White House-Schwarzkopf flap erupts

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Wednesday that the allied commander in the Persian Gulf, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, was wrong in saying that the president ended the war when Schwarzkopf wanted to carry out the total destruction of Iraq's forces in the war zone.

The unusual public rebuke of the highly popular four-star general was the first sign of public disagreement between the civilian leadership and the military command.

It came when the Bush administration is increasingly anxious about the situation in Iraq and concerned about criticism that the United States missed an opportunity to remove Saddam Hussein from power.

The stern reaction from the White House to the general's remarks in a television interview ap-

Refugees relate atrocities by Iraqis

SAFWAN, Iraq (NYT) — Thousands of war-weary refugees who poured into a newly opened U.S. Army-run camp on the border Wednesday told of atrocities by Iraqi troops crushing a rebellion in the south against President Saddam Hussein.

The Iraqi government appears to have ruthlessly put down the resistance in Basra and other largely Shiite Muslim cities and towns in the south, judging from the accounts of the refugees, who told of napalm and chemical weapons, people hanged from electricity poles, bodies dragged through the street behind tanks, and patients and doctors slain in hospitals.

As refugees pushed through the gates of a construction-company compound and long lines formed in the dust and hot sun at a tent set up to register newcomers, First Lt.

For people who struggle to keep their blood cholesterol down, it can be unnerving to hear about individuals who do so with ease no matter what they eat. Those who struggle might want to stop reading now. For according to a report published today, there is an 88-year-old man in Denver who has eaten 25 eggs a day for the past 15 years, with no apparent ill effects. This comes to 5,300 milligrams of cholesterol a day, 5,000 more than what is recommended for ordinary Americans. Yet the man's cholesterol level is a reasonable 200 milligrams (per 100 milliliters of blood serum) and he has no clinical evidence of serious atherosclerosis.

Aldo Ray dies

SAN FRANCISCO — Aldo Ray, the burly, gravel-voiced actor who left a constable's job for Hollywood and starring roles in a string of combat epics, died Wednesday of complications from throat cancer and pneumonia. He was 64. Ray died at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Martinez, about 40 miles east of San Francisco, according to hospital officials. He was admitted on Feb. 19. Ray, who appeared in more than 60 motion pictures, often played a non-commissioned officer in war films, but he also appeared in many non-combat roles, sharing billing with screen legends such as Humphrey Bogart, Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn.

Congressional pressures dog INS

By Dan Freedman

Third in a four-part series.

FROM THE BORDER

WASHINGTON — In 1955, the Immigration and Naturalization Service set up four regional offices to ride roughshod over wayward local INS district offices.

By logic, the headquarters of the Eastern Region, encompassing 13 Atlantic coast states from Maine to Virginia, should have gone to a big city with lots of immigrants — New York, Philadelphia or Boston.

Instead, it went to Burlington, Vt. — 65 miles south of the somnolent Canadian border.

Why there? Because the late Sen. George Aiken, a Republican powerhouse from Vermont, wanted it there.

Thirty-six years later, with the INS under pressure to overhaul its management and financial structure, Aiken's successor, Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., is flexing his political muscles to guarantee that the regional headquarters not only stays in Burlington but keeps its current power.

In an exchange of letters with INS Commissioner Gene McNary last year, Leahy said he would "need to be convinced" that any shift of the headquarters "will work to anyone's best interest." McNary, who had wanted to downgrade Burlington and other regional headquarters, assured him that "we have no intention" of making such a move.

■ Inspector shortages/4A

Congress subjects many government agencies to similar pressures. INS officials, however, say the Burlington case is just one illustration of the difficulties the service faces as it restructures itself.

In recent years, members of the Oklahoma congressional delegation derailed an INS bid to close a two-person Border Patrol outpost in Miami, Okla., while Rep. Ron Marlenee, R-Mont., did the same for a Border Patrol station along Montana's windswept border with Canada.

On several occasions, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., has prevented the INS from reducing the hours that Arizona's border stations are open.

The political rope swings both ways.

House defies court threat, rejects plan for schools

■ Conference committee bill receives no support from Midland-area representatives

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Defying a court threat to cut off school funding Monday, the Texas House has rejected compromise school finance legislation that opponents said costs too much and smacks of socialism.

Although House Speaker Gib Lewis of Fort Worth said efforts are being made to resuscitate the bill, the House will not meet again until Tuesday — a day after the Texas Supreme Court's April Fools' Day deadline for action.

A 9 a.m. Monday hearing has been set before District Judge Scott McCown, who is under orders from the high court to carry through with an injunction to stop state funding if the Legislature has not approved a plan.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, sponsor of the original Senate bill, did not agree with House amendments to his bill several weeks ago, and the Senate agreed to ask for a House-Senate conference committee to work out differences. The Senate approved the conference committee bill Tuesday, but the House killed it Wednesday.

Sales-tax revenues show steady growth

■ Extra 1991 revenue may result in a break for taxpayers, Councilman John Castro says.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Sales tax revenues for the city of Midland have shown steady improvement since 1987, possibly indicating that the local economy is stabilizing, a city official said Wednesday.

Projections for 1991 show that the city may bring in up to $400,000 more in sales tax receipts than was expected, said Troy Gifford, the city's financial director.

Councilman John Castro, meanwhile, said the extra revenue may result in a break for taxpayers.

With two major capital projects and higher city employee salaries looming, the city will need the extra money to hold off a property tax increase, Castro said.

Sales tax revenues dropped during the mid-1980s as oil prices plunged. The 1 percent sales tax brought the city only $6.6 million in 1986, compared with $9.6 million in 1982 and $8.6 million in 1985.

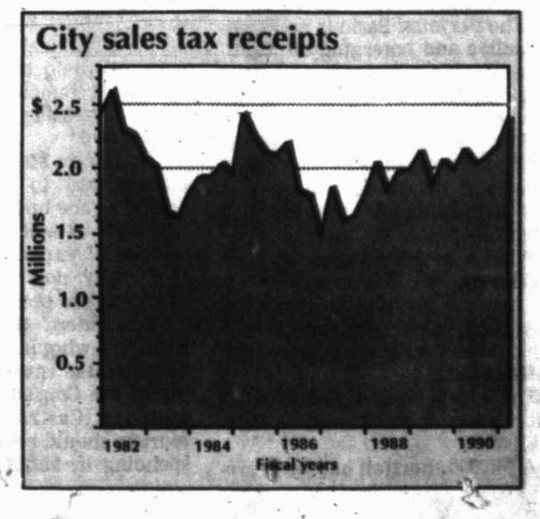

The revenues fluctuated wildly, sometimes from quarter to quarter, from 1982 to January 1987, which marked the start of a gradual climb to this year.

Gifford blamed the swings on the vacillating tides of optimism and pessimism in the oil patch. That brought flurries and stalls of spending, he said.

This year's annual receipts are expected to total $8.8 million, the highest since 1982 and up from $8.3 million last year, Gifford said.

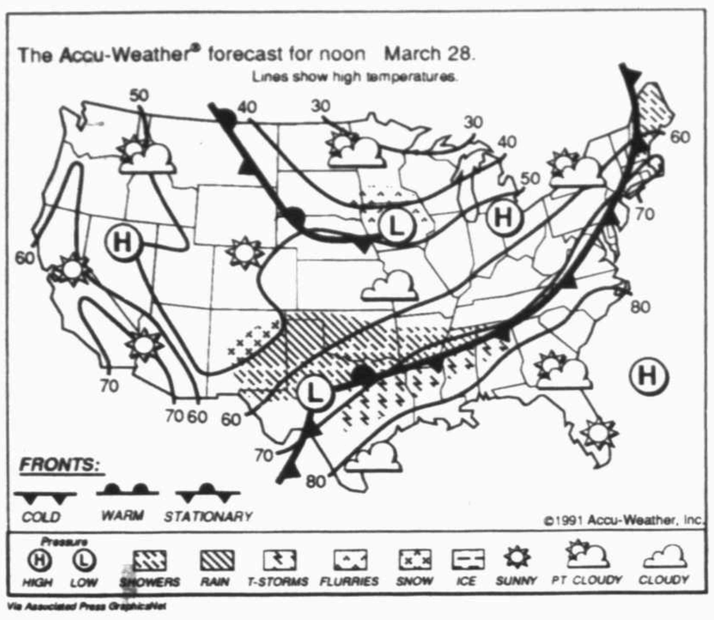

Although revenues have had quarterly ups and downs since 1987, there has been a steady upward trend overall.

INS: Policy battles impede effectiveness

(From 1A)

When they receive orders from Washington they don't like, some district directors have invoked the names of local members of Congress and threatened reprisals against INS headquarters officials, one INS source said.

Besides such crass political machinations, there is a larger uncertainty over U.S. immigration policy.

The INS is caught between conservatives who want it to be more restrictive and liberals who want it less so. Political divisiveness, in addition to political interference, has exacerbated management weaknesses at the INS.

"The American public is not clear on what it wants the INS to do," said Denver INS District Director Joseph Greene. "It wants us to keep out criminals, but you get a single instance of the refugee with six kids who can't return to Guatemala because of civil war — that's going to pull at a lot of heartstrings."

This battle between the let-'em-in and the keep-'em-out forces has dogged the INS throughout its 100-year history.

The service was born in 1891 amid the pandemonium of large migrations from Eastern and Southern Europe.

By the 1920s, an increasingly conservative Congress clamped down on the numbers, shifting the agency's role from pro- to anti-immigrant. The U.S. Border Patrol, aimed at keeping illegal aliens out, became part of the immigration service in 1924.

The approach of World War II brought new concerns about subversion by aliens loyal to axis powers. In 1940, the service shifted to the Justice Department, putting an even greater accent on its enforcement role.

During the 1960s, U.S. immigration policies changed sharply as economic and political pressures in Latin America and Asia produced powerful incentives for people there to emigrate.

Before 1960, immigrants from Latin America and Asia made up 20 percent of the total coming to this country. By the early 1970s, immigration from those regions had risen to 73 percent of the total.

Traditionally, anyone who wanted an INS career started in the Border Patrol, INS sources said. As they rose through the ranks, officers retained views of U.S. immigration policy colored by their experiences in border "line watch." Many had come to regard immigrants as a threat, not a constituency to be served, the sources said.

Leonel Castillo, President Carter's choice to head the INS from 1977 to 1979, tried to buck the tide. He tried to build up the INS's neglected service side and apply human rights standards to immigration policy.

But like the Carter administration itself, Castillo's tenure at the INS suffered from the perception "that we weren't standing tall in the world," said Doris Meissner, an INS official at the time who served as acting commissioner from 1981 to 1982. "It was a bad time."

The Carter administration appeared helpless against a tide of Haitian refugees, and the 1980 Mariel boatlift people — large numbers of Cubans, many of whom turned out to be criminal convicts and mental patients. President Reagan came into office in 1981 promising to get tough on immigration.

First he pumped in money. The INS budget rose from a $349 million in 1980 to $594 million by 1986. Then he appointed Alan C. Nelson as INS Commissioner in 1982. Nelson pledged that America would "regain control of our borders."

Immigration advocates have criticized the Reagan-era approach as thinly disguised anti-immigrant racism and hysteria. With debate reaching a fever pitch, the service tackled the 1986 immigration law — a compromise between tougher anti-alien enforcement and amnesty for millions of illegals.

Legalization proved to be a relative success for the INS. It was able to handle more than 3 million applications and grant legal status to some 1.7 million formerly illegal aliens.

On the law enforcement side, the immigration law authorized Nelson to increase the Border Patrol by 50 percent to 4,450 agents. But Congress gave him only half of what he needed to hire that number.

Nelson hired them all anyway. He gambled that Congress would eventually appropriate the whole amount after all.

When it didn't, Nelson quickly ordered a hiring freeze and siphoned off $30 million to cover the extra Border Patrol officers from the service's computers and communications budget lines. Nelson then tried to fill that gap with money collected in fees from immigrants applying for various INS benefits.

The juggling act prompted Attorney General Dick Thornburgh to write in a June 13, 1989, memo: "It has become apparent that there are no fiscal controls in place at INS at this time."

Before Reagan, INS regional commissioners were career immigration officers. Because a few seemed lackluster, the Justice Department, saying it wanted "new blood," in 1983 began for the first time selecting political appointees for those positions.

One such appointee, Stephen H. Martin, a well-connected GOP contributor who ran the service's Southern Region from 1986 until last year, was known as "the Banana Republic General" among his subordinates for the quasi-military way he ran his office.

Martin resigned last April during a congressional investigation on whether he improperly funneled money from critical operations funds into a new $4.9 million regional headquarters in Dallas. His critics said the building had lavish furnishings and a state-of-the-art gym.

From Baton Rouge, La. where he is an energy company executive, Martin said criticism of his performance as regional commissioner comes mostly from "people who were disgruntled ... (and) didn't want change."

He said he had little to do with the move to the new regional headquarters, and that in any case, "it was definitely not a luxurious setting."

REFUGEES: Tales of chemical weapons emerge

(From 1A)

Michael Bacon, a civil affairs officer, said: "This could get enormous. We get reports from the north that there are people on foot, people in buses and trucks headed here."

"Overnight, we started out with just a small number and we're up to 4,000 right now," said Lt. Col. John Kalb, commander of a tank battalion in the 3rd Armored Division, in charge of setting up the camp. "And they're still coming."

Basra, Iraq's second-largest city and the scene of fierce street fighting, has been quiet for the last few nights, said American soldiers and officers at a checkpoint six miles or so up the road, with none of the flashes of gunfire and explosions that had been lighting up the night. It appeared, they said, that the government was back in control.

Two deserters from the Republican Guard, the government's best force, who surrendered at the checkpoint on Wednesday morning, said they had hid with relatives and escaped because the guardsmen were being pulled back in the direction of Baghdad.

Among the regular crop of deserters at the checkpoint Wednesday — it averages about 50 a day — was a brigadier general assigned to the guard.

Many of the refugees who arrived here were from the Shiite Muslim strongholds of Najaf and Karbala and from Nasiriya, all of which, they said, had been heavily attacked by government forces.

Although Shiites represent about 55 percent of Iraq's population, the government is dominated by a group based on clans from Saddam's hometown of Tikrit, who are Sunni Muslims.

"On the tanks it was painted 'No Shiites after today,'" Mohammed Safaa of Najaf said.

Najaf, a city revered by Shiite Muslims as the burial place of Imam Ali, son-in-law of the Prophet Mohammed and founder of the minority branch of Islam, was also the site of religious schools where Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the late Iranian leader, and Ayatollah Mohammed Bakr Sadr, executed by Saddam in 1980.

FUNDING: House to reconsider its vote, Lewis says

(From 1A)

Parker may ask the Senate to reconsider its vote that rejected the amendments and then approve the amended bill. If the Senate does so, the bill would go directly to Gov. Ann Richards for her signature.

If Parker does not ask for reconsideration, or the Senate does not approve the amended bill, the future of the state's public school system would be the hands of the Texas Supreme Court.

The court, which had ruled the current method of financing schools is unconstitutional, had set next Monday as a deadline for the Legislature to come up with a new plan.

District Judge Scott McCown previously had scheduled a hearing for 9 a.m. Monday to see what progress the Legislature had made. If the Senate does not approve the amended bill, the state is expected to ask for an extension on the deadline, while plantiffs in the case will ask the district court to carry out the Supreme Court's injunction against the system and order the state to stop sending monthly checks to local schools.

If the district court denies those motions, they will go immediately to the Supreme Court.

The next checks from the state are not scheduled to be mailed until April 25. Wealthy schools with high income from local property taxes probably could remain open through the rest of the school year, and some schools could borrow money, but schools in less wealthy districts might not have enough to pay teachers.

Craddick said the cost was too high, and no one could really tell what the full eventual cost would be for the bill. He also said the legislation clearly is unconstitutional, and would have set up a new bureaucracy in the form of county taxing districts.

He said he would like to see the House leadership allow Rep. John Culberson, R-Houston, bring his proposed constitutional amendment to the House floor for debate. The amendment, if approved by voters, would say that the whatever the Legislature does in school financing is constitutional.

Craddick said he prefers the current financing system, with the state providing some money and local districts being able to raise their own money through property taxes. He said does not agree that the current system is unfair or discriminates against property-poor school districts. "I don't think the courts will shut off funding," he said. "If they do, they can only shut off state funding. Checks went out today for next month. We don't have a problem until the 25th of April. Between now and then, we can come up with a solution to the problem."

COURT: Defendents are judged by their peers

(From 1A)

Several defendants were put on trial by a jury of their peers for MIP (Minor In Possession) Class C misdemeanor offenses.

Sentences consist of attending life-management classes, performing community service hours and serving jury duty.

The court gives young offenders a taste of the judicial system while allowing them to make restitution in a form other than paying fines or serving sentences handed down by the adult criminal justice system.

It also allows offenders to keep offenses off their records.

"Teen-agers don't always realize the import of what they are doing," said 238th District Court Judge John Hyde. "In Teen Court they get a second chance."

Hyde recently presided over a Teen Court session. The judge said he volunteers his time on the bench in a rotation schedule with other judges and attorneys.

Hyde said that many of the adolescents who go through the court are "basically good kids."

"They have grown-up bodies before they have grown-up minds," he said. Hyde believes that admitting wrongdoing before one's peers acts as a wake-up call to "get their lives turned around."

Robert Wiley, 17, a courtroom volunteer and Lee High School senior, agreed.

"Teen Court is a rude awakening for some kids," Wiley said. "It's certainly embarrassing to have to stand up in front of everyone and admit that you did something wrong."

Wiley, who alternates serving as defense and prosecuting attorney, said Teen Court is often the "end of the process" for teens in trouble.

"Usually by the time the offenders get to court, they have already been punished by their parents," he said. "The court itself is not set up to punish. It is set up to rehabilitate teen-agers and give them a second chance."

Once sentenced to community-service hours, offenders can take their pick of more than 40 organizations to serve. Tasks are as diverse as working with animals, tending to the terminally ill, and cleaning up stadiums or costume shops.

Working for various community-service agencies teaches offenders responsibility, and some short-term sentences may turn into long-term jobs, according to Mary Beck, executive director of Teen Court.

The courtroom setting also serves as a training ground for students interested in law careers or debate, said Wiley, who is considering a future as an attorney.

Wiley said that serving as a Teen Court attorney made him nervous at first. "I wasn't nervous for myself, either," he said. "I was nervous about hurting the defendant's case if I made a mistake."

Ms. Beck said the theory of Midland Teen Court — modeled after Odessa's Teen Court and operated by the Junior League of Midland — is "to turn peer pressure into a positive experience."

"The teen-agers find out that some of their actions were not only unacceptable to their parents, they were unacceptable to their peers," Ms. Beck said.

She said the court meets three Mondays a month year-round, and that the courthouse lobby is often packed with hundreds of teen-agers waiting to take the oath on any given night the court is in session.

"We average about 180 offenders per night," she said, noting that the court moves swiftly, with some cases starting with a jury at the same time another jury deliberates a prior case.

While justice is swift, serving the sentence takes time and is intended to give teen-agers pause about their offenses.

"And, hopefully, being in the courtroom setting will convince the kids that they don't want to be in a real courtroom in front of an adult jury in the future," Ms. Beck said.

"Usually what we see are good kids who have made a bad decision," she said. "And many of their bad decisions were made due to peer pressure. We try to turn that around and use peer pressure to influence them to make good decisions."

Hyde agreed. "They don't realize the importance of their actions or what the consequences will be," he said.

"A lot of kids who come through the courts have made mistakes because they just didn't know any better," Wiley said. "They deserve a second chance."

REVENUES: Economy stabilizes

(From 1A)

"We're not back to that crazy boom cycle level yet," Gifford said. "But it's probably been a long time since that curve had this type of one-way progression one way or another.

"I have cautious optimism that the base in the community is healthy."

One obvious explanation for the improvement, he said, is a larger revenue base than existed in 1987.

"It's a considerably broader base than it was," he said.

In addition, the Midland economy is less influenced by the uncertain business of exploring and wildcatting for oil, Gifford said.

"The Permian Basin is no longer an active and emerging oil field," he said. "It's a maturing oil field. The emphasis on exploration and wildcatting has diminished."

That means the local oil economy is more affected by worldwide petroleum events that the day-to-day happenings in the Permian Basin oil patch, he said.

What a healthier sales tax base means for City Hall is a more stable income for the general revenue fund, which has fed off municipal reserves since at least 1983, Gifford said.

The city's budget fell $500,000 short last year and $2 million short in 1989.

A $40,000 shortfall had been projected for 1991, but the city added two major capital projects — totaling about $1.1 million — through the course of the fiscal year.

The projects were a $400,000 refurbishing of the Midland Police-Communications Center and a $700,000 overhaul and drainage project on Wadley Avenue.

Castro said the between $200,000 and $400,000 in unexpected sales tax revenues this year will come in handy when figuring next year's budget and tax rate.

In addition to the two capital projects, the city also is facing an additional $650,000 in additional payroll costs next year. A 3 percent across-the-board pay increase will go into effect Monday, costing the city about $325,000 in 1991.

The additional sales tax revenues will help offset those costs and make councilmen think twice about increasing property taxes, Castro said.

"That extra $400,000 will give us more money to get us closer to balancing the budget," he said. "It will help us add more money to the pot of expenses.

"I really don't want to see a property tax increase."

In addition, the council may bank on a whopping sales tax revenue increase caused by the opening of the Confederate Air Force museum, Castro said. Museum tourism should result in increased spending in Midland, he said.

The price of the new IBM laptop computer was erroneously reported in the Business/oil section of Tuesday's edition. The price should have read $5,595.

Regarding a separate story in Wednesday's edition, the new 54-inch drainage main under Wadley Avenue will not replace the existing 36-inch drain in the area. Both drains will serve the area between Whitney and Godfrey streets.

FLAP: Bush, Schwarzkopf disagree about war-ending recommendation peared intended to prevent further comments from military commanders that might reflect politically on Bush's judgment and actions in stopping the fighting.

Schwarzkopf, asked by the interviewer, David Frost, about Bush's decision to stop offensive operations, called it "a very courageous decision" adding: "Frankly, my recommendation had been, you know, continue the march. I mean we had them in a rout."

The interview was broadcast Wednesday night on public television stations.

White House officials said they were baffled by the general's assertion that he was reined in by Bush at a time when he wanted to continue the battle.

"The record shows clearly that he was in on this decision and he did not oppose it," an official said.

Administration officials denied that there was any political motivation in their rebuke of Schwarzkopf, whose appeal as a candidate has been the subject of admiring speculation.

The officials made no secret of their judgment that his remarks were an unseemly commentary on the president's decision making, and they revealed that Gen. Colin L. Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, had relayed earlier warnings to Schwarzkopf to lower his public profile.

Pentagon officials suggested that the general's remarks may have reflected a personal preference stated in conversations with his immediate superior, Powell, in the hours before Bush held his final consultations on Feb. 27. Those consultations with the military command and war cabinet led to his cease-fire announcement.

The general's remarks also may reflect the frustration of the professional military that Iraqi helicopter gunships have been flying punishing raids against rebel forces in Iraq even after Schwarzkopf on March 17 sent his deputy, Maj. Gen. Robert Johnson, to warn the Iraqis to stop flying helicopter combat missions anywhere in Iraq because he considered such flights a threat to coalition forces.

The White House made clear Tuesday that Bush was not going to get more deeply involved in Iraq's civil strife by using force to back up Schwarzkopf's warning to Iraq against armed helicopter flights.

Also, a Pentagon official said, "It took us several days to realize that we let too many of the Iraqis get away."

Apart from those potential points of friction, administration officials said Schwarzkopf had been warned on several occasions in recent months to restrain his public comments and limit the number of personal interviews he was sitting for during preparations for the war.

"He was basically told to lower his profile because eventually his words would get him in trouble," said a White House adviser.

An administration official called Schwarzkopf's remarks naive and said that the general had expressed several different views on the topic in interviews.

In the interview with Frost, the general said of the cease-fire decision: "We could have completely closed the door and made it in fact a battle of annihilation. And the president, you know, made the decision that, you know, we should stop at a given time, at a given place that did leave some escape routes open for them to get back out."

INS inspector shortage causes long lines

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

SAN YSIDRO, Calif. — Here at the nation's busiest land border crossing, traffic is backed up as much as two hours.

Even so, only seven of the entry station's 16 lanes are open.

The others are closed because the Immigration and Naturalization Service lacks the personnel to perform the tedious chore of determining whether vehicle passengers can enter the United States legally.

Port director Rolland J. Johnson can do little more than sit in his office perched above the inspection booths and look through field glasses at the traffic snaking back into the streets of Tijuana. "At times like this, we say the waiting time is 60-minutes-plus," he says with a sigh.

Federal spending for land inspections has risen a modest 10 percent since 1985. Yet in one year alone, from 1988 to 1989, traffic through San Ysidro and the San Diego area's other five ports shot up 21 percent.

The picture is not much brighter at the nation's airports. Although funds for airport inspections have nearly tripled since 1985, the time spent waiting in line at places such as Seattle's Sea-Tac International Airport can be nightmarish.

Jim Broz, an airport inspector in Seattle who is president of the INS union local there, said the number of inspectors has not risen in two years while airport traffic has jumped 15 percent. Foreign passport holders often have to wait 2 1/2 hours to get through immigration, he said.

In Southern California, Carlos Eiserman, former president of the inspectors' union in the San Diego area, says the inspection workforce there has dropped from 157 last year to 105 now.

