Conferees will consider UTPB's fate

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The fate of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin remained in dispute Saturday as the House and Senate moved toward a conference committee on a bill to expand the University of Texas at Dallas.

Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, continued to push for expansion of the Odessa campus to allow enrollment in lower-level courses in the face of opposition from Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, who worked to strip the amendment from Senate Bill 895 that would give UT-Dallas four-year status.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, who represents Ector County, said he would seek to reattach UTPB to the UT-Dallas bill.

Sen. Ike Harris, R-Dallas, sponsor of the UT-Dallas bill, said he would accept the UTPB amendment, but time is running out as he seeks to get his bill through the Legislature in the two days remaining in the session, which ends at midnight Monday.

Montford said his amendment, which originally got Senate approval, would require that the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board as well as the University of Texas Board of Regents approve the UTPB expansion before it could take place, unlike the UT-Dallas expansion that would take place without approval of either policymaking body.

"... I think we have a shot" at reinstating the UTPB amendment. Proponents claim "a great deal of support from Midland people," particularly since $4.6 million in cash and land had been donated by Midlanders for the university's Center for Economic Diversification that is under construction in Midland County.

—Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa

"I considered my amendment a reasonable approach," Montford said, although Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who represents Midland County, opposed it. When the bill got to the House Higher Education Committee, the UTPB amendment came off, along with another amendment that would give Pan American University in Brownsville free-standing status.

Watkins said he still faces an uphill fight to reinstate the amendment, "But I think we have a shot." He claimed "a great deal of support from Midland people" in his efforts, particularly since $4.6 million in cash and land had been donated by Midlanders for the university's Center for Economic Diversification that is under construction in Midland County, but Watkins said Craddick and Midland College have led the opposition.

He hoped construction of the center near Midland International Airport would help to overcome the 20 years of bad feelings that have lingered over placement of the campus in Ector County.

Watkins said he thinks the UT-Dallas bill could have problems passing the Senate without the Permian Basin campus included, but Craddick said he thinks the bill has a good chance for approval whichever way it comes out of the conference committee.

Craddick offered no predictions, but he said he would prefer the bill die rather than continue to the governor's desk with the UTPB provision.

Class toppers

Class leaders attack apathy

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Many of today's students — and some of their teachers — have slumped into an apathetic attitude toward education, lacking the ambition to use it as a bridge to tomorrow's careers, Midland and Lee high schools' valedictorians and salutatorians contend.

But valedictorians Smyth Swanson of Midland High School and Erin Kelly of Lee High School, along with their respective salutatorians Brenda Lenahan and Vanessa Sims, said they plan to take full advantage of their learning opportunities.

"Half of them kind of blow school off," Miss Swanson, 18, daughter of Marsha and Robert Swanson, said of her classmates. "For them there are a lot of other things more important to do than homework or going to school."

Miss Swanson, who has been involved in MHS' Student Council, National Honor Society and Young Republicans organizations, is the daughter of Mrs. R.L. Swanson and the late Robert L. Swanson. She will enroll in the University of Texas' honors liberal arts program.

"I really don't know what I want to do," she said about her career. Liberal arts "will give me a broad background so I can go into any graduate program I desire."

Miss Sims, 18, who plans to enter pre-law or education at Baylor University and eventually become a corporate lawyer or a secondary teacher, said students sometimes have their education priorities mixed.

"It's more of an orientation on grade average than your ability to learn," said Miss Sims, daughter of Leroy and Beth Sims, adding that good grades should accompany an interest in learning.

Outside of academics, Miss Sims has also taken part in the school's choir, NHS, French Club, biomedical club and Rebelettes.

Rice University's history and sociology curriculums await Miss Kelly, who plans to work in public service, education or a diplomatic field.

"I'm not motivated by money," said Miss Kelly, daughter of the Rev. Jerry and Sharon Kelly. "I wasn't raised to see money as a measure of success."

Her advice to underachieving students would be to tell them that it's not grades that count.

"But if you cheat yourself through or blow it off, you'll miss out on the opportunity to learn," she said, adding that education appears to be more of a "social thing."

Miss Kelly's school involvement outside of her studies included marching band, NHS, academic decathlon team and German club.

Greenwood's top graduates will miss their friends

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Greenwood High School valedictorian Sean Hawthorne and salutatorian Laura Bartley have spent a decade of their academic careers in this small school system southeast of Midland.

It's no wonder that the thing they will miss most about their Greenwood Independent School District alma matre will be the friends.

But while they will miss many of the 61 members of the Class of 1989, Hawthorne and Ms. Bartley, both 18, have set their career sights on attending major Texas universities.

Hawthorne, a member of GHS' National Honor Society and Industrial Arts Club, plans to attend Texas A&M University in the fall, study architecture and become an architect. Hawthorne is the son of Jim and Linda Hawthorne.

Reported crimes made big jump, statistics show

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Increases in every major category fueled a nearly eight percent jump in crimes reported to police in April, just-released statistics show.

The number of major crimes reported — homicide, sexual assault, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft and auto theft — rose 7.9 percent during the first four months of this year compared to the same period in 1988. Burglaries and thefts, the categories responsible for double-digit increases in January and February, showed modest gains, according to the figures.

April's increase was slightly higher than the 6.2 percent rise reported for the first quarter of the year compared to the first three months of 1988.

The biggest increase was in robberies, with 39 reported during the first four months of the year compared to 27 during the same period last year, an increase of 44.4 percent.

"I think beer runs (thefts) would be the reason for that," said Cpl. Jim White, police department spokesman. "They come in as robberies, but often aren't prosecuted that way," he noted.

"Beer run" is a police term for underage youths who shoplift the beverage from local convenience stores.

Aggravated assaults were up 24.2 percent, with 149 reported through the end of April compared to 120 reported during the same period in 1988.

The number of assaults "may still be a holdover from economic pressure," White said. "And alcohol. But you can't predict when they will happen."

Burglaries, both of residences and buildings, showed a 5.3 percent increase. So far in 1989, 615 burglaries have been reported, compared to 584 for the same period last year.

Reported thefts, both misdemeanors and felonies, were also up 5.3 percent in April, with 987 reported so far in 1989 compared to 937 during the first four months of 1988.

"That's not bad at all," White said of the modest increases. "But we're getting to the time of year when we are going to have more reported. Vacations are coming up, and the kids are almost out of school."

In April, 25 vehicles were reported stolen, an almost one-per day average that has police worried.

Harte Ranch becomes part of Big Bend

BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK (AP) — More than 100 square miles of hilly Texas desert ranch land officially became part of the Big Bend National Park Saturday.

The 57,000 acres of land in the North Rosillos Mountains was donated to the park by brothers Ed Harte of Corpus Christi and Houston Harte of San Antonio.

More than 250 people attended a dedication ceremony Saturday.

Among those attending the dedication were Jim Francois, chairman of the board of the Big Bend National History Association; John Sidl, a member of the board of governors for the Nature Conservancy, a conservation and environmentalist group; and John E. Cook, regional director of the Southwest Region National Park Service.

Houston Harte, chairman of the board of Harte-Hanks Communications Inc., said his brother, Ed Harte, the retired publisher of the Corpus Christi Caller-Times, deserves credit for giving the ranch to the national park.

"Ed has been more responsible, and I went along for the ride," he said.

Ed Harte recalled that when the brothers acquired the ranch in 1956, "we realized it had been severely abused and should never have been grazed in the first place. We hoped we would someday be able to afford to give the land to the Big Bend National Park."

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, issued a statement from his Washington office:

"Special thanks must go to the Harte brothers for their generous land donation. People may change, but the land remains for all time. It is this future that is preserved today and this beauty that is recognized as everlasting."

Clements admits problems with rural health care bill

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements said Saturday he has "some basic problems" with compromise rural health care legislation approved by the House and Senate, but he has not decided on a veto yet.

The House late Friday night concurred with a Senate version of the legislation, which is intended to keep ailing hospitals open.

In other action Saturday, House members approved a Senate version of legislation to open records on children adopted through the state and help parents who find their adopted children have serious emotional problems.

In reference to the health care bill, Clements said "there's no doubt" that the hospitals need help. "I understand that. I'm for that. I'd like to see that happen," he said.

But a provision mandating that the state cover the first $100,000 of malpractice liability for obstetric and emergency room physicians is "bad legislation," he said.

"When the time comes, I'll make up my mind," he said.

Sponsors hope the proposed indemnity limit, intended for physicians whose practices have at least 10 percent charity cases, will draw more doctors to rural areas.

The bill as approved by the House would have imposed limits on malpractice liability in an attempt to reduce insurance costs.

But House sponsor Rep. Mike McKinney, D-Centerville, told members that he had agreed to the indemnity clause as a compromise.

The bill also would establish an office of rural health care within the state Health Department to work with cities, counties and hospital districts to develop regional trauma centers.

Rep. Brad Wright, R-Houston and chairman of the House Public Health Committee spoke against House agreement, calling the bill "a tort reform bill tacked on to a bill for rural health."

However, members approved McKinney's motion to concur with the Senate version after voting 101-44 against a Wright motion to table it.

A concurring vote on legislation aimed at helping parents of children adopted from the state is the result of Senate inclusion of an amendment to give prospective adoptive parents access to state records.

The House May 5 endorsed Rep. Frank Collazo's bill to allocate $5 million for financial assistance, parenting, support, counseling and medical aid programs for adoptive parents.

The programs are intended to help parents who adopt children from the state and later find the children have severe emotional problems.

Many of the children have spent time in foster homes and often are prior victims of neglect, abuse or sexual abuse.

Those adopted at a young age often do not manifest behavioral problems until adolescence.

Collazo also had sponsored House legislation to give prospective parents access to Department of Human Services records that detail the children's troubles.

While that legislation never made it to the House floor, Sen. Carl Parker attached its provisions to the already endorsed bill when it reached the Senate.

The provisions require DHS reports on children up for adoption to include any history of physical, sexual or emotional abuse and entitles the parents to inspect DHS records prior to adoption.

The parents also may have access to the records after adoption.

With the end of the regular legislative session Monday, House members Friday night were feeling the stress of trying to get their bills to the floor for a hearing.

Other members on the look out for what they felt were "bad bills" attempted to bump legislation off the calendar on technical points of order.

Good-natured fisticuffs erupted between Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, and Rep. Senfronia Thompson, D-Houston, when Stiles tried just such a maneuver on a bill pertaining to process servers.

While neither representative ended up on the actual floor of the House, they nearly tipped over a podium.

"She faked me," said Stiles. "She started to walk off and then grabbed the mike from my hand."

El Paso elects woman as mayor

EL PASO (AP) — Suzie Azar became the first woman mayor in El Paso history Saturday with a landslide victory over fellow City Council member Ed Elsey in a runoff election.

"I'm thrilled to death. I'm ready to go to work," Mrs. Azar said. "117 years is a long time for El Paso to wait (for a woman mayor) and I'm glad they waited for me."

With 31 of the precincts and all of the absentee ballots counted, Mrs. Azar lead 63 to 37 percent over Elsey. She had 16,648 votes to Elsey's 9,382.

"When you get a margin like 65 percent that's a mandate from the people that they're willing to work with you," Mrs. Azar said.

The new mayor faces problems posed by widespread poverty and rapid growth. Unlike most Texas cities, El Paso has a strong-mayor form of government with no city manager. The mayor appoints many members to city boards, supervises department heads and has a great deal of influence in budget matters and City Council agendas.

During the next two years, the new mayor is expected to have to deal with a high car-theft and house burglary rate, a growing youth gang problem, high rates of hepatitis and tuberculosis in outlying areas, double-digit unemployment and a steady influx of Mexicans, many of whom must work illegally for low wages.

The city's problems are exacerbated by a tax base of $10.4 billion — small for a city of more than 500,000 — and a $119 million budget. Both candidates said they would try to attract higher-paying employers to the city and improve the police force.

The runoff was almost devoid of issues until two weeks ago, when Elsey brought up the matter of Mrs. Azar's finances.

Mrs. Azar's husband, Dick, leases business property from the city-owned airport, and Elsey said he wanted to know how much the Azars made from businesses on the property.

Mrs. Azar said Elsey's questions were just a smoke screen to highlight her family's wealth.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Thunderstorms possible today

From Staff and Wire Reports

National Weather Service forecasters say thunderstorms may rain on the Memorial Day plans of Midlanders.

Morning clouds should clear slightly by this afternoon, though a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms exists throughout the evening.

The high today should be near 90 with gusty winds from the south at 15-25 mph.

Tonight the chances of thunderstorms continue. The low tonight should be in the upper 60s.

Memorial Day will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high should be in the low 90s.

The record high for Saturday was set just four years ago when it reached 101, while the record low for today was set in 1947 when the mercury dipped to 48.

STATE

A front stretched across Texas Saturday from Texarkana to Lubbock, bringing cool temperatures above the boundary and hot ones below as the Memorial Day Weekend got under way.

South of the front, temperatures warmed into the 80s and 90s, about 20 degrees hotter than readings under the clouds.

The state's warm spot at 3 p.m. was at Cotulla, which had a high reading of 97 degrees. Lubbock had the state's lowest high reading, at 69 degrees.

Meanwhile, a high pressure system centered over the northern gulf continued sweeping warm moist over most of Texas. Clouds covered most of the state with isolated clear spots over Abilene and El Paso.

Southeast breezes between 10 and 20 mph prevailed throughout most of Texas Saturday afternoon.

The National Weather Service said widely scattered thunderstorms were expected over much of Texas early Sunday. The showers were expected to last through Monday, the NWS said.

Forecasters said temperatures would be in the 70s and 80s across most of the state.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from the mid-Atlantic states across Kentucky and the lower Mississippi Valley to parts of the southern Plains early today, while earlier flooding in Ohio left one child dead.

A one-lane bridge carrying U.S. 52 over the rain-swollen Great Miami River at Miamitown, 10 miles west of Cincinnati, collapsed Friday. Two cars were swept into the river, and all the occupants were feared dead. Police did not know how many people were in the vehicles.

Earlier Friday, rescuers in Camden, Ohio, used lifelines and boats to lead 30 occupants of a trailer park through chest-high water to safety. A total of 200 people were forced from their homes in the town southwest of Dayton.

A 20-month-old drowned in Donnels Creek near Dayton, the sheriff's department said.

Flood warnings were posted for four rivers in Indiana. The Maumee River was expected to crest 6 feet above flood stage at Fort Wayne tonight.

Thunderstorms Friday evening produced damaging winds and large hail in Tennessee, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Texas.

A tornado caused minor injuries at Sevierville in eastern Tennessee. In western Texas, golf ball-size hail pounded McCamey and walnut-size hail fell near Bakersfield. Hail also fell in parts of Oklahoma.

Elsewhere, showers were scattered over northern Maine and the northern Pacific Coast.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at 2 a.m. EDT included nearly an inch at Jackson, Tenn.

Today's forecast called for scattered showers and thunderstorms over Mississippi, Georgia and the middle Atlantic Coast; widely scattered showers over the northern Atlantic Coast and the Pacific Northwest; and showers and a few thunderstorms in Idaho, Montana, northeast Wyoming and western South Dakota.

Chinese students press demands

BEIJING (AP) — Tens of thousands of students, many carrying banners, formed a huge procession Sunday and headed east from Tiananmen Square for a march through central Beijing to press their demands for democratic reforms.

March leaders said students from up to 300 schools and institutes would join the march at various points around the capital.

One student from Beijing Normal University said the goal of the march is "to have Chinese from throughout the world unite" in demanding that the government grant greater political freedom.

Unlike demonstrations last week that drew up to a million people to sprawling Tiananmen square, including thousands of workers, there appeared to be few people who were not students in Sunday's procession.

On Saturday, student leaders proposed that demonstrators hold a climactic rally Tuesday to "celebrate our great victory" and then end their historic two-week occupation of Tiananmen Square.

The call came as hardliners expanded their purge of moderates, whose sympathy for the students triggered the fiercest power struggle since the leftist ideological purges of the Cultural Revolution.

Student leaders said it was time to change tactics in their push for greater freedom and an end to official corruption. But they said protesters in Tiananmen Square, whose numbers had fallen sharply to about 10,000, would have the final say on ending the sit-in.

Top student leaders Wu'er Kaixi, Wang Dan and Chai Ling held a news conference at the square and called for a city-wide march and mass rally Tuesday to culminate the protest movement that began April 15.

Also Saturday, President Li Xiannian made the first public acknowledgement that China was experiencing a power struggle, accusing some Communist Party leaders of plotting to create confusion in the country.

Sources said officials in the media, the party and the army suspected of participating in the protest movement were being told to write "reports" detailing their activities. The reports could be used against them, the sources said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The developments came two days after Communist Party leader Zhao Ziyang was reportedly stripped of power and placed under house arrest. Zhao's fall signaled a victory for China's 84-year-old leader, Deng Xiaoping, and other leaders who oppose political reform.

Zhao's ouster must be confirmed by a meeting of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, which is expected soon. Party officials from provinces and cities were gathering in Beijing to prepare for the meeting, sources said.

Sources said Zhao has been accused of heading an anti-party clique.

One diplomat referred to the clique as a "new Gang of Four," a reference to ultra-leftist radicals who ruled China during the last years of the Cultural Revolution of 1966-76. They were purged by Deng when he took power in 1978.

Included with Zhao are Politburo member Hu Qili, Vice Premier Tian Jiyun and Defense Minister Qin Jiwei, Chinese sources said.

Chinese and diplomatic sources said Qin used his influence to keep troops in Beijing from enforcing martial law, which Premier Li Peng announced May 20.

Millions of people have taken to the streets in defiance of martial law, and Beijing residents put up blockades to prevent troops from entering the city.

Students waiting Saturday at the Beijing railroad station to go home said they would bring their message out to the countryside.

"We have to tell the people to arise, including peasants, workers, intellectuals and others from every walk of life," said a 24-year-old student from Wuhan who asked not to be identified.

Another student, Yang Jianjun from the Liaoning Fuxing Institute of Mining and Technology in northeastern China, said he and fellow students might return to Beijing to demonstrate again.

But, he said, "the conditions are really bad at the square. A lot of people are tired of living out there."

"On May 30, we want all the people of the city to come and gather to celebrate our great victory," student leader Wang said at the news conference.

Meanwhile, Miss Bartley will begin classes at Midland College in the fall and later transfer to the University of Texas, where she plans to study aerospace engineering.

Miss Bartley, daughter of Don and Roberta Bartley, has been involved in a number of school activities, including Student Council, tennis, NHS, band and the yearbook staff.

Both students are critical of the quality of education in Greenwood schools.

Hawthorne said that if he had the opportunity, he would diversify the GHS curriculum and make it "double difficult." Both students said they would make administrative changes.

"I don't feel like they're student-oriented," Ms. Bartley said. "They're just doing their job and hoping nothing goes wrong."

But Ms. Bartley was quick to point out that GISD "has got a lot of potential."

Both students plan to work this summer, while Miss Bartley plans to also attend classes at Midland College.

MISD

Miss Lenahan, 18, daughter of Dave and Ginny Lenahan, will use the University of Texas' accounting and law classes as a road to becoming a lawyer.

To Miss Lenahan, some students are "too laid back and they don't take high school serious enough."

"How it turns out in the future depends on what you do in high school," said Miss Lenahan, who was involved in her school's NHS, Young Republicans, Computer Club, Latin Club, golf team and academic decathlon team.

Each of the four students has her own ideas on improving schools.

Miss Swanson said she would like to see something implemented that would motivate students to learn — and educators to teach with more of a purpose.

Miss Kelly would, "somehow out of thin air," get more money for fine arts programs, especially in music, and reduce class sizes.

The science program, and teachers across the board, would see more funding if Miss Sims was in charge. She said she would also like to see updated, more challenging textbooks.

Harder curricula and more critical teacher evaluations would be changes under Miss Lenahan's leadership.

She also said school counselors should act more as an "alternative mom," rather than as academic advisers. The counselors, she said, could also help with emotional problems.

Nevertheless, the students had kudos for MISD schools, especially for their honors programs.

"I think the honors programs are very good," Miss Swanson said. "They have done a much better job of recognizing academics, especially in the past year."

Miss Kelly praised the implementation of the four-tiered high school curriculum this fall. The system provides for four levels of academic skills: basic, general, advanced and honors.

The four said some of the fondest memories of MISD schools will be of the people, including many teachers.

"I am going to miss a lot of people," Miss Swanson said. "There are so many people I know I'm not going to see ever again."

Miss Kelly said she will most remember the extracurricular trips she took, which included places like Washington, D.C.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Houston, Austin, Dallas, Galveston and New Orleans.

CRIME

So far in 1989, 111 vehicles have been stolen, compared to 98 during the same period last year for an increase of more than 13 percent.

"The consensus among law enforcement is that they are being stolen and shipped through Mexico," White said, explaining the demand.

In other categories, six sexual assaults were reported during April. So far in 1989, 17 crimes have been reported, compared to 12 for the same period last year.

One homicide was reported in April, the city's second killing. The city also had reported two homicides through the first four months of 1988.

Three teen-agers killed, one injured in Livingston mishap

Associated Press

Three teen-agers were killed and another was seriously injured near Livingston when a 17-year-old driver lost control of his car Friday night.

Two motorcyclists were killed in separate accidents Saturday.

Edgar T. White, 29, of Grand Prairie, was killed early Saturday morning when his motorcycle struck the back of a tractor-trailer truck on Interstate 30 in Collin County.

In Burnet County, Frank E. Schaper Jr., 43, of Seguin, was killed when his motorcycle struck a guard rail on the U.S. 281 exit ramp near Texas Highway 71 outside of Marble Falls, said Highway Patrolman Calvin Boyd.

A passenger, Elizabeth K. Schaper, 44, was taken to Brackenridge Medical Center via helicopter and underwent surgery. She was listed in critical condition, said a nursing supervisor who wouldn't give her name.

The fatality boosted the number of people killed on Texas highways during the Memorial Day weekend to six, according to count being maintained by The Associated Press.

Larry Pate of Humble was killed when the 1988 Toyota he was driving veered off Farm Road 2457 about seven miles west of Livingston. Investigators said the car was traveling at a high rate of speed when it struck an embankment and landed in about seven feet up in a stand of trees.

Also killed were 15-year-old Michelle Phillips and 15-year-old Wendy Narron, both of Livingston.

The youth injured in the accident near Livingston was 17-year-old Scott Sheehan of Humble. He is in serious condition at Houston's Hermann Hospital.

Two elderly Austin women became the first reported deaths on Texas highways during the holiday weekend earlier Friday night when the van they were riding in collided with a jackknifed trailer.

Caryl Spuhler, no age available, and Josephine Mills Faltinson, 87, were killed and six other senior citizens were injured in the accident on a rural road.

Senate OKs bill to allow casino gambling

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill to allow casino gambling on day cruises from Texas ports sailed to the governor's office Saturday.

On a 16-8 vote, the Senate approved the bill that would eliminate the requirement that casino ships sailing from Texas ports stop at a foreign port before they return to Texas.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, voted against the gambling amendment.

Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, who sponsored the bill with Rep. James Hury, D-Galveston, said Galveston officials are prepared to invest $4 million in a new ship terminal to cash in on $90 million worth of tourism business and 300 jobs they hope offshore gambling will bring.

"I think it's really a cornerstone for tourism," Brooks said of the gambling attraction. Casino ships now sail out of Brownsville, but the law change would allow ships to operate out of other Texas ports, particularly Galveston and Corpus Christi.

Brooks said at least one line has expressed interest in running day cruises and overnight cruises out of Galveston.

Federal law allows ships registered with foreign governments to operate casinos as long as they are more than 10.8 miles offshore. The casinos must be sealed when they come into port.

While the ships could sail out of any Texas port, Brooks doubted it would be economically feasible to operate out of other ports.

Gov. Bill Clements said Saturday he would have to look at the bill. "I have no experience" with casino ships," he said. "I can't really comment."

In other action, Texas senators approved a proposed constitutional amendment that would let the voters decide in November whether to triple their pay.

The Senate voted 21-7 to approve the constitutional amendment that would raise the salary of state lawmakers to $22,538 per year. The lieutenant governor and House speaker, who are now paid the same $7,200 as other legislators, would get raises to $46,716 each.

"You can't run government on a part-time hobby of 140 days every two years," said Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, the Senate sponsor, in justifying the pay raise.

"I'm worth more than $7,200 a year," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, although he acknowledged the chances are "slim to none" with voters who have approved only one pay raise in the 27 years he has served in the Legislature.

If voters approve the change, legislative pay raises would be tied to the governor's salary. Representatives and senators would get one-fourth and presiding officers would get one-half of the governor's salary, which is proposed to be $93,342 in the coming biennium.

A separate issue on the November ballot would propose to raise the $30 per day expense allowance that lawmakers receive while the Legislature is in session to $81 per day.

Van Cliburn competition begins

FORT WORTH (AP) — Thirty-eight of the world's most promising musicians embarked Saturday on a 15-day musical battle that will send one of them to possible stardom.

The pianists are participating in the eighth Van Cliburn International Piano Competition at Texas Christian University's Ed Landreth Auditorium.

The contest, last held in 1985, got under way Saturday with the beginning of a five-day preliminary round.

Among the favorites are David Buechner, a 30-year-old New Yorker who was an early favorite of the audience and media in 1985. His failure to advance to the semifinals brought a public outcry.

Another high-profile competitor is Karoly Mocsario, a 27-year-old Hungarian who at age 22 was the youngest of six finalists in 1985. He took fifth.

But drawing much of the attention are the Soviets, who are competing for the first time in 12 years.

Five Soviets are taking part, including Aleksei Sultanov. Programs list his age at 20 but he says he's 19.

Three years ago Sultanov competed with a broken finger in the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, the most prestigious of all piano events. Despite his impressive performance in the preliminaries, he was forced in that competition to withdraw by the judges, who said they were fearful he would permanently injure his hand.

9 cities appeal suit's dismissal in rate hike

LONGVIEW (AP) — Nine Texas cities, including Longview, filed suit to appeal the Texas Railroad Commission's dismissal of their contest of a Lone Star Gas rate hike.

The suit filed Friday in Travis County's 147th District Court alleges the Railroad Commission ignored the cities' request for a hearing and review of Lone Star's gas rates.

The cities say the Railroad Commission is obligated to review Lone Star's utility rate structure because of changes in the Texas economic climate since Lone Star's gas rates were set in 1982 and due to the passage of 1986 Tax Reform Act.

In October, Lone Star asked the commission to grant it an energy partnership tariff, allowing it to offer rebates to people who buy energy efficient gas appliances. The proposed tariff would have increased the company's gas rates $4.5 million a year.

However, Lone Star withdrew its request Feb. 21 after 16 cities opposed to the tariff intervened in the proceeding. The Railroad Commission later dismissed the case, ignoring motions to the contrary filed by the cities, said Don Butler, attorney for the cities.

In addition to Longview, plaintiffs are Abilene, Arlington, Carrollton, College Station, Denison, Lewisville, Paris and Sherman.

Arlington City Attorney Jay Doegey is coordinating the cities' appeal.

The suit says the Railroad Commission violated the Administrative Procedures and Texas Register Act, which outlines judicial review of contested cases.

Butler said the commission was wrong when it failed to implement the 1986 Tax Reform Act as the cities requested. This act lowered corporate income tax rates from 46 percent to 34 percent, and Lone Star's rates do not reflect the decrease.

In early February, Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance and commissioners John Sharp and Jim Nugent told the Longview News-Journal they would review a gas company's rates and the effect of the corporate income tax issue if asked to do so by Texas cities.

Hispanic and black state lawmakers demand the resignation of Rider Scott, general counsel to Gov. Bill Clements Saturday at the Capitol in Austin. Representatives, from left, Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen; Harold Dutton, D-Houston; Larry Evans, D-Houston; Jerald Larry, D-Dallas; Roman Martinez, D-Houston; and Sam Hudson, D-Dallas, were among those who criticized racist remarks they say Scott made.

Black, Hispanic lawmakers demand aide's resignation

AUSTIN (AP) — Black and Hispanic lawmakers Saturday demanded the resignation of Gov. Bill Clements' top legal adviser, saying they are convinced the aide said he didn't want more minorities serving on big city juries.

Clements and the aide, general counsel Rider Scott, denied that the statement was made to Rep. Rick Crawford.

But Crawford, R-Amarillo, told a news conference Scott had made the statement about Crawford's bill to expand pools of potential jurors by using drivers' license lists rather than voter registration lists.

"Rider Scott said, 'I do not want any more minorities serving on juries in Dallas and Houston,' " Crawford told reporters. "I was appalled ... And he wouldn't be working on my staff, I'll tell you that."

Asked if he might have misunderstood Scott, Crawford replied: "There is absolutely no motivation that I could possibly have to be making this up ... What he said is what I quoted."

News reports about the statement, which Crawford said was made in April, surfaced this week. That prompted the Legislature's black and Mexican-American caucuses to demand Scott's ouster.

"It's a reflection of the governor's office. It makes us feel like second-class citizens. It is hard to believe, in this day and age, that the governor of the state of Texas would have someone that is insensitive to the rights of our minority citizens," said Rep. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen.

"It is unfortunate. But we've been forced to take this course of action. The chief legal adviser to the governor of this state cannot reflect such an attitude," said Rep. Larry Evans, D-Houston.

Scott, a former Dallas County prosecutor, subsequently issued a statement to say he did have questions about the bill — but those related to the possibility that the bigger jury lists could include felons, teens under age 18, illegal aliens and others not qualified to be jurors.

"I respect Rep. Crawford, but obviously there is a misunderstanding about my initial concern over the bill. I have devoted my life to creating a fair and equitable criminal justice system that serves all the people of this state," Scott said.

"I deeply regret any and all implications of the last few days, and if any offense has been taken I sincerely apologize," Scott said.

Clements signed Crawford's jury bill last week.

But the governor, who has been dogged by questions about Scott's alleged statement, sought to downplay the growing political controversy.

"I'm not going to try to get to the bottom of anything. I don't know anything about it. I've asked Rider and he has absolutely denied that he said anything like that. As far as I'm concerned, that is the end of it — lock, stock and barrel."

Reggie Bashur, the governor's press secretary, said the Clements administration rejects the sentiment indicated by the statement.

"The governor and the governor's office is totally and completely disassociated from any such statement or rumor. The governor is totally repulsed by the notion of such a statement," Bashur said.

"Obviously there is a miscommunication or misunderstanding between Rider Scott and the representative. It needs to be cleared up."

Body of former Rice track star recovered

GALVESTON (AP) — The body of a former member of the Rice University and Jamaican Olympic track teams was recovered in the waters off Galveston beach a day after he slipped into deep water, authorities said.

Patrick G. Gordon, 23, of Houston, was walking with his wife in the water near a rock pier Thursday night when they both fell into deeper water, authorities said.

Gordon's wife, Rice senior Maureen Stewart, was pulled to shore by a surfer who saw the couple struggling in the water, said Lt. Vic Maceo of the Galveston Beach Patrol. Gordon disappeared before the surfer could grab him, he said.

Gordon's body was recovered about 4 p.m. Friday after being discovered by a beachgoer who was swimming in the area where he disappeared.

Ms. Stewart, a middle distance runner for the Rice Owls, told authorities that Gordon could not swim, and that they had not seen a "No Swimming" sign posted near the pier.

STATE IN BRIEF

Senate OKs $47.4 billion budget for government

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate Saturday approved a $47.4 billion budget to run state government for the next two years, one that calls for no tax increase and represents a 12 percent increase in spending.

Sen. Kent Caperton, the Senate's chief budget writer, said the proposal was the best that could be done with limited state revenues.

"We can't really puff up our chests ... but we don't have to hang our heads," the Bryan Democrat said.

House budget chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said the House will consider the conference committee budget today.

The budget calls for increased spending in all major areas of government — education, health and human services, criminal justice — but because of increased revenue projections and one-time bookkeeping maneuvers, the spending plan will not require a require a tax increase.

But Caperton said the state was running out of tricks — such as payment delays and fund transfers — to balance the budget.

AA seeks Eastern's routes

DALLAS (AP) — American Airlines officials reportedly have conducted preliminary talks with Texas Air Corp. to buy the rights of international air routes from Eastern Air Lines Inc., a Texas Air subsidiary.

Fort Worth-based American has been rumored to be making inquiries of Houston-based Texas Air for several weeks about buying Eastern routes to South and Central America.

Sources told The Dallas Morning News that American also is looking at Eastern's facilities in San Juan, Puerto Rico, where both American and Eastern have hubs. But, the sources said, American is not considering purchasing any of Eastern's aircraft.

"We have said all along that we are an asset buyer," American spokesman Al Becker said. "And if Eastern or any other airline were to make assets available, we certainly would take a serious look at them."

It was unclear whether the current talks will result in a definitive agreement between the two companies, sources said. But the talks did result in American acquiring the rights to fly from Houston to two destinations in Alberta, Canada, from Continental Airlines Inc.

Open records bill killed

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislation that would have made government records more accessible to the public died under House rules when the stroke of midnight arrived before it could get a vote.

But the sponsor said Saturday that Gov. Bill Clements' opposition, not the rules, was the killer.

"I understand the need for the rules. What I don't understand is the governor's unwillingness to try and negotiate and try to work out an acceptable agreement," Rep. Orlando Garcia, D-San Antonio, said.

Gov. Bill Clements' office had indicated he had reservations about the measure and probably would have vetoed it, Garcia said.

The bill died because of the 72-hour rule. Bills failing to get initial House approval 72 hours before the end of the regular session are sent to legislative oblivion. The session ends at midnight Monday.

Escaped mental patient tries to hijack jetliner to Cuba

MIAMI (AP) — A Cuban immigrant who escaped from a mental hospital tried to hijack an American Airlines jetliner to Cuba Saturday, but he surrendered after the plane landed at Miami, authorities said.

The Boeing 727 carrying 157 passengers and crew en route from Dallas to Miami was diverted toward Cuba temporarily before heading back to its original destination. The hijacker was armed with a starter's pistol and two knives, but no one was injured.

He was identified as Pedro Rene Comas-Banos, 37, who came to the United States exactly nine years ago Saturday as part of the Mariel boatlift, said FBI agent William Gavin.

The suspect has a history of mental problems, most recently escaping from an institution in the Los Angeles area, Gavin said, adding that the date of that escape is not yet known.

"He has been living since that time in the Los Angeles area and reportedly has a son in Cuba and has expressed interest in returning to Cuba," Gavin said.

Before going to Los Angeles, Gavin said, Comas-Banos escaped from St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, D.C., where John Hinckley, who attempted to assassinate President Reagan in 1981, is held. Comas-Banos was there from 1980 to 1982.

"He's a very confused individual, not at all crystal clear and cogent," Gavin said. "His mind keeps changing."

Dressed in olive-drab fatigues and a bomber-type jacket, the sandy-haired Comas-Banos boarded an American Airlines flight in Los Angeles Saturday morning and then transferred to the Miami-bound flight in Dallas, Gavin said.

Comas-Banos

Infante

"After the flight left the ground on its way to Miami, he produced a demand note and said he wanted to be taken to Havana," Gavin said. Speaking only Spanish, the hijacker told the flight crew he was carrying a bomb in his briefcase, which actually contained a starter's pistol used in track races, two pocket knives and a pair of scissors.

The pilot turned back toward Miami after reporting he didn't have enough fuel to get to Havana, which Gavin said was true. "There was no bluff here this morning," Gavin said. The plane never entered Cuban airspace.

Ninety minutes after Flight 1098 parked in a remote corner of Miami International Airport, Comas-Banos allowed children to leave the jet and then gave himself up, Gavin said.

"All the passengers are off and safe," said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Jack Barker.

Comas-Banos was charged with air piracy and taken to the Metropolitan Correctional Center in Dade County pending a hearing Tuesday before a federal magistrate, Gavin said. If convicted, Comas-Banos faces a maximum penalty of life in prison.

One passenger, Eli Infante, 33, of Miami, said he served as interpreter between the hijacker and crew.

"I thought I was going to get shot," Infante said.

Asked why Comas-Banos gave up, Infante said, "I guess he got tired. We kept telling him we would not take off with passengers aboard."

Infante's wife, Silvia, 28, described Comas-Banos as "very tense. He was sweating a lot and walking back and forth saying he had accomplices. But we never saw anybody but him."

Describing Comas-Banos' surrender, Mrs. Infante said "he collapsed and everybody jumped on him" as he left the back of the jet.

At one point, the FAA and the airline had said there might be more than one hijacker, but they said later that that was never confirmed.

Robert Baker, senior vice president of operations at American Airlines, said the hijacker claimed to have confederates aboard the plane, and the other passengers were being interviewed and the plane checked for weapons.

FAA officials said passengers left the aircraft by rear stairs, and their carry-on luggage was checked by officers with police dogs.

Flight 1098, carrying 150 passengers and a crew of seven, left Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport about 8 a.m. EDT and was scheduled to land at Miami at about 10:30 a.m.

"Approximately 15 miles north of Miami ... the pilot reported he had a passenger who wanted to go to Havana," said FAA spokesman Bob Buckhorn in Washington.

"The aircraft circled Miami for approximately 20 minutes and then turned south. Approximately 60 miles south of Miami, the aircraft turned north again," Buckhorn said.

The Coast Guard was notified of an air emergency shortly before 11 a.m. as the jet flew over the Atlantic Ocean. Ditching "was a concern at one point in time," said law enforcement duty officer David Newton.

In Miami, Metro-Dade police sent a special-weapons and tactics team to the airport, and the FBI was on the scene.

During the 1960s and 1970s, there were a rash of hijackings or attempted hijackings to Cuba before the institution of security measures at airports and the cooperation of Cuban authorities stemmed the tide.

Last December, a Cuban exile tried to hijack a TWA airliner to Cuba on a flight from San Juan, Puerto Rico, to Miami, but the aircraft landed on Grand Turk Island instead with the hijacker thinking he was on the ground in Havana.

Woman dies from burns she got in tanning booth

CHICAGO (AP) — A 45-year-old woman who had taken medicine that made her skin more sensitive to light died from burns she received in a tanning booth, according to a published report Saturday.

Patsy Campbell of Portage, Ind., died Wednesday at the University of Chicago Medical Center from complications caused by burns she suffered at a beauty salon's tanning booth, said Christopher Morris, spokesman for the Cook County medical examiner.

Burns covered 70 percent of her body, he said.

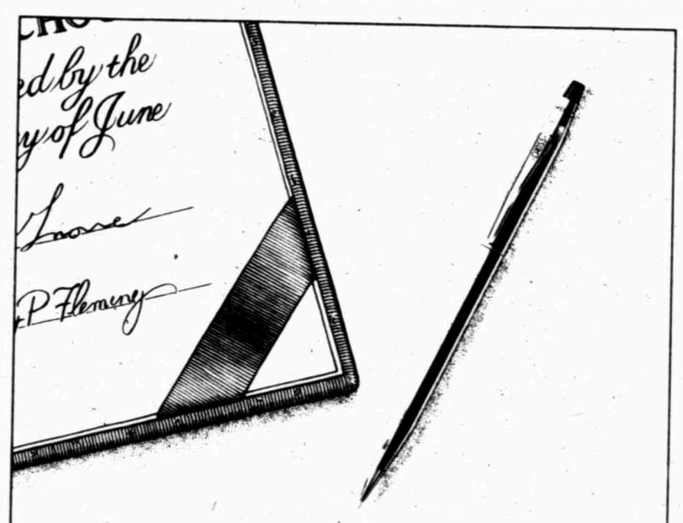

Ms. Campbell had undergone a 25-minute tanning session on May 13, he said.

The Chicago Sun-Times Saturday quoted unidentified sources as saying that she had been taking psoralen, a drug that increases the skin's sensitivity to light. The drug is most often used in conjunction with ultraviolet lamps to treat psoriasis, a skin disease, the newspaper said.

Dr. Alan Dimick, a burn expert from the University of Alabama, said he believes this is the first case of a death caused by burns from a tanning booth.

Taking photo-sensitizing drugs, including certain antibiotics and oral anti-diabetic drugs, "would set her up for the burn," Dimick said.

Soon after Ms. Campbell went to the tanning parlor, she started to itch all over her body, and blisters formed two days later, Morris said. She was admitted to an Indiana hospital and later transferred to the burn unit at the Univers[illegible] Chicago.

Coelho says his resignation will spare his family, party

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Tony Coelho, the No. 3 Democrat in the House, said Saturday he will resign from Congress to spare himself and his party the ordeal of a protracted ethics investigation like the one that torched the career of Speaker Jim Wright.

The surprise announcement means House Democrats could be installing a totally revamped leadership team by the end of next week, with Thomas S. Foley of Washington the likely new speaker and several candidates vying for the next two posts of majority leader and majority whip.

The end appeared near for Wright's 2½-year reign as speaker — and perhaps his 34½-year career in the House — because of charges brought by the House ethics committee.

The Texas Democrat stands accused of arranging bulk sales of his book as a way to evade House limits on outside income and of taking gifts from a developer friend with an interest in legislation.

Wright's lawyers failed last week in an attempt to convince the House ethics committee to drop at least some of the charges in exchange for the speaker's resignation. He was in seclusion this weekend, and the House leadership was preparing for him to deliver a resignation speech Wednesday.

Coelho, the current whip, began running for the post of majority leader last week when it became known that Wright was thinking about quitting.

However, Coelho was coming under increasing scrutiny because of his business dealings, including a deal where a California savings-and-loan official arranged and helped finance a junk bond investment.

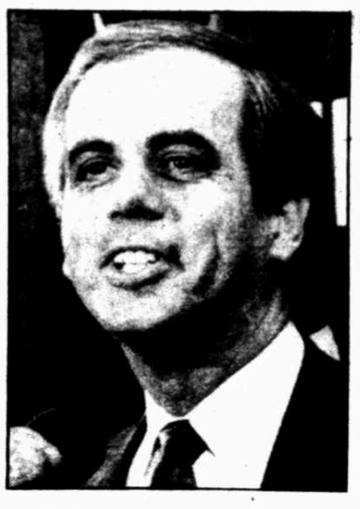

A newspaper reported that a federal investigation had begun, and on Friday Common Cause, the group that lobbies for stricter government ethics, called on the House ethics committee to investigate Coelho's finances.

"I have simply spent too much time building the party and trying to help people to have my attention or abilities devoted to such distractions," Coelho said in a resignation statement that called the charges "needless and baseless."

Coelho said his colleagues had expressed confidence in him and he would have won the majority leader's race.

"Undoubtedly, some will think this decision was motivated by weakness in my political standing or my legal position. They are entitled to their opinion, but they are wrong," he said.

Coelho's statement, made available to news organizations, made no mention of it, but several legislators said privately that he had been admonished by others not to run for higher leadership. He would become more of a target, and further injure the party structure, already reeling because of Wright's travails, they said.

Rep. Tony Coelho

Coelho remained out of public view on Saturday. His statement said the resignation is effective June 15 — his 47th birthday.

Even before Coelho dropped out, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri was being urged to run for the majority leader's post. With his friend Coelho out of the race, Gephardt began his campaign in earnest Saturday.

Gephardt said he was "stunned" by Coelho's decision and praised the California congressman as "an extraordinarily able and effective leader."

Gephardt gave up a job in the Democratic leadership to run for president in 1988. He is now promising colleagues he will not run for president in 1992 if he wins the majority leader's job.

Rep. Ed Jenkins, D-Ga., began campaigning for leader last week as an alternative to Coelho and said Saturday he was still in the running.

Jenkins declined to handicap his race against Gephardt, but said many members saw "a need to bring some new blood, maybe outside the (established) leadership group, into the game for the good of the party and of the institution."

Jenkins has support from Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

At least a three-way race was under way for the whip's post, between Beryl Anthony, D-Ark., who holds Coelho's former post as chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee; Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., the chief deputy whip, and William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Democratic Caucus.

The election for speaker would be held immediately if Wright were to leave because the House cannot function with that constitutionally-mandated job vacant.

Priesthood was first career choice of California Democrat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Politics wasn't the first career choice of Tony Coelho.

The California Democrat, whose savvy and partisan skills helped him climb to the highest ranks of Congress, originally wanted to be a Catholic priest.

But while Coelho, the son of a San Joaquin Valley dairy farmer, was attending college at Loyola University in Los Angeles, he was rejected for the priesthood after he discovered he had epilepsy.

At that point, Coelho got a lucky break. Dolores Hope, wife of the famed comedian Bob Hope, heard about his problems and persuaded her husband to offer help.

Hope suggested that Coelho could serve the public in another way — politics.

The young college graduate came to Washington, went into the office of his congressman, Rep. B.F. Sisk, and got hired.

Within five years, Coelho became Sisk's administrative assistant, his top aide, and when Sisk retired in 1978, Coelho was ready at the age of 36. He ran for Sisk's seat and won easily, polling 60 percent, a margin that rose with succeeding elections.

He announced Saturday that he will resign June 15 — his 47th birthday. He said he decided to resign to spare himself and his party the ordeal of a protracted ethics investigation into a $100,000 junk bond deal in 1986.

In the House, Coelho showed himself to be an adept politician and quickly won a reputation for fierce partisanship. In his first term, he was picked for the Agriculture Committee, a choice seat for a freshman congressman and a key post for a man from his district.

While taking care of his district, Coelho also kept an eye on the internal politics of the House and when the chairmanship of the House Democratic Campaign Committee opened up in 1981, he jumped in quickly and won the job.

Coelho had few contenders for the position. The panel had been outspent by a large margin by its House Republican counterpart, Ronald Reagan had just been elected president and swept a Republican-controlled Senate into power along with him, and House Democrats were reeling.

But Coelho, working long hours, fought back.

He worked on building a large direct mail, fund-raising list and also traveled widely across the country, beating the bushes and trying to convince businessmen and others with money that the Democrats — not the Republicans — were the party of the future.

Coelho also courted the political action committees — the PACs which control millions of dollars. He reminded them which party — his — controlled the House.

Coelho's efforts paid off. The committee began raising more money, and its candidates did well. In 1982, when the GOP had been expected to make inroads into the House Democratic margin, the Democrats picked up 26 seats. Two years later, when a popular Reagan was winning a second term with 59 percent of the vote, Coelho's money helped hold Democratic losses to only 15 seats.

In 1986, the Democrats picked up a net of five seats and Coelho was looking to move higher in the House leadership after the retirement of popular Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.

When Jim Wright of Texas, then majority leader, succeeded O'Neill as speaker, Coelho moved up to the whip's job, the third-ranking position. It put him firmly on the path to greater power.

Adrian MacNab, a metallurgical expert, takes detailed photographs of the rupture in the Calnev Pipe Line Co.'s gasoline pipeline in San Bernadino, Calif., Friday, after it was excavated.

Neighborhood residents traumatized by two disasters

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — Dudley Brewster and his family are refugees from a disaster they were told would never happen.

They had been assured by officials that a devastating train wreck in their modest suburban neighborhood on May 12 posed no risk to a 14-inch gasoline pipeline buried near the tracks.

The pipe had been inspected. The trains would roll again. Everything was safe.

Then, Thursday morning, as Brewster took a morning walk, the familiar rumble of a freight train was followed by an unusual sight: a geyser of gasoline spraying dozens of feet into the air.

Suddenly, a thunderous explosion rocked the neighborhood and flames engulfed everything. Brewster woke his wife and two sons, ages 6 and 12, and tried to get to his truck in the garage, but the flames beat them back. They blindly ran into the street and sprinted to safety several blocks away.

The blast killed two people, injured 31 and destroyed 10 homes. It was less than two weeks after a runaway train plowed through homes across the street, killing four people.

Among the burned homes was the one rented by the Brewsters.

"All I've got left is a set of keys that don't go to anything," Brewster said.

He is not alone in his loss, nor in his bitterness and fear. The disasters have sent waves of anger, apprehension and uncertainty through this blue-collar neighborhood of modern, ranch-style homes, many of them only a few feet away from the train tracks.

Counselors who were summoned to the neighborhood found adults and children alike who spoke as if they had just left a combat zone. Mental health workers said they expect many people to suffer the same long-term problems that afflict war veterans.

And everywhere — in hospitals, rescue shelters and hotel rooms — people expressed a strong fear of returning to the old neighborhood, certain that any assurances that the area is safe are nothing but lies.

"They don't want to come back. Nobody wants to come back," said San Bernardino City Councilwoman Valerie Pope-Ludlam.

Cita Wilson, 18, was sleeping Thursday morning when she felt the rumble of what she assumed was a passing train, a sensation that still jangled nerves among those who lived by the tracks.

This time, she rolled over to go back to sleep, but was pulled out of her slumber again by the shouts of her neighbor.

"It felt like an earthquake," said Ms. Wilson, who leaped for the door. "The whole neighborhood was orange and red. That's all I saw. I just went outside and ran. I ran north. I just kept running."

Ms. Wilson was unharmed and her home escaped damage, but like many people, she doesn't want to go back to a neighborhood she hardly recognizes anymore.

Duffy Street, in the heart of the damaged area, resembles an eerie black moonscape covered with gutted cars, charred trees, blackened telephone poles and the skeletons of homes. At one house, all that remains of a garage is a small piece of wood holding a padlock; at another home, what once was a swimming pool is now a black pit.

