French police free 100 hostages from Irish jet

LE TOUQUET, France (AP) — Police stormed a hijacked Irish jetliner with more than 100 people aboard Saturday night and overpowered a man claiming to be a defrocked Trappist monk and demanding publication of a religious manifesto. The freed captives, unharmed, flew back to London where the eight-hour drama began.

No shots were fired as police rushed the aircraft while the hijacker, identified as Laurence James Downey, a middle-aged Australian, was reading a telegram from Irish newspaper editors saying they would publish the manifesto.

Downey had said he would not free his hostages until the international press, and specifically Irish newspapers, agreed to print the nine-page statement handed to authorities earlier through a cockpit window.

The statement included a demand for release by the Vatican of "The Third Secret of Fatima," a message said to have been given by the Virgin Mary to three children in Portugal during an apparition 64 years ago.

Irish Transport Minister Albert Reynolds, who had flown here with 34 other Irish officials aboard a second plane an hour before the police moved in, told reporters Downey had been tricked by being told a door on the plane had to be opened to remove an ill woman.

"He agreed, showing he wasn't a very experienced hijacker," Reynolds said. He said Downey had lived in Dublin since 1978 and had run "an unsuccessful language school and written regularly to the newspapers."

Police in the anti-terrorist squad, who surrounded the aircraft as darkness fell, said they boarded the plane through emergency exits over the windows and the rear doors. They said they overpowered Downey without a fight.

Airport officials said Downey had doused himself with gasoline and threatened to set himself afire, and that moments before the assault he complained of feeling ill.

The freed passengers and crew were served food at the airport restaurant and then reboarded the green and white Aer Lingus Boeing 737 for the flight to London.

Downey hijacked the craft as it approached London's Heathrow Airport on a regularly scheduled flight from Dublin.

The aircraft landed at this small airport near the English Channel and four hours later five women and six children were freed, leaving 97 passengers and five crew aboard.

Downey, a short, stocky man wearing a blue checked lumberjack shirt and gray trousers, was questioned at the airport for about 20 minutes before being driven away in a police van. He appeared calm and left smoking a cigarette and talking to police. It had been feared he was armed with a bomb.

Officials said he was being held at police headquarters in Le Touquet.

Along with publication of the manifesto, Downey demanded refueling of the aircraft here and a flight to Tehran, Iran, officials said. French authorities refused to refuel the plane and Iran said it would not allow the jet to land.

Arab oil exporters urged to pull together on policies

By ABDUL-JALIL MUSTAFA
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT (AP) — The world oil glut is pushing prices down and could precipitate injurious competition among Arab producers, the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries warned Saturday.

It urged its nine member countries to coordinate production and pricing policies, as a hedge against market fluctuations and to avert an early depletion of Arab oil reserves.

OAPEC members are Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Iraq, Bahrain, Libya, Algeria and Syria. Except for Bahrain and Syria, all OAPEC members belong to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

OPEC, which provides 26 percent of the oil used in the United States, decided at a Dec. 16 meeting to allow its members to raise prices about 10 percent to a maximum of $41 per 42-gallon barrel. But because of huge stockpiles in the industrial world, crude is now selling for about $35 a barrel and all indications are that the price will continue to drop.

"Observers seem to agree that the glut mood exhbited recently in world oil markets signals a growing trend which favors buyers' position, as their supply security can still command better deals on long-term crude (oil) purchases," the OAPEC secretariat said in its May bulletin.

It said evidence of a growing strength in "buyers' position" in world markets included the International Energy Agency's plans to reduce consumption targets of its member countries to lower levels than those achieved last year.

Mexico also has decided to reduce the price of its heavy crude oil by $2.50 a barrel, said OAPEC, adding that there has been a decline in free spot market prices.

"Crude oil buyers continue to assume a tough stance in contract renewal talks, maneuvering to minimize prices," OAPEC said.

This was seen as an allusion to protracted negotiations between Kuwait and its three major contract customers — British Petrolem, Royal-Dutch Shell and Gulf Oil — for renewal of contracts that expired March 31.

The three companies have rejected a Kuwaiti surcharge of at least $3 per barrel.

Unofficial reports said Kuwait was considering limiting these companies to about 50,000 barrels a day each. These reports also said Kuwait might cut back its daily production from 1.5 million barrels to 800,000.

Study defines duties of hospital's boards

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a three-part series explaining the new management study recently adopted by Midland Memorial Hospital to delineate powers of the governing bodies.

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

Since the beginning of June 1980, Midland Memorial Hospital has undergone numerous organizational and structural changes. When former administrator Wayne E. Ulrich resigned after nearly 12 years at the hospital, it sparked a chain of managemental confusion.

During the interim between full-time administrators, both hospital boards — the board of directors and board of trustees — took over more responsibilities in the governance game. The hospital's $10 million renovation program was drawing to a close while the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center construction was hitting its peak.

Years of attention to the building programs had left a gap in the overall running of the hospital on a day-to-day basis. In addition, implementing a Tribrook Group Inc. efficiency study in each hospital department was diverting valuable management time away from the daily operations.

one of a series

Somebody had to pick up the pieces.

Following the hiring of a new administrator, the hospital underwent yet one more efficency study — applied this time to the governing bodies. A 60-day review costing $18,000, the study was completed in January and was reviewed for two months. After the study, trustees and directors for the hospital developed specific job descriptions and guidelines for themselves.

THE RESULTING new management agreement between the two hospital boards, based on Tribrook recommendations and approved by each board last week, may be the light at the end of the tunnel.

Probably the group most affected by the new agreement is the board of trustees. Although many of the operational duties assigned the board in March 1978 will remain intact, more specific duties are outlined in the current agreement with the board of directors.

"Perhaps the most major (objective of the study) was to prepare a document that would be adopted by the board of directors and the board of trustees that again on paper clarified the roles of each board," said Ray Branson, who was named as president of the hospital as a result of the new agreement. Before the study, his title had been administrator. Other administrative titles were changed to follow corporate guidelines, as well.

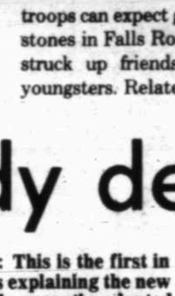
Reagan rides again

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers



HEARST

NEW YORK — The other night President Reagan combined his return to active duty with a reinvigoration of his economic program and a celebration of the first 100 days of his administration.

The President marked these events in a dramatic address to a joint session of Congress, and to America. His words shone with the good humor, dignity, and sense of serious mission that have become so characteristic of him.

All Americans who watched him are as one in rejoicing over our president's speedy recovery. The ebullience of his Tuesday night performance seemed to renew the nation's faith in his leadership and helped us all to push to the background the shocking news of the assassination attempt.

The president's remarks about his good health provided him with an appropriate opportunity to remind us of the poor health of the economy. If there is one thing to be said about those first 100 days of the Reagan regime, it is that the president has been consistent on the issues of reducing taxes, reducing government costs, and eliminating regulations that have been strangling the economy.

It was Franklin D. Roosevelt who made the "first 100 days" a sort of magic phrase. It was the initial period of reckoning for his administration, and for every president since it has been the time to take stock, to appraise a president's post-inaugural performance.

For Ronald Reagan it has been a period of assembling a staff and articulating his economic message to the Congress and the nation. It seems to me he has done both with dispatch, and commendable skill. And don't forget he was hospitalized with an assassin's bullet in him for part of

Make your mark in Midland —and protect yourself, too

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Short of armed guards and a moat, what can people do to protect themselves from burglars?

The answer from local law enforcement agencies is relatively simple and inexpensive. Primarily, they can:

—INSTALL deadbolt locks on all doors.

—LIGHT your property well, using timers when you're gone for extended periods.

—FORM neighborhood associations, if need be, to look out for one another.

—ENGRAVE your valuables with a social security or driver's license number.

—RECORD serial numbers and keep the list in a secure, fireproof place.

—PHOTOGRAPH jewelry and other items that can't be engraved or don't have serial numbers.

—INSTALL an alarm system.

—REPORT suspicious persons or vehicles in your neighborhood.

"PEOPLE NEED TO keep their eyes open and get involved," said Sheriff's Lt. Pat Fuller, noting the city resident who alerted police to someone breaking into a neighbor's house last Monday afternoon.

Two men were apprehended as a result of the call, and more than $100,000 worth of stolen goods taken in several local burglaries during the past year or so was ultimately recovered — the largest haul in police memory.

Law enforcement officials say the feeling among many people is that it can't happen to them. But it can happen to anyone. In fact, it even happened to Lt. Fuller once. And it's happening to more and more people every year.

City burglaries rose from 827 in 1977 to an average of better than three a day in 1980. Rural burglaries are also climbing, with 260 reported in 1980. The 1979 figure was 229.

"Burglaries are difficult to solve," noted Capt. Billy Ray of the police department's detective division. "The national clearance rate isn't good.

"ONE REASON they're up here is the growth of the city. Due to the wealth and prosperity in Midland, we're getting an influx of people who aren't going to work but who are going to try and make their living by stealing."

People pay taxes and, officials say, often feel it's completely up to law enforcement agencies to protect them from criminal activity. But school systems can't be held solely responsible for a child's education, and sheer numbers preclude total police coverage in any given community.

Midland County, for instance, has a population of 90,000. All told, there are some 200 commissioned peace officers (city, county and state) to guard it on a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week basis. That comes out to 450 residents per officer.

Plug in the fact police work in shifts, and it leaves countywide coverage to about 66 officers spread over 1,000 square miles in any eight-hour period.

There are good reasons why police need a complete

Soviets retake Afghan city

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Soviet and Afghan forces blasted Moslem rebel strongholds in Kandahar, Afghanistan's second largest city, sealed it off with tanks and shot people on sight, a reliable Afghan source said Saturday.

An official of the guerrilla United National Islamic Front, which draws its main support from the Kandahar area, said Soviet and Afghan helicopter gunships rocketed and strafed Kandahar last Monday.

He said tanks then gained control of Kandahar streets, ringed the city, and people trying to enter the provincial capital were shot on sight.

The source, reached by telephone in Quetta, southwestern Pakistan, based his information on reports from Kandahar refugees crossing the Afghan border. He asked not to be identified because of possible reprisals to his family.

He said recent arrivals told him helicopters had dropped leaflets on Kandahar warning that anyone riding a bicycle, motorcycle or in a car would be gunned down in the street.

Last Sunday, bodies of shopkeepers and clerks were found alongside their bicycles on a road leading to Kandahar, shot down by troops retaking the city, he said.

Kandahar, a city of 237,000, has been the scene of guerrilla warfare since last summer. Disturbances reached a peak in late April, when the rebels seized major sectors of the city for four consecutive days.

After rejecting a government offer of negotiations, the guerrillas burned down the main post office, a girls' high school and the city hall, reports said.

DPS probing death of Stanton man

STANTON — Abdon Joe Cruz, a 45-year-old Stanton man, was killed late Friday night after he was either thrown from or was hit by a vehicle about 300 feet west of the Stanton city limits.

His body was found on the north curb of U.S. Highway 80.

Martin County Peace Justice F.E. Kennedy pronounced Cruz dead at the scene, which was near the West Way Motel where Cruz lived.

Investigation into the fatality is continuing by the Texas Department of Public Safety. DPS Troopers Alfredo Gutierrez and Wade Turner, both of Stanton, investigated the incident, which was reported at 11:30 p.m. Friday.

An autopsy on Cruz has been ordered to determine the cause of death.

'Only YOU can prevent theft' description — including serial numbers, make and model — of valuables when trying to track them down through factory numbers.

"WE CANNOT ENTER items into the computer if we can't supply it with that information," said Fuller. "Secondly, a person may come in and say, 'That's my TV,' but we can't legally give it back to them without some sort of positive identification. That's frustrating to us and the public alike."

A second method of locating owners is through drivers' licenses. In engraving valuables with drivers' license numbers, Fuller says it's important to do so in the following manner:

Prefix the number with the letters TX, and make sure your driver's license has eight digits. Older licenses have only seven digits, in which case a zero must be inserted between the letters and the seven digits.

That's because DL computers are programmed to accept only eight-digit numbers. And the TX is necessary so authorities who recover property in other states know it belongs in Texas.

The police department's Crime Prevention Unit has a program in which engraving machines are lent to individuals for marking their belongings. In addition, the CPU will visit houses or businesses — county-wide — and conduct security analyses. Both services are free.

"IT'S ALSO important to keep driver's license information up to date," Fuller added. "People sometimes move two or three times and it's hard to find them if that's not reflected (at the license bureau)."

Perhaps the best reason for engraving valuables is that it's difficult for a thief to peddle goods that have ID numbers on them. In fact, it might even dissuade him from stealing them in the first place.

When installing deadbolt locks, Fuller suggests avoiding the ones that have thumb latches on the inside.

"Locked doors may not keep burglars out, but they can break a window, flip the thumb latch and carry the stuff out through the door," he said."Locks that require a key on either side limit the size of items that can be removed, and also limit the number of exit points through which they can be removed.

"A TV set may be hauled out a window, but not furniture or large stereo sets. And it takes them longer to remove things. Burglars operate on a time schedule. They know the longer they're in a house, the more apt they are to get caught."

WITH THE majority of people gone during the day, most residential burglaries occur during that time. Houses are usually cased to determine the number of occupants and what their habits are, which is why police need to be notified of suspicious persons or vehicles in a neighborhood.

"The professional burglar carries a scanner," noted Fuller, "and he's able to monitor police activity. He won't come around a particular area if he knows people there call the police."

While it wouldn't hurt to have a dog around, dogs aren't much use if people aren't home. For one thing, they can be lured away with meat or let out the gate. Even trained guard dogs can easily be killed.

"And dogs can't provide descriptions or license numbers," said Fuller. "I'd rather see one alert neighbor than two trained dogs."

Burglar alarm systems aren't that costly, according to Capt. Ray, and can be linked with the police station, as can panic alarms.

"A burglar isn't going to hit a place with a sign saying, 'This property protected by such and such,' " he added.

Engraving your possessions will not only aid in their recovery if stolen, but might actually discourage someone from stealing them. Engraving devices like this one are available for use at no charge from the police department's Crime Prevention Unit.

RECOVERED PROPERTY whose owner can't be located is, by state law, kept for a specified period of time, then sold at public auction with the proceeds going to the coffers of whichever governmental entity had charge of it.

If police give property back to someone whose insurance company has already paid for it, they're required to notify the company that the property was returned to its client.

"Normally, it becomes the property of the insurance company," noted Ray. "But on this recent deal (Monday), one gentlemen had some keepsakes, so he'll pay the company in order to keep them."

The ultimate cause of most burglaries, authorities agree, is the public itself.

"The burglar must have a market," said Fuller. "If people would start demanding to see receipts and ID before they purchase something at a ridiculously low price, or buy only from reputable dealers, it would greatly reduce the number of thefts we're seeing.

"There's a tendency to rely too much on the police. If people want to curb crime in their community, they cannot afford to live behind closed doors and not get involved."

Three women, three children murdered in D.C. suburb

CLINTON, Md. (AP) — Three women and three children were shot to death Saturday in a home in this Washington, D.C., suburb, Prince Georges' county police said. Police were seeking a man who lived in the home.

One policeman told WJLA-TV of Washington that the scene at the secluded home was "pure carnage, the worst mass murder ever in the county."

Bob Law, a spokesman for the Prince Georges' police, said the killings were not a murder-suicide and robbery was apparently not the motive. WJLA quoted an unidentified police officer as saying police were investigating a "domestic situation" in the case.

Law said police were searching for Ronald Ellis, a resident of the home who was last seen driving in his 1968 Volkswagen. Law said police wanted to question Ellis.

The names of the victims were not released. Law said he could not confirm reports that one of the women was a former District of Columbia police sergeant who was related to the owner of the home.

Duties of hospital boards defined in 1978 has been revised as a result of the recommendations in the Tribrook report. That contract continues the delegation of authority for governance of Midland Memorial Hospital to the board of trustees, which has had that responsibility for many years," Branson said.

FOR THE MOST PART, the elected board of directors watch the cash flow at the hospital — they have the right to set taxes, pay for the county's indigent accounts and supervise the hospital's general operations. The directors will delegate the actual power of running the hospital to the trustees. The trustees, in turn, will delegate the day-to-day functioning of the hospital to management personnel.

"In addition to helping clarify this delegation of governance authority, a document entitled 'Guidelines for Delegation of Authority by Midland County Hospital District to Midland Memorial Foundation' was prepared and adopted," Branson explained.

"This document specifically delineates dollar amounts that the district delegates to the board of trustees within which decisions can be made. The board of trustees can — using its best judgment — make certain financial decisions and know that they have the delegated authority to do so.

"This delegation of authority always keeps in mind the regulations which were delineated in creating the district, so the full intent of the law is always met," Branson said.

"Tribrook gave us a plan that they believed would allow for a more organized coordination of governing officials in the hospital," he continued. "What we had to do through our actions was take the Tribrook recommendations and conform them to the legislation (which created the district). Certain parts of the Tribrook study had to be modified, keeping in mind what was established in the regulations and determining what the directors, in fact, can delegate and what they can't."

WHAT THEY CAN delegate involves the management of the hospital. As defined in the new agreement, the trustees are granted "the general authority to govern, manage and operate the hospital." The directors will be left as the major authority over assets and operations.

Trustees will be required to make monthly, quarterly and yearly reports to the directors on progress, problems and planning. Looking over the shoulder of the administration, the trustees will help in implementing the desires of the directors while continuing to make reports to the directors.

In the Tribrook report, trustees were defined as having the "collective responsibility for the conduct and efficient administration of the affairs of the hospital and the quality of medical care provided."

SPECIFICALLY, the report recommends these basic responsibilities for the trustees:

—To specify the hospital's goals and objectives.

—To control and direct policy making.

—To protect the assets of the organization.

—To appoint a chief executive officer and ensure he meets the goals and objectives of the hospital.

—To ensure maintenance of quality services.

—To guarantee a system of accountability for medical staff, management and trustees.

—To ensure the county's health care needs are met.

Those seven items translate into 26 items in the adopted agreement.

Beginning with the hospital's goals, the recommendation became one requiring directors' approval for changes in the goals.

Under the assurance of hospital assets, the recommendations increase to 10 areas in the new agreement:

—Operating according to budget.

—Providing periodic written financial and progress reports.

—Preparing annual budget.

—Establishing and directing the accounting system.

—Collecting all hospital accounts.

—Recommending room rates.

—Purchasing food, beverages and equipment.

—Recommending purchase or sale of real estate.

—Repairing or replacing equipment and physical property.

—Transferring donations to the district.

RECOMMENDATION on the selection of the chief executive officer rests with the trustees, however, final approval remains with the directors. Responsibility for other employees' recruitment, hiring and training also rests ultimately with the trustees, including general pay scale changes.

Ensurance of quality services set out by the recommendations falls into the category of maintaining legal standards. The trustees are entrusted first with assuring "a high standard of health care," and then with compliance of government regulations, Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals standards and licensing requirements.

In ensuring a system of accountability, the trustees will have joint meetings with the directors on a regular basis, with whom they will cooperate in planning hospital goals. In addition, they will provide a fidelity bond of $500,000 insuring the hospital district against them.

Finally, securing community health care needs involves handling citizen's complaints and allowing for quality indigent care.

In addition to these items, the trustees will also be responsible for initiating legal action for the directors, providing an annual insurance review and providing confidentiality of hospital records.

Editor's Report

One thing that has raised his leadership a cut above the ordinary is that he has surrounded himself with officials with a sense of humor.

It may surprise some to learn that Secretary of State Alexander Haig, who has taken a few lumps in these first 100 days, can laugh at himself. In a talk to newspaper editors in Washington the other day, he referred to the widely publicized misunderstanding between him and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger about what the Constitution says concerning the nation's command structure.

That has all been smoothed over, Mr. Haig told us. "Just the other day Cap sent me an autographed copy of the Constitution."

White House chief of staff, James Baker, also came up with a good one-liner at the same convention. Mr. Reagan does not surround himself with "Yes men," he said. "When the president says no, we say no."

No one can call the Reagan Administration stuffy. The president's men, like the president, have a way of laughing when it is time to laugh, and being deadly serious when the nation's business needs attention. President Reagan was deadly serious Tuesday night when he ended his historic challenge to the nation by quoting Carl Sandburg.

"All we need to begin with is a dream that we can do better than before. All we need to have is faith, and that dream will come true.

"All we need to do is act, And the time for action is now."

The outcome of this political drama hinges on how much support the administration can muster to pass the president's economic program which breaks new ground in the U.S. for the first time in 50 years. A bloc of 45 Democrats, members of the Conservative Democratic Forum, is essential to the solid line-up of Republicans in the House of Representatives for enactment of the president's program.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, a veteran political pro from Boston with years of experience in judging domestic and national issues, has pooh-poohed a late starting effort of some fellow Democrats to substitute their own alternative. A genial chap, whose hulking frame and white thatch of hair conceal a hair-trigger political mind, Speaker O'Neill has conceded that the president will win. And that was before Mr. Reagan's vigorous address to the Congress.

As tradition dictates, Tip O'Neill introduced the president to the assembled congressmen and senators and then sat in back of him next to Vice-President Bush. You may have noticed him nodding understandingly as the president was applauded 13 times during his speech as if this was a confirmation of his views and the mail that he received, running 5-to-1 in favor of President Reagan's package of spending cuts and tax reductions. Yet his outspoken bluntness disturbed many Democratic colleagues who thought his behavior "outrageous" and even non-partisan. Thursday White House sources confided their present nose count shows that the president's proposals could pass by 25 votes in the House. So I'm inclined to think Tip O'Neill knows what he's talking about. A Republican majority in the Senate guarantees a big administration win there.

It struck me that TV is as much a political art form for President Reagan as radio and the fireside chats of another generation were for FDR. Plainly put, he has a great sense of the moment and unerring instinct to reach out to folks who voted for him and who can see him on the screen.

Yet his sense of the dramatic doesn't make the president pompous. His sense of humor is nimble as when he read a letter from an eight-year-old schoolboy, Peter Sweeney, wishing him well quickly so that he wouldn't have to make his speech in his pajamas.

And earlier in his address, after thanking Americans for their get-well prayers, flowers and gifts to him, the president rebutted critics at home and abroad who criticized our way of life. Sick societies, declared the president, don't produce men like our astronauts nor do they produce dedicated secret service agents nor brave police officers and public servants like Jim Brady, his press secretary, wounded with a bullet in his brain. "Sick societies don't make people like us so proud to be Americans and so very proud of our fellow citizens."

President Reagan is back firmly in the Executive saddle and I think The House is smart enough to ride along with him because that's the will of the majority of our people.

Worsening strikes raise tensions in Bermuda

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — Planeloads of American vacationers streamed off this strike-bound island in the sun Saturday as the white-dominated government and the overwhelmingly black labor movement dug in for a potentially explosive showdown.

More than a dozen major hotels, hobbled by staff walkouts, are expected to be shut down by mid-week. This is normally the start of the peak tourist season on Bermuda, a speck of green in the Atlantic 600 miles east of North Carolina.

Occupancy at the lavish resort hotels strung among the island's sandy coves fell below 50 percent by Saturday, and it was expected to dip to near zero by late Sunday, said Lyndon Clay, executive vice president of the Bermuda Hotel Association.

As the strikes spread from the taxis to the hotels to the telephone system, the estimated 12,000 American tourists who were here last week tried to adapt cheerfully, some hiring horse-and-buggy drivers to take them out on the town, others trying to navigate Bermuda's narrow, drive-on-the-left lanes on motorbikes.

But on Friday hotel executives said their supervisory staffs alone could not keep the hotels functioning indefinitely, and they would be closing down.

The damage to the tourism industry has Bermuda's leadership deeply worried. Tourism accounts for 70 percent of the economy of the Manhattan-sized island, a self-governing British colony.

"Our whole future is at stake," Premier David Gibbons told fellow Bermudans on local radio Thursday as he announced the call-up of the the Bermuda Regiment, a 220-man reserve unit, to guard against violence.

Many Bermudans fear a repetition of black rioting that scorched this tiny capital in December 1977.

At least 5,000 people, more than one-sixth the island work force, are believed to be on strike, but the labor dispute directly involves only 1,200 of them — hospital employees, bus drivers, ferry and tugboat crews, postal workers and other government employees. The hotel workers and others have walked off the job in sympathy strikes aimed at pressuring the conservative United Bermuda Party government into meeting its employees' wage demands.

The public service workers want a 38 percent pay hike over two years of a new contract, but the government has offered 29 percent.

Science teacher Billy Gilbreath, far right, leads a pack of conservation-minded Midlanders down the wildflower trail in the new Outdoor Learning Center in northeast Midland.

Outdoor Learning Center: Its 'season' has finally arrived

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A nature trail which was envisioned by Midland conservationists, environmentalists and educators has escaped from the world of fantasy and has entered reality.

It's on a 47-acre spread, which is replete with a pond, worlds of wildflowers and grasses, flying birds and running creatures that are smaller than gnats and bigger than jack rabbits.

The site is the Outdoor Learning Center (OLC) in far northeast Midland and is a wild section of the city's Hogan Park.

The center was long in coming, educator Billy Gilbreath recounted in a recent tour of the area.

"A few times, I must admit," Gilbreath told center supporters at a barbecue prior to the tour, "we were despondent, saddened, because we thought we were paddling the boat all by ourselves."

The early-day paddlers were the Midland U.S. Soil Conservation Service's Dick Hagelstein; the Midland Soil and Water Conservation District's board members; and schoolteachers such as Gilbreath, who is science coordinator at Lee High School, and Dick Standefer, a biology-chemistry teacher.

The dreamers behind the center were "looking around and doing a little more pushing," Gilbreath said. "He (Standefer)...has done an awful lot of pushing."

In recent years, others grabbed hold of oars and joined in on the paddling, and rowing became almost natural. The city of Midland agreed to turned 47 acres of in-town "wilderness" into the OLC; the Midland Independent School District viewed the land for educational use; the SCS and Soil and Water District continued their support, and Midland County threw in funds to aid in operation of the concept.

The city of Midland has signed a 25-year agreement with the Soil and Water District to guarantee the wilderness site for the center.

"We couldn't have done it without y'all," John Braun, president of the Soil and Water District board, told the gathering of about 60 supporters.

The center is to impress school-age youngsters and others with the vital role conservation plays in life and is to inspire students to take serious interest in their book and laboratory studies, such as the sciences, which relate to the outdoors.

Midland's Outdoor Learning Center is a 47-acre area of Hogan Park, replete with a pond, worlds of wildflowers and grasses, flying birds and running creatures that are smaller than gnats and bigger than jack rabbits.

"Without that (conservation of nature resources), our future is nothing," Gilbreath said. The OLC is a move "to preserve and conserve our environment."

Prior to a walk along the trail in the OLC's pond area, Gilbreath talked about the center's physical layout.

"We got a little lake going down here. We've got wildlife, little toads. There really was something living," he assured any skeptics, "because they were hopping about."

Proposals are in the offing to enlarge the OLC.

"As for the future," Gilbreath said, "we've got a lot of big plans," including a laboratory building,for research which, on a smaller scale, may be similar to the ambitious research under taken by the Chihuahuan Desert Research Institute at Alpine-Fort Davis.

"The pushers...have got a lot bigger plans than I have," he said.

Among those "pushers" is conservationist Ed Dwyer.

"We felt a need on our (Soil & Water) board that this community needed an Outdoor Learning Center," Dwyer said.

"Now that I look back, it was fun," said Dwyer, who is chairman of the Soil and Water District's education committee. "But at the time, we were getting a lot of opposition."

Midland County, through Judge Bill Ahders and the commissioners, lent funds to the cause.

"Without their money and support, we wouldn't be anywhere where we are now," Dwyer said.

Future goals include improving and expanding the trails, which were laid out by Burr Williams, and a laboratory and research center to serve "students of all ages."

"How successful we'll be I don't know," Dwyer said. "We'll be in there crowding for it."

"We don't think that we're too ambitious, though it may scare Billy (Gilbreath)."

The OLC planners and pushers envision a first-class center, Dwyer said. "Midland will settle for no less."

Passengers ready to desert ship

ABOARD THE NORWAY (AP) — The SS Norway, the world's largest cruise ship, steamed toward Miami Saturday after its second breakdown in eight months left 1,780 passengers without electricity and water for 24 hours. Some passed the time watching the crew throw chickens to circling sharks. Others fumed.

"This is definitely my first cruise and my last cruise," one woman yelled when all hot food service stopped Friday. She declined to be identified or say how much she paid for the seven-day cruise, which cost as much as $1,450 for some.

Capt. Aage Hoddevik said the Norway received sufficient power to start again at about 4 a.m. EDT Saturday. He insisted the ship was never in any danger during the outage and no passengers had suffered health problems. "Of course, it was not an emergency," he said.

The Norway was expected in Miami Monday after canceling a scuba-diving stop. The Norwegian Caribbean Lines in Miami said the firm was working on a refund program, and that the boiler breakdown was not as serious as the electrical wiring outage that paralyzed the ship for 28 hours in August.

The plush, 15-year-old, 1,034-foot-long ship, formerly the SS France, underwent a $50 million renovation in 1980. But all the luxuries provided little relief for sweltering passengers during the ordeal.

Ralph Doran, 38, of Toronto, bedded down under the lifeboats to get a breeze that his nonfunctioning air conditioner couldn't provide. "If I'd known we were going to camp out I'd have stayed at home and gone to the woods," he said.

Anne Coyne of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., said: "I love this ship and I would go again. It's a real Cadillac but maybe it's a lemon." She said she was grateful the ship was moving again. "I'd use an oar to row it there if necessary," she added after a night in an airless cabin.

Eileen Newton of Fort Lauderdale, noting that many of the passengers had not been able to wash, said, "Now, all we want is the water. That's been the worst part."

Newlyweds James and Barbara Goddard of Arcadia, Calif. slept side by side in deck chairs. "I'm very unhappy. It's a lot of money for sleeping on the deck," Mrs. Goddard said. "It's my honeymoon, too, but we're going to make the best of it."

Crew members served free beer, soft drinks and ice cream to the hot and thirsty passengers throughout the power outage. "I haven't drunk beer in 20 years," said one woman who missed the air conditioning, "but you can only drink Coca-Cola for so long."

There was a run on Scrabble and Monopoly games and decks of cards from the ship's library, and some pasyengers held swimming races in the pool to escape the 80-degree heat.

Others amused themselves watching crew members feed chickens to a school of sharks circling the ship. A few crew members began fishing off the stern until a senior officer told them it was bad form and ordered them to haul in their lines.

Brock says auto agreement 'positive step'

WASHINGTON (AP) — William Brock, President Reagan's trade representative, called Japan's agreement to trim auto exports to the United States a "very positive step" that will benefit American carmakers and consumers while avoiding serious disruption of U.S.-Japanese trade.

"The action offers us the prospect of a good recovery of the domestic automobile industry, and the maintenance of a very healthy free trade and expanding trade" between the two countries, Brock said at a news conference Saturday after returning from talks in Japan.

Japanese officials announced Friday that Japan's manufacturers would reduce 1981 auto shipments to the United States by 7.7 percent to 1.68 million, down from last year's 1.82 million.

In the second year of the two-year accord, the ceiling would increase in proportion to any rise in sales by U.S. automakers, which have been urging import curbs to give them time to retool their plants for production of fuel-efficient autos.

Brock told reporters: "With regard to the automobile action taken by the Japanese government, I think it's a very forthcoming and positive step that was obviously not easy for the government to do. But it was one that was taken with full knowledge of the overall importance of the trading relationship between these two nations."

"What we have achieved, I think, is the best of both worlds," the top U.S. trade negotiator said.

He said U.S. auto manufacturers would have the benefit of "some predictability" in levels of Japanese competition, while the Japanese would be able to boost their car sales "if we can restore our domestic economic health."

Brock noted estimates that American carmakers will have to raise an additional $12 billion to $14 billion in capital funds over the next three years to invest in new plants and equipment.

With the Japanese agreement, he said, "I think our companies now have the possibility of being able to acquire that capital as soon as they need it."

Brock also said he believed the agreement would not restrict Japanese car sales enough to cause a sharp jump in overall auto price levels in this country.

"I think that in the final analysis, the American consumer will be far better off" than if Congress were to impose tight import quotas, he said.

Government and industry experts predicted Friday that Japan's agreement to reduce auto shipments to the United States would cost small-car buyers in America an extra $200 to $400, both for imported and domestic makes. A typical Japanese car now costs just under $7,000 in the United States.

Prince gets warm Virginia greeting

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Britain's Prince Charles, speaking Saturday at the College of William and Mary, called for a rededication to learning and a return to the traditional values behind centuries of British-American friendship.

Noting that he was speaking only a few miles from Yorktown where the surrender of Lord Cornwallis in 1781 assured America's independence from English rule, Charles said the common heritage lives on and should light the way to the future.

"The common love of justice, liberty, rule of law and the determination and the courage to defend the right ... was inherited and has remained one of the most powerful factors in the friendship and the understanding which exist between our two countries," he said.

"So far as Virginia is concerned, there will always be an England," responded Gov. John Dalton. Virginia was England's first colony in America.

Charles drew applause, smiles and laughter throughout his address, as well as standing ovations at its close and as he was invested as an honorary fellow of William and Mary, which was founded by his ancestors

The only reminder of the strife in Northern Ireland was a small sign hanging from a dormitory window saying, "Free Sands," a reference to Bobby Sands, an Irish Republican Army member who was reported near death on the 63rd day of his hunger strike at Maze prison.

Europeans seek arms commitment

ROME (AP) — European officials preparing for this week's NATO foreign ministers' meeting hope the United States will agree to begin talks with the Soviet Union on cutting back nuclear missiles in Europe.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who began private meetings here Saturday before the conference opens Monday, declined comment on details of the Reagan administration's new thoughts on arms control talks.

Western European governments are being pressured by anti-nuclear demonstrators and political opponents to seek talks that would counterbalance a 1979 decision to deploy 572 American cruise and Pershing II missiles.

Some ministers were expected to urge Haig to announce a starting date for talks, going beyond his previous assurances of a U.S. commitment to negotiate.

The pressure is strongest in West Germany, where members of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's own party are against deployment, and in the Netherlands, where general elections come up this month.

Panel 'sleeping on' suggestions

Courthouse quarters remain cramped

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Fate of the Midland County Courthouse came under scrutiny late last week when a blue ribbon ad hoc committee threw out possibilities for solving the county government's growing physical plant needs in a booming city.

Not one solution was agreed upon.

The committee's considerations included:

—Razing the old courthouse and building a new one. But the proposal to turn the 50-plus-year-old remodeled courthouse into rubble and building a new one to satisfy the county's needs was "tabled." A new courthouse would entail a multi-million-dollar bond issue, about which Midlanders haven't been too keen.

—Leaving the courthouse alone and building a new annex 1½ blocks to the east of the downtown courthouse. The proposal, depending on how ambitious it is, may call for a bond issue but nowhere near the amount needed for a new courthouse.

—Building a multi-level parking garage and topping it off with offices, including the tax district and other offices not relating to the judicial system. That, too, would suggest another bond issue and, hence, a tax increase.

—Building a new "courthouse," possibly along Baird Street and between Illinois and Texas avenues, and converting the courthouse into offices for non-judicial matters.

—Constructing a city-county building in a joint venture between the two governments.

—Excavating and building underground parking despite the rising water table, which metropolises such as Houston and New Orleans have dealt with successfully.

—Shucking those proposals and shifting a courthouse site from the core of downtown Midland to just north of the George Mahon Federal Building.

BUT THE COMMITTEE, headed by lawyer John Hyde, opted to "sleep on" the proposals before recommending any one or combinations thereof to the Midland County Commissioners.

Former commissioner Bill Heck seemed to favor the idea for a new courthouse. He was critical of the Commissioners' Court's spending $1.9-plus million on courthouse renovation in the early 1970s. But by then, he was off the court.

"It was an unfortunate mistake," he said of the courthouse's reworking, which including adding the jailhouse on the fifth floor.

"The citizenry will not stand for another mistake," said Heck, who served on the Commissioners' Court from 1964 to 1969 and opted to retire from public life.

"I thought it was a mistake (then) and time has proven me right."

None of the commissioners was there to defend the "mistake."

However, Heck conceded that omens for a new petroleum-boom era in Midland and the Permian Basin apparently was not fully foreseen in the late 1960s and early 1970s. He referred to the possibility of a joint city-county governmental building, which apparently had been considered at one time.

"Although we would have probably under-built," Heck said, "no one knew the Arabs were going to help us (by hiking the price of oil and eventually adding to Midland's economic upswing.)"

Discussion about razing the old courthouse and bringing in a new one was set off by Tom Reynolds. At the same time, he suggested implementing a proposal by Donald S. Johnson to build a six-to-10-story parking garage and constructing the courthouse annex on top of the garage at the Baird Street location.

"THIS IS POOR USE of valuable property if it is only for (the) Courthouse Annex," said Johnson, a certified public accountant who is not on the committee. He said he investigated the cost factor of building a high-rise parking garage but, at $3,500 per car space, the construction would be "too costly" for private investment, he said.

Johnson, who proposed other means, including revenue bonds, to finance the high-rise garage, said adequate parking would result in saving Midland's downtown (retail) industry.

The proposal for razing the courthouse and building a new one drew interest and concern, such as how county business would be conducted while a new courthouse was under construction.

"They could make do," said Heck. "People would suffer a little bit...."

FURTHER TALK about converting the existing courthouse to non-judicial office space and constructing another building for the courts and adjunct offices attracted concern.

"What would that do for the image of the courthouse?" asked Fred Nelms.

"I think that is a serious problem," responded Hyde.

"Well, we've become a more litigious society," said lawyer Reagan Legg, "and we do need more places for the courts. We can get used to it," he said of housing the judiciary outside the traditional courthouse.

Hyde also said he thought the committee "ought to consider" a building solely for the courts and the accompanying county and district clerks' offices, and the county and district attorneys' quarters. He viewed District Attorney Vern Martin's office as the "most cramped" office in the courthouse.

"It think it would be unwise to split up the courts," Hyde said.

Discussion barely nudged on the sheriff's department and the jailhouse, although the jail is closely linked to the criminal phase of the judiciary. Past ad hoc meetings have dealt with fate of the jail and if it and the sheriff's office should be in a separate building or be part of the courthouse.

"The truth of the matter," ventured Legg, "the jail is not over-crowded now." Other quarters in the courthouse and the existing annex, however, appear cramped.

The next open meeting of this committee is to be announced by Hyde and County Judge Bill Ahders.

Reagan will have his way

in House, AP survey shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan apparently has enough votes to assure a major victory for his economic program when the Democratic-controlled House votes on a 1982 blueprint this week, an Associated Press survey shows.

The survey, conducted by telephone as Congress returned from its two-week Easter recess, shows at least 29 Democrats will support Reagan's budget over an alternative being pushed by their party's leadership.

The 29 votes, coupled with GOP leadership claims that only one Republican will buck the administration's wishes on the vote, would enable the president to chalk up a narrow, two-vote victory for his economic recovery program.

But in addition to the 29, five more Democrats said they were leaning toward a vote for the president's package, and another 12 Democrats said they were undecided which way to cast their votes.

Administration supporters privately count some of the 12 as definite "yes" votes on the president's side.

The budget blueprint Reagan is endorsing is tailor-made for the deep spending cuts he is asking for, as well as for his plan for three-year across-the-board cuts in personal income taxes.

Decisions about the actual cuts and the precise shape of the tax bill will have to be made later. The budget plan itself merely sets guidelines for Congress to follow as it drafts spendings and tax legislation for the 1982 fiscal year.

The plan the White House is backing calls for spending of $688.8 billion and a deficit of $31 billion. It envisions a balanced budget in 1984.

The Democratic alternative calls for spending next year of $714.5 billion, but a lower deficit of $25.6 billion. The Democratic-backed bill calls for a smaller tax cut than Reagan wants for 1982, and does not guarantee tax cuts in 1983 and 1984, as the president's plan would.

In general, the Democratic-backed plan calls for more spending on social programs and slightly less on defense, although many Democratic leaders are supporting an amendment to bring the defense budget to the president's level.

The showdown votes are expected in the House Tuesday or Wednesday. The results of the AP survey generally were in keeping with private assessments made Friday by Republicans and Democrats alike.

One Republican aide said the GOP could count on at least 25 Democrats, a figure said to be consistent with private estimates by Reagan administration lobbyists.

An aide to one Democratic House leader agreed the president is likely to win, perhaps by a wide margin.

This aide speculated that if Reagan clearly demonstrates he has the votes he needs as the roll call progresses, Democrats will flock to his side rather than oppose him in a futile cause.

The AP survey was conducted among the 47-member Conservative Democratic Forum, a group made up largely of southerners, and among other Democrats whom various sources said mightlbe inclined to support the president.

he Democrats ave a majority of 242-190. But the party probablly will lose one vote before the budget showdown when Rep. Raymond F. Lederer, D-Pa., convicted on the bscam investiation, resigns his seat Tuesday.

Lederer's resignation will whittle the Democratic majority to 51 seats, meaning that a switch of 26 party members to the Republican side will assure Reagan of his triumph.

Any Republican defections would have to be offset by Democratic votes to enable Reagan to claim his victory, of course.

Republican leaders say they believe the lone GOP defector will be Rep. James Jeffords of Vermont. Officially, Jeffords is uncommitted.

Several other Republicans also remained uncommitted over the weekend, including Reps. Claudine Schneider of Rhode Island, Bill Green of New York, Lyle Williams of Ohio, Carl Pursell of Michigan and Charles Dougherty of Pennsylvaina.

Water works turns off taps

COVE, Ore. (AP) — A private water company, angry at townspeople because they refused to buy the company's antiquated water system, has turned off the taps.

More than 100 homes were affected by Friday's shutoff. The town, about 10 miles east of La Grande in northeast Oregon, has 460 residents.

But despite the shutoff, "we're getting along all right," said City Council member Merton Loree.

Edwards peddles president's plan (and politics)

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

In terms of time, Dr. James Edwards is a youngster in the perpetual battle of politics.

His first interest was in oral surgery and he became an expert in that field. But fate dictated a different path for him.

The Charleston, S.C., doctor was invited to a precinct meeting one year and, intrigued by something of which he knew nothing, he went. "I had never heard of a precinct meeting and sometimes I wish I still didn't know," he laughed.

Speaking at the meeting was Texas Sen. John Tower and his words had an effect upon Edwards. Since then, Edwards has been elected the first Republican governor of his native Dixie state, and today he is serving under President Reagan as secretary of the Department of Energy.

The keynote speaker for the Midland Chamber of Commerce annual banquet Friday night, Edwards peddled the president's economic recovery program to the 700-plus audience in the Midland Center. But he tied the recovery of the country's economy to future programs and productivity of the energy business. There won't be one without the other.

The banquet also saw the recognition of incoming and outgoing officers and directors of the chamber with Ray Moudy, past president, doing the presentations.

GARNERING SPECIAL recognition was Jno. P. Butler, senior chairman of the board of the First National Bank.

Jno. B. Butler

The energy secretary exudes southern charm — he has the traditional warm smile and slow drawl that is inherent in a native from South Carolina. And like many southerners who hate to acknowledge their loss in the Civil War, Edwards jokingly refers to that battle as the "Great War of Northern Aggression."

Being a member of the Cabinet "isn't all romance," Edwards said in beginning his talk. But he is confident Reagan can win the fight for his economic recovery program.

"He believes it's a fight worth fighting," summarized Edwards.

The problems today stem from a federal government "that over the past two decades has taxed too much, spent too much too foolishly, interfered too much in the private sector and printed too much money," he said.

Federal regulations fill 100,000 pages, he said, explaining that it takes Americans 800 million hours to fill out forms for Washington.

Reagan's economic program of spending and tax cuts can work together "to restore incentives to people to work and save more and thus provide the capital for business to invest to create more jobs, greater productivity and renewed prosperity, unhampered by federal obstructions," he explained.

He criticized the special interest groups who have been lobbying to get "just one part" exempted, for with alterations, the program could fail to achieve its goals.

THESE PRINCIPLES which guide the administration, said Edwards, also guide development of energy policy. "We need to develop to the fullest all of our domestic energy resources, to reduce our dependence on imported oil. The best way to do this is through a free market economy."

But the drive for more energy production won't overshadow the need for conservation, he pointed out. "Conservation is, after all, the first building block of any sensible energy policy."

His comprehensive plans for the Department of Energy involve deregulating the energy industry, rebuilding the nuclear industry program, restoring financial health to electric utilities, encouraging development of a synthetic fuels industry and continuing research of renewable energy resources, such as wind, solar and geothermal.

"JOBS, WORK, PROFIT...these form the backbone of the American economy and these are what we must have," he summarized.

Earlier in the evening when introducing Butler for special recognition, Moudy said, "For 54 years, Butler has been a distinguished civic and business leader in our community. He has been one of Midland's stauchest supporters."

Moudy also looked back to the year that Butler was president of the Midland chamber — 1947. Reading from a 1947 newspaper article reporting what the chamber had done at its recent meeting, Moudy related that after World War II, pork production in Midland County had almost disappeared, causing concern. The chamber purchased a boar and five pigs and, at that meeting were planning to "redistribute the resulting small pigs."

MOUDY ALSO introduced a video presentation titled "Challenge of the 80s" which looked back on Midland's history, its bad times and the unpredictable future growth. It was written and produced by Mike McLaren of KNFM in cooperation with KMID-TV.

Bill Ortloff, new president of the chamber, outlined what he foresees as his year of work.

"The chamber has a challenge ahead of it. We as a chamber will continue to be a leading instrument in the growth of the city."

Volunteers again search Atlanta riverbank as 26th victim buried

ATLANTA (AP) — Volunteer searchers paddled along the Chattahoochee River and peered into inlets for clues that might lead to the killer Saturday as mourners buried a 21-year-old black man whose body was found in the river's murky waters.

The Jimmy Ray Payne, the latest victim in the string of 26 slayings of young blacks, was pulled from the Chattahoochee on Monday. Medical examiners said he had been asphyxiated.

Payne had "paid his dues" by serving time in prison, the Rev. Raleigh Rucker said in a eulogy.

"Life is designed where some folk don't even see anything good that we do," Rucker told 75 mourners at Mt. Patmos Baptist Church in suburban Decatur. "They'll go back 20 years and dig up all the things he ever did." Payne had an extensive criminal record.

Payne was buried in Kennedy Memorial Gardens, a small cemetery where seven other victims were buried.

Meanwhile, members of a local canoe club piloted five boats down a 28-mile section of the river Saturday, while 50 stick-toting searchers organized by the United Youth Adult Conference poked along the banks and surrounding roads.

Eight victims have been pulled from area rivers since the series of slayings began in July 1979, five from the Chattahoochee. Several of the victims were not reported missing until their bodies were found. A 10-year-old boy remains missing.

Search coordinator Roderick Smith told the volunteers Saturday to look for clothes and other clues, reminding them that many of the bodies were clad only in undershorts or were naked. Searchers were given lists of clothing worn by the Chattahoochee victims.

In four hours on the river, the canoeists found nothing but a black leather jacket. Timothy Hill, 13, whose body was found in the river March 30, was wearing a black leather jacket when last seen. Police officers at the scene said the jacket was turned over to the special task force formed to investigate the killings.

The search for suspects in the slayings is turning up many people who have a "morbid fascination" with the cases and are collecting newspaper stories about the crimes, an investigator said Saturday.

Southeastern police departments are frequently calling the task force to report that collections of newspaper articles about the crimes have been found during investigations of other cases, the investigator said.

Investigators were called to rural Catoosa County on Friday after two men were arrested with a cache of guns, disguises and "a stack of Atlanta Journals a foot-and-a-half thick. They all had a front page story on the discovery of one of the bodies in Atlanta," said Harold Groover, chief investigator of the Catoosa Sheriff's Department.

"We don't see any reason to connect these men to the Atlanta cases," Groover said after task force members investigated. "But they're still being looked at."

Groover said Georgia Bureau of Investigation agent Robbie Hamrick, a leader of the task force, told him similar reports are flooding in from all over the Southeast.

"Apparently they are saving the papers for whatever morbid reasons," Groover said. "They're beginning to find them all over the Southeast. A lot of them are racists."

Extradition approved by governor

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Gov. George Busbee signed extradition papers Saturday to return to New York a white Army private reportedly charged in the slayings of three black men in Buffalo, N.Y.

The papers were rushed to Muscogee County Sheriff Gene Hodge by a state trooper at the request of Erie County, N.Y., District ttorney Eward Cosgrove, who is trying to speed up the extradition of Pvt. Joseph G. Christopher, 25, of Buffalo, a spkesman fo the governor said.

"There was some need, expressed by the district attorney in Buffalo, to expedite it," spokesman Duane Riner said.

Cosgrove said he wants to speed up the extradition process, possibly arranging a hearing Monday. But Georgia prosecutors and a source close to the investigation said it is unlikely that Christopher's attorneys would agree to a change in a court hearing date, now scheduled for next Friday.

"It can be waived by the prisoner should he desire to leave, but I've received no indication of that," Muscogee County District Attorney William Smith said Saturday.

Christopher's attorneys, Kevin Dillon and Mark Mahoney, returned to Buffalo last Thursday and did not plan to return to Georgia until this coming Thursday, said a source close to the investigation, who asked not to be identified.

Superior Court Judge John Land ordered the May 8 hearing last Thursday after Christopher's attorneys told him in a closed hearing their client did not want to return to New York, Muscogee County Chief Deputy Jim McLendon said.

Christopher was transferred from the stockade at Fort Benning to the Muscogee County jail last week.

Diplomats trying to defuse Syrian face-off with Israel

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Arab League army chiefs announced Saturday that they were lining up behind Syria in its face-off with Israel in Lebanon. Behind the scenes, diplomats reported intense efforts to defuse the crisis.

