of promised security, lack of privacy, fights with neighbors, unanticipated and unwelcome pets - and children.

"A condominium with children is a pandemonium."

In many condos, hot tubs and the promise of singles parties turned those buildings into noisy yuppie tenements.

So...

Stephen Driesler of the National Multi-Housing Council says, "The condo industry is flat on its back."

Condo sales in Dallas, Fort Worth, Atlanta and Seattle are off 50 percent in one year, in Houston and San Antonio off 70 percent.

But builders have to keep building and lenders have to keep ending so...

New starts of multi-family dwellings in March soared 53.5 percent.

Right or wrong, sanctions don't work

By Don Graff

Here's a quick question for you: On what burning issue is the Reagan administration simultaneously on both the right and the wrong sides?

Answer: Economic sanctions. It is right, says Gary Clyde Hufbauer, in opposing congressional efforts to impose them on South Africa. But it is wrong in having already imposed them against Nicaragua.

Hufbauer, a former deputy assistant secretary of the Treasury for international trade, is now a senior fellow at the Institute for International Economics. He is co-author of "Economic Sanctions Reconsidered," an exhaustive study of the subject that the non-political, non-profit, Washington-based institute has just brought out.

The study examines 103 instances of sanctions imposed by the United States and other major countries since 1914. In general, it finds the use of economics as a weapon has not been notably effective in achieving political goals. And sanctions can, on occasion, backfire on the very country applying them.

They can, for example, cause the sanctioned country to become even less cooperative and more defiant. Or spur it to successful countermeasures such as finding new markets and suppliers. Or produce economic loss and political fallout at home.

But if a government is determined to use the economic weapon to smite a foreign foe, the Hufbauer study advises following the "nine commandments." These include not expecting too much in the way of results, targeting the "weak and helpless" where pressure is most likely to produce economic pain, and applying economic measures with resolution only after careful advance planning.

Queried in a recent interview on Nicaragua and South Africa specifically, Hufbauer says the former shapes up as a classic case of too little, too late. If applied three or four years back, sanctions might have had real impact on the Sandinistas. The United States was then Nicaragua's primary trading partner, accounting for 35 percent of total imports and exports. But by the time the president got around to embargoing further trade - this past May - the U.S. share had plunged to 14 percent. Not enough to really hurt.

"They blew it," Hufbauer says. Instead, the embargo has triggered what he calls "immunization forces," including increased sympathy in Europe and Canada for the Nicaraguans. Which means alternative markets and sources of supply are no real problem.

The good news for the administration is that the domestic fallout has been minimal to nil. The Nicaraguan trade was small change for U.S. exporters and importers, too small for the cutoff to produce much of a backlash.

As for congressional sentiment for sanctions against South Africa, Hufbauer sides with the administration position that economic pressure would be unlikely to put much of a dent in the country's racial barriers. It is especially difficult, he notes, to compel major policy changes in a medium-sized, fairly stable country - especially one such as South Africa that is close to being self-sufficient and has long been preparing for the worst.

Also, there could be more domestic fallout than in the case of Nicaragua since the loss of the much more developed South African market to European and Japanese competitors would be felt by a number of economically important American exporters.

On the other hand, one of the nine commandments for successful application might seem to support slapping South Africa with sanctions, as well as provide another argument against the Nicaragua embargo. It is that chances of success are greater against allies and close trading partners than against adversaries. Among friends, Hufbauer says, unleashing the economic weapon definitely can make a difference.

"Of course," he adds, "it's also an excellent way to lose friends."

Garden fresh salads are among the special pleasures of summer. Bursting with just-picked flavor, they bring color, crunch and appetite appeal to tired warm weather menus.

Confronted with soaring temperatures and wilting appetites, innovative cooks look to Tex-Mex salads to spice up everyday meals. Whether spur of the moment or made in advance, these lively meal sparklers combine south of the border taste appeal with creative vegetable combinations.

When the entree is simply prepared meat or poultry, Wilted Southwest Spinach Salad will make the menu special in no time. The toss-up of tender, fresh spinach, avocado, red onion and radishes is "wilted" at serving time with an easy to prepare hot bacon, picante sauce and cumin dressing. Add it to your entertaining ideas as well. It makes a fine first course for a special meal on a sultry summer's eve.

WILTED SOUTHWEST SPINACH SALAD

- 1 ripe avocado
- 2 t. lime juice
- 6 c. loosely packed fresh spinach, torn into bite-sized pieces
- 1/2 c. red onion rings
- 1/2 c. thinly sliced radishes
- 3 slices bacon, diced
- 1-3rd c. picante sauce
- 2 T. water
- 1/4 t. sugar
- 1/4 t. ground cumin

Peel, seed and cut avocado into 1/2-inch wedges; cut each wedge in half crosswise. Gently toss avocado in lime juice to coat thoroughly. Combine avocado, spinach, onions and radishes; set aside. Cook bacon in medium skillet until crisp; add picante sauce, water, sugar and cumin. Bring to a boil. To serve, pour hot dressing over salad; toss lightly and serve immediately. Makes six servings.

Any summer meal can garner a color and flavor lift from refreshing Escabeche Vegetable Salad. Whether it's a picnic, a cookout or a meal for the family, the cooling cauliflower, green bean, carrot and onion combo will add sparkle to the menu. The escabeche or marinade is an easy blend of oil, seasonings and picante sauce.

Note: As the salad chills and takes on the "heat" of the marinade, the cauliflowerrets turn a rosy hue.

ESCABECHE VEGETABLE SALAD

- 2 c. 1-inch cauliflowerrets
- 2 c. green beans, cut in 1-inch pieces (about 3/4 pound)
- 1 c. sliced carrots (about 2 medium)
- 1 small onion, thinly sliced
- 2-3rd c. picante sauce
- 3 t. vegetable oil

- 1/2 t. oregano, crushed
- 1/2 t. salt
- 1/2 t. pepper

Cook cauliflowerrets, green beans and carrots in boiling salted water until just crisp-tender, about five minutes; drain. Place hot vegetables in medium bowl; add onion. Combine picante sauce, oil, oregano, salt and pepper in screw-top jar or small bowl; shake or mix well. Pour over vegetables; mix well. Cover and chill at least six hours or overnight, tossing lightly several times. Serve with slotted spoon. Makes six servings.

GIVE SPINACH SALAD new flavor flair with a lively Tex-Mex dressing. Wilted Southwest Spinach Salad, shown, tosses spinach, avocado, radishes and red onion rings in a spicy-hot dressing made with bacon, cumin and picante sauce

Summer reading program ends

Approximately 120 young readers attended a party last week marking the end of the Summer Reading Program conducted by Lovett Memorial Library.

But plans are ready for a children's hour program beginning in August.

Barbara Craig, librarian who assisted with the program, said the program had been one of the most successful ones the library has ever had, with approximately 380 students and preschoolers enrolling in the "Awesome Adventures" program.

Of all those enrolled, 125 received certificates for reading a minimum of 10 books during the duration of the program, reported Leureen Nock, assistant librarian.

"We encourage them to keep reading though the contests have ended," Craig said.

Two students received awards for designing bookmarkers. Winning girl was Andrea Rodriguez, 5, with a design featuring a giraffe and a rainbow. Kyle Sparkman, 9, won the boy's division with a design featuring a telescope, guns, a palm tree, a rock, stars, clouds and other items. Theme for the bookmarkers was "Libraries equal adventure."

The selected bookmarkers will be printed up for distribution at the library and also will be displayed at the Tri-State Fair in Amarillo.

Also receiving prizes were 39 students who had correctly guessed the object hidden in the treasure chest. The object was a space shuttle.