"When the train fell off the track, I was there by myself," Ms. Wilson said. "When the explosion happened, I was there by myself. And now I'm afraid to be by myself."

Counselors who have spoken to dozens of residents said Ms. Wilson's feelings are common.

Pipeline blast probe continues; 300 kept from homes

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — Nearly 300 people were kept from their homes Saturday while investigators tried to find out why an underground gasoline pipeline blew up in the same spot where a train derailed two weeks earlier.

Two people, and possibly a third, were killed in the explosion, which enveloped a suburban neighborhood in a cauldron of gas-fed flames Thursday morning.

"We are still searching, still investigating the area," said police spokeswoman Bernita Joyner.

An angry city official, meanwhile, said the owner of the pipeline had proposed to move the rebuilt line closer to homes that survived the rupture and explosion, rather than farther away as the city has urged.

"This has to be one of the most callous examples of corporate greed in the United States of America," City Attorney James Penman said. "After killing those people they are going to move the pipeline closer to the survivors."

Penman did not know how much it would cost to move the pipeline, but said Calnev Pipe Line Co. officials are "arguing that the new pipe will be brand new and it will be safer than the pipe that's in question."

"We're astonished," Penman said. "It's unbelievable."

He said Calnev officials decided that the city's proposal to move the 14-inch pressurized fuel line to the far side of the railroad tracks, about a mile away from any homes, "is going to cost them too much money."

The city attorney said Calnev officials canceled a meeting arranged to discuss the relocation, as well as restitution for area residents.

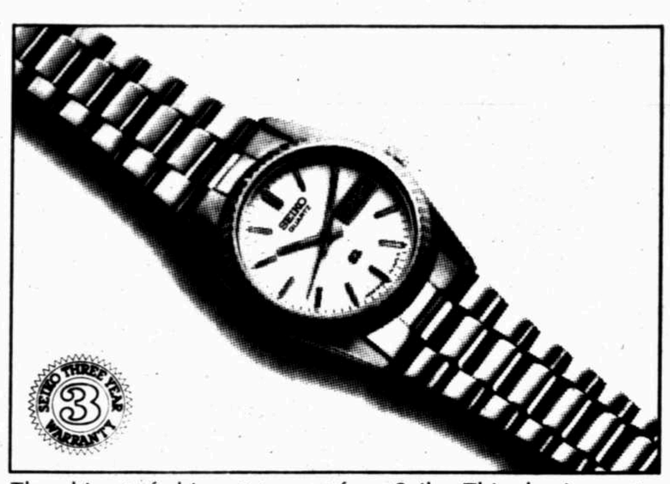

A telephone call left for Charles P. Diamond, an attorney representing Calnev, was not immediately returned. A Calnev secretary said company officials were in a meeting and were unavailable for comment.

Ten homes were destroyed and five were damaged in the eight-hour fire. Seventy homes were evacuated, and Ms. Joyner said it was unclear when the 270 displaced people would be be allowed to return home.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators were at the scene but were not immediately available for comment.

The death toll from official sources has fluctuated, rising to three, then reduced to two. Saturday the city police spokeswoman said there were three dead: a woman, another adult and a child. But Deputy Coroner Jim Sedgwick said as far as he knew the San Bernardino County coroner's office had received two bodies.

AT&T, unions near contract agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — AT&T and unions representing about 160,000 workers were near agreement on new contracts Saturday, resolving disputes over medical benefits and wages in a frenetic final day of bargaining that made a settlement appear imminent as a midnight deadline approached.

The only remaining obstacle to a settlement was a dispute over job-classification titles in the information systems division of AT&T Technologies, said a source who predicted a resolution by midnight.

In the overall agreement being worked out by American Telephone & Telegraph and the unions was a wage and profit-sharing package that should bring workers raises of more than 10 percent over three years, the source said. It is the first time AT&T has offered profit sharing to its union workers.

The source, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the unions had fought off AT&T's demand that workers pay more up front for health care costs, the issue that dominated the talks from their outset in March.

AT&T won concessions allowing it to amend certain job titles and thereby expand the duties of certain workers, one source said.

Also included was a package of parental, family and elder-care leave provisions. The family and elder-care provisions would allow workers to take six months off to care for a sick parent, spouse or child without losing seniority, the source said.

Rogers forgoes apology

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Capt. Will C. Rogers III ended his two-year command of the USS Vincennes Saturday without apology for the cruiser's mistaken destruction of an Iranian airliner and with a call to combat terrorism.

Navy Capt. Robert B. Lynch took over as the new commander of the Aegis cruiser that Rogers defended as "a masterpiece of American technology and ingenuity," despite past criticisms.

Rogers made no mention of the airliner's destruction July 3, 1988, instead focusing on a pipe bomb attack last March that destroyed a van driven by his wife, Sharon, as she drove to work. Mrs. Rogers escaped injury.

The van bombing remains under investigation by the FBI as a possible act of terrorism.

Rogers, speaking to a crowd of about 200 aboard the heavily guarded ship, denounced terrorism, saying it is a "subterranean and shadowy war" that "preys on a lack of courage and enlists those without moral conviction."

Shotguns turned on pigeons

RANDOLPH, Neb. (AP) — A posse armed with shotguns killed about 50 pigeons after changing from lighter ammunition that was "pretty much bouncing off" the birds, police said.

A one-block area was sealed off and police authorized eight people to shoot the pigeons, which had been damaging buildings and posing a health hazard to the community, said Police Chief Elliot Arens.

"Last week we used 8-shot and it was pretty much bouncing off. We were hitting them and the feathers would fly and they just kept going," Arens said.

Search for victims of bridge collapse thwarted

CINCINNATI (AP) — Powerful currents that collapsed and swallowed a temporary one-lane bridge over the Great Miami River prevented authorities from finding any victims or their vehicles Saturday.

The American Red Cross said seven people remained unaccounted for, but there was no way to know how many of them might have been on the bridge when it fell into the river Friday evening. Authorities said efforts to find them could be thwarted for at least several days by the rushing, muddy water.

Officials are uncertain how many vehicles plunged into the river when a 100-foot section of the bridge collapsed. Eyewitness accounts differed, but authorities believed at least two vehicles were on the bridge section when it gave out. The number of passengers aboard was unclear.

"We still have no idea," said Capt. Arthur Reid of the Hamilton County Sheriff's Department.

The river, a tributary of the Ohio River, jumped its banks Friday following heavy overnight rains that took two lives elsewhere in Ohio and caused hundreds of thousands of dollars of damage in Illinois.

County engineers said the bridge was ordered closed a few minutes before the collapse because of the danger from debris pinned against it, but the order had not been carried out when the bridge collapsed.

The river was searched Saturday by helicopter, but no trace of vehicles or victims was found. Authorities tried to use an air-supported boat, but without success.

The river crested early Saturday at about 24 feet, eight feet over flood stage.

"Now it's just a matter of time before it starts receding," Reid said.

The fast-flowing river, littered with trees, tires and other debris, left searchers virtually helpless. Reid said recovery efforts will be stalled until the waters subside.

"You can't even put divers out — it's too dangerous," Reid said. "Our boats can't handle the swift currents."

The bridge collapsed at Miamitown, a town of 700 people about seven miles from Cincinnati on the western side of Hamilton County. Dozens of people gathered at the ends of the bridge Saturday, craning their necks to see the missing section.

Chaplains from the sheriff's department were at the scene in case counseling was needed, but the Rev. Bruno Kremp said there wasn't much for them to do because of the lingering uncertainty over the victims' identities.

The one-lane temporary bridge has been in use for only a few months. It was erected last year to keep traffic flowing while a 94-year-old bridge is torn down and rebuilt a few feet to the south. Traffic lights at either end of the 300-foot temporary bridge regulated traffic over the narrow span.

The county's chief engineer, William Brayshaw, said he ordered the bridge closed Friday immediately after the bridge contractor, National Engineering Co. of Strongsville, Ohio, told him that the debris-choked river posed a danger to the span. The collapse occurred before workers could reach it and set up barricades.

"The car in front of us just dropped straight down," said Sharon Boebinger, who was waiting to cross the bridge when it collapsed. "I said, 'Oh my God.' I put it in reverse and backed up. I didn't feel the bridge shake at all. It just happened in an instant."

Floods caused by heavy thunderstorms elsewhere in Ohio were blamed for the deaths of a 20-month-old boy who drowned after falling into a swollen creek near his grandmother's home and a 24-year-old Fostoria woman whose car was washed into a river.

FOR YOUR EYES

NEAR AND DEAR

Nearsightedness of myopia is a vision condition in which near objects are seen more clearly than objects that are far away. Two of every five people can be expected to develop myopia. Usually, if myopia ocurs, it begins before the age of 25. A few children are born with it. The cause is not known absolutely, but some experts believe it may be caused by visual stress. For example, during the school years, the eyes are subjected to a lot of reading and close work. Others blame metabolism, diet, lighting conditions, posture or heredity. There is not one factor that relates to all cases. Squinting is a common sign. Myopic persons may become aware of a difficulty in distinguishing details in faraway objects like scoreboards, movie screens or road signs. Myopia is correctable with the use of prescription eyeglasses, contact lenses or vision therapy.

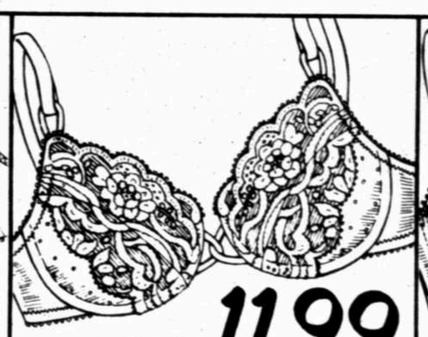

A deficiency in vision serves to adversely affect one's lifestyle, happines and overall well-being. A periodic checkup will serve to detect such a problem and allow for correction. For your visual health, overally happiness and total enjoyment of your surrounding, call TEXAS STATE OPTICAL, Midland Park Mall, today for an appointment. Tel. 699-1300 or 697-7963. VISA, MasterCard, AMEX and Discover accepted.

P.S. Although myopia cannot be prevented, in many cases, treatment can be prescribed to stop or slow down its progression.

China again convulsed by change

By KATHY WILHELM

WORLD

BEIJING (AP) — As so often in its recent history, China is in a convulsion, seemingly unable to escape the pattern of using force or the threat of it to settle political differences and achieve change.

Once again, as in the violent 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, the leaders and masses caught up in the struggle seem oblivious to the possible damage to China's careful advances in economic reform.

This time, however, the issues are clearer than in the far-leftist Cultural Revolution, when a power struggle was cloaked in ideology.

At stake now is whether the Communist Party will continue to determine China's future, or whether it will allow students or any other group a small voice.

Although other demands were raised during six weeks of student protests that climaxed in a top-level power struggle, the students' key demand is for a meeting, on equal terms, at which specific reforms such as a free press can be discussed.

Reformist party chief Zhao Ziyang endorsed a dialogue, and for a brief time student leaders believed he was winning a power struggle with hardliners. Some hoped that under him, China might take its first major step away from a 2,000-year-old tradition of autocracy.

But by last week's end, it was clear that hardliners under senior leader Deng Xiaoping and Premier Li Peng were in charge.

Fears of violent conflict between protesters and soldiers — and among military units on opposing sides of the power struggle — subsided as soldiers ordered by Li to enforce martial law moved to the outskirts of Beijing.

Li seemed willing to wait before trying to enforce the martial law that so far has existed in name only.

Street marches waned and barely 10,000 students continued a sit-in at Tiananmen Square that began May 13 and peaked with 200,000 participants. However, students and workers said they would hold new mass marches this week.

But even if the movement dies, it will only be a matter of time before Deng is challenged again by the same clamor for democracy from students, intellectuals, workers and others whose non-material aspirations the party has ignored for 40 years.

Their voice has gained strength with each round of protests. In 1978, hundreds of students and workers put posters on a wall in Beijing calling for reform. In 1986, students marched several hundred thousand strong. This month, more than 1 million students, workers, teachers, doctors, police, government workers, party members and soldiers joined the chorus.

Little popular respect remains for leaders who have been seen as ready to go to any extreme to protect their power. Even children joined the mocking chant, "Xiaoping, your mind is not sharp."

Beijing residents will not forget soon the heady sense of power it gave them.

During the height of the protests, many careened down streets in flatbed trucks, whooping and waving flags. They hung Li in effigy and satirized Deng.

It was a mass catharsis for citizens of one of the world's most tightly controlled societies. Even the army lost prestige.

"Something has snapped in the entire political system," said a Western diplomat. "It's impossible to put it back together again the way it was."

Some players may be off the stage for good. Zhao was reported under house arrest, several other top officials were reported in serious trouble and a purge of liberals in the party, academia and the media was predicted.

Li said most of the student protesters will be regarded as patriots but that "a tiny minority" of student leaders conspired to overthrow the party and will be punished.

They can expect to go the way of Wei Jingsheng, the last impetuous youth who dared take Deng's name in vain in public. Wei, a 29-year-old electrician, helped lead the 1978 Democracy Wall movement and is serving a 15-year prison term.

Semi-retired conservative Chen Yun, 84, in a televised speech blamed the student protests on "a relaxation in Marxist ideological education," indicating the nation may face a strident anti-Western, anti-liberal political campaign like the one that followed the 1986-87 student protests.

For a time, at least, writers and artists who had been enjoying a gradual relaxation of censorship will have to feel their way carefully.

Pressures for economic conservatism also will increase. Deng sponsored a 10-year-old reform program that stimulated the economy by reducing central planning and introducing elements of the free market.

But the reforms have been stalled since September while the government tries to end supply bottlenecks, corruption and more than 30-percent inflation. Liberal economists prescribed faster dismantling of the old system.

In order to defeat Zhao, however, Deng was forced to seek support from aging revolutionaries such as Chen, who may insist on moving slowly and even re-asserting some controls.

The government also may have scared off some foreign investment by its harsh response to the protests, which negated the image it had carefully cultived of a united, rational leadership.

Ripples will be felt in the British colony of Hong Kong, from which thousands of professionals already have fled in anticipation of the return to Chinese rule in 1997. The crackdown will only encourage further exodus.

In the end, the huge masses of protesters in Beijing and other cities seemed irrelevant to the power struggle itself, the outcome of which was determined by the allegiances of military commanders and votes in the party Politburo.

Without mass support, however, Deng's rule will be shaky. Furthermore, he and the party elders who rallied to him cannot live forever. Deng is known to suffer from minor illnesses and his public statements have become rambling.

He or a successor will be forced eventually to respond to the masses: to students galvanized by the writings of Thomas Jefferson, Henry David Thoreau and other Western individualists, to workers who see inflation erode their buying power while corrupt officials get fat.

A Chinese student catches some shuteye as he waits with fellow students at the Beijing railroad station Saturday. The government has offered the students free tickets back to their home provinces.

Bush meets pope, leaders of Italy's caretaker government

ROME (AP) — President Bush met Saturday with Pope John Paul II and leaders of Italy's caretaker government while his spokesman said flatly the United States will not reduce its European troop levels without consulting its NATO allies.

"In the final analysis, this is something that the president will want to discuss directly with his partners," Marlin Fitzwater, the spokesman, said.

He suggested a cutback was probable, saying he did not "want to signal anything in advance," but made it clear that no U.S. troops will be withdrawn without the endorsement of NATO leaders at the summit that begins Monday in Brussels.

Bush told Prime Minister Ciriaco De Mita that, in concert with the NATO allies, he intends to seize on the "openings" offered by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev for arms reductions, Fitzwater said.

The pope, meanwhile, praised Bush for his stand against narcotics, calling drug use "a moral crisis." Bush said he benefited from John Paul II's "wise counsel."

The president also said he shares the Vatican's concern for world peace. "We've made progress in reducing armaments," Bush said.

Later, at a state dinner with De Mita, Bush announced that Italians soon will be able to visit the United States without obtaining visas, joining Britain and Japan in a U.S. program giving easier entry privileges to residents of selected countries.

President George Bush gestures while standing with Pope John Paul II in the papal library at the Vatican Saturday evening.

Among the guests who shook hands with Bush at the glittering dinner was Italian Communist Party head Achille Occhetto. But elsewhere, leftist demonstrators clashed with riot police to protest the Bush visit. Three police and a woman bystander were injured, and 18 demonstrators were detained for questioning.

Monday in Brussels, the president will meet with the leaders of the 15 U.S. allies in NATO.

Many of them are eager to have the United States match a series of weapons reductions pledged by Gorbachev. Fitzwater said the latest Soviet moves, which include a willingness to impose limits on Soviet troops in Eastern Europe, presented "some opportunities, and those are openings that need to be discussed with the allies and will be."

The White House spokesman, in a subtle policy shift, said the United States was now willing to negotiate over troop levels in the East-West talks being held in Vienna.

Until now, the NATO allies have tried to concentrate the talks on tanks, artillery and armored personnel carriers. The Soviets, on the other hand, have insisted on dealing directly with the levels of NATO and Warsaw Pact forces.

Fitzwater, responding to Gorbachev's acceptance of equal ceilings in the two alliances, said "it's a matter for discussion."

His comments Saturday came after reports that the United States was considering a reduction in the 305,000 to 325,000 U.S. troops in Europe.

Fitzwater took a similar tack in responding to questions about whether the United States is preparing to lift economic sanctions imposed on the Soviet Union in 1980 after the invasion of Afghanistan.

"The president will be discussing a variety of ideas, many of them never presented before," Fitzwater said.

Discussing U.S. forces, Fitzwater said flatly that "The United States will not unilaterally withdraw troops from Europe."

John Sununu, the White House chief of staff, said in an interview to be telecast today by Cable News Network that "You're not going to see unilateral action taken by one country or another. It will be an alliance action."

A senior U.S. official said, meanwhile, that any action would be taken as part of the Conventional Forces in Europe, or CFE, talks in Vienna.

Any suggestion of a U.S. troop withdrawal is bound to have an impact on the allies as they consider a West German drive — opposed by Bush — for negotiations to reduce ground-based nuclear missiles in Europe.

Saturday, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl warned against delays in negotiating missile reductions, but British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher — a strong supporter of the U.S. position — argued that such cuts would be aimed at "the jugular of NATO."

Italy is a strong supporter of the United States inside the Western alliance on most defense issues. While Bush cannot count on the Italians to side with him in opposing nuclear missile negotiations with Moscow, his two-day stop reflects strong ties with Rome.

Accompanied by Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Brent Scowcroft, the national security adviser, Bush met with Prime Minister De Mita at a 16th century hillside villa and then had lunch with President Francesco Cossiga in a Wuirinale Palace hall.

He announced the liberalized U.S. entry rules for Italians at a state dinner with the prime minister, saying, "In the future, Italians who wish to visit our country, whether as tourists or on business, will no longer need to apply for visas, and we look forward to that day." His announcement prompted warm applause at the black-tie event.

He also held an unscheduled meeting with Bettino Craxi, the Socialist Party leader and prime minister from 1983 to 1987. Bush's audience with the Pope later at the Vatican gave a colorful and photogenic twist to his first day in Europe as president.

The pope praised Bush for his deep commitment "to liberate the youth of America from the destructive forces of drug abuse and to alleviate poverty at home and abroad." He said these problems were "only symptoms of a deeper moral crisis eating away at the very texture of society."

Soviet congress rejects prominent reformers

MOSCOW (AP) — The new Soviet congress dealt reformists a major setback Saturday by rejecting maverick Boris Yeltsin and several other prominent reformers who were seeking seats on the powerful Supreme Soviet legislature.

Yeltsin

Thousands of Muscovites disappointed with the results gathered for a rally that lasted through the night, and reformers in congress vowed to form an opposition bloc to challenge the ruling Communist Party.

"Down with the bloodsuckers who prey on the people!" roared one speaker at the rally.

The furor was set off when the 2,250-seat Congress of People's Deputies chose which of its members would serve on the new Supreme Soviet, a full-time, 542-seat legislature.

The election results and blunt debate that followed were televised live.

"The supreme power in the country should belong to the people, but in reality it belongs to the party," said Ales Adamovich, a writer from Byelorussia and member of the congress.

During a recess, President Mikhail S. Gorbachev sought to reassure Soviets accustomed to decades of empty institutional ritual that such clashes of opinion are to be expected.

"One need not panic," he said in remarks broadcast later on national television. "We cannot sit ceremoniously at the meetings knowing that outside the hall, there is a stormy life with a lot of problems."

Congressional deputies voted Friday to fill the Supreme Soviet seats from among 573 candidates chosen by congress deputies from their home regions. The results were announced Saturday.

The congress rejected an 11th-hour attempt by Gorbachev to have his protege, Anatoly I. Lukyanov, installed as vice president. Weary deputies loudly complained the president's choice was being forced through, and Gorbachev agreed to put the matter off until Monday.

In secret balloting for the Supreme Soviet, congressional deputies elected a number of reform advocates from the tiny Baltic republics, whose representatives nominated only as many candidates as they had seats.

Moscow deputies, however, nominated 55 candidates for their 29 seats, and Yeltsin and other prominent Moscow-based reformers were among the losers. Also defeated were sociologist Tatyana Zaslavskaya, economist Gavril Popov, advocate for the handicapped Ilya Zaslavsky, historian Sergei Stankev[illegible] and biologist Alexei Yablokov.

Many old-style candidates, among them former cosmonaut Svetlana Savitskaya, defeated the reformers.

Yeltsin scored a landslide victory in Moscow in spring elections for the Congress of People's Deputies and is among the country's most popular political figures. He said he was saddened by the results but indicated he may challenge Lukyanov for the vice presidency.

"I must fight to the end," Yeltsin told reporters. "I wouldn't throw away any job."

Several thousand Muscovites gathered in a stadium parking lot to protest Yeltsin's defeat. One speaker, teacher Vladimir Kuznetsov, said he sent a telegram to Gorbachev telling him, "I have less and less respect for you and more and more" for progressive Moscow deputies.

Moslems march in London to protest 'Verses'

LONDON (AP) — Thousands of Moslems Saturday fought among themselves and clashed with police during a march to demand Britain change its blasphemy laws and allow them to challenge "The Satanic Verses" in court.

Police said 84 people were arrested and six policemen were injured during the march, most in street battles in front of the Houses of Parliament.

An estimated 20,000 demonstrators waved banners denouncing author Salman Rushdie and shouted slogans such as "Rushdie must die!" as they began their march in Hyde Park.

An effigy of Rushdie hanging from gallows was thrust high into the air. Rushdie, a British author, wrote "The Satanic Verses," a novel that some say is insulting to Islam.

Lawmaker Keith Vaz of the opposition Labor Party called on Rushdie and his publisher, Penguin, to withdraw the novel from circulation in Britain, home to an estimated 850,000 Moslems.

Protesters then marched to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's office at 10 Downing St., where representatives handed in a petition demanding a change in Britain's ancient blasphemy laws.

Britain's rarely used blasphemy law makes it illegal only to insult the Christian state Church of England. Moslems want it extended to reflect Britain's multi-ethnic society, saying this would give them legal grounds for opposing "The Satanic Verses."

At their next stop in Parliament Square, thousands of protesters stood under Big Ben and blocked traffic as fighting broke out among crowd members. Riot police poured into the area to break up the clashes and force protesters onto Westminster Bridge, out of the square.

A Scotland Yard spokesman said fighting broke out among younger members of the demonstration "for reasons best known to themselves."

He said the demonstrators refused to move but then resumed the march after protest organizers announced over a loudspeaker that police had assured them the arrested people would be released.

After the skirmishes the protesters continued their march to their final destination in south London's Kennington where they dispersed.

Rushdie, born to a Moslem family in India, is a British citizen and has been in hiding in England since Feb. 14, when Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini ordered Moslems to kill him.

Moslems say "The Satanic Verses" blasphemes Islam by associating the prophet Mohammed with prostitutes and suggesting that the Koran, Islam's holy book, was Mohammed's invention, not the work of God.

At the start of Saturday's protest, Moslem men sat in circles on the grass in Hyde Park and punched the air with their fists as they called for the British government to change the blasphemy law.

The International Committee For The Defense of Salman Rushdie and His Publishers issued a statement calling on demonstration leaders to repudiate Khomeini's death threat. The statement said the death threat violated international law and contradicted "the principle of reverence for life which underlies all religions."

The committee agreed with the demonstrators that the blasphemy law discriminated against Moslems and other non-Christians but said it should be repealed.

Israelis kill guerrilla who fired from border

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops shot and killed a guerrilla today after he opened fire from the Jordanian side of the border, the army said. Two soldiers were slightly wounded, it said.

Jordan, in an official broadcast, suggested the attacker was a distraught Jordanian soldier who had abandoned his observation post at the border.

The attack occurred about 6:30 a.m. near the kibbutz, or communal settlement, of Hamadiya, the military command said. Hamadiya is 50 miles northeast of Jerusalem.

The Israeli army said one of its patrols near a border fence "encountered light weapons fire from east of the fence" and returned fire.

Soldiers searched the area after the firefight and found the body of a guerrilla dressed in a military-type uniform and armed with the U.S.-made, M-16 assault rifle, an army spokesman said.

The body was found on the Jordanian side of the border, he said.

New York cardinal says he would meet with hostages

BKIRKI, Lebanon (AP) — Cardinal John O'Connor of New York arrived Saturday on a visit aimed at focusing the world's attention on foreign hostages held in Lebanon and on the bitter fighting between Christian and Moslem forces.

O'Connor said he did not come to Lebanon to negotiate on behalf of the United States but he would gladly meet with the hostages, even if that meant entering the Moslem sector of Beirut.

"I hope that they can hear my voice or can see me or can read that the people of our country have not forgotten them. They're in our prayers," he said.

Among the missing foreigners is Anglican church envoy Terry Waite, who came on a mission to try to gain the release of hostages. He disappeared in Beirut on Jan. 20, 1988, after leaving his hotel for a meeting with captors of some of the victims.

Before O'Connor arrived, Syrian gunners shelled the Christian coastline north of Beirut, despite an appeal by Arab leaders to observe a cease-fire.

More than 350 people have been killed and nearly 1,400 wounded since March 8 when the latest round of fighting broke in Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war.

O'Connor said the fighting in Lebanon, in which the Christian forces are heavily outnumbered and outgunned by the Syrians and their allies, has been largely ignored by the U.S. and world media.

"This is extraordinary, that a nation is being destroyed, a religious body is being almost obliterated and an organism where so many religions lived harmoniously is being torn apart and we really haven't responded," he said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Tomb unearthed in Iraq

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Archaeologists have unearthed the gold-stuffed tomb of two women in what appears to be the richest discovery ever made at ancient Nimrud in northern Iraq.

The 2,700-year-old tomb in the palace of King Ashurnasirpal II contained more than 55 pounds of gold jewelry including diadems, necklaces, earrings, belts and anklets, the English-language Baghdad Observer reported Friday.

The official Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, carried details of the newspaper report.

Nimrud, a sprawling site 250 miles north of Baghdad, was a major city of the Assyrian empire that extended from the Persian Gulf to the Mediterranean in the first millennium B.C.

Ashurnasirpal II was a ruthless but brilliant military leader who built the vast palace at Nimrud in the 9th century B.C.

Scores of Iraqi and foreign archaeological teams have dug at Nimrud in a century-and-a-half of excavations since British explorer Henry Layard uncovered huge stone sculptures and inscriptions there in the 1840s.

Cyclone hits Indian coast

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — A cyclone killed 17 people in eastern India and then blew across the border to Bangladesh, where 15 more people died, officials and news reports said Saturday.

Winds racing at 80 mph hit the Indian coast late Friday, leaving more than 50,000 people homeless, the Press Trust of India news agency said.

Finance Minister Asim Dasgupta of West Bengal state told reporters 15 people died when at least 10,000 mud and straw houses collapsed in Midnapore, the most severely hit district.

But PTI quoted district police chief Ashok Abrol as saying 17 people were killed in Midnapore, 75 miles southwest of the state capital, Calcutta.

Botha meets U.S. official

ROME (AP) — South African Foreign Minister Roelof Botha met with Secretary of State James A. Baker III Saturday and pledged anew to end white domination of blacks in his country.

Baker and Botha also discussed a planned visit to Washington by F.W. DeKlerk, the leader of South Africa's governing National Party and the man expected to become the country's president later this year.

Baker, in a brief exchange with reporters after the meeting, said Botha had "indicated to us it is the intention of the South African government to abolish the system of apartheid and we were pleased to hear that."

Jaeger plans new direction for orchestra

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Don Jaeger is anxious to put his own "stamp of discipline" on the Midland-Odessa Symphony.

"I don't mean discipline like spanking your children," Jaeger said. "I am referring to the requirements that must be understood by each of the musicians relating to their own performance in the orchestra. We refer to that as orchestral discipline, and each conductor has his or her own way of operating in terms of establishing that discipline."

Jaeger has been hired as the musical director and conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale. Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, who held the position for 15 years, announced last fall this would be his final season.

For Jaeger, "precise rhythmic ensemble is a high priority" and one of the things he will emphasize along with the other "basic tenets of good musicianship.

"So many of those things really have to come first before there's significant music making," he says.

Jaeger was in town this week to meet symphony board members, attend meetings, work with Connie Linsler, the organization's general manager, on the upcoming season and be honored, along with his wife, Ann, at a welcoming reception.

His three-year contract begins Thursday, and his first performance with the symphony will be in late August.

He was here this spring as were several other prospective conductors as part of the audition process. At that time, he conducted the symphony in a two-and-a-half hour rehearsal.

"Quite honestly, it's the musicians who are auditioning," Jaeger said of the experience. "They were all asked to fill out an evaluation form. It's a little bit backward from the usual situation when you are conducting because most of the time it's the musicians who audition for the conductor."

Don Jaeger

Jaeger began his musical career as an oboist, studying at the Amsterdam Conservatory as a Fulbright Scholar and at the Mozarteum in Salzburg. He was an oboist under Eduard van Beinum and Sir Georg Solti and won a bronze medal in the Prague Spring International Competition for woodwinds.

While in Midland, he found the symphony to be a "very fine orchestra. There are some areas as in most orchestras — short of the Chicago Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra — that need attention, but overall the ensemble is very good. They certainly perform with a commitment."

Teen prodigy finds place in cockpit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Young Tex Edwards is earning a reputation as an unflappable flying ace making aviation history in the "middle of nowhere" by flying seaplanes over the dry West Texas plains.

Not only does he fly World War II-vintage and newer aircraft over the plains, the 17-year-old pilot soars with the natural flow of an eagle — about as gracefully as featherless man can propel himself in a flying machine.

Tex soloed three aircraft on his 16th birthday — the earliest age for a legal solo flight in the United States — Dec. 22, 1987.

Exactly a year later, he earned his private pilot's license at age 17 — the earliest age to win "wings." In doing so, Tex made aviation history by getting his single-engine land-and-sea and multi-engine land-and-sea ratings and picked up his type rating in the World War II-vintage PBY Catalina flying boat.

The aviation prodigy, started flying at a "very early age," which his father Connie Edwards interpreted as 3½ to 4 years old. And Tex was "flying instruments" before he could fly VFR (visual flight rules) simply because he was so small he couldn't see over the instrument panel to discern the horizon.

"My dad taught me how to fly all of the airplanes," Tex said without fanfare on his father's ranch.

The ranch is the setting of the private Edwards International Airport, which, at 2,505-foot elevation, has a 5,200-foot paved runway and the country's largest private collection of seaplanes. Also at the airport are a Sherman tank, a missile-armed half-track, an olive-drab Burma Jeep, and an international squadron of three of the world's most famed World War II fighters: the German Messerschmitt Me.109, the North American P-51D Mustang, and the British Vickers Supermarine Spitfire.

Ed Todd/Reporter-Telegram

Tex Edwards, in the left seat as pilot-in-command of a twin-engine Grumman Albatross seaplane, is ready to take off for his check ride with Federal Aviation Administration examiner Ronnie Gardner of Grapevine.

Edwards' vast ranch headquarters, protected by guard dogs, fences, look-outs and imaginative no-trespassing signs features a modern stone castle replete with turrets and gargoyles, but without moat and drawbridge.

Connie Edwards is an avid aviator, an adventurer, and an opportunist whose confidence and flying expertise, no doubt, inspired his son.

Edwards, who believes only real airplanes have propellers, flew Curtiss C-46 transports and the P-38 Lightning fighter for the Nicaraguan Air Force in the Central-America revolutions of the early 1950s, flew Douglas A-26 Invaders for the Central Intelligence Agency during the 1961 invasion of the Bay of Pigs, and was the chief stunt pilot for the movie, "Battle of Britain," in 1968.

"He never got interested in the acting," Tex said of his father. "All he did was fly. He was always the one that got shot down."

Edwards, 55, also flew in "The Bermuda Triangle" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" and has since turned down numerous offers to fly his warbirds in motion-picture productions. But he did give to the Experimental Aircraft Association a Corsair, Me. 109 and a P-38 Lightning.

Tex's father happens to be a rich rancher who shuns publicity, revels in flying aloft in the cockpit and in "hangar flying" and speaks plainly and boldly. His son, who was all but born in a cockpit, doesn't view his own feats as extraordinary.

But the aviation community does.

"A lot of people get their license on their 17th birthday, but they don't get them in the T-6, the PBY (Catalina), the Beech 18," the Grumman Goose seaplane, and the Super Cub with floats on the same day, said Ronnie Gardner, the Federal Aviation Administration examiner who checked out Tex Edwards in the PBY. Gardner lives in Grapevine and flies for Metro Airlines.

Gardner described Tex as an "excellent" aviator.

"It just made you mad," Gardner jested in alluding to Tex's flying expertise. "Every time he flew an airplane, he was so smooth" — on take-offs and landings on land and water. "He's sharp. He was taught right — by his dad, Randy Sohn and Richard Osborn."

Sohn is a Minnesota-based airline captain, and Osborn is a Midland-based flying-boat aviator and aerobatic pilot who is "a calm, competent and very capable pilot," said Connie Edwards. And Gardner is "as good as you'll ever find."

Gardner gave Tex Edwards a night-time check ride in the PBY last December. Their usual "seaport" is Lake Spence near Robert Lee.

Edwards' "is probably the biggest private seaplane collection in the country and right in the middle of West Texas," Gardner observed.

The collection includes the PBY Catalina; the Grumman Goose, Mallard and Albatross; the Super Cub with floats and the Piaggio amphibian.

Edwards rarely puts any of his aircraft up for public showing.

"Well, I am kind of a recluse," he said.

But many of those who are buying antique warbirds, like the North American P-51D Mustang, which can bring up to $500,000 each, are "the same type of characters who will buy a Rolls-Royce and drive down the street of Turkey, Texas."

"You get 'prestige buffs,' and I don't like" them, Edwards said.

Appeal could determine county's role in lawsuit

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Attorneys have laid the groundwork for an appeal which will determine Midland County's involvement in a lawsuit that questions the method of electing 197 state district judges in 16 Texas counties.

Written arguments have been submitted to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, La., which now must decide whether Midland County has the right to participate in the voting rights lawsuit that could result in establishing of single-member district elections for Texas judges.

County Attorney Mark Dettman, who filed the appeal, expects a ruling before the case goes to trial July 11 in federal court in Midland.

Midland County is asking the appellate court to determine whether U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton "erred in denying intervention" on behalf the three state district judges elected by Midland voters.

Also, the justices must decide whether the district court "abused its discretion in denying permissive intervention" to Midland County.

The appeal stems from a lawsuit filed in July 1988 on behalf of certain black and Hispanics, who allege that Texas' at-large scheme of electing state district judges, dilutes minority voting strength.

In filing suit, the plaintiffs targeted 205 judges in 44 Texas counties, but later narrowed their scope to 197 judges in 16 counties, including Midland County.

Midland County sought to intervene on behalf of its' three presiding state district judges in November 1988, citing "a direct, substantial and significant interest", which entitles a county to participate as a "matter of right."

However, Bunton denied the motion in January, ruling that "counties have no 'direct, substantial and legally protectable interest' in the question of whether the present judicial lines are discriminatory."

After hearing a motion for reconsideration on Feb. 27, Bunton again denied intervention; and Midland County filed a notice of appeal that same day.

According to court documents, Midland was the only county that sought to intervene as a defendant; however, state district judges from Harris and Dallas counties — as well as several black former district judges from Dallas County — were granted intervention as plaintiffs.

In its appeal, Midland County claims that the district court erred in failing to recognize the "interest" possessed by the the county and its district judges in the litigation.

The county asserts that the creation of single-member districts for state district judges would confuse voters; raise questions of venue in the judicial system; and increase the size of facilities and personnel needed for the district courts.

The appeal charges that the district court, under the guise of "lack of interest," should not be permitted to prevent its citizens from having an effective voice in the establishment and maintenance of their judicial system.

LHS boys 'skirt' school's shorts policy

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Legs are legs are legs, 15 Lee High School males believe.

But soaring hemlines and not temperatures ultimately "burned" the group during their orchestrated dress code protest last Friday.

The students will spend their four remaining school lunch hours in detention hall because they wore mini-skirts over their trousers to school.

"These kids are discussing people like Gandhi in their classes ... and wanting to make a social statement in a passive manner," said Lee student publications sponsor Kim Masey.

"They got called on it."

But Lee Principal Jack Fryar believes administrators reacted properly to the boys' antics.

"It was a routine occurrence of students not following the guidelines," the principal explained of the age-old seasonal struggle.

"We have positive guidelines that say you dress and behave in a businesslike manner.

"Our experience is that if a student will dress up a bit beyond a casual level of shorts or a mini-skirt, they act in a more businesslike manner," Fryar explained.

The "mini-protest" evolved from a suggestion made by a female reporter in the Dixie Dispatch newspaper May 19 that boys don skirts to hedge a school district ban on shorts and short skirts.

The LHS student handbook explicitly prohibits the wearing of mini-skirts or shorts above the knee, though students and parents long have complained across-the-district enforcement is hazy at best.

"I think we got a point across to students who were afraid to speak out," said participant Greg Rich, next year's first vice president of the student council.

"We've got almost 100 percent of the student body behind us and many, many, many teachers.

"I wanted it to all be peaceful and for it to show the ridiculousness of girls being able to wear mini-skirts" despite the fact boys can't wear shorts not exactly below the knee.

LHS Instructional Services Director Jane Carrens vowed. "kids have done a nice job ... wearing shorts that strike the knee," though allowed "we don't address the length of skirts."

Rich explained a letter was delivered to administrators advising "this was (going to be) a peaceful demonstration."

Nonetheless, the participants were called to assistant principal Bobby Dunn's office Friday morning for disturbing classroom procedure, said participant Spencer Wheat, president-elect of the 1990 senior class.

Dunn summoned the boys in skirts to the office over the public address system Friday morning.

"We've got some boys who think they're girls ..." Wheat recalled of Dunn's command.

Some teachers applauded the young men in support as they walked to the office, Wheat and Rich concurred.

Chinese students curious about American politics, lifestyle

This is a column I have been somewhat reluctant to pursue. I'm afraid it will make me sound ostentatious — sort of a name-dropper, if you know what I mean.

Ott

It has to do with China and all of those people, mostly students, who are protesting at Tiananmen Square in Beijing. There were about a million of them last I heard.

The fact of the matter is, I've been there. Right there on that giant square you see nightly on the news, the one featuring the huge portrait of Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

Are you impressed? Of course you are.

Do I sound ostentatious? Of course I do.

It was in the spring of '85. The Midland-based Thouvenel String Quartet had just been invited to perform a series of concerts in several Chinese cities, including Beijing. It was part of a cultural exchange program between the two countries. We've done the same thing in other areas, such as in sports. We send tall basketball players over there for exhibitions and they reciprocate by sending short ping-pong players over here. The point is, we get to know one another and hopefully attain a broader understanding of each country's customs.

Anyway, approximately 30 of the quartet's biggest supporters were to join the local musicians on the three-week tour of Mainland China. Next, they approached the newspaper about sending a representative who would be responsible for reporting on the happenings for the folks back home.

That's where I entered the picture.

Meet Gary Ott, your friendly foreign correspondent.

Once in China, we hit all of the main points — the Great Wall, the Forbidden City, the Yangtze River, etc. — but in addition, we got to talk with many of the people. Since I speak no Chinese I was limited to conversing only with people who could handle the English language — and that, almost exclusively, was the students.

Even then they would probe deeply into what we Americans were thinking, constantly asking questions about our form of government and our lifestyle.

For the most part they were curious about democracy and the kind of freedoms we enjoy here. There were inquiries about the political process and how our leaders are perceived by the electorate.

They seemed impressed that I liked Jimmy Carter, but somewhat disappointed, if not downright offended, when I off-handedly referred to Richard Nixon as "that crook." A person should always be careful what he says when visiting a foreign country.

Carter and Nixon were quite popular with the students because both are viewed as friendly to China and responsible for improving relations between the two countries.

But more than politics the students quizzed me on the lifestyle of Americans. They asked about drugs, clothes, rock concerts, music and college sports. After all, students will be students, except in this case they were vehemently opposed to drugs.

Their eyes would light up in an almost childlike manner when I answered their questions, although I must admit embellishing my remarks somewhat with favorite one-liners from country-western songs.

Still, the message was basically accurate and they were constantly overwhelmed with such routine freedoms as hanging out in nightclubs until 2 in the morning or blowing $100 on dinner for two.

Clothes were another popular subject. Those cute little blue and gray Mao suits we have come to associate with the Chinese were still common on the older people. But many of the younger residents, including the students, had a more western look. They wore regular slacks, open collar shirts and shoes with pointed toes, a bit old-fashioned by American standards, but apparently quite fashionable in Beijing.

The point is, the Chinese, particularly the younger and more educated citizens, have gradually become exposed to western ideas and customs, including that precious thing we Americans sometimes foolishly take for granted. It's called freedom.

And apparently they like what they have seen.

It seems only logical they would want to share in that good fortune.

And if that means taking to the streets, so be it.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Former Fort Worth congressman dies

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Former Fort Worth Congressman Wingate Lucas, 83, of Bristol, died Friday at his home.

A native of Grapevine, Texas, Lucas served as a U.S. congressman representing Tarrant County from 1946 to 1954. It is the same seat now held by House Speaker Jim Wright. Lucas also was former director of the Mid-Appalachian College Council, Inc.

Lucas had lived in Bristol for the past 23 years.

Lucas received his bachelor's degree from the University of Oklahoma and a doctorate of law degree from American University in Washington, D.C. He was a veteran of World War II.

Survivors include two sons, three daughters and five grandchildren.

AIR

Edwards speaks plainly and confidently, often sports a Nazi submarine commander's cap, and has definite opinions on the strengths and weaknesses of aircraft he has flown: the P-51 Mustang is a compromise in many respects, though it has excellent range and exciting looks; the German Me. 109 was a "great" airplane, was more limited in range than the P-51, and could out-turn, out-climb and out-fight the Mustang; the over-rated Spitfire had a "good press agent;" and the twin-engine P-38 Lightning was "a good-looking airplane, but it doesn't do anything well and, if it lost an engine, it would "scream like an eagle and fall like a rock."

The annual fly-in to Edwards International Airport was a prelude to today's Breckenridge Air Show — one of the nation's biggest static display and flying exhibits of "big-iron" warbirds and flying boats.

On Saturday at Breckenridge, Tex was to get checked out in the Avenger — a World War II carrier-based torpedo-bomber.

TEX, WHO IS a junior at Big Spring High School, is checked out in such airplanes as the Catalina, T-6, Beech 18, 180-horsepower Super Cub fitted with floats, Beechcraft Baron, clipped-wing Taylorcraft, twin-engine Piaggio amphibian aircraft, the STOL Maule, and the twin-engine Grumman seaplanes — Goose, Mallard, and Albatross.

Of the aircraft, the lumbering PBY "takes more of a special touch," Tex said. "You have to know what you are doing." The controls are "heavy," and the pre-war PBY has no auto-pilot.

Tex said he is unaware if his classmates know about his flying.

"I don't pay much attention," he said. "I don't walk around talking about it."

Soon, he plans to get checked out in the P-38 Lightning, B-25, DC-3 (C-47), the Corsair and other vintage aircraft.

"They say if you can fly the T-6, you can fly any" high-performance fighter, Tex said. His dad gave him the T-6 after he got his license.

"He flies his T-6 all of the time," his father said.

When he is flying the airplane, called the T-6 by the U.S. Army Air Corps and the SNJ by the U.S. Navy, Tex said he wears a helmet.

"It keeps you from eating the instrument panel if you have to ditch," he said.

Stanton pilot Fred Bowlin said Tex Edwards was "just an extraordinary little boy" when he first knew him at age 4 in the mid-1970s.

"He is an excellent aviator," Bowlin said. "Tex said he could fly instruments before he could fly VFR (visually). He wasn't tall enough to see above the instrument panel."

Tex was "never interested in kid stuff," Bowlin said. "He has always been interested in flying."

Edwards said the PBY is "not a hard plane to fly, but it is critical on landing."

Tex was flying the Catalina when he was 13. And, at age 14, Tex did much of the flying when the PBY returned to the United States from Europe in a 1986 flight that followed the transatlantic route taken in 1919 by the NC-4 (Navy-Curtiss) biwing seaplane.

"You really know you have flown something when you fly this (PBY Catalina). It's a big, old lumbering airplane," Edwards said, which "can fly into eternity."

Of Tex's viewpoint on flying, his father said: " 'There is no reason why I shouldn't. I've been doing it all of my life. I haven't done anything any kid could have done if given the same opportunity.' "

Tex Edwards is "as solid as a rock," said his father, who said his son "is not a genius" but wants "to do his 'own thing.' There is no way you can shake him. He is an ace of an aviator. He is a capable aviator — totally capable."

Service assists elderly

The Grocery Express is a grocery shopping and prescription delivery service designed for elderly or handicapped individuals — without friends or family to pick up needed items — because of health, safety or weather cannot do their own shopping.

Applicants are screened, and information about the participant, as well as a product master list is put on permanent file. Orders are submitted through the Community and Senior Services office.

The grocery list is given to a volunteer who completes the shopping. Groceries are then delivered to the participant the same day as ordered. All items must be paid for at the time of delivery by check or cash (no food stamps); minimum purchase is $10.

The Grocery Express will be available Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. For more information call 699-5023.

MUSIC

He found the orchestra "pretty well balanced" while recognizing the "need for a larger string section."

A former Texan now living in California, Jaeger was drawn to West Texas by the "strong desire here on the part of so many people, including the orchestra members, to do so many important and special things. It's the look at the total picture — the personalities of the communitites — that was of real interest to me.

"Having lived in various parts of the country, I think there's a healthier approach to achieving one's goals than you might find somewhere else."

Jaeger joined the faculty of the Interlochen Arts Academy in 1962, where he served as teacher, conductor and was a member of the Interlochen Arts Quintet; became music director and conductor of the Midland Symphony Orchestra, in Midland, Mich., in 1969; and added the leadership of the Northwestern Michigan Symphony to his reponsibilities in 1976.

As conductor of the MSO, Jaeger was responsible for commissioning many works by several American composers, including Lukas Foss, Dave Brubeck, Alec Wilder and Leslie Bassett. For these innovative efforts, he received three ASCAP Awards for "adventuresome programming of contemporary music."

In 1979, he helped found the Northwood Orchestra and its annual summer festival in Michigan, which continues today. He produces three critically acclaimed annual Bach festivals he has founded, Cass City, Mich.; Lancaster, Pa.; and Boulder, Colo.

"I enjoyed a very productive and creative 12 years with the orchestra in Midland, Mich., and I conduct a summer festival orchestra that still emanates from Midland, Mich.

"There's a community that allows unusual growth and creativity. I see that existing here as well. And, quite honestly, that's one of the strong things which caused me to be interested in the position. The potential is really quite astounding.

"I would like to hasten to add that I also have high regard for all that has been done to this point. The last thing I want to do is give the impression that suddenly I am going to do a great miracle, which infers that nothing has gone on before, and that isn't true at all.

"I have great regard for all that Tom has done, and everyone else who has brought the musical life of this community to where it is today. It's just that I'm trusting that I have a different experience and perspective that might move things forward to greater things still."

Jaeger has appeared with the Aspen Festival Orchestra, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, the Chattanooga Symphony, the Inland Empire Symphony at San Bernardino, Calif., the Philharmonic Orchestra of Lisbon, Portugal, the Antwerp Philharmonic in Belgium, and the State Orchestra of Thessolaniki in Greece.

In the spring of 1981, he was invited to the People's Republic of China, where he lectured, taught and conducted.

The Jaegers, who live at Redlands, Calif, are pleased to be moving back to "this part of the world.

"I'm not at all unhappy to be leaving Southern California. There are certain things we hate to leave.

"Probably more than anything else, we're happy to leave the smog and the congenstion, but that's not the real essence. I think throughout the middle part of the country, there's a healthier attitude about the important things in life and how to accomplish them. I think, generally, there's a much greater spirit of cooperation; people are probably, for the most part, a great deal more giving in terms of themselves."

SUIT

Furthermore, the county claims that the district judges in Midland "have a substantial interest" in the litigation in that any ruling by a district court resulting in the establishment of single-member districts "would almost certainly have an effect on their tenure of office and their retention of office."

