25 Americans freed

Odessa woman learns husband now a hostage

ODESSA (AP) — Donnita Cole waited by her telephone for more than a month hoping to hear from her husband, or someone who knew anything about her husband, in Kuwait.

But a day after several American families were reunited with loved ones released by the Iraqi government, Mrs. Cole learned her husband had been taken hostage.

"It just made me so mad, really angry," said Mrs. Cole, who has four children, including a son in the military stationed in Saudi Arabia. "He's made it a whole month. A whole month without getting caught. And now they've got him."

The U.S. State Department informed Mrs. Cole Sunday afternoon that her husband, John Cole, and several other American men had been rounded up by Iraqi forces and taken to an unknown destination, she said.

The news came one day after hundreds of Americans and British were released from Baghdad.

Mrs. Cole, 48, said she was happy for those set free.

"That means there are just that many fewer that we have to worry about over there," she said.

Cole, 50, a drilling supervisor with Houston-based OGE Drilling Inc., was working in Kuwait under contract for Kuwait Oil Co.

Mrs. Cole said she last spoke to her husband Aug. 3, one day after Iraq invaded Kuwait.

Mrs. Cole said she heard details of her husband's life in hiding from Americans who fled the tiny Mideast country. She would not elaborate for fear of jeopardizing the security of those still on the run.

"The escapees have been wonderful," she said. "I have not had one tell me, 'I don't want to tell you about my experience.' Talking with them is like a link to my husband."

Mrs. Cole said she believes her husband will be OK because "from what the escapees have told me so far, the Iraqis are not maliciously mistreating the hostages over there. At least at this point."

Calls across the globe to escapees, families of those missing in Kuwait and government officials have racked up a $700 phone bill, Mrs. Cole said.

She wonders how she will be able to pay for it without any income.

"I have to make these calls. I have to know everything there is to know about my husband," she said. "I will continue to make the calls and deal with paying the bill later."

OGE Drilling officials say the salaries of those being detained in Kuwait are owed by Kuwait Oil. OGE officials say they have been unable to retrieve nearly $750,000 owed to them by Kuwait Oil because the Mideast oil company's assets are frozen.

Two other OGE employees from Texas — Edward Hale of Spring and Gary Carr of Fort Worth — were among a group of oil rig workers being detained by Iraqis.

Mrs. Cole said officials from the Ku-

Heated situation

Several U.S. Marines come to the aid of a comrade overcome by the heat of the Saudi desert Tuesday. American forces in Saudi Arabia have to deal with heat exhaustion and exposure, with daytime temperatures sometimes exceeding 120 degrees.

Saudi desert's sun, sand taking toll on military gear

By John King
Associated Press Writer

EAGLE FORWARD BASE CAMP, Saudi Arabia — The harsh conditions of the Saudi desert are taking a toll on U.S. military equipment, affecting simple mechanical gear as well as sensitive high-tech equipment, from M-16 rifles to weapons guidance systems.

The warships patrolling the waters around the Arabian peninsula are also have problems, officers and maintenance crews said.

"When you buy a stereo, what do the instructions say?" Marine Gunnery Sgt. Tate Ingles of Miami asked during a recent interview. "They say you should keep it away from heat, dust and vibration. You put the same electrical gear in the Saudi desert, and, well, there you have it."

Because of the heat and sand, weapons systems that rely on sensitive electronics and computers could be troublesome to operate if extended hostilities broke out, technicians say.

At Eagle Forward, a base camp for Apache gunships and other helicopters of the 101st Airborne Division's air assault brigade, the soft Saudi sand blown by the desert wind is the big headache.

"It's unbelievable. It gets everywhere," a maintenance crew member said.

Crews are flushing out the Apache engines with water every day to rid them of the sand. The powdery sand also finds its way into transmissions and gears that turn the rotors, forcing more frequent maintenance on those systems as well.

"Hovering around in the desert is going to be very hard on the engines," said Maj. Greg Maisel, of Laredo, Texas, the executive officer of a Marine attack squadron.

Helicopters are being fitted with radiator filters much like the black wraps often seen on fronts of sports cars.

"We were having a lot of overheating problems because of sand clogging the radiators," squadron leader Lt. Col. Don Cody said. "We think the ■ American forces board a ship defying the naval blockade of Iraq as about 300 westerners — 25 of them Americans — are freed from Iraq and Kuwait.

By Jocelyn Noveck
Associated Press Writer

The air evacuation resumed Tuesday of Western women and children stranded in Iraq and Iraqi-occupied Kuwait, and 25 Americans were among the nearly 300 who made it to Jordan.

U.S. forces meanwhile took control of an Iraqi-bound ship trying to defy U.N. trade sanctions. The Navy said sailors planned to stay on the ship, which was hauling a cargo of tea, and escort it to another port.

It was the first publicly acknowledged case of U.S. forces boarding an Iraqi-flagged vessel since a U.N. embargo was imposed after Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

Two Iraqi Airways Boeing 727s chartered by West Germany and the United States flew foreigners, mostly women and children, to Amman on Tuesday and Western diplomats said another jetliner, chartered by France, would leave Baghdad for the Jordanian capital on Wednesday.

Canadian Embassy Charge d'Affaires Dale Carl said Canada chartered still another jet to fly Westerners from Kuwait to Baghdad and then on to Ankara, Turkey, on Thursday.

The American charter carried 138 passengers, including 25 Americans, 44 French, 36 British nationals, four Australians and two Canadians.

Asked what he thought of Baghdad, Taleb Subah, a Davenport, Iowa, teenager, said, "Better than Kuwait, I tell you that.

"Kuwait was a living hell. You go to sleep on bombing and you wake up to it. ... It is like Vietnam. I saw dead people all over, they throw them in the trash."

A West German air force plane picked up 150 men, women and children released from Iraq and flew on to Frankfurt, West Germany.

The president sent two top aides on visits to wealthy allies to solicit donations to cover expenses of the massive military operation in the gulf.

The White House announced that Bush had decided to ask Congress to forgive Egypt's entire $7 billion military debt in appreciation for President Hosni Mubarak's role in standing up to Iraqi aggression.

In Israel, Defense Minister Moshe Arens said Tuesday the United States

Area's teen pregnancies grow 18.4 percent

■ Records show that 18.4 percent of all births in the Permian Basin are to mothers under 19 years of age — an alarming trend with overall births declining.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Teen-age pregnancy rates have ballooned to a seven-year high in the Permian Basin, leaving health authorities wondering how to bring them down to earth.

Data from the Texas Department of Health's Bureau of Vital Statistics indicate that in 1989, 18.4 percent of all births in the Permian Basin were to mothers under 19 years of age.

Of those 1,281 births, 38 were to girls 15 and younger.

The teen-age pregnancy rate has not exceeded 18 percent since 1983, when 18.6 percent of all births in the area were to teen mothers, said Jane Hellinghausen, director of education and community development for Planned Parenthood of West Texas.

Ms. Hellinghausen said the increase is particularly disturbing given that the overall birth rate decreased 3.8 percent from 7,211 in 1988 to 6,945 in 1989.

Statewide, teen mothers gave birth to 15.3 percent of all babies born in 1989.

Within the Permian Basin, Dawson County had the highest rate of teen births — 27.8 percent, followed by Martin County with 23.7 percent and Reeves County with 23.7 percent.

Ector County had 430 teen births in 1988, 18.5 percent of the total 2,326 babies born. The number is a 44.3 percent increase over 1988's 298 teen births, which represented 14.8 percent of the total 2,009 babies born.

Midland County had 408 teen births in 1988, 17.1 percent of the total 2,383 babies born. The number is a 26.3 percent increase over 1988's 323 teen births, which represented 15.1 percent of the total 2,141 babies born.

Ms. Hellinghausen attributes the increase in babies born to teen-agers to confusion about "squeal laws."

"More teens are keeping their babies rather than terminating them or not conceiving to begin with," she said.

"It's really easy for them to hear part of the story and think they have to have parental notification for clinic services or abortions."

Ms. Hellinghausen said teens have difficulty getting access to birth control in West Texas. Nevertheless 2,848 teen clients comprised 32 percent of Planned Parenthood of West Texas' case load in 1989.

She blamed increased usage of illegal drugs and alcohol for reducing teens' inhibitions — and common sense — about sex.

"They know how pregnancy happens and how to prevent it but their bodies are developing faster than their minds. It's a sad irony that they're equipped to have babies before they have the intelligence and skills to deal with them," she said.

Ms. Hellinghausen believes education is the key to reducing teen births.

"What we need is comprehensive sex education in the schools, starting in kindergarten. We need to teach about relationships, gender roles, decision-making and refusal skills for drugs and alcohol at an early age," she said.

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Researchers on Tuesday announced the discovery of a gene that in some families causes osteoarthritis, a degenerative disease that can lead to stiffness, pain and crippling of joints.

Dr. Darwin J. Prockop of Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, and Dr. Roland W. Moskowitz of Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland said the faulty gene was isolated in studies of three generations of one family.

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — An off-duty policeman was caught in a drive-by shooting, but escaped with only a scrape when his name tag deflected a bullet.

Officer Thomas Thompson was working as a security guard in a bar. A car drove by and he noticed a passenger roll down a window and begin firing a pistol at a group of people outside the bar.

Thompson tried to close the bar's front door and was hit a glancing blow in the chest by a bullet.

But the bullet ricocheted off his metal and plastic name tag, said police spokesman Steve Cole. He suffered only a scrape.

Another man suffered a leg wound.

Hens on patrol

EAST HAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — Oh, that Christie Brinkley. Cover girl, married to Billy Joel, mother of a beautiful daughter — and now she's figured out a way to fight Lyme disease.

Brinkley is raising guinea hens on her Long Island estate, and she believes the fowl are eating the deer ticks on her land. The ticks are carriers of potentially fatal Lyme disease.

When the actress-model told Rep. George Hochbrueckner about the hens on patrol, the congressman quickly seized the (photo) opportunity.

Brinkley and Joel will soon be hosts to the congressman and a team of researchers who want to determine if the deer tick population is lower on the celebrity property than at the neighbors' homes.

IRAQ: Hopes increase for release of hostages

should compensate Israel for a state of alert it maintains because of threats of an attack from Iraq. Finance Minister Yitzhak Modai said if America forgives Egypt's military debt, Israel will demand most of its debt to the Americans also be erased.

The plight of tens of thousands of Asians who have made it out of Iraq but not home meanwhile grew more miserable.

They were camped in the desert just inside Jordan, fighting over dwindling supplies. Jordan's crown prince criticized the lack of attention given to the Asians and appealed for help. International relief organizations joined his plea.

On the diplomatic front, hopes for a resolution of the conflict were focused on the superpowers following failure of talks between U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar and Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze proposed an international conference on the Persian Gulf crisis that would also take up the Arab-Israeli conflict and the civil war in Lebanon.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir reiterated his opposition to discussing the Palestinian issue at an international conference, but he welcomed the idea convening such a forum on the gulf issue.

In Caracas, Venezuela, visiting Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca Venezuela said Tuesday that Iraq should withdraw from Kuwait and the sovereignty of the emirate be restored as a first step to resolve the crisis.

Shevardnadze said in a major foreign policy address that Sunday's superpower summit in Helsinki would mark "a major milestone on the road toward resolving the crisis in the Persian Gulf."

But more than a month after Baghdad provoked the crisis by overrunning Kuwait in a dispute over oil and land, the Iraqi government did not appear to be softening its stance.

A dispatch from the official Iraqi news agency said lawyers were discussing setting up an international "people's court" to try Bush for defiling Islam and for human rights violations.

However, the increased departures from Iraq raised hopes that President Saddam Hussein would keep his promise that women and children foreigners in Iraq would go free.

