V.E. Curry of the Concho Caliente Ranch in San Angelo talks to his miniature horse at the West Texas Charity "Mini" Horse Show held last weekend in Odessa. The show, the first miniature horse show held in the Permian Basin, was a benefit for Ballet Midland.

Big interest shown in miniature horses

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The first miniature horse show ever held in the Permain Basin was a smashing success, according to one of its organizers who is also one of only two Midlanders who own the prized animals.

Karen King, 27, is project chairman and president-elect of Ballet Midland, the beneficiary of last weekend's show which was held outside the Ector County Coliseum. The West Texas Charity "Mini" Horse Show, sanctioned by the American Miniature Horse Association, drew more than 100 horses from as far away as Missouri and Colorado.

"There's been a lot of interest here — especially for a first show," Ms. King said.

Ms. King was showing Charro of Arenosa, a 5-year-old black and white pinto stallion, who has been named "best of show" several times, and N.F.C. Brandywine, a red gelding with a flaxen mane and tail. The horses are kept near Houston by Ms. King's parents, former Midlanders Ronnie and Doris Bumpers, who participated in the show. Her grandparents, Joe Don and Odean Scott of Plainview, also were involved in the event.

Connie Scharbauer of Midland also owns a miniature, she said, but until now there has been nowhere to show the horses in the area.

The horses were judged by James King of Monahans and Winston Dick of Odessa. The many exhibition categories included pleasure driving (which included horses pulling a miniature Wells Fargo stagecoach and buckboard), costume (which featured one horse outfitted like a ballerina), showmanship, obstacle and roadster driving, and best of show.

The ballet set no goal for the fundraiser, Ms. King said. Monies will be raised by donations from patrons of the ballet, and by the exhibitors, who paid to enter the show.

The miniature horse first appeared several hundred years ago in Europe, when Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III, kept two to pull her carriage.

"They showed up in royalty a lot after that," Ms. King said.

They were also used in England and Northern Europe as early as 1765 to pull ore carts. Some were brought to the U.S. in the late 1800s and used in mines in Ohio and West Virginia.

Now, 17,000 miniatures are registered in the United States, and the number is growing, according to the AMHA.

Ms. King said she has shown her horses in Fort Worth at the Fat Stock Show and Rodeo, in Houston, and in Lexington, Ky., where the AMHA Nationals were held last year.

"I've been very active in showing the horses for the last two years," she said.

AMHA standards require that the horses be no taller than 34 inches as measured at the "withers," or last hairs of the mane. The most attractive horses have perfect proportions, are well-shaped, and preference is given to a smaller horse, according to the AMHA.

'Normal' flooding caused by rains

Today's most un-West Texas-like drizzle caused the usual flooding to city streets, soaked cotton fields, and filled county pot holes — with water.

"Just the normal, routine flooding" invaded some Midland streets, said City Engineer Harvey Hansen this morning. "There was nothing serious."

As usual with a rainfall here, drainage pumps were turned on to stabilize the water levels at Wadley-Barron Park, Hill Park and Cowden Park, where natural playa lakes catch runoff. "We turn the pumps on almost as soon as it starts raining," Hansen said.

"The slow rains like this don't bother us much," he added.

But in the southeast part of Midland County, some low-lying areas were flooded by runoff.

"Everything is wet," said Commissioner Scott Welch, who lives off Midkiff Road in rural Midland County. "It's hard to fix potholes when it's raining," he said.

The drizzling rain that started Monday evening, overnight and today gently settled 1.04 inches of moisture over the land. Some of the water soaked in. Other water just ran off.

The rain brought the rainfall total so far this year to 9.06 inches, which is ahead of last year's comparable year-to-date total of 7.75 inches. This year, rainfall also is running 3.21 inches higher than the National Weather Service 5.84-inch "normal" rainfall through June.

Last year's total rainfall of 32.13 inches was almost 2½ times the 13.7-inch yearly normal rainfall, the NWS reported.

Tonight will be mostly cloudy with a 50 percent chance of thunderstorms, a low in the mid-60s, and southeasterly winds at five to 15 mph. Wednesday the forecast is for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, a high in the mid-80s, and southerly winds at 10-20 mph.

West Texas farmers — who nearly always welcome rain — are perhaps enjoying too much of a good thing, and would prefer hot, sunshiny weather that is ideal for young cotton.

"This old cotton needs sunshine," said Midland farmer-cattleman Hoot Leonard. "We're in the last days of the planting season."

Leonard noted that "nearly always" farmers are "wishing for rain.

"We're usually looking back in the west for rain clouds to rain on us," he said.

Commission to continue economic development

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

All that remains for the Garden City SSC Commission is to "mop up" now that the decision not to pursue independent federal submission of the site has been made, according to a member of the Big Spring delegation who supported moving ahead with the bid.

Commission member and Gail-area rancher John R. "Rich" Anderson said this morning that the body decided to continue meetings aimed at cooperative efforts between the cities, but that future economic development proposal decisions must be based on what monies are left over once all SSC bills are paid.

Commission Chairman Ralph McLaughlin said that money could total $30,000 to $50,000, but the figures are "pure conjecture" at this point.

Meeting Monday at the San Angelo Convention Center, the commission's board of directors voted 13-10 against continuing efforts on behalf of the local site. The commission elected not to submit the site proposal directly to the Department of Energy without the blessing of the state.

Anderson said that other specific economic development targets have not been selected because "the group has worked so hard on the super collider site."

West Texas Chamber of Commerce Engineering Subcommittee member Dave Dorchester, who attended Monday's meeting, said that Big Spring's was the only delegation voting unanimously on the fate of the site. The group voted in favor of submitting a "renegade" application.

Midland, Odessa and San Angelo delegations all were split in their vote — with Midland leaning in favor of continuing and the other two cities predominantly opposed, according to Thane Akins, SSC project manager.

Commission members on both sides of the final decision agreed that three factors impacted on the outcome of the project.

"The political implications of honoring a commitment to abide by the state's decision, financial considerations and the belief that it is time to move on to new projects with the leadership and cooperation generated by the SSC project all weighed on voting against further efforts," explained Bill Griffin, president of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce.

Anderson said he felt less bound by the commission's "commitment" because wording that support for the state-selected site would hinge on the scientific or economic superiority of the other sites was dropped from the final copy of the letter drafted by the commission.

"Because those words were dropped, I never felt bound to support the Dallas and Amarillo sites," Anderson said.

Lawyers, other professionals expand businesses to aid aliens

By MIREYA NAVARRO
Hearst News Service

In San Jose, Calif., Legal Records Service, a national record-retrieval company, has opened an office to serve undocumented immigrants who need to prove their years of residency in the United States.

In Bellingham, Wash., Allpoints, Inc. has won a contract to fill out legalization papers by phone. The company expects to generate $5 million in gross revenues over the next year by processing amnesty applications under the new federal immigration law.

In San Francisco, a medical clinic is moving into the building that houses the Immigration and Naturalization Service legalization office. So are attorneys, translators and other professionals who, for a fee, will help immigrants apply for legal status.

When Congress passed the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, it meant to offer amnesty to an estimated 4 million people who have lived here illegally. But the law has also opened up a new market for certain services, and businesses and professionals are jumping in with hopes of cashing in on the action.

"There's a considerable investment," says Jack Stephens, chairman of Missoula, Mont.-based Metropolitan Analysis Retrieval Systems Inc., or MARS. But he adds, "We have looked into the cost factor and, yes, we can make a profit."

MARS is typical of the businesses that are expanding because of the new immigration law. A national consulting firm, the company felt its experience in processing job applications for corporate clients made it logical to move into immigration work. The firm, with three central offices and 80 employees, already had the computer network and the know-how; now it's hiring 315 more employees and opening 63 more offices in anticipation of at least 150,000 amnesty clients.

THE COMPANY'S INS-designated offices charge $100 for handling each application. The fee also covers fingerprints and photos.

Immigrants visit an office where they are told what's required to complete an amnesty application. Then they're given a toll-free phone number they can call to have their application filled out over the phone. The system was devised for efficiency, allowing the company to handle two to three times as many applicants.

Allpoints Inc., the company hired to do the phone interviews for MARS, is increasing its six-member staff to 16, some of whom are fluent in Spanish and Chinese.

Legal Records Service, a 12-year-old Philadelphia-based company, anticipates serving 20 percent of all amnesty applicants through its newly formed Immigration Management Services Inc. subsidiary. Deriving its expertise from the handling of record requests in asbestos-related litigation, the company now digs up utility bills, school records and other documents that can help an immigrant meet the residency requirement of the new law.

IMS, which has opened offices in San Jose, Los Angeles, New York, Houston, Chicago and Philadelphia, began the service three months ago. It charges $50 for each document, $550 for a package of up to 20 records.

The single biggest chunk of the newly created immigration market is going to attorneys. Their legal expertise is vital to amnesty applicants who have problems meeting some of the law's requirements.

Hall says she enlarged paper shredding scope

Iran-Contra Affair

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fawn Hall testified today that she expanded the scope of paper shredding in Oliver North's office last Nov. 21 because she wanted to dispose of documents that "in my mind were private" records of her boss' activities in the Iran-Contra affair.

In her second day in the witness chair, the government secretary also said North watched without visible emotion last Nov. 21 as President Reagan announced his dismissal at a televised news conference.

"He didn't get angry, didn't bang the table, didn't say bad words. He just took it," said Miss Hall, answering questions under a limited grant of immunity North's former secretary said in her second day as witness at Congress' nationally televised hearings.

Asked by Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., why she shredded documents and removed papers from North's office in a surreptitious manner as the Iran-Contra affair was exposed, she replied that she was trying "to protect the initiative."

"Who were you protecting it from?" Rudman asked.

"We were trying to get back the hostages and we were dealing with moderates (in Iran) and...I just felt there would be a lot of damage done if a lot of top secret sensitive classified material was exposed in public so the Soviets and everyone else could read it," she said.

"Well it wasn't the KGB that was coming Miss Hall, it was the FBI," replied Rudman.

Leaders at summit declare oil flow 'must continue unimpeded' in gulf

VENICE, Italy (AP) — Western leaders, at the midpoint of their 13th annual summit, declared today that the free flow of oil "must continue unimpeded" through the Persian Gulf and embraced a superpower plan to eliminate hundreds of nuclear missiles in Europe and Asia.

Besides giving President Reagan diplomatic support on the troublesome Persian Gulf situation, the leaders underscored concern about the threat of terrorism. Just hours before they made that statement, summit serenity gave way when military frogmen scurried to retrieve a suspicious-looking metal box — rendered harmless — from a nearby Venetian lagoon.

In Rome, 340 miles away, small explosives rocked the American and British embassies shortly before Reagan sat down to breakfast with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Before the debris was cleared the leaders had approved their annual condemnation of terrorism, this time emphasizing a determination not to make concessions to terrorists or their sponsors.

The bomb shattered windows and set fire to parked cars near the embassies today and bombs exploded on grounds of the U.S. and British embassies.

A woman who was near the car that blew up was hospitalized for shock, police said. There were no other reported injuries.

An anonymous caller to The Associated Press in London linked the attacks to the summit, claiming they were the work of the Anti-Imperialist International Brigade. Callers last year using the same group name claimed responsiblity for the assassination of the French military attache in east Beirut and for bomb and rocket attacks on the U.S., Japanese and Canadian embassies in Jakarta, Indonesia.

In Venice, military frogmen found a suspicious-looking device in a lagoon not far from the summit site and blew it up. An Italian official called it a mine from World War II and said it was not connected with terrorists. The U.S. Secret Service said it was merely a harmless metal box.

Statements of East-West relations, terrorism, the Persian Gulf and other matters were issued in the name of the leaders of the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Canada.

Planned Secord speech protested by lawyers

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A group of liberal lawyers Monday protested the State Bar of Texas' plans to have retired Gen. Richard Secord speak at the bar convention.

Secord, a key figure in the Iran-Contra controversy, will speak Friday at the annual convention in Corpus Christi. The retired Air Force general, who reportedly earns $15,000 per speech, will receive $7,500 from the State Bar of Texas. All practicing attorneys in Texas must be members of the bar.

Texas members of the National Lawyers Guild, a group of progressive attorneys, organized a protest Monday outside the State Bar headquarters.

"We think it violates not only decency but any notion of common sense," said Roberto Soto, vice president of the National Lawyers Guild and a law professor at the University of Texas at Austin.

"His only association with law, the best we can tell, is as a probable criminal defendant," Soto said.

Bill Whitehurst, president of the State Bar, said he invited Secord, who engineered much of the arms-for-hostages deal, to the convention so Texas lawyers could question him. Bar members should not ban someone from speaking at the convention, Whitehurst said, simply because the speaker is controversial.

"We're having a forum on national affairs, international affairs," Whitehurst said. "I've invited Secord to come because he is clearly the one who is in the spotlight right now in international affairs. By doing this, we by no means sanction anything that he's done."

Whitehurst emphasized that Secord's $7,500 fee would come from money raised at the convention, not from mandatory bar dues. However, he acknowledged that the bar convention generally loses money, so the money might come from bar dues if the convention doesn't at least break even.

Soto, who was joined by more than two dozen protesters carrying signs, said the bar should withdraw its invitation to Secord, whom he called a criminal, a profiteer and a liar.

Davis testifies he was at film during killings

By MIKE COCHRAN

FORT WORTH (AP) — Fort Worth industrialist Cullen Davis testified that around the time his 12-year-old stepdaughter was fatally shot 11 years ago he was leaving a movie called "The Bad News Bears."

An hour or so later he said, he was in bed with his girlfriend at the time three others were shot at his mansion by a gunman dressed in black and wearing a wig.

Davis testified Monday for the first time in court about his activities the night of Aug. 2 and the early morning of Aug. 3 in 1976.

In a surprise move, attorneys for Davis' ex-wife, Priscilla, called the millionaire defendant as a witness in a $20 million wrongful death lawsuit filed against him by Mrs. Davis and another former husband, Jack Wilborn.

Mrs. Davis and Wilborn allege Davis killed their 12-year-old daughter, Andrea Wilborn.

Davis did not testify in a 1977 murder trial in which he was found innocent of killing his step-daughter.

Monday, he said that the night of the shootings he ate dinner and went to the movie alone, arriving around midnight at the home of Karen Master, now his third wife.

Karen Master Davis testified in a previous trial that Davis was in bed beside her when she awakened on Aug. 3, 1976, at 12:40 a.m., the same time the mansion murders took place.

"I was there," Davis said under questioning from attorney Bob Gibbins.

Mrs. Davis was wounded and her live-in boyfriend, Stan Farr, 30, was also killed in the gunfire that night. A young mansion visitor, Bubba Gavrel, then 22, was partially paralyzed by a bullet that remains lodged near his spine. Beverly Bass, Gavrel's date at the time and now his wife, was not hurt.

Mrs. Davis and the Gavrels testified last week that Davis was the gunman.

An Amarillo jury heard similar testimony in the 1977 murder trial before acquitting Davis in a trial that also allowed extensive testimony about the flamboyant lifestyle of his ex-wife.

The 53-year-old Davis insisted Monday he was not mad nor bitter toward his ex-wife, Priscilla, the day of the shootings but conceded he was "frustrated."

In a calm voice, Davis recalled that his divorce judge had upgraded his support payments to Priscilla that day from $3,500 to $5,000 monthly and ordered him to advance her thousands of dollars for expenses and legal fees.

The judge also had granted Ms. Davis a delay in the divorce trial.

Davis called the money a "drop in the bucket." He said his company assets at that time were worth about $100 million and that his personal and community property was valued at around $6 million.

In 1985, the oil-related family business empire, Kendavis Industries, was forced into bankruptcy.

Heart group backs checkups every five years

DALLAS (AP) — In its new guidelines for preventing heart attacks and strokes, the American Heart Association recommends physical checkups every five years for people over 20 years of age.

The AHA said that for most healthy adults a five-year schedule is sufficient.

The recommendations mark a broader approach to the silent diseases of heart attacks and strokes, said Dr. J. Alan Herd, a member of the committee that drew up the guidelines.

"This is not really pitched toward changing physician practices," he said. "There's no question that we're taking a position that (yearly checkups) may be more than is appropriate."

"What this is doing is it's putting the responsibility on the individual patient and his physician," said association spokesman Howard Lewis. "Hopefully, it will get the physician who's actually seeing the patient more tuned in to practicing prevention at the same time."

Herd said the AHA is urging doctors to tell patients about their test results and suggest appropriate diet or lifestyle changes.

The American Medical Association is in accord with the AHA study, although the five-year guideline should be used only for patients who are at zero or minimal risk, said Dr. Joseph Skom of Chicago, a member of the AMA's council on scientific affairs.

"Obviously, these tables would have to be modified depending on what your focus is and what your family history is," Skom said.

"There are some people who feel much more comfortable being examined more frequently because they need to be reassured periodically that everything is all right," Skom said.

The push for heart checkups was inspired by successful public education programs about high blood pressure, said Herd, medical director of the Institute of Preventive Medicine at Houston's Methodist Hospital.

"The transaction should be something more than, 'You do not have heart disease now. You do not have diabetes now. You do not have cancer now,'" he said.

"We have learned that the physician's efforts in suggesting to the patients that they should change are more successful than we used to think."

The AHA's recommendations, released at a news conference at the Dallas-based organization's offices, ask doctors to take the lead in a campaign of heart disease prevention and also urge patients to find out about test results.

"We don't want to make (patients) anxious about it, although if that will help, I'll do it," Herd said.

"Considering that we all expect to live into healthy older years, then it's an important personal investment and the physician can help with that."

He said the AHA recommended starting checkups at age 20 because many people with heart problems began developing the disease much earlier.

Air controllers' mix-up evidence of failings

By H. JOSEF HEBERT

WASHINGTON (AP) — A chaotic evening of traffic control in the sky over Chicago, including controllers' mixing up of two jetliners, is being cited as evidence of flaws in a federal plan to keep planes safely separated this summer.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators disclosed Monday they are examining a series of events May 29 in which airspace handled by the Chicago traffic control center may have become overcrowded while a supervisor attempted to get the O'Hare tower to increase the separation between aircraft departures from the busy airport.

Later, a Federal Aviation Administration quality control officer concluded in a hand-written memo that controllers directing westbound departures "appeared to lose the (mental) picture" between about 7:45 p.m. and 8:15 p.m. local time.

"Flights went out on the wrong beacon codes going in an unplanned direction," the quality control officer, identified only as Johnson, wrote in the memo titled, "Breakdown of Air Traffic Svc.". The document was made available by investigators.

During the 30-minute late evening rush a mix-up at the O'Hare tower added to the confusion as a controller unknowingly directed an American Airlines Boeing 727 toward another American Airlines jet that was inbound.

While the two planes came within 500 feet vertically and a quarter mile horizontally, investigators believe their route would have avoided a collision in any case. The mix-up occurred because an air traffic assistant gave the American plane's radar transponder code to a United Airlines plane also taking off.

The controller tracking the United aircraft, Flight 411, saw it on his radar screen as having American Flight 637's designator. When the controller wanted the plane — actually Flight 411 — to climb, he directed his instructions toward Flight 637, whose pilot complied and began heading toward the incoming Boeing 727.

But investigators, who provided details of the incidents Monday on condition they not be identified by name, said their broader concern was to determine whether the airspace west of Chicago was allowed to become too crowded.

"The traffic was approaching saturation. ...The (flow control) system completely broke down," one investigator said.

According to a supervisor's log at the en route control center, a shift supervisor twice had sought to have aircraft separation increased, thereby slowing down the volume of traffic, but was rebuffed by a traffic manager. After the second attempt the traffic manager said he contacted the O'Hare control tower.

"But it never filtered down to the controller," said one investigator.

In the log, a shift supervisor characterized the traffic as "a mess" and said the supervisor of the westbound sectors involved described the traffic flow "as the worst I've ever seen."

"Aircraft were working the wrong beacon code...some climbing, some not. A real screw-up," wrote supervisor Ed Laseki later in the evening. "This isn't a safe operation. We should stay with 10 miles (separation) in trail."

FAA Administrator Donald Engen took the unusual step during the weekend of making known his "great concern" about the Chicago events, which occurred a day after Engen assured a Senate hearing that the FAA's planned "flow control" procedures would keep airspace sectors from becoming too crowded as traffic grows.

NTSB Chairman Jim Burnett, who in recent months has called for the FAA to curtail flights during busy traffic periods, was unavailable for comment on the Chicago incidents.

But a safety board spokesman, Alan Pollock, said the controller errors in Chicago as well as another incident last Tuesday involving a near collision of a Northwest Airlines jetliner and a military plane over South Dakota "seem to further confirm our concern about the FAA's (aircraft) flow control program."

In the South Dakota incident, which came to light last week, the Northwest jetliner and the military plane both were directed by a controller at the Denver en route traffic control center.

One safety board source said Monday that the controller in Denver handling the two planes had 21 aircraft in his sector five minutes before the incident and 16 aircraft when it occurred.

Biden enters race, hopes to be frontrunner

By EVANS WITT

Biden

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware formally announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination today, saying his generation is ready to "pay any price, bear any burden, accept any challenge, meet any hardship to secure the blessings of prosperity and promise of America for our children."

The 44-year-old chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee painted a picture of America at risk in the late 1980s, describing "the bitter truth" of a nation he said is marked by unrestrained individualism, discontent over the failure of the political system and economic policies promising "a quick and false prosperity by consuming our children's future."

But Biden, the fifth Democrat to formally announce he is seeking his party's nomination, also offered himself as the candidate who can help "rekindle the fire of idealism in our society."

"It is in this gathering of discontent that my candidacy intends to find its voice," he said in remarks prepared for delivery at a midday kick-off. "For I believe that our citizenry contains untapped legions, whose success in other fields prepares them...to transfuse the tired blood of our politics with new ideas, new approaches and new energy.

"I fervently believe that our people are ready and anxious, and that they will rise to this challenge and opportunity like a mighty river surging thourgh the public life of America."

Disdaining those who say the nation must be "competitive" in the world market, Biden declared:

"To say that we want to be 'competitive' acknowledges that we are already losing. I am not interested in losing. I want America to win — flatout win."

Over and over, the Delaware Democrat, who hopes his sizable warchest and sparkling speeking style will propel him out of the crowd of long-shot candidates, refered to his generation and its readiness to lead America.

That is part of the appeal he has been making around the country to Baby Boom voters, who now make up nearly half of the electorate.

"Our generation is eager and ready to reclaim its special legacy and redeem the promise of America for ourselves and our children," he said.

Biden echoed the words of John F. Kennedy, whom he often refers to in stump speeches.

"In the spirit of another time, let us pledge that our generation of Americans pay any price, bear any burden, accept any challenge, meet any hardship to secure the blessings of prosperity and promise of America for our children," he said.

Biden made his announcement at a rally at the restored Wilmington train station, a familiar site to the Delaware politician who has daily traveled round-trip to Washington as a senator.

In fact, he was taking a train to Washington for a rally on Capitol Hill following his announcement here. Then he was heading off on the traditional swing through Iowa and New Hampshire.

As he began the "arduous and improbable quest," Biden went down the list of issues he said are crucial.

"We cannot succumb to the isolationist instincts of those who would put up trade walls to keep out the world or others who would pull a 'Star Wars' cover over our heads — a modern Maginot Line — ravaging our economic capital, nuclearizing the heavens and yielding the fate of our children's world to the malfunction of a computer," said Biden, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Repeatedly, Biden refered to the nation's children, saying "every issue before this nation in 1988 must be measured against our obligation to our children."

INS says only 65 Houston aliens denied residency

HOUSTON (AP) — Only 65 illegal aliens have been denied temporary legal residence and work authorization cards out of more than 4,400 in Houston who have sought amnesty under a new federal program that began five weeks ago, an Immigration and Naturalization Service official said.

That represents an approval rate of about 98.5 percent and indicates that the INS is applying the program in the equitable manner in which Congress intended, said Richard Rios, Houston INS center director.

While response to the program has been sluggish in some parts of the country, INS workers in Houston are working at near maximum capacity to process amnesty applications, Rios said.

"We envision doing 300-plus a day for the foreseeable future," said Rios.

On most mornings, lines stretch outside the Houston amnesty center, with those in line often bringing blankets, lawn chairs and radios to pass the time more comfortably.

In the INS' 22-office Southern Region, the Houston center has ranked second only to Arlington in the number of applications received, officials said.