The army chiefs, meeting in Tunis, said they had agreed on measures to support Syria and the Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon against further Israeli attacks. The announcement did not say what measures would be taken.

At the same time, President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, which was expelled from the Arab League for signing the Camp David peace treaty with Israel, appealed to all Arabs to unite "to save Lebanon" and avert a "catastrophe" in the Middle East.

Sadat blamed Syrian "maneuvering" and Arab passiveness in the face of Lebanese bloodletting for giving Israel a chance to step in and said, "Israel's intervention escalates the situation making it extremely dangerous for the whole region."

An undeclared cease-fire was observed in Lebanon by the Syrian army and the rightist Christian Lebanese forces for a fourth successive day.

For the previous month, the two forces had been battling in the capital Beirut, the Syrian-besiged city of Zahle 30 miles to the east, and the snow-streaked mountains in between.

An International Red Cross plane with eight tons of medical supplies Saturday made the first landing in 11 days at the shell-pocked Beirut International Airport. Red Cross spokesman Nicolas Sommer said it took three days to arrange with all parties to the Lebanese fighting to allow the landing — and then the plane was allowed only an hour to complete its mission.

Sadat condemns Israel's actions

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat appealed Saturday for Arab unity in Lebanon, blaming Syrian "maneuvering" and Arab passiveness for allowing Israeli military intervention.

MX missiles won't find home in Texas

DALLAS (AP) — The controversial MX missile system probably will not be located in the Texas Panhandle and Eastern New Mexico, U.S. Sen. John Tower told a meeting of Texas broadcasters Saturday.

Fielding questions from the Texas Associated Press Broadcasters, Tower, R-Texas, said "the odds are about 300-to-1" against a plan to put the defense system in Texas and New Mexico.

"It's not cost effective," he said.

The Air Force recently conducted public hearings on plans to base MX missile silos in either Nevada and Utah or Texas and New Mexico.

Reagan, Suzuki meet this week for first time

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki of Japan, who meets President Reagan for the first time in Washington this week, reached the summit of power by not making political waves.

Suzuki, who is due to arrive in New York Monday before going to Washington for his meetings with Reagan Thursday and Friday, was born in a small northern Japan fishing port on Jan. 11, 1911. He once said he would have been satisfied with a career as chief of a local fishery office. His father was a fisherman.

His modest ambitions were a major reason he vaulted into the prime minister's post after the unexpected death of his predecessor, Masayoshi Ohira, in the midst of an election campaign last June 12.

A little-known functionary in the Liberal Democratic Party that has governed Japan for the past 30 years, Suzuki emerged as a compromise candidate to head the party and the government when party kingmakers could not agree on which of several more prominent contenders should be chosen.

Known as "Zenko the Buddha" because of his moon face and tranquil demeanor, Suzuki had served in the Diet (parliament) for 33 years, held a number of party administrative posts, and was noted for his skills in mediating disputes within the faction-riddled party.

Outside parliament, he is a middling-good golfer and practices calligraphy — or Japanese brush-painting — as a hobby.

He is a rarity among modern-day Japanese prime ministers; never having held the three most important jobs in the hierarchy — minister of foreign affairs, finance or international trade and industry.

Political observers quickly labeled Suzuki as an interim prime minister who would last at most two years, or until one of the party faction leaders hammered out enough support to elbow him aside.

However, since his formal election as prime minister by the Diet last July, Suzuki has won wide respect for his "politics of harmony" and indicates he has no intention of relinquishing his post in the near future.

With his party holding a solid majority of 286 to 225 over the combined opposition, Suzuki has pushed reform of Japan's unwieldy, debt-ridden bureaucracy and promoted programs to reduce its heavy reliance on imported oil.

He has treaded cautiously — but with some success — in the tricky paths of foreign relations. While most new prime ministers make a Washington pilgrimage the first order of diplomatic business, Suzuki went first to Southeast Asia, and was warmly received in an area where Japanese leaders in the past have been stoned.

He has been a strong but not servile U.S. ally. Japan for the most part stood fast behind the American economic boycotts of Iran, after the U.S. embassy takeover in November, 1979, and of the Soviet Union, after its military intervention in Afghanistan the following December.

His "politics of harmony" nothwithstaning, Suzuki sartled U.S. news correspondents last month when, in language uncommonly candid for any Japanese leader, he criticized the White House for ending the U.S. grain embargo against the Soviet Union without consulting Japan or offering any clear explanation of the timing.

Cambodian leaders win first election

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Radio Hanoi announced Saturday that Cambodia's pro-Vietnamese leaders won overwhelming victories in the first national election since Vietnam invaded Cambodia in late 1978 and helped rebels overthrow the Pol Pot regime.

Although final nationwide result of Friday's voting were not expected until Tuesday, Vietnam's official Radio Hanoi said first returns gave President Heng Samrin a 99.5 endorsement in his district in the capital of Phnom Penh while Communist Party chief Pen Sovan received 99.53 percent.

Cambodia's 3.5 million voters were presented with a carefully pruned list of 148 candidates for 117 assembly seats.

Chief Justice Stephen Preslar
...addresses Midland County Bar Association

'Get off your apathy...'

Preslar issues call for involvement

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Apathy and ignorance, more so than the threat of a military overthrow, may be the downfall of the United States, Chief Justice Stephen Preslar of El Paso said Friday to the Midland County Bar Association in Midland Country Club.

"Knowing what is going on and how to act with knowledge" was Preslar's prescription for growing national indifference which could lead to demagoguery.

"All we have to do," he assured his fellow lawyers, "is to get off our apathy and put the 'we' back in 'We the People.' "

The Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights and the U.S. Constitution would never have evolved "if our forefathers had been apathetic," he said.

"An apathetic Paul Revere would have never saddled up," said Preslar, who was speaking on the occasion of Law Day. That celebration was started in 1958 when the American Bar Association sought to counter the May Day celebrations of the Iron Curtain world wherein the "laws of man" mete out injustice. Law Day affords a "pause and take recognition...of the great system of laws" in this country.

The Law Day, which this year is keyed to the theme "Law: Language of Liberty," is to show the "difference between the laws of man and rule by law."

The U.S. Constitution, which Preslar described as "that wonderful document," and the Bill of Rights are the "contract between people and the government."

People are the "governed" who govern themselves, he said.

"...The governed govern themselves and set the laws and patterns by which they will be governed," said Preslar, who was Upton County attorney at Rankin before being appointed to the Texas Court of Civil Appeals. He has been chief justice of the 22-county El Paso District of that appellate court since 1973.

Laws are heritage and are the "product of men who have gone before us," Preslar said. "Our laws are deeds of men."

He saluted those men and women who "laid down their lives for ..berty" and said that their banner would be carried on.

"We have kept the faith," he said. "The heritage they have handed to us we have sought to maintain."

The chief justice cautioned against complacency, particularly about the "inalienable rights" which could be usurped by demagoguery and dictatorship through apathy.

"It's possible it (rights) could be lost by ignorance, through indifference and apathy."

The chief justice turned to history to illustrate his premise. He allowed that the people's "ignorance of what was going on" led to the war machine developed by Germany's Adolf Hitler and Italy's Benito Mussolini in the 1930s and early 1940s.

Similar ignorance may be covering this nation like an ominous cloud.

"We are as contented as the Carnation cow," he charged.

He said the American populace must be aware and get informed of governmental happenings and act to preserve freedom, liberty and rights.

"Congress can vote to spend billions of dollars, and we don't bat an eye."

Apathetic Americans should work at shedding their indifference, get informed and involved and registered to vote in elections. But just voting doesn't ensure freedom and liberty.

"And if registered, he (the voter) does not (always) have the information to vote right," he said.

"Democracy is 'we the people' "...who must "keep the system of laws we have going," Preslar said. "The philosophy of 'Let George do it' won't work." His example in that instance was Don Yarborough, an elected Texas judge who was removed from office for malfeasance.

"People are failing to exercise their right to vote," the chief justice said.

New use for cotton puts promoters in orbit

Cotton is on top of the world again.

Once the king of all fibers and the textile-mills' No. 1 spinning yarn, this fluffy white fiber was made into in-flight suits worned by astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen in their recent space outing in the Columbia Space Shuttle.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) chose the "Fire Stop" cotton for uniforms over an array of synthetic fibers because of its "excellent flame-resistant properties and its comfort."

The cotton-in-orbit idea was promoted by Cotton Inc., the marketing-promotional arm of cotton producers.

COLLEGE STATION — The U.S. Department of Agriculture has denied a petition which requests a USDA hearing on pricing of reconstituted milk under all federal milk market orders.

Petition for the hearing was from the Community Nutrition Institute, a Washington, D.C.-based non-profit organization which specializes in food and nutrition issues, and from a milk processor and three consumers.

Reconstituted milk may be made by adding water and butterfat to dry milk.

Petitioners had requested that reconstituted milk processed by handlers be placed in a lower price classification.

LUBBOCK — The U.S. Senate Committee's mark-up of the cotton section on a 1981 farm bill contains provisions which could cost High Plains farmers millions of dollars in revenue over the 1982-85 life of the proposed bill.

An amendment offered by U.S. Sen. Howell Heflin of Alabama would mandate that micronaire discounts in 1982 be calculated on a one-to-one basis and would give equal weight to the previous year's loan schedule discounts and the August-March average of discounts quoted in the nine-spot markets.

"Such a procedure would have a drastic effect on the loan values of our cotton," said Donald Johnson, executive vice president of the Plains Cotton Growers Inc. of Lubbock. "It is not justifiable in the mind of any reasonable person, and this organization will fight it every step of the way through Congress."

AUSTIN — A federal grant for $198,200 has been awarded the Texas Department of Agriculture for continuation of the Cattlex project, according to Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

Cattlex is an electronic marketing system for cattle and links a score of terminals in feedlot, auction market, and order-buying locations throughout Texas.

Researchers on the project are Texas A&M University's Tom Sporleder and Dr. Ernest E. Davis.

"Cattlex is a centalized remote access cash market for feeder cattle," said Brown.

Brilab trial, in sixth week, facing delays

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Brilab bribery-conspiracy trial is six weeks old, but the jury has yet to hear any evidence as the judge and lawyers have been bogged down in procedural and technical matters.

The case is in recess until later this week to allow the judge to study some of the questions, and more pretrial motions are expected that could create further delays.

One of the latest questions — whether the jurors should be allowed to read a transcript of 35 hours of secretly recorded conversations as the tapes are played in court — has prosecution lawyers nervous and the defense hopeful.

U.S. Attorney John Volz contends that if jurors do not have a transcript to read as the tapes are played they will miss some of the important phrases. Even worse, they may be unable to identify the voices they hear.

The defense contends that all the jurors need is to hear the conversations, and that if they can't understand, that's too bad for the prosecution.

Brilab is the code name the FBI gave its year-long undercover operation aimed at determining whether bribery was involved in the business of selling large insurance contracts to state governments and labor unions.

It resulted in the indictment of reputed organized crime head Carlos "Little Man" Marcello, 71,

Village Lodge Success Story Continues

ADVERTISEMENT

SPECIAL

There are a number of reasons for visiting Ruidoso. Whether it be for the horse races, the charm, the mountains, or rest and relaxation, the place to enjoy it all is the Village Lodge.

Last winter, Jack Stahl announced the opening of Village Lodge, located at Innsbrook Village on Alto Highway across from the Ranger Station. Each of the 32 units at Village Lodge is a three-room suite containing living room, fully equipped kitchenette, bedroom and bath. In addition, each suite features a woodburning fireplace, wet bar and two color TV's with in-room movies.

"Each one of our suites is ideal for up to four persons," said Stahl. "The living room contains a hide-a-bed and the bedroom can be closed off for privacy. We've planned Village Lodge to be the utmost in resort living," Stahl continued. "Our guests have full use of all Innsbrook Village facilities such as swimming, tennis, golf and trout fishing in the stocked pond. Initial occupancy rates have been very high so reservations are necessary, especially during this racing season," said Stahl.

For information and reservations, call (505) 257-9021 or write Village Lodge, P.O. Box 2301, Ruidoso, New Mexico, 88345, for free color literature.)

Abscam may see reversals

NEW YORK (AP) — Prosecutors can claim a clean sweep of 18 Abscam trial convictions, with Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr. the latest to be found guilty. But they've lost the only post-trial decision, and more reversals may be on the way.

Within the next month or two, U.S. District Judge George C. Pratt, who presided over Williams' 4½-week trial in Brooklyn, will issue a ruling on whether the government violated the due process rights of seven others convicted in the Abscam inquiry, including four men who were House members when indicted.

Similar rulings are pending before two judges in Washington and another judge in Brooklyn concerning seven others convicted of Abscam offenses.

The rundown on the convicted: one senator — only the fourth convicted of a crime while in office; six congressmen — five now out of office, the last apparently on his way; the mayor of Camden, N.J.; three Philadelphia city councilmen; a former Immigration and Naturalization Service investigator; two salesmen; two businessmen; and two lawyers.

U.S. District Judge John P. Fullam in Philadelphia has invalidated the convictions of two of the councilmen on grounds of entrapment and "governmental overreaching amounting to a violation of due process of law."

Within minutes of their convictions Friday, Williams, a 22-year Senate veteran, and co-defendant Alexander Feinberg, a Cherry Hill, N.J. lawyer, said they would seek a due process hearing. A May 14 court date was set to establish a schedule for the sessions before Pratt.

When the jury inquired Thursday about how it should determine if Operation Abscam was legal and proper, Pratt told the panel not to concern itself with the issue, that it was a question for him to answer later.

The possible government misconduct could be especially important in Williams' case because it was he who was "coached" by undercover agents on what to say to a phony Arab sheik, and it was he who was the recipient of an Abscam operative "putting words in people's mouths," as even some Justice Department lawyers have admitted.

Lone hiker confronts rugged Guadalupe Mountains

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

DAY ONE: Darkness crawls upward along the rocky crags of the Guadalupe Mountains, skirting gorge and wash, shrouding pinnacle and spire, until even the upper forested slopes are but silhouettes against a sky jeweled with stars.

Dust clings to the laces of a single pair of hiking boots as the cleated soles grind against rubble, slashing a course upridge, flanking bluff and precipice, twisting up switchbacks which snake along the northern wall of Pine Canyon.

Behind and below, the drive-in campground at 5,695 feet retreats, disappears into the shadows beyond jutting slags, sheer cliffs, and overhead, the awesome fortress of the Guads looms more than 8,000 feet above sea level, a full mile above the last vestiges of the Great Chihuahuan Desert.

A pair of boots. Seven quarts of water. Fifty-four pounds of food and equipment. And one hiker confronting a vast, rugged wilderness of arid mountains, gutted by canyons, blanketed by forests, scalded by the sun.

Solo.

It will be more than two and a half days before he will see another human being again, and before he does he will have scaled 8,700 feet of mountainside, plummeted into gaping canyons and climbed out again a dozen times, and 30 miles of trail will have savaged his hiking boots, left saddle-sore shoulders from the weight of the pack, allowed the rays to broil the flesh along his cheeks and neck a deep scarlet.

DAY TWO: The hiker unshoulders his pack at the wooded summit of Bush Mountain, at 8,676 feet the second highest peak in Texas. He rubs the tendons that run downward from his neck, inspects the blisters that have gnawed into his heels. He walks to the boulders at the edge of the precipice, his boots pausing a foot from the rim, and stares downward a vertical mile at canyon, gully, grey wasteland splashed white by dry salt beds in almost symmetrical fashion.

He is alone, but the heights offer their own companionship, the forest of Ponderosa pine at his shoulder providing solace in face of the stark desert ravaged by the same blazing sun that brings the taste of his own sweat to his lips.

DAY THREE — MORNING: As his heart hammers into his rib cage the hiker stops in the shade of a Ponderosa pine along Cox Tank Trail which hugs the western escarpment to rest aching feet, knotted muscles. The countryside is a purplish blur 5,000 feet beneath him, the twin peaks of the Cornudas rising against the horizon 45 miles distant like the errant strokes of a artist's brush. And but for the squared, neatly marked sections of green carved into the desert 20 miles away by the irrigated fields of Dell City, no signs in 150 miles of Texas landscape that man ever has trodden this land.

He is in the deep back country now of one of America's most remote parks, as enmeshed in solitude and as far from civilization as Twentieth Century man can be. He is two days by trail from the nearest person, and on this day his closest and most guarded companion is the quart canteen of water that rides at his hip. He is several hours away from the base camp he established at Blue Ridge at 8,200 feet, and before he can return he must descend 2,000 feet into West Dog Canyon and then scale the same distance in a 10-mile loop.

To lose his canteen, to run short on water, is to leave himself subjected to the strength-wrenching rays of the sun, a loss of vital body fluids and salts, with no natural water source available to replenish them.

For in the Guads, water is life.

DAY THREE — MID—AFTERNOON: He is down to less than a cup of water. He has underestimated the demands of the day hike. The sun is a scorching 95 degrees, and he must traverse a treeless trail up a 2,000-foot climb, survive five hours more. He thinks to himself, "I am alone. I make it, or I die." He is right. In this, the most isolated portion of Guadalupe Mountains National Park, days may pass before another hiker comes along. He thinks about the three quarts of water at base camp. He hopes he does not sprain an ankle, twist a knee, anger a rattler. He has only himself to depend on. He is satisfied.

DAY THREE — LATE EVENING: Base camp. Water. Food. He collapses inside his nylon tent, savors the taste of liquid running down inside him. Turkeys gobble from outside. A deer's hooves clomp past. He is tired. But no longer alone. He has the forest about him, three quarts of water beside his sleeping bag. The wind blows savagely that night, flapping the tent and moaning through Ponderosa pine and Douglas fir.

DAY FOUR: The hiker grasps overhead megaliths, pulls himself to the summit of 8,362-foot Hunter Peak, sprawls across the boulder-strewn crest as the sun is blinding incandescence in his eyes. The wind is strong here, tugging at his collar, and two swallows ride the currents, swish by his head. The world recedes from him, sweeping into the distance, plunging into the depths. The "Bowl" of the Guads to the north, its alpine forested slopes a carpet of green; Pine Canyon a half-mile gash at his knees. The gnarled slopes of Guadalupe Peak, Shumard, Bartlett a battlement beyond. And a hundred miles of utter desolation unfurling like a choppy sea to the east. And still no evidence but that he is the only person in the world.

In three hours he will have descended 2,700 feet of craggy mountainside, sought the ample water supply at Pine Springs Ranger Station, felt pavement against his feet rather than boulders, heard the blare of car horns and the roar of diesel trucks, tasted the gasoline fumes that hang in the air along Highway 62-180, again subjected himself to all the refinements of civilization.

But for now, there is only he, and the mountains rising before him, the canyons yawning beneath him, the forest urging him into the backcountry again.

And he is at peace.

Program to make park more accessible

PINE SPRINGS — A major development program soon to be completed at Guadalupe Mountains National Park will make the rugged canyons and forested peaks more accessible to campers and backpackers, according to park superintendent William Dunmire.

Of primary concern to the average vacationer is the establishment of a primitive drive-in campground in Dog Canyon, where maples, junipers, pines and oaks are sprinkled between towering ridges and peaks of Texas' highest mountain range. Situated in the northernmost reaches of the park at an elevation of 6,250 feet, the campground can be reached by following U.S. 285 north of Carlsbad, N.M. 12 miles and then southwest on NM 137 57 miles.

SOME 12-20 SITES provide tables, tent bases, grills and recreational vehicle spaces, although no electrical hook-ups or dumping facilities exist. Campers must bring their own charcoal and water, although backpackers passing through are allowed to re-fill their canteens. Visitors may avail themselves of the opportunity to attend campfire programs, stroll the maple-strewn canyon and watch darting hummingbirds, or challenge the backcountry trails.

Plans to challenge Mt. Everest's north face in 1982

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

They clung to a 200-foot wall of ice on Washington's Mt. Rainier, five persons bound together by the coils of a yellow rope that left them a perpendicular streak of silvery crampons, orange jackets and frost-flecked beards against a face of white.

The leader, internationally known climber Lou Whittaker of Ashford, Wash., was taking what he felt would be a time-saving route: by ascending up and over the wall more than an hour could be saved in the descent back to base camp.

He had 20 feet to go to reach the wall's summit. He looked down between his legs at the others in his party strung out beneath him. His son trailed the rest, hugging the cliff near jutting rocks a hundred feet below.

"Pete," he shouted, "a little bit of crud but I'm almost up."

PLANTING HIS ice axe into the wall, Whittaker dug the razor-sharp crampons attached to his boots into the ice and climbed higher. The snow gave beneath his weight, felt loose, unstable "like an empty cardboard box." He called out to his son, "it doesn't look good!"

Axe plunged into snow, crampon clawed against ice for two more steps into the sky. The summit loomed nearer, and then in an instant the entire wall of white separated from the cliff — and with it went Whittaker and three other climbers.

Avalanche!

Tumbling backward, Whittaker was swallowed by the tons of ice and snow slashing down the face of the mountain. His son looked up in time to harpoon his rope about the megalith, then held on as his father and the other climbers plummeted headlong into the yawning depths with a roar like thunder that seemed to shake the mountain itself.

"I was out of it," recalls Whittaker of the hopelessness that ran through his mind as he was carried helplessly down the 200-foot precipice in a storm of white. Their momentum threw them across a gaping crevasse, and as the avalanche began to slow, Whittaker began to think, "We might make it."

SEVEN HUNDRED feet down the mountain it stopped. Whittaker and the others found themselves buried waist deep — but alive and unharmed. He couldn't believe it. When he looked back up at his son, he found that the avalanche had pummeled him savagely and left him with sprains of both ankles. They had to sled him out that day — but even so, Whittaker knew they had been lucky to survive.

"That was a mistake," he said in reflecting upon his decision to surmount the wall."I picked it wrong. Two days after that I carried out a guy killed by an avalanche, and I thought, that could've been me damned easy."

But it hasn't been him yet. Though many of his closest friends have died in falls and avalanches, Whittaker, at 52 years of age, continues to tempt fate. He has mountaineered 38 years, lived through three avalanches, numerous roped team falls and five helicopter crashes at high elevations, and yet he still seeks high adventure — the "ultimate challenge."

He thinks he's found it, in the form of a foreboding mountain on the fringes of a forbidden land on the opposite side of the world.

Everest.

For eons it was the unconquerable mountain. Its summit now has been reached, several times in fact since 1952, but the north wall remains a bulwark, unyielding to man's puny efforts.

WHITTAKER INTENDS to change that. In 1982 he will lead a party of American climbers up the unchallenged north face — 29,028 feet of ice and rock jutting into the clouds from the Himalayas to crest the top of the world.

Of all climbers who challenge Qomolangma, as the Chinese refer to the world's highest peak, only 10 percent succeed, while the same number never make it back alive. The other 80 percent "merely survive," says Whittaker.

By October, 1982, he'll be one of those statistics: the conquerer, the conquered, the dead. But even aware of the extreme risks, Whittaker believes he will do more than just be a survivor — he is confident he will return to tell what it is like to stand on top of eternity.

"I feel good about it; I think I'll make it," he said recently on a visit to Midland.

With danger commonplace, with the risks high that sooner or later mountaineering will result in grave personal injury or death, why must this man with the hawk-like face and lean, hardened form continue to confront the stupendous forces of nature, meeting mountains on their own terms?

"Because it's there," he says in jest, quoting the ancient cliche. Then his expression turns grim. "The companionship with other climbers is great, and so is the nature, to walk where no one's walked and see different cultures and races. But there's other reasons too. Every climber has his own personal reason."

WHITTAKER'S IS "the challenge," which he describes as "the mainspring of all human endeavor.There's a discipline of mind and body. Go that next step, beyond the wall (of limitation). My brother says man is best when he's striving for something just beyond his grasp: 'To seek to strive and not to yield.' "

Seeking his own limitations necessarily implants in his mind the realization that someday he may die at the hands of a mountain. "You feel like it's not going to happen to you," he said, almost in avoidance of the thought. Then he turned solemn. "My wife Ingrid and I have discussed the safety factor involved in the Everest climb, the risk of me not making it back. But she feels good about my climbing. She knows I'm better now than I've ever been, so the odds are better now than ever before."

And yet he leaves the distinct impression that even should Everest or any other mountain someday claim him, the intensity of life he experiences in just a few hours of tempting death by ascending ice and rock will have made it all worth it.

"At 35 some men fall off mountains, but they've lived three times already, they've seen so much, done so much," he says quietly. "On the other hand I've seen guys 35 who are alive but already need dirt kicked over them, because they've never really lived."

Mountaineer Lou Whittaker, who spoke recently at Midland College, thinks he's found the ultimate challenge — a climb up the north face of Mount Everest in 1982. Whittaker, 6 feet 2 inches tall and 205 pounds, says he probably will lose 50 to 55 pounds in the climb.

JUDGING BY THOSE standards, Whittaker already has lived several lives over. He and his identical twin Jim — who himself scaled Everest in 1963 — started climbing when they were 14 years old as Boy Scouts. Whittaker soon joined a mountaineering club as a junior member and climbed every weekend.

"We learned by going out and climbing together," Whittaker recalled.

While still in high school he became involved in a mountain rescue program and was a charter member of what is now a national mountain rescue organization.

He and his brother started a guide and climbing school in 1950, using Rainier as a base, then served in the mountain troops during the Korean War, teaching skiing and climbing. He now employs 40 guides who lead thousands of persons each summer on expeditions up major peaks in the United States. He also serves as a paid consultant to firms which produce mountaineering equipment.

THE MOUNTAINS ARE Whittaker's life, and the guide organization allows his greatest interest to be coincident with his profession. "A lot of people are envious of me," he said.

In the past four decades his profession has carried him on expeditions to major peaks throughout the world — in Europe, Asia, Japan, Mexico, Canada and Alaska, as well as throughout the continental United States. He was a member of the team that made an unsuccessful assault in 1975 on K-2, at 28,741 feet the world's second highest mountain, and has made five climbs up 20,320-ft. Mt. McKinley in Alaska and 150 climbs of Mt. Rainier.

He abounds with stories of adventure, danger, near-death, and he has been involved in several daring rescues, not only on Mt. Rainier but on McKinley and other Alaskan peaks as well. Every summer he leads search parties up Rainier to rescue 30 or more stranded climbers, and brings back the bodies of six to ten others who fail to survive.

At 6 feet 5 inches and 205 pounds, Whittaker is an imposing specimen of an athlete and looks at least 10 years younger than his 52 calendar years. His Roman nose and leathery face go well with the lithe, wiry build, and the brown hair that recedes slightly at the forehead is only barely flecked with grey. His sense of humor abounds in every conversation, and in his steely eyes is a friendliness that would seem unusual for someone so enmeshed in nature, were it not for his expressed yearning for the camaraderie among fellow climbers.

CAMARADERIE IS vital to a climbing party, he said, because the lives of all may be dependent on a single climber's actions. The mountain is no place for showboating; rather, the sound judgment of the team is absolutely essential.

"If somebody says, you're sticking your neck out on that, I'll listen to them, and they'll listen to me," he said seriously. "We're not an individual athlete, but a group athlete, and we listen to each other. We're only as strong as our weakest link."

Each of the 12 links in next year's climbing party will have to be strong if the north face of Everest is to be conquered. They will arrive in Tibet — the forbidden land which has such an appeal to Whittaker — on Aug. 1, 1982 with eight tons of equipment and expenses of $300,000, much of it going to the Chinese government for permission to assault the Himalayas. The climb will begin in the post-monsoon season and Whittaker, who hopes to reach the summit that October, wants to be off the mountain by Nov. 1 to avoid winter's onslaught.

While the 1963 American expedition consumed 300 bottles of oxygen, Whittaker expects to make the climb without such aid, though this will necessitate breathing "four times as fast as at lower elevations." However, he noted, during sleep the lungs fall back into a normal breathing pattern, which could result in the loss of fingers or toes at elevations greater than 26,000. Jim Wickwire, 40, of Seattle, who will be a member of the team, lost most of his toes and suffered permanent lung damage by falling asleep at high altitude during his successful climb of K-2 in 1978. To prevent similar disaster, Whittaker will carry along 25 oxygen bottles for sleeping purposes.

OTHER MEMBERS of the expedition will include the deputy leader, Chris Kerrebrock, 25, of New York; Phil Ershler, 29, of Bellevue, Wash.; Eric Simonson, 25, of Tacoma, Wash.; George Dunn, 27, of Seattle, and Marty Hoey, 29, of Wuana, Wash., who will attempt to become the first American woman to scale the peak. Dr. Edward Hixson, 39, physician for the U.S. Olympic ski team, will serve as expedition doctor.

Whittaker's party will be able to drive to the 16,000-foot level from Tibet, which means they must hike only 30 miles to reach the base of the mountain. As a result no porters will be required, and yaks will be used to carry equipment to a base camp to be established below 18,000 feet.

Whittaker, who will be 53 during the assault, has the opportunity to become the oldest man to reach the 29,000-ft. level. And if he does, it will come at a great price, for when he returns he will have lost 50-55 pounds.

"I'll lose it in one month," he said bluntly. "That's because I'll be living above 20,000 feet, and there's not enough oxygen to live. You die a little bit each day, and it'll take me over two years to gain my strength back after I get back.

"That's why base camp always is below 18,000 feet. Your body never acclimatizes above that. The metabolism rate goes way up. I can eat and eat and eat and I'll still lose weight, because there's just not enough oxygen."

When asked if his age would be a detrimental factor, Whittaker shook his head firmly. "I plan to go up Everest all the way to the top," he said, his eyes narrowing in determination. "I have no trouble keeping up with my guides, and they're all a lot younger. In fact, they have trouble keeping up with me

"I'm 52 now and the climbs I make now are easier than ever. I did McKinley in 1960 with an 85-pound pack and last year I threw it on and went up again and it felt better than it did then. I learn a little more each time, such as how to breathe properly."

Whittaker says the reason he is still physically fit while athletes in other sports decline in their 40s is because of the nature of mountaineering itself. "In other sports you're competing against individuals," he said. "In climbing you're competing against yourself, and that's something you can control. And also there's not a speed factor involved...Nobody under 30 ever has climbed Everest. It takes a certain stick-to-itness, a tolerance to body discomfort. These are requisites of a climber that seem to come with age."

While his 6-5 frame often towers above fellow climbers, Whittaker says "it's not the size that counts; it's how tightly you're wound...It's all a matter of making adjustments. A tall guy can reach higher handholds, while the smaller guy makes use of smaller handholds."

What is important in a climber, he said, is lung capacity and the ability to utilize fully the oxygen that exists. This requires a non-smoker and someone "not too beefy." He explained that recent scientific research suggests that muscle-bound athletes require more oxygen, which would be a detriment to someone scaling Everest or other high-altitude peaks.

"I still want muscles to carry rope, get out of a crevasse, carry a pack," he acknowledged. "But you need to be lean, with endurance, like a marathon runner."

Whittaker is more than a marathoner or even a mountaineer — for his very life seems to share a special oneness with the mountains. He lives not 20 minutes from 14,410-ft. Mt. Rainier in a stone cottage whih has a national forest as its backyard. A herd of elk parades by his home regularly in summertime. He is building an underground solar home within view of the white-capped peak, and one gets the feeling he is never entirely comfortable away from the shadows of towering pinnacles of ice and rock.

"Society's laws are always different, but nature's laws are the same wherever you go," he said. "As soon as I get in the mountains, I'm back home."

In October, 1982, he hopes his home will be on top of the world. Then, perhaps, he will live his fourth life.

Russia's volcano still active

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A plume of ash from a volcano off the southern tip of Russia's Kamchatka Peninsula was disintegrating rapidly over the North Pacific after dusting the Aleutian Islands, the National Weather Service said Saturday.

The eruption of Mount Atlasova, which began Tuesday and continued for 72 hours, began sprinkling ash on the sparsely populated island chain early Friday and the fallout continued throughout the day, the service said.

By Saturday, the cloud had diffused so much it could not be tracked on radar, a NWS spokesman in Anchorage said.

CBS reporter forced to leave Guatemala

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — CBS reporter George Natanson was detained without explanation by airport immigration officials here, held overnight and taken under armed guard to an airplane bound for Tegucigalpa, Honduras, the U.S. Embassy said Saturday.

The government refused to comment.

U.S. Consul Paul Kline, who spent the night at the airport with Natanson, s aid "it appears his (Natanson's) name was on a list of persons the government does not want in the country. Guatemala, as a sovereign nation, has the right to keep out people it wants to, but we would like to know in advance so we can advise these people not to come in. The embassy will be checking further on this matter."

Natanson, interviewed by telephone from Honduras, said he arrived on an evening flight from Mexico City to Guatemala, where he planned to spend the night at a hotel before flying on to Tegucigalpa.

MC board to consider creating baseball team

A request has been brought before the panel to consider a baseball program in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference.

Also on the agenda are a resolution regarding equal education opportunity and personnel matters.

Governor signs bill

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements signed into law a bill by Midland Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson that would allow the Board of Education to make short-term investments with money from the Permanent School Fund.

The bill becomes effective immediately.

Under Snelson's SB 183, the board could invest in obligations of U.S. corporations that mature in less than one year.

As seen from 8,400 feet on Bush Mountain Trail, the mouth of Pine Spring Canyon 2,700 feet below yawns open to the desert of the Trans-Pecos. A primitive drive-in campground is situated near the canyon in the shadows of the lower bluffs of Guadalupe Peak to the right.

residence for the ranger," said Dunmire, who added that an official opening ceremony probably will be held in June when facilities become fully operational.

With back country trails leading up out of Dog Canyon currently being renovated, officials anticipate the remote campground to be utilized frequently as a trailhead by backpackers.

"While we really haven't started (publicizing) the Dog Canyon site yet, we're getting a lot more use," said Dunmire.

OFFICIALS HAVE POINTED out that the two trails which head in Dog Canyon offer less strenuous routes to the high country than elsewhere in the park. Marcus Trail climbs 1,000 feet westward before plummeting into West Dog Canyon and joining with Tejas and Cox Tank Trails at 2.9 miles, while Lost Peak Trail rises 1,500 feet southward to intersect with McKittrick Ridge Trail junction at 3.7 miles.

The most demanding project currently being completed, Dunmire noted, is the establishment or rehabilitation of 40 miles of additional backcountry trails. They include:

—Geology Trail, 5.8 miles, climbs from 5,000 feet to 7,000 feet along the north rim of McKittrick Canyon and connects with Camp Wilderness Ridge Trail in Lincoln National Forest.

—El Capitan Trail, 7.1 miles, begins at Pine Springs Campground and passes by a desert spring in skirting the southern escarpment and leading to a spectacular view of the sheer precipice of El Capitan.

—Williams Ranch Trail, 5.7 miles, a continuation of El Capitan Trail which hugs awesome bluffs and cliffs en route to an early-day ranch house on the west side of the range.

—Guadalupe Peak Trail, 4.3 miles, begins at Pine Springs Campground at 5,695 feet and winds upward 3,000 feet to the summit of Texas' highest mountain.

—Pine Canyon Trail, rises more than 2,500 from its trailhead at Pine Springs Campground, following a route to the high country just west of the old ranching trail.

—McKittrick to McKittrick Ridge Trail, ascends more than 2,250 feet from the floor of the canyon in a refurbished route described as perhaps the most awe-inspiring in the Park.

—McKittrick Canyon Trail, 3.8 miles, follows an intermittent trout stream whose flooding resulted in a revised route through the 2,000-ft.-deep gash in the mountains.

—Bear Canyon Trail, ascends 2,500 feet in a route similar to the early ranching trail, the upper and lower switchbacks lengthened to lessen their steepness.

Dunmire indicated the NPS also is finishing a contract for a contact-information station at the mouth of McKittrick. It will contain exhibits and an audio-visual program featuring former owner Wallace Pratt's voice. Pratt was instrumental in the establishment of McKittrick as a national park.

The Pine Springs area, meanwhile, also is benefiting from development. Site preparation is near completion for 12 pre-fabricated houses to be used as staff residences, while the drive-in campground — temporarily situated among rocks and junipers —is being paved with RV sites designated.

DUNMIRE EXPRESSED disappointment that the park has not yet received funding for a main information building to be located near Pine Canyon. However, he indicated additional back country campsites may be added pending ecological studies, as funding for such projects would not be necessary.

While Big Bend National Park has suffered a loss of visitors due to gasoline costs and its off-the-beaten-path location, Dunmire indicated such is not the case with Guadalupe Mountains National Park. As of Easter, he said, the park had entertained 33,760 visitors in 1981, compared to 29,460 during the same period last year — an increase of 11 percent.

With full development of the new trail system and Dog Canyon campground facilities, officials anticipate an even greater increase in the future.

House members deal fatal blow to plan

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — As the Legislature prepared to enter the last month of the current session, House members dealt a fatal blow to Gov. Bill Clements campaign promise to give Texas voters the power of initiative and referendum.

Meanwhile, the Senate ended six years of debate on generic drug substitution and gave new life to a measure to outlaw the commercial catching of redfish and speckled sea trout.

House members failed to give HJR 60, the proposed constitutional amendment to give voters limited I&R powers for tax and spending matters, the two-thirds majority, or 100 votes, needed to send that measure to the Senate for consideration.

Houston Rep. Ron Wilson succeeded in tacking on an amendment to expand the resolution to include recall of elected officials. The House voted to adopt the amendment but denied passage by an 87 to 57 vote. Reps. Larry Don Shaw of Big Spring, Jerry Cockerham of Monahans and Jay Gibson of Odessa voted in favor of the Wilson amendment; Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland voted against it.

Rioters battle police as Sands nears death

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Rioters battled police in Belfast, Londonderry, Dublin and Liverpool Saturday as jailed Irish Republican Army guerrilla Bobby Sands sank closer to death in the 63rd day of his hunger strike.

Young men hurled firebombs and acid at police in Roman Catholic sections of West Belfast and Londonderry, and security forces responded with plastic bullets.

Sands' supporters also clashed with officers of the mostly Protestant Royal Ulster Constabulary outside the Protestant cathedral in Belfast, where Protestants were holding a labor rally.

The constables tore down a banner supporting Sands and arrested several protesters. — carrying one off by the arms and legs.

In the neighboring Irish Republic, 200 of Sands' sympathizers surged down the main thoroughfare of Dublin, O'Connell Street, and battled club-wielding police. Twelve demonstrators occupied a nearby department store for nearly six hours and draped banners from the windows. Several people suffered head injuries in the clashes and five of the store invaders were arrested.

In Liverpool, England which has a large Irish population, about 150 of Sands' supporters were surrounded by some 500 jeering counter-demonstrators. Police moved in, rescued Sands' backers and drove them to safety in two buses.

Several arrests were made and a rock was tossed through a window of one of the buses.

Sinn Fein, the legal political arm of the outlawed IRA, issued a statement late Saturday saying Sands' eyesight "has gone completely" and he had "lost all feeling on one side of his face." It also reported that Sands, held in Belfast's Maze Prison, was lapsing occasionally into unconsciousness and only "sheer will" was keeping him alive. He has been taking only water and a little salt to protest the refusal of British authorities to grant IRA inmates special rights amounting to political prisoner status.

Another jailed IRA guerrilla, 25-year-old Francis Hughes, was reported retching constantly in the 49th day of a fast. His condition deteriorating faster than expected, visitors said. Two other strikers, Ramond McCreesh and Pat O'Hara, both 24 and in the 42nd day of a fast, were reported in less serious condition.

Police and army units "had the resources which they needed and were in a state of readiness," the statement said.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — India's opposition Janata Party adopted a resolution Saturday urging Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government to launch an atomic weapons program.

Estelle issues challenge for evidence of abuse

By JAMES R. KING
Associated Press Writer

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Texas prison Director W.J. Estelle has challenged anyone with evidence that his guards are beating prisoners to step forward and present it to a grand jury.

"I have no evidence that it has ever occurred, and if somebody does have evidence to the contrary, I'd be as much interested as anybody in seeing it brought to light in the proper arena," said Estelle.

He was interviewed Friday at the state prison headquarters in this wooded town in Southeast Texas after a troublesome month for the Texas Department of Corrections.

Two prison supervisors were killed by an inmate, a federal judge issued a final decree calling for swift and sweeping reforms, and convicts staged a work stoppage for several days apparently in sympathy with the decree — all during the month of April.

In addition, an attorney for the inmate accused of killing the two prison officials suggested the incident occurred when his client was about to be taken to a remote section of the rural Ellis Unit known as "the Bottoms" for a beating, and a veteran warden lost his job after telling a newspaper reporter such beatings "probably" take place.

Estelle, 50, speaking slowly and deliberately, said they do not, and called the remark by former Assistant Warden G.P. Hardy "irresponsible."

"He didn't present any evidence. I view his comments as really pretty irresponsible. I'm waiting for somebody with some evidence to bring it to a grand jury's attention," Estelle said.

Hardy, whose comments appeared a week ago in the Dallas Morning News, was also asked how prisoners cope with overcrowded conditions. "Hell, these people were brought up in crowded homes. They are used to crowds. These people were raised by whores and slept on the floor," he told the newspaper.

Estelle said Hardy, a 20-year veteran officer, resigned Tuesday. "He recognized that his effectiveness had been compromised as a result of that newspaper article," the director said.

The same day Hardy resigned, 2,800 of the 3,050 inmates at the maximum security Ellis Unit staged a work stoppage, and similar actions were taken by prisoners at three of the other 17 units in the prison system.

Prison spokesman Rick Hartley said the prison was "back to normal" Friday and all but 32 prisoners were working again. He said officials believe the strike was linked to reforms ordered by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice, who issued a final decree April 20 ordering drastic changes.

Estelle conceded his prison was overcrowded, but he called the decree "unreasonable" and said it deals with many issues that have nothing to do with the U.S. Constitution.

Justice's order includes demands for reductions in the prison's population, no more than one prisoner per cell by 1983, one guard for every six prisoners by 1982, no more than 500 prisoners per unit by the end of next year, and says new prisons must be built at least 50 miles from big cities.

"The overcrowding issue is one that everybody agrees on, and something's got to be done about it," Estelle said.

He said the current prison population was 31,092 and it was increasing at the rate of "about 250 per week, net." At that rate, in one year Texas' prison population will be more than 44,000 — an increase of 42 percent.

He said he considered the capacity of the prison system to be between 24,000 and 25,000 inmates.

But "there are some unreasonable timetables and unconstitutional issues in that decree," Estelle said.

He said he was pinning his hopes on a successful appeal, but he said if that fails, "there isn't any citizen, particularly a public employee, who can do less than make a good faith effort to see it's complied with. Whether you personally agree with it or not is not a question."

Asked what he would do if the appeals fail, Estelle said, "I would hope that at any point in my career where my presence became a counterproductive element that I wouldn't have to be told that."

Sales

Put your trust and confidence in people and look what happens to you.

There's really only one way to explain VARCO's phenomenal growth in the last ten years.

Our people. People who have made us the only company in the industry to win seven awards at the Offshore Technology Conference during the seventies. People who have helped us grow from $3 million to over $77 million in sales in just 10 years. People who stretch and stretch and stretch again to do it better, faster, smarter.

Not all companies, of course, would give their employees as much responsibility as we do. Nor as much credit.

Frankly, though, we wouldn't think of doing business any other way.

- PRODUCT SUPPORT ENGINEERING
- MARKETING/SALES
- FIELD SERVICE

If you're interested, please send your resume to our Personnel Department, VARCO OIL TOOLS, 1100 Rankin Road, Dept. VAR-068, Houston, Texas 77073 (713) 821-1110. Or visit our Booth at the Offshore Technology Conference, May 4-7, 1981, Booth 3231.

LANDMEN
San Francisco

Sohio Petroleum Company's share of Alaskan oil production, (nearly 700,000 B.P.D.), results in an impressive cash flow. But the Prudhoe supply will begin to decline within this decade. We are using our strong financial position as the basis for a burgeoning exploration effort. We have added over 2.8 million net acres to our undeveloped land inventory in the lower 48 in just two years and we have acquired lease rights to a number of tracts in Alaska. We expect further rapid growth in the foreseeable future.

We have a current need for several LANDMEN to work in the Lease Records function in San Francisco. We require recent experience in lease and property administration, preferably with the oil industry. We prefer an academic background in business, law or PLM.

We offer the opportunity to live in the Bay Area and work in San Francisco, one of the most beautiful cities in the world. And we'll make it easy for you to move with a generous relocation package. If you'd like to join the Sohio adventure, send your resume to Frank Wood, Sohio Petroleum Company, #94507, 100 Pine Street, San Francisco, CA 94111.

PALYNOLOGISTS AND PETROLOGISTS/SEDIMENTOLOGISTS

San Francisco

Sohio Petroleum Company's share of Alaskan oil production, (nearly 700,000 B.P.D.), results in an impressive cash flow. But the Prudhoe supply will begin to decline within the decade. This fact gives our exploration effort a very specific focus; we are committed to finding new oil reserves to replace Prudhoe.

We have the financial resources to fund a first-rate exploration program. But the key to our success lies in our ability to attract explorationists of the highest technical quality and geoscience vision.

We are young and growing and hungry. We'll put you and your technical skills to a severe test. And your promotional opportunities will be directly tied to your skills and contribution.

Our Geological Services Department in San Francisco has these immediate needs:

PALYNOLOGIST with 4 or more years of biostratigraphic experience, (preferably with the oil industry), to analyze palynologic successions in most parts of the continent and from much of the geologic column.

CARBONATE AND TERRIGENOUS CLASTIC PETROLOGISTS/SEDIMENTOLOGISTS with 5 or more years of experience in basinal and local facies interpretation and the unraveling of diagenetic histories.

We offer the opportunity to live in the Bay Area and work in San Francisco, one of the most beautiful cities in the world. And we'll make it easy for you to move with a generous relocation package. If you'd like to join the Sohio adventure, send your resume to Frank Wood, Sohio Petroleum Company, #94518, 100 Pine Street, San Francisco, CA 94111.

An equal opportunity employer M/F/H/V.

YOU MAY TAKE FIVE MONTHS TO FIND THE RIGHT HOME. TAKE FIVE MINUTES TO LEARN HOW.

It's tough having to pick between different neighborhoods, different home styles, different floorplans, and the high prices that go along with them.

Pick a house with the Home Owners Warranty program, and you'll worry a whole lot less.

The Home Owners Warranty (HOW) is America's first comprehensive homeowner's protection plan. With 10 full years of protection.

Your home is protected against workmanship and material defects the first year. Defective wiring, duct-work and piping in the second. And your home is protected against major structural defects that vitally affect the use of your new home for 10 full years.* Your builder can give you all the details, including the reasonable exclusions.

So even though your new home search will have you looking from home to home, make sure you're looking for the HOW symbol.

Insist on a home with the Home Owners Warranty program. It'll not only make your choice easier, it'll make you feel a lot better about it, as well.

Pleasant Colony wins Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Pleasant Colony, trained by Johnny Campo, who has predicted a Triple Crown for his colt, took the first step toward that goal Saturday when he put on a big stretch run to win the $404,700 Kentucky Derby.

Ridden by Jorge Velasquez, who won the Derby for the first time in six attempts Pleasant Colny thundered home in front of Woodchopper, who closed strongly on the outside. Partez, a member of the mutuel field, finished third.

Pleasant Colony completed the 1¼ miles of the richest running of the 107-year-old Derby in 2:02 for his convincing victory.

Before the race, Campo, a 5-foot-7, 250-pound wisecracker off the streets of New York, was asked to predict who the first four finishers would be. "I can't give you second, third or fourth," said Campo, leaving no doubt who he thought the winner would be.

"The only class in the race if you're handicapping is Pleasant Colony."

The dark colt who races in the colors of Thomas Melon Evans' Buckland Farm was certainly the class of the 21-horse Derby field on a bright, pleasant afternoon.

It was a trouble-free Derby once the starting gate sprang, sending the 21 3-year-olds on a quest of a winner's purse of $317,200. The old gross and first place money records were $326,800 and $274,000, respectively, in 1974 when Cannonade led 22 opponents across the finish.

This Derby will be remembered as a court case as well as a horse race. Twenty-three horses were entered Thursday, but Churchill Downs invoked its 20-horse limit, based on career money earnings. Flying Nashua, Law Me and Mythical Ruler were eliminated. But the owners of Flying Nashua and Mythical Ruler went to court and got their colts reinstated.

Flying Nashua and Mythical Ruler both raced Saturday, but the owner of Law Me declined. A filly, Wayward Lass, also was entered, but she raced in the Kentucky Oaks Friday and was scratched Saturday morning.

Pleasant Colony, who charged into the Derby picture with a stretch running victory in the Wood Memorial at Aqueduct April 18, paid $9, $5.60 and $4.40.

Woodchopper, whose connections had said he would skip the Kentucky Derby after he finished third in the Arkansas Derby, returned $23.40 and $13.

Evans, Swift destroy Cubs

Righthander Weldon Swift handcuffed the Midland Cubs on four-hits and first baseman John Evans did the rest with two homers, a double and four runs-batted-in as El Paso made it two in a row, 8-3, against the Bruins at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

Going into tonight's 6 p.m. contest, El Paso holds a 2-1 edge in the five-game series which concludes Monday. Joe McClain, 2-2, who stopped Midland's last losing streak with a six-hit 4-3 win over Amarillo, is Manager Roy Hartsfield's pitching choice while Tony Muser will use Tim Cook, 2-1 with a 2.13 earned run average.

EVANS dumped a run-scoring double down the right field line to drive in a first inning run. His first homer to left-center, 400 feet, led off the fourth. His next homer, another 400-footer to center, came with a man on in the seventh and made it 5-2 El Paso. He singled in the ninth and scored on Stan Davis' two-run homer, his sixth of the season.

Evans has five homers and three of them have come the last two nights at Cubs Stadium.

BUT HOME runs are not that uncommon in Cubs Stadium. Four-hitters are and what makes this one especially disturbing is that it came on the heels of Mike Madden's four-hitter for the Diablos Friday night.