"There isn't much understanding at the top of what goes on at the port," Eiserman said, because inspectors are told to "flush" the traffic — speed up inspections — whenever INS bigwigs visit the station.

Ray Dudley, INS spokesman in San Antonio, said that in the past five years, the number of people crossing Laredo's two bridges into the United States has risen more than 60 percent to 30.4 million last year. In that time, the service added only one person to its Laredo inspection force, Dudley said.

"Everyone says the INS is the stepchild of the Department of Justice," said Rafael Flores, an INS inspector in Laredo and vice president of the inspectors' union local there. "We take it a step further and say that inspection is the bastard child of the INS."

INS Commissioner Gene McNary blames Congress for the inspector shortage, noting in an internal memo that lawmakers rebuffed his request for more inspectors last year and instead cut 500 inspector positions out of the INS budget. For next year, McNary is asking Congress for 135 additional inspectors.

Numerous government audits have cited the INS for excessive spending on overtime, a system that permits some inspector to earn between $10,000 and $20,000 extra a year.

But Eiserman and others in INS say that overtime is necessary because the service lacks the staff to permit inspectors to work a normal 40-hour week.

This year the INS plans to experiment with fees and express lanes at several crossing points on the Mexican and Canadian borders.

Inspection stations at airports and seaports already receive funds from the $5 fees that the INS charges incoming international passengers.

With the number of people arriving at all ports going up by one third on average since 1985, the fees have enabled the service to triple the number of air and sea port inspectors.

NFL Films to produce video of war highlights

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — NFL Films has gone from the playing field to the battlefield — in the Persian Gulf. It is putting together highlights of the Persian Gulf War for a documentary co-produced by the Pentagon.

NFL Films plans to release the 60-minute documentary by late summer.

"I don't want to say that war is the same as football," Steve Sabol, president of NFL Films, said Tuesday. "But our talent as filmmakers can very easily be transferred to this sort of venture."

For the past six months, NFL Films producers have been in Saudi Arabia, interviewing the troops. The production will include footage of bombing missions and ground assaults on the Iraqi army.

Sabol said viewers should expect booming narration and orchestral music along with the declassified military footage.

"Football is obviously the military's sport of choice," Sabol said. "The television newscasters certainly portrayed it that way, and you heard references to football throughout the war. President Bush even called it 'his Super Bowl.'"

A peace activist was dismayed by the project.

"I can imagine at least two problems," said Leslie Cagan, coordinator for the National Campaign for Peace in the Middle East. "First, the glorification of war, thereby reinforcing the notion that the U.S. has the right to intervene anywhere, and that might makes right.

"Second, there's the message that war is a game. It reinforces the notion that war is a viable, workable, common-sense way to solve international problems."

Video copies will be sent to more than 700,000 U.S. troops. The company also is negotiating with the Public Broadcasting Service for use of the footage as part of a 10-week series.

U.S. considering gulf peace talks

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Bush administration is exploring the possibility of convening regional peace talks, with the United States and the Soviet Union as hosts, that would serve as the opening for direct negotiations between Israel and its Arab neighbors, Western and Middle East diplomats said Wednesday.

While Secretary of State James A. Baker III has been very tight lipped about what he is trying to do in his talks with Middle East leaders, an approach that appears to be getting a lot of consideration would be for the United States and the Soviet Union to be hosts for a ceremonial opening "event" that might be the political equivalent of President Anwar el-Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in 1977.

The event being considered would be a meeting in which the two superpowers would invite Israel, Palestinian representatives, Egypt, Jordan and, ideally, Syria and the six Arab gulf states — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, Oman, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates — to a ceremonial opening that would be followed by direct talks.

The Americans "want to produce some kind of engagement and the critical question is how," said a Western diplomat familiar with the secret discussions.

American-Soviet "sponsorship of regional talks is one idea being considered," he said. But the diplomat cautioned that the Bush administration had not yet settled on exactly which approach it wants to push.

"Whether anything will work is too early to tell," the Western diplomat said.

Baker did not broach the idea in his meetings with Middle East leaders two weeks ago, but confined himself instead to discussing confidence-building measures that might make it easier for Arab and Israeli leaders to attend such talks by changing the political climate.

Baker and his Policy Planning Staff director, Dennis Ross, have discussed the idea in follow-up conversations with various Middle East officials in the last few days, and neither Israelis nor Arabs have committed themselves one way or another, the diplomats said.

Earlier this week, Baker saw Osama al-Baz, national security adviser to President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, and Adnan Abu Odeih, foreign policy adviser to King Hussein of Jordan. Ross met Tuesday with Hanan Ashrawi, a West Bank Palestinian professor who was in the delegation of Palestinians that Baker met with during his recent visit to Jerusalem. Israel's minister of justice, Dan Meridor, one of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's closest advisers, has also been visiting Washington this week.

In the present administration deliberations, after the opening the parties would break into separate Israeli-Arab, Israeli-Palestinian negotiations — much the way Israel, Egypt and Syria did after the 1973 U.S.-Soviet Geneva conference.

The confidence-building measures that Baker discussed on his trip to the Middle East would be intended to provide the participants with the political cover they would need to attend and to buy some time.

Some Arab states, particularly the gulf Arabs, have expressed some unease about going to such a regional meeting as long as President Saddam Hussein of Iraq is in power or alive.

Ideally, confidence-building gestures by Israel to ease the pressure of its occupation of Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and to reaffirm its commitment to implementation of Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, might be used by the Palestinians and the Arab states to justify taking part in such a conference.

And if Baker can persuade the Arab countries to move toward ending their state of belligerency with Israel, and possibly all or part of their boycott, the Israeli government could better justify its participation in such talks.

Virginia governor explores run for presidency in 1992

WASHINGTON (NYT) — L. Douglas Wilder, who has made no secret of his White House ambitions since taking office as governor of Virginia almost 15 months ago, filed papers Wednesday to form a committee of advisers who will explore his prospects as a 1992 presidential candidate.

Although Wilder's aides say he has not firmly decided to enter the race for the Democratic nomination, his action Wednesday allows him to begin raising money for a campaign.

Fred S. Eiland, spokesman for the Federal Election Commission, with which Wilder filed his organizational papers, said the commission regarded the filing as "a statement of candidacy."

■ More national news/6B

Wilder, the nation's first elected black governor, is the second Democratic presidential aspirant to take this step. Former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts formed an exploratory committee earlier this month. Traveling this week across Iowa, whose caucuses next February will provide the first test of the presidential campaign, Tsongas made clear that he intended to run.

Wilder, in a letter delivered with his papers to the Federal Election Commission Wednesday, said the Wilder for President Exploratory Committee was being created "for the purpose of exploring any potential candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the Office of President of the United States of America."

Asked later by reporters whether he would make a commitment to run if his advisers viewed his support as strong, he said, "If they were to come back and bring that kind of report to me, I would say, 'Let's talk.'"

Wilder, who is limited by Virginia law to one four-year term as governor, has now seized an opportunity for public attention that was afforded him by a vacuum resulting from Democrats' reluctance to declare their candidacies while President Bush is enjoying immense popularity.

Further, he can now bolster his prospects to be picked as the vice-presidential nominee should he fail in reaching for the top of the ticket.

Like Tsongas, Wilder, 60, has already taken a swing through Iowa in one of many efforts to raise his national profile. Yet the filing Wednesday was the clearest signal of his intentions thus far.

Wilder's ascendancy in national politics is perceived by some Democratic operatives as a threat to the Rev. Jesse Jackson's position as the party's leading black politician. The governor, a former state senator and lieutenant governor, has contrasted his longtime government service with Jackson's relative lack of it.

A two-time presidential contender, Jackson gained his first elective office last November as the District of Columbia's non-voting representative to the United States Senate, a new city position.

"The candidacy of Doug Wilder puts Jesse Jackson out of business," asserted Raymond D. Strother, a Democratic consultant. "This is not a black candidate.

"This is a candidate who happens to be black and who was elected in Virginia by white voters. His appeal will be broad; it will be middle class."

Jackson was traveling late Wednesday, and his aides said he had no immediate comment about Wilder.

Potential Democratic presidential contenders in Congress do not have so great a need as Wilder to form exploratory committees, because their re-election organizations can continue raising money for future presidential campaigns.

Iraqi border refugees riot for food

SAFWAN, Iraq (AP) — Food riots erupted Wednesday in this hot, dusty border town filled with thousands of desperate Iraqis seeking refuge and political asylum.

Screaming, elderly women and wailing children were among the hundreds of people who stormed Saudi Arabian food trucks and fought for meal packages thrown into the street by both refugees and Saudi soldiers.

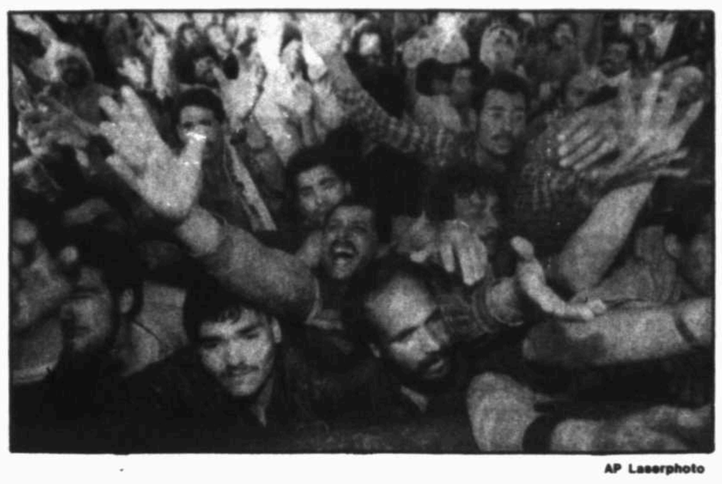

"We tried to be organized, but the people are just too hungry," said Maj. Youssef Ali Albouri of the Saudi military. "They see the food and they go crazy."

No serious injuries were reported, and the food was so plentiful that some people used wheelbarrows to cart away boxes of bread, cheese and canned food.

But the fighting marked the fourth straight day of mass chaos at food distribution points in Safwan, a war-battered town on the Iraq-Kuwait border.

Civilians deserted Safwan during the Gulf War, but thousands of former residents and refugees have been arriving daily as they flee civil unrest and food shortages in southern Iraq.

Rebel groups, made up mostly of Shiite Muslims, took control of many southern cities early this month in the aftermath of the Gulf War. But President Saddam Hussein's Republican Guard troops have recaptured all major cities in the past two weeks, using tanks, heavy artillery and helicopters dropping napalm, the refugees say.

AP Laserphoto

Safwan is in no condition to handle the huge volume of refugees.

Many buildings have been reduced to rubble and those still standing are bullet pocked. The sandy roads are littered with burned-out tanks and cars set against a backdrop of billowing black smoke from oil well fires raging in Kuwait's northern desert.

In the three previous days, refugees stormed and looted a post office and a school used by the U.S. military to hand out water, flour and meal packets. Because of the unrest, the military abandoned the sites, moving Wednesday to the grounds of a deserted construction company and calling in tanks to secure the area.

"I'm a tank battalion commander. I don't do this kind of thing for a living," said U.S. Lt. Col. John Kalb, who was supervising the orderly distribution of food to some 4,000 refugees.

"It's a very difficult situation here," said Kalb, of Bay Village, Ohio. "The United Nations is needed. These problems shouldn't just be left to the U.S."

But in the absence of a formal cease-fire in the Gulf War, there is no other party capable or willing to assist the refugees.

Kuwait, devastated by the Gulf War, does not want additional mouths to feed. The International Committee for the Red Cross has not been invited into Iraq, and expects the occupying American forces in southern Iraq to provide assistance.

The U.S. camp is intended as a temporary refugee site, but refugees say they will not return to government-controlled territory in Iraq unless Saddam is ousted.

"I fled from the devil," said Salim, who refused to give his last name. "Saddam will kill us in Iraq."

On the Kuwait side of the border, some 2,000 refugees, mostly Iraqis and Egyptians, are living in squatter shacks and receiving little food at a camp run by the Red Crescent, the main Muslim aid society.

Iran denies it's providing arms to Kurds, Shiites

TEHRAN, Iran (NYT) — President Hashemi Rafsanjani has categorically denied that Iran provided troops, arms or other kinds of military assistance to Iraqi opposition groups, saying the rebels neither need nor want Iranian intervention.

"The Iraqi people can do their own work," the Iranian leader was quoted as saying in an interview in the German weekly, Der Spiegel. "They do not wish for us to interfere because they would be accused of collaborating with a foreign nation."

Extensive transcripts of the interview, conducted at the end of last week, appeared Wednesday in all of the Iranian state-controlled Persian- and English-language papers.

Rafsanjani asserted that, many reports in the Western press notwithstanding, Iran was providing just humanitarian aid to more than 17,000 Iraqi refugees who have fled the fighting into his country.

"Our support has been restricted to giving shelter to those taking refuge in Iran or to helpless people," he said.

Asked whether Iran was providing weapons to Iraqi Shiite Muslim rebels fighting in the south, or to Kurdish guerrillas said to control vast sections of Iraq's north, the Iranian president insisted, "We are not sending any weapons."

He also denied that Iranians were fighting alongside rebels or troops opposed to President Saddam Hussein.

The Iranian president made these assertions before reports were published in the United States indicating that President Bush had decided not to intervene, but to permit Saddam to put down the rebellion in his country, rather than risk the disintegration of Iraq.

An Iranian government official said that whether or not Iran helped the rebels, the Iraqi opposition would prevail.

UN draft would hold Iraq liable for war damage

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Iraq would be liable for the environmental damage caused by war tactics such as torching oil wells and dumping oil into the Persian Gulf, under a measure forged Wednesday by leading Security Council members.

The United States, Britain, France, China and Soviet Union met in private to hash out the conditions Baghdad must meet to clear the way for a permanent cease-fire in the Gulf War.

The 20-page draft is the most complicated of the resolutions considered since Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. It would rank among the longest resolutions ever adopted by the Security Council.

A vote by the entire council is expected next week. The timing depends on how many amendments the non-aligned members of the council seek to soften the stern demands of the permanent five members.

The Soviet Union introduced some minor revisions in language relating to the trade and arms embargo, requiring that the draft be cabled to the other four capitals for approval.

Western diplomats said the amendments did not change any of the major provisions.

According to a text of the measure obtained by The Associated Press, Iraq would have to let U.N. experts destroy its chemical, biological and nuclear weapons and would still face an arms embargo under permanent cease-fire terms.

The embargo on conventional weapons, spare parts, technology and services would be maintained, but some purchases could be permitted later on the basis of need.

The Baghdad government would also have to renounce terrorism and promise it would not let terrorist groups operate from Iraq.

Once Iraq has agreed to all the conditions specified in the text, foreign troops would withdraw from Iraq and the U.N.-sanctioned economic embargo would be lifted.

The draft approved by the permanent five council members demands that Iraq and Kuwait "respect the inviolability of the international boundary" agreed upon in 1963, a provision sought by Kuwait.

The border has never been clearly marked, and over the decades the Iraqis encroached several miles into Kuwait. The 1963 border agreement put more of the Rumailah oil field on Kuwait's territory.

Iraq had claimed Kuwait was siphoning Iraqi oil from that field, and that was one of the disputes that led to the Iraqi invasion.

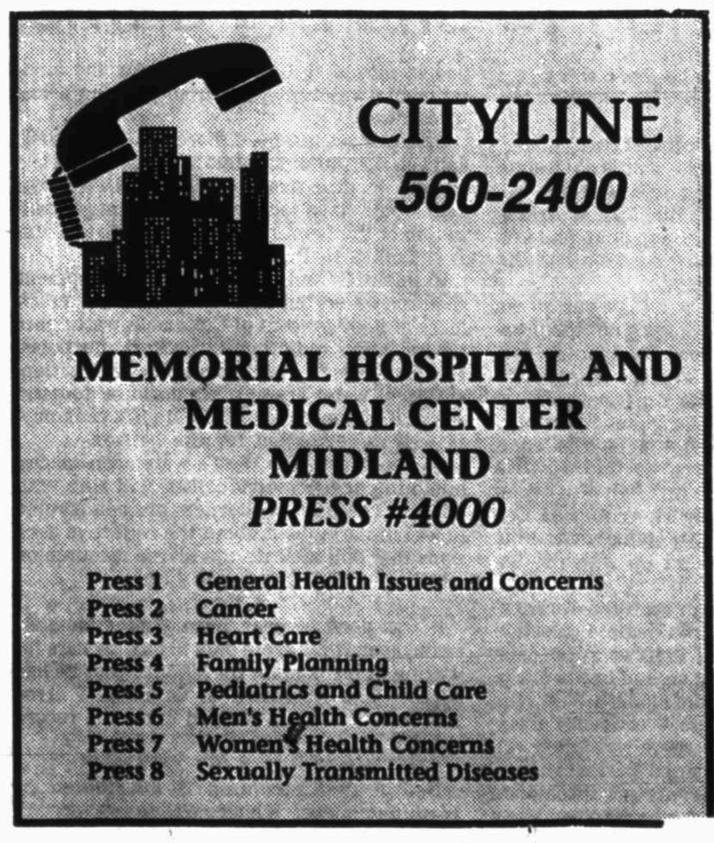

Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar would work with Iraq and Kuwait to demarcate the border.

He would also dispatch U.N. military observers to monitor the border, stationing them six miles inside Iraq and three miles inside Kuwait.

The measure demands that Iraq fulfill all previous U.N. resolutions, including provisions requiring it to return all Kuwaiti captives and prisoners of war, as well as gold, currency, art works, aircraft and other property seized during the occupation of Kuwait.

Flag compromise best for Lee, city

A compromise plan worked out by a 25-member committee appointed by the Midland Independent School District (MISD) board to resolve the controversy over the Rebel flag used by Robert E. Lee High School won't please either proponents or opponents of the flag 100 percent. Neither side received all they were seeking.

The solution that the MISD board approved on a 5-2 vote, however, appears best for the high school and best for the community. But that is what the word "compromise" means — both sides giving a little to arrive at a mutually acceptable solution.

The Confederate battle flag adopted by the MISD board in 1966 will remain a symbol of the high school, but only in a "historical context." It will be replaced at school functions by a new spirit symbol to be chosen by the Lee High School student body.

This compromise plan should be embraced by Midlanders as a way to put the racial divisiveness sparked by the flag controversy behind the high school and the community. Rather than concentrating on points of division, the students of Lee High and the citizens of Midland must look for ways to work together to make public education and racial harmony better in the community.

Robert E. Lee is a part of the history of this part of Texas, the Confederacy and the United States. Our history gives us a point of reference from which to grow and develop. Lee High School has now arrived at that point.

The members of the flag committee deserve the appreciation of the citizens of Midland for developing the compromise plan. Many long hours of work were devoted to fashioning a plan that appears to take into account the sentiments of all sides without sacrificing the history from which Robert E. Lee High School sprang.

Legislators lack will on school issue

The Texas Legislature is about to let us all down one more time.

Again and again the courts have told the state exactly what is wrong with the way public schools are financed in Texas. Said simply, the constitutional requirement that every child receive an equal education opportunity is not being met.

The Texas Supreme Court gave the state until April 1 to come up with a plan. Legislators, who are flirting with a true calamity if that deadline is not met, know what they must do; they're just refusing to do it.

The latest proposal making the rounds at the Capitol calls for the establishment of 183 districts statewide, largely on county lines for taxing purposes.

That might work in cities like Dallas, Houston or San Antonio, where property-poor school districts have wealthy neighboring districts.

But along the Texas-Mexico border and in El Paso County, the proposal would leave property-poor school districts sharing what they have with even poorer districts. Are lawmakers serious? Apparently.

What legislators from wealthier areas of the state refuse to accept is that the long-ignored provision in the Texas Constitution that applies to public education says that for funding purposes, Texas is one big school district — from Anthony to Texarkana. . . .

Fortunately, the Supreme Court understands that and apparently is prepared to do what the Texas Legislature lacks the will to do.

Morales has cause to press state case

And now it's Texas' turn: Attorney General Dan Morales hied himself to Washington last week to register his objections to the Commerce Department's handling of the census, in which, he contends, Texas' minorities and rural residents were seriously undercounted.

Is this just contrariness for its own sake? Hardly. There are some very weighty issues hanging in the balance. Most prominent among these is the matter of the once-a-decade redrawing of political boundaries, which is influenced heavily (though not exclusively dictated by) the census results. . . .

Nor is that all: Cold cash is involved. The doling out of federal programs and federal dollars is heavily dependent upon census findings. Morales' office cites estimates that the undercount could cost the state more than $1 billion in federal funds over the '90s.

Morales and his staffers should continue to press the state's case with all the energy they can muster; there's too much at stake to allow Texas the luxury of playing Mr. Nice Guy in this particular drama.

Today's Highlight in History:

On March 28, 1979, America's worst commercial nuclear accident occurred inside the Unit Two reactor at the Three Mile Island plant near Middletown, Pa., as a series of human and mechanical failures caused the cooling system to malfunction, resulting in damage to the reactor's core and leakage of radioactivity.

On this date:

In 1797, Nathaniel Briggs of New Hampshire patented a washing machine.

In 1834, the U.S. Senate voted to censure President Jackson for the removal of federal deposits from the Bank of the United States.

Mismanagement found in grant program

WASHINGTON — A federal program that issues grants to promote democracy around the world has confused democracy with rampant free enterprise. Taxpayers' money has been used to make personal loans, buy office decorations and line pockets. In one case, federal grant money was used to help someone rent a car for use in a drug crime. That may be the American way, but it isn't democracy.

Anderson

The National Endowment for Democracy was created by Congress in 1983. It receives federal tax money that it then spreads around in the form of grants to pro-democracy groups worldwide. A congressional investigation shows that NED is riddled with mismanagement and spending abuses. American taxpayers are being taken to the cleaners in the name of democracy.

Our associate Scott Sleek obtained a copy of the investigative report, yet to be released by the General Accounting Office. It says the endowment has failed to keep track of where all the money goes. Some recipients have kept the interest earned on their grants instead of returning it to the government as they are required to do. They are also supposed to keep their NED money in separate accounts, but many grant recipients have not, making the money harder to track.

We have investigated questionable practices at the NED ever since its inception, including high-priced junkets to exotic places and duplication of programs already being done by other federal agencies.

From 1984 through 1990, NED got about $152 million, which went into 533 grants. The NED board of directors has 16 members coming from labor, business, political parties, Congress and private organizations. The money is funneled to foreign groups through a handful of American private organizations. In the process the NED may have lost control over the money.

— Two recipients failed to prove how they had spent more than $38,000. In one case, the NED should have taken back $23,000 in unsupported expenses, but didn't. The recipient mixed NED money with other funds and then used the money for personal credit card payments and transfers into a personal checking account. In one case expenses were billed to the NED grant when they were already paid from other contributions to the organization. The recipient has since refused to repay the money and said NED would have to sue to get it back.

— One group operating in South Africa made personal loans of at least $6,400 from endowment funds to employees and others, some of which have not been repaid. It loaned about $1,700 to one employee for a down payment on a house, but the employee resigned before repaying the $800 balance on the loan. The organization loaned $1,200 to another group to repair a vehicle, and then loaned $2,000 to someone else to start a car repair business. The same South African grant recipient also signed for a rental car for someone who then was arrested for drug trafficking while driving the car. The car was impounded and the grant recipient ended up paying about $1,500 in rental fees before the car was released and returned to the rental agency.

— Another group in South Africa used $18,000 in NED money to make office renovations when the money was originally earmarked for an international conference.

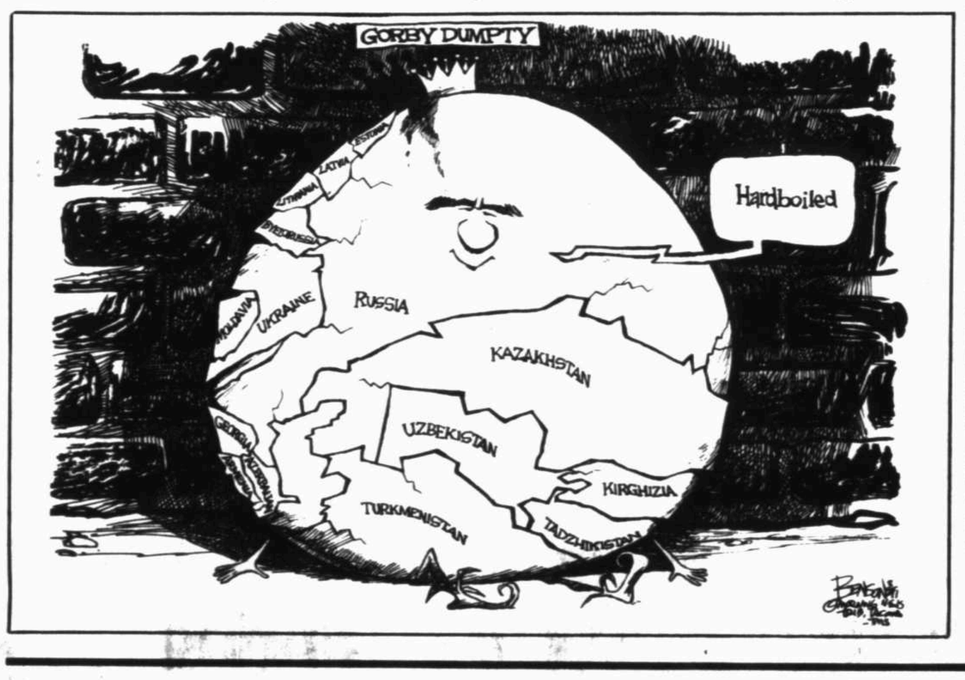

— An organization in Brussels has failed to pay NED any of the interest it has earned on $6.5 million in NED grants over the last five years.