Also guessing the treasure were Christy Thomas, Angela Rodriguez, Annie Carlisle, Adam Rainey, Willie Carlisle, Danette

Hoover, Kyle Sparkman, Andy Utzman, C. D. Whinery, Dustin Brown, Damican Hill, Josh Seaburn, Anna Timore, Michelle Whinery, Jade Brown, Erin Alexander and Megan Hill.

At the final party last Wednesday, the students watched "Winnie the Pool and a Day for Eeyore" in the library's auditorium. Afterwards the certificates, prizes and awards were presented. Then they all adjourned to the reading garden on the south side of the library for refreshments.

A children's story hour for those age 3 to 5 will begin Thursday, Aug. 1, at the library and continue every Thursday throughout the month.

Parents wanting their children to enjoy the program are asked to register them at the library soon so a rough estimate can be obtained.

Craig said if there are enough children, two separate story sessions might have to be held, one in the morning and one in the afternoon. The session will last 30 to 45 minutes.

The story hour will be held throughout the months of August, October and December.

Additional information may be obtained by contacting the library.

Dear Abby

Wife can't understand why husband got a vasectomy

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Thomas (not his real name) and I have been married for nearly 21 years and have four children. He's 48 and I'm 43.

Yesterday I accidentally came across a receipt for a doctor's bill showing that Thomas had a vasectomy five years ago. He never told me he'd had one. I was shocked, especially since I had a tubal ligation nine years ago, after the birth of our fourth child.

When I confronted him, he said he'd had a vasectomy to prevent kidney stones, and since we didn't intend to have any more children, he didn't see any point in mentioning it.

I have never heard of a man having a vasectomy to prevent kidney stones, have you? Please consult your medical advisers. I'm too ashamed to ask a local doctor.

Also, why would a man want a vasectomy when his wife has had a tubal ligation?

DOUBTING THOMAS

DEAR DOUBTING: A man wants a vasectomy for the same reason a woman wants a tubal ligation—because he doesn't want any more children. And there is no correlation between a vasectomy and kidney stones.

DEAR ABBY: My question is about ankle bracelets. My mother has always worn one, and I admired the way it looked on her, so she gave me an ankle bracelet of my own to wear.

My mother wears hers on her left leg and I wear mine on my right leg. My sister says it's important on which leg you wear it—one leg means you're straight and the other leg means you're not. (You know what I mean.)

Please tell me which leg means straight and which means the other. I need an answer as soon as possible.

ANKLET IN FRESNO, CALIF.

DEAR ANKLET: I am not aware that wearing an ankle bracelet on the left leg or the right has any special significance. And meanwhile, don't believe everything you hear. The same story has been circulating about males who wear one earring—another undocumented bit of rubbish.

DEAR ABBY: We want to warn others about the adoption pains we have just experienced. We have been approved as adoptive parents for several years, but we grew impatient. Last month we were approached by the parents of a 16-year-old pregnant girl who wanted to place her child for adoption through our lawyer. Everything was arranged except the signing of the papers. After the baby (a girl) was born, the young mother decided not to give up her baby, so the deal was off.

Five days later she changed her mind and told us to come and get the baby. We were thrilled and went immediately to pick up the baby, and when she placed that little girl in my arms I was the happiest woman alive. The young mother promised to sign the papers and never bother us again.

Two days later, my husband and I took the baby shopping for baby clothes and furniture when this young mother phoned us. Nobody answered our phone so she kept calling until she found us home. She accused us of lying, saying we had left the baby all alone. She ranted and raved like a mad person! Abby, we had the baby with us, but she wouldn't believe us. She demanded that we bring the baby back immediately, so of course we had to, because we had no legal right to keep her.

Please advise adoptive couples to get all the papers signed before taking a baby. We learned a valuable lesson the hard way.

HEARTBROKEN

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: Thank you for wanting to spare others from the painful experience you endured. The young mother was obviously distraught and hysterical. Don't be surprised if she changes her mind again.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

CORRECT GUESSERS - Thirty-nine young people participating in the Lovett Memorial Library's Summer Reading Program correctly interpreted weekly clues and guessed the object hidden in a treasure chest: a space shuttle. Above, 22 of the prize winners gathered in the reading garden at the library during the concluding party for the reading program, enjoying their frozen pops as refreshments. (Staff photo by Larry Hollis)

This establishment's cooks get repeat customers

FERGUS FALLS, Minn. (AP) — When Ethel Barker and Debbie Emery prepare a meal, nobody walks away from the table — at least they don't walk far.

The mother and daughter serve their fare on gleaming silver trays, and one might even refer to the delivery of their cuisine as "room service."

They are cooking and serving meals to a captive audience — inmates at the Otter Tail County Jail.

Barker and Emery, who work along with Alice Beske, say cooking for the prisoners is no different than cooking for anybody else.

Although the meals are served through a window divided by metal bars, the three say they've never had a problem with the inmates. "Most of the prisoners are considerate," Barker said. "Some say thanks, some say it was good and some look at you like you're trying to poison them."

Even though the prisoners are friendly, the cooks have to keep a close count on the silverware. All the kitchen utensils are counted every night, Barker said, "and if there's one missing they go looking for it."

The women don't have any contact with dangerous criminals, who are kept in isolation. The jailers take the food to those inmates.

Mother and daughter begin work at 6 a.m. weekdays, preparing breakfast, lunch and dinner for the jail residents. Beske serves the evening meal, and the three rotate solo shifts on the weekend.

Pizza and hamburgers are some of the prisoners' favorites, the cooks said. Emery's french toast is also a big hit, with some of the inmates eating six or seven slices.

"When you multiply that by 28 prisoners, that's a lot of bread," Emery said.

Cereal, pancakes or eggs are on the breakfast menu. On Sunday morning, each prisoner gets two sweet rolls.

Dinner is everyday fare such as roast, meat loaf, turkey or fish, Barker said, "but no steak."

Barker began cooking for the prisoners part time in 1975 with Esther Mortensen.

How to avoid the 3 mistakes of funeral planning.

Anyone who's planned a funeral knows how hard it is to make wise decisions under emotional strain. And how easy it is to (1) accept rather than select the type of service to be performed; (2) overlook some of the options; and (3) possibly spend more than you should for the funeral.

National Selected Morticians offer a free booklet that will help you avoid these mistakes. Read it and you can become better prepared to make the right decisions if, and when, the need arises.

Husband, wife together for long haul

By DAVID MCLEMORE
Dallas Morning-News
SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — With a sip of her soft drink, Emma Lou Collins considers the possibility that she has the perfect job.

"Well, my husband and I get to see an awful lot of this country, and we pretty much do what we please," she says. "And we get to get together. I guess that's about 100 percent ideal."

What Robert and Emma Lou Collins do is drive trucks. Big trucks with 18 wheels and 40-foot trailers. And they do it a lot — both have driven about 2.5 million miles without an accident.

"I'd have to say the Lord takes care of us," Emma Lou says. "Of course, we drive defensively, too."

Robert is 68. Emma Lou is 65. For the past 14 years, the San Antonio couple has driven as a team for Church's Fried Chicken

Inc., delivering store equipment and supplies to the fast food chain's 1,500 stores.

Emma Lou estimates that she and Robert have seen 46 of the 48 contiguous states. They drive about 150,000 miles a year, following the interstates across the nation.

"The truck is our home," Emma Lou says. "In it, we've got just about everything you need except a bathroom. And frankly, we need to stop for the exercise."

This year, Emma Lou beat out 3,000 men to be named the 1984 regional driver of the year by Ryder Truck Rental. The award is based on recommendations from employers and the driver's safety record. She is the first woman to win the award. Her husband won it in 1982.

"We like to call ourselves commercial tourists," she says. "Anytime we take a wrong turn, that's sightseeing. Now you can't beat that."

Robert, a large man wearing a gimme cap, gets in a rare word: "We've had a pretty good life. I guess we kind of like each other. Of course, living in a 6-by-8 truck cab, we'd have to."