Muser blames it on the organization, apparently still suffering from the George Bamberger influence. "Swift had a good year at Holyoke (Eastern League, 11-10) last year, but the organization is so backed up in pitching, we can't move our AA pitchers up to AAA where some of them belong."

Swift, who signed as a first round January draft choice in 1978 out of high school in Baltimore, doesn't feel the experience has been completely wasted. He said they told him when the club moved from Massachusetts to West Texas the air would be thinner and advised him to keep the ball down.

"I GAVE up three homers in my first game and have been keeping the ball down pretty good since then," Swift said.

"He kept his fastball down, cut down on his walks and he didn't try to be too fine. Sometimes when you are strong you have a tendency to try to hit the corners and it costs you," Muser appraised.

Swift and Muser both agreed that centerfielder Eddie Irvine did a good job of shagging down those balls the Cubs did manage to get good wood on.

MIDLAND got a 1-1 tie in the first when J.W. Mitchell lined for two into left and scored on Jack Upton's fly. They crept to 3-2 in the sixth when Dave Owen doubled down the right field line and scored on Tom Grant's two out single to left. Midland's other run came in the eighth when Randy LaVigne bounced a single through the Eddie Portillo, Midland High's shortstop, watches the ball all the way into Odessa High catcher Kevin Decker's mitt during first inning play of Saturday's District 5-5A clash. Portillo did a good job of keeping his eye on the ball as he rapped out one hit, scored two runs, and helped guide the Bulldogs to an 8-5 victory.

Teddy Bartley shines in Bulldog win

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

With Teddy Bartley providing the key hit, and Doug McLean's excellent relief pitching, the Midland Bulldogs overcome an early 5-0 deficit to deal Odessa High an 8-5 loss Saturday at Memorial Stadium field in a District 5-5A baseball game. The victory gives the Bulldogs a 3-1 mark in the second half race and 13-12 overall. OHS dropped its second game in a row as the Bronchos' record dips to 2-2 in district and 12-10 on the season.

Joel Castaneda made the start for the Purple Pack and breezed through the first and second innings. In the third, the Bronchos rapped out four hits as ten men paraded to the plate and five scored as OHS took a 5-0 lead.

Kevin Decker singled to open the frame, Abel Mendoza walked, Leroy Alvarada singled and Efrain Gallegos's two RBI-single netted two runs. Jr Cobos hit in a fielder's choice, Benavidez struck out, Ishmael Tavarez walked and Morris Morgan's two-out single plated the final two runs of the rally.

Johnny Botello keep the Bulldogs at bay until the bottom of the third. David Bledsoe opened by popping to second, Eddie Portillo walked, Tim Davis sent him tthird with a single and Michael Feldt's fly ball to left chased him home. After Bottelo walked Jerry Zachery and Frank Garramone, Teddy Bartley lashed a pressure-packed, two-out double to leftcenter to score to runs. When the Bronchos' centerfielder had trouble finding the handle, Garramone scored and Bartley ended up on second. Joel Castaneda followed with a single to drive in Bartley to tie the game at 5-5.

Bulldog coach Tim Whalen sent Doug McLean to pitch starting the top of the fourth. It was a wise decision. McLean pitched the final four innings, giving up no runs, two hits, walked none and struck out three as he picked up his second district win against one loss.

MHS broke the tie with a two-run outburst in the fourth inning. David Bledsoe started the rally stricking out, but the ball bounced away from catcher Kevin Decker and Bledsoe reached first. After Portillo hit into a fielder's choice, Tim Davis tripled and then scored on Michael Feldt's sacrifice fly.

The Purple Pack scored an insurance run in the fifth inning. Bartley singled to center to start the inning, stole second, was sacrificed to third and rode home on a single by Bledsoe.

Whalen was full of praise for his club saying, "They just keep fighting. I just wish they would stop spotting the other guys a lead. It's going to give me uclers." Whalen added, "Bartley played his best game of the year offensive and defensively. Right now, I think he is the best third basemen in the district and has a good chance to be selected as all-district."

As for McLean, Whalen said, "It's the second game in a row that Doug has gone in in relief and done the job for us. I just can't ask for a better performance then he has turned in the last two games."

Velarde's 3-hitter lifts Lee by Mojo

ODESSA — Randy Velarde pitched a three-hitter to lead the Midland Lee Rebels to an 8-2 win over Odessa Permian Saturday in a District 5-5A baseball game here. The win leaves the Rebs undefeated in five second half district outings while the Panthers suffered their fourth loss in five games. Overall, Lee is 15-5 while Mojo slips to 5-16.

Lee is now within one victory of sewing up the 5-5A title and they can do it against Abilene High Tuesday in Abilene.

Valerde was in trouble only in the first inning. He gave up a double to Jimmy Morris and Mike Williams followed with a RBI-single.

Mojo scored its second run of the contest in the fourth. Williams walked and went to second on an error by Barry Blackwell at second. He stole third and scored when Reb catcher Ron Smedley threw the ball into left trying to pick Williams off.

Lee had taken the lead with two runs in the second. A double by Chris Parker, a Mojo error, and singles by Randy Pepper and Blackwell produced the runs.

Alan Koonce, who has gone 9-for-11 at the plate in his last three games, gave the Rebels a 3-1 lead when he lead off the third with a home run to left.

In the fourth, singles by Barry Corley, Pepper and Blackwell accounted for another run.

The Rebels wrapped the contest up with a three-run outburst in the sixth frame. Velarde singled to left, and error by Permain was followed by singles by Smedley and Koonce produced two runs. Bill Dern's sacrifice fly ended the Rebel scoring.

Koonce led the Rebel attack by going 3-for-3 with a home run, double and one RBI. Smedley drove in two runs on one hit in three trips to the plate. Blackwell, Corley and Pepper all collected two hits in the game and the three accounted for three RBIs.

Robbie Goetz made the start for the Mojo and went the distance despite giving up 15 hits. Goetz' record is now 0-1.

In other 5-5A action Saturday, Abilene High nipped San Angelo, 5-4, for a 3-2 second half mark as San Angelo fell to 0-5 in the second half. Big Spring stayed alive in the second half with a 2-1 win over Abilene Cooper, who fell out of the second half chase with a 1-3 reading.

Agony overshadows ecstasy

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

LUBBOCK — A pair of borrowed shoes, and a sophomore who knows no fear helped bring a feeling of ecstasy to both Midland Lee and Midland High here Saturday in the Region I track meet on the Texas Tech oval.

However, there was enough agony to almost overshadow the ecstacy since Lee's Arthur Williams and Midland High's James Beverley were the only Tall City athletes to earn state berths in Austin in two weeks out of a total of 10 possibilities. Some dreams were shattered.

But it would be hard to convince Williams and Beverley that the meet was in vain.

Williams was the only Tall City winner with a 21.57 in the 200 meters, a race he won by five yards over nearest contender Angelo Bryant of Killeen Ellison.

Williams even had a former teammate to aid in his victory. He borrowed a pair of track shoes (spikes) from Keevin Harper, who now is running for Texas Tech. However, Harper wouldn't take much credit for the win, "I loaned him the spikes because when he got through with the sprint relay, his spikes were wet and heavy. So, I gave him mine to use. They were the same pair that earned me a state berth last year in the 800 meters," Harper said. "But I think he could have won that race bare-footed as fast as he is."

Williams took the win in stride saying, "The sprint relay got me loose and I really didn't think much about the race. I just went out and ran my hardest. I knew I had the race won when I came off the curve with a big lead because I had heard that Bryant couldn't run the curve very well."

Beverley too will be going to Austin after finishing second in the 800 meters to Killeen's Carlos Quinones, who also won the 1600 meters and anchored Killeen's sixth place 1600 meter relay team.

This was one of the meet's attractive matchups and Beverley sprinted hard for the lead early before Quinones passed him with less than 400 meters left in the race. Quinones won with a meet record of 1:52.76 while Beverley had a 1:53.73.

It was Beverley's first career loss in the 800 meters, but he couldn't accept it as a loss since he will be one of the few sophomores to earn a state berth. "I feel good about the race I ran. Quinones is a good runner and he ran well. I'm just glad its over. I didn't have the speed to catch him when he passed me and I didn't get very good traction on the track," Beverley said. MHS coach Johnny Williams said that Beverley will probably use longer spikes in the state meet.

But there was agony too, and it was no more apparent than with Lee's Robert Schooler, who failed miserably in both the 3200 and 1600 meters. Schooler had lost only once this year in each race, but he finished fifth in the 3200 with a 9:39.00 and 10th in the 1600 with no time posted.

After the 3200, a stunned Schooler said, "I don't know what happened. I'm still trying to figure it out." After the 1600, he told a group of writers, "I guess I just choked. What else can you say."

One of Schooler's main foes this year, Tascosa's David Williams, won the 3200 with a 9:20.08, the new record for the new event, and he was surprised at how easy the victory came after leading by 50 yards after three laps, "I expected Schooler to be right there. I never beat him in cross country and had beaten him only once this year in this event. I feel bad for him because he's the most dedicated runner in Texas. I know he is more dedicated than I am. I surprised myself with a 4:28 first mile. I knew I would die if I kept that up."

Quinones won the 1600 with a 4:14.66. He was third at state last year. The junior was not impressed with the 800 or 1600 field saying, "I have to run the 800, 1600 and 1600 relay, so I ran just good enough to win. I could really burn people if I ran just one of those races."

There were also some near misses as Lee placed third in both relays and Keith Brown was third in the shot put. Lee's sprint relay team had a 42.28, not close to their best. Temple won with a 41.65 and Ellison had a 41.67.

Lee's 3:18.33, a season best, was also third despite a 47.20 split by Arthur Williams on the anchor leg. Darrin Williams had a fast 49.05 split as did Michael Goodley with a 49.58. Troy Barber's 52.49 put the Rebels in a hole and they had to fight from sixth place after the first leg. San Angelo led three laps before finishing fourth. Ellison won it with a record 3:16.23 and Eastwood was second with a 3:17.53.

Brown had a 58-4 in the shot put for his third. Eastwood's Jim Jordan won the event with a gaudy 63-10¾. "I gave it my best shot," Brown said, "but it wasn't enough. So now I guess I'll turn my attention back to football." Brown is headed to Oklahoma State next fall and will play in the high school All-Star game this summer.

Goodley also earned a sixth in the 800 meters with a 1:58.19. "I'm not disappointed. It was just great for me to be here."

Lee's David Piccolo did not place in the 300 hurdles, finishing seventh. "I just didn't have it, but I'm just thank-

Islanders blast NY Rangers, 5-1

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Islanders used first-period power-play goals by Mike Bossy and Bob Bourne and a staunch defense for a convincing 5-1 National Hockey League playoff triumph over the New York Rangers Saturday night that gave the defending Stanley Cup champions a 3-0 edge in this semifinal series.

The Islanders, the NHL's regular-season champions, broke a two-year losing string at Madison Square Garden with the victory and can wrap up the best-of-seven series by winning here Tuesday night over the Rangers, who finished 13th overall.

The Islanders put on a masterful show in shutting off the Ranger offense and throwing a protective net around goaltender Billy Smith.

The Islanders stymied five Rangers power plays, allowing only two shots on goal while skating with a manpower disadvantage.

It was while the Rangers were shorthanded that the Isles jumped ahead, converting their 23rd and 24th power-play tallies of the playoff.

After Nick Fotiu took a senseless penalty, elbowing Islanders defenseman Mike McEwen in mid-ice, the vaunted Islander power play — which set an NHL mark this season with 96 scores — went to work. Bossy backhanded the puck in front of the Rangers' net and it hit off defenseman Carol Vadnais and changed directions. With Ranger goalie Steve Baker already moving the opposite way, the puck slid unimpeded into the net at 14:36.

At 18:33, just 17 seconds after the Rangers' Ron Duguay was whistled for tripping Anders Kallur, Bourne backhanded a rebound of McEwen's shot past Baker to make it 2-0.

The Rangers never got back into the contest, their first losing venture on Garden ice this postseason.

NEW YORK (AP) — Larry Stefanki, once an All-American at the University of California at Berkeley, advanced with a 6-2, 2-6, 7-5 victory over Craig Wittus Saturday as the $592,000 World Championship Tennis Tournament of Champions opened at Forest Hills.

In an afternoon match, Robbie Venter, the only amateur in the 44-player field, downed Rick Fagel 6-2, 7-5.

All of the seeded players, including top-rated John McEnroe and defending Vitas Gerulaitis, the third seed, received first-round byes.

Larger colleges may revolt on TV

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The College Football Association, comprising the larger members of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, is studying the possibility of selling television rights to its games independently, the Daily Oklahoman said in its Sunday editions.

The move could undermine the lucrative television program of the NCAA, whose package with ABC-TV was worth $31 million last year.

Attorneys for the NCAA were quoted in the story as saying that any attempt by the 62-member CFA to put its teams' TV rights up for bids would be an illegal challenge of the association's authority to regulate college football programming. The CFA's lawyers disagreed.

Both sides felt the attempt would likely be the subject of court action.

The CFA membership includes the schools of five major conferences and 18 independents such as Notre Dame and Penn State. The association was created in 1976 after a unsuccessful attempt to restructure the NCAA's Divison I.

Charles M. Neinas, executive director of the CFA, described as "premature" speculation that the group will try to sell its own TV package, the newspaper said, but he acknowledged that studies were being made to learn if such action was a viable and salable option. The newspaper said that Neinas believes it is.

The success of the plan will become apparent by May 8, according to the Daily Oklahoman, when NCAA members must return their ballots in a referendum which would guide the NCAA's TV committee in writing a television contract for 1982 and 1983.

The CFA has urged its members to "abstain with notice" from the voting. That, said Neinas, "indicates you have not voted and are reserving your options," including banding together and offering a separate package.

But Tom Hansen, assistant executive director of the NCAA and its television program director, says such action will not give the members the right to negotiate their own contract.

According to Beano Cook, a publicist for CBS Sports, "It's unrealistic to think that there will be two television packages and I've told this to Chuck (Neinas)."

Cook said if the CFA could deliver all its members, then it would probably have the more attractive package.

NCAA President James Frank wrote to the association members last month, saying: "Abandonment of football television controls, or a splintering of the current program into several competitive programs, surely would be destructive to one or more of the purposes to be achieved by the NCAA."

The NCAA's football television ratings have been declining, and CFA people have said that a more flexible contract for the powerhouses would increase the ratings and provide a TV package that would produce more revenue.

The current NCAA plan permits a team to appear four times in two years and a fifth time as a "wild card" usually for switching a major game to another date. Its proposed new plan proposes five appearances in two years, plus a sixth for moving a game to certain dates. The CFA's proposal allows any team to appear six times in two years, including four appearances in one year. Neinas said the CFA probably will decide on a course of action at its June meeting in Dallas.

ful for the year I have had. I've got a lot of things to be thankful for," Piccolo stated. "I didn't have the high hurdles to warm up on in this meet and that hurt me because I was very tight."

Midland High's Robert Crawford experienced his agony on Friday when he failed to qualify for the 300 hurdles. "I didn't warm up properly. I did too much and I didn't have it after four or five hurdles."

Midland High's Jim Kemper produced a season best 13-0 in the pole vault, but did not place in a strong field. "I don't guess I can complain since I got may best vault in a meet," Kemper said. "It started raining when they moved the bar to 13-6, and that bothered me a great deal. I was vaulting pretty well though."

The only other 5-5A individual to earn a state berth was San Angelo's Arthur Hawkins with a second in the 400 meters with a 49.19. He finished third in the race, but the winner, Tony Tolson of El Paso Austin, was disqualified after the meet for running out of his lane. Tolson had a meet record 46.51 Friday in the prelims.

In the AAA division, Crane's Roosevelt Fort was the only Midland area winner with a 22-9¾ in the long jump.

A's homers drop Yanks

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Tony Armas, with his eighth home run of the season, opened a four-homer Oakland A's barrage which beat the New York Yankees 6-3 Saturday.

Baseball's hottest team is off to a 20-3 start, best in the major leagues since 1955 when the Brooklyn Dodgers were 20-2. The A's 27 homers have helped them open a seven-game lead in the American League West.

Another reason the A's are doing so well, Yankees Manager Gene Michael charged, is that all the Oakland pitchers are throwing spitballs.

Matt Keough, who made his record 5-0 with last-out relief help from Bob Owchinko Saturday, is the worst offender, according to Michael.

"It was obvious he was throwing a spitter and after we complained Keough wanted to show everybody he can throw a spitter any time he wants to," said Michael. "If they can get away with it, I recommend it for every pitcher in baseball."

Rob Picciolo, Rickey Henderson and Cliff Johnson also homered in Saturday's victory.

Dodgers bop Expos

Cey, Landreaux belt home runs

MONTREAL (AP) — Ron Cey's three-run homer in the fourth inning and Ken Landreaux's solo shot in the fifth backed a seven-hitter by Jerry Reuss as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated the Montreal Expos 4-0 Saturday.

Reuss, 2-1, who was 2-0 with a 0.50 earned-run average against the Expos last season and is 14-5 against them in his career, was helped by three double plays as the Dodgers handed Montreal its first loss at home in 10 games this season.

Landreaux started the decisive fourth inning with a single off Scott Sanderson, 3-1, then Steve Garvey walked before Cey hit his first homer of the season, into the left field bleachers.

In the fifth, Landreaux hammered the first pitch from Sanderson against the right field foul pole for his fourth homer.

Montreal rookie Tim Raines stole the 27th consecutive base of his major league career — his 20th this season — in the first inning. But the streak ended moments later when catcher Mike Scioscia nailed him attempting to steal third.

Martz sparks Cubs win

CHICAGO (AP) — Former Midland Cub Pitcher Randy Martz drove in two runs with a fourth-inning single Saturday as the Chicago Cubs clipped the Atlanta Braves 5-2 for just their third victory of the year.

Leon Durham ripped a one-out single off loer Phil Niekro, 1-1, and Tim Blackwell walked one out later. Ivan DeJesus then doubled down the left field line to score Durham and Martz lined a 3-2 pitch off shortstop Rafael Ramierez's glove and into short left field for a 3-2 Chicago edge.

Martz worked five innings, yielding five hits, two walks and striking out two. Dick Tidrow then took over and retired all 12 batters he faced in relief to record his first save of the season.

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Kingman's two-run homer in the first inning and Doug Flynn's two-run single in the third keyed a pair of three-run bursts Saturday which gave the New York Mets a 6-2 victory over San Diego and snapped their seven-game losing streak.

Pirates end Astro streak in 12

PITTSBURGH (AP) — John Milner raced home with one out in the 12th inning on Mike Easler's grounder which was bobbled by Houston second baseman Kiko Garcia, giving the Pittsburgh Pirates a 5-4 victory that ended the Astros' five-game winning streak.

Milner drew a one-out walk off loser Dave Smith, 0-3, and took third on Bill Madlock's single. With the infield drawn in, Milner broke for the plate on Easler's grounder, which Garcia bobbled and then threw home too late to get Milner.

The victory went to Eddie Solomon, 1-1, the fifth Pittsburgh pitcher, who worked the 12th inning.

The Pirates had tied the score with a run in the bottom of the 10th on Tim Foli's double, Milner's pinch infield hit and a grounder by Madlock which forced Milner. The relay to first was too late to get Madlock as the tying run came home.

Cesar Cedeno led off the Houston 10th with a single, took third on a single by Jose Cruz and scored on Mike Ivie's sacrifice fly to give the Astros a short-lived 4-3 lead.

Houston took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Denny Walling led off with a single, stole second and scored on a single by Ivie. The Astros broke a 1-1 tie with consecutive home runs in the fifth by Walling and Craig Reynolds off Pittsburgh starter Rick Rhoden, the third of the season for each player.

Trailing 3-1 in the seventh, Pittsburgh got two runs against Houston starter Bob Knepper to tie the score. With one out, Jason Thompson walked, went to second on a single by Steve Nicosia and scored on pinch hitter Phil Garner's single. Kurt Bevacqua followed with a pinch single to score Nicosia.

Doyle Alexander, 4-1, pitched six innings of four-hit ball but left after his arm stiffened slightly in the cold weather. Greg Minton hurled the final three innings, allowing two runs in the eighth on Pete Rose's double, a walk and Gary Matthews' double.

Kansas City getting well against Texas Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Willie Aikens crashed two doubles off the outfield wall and scored three times Saturday night to lead the Kansas City Royals past the Texas Rangers 7-2.

The Royals were 4-10 and off to their worst start ever after a Thursday night shutout at the hands of the Rangers but the defending American League champions have now won two games in a row for the first time this season.

Dennis Leonard, 2-3, shackled Texas on five hits and retired 10 batters in a row over one stretch. Amos Otis, Jamie Quirk and Cesar Geronimo each had two runs batted in for the Royals.

Loser Doc Medich, 2-2, allowed 10 hits before being lifted in the seventh inning.

Aikens doubled and scored on Geronimo's single in the second inning. He doubled again in the fourth, Otis singled him to third and White brought him home with a single. Otis took third on the hit and scored on a grounder by Geronimo.

Jose Morales' 9th inning double lifts Baltimore

BALTIMORE (AP) — Pinch-hitter Jose Morales, given new life after an apparent ninth-inning strikeout, rapped a game-winning double on the next pitch to give the Baltimore Orioles a 4-3 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays in the opener of Saturday's twi-night doubleheader.

Plate umpire Mike Reilly called Morales out after he foul-tipped a 1-2 pitch from Mike Willis, 0-2. But second base umpire Larry Barnett, after the Orioles appealed, ruled that catcher Ernie Whitt had trapped the ball. Whitt was ejected for disputing the decision.

The one-out double by Morales, his 96th successful career pinch hit, scored Lenn Sakata, who walked and was sacrificed to second by Ken Singleton.

The Blue Jays, who have lost 18 consecutive games in Baltimore, tied the game on a two-out, eighth-inning homer by Lloyd Moseby. It was the fifth and last hit off Jim Palmer, 1-0, who went the distance for the first time this season and retired 17 consecutive batters during one stretch.

Barker cools Chisox

CLEVELAND (AP) — Len Barker pitched a seven-hitter and Duane Kuiper, in his first game since last June 1, slapped two key singles to spark the Cleveland Indians to a 3-1 triumph over the Chicago White Sox Saturday.

The victory was the Indians' fourth in a row and ninth in their last 10 games.

Barker, 2-1, struck out eight and walked two as he outdueled White Sox Francisco Barrios, 1-2. Barrios went the distance, limiting the Indians to five hits.

left side and eventually scored on Mitchell's fly to center. That made it 5-3 El Paso and kept hope alive going into the ninth.

Irvine's lead off double routed Clark, now 0-4, and three straight hits off Rob Blyth, capped by Davis' homer, made it 8-3.

Clark for the second straight game could have come away with something better than a loss with some bat support. Going into the ninth, he had surrendered just eight hits, albeit all carried the ring of authority...three doubles and two homers.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—Jim Napier, roving pitching coach for the Chicago Cubs organization, was all set to play golf Saturday when he got word of Manager Randy 'Hundley's suspension at Iowa for an altercation with an umpire. How Lardner would have loved latest LA legend

Los Angeles Times

How Ring Lardner would have loved Fernando Valenzuela! Shades of You Know Me, Al. Elements of Elmer the Great. Ike without the alibi. I can see the Busher's letters home to his fiancee right now:

"Dere Mable,

"Well, girlie, it looks like you can get that old refrigerator, after all. It looks like your boy here is going to be in that old fall classic, alright. Eat yer heart out, Howard Cosell!

"I'm not asting you to bleeve this, I can hardly bleeve it myself. But, you know how the papers been sayin' we didn't have no chanct? No pitchin' I believe is what those wise boys been saying. Well, let me tell you, they is going to be a lot of red faces in that old press box this Sepember.

"Boy, would ol' Walt Disney like to get a-holt of this one! The story goes back to a year ago. We still had Sut, then, but we was hurtin'. The ol' Dodgers was three games out with three left, you remember, and we caught Houston, but then came up a half a buck short in the playoff game.

Well, about a week before those games, there comes walking into our locker room the oddest specimen I have seen in a Dodger baseball uniform since Uncle Robbie. This guy looks like Wallace Beery, if you get my drift. I mean, if he fights a bull, you wouldn't know which was which. So, I asked Nobe, the clubhouse guy, 'What's this, a department store Santa Claus?' And Nobe says 'It's some kind of relief pitcher we got form San Antone.' I says, 'We ain't got nuthin' yet from San Antone but the light bill.' Nobe says 'He's oney 19 years old,' and I says, 'If he's oney 19, he's had a hard life.'

"But, the next day he goes in the bull pen and Beach, the bull pen catcher, comes in an he's kind of white and Skip says 'How did it go, we got a big series with the Astros, don't forget.' And Beach says 'I ain't never seen a ball disappear three times on its way to the plate before. You better frisk this guy fer mirrors.'

"Well, it was kinda spooky you know, girlie? I mean, here this new pheenom sits by himself and nobody knows what to say to him like 'how's it goin', kid?' or 'Did you win that suit or take it off a dead Indian?' You know how the guys like to kid around? Oney he just smiles, and strikes people out. Well, I'm tellin' you, nobody messes with this guy at all. I mean this guy is the Treasure of Sierra Madre. He talks to the Spanish-speaking guys on the club, Babo Castillo, and Manny Mota, and Pete Guerrero, and even the Skipper, but Reuss yells out, 'Don't nobody teach this guy English! Don't teach him nothing, ya hear?! Leave him alone!'

"Well, we got in this series with Houston, and the Skipper throws this kid in, and I can't bear to look. I figure Cedeno is going to take him, and the National League pennant, downtown. Hah! I never see so many broken-back swings in my life. He throws the screwball and the fastball with the same motion and they oughta be a law against that. Houston was furious. 'If he's 19-years-old, he was born on Leap Year!' they yells. 'Ast him how he pitched to Babe ruth!'

"He's got one of those long Spanish-mission sounding names that expands on both ends. Uses up every letter in the alphabet. F-e-r-n-a-n-d-o V-a-l-e-n-z-u-e-l-a. So, the guys in the dugout call him 'Freddie.' He don't care. He don't care about nuthin'. Three-men-on, bottom-of-the-ninth? Fifty-thousand people screaming? Freddie don't care. He don't understand them anyway.

"Over the winter, we don't think much about him. Then, on opening day, Reuss comes down with a sore calf muscle. Hoot's got a torn finger. So, Skip gives our mystery guest, our senor from Sonora, the ball. Well, if you been readin' the papers, you know the rest. How he owns Houston. The Astros must think he's Walter Johnson. Personally, I think he's Burleigh Grimes. Some guys think he's Shoeless Joe Hardy from 'Damn Yankees.' It's like he's got somebody whispering, 'No, not over there! Over here!' everytime he makes a throw. Just to be safe, I don't like no matches near him.

"So, I guess your little ol' boyfriend here will be in the big one this fall. That brings in 25 big ones, honey, thanks to our fine friend. I don't care if he rode with Villa.

"But, you know what burns me up? You reelize if we start him in that overtime playoff game with Houston last year, we're in the World Series!? Four times he's pitched against Houston, and home plate is just a rumor to them.

"But, don't worry, Baby, we got 'em this year. Fernando's gonna' be the first guy ever won that car for series MVP that didn't know how to drive it. Me? Don't worry about me. I'm packaging this one up for Disney, right now. Copyrightin' it. I'm calling it 'Son Of Blubber.' "

Midland High first baseman Jerry Zachery waits on a throw from pitcher Doug McLean as the Bulldogs try to pick Odessa High's Leroy Alvarada off first. Alvarada made it back safely to first, but the Bronchos dropped the important District 5-5A baseball game 8-5 to the Purple Pack Saturday at the Memorial Stadium field.

Bulldogs begin grid drills Monday

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

The Midland High Bulldogs begin three weeks of spring football training Monday, and coach Pat Culpepper, heading into his second year at the Pack helm, says there will be some changes made.

Culpepper plans to start from ground zero when his Bulldogs hit the field at 3:45 p.m. Monday, which means in literal terms that there will be a new offense and defense to greet the near 90 athletes who are expected to show up.

Culpepper will drop his I-formation attack this year and will install the wishbone. He also plans to adopt an eight-man defensive front, which will also be unique on the District 5-5A front.

"We're not going to have any stand-out football players this year and we are going to have to do some things to control the ball game," Culpepper says of his new format. "The wishbone forces a defense to be balanced and it is a ball control offense. That's where our success will be. The eight-man defense and the wishbone will take all 11 players working together and that will be our emphasis this spring. We must learn to work as a unit.

"Last year, we had some individuals who could pull the trigger on any given play. I know a lot of people thought we were hully-gully at times, but when you have a quarterback that can pass and run, you take a few more chances on the big play. We will have to work for everything we get this year."

Culpepper expects key battles to be waged for the quarterback and fullback positions this spring. Alan Chick, who came off the bench for a big game against Big Spring last year, is one of the candidates at quarterback. Scott Sears, who led the MHS junior varsity to an undefeated season, will also vie for the job as will Mark Page, who was a slot back last year. Page has been impressive in the off season drills.

Bruce Sears and Byron Campbell will battle for the all-important fullback slot. Culpepper feels you must be strong at fullback to run the wishbone properly.

There will be a lot of youngsters who will get a shot a starting varsity berths. Midland High's junior varsity was unbeaten last fall and Culpepper feels that all of that crew should get a good look.

"They (the JV) deserve a good look. Any time you go undefeated, you should get a chance to show what you can do. We would like as many of them as possible to earn starting berths. There is a lot of talent coming off that JV team," Culpepper stated.

The MHS coaching staff is anxious for spring training to get underway. They have been excited about the way the off season program has gone. "We've had a year and a half now to work with the weights and I think we have seen some significant breakthroughs in that area. I just know our kids are stronger and we want to put that to the test," Culpepper said.

Midland High was 5-5 last fall in Culpepper's first year.

"We have a lot of work to do this spring with a new offense and defense to install, but knowing the kids this time around should make things a lot easier. I think everyone involved knows what to expect this time around," Culpepper said.

The Bulldogs will work daily at 3:45 p.m. and will hold squad scrimmages May 9 and May 16 at 10 a.m. Culpepper has invited anyone interested in the spring practices to attend.

The Bulldogs will end the spring grind May 23 at 7:30 p.m. with the annual Bill Mims spring scrimmage. That scrimmage will be held at Memorial Stadium and is open to the public.

Streck fires record 62

HOUSTON (AP) — Ron Streck, who fired a record-setting 62 to take a three-shot lead in the third round of the $350,000 Michelob-Houston Open Golf Tournament Saturday, has been in this position before.

And the only other time he was in this position, Streck won.

That was in his rookie year in the 1978 San Antonio-Texas Open. He had closing rounds of 63-62 to score his only PGA Tour victory. And his 125 total for the last two rounds in that tournament stands as an all-time Tour record.

"I'd like to break it," he said.

"I'm certainly not afraid to win," Streck said, "and I'm certainly going to be trying to win.

"I've been out here long enough, and I've looked at the way other players win, to know that Saturday is position day. You want to get yourself in position to be able to win on Sunday."

And the baby-faced Streck did that.

He one-putted 13 times in his remarkable effort that broke the course record on the 7,071-yard Woodlands Country Club layout. The score matched the lowest 18 hole total of the year on the PGA Tour. go in," he said.

A pair of former U.S. Open champions, Hale Irwin and Jerry Pate, shared second at 201. Pate had a 66 in the warm, windy weather and Irwin shot a 67 that included bogeys on the first and last holes.

Beth Daniel, who was in second place after Friday's round, dropped out of contention with a 78.

Stacy takes command in CPC

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Defending champion Hollis Stacy sank a four-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole Saturday to take sole possession of the lead in the $125,000 CPC International women's golf tournament.

Stacy took only nine putts on the final nine holes, two of them 10-footers, for a par 72 to give her a three-day total of 214.

Stacy had been tied at 2-under with Sandra Haynie and Debbie Austin after Friday's second round on the 6,290-yard course at Moss Creek Plantation.

Austin moved into second place, one shot back, with a 73 for a three-day total 215. Kathy Whitworth was in third place with a 71 and a 216 total.

Parker faces Scypion today

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — For middleweight Curtis Parker, Sunday's scheduled 10-rounder against Wilford Scypion may be his last chance to prove he can challenge a champion.

Parker, a tough, compact Philadelphian with a 17-2-1 professional record, has lost successive decisions in the past few months — first to Dwight Davidson last August and then to Mustafa Hamsho last February.

Ags' Hall sets vault record

DALLAS (AP) — Defending NCAA pole vaulting champion Randy Hall of Texas A&M set a new Southwest Conference standard for 1981 with a 17-8 jump Saturday at a five-team track and field meet at Southern Methodist University.

Hall's previous best effort this year had been 17-4.

A&M's Jim Howard sent a new 1981 conference mark with a 7-3 high jump and North Texas State's Rudy Levarity swept the 100- and 200-meter dashes in other Saturday events.

Levarity posted a 10.1 time in the 100-meter dash and turned in a 20.83 time in the 200.

Study shows athletes have greater grad rate

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — A greater percentage of athletes are graduating from college than non-athletes, according to a five-year study commissioned by the NCAA.

The study shows that among male students who entered college the fall of 1975, 52 percent of the athletes had graduated by the spring of 1980 while the graduation rate for non-athletes was 41.5 percent.

The American College Testing Program (ACT) conducted the study of 46 NCAA member schools, mostly Division I, for the NCAA. Academic records of 32,300 non-athletes and 4,065 athletes were studied.

"I think, since this was the most inclusive study of its type ever done, it perhaps puts to rest the perception some people have that athletes do not do as well in the classroom as non-athletes," said Ted Tow, an assistant executive director of the NCAA.

The ACT report also measured graduation rates among various sports. Each sport showed a higher graduation percentage than non-athletes.

Dead fish lie in a dry lakebed in Florida's Everglades where lack of rain has created drought conditions as a result of a lack of rain for several months.

Long-neglected Lake Houston gets attention

Lake Houston is a 12,000-acre reservoir nestled on the northeast corner of the sprawling Houston area has been a neglected as a good old fishing hole for some time.

But there are signs that the 26-year-old lake will be getting a lot more attention. A lot of the attention is expected to come from Houston-area fisherman whose wallets have been depleted by junkets to distant fishing lakes.

Texas Parks and Wildlife Department biologists who periodically check its fish populations believe Lake Houston is a better fishing hole than its reputation suggests.

Granted, the shallow and slightly murky lake is not a largemouth bass hot spot since it lacks the type of cover required to support them. But it ranges from good to outstanding in production of blue, flathead and channel catfish and the highly popular crappie (often called white perch in Southeast Texas).

Also, biologist Charles Menn of Houston points out that a newcomer to the lake is doing well and may have a real impact on Lake Houston's future. Striped/white bass hybrids have been stocked on two occasions, and anglers have already caught individual hybrids weighing five to six pounds, Menn said.

"Hbrid stripers are good open-water predator fish, and they seem to be doing realy well in Lake Houston," Menn said. "The lake has good populations of both threadfin and gizzard shad for hybrids to eat."

Menn said additional stockings of hybird stripers are planned this spring.

A recent survey showed some surprising favorable results. The survey showed there were 516 channel catfish, 232 blue catfish, 88 largemouth bass an 642 crappie per acre. As expected, these figures indicated there were only adequate numbers of bass, but extremely healthy populations of catfish and crappie.

"Trotline fishermen do extremely well catching catfish, and some huge blue and flatheads have been taken," said Menn. He added that catfish also are caught in most areas of the lake drift fishing with rod and reel.

"The crappie survey provide an excellent fishery, too," Menn said. "They maintain a good average size, with very little sign of stunting.

76ers, Celts shoot it out

BOSTON (AP) — It's a dream game, the Philadelphia 76ers and the Boston Celtics — the best in basketball — going head-to-head for 48 minutes today at Boston Garden, where banners remind one and all of the National Basketball Association's greatest dynasty.

To be sure, the NBA champion will not be crowned Sunday. It's the Eastern Conference title that's at stake, and a berth in the finals against the Houston Rockets, who were only 40-42 during the regular season but blasted their way through the West playoffs.

But forward Cedric Maxwell of the Celtics put in words what every player who has taken part in this emotion-charged renewal of the Philly-Boston rivalry feels in his heart.

"There's no doubt that these two teams are the cream of the crop," said Maxwell. "We had the best records during the regular season and we've been the best in the playoffs. The winner of this series will win the championship, I don't think there's any doubt about that."

A week ago Philadelphia led the best-of-seven series 3-1 and seemed certain to fulfill its playoff promise of 1977, when after losing to Portland in the finals.

Canada geese die by thousands

Waterfowl poisoning

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The deaths of thousands of Canada geese on Lake Puckaway may have provided the final, convincing argument in Wisconsin's long, heated debate over lead shot poisoning of waterfowl.

Wildlife officials say 2 to 3 million birds may die nationwide each year from lead poisoning.

Researchers have long said that the lead pellets in hunters' shotgun shells are as deadly a poison as they are a weapon. The pellets, from shots that go astray, land in shallow water and farm fields where birds feed. They apparently eat the pellets along with gravel, which helps grind food for digestion

Thity-seven states were reported to have had some form of controls on lead shot use in effect during the past hunting season.

SOME HUNTERS, however, have steadfastly opposed attempts to require use of steel shot — which is not poisonous. They argue that heavier lead pellets kill cleanly, leaving fewer cripples.

Last year, Wisconsin's Natural Resources Board ordered that a 1979 ban on lead shot for hunters using 12-gauge shotguns be extended to all hunters in designated zones, in line with U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service directives.

Steel shot opponents convinced the Legislature to lift the ban on lead shot, except in a popular goose hunting zone near the huge Horicon Wildlife Refuge.

SUPPORTERS said the legislation, signed by Republican Gov. Lee S. Dreyfus, was a victory for citizens over government bureaucrats.

Then, in early February, after the hunting seasons closed, came the reports that hundreds, possibly thousands, of geese were dead or dying in the area of the Grand River Marsh, Lake Maria and Lake Puckaway.

After analysis of carcasses, the Department of Natural Resources said the deaths were due to lead poisoning. When the findings were questioned, a newspaper paid for independent tests of carcasses picked by a reporter and photographer. The finding — death due to lead poisoning.

Lead poisoning is believed to kill as many as 30,000 waterfowl a year in Wisconsin, but the deaths usually go unnoticed because they don't occur in large numbers in one location.

WILDLIFE managers said that this time a number of factors combined to produce a large-scale die-off.

The flock wintering in the area grew to 15,000 to 20,000 birds because of mild weather and light snow, and the birds' swimming prevented Lake Puckaway from icing over.

Despite efforts to disperse the flock, the majestic birds stayed and about 3,100 of them died.

Sen. Gary Goyke of Oshkosh, a leader in the 1980 fight to allow lead shot, publicly stated he had been wrong and said he supported banning lead shot in problem areas.

In February, the Natural Resources Board approved for next fall's hunt a lead shot ban described as more restrictive than the one overturned last year.

The rule, banning lead shot use in many of the state's most popular waterfowl hunting areas, awaits public hearings.

DNR Secretary Carroll Besadny said he was concerned that, by the time of the hearings, "many will have forgotten about what happened in February and they will be talking about the good old days again."

But Natural Resources Board member Clifford Messinger, a longtime supporter of the switch to steel shot, said the winter's experience should have a strong effect at the hearings and in the Legislature.

"I don't believe that the Legislature is going to overturn this again," he said.

The DNR said 5,000 to 10,000 geese remained at Lake Puckaway into April. The birds spend the summer in Canada.

In early April, DNR wildlife managers reported picking up another 161 dead geese, "the result of annual spring mortality from lead poisoning."

Flames, Stars clash tonight

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — The Calgary Flames floundered much of the time on road trips during the regular National Hockey League season, so their upstart rookie, Kevin Lavallee, doesn't fit the Flames' mold.

As the invading Canadians prepared for their third game Sunday night against the Minnesota North Stars in the Stanley Cup playoff semifinals, Lavallee admitted he liked the Met Center in Bloomington.

The best-of-seven series is tied at 1-1, and Games 3 and 4 Sunday and Tuesday will be played in Bloomington.

"The ice is nice and big, and there's a lot of room to skate (at the Met Center)," said Lavallee, who was a second-round draft pick from Brantford, Ontario.

The 19-year-old Lavallee said with a trace of impetuosity he thought his job at Calgary "would be to score goals, I didn't worry much about defensive play."

But he said he observed the tactics of such seasoned Calgary players as Eric Vail and Don Lever and has learned something while on the bench, too.

The speedy Lavallee said he likes to go against Minnesota "because they play the same way I like to play, they really skate and handle the puck well."

Flames Coach Al MacNeil observes that his rookie "has good wheels.

Kole, Archer to team for benefit concert

The Ronnie Kole Trio of New Orleans and Midland soprano Janice Archer will perform a benefit concert at 8 p.m. May 14 in Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Proceeds of the performance will go to raising the $125,000-plus necessary for the Midland High School band to march in the 1982 Pasadena Tournament of Roses Parade held on New Year's Day.

Ronnie Kole

Kole has been playing and studying piano for over 30 years. He has been referred to by New Orleans critics as "the man with a thousand fingers." Kole is as comfortable playing Boogie-Woogie as he is playing classical selections.

Kole is the organizer of the Trio, which previously performed at the Al Hirt Club. Today in New Orleans the Ronny Kole Trio is known to be one of the top acts in town. For eight years the Trio has made the headlines at the New Orleans Jazz Festival.

Kole is originally from Chicago, Ill. His career began at the age of 11 and by the time he was 14 he was playing professionally. He belonged to several groups before he formed The Heavyweights and ultimately moved to New Orleans. He has performed at Carnegie Hall and has made appearances on the Mike Douglas Show, the Johnny Carson Show and the Merv Griffin Show.

Richard Taylor is the percussionist and Everett Link is the bass player. Both have been with Kole since the early 60s.

Those not receiving an invitation to the benefit may call Joan Baskin at 682-0803.

Anderson promises unusual stage show

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

One was a disc jockey. The other — a guy who just wanted to "pick and sing and write songs." And that was OK with the DJ because inside they shared the same dream.

"In the late '50s, I was working as a disc jockey in Georgia," Bill Anderson said in a recent telephone interview. "I was writing a lot of songs and I had a band," added the 1959 University of Georgia graduate. His degree is in broadcast journalism.

At that time he wasn't making any money doing what he knew he wanted to do. It wasn't until the Ray Price recording of his song "City Lights" that Anderson actually became known inside the industry. The recording became the No. 1 record of the year.

Anderson made the original recording of "City Lights," but "it was a well kept secret recorded on a small label and nobody ever heard of it."

He went to Nashville and became a "songwriter writing for other people."

At that time, Anderson looked up his friend who had just wanted "to pick and sing and write songs." The soldier had been doing a tour of duty at Fort McPherson in Atlanta. But when he got out of the service he had headed for Nashville, arriving there before Anderson.

"He opened the doors for me," Anderson said, adding that his friend's name was Roger Miller.

Anderson is scheduled to perform at Chaparral Center with another country Western entertainer, Tom T. Hall, at 8 p.m. Saturday.

The concert is this year's fund-raising event for the Midland-Lee Youth Centers. The proceeds go toward keeping the youth center doors open another year.

Tickets may be purchased at area record stores and at Chaparral Center.

Today, "I'm into a lot of different things," such as guest appearances on the soap opera "One Life to Live" and various talk shows, hosting a weekly nationally syndicated show "Backstage at the Grand Ole Opry," and owning several radio stations. Anderson still prefers "live performing. That's the thing I enjoy the most — instant feedback.

"People in our business are more geared to that — the audience reaction."

The reaction he usually gets to his stage show is "'Gee, We didn't know it was going to be like that.'

"I have an unusual stage show which is multi-media in its presentation. It's not anything I can sit here and describe," Anderson said, adding, "It's something you have to see."

Songs by Anderson include "Still," "Tips of my Fingers," "I May Never Get to Heaven," "When Two Worlds Collide" and "I Can't Wait Any Longer."

All total, he has over 50 singles, 37 albums and 15 music trade awards to his credit. He has been honored five times as Songwriter of the Year, Male Vocalist of the Year and with both Jan Howard and Mary Lou Turner, Top Duet of the Year.

The song he likes the best is "the one I'm going to write next week. Everybody likes to think they haven't done their best. Some of my most vanilla songs are the most popular, while those that I feel are my most profound, listeners yawn right through them," Anderson said laughing.

He would "someday like to write an inside view of what it's really like in this business." For now, this South Carolina-born entertainer is happy to be where he is professionally and privately.

"I'm a homebody. I've got a little farm (at Lebanon, Tenn.) and I like to get on my tractor and plow. I really enjoy rolling around in the dirt with my little boy Jamey, who will be 3 years old in June," Anderson said.

"If I have a philosophy, it is to find something that you like to do so much that you'll do it for nothing and then learn how to make money doing it."

And so far, Anderson's philosophy has worked for him.

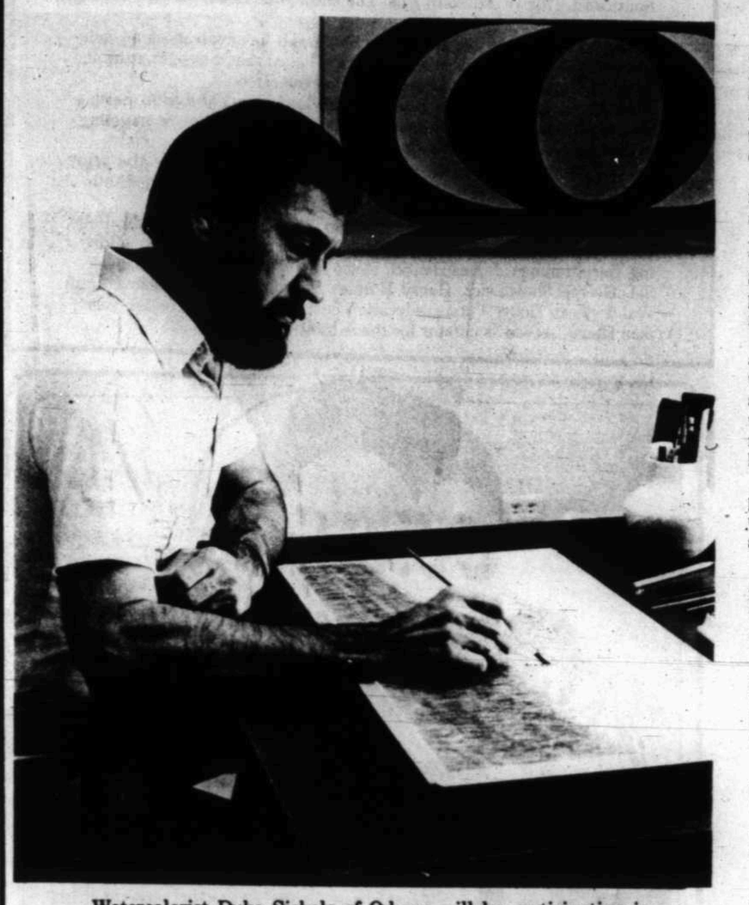
Artist inspired by nature's beauty



Watercolorist Duke Sickels of Odessa will be participating in Mayfair '81, Trinity School's annual arts and crafts show from 10 a.m. until 8 p.m. Saturday.

Among the many artists to be appearing at the annual Mayfair at Trinity School will be Duke Sickels. Mayfair '81's annual arts and crafts show will be from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday.

According to Sickels, his love for nature provides the creative stimulation for his watercolors. An avid naturalist, his treks to wilderness areas in the United States and abroad inspire his portrayals of rural and naturalistic themes.

Artistic ventures of Sickels also include pottery and sculpture. After experimenting in several media, Sickels feels watercolor is the most effective medium for exhibiting nature's beauty.

"It's really exciting to complete a painting having achieved the effects I have mentally visualized," he explains.

The medium used by Sickels involves a wet on wet technique with a dry brush in the final stages.

Sickels has received awards for several of his works which have been represented in exhibitions and shows across the Southwest.

He is a native of the Midwest, but has lived most of his life in West Texas. He does most of his work in a private studio at his home.

He holds membership in the Odessa Art Association, the Texas Fine Arts Association and the Southwestern Watercolor Society.

Networks announce fall schedules

NEW YORK (AP) — Ma and Pa Walton, the Hulk and Flo are leaving the airwaves, but James Arness, Rock Hudson and James Garner are coming back in new prime-time TV series next fall.

CBS, the 1980 prime-time ratings leader, announced Thursday it will unveil six new series in the fall season, mostly dramas. Third-place NBC says it will introduce 10 shows with a heavy emphasis on comedy and established stars.

ABC announced its fall lineup on Wednesday.

NBC is dropping nine shows, including "Disney's Wonderful World," a Sunday afternoon fixture for two decades. But fans of Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck will be able to catch their escapades on CBS, which has picked up Disney as "Walt Disney Presents."

Other canceled NBC series are "Lobo," "BJ and the Bear," "Nero Wolfe," "Buck Rogers," "The Gangster Chronicles," "The Brady Brides," "Walking Tall" and "Thursday Night at the Movies."

CBS canceled seven series, including two of its most pretigious shows, "The Waltons" and "The White Shadow."

Other CBS series not returning are "Enos," "The Incredible Hulk," "The Tim Conway Show," "Flo" and "Wednesday Night at the Movies."

All three networks dropped regularly scheduled movies from their fall programming.

NBC is turning more toward comedy in fall. It will have seven half-hour series, the most for the network since 1965. It is also adding its first 90-minute drama in several years, a series called "Chicago Story." Four of the new CBS shows are hour dramas.

NBC's fall schedule marks the return of such big name stars as Arness, formerly of "Gunsmoke;" James Garner, late of "The Rockford Files;" and Rock Hudson, one-time lead in "McMillan and Wife."

Angie Dicksinson is standing by with a new comedy series for NBC, which has also signed Frank Sinatra for several specials.

Former pro football star Merlin Olsen will leave "Little House on the Prairie" for a new series set in the West, "Father Murphy," Tuesdays 8-9 p.m.