Despite the hundreds of Western hostages who left — women, children and a few ailing men — the departures of others have been complicated by Iraq's refusal to allow foreign airlines to land in Baghdad and by long delays in processing their exit permits.

About 11,000 Westerners are believed still stranded in Kuwait and Iraq.

On Monday, Baghdad asked Western countries whose citizens it holds to urgently send food for them. And it said the United States would be the guilty party if foreign captives go hungry as a result of food shortages caused by the trade sanctions.

A Virgin Atlantic Boeing 747 arrived in Amman from London, carrying relief supplies for Jordan to help care for the refugees.

West Germany said 98 of its stranded women and children arrived in Baghdad after an overland trip Monday from Kuwait, and 24 Italians also were said to have made it by road to Baghdad.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said a boarding party from the guided missile destroyer USS Goldsborough boarded the Zanoobia in the Gulf of Oman without firing a shot.

The vessel is in the control of the boarding party, which was an armed group and was composed of Navy and Coast guard personnel, he said.

"They simply took control of the ship and directed it elsewhere," Williams said. "Our Navy and Coast Guard personnel are in control of the ship." He refused to say where it was headed.

Air Force Staff Sgt. Geof Beebe of Westchester, Pa., inspects the afterburner of an F-15 fighter at an airbase in Saudi Arabia. The sun and sand of the Saudi desert are taking a toll on U.S. military equipment, straining parts and creating challenges for maintenance crews.

TOLL: Equipment now needs more frequent maintenance filters have fixed that."

The sand scours the paint from rotor blades, exposing metal that glints in the sun, making the helicopters easier to spot.

Sand is the reason the Air Force is cutting the time between its routine maintenance. Tests and routine adjustments made every 100 hours are now being done every 60-75 hours, an air force official said.

One persistent problem is sand clogging air-intake valves of jet engines. Much like the Apaches, the engines of Air Force and Navy planes, on the ground and aboard carriers, are being flushed with water daily.

A Marine sergeant cleaning his automatic rifle noted: "Sometimes I'm not sure it would fire if I needed it to. We train in the desert, but I've never seen anything like this."

Tanks need more frequent filter cleanings and track flushing and higher viscosity oil. Radiators need to be checked constantly to prevent overheating.

The sand cakes on headlights and windshields and can get into the fuel supply if proper care is not taken.

Within days of arriving here, 82nd Airborne units were reporting dead radios because wires were burned out or fused by the heat.

One officer in the division said Monday that parts for the radios and other equipment being damaged are getting hard to come by. "We're short quite a few things," said the officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "I'm sure we'll get them eventually."

wait Embassy in Washington have given a "monetary gift" to six families of OGE Drilling employees detained in the Middle East. Embassy officials asked the families not to reveal the amount, Mrs. Cole said.

"Without the concern and generosity of the Kuwaiti people, I wouldn't have made it through the month," Mrs. Cole said. "Their gift was totally unsolicited and they are to be commended."

Mrs. Cole said she plans to stay by the television with a videocassette recorder ready to tape any group shots of hostages during newscasts.

Saddam Hussein has allowed the images of some groups of hostages to be released to television media.

Mrs. Cole said she expected "he'll step that up some now" as an emotional ploy.

"The man is a master of psychology. He's not crazy. He's very, very smart," she said. "It upsets me when I hear people call him crazy because he's not. ... He knows how to play on the emotions of the American people."

Mrs. Cole is asking residents nationwide to fly American flags and yellow ribbons in remembrance of all the Americans still in the Middle East — civilians and military alike.

"I would like to see this country blossom with red, white, blue and yellow until everyone is home safely," she said. "Our people are over there. We need to accept this whether we like it or not and support them."

Soldiers to be treated along way

LA GRANGE, Texas (AP) — They say an Army moves on its stomach, and the folks here haven't forgotten that.

The ladies of the local Veterans of Foreign Wars chapter plan to load soldiers from Fort Hood up with cookies — hundreds of them — when a convoy from Fort Hood makes a pit stop in the South Texas town this week.

A convoy of 800 vehicles is to leave Wednesday from Fort Hood, bound to the Port of Houston.

It's "an effort to show a little appreciation for our troops," said Justice of the Peace A.F. Hall, who heads the local VFW chapter. The cookies are homebaked.

"We've been asking for 60 dozen a day and we've had good response to it so far," he said Tuesday. "They haven't been running any convoys lately and we've got a pretty good backlog in storage. We've had actually more cookies than we actually need."

PREGNANCY: Overall birth rate down

(From 1A)

"Texas has no official provision pro or con on sex education, our districts don't do enough and parents are wearing blinders, too."

Isabel Ray, a parent involvement specialist with Midland Independent School District, said she was alarmed at the figures for Midland teen births.

She said the numbers didn't seem high when she looked only at the 35 girls in the MISD's pregnancy unit in 1989, but she realized that most pregnant teens drop out of school.

"We've had mothers as young as 12 or 13 years old," she said. "The problem's getting worse and it's not being addressed."

Ms. Ray's program helps keep teen parents in school by giving them practical help in child rearing.

Through the alternative high school program, she has arranged for some parents to enroll their children in Casa de Amigos' day care center. She hopes MISD's proposed bond issue will include a day care center open to all students with children.

"More than half the teens who have babies will have another one in the next year or two," Ms. Ray said. "When you add that to the dropout rate, the statistics are even worse."

"My goal is to meet the girl who wants to participate in the program and keep her until she graduates."

Danella Cockrell, the project director for Ector County Independent School District's AIM High School, has helped start the Odessa Adolescent Pregnancy and Parenthood Community Advisory Board as part of ECISD's pilot child care center grant from the Texas Education Association.

Since March, the day care center at AIM has served 46 children and helped eight teen parents graduate.

"Without the day care component, they would've slipped through the cracks," Ms. Cockrell said.

She blames the increasing number of single-parent homes for the breakdown in communication about sex.

"No one's at home with the children so values are not being taught and the teens aren't aware of the responsibilities that accompany parenthood," Ms. Cockrell said.

"The schools, churches, homes and community have to make a joint effort to offer other options besides early parenting," she said. "I thought we'd get a lot of criticism but people are finally realizing it's a real problem.

"Maybe we can do something about it."

A grave digger tosses skulls to a coworker during efforts to open and examine a mass grave found Tuesday in a suburb of Sao Paulo, Brazil. Several of the skeletons are believed to belong the enemies of Brazil's former military regime. Other workers, background, place the remains in plastic bags.

Bodies of about 1,700 found in mass grave in Sao Paulo

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — Authorities on Tuesday uncovered a clandestine mass grave containing the remains of an estimated 1,700 bodies — mostly poor people but also some political foes of Brazil's former military dictatorship.

The skeletons were packed in blue plastic bags and buried in an unmarked section of the hillside cemetery of Perus, a working-class suburb of Sao Paulo, the country's largest city.

Officials found the bones while checking up on what had happened to remains of paupers who died with no identification in the early 1970s.

"Up to 50 of the dead could be former political prisoners and opponents of the (1964-85) military regime," Luis Eduardo Greenhalgh, deputy mayor of Sao Paulo and a human rights activist, told The Associated Press.

He said at least six already had been identified as "disappeared" political activists, presumably killed by the dictatorship.

Greenhalgh said others may have been victims of police-backed death squads that summarily executed suspected criminals in the 1960s and '70s.

Cemetery director Antonio Pires Eustaquio said most of the dead were paupers buried in 1971-72, whose identities were unknown at the time.

Son of toppled Romanian dictator being treated of cirrhosis of liver

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Nicolae Ceausescu's youngest son is being treated for cirrhosis of the liver as a court considers his role in dozens of deaths during the December revolution that resulted in the downfall of his dictator father.

"The personnel treat me most carefully," Ceausescu was quoted as saying Tuesday by the state Rompres news agency.

Lucian Buligescu, head of the hospital's liver department, said he hoped for "considerable improvement" in his patient's condition, which is attributed to alcohol problems. He said Ceausescu felt depressed.

Ceausescu, former Communist Party chief of Sibiu, 150 miles northwest of Bucharest, allegedly ordered the shootings of townspeople who rose up against his father. He is also charged with illegal possession of firearms.

Eighty-nine people died in Sibiu as the army and anti-Ceausescu activists fought against secret police troops loyal to the dictator.

The younger Ceausescu, who was said to be a heavy drinker, suffered a stab wound to his liver on Dec. 22, the day of his arrest. His father and mother, Elena Ceausescu, were executed on Dec. 25.

By Kelly Smith Tunney
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korea's prime minister, meeting his North Korean counterpart for the first time Tuesday, said the two must work together to "thaw the thick ice of distrust."

Their meeting marked the highest-level contact between the hostile Koreas since the division of the peninsula in 1945.

By holding formal talks starting Wednesday, Communist North Korea gives tacit recognition to the legitimacy of the South Korean government it has refused to recognize for more than four decades.

"I am so glad that you have taken the challenge of blazing an unbeaten trail through the thicket to come," South Korean Prime Minister Kang Young-hoon told his North Korean counterpart, Yon Hyong Muk, at dinner.

"If only we build confidence in each other by meeting again and again, we should be able to generate sufficient heat to thaw the thick ice of distrust," Kang said.

"National unification cannot be achieved by forcing ideology and thoughts on others," Yon responded in a toast.

The two leaders met informally twice during the day and spent about 15 minutes alone prior to a Western-style hotel banquet. After dinner, the 90-member North Korean delegation was taken to a movie on Korean cultural sites.

Talks on Wednesday and Thursday are to focus on easing military and political confrontation and launching multilateral exchanges — subjects general enough to cover almost anything either side wants to talk about.

South Korean officials have cautioned against high expectations, saying the talks are only a first step on a long road toward peace and unification.

About 200 radical students yelling anti-government slogans and hurling more than 500 blazing firebombs battled riot police at Seoul's Korea University. Eight students were arrested for trying to take unification banners to the border crossing.

Soon after their arrival, the North Koreans asked to visit the families of South Korean dissidents jailed for illegally visiting the North, but the government indicated the request would be rejected.

The North Korean leader escaped injury shortly after he arrived when the car in which he was riding was involved in an accident with three other cars on the way to the hotel.

The accident occurred when a civilian car tried to cut through the motorcade speeding through downtown Seoul. Two North Korean diplomats riding in separate cars behind the prime minister were treated for minor injuries. One car caught fire and the windshield on the third was broken. Embarrassed South Korean officials apologized profusely for the incident.

The North Korean prime minister is staying in a $1,500-a-day Royal Suite at a luxury hotel near the Olympic Stadium, site of the 1988 Summer Games.

Despite opposing ideology, the two leaders have much in common. Both have roots near the North Korea-Manchurian border. They are both in their 60s and each was appointed premier in 1988.

The Korean peninsula was divided into the Communist North and capitalist South in 1945 and the two nations fought a three-year war in the early 1950s.

Relations between the Koreas are hostile and Tuesday's crossing was only the third to take place in more than 40 years.

Palestinian uprising marks 1,000 days

By Eileen Alt Powell

RAMALLAH, Occupied West Bank (AP) — When an army truck broke down recently in the middle of this West Bank town, Palestinian teen-agers sprang into action.

"They trashed it," said an Israeli army officer who witnessed the scene. "They broke every window, smashed every door and fender."

The incident was a reminder that the Palestinian revolt against Israeli occupation, though eclipsed by the gulf crisis, persists as an angry war of stones and empty bottles against well-armed Israeli troops.

The uprising, known in Arabic as the "intefadeh," marks its 1,000th day Wednesday. The PLO-backed underground leadership of the revolt called for the anniversary to be marked with protest marches under the banner "Intefadeh until a Palestinian state."

That goal remains illusive for the 1.7 million Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, and the character of the struggle is changing amid a more restrained Israeli military policy and the impact of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

Palestinian support for Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein has disappointed the United States and other Western nations that tried to mediate the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

"There's no doubt that Israel is reaping political gains from the gulf crisis," said Ghassan Khatib, a Palestinian professor from this town just north of Jerusalem.