Emma Lou says, "The way I see it, we've been married 96 years. That's 48 years for each of us."

Robert showed his devotion once at a truck stop near Meridian, Miss. Emma Lou had stopped to give the owner some recipes. Robert, who had been asleep, woke and took his turn at the wheel and drove off.

"I got on the CB and called out his handle, which is Superchicken," Emma Lou says. "I said, 'Superchicken, this is Queenbee. You left me at the truck stop.' Some other driver got on the CB and said, 'If Superchicken comes back for her, it must be true love.' Well, he sure did come back for me."

When Emma Lou's family moved from a small farm east of Waco to Kilgore in the 1930s, she and Robert, a football star at Kilgore High, became high school sweethearts. They married in 1937. She was 18, he was 21.

"I was so worried about what we'd talk about after we married," Emma Lou says. "But Robert says I haven't shut up yet."

They have four children and three grandchildren.

"We've been lucky in that we've been able to take the grandchildren on trips with us," Emma Lou says. "And they love it."

Emma Lou Collins became a truck driver at an early age. As a teen-ager she hauled the cotton her father grew from Waco to Houston.

"Daddy didn't have any sons, so the girls had to drive. I also hauled logs and lumber, you name it."

During World War II, Emma Lou carried mail in Louisiana. In 1948, she and Robert hauled milk for their own dairy delivery firm in San Antonio. After 25 years, their company folded because of a loss of customers. After working as independent haulers, he went to work as a driver for San Antonio-based Church's in 1967. She joined him in 1970.

"We're the only team Church's has," she says. "We don't smoke. We don't drink. And we don't take chances."

When Robert is driving, Emma Lou prefers to read the Bible that rests near the road atlas, or she crochets. One year, she made 26 afghans.

"I don't like to just sit and do nothing," she says.

On vacation, Emma Lou, well, drives. One summer she took her mother, her daughter and two grandchildren on a 4,000-mile trip in a recreational vehicle.

"I took a week off once and did nothing. I thought I'd go nuts," she says.

Trucking has become a way of life for Emma Lou and Robert. It's a life they wouldn't trade for anything.

"We've met a lot of good, decent people and we have good friends all over the United States," she says.

"Once, we saw a double rainbow in Florida that had the most beautiful colors. That's something you can't recapture."

Emma Lou pauses for a moment.

"We've seen some bad things," she says. "We've seen terrible accidents. And I've helped pull men out of burning cars. But we've never looked for trouble, and God's been good to us, because we've never had any."

"No sir, I wouldn't change a day of my life," she says. "Of course, we do kind of wish they'd build an overpass over Missouri. That state can really be a pain to drive in."

In search of normal

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — With the prime interest rate having fallen back into the single digits, a feeling exists that things are getting back to normal.

But is a 9.5 percent rate normal? Based on records of the past half-century, the latest prime interest rate, which is a rate sometimes quoted to top-quality borrowers, is still decidedly abnormal.

From 1933 through 1947, for example, the prime averaged 1.5 percent. In fact, not once in that time did the annual rate vary from that figure. And as recently as 1965, it had never exceeded 4.8 percent for an entire year.

After that it became a different matter. In the 10 years from 1965 to 1974 it averaged 6.8 percent, and in the next 10 years it soared to 11.4 percent, climaxing at an annual average of 18.8 percent in 1981.

If rates continue to fall, or remain where they are now, 1985 will be the first year since 1978 to produce an average prime rate in the single numbers. It may be getting there, but normalcy is still a long way off.

Many Americans, in fact, have only vague notions of what is, and that includes professional statisticians. So great have been the economic changes of the past few decades that what constitutes normal is now arguable.

In seasonally adjusting employment figures, for example, the Bureau of Labor Statistics averages five-year records in an attempt to determine what is normal and to obtain a perspective on existing conditions.

But, as is often pointed out, the past decade was abnormal in relation to the previous four decades. Besides, it is argued, what might be abnormal under one set of conditions might be normal under others.

Today's plus-7 percent jobless figures, for example, are high when matched against the 4.6 percent rate that prevailed in the 1965-1974 period, the 5.4 percent in the previous 10 years, and 4 percent in the years 1945-1954.

But, as is often pointed out, the emergence of more women in the labor force has changed the basis for computing what is normal or average. With more people seeking work, old measures lose some of their value as indicators.

Interest rates provide another example. Today's relatively high interest rates might be considered normal in view of the big federal budget deficits and the increasing propensity of Americans to use credit in place of cash.

Personal savings habits have changed too. The current personal savings rate of about 5 percent of after-tax pay is low in relation to 50-year averages. If maintained, in fact, it would be the lowest since the 3.1 percent of 1947.

But, as with many figures, that 3.1 percent in itself was abnormal, a result of the first opportunity since World War II for Americans to stock up on goods denied them for so many years. It was a reaction to the war years, when savings averaged over 20 percent because consumers had little to consume.

Some analysts believe that today's relatively low savings rate might not be as significant as it is sometimes made out to be. They contend that many Americans have enormous, uncounted savings in the form of home equity.

But if the past cannot declare what is normal, it can at least provide a fix and a perspective by which to measure the present. And by that criterion, many of the figures we see today are still very, very high.

U.S.-China nuclear accord is signed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration and China have signed the first nuclear cooperation agreement between the United States and a communist government.

President Reagan gave his final approval Tuesday shortly before meeting with Chinese President Li Xiannian, and the accord was signed later in the day by Energy Secretary John Herrington and Chinese Vice Premier Li Peng.

A senior administration official offered assurances that the accord, which is still subject to congressional approval, would not strengthen China's nuclear weapons capability.

"China is a nuclear weapons state already without our help," said the official, who briefed reporters on condition he not be identified. "And nothing under this agreement is going to help China's military program."

Reagan in his first full day back on the job after cancer surgery, said at a banquet in President Li's honor Tuesday evening that he felt fine. Although the 74-year-old president appeared thinner and a little less sure of foot than before, the outward indications were that he was recovering nicely from the major surgery just 10 days earlier.

In remarks prepared for a banquet toast, Reagan told the 76-year-old Li that "I am happy to say I remain confident that Chinese-American cooperation will grow and strengthen in the years ahead."

Reagan also announced that Vice President George Bush will visit China at the Chinese government's invitation. The head of the Chinese Communist Party, Hu Yaobang, is expected to visit Washington within the next year also.

Li said in his toast he hoped his talks with Reagan had further strengthened the U.S.-China friendship. But he warned that differences over Taiwan could "become an obstacle" to the development of such ties. He expressed hope the differences could be resolved.

Li also called for improved U.S.-Soviet relations and "a drastic cut in their armaments, particularly their nuclear armaments."

Li, on the third day of his four-day visit, was to tour the National Air and Space Museum this morning, accompanied by his wife, Lin Jiamel. He also planned to attend a lunch hosted by the National Council for U.S.-China Trade, then meet with Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger.

In addition to the nuclear cooperation accord, representatives of the two governments also signed agreements Tuesday on cultural and educational exchanges and on fishing, which could open the way for Chinese fishermen to ply U.S. waters.

The accord is still subject to a 90-day congressional review, but congressional sources say rejection is unlikely.

Group seeks ban on diaper rash lotion

WASHINGTON (AP) — An activist health group asked the Food and Drug Administration today to ban a popular lotion for treating diaper rash, contending its active ingredient has been shown in animal tests to cause nerve damage.

The Public Citizen Health Research Group said in a petition being filed with the FDA that the drug, most commonly known as Vioform, can be absorbed through the skin of infants in amounts that raise serious concerns about its dangers.

The active ingredient in the drug is iodochlorhydroxyquin, also known as clioquinol, which already has been banned in the United States and most other countries in its oral form because of its hazard, the group said.