The new NBC comedies also feature some well-known talent — Tony Randall in "Love, Sidney," Wednesdays 9:30-10; Gabe Kaplan in "Gabe and Guich," Thursdays 8:30-9; Mickey Rooney in "The Mickey Rooney Show," Fridays, 8-8:30; and Nell Carter in "Gimme a Break," Thursdays, 9:30-10.

Trombonist to perform

Trombonist Jay Wise will present a recital at 3 p.m. today in the Allison Fine Arts Center at Midland College.

The first half of the concert will be a solo performance followed by Igor Stravinsky's "Historie du Soldadt," performed by Wise, Robert Poer, piano and conductor; Don Grant, clarinet; Brian Groner, violin; Pam Patron, basson; Bill Reid, contrabass; James Rennier, percussion; and Dale Sterling, trumpet.

According to Wise, this selection deals with the Faust legend and centers around a fiddling contest with the devil. It can stand on its own or be performed with a narrator and dancers. In this rendition it will be performed minus the dancers and narrator.

Selections performed by Wise include Bach's "Suite for Violincello," Jacques Casterde's "Sonatine (1954)," and Edward Llewelyn's "My Regards — valse."

The public is invited.

Comedian clashes with Vatican

By CLARA HEMPHILL
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — Don Novello, who played Father Guido Sarducci on the "Saturday Night Live" TV program, said Saturday he will not return to the Vatican because of the rough time he got from security agents who weren't amused by his priestly black cape, cowboy boots and pink glasses.

Vatican and Rome police detained Novello, photographer Paul Solomon and two people accompanying them for 6½ hours Thursday, the comedian said. Police accused him of impersonating a priest and taking unauthorized photographs, Solomon said.

Police and the Vatican had no comment on the detention.

"I'm not going back into Vatican City, not this trip anyway," Novello said in a telephone interview. "They just gave us a real rough time. They could have told us: 'Don't do it and don't come back,' but they took us to four different stations."

White requests prison sentence reduction

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Former supervisor Dan White, convicted of the murders of former mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk, has asked the state Supreme Court to cut eight months off his seven- and two-thirds-year prison term.

Attorneys for White argued gun use should have been counted against him only once because the Nov. 27, 1978, shootings at City Hall came within seconds of one another and were "one indivisible transaction with only one identifiable intent and objective..."

Gavin faces tough questions

SAN DIEGO (AP) — John Gavin parried the tougher questions in his first public appearance here since his longtime friend, President Reagan, picked him to become ambassador to Mexico.

He refused to discuss specific policies or past disputes with Mexico, but said he would support "warmer and friendlier relations" between the nations.

Rifle sales to benefit clinic

DENVER (AP) — Sales of Winchester Firearms' new John Wayne Rifle are expected to raise at least $1 million for the John Wayne Cancer Clinic, according to the president of Winchester's parent company.

Irani said part of the proceeds from each $600 rifle will go to the clinic and that the rifles will be available beginning July 4.

European countries also want to curb Japanese auto imports

BY RICHARD BILL
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Common Market nations, fearing Japan's automakers will divert to Europe the cars they've promised not to ship to America, will seek a similar Japanese vow of export restraint, European diplomats here said Saturday.

The Brussels-based European Commission, which represents the 10 nations of the European Community, or Common Market, "will ask for comparable treatment," said one diplomatic source, who asked not to be identified.

The commission already is projecting a trade deficit with Japan of $10 billion this year, and there are predictions it could reach $15 billion next year. By comparison, the 1979 deficit was $8.2 billion.

Imports of Japanese cars are a key factor. In the first quarter of this year, they soared 18 percent. Shipments to the United States during the same period increased only marginally.

The European Commission has expressed "serious concern" over the flood of Japanese cars entering Europe and asked Japan to moderate its exports. Canadians, too, have expressed concern.

But until now, Tokyo has been occupied with the problem in its largest market, the United States.

The Japanese agreement to limit U.S. sales, announced Friday by International Trade Minister Rokusuke Tanaka, would cut 1981 shipments by 140,000, compared with the previous year.

Just hours after the announcement, the European Commission issued a statement in Brussels saying it would "consider the details and implications for world trade." There were reports that Canada would send a task force to Tokyo in the coming week.

One diplomatic source said the European Commission had decided to seek "overall restraint," rather than agreements covering individual countries. But a Japanese official was quoted Saturday as saying it would be "impossible for Japan to uniformly apply restraints to the entire EC area" because of varying trade regulations.

Published reports here suggest that Belgium feels strongest about Japanese exports, having seen an increase of 34 percent this year over 1980.

France already limits Japan's share of the domestic market to 3 percent and has adopted other measures to limit shipments — actions that Japan's carmakers say are a "violation of free trade principles." Italy, too, has import quotas.

The negotiations that led to the U.S. export agreement have been sharply criticized by Japanese auto executives, who complained the deal — though ostensibly voluntary — was made without their participation.

Takashi Ishihara, President of Nissan Motor Co. and of the Japan Automobile Manufacturers Association, called it "deeply regrettable." The newspaper Asahi Shimbun said it was a "settlement without negotiations." Yomiuri Shimbun attacked the government's "clumsy technique."

Even Tanaka, who led the Japanese delegation, was reported to have "apologized" for an arrangement that was "not something that can be announced with pride."

But Ishihara, whose company makes Datsun automobiles, said the industry had no choice but to comply.

Japanese auto parts suppliers were reported Satuday to be considering whether to petition the government for compensation. Officials of companies affiliated with the Japanese "Big Two" — Toyota and Nissan — were quoted by Kyodo News Service as saying they expect to be "hard hit" since they turn out parts specifically designed for cars sent to the United States.

An exhibition featuring 35 hand-worked photographs by 16 artists from across the United States opened Saturday at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. The show will remain on view through May 31.

In recent years the hand-worked photograph has evolved as an independent medium of artistic expression. The current museum exhibit, "The Photographer's Hand," reflects this expression.

Jointly organized by the International Traveling Exhibition Service and the George Eastman House at Rochester, N.Y., the show is traveling to about 15 locations, including Brazil and Japan.

Techniques shown in this exhibition include hand-coloring the print, scratching, drawing, painting on the negative and recording images and abstract compositions on handmade negatives.

Strong quake rocks Pakistan, India

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP)— A strong earthquake rocked a broad zone of northern Pakistan and India Saturday night, but there were no immediate reports of deaths or serious damage.

Radio Pakistan said the quake measuring 6.7 on the Richter scale was felt from the northern town of Chitral to Lahore, 420 miles to the southeast.

United News of India reported thousands of people in the Indian city of Srinaga fled from swaying buildings and several people were injured. Srinagar is the capital of Kashmir state and is about 200 miles southeast of Chitral.

Chitral's assistant commissioner, Chiragh Hussain, said in a telephone interview, "The wall around my neighbor's house collapsed during the earthquake" and several other brick boundary walls tumbled down.

He said he knew of no injuries.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude.

An earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage in the local area, 4 moderate damage, 5 considerable damage and 6 severe damage. A 7 reading signifies a "major" earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage.

Portrait of a High Sky girl

Karen put the last of her clothes in her suitcase and snapped it shut.

She sat down on her bed and took a final look around the room that had been home for the past several years. She certainly had a lot of memories of the room and the campus of High Sky Girls Ranch.

Karen remembered the first day she came to the ranch eight years ago. She was 11 years old at the time, and scared to death. More than anything else, she remembered feeling "weird" about being the new girl at the ranch. She also felt rather cautious about trusting new people and worried about being accepted.

The reasons she came to the ranch were many and complicated. Her mother had died when she was eight years old and her father had recently remarried. She felt threatened by her step-mother and confused about the changes it made in her life.

Karen rebelled, and ran away from home on several occasions. Her school work was also slipping.

Her father and step-mother felt they just couldn't cope with Karen and her problems anymore, so they sent her to High Sky as a last resort.

Karen felt she had been sent away because she was "bad." She had a very low opinion of herself, and she was sure that her problems with her family were all her own fault.

It wasn't easy, but gradually she began to understand herself and her parents better. Through counseling sessions at the ranch, she began to feel better about herself.

She still had plenty of problems, but now she had a "family" at High Sky that would stick by her no matter what. And she knew that her High Sky family loved her regardless of her faults.

Karen also learned a lot about family life through living in the High Sky cottages. She had a mother and father figure in the houseparents and lots of "sisters." Cottage life provided her with love, understanding and, something that she desperately needed, consistency.

Responsibility was one of the most important things she learned. She was expected to do her chores and go to school and church. The ranch staff helped her realize the importance of taking responsibility for her life.

The senior cottage was a place of transition for her. She lived in the cottage with other 17 and 18 year olds.

They had a counselor living with them, but they made most of their own decisions about their lives and learned how to be independent.

Through the years, she had kept in touch with her parents. She loved them and knew that they loved her, but she realized it was better if they lived apart. She understood their feelings better now.

Now, she had graduated from high school and was ready to strike out on her own. She and a friend were going to share an apartment in Midland, and she had a job as a secretary. She was even thinking about going to college someday.

But no matter where she went or what she did, she knew she would remember High Sky Girls Ranch as her home. A home that had been there when she needed it most.

Sandra Thompson, 16, catches up on the latest gossip while preparing dinner for her cottage.

About the ranch...

High Sky Girls Ranch was established in 1963 to serve the needs of girls ages 6-18 who, for one reason or another, cannot live with their natural families.

Licensed by the Texas Department of Human Resources, the ranch has a present capacity to care for 31 girls.

Accomodations at High Sky, which is located three miles northwest of Midland, include three cottage units under the direction of a homeparent couple.

Cottages are set up to provide a family-like atmosphere for the girls. The senior cottage was created especially for older girls, ages 17 and 18, to prepare them for life after they leave the ranch. It gives them the opportunity to learn the responsibilities of being on their own while still living on campus.

Professional staff of the ranch includes David Maley, executive director, and Jackie Carter, director of social services. They, along with the homeparents and other staff members, strive to provide a quality program of care to meet the physical, psychological, educational and spiritual needs of each resident.

Counseling is provided not only to the girls, but to their families as well.

"If possible, the goal is to move the girls back with their families," Ms. carter notes. However, Maley says that in many of the cases, it just isn't possible to do so.

Referrals to the ranch are accepted from the Department of Human Resources, Juvenile Probation and private sources, such as parents and families. "We receive 20-25 each month," Maley says.

"All of our funding is from gifts and donations," explains Maley.

Primary fund-raising event for High Sky Girls Ranch is the annual Crystal Ball, which is scheduled for 8 p.m. Thursday at Midland Country Club. Ball features the drawing and auction of Waterford Crystal supplied by Sam L. Majors of Midland and Odessa, with proceeds going to the ranch.

After a long, hard day at school, six-year-old Maria Vasquez catches a few winks before supper.

Female political force in Ecuador

By KERNAN TURNER
Associated Press Writer

GUAYAQUIL, Ecuador (AP) — While the president of Ecuador struggled against his wife's uncle for political supremacy, a 30-year-old woman suddenly catapulted to the forefront of Ecuadorean politics and has become a new force.

Cecilia Calderon de Castro, daughter of a presidential candidate who was assassinated two years ago, caught her opponents by surprise when she won the popular vote in provincial elections.

"For us, this only represents the first tiny step," Mrs. Calderon de Castro said in a recent interview in this equatorial seaport, which with more than one million inhabitants is the country's most populous city.

The Dec. 7 provincial election had been considered by many Ecuadoreans as a plebiscite to see who was on top of the political heap after more than a year of democratic government: President Jaime Roldos or Assad Bucaram, his wife's uncle.

Instead, the election results reduced Bucaram's political standing, served as a warning to Roldos that his popularity was slipping and directed the spotlight on the petite, soft-spoken mother of three small children.

The Roldos-Bucaram dispute had limited the president's ability to govern since he was inaugurated Aug. 10, 1979, as the first constitutionally elected president in a decade.

The two men have been political enemies since Roldos won election by more than a million votes — the most in Ecuadorean history — and severed his ties with Bucaram and his Concentration of Popular Forces, a political party with its base in the slums of Guayaquil.

Bucaram accused Roldos of party and personal treason and blocked his programs in Congress, creating a national political stalemate which was not broken until Roldos put together a congressional coalition which ousted Bucaram from legislative leadership.

The final test of power between the in-laws was the provincial elections in December.

Each man chose a handpicked candidate for the provincial council in Guayaquil. Roldos picked his brother-in-law, Abadallah Bucaram, a controversial sheriff of Guayaquil, as the government candidate and Congressman ucaram chse his son Averroes Bucaram, the first cousin of the sheriff, as the party candidate.

Mrs. Calderon de Castro's party, the Centrist Alfarist Radical Front, founded 10 years ago by her father, Abdon Calderon Munoz, when he separated from the traditional Liberal Party, won 318,185 votes nationwide, or 20.47 percent of those cast.

She was elected to the provincial council with 187,999 votes, or 51 percent, of those cast. The sheriff finished second and the congressman's son third.

Nationally, the government-backed candidates came in second with 15.8 percent of the vote and the Concentration of Popular Forces dropped to fourth place, with only 6.2 percent.

It was an unexpected plurality for Mrs. Calderon de Castro's party, particularly since her father only got 9 percent of the vote when he ran for presidentin July, 978, placing fifth out of six candidates.

Galo Plaza, an ex-president and former secretary-general of the Organization of American States, said in an interview he thought Mrs. Calderon de Castro's victory resulted from a combination of factors, including her father's assassination, her political intelligence and the Roldos-Bucaram feud.

Many political observers trace Mrs. Calderon de Castro's election to the martyrdom of her father.

Calderon Munoz was a well-known economist who criticized the military dictatorship during his presidential campaign.

His demands for investigation of military corruption were silenced on Nov. 29, 1979, when he was shot down in a Guayaquil street.

The assassination became a national scandal when Gen. Bolivar Jarrin, the interior minister of the military regime, was accused of masterminding the murder.

The trial has reached the Supreme Court of Justice, where the prosecuting attorney has finished presenting his case against Jarrin and several accomplices.

"It is coming to an end," Mrs. Calderon de Castro said. "For the first time in the history of Ecuador, a political crime is being punished."

She denied that her election resulted from a sympathy vote, although she recognized that the party had "grown a great deal" since her father was assassinated.

She said the party had won the election by convincing the people, especially the poor of Guayaquil, that the party stood for "social, political and economic justice for all of the people."

She outlined her party's political strategy: first to capture the executive power of the provinces in the 1983 elections and then to get control of the national legislature in the 1984 elections.

Sticky decisions

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Tests have shown that two persons using the same adhesives and bonding the same materials can get different results.

Why? Because, as often happens in do-it-yourself projects, some people follow instructions to the letter and some, to say the least, are careless in the manner of application and procedure.

Entirely aside from how you use adhesives is the matter of selection of the right kind. Even a very powerful adhesive will lose some of its effectiveness if used on the wrong materials. For instance, the relatively modern cyanoacrylate doesn't always work as advertised when it is used on wood or other absorbent items, but it is a truly powerful adhesive for ceramics, metals and other non-absorbent materials.

A new development in this line, by the way, is a cyanoacrylate which has the ability to bond wood to wood and wood to non-porous surfaces without the use of a primer. The lesson, then, is to read the label very carefully before you buy an adhesive to find out if it will do exactly what you want it to do on the materials on which it will be used.

For good results in using adhesives, remember these fundamentals:

There is a difference between a water-resistant and a waterproof adhesive. Each means exactly what it seems to mean, but some persons ignore the meanings and use a water-resistant type when a waterproof one is necessary. For outdoor wooden furniture, the adhesive should be waterproof.

The quantity of adhesive used is important, so when the directions call for a small amount, use a small amount. Too much can weaken the bond.

In choosing an adhesive, consider how much stress will be placed on the repaired area.

Furniture market

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — American furniture makers were not out to scale the heights with bold, new designs at the recently-concluded, semiannual furniture market here.

They just wanted to lead retailers up a gentle slope out of the sales decline that has plagued the industry lately. Their method was to introduce diverse furniture items to appeal to every market segment. However, furniture categorized by function rather than by room of use continued to increase.

Armoires and wall systems suited for any room, as well as seating that turns into a bed were shown by more manufacturers.

Also brightening the market were numerous cheerful, simple-lined, contemporary pieces scaled for smaller rooms and apartment living. The industry refers to this type of furniture as "lifestyle" furniture.

Consumers who have shopped for furniture and accessories recently will find few surprises when most of the new styles appear on retail sales floors in the fall. The mix of contemporary, authentic and nostalgic American traditional and period furniture will continue in about the same proportion as at present.

But consumers may be surprised by the variety and cleverness of multipurpose and space-saving furniture for an informal style of life. Tables that fold or change height, beds in coffee tables and ottomans, and carry-home wall systems that you put together yourself and that can be made as tall and as long as necessary are being manufactured in greater numbers and styles.

Strictly Texan

A crash course revival of Western ways

A hat usually sits on the head straight, fits snugly enough to stay on and rests about one inch above the ears. The manner in which it is held when putting it on becomes a habit as well as part of the shaping.

Newly transplanted out-of-towners and native Midlanders were introduced to a crash course on "How to be a Texan" at a Tuesday night presentation held at Midland Center featuring detailed instruction on Texas dress and dance.

The evening culminated a four week seminar, sponsored by the Midland County Extension Service, which emphasized how to plant, invest and cook in Texas style among other lessons in how to develop and refine characteristics of an authentic Texan.

The agenda of the night included a Texas barbeque followed by a fashion show conducted by Linda Bond, Becky Saunders, Area Extension clothing specialist, and Lerii Fitzhugh, Miss West Texas. The fashion demonstration featured clothing by Texan designers specifically fashioned with the native climate and lifestyle in mind.

Trends in the western style point to easygoing fashions for the spring. Shapes are fuller, fabrics are lightweight, color is paler and details are fresh. The blouson is showing up in jackets and blouses and fuller skirts are being emphasized on the fashion front; especially coulottes which make for more wearable and casual clothing. In addition, the tiered skirt will be making a comeback lined with lots of lace and ruffles.

Other inclinations in the fashion scene emphasize pants with wider legs; possible indication of the bygone era of the straight-legged Levis. A variety in jackets will feature short and shaped styles that hug the waste in addition to tunic-length jackets and unstuctured classics. Blouses will be adorned with fragile touches such as lace insets, embroidery, tucks, ruffles and elegant cut-work. Sleeves will remain fuller and puffed.

For those who will be able to stay in step with fashion, the next challange is to keep in time with the traditional Texas dance step of the Cotton-Eyed Joe, Cowboy Polka, Two-Step, Western Waltz and Country Swing. Billy Cook and Nancy Martin presentedcountry western dance instruction during the night's events to members of the audience with the back-up of the Cactus and Engineers music bands.

All participants were presented with an "official" Texas passport at the end of the evening, stamped by Jan Reeder of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, enabling them to document their visits through various cities and town — informal testimony intended to serve as a full-fledged claim to Texan citizenship.

Respite from watery downfall

BALA CYNWYD, Pa. (AP) — Dunk-the-teacher was to have been back this year at the Episcopal Academy's annual fair, but a volunteer fire company's concern about water conservation has prompted a change of plans.

But this year the 15-member fire association board decided that such use of water during a drought might be resented by residents who are prohibited from watering lawns and washing cars.

Fair chairwoman Carole Devlin came up with a solution: a bulls-eye now will drop the teacher into a tub of foam rubber.

DEAR ABBY

Question receives responses

DEAR ABBY: The letter from BLISSFUL IN BALTIMORE left me in a fog of confusion. I am a male, past 50, experiencing declining virility. Five of my male friends, all about my age, seemed as confused as I when we discussed BLISSFUL'S letter.

She said: "Your column is filled with letters from women who complain that they are married to cold sex machines who don't know the first thing about how to satisfy a woman. For heaven's sake, who knows better than the woman herself what it takes to satisfy her? Just ask her to be honest. And when she tells you, BELIEVE her."

My friends and I asked our wives and received the following responses:

My wife: "You know everything I know."

Wife No. 2: "We're too old for that nonsense."

Wife No. 3: "How should I know?"

Wife No. 4: "Sex is all you ever think about!"

Wife No. 5: "You aren't planning on starting that foolishness again, are you?"

Wife No. 6: "Go read a book, and don't bother me."

Regards, CHARLES

DEAR ABBY: I'm 42, very happily married with four teen-aged children. The oldest married six months ago. Our family has been complete for 14 years -- and now I'm pregnant again!

Abortion is out of the question. The only thing that will sustain me through this pregnancy is the knowledge that someone else who desperately wants a child will receive fulfillment and happiness from my labor. Yes, I want to put this child up for adoption, but I am concerned about the social pressures against such action.

My husband has called this pregnancy "a cruel blow" and "a great disappointment." He said that if I'm lucky I will have another miscarriage. (I had one.) But thus far I have not been able to get him to go along with giving up the child.

We are active in religious education and practically run the Sunday school at our church. We had looked forward to our middle years together — unencumbered. This would be impossible with a new baby to raise.

The main fact of this mess is that I can't mentally or physically face this middle-age pregnancy without the thought that I will be relieved of the burden in November.

What counsel can you give me? -- NAMELESS IN LOUISIANA

DEAR NAMELESS: I beg you not to make a decision while you are in this emotional state. Please wait until all the anger, disappointment and shock are dissipated, then decide together with your husband and children what to do about this unplanned child. Write again, my dear but troubled friend. I want to know of your decision.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please do thousands of secretaries a favor and print this? Whenever my boss and his wife receive a personal gift or have been entertained, or if there is any other matter that requires a personal "thank-you" note, my boss asks me to write it. Of course, he signs it. I always thought the wife was supposed to write those notes.

I have a heavier work load than I can carry without all this extra stuff. I have worked overtime, for which I am not paid, to get their Christmas cards out. I really wouldn't mind so much if either he or his wife ever thanked me for it, but it's never mentioned.

His wife has even called and asked ME to remind HIM to send so-and-so a thank-you note. Who does she think she is? Tell him for me, will you please? -- NO GUTS

DEAR NO: After this hits print, I may not have to.

(If you put off writing letters because you don't know what to say, get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $1 plus a long, stamped (35 cents) self-addressed envelope to ABBY, Letters Booklet, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.)

On the house

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Caulking the outside of your house is a necessary part of preparing it for painting, but it is just as important that this be done even when no paint project is in the offing.

Caulking is a form of weatherproofing. If it is neglected, air and water can enter the house, causing a loss of energy and damaging the structure and its contents. Because the loss of energy is not always apparent and the leak not visible until it is too late, periodic inspections of the house are required to prevent future trouble.

It is not enough to glance at the outside of the house looking for openings in the walls, since many of the gaps cannot be seen from the ground, even in a one-story building. You need a ladder and a flashlight to uncover gaps of an inch or so around windows and door frames.

When making the inspection, carry a piece of chalk or some other marking material with you. When you spot a place that requires caulking, mark it immediately. Don't rely on your memory for determining later where the trouble areas are located.

The places that usually need caulking are where dissimilar materials meet. That's where contraction and expansion occur at different times, producing the separations which need attention. It might be where plumbing and electrical services protrude, at vents, around joints, etc.

Caulking compounds are formulated to handle contractions and expansions. They never really harden, contracting and expanding with the materials to a degree.

It is when they lose their ability to do this, sometimes in a year or two, sometimes after many years, that replacement of the compound is necessary.

So that the new compound takes hold thoroughly, all loose pieces of the old material must be removed. Because the old material may appear to be sound but really isn't, use an old screwdriver to poke around when making your inspection.

Members in creased

NEW YORK (AP) — As companies grow in terms of sales or revenues, their number of board members tends to increase also, according to a recent American Management Associations study.

The number of directors per board ranges from 1 to 47 among the 1,057 U.S. companies surveyed. Banks and insurance companies tend to have more directors in relation to their assets than companies in other industries. However, in general, the type of industry has little bearing on the number of directors, the report found.

Further, 85 percent of the companies surveyed have inside and outside directors. Outside directors represent the majority in 68 percent of the companies.

One year is the typical term of office for most outside and inside directors.

Lifestyle guidelines

The following are suggested guidelines for publication of stories in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday; or two days before publication in a daily paper.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within a week of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for engagement and wedding announcement stories.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Freudian convention mass confusion

NEW YORK (AP) — An international cast of hundreds roamed the corridors of the Plaza Hotel this week, listening to speeches on "Sex and Language" and struggling to figure out just what was going on.

"It's much more the scene than the speeches," said one participant at the fifth congress of the International Freudian Movement.

The movement, which was established in 1973 in Milan, Italy, by psychoanalyst Armando Verdiglione, attempts to use the psychoanalytic principles of Sigmund Freud to deal with the problems of our age.

At least, that's what it seems to do. Throughout most of the sessions, obscurity and non sequiturs were the rule.

Many of the speakers' names could not be learned, because the publicized schedule of the congress had disintegrated long before. A long list of celebrities who were to speak — including Bella Abzug, Robert Altman and Bob Guccione — did not appear, and there were vague promises that they would speak "later."

Darrell J. Aherin, a spokesman for the movement, apologized for a lack of biographical material on speakers, and for the total disarray.

"I'm afraid I'm going to be strung up," he said, looking nervously at the throng, which he estimated at more than 700.

Most, wearing small radio receivers to pick up translations of speeches, many of which were in Italian or French, wandered the halls.

Louise Blackwell's depression cookbooks

By SUSAN STOLER
AP Writer

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Few modern cooks would return to the days of backyard hog-killings, wringing chicken necks or rendering lard.

But for the curious and those who remember such once-routine, rural regimen of the Depression days, author Louise Blackwell Dillow has recorded them for posterity.

Her "Mrs. Blackwell's Heart of Texas Cookbook" recalls days of growing up on a farm near Corsicana when the only store-bought things were flour, salt, sugar, coffee and tea.

"My whole memory of my mother is her preparing food. She did that all day long," says the retired child welfare worker who was born fifth of nine children.

Published by Corona Publishing Co. of San Antonio, the book's first printing of 6,000 copies is being marketed only in Texas.

The project started strictly as a way to preserve family recipes.

On a trip home to Corsicana, Mrs. Dillow drove around to see the numerous houses in which she had lived when her father was a tenant farmer. Hardly anything remained.

She and her sisters began reminiscing about their mother's well-spread table and soon regretted that few family recipes were written down.

She took it from there, collaborating with an older sister, Deenie B. Carver, on the cookbook which combines anecdotes of growing up with recipes from a country kitchen.

"I don't expect people to try everything," Mrs. Dillow says.

"Lye soap is one of the 'good ol' days' products that I've never had a hankering to go back to," she writes.

In a section on chicken, she adds, "The gizzard was a coveted piece of chicken in the Blackwell family until someone told us that eating gizzards would make a girl's breasts grow bigger."

The Blackwell family boasted seven girls and two boys.

Mrs. Dillow went off to Mary Hardin Baylor College in Belton for a bachelor's degree, attended the University of Chicago and earned a master's degree from Howard University in Washington. She worked in child welfare departments across Texas, married and raised three children in the Washington, D.C., area where her husband worked for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

They retired to this south Texas resort where he died less than a year ago.

She says she had to leave the cotton fields of north-central Texas to appreciate her childhood, but she does not paint a rosy picture of the Depression.

"We knew we were poor and we didn't like it. My parents were always wanting to do better for us," she recalls. "We came out all right in spite of it, not because of it."

Meals were cooked on a wood-burning stove and there was no electricity.

For that gift of appreciation and love on Mother's Day-give her something special for her wardrobe...or choose a unique piece of jewelry...or a selection from our gift items for the house

Tracing decorating ideas

AP Newsfeatures

It could be argued that the most sophisticated interior design is practiced not in major urban centers, but in High Point, a little town in North Carolina where furniture manufacturer showrooms dot the landscape.

Twice a year, these showrooms are decorated and rearranged to show off to best advantage each company's new line.

The idea is to make the furniture look like jewels to the retailers who come to look and, perhaps, to buy the new offerings.

Little expense is spared, whether for fresh flowers and plants, a new coat of paint in the latest shade or special accessories to create the desired ambience.

At the spring furniture market which was concluded recently, it was asked in several showrooms if there were any home-decorating ideas to be gleaned in these decorating strongholds.

The question touched a responsive chord in Kenneth Volz, a designer.

"It's a funny thing, but a large coffee table with a glass top and a light wood frame can go in a much smaller space than the same table with a dark wood finish," he said.

In general, Volz advised consumers to stay with light-finished woods and lots of glass in small spaces. Lighted shelves are also useful in fooling the eye into seeing more space than is actually there, he said.

From the point of view of upkeep, low-luster furniture in light woods almost eliminates the dusty look that detracts from the appearance of dark furniture with a high sheen.

Trashy myths about garbage

By ERMA BOMBECK

It's a myth in this country that anyone can make garbage.

I'm not talking about the frozen/quick-serve/packaged/just-add-water/three-minutes-in-the-microwave garbage. I'm talking your made-from scratch-leftover garbage for which American women are famous.

Garbage, if it's made right, takes a full week. Most men don't understand the process. They think you can take a leftover straight from the table, scrape it right from the plate and dump it into the can. That is not the way American garbage is made.

For the purpose of example, let us walk through a week in the life of two tablespoons of leftover peas and a piece of leftover pot roast the size of a coaster.

Day I: The leftover goes from the table to the refrigerator in an elaborate ritual of joy. In an eagerness to display her frugality, the woman transfers the peas and beef to a smaller dish with a haunting chant, "Don't touch this. I'm saving it for vegetable soup." Everyone believes her . . . or pretends they do.

Day II: The leftover enjoys a place of prominence in the refrigerator and is seen every time the door opens. A few times it is reexamined, but from the distance comes the familiar chant, "Don't touch it. I'm saving it for vegetable soup."

Day III: The leftover is moved to a less prominent shelf and is occasionally patted and reassured it will be the makings of vegetable soup.

Day IV: A traumatic time in the life of future garbage. It is either tossed prematurely or is shoved to rear of refrigerator on shelf next to a bowl containing three tablespoons of peach juice and a pit.

Day V: Traditionally on the fifth day, a leftover is opened, exposed to air and passed around to see if anyone can identify it. If it is recognizable, it is shoved in dark corner and allowed to "ripen" for another day.

Day VI: This is a crucial day in which the peas and beef curdle, turn green, harden and grow fuzz.

Day VII: Excited cries resound through the kitchen as the children dance around the refrigerator chanting, "Is it garbage yet?" Mother removes the leftovers, folds back the foil and pronounces the peas and beef dead! In no other country in the world do women prepare their garbage for burial like they do here. First, they wrap it in newspaper, then put it in a brown bag, then a plastic one and finally put it to rest in the garbage can in the garage.

A time-honored tradition of American women who for years have vowed, "I will bury no garbage before its time."

A GIFT FROM THE HEART

Link your heart to hers with a heart of diamonds, the most romantic gemstone there is. Over the centuries a mystique has grown around diamond. Nothing can surpass it in hardness. And no other material reacts so spectacularly with light.

Diamond is pure carbon, but it's a far cry from graphite or charcoal. During its formation under enormous heat and pressure, the carbon atoms were packed very tightly. This unique structure is what gives diamond its incredible hardness and allows it to take on such a superior luster. The atomic configuration also allows easy cleavage in certain directions of the stone, so care should be taken not to knock it against a hard surface.

Because of its unique qualities, diamond has come to symbolize love. The gift of a diamond heart ring multiplies the impact of your statement. The heart, of course, is another recognized love symbol. The never-ending circle of the ring band symbolizes eternity. The third finger of the left hand, upon which promise, engagement and wedding rings are traditionally worn, was once believed to have a direct connection to the heart. If you bestow such a ring upon your lady love, there should be no doubt about your feelings.

The heart shape in jewelry, like the diamond, is a classic. It isn't affected by the whims of fashion. At Sam L. Majors we're featuring a special collection of diamond heart jewelry that has been designed by some of the finest jewelry manufacturers. You might say we're promoting love this year. That's something that doesn't go out of style either.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Avoiding water boil-overs while cooking pasta

DEAR HELOISE:

I notice that from time to time someone sends in their favorite method of cooking pasta without the boiling-over mess...

I have used a way that a grandma from Italy recommended to Heloise many years ago.

Bring the water, to which you have added salt and a bit of oil or butter, to a boil.

Stir into this the pasta, bring it to a hard boil, stir once with a fork, cover and REMOVE IT FROM THE HEAT.

Let it stand with no further attention and in 15 to 20 minutes, the pasta will be cooked to perfection, piping hot, ready to strain and serve.

It couldn't be easier and also saves costly fuel. — O.O.T.

True... however, don't remove the lid during this 15 to 20 minutes to peek! The pasta needs the steam and lifting the lid lets it escape.

Also, should there be any of the spaghetti, etc. left over, cover it with cold water and place in the fridge. It will keep nicely for two or three days. — Heloise

COMPACT IDEA

Dear Heloise: After years of using pressed powder to touch up my makeup and having it turn "solid" in the compact from the oils on my skin, I found a new trick which might interest other faithful readers.

Just put the puff in the case upside down. The solid powder stays as fresh as when you first purchased it. — Mrs. Gloria Dickinson

COFFEE FILTERS

Dear Heloise: I used to have a terrible time separating my fluted coffee filters. Not anymore...

Just turn a package of 25 inside out and back again.

What a difference it makes! — C.L.P.

SAVE PLASTIC BAGS

Dear Heloise: Our newspaper is delivered in a large, plastic bag. I save these and put them under my sink.

When peeling some fruit or vegetables, I use one of these bags, tearing it partially down one side at the seam (this leaves a pocket at one end), then I spread the bag out flat and use it as a work surface.

When finished, I roll the peelings up into the pocket end and put it into the garbage pail.

My counter is clean and any moisture is held within the bag. This helps greatly in keeping a cleaner garbage pail, plus no clean-up of the working surface. — A Friend

SUDSY SUGGESTION

Dear Heloise: Use your soap chips by stuffing them in the holes in your loofah sponge. Keeps the suds coming. — Claire Drenowatz

STAIR SAFETY

Dear Heloise: If you slipping on my varnished stairs, I inquired about covering them with carpet. I was told it could be slippery too.

Answer? Sand lightly and re-varnish, adding to the varnish a substance which looks like pulverized sand. Paint stores carry it.

My stairs are still beautiful, yet are no longer dangerous. The difference is unbelievable! — Mary Lewis

SOURCE OF WIRES

Dear Heloise: If you are looking for some lightweight wire for a household project, look for it in old brush hair rollers.

My 6-year-old unravelled a few and the wire is just great! — Carol Farb

Heloise is waiting to hear your favorite household hint so drop her a line today, care of this newspaper. She can't answer your letter personally but, sure as nylon net is an all-purpose aid, she'll print the best tips received in her column.

Fall line fashion

NEW YORK (AP) — Oscar de la Renta is definitely a night person. About three quarters of his fall line is devoted to evening wear.

And practically everything he showed at his Wednesday show was embroidered. Leather coats and jackets had embroidery-like leather swirls, wool and velvet jackets came with huge embroidered borders of roses.

Jackets were hip length, broadshouldered box shapes. Some were fitted and nipped at the waist with peaked, puffed shoulders.

There were some stunners for the night-minded de la Renta.

A red charmeuse gown was clinging with a ruffle hem that swept up at a slant in the back. The same design also came in silver charmeuse.

A multi-colored chiffon metallic caftan had splashes of red, blue, yellow and green.

There were very opulent mixed prints in the lengthy show of silk chiffon. These were full length skirts, full blousy blouses cut in the peasant or gypsy mode.

Don Kline, who also presented his fall line Wednesday, had very geometic and futuristic shapes.

A mustard colored tunic was pointed. It was worn over pants that were baggy from the waist to the knee and then perfectly straight and hugging the calf. A helmet adorned the head. Animal pelts hung down each sleeve from the shoulders, little legs and bushy tails bobbing on the runway.

Accorditated flair pants were worn under a flair pleated skirt with a tunic top.

A coat with wing-like shoulders had a diagonal front. It was mustard with black trim.

Sharon Kohout and Doss Rogers fit little Matthew Schmitt into a new infant carrier seat. Matthew is the son of Dennis and Joy Schmitt of Midland. Kohout is coordinator a new program sponsored by the Childbirth With Preparation Mother's Club which is loaning out the new seats to parents of infants. The first 30 seats were provided by the Midland New Car Dealer's Association represented here by Rogers.

Childbirth With Preparation (CWP) Club, in cooperation with Midland College Traffic Safety Planning,has launched a new program to make riding cars safer for infants.

The Mother's Club unit of CWP will loan out an infant carrier seat to parents until babies are up to 9-12 months.

"We are doing this mainly because statistics show that two to six percent of children under five are unrestrained in a car—no seat belt, buckle or anything," said Sharon Kohout, who is coordinator of the program. "And three out of four of these children are buckled up incorrectly."

An infant carrier is a child rstraint that holds a young baby. It is used in a semi-reclining position, facing rearward in the car. It can be metal tubing and/or molded plastic, is lined wih energy absorbing material and has an internal, five-point safety harness built in to hold the child in the carrier.

The carrier is held in the car by use of the standard, fixed seat belt.

The baby shoul use the carrier for every ride, beginning with the first ride home from the hospital, and should continue to use it until old enough to sit up alone, and in a car seat.

The consequences of allowing a child to ride unrestrained in a vehicle can be tragic.

"Most common causes of death and injury to children in automobile crashes are being thrown into the windshield, dash board, some other part of the car, or into another passenger; being crushed by adults who are not wearing .safety belts; or being thrown from the car," said Mrs Kohout.

"Automobile crashes are the number one killer of young children...ahead of all other types of accidents and all diseases," she added.

Mrs. Kohout said that the child rstraint devices and safety belts work in two ways: by anchoring a child to the vehicle seat, so that if the car hits something, the restraint will help the child slow down with the car. Also, a safety belt or restraint device helps to spread the force of the crash over the strong bony structure of the body.

CWP Mother's Club will loan out the GM Love Seat and/or Ford infant carrier at a $1 service charge.

"We are also requesting a $15 deposit which will be refunded when the seat is returned," said Mrs. Kohout.

"We have investigated these programs around the country and they show a great success rate," she said. "The success is in making them cheap enough and available enough so that parents will use them. We think we are doing that now, though."

She added that the rental/loan program is economical because most infant carriers of good quality range from $30 to $65. "It's a bargain, in addition to being a community awareness program," said Mrs. Kohout.

The club is receiving assistance from Midland College Trafic Safety Planning directed by Sue Alford. This department is providing support with printing, information, etc.

The first 30 seats have been donated by the New Car Dealer's Association of Midland as a community service. "Those 30 have already been rented out through the childbirth classes and we are asking for tax deductible donations so that more can be purchased," said Mrs Kohout. "This appeal goes to individuals, churches, civic clubs—anyone who is interested in making the world a safer place for babies."

Persons interested in the program should contact Mrs. Kohout at 697-2651 or Ms. Alford at 685-7851.

The CWP group will also present programs to interested clubs, including a 12-minute film.

"Our group can not afford at this time to purchase the larger carriers for older infants," said Mrs Kohout. "We are working on getting as many different types of these as possible so that when parents trade the first carrier in, they can rent out in a month's time as many of theother types of restraints until they find one that is satisfactory."

Head of phone company keeps up family tradition

DUCOR, Calif. (AP) — His operation can hardly be compared with Ma Bell, but Virgil Roome is proud to run a telephone company even if it does serve only a few hundred customers.

"I'd rather be president of a small company than third vice president of a big company," Roome said in an interview.

Roome owns and operates Ducor Telephone Co., which serves 350 customers in this small central California community.

He has expanded into an unassigned phone service area near Red Bluff, Calif., several hundred miles north of here. Roome was awarded the franchise three years ago from the state Public Utilities Commission over Pacific Telephone and now serves about 220 customers through a subsidiary called Rancho Tehama Telephone Co.

By contrast, Pacific Telephone serves more than 14 million customers, 80 percent of California's total. General Telephone serves 18 percent, leaving only isolated areas served by fewer than 25 small independents.

Larger companies have indicated an interest in buying out Roome, but he plans to keep faith with a long family tradition of owning small phone firms.

"I don't plan on retiring until I'm 90," Roome said. He's 57 now.

Thirty years ago, Roome's uncles, brothers and cousins owned 30 telephone companies along the West Coast and in the Southwest, but family members now own only three, he said. Roome hopes to leave his operations to a nephew.

Rick Fleetwood, volunteer with Boys Club, a United Way agency, works with boys in Golden Gloves competition. They are Felix Munoz and Benny Long.

Volunteer works with Boys Club

Volunteers in Midland tackle projects from art shows to home repairs, each filling an important role in making the community responsive to its citizens. But one volunteer in particular, Rick Fleetwood, took on a project on one else seemed to want and has produced a boys' boxing team with some of the state's most outstanding young boxers as team members.

Fleetwood is a long-time Midlander who commutes to his job as head of the radiology department at Women's and Children's Hospital in Odessa. When he attended a Golden Gloves tournament three years ago in Odessa, he was surprised to find there was no representation from Midland.

Having boxed in the Army, Fletwood was interested enough in the program to check with Golden Gloves administrators. They told him to feel free to start a program here, and that is just what he did.

Operating in an unheated garage, boxing with gloves which kept losing their stuffing, Fleetwood and the two boys he began coaching soon found they had grown into a team. Their first year in Golden GLoves competition, the group won six matches and lost 25.

By the next year, the boys won 34 matches and lost 17, also bringing home the Joe Valdez Sportsmanship award. It was about this time that Fleetwood joined forces with the Midland Boys' Club, a United Way funded agency, and the group moved its operations into a new gym there, compled with boxing ring and training equipment.

"It's one of the finest gyms in the state," Fleetwood bragged. And his boys obviously have benefitted from the training and facilities available there. In this year's Golden Gloves competition, they won 90 percent of their matches. Five of the boys Fleetwood coaches are open division fighters, while eight others will soon be competing in junior olympics. One of the boxers in the program, Richard Avila, won both state and regional AAU tournaments last year, losing his only match during the year in national competition by a split decision to Richard Sandoval, who was a U.S. Olympic champion and now is boxing professionally.

In addition to improvements on the team, the Boys' Club coaching staff also has grown. Fletwood's brother, Ricky, helps out, as does Al Hernandez, father of one of the boxers.

Fleetwood finds himself at the Boys' Club almost every night for several hours, but he doesn't push the boys to be there. "They know what happens if they're not in shape," he explains. "They are the ones who get beat up. I'm not the one in there getting hit." And when Fleetwood arrives at the oven-like gym—kept hot to keep the boys' weight down—at 7:30 p.m. after coaching his teenager daughters' softball team, half a dozen young men already at work jumping rope, attacking a punching bag, exercising in the ring.

"He's here almost every night—sometimes even Saturdays and Sundays," boasts one of the young boxers. And besides on-the-spot coaching, Fleetwood has tracked down funds to help pay for the boys' trips to out-of-town meets. The Boys' Club provides a van and gasoline to send the boxers to other cities, but no longer can pay for their lodging and meals. For a team that has traveled more than 5,000 miles this year, those costs add up, says Fleetwood.

In addition to the coaching and fund raising efforts Fleetwood provides the team, his wife handles their paperwork and she and the family's older daughter both are registered boxing judges.

Clearly his volunteer job that Fletwood set up for himself has grown into a lot of time and a lot of involvement. Why does he keep after it? "Stopping has never crossed my mind," he says.

This summer electricity will cost at least 50% more than last summer.

Here's why:
- All the fuels we use to make electricity are more expensive. As longstanding contracts for low-cost natural gas expire, new gas costs a lot more, and the price keeps climbing. Even lignite coal, our most economical fuel, is becoming more expensive.
- Since last summer, a rate increase has been approved and gone into effect.
- You'll see the full effect of these increases—fuel costs and the rate increase—this summer when electricity usage is at its highest level.

Here's what you can do to help hold down your bill:
- Leave your air conditioner off unless you really need it. It probably uses more electricity than your lights and all your other appliances combined.
  — When you're away from home, turn it off.
  — Unless it's really hot, turn it off. Try opening windows and using a fan to circulate the air.
- Turn off anything that's not in use.
- Live a little warmer. The higher you set your thermostat, the more electricity you'll save.
- Use fans to keep air moving. It feels cooler.
- When the air conditioner is on, keep your cool inside. Close windows, doors, blinds, draperies and fireplace dampers.
- If you're installing or replacing an air conditioner, be sure it's energy-efficient. Use the "Energyguide" on every new unit to compare. It may cost more, but it will help you hold down your electric bills.
- Weatherstrip, caulk and insulate. Call us for free booklets that show how to do it, or to learn when we'll have an "Operation Tighten-Up" workshop in your neighborhood.

Travel games can keep kids busy on long car rides

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Vacationing by car with the kids can quickly turn a "dream vacation" into a nightmare if you cannot keep the youngsters entertained.

One good way to keep the kids occupied is to involve them in trip planning as "navigators" and even in car care as "junior mechanics," suggests the technical-services manager of an automotive-parts manufacturer.

Dave Bowman of Fram Corp. advises parents to assign the small traveling tasks they would normally do themselves to their youngsters. "Making each task a game or valuable chore helps the children feel important and involved, and can be fun as well," he adds, offering these ideas.

Record the miles driven between fill-ups. Have your children make note of the miles driven between gas-station stops. Then let them watch the odometer and alert you when you are 15 miles from the next fill-up time. For example, if you can drive 300 miles between station stops, tell the youngsters to let you know when you've driven 285 miles. Then they should begin looking for another gas station.

Keep a log of the gas mileage. Show the youngsters how to divide the number of miles driven between fill-ups by the number of gallons consumed to determine the gas mileage. He or she should compute and log this number after each fill-up and point out any sudden drop in mileage. This could indicate problems under the hood which should be checked at a service station.

Plot your travel course on a map, circling the places you plan to stop at. Have the youngster "take charge" of the map, look for exit signs, and alert you when you are a few miles away from the locations you have marked.

Clean the windshield. Assign a youngster the task of cleaning the windshield each morning and at each station stop.

Check the tires. Let a child be in charge of checking the tires each morning for worn spots, cuts or low air pressure. The treads can be checked by inserting a penny, head down, into the grooves of the tread. If all of Lincoln's head shows, it is time for a new tire.

Look for leaks. Have the children look for leaks where the car was parked. Black leaks are oil, pink are transmission fluid, greenish-yellow are radiator coolant and leaks near tires are fluid from brakes or shock absorbers. This can warn you of trouble before it occurs, and avoid on-the-road breakdown.

Check the lights. Have the child watch the lights from the outside of the car while an adult switches them on from the inside. Make sure the brake lights work when the brake pedal is depressed, and the headlights are on and aimed properly when turned on.

Keep track of toll payments. Have a child keep a record of the toll costs throughout the trip. Also give a youngster the task of making sure you have enough small change for the tolls, and of pointing out the exact change lanes.

Garden paradise rises from rubble

By RON SIRAK
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Like gardeners everywhere, John Emanuel is drawn by the spring sun to the plot of land he hopes to turn into a flowering paradise. Unlike others, Emanuel's garden is built on the rubble of a demolished tenement in one of New York's most crowded neighborhoods.

Ten years ago, 502 W. 111 St. was reduced to a pile of plaster and brick, collapsed into its foundation by an eager wrecking crew. When the excess was removed and the corner lot leveled, what remained was a chalky white mixture of building materials and dirt.

Now, rose bushes dot the perimeter, a brick pathway leads to a central pond that sometimes contains fish and, with a modest attempt at organization, flowers and herbs, shrubs and vegetables peacefully coexist.

"It is a community garden," explains Emanuel, a 31-year old self-taught horticulturalist. "Whoever wants to contribute to it does. As a result, it is somewhat crazy."

When Emanuel first became involved with the garden four years ago it was a chaotic collection of green and garbage. Buoyed by the hopes of spring, neighborhood people would plant their favorite things in a random fashion. In the summer heat, however, enthusiasm faded and the noble idea quickly became a mass of weeds, some plants and a lot of beer cans and less pleasant garbage.

Emanuel, who taught himself about gardening during a 10-year stint as a waiter, tried to bring some continuity to the project.

"To begin with," he says, "the right plants were needed. Perennials are better than annuals because you don't have to plant them every year. And herbs and low-growing greens are better than most flowers or vegetables because they are hardier and the temptation to steal them is less."

Another reason to avoid vegetables, Emanuel explains, is the soil, or lack of it.

"From the paint and plaster of the old building, the lead and cadmium content of this soil is so high that it would not really be wise to eat stuff grown in it," he says. "What we are trying to do now is make soil."

"What I want is for people to take the garden into their apartments, to have it become part of their lives," he explains. "Newspaper is fiber. We use it as landfill. People keep compost in their apartments and we mix it with the newspapers here. You add some worms to it and you are on your way to making soil."

In a far corner of the garden is the current compost pit. Under a layer of papers and thick, black goo, there is a world of life. Worms crawl and bugs scurry.

"Look at this," Emanuel says with pride, pointing to about two inches of thick, rich soil that is in sharp contrast to the pale dust that is elsewhere. "This is soil we made — with the help of the plants and the worms."

And such an urban garden has other unique problems. Occasionally a cave-in calls for some emergency repair work.

"Underneath here is the cavity that was the foundation of the building," Emanuel says. "Sometimes a whole chunk of the garden just sinks down into it. You can see the holes from the rats that are still living down there."

Emanuel, who for the past 10 months has worked as a caretaker for the Wave Hill Environmental Center, a city-owned estate and garden, has learned to appreciate the successes of the garden in subtle ways.

"I used to want everything to look the way I had it in my mind," he says. "But I've learned that it's the involvement of people in the garden that counts. Around here, if people don't throw garbage on the garden they are making a contribution to it."

College student models for Nancy Drew pictures

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — When mystery strikes, Meredith Fellner's friends and classmates at Southern Connecticut State College jokingly call on her to solve it.

The tall, 19-year-old student-teacher doesn't mind the ribbing because it goes hand-in-hand with her recently acquired alter ego, Nancy Drew.