Nationally, the INS had received more than 63,500 applications and interviewed about 52,000 people by the middle of last week, according to INS spokesman Verne Jervis in Washington.

Nationally, about 600,000 forms had been distributed, Jervis said.

Tom Crawford of Continuing Education of the Bar, a legal education outfit sponsored by the California state bar and the University of California, says there's great interest among non-immigration lawyers. A recent training seminar on the new law drew 132 attorneys, he notes.

"IMMIGRATION USED to be the stepchild of the speciality bar. Only the minority lawyers would do it, or Jewish civil libertarians," says Fred Wright Lopez, an Oakland, Calif., immigration attorney. "There are a lot of lawyers now who are trying to get into it just to do legalization.

Wright Lopez, who has a five-year-old practice, has gained about 50 more clients in the last 1½ months. That's required him to add a paralegal and a part-time secretary. He's also increased his hours, closing at 8 p.m. instead of 5 p.m., and working on Saturdays.

More dramatically, the immigration law has changed the way he works. Wright Lopez has computerized his operation with his own software program and portable computer, which has become his mobile office. The computer allows him to visit workplaces with large numbers of amnesty applicants and initiate their files on the spot. It also helps him keep track of applications coming from the same family to assure they're processed together, he says.

"Traditionally you wait for people to come to your office," he says. "Now you have to go to the unions, to the centers, wherever the clients are. I go out with a portable computer and I can do intake (of new cases.) This avoids the problem of massive papers."

Wright Lopez charges up to $950 per application, including filing an appeal if it's rejected by the INS. He charges a maximum of $2,000 for all applications coming from the same family, no matter how big. Most attorneys' initial charge range from $500 to $1,500 for each case.

But Jim Mayock, a San Francisco immigration attorney who's also expanded his practice and charges $500 per application, warns that demand doesn't necessarily translate into profits.

"We've discovered that we see clients three to five times in order to get all that's necessary to complete just the application, and spending at least an hour each time" he says. "At least 50 percent of the cases have some kind of twist to them that require more than just typing up the form. I don't see myself getting rich quick. I'm working 14, 16 hours a day seven days a week."

SUMMIT

Before resuming talks today, the leaders posed for a "class picture" in the courtyard of the 17th century Benedictine monastery that is the site of the summit.

The communiques did not commit the allies to any military role in the Gulf, where U.S. warships soon are to begin escorting Kuwaiti oil tankers to protect them from attack.

However, it urged the adoption of a U.N. Security Council resolution sought by the United States that would impose an arms embargo against Iran unless it agreed to peace talks with Iraq, its enemy in nearly seven years of bitter war.

"We reaffirm the principle of freedom of navigation in the Gulf is of paramount importance for us and for others and must be upheld," said the statement. "The free flow of oil and other traffic through the Strait of Hormuz must continue unimpeded."

After encountering resistance from allies for a stepped-up military role in the Gulf, the United States scaled down expectations for a major summit commitment. The Gulf wasn't even discussed at a 3½-hour dinner of the leaders Monday night focusing on political topics; U.S. officials said there wasn't enough time to take it up.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, interviewed on NBC's "Today" program, said, "We're not alone in the Gulf. We're certainly not alone in our views."

Shultz said "there is a lot of emphasis on the diplomatic track, frustrating though it is, because the war has not been brought to an end. We are working with our friends, in the the U.N. to find our way to a strong resolution" dealing with the Iran-Iraq war.

The summit, convened officially to consider economic matters but dominated as usual by political issues, concludes Wednesday.

On East-West issues, the communique said new opportunties are emerging in the internal and external policies of the Soviet Union for progress in improving ties. The statement expressed hope "they will prove to be of great significance for the improvement of political, economic and security relations between the countries of East and West."

The leaders said "we note with satisfaction" that prospects are emerging for reduction in nuclear weaopons. The United States and Soviet Union are near agreement on a plan to dismantle hundreds of medium-range and shorter range nuclear missiles in Europe, and to cut back on medium-range weapons in Asia.

"We appreciate U.S. efforts to negotiate balanced, substantial and verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons," the leaders said. "We emphasize our determination to enhance convential stability at a lower level of forces and achieve the total elimination of chemical weapons."

The single note of discord was a disagreement at the leaders' dinner Monday night over the next step in U.S. negotiations with the Soviets.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl urged Reagan to seek a commitment from the Soviets to take up restraints on tactical nuclear weeapons in Europe after an agreement is reached to limit medium and shorter-range rockets, it was learned.

But Reagan, with support from Mrs. Thatcher, resisted. He said the United States preferred moving on to discuss the edge the Soviets and its allies have in conventional forces in Europe.

Kohl is skeptical of the missile deal because it would remove a layer of U.S. nuclear protection. However, after more than a month's hesitation, he agreed last week to go along with the deal with the Soviets. This lowered the last major barrier to a U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms reduction accord.

Meanwhile, an American official said the summit has been "very successful from our standpoint." Another U.S. official said the summit statement on the Gulf was virtually identical to the draft submitted by the United States.

The only change was the insertion of the word "just" into a statement calling for "just and effective measures by the U.N. Security Council," the official said. Both sources insisted on anonymity.

The officials said the Gulf did not take up much of the talks because there was a general understanding of the countries' positions beforehand.

"We weren't coming here seeking anything new," one official acknowledged. "We didn't ask for very much except for the U.N. resolution and general diplomatic support."

Agreeing to step up efforts against terrorism, the leaders pledged to halt all air travel to and from countries which refuse to cooperate in cases involving not only hijackings but all other violations of aviation security.

It said the allies were resolved to apply "effective measures" against "any state clearly involved in sponsoring or supporting international terrorism." Although Libya was singled out in a similar message last year, no country was named in today's communique.

HALL

Appearing under a limited grant of immunity, Ms. Hall said North submitted his resignation to administration officials as his activities became known, but he was fired instead. Even so, he "never showed any anger" as he watched Reagan made his firing public, she said.

Under questioning from members of the House and Senate investigating committees, Ms. Hall amplified on her dramatic testimony of Monday, recounting how she slipped some documents outside North's sealed offices. She also said that Thomas Green — North's lawyer at the time — made no attempt to dissuade her.

Initially, she said "felt a little bit of uneasiness" as she altered four documents, but the moment passed because she believed North wouldn't have asked her to do anything improper.

Miss Hall said that after North began shredding documents, she decided to begin running her boss' phone logs and copies of computerized inter-office memos through the shredder. She did so in part because she needed the space in the office files, she said, but also because they were "revealing as far as conversations between Col. North and other people which I felt in my mind were private."

Asked by Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, whether the shredding was motivated by a desire to cover-up activities, Miss Hall replied, "I don't use the word coverup. I use the word protect."

"I can appreciate that very much, but how does that fall within the realm of a secretary to protect the Iran-contra initiative?" Stokes said.

"I wasn't the one initiating the protecting, sir. I — that's my answer," she replied.

Meanwhile, Israel has agreed to have a retired army general who was not involved in the Iran arms sales be questioned by U.S. investigators, the Jerusalem Post reported. The official, Rafael Vardi, helped prepare two Israeli government reports on the affair.

Israel has refused to let U.S. investigators question four Israelis involved in the U.S.-Iran arms deals. They have been subpoenaed by special prosecutor Lawrence Walsh.

Throughout her testimony, Miss Hall praised North for his courtesy to her and his commitment to his job.

"He probably was every secretary's dream of a boss," she said.

Miss Hall, a 27-year-old part-time model with cascading blond hair, kept the Iran-Contra committees spellbound during 2½ hours of testimony on Monday. Seated with her attorney Plato Cacheris, her voice appeared to shake nervously as her testimony reached its most sensitive subjects.

She said she remembered only one occasion when North spoke of meeting with President Reagan at the White House. But she said he met regularly with former CIA Director William J. Casey and called the director "Bill."

Members of the House and Senate investigating panels said the testimony clearly showed a conspiracy at the White House to obstruct justice, involving at least North and Miss Hall and possibly attorney Green.

"It's clear she engaged in an obstruction of evidence, and I don't think it was unwitting," said Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, a member of the Senate investigating panel.

Miss Hall worked for North at the National Security Council for nearly four years while he was coordinating an Iranian arms-for-hostages deal and helping funnel weapons to the Contras during a congressional ban on lethal aid.

She told how North had asked her on Nov. 21 of last year to alter the originals of four documents identified by the administration as problems, because they revealed too much about the government's role in aiding the Contras. At the time, Attorney General Edwin Meese III was beginning an inquiry into the affair that would lead to North's office and his firing.

"It was a policy of mine not to ask questions, and just to follow instructions," Miss Hall testified. "I believed in Colonel North and what he was doing. I had no right to question him."

One of the memos proposed sinking or seizing a ship bound for Nicaragua that was carrying weapons for the Sandinista government. When Miss Hall was through with it, the memo proposed only publicizing the shipment in an effort to halt its delivery.

Miss Hall also described a 30-minute shredding session that same evening in which North opened a safe and began handing her stacks of paper to destroy. At one point, the shredding machine stalled under the load. In all, she said, an 18-inch stack of paper was shredded. North's aide, Marine Lt. Col. Robert Earl, was present and helped carry papers to the shredder, she said.

The next week, after watching Reagan and Meese break the news of the diversion of funds from the Iran arms sales to the Contras in a televised news conference, Miss Hall said she discovered a six-inch stack of unfiled papers in her desk and "panicked" when she found it contained originals of the documents she earlier had altered and other documents related to the affair.

At the time, officials were securing the office and sealing documents in boxes, and Miss Hall testified that she called North, who had been fired earlier in the day, and insisted that he come to the office.

North arrived with Green late in the afternoon as she and Earl were sorting through the unfiled papers in Earl's office, away from the eyes of the security officials. She said she stuffed some documents into her boots and concealed others on her back, under her clothing. She said she asked North whether the documents showed, he said they did not, and the group left.

When they got outside the White House grounds, she told North about the papers and offered to produce them, and Green said, "No, wait until we get into the car," she testified. Green then took the party to the lot where their cars were parked, and she pulled out the documents while in his car, Miss Hall said.

She said Green then asked her what she would say if asked about the shredding, and she replied, "We shred every day." Green then said, "Good," she testified.

Committee attorney Mark Belnick said Green ceased to represent North the next day, Nov. 26. He now is the lawyer for retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, who acted as North's manager of the Iran-Contra dealings, and has retained his own counsel as well. Green did not return telephone calls late Monday.

Falwell tells Democrats to think Republican

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder of the conservative political group Moral Majority, is telling Democrats to think Republican in 1988.

"If they're real smart they'll abandon anybody that even leans left," the Lynchburg, Va., television pastor and temporary head of the beleaguered PTL ministry said Monday at the National Press Club.

Falwell said Democrats should look for someone with views similar to those of GOP candidates. He suggested former Virginia Gov. Chuck Robb or Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga.

But personally, said Falwell, his heart still belongs to Vice President George Bush — or failing that, Senate Republican Leader Robert Dole of Kansas.

"My support of George Bush has not waned," Falwell said, adding with a laugh: "If I can do him more good by condemning him publicly, I'll do that."

Falwell praised the press for helping expose the excesses and abuses of the PTL empire founded by Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker, and for underscoring the need for more accountability to protect contributors.

"You absolutely have forced the issue and it needed to be forced...on churches everywhere," Falwell said, adding he opposes government regulation but churches should be more open to the public and to independent auditors.

Falwell said leaders, be they pastors or politicians, should willingly accept the scrutiny that comes with the territory. He demonstrated his own willingness in response to questions about his finances and past.

Asked later if there was anything embarrassing in his past, the television preacher quipped, "If there was, I wouldn't say it here." Then he added, "Yes, I was raised a Democrat."

But Falwell concluded by saying neither he nor his wife of 29 years has ever had an affair, committed adultery or been disloyal.

Falwell, who has said the Bakkers were brought down by avarice and greed, told a questioner he receives a $100,000 salary for his duties as pastor of the Thomas Road Baptist Church, chancellor of Liberty University for born-again Christians, and star of television's Old-Time Gospel Hour.

He said the ministry pays for his utilities and health and life insurance, as well as a car that he said he often uses for funerals, convalescent visits and other church business. In addition, Falwell said, he is repaying a church member who purchased the home his family lives in — an 1834 plantation house valued at $240,000.

Falwell said he received a $1 million advance for a book and gives about a dozen speeches a year for which he receives $5,000 apiece. "I'm not worth it," he said, "but I don't turn it down."

Falwell took over PTL three months ago after revelations that Bakker had a tryst with a church secretary who was then paid to remain silent. Since then there have been other revelations about salaries, slush funds, debts, an air-conditioned doghouse, a palatial presidential suite, and alleged homosexual encounters involving Bakker.

Bakker has denied any wrongdoing or homosexual involvement.

"We probably told only 10 percent of what could be told. We mentioned only what we had in sworn depositions or tapes," Falwell said.

"Once the leaders were gone, the people (at PTL) responded as if they had been liberated," Falwell added later. "I hope there will be no criminal investigations and no criminal charges (against the Bakkers)...but I don't think they should come back to the pulpit."

Said Akins: "Austin doesn't worry if they offend us, I don't see why we should worry about the situation in reverse."

He added that the commission's role in future economic development efforts likely will be one of an "organization-in-wajting" that will become fully active again once a major prospect which requires areawide cooperation has been identified.

"Although each of the four cities has some relative strengths and weaknesses in attracting business, when you put the four together, they make a formidable package," said McLaughlin.

Additionally, the cooperative groundwork laid on behalf of the SSC project has taught local civic leaders the value of presenting a unified front, said Griffin.

"In the fight for highway funding, state support for the research center at UTPB and other issues, West Texans can all benefit from the unity established by the four-city commission."

Battle over Social Security ruling expected to continue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Further court battles are expected over the Reagan administration's handling of Social Security disability benefits in the wake of a Supreme Court ruling upholding a procedure that could disqualify hundreds of thousands of recipients yearly.

Eileen P. Sweeney of the National Senior Citizens Law Center said Monday's court ruling favoring the administration could turn out to be "a relatively hollow victory."

"The court could have given the administration license to arbitrarily continue" denying claims by hundreds of thousands of people, she said. "It didn't."

She said future lower court cases will decide whether the administration is carrying out the review of those claims fairly.

But Cyril F. Brickfield, executive director of the American Association of Retired Persons, said Monday's ruling is a serious blow to older workers.

"The practical impact of the decision may be to deny needed support to those who truly cannot find or hold a job," he said. "We believe the court decision does not sufficiently take into account the special problems of middle-aged and older workers."

John Trollinger, spokesman for the Social Security Administration, said the government is not denying benefits to those who deserve them. "The important thing is people who are disabled will continue to receive decisions in their favor," he said.

The Supreme Court, by a 6-3 vote, upheld a government regulation for withholding benefits based solely on medical evidence that someone is not severely disabled. The court said it is not necessary for officials to consider the individual's age, education and work experience.

But Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and John Paul Stevens, who joined the majority, expressed reservations in a separate concurring opinion over the way the regulation is being applied.

"Empirical evidence...supports the inference that the regulation has been used in a manner inconsistent with the statutory definition of disability," O'Connor said in an opinion joined by Stevens.

Three dissenting justices voted to strike down the regulation as being on its face in violation of Social Security law.

It is not clear how many would-be recipients could be denied benefits under the regulation. But court records suggest the figure could be as high as 800,000 people each year. More than 2 million claims for Social Security disability benefits are made annually.

The rule says money may be denied to those found able to do "basic work activities" even if they are incapable of performing their past jobs.

Such activities include walking, standing, sitting, lifting, pushing, pulling, reaching and carrying, as well as understanding, carrying out and remembering simple instructions.

The Department of Health and Human Services has used the regulation at an early stage of the claims review process to deny benefits to about 800,000 applicants each year. Before the rule was implemented, only 160,000 claims were denied at the same early stage of review.

HHS Secretary Otis Bowen recently eased the rule to permit more thorough review of some claims.

The regulation is the second in a five-step process for examining disability benefit claims. The regulation places the burden on the applicant for benefits to show he or she is severely disabled.

Monday's decision was a defeat for Janet Yuckert of Seattle, who was refused benefits despite a middle-ear condition that causes her dizzy spells and other problems. She said she is unable to work.

When she applied for benefits in 1980 at age 45, she was enrolled in a computer training program and had worked as a travel agent and real estate broker.

She said her illness requires her to rest her eyes every 30 minutes while reading, and that she must take naps two or three times a day.

Was Fawn Hall just following boss' orders?

Hall

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fawn Hall may have earned a niche in the folklore of America's professional secretaries.

Testifying under oath and under a grant of immunity from prosecution, Miss Hall is telling congressional investigators that when the carefully constructed wall of secrecy surrounding White House initiatives on Iran and Nicaragua collapsed last November, she was asked to do things for which she had been prepared by neither training nor experience.

A professional secretary helps her boss do his job, and Miss Hall, 27, opened her testimony Monday by telling the congressional Iran-Contra committees that that's what she did for her boss, Marine Lt. Col. Oliver L. North.

But in the panic that followed the Iran-Contra disclosures, she said she did just a little bit more, enough more that some committee members said it is clear she destroyed evidence and took part in "an obstruction of justice."

She helped North shred a stack of documents a foot-and-a-half thick.

Acting under his instructions, she retyped and materially altered the contents of a sheaf of key documents drafted the year before.

After North had been fired by a president who simultaneously told him he was an American hero, she slipped documents North had overlooked past National Security Council officials trying to secure his files.

She stuffed some in her boots and hid others "in my back."

Walking out of the Old Executive Office Building she entered a car driven by North's attorney, Thomas Greene, and handed the documents over to North.

And when she was initially asked if she had done any shredding, she said that, in "a protective mode," she misled her questioners by saying she had done nothing outside normal office routine.

There had been advance speculation by committee members and reporters as to what Miss Hall, an occasional model, would wear for her appearance.

For the record, she wore a bold and intricately patterned black-on-white short-sleeve blouse over a gray plaid skirt with a broad, shiny black belt.

She wore two thin gold bracelets on her right arm and a large wrist watch on her right wrist. Her tousled blond hair framed her face and fell over her shoulders.

Crossing her ankles under the table and folding her hands on its top, she interlaced her fingers and, as the interrogation began, made occasional small gestures with her thumbs.

As her parents and other family members sat nearby, Miss Hall told her story with apparent increasing nervousness.

She hesitated at times before answering questions put by staff lawyer Mark Belnick. At times her voice appeared to shake.

Often she answered only with a crisp, "Yes, sir," or "No, sir."

Belnick: "Did Colonel North hand you several documents and ask you to make changes?"

Hall: Yes, sir."

Was she comfortable doing that?

"I felt a little bit of uneasiness when he asked me to do it," she said. "But I believe in Colonel North and I believed there was a good reason for his asking me to do it. I did what I was told. ...I would say I wasn't really comfortable, yes. I believed Colonel North had a good reason for doing what he was doing and I was not going to question that."

Health care costs tripling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cost of health care in the United States will more than triple by the year 2000 to $1.5 trillion, according to a published report today.

The Health Care Financing Administration says Americans will be spending 15 percent of the gross national product on health care by the end of the century, up from 10.9 percent currently.

The report, outlined in today's Washington Post, says changes in the way health services are used, rather than an aging population, will be the major reason behind the rise in costs.

'Tip' building proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House of Representatives wants a new federal building in Boston named after its former speaker, Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr.

The House voted the honor for its recently retired speaker Monday, although O'Neill himself initially opposed the idea. The 11-story building is adjacent to the Boston Garden.

O'Neill, a Massachusetts Democrat, said politicians should not have anything named in their honor until they are out of office for at least 10 years. But he later agreed to the measure at his colleagues' insistence, according to aides of the Democratic congressman who won his seat, Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II.

A companion measure in the Senate, introduced by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., uncle of the freshman congressman, is pending.

Ammo in Gulf upgraded

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ammunition stored in the Navy's floating depot ships two years ago was so rusted and corroded that it would have been difficult to fight a war in the Persian Gulf at the time, officials say.

Pentagon officials said Monday that the problem has been solved with more modern "controlled environment" cargo vessels for the Navy's Maritime Prepositioning Ships fleet.

Marine Lt. Steve Banks, an ammunition storage specialist, said tests showed serious problems with ammunition stored in ships in the Indian Ocean until 1985.

"Almost all of that ammunition suffered some sort of degradation," he said.

Marine recommended

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lt. Gen. Alfred M. Gray Jr. is Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's choice to be new Marine Corps commandant.

Weinberger has forwarded Gray's name to the White House for a final decision by President Reagan, Pentagon officials said Monday.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, predicted Reagan would approve Gray's ascension to the post.

Gray would receive his fourth star and replace Gen. P.X. Kelley if nominated by Reagan and confirmed by the Senate. Gray is now commander of the Atlantic Fleet Marine forces.

Students to name shuttle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's schoolchildren will be asked to suggest a name for the space shuttle that will replace the Challenger, NASA officials say.

The replacement shuttle is tentatively scheduled for delivery in 1991 and the school project to select a name will be conducted during the 1988-89 school year, said officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Arias plan offers realistic alternative

President Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica didn't need testimony from the Iran-Contra hearings to convince him that it was time to offer something other than a military solution to the disputes plaguing his part of the world. Arias has come up with a diplomatic proposal "to strengthen democracy and thereby establish a firm and lasting peace in Central America."

The Costa Rican president has won support for his plan from the U.S. Senate and expressions of good will from the White House, though his proposals clearly fall short of the goals President Reagan has set for his own Central American policy.

Arias has just concluded a three-week tour of Western Europe, where he picked up endorsements for his plan; West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has agreed to bring it up in Venice this week. And later this month in Guatemala, Arias will offer his peace plan for discussion at a summit of the five Central American presidents.

Whether the Arias plan can end the fighting in Central America is highly debatable, but it's a plan that deserves debate. It deserves the serious attention it's been getting. The main provisions are:

■ A general amnesty and "an extensive dialogue with all unarmed internal opposition groups" in all five countries within 60 days of signature of the agreement;

■ A cease-fire and an end of all military action;

■ Initiation of a "genuine pluralist democratic process" within six months in the five countries, with "complete liberty of television, radio and press" and "free, pluralistic and honest elections" on a single day in the first half of 1988;

■ Suspension of all outside military aid and a ban on using the territory of any one of the states to attack another;

■ Negotiations on control and reduction of armaments;

■ International supervision.

Washington won't be directly involved in the Central American negotiations. But Arias is worried that the administration may try to block the plan by getting El Salvador or Honduras to demand unworkable changes. That would be unfortunate.

If the Sandinistas accept his plan, Arias observes, and refuse to apply it as promised, "it would expose them to Mexico, Argentina, Peru and all the others. Because of their ambiguity, they've been getting support all the way from the extreme left to the extreme right."

Failure of the plan due to Sandinista actions would then justify what Arias calls "an international quarantine policy." He is convinced that it would swing the many countries that are critical of United States policy to the other side. If it fails because Washington deliberately subverts it, that would give the Sandinistas a political victory that they don't deserve.

The Arias plan is certainly worth a try.

Brits in Ireland faked CIA credentials

WASHINGTON — British Intelligence printed and circulated fake CIA identity cards in Northern Ireland in the early 1970s in an attempt to discredit the U.S. spy agency, according to a former senior official in the British Army.

Jack Anderson

According to the official, Colin Wallace, the point of the bizarre counterfeiting operation was to link the CIA with the outlawed Irish Republican Army, which has carried out terrorist attacks for years in hopes of forcing the British out of Northern Ireland. Wallace was a senior information officer at British Army headquarters in Lisburn in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Wallace, who has since spent six years in prison, claims to have seen the phony ID cards printed and photocopied. In a report he sent to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in 1984, he explained why British officials were anxious to discredit the CIA. "I can recall the quite strong feeling in British Intelligence circles that the CIA had not only turned a blind eye to arms smuggling from the USA to the IRA, but also encouraged it," he wrote.

Our reporter Lisa Sylvester has seen an excerpt from Wallace's confidential report, as well as copies of the fake ID cards. One card, dated November 1972, contains the statement: "This Certificate of Credentials is issued under the authority of the Central Intelligence Agency. It is requested that the bearer be afforded the necessary help to enable him to satisfactorily discharge his duties." On the flip side is the bearer's name, thumb print, vital statistics and passport number, as well as some writing that appears to be in Oriental script.

Wallace said two different cards were forged and circulated. "They were designed to create the impression that the CIA was active in Northern Ireland. The rumor was that American intelligence believed the IRA could come under control of Eastern Bloc countries who would supply weapons and ammunition," he told us.