The petition acknowledged there have been no cases of nerve damage attributed to the lotion, but argued that "there is reason to believe that this form of the drug poses a significant threat of toxicity."

Recent tests on dogs at the University of Nebraska indicate that as much as 40 percent of the drug rubbed on the skin for treating diaper rash can be absorbed through the skin and can accumulate in tissue, the group said.

Combat veterans earn less, divorce more, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vietnam combat has had "clear and consistent adverse social effect" on veterans that is seen in higher divorce rates, lower earnings and reduced general happiness, according to a study released today.

"But when age and education are taken into account, exposure to intense combat has a major independent effect on family income," the report said.

"Our analysis shows a clear and consistent adverse social effect of exposure to traumatic situations (combat) among members of the study population," it said.

The study asked questions about general happiness and health, and found significantly more negative answers among those with higher levels of combat.

The authors said they asked a series of questions about attitudes toward the Veterans Administration and found responses on the whole to be "very negative." Only 19 percent said they would favor a VA hospital over a community hospital, though responses were more positive about the VA staff itself.

Recent tests on dogs at the University of Nebraska indicate that as much as 40 percent of the drug rubbed on the skin for treating diaper rash can be absorbed through the skin and can accumulate in tissue, the group said.

Vioform, a non-prescription drug, and Vioform-Hydrocortisone, the main prescription version, are produced by Ciba-Geigy Corp. of Summit, N.J. The prescription version also is produced under other names in smaller quantities by other manufacturers.

The study of nearly 7,000 Vietnam and Vietnam-era veterans concluded that those who saw intense combat earn as much as $3,000 to $4,000 less annually than their colleagues who served at the same time but not in Southeast Asia.

The study said that as the level of traumatic combat experience rises, so does the divorce rate.

"Conversely, with increased levels of combat, annual family incomes decline as do the reported levels of general happiness and satisfaction. Further, we find that education attainment ... cannot account for this effect," it said.

The report was the first in a series to be made by the Stellmans, who plan later reports on post-traumatic stress disorder and long-term effects of exposure to Agent Orange.

The study group was all male and largely white, and drawn from 700,000 Vietnam-era veterans who are members of the legion. The legion said it considered them to be "properly representative" of veterans of the war and the era.

At Ciba-Geigy, spokesman Joe Boyd said company officials had not seen the petition, making it difficult to respond. But, he said, "we have checked all our adverse reaction reports on our computers, which date back to 1968, and we do not have a single report which documents harm to infants or adults."

The effects were most severe among veterans born from 1944 through 1949, which was the age group that served at the time of most intense fighting by U.S. forces in the Vietnam War.

For example, among those born in 1944-45, the mean income level was $21,199 for those who served in Southeast Asia without seeing combat, and $21,149 among those serving outside Southeast Asia. But for those who experienced the highest level of combat, the mean income was $18,039.

Among those born in 1950 and later, who are younger and thus would be expected to be earning less than their elders, the mean income level for those serving in Southeast Asia without combat was $17,719. For those who saw the most intense combat it was $15,059.

When combat was not considered, there was "no statistically significant difference" in income levels between those who served in Southeast Asia and those who served outside that region.

The study said that among those surveyed, level of education was not related to combat exposure; as with other Americans, veterans with more education tended to earn more.

It was done in cooperation with the American Legion, and involved detailed questioning of 6,800 men selected at random among legion members in six states — Colorado, Indiana, Maryland, Minnesota, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

ACTOR ILL—Actor Rock Hudson is shown in a scene from his television series "McMillan" with actress Karen Valentine. Hudson's agent said the actor was in hospital in Paris suffering from liver cancer. (AP Laserphoto)

Rock Hudson is suffering from inoperable liver cancer, agent says

PARIS (AP) — The American Hospital said today that doctors have not yet diagnosed the ailment afflicting movie idol Rock Hudson. But Hudson's agent says he is suffering from liver cancer and being treated by specialists from an institute that specializes in AIDS research.

The hospital in suburban Neuilly said in a brief statement today saying: "Mr. Rock Hudson was admitted to the American Hospital Sunday night after a general deterioration of his health. Investigations are continuing and for the moment no diagnosis has been issued."

Bruce Redo, a spokesman for the American Hospital of Paris, said late Tuesday that the 59-year-old Hudson was under observation at the hospital, and that he was in satisfactory condition.

Hudson's publicist, Dale Olson, said in Los Angeles that the actor had collapsed at the Paris Ritz Hotel on Sunday night. "He's been in and out of a coma. He's a very, very sick man," Olson said.

Hudson had made a public appearance last week in Pebble Beach, Calif., to help Doris Day promote her television series on pets. He looked gaunt at the time, but his publicists said only that Hudson had wanted to lose weight.

Beginning in 1948, Hudson's commanding 6-foot-4 size, strong presence and good looks led him to starring roles opposite some of Hollywood's leading ladies in more than 50 Westerns, war epics, comedies and dramas. He later went on to star in the television series "McMillan and Wife" and "Dynasty."

Olson also said there were indications of cancer in Hudson's blood. However, he said reports that Hudson is suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome were speculative and have not been confirmed or denied by doctors. AIDS destroys the body's immunity to infection.

"The doctor in Paris indicated that at this point he has seen no indication of AIDS," Olson said.

Asked what Hudson's prognosis was, he said: "I haven't been given one." He said he believed doctors wanted to wait until after sessions with specialists today before making a prognosis.

He said Hudson was being tested for "everything." Asked whether that included AIDS, he repeated: "Everything."

"My official statement is that Rock Hudson is in the American Hospital in Paris, where his doctors have diagnosed that he has cancer of the liver and that it is not operable," Olson said.

Hudson had gone to Paris to see doctors at the Pasteur Institute, said his Beverly Hills physician, Dr. Rexford Kenamer. Olson said: "I believe people from the Institute Pasteur have been treating him. He has not been in the Institute Pasteur as a patient."

AIDS, believed to be caused by an unusual virus discovered in France and the United States in 1984, is most likely to strike homosexuals, abusers of injectable drugs and hemophiliacs. It is apparently spread by sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions, but not by casual contact.

As of June 24, 1985, AIDS had struck 11,271 people in the United States and claimed 5,641 lives since 1979.

Hudson, born Roy Scherer Jr. on Nov. 17, 1925 in Winnetka, Ill., went to Hollywood to pursue his acting career after serving as a Navy air mechanic in World War II.

Agent Henry Willson renamed him Rock Hudson. At first the actor hated the name, but in later years he tolerated it.

His role as Elizabeth Taylor's husband in 1956 the movie "Giant," a saga of feuding Texas oil and cattle barons, gained an Academy Award nomination for him.

He proved a versatile leading man, starring in big-scale films such as "Something Of Value," "A Farewell To Arms," "The Last Sunset" and "A Gathering Of Eagles," as well as bedroom comedies such as "Pillow Talk."

Khrushchev's project is still struggling

TSELINOGRAD, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Three decades after Nikita Khrushchev dispatched workers to transform Kazakhstan's "virgin lands" into the Soviet wheatbasket, drought, erosion and a manpower shortage continue to slow the march toward self-sufficiency in growing grain.

The 1953 campaign that brought short-term glory, then eventual scorn for the volatile Soviet leader has made a measurable contribution to grain production and development of the vast Kazakh steppe in central Asia.

However, Soviet output of bread grains has been erratic and even in the best years has fallen short of national needs, forcing Moscow to import huge quantities of grain.

Wind erosion and loss of topsoil nutrients caused by poor crop rotation have hurt per-acre yield in Kazakhstan since the late 1950s, after the initial boom in the virgin lands.

Farmers and researchers today still criticize Khrushchev's all-out effort to boost grain production by planting every available acre in the virgin lands without regard for soil conservation.

Like the Dust Bowl-era of the 1930s in the United States, Kazakhstan suffered serious topsoil losses in the late 1950s; farmers in the central Asian republic have been battling to replenish it ever since.