"There are fewer pressures on Israel from the United States to start a dialogue with the Palestinians," Khatib said. "There is no more talk about Israeli violations of human rights in the occupied territories."

WORLD in brief

Blacks fired on in townships

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Soldiers fired on thousands of angry blacks Tuesday and rival gangs fought with axes, knives and spears as at least 40 people were killed in township violence.

The violence came as President F.W. de Klerk and African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela visited black townships near Johannesburg to call for a halt in fighting that has killed more than 550 people since Aug. 12.

The government has imposed emergency restrictions and sent elite army units to the townships, but fighting between Zulu followers of the conservative Inkatha movement and other blacks loyal to the ANC raged for a fourth week.

Economy changing

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, under pressure from rival reformers like Boris Yeltsin, personally will present a sweeping economic plan to the Soviet parliament as early as Monday, a spokesman said Tuesday.

Gorbachev apparently has abandoned a moderate plan drafted by Soviet Prime Minister Nikolai I. Ryzhkov. Instead, he will present a plan drafted in large part by Stanislav Shatalin, a reformer who sits on Gorbachev's Presidential Council, said presidential spokesman Vitaly N. Ignatenko.

Shatalin's ideas were embodied in a reform program presented to the parliament of the Russian federation on Monday.

Ignatenko and other Gorbachev aides say Gorbachev and Yeltsin, the president of the Russian federation — largest of the 15 Soviet republics, agree on the general shape of the reforms.

Koala effort begins

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — Half a million gum leaves are being collected as part of a campaign to help the koala, whose population is at an all-time low in Australia.

The Australian Koala Foundation national headquarters will dry the leaves, imprint "I SAVED A KOALA TODAY" on each, and mount them on pins to be sold on Oct. 20, National Koala Day.

A foundation spokeswoman, Ann Sharp, said the last official koala count in 1986 turned up 400,000 of the animals in Australia. Scientists believe the figure was highly inflated because many may have been counted more than once.

Decimated by shooting — 3 million pelts were exported to the United States in 1921 — koalas are now suffering from urban sprawl into their natural habitat along Australia's east coast.

"The need for help has never been greater," Ms. Sharp said. "A half a million gum leaves is a hell of a lot. But we know the public won't let us down. We can use most of what people rake up and burn during their weekend gardening."

Typhoon kills 88

BEIJING (AP) — At least 88 people have died in two coastal provinces that were battered by Typhoon Abe, an official report said Tuesday.

Abe, which landed Friday in south Zhejiang province, rampaged through Shanghai, China's most populous city, then headed back out to sea Monday afternoon, the China Daily reported.

The death toll in Zhejiang now stands at 65, with 839 injured, 660,000 stranded by floods and 40,000 left homeless, the report said.

Soviets may send troops to desert

By John Wallach
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is prepared to tell President Bush at this weekend's summit that the Soviets might add troops to the anti-Iraq alliance but want to play a larger role in defusing the Middle East powderkeg, a Soviet diplomat said Tuesday.

Oleg Derkovsky, a senior official in the Soviet embassy in Washington and a specialist in Soviet policy in the Middle East, said the Soviets prefer "a political solution but just in case some other measures will be required, we will be in a position to consider all of them, including troops, so long as they are taken in light of collective efforts and under U.N. auspices."

Derkovsky also said Soviet leaders hope Bush "will decide it is high time to move cooperatively in the direction of resolving the old conflicts which exist there."

Among them, he said, are the unresolved Palestinian issue, the civil war in Lebanon and the broader issue of persuading Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Syria and the rest of the Arab world to negotiate peace treaties with Israel.

"The disaster which we all face in Iraq should help us realize that we have no time to waste," Derkovsky said. "We are talking about a new global order. It cannot only be limited to one issue. This cooperation should encompass new issues and larger issues," he said.

Gorbachev, however, is setting modest goals for the Sunday summit, Derkovsky hinted, saying it would be a successful summit "if both leave the meeting having reinforced their intention to join forces in the future with regard to resolving regional situations."

From the U.S. viewpoint, the Soviet Union has generally played a helpful role in the Gulf crisis. It has repeatedly condemned Iraq's Aug. 2 conquest of Kuwait, called for an immediate and unconditional Iraqi withdrawal and supported efforts to invoke United Nations sanctions against Iraq.

Moscow also has sent two warships to the Persian Gulf but has refused to order its 200 military advisers in Iraq to depart the country and has hesitated to take any further military actions that could jeopardize its longstanding relations with the Baghdad regime.

The Soviet official said that the Soviet military advisers in Iraq had ceased their functions and were caught in the same bind as the American oil experts advising Iraqi companies.

"We are in one boat here. They (the Soviet advisers) have no operational function. They have no technical function. They are not working," Derkovsky said. "I am astonished at the insensitivity of the American mass media on this issue," he added.

He said Moscow, which was Iraq's biggest arms supplier before the invasion of Kuwait, has maintained close ties with the Baghdad government in hopes of being able to play a useful role in defusing the crisis.

Derkovsky said he hoped the Israeli government would interpret the remarks of Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze on Tuesday as a "clear signal" that Moscow is prepared to resume diplomatic ties with the Jewish state if goes along with the proposal for an international conference.

Shevardnadze, in a speech in Vladivostock, proposed such a U.N. parley to discuss the Persian Gulf, the Arab-Israeli dispute and the Lebanese civil war. "It can be in the context of one big conference or in the context of difference conferences," Derkovsky said.

Israel, however, reacted negatively to the idea because it would be tantamount to inviting the Soviets back into a prominent peacemaking role in a region where they have had little influence for the last decade.

Ruth Yaron, the spokesperson of the Israeli embassy in Washington, said her government fears that Gorbachev will try to lure Bush into precisely such a course and that Israeli Foreign Minister David Levi intends to caution the administration against that.

Levi, who is making his first trip here as foreign minister, will meet with Secretary of State James Baker Wednesday.

"Everything has a price in this world," Yaron said. "If the Soviets are willing to join the president on this (Gulf) effort, the question is what will the price be for this?"

"We are worried that whatever patterns are now developing in dealing with this regional conflict might later on serve as a precedent or be used as a pattern for solving some other regional conflicts such as the Arab-Israeli conflict," she said.

25 Americans among foreigners released

By Mort Rosenblum
AP Special Correspondent

AMMAN, Jordan — Twenty-five Americans were among nearly 300 Western women and children to arrive here Tuesday from Baghdad on three Iraqi Airways planes.

The last flight to arrive just before midnight (5 p.m. EDT) brought 150 people, including the 25 Americans, 44 French, 36 British, four Australians and two Canadian women and children. They had been detained in Iraq and Kuwait since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on Aug. 2.

One of the flights that arrived earlier in the day included 135 West Germans among its passengers, and the other brought 170 people, mainly Arab nationals.

A total of 175 Western nationals were expected to leave Amman early Wednesday aboard a Virgin Atlantic airlines jumbo jet.

The jumbo had landed in Amman a few hours earlier with 30 tons of food and other supplies for the tens of thousands of Asian evacuees from Kuwait stranded in squalid camps in Jordan.

"We heard there was a potentially catastrophic problem in Jordan with young and old people dying and we had to do something before it was too late," Richard Branson, the British owner of the airline who flew in on the jet told reporters on arrival.

Shortly after his arrival, Branson and his crew were thanked by Jordan's American-born wife Queen Noor, who went aboard the plane.

"We are grateful, we desperately need all this," the queen told Branson, pointing at sacks of wheat slung on top of the scarlet first-class seats aboard the plane.

"We will get this to the really desperate areas and this kind of action that you've done is tremendous help," she added.

Branson said later he "was upset" because he made 200 seats available to one Asian embassy to fly evacuees out of Amman, but a bureaucratic foulup meant the seats went unused.

He said he had provided the United Nations with a list of airlines and planes available for charter for a massive airlift to fly home the estimated 100,000 impoverished Asian nationals stranded in Jordan.

Asked what he thought of Baghdad, American Taleb Subah said, "Fetter than Kuwait, I tell you that."

"Kuwait was a living hell," said the Davenport, Iowa, teen-ager. "You go to sleep on bombing and you wake up to it. ... It is like Vietnam. I saw dead people all over, they throw them in the trash."

An elderly American woman refused to say anything, except, "I am so tired." She kept walking past reporters.

Most people were taken directly from the arriving airliners to the VIP lounge at the Queen Alia airport, where counselors and diplomats talked to them.

Asked if she had been afraid, Sheila Russell, from Northampton, England, said, "I never saw an angry man."

But when asked if she was happy to leave, she answered, "I left my husband behind."

Head of black Baptist group critical of U.S. involvement

By David Briggs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The leader of the nation's largest black church body is criticizing President Bush's troop buildup in the Persian Gulf, breaking the cautious response of many American religious groups.

"There is a moral issue," said the Rev. T.J. Jemison, president of the National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc. "It's over oil. We're jeopardizing our fine young men and women over oil in the Persian Gulf."

The convention is expected to vote Thursday at its 110th annual meeting on a resolution attacking the troop deployment that followed Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. With an estimated 7.8 million members, the Baptist Convention is the nation's third largest Protestant denomination, and refers to itself as the largest organization of blacks in the world.

Jemison's strong statement, made in a recent interview, contrasts with the caution shown by most of the nation's other large church bodies.

"I think the caution reflects different opinions, which means no one is feeling empowered to speak on behalf of the church on this issue," said Dale Bishop, director of the Middle East office of the National Council of Churches.

Bishop said Tuesday the churches are weighing their general opposition to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein with concerns that U.S. goals be directed more toward humanitarian ends than merely protecting oil supplies. He said the executive committee of the council, the nation's largest ecumenical body, is scheduled to meet Sept. 12 to discuss the U.S. military involvement.

In the 53 million-member Roman Catholic Church, Archbishop Daniel Pilarczyk of Cincinnati, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, has made no judgments on the deployment. In his most recent statement, Pilarczyk said late last week he was praying for a peaceful solution so "that the soldiers, sailors and air men of all forces now arrayed in the region may soon be restored to their families."

In a recent meeting, bishops in the 5.3 million-member Evangelical Lutheran Church in America expressed general concern for people being sent overseas.

Reservists' bodies returned

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The bodies of five U.S. Air Force reservists killed in the crash of their cargo plane in Germany were returned Tuesday night to Texas, a military official said.

The men died in last week's crash of a giant C-5 cargo plane that was taking off from Ramstein Air Force Base to ferry cargo for Operation Desert Shield in Saudi Arabia.

Nine of the 13 dead and one of the four survivors were from the 433rd Military Air Lift Wing, volunteer reservists based at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio.

Four bodies were being returned by commercial jetliner to San Antonio, said Maj. Meade Warthen of the 433rd.

He identified them as Sr. Master Sgt. Carpio Villarreal Jr., a flight engineer; Staff Sgt. Edward E. Sheffield, a loadmaster; Tech. Sgt. Daniel G. Perez, a loadmaster and Staff Sgt. Daniel Garza, a crew chief.

The body of the aircraft commander, Maj. John M. Gordon, was being returned Tuesday night to Houston, Warthen said.

A memorial service for the nine members of the 433rd was planned Sept. 8 at Kelly, he said.

Fight drug war with treatment

A House Government Operations Committee report concludes that U.S. anti-drug efforts are making little headway in disrupting cocaine traffic in Peru and Bolivia due to corruption in the armed services of both countries.

Meanwhile, poor cocaine addicts in some cities are being turned way from drug-treatment centers because no slots are available.

These contrasting scenes demonstrate the federal government's mismatched anti-drug priorities. It continues to put too much emphasis on strategy that is least effective and spends too little on programs that could make a difference.