However, the plaintiffs argue that Midland County has "no legally protectable interest" in the litigation since neither counties nor district judges have any role in legislative redistricting.

The Texas Attorney General's Office, which is representing the defendants in the lawsuit, does not oppose intervention for Midland County.

But state officials argue that district judges are state officials — not county officials — and their official interest may only be expressed through the state.

Therefore, these same officials claim Midland county "lacks the legal authority" to protect official state interests.

SKIRTS

Once in the office, Wheat was told by Dunn to "go to freak street" and asked if "I had a problem with my sexual identity," the youth claimed.

Dunn was out of town Friday night and unable to comment.

Fryar said he didn't know what was said in Dunn's office Friday, but defended the assistant's role.

"I'm sure he did chastise them," Fryar said. "He's (Dunn) doing what he's paid to do. When students misbehave, part of the action you take is to verbally correct them."

Rich, however, seems genuine in his ire at Dunn's methods of admonishment.

"The student handbook says students should not wear anything to distract from learning. All of us were carrying on class just fine until Mr. Dunn interrupted class hollering for us," Rich said.

"That was uncalled for and my teacher was upset. We were in an important discussion about 'Death of a Salesman'."

Cheerleader-turned-football player Wheat, concerned that his extracurricular activities are now in jeopardy, said he feels some administrators "missed the whole point" of Friday's action.

"The rule as it is right now isn't fair," Wheat said. "I'm glad I stood up for the fairness of things, but I think as president of the senior class I could do more for this thing and others."

Rich, who was told punishment may include having to take finals after school is out, added that "if worse comes to worse, I'll stick by the rule. I have no trouble sticking by the rule.

"But I want them to see how we feel and how unfair it is."

The young men, not surprisingly, have no problems with girls wearing mini-skirts, they said.

But because recent temperatures have soared past the century mark, they feel the dress code should address alternative clothing for males acceptable during warm spring months.

"If it's 106 degrees out there, we want to be comfortable," Rich continued.

At LHS, a skirt is deemed suitable if it is no shorter than the spot on the girl's thigh where her finger-tip rests while her arm is at her side.

"The only thing I wanted to get out of the protest is that shorts should be judged by the same manner," Wheat said.

Ms. Carrens described the incident as "tongue and cheek," and allowed "the kids felt like there is a lot of injustice going on here ... some girls' skirts were shorter than the shorts they wear."

Administrators' logic holds that shorts above the knee are forbidden because they disrupt classroom activity.

"I consider myself an extremely modest person," claimed Dixie Dispatch editor Tim Walker. Walker didn't participate in Friday's protest.

He and many other student proponents believe, however, girls in short mini-skirts cause more classroom distraction than young men whose trousers fall above the knee.

Fryar believes it is the students who have missed the point.

"They still don't understand the basic structure," the principal said. Dunn "is merely upholding the policies set by the board of education elected by the community."

The boys "need to make a point to the people who set the policy. Our struggle is to uphold it fairly."

Houston rapist gets two life terms

HOUSTON (AP) — A man believed responsible for a dozen rapes of women joggers within three years was sentenced to two life sentences and fined $25,000 after he was convicted on two counts of sexual assault.

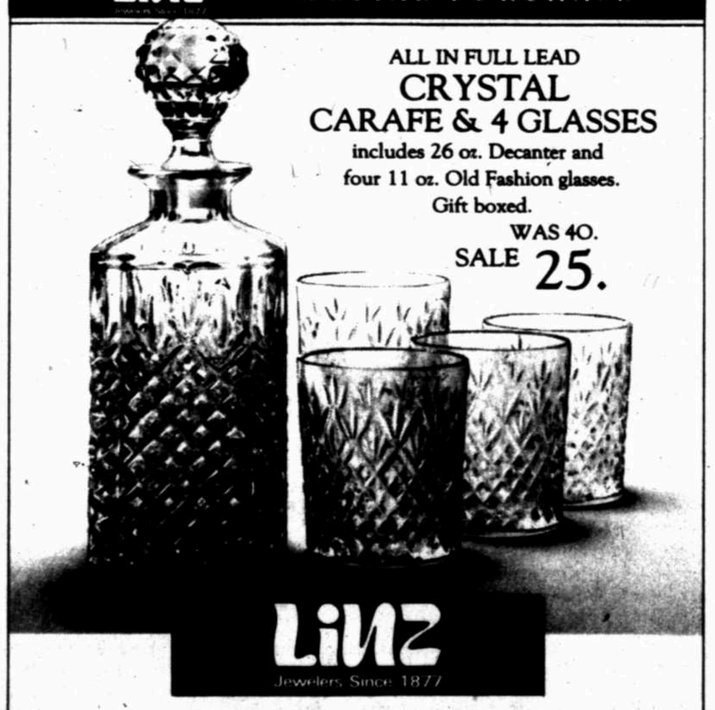

Eight women who said they were victims of the so-called "jogging-trail rapist" wept tears of joy Friday when a jury in state District Judge Carl Walker Jr.'s court returned with the sentence in just 25 minutes.

The jury, which fined Arnoldo Ricardo Munoz $10,000 for each of the two counts of sexual assault, also assessed the maximum fine of 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine for attempting to rape another woman.

Munoz, a 35-year-old roofer from Guatemala, was arrested last September when he attempted to attack Houston policewoman Paula Franks.

Harris County Assistant District Attorney Lorraine Parker said Munoz is believed to have committed 12 rapes of women runners from 1985 to 1988.

FBI's troubles call for action

No doubt agents of the FBI who served during J. Edgar Hoover's day will claim that some of the bureau's recent "troubles" never would have seen the light of day during earlier times, but that could define a major part of the problem. The bureau obviously is facing a need to modernize its personnel and technological approaches in order to develop an agency capable of fighting crime in today's society.

The FBI, the most heralded crime-fighting organization in the United States, has withstood complaints from within and without in recent years and now is attempting, under the direction of a Texan, William Sessions, formerly of San Antonio, to rebound with a force of agents that represent the populace the agency must deal with. That may be more difficult than it appears at first glance.

The bureau has lagged in hiring and maintaining good employee relations with minorities. In fact, U.S. Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., whose House Judiciary subcommittee is charged with oversight of the bureau, was quoted recently as saying the bureau is experiencing "serious problems" in hiring and proper treatment of minorities.

Although the bureau has made attempts to hire more minorities and others to fill its ranks, the $32,800 starting salary for an agent can't compete with salaries offered by metropolitan police departments. In fact, statistics reveal that only 4.4% of the bureau's agents are black, 4.8% Hispanic and 1.2% Asian.

The FBI's promotional practices were pinpointed as a sore spot by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton of Midland last September when he ordered a major overhaul of the agency's procedures in order to give Hispanic agents a better promotional opportunity. But that, again, is only a part of the agency's overall personnel problem.

Older agents who have served proudly are nearing retirement age now and when they leave the agency a vast amount of law enforcement expertise will leave, too. It's important to retain that expertise if at all possible, but also to start the FBI on a new course that will give it the personnel and technologic expertise to fight crime in the 1990s and beyond.

That can be done by way of a federal commission now studying the FBI's entire pay issue. Pay is a part of the problem, although not the only matter needing attention.

The FBI has through the decades become a symbol for swift and certain apprehension of criminals and unswerving justice. It must be made to represent those ideals once again. Upgrading pay is merely the first step along that path.

Neighbors join hands to battle drugs

Jack Anderson

It is a quiet conflict, overlooked by the networks and newspapers that scurry from one bloody skirmish to the next in the nation's capital. But there is one thing that sets this battle apart from the rest of the action at the front — the good guys are winning.

Last winter, the neighborhood around Constitution Avenue and Warren Street was labeled as one of Washington's 91 open-air drug markets. The neighbors couldn't just lock their doors and dismiss what was happening on the streets. The local "dope boys," as the neighbors call them, threatened residents who would not buy drugs. One terrified couple barely escaped the gunfire of a drug dealer who shot over their heads at a target down the street.

Black and white residents were prisoners in their own homes while their streets were patrolled by arrogant thugs who considered it their right to peddle crack and PCP.

But things have changed, and it has nothing to do with promises for more jail space, raids by Drug Enforcement Agency or the rhetoric of drug czar William Bennett.

The drug trade has fallen off because the neighbors made it happen. Our associate Stewart Harris lives in the area and has seen first hand how it was done.

The hub of the market was a crack house on Warren Street. A failing savings and loan in Maryland abandoned the building. The first buzzards to land on any abandoned building in Washington are crack dealers. Clients with license plates from Washington, D.C., Virginia and Maryland made up a steady stream of business.

Police raided the crack house several times, but it was reopened for business after the patrol cars pulled away. Far from fearing authority, the hoods seemed to revel in eluding Washington's finest. Out on the streets, these dealers refused to disperse even when police told them to move along.

Finally a neighbor, with the help of some friends, bought the building and boarded up the windows and doors. The small-time entrepreneurs spent weekends sweeping out the syringes and other drug paraphernalia. With a fresh coat of paint, the house was sold at a profit, closing one center of operations for drug dealers.

The next step was to sever their lines of communication. Washington dealers, like those in other major cities, use beepers to keep in touch with their clientele. The beeper goes off and the dealer heads to the nearest pay phone to arrange the drop-off. On some Saturday nights, dealers waited in lines to use pay phones in the neighborhood.

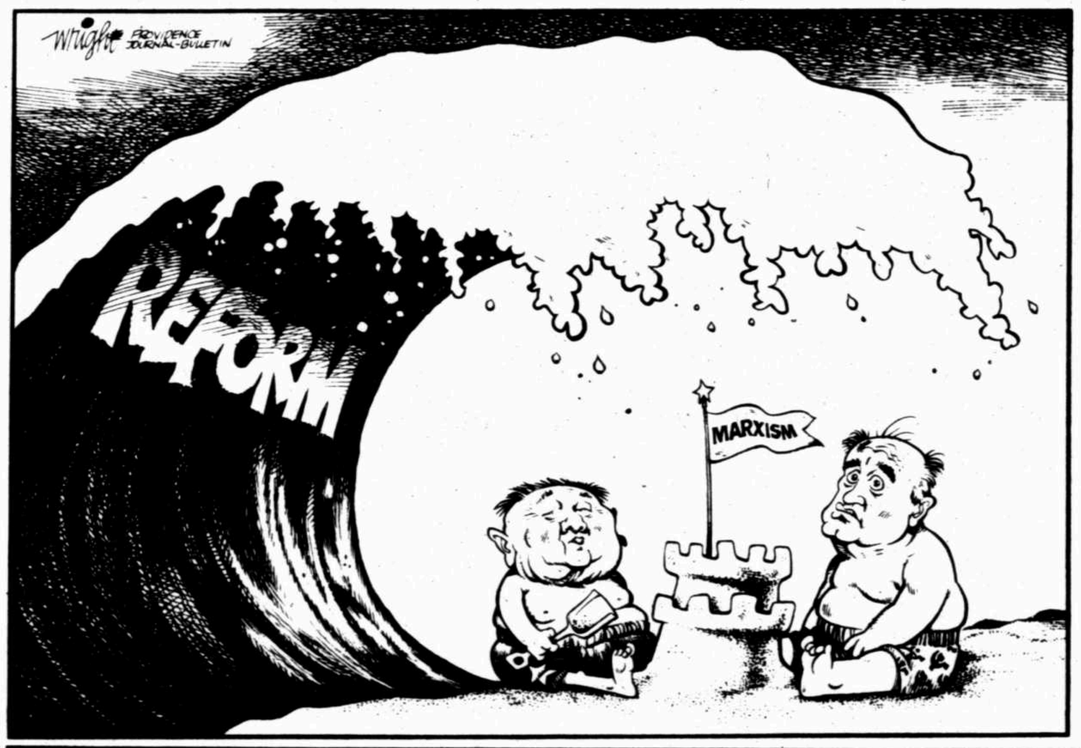

The residents made several appeals to have the phones removed, but the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co. was slow to act until one neighbor, who works for the federal government, pulled the right political string.

Even with the telephones gone, the dealers still owned the streets. In the winter, they posted lookouts on strategic corners to direct traffic into the dark alleys and vacant lots. They use umbrellas and rain gear in bad weather.

Frustrated, residents took to the streets themselves. In March, they organized neighborhood "walks." Groups of five to 10 people patrol the neighborhood six nights a week. Their tactics are not confrontational, but their presence is being felt. They stand across the street from a dealer and watch him do business. For all their bravado, drug dealers and buyers don't like an audience. The effect has been to discourage the drive-by traffic.

Epithets and rocks have been thrown at the neighborhood patrols, but they continue their nightly walks, and their numbers are slowly growing.

The neighbors, fed up with the stench of crime, have dented the once-prolific drug market on their streets In the meantime, they have

'Prince of Darkness' won't let sunshine in!

NEW YORK — Has anybody else noticed that New York City is getting darker and darker? If somebody doesn't stop those wonderful people who keep the local builders reaching for the stars, the city will soon be known as the land of the midnight noon.

Russell Baker

Of course there were always streets where the sun never shone. ("Always" in New York lingo means 15 to 20 years ago.) I once had a second-floor apartment surrounded by buildings so tall that it was like living at the bottom of a mine shaft.

Buried in this pit, you woke up in the morning unable to tell whether the sun was shining or tornados were whirling in from Hackensack.

Even a heavy rain at the window could be deceptive, because the 45-story apartment house across the street made its own weather. It could create wind shear powerful enough to close an airport or turn what was a soft spring drizzle up at the corner deli into a drenching downpour as you entered the building's weather-making zone.

Living in that eternal bleakness, I understood why New York radio stations recited the outside weather situation with relentless monotony: without radio help, people living in apartments like ours couldn't tell how to dress when they went outside.

In those days, though monster buildings lurked throughout Manhattan, they were scattered widely enough for a street-smart New Yorker to tread safe and cheery paths through the city, just as jungle natives move cheerfully along familiar paths that would terrify a New Yorker suddenly set down among dense leaves and pythons.

One such pile, 30 or 40 stories high at the corner of Sixth Avenue and 45th Street, could transform a zephyr into winds brutal enough to flatten any pedestrian so arrogant as to challenge its hegemony without bracing for combat.

Running for daylight, we found a third-floor apartment in a low-skyline district. (These were the days when there were still apartments to be had in Manhattan without dishonoring yourself.)

There the only blot on the sky was an immense, blocky, brick apartment building, 20 or so stories high, with the earnestly graceless look of 1930s British architecture. It called itself the Cezanne, possibly because it spent much of every day hogging the sunlight with such artistic intensity that its neighbors had to be content with its shadow.

Though hardly a skyscraper, the Cezanne had a personal weather pattern as savagely tricky as the east side of Everest. Or is it the other side of Everest? No matter. After many a battering by gale and hurricane wind on its treacherous corners, I finally prided myself on being able to get around it, reach the newsstand and get safely home again with the papers without losing an umbrella or getting my shoes flooded.

The trick involved being aware of the season, knowing the barometric pressure at St. John's, Newfoundland, and checking the phase of the moon.

With this information digested, one could hazard a fairly good guess about whether to navigate its north or south side, how close one could come to the northeast corner without being blown onto reefs, and whether the ruined downspout at the southwest corner was likely to be in a mood to do murder by drowning.

If I seem to speak of all this with sentimental, loving and tolerant nostalgia, it is not only because I believe newspaper columnists should quit addressing the public in the style of Savonarola, but also because it was a genuinely sun-filled era in New York.

Between the monster buildings embodying the bestial instincts of money-crazed real-estate speculators and the architects they corrupted, there was ample space where sunlight fell.

Indeed, some of the monsters were glorious, not bestial at all, and there was space then where New Yorkers could step back into the sunlight, gaze up and let Big Apple chauvinism suffuse their spirit.

The old open patches of sunlight are now going dark. Everywhere, monsters are being hurled up toward what we once thought of as Heaven but now regard as the eyrie of tax swindlers, finaglers and similar people too tasteless to be embarrassed about spoiling Heaven.

This darkening of the city is commonly attributed to Mayor Edward I. Koch's encouragement of the real-estate and construction boom. Combined with the Wall Street orgies of Reagan days, it turned Manhattan into the home office of grotesque excess and now threatens to put us in the pits.

It's dark down here, Ed. Getting dark all over. Ed, your campaign posters should hail you as "The Prince of Darkness."

Cyclamate muddle

Abbott Laboratories' two-decade ordeal with cyclamate is a perfect illustration of how ridiculous health concerns can become when mixed with regulatory agency politics.

The cyclamate case also shows how government is not supposed to work.

Federal Drug Administration officials banned the artificial sweetener 20 years ago. Now, the FDA is expected to reapprove cyclamate. The FDA's Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition acknowledges it made a mistake. The sweetener once accused of causing everything from bladder cancer to birth defects has proved to be harmless.

Every day, five days a week for the past 17 years, monkeys at the National Cancer Institute have been fed the amount of cyclamate that would sweeten 30 cans of diet soda. Result: The monkeys are doing just fine.

Cyclamate was widely used as an artificial sweetener when, in 1969, a study by a New York laboratory showed that some rats with cyclamate pellets implanted in their bladders were developing tumors. The FDA restricted the sale of the chemical, and the following year, under pressure from Congress, banned it entirely. From the beginning the ban was controversial. Numerous other countries long ago approved the chemical as the scientific evidence showed cyclamate was not harmful.

Abbott filed for reapproval in 1973, and seven years later the FDA emphatically denied the request. Abbott refiled in 1982 and now — another seven years later — the agency apparently is comfortable with the chemical. Finally, after two dozen long-term cancer studies, more than 70 experiments looking for genetic damage, hundreds of other toxicological studies, and exhaustive and positive reviews of the chemical by the National Cancer Institute and the National Academy of Sciences.

The agency's reversal certainly raises concerns about how government officials evaluate potential health risks. How can it possibly have taken two decades for the FDA to concede its mistake?

The cyclamate story shows the breakdown of a system designed to separate real from imagined risks. That's what can happen when government attorneys and politics take control of what should be a scientific public health matter.

Status quo being nudged by discontinuities

WASHINGTON — The American preference for going deeply into the surface of things was George Bush's mandate. He was elected to preside over continuity, "status quo plus," not only in U.S.-Soviet relations but virtually everywhere else, and go easy on the "plus," please.

George F. Will

But Bush's presidency is coinciding with a moment of maximum discontinuity. Rarely has there been an era so pregnant with momentous change without the midwife of war.

Forty years is the span of at most two generations. Forty years also seems to be, today, the threshold of decrepitude for some institutions.

This is the 40th anniversary of the triumph of Mao's revolution and the founding of NATO. Both are coming unstuck. NATO is decreasingly convincing because the cohesion of a defense alliance depends on consensus about the nature of the threat. Mao's legacy is blowing away like so much smoke because China, yet again, has refused, in the end, to be conquered, even by Chinese. Least of all would it submit forever to Chinese seeking to supplant a rich indigenous culture with bombastic speculations produced by a 19th-century German in the reading room of the British Museum.

Forty years after the Russian Revolution, in 1957, Sputnik seemed to confirm communism's capacity to compete in material terms with capitalism. But the great political fact of this era is a cultural fact: 85 percent of the scientists who have ever lived are living. The pace of change is accelerating exponentially. One casualty of the information age is the essential totalitarian aspiration: the conscription of minds by the state.

Forty years ago, the lid of Stalinism was being nailed down on Eastern Europe. For two generations, the imposed regimes used tanks, secret police, show trials, terror and the politicization of publishing, broadcasting and education. Yet today there are no communists east of the Elbe. None, that is, other than the heavily armed and increasingly nervous ruling classes. They cannot compromise their claim to infallible insight ("scientific socialism") without forfeiting everything.

It is eerie to read Prof. Simon Schama's "Citizens: A Chronicle of the French Revolution" while watching events in China. One of Schama's theses is that France was destabilized before the revolution, less by blocked change than by effects of modernization. Deng Xiaoping knew that when he sent abroad scores of thousands of students, they would come home with colorful clothes, loud music and the infectious bacillus of new aspirations. Deng deliberately let loose forces for reform. His mistake was in expecting gratitude.

Henry Kissinger sees an element of tragedy in Deng's fate as the focus of today's furies. He was, after all, twice purged by Mao for reformist deviationism. However, this is a familiar spectacle: a revolution feasting on its fathers.

The fate of Deng, an old man, matters much less than the lessons the Soviet elite chooses to learn from what is happening to him. China's Communist Party is rapidly being reduced from a vainglorious "vanguard," a supposed repository of "scientific" understanding, to a ridiculed rump faction. Surely the Soviet elite is thinking it may face the same fate at the hands of forces Gorbachev's glasnost has let loose. Those are forces that Gorbachev's perestroika is signally failing to satisfy.

What Franklin Roosevelt said of Douglas MacArthur — "Never underestimate a man who overestimates himself" — may apply to Gorbachev. So far, however, Tchaikovsky's description of Brahms' music — "a pedestal without a statute" — describes Gorbachev's perestroika. Soviet living standards have declined under Gorbachev. David Remnick of the Washington Post's Moscow bureau reports that people "even in the wealthier big cities are hoarding kitchen matches, salt and sugar. Consumer goods such as stoves, radios and refrigerators are nearly impossible to find."

Until much more is known about the willingness of the Soviet regime to run the risks that may be destroying Deng, Bush should insist that NATO note well what we know. We know there is a conspicuous continuity in Soviet behavior: crude blackmail.

The Kremlin has threatened to quit destroying the missiles the INF treaty requires to be destroyed if the United States modernizes its short-range missiles in Europe. That is, the Kremlin says it will not do what it is obligated to do if the United States does what it is in no way constrained from doing.

It is tempting to treat this crudity as a sufficient reason for proceeding with modernization. Lord Nelson, handling a fire poker, said, "It matters not at all in what way I lay this poker on the floor. But if Bonaparte should say it must be placed in this direction, we must instantly insist upon its being laid in some other one."

But such spirited behavior is made possible by clarity about one's adversary. Such clarity is one casualty (NATO's cohesion is another) of today's multiplying discontinuities.

Memorial Day should remind us of freedom's high cost

Bill Modisett

My how times change. Monday is Memorial Day, the day set aside to honor all those Americans who have given their lives for their country. That's an appropriate observance because love of country is vital to the success of a nation.

But it's getting harder to have Americans give to this day what it was really set aside to commemorate. It's not merely a day off work, or the end of school for the year, or the beginning of summer. It is a shocking reminder of the unbelievably high cost of our way of life.

This Memorial Day comes at an odd time in the course of world events. Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev has astounded the world with his reforms and his concessions ostensibly made in the interest of world peace.

In China, students are staging peaceful demonstrations while asking the government to inaugurate democratic reforms. The Chinese Communist government, meanwhile, is playing the confrontation cooly, obviously aware that its actions will determine the course of China's future, and possibly that of world Communism. The world is watching, holding its breath.

Memorial Day, more than anything else, begs for an end to war. Through the more than two centuries of this nation's history, millions of lives have been lost.

Not in vain. Never in vain. Those lives were given courageously, lovingly, in the interest of keeping this nation's ideals alive.

And now we have reached a crossroads in history. Mankind can progress beyond this point and put war behind him, giving a valued testimonial to each of those who died. Or we can reach the summit of this mountain, only to see war in the distance — recognizing that it was all the folly of foolish men.

If the latter becomes the reality, it will not lessen the "gift" made by all those brave men and women who have died for this country. That gift was made so that we could reach this point and we might not have reached it without that blood.

But because this opportunity is now presented to us, there's even more urgency for us to remain wary, vigilant and true to American ideals so that this land of free men and women does not perish. That is the essence of remembering what Memorial Day is all about.

Some would argue — and I would be among them — that there are fewer patriotic Americans today and fewer who believe in the virtue of taking up arms to defend this country.

Maybe it's a result of the selfishness of the "me generation" or the result of too many years without a compelling American war that sends volunteers scrambling to the draft offices to defend all this.

Regardless, the reasons for observing Memorial Day do not diminish as the prospects for world peace improve. This remains a world of the warrior and if we ever forget that we will be doomed to feel the warrior's sword.

As we watch developments in China, the Soviet Union, and the NATO countries, it would be wise to remember all those who died so that we can remember and honor — freely.

Appraisal district reacted courteously

I recently received a "Notice of Appraisal Value" from the Midland Central Appraisal District which reflected a 64 percent increase for my homestead. Armed with an appraisal that was made when I recently refinanced my home, architectural renderings of the floor plan, and a property descriptions which reflected my lot size, I met with representatives of the Central Appraisal District. I found them to be most courteous and willing to accept corrections which I could substantiate with the data present. As a result I was able to receive an equitable reduction in the appraised tax value on my house.

I strongly encourage any property owner who has recently received an increase in value on their property, and feel that it is excessive, to meet with the Central Appraisal District. Their office is located at 4631 Andrews Highway. Based upon my experience I feel that the Central Appraisal District representatives will seriously consider any adjustment which can be properly supported. The property owner should go well-prepared with legitimate and supportive information to justify what they feel their appraisal should be.

The deadline for meeting with the Central Appraisal District is May 31st.

This time, world turned in the right direction

I have been known to complain when the world does not turn to my liking, so I should be fair and do the other thing, too.

One day recently I lost a letter, realized it within 10 minutes and retraced my steps as far as the Claydesta bank building. A security guard had picked my letter up and dropped it in the mailbox. Unfortunately, I had not yet put the stamp on for England. Two phone calls to the post office and a postal employee met me at the mailbox 30 minutes later.

I was well-served by the security guard and the post office. My conscience is clear, too — the check really is in the mail.

'Old Glory' honors those who've died

Monday, May 29, is Memorial Day — you know the holiday where everybody kicks off summer, leaves town for a fun-filled three-day weekend, and cleans up the barbecue pit that's been put up for the winter. I just wanted to remind everybody the real reason for Memorial Day.

It's a day to remember the men and women who lost their lives defending our freedom. The "Old Glory," you know, the red, white, and blue flag with the 50 stars, is supposed to be flown at half-mast 'til noon. Then flow at full mast 'til sundown.

I've lived in Midland for a little over four years and in this time I have seen flags of all kinds flown, and when I see the American flag flown over homes I smile most of the time, but sometimes I see a new flag, not an American flag but a rebel flag, flying and then I see Old Glory it's weather-beaten, torn and even sometimes flown under another flag.

People, millions die for this country and Memorial Day is their day. Please remember you fly any flag you want because so many die on the battlefields of this world. Please, on Monday fly "Old Glory" and remember those who can't.

MMH emergency room one of city's benefits

Most of us in Midland would proudly concur with the bumper sticker slogan which proclaims our community to be the "Most Livable City in the U.S.A." We are cognizant of the many positive aspects which make our daily lives pleasant. It was not until recently that we had the opportunity to appreciate one important benefit offered to everyone in Midland — the Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room service.

On three separate occasions within a week and at different times of the day, we observed all of the sick or injured people being attended with immediate medical care and compassion by concerned doctors and nurses. Family members accompanying the patients were also dealt with sympathetically and respectfully. The modern machinery available for immediate testing was admirable.

Having experienced the relative horror of emergency facilities in some of our country's large metropolitan cities, we want to express our delight, relief and thanks for the Midland Memorial Hospital Emergency Room. To try to single out some of the devoted personnel there would be wrong, lest we forget someone. Suffice it to say that we are grateful to all of them and that we count their care as a major asset to life in Midland.

Dog pound employees are doing their best

About a month ago I went out to the city dog pound to get a dog. I was impressed with the facility. It was clean and was heated for the dogs. I know there has been some controversy over the facility recently.

I would have to agree that we need a new city dog pound. I was impressed with the employees that work there. They were very nice and courteous. In the future maybe Midland can get a new dog pound.

Unwanted animals can be saved from suffering

Today I received a flyer from the Humane Society of the U.S. It showed a picture of a shelter worker crying, taking an animal to the euthanasia room and a larger cart filled with dead animals. Their only crime was no place to call home. This flyer stated as fact that only two out of 10 dogs and cats who live to adulthood ever find themselves well-cared-for in a loving home. Many people only regard animals as objects, never taking the time to realize they are feeling creatures of God.

It is proven that to pet an animal will lower your blood pressure, lower your heart rate and reduce stress. In the May 17th Reporter-Telegram there was a nice article about "Bum" a hearing ear dog. It is amazing all the ways animals benefit our lives.

If you own an animal, please neuter it so there will be fewer unwanted animals. Please consider the workers at the Animal Control who daily have to take away lives just because there aren't enough homes. Puppies, kittens, and yes, even grown loving animals are taken into shelter daily hoping for a "good home." It is better to take unwanted animals to Animal Control than out to the country or leaving them locked up to starve or to abandon them on the streets. If the life must be taken away, at least at Animal Control it will be done humanely.

Remember there are more pets than pet homes. You can help by neutering your own pet and supporting your local Humane Society of the Permian Basin who actively helps neuter animals of needy families.

EMT trainees should seek training elsewhere

Training people to become Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs) is like saving a life. It is not difficult to learn and almost anyone can be taught these life-saving skills.

The people who take EMT courses are generally volunteers dedicated to their communities. They want to know how to care for the sick and injured until a physician can be reached. These volunteers are willing to make themselves available 24 hours a day and to drop whatever they are doing in an instant for "a life in their hands."

Howard County Junior College recently completed four EMT courses. Most of the students were volunteers and the majority represented Garden City and Sterling City. A large percentage of the students did not pass the state exam because they were not properly trained. Their instructors were not dedicated enough to understand that each student they lose is "a life that cannot be saved."

If you are one of the many students who enrolled in the EMT course at Howard College and failed or dropped out, don't give up. Seek retraining elsewhere. Your reward is knowing that you can "hold on to a life" because you have been properly trained.

Issues of environment, Third World increasingly critical

Flora Lewis

COPENHAGEN — Students at Copenhagen University, like most young people across Western Europe, have written off the defense issue. They want to get on with talk about the future.

Some put it as shifting from East-West to North-South problems. Others, more appropriately, see it as facing the longer-term global threat to the environment as the threat of nuclear war seems to have receded.

They are premature in declaring the Cold War over. The vast arsenals that can destroy human life in minutes rather than decimate it in decades are still in place. And the underlying issues of confrontation — freedom, individual rights, self-government — certainly remain.

These students have only to ask their counterparts in Eastern Europe and China, for example, about the priority of their demands.

But the issues of environment and Third World are real, and much more complicated than the old ideological theories with a simple formula of defining the enemy and opposing him.

They are coming into mainstream politics now, not only in established democracies but in countries like Hungary, Poland, even the Soviet Union.

The pattern has been to take up environmental questions, inevitably linked to Third-World economic and population growth as well as to wanton habits of industrialized countries, in a fragmented way. The greenhouse effect, toxic waste, desertification, destruction of forests inevitably require confronting highly contentious trade-offs that politicians have only been facing at the margin of conflicting pressures.

Bringing these issues, which once seemed exotic or futuristic, into the central debate for voter decision is the new task for responsible politicians. It won't be easy, but it is the only way to get effective action.

I was struck by the approach of Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., in a recent speech to the National Academy of Sciences. He asked, "Do we need a crisis before we can start?"

And he pointed out that it often takes a long time before a gradually mounting menace evokes response, as in the case of Hitler, for example. But drawing on his own large experience of strategic arms control, he said global environment should be seen as a national security issue.

Allocating resources to ward off disaster, rather than waiting to repair or overcome what has already gone wrong, has been accepted in the field of defense to prevent war. It can also be understood in the field of protecting our natural heritage from surprise attack, if leaders are able to explain that surprise comes only from neglecting to prepare.

Since he was speaking to scientists, Gore used an elegant simile to Einstein's theory of relativity. "Time is relative in politics as in science," he said, shaped by the gravitational pull of massive catastrophe in the past or the identifiable future.

"The problem in organizing our response" to the environmental threat (for example, "one Tennessee's worth of forest destroyed every year") is that "the worst effects seem far off in the future, and they are so unprecedented that they defy common sense. While right now, in the present, millions of people are suffering in poverty and dying of starvation, warfare and preventable diseases."

The task is to make clear that the apocalypse, as with nuclear war, must be deterred with measures taken now or the warp of time will leave us defenseless, Gore argued.

Nor, he said realistically, can the Third World be cajoled or compelled to give up hope of economic development because advanced countries have already taxed the global environment beyond limits it can bear.

"Development is part of the problem as well as the solution." No one is prepared to abandon growth.

It was a long speech, addressing the complexities and contradictions of devising "dynamic new strategies" that will require not only sacrifice of wealth but of custom and old assumptions of what constitutes self-interest. There was too much to summarize fairly.

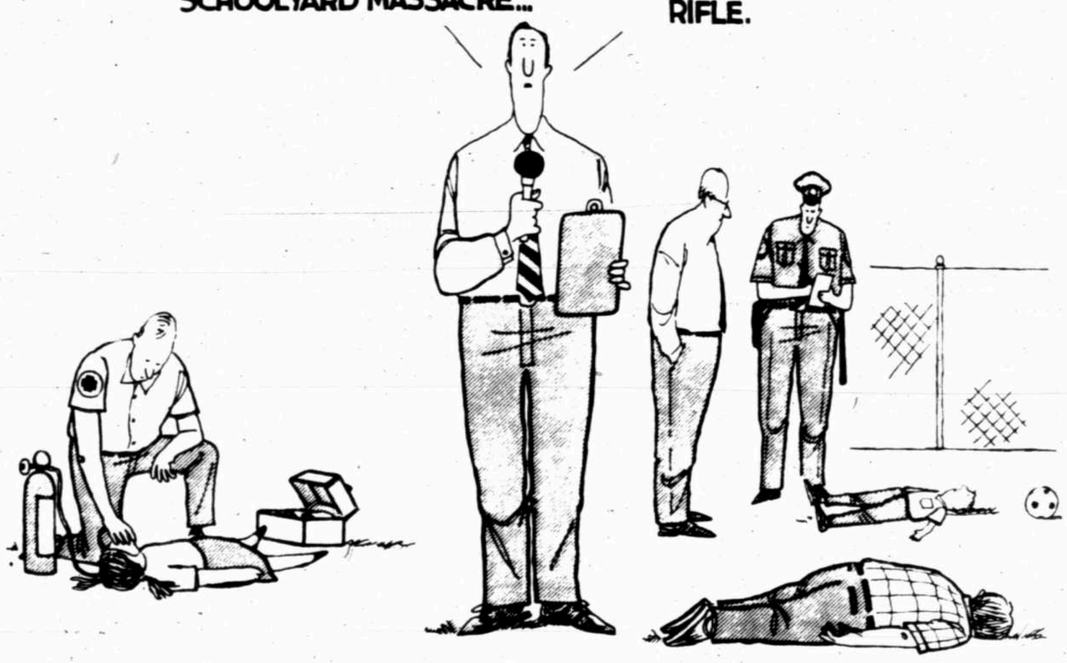

And it had specific, non-Utopian recommendations, on how to seek better answers in the near, middle and long terms for the use of energy, the techniques of agriculture, industrial processes, transportation.

Gore suggested a carbon dioxide tax to fund energy research, "although that is not yet politically viable."

"My optimism," he said, "is tempered by awareness of the power in the forces of greed and fear. But I do believe we have the capacity for what is needed — because the challenge can now be accurately described in terms of national security."

It is a good start for moving on from fashionable distress about the environment to generating a wide-gauge program. That's what politicians are supposed to be for.

Positive economic news continues to confound critics

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — There was particularly good news at home and abroad this past week about the U.S. economy.

The Commerce Department reported that durable goods orders rose 2.9 percent in April, the biggest advance since December. Orders for manufactured goods expected to last three years or more rose to $129.1 billion dollars last month. That followed a 1 percent increase in durable goods in March.

Economic analysts said gains of the last two months were a good indication that demand in the manufacturing sector will be enough to keep the economy expanding for the rest of this year.

That eased fears about a recession in 1989, which was being predicted by the pessimists last year and early this year, proving once again how wrong some economists and media pundits have been since the stock market crash in October 1987. It was then predicted there would be a recession in 1988. When it didn't happen last year, it was predicted there would be one this year. The prophets of doom and gloom never seem to tire of underestimating the basic economic strength of this great country of ours.

Our good economic news coupled with foreign concern over the turmoil in China, which worried Japan and Hong Kong because of their economic ties with the Chinese mainland, led to a rush by foreigners to purchase dollars. By last Monday, the dollar had hit a 29-month high, despite intervention by the U.S. and nine other central banks to hold it down. Since January, the dollar has risen 28 percent in value.

Why foreigners, especially Europeans, are showing such confidence in the dollar was well explained in the following Paris report from Bernard Kaplan, our foreign affairs writer.

He quoted Anthony Harris, star columnist of Britain's Financial Times, as writing that "anyone who visits the United States and goes shopping and even more those who employ U.S. labor know the dollar is a bargain."

Harris added that even after its steady rise during most of the past month, the American currency remains "undervalued."

"What the British financial expert didn't explain," Kaplan reported, "was why the dollar's dramatic resurgence has occurred now.

"Until recently, the dollar was perceived as a 'weak' currency because the economic gurus focused almost exclusively on America's trade and federal budget balances, both deeply in deficit, as the main, if not the only, gauges for measuring the dollar's well-being.

"But Samuel Brittan, one of Europe's best-known economic gurus says flatly that 'trade balances are no longer affecting currency values.' That's why, although the U.S. trade deficit remains hefty, the money markets have recently paid scant attention to it, in remarkable contrast to the near panic which used to greet the monthly trade figures.

"The all-important pointer now is inflation rates, according to Brittan. America's inflationary outlook is almost universally viewed as better than that of its economic rivals. That means the dollar, comparatively, will in the future buy even more.

"The U.S. trade deficit, previously regarded as the devil's work, has begun to be seen by several prestigious economists, both in Europe and the United States, as really a good thing.

"That view was initially advanced by Herbert Stein, a one-time chairman of the U.S. president's Council of Economic Advisers. At first rejected by foreigners, it recently has been gaining coverts.

"One of them is Herbert Reineke of the West German think-tank, the Essen Institute, who says that 'America's trade deficit doesn't only represent spendthrift consumer habits.' Stein is perfectly right when he says it also has meant an inflow of $700 billion in productive capital that American industry otherwise would have had to do without.

"In Reineke's opinion, the recently reported $10 billion bulge in U.S. tax receipts — which has helped to trim the budget deficit — is an indirect result of the inflow of investment capital from abroad that technically forms part of the trade deficit."

All this is gratifying to me because I have been consistently optimistic about our economy, due in no small part to the advice of my good friend, Lord Lever, one of Europe's renowned economic analysts and former senior Labor Party Cabinet member and financial adviser to Prime Ministers Harold Wilson and James Callaghan.

Harold Lever has been telling me almost every year for the past five years that America's basic economic strength is so great it could tolerate a $100 billion dollar deficit almost indefinitely and still maintain prosperity.

The time for Texas is now.

Here in Texas, what's good for business is good for us all.

Now that profits are rising, the whole economy is moving.

Jobs are up. And we're #2 in the country in new business startups.

Personal income is up. And projected to rise 7.2% each year for the next three years.

Population is up. By 1995, we should pass New York to become the second most populous state.

And unemployment is down. Recently hitting its lowest point in 4½ years.

Clearly, this is a time of great opportunity for those of us who live and work in Texas.

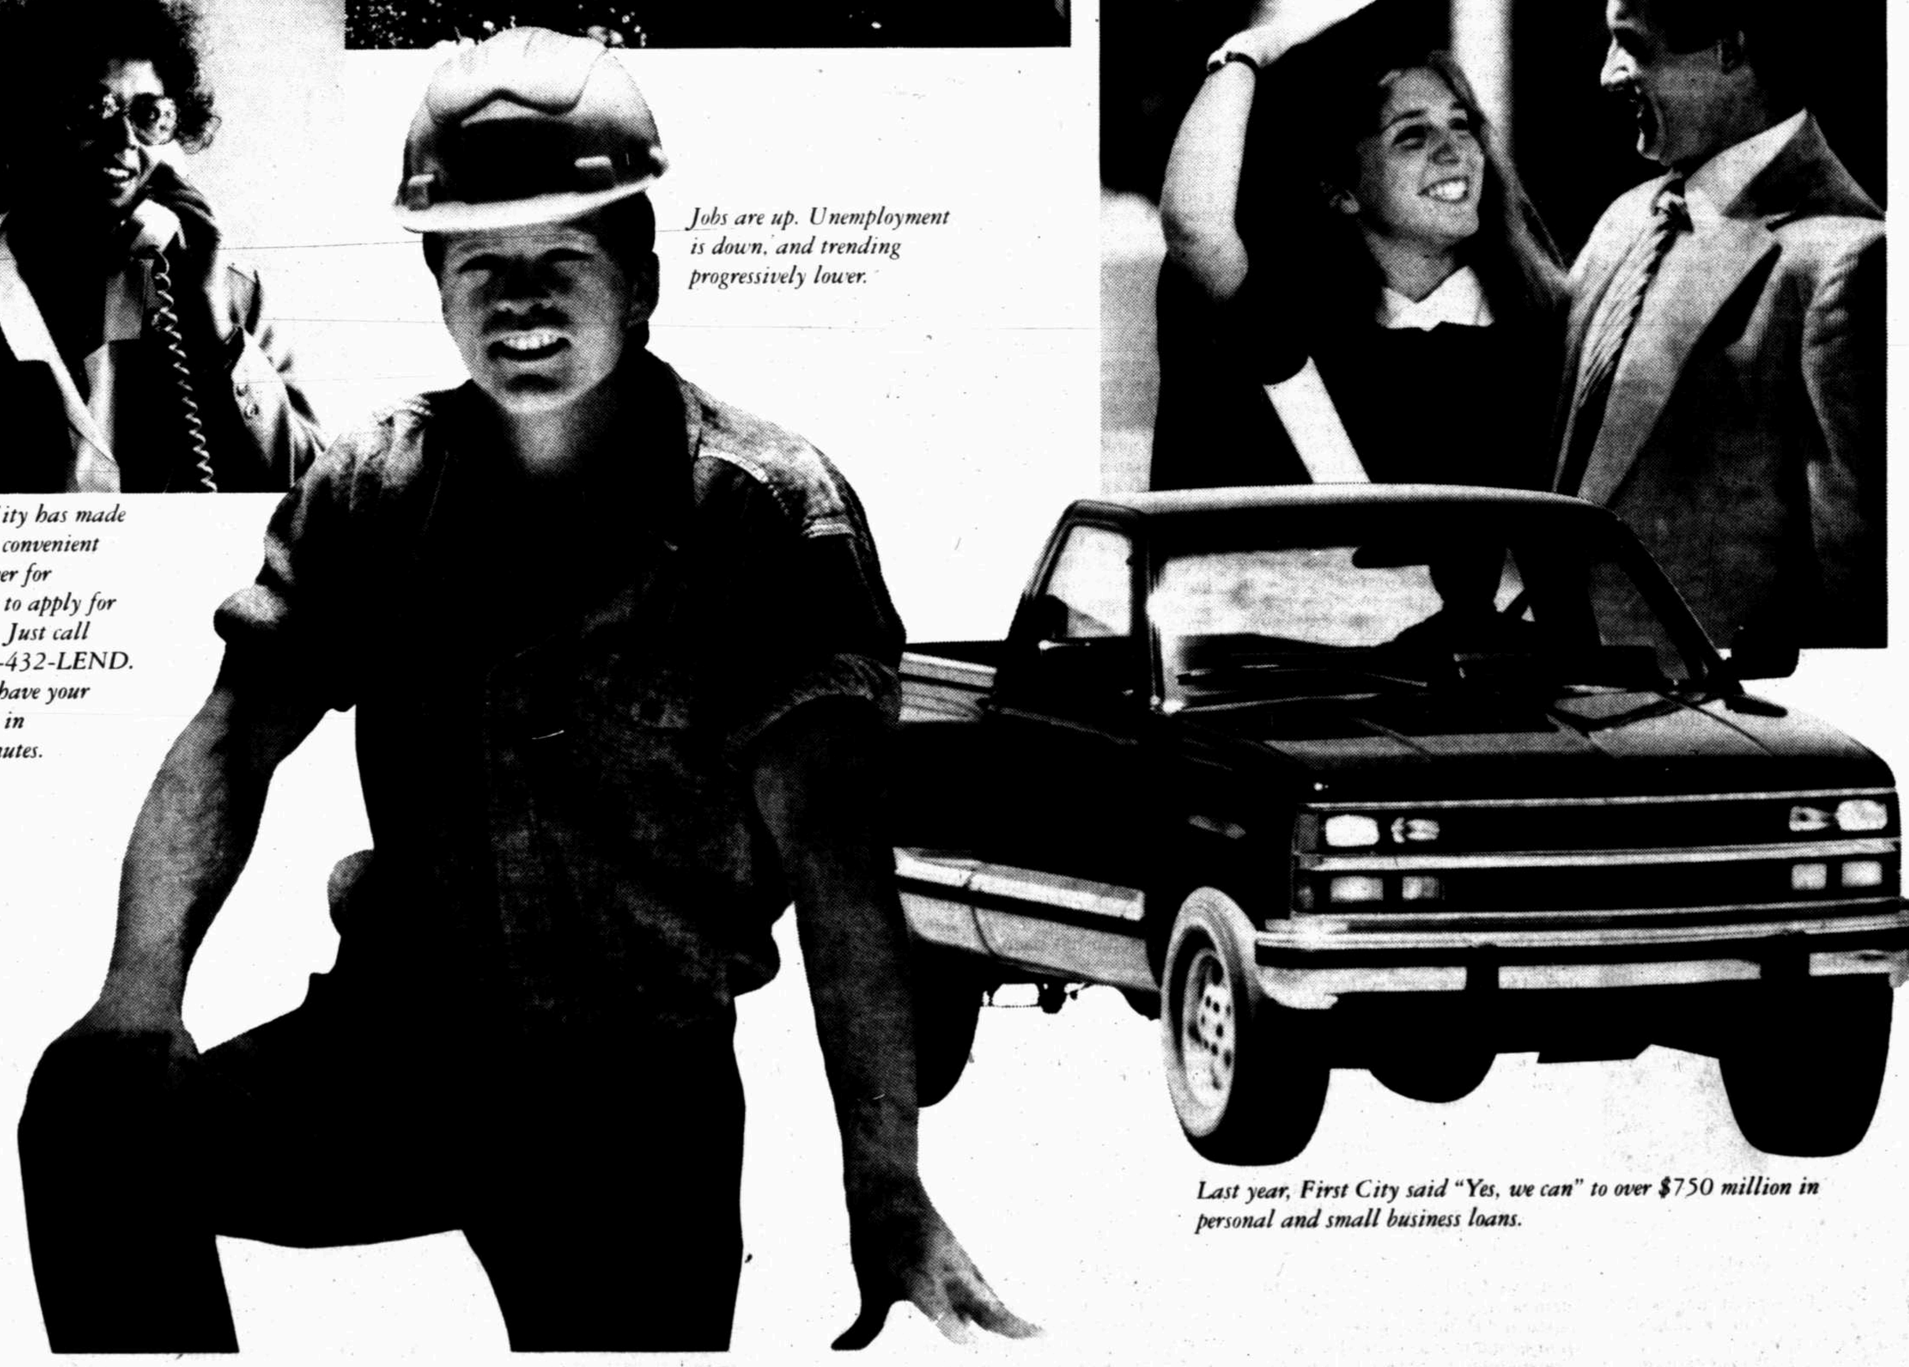

The resurgence of the state's economy, and a steady rise in personal income, are good news for Texas families.

Texas is now the #2 state in new business startups– yet another indication of a growing economy.

First City has made it more convenient than ever for Texans to apply for a loan. Just call 1-800-432-LEND. You'll have your answer in 30 minutes.

Jobs are up. Unemployment is down, and trending progressively lower.

This year, First City is investing in the future of Texas with over $30 million in new education loans.

Chaparral golfers this week head for Norfolk, Neb., and the National Junior College Athletic Association's championship golf tourney. The Chaps won their into the tournament capturing the Region V crown, after getting a special invitation last year because of their high ranking.

Although there have lots of jokes about trying to find Norfolk (it's located in the far northeast corner of Nebraska, about 150 miles north of Omaha) and the probable type of condition, the tournament is demanding ... and so is the course.

Northeast Community College and Norfolk Country Club are hosting the four-day event. The course is a tight par-70 of 6,700 yards, with lots of trees and water. Action begins Tuesday, June 6.

After the first two days of play, the field is cut to the top 15 teams and those within 15 shots of the leading team. Another 36 holes is played the last two days to determine the top squad.

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill to curb drunken boating and water skiing was signed into law Saturday by Gov. Bill Clements.

The bill, by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Rep. Barry Connelly, R-Houston, would establish a definition for intoxication and a means for law enforcement officers to perform a breath or blood test.

A first offense under the bill would be punishable by a fine of up to $1,000 and a jail term of not more than 180 days. Punishment would be tougher for subsequent convictions.

Penalties also would be increased if the accident caused serious bodily injury. Inner tubes and other craft that are propelled only by the water current wouldn't be included.

Texas' JRH raised a record amount for AHA this year, almost $3 million. Money is raised through sponsor pledges secured by participants promising to jump rope for a given period of time. The top U.S. fund-raiser for two consecutive years has been a Texas school, Stahl Elementary of San Antonio.