Sub-surface tillage, which leaves much of the uppermost soil layer in place while preparing the ground for seeding, gained popularity after Khrushchev was ousted in 1964 and has done much to preserve topsoil, said Alexander Barayev, head of the National Grain Research Institute and a prominent agricultural researcher for nearly 50 years.

Barayev and other researchers advocated soil conservation during Khrushchev's campaign to open the "tselina" — the virgin lands. But Khrushchev pressed for massive plantings, and the country had record grain harvests in the late 1950s. Production in Kazakhstan alone was up by nearly 50 percent from five years earlier.

"Khrushchev had the ability to convince the country to undertake a project it was not fully ready for," Barayev said.

The effects of soil erosion and failure to rotate crops began showing over the next few years; by 1962, the republic's grain yield dropped significantly.

Despite soil conservation practices in the past two decades, the virgin lands have not produced grain on the scale envisioned by Khrushchev. But the program provided an important impetus to Soviet agricultural expansion at a time when the nation was growing quickly, according to Western analysts.

Kazakhstan accounted for only about 2 to 5 percent of Soviet grains in the years before 1953. The republic's share jumped to as much as 18 percent during the late 1950s, then dropped to an average of 10 to 12 percent, which it maintains today.

Severe drought in the grain-growing region of the country was blamed for last year's poor harvest. Kazakhstan harvested 17.5 million tons, compared to a target of 27.5 million, and the nationwide harvest of 170 million tons was nearly 60 million tons below the target figure.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev noted in a speech in June that weather is not the sole culprit in poor harvests. He has called for more efficient use of farmlands and broader introduction of technology.

This winter's heavy snowfall delayed spring planting until May 25. Although there were average rainfalls in May and June, a recent dry spell worried Kazakhstan farmers about the fate of this year's crop and the chances of meeting their goal of 28 million tons.

The monthlong drought prompted the U.S. Department of Agriculture to lower its forecast in July for 1985 Soviet grain production from 195 million tons to 190 million. About the time of the revised forecast, however, rain fell over the Tselinograd region.

The Soviet Union's grain imports from all foreign sources are expected to reach 37 million tons, the Agriculture Department said in June. Although that figure would be well below the record of 55 million tons imported in 1984-1985, it would still rank as the third-largest in Soviet history.

OPEC talks resume

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — A key Arab oil minister joined his African partners today in criticizing a Saudi Arabian proposal for a small cut in the price of OPEC oil.

"I don't like changing the price," said Mana Saeed Oteiba of the United Arab Emirates. "I would like to keep everything as it is." Oteiba spoke to reporters as he entered a third day of talks among members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Despite reports of progress Tuesday, OPEC members did not reach an agreement. The ministers said they did not expect a quick breakthrough today, either.

African members Libya, Algeria, Gabon and Nigeria oppose Saudi Arabia's plan for a cut of perhaps 50 cents a barrel from the standard of $26.50 for heavy, lower-grade oil.

Sources who spoke on condition they not be identified said

Nigeria's objection was the key obstacle to agreement on a price cut. Tam David-West, the Nigerian oil minister, vehemently opposes the Saudi Arabian-sponsored plan, the sources said.

A committee of oil ministers from seven of the 13 members was seeking to work out a compromise. A decision by the panel would be expected to get quick approval from the full conference.

Mexican president announces program to attack weak economy

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Miguel de la Madrid, facing a deteriorating economy, has announced a five-point program to slice government spending, reduce protectionist trade measures and bring order to the chaotic currency markets.

Analysts said Tuesday the steps were needed but some noted the president failed to spell out details of the measures and that he had called for such changes previously.

"What worries me is its third announcement of this type (on reducing government spending) during the year and that may be an indication that things are not going very well," said Ignacio Trigueros, director of economic research at the Mexican Autonomous Institute of Technology.

falls in the peso currency on the free market.

As a result, de la Madrid said the government will adopt "profound and energetic measures that will attack the bottom of the problems."

The actions, he said, will "demand still greater efforts from society. There are no other viable options. I cannot offer the nation complacency or indecision."

These steps, he said, center on five areas: reducing government spending, stepping up efforts to lower protectionist barriers by replacing the current import permit program with a modern tariff system, and bringing order to the currency markets to protect the holdings of international reserves. They also include stepping up efforts to collect back taxes and stop the illegal sale of goods, and channeling financial resources to needed parts of the economy.

Javier Murcio, an economist at the consulting firm of Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass., said a reduction in Mexican government expenditures would slow the "troubled" economy and relieve pressure on inflation, running above the 50 percent mark on an annual basis.

With the slowdown, analysts predicted the economy would grow 3 percent to 4 percent, after adjustment for inflation, this year. It expanded at a faster-than-expected clip of 6 percent to 7 percent in the first half of the year.

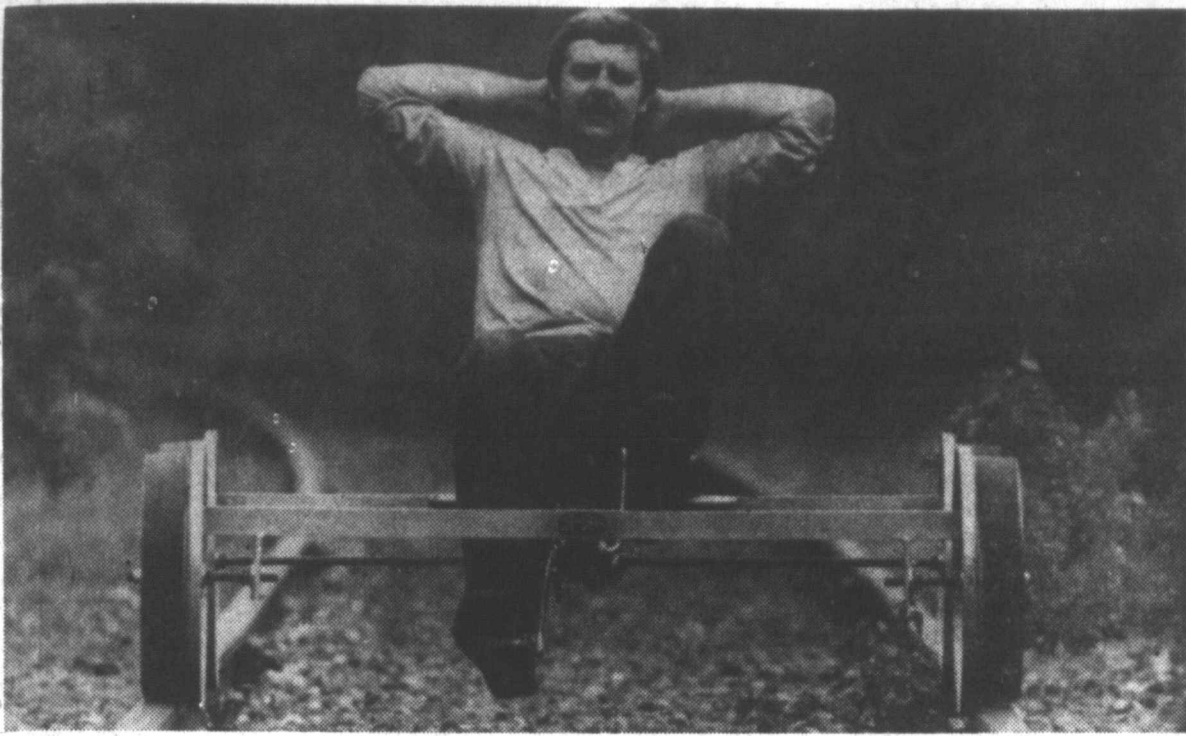

Murcio did not foresee the government stepping so hard on the brakes that the economy would slide into a recession. But Trigueros predicted such a downturn in the last three months of the year.