The House report casts further doubts on Operation Snowcap, the federal drug agency's 3½-year effort to rid the jungles of Bolivia and Peru of airstrips and other facilities that are used to process and transport cocaine. The report urges federal drug agents to shift their emphasis away from useless jungle raids. That's good advice in light of their minuscule impact on the flow of cocaine to the United States.

Drug treatment isn't always successful either. But the fact that drug users are being turned away at some treatment centers points to the need for more programs to offer hope to addicts who want to kick their cocaine habit.

Fortunately, the Bush administration intends to spend far more for treatment than has been appropriated in the past. At the same time, it needs to put additional dollars into research to cure drug addiction. It should even consider diverting to research part of the $33.7 million in aid it wants to give to the Bolivian military this year.

A case could be made for this shift since the House report quotes a U.S. official as saying there was no guarantee that Bolivia would use the aid for narcotic-control purposes. If this money must be spent for risky anti-drug ventures, then it is better to use it for treatment than to send it to Bolivia where it might never be used for the intended purpose, however ineffective.

WASHINGTON — Since her election as president of Nicaragua last February, Violeta Chamorro has been looking over her shoulder, fearing that the defeated Sandinista government will try to bring down her struggling administration. She should have also been looking right beside her — at her vice president, Virgilio Godoy.

Anderson

The Sandinistas threatened to rule the country from below when they lost the presidency, and the massive strikes that paralyzed Nicaragua in July proved that the old Sandinista politicos of the left had the power to do that. But the left has not been Chamorro's only problem. A coalition of right-wingers also used the strikes to further unsettle Chamorro's shaky administration. Ironically, the politician who emerged as the leader of that far-right coalition was Godoy — the vice president whom Chamorro has refused to assign a desk or any duties.

Godoy is one of Nicaragua's most experienced politicians, and he has one of the country's biggest political egos. Those close to him say Godoy has an insatiable appetite for power. He is a party jumper, a former Sandinista, who will make dubious alliances to gain power.

During the election campaign, tensions ran high between Godoy and the relatively young and inexperienced Chamorro clique. The friction came to a head after the election when Godoy was denied an office in the Presidential Palace. Chamorro didn't want him on her presidential ticket in the first place, and has yet to assign him any duties. A source told us Godoy is completely excluded from the decision-making loop.

That gives Godoy plenty of time for mischief, and he used Chamorro's first crisis to make a comeback. In the midst of the July strikes, Godoy mobilized forces on the right and formed the National Salvation Committee. The group claimed that the government's policy of national reconciliation had all but ceded power to the Sandinistas.

Nicaragua's Catholic hierarchy chimed in with thinly veiled criticisms of Chamorro. She was not consulted about the formation of the National Salvation Committee and she pledged that she would not let it "replace my government."

The former international secretary of Godoy's political party, the Independent Liberal Party, told our associate Dean Boyd that Godoy had made the right moves. Even though he is vice president, he is essentially an outsider. "Godoy did not take the political heat for the mistakes made by Chamorro. He capitalized on them by criticizing her as well as the Sandinistas."

But Godoy's excessive carping backfired. A group, reputedly armed and calling itself the Brigades of National Salvation, began distributing literature echoing Godoy's criticisms. And the vibrant Nicaraguan press began blaming some land takeovers and shooting incidents on the brigades and, by association, Godoy. The most controversial of the stories had Godoy and the U.S. ambassador plotting the overthrow of Chamorro.

The United States denied the rumor, but has not gone out of its way lately to stick up for Chamorro. One U.S. diplomat was quoted anonymously in the U.S. press saying of Charmorro, "Even her friends call her rag doll. ... Nobody respects her."

The rumors about violence and coup plots have cost Godoy supporters. Many of those who rallied around him during the strikes have since realized that his anti-Chamorro rhetoric was only serving as ammunition for the Sandinistas. Sources in Managua say those one-time friends are now distancing themselves from Godoy and "keeping a low profile."

MISD bureaucrats can be replaced

I and my wife, Mary, and many people here in Midland who we talk to would very much like to see lower taxes instead of the higher taxes Midland Independent School District now proposes. Our position is we don't favor the bond issue to build more schools. We'd favor any economy school officials can muster to lower school costs.

Using the house-like classroom structures such as those at Emerson Elementary would be cheaper than the proposed multi-million dollar new schools.

In spite of the recent oil price upward spike, Midland's economy is in terrible shape. We cannot afford the luxuries the school officials want.

We propose also that they cut down on the use of school bus transportation of students, except for severely handicapped students. Let the students walk or provide their own transportation whenever possible. I see students dropped off at their home in the afternoon in the 2800 block of Metz Drive. This is wasteful.

I realize there are federal laws concerning equal education for all students regardless of race. We believe that all schools can be made equal by shifting teachers, not students. The idea is for students to go to the nearest school by walking or riding a bicycle, and stay there all day learning, not being in a bus one and a half hours a day shifting around all over Midland.

School officials, save money for the taxpayers or else we might replace the present bureaucrats.

Trouble with USPS? UPS has problems, too

United States Postal Service? You should be so lucky! You ought to try UPS!

I have had the opportunity to use UPS twice in the last two weeks. Both times were screwed up. It seems they can deliver to people for whom they have no address. It also seems they can deliver to the wrong place when they have the address.

AT&T sent me a package which was delivered to a wrong name, a wrong number, a wrong street, and a wrong county address. It was opened, used, and then delivered to me two weeks later. The second one was supposed to be delivered, but so far has not been. I cannot even get a phone number for the local dispatcher to find out why.

In the future, you can be assured that I will specify that my merchandise not be shipped via UPS. Thank you for allowing me to express my views.

Your genes make you eat chocolate cake

The best news of the year was when scientists recently announced that body fat could be produced by genes. This was counter to all the conventional wisdom that overweight people were no good.

Buchwald

I received the news while eating a dandelion salad sandwich and a diet cola at the lunch counter.

J. David Emge was the one who gave me the information. "The latest research says that if you get fat you have no one but your grandparents to blame," he said. "It's all in your body makeup. One person can eat an apple pie and not put on weight. Others can put four poppy seeds in their mouths and balloon. It's not food but your chromosomes that make all the decisions."

Emge was pleased that he could bring me such glad tidings. "Some time back in antiquity, possibly even before man invented french-fried potatoes, it was decreed that people like yourselves would have a slightly pudgy, though not unattractive girth. Our mistake was to believe that being heavy was a character flaw, when in fact it was Darwin's choice all along."

"How did this happen?"

"Stunkard at the University of Pennsylvania worked with twins. He found that environment and diet had little impact compared with that of their genes. He concluded that since genes were so important, those lacking in willpower were blaming themselves needlessly for not being able to see their toes when they bent over."

"How does Stunkard feel about buttered garlic bread?"

"I'm sure he's not against it. It's quite possible a person's genes tell him when he should or should not eat bread. Bouchard of Laval University in Quebec worked with twins as well and came to the same conclusion."

"Which is?"

"When you're fat, relax and enjoy it."

"Overeaters owe a lot to Stunkard and Bouchard," I said. "I wonder what it would mean to them if I ate this piece of chocolate layer cake instead of these string beans with lemon juice on them."

"They'd probably have a hard time telling you what it meant unless you had a twin brother in a diner across town."

"I think it would be wonderful if everyone in the world had genes that could burn up all their calories instead of turning them into fat."

"It will be done," Emge said. "That's why we have genetic engineering. In the meantime I'd say that since it isn't your fault when you gain weight, you might as well eat what you want."

"That seems to be the best solution," I agreed.

"If my genes are programmed for bread pudding, it makes no sense to feed them raw carrots."

Emge nodded, "The importance of this study is that it changes the way people look at each other. Maybe they'll stop being critical of others now that they know it's not their hips, but their heredity that makes it so difficult to fit into a new bathing suit."

Analyzing the Mutts, Jeffs of world affairs

WASHINGTON — To enliven a column on the split between tall Boris Yeltsin and shorter Mikhail Gorbachev, I evoked the image of Mutt and Jeff, the tall and short comic-strip creations of Bud Fisher. Gorby was Mutt, the short one.

Safire

Late that evening, as the first edition began to roll, my copy editor called. "I have this horrible feeling," said Steve Pickering, "that Mutt was the tall one."

What did this youthful editor know about the comic-strip heroes of my salad days? Confident of my memory, I reached for the Smithsonian history of the comics; klong! — to my dismay, Mutt was indeed the tall one. My entire essay was built on a metaphoric lie.

"Pickering," I said (you wonder why I act like 'enry 'iggins?) "save me." In the grand tradition of grace under editorial pressure, he electronically substituted Mutts for all the Jeffs and Jeffs for Mutts throughout the piece. For nine-tenths of the paper's run, and in all the papers taking the news service, Mutt accurately became the tall one — no longer standing for Gorbachev, but for Yeltsin, the tall one.

This episode shook my certitude. Not enough to reduce me to humility — bigfeet don't cry — but enough to make me wonder about the enormous responsibility we pundits bear.

For example, after a pop in this space at the way Li'l Hussein was toadying to Big Hussein, the king of Jordan's kid brother took exception to the application of the word "toadies" to the great Hashemite dynasty and wrote: "the shreiks of important media pundits have all too often a distressing way of shaping public perceptions. . . ."

Two questions leap to mind. The first — does shreik rhyme with sheik and if not, why not? — is not germane to my weekday work. The second — do pundits really form public opinion? — is worth pondering in light of the widespread perturbation known as The Split on the Right.

In case you were forming your own opinion and missed it, some right-wing sages are "in schism" — that is, dissenting from the hawkish, interventionist hard line of the majority of their regular bedfellows who see the Iraqi dictator as a would-be Hitler.

Evans & Novak and Pat Buchanan, usually as jingoistic as the rest of us, sound more like Senators Greuning and Morse in the early Vietnam era: they want no part of policing the Persian Gulf or toppling Saddam Hussein. Jeane Kirkpatrick also sees "no distinctive U.S. interest" in the gulf.

These are not lumpable as "McGovernite hawks"; each heart has its particular reasons. Rowley Evans has always been Lawrence of Arabia reincarnate; Pat was and is a Goldwater True Believer eager to dissociate himself from conservatism's Johnnies-come-lately; Jeane is steeped in the uses of diplomacy.

We righties come to our side's line of scrimmage with different mental sets, but share a discomfort at being in the unsilent majority. We long for the luxury of isolation, the blessed business of being besieged, the ecstasy of apostasy. Splitting comes easier to us than to Yeltsin or Gorbachev; differences among the denizens of the right are more ardent than the boring differences between populist right and lukewarm left.

Does it matter? Why are the views of pundits given such weight? Answers: because we have ready reactions and the Congress was out of town; and more important, we are free to utter truths that politicians and diplomats, even when on duty, cannot.

Take the essential point of our current national purpose, which right-wingers of my ilk believe is to remove the world threat of a murderous aggressor soon to be nuclear-armed. The president, to hold his international consensus together, must limit his stated goal to the status quo ante approved by the Security Council. Until Sen. Richard Lugar became the president's designated real-purpose hitter, that task of pointing out the real aim fell to the hawks of August in the trenches of columny.

On the other side, those right-wing pundits opposing a strike deserve a hearing because few in public office have militated against a just war. The exception is Gen. H. Norman Schwartzkopf, our new McClellan, who arrogated to himself a political decision usually reserved to an elected president when he stated: "There's not going to be any war unless the Iraqis attack."

Spoken with the certitude of a media biggie. We observers may be the shock troops of dividing opinion, but the public-opinion battles are won by the participants in the arena. I have this urge to whisper in our sure-of-our-defensive-purpose general's ear, "Mutt was the tall one."

Teachers strike in 4 states; New Orleans threatens

Associated Press

Teachers went on strike Tuesday in school districts in Michigan, Washington, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania, and New Orleans teachers voted to strike in two weeks unless their demands are met.