Jordan does it again

Bulls come from nowhere with last-second jumper

By DIRK JOHNSON
New York Times News Service

NBA

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored 46 points and hit the winning basket with 3 seconds remaining Saturday as the Chicago Bulls edged the Detroit Pistons, 99-97, to take a lead of 2 games to 1 in their Eastern Conference final series.

The Bulls came back after trailing 90-77 with 6:18 remaining.

The teams largely traded baskets through the third quarter, with the Bulls unable to cut into a Piston lead that hovered around 10 points.

At the end of the third quarter, the Pistons led by 11 points, and they stayed in control in the early part of the fourth period.

The Pistons, with a deep bench and balanced attack, seemed intent on wearing down the Bulls. But Jordan was too much for them.

Baffling a host of Piston defenders, he brought the Bulls close by scoring 10 points in a little more than 3 minutes late in the game and putting in 17 points in the final period.

With 28 seconds to go, the Bulls' Horace Grant hit a pair of free throws to tie the game at 97. After two timeouts, Isiah Thomas began to dribble away much of the clock, but when Bill Laimbeer set a pick on Jordan, he was called for an offensive foul with 9 seconds in the game.

The Bulls called time. And when Scottie Pippen had trouble inbounding the ball, they took another time-out.

This time, the pass came to Jordan, who glided along the right side of the lane, then went aloft with a lunging effort that put the ball through the net for the victory.

The Pistons got a last chance with three seconds left. Taking the ball at half court, they went to Laimbeer, then to Joe Dumars, who took a long jumper that caromed off the backboard.

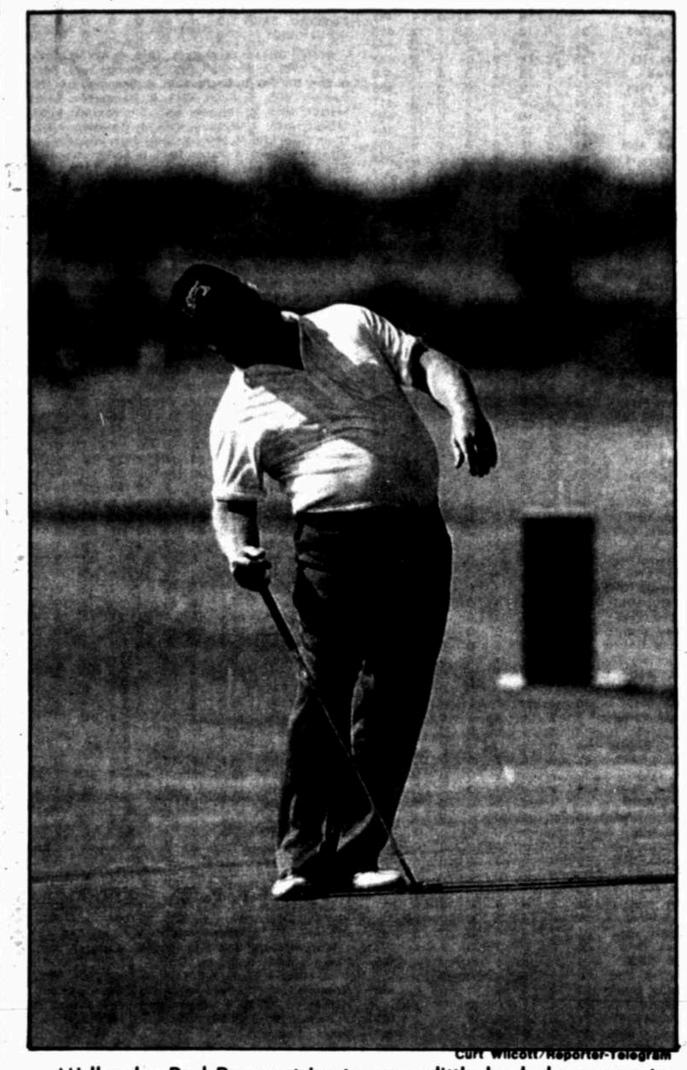

The Bulls, seeking their third straight upset in the playoffs, retained the home-court advantage in the series with Saturday's victory. Half of the four remaining games of the series are scheduled for Chicago, starting Monday with Game 4.

Mark Aguirre led Detroit with 25 points, while Vinnie Johnson had 19, including 11 in the fourth quarter. Bill Cartwright scored 15 for the Bulls.

Detroit, which beat Chicago in six straight games during the regular season, is seeking to make the National Basketball Association final for the second straight season.

The Pistons had failed to reach the championship series for 30 years after the franchise left Fort Wayne, Ind.

Jackson notches another win

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Brad Hawkins may just have to wait for Bob Jackson to get old.

Not even the fact that Jackson went 40 yards too far could help Hawkins, especially when the former Odessa Permian star helped the Jal, N.M. standout get back on track.

Jackson made up the 20-yard deficit caused by the misstep and turned it into a 100-yard lead en route to the championship of the first annual SportsFest '89 cross-country run Saturday, the second time this month that Jackson has outdueled Hawkins. The five-kilometer race kicked off the busiest day of competition at Midland's first annual multi-sport festival.

Also taking place Saturday was the Craig Kieffer Memorial Ironkids Triathlon, a Pitch, Hit and Run competition, more bowling at Dellwood Lanes, the beginning of a three-on-three basketball tournament, and a Great American Racing Tour stock car race at Twin Cities Speedway.

Auto racing results were unavailable at press time.

After a week of blistering heat, Saturday morning's cross-country race was run under overcast skies with a touch of wind.

Jackson's winning time was only 16:36 — a 5:21 per mile pace — but the Jal coach just came off a five-month layoff caused by his coaching duties. Hawkins followed in 16:55.

Think Hawkins was encouraged when Jackson passed the turnaround point at Hogan Park Golf Course and kept running? Nah, the sportsmanlike Odessa College star told Jackson he'd gone too far.

"He made up whatever I had on him and put it on me," Hawkins said.

Jackson said he would have figured it out eventually, however.

"I realized there wasn't any more red line (that marked the course on both sides of a cart path)," he said. "They said in the instructions to cross the road and then look for a turnaround.

"It was a little windy, but I was pretty happy with my time."

Indianapolis 500: Latest crusade today

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indy 500 is always speed, danger, excitement, and tension.

This year's race will be one more thing: faster. So fast, in fact, it will even sound different. The cars growl instead of whine.

Thirty-three ground-hugging machines, the fastest field in racing history, are scheduled to take the green flag for the 73rd Indy 500 at 10 a.m. CST Sunday.

Rick Mears, the fastest Indy-car driver of all time, will be in front, as he has been four previous times. And he wll try to become the first repeat winner since Al Unser in 1970-71.

"It's always good to start up front," the defending and three-time Indy champion said. "But especially with the speeds we'll be running here at the start — maybe 215 or 216 — it will be good to be out ahead of the real traffic.

"With all the cars bouncing around in the dirty air and the adrenalin flowing at the start, anything can happen," he said. "But if everybody just keeps their head and remembers that there's no glory or money for winning the first couple of laps, it should be a good race."

That's what is expected by the 400,000 who show up at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway each year — the largest audience in sports. Besides the crowd, filling an estimated 290,000 seats and the sprawling infield, a national television audience will watch the live broadcast by ABC.

The National Weather Service forecast for Sunday called for sunny skies, with highs in the 70s.

Highs on the track, as Mears said, could approach 220.

The record for a single race lap of 209.517, which Mears set on lap 166 last May, is nearly certain to fall early in the 200-lap event. The record field average during qualifications was 216.588.

Mears, who set one- and four-lap qualifying records of 224.254 mph and 223.885, is the spearhead of the dominating Penske Racing team led by Roger Penske.

Penske's drivers have won seven Indy 500s and started from the pole eight times, Indianapolis records.

A year ago, his three drivers — Mears, four-time winner Unser and 1985 champion Danny Sullivan — combined to lead 192 of the 200 laps after an unprecedented sweep of the front-row starting positions.

"I come to Indy to win for the team and the drivers," Penske said. "You've got to realize there's only one Indy every 365 days. You have to do whatever it takes.

"Some people say that running a two- or three-car team hurts the overall effort," he added. "I think if you can put two or three cars on the track at Indy, with drivers who know how to win, you've got a great chance."

Stadium 'vehicle' idea looks for suitable driver

Williamson

I'm hearing around town that if House Bill 1738 passes through the Texas legislature and is signed into law by Gov. Clements, which is expected, Midland will have a new football stadium. A stadium in Midland, Texas, just doesn't come that easily and there are some major hurdles ahead.

House Bill 1738, which is authored by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and sponsored by Sen. Bill Sims, DSan Angelo, would allow the county commissioners' court to create a sports facility district that could finance the construction, acquisition and operation of a sports facility to serve the county.

The district would have no taxing authority, but would be authorized to issue revenue bonds that would be repaid from stadium rental fees and lease income.

Arthur Donnelly III, one of the Midland businessmen who sought this action, says, "This doesn't build us a stadium, but it gives us a vehicle within which we can if we so desire."

If the bill passes, Donnelly says several things will have to take place before such an undertaking can begin.

"First, to advertise the bonds, we would have to get lease commitments from the school district and Midland College on a 30-year payout agreement. That would give you a base from which to work.

"We would also need two or three grants equal at least to the value of the property on which the stadium is built, and I think we could do that.

"But most importantly, this concept would have to be made a part of the Midland bed (hotel and motel) tax under the city's economic development program in that it would create new jobs and bring extra income into the community."

Donnelly already has a proposal for a multi-faceted sports facility that would include a 20,000-seat stadium for football and soccer, a 50-meter indoor olympic pool and indoor tennis courts.

"This won't be just a football stadium," said Donnelly. "What we've tried to do is include as broad a base as we could behind this idea. Most stadiums are not built with soccer in mind, but this one will. There won't be a track inside the stadium, so the crowd will be much closer to the action. There is no 50-meter indoor pool in Midland and this will also give a place to move tennis matches when the weather is bad. And, of course, it will be an excellent stadium for football."

The Scharbauer family is willing to donate approximately 300 acres for the project on property just west of Sam's Wholesale Club on State Highway 191. This has been a long standing offer from the Scharbauers in the event Midland ever wanted to build a new stadium.

Donnelly said the project could cost anywhere from $12 to $18 million. He said an all-weather track could be added just outside the stadium complex where 5,000 seats could be available on roll-outs from the edge of the stadium.

"It could be a facility that is used year-round. We could also attract some major tournaments in soccer, playoff games in football, swimming and tennis meets. It could bring a lot of events to Midland that we just don't get now."

Memorial Stadium, the current football and track home of both Midland Lee and Midland High, seats just over 10,000 fans. Midland Lee has already reached the saturation point for football. A waiting list is required for season ticket holders since MISD can't sell any more season tickets for Lee games.

Also, Memorial Stadium was built in the 1940s and has no facilities for TV crews. This has become a stumbling block since national cable outlets and Home Sports Entertainment (HSE) have been expressing interest in televising some local games.

It is also estimated that Midland lost at least $2 million in both 1983 and 1984 when Lee and Odessa Permian took a quarterfinal playoff game to Lubbock's Jones Stadium where close to 30,000 Petroplex fans fled the area during the Christmas rush season.

Now it appears we have a "vehicle" for a stadium. Here's wondering if we know how to drive it.

Rychel, Perez head All 4-5A

From Staff Reports

Midland High pitcher Kevin Rychel and centerfielder Tony Perez led a group of eight local high school athletes named to the All-District 4-5A baseball team, announced Saturday.

Rychel and Perez were the only two local players named to the first team; Lee Rebels J.J. Johnson and Brent Sanders, though, were selected utility outfielder and designated hitter.

Abilene Cooper's Scotty Pugh, who has committed to the University of Texas, was named the district's Most Valuable Player while Cougar coach Andy Malone and Permian's Bob Highly shared Coach of the Year honors.

Rychel, who, like Pugh, has signed to play with the Longhorns, was the district's leading pitcher, finishing the district season with a 1.11 earned run average through 44 innings. Rychel struck out 60 batters — almost nine for every earned run (7) he allowed.

Perez was sixth in district batting on the season, finishing out with a .390 batting average.

Midland High's Jason Stone was named to the second team and Dorey Thompson, pitcher-third baseman, was honorable mention.

Lee's Johnson finished the year second in team batting with a .367 average while Brent Sanders won the Rebel batting title with a .385 average.

Pitcher Michael Pearson, who hit .325 in 40 at bats also received second team honor for his play as a first baseman.

Catcher Greg Garrett also received honorable mention.

Surprisingly, Abilene High, fourth place finishers, led the teams with seven players being named to one of the three. Four of those — second baseman Corey Gonzales, third baseman Todd Self, shortstop Trey Forkerway and outfielder Michael Romero — were named to the first team.

Abilene Cooper placed six on one of the all-league squads.

Seniors dominated the list as 27 of the 34 recognized are in the their final year of high school.

Five juniors and one sophomore — San Angelo outfielder J.W. Orr — rounded out the team.

Cooper fails to defend state title

From Staff Reports

FORT WORTH — Abilene Cooper's Class 5A baseball reign ended here Saturday with a 6-2 loss to the Fort Worth Southwest Rebels, ending the Cougars' bid for a third consecutive state title.

Cooper committed five errors against Southwest in the third game of the best-of-three series between the two teams.

The demise of Cooper may have come Friday in an 8-7 loss to Southwest. Cooper lost that game when Rebel Mark Harris hit a three-run homer off of Scott Malone with two outs in the bottom of the seventh inning.

It looked like Cooper was headed for state advancement on Tuesday when Cooper beat the Rebels 11-7 in Abilene, but the Cougars couldn't nail down the other win they needed on the road.

Cooper ends its season at 25-6 while Southwest advances with a 29-4 mark against Arlington in the quarterfinals.

Brownfield pulled from playoffs

BROWNFIELD, Texas (AP) — A West Texas high school withdrew its baseball team from the state playoffs and suspended its head coach with pay because of a hazing incident on a bus while the team was returning from a game.

The Brownfield school board ordered a playoff game Friday against Dalhart forfeited. Head coach Les Schubert was suspended with pay for the alleged hazing incident on Tuesday during the Cubs' ride home from Monahans, where they beat Fabens in a bi-district game.

Two sophomores reportedly were ordered to the back of the bus and held down by their arms and legs and given pink bellies by underclassmen who beat them across their stomachs and chests.

Brownfield's school board ordered the Cubs, five-time defending district champion, to forfeit its playoff game on Friday against Dalhart and voted unanimously that Schubert be suspended with pay.

Four coaches, including Schubert, were on the bus and did nothing to stop the alleged hazing, said Buzz Timmons, the father of one of the victims.

Timmons' 16-year-old son, Clay, suffered welts and bruises on his stomach, chest and right arm. Timmons was treated by Dr. Carl Smith of Brownfield, who at first feared that he might have suffered internal injuries.

The second alleged hazing victim and his parents have refused to talk about the incident.

Schubert's couldn't be reached for comment because his phone number is unlisted.

Timmons, pastor of the First Baptist Church in nearby Wellman, said he was shocked by his son's beating but believed that hazing had become an accepted tradition of the Brownsfield baseball program.

"My intent from the onset was to, one, see that it's (hazing) stopped and, two, the protection of my son," Timmons told the Lubbock Avalanche Journal.

Armando Sedeno, the Cubs' head coach from 1985 to 1988, and who is now an assistant coach at Spring Westfield, said that horseplay among players was allowed during his stint in Brownfield, but that he never encouraged or participated in hazings or initiations.

"As far as telling a player he had to be initiated, no way," Sedeno said. "The guys would get back there (on the bus) and play around, but you couldn't call it a tradition. It was a matter of kids being kids."

Brownfield Independent School District superintendent Don Hendley, on advice from his attorney, refused comment.

But board member Brenda Rudd, a Brownfield attorney, confirmed that Schubert was suspended Wednesday, with pay, by Hendley.

Mrs. Rudd, who said no action was taken against any of the other three coaches, pending the outcome of an investigation by school officials, refused to speculate on Schubert's future.

Investigations by the University Interscholastic League, which was informed of Brownfield's forfeiture Friday, and the Texas Education Agency also are likely.

Aggies score 100th postseason run

Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — John Byington drove in six runs, including a two-run homer in the nine-run fourth inning, leading Texas A&M to a 17-6 victory over South Alabama Saturday that advanced the Aggies to the finals of the NCAA Central Region baseball playoffs.

The Aggies, 3-0 in the tournament, will play the winner of Saturday night's game between Louisiana State and South Alabama in Sunday's finals.

Byington also accounted for two runs with a triple in the fifth inning and had a two-run single in the sixth.

The Aggies have scored 100 runs in six post-season games, including the Southwest Conference Tournament, and they've scored in double figures 29 times this season.

Byington's fourth inning homer was his 14th of the season. The inning also included a three-run triple by Chuck Knoblauch and two-run hits by Jim Neumann and Andy Duke.

South Alabama starter Rafael Perez, 6-7, and reliever Stephen Baker walked three batters and hit two during the big Aggie inning.

Steve Hughes, 2-0, got the victory in relief.

South Alabama pitchers hit five Aggies batters in the game.

South Alabama got three runs in the second inning when Harold Dueitt stole home on a double steal, Bob Filotei scored on pitcher Ronnie Allen's throwing error and Bobby Robertson's sacrifice fly for a 3-1 lead.

It was the first time in the Aggies had trailed in a Central Region game.

Mike Easley's single to right field in the eighth inning gave at lest one hit to all the Aggie starters.

Texas 11, Southern Cal 8

AUSTIN, Texas — Jon Prather, who has received treatment for cancer in the past year, hit a bases-loaded triple in the sixth inning that helped fifth-ranked Texas come from behind to beat 18th-ranked Southern Cal 11-8 on Saturday in the NCAA Midwest regional baseball tournament.

The top-seeded Longhorns improved to 49-17 for the season in front of 6,777 and will play the winner of the Oklahoma State-Western Michigan game.

The loss was the second of the tournament for Southern Cal, whose season ends at 41-25.

Texas came from behind twice.

Prather, a senior catcher, came into the tournament hitting .189 and did not have a hit in the tournament before his triple in the top of the sixth.

He added a sacrifice fly in the seventh when Texas went up 10-8.

The Trojans touched Scott Bryant for four runs in the bottom of the fourth and after he retired the side, he did not return for the fifth inning.

Bryant who pitched for the first time since high school April 29 in relief against Arkansas, was making just his third start. His only win was in the Southwest Conference Tournament against Arkansas.

Bryant, who leads the nation with 105 RBIs, a Southwest Conference record, allowed three hits and three walks in his brief stint while striking out four.

The Trojans retaliated with four runs in the bottom of the sixth for an 8-6 lead, before Texas' six-run seventh.

Curry Harden picked up the win for the Longhorns after two innings of relief and is 2-0.

N. Orleans 8, Sam Houston State 4

AUSTIN, Texas — Alan Barnard went 3-for-4, with a home run and four RBIs as sixth-seeded New Orleans beat Sam Houston State 8-4 Saturday, eliminating the Bearkats from the NCAA Midwest Regional tournament.

The Privateers, 31-33, on Sunday will play the loser of the Oklahoma State-Western Michigan game. The Bearkats, winners of the Southland Conference, ended their season at 31-23.

New Orleans jumped ahead with a three-run first, highlighted by Todd Castleberry's steal of home. Castleberry had doubled to start the game.

Sam Houston State scored four runs in the third inning to erase a 3-0 New Orleans lead. Second baseman Doug Faust's error on a possible double play grounder allowed two runs to score, and kept alive the Bearkats' big inning.

Sports Fest

SportsFest '89 continued Saturday with a variety of events, including triathloning, auto racing, baseball skills, cross-country running and bowling.

Another integral part of SportsFest is the concessions and carnival area in and around Angels Stadium, along with live music each night. While most of the musical acts are locally-based, nationally-regarded country-and-western musicians Clint Black and Ronna Reeves will grace the stage tonight.

Black has a single ranked sixth in a recent edition of the Billboard magazine Top 100, while Reeves started her professional career in her native Big Spring.

All the activity has energized what would be an otherwise dormant Angels Stadium, since the Midland Angels baseball team is on the road.

And, Midland's first multi-sport festival could have a beneficial effect on the Permian Basin's only professional sports team, according to LuAnn Wall, Angels' Director of Community Services.

"I think this has been a good thing for Midland," Wall said. "It's something different for Memorial Day weekend.

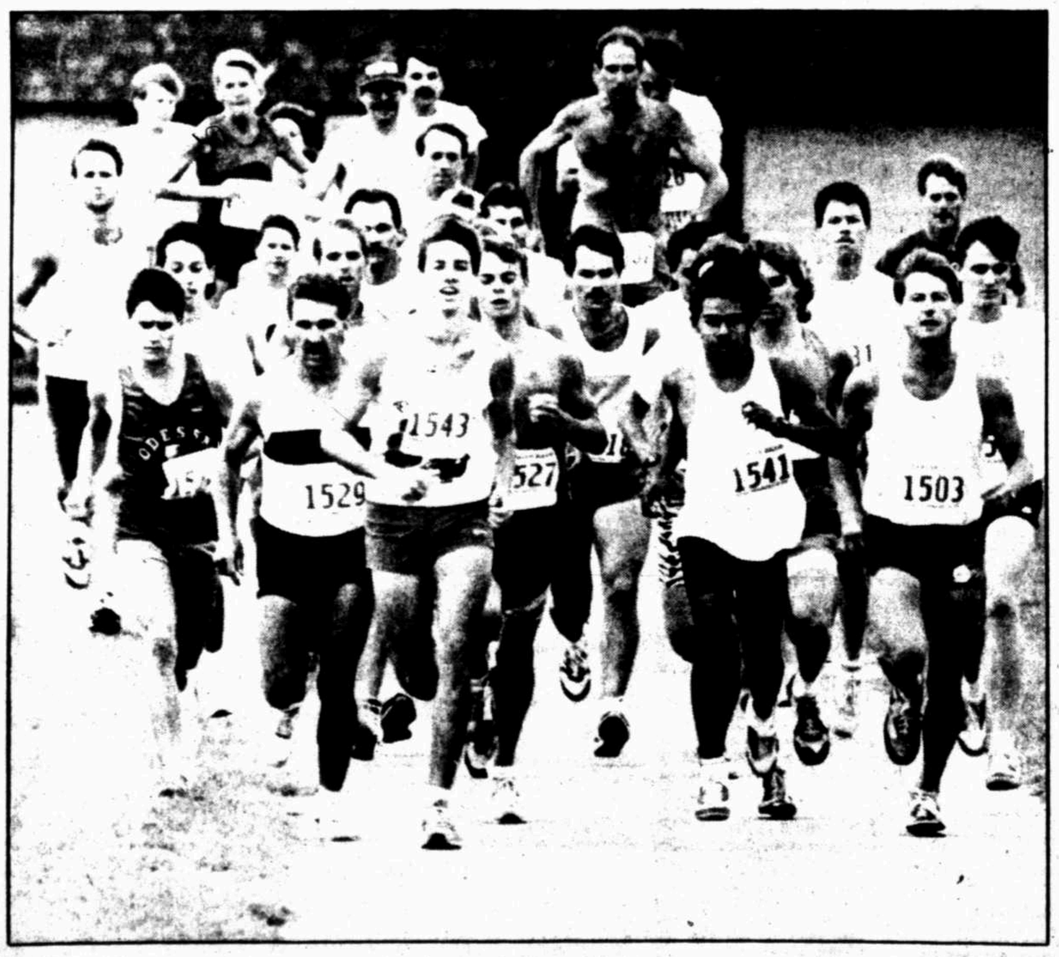

"We've had people come to the window asking for a schedule and for when the team will be back in town."

And then there's the food...

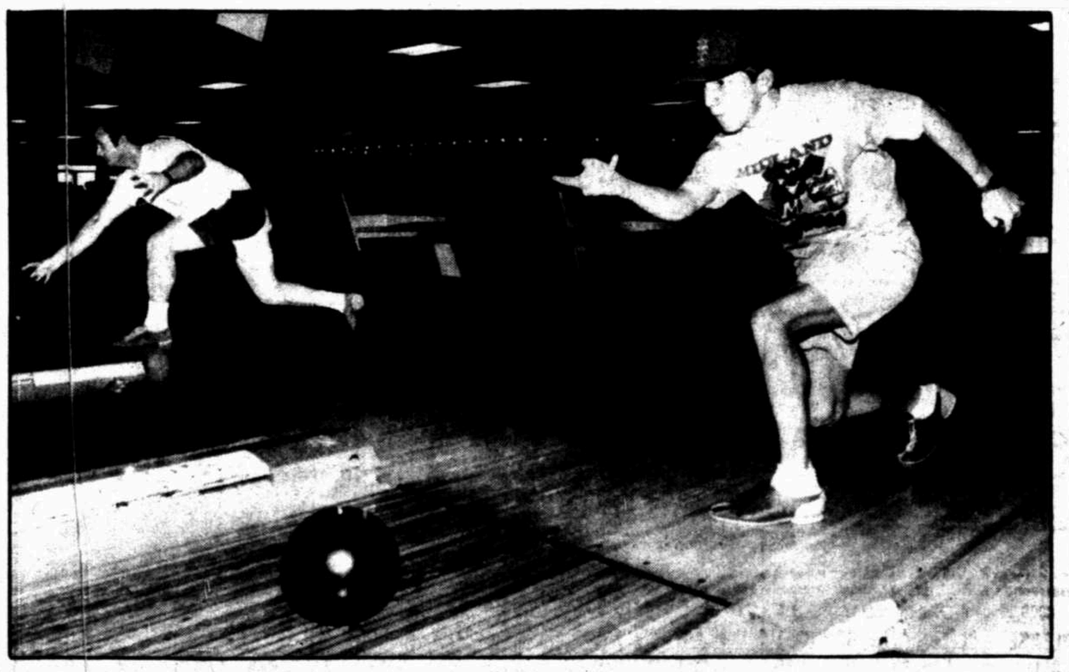

In addition to the normal fare found at any Angels game, the parking lot food booths feature such disparate goodies as sausage-on-a-stick, seafood, tamales and scones.

Colter Marcum, 7, takes a healthy whack at the ball during the Pitch, Hit and Run competition.

Bob Jackson, 1529, the eventual winner of the SportsFest cross-country race was joined by a legion of runners at the start including Ken Woody, 1503, and Alfred Hinojos, 1541.

Midland High student Craig Eubanks, 16, competes in the youth bowling tournament.

Unknown Blake takes lead in Atlanta Classic

PGA

By ED SHEARER

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — Jay Don Blake isn't concerned that his name may be unfamiliar to most of the spectators watching the Atlanta Classic.

"I hope that when it's all over with, they'll know my name," Blake said Saturday after tapping in a 1-foot birdie putt on the final hole to take a one-shot lead after three rounds.

"Just because you don't have a well-known player up there doesn't mean there isn't talent up there," he said of a leader board that also includes such names as Duffy Waldorf, Kent Kluba and Mike Miles.

"I don't look at the leader board and think Larry Mize is up there and he's the guy I got to beat," Blake said. "I play against myself."

Blake had narrowly missed a 40-foot eagle putt on the par-5 finishing hole before tapping in for birdie to close out a 2-under-par 70. It left him with a 9-under-par 207 total for 54 holes on the hilly, 7,018-yard Atlanta Country Club course.

He held his one-shot lead over Waldorf, who had a 71 with four birdies and three bogeys.

Both Blake and Waldorf have never finished better than ninth in a tour event, but will be shooting for the $162,000 first prize on Sunday.

"I feel pretty confident," Waldorf said. "Sure, I'll be nervous."

Blake scored birdies from 18 feet on the first hole and 10 feet on the seventh. A long chip cost him a bogey on the 12th when he two-putted from five feet.

Wayne Grady, the Australian who led at the halfway point, parred his first 14 holes before carrying over the green on No. 15, taking a drop and missing a 4-foot par putt. He also bogeyed 17 and 18 for a 75, pushing him four shots off the lead.

Mize, the 1987 Masters champion, long-hitting Davis Love III and Kluba, a rookie, each posted 69s that left them two shots off the lead.

"I'm happy with the way I played, but I'm a little disappointed because I thought it could have been better," Mize said after putting together a string of four birdies starting on the second hole.

"I really felt like I left a lot out there," said Love, whose poor driving led to three bogeys. "I'm confident. There's not a lot of guys shooting real low scores."

Love, winner of the Heritage two years ago, holed a 40-foot bunker shot for a birdie on the 16th.

Kluba, who has won only $398 for a 69th-place tie at Hattiesburg, Miss., earlier this year, was thrilled with his position going into the final round.

"I'm savoring every minute of it," he said.

Miles, a second-year player who has won only $9,232 in his career, turned in the lowest round of the day, a 66 that left him at 210.

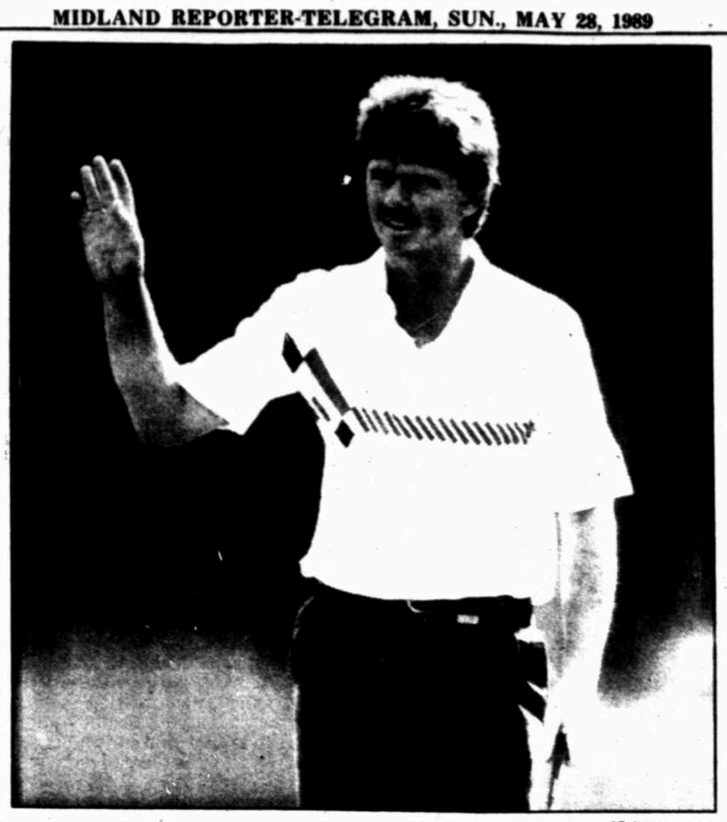

Three others who started the day one shot off the lead had their problems. Mike Hulbert skied to a 79-216, Canadian Ray Stewart had a 75-212 and Larry Silveira 76-213.

Defending champion Larry Nelson birdied the last three holes for a 68 that left him in a group at 211. Nelson has won this event twice and also owns a U.S. Open and two PGA titles.

The group tied with Nelson also included Calvin Peete, who shot a 70, and Scott Simpson and Bob Tway, each with 71s.

Isao Aoki of Japan was forced to withdraw because of a pulled muscle in his right shoulder. He had started the day three shots out of the lead, but struggled to a 41 on the front side before pulling out on the 10th tee.

The event is sponsored by BellSouth.

Angels lose two; Wichita closing in

From Staff Reports

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The walls of the Texas League West are tumbling down for the Midland Angels, who dropped a doubleheader to the Arkansas Travelers here Saturday night, losing 2-1 and 5-3.

Midland has owned first place since the first week of the Texas League season in the West, but they have now dropped five straight games and lead the Wichita Wranglers by a mere ½-game. Wichita, two games behind Midland going into Saturday's play, beat Shreveport, 5-4 in 10 innings.

The Travs produced the sweep with two runs in the bottom of the fourth inning after Midland had rallied to tie the game at 3-3. Catcher Mike Stephens drove in two runs with two hits and Jesus Martinez produced two doubles to help stir the broom sweep.

David Martinez lost for the third time in seven decisions while Frank Potestio went the distance to improve his record to 4-3.

In the first game, the Angels lost it in the eighth inning when Craig Wilson scored from second base on a single by Rod Brewer that hit the first base bag, giving Tim Burcham, 3-1, his first loss of the season.

Midland held a 1-0 lead in the fourth when Mike Knapp's bloop single with the bases loaded scored Scott Cerny, but Bob Rose hit into a double play to end a big scoring threat.

Arkansas tied it at 1-1 in the sixth when Ray Lankford scored from second on a single by Brewer.

The Angels now have two days to regroup before taking on San Antonio Tuesday in a brief six-game homestand.

Japan's Okamoto threatens to lead LPGA again

By RANDOLPH PICHT

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Ayako Okamoto of Japan overcame swirling winds Saturday and shot a 4-under-par 67 to open a five-shot lead over Beth Daniel after three rounds of the LPGA Corning Classic.

Okamoto, who had previous rounds of 69 and 66, had a 54-hole total of 11-under 202.

Daniel, who trailed by only one stroke going into the third round, carded a 71 for 207.

The wind has affected play each round at the 6,006-yard, par-71 Corning Country Club course, and only five golfers were below par after three rounds.

Okamoto, who is ninth on the LPGA's career money list, was the runner-up in last week's LPGA Championship. She has been playing well recently after a slow start.

Since taking a month off before the LPGA Championship, she has had seven consecutive rounds below par. Before the LPGA Championship, she had only five of 23 rounds below par.

Okamoto struggled a little, but helped herself with a strong short game. She had four birdies and two bogeys on the front nine, and a steady back nine with seven pars and two birdies.

Pat Bradley was third, seven shots behind, at 209. Patty Sheehan and first-round co-leader Dawn Coe were tied for fourth at 211.

STAMPEDE

Winkel and Tucker had 64 on Friday. They shot one stroke worse than that on Saturday, but still own a share of the lead.

The tournament ends today with the final 18 holes of play, and judging from the first two days, just about anything can happen on the stretch holes.

The top two twosomes, however, won't be without company today. Bob Young and Steve Whiteside made an old Aggie charge Saturday, posting the best round of the day with a 63. Young and Whiteside now own a 130, just one stroke out of the lead.

The team of Craig Adams and Kelly Cox stand in fourth place with a 132, but close enough to make a championship charge today.

Fifth place belongs to Tim McWhirter and Scott Gillespy with a 136 and face the challenge of making up seven strokes in one 13-hole round.

The tournament has attracted 234 golfers for 10 flights of play. Many of the golfers are visiting Midland from out-of-town during the SportFest weekend.

Duo posts hefty lead

From Staff Reports

Galen Delay and Chris Young own a hefty six-stroke lead in Mission Country Club's 1989 Scottish golf tournament after two days of play with a 134 total.

Second place belongs to the teams of Dub and Ron Huckabee and Lazar and Malcom Kirven, both with 140.

Friday's round was a Chapman format, using a modified alternate shot system. Saturday's round was a scramble event and the final 18 holes today will be a low ball competition with all scores counting toward the championship.

INDY

Most drivers don't like the idea of sharing the chance at victory with anyone else, but Penske says his drivers don't mind.

"They certainly know they can't all be in the winner's circle," he said. "But, if the team wins, everybody wins. They're willing to take that chance, and the money that's won is spread across the whole team."

Mears won $809,853 last year from a record purse of $5,024,400. This year's purse will be near $6 million, and this year's winner could be the first to earn $1 million in racing history.

Unser, who will turn 50 on Monday, will be right beside Mears in the front row in a virtually identical Chevrolet-powered Penske PC18. Sullivan, who will race with his broken right forearm cradled in a special brace, will start 26th in another of the new Penske-built cars.

Sullivan broke his arm during a crash in practice May 11 and was unable to qualify until the second weekend. But, with his seat, steering wheel and gearshift lever all modified for easier movement, the glamour boy of Indy-car racing says he's ready to go.

"We did about 300 miles on the track last weekend," Sullivan said. "I ran with other cars and in race trim and I think we're going to be just fine."

With typical Penske contingency planning, however, Geoff Brabham, a veteran of seven Indy races, will be standing by in Sullivan's pits. The last time a relief driver was used at Indy was in 1973 when A.J. Foyt's car went out after 37 laps and he took over for teammate George Snider.

Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil, a two-time Formula One champion, made it an all-Penske-car front row, putting the only other PC18 on the outside of the front row for owner Pat Patrick.

Mears is the odds-on favorite, but Unser and Fittipaldi, along with about half a dozen others, are just a step behind.

"We finished a strong second last year," Fittipaldi said. "This is a better car and the team is more experienced and better. I think it is time for me to win."

Jim Crawford of Scotland, another crash victim this month, will start his rebuilt and practically untested 1987 Lola-Buick on the inside of the second three-car row, with 1969 Indy winner Mario Andretti and Scott Brayton alongside.

Bobby Rahal, the 1986 winner, Al Unser Jr. and Brazilian Raul Boesel will be in the third row, followed by Foyt, the only other four-time Indy winner, Randy Lewis and John Andretti.

Rahal's record race speed of 170.722 mph could be in jeopardy, depending on caution periods. In that 1986 race, which featured the previous fastest field ever with an average of 210.280, there were six yellow flags for a total of 34 laps.

In contrast, Mears won last year with an average speed of 144.809, held down by 14 caution periods for 68 laps.

Other former Indy champs in the field include 1983 winner Tom Sneva and two-time winner Gordon Johncock, both in row eight just ahead of Sullivan.

Other drivers starting in the back half of the field but capable of winning are Michael Andretti, Mario's son and teammate, and 1986 runner-up Kevin Cogan.

Foyt, 54, will be driving in his record 32nd consecutive Indy 500.

The only man ever to drive here in four different decades, Foyt hasn't won at Indy since 1977 and is no longer one of the favorites. But he hasn't lost any of his competitiveness.

"I wouldn't be out here if I didn't think I could win it," Foyt said. "The day I go into a race thinking I can't win, that's the day I'll get out of the car for good."

There are four rookies in the lineup, including Scott Pruett, Didier Theys of Belgium, Bernard Jourdain of Mexico, the slowest qualifer in the field at 213.105, and John Jones of Canada, the fastest rookie at 214.028.

Last year's Rookie of the Year, Bill Vukovich III, will be making his second start here. He is the only third-generation Indy driver ever to compete at the oval and, at 23, the youngest driver in the field.

Foreign drivers include Teo Fabi of Italy, Arie Luyendyk of The Netherlands, Ludwig Heimrath Jr. of Canada and Derek Daly of Ireland.

Houston Little Leaguer reinstated

HOUSTON (AP) — The Sharpstown Pirates Little League team lost its last game of the season, but after the final inning a 15-year-old Pirates player with cerebral palsy was hoisted amid cheers onto the shoulders of his teammates.

Tucker Church, who had been kicked off the team earlier in the week after complaints from an opposing team, was a winner again.

Tucker, who despite his age weighs only 56 pounds because of his disease, was removed from the team and his coach was asked to resign because he had broken the rules by playing on a team of 9-to 12-year-olds.

Coach Scott Davis said when he saw the 4-foot-9 boy try out against players his own age, he knew Tucker would not make the cut despite his love of the game. So Davis bypassed the rules and placed him on the younger Pirates squad.

On Friday, Little League officials — astounded by the number of angry phone calls made to national headquarters — bowed to public pressure and ruled Tucker could play if he presented a doctor's note at game time that said he would be safer playing on the team of younger boys.

But at 15 minutes before game time Friday evening, Tucker didn't think he was going to play.

"I'm not going to play unless Coach Davis coaches, and that's final," said Tucker, who didn't think it was fair that district administrator Paul Goolsby banned Davis from coaching for placing him on the younger team.

After conferring with Sharpstown Little League President Lercy Simoneaux, Davis finally decided at game time to coach.

"Goolsby told me he may cancel our All-Star game if I let him (Davis) coach but I can't believe he'd really do that to these kids," Simoneaux said.

In the third inning Tucker entered the lineup.

The crowd of about 100 people chanted "Tucker, Tucker" when he came to the plate.

Five pitches later, he had struck out.

"I swung as hard as I could," he said, shaking his head. "I don't know what he threw me. I'm not sure I saw it."

Tucker Church is raised by his teammates after being allowed to play in the final game for his Sharpstown Little League team.

Tucker had no fielding chances Friday but he led the team in yells of encouragement to the pitcher.

After the Pirates lost 13-4, Tucker was carried off the field on his teammates' shoulders.

A little later, he broke down in tears.

"He's been under a lot of pressure," said his father, Terry.

"I'm so proud of him," said Tucker's mother, Judi, fighting back tears.

Joe Losch, assistant to the president of Little League baseball, said he was stunned by the irate phone calls made to the national headquarters on behalf of Tucker following Friday news accounts describing his plight.

"They wanted to know what we were doing to this poor kid so I called the Texas state office and said we have to make this right," he said.

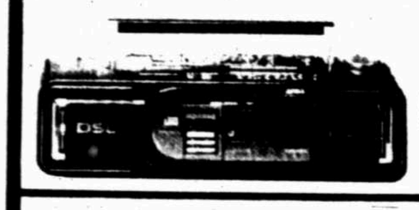

Calls also poured into The Houston Post, which first reported Tucker's story, and radio talk shows throughout the area.

Among Tucker's biggest supporters Friday was Adrienne Lyons, whose deaf sons Charles and Daniel played on the opposing team.

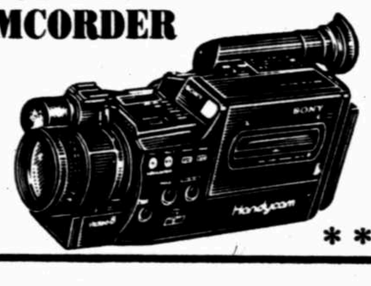

"We're all out here for the boys, and no one things any of these kids is deficient in any way," she said. "If it wasn't for some grownups getting greedy for trophies, there wouldn't be any problem."

Odessa's Ulrike Kalt won the women's division with a fine time of 19:24. Fellow Odessan Mary Laird finished in 19:53, while Midland's Jeni Winegarner ran a 20:09 for third despite having bicycled 20 miles immediately before the race.

IN THE TRIATHLON, Curt Kieffer kept up the memory of his late brother Craig, a City of Midland swim team member who died earlier this year, with a convincing win in the boys under nine division.

3-on-3 semifinals will be held today at 1 p.m. while the Monday finals will begin at 6 p.m. Monday.

Guidry looks strong in debut

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ron Guidry pitched six shutout innings in his first appearance of the season but Joey Meyer and Joe Mitchell hit two-run homers in the ninth inning Saturday night as Denver beat Columbus 4-3 in the Triple A Alliance.

Guidry, pitching for the New York Yankees' International League farm team, allowed two hits, struck out two and walked two.

The 38-year-old left-hander, who underwent arthroscopic surgery on March 17 to remove bone chips from his left elbow, threw 70 pitches, two under his limit.

Meyer had the only hits against Guidry. He led off the second with a double but was stranded when Guidry got the next three batters on a two flyouts and a groundout. Meyer singled with one out in the fourth, but Guidry got a strikeout and a flyout to end the inning.

Guidry, who is making $500,000 this year, is at Columbus on a 20-day rehabilitation assignment.

The Clippers scored in the first on Randy Velarde's RBI groundout. Brian Dorsett's second homer of the season increased the lead to 2-0 in the second.

In the ninth, Matias Carillo led off with a double against Bill Fulton, 2-2, and scored on Meyer second home run of the season. Fulton then walked George Canale and Mitchell followed with his sixth home run.

Will these guys ever quit?

Lakers still hungry after all these years

By WALTER BERRY

PHOENIX (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers have their broom ready.

Seeking their third straight NBA title, the Lakers are within one game of a third straight sweep in the playoffs.

They can wrap up their Western Conference finals with the Phoenix Suns by winning Game 4 Sunday afternoon at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum.

Los Angeles used another fourth-quarter rally to beat Phoenix 110-107 Friday night for a 3-0 lead in the best-of-7 series.

No team in NBA history has ever come back from an 0-3 deficit to win a seven-game playoff series. Moreover, the Suns have lost all five previous playoff series to Los Angeles, getting swept 4-0 in 1982 and 3-0 in 1985.

"They got their work cut out for them," Los Angeles coach Pat Riley said. "We're a little bit ahead of the pack right now, but we still have 48 minutes of basketball to play and we have to win one more before we move on.

"Phoenix is a proud team and they're going to come hard. We just have to be ready. I just hope we don't have to do what we did in Seattle (in Game 4) and come back from 29 points down" to win 97-95 on May 14.

The Lakers, who swept Portland 3-0 and Seattle 4-0, now are 10-0 in the playoffs this season, setting a league record for consecutive postseason victories. They have won 12 consecutive playoff games dating back to last year and 15 straight overall counting this regular season.

"It's not a big concern to us. We don't ever talk about any streaks. That can end tomorrow and it won't mean anything," Magic Johnson said. "We just need to keep taking it one game at a time. We need to keep working, working, working to get our goal. We just have to go in and do it again Sunday."

In each game, defense won it for the Lakers.

After Phoenix erased a 93-83 fourth-quarter deficit to take a 105-102 lead with 1:22 remaining Friday night, Los Angeles reserve center Mychal Thompson blocked a jumper by Dan Majerle with 22 seconds remaining and then helped force the Suns rookie guard to miss two 3-point goals down the stretch.

The Lakers hit eight free throws — four by Thompson — in the final 64 seconds to seal the victory.

"The last minute and a half was all defense," said Johnson, who finished with 20 points, 11 assists and nine rebounds. "Defense has been the key all season. If the game's close, we'll win it. There's no safe lead in a playoff game, especially if you're playing us.

"We're an experienced team. We don't get rattled. We never panic. We just keep working until we get something that works."

"We just kept our poise and executed properly down the stretch," said Lakers forward James Worthy, who had 14 of his 29 points in the fourth period and also grabbed a game-high 12 rebounds.

The Suns made 61 percent of their field goals (14 of 23) in the second period to take a 54-50 halftime lead before Los Angeles went to a trapping defense.

"Coach Riley got on us at the half and felt like a trap would work," Johnson said. "We put in the trap all through the second half and that was the key."

"We were trying to step up the tempo in the third quarter when they finally went to their zone defense," Phoenix coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said. "Part of the time, it was just a straight zone. The other time it was the so-called trap zone so they could keep the ball away from Kevin as much as possible."

Kevin Johnson, the league's most improved player this season, was held to seven second-half points and 22 overall.

Phoenix's Eddie Johnson, the NBA's sixth man award winner, continues to struggle with his shooting and his jammed right pinky. He was 5-of-16 from the field Friday night and is 13-of-44 for the series while center Tom Chambers is 24-of-66 after going 11-for-24 in Game 3.

"To beat the world champions, we need Eddie and Tom 'on' a great deal," Fitzsimmons said. "It's that simple."

"They will not get comfortable jump shots. That's what our guys have done," Riley said. "This is a team that has really taken the challenge. They're addicted to winning. We know we need one more and we move on again."

"Another loss and we're done for the season," guard Jeff Hornacek said. "We just have to think about getting a win here Sunday and going back to L.A. (for a possible Game 5 Tuesday night) and see what happens."

"We have to show some character," Kevin Johnson said. "I don't think we'll fold."

"We just have to think positive," Eddie Johnson said. "Even if history says 'No way.' "

BULLS

Chicago has never made the championship series and is making only its third appearance in a conference final. The Bulls lost to Milwaukee in 1974 and to Golden State in 1975.

The Pistons had an 11-point lead at halftime, largely on the strength of an 18-point performance by Aguirre, the former DePaul University star, making a dazzling, if lustily booed, appearance.

The Pistons hoped for a repetition of their playoff experience against Chicago last year. In that conference semifinal series, the Bulls surprised the Pistons by winning one of the first two games on Detroit's court, but the Pistons took the next three games.

Midway through the first quarter today, a head fake by John Salley sent Bill Cartwright soaring, and Salley's uncontested lay-in built the Piston lead to 7 points. The Pistons momentarily took the crowd out of the game.

But on the next trip down the floor, Jordan danced past four Piston defenders for a twisting lay-up, then staged a re-run seconds later to keep the Bulls close.

The Pistons usually have better success than other teams in defending Jordan, who was coming off a less than sensational game, when foul trouble and the flu helped limit his output to 27 points.

But Jordan was the picture of health from the start, scoring 13 points in the first quarter, while Isiah Thomas, playing under Jordan's gaze, could score only 3 points in the first quarter. The Jordan show kept the Bulls within 1 point after the first quarter, at 28-27.

Aguirre led the Pistons to an 11-point halftime lead, 56-45. A native of the West Side here, Aguirre dropped in baskets as if he were on a playground from his childhood.

In his 18-point first half, he accounted for 10 of the 14 points scored on the floor during a stretch midway in the second quarter.

Michael Jordan gives textbook lesson in basketball thievery

By JOE MOOSHIL

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan and the Chicago Bulls got away with grand theft Saturday.

Jordan scored 46 points, including the game-winning basket with three seconds left, as the Bulls rallied from a 13-point deficit late in the game to beat the Detroit Pistons 99-97 and take a 2-1 lead in the Eastern Conference finals.