Wallace said he was trained to use psychological warfare in his Northern Ireland tour of duty. He said he left the service because he objected to efforts by British Intelligence to discredit and oust then-Prime Minister Harold Wilson.

Wallace's claim of a carefully planned disinformation campaign against Wilson by British Intelligence coincides with charges made by Peter Wright, a former intelligence official. Wright's book detailing the charges has been banned in Britain.

Wallace said he first made his allegations about improper British Intelligence operations in a report he submitted to a deputy minister in Parliament in 1975. In the 12 years since then, he has been charged with murder and convicted of manslaughter.

Released last December, Wallace now lives in Sussex, England. He said he was set up on the homicide charge to shut him up.

William Colby, who headed the CIA at the time, told us he had never heard of the alleged forgery of ID cards. He would not discuss CIA operations that might have been going on in Northern Ireland, but pointed out that CIA agents on covert assignments do not carry cards identifying themselves as such.

"It doesn't sound like it makes any sense to me," Colby said.

Wallace agreed. "That's quite right," he said. "But it's not a question of what the CIA would do. It's what the people in Northern Ireland believed."

The Protestant majority in Northern Ireland has long believed that Catholic Irish-Americans are the main support for the IRA. Faked evidence that the CIA was assisting in this support would conceivably discredit any U.S. efforts on behalf of the Catholic minority. Why British Intelligence would encourage this is not clear.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Remember the U.S. military officer in Vietnam who said it was necessary to destroy a village in order to save it? Well, Interior Secretary Donald Hodel apparently feels the same way about the Earth. Asking other nations to join us in curtailing the production of chlorofluorocarbons that are destroying the planet's protective ozone layer, Hodel said, would fly in the face of the administration's stand against government regulation. People should use lotions and wear sunglasses instead, Hodel added. We are pleased to inform you, Doctrinaire Donald, that you have been placed in nomination for the 1987 James Watt Prize for Incredibly Stupid Remarks. And so far, Don, you're a shoo-in.

Another View:

Educating the poor

They don't use poverty as an excuse for failure and they don't wait around for new federal programs before they start to do their jobs." The speaker was President Reagan and the institutions he was commending are schools that successfully educate poor children.

Reagan is right that "No matter who you are or where you're from, you can learn." But he's wrong to imply that schools don't need more federal help.

Educating the disadvantaged is critical to America's efforts to remain economically competitive and meet its commitment to equal opportunity. And the federal government has fallen far short of its obligation.

Nearly 13 million American children live in poverty. The occasion for Reagan's remarks was Education Secretary William Bennett's report on "what works" in teaching them. The report cites important recommendations for schools, communities and government in providing an effective education for poor children. The recommendations include establishing high expectations for achievement, preserving an orderly and safe school environment and encouraging parental and community involvement.

As the study acknowledges, disadvantaged children "stand to gain more from a first-rate education than other children." But the national interest in insuring adequate schooling for all children is equally important. A recent study estimated that dropouts from each high school class result in a loss of $68 billion in tax revenues, let alone the costs of welfare dependency, crime and diminished hopes.

Although education is primarily a state and local concern, the department study acknowledges that the federal government should support remedial and compensatory programs to help equalize educational opportunity. Since 1965 the government has done that principally through the Chapter 1 program, which provides remedial services to educationally disadvantaged children in elementary grades. Studies show that the program, now funded at $3.9 billion a year, generally improves achievement levels. But it serves only five million children, less than half of those eligible.

After years of recommending, at best, status quo funding for the program, the Reagan administration has finally proposed a $200 million increase. Congressional budget proposals would increase spending by as much as $800 million. The final result may be a compromise, but Congress has a better sense of the necessary educational investment in disadvantaged children that Reagan and Bennett concede is critical to the nation's future.

Clever front-runner Gephardt can be more

DES MOINES, Iowa — Failing to mention foreign trade in his 18-minute basic campaign speech to a mid-afternoon downtown reception, Iowa's newly-installed Democratic front-runner, Richard Gephardt, was asked about protectionism in his first question from the audience.

"I am for a free and fair and open trade," said the congressman from Missouri who has broken the veil of anonymity and become a budding favorite of organized labor by sponsoring the most notorious protectionist legislation since Smoot-Hawley. But in agricutural Iowa, the embrace of union bosses is a mixed blessing and opposition to free trade a formidable liability.

Gephardt is a clever candidate. He emulates Walter F. Mondale in enticing Democratic special-interest groups but avoids his 1984 fate of being inextricably linked with them. What worries Iowa party leaders shopping for a winner is that he might be a shade too clever.

He has transformed instantly from centrist to moderate liberal, raising his Americans for Democratic Action (ADA) rating by 20 percentage points. On abortion, he has moved from militant pro-life to moderate pro-choice. While he defied labor by opposing the last minimum wage boost, he is for an increase this time around. In 1985-86, he cast off the potentially anti-union cloak of tax reformer and clad protectionist armor as a labor warrior.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

The Gephardt Amendment, coupled with a year of visiting, made him the immediate Iowa beneficiary of Gary Hart's fall. He is the clear favorite of the United Auto Workers (UAW), one of Iowa's most potent political forces. But such support and its cause excites misgivings among Iowa Democrats. "I'm afraid Gephardt's trade position is liable to jump up and bite him on the fanny," one party leader, undecided so far in the presidential race, told us.

Sharing this apprehension are rank-and-file Democratic activists such as James McBride, a young Des Moines financial planner who backed Hart in 1984 and — like many at the Gephardt reception — is still shopping for 1988. He asked the first question that brought Gephardt's moderate response. Did it satisfy him? "I think maybe politicians give different answers to different groups," he said.

Gephardt's aides say he never has engaged in the Japan-bashing of John Connally and Fritz Mondale. But it is remarkable he omitted trade in a 18-minute, mostly upbeat vision of the future. He conceded to us that grain-exporting Iowa becomes "nervous about anybody talking tough about trade."

If free-trade Republican presidential hopeful Jack Kemp expects a mighty confrontation on trade in his forthcoming Iowa debate with Gephardt, he may be disappointed. Gephardt told us Rep. Kemp is merely "less ready to be assertive" in getting Japanese trade "practices modified — over time."

He was much harsher toward a Democratic rival, ex-Arizona governor Bruce Babbitt, who would mandate reprisals against any country running a favorable trade balance with the U.S. "If that isn't protectionist, I don't know what it is," said Gephardt, who added that he and the departed Hart "both are for free trade."

Gephardt has played a more subtle game than Mondale, who swallowed whole the UAW's blatantly protectionist domestic content bill. While voting for that proposal in 1983, Gephardt as a presidential candidate told the UAW he could not go that route and sold the union on his more moderate course.

Still, an aura of pandering persists, as when he appeared at Woody Allen's side introducing an anti-movie colorization bill in seeming courtship of Hart's show-business backers. "I haven't raised a dime and won't raise a dime" because of colorization, Gephardt told us. He had his "brains beat out" by entertainment mogul and Democratic fund-raiser Lew Wasserman and other Hollywood colorizers.

Yet, a Gephardt strategist privately admits the colorization bill was a mistake, born of the tight little Capitol Hill special-interest game where the congressman has won his political spurs. He is more attractive playing in a larger arena, calling for an America "as great and good as it has ever been."

Breaking the current Democratic presidential candidates' unwritten taboo against mentioning Soviet tyranny, Gephardt told of meeting a victim of religious persecution in Moscow who pleaded for America "to keep the pressure on." The audience, regrettably, consisted not of party activists but graduating seniors of Theodore Roosevelt High School here. Even so, it suggested the new Iowa front-runner can be more than just clever.

CHARLEY REESE

Dealing with causes provides better results

The basis of most magic tricks is misdirection. The magician with patter or gesture diverts the audience's attention away from the area where he is doing the work. We seem to have a genius for misdirecting ourselves — asking the wrong questions and worrying about the wrong problems.

Charley Reese

I've made a list of examples.

Instead of wondering how we can eliminate the deficit, we ought to be wondering why the government has to borrow money at interest and the private central bank is allowed to create it.

Instead of worrying about the trade deficit, we ought to be worried about the mass export of American jobs to cheap labor in foreign countries by American capital. A sizeable percentage of the imports which are putting Americans out of work are American owned or financed.

Instead of worrying about $600 toilet seats the Pentagon occasionally buys, we ought to be worrying about the billions in loans U.S. and allied banks provide the Soviet Union and its colonies.

Instead of worrying about Gary Hart's infidelity, we should be worried about how a man who wrote such a dumb and superficial book as "American Can Win: The Case for Military Reform" could ever have been considered as a serious public official in the first place.

Instead of dissecting the process of providing a piddling few million to the Contras, we ought to be worrying about why the Soviet Union has provided more than a $1 billion worth of arms to the Sandinistas. The Sandinistas don't need 110 tanks, mobile bridging equipment, and advanced aircraft, for which airfields are being prepared, to fight a guerrilla war.

Instead of worrying about the civil rights of people who are already dying of AIDS, we ought to be worrying about the right to life of those not yet infected with the killer bug.

Instead of probing the sex lives of Jim and Tammy Bakker, we ought to be doing almost anything else which would surely be more useful and edifying. You don't need a First Amendment if all you're going to get for it is a National Enquirer and the afternoon TV soaps.

Instead of pressuring President Pinochet of Chile, whose rule was approved by Chilean voters in a national plebescite, we ought to be asking the Chinese communists when they're going to get out of Tibet, though there are precious few Tibetans left alive even if the Chinese did end their illegal occupation.

Instead of bribing foreign allies to allow us to protect them, we ought to be providing psycho-therapy to the officials who think a bribed-ally would be worth a wart in a real fight.

All in all, we can save time, trouble and money if, as a general rule, we deal with causes instead of effects. We could save a great deal of time, trouble, money, and possibly even our lives and liberty if we could manage to reach a consensus as to who are our enemies and who are our friends.

The old saying, what you don't know won't hurt you, is almost never true when applied to government. Our government is entitled to a few secrets — things which we don't wish the Soviets to know, for example — but in most cases there is no excuse for secrecy and ambiguity.

Americans have every right to be suspicious of a government which is not open and forthright with them and ought to raise heck about it, though raising heck seems to be a dying art, like quilting.

Misdirection, however, has been raised to a fine art in Washington. Lobbyists, pols, and bureaucrats can throw up more chafe and decoys than any anti-missile system in the catalog.

It's the main reason why more money is spent than problems are solved.

Goetz testimony ends; Judge considers request to drop charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Testimony has ended in subway gunman Bernhard Goetz's attempted murder trial, and the judge said he would consider a defense request to drop most of the charges.

A medical examiner completed the prosecution's case Monday by poking a sharp stick into a dressmaker's dummy to show that one of the four young men Goetz shot could have been sitting down when he was shot and paralyzed.

The defense called no more witnesses and the judge, State Supreme Court Justice Stephen Crane, scheduled closing arguments for Wednesday.

Goetz, a 39-year-old electronics technician, is charged with attempted murder, assault, reckless endangerment and weapons violations for shooting the four, all 19 at the time, on Dec. 22, 1984.

Goetz has said he fired in self-defense, thinking he was about to be robbed, after one of the four asked him for $5. One of the men said they were merely panhandling to play video games, which they intended to break into.

After testimony ended Monday, the jury left the courtroom and Crane and the lawyers began discussing how the judge would instruct the jurors on the law.

Defense lawyers, who did not call Goetz to testify, asked Crane to remind the jury that nothing can be inferred by that. The prosecution asked the judge to tell jurors that the government did not have to prove a motive.

Earlier, Mark Baker, one of Goetz's attorneys, asked the judge to dismiss all charges against his client because of the "non-existent" case.

Baker said Goetz was rational when he fired the first shot. Between the first and last shot, the attorney said, Goetz did not have a chance to reflect on his actions, and "therefore, if the first shot was justified, then all five shots were justified."

Crane refused to dismiss the weapons counts and reserved decision on the other charges. He did not say when he would rule.

The sentence for attempted murder ranges from eight years, four months to 25 years.

The final witness, the prosecution's 35th, was Suffolk County Medical Examiner Dr. Charles Hirsch, called to rebut the testimony of Dominick DiMaio, a former New York City chief medical examiner.

Testifying as an expert, DiMaio had said that Darrell Cabey, the most seriously wounded of the four, could not have been seated when he was hit.

Hirsch said DiMaio's testimony was "completely false" and "unsupported by fact."

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Fishing Company of the State in Schuylkill (a social club which is still active) held a special meeting to plan an entertainment for George Washington and "such of the gentlemen as the company might chose to invite" on June 14 at the company's "Castle."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

The same states (New York, New Jersey, Virginia and North Carolina) and Nathan Dane assembled and dispersed again.

CONVENTION TODAY

Luther Martin (Md.) took his seat.

Elbridge Gerry (Mass.) moved to reconsider the method of electing the executive, and to have the executive elected by the governors of the states, with their votes weighted in proportion to the vote of their state in the Senate (this was before the decision for an equal vote in this body). Edmund Randolph argued strongly against this motion and it lost, 10 states no, Delaware divided. William Paterson (N.J.) then moved to resume consideration of the clause concerning suffrage in the national legislature. David Brearly (N.J.) seconded in a speech which bristled with arguments as to the injustice of proportional representation. Paterson followed Brearly with still more argument. James Wilson (Pa.) and Hugh Williamson (N.C.) then spoke in favor of proportional representation. At that point, at Paterson's request, the vote was postponed until tomorrow.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson (Conn.) paid Edward Moyston, the proprietor of City Tavern, 3 pounds, 7 shillings and 6 pence for his room for the week and dined with William White, recently returned from England and his consecration as a bishop in the Protestant Episcopal church.

Benjamin Franklin wrote the English antislavery leader Granville Sharp, enclosing the constitution of the Pennsylvania Society for Promoting the Abolition of Slavery and the Relief of Free Negroes.

LOOKING BACK
Luther Martin

It was only fitting that Maryland delegate Luther Martin should take his seat on the day when the small states launched their attack on proportional representation, for the few who recognize his name do so because of his extreme state's rights stand. But, he was more constructive than that.

Born in the Raritan Valley in northern New Jersey in 1744 or 1748, Martin graduated from Princeton in 1766, receiving an M.A. in 1769. After several years as a teacher on the Eastern Shore of Maryland and Virginia, he was admitted to the Virginia bar in 1771. Within a year or two he moved to Somerset County, Md. Active on the committees of the early Revolution, in 1778 he had been named Maryland's attorney general. In 1783 he married Maria, daughter of the noted frontiersman Thomas Cresap, and by 1787 had fathered the three daughters born to that marriage. He had also acquired a reputation for excessive drinking.

In the Convention, Martin stood with the most ardent supporters of states rights. He opposed a bicameral national legislature, opposed proportional representation, wanted the states to decide how to choose members of the federal lower house, opposed letting Congress veto state laws, wanted the executive chosen by electors appointed by the state legislators, opposed a federal court system except for a supreme court, opposed allowing the federal government to supress rebellions within a state, wanted Senate votes cast by state, supported requiring a two-thirds vote in Congress for duties or acts regulating commerce, wanted a Constitutional limit on the size of the federal army in peacetime, and wanted ratification to be by unanimous vote of the state legislatures.

As a member of the Committee on Representation, Martin supported the Connecticut Compromise. He didn't like it but was willing to try it rather than do nothing. It was he who moved to include the provision we know today as the supremacy clause. It was he who moved the addition of the words "or on confession in open court" to the treason clause and who originated the motion which prohibits discrimination among ports in levying duties or regulating commerce.

Finally, himself the owner of six slaves, it was Martin who sought at least a tax on slave imports, noting with regard to the provision on the slave trade that "it was inconsistent with the principles of the revolution and dishonorable to the American character to have such a feature in the Constitution." He opposed ratification.

Men chose 'Nancy' when asked who they'd like to spend time with BALTIMORE (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan edged out Heather Locklear and Raquel Welch in a Gallup Poll asking men ages 25 to 34 who they would most like to spend an evening with.

Mrs. Reagan's 3.7 percent was more than any other woman named by respondents in the open-ended question asked of almost 400 men in a telephone poll conducted between Jan. 19 and Feb. 28. She also was the top choice among married men ages 18 to 34, with 5 percent.

"We never dreamed that young guys would answer Nancy Reagan," said Andy Kowl, editor of Fast Lane magazine, which commissioned the survey.

Tied for second among men ages 25 to 34 were Ms. Locklear and Ms. Welch; followed by Cybill Shepherd; Christie Brinkley; Whitney Houston; Victoria Principal; Linda Evans and Lynda Carter, who tied for eighth; and Loni Anderson.

Among married men, Ms. Locklear finished second, followed by Ms. Shepherd and Ms. Carter, tied for third; Ms. Welch and Margaret Thatcher, tied for fifth; Ms. Houston and Ms. Principal, tied for seventh; and Ms. Anderson and Vanna White.

New employee demand took 'fall' in April

NEW YORK (AP) — Demand for new employees, though higher than a year ago, fell slightly during April, the most recent month for which figures have been compiled based on help-wanted advertising.

The Conference Board, a business research group, said its index measuring classified advertising in 51 major newspapers fell to 144 from 150 in March. In April 1986, it stood at 132.

Despite the April drop, the volume of help-wanted ads has been rising modestly since November, leaving "little doubt now that labor demand has, in fact, begun to rise," said Conference Board economist Kenneth Goldstein.

"In April, help-wanted ad volume was almost 9 percent higher than one year ago, which suggests that the pace of business activity is strong enough to allow labor demand to expand," he said.

The only part of the country showing an increase in April was the Pacific region, up 1.8 percent. Slippage from March to April in other regions ranged from 8.1 percent in the West North Central region to 1.6 percent in New England.

The month-to-month declines in the other regions were: 6.6 percent, Middle Atlantic; 7.2 percent, East North Central; 4.7 percent, South Atlantic; 6.1 percent, East South Central; 6.1 percent, West South Central; and 7.8 percent in the Mountain region.

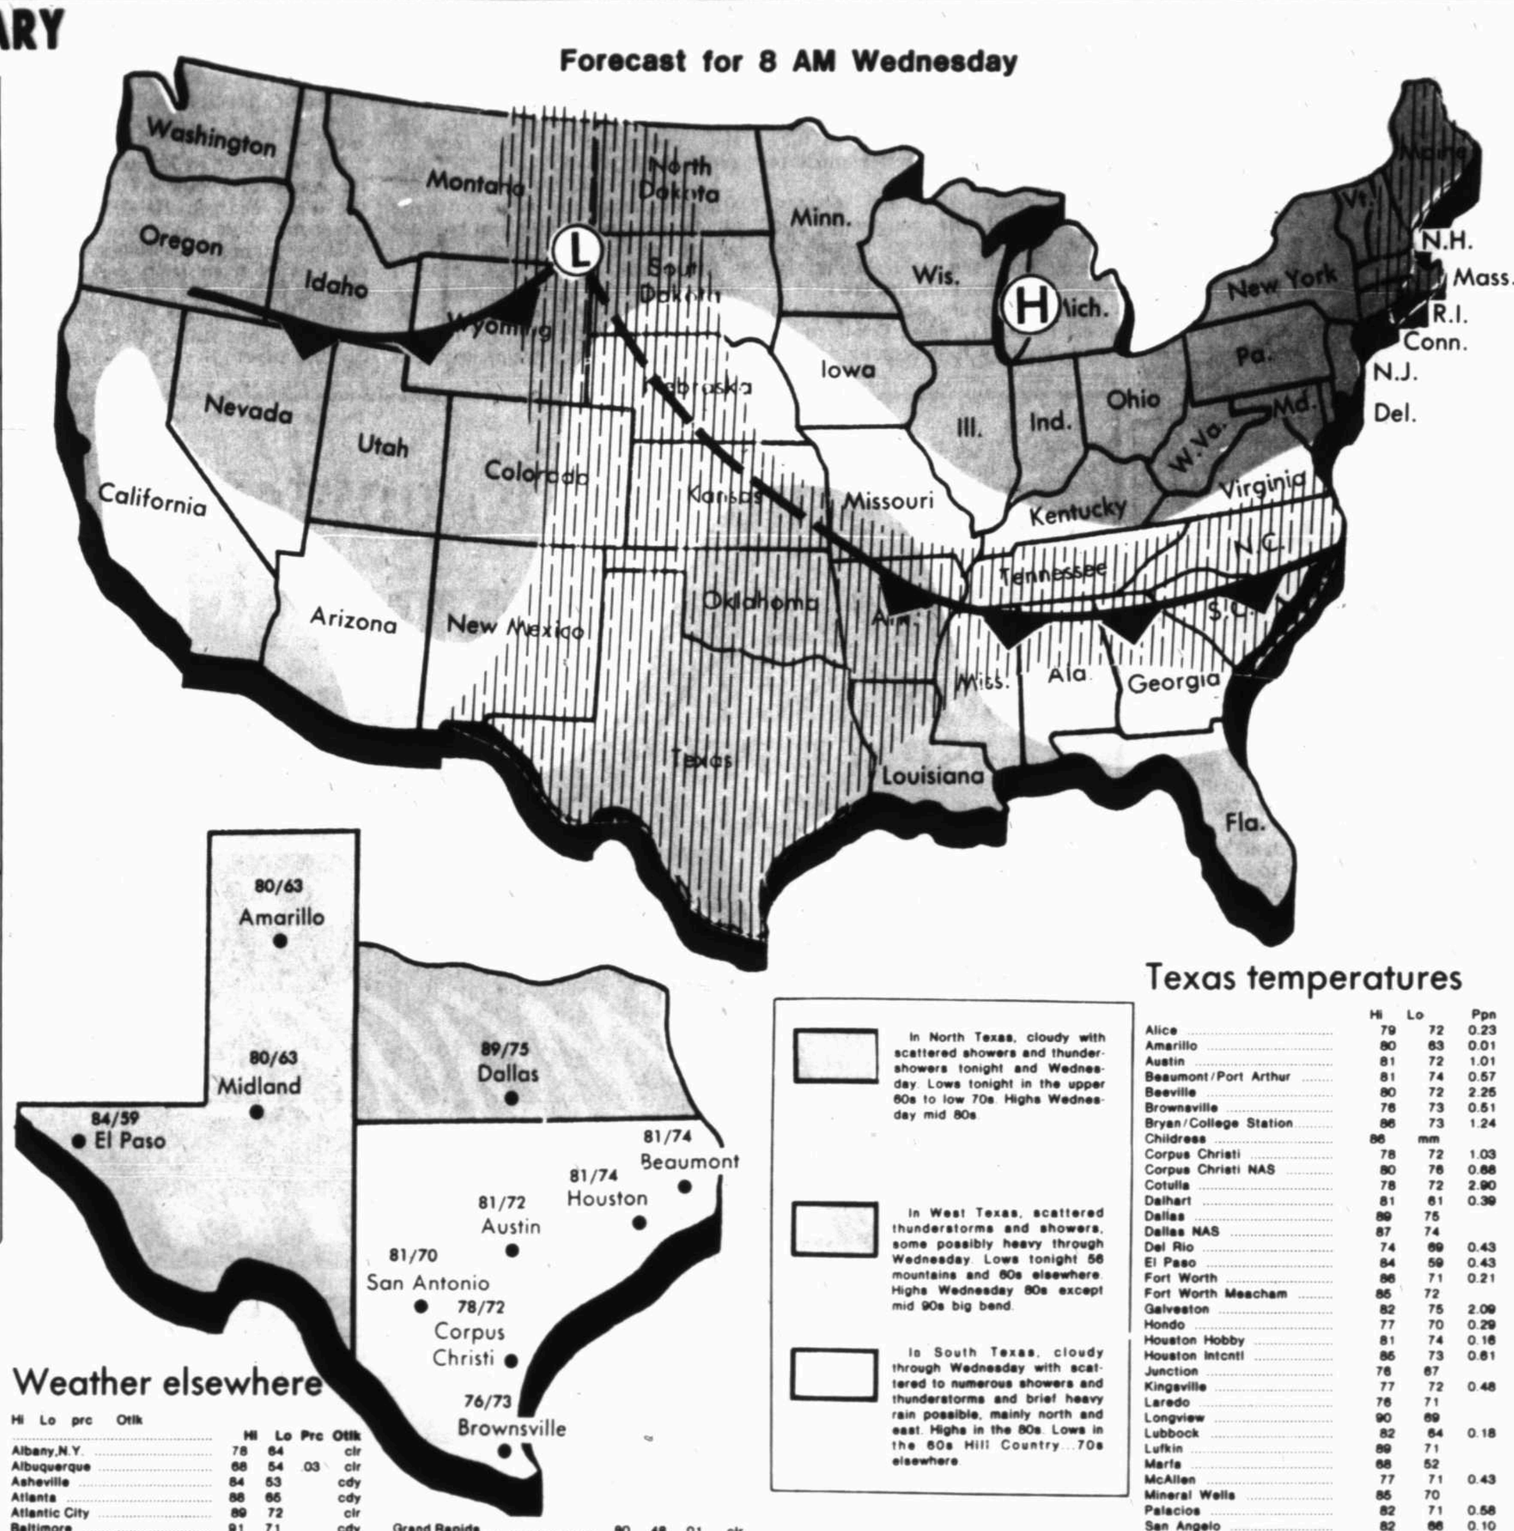
WEATHER SUMMARY

Forecast for 8 AM Wednesday



RAIN

Charlie Wright, manager of Midland Farmers Cooperative, said that about two-thirds of the cotton in Midland County has broken through the ground and is waiting for growth-stimulating sun. But about one-third planted acreage is underground and may not see daylight.