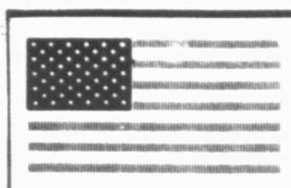
College professors walked out in contract disputes at Wayne State University in Detroit and Temple University in Philadelphia. A strike continued at the University of Bridgeport in Connecticut.

In all, the strikes disrupted education for a total of about 60,000 students in Saginaw, Mich., Yakima, Wash., and outside Seattle and Everett, Wash.

School openings are also threatened at three smaller districts in Cheboygan, Mich., North Kingston, R.I., and Ligonier, Pa., where school starts Wednesday and teachers have gone on strike. Those districts have a total of about 10,000 students.

A strike in New Orleans, where school started Tuesday, could affect about 85,000 pupils. Teachers there overwhelmingly approved a strike pledge for Sept. 17 in a voice vote Tuesday morning. They want the school district to pay more of their health insurance bills and raise the salaries of teachers' aides. The teachers dropped a demand that their own salaries be raised.

In Yakima, school officials said they would show videotaped lessons to the 12,000 pupils affected by the strike. Teachers urged parents to keep their children at home during the strike.



NATION

The Yakima teachers struck despite a restraining order from a judge, who prohibited them from striking, picketing or engaging in "other acts disruptive to the normal school process."

"We are not afraid," said Melanie Mitchell, president of the teachers' union, the Yakima Education Association. "We made a decision which we are committed to, and the district is not going to scare us back into the classroom."

The union said the sticking points in contract negotiations included class size, evaluation of teachers and special education issues. The district characterized the remaining contract points as money issues.

The other Washington strikes affected 22,500 pupils in the Lake Washington School District in the Seattle suburbs of Kirkland, Juanita and Redmond; and 9,100 pupils in Mukilteo, south of Everett.

At the three colleges, Wayne State, Temple and Bridgeport, administrators pledged to hold classes without the striking instructors.

"The university will be open," said President Peter Liacouras at Temple, which has an undergraduate enrollment of 31,000. University spokesman George Ingram said some classes were held Tuesday, but others had to be canceled for lack of teachers.

Similarly, Wayne State administrators said they would try to hold classes this week despite a strike by the American Association of University Professors, which represents 1,500 instructors, or about 35 percent of the faculty. Wayne State has an enrollment of 30,000.

At the University of Bridgeport, which has an undergraduate enrollment of about 4,000, college President Janet Greenwood said replacement workers — including faculty — had been hired to keep the school "fully operational."

The strike by all three campus unions began Saturday, but maintenance and cafeteria workers stayed on the job while students moved in during the weekend. Classes begin Wednesday night.

Chiles, Nelson grab governor's nominations

MIAMI (AP) — Former Sen. Lawton Chiles, who quit politics saying he was burned out but then launched a comeback attacking big-money campaigns, swept to easy victory Tuesday over Rep. Bill Nelson in Florida's Democratic primary for governor.

On the Republican side, Gov. Bob Martinez overwhelmed four challengers to capture the nomination for a second term.

In Nevada, Acting Gov. Bob Miller, who inherited his job without being elected two years ago, was heavily favored over five Democratic challengers. Eight Republicans competed for the gubernatorial nomination, led by Jim Gallaway, a relative newcomer to the state who said Miller had shown "a total lack of leadership."

A plane crash Monday seriously injured two candidates in Nevada's primary — Sue Wagner, running for lieutenant governor, and Bob Seale, who is running for treasurer. Seale's wife, Judy, was killed in the crash, authorities said.

Five people were aboard the twin-engine plane that crashed after takeoff from Fallon for a Labor Day parade in Carson City. Two aides to the candidates suffered less serious injuries and were taken to a hospital, authorities said.

In Florida's Democratic primary, with 54 percent of precincts reporting, Chiles had 349,294 votes or 70 percent and Nelson had 150,304 votes or 30 percent.

"Tonight I can tell you I can't believe the numbers," an elated Chiles told supporters.

Then he described the result as a mandate for his campaign's theme.

"We thought people should count more than money," he said, "and we felt like that people could join with us if we did limit our contributions, and if we trusted them they would respond."

Nelson called Chiles to congratulate him and pledged to support him in the fall campaign.

Among Republicans, Martinez had 229,930 votes or 67 percent, state Sen. Marlene Woodson Howard had 73,349 votes or 21 percent, and the three other contenders divided the remainder.

"I'm real happy and of course I appreciate the voter confidence the Republicans have givem me on this night," Martinez said from his Tampa victory party. "I'm prepared now, with their support and the support of the conservatives of the state, to move ahead in the general election."

Heading to a general election both parties consider a political watershed for Florida, voters also faced primaries for four state Cabinet races.

In one of them, impeached former federal judge Alcee Hastings was running second in a three-way Democratic race to oppose Republican incumbent Secretary State Jim Smith.

With 53 percent of precincts reporting, former newspaperman Jim Minter had 163,297 votes or 38 percent; Hastings, removed from the bench by U.S. Senate trial after he was acquitted by a jury of bribery, had 137,536 votes or 32 percent; and John Paul Rogers, an ex-Klansman, had 133,028 votes or 31 percent; and

Two counties had controversial referendums. In Broward County, voters were considering whether to approve an ordinance protecting homosexuals against discrimination. In Sarasota, voters decided by a 73 percent to 27 percent margin not to order a two-year moratorium on growth.

Republicans have been on a roll in Florida, giving George Bush his biggest vote total in 1988, electing Republican Connie Mack to replace Chiles as senator, and grabbing an unprecedented 11-8 lead in the congressional delegation.

Democrats said Martinez, whose negative ratings have been high, offered them a chance to turn things around. But a statewide television blitz emphasizing Martinez as a law-and-order governor and family man helped him move to nearly even with Chiles in polls released last week.

Republicans hope to hold the governor's mansion and grab command of the state Senate in November, putting them in position to control redistricting in 1992 that will include at least three new congressional seats in this fast-growing state.

Chiles, 60, said he entered the race last April because he felt the campaign was being dominated by big money. He voluntarily limited donations to $100 each, rejected political action committee contributions, and said he took his inspiration from Eastern Europe's revolutions.

Chiles said rejecting big money will allow him to govern unencumbered by special interests, and he hoped the movement could spread nationally.

But Chiles, a moderate with one of the highest reputations in politics for ethics, was dogged by questions about his mental health. He retired from the Senate when his third term ended in January 1989, saying he was burned out. At the time he was chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

John Cole, Texas Federation of Teachers president, explains results of a survey which asked teachers in Midland and throughout Texas to grade school reforms.

Local teachers give reforms 'C'

State legislators were doing C-level work when they wreaked reform on Texas schools in 1984, at least in the opinion of Midland teachers.

Midland was among 55 school districts participating in a Texas Federation of Teachers (TFT) survey that asked teachers to assign letter grades to reforms embodied in House Bill 72.

While Midland teachers gave high marks to new class size requirements, kindergarten and pre-kindergarten programs, and the no-pass, no-play rule, other reform areas were viewed less charitably.

Teacher salaries rated a "D" among Midland teachers, along with paperwork reduction efforts, the teacher evaluation system, teacher autonomy and the career ladder merit pay system.

"It's distressing that a program designed to reward people for good performance gets a 'D,'" said John Cole, Texas Federation of Teachers' president, at a Lee High School news conference Tuesday. "Inferring from that, I would suppose that the teachers don't really feel the money is tied to performance."

Midland teachers gave a "C" to the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills and the "essential elements" state-mandated curriculum.

Some 50,000 Texas teachers responded to the TFT "Report Card on Reform," mailed out last November. Only about 80 Midland Independent School District teachers took part in the survey, said Midland Federation of Teachers President Sam Manning. The MFT is the TFT's local organization.

Grades assigned by Midland teachers generally reflected statewide survey results.

Cole said the TFT will share survey results with legislators and political candidates in hopes of bringing school reform in line with what teachers believe will be effective.

"We can go to the Legislature and say, first of all, that there's some things that they need to look harder at," Cole said.

For example, teacher salaries, which received an "F" statewide.

"Texas has slipped since 1984 to 31st in the nation" in terms of teacher salaries, Cole said. "At the same time, teachers are called on to do more things, they're more accountable."

Reforms receiving high marks, such as the 22:1 student-teacher ratio, ought to be left in place, Cole said.

Following are survey results for the state, Midland and Ector County. The survey asked teachers to grade 10 reform areas; grades were then averaged to arrive at a final score. The number of Ector County Independent School District teachers responding to the survey was not available.

■ Class Size — State: A; Midland: A; Ector County: A.

■ Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills — State: C; Midland: C; Ector County: C.

■ Pre-kindergarten and kindergarten programs — State: B; Midland, B; Ector County, C.

■ Teacher autonomy — State: D; Midland, D; Ector County, D.

■ Essential elements — State: C; Midland, C; Ector County, D.

■ No-pass, no-play — State: B; Midland, B; Ector County, C.

■ Teacher salaries — State: F; Midland, D; Ector County, F.

■ Teacher evaluation system — State: D; Midland, D; Ector County, D.

■ Paperwork reduction — State: D; Midland, D; Ector County, D.

"I don't think this is a bad reflection on the school district," said Manning, an LHS social studies teacher.

"What it (the survey) says to me is that things dealing with teachers specifically are unsatisfactory. On those parts of the reforms that dealt with what teachers do and how teachers are evaluated, teachers are dissatisfied."

LHS teacher Shirley Stephenson, a TFT member, said the 1984 reforms do too much to regulate day-to-day classroom acitivity. Hence the apparent dissatisfaction among teachers with current autonomy levels.

"I think it's getting to the point that all classes are getting to be the same and all teachers are trying to do the same things," she said. "My opinion is that you could have little robots out here doing the same thing."

The teacher appraisal system also needs reworking, she said.

"When you're appraised as a teacher, you feel like you're an actor or an actress; you feel like you're performing. And no matter how many times you've done it, you still feel like you're performing."

Cole said he did not know how seriously legislators will view survey results. He urged lawmakers to take notice of the opinions of teachers, who he described as being on the "front lines" of education.

"It is subjective," Cole said of the survey. "It is an opinion survey. But it is the opinions of people who ought to know."

TFT membership statewide is approximately 15,000. About 60 MISD teachers are TFT members, Manning said.

Heart disease, cancer leading killers in 1989

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Heart disease and cancer remained the top killers of Texans in 1989, according to a top 10 list released by the Texas Department of Health's Bureau of Vital Statistics.

Statewide, heart disease was the cause of death of 32.2 percent or 40,162 of the 124,563 Texas residents who died in 1989.

In Midland County, the percentage was slightly higher: 225 residents died of heart disease; or 34.7 percent of the 648 deaths in the county. In Ector County, 212 residents' deaths were attributed to heart disease, 25.7 percent of the 825 county deaths.

Cancer was the next leading cause of fatalities in the state and locally, claiming 27,318 Texans or 21.9 percent of the deaths.

Midland County showed a 23.5 percent cancer death rate, with 152 deaths related to malignancies. Ector County had 174 deaths from cancer, 21.1 percent of its total.

The number of deaths statewide from heart disease decreased by 641, from 40,803 in 1988 to 40,162 in 1989. However, the number of cancer deaths increased by 1,438, from 25,880 in 1988 to 27,318 in 1989.

Texas Health Commissioner Dr. Robert Bernstein said developing a healthy lifestyle greatly reduces the risk of heart disease and cancer.

"Death, for whatever cause, is always tragic," he said. "But since heart disease, cancer and some of the other leading killers are largely preventable, it is even more saddening.

"Young people should be aware that many illnesses in older people are the result of years of bad habits, such as smoking," Bernstein said.