The NED also skates on the edge of conflict of interest. Some of its members are top officials with the same groups that ask for grant money. NED rules require those people to abstain from voting on grants to their own organizations, but they are allowed to participate in the debate leading up to the votes.

Endowment officials defended their program saying that the GAO report exaggerated the problems and that in some cases the people who got the money simply misunderstood the rules, but didn't deliberately defraud the program.

HUMAN ERROR — The Soviet Union was stunned by the success of U.S. weaponry in the Persian Gulf War, but was not discouraged by the performance of its own weapons on the losing side. The Soviets blamed the poor Iraqi showing not on the Soviet weapons but on the poor skill of the Iraqis. The implication is that the same weapons would be far more effective if operated by Soviets. Many of the Soviet-made Iraqi tanks, the Soviets say, were put out of action by their own crews who used hand grenades to damage them so the crews could avoid combat.

Where does our money go and for what?

Now that the Gulf War is over, we have all returned to our favorite subject at the dinner table — children.

It started when someone raised the question, what do we do with our money?

"Ours," said Zeigfield, "goes for taxes and children."

Bloomgarden said, "It's different in our family. Our money goes to the children and whatever's in miscellaneous is for taxes."

Buchwald

Debbie Dawson told us, "After paying for rock concerts, we're lucky to have any money left over for Cheerios."

Bloomgarden asked, "I wonder if any of our children appreciate the fact that because of them we have no money for ourselves?"

"They probably would," Sagebrush told him, "if they weren't so engrossed with their Nintendo games."

Debbie Dawson said, "Our kids are in college. They are certain that their tuition is paid for by the Easter Bunny."

I didn't want to be left out of the conversation. "I mentioned to mine that money didn't grow on trees, and you can't believe how shocked they were. One even asked, 'Are you sure?' "

It turned out that every member of our group was in hock because of children.

"Why do we deprive ourselves of so much to enable our children to have everything?"

Paul Lopatin joined in, "We do it because they might think less of us if we didn't. How can any of us look into the teary eyes of a child and say 'no' when he or she asks for a Sony Walkman? Lilly and I made a vow when we got married that we would go to the poorhouse rather than let one of our flesh and blood cry for even a minute of their lives."

"We had to redo Alice's room from top to bottom because she just discovered pink," Brumbecker said.

Susan Pepper wanted to know, "Do you think that someday they'll realize we didn't spend any money on ourselves so that they could have it ALL?"

I replied, "How could they know?"

Maurice Sislen said, "We've been very lucky. Our kids don't ask for money — only things."

I laughed, "What kind of things?"

"For example, last week my son asked for a motorcycle. I explained to him that the only spare cash we had had been set aside for a trip to visit his grandmother in Iowa. He said that he didn't want to pressure us, but most of his friends' parents had canceled their trips to buy Harley-Davidsons for their children."

"At least when we grow old," I mused, "we can sit in a wheelchair in a nursing home and know that we did right by our children. We never deprived them of whatever they felt they had coming to them."

"Yes," sighed Susan Pepper, "but the question is, will they come to visit us in the nursing home?"

Debbie Dawson said, "Why should they if they have everything already?"

Environmental protection to end big dams

DENVER — You cannot fling a brick in this city without hitting a water lawyer, which strikes some people as a good reason for brick-flinging. Some people here say (some of them through clenched teeth) that 90 percent of the West's water lawyers practice in Colorado. No one here says "Poor California!," parched though it is.

Will

California has a drought but also has some Colorado water. And Coloradans are ahead of downstream Californians in making hard decisions — and having them made for them — about the West's limiting resource.

Last December one such decision determined that the Two Forks Dam, discussed and planned intermittently for 50 years, will not be built. Cheesman Canyon 50 miles south of here, a favorite of fisherman, floaters and backpackers, will not be inundated by 359 billion gallons of river water behind a dam 615 feet tall.

The result has been a scramble by communities and other interests to see what water rights are for sale. That depends on prices, which depend on — well, that depends. Decisions, essentially political, must be made about what the West is going to be. They will affect the rest of us, not only when we vacation but also when we buy food.

To understand Colorado's testiness, understand geography. Colorado is the only state that has no rivers flowing into it from elsewhere. Eight — the Platte, Rio Grande, Arkansas, Yampa, White, Dolores, San Juan and Colorado — rise here and flow out. Some of the Colorado reaches California.

Today we are civilized as all get out, so we litigate rather than fight. Sorting out the property rights to this precious fluid (more precious, over time, than oil) made Westerners unusually litigious even for Americans. It also made them highly political and uncomfortably wedded to the federal government. The federal government owns much of the West (79 percent of Nevada, Idaho 61, Utah 60, Oregon 52, Wyoming 47, California 45, Arizona 45, Colorado 30, New Mexico 33, Montana 30). And the West's fate has been bound up with the Bureau of Reclamation.

But now another, much newer federal agency matters, too. The Environmental Protection Agency sealed the fate of the Two Forks dam, thereby probably putting an end to the era of the big dams that made the modern West. The animating value of that era — economic development — collides everywhere with other values, including environmental preservation.

The species whose habitats are threatened include not just trout but suburbanites. Many people moved to Colorado to enjoy the environmental assets that their moving here has jeopardized.

Denver does not need more water for itself, and the surrounding satellite communities are not yet in dire straits. However, Two Forks dam would have facilitated continuing urbanization of the front range of the Rockies, from Fort Collins to Pueblo.

Residential and commercial development requires water, but agriculture requires much more of it: 90 percent of Colorado's water goes for irrigation and other agricultural purposes. Furthermore, fly fishing and other recreational uses of water are now big business (tourism is a $5.6 billion chunk of Colorado's economy) as well as recreation for the natives.

So henceforth the West's wide open spaces, home to rugged individualists, will ring with political rhetoric. Westerners are condemned to a grand argument about the collective decisions that will allocate the scarce resource on which everything depends.

Police seal Red Square; Yeltsin backers vow to rally

MOSCOW (NYT) — Moscow braced for hundreds of thousands of people to march against Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev today despite government warnings that police have armed themselves to stop the banned rally.

The march to Manezh Square, beside the Kremlin at the foot of Red Square, was also in support of populist Russian republic leader Boris Yeltsin. It was timed to coincide with the opening of a congress of the Russian Federation parliament where hard-liners have planned a no-confidence vote against Yeltsin because they are angered by his repeated calls for Gorbachev to resign.

This city of 8 million was gripped by fear of a violent showdown by demonstrators determined to defy the Kremlin's order on Tuesday banning all rallies through April 15.

Earlier this week Gorbachev also had ordered the central government to take control of the Moscow city police to make certain that the anti-rally edict is enforced. Yeltsin's supporters said they would ignore the order on grounds it is unconstitutional and an infringement on human rights.

The KGB secret police and other law enforcement agencies on Wednesday readied tear gas, water cannon, truncheons, horse patrols, and police dogs to halt the marchers. The Moscow police denied reports that some armored personnel carriers were moved into the capital's military bases for possible use.

By Wednesday night, Manezh Square already had been blocked off by the KGB, which is responsible for Kremlin and Red Square security. Railings and dump trucks also protected Red Square, the heart of communist power.

"The marchers will be stopped," police spokesman Lev Belyanovsky vowed Wednesday.

The KGB will act "decisively, using all the means at our disposal," said Moscow's KGB chief Vitaly Prilukov.

Regardless, local leaders said the march would go forward.

"City councilmen will lead the marchers and be in front in case there is violence," said Moscow City Council spokesman Mikhail Karpov. The Council and the Russian republic parliament have both declared the rally ban unconstitutional.

Democratic Russia, the opposition umbrella organization which organized the demonstration, pledged that marchers would not storm police barricades. The party instructed marchers to stop wherever they encountered police barricades and hold their protest at the barriers.

The official Tass news agency deplored what it said was a "hasty attempt" by Democratic Russia to take power and suggested it could lead to the proclamation of a state of emergency.

But the radical newspaper Kuranty, in a front-page appeal to police and soldiers, said: "Don't shoot, brothers, we are of the same blood!"

In Washington, the Bush administration took the unusual public step of reminding the Soviet Union of its commitment under the Helsinki accords to allow public demonstrations.

As a signer of the 1975 accords, Moscow "reaffirmed the right of peaceful assembly and demonstrations," said State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler. However, restrictions on the right of peaceful assembly "are sometimes necessary for public safety and other legitimate grounds," she said.

Over the past three years the Soviet government has permitted demonstrations, but this is the first time political tensions have created the kind of showdown expected today. There has never been serious trouble in any of the previous marches even though some have had almost a half million people participating.

In past anti-government demonstrations, the government has blanketed the media with warnings of possible violence as a means to discourage attendance. However, the warnings have never been so dire as they have been this time. Nor has the government ever armed police to this extent in advance of a demonstration.

During most of the previous marches, the police have kept a low profile.

On Wednesday, government officials justified the extraordinary security measures on grounds that armed criminals could infiltrate the crowd and provoke bloodshed.

Tensions were further heightened by the fact that the nation's striking coal miners, who defied a government order to return to work, are backing not only Yeltsin but the march as well. The miners have said they will not go back to work until Yeltsin's position in the parliament is safe.

The government says the miners must go back to the pits or the entire Soviet economy will collapse. That warning has only given miners more reason to hold out.

The miners' strike will last indefinitely and other industries will join if Gorbachev uses force to stop today's protest, said Vladislav Rezanov, an adviser to the miners in Siberia.

"I don't think he (Gorbachev) would stoop so low as to disperse people with rifle butts in the very heart of Russia. Doing that would be to sign his own death warrant," Rezanov said.

Russians voted in a recent referendum to elect the state's president by popular vote. Popularity polls show Yeltsin would easily win such an election because his popularity is far greater than Gorbachev's in Russia.

Computers shrink court records

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

New computer terminals are expected to improve public access to files on civil litigation in Midland courts.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

A pair of IBM computer terminals stand in place of the stack of log books that once adorned the front counter of the Midland County District Clerk's Office.

"People are fascinated by them and are messing with them rather than being scared of them," said Cindy Thompson, a deputy district clerk. "They're wondering how it works."

By pressing a few keys, members of the public can call up civil lawsuits dating back to 1987 on the computers rather than looking them up in the log books.

The terminals, which went online earlier this month, are part of District Clerk Vivian Wood's long-range plan to computerize her office's document storage system.

'The main purpose for the terminals is the ease of accessing records for the public.'

— District Clerk Vivian Wood.

"The advantage in the long run will be storage space that can be saved," she said, adding that the change will result in roomier work stations for office employees.

"What we're aiming at is for the only paper records we have in the office to be pending cases," she said.

She estimated that there are about 80,000 criminal and civil cases — active and closed — on file in her office and in storage in a county warehouse.

Over the next two years, all those cases will be reduced to microfilm and optical disk and the paperwork associated with them incinerated, Ms. Wood said.

Closed cases still being stored in her office, located on the third floor of the Midland County Courthouse, will be the first to be converted, she said. About 450 civil cases already have been put on microfilm, she added.

As soon as the requisite software is in place next month, she said, cases will be placed on microfilm and optical disk as soon as they are disposed of. Clerks will work on the backlog as time allows, she said.

Optical disk technology allows documents to be stored on a computer disk and then recalled for viewing on a special monitor that also can make hard copies of the documents.

Ms. Wood said she'd be content to place all the files on optical disk, but state law requires that microfilm be used as a backup.

"At this point the optical disk is new enough that the state librarian has not approved it for archiving because they don't know how long the disks will last," she said.

The county purchased the optical disk and microfilm equipment last fall for about $200,000, Ms. Wood said.

Vending vandalism increases

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Breaking into soft drink machines has become a serious problem in Midland and Odessa, according to representatives of local beverage companies.

"We've seen a large increase in the last five or six months," said Mike Hall, general manager of Tri-City Beverages Inc. in Midland.

On Wednesday, Hall and representatives from four other beverage companies as well as Midland and Odessa Crime Stoppers and law enforcement officials held a new conference to discuss the problem.

"Vandalism has become a serious problem," Hall said.

Approximately 75 to 100 machines are broken into each month in Midland and Odessa, beverage company representatives said.

That is about four times the number of machines vandalized in comparable areas elsewhere in the state, said Jim Mudd of ABTEX Beverage Corp. of Abilene, which owns Tri-City Beverages Inc.

Other representatives said the problem is about the same everywhere. But all agreed, the problem is becoming a national trend.

The increase in vandalism comes at a time when soft drink machines are growing in popularity, popping up everywhere, the representatives said.

Popular target machines for thieves are located at schools, apartment laundry rooms and areas where machines are isolated. Crowbars are the tool of choice.

Damage to a machine can cost $500 to $700 — the price of a door or dollar bill changer. A beverage machine runs about $1,500 to $2,000.

In addition, machines may hold as much as $200 from soda purchases. Soft drinks are taken as well as money.

Cpl. Dean Johnston, Odessa Crime Stoppers, said he believes the culprits are drug addicts seeking money for drugs.

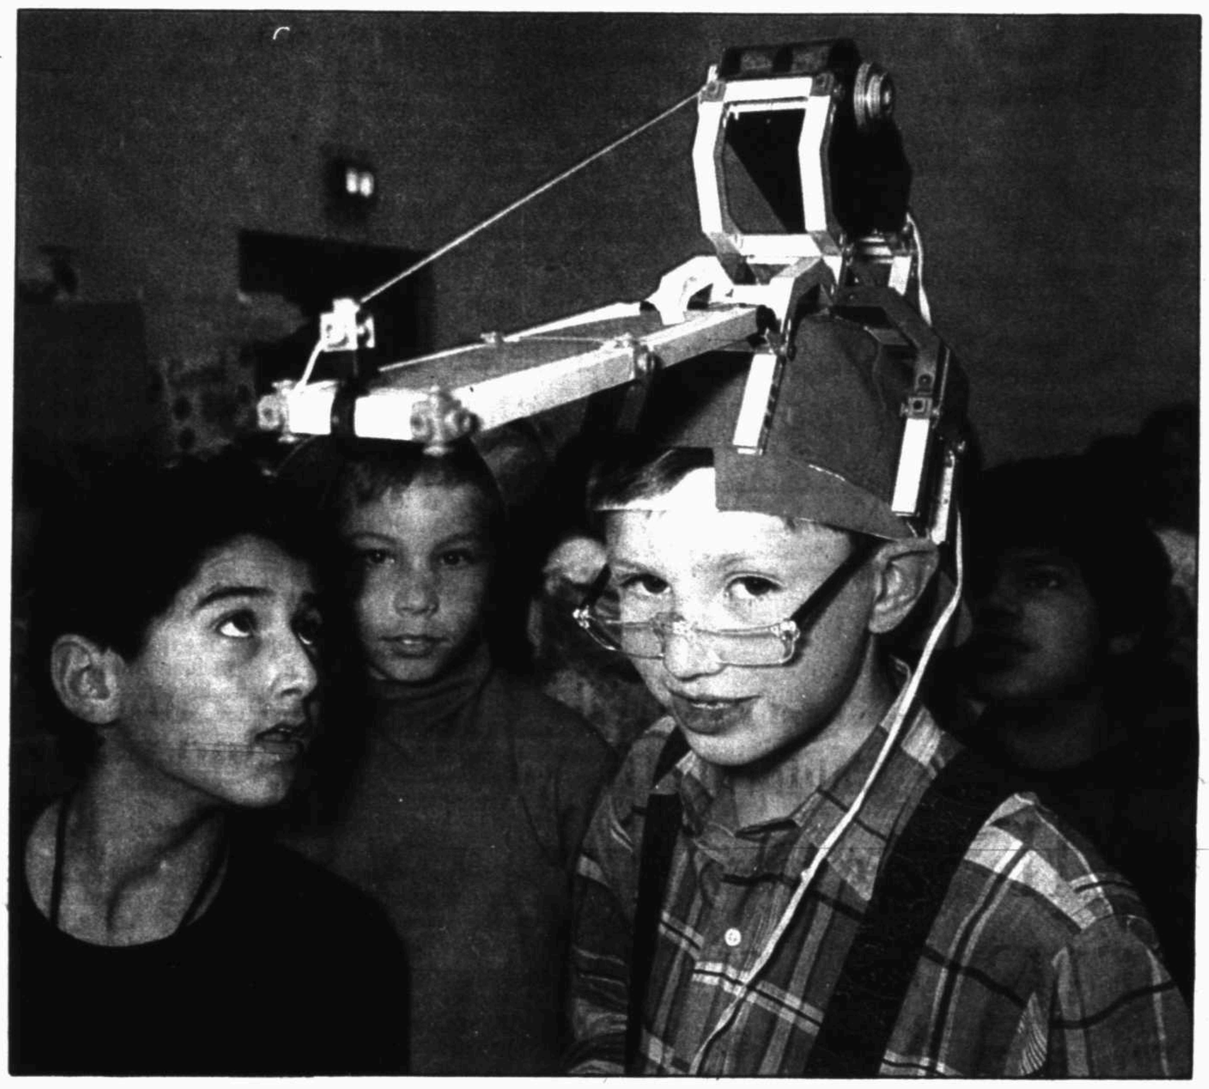

Midland and Odessa Crime Stoppers are encouraging citizens to call if they witness any machine vandalism.

"If we catch them, we are going to prosecute," said Terry Lowe of Midland Crime Stoppers.

Lowe said Crime Stoppers is working with the beverage companies to place stickers on all machines urging people to report vandalism.

Appropriations passes budget billions short

■ Budget of $52.3 billion would require no new taxes.

AUSTIN (AP) — A House committee late Wednesday approved a proposed 1992-93 budget that would fall $4.6 billion short of funding current state services, with lawmakers saying the public should know that taxes are necessary to provide programs.

"It means criminals on the streets, it means uneducated children, it means mentally ill walking the streets," said Rep. Ric Williamson, D-Weatherford, vice-chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

"But if that's the state of Texas we want, that's the state of Texas we're buying, that's the state of Texas we're paying for, that's the state of Texas we're going to get," Williamson said.

The $52.3 billion budget would stay within the state's projected revenue and would require no new taxes, lawmakers said.

However, legislators said, it also would cost the state about $4 billion in lost federal matching funds. Thus, the total shortfall below current spending would be about $8.5 billion.

"That's what the people want. All my cards and letters say no new taxes," said Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, chairman of the tax-writing committee.

"I would hope the people of Texas can truly see . .t. the truth of what this can do. But if they don't, they don't understand, then I don't know what will happen," he said.

The committee's vote was only the first step in a lengthy budget-writing process.

Both Gov. Ann Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock have said they aren't interested in adopting a budget until after July 1, when comprehensive audits of all state agency spending are completed and after a special task force has made recommendations about changing the state's tax system.

Under the House budget-writers' plan, funding shortages would mean that about 15,000 nursing home clients would become ineligible for Medicaid by 1993, and about 23,000 recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children would be excluded from the program, legislators said.

Community theaters win award

■ Both theaters now advance to regional five-state competition.

Staff Report

Midland Community Theatre and Odessa's Permian Playhouse share the title of Texas State Champions, awarded by the American Association of Community Theatres this past weekend in Fort Worth.

Sharing the title is a first for AACT, which awards the title to a single theater. This time, MCT and the Playhouse have been chosen to advance to the regional five-state competition April 25, hosted by Denton Community Theatre at Texas Women's University.

MCT presented "The Runner Stumbles" and the Playhouse presented "Side By Side By Sondheim." Enid Holm, executive director of Texas Non-Profit Theatres, said Texas will be allowed to send two entries to the regional competition because of the large number of entries. The two West Texas theaters competed against 21 entries from around the state.

Also honored at the state competition were those named to the All Star Cast. Area residents receiving this honor included Midlander Jennifer Helms and Odessans Dana Ritter, Patsy Allen and Dale Jenkins.

Prior to the state competition in Fort Worth March 21-24, competitions were held in Corpus Christi, Odessa, Houston's Deer Park and Garland.

"It is a distinct honor for the work of the Permian Playhouse of Odessa to be recognized in this manner," Sharp said. "Theater in West Texas has offered quality entertainment for many years and the naming of the Playhouse and Midland Community Theatre as state winners for Texas is evidence of that, which is due to the strong base of volunteer and community support we both enjoy."

Both casts are a mix of Midland and Odessa volunteers.

Two Odessans, Bill Sibley and Barbara Iglehart, were in the Midland show. Midlander David Kloesel

Hospital trustees debate sales tax proposal

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A proposed quarter-cent sales tax to bring in additional funds to help offset indigent-care costs at Midland's Memorial Hospital and Medical Center (MHMC) but without substantially reducing property taxes caused a minor flap at Wednesday's Midland County Hospital District (MCHD) board meeting.

That proposal, outlined by MCHD board president Tom Bruner, would bring in more than $2 million in revenue to a $117-million-budgeted hospital. Of that amount, about 7 percent covers indigent care.

A special legislative amendment would have to be approved in Austin before the sales-tax issue could be presented to the Midland voters.

In a 4-to-2 vote, the directors endorsed Bruner's sales-tax proposal, which, if implemented, would drop the hospital's ad valorem taxes from 16.62 cents to 1977's rate of 15 cents per $100 valuation. The hospital district was created in 1977.

MCHD directors David J. Porter and Richard Key Dulaney voted against the proposal, which came two months after voters rejected a rollback election and upheld the hospital district's 19.6 percent tax hike to help offset indigent-care cost.

"I'm just extremely conservative," Porter, a certified public accountant, said after the vote. "I'm opposed to high taxes."

When the 34-year Midland accountant was elected to the board two years ago, he pledged to "oppose any tax increase."

He is not seeking re-election.

"Since I have been on the board, I have opposed every tax increase," he said.

"You're adding an additional layer of taxation," Porter said in explaining his objection to the sales-tax proposal. "I think we need to make it clear to the voters that they are not adding a sales tax to reduce property taxes. They are adding a sales tax to increase total revenues, from taxes, to the hospital."

And, he said, often times, "additional sales taxes are approved and sold on the basis that it's going to lower your property taxes."

The measure, Porter said, would be "taking away the voters' right to vote on it. I think that needs to be preserved. I believe we need to allow more power to the voters to the say-so on the tax level of all levels of government."

Joseph I. O'Neill III, chairman of MHMC's board of trustees, asked Porter and Dulaney how they, without raising taxes, proposed to raise funds to take care of medical bills of the poor, destitute and uninsured patients.

As the law "now stands," O'Neill said, "if you raise a sales-tax revenue of X amount, you are obligated to rollback your property taxes by the same amount."

But to do that, he reasoned, "would make no sense.

"The total revenue to the district would stay exactly the same. It makes no sense."

Recently, the hospital district did raise the taxes, O'Neill noted, but that additional revenue is "still not going to be adequate" for indigent care.

By law, the hospital is charged with covering costs of operations, health care, "brick and mortar," equipment, and indigent care.

"If we run this hospital profitably," O'Neill said, "it doesn't cost them (taxpayers) anything. All we ask the hospital to pay for is indigent care."

Since the hospital district was

Ingleside may become reserve homeport

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is likely to recommend a reserve fleet be stationed at Naval Station Ingleside, instead of the battle group and 4,700 sailors originally envisioned for the South Texas homeport, an official said Wednesday.

Although a reserve facility would draw far fewer people to the Corpus Christi area than a strategic homeport, a decision on its role as part of a scaled-down Navy would end months of uncertainty in the community.

Brad Arvin, homeport coordinator for the Homeport Steering Council in Ingleside, said he expects a decision on the naval station when Defense Secretary Dick Cheney announces a list of bases to be closed and realigned.

Cheney's recommendations are to be submitted to the independent, bipartisan Base Closure and Realignment Commission by April 15.

"We feel reasonably confident that the Defense Department will announce a mission for Naval Station Ingleside (at that time) and that mission will be primarily reserves," Arvin said.

But a congressional source said that while the Navy has publicly expressed its desire to convert the Corpus Christi area homeport into a reserve facility, it's still not clear whether Cheney will agree.

A second congressional source said he does not believe the Pentagon had reached a decision on the issue.

The Defense Department, local governments and the state of Texas have spent tens of millions of dollars preparing Ingleside for the arrival of the battleship USS Wisconsin, the aircraft carrier USS Lexington, eight other vessels, and 11,000 new people.

The strategic homeport was conceived during the Pentagon's plans to build toward a 600-ship Navy. But once the Navy began moving instead to 450-ship fleet, the future of the Ingleside has been up in the air.

The Navy has already begun to decommission the USS Lexington, which would have brought 1,500 sailors to Ingleside, Arvin said. And President Bush's 1992 budget recommends mothballing the USS Wisconsin, which would have brought another 1,500 sailors to Texas.

The homeport is 85 percent complete, and the remaining $22 million needed to finish construction has been frozen by Cheney since January 1990. Cheney must decide by April 16 whether to lift the moratorium on spending already appropriated military construction funds nationwide.

The Defense Department has spent $120 million on the homeport, while the state of Texas and Nueces County put up $25 million each to acquire the land and make improvements on the 500-acre site, Arvin said.