A Wallingford native, Miss Fellner is the latest model for pictures of Nancy Drew that grace the cover and inside pages of the teen-age supersleuth mystery series written by Carolyn Kenne.

The most recent adventure, "The Secret in the Old Lace," published by Simon & Schuster, is the first volume in which Miss Fellner modeled for the illustrations.

Miss Fellner was picked from a group of about 10 young women who tried out for the position with the book's illustrator, Ruth Sanderson.

The illustrator was recruiting at Sheehan High School and one of Miss Fellner's former teachers asked her to try out.

"Ruth wanted a tall blonde who would fit the 17-year-old Nancy Drew image and she said I was the type," Miss Fellner said. She admitted hesitantly that she was 5-foot-10.

Her modeling took on an added dimension when Ms. Sanderson needed someone to pose as Nancy Drew's father. Quite naturally, Miss Fellner's father, Richard, was chosen.

She also feels she had the perfect preparation for her job, aside from the modeling she has done in Wallingford.

"Yes, I read them all: Nancy Drew, Clara Barton — you know, all the books girls read when they're young," she said.

Now her sister Kristen, 8, is at the age where she's just starting to read the books, Miss Fellner said.

Domestic oil drilling surge caused by unknown factors

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Ed McGhee says there are unknown factors in the continuing record level surge for domestic oil and gas drilling operations.

The executive vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors says the biggest question mark is the exact demand for drilling rigs.

"United States activity has been rig-limited almost a year on land and for 1 12 years offshore," he said.

"Utilization rates have run 99 and 100 percent for months. Under such conditions, about the only thing that can be said is that demand exceeds supply. By how much? No one knows. Nor can anyone say how fast the accumulated backlog is building or disappearing."

McGhee said the picture is clearer on the supply side with the domestic rig fleet totaling about 4,600 and expanding at a rate of about three a day.

"This figure includes all rigs, land and offshore, large rigs and small. It also includes the average of one rig per day moving into the United States from Canada. By way of comparison, the U.S. fleet stood a year ago at about 3,700 units. It should reach 5,200 by year end."

McGhee said that earlier estimates about 200 rigs would emigrate from Canada to the United States because of new actions by the Canadian government now appear to be overly conservative.

He said the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors reports 189 units already have departed or are definitely scheduled to leave and that the total continues to climb.

"A further 114 rigs face loss of work within the next four months," McGhee said. "While some few of these rigs will go elsewhere and while a further few will tough it out in Canada, most will head for U.S. destinations."

McGhee said perhaps the most ironic twist in rig supply is the glamour now attached to semisubmersible offshore units.

"A year ago semis were in surplus and working in the North Sea for as little as $25,000 a day," he said.

"Recently, the same units have been fetching almost $100,000 a day."

McGhee said the new found prosperity has prompted an astonishing rash of orders to build more units with Loran Sheffer, editor of Offshore Rig Data Services, predicting between 90 and 100 semisubmersibles will be on order by the end of the year.

McGhee said the unprecedented drilling activity has its own set of problems.

"One of the biggest headaches for contractors is to retain key personnel," he said.

"Stories are legion about superintendents and vice presidents lured away to head new companies where they earn equity ownership. While such direct motivation to 'jump ship' is difficult enough to counter, some recruiting can only be described as devious."

McGhee said one large contractor suddenly found himself with a chorus of complaints from his toolpushers and that an investigation revealed all the men had been offered jobs elsewhere.

"What is surprising is the way the offers were conveyed," McGhee said.

"They had been channeled through mud engineers working the company's rigs. It seems that a 'head-hunting' firm had approached the mud men with this proposal: 'You recruit a toolpusher for me and I'll pay you a big finder's fee'."

McGhee said mud men, unlike head hunters, have free access to the rig site and its people.

"While no ethical mud engineer would succumb to such blandishments and while no mud company would knowingly allow its personnel to indulge in such antics, the dodge came close the disabling the affected contractor," he said.

Writing for the May edition of the trade group's monthly magazine, McGhee said he purposely had delayed reporting that March 15 was the 10th anniversary of the active rig count falling to only 814, the low point of a 14-year drilling operations slump that dated back to 1956.

"Probably the most constructive way to commemorate the occasion is to dwell on the achievements of the ensuing 10 years," McGhee said.

The Permian Basin Purchasing Management Association (PBPMA) held its annual Spring Ball at the Odessa Country Club recently to mark the beginning of its new fiscal year and to install new officers and board members.The new officers are, from left George Elliott, with the Ortloff Corporation, president; Bill Derringer, Star-Adair Insulation Company, Inc., first vice president; Ray Winter, Grant Supply, second vice president; and Bruce Kennedy, El Paso Products, director of National Affairs. Margaret Beck, Thompson Office Supply, was elected secretary-treasurer. New board members include Mark Phillips, Martha Lucas and Perry Payne, of Ortloff; Ellsworth Boswell, with American Quasar Petroleum; Curt Strong, with Cosden Oil and Chemical; and Ken Calley, with Rexene Polyolefins Company.

Companies to test Austin Chalk area

Clayton W. Williams Jr., a Midland independent oil and gas operator, and Champlin Petroleum Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Union Pacific Corporation, announced plans for a majro oil and gas development program in the northeast Burleson County portion of the vast Austin Chalk trend in southeast Texas.

Officials representing the tow operators met in Houston last week and signed a letter of intent to develop and transport the hydrocarbon products from approximately 15,000 acres of leases north of a line extneding from Caldwell to Bryan.

Williams and Champlin each own an undivided one-half interest in the leases which will be divided into two operating areas for the purpose of developing the properties.

Williams will be the operator on one-half of the acreage, with Champlin as a non-operating partner. The other one-half will be developed by Champlin with Williams as a non-operating partner.

Champlin and Williams state the development program could include as many as 150 wells. They also say that as many as 10 rigs may be working in the 15,000 acres at the same time.

Wells completed in the recent months on leases close to the Champlin and Williams holdings have reported potential tests of up to 300 barrels of oil or more per day.

Handling and transportation of natural gas produced from the joint acreage will be accomplished in a gas pipeline system to be operated by Champlin or itsrepresentative. Champlin operates and owns a majority interest in refrigerated gas plants at Lyons and Tunis, and a cryrogenic gas processing facility at Bryan.

Both Williams and Champlin are veterans in the Austin Chalk play.

Currently, Williams is utilizing 13 rigs in Burleson, Lee and Fayette counties areas of the Chalk trend, and Champlin has eight rigs running in the Burleson County portion of the Austin Chalk trend and has completed more than 75 wells to date.

Early in 1979 Williams gave Texas A&M University an undivided 1/32 of 8/8 overriding royalty interest under all of the aforementioned 15,000 acres, which amounts to approximately 3,250 net royalty acres.

In addition to his exploration and development activities in the area, Williams operates the A&M Gas Processing Plant through a Williams Companies subsidiary, Wil Gas Co. The plant is 15 miles west of College Station. Another gas processing plant is under construction north of LaGrange in Fayette County.

Through another subsidiary, Clajon Gas Company, Williams operates pipeline and transportation facilities in Gonzales, Burleson, Lee, Fayett, Washington and Brazos counties.

He was associated with the Scripps Institution of Oceanography, La Jolla, California in 1960. From 1961 to 1964 he was a senior research scientist for Pan American Petroleum Corporation (Amoco Prod. Co.) at its Tulsa Research Center and in Lubbock, Texas.

In 1977 Klement then changed from part-time to full time consulting for the petroleum industry.

A distinguished lecturer for the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, Klement holds memberships in numerous professional associations and has been a recipient of the A.I. Levorsen "Best paper" award from the Southwest Section of AAPG.

Klement currently resides in Midland where he is engaged in petroleum consulting work. He is teaching and has just completed a class at the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

Oil profits slip with gasoline sales

NEW YORK (AP) — OPEC has forced up the price of oil, and American oil companies that produce a lot of oil are reporting record profits. But consumers are rebelling at the high prices and refiners are seeing their profits fade away.

Those trends became clear as oil companies reported their profits for the first quarter. Most were down from a year ago, when the industry set records, but the 20 largest oil companies still earned a total of $7.3 billion, off 14.3 percent from 1980.

Those profit figures were better than a lot of securities analysts had expected, and were in most cases up from the fourth quarter of 1980, as companies benefited from the Jan. 1 round of price boosts by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The oil companies vary in how they report their profits, but most of those that provided figures said they are still making more than 20 cents a year on every dollar invested by stockholders. That compared with an average for American industry of about 15.3 cents last year.

The surge in oil prices, in fact, probably would have propelled nearly every major oil company to record profits except for the windfall profits tax, which went into effect March 1, 1980.

Shell Oil Co., for example, reported its profits were down $12 million, to $361 million, while its windfall profits tax bill came to $387 million, an increase of $340 million from last year's first quarter. Despite its name, the windfall profits tax is an excise tax that takes a large share of the revenue from price increases.

The star of the first quarter among the oil companies was Standard Oil Co. of Ohio, which reported profits rose 15.5 percent to $520.4 million. Like Standard of California, which also hit a record, Sohio produces a lot more crude oil than it refines. It was thus able to take full advantage of the decontrol of domestic oil prices and the boost in world oil prices to a range of $32 to $41 a barrel.

For those companies with large refining operations, the quarter was not as enjoyable. Even a giant like Exxon, whose overall profits of $1.60 billion were down 16.9 percent, said it lost money on refining and marketing.

Educational gas show developed

"Gas Works: Pipeline to the Future" is a live educational show about the role of gas energy in the nation's energy mix.

The show developed by Oak Ridge Associated Universities' Energy Education Division in conjuction with the American Gas Association is designed to provide factual information on energy issues.

The show will be available in September 1981 for school districts across the nation under the sponsorship of local gas utilities.

The Oak Ridge Energy Division designed the traveling show for use in intermediate and high schools with assistance from the gas industry and maintains control over its editorial content.

Oak Ridge manages the "Gas Works" show, trains the teacher demonstrators and schhedules programs for school assemblies across the country under the sponsorship o local gas utilities.

Following the assembly programs the teacher-demonstrator visits classrooms for indepth instruction sessions. The sessions are used to stimulate the student interest in energy use, conservation and future energy technologies.

Highlights of the show include an inflatable 8 1/2-foot dinosaur, a student operated hand pump, to pump air in a tank demonstrating how natural gas can be stored and a 6-foot square lighted map showing the million-mile pipeline system, as well as current and potential sources of gas.

Through a combination of audience participation and demonstration techniques, the history and future of the gas industry is presented.

Oak Ridge is a private, not-for-profit research nd education consortium of 50 colleges and universties.

The A.G.A. is the national trade association for the transmission and distribution segiment of the natural gas industry with about 30 member companies representing more than 85 percent of the gas energy retailed in the United States.

Sen. Bentsen said a switch from gas to coal or oil will cost consumers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Senator Lloyd Bentsen recently said a law requiring a shift from natural gas to coal or fuel oil will cost electric consumers in Texas more than $16.7 billion.

Bentsen, in testimony submitted to the Senate Energy Regulation committee, called for a repeal of Section 301 of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978.

This section prohibits the use of natural gas a a boiler fuel for generating electricity after 1980.

"During debate on the Fuel Use Act in 1977 and 1978, most experts predicted that the U.S. would experience serious natural gas supply problems by the end of the century, if not sooner. With passage of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, though, the picture has changed, with producers looking for and finding substantial amounts of natural gas that had been previously uneconomical," Bentsen said.

"Although we decreased consumption of foreign oil last year, the U.S. still paid nearly $80 billion for imported oil. If we force existing natural gas plants to switch to coal of fuel oil our dependency on unreliable, foreign sources of oil can only increase."

"Currently there are about 250 natural gas fired electrical generating units in the United States with a remaining useful life after 1990. It is technically and economically unreasonable in many cases to convert these natural gas fired generating units to coal. The boiler of a gas fired plant would have to be replaced before the unit could burn coal. For these reasons, it is generally cheaper for a new generating plant to be built than it is for an existing natural gas fired plant to be converted."

RRC received 35,714 applications in April

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission's Natural Gas Policy Act Section reported that a of April 23 Texas oil and gs operators have filed 35,714 applications for detrminations of new gas well production categories under the federal Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

The Commission initiated the well classifiecation program in December 1978 pursuant to NGPA mandate and guidelines set forth by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Brunei wants to remain a British protectorate

By KEYES BEECH
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

BANDAR SERI BEGAWAN, Brunei — "The problem," a British diplomat observed a few years ago, "is not that the sultan wants us to go but that he wants us to stay."

Brunei's losing struggle to remain a British protectorate, a status it has enjoyed for 75 years, will end Jan. 1, 1984, when to its regret it will become fully independent.

At that time Brunei will become responsible, at least in theory, for its own defense and foreign affairs. The British long ago handed everything else over to Brunei's polo-playing sultan, Sir Muda Hassanal Bolkiah Muizzaddin Waddaulah, 35, who runs the country with a lot of advice from his father.

A 2,226-square-mile oil-rich ministate on the northwest coast of Borneo, Brunei is, in per-capital terms, the richest country in southeast Asia and second only to Japan in all Asia.

In preparing for independence, Brunei is arming itself to the teeth against potential predators conceivably its two larger and more powerful neighbors, Malaysia and Indonesia.

Both countries have in the recent past zeroed in on Britain's ties with Brunei as an unseemly reminder of lingering Western colonialism and demanded that Brunei be set free. Brunei said that it is already free and suggested that Malaysia and Indonesia mind their own business.

British officials say that Malaysia's and Indonesia's concern might be more convincing if Britain ha not been trying to divest itself of Brunei ever since World War II. Brunei suspects that its neighbors, especially Indonesia, are more interested in its oil than its self-determination.

Malaysia has never quite forgiven Brunei for refusing to join the Federation of Malaysia in 1963, when Britain was stuffing all its colonial possessions in the region into the Malaysian boot. Although both countries are predominantly Malay and share a common culture and religion, Islam, the quarreled over division of Brunei's oil revenues. Brunei could not see why it should share with anybody.

Relations between the two countries have improved somewhat in the last year, thanks to the young sultan's so-called polo diplomacy. He paid an official visit to Kuala Lumpur, the Malaysian capital, last year after a series of friendly polo matches between the two countries.

Given today's relatively stable political climate in Southeast Asia, Brunei would seem to have little to fear. Both Malaysia and Indonesia have invited Brunei to join the five-member Association of South East Asian Nations.

Yet the 600-year-old sultanate's fears for its security are deeply rooted in history. Four centuries ago, during the golden age of the great moslem warrior Sulian Bolkiah, who was known as the "singing captain," Brunei was a great empire that held sway over all Borneo, parts of present-day Indonesia and Malaysia and reached into the Philippines as far north as Manila. After Bolkiah died it was all downhill.

Today, Brunei has shrunk to half the size of Connecticut. Keenly aware of its vulnerability and the temptation of its oil riches, Brunei is currently spending a third of its budget on defense. Military spending, which reached almost $1 billion between 1978 and 1980, will amount to another $500 million in 1981.

The sultan's arsenal includes such expensive items as 19 British Scorpion tanks, a flotilla of fast patrol boats armed with French-made surface-to-air missiles and an air wing composed of 17 American and West German helicopters.

The sultan pilots his own Sikorsky 76 helicopter — which, as befits a man of his exalted station, is equipped with such extras as a gold-plated instrument panel, sound-proofing and a stereo set, all of which cost about $3 million.

The sultan can afford all this and then some. The least of his problems is money. Oil and gas revenues, which account for 88 percent of the country's income, continue to roll in year after year, faster than the government can spend them.

Brunei is not a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, but thanks to higher oil prices it was $6.5 billion in the black last year. John Lee, Brunei's chief finacial officer and one of 2,000 Britons who hold key posts in the civil service and armed forces, estimates that the balance at the end of 1981 will be $10 billion.

Brunei's land and offshore oil fields produced 240,000 barrels a day last year. Production has been cut to 180,000 barrels a day this year, in what a Shell Oil Co. spokesman described as Brunei's longterm interest. Actually, according to Shell, Brunei's oil reserves have been declining since the 1980s, but liquefied natural gas has more than made up for he decline.

In partnership with Shell and Mitsubishi, the Japanese company, Brunei operates the world's largest LNG plant. Japan buys the entire output. Seven tankers ply regularly between Brunei and Japan, and it is said here that if anything happened to that lifeline, all the lights in Tokyo would go out.

The relationship between Shell and Brunei is, to all outward appearances, a happy one. Shell struck oil in commercial quantity here in 1929, long after other companies had given up. Inevitably, Brunei has been dubbed the "Shellfare State."

To protect his oil billions, the sultan relies on the British presence, the Royal Brunei Malay Regiment, the police, an elaborate security network and the 1,000 men of Princess Mary's Own Gurkha Rifles.

"The sultan simply adores the Gurkhas," A British officer said.

In fact, the reputation of these fierce fighters from the mountains of Nepal is Brunei's greatest deterrent to potential predators.

The sultan rents the Gurkha battalion, one of five left in the diminished British army, for $2.5 million a year and considers it a bargain. The Gurkhas are deployed to protect Brunei's two most valuable assets, the oil fields at the western end of the state and the royal family, in Bandar Seri Begawan, the capital.

The Sultan's affection for the Gurkhas is understandable. The British flew in Gurkhas from Singapore to put down a rebellion in 1962 and may have saved the sultanate. The rebellion followed the only national election ever held in Brunei. When the winning leftist People's Party, backed by Malaysia, was barred from taking power, armed dissidents took to the streets.

That was Brunei's sole experiment in democracy and the sultanate has shown no desire to repeat the experience. A number of rebels — estimates range from eight to 40 — are still in jail and their relatives have a hard time finding jobs.

The Gurkhas, led by British officers — whom the Gurkhas address as Sahib — are supposed to leave when Brunei becomes fully independent. But government officials insist that ways will be found to keep them as insurance against any rebels who may be lurking in the jungles of the neighboring Malaysian state of Sarawak.

One plan under discussion is to replace Princess Mary's own Gurkha Rifles with another Battalion recruited from Nepal. In fact, most observers here do not expect any change when independence comes.

"We are going to stay as close to the British as possible because we have learned to trust them," a government official said.

Government officials, while not unfriendly, are rarely available to visiting newsmen, and if they are they have nothing to say. Presumably they are afraid of saying something that might offend somebody higher up, meaning the royal family or, more specifically, the sultan or his father, Sir Omar Ali Saifuddin, who abdicated in 1967 in favor of his son but remains the power behind the throne.

The sultan is an amiable young man who is genuinely concerned about the welfare of his 225,000 people — especially the 60 percent whoare Malays, according to people who know him.

The eldest of four sons and six daughters, the sultan attended Sandhurst, the British military academy. His brothers help run things, especially the royal family's business interests.

The sultanate's love of things British is evident — from the royal family's Rolls-Royces to a $2 million memorial museum dedicated to Winston Churchill, who never set foot in Brunei. It is the only museum of its kind in the world, including Britain, and is notable for its collection of hats favored by the wartime leaders of Britain.

Queen Elizabeth's picture is on the walls of most offices and her birthday is celebrated with an annual parade. Some of the British have been here long enough to convert to Islam. Their social life, which is somewhat stratified, centers on the Brunei Yacht Club, an unpretentious bungalow on the bank of the Brunei River.

"I joined, but I never go there anymore, "said a young British teacher who is here under contract to teach English.

"They're a bunch of snobs."

Few budding nations have been so richly endowed to enter the 20th century. Because of its oil and gas wealth, there is no visible poverty in Brunei. Nearly all the citizens work for the government, Brunei's largest employer. Thanks to interest-free loans, the streets are lined with cars, all new and all Japanese for the royal family's Rolls-Royces — except and an occasional Mercedes-Benz. There is no used-car lot in Brunei. Nor is there an income tax. Education is free and so is medical care.

In the most remote villages, television antennas sprout profusely. The capital is a water village, a collection of houses on stilts where an estimated 30,000 people live. Bruneians spend only 4 percent of their income on housing and more than 50 percent of food. Nearly everything is imported, including rice.

Because they have neither the need nor the inclination, Brunei's Malay majority has left nearly everything but the government to its ever growing immigrant population.

The Chinese, who are the largest minority with 58,000 people, run all the shops and grow the vegetables. Koreans and Filipinos hammer out bent fenders, a flourishing business.

To extent to which Brunei is dependent on imported labor is extraordinary. At Ang's Hotel, one of the capital's two hotels — a 160-room Sheraton is scheduled to open in July to accommodate all the visiting businessmen who want to sell something to the sultan — there is not a single authentic Malay on the payroll. The city's leading Chinese restaurant gets all its 40 waitresses from Penang in Malaysia.

The National Bank is jointly operated by the royal family and Singapore Chinese. The weekly Borneo Bulletin, published in Brunei, is owned by the Singapore Straits Times.

THE WOODLANDS — Mitchell Energy & Development Corporation's fiscal 1981 proved reserves of natural gas and liquid hydrocarbons were the highest in its history.

The company estimated its natural gas reserves as of January 31, 1981, at 507.2 billion cubic feet. The gas reserves estimate is prior to extraction of plant natural gas liquids, which are included in liquid hydrocarbon reserves.

Fiscal 1981 crude oil and condensate reserves were ahead of the prior year's but were still slightly below the total for fiscal 1979.

TULSA — A frontier exploration play is picking up speed in the oldest oil province in the U.S. — the Appalachian basin — was reported in a recent issue of the Oil & Gas Journal.

Major and independent oil companies are building lease blocks and running seismic surveys along the 1,100 mile long Eastern Overthrust Belt. The belt runs from New York to Alabama.

The name conjures visions of the prolific Western Overthrust Belt which cuts across the U.S. West from Montana into Arizona. But the eastern region hasn't earned that comparison yet the weekly business magazine says.

Although several gas discoveries have been drilled on thrust related structures in front of the Eastern Overthrust Belt, no fields have been found in thrust created traps like those in the Rocky Mountains.

Hawaii continues research project despite funds cut

HONOLULU (AP) — The Reagan administration has scuttled a key element in a project to convert the difference in ocean temperatures into electricity, but scientists say they will continue the program in hopes of easing Hawaii's heavy dependence on oil.

"We are looking at ways to salvage as much of the OTEC program as possible," says Dr. John W. Shupe, energy research coordinator at the University of Hawaii.

OTEC stands for "ocean thermal energy conversion," a process of generating electricity by using the temperature difference between warm surface water and cold water from the ocean depths. It is one of several alternate energy projects being developed in Hawaii, which depends almost entirely on imported oil for fuel for production of electricity.

For the past three months, the program had centered around OTEC-1, a 500-foot-long, converted tanker being used for full-scale testing of equipment off Hawaii Island's Keahole Point.

But despite reports that experiments had been successful, the Reagan administration eliminated federal funds for the project.

"I am disappointed that the opportunity that is there is not being grasped by the federal leadership,' says Hideto Kono, the state's planning and economic development director.

"We all agree there is a need for cutbacks in spending, but we must be selective. The government must look at this as an investment rather than an expense," he says.

C. Dudley Pratt, president of Hawaiian Electric Co., agrees.

"OTEC is not a government handout," he argues.

He contends the pilot program would have technical and economic benefits that would lead to private investment without federal assistance.

Pratt says the utility plans to buy electricity from any OTEC plants.

Hawaiian Electric, the only electric utility serving the main island of Oahu, now uses fuel oil to generate 97 percent of the electrical power needed on Oahu. The island consumes 82 percent of the state's electricity.

Natural energy experts have estimated that OTEC plants could provide as much as 660 megawatts to Oahu. That would be 70 percent of the island's peak electric consumption last year, the utility says.

Studies have shown OTEC-generated electricity to be cost-competitive with oil-generated electricity, Shupe says.

"However, it is only a paper study and we need a prototype to really find out how cost competitive OTEC really is," he says.

OTEC-1 recently ended its operations. More than $50 million was spent in the three-month effort, most of it in ship conversion costs. The project was to have continued for three years at a cost of about $1 million a month.

The vessel's future is uncertain, but the Department of Energy has agreed to delay disposing of the tanker so arrangements can be made for possible transfer to the state.

The grounding of the research vessel will not shut down all OTEC programs, however, and Kono sees this as only a temporary setback.

Emphasis now will be on the Seacoast Test Facility at Keahole Point and a second deployment of Mini-OTEC, a converted barge that proved in 1979 that energy could be produced by using the temperature differences between surface and deep water, Shupe says.

Even with the loss of OTEC-1 funds, a significant sum will be earmarked for the seacoast facility, says John P. Craven, dean of marine programs at the university and board chairman of the Natural Energy Laboratory of Hawaii.

The seacoast facility had been expected to be developed into a national laboratory for ocean thermal energy.

"We don't want people to lose heart about OTEC development," Craven says. "We can be optimistic that the projects will stay alive and that we can demonstrate the feasibility of this technology."

A House Science and Technology Committee recommendation for $33 million for OTEC still faces approval by the Appropriations Committee. And, the sources say, the Senate has made no move to restore OTEC funds.

Minimal research culd continue ith an annual budget as low as $8 million, according to Kono's office.

"It is incumbent on the United States to push this, " Kono says. "If we wait too long, the Japanese will come in, the Germans will come in, and they will replace us."

But if the government does not continue its support for OTEC, Hawaii will look to an international source for the funds, Kono says.

Reducing the danger

Midland City Council appears to want to enforce building codes more aggressively and, in the process, to minimize the kind of destructive fires that in December 1980, took the lives of four children here and critically burned four others.

But members of the council are facing something of a "Catch-22" situation. Do they turn Midlanders out into the streets because the housing they're living in is substandard and dangerous? Or is it more humane for council members to look the other way and let them continue living in affordable but dangerous housing?

The problem wouldn't even exist if Midland had adequate low-cost housing. But it doesn't and therein lies the problem.

The council should be commended for its interest and concern. This is a difficult issue and likely there will be no easy solutions.

At the current time the council appears uncertain how to solve the problem.

We won't presume to attempt to tell the city's leaders how to solve the problem. But innovative action is needed.

The city might want to consider a program under which owners of substandard housing could upgrade that housing and, in return, receive city tax credit. The city officials have the resources to work out the details of such a program including how much tax credit could be given for the number of dollars spent to upgrade the housing. And Midland most probably could afford such a program.

Many of the units in question apparently are rental units, so to get into the program owners might be required to submit to a fire and building code inspection with another inspection to follow completion of work to bring the structures into compliance.

If a landlord raised the rent immediately following the work, it would defeat the goal of getting safe, low-cost housing here. So city officials might want to stipulate in the program's regulations a certain waiting period before the rent could be raised. After that time, the landlord could raise the rent and receive further benefit from the program.

Other incentives might be needed to get landlords to participate.

But even if a totally different plan is adopted, at least action will be taken that hopefully will mean a reduction in risks for those Midlanders now living in dangerously substandard housing.

Stop cloning around

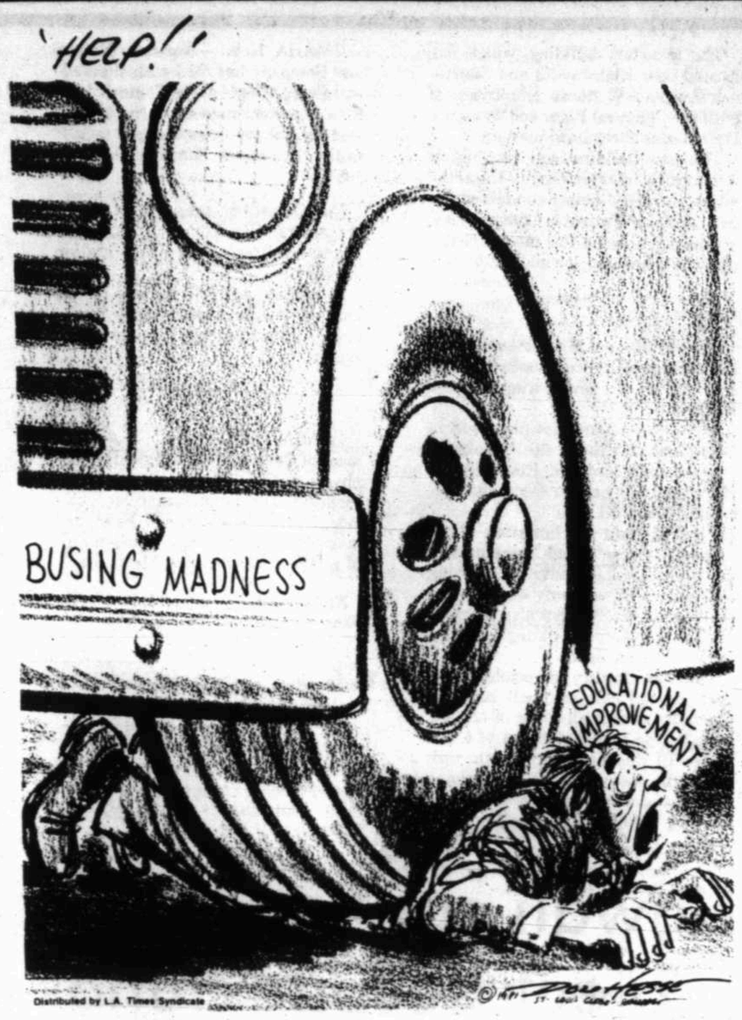
Worried about being replaced by a clone or an artificially created human being? Well, don't. Be reassured that there's little likelihood of this happening — at least, not very soon.

A congressional agency has reported that government guidelines and laws covering genetic engineering are adequate in most cases. In other cases, well, time will tell.

But for now there appears no cause for concern. A report from the Office of Technology Assessment puts down fears about creating human beings artificially and patenting them for commercial use.

Study director Gretchen Kolsrud said that would be prohibited by the anti-slavery provisions of the U.S. Constitution. However, she noted, such protection might not be so clear in the unlikely event someone created useful subhuman forms.

As the report pointed out, "no single statute or combination will cover all foreseeable commercial applications of genetic engineering." If only the scientists would leave well enough alone and stop cloning around.



ART BUCHWALD

Who can a person trust if not ol' 'Crazy Charlie?'

Art Buchwald

The beleaguered used-car dealers in America have finally gotten a break. A Federal Trade Commission proposal to prevent deceptive sales practices has been abandoned. The ruling, had it gone into effect, would have required used-car dealers to check the brakes, the transmissions, electrical systems and 11 other key automotive components and put a sticker on the windshield telling the buyer whether they worked or not. If the sticker said the components were in order, and it turned out they weren't, the used car dealer would be held responsible, and would have to either fix the car or take it back.

"Crazy Charlie," one of the largest used car dealers in the area, was jubilant when he heard the news and said, "It's about time the government got off our backs. The idea of guaranteeing a used car is against everything this country stands for."

"I guess the customer must now take your word for it that the car he's buying actually works," I said.

"That's the way it's always been. A used car dealer's word is worth 20 government stickers. A handshake from one of my salesmen means more than any warranty thought up by some government bureaucrat."

"I guess the FTC was just going overboard because of the few bad apples in your business."

"If there are any bad apples in this business, I've never met them," said Crazy Charlie. "I can personally guarantee you that when someone comes on this lot he's going to get value for his money."

"Even if the brakes don't work?"

"It's a used car," he said. "It's not going to be perfect. The customer knows that. He doesn't have to have a sticker to tell him what he's getting into. The important thing is not what's wrong with a car, but how much it costs. Look at this beautiful 1976 four-door sedan. I'm selling it for $2,400, though the blue book says I should get $3,000 for it. That's why they call me 'Crazy Charlie.'"

"It's a lovely car," I admitted.

"Now if I had to put a sticker on it I would be obliged to tell you the transmission is shot. How would you feel about that?"

"I probably wouldn't want to buy it."

"Exactly. That sticker could break your heart. I have too much respect for my customers to hurt them by telling them every little thing that could go wrong with a car."

"But won't they find out sooner or later that the transmission has to be replaced?"

"It depends on how much the person cares about the transmission. Most people don't even know what it does. If we have to check out every car that comes on the lot, we're going to have to pass on the cost to the consumer. The government doesn't think of that when it comes up with its silly rules. Customers don't want us to put stickers on windshields; it takes all the fun out of buying a used car."

"I must say your lobby did a good job in killing the sticker regulation."

"The only reason we were against it was because it was totally unnecessary. If a person can't trust a used-car dealer in this country, who can he trust?"

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

ABM nightmare still recurring for U.S.

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — In the delicate "balance of terror" that has prevailed in the 30 years since the Soviet Union developed its own nuclear weapons, a recurring nightmare has beset U.S. military and intelligence circles: That the Russians might achieve a solid defense against incoming American missiles, tempting them to try a "first strike" nuclear attack on the United States without fear of devastating retaliation.

The paranoid old men in the Kremlin have the same fears about us, even though American presidents since the dawn of the nuclear age have asserted that the United States would never strike first.

The Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972 was intended to calm fears on both sides of the nuclear standoff. But concern is mounting in the intelligence community that the Soviets have been developing an ABM capability anyway — in possible violation of the 1972 treaty. The Soviet-U.S. agreement, incidentally, is due for review a year from now, and its extension is expected to touch off intense debate.

The areas of Soviet research on anti-missile defense are outlined in a series of 14 top-secret intelligence documents shown to my associate Dale Van Atta. One was a 1979 memorandum from then-Defense Secretary Harold Brown to President Carter which warned that "Soviet ABM R&D (research and development) activities have led to concern over the development of a quick breakout capability" — that is, the ability to launch an attack with impunity.

Here are some of the concerns expressed in the intelligence documents:

— The Russians may already have perfected a semi-mobile ABM system capable of being deployed rapidly. The first Soviet anti-missile system, put in place in 1971, consisted of so-called "Flat Twin" radars on a concrete base that required several months to assemble and make operational. According to a National Security Council report, a single site of this kind, with all its components, would take about six months to construct.

The Soviets' improved version can be installed "more rapidly," according to the NSC report. A CIA analysis used the phrase "much more rapidly" in describing deployment of the new system, dubbed the ABM-X-3.

— The Soviets have also tested surface-to-air missiles (SAMs) as weapons against incoming missiles. More than 100 Russian cities have SA-5 interceptor missiles in position with the radar systems that will guide them to their targets. The setup is called the "Square Pair," and each one involves thousands of missiles around a chosen city, supposedly to protect it from relatively slow, low-flying bombers.

But the Soviets have already tested upgraded SA-5s for use against faster, higher-flying missiles. At least five such tests were conducted in the early 1970s, with the missiles reaching altitudes in excess of 125,000 feet. There is one optimistic note in the report on these tests: In each case "the missiles appeared to have malfunctioned, and the higher altitudes achieved resulted from uncontrolled flight."

— There is substantial evidence that the Soviets also tested their "Square Pair" radar against missiles in violation of the ABM treaty. They may have run more than 30 such trials, though our intelligence analysts can't be sure. On at least three occasions, Square Pair radar signals were observed being "reflected" off of three test missiles.

— The Soviets have four large "phased-array" radars under construction. Linked to so-called "battle management" radars, these would provide good anti-missile capability.

The four sites are at Olenegorsk, Pechora, Sary Shagan and Lyaki. The radar at Pechora is expected to be fully operational this year and "should provide detection and tracking against Trident and Minuteman launches," according to one intelligence report. The units at Sary Shagan and Lyaki may be ready next year.

"These new radars will provide better target-handling and tracking data and more accurate impact prediction," a Pentagon intelligence report states. "They are also assessed to be capable of providing accurate data for direct ABM support."

The Soviets began developing an anti-missile defense system in the late 1950s, but the United States had generally been ahead in the area. Still, neither side was far advanced by 1972, when the ABM treaty was signed.

A modification of the ABM treaty provided that each side could have only one anti-missile system near a particular city, with no more than 100 missile launchers per city. The Russians have been building their ABM system around Moscow and have deployed as many as 64 launchers.

The treaty did nothing to slow down the Russians. As one top-secret CIA report noted, "The number of (test) flights apparently related to ABM activities has remained unaffected by the treaty."

Meanwhile, the United States shut down its own "Safeguard" ABM program at Grand Forks, N.D., in 1976, when Congress cut off funds for it. Since then, however, the Pentagon has been continuing active research on ABMs at the rate of about $250 million a year. The possibility of reviving an ABM system, particularly as a means of protecting the admittedly vulnerable MX missile system, has been gaining increased support at the Pentagon.

If U.S. anti-missile defenses are not resuscitated, the generals will keep having nightmares about a Soviet first strike.

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

Sure, we've lifted the grain embargo — but if the Russians get uppity, we won't send them another drop of vodka.

"The embargo was an empty gesture," says the administration. "The embargo was ineffective and a waste of time — and if the Russians go into Poland, we'll put it on again!"

The Russians stayed out of Poland, so we'll send them more wheat. If they stay out of England, should we pull our troops out of Cuba?

If Cuba sends us any more refugees, we should put an embargo on tobacco and let them make their own cigars.

Fuss over Saudi Arabian AWACS deal brings a wry smile

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — Our country sells far too many weapons to Middle East nations, Israel included. What's the good in it? The shah bought $25 billion worth, and look where his kingdom is. Israel bristles with weaponry like ancient Sparta. The fuss over the sale of AWACS to Saudi Arabia causes a wry smile to cross my face.

The AWACS are a trophy the Saudis need to show other Arab nations that Uncle Sam is a reliable friend. There are so many restraints in this deal that I doubt whether by the year 1990 the Saudis could record that the sun has come up without informing Washington first.

But the Israeli lobby is yelling its head off again, some zealots even demanding that President Reagan turn in the yamalka he wore on certain occasions during the campaign. Most congressmen are cowards on this issue, so they hunker down and withhold support for the president. Not much new here.

In its volley of charges against the Saudis, the Israeli lobby claims that the oil kingdom could be irresponsible in its use of AWACS. This Israeli lobby might actually be worried that the Saudis will use this crafty electronic eye to spot Israeli misbehavior.

Anyway, when it comes to the Department of Irresponsibility, Israel is no better or worse than other Middle East nations. The only Americans ever killed or wounded in recent times by a military source in the Middle East were victims of Israelis. It was on June 8, 1967, that Israeli jet planes and torpedo boats intentionally attacked the "Liberty," a U.S. Navy surveillance ship, off the Sinai Peninsula.

The "Liberty," with the U.S. flag flying, was scouted for five hours by Israeli planes before the one-hour-and-20-minute attack began — bombs, machine-gun strafing of scrambling sailors, some burned later by Israeli napalm, and finally, torpedoes.

When it was over, there were 33 dead U.S. Navy men (plus one civilian) and 171 wounded. So vicious was the attack on the unarmed ship that an American sailor of the Jewish faith, seeing the Star of David markings on Israeli helicopters, became so angry that he ripped off his own Star of David medallion and threw it into the sea.

The cover-up of the "Liberty" massacre by the White House, the Pentagon, the State Department and the CIA made Watergate look like a kid's game. The truth of this extraordinary event lies in some murky repository.

Anyway, Israelis used French-built Mirages on the "Liberty," and couldn't be charged with misuse of U.S. weapons. Nowadays, in clear violation of weapons sales contracts, Israelis use American equipment to shell and bomb areas in Lebanon they call Palestinian. Together with their surrogate, Maj. Saad Haddad, a right-wing Lebanese renegade, in the process, they have killed hundreds of Lebanese civilians who are not terrorists.

When Israelis use the hottest jets in the world — supplied by the U.S. — to bomb Lebanese villages, they are shooting fish in a barrel. The Israeli supersonic planes don't have to worry about anti-aircraft capable of bringing them down.

So I smiled when Prime Minister Begin, shedding crocodile tears, declared on TV that Israel wants to save the poor Christian Lebanese from being annihilated by the Syrians. Hell, Israeli weapons have already killed many Lebanese Christians.

Begin's real goal is to stop Syria from advancing in Lebanon. Syria has become a marauder in that bleeding nation. As a "peacekeeper," Syria is a bust. Syria gets its weapons from the Soviets, and doesn't have to alibi much for their use, including their indiscriminate shelling of Lebanese towns. Israel gets theirs from the U.S. and is supposed to behave with them.

Far from being a beleaguered little nation trying to defend itself, Israel, like Syria and some other Arab nations, is interested in extending its reach and influence. Israel's air force is the most powerful in the region, and its per-capita military spending is the highest in the world. Its increasingly militaristic character is a sadness to many Israelis. No wonder a "Peace Now" movement blossomed in Israel.

The Saudis have not misused weapons supplied by the U.S. The Saudis are singularly not adventurous in military enterprises. They want to hold on, not strike out. As a matter of fact, of the half dozen Arab nations receiving U.S. weapons, only one, Jordan in 1967, used them against Israel. So much for "irresponsible use."

There is terrorism in the Middle East by Arabs and Israelis alike. Neither side is without sin, despite Begin's pleas about PLO terrorism. Israelis murder Palestinians in the Middle East and Europe, and elements of the PLO do the same to Israelis.

The Palestinians are the real problem, not the need to supply more weapons to every nation in the Middle East. In the context of Camp David, there has been zero progress on the Palestinian question. The entire Middle East — Arabs, Israelis, Muslims, Jews and Christians — would be relieved and happy if the Palestinian question were resolved.

Meanwhile, Saudi Arabia insists on its AWACS to keep faith with the rest of the Arab world skeptical of Uncle Sam's constant pampering of Israel. If the Saudis don't get their AWACS, they could easily turn to Europe for more military stuff, and buy more European commercial goods in the process. The U.S. is already losing business in Saudi Arabia and in other oil countries for a number of reasons.

The worst thing Israel's American friends can do is muscle the U.S. Congress and government to give in to Israel again. This political message and the billions in weapons and aid Israel gets from the U.S. affect the mentality of Israel's leadership in a deleterious way. It fosters the Masada or even the King Solomon notion that if Israel is threatened, it will pull down the entire Temple of the Middle East with it. I have heard Israelis make this dark warning.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

When the going gets rough, so do Texas' tough-talking legislators

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Apparently, the "treat 'em rough" school of thought on how to deal with legislators is gaining popularity in Texas.

San Antonio Sen. Glenn Kothmann, usually as mild-mannered as Clark Kent, was provoked enough recently to slip into his Super-Legislator outfit to blast the president of the Houston Sportsman's Club, who had blasted Kothmann in a letter for his oppostion to the late-lamented redfish bill.

The letter to Kothmann concluded that the senator's failure to support the bill would "be hung around your neck like a gill net around a redfish."

"If you are so hell-bent on political suicide, we will oblige you by digging the hole and paying for the funeral," the letter concludes.

Unhappy constituents, and non-constituents, are nothing new to legislators.

But deliberate abuse, as a tactic of getting attention, and perhaps even intimadating members, seems to be an increasing trend.

"If you want to get their attention, chew their (expeltive deleted) out," is the way one lobbyist describes the practice.

Reason and logic, admittedly, don't always prevail in the legislative process, but there's no reason to deliberately exclude them.

It is a bit alarming to see lawmakers beginning to view constituents as hostile entities to be placated rather than people to be served.

Again, that's nothing new, except perhaps for the scale.

And at least some members of the Legislature feel they're actually in danger from the public — as pointed out by Rep. Craig Washington, D-Houston, during his efforts to amend legislation to allow lawmakers to carry handguns.

On April 15, Washington failed to amend a bill dealing with peace officers to allow legislators to carry handguns.

Washington, an attorney and Speaker pro tempore of the House, said he's received threats on his life — and that other members have received similar communications.

"I'm more security conscious," Washington says. "It's just the general tendency that there are more people, for whatever reason, that make threats towards people in public life."

His proposal, he says, "would make us feel more secure, anyway, since we don't have the money to hire a security force."

Members defeated the amendment, arguing the House floor would look like the gunfight at the OK Corral if members were armed.

On April 24, members changed their minds (perhaps because a record vote wasn't taken) and added an amendment by Washington to a bill by Rep. Joe Hernandez, D-San Antonio, to approve gun-toting by lawmakers.

Hernandez then decided to table his bill — which was to allow "magistrates" — ranging from mayors to Federal judges — to carry handguns.

Washington argued that lawmakers "are more vulnerable" than judges — saying House members have "no security" while they're debating bills which may result in tempers running high and reason low.

"We," he said, "are in the middle of a fish bowl."

In 1972, in the aftermath of the Sharpstown Bank scandals, there was talk of enclosing the House gallery with bullet-proof glass.

One reason that never occurred was that it appeared that the weight of the glass could result in the gallery collapsing — spilling visitors and lobbyists on top of members below.

Hernandez' bill was pompted in part by the assassination in May 1979 of U.S. District Judge John Wood in San Antonio.

Judges, perhaps much more than lawmakers, have reason to worry about their safety; a House Study Group report on Hernandez' bill indicates that a third of Texas' judges carry handguns with them, even though it's against the law.

Rep. Ken Riley, R-Corpus Christi, has propsed legislation making it a capital offense to kill a lawmaker — commenting that if somebody gets him, he wants to make sure they don't get to stay around to enjoy it.

Riley's attitude is understandable, certainly.

But it's not a favorable commentary on the state of members' feelings that it's felt that such a proposal is needed.

Democracy, after all, involves the belief that violence doesn't have to be part of the political process to bring about change.

Lawmakers often need to be criticized — and they shouldn't expect that they won't be.

But there's a difference between criticism and intimidation — and a difference between what may be said in the heat of argument and a calculated attempt to bully.

And it may be that those latter efforts are succeeding too well.

Just ask...

To The Editor:

Twice in the last several days my journalism students and I have faced small crises, and on both occasions your people came to the rescue.

This is a thank-you-for-everything note.

We had problems in our print shop — lack of help, equipment down — and were in the middle of producing our school newspaper. With one quick phone call we received permission to use your system to set a couple of galleys of type. That saved our life there.

On the same day, I discovered I needed judges in a hurry for a UIL journalism contest that was coming up. I called George Foulsham and said I had a "red alert." Thirty minutes later, George called back — with word that he had lined up R-T people to do the judging. Several of your folks came to the college on a Saturday and did a highly conscientious job of judging. Once again our lives here were saved.

So to you, George, Lana (Cunningham) and all the others who helped, I want to offer my sincere thanks. It is a pleasure to have such a relationship with the local press. As you know, such relationships between journalism educators and professional journalist do not exist everywhere. If there is ever anything I can do in return, you have only to ask.

Burning bridges

To The Editor:

Upon my return from a recent trip I was pleased to notice that the bridge over Garfield Gulch had been opened while I was away.

While I was pleased to see the bridge open, I was surprised to see water standing on the bridge. It seems the middle of the bridge is lower than the drains on the side of the bridge. There was a gathering of minds at the site at the time I came by, so I pulled over and watched for a few moments. There seemed to be much head scratching and hat adjusting during the conversation.

Later that day I was going down Garfield again and I noticed a worker drilling holes in the bridge to drain the water from the bridge. It seems the result of the gathering of minds I had witnessed earlier in the day was to drill several 2½ inch diameter holes in the bridge for drainage.

It is almost to the point that many north Midlanders are finding the fiasco of Garfield Gulch amusing, ALMOST.

I guess as the old saying goes, "That is just water under the bridge," or on the bridge, whichever the case may be.

Our applause

To The Editor:

I read with astonishment Georgia Temple's review of "The Merry Widow," this year's opera production. No matter how poorly it might have been performed, her story was an embarrassment to me, and certainly should be to her personally and the newspaper itself.

She gave no recognition of the fact that this is a local "home town" work, performed for our enjoyment by hard-working, dedicated, music-loving people. Who was expecting it to be a professional show on the superb side?

Our tickets were for the Sunday night show, and after reading Georgia's article, we wondered just how terrible the evening was going to be. Well, we loved every minute — it had its weak spots to be sure, but what show does not? — and the cast and behind-the-curtain crew deserve a loud round of applause.

Shelter's needs

To The Editor:

Animal Control was a busy place last Saturday — the cute picture in the Reporter-Telegram brought many prospects to the shelter to look for that special animal. Seems Saturday was Sheltie, Collie day. There were so many nice dogs looking for a home.

In visiting with Dalton (Byerly), I found out the center is in need of some special equipment to help the animals. Remember Animal Control can use any donation you could make. The smallest to the largest is put to good use. If you can't stop by for a visit, please drop a donation in the mail addressed to Animal Control, 1601 Orchard Lane, Midland, Texas 79701. The animals will really appreciate any thing you can do for them and believe me, if they could talk they would say thank you!

Our discontent

To The Editor:

After reading the letter from Debbie Rhoades in this morning's paper, I asked myself: Why do we have to depend on our community to furnish us with entertainment in order to keep us from being bored?

And I remembered a letter my grandmother wrote to me just before she died, years ago.

On the envelope, she wrote, "Discontent is the penalty we pay for being ungrateful for what we have." It has helped me through the years when I found myself bored.

Just wanted to share this with others.

To The Editor:

The Reagan administration's attempt to define the conflict in El Salvador as one between "communists" and "non-communists" is but another example of American willingness to portray the struggle of workers and peasants against oppressive capitalism and "imported terrorism," while ignoring both the terrorism of poverty and of fascist dictatorship which generates such desperate measures, and the terrorism of American intervention which helps to preserve that oppression.

El Salvador is governed by a thinly-disguised military dictatorship which is the puppet of the country's true rulers, the 14 families who own 60 percent of the nation's land, and whose corruption and exploitation have condemned 90 percent of the country's population to poverty and death: two out of four children in this nation die before reaching age 5.

Because this oppression has alienated the populace, the government has intensified its efforts to frighten the peasants into submission: a three-member delegtion from the U.S. Congress has stated that "the army of El Salvador is waging a systematic campaign of terror against villagers;" John Sullivan, a Quaker who has just returned from El Salvador, reports that the assassination of students, professors, nuns, priests and peasants is commonplace. Among those who have been slaughtered were three American nuns, raped and murdered by the government's own security forces. Two weeks ago, these same government troops, flying American-made helicopters, killed some 30 peasants fleeing across the border to Honduras; a year ago, at the same river crossing, these "friends" of ours killed 600 people — mostly old men, women, and children — who were trying to escape the government's barbarism.