"We stole it," said Jordan, who had 17 points in the fourth quarter. "We did not play that good a game. Two key players were not making the contributions they wanted."

JORDAN WAS referring to Bulls forwards Scottie Pippen and Horace Grant, who were held to seven points each. Pippin, playing on a sore left foot, was 2-for-10 from the field. Grant, suffering from the flu, missed five of seven field goal attempts and had only three rebounds after a 16-point, 20-rebound performance in Game 2.

"I was wiped out," said Grant, who became nauseous during the second quarter and had to make a quick trip to the dressing room. "I was weak. I couldn't hold the rebounds I got my hands on."

PIPPEN SAID he was bothered by the sore foot.

"I wasn't 100 percent," he said. "I wasn't able to run up the court. I tried to protect the foot, to keep people from stepping on it."

Although they had off games, Pippen and Grant made key contributions down the stretch. Pippen hit a 3-pointer that cut Detroit's lead to 90-83 and sparked the Bulls' late rally.

"That was the trigger," Jordan said. "We knew it would be a dog fight from there."

GRANT TIPPED in a basket with Chicago trailing 95-91 and made two free throws with 28 seconds left to tie the game at 97.

"I thought to myself, 'I got to make 'em, this is a chance to redeem myself,' " he said.

That set the stage for the dramatic finish.

The Pistons were playing for a final shot when Bill Laimbeer was called for setting an illegal pick on Jordan. The Bulls then got the ball to Jordan, who drove for the game-winning basket. Detroit's Joe Dumars missed a desperation 3-point attempt as the buzzer sounded.

Benches clear, dukes fly in Rangers' 5-3 win over Twins

Associated Press

Jeff Kunkel had two hits and Rafael Palmeiro drove in two runs Saturday night as the Texas Rangers beat the Minnesota Twins, 5-3, in a game that included a fight over accusations of sign stealing.

In the second inning, Minnesota catcher Brian Harper accused Steve Buechele of stealing signs and the two fought. Both benches emptied and the game was delayed for about 10 minutes before Buechele and Harper were ejected.

Texas, which has won four of its last five games, had seven doubles equaling a club record. The Rangers, who had 11 hits in all, have done it five times, last at Chicago last July 2.

Kevin Brown, 4-1, pitched a six-hitter for his third complete game, striking out seven and walking one.

Allan Anderson, 5-3, allowed six hits and four runs in two innings. He's won only once in his last seven starts.

Rafael Palmeiro's sacrifice fly gave Texas the lead in the first and the Rangers added three runs in the second.

Pete Incaviglia and Buechele hit consecutive doubles to make it 2-0. After Jim Sundberg flied out, Harper went to the mound and, according to third-base umpire Dave Phillips, told Buechele to stop stealing his signs to Anderson.

Kunkel doubled and as Buechele crossed home plate, he pointed at Harper and said something. Harper pushed Buechele and the two started wrestling. Scott Fletcher ran over from the on-deck circle and helped Buechele knock Harper to the ground, triggering the bench-clearing brawl.

After play resumed, Fletcher grounded out and Palmeiro scored Kunkel with the inning's fourth double for a 4-0 lead.

Tim Laudner hit an RBI single in the bottom of the inning. Fletcher's fourth-inning sacrifice fly off Juan Berenguer made it 5-1.

Wally Backman hit an RBI single in the eighth and Randy Bush hit a sacrifice fly.

Athletics 3, Yankees 0

Curt Young and three relievers combined on a six-hitter as the Oakland Athletics beat New York for their second straight shutout over the Yankees.

Young, 2-4, allowed four hits in five innings. In two of Young's previous three starts, he did not last past the fourth inning.

Gene Nelson followed three innings of one-hit relief and Dennis Eckersley came in to start the ninth. He faced two batters and left holding his right shoulder. Riok Honeycutt got the last two outs for his second save.

Todd Burns, Honeycutt and Eric Plunk had combined for a one-hitter Friday night, facing the minimum 27 batters. The Yankees had not been shut out in consecutive games since California did it on May 19 and 20, 1984.

Dave Henderson hit a two-run single in the first inning and Dave Parker homered in the second off Dave LaPoint, 5-3. LaPoint pitched seven innings and allowed eight hits.

Tony Phillips walked leading off the game and Carney Lansford doubled. Henderson then singled to center to score both runners.

Parker gave the Athletics a 3-0 lead when he led off the second with his sixth homer, a line drive to right. Parker has hit in 14 of his last 15 games with four homers and 12 runs batted in.

New York threatened in the third against Young when Steve Sax doubled with one out and stole third. But Don Mattingly lined to center and Jesse Barfield grounded out to second.

Royals 5, Tigers 1

Mark Gubicza pitched a seven-hitter to win at home for the first time in as Kansas City beat Detroit.

Randy Nosek, a 22-year-old right-hander called up from Class AA London, Ontario, walked eight in 4 2-3 innings as he made his major-league debut. He allowed three hits and struck out three.

Gubicza, 4-4, struck out five and walked two in his fourth complete game. He had been 0-3 in Royals Stadium.

The loss dropped the Tigers' road record to a major-league worst 5-16. Detroit did not commit an error for the 10th consecutive game, matching its longest streak since 1964.

Brad Wellman walked leading off the Royals' third and Eisenreich singled him to third. Matt Nokes was charged with a passed ball on a pitchout and Wellman scored as Eisenreich went to second. Bo Jackson then singled home Eisenreich.

Keith Moreland singled with one out in the fourth, moved up on Gubicza's wild pitch and scored on a single by former Royal Pat Sheridan, pulling Detroit to 2-1.

Luis de los Santos and Mark Macfarlane singled in the sixth against Randy Bockus. One out later, Eisenreich doubled to score de los Santos and advance Macfarlane to third.

After Kurt Stillwell was walked intentionally, Kevin Seitzer hit a two-run single.

White Sox 5, Blue Jays 3

Carlos Martinez hit first major-league homer to snap a sixth-inning tie as the Chicago White Sox beat the Toronto Blue Jays and ended a seven-game losing streak.

Melido Perez, 3-5, allowed eight hits, struck out four and walked two in seven innings. Bobby Thigpen finished with three-hit relief for his seventh save, striking out three.

John Cerutti, 1-3, gave up 10 hits in eight innings, struck out six and walked none.

With the score tied at 3, Martinez homered to right with two outs in sixth. It was his 55th major-league at-bat.

Third baseman Kelly Gruber dropped the ball with his bare hand during a rundown in the ninth, allowing Steve Lyons to score Chicago's fifth run.

Ron Kittle's run-scoring single and Fred Manrique's RBI double gave Chicago the lead in the first. Kittle left after the inning with a bruised right knee.

Fred McGriff hit an RBI single in the bottom of the inning and tied the game 2-2 in the third with 11th home run of the season.

Ron Karkovice's sacrifice fly put Chicago ahead in the fourth before Ernie Whitt tied the game in the bottom of the inning with his fourth homer. All have been hit against Chicago.

Orioles 5, Indians 1

Mickey Tettleton hit his sixth homer in 12 games and Dave Schmidt and Mark Huismann combined on a four-hitter as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Cleveland Indians for their fifth consecutive victory.

Baltimore, which beat Cleveland Friday, ensured its first series victory on the road against an AL East team since sweeping the Indians from April 10-12, 1987. The Orioles had lost 22 series on the road against the East and split two since then.

Schmidt, 4-4, left with a slight muscle pull in his rib cage. He came out to start the sixth but was replaced after he felt soreness during his warmup pitches. He allowed one run and three hits in five innings.

Huismann, making his second appearance since being recalled from Class AAA Rochester on Monday, earned his first save since July 6, 1987, by retiring 12 of the 14 batters he faced.

Bud Black, 3-6, gave up four runs and six hits in seven innings as Cleveland lost its fifth straight.

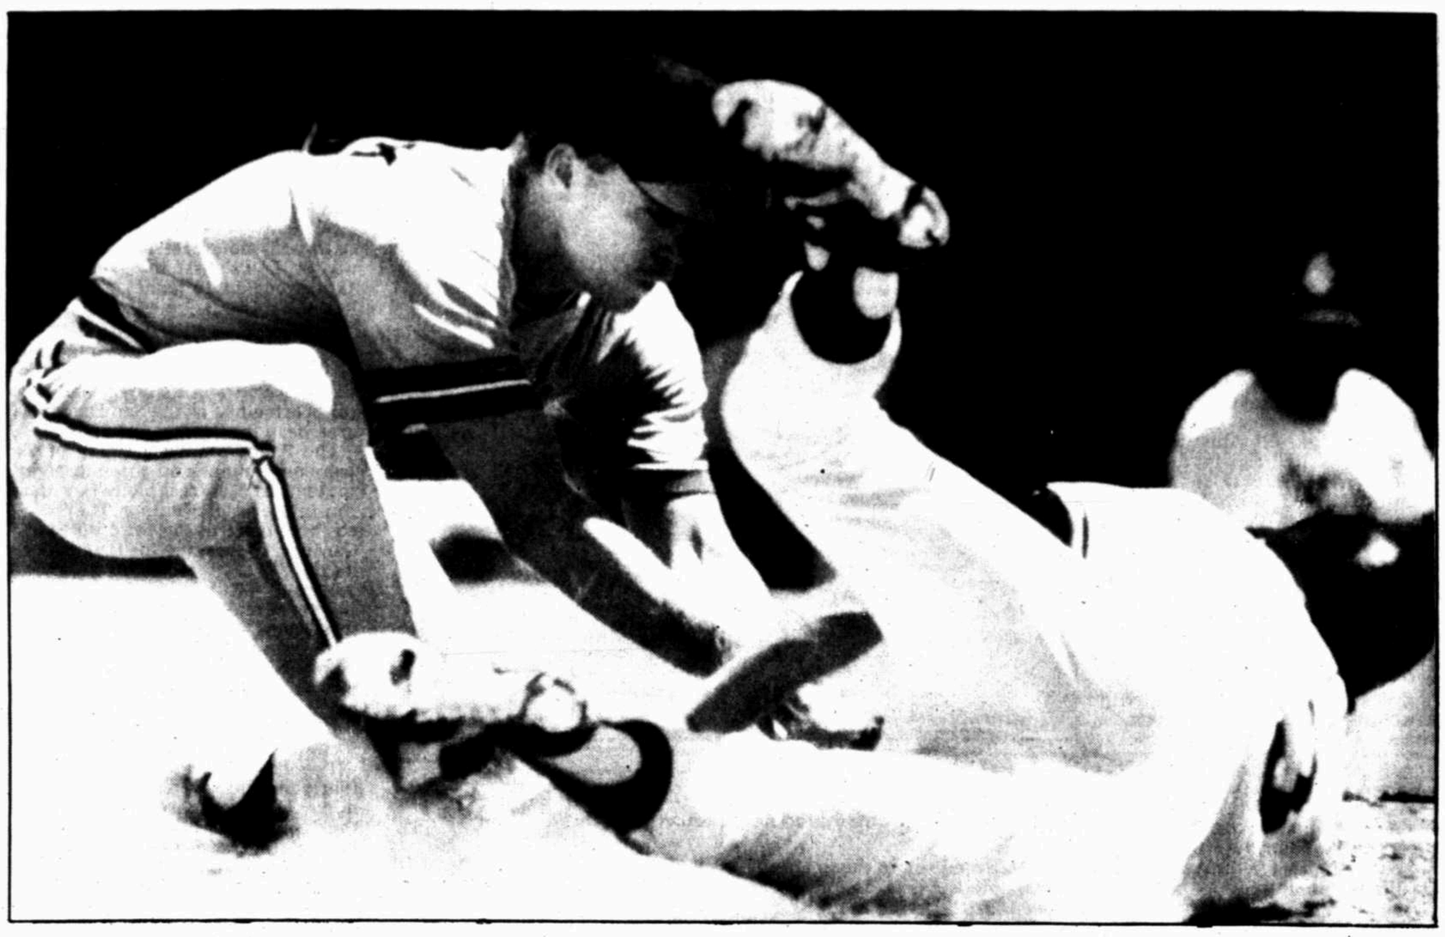

Baltimore snapped a 1-1 tie in the sixth inning. Phil Bradley and Cal Ripken singled and Tettleton walked, loading the bases. Bradley scored when Randy Milligan grounded into a double play.

Brewers 3, Mariners 2

Gary Sheffield, who Friday asked to be traded, singled in the winning run in the ninth inning as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Seattle Mariners 3-2 Saturday night despite another injury to Teddy Higuera.

Mariners manager Jim Lefebvre and catcher Dave Valle were ejected in the second inning for arguing with home plate umpire Ted Hendry.

Higuera sprained his left ankle in the fifth after retiring 11 consecutive batters. Higuera, who has been recovering from January back surgery, was taken to a Milwaukee hospital for X-rays. He had missed his previous start because of a strained back muscle not related to the surgery.

Yankees ground Piniella

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Lou Piniella dropped out of contention for the Toronto Blue Jays' managerial opening Saturday.

The Blue Jays' failure to meet the Yankees' demands for player compensation caused the discussions to end, leaving Piniella in the broadcast booth and as an occasional hitting instructor.

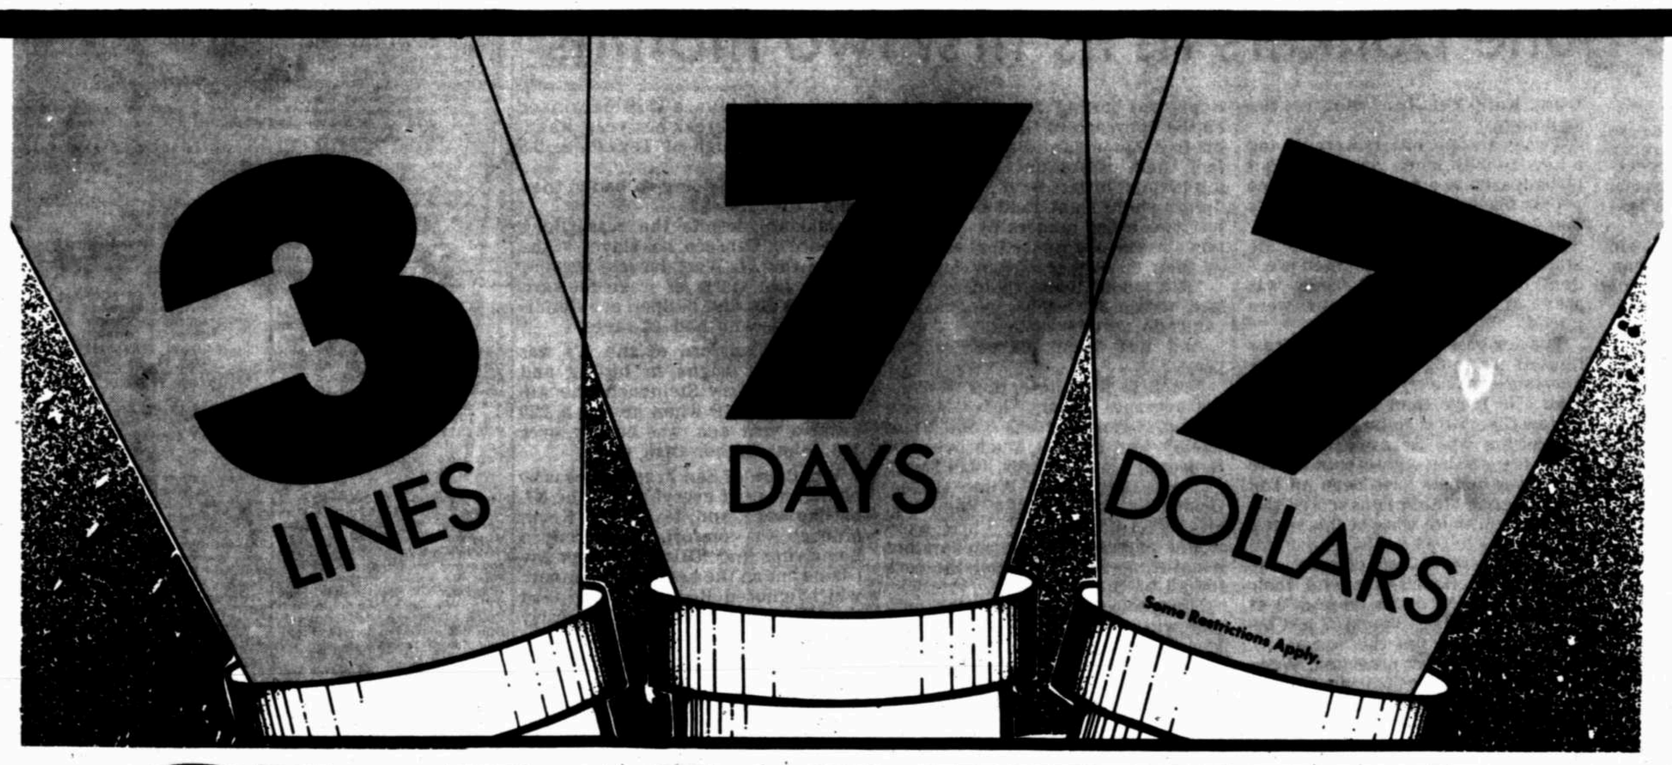

Piniella said he had hoped to continue talks with the Blue Jays, but the Yankees had demanded at least two specific players in return.

The Blue Jays countered by offering a list of other players, which the Yankees rejected, according to Syd Thrift, the Yankees' senior vice president.

Piniella, who is earning $400,000 annually through 1991 as an analyst on the team's cable television broadcasts, said he had spoken a half-dozen times with the Yankees' principal owner, George Steinbrenner, in the hope of pursuing the Toronto job.

"I'm disappointed in that I got permission to talk with them but didn't have a chance to pursue this thing further," said Piniella, a two-time Yankee manager.

"Basically, what it amounts to is that this organization doesn't want to lose my services."

Cubbies make it nine out of last 11

Associated Press

Rick Sutcliffe pitched a four-hitter and Damon Berryhill and Dwight Smith drove in two runs each as the Chicago Cubs beat the Cincinnati Reds for their ninth victory in 11 games.

Sutcliffe, 6-3, struck out eight and walked two in his second complete game.

Rijo, 4-1, allowed six hits and four runs in four innings, struck out five and walked four. Cincinnati, which had won Rijo's nine previous starts this season, had its four-game winning streak was snapped.

Reds shortstop Barry Larkin left in the third inning and Mark Grace's line drive hit him in the left cheek as Larkin attempted a diving catch. Larkin was taken to a hospital for X-rays.

Berryhill's sacrifice fly and Smith's infield RBI single gave Chicago the lead in the first.

Chris Sabo's third homer of the season, all in the last four games, pulled Cincinnati to 2-1 in the third. Berryhill and Smith hit run-scoring singles in the bottom of the inning.

In the fifth, Vance Law singled in Berryhill, who led off with a double off Tim Birtsas.

Eric Davis hit a two-run homer in the ninth, Davis' seventh homer of the season.

Astros 5, Pirates 4

Houston's Glenn Davis tied the score with a two-out, two-run homer in the ninth inning and Rafael Ramirez singled home the winner with two out in the 12th as the Astros beat the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Four of Houston's runs were unearned because of Pittsburgh errors. With one out in the 12th, Glenn Davis was safe on third baseman Bobby Bonilla's throwing error. One out later, Ken Caminiti got an infield hit and Ramirez hit the game-winning single off Jeff Robinson, 2-5.

Dan Schatzeder, 2-0, earned the victory with 3 1-3 innings of two-hit relief and Dave Smith pitched the 12th for his eighth save. Both teams used five pitchers.

The Pirates led 4-2 with one out in the ninth but Gerald Young was safe on second baseman Jose Lind's error and one out later Davis tied the game with his 11th home run of the season. It came off rookie Randy Kramer.

Pittsburgh's Glenn Wilson doubled twice for his seventh consecutive multiple-hit game and drove in two runs Wilson, who is 16-for-33 in that stretch, doubled two runs home and gave Pittsburgh a 3-2 lead with two out in the fifth inning after Jim Deshaies walked Lind and Bonilla.

The Pirates added a run off Danny Darwin in the eighth when Wilson walked, was sacrificed to second, took third on an infield out and scored on a single by Junior Ortiz. They tied the score 1-1 in the fourth when Gary Redus tripled and Rey Quinones doubled.

An error by Quinones, the Pittsburgh shortstop, helped the Astros to an unearned run in the top of the fourth and a 1-0 lead. Bill Doran reached on the error, stole second, took third on an infield out and scored on Kevin Bass' single.

Houston went ahead again 2-1 in the top of the fifth when Craig Biggio doubled, went to third on Deshaies' bunt single and scored as Billy Hatcher forced Deshaies at second.

Pittsburgh's Brian Fisher yielded five hits and two runs in five innings in his first start of the season after five relief appearances. He began the season on the disabled list with a shoulder injury.

Giants 6, Phillies 2

Atlee Hammaker allowed one hit in six innings and Robby Thompson and Kirt Manwaring had three hits each, leading the San Francisco Giants past the Philadelphia Phillies.

Hammaker, 4-3, allowed a leadoff home run to Steve Lake in the third. He then retired the next 12 batters before Jeff Brantley relieved.

Craig Lefferts pitched the final 2 1-3 inning for his eighth save, finishing the combined five-hitter.

Alex Madrid, 1-2, allowed eight hits and five runs in five innings for Philadelphia, losers of four straight and of eight of 10. The Giants won for the seventh time in 10 games.

San Francisco took the lead in the first on singles by Ernest Riles, Manwaring and Jose Uribe. After Lake's first homer of the season tied it, the Giants scored four runs in the fifth.

Thompson lined a one-out double and Will Clark was walked intentionally. Kevin Mitchell was safe on third baseman Mike Schmidt's fielding error, loading the bases, and Riles' hit a rwo-run double. Tracey Jones was walked intentionally and Manwaring looped a two-run single to center.

Thompson hit his fifth home run of the season in the sixth, his second homer in two games.

Ricky Jordan hit an RBI groundout in the seventh.

Braves 4, Cardinals 1

An error by St. Louis third baseman Terry Pendleton allowed the go-ahead run to score in the eighth inning and Andre Thomas added a two-run homer as the Atlanta Braves scored more than once for the first time in 80 innings and beat the Cardinals.

Jose Alvarez, 3-1, who pitched a scoreless seventh inning in relief of Tom Glavine, was the winner as the Braves snapped a six-game losing streak. Joe Boever came on for his sixth save after Alvarez walked Ozzie Smith and Willie McGee to start the eighth. He got Pedro Guerrero to hit into a double play and Tom Brunansky popped out.

With the score 1-1, Jeff Treadway opened the Atlanta eighth with a single off Jose DeLeon, 6-3, and Dion James walked. Gerald Perry's smash went through Pendleton's legs and Treadway scored.

After James was caught stealing and Dale Murphy popped out, Thomas hit his fifth home run of the season. All the runs in the inning were unearned and it was the first time in 11 games the Braves scored more than three runs.

The Braves took a 1-0 lead in the fifth inning when Ron Gant doubled and scored on Glavine's single. McGee's two-out home run in the sixth tied the score. The home run was St. Louis' first in seven games and second in 14 games.

Padres 5, Expos 0

Walt Terrell gave Montreal a taste of its own shutout medicine with a six-hitter and Tim Flannery had two run-scoring hits as the San Diego Padres beat the Montreal Expos.

The Padres ended a string of 29 scoreless innings and three straight shutouts by Montreal pitchers with a run in the second inning. They added three more in the third off Mark Gardner, 0-1, making his first major-league start.

Terrell, 4-5, walked four, struck out three and snapped a personal three-game losing streak with his first shutout since last July 30 when he blanked the Texas Rangers while pitching for the Detroit Tigers. The only other shutout by the San Diego staff this season was a combined effort on April 25 against Pittsburgh.

The Padres tagged Gardner for four runs and seven hits in 2 2-3 innings. They stole three bases against the battery of Gardner and Marty Pevey, who both joined the Expos this month from their Triple-A farm club at Indianapolis.

Benito Santiago, who had three hits, doubled to open the San Diego second and scored when Flannery doubled. In the third inning, with Jack Clark on second following a single and stolen base, Santiago singled Clark home and continued to third when left fielder Tim Raines misplayed the ball. He scored on a single by Flannery.

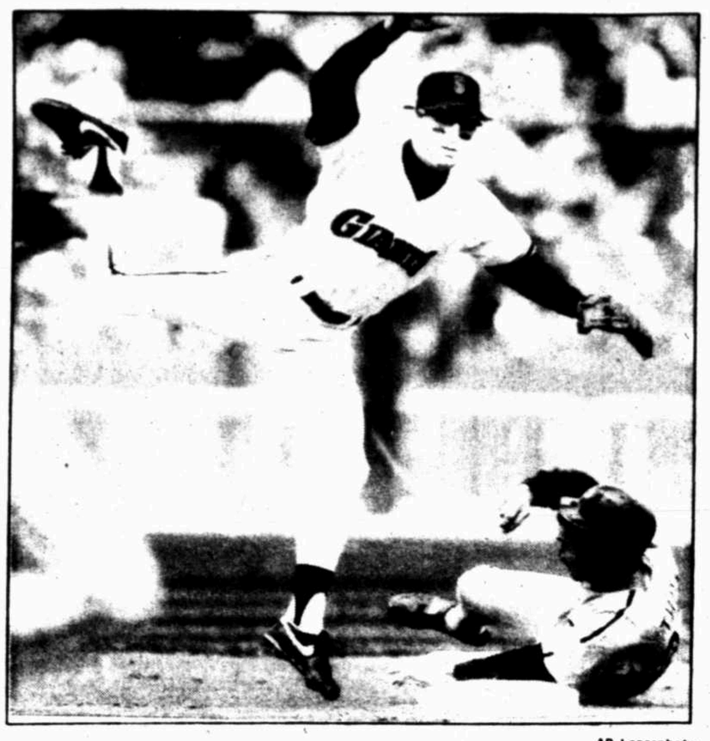

The Padres got their last run off Andy McGaffigan when Tony Gwynn doubled with two out in the fourth and scored on Clark's single.

Dodgers 2, Mets 1

Rejuvenated Mike Morgan lowered his major league-leading ERA to 1.19 and came within one out of his first National League shutout as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated the New York Mets.

The veteran right-hander was 34-68 with a 4.90 ERA in 6½ seasons with four American League teams and began the year with the worst won-loss record among active pitchers. He allowed seven hits in 8 2-3 innings, walked three and struck out nine, matching his career high, in raising his record to 4-2.

The Mets scored with two out in the ninth on Howard Johnson's triple and Dave Magadan's single. Jay Howell got his ninth save by retiring Mackey Sasser on a grounder to second after pinch runner Keith Miller stole second.

Baseball's gone bonkers in its first two months

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Baseball reached its first checkpoint of the season this Memorial Day weekend with many of its best hitters apparently on a holiday.

Home runs and scoring are down, along with the entire American League East Division and some of the game's top stars.

Three of last year's major award winners — MVPs Jose Canseco and Kirk Gibson and Cy Young winner Frank Viola — have found encores difficult.

Canseco has been out all season with a bad wrist. A damaged hamstring cost Gibson 22 games on the disabled list. Viola, locked in an ugly contract battle at the start of the season, is struggling along at 3-6 with a 4.12 earned run average compared to 7-1, 2.69 at this time last year.

Only Orel Hershiser, the playoff and World Series MVP, was on track with a 6-4 record and 2.47 ERA.

Cincinnati manager Pete Rose has been playing defense for more than two months now during an investigation by the commissioner's office. His situation and its possible ramifications are more serious, however, than that of the laughable AL East where three teams — Cleveland, Boston, Baltimore — shared first place for one day last week, despite the fact that each of them was under .500.

It was the latest ever that a team — in this case three teams — that had lost more games than it had won, held the top spot in the standings.

Two years ago, hitters were having a heyday with home runs flying out of ballparks at a record pace. Some people suspected that baseballs were being altered to aid the previously dormant offenses. At the 1987 All-Star Game, Bart Giamatti, then president of the National League, was asked if, in fact, the balls were juiced.

The ex-president of Yale drew himself up indignantly, looked the questioner squarely in the eye and said: "No more than I am, sir."

Now Giamatti is commissioner and the hitters who were tearing it up then, seem to have gone south. Over 100 fewer homers have been hit and more than 200 fewer runs scored this season than there were at this time a year ago.

In the absence of offense, the pitchers are flourishing with their collective ERAs down from 3.78 at Memorial Day in 1988 to 3.67 just before the checkpoint this season.

As the holiday approached, Wade Boggs of Boston was batting .302, not bad for most hitters but terrible for a guy who was at .347 at this time a year ago and is a career .356 hitter. Fred Lynn was hitting .210 with one homer and nine runs batted in for Detroit. Montreal's Andres Galarraga, hailed as one of the National League's top young first basemen, was at .227. Jack Clark, acquired by San Diego last fall, was at an embarrassing .201.

The New York Yankees' Don Mattingly was batting .269 and celebrated the approach of the holiday with his first home run of the season. In fact, the Yankees, once a haven for left-handed hitters with Yankee Stadium's short right field porch, had just two other homers by lefty hitters all season, a figure that astounded their ex-slugger, Reggie Jackson.

"The whole team's got two?" he said before Mattingly connected. "I could do that by myself."

And he's been retired for two years.

Numbers like those, plus the sub-.200 averages of Gary Carter, Mookie Wilson, Gregg Jefferies and John Shelby, and the not much over-.200 figures of Lloyd Moseby, Juan Samuel, Terry Pendleton, Willie McGee, Benito Santiago, Willie Randolph, Shawon Dunston and Chris Sabo would suggest that the pitchers are benefitting. But that's not the case for all of them.

Minnesota's Viola wasn't the only one with problems. Detroit's Jack Morris, the winningest pitcher of the decade, drifted through the first two months at 2-7 with a 4.94 ERA and he wound up on the disabled list. Pascual Perez of Montreal, who missed spring training because he was in a rehabilitation progam, was 0-7 with a 5.04 ERA.

Danny Jackson of Cincinnati, runnerup in the Cy Young race when he won 23 games with 15 complete games a year ago, was 3-7 with no complete games this season. Atlanta's pitching Smiths, Zane and Pete, were 1-7 and 1-6 respectively. Chicago's Greg Maddux, a 15-game winner at the All-Star break last year, was 3-5. Charley Hough of Texas was 3-5 with a 5.83.

If they're all doing so badly, then who's doing well?

Oakland, despite the season-long absence of Canseco, has stayed at the top of the AL West, largely because of the fast starts of Dave Stewart, who was 8-2, and bullpen ace Dennis Eckersley, who had 14 saves.

Carney Lansford of the A's was leading the league in hitting and teammate Terry Steinbach, the All-Star Game MVP when he was a .220 hitter a year ago, was batting over 100 points higher than that.

Will Clark of San Francisco was 50 points ahead of everybody in the NL batting race and teammate Kevin Mitchell was comfortably in front in home runs and RBIs. That kept the Giants hot on the heels of Cincinnati, which ignored Rose's woes to lead the NL West race through the early going.

Jeff Ballard, with 10 lifetime victories before this season, won eight games for Baltimore, and Lee Guetterman, with a career 5.11 ERA, had a string of 30 2-3 scoreless innings out of the Yankees' bullpen before that ended the night Mattingly hit his homer.

Perhaps nobody's doing better, however, than Toronto's Nelson Liriano. Burdened with a good-field, no-hit reputation, Liriano was batting .311 and leading the league in breaking pitcher's hearts.

Houston football coach plays role of quiet hero

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oiler coach Jerry Glanville is running headlong into an image problem.

The sinister, man-in-black reputation Glanville has cultivated so carefully while leading the Oilers to the playoffs two straight years is starting to crumble, and it has him worried.

"I don't want any credit for anything; this is just for the kids," Glanville said. "Hey, why don't you write something bad about me?"

But the word is starting to spread about the flip side of Glanville's tough-guy image: his tireless charity work during the off-season, from visiting sick children in the hospital to inviting a street gang to come play volleyball in a park Glanville opened to keep children out of trouble.

Glanville, whose trademark is his affinity for black sideline attire, goes to Texas Children's Hospital once a week to visit children with scary illnesses and lighten their burden.

He goes into the city's tough Fourth Ward, where he invited members of The Thunder Cats gang to join his organized activities at Woodlands Park.

He even met with the gang leader on the gang's "turf" to discuss his plans for the park.

"Is that crazy or what?" Glanville asks. The man's motto of "living on the edge" remains intact.

During the season, he goes to the hospital between workout drills.

One minute he's demanding that Mike Munchak maul his opponent and the next he's looking into the face of a child dying of leukemia.

"We see a miracle a week — you're talking about kids that won't give up, keep the faith and keep fighting," Glanville said.

"It's just that when you have a job like this (being an NFL head coach) you owe it to them to give something back," he said.

"It's not the fact that Jerry Glanville came to see them," he says of his impression on the children. "It's the fact that the coach of the Houston Oilers came to see (them)."

Glanville's weekly visits have their rewards.

Two years ago Justin Russell lay in critical condition in the intensive care unit, suffering from Berkitt's lymphoma, a form of cancer.

"I was bad off; I wasn't expected to make it," Russell said. "All my hair had fallen out."

Glanville was hospitalized for surgery but came in to see Russell afterwards.

"They wheeled him in a wheel chair because he'd just had some kind of surgery," Russell recalled. "I couldn't believe it. It sounds funny but that's the time I started getting better.

"He told me to get better so I could come to an Oilers game. I've always loved the Oilers. That's all I could think about."

Glanville's invitation came in February, 1987. Russell left the hospital in March, but returned for several monthly chemotherapy treatments.

Now none are necessary. Russell's hair grew back, the 16-year-old has gained 60 pounds and he plays football and runs track for Grapeland High School.

He attended all but one of the Oilers' home games last year as Glanville's guest, missing the only game they lost in Houston.

Those who dislike Glanville get no support from Russell.

"Nobody can talk bad about him around me," he said. "I'm not the only one. I've seen other kids he's brought to the games."

Glanville is willing to put his tough-guy reputation at risk partly because of childhood memories.

In the Detroit, Mich., neighborhood where Glanville lived until the eighth grade, the greatest cause of death among 16-year-old males was being shot.

The family moved to what he recalls was a better life in Toledo, Ohio, but Glanville never forgot the problems of the streets — the gangs, the lack of organized activities, the fear.

The memories came back last January, when he went to Miami to see the Super Bowl and found himself in the midst of a riot in which two people died.

"My idea was do something here before we have two people killed (in Houston)," Glanville said.

A Work of Art

The heart of the home is a solarium where charming dining areas surround the pool.

Text by JILL HANCOCK

Nestled on a private cul-de-sac behind a stucco wall is a concealed piece of art that serves as the focal point of this week's featured home. A courtyard welcomes a visitor to this four-bedroom, six-bath home that has two living areas, as well as an office, a library and an artists' studio.

The galley-style kitchen is to the left of the entrance and blue tile countertops highlight this area. The appliances include a General Electric self-cleaning double oven, cooktop and a dishwasher. A windows above the stainless steel kitchen sink provides a view of the formal dining room.

A WET bar is found at one end of the kitchen and features a hand-painted sink, matching hand-painted tile in a shade of rust and a wine rack.

To the right of the kitchen, a hall leads to a sequestered guest wing. A pale shade of peach decorates these rooms that have large windows that overlook the front courtyard. A hall bath is situated across from these rooms.

THE FORMAL dining and living rooms are separated by a wall and access to these rooms is made along a wall by the entrance and from the kitchen through the hall by the wet bar.

The dining room table is placed under four skylights and a mirrored wall extends into the formal living room. A fireplace warms the living room during the winter months and the open flow between these rooms is perfect when entertaining.

The master bedroom, top, has a cozy library at one end that focuses on a corner fireplace. Four walls of mirrors, above, reflect a marble tub and vanity in the woman's master bath.

A person could sit for hours in the conversation area and watch the sunlight dancing throughout the solarium.

ART

French doors are situated on both sides of the fireplace and opens into the heart of this home — a solarium that is designed around an indoor pool. With light dancing through the many large skylights in the vaulted ceiling, the serene body of water becomes more than just a place to swim. According to the homeowner, the solarium has a different look ever day due to the angle of the sun, transforming this room into a piece of art. A person could easily sit in the conversation area, to the right of the pool, and relish in the tranquil atmosphere for hours. Charming dining areas surround the simplistic-designed pool, where guests can be entertained in a unique setting.

This completely controlled environment in the solarium enables a person to swim in the pool during the winter while snow can be falling on the outdoor gardens. Floor-to-ceiling windows frame the exterior gardens.

A handsome bar with a Jenn-aire grill is adjacent to the ample seating area. The small kitchen has a large sink, a small refrigerator and a beveled glass cabinet.

Next to the conversation area, doors lead into another bedroom that has a private bath and two walk-in closets. A sitting area is situated at one end of the room and blinds can be lowered by the French doors to allow for privacy.

The master suite in the home is situated at one end of the solarium. A wall of French doors lead past an atrium into this spacious room that is decorated in soft tones of pink and gray. A couple, after leaving the serene atmosphere of the solarium, would relish the private retreat that this room affords.

A cozy library adjoins the master bedroom. A sitting area is placed in front of a corner fireplace and bookshelves line two of the walls. A door leads outside into an intimate courtyard.

The master baths are to the right of the entry of the bedroom. Mirrored walls reflect the marble tub in the woman's bath and the vanity area is situated along one wall. This well-lite bath has an angled wall that leads into a huge walk-in closet that features approximately 54 feet of hanging space for clothes. The closet is designed around a cabinet that has drawers on one side and shelves for shoes on the other.

The man's bath has an oversized tile shower. A man could even shave in this shower due to the mirror hanging on the wall. This bath also has a tall vanity and a walk-in closet with built-in shelves.

From the kitchen area a corridor leads past the utility room, that has a sink and space for a freezer, into a private home office. The office has an adjoining dark room. A door in the office opens into the front courtyard and provides a private entrance into this area.

Next to the office, a double door opens into a 26 X 28 foot studio that provides natural light from three different angles — many skylights in the vaulted ceiling, a wall of windows and atrium doors. Two window seats are placed by the wall of windows that provide a view of the front courtyard. An artist could create for hours in this well-designed studio.

This spacious room has a fireplace at one end and a small kitchen. The kitchen is equipped with a Jenn-aire cooktop, a refrigerator and a double sink.

Due to the amenities of this room, it could easily be used as a wonderful part room where guests could wander from this room outdoors into the courtyard. It could also be used as a mother-in-law room for an older adult. A bath with a built-in shower is conveniently located next to this multi-functional room.

From the studio courtyard, a path leads to a garden that is tucked away in the corner of this property. Adjacent to the garden are two carports that have extra tall doors for recreational vehicles. This home also has a three car garage with automatic door openers.

A high wall surrounds this property, making the home secure for art collectors or for couples who like to travel. The house has Mexican tile floors in all of the rooms except the guest bedrooms. The other amenities in the home include an alarm system, a low-maintenance courtyard with a sprinkler system, an intercom system, and many storage closets.

This one-of-a-kind home contains approximately 7,600 livable square feet and is being offered for $590,000 by Don Harvey, Realtors.

THE SUPER HANDYMAN

Tips given for gutters, leaks , mildew

By AL CARRELL

Q: One of the finishing touches we have never gotten around to has become pretty important lately guttering. I know it's supposed to be easy but I just don't know where to begin. Can you help get me on the right track?

A: Guttering can be very important. Proper drainage to carry rain water away from the foundation of your house is essential. Excess water in this area can be disastrous and very costly.

Several types of guttering are available to the do-it-yourselfer. There are three basic types to choose from unpainted galvanized, aluminum and vinyl gutters. Unpainted galvanized guttering needs to weather for about six months before it will accept paint. Aluminum guttering comes pre-finished and in an assortment of colors. Vinyl guttering also comes in colors.

Whatever type you choose, you'll need to decide what components are needed. Try drawing a sketch of your house to work with. Most guttering systems recommend a downspout every 35 feet or so. Measure the lengths of the runs where guttering is required and the height of the walls for downspouts. Most manufacturers and dealers have printed information to help you pick out the proper fittings and put them together.

Once you've got the parts, lay them out around the outside of the house below where they go. You can then make sure you have everything you need before you start assembling it and putting it up. Use a chalk line along fascia to guide your installation. You'll want the gutters to flow downward slightly (about ¼ inch per 10-foot run). It's best to start at a point farthers from downspout, and it also helps to have a good buddy around to lend a hand. Don't scrimp on support brackets; this is usually the first thing to give out later on. Seal all joints properly. Check our system a couple of times a year and make repairs as needed. Good luck!

Q: We have lots of pine trees around the patio and they have dropped piles of needles there. Over the winter, they left bad spots green and black. How can I remove these and protect the concrete?

A: I'd probably try TSP first. That's trisodium phosphate, a very strong cleaner available in most paint departments. If that doesn't work, I'd use a very dilute solution of muriatic acid maybe about 12 parts water to 1 part acid. As far as protection, there are several types of masonry sealers on the market that would seal and protect the concrete.

Q: We have a leak somewhere around the chimney because it drips in the attic and trickles down the bricks inside the house. We can't locate it, though. Do you know of a trick or two to help us pinpoint it?

A: By going into the attic while it's raining, you can pretty well pinpoint where the water is coming in. Then inspect the outside and see if you can spot the problem. It's usually a flaw in flashing which can usually be remedied with an application of roofing compound.

Dear Al:

Here's my contribution to the do-it-yourself movement. I'm in the insulation business and have found a great way to get rid of those painful fiberglass particles that get on your skin and won't come off. My wife and I tried a little experiment that worked just great. She had several brands of facial masks in her collection. We tried them all and found the best were the type that "harden" and are "peeled off." All the guys I work with use it, too. We also have the best complexions of any crew in town. D.H.

Dear Al:

I know that in the past you have tried to help people get rid of woodpeckers that are pecking on wood siding. I found that they were being attracted to a vibrating sound within the walls of my home. I couldn't control the noise and couldn't seem to get rid of the birds either. I just gave up and covered the area where they were pecking with four my poly sheeting. Sure enough, the birds were discouraged and went away. I took it down after a week, and they have never returned. P.P.

Q: I have a bad mildew problem in my bathroom. About 40 percent of the grout around the tiles is completely gone. Should I replace all of the grout or just the part that is gone?

A: If the old grout is good and white, you could replace only the part that's missing. That's for you to decide. Before you replace any grout, be sure to kill the mildew. Then after your new grout is in place, seal it so moisture will not be able to get into it to get a new crop of mildew started.

Dear Super Handyman:

My husband and I got a how-to-videotape and installed our own vinyl siding on our home. It wasn't that hard after we learned the basics. I have one tip, though. My brother came over to help us one day and we let him do the garage. We forgot to tell him to not drive the nails in all the way which leaves enough room for expansion in the siding. With the warmer weather, it has started to look wavy. We should have showed him the video. D.S.

Chaparral has many dedicated agents ready to help Midlanders with new home

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Due to many dedicated associates, Chaparral, Realtors is a full-service real estate company that is ready to assist Midlanders with their real estate needs. Ella Barnett, Alice Howard and Norma Pine are three associates who are perfect examples of the type of agents that are associated with Chaparral.

Barnett

Having obtained her real estate license in 1966 and her broker's license in 1968, Ella Barnett has had a continuous career real estate career in Midland. An almost native Midlander, she has seen Midland change in size and the number of schools, churches, shopping centers, restaurants, business and industries increase through the years.

Barnett began her career as an associate of Don Johnston Realtors, now Don Harvey, Realtors. Along with her husband C.P., who is also a Realtor, the Barnetts co-founded Chaparral, Realtors in 1980 and sold their interest in 1986, becoming, once again, broker associates that deal directly with buyers and sellers.

Not satisfied with just being a Realtor, Barnett has served in many capacities — 10 years as a director of the Midland Board of Realtors and in 1977, she was president of the MBR. She also served as state director for four years and was elected Realtor of the Year in 1978. Many years as an ambassador for the Chamber of Commerce, Barnett served as an "M" Squad member and was chairman of this group in 1977-78. In 1984, she was recognized as the Outstanding Member of the Year for "M" Squad.

Presently Barnett is serving as president of the Midland County Republican Womens' Club, and has learned how to manage a career, outside interests, home and garden, along with four children and seven grandchildren.

Due to her long and stable career, Barnett has proven her love and interest in people and their needs when buying and selling real estate.

Howard

Alice Howard has been continually involved in Midland since 1952 and knows Midland — from its schools, parks, special attractions to its beautiful neighborhoods to its distinctive housing.

"When a family comes to Midland looking for a new home, I visit with them noting their needs and requirements. As a member of the Multiple Listing Service, I have access to all the homes currently available. Our computerized system enables me to quickly match their needs with the up-dated inventory. Once a number of homes are located suiting their needs, an ample amount of time is given to make this important decision. Finding a new home becomes an enjoyable and exciting experience," explained Howard.

After a couple has made a housing choice, Howard helps to arrange financing and assists with the final closing procedure. Daily contact with area financial experts ensures up-to-date information on the wide variety of financing plans available. Due to this expertise and knowledge, guesswork and doubt are eliminated from her clients home purchase.

"One of my goals is to achieve the maximum service rendered to all of my customers with a minimum of their time expended," stated Howard. "Since being licensed as a real estate agent in the fall of 1981, I have been totally involved in the real estate business. Even in the slower economy, I have received recognition as a consistent million dollar producer"

Howard is a dedicated agent who invites her customers and friends to contact her for all of their real estate needs.

Pine

Norma Pine was a founding member of Chaparral, Realtors and has held a broker's license for nine years. She has been a member of the Midland Board of Realtors since 1978 and has consistently earned top honors for her service to clients and customers in their home-finding search.

After being transferred a few times because of her husband's job, Pine decided to take a few real estate courses to better understand the process. After turning this knowledge into a full-time career, Pine feels that her field of expertise is assisting companies and families that are relocating.

"I have personally worked with a lot of companies helping executives with relocating an entire office. My own experience in this area helps me to make the transition much easier for these families," stated Pine.

"Recently, I helped a company relocated to another state. Due to my consistent background and expertise in this area, I offered this company a complete service package — from relocating them to a city in another state to marketing of their property to the smaller details of yard maintenance."

Among a few of her achievements that Pine is the most proud of was being named one of the top three listing agents in Midland in 1987. She is extremely proud of her 1988 closed volume of over $5 million. Pine was also recently named the Co-op salesmen for the month of February by the MBR.

Since 1980, she has had a total volume of sales between $3-5 million which is an unusual element on the Midland real estate market. For the first four months in this year, Pine has already closed over $2 million dollars in listings and sales.

"I really cannot thank Midlanders enough for the trust and confidence that they have shown for me in the past eight years and I sincerely reciprocate the same feelings," concluded Pine.

With the aid of Realtor, minister's family purchases first home

After 19 years of marriage and missionary work that has taken them to diverse corners of the world, Charlie and Terrie Taylor have established a new ministry at the Westside Church of Christ, as well as their first home in Midland.

Charlie was born and raised in Lubbock and attended Abilene Christian University and Texas Tech University where he completed his undergraduate degree in chemistry. He later completed two and a half years of study at the Sunset School of Preaching in Lubbock.

Terrie was born in Abilene and grew up in Lubbock. She also attended Abilene Christian Univeristy where she completed her degree in elementary education. Terrie then served for two years in the Lubbock school system teaching sixth grade classes.

Following his graduation from Texas Tech, Charlie became an apprentice missionary for the Church of Christ and the Taylors left for their first post in Dublin, Ireland.

"The people there were very receptive to Americans. We found Ireland to be a beautiful archaic country with many castles and historic sites. And even though we saw the soldiers with guns and the road blocks in northern Ireland, we never actualy say any violence. We were in Ireland from 1974 to 1976 and our oldest daughter, Kamalyn, who is now 14, was born there," explained Charlie.

After their mission in Ireland was completed, the Taylors returned to Lubbock where Charlie completed his studies in the ministry. Charlton and Marissa, who are now 12-and 10-years old were born during this period. In 1980, they received their next missionary assignment and were soon on their way to the northeast coast of Brazil and the city of Recife. During the eight years they worked in Brazil, as part of a six family mission team, much was accomplished. Upon arrival, they found only two members of the Church of Christ. They first created a downtown congregation and eventually there were six congregations that now have a total membership between 400-500 people.

In June of last year, the Taylors returned to Lubbock to seek their next position. That offer was to come from the Westside Church of Christ. After accepting this post, the family moved to Midland in October and rented an apartment.

Charlie and Terrie had saved a little money over the years and decided they would try to buy their first home. A member of their congregation recommended they talk to Helen Mason, an associate with Don Harvey, Realtors and also a member of their congregation.

They first spent time with Helen just looking at areas to be sure they identified the best area for their price range. The challenge was to find enough square footage and bedrooms large enough that they were affordable to them. And Helen came through.

Charlie said, "When we first walked into this house, we immediately liked what we saw and we knew right away that this was the house for us," After 22 moves in 19 years, the Taylors had finally found the home that they could call their own.