"We feel pretty optimistic the Navy will continue to use the base," Arvin said.

Surburban slips, kills Odessa man

Staff Report

ODESSA — A 69-year-old Odessa man died Wednesday after a vehicle he was working under slipped off a jack and crushed him, police officials said.

Robert Foster was working under a Chevrolet Suburban at 1711 Lacasa Drive about 9:45 a.m. when the accident occurred, police officials said.

Accident kills one, injures one

Staff Report

A 30-year-old Midland woman was killed and her 4-year-old son injured in a two-vehicle accident at the intersection of County Road 150 and Texas 349 about 7:30 a.m. Wednesday, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Sherry Schoolcrest Wilson was pronounced dead at 8:15 a.m. by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine. She was taken to Ellis Funeral Home.

Dusty Wayne Wilson was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital where he remained in stable condition with head injuries Wednesday.

According to DPS reports, Edwin Royce Hanes of Lubbock was driving a 1980 Mack trailer truck with a 1980 Hobbs trailer southbound on Highway 349 approaching Country Road 150.

Hanes was passing a vehicle as he approached the intersection when Ms. Wilson, driving a 1985 Ford Bronco west on Country Road 150, attempted to turn north on Highway 349.

Hanes veered to the shoulder of the road and Ms. Wilson turned eastward in an attempt to avoid a collision. Hanes' vehicle then collided with Ms. Wilson's vehicle.

Ms. Wilson, who was pinned in her vehicle, and her son were wearing safety belts, DPS reports stated.

Southwest chairman testifies against bullet train system

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposed "bullet train" would move Texas transportation backwards, Southwest Airlines Chairman Herb Kelleher said Wednesday during hearings on the proposed $5 billion rail project.

"It runs contrary to the entire 20th century thrust of transportation, which is faster and cheaper, rather than slower and more expensive, and would make Texas a train state instead of an airplane state," Kelleher said.

Kelleher testified on the third day of hearings by the Texas High-Speed Rail Authority. The board in May is scheduled to decide which, if either, of two international groups wins the franchise for the first high-speed rail system in the United States.

The 200-mph trains being proposed first would link Houston and Dallas, possibly as early as 1998, then expand into a triangle to include Austin and San Antonio. Bidders are Texas Fas-Trac Inc., a consortium based on German train technology, and Texas TGV, which would use French trains.

But Kelleher argued that shifting to trains isn't progress.

"I don't consider this to be a vault into the 21st century, but a backward somersault into the 19th century. I look upon it as kind of a gussied-up prairie schooner or Conestoga wagon with lights," he said.

Southwest Airlines has opposed the rail system, saying it could take away many of its passengers.

That, Kelleher testified, could threaten nonstop air service to Texas cities outside the Dallas-Houston-San Antonio triangle, as well as raise fares and decrease flight frequency on major routes.

"The high-speed rail applicants in this case propose a system which would threaten to devastate Texas' intrastate transportation system," he said.

More air flights at lower cost are offered in Texas than anywhere else in the world, Kelleher said.

But if the "bullet" train system succeeds, Dallas-based Southwest might be forced to move elsewhere, causing a loss of jobs and facilities "far in excess of what high-speed rail might bring," he said.

Kelleher also charged that the train could not operate without public subsidies — at least not without charging passengers more. Southwest's fares average in the $40 range.

The train companies have dismissed many of Kelleher's charges as an attempt to discourage competition.

"Southwest Airlines thrives on free and open competition, and seeks no refuge from it," Kelleher said Wednesday.

"We do object, however, to seeing Texas' excellent, unsubsidized air transportation system replaced with a rail system which increases travel time, raises fares, degrades the air transportation system of the whole state and, according to other expert testimony, is financially infeasible without a huge public subsidy."

The rail authority hearings, expected to run through April 16, focus on the economic and environmental aspects of the train system.

CLERK: Computers provide easier access to records clerk's office were salvaged from a previous computer upgrade and didn't cost any additional taxpayer money.

They were tied in to the same mainframe computer that the clerk's office relies on — an IBM AS400 in which file names and cause numbers are stored. The clerk's office has been using computers to process such information — along with case scheduling programs — since 1987.

However, the office had continued to list new criminal, civil and bankruptcy filings in log books for the public.

The books were updated regularly, but with the new terminals, the public can find out about a new case being filed as soon as it is entered into the computer system.

"The main purpose for the terminals is the ease of accessing records for the public," Ms. Wood said. People who use the terminals can enter the name of a party involved in civil litigation and call up pending and closed case numbers dating back to 1987. Once they know the case number, they can then ask to see the files in question.

When optical disk technology is fully on-line, people will be able to take the case numbers obtained from the computer and use them to access files stored on the disks, Ms. Wood said.

By this summer, she said, information on ongoing filings in pending cases also will be accessible through the new terminals. Criminal cases also will be accessible through the computer.

"It will be a big help primarily to attorneys — they won't have to pull the file to look at it," Ms. Wood said.

HOSPITAL: Proposed sales tax increase provokes objections created in 1977, the hospital has operated "at a profit" so that the "burdens" of buildings, equipment, and operations don't "fall on the taxpayers."

In referring to Porter and Dulaney, O'Neill said that if they are not for the sales-tax proposal, "How are you going to do it (raise additional revenue for indigent care)? I want to know." As chairman of the hospital's board of trustees, O'Neill said we have "got to look at that deficit."

However, Porter's stance was: "It either comes from the voters voting for it, or it just doesn't get done."

In another matter, a voluntary-drug testing program at MHMC's Memorial West, a psychiatric and substance-abuse facility, is to be implemented among Memorial West's 60 employees within 30 days, said Ray Branson, MHMC president.

Mandatory drug testing in Texas public facilities "appears to be unconstitutional," he said.

"The next best thing to do is to ask people to submit voluntarily." And the "great majority" of Memorial West's employees are to participate in the random testing, which will be done by urinalysis, he said.

"Does that mean that only those who use drugs are not going to participate?" Branson asked rhetorically. "No."

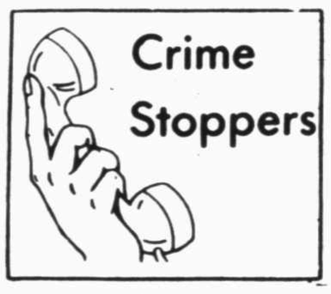

However, he suggested that there will be "some peer pressure at work" to encourage them to participate" in drug testing and "to get someone to seek help" if he or she "might have a problem" with drugs.

"We think there's nothing but positive aspects to that."

Crime Stoppers offers reward in oil field thefts

This week Crime Stoppers is seeking information on two recent oil field related thefts.

On March 12 and March 19, an unknown person or persons climbed over the rear fence of Aplex Industries Inc. at 2045 Loop 250 West. Once inside the yard, about $17,500 worth of merchandise consisting of 100 aluminum-bronze casting stuffing boxes. Apparently the items were passed over the fence to a waiting vehicle.

At this time there are no suspects in this crime. Crime Stoppers is offering up to $1,000 this week only to the first caller for information which leads to the arrest and indictment of those responsible for this crime. Call Crime Stoppers in Midland at 694-TIPS or in Odessa at 333-TIPS. All callers can remain anonymous.

"Most of these are put out for the convenience of people. The more they are vandalized, the harder they will be to find," Hall said.

Some machines have been permanently removed because of vandalism problems, representatives said.

Vandalizing a soda machine is a felony criminal mischief offense if over $750 in damage is incurred.

worked on the Odessa crew. All three cast members of "Side By Side By Sondheim" frequently have appeared in Midland shows.

Ms. Helms and her sister, Kelly Newsom, from the Midland cast, have been in many shows in Odessa. Other members of "The Runner Stumbles" cast are John Bourke, Bruce Williams, Scott Lunsford and Terry Martin.

MCT's production of "The Runner Stumbles" was sponsored by Exxon Co. U.S.A.

"We are most grateful for the support of Exxon in this festival competition," Bachmann said. "Our participation was dependent upon finding corporate sponsorship for this unbudgeted event and Exxon came through for us. Our talented cast and crew are looking forward to the next level of competition in Denton and hope to do a good job in representing Texas."

TU Electric wants to make a big refund

Staff Report

TU Electric on Wednesday filed an application with the Public Utility Commission asking authorization to refund about $50 million, including interest, to its customers.

The amount the company is asking to refund was overcollected from August 1990 through February, primarily because weather in TU Electric's service area was milder than normal during that period.

When weather is milder than normal, customers use less electricity, thus TU Electric is able to use less of its higher-priced fuel supplies to meet customers' needs.

Under the company's proposal, the refund would be made in May through a credit to bills. Residential customers who use 1,000 kilowatt hours would receive refunds averaging about $12. The exact refund month will depend on when Public Utility Commission approval is received.

TU Electric provides electric service in 87 counties in Texas to more than 2.1 million customers, or about a third of the state's population.

STATE IN BRIEF

Arraignment set for former chief

COMANCHE (AP) — The former police chief of Meridian, indicted earlier this week for an alleged sexual relationship with a young girl, is scheduled to be arraigned early next week.

Curtis McGlothlin, 46, was arrested and charged in Bosque County but officials chose to jail him in Comanche, 60 miles to the west.

"Just the fact that people in jail (at Meridian) know him. I just felt like we'd be more comfortable with him in Comanche County," Bosque County Sheriff Dewell Harper said.

District Attorney Andy McMullen, who represents Bosque, Hamilton and Comanche counties, said a judge declared McGlothlin indigent and appointed a Comanche attorney to represent him.

A Bosque County grand jury indicted McGlothlin Monday on a first-degree felony charge that accused him of having sexual intercourse two years ago with a Meridian girl who now is 14.

McGlothlin was arrested after a 10-day investigation by the Texas Rangers and the Bosque County sheriff's department.

Harper said he initiated the investigation after several citizens told him "they had heard some rumors about it and wanted us to check into it."

The girl alleged that the first encounter occurred about Dec. 20, 1988, at McGlothlin's house and that "numerous acts of sexual intercourse" followed, investigators said.

The offense is a second-degree felony punishable by 2 to 20 years in prison.

When authorities notified McGlothlin on Feb. 16 that he was about to be arrested, he met with Mayor Joe Rickard and turned in his resignation, Harper said.

Demotion protested

DENTON (AP) — A psychology professor's demotion has prompted protests by colleagues and students who say his criticism of a university department and his approach to reforms rankled administrators.

The University of North Texas said Tuesday that Dr. Michael Mahoney was demoted from his position as head of clinical training. Administrators said the professor differed with the school's approach to improving the department.

But dozens of students at the campus 35 miles north of Dallas are challenging university administrators' action and one psychology professor, James Wood, has resigned in protest.

Mahoney, 45, remains a tenured faculty member.

Officials said Mahoney had planned to submit a report critical of his department to the American Psychological Association's accreditation.

"I am not making any comments about this," Mahoney told The Associated Press on Wednesday, referring questions to other faculty members.

Blaine Brownell, a UNT provost, said the university remains committed to making its psychology department a nationally recognized one.

Hepatitis spread feared

MUNDAY (AP) — Officials at a West Texas elementary school have been disinfecting water fountains and desks daily since an outbreak of hepatitis A started spreading through the school.

Eight students at Munday Elementary School have been diagnosed with hepatitis A since mid-January. The latest case was reported Tuesday, said Doug Donoho, principal at Munday.

Dr. Karen Pennington, Knox County health officer, said the students are around 10 or 11 years of age and may have transmitted the virus, which causes fatigue and nausea, by eating after one another or by students failing to clean themselves adequately after using the bathroom.

The school has already ordered double the normal supply of soap and paper towels for the school, officials said.

The cases have not been limited to one classroom but have been spread throughout the 275-student school, located about 85 miles southwest of Wichita Falls.

Donoho said the school system has been coordinating with the Texas Department of Health to ensure the safety of the other students.

Symptoms of the virus include the white of the eyes turning yellow, yellow skin color and nausea.

Pennington said hepatitis A is not dangerous as long as children drink plenty of fluids and are allowed to rest.

Fighters prepare for war

DALLAS (AP) — Hungry adult mosquitoes will be out for blood within weeks when warm spring temperatures and moisture stir their larvae to life, pest control expert say.

Herbert Harker, an environmental science manager for the Dallas Health Department, says while the adult mosquitoes have not been seen yet, they're not far away.

"If the warm weather continues, people will begin to see some by early April," Harker said.

He added some residents in North Texas already have been alarmed by large mosquito-like bugs that have made their way indoors. Though the long-legged crane flies are harmless, health officials say the flies signal the approach of the dreaded mosquito.

Small flocks of chickens will be distributed to various North Texas residences by both the city and county health departments, starting next week. It's part of an effort to monitor for the potentially fatal St. Louis encephalitis.

"St. Louis encephalitis is our main concern," Harker said. "We have not had a major outbreak here since 1966 . . . and we hope to prevent one through monitoring."

During the 1966 outbreak in Dallas, at least 27 people died. Nine people in Florida died from encephalitis last year.

The chickens' blood will be drawn monthly to determine whether the mosquitoes that bite them are carrying the virus, which causes brain inflammation. Mosquitoes also will be analyzed.

Mistake frees prisoner

LAWTON, Okla. (AP) — A mistake in paperwork allowed a man sentenced to prison for 100 years to be freed after just 21 months, authorities say.

Police detective Darrell Dawkins was shocked when a witness recently picked a picture of John E. McCowan Jr. out of a police mug shot book. Dawkins had helped convict McCowan of the 1987 rape of a Lawton woman.

Dawkins called the Department of Corrections to see if McGowan, 30, had been released, and was told Dawkins had been freed in July 1989.

Since his release, McCowan was convicted of an Amarillo, Texas, armed robbery and was identified by a witness as the man who tried to rob a Lawton grocery.

Fort Worth cafeteria explosion injures 17 people

FORT WORTH (AP) — At least 17 people were injured Wednesday, one apparently critically, when a mid-afternoon explosion rocked a Colonial Cafeteria in the hospital district about a mile southwest of downtown Fort Worth.

The accident occurred about 3:30 p.m. CST, officials said. An area of several blocks around the explosion site was blocked off to traffic.

The injured were taken to nearby Harris Methodist Hospital and John Peter Smith Hospital.

Six of the injured were being treated at Harris Hospital, with one in critical condition, three fair and two in good condition, said Tom Peck, director of public relations.

Alene Johnson, 74, of Boyd was in critical condition with a fractured left leg, Peck said. Reported in fair condition were Pat Bartlett, 54, of Boyd; Walterine Walker, 74, of Fort Worth; and Angeline Rogers, 65, of Fort Worth. he said. Mary Terry, 87, and Irene Williams, 29, both of Fort Worth were in good condition, he said.

Seven adults and four children, none of whom were in critical condition, were being treated at John Peter Smith Hospital, said administrative director Judge Legg. The names of the injured were not immediately released.

The State

Robby Halcomb, who works at a nearby medical supply company, said he and a co-worker heard the explosion and could smell leaking gas 50 yards away.

They went into the restaurant, where they saw extensive damage and several people injured, Halcomb said.

"There's not a standing table in there," Halcomb said. The cafeteria's concrete floor, which appeared to him to be about 18 inches thick, had collapsed into the basement, he said.

All the windows on the first floor of the two-story building were shattered and broken glass was blown several hundred yards into the parking lot outside, Halcomb said.

Howard Matson, director of communications for Lone Star Gas, said he was told the explosion occurred in the cafeteria basement. Matson could not confirm whether a gas leak caused the blast.

"We do have people on the scene, and obviously there are fire and police personnel on hand," Matson said.

TU Electric officials also went to the scene of the blast.

Police and fire officials referred all questions to a fire department spokesman who could not immediately be reached for comment.

At least five people, all diners, were injured inside the cafeteria, Halcomb said, but none appeared critically injured. The most serious injury appeared to be broken arms, Halcomb said.

The telephone did not answer at the cafeteria's Fort Worth headquarters Wednesday afternoon.

U.S. Customs Service Commissioner Carol Hallett, bending, points out some of the modifications to a helicopter seized by customs agents Tuesday in Dallas.

Customs seizes helicopter from Chilean arms dealer

DALLAS (AP) — Customs agents Wednesday seized a helicopter belonging to a Chilean arms dealer who is under investigation for alleged weapons sales to Iraq.

The modified long-range commercial copter, which can be used in warfare, was displayed by the U.S. Customs Service at Redbird Airport after it was seized inside a storage hangar.

Connie Fenchel, special agent in charge of the Customs Service office in Dallas, said a search warrant also was executed at a Fort Worth-area company where records were being seized.

A Cardoen 206L-III attack copter, a prototype belonging to Carlos Cardoen, 49, was seized at the private airport, and records at Global Helicopter Technologies Inc. in Hurst were also targeted.

The copter was originally built by Bell Helicopter Textron in Fort Worth, but later modified by Cardoen, who is believed to be living in Chile, Fenchel said. Bell had no direct involvement in the modification project, she added.

Cardoen has denied any wrongdoing and has not been charged with a crime.

"The seizure of the helicopter is from Mr. Cardoen," Ms. Fenchel said. "The custodian of Mr. Cardoen's records is Global, which we believe Cardoen has an ownership interest in."

Cardoen operates Industrias Cardoen S.A., one of Chile's largest private weapons manufacturers. He furnished Iraq with cluster bombs during the Iran-Iraq war and is part of a Customs probe in South Florida into possible shipments of munitions, lethal chemicals and military technology to Iraq.

Military officials said such shipments would violate the United Nations embargo imposed after Iraq invaded Kuwait Aug. 2.

Wayne Frandsen with the Customs Service office said modifications made to the copter in Dallas had "military applications."

Ms. Fenchel said the copter, valued at $4.7 million, had been stored for Global at the airport and may have also been destined for Iraq.

Records have also been seized by customs agents last month at Swissco Development Co., which is based in Miami, said Ms. Fenchel.

"Prior to that, we seized two shipments from Mr. Cardoen in Miami," she said.

The Customs Service said Cardoen imported the copter through Global to obtain Federal Aviation Administration certification.

"It was to be certified for agricultural purposes," said Ms. Fenchel. "But the FAA developed information that it may not be used for agricultural purposes."

Customs Commissioner Carol Boyd Hallett said the seizure resulted from a five-month investigation by the Department of Transportation Office of Inspector General, Department of Commerce and Customs Service.

"We have determined it (the copter) can be seized for evidence in the ongoing investigation of Dr. Cardoen," said Ms. Fenchel.

The investigation of Cardoen is part of Operation Exodus, a Customs program to halt improper transfer of high-technology equipment and illegal weapons.

State, insurance firms settle suit

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Wednesday settled a 3-year-old antitrust lawsuit against some of the nation's largest insurance companies, with Attorney General Dan Morales calling it a major victory.

"This is the most far-reaching antitrust litigation in Texas since the breakup of the Standard Oil trust at the turn of the century," Morales said.

"We have obtained major concessions from the insurance industry that will lead to broad reforms in the way the industry does business in our state," he said.

Morales said the settlement, combined with legal changes being proposed to the Legislature by Gov. Ann Richards, would result in lower prices and more competition in the Texas insurance business.

Under the settlement, approved by state District Judge Pete Lowry, the state will collect $1.1 million to cover its legal costs and $3 million to establish new training programs for state insurance regulators.

Four defendants settled with the state earlier, paying $2.5 million. The remaining eight agreed Wednesday, and the state received a total of $6.6 million in the case, Morales said.

David E. Ostwald, vice president of the industry-supported Insurance Services Office Inc., said the insurers admitted no wrongdoing and decided to settle to avoid continuing court expense.

"Insurance Services Office has maintained from the beginning that our activities were legal and proper, and the settlement agreement itself makes clear that ... all of the defendants believe that our activities were legal and proper throughout in this matter," Ostwald said.

The lawsuit, filed in March 1988, had alleged that several of the nation's largest property-casualty insurance companies conspired to raise prices and standardize and restrict coverage available for commercial general liability insurance in Texas.

The suit alleged that insurers controlled and dictated the type of information that ISO, an industry rating organization, provided to insurance carriers and designed the policy forms that insurers used.

Under the settlement, changes will be made in the operation of the ISO, which Morales said would encourage competition and more effective regulation.

Morales said the agreement eliminates insurers from the decision-making process concerning general liability forms at ISO. It prevents large insurers from deciding among themselves what will be the features included in standard insurance policies, he said.

Under the settlement, the ISO staff will have the final decision-making authority.

Fields among 3 congressmen traveling in China this week

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Jack Fields of Texas is one of three congressmen traveling in China this week at the expense of the Far East Studies Institute, a non-profit organization that promotes stronger ties between the United States and Far East countries.

Fields did not announce that he would be part of the delegation prior to leaving Monday for the Far East.

But another member of the traveling party, Rep. Claude Harris, D-Ala., issued a press release announcing that he would be traveling in China over the Easter recess, and that Fields and Rep. Roy Rowland, D-Ga., were also in the delegation.

Aides to Fields, R-Humble, could not be reached Wednesday.

The congressmen were invited to China by the Chinese Peoples' Institute of Foreign Affairs. Also in the delegation are several staff members.

The congressional delegation is the third to visit China under the auspices of the institute since the Chinese government's bloody crackdown against pro-democracy demonstrators in Tiananmen Square in June 1989.

Harris said human rights abuses and trade problems are at the top of his agenda, and described himself as a harsh critic of the government's bloody crackdown and the Bush administration's failure to condemn the Tiananmen Square massacre.

High winds cause injuries, damage in West Texas

Associated Press

Winds gusting up to 70 mph tore roofs off buildings, knocked out power and uprooted trees across West Texas early Wednesday and also caused dozens of injuries in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

About 15 women factory workers in Juarez were hurt, some severely, when an elastic roof on a factory swelled with wind and then caved in, officials said.

A 12-year-old Juarez boy, Jesus Medaz Martinez, was critically injured when a boulder placed on the roof of his house to keep it in place fell and hit him in the head.

In Colonia La Presa, near Juarez, a concrete wall under construction fell on some workers, injuring Federico Aquilar Carreon and Fernando Garcia Amecha.

High winds in Amarillo knocked power out of 4,500 homes between 9 p.m. Tuesday and 5 a.m. Wednesday, according to Ken Vaughn, a spokesman for Southwestern Public Service Co.

Vaughn said the outages, caused by uprooted trees and scattered debris blowing into power lines, were repaired by sunrise on Wednesday.

"Winds this high are unusual," said Vaughn. "I know people think the wind blows like this all the time in this part of the state, but it doesn't. We are not used to 70 mph winds."

Vaughn said reports of other brief wind-related outages were called into Southwestern Public Service from residents across the South Plains and Panhandle Wednesday.

High winds pushed an empty 8,000-gallon fuel tank across Interstate 27 in Amarillo and tossed it on top of a 1991 Ford Escort on display at the Ron Clark Ford dealership.

"Better an Escort than a $25,000 Ford Explorer," said Randy Clark, vice president of the dealership.

In El Paso, emergency crews battled gusty winds to restore isolated power failures after cables snapped and power poles fell, El Paso Electric Company spokesman Alan Bunnell said.

"It's par for the course. When we get these gusting winds this time of year, it causes poles to sway and break."

Except for one failure in far east El Paso that left some streets without power for about an hour on Tuesday evening, most power failures were fixed quickly by resetting transformers, Bunnell said.

A line of thunderstorms, some reaching severe levels, roared across North Central Texas early Wednesday.

One-inch hail was reported in southern portions of Fort Worth, dime-size hail was reported in Johnson County and pea-size and marble-size hail pelted an area of Comanche County.

High winds damaged some trees in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and several accidents were reported in Dallas as the storm passed through the city.

Discrimination suit

Ali Bouresian, a U.S. citizen born in Lebanon, lost a U.S. Supreme Court case today by a 6-3 vote that said Americans working for U.S. companies overseas are not protected by federal law prohibiting bias against minorities. He was refused a Muslim holiday off and alleges he was taunted while working in Saudi Arabia for ARAMCO in 1984. He is pictured in his office, where he now sells insurance.

Four restaurant workers shot in robbery

DALLAS (AP) — A restaurant employee was in critical condition late Wednesday after he and three other workers were herded into a walk-in freezer by two robbers and gunned down at close range.

Three of the victims, two men and a woman, were employees at Hall's Chik'N 7 and the other a female worker at Hooker's Hamburgers, a neighboring restaurant in the South Oak Cliff section of Dallas, said Dallas police Sgt. Jim Chandler.

The Hooker's employee had walked to Hall's when workers there were preparing to close the store at about 4:15 a.m. Wednesday, Chandler said.

The four were surprised by two male assailants, he said.

One of the attackers took the Hooker's employee back to her workplace, where he raped her and took $900. He then led the woman back to Hall's, where the other woman was raped by the second assailant, Chandler said.

The robbers also took $1,300 from the chicken restaurant, he said.

Toilet parity legislature closer to law

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas women may not have to suffer much longer in endless lines to use the women's room in large public facilities.

The November trial of Denise Wells, a Houston woman arrested for violating a city ordinance when she used a men's room at The Summit concert arena, prompted a bill in the state Senate to require larger restroom facilities for women.

The bill was approved by a subcommittee Tuesday, and now faces the Senate Committee on Health and Human Services.

Proposed by Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, the bill would require a 2-to-1, women's-to-men's toilet ratio at large public facilities. Buildings constructed before Jan. 1, 1992, and facilities such as churches, restaurants and hotels would be exempt.