But despite this provocation, only one small element of the coalition which makes up the Democratic Revolutionary Front (FDR) is armed; the FDR is not a communist extremist organizaion at all, but is a true governent in exile, for it represents the desire of 88 percent of the El Salvadoran people — workers, religious leaders, peasants — for democratic change. As a Quaker, I am a firm believer in the power of non-violent resistance. But I know that my own government is supplying the weaponry which allows the El Salvadorean government to massacre its own people — and I must denouce that involvement.

In review...

To The Editor:

The review of the opening performance of "The Merry Widow" published in the April 26, 1981, edition of your newspaper (?) was one of the most disgusting reviews I have ever read. Certainly with friends like Georgia Temple and The Midland Reporter-Telegram, Midland College does not need any enemies.

For many of the people performing in the opera it was a learning experience. For others in the cast it was a labor of love requiring a great many personal sacrifices. Most of us attending realized this and enjoyed it despite a few imperfections. But, the writer of the review did not take this into account and perhaps thought she was attending a professional performance somewhere.

Often I have looked in vain for a review of a local performance given by professional or other groups in your newspaper. Either the reviews are not given at all or they are presented a few days after the performance. In this case it would seem that you could not get it published fast enough. It's a shame you could not have included it in the Saturday morning edition and ruined the later performances for everyone. On the other hand perhaps this review prompted the cast to do a better job than they otherwise would have done on Sunday night.

With so much knowledge of how opera should be done, Ms. Temple is wasting her time as a reporter and Midland College is missing the opportunity to have someone like her on their fine arts staff. Then next year we could expect to have perfection with an opera performed under such leadership.

A neighbor

To The Editor:

The Midland Police Department Crime Prevention Unit would like to commend the two women who reported the burglaries in progress at 4509 Versailles Dr. and 3713 W. Michigan on Monday, April 27, 1981, which resulted in the recovery of stolen goods worth in excess of $100,000.

The continued alertness by all citizens to report suspicious situations is one way of taking a bite out of crime and will certainly be appreciated by the Midland Police Department.

'Pet' peeve

To The Editor:

This letter is directed to you, the person who thinks you are doing your unwanted animal a favor by taking it outside the city limits and finding a house discreetly located off the highway and dumping your "pet." I am totally disgusted with you, as you exhibit a thoughtless and irresponsible segment of our society.

Who gives you the right to dump your animal on someone else, thinking, THEY live in the country, THEY will provide a good home and THEY probably need an animal anyway?

You are terribly mistaken, my friend. Do you realize in the last four years, you have dumped 12 of your animals (all female) on my property and left them to starve or find a soft-hearted person to feed them? More times than not, that softie was me.

These poor animals also take to the busy highway in search of food and their home, and run the risk of being hit and killed, not to mention the fact that they are endangering the life of a conscientious driver, who dodges to avoid hitting the animal and risks losing control of his vehicle and having a wreck.

If really doubt that anyone of your caliber would even read a newspaper, much less read this article in the first place, but this is my way of venting my frustration at your and if you do have a female animal, get her neutered and at the same time, why not get yourself neutered so that if the future, you won't have any offspring dumping animals on my offspring.

POSITIVE THINKING

Stepping in to a new world

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

"I've had it — and had it aplenty," a harassed young physician growled to his wife across the breakfast table. "I am fed up. Night and day, all I do is listen to complaints — and most of these people are a lot of neorotics who aren't really sick at all — they only think they're sick. They lean on me when they ought to stand on their own two feet. They wear me out. Why did I ever get myself into medicine at all?

"And look at our social life!" he grumbled. "The crowd we go with are a bunch of phonies. Trying to be sophisticated. If you ask me, they're a bunch of empties, that's what they are." Then he added ruefully, "And maybe I'm the emptiest of all."

His wife could see he needed a change. "Why don't you take a few days off?" she suggested. "Let's get away from this town for a while. Why not spend a week in New York?"

So they did. In the big city they started making the rounds of the usual places of entertainment. But to the depressed young doctor it all left him cold.

Then some people invited them to dinnner. They found themselves having a delightful evening with a stimulating, friendly, happy group of 18 or 20 persons. When someone turned the conversation to the spiritual life, both became interested. They discerned that these people had a vibrant, excitement-filled, joyous outlook on life quite different from anything with which they had been familiar. The young doctor was profoundly impresed. And he frankly said so, asking "What is it that you people have that I haven't got?" They talked about the limitations of the formal, conventional kind of religion. Beyond this, they said, there is something entirely different — religion-in-depth, they called it, which releases an upthrust of joy to the mind, giving peace and understanding and power over life's problems. "To experience these," one man said, "you have to go deeper. You must be willing to change. More than that, you must sincerely want a new life."

The doctor took the cue and said, "I'm for that. I go for it." and what happened? He said later, "I was filled with an indescribable peace. I felt a great joy welling up in me. I felt that I had stepped into a new world."

He followed through by practicing this new religion-in-depth from day to day. Consequently, his changed state of mind did not pass but continued. When he returened to his practice he found that instead of patients exasperating him he felt for them a kind of love he had not known before. "I realized," he says, "what a privilege it is to be given the opportunity to try to heal human beings in God's name. How wonderful it is to have come into this new world of the spirit!"

A similar personal experience came recently through a letter from a woman. "One morning after my husband had left for work," she writes, "I sat in the kitchen crying. I was utterly dejected. After two years of tragic situations I simply was not able to find the strength to carry on. My mother had died after a long illness. Two months after that I had entered the hospital for a major operation. We had recently moved to a city where I knew no one. And just a few months before this I had lost a child after many years of hoping to become pregnant.

"I went to our bookcase to look for something to read that would possibly take my mind off myself. It was then that your book caught my eye. As I took it from the shelf I thought, 'This is probably one of those pollyanna books not worth the printing.'

"I found myself sitting down and beginning to read. Words could never describe the profound awe and sense of discovery I felt as I continued to read these truths which you explain. Well, since I began to practice living according to the simple rules set forth in your book my whole outlook on life has changed to a happy and wholesome and hopeful one."

Like the harassed physician, this woman had trouble aplenty and, again like him, by religion-in-depth she stepped into a new world. Through spiritual change these two people overcame their difficulties. Their outward problems did not change. But through a new state of mind they came into a new quality of life. They stepped into a new world.

Experience of learning is a learning experience

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

Experience is the best teacher. Anyway, that's what they, who should know better, say.

The logic of the experience maxim is similar to that of the practice-makes-perfect maxim. Neither one is always true.

Experience teaches only when there is learning, improvisation, adaptation and growth. The advantages of experience will become evident with the knowledge it affords.

Now, man has no all-purpose key to perfection. The best he, being an imperfect creature, can do is to seek it out and constantly make a confident bid for perfection.

The earthy cynic, Mark Twain, proposed an interesting view of experience:

"We should be careful to get out of an experience only the wisdom that is in it — and stop there; lest we be like the cat that sits down on a hot stove-lid. She will never sit down on a hot stove-lid again — and that is well; but also she will never sit down on a cold one anymore."

Franklin P. Jones put experience succinctly: "Experience enables you to recognize a mistake when you make it again."

Perhaps one of the more meaningful lessons to be learned from experience was penned by John Stuart Mill:

"There are many truths of which the full meaning cannot be realized until personal experience has brought it home."

As viewed by Mill, experience could bring a searching soul more into the knowledge and wisdom of The Truth and lesser truths.

Experience is living. And living for a purpose can only be justified if that purpose includes the search for perfection.

Texas borrowers may only have a week to put their credit lives in order before new interest rates become effective. The House of Representatives approved the bill increasing interest rate ceilings, effective immediately upon the governor's signature. Lenders have stated that as soon as the bill becomes law, they will immediately increase interest rates on consumer loans. The new rate ceiling will be 24 percent on most consumer loans — that means that new car purchases, credit card purchases, personal loans, etc. will have higher interest rates possibly as early as next week.

The Texas Consumer Association wants to alert borrowers of the effect of the bill. If consumers wait until their next paycheck to buy a car, the rate may be as high as a prohibitive 24 percent. With their next bill, credit card users may get a notice that on all future purchases, the interest on them could be as high as 24 percent, and if they use their card, the new rate can be charged on amounts already owned. Consumers, however, can avoid paying the higher rate on outstanding balances by notifying the creditor that they do not wish to pay the new rates.

Midlander presides at council

William H. Jowell, Midland, recently returned from New York where he served as president of the New York Life Insurance Company's Agents Advisory Council.

The 25-member council is elected from among more than 12,000 New York Life agents in the United States and Canada. Council members meet yearly to confer with company executives on marketing programs and policyowner services.

Jowell joined the company in 1966, and has been the leading agent in the State since 1972. His professional accomplishments include membership in the industry's Million Dollar Round Table for the past ten years and receipt of the National Quality Award for 12 years and the National Sales Achievement Award for four years. In addition, Jowell is a member of the Midland Business and Estate Planning Council.

Savings associations 'hard hit'

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Savings and loan associations in Texas can see "a very bright light at the end of the tunnel — but it's a long, dark tunnel."

So reports Durward Curlee, executive vice president of the Texas Savings and Loan League.

Texas associations have been hit by large outflows of savings to other investments, particularly money market funds, Curlee notes, and have faced problems with increasing interest rates.

HB 1228, the recently passed bill allowing rates to rise to a maximum 24 percent interest on personal loans and 28 percent on some commercial loans, doesn't affect home mortgages, Curlee notes, despite reports to the contrary by some news media, as far as savings and loan associations are concerned.

Mortgage rates, however, "are going to be high and housing is going to suffer" for some time yet, he reports, while the profitability of savings and loan associations is down.

But, he says, there's no reason for anyone to worry about the stability of the industry or the safety of their deposts.

Curlee hopes that if the Reagan economic program is put into effect, and the amount of borrowing by the Federal government is reduced, the industry will begin to recover from the current slump.

And he's encouraged by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's proposals to give tax incentive to savers.

Bentsen discussed his program with reporters during a visit to Austin last month; the senator has several bills which he hopes will be considered, including tax-breaks for savings in financial institutions engaged in lending for housing.

That, coupled with a tax cut and a stable monetary policy by the Federal Reserve Board, should mean that the "long-term prospects for the industry are bright," Curlee says, despite the current crunch.

State Board of Insurance reports that the "consent-to-rate" auto insurance business, almost exclusively physical damage coverage when the current boom got under way in 1979, now includes liability coverage.

SBI, in 1975, extended the auto manual rule on hard-to-place risks to include private passenger automobiles, as well as buses and trucks (which already were under the program).

However, the change had no immediate effect on the market with only 1,960 consent-to-rate applications filed for the whole of 1977, and only 2,080 for 1978.

But for 1979, the figure was 5,622, with 13,217 for 1980 — and SBI reports applications now are coming in at the rate of 1,100 per month.

Some 25 companies specialize in writing consent-to-rate business, with about half of the underwriting done by five companies, according to SBI's estimates.

County mutual insurers had been the primary carriers, but Lloyds-type companies are reported participating more heavily.

One explanation offered for the trend is that hard-to-place risks have begun using the consent-to-rate approach in preference to the Texas Automobile Insurance Plan for assigned risks — and that assigned risk plan has seen a decline in the number of its applications.

Texas Air Control Board plans another meeting around the end of this month with industry representatives in TACB's effort to implement a fee schedule for agency permits.

Legislators authorized the program in 1979, but TACB hasn't enacted the charges as yet.

TACB spokesman Doyle Pendleton, who has been working with a special committee established to recommend a fee schedule, says that while no final determination has been made, the panel is looking at a "one-time, front-end" fee, based upon the total cost of the project being permitted.

"We want to make sure what we propose doing is workable," Pendleton adds.

A time and place for the committee's meeting are to be announced.

A survey conducted for the Small Business Administration and reported by the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Texas at Austin indicates that small businesses in Texas are hungry for credit and venture capital.

The survey of 143 banks regarding small business credit showed that 81.8 percent had "full" portfolios of new small business loans — while 88.2 percent reported "frequent" demands for extension of credit to small businesses.

Responses from small businesses also indicated that there is "an excess demand for credit and venture capital from small firms."

Buying first home 'difficult'

COLLEGE STATION — First-time homebuyers who earn less than $30,000 per year will have a difficult time purchasing the average Texas home, says a research economist with the Texas Real Estate Research Center at Texas A&M University.

Monthly payments of $743 were required to repay the loan on the average home sold in Texas in the fourth quarter of 1980, said Dr. Arthur Wright. That payment was based on the average sale price of $63,000, a 90 percent conventional loan and a 15½ percent interest rate.

"When the monthly charges for insurance and taxes were added," he said, "the base payment for the average Texas home was almost $850 per month."

At one time, lenders figured roughly 25 percent of a family's take-home pay could be allowed for housing expenses, Wright said. Today lenders estimate 33 percent of income is required for shelter. In order for a Texas family to make monthly payments of $850 — and thus qualify for the average home sold in the state — an income of at least $30,000 per year is required.

"Most young people starting out don't make anywhere near that much money," sad Wright. "In fact, the median family income in Texas is about $20,000 annually or about $1,650 per month."

Wright said first-time homebuyers are hurt the most because they lack the nest egg of equity enjoyed by persons from the sale of an existing home to apply to a new purchase. This means higher payments.

"A lot more first-time buyers are turning to relatives to obtain money to purchase a home," said Wright. He added that both spouses are commonly working to meet monthly payments.

Wright also said escalating prices and high mortgage interest rates are pricing an increasing number of first-time homebuyers out of the market.

Interim director of Texas Tech museum sets accreditation goal

James A. Goss

LUBBOCK — Accreditation of The Museum of Texas Tech University by 1986 has been given top priority by the newly named interim director.

Dr. James A. Goss, who took over his new duties recently set the goal in a policy statement made before museum staff. He said The Museum, established in 1929 to serve primarily West Texas, is committed to a master plan of telling the story of the "eternal relationship" of water, land, man and energy, with special reference to the arid lands of the world.

The museum, he said, is a "tribute to the vision of the people and the vitality of the cultural heritage" of West Texas.

"Our American Dream — that it is possible to make great things from nothing by the application of good ideas and the sweat of our brows," Goss said, "is still alive and well here."

He reviewed the history of The Museum and warned that "the survival of our entire enterprise hinges upon accreditation by the American Association of Museums."

He pointed out that the Texas Legislature has made clear it will hesitate to support unaccredited museums after 1988. The federal government will not give unaccredited museums priority status for support. Eventually, Goss said, the unusual museum science program for graduate students will not be accredited by the America Association of Museums unless it is affiliated with an accedited museum.

Among the collections generating new knowledge, Goss cited, as indication of the scope of interest, living tissues, mammology, vertebrate paleontology, entomology, archeology, ethnology, herpetology, historic clothing and textiles, botany, medical zoology, ornithology and mineralogy.

Goss, who has chaired the department of anthropology and museum science at Texas Tech University, said that the program in museum science has 30 students enrolled now with 90 inquiries from potential students for next year. Fifteen graduate faculty are involved in the program.

Wade Ashley appears to be aspiring to fly like the "big boys" buzzing around at the air show in Odessa.

Text by Ed Todd

ODESSA — The exuberant flier peered skyward. He exuded love and praise.

And he was in love — with airplanes and flying — and, by his own admission, he had rather be flying than just yakking about it.

Dr. Bill McCollough does both rather well. This time, though, he was "talking flying" in an earthbound posture.

He gazed into the blue sky, and focused on a biplane that was flying like a wild falcon full of merriment, sense and craze.

"He's really smoking," McCollough said in his untempered enthusiasm, as he watched Odessa's Gene Beggs pace his biplane through precision flying moves — aerobatics.

"He's rolling to the left. Ohhhh!" he half-yelled with dramatic inflection. "It's a long ways down when you get so high."

McCollough was "high" with a fever for flying; besides, his friend Beggs was "saving the best for last."

Beggs, an accomplished aviator who's a national aerobatic champion in the International Aerobatic Club (IAC), was among the pilots who were flying around and upside-down in maneuvers for show and fun in last weekend's Roy Schlemeyer Memorial Air Show.

THE EVENT was sponsored by the Experimental Aircraft Association's Chapter 123 of Midland-Odessa.

Beggs, like the other aerobatic pilots, gave the spectators their money's worth with such acts as the symmetrical loops, the super slow roll, variations of loops and rolls and vertical climbs, which ended in such maneuvers as the torque rolls, hammerhead stalls and vertical snap rolls.

McCollough, who announces the EAA's annual world air show at Oshkosh, Wisc., was unabashedly proud of precision flying by Beggs and another national champion aerobatic flier, Midland's Mike Sharp.

McCollough, 48, a Levelland physician, won the 1975 IAC sportsman championship and considers Beggs and Sharp proteges; he coached both. And Beggs, as the flying doctor will testify, today is rated as one of the world's best aerobatic pilots and possibly the leading competitive precision flier in the Southwest.

Scores of aircraft, including Beggs' immaculate Pitts Special, Sharp's clipped-wing 1946 Taylorcraft and other experimental airplanes, World War II "warbirds" in the Confederate Air Force and helicopters flying like giant gnats, flew in for the annual show.

SKYDIVERS, LED by Midland's Brent Berry, leaped out of Jim Fowler's "Black Beauty" Cessna 182, and, in colorful parachutes that transformed into airfoils, flew right up to the crowd.

Frank Smisson, an aviator who was watching rather than flying, looked up and made it clear that he, were he given the choice, would stay in the cockpit and not bail out only to float down on fabric and a prayer.

"No need practicing something you've got to do perfect the first time, right?" he quipped and left the jumping to Berry and

Monster photo real, subject in doubt

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A photograph of an object in a lake between Vermont and New York wasn't doctored, but it will take more than that to convince scientists that the "Lake Champlain monster" is real, says a zoologist who hopes someday to trap the elusive critter.

Dr. Roy P. Mackal of the University of Chicago, a specialist in the study of rare and extinct animals, told a news conference Thursday that "if we're talking about real animals, and not goblins," catching one is "the only way we are going to satisfy the scientific community."

The news conference capped five months of computer and other examination here of a photograph that purports to show the dinosaur-like denizen of Lake Champlain.

Experts here voiced doubts about what's shown in the photo, but Mackal said he hoped to work out a plan to trap the creature, dubbed "Champ," and prove its reality.

Mackal, who said he had seen Nessie, the legendary monster of Scotland's Loch Ness, said he thinks Champ will prove to be a rare relative of primitive whales thought to have died out 20 million years ago.

The tests, which included use of computer imaging equipment at Kitt Peak National Observatory near Tucson, concluded only that the photo hadn't been faked, researchers said.

B. Roy Frieden, one of the University of Arizona experts who conducted the examination, agreed that the photo and wave pattern it showed indicated the object was surfacing and wasn't just floating or bobbing along in the lake.

But, he said, "there is one suspicious detail in the picture that merits looking into: a brownish streak going horizontally across the picture right up to the object in question. A woman who lived at Lake Champlain and saw the picture said she thought it was a sandbar."

In such case, he said, "then there is a distinct possibility that the object was put there by someone, either by people who took the photo or by the people who were fooling them, because you could simply walk out on such a sandbar and tow the object behind you and hide behind it as you made it rise out of the water."

Alan Neigher, a lawyer representing the Mansi family, said they "could no more have constructed such a hoax than put a satellite in orbit."

Mansi said he had gone to his car to get a camera and returned to find his children wading happily and his wife in panic. The creature had surfaced about 150 feet from shore.

"I threw her the camera and said, 'Take a picture and let's get out of here," he said.

Mansi said the children didn't see anything. The negative was lost.

"We've made no bones about the fact that we plan to sell this and make something off it," said Neigher.

Jackson's program fails to meet goals

CHICAGO (AP) — After three years and $2 million in federal funds, the Rev. Jesse Jackson's "Push for Excellence" educational program has failed to "implement the rhetoric that first attracted support," according to a new government report.

PUSH-EXCEL, intended to motivate low-income and minority youth to higher academic achievement, does not have a long-term strategy and instead depends on "one-shot activities" such as lectures by Jackson and others, according to the report, obtained by The Associated Press.

However, a spokesman for Operation PUSH, or People United to Save Humanity, the parent organization of PUSH-EXCEL, says Jackson always intended PUSH-EXCEL to be more of a crusade than a nuts-and-bolts educational program.

"For their own reasons, they (the government) have tried to turn what is essentially a movement into a program," said spokesman Frank Watkins.

"At one level it was never our intention to develop a program in the traditional sense," Watkins said. "When Jackson speaks ... when he's appeared on talk shows, there is no way to evaluate what education has gone on in that process, no way to determine who has been inspired and motivated through some word that was given."

Encouraging students with slogans like "If you can conceive it and believe it, you can achieve it," Jackson began making speeches promoting academic achievement among minorities and the poor in 1975.

Push for Excellence was organized in 1978 and has received more than $2 million in federal education contracts and grants since that time.

The report on PUSH-EXCEL was the third of four by the non-profit American Institutes for Research for the federal Education Department. All three reports have criticized PUSH-EXCEL for its lack of an ongoing, structured program.

"No one (at PUSH-EXCEL) ... has a plan that takes the program beyond the intial phase — getting students' attention — to the phase that stimulates greater effort," says the report.

It says the activities that are under way in the six cities with PUSH-EXCEL staffs are "the sum of existing ideas" rather than the result of a plan. The six cities are Chicago, where Operation PUSH is based; Kansas City; Los Angeles; Denver; Chattanooga, Tenn.; and Buffalo, N.Y.

Watkins said the organization has developed an "Implementation Guide" that will give a step-by-step way to translate PUSH-EXCEL's philosophy into a program.

But the report said the manual does not take the steps, such as developing tutoring programs and PUSH-EXCEL clubs, "further than they have already gone on their own."

It also says PUSH-EXCEL leaders need to develop ways to raise longer-term support in the communities they serve.

"What does mobilize such long-term support? The Rev. Jackson set out some basic, concrete objectives in this regard, e.g., parents should monitor two hours of study time per evening. How does PUSH-EXCEL propose to get parents to do that? To date, the program has not developed answers," the report said.

The report said interviews with students in the program show many of them were already motivated to learn and that what they need is a better plan for translating that motivation into action.

Children play at a rail outside the Durango Street tenement in El Paso recently. The tenement was the subject of a battle between the tenants and city officials. Residents have won the fight against eviction and plan to renovate the 60-year old building.

El Paso rent strike conflict settled

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — In the fall of 1978, seven families in a dilapidated 20-unit tenement in south El Paso quit paying their $20-a-month rent — a rent strike that reached the verge of a street war between the tenants and the city's establishment.

Mayor Tom Westfall says the ticking bomb on Durango Street has been defused, but adds that similar revolts may be on the way.

The rent strike began after tenants received eviction notices and refused to leave the battered 60-year-old building. The building could not reach city building codes and the landlord, Bernice Wesson and her two sons, who live in California, had decided that it was unprofitable.

The tenants wanted the building repaired. The landlord's agent in El Paso said no and gave them 11 days to move out.

A self-described "social reformer" named Mario Chaverria entered the picture, meeting with the tenants and organizing them under the Comite Civico Democratico. With the committee's backing, the tenants started paying their rent to a fund established by the committee. The money was to be used to fix the leaking roof.

CHAVERRIA and others moved into the tenement, none of them paying rent. They decorated the apartments with paintings of Cuban guerilla leader Che Gueverra and symbolic drawings representing the oppression of the poor.

The situation simmered until January 1980 when another eviction notice came. At the landlord's request, the City Council had condemned the building.

Authorities arrived to evict Chaverria, since he was seen as the ringleader of the renters' revolt. He went to jail briefly for criminal trespassing for occupying a two-room apartment with his girlfriend and their baby.

The next month, the police and eviction authorities arrived again. As carloads of police poured into the area, a fight broke out between the authorities and the tenants. The police overpowered those who struggled and Chaverria and four others went to jail.

A local minister and some of the tenants went to the jail to protest the arrests and another confrontation ensued. There were more arrests, more allegations of police brutality.

In the following months, the tenement was visited frequently by police, fire department inspectors, Immigration and Naturalization Service officers and men Chaverria said were with the FBI.

THE TENANTS became suspicious of any gringo that showed up at the tenement. Some still won't talk to visitors, leaving the speaking to Chaverria.

The building had no natural gas connections or indoor running water and only four bathrooms for the 21 families that by that time had made their homes in the tenement. Then the landlord's agent had the outside faucets turned off twice, Chaverria said. Twice, garbage collection service was halted. Once, the electric company was ordered to cut off the electricity and remove the meters.

Fundraising events, including a dance at a local Roman Catholic Church, are planned to raise money for the project. The 15 families who remain at the tenement plan to do the work themselves with the supervision of an architect, plumbers and carpenters who have volunteered to help, Chaverria said.

He said priority will be placed on natural gas connections, running water and indoor restrooms for each family. The tenants also want to replace the crumbling plaster on the interior walls, he said.

Meanwhile, the businessmen are making plans for renovation of more of the estimated 180 South Side tenements. They have formed a non-profit corporation called Community Cares, Inc., to handle fund raising.

Bencomo and Chaverria see renovation as an answer to an urban housing problem that has plagued the barrios for years. The only answer for most poor Mexican-Americans is public housing. But there's a waiting list for such housing and some people are too proud to accept it.

WORST OF ALL, most available public housing is in other parts of the city.

"This is a big problem we have with housing," Chaverria said. "Not just here, but throughout the South Side. We have seen our people displaced all over the city. We are no longer going to be moved out like animals."

12 jailers resign amidst probe

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — Twelve Hidalgo County jailers have resigned in the midst of an investigation by the FBI into allegations that bail bondsmen paid kickbacks to jail employees.

Sheriff Brig Marmolejo said Thursday he called the FBI into the case after conducting an internal investigation for two months.

Marmolejo said he did not know the extent of the kickbacks or how much money changed hands to get inmates to use particular bond companies.

"They're looking at the complete operation," Marmolejo said.

He said other complaints also are being checked out.

"There are allegations of narcotics filtering into the jail and beatings, things like that," said Marmolejo.

The FBI entered the case Monday but has refused comment on its inquiry.

Officials said federal agents are investigating whether the civil rights of prisoners were violated by their allegedly being denied the right to choose a bail bondsman.

U.S. may be the big loser in grain embargo

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor
Hearst Special News Service

WASHINGTON — Although it has cost the Soviet Union much more to import substitutes for American grain and other goods and caused inconvenience for Kremlin planners, the real loser from the just-lifted grain embargo and still enforced ban on high technology sales may turn out to be the United States.

It already has cost the American taxpayer $2.5 billion that the Agriculture Department's Commodity Credit Corporation had to reimburse to U.S. grain exporters. And as a result of the embargo, U.S.-Soviet trade has been halved from $3.4 Billion in 1979 to just under $1.7 Billion in 1980.

That is the surprising conclusion of a top-secret U.S. Government study that was prepared for the White House prior to President Reagan's lifting of the 15-month-old grain embargo on April 24th. It is a view shared by top Cabinet officials, by many businessmen and possibly even the president himself.

"Even with the U.S. grain sales suspension (of about 17 million metric tons), the Soviet Union will import an amount of grain about equal to its maximum import capabilities during the 1980-81 marketing year," the classified document states.

What that means is that the Kremlin has succeeded in replacing the United States as its principal supplier by shopping elsewhere — in Argentina where Moscow signed a five-year pact to buy 5 million metric tons a year and an unprecedented $1 billion worth of Argentine meat and meat products.

To make up for the American shortfall, the Russians also contracted to buy 5 million metric tons of grain for the next five years from Canada and 2 million tons a year from Australia. That accounts for about two-thirds of the grain the Kremlin would have bought here.

"It certainly has had a big impact on the American market," explained Joseph Wainer, president of one of America's major grain exporting companies. "Russia is the biggest customer in the world. Russia's total demand will be 35 million metric tons this year.

"No country buys that kind of quantity," he said.

Only 8 million tons that were contracted for under a 5-year pact that runs out this Sept. 30th will be American grains and Wainer explained that the Soviet Union is in no rush to come back into the American market.

When they do, he said, don't be surprised if the Russians demand compensation for their losses and guarantees in the future against the use of grain as a political weapon. And that, he said, is why there is little optimism among American farmers that there will be a new windfall of Soviet orders.

"The President lifts the embargo one day and Haig comes out the next day and says if you go into Poland, the same thing's going to be done again," Wainer said. "That's not a very reliable assurance.

"The Russians want some kind of assurance. It would help if there would be a definite agreement on behalf of both Governments that a certain quantity would be sold regardless of politics so that the traders and the Russian people would have some guarantee."

But Wainer conceded that with the current threat hanging over Poland, that isn't very likely to happen. To boot, the Soviet Union appears to have had a relatively good crop this year. "They're talking about a harvest of 210 or 215 million tons this year" compared to 189 million last year, he said.

The confidential U.S. Government report did say that the embargo "substantially increased Soviet grain import costs and forced the Soviets to use a less than optimal livestock feed mix." But it concludes that although the embargo resulted in the production of thinner cattle, it did not "dramatically" affect "domestic availability of meat, milk and eggs."

If that was the case for grain -- by far the largest of U.S. exports to the Soviet Union -- it is even more the case for advanced technological goods that were embargoed in December 1979 after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. France, West Germany and Japan have simply taken up the slack.

It is reflected in trade figures, which show that French exports to the Soviet Union have jumped by 25 per cent from $3.8 billion in 1979 to $4.7 billion in 1980 and still are on their way up. France already has announced it is commencing talks for a long-term grain pact with the Russians.

But it is more dramatically shown in the nature of the deals themselves. The most publicized of them probably was President Carter's veto of the sale of a Sperry Univac computer to the Tass news agency to use for the Moscow Olympics.

Botha promises reforms

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A show of strength by ultra-rightists may test newly re-elected Prime Minister P.W. Botha's promise to press for racial reforms, despite his public confidence.

The National Party leader reiterated on national television Thursday that a top priority when Parliament reconvenes July 31 will be the issue of political rights for South Africa's 2.5 million colored, or mixed race, residents and its 750,000 Asians.

Botha had established a president's council, including whites, Asians and coloreds, to study whether the non-whites should be given the vote, either with the nation's ruling 4.5 million white citizens or on a separate roll.

The ultra-rightists again failed to win a single seat in Parliament, but analysts say their showing challenges the Nationalists' claim to be the only representative of Afrikaners.

800,000 Jews may determine outcome of French election

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent
The Hearst Newspapers

PARIS — For the first time, there may be a "Jewish vote" in France. It could be enough to decide the outcome of next week's presidential election.

With a photo-finish expected between President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and his socialist challenger, Francois Mitterrand, France's 800,000 Jews could hold the key to the outcome. If that is true, then the advantage appears to rest with Mitterrand, whose chances of becoming France's first left-of-center president seem to be improving daily.

When a bomb exploded last October before a Paris synagogue, killing four persons, few thought the tragic incident would prove to have long-term political repercussions. But, so it has turned out.

Jews blamed Giscard and his government, first of all, for failing to solve the crime. But, beyond that, the traumatic after-effects on the Jewish community here brought into sharp relief its resentment at the French government's flagrantly pro-Arab stance in the Middle East.

Many Jews openly expressed a belief that, whoever was responsible for the synagogue bombing and a host of lesser attacks on Jewish monuments and individuals, the government's pro-Arabism and especially its favoritism toward the Palestine Liberation Organization created the right kind of climate for anti-semitic outrages.

Jewish leaders here concede that Giscard did not begin France's one-sided Middle East policies which date back at least to the Six Day War in 1967. His misfortune is that he was widely regarded as friendlier to Israel than his predecessor, Georges Pompidou. But his term of office, starting in 1974, coincided with the energy crisis and France's near-obsession with guaranteeing the security of its oil supplies at whatever cost.

In the eyes of many French Jews therefore, Giscard is a target of disappointed early expectations that he would introduce a more even-handed policy in dealing with the Arab-Israeli problem. Indeed, he promised to do so during his 1974 campaign. Instead, French Jews claim, he has carried official pro-Arabism well beyond anything required by French self-interest.

Anti-semitic vandals chose last Sunday, the day of the first round of voting in the presidential election, to desecrate a Jewish cemetery near Paris. Within a couple of hours, Giscard had broken off electioneering to appear with other officials at a Jewish war memorial ceremony.

But the gesture came too late to appease many French Jews. They pointed out that after the October bomb attack it took him more than 48 hours to respond personally, a political lapse that is still unexplained.

Politically sophisticated French Jews agree that Mitterrand as president is unlikely to initiate a dramatic reversal of policy toward Israel. On the contrary, it is recognized that some leftist elements, even within Mitterrand's own Socialist party, have adopted the pro-Arab, pro-PLO ideas which are now fashionable with much of the international radical movement.

In this context, the candidate's own long-standing personal friendliness toward Jews or the fact that a number of Jews are prominent within the French Socialist Party is not viewed with excessive optimism. As a non-Jewish French newspaper editor who is sympathetic to Israel put it, "Whoever is elected will find plenty of reasons for deciding that French national interests and Israeli interests do not coincide."

Nonetheless, the climate since the synagogue bombing, coupled with the closeness of the presidential race, has served to release Jewish frustrations.

Sundancer an answer to exercise problems

Finally there is a solution to the problems of reasonable, yet adequate exercise for people of all ages! Something convenient, and that can be used right in the privacy of the users own home. It mades monotonous exercise become what it ought to be-a fun, invigorating attraction to better health. The solution is here and now because Sundancer is the answer! Loretta Littlejohn, with Health Clinics international believes that the Sundancer is an answer to many peoples exercise problems." The fact is that there are many similar exercise devices on the market but there is only one Sundancer," he exclaimed. "I know that sundancer is the best because the product is backed by extensive research by the University of Utah in Salt lake City and is recomended by Dr. Craig H. McQueen, a noted authority in exercise needs."

Clay went on to say that the Sundancer shouldn't be confused with similar devices on the market because of the Sundancers extensive testing background and the fast that it is manufactured with Permatron, a space age material that gives the user added benefits and music wire springs that snap back quickly with every bounce. He believes that the Sundancer is the best product of its kind on the market and he has the background sources to prove it.

"People today are more interest in personal fitness than ever before and, with good reason." He explained. "Some researchers pridict that a consistent aerobic exercise program may extend a lifespan by as much as 11.5 years".

The continued that, even with all the evedence, many people still don't exercise properly. For some, it's just too much trouble to get out the jogging suit and head for the gym while for others it's too emberrassing to parade past the neighbors in shorts. Many other busy professionals just don't have the time and they are the ones who need this form of exercise the most.

With Sundancer these problems are solved because it can be used right in the home or office and no special clothing is required. It can be used anytime day or night and only six to eight minutes on the Sundancer is the same as jogging on mile!

What is your secret? The "secret" if there is one is aerobics meaning "with air or oxygen. The result of earobic exercising is improvement in the conditioning of the heart, lungs and blood vessels-those organs which process the body's oxygen. Better utilization of oxygen means that the heart doesn't have to pump as much blood to the body's cells before and the lungs pump more oxygen in and more carbon dioxide out than before. In addition, blood vessels become more flexable and less prone to the accumulation of deposits. While the entire network of tiny blood vessels increases. Many physicians claim than an aerobic exercise program like the one available with the supdancer. Can be a major factor in the prevention of coronary disease.

The Sundancer...the tested way to get into shape quickly and easily without the problems involved in jogging.

Why use the Sundancer when jogging is free? The fact is while jogging is effecient and the price is right it could cause problems. In some cases, the damage to the bones, joints and tendons could result from the continued pounding of the feet on the hard surfaces. In addition there is the discomfort experienced during cold weather, wet wear her and neighborhood dogs and motorists.

Dr. Craig H. McQueen M.D. an orthopedic sergeon in Salt lake City, recomends exercising on the sundancer because the protection of weighbearing joints is excellent. Those who jog on the Sundancer discover cushioned aerobics. They receive the benefits of jogging with less stress on the muscles, ligaments, tendons, and organs of the body. Testing at Utah Biomedical Labs has shown that stress on the weighbearing joints is relieved as much as 85% on the Sundancer. In addition Dr. McQueen noted that lower blood pressure is a direct result from the kind of exercise obtained from the Sundancer.

Loretta Littlejohn, with Health Clinics International located at 2503 W. Ohio, is a distributor for Sundancer in Midland. Stop by the Clinic or call her at 686-0336 about the benefits of owning your own Sundancer, or becoming a distributor.

Trace contaminants not really harmful in such small doses

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was so concerned about reading that there are trace contaminants in various products that we eat. I wish you would write an article showing how these trace contaminants are harmful to our health and, in fact, may be killing us. Looking foward to your response. — Mrs. D.A.

Dear Mrs. A.: I certainly understand your concern; unfortunately, the lack of understanding with the public about trace contaminants causes some people to panic when reading the contents of various products. Dr. Ectyl Blair, Dow Chemical's vice president for Health and Environmental Sciences, wrote the following response: ". . . For example, would you eat a piece of pie that contained 25 PPT of sulfuric acid? Most likely not. Even children know that sulfuric acid can eat through the fender of a car. Surprisingly though, you could feed a baby a 10 ounce bottle of milk that contains as many as 500 parts per trillion (PPT) of high concentration sulfuric acid, and the baby would not be ill. So go ahead and eat that piece of pie. Why? Virtually any part per trillion is so small that it almost defies measurement. Most chemicals at this dosage level can have little or no effect on the human body. Sea water, for instance, contans 20 PPT of deadly arsenic. Yet, we bathe in it without harmful effects. Substances measured in PPB (parts per billion) or PPT (parts per trillion) are know as "trace contaminants," and are just that: traces of substances that, in sufficient quantity, can contaminate. Scientists are growing more concerned daily about the public perception of trace contaminants. They believe that lack of understanding of what they are, and what the dose levels mean, could cause people to panic when reading the contents of various products. A product containing so many parts per trillion of dioxin, benzene, or other substances said by the federal government to be cancer causing, for example, could be wasted because people who actually need it would be afraid of it. The dose of the carcinogenic material is so small that it might as well not be there. The fact of the matter is, that most chemicals taken in large quantities are hazardous to health. What really matters is the quantity taken, and not the relative toxicity of the substance. If you ingest too much salt, death will result. Yet, we eat salt every day in virtually all of our food. The real point is that it is not so much what you ingest and are exposed to as how much. Defining this critical factor depends to a large extent on understanding the meaning of quantities as large as one billion or one trillion. As an example, one part per billion can be compared to one above par hole for an 18-hole golf course in more than 3.5 million golf games, or one into the net shot of 1.2 million tennis matches. One part per trillion is even less than that. Consider the size of a flea. One flea compared to 360 million elephants is the ratio of one part per trillion. It can also be compared to one typographic error in all the words of all the front pages of the 1,500 daily newspapers in the United States. That is, if they had been printing since Gutenberg invented movably type in the 15th century. So, if you see a reportedly lethal chemical in doses of 10 PPB or 100 PPT, don't get too excited. The notification is there more for the scientific analysis of the sbustance than for its effect on the human body. Remember, one billion seconds ago, we were in the 19th century. One billion minutes ago, Christ was delivering the sermon on the mount. One trillion hours ago, there were no sermons; there were no mounts; there was simply nothing. A billion; a trillion; it's a lot.

Black clergyman to head National Society for Pentecostal Studies

With BOB TIEUEL

National Society for Pentecostal Studies Elects Black President: The demand by black Pentecostals for "equal recognition" echoed across the otherwise placid campus of Oral Roberts University recently during the annual meeting of the National Society for Pentecostal Studies. The society, an annual gathering of scholars representing scores of Pentecostal denominations and charismatic fellowships throughout North America, responded by electing a black clergyman as its president for 1981, the Rt. Rev. Ithiel Clemmons of Brooklyn, N.Y., a bishop in the Church of God in Christ.

It also heard another black scholar as a major speaker, Dr. James S. Tinney professor of journalism and political science at Howard University. The Rev. James C. Richardson of Martinsville, Va. was appointed to a committee mandated with bringing a recommendation to the next SPS meeting on how to more fully open the society's membership to blacks, Hispanics, and others from smaller non-Trinitarian churches, as well as charismatics who cannot subscribe to the SPS "statement of faith." Another participant was the Rev. Mr. Donald R. Heelock, president of Saints Academy, a Church of God in Christ related school in Lexington, Miss.

Dr. James A. Forbes, Jr., a black professor at Union Theological Seminary in New York City, served as keynote speaker for the opening of the SPS conference. He spoke from the subject "Don't Put God in a Box."

Many of the 250 black students attending Oral Roberts University were of this opinion: "I didn't realize there were so many black Pentecostal scholars in the U.S. It makes us proud."

For further information contact Dr. James S. Tinney, P.O. Box 386, Howard University, Washington, D.C. 20059.

FROM A BLACK PERSPECTIVE — The Black Oklahoma Eagle: "American history cannot be written without inclusion in it of Joe Louis. He embodied all that was good and withstood, for one brief moment in history, all that was evil. The world has always had its madmen. Abroad, Adolph Hitler spewed his hatred for Jews and blacks and his racial superiority. He preached murder and war. Entire nations shuddered in their boots.

"At home, white supremacy reigned. Whites openly despised, cheated and mistreated blacks. Blacks were denied education, voting and economic opportunity. Lynchings were commonplace. .... Then came the Louis-Schmeling championship fight. For one brief moment, our national will was embodied in Joe Louis. When Louis knocked out Max Schmeling of Germany, so swiftly, the rest of the world reverberated with joy and jublilation. The message was clear: Not only was the 'melting pot of the world' — America, not inferior, but a black American was without question world champion... Joe was a superstar before superstars."

CHIMES: More blacks are dying from cancer than whites...one black American dies from cancer every 12 minutes. If this trend continues, 6.5 million black American will develop cancer — one out of every 4 black people in America. Dr. R.L. Fletcher, M.D. states: "Black people are exposed to more cancer-causing factors. Jobs with the greatest industrial exposure hazards are too often occupied by blacks. Have a cancer check-up soon readers even if you are white, black or brown.

RECENT GREAT QUOTES: A Lesson for Reagan: "Unemployment is epidemic in Britain. As in the United States, those hardest hit are the non-whites some 2 million of whom inhabit the kingdom's inner cities...A new study published by the Labor Party shows that the lowest 10 percent of Britain's taxpayers has received only about 2 percent of the benefits from the tax cut while the highest 10 percent has received more than 35 percent of the benefits." For some Vietnam veterans, the war isn't over

EDITOR'S NOTE — It has been six years since the fall of Saigon, but the war has not ended for many Vietnam veterans who only now are being diagnosed as suffering from psychological problems called the "Vietnam syndrome."

BOSTON (AP) — The firefights, jungle ambushes, sniper attacks and screaming mortars still rage in the minds of many Vietnam veterans, who, six years after the fall of Saigon, suffer from what has come to be known as "Vietnam syndrome."

The syndrome is a delayed stress reaction that, according to one study, haunts more than a third of the Americans who engaged in combat.

It can drive a veteran to drink, drugs — even crime, mental health experts say. Vietnam syndrome defenses are appearing in the nation's courts, as defendants claim they broke the law in order to relive the excitement of war.

"The Vietnam experience is kind of a laboratory exercise," says Dr. Sheldon Zigelbaum. "If you want to take somebody and really screw them up and turn them into criminals and make them potentially violent people, here's how to do it."

Zigelbaum, a Boston psychiatrist, has testified in several Vietnam syndrome cases.

The syndrome is formally known as post-traumatic stress disorder. Its symptoms, which can develop from months to years after a traumatic event, include nightmares, flashbacks, rage, anxiety, depression, jumpiness, unpredictable aggressive behavior, guilt and distrust. Similar symptoms have been reported among rape victims and survivors of the Nazi persecution of Jews during World War II.

The New York-based Center for Policy Research found that more than a third of those who saw heavy combat in Vietnam suffer from the disorder. Vietnam veterans have higher than average rates of drug and alcohol abuse.

An unpublished Veterans Administration report warns the syndrome "will get worse in the years ahead," citing an estimate that between 500,000 and 1 million veterans will develop it by 1985.

In 1979 the government established "Operation Outreach," a $10 million-a-year program to help troubled veterans. But veterans now say the program's 91 storefront counseling centers around the nation are threatened by budget cuts proposed by the Reagan administration.

"What you have is a program that came 10 years late and is finally here giving some guys hope," says Ed Kochanowski, an ex-Marine in Boston. "If anything, we're showing the country what brotherhood means. We're really the only group of people today who are still pulling for each other instead of scrambling for our own necks."

Vietnam syndrome is considered similar to "shell shock" in World War I doughboys or "combat fatigue" among World War II veterans. But experts say the emotional wounds of Vietnam run deeper because it was an unwanted war. No homecoming parades greeted returning American soldiers. Many were treated as drug-crazed baby killers.

"They probably survived more hell than almost anyone," says Dr. Charles Figley of the Family Research Center at Purdue University. "Rather than appreciation and pats on the back, they received a worse reception than anyone could ever imagine."

Veterans also feel they were rushed home after their one-year Vietnam hitches without time to decompress. Kochanowski was arrested in a barroom brawl just days after returning from Vietnam. "I knew I was in America but everything was just ... wow," Kochanowski said. "I mean, two weeks before, I was in a firefight."

Vietnam veterans have a striking arrest rate. According to the government study, 24 percent of heavy combat veterans were arrested at least once, most for drunken driving or drug possession.

The Vietnam Syndrome cases are often similar, involving men transformed by the war into "action junkies," says Zigelbaum.

Michael Tindall, an Army helicopter pilot, claimed he smuggled hashish from Morocco to Gloucester, Mass., because of a need to relive the danger and excitement of combat. His acqul Vietnam Syndrome defense in a case involving a non-violent, premeditated crime.

"Tindalls case is one of a hundred you're going to see very soon," says John Wilson, a Cleveland psychologist who testified at the trial. "There are now many cases virtually identical to Tindall's all over the country."

In San Diego, Joseph Early, a decorated former Green Beret, is using the stress disorder defense in a multimillion-dollar drug smuggling case. The defense says Early felt compelled to take part in a ring that used airlifts to smuggle marijuana and cocaine from Mexico and Colombia.

HOUSEHUNTING BANKING TACTICS

On the transferee's first househunting expedition to his new location he should take along his savings. By depositing the funds in one or more savings institutions that serve the new area, the transferee becomes a customer and, potentially, a borrower for a mortgage loan.

When money is tight, banks tend to give preference to their own customers. Also as a customer, this allows the prospective buyer to discuss with the lender important housing facts, such as, where property values have been rising fastest, where schools are the most respected; where commuting to jobs is easiest, and even where an individual lender would buy if he were in the transferee's situation.

The lender can also give use ful advice on how to process the loan as quickly as possible as well as get recommendations for Realtors, attorneys or insurance agents who he will have to be dealing with. This advice can save a great deal of time. And the lender who is alert to a transferee's need to move quickly will generally do everything possible to expedite a loan application.

If you have any questions on this subject or any other aspect of real estate, feel free to phone or drop in at DON HARVEY Realtors 702 Andrews Hwy. Phone 683-5333. We're here to help! Come in for your free copy of "Home or Living" magazine.

Cancer drug to be tested

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M University plans to test the cancer drug interferon on a nerve cancer that strikes children under age five, A&M medical researcher Dr. George C. Y. Chiou said Wednesday.

The interferon will be tested on laboratory mice at the main campus, said Chiou, head of medical pharmacology and toxicology at A&M. The drug is produced from cattle embryos at Texas A&M's Agricultural Research and Extension Center in Amarillo.

Preliminary results from the study should be available in several months.

A clinical study on humans, using the same Texas A&M-produced interferon, has already begun at a Chicago medical research center, Chiou says.

Fliers take dives, rolls at air show fellow skydivers Kerry Gregg, Ricky Hallmark and Mark Wiler of the West Texas Sport Parachute Club at Crane.

The skydivers' routine was a break in the EAA aircraft antics.

SHARP BUCKLED DOWN in his cockpit and headed his Taylorcraft into the wind. And McCollough promptly lit into him with words of praise and bite.

"You're going to see ol' Mike really scream today," bellowed McCollough, who is an aerobatic flier himself.

"Mike Sharp, ladies and gentlemen, is going to show you the ability of this airplane to do a hammerhead."

Sharp played around in the air and completed some maneuvers. But on one pattern, he turned the "wrong" direction according to IAC rules.

"He'd score a zero in aerobatic competition," McCollough said, "but all we're doing is having fun."

Sharp spun around more.

"This aircraft will really snap," the emcee said.

IN ANOTHER FLYING number, pilot Johnny Martin winged skyward in his Cessna 140 monoplane in a ribbon-cut contest. Instead, McCollough mistakenly figured the flier was his friend Bill Wicks, and he razzed him.

"If it flies real erratic, it's probably Bill Wicks," McCollough said.

The flying game's object was for the pilot to toss out a roll of toilet paper. As it unraveled into a streamer, the pilot tried to cut the paper with his propeller, struts, wings or teeth as many times as possible.

"It must be Bill Wicks," kidded McCollough. "He didn't get it (a ribbon cut)." Later, McCollough, noted: "Three tries, and he got one."

Down the flight line, amid the warbirds, stood a proud bird and its smiling pilot, George Steding.

"This was probably the hardest trainer to fly," Steding said of his silvery Vultee BT-13 Valiant, which earned the nicknamed "Vibrator."

"It will vibrate," he said, "when you get it doing spins. It really shakes and rattles."

BUT IT'S A sturdy, reliable workhorse.

"When you get close to stall speed, the vibration is really great," he said.

Next to Steding's craft, which bears a U.S. Navy ensignia, was Jim Tilson's comparable BT-13 but with U.S. Army Air Forces markings.

Flanking the BT-13s were other warbirds: the PT-19, SNJ, the De Havilland Chipmunk, the T-34 Mentor, and the "King of the Skies," the P-51D Mustang.