"It (the rain) will wash extra dirt on it, and when the sun comes up, it will have a hard crust," Wright said. "It will have hard time coming up. It don't look real good right now."

Since the early planting in late April, some acreage has been planted two or three times because of the hard crust which formed over the planted acreage after rains.

"Cotton is a hard plant to get up," Wright said. "But when it gets a couple of inches high, nothing much but a hail storm will brother it."

For rangelands, the drizzling rain is ideal.

"Naturally, we're sure proud of it (the rain)," Leonard said. "This wet, cool weather is sure making the grass do real well."

Ranchers depend on the rain to help grow weeds and grass for their livestock to munch.

STATE

A vast area of South Texas was under a flash flood watch today as an upper level disturbance continued to trigger heavy rainfall across an area saturated by earlier drenching rain.

The flash flood watch was enclosed by a line from Del Rio to Menard to Georgetown to LaGrange and back to Carrizo Springs and Del Rio. It included the cities of Austin, San Antonio and Del Rio.

A flood watch and a flash flood watch issued earlier for the coastal bend, Rio Grande plains and Lower Rio Grande Valley was no longer in effect, the National Weather Service reported early today.

The upper level disturbance was moving across most of Texas today and forecasts called for mostly cloudy skies with widely scattered, but widespread showers and thunderstorms expected statewide through tonight. Heay rainfall was possible over most of the state through tonight, forecasters said.

NATION

A cold front stretching from New England across the Ohio Valley sent thunderstorms across much of the region today.

Thunderstorms also ranged from northeast Colorado and northwest Kansas into southwest Nebraska while showers and thundershowers were scattered across southern and southwestern Texas, where flash flood watches were posted.

Heavy rain Monday evening closed roads in the Denver area as sections of the city got a 2½-inch drenching, the National Weather Service said.

Local dentists take AIDS precautions

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Realizing a member of their own profession is just as susceptible to contracting AIDS as any other healthcare worker, at least two Midland dentists now count certain added safeguards among their general office procedures, they said Monday.

The pair — an oral surgeon and a general practitioner — said they don't test prospective patients for AIDS directly, but instead look for indications of the virus in a patient's medical history questionnaire.

"It's always in your mind," said Dr. James C. Gilbert, an oral surgeon. "Some patients just look sick. You can't very well go ask them to have a test."

While a direct question concerning AIDS is not on his medical history questionnaire, Gilbert believed "they (patients) wouldn't answer it if they did."

Last week, a New York dentist was reported to have acquired AIDS, apparently though means other than sexual contact intravenous drug use.

Ironically, a study — completed by two dental professors at the University of Texas at San Antonio — surveying dentists' attitudes toward AIDS was released just days after the New York finding.

The study found — according to co-author S. Brent Dove, DDS — that 75 percent of 500 Texas dentists questioned didn't know how to screen patients for AIDS or the precursor to the disease, ARC (AIDS-related-complex).

"We found the longer the time since graduation, the less confident they were in treating patients with AIDS or understanding the disease," Dove said.

However, the co-author acknowledged that less understanding didn't mean a dentist was more scared.

One-half of the dentists responding to the UTSA survey said they felt obligated to treat AIDS patients, while the other half did not, Dove said.

"They are reluctant to treat," Dove said of the latter half. "Their personal concern is obviously contracting the disease."

Said Dr. Glen A. Armstong, a Midland dentist, "I don't feel I'm obligated (to treat an AIDS patient). I would like to help someone, but I'm not sure...if we have all the appropriate protections in my office."

Gilbert, a 16-year dental practitioner, said he "would be inclined to want to send them (the patients) to a state (dental) hospital, but the closest one is in Galveston."

A total of 90 percent of the Texas dentists surveyed said they feared other patients would be scared away if they knew the dentist would be treating an AIDS patient.

"I think it's human nature. They couldn't help it," 13-year-dental-veteran Armstrong said.

"I feel sure it would" scare patients away, added Gilbert.

Even though both Midland dentists currently treat no patients with AIDS, both are taking more infection-control precautions, they said.

Both wear latex gloves when treating all patients — a habit Gilbert has kept since he began his practice, he said.

Some dentists wear masks over their faces because the high-speed rotary instruments create a spray. Gilbert said he doesn't follow the practice, while Armstrong said he does.

In addition to AIDS, dentists also are concerned about contracting hepatitis B — a disease which shares the same high risk groups as AIDS, Dove said.

"AIDS is changing the way we practice dentistry. There is much more stringent infection control. The environment is moving towards that of an operating room," the UTSA study's co-author said.

Infection controls once used only in cases where the dentist or patient was visibly ill are now routine in Armstrong's office, he said.

Dentists face the risk of acquiring AIDS when the patient's mouth is bleeding and the dentist has perhaps broken skin or a wound into which the patient's blood could be transmitted, Dove said.

"One case is not enough to say that this is a mode of transmission, but they (doctors who diagnosed the New York dentist) could find no other risk factors, Dove said.

"Any type of bloodletting is more of a risk than saliva," Dove said, adding that researchers have isolated the AIDS in human saliva.

No studies relating dentists and AIDS had been completed before Dove and his co-author — James A. Cottone, DMD — created the survey to see where dentists stand in education and behavioral attitudes.

The two found that dentists in larger cities had no educational jump on those in smaller cities, such as Midland, Dove said.

"The bottom line is that the only thing that we have now of any value in fighting AIDS is in educating those around it," Dove said.

Parents want to keep neighborhood schools intact

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

West and Houston Elementary parents Monday told school board members they want to keep their neighborhood schools intact despite talk of consolidating the campuses as the result of declining enrollment.

School trustees took no action at the public meeting held at Houston, 2000 W. Louisiana Ave., where about 50 parents took part in the information-gathering session.

Trustees were expected to decide the fate of the schools this afternoon at a regular meeting of the school board.

Superintendent Joe Baressi said the cost of operating West, 2101 W. Missouri Ave. — which has seen a significant decline in enrollment over the past few years — led the school board to consider three alternatives for consolidation.

He said each of the alternatives would offer students a "better" instructional program overall.

Consolidation would prevent students from being isolated from their peers, save the district from having to maintain separate libraries and give teachers of the same grade level an opportunity to interact, Baressi said.

"We can have a better program and make better use of our instructional materials if we consolidate," he added.

Among the alternatives are:

— Housing kindergarten and first graders at West; and housing second, third and fifth graders at Houston.

— Relocating all students to Houston and transferring the MISD's data processing department to another building.

— Relocating all students to Houston and utilizing five portable classroom buildings to house the data processing department.

Baressi estimated the district could save about $50,000 per year with the consolidation and assured parents that West "would remain an active building" and not be shut down entirely.

He said the district is studying the possibility of converting the school into an administration building or utilizing it to house other instructional programs.

Baressi's comments seemed to alleviate some concern among parents, who said they opposed the closing of the elementary school campus.

Jody Gillis, chairman of the West End Heritage Committee, said "We feel it is imperative to maintain West as a neighborhood school. We want West as a neighborhood school."

Gillis' committee last month conducted a survey of homeowners in the Heritage District. The results showed overwhelming support for maintaining the campus in its present capacity.

He noted that residents in Heritage district — one of Midland's more established — are worried about the future of the neighborhood if the school shuts down.

Drainage problems breed discontent

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Last month's heavy rainfall is breeding concern — not to mention an above average crop of mosquitoes — among several homeowners who say they need the county's help combating their neighborhood drainage problem.

County commissioners Monday heard from about a dozen residents who charged a health hazard is in the making near the intersection of County Roads 1212 and 113 by rainwater being diverted from the city.

"Our wells are contaminated, our septic tanks are overflowed and we've had two people taken to the hospital because of the mosquitoes," Louisa Valencia told commissioners.

"We're living in a cesspool," she said.

Mrs. Valencia said most of the problems occur during heavy rainfall when the runoff from the city flows into Mulberry Lake and, in turn, floods private property.

"The water flows wild, wherever it can go" she said. "There's no way the drainage can cross (Midkiff Road and County Road 1212) without going through private property.

"I don't see why the City of Midland can't divert its water someplace else," she added.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Pat Ramirez said he's never seen such flooding as that found recently near County Road 1212. Ramirez, a 26-year resident of the area, told county commissioners Monday that the runoff has contaminated his and other's drinking water, causing a health hazard.

Although most of the water had receded by Monday afternoon, residents complained they're still trying to cope with the annoyance of the runoff.

Commissioner Scott Welch said this morning that he "would imagine" water continued to build up north of U.S. Interstate 20 because of today's rain.

Odessa chief releases documents on firing

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Odessa Police Chief Alan Stewart Monday released documents involved in the investigation that led to the firing of former Deputy Chief K.R. Jones.

The release of the documents was the result of action initiated under the Texas Open Record's Act by the Odessa American and two Midland-Odessa television stations.

Requests for release of the information nearly six months ago prompted Odessa City Attorney Joel Roberts to request an opinion from the Texas Attorney General's office.

Jones was suspended with pay Aug. 8, 1986, for allegedly violating several sections of the department's Code of Conduct. The suspension followed by one day a federal subpoena Jones received directing him to appear before the grand jury in Midland.

On Dec. 8, 1986, Stewart announced Jones' termination in a memorandum that outlined the alleged violations.

The attorney general's office reviewed the massive file and held that a large volume of the material was subject to release under the Open Records Act, but that any names or information relevant to ongoing investigations could be withheld.

Roberts received the file back from the attorney general's office last Friday and turned it over to the police department to prepare for release after deletion of certain portions.

Ector County Commissioners decide to scrap helicopter

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday voted to scrap Sheriff Bob Brookshire's helicopter but did not close the door on further air patrols by the sheriff's department.

Commissioners rejected proposals to spend about $50,000 to repair the Bell helicopter — which crashed on landing in February — buy a new one for about $200,000, and return to using surplus military helicopters.

County Judge Jan Fisher said the passing vote called for cannibalizing the Bell 47G3-B1, which was purchased for $98,000 in February 1986, and selling the parts.

Clements has not scheduled meeting with SMU bishops

DALLAS (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements, who has said he will cooperate with church officials investigating the play-for-pay scandal at Southern Methodist University, has not scheduled a meeting with them, his press secretary said.

But Clements, slated to return from a Taos, N.M., vacation on Wednesday, has a flexible schedule, Reggie Bashur said.

Four United Methodist Church bishops began the last of their interviews sessions in Dallas Monday and will complete their work today or Wednesday, officials said.

Clements revealed in March that while he was chairman of the SMU board of Governors in 1985, he and other board members decided to continue booster payments to Mustang football players with the understanding that the improper payments would be phased out.

Panel votes to suspend convicted judge's salary

FORT WORTH (AP) — State District Judge Tom Cave won't be paid while his mail fraud conviction is appealed, the State Commission on Judicial Conduct has decided.

Cave was convicted of three counts of mail fraud.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Through the Volunteer Center's community program, the talents, resources, creativity, and energies of concerned and willing citizens are channeled to respond to human needs. Volunteers work along side paid staff to extend and enrich to social services being offered by local non-profit organizations.

Volunteers in this day and time are a luxury. More and more people are having to find employment compensation to make ends meet. The following are recommendations for the volunteer to consider.

■ Attend a job search assistance or career planning workshop, or obtain career counseling to help you set realistic occupational or career goals.

■ Register your skills and interests with the local volunteer bureau. They can help match you to an appropriate volunteer service.

■ Choose your volunteer work carefully. Make sure it fits your needs. Select a volunteer program that will document your service hours, skills, and experience for potential employers.

■ Develop your own portfolio of records on the training you receive in your volunteer role, along with the hours of service, skills, and accomplishments you gain through your volunteer experience. Be sure to include a written job description.

■ Utilize the volunteer experience to create a network of potential employment contacts. Those who develop a trust and appreciation of your skills and abilities will be the best advocates for your future employment.

■ Accept increased responsibilities as the trust builds in your volunteer work. Look for and ask for opportunities to learn and practice new skills.

■ Ask your supervisor for written evaluations of your volunteer service. Work together to develop new skills or to improve your current work habits or skills.

■ Prepare a resume that features the skills and experiences along with training received through your volunteer work.

■ At a job interview, be sure to present your volunteer work skills and experience enthusiastically and professionally. Employers are impressed with the confidence you can share about the value of the volunteer service you have given.

■ Share a letter of reference from your volunteer service supervisor or director. The letter will validate the skills, experience, and essential work habits you have demonstrated through your volunteer service.

■ When you are hired in a new job, please find time to volunteer in your spare time. Remember to community still needs you!

"Opportunities for Volunteers" is contributed by Sylvia Quinones, executive director of The Volunteer Center. For more information on how to become a volunteer or on how your agency can sign up with the center, call 684-5866.

Mattox calls water decision 'major victory'

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox said that all major issues except one have been resolved in Texas' favor with a U.S. Supreme Court decision on a dispute with New Mexico over Pecos River Water.

"The only remaining question is whether the debt repayment will be made in water or in the monetary value of that water," Mattox said Monday after the high court decision.

"This is a major victory in our efforts to see that Texas — particularly for our farmers in West Texas — gets its fair share of water from the Pecos River. And we all know how extremely valuable water is in such arid areas as West Texas," Mattox said.

The Supreme Court decided that Texas may be entitled to compensation for New Mexico's violation of an agreement between the two states regarding apportionment of water in the Pecos.

The justices voted 8-0 to send the 13-year-old legal dispute back to a "special master" to act as fact finder for further hearings. At stake is whether New Mexico must pay Texas extra water or money in compensation.

The court rejected objections by New Mexico and Texas to preliminary findings that New Mexico had cheated Texas, depriving it of its fair share of Pecos River water.

This is not the first water fight between New Mexico and Texas, especially in the dry western part of the Lone Star State. El Paso, in extreme West Texas, has waged a yet-unresolved six-year-old battle with New Mexico over water in the Rio Grande. Both the Rio Grande and the Pecos River flow from New Mexico into Texas.

Charles J. Meyers, the special master, was also empowered to appoint a "river master" to make sure both states from now on live up to a 1949 compact on apportionment of Pecos River water.

Last year, Meyers recommended a 340,000-acre-feet of water payback by New Mexico to Texas. While New Mexico lawyers did not disagree that the 340,000-acre-feet shortfall had occurred in Texas from 1950 to 1983, they objected to paying any retroactive relief.

An acre-foot is the quantity of water that would cover one acre one foot deep, or 43,560 cubic feet of water.

The lawyers contended the payback would work an "extreme hardship" on New Mexico and that only future remedies are authorized for past violations of the compact.

"We find no merit in (New Mexico's) submission that we may order only prospective relief, that is, requiring future performance of compact obligations without a remedy for past breaches," Justice Byron R. White said Monday, writing for the court.

"If that were the case, New Mexico's defaults could never be remedied," he added.

The dispute began in 1974, when Texas sought to sue New Mexico in the Supreme Court, even though the case had not been previously aired in a lower court. A year later, the Supreme Court agreed to hear the case without any lower court appearances.

The court's special master had recommended that New Mexico receive a three-year grace period, then pay back about 34,000 acre-feet of water a year for 10 years.

El Paso authorities say dump battle far from over

EL PASO (AP) — El Paso authorities say they haven't won a battle against placing of a low-level nuclear waste dump in neighboring Hudspeth County, although state officials now say they'll look elsewhere.

"I think they're trying to lull us into complacency and that's not going to happen," said El Paso County Attorney Joe Lucas, whose office filed suit against the Texas Low-level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority.

"I think they're concentrating all their efforts on trying to put it in Hudspeth County," Lucas said.

The authority had targeted a parcel of state land 11 miles northeast of Fort Hancock in Hudspeth County. The site, the authority's primary choice for the state's dump, is about 50 miles from El Paso.

El Paso County filed suit against the authority earlier this year. State District Judge Bill Moody issued an injunction preventing the authority from continuing with the search process until the suit was heard Aug. 17.

But last week, the authority issued an announcement saying it had renewed its search for a dump site in response to state Land Commissioner Gary Mauro's decision not to turn the state land over to the authority.

In its announcement, the authority also noted that state Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, threatened a filibuster against a bill that would have directed Mauro to transfer the land. The bill died in the closing hours of the regular legislative session.

New selection studies wil concentrate on private, rather than public lands in the most promising areas of the state, including south, north-central and far west Texas and the Blackland Prairies between Austin and Dallas, the authority said.

El Paso County Judge Luther Jones, the county's highest administrative officer, had sharp criticism for the authority.

"They're a bunch of bush-league amateurs," said Jones. "They underestimate the people of El Paso."

Jones, who took office in January, said his first priority as an elected official would be to stop the authority from putting the dump in Hudspeth County. Opponents of the site choice said it would have a negative effect on El Paso's development and threaten water contamination.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Twelve Midland 4-H'ers take part in Roundup

From Staff Reports

Twelve 4-H'ers from Midland County are participating in the 1987 State 4-H Roundup through Thursday at Texas A&M University.

The county's 4-H members are among some 1,600 other 4-Her's from across Texas taking part in a host of activities, said Jill Pronger, county Extension Agent-Home Economics, with The Texas Agricultural Extension Service, the Texas A&M University System.

Attending from Midland are Jennifer Dryden and Kelie Jones, Food Show; Darla Graham and Julie Driver, Energy Demonstration; De Pipkin, Home Environment Demonstration; Randy Ham, Open Class; and the Horse Judging team, consisting of Richard Triplitt, Amber Riggs, Shannon Bray and Donna Gatlin. Also, Mark Graham and Triplitt will be participating in the interviews for scholarships.

Activities on Monday included registration and the State 4-H Food Show. The Food Show continues today, along with career workshops and the State 4-H Project Show. Thirty-nine contests will be conducted Wednesday, with an awards assembly winding up the three day event.

The opening assembly for Roundup will begin at 7 p.m. today, with the recognition of more than 100 outstanding 4-H members who will receive scholarships totaling almost $700,000 through the Texas 4-H Youth Development Foundation. Two 4-H alumni and four long-term supports of the 4-H program also will be recognized with special awards from the 4-H Foundation.

A special luncheon Thursday will recognize 28 outstanding 4-H adult volunteer leaders from across the state who will receive special plaques from the Texas 4-H Foundation.

4-Her's competing in the State Food Show and Roundup contests must qualify by winning in county and district competition, said Ms. Pronger. The State Project Show is open to all 4-H youth who are interested in preparing exhibits about particular project areas in which they have excelled.

Arrest may clear cases

From Staff Reports

Police Roundup

At least 15 burglary cases could be cleared with the arrest of a 17-year-old man, Midland police said this morning.

Cpl. Jim White, police spokesman, said an officer on routine patrol at the Canyon Creek Apts., 5244 W. Loop 250, observed the man getting out of a car in the complex's parking lot about 4:30 a.m. today. The man was captured after he fled on foot, and another man eluded arrest, White said. The car he had been leaving when he was spotted had been burglarized, White said, as had several others around it.

The arrest is also expected to clear several burglaries at the Autumn Chase condominiums and the Cimarron Apts., White said.

In all of the cases, the vehicles were left unlocked, he said.

Police have increased patrols in apartment complexes because they are favorite targets for burglars, White said.

A 30-year man is expected to be charged with possession of marijuana following his arrest early today, according to Midland County Sheriff's office reports.

The man was arrested about 1:30 a.m. at a residence in the 1200 block of Burchill Dr., reports said. One-fourth pound of marijuana was seized after officers obtained a search warrant from Justice of the Peace Robert Pine, reports said.

Police also are investigating the theft of $870 in cash and checks from Kleen Kar Wash, 4826 Billingsley Blvd. The theft occurred between Saturday and Monday, police said.

In other reports, two atrium wood doors valued at $425 each were reported stolen from a residence in the 3500 block of Meadowridge Lane. The burglary occurred between 9 p.m. Sunday and 8 a.m. Monday, reports said.

Smith appoints Midlander

From Staff Reports

Congressman Lamar Smith has announced his appointment of Kay Elizabeth Knox of Midland as his first Lyndon Baines Johnson Congressional Intern.

Miss Knox will spend June in Washington, D.C., learning all aspects of the workings of Smith's office as part of the LBJ program, considered the most prestigious student internship available on Capitol Hill.

A student in the communications school at the University of Texas at Austin, Miss Knox is a daughter of Gordon and Mary Alice Knox, both of Midland.

She was chosen from approximately 48 applicants from throughout the 21st District.

"One of the many privileges of serving in Congress is giving outstanding students an opportunity to learn about our government by becoming a part of it for a while," Smith said.

"It is heartening to know that so many qualified people from San Antonio, the Hill Country and West Texas are eager for that opportunity."

WATER

Donna Hill said, "Our well is contaminated. We can't drink the water and, every time we bathe in it, we get some kind of infection."

Mrs. Hill said she's contacted the state health department for advise on how to clean up her well and was told to "pour a gallon of Clorox into it."

"I've since found out that the only solution is to put a chlorine injection system on it to the tune of $500, which I don't happen to have right now," she said.

For Pat Ramirez, a 26-year resident of the area, the problem is an old one that must be addressed, not ignored.

"I've lived here for 26 years. I pay taxes like everybody else, and I want something done," Ramirez said.

Welch sympathized with his neighbor and acknowledged a problem exists, but warned the county can't do much to alleviate the overflow because the homes rest in a draw designed to catch water runoff.

The only possible solution, said Welch, is to dig a channel to divert the overflow from the city.

"The city and area maps show the water flows in that direction, he said." But he added, "I'm afraid if we fix it back like the natural flow, we're really gonna have some problems."

Welch said city officials have indicated no willingness to help the county alleviate the drainage problem.

"The city's not going to do anything because it's not bothering them," he said.

In other action, commissioners adopted a resolution concerning potential conflicts of interest involving Midland County employees.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman said that under the new resolution, department heads will have to notify commissioners before engaging in business other than that specified under his or her normal salaried duties.

Dettman said he knows of no instance where a conflict of interest might be of concern to the commission.

The resolution is merely a preventative measure, he said.

CHIEF

According to Stewart, the file contains some 420 pages — including 200 blank pages. Many of the remaining pages contain little in the way of unknown information because of censoring done in accordance with recommendations from the attorney general's office, he said.

The allegations against Jones, a 22-year veteran of the Odessa Police Department, included: associating with a known gambler; accepting gifts, loans or fees that might have influenced him in the performance of his duties; failing to take action to prevent crime, detect and arrest violators of the law and enforce all laws; unauthorized personal use of a city vehicle; and accepting a favor from a licensee subject to approval by the chief of police.

Following his termination, Jones notified the city of his intent to sue for $2.1 million. Prior to filing of his lawsuit by Odessa attorney Michael McLeaisch, Jones and McLeaisch agreed to meet with police and city officials for a public hearing on the reasons for Jones firing.

Prior to the start of the meeting, attorneys for both sides met behind closed doors. Stewart later announced there would be no public meeting, that a settlement had been reached. The termination order was, in effect, rescinded and Jones was allowed to resign as deputy chief and accepted a position as an inspector with the City's Planning and Inspection Division.

PARENTS

"If we don't have a neighborhood school, I don't know how we're going to draw families into the neighborhood," he said.

Gillis said residents "would prefer youngsters using the building in some sort of educational capacity rather than it being abandoned."

But Phyllis Reneau, a third grade teacher at Houston, said closing the school would simplify matters and provide students with a full-time principal.