John Babik, 40, gets a "smooch" from Judy, an Asian elephant, at the Lake County Fairgrounds in Painesville, Ohio Tuesday. Babik, who is blind, had a chance to meet the pachyderm while its circus convoy laid over on its way to Souix City, Iowa.

Bank woes prompt hearings

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, chairman of the House Banking Committee, has set new hearings on the troubles of America's banks and accused the Bush administration of "gimmickry" in wanting to borrow up to $70 billion to shore up the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

"The American people are wiser than many in Washington realize," the San Antonio, Texas, Democrat told reporters on Wednesday. "They are not easily taken in by bureaucratic hocus-pocus. The people are beginning to smell a new taxpayer bailout."

Gonzalez also took some swipes at FDIC chairman L. William Seidman, criticizing the regulator's plans for replenishing the dwindling bank insurance fund and disputing his claims that a legal quirk entitled him to extend his term by two years.

The longtime Texas congressman said he was disappointed in Seidman for seeking a legal opinion — at a cost of $50,000 — which found that the thrift bailout law effectively extended Seidman's term from October of this year through February 1993. Seidman has said that he would leave before his term expired this year.

Last week Seidman told the House Banking Committee that the total amount of borrowing authority being sought by the administration and already available to the FDIC amounted to $70 billion.

"Perhaps we didn't explain it too well," said FDIC spokesman Alan Whitney. "That was just the total amount, but we don't expect to have to borrow all that money."

Gonzalez said he did not yet know the extent of thet insurance fund's losses and would hold hearings on April 11 with Seidman and April 17 with Alan Greenspan, Federal Reserve Board chairman, to get more information.

The Treasury Department has proposed that the FDIC borrow $25 billion from the Federal Reserve system and the FDIC maintains that it has the legal authority to borrow $45 billion, in addition to a $5 billion line of credit it already has.

The department's rescue plan is part of a proposed bank reform bill that would overhaul bank regulation, restrict deposit insurance and give banks new freedoms to enter the securities and insurance businesses.

However, Gonzalez said that he would separate the bank fund rescue portion of the bill from the larger package because of the urgency of the rescue.

Gonzalez likened the increasing numbers of bank failures to the savings and loan crisis in 1988 when cost estimates escalated daily while thrift regulators insisted they had the resources to manage the problem.

Gonzalez dismissed Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady's upbeat outlook that he was "very close to promising" that there would be no taxpayer bailout of the nation's banks.

But Gonzalez' harhest words were for Seidman, whose plain-speaking ways have made him a favorite on Capitol Hill.

"There have been contradictory and conflicting statements that have been given" on the weakness of the bank fund, Gonzalez said.

The Texas populist seemed offended that the FDIC had spent $50,000 for a legal opinion from the Washington firm of Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton.

FAA investigates Piper Malibu planes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unexplained breakups of seven Piper Malibu planes over the last two years killed 19 people in the United States, Mexico and Japan, U.S. safety officials said Wednesday.

But the Piper Aircraft Corp. blamed the rash of Malibu accidents on pilot error and bad weather and said there is no evidence the $300,000 plane has structural defects warranting a federal safety warning.

The Federal Aviation Administration issued a directive Monday saying 518 Piper Malibus should be operated only in good weather. The order followed the latest accident last week, which killed a family of four in Bronson, Fla.

Seven of the six-seat, single-engine aircraft have broken up in flight since May 1989.

But Piper said it has run an exhaustive series of tests on all parts of the plane and found nothing wrong.

"We believe the cause of these accidents are from operations error and weather, not airframe structural failure," said a company statement. "We are confident, when properly operated, the Malibu is a safe airplane."

The company said that in many cases the structural strength of the plane "far surpassed" FAA standards.

Brent Bahler, a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board, said problems with Piper Malibu engines were a factor in four accidents in 1985 and 1986. He also cited a 1987 accident in which there was a problem with oil pressure and fuel pumps.

Bahler said that after the third in-flight breakup occurred the board created an investigative task force to look for any common thread or similarity linking the fatal mishaps.

He said that the sense of urgency grew after each new accident.

"But it would be premature for the safety board to pinpoint any probable cause for these accidents at this point," Bahler said.

"The accidents all have one thing in common," he said "They are all major breakups. It basically breaks up in mid-air."

He said he could not comment on the FAA's action because "frankly we don't yet know what's causing these breakups."

The safety board said the first breakup accident occurred on May 31, 1989 when both wings fell off a Piper Malibu flying in an area of thunderstorms and turbulence near Bristol, Ind. Three people were killed.

The board listed these other Piper Malibu breakups:

■ A Malibu crashed near Bakersfield, Calif on Feb. 6, 1990 after experiencing altitude gain and rapid altitude loss. Two people were killed. Examination of the wreckage revealed that the horizontal stabilizer, vertical stabilizer, right elevator and right outboard wing had separated from the aircraft.

■ On May 27, 1990 near Naylor, Mo. the horizontal stabilizer skin of a Piper Malibu fell away after the pilot had reported moderate turbulence. The pilot and a passenger died in the accident.

■ On June 26, 1990 near Rochester Hills, Mich. a Piper Malibu crashed, killing the pilot, after its airspeed suddenly dropped from 140 knots to 100 knots. "The aircraft experienced an in-flight breakup with the wreckage scattered over a large area," the safety board said.

The safety board said it is awaiting accident reports from authorities in Mexico and Japan on two other Piper Malibu accidents in which the aircraft broke up during flight.

One Malibu crashed on Sept. 23, 1990 near Hermosillo, Mexico killing four people and the other crashed on Nov. 17, 1990 near Tottori, Japan killing three people.

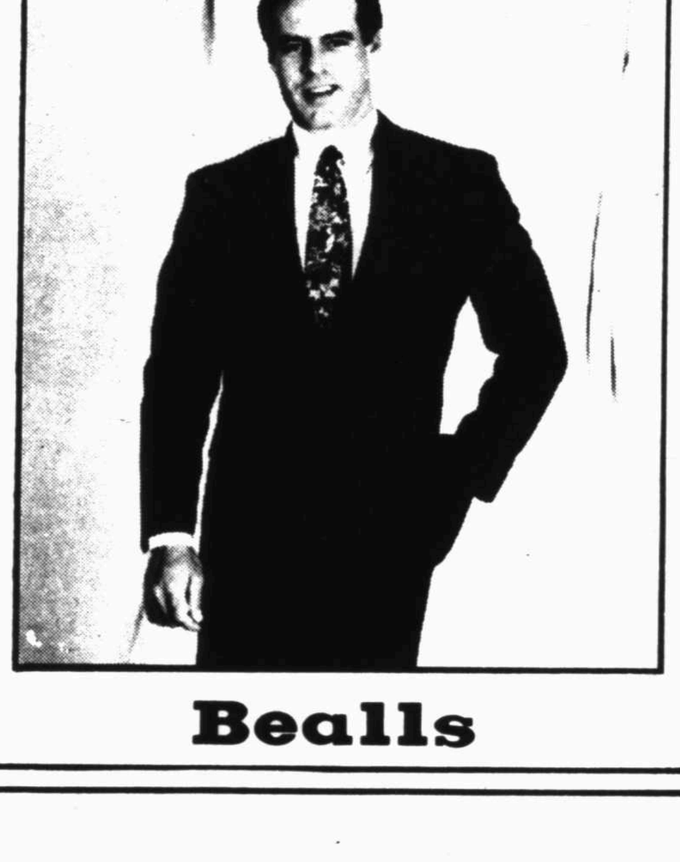

Under the FAA airworthiness directive issued on Monday, the agency ordered owners of the $300,000 Piper Malibus to place a placard on the instrument panel of each Malibu saying, "Flight in instrument flight rule (IFR) meteorological conditions is prohibited."

"Flight into areas of known or forecasted moderate or severe turbulence should be avoided," the FAA said.

Coffee is laxative for some people, new study shows

By Jean Carper

Have you ever noticed that coffee acts as a laxative? If so, you are not alone. About 30 percent of the population reacts to coffee in this fashion. So finds a new study by Nicholas W. Read, Royal Hallamshire Hospital in Sheffield, England.

Carper

In a study of 14 healthy men and women, Dr. Read noted that both regular coffee and decaffeinated coffee stimulated an urge for a bowel movement in so-called coffee-responders. By using a rectal probe, the researchers measured changes in the pressure and movement within the colon.

Surprisingly, says Dr. Read, distinct motor activity (motility) within the bowel occurred quickly — within four minutes after drinking the coffee. This suggests, he says, that coffee somehow sends an advance message to the colon via hormones or some neurological mechanism.

Women are more apt to respond to the laxative effects of coffee, he also notes. Further, people with irritable bowel syndrome often complain of distress after drinking coffee; they, too, may have a special colonic sensitivity to coffee, he added.

Does carbo-loading work?

If you exercise for long periods or engage in endurance events like marathon races, you should load up on carbohydrates. In other words, eat lots of pasta, bread, cereal and fruit.

That's a widespread belief. Athletes are often told to routinely eat from 60 percent to 80 percent of their calories in carbohydrates to improve their performance. Such a diet may be a healthful one, because it's generally low in fat and high in fiber, but whether it actually improves performance is questionable, according to a new study at Ohio State University.

Researchers tested the performances of OSU competitive swimmers who had been on either a moderately high carbohydrate diet (43 percent of calories from carbos) or a very high carbohydrate diet (80 percent carbo calories).

The amount of carbohydrates eaten made no difference. Swimmers on both diets performed equally well, concluded researchers. Swim times were identical.

A very low carbohydrate diet might be detrimental to performance, the researchers note, but they could find no evidence that boosting intake of carbos from moderate to super-high improved performance.

Tea Vs. Cancer

Remarkable new studies show that plain old tea may help prevent cancer. "It's exciting, to discover that black tea, green tea and oolong tea all have anti-cancer effects," says Dr. John Weisburger, of the American Health Foundation, and chairman of a recent international scientific conference on tea.

New studies from China, Japan and the United States confirm that several natural compounds in tea dramatically block the development of various cancers in laboratory animals. For example, tea-drinking rats, according to new evidence from China, were only 20 percent as likely to develop cancer of the esophagus as rats drinking plain water.

Rutgers University researchers found that drinking green tea at concentrations normally consumed by humans blocked up to 87 percent of skin cancers, 58 percent of stomach cancers and 56 percent of lung cancers in mice.

Both black tea, common in the U.S., and green tea, popular in China and Japan, inhibit such cancers. However, green tea contains more of one specific ultra-powerful anti-cancer agent, say experts, and thus may be more effective.

Study seeks clues to retardation

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists have found the strongest evidence yet to explain what causes the most common inherited form of mental retardation with a study that may also lead to a better diagnostic test.

The research supports the idea that fragile-X syndrome occurs when a person inherits an inactivated gene or genes that should have been turned back on.

The condition, which experts said often goes undiagnosed, accounts for an estimated 5 percent to 10 percent of the nation's cases of mental retardation. It appears in about one in every 1,250 males.

It generally produces moderate to severe retardation in males, who also tend to be hyperactive. Some females who carry the defective gene for the disease also show mental impairment.

The disease concentrates on men because it stems from a defect in the X chromosome, one of the tiny stringlike structures that carry genes. Men have only one X chromosome, but women have a second one that can act as a backup.

There is no highly effective treatment for the syndrome, but therapy early in life can help patients reach their potential, said Dr. W. Ted Brown of North Shore University Hospital in Manhasset, N.Y.

Scientists have not identified the genetic defect that causes the syndrome. But in Thursday's issue of the British journal Nature, French scientists say they found evidence that the defect causes the syndrome by keeping other genes improperly shut off.

"I think this represents a very important advance" toward understanding the cause of the disease, Brown said.

In the study, Jean-Louis Mandel of Strasbourg University, with colleagues there and at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, studied a portion of the X chromosome close to where the genetic defect is known to lie.

Chromosomes from 21 fragile-X patients had an abnormal pattern of methylation, which is a chemical alteration that generally shuts genes off.

No such pattern appeared in chromosomes from 22 men without the syndrome, nor four additional men who had the genetic defect but not the syndrome.

Their findings fit a hypothesis proposed by Charles Laird of the University of Washington in Seattle, who blames abnormal gene inactivation for the syndrome.

That could explain a puzzling feature of the disease: The genetic defect fails to cause any symptoms in at least 20 percent of men who inherit it, yet it can go on to produce retardation in their grandchildren, Laird said.

He noted that women's bodies inactivate one of the two X chromosomes in each cell. An inactivated chromosome is normally turned on again before it is passed to offspring.

But perhaps the fragile-X defect keeps some genes from turning back on again, through a process called genomic imprinting, Laird proposed. This imprinting is thought to be maintained by the methylation.

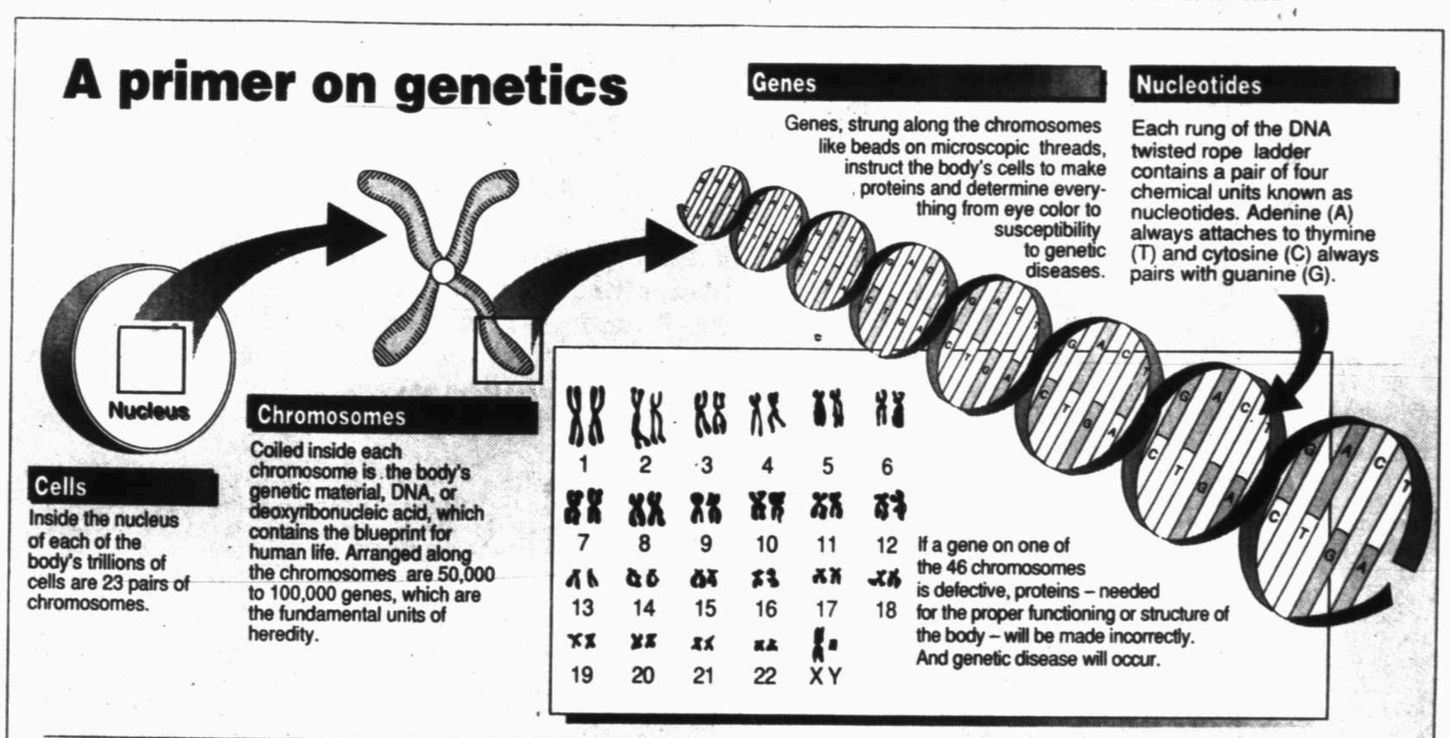

Half of a woman's X chromosomes escape inactivation, which means the fragile-X defect would not get a chance to do its harm on them. So if such a chromosome goes into an egg that becomes a male, that male can inherit the defect but escape the syndrome.

But once that male passes the chromosome to his daughter, it has another chance to go through the inactivation-activation cycle before being passed to her offspring.

If it is inactivated this time, the defect will prevent some genes from being turned back on again. So if the daughter's son inherits this chromosome, he will get the syndrome.

Laird called the new paper the strongest evidence yet found for his theory. Another lab has confirmed the finding, he said.

The new work gives clues to finding what gene or genes are inactivated, he said.

Hunting for genes that cause disease

Scientists have pinned down the approximate locations, and in some cases the precise sites, of the genes that cause many diseases.

Disease	Chromosome	Date found	Number of cases in U.S.
Huntington's chorea	4	1983	25,000
Duchenne muscular dystrophy	X	1983	10,000
Cystic fibrosis	7	1985	30,000

Mental dysfunction drug studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two government agencies are sponsoring a study to determine the effectiveness of a drug that may be useful in treating mental dysfunction caused by the AIDS virus, officials said Tuesday.

At least 150 people infected with the virus will be enrolled in the trial sponsored by the National Institute of Mental Health and the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

The drug, Peptide T, was developed by NIMH and has been through an initial round of trials testing its safety.

AIDS activists had been pressing the National Institutes of Health to begin Phase II studies even though Peptide T has no drug company sponsoring it, said Anna Blume of the New York chapter of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, or ACT-UP.

"We're pleased it has finally come to fruition," she said.

This second phase of study is designed to determine whether Peptide T can safely reduce AIDS-caused problems of concentration and memory.

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell Telephone Company ("Southwestern Bell") submitted an application on January 4, 1991 to the Public Utility Commission of Texas ("Commission") requesting that the central office-based PBX/type service market be declared subject to significant competition pursuant to the Commission's Substantive Rule §23.27. If this proposal is approved, Southwestern Bell intends to provide service to this market segment via its PLEXAR-Custom service, which provides for contractual rates and charges to be based on an individual customer-specific basis.

PLEXAR-Custom is a central office-based service which provides switched voice and/or data communications similar to a customer-premises PBX. PLEXAR-Custom service is currently being provided on an individual customer-specific basis via Southwestern Bell's Customer Specific Pricing Plan Tariff for central office-based telecommunications systems of 200 stations or more. If Southwestern Bell's application is approved, the PLEXAR-Custom service tariff will be revised to also include central office-based telecommunications systems which require between 75 and 200 stations.

Centrex and Plexar-II services are currently priced according to a standard tariff regardless of the customer's geographic location in the state. If this application is approved, customers needing 75 to 200 stations will be able to obtain this service priced on an individual customer-specific basis rather than under a standard tariffed rate.

Southwestern Bell's application proposes that the service market for PBX/type systems of 75 stations up to 200 stations be declared subject to significant competition statewide in all of the exchange areas served by Southwestern Bell and in which the central office capability to provide the service exists and/or can readily be made available.

Persons who wish to intervene, protest, or comment on this application should notify the Public Utility Commission of Texas by June 21, 1991 at 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. You may also call the Commission's Public Information Office at (512) 458-0256, or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf. Please refer to this matter in all correspondence as Docket No. 9960.

Baylor English graduate makes mark selling cars

By Jana Collier
Waco Tribune-Herald

She's a 26-year-old woman with a degree in English from Baylor University.

She doesn't have family in the car business, and when she first started selling cars in the early 1980s, she barely knew how to change her oil.

But Giles apparently has what it takes to make it in the traditionally male world of car dealing. She's aggressive, a quick learner, has a great sense of humor, and, most of all, is a seller extraordinaire.

Monday — the first day she put cars on the new lot at 1915 N. 19th St. — the business sold five cars.

Last month, the first Giles Motors at North 18th Street and Maple Avenue had record sales of 175 cars, which includes cars sold wholesale to other dealers.

Her success comes at a time when many car dealers are reporting hardships.

Giles says her attitude toward her customers has given her an edge.

"I want them to think they are somebody special, even if they don't have $200 to put down on a car," she said. "I have one lady who's bought seven cars from us — she says she won't go anywhere else.

"My mom told me, 'Civility doesn't cost you anything,'" and that, says Giles, has become her philosophy.

Originally from Brownwood, Giles came to Waco in 1983, when she started at Baylor. At the time, she planned to be a dentist.

In 1984, she started selling new cars for a dealership. But in the back of her mind, she knew she could make much more money if she was in business for herself.

At 20, she convinced a bank to make her a loan, and she started buying and selling cars.

In 1987, as a senior at Baylor, she opened her first lot at North 18th and Maple.

She went after markets that she felt others overlooked and was willing to take just about anything as a down payment.

"I've had boats, and one time I got a horse in a trade," she said.

She ran ads on the radio saying, "I'll trade for anything."

That came back to haunt her when a man called one day and asked if she'd trade for 200 ducks — "or maybe it was chickens," Giles said.

Whatever the fowl, Giles offered the man $1 a head. They couldn't agree on a price, so she never got the birds.

Nevertheless, she's changed her tune to, "I'll trade for anything that doesn't eat."

Giles bought her second lot about 1½ months ago and started cleaning it up. It also been a used car dealership.

Giles said she wants her car lots clean and attractive.

Corpus Christi students take state mock trial title

By Vivienne Heines
Corpus Christi Caller-Times

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The scenario played out in a federal courtroom in Dallas was a classic environmental drama, pitting a passionately committed conservationist against the demands of corporate leaders in the fictional state of Texoma.

The case of defendant Jessie Goodall, charged with inciting a riot during a protest at a proposed toxic-waste site, was argued fervently by student would-be attorneys in the Earle Cabell Federal Court Building, with Judge Jerry Buchmeyer presiding.

When the jury returned from deliberations, they found in favor of Goodall's defense, as portrayed by the seven-member King High School mock trial team — a decision that earned the team the Texas High School Mock Trial State Championship.

The students advance to the National High School Mock Trial Championship, scheduled for May 10-12 in New Orleans.

King students have been named regional champions six times in the past nine years; it is their second state championship. In 1985, the King High School team also won the national championship.

"I'm really excited about it. In the three years I've been here at King, we've made it to state. Now the kids finally went all the way," said Michael Ray, coach-sponsor for the mock trial team.

Ray teaches drama and debate at King High. "It's pretty exciting. They've worked very hard, and they've had a lot of help from the attorney advisers. (Mock trial) is a nice combination of drama and debate," he added.

Ray said the team consisted of two lawyers, senior Lara Hammerick and junior Daniel Nelson; four witnesses, seniors Aimee McCormick and Rich Henderson and juniors Murray Rhodes and Robert Pearse. Freshman Mike Jordan was alternate and timekeeper. The team was chosen before Christmas and the attorney-advisers began working with them in January.

Attorney-advisers were Mikal Watts, a Corpus Christi attorney with David L. Perry and Associates, and Ruth Tomlin, court coordinator for 117th District Court Judge Robert Blackmon. The two practiced nightly with the students for three months, Watts said.

In the competition, students acted out a trial in which the fictional state of Texoma prosecuted an environmental activist for inciting a riot during a protest of a hazardous-waste-treatment facility.

King students have been named regional champions six times in the past nine years; it is their second state championship. In 1985, the King High School team also won the national championship.

The students, depending upon the side they represented in each trial, argued the relative merits of law and order vs. the First Amendment, Watts said.

When the King team was on defense, it portrayed Goodall "as an earth puppy. She was real back to nature — a pacifist," Tomlin said. "When we were on prosecution, we portrayed her as a radical activist who would do anything for the advancement of mankind ... and to advance herself through the ranks politically."

Watts, who was a student attorney on King's national championship team in the 1980s, praised the students' performance in the final round, where they were selected as winners of the state competition.

"Daniel and Lara dominated the final round with incredible performances and our witnesses, Aimee and Rich, never gave the other side a chance to win," Watts said.

"They're an incredibly talented team but it was their hard work, extensive preparation and unflagging determination that took them to the top," Tomlin said.

Tomlin said she and Watts also will help coach the team for the national competition.

Ray said the students in the state competition act out the same trial, which is prepared by the Dallas Bar Association and distributed to schools through the regional Education Service Center. The students are preparing a new trial for the national competition.

Midland High's District 4-5A baseball game at Abilene Cooper, originally scheduled for Saturday, will be played at 4 p.m. today in Abilene.

The Bulldogs own sole possession of second place in the district with an 8-7 overall record and a 4-1 league mark. Cooper, still reeling from the suspension of head coach Andy Malone, has lost three games in a row and is 11-6 overall, 1-3 in 4-5A. Malone was suspended for the season after a profane tirade against his players, and has been gone since district play began.

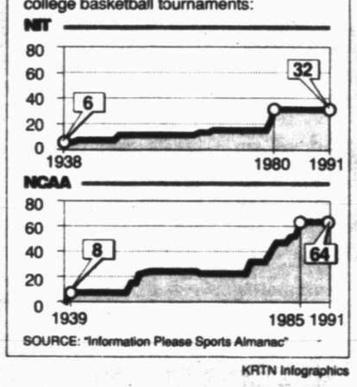

MHS is on a streak of its own, having won four straight district games after dropping its 4-5A opener to Midland Lee by one run.