Now that the family is settled in, the children are becoming very involved in their schools and extracurricular activities. Charlton plans to practice football all summer so he can make the team at Goddard next year. Marissa is very involved in her art classes at school and has been taking cheerleading classes at the YMCA. Kamalyn was recently chose to participate as a representative for Goddard in the Foreign Language Festival held at San Angelo State. She also recently participated in the Bible Bowl which had teams of four participants competing against other teams on Bible questions. Kamalyn won an individual trophy fin her Bible Bowl and got to travel to New Mexico and Arizona for other competitions.

For Charlie and Terrie, church activities take up most of their time. But when they do find some spare time, they're looking forward to playing bridge with their bridge group, visiting the Petroleum Museum, attending plays at the theatre and just enjoying their new home.

Fair housing amendment represents vital step against discrimination

The Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988, which took effect March 12, represents a vital step toward stamping out housing discrimination nationwide, according to the National Association of Realtors.

The Law, enacted last September, extends anti-discriminatory protection to the handicapped and families with children, and strengthens the enforcement authority of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), the government branch charged with administering federal fair housing laws.

"The new coverage of the law, combined with the new enforcement system, will go a long way toward wiping out housing discrimination in this country. The National Association of Realtors and its members stand ready to carry out the letter and spirit of the new law," said NAR President Ira Gribin.

Gribin noted that stronger enforcement and a quicker process for hearing fair housing complaints if resolution through the department's conciliation efforts failed. Further recourse was left solely to the aggrieved party.

Now, HUD is authorized to bring fair housing complaints before its own administrative law judge (ALJ). Or, HUD will refer complaints to the Department of Justice (DOJ), if either the aggrieved party, the respondent, or HUD elects a trial in a federal district court. An ALJ hearing must begin with 120 days after HUD issues a charge. Or, if a jury trial is requested, HUD would have to authorize civil action by DOJ within 30 days after the request.

"The law now has the teeth it needs to do the job, and the choices to offer equitable enforcement," Gribin said.

Although both NAR and civil rights groups supported a new system to expedite and strengthen enforcement of the fair housing law, NAR questioned the constitutionality of the ALJ process. The jury trial option was viewed as the compromise that brought NAR and the civil rights groups together in support of the 1988 act, Gribin said.

"We overcame our differences with the civil rights community to push for this law," Gibin said. "We are ready to work for full compliance. Realtors have a responsibility to offer full and equal access to housing."

The full impact of the new law's coverage for families with children and for the physically and mentally impaired cannot be assessed until the law has been in effect for some time, Gribin said. The protection for the handicapped includes specific design requirements for new multifamily dwellings available for first occupancy after March 13, 1991. All units in new buildings with four or more units must be accessible and adaptable to wheelchair users, if the building has an elevator. In buildings with no elevators, only ground floor units are covered by the construction requirements.

Gribin said it will not be permissible to exclude the handicapped or families with children from units on upper floors of high-rise buildings, based on the assertion that such dwellings per se would present health or safety risks. One result of the coverage extended to families with children is the end of "adult-only" communities designed to appeal mainly to young, childless professionals, he noted.

The act does, however, exempt certain types of elderly housing projects from requiring access to families with children. Specifically, exempt projects would be communities intended for, and solely occupied by, residents aged 62 or older. Other exempt communities are those in which at least 80 percent of the units in a housing facility are occupied by at least one person aged 55 years of age or older, and which provide significant facilities and services designed to meet the needs of the elderly.

"Nothing in the law implies that Congress sought to impose any new liability on building owners or managers," Gribin said. "But they, along with sales agents, are going to be facing entirely new situations in which housing discrimination must be avoided."

Under the 1988 act, persons found guilty of violating fair housing laws could, in some cases, face stiff penalties in addition to liability for damages. An ALJ would be able to award compensatory damages, injunctive and other equitable relief to the aggrieved party, and impose civil penalties ranging from $10,000 to $50,000. In jury trial cases, the court could grant compensatory and punitive damages, as well as permanent or temporary injunctions and other orders for affirmative action.

The 1988 amendments also strengthened the remedies provided by the 1968 law for fair housing violations, removing a $1,000 cap on punitive damages awarded in court cases brought by private individuals. Civil penalties ranging from $50,000 to $100,000, as well as monetary damages, could be imposed in pattern of practice cases filed by DOJ.

The extent of the changes in the enforcement system and the new remedies underscores the need for Congress to define fair housing, said NAR executive vice president William D. North.

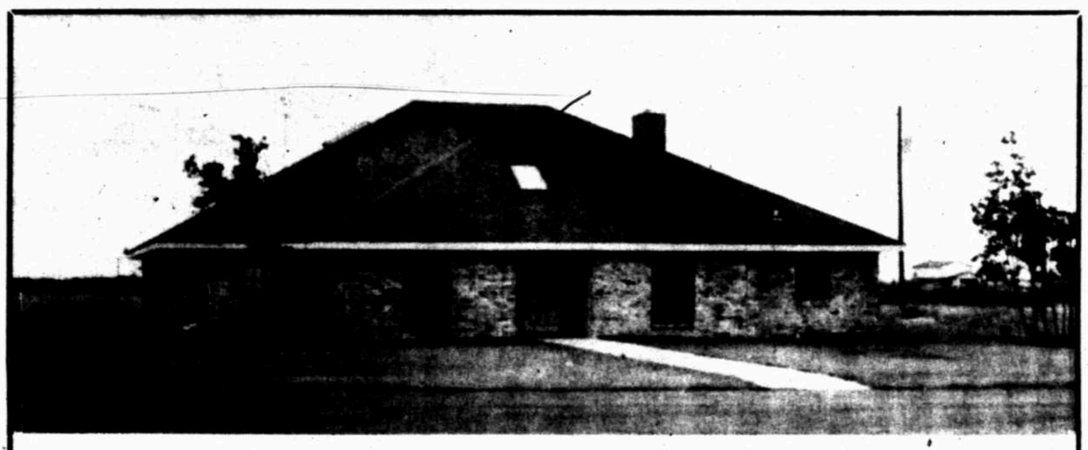

"We believe a clear definition should distinguish equal opportunity from integration maintenance," North said. "We interpret fair housing to mean freedom of choice for everyone. A person's ability to rent or own should be based solely on what they can afford."

NAR will continue to seek legislation prohibiting the use of race-conscious methods to achieve or maintain a certain level of integration, North said. Integration maintenance plans, now used in some localities, actually deprive individuals who are otherwise qualified from renting or buying a unit if they are not of the race necessary to sustain the racial mix sought, he added.

"Integration maintenance contradicts the spirit of the federal fair housing law. To the National Association of Realtors, fair housing is equal access," North said.

The National Association of Realtors, the nation's largest trade association, represents nearly 800,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

What do you do with a gobo root?

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

GEORGE WOLF

When the average consumer shops for produce, he usually buys apples (non-sprayed, of course), oranges, bananas, iceberg lettuce, tomatoes, carrots, celery and maybe an occasional avocado.

But fruits and vegetables can be more exotic than that, even here, deep in the heart of the West Texas desert. Local supermarkets stock such tropical fruits as guavas, plantain bananas, passion fruit, mangos and kiwi fruit. Some of the more interesting vegetables available include chayote squash, tamarindo bean, taro root and yucca root.

Other locally-available produce that is harder to define are horned fruits, which are bright orange and have spikes (you probably don't have to eat the spikes); fuzzy melons, blood oranges, gobo roots, prickly pears, bok choy and even baby bok choy.

Unfortunately, even though these goodies with the strange-sounding names are available in Midland, most West Texans still aren't sure what to do with them.

Taro root, for example, can be baked, steamed or boiled. It is the main ingredient in the Hawaiian specialty, poi — but many people who have tasted poi have said that one exposure to that delicacy is enough.

The tamarindo bean is said to have a flavor similar to that of figs and can be used in Oriental chutney and curries, or can be added to sugar and water to make a drink. But what steps must be takes to get it from its dried "bean" form into something more liquid?

Glen Jackman, representative of Skaggs-Alpha Beta, said, "You boil it," and drink it like tea.

Steve Ornelas, produce manager with Furr's Supermarket, said that more unusual or "specialty" produce will be available in the summer.

Most of the varieties of exotic fruits and vegetables sold in Midland supermarkets are grown in Mexico or the tropics, said James Peck, produce manager with M-System.

The experts said that often, packers will ship recipes and directions with the produce because too often consumers are confused about preparing exotic items.

THEY ALSO provided some tips on what to do with some of the fruits and vegetables with the strange-sounding names:

- Horned fruit is "cut and eaten like a normal melon," Jackman said.
- Belgin endive, which has narrow, cabbage-likes leaves, is a gourmet item with leaves that can be broken off and used as a chip with dips.
- Fuzzy melon, which looks like a large, fuzzy cucumber or zucchini, can be pealed and baked like a potato.
- Passion fruit, a round, wrinkled, dark tropical fruit, "is not ripe when it's smooth. When it's ripe is when it's at its ugliest state. It looks terrible, but passion fruit is (not eaten as much as it is) used in drinks to give a tropical flavor," said Jackman.
- Kiwi fruit, a native fruit of New Zealand, and mangos, a fruit with green-red-yellow skin and peach-colored meat, can both be eaten in the same way one would eat an orange, or cut up and used in fruit salads, Ornelas said. Mangos, in particular, are "real juicy and sweet," he said.
- Fresh coconut can be grated and used in recipes instead of shredded canned or packaged coconut.
- Ugli fruit, Peck said, is a "cross between an orange and a grapefruit. The uglier it gets, the better it is. When it's really ripe, it looks like it ought to be thrown away. It's real sweet." The fruit is a yellow-green-orange color on the outside, he said, but when it's ripe and ready to eat, "it's dark like an old, spotted banana."

Ugli fruit is grown mostly in South America, he said, although some has been grown in Florida.

- Kumquats, a type of citrus, have a "short seasonal time," Peck said. They are eaten as fruit, but it's best to "wait until they get a little soft. The softer they are, the better they are."
- Chayote squash, pale green and slightly football-shaped, is unusual in that it produces both male and female squash, Jackman said. "The female has a seed. It's cooked like a normal squash."
- Guava is peeled and eaten like other fruits.
- Blood orange, a small, redish citrus-type fruit, is red on the inside. "It's eaten like normal citrus, and it usually comes out around Easter," said Jackman.

Old-fashioned wilted lettuce or spinach salad provided the idea for this main-dish salad of cool greens topped with hot stir-fried beef and vegetables.

BEEF SALAD STIR-FRY

¾ pound boneless beef top round steak or beef flank steak
¼ cup teriyaki sauce
2 tablespoons water
2 teaspoons cornstarch
Dash ground ginger
6 cups torn mixed greens
¼ cup cashews
1 tablespoon cooking oil
1 6-ounce package frozen pea pods
4 cherry tomatoes, cut into wedges (optional)

Thinly slice beef across the grain into bite-size strips. Set aside. For sauce, in a mixing bowl stir together teriyaki sauce, water, cornstarch and ground ginger. Set aside. In a large salad bowl toss together torn mixed greens and cashews. Set aside.

Preheat a large wok or skillet over high heat. Add cooking oil. Stir-fry beef in hot oil 2 to 3 minutes or until done. Push beef from center of wok. Stir sauce. Add sauce to center of wok. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly. Add pea pods. Cook and stir 2 minutes more. Immediately transfer hot beef mixture to the salad bowl. Toss lightly to coat greens. Garnish with cherry tomato wedges, if desired. Makes 4 servings.

The old Brown Derby restaurant, one-time hangout of the Hollywood stars, has closed, but its famous Cobb Salad is more popular than ever.

■ Horseradish root is ground up and used as a seasoning.

■ Ginger root is a strong spice used in Chinese food. "You grind it up, it's very strong and very hot," said Jackman.

■ Chinese peas, another Oriental specialty, can be "thrown in with your stir-fry," Ornelas said.

■ Roots such as gobo, yucca and taro, are usually skinned and mashed, the way potatoes are.

■ Tamarillos are a tropical fruit eaten out of hand.

■ Cactus (Nopales) can be pickled, used in place of bell peppers, scrambled with eggs.

■ Jicama can be "used like a potato or eaten raw ... or in salads. It can be used in place of water chestnuts, it tastes a lot like water chestnuts," said Jackman.

Ornelas said jicama can be used "like a turnip. You can cut it up and use it in salads. Use a little lemon juice and a little bit of cayenne pepper ... It can be diced or sliced.'

■ Elephant garlic is much larger than ordinary garlic, and much less potent. "Usually, the larger it (produce item of any kind) gets, the less potent it is," Jackman said.

Both consumers and supermarkets are becoming more interested in exotic produce. "The trend in variety is building stronger and stronger," Jackman said.

In fact, he said, over the next five years, major supermarkets will be stocking more than 400 produce items — "year round."

New cookbooks fascinating

By CAROL DEEGAN
Associated Press

■ In 1896, Fannie Merritt Farmer, the principal of the Boston Cooking School, created a cookbook that would influence generations of cooks. To take the guesswork out of cooking, she provided carefully worked-out level measurements and easy-to-follow cooking instructions.

The New American Library has published a paperback facsimile of the first edition of "The Boston Cooking-School Cook Book" ($8.95) that is sure to please the Fannie Farmer faithful.

■ 101 Productions offers "Teatime Celebrations" ($15.95) by Patricia Gentry, with 18 menus for high tea and teatime meals.

This 143-page book includes information on tea and tea processing — and gives instructions on how to brew the "perfect" cup of tea. The book also lists hotels around the country that serve tea every afternoon.

Gentry says teatime can be substantial — and proves it with her menu for A Very British Farm Tea.

Among the other menus offered: a Collector's High Tea, Southwestern Jalapeno High Tea and a Teddy Bear Tea. (For more information on "Teatime Celebrations" contact Ortho Books, Box 5047, San Ramon, Calif. 94583.)

■ "The Garden of Eden Cookbook" by Devorah Emmet Wigoder (Harper & Row, $19.95) is a collection of 200 old-new Middle Eastern recipes based on ingredients and traditions of the Holy Land. Among the recipes: Fish Fillets in Grape Sauce, Radish Preserve, Upside-down Rice and Sabbath Bread.

■ How many different ways you can cook with maple syrup? The answers are provided by Ken Haedrich's "The Maple Syrup Cookbook" (Storey Publications, $15.95).

The cookbook also includes information on maple syrup's history and lore, how maple syrup is made and stored, and a consumer guide to the maple syrup grading system.

("The Maple Syrup Cookbook" may be ordered from Garden Way Publishing, Schoolhouse Road, Pownal, Vt. 05261, or by calling 1-800-441-5700. The hardcover is $15.95; the paperback is $7.95. Add $2 to each order for postage and handling.)

RECIPES

Serve this main-dish salad the classic way — with the ingredients arranged in rows and the dressing on the side; diners can toss the salad lightly if they wish.

COBB SALAD

6 cups shredded lettuce
3 cups chopped cooked chicken
3 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
2 medium tomatoes, seeded and chopped
¾ cup crumbled blue cheese (3 ounces)
6 slices bacon, crisp-cooked, drained and crumbled
1 medium avocado, halved, seeded, peeled and cut into wedges
1 small stalk Belgian endive (optional)
Brown Derby French Dressing (recipe follows)

Place lettuce on 6 individual plates. Evenly divide chicken, eggs, tomatoes, blue cheese and bacon among plates, arranging each in a row on top of the lettuce. Place avocado wedges and endive leaves, if desired, to the side. Serve with Brown Derby French Dressing.

BROWN DERBY FRENCH DRESSING: In a screw-top jar combine ⅓ cup red-wine vinegar, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon sugar, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, ½ teaspoon pepper and 1 clove garlic, minced. Cover and shake to mix well. Add ½ cup olive oil or salad oil; cover and shake vigorously. Chill thoroughly. Shake before serving. Makes 1 cup.

Mushrooms add texture, flavor to favorite recipes

New York Times News Service

SANTA ROSA, Calif. — Michele Jordan was explaining her fascination with mushrooms — and the lengths you have to go to to find quality mushrooms.

And her wish that mushrooms were more popular.

Actually, she admitted, "I have a selfish reason: If more people become interested in them, more mushrooms are grown and that will make it easier for me to find them." at the market.

Jordan operates Jaded Palate Catering here, has written on food for other newspapers and recently made a deal with Addison-Wesley publishers to write a Sonoma-focused cookbook.

Jordan was talking not about white button mushrooms but about porcinis, oysters, shiitakes, chanterelles, hedgehogs and morels.

"I use mushrooms because they have their own flavors," not because, like buttons, they are agents to carry other flavors, Jordan says.

"If you put ¼ to ½ a pound of porcinis in a recipe, it is going to make its presence felt," she adds.

Allowing for the fact the taste is subjective and varies from one person to the next, Jordan says the various mushrooms tend to have these flavors:

■ Oysters — fleshy, mild, slightly earth, perhaps a hint of anise.

■ Enoke — light, delicate, and perhaps a hint of pepper.

■ Shiitake — meaty texture, rich, earthy smell.

■ Black chanterelle — some say it has an apricot fragrance, she senses more of a wine aroma.

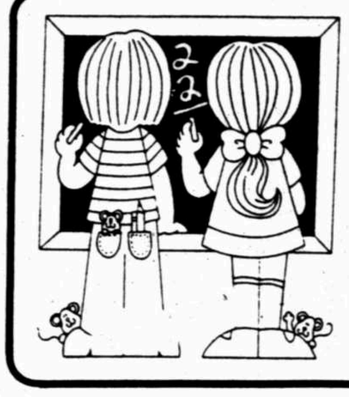

■ Gold chanterelle — similar to black chanterelles.

■ Morels — cool and refreshing.

■ Porcini — a complex taste, like the inner forest where the sun doesn't penetrate.

"Shiitake has almost a chicken-like texture," she said. She added that she uses shiitake mushrooms for her Sonoma County Canelloni recipe.

The name shiitake — pronounced shee-tah-key — is a combination of two Japanese words: shei, meaning oak, and take, meaning mushroom. Wild shiitake are found on oak logs in China, Japan, Indonesia and Taiwan and, at least in Japan, take four years to grow.

Guide designed for modern woman

Copley News Service

You may think of yourself as a modern women — independent and in control — but do you know how to unstop a toilet or tell a man that his zipper is down? If not, author Maggie Kassner may be of some help. She has written a grown-up Girl Scout handbook of sorts called "The Modern Woman's Guide to Life."

In it, Kassner offers advice on everything from becoming a stripper to justifying a manicure. As for informing a man about his fly, Kassner offer two options: be direct but discreet or, if that's not your style, start singing "Zipidy-Do-Da" until the guy catches on.

She says justifying a manicure is easy because most places only charge about $6, the price you pay to see a silly old movie. Finally, if you're planning on stripping for some extra cash, Kassner says you should keep it a secret from the folks at your day job. People may, for some odd reason, hold it against you.

Sons offer success

Copley News Service

Successful modern marriages may depend more on the presence of a male child than they do on good sex, good economics or even good marriage counselors. That's the word from Paul Glick, senior demographer at the U.S. Census Bureau in Washington, D.C.

After studying 70,000 American families, Glick found that two sons provide the average marriage with 16 percent more stability than two daughters.

Dr. Edna Rawlings, female psychology professor at the University of Cincinnati, thinks she knows the reason for Glick's findings. She blames it on husbands who value sons more than they do daughters.

These also are the dads, she says, who help out with chores and child-rearing more than others do.

Planetary origin of male, female medical symbols revealed

Copley News Service

Perhaps you've wondered where those medical symbols for male and female originated.

The arrow on the male symbol is a projectile. It represents a spear, and the circle it attaches to is the shield of the ancient god of war, Mars. The same symbol represents the planet Mars in astronomy circles.

The female symbol, a circle with a cross protruding, represents the hand mirror that the goddess of beauty Aphrodite supposedly uses to groom herself. Its planetary meaning among astronomers as a way of denoting Venus.

Buying an engagement ring becoming a joint venture

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — On a recent rainy Saturday, one of the many couples drifting in and out of Cartier on Fifth Avenue here was John Le Boutillier, who works at an advertising agency, and his fiancee, Suzy Shore, an employee of the New York City government.

At Tiffany's the same day, the counters were crowded with couples peering into the cases, many clutching Tiffany's "How to Buy a Diamond Guide."

Gone, for the most part, are the days of the glittering surprise in the velvet-lined box. Buying an engagement ring has become a joint venture.

"There is more communication in relationships today, which extends to the process of selecting an engagement ring," said Jill Romeo King, manager of the Cartier store. "Romance is still in style, but there is also a realistic, knowledgeable side to the purchase."

"Saturday is known as Official Engagement Day here," said Amy Sinaiko, a saleswoman at Cartier.

Karen Wunderlich even had her parents in tow, as she and Paul Schillinger toured Fifth Avenue in search of their ring. The couple has been looking since January.

In many cases, a prospective bride will have spent months browsing with friends and relatives, on lunch hours or shopping trips.

Dr. Robert Ditkoff, an ophthalmologist, and Andi Emerson married in October, but the two were so busy with work and planning the wedding that the search for the engagement ring was delayed.

"We started looking in February and found our ring at Cartier in April," he said. "It was an unusual way to do this, but we only had Saturdays to shop together."

Some couples attend Diamond Evenings that Tiffany presents at all its stores. They hear a 40-minute lecture on buying diamonds by Peter Schneirla, Tiffany's chief gemologist, at a champagne reception. The evenings are free and advertised in newspapers.

At both Tiffany and Cartier, the classic diamond solitaire is still the most popular style. Ms. Romeo King said the most popular sizes of diamonds bought at Cartier are between three-quarters of a carat and a carat.

In the course of their search, Le Boutillier and Ms. Shore have become amateur diamond experts. "We watched friends of ours go through this a few months ago, which helped," Ms. Shore said. "But you have to know what you want and what the important things are, whether it's the size, color or whatever."

"I started saving up for this quite a while ago," Le Boutillier said. "I knew Suzy wanted a nice ring."

"We're having fun looking and we know we'll eventually find exactly what we want," Ms. Shore added. "And it's good practice for when we buy a house."

Differences in mate selection virtually universal

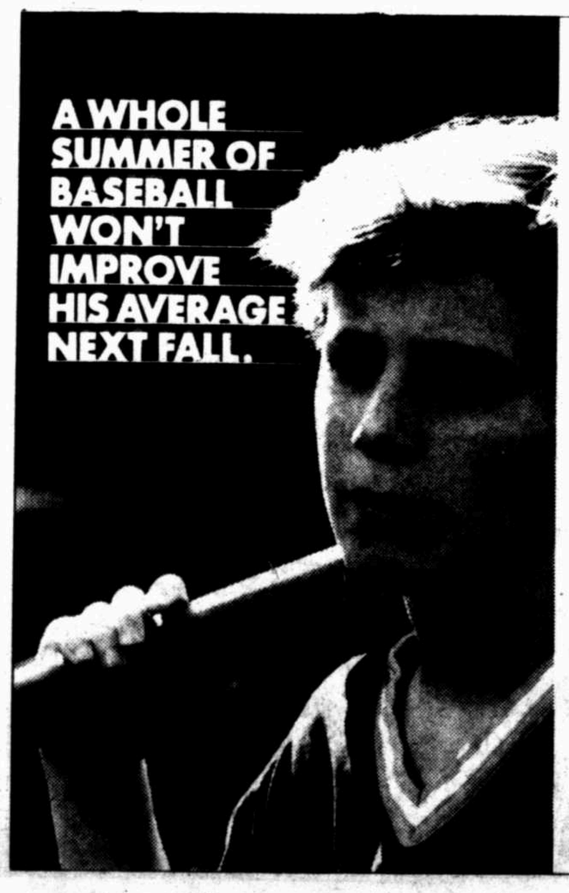

Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Sex differences in human mate selection are virtually universal and probably rooted in human evolutionary history, according to a worldwide study.

"Men worldwide place greater value on mates who are young and physically attractive. Women prefer mates who are somewhat older, have good financial prospects and are ambitious and industrious," says David M. Buss. "These basic differences were found in samples ranging from coast-dwelling Australians to urban Brazilians to rural Zulus in South Africa."

Buss is associate professor of psychology at the University of Michigan and director of the International Mate Selection Project, an international consortium of 50 scientists who carried out parallel studies.

Why the pervasiveness? It all has to do with reproduction, says Buss. A woman must have access to food and shelter for her offspring which "enhance the possibility that her children will survive." To reproduce, men must have access to fertile females, and, says Buss, youth and physical appearance provide the most apparent indicators of fertility.

King of fruit: Mango praised for its beauty, flavor

New York Times News Service

Cherry blossoms, daffodils, the first robin and mangoes.

Mangoes?

Yes, they too are pleasurable harbingers of spring and the summer to come. To the mango lover, their arrival signals that this is the time to start dreaming of long summer days and the succulent flesh of the mango, poetically named samarbehisht in Persian, meaning fruit from heaven.

Mangoes, although relatively new to the Western world, have been esteemed in Asia for more than 5,000 years. Praised for its beauty and flavor, the mango is often called the king of fruits.

In India the 16th-century Mogul Emperor Akbar the Great was so taken with its succulence that he planted Lakhbagh, an orchard with 100,000 mango trees.

For centuries, artists around the world have been inspired by its sensuous beauty, and some say the mango's shape inspired the paisley pattern.

IN RECENT years mangoes have become increasingly popular.

Rick Bayless, chef and owner of Frontera Grill in Chicago, and Nancy Beckham, chef and owner of Brazos in Dallas, say dishes featuring mangoes are star attractions on their menus.

Bayless, the author of "Authentic Mexican" (Morrow, 1987, $24.95), offers several mango preparations, including Michigan sour cherry and mango crisp, mango flan or mango and strawberry shortcake. He recommends buying the best-flavored mangoes and, depending on their texture, chopping, dicing or pureeing the flesh and using accordingly.

He prefers organically grown mangoes from Haiti. "They are a little fibrous but wonderful in flavor," Bayless said.

Ms. Beckham likes Mexican mangoes for spectacular creations like mango chutney with apricots and ancho chilies to serve with her tequila-marinated red snapper; mango-chili butter for grilled chicken with two peppers; mango brulee with raw sugar, and fresh mango cheesecake.

For chutneys and sauces she suggests using whole peeled mangoes with the pits left in. "It pulls a lot of meat away from the seed, and keeps in a lot more flavor," she said.

MANGOES COME in varying sizes and stages of ripeness.

Ripe mangoes, generally range from about three-quarters of a pound, the size of a small avocado, to two pounds, the size of a large pineapple. Unripe mangoes, picked at all stages of maturity, range in size from an ounce to nearly a pound.

Regardless of their size and stage of ripeness, all mangoes are delicious, whether cooked as a vegetable or used raw as a dessert fruit, beverage or salad.

In India more than a thousand varieties of mangoes are grown, but the two most prized, considered almost flawless, are the Dusehri from northern India, a golden long oval with sweet saffron-orange flesh, and the Alphonso from southern India, a plump, orange-yellow rounded oval with tangy-sweet yellow flesh.

The Francis mango, imported from Haiti, compares well with the Dusehri, and the Mexican import, the Haden mango, is comparable to the Alphonso.

Unripe, or green, mangoes are the immature fruit. Inside the glossy, leathery skin is the ivory-colored flesh, hard like an unripe peach. Unripe mangoes often contain an immature pit soft enough to slice, scoop out and discard.

The unripe mangoes, sour and mildly fragrant with a high acid content, are ideal in preserves.

Unripe mangoes are much sought after as an ingredient in Indian cooking, for making relishes, salads, chutneys and lentil stews. Unripe mangoes, when peeled, sliced, sun-dried and powdered, yield the sour-tasting mango powder amchoor used in northern Indian cooking.

For the most memorable experience it is essential, first, to choose a good mango. It should be ripe, intensely fragrant even when unpeeled, and have an unblemished yellow-red skin. The flesh, when exposed, should be silky as custard and perfectly balanced between sweet and tart.

WITHOUT PEELING the mango cut it into large segments, running a sharp knife close to the pit to free the flesh, Score the flesh without cutting the skin and serve it, to be scooped out with a spoon. Or, alternately, peel the mango first, then cut the flesh into neat slices or cubes.

Never bite directly into an unsliced mango as you would an apple, since all mangoes have some fiber that will catch in the teeth. The experience is somewhat like eating corn on the cob.

On stoarage, Harold Seybert, an owner of Fairway Market in Manhattan, says, "Like any tropical fruit, such as bananas or pineapple, when exposed to low temperatures — around 35 Fahrenheit — as in the refrigerator, the mango's extraordinary fragrance numbs and the flavor gets distorted."

He suggested leaving the mango in a cool place (55 degrees) or even on the kitchen counter for a day.

An average-size ripe mango, with 135 calories, is a good source of potassium and vitamins A and C. An unripe mango is rich in iron and vegetable protein, and low in carbohydrate. Mangoes have no fat or cholesterol.

Fruits and vegetables make pretty containers

First, hollow them neatly.

Here's how to scoop out centers:

1. Tomatoes, oranges, lemons, grapefruit... all can hold tasty stuffings.
2. Use a curved grapefruit knife and cut out the center, leaving ¼-inch shell. First cut around fruit, then underneath to release membranes.
3. Grapefruit knives are usually stainless steel and don't transmit a metallic flavor to acidic fruits.

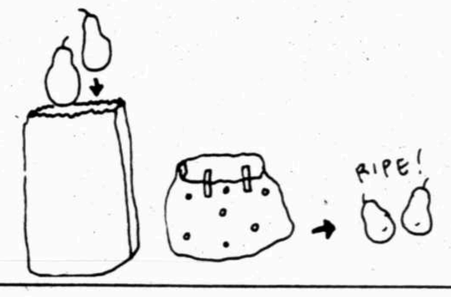

CNS Graphic

Out-of-season fruits are picked early

Usually they need extra ripening.

Here's how to get the sweetest flavor:

1. Fruit naturally produces ethylene gas, necessary for ripening.
2. Don't let gas dissipate; trap it. Put fruit (and tomatoes) in a paper bag and seal. Poke a few holes in the bag so fruit can breathe.
3. Check daily, removing from bag any ripened fruit.

"We let the raft alone, and let her float wherever the current wanted her to; and dangled our legs in the water and talked about all kinds of things. The big still river looked miles and miles across ... It's lovely to live on a raft."

NEW BRAUNFELS — From serene ponds and tranquil streams to bubbling rivers and white water rapids, the rivers of New Braunfels offer vacationers many forms of escape. Huckleberry Finn never had it so good. The charming German community, located 20 miles northeast of San Antonio in Texas Hill Country, boasts two rivers, the Comal and the Guadalupe.

There are as many ways to ford the rivers as there are places to get on and off the rivers, making New Braunfels a mecca for water enthusiasts. Paddle boats, canoes, inner tubes, inflated rafts and small boats can be seen in different areas along the rivers. Even the public parks get into the act at New Braunfels with tube chutes and floating areas available for "tubers."

GETTING WET in New Braunfels can mean anything from spending the entire day lazily floating on an inner tube, plunging at a mad pace down the Schlittercoaster — the wildest ride in Schlitterbahn Water Park — or hanging on for dear life in a raft bouncing over white water rapids.

One of the most popular tubing sites is the water park Schlitterbahn. "Schlitterbahn" is a German word combining "slippery" and "road." "It's similar to combining "auto" and "bahn" which means "a German expressway," according to Jana Wilkinson, director of marketing for Schlitterbahn.

The park, nestled along the banks of the spring-fed Comal River, has more inner tube chutes than any other park in the world. It is unique in its utilization of New Braunfels natural resources. Natural spring water circulates through the slides and tube chutes, then floats back into the Comal River.

Another unique aspect of the park is that some of the chutes in the park and slides in the children's area, are padded with foam.

The park, which is celebrating its 10th anniversary summer, recently added to the Cliffhanger Tube Chute — the longest tube ride in the world — almost a mile from beginning to end, according to Ms. Wilkinson.

Schlitterbahn's trademark castle.

Tubers riding the Cliffhanger begin at the German Castle and end up in the Comal River. Along the way they wind through the 40-acre park choosing either slow or fast waterways at junctions.

OTHER ADDITIONS to the park include a family wave pool with waves cresting at two feet and a maximum depth of four feet, and the Congo River chute, which features huge foam lily pads, frogs, turtles, serpents and alligators for frolicking or floating.

The 40-acre park's attractions include an 18-hole miniature golf course, a fleet of paddleboats, 17 water slides, seven inner tube chutes, three swimming pools, three giant hot tubs (for days when the river water gets cold) and two children's areas.

FOR SERIOUS rafters there are various rafting companies which rent equipment for mild family floating or white water challenges. The Rockin "R" River Rides services 23 miles of the Guadalupe River, from Canyon Lake to New Braunfels. It offers shuttles, so rafters can start and end their journey according to their river rafting experience, beginner or experienced. Rockin "R" also offers catered all day river outings which include rafting in the morning, lunch on the banks of the river and tube floating in the afternoon.

Although the services of rental companies aren't required to ride some sections of the river, they are recommended since professional rafters monitor the customers. There are points along the river where customers must check in so that the experts know that they have arrived safely.

DEAR ABBY

Woman needs common sense

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Something has been haunting me for a long time and I need to get it out of my system and settled once and for all. When I was 15 years old, I fell in love with a man who was 45. I will call him Scorpio. My parents refused to let me be with him, so we parted. As fate would have it, I fell in love again when I was 19, but that marriage lasted only six years, and we divorced.

Following my divorce, I met another man I'll call Pisces, but I kept seeing Scorpio every chance I got because I couldn't get him out of my mind. So here I was, divorced and dating the Pisces, but still in love with the Scorpio.

The Scorpio knew I was dating the Pisces, but the Pisces didn't know about the Scorpio until last Easter when the Pisces stayed too long, and Scorpio showed up early at my house.

Needless to say I felt terrible about it because I knew I wasn't being fair to either one of them. I finally told the Pisces that I couldn't see him any more — it was over. I really didn't want to end it with the Pisces, but I didn't want to lose the Scorpio either. Well, to make a long story short, I married my Scorpio five months ago.

Last week I saw in the newspaper that my Pisces took out a marriage license to marry a 24-year-old girl! Now I can't get the Pisces out of my mind. I want to write to him and tell him I still have feelings for him, and also that I wish him well in his marriage. Half of me says to write to him and the other half of me says not to. What should I do? — CAPRICORN

DEAR CAPRICORN: Listen to the half of you with the brains in it, and don't write to Pisces. Stay out of his life and concentrate on making your marriage with Scorpio work.

DEAR ABBY: Our son, age 33, is getting married for the third time. His fiance has never been married and is planning a large church wedding.

Our son's first wedding was a traditional church wedding with all the trimmings, showers, gifts, etc.

The second time he married a young woman who had been married before, so it was much smaller, but most of our friends and relatives sent them wedding gifts anyway.

Now I feel very awkward sending wedding invitations to our friends and relatives a third time. I am also afraid the bride-to-be will wonder why there will not be a wedding shower from my son's friends and relatives.

Abby, how do people feel about this? We honestly don't know what to do, but we've been through all this twice already. — ENOUGH IS ENOUGH

DEAR ENOUGH: Your signature expresses my feelings, too, but it's unfair for a first-time bride to miss out on gifts because she's No. 3.

Skip the shower, but go ahead and invite those friends and relatives you want, and whatever they choose to do about a gift will be up to them.

DEAR ABBY: I have an unusual problem. With planning, budgeting, saving and setting priorities, my husband and I manage quite well on one paycheck. (He is in the military.)

We own a nice mobile home that goes along on our frequent moves. We have managed to furnish it nicely and have finally worked our way up to owning two automobiles as well as starting a savings account.

The problem is that friends and relatives (especially) who do not budget, save or pinch pennies, think that we are far better off than we really are, and therefore, should lend or give them money!

My husband's family are the worst offenders. Mom, Dad, and assorted sisters, brothers, aunts, uncles, etc., are constantly asking for anything from $10 to $1,000 — or more.

How do we make these people understand that we do not have a money tree — that we appear prosperous because we have planned, saved and budgeted our money? How can we make them understand this without putting all our personal business on public record? — DEFENDING THE FUNDS IN PHILLY

DEAR DEFENDING: You do not have to justify declining to lend or give money to anyone. Use the Nancy Reagan technique: Just say no!

DEAR ABBY: Would you please publish your address so readers can write to you? Some of the newspapers that run your column never run your address. — NEEDS YOUR ADDRESS

DEAR NEEDS: Address your letter to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply, please enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope. All letters are confidential.

Wedding bells? Wedding bills! Who pays for what and everything else you need to know if you're planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Oregon coastal ride rough, but rewarding

By ROBERT P. LAURENCE
Copley News Service

The truly great beaches are in northwest Oregon.

The distance from the beginning of the beach to the edge of the Pacific can stretch for hundreds of yards over wind-sculpted sand dunes, and the waves roll over more hundreds of yards of water, creating a sense of enormous expanse and endless tranquillity, miles and miles of space in which to walk and think.

Forests of Sitka spruce, Western hemlock and shore pine edge down from the mountaintops to the shore, where they give way to the dune grasses that anchor the sand from disappearing with the wind.

To get the best view, I hiked early one evening high into the hills over Cape Lookout State Park, winding along the narrow switchback trail, by lady-fern and deer-fern and red alder, until I could peer beneath the overhanging branches and gaze at all that beach stretching north and south.

I felt the need for a hike that day, for there is nothing like a long walk for relaxing the muscles after a hard bicycle ride. My son, Andrew, and I had ridden 36 miles from Nehalem Bay, with a long, deliciously rewarding stop at the Tillamook Cheese factory, climbing some difficult hills and fighting ferocious winds.

Not a long distance, but a tough ride.

The Oregon camping trip (a hotel version is also offered, at higher cost) is rougher and longer, rolling almost 300 miles in five days, including 80 and 70 hot, hilly miles the last two days.

Our group of 26 was fairly young. Ages averaged, I would guess, in the early 30s, and they had considerable cycling experience. This journey is best suited to the seasoned bike tripper.

But Oregon was worth the effort.

Beginning at a small county park outside the lumber town of Vernonia, about 40 miles northwest of Portland, we headed 62 miles north to Astoria, where the Lewis and Clark expedition camped in the winter of 1805 and 1806. We camped at Fort Stevens State Park, where the iron rib cage of the Peter Iredale, a schooner wrecked in 1906, still rusts on the beach.

Cool, misty mornings, evergreen forests that sprinkle dappled patterns of shade on the roads, rocky coastlines and those hypnotically beautiful beaches kept us looking ahead to the next curve in the road and to towns like Seaside, where the principal attraction was an ice cream parlor with seating on a shaded, flower-decorated outdoor boardwalk.

Best of all boons for the cyclist, Oregon's roads are clean of broken glass. An effective bottle-return law has long discouraged the wanton tossing of beer bottles to the side of the road.

Though this was a camping trip, it was about as deluxe as camping gets. No need to ride with stuffed, heavy panniers. No need to cook or — the grubbiest part of camping — wash dishes in the dark.

The Backroads van hauled our gear, and the three guides cooked fabulous meals — garlic bread began, not with flavored spread from a bottle, but with cloves of garlic — and washed up afterward. Pulling into camp at the end of the day, the bikers needed only to set up their tents provided by Backroads, roll out their sleeping bags and find the campground showers. Or reach into the ice chest for a cold beer.

We rode south through Cannon Beach, past 235-foot Haystack Rock looming offshore, to Nehalem Bay State Park, then through Tillamook — more fabulous ice cream! — and the Cape Lookout.

The next morning took us inland, but only after we feasted on a wondrous mountaintop view of the fog-shrouded coast, then swooped down a majestic hill to meet the shoreline. It was our longest ride, 80 miles to the Flying M Ranch, a luxuriously rustic, log-house dude resort near Yamhill. It was also one of the hardest rides, ending with an uphill grind that persevered for several hot, sweaty miles. But at least the Flying M offered indoor accommodations, with real beds and plentiful hot water.

When the final day began, our thighs had not fully recovered from the trip to the Flying M. Astoria was 70 miles away, and the wind was blowing against us. Our route climbed over a preposterously long and steep hill. Living up to its name, Backroads sent us over roads where we rode for a half-hour and more without seeing a car.

Most of the group chose to ride the van that day.

But for those of us who rode the distance, it sure felt good to stop at the end.

Rivers, surf provide nautical fun

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

For most Americans, summertime is equated with water.

Those of us who live on or near our East, West or Gulf coasts usually migrate to the multitudinous miles of ocean shoreline during the warm weather months. Our compatriots who reside in the Midwest can always find water-oriented pleasures on the Great Lakes. And the rest of landlocked America looks to smaller lakes and mighty rivers for nautical fun.

No matter where you live in this great land of ours, you are always a short drive away from some body of water to enjoy when the going gets hot.

We happen to be nuts over any kind of "aqua-tivities," which includes fishing, boating, waterskiing, swimming, diving, snorkeling, scubaing, and just plain lazing on an ocean beach or lakefront or riverbank and watching the water change its beautiful configuration by the minute.

The following are some of our favorite vacation spots where you can enjoy anything on the water, as well as the amenities that provide a memorable summer holiday.

■ MACKINAC ISLAND, MICH. — This magical island rests at the confluence of Lake Huron and Lake Michigan, where the upper and lower peninsulas of the state of Michigan separate. So, there is plenty of water hereabouts. And, there is also a promise of a vacation that is a throwback to a kinder, gentler time.

The island has banished all cars, and the only forms of transportation are bicycles, horse-drawn carriages and, of course, walking.

You reach this place by taking a 30-minute ferry ride from either Mackinaw City or St. Ignace, Mich.

Besides being such an enchanting isle, Mackinac Island is famous for the Grand Hotel, built in 1887. With the hotel only open from mid-May until early November, it is advisable to book your summer reservations early.

The stately architecture of the giant building is reminiscent of a fin de siecle manor house that has been magnified a thousand percent. The 286 guest rooms are commodious, and there is a 700-foot veranda under a roof supported by no less than 40 three-story Greek columns. At The Grand, even those who are not normally veranda-sitters will sit out there at some time because it's so attractive.

The hotel has a modified American plan that includes giant all-American breakfasts and a five-course dinner chosen from a menu listing over 60 items. Dinner at The Grand truly feels like the turn of the century. Men are in coats and ties, women are gussied up in dressy outfits, and The Grand Orchestra plays nightly for dinner in the formal, candlelit dining room. During the day, if you get hungry, you can always delve into a luncheon buffet.

■ BIG SUR, CALIF. — Even jaded ocean watchers become excited at the incredibly magnificent rugged coastline at Big Sur.

Majestic cliffs, sheer walls of rock, sky-high redwoods and umbrella cypress trees alternate between wide sandy beaches. The Pacific has a very dramatic demeanor here, and it can be roaring on one beach, roiling in the next rocky cove and placidly rolling toward the shore a short distance away.

Don't expect balmy summer days on this coastline. It can be quite chilly with damp fogs arriving like clockwork in the late afternoon and remaining through daybreak. However, the cool weather is especially refreshing for long hikes on the beach or in the surrounding hills.

The most wonderful place to stay is Ventana, an inn situated on 200 acres overlooking the sea and the Santa Lucia Mountains. The rooms are romantic hideaways with canopied beds, fireplaces, balconies and some even have private hot tubs.

A delightful continental breakfast is offered daily in the lobby while complimentary wine and cheese are served in the late afternoon.

There is a superb restaurant that has a modern California cuisine menu in a matchless setting. On our last visit, we tried their grilled baby salmon in a balsamic vinegar sauce and the free-range chicken cooked with artichokes. As expected from such a quality establishment, the wine list is filled with extraordinary California vintages.

■ HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. — As soon as you come off the bridge from the mainland, you know you're in a very special place, filled with sea marshes, a network of creeks and lagoons and a border of 12 miles of sandy beach.

There are magical forests of live oaks draped in Spanish moss, magnolias, pines and palmettos, and you see osprey, hawks, egrets, herons and pelicans around the marsh grasslands.

Local boosters brag that historic Savannah, Ga., is only 30 miles to the south while the exquisite city of Charleston is 90 miles north. Although we love those two grand dames of gracious Southern cities, we like to stay put on Hilton Head Island and just enjoy its incomparable natural beauty and holiday amenities.

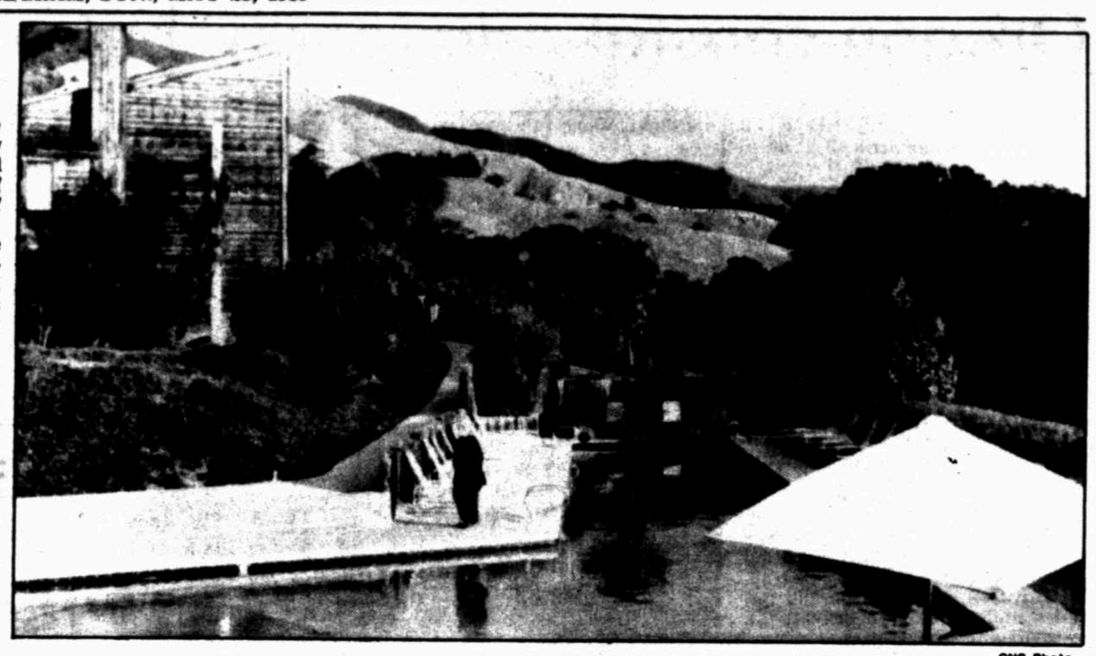

The Westin Resort is one of our nation's best vacation choices because it offers every imaginable water activity, as well as golf, tennis, biking and horseback riding. All of the rooms are the utmost in luxury with huge balconies — most of which overlook the ocean.

On our last visit to the Westin, we got into all of the nautical activities available, including the use of windsurfing boats, sailing catamarans, the ocean for swimming, the indoor and outdoor pools, and even deep-sea fishing on a boat chartered through the hotel.

All of these activities in the fragrant sea breezes create big appetites, and we indulged ourselves in The Barony — a delightful gourmet spot featuring South Carolina specialties like she-crab soup and oysters baked in wine.

There also are wonderful buffets in The Brasserie, elegant afternoon tea in The Gazebo and a wild nightclub called The Battery where blues singers and hot live music will keep you dancing until the wee hours.

We also happen to love the way the Westin Resort blends with the old world Southern elegance of Hilton Head Island. This is one of the few times where the old and new merge in a seamless entity that can turn an ordinary vacation into something you will remember for a lifetime.

RIVER

Zero Rivers, the owner of Rockin "R," has a photograph of a smashed aluminum boat which didn't survive the white water section of the river. "This is what happens to inexperienced people who just get on the river on their own, without knowing how to ride the rapids," Rivers said.

Michael Meek, president of the Greater New Braunfels Chamber of Commerce, also advises New Braunfels visitors to check with area experts before finding spots to enter the river to avoid trespassing. "Some sections of the river are private property," he said.

The Chamber of Commerce offers pamphlets listing the rules and regulations for rafting or tubing along the Guadalupe (a controlled recreation area), which says that river flow will fluctuate. Therefore all visitors should check with a reputable river outfitter before floating on the river.

There are also hefty fines for littering, and glass containers are prohibited near the river.

For river enthusiasts who want to spend just a few hours in gentle waters, Landa Park, a public park, features tubing. Inner tubes can be rented from the city for about $2 a day, or from private businesses along the river. Although some people rent tubes to float their ice chests in, styrofoam chests are prohibited (they are often left along roadsides and are slow to decompose).