Currently, West and Houston share one principal, Kathleen Baker, who divides her time between the campuses.

"Sharing a principal is my major bone of contention," said Trina Albright, 2511 Princeton.

"Mrs. Baker has done a wonderful job, but she was constantly going back and forth. When I needed to talk to her she was at West," she said.

Tricia Golding, wife of Trustee Joe Golding, suggested the board look at the possibility of changing its elementary school boundaries to keep both schools in operation.

"Selfishly, I would like to see all of our students on one campus...But possibly we could redistrict toward this area and, in turn, send more students to West, send more students to Fannin and send more students to Houston," she said.

Crime Stoppers seeks data on county burglary

This week Crime Stoppers is seeking information on the burglary of the Ford residence, near the intersection of County Road 116 West and CR 1260S.

On April 25, the Fords were entertaining several people at their home. At 12:30 a.m., everyone left the house for about an hour. When they returned, they discovered the back door had been kicked in and the home burglarized.

The suspects stole a Soundesign portable stereo radio, a Sears brand stereo, and a remote control Emerson videocassette recorder. A York brand stereo was also stolen, but the speakers were dropped and left behind.

Crime Stoppers is offering a $1,000 cash reward, this week only, for information that leads to the arrest and conviction of the persons who burglarized the Fords. Crime Stoppers in Midland can be reached at 694 — TIPS, and in Odessa at 333 — TIPS. Callers do not have to reveal their identity.

However, the judge said the selling of the parts may be delayed because of questions concerning the condition of the helicopter when it was purchased. Some of the parts could be crucial evidence if a lawsuit is filed against the firm from which the helicopter was purchased.

According to the sheriff, the helicopter was supposed to have been completely reconditioned. Reports by the pilot and a reserve deputy in the craft at the time it was damaged said they had just landed when they heard a noise, looked back and saw the tail rotor had come loose from its mooring.

Whether a lawsuit is filed will depend on further investigation and examination of the helicopter, the judge said.

Ms. Fisher said that commissioners have indicated they will explore the possibility of using a commercial helicopter service when the sheriff's department needs a airborne patrols. Such an arrangement, she said, would eliminate insurance, maintenance and hangar expenses.

Hay says he won't seek re-election as chairman of UT regent board

Jess Hay

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas regent chairman Jess Hay says he will not seek re-election at this week's meeting in Tyler.

Hay, an appointee of former Gov. Mark White who has been at odds with Republican Gov. Bill Clements, made the comment at a news conference Monday.

He also said he would propose to other regents that they recommend a 12½ percent increase in taxes or other revenue to support higher education.

"We must make it clear to the economic and academic world that Texas is serious about its education pursuit," Hay said.

UT regents will meet at UT-Tyler on Thursday and Friday to elect a new chairman and make recommendations to the special legislative session opening June 22.

The scheduled April election of a new chairman was postponed after two of Clement' appointees said they wanted to get to know other regents better before choosing a new chairman.

Clements, who ran for re-election on a platform of no new taxes, has said he will try to replace Hay as chairman. Hay said the chairman election should come late Thursday or Friday morning.

"I will absolutely continue on the board," Hay told the news conference.

He said he also would continue as chairman of the Texas Foundation for Higher Education, a lobbying group seeking more appropriations for state colleges and universities.

"Unless the perception of abiding and sustained commitment to education is clearly resurrected by the forthcoming session of the Legislature, the momentum generated by 25 years of certain and unambiguous commitment to education is almost certain to be permanently and irrevocably damaged," he said.

Hay said both houses in the 140-day regular legislative session, which just ended, confirmed a clear need to restore funding of higher education to at least 1985 levels.

"Simple arithmetic and rational analysis demonstrate that in relationship to our current tax structure, an aggregate revenue increase of approximately 12½ percent will be required," Hay said.

Hay said a 12½ percent overall revenue increase would produce an additional $3.1 billion the next two years, which would be sufficient to fund the appropriations bill approved by the House in the regular session.

"The fact is that people of Texas do not want theirs to be a second-class state," Hay said. "And they do not want their children to be nurtured by second-rate institutions."

Jurors shown videotape of re-enactment

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Jurors in the murder trial of a patrolman accused of shooting a fellow officer were shown a videotape re-enactment of the fatal shooting.

Farrell Tucker is charged in the Aug. 18 slaying of his best friend, Stephen Smith.

The videotape was made last October during a grand jury investigation into Smith's slaying and was played for jurors on Monday.

In it, Tucker says he shot Smith in self-defense after Smith threatened to kill him.

Smith, who was suspected of vigilante activities and was suspended on brutality charges, allegedly planned to kill three top law enforcement officials he blamed for damaging his career.

Monday afternoon jurors saw a re-enactment of the shooting with Tucker playing himself and describing the events. An FBI agent played Smith.

Detective Jerry Penshorn, who coordinated the investigation into the weapons found at the shooting scene, testified that blood spatterings were found on the .357 revolver, but only a drop of blood was found on the .45-caliber pistol.

Detective Rudy Garcia, who removed the weapons from Smith's car, testified the .45-caliber pistol was incapable of firing because it had not been cocked.

STATE IN BRIEF

Woman indicted for taking funds to return to Texas

KERRVILLE (AP) — A former Little League baseball official indicted on charges accusing her of stealing $20,000 in league money will return from California to face the charges, her lawyer says.

Janice Marshall, 39, of San Diego, Calif., was indicted by a Kerr County grand jury on one charge of misapplication of funds and one charge of felony theft.

The woman's lawyer said she would return from California to face the charges, but no word of her status had been received Monday by the Kerr County district clerk.

An arraignment has been scheduled June 18, authorities said Monday.

The money was raised through candy sales, raffles and other Little League projects for the building of two ball fields for area youngsters.

An audit revealed that the money was missing after the woman moved to California.

Kerrville Little League President Yvonne Helwig said donations to the financially troubled program continue to come in after the the San Antonio Express-News published a story about the missing funds.

State prison system reopens

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas prison system reopens today after being closed because of crowding, and prison officials expect to take in more than 200 new inmates.

"We're projecting the intake to be 225 (inmates)," Texas Department of Corrections spokesman David Nunnelee said Monday.

The prison was closed at the end of the day Friday because the inmate population had exceeded a state-mandated 95 percent of capacity limit. Friday's shutdown marked the 12th time this year the 26-unit system had to close because of crowding.

The inmate population taken at midnight Thursday and released Friday had totaled 38,505 inmates, or 95.18 percent — 74 over the legal capacity, officials said.

'Dirty's' lives up to its name

AUSTIN (AP) — A burger and beer eatery known as Dirty's was closed over the weekend by the local health department for chronic cockroach infestation and other health violations, an agency official said.

The restaurant, also named Martin's Kum-Bak, will be allowed to open today because immediate health hazards have been cleared up, said Allan Baker, legal coordinator for the Austin-Travis County Health Department. But structural and procedural problems at the restaurant near the University of Texas must be corrected, Baker said.

The eatery failed its last three regular health inspections with scores of 48, 36 and 31. A passing score is 60; a score of 100 is perfect.

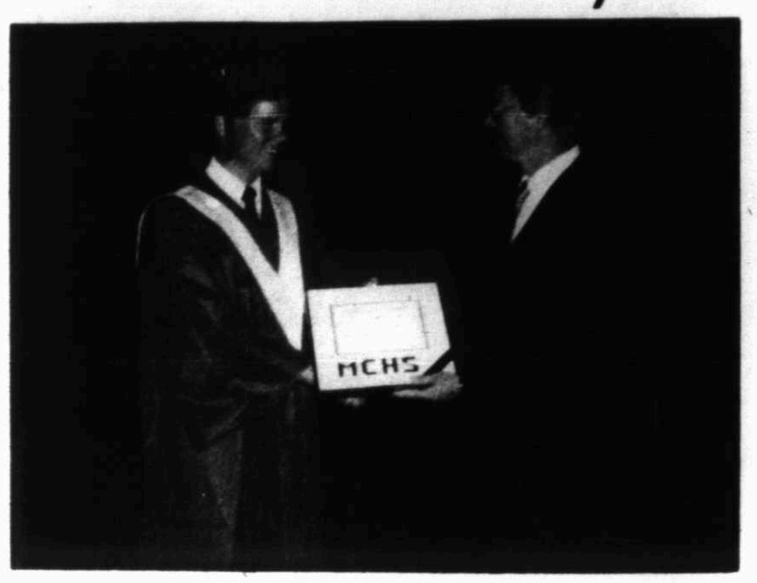
Midland Christian School celebrates 30 years



Midland Christian School principal Eddie Lee awards 1987 MCS valedictorian Gerry Morgan his high school diploma at recent graduation ceremonies.

Midland Christian School (MCS) has served Midland's educational needs for 30 years, and recently celebrated the graduation of its seventh senior class.

Fully accredited by the Texas Education Agency since 1978, the school is staffed with professional, degreed and certified teachers who believe in quality education.

The superior standards employed by MCS are reflected in consistently high achievement test scores. Students are annually tested with the Stanford Achievement Test, which is normed against private schools across the United States. MCS students traditionally score in the 90th percentile. These results underscore the excellent teaching and the stimulating academics for which MCS is proud.

Incorporated with the academic program at MCS is a "back to basics" approach. Back to basics is a common phrase in education circles of America today, but the MCS faculty and administration feel that the basics have never been neglected at their school. Traditional basics are combined in all levels of education at MCS, from the preschool department to the high school.

Midland Christian High School is a comprehensive college-preparatory program. The high school curriculum is consistent with and accredited by the standards of the Texas Education Agency. Three academic programs, regular, advanced and advanced honors, are offered for graduation.

Consistent with Midland Christian's philosophy, this academic preparation is accomplished in a uniquely Christian and positive setting. Because the growth of personal values is important during this time when teenagers begin to make many important decisions, a positive peer pressure approach has proven to be very helpful. A small student-/teacher ratio provides students with individual attention from staff and faculty. Students' close relationships with these dedicated and quality adults serve them with positive role models which complement and reinforce parental ideals and standards.

High school at MCS extends beyond the classroom. A wide choice of activities is provided to complement the quality academic program. Athletics, band, cheerleading, journalism, student government and National Honor Society are offered. Also, participation in literary events in speech, drama and academic contests are among the extra-curricular offerings.

The unique nature of MCS allows each student to develop multiple talents, not restricting him or her to one area of academic or athletic specialization.

In addition to an excellent high school program, MCS applies its back to basics philosophy in its pre-school and elementary departments. These programs are designed to give the child the basic facts, knowledge and skills necessary for the entire educational experience.

MCS also offers a quality day care program which emphasizes the high standards of professional day care. Care is provided for children ages three through twelve.

All programs at MCS are built around an emphasis on formulation of values and spiritual development. Each student participates in a daily chapel assembly, a Bible class, and is instructed in moral and ethical behavior that is typical of a Christian environment.

For admissions information, please call Midland Christian School at 694-1661, or check with the registrar at the school, located at 2001 Culver.

Wood You Like offers quality used furniture

For years, Wood You Like (The Unpainted Furniture Store) has offered quality unfinished furniture and custom staining, as well as staining supplies for do-it-yourselfers. Kaye Horchler, owner, said that during the month of June they are offering a new consignment program.

Summer is a good time to change out your rooms and rearrange. The consignment program is designed for "like new" furniture. If you have some furniture that's still in good condition but you're just tired of it, this is an ideal way to sell it. Maybe you never did like the styling once you got the furniture home. Wood You Like's consignment program can free you up to redecorate! That extra money can give your home some fresh summertime looks, too.

Kaye said there are other ways to sell your good used furniture, but she's convinced that for quality furniture her way is best.

Garage sales, she said, are lots of work and you will probably not get a price anywhere close to the value of your furniture. In addition, you have to promote the sale yourself and schedule a day or more for just sitting around, waiting on potential buyers.

Even if you don't have a garage sale but just try to sell the goods on your own, you'll still face many of the same problems--waiting for phone calls, showing furniture, probably getting a minimal amount for it.

On the other hand, Wood You Like, which has very reasonable commission rates, assures you that a regular flow of customers will be viewing your goods. Kaye feels that under these conditions, you should be able to get more for your furniture, and the purchaser will still be getting a good deal on quality furniture, too.

So, you can recoup some of your original expense and get set to redecorate this summer!

When you start selecting that new furniture, consider the quality unfinished furniture at Wood You Like.

Dining room groups, bedroom suites, chairs, computer furniture, wall units and other pieces of beautiful solid wood furniture are in stock.

Kaye pointed out a number of important reasons to consider unfinished furniture.

First, Kaye said, the wood in unpainted furniture is BETTER than the wood in pre-finished products. How's it better? Because it is handselected and is clearly visible to the customer, it is clearer and more evenly color-matched. "It's the prettiest wood you'll ever see," Kaye said.

Next, she explained, the unfinished pieces have MORE wood in them. Wood You Like purchases solid wood pieces whenever possible. If these aren't available, they select quality plywoods, which have layer on layer of wood. Veneers, which are thin layers of wood on particle board, are a last resort at Wood You Like. On the other hand, Kaye said, you can expect 80 percent of finished furniture to be comprised of veneers.

Kaye said they stock some particle board pieces for specific use. For example, sometimes people want to utilize inexpensive furniture (to be painted) in children's rooms. Wood You Like has a selection specifically for this.

Kaye pointed out another advantage to selecting your furniture at Wood You Like - your FINISH will be BETTER.

Whether you have Wood You Like custom stain it or do the staining yourself, you can enjoy a truly hand-rubbed finish.

For do-it-yourselfers, this summer the store offers a stain class on video tape, which can be viewed in the shop or at home. Individuals can do as much or as little of the staining job as they want and have the professionals do the rest.

Wood You Like, located in Imperial Shopping Center - corner of Wadley and Midkiff, is open Monday-Friday 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Both advertisers who offer services and those who are selling a product have been very satisfied with the response they have received by advertising on the Business and Industry pages.

What's really amazing is that your business can be on these pages for a remarkably reasonable rate. If you've never taken advantage of this unique advertising format, ask your account executive about the special introductory offer.

Advertisers do not have to worry about writing the articles or taking the pictures themselves. The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an advertising feature writer that will take care of that.

Put your business in the headlines of the Business and Industry pages, call 682-5311 and ask for your account executive or the retail advertising department.

Hotchkiss slams Angels back into second

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Midland third baseman Stan Holmes (33) throws to first base to get El Paso's Frank Mattox in the top of the first inning Monday. The Angels posted a 9-2 victory over the Diablos to move back into second place in the TL West.

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Left-hander Marty Reed figures if you throw strikes in Angels Stadium, it will pay off in victories and, on a wet Monday, he proved his point.

Midland defeated El Paso, 9-2, in a game played in a steady rain, and moved back into second place in the Texas League West, a half game ahead of the Diablos.

The 25-year-old from Tampa, Fla., got all the runs he needed when second baseman John Hotchkiss hit a grand slam homer in the first inning.

"All we heard about in spring training was the short fences and the wind in Midland," he recalled, during the required 30-minute rain break before the game could be officially called at the end of seven.

"You've just got to pitch the same way all the time. And I've found that the park doesn't bother me."

REED, NOW 7-1, has thrown complete games in four of his last five starts. "The key," he says, "is throwing strikes. It keeps your infield on its toes."

"Like tonight, Hotchkiss made that great play behind second and Stan Holmes (at third) turned that shot by (Walt) Pohle into a double play," said Reed, who walked just one.

Hotchkiss' grand slam came on a fast ball and was his first ever in pro ball. "I've come close with three-run homers and I've had a few where an outfielder leaps above the fence to rob me with the bases loaded."

After crowds of 2,700, 2,800 and 2,200 over the weekend, Hotchkiss picked a terrible night to connect, at least, for collecting that screen-green players get from fans for homers.

With threatening crowds and a steady rain, only 701 fans showed up Monday.

DOUG JENNINGS' single, an error on Mark Brouhard's grounder and a walk to Holmes loaded the bases for Hotchkiss, who hit the homer over the angle in left-center.

In the fourth he made the defensive play of the night, diving full length on the grass behind second to stop Earnest Riles' grounder up the middle.

"The ball was so wet, it behaved like a spit ball when I threw it and I wasn't sure I could get the runner, especially Ernie Riles, who has good speed," Hotchkiss said.

He did and it helped keep Reed out of serious trouble. Marty had just surrendered a solo homer to Jesus Alfaro and after Hotchkiss' play, Garrett Nago doubled, which would have scored the run.

Too hurt, too tired Celtics hope to tie Lakers at two

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics were supposed to be too hurt and too tired to win a game against the Los Angeles Lakers.

But now that the Celtics have reduced Los Angeles' advantage in the NBA championship series to 2-1 and held the Lakers' running game in check, there will be no more lame excuses after tonight's Game 4 at Boston Garden.

"They've proved they aren't so banged up," Lakers guard Magic Johnson said. "Now that that's over we can get back to basketball."

The Celtics were bothered during the season and the playoffs by a series of ankle, knee and foot injuries that hobbled starters Robert Parish, Kevin McHale and Danny Ainge and deprived the bench of Bill Walton and Scott Wedman.

"All the talk about them being injured took away from how great we were playing," said guard Byron Scott, who had a total of 64 points in the two Los Angeles victories, but scored four in the 109-103 defeat on Sunday. "Now they've beaten us and they're not injured anymore."

"I didn't see anyone limping out on the floor," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "They had so many injuries this season that it became part of their picture and ultimately pulled them together."

NBA Playoffs

Blowout losses in the first two games had the Celtics believing they weren't physically capable of stopping the Lakers, but Ainge said Sunday's victory proved something.

"It's a frustrating feeling," Ainge said of the two losses. "I think that frustration is gone. It's back to reality."

Ainge was at midcourt when the clock ran out in Game 3, and he slammed the ball to the floor in jubilation.

"We gave everything we had and finally won," said Ainge, who missed three earlier playoff games with a knee sprain. "In the first two games, it seemed like everything we tried to do, we still couldn't stop them. When we finally did it, the emotion just came out."

McHALE, DESPITE a stress fracture in his right foot, had 21 points and 10 rebounds, two more than his total for the first two games. Parish, who has aggravated an ankle injury several times during the playoffs, had foul trouble, but still scored 16 points in 26 minutes.

Riley and the Lakers said that if they can correct a few shortcomings tonight, they will overcome the Celtics, although they have won 85 of their last 87 games at Boston Garden.

"We feel like we did it to ourselves; they didn't do it to us," Johnson said. "Not boxing out really killed us."

"In the first two games, it was so easy to score and get good shots that we got frivolous with our shot selection, thinking that anything would go in," Riley said. "It's a subconscious thing. If you ask them if they were overconfident, they'll say no."

"In Los Angeles, we pushed the ball up constantly, we kept going," guard Michael Cooper said. "What we did (Sunday) was push it for a minute or two, then get caught up in the Celtics' pace."

Riley was most upset at the Celtics' 56-41 rebounding advantage in Game 3.

"We got pushed around underneath the basket," Riley said. "We won't win if we get outrebounded like that."

They win. And win. And win. And win.

The Reds won for the fourth time this season after trailing by six runs, rallying past the San Francisco Giants 7-6 Monday night. The victory, secured on Dave Parker's two-run single in the bottom of the ninth, moved the Reds three games ahead of the second-place Giants in the National League West.

"For San Francisco to be up six runs and lose, that kind of puts a damper on it for the rest of the time," Parker said, referring to the last two games of the series.

The Giants led 6-0 after three innings against Reds starter Tom Browning, with Chili Davis hitting a two-run homer. But the Reds climbed back with a run in the fourth and four in the fifth, two coming on a Parker home run.

Cincinnati, which has earned 18 of its 33 victories by making comebacks, did it again in the ninth. Reliever Scott Garrelts walked Kal Daniels and Eric Davis. Parker hit the first pitch from reliever Keith Comstock over the head of center fielder Eddie Milner, and both runners came home. Davis slid under the tag of Bob Melvin with the winning run.

"After I got to first base, I kind of started cheering for Eric," Parker said. "He was three steps behind Kal. I turned into a spectator, too."

National League

But Parker was in the middle of the victory celebration.

"I got beat to death," said Parker, who was mobbed by his teammates. "It was like running off the field after the seventh game of the Series."

Padres 5, Astros 4

San Diego's Luis Salazar drove in two runs with a home run in the second inning and a game-winning single in a four-run eighth to lead the Padres to a victory over Houston.

The Padres started the eighth trailing 4-1 against Astros starter Bob Knepper, 2-7, but Randy Ready and Shane Mack opened with singles. Both runners scored on a grounder by fromer Midland Cub Carmelo Martinez to shortstop Craig Reynolds, who overthrew first base.

Benito Santiago doubled to left, scoring James Steels, who ran for Martinez, to tie the game 4-4. Santiago then stole third and scored the winning run on Salazar's single to right field.

Craig Lefferts, 1-2, got the victory, pitching one inning in relief of starter Andy Hawkins, and Rich Gossage got the final six outs for his third save.

Houston's Kevin Bass highlighted a three-run sixth inning with a double prior to San Diego's comeback. Denny Walling singled and Jose Cruz walked to start the sixth against Hawkins. Bass' double went to the deep right field corner, scoring Walling and breaking a 1-1 tie.

Niekro hurls Indians past Angels, 2-0

Associated Press

Phil Niekro and Don Sutton got together and showed how a baseball game should be pitched.

Recently, there haven't been too many well-pitched games. Take a look at some of Sunday's scores. There were numbers like 18-8, 13-12, 13-9, 13-7 and 10-9.

So, on Monday under a setting sun at Anaheim, Calif., 48-year-old Phil Niekro of Cleveland and 42-year-old Don Sutton of California showed 23,752 fans why they are headed for baseball's Hall of Fame. Niekro pitched 7⅓ shutout innings to win the 315th victory of his career and prevail in a battle of 300-game winners as the Indians defeated the Angels 2-0.

AL

Niekro, 4-5, moved into sole possession of 11th place on the all-time victory list ahead of Gaylord Perry, who has 314 victories.

"I had a lot tougher time than Don did," Niekro said. "I was very fortunate. I made some bad pitches and got away with them.

"I worked out of a couple of jams. I don't think Don got in any. He just got the ball up a couple of times. We lucked out. We got two more runs than they did."

Cleveland catcher Chris Bando said Niekro's knuckleball was at its best.

"His knuckleball was really moving," Bando said. "He threw it for strikes and moved it around. He didn't give up any runs, so you know he was throwing well."

Scott Bailes relieved Niekro with one out in eighth and earned his fifth save. He struck out four of the five batters he faced.

Sutton, 2-7 and a 312-game winner, allowed solo homers by Cory Snyder and Brook Jacoby. Sutton has not won since May 5.

"We've got to get him (Niekro) to retire and give a younger man a job," Sutton said. "That old goat and Scott Bailes pitched exceptionally well. I wasn't quite good enough."

Racing bets are made because there's no sure thing

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Trainer Jack Van Berg has been around paddocks and barns long enough to know there's no sure thing in horse racing.

"You never know what's going to happen," he said after Alysheba's Triple Crown dream was shattered at Belmont Park Saturday. "That's why we've got races every day and why we bet on them."

If you bet on Alysheba to join the 11 other colts who have won the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont, you came up short. Some 14 lengths short. That was how far behind the winner Van Berg's colt finished.

It was the worst thrashing suffered by a Triple Crown aspirant since Carry Back wound up seventh in 1961, some 16 lengths behind Sherluck. And it seemed to endorse finally the belief of some racing people that Alysheba was not exactly a super horse even though he had won two-thirds of the Triple Crown.

The problem was time. He won the Kentucky Derby in the slowest time in 13 years. His time in the Preakness was the slowest any winner of that race has recorded in 12 years.

"Time," Van Berg noted, "matters only when you're in prison."

Still, Alysheba's Derby and Preakness clockings were not ringing endorsements of a horse who hoped to join the ranks of Secretariat, Citation, War Admiral and the other brilliant 3-year-olds who won the Triple Crown. Where would he have fit in among those gallant champions? Nobody knows, really.

Cardinals 12, Phillies 8

At 34-20, the Cardinals have the best record in the majors and are off to their best start in 20 years. Speed and power were the keys at Philadelphia, with Vince Coleman stealing four bases and scoring three times, and Jack Clark homering.

Tommy Herr knocked in three runs without getting a hit for St. Louis, which leads the NL East by three games.