Mexicans in recent weeks have expressed concern that the recent falls in oil prices and the devaluation of the currency are a replay of 1982 when the oil bubble burst and the economy collapsed.

Some also worry that further economic turmoil will hinder the nation's ability in the future to meet the interest payments on its foreign debt.

Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog, also speaking at the Second National Bankers Meeting, dismissed suggestions of declaring a moratorium on the debt as "irresponsible."

Earlier this month, the government slashed oil prices to try to revive sales that it said had plunged to 80,000 barrels a day in June, from the target of 1.5 million barrels.

Tropical storm is drifting to sea

MIAMI (AP) — A disorganized Tropical Storm Bob drifted steadily out over the Atlantic Ocean today after whipping up surf, flooding roads and ripping off the roof of a condominium as it stirred up two tornadoes.

Forecasters warned that while Bob was not likely to return to Florida, the Eastern Seaboard may see more of the tropical storm, the second named storm of the Atlantic hurricane season and the first to hit shore.

Bob crossed Florida from west to east Tuesday as a lively storm that brought high seas, gusting winds and torrential rains, punished beaches and temporarily closed coastal roads but caused no serious injuries.

At 3 a.m. today, the broad center of the storm was located near latitude 28.3 north and longitude 80.2 west, about 30 miles southeast of Cape Canaveral, the National Weather Service said. It was moving toward the north northeast at 10 mph and was expected to gradually turn toward the north during the day.

The greatest dangers Bob posed along the southeast coast between Vero Beach and West Palm Beach were flooding and beach erosion, officials said.

Gale warnings were posted and seas as high as 10 feet off Palm Beach, St. Lucie and Martin counties were predicted through today. Gale warnings also were in effect from the upper Florida Keys through Broward County, where heavy thundershowers spawned were forecast to continue through today.

The storm hovered 130 miles off Florida's southwest coast for two days before its center came ashore Tuesday morning, dumping 11 inches of rain on the resort town of Marco Island and 9.72 inches on Naples from Monday to Tuesday.

Severed palm fronds littered flooded streets and severely eroded beaches. In Naples and Marco Island, home mail delivery was halted for the day by impassable roads lined with stalled cars.

The storm peeled back the roof of a Sanibel Island condominium, allowing rain to collapse ceilings of 16 apartments. About 7,000 Naples residents were without electricity until it was restored Tuesday.

Arab baker specializes in bagels

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — This just in: Mr. Bagel is an Arab. "I know it's strange, an Arab running a bagel shop, but I like bagels," said Jack Khashou, "so I ask myself, 'Why fight it?'"

Khashou is the proprietor of Mr. Bagel, the only bagel bakery in town.

It's a seven-day-a-week operation that produces 10 kinds of bagels, including pumpernickel, raisin and cinnamon, whole wheat and onion.

Unfortunately for Khashou, who moved to the United States in 1958 to attend college, there are only about 400 Jewish families in Arlington. So, Khashou is hoping the average Texan-on-the-street will learn to love his chewy Jewish delicacies.

So far, Khashou says the raisin and cinnamon bagel — which was the worst seller in his Southern California bagel stores — is the No. 1 choice among local bagel lovers.

"Two weeks ago, I had a man come in, point to a pumpernickel bagel and ask for the chocolate-covered doughnut," Khashou said. "I told him we sold bagels. He asked what bagels were and I suggested the raisin cinnamon bagel with cream cheese."

"Now he comes in every morning and always, he gets the raisin cinnamon bagel with cream cheese."

afternoon. Bob lashed the Miami-Fort Lauderdale area with squalls, non-stop heavy thunderstorms and spawned at least two tornadoes, which broke windows and snapped trees in northern Dade County, said forecaster Frank Revitte.

Florida Power & Light Co. reported about 1,500 southeast coast customers lost power Tuesday afternoon, but said little other trouble was expected.

Williams beats the breeze

Plainview golfer Tri-State Seniors medalist with 71

BY WALLY SIMMONS
Managing Editor

A strong afternoon wind made things difficult for late starters in the opening round of the Tri-State Seniors Golf Tournament Tuesday. But it wasn't strong enough to blow away Jack Williams of Plainview.

Williams, playing in the next-to-last foursome of the day, battled through the stiff breeze with an even-par 71 to win medalist honors in the 51st renewal of the tournament for golfers age 55 and over.

That gave him a one-shot edge over four other golfers going into the second round of action today. A large number of others was poised within two or three strokes of the leader, virtually assuring the Tri-State seniors of one of their most competitive tournaments.

The championship flight of 31 players teed off for the second round at 9:45 a.m. today. The championship field will be cut to the top 16 scores after today's round, with the lower half going into the President's flight. Championship players tee off at 8:37 a.m. Thursday and at 10:22 a.m. Friday.

Three golfers, two of them former champions, put one-over 72s on the board early Tuesday and for much of the day it looked like that score would stand in the medal competition as the stiff breeze toughened the 6,010 Pampa Country Club Course.

But the strong-hitting Williams, who won this championship on his first try in 1982 and finished second last year, was equal to the challenge, although he had a shaky start with bogeys on four and seven.

"I was on the back fringe of No. 4 and you can't get it close to the hole from there," he said. His downhiller went eight feet past the cup and he missed coming back.

"I missed a six-inch putt on No. 7," Williams said.

Williams ran in a 10-foot birdie on No. 9 to make the turn one over, then got even with par with an eight-footer on the 540-yard, par five 13th.

On the par five 18th, knowing what he had to do to beat the previous leaders, he drilled his second shot to just short of the front of the green, chipped on and two-putted for his 71.

Former champions Bob Giese of Amarillo, who says he hasn't been playing much, and Roy Peden of Kermit, who is getting his game back in shape, were two of the early finishers who posted 72s. They were joined at that score by Harry Hardy of Granbury and Otto Knight of Corpus Christi, the latter also one of the late finishers who had to battle the breeze.

Chester Darnell, Pampa's only representative in the championship flight, birdied the 18th hole for a 73 that put him in strong contention.

Mel Shafer of Van Alstyne had one of the unique rounds among those at 73. He was four over after five holes, but pulled his game together to finish the front nine with pars, then birdied 10 and 15 on the back to finish at two over.

Former champion Jake Broyles of Lamesa and last year's co-medalist Andy Manning were among those two shots back at 73.

Williams and Henry Richards of Jacksboro were the only players able to break par on the back nine. The best nine holes of the day was a two-under 34 on the front by Whiz White of Lubbock, but back nine reached up and grabbed him and he finished at 34-40-74.

It took a nine-under 62 to win the scramble. That score was posted by the team of Jim Deaton, Jack Holmes, Andy Anderson and William Hanes, even though Deaton, the "A" play, managed only and 83. Two other teams tied at 63.

WARREN HASSE

FOR YEARS HE USED TO commute to Pampa to work a moonlighting shift. Now, he makes the trip once a year to play in the Tri-State Seniors Golf Tournament.

"I try to play in two seniors tournaments every year for sure, here and Colorado Springs. This year they're both going at the same time, and there was no question which one I'd come to," said Columbus Clifton Dugger, better known as C.C., better known as Buster, better known as Bus. Longtime Pampa Harvester and area sports fans will remember him for his 33 years of quality officiating of football and basketball games. In fact, there are some who thought for years the championship Pampa basketball teams' starting lineup was Bond, McIlvain, Griffin, Hinkle, Depee and Dugger!! But he was the best whistle-blower around those years, and while the option was always there for a coach to scratch his name from the job, they didn't because they knew he would do an impartial and efficient job.