Expected to start on the mound for the Bulldogs is senior righthander James Madrid (3-1), whose ERA in district games is 0.99. Batting clean-up, he is also one of the team's top hitters with a .579 average in 4-5A play. Junior outfielder Jeremy Burton still leads the squad in 4-5A hitting with a .647 average, while junior third baseman Jimmy Stanton is at .471 and pitcher/outfielder Dewayne Culpepper sits at .450.

MC picks Green as new coach

■ Only the formality of a news conference separates Steve Green from the head basketball coach's job at Midland College.

By Jimmy Patterson

Assistant Sports Editor

Steve Green, head coach at Howard College for the past three seasons, has accepted the head coaching position at Midland College, MC president Dr. Jess Parrish confirmed late Wednesday night.

"The job has been offered to Steve Green and he has accepted," Parrish said. "I have polled the board."

A news conference will be called Thursday morning to officially introduce Green as the new head coach.

Green succeeds Reggie Franklin, whose contract was not renewed by the school's board of trustees earlier this month. Franklin had coached the Chaparral basketball team for four seasons, compiling an 81-43 record.

'The job has been offered to Steve Green and he has accepted.'

— Midland College president Dr. Jess Parrish

Green could not be reached for comment late Wednesday night.

A search committee, comprised of Parrish, MC athletic director Delnor Poss, and three Midland College board members met late into the evening Wednesday.

Three other coaches were under consideration for the vacant post until Green was offered the job. Former Midland College head coach Jerry Stone, former Sam Houston State University head coach Larry Brown, and MC assistant coach George Walker were all final candidates competing for the post.

Green's Howard College team, ranked No. 1 late in the JUCO season until a 95-91 bi-regional loss to Alvin, March 13, finished the 1990-91 season with a 32-2 record. The Hawks finished tied for first with South Plains in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference race; both teams had identical 15-1 records.

Under Green's guidance, the Hawks have won 62 of their last 69 games (89.9 percent) over the last two seasons. In his three seasons at the Howard College helm, Green's teams have won 38 of 48 WJCAC games (79.2 percent).

Green, 35, has also served as an assistant under Eddie Sutton at Arkansas, and Pat Foster, at Lamar.

A 1972 graduate of Miami (Okla.) High School, Green, the team's point guard, led Miami to a perfect 27-0 season his senior year.

Green will take over a Midland College program that finished the 1990-91 season with a 17-13 overall record. The Chaps completed the WJCAC season with an 8-8 mark, fifth place in the league.

Only four players are eligible to return for their sophomore seasons at Midland College next year — guards Tom Brown and Malcolm Milam, and forwards Charles Sanders and Marlon Jefferson.

Three of Green's players at Howard this season — WJCAC Most Valuable Player Johnny McDowell, Cecil Pittman and Harvey Petty — were named to the all-conference team.

Runnin' Rebs go into hiding

■ UNLV's players will hole up in their Indianapolis hotel room to avoid the crush of Final Four fans.

Associated Press

You won't get any.

They won't be around.

UNLV, under siege as it attempts to become the first team since UCLA in 1973 to win two straight national titles, is circling the wagons and taking cover in a protective measure against eager and sometimes overzealous fans.

Autographs have been banned and guards will be posted in the team's hotel as the Rebels take a decidedly unfriendly, but perhaps necessary, coccoon-like approach to the Final Four.

"These guys won't even leave their rooms except for practice and team meals," said UNLV sports information director Joe Hawk. "They'll sit in their rooms, watch TV and listen to music. We're even thinking about turning off the players' phones in their rooms."

Coach Jerry Tarkanian warned boosters this week not to ask team members for autographs, and issued a blanket ban on any scribbling of names for fans and collectors.

Tarkanian said he was responding to the requests of the players, and also trying to keep the team focused for its Final Four games.

"They do not enjoy signing autographs," Tarkanian said. "They must have signed 1,000 apiece. A couple of players even said, 'Hey coach, can we get our own hotel this time?' Even if

Soccer suspension upheld

AUSTIN (AP) — The governing body for athletic competition in the state's public schools upheld the suspension of an Austin soccer player for cursing and shoving an official, then listened to the student's suggestions for cutting down violence in the sport.

It was one of eight infraction cases the UIL's state executive committee heard Wednesday.

Members of the UIL staff and others at the meeting gasped while watching a videotape of the Feb. 19 incident in which the player shoved the official during a match after the official threw him out of a game for using abusive language.

Bowie officials suspended Phillip Glover, a senior goalkeeper at Austin Bowie High School, from all UIL activities for the remainder of the year.

Before voting to uphold the suspension, the nine-member UIL committee and its staff questioned Glover, who is the Bowie student body president.

Cardinal survives OU run

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Kenny Ammann scored 22 points, including five 3-pointers, as Stanford survived a 15-0 Oklahoma run following the ejection of Sooners coach Billy Tubbs to win its first National Invitation Tournament with a 78-72 victory Wednesday night.

NIT

Oklahoma opened its biggest lead of the game, 46-37, early in the second half, but Stanford rallied with a 23-10 spree to move ahead 60-56. Deshon Wingate, held to one point in the first half, had 10 points and Ammann eight during the spurt, including two 3-pointers.

The Sooners pulled to 70-67 on two free throws by Brent Price with 1:40 left, but Stanford clinched the victory by making eight of 12 free throws down the stretch.

Andrew Vlahov scored 14 points, while Wingate and John Patrick each had 13 for Stanford (20-13). Price scored 26 points and Bryan Sallier 24 for Oklahoma (20-15), but their teammates combined for only 22.

Adam Keefe, Stanford's leading scorer with a 21.8 average, finished with 12 points but had only two in the final 29 minutes. Keefe, who scored 24 points in the Cardinal's semifinal victory over Massachusetts, was named MVP of the tournament.

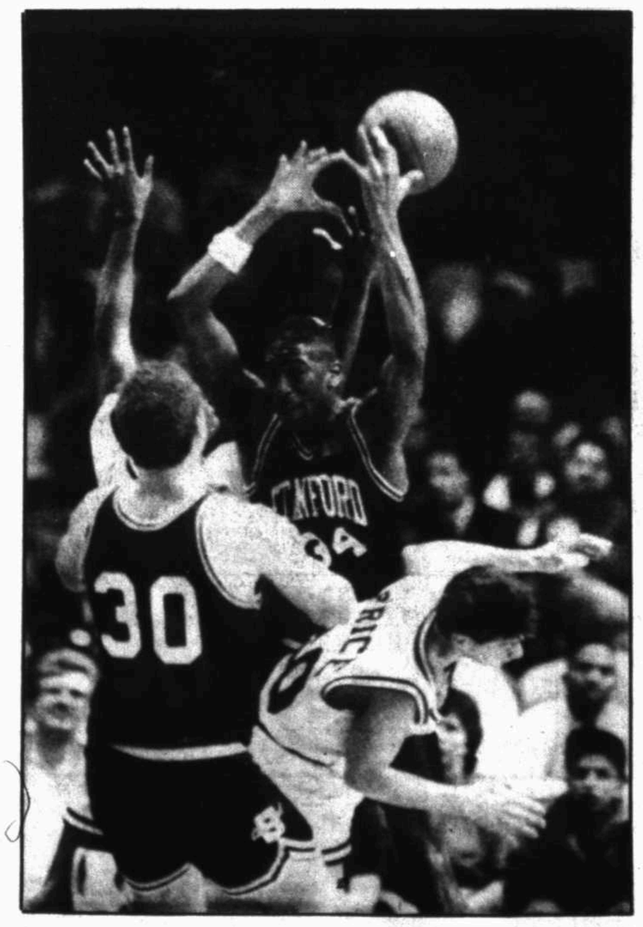

The victory made Stanford the 13th school to win the NIT and the NCAA basketball championship. The Cardinal won the NCAA title in 1942.

The first half was a wild affair that ended with Oklahoma leading 39-35 and Tubbs in the locker room.

He was ejected for arguing with the referees with 4:38 left in the half and the score tied at 26. Tubbs was angry because he thought the referees failed to call a walking violation on Keefe before he passed to Vlahov, who was then fouled while going for a layup.

After referee Mickey Crowley gave Tubbs a technical, the coach continued to argue and was ejected by referee Pete Pavia.

After Vlahov made his two free throws, Patrick sank all four free throws resulting from the two technical fouls on Tubbs. Stanford retained possession and Ammann quickly hit a 3-pointer, giving the Cardinal nine points in nine seconds and a 35-26 lead with 4:27 remaining left in the half.

NCAA takes lenient tack on Gophers

MINNEAPOLIS — Lou Holtz and Luther Darville, long gone from the University of Minnesota, still had a major impact Wednesday when the NCAA placed the school on probation for two years and banned its football team from making a 1991 postseason appearance.

Holtz

Some of the 17 rule violations cited by the NCAA Committee on Infractions involved the basketball and wrestling programs. The basketball team was stripped of one scholarship next year and the wrestling team lost its right to interact with a campus wrestling club.

A three-year investigation, which has already cost the university $462,000 and will amount to about $600,000 before all bills are paid, unearthed the violations.

The probe was initiated only one month after the school received three years' probation in March 1988 for basketball and football violations that occurred primarily from 1982-86.

"I'm embarrassed personally and I'm embarrassed for the institution," said Rick Bay, men's athletic director.

Soviets run at San Angelo Relays

Staff Report

SAN ANGELO — When Spike Dykes was coaching football at Midland Lee, he would often say of an opponent, "They're stronger than the Russians."

Well, Midland High and Lee will get to find out just how strong the Russians are here Friday and Saturday in the San Angelo Relays because "the Russians are really coming."

For the first time in history, an 11-member team of high school athletes from the Soviet Union will participate in the 89-team track spectacular.

"We are very excited to add an international flavor to this high school event," meet director Bob Beaver said. "Soviet participation in international sports events is not uncommon, but as far as we can determine, this is the first time Soviet high school track athletes have competed in Texas."

Beaver said the Soviet times submitted on their entry forms are very competitive with other teams, but added they may be at a disadvantage because of jet lag from their Thursday arrival from Ryazan, which is 114 miles southeast of Moscow.

The Russians have a 6-9 high jumper to go against Odessa High's Ryan Ledlow, who has a 6-10 this year. The Russians are also expected to threaten records in the distance races and triple jump.

However, with high class Russian team entered with 15 other 5A schools in the meet's largest division, it poses some problems for both Lee and MHS.

"It's going to be a great track meet — for the fans," Lee track coach Mike Quimby said after his team won the title last weekend in Carlsbad, N.M. "There is a lot of talent going to be there, including teams from Converse Judson and Temple. I don't even know if we can qualify anyone for the finals on Saturday and we need to be running at this time of year."

The meet begins at 2:30 p.m. Friday with all running preliminaries and selected field event finals. Saturday's running and remaining field event finals begin at noon Saturday. Tickets are $3 for adults and $1 for students.

Meanwhile, the Lee and MHS girls hit the road for the Lubbock Invitational Saturday. Both teams have shown a major improvement over last year.

Lee has announced a schedule change for the weekend of April 6. Both Rebel squads were scheduled to go back to another meet in El Paso, but the Lee boys will now travel to Big Spring while the Lee girls will head for Plainview.

Midland High has also decided to enter the Plainview meet April 6 and will join the Lee girls at that event.

NBA Roundup

DALLAS — Jerry Reynolds scored 11 consecutive points during Orlando's decisive 11-4 fourth-quarter run Wednesday night as the Magic beat the Dallas Mavericks 97-85 for its club-record-tying fourth straight victory.

Reynolds finished with 20 points and Scott Skiles added 18 as the Magic beat the Mavericks for the fourth straight time this season. Rolando Blackman scored 20 points and Herb Williams chipped in 18 for Dallas, which lost for the eighth time in its last 11 games.

The second-year Magic and Mavericks are tied for fourth place the Midwest Division at 25-43. The victory was only the sixth for the Magic in 33 road games this season and gave Orlando its third four-game winning streak this season.

Dallas dropped to 2-11 against the four newest expansion teams: Orlando, Minnesota, Miami and Charlotte. The Mavericks were 19-2 against those four teams entering this season.

Orlando trailed 51-44 at the half, but used an 11-0 run that included eight points by Nick Anderson to build a 65-61 lead with 4:39 left in the third quarter.

The Magic led 71-65 after three quarters, but the Mavericks pulled to 75-74 on Derek Harper's reverse layup with 7:54 to play before Reynolds and the Magic took over.

Dallas opened the game with a 17-5 run, led 31-22 after one quarter and were still ahead by seven points at the half.

Pistons 102, Pacers 93

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Dennis Rodman started a 15-0 fourth-quarter run with five of his 19 points to lead Detroit to a victory over Indiana in a game delayed by a power failure.

Detroit trailed 76-74 with 8:12 to play when Rodman drove past Rik Smits, hit a layup and was fouled. Rodman missed the free throw, but grabbed the offensive rebound. On the ensuing possession, he tossed in an over-the-head flip while being fouled and hit the free throw for a three-point play that put the Pistons ahead to stay.

Detroit scored the next 10 points to take an 89-76 lead with 5:09 to play.

Joe Dumars led the Pistons with 23 points and Mark Aguirre added 17. Rodman also finished with 19 rebounds.

Braves may give Deion chance

Associated Press

"Neon" Dieon may be shining for the Atlanta Braves on opening night.

Sanders' chances of making the team improved Wednesday when Lonnie Smith had arthroscopic knee surgery and doctors said the outfielder would be sidelined for two-to-four weeks.

Team orthopedic surgeon Dr. Joe Chandler performed the 40-minute procedure on Smith's left knee and said it was "unlikely he will be ready for opening day." The Braves open the regular season April 9 in Atlanta against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"His prognosis is excellent," Chandler said. "It is impossible to tell whether it will be closer to two weeks than four. I'll know better in a week to 10 days."

Chandler said he found "a cartilage tear on the outer side of the left knee" and "trimmed up some cartilage on the inner side."

General manager John Schuerholz said that Smith's injury improves the chances of Sanders, also a defensive back with the Atlanta Falcons.

"We told him we would give him this opportunity when we signed him, but we fully expected to send him to Richmond," Schuerholz said. "But the guy has made us take notice. No question about it."

Meanwhile, Pete Smith started for Atlanta in a "B" game against Montreal and pitched one inning. He gave up one hit, struck out one and walked none.

Smith had arthroscopic surgery on his pitching shoulder during the winter and is likely to spend more time in Florida when the regular season begins.

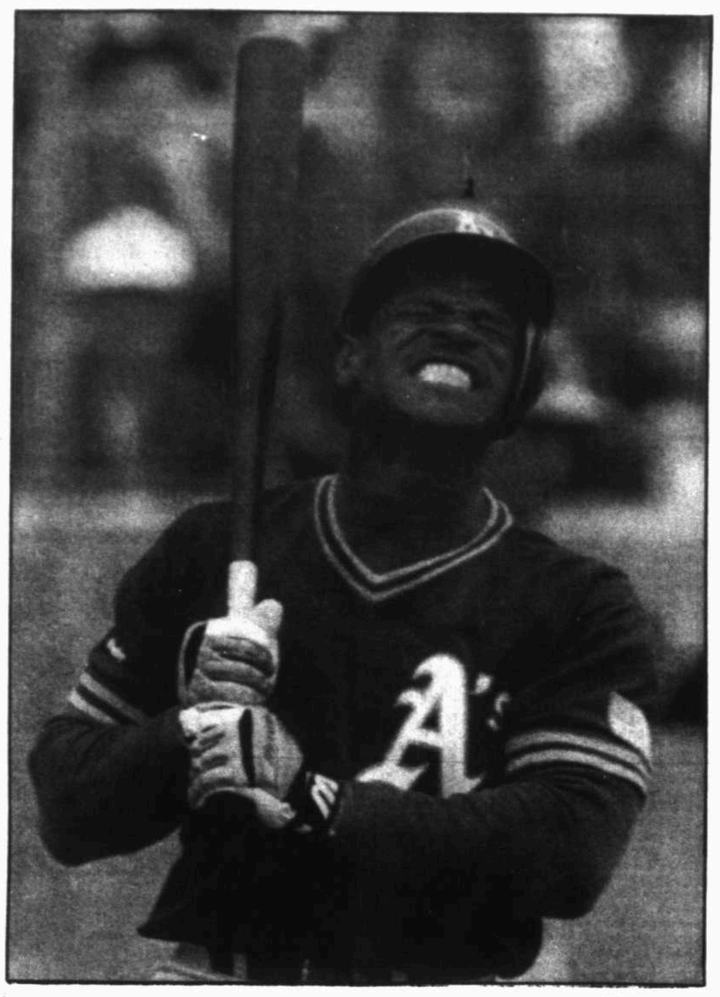

Manager Bobby Cox said Smith "looked good today. He threw the ball well." He said Smith may pitch two innings in an "A" game on Sunday.

First baseman Nick Esasky, sidelined most of 1990 with vertigo, also was in the "B" game. He played nine innings and went 1-for-4. Cox said he would talk to Esasky on Thursday about playing in an "A" game.

Orel Hershiser took the day off as he continues his recovery from reconstructive shoulder surgery performed last April 27.

"Orel felt good, but we wanted him to have a day off regardless," Dodgers team therapist Pat Screnar said. "He had thrown two days in a row, so he needed a little rest. Orel's been making very good progress."

Screnar said Hershiser would probably throw again Thursday.

Rickey Henderson reacts to a called third strike much as he does to talk of long-term contracts.

Meanwhile, Cleveland center fielder Alex Cole took about 40 swings in the batting cage Wednesday and should return to the Indians' lineup by Monday.

Cole has been out since separating his shoulder March 14, when he stumbled and fell as he left the batter's box on a line drive to right against Oakland. The Indians initially thought he would be out at least a month, but Cole — who has separated the shoulder several times before — said he knew all along it wouldn't be that long.

"I think probably I'm about eighty-five percent now. Basically I'm just working to get it strong."

In a front-office shakeup, Stuart Meyer was named executive vice president and chief operating officer of the St. Louis Cardinals replacing Mark Sauer, who resigned. No reason was given for the resignation of Sauer, the team's No. 2 executive since Oct. 30, 1989.

Meyer also succeeds Sauer as chief executive officer of Civic Center Corp., which owns Busch Stadium. Sauer is to remain a consultant for both corporations.

"He is a respected and seasoned executive," Cardinals president and chief executive officer Fred Kuhlmann said. "I have worked very closely with Stuart for more than 20 years, and he is highly qualified."

Probation did not turn Jordan away from Kansas

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Just as his grandparents know where they were and what they were doing the moment they heard about Pearl Harbor, Adonis Jordan will never forget the instant he heard what the NCAA had done to Kansas.

Relaxing at a friend's house, he thought his world had been turned upside down.

"They came on with the news and said, 'NCAA hands Kansas a three-year probation,' and that's all they said. I didn't know what to think," Jordan said. "I didn't know what it meant."

A highly sought point guard in Reseda, Calif., Jordan just a few weeks earlier had committed to Kansas and its energetic rookie head coach, Roy Williams. But now came news of a three-year NCAA probation.

To a high school kid, it sounded like his college career was being devoured before it could even begin. Was he headed for a place that wouldn't be on television or in the NCAA tournament until he was a senior? Would NCAA guards patrol the hallway?

"I was one phone call away from changing my mind," he said.

The next day, Williams was California-bound.

"Coach Williams flew out and we had a meeting. He explained the whole thing to me and my mom," Jordan said.

Williams' message was this: It's not as bad as it sounds. He assured the family the three-year probation included only a one-year tournament ban, and that Adonis' career would not necessarily be affected at all.

A great many other schools had been clamoring for Jordan. He had narrowed his list to Kansas and Seton Hall.

Josephine Jordan let her son make up his own mind.

"She told me to do whatever I thought would make me happy," he said. "I wasn't sure what I should do. So I decided to put my faith in coach Williams."

It was a decision that turned out to have direct bearing on Kansas' making an unexpected trip to the Final Four this week. Jordan blossomed as a sophomore and was probably one of the most underrated players in the Big Eight this year. Averaging more than 12 points, he led the Jayhawks with 126 assists while making 38 steals. Quick enough to penetrate inside, he's also a dangerous 3-point shooter who makes it tough for a defense to get settled.

Showing consistent improvement, he's one of the few players in Kansas history to have more than 100 assists in their freshman and sophomore years.

The NCAA's three-year probation came as a shock to everybody at Kansas, coaches, administrators and recruits alike. One reason for the severity was the fact that Kansas' football program had been penalized less than five years earlier.

The toughest aspect of the penalties was probably the recruiting restrictions placed on the program, not the one-year tournament ban. Jordan turned out to be the only prospect from the early signing period in the fall of 1988 who stuck with the Jayhawks.

"The others thought there was going to be a cloud hanging over them and the school, I guess," Jordan said. "They didn't want to take the chance. I just put my faith in coach Williams. He told me he would help me develop into a good basketball player and a good person. So far, it's paying off."

Josephine Jordan is happy.

"Oh, yes, she's thrilled about the way things have turned out," he said with a smile.

Hurley dreams of UNLV rematch

N.Y. Times News Service

DURHAM, N.C. — Just when Bobby Hurley thought it was safe to go back to the Final Four. . . .

Just when the dreams had disappeared for months and Hurley had exhibited more control over his emotions during his sophomore season as the point guard at Duke University, he will stand face to face with the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, the source of the oddly recurring images that followed him throughout last summer.

An achievement that for nearly any school would be considered a dream season took on a different meaning in the weeks and months after Hurley had more turnovers (5) than points (2) in the 103-73 loss to UNLV, the most one-sided championship game in the 52-year history of the tournament.

The images would reappear about once each week.

"I was swimming around in a pool and there were sharks in there," Hurley remembered. "They didn't really attack me or anything. It was just random pools. I saw the fin go through the water. At first I was scared, and then I wasn't because it didn't come after me."

Hurley could not recall if the sharks seemed to be arranged in any particular defensive alignment. At first, he did not even understand why they kept coming back.

"I said, 'Why do I keep doing this?' " Hurley recalled.

After the sharks had followed Hurley back to school for about two weeks late last summer, he was talking to Greg Koubek, a senior and teammate who was taking a course in dream analysis. Koubek combined the memory of the UNLV shark mascot and the Rebel coach, Jerry Tarkanian — known affectionately in Las Vegas as Tark the Shark — and reached a conclusion.

"He said, 'It might be because of UNLV' " Hurley said.

Aha.

If the Blue Devils are to create a different result in their semifinal meeting at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis Saturday night, Hurley will have to continue the improvement in an expanded game that has helped push Duke this far.

In 139 minutes of tournament play this month, Hurley has been credited with 27 assists while committing just 4 turnovers against teams that relied on defensive pressure. He has averaged 10.3 points and has made 7 of 20 3-point shots.

Hurley has made 42 more field goals than he did a year ago, including 30 more 3-point shots. He has reduced his turnovers from an average of 4.4 a game to 3.9.

UNLV: Shark pulls shades

we go to breakfast we have to sign 100 autographs."

Team officials plan to post signs in the team's hotel asking people not to approach players for any reason, and security guards will be stationed on floors where the players are staying.

Tarkanian even closed the team's last practice Wednesday in Las Vegas after fans crammed a university gym the day before holding posters, basketballs and cards to be signed by their favorites.

"I want them to be focused," Tarkanian said. "So I'm instructing coaches to keep the players from signing. I'm telling them to tell them they just passed a new NCAA rule against autographs."

Although the sequestering of the team is new, the ban on player autographs fits nicely into the 'Us against them' attitude the team has successfully used to win 45 straight games over two seasons.

Players such as Greg Anthony, Larry Johnson and Stacey Augmon have mostly refused to speak to the media this season, and the team seems to thrive on the idea that everyone, especially the NCAA, is against them and hoping they don't succeed.

Hawk, though, said that has only contributed to a growing mystique about the UNLV team, which is also trying to become the first team since the 1976 Indiana team to go through the season undefeated.

"This has been a big time problem," Hawk said. "It got to the point where he put signs on the doors of the practice gym asking people to leave the players alone. They just took the signs down and did what they wanted to do anyway."

The ban may also be an effort on Tarkanian's part to refocus a team that depends on its superb intensity for its success.

NCAA: Holtz gets benefit of doubt

(From 1C)

"I hope this is the last time we will all be meeting like this."

Minnesota could have been penalized much more severely but the NCAA was lenient because the school cooperated and launched its own investigation.

"This is a unique case where it is appropriate to impose penalties that differ from the full set of minimum penalties otherwise required," the committee wrote in its 22-page report. "Further, the committee has determined that it is not appropriate to apply the minimum penalties for repeat violators to this case."

The university could have lost more scholarships, could have received postseason bans in all three sports and could have been kept off television. In addition, coaches could have been suspended or fired. Theoretically, the dreaded "death penalty" for repeat offenders could even have been imposed.

"While we regret having been penalized, I think we've been treated fairly," university president Nils Hasselmo said. "I think the good news, the real news, here is that given the kinds of penalties that could have been imposed ... we have been given the benefit of the doubt."

The committee gave Holtz the benefit of the doubt, too.

It found that Holtz, who left Minnesota for Notre Dame in November 1985, had given $250 cash to an athlete to pay for a course that allowed the athlete to remain eligible for competition.

Holtz also was found to have given between $25 and $40 to Roselle Richardson to reimburse the former quarterback for the loss of a wallet.

"I made two errors of judgment," Holtz said at a news at South Bend, Ind., adding that the payments were made for humanitarian reasons and not to gain a competitive advantage.