Coleman has reached base in 38 straight games and he is perfect in 37 lifetime steal attempts against Philadelphia.

Cubs 4, Mets 2

At Chicago, Manny Trillo was the hero, homering on the first pitch he saw in the ninth inning from Doug Sisk. Dave Martinez had singled prior to Trillo's hit.

The Mets had tied it in the ninth on a two-run double by Barry Lyons. But poor baserunning stopped New York from taking the lead.

With Howard Johnson on third and Lyons on second with one out, Bill Almon bunted, but the runners held as Almon was thrown out at first base. Lyons then was picked off second by catcher Jody Davis during an intentional walk to Mookie Wilson.

Dodgers 6, Braves 3

It was the Orel Hershiser show in Atlanta. The Dodgers pitcher allowed three hits in 6⅓ innings, singled in a run in the third inning, stole second and scored, and beat out a bases-loaded bunt single on a 2-2 count to drive in another run with two outs in the sixth.

It was the 50th career victory for Hershiser, 6-6, now in his fourth full season in the major leagues.

The bad news for Los Angeles came in the seventh inning when shortstop Mariano Duncan was taken from the field on a stretcher with an apparent lower back injury. It happened as he fell on his back trying to avoid Gerald Perry, who was sliding into second attempting to break up a double play.

Andre Thomas hit a two-run homer in the ninth for Atlanta.

Expos 7, Pirates 2

At Montreal, Neal Heaton won his fifth straight game with a seven-hitter and helped himself with pair of singles and two RBI.

Heaton, 8-2, was acquired from Minnesota for relief ace Jeff Reardon in a much-criticized move during the winter. But Heaton steadily has moved from Montreal's No. 3 starter to the stopper.

BOSTON IS trying to become the first team to repeat as NBA champions since the 1969 Celtics. That year, Boston also lost the first two games of the best-of-seven series in Los Angeles, then came back to win the title in seven games.

But Johnson brushed off the historical significance of the series.

"1969? I was 10 years old then," he said. "This is 1987, and we're just trying to win this one."

Johnson said he didn't see that either team has a psychological edge at this point in the series.

"Their confidence level is much higher than it was, but we're still up 2-1," Johnson said. "My philosophy is that the best team will win, no matter what."

Holmes says Cooney by KO

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

Larry Holmes will be in Gerry Cooney's corner when he fights Michael Spinks next Monday night at Atlantic City.

Figuratively, of course.

"I'm rooting all the way for Cooney," says the man who was the premier heavyweight in the world from 1978 until 1985.

"I have no love for either fighter, but I love Gerry more."

Holmes is still rankled about the hero treatment given Cooney before their fight on June 11, 1982, in which Holmes retained the World Boxing Council title by stopping Cooney in 13th round.

He's still bitter about his two decision losses to Spinks in International Boxing Federation title matches. Cases can be made for Holmes winning both fights, especially the split-decision rematch.

So, you might say, nothing has taken away the taste of sour grapes left by the losses to Spinks, while the bitterness of what Holmes perceived as unfair treatment was softened by the sweet taste of success against Cooney.

But Larry Holmes' opinion about the fight has to hold weight. His knowledge of boxing was not eroded by age as his skills have been.

"Cooney will knock him out," Holmes, who will be 38 on Nov. 3, says. "It won't go six rounds if Cooney fights him the way he fought me. He's too big. He hits too hard.

"Michael doesn't punch as hard as me, and I don't punch as hard as Gerry."

The 6-foot-7 Cooney will have a 4½-inch height and a five-inch reach advantage over Spinks and probably will outweigh him anywhere from 30 to 35 pounds.

"Cooney can cut the ring off," Holmes says. "He has that long jab, a good left hook. All he has to do is stick that hard left jab in there and dig short left hooks to the body.

"Michael has to hope Gerry gets tired and frustrated, and Butch Lewis is hoping the judges will be awful."

"Awful judging" is what Holmes feels he was the victim of against Spinks both times they fought in Las Vegas, Nev., and he predicts "awful judging" is what Spinks will need to beat Cooney.

Cooney could get tired, having fought only a total of seven rounds in three fights since losing to Holmes. He has put in a lot of rounds in the gym, but fatigue often stems from frustration and from the tenseness experienced under the pressure of a big fight.

Spinks can be frustrating. He uses awkwardness as a weapon. Hurt by Holmes with a right to the head in the 14th round, he escaped by turning and running across the ring.

"They don't give Gerry Cooney any credit because he fought me, but if he had fought anybody else that night he would have been heavyweight champion of the world," Holmes says.

Mariners 6, Rangers 0

Mark Langston pitched a two-hitter and Jim Presley drove in four runs as Seattle defeated Texas.

Langston, 7-5, allowed Ruben Sierra's solid single to center in the fourth and Steve Buechele's one-out single in the ninth. He struck out nine and walked one.

Langston, who led the American League in strikeouts with 245 last season, now has a major league-leading 105 strikeouts.

The Mariners reached Rangers starter Mike Jeffcoat, 0-1, for three home runs in his first start of the year.

With one out in the first, Phil Bradley hit a 3-1 pitch to center to give the Mariners a 1-0 lead. It was Bradley's fourth home run of the season. Alvin Davis added a solo homer in the fourth.

Mickey Brantley singled with one out in the fifth and scored on Presley's ninth home run of the year, a 440-foot shot to center field.

Presley, who had just one hit in his last 21 at-bats, added a two-run double in the seventh off reliever Mike Loynd for a 6-0 lead.

Blue Jays 11, Yankees 0

George Bell, who had never hit a home run at Yankee Stadium in five seasons with Toronto, started to make up for it with two homers and four runs batted in as the Blue Jays moved into first place by a half game over New York in the AL East.

Bell hit two home runs in a game for the fifth time this season to support the combined three-hit pitching of Dave Stieb and Mark Eichhorn.

Bell's first homer was a three-run shot during a seven-run fifth inning. It came off starter Rick Rhoden, 6-4, and gave the Blue Jays a 7-0 lead.

Bell hit his second homer — and 20th of the season — with one out in the ninth to give him 50 RBI for the year.

Twins 5, Royals 3

Rookie Gene Larkin hit a pinch triple with the bases loaded in the seventh inning to move Minnesota to within one game of first-place Kansas City in the AL West.

Dan Quisenberry relieved starter Mark Gubicza, 3-7, with the bases loaded and got a force play at home. Larkin then cleared the bases with a shot down the right field line.

Randy Niemann, 1-0, got his first victory for Minnesota and Jeff Reardon struck out the side in the ninth for his 11th save.

Red Sox 6, Orioles 2

Bob Stanley snapped a personal six-game losing streak on the road as Boston sent Baltimore to its fifth straight defeat and ninth in 10 games.

Stanley, 3-7, allowed 10 hits in 6⅔ innings. Tom Bolton pitched 1⅓ innings and Calvin Schiraldi pitched the ninth inning.

Spike Owen had two of six doubles for Boston, which played without injured hitting star Wade Boggs and lost first baseman Bill Buckner in a fifth-inning collison with Baltimore's Jim Dwyer. Owen drove in two runs.

Baltimore went 0-for-9 with runners in scoring position, giving the Orioles 16-for-85 in that statistic in the past 10 games.

Athletics 9, White Sox 3

Steve Ontiveros, who usually comes out of the bullpen, combined with three relievers on a six-hitter and Carney Lansford and Reggie Jackson hit three-run homers as Oakland beat Chicago.

"Starting is like a breath of fresh air," Ontiveros said after he allowed two runs in five innings. Relievers Gene Nelson, Dave Leiper and Jay Howell combined with Ontiveros to strike out a club season-high 14 batters.

With Oakland leading 5-3 in the eighth, Jackson hit a pinch homer for the 553rd home run of his career.

VAN BERG—

"You measure each horse in his own day," trainer Steve DiMauro said. "There's no way to say which was the best Triple Crown winner. It is unfair to mix generations. You can look at one particular year and say a horse was the best that year. But that's all you can say."

Still, there were obvious doubts about Alysheba's credentials. He had won just three of 12 races coming into the Belmont. Compare that with Seattle Slew's 8-0 record before he clinched his Triple in 1977 or Affirmed's 13-2 record before he won it the next year.

ALYSHEBA ALSO did not scare off the opposition the way other Triple Crown winners did. There were eight starters opposing him on Saturday, the most to go in the Belmont against a horse who already had won the first two races in the series.

By comparison, only two horses challenged Sir Barton in 1919 and Count Fleet in 1943. Three went against Gallant Fox in 1930 and Whirlaway in 1941 and just four opposed Omaha in 1935, Secretariat in 1973 and Affirmed in 1978.

Van Berg was, of course, disappointed by Alysheba's race. How disappointed? "I ain't gonna jump off this building," he said dryly.

That despite missing the $5 million Triple Crown bonus and even the $1 million top point payoff.

"I've been busted all my life," Van Berg said. "Another year won't hurt."

When a favorite loses as thoroughly as Alysheba did Saturday, you look for reasons. Jockey Chris McCarron accepted a chunk of the blame for some bad judgment on the first turn when he pulled his horse back in the slow pace and then never was able to seriously challenge later.

A more popular theory, however, was the absence of Lasix, an anti-bleeding medication allowed in most states but banned in New York. Running on Lasix, Alysheba beat Bet Twice in Kentucky and Maryland. Running without it, he needed binoculars to see his rival at the finish in New York.

DiMaggio takes livelier ball side in homer debate

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe DiMaggio thinks bouncy baseballs, not bigger biceps, are the main reason home runs are being hit at a record pace in the major leagues this season.

"No one can tell me the ball isn't livelier," said DiMaggio, who hit 361 home runs in his 13-year career with the New York Yankees.

"I know the players are stronger today, but that can't be the whole reason. Why is it happening so suddenly? Did they all get stronger over the winter?"

Maybe some of the players did.

The Baltimore Orioles set a major-league record by hitting 58 home runs in May, one less than St. Louis hit as a team in 1986. Eric Davis, Andre Dawson and rookie Mark McGwire each have 19 homers and are ahead of Roger Maris' pace when he set a major-league record with 61 homers in 1961.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Others will seek more of your time in the year ahead. Be kind but firm if up to your neck in work. Trying to be all things to all people could affect your closest relationships unless you are careful. Concentrate on your primary goals and peak productivity can be achieved. You take a giant step forward where your work is concerned in the fall. Let loved ones know how much they mean to you. This summer should be family-oriented and highly enjoyable.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: one of the greatest entertainers of all time Judy Garland, children's author Maurice Sendak, White Sox lefty Floyd Bannister, Great Britain's Prince Philip, attorney F. Lee Bailey, circus performer Clyde Beatty, author Saul Bellow, longtime Virginia Senator Harry Flood Byrd Sr., actor Sessue Hayakawa, actress Hattie McDaniel.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Watch what you say and do today. Others may not understand your sense of humor. A "generation gap" could be a figment of your imagination. Follow your heart this evening! Pursue romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Changes in the workplace should benefit employees. Bankers are receptive to intelligent suggestions. Open up and tell an expert about your own situation. You attract good luck along with new romance. Show imagination.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Job-hopping will only make matters worse. Stay put and weather the storm and you will be richly rewarded. A stable, long-lasting relationship brings you unlimited success. Accept compliments graciously.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are gratified by what you can accomplish on your own, but teamwork is where the real cash comes from. A brief encounter will leave you walking on air. Issue a special invitation.

RAPID RECOVERY

Both vulnerable. East deals.

	NORTH ♠ K 9 8 6 3 ♡ A K 4 ◇ 10 ♣ A 10 8 5
WEST ♠ 7 2 ♡ 8 3 2 ◇ Q 9 7 6 4 3 2 ♣ 2		EAST ♠ 4 ♡ Q J 10 9 7 6 5 ◇ J 8 ♣ K Q 7
	SOUTH ♠ A Q J 10 5 ♡ Void ◇ A K 5 ♣ J 9 6 4 3

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
3 ♡	Dbl	Pass	4 ♡
Pass	4 ♠	Pass	6 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♣

We don't like an opening lead of a singleton unless we have good reason to suspect that partner has the ace in the suit or a quick entry. Neither of these conditions applied here, but there is no denying that West's attack presented declarer with a very difficult problem.

East's preempt served only to speed up the auction. We like South's decision to make a takeout double—his hand could play in any one of three suits. North wasted no time in committing the hand to slam once he discovered in which suit he wanted to play.

Had West unimaginatively led a heart, declarer would surely have made the slam. The sure-trick line is to draw trumps and eliminate the red suits from both hands. Then declarer takes a club finesse. East wins, but he must either return a club into declarer's major tenace or else yield a ruff-sluff.

With such a weak hand opposite a partner who had preempted, West's club lead was a desperate stroke. It was obvious to declarer that that had to be a singleton, so he rose with the ace. Although it now appeared that South was saddled with two unavoidable club losers, he unearthed a line that allowed him to scramble home.

After drawing two rounds of trumps, declarer cashed the ace-king of hearts and ruffed a heart. The distribution declarer was seeking now became a reality, because East surely held one spade, seven hearts and three clubs. Therefore, he had only two diamonds. Declarer cashed the ace and king of that suit, discarding a club from dummy, then continued with a third round. West was given a gift of that trick as declarer sluffed another club from the table.

Down to nothing but diamonds, West was forced to concede a ruff-sluff to declarer. On the diamond return the board's last club vanished as declarer ruffed in hand, and the table's three trumps took the last three tricks.

Travis wins four country music awards

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Catfish-cook-turned-singer Randy Travis captured four awards, and the Statler Brothers won three, including entertainer of the year, at the fan-voted Music City News country awards show.

Travis, a million-selling singer after less than two years as a recording artist, was honored as male vocalist of the year during Monday night's syndicated television awards program.

Travis, 27, also won album of year for "Storms of Life," was named the "Star of Tomorrow" and his "On the Other Hand" was chosen single record of the year.

"I still am overwhelmed that in just over a year all these things have happened," he said afterward at the Grand Ole Opry House.

"Not everything I do is great," he said. "My biggest asset is the good people around me."

The Statlers, a veteran quartet discovered in 1963 by country king Johnny Cash, shared the spotlight at the awards show they have dominated for a decade.

Their other awards were for group of the year and country music television special of the year for "The Statlers' Christmas Present."

Their honor as best entertainer was their third straight. They have been voted No. 1 vocal group every year since 1972, except 1983, when Alabama won the honor.

Travis, a catfish cook until 1½ years ago, sold 1 million copies of his "Storms of Life." His single, "Forever and Ever, Amen," is currently No. 1 on the country music charts.

Reba McEntire was named top female vocalist for the third straight year and her "Whoever's in New England" was voted top country music video.

George Jones, a 30-year veteran, was chosen for the "Living Legend" award.

"I guess this is one of the proudest moments of my life," said Jones, the ex-husband of country star Tammy Wynette.

Other winners were the Judds, duet of the year; Ray Stevens, comedian of the year; the "Hee Haw" Gospel Quartet, gospel act of the year; and "Nashville Now," top country music television series.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer Michael Jackson has abandoned a plan to keep a giraffe in his backyard with other exotic pets, including chimpanzees, a llama, deer and a boa constrictor.

Robert Wilkerson, a representative for Jackson, withdrew a zoning waiver request Monday from the Van Nuys zoning commission. Wilkerson said he believed that the entertainer had a change of heart.

Jackson was not present at the hearing where some of his San Fernando Valley neighbors showed up to voice opposition to his animal compound, which is ringed by a 17-foot-high fence.

One neighbor was only partially mollified by Jackson's decision to withdraw the giraffe request.

"This is the first opportunity we've had to bring public attention to this problem," said Howard Davine, whose home borders Jackson's. When the temperature rises the "neighborhood smells like a zoo," he said.

Duke

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Screen Actors Guild President Patty Duke says she has changed her mind and will run for a second two-year term as head of the 60,000-member talent union.

Miss Duke, who was elected to her first term in November 1985, told SAG members that "All rumors and statements to the contrary notwithstanding, I will seek a second term as your president."

The statement was greeted by a standing ovation Sunday at the Guild's annual meeting. The elections are set for October.

Miss Duke took over after four stormy years of administration by activist Ed Asner, who decided not to seek a third term.

The two-year term "is not enough to gear up, get going and maintain the continuity that is so necessary for an institution of this size, scope and personality," she said.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Dizzy Gillespie is the grand master among a lineup of artists scheduled for the Newport JVC Jazz Festival in August.

Younger artists performing at the Aug. 15-16 event will include Wynton and Branford Marsalis, with each brother leading his own group, Dick Upson, a spokesman for the Rhode Island State Council on the Arts, told a news conference Monday.

The straight-ahead jazz style of Gillespie and the Marsalis brothers harkens back to the music's classical forms, but pop-jazz and jazz-rock fusion also will be in the lineup, Upson said.

Gillespie will bring an 18-piece big band to Newport as part of a year-long series of appearances he is making to celebrate his 70th birthday, on Oct. 21.

BEDFORD, N.Y. (AP) — Trans World Airlines Chairman Carl Icahn has issued his local library a $50,000 challenge to aid its restoration project.

Icahn told the Bedford Historical Society, which owns the Beford Free Library building, that he will kick in the money if the library raised the same amount.

Historical Society President Lloyd Bedford Cox said recently the building, built in 1807, needs a lot of structural work.

SEATTLE (AP) — Word that "Wheel of Fortune" letter-turner Vanna White was coming to town touched off "Vanna fever" and had people paying a quarter each for a chance to touch a dress she wore.

The money will be donated to a children's hospital, said Jack Kelly, part owner of Uptown Expresso, a coffee and juice bar that put the dress on display hoping to attract the celebrity star when she visits a bookstore today.

Kelly said he obtained the dress, which was modeled by a mannequin, through the coffee bar's cabinetmaker, whose girlfriend's father bought it at an auction for $700.

"It's magenta, with a little orchid on the front," Kelly said.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Tunes by B.B. King, Muddy Waters and many other blues artists will hit the airwaves worldwide this fall on Armed Forces Radio.

"Living Blues" will blend historic and contemporary songs, said Bill Ferris, director of the University of Mississippi's Center for the Study of Southern Culture, who will be host of the 26 hour-long programs.

"This will bring a great recognition of blues as native American music," he said.

Jerry Fry, director of programming for the California-based network, estimated that it has a potential audience of about 1.4 million servicemen, their families and civilian personnel in 44 countries.

VENTURA, Calif. (AP) — Former Western film star Cecilia Parker Baldwin is celebrating her 49th wedding anniversary this year and says she doesn't have any regrets about leaving the Big Screen.

"I went back to Hollywood in 1958 to do another 'Andy Hardy' picture (she appeared in 10) and it just wasn't the same," Mrs. Baldwin said recently. "Once you leave something, it's hard to go back and feel the same way. The spontaneity wasn't there."

Mrs. Baldwin and her husband, former actor Robert "Dick" Baldwin, made a non-celluloid life for themselves operating two beachside motels.

Hesse: FERC implementing gas complaint task force

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is setting up a special task force to investigate complaints of unfair practices in the natural gas market.

"The commission has received numerous complaints of alleged anti-competitive activities," FERC chairman Martha O. Hesse said Monday during a speech before the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

"I have decided there must be an administrative mechanism to examine and resolve such matters quickly and effectively to ensure an efficient and competitive natural gas market," she said.

"Formal administrative proceedures, while sometimes necessary, may be too cumbersome and time consuming for matters that can be resolved through a more flexible, informal process."

Use of gas pipeline facilities will be a major target of anti-discriminatory activities of the task force, Ms. Hesse said.

Ms. Hesse said that she, an agency counsel "and as many more people as necessary" will serve on the task force and she encouraged companies with complaints to meet with her in person or by telephone to discuss the problem.

A. Scott Anderson, general counsel for TIPRO, gave this summary of activities leading up to the present attempt to provide equal access to gas pipelines by all gas producers:

In the past, he said, gas pipelines have purchased gas from producers and then have resold the gas to anybody who wanted it. In the process, they created a monopoly. In order to get gas, the user had to buy it from the pipeline. In addition, the gas producer was forced to sell to the pipeline, because he had no other means of moving the gas.

The FERC has tried to remedy this situation by urging pipelines to agree to serve only as transportation facilities, which would permit a producer to sell his gas to the ultimate buyer and pay the pipeline a fee to transport the gas.

One large gas pipeline and about a dozen smaller companies have agreed to participate in the plan and others have applied to participate.

But problems have arisen in the operation of the plan. Some gas pipelines have been accused of showing favoritism in the use of their facilities.

Ms. Hesse noted that complaints had been made that some pipelines have given preferential treatment to their marketing affiliates to the detriment of non-affiliated shippers.

Also, she said, there have been complaints that some parties to the pipeline agreements have not complied with the good-faith negotiations provisions of the agreements.

Critics assail Interior Department oil study

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency and the Library of Congress are challenging the adequacy of an Interior Department study calling for oil and gas development in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

In separate critiques, EPA and the library's Congressional Research Service say the department's Final Legislative Environmental Impact Statement isn't sufficient to support the Reagan administration's request to Congress to open up the refuge.

Both said the statement is deficient in addressing the threat posed to the refuge's air and water quality and wildlife by developing what drilling advocates say is the nation's last potentially major onshore oil reserve.

Interior Secretary Donald Hodel has told Congress that developing the 1.5 million acres of tundra is vital to the nation's security and that it can be carried out in an environmentally sound manner.

But Robie Russell, administrator of EPA's region 10 in Seattle, said that because of the "inadequacy of the information" in the FLEIS, Hodel should make "substantial changes" in it.

"EPA found a document incomplete in its presentation of scientific data that would support the impact conclusions and the (Interior) secretary's recommendations," Russell said in a June 1 letter to William Horn, assistant Interior secretary for fish and wildlife and parks.

Both EPA and the research service took issue with one of the administration's main selling points: that there have been no serious environmental problems in a decade of oil production at Prudhoe Bay

FDIC to infuse BancTexas with $200 million capital

DALLAS (AP) — BancTexas Group Inc., which lost $134 million last year, announced Monday that it has executed definitive agreements with its bank lenders, the FDIC, and a merchant banking firm for a rescue plan that would infuse $200 million into the Dallas-based company.

Richard Ripley, president and chief executive officer of BancTexas, said the agreements now will be presented for approval by stockholders at a meeting scheduled for June 20.

Under BancTexas' capital restructuring plan, announced in February, BancTexas will receive $150 million from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

In addition, Hallwood Group Inc., a New York-based merchant banking company, has agreed to organize a stock offering that will raise $50 million of new common equity capital for BancTexas.

Senior creditors of the holding company that BancTexas owes about $25 million will cancel the debt. In exchange, they will get $9.25 million cash, BancTexas common stock with a book value of approximately $2 million, and 20-year warrants to buy 5 percent of BancTexas common stock.

The $200 million in new capital will help cover past loan losses and provide a cushion against new ones, Ripley said.

The FDIC will receive 20-year warrants to buy 10 percent of purchase 10 percent of BancTexas' common stock.

For its role in the restructuring plan, Hallwood will receive nonvoting stock of BancTexas constituting approximately one eighth of the outstanding shares of BancTexas common stock.

FDIC spokesman Stephen Katsanos said in February that the aid was approved in principle after the FDIC and the comptroller of the currency determined that BancTexas' 11 subsidiary banks and the holding company itself were in danger of failing.

Despite criticism, airlines flying high

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Despite criticism from within and outside the airline industry, 'deregulation has been an unrivaled success," said Ron Ricks, vice president of Southwest Airlines, speaking at the monthly Business Forum Monday.

Ricks says deregulation has resulted in more flights to more destinations for less money. "But the most important point is that air safety has improved, despite the popular sport of 'airline bashing' in the news media."

He told the gathering at the forum, sponsored by the Business Journal of the Permian Basin and the Plaza Club, that it is good business for airlines to be concerned about safety. "Nobody wants to fly on an airline with a poor safety record."

But Ricks believes deregulation has been blamed for causing a "perceived" safety problem in the industry — an image he feels is undeserved. He points to a recent Federal Aviation Administration report that shows an improved safety record when comparing the six years before deregulation to the six years following deregulation. "When comparing the period before to the period after, the accident rate is down 38 percent, with fatal accidents down 41 percent.

Ricks

"Deregulation has caused no increased safety problems; as a matter of fact, 1986 was the safest year ever in the history of the American airline industry. We have to do a better job of correcting the perceptions of the consumer," he adds.