He said physicians can help patients manage contributing factors to heart disease, such as diabetes, high blood pressure, high blood cholesterol and obesity.

Stopping smoking and increasing exercise can help ward off heart disease and cancer, Bernstein said.

He recommended getting regular medical checkups, maintaining a proper diet and limiting exposure to the sun and chemicals as cancer-preventive techniques.

Accidents, while ranking fourth as a cause of death in the state, were the third leading killer locally.

In Ector County, 53 residents, 6.4 percent of the total, died of accidents. Of those accidents, 54.7 percent, or 29, were automobile-related.

Midland County had 37 fatalities, 5.7 percent of the total, attributed to accidents. Twenty five of those, or 51.3 percent, were automobile-related.

In Texas as a whole, accidents claimed 6,540 victims, 5.3 percent of the total. No breakdown was available for motor vehicle deaths.

Cerebrovascular disease ranked third statewide with 8,343 deaths, accounting for 6.7 percent of the 1989 deaths.

'Young people should be aware that many illnesses in older people are the result of years of bad habits, such as smoking.'

— Dr. Robert Bernstein, Texas Health Commissioner

In Ector County, 39 people, 4.6 percent of the total, died of cerebrovascular disease. Twenty five died of cerebrovascular disease in Midland County, resulting in 3.9 percent of the total.

Bronchitis, emphysema, asthma and allied conditions were responsible for 4,337 deaths, 3.5 percent of the state's total.

Thirty eight Ector County residents died of pulmonary diseases in 1989, 4.6 percent of the total. Pulmonary diseases claimed 25 in Midland County, 3.9 percent of the total.

Suicide was the sixth cause of death in Ector County with 26 cases, 3.2 percent of the total. It ranked seventh in Midland County with 14 incidents, 2.2 percent of the total.

Statewide, suicide was ninth on the list, with 2,073 victims, 1.7 percent of the total.

Pneumonia and influenza were sixth on the list in the state and in Midland County. They claimed 3,869 Texans, 3.1 percent of the total, including 19 Midland County residents, 2.9 percent of the county's total.

Pneumonia and influenza were seventh in Ector County's rankings, with 23 deaths, 2.8 percent of the total.

Among Texans as a whole, 2,872 died of diabetes mellitus, 2.3 percent of the total.

In Ector County, 23 died of diabetes, accounting for 2.8 percent of the total. In Midland County, 19 died of the disease, 1.9 percent of the total.

Homicide ranked eighth in the state as a cause of death, with 2,086 victims, 1.7 percent of the total, in 1989.

However, locally it placed last as a cause, accounting for 1 percent of the deaths, nine victims, in Ector County and 0.8 percent of the deaths, five victims, in Midland County.

Cirrhosis and chronic liver disease were responsible for 14 deaths in Ector County, 1.7 percent of the total. They claimed ten lives in Midland County, 1.5 percent of the total.

Statewide, 1,606 died of cirrhosis and chronic liver disease, 1.3 percent of the total.

The remaining 25,357 deaths of Texas residents, including those of 214 Ector County residents and 124 Midland County residents, were attributed to other causes.

Waste management alternatives urged

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The state may have to consider a ban on burying yard clippings in landfills and newspapers may have to use more recycled paper as cities and the state develop waste management alternatives, the state health commissioner said Tuesday.

Dr. Robert Bernstein, health commissioner, in a report to the Joint Task Force on Waste Management Policy, also recommended that the state consider allowing tax breaks for businesses that recycle waste products.

To help develop markets for recycled goods, he said, state agencies should use them when feasible, and agencies should be awarded one-half of the revenue they net from the sale of recyclable materials.

Bernstein, whose health department agency started a Recycling and Waste Reduction Branch in June to administer the state's solid waste management policy, proposed a goal of reducing waste in the state's landfills by 25 percent in 1994 and by 40 percent in 1998.

Municipal landfills now bury 17 million tons of garbage each year, or approximately one ton for each Texas resident, he noted.

Much of that total is yard waste that could be made into compost or old newspapers that could be recycled, he said.

He also called for elimination of differences in freight rates between recycled material and virgin material, which would reduce transportation costs — a major barrier to recycling — and he proposed a fee on tire sales to help clean up tire dumps.

Rep. Robert Saunders, D-LaGrange, vice chairman of the task force that will make recommendations to the Legislature in January 1991, said such proposals usually become political footballs, but Bernstein said there is no way to duck the controversy.

"I think we have to get serious about it, and concentrate on push, push, push," Bernstein said.

Later, Bernstein said he was merely suggesting that the Legislature consider barring yard clippings or old newspapers from landfills, but he said they were options worth looking into.

In addition, Bernstein said, people are going to have to get used to the idea of burning waste in incinerators.

"I think we're going to have to start burning," he said, despite the opposition such plants usually encounter from nearby communities.

Saunders, chairman of the House Environmental Affairs Committee, said people might eventually accept incinerators, but he added, "The biggest problem with incineration is fear of the unknown."

Regional planning is "the real answer," Bernstein said. New federal rules will make landfills so costly to operate that smaller towns no longer will be able to operate their own. "They're going to have to go together," he said.

Bernstein said he expects the regional plans to be sufficiently developed by the end of fiscal year 1991 to identify which areas should get priority for grants.

The planning money will come from a fee of 50 cents per ton of waste, which is expected to generate $9 million annually.

The Recycling and Waste Minimization Branch has been making its existence known since June, he said. The branch will work with the Department of Commerce to develop additional markets for recycled materials. In addition, it will conduct workshops and establish a clearinghouse on solid waste information by the end of January 1991, he said.

Cities support the state's efforts to manage solid waste disposal, said Frank Sturzl, executive director of the Texas Municipal League, but he asked that the state not simply force new regulations on local governments.

"Cities in this state understand that in their future economic development, a big component of that is environmental quality," he said. "The question is, will we be a partner with the state and federal government or will we simply be the government of last resort that has to carry out all these mandates?"

Smaller towns are getting out of the landfill business or looking at regional projects, Sturzl said. Of his 950 members, 670 have fewer than 5,000 population and are increasingly unable to operate their own landfills, he said.

Quayle greeted by crowd protesting women in gulf

FORT WORTH (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle, who earlier praised his boss for challenging Saddam Hussein, was greeted Tuesday by about two dozen people protesting the use of women soldiers, especially mothers, in the Persian Gulf.

The protestors, led by the Rev. W.N. Otwell, lined up just outside a house in an exclusive Fort Worth subdivision where Quayle attended a private fund-raiser for GOP gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams.

"We're not protesting the meeting, we just want to make a point about the women in the Persian Gulf," said Otwell, who refused Secret Service requests to move from the grass strip in front of the house.

Quayle's motorcade passed by the protestors without incident.

The protestors carried signs reading: "Momma needs a mop and a broom, not an M-16;" "Women soldiers are a perversion of God's purpose;" and "God blesses women who stay home and keep house."

QUAYLE: Williams fund-raiser held

(From 1B)

Earlier Tuesday, Quayle made a brief campaign appearance in traditionally Democratic East Texas.

Speaking to a couple of hundred people at the Harvey Convention Center in Tyler, Quayle lumped Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards together with Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, whom George Bush defeated to win the White House.

"Let's pledge that the Democrats are never going to have a chance to do to Texas what they had a chance to do to the state of Massachusetts," Quayle said.

Once known for the "Massachusetts Miracle," the state's economy has turned around recently and the Legislature last month passed the largest tax increase in its history.

"Ann Richards likes to talk about not supporting an income tax, but when it comes to taking a position, and then outlining cuts in state government, my opponent's silence is deafening," Williams said.

Ms. Richards, who campaigned Monday in Dallas, has dismissed Williams' tax veto pledge, saying he lacked the experience to make such a promise would push any "hot button issues" to get elected.

Quayle lauded Williams as a "straightforward, straight talking, common sense" candidate.

Also in Tyler, Quayle said Bush has shown "extraordinary leadership" in the Persian Gulf.

Group started for military families

Staff Report

STANTON — The Military Families Support Group will meet at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Martin County Community Center in Stanton, according to Virginia Martin, coordinator of the group.

The meeting will be for members of the United States armed forces, their families and "just plain old America supporters — good ol' people," said Mrs. Martin, who is the mother of two U.S. Navy seamen, Ray Duke and Jeff Duke.

The group was organized, at the behest of Mrs. Martin, through the American Red Cross to drum up visible support for America's servicemen and servicewomen following the explosive Mideast crisis involving the United States military. Additionally, the group is to evoke patriotism and to provide a medium of support for military-family members at home.

For further information, those interested in the group may telephone Mrs. Martin at 458-3387 in West Stanton or Sarah Boering, emergency services coordinator for the Midland Chapter of the American Red Cross, at 684-6161 in Midland.

Plant group will meet

Staff Report

FORT STOCKTON — The Southwest Region of the Native Plant Society of Texas will hold its annual meeting Saturday, Sept. 15, at the Marian Blakemore Arboretum on Iron Mountain Ranch north of Marathon, according to John Carpenter, regional director of the Native Plant Society of Texas.

Those on the trip to Iron Mountain Ranch will leave the Gage Hotel in Marathon at 10 a.m. Sept. 15 for the drive to the ranch.

The arboretum is showing the effects of the Trans-Pecos "fifth season" — the bloom and growth caused by rain, said Carpenter.

Tour of the arboretum will be led by Dr. Barton H. Warnock, professor emeritus of botany at Sul Ross State University in Alpine and director of the arboretum, and Benny J. Simpson of the Texas A&M University Research Center and author of "A Field Guide to Texas Trees."

Old members, new members and non-members of the Native Plant Society of Texas are invited to the tour. They are to bring sack lunches. Iced tea and "good drinking water" will be provided, Carpenter said.

Those wishing more information on the tour may telephone Jean Reid, president of the Midland Chapter of Native Plant Society of Texas, at 684-5185 in Midland.

Women's group to protest against IRS

EL PASO (AP) — Members of a woman's group that has protested working conditions in the garment industry said Tuesday the Internal Revenue Service is ignoring their cries for justice.

Labor rights organization La Mujer Obrera, or Working Woman, plans to demonstrate Wednesday when the IRS auctions off equipment belonging to the garment business Diana. The IRS wants to collect $390,000 in back taxes.

Members of La Mujer Obrera, including two women who participated in a weeklong hunger strike that ended Monday, want the IRS to use the money collected to pay back wages they say is owed to workers.

"We feel this is incredibly unjust," said Cindy Arnold, development specialist for La Mujer Obrera. "This equipment is worth $70,000 and they've already said they don't expect to get much for it. The money they get is not going to mean a thing to the IRS. It (the sale) is a token action.

"To the women, that money is their livelihood. That's money that's going to pay their rent and feed their children."

Ms. Arnold said about 50 women are owed back pay by the garment business. She said the IRS didn't notify any workers of the sale. The group learned of it when one of their members read a posting announcing the sale, she said.

Internal Revenue Service offices were closed when Ms. Arnold notified media of the 10 a.m. protest.

La Mujer Obrera staged a hunger strike last week to draw attention to the plight of women who members of the group say are defrauded of their pay by unscrupulous contractors.

According to the group, the operators obtain sewing contracts, and when the work is done close up shop without paying workers.

Holiday death toll lower than predicted

Associated Press

Cautious motorists who obeyed traffic laws and abstained from drinking and driving helped keep the Labor Day weekend holiday death toll lower than predicted, officials say.

Thirty-three people were killed on Texas roadways during the 78-hour Labor Day weekend, the state Department of Public Safety said Tuesday.

The DPS estimated that 40 people would die over the holiday counting period, which ran from 6 p.m. Friday to midnight Monday.

"We're very elated that we didn't reach that 40 estimated traffic fatalities," DPS spokesman David Wells said Tuesday. "Part of the reason, we believe is there were a number of motorists out there obeying the traffic laws, being careful and not drinking and driving."