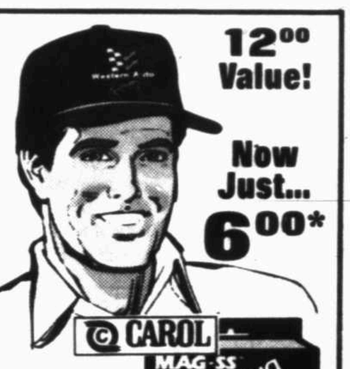

Minnesota's investigation alleged that Holtz also gave $500 to former academic advisor LeRoy Gardner to give to former receiver Jerry Keeble. Holtz denied that and the infractions committee removed it from the list of violations.

Most major infractions involved Darville, former acting director of the university's Office of Minority and Special Student Affairs.

He was found to have given about $3,700 to athletes from the OMSSA's special loan account, about $6,700 in benefits to 10 athletes through the manipulation of journal voucher payments and at least $9,000 in other loans and payments to other athletes.

The committee said 23 athletes from 1983-88 were involved with Darville, who subsequently was convicted of three counts of theft by swindle and served prison time.

NFL urged to deny Houston Super Bowl

AUSTIN (AP) — Several Texas civil rights activists want the NFL to reject Houston's bid for the 1995 Super Bowl unless Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday is recognized as a state holiday.

League spokesmen said team owners will be aware of the status of Texas' King holiday, but there is no prerequisite that a state recognize the slain civil rights leader.

"Nationwide, the Martin Luther King holiday is not a criterion in evaluating Super Bowl bids," league spokesman Greg Aiello said in New York. "We have no reaction in Texas to this. We have no comment on it."

North Dakota Gov. George Sinner is expected to sign a bill Thursday creating a state holiday there, leaving only Arizona and New Hampshire without a full or optional holiday in memory of King, who was assassinated in 1968.

A King holiday became an issue when Commissioner Paul Tagliabue recently pulled the 1993 Super Bowl from Phoenix after Arizona voters last November defeated a referendum reinstating the paid state holiday.

In Texas, King's birthday is observed jointly with Confederate Heroes Day on the third Monday in January. State offices remain open with a skeleton crew, and people who took the day off must give up another state holiday, such as Texas Independence Day or San Jacinto Day.

Mario Marcel Salas, co-chairman of the Martin Luther King Jr. March Committee in San Antonio, said his group isn't satisfied with the arrangement.

"In my opinion, we're basically no different than Arizona," Salas said.

"We're not asking for the state to be named after him," the Rev. R.A. Callies, also of San Antonio, said. "We're just asking for one day."

NFL owners are scheduled to meet with Tagliabue in Minneapolis in May, and may discuss Houston's bid then, NFL spokesman Reggie Roberts said. He said a decision on where to hold the 1995 Super Bowl probably won't be made until next year.

Houston, New Orleans, Miami and Tampa, Fla., have been named as top contenders for the game.

Salas said he and others would decide whether to urge a Super Bowl boycott of Texas after the Legislature considers a bill proposed by Sen. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio.

Tejeda's bill would set aside the third Monday in January as a full paid state holiday honoring King. The measure also would move Confederate Heroes Day from January to June 3 because it is "inconsistent with some of the ideas that Martin Luther King Jr. promoted."

Tejeda said the bill could go before the Senate for debate within a week.

IOC considers South Africa

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — A delegation from the International Olympic Committee said Wednesday it would support South Africa's return to Olympic competition if apartheid is abolished and other tough conditions met.

The six-member Commission on Apartheid and Olympism made its recommendation after five days of meetings with government, sports and black leaders.

South African sports officials portrayed the decision as a victory, but it was far less than what most privately had predicted: That the commission would recommend readmission to the IOC.

It also was uncertain if the conditions could be met in time for South Africa to compete in the 1992 Summer Game in Barcelona, Spain. Commission chairman Keba Mbaye said South Africa's compliance would be reviewed in 180 days but noted invitations for the 1992 Olympics must be sent a year in advance, by July 25.

"I'm not trying to give ... a message to try and hurry up, but these are the facts," he told a news conference.

The delegation demanded the abolition of apartheid and unification of South African sports bodies into non-racial groups before IOC admission would be granted.

It said an umbrella sports organization formed to push for unity must comply with the Olympic Charter, which calls for sport practiced without discrimination. It further demanded the organization normalize relations with international sports bodies, particularly the Association of National Olympic Committees of Africa.

Many member nations of ANOCA are strong supporters of the African National Congress, South Africa's leading black opposition group. The ANC has opposed the lifting of sanctions, including sports ties, until the black majority gets national voting rights.

"Until these conditions are met, the International Olymnpic Committee requires the continuation of the moratorium applied to international competition with South African sports organizations," said a statement read by Mbaye.

He dodged questions on what would constitute the "abolition" of apartheid, South Africa's system of racial segregation. President F.W. de Klerk has promised to repeal apartheid laws but has made no commitments on giving the black majority voting rights.

The delegation statement expressed concern about the development of sports facilities and levels of coaching for all "disadvantaged groups" and said government and corporate help were needed to end inequities.

Commission member Kevan Gosper said the group was "very encouraged" it was able to reach the decision it did. Commenting on South African leaders' hopes for more, he said, "I applaud their optimism. They don't realize how delicate the steps for the return of South Africa to international sport are. We've been studying it for three years."

Johan du Plessis, secretary general of the umbrella unity group, called the commission's decision "tremendous news" and said he expected South Africa to meet the panel's conditions quickly.

South Africa last competed in the Olympics in 1960 in Rome. It was barred from the Games after that because of apartheid, and its IOC membership was formally suspended in 1970.

South African officials have said IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch indicated he would help the country prepare for re-entering Olympic competition on short notice. It was not known if Samaranch would allow South Africa to enter the 1992 Games after invitations had been extended.

Some black groups, including the militant Pan Africanist Congress, have called for the sports ban against South Africa to continue until all vestiges of apartheid had been eliminated.

ATLANTA (AP) — An Atlanta woman's paternity suit against former baseball player Steve Garvey has been thrown out by a Georgia appeals court, which ruled that judges in the state have no jurisdiction in the case.

Rebecka Mendenhall, an assignment editor for Cable News Network, filed suit in Fulton County Superior Court in 1989, alleging that Garvey fathered her son, born the previous October, and backed out of an agreement to marry her.

Garvey maintained that since he lives in California and the child was conceived there, the Atlanta court should not have jurisdiction. A Superior Court judge last year rejected that argument, but the Court of Appeals agreed with Garvey in a decision this month.

The appeals court, in its March 6 decision, noted that the child was conceived in California and the reported agreement to marry was made there as well.

Writing for the court, Judge A.W. Birdsong Jr. wrote that Georgia's paternity law clearly applies only to children conceived in this state.

Attorneys for Mendenhall asked the court to reconsider, but their request was denied Monday.

Mendenhall was one of two women who alleged that Garvey fathered their children about the same time he was marrying a third woman in California.

Prices fall

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures prices settled mostly lower Wednesday amid expectations that the world's oversupply of crude oil will persist, with large deliveries of gasoline destined for New York next month.

Activity was centered on the gasoline pit at the New York Mercantile Exchange, where contracts for April delivery of the fuel expire Thursday.

Anticipation of too much gas kept traders out of the market despite the approaching summer driving season, when demand for gasoline is at its peak.

Traders are concerned that OPEC output will remain high and that prices will continue at depressed levels.

In natural gas trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the May contract was unchanged at $1.395 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Stocks gain

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 49.01 on Tuesday, rose another 2.72 to 2,917.57.

Dollar climbs

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar reached its highest level in a year against the German mark Wednesday as comments from Germany's top economic official fortified the currency's post-war rally.

The move came after remarks by German Finance Minister Theo Waifel that his nation could live with the German mark at its current levels.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.7405 from $1.7545 late Tuesday.

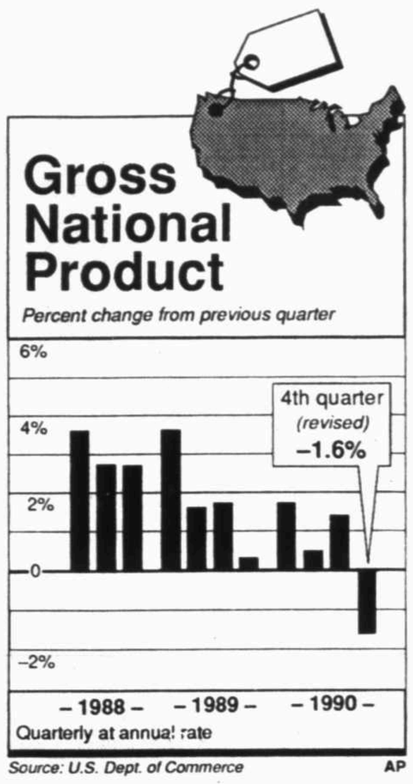

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late rates Tuesday, included: 1.4560 Swiss francs, up from 1.4330; 5.7930 French francs, up from 5.7240; 1,269.50 Italian lire, up from 1,253.00; and 1.1593 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1602.

■ An improvement in the fourth quarter 1990 gross national product is the first tangible signal that the economy is recovering from recession.

By Martin Crutsinger

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy shrank at an annual rate of 1.6 percent in the final three months of 1990, a significantly smaller downturn than previously reported, as spending on the Persian Gulf military buildup helped to cushion the decline, the government said Wednesday.

The new Commerce Department report on the gross national product — the country's total output of goods and services — raised hopes that the current recession will indeed be short and shallow.

Some private economists said the administration may well be proven correct in its forecast of a return to GNP growth in the April-June quarter, but they cautioned that huge, leftover debt from the 1980s was likely to dampen a recovery.

The Bush administration, however, held to its optimistic belief that the country is on the verge of a rebound that could rival the peacetime record for growth set in the 1980s. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady noted that a variety of business barometers are flashing recovery signs.

"We have seen the first tangible signs of a turnaround," Brady told the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. He cited a big jump in consumer confidence following the end of the Persian Gulf War and February increases in sales of existing homes and new home construction.

"The return to positive growth will be based on strong exports, lower and more stable oil prices, increased credit availability, lower interest rates and renewed consumer confidence," he said.

While the administration is projecting growth returning quickly to levels above 3 percent a year, private economists were much more pessimistic, predicting a weak recovery because of the huge debts being carried by consumers, businesses and the federal government.

Some analysts also questioned when the turning point might come. While some said the recovery could begin in the second quarter, as forecast by the administration, others said that an upturn might not appear before September — or even later.

Analysts said that the strength will have to be found in consumer spending because export growth, the main bright spot last year, is likely to be held back by weakness in America's major overseas markets.

Given the fact that more than 1 million people have already lost their jobs and paychecks since June, however, analysts said that consumer buying power will be constrained even though surveys are showing a jump in confidence levels since the end of the war.

"Consumers can be as confident as they want, but if their financial ability to go out and spend is not there, it won't do

Pacific Enterprises to close Midland office

■ Another oil company has announced that it will leave Midland in an effort to consolidate operations.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Oryx Oil Co. announced earlier this month that it was consolidating its Midland office into Oklahoma City, removing 120 jobs from Midland. Seven Pacific Enterprises employees in Midland are involved in operations and nine in exploration.

Joe Vallely, vice president for public affairs said most of the employees would be transferred to Denver or Wichita Falls and that some would be terminated.

He said the office was being closed as part of a company-wide restructuring to maximize efficiency of operations. The exploration functions of the Southwest Region in Midland and the Midcontinent Region in Oklahoma City will be merged into the Rocky Mountain Region in Denver and operations will be coordinated from the Wichita Falls office.

Pacific Enterprises Oil Co. U.S.A., a subsidary of Pacific Enterprise a Los Angeles holding company has extensive production on the Burnett Ranch of North Texas, and employs approximately 400 nationwide.

The California holding-company also owns Southern California Gas Co. a primary utility in Southern California and Thrifty Drug Stores of Southern California, giving it a base in energy, retail and utilities.

Volkswagen concept car has self-parking system

NEW YORK (AP) — The old Volkswagen Beetle had an advantage in parking — it was small. But a new Volkswagen concept car goes a long step beyond that: it parks itself.

Researchers at the world's No. 4 car maker have developed a Look-Ma-no-hands parking system that can do it all, even parallel park.

Volkswagen officials and media doubters gathered in Central Park on Wednesday for a demonstration of the automatic parking system in Volkswagen's Integrated Research Futura concept car.

The sleek, gull-wing car was driven out of its parking spot by a Volkswagen engineer. At the point most drivers begin craning their necks and twisting their bodies into unnatural positions, he simply got out.

With a push of a button the steering wheel turned, and the car moved backward, forward, backward and forward again until it was neatly parked a hairsbreadth from the curb.

Heiko Barske, head of research for the Volkswagen Group, joked that "The next generation of car will be able to drive itself — and the driver can just stay home."

The automatic parking system works via a battery of laser sensors and supersonic sensors on the front and sides of the car.

The sensors read how far the car is from the curb and from cars in front and back of it. It then translates that data to a computer that makes the correct calculations.

Directors oust Abboud as First City chairman

By Susan Fahlgren

HOUSTON (AP) — The board of directors for First City Bancorporation of Texas on Wednesday ousted A. Robert Abboud as chairman and named longtime board member C. Ivan Wilson as his successor.

The First City board said it had determined "a change in senior management would best facilitate the company's ongoing capital program and operating needs."

Abboud will remain a director of the company.

"As a longtime member of the First City system, I am pleased to have been asked to join the executive management of the company," said Wilson, who has a 35-year history with First City and most recently served a chairman of the board and chief executive officer of First City, Texas-Corpus Christi.

"I look forward to working with the board to meet the challenges that lie ahead," Wilson said.

Abboud

Abboud, the former chairman of First Chicago Corp., led a recapitalization of First City in 1988, the largest investor-led bailout in U.S. history. But the company has stumbled badly in recent quarters and critics have blamed Abboud for the troubles.

After eight straight profitable quarters, things began to sour for First City in June 1990 with estimated second-quarter earnings of 30 percent below the second quarter of 1989. By the

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Jackpots subject to federal income taxes

By Bill Doyle

Q. Like many people, I dream of hitting a "biggie" in a state lottery or at an Atlantic City or Las Vegas casino. How is income tax levied on such winnings and when is it paid? Is it withheld the very day I am a winner?

Doyle

A. Dreamer, you had better wake up to the fact that the odds are tremendously long against you. However, if you do get extra lucky, your winnings will be subject to federal income tax.

A 20 percent withholding tax will be applied if your winnings top:

1. $5,000 in a state lottery;

2. $1,000 in a sweepstakes, wagering pool or other lottery, including a church raffle;

3. $1,000 from other wagering transactions, if the proceeds are at least 300 times as large as the amount bet, such as the wagers on horse races, dog races or jai alai.

If tax is withheld from your winnings, you will receive a Form W-2G, showing the total winnings and the amount withheld. Assuming it is a real biggie, the 20 percent bite might not satisfy your income tax obligation. In that case, you will have to cough up the difference in quarterly estimated tax payments or when you settle your year's bill with the Internal Revenue Service April next year.

Interestingly, winnings from bingo, keno and slot machines are not subject to withholding. But that does not mean those winnings escape taxation. A W-2G is issued when winnings exceed $1,200 from bingo or the slots or $1,500 from keno.

You get a copy of your W-2Gs. So does the IRS, to feed into its computer system headquartered in Martinsburg, West Virginia. If you don't report and pay tax on your gambling winnings, the Martinsburg Monster will flag your income tax return and you will hear from the revenooers.

Q. Where am I supposed to list lottery and other gambling winnings on my federal income tax return? More importantly, where do I list my gambling losses, to get a tax deduction?

A. You are required to report all your gambling winnings as "other income" on Line 22, Form 1040.

If you can substantiate them, gambling losses — not exceeding your gambling winnings — can be taken as "miscellaneous deductions" on Form 1040's Schedule A. Because the rules prohibit reporting gambling losses larger than gambling winnings, you cannot claim a net loss from gambling. That has caused great sorry among many horse players I have known.

Q. Suppose I win $10,000 in a state lottery this year. What is to prevent me from claiming I buy $200 worth of lottery tickets every week, so that my losses are more than my winnings and I therefore owe no income tax on the $10,000?

A. If you try that ploy, be sure to have $10,400 of losing lottery tickets tucked away — $200 for each of the year's 52 weeks — to produce when your return is questioned, as is virtually certain to be the case.

Also, if you expect the IRS to believe you played the lottery that heavily and had only one winner, you are among the world's greatest optimists. The revenooers would then want to know why you didn't report other winners.

This is another example of the burden of proof being on the taxpayer. Unfair? Perhaps. But that's the way our federal tax system works.

Q. If I scrounge around the racetrack and pick up a bunch of losing parimutual tickets other betters have thrown away, will that convince the IRS I lost as much as I won?

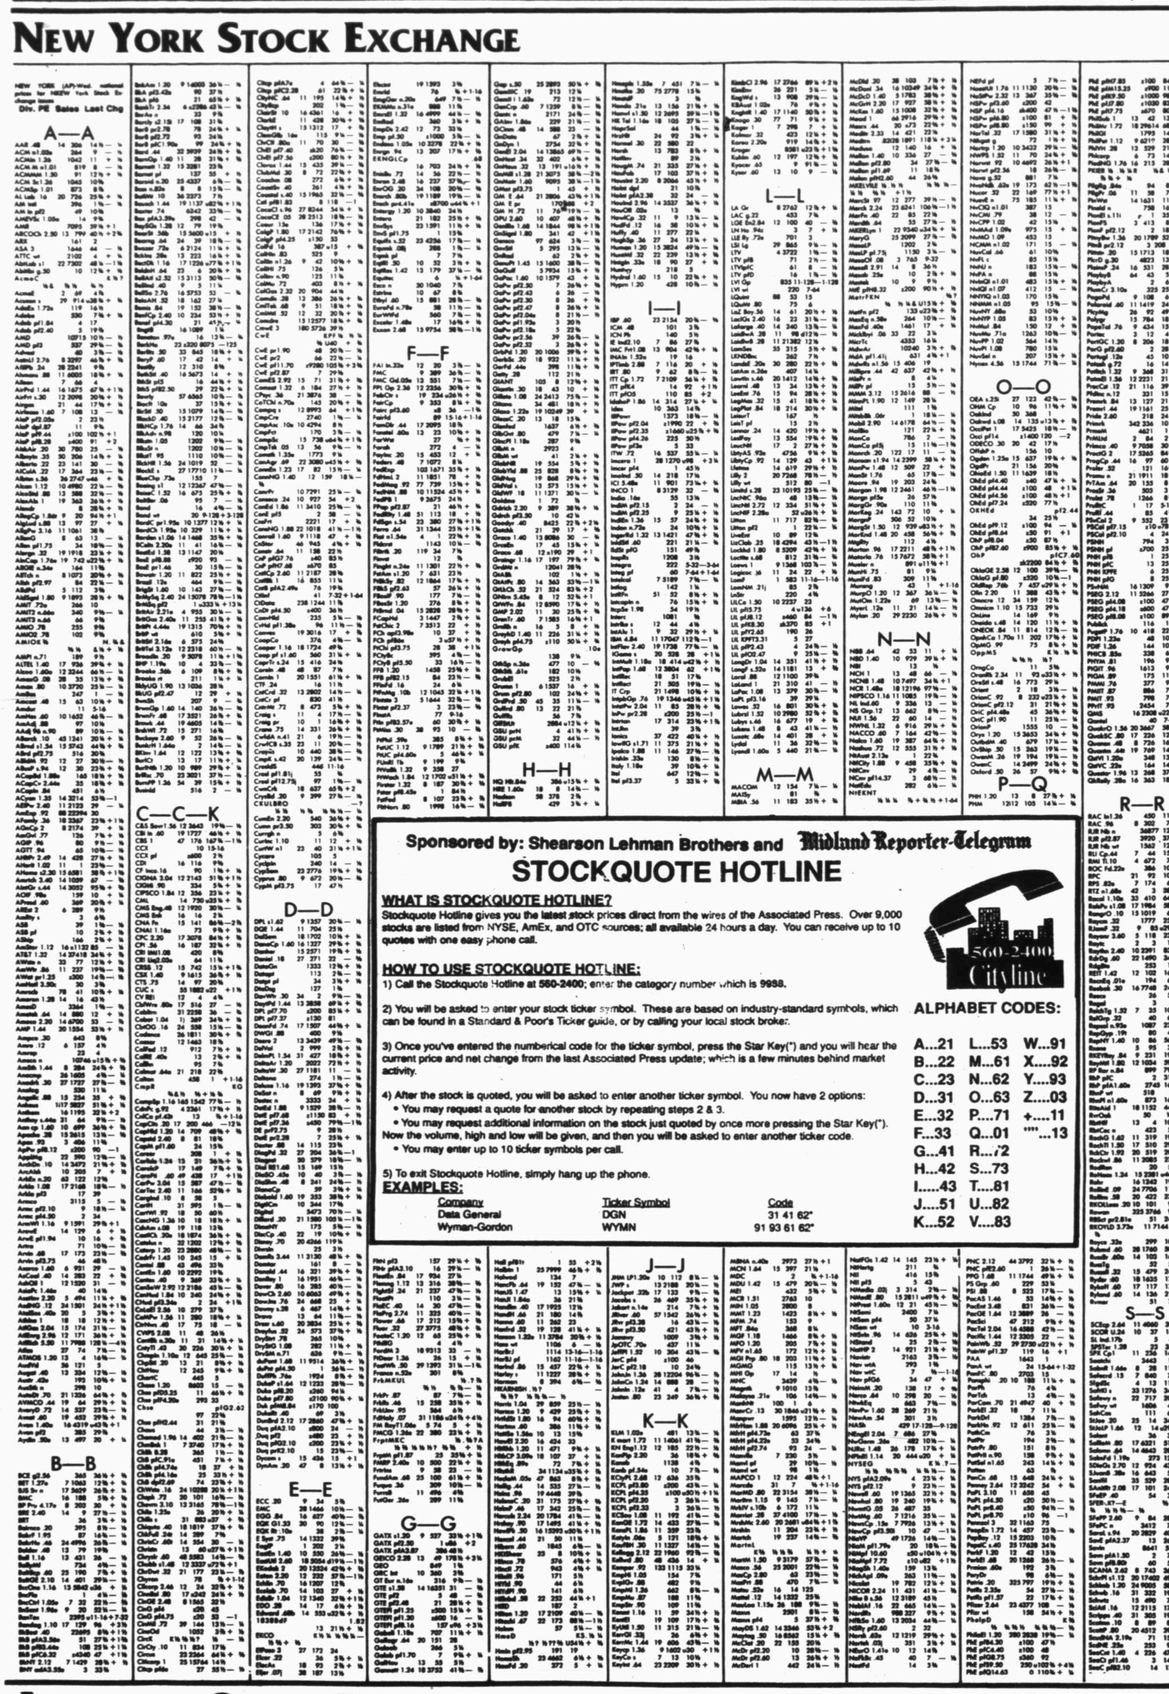

A. You had better not show tickets betting on a number of different horses in the same race. That would be a dead giveaway on your scheme.

Analysis

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 49.01 points on Tuesday, rose 6.68 to 2,921.53 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 866 up, 644 down and 496 unchanged.

Analysts said money managers at investing institutions still seemed to be buying stocks to beef up their portfolios before making first-quarter reports to clients.

When stock prices took off in January, various measures showed many institutions with a large amount of cash reserves.

Given the strong performance of the market since then, pressure naturally tends to fall on managers to show a heavy commitment to stocks.

Brady says bank reform can avoid bailout

By David E. Rosenbaum
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady said Tuesday that no taxpayer bailout of the nation's banks would be necessary if Congress approved the administration's proposed banking legislation and if the economy avoided a complete collapse.

Brady

In an interview in his office, Brady gave an upbeat appraisal of economic prospects, but he suggested that the Federal Reserve could prolong the recession if it became "preoccupied with inflation" and kept interest rates too high.

Over the course of an hour, Brady addressed these other topics:

—Resolution Trust Corp., the agency overseeing the savings and loan bailout, will not be able to go out of business by the summer of 1992 as the law requires, and new legislation will be needed to allow the agency to continue to take over failed institutions after that.

—The United States should not help rebuild Iraq, as it did Germany and Japan after World War II, as long as Saddam Hussein is in power.

—The secretary expects that a report from his staff within the next day or so will show that Saddam has assets hidden in the United States and other Western countries.

—The United States will not give new credits and other financial benefits to the Soviet Union in the immediate future because of the Soviet crackdown in the Baltic states.

—If Congress passes legislation to cut Social Security taxes, he will advise President Bush to veto it.

Some officials say that so many banks will fail in the next year or two that the bank insurance fund will become insolvent. The government would then have to step in and pay off the depositors, as it has done in the savings and loan industry at a cost of up to $500 billion.

Brady said he was "very close to promising" that a taxpayer bailout of the banks would not occur unless the economy performed much worse than expected and "you have a pusillanimous reaction by Congress" to the administration's banking proposal.

The central parts of the proposed legislation would permit banks to open branches nationwide and allow mergers between commercial banks and other institutions like investment banks, brokerage houses and even industrial companies.

Interstate banking stands a good chance of being approved by Congress, but passage of the mergers proposal is much more in doubt.