Ricks says since Congress passed the Deregulation Act in 1978, and it took effect in 1979, increased competition has enabled the air traveler to receive more efficient service at lower costs. "Before 1979, the only competition among airlines was who could hire the best chef or who could provide the latest style in stewardess uniforms. Now, competition for lower fares, more flights and market share has benefited the customer."

Ricks believes the industry has fared well in those efforts. "Department of Transportation studies indicate the average fares per mile were 30 percent lower in 1986 than in 1981.

Tariff lift draws praise

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's reviving semiconductor makers say they support President Reagan's decision to remove 17 percent of the penalty tariffs against Japan that were imposed on their behalf two months ago.

"We hope this goodwill gesture will lead to a continuing pattern of compliance by Japan," the Semiconductor Industry Association said in a statement Monday.

In Venice, Italy, on Monday for a summit conference, Reagan sliced $51 million off the $300 million in tariffs he had imposed on Japanese electronics goods in retaliation for alleged Japanese violation of an accord on semiconductor trade.

Reagan said the Japanese "ought to be rewarded" for partial progress, but it was too soon to eliminate the sanctions.

Japanese officials in Tokyo said they hoped the rest of the sanctions would be removed promptly, while some Democratic lawmakers in Washington said it was too soon to ease off on the measures at all.

The United States has accused Japan of selling chips at unfairly low prices and not opening its home market enough to foreign-made chips.

Air fare increase impact uncertain

From Staff and Wire Reports

Continental Airlines and United Airlines announced Monday they would match Trans World Airlines' plan to raise domestic air fares $3 to $7 in order to offset recent fuel cost increases.

Last Thursday, TWA announced it planned the domestic fare hikes, due to fuel prices that had risen more than 20 percent between November and April. The airline said tickets on international flights would rise $8.

American Airlines spokesman Steve McGregor said this morning that the Dallas-based carrier is likely to make a decision today in regards to following suit with the fare increases. "Yesterday's decision by Continental puts a different light on out decision because they are a major competitor in many markets.

McGregor said that American has been contemplating a possible increase since last week's anbnouncement by TWA.

John Patterson, general manager for Continental Airlines at Midland Regional Airport said that although specific rate increases on particular routes "have not been determined, there should be little impact in the local boarding zone."

Patterson anticpates that increases on its Midland-Denver and Midland-Houston Intercontinental routes will be in the low end of the $3 to $7 range of increases.

United spokesman Dan Sheehy said Monday the carrier was matching TWA's domestic increases, and "looking" at the international fare rise.

Continental announced it would follow suit, although without the $8 increase on international flights, according to spokesman Richard Scott.

The increases for all three airlines are effective with tickets written on or after June 19.

After TWA's announcement, other major carriers said they were studying the increases.

In the past, industry leader Texas Air Corp., which owns Continental, has aborted industry-wide fare increases by refusing to go along.

A limited fare increase for first class and full coach seats announced by United and American Airlines in late May was intended to offset rising fuel prices.

But Texas Air refused to go along with the move and the two airlines sharply limited the increases, with United restricting the fare hike to less than 15 percent of its markets.

Making money presents problem for government

WASHINGTON (AP) — The venerable American greenback isn't going high-tech just yet. Production problems are forcing a delay of perhaps two years in the introduction of anti-counterfeiting changes in American paper money.

The Treasury Department had hoped to be in production already with the first significant design change in America's currency in half a century, but officials announced Monday that problems with the paper supply mean the original timetable will not be met.

In March 1986 after six years of study, the government announced it would start weaving a tiny plastic thread into the currency and adding microscopic printing around the portraits.

Both changes are aimed at thwarting a new generation of sophisticated color copying machines which have raised concerns that they will spawn a new class of "casual" counterfeiters who could simply run off money on the spur of the moment.

U.S. Treasurer Katherine Ortega said Monday that problems have arisen in securing paper embedded with the plastic thread, and these difficulties may add "up to an additional two years" before the new currency can be put into circulation.

Susanne Howard, an aide to Mrs. Ortega, said the company that provides the blank sheets of paper on which the money is printed is having difficulty producing the paper in sufficient quantities for the 6.5 billion new bills printed each year.

"At the high speeds necessary to meet our production demands, they are having trouble maintaining the proper quality," she said.

The polyester thread that is being woven into the new currency will be invisible until it is held up to the light, when printing on the thread would then identify the denomination of the bill.

The other change is the addition of the words "United States of America" repeated around the portrait in print so small that it would only be visible when held under a magnifying glass.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing had originally forecast that full-scale production of the new currency would begin this spring with the money being put into circulation by this fall.

The design changes were scheduled to cover all denominations — $1, $5, $10, $20, $50 and $100. Officials estimated the new features would hike the cost of producing each bill from 2.5 cents to 2.6 cents.

Rep. Frank Annuzio, D-Ill. and chairman of a House Banking subcommittee that oversees currency production, has criticized the new anti-counterfeiting features, contending that the changes are so minor that they will not be easily detectable.

"The Treasury Department has already spent close to $40 million studying this problem and they still can't get it into operation," said Curtis Prins, staff director of the subcommittee.

Officials said it may be the fall of 1989 before the new currency is in circulation, but Prins said simpler solutions to the threat from copying machines already exist.

The subcommittee has recommended that the word "void" appear when the money is photocopied as it does now on government checks or that ink be used on certain parts of the bill that would disappear when photocopied.

From Staff Reports

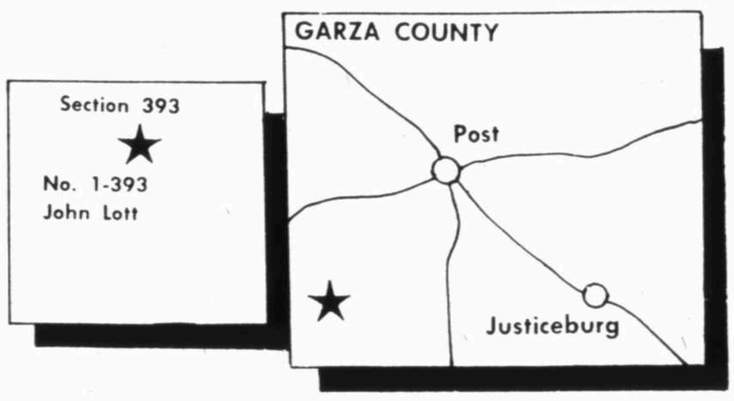
The No. 1-393 John Lott, a 9,170-ft. wildcat in southwestern Garza County hit prolific Strawn oil pay. Drilled by Midland-based SHENANDOAH PETROLEUM CORP., the well was potentialed to flow 291 barrels of 39.5 degree API gravity crude with no water from perforations between 8,683 ft. and 8,688 ft. Gas-to-oil ratio was measured at 450:1.

The operated-suggested name for the new field is Pelican (Strawn) Field.

Plugged back to 8,790 ft., the strike has 5½-in. casing set to 9,017 ft.

From a ground elevation of 2,889 ft. formation tops were p icked at 7,165 ft., Dean; 8,570 ft., Strawn; and 8,842 ft., Mississippian. Pay was topped at 8,683 ft.

The well is located 467 ft. from north and 1,550 ft. from west lines of Section 393, Block 9 of the EL&RR Survey, 15 miles southwest of Post.



Fusselman wildcat pumps 99 bopd

BARBARA FASKEN, Midland, drilled the No. 291 Jack Wilkinson, a 10,675-ft. test in eastern Howard County.

The well was tested to pump 99 barrels of 44 degree API gravity crude and 6.5 Mcfgd from Fusselman perforations between 10,510 ft. and 10,518 ft. Gas-to-oil ration was 66:1.

With 5½-in. casing set to total depth, the well was plugged back to 10,635 ft. The producing interval was treated with 500 gal. of 15 percent NeFe acid.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Remodeling, lower interest rates have no connection

By BILL DOYLE

Q. A few years ago, for a period of six to eight months, many banks in this area refurbished their offices — obviously at great cost. Shortly after that, interest rates on certificates of deposit went down and bottomed out.

I wonder if the Federal Reserve gave banks a tax-free refurbishing period and then maneuvered and manipulated interest rates lower, so that banks could afford the refurbishing costs by paying less interest on CDs.

Also, it seems that lower CD rates underpinned the big thrust in the stock market. When CD rates went down, the stock prices went up.

Wasn't this a "deal" between the Federal Reserve and the banks — paid for by small investors who keep their money in CDs?

Doyle

A. My, you are hot under the collar with unfounded suspicions.

The Federal Reserve, as this nation's central bank, has many duties and powers. In no way, shape or form, however, does the Fed have the authority to grant a tax hiatus to banks.

The federal taxes paid by banks, other institutions, corporations, you and the rest of us are determined by the Internal Revenue Code, which is written by Congress and administered by the Internal Revenue Service.

The IRS did not give banks the pie-in-the-sky tax break you dreamed up.

Along with many other folks, you're unhappy that CD interest rates are well below the stratospheric levels they reached a few years ago. But you can't blame that on the expenses banks incurred sprucing up their offices.

The "discount rate" — the interest the Fed charges on loans to banks and other depository institutions — plays a big role in determining overall interest rates. But many other factors come into play.

Summed up, it's a case of supply and demand. The amount of money available for lending determines the available interest rate. When you obtain a CD, you make a loan to the bank.

Q. The savings and loan association at which I have three certificates of deposit was merged with another S&L this past winter and I've had a lot of trouble ever since.

First they changed the formula for computing quarterly interest. Second, they arbitrarily advanced the CDs maturity dates from July 19, 1989, to July 17, 1989.

No reason was given for either change. When I ask why, I am stonewalled. I suspect skullduggery, due to the fact that two of the accounts pay 12.25 percent and the other 11 percent.

How can I get this matter cleared up? There must be some federal agency from which I can get relief.

A. Indeed, there is, assuming it's a federally chartered S&L or has Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. coverage. Write to Office of Community Investment, Federal Home Loan Bank Board, 1700 G Street, N. W., Washington, D.C. 20552.

There are 12 Federal Home Loan Banks around the country. Your complaint will be referred to the one serving your area.

A CD is a contract to which both sides — you and the depository institution — must abide. Unless there is something in the contract allowing that CD to do so, it had no right to make the changes you cite.

Q. I have about $200,000 worth of oil stock in a safe deposit box at my bank. The bank provides me with only $100,000 of deposit insurance. If the bank folds, could I lose the other $100,000 worth of stock?

A. No. Rest easy. Federal deposit insurance does not cover the stock or anything else in your safe deposit box. The contents of your lock box belong to you. They are not part of the bank's assets and cannot be touched by the bank creditors.

If the bank goes belly up, you won't lose what you have in the box. You'll be able to remove your stock certificates and whatever else you have in the box, normally within a day or so.

AGA estimate shows '86 gas reserves exceed expectations

WASHINGTON — Natural gas reserves additions for 1986 are higher than expected and should be between 60 and 75 percent of '86 production, according to a preliminary assessment released by the American Gas Association.

An analysis of the reserves additions of the top 30 natural gas reserves holders reveals these companies added more than 6 trillion cubic feet of gas to their reserves holdings in '86, a much stronger showing than many industry analysts expected. Given the sharply reduced gas drilling activity due to the existence of the gas supply bubble and sharply lower prices, this level of reserves additions rekindles the long term prospects for gas supply, the analysis states.

The AGA issue brief entitled "Preliminary Findings Concerning 1986 Natural Gas Reserves," cites a number of significant trends among different size and type gas producers. The study shows that in 1986 gas transportation companies (pipelines and distributors) and the largest gas producers did surprisingly well in replacing production with new reserves additions. The ten largest reserves holding companies had higher replacement of production in 1986 than they did in '85.

Natural gas reserve additions of the 30 largest reserves holding companies totaled 77 percent of production in 1986 compared to 75 percent in 1985, the analysis reveals. In light of the 48 percent decline in gas well drilling activity in '86, it would appear that the smaller independent gas producers were not able to match the reserve additions of the top 30 companies as they had in the past, the analysis revealed.

Ties are tattletale signs of men's style, social status

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

She grabbed him by his tie.

Pulling his face up to hers, she screamed, "You lied to me! You said you were a bank president, and you're really a math teacher!"

If only she had noticed his tie. Non-executive status was written all over the brown knit tie that looked so nice with his brown plaid shirt.

Regardless of what he told her, his casual tie didn't lie, as it's a popular choice among teachers, journalists and college students.

John Molloy, author of the highly successful "Dress for Success" books, says the tie is probably the most important denominator of social status for a man in the United States today. "Show me a man's ties, and I will tell who he is or is trying to be," he says.

It's nothing new. All kinds of innuendos are tied up with a man's tie. They're symbolic of the male sex and are not to be touched by strangers. Yet they are the first thing to be grabbed in anger or fingered by flirtatious women.

Women have fought other women for touching their man's tie, and men as recently as the 19th century fought duels over manhandled neckwear. But historians have noted that neckwear has been tied to romance and war ever since the Middle Ages when ladies gave knights colorful scarves to wear into battle.

TODAY MEN go to battle in the board room and office, but they still wave their colors. They size up their competition by zeroing in on his tie. How is it tied? What is it made of? How many stripes does it have, and how bright are the colors?

All of these tie tactics matter. They indicate one's college, club, political preference, socioeconomic background and professional aspirations — so it's no wonder men often insist on picking out their own ties (which must be a losing battle, since women buy 60 percent of all neckties sold annually, according to the Neckwear Association of America, Inc.). And you thought real men didn't wear ties.

HERE'S A test of your neckwear knowledge. Want to know how well you do on the business battlefield? Here's a chance to test your neckwear knowledge:

1. He's a middle-aged Republican banker. You can tell by his:
   A. Pink palm tree tie that glows in the dark.
   B. Bright pink and green rep striped tie.
   C. Maroon and navy rep striped tie.

   A. He's wearing a solid red tie.
   B. His tie has pink palm trees and glows in the dark.
   C. He's wearing a madras bow tie.
3. Your tie is made of a heavy fabric. It will look best tied in a:
   A. Four-in-hand knot.
   B. Windsor knot.
   C. Half-Windsor knot.
4. Rep ties are:

5. Club ties:

   C. Have a large canned cocktail appliqued on the end.
6. Ties with large figures or many colors:
   A. Are strictly for casual clothes.
   B. Are strictly for formal events.
   C. Are strictly for aluminum siding salesmen.
7. Black-tie event means:
   A. Wear whatever you want as long as you've got a black tie.
   B. That you'll be spending big bucks for the tickets.
   C. That you'll wear a tuxedo to this formal affair.
8. A foulard with a neat print is:
   A. A flashy hand-painted tie.
   B. A small geometric print evenly spaced.
   C. A large geometric print evenly spaced.
9. A tie when tied should reach:

Stylish salons offer men royal treatment

By ANNE-MARIE SCHIRO
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — "I'm from Morocco, and this makes me feel like a sultan," Leon Amar said as he lay stretched out on a table body swathed in a white sheet, his head wrapped in a white towel, his face smeared with cream.

"This is my first scalp treatment," Dick Ross told Irene Hermoza, who was massaging his scalp, "and I can tell you right now I'm coming back."

It was men's night only at the Linda Tam Salon, 680 Fifth Ave., near 54th Street. Every Wednesday from 5 to 8 p.m., no women are accepted as customers and a special $100 package for men is offered, which includes a scalp treatment, haircut and styling, facial, manicure and pedicure. Most of the packages are bought by women as gifts for the men in their lives.

"I'm here because of my wife," said Ross, a graphic artist who had brought a friend, Gonzalo Firpo, for moral support. "I told Gon I didn't want to do this alone. Together, we can face the shock of putting on a robe and having someone fuss with our hair."

In a neighboring room, Mark Carter, a travel agent, was having his white hair colored dark gray by Ron Smith.

"My partner gave me this night as a gift," Carter said. "I'm getting the works. Pedicures are a luxury I've only discovered recently. Actually, it's become a necessity. So has a manicure. You have it done twice and you're hooked."

And so it goes at more and more beauty salons around town, and in cities across the country, where men are indulging in the pampering women have long been accustomed to. Men are 30 to 50 percent of the clientele at many salons. They range in age from 20 to 70; their professions include the arts, education, business and medicine.

"We get all kinds of men," said Charles Booth, owner of La Coupe, 694 Madison Avenue, near 62d Street. "They're just as concerned about their appearance as women are, but not in a feminine way. Businessmen making public appearances need to be perfectly groomed."

Of course, men can get perfectly groomed at a traditional barbershop, and that is where most still go for haircuts. But many others who are concerned about looking young and up to date are highlighting their hair (and often their beards), getting permanents to make thinning hair look fuller, having unwanted hair removed by waxing or electrolysis and indulging in facials to keep skin looking youthful.

And they do not object to paying $30 to $50 for a haircut, $10 or more for a manicure or as much as $50 for a facial.

"We get primarily Wall Streeters here," said Martin Levine, a co-owner of Joseph Martin, 717 Madison Ave., near 63d Steeet. "A lot of them are sent here by their wives. They're making over $60,000 a year, they live on the Upper East Side or the Upper West Side, they shop on Madison Avenue, so they feel comfortable getting their hair done here."

For most men, the main lure of these salons is a stylish haircut. As Peggy Palagate of La Coupe said: "Young men go to one of those places downtown for something different. They get it cut short in one spot, long in another. Then they come to us to fix it."

The stylish cut now seems to be fairly short on the top and sides and longer in back. "Not shoulder length," Charles Booth said, "just curling over the collar in a romantic way." For men whose hair is too short, he suggested extensions of tiny braids woven into the back, a technique that can also be used to cover bald spots.

Neckties can be profitable to crafts designers

By KELLE BANKS BARFIELD
Copley News Service

If you are among the many Americans who have caught the collector's bug in recent years, there is one item you should keep in mind for collecting. Silk neckties, found in rich colors and often sporting fabulous designs, can prove profitable to a crafts designer looking for a unique new project.

A search through several choice spots, such as vintage clothing stores, the Salvation Army or local yard and garage sales, should produce enough silk ties to get you started on a project of at least a small scale. And don't overlook sources right at your own back door for turning up neckties stashed away in boxes in your attic or cedar closet.

An assortment of these silk ties will produce fantastic results in a project calling for many different pieces of fabric. The perfect illustration of this is a crazy quilt that allows you to piece and patch the fabric as you wish and allows almost none of the tie to go to waste.

On the other hand, an individual necktie is perfect for any project that requires a small quantity of fabric. For example, tiny cloth bags of silk are ideal as coin purses, lipstick bags to keep tubes of lipstick from being lost in the bottom of your handbag, or sachet bags for your lingerie drawer. And all of these projects are so easy to whip together, they make terrific "little somethings" to give as last-minute gifts or to tie onto larger packages.

To make a silk bag, begin by carefully clipping the threads that secure the necktie and opening the fabric out. This will show you how much fabric you have to work with. Press the silk fabric with a warm iron to remove creases, protecting the fabric with a cover cloth as you iron.

Measure out and cut a rectangular piece of fabric. For these small bags, 3 to 4 inches width and 7 to 8 inches length are good measurements to use as a rule-of-thumb. However, if your necktie is not large enough for this width and length, simply adjust the dimensions to utilize as much silk fabric as possible.

Sew the bag together by hand or on a machine. Machine stitching is faster, of course, although a project of such small scale can be completed in less than an hour, even if you handstitch the bag. And sewing it by hand offers you the advantage of portability since all your supplies will easily fit in your purse or a sewing box.

Fold the fabric across its width, leaving one side 1½ to 2 inches longer than the other. Stitch the sides together using a ½-inch seam and turn right side out.

To maximize the width of the bag rather than using an amount of fabric width for seams, fold the fabric with right sides out. Then either whipstitch or use a tight zigzag machine stitch to close the sides.

Use the extra length on one side as a flap to fold over and close the bag. You can give this flap a finished look either by whipstitching around the edges or by stitching double bias tape or doubled lace in place around the flap.

Finally, attach a snap to secure the flap or add a button and either a buttonhole or loop. Or you can tie the bag closed by sewing on two short lengths of ribbon, one on the edge of the flap and one on the side of the bag.

Tips for father's fashions, colors

Copley News Service

If your father is dubious about what colors look best on him, Carole Jackson, who wrote "Color For Men" (Ballantine), advises applying her "Color Me Beautiful" principles, with some variations.

She drapes men in ties, not fabrics, and teaches them how to put a wardrobe together. "Most men play it so safe," she says, "that even a different tie changes their look dramatically." Here are tips from her book:

■ FOR THE WINTER DAD: Black, gray and navy suits look good. Your No. 1 shirt should be pure white. Icy blue-gray and yellow also are good. The best ties are dark blue-red, bright burgundy or dark navy with red accents.

■ FOR THE SUMMER FATHER: Suits should be grayed navy, medium brown, dark blue-gray or light blue. Shirts: soft white and pastel in blue, yellow and rose beige. Ties: burgundy, blue-red and all blues.

■ FOR THE AUTUMN PARENT: Subtle business tweeds, especially in browns and greens. Oyster white, beige or buff shirts. Ties: bittersweet red and brown-red, dark green and browns are perfect.

■ FOR YOUR FATHER IN THE SPRING: A bright light-navy, gray or blue suit is flattering, with ivory, light beige, buff, light periwinkle or warm-pink shirt and orange-red or red tie, solid or patterned.

Hip magazines define style, not fashion

By DIVINA INFUSINO
Copley News Service

You're sipping Evian in your Claude Montana jacket and your favorite cotton T-shirt from college. Nick Kamen is on the CD player and tonight you'll see "Raising Arizona." To pass time, you pick up one of the magazines strewn across your Memphis coffee table. Magazines about people like you. People with style.

It could be Elle, In Fashion, Scene, Details, L.A. Style — any of the new crop of publications that tell their readers not only what's new to wear, but what's trendy to think, read, hear and watch.

Compared to older, established runway watchers like Vogue and Harper's Bazzar, the fresh breed of magazines that have appeared in the last two years are more avant garde and international in content, more ambitious in scope. Their graphics are eye-popping; their models, interracial; their fashion, relatively affordable.

But fashion is not style. Fashion is simply having enough money to wear designer lines or mimic clothing ads. Style is harder to come by.

Style is a showy statement of individuality and self-confidence. It emerges where designer creations intersect with thrift-store chic, rock-'n'-roll rebellion and the street looks of blacks, Latins, gays and artists. It is ironic in outlook and attuned to the '80s notion that commerce is art and art commerce.

"Music, art, fashion, it's all become inseparable. They all impinge and influence each other. And that's how Scene is edited," said the magazine's executive editor, Patrick McCarthy. "That's the way life is."

AT LEAST that's how life is for these magazines' readers. Most are between 18-34, well-heeled, highly educated, sophisticated and confident. That's true for many readers of Vogue, or on the younger end, Glamour and Mademoiselle. But the new style magazines cater to the adventurous and urbane.

"Elle is not designer from head to toe. An Elle woman may wear an Italian leather jacket but with jeans and a T-shirt," said Karen Anderegg, Elle's editor-in-chief. Elle recently won two prestigious magazine awards and boasts sales of 700,000 issues a month in the United States.

"Elle couldn't have been successful 10 years ago," said Anderegg. "It has taken awhile for women to have really disposable income, to get to the point where they don't need to answer to anyone as to where they spend their money. Even five years ago, American women were hung up on the dress-for-success thing. Now we've lightened up. We're more confident and self-appreciative."

All the magazines owe at least a Guess jean jacket or at least a dollop of mousse to the granddaddy of them all, Andy Warhol's Interview Magazine. That oversized, stargazer established the "insider" as a market. That's how the new trend-markers see their readers — "on the cutting edge," and "the advanced consumer," says McCarthy.

Not surprisingly then, Scene and In Fashion are the off-shoots of trade publications. Scene began life as an insert in its Fairchild Publications sister, Women Wear Daily. In Fashion is edited by the same staff that works on the trade, Sportswear International.

"We didn't begin as a result of market research. Our retailers told us there was consumer interest here," editor Laren(cq) Stover says of In Fashion's 500,000 circulation.

AND THAT consumer, whatever age and income, is a mass-media baby. She — and he, in the case of In Fashion and Details — wants to be aware of what's happening around the world. The new international interest among Americans encouraged Elle, which has published European editions for years, and Taxi, a glossy, upscale Italian trend magazine, to enter the American market.

If the style magazine readers haven't traveled extensively, they watch those who have — international personalities, artists, film stars and most importantly, rock-'n'-roll stars. All are covered in short, graphically striking stories in the new magazines.