Fifty-two people died in traffic accidents last Labor Day weekend. Most were involved in accidents related to drunken drivers or speeding, and more than three-fourths of the victims weren't wearing seat belts.

Of the 33 fatalities this holiday weekend, at least 12 were alcohol-related, Wells said, adding that blood tests have not been completed in all of the deaths.

"I would say it's about an average number," he said of the alcohol-related deaths.

Other deaths were attributed to driving over the speed limit, other traffic violations and high speeds in inclement conditions, Wells said. The majority of those who died were not wearing seatbelts.

"Close to 80 percent of the passenger-vehicle fatalities they did not ... use seatbelts," Wells said.

Of the 33 fatalities, 17 occurred in single-vehicle accidents; 7 in two-vehicle broadside collisions; 5 in head-on two-vehicle collisions; 2 in multi-car accidents; 1 in a motorcycle accident; and 1 pedestrian was struck by a vehicle, Wells said.

Tai chi classes set

Staff Report

The Central YMCA will begin tai chi classes Thursday.

Classes will meet Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m. David Mussett, who has 10 years of tai chi experience, will be the instructor.

What Cityline provides

With Cityline, the Midland Reporter-Telegram's free telephone-based news, information and entertainment service, callers have access to dozens of categories of prerecorded data — everything from horoscopes and soap opera updates to local news and sports headlines and stock quotes — 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Once on line with the free system at 560-2400, touch-tone telephone callers will be presented step-by-step menus of informational choices. On-line assistance is available by pressing 6955.

Other four-digit codes access other specific categories. For example, in order to find out what's for lunch at MISD, call 560-2400. After Cityline's welcoming message, enter 1831 to hear about the lunch menus at area schools.

How Cityline works

After touch-tone telephone callers have dialed 560-2400, selected an information category and pressed the corresponding four-digit code — or made menu selections — the telephone keypad takes on a new function once "inside" the data category:

- To jump forward in a category, press J (the 5 key);
- To repeat the category press R (the 7 key);
- To go to a new category choice press G (the 4 key);
- To back up to the previous information item, press B (the 2 key)

Seaworld to cut winter schedule

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Sea World of Texas officials announced Tuesday the marine park will close during some winter months and will lay off more than 300 full-time workers.

"Most of our guests are families, and by and large they can only visit Sea World during the summer when school is out or, during spring and fall, on Saturdays and Sundays," said park chairman George J. Becker Jr.

Sea World will shut down in December, January and February and will open only weekends and holidays during other non-summer months, park officials said in a prepared statement.

It will continue to open daily in the summer from Memorial Day weekend through Labor Day weekend.

Previously, Sea World had opened Wednesdays through Saturdays throughout the year in addition to the daily summer schedule.

The new Sea World schedule is similar to those maintained by other Texas theme parks, including Six Flags over Texas in Arlington and Astroworld in Houston, Becker said.

Park attendance during winter months had been so low it didn't warrant keeping the marine park open, he said. With the new schedule Sea World will be open 160 days a year instead of 315.

The park will reduce its full-time staff from 607 to 245, while the temporary staff will be increased, officials said.

Animal caretakers will see minimal effects from the layoffs because the marine animals — including sea lions, dolphins, sharks and killer whales — still must be cared for throughout the year, Becker said.

Lawman says 'ice' may be more dangerous than cocaine

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A potent form of methamphetamine known as "ice" is creeping into the drug market and could be even more dangerous than cocaine, an expert told international narcotics officers Tuesday.

The drug looks like ice or salt rock chips and is 90 percent pure.

It already is widely available in Hawaii, and smaller amounts are popping up in other states, said Bruce Tillman, an investigator with the Hawaii Department of Public Safety.

"We are not here today to convince you that Hawaii does not have a problem. Much to the contrary, we admit we have a problem," Tillman told the International Narcotic Enforcement Officers Association.

Conference officials, citing security reasons, have banned reporters from some of the convention. Reporters were allowed to hear most of Tillman's speech before they were asked to leave, then permitted back in the room several minutes later.

In January, a state and federal task force in Hawaii seized 1 kilogram, or two pounds, of ice with an approximate street value of $750,000, Tillman said.

And in June, the task force confiscated three pounds, 30 ounces of ice along with $370,000 in cash. The major distributor was a U.S. Navy chief petty officer who was a month away from retirement, Tillman said.

Authorities say methamphetamine often enters Hawaii from Korea and the Philippines.

Manufactured from methamphetamine, ice is used in ways similar to crack cocaine, Tillman said. Users smoke it in 'ice pipes," which can be made from soda cans containing holes punched in the bottom. The holes are covered with a finger as the drug is inhaled.

"The telltale sign of burn marks on the index finger can often identify an ice smoker," Tillman said.

Some users describe their ice high — lasting four to 14 hours — as being better than a cocaine high, Tillman said. And, he said, a user may function as a "normal working person" while intoxicated.

"Do you want to ride the bus with one of these guys who's on ice? Not me," said Tillman.

Among the effects of the drug, he said, are insomnia, anxiety and fatigue. Heavy users have been known to experience paranoia. Withdrawal symptoms include acute depression and fatigue and can result in coma and death, Tillman said.

More than 1,500 Aggies show loyalty by buying plates

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — More than 1,500 Texas A&M supporters have bought special collegiate plates, exceeding the number purchased so far by supporters of other schools participating in the statewide program.

"Texas A&M has sold more than three times the number of all the other schools combined," said Robert Smith, A&M's vice president for finance and administration.

Other schools involved in the program include Baylor, Incarnate Word, Richland College, Southern Methodist, Southwest Texas State, Texas Southern, Texas Tech, Houston, North Texas, University of Texas, UT-Arlington and UT-El Paso.

Smith said the response is not surprising, considering the strong loyalty Aggies have to their school.

The collegiate plates cost $30 above the standard motor vehicle registration fee. Of that amount, $25 is deposited into the state treasury to fund scholarships.

The plates also can be personalized, but buyers of these will pay the usual extra $40 fee for the special letters or numbers, as well as the $30 collegiate fee.

Mother wants fetal surgery publicized

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas woman whose infant daughter was one of only a handful of infants to survive experimental fetal surgery said she will campaign to make the procedure more visible.

"I don't think a lot of people know about this, not even some doctors," said Teri Alexander, 30, of Burleson. "We need to get the word out so that other expectant mothers facing the same problem can have the same choice.

"I would tell another mother to do it for her baby. I know it's painful, but it's all worth it."

Mrs. Alexander's daughter, Faith Nicole Alexander, was born 2½ months premature Aug. 5 at a Fort Worth hospital, a month after undergoing experimental surgery while in her mother's womb.

Faith became the third infant to survive the procedure, which was performed at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco. Six others did not survive.

The surgery corrected a rare and often fatal prenatal defect known as congenital diaphragmatic hernia, which causes the stomach and intestines to crowd the heart and lungs.

The defect occurs in about one in 2,220 fetuses. A newborn with the defect has about a 25 percent chance of survival and usually suffers serious complications.

Lora Scott, 26, of Tacoma, Wash., said she also agrees the surgery needs to become more well known.

"I'm glad I went through it, and I want to pass the word too," said Ms. Scott, whose daughter underwent fetal surgery March 3. Hers was the second successful fetal operation in the United States.

Mrs. Alexander said her happiness will be complete when her daughter is allowed to come home. The baby, who weighed 3 pounds, 2 ounces at birth, is expected to remain hospitalized at Harris Methodist-Fort Worth hospital for another six weeks.

"I went to the hospital on Wednesday, and I held her in my arms," Mrs. Alexander told The Dallas Morning News in Tuesday's editions. "It was very emotional."

The Alexanders are remodeling a room for the baby.

"We still need to put on the wallpaper, arrange the room and do other little things," said Mike Alexander, a DART mechanic. "We need to get busy. Before you know it, she'll be here."

Bullock, Mosbacher criticize other's purchases

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — The candidates in the Texas lieutenant governor's race accused each other Tuesday of spending taxpayer money on frills.

Bullock

Democrat Bob Bullock released a list of "strange to opulent" purchases by the Texas Department of Human Services, a cash-strapped state agency whose board is chaired by his Republican opponent, Rob Mosbacher Jr.

The list included $9,515 spent on 11 cellular telephones, $1,726 for two executive chairs, $1,436 for a desk with gold-tooled leather top and $1,000 for 53 bronze paperweights.

Other items were stereo headphones, water dispenser, bottled water and a coffee cart center, Bullock said.

"Mosbacher will undoubtedly blame someone else at DHS for these purchases because that's what he always does," Bullock said.

Mosbacher last week criticized Bullock, the state comptroller, for purchases by his agency of brass ashtrays, attache cases and other items. On Tuesday, he expanded the shopping list to include items ranging from flashlights to grease guns.

Mosbacher said he had not seen the list released by Bullock and did not know about the purchases, but that he plans to investigate whether they were justified.

"If there's any evidence of extravagance, I will do everything I can as a board member to see that it ends," Mosbacher said. "That's the difference between me and Bob, he doesn't seem to be apologetic."

Bullock responded, saying, "DHS bought cellular phones, headphones and coffee makers and so did the comptroller's office. The difference is the comptroller's office is functioning efficiently and within its budget. Mosbacher's agency is mired in chaos," he said.

The Legislature has had to bail out the Department of Human Services twice this year and the agency is facing another mammoth budget deficit.

Bullock attacked Mosbacher, the wealthy son of U.S. Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher, saying, "Rob has been a child of privilege all his life. He has never had to earn anything that he has and he has never had to be responsible for anything."

In other political developments:

■ GOP gubernatorial nominee Clayton Williams said his opponent, Democrat Ann Richards, refuses to say whether she would veto a state income tax. Richards has repeatedly said she opposes an income tax.

■ State Sen. Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth, returned $1,100 in contributions he received from a savings and loan executive who was indicted, but later cleared of wrongdoing.

Parmer, who is challenging U.S. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, also disclosed all contributions he received from the savings and loan industry and called on called on Gramm to follow suit.

"The public has a right to know how much Sen. Gramm got, who he got it from and what he did in his capacity as a United States senator in relation to the savings and loan scandal," he said.

During the 1980s, Gramm received $86,098 from savings and loan political action committees or individuals tied to the industry, according to a study by Common Cause, a public watchdog group.

Savings and loan contributions to Gramm are the sixth highest in the Senate, according to the study.

But Gramm's spokesman Larry Neal called Parmer's allegations a publicity stunt. Neal said Gramm has been at the forefront at cleaning up savings and loans, while "Parmer was asleep at the switch in Austin letting the state chartered S&Ls be looted."

■ Court of Criminal Appeals Judge Sam Houston Clinton, a Democrat, said he planned a "straightforward and positive" re-election campaign. Clinton said he still believes in the death penalty despite the release of two death row inmates in the past two years, whose convictions were overturned.

Clinton faces Republican Oliver Kitzmann of Brookshire.

Man allegedly threatened police officer

DeSOTO (AP) — A man shot to death by a DeSoto police officer had threatened the officer with a semiautomatic gun after being pulled over for a traffic violation, police said.

DeSoto Public Service Officer Robin Riser said Gerald Halton, 43, of DeSoto, died Monday evening from two gunshots to the back.

Officer Larry Harwell, on the force six years, has been placed on administrative duty pending an internal investigation, Riser said. He was treated for minor injuries.

Harwell, 31, had pulled over Halton about 5:10 p.m. Monday for running a stop sign, Riser said. She said witnesses told police that after Halton got out of the car, he pulled a 9-mm semiautomatic gun from behind his back and pointed it at the officer.

The two struggled and Halton's gun fell, but he ripped the officer's gun out of its holster, Riser said. Halton broke free and reached for his gun. Harwell retrieved his gun and told Halton to stop, Riser said.