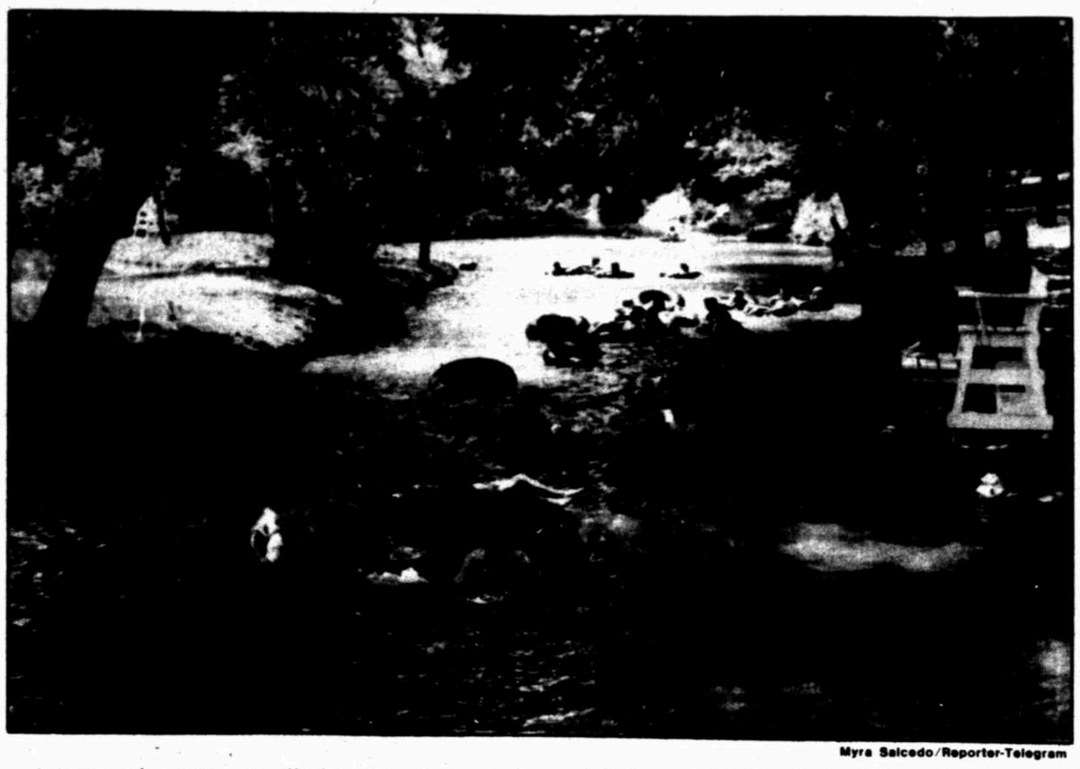

The Comal River meanders through the park before merging with the Guadalupe River near the heart of New Braunfels. The Comal is popular for tubing and swimming, as well as for the tube chute, which was created when the water was diverted to serve an electricity plant. The Comal begins at Landa Park, which boasts an olympic swimming pool and a large spring-fed pool. The 300-acre park also has an 18-hole golf course and picnic areas shaded by moss-draped oak trees.

The Comal is formed by the largest springs in Texas which literally pours out of the underground limestone formations throughout the park area.

For those who do not enjoy water activities, the water can still be enjoyed without getting wet. The Guadalupe can be viewed from River Road, a 15-mile scenic road which follows the river and crosses it four times. White water rapids, majestic cypress trees and rugged bluffs can be seen from the road. River outfitting stands and picnic areas are available along the roadside.

The Guadalupe River, which begins at nearby Canyon Lake, is the only river in Texas that offers rainbow trout fishing according to the local Chamber of Commerce. Canyon Lake, 16 miles from New Braunfels, has clean, clear water suited to water skiing, boating, fishing, scuba diving and sailing.

After day on the river, visitors can relax and explore the remaining sites in the area. There are numerous evening activities in New Braunfels, and other major attractions in nearby San Antonio and Austin are just a splash away.

Information on river outfitters follow:

■ TEXAS HOMEGROWN — This company offers a guided whitewater raft trip on the Guadalupe River. Groups of 4-6 people travel on 12-foot rafts on the river with views of 200-foot cliffs and ancient cypress trees. All equipment is provided. Participants need to bring their own canned drinks. Time is allowed on the three-hour trip for swimming and picnicing. (Barbecues offered with some group rates). The trip ends in Gruene (pronounced "green"), a national historic district of New Braunfels. Founded in 1878, the restored buildings of Gruene houses shops, art galleries, restaurants, two wineries, and a bed and breakfast inn.

The 6-mile raft trip takes three hours. Rates are $15-17.50 for adults, and $10 each for children. For reservations call (512) 629-3176.

■ ROCKIN "R" RIVER RIDES — offers one hour to all day trips on the Guadalupe River. Rents rafts, canoes, inner tubes, inflatable canoes and waterfront picnic tables with grills. Trips are available for all ages (age four and up) and abilities. Catered all day river outings are offered for large groups. Shuttles take customers to different locations on the river. For information call (512) 629-6315 or (512) 629-9999.

■ RIVERFRONT LODGING — Heidelberg Lodges are family resort lodges located on the head of the Comal River. Some units are equipped with stove tops, refrigerators, and toasters. There is a pool and gameroom, aside from the natural Comal springs fronting the lodges.

Myra Salcedo/Reporter-Telegram

Schlitterbahn's Polywog Pond, offers a water fantasy land for the younger set. The pond has a wading pool, spraying mushrooms and padded slides disguised as frogs and turtles.

Arrangements can be made for canoeing, paddleboating and bicycling. Prices range from $56 for one bedroom units (with two double beds) to $91 for a two-story unit on Fridays, Saturdays and holidays. Discount specials, such as three nights for the price of two are usually available. For information call (512) 625-9967.

■ SCHLITTERBAHN — Located 30 miles northeast of San Antonio, Schlitterbahn Water Park is nestled along the banks of the spring-fed Comal River. The park is open 10 a.m.-8 p.m. daily. All-day passes are $14.25; half-day passes (3:30-8 p.m.) $9.75; children (age 2-5) or spectator's pass (for pools, kidie parks, hot tubs, miniature golf, paddle boats) $6.50. For information call (512) 629-3910.

This section of the Comal River looks calm, but rafters should always check water conditions before embarking on the river.

River rafting fun, dangerous

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

One of the best ways to beat the heat during hot Texas summers is to plan a trip which features water recreation. New Braunfels, a Texas Hill Country Town 20 miles northeast of San Antonio, boasts two rivers — the Comal and the Guadalupe — a nearby lake, and a water recreation park which utilizes natural cool spring water in its attractions.

Whether floating in an inner tube, riding white water rapids, or canoeing, there are a few tips that will help you spend a comfortable day on the river:

■ Know the river. Check with experts for water conditions and find out where the rapids are located on the river before boarding rafts. Get maps of the river from river outfitters.

■ Pack extra clothing in a waterproof bag to take along in case dry clothing is needed.

■ Do not take valuables on the river.

■ Wear a strap with glasses or sunglasses.

■ Never go barefooted; always wear tennis shoes (you may need to get out of the river and walk in areas with rapids or rocks.)

■ Wear waterproof sunscreen.

■ If rafting in rough water wear Coast Guard approved life jackets at all times.

■ Never boat alone.

■ Tie all gear to boats.

■ If white water rafting, let people know when you get on the river where you will be getting out.

Lucille Ball, her brand of humor shouldn't be dissected by critics

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Over the past several weeks, I have read one editorial after another dissecting the social impact of "Lucy" on the western world. The comments have ranged from "a comic genius who made television history" to "an intellectually deficient, ambitionless, cunning and basically useless scatterbrained housewife who lied and schemed and treated her husband unkindly."

Serious people of the world (and you all know who you are), come out of the laboratory and bring your scalpels with you. You cannot dissect humor or the people who make it. It's been tried. After you isolate the surprise, the exaggeration, the relevancy, the irreverence, the absurdity and the creativity, there will be nothing left under your microscope but a colorless slice of life.

There are those who have tried to mix hindsight with humor. Was Jackie Gleason a chauvinist who eventually would have lost control and sent Alice "to the moon" and ended up in the courts?

There are those who would stir in the personal morality of a star with his comedy and try to neutralize the talent. Is John Belushi's gift diminished after Bob Woodward's book?

There are those who have tried to read social messages into humor that is just not there. Was Red Skelton in his baggy pants and secondhand cigar really making fun of the homeless? Were Lucy and Ethel sending out the wrong message to children when they ate all that sugar in the candy factory, which nutritionists now know is bad for you?

Don't try to unlock the secret formula for laughter. Just sit back and enjoy the enigma of a few seconds when problems and pain were anesthetized by a carrot-topped housewife setting fire to her nose. Just enjoy yourself. That's what humor is all about.

I never dissected Lucy. I doubt if Lucille Ball did either. Like Carol Burnett, Goldie Hawn and Mary Tyler Moore and anyone else who deals with humor, Lucy threw inhibition to the wind. All great comedians give whatever it takes to extract from people the precious gift of laughter.

Frankly, I don't want to live in a world so serious that you see a 6-foot rabbit called Harvey and call the Humane Society. Or a world where Jay Leno and Johnny Carson can no longer take potshots at Washington without partisan groans. Or where the Cosby family isn't standing around the commode putting a dead goldfish to rest without activists picketing outside.

When the day comes that you turn on your TV set or open your newspaper and there is nothing there to make you smile — start worrying. That means things are so bad, humorists and comedy writers can no longer put life in perspective. That's what Lucy did for me.

Erma Bombeck is columnist for Universal Press Syndicate.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Mental changes disturbing

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Mental changes common in aging can be disturbing both to the elderly person and to his loved ones. Known as "organic brain syndromes" or "mental syndromes," these changes are acute (reversible), chronic (irreversible), or mixed brain syndroms.

Acute brain syndromes, also known as "delirium," are characterized by mental changes of recent (hours or days) onset, and are often caused by heart attacks, infections, strokes, dehydration or drug toxicity. The symptoms are confusion, disorientation, inattention, stuporousness, agitation and excitement. These conditions may be mistaken for chronic brain syndromes (senility), or written off as part of normal aging. But acute brain syndromes are often treatable and reversible, when the underlying medical problem is recognized.

Chronic brain syndromes, sometimes called "senility," are a generalized loss of intellectual functions and memory. Onset is slow and uncertain, but usually progressive over six months or more. The family is usually first to notice small changes in thinking and behavior, as the older person has trouble thinking through projects, comprehending messages and making decisions. Appropriate social behavior is eventually lost. Recent memory, such as day's activities and the date, is lost first, and remote memory later. Eventually, patients may not recognize family or close friends.

Behavior can change into suspiciousness, making up bizarre stories or answers, and moodiness. Most elderly people recognize some of these changes in themselves, and become depressed. Later, they may not realize they have thinking difficulties.

Brain changes from Alzheimer's disease or Alzheimer's-like diseases are identifiable under the microscope and by shrinkage of brain tissue. Other chronic brain syndromes may be caused by arteriosclerotic dementia, occasionally low thyroid hormone, pernicious anemia, hereditary dementias, and other diseases. Although a large percentage of these dementias are untreatable, some can be treated, either with care or halting of the process. Always look for the cause of any mental change and treat it promptly, if possible. Never assume the decline in mental functions is a part of normal aging, or "hardening of the arteries." Unfortunately, most chronic brain syndromes are untreatable, but all these patients can be helped to get more out of their lives.

Accept the person without reservation or criticism. Do not infantilize or depersonalize him. Stimulate him through personal and physical contact. Help prevent withdrawal and uselessness. Remind him of where and who you are. Keep daily activities organized and consistent.

Avoid confusion. Watch for sudden decline, and physical or mental changes and seek appropriate help. As much as possible, protect the person from injury. Use supportive systems, such as friends, churches or professional services.

Watch for loss of communication or function, such as sight or hearing loss, no social contact, or being bedridden, which will worsen a dementia. Maintaining communication benefits the patient.

And remember, caregivers need help too.

Awareness of medical problems common among the elderly is important in planning care for the person.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

ADA: Diabetes is dangerous disease

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — An estimated 11 million people in the United States have diabetes and many of them don't know it, reports the American Diabetes Association.

ICI Pharmaceuticals Group says it has joined the association to help educate the public about the warning signs of diabetes — a disease that can be controlled or even prevented.

Diabetes leads to high blood sugar that can be damaging to body organs.

Midlander invents computer glasses

Sets eyes on $15 million market

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Headaches, muscular tension, back and neck pain, poor posture, difficulty in focusing are only a few of the problems associated with computer terminal use.

Now a former Midlander has invented a new type of computer glasses which he says can alleviate many of those problem.

With more than 30 million Americans now working at computer terminals and that number expected to nearly double to 50 million within the next five years, surveys show more than 40 percent of computer users will develop some of the symptoms above.

"Computer glasses could eliminate many of those problems," says Houston optometrist Dr. Bruce Hoff.

Hoff, son of David and Ruth Hoff 2504 Shandon, and a 1968 graduate of Midland High School, is the inventor of a special line of computer glasses designed especially for those who wear bifocals.

"Often some who work with bifocals must crane their head backward to see a computer screen out of the bottom of their glasses," said Hoff. "With computer glasses, that problem is elimiated."

The clip-on glasses work simply by converting the upper one-third of normal bifocal glasses into a bifocal as well. The hinged lenses flip down when bifocal vision is needed in the upper part of the glasses and flip up when the wearer needs to see at a distance.

"They are not for everyone, not even all wearers of bifocals, but they will certainly make life at a terminal more comfortable for millions of computer users," says Hoff.

Hoff, a 1975 graduate of the University of Houston School of Optometry, says he got the idea for his Computer Glasses about two years ago as he became increasingly aware of the vision and posture problems associated with computer use.

He first tested the concept by using paper models attached to regular eyeglasses by paper clips. Then, once an appropriate size was selected, he experimented with various strength lenses, finally deciding on four different strengths which he says will accommodate most bifocal wearers. "Ideally, the add-on lenses should be just slightly weaker than the normal bifocal," he said.

While the glasses were designed primarily with the computer-user in mind, Hoff says he has since found numerous other applications for them.

CONSUMERS

CREDIT DOCTORIN'

What every consumer should know about it

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

When oil prices took a sudden plunge toward $9 in 1986, Midland's economy went right along. So did the credit history of quite a few Midlanders who, suddenly unemployed, found themselves having difficulty making house or car payments or paying utility and credit card bills.

Unfortunately, this misfortune attracted a number of people who take advantage of unsuspecting people in need of credit, to the tune of large sums of money.

A potentially expensive fraud, 'credit doctoring' was recently uncovered in Houston.

The Better Business Bureau warns that these 'credit doctors' have stolen or bought the access codes to credit bureaus' computer files and scan these files for people with good credit histories and names similar to a 'patient's.' They then take the good credit history and transfer it to the client, and the victim is suddenly responsible for payments on a house or automobile that he never purchased. Cost of this doctoring ranges from $500 to $1500.

Houston's economy has lost millions in this scheme; police have found more than $15 million worth of items ranging from small merchandise to homes that were purchased through this 'credit doctoring.'

John Schmidt, president of the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, says that he's not aware of 'credit doctoring' reaching the Permian Basin — yet.

However, since the local economy began turning shaky several years ago, he has noticed an upswing in other credit activity, such as credit repair.

Credit repair specialists promise to help the client clean up his credit history, all for the price of $350 to $450, or even a monthly maintenance fee. According to Schmidt, this credit repair can be done by the consumer himself at no cost.

"It may cost you $25 to get a copy of your credit report. Then all you have to do is write a letter — or fill out a form the bureau may send —

Midland's economic hard times have attracted 'shady characters' promising to doctor up desperate clients' credit records. The Better Business Bureau says these credit restorers usually cost more than they're worth.

Santa Fe designer sells the Southwest

By ELISABETH DUNHAM
Associated Press Writer

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Char de Vazquez once walked away from a successful Mexican export business she created from a single animal skin, but she didn't leave behind the flair for design that has landed her creations in some of the finest stores from New York to California.

Today, her Char Designs Inc. manufactures leather and suede clothes in New Mexico, home of the "Southwest" look glorified by designer Ralph Lauren.

Char Design items — ranging from $33 hand-painted scarves to $1,800 suede and velvet fox-trimmed opera jackets — have been a fashion standard for the last decade. All of the skirts, blouses, jackets and other items created by de Vazquez and her staff of four designers are made with lamb skin imported from New Zealand and dyed in Britain. Many are hand-painted with detailed designs.

They are found in Saks Fifth Avenue, Bonwit Teller, Lord & Taylor and Neiman Marcus. Notables from Sam Shepard and Robert Redford to Johnny Cash and Ronald Reagan have been seen wearing the buttery-soft shirts and jackets. Musician Joni Mitchell, "Dallas" star Linda Gray, and newswoman Maria Shriver also are past customers.

Overall, de Vazquez estimates that 100 retailers nationwide, including her retail outlets in New Mexico and her boutique in Palm Desert, Calif., carry Char Designs collections.

The 44-year-old Santa Fe designer recalls ordinary circumstances marked her business beginnings in Guadalajara, Mexico, where she moved with the Mexican chef who became her husband shortly thereafter. At first, he was working and she was not.

She likens the story to a fairy tale.

OIL PRICES

Upward pressure on crude may be resisted

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Upward pressure on oil prices likely will be met with stiff resistance from OPEC when the overseas oil cartel meets in Vienna June 5, analysts say.

OPEC will make a concerted effort to raise production quotas, thus putting more oil on the market and lowering the price to perhaps $18 a barrel or less by the end of the summer, said David Bodin, associate coordinator of energy markets and strategy for the Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Paris, France.

The move would dash domestic producers' hopes of a continuing, major turnaround for the U.S. benchmark West Texas Intermediate crude price, currently in the $19-$20 range.

Chances are reduced for significantly higher production and continued dramatic increases in U.S. profit potential.

The development of new reserves critical to the future of the domestic petroleum industry continues to be in jeopardy, said Bill Carl, president of Carl Oil and Gas in Corpus Christi.

"We can produce existing oil and gas at $18 a barrel, but there aren't too many exploration plays or development plays that are attractive at $18. In other words, we can't replace our reserves at $18," Carl said.

With a $40-billion oil trade imbalance already, a $200-billion trade imbalance will be reached by the turn of the century if the current pace of oil imports continues, he said.

He called it unacceptable that half the nation's oil is imported.

Spot prices for West Texas Intermediate, the U.S. benchmark crude, were as low as the $12-$13 dollar range only last fall.

But analysts predict a short life for the runup attributed to rising demand, diminished refinery capacity, a major North Sea oil rig explosion and the Alaskan tanker spill this spring.

"We certainly aren't looking at $25 a barrel for West Texas (Intermediate)," said Joyce Yanchar, analyst for Data Resources in Lexington, Mass. "We're actually wondering if even something like $20 a barrel will hold."

If the price falls, imports likely will rise to an average of 8 million barrels per day for the year, compared to 7.6 million barrels per day last year, she said.

Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance — who will fly to Vienna to shadow the oil cartel's meeting though not participate directly in its consultations — said earlier this month he feared that today's higher prices may prompt the 13-member OPEC cartel to respond very unfavorably to Texas interests.

"It really concerns me because I think if they do too much of an increase (in quota), we could see the price drop down to $16," Hance said.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Are Jim Wright ethics part of bigger problem

Pitts

As the House Ethics Committee debates the doings and possible wrong-doings of Jim Wright, one can only wonder where it will all end — or should end.

One can wonder about a lot of things. Like, will this all deteriorate into endless political sniping match in which they get one of ours, we get one of theirs. And how many will bite the "ethical" bullet before it's over with?

Did the Democrats know the Wright probe was coming and decide to do it to John Tower and the Republicans first? The whole Tower affair was just too, too obviously political. It took absolutely no intelligence to know that the real issue was not John Tower's qualifications. And is "doing it to Oliver North" somehow tied up in this whole political tangle?

It's hard to tell what is real and what is political anymore.

Would grown men really toy with national destiny by stooping to such childish political shennanigans?

Is Jim Wright merely a clever book merchandiser who knows how to find the loop holes — or something worse?

In defense of Wright, one can hardly fault a man for looking for loopholes to circumvent the honest intentions of the system. That's the American way.

While some lawyers would disagree, we do have a legal system fully devoted to finding loopholes and technicalities that permit some to circumvent the desires of the public, intentions of lawmakers and spirit of the law. Lawyers are trained in finding legal loophole to keep people from paying their fair share of taxes or damages — also at finding loopholes for collecting excessive damages.

Judges routinely free murders, robbers, rapists and dopers because of minor legal technicalities, without regard to guilt or innocence, right or wrong, or the suffering of victims. Does that even remotely resemble justice?.

At the risk of sounding like a bleeding-heart liberal who wants to make every thug and crook a hapless victim of society, I'm going to throw this out anyway: Could the system really be at fault?

Could our criminal-justice system have produced a national "loophole mentality," in which we have all been conditioned to stretch the limits of legality — a nation where practically everyone drives just over the speed limit and fudges on income tax contributions and earnings.

And what about Congress itself. Has it become so big, powerful, pervasive and obstructive that the only hope of getting anything meaningful done is to find a way to circumvent Congress? Why did Ronald Reagan have to go to the private sector to seek assistance and support for Nicaraguan Freedom Fighters trying to overthrow a communist government in this Hemisphere? Was Ollie North's only crime that he tried to circumvent "the will" of an Imperial Congress?

If the Speaker of the House is to be put on trial for devising a clever scheme to circumvent the intentions of congressional ethics by selling books rather than accepting speaking fees, perhaps the ethics of the entire American judicial system should be on trial.

But one must not be too sympathetic for Texan Jim Wright. Moreover, we must ask: How can an individual clever enough to create such an ethical loophole be so dumb as not to see the clear implication of having his wife do little or nothing in exchange for a big salary from a constituent? That is not just stretching ethical limits but legal limits.

Lastly, who are these people called Jaffe? What is their connection to democratic politics in Texas? This is not the first time they have been connected to a major political scandal in Texas. The last time they were mentioned prominently involved Billie Sol Estes and Lyndon B. Johnson.

Is there a democratic, Chicago-style political machine in Texas that embraces judges, millionaires and prominent democrats, and is Jim Wright connected to it?

Local author, J. Evetts Haley, wrote about such a "network" in his book a Texan looks at Lyndon. Next week we will look at the Jaffes, Lyndon, Billie Sol and Wright.

Basin, U.S. counts fall

From Staff Reports

Heavy rains sent the U.S. rig count plunging while the Permian Basin rig count also fell, from 97 to 93.

Heavy rains that drenched parts of Texas last week caused the U.S. tally to fall 34 to 737. Texas lost 23 rigs.

Ike Kerridge, who keeps track of the rig count for Baker Hughes, said most of the decline occurred in rain-soaked parts of East Texas and along the Gulf Coast.

In the Permian Basin, Culberson County saw renewed activity while Runnels, Mitchell, Terry and Yoakum counties were left without activity.

Others major oil producing states didn't suffer as big a loss as Texas. California, which had five more rigs this week, was the only state to see an increase.

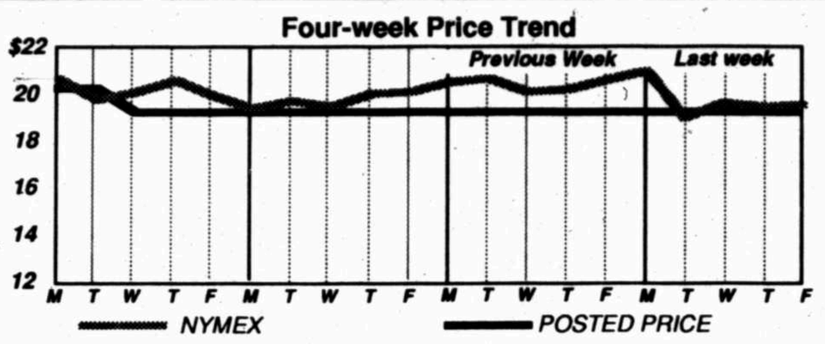

Colorado, North Dakota, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Kansas all lost a rig each. Michigan was down by two and Wyoming lost six.

Slipping production

U.S. crude oil production has been steadily slipping since the price collapse of 1986 while at the same time consumption has risen. U.S. crude production fell from 248.7 million barrels in January to 236.1 million barrels in March. The March total was up from February's production of 223.3 million barrels. Texas production was 57.1 million barrels in January.

Falling imports

This Texas Railroad Commission graphic indicates that U.S. petroleum imports, while still above 1988 levels, are beginning to decline. Approximately 5 million barrels of crude and 2.4 million barrels of petroleum products were imported daily in March, for a year-to-date daily average of 5.2 and 2.5 million barrels per day, respectively. Total imports fell from 8 percent in January to 7.4 percent in March for a year-to-date average of 7.7 barrels daily

Occidental well confirms new oilfield

LOS ANGELES (SWN) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. announced that the success of the East Piper appraisal well which flowed at a combined rate of 15,415 barrels per day, has confirmed the presence of a new oilfield less than five miles away from the Occidental Consortium's existing pipeline system in the British North Sea.

The East Piper discovery is located on Block 15/17 which is operated by Occidental, with partners Texaco, LASMO and Union Texas. The block is located approximately 120 miles northeast of Aberdeen.

When tested, appraisal well 15/17-21 flowed oil from two geological zones at a combined rate of 15,415 barrels per day through a one-inch choke. One zone has a specific gravity of 34.8 degrees API, and the other has a gravity of 44 degrees API. 15/17-21 was drilled to a total measured depth of 14,780 feet by the semi-submersible drilling rig Ocean Nomad. The water depth is 470 feet.

Development of East Piper is enhanced by its proximity to the pipeline system leading to the Occidental Consortium's oil terminal at Flotta in the Orkney Islands.

The East Piper field was discovered in January 1988 by well 15/17-16, which flowed oil at 5,400 barrels per day.

Interests in Block 15/17 are held by Occidental Petroleum (Caledonia) Limited as operator with 36.5 percent; Texaco Britain Limited with 23.5 percent; LASMO North Sea PLC with 20 percent; and Union Texas Petroleum Limited with 20 percent.

Mary Kay Cosmetics may be eyeing Avon

DALLAS (AP) — Mary Kay Cosmetics Inc. is part of an investor group pushing to acquire rival New York-based Avon Products Inc., a letter from the head of the group said.

John P. Rochon, vice chairman of Mary Kay Corp., issued late Thursday the letter in which he confirmed publicly for the first time Mary Kay's interest in Avon.

Because of recent news reports about Avon mentioning Mary Kay, Rochon said, the Dallas-based company felt it necessary to let its sales force know about its interest in acquiring Avon.

The announcement came one day after stock speculators bid Avon's shares higher following a report that the cosmetics company may be the target of a hostile takeover attempt.

"We have never before publicly disclosed either our interest in Avon or the fact or content of any of the discussions we or our financial advisory, the First Boston Corporation, have had with Avon or its advisors," Rochon's letter said.

Contents of the letter to Avon Chairman James E. Preston were revealed in a prepared statement by Mary Kay Corp., which did not elaborate on the subject.

Neither Mary Kay nor Avon company officials answered telephone calls late Thursday from The Associated Press.

If a bid were successful, Avon would be directed by Argonaut Partners, an investment arm of Mary Kay Cosmetics, Rochon said.

He said Mary Kay and Avon each would maintain separate sales forces and identities.

On Wednesday, following a USA Today report that investor Irwin L. Jacobs and an unidentified "major company" planned to launch a joint bid for Avon at $40 a share, Avon stock soared on the New York Stock Exchange in heavy trading.

The newspaper said Jacobs and the company were in the process of completing financing and other details of the hostile offer. Jacobs' partner was said to be a company other than Mary Kay.

Amway Corp. recently was rebuffed by Avon in a $39-a-share takeover offer.

GLASSES

"Pilots who need to look overhead to see instruments will find Computer Glasses very advantageous. They can put the glasses down to check overhead instruments, then put them on to see at a distance," he noted.

Hoff says mail sorters, hobbyists, mechanics, repairmen, carpenters, physicians or anyone who needs to see small objects or print at short distances without tilting their head will also find them useful. "We are always finding new applications for the glasses. Just the other day it occurred to me that those who work at stocking parts bins would find them useful."

Hoff says he sees a fantastic market for the innovative eyeglasses and intends to market them through major retail outlets, including drug stores, department stores and computer stores. He is also looking to market them directly to firms and government agencies which employ thousands of computer workers.

The registered optometrist envisions a potential market of 15 million users of computer glasses within the next two years, taking into account that 50 million Americans now wear bifocals.

"A single unit trial purchase of Computer Glasses by only 10 percent of the potential market could result in first year sales of 750,000 units or first year sales of $15 million and a gross profit of $4.5 million," says Hoff, who is already at work on a trifocal version.

CREDIT

explaining items that you challenge," he explains.

Noting that any item on a credit report that is challenged is dropped from the computer until the dispute is settled, Schmidt says essentially what credit repair specialists do is challenge everything on a client's report. "All that does is tie up the credit bureau's computer," he says.

He adds that there are non-profit groups such as churches and fraternal organizations that offer credit counselling services. "In fact, there's some question about the legality of these credit repair businesses, because under the state's debt adjustment act, credit restoration cannot be done for profit," he states.

Seen in Midland/Odessa in recent months have been people holding credit restoration seminars, promising a $1,000 line of credit for a $95 fee — of which $35 is for a credit card.

"We call these cardboard credit cards," Schmidt says, "because they're only good for purchasing items out of a catalogue these groups hand out. And we've found that, frequently, the merchandise is substandard as well."

While he says such seminars are not necessarily illegal, they can be misleading and the consumer should view them with a healthy dose of skepticism.

To prevent being defrauded, Schmidt offers these suggestions:

- Get a copy of your credit record periodically to see if it contains any mistakes.
- Don't give your credit card number to anyone over the phone unless you know they're reliable.

He also suggests the consumer shop around for a credit card and get the best interest rate; and if a consumer has a secured card, given to high-risk consumers who have to put up collateral for a credit line, he should switch to a regular credit card with lower interest rates once his credit has improved.

"It all boils down to using common sense," he says.

DESIGNER

"It was like the miller's daughter, you throw straw at her and she's supposed to spin it into gold. I was left alone in this house with some leather. So I made a handbag and painted it," says de Vazquez, who had been a clothing designer in Sausalito, Calif. "A young couple from New York City saw it and asked me to do a collection."

In the fall of 1968, the couple took the small line of handbags to a boutique show in New York.

"Every single big department store in New York saw it. We were nationally known in three to six months — an overnight explosion," de Vazquez says.

Within a year, the Mexican business, joined by her husband, was shipping $25,000 in merchandise a month, and Hollywood provided a major chunk of the clientele, she says.

"People would come down in vans and just stock up," she says.

By 1976, de Vazquez says, "we had 150 employees, and an entire town that hand-painted all the leather for us."

But while business boomed, the marriage faltered.

De Vazquez and her two small boys packed up and moved to Santa Fe, a place she thought would be good for starting over.

She says the Mexican business ceased within a year after her departure. But with the help of her retired parents and her sister Sherry Stein — a San Francisco fashion designer who moved to Santa Fe about that time — it wasn't long before she was back on track.

With their father helping finance the startup operation, the sisters began Char and Sher Designs. They had their established contacts, but decided on a strategy that was the reverse of what made the earlier Mexican business succeed.

"I knew the formula," de Vazquez says. "But we decided that rather than making a lot of cheap stuff, we would make real expensive stuff and not much of it and get the same dollar."

During the first several years, the family, with the help of a friend who had worked for de Vazquez in Mexico, worked to establish a regional market for the designs.

The turning point came in 1979 when the August issue of Gentlemen's Quarterly magazine carried a Char and Sher cowboy shirt on its cover model. Before long, the company was at the forefront of the Southwestern clothing flurry of the early 1980s.

"That exploded our entire business and we started selling to every single major department store," de Vazquez says.

Stein has since left to study design at Pasadena, Calif., Art College and de Vazquez is running the business' complex 15 miles north of Santa Fe in the village of Cuyamungue.

She and her team of designers work out of studios on the property, and sewers and cutters work among the reels of soft, multi-colored lamb skin in an adjacent plant.

OPEC

Bodin, who monitors the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries from his operations base in France, said, in an overseas telephone interview, its quota of 18.5 billion barrels per day, established in October, likely will be adjusted to 20.5 billion barrels per day in June, then will be exceeded an undetermined but significant amount of cheating.

"It looks like it could be a difficult meeting, in my opinion, only because with the high prices, the sense of urgency that existed last year is no longer there, and I think that because of the high prices again, each country is going to be loathe to accept a reduction in its quota," Bodin said.

Further, the cartel wants to sell more oil not only to take advantage of the higher prices while they last, but also to actually lower them in the process, he said.

Holding prices under $20 a barrel helps keep U.S. wells out of the market because domestic production — generated from mature, low-pressure fields — is much more expensive than new, high pressure wells overseas, he said.

Thus, the effect of higher prices makes way for increases in U.S. production and a decline in imported oil, he said.

By keeping prices low, OPEC helps protect its market share while at the same time preventing nuclear and other fuel sources from being developed, he said.

"There's two kinds of market shares that OPEC is concerned about: The first market share is each individual member's, the second is the oil market share of total energy," Bodin said.

Bill Thomas, manager of market research for Baker Hughes, the Houston-based oilfield equipment and services giant, said many domestic producers can continue to show at least marginal profits or minimally break even as long as prices remain in the $12 to $15 range.

But even with the current price range near $20-per-barrel, no significant increases have been seen in the active domestic rig count, he said.

"Our feeling is that a lot of the drilling budgets and planning that was done in 1988 was done at a time when oil prices were pretty low, so consequently there wasn't much activity planned," Thomas said.

"Now operators are looking at much higher oil prices, but they're wondering how long those prices are going to be around," Thomas said.

Domestic producers will be unable to commit significant investments to the development of more reserves until they have confidence in stable, higher prices, Thomas said.

Baker Hughes, which has tracked rig operations since 1940, reported the rig count down this week to 737, attributed mostly to bad weather in East Texas and the Gulf Coast. Modest increases had been reported in the previous to weeks, bringing the count to 771, but still well below the 892 count reported a year ago.

The count had been as high as 3,970 in 1981, and 1,976 in 1985.

Crude imports rose from 4.7 million barrels a day in 1987 to 5 million barrels in 1988, while at the same time domestic wellhead prices fell from an annual average of $15.40 to $12.57, according to the U.S. Energy Information Administration.

By comparison, domestic wellhead prices were as high as an annual average of $31.77 in 1981.

Pushed by the soaring prices, imports that year fell to an average of only 4.4 million barrels per day from an annual average 5.3 million barrels per day the previous year.

Texaco Inc. consolidates in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Texaco Inc. is consolidating employees and operations from several Houston-area facilities into a new 53-story downtown building.

The headquarters of Texaco U.S.A. will be at Texaco Heritage Plaza, the city's newest downtown office building, James L. Dunlap, president of Texaco U.S.A., said Tuesday.

About 1,500 Texaco employees from several Houston locations will begin the move into the new building, which will take several months, at the end of this year.

The largest number of employees, about 1,300, will be moving from the Texaco Building in downtown Houston, which has served as Texaco's primary location in the Houston area for nearly 75 years.

"Our move to this modern facility is in keeping with the reorganization and restructuring taking place in Texaco," Dunlap said. "The name 'Texaco Heritage Plaza' appropriately describes our new headquarters, as we build upon the history of the company, moving to a consolidated workplace that is more economical and more efficient for Texaco and its employees."

Pressure on Avon head to turn firm around

NEW YORK (AP) — Avon Products Inc. Chairman James E. Preston says his 13-year-old stepdaughter has come home from school in tears because of classmate taunts about cosmetics companies killing animals in lab tests.

He probably has felt similar emotions lately. Not only is Avon a target of animal rights protests, the company also is under intense pressure to improve its financial performance.

The pressure has been building since Avon rejected a $2.1 billion takeover proposal from Amway Corp., a decision Preston may live to regret if Avon fails to achieve what some securities analysts are describing as highly optimistic sales and profit projections.

The beauty products giant, known in past years for the slogan "Ding Dong, Avon Calling" because of its white-gloved women door-to-door sales squads, was putting the finishing touches on a radical makeover when Amway's offer landed on its own doorstep earlier this month.

In response to the unwanted overture, the management team led by Preston huddled to plot a revised strategy aimed at justifying their determination to preserve Avon's independence.

Preston, during an interview in his office overlooking New York's Central Park, summed up the goal this way: "To run this business differently than it's ever been run before."

PUT LIKE that, the task sounds simple. Judging by the critical questions Preston fielded during a session to explain details of the plan to financial analysts, however, Avon has a lot to prove.

To be fair, Avon's harshest recent critics may be motivated more by their own desire for quick profits than by an interest in enhancing Avon's growth. Takeover stock speculators, for instance, lost money after buying Avon shares on the hunch Amway's original $39-a-share offer might incite a bidding war.

But even those who respect Preston's management and experience in the direct-selling business think he may have trouble keeping his promises.

"It's really a very aggressive game plan in which all the pieces of the puzzle have to fit exactly," says Andrew Shore, analyst with Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. "There's no room for error, everything has to go right. If he doesn't hit these numbers clearly, there's going to be a credibility problem."

Shore, who had been recommending purchase of Avon shares based on the theory that expectations for the company were overly pessimistic, says he is reassessing his rating.

Among the new numbers that have evoked skepticism are 1989 earnings per share from continuing operations of $2.30 to $2.40, on a fully diluted basis. Avon management now is forecasting 1990 per-share earnings of at least $3.35 and at least $4 in 1991.

THE ESTIMATES far exceed management's expectations circulated privately around the time of the company's annual shareholders meeting on May 4.

Avon normally doesn't reveal projections. It departed from usual practice in an attempt to persuade shareholders that management made the right decision in rebuffing Amway, a privately held company based in Ada, Mich. that sells products ranging from household cleaner to office supplies.

Many observers say Avon has been on the right trackfor several years and they applaud Preston's pursuit of a higher profile for Avon's core beauty business. Avon has nearly completed the divestiture of its disappointing health care services holdings and Preston has admitted it was a mistake for Avon to have entered that business in the first place.

The transformation hasn't been altogether smooth. Despite 1988 sales of $3.06 billion, largely via 1.4 million independent sales representatives in the United States and more than 80 other countries, Avon lost $404.5 million in losses on discontinued operations.

Lauren L. Wong, analyst with Oppenheimer & Co. Inc., credits Prestonwith having the broad experience necessary for Avon to maintain its ranking as the biggest U.S. direct-selling company and a major supplier of beauty products.

PRESTON, 56, began his Avon career in 1964 as a management trainee. He's held positions in sales and marketing and international field operations. As head of the beauty group starting in 1981, he steered the division out of a slump and visited sales representatives to learn their complaints.

His elevation to president and chief operating officer in May 1988 came as a surprise because another Avon executive, John S. Chamberlin, had been widely believed to be ahead of Preston for the position.

Preston was named chief executive officer in September 1988 and became chairman of the board in January of this year after Hicks Waldron retired.

One of the biggest questions about Avon's revised strategy is why the company has backed off its earlier, higher predictions for overseas growth. Even after discounting the adverse impact of a stronger dollar, the overseas estimates still are slightly below previous expectations.

Most analysts consider foreign markets to offer the best opportunities for direct sellers.

Wong of Oppenheimer says it had been anticipated that sales outside the United States would outpace domestic sales, but Avon apparently has scaled back expansion plans abroad. Wong says the strategy could backfire by sacrificing future growth in favor of short-term profits.

ALTHOUGH AVON seems to have discouraged Amway for now, observers don't think Avon automatically can count on unchallenged independence, especially if financial results don't meet its projections.

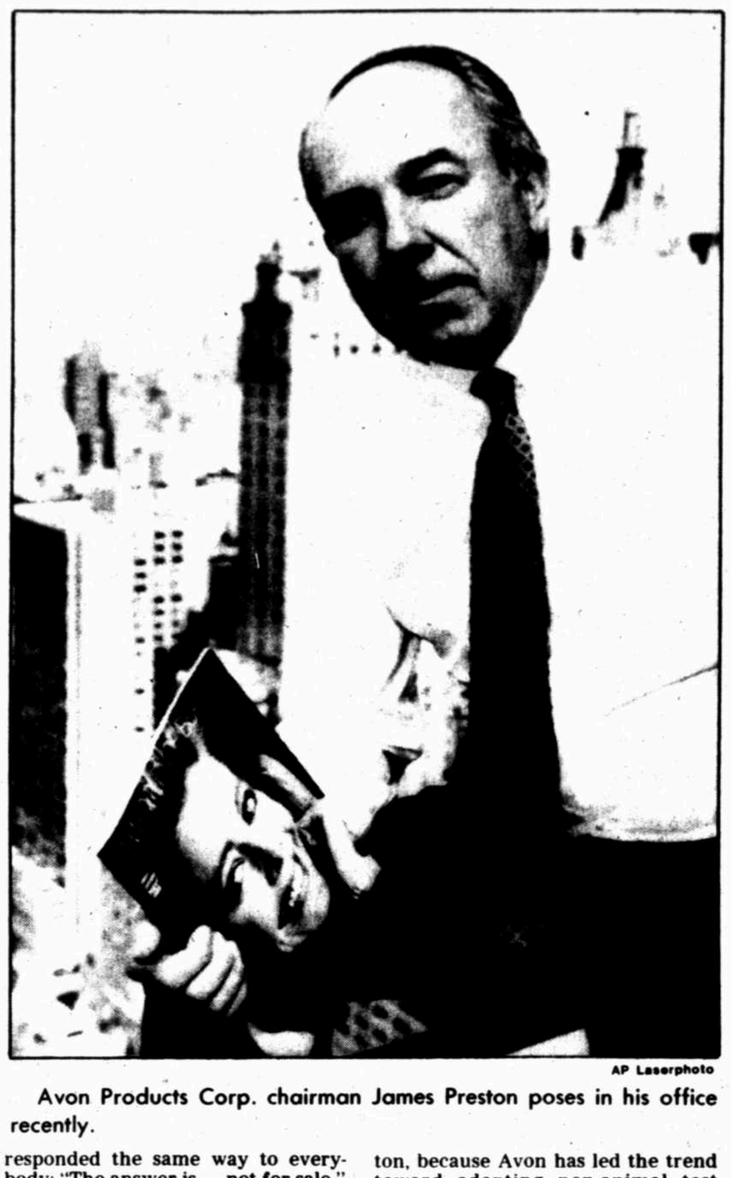

Amway still owns a chunk of Avon stock and could make another pitch some time to Avon's board. Takeover investor Irwin Jacobs also owns some Avon shares. Mary Kay Corp., the Dallas-based cosmetics seller, reportedly has expressed an interest in Avon and speculation about other suitors has surfaced.

Preston says numerous prospective buyers have approached him, with particular interest in Avon's retail fragrance business, consisting of some of the country's most popular perfumes sold in department stores, such as Giorgio. So far, he says he's responded the same way to everybody: "The answer is — not for sale."

While Preston's fending off takeover feelers, he also is trying to deflect criticism from one animal welfare group, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, that doubts Avon's commitment to discontinuing the use of animals to screen the safety of its products.

The criticism is unfair, says Preston, because Avon has led the trend toward adopting non-animal test methods and has donated money to researching alternatives.

Of the animal rights group that has been picking on Avon, even protesting near Preston's Connecticut home, Preston says : "I want nothing to do with their confrontational style. They have set back the animal rights movement."

Japanese firm challenges Nintendo in U.S. market

NEW YORK (AP) — A Japanese company says it has come up with a new home video game that offers more color and sharper graphics than Nintendo — at about twice the price.

NEC Home Electronics, a U.S. subsidiary of Japanese computer and telecommunications giant NEC, announced Tuesday it would begin selling the new video game system in the fall.

The new game "allows us to provide the user over 10 times more color and 16 times bigger characters," said Keith Schaefer, senior vice president of NEC Home Electronics.

"You will be able to see them cry, you can see the eye movement, the muscle movement," he said. "In the baseball games, you will be able to see dirt on the players' uniforms when they slide."

The new game will sell for about $200.

Nintendo, which offers computerized video games played on regular TV sets, holds about 75 percent of the $3.5 billion U.S. market for such games.

The Times York Times today said the key to the NEC system is a 16-bit graphics processor that provides clearer and more detailed images than those generated by Nintendo's smaller processor. The system also will have an optional compact disk player attachment that produces stereo sound.

Nintendo does not release the size of its processor, but it is believed to be 8 bits, the Times said.

Officials at Redmond, Wash.-based Nintendo said they were not worried. Nintendo games, which emerged after 1985, are believed to be in 17 percent of U.S. households.

"(NEC's) software is offering improved graphics, but it's not offering another level of play and challenge to the player," said William White, Nintendo director of advertising.

Nintendo plans to offer a 16-bit machine in Japan this summer and may introduce it in the United States as early as next year, White said.

Firm's new building designed to foster employee interaction

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Many managers cringe when they hear employees caught up in casual conversation, but such on-the-job chatter is music to the ears of executives at Steelcase Inc.'s new office furniture research center.

After five years of planning, Steelcase on Wednesday unveiled its $111-million Corporate Development Center.

The pyramid-shaped building is designed to create "functional inconvenience," where employees are forced to get out of their seats and interact with colleagues in different departments.

The building represents not only a change in location for 675 employees of the world's largest office furniture manufacturer, but also a drastic shift in management philosophy.

Employees will be divided into groups by project areas so that an engineer may be sitting next to a marketing executive, a quality control employee next to someone in the purchasing department. The task of all will be to design office furniture for the future.

"We're moving from the relay team to the rugby team approach to product development," said Frank H. Merlotti, Steelcase president and chief executive officer. "We're getting everybody involved up front and letting them lock in like a rugby team does, all moving toward the goal."

Three organizational psychologists were involved in designing the ultramodern, 575,000-square-foot, seven-story pyramid, which is surrounded by prairie grass and wildflowers. The interior is light and airy and features kinetic sculptures to symbolize change and creativity.

"It's all designed to shorten the product development period," said Tom Allen, an organizational psychologist and professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "That's where the Japanese have beaten the pants off us."

The way to shorten product development time, Steelcase officials believe, is to create an environment in which employees working on the same and different projects are constantly bumping into one another.

Elevators, where people rarely talk, are replaced by escalators, and all four entrances to the pyramid lead to the "town square" or atrium. Employees must pass through this area on their way into and out of the building.

Employees will have the option of remaining at their work stations or moving to any of 10 laboratories, 11 informal break areas, conference rooms, terraces that surround each floor or one-person "think tanks" that are equipped with computers but no telephones.

Managers are located in a central, circular group of offices, while their departmental employees are likely to be spread out across the building.

Though the building's layout is designed to promote random interaction and spontaneous feedback, Steelcase executives concede they had to consider the potential for too much casual conversation becoming a regular part of the work day.

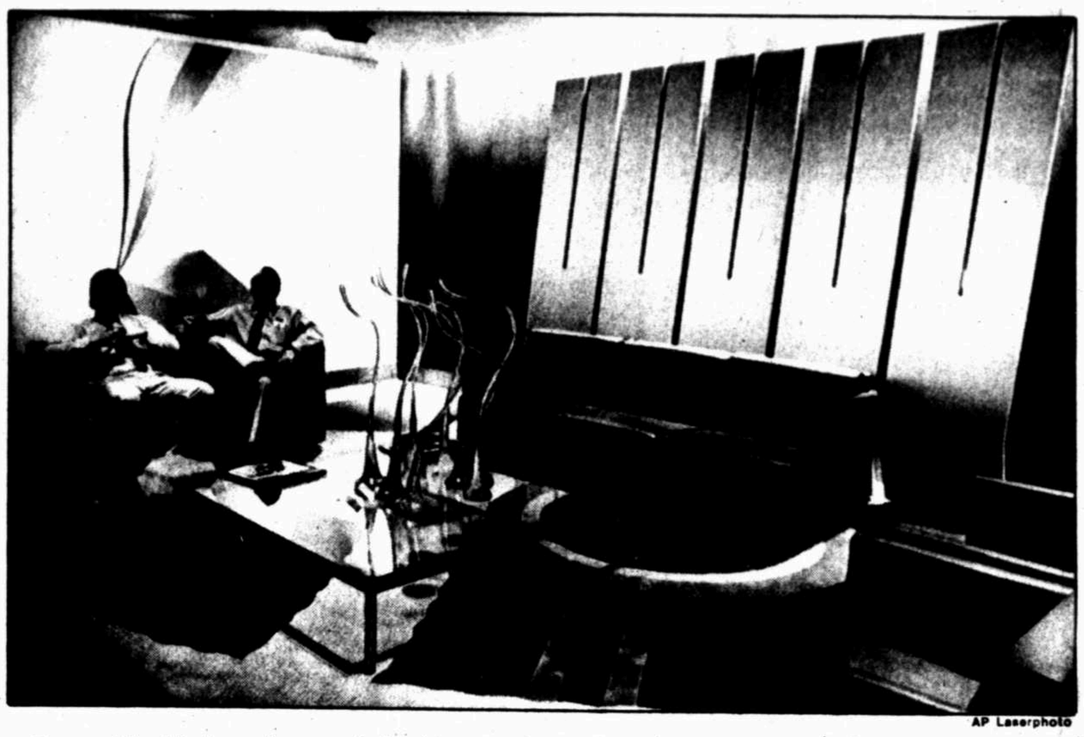

"We're not worried about people running amok," said Wayne Pierce, office facilities manager for Steelcase. "We'll still be holding people accountable."

Fritz Steele, an organizational psychologist and former Yale professor, said there probably will be less chaos in Steelcase's building than there is at most U.S. businesses.