Brady seemed of two minds about whether he should take an all-or-nothing approach toward the legislation or settle for the parts he can get from Congress quickly and abandon the rest.

At one point, he said he would not make the "mistake" of agreeing to tackle the elements of the measure piecemeal. But later in the interview, he said: "I'm not naive enough to think that when you put legislation in, there won't be changes in it. Of course, there will be."

Agreeing with many economists, Brady said he expected the recession to end by midsummer, and he said he was spotting some encouraging signs.

"Oil prices are down; interest rates are down; consumer confidence has taken a bounce back; home sales were up," he said. "So the leading indicators are leading."

"If the economy is managed properly," he said, "we can have an upward-sloping economy, hopefully in the 2 to 3 percent range, over a long period of time."

But Brady said the recession was brought on in part because the Federal Reserve kept interest rates too high in 1989 and the first half of 1990, and he worried aloud that the central bank might keep rates too high this spring and summer out of concern over inflation.

The government reported last week that consumer prices rose by 0.2 percent in February and that when energy and food prices were excluded, they rose by 0.7 percent. Many economists said they found the latter figure to be a troubling indication of incipient inflation, but Brady said he did not. He said the increased resulted primarily from one-time increases in the cost of postage stamps and the excise tax on cigarettes.

Brady said that inflation was now primarily "within the services area" and that he had tried to convince Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, that higher interest rates would not bring down this kind of inflation.

The Federal Open Market Committee, the policy-making arm of the Federal Reserve, met Tuesday, but its decisions on what to do about interest rates might not be known for some time. The prevailing view on Wall Street is that the central bank will not make any moves for at least another couple of weeks while it tries to get a better reading of how the economy is performing.

"We ought to be focusing on growth," Brady said, "not inflation."

Even if the recession lingered longer than he expected, the secretary said, he did not foresee the administration offering any measures like extended unemployment benefits in response. He said experience had shown that such steps would not become effective until the rebound was well under way.

"I don't think we ought to be pouring gasoline on an already-starting fire," he said.

French firm loses $1.2 billion

N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — France's leading computer producer, Compagnie des Machines Bull, reported Wednesday as expected that it lost 6.79 billion French francs, or $1.19 billion, in 1990. The loss compared with a $45 million deficit in 1989.

Bull said it would take a charge against current earnings of 3.62 billion francs ($635 million) for a 20 percent reduction in its 44,000-employee work force by the end of the year and the closing of seven of its 13 factories.

Bull's chairman, Francis Lorentz, said the moves would lower Bull's break-even point and increase profit margins. He predicted that Bull would break even next year, and would be profitable in 1993.

Bull reported 1990 revenues of 34.6 billion francs ($6.07 billion), down 16 percent from 41.2 billion francs the previous year with the revenues of Zenith Data Systems, which Bull acquired in 1989, included on a pro forma basis.

Bull officials attributed 40 percent of the company's losses to American operations, for which sales plunged by 31 percent, or $550 million. In 1987, Bull acquired control of Honeywell's computer operations.

Lorentz said the French government planned to inject about $350 million in capital in Bull this year.

Survey finds consumer confidence higher

■ A survey finds consumer confidence took its biggest jump in 20 years in March thanks to victory in the Persian Gulf.

N.Y. Times News Service

America's quick victory in the Persian Gulf War spurred consumer confidence in March to its biggest monthly gain in more than 20 years, according to a survey.

The New York-based Conference Board said Tuesday that its consumer-confidence index rose nearly 22 points to 81.0 in March, from 59.4 in February.

The monthly data is based on a reading of 100 taken in 1985, considered an "average" level of consumer confidence. The information comes from surveys sent to 5,000 households nationwide.

"Consumers are very optimistic about the future, which is largely due to America's victory in the Persian Gulf," said Fabian Linden, executive director of the business research organization.

In the Pacific states — California, Oregon, Washington, Alaska and Hawaii — the index stood at 100.3, up from 84.9 in February and the highest regional confidence level in the country.

Linden cautioned that the increase was tempered by concern about the immediate economic future and that the Pacific region index was lower than a year ago.

A separate index measuring consumers' attitudes about their present situation stood at 85.5 in the Pacific region, compared with 167.8 for the like period a year ago.

Nationwide, only 10.3 percent of the 5,000 households surveyed think jobs are plentiful, while 35.5 percent say jobs are hard to find. The number of new unemployment claims reached more than 500,000 in the week ended March 9 and inflation has remained high.

Linden also said that more people in March than February thought general business conditions were worse, though the number of people who say they intend to buy a home rose to its highest level in three years.

More people in March than in February planned to buy a major appliance in the next few months, but fewer planned to buy a new car soon.

Some economists expressed caution over the results.

"Consumer incomes have been eroding rapidly because of job losses over the past several months," said David Cross, a consultant with the Futures Group in Washington, D.C.

Cross said that unemployment and concern about job security have held back spending despite consumers' confidence about the future.

John Golisch, a partner with Arthur Andersen & Co., said that the true measurement of recovery will be when "consumers start spending money again."

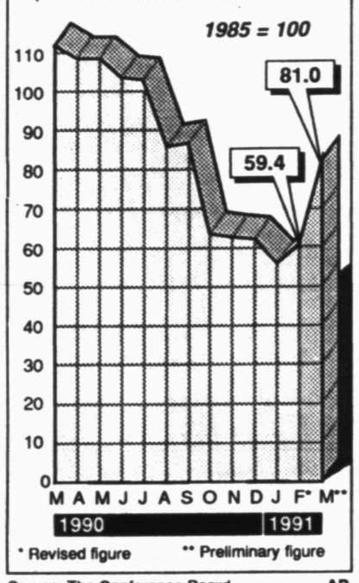

Other economists say the March figures indicate a recovery is under way.

"The two major negatives for the economy have been removed — tight monetary policy and the war," said Lynn Reaser, vice president and senior economist for First Interstate Bancorp.

Reaser and other economists said that a recovery in the housing market has been evident over the past several weeks.

Frederick Cannon, vice president and senior economist for Bank of America, said that there is broad-based evidence of rising confidence.

"My belief is that we've seen the bottom of this recession," he said. But he cautioned that recovery will be slow because of the federal deficit, consumers' long-term debt and other factors.

anything for the economy," said Paul Getman, an economist with Regional Financial Associates of West Chester, Pa.

Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co., called projections for a March economic rebound premature. He forecast a return to positive GNP figures by September but said widespread debt burdens would likely produce growth rates far below 3 percent.

"'Anemic' and 'sub-par' would be the best way to describe the coming upturn," he said. "It will be very hard for consumers to mount any big spending surge given the fact that joblessness is still growing."

Another report Wednesday emphasized the strains American companies are operating under. The Commerce Department said that the profits of U.S. corporations from current production posted their first back-to-back annual declines in two decades.

Corporate production profits were off 3.8 percent last year after falling an even larger 7.7 percent in 1989. That was the first time that has occurred since 1969 and 1970.

Analysts said the profit squeeze would make employers even more reluctant to hire back workers and was expected to also depress business investment spending, another key area in which the administration anticipates growth.

The 1.6 percent GNP decline in the October-December quarter represented an upward revision from previous reports. Two months ago, the GNP decline was estimated at 2.1 percent; last month, it was put at 2 percent.

The new-found strength came in the country's trading performance, which added $37.7 billion to the economy in the fourth quarter as U.S. sales abroad rose sharply and American companies reaped greater profits from their overseas subsidiaries than originally estimated.

NCNB finances reported improving

CHARLOTTE (AP) — NCNB Corp.'s financial picture appears to be improving for the first time in a year, but analysts say problem loans could hold back the company's earnings.

"They're getting some credibility back," said Moshe Orenbuch, a bank stock analyst with Sanford C. Bernstein Co. in New York.

The company expects earnings to be strong when the first quarter ends March 31. And one of the key measures of basic earnings power — interest income — is making a strong comeback.

The rest of Wall Street seemed to agree and for the second day in a row NCNB's share price was up sharply. In trading on the New York Stock Exchange Tuesday, the stock closed at $33.75, up $2.375.

Charlotte-based NCNB, North Carolina's largest bank, Monday said it would report first-quarter earnings of between $120 million and $130 million. That compares with an anemic $31.2 million in the fourth quarter.

Much of the increase will come from pretax gains of $65 million to $75 million from selling off securities, such as government bonds.

However, there are still signs of weakness in NCNB's loan portfolio. The company said problem loans — plus foreclosed real estate — will increase $110 million to $160 million from the current $948.3 million.

That's greater than the $101.7 million increase in the fourth quarter.

But a recent examination of the bank's commercial loans by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency called for no changes. Sometimes banks are urged by regulators to stop trying to prop up troubled borrowers.

Among the loans examiners scrutinized were those made to companies deeply in debt or for leveraged buyouts.

Susan Carr, an NCNB investor relations officer, said NCNB was not asked to do anything different with those loans. "They felt we were addressing (the loans) properly," she said.

The real question for the future is how much NCNB will have to continue pumping into its reserves against bad loans. Every dollar put in reserves comes directly out of earnings.

In the first quarter, NCNB will inject between $60 million and $70 million into reserves. That compares with $185.8 million in the fourth quarter.

Orenbuch said NCNB will report fewer problem loans as the year progresses. That means less money shunted into reserves.

But Mark Lynch, a bank analyst with Bear Stearns Cos., New York, said he thought NCNB would still have to boost its reserves later this year.

"I don't expect earnings to be at this level for the rest of the year," he said. He expects earnings to check in at about $90 million in each of the remaining three quarters.

Last summer, NCNB revealed that it had "paper losses" of $150 million on its bonds.

CAR: Volkswagen officials showing off prototype

(From 7C)

Barske said the automatic parking system could be incorporated into Volkswagen models in as little as five years. But it would add $5,000 to $10,000 to the sticker price of a car — if the sensors were already included, Barske said.

Still, Volkswagen officials have been showing off the Futura around the world "to demonstrate the promise of modern technology."

Besides push-button parking, Barske said the sensors could set off an anti-tailgating warning signal telling motorists when they're getting too close to another car. He said they were also toying with the idea of having the car automatically brake itself.

But Barske said it is the parking feature that grabs everyone's attention.

MOVE: Oil firm leaving

(From 7C)

Pacific Enterprise Oil Co. has been active since the 1960s, but became active nationwide and in the Permian Basin in 1983 when it acquired Terra Resources and in 1988 when it acquired Sabine, which had extensive production in the Gomez field of Pecos County. "While we own a gas utility," said Vallely, "we are an exploration and production company, that goes after everything it can find. We don't necessarily concentrate on natural gas."

The company now produces approximately 34,800 barrels daily of oil and 120.5 million cubic feet of natural gas.

end of the fourth quarter 1990, First City posted losses of $166.3 million, or $9.34 a share.

First City announced Wednesday that it expects to report a first-quarter loss of about $50 million to $75 million, after a loan-loss provision estimated at $60 million to $85 million. Non-performing assets, which were at $493 million as of Dec. 31, 1990, are expected to increase by about $75 million to $125 million at the end of March.

The Houston-based holding company said its search for new capital could result in a merger or acquisition by a more strongly capitalized entity.

First City said it would be working with the investment banking firm of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. to find at least $200 million in additional capital.

Julian designs for thinking man

By Nancy Miller Lewis
Copley News Service

"The world economy — and policies — face hard times. When times get tough, they make people think. And the consumer will think before he buys," observed designer Alexander Julian.

Julian, speaking at the Men's Fashion Association spring shows in Los Angeles, voiced the serious concerns not only of the fashion industry but of the world at large.

This spring, the common wisdom in the men's apparel industry is that people won't be consumed with fashion. They will, however, still want to dress to feel good about themselves. The solution, then, will be to put the emphasis on separates and accessories. While many men may pass on buying a new suit, they still may purchase a new blazer and trousers. And new shirts and ties are always going to be needed.

Julian's way to lessen the burden of a stressed-out society is what he terms "occupational therapy" — a style of dress that incorporates comfortable touches into proper business attire.

"The Wall Street power look left a bad taste in everyone's mouth," Julian noted, and he proceeded to show a gray-ish China blue — not navy — business suit with stylish shirt and tie. When the jacket was removed, uncovered was a set of antique denim braces made from old Levi's. He said such a down-home accessory was his "psychological warfare."

JULIAN'S CHOICE of quiet colors for sportswear and brighter hues for accessories such as ties and suspenders was repeated throughout spring's best menswear collections.

The designer from North Carolina also pointed out that there is an acceptable alternative to the formal business suit. Sports jackets, Julian said, long have been used effectively by European executives. Now American men are finding such ensembles appropriate and comfortable "with and without a tie."

Even the businessman's white or powder-blue shirt has become optional.

Perry Ellis designer Roger Forsythe teamed a basic khaki suit with a darker taupe dress shirt and sparked up the outfit with a colorful tie. Another of his ensembles combined a navy blazer with deep golden trousers, a chambray shirt and bright tie.

Forsythe, who made his remarks via a prerecorded video because he was in Europe working on his fall collection, said such shirt-and-tie combinations are the key to updating and individualizing a businessman's look. The emphasis, he noted, is on a personal this-is-me style, rather than on fashion that turns heads.

OF COURSE, FASHION wouldn't be fashion if a three-day show didn't include some head-turners (or at least some outfits that would cause everyone to roll their eyes). While there will be many great new-looking basics available this spring, there also will be a not-so-grand collection of junk clothing that will do no more for a man's body on the outside than a glazed doughnut will do for his inside.

Take a pair of polyester-and-rayon walking shorts that were shown with a jacket, black midcalf socks and heavy black shoes. Take a cream-and-red striped cotton jumpsuit. Take the jeans that came down the runway unsnapped and only partially zipped (and this was on purpose). Please, take them all. They weren't witty; they were simply offensive.

On the other hand, something that won't be offensive will be this spring's prices. Because manufacturers predicted a flat economy, cost increases should be so minimal that, if present, they will hardly be noticeable. Indeed, a number of resources announced that they were bringing out blazers that would cost less than $200.

Spring's best fashion bets listed

By Nancy Miller Lewis
Copley News Service

Do you need some pieces to freshen up your wardrobe quickly and effortlessly? Try these suggestions on for size:

- Something with a hood, be it a hooded T-shirt to wear, possibly, under a double-breasted jacket or a black hooded blazer.
- A navy-and-white striped shirt to wear with cream-color pleated shorts.
- A lightweight black raincoat that can be worn over business clothes or formal attire.
- A chambray shirt to wear to the office. (Pair it with a bright floral tie.)
- A linen single-breasted jacket to wear all summer long.
- A mauve silk T-shirt to wear over a teal silk T-shirt. This is stylish leisure dressing that doesn't look wimpy.
- A jacquard-patterned sweater.

DEAR ABBY

Step back to school was leap forward

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Many times I have read in your column, "Go back to school no matter how old you are." I took your advice.

Three years ago, I had a choice to go on welfare or go to school. Since I didn't want to raise my children on welfare, I chose school. It was hard for me to think of going to school, as I had dropped out at 16 and didn't want to go back with a bunch of younger people. I started college and worked on my G.E.D. at the same time. I also found out that people of all ages went to school. Going back wasn't as hard as I thought it would be because it was what I really wanted.

Van Buren

I'm proud to say that I will be graduating from the Mohave Community College May 10 at the age of 36.

Please keep telling people to go to school. It's the best thing I ever did for myself. Thank you, Abby. — DEBI SMITH, LAKE HAVASU, ARIZ.

DEAR DEBI: Don't thank me — it was you who recognized good advice when you saw it, and you went for it! Congratulations.

Although our home is small and we are getting up there in years, we took Cheryl and our grandchild in. She has never paid one penny toward their keep.

Cheryl has started to date again, and she expects my wife and me to take care of our grandchild. We don't mind, except that Cheryl comes in at 3 or 4 a.m., and when her boyfriend comes to our house she takes him upstairs to her bedroom. She also lounges around in her nightclothes and lets him put his hands all over her regardless of whether my wife and I are in the room. This goes on right in front of her daughter, too. What an example she is setting!

My wife's health is bad and she can't take much more of this. We have high morals and do not believe in sex outside of marriage. Cheryl says she's over 21 and can do as she pleases. We don't say much to her because it will only cause a fight. What do you suggest? — PROBLEMS IN ST. LOUIS

DEAR PROBLEMS: Tell Cheryl that although you can't tell her what to do, as long as she is living under your roof she will have to abide by your standards — which means no entertaining her boyfriend in the bedroom.

If your demands will cause a fight, so be it. But unless you put your foot down now, nothing will change. Cheryl will not easily give up the free room and board for her and her daughter, so when you deliver your ultimatum, stand firm, and do not give an inch! I wish you well.

People are eating them up! For Abby's favorite recipes, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

People have built-in prejudice about foods

By Erma Bombeck

My husband says he hates spinach, but he doesn't know what he's talking about. Just because he doesn't like it canned, frozen or fresh, he thinks that's a reason. I swear, people have a built-in prejudice about certain foods and they're just too stubborn to change.

Bombeck

The other night I served a casserole, and before I could put a spoon in it, he said, "I don't like spinach."

"How do you know it's spinach?" I asked.

"Because it smells like spinach and it's green."

"There you go," I said. "You haven't even tasted it and already you have made your decision."

"How long have we been married?"

"Forty-one years."

"I have hated spinach longer than we have been married," he said. "Why are you so evangelistic about it?"

"Because it's driving a wedge between us. We share the same children, the same politics and the same religion. Both of us like Liza Minnelli's version of 'New York, New York' better than Frank Sinatra's. So why can't we eat the same food?"

"Because we are not the same person."

"Just taste it. Would it kill you just to taste it?"

"I have tasted spinach salads, spinach soups, meats and pastas stuffed with spinach, spinach pizza and spinach egg rolls ... spinach steamed, creamed, sauteed, fried, chilled, broiled and blanched, and I still don't like it."

"This is different. It's Spinach Surprise. It has cream sauce and hard-boiled eggs. Taste."

"You are turning into one of those fruitcake people — the ones who are always stuffing a piece of dough with 35 dead fruits baked in it into your mouth and saying, 'But this one is moist.'"

"How dare you compare me to fruitcake people. They're sick!"

"You're getting there."

"You know, you really are something. You ate spinach at Harriet Toucan's house a few weeks ago and raved about it."

"Those were greens."

"Same thing."

"I don't know why you have dedicated your entire life to force-feeding spinach to me when you won't touch a piece of broccoli."

Aren't men amazing? If he can't tell the difference, I can't explain it.

N.Y. Times News Service

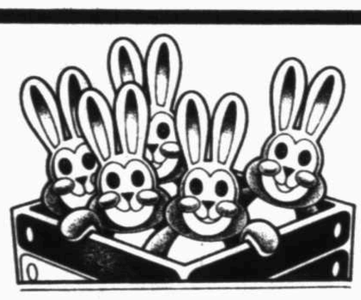

A product for men has been found to be popular with women, and no wonder: It's a lotion. It's a fragrance. It's a humectant, and it's New West's Sensual Desert Nectar, a women's fragrance.

The thick, silky lotion was launched in California recently after the success of New West, a men's fragrance collection.

After a year of sales of New West, Aramis found its new customers were women. Marketing manager Mark O'Berski said 20 percent of the New West buyers were women, wearing the scent themselves.

TODAY'S CHILDREN like to have their own way but respond well to logical explanations for rules. Count on these artistically inclined Aries to react strongly to their environment. If at all possible, let these youngsters choose the color of their bedrooms and clothing. A desire to perform sometimes leads them to become class cut-ups. Wise parents will see that their flair for drama is channeled into appropriate activities. Singing, dancing or acting lessons will prove a sage investment.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♠

South wisely judged his hand as balanced, but too strong for a 16-18 point no trump opening because of the six-card suit. Hence the opening bid of one club followed by the jump to two no trump, in theory promising 19-20 points.

West led a spade and dummy's queen held. That gave declarer five fast tricks outside of clubs, and it seemed the tricks that were needed to land the game could be developed safely in clubs. Declarer realized he could afford to lose a club trick, so long as the danger hand, East, could be kept off lead to prevent a spade return through the king.

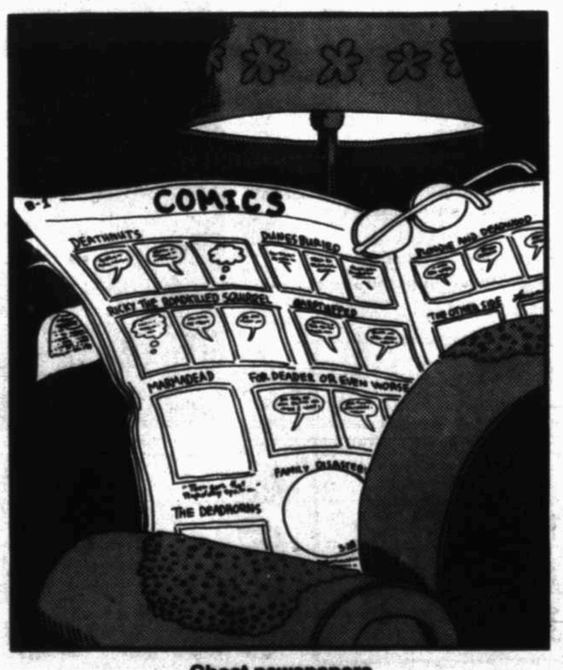

Declarer decided to take a club finesse, since if West did hold the queen there was no immediate threat in spades. To that end South cashed the king of clubs, and West's queen was a bitter blow. When West did indeed show out on the second round of clubs, declarer could not establish the club suit without allowing East to gain the lead. Down one.

No one can fault declarer's plan. Indeed, we would have adopted the very same one had we been playing the hand. However, we would have taken a little extra care in handling the club suit.

At trick two, correct technique is to come to hand with the king of diamonds to lead a low club toward the king. If West produces a low club, we would shoot up with the king and take a club finesse, guaranteeing the contract as long as the suit divides 3-2. But when West follows with the queen of clubs, the contract can be assured by allowing that defender to hold the trick. Now the king of spades would have been protected and the club suit established, and we would have landed the contract with an overtrick.

Kasparov predicts downfall of Soviet communist system

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — World chess champion Garry Kasparov has a bit of advice for Americans who want to see a more democratic Soviet Union: "Leave us alone."

Kasparov, 27, a vocal opponent of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, said he is convinced that communism will die by itself in his homeland, without outside help.

Kasparov

"If you leave us alone, within a year, there will be no Gorbachev, there will be no Communists. There will be something else. It will happen," he said Monday.

Kasparov was in the Los Angeles area developing a series of chess videotapes and software.

Born in the Soviet republic of Azerbaijan, Kasparov said his defeats of former world chess champ Anatoly Karpov mirrored the struggle between the old order and the new at home.

"Chess is black and white," he said. "Karpov, Kasparov, pro and anti. I didn't have my anti-communist ideas at that time. That came later. All our matches were a step ahead of the changes in the country."

NEW YORK — The Newman Foundation, Paul Newman's philanthropy, has donated $1 million to Sarah Lawrence College to honor his wife with the Joanne Woodward Chair in Public Policy.

The Newman family already has a lot invested in the liberal arts school in suburban Bronxville. Woodward earned a degree there last year after 10 years of study. She's also a trustee, and two of the couple's daughters went there.

Newman

Sarah Lawrence President Alice Ston Ilchman said the money will go to encourage the school's 1,000 students to seek careers in public service.

"We teach our students to be constructive troublemakers," she said in today's The New York Times. "That is, informed, self-aware citizens who have the instinct to question, to address complexity and to work for their beliefs."

Woodward pushed the school "to be more involved publicly on policy issues, particularly on environmental questions," Ilchman said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music veteran Roy Acuff expects to return to the Grand Ole Opry stage this weekend after taking two days off for eye surgery.

Acuff has appeared on the program since 1938.

"I feel good for an 87-year-old," he said Tuesday night in a brief interview on the "Nashville Now" show on cable TV's The Nashville Network.

MEDFORD, Mass. — Ted Turner, whose 24-hour Cable News Network reshaped broadcast journalism, will receive an honorary degree and give the main address at Tufts University's 135th commencement May 12, the school said Wednesday.

Tufts also will award honorary degrees to singer Harry Belafonte, medical author Oliver Sacks, novelist Dick Francis, South African civil rights leader Dr. Mamphela Ramphele, Indian educator Moonis Raza and Dr. Etienee-Emile Baulieu, credited with developing the RU-486 anti-pregnancy pill.

"Ted Turner, through his cable television empire, has opened channels of dialogue and promoted better understanding of humanity's problems throughout the world," Tufts President Jean Mayer said.

"Cyrano," the tale of the long-snouted genius who breathes passion and poetry into the mind of a tongue-tied soldier, was France's strongest entry in years. Nominated for five Oscars, it won just one, for best costumes.

In a radio interview, Lang said, "I would have been stupefied had things happened differently. That would have signified a veritable cultural revolution in the United States."

As for Depardieu, embroiled in a controversy over whether he saw or took part in a rape at age 9, the actor said he was happy for Jeremey, winner of the best-actor Oscar, but "very disappointed for 'Cyrano.'"

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music singer Dottie West may have stashed crystal, porcelain, Oriental rugs, paintings and other items to protect them from being auctioned by the court, a U.S. bankruptcy trustee said.

The items, if found, could be sold to partially satisfy a debt of more than $1 million West listed in an August 1990 bankruptcy petition, Trustee John C. McLemore said Tuesday.