"The first time I can remember doing a Pampa game was the 1944-45 season. Otis Coffey was coaching and he had Randy Clay and Johnny Campbell. It was a playoff game between Pampa and Borger, the winner to play Amarillo. They played in the old junior high gym down on main street. The two coaches couldn't agree on a second official, so I worked the game alone. I believe Pampa won. My company transferred me to Oklahoma the next year, and then back to Lubbock in 1948, the year I worked for Coach Clifton McNeely the first time. I think McNeely (former PHS coach who won four state big school championships) is the finest coach I ever saw. He disciplined his players, they always knew what to do, and he knew how to handle any situation.

"My company, General Motors, transferred me back to Amarillo, shortly after which I went into school teaching, and then to school administration at Boys Ranch, where I retired in 1982. We live in Clinton, Oklahoma now, although we still own a home in Amarillo, and spend the winters down in the Valley. I still have a farm in Oklahoma, but I don't farm it. And I help out around the pro shop at Clinton when they need assistance."

Any particular games you remember, Bus?
"I remember one game at Borger, hosting Pampa in that old Borger gym. It was standing room only, and the noise was so loud the players couldn't hear my whistle. I got a towel and threw it every time Hobbs came to Pampa. They'd play each other two straight nights, and as the saying goes 'Hobbs would start pressing the minute they got to the city limits.' And there was a football game in 1960 between Pampa and Plainview. Babe Curfman was the Pampa coach. Neither team had won a game, and Plainview finally won (13-6, Bus) and on the last play a Pampa player clipped me hard from behind, knocking me down. I don't know if it was accidental or not."

Dugger was noted for his extremely high tosses on jump balls, the ball reaching almost to the roof of the gym. "I started in 1938, about the last year they'd jump after every basket. I went on into the NIBL (National Industrial Basketball League) which had the Phillips 66ers and all those other great teams with big, tall players. I realized to get a fair tip I had to throw it high. So I practiced and practiced to get where I could toss it high AND straight. I'd always tell the jumpers what I was going to do and that they'd have to time their jump to tip it on the way down.

"I enjoyed every minute of it. I got to travel all over the country in the NIBL, and then I worked the National Junior College Tournament the maximum permissible three straight years. I think I had a lot of advantages over the young fellows officiating today in that I worked so many games all alone. It seems today that each fellow waits for the other to blow the whistle and make the call. I know that each have their zone of responsibility, but anytime they see an infraction they should call it, no matter where it is on the floor.

"These senior tournaments are great. The people you play with and meet are all wonderful folks. I'm playing real well now, had a 79 in the practice round today with four double bogeys. I was playing real bad when the deadline came for sending in my handicap, a 14. I was hooking the ball, so I had my pro give me a lesson and got it all straightened out and I'm playing good now. I tried to get them to move me up from the third flight to a higher one. I don't want to be accused of sandbagging, but they said they couldn't do it. But then, I might shoot an 85 the first round, too."

Opposing fans used to think Pampa was sandbagging them, too, when they'd come to the Green Pit and see Bus Dugger, whistle around his neck, move out onto the court. But all was fair and honorable, just as his attested handicap that got him into the third flight. Now if he can just hit his wedge as high as he used to toss those jump balls.

And if there are any old Harvester basketball fans that want to see Bus and welcome him back to town, go out to the PCC tomorrow and do so. But remember, golfing etiquette demands that you not disrupt the golfers...so booooo only when Bus is shooting.

Welcome back, big guy!

Local American stars lose a heartbreaker

SUNRAY—The Pampa American Little League lost a heartbreaker in the second round of the district tournament here Tuesday night, falling to Dumas 5-2 in three extra innings.

Pampa will try to stay alive in the double elimination tournament in a game against Borger at 8 p.m. Thursday. The winner will meet Dumas Friday night and has to beat Dumas twice to win the tournament championship and advance on to the state tournament.

Quincy Williams turned in another strong performance for Pampa, but suffered his first loss of the season.

He pitched the entire game, struck out 16 batters, walked only three and allowed just two hits.

Pampa took a 2-0 lead after scoring in each of the first two innings. Williams drove in both runs with a single and a double.

But Dumas, which played errorless ball, took advantage of an error to tie the game in the fifth. It remained tied until Dumas scored three more times in the ninth.

Other Pampa hitters included Cedric Wilbon and Paul Brown, who had doubles.

Pampa opened the tournament Monday with a 9-3 victory over Childress, a team Borger bombed Tuesday night after losing its opening game to Dumas, which remains the tournament's only undefeated team.

Paul Cross is expected to start for Pampa Thursday night. Williams would be available to go against Dumas again Friday if Pampa gets past Borger. Tournament rules do not allow a pitcher to pitch two consecutive games.

Buzzard cut by Cowboys

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif.—Tackle Danny Buzzard of Pampa was among the players cut by the Dallas Cowboys Tuesday, according to The Associated Press.

Buzzard, Mike Carmody and Brent Burks were three tackles cut by the team.

Buzzard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Buzzard of Pampa, played college football at Texas Tech University.

Others cuts announced included Steve Jackson, Greg Petty and Rod Rudel, wide receivers; Lance West, Joe Ellis and David DeJarnett, guards; and Kent Untermann, tight end.

In other pro football news, the Philadelphia Eagles announced the signing of linebacker Dwayne Jiles who also played for Texas Tech last year.

Rangers' Oddibe on a streak

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

For a while after the Texas-Rangers called up Oddibe McDowell from the minors, it looked like another case of pushing a young player to the majors too quickly.

McDowell, a 1984 Olympian and the 1984 U.S. amateur player of the year, was hitting .206 after 54 games. But he's on a hot streak now that bodes well for the future.

The rookie center fielder went 5-for-5 Tuesday night and became the first player in the 14-year history of the Rangers to hit for the cycle. He had two singles, a double, a triple, a home run and three RBIs in Texas' 8-4 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Going back to Monday night, he now has eight consecutive hits, tying the club record set by Rico Carty in 1973.

"I think he is finally showing the fans what we knew he could do all along," Rangers Manager Bobby Valentine said.

With Texas ahead 7-4 in the eighth inning, McDowell needed to hit his seventh homer to complete the cycle, but he said he wasn't thinking about becoming the first AL player this season to accomplish the feat.

"I'm not really a home-run hitter, but the home run came and I'm thankful," McDowell said. "I just got a pitch that I could drive and I drove the ball well."

"He had an awesome night," said losing pitcher Neal Heaton, 5-12, who gave up McDowell's first three hits, including an RBI triple that put the Rangers ahead to stay during their five-run fourth inning.

McDowell is batting .500 (11-for-22) during the last five games, improving his batting average to .234.

Angels 2, Brewers 0
Brian Downing homered and Rod Carew had three hits, including an RBI single, to back the five-hit pitching of Kirk McCaskill as California increased its West Division lead to 6½ games.

Downing hit his eighth homer leading off the fourth and Carew had his run-scoring single later in the inning. He now has 2,990 career hits.

McCaskill, 6-6, survived one Milwaukee scoring threat in the fifth inning. The Brewer's got runners on second and third with one out, but McCaskill retired the next two batters on popups to get out of the inning.

Blue Jays 4, Mariners 2
Toronto extended its East Division lead to 3½ games over New York as Doyle Alexander struck out a career-high 11 in eight innings and Damaso Garcia slammed a two-run double to cap a three-run eighth inning against Seattle.

Ernie Whitt's double tied the score 2-2 in the eighth, and Jesse Barfield singled before Garcia's game-winning hit, which gave the Blue Jays their eighth straight victory over the Mariners this season.

Red Sox 3, A's 2
Bruce Hurst pitched a seven-hitter for his fifth straight victory since rejoining Boston's starting rotation last month and Mike Easler and Rich Gedman hit consecutive homers in the second inning against Oakland.

Hurst evened his record at 7-7 as he walked only one and struck out 11, surpassing his career high of 10 set July 3 in Milwaukee.

The A's threatened to tie it in the ninth. Dave Kingman led off with a single but was thrown out by left fielder Jim Rice trying to stretch it into a double.