Many of the new style magazines push a rock focus, especially In Fashion. The magazine usually pictures a man and woman on the cover since it caters to both sexes. Often, one of them is from the pop music world as in the case of May's covergirl, Rosie Vela, who has been both a fashion model and a recording artist. Moreover, much like the recent wave of rock benefits, In Fashion's cover stars pick a charity of their choice and the magazine donates $10,000 in their names.

IN FASHION'S rock-fashion connection is obvious, but not forced, says Stover. She insists the style In Fashion reports is real, not manufactured, and points to Madonna as an example.

"Madonna was the one who became famous, but there were hundreds of girls walking around the East Village who looked a lot like her," she said.

The New York downtown scene — Soho, East Village, TriBeCa — is the starting point for most the new style publications. It was in this area of international artists and bohemians that art and rock culture first bedded, in dance discos like the Palladium. The magazine Details focuses completely on the New York disco scene, the dance floor movers, what they wear, listen to and talk about.

Because most of the new magazines are so New York and consequently Europe-conscious, they tend to shy away from Calfornia trends. Scene saw that opening and boasted a guide to hip L.A. on its first issue. Filling the gap on a more permanent basis is L.A. Style, which Joie Davidow founded about two years ago. The magazine features Los Angeles fashion designers, artists and trendsetters.

"L.A. is becoming a creative center with its own aesthetics," said Davidow. "In New York, European culture blends with American. In L.A. because of the new influx of immigrants, Asian and Latin-American culture is colliding with the L.A.'s beaches and Hollywood fantasy. The result is staggering."

HOW LONG can the avant garde remain the avant garde when slick, corporately funded magazines instanteously mass-market every new twist and turn?

The avant garde will redefine itself as it always does when it becomes accessible enough for mass tastes. And society may begin to demand more substance than style. In the process, some of the new trend magazines will fail.

Yet their popularity indicates one sure thing: Individuality reigns for today's men and women. No one, not designers, dress-for-success books, or trendy magazines, can dictate how we dress and think.

'Put together' look depends on details

By DELORES CARSON
Hearst News Service

It is often said that there is nothing new in the fashion world — that fashion merely repeats itself every few years.

Perhaps so. But just try to drag out an outfit and recycle it from last year's go-'round. It usually won't work. Fashion trends seem to fit in the category of planned obsolescence. But take heart and take another look. There are usually several different looks for any given season. Sometimes, it is the little details that help you put your fashion act together.

Spring and summer styles have been described as primarily feminine and romantic, but there are also rugged, sophisticated and glamorous styles.

Rugged trends have an action orientation. The looks are expressed in denim, twill and cotton and reflect outdoor activities, safari and nautical styles. An outdoor look can be achieved without a particular theme. For instance, combine chambray and denim pieces with tennis shoes and a floppy canvas hat.

Safari seems to be here to stay, along with it's military overtones of epaulets and cargo pockets. The newest of news in the jungle scene is the color black, especially in full skirts and jackets. It mixes well with khaki, sand and olive drabs. You could do a little update on last year's styles with a black belt and black wood bangle-bracelets.

Other best bets to make your jungle look complete is to add crocodile or snake belts and shoes. Huarache-style woven leather shoes also combine well with the look of the jungle. Then brighten your makeup with shades of copper and teal.

If you want to put a little romance in your rugged fashion look, let a little peek of petticoat emerge beneath a long skirt. Or unbutton a full skirt to the knees and flaunt your petticoat for all to see. Trade in your sensible shoes for granny boots, or flats color coordinated to your outfit.

Although there are other styles from which to choose, romance is definitely in the air. Or, more appropriately, on your body for spring and summer. The Victorian woman is on the scene in cotton and linen body-skimming styles. A white, high-ruffle-neck blouse will get you in the mood. Add a matching slim skirt, white hosiery and shoes and you have the look. Accessorize with a broach or pendant and keep your makeup as soft as the styles.

Feminine styles as well as romantic ones are naturals in delicate floral patterns. Accessorize with lace collars and bows in the hair or at the neck. Ballerina dresses are soft knits with tank-style tops, dropped waists and full skirts. In luscious pastels, the dresses can be worn bare or over a lacy blouse. Shoes are best in flat or low-heel pump styles for romantic or feminine styles.

The sophisticated woman can take her choice of classic styles, which are best illustrated in suits this season. The total look is often built in by the designers. Yves St. Laurent, for instance, can dress you from head to foot and even has cigarettes to go with his outfits. And, how would a Chanel suit look without massive chains and a quilted handbag?

You can create these designer touches yourself. Spice up a collarless blouse with gold chains and pearls. Use them together for the latest look. Spectator pumps that match a suit also add a touch of class. And, gloves provide the perfect accent for a constructed suit.

Most of the suits are knee-grazing and a long, leggy look is achieved with high heels.

But the vamp comes out at night with a choice of naughty, can-can style dresses. Or, sleek — pour your body in — looks. Spiky high heels and bold jewelry will make these styles work. Don't forget the poufs and puffs so prevalent in evening styles for spring and summer. They do best with a minimum of jewelry. And, for any evening out, intensify your makeup to look better in dim lighting.

The best of the good news is all of these styles are available in wide size ranges. Liz Claiborne Petites has most of the styles that are in the dress, sportswear and suit lines. And, among others, Lane Bryant offers all styles in sizes 14 and up.

Having a home office not as good as it sounds

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I've always envied people who leave the house every day and go to an office. They always look so "professional" sipping coffee at the traffic lights, their attache cases on the seat beside them while their cellular phones ring off the dashboard. I guess I envy anyone who has her hair combed by 8.

You cannot imagine how appalled I was to read that most of these people hate their jobs and gave the weirdest reasons for quitting them.

"They said I couldn't take short nap breaks twice a day."

"They wouldn't let me keep a talking bird in a cage in my own office."

"My office had a window, but I didn't like the view."

"I got tired of driving to work and the company wouldn't pay for taxis."

"I want to stay home and write poetry."

I have all of those things ... the naps, the bird, the view, the convenience of staying home writing ... and I'm here to tell you I'd trade it all for a phone that wasn't sticky and a bathroom door that couldn't be unlocked with a shish-kebab skewer.

Those malcontents just think it's never-never land at home. Believe me, man does not live by a parking space alone.

After more than 20 years of working at home, I have discovered that people think bad things about you when they knock on your door at noon and you are still in a nightgown. When you explain, "I just wanted to finish a new chapter in my life," they tend to nod their heads and say, "I'll just bet you did, tramp."

There isn't the respect for working at home that you get in an office. How many of you would stand for someone yelling through a bathroom keyhole, "You want to call 'em back or are you going to be in there for a long time?"

How many "professionals" would leave a high-level meeting to add softener to the rinse cycle of the washer or put a client on "hold" to rescue a couple of hard-boiled eggs that have boiled dry on the stove?

And what about the most titillating part of any job ... lunch? In an office, there's an excitement about what time you're going and where you're going and what you're going to order. At home, you KNOW what's for lunch. It's the same thing you had for dinner the night before.

And before all of you restless people who fight office boredom and politics make a decision to take the job and stuff it, imagine what it would be like with no one to quit to. I have written so many "Let me tell you what you can do with this job" speeches, it would make Winston Churchill sound tongue-tied. They're some of the best things I've written and there's no audience for them.

Think about it. A bird and a view aren't everything.

DEAR ABBY

Readers: Abby's advice insensitive, inconsiderate

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: I recently published a letter from a reader who was emotionally torn over whether she should allow "John," her grieving homosexual son whose lover of 10 years had just died of AIDS, to return home for a family reunion and come out of the closet to his entire family. John had told his mother that he was not about to sit down with his family and pretend that life is "beautiful" after having been through the most painful and tragic year of his life — and unless he could be open and honest with his family, he refused to come home.

His mother said, "We love our son, but don't want the embarrassment and hysteria that this situation could bring."

I told the mother that the decision should be John's, but for him to insist that the entire family be informed that he is gay, though it might cause embarrassment and hysteria, would be insensitive and inconsiderate, but to welcome him anyway.

Did I get letters! Some excerpts:

"... Your response to the mother of John, whose lover and partner had just died of AIDS, was both incredibly insensitive and ignorant. You (and John's mother) have conveniently overlooked two facts: (1) John is almost certain to die of AIDS as well; how are they going to deal with the 'hysteria and embarrassment' of that situation? (2) If he's been living with a male lover for 10 years, the relatives all know he's gay anyway — they just don't discuss it with his parents.

"You missed an opportunity to do some educating about AIDS, homophobia and common decency." — GARY IN HOUSTON

"... I still have a column of yours in which you say: 'One thing is certain, God made gays just as surely as he made straights. And all his children are entitled to live and love in dignity, without shame or guilt.' I can't believe anyone who would make that statement would advise a gay person to stay in the closet at a time when he needs all the support and understanding he can get. If his family can't stand the 'embarrassment and hysteria,' that's their problem, not his." — BI IN CHICAGO

"... Many doctors have concluded that self-esteem plays a crucial role in the condition of the immune system. If John is forced to suppress who he is because his family finds it embarrassing, it could very well push his immune system over the edge. And what will his parents do if he does develop AIDS? Tell him to pretend he has an extended case of the flu? Abby, this is the time when John needs his family the most. Shame on you for encouraging them to stifle him." — KRISTIE IN MILL VALLEY

"... The man is in pain. To ask him to be dishonest about a loving relationship is asking him, once again, to subordinate his feelings to those of heterosexuals at a time when he needs to be honest. His parents need to face their own 'shame' concerning their son's sexuality. ('We've never wanted to let the rest of the family know that John is gay.')

"You blew it, Abby." — MIKE V. IN L.A.

DEAR MIKE, KRISTIE, BI, GARY, ET AL: I certainly did, and I apologize for my own insensitivity. I should have known better. And the sad fact is, I really do.

Revolutionaries pose threat to ships in gulf

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Like modern-day pirates, Iran's Revolutionary Guards are launching attacks on merchant ships in the Persian Gulf from speedboats bearing rockets, machine guns and mines.

In the last few weeks, the Guards' "naval wing" has hit at least eight ships, including two Soviet vessels, introducing a new element into the increasingly tense situation in the gulf.

The Iranian government appears to have reduced its air and naval attacks since the Americans and Soviets strengthened their gulf forces following the May 17 Iraqi strike on the USS Stark, which killed 37 sailors. But the Guards' raids have continued unabated.

Revolutionary Guards, fanatical followers of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, fired 21 rocket-propelled grenades into the 219,000-ton Liberian-registered tanker Gollar Robin May 18, starting a fire.

Four days later, the Guards hit the 2,600-ton Rashidia, a cargo ship owned by the Qatar National Navigation Co., with 10 rockets, wounding three crewmen.

So far, casualties aboard the targets have been minimal. But in several attacks, the raiders appeared to be aiming for quarters where seamen were sleeping.

"These are the same kind of Shiite Moslem fanatics who carried out the suicide bombings in Beirut that drove the U.S. Marines and French paratroopers out of Lebanon," said a Western military analyst who regularly visits Tehran. "With the temperature rising in the gulf and the Iranians feeling that the world is ganging up on it again (this) is just the kind of climate in which the fanatics flourish. Suicide attacks in the gulf cannot be ruled out," the analyst noted, speaking on condition he was not named.

Tehran's leaders have warned they will not be deterred by superpower protection for shipping. They have said Iran will attack any bases in gulf Arab states that Washington is allowed to use.

Iran and Iraq have been at war for 6½ years. Since 1984, about 250 merchant vessels from world shipping have been hit in attacks by both combatants aimed at crippling each other's economies.

The speedboat attacks have heightened fears that the Guards, who often operate outside the military chain of command, will intensify their operations despite superpower intervention.

The Middle East Economic Survey quoted Tormod Rafgard, general manager of the Intertanko Co. which operates ships in the gulf as saying: "We believe the people on board these ships are not really under military command, but political command."

He said the speedboat raids "are very similar to the piracy we saw centuries ago."

'Pilgrim for peace' welcomed in loyalty to his native ground

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI

Hearst News Service

John Paul II

WARSAW, Poland — A river of humanity chanting hymns and prayers and throwing flowers welcomed John Paul II Monday in a massive display of loyalty to the Roman Catholic Church as the Pope began a seven-day pilgrimage to his native Poland.

Hundreds of thousands of cheering Poles crowded the 10-mile route the Pope took from Warsaw's airport to the city's center. They waved red and white Polish flags, throwing flowers of the same colors into the path of the bullet-proof "Popemobile" as it traveled slowly through the capital of this Communist-controlled, but predominantly Catholic nation.

Flags of the outlawed Solidarity trade union also were seen along the motorcade route, no doubt deepening government concern that the Pope's pilgrimage might unleash a new wave of social unrest and anti-government demonstrations. Rumors of possible violence after the Pope leaves Poland have been circulating in Washington for some weeks.

Security was tight in Warsaw all day. Hundreds of police vehicles, brought into the city Saturday, scurried about with sirens blaring and lights flashing.

The Pope, referring to himself as the "pilgrim for peace," kissed his native ground as he left the Italian airliner that had carried him to his homeland. Bells pealed throughout the city as the aircraft touched down.

Poland's leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, met the pope on the tarmac. John Paul II walked deliberately to a microphone, his white robe flowing in the slight breeze and his face graced by a smile.

He stood at attention while the military band played the Polish and Vatican national anthems. Speaking for at least a minute in his native Polish, the pontiff made a low-key appeal for human rights. In response, Jaruzelski spoke of a need for flexibility and national reconciliation.

"I greet you, fellow countrymen, who know the joy and the suffering of living in this land," the pope said.

Jaruzelski responded: "I trust that his (the pope's) wish that the visit bear fruit for Poland...and peace is still valid."

The two leaders met privately for more than an hour. The length of their talks prompted speculation that the two discussed the strain in relations between the church and the Polish government.

Poland's religious and political leaders have been discussing an agreement that would give the church legal status for the first time since the communists took power after World War II.

The pope, a strong supporter of Solidarity, believes increased dialogue is necessary between the Polish people and the country's leaders to achieve authentic normalization following the 1981 Solidarity uprising and a clampdown of martial law.

A source familiar with the talks between the Pope and Jaruzelski said the encounter had been "serious, frank, and in-depth." The two leaders last met at the Vatican in January.

The 1000-year-old Polish Catholic church, not the communist government, is viewed by the Poles as the embodiment of Polish nationalism, which has been in conflict for centuries with Russia, Poland's large and often hostile neighbor to the east, as well as with Germany, to the west. Ninety percent of Poland's 36 million people are Catholic.

The pope, who was archbishop in the Polish city of Krakow before his elevation in 1978, and Jaruzelski, met twice in 1983 during the pope's last visit to Poland. The pope also visited Poland in 1979, before Jaruzelski took power.

The pope will meet with Lech Walesa, the leader of the outlawed Solidarity trade union, later this week in Gdansk, birthplace of Solidarity.

On Tuesday, the pope will fly to Lublin and visit Majdanek, a Nazi concentration camp where 360,000 people were gassed to death in the early 1940s.

Mrs. Thatcher comes to summit 'sure of self'

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE

VENICE, Italy (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher is in an enviable position at the economic summit: She is on the brink of having her mandate reaffirmed with an unprecedented third term while her fellow leaders face short or uncertain political futures at best.

Mrs. Thatcher "goes to the country" Thursday and is likely to become the first British prime minister to win a third consecutive term. An opinion poll released Monday showed her Conservative party has a fairly secure nine-point lead over her principal opposition, the Labor party.

So sure is Mrs. Thatcher of herself that a spokesman told reporters after she arrived in Venice on Monday that what she wants from the summit is a reaffirmation of her successful economic policies. The spokesman commented only on condition he not be named.

Mrs. Thatcher's fellow summiteers appear to have less time to make their mark on history.

President Reagan, with whom Mrs. Thatcher enjoys a close relationship, will leave office after the 1988 elections and has been struggling to regain his credibility following the Iran-Contra affair.

Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone has been under pressure because of unpopular tax cuts he has been pushing.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has been weakened by a perceived lack of leadership in recent months.

France's President Francois Mitterrand and Premier Jacques Chirac have been burdened by the difficulties of their "cohabitation" system of power-sharing, and the clutch on power is precarious for both.

Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's popularity has been waning, according to recent opinion polls.

And her summit host, Italy's 79-year-old Premier Amintore Fanfani, is only caretaker prime minister until after the June 14 elections.

Mrs. Thatcher's supporters credit her with curing Britain's economic "disease " and with at least halting, if not reversing, a once-great empire's decline on the world stage. Her critics counter that she has widened the gap between rich and poor, creating an increasingly resentful underclass with few prospects for improvement.

First elected in 1979 and re-elected in 1983, she led Britain to victory in the 1982 Falklands War with Argentina, a matter of great pride in the United Kingdom. Mrs. Thatcher also says she has helped heal wounded British pride via economic accomplishments.

When she first came to power, the British economy was staggering from the last recession, with soaring interest rates and inflation, and entire industrial sectors held hostage by striking unions.

Today, her supporters point to these statistics:

— Independent economists forecast that the British economy will grow nearly 3 percent in 1987, the highest growth rate of the major industrial nations.

— Inflation has steadied at a current rate of about 4 percent compared with more than 20 percent when Mrs. Thatcher took office.

— Interest rates are hovering around 9 percent compared with more than 20 percent when she entered 10 Downing Street.

— British exports have gotten a boost from the fall of the British pound against other major foreign currencies.

Mrs. Thatcher's opponents, including the Social Deomocratic-Liberal Party Alliance, claim that the Conservative government has manipulated the economic numbers to portray Mrs. Thatcher's eight-year leadership in the best possible light.

They quickly point to the biggest stain on her eight years in office, the doubling of Britain's unemployment rate to about 10.9 percent.

Mrs. Thatcher has championed the "privatization" of nationalized industry and "People's Capitalism," an effort to get more corporate stock into the hands of the general public. Meanwhile, she has introduced legislation that has significantly curtailed union power.

In addition, she has presided over the "Big Bang," a deregulation of British financial markets designed to ensure Britain's role as a key money center.

Nancy, Swedish prime minister visit

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — First Lady Nancy Reagan had an unscheduled talk with Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson today before visiting an unusual Swedish program for pregnant drug addicts.

Carlsson walked in as Mrs. Reagan was concluding a half-hour meeting with his wife Ingrid, and they exchanged pleasantries about the prime minister's scheduled state visit to Washington.

"We are looking forward to seeing you in September," Mrs. Reagan said. Carlsson, who attended Northwestern University in 1960-61, replied that the trip "is very special for us" and that his two years in the United States "gives us a special impression."

It will be the first top-level visit since the two countries came to the brink of severing relations on the issue of the Vietnam War, which former Prime Minister Olof Palme opposed strenuously.

Mrs. Reagan met earlier with Palme's widow, Lisbet, a child psychologist for the Stockholm city government. Palme was assassinated in February 1986.

The first lady told reporters she had not had time to telephone the president at the economic summit of seven Western leaders in Venice.

"They start so early, and with my trying to get under way and we'd have so much to talk about..." she said.

Mrs. Reagan, who has brought her anti-drug campaign to Sweden for two days at the invitation of Health and Social Affairs Minister Gertrud Sigurdsen, was also scheduled to meet Queen Silvia today.

Mrs. Reagan told reporters on her plane from Venice to Stockholm on Monday that the Iran-Contra scandal would not damage the legacy of Ronald Reagan's presidency. But two demonstrations against U.S. policies in Central America showed the issue will not go away.

An estimated 150 demonstrators chanting "Nancy Go Home" threw eggs, stones, blue paint and a few smoke bombs from behind barriers near the Grand Hotel where Mrs. Reagan was staying.

Helmeted police carrying riot shields charged the crowd and detained 90 demonstrators. One minor was released and the others were being held on charges of rioting and assaulting police, a police spokesman said. Several police cars were damaged.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Boat capsizes in Ganges leaving 20 feared dead

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An overcrowded boat capsized in the Ganges river in northern India, and at least 20 people were feared drowned, the United News of India reported.

Mata Prasad, home secretary in Uttar Pradesh state, said 42 people were traveling on the boat when it capsized near Gazipur town, in the northern part of the state, the news agency said Monday.

Strong winds and overcrowding caused the accident, the agency quoted officials as saying.

Divers have recovered four bodies.

German musician defects

SAARLOUIS, West Germany (AP) — An East German musician defected when his band visited the West through a cultural exchange program, a local political leader said.

Heinz Blatter, the head of the Greens Party in Saarlouis, said Monday that the East German band's 54-year-old drummer defected Saturday and sought asylum.

The band, from the city of Eisenhuettenstadt, arrived in West Germany last week to perform in Saarlouis, about 6 miles from the French border.

Blatter said the musician, who was not identified by name, has a daughter living in West Berlin.

East Germans who defect to West Germany are automatically granted permission to remain.

Toy gun used in hold-ups

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Police detained a young man who pulled a toy pistol on a pedestrian in Naples, and authorities said he may have held up about 100 people in this port city the same way.

Extra police have been assigned to the heart of the city over the past few months in an effort to catch the robber.

The Italian news agency ANSA quoted police as saying that Giuseppe Di Noto, 19, approached a man on the street and asked him for change. When the man took out his wallet, Di Noto threatened him with a pistol, which turned out to be a toy, ANSA reported.

Police then apprehended the man, the agency said.

Police battle rock fans at Berlin Wall

BERLIN (AP) — A gathering of rock fans turned into a protest against the Berlin Wall early today as thousands of East Germans chanting "The wall must go" battled Communist border guards in the worst violence in the area in years.

Witnesses said 1,000 police with clubs advanced on a crowd of about 4,000 people who gathered Monday night to listen to an outdoor concert on the other side of the wall. At least 50 people were arrested, the witnesses said.

The youths lobbed firecrackers, bottles and rocks at the police, who dragged people away, punching some in the face and stomach before pushing them into vans. The number of injured was unknown.

"Down with the wall! The wall must go!" the East German crowd chanted, and "We want (Mikhail) Gorbachev," the Soviet leader whose reforms are popular among East German youth but shunned by the government.

It was the most violent clash in three days of confrontations at the wall near the historic Brandenburg Gate, where East Germans had gathered to hear a series of rock concerts in West Berlin.

The clashes were the worst since October 7, 1977, when police broke up a crowd gathered in East Berlin's Alexanderplatz to hear a rock concert there. Four people died in the Alexanderplatz fighting, according to witnesses, but East German authorities never confirmed the number.

The demonstration was a rare public protest against the wall on the Eastern side. The Communists built the 29-mile-long, 14-foot-high barrier in 1961 to prevent East Germans from fleeing to the West. It is guarded day and night by police with orders to shoot would-be escapees. West Berlin is a Western enclave 110 miles inside Communist East Germany.

Monday's concert by the British rock group Genesis was the last in the series performed outside the Reichstag building in West Berlin about 200 yards from the wall.

Witnesses said police turned out in force before the concert, and vans full of officers were parked in nearby side streets. Police roped off the area near the Brandenburg Gate and stood shoulder to shoulder to keep rock fans 1,000 feet from the wall, which divides the city into eastern and western sectors.

As the fans gathered, they sang "Deutschlandlied," West Germany's national anthem, the Socialist "Internationale," and "Kreuzberg Nights are Long," a song about a West Berlin student district.

After the concert ended at about 11:30 p.m. local time, the East German police began advancing on the rock fans, many of whom were intoxicated, witnesses said.

Several journalists were beaten by East German police, who tried to seize their film or tape cassettes.

By 1 a.m. local time, most of the crowd had dispersed.

Because the wind was blowing toward West Berlin, and the fans were kept from the wall, most of the East Germans could not hear the concert. The fans switched on radios to listen to the performance on the West Berlin RIAS network.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

In October 1987, the School Land Board will hold an oil and gas lease sale covering state owned lands. At that time, Commissioner Mauro will offer the surface owners of mineral classified land (i.e., land subject to the Relinquishment Act) the opportunity to lease their tracts through a sealed bid procedure. If you are unsure if your land qualifies, call the Classification Clerk at (512) 463-5153.

This procedure will not negate a surface owner's agency rights. As the State's agent, the surface owner will execute the lease on terms which he previously has indicated will be acceptable. The surface owner will be subject to all duties and obligations imposed by law.

This service is free of cost to surface owners. Bidders are required to pay a fee to defray administrative costs. For further information, contact the GLO at (512) 463-5022 or at 1700 N. Congress, Room 642, Austin, Texas 78701.