"A lot of American businesses today have what I would call invisible anarchy at work. People who look like things are happening and nothing's going on. But you can't tell because they're sitting in the right spot, they've got the right stuff in their hands," Steele said.

At the research center, the focus will be on results, he said.

Previously, employees were housed by their respective departments in three different buildings at Steelcase's headquarters, just a few miles from the new building.

Microbial troops march to oil fields

BIG SPRING, Texas (AP) — Biological warfare used to be the domain of military minds, but battles in the oil fields have moved the technology to new fronts.

Bill Burchett has been marshaling his microbial troops to, among other things, wage war against paraffin or wax buildup in oil wells.

Burchett, along with his father Willis Burchett and Ronnie Broadrick, formed Microbes Research and Development, Inc., two years ago after hearing that bacteria could be used to treat paraffin buildup — a common problem that costs oil producers countless dollars each year.

Although skeptical about using microbes to treat oil wells and then selling the idea to producers, the group hired a microbiologist as a consultant and began laying down the groundwork.

"We did some research and screening of micro-organisms from the oil field," Burchett said, using tests to identify organisms al eady working on oil spills around pump heads.

Research results got the group excited as they began "to see the possibilities." The group made the financial committment to develop a product.

"We came up with what we felt like were the best group of bacteria . . to make the product commercially viable."

The group was searching, Burchett said, for the proper mix of microbes that would best reduce paraffin buildup in wells. The waxy substance, which is normally found in crude oil, often becomes separated from the oil during pumping.

"They (paraffins) then accumulate on the rods and tubing," Burchett said, clogging up the well and forcing producers to pull up from one mile to two miles of tubing for steam cleaning.

Not only is the process troublesome, it's also expensive.

"As a general rule, to pull the well . . . you're looking at $2,000 and $5,000 to do that."

And if the problem is severe, the well may have to be pulled every 90 days, Burchett said. That translates to as much as $20,000 per year just in cleaning costs.

That's where Burchett's bacteria come in. The microbes feed on paraffins, converting them to cellular materials and gases. The treatment, which is relatively inexpensive, prolongs the well's underground period and sometimes even eliminates the buildup problem, Burchett said.

Treatments consist of injecting into the well casing from two gallons to five gallons of product concentrated with 5 billion bacterium per milliliter. Wells are treated anywhere from twice a month to once a day, depending on the severity of the problem, Burchett said.

Because the bacteria are anaerobes — they can live with or without oxygen — there are few wells Burchett cannot treat. However, extreme temperatures, high salt concentrations and other things can kill the microbes.

"We have to test the fluids from the production well to determine whether or not our bacteria can survive," Burchett said.

So far, the group has been able to treat about 80 percent of the wells tested.

That includes wells across Texas, as well as in Oklahoma, Northern Canada and Southern Canada. Although the process is a success now, selling the idea was tough at first, Burchett said.

"Everybody was against it," he said. "It (microbe treatments) has been thought about I'd say for years. The actual attempt to do it has probably been only in the last two years."

Oil producers generally associate bacteria in wells with severe corrosion, Burchett said. Any mention of introducing bacteria can cause a producer to break into a cold sweat.

It took persuasive talking and friends in the oil business to get the company off the ground.

"We got friends to let us take on their wells," Burchett said. "Word of mouth was passed on and it became a product of interest."

Success breeds success, and Burchett's customers began lining up for his product.

"The paraffin problem in the oil industry is severe and every technique or method for overcoming the paraffin problem has been pretty much unsuccessful," he said. "In some cases, we've been able to increase production in wells with bimonthly treatment.

"We've grown fairly rapidly for two years — I think especially with the oil industry depression."

Growth and great market pontential have encouraged Burchett to expand the company's operations to enhancing oil recovery with microbes.

"I think the most exciting part lies in the future as far as the industry is concerned," Burchett said. "I believe (enhanced oil recovery) is going to be the area of the future — micro-organisms are going to play a big role in the oil industry."

The company is researching microbes that, when mixed with crude oil, will produce by-products and make a variety of changes in oil "and allow it to break away and flow into the production wells," Burchett said.

Much of the oil in the ground is referred to as trapped oil because it can't be recovered using current techniques, he explained. It may be trapped because it's adhering strongly to rocks, or there are pressure differentials or a variety of other reasons, he said.

Microbes could solve the problem.

"It just won't readily flow into the well bore," Burchett said of the trapped oil. "This is one method that's been successful recently. It's generally much less expensive than some of the enhanced oil recovery techniques."

Museum just for children

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

An octagon, a boat, a sundial, a snake walk, a checkerboard plaza, bathroom faucets which operate without touching them, specially shaped windows and window grill work that is strong enough to climb on can be found at the Fredda Turner Durham Childrens' Museum.

Opening to the public Saturday, the facility has been years in the making.

"Joint Ventures," a community workshop held Nov. 21, 1985, explored the concept of a children's museum in Midland. The workshop, organized by Junior League of Midland, was attended by 40 community leaders.

When the results of the workshop were presented to the Board of Trustees of the Museum of the Southwest Dec. 18, 1985, the response was positive and a steering committee was formed. A generous gift for the immediate development of a children's museum from longtime museum supporter and trustee, Fredda Turner Durham, set the project in motion.

In 1986, the children's museum steering committee conducted a competition encouraging local architects to submit designs which would meet the criteria set by the museum trustees. The design chosen was by Lawrence H. Connolly.

Now, 27 months later, Connolly talks about the process.

"The concept basically is the same, but very subtle changes have occurred and evolved. We added an exterior exhibit area; we didn't have that originally. They had segregated, at one time, a paint room, an assembly room and a wood shop, now we have just one room.

"Certainly, the exterior of the building is a lot more of a literal sort of eclectic solution to what is out here. We initially started with that but it even got more literal as far as architectural details that we borrowed from existing buildings on the property."

"I think we're very thorough in our solutions. We've spent considerably longer in the design period than we thought we were going to. We thought with the consultant that we would be able to get the drawing out. The competition was in October, they didn't decide until November, so we figured we'd get the drawings out in the spring of 1987."

The drawings were not ready until mid-summer.

"As we got into the project, we began to recognize some problems that the existing facilities for the museum have, and we tried to compensate for those. That was one of the reasons it took us longer.

"And we really addressed the issues of the neighborhood — the fact that we are in a heritage district in the City of Midland, and I believe the scale of the building and its different components reflect that.

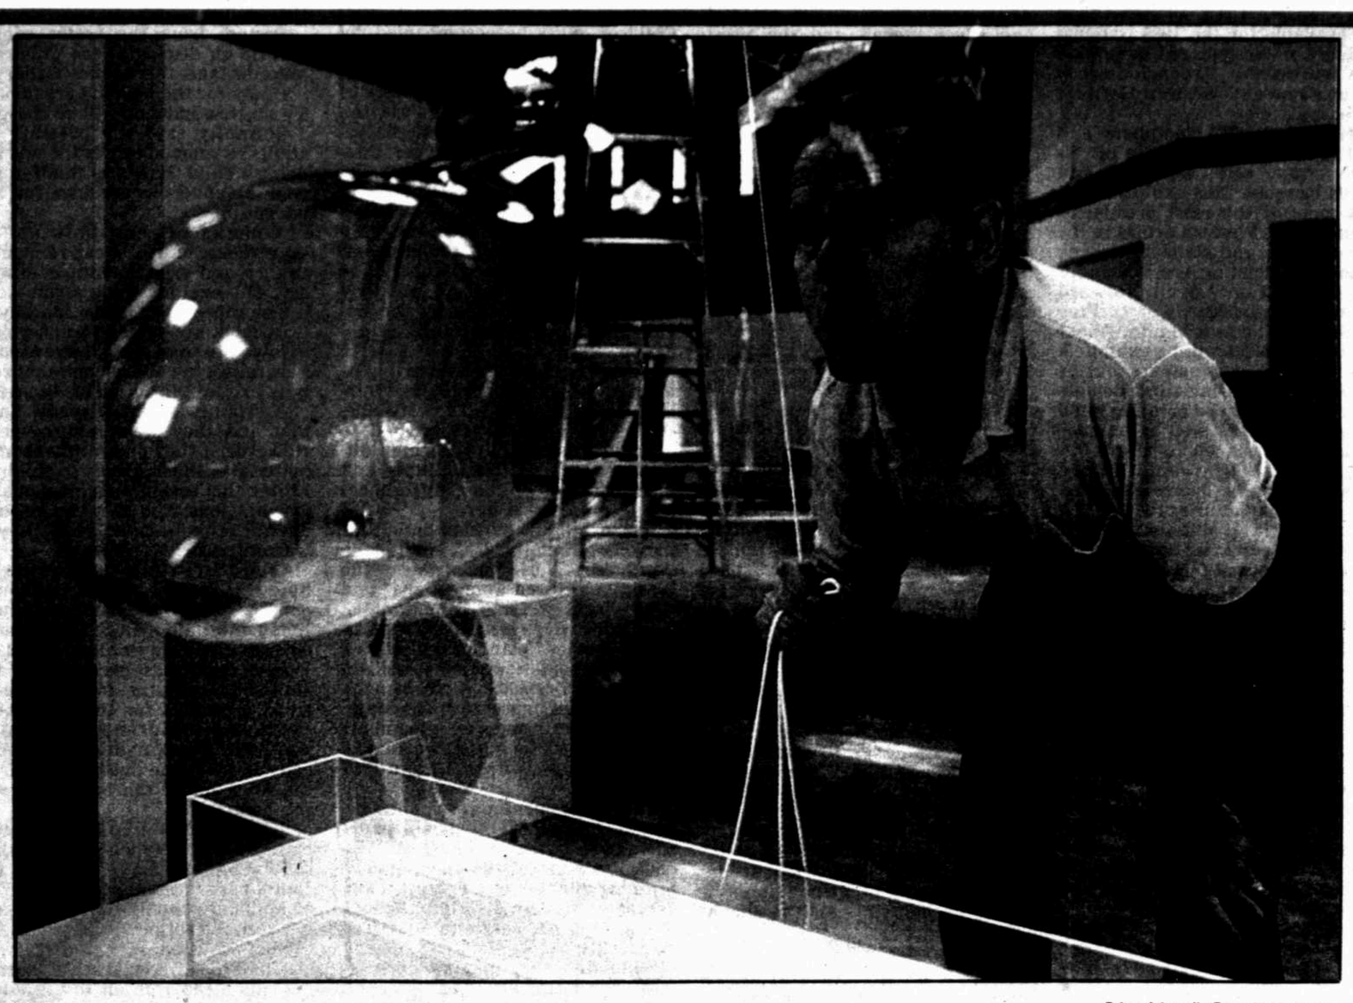

"It's not all of a sudden just a two story high shoe box that has all sorts of things going on in it. We broke it up in components, not only in the neighborhood — because that made a more sympathetic scale for those in the neighborhood — but also for children to be able to decipher what's going on and have some sort of, ideally, wonder, of the different components."

Those entering the children's museum will discover that most things are scaled for young people.

"We had a scale figure in our office to be able to design for children in determining heights for things. In the rest room, things are scaled down for children," Connolly says. "They are the reason for this building and not the grownups."

The octagonal shaped foyer includes a ticket booth, where children, who are not members of the museum, pay $2 to go through the museum.

"Slick" Mullins plans to be among those competing in Saturday's National Demolition Derby being held at Twin Cities Speedway.

Things that go crunch

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The four-wheel drive '81 short-wide blue Chevy has painted on its sides — "Modern Day Mud Warrior" and the name "Slick."

Midlander Clifton Eric Mullins is known by his friends as "Slick" because of his ability to "slide in and out of things without getting caught or in trouble."

For Mullins, "things" refers to his many hobbies — mud bogging, demolition derby driving and motorcycle and car racing.

Mullins, whose father, Bobby, owns a scrap metal business, learned how to use a cutting torch when he was 3, began running a crushing machine when he was 8 and drove in his first demolition derby when he was 12. Now 24, this 6-foot-3, 180-pound thrill-seeker loves to make things go crunch.

He remembers his first demolition derby.

"I loved it. I thought it was the greatest thing I'd ever done."

Although he's never won first place in a demo derby, he's come in third place twice and fifth place on several occasions.

"Most people are in it to win, and I'm there mainly just to show off," Mullins says. He laughs. "I forget I'm out there to win, and I try to please everyone. That's one of the reasons I bring a car out there that's better than many people drive. They're going to keep their eyes on it rather than an old clunker that is winning."

In the final derby at Twin Cities Speedway in 1988, he drove a Lincoln.

This season, for Saturday's National Demolition Derby at the speedway, located off Coors Road between Midland and Odessa, he plans to be driving a Trans Am.

Gates open at 5 p.m. for the event which features five shows — the second annual Midland Auto Buffs & Tall City Classics Autorama, Spectator Drags, Auto Racing, News Media Derby and the National Demolition Derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club.

Mullins has been in so many derbies he's lost count, but not enthusiasm.

"I don't count a derby as serious as some people. I look at it as part of my job. I just stepped off the forklift into a car, that's the only difference.

"One of the reasons I look forward to a derby is because I'm there crushing cars. I'm always on the forklift crushing cars here and there. I know exactly where a weak spot is. I'm looking forward to always going to a derby so I can find a new weak spot I can crush."

Mullins "loves" crushing cars.

"It's always something different. It's exciting — never a dull moment. I'm either up on two wheels or up on top of a car trying to mash a top down on it. It's great."

Mullins can crush 125 to 130 cars a day.

"That's why they keep me on the road so much. The yards I go to have anywhere from 50 to 75 to 100 cars."

Midland Recycling, a division of B&C Enterprises, owned by Mullins and his father, crushes cars, loads them on company trucks and ships them to El Paso where they are "shredded into little pieces and shipped off to different places. Part of it's used in ore mine and the rest is melted down to be made into structural steel."

Mullins has a solution for boredom.

"I'll just take the forklift and set some cars out and crush them, drive over the top of them, play around," he says.

Actually, Mullins usually is too busy to be bored. When he was about 20 he had to make a decision about which hobbies to keep and which to let go.

"It was just hard for me to do all of them. I was drag racing, circle tracking, mud bogging and driving in demo derbies all at the same time, and I couldn't keep up with all of it. I kept the mud bogging and demolition derby driving," he says. He laughs again and adds, "You can show off the best with those two."

Mullins can't think of too many things he's interested in that he hasn't done.

"I've done nearly ever kind of racing there is to do — from motorcycles to cars.

Museum has new space

NEW YORK (AP) — A selection of masterworks from the permanent collection of the Museum of American Folk Art is on view through July 16 to inaugurate the museum's new exhibition space, the Eva and Morris Feld Gallery at Lincoln Square.

After a 2½-year period without permanent exhibition galleries, the museum is now open every day of the year from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. in this new space, and admission is free.

MUSEUM

The admission charge is designed to encourage membership, says Jean Hagman, the museum's director. Children must be accompanied by an adult.

In addition, the children's museum will be using teen volunteers to help visitors learn how to use the facility. The volunteers will be supervised by Marilyn Bassinger, education director, and Ann Greer, educator. Teens interested in joining this group, are asked to call 683-2882.

The exhibits found in the children's museum for its opening include "About Bubbles," funded by Junior League of Midland, and "My Special World," funded by the Davidson Family Charitable Foundation.

"About Bubbles" is an evolving exhibition which will begin as "Bubbles Under the Sea." The "My Special World" exhibit is designed to introduce the world of learning differences, physical disabilities and the challenges of those differences to the museum visitor.

The exhibit is divided into four sections: "The World of Limited Vision," "The World of Silence," "The World of Crossed Connections" and "The World of Limited Motion."

Opening day festivities will include movies, planetarium shows, dance presentations, story telling, music and dramatic performances. The childrens' museum opens Saturday to museum members; members of Las Manos, the museum's auxiliary; and the Junior League of Midland.

The public opening ceremonies begin at 11 a.m. June 4 when a paper chain will be cut by Forrest Windecker, winner of the opening celebration poster contest. Forrest, a kindergarten student at Trinity School, is the son of Charlotte and Ted Windecker.

Following the opening ceremonies, entertainment and activities will be available in all of the museum buildings. Cookies, punch and popcorn will be served throughout the afternoon.

Some of the entertainers will be James Cramer and Friends, Bill Lucas as Tubby the Tuba, the Pickwick Players, Bubbleman Mark Linroth, the Storyteller's Guild with Annalon Gilbreath, the Kitchen Symphony and a signing choir from First Baptist Church.

Posters from the poster contest will be on display in the Children's Museum and the Stables Gallery.

Hours for the opening are noon to 5 p.m. No admission will be charged.

Connolly says it's possible for adults to remember what it was like being a child. He hopes children will find the childrens' museum fun and educating.

"Some of us never grow up," he says. "Some of us still can remember the joy and excitement over discovery. The exciting thing about working on this project is that literally, at least from my vantage point, you're involved in some way in introducing new things to children and that really is exciting in terms of discovery.

"Certainly adults already know that and they won't rediscover it. However, if they present that sort of material enthusiastically to children, I think that sort of emotional quality is contagious. And they can get children excited about what they're learning also.

"And that's really the premise behind this facility. It's not unlike the good parts of Disneyland, it's educational entertainment. It's wholesome clean fun, but they're learning also."

Most children's museums in the United States have adapted pre-existing buildings for their purposes. Midland's children's museum is housed in a facility designed specifically to meet the needs of children, the Museum of the Southwest and the community.

"The City of Houston's current children's museum is smaller than this," Connolly says. "So on a per capita basis, the children of the City of Midland actually have more area per-square-foot-per-child than the City of Houston.

"That's really remarkable. There's not much research on this building type. It's very unique. It's a relatively new phenomenon in the museum community, and it's occurring all over the country. The unique aspect of this facility is that it's one of the few that's built from scratch."

MULLINS

"I've run just about every piece of equipment there is to run. Being in the scrap business lets you flex from being a welder to being a mathematics person to sitting out there doing nothing."

He has no children of his own, yet he feels kids "admire" the things he does because "it's what they'd like to do."

"When you're a little kid playing around, you play around with trucks and forklifts and cranes and loaders and dump trucks. The only difference is I've grown up, and my toys have motors now, and I don't have to push them."

He feels among the fortunate in life.

"If it wasn't for me being in the business I'm in, I wouldn't have what I've got. I have a three bedroom home paid for. I've got a half a dozen vehicles that belong to me paid for. And I feel fortunate to be 24 years old and have all this.

"My dad has a business which later on in years will be my business. To a lot of people that's hard work that gets your hands dirty. But if you're happy and get everything you want, why not?

"A job's a job. When I get through with my work, I can clean up and be just as good looking as a person who sits in a business office all day long."

He pauses, laughs and adds, "Except I look better because I don't have to go to a tanning bed to get a tan, and I don't have to go to the fitness center to get my body in shape."

Kuhn paintings depict imiaginary history

A series of paintings by Walt Kuhn called "An Imaginary History of the West" is on exhibit at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through June 11.

Kuhn, who lived from 1877 through 1949, born and reared in Brooklyn, read from childhood about "the old West" and collected a substantial library on Western subject matter. The works in this exhibit were painted between 1918 and 1920 and are based on impressions of what he had read. Though Kuhn went West in 1900, what he saw was not the West about which he had read.

"These are not the usual romanticized pictures of cowboys and Indians, but are depictions of barroom fights, horseback ambushes, powwows and portraits of Indians and soldiers done with a variety of approaches described as "almost pure calligraphy to drawings which resemble paleolinthic cave drawings, to barely outlined color areas," says a release fromt he museum. "These small paintings reflect a vision of a life, now vanished that was a strange mixture of comedy and tragedy."

Kuhn, knowns as "one of the most powerful and original painters of his time," felt the "Imaginary West" series was so important as a total statement that he re-purchased many of the canvases he had sold previously so he could keep them together. Of the 30 works in the exhibit, 24 belong to the Colorado Springs Fine Arts center, which organized the exhibit, and six, including a self-portrait, are from the estate of Kuhn's widow, Vera.

He studied in Paris and Munich, and his most famous works are of showgirls, acrobats and clowns done in a realist style influenced by Cezanne.

In addition, an exhibition of photographs by Theodore Hughes Waddell is on display through June 25. The exhibit is titled "My Other Eye: Photographs by Theodore Hughes Waddell."

Also on display is the exhibit "Erte and His Contemporaries."

The museum is open free to the public Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Mona, girls do good job at entertaining 'patrons'

The phone rang while I was reading over some copy just prior to writing this column.

As I answered the call, I noticed the following word — toeghter. I laughed. The person on the other end of the line asked me why.

Temple

I spelled the word and she said, "All the letters are there, they're just not in the right order."

We both laughed.

Then I realized the line suited not only my life these days, but also this column. Somehow, in a very short space in print, I must cover eight events. As those of us who follow the arts know, May is not a slow month.

Those events are, in correct order, "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," Celebration of the Arts opening night reception, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's final pops concert of the season, COA's free concert featuring Scartaglen, COA's Gourmet Midland, Ballet Midland's "Coppelia," Casa de Amigos' "Mozart on Fifth" and the Thouvenel String Quartet's final concert of the season.

"Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" — Mona and her girls have done such a good job of entertaining patrons that "Whorehouse" has been held over through Saturday. Playing the role of Mona is Judy Gorlin, whose singing of "Bus From Amarillo" poignantly describes youth's lost dreams.

Actually, this production has several numbers which deal with the difference between a person's exterior and interior. For example, Martha Manulik really touches the heart when she sings "Doatsey Mae."

In the May 7 column I talked about "Whorehouse" and those who are participating this time who were in the previous Midland Community Theatre cast. I also spotlighted Felicia Long, who is doing an outstanding job of playing Jewel.

I didn't, however; tell the following story. As I was leaving the theater, I asked a young man if he had enjoyed the show. He gave me a what-a-crazy question look and said, "Are you kidding? I loved it."

Celebration of the Arts — From the opening reception to the closing of Gourmet Midland, those participating in this year's event said more people came through Midland Center than in the past. Many commented on how nice it was to have carpet on the floor of the center for both events. The Festival days made much-needed money for the Arts Assembly of Midland, Midland's umbrella organization for the arts and the presentor of COA.

And, it's doubtful that anyone went home hungry from Gourmet Midland. A number of the people there commented on how much they enjoyed hearing Dow Jones Average playing in the background. I agreed.

Those who missed the Irish performing troupe — Scartaglen — missed a delightful evening's entertainment. Sponsored by Texas Instruments and presented by the Arts Assembly, the concert was free.

The Allison Fine Arts Auditorium was packed. The five-member group presented a well-orchestrated musical bill of fare in a relaxed and casual manner. It will be a long time — if ever — before I forget hearing Connie Dover sing a cappella. Silence hung briefly in the air following each number she sang. Then, the applause was thunderous.

Midland's cultural scene would be in dire shape without volunteers, and I'd like to thank all the volunteers who made this COA possible.

MOSC's — MOSC's final pops concert was a rousing success, complete with exciting performances by the guest artists — Rafael Vargas, Memo's Mariachi Trio and Ballet Mujeres. The event marked conductor Dr. Thomas Hohstadt's closing performance with the organization. More on both in a later column.

Ballet Midland's "Coppelia" — I was disappointed that Ballet Midland brought a dancer of Andrei Ustinov's credentials and ability to town and did not showcase his talent. When the curtain closed on "Coppelia," we had seen little dancing by this Russian dancer. And the set for Act I and III left much to be desired. It was not even close to professional quality.

In fact, much of the production, including problems with the recorded music, smacked of a recital and yet the evening carried a ticket price of $12.

On the up-side, I perhaps have not seen Diane Gaddy, Ballet Midland's artistic director, dance better. And, no talk of "Coppelia" would be complete without mentioning Henry Goulet, who was a shining star in the production. Also, Act II was by far the best-looking act of the three acts. The "toys" were charming.

"Mozart on Fifth" — The only disappointing aspect of this event was the crowd size. I looked around the Yucca Theatre and wondered where Midland's jazz lovers had gone. They missed a treat. The players were excellent.

I did feel that much of the program was designed for young people and not young children.

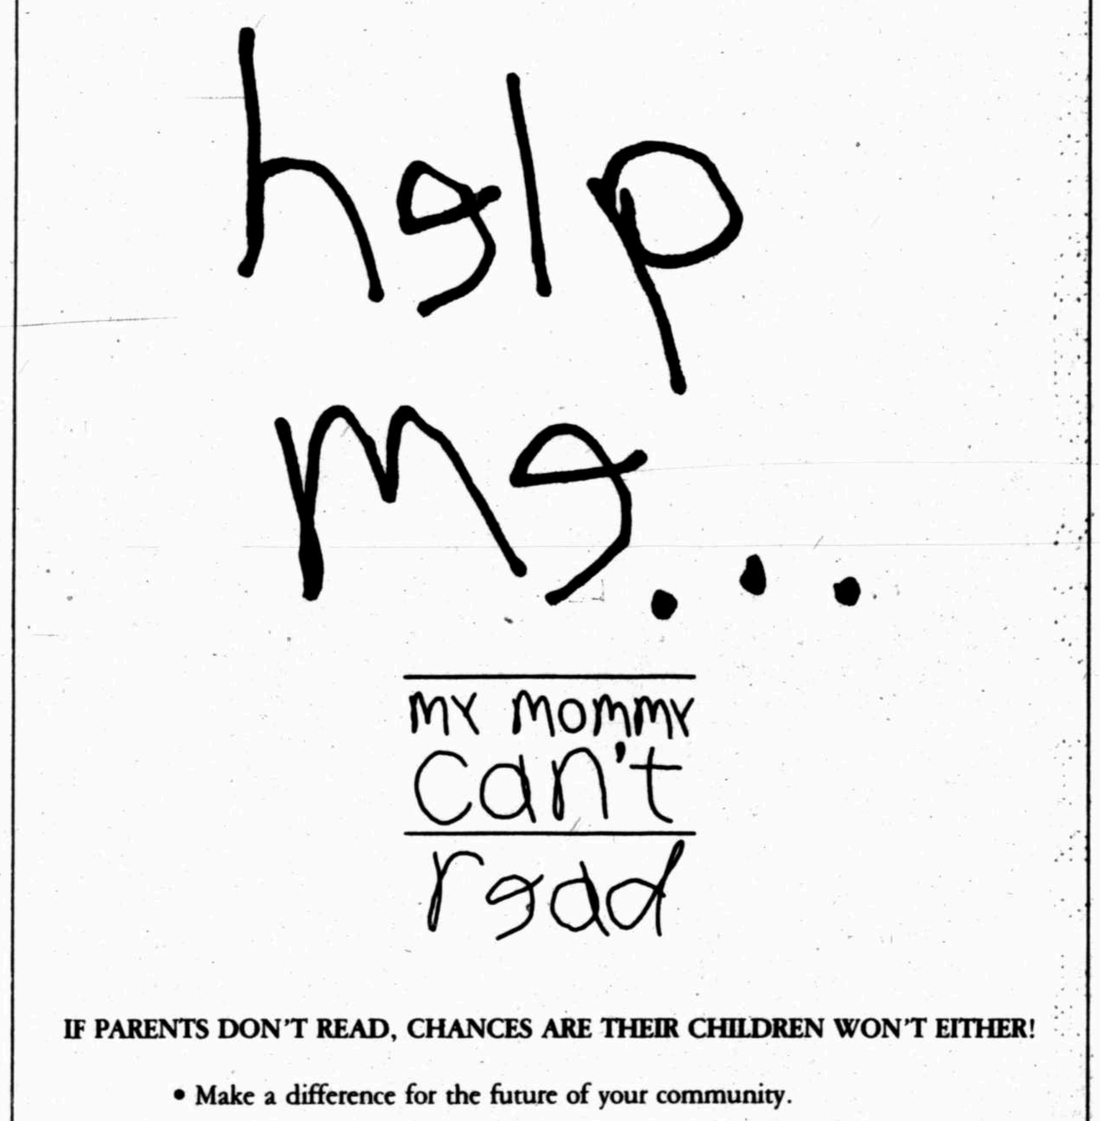

Thouvenel String Quartet — The quartet closed its season with a strong performance, one which drew bravos from the audience. I only wondered why the members chose to play Schubert's "Death and the Maiden" for Mother's Day.

The work made me feel extremely sad. I went away from the concert thinking about the selection and decided it was perhaps more appropriate than I first thought.

The program notes say the work represents a confrontation with Death in its various aspects. Motherhood certainly offers numerous deaths — dreams, hopes, aspirations, first for self, then for one's children.

Mrobdi? Prehpas... But treu.

'Road House' built on violence

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

"Road House" stars Patrick "Dirty Dancing" Swayze as Dalton, a bouncer whose name is legend in honky tonks across the nation. Dalton pummels his opponents to a pulp with some fancy akido. Then he stitches up his own wounds himself. Even better, he refuses anesthesia when a doctor (Kelly "Cocktail" Lynch) staples another gash shut. (Why not, Rambo can cauterize his wounds with gun powder and a match flame).

Salcedo

The message is: Real men don't feel pain. Real men do, however, thrill at every chance for brutal action, according to the film.

In "Road House" the action consists of punching and brawling. Swayze has more moves here than he did in "Dirty Dancing;" some of them are in the bedroom. Although the film is a modern day western from the new-sheriff-cleans-up-the-town genre, most of the fairer sex manages to appear in the altogether. Their only purpose is to stir up the real men.

The muscular Dalton flexes his pecs at every opportunity. He owns an expensive Mercedes, claims to hold a philosophy degree from New York University and has made it his goal in life to clean up biker bars. His latest crusade is a sleazy place in small town Missouri called the Double Deuce. He's told it's the kind of place where "eye balls are swept up after closing."

But the bar is the least of the town's problems. A major bad guy (Ben Gazzara) is squeezing the bar owner and every other business in town. Gazzara gets away with Gestapo tactics with nary a police officer in sight. It's said that all the police are also on the take. But it's hard to believe that they would ignore so many buildings being torched, and even overlook a few murders. Soon Dalton's master teacher (Sam Elliot in dire need of a shave), the king of the bouncers, arrives to complete Dalton's two-man army. The young blind guitar wiz Jeff Healey also adds some color to the film and keeps the soundtrack hopping.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

- DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss
- STRIPPER — barely worth the time
- PRODUCER — a good investment
- GUSHER — not to be missed

The photography is nice and the film is slickly produced. Still, it never rises above the standard oooof-bifff-uuugah-argghh movie. Nonetheless, it isn't only violence that earns "Road House" an "R" rating. Don't make the mistake of taking your action-loving teenagers to see this film. Much of the action makes the moves in "Dirty Dancing" look like the hokey pokey.

"Road House" rates 2½ rigs.

"Road House," rated R for several graphic sex scenes, nudity, violence and profanity, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Ford enjoyed working with Connery

Actors team up in 'Indiana Jones'

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In the first Indiana Jones caper, Harrison Ford fell into a pit wriggling with thousands of snakes, real snakes. This time out, he crawls through a cavern alive with thousands of rats, real rats.

Is that any way to treat the actor whose films have earned more than any star in history?

"That kind of stuff doesn't bother me at all," says Ford reassuringly. "The rats didn't bother me, the snakes didn't bother me. It's people I'm scared of."

It's probably half-true. Ford may seem fearless as Han Solo and Indiana Jones, but he appears reluctant about dealing with the human animal. He is rarely seen in the familiar movie habitats, preferring to vanish between films into the vastness of his 800-acre Rocky Mountain retreat. But with Paramount Picture's $35 million "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" facing the highly competitive summer market, he agreed to come to Los Angeles for interviews.

"It's a dirty job, but it's got to be done," he cracked, again with a grain of truth. It may have been coincidental that he was dressed entirely in black.

Ford, 46, might be called The Quiet Star. His laid-back demeanor seems out of sync with his achievements. Consider this: He starred in five of the eight all-time box-office champions — the "Star Wars" trilogy and the first two Indiana Jones adventures. It's a safe bet that "The Last Crusade" will join their number.

What raises the third Indiana saga above the previous two is the inspired casting of Sean Connery as Dr. Henry Jones the elder.

Ford said he had been displeased by two previous scripts for "The Last Crusade," but the third one charmed him: "I was quite pleased by the direction it took, by the deepening of the character. I was pleased by the relationship that was drawn between Indiana and his father, which makes this film very special.

"I was very happy (with the casting of Connery), although I was worried that he might be too young: He's only 12 years older than I am. Working with Sean was the pleasure that it looks to be. He is a consummate performer and a very skilled actor. A nice man."

"The Last Crusade" was filmed in Spain, England, Italy and Jordan, but Ford admitted he could enjoy little scenery.

"That's a bit of a shame," he said. "You either go to these wonderful places and work so hard that you don't get a chance to see them at all. Or, you so affect the place by your presence that it's not the place you want to look at anyway. Still, it's interesting. It's fun to go to new places."

Harrison Ford, right and Sean Connery team up as father and son — Indiana Jones (Ford) and Henry Jones — in "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade." Ford says working with Connery "was the pleasure it looks to be."

Fortunately, the rigors of ranch life keep Ford in condition for such movies as the Indiana Joneses.

"Physically, they're very hard pictures to do," he admitted. "They're hard mentally, too. Big pictures are tough to do. Let's hope they're worth it.

"(Maintaining concentration) is my strong suit, I suppose. I just knuckle down and get on at the beginning and get off at the end. I just devote myself to the task at hand."

Many of the "Last Crusade" stunts, including hanging from a cannon as a tank scrapes the side of a canyon, are obviously performed by Harrison himself. Is that wise?

"Things are calculated so there's little risk of real injury," he said. "Bumps and bruises go with the territory.

"I think we get some very important moments when I do it myself. I think we have great moments of humor and characterization that occur in the midst of physical action. That characterizes these films. In an action-adventure film you lose sight of your protagonist when you see the back of the head of a stunt person. If I can do (stunts) I'm happy to do them myself."

Only once has he been seriously hurt. On "Temple of Doom" he hurt his back and filming was shut down six weeks while he healed.

Harrison Ford was born in Chicago and grew up in the suburbs with no hint of his future as an actor. At Ripon College he majored in philosophy, appearing in plays to help relieve his basic shyness. He moved to Los Angeles to try an acting career, working as a carpenter during lean periods.

Ford came along at the end of the studio stock-contract system, but neither Columbia Pictures nor Universal gave him much to do. He was languishing in episodic television when George Lucas added him to the cast of "American Graffiti." Then Lucas cast him as the high-flying Solo in "Star Wars."

For a time it appeared that Ford was stuck in larger-than-life hero roles. Then in 1986 he drew an Academy nomination as best actor in a modern drama, "Witness." Last year's "Working Girl" proved he could do comedy as well.

When not working, Ford holes up in Wyoming with his wife, Melissa Mathison, who wrote "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial," their son Malcolm, and Harrison's grown sons from his first marriage, Benjamin and Willard.

What kind of life does he lead back at the ranch?

"It's pretty ordinary. I do things that most people do: go to the grocery store, pick up the mail, plow the snow, fix the fence, do some woodwork in my shop. I walk. It's a pretty unspectacular life."

Bain, Carr art worksat gallery

A showing of works by Gary Bain and Joyce Elizabeth Carr closes June 22 at Gallery 1114.

Of his colorful works Bain says, "The shapes I lace over the highly active backgrounds seem to 'float' above the picture plane. Are these shapes frozen in mid-fall, floating away from the canvas or simply defying the laws of gravity?"

Bain attended Texas Tech University, and his work has been exhibited and has won awards in area-wide shows.

Ms. Carr has a bachelor of arts in applied design from the University of Houston at Clear Lake City and has done course work in Future studies. She currently resides in Kilgore.

Ms. Carr's oil paintings are symphonies of color — sometimes cacophonic and discordant, sometimes harmonious and beautiful. She says that her work in this show "depicts the soul's voyage on a journey of life in a mystical pagentry of moons, stars, beacons, cathedrals and passageways, but who can say what or where the final destination is?"

Gallery 1114 is a cooperative of contemporary artists located at 1114 N. Big Spring. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday, and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Doctor doesn't plot novels, he 'just writes away'

EDITOR'S NOTE — He's a physician by profession and when he started writing novels about a sleuthing antique dealer he took a pen name that means worthless in the slang of antique dealers. John Grant, the doctor, sometimes feels guilty about the time he spends away from his medical work as Jonathan Gash, the writer, but for him it sure beats golf.

By MARY CAMPBELL

Gash

NEW YORK (AP) — Lovejoy, you see, is this sometimes shady antique dealer who is always broke, a know-it-all sleuth with an eye for women who almost always have an eye for him. He's also a knight errant in setting right challenges that range from murder to the plight of a stutterer.

Needless to say, he is always in trouble, which is the trademark given him by his creator, the ebullient English author, Jonathan Gash.

Gash acknowledges that his dozen books that feature Lovejoy abound in plots and subplots that defy the most analytic reader.

"The Swedes, who measure such things, say there are an average of 4½ major plots and 13 minor plots per book," he says. "They say the usual is two major plots and three subplots."

Gash doesn't plan his stories that way. He just writes away.

Actor Ian McShane plays Lovejoy in 10 televised episodes, shown in the United States on cable. "They picked out plots and subplots from five books," Gash says.

Readers sometimes laugh aloud at Lovejoy's madcap scrapes and so does Gash when he's writing them.

"I can't tell what people will like," he says. "There was a baby in one of the books early on, 'Gold by Gemini.' Lovejoy, who thinks he knows everything about everything, babysits Henry, 10 months old. I find I digressed in giving Lovejoy's opinions. But Henry the baby still gets fan letters."

Lovejoy also is a divvie for antiques, like a person who divines water with a forked stick. Facing an antique, he knows if it's real or not.

"Divvies exist," Gash says, although he would prefer more scientific analysis.

"Tom Keating, who lived in a village next to ours and gave me art lessons for 5 pounds every Saturday morning, was a divvie for paintings only. He began to fake paintings, Degas more than anything. He believed he became Degas. He was arraigned at the Old Bailey. Poor Tom."

When he's not inventing plots for Lovejoy, the 55-year-old author is inventing plots for himself.

He's a full-time physician, Dr. John Grant, specializing in infectious diseases, on the faculty of the Institute of Tropical Medicine at the University of London and a visiting professor at half a dozen Middle Eastern universities.

When he was in medical school and needing money, he recalls, "I got a job in Petticoat Lane...It was an antiques market in those days.

"The Cockney antique dealers were angels. I feel like sending them my M.D. sometimes. They kept me alive. They paid me for the work I did and never saw me go hungry. As soon as they knew I was a medical student they couldn't do enough. With that and a couple of night jobs, I made my way through college."

It was in Petticoat Lane that the doctor-in-training got his pen name, Gash.

"If you go among street markets in London, it's one of the commonest words you'll hear," he says. "It means good for nothing. It has a bit of a joke in it. I couldn't find another author whose name was Gash. It's the same initial as my name. And it's one I could remember."

He married Pam, a nurse, when he was 21. "Pam was affluent," Gash says. "She had 7 pounds in the bank. I'd never seen so much money in my life. We lived in a garret, really. It didn't seem especially brave."

Gash reports gleefully that two of their three daughters are married to actors named Richard and the other says with her luck she'll marry Richard III. The Gashes have two grandchildren. A third is expected on July 4.

Since writing "The Judas Pair" in 1977, Gash works without an outline and sometimes has more than one book under way at once.

"I don't know how to write a book," he says. "I write everything longhand, very small lines very close, on sheets of paper.

"It's like a jigsaw. I may write chapter 19 first. I don't know how to plan a novel or how to bring in a new character unless it just comes. I never know what is going to be in my mind.

"When I've done it all, I rewrite it over the original in a different color ink — red. Then blue and green, until finally it looks like a map of the underground. Then I send it off to the typist. Then I do the same thing again to the typescript — black, red, blue, green. It's indecipherable. 'Gold by Gemini' took 13 rewrites. The fewest rewrites was 'The Vatican Rip,' which took seven."

Gash's latest book "Jade Woman," published by St. Martin's Press, is set in Hong Kong where Grant and his family lived in the 1960s and where he was director of clinical pathology at Queen Mary Hospital and working in infectious diseases at Hey Ling Chau leper colony.

"Jade Woman" may be the book that makes him a household-name like fellow Brits P.D. James and Dick Francis, although he finds fame embarrassing.

"I suppose it is the guilt of laying aside your medical work for a while, even if it's an hour a day," he says. "I find that very painful. You go to a clinic, see several patients dying. By way of light relief, you write something. There is deep within you the feeling, 'Look here, you've stopped working. Instead you're scribbling inanities about some shoddy antique dealer.' "I know it's a human being's way of pacing himself. An executive who makes major decisions goes out and plays golf. This is my game.

"I feel like an intruder into the whole literary scene. If I had the time I would go to Cambridge and do a degree in English lit. Think how marvelous that must be. We go to medical school. Six years later we emerge, blinking at the light, never having seen anybody but doctors and patients. We're highly trained. We're not educated. There's something a wee bit wrong about that."

Fakery supplies author Archer's 'A Twist in the Tale'

"A Twist in the Tale," by Jeffrey Archer. Simon & Schuster. 240 Pages. $17.95.

By PHIL THOMAS
Associated Press Books Editor

Getting away with murder isn't all that difficult.

A Review

Not if you're as clever and as lucky as the chap in "The Perfect Murder," one of 12 nicely told stories by Jeffrey Archer that are gathered in "A Twist in the Tale."

The murderer is a respectable married man who keeps a misiress on the side. One day, he goes to see his mistress and observes another man leaving her apartment. He dashes in and berates her for her "unfaithfulness," then, "in a moment of uncontrolled fury," strikes her. The blow kills the woman. Fearful of the consequences if he is found out, the unmeaning killer determines to frame the man he saw exiting her apartment. How he does so makes for a devilishly entertaining story.

Cheating society by fakery figures in several other Archer stories, most notably in "The Loophole." Here, two longtime friends, Philip and Michael, have a violent quarrel in the bar of their crowded club. Their bad conduct leads to their ejection and suspension from the club. Michael sues Philip for slander and eventually is awarded 100,000 pounds. And an extremely clever hoax has been put over on an unsuspecting society.

Hoax also is the name of the game in "Checkmate." In this tale, a beautiful young woman manages to con a chess master out of 200 pounds by deftly beating him at his own game. How she does so is blatantly obvious but still most amusing.

"A la Carte," unlike the previous stories cited, involves no chicanery. It's a straightforward tale about a young man whose only ambition is to work in an auto factory. Fortunately, his father, who has "spent the whole of his working life putting wheels on cars," wants better for the youth. A father-son tug-of-war ensues and the eventual winner comes as a surprise.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

"Here Comes the Cat" is an American-Soviet collaboration in which the mouse spots his traditional enemy — cat. However, panic turns to relief when it is discovered the benign cat is bearing a wheel of cheese.

Full-color, full-page illustrations by Vladimir Vagin depict the friendly reception and the cat heads into the sunset. The illustrations are busy with bilingual word balloons that at first are a little hard to read. Unfamiliarity with the Soviet pronunciations will inhibit some readers.

But, the illustrations' colors are vivid and give excitement to the minimal text of author Frank Asch.

The details of town and country mouse civilizations add to the growing tension and give both texture and content to the story.

A bit of a comic twist story, it is also a vehicle to awaken small children to such issues as prejudice, intolerance, cold wars and world peace in a positive framework. The hardcover book from Scholastic is a good one-on-one read-aloud book for sharing.

Book discusses idiot savants

Copley News Service

"Extraordinary People — Understanding 'Idiot Savants'" by Darold A. Treffert, M.D.; Harper & Row; 291 pages; $17.95.

Jedediah Buxton was unable to write his own name, but he was handy at figures. He was once asked: "In a body whose three sides are 23,145,789 yards, 5,642,732 yards and 54,965 yards, how many cubicle ⅛ of an inch exist?" Five hours later his computerlike brain came up with the correct 28-digit answer — and he could give it backward or forward.

This is just one of many remarkable mental feats related in Treffert's book about people who seem hopelessly retarded in every aspect except one.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 5, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You discover some interesting secrets about yourself. Tune in to your newfound psychic reserves and success will come more easily. Faith and fortitude will give you the edge in a competition for cash or romance. You make rapid progress in August and again in December. A desire for greater freedom manifests itself in new intellectual pursuits. The ideal partner will respect your need to be independent.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: TV commentator Bill Moyers, actor Chad Allen, Mexican folk hero Pancho Villa, "Hopalong Cassidy" star William Boyd, hockey's Andre Lacroix, director Tony Richardson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A young person appreciates your financial generosity but needs emotional support, too. Set a good example. Questionable business practices will attract the wrong sort of attention. Stick to basic values!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A friend helps you get out of a rut and cope with new surroundings. Show your appreciation by keeping this person's confidences. Discretion is a valuable commodity. Do not tell everything you know.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seek the advice of someone you trust when crafting a plan for furthering your education or landing a job. Real estate transactions could occupy your thoughts. Do what you can to improve property values.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A very busy day lies ahead. Making the best of an impossible situation will result in someone's behaving better toward you. You receive new rewards for past deeds. Show a becoming modesty.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keeping a firm hold on your emotions will benefit you when dealing with people in the workplace. Hobbies are best reserved for a rainy day. Put employer's needs ahead of your personal preferences.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Children play an important role in everything you do now. People are observing you whether or not you know it. Stay on your toes! The alliances you make this month will last.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Look forward to a more exciting romantic relationship full of affection and happy times. You would be wise to heed a message you get today. Do nothing to upset an influential associate's applecart.

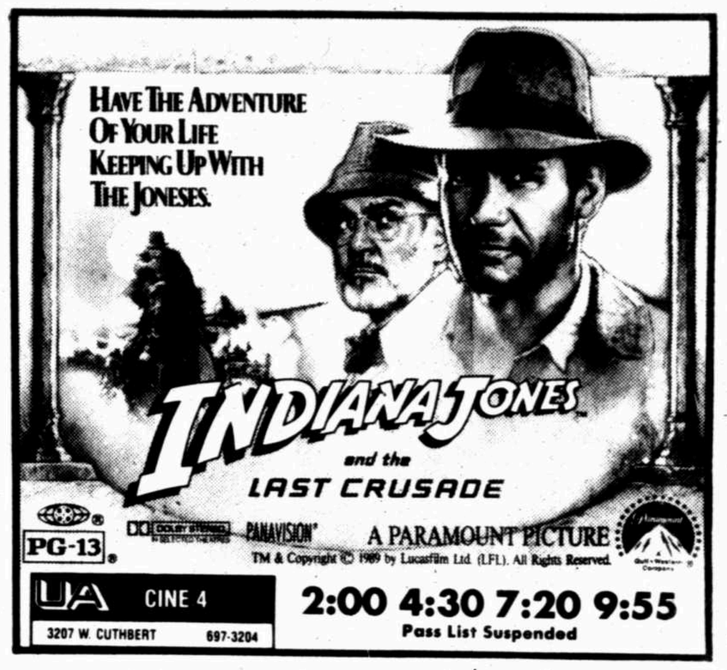

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Point yourself in the direction of success. Pondering over ideas or suggestions too long could let others move ahead of you. It is time to take action! Go forward with confidence.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A fantastic offer may be in the wings. Do not get depressed if your recent romantic pursuits have come to naught. Someone specal is about to appear on the scene. Dress elegantly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Take advantage of a lucky break that comes from another person's efforts. Someone will recommend you for bigger and better things where business is concerned. Show your appreciation at an appropriate time.

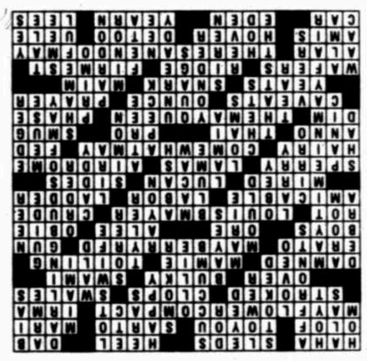

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Finish up projects and fulfill your commitments. You have a lot to look forward to, thanks to someone's love and understanding. Be good to those closest to your heart. Show more tenderness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Circumstances beyond your control open the door to a most satisfying and unusual relationship. Competition provides a strong stimulus at work. Use "the personal touch" to attract new clients and customers. Offer special services.

The bidding:

Opening lead: Jack of ♡

There are some contracts you can't guarantee. All you can do is take your best line and hope for a favorable lie of the cards.

Even in expert circles there is great disagreement about the correct opening bid when you hold five spades and five clubs. Obviously, South was among those who believed in opening one spade, and it got him to game in quick time.

West led the top of his heart sequence, and declarer was not thrilled with his prospects. It would seem that he had to lose three club tricks and the ace of trumps. But he saw a possibility of an endplay if he could eliminate the side suits and the defenders could not unscramble their club tricks.

Declarer won the opening lead, cashed the ace of diamonds and overtook the queen of diamonds with the king—a vital stratagem in his scheme. Next, he eliminated the diamonds by ruffing dummy's remaining card in the suit.

Declarer had done all he could—the rest was in the lap of the gods. He exited with a trump and a prayer, and the fates smiled on him.

In with the ace of spades, West could not lead a red card—that would allow declarer to discard a club from dummy while ruffing in hand. But as it happened, a club was no better. East could win two tricks in the suit, but the clubs were blocked. His forced red-suit return presented declarer with a ruff-sluff and his contract.