Royals 5, Yankees 2
Bret Saberhagen improved his record to 11-5, allowing six hits in eight innings, as Kansas City continued to cool off New York.

The Yankees started the series on an 8-2 streak, but Jim Sundberg's three RBIs paced the Royals to their second straight victory.

Sundberg singled in a run in the second to tie the score 1-1, and the Royals went ahead to stay in the sixth on Dane Iorg's RBI double and a bloop single to right by Steve Balboni. Sundberg added a two-run single in the eighth after Mike Pagliarulo cut New York's deficit to 3-2 with his eighth homer in the top of the inning.

White Sox 5, Tigers 3
Britt Burns' string of 19 1-3 scoreless innings ended, but he struck out 11 and scattered six hits to lead Chicago past Detroit despite an 11-strikeout performance by Tigers starter Frank Tanana, 4-10, who pitched an eight-hitter and allowed just two earned runs.

Burns, 11-6, took a 4-0 lead into the seventh, but lost his shutout when Darrell Evans and Alex Sanchez homered in the seventh, sandwiched around a walk.

Twins 5, Orioles 2
Minnesota scored three runs in the first inning, then held on to beat Baltimore.

Garry Gaetti and Kent Hrbek singled in runs and Tom Brunansky hit a sacrifice fly to key the Twins' first off Scott McGregor, 8-8.

John Butcher, 7-9, allowed eight hits and one walk, including a 450-foot homer to Larry Sheets, in 8 1/3 innings to gain the victory. Tim Laudner added a homer for the Twins.

Dodgers extend lead

Hershiser allows Bucs only one hit

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

Perhaps Orel Hershiser has taken a page from the book of Hall-of-Famer Whitey Ford on the subject of near-no-hitters. Ford believed they were great as long as there was no pressure.

"I once had a no-hitter going," Ford joked in an interview several years ago. "But some louse broke it up with a single in the second inning."

That was precisely what happened to Hershiser on Tuesday night, with Pittsburgh's Jason Thompson the culprit with a second-inning single that fell just in front of the Dodgers' leftfielder.

The Los Angeles right-hander can't be faulted for his timing. The victory, coupled with San Diego's 8-1 loss to Chicago, extended the Dodgers' lead to 1½ games over the Padres in the National League

West. Hershiser, 10-3, struck out seven in recording his fourth shutout and sixth complete game of the year. His other one-hitter this year came against San Diego on April 26.

"The win against San Diego was much better," he said. "I had much better stuff. I might have kept them (the Pirates) off balance with my wildness."

The Dodgers gave Hershiser all the runs he needed when they broke a scoreless tie with three runs in the fourth inning against Rick Reuschel, 8-3.

Steve Sax had a two-out, two-run single and Hershiser scored him with a hit of his own. Guerrero, Greg Brock and Mike Scioscia also had run-scoring hits, and Ken Landreaux had three hits and scored twice for the Dodgers.

Cubs 8, Padres 1
Chicago's Rick Sutcliffe wasn't at his best, but it was good enough for a pitcher coming off the disabled list.

"I wasn't 100 percent tonight," said the 1984 Cy Young Award winner, who worked seven innings. "My good hard slider wasn't good and hard. If I've got to throw changeups and curveballs, then I'll throw them."

Sutcliffe, 8-7, went on the disabled list with a groin injury on July 8 and came off prior to the start of the game. He allowed only six hits, walked one, struck out four and got plenty of support from his teammates, who collected 15 hits to hand the Padres their third defeat in a row.

Philadelphia 12, Houston 6
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Second-string catcher Bo Diaz, tired of being a "cheerleader," says he wants to play or be traded. On Tuesday night, he played. Oh, did he play. Diaz hit two home runs and a double, drove in four runs and scored three as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Houston Astros 12-6.

Diaz was joined by Mike Schmidt in the Phillies' 15-hit attack on four Astros pitchers. Schmidt, who has been in a season-long slump, had a home run, a double, a single, three RBIs and three runs scored.

"It's a lot more fun to play the game," said Schmidt, who had two hits Monday night, including a ninth-inning, game-winning homer. He said his home runs the last two nights should dispel rumors he's lost his power.

Expos 4, Braves 2
Jeff Reardon stands alone as the king of the Montreal bullpen, holds the top spot in the major leagues among game savers with 24 and continues to make it look easy.

Fowler gets brief breather

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Todd Fowler is the son of a high school football coach so he is used to being around the sport all year long.

Being a fulltime player is something else, but that's what Fowler has been since he got out of Sam Houston State in Huntsville.

"I'm pretty well used to playing football all year," said Fowler. "I went into the United States Football League coming out of college and it didn't bother me that much."

"Coming directly from the (Houston) Gamblers to the Dallas Cowboys shouldn't be any problem physically. There might be just a little burn out mentally."

Fowler, a fullback for the Gamblers, signed a four-year contract with the Cowboys who are also looking at him as a tight end.

His father, Malvin, was a star for the Texas Christian Horned Frogs in the early 1950s.

Malvin Fowler has been the coach at Van High School for over 20 years.

Todd Fowler was slowed by injuries his final season with the Gamblers which ended earlier this month.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry gave him an extra week off for rest. "I appreciated it," said Fowler. "I needed a little breather."

The Cowboys are hoping Fowler can become a blocking force at fullback.

Food price increases modest, economists say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department economists say food prices are likely to continue a modest upward creep the rest of the year.

On Tuesday, the Labor Department reported that retail food prices in June rose 0.1 percent. All of the increase was due to a 0.6 percent increase in the price of food eaten away from home. Grocery store prices actually dropped 0.2 percent last month, the fourth straight decline.

In a new outlook report written before the June prices were released, USDA economist Ralph Parlett said that 1985 food prices are rising at "a slightly lower rate" than they did last year.

The retail food price gain in calendar 1984 was 3.8 percent. This year, says Parlett's report, food prices are headed for a gain of between 2 percent and 4 percent. The gain in the first half was about 2.5 percent from a year earlier.

"Large supplies of many farm foods, particularly meats, have kept food price increases small this year," the report said. "In addition, the rate of increase in disposable personal income has slowed, reducing the upward pressure on consumer demand."

According to the latest outlook, total production of red meat and poultry this year is expected to about match the 1984 level. Beef and pork output is forecast to drop slightly this year, but larger turkey and broiler production will more than offset the decline.

"Slaughter weights of cattle and hogs have averaged higher than normal this year, contributing to the larger-than-expected production of red meats," the report said. "Also, the number of pigs saved per litter has averaged higher, adding to the number of slaughtered hogs. Poultry producers have increased production in response to a more profitable outlook and lower feed costs."

Thus, the report said, 1985 average retail meat prices probably will be near last year's mark. Beef price are expected to average slightly lower than in 1984, pork slightly higher. Retail prices of turkeys and broilers are likely to average slightly lower.

Supplies of fresh vegetables have been larger this year, despite the late January freeze in Florida. Many vegetables had been harvested prior to the freeze, and imports from Mexico were in abundance.

As a result, prices of fresh vegetables did not rise as much as they did after the Christmas freeze in 1983, the report said. Also, this January much of the damaged acreage was re-planted, which helped keep the supply ample in the spring.

Highway closed for 12 hours

LLANO, Texas (AP) — State troopers closed Texas Highway 71 for 12 hours after a tanker overturned, spilling about 20 gallons of a hazardous substance.

The highway was reopened to traffic a little before 3 p.m. Tuesday, said Keith Ray, Lampasas dispatcher for the Department of Public Safety.

Vinyl acetate, a flammable and toxic substance, remaining in the overturned trucker was loaded into a Union Carbide truck, officials said.

this year have been small because of a reduced apple harvest in 1984, smaller winter pear production, and a freeze-reduced citrus crop.