Sitting, as if by birth, in the Mustang's cockpit was CAF Col. Robb Satterfield, who flew P-51s and other fighters in World War II and afterward.

"Are you checked out in that thing?" yelled another Mustang jockey, Col. Bill Stepp.

"No," Satterfield jested in turn. "Going to school Monday."

SCHOOL WAS over quickly. As soon as the field was cleared, Satterfield fired up the 12-cylinder engine and the propeller assumed the power of the gods. He taxied the Mustang past the spectators, lined up on the runway, revved up the power, and was soon airborne.

Satterfield put the Mustang through some aerobatics, including the eight-point roll.

"This airplane is a real man's aircraft," ventured McCollough of the Mustang. "It's not competition aircraft (such as the EAA birds), but it's a joy in the world to fly."

This "man's aircraft" is owned by a lady, CAF Col. Patsy Edwards, who is privileged to let Satterfield fly the warbird.

After the Mustang returned to earth, experimental aircraft took to the sky to perform aerobatics.

West Texas rancher Buzz Hurt flewhis Taylorcraft and, like the other EAA pilots, put the airplane through its natural aerobatic paces.

Among others who ventured into the air in their flying machines was James Jones. He flew around for awhile, then, maneuvers completed, did a wing waggle in saying farewell.

"Jones waves off," McCollough said in telling the spectators what they had just seen. He interpreted the waggle: "'I've had a good time, and hope you have, too.'"

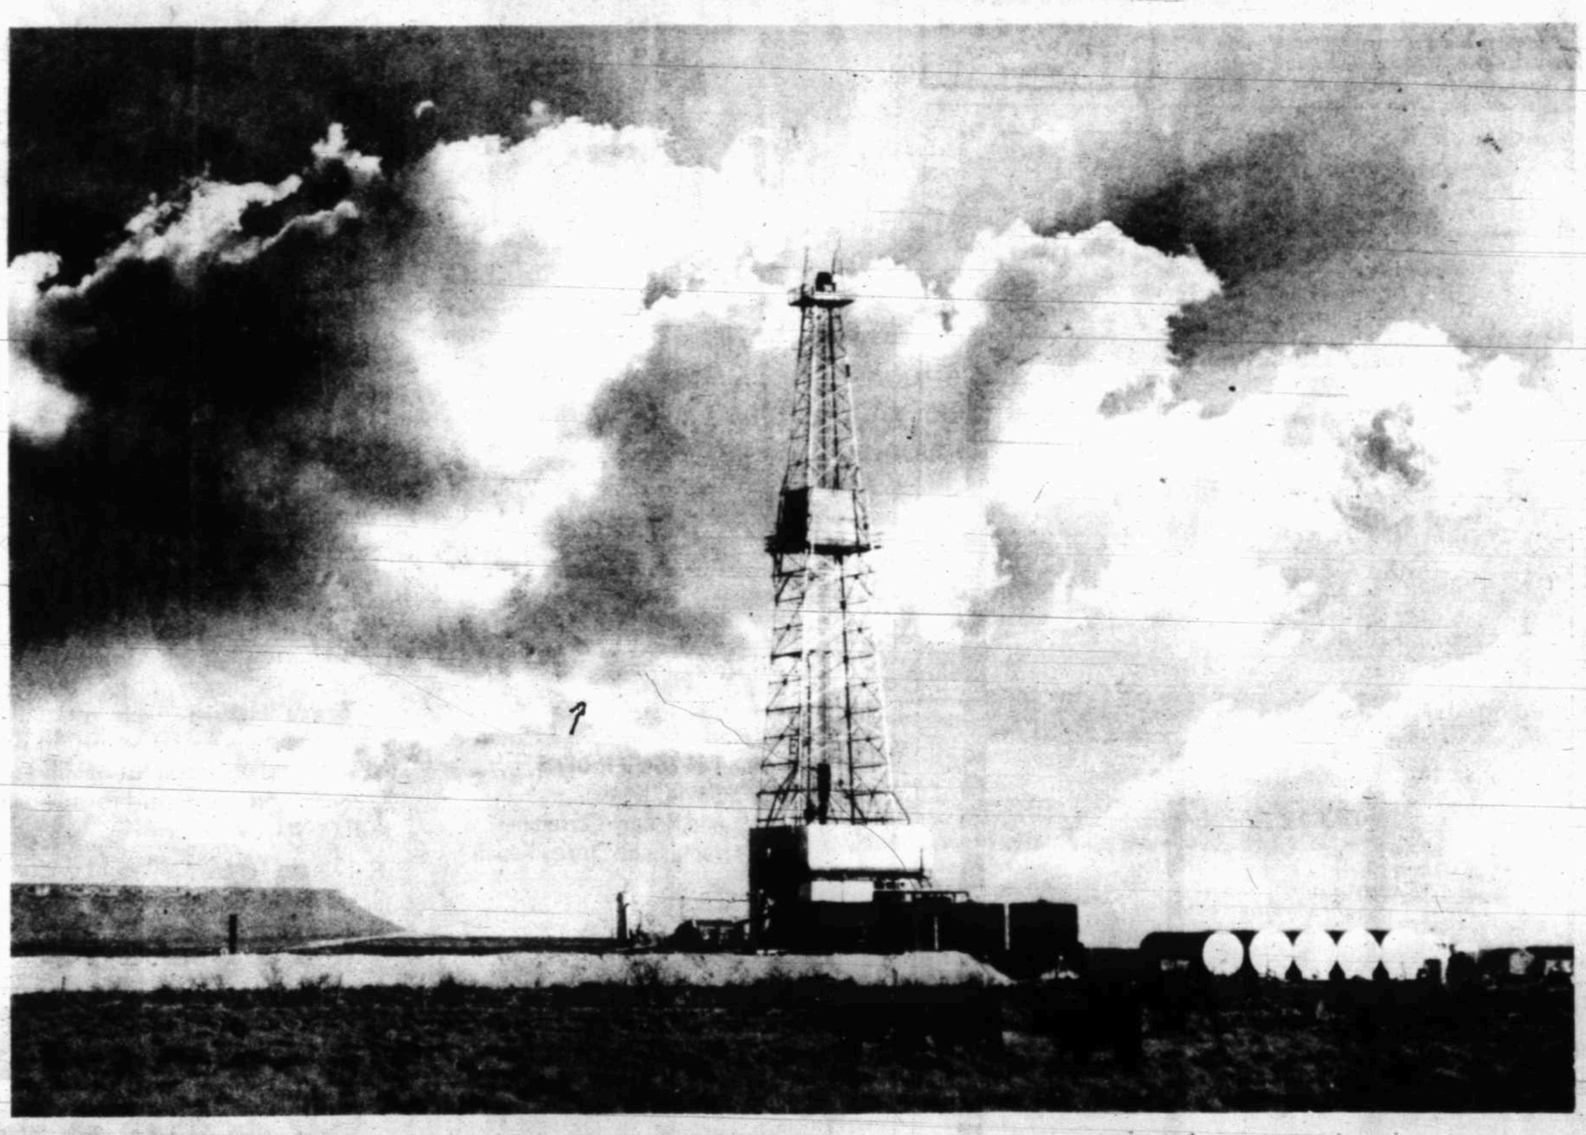
The Oil and Gas Industry... just another great part of Midland...a great city!



Finding and producing oil and gas is no simple or inexpensive task. It takes many people, equipment, and many hours of hard work. It takes geologists, geophysicists, land people, and others to examine the odds, try to second guess mother nature, lease the land and decide exactly where to drill. It takes welders and construction people who build the equipment needed to drill a hole over a mile, straight down. It takes drillers, roughnecks, truckers and others that do the backbreaking work in harsh climate to play out the slim chance of success. Yes, finding oil and gas is a gamble, but that's one of the things that makes Midland great and...at the First National Bank of Midland, we're proud to be a part!

It's cotton planting season for Midland County farmers

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Cotton planting has started in the Midland area. A few farmers were seen in the fields this past week getting an early start on the planting season. Most producers will probably start this week, if weather conditions do not become too unsettled. Soil temperatures have warmed earlier than normal, moisture conditions are excellent and everyone hopes to get off to a good start on the 1981 cropping season. Rangelands are in excellent condition with forage coming on strong.

A PECAN BUDDING and grafting workshop will be held beginning at 4:30 p.m. Thursday at Semple's Pecan Orchard, located on Rankin Highway (SH 349) about four miles south of I-20.

This will be a do-it-yourself activity. Graftwood and bud wood will be furnished, the know-how will be demostrated, then participants who desire to do so can try it themselves, under guidance of instructors. If you just want to watch, that will be all right, too.

Participants should bring pocket knives or budding and grafting knives.

Instructors will be Dr. L. Austin Stockton Jr., area extension horticulturist from Fort Stockton; Roy Feemster, vocational agriculture instructor, Lee High School; Harold Semple, pecan grower; and Charles Green, Midland County extension agent.

You can come as late as 5:30 and receive instruction. Anyone interested in pecan culture is invited. Extension educational activities are open to all, irrespective of race, color, sex, religion or national origin.

ENERGY-CONscious homeowners can take steps to reduce the energy demands of lawn care without lowering lawn standards.

While lawns offer many aesthetic and recreational benefits, these may be offset by energy requirements of lawn care. Mowing, watering, fertilizing, controlling pests and disposing of leaf clippings are all energy-consuming requirements of lawn care. During spring and summer months, watering the lawn and collecting and disposing of grass clippings account for more than 30 percent of total trash collection in some cities.

Here are suggestions on lawn maintenance practices to help homeowners reduce these energy demands. Reducing fertilizer applications to maintenance levels — two to three pounds of actual nitrogen per 1,000 square feer of lawn per year — will go a long way toward reducing energy demands. (That's 10 pounds of a fertilizer containing 20 percent nitrogen.) Applying only maintenance levels of nitrogen to lawns can reduce mowing requirements, water use, insect and disease problems and grass clippings.

Excessive fertilization is the single most important factor contributing to high energy demands for lawn care.

Other lawn care practices to reduce energy demands include returning or composting grass clippings. Using a mulching mower can be beneficial if grass clippings are not composted. If grass is mowed often enough so that clippings are ½ inch or less in length they can be allowed to drop on the lawn and will not create excessive thatch problems, if excessive nitrogen has not been used.

Also, adopting proper watering practices to reduce water use can save energy. This includes such things as watering at night to avoid evaporation. Water for longer periods of time to promote deep root growth. Nightly 20- to 30-minute waterings are unnecessary and wasteful.

Homeowners making new lawn plantings might consider low maintenance turf grasses to reduce energy demands. Buffalo grass is a native grass adapted to West Texas that has low maintenance requirements, yet can provide a satisfactory turf. The grounds of the Petroleum Museum on I-20 are planted in buffalograss. Bermudagrass is the next choise for minimum water requirements. St. Augustine and Fescue have very high water requirements.

In some situations, ground covers such as Asiatic jasmine, English ivy or Liriope can reduce maintenance requirements effectively without sacrificing the benefits of a plant cover.

Preference for pasta may mar Mayans

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — The modern-day descendants of the fierce Mayan Indians of Mexico are opting for convenience foods such as pasta over more traditional dishes such as fried ants and may be damaging their health in the process, an anthropoligist says.

The ease of preparing pasta and rice is leading to their increased use by rural members of the Huaxtec tribe, relatives of a group of Mayans who left southern Mexico more than 3,000 years ago.

Laetrile said worthless cure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Laetrile, the purported cancer treatment that doctors say has led thousands away from proven therapy, failed its first controlled human test and should be considered worthless, scientists say.

"Laetrile has been tested. It is not effective," Dr. Charles Moertel of the Mayo Clinic said Thursday at a meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology.

The National Cancer Institute, which sponsored the trials, said it hoped they would settle the controversy surrounding Laetrile, a substance found naturally in the pits of apricots and peaches and in bitter almonds, and its usefulness in treating cancer.

Moertel said the results are based upon data from a core group of 156 of the 178 patients enrolled in the study. Of these patients, 104 died and in only one case was there a partial response to the treatment. And that case was questionable, he added.

Dr. Vincent T. DeVita, head of the cancer institute, said the results proved Laetrile's failure as a cancer treatment.

"THE HOLLOW promise of this drug has led thousands of Americans away from potentially helpful therapy of scientific validity," DeVita said. "Now the facts speak for themselves."

Laetrile advocates, however, said the test proved nothing. They have charged that the substance tested was not pure Laetrile and that the study was a setup from the beginning to discredit the treatment.

"The whole thing, as far as we are concerned, is a putup deal to discredit Laetrile," said Robert Bradford, founder of the Committee for Freedom of Choice, a group based in San Francisco.

"It was a phony test and I'm not surprised with the results," said Bradford, president of American Biologics, a manufacturer and importer of Laetrile products.

These charges are hotly denied by the cancer institute and the scientists involved, who say Laetrile advocates started questioning the study early in case the results proved negative.

The first results of the government-sponsored trial, which primarily looked at Laetrile's ability to reduce the size of varying kinds of tumors, led scientists to question whether the test should be continued.

Researchers also had planned to look at Laetrile's effects on pain and other symptoms.

IN LIGHT of the poor test showing, the cancer institute said it was reconsidering whether to continue its support of the trials. Moertel said a decision was expected within a month.

"Speaking personally, I don't think we have any justification for proceeding," he said.

The test showed that of the 140 patients who had cancer symptoms before receiving Laetrile, 19 percent claimed some improvement. But Moertel said the relief was transitory and only 5 percent said they were getting relief 10 weeks into the trial.

"No substantial benefit from Laetrile has been observed in terms of cure, improvement or slowing the advance of the cancer, improvement of symptoms related to cancer or extension of lifespan," he noted.

The American Cancer Society said the test confirms its belief that Laetrile has no proven value as a cancer treatment.

"Too many lives have been sacrificed to blind faith in the many Laetrile promises that can't be kept," said Arthur Holleb, the society's chief medical officer.

Four medical centers took part in the $500,000 test program, which began in July. The Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., is the lead institution. The others are Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York City, UCLA's Jonsson Cancer Center in Los Angeles and the University of Arizona Health Sciences Center in Tucson.

DEVITA SAID doing the trial at all was unusual. Human tests normally come only after promising animal study. But animal tests generally show Laetrile is ineffective against cancer, he said.

But Laetrile has been used by hundreds of thousands of cancer patients, with many testifying to its benefits. DeVita said many sensible people are confused by the differences between these claims and scientific evidence.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration is trying to bwr the use of Laetrile, saying its safety and effectiveness is unproven. At the same time, 23 states have approved use of the substance within their borders.

This extraordinary situation, DeVita said, finally led the government to consent to a scientific trial.

The tests, designed eventually to involve about 300 patients with varying forms of cancer, are looking at how well Laetrile shrinks tumors and relieves the pain, loss of appetite and other symptoms.

Those enrolled in the tests are advanced cancer patients beyond hope of a cure through other therapy. Either all therapy has failed or they have a type of cancer for which there is no effective treatment.

The patients get 21 intravenous Laetrile injections and then take Laetrile pills daily for maintenance. They also follow a special "health food" diet, take multivitamins and get enzyme tablets recommended by advocates of the therapy.

Navy proposal calls for 143 new ships

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Navy's five-year ship construction plan — not yet approved by the Pentagon or presented to an impatient Congress — calls for 143 new ships, including two more giant nuclear aircraft carriers.

This was disclosed yesterday by Vice Adm. Staser Holcomb, director of Navy program planning for the chief of naval operations.

The new plan recommends an increase of 63 ships over the final five-year proposal submitted by President Carter last January and averages slightly more than 28 per year. Carter did not request any additional carriers, ships which now carry a price tag of $3.7 billion each.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has backed the idea of a fleet of at least 600 active ships and has even talked of numbers up to 800 by the end of the century. But he has not yet approved a five-year plan and some reports say he may wait until he submits the Pentagon's fiscal 1983 budget next January.

Holcomb spoke of the Navy's plan during a speech before the Association of Naval Aviation at nearby Fort Myer, Va. This reporter was the only news media representative present.

The admiral's new construction list included the following ships, in addition to the two carriers:

Seventeen Aegis fleet missile defense cruisers, 14 Los Angeles Class (SSN-688) nuclear attack submarines, six DD-963 Spruance Class destroyers, nine FFG-7 guided-missile frigates, nine amphibious ships, 23 support-logsitics ships and 63 "others," including mine warfare and maritime prepositioning ships.

Holcomb said the Navy could reach a level of 600 deployable ships by 1988 "if we reactivate four battleships and two carriers," otherwise it would take until 1991.

The Navy wants to bring back four World War II battleships and arm them with Harpoon and Tomahawk cruise missiles. It also wants to recommission two aging 40,000-ton carriers, Oriskany and Bon Homme Richard, and put light attack aircraft aboard them. Both plans are running into opposition in Congress, however, and the outcome in each case is still in doubt.

Military radars of today complex computer systems

By BOB WILLIAMS
The Los Angeles Times

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. — This coastal city has become the home of one of the world's largest facilities for the design and production of high-technology military radar systems, according to officials at the Culver City, Calif.-based Hughes Aircraft Co.

Thousands of Hughes engineers and factory technicians, working in a sprawling complex of 20 buildings turn out most of the airborne radars used in the tactical defense systems of the United States and other Western nations.

The complex includes a former American Motors Nash assembly plant, which Hughes took over in 1957, and a new high-rise office and engineering building completed in 1979 as part of the company's program to consolidate operations of its Radar Systems Group.

Before 1979, many of the group's engineering and administrative personnel had been scattered among facilities throughout the Los Angeles area.

Later this year, the company will consolidate the operations of its Electro-Optical and Data Systems Group in another complex of new buildings nearing completion here in this Southern California city.

Hughes officials said the radar group is producing radar and weapons control systems for three of the four front-line U.S. fighters — Grumman's F-14 Tomcat and McDonnell Douglas' F-15 and FA-18 Hornet.

Hughes also is a major supplier of guided missiles and radar for ground and ship-based systems and in spacecraft.

The radar group has more than 8,500 employees and accounts for about $450 million of Hughes Aircraft's $2.4 billion annual income, according to Robert W. Fisher, the group's director of marketing.

Fisher, a former naval aviator who joined Hughes in 1959, also is assistant manager of the radar group's advanced programs division. It has about 600 people working on far-out projects or roaming the world to talk with military customers about their future requirements for radar.

Much of what goes on in the Hughes plant is invisible — and not just because the company works on top-secret projects.

"Microelectronics is a steadily shrinking world in which the basic components have become too small to see with the unaided eye, let alone handle with human hands," Fisher said. "It's a far cry from the old days when we used vacuum tubes that you plugged into a circuit like a lightbulb."

Miniaturization and the need for greater reliability in microelectronic circuits have spurred efforts to automate the radar factory, Fisher said. He said machines already perform over 80 percent of the fabrication and assembly work on electronic components in the F-18's radar.

One computer-driven machine automatically selects components from a bank of up to 50 parts, tests them and then solders them into a circuit, he said, and total automation of many operations at the plant may be only a few years away.

"We envision a time when engineers will work out designs on a computer and record them on tape," he said. "The tape will be shipped over to the factory and used to drive the machines that actually make and assemble the components."

But increasing automation, he said, will not put people out of work.

"We will always need people to monitor and operate the machines and dream up new products," Fisher said. "Hands-off manufacturing merely frees people of many of the tedious tasks required to produce electronic assemblies and gives them an opportunity to learn new skills that can help make their work more meaningful and satisfying."

Radar — an acronym for radio detecting and ranging — has been around since the 1920s, when it was first used to demonstrate the existence and extent of the earth's ionosphere. By the mid-1930s, several countries, including the United States, Britain and Germany, began developing it for military applications.

The detection system became a major factor in the great air battles of World War II, particularly in the defense of Britain against German air raids.

Early radar sensed the position of a distant object by bouncing high frequency radio waves (similar to those used in microwave ovens) off the target and electronically measuring the time that elapsed before the reflected beam returned to the transmitting antenna. Targets were displayed as "blips" on a cathode-ray tube.

More recently, radar has been mated with computers to produce highly sophisticated detection and guidance systems.

Hughes Aircraft's experience with radar, Fisher recalled, goes back to about 1950, when the company (which, despite its name, doesn't make airplanes) developed the Falcon, the first radar-guided, air-to-air missile. Other pioneering work by Hughes, he said, includes three-dimensional radar, use of the doppler effect in radar mapping, advanced "synthetic" antenna systems and the development of "multimode" radar computers that can be programmed for different missions.

Vetoes block S. African sanctions

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — A volley of vetoes by the United States, Britain and France blocked black African hopes of imposing sanctions against South Africa in a bid to break that nation's grip over South-West Africa.

Together the three Western powers cast a dozen vetoes in a 10-minute span Thursday night to kill four Third World resolutions calling on the U.N. Security Council to impose a variety of embargoes on trade with white-ruled South Africa.

The vetoes capped more than a week of council debate on South Africa's continued control over the mineral-rich territory, also known as Namibia.

Black Africa's demands for sanctions stemmed from South Africa's refusal, at a U.N. conference in Geneva Jan. 7-14, to agree on a date to begin implementing a 2½-year-old Western-sponsored plan for South-West African independence through U.N.-supervised elections.

The three Western powers that vetoed the sanctions resolutions had drafted the independence plan, along with Canada and West Germany, when all five were members of the council in 1977.

South Africa initially agreed to it, but later reneged claiming the formula was weighted against South African interests.

South Africa captured the territory from Germany in World War I and ran it under a League of Nations mandate that was revoked in 1966 bythe U.N. General Assembly. The South-West Africa People's Organization, or SWAPO, has been fighting a guerrilla war of independence for more than a decade.

Commenting on the vetoes, Peter Mueshihange, SWAPO's secretary for foreign affairs, accused the Western powers of being "in cahoots with South Africa" and told them, "You have, by your actions, omissions and commissions, turned us into your adversaries." He said SWAPO would "intensify the armed struggle.

"Again the arrogance of power by a minority (has) undermined the actions of the majority," he said.

U.S. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick and ambassadors Sir Anthony Parsons of Britain and Jacques Leprette of France told the council their countries would continue efforts to implement the Western independence plan.

Haig's influence declining

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The decline in influence of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. is reflected in President Reagan's decisions to lift the Soviet grain embargo and sell five sophisticated radar planes to Saudi Arabia.

Haig, the self-described vicar and general manager of foreign policy, argued both decisions were ill-timed, and in the aftermath both have drawn bipartisan criticism in Congress.

At the same time, however, they have given Haig a chance to establish himself as a team player and return to good graces in the White House.

While his private opposition to the two decisions was forthright, his public differences were mild, and he quickly supported the decisions once they were made. He strongly defended Tuesday them before a hostile congressional committee.

An AP Analysis

Criticism of Haig, which was rampant at the White House prior to his trip to the Middle East in early April, has been muted since his return, indicating Reagan's advisers may be having second thoughts about the wisdom of public quarrels in an administration that promised a consistent foreign policy.

Nevertheless, the defeats on two key foreign policy issues showed that Haig's influence has been diminished considerably since he took office. He won the early battles, but not these.

Haig's argument against lifting the grain embargo was that it could undercut U.S. efforts to rally non-communist nations around the world to confront Soviet aggression.

The embargo was imposed because of Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Critics have said that since the Soviets have not withdrawn, lifting the embargo appears to reward them for not acting, while inviting questions about the United States' own resolve to stop Soviet advances.

There were domestic considerations in lifting the embargo, especially pressures from farm states for Reagan to deliver on his campaign promise. Although White House aides have denied there was any political motivation, Senate conservative leader Jesse Helms, R-N.C., also had said Reagan's farm bill was dead if the embargo were retained.

Some U.S. allies, however, adopted painful sanctions of their own against the Soviets at U.S. urging, and the Japanese already have complained that they weren't properly consulted about lifting the embargo.

State Department information showed that the embargo contributed to a sharp drop in Soviet meat production last year and that the Soviets had to pay premium prices for the grain they did buy.

Haig's argument against the radar planes — Airborne Warning and Control Systems, or AWACS — was that the sale could not now be justified to Israel. He said the decision should be delayed, at least until after Congress had a chance to consider another controversial decision to improve the attack capability of a fleet of Saudi F-15 aircraft.

Team will try to raise ship

LONDON (AP) — A British salvage team will try to raise the wreck of the World War II cruiser Edinburgh in a bid to recover 5½ tons of gold worth nearly $100 million at today's prices.

The Edinburgh, torpedoed by Nazi U-boats in the Barents Sea, was scuttled by her crew on May 2, 1945 to keep the gold out of German hands. The bullion, being ferried to the United States, was Soviet payment for U.S. military supplies.

20 years ago, it was spectacular

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — By current standards, it wasn't much of a show — just a 15-minute lob shot across the Atlantic Missile Range, 116 miles high and 302 miles long.

Twenty years ago it was breath-taking, history-making, spectacular.

On May 5, 1961, Alan B. Shepard Jr. became the first American launched into space.

That brief suborbital mission helped open the gateway to out there. Many remarkable things have happened since: Moon landings, space walks, orbiting stations, and, now, the space shuttle.

Shepard watched last month when the first shuttle, Columbia, and its two pilots roared into orbit on a flawless maiden flight.

"It was fantastic," he said. "We've come a long way in 20 years. The shuttle is going to revolutionize the way we operate in space."

Twenty of Shepard's Mercury capsules could fit inside Columbia's cargo bay.

"Talk about comparing apples and oranges," says Shepard, now a millionaire Houston businessman. "There are tremendous advances, in equipment, technology and techniques.

"In Mercury we followed a ballistic course to an ocean landing and never used the capsule again," he said. "The shuttle pilots can fly this ship to a landing on a runway and take it up again a few weeks later."

The former astronaut predicted the shuttle will become the DC-3 of he space age, referring to the aircraft that initiated the age of air passenger travel nearly half a century ago.

Shepard, in an interview, reflected on his pathfinding flight, his battle back from medical oblivion to earn a trip to the moon and his hopes for the shuttle.

He might have been the first human in space if a chimpanzee named Ham had not overshot his Atlantic Ocean target by a few miles because of a faulty electrical relay. Ham's journey, in January 1961, was a dress rehearsal for Shepard's flight, which had been set for March.

Because of the relay problem, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration decided to launch another Mercury capsule, monkey-manned, and put Shepard off until May. Russia's Yuri Gagarin beat him into space on April 12.

"Although our launch schedule was based on engineering decisions, beating the Russians was always in the back of everybody's mind," Shepard said. "It was very disappointing when they got there first."

When Shepard's time finally came, the launch was put off three days because of bad weather. On May 5, he had to sweat out other delays. First, there was the weather again, then faults in an electrical system, a ground computer and the rocket's fuel pressure.

At one point during a hold in the countdown, Shepard, slightly irritated, barked into his microphone: "I'm cooler than you are. Why don't you fix your little problem and light this candle?"

Finally, at 9:34 a.m., the "candle" burst to flame and Shepard was on his way. He spent most of the up-and-down flight reporting instrument readings to Mission Control at Cape Canaveral. He found time to exclaim little more than, "Boy, what a ride!" and "What a beautiful view!"

Twenty days later President John F. Kennedy committed this nation to landing a man on the moon and returning him safely to Earth before the decade was out.

"President Kennedy and Vice President Johnson had great political instincts," Shepard said. "They knew the country needed a lift, and they recognized after my little short suborbital flight that the moon was the way to go.

"I'll never forget riding down Pennsylvania Avenue with Johnson on the way to Capitol Hill after my flight," he said. "Johnson kept saying, 'I can't believe it. Look at all those people. Look at this response.'"

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Don't underestimate need for library's reference works

By JOHN W. DEATS
Midland County Librarian

There are over 9,500 volumes in Midland County Library's reference collection, a collection analogous to the vast amount of information stored in the human memory. Each of us often has difficulty recalling a fact or figure which was once at our command. Yet, given some thought, the remembrance may bubble up to the surface of consciousness. It requires even more special effort and skill to access most stored information, and for this reason, people should not hesitate to ask a reference librarian for assistance in the literary forest of a library.

Last year, just under 30,000 queries were answered at the reference desks around the library, some taken over the telephone, but most taken in person. They ranged from the practical to the "just curious" type and, whenever possible, we like to trace the path to the answer so that the patron goes away doubly informed. Students are especially encouraged to learn the use of bibliographic tools in order to further their own research capabilities.

Just a few of the standard reference books will be described, but many of equal interest await the casual browser. In education, the 1981 SUMMER EMPLOYMENT DIRECTORY lists over 50,0900 jobs available across the country, in such places as parks, hotels, resorts, and restaurants. The name and address of the person to contact is accompanied by details of the job, such as duties, qualifications, length of employment, and pay. For the really adventurous, a similar locator is the 1981 OVERSEAS SUMMER JOBS, which lists some 50,000 jobs opening around the world.

For those who cannot leave home, there is the GUIDE TO INDEPENDENT STUDY THROUGH CORRESPONDENCE INSTRUCTION, 1980-1982. Over 12,000 courses are listed under the college or university which offers them, and Texas Tech and the University of Texas at Austin are among the schools covered. A handy index to subject-matter areas is included.

HENLEY'S FORMULAS FOR HOME AND WORKSHOP has been a boon to kitchen scientists since 1907, with over 10,000 selected formulas of wide application, food and chemical recipes, trade secrets, and other information of use.

Assuming that some of our patrons are allergic to the dust which always seems to gather on books, they might seek relief from one of the many specialists of allergy and immunology certified by the appropriate American Specialty Board. The three volume DIRECTORY OF MEDICAL SPECIALISTS gives biographical information on specialists in 22 major categories, from allergy to urology.

Several books aid the student of government, including CLEMENTS' ENCYCLOPEDIA OF WORLD GOVERNMENTS. Updated biannually, it provides information on governments of the independent nations of the world, giving the structure and leaders of each government. The WASHINGTON INFORMATION DIRECTORY is published by Congressional Quarterly, an authoritative source. When sources for information is needed, this book is a guide to the wealth of data available from Washington, giving names, addresses, telephone numbers and responsibilities of various agencies and organizations. The TEXAS STATE DIRECTORY, 1981, gives much information about the many new and not-so-new faces in public office in Austin.

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF AMERICAN RELIGIONS is a two volume set that surveys some 1200 religious bodies and churches, organizing them into seventeen families. For instance, there are Independent Fundamentalist, Western Liturgical, Lutheran, Baptist, and Pentecostal, to name a few. The history of each family and doctrinal differences are described in depth by the noted director of the Institute for the Study of American Religion, Dr. J. Gordon Melton.

A recently updated classic is the NEW GROVE DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS, a twenty volume work. Over ten years in preparation, this is an extremely comprehensive collection of information about music and musicians, broadened in scope to include the most recent notable artists. Another standard reference work, yet with a different purpose, is the ESSAY AND GENERAL LITERATURE INDEX, published by H.W. Wilson. Found in virtually all college libraries, it continually indexes material appearing in books and journals on subjects of literature.

There are many reference books about the natural world. One example is the beautifully illustrated AUDUBON SOCIETY ENCYCLOPEDIA OF NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS, describing 847 species found in the United States and Canada. Also included are biographical sketches of American ornithologists.

Purchase price revealed

NEW YORK (AP) — The Hearst Corp. paid $25.25 million to buy the book-publishing firm of William Morrow & Co., the companies have announced.

Last February, the two companies announced an agreement whereby Hearst would acquire the book company's outstanding stock. The purchase price was revealed late last week.

Founded in 1926, Morrow is engaged principally in the publication of fiction and non-fiction hardcover books for adults and children. It also publishes its own paperbacks.

Hearst's president and chief executive officer, Frank A. Bennack Jr., said his firm will continue to operate its other separate book divisions — Avon, Arbor House and Hearst Books.

"We are fortunate to acquire such a quality trade-book publishing house with its fine editorial staff and management team headed by its president, Lawrence Hughes," Bennack said.

Morrow, which has about 200 employees, is based in New York City and West Caldwell, N.J.

Take care or 'dream' pool may be more of nightmare

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau
of the Permian Basin, Inc.

With summer approaching, many Permian Basin residents will decide to fulfill a lifelong dream — to build a swimming pool in their backyard.

A home swimming pool can bring years of enjoyment and represent a permanent improvement to your property. A swimming pool also can foster frustration and unhappiness if not constructed properly. Therefore, follow the motto of the Better Business Bureau and "Investigate Before You Invest" when deciding what kind and who will construct your pool.

There are two basic types of swimming pools: above-ground and in-ground. In general, above-ground pools are less expensive to install because of the materials and construction methods involved. Usually a special, heavy-duty vinyl lining is laid over a supporting structure built of steel, alumunium, wood or other material. Maintenance is relatively simple and small cuts or tears in the vinyl can be repaired with inexpensive patching materials.

In-ground pools can be built using vinyl liners reinforced below ground by a supporting framework. Other in-ground pools are constructed either of fiberglass or a concrete called gunite that is sprayed over a basket framework of steel reinforcing rods and wire mesh. A white plaster compound is then applied over the gunite for a smooth surface.

Both Carol Meek of the Swim Shop and Rick McClendon of McClendon Pools recommend prospective pool owners turn to neighbors and friends who have swimming pools for information and recommenations about pool companies and builders. You should, of course, talk with more than one builder and inspect and compare swimming pools the builders have installed.

Ms. Meek says a prospective customer needs to watch for indications of poor workmanship when inspecting a pool. If the pool is made of gunite, the tile located above the water line should be smooth and detailed. An uneven tile job may be an indication of a poorly constructed pool.

Also, thoroughly inspect the filtering system and plumbing. Many people discover too late that parts are not available for their equipment or the filter is too small. Improper circulation is another frequent problem. According to Ms. Meek, a builder may connect the main drain and skimmer lines together to form one line back to the filter which will cause major circulation problems.

Be sure to secure a written estimate from each builder that includes a design of the pool, the materials and equipment that will be used, and an explanation of how the pool will be constructed. Also, be sure to ask the builder about any liability and compensation insurance he carries to protect you in the event of an accident during construction.

The contract you sign with your builder can be the most important step in building a swimming pool. It should provide specific information about the pool you are going to have built.

The National Swimming Pool Institute points out that every item of expense for materials and labor, including optional equipment, should be covered in the contract. You should have, in writing, the date the work will start and when work is to be completed as well as the total cost and the financing arrangements. Make certain that all promises and representations made to you orally are included, in writing, in your contract.

By working with a reliable contractor, you will know the terms and conditions of all warranties, who is responsible in the event repairs or replacements are needed, who will do the work, and who will pay for it.

Once you have decided to build a swimming pool there is a natural excitement and eagerness to have it installed as soon as possible. This is often the point at which unwary buyers can get into hot water because dishonest salespersons and builders will be quick to take advantage of the situation.

Attractive advertisements are appearing in local newspapers offering deals that seem too good to turn down. Here are some warning signs that mean buyer beware:

—Salespersons who tell you an advertised pool they offer "on sale" is not worth having and then try to switch you to a more expensive model.

—Salespersons who use the ploy of offering a reduced price on the basis your pool will be used as a model for advertising purposes.

—Salespersons who ask for full payment in advance.

—Salespersons who ask you to sign a contract that does not cover all representations he or she made orally or who pressure you into signing a contract. No reputable builder will rush you into signing any agreement or conract at any time.

Watch takes 'licking' but keeps on ticking

CHICAGO (AP) — A new watch kept on ticking inside a man's stomach for more than five months after he swallowed it during a mugging attack, a doctor says.

Dr. Elliot B. Duboys, a surgical resident assigned to Mercy Hospital in Rockville Center, Long Island, N.Y., described the incident in a letter in the May 1 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The 49-year-old man was mugged in New York City, and witnesses said he took off his newly purchased watch, popped it in his mouth for safekeeping and swallowed it, Duboys wrote.

The man later was admitted to a hospital for treatment of a psychiatric disorder and when examining a routine set of his abdominal X-rays, technicians spotted the watch.

The man apparently had felt no ill effects from eating his watch, and thoughout his five-month stay at the hospital, never complained of any stomach discomfort. In fact, he later refused permission for an operation to remove the watch.

Doctors performed the operation after he was later ruled legally incompetent and next of kin finally approved surgery.

Surgeons removed a self-winding Timex wristwatch with synthetic band and buckle. The date and time were wrong but the watch kept on ticking. Duboys said he did not know if the time and date had been properly set before the watch was swallowed.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

leaf, is nerve plant, available also in a half-size or miniature form that is better suited to terrariums and small-space fluorescent-light gardens.

Q. What sould I do about little branches covered with yellowish seed-like things that grow from my Neanthe Bella palm?

A. I like the way they look on mine and leave each until most of the seeds fall, then remove with a snip of my pruning shears. You can try sprouting the seeds by planting to the dephh of their own thickness in moist soil.

Q. Why do the stems of my angel-wing begonia grow spindly? Also the leaves come out pale and soon drop off.

A. I'm sure your begonia needs more light, some direct sun in a window facing east. If it is growing in hard or sticky, dense clay soil, repot, replacing most of the old with a mixture of equal parts garden loam, sphagnum peat moss and vermiculite.

With more light and improved soil an angel-wing or cane begonia should make rapid growth in the spring and summer, sending up many new shoots from the soil. Allow these to remain; prune back the old stems that are too tall, cutting back to the soil so as to make room for the new canes on which the next season's flowers will appear.

Q. Why do the frond tips of my Boston fern turn brown?

A. Be sure never to let the soil dry out too much. I had the same experience with a related fern that grows in one of my light gardens. It grew more than I realized, filling its pot with roots. Then I transplanted to a size larger pot adding a moistened mix of peat moss and vermiculite to fill. Since that time I have been certain to water the fern thoroughly each time, leaving a little excess in the saucer for it to soak up. In the process of repotting I also trimmed off every bit of brown growth as well as the oldest fronds that were nearly leafless. Now I have an all-green fern that looks beautiful on the lighted shelf where it grows and on occasion serves as a centerpiece on the dining table.

Q. I recently purchased a flowering Streptocarpus Rexii. Why did the flowers all drop off a few days later?

A. Change of environment, jet lag you might say. This gesneriad needs approximately the same care as the African violet; it does respond to cooler temperatures at night during the winter heating season and to more light. Mine grow in fluorescent-light gardens right along with African violets and both bloom nonstop. I also have "streps" growing in the south-facing windows of my bedroom, which are approximately half-sunny, owing to the apartment building across the street that blocks directs sun at midday.

Where streptocarpus are concerned, the same as rhizomatous begonias such as the beefsteak and Iron Cross, it is the nature of the plant to constantly reach out into new soil. Therefore, when a pot fills with leaves, division and potting on to roomier quarters are in order.

THE REAL STORY BEHIND THE THREE'S COMPANY THREE-STAR FEUD

Q. With all the attention on Washington scandals and extravagances, are the officials in the new administration being told to cut back on their own spending? H. Rainey, San Antonio, Tex.

A. From all the furs, limousines and other luxury accoutrements in evidence, it seems unlikely. Even Secretary of State Alexander Haig has gotten into lavish ways, such as partygiving for frivolous reasons. A recent weekend fete under his auspices was to celebrate the opening of two deluxe ladies rooms in the State Department: the facilities include marble floors, antique furniture, chandeliers and Chinese rugs.

Q. Is Jimmy Carter going to fade back into his life in Plains, Ga., now that his Presidency is finished? S. Carey, Sacramento, Calif.

A. Not if he can help it. The ex-President just signed a multimillion dollar deal to write his memoirs and then went to Princeton University to get scholars' advice on how to write the book. He also plunked down $900,000 on a Southern-style mansion in Atlanta, right across from his former home, the Governor's mansion.

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write: Josie, SUNDAY WOMAN magazine, 235 E. 45th Street, New York, N.Y. 10017. Sorry, we can't answer any letters individually.

BETWEEN THE LINES

THE STORY BEHIND THE STORY...

By Josie

Q. Do stars on series really get to be close friends, or is that all network hype? F. Daly, Chicago, Ill.

A. Sometimes they really do form lasting friendships. Pamela Sue Martin and John James of ABC's "Dynasty" for instance, are the current doubles terror on Beverly Hills tennis courts; and Linda Evans of that series still, to this day, sends Mother's Day cards to Barbara Stanwyck, who played her mother on "The Big Valley" over a decade ago.

Q. I read that Liz Taylor was going to do "The Little Foxes" on Broadway. How do the other actors in the show like her? J. Randall, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

A. Many of her fellow actors in the Lillian Hellman play, such as Maureen Stapleton, are Broadway veterans, so Ms. Taylor's star power doesn't overshadow them. One of her younger co-stars, however, Dennis Christopher (of the film "Breaking Away"), decided he'd better prepare for working with Liz, so he bought all of the star's films on videocassettes and studied her performances.

Q. Lee Majors must hate his ex-wife Farrah for running off with his best friend, Ryan O'Neal. Do the two still speak? J. Tomaling, Seattle, Wash.

A. Yes, they do. In fact, as a show of friendship, Majors recently filmed a parody of his ex-wife complete with "Farrah hair" wig for an ABC pilot called "Fall Guys," and the real-life Farrah appeared in a cameo role.

Q. I heard a strange story involving Chris Atkins and some unusual fan mail. Do you know the details? G. Cobb, Jacksonville, Fla.

A. Here's what we heard: Christopher Atkins, Brooke Shields' co-star in "Blue Lagoon," received a stream of letters from a strange man who claimed to be his real father. When Chris met Jill Whelan, who plays the captain's daughter on "Love Boat," they discovered that she had gotten identical letters from the same disturbed person.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

'Dead Week' anything but dead

By H.A. TUCK
Public Relations Director
Midland College

This week's calendar is really full of activities, both for students and townspeople.

Of course, the students primarily will be concentrating on their last week of classes for the spring semester. It's officially "Dead Week," but that designation doesn't carry as much weight as it did a number of years ago. Now it's simply a notice that students have very little time to complete their reading, lab and term paper assignments.

They will take their final exams during the week of May 11 and then haunt the campus until their grades are posted.

This afternoon from 1-6 p.m. you have a final opportunity to view a priceless collection of antiques in Chaparral Center. It's a new money-raising event sponsored by Act IX of the Midland Community Theatre, patterned after the most successfull antique show held in Dallas annually by Tri Delta sorority alums.

Antique dealers from across the country have assembled in Midland this weekend, so you can both see and buy. Admission price is $4. We think you'll be impressed with the collection displayed here...and Act IX might have itself a new annual event.

Tuesday at 7 p.m. the 1980-81 Midland College student athletes are being honored at the annual All-Sports Banquet. The dinner and awards ceremony is being held in the Chaparral Center for the first time, which promises to make it easier for everyone to hear and see the athletes and cheerleaders as they receive their awards for most successful seasons.

More honorees will be recognized on Thursday afternoon from 4 to 6 p.m. in Caparral Center. The campus Hospitality Committee is hosting a reception for all campus employees especially to present awards to those employees who have worked for MC for five or ten years.

The reception also will be the faculty's time to honor outgoing MC President Dr. Al G. Langford, since many of them will be off-campus for the summer and won't have another opportunity to see him before his departure August 31.

This event was created to move the faculty awards from the Commencement ceremonies, where they had been given in the past.

Two big concerts are slated in Chaparral Center back-to-back. On Saturday, Tom T. Hall and Bill Anderson, two of the biggest names in the country music field, appear in a benefit concert to provide operating funds for the Midland and Lee Youth Centers. The youth centers are privately supported and this concert should help them toward their operating budget for next year.

Hall and Anderson always put on good shows that the entire family will enjoy. They open their show at 8 p.m.

Next Sunday, May 10, "Air Supply" is presenting a concert at Chap Center at 8 p.m. "Air Supply" is one of the top new groups in the country, with recordings in the top 40, and a nice sound.

One more reminder: pre-registration for the first summer session begins on Monday, May 11, and continues through May 28. Registration for the first summer term is June 1, with classes starting the next day.

And there will be a summer interim session from May 18 through May 28, in which students may earn three hours of credit.

Bulletins listing course offerings for both the summer interim and the summer terms may be obtained now in the Office of Student Services Administration Building, between 8 a.m.-9 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Fridays. They also have been distributed to all the local bank lobbies.

The annual spring student art show is on display at McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, and it's a dandy. You may see the show through May 7 from 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Don't Drink The Water

Americans traditionally have had the best drinking water in the world — but there are certain facts and fears that you should be aware of Americans probably have had the best drinking water in the world and, until recently, few of us worried about what came out of the kitchen tap. Our water is still almost completely free from disease-causing bacteria. But alarm after alarm is now being sounded about chemical pollution. From Massachusetts to Southern California, community wells have been closed (a statewide survey in New Jersey found traces of poisonous wastes in every one of the 500 wells tested). In these and other areas, many rivers and streams supplying drinking water are also chemically contaminated.

A clear and present danger

The problem is becoming increasingly urgent because of the vastly expanded production of industrial chemicals which, once used in industry, have to be disposed of. Some 40 to 60 million tons of dangerous chemical wastes are produced each year.

Also, up to now, careless and illegal dumping of poisonous chemical wastes has been widespread — along highways, into ravines, and even in vacant lots. These wastes then leach into streams that supply community water or into the ground water replenishing wells. A particularly bad rash of illegal dumping was reported last November, just before a new law governing the disposal of toxic wastes went into effect.

Disturbing new discovery

In addition to the worry over chemical wastes, a disturbing new discovery has been made about the very process that keeps our water free from disease-causing bacteria. Chlorination, it has now been found, can cause pollution in itself: The chlorine can react with organic matter in the water to form trihalomethanes (THMs), organic compounds such as chloroform, which — if taken in excess or over a long period of time — can be harmful.

THMs have been shown to cause cancer in laboratory animals, and though there can of course be no such direct evidence for human beings, studies based on an analysis of thousands of human deaths indicate that, over a lifetime, drinking chlorinated water may increase the risk of gastro-intestinal cancer by up to 50 to 100 percent.

Finally, a third threat to our drinking water is runoff from agricultural and other operations using pesticides.

What is being done?

Since 1974 and passage of the Safe Drinking Water Act, the Environmental Protection Agency has been charged with seeing that drinking water is kept pure, and it has taken some vigorous steps.

Insofar as THMs are concerned, it is not feasible to discontinue chlorination altogether, since it is the most effective disinfectant available — and bacterial diseases can be immediately deadly in contrast to the long-term threat from chemicals. But the EPA has been helping cities improve their water treatment. It now requires cities with a population of 75,000 or more to monitor their water for THMs, and if these exceed 100 parts per million, to reduce them to that level by November of this year. Starting in November of next year, monitoring will be extended to cities with 10,000 to 75,000; eventually cities below 10,000 will have to conform.

The poisoning of water supplies by industrial wastes is an even harder problem to solve. Although the new waste-disposal law is expected to control future dumping, the effects of improper waste disposal in the past will continue to haunt us. Congress has passed a bill calling for a $1.6 billion "superfund" to clean up present dumps and spills. At this writing, President Reagan was expected to sign it into law.

How you can help

The EPA can't clean up the country alone. Dumping wastes, much of it illegal, has been so widespread that thousands of sites are not even known. To help find hidden dumpsites, a nationwide citizens' campaign called "Hunt the Dump" has been launched by Environmental Action and the Sierra Club. If you see suspicious-looking barrels in a ravine, for example, or piles of foul-smelling waste in a field, report the site to your county health department or to the department of conservation in your state capital.

Is your own drinking water safe?

If you live in a city of 75,000 or more, you can now — or will soon be able to — get information on either the purity or the THM and possibly other chemical pollution of your drinking water from your local water company or state health department. If your water is not yet being monitored, your community may want to arrange for an analysis of the water for chemical pollutants by a private certified laboratory (usual charge: $100 for each chemical analyzed).

What can you do if you find your water is chemically polluted — or, in the absence of reliable information, you want to be on the safe side? Recent EPA tests have found that certain water filters containing activated carbon granules can remove many chemicals from drinking water. The most effective home filters (see box) have two or three filter compartments and a bypass valve that enables you to use unfiltered water for dishwashing and other purposes, and to filter the water only for drinking and cooking. Proper maintenance is essential.

A look ahead

In most cases of chemical pollution of drinking water, there is no cause for immediate panic, since the health hazards, though ominous, take a long time to develop. But neither is that any reason for delaying an all-out effort to make our water chemically as well as bacteriologically safe. Only recently has the full extent of chemical pollution been recognized, and some progress has already been made. Programs to clean up the rivers and halt the dumping of chemicals from factories have been initiated. And the EPA is working to develop treatment systems which will remove harmful chemicals from drinking water. But according to EPA director Douglas Costle, there is no doubt that fighting chemical pollution "will be the major environmental preoccupation during the rest of this century."

The EPA found these filters sold for home use to be most effective in removing THMs and probably other chemicals from drinking water.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

By ELVIN MCDONALD

Q. I'd like to grow castor beans for quick shade on my patio this summer; since this plant is poisonous, will using it this way pose any threat to my three-year-old?

A. Castor-been seeds are poisonous, also curious looking, like a beetle. As you plant them share the experience with your child, explaining that the seeds must never be eaten. I'd plant two or three seeds a half-inch deep in each bushel-size container of soil (equal parts garden loam, peat moss and clean, sharp sand). Be sure to keep the surface evenly moist until seedlings are up and growing actively; for best results provide minimum night temperatures of 60F., about the same as you would tomatoes, petunias and other warm-weather crops.

Q. I have a low-growing plant with silvery white veins in the dark green leaves. Can you tell me its name and care?

A. Fittonia is the botanical name, nerve plant the common. It's from Peru and thrives in bright reflected light, not much direct sun, warmth, high humidity and soil kept evenly moist at all times. During cold weather keep fittonia in a terrarium, or at least where there'll be no chilling drafts; in spring and summer be careful not to sunburn its beautifully veined leaves.

If you should have a fittonia that has filled the soil in which it is growing with roots, spring is a good time to repot, using a mixture of two parts sphagnum peat moss to one each of vermiculite and garden loam. Cut back any long straggly branches, using them as tip cuttings if you'd like more starts. (Plant cuttings in small pots filled with equal parts peat moss and vermiculite; moisten well, then enclose, pot and all, in a plastic bag. When you see active new growth, gradually remove the bag.) Fittonia makes a wonderful ground cover for shaded window boxes or planting beds outdoors in summer. Make light applications of 20-20-20 fertilizer in spring and summer, or use fish emulsion any time fittonia is in active growth.

If you have a fittonia with red veins on an olive-green leaf, the name is F. verschaffeltii, mosaic plant. It's variety argyroneura, with white veins in a green

Q. Do stars on series really get to be close friends, or is that all network hype? F. Daly, Chicago, Ill.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

'Dead Week' anything but dead

Three's a Crowd

This year, fans of "Three's Company" have been asking, "Where is Suzanne Somers?" Now the star reveals the real reasons behind her absence from the show — and the truth about that bitter feud with her co-stars

I truly believe that we are put on earth to be happy and successful and that our life's work is to bring joy to those around us," says television star Suzanne Somers. And that's just what she did for five years as the co-star of "Three's Company," ABC's top-rated comedy series. But the 1980 season brought some abrupt changes for the voluptuous blonde actress and she's anxious to tell her side of the story.

Suzanne Somer's contretemps with the producers of "Three's Company" and with fellow actors John Ritter and Joyce DeWitt was widely publicized. Through all the brouhaha about demands for more money, refusals to work, and the addition of a new character on the show to replace Suzanne, little was heard from the star herself. Until now, Suzanne has not wished to discuss the incidents that led to her being "excluded" from many scripts.

"I like to go in front of the public and spread joy," she says as she settles into a chair in the office of her seven-level beach house near L.A. "I figure that's what an entertainer is about. But the problem has bubbled to such a point that I have to tell my side of it now.

"Last year the producers of 'Three's Company' published the syndication revenues (profits made from selling reruns of the show)," she begins. "Those revenues had earned for those three men over $100 million. By the end of the series run, the estimate is they will make in excess of $200 million. Well, I play a dumb blonde, but I'm not a dumb blonde. I said to my husband Alan, 'We don't have any residuals or profit participation. This show will be on the air for the next 25 years in reruns and I'll receive nothing.' So, in March (1980), we went to the 'Three's Company' producers and asked to discuss profit participation. They gave us a flat and very rude 'no.' They were so rude that my husband, in a moment of pique, said, 'Well, if that's the way you want to deal... Suzanne has been a loyal employee, how about a raise to $150,000 a week? She's in part responsible for the success of this show.' They've really never communicated with us since.

"For me it was a very emotional thing," she continues. "I love the job and I love the people. I've worked very hard and loved every minute of it. The summer passed and all our letters and phone calls were ignored. Two weeks before we were to start production again, I went on 'The Tonight Show.' I was doing a difficult production number and pulled a muscle in my back.

Then, trying to favor the muscle, I broke my rib and tore something in my lower back. The next day we left for Las Vegas where I was to do a show and for two weeks I worked in a brace. It was terribly painful, and of course everyone knew, it was in the papers. When we closed in Vegas, I flew back that night at 3 a.m. and at 9 a.m. next morning reported for work on 'Three's Company.' "

Suzanne takes a deep breath, leans forward and continues her story. "I never speak of illness; I'm telling you now because I want you to understand the situation. I had ripped the musculature of the lower back while trying not to put pressure on the upper back. By the end of the week, my rib was protruding out of my back like an elbow. I showed John Ritter, who has been a very special friend, and he brought everyone over to look at this weird protrusion. I was taking Robaxin for the pain. It takes tension off the muscles and relaxes you to the point where you can move around. So, I finished the week. We were supposed to tape the first show, once on Saturday, once on Sunday; but Saturday morning I woke up and couldn't lift my head from the pillow. Alan carried me down the stairs and took me to Cedars-Sinai Hospital. X-rays showed the broken rib and the one I had jostled out of place. They said, 'Stay in bed.' That was all I could do.

"I had not missed one day's work in five years; but we called from the hospital, explained that I could not work, and they immediately said this was a renegotiating ploy. 'Are you sure it isn't a broken leg, ha ha?' I couldn't believe it! On the third day, Monday, I returned to work, apologized to everyone for the inconvenience I'd caused, and no one talked to me. We did the show, but John and Joyce would not talk to me or look at me.

"I told John, who is my friend, 'I can sense that you're angry, but you have to know that there are two sides to every story. You're hearing only their side.' He just walked away. Whatever was taking place, there was poison in the atmosphere and it prevails to this day. The third day that I came to work, someone told me John had taken over my dressing room and that I should go home. I was written out except for a one-minute scene a week.

"It's been a humilitating experience," Suzanne says with a sigh. "I am a grown woman who has always been able to discuss my problems. No more. I come in to pick up my script on Thursday. They hand it to me in a private room. If I didn't pick it up, I wouldn't be paid. They say I have the best job in Hollywood, I only have to work one minute for all that money. But I don't enjoy not working. It's more than money. The profit-participation we were asking wasn't even for now. It was for my retirement fund when the show, years from now, will still be running all over the world. For asking, I am being punished. 'If that's what you chose to do, let me go, please, at the end of the year,' I've said. But they say, 'We'll never let you go and we'll do this all next year as well, one minute a week.' I feel victimized. CBS has offered me a deal for 'The Suzanne Somers Show' as soon as I am free. But my current producers are not letting me out of my option for next year. They want to keep me off the air. My preference would be to get over this silly situation with John and Joyce and work together.

That her two co-stars turned their backs on her has hurt Suzanne deeply. "Not to support one's fellow worker!" she exclaims. "What is happening to me right now is more serious than the actors' strike. I supported that strike. I

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—You have often written about what to do after partner makes a takeout double. But I am still perplexed about what action I should take after partner opens the bidding and my right-hand opponent makes a takeout double. Can you stop me from being—Muddled in Minneapolis, Minn.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—I cannot understand why you are confused—this is one of the easiest positions to be in. There are really only three simple rules to remember: 1) All good hands, whether or not they contain support for partner's suit, start off with a redouble. 2) With a really bad hand, pass. 3) With support in partner's suit, jump raise if your hand is weak defensively and you have distributional values, but make a normal raise if you have the strength for a simple response.

Bearing this in mind, see what action you would take on the following examples. Assume that partner opens the bidding with one heart and the next hand doubles. You hold:

a)	b)
♠ A Q 10 x	♠ x x
♡ x	♡ A Q x x
◇ K J x x	◇ K x x
♣ A 10 x x	♣ Q x x x

Hand a) is strong, so you start off with a redouble. That requests partner to give you the courtesy of the road. No matter where the opponents run, you intend doubling for penalties. And if they allow you to play one heart redoubled, your outside strength should make the contract a near certainty even if partner has a weak trump suit.

Since hand b) is also strong, you again start off with a redouble. This time, however, you intend raising hearts over any action by the opponents.

Hand c) is of intermediate strength. With this type of hand, it is usually better to bid at your first opportunity, especially since hearts is unlikely to be your best spot. Make your natural bid of one spade—the same action you would have taken had there been no intervening double.

Hand d) has some defensive values and excellent support for partner's suit. Make your normal raise to two hearts. This serves two purposes. First, if partner has a really good hand, you might be able to get to game despite the takeout double. Secondly, if partner is relatively weak, it makes it that much harder for the opponents to get into the auction.

♠ K 10 x x x	♠ A x x
♡ x	♡ J x x x x
◇ K x x x	◇ Q x
♣ x x x	♣ x x x

e)	f)
♠ J x x	♠ J x x x
♡ Q J x x x	♡ x x
◇ x	◇ Q x x x
♣ x x x x	♣ x x x

Hand e) is not only weak defensively, but your length in hearts will diminish partner's defensive power. Jump to three hearts. Over a takeout double, that is a preemptive action.

Hand f) is just a bad hand, period. The only way to tell partner that you have a bad hand is to pass.

What constitutes a good responding hand? The minimum for a redouble should be about 10 points in high cards. With fewer than that, treat the hand as intermediate and choose some other action, such as a raise of partner's suit, a bid of a new suit or a response of one no trump.

Digestion Questions

Answers to common queries about stomachaches, heartburn and other problems

Few people have never had a queasy stomach. Or gas pains. Or diarrhea. Naturally, complaints as common as these give rise to a great many questions. Often these questions go unanswered — either because doctors are too busy to explain or patients too embarrassed to ask.

Now sufferers can get answers from a gastroenterologist simply by calling a hot line. Named, appropriately enough, "Gutline," the free service is operated by the American Digestive Disease Society. Here are the most frequently asked questions, and the answers:

Q. I constantly have a sour taste in my mouth and very bad breath. What causes this?
A. Most bad breath comes through the lungs or from the mouth and not the stomach, and can stem from an infection, foods like garlic, poor oral hygiene, or any number of lung problems. Depression can sometimes cause a sour taste and bad breath, as can some medications. Also ask your doctor to check for zinc deficiency, which can be still another cause of bad breath.

Q. I have a nervous stomach. My doctor didn't give me a diet — is there a special diet for this problem?
A. Severals foods may be contributing to the problem, so watch your diet carefully and note and eliminate any foods that seem to aggravate the condition. Often, milk products can cause a nervous stomach — you can test this by eliminating milk products from your diet for two weeks and seeing if there's any improvement. Sometimes adding bran or bulk to your diet helps a nervous stomach.

Q. I understand that certain foods seem to cause gas. Can you tell me what these are so I can avoid them?
A. Vegetables in the cabbage family frequently cause gas and gas pains. If you tend to be slightly lactose-intolerant, as many older people are, milk and milk products like ice cream can also produce gas. It's well known, of course, that a plateful of beans or even peas can also produce a gassy feeling.

Q. I burp while I eat, after I eat — all the time. My doctor says I'm swallowing too much air. Is he right?
A. Probably — it's the most common cause of belching. People who talk while eating, who smoke or chew gum frequently, who have emotional problems and sigh a lot, and those who drink large quantities of soda or beer are the most likely sufferers.

You can help stop yourself from swallowing too much air by not talking while eating or chewing, by cutting down on liquids during a meal, and by not smoking between courses.

Q. I've heard that a daily bowel movement is necessary to "clean out the poisons" in the system. Is this true?
A. The colon is filled with bacteria, but these are harmless and are useful in the digestive process. Because everyone's system is different, not everyone needs to have a daily bowel movement. Normal for some people may be three bowel movements a day; for others, three a week.

Q. My stomach gurgles, grumbles, and rumbles. Does this mean I have a medical problem?
A. Generally, these noises are just signs of increased bowel gas and the slow movement of matter through your digestive system. They seem loud to you, of course, because you're closest to them. These sounds, though embarrassing, are perfectly normal in the absence of other symptoms, such as pain or fever.

Q. Every now and then I see blood in my stools or on toilet tissue, but nothing hurts. Should I see a doctor?
A. Blood in your stool or other evidence of blood, a sudden and prolonged change in bowel movements, and constant pain in the digestive tract may be signs of a serious illness. Yes, by all means see your doctor — he'll arrange the necessary tests.

Q. I have pain when I move my bowels, and alternating bouts of constipation and diarrhea. During the last four weeks, most of my stools have looked like long, thin ribbons. Is something wrong?
A. Ribbonlike stools are often caused by rectal spasms, something akin to spastic colon, where pain and alternating constipation and diarrhea are common. Since this problem has lasted several weeks, and if you also suffer from nausea and loss of appetite, see your doctor at once. Such symptoms can signal rectal cancer.

Q. About an hour after eating, I get hunger pangs, but I'm not hungry. Could these be a symptom of an ulcer?
A. Possibly — pain some time after eating is one of the most common signs of an ulcer. Usually the pain isn't sharp, but rather a gnawing or burning sensation, similar to a hunger pang. In gastric ulcer, the pain comes a half hour to two hours after a meal; in duodenal ulcer, two to four hours after eating. Check with your doctor if the pain persists.

Q. My husband suffers severe heartburn pain and a searing acid taste when he goes to sleep, even though he's careful of his diet and eats only one big meal — dinner. Should he see a doctor?
A. Yes. The symptoms indicate that your husband has a hiatal hernia. A hole has developed in the area between his stomach and his esophagus, and the stomach has begun to push through the diaphragm, spilling some of its gastric juices and acids back into the esophagus and causing heartburn.

This heartburn can be quite painful — it may even mimic the pain of a heart attack — but the condition itself is not serious if properly treated. One of the best aids to self-help is to refrain from eating that one big meal at night.■

How the Stars Shape Up

Have you ever wanted to ask your favorite celebrities how they stay so trim and gorgeous? Then read these inspiring diet and exercise tips from those lissome luminaries

By Frank Bies

Christopher Reeve. "While I was in London filming 'Superman II,' my driver would take me to a gym, where I worked out on a strict weight-lifting program. I also play volleyball and tennis whenever and wherever I can — and exercise my fingers playing the piano."

Valerie Harper. "Going from 150 pounds down to 113 hasn't been easy, and I owe my new figure to Tony Cacciotti, the fitness instructor who helped me get down to my present weight in just a few weeks. He had me do stretching exercises and cardiovascular work, as well as cut calories and drink juices. Now, I jog four times a week and work out every day with parallel bars and weights set up in my living room. Tony's there a lot to keep me going. We fell in love two months after he started coaching me!"

Meryl Streep. "A lot of the acting I do requires total body involvement, so that keeps me in shape — and when I'm not working, I walk every chance I get. Also, resisting bad-for-the waist-line foods is an important part of my regimen."

Cheryl Tiegs. "My morning routine begins with squeezing oranges with my right hand and making coffee with my left. Then, if I'm in California, I run on the beach and swim in the ocean. In New York, I skip rope in my apartment, and in Europe, my exercise program depends on what facilities are available. Wherever I am, I always try to work out, even if I'm just throwing a Frisbee on safari in Africa."

Donna Summer. "Even though I dance during my concerts, I like to exercise every day. In the city, I go for walks — and roller-skate at night. When I stay at my house in Malibu, I run on the beach after I get up."

Jill Clayburgh. "I try to jog at least five miles a day, early in the morning."

Chevy Chase. "During the afternoon, I run (not jog) for up to seven miles — and speed sprint for a hundred yards several times. That really gets the heart pumping and the blood circulating."

Lynda Carter. "I jog about a mile and a half to two miles in the morning. Then I come home and do floor exercises. I have a stationary bicycle that I use, too, as well as a complete gymnasium. Sometimes I'll play tennis with my husband, Ron Samuels, instead, but I do exercise in some way every day."

Rodney Dangerfield. "I go to a gym every day for aerobic exercises like bicycle riding and stretching. I don't go in for strenuous exercises much, although I did try jogging once. My doctor told me I should jog five miles a day. A week later I called him and said, 'Doctor, what do I do now? I'm 35 miles from home!' "

Elke Sommer. "When I'm in California, I swim in the ocean, and in Europe, I always walk three or four miles a day in the woods. Wherever I am, I play plenty of tennis. Fortunately, I've inherited a strong body and healthy constitution, so I don't have to confine myself to a particular regimen."

Dyan Cannon. "Every morning, I run a few miles on the beach at Malibu, with the surf lapping at my feet. Back home, I do 20 minutes of calisthenics — and throughout the day, I drink lots and lots of parsley juice."

Robin Williams. "I jog whenever I can — usually in the hills near my home — and I do yoga exercises twice a week. When I'm working at Paramount, I roller-skate from set to set."

Jane Fonda. "My daily workouts combine aerobic, dance, running, and stretching exercises into an all-purpose, body-aching program. Hard workouts lasting up to two hours make the heart and lungs really work, get blood oxygenated and circulating, and limber up the body. Simply working the muscles 10 or 15 times isn't enough; you have to keep on until they hurt. The benefit is in going beyond the pain. That's how I not only keep fit, but have the physical and mental energy necessary to confront daily problems without getting depressed or irritable."

Valerie Perrine. "I have a basic contour routine I go through several times a week. It starts with stretching, push-ups, and sit-ups and gradually incorporates more strenuous exercises. For fun and fitness, though, I love tennis. I played in a celebrity tournament against Princess Caroline and Vitas Gerulaitas recently, and even though I lost, it was the thrill of a lifetime."

Marie Osmond. "I take a ballet class every morning from seven to nine. After that, I spend most of the day at rehearsals — which means more dancing. If we're on tour, I also dance and sing through a nightly two-hour show. Then, before I go to bed, I do 45 sit-ups and stretches like touching the floor without bending my knees. And there are the little habits I've picked up, such as bumping my hips against the wall, to break down fats, while I'm talking on the phone."

Robert Klein. "Trying to keep up with my wife, Brenda Boozer, the real athlete of the family. She outjogs me by miles — and just listening to her exercise her voice, going through the various operatic scales, is thoroughly exhausting. Me? I play your basic New York sports like stickball and watching the Yankees."

Britt Ekland. "I roller-skate at Flipper's in Hollywood every night, attend a fitness class three times a week for an hour and a half, and work out on Nautilus equipment once a week. I'm also careful to eat right."■

I truly believe that we are put on earth to be happy and successful and that our life's work is to bring joy to those around us," says television star Suzanne Somers. And that's just what she did for five years as the co-star of "Three's Company," ABC's top-rated comedy series. But the 1980 season brought some abrupt changes for the voluptuous blonde actress and she's anxious to tell her side of the story.

Suzanne Somer's contretemps with the producers of "Three's Company" and with fellow actors John Ritter and Joyce DeWitt was widely publicized. Through all the brouhaha about demands for more money, refusals to work, and the addition of a new character on the show to replace Suzanne, little was heard from the star herself. Until now, Suzanne has not wished to discuss the incidents that led to her being "excluded" from many scripts.

"I like to go in front of the public and spread joy," she says as she settles into a chair in the office of her seven-level beach house near L.A. "I figure that's what an entertainer is about. But the problem has bubbled to such a point that I have to tell my side of it now.

"Last year the producers of 'Three's Company' published the syndication revenues (profits made from selling reruns of the show)," she begins. "Those revenues had earned for those three men over $100 million. By the end of the series run, the estimate is they will make in excess of $200 million. Well, I play a dumb blonde, but I'm not a dumb blonde. I said to my husband Alan, 'We don't have any residuals or profit participation. This show will be on the air for the next 25 years in reruns and I'll receive nothing.' So, in March (1980), we went to the 'Three's Company' producers and asked to discuss profit participation. They gave us a flat and very rude 'no.' They were so rude that my husband, in a moment of pique, said, 'Well, if that's the way you want to deal... Suzanne has been a loyal employee, how about a raise to $150,000 a week? She's in part responsible for the success of this show.' They've really never communicated with us since.

"For me it was a very emotional thing," she continues. "I love the job and I love the people. I've worked very hard and loved every minute of it. The summer passed and all our letters and phone calls were ignored. Two weeks before we were to start production again, I went on 'The Tonight Show.' I was doing a difficult production number and pulled a muscle in my back. Then, trying to favor the muscle, I broke my rib and tore something in my lower back. The next day we left for Las Vegas where I was to do a show and for two weeks I worked in a brace. It was terribly painful, and of course everyone knew, it was in the papers. When we closed in Vegas, I flew back that night at 3 a.m. and at 9 a.m. next morning reported for work on 'Three's Company.' "

Suzanne takes a deep breath, leans forward and continues her story. "I never speak of illness; I'm telling you now because I want you to understand the situation. I had ripped the musculature of the lower back while trying not to put pressure on the upper back. By the end of the week, my rib was protruding out of my back like an elbow. I showed John Ritter, who has been a very special friend, and he brought everyone over to look at this weird protrusion. I was taking Robaxin for the pain. It takes tension off the muscles and relaxes you to the point where you can move around. So, I finished the week. We were supposed to tape the first show, once on Saturday, once on Sunday; but Saturday morning I woke up and couldn't lift my head from the pillow. Alan carried me down the stairs and took me to Cedars-Sinai Hospital. X-rays showed the broken rib and the one I had jostled out of place. They said, 'Stay in bed.' That was all I could do.

"I had not missed one day's work in five years; but we called from the hospital, explained that I could not work, and they immediately said this was a renegotiating ploy. 'Are you sure it isn't a broken leg, ha ha?' I couldn't believe it! On the third day, Monday, I returned to work, apologized to everyone for the inconvenience I'd caused, and no one talked to me. We did the show, but John and Joyce would not talk to me or look at me.

"I told John, who is my friend, 'I can sense that you're angry, but you have to know that there are two sides to every story. You're hearing only their side.' He just walked away. Whatever was taking place, there was poison in the atmosphere and it prevails to this day. The third day that I came to work, someone told me John had taken over my dressing room and that I should go home. I was written out except for a one-minute scene a week.

"It's been a humilitating experience," Suzanne says with a sigh. "I am a grown woman who has always been able to discuss my problems. No more. I come in to pick up my script on Thursday. They hand it to me in a private room. If I didn't pick it up, I wouldn't be paid. They say I have the best job in Hollywood, I only have to work one minute for all that money. But I don't enjoy not working. It's more than money. The profit-participation we were asking wasn't even for now. It was for my retirement fund when the show, years from now, will still be running all over the world. For asking, I am being punished. 'If that's what you chose to do, let me go, please, at the end of the year,' I've said. But they say, 'We'll never let you go and we'll do this all next year as well, one minute a week.' I feel victimized. CBS has offered me a deal for 'The Suzanne Somers Show' as soon as I am free. But my current producers are not letting me out of my option for next year. They want to keep me off the air. My preference would be to get over this silly situation with John and Joyce and work together.

That her two co-stars turned their backs on her has hurt Suzanne deeply. "Not to support one's fellow worker!" she exclaims. "What is happening to me right now is more serious than the actors' strike. I supported that strike. I

Q.—You have often written about what to do after partner makes a takeout double. But I am still perplexed about what action I should take after partner opens the bidding and my right-hand opponent makes a takeout double. Can you stop me from being—Muddled in Minneapolis, Minn.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—I cannot understand why you are confused—this is one of the easiest positions to be in. There are really only three simple rules to remember: 1) All good hands, whether or not they contain support for partner's suit, start off with a redouble. 2) With a really bad hand, pass. 3) With support in partner's suit, jump raise if your hand is weak defensively and you have distributional values, but make a normal raise if you have the strength for a simple response.

Bearing this in mind, see what action you would take on the following examples. Assume that partner opens the bidding with one heart and the next hand doubles. You hold:

a) ♠ A Q 10 x ♡ x ♢ K J x x ♣ A 10 x x

b) ♠ x x ♡ A Q x x ♢ K x x ♣ Q x x x

Hand a) is strong, so you start off with a redouble. That requests partner to give you the courtesy of the road. No matter where the opponents run, you intend doubling for penalties. And if they allow you to play one heart redoubled, your outside strength should make the contract a near certainty even if partner has a weak trump suit.

Since hand b) is also strong, you again start off with a redouble. This time, however, you intend raising hearts over any action by the opponents.

Hand c) is of intermediate strength. With this type of hand, it is usually better to bid at your first opportunity, especially since hearts is unlikely to be your best spot. Make your natural bid of one spade—the same action you would have taken had there been no intervening double.

Hand d) has some defensive values and excellent support for partner's suit. Make your normal raise to two hearts. This serves two purposes. First, if partner has a really good hand, you might be able to get to game despite the takeout double. Secondly, if partner is relatively weak, it makes it that much harder for the opponents to get into the auction.

c) ♠ K 10 x x x ♡ x ♢ K x x x ♣ x x x

d) ♠ A x x ♡ J x x x x ♢ Q x ♣ x x x

e) ♠ J x x ♡ Q J x x x ♢ x ♣ x x x x

f) ♠ J x x x ♡ x x ♢ Q x x x ♣ x x x

Hand e) is not only weak defensively, but your length in hearts will diminish partner's defensive power. Jump to three hearts. Over a takeout double, that is a preemptive action.

Hand f) is just a bad hand, period. The only way to tell partner that you have a bad hand is to pass.

What constitutes a good responding hand? The minimum for a redouble should be about 10 points in high cards. With fewer than that, treat the hand as intermediate and choose some other action, such as a raise of partner's suit, a bid of a new suit or a response of one no trump.

Digestion Questions

Answers to common queries about stomachaches, heartburn and other problems

Few people have never had a queasy stomach. Or gas pains. Or diarrhea. Naturally, complaints as common as these give rise to a great many questions. Often these questions go unanswered — either because doctors are too busy to explain or patients too embarrassed to ask.

Now sufferers can get answers from a gastroenterologist simply by calling a hot line. Named, appropriately enough, "Gutline," the free service is operated by the American Digestive Disease Society. Here are the most frequently asked questions, and the answers:

Q. I constantly have a sour taste in my mouth and very bad breath. What causes this?
A. Most bad breath comes through the lungs or from the mouth and not the stomach, and can stem from an infection, foods like garlic, poor oral hygiene, or any number of lung problems. Depression can sometimes cause a sour taste and bad breath, as can some medications. Also ask your doctor to check for zinc deficiency, which can be still another cause of bad breath.

Q. I have a nervous stomach. My doctor didn't give me a diet — is there a special diet for this problem?
A. Severals foods may be contributing to the problem, so watch your diet carefully and note and eliminate any foods that seem to aggravate the condition. Often, milk products can cause a nervous stomach — you can test this by eliminating milk products from your diet for two weeks and seeing if there's any improvement. Sometimes adding bran or bulk to your diet helps a nervous stomach.

Q. I understand that certain foods seem to cause gas. Can you tell me what these are so I can avoid them?
A. Vegetables in the cabbage family frequently cause gas and gas pains. If you tend to be slightly lactose-intolerant, as many older people are, milk and milk products like ice cream can also produce gas. It's well known, of course, that a plateful of beans or even peas can also produce a gassy feeling.

Q. I burp while I eat, after I eat — all the time. My doctor says I'm swallowing too much air. Is he right?
A. Probably — it's the most common cause of belching. People who talk while eating, who smoke or chew gum frequently, who have emotional problems and sigh a lot, and those who drink large quantities of soda or beer are the most likely sufferers.

You can help stop yourself from swallowing too much air by not talking while eating or chewing, by cutting down on liquids during a meal, and by not smoking between courses.

Q. I've heard that a daily bowel movement is necessary to "clean out the poisons" in the system. Is this true?
A. The colon is filled with bacteria, but these are harmless and are useful in the digestive process. Because everyone's system is different, not everyone needs to have a daily bowel movement. Normal for some people may be three bowel movements a day; for others, three a week.

Q. My stomach gurgles, grumbles, and rumbles. Does this mean I have a medical problem?
A. Generally, these noises are just signs of increased bowel gas and the slow movement of matter through your digestive system. They seem loud to you, of course, because you're closest to them. These sounds, though embarrassing, are perfectly normal in the absence of other symptoms, such as pain or fever.

Q. Every now and then I see blood in my stools or on toilet tissue, but nothing hurts. Should I see a doctor?
A. Blood in your stool or other evidence of blood, a sudden and prolonged change in bowel movements, and constant pain in the digestive tract may be signs of a serious illness. Yes, by all means see your doctor — he'll arrange the necessary tests.

Q. I have pain when I move my bowels, and alternating bouts of constipation and diarrhea. During the last four weeks, most of my stools have looked like long, thin ribbons. Is something wrong?
A. Ribbonlike stools are often caused by rectal spasms, something akin to spastic colon, where pain and alternating constipation and diarrhea are common. Since this problem has lasted several weeks, and if you also suffer from nausea and loss of appetite, see your doctor at once. Such symptoms can signal rectal cancer.

Q. About an hour after eating, I get hunger pangs, but I'm not hungry. Could these be a symptom of an ulcer?
A. Possibly — pain some time after eating is one of the most common signs of an ulcer. Usually the pain isn't sharp, but rather a gnawing or burning sensation, similar to a hunger pang. In gastric ulcer, the pain comes a half hour to two hours after a meal; in duodenal ulcer, two to four hours after eating. Check with your doctor if the pain persists.

Q. My husband suffers severe heartburn pain and a searing acid taste when he goes to sleep, even though he's careful of his diet and eats only one big meal — dinner. Should he see a doctor?
A. Yes. The symptoms indicate that your husband has a hiatal hernia. A hole has developed in the area between his stomach and his esophagus, and the stomach has begun to push through the diaphragm, spilling some of its gastric juices and acids back into the esophagus and causing heartburn.

This heartburn can be quite painful — it may even mimic the pain of a heart attack — but the condition itself is not serious if properly treated. One of the best aids to self-help is to refrain from eating that one big meal at night.■

Have you ever wanted to ask your favorite celebrities how they stay so trim and gorgeous? Then read these inspiring diet and exercise tips from those lissome luminaries

By Frank Bies

Christopher Reeve. "While I was in London filming 'Superman II,' my driver would take me to a gym, where I worked out on a strict weight-lifting program. I also play volleyball and tennis whenever and wherever I can — and exercise my fingers playing the piano."

Valerie Harper. "Going from 150 pounds down to 113 hasn't been easy, and I owe my new figure to Tony Cacciotti, the fitness instructor who helped me get down to my present weight in just a few weeks. He had me do stretching exercises and cardiovascular work, as well as cut calories and drink juices. Now, I jog four times a week and work out every day with parallel bars and weights set up in my living room. Tony's there a lot to keep me going. We fell in love two months after he started coaching me!"

Meryl Streep. "A lot of the acting I do requires total body involvement, so that keeps me in shape — and when I'm not working, I walk every chance I get. Also, resisting bad-for-the waist-line foods is an important part of my regimen."

Cheryl Tiegs. "My morning routine begins with squeezing oranges with my right hand and making coffee with my left. Then, if I'm in California, I run on the beach and swim in the ocean. In New York, I skip rope in my apartment, and in Europe, my exercise program depends on what facilities are available. Wherever I am, I always try to work out, even if I'm just throwing a Frisbee on safari in Africa."

Donna Summer. "Even though I dance during my concerts, I like to exercise every day. In the city, I go for walks — and roller-skate at night. When I stay at my house in Malibu, I run on the beach after I get up."

Jill Clayburgh. "I try to jog at least five miles a day, early in the morning."

Chevy Chase. "During the afternoon, I run (not jog) for up to seven miles — and speed sprint for a hundred yards several times. That really gets the heart pumping and the blood circulating."

Lynda Carter. "I jog about a mile and a half to two miles in the morning. Then I come home and do floor exercises. I have a stationary bicycle that I use, too, as well as a complete gymnasium. Sometimes I'll play tennis with my husband, Ron Samuels, instead, but I do exercise in some way every day."

Rodney Dangerfield. "I go to a gym every day for aerobic exercises like bicycle riding and stretching. I don't go in for strenuous exercises much, although I did try jogging once. My doctor told me I should jog five miles a day. A week later I called him and said, 'Doctor, what do I do now? I'm 35 miles from home!' "

Elke Sommer. "When I'm in California, I swim in the ocean, and in Europe, I always walk three or four miles a day in the woods. Wherever I am, I play plenty of tennis. Fortunately, I've inherited a strong body and healthy constitution, so I don't have to confine myself to a particular regimen."

Dyan Cannon. "Every morning, I run a few miles on the beach at Malibu, with the surf lapping at my feet. Back home, I do 20 minutes of calisthenics — and throughout the day, I drink lots and lots of parsley juice."

Robin Williams. "I jog whenever I can — usually in the hills near my home — and I do yoga exercises twice a week. When I'm working at Paramount, I roller-skate from set to set."

Jane Fonda. "My daily workouts combine aerobic, dance, running, and stretching exercises into an all-purpose, body-aching program. Hard workouts lasting up to two hours make the heart and lungs really work, get blood oxygenated and circulating, and limber up the body. Simply working the muscles 10 or 15 times isn't enough; you have to keep on until they hurt. The benefit is in going beyond the pain. That's how I not only keep fit, but have the physical and mental energy necessary to confront daily problems without getting depressed or irritable."

Valerie Perrine. "I have a basic contour routine I go through several times a week. It starts with stretching, push-ups, and sit-ups and gradually incorporates more strenuous exercises. For fun and fitness, though, I love tennis. I played in a celebrity tournament against Princess Caroline and Vitas Gerulaitas recently, and even though I lost, it was the thrill of a lifetime."

Marie Osmond. "I take a ballet class every morning from seven to nine. After that, I spend most of the day at rehearsals — which means more dancing. If we're on tour, I also dance and sing through a nightly two-hour show. Then, before I go to bed, I do 45 sit-ups and stretches like touching the floor without bending my knees. And there are the little habits I've picked up, such as bumping my hips against the wall, to break down fats, while I'm talking on the phone."

Robert Klein. "Trying to keep up with my wife, Brenda Boozer, the real athlete of the family. She outjogs me by miles — and just listening to her exercise her voice, going through the various operatic scales, is thoroughly exhausting. Me? I play your basic New York sports like stickball and watching the Yankees."

Britt Ekland. "I roller-skate at Flipper's in Hollywood every night, attend a fitness class three times a week for an hour and a half, and work out on Nautilus equipment once a week. I'm also careful to eat right."■

"Our Bad Marriage Made Our Son Stop Growing"

The true story of one little boy's reaction to his parents' unhappiness

By Sharon Carter

If it hadn't been for our fight that morning, I wondered how long it would have taken me to notice that anything was wrong. During the past year, there had been so much strain and tension that I wasn't surprised I didn't see something sooner.

My marriage to Ed had never been a very good one. We'd been far too young when we wed — I was 17 and Ed was 19. We were "crazy in love" and had all the classic symptoms of determined teen-agers. We swore we'd run away, or die in agony, if our parents didn't let us marry. They agreed reluctantly, we married, and within months the wild infatuation between us was dead. By our first anniversary the only things we shared were an expensive sports car (that Ed wanted and I hated) and a month-old daughter. By the time Todd, our son, was born three years later my husband and I lived in separate worlds. Our personalities and interests were so far apart that I sometimes wondered how we could have ever been in love.

We didn't really fight a great deal then. We just kept out of each other's way. When Ed had a brief affair with a woman at his office, I was annoyed, but I had none of those deep, wounded feelings I thought I should experience.

There were times when I felt lonely, sad and unfulfilled and I was horribly depressed. Even so, the one thing I wouldn't consider was divorce. I'd been raised in a strict fundamentalist church that classed divorce in the same general category with drunkenness and child molestation. Our church feeling was that, if you pray hard enough and try hard enough, any marriage can work. And if you weren't happy, well, that built your character and you could serve as a good example to others who might be tempted to move out when the least little thing went wrong.

We stayed together until the summer before Todd started to school. Then it seemed like just about everything created problems. Ed was restless, on edge. He wanted to move, to get a new job, to do new things. He bought a ski boat, and I had a fit about how much it cost.

"Look, we need to do something together, as a family," he responded. "If we can get out and enjoy ourselves a little, maybe it'll help us all."

We tried, but every time we spent a day at the lake, we'd end up fighting and one or both of the kids would be upset and cry. Ed started taking the boat out with friends, but I resented being dumped at home while he was out on his expensive "toy."

By the end of summer we both realized our squabbles were bothering the children. Tracy started having nightmares and Todd frequently had an upset stomach. Ed and I agreed that, even if we personally couldn't get along, we shouldn't let that upset the kids' lives. So we tried to stop fighting in their presence.

Even so, the restlessness Ed displayed was still evident. He went snow skiing with friends and I had to gnaw the end of my tongue to keep from telling him I considered that selfish and immature behavior.

I joined the P.T.A. and two or three women's clubs and Ed said he thought that they were a waste of time, effort and gas money. Even with all these rotten feelings, we remembered our duty to our children and we both choked off bitter words and swallowed our tempers.

The masquerade was working, or so we thought. Then one morning a neighbor dropped over for coffee and suddenly asked, "Look, it's

Frauds that Bloom in the Spring

How to protect yourself from solar-energy scams, home-improvement rip-offs and other frauds

The Robinsons had new central air conditioning installed in their home for $6,000. From the start Steve Robinson complained it didn't work properly. Unable to get the contractor to remedy the problem, he eventually stopped making monthly payments. To the Robinson family's horror, two months later the contractor foreclosed on their home and threatened to sell it unless the payments for the air-conditioning unit were made.

The Robinson family was a victim of a "lien sale" contract in which you agree to put up your house as collateral to guarantee payment to the contractor. The increasing use of this type of contract is the newest gambit of the fast-talking, shady operators who thrive in the home-improvement and remodeling field. Dishonest contractors intentionally do shoddy work, hoping payment will be stopped so they can foreclose. Creditors do not need court approval to file a lien, and then it's surprisingly easy for them to foreclose and sell. To save your home, you usually must pay up no matter how unsatisfactory the contractor's work. Often, the only way you can try to get your money back is to sue for contract violation, and pay court and attorney's fees.

The best protection against lien sale frauds is to make sure you're dealing with a reputable contractor. In many states this means a contractor who is licensed and bonded. In states without bonding requirements, get the names of at least two of the contractor's previous customers and ask them about his work, or check the local Better Business Bureau to see whether any complaints are filed against him. Other current frauds to watch out for:

Solar-energy scams. Devices to utilize the sun's warming rays are complex, and homeowners can easily be misled. Unscrupulous contractors pushing devices such as ineffective "solar shade screens" will tell you that you can earn energy tax credits by installing them, when in fact, you can't. Federal tax credits are given only on equipment that meets federal requirements, as described in IRS publication 903, "Energy Credits for Individuals". States that offer their own tax credits also have certain requirements. In California and Arizona, for example, equipment must be installed by a licensed solar contractor. For a list of reputable contractors in your area, contact the National Association of Solar Contractors, Suite 928, 910 17th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

Home-improvement rip-offs. Working door-to-door or advertising in newspapers, swindlers turn up in every area of home remodeling and improvement. Unfinished work after payment has been made is the biggest consumer complaint. Some crooked contractors even skip off with large down payments before any work is done, never to be heard from again. Consumer protection experts recommend against using contractors who demand more than one-third of the total cost of the work in advance. And if you're paying a contractor to do a number of repairs, pay only for the completed portion of the work.

Prevalent in the East, Midwest, and parts of the South is the so-called "basement waterproofing" ripoff. For $1,500 to $5,000 the contractors claim to be able to seal cracks to cure your basement of water leaks. They inject clay or a chemical into the soil around the foundation. Unfortunately, in most cases the technique doesn't work. But you only find that out in the next rainstorm when the basement still leaks. By then the contractors have often disappeared, and any guarantee they have given is worthless.

Vacation frauds. Although most "time sharing" vacation-home offers are on the up and up, others are not. Under a typical time-sharing plan you pay about $4,000 for the use of a room in a resort hotel or a condominium apartment for one week a year for a certain number of years, usually 10 or more. But some companies seek down payments from buyers even before the structure is built, then either run off with the money or go bankrupt. Other companies promise buyers that they will be able to swap their week's lodgings any year in say, Florida, with someone else's in Mexico, but when the time comes, it's discovered that the swap isn't possible. And high-pressure sales pitches frequently hide costs such as rising annual maintenance fees and interest charges. Don't sign any time-sharing contracts without consulting an attorney.

Vacation certificates, another possible rip-off, are frequently offered over the telephone or by mail. For as little as $10, the certificates supposedly entitle you to free luxury-hotel accommodations for a weekend, discounted meals, and other savings in places like Las Vegas and other resorts. This, you're told, is the hotel's way of promoting a new business. Sounds like a great deal, but when you arrive, the hotel may know nothing about your reservation. If you're ever offered a certificate, verify its worth by calling the hotel or resort named.

Jewelry investments. Many people think gold, artwork, or jewels are the best hedge against inflation, and "investment" gem stones are widely advertised — some for as little as $5. But are they a good investment? One company was recently indicted for misrepresentations in over 15,000 separate sales for telling buyers that they were getting investment-quality stones when, in truth, the stones were of poor quality. Another ad offered .25 point diamond earrings for $5. Few of the buyers realized that it takes 100 points to make one carat and that a .25 point stone is only a tiny diamond particle, not a quarter-carat stone. And don't be fooled by such phrases as "limited one to a customer," and "while supplies last," which are just come-ons. ■ none of my business, but have you and Ed ever thought of splitting up?"

"It really is none of your business," I answered icily. "We don't believe in divorce. And why do you ask something like that anyway?"

She gave a short laugh. "Look, it couldn't be more obvious that things are bad between you two. Around you and Ed the tension is like static electricity. The air fairly crackles with it."

I changed the subject, but it bothered me all the same. I knew I was tense and on edge, and so was Ed. But I certainly had no idea it was obvious even to outsiders.

One morning about a month after school started, Ed and I got into a squabble after the kids had left. He slammed out the door in a rage and I vented my feelings by rattling dishes and crashing pans.

But all the time something was bothering me — something Ed had said, and that I found myself beginning to worry about.

We were arguing over money, and he'd exploded because I had spent a lot of money on our daughter Tracy, getting her new clothes and supplies for school.

"You don't seem to want to spend anything on Todd!" Ed yelled. "I can't remember you buying him any new clothes in months!"

Tracy loved pretty clothes. Todd couldn't care less. He got new things when he outgrew what he had. I tried to remember just when I had last bought him something. Usually we handed down outgrown clothes to cousins every three or four months. But I suddenly realized that hadn't happened in ages.

I went to Todd's room and began looking through his clothes. I couldn't believe what I saw. Except for clothes that were too torn up to wear, he was wearing most of the things he'd started school in the year before.

In a year, a 7-year-old boy had suddenly stopped growing.

I tried to stay calm, but a worrisome feeling swept over me. It was silly to get upset, I told myself, all kids grow in spurts. In a few months, Todd would shoot up like a bean pole.

But the more I tried to calm myself, the more uneasy I became. Surely, our pediatrician would have noticed if anything was wrong. But then I remembered something: Todd had been to the doctor three times in the last year, once for a vaccination, given by a nurse, once to the emergency room for a cut leg, and once he'd had an ear infection and been treated by another doctor, because ours was on vacation.

I ran to the phone and called for an appointment. Bring him in day after tomorrow, I was told.

Still upset, I called Ed and tried to tell him what I'd discovered and how worried I was.

"Don't be silly. There's nothing wrong. He'll catch up in a few months," he said.

I drove to Todd's school that afternoon and when I saw him on the playground, I couldn't help noticing that he was smaller than kids he'd been as tall as or taller than only last year. (Ed and I are both tall and our children had always been slightly above average in height.) I suddenly remembered Todd saying grumpily, "This year I'm littler than anyone else."

"You'll catch up," I'd replied absent-mindedly.

Later on when Ed came home, and he'd had time to think about my call, he became worried as well. "It's probably nothing," he said, "but I'm glad you're taking him to the doctor."

That first visit confirmed our suspicion. Todd was slightly taller than he had been a year ago but he weighed a little less. He had stopped growing. The doctor asked questions, poked and probed, took blood samples and said he wanted to admit Todd to Children's Hospital for a few days, to run some tests.

"Tests! What for? What do you think is wrong?" I asked.

"I don't know. That's what we need to find out. But there's definitely something." I left his office in a daze.

Todd was admitted the next day and he spent several days being X-rayed, tested and examined. Ed stayed with us as much as possible and for once we were too preoccupied to quarrel with each other.

Finally, the doctor in charge asked to see us both. First he told us they hadn't found anything physically wrong. But he asked, "Tell me, what is your marriage and your home environment like?"

It took us by surprise. Ed's face turned an angry red and I rushed into the speech I'd used so often. Everything was fine! No real problems. Oh, sure, we disagree now and then — show me a couple who doesn't! But we had a happy homelife. We never argued in front of the kids...

"I think you just said the key words there," the doctor said. "You never argue in front of the kids. I'm going to make a guess here. I'm going to guess you two don't get along well but you try to hide it and that you live separate lives without any real feeling of warmth or love."

Ed started to get angry but I suddenly burst into tears. "You're right. It's like that. But what does it have to do with Todd?"

They hadn't found an organic cause for Todd's lack of growth, the doctor said, so it had been tentatively diagnosed as "psychosocial dwarfism." (Ed paled at the word "dwarf.")

"What in the world is that? I never heard of it."

Not many had, the doctor said, even though physicians were beginning to suspect it was more common than had been previously supposed. It was, simply put, that some children, who lived for a long time in a tense, stressful environment, just stopped growing, as Todd had done.

"Apparently you keep your problems under the surface. For some children that can be harder to handle than open warfare," explained the doctor. "A kid like Todd, who is high-strung, sensitive and imaginative, can find a situation like that particularly hard to cope with. Everything's hidden. He knows it's all wrong, but he can't get a handle on how it really is. He doesn't know when or where it might blow up in his face. It's worse in that case than if you threw things at each other. Reactions like his are sometimes found when parents are 'staying together for the sake of the children.' "

"What should we do? Will he get over this?" I pleaded.

"First, get your marriage in better working order, or get out of it. It's that simple. I've seen parents say 'We'll stop fighting', or 'Okay, we'll do better,' but unless they get expert counseling and are willing to work at it, it never really helps.

"As to him getting better — I'd say, if the home situation improves, the odds are great that he'll get completely over it and probably be back to his normal growth pattern within a year or two."

We took Todd home that night and while he and Tracy watched TV and devoured popcorn my husband and I sat on the patio and talked.

We'd first agreed on counseling. But Ed reached over and took my hand and said, "You're a fine person, a good woman and a great mother to the kids. But I don't think we have enough going for us to be happy with each other. I think we'd better stop fighting it and just get out.

"We tried, we really did," he said, "and it did more harm than good to stay together. Surely God makes allowances for human mistakes and failures."

We filed for a divorce a week later. It was terribly difficult, facing the reaction of church friends, and our families. Yet I had to admit that looking forward to freedom from all the tensions and the restrictions of the past few years was like lifting away a burden that had been on my shoulders so long I'd forgotten it was even there.

We were divorced 10 months ago. Oddly enough, Ed and I get along better now than we ever did before. He sees the children every other weekend and occasionally we all do things together as a family.

Divorce is never easy. For us it was harder than I think it would be for most people since we had fought the idea for so long. Best of all, however, is that Todd has started to grow and seems to be recovering completely. The children are happier and closer to us both than they were before. For our family, getting our feelings out in the open and dealing with the consequences saved our son from what could have been a very tragic situation. ■ didn't work for three months. But the network is involved in this also and they have said, 'We're tired of actors asking for higher prices.' One executive has said, 'We are going to hang a nun in the market place and that nun is going to be Suzanne Somers.' If producers are allowed to do this (fire an actor for asking for profit-participation), actors may never be able to ever again ask for more money."

Suzanne is paying, in short, for the recent high salary demands of dozens of series stars including Larry Hagman, Carroll O'Connor, Michael Landon, and Penny Marshall.

"I feel this is such a singular fight," says Suzanne. "I'm all alone. But what they haven't counted on is my strength. I will survive this."

She smiles radiantly and adds, "Even if they keep me off the air until September 1982 — which they can — if I make the right choices, I don't think I'll fade from public visibility.

"Chrissy (her 'Three's Company' character) and I are different people but we have the same soul. I love Chrissy. If I can go back to her on ABC, I will be very happy. If I can't go back to her, a character with the same soul will go on CBS. We have a new concept and a new set of circumstances that promise to be hilarious. I'm anxious to get on with it. I came into this series as Chrissy. I became famous because she was young and sexy and all those things; but she doesn't need to always be young. I would love to let her grow as Edith Bunker grew on 'All In the Family.' Let her get chunky. It's the character that counts. If Edith had a different body, would you care? If you're dependent on youth and beauty, you're in trouble. I'd like to grow old with Chrissy. I'd like to play her at 50.

"Right now, I just have to get through this muddle. I've never left a work situation with bad feelings behind me. To leave after five years when there's been such closeness, to feel so misunderstood is very frustrating. I have days when I handle it well and days when I don't, teary days, philosophical days. And basically, I have faith." This is one actress who will not be hung in the market place — at least not without putting a fight first. ■

(Editors note: As this story went to press, ABC announced that Suzanne Somers "had not been invited" back to the show next season and that a search was underway for her replacement.)

Summer Dressing: Spare Parts

Willi Smith

Perry Ellis

Donna Karan

This year's summer look is spare and uncomplicated with a decidedly no-frills approach. Here, four leading American sportswear designers pick their favorite summer essentials

By Carolyn Gottfried

"Clothes are more fun in the summer," says designer Willi Smith. "There is a sense of freedom then that we don't have other times of the year. It's a time when we all like to travel, even if it's just for a weekend. And all you ever need are five or six things that really work together." Here, Willi Smith's choices for a summer wardrobe from his Willi-Wear collection: the breezy strapless jumpsuit in white cotton poplin; the summer topper in mustard cotton gabardine worn over a leaf print bandeau and box-pleated blue-gray poplin pants; that same bare bandeau worn with a mustard canvas "escalator" skirt; the romper in blue-gray cotton poplin.

"All you need for summer is a new sexy black top," says Donna Karan. "It's wonderful to pair with white or lacquer brights." And in the Anne Klein collection that Donna Karan designs with Louis Dell'Olio there are several alternatives to spare part dressing which pivot around black as the summer essential. Here, the black linen easy shirt and ivory cotton gabardine full culottes; the black cotton gabardine windbreaker and short slim ivory cotton gabardine skirt; their new black cotton knit T-shirt with relaxed dolman sleeves worn over easy trousers.

"I like deep, dark rich colors in the summer. They look cool to me and really show off a tan," says Perry Ellis. Here from his spirited summer collection in deep desert colors: the peplumed windbreaker and straight pants in striped cotton, the larger stripe for the jacket over the smaller stripe for the pants; horizontal stripes this time in ivory and blue for the short boxy jacket and mid-calf drawstring pants; the bare handknit cotton sweater in fuchsia with full pinstriped shorts.

"Clothes are much easier and looser this year," explains Liz Claiborne. "Many of the looks have ethnic influences, and when done in deep rich vegetable colors, they can be worn in the city as well as the country or shore." Here, in somewhat folkloric shapes are Liz Claiborne's summer choices all in carefree crinkled cotton gauze — the ivory peasant blouse and russet fiesta skirt and a teal colored tunic over russet harem pants. ■