When Halton did not stop, the officer shot him, Riser said.

Interest growing in religion classes

HOUSTON (AP) — It's standing room only in the University of Houston's "The Bible and Western Culture" class, and other local campuses also have noticed a growing interest in religion courses.

Religion scholar Lynn Mitchell teaches the packed religion class at Houston. On a recent morning, Carol Strickland, a 32-year-old mother of three, showed up even though she was not enrolled.

"I'll stand," she told a reluctant Mitchell, who relented and later added her name to the list of more than 200 students.

"I'm always planning to grit my teeth and not let anyone else in," Mitchell said. "But they beg, so I let them in if they'll agree to stand."

Students include a mix of Christians, Jews, Moslems and those of other faiths. They range from students barely out of high school to the middle-aged, from dedicated believers to doubting agnostics.

Mitchell, who relies on donations to keep the religious studies program rolling at Houston, said even more students would be enrolled if there were more instructors.

"We could have about 200 students enrolled here for every teacher who could be employed," he said.

At Rice University in Houston, faculty in continuing-studies departments opened classes in religious studies during the early 1980s. This fall, almost a quarter of all program listings are on religion.

In 1983, 260 were enrolled in the religion courses offered by the program, according to Rice figures. Last year, more than 600 students were enrolled.

And at the smaller University of St. Thomas, degrees issued in masters's-level theology and divinity programs have doubled since 1980.

"For many people, the god of technology has been kind of disappointing. Students and intellectuals are interested in all religions, including the New Age and non-Christian religions," Mitchell said in explaining the increased interest in religion courses.

Dallas women's contributions subject of book

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas journalist is looking at "women in the cracks of history," and is writing a book she hopes will present a more complete picture of the area's development.

Vivian Castleberry, who in 1956 became the first woman editor at the Dallas Times Herald, is documenting the "enormous" contributions women have made, a task she says few other historians have attempted.

"Many people trace their ancestry through their fathers," Ms. Castleberry said. "This is an attempt to trace us, also, through our mothers.

"It is very difficult because women — through all of the years of Dallas history until the last two decades — have lost their personal identity when they married," she said.

She hopes to complete her book in 1992. It begins with Charity Gilbert, Dallas' first woman landowner in 1842, and continue to the present.

Among more than 300 women's profiles, is Sarah Horton Cockrell. By 1858, the 38-year-old woman owned a third of downtown Dallas and held the reins of a vast business empire.

Ms. Castleberry will also include profiles of modern-day leaders, including Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss, state Sen. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Dallas, and Lillian Bradshaw, director of the Dallas Public Library from 1962 to 1984.

By project's end, Ms. Castleberry plans to have profiled 500 Dallas women of the past and present.

"My book should round out the Dallas story," she said.

Texas man involved in dispute over Zulu battlefield artifacts

BEDFORD (AP) — A Texas man who removed artifacts from a Zulu battlefield in what is now South Africa has been caught up in a dispute over their ownership.

Bedford resident Greg Marcinek conducted two archaeological digs on the 110-year-old battlefield site between some 20,000 Zulu warriors and about 1,000 British soldiers.

South African officials want the artifacts Marcinek dug up from the privately owned pasture and are reviewing their options to recover them. Marcinek said he had permission to take them but will return them once they are cataloged.

"The Khambula battle site has been declared a national monument," Janette Deacon, head of South Africa's National Monuments Council, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Ms. Deacon said Marcinek went to South Africa on two occasions and shipped back boxes full of animal-skin shields, spears, Zulu musket balls and other artifacts from the battlefield.

"Most of it was just junk, though. Things like shell casings and tin cans," he said.

Marcinek said he even went a step farther than offering to return the items.

"I told her associate, Andrew Hall, that I would be willing to send 70 percent of all the money collected from sales, provided it went toward the purchase of the land and that it be properly cared for," he said.

Officials say 20,000 Texans could have AIDS virus by '91

DALLAS (AP) — By 1991, 20,000 Texans could be infected with the AIDS virus — double the number of cases reported in the last nine years, Texas health officials say.

Recent statistics by the Texas Department of Health show there have been 10,493 cases of AIDS reported since records were first kept in 1981.

That figure doesn't surprise state health officials, who projected that the 10,000 mark would be reached in 1990. They also estimate that 20,000 cases could be recorded by the end of 1991.

"We see no evidence that the numbers are falling off," Christie Reed, director of the AIDS-HIV division of the state health department, told The Dallas Morning News in Tuesday's editions.

Texas is fourth in the country in reported AIDS cases, behind New York, California and Florida. New Jersey, which has the fifth highest incidence of AIDS, probably will surpass 10,000 reported cases in a few months, the newspaper said.

Because the incubation period for the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome can range from six to 10 years, new cases transmitted before 1985 will continue to surface for several years, officials say.

But the growth of AIDS in Texas also can be attributed to trends that already have been seen in other parts of the country.

Ms. Reed, the state AIDS coordinator, said there has been a leveling off of cases from male-to-male contact. But there have been increases in transmission by sharing of needles and sex with intravenous drug users, in both rural and urban areas.

Minorities, particularly blacks and Hispanics, continue to be affected by the disease at higher rates than in the early 1980s.

In Harris County, for example, a greater percentage of Hispanics have been affected by AIDS throughout the county than in inner-city Houston. Through the end of May, 14 percent of the county's AIDS cases were Hispanic, compared with 10 percent of the total Houston cases.

"People wait a lot longer to be seen (by a doctor) out in the county," said Catherine Cooksley, AIDS surveillance coordinator for Harris County.

U.S.-Mexico border mayors to discuss problems, prospects

EL PASO (AP) — Officials from both sides of the U.S.-Mexico border are to arrive tonight to talk about their common problems and the prospects for development along the nearly 2,000-mile boundary.

The conference, to be held in El Paso and across the border in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, is the first such gathering of border officials. Representatives from Arizona, California, New Mexico and Texas were to attend.

Mayor Suzie Azar, who has made improving relations with Juarez a priority in her administration, said the conference will be a chance to make sure concerns of border cities are addressed in a free trade agreement between the United States and Mexico.

"What we want to happen is we want to be able to say, 'We want in the free trade agreement, this, this and this,'" Ms. Azar said last week.

"From that we will develop a resolution, then may send a package to all of the Congress members from along the border," she said.

The mayors are being asked to bring histories of their cities and statements on issues of interest to their cities.

The conference will deal with the environment, public safety, economic development, tourism, immigration and customs.

"We want to be the leadership in these issues, because we're going to be more directly impacted," Ms. Azar said.

John D. Negroponte, U.S. ambassador to Mexico, is one of the keynote speakers. The officials also will tour a Juarez maquiladora.

Ms. Azar said the conference is a way for the border cities to begin solving their own problems.

"We don't want to react," Ms. Azar said. "We want to be proactive in solving problems we face every day."

The conference was to kick off with a Texas barbecue dinner and country-western music party tonight

Texas officials expected to attend include Eagle Pass Mayor Robert Barrientos, Hidalgo Mayor John David Franz, San Benito Mayor Gilbert Galvan, Laredo Mayor Aldo Tatangleo and Brownsville Mayor Ignacio Garza. Presidio is sending a representative.

Columbus, N.M., Mayor Charles Hudson, Sunland, N.M., Mayor Bentura Molina and a representative from Las Cruces, N.M., have said they will attend.

From Arizona, Nogales Mayor Jose Luis de la Ossa and a representative from Yuma were expected to attend. San Diego also sent a representative.

Names of those attending from Mexican border cities were not immediately available.

Teens were killed by train, authorities say

LAMPASAS (AP) — Injuries suffered by three Bell County teenagers found dead along a railroad line "are consistent" with being hit by a train and not the result of knife wounds as first believed, authorities said Tuesday.

"Preliminary findings of multiple stabbings to the three teenagers, the suspected defensive wounds to two of the teen-agers and the time of death as was initially believed have now been proved incorrect," Lampasas County Sheriff Gordon Morris said Tuesday.

A preliminary autopsy report had indicated the two boys and a girl had been repeatedly stabbed and were dead prior to being struck by a Santa Fe Railroad train early Sunday.

But Morris said late Tuesday, "What appeared to be knife wounds were not penetrating wounds or wounds that could have caused death. The cuts were consistent with objects found on a railroad track as well as the various items found on the underside of the train.

The victims were identified as 15-year-old Christopher Kelsey Hagerman, of rural Bell County, and two 16-year-olds from Copperas Cove, Joshua Post and Manessa Fawn Cartwright.

'Killer' bull shot after it charged owner

PAMPA (AP) — It took two tranquilizer darts and four blasts from a .12-gauge shotgun to finally kill a bull that charged and critically injured its owner.

"That was one killer bull," said Gray County Sheriffs Deputy Bill Toten.

The bull attacked Royce Ayres, 63, on Monday as Ayres led the animal into a pen, deputies said. Ayres was listed in critical condition Tuesday at Coronado Hospital with collapsed lungs, broken ribs and arm injuries.

Ayres had raised the 2,000-pound half brahman, half Black Angus bull from the bottle, Toten said.

"When we got there, the bull was eight to 10 feet on the other side of the barbed wire fence. It was standing there pawing the ground, bellowing with its tongue hanging out. I'd never seen such a crazed animal," Toten said.

Toten shot the animal with a .357-caliber Magnum below one of the bull's ears. He said it "staggered" a little and charged the fence.

Pampa police officer Rick Hall then shot the bull in the neck with a .12-gauge shotgun. "It chased everybody around for about two minutes," Toten said.

Pampa Animal Control officers fired two tranquilizer darts into the animal but they had no effect, Toten said.

"I shot him between the eyes with a .12-gauge slug. It knocked him down, but he got right back up," Toten said.

He said it took two more shots, including another between the eyes, to kill the bull.

"I don't know what set the thing off," he said. "I thought from looking at it, it had gotten a hold of some 'loco' weed or had rabies."

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: New experiences and challenges are on the horizon. Know what you really want! Your pleasing personality plays a key role in advancing your career in November. Business associates will be intrigued by your unique way of looking at things. In early 1991, keep in touch with those who have helped and supported you in the past. Family relationships will become more satisfying when you forget old grievances. Late spring is a wonderful time for a vacation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A financial institution may be a source of assistance. Sticking to your diet-and-exercise regimen will help you feel better. You could be skating on thin ice in romance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your creative and artistic abilities make a deep impression on someone new. You could be on the same wavelength with an influential person. Move ahead with greater confidence!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your financial situation improves. You seek a new direction in both work and romance. Be true to your values. Simple pleasures hold fresh appeal. Romance flourishes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Long-awaited news arrives, laying the foundation for a major career move. Guard your resources and valuables. You may decide to withdraw from an unexciting romantic relationship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New career opportunities will open up when you display a greater variety of skills. Others are likely to let you have your way today. Communicate your feelings honestly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day to handle insurance and investment matters. Others admire your efficiency. You may want to recycle an old idea or plan. If so, be certain to give it a thorough overhaul!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Have the courage of your convictions and you will make great strides today. Ask key questions to get the answers you need. Your business associates are unusually cooperative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Ask direct questions and be prepared for some surprising responses. Stop waiting for others to make up their minds. Communicate your views to family and friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Seize a golden career or business opportunity without delay. Immerse yourself in new intellectual pursuits. An on-again, off-again romance is not worth your time. Start fresh.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stay alert and you can get the jump on your competitors. Perform more services for yourself to stay within your budget. Financial plan gains approval. A blind date proves lucky.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Assistance could come from an unexpected quarter today. Unconventional methods may be needed to solve a problem. Explore all courses of action. Let go of outdated ideas.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are industrious, sympathetic and intelligent. Academically inclined, these Virgos should fare especially well in research or teaching. They are able to adapt quickly to new situations and are not afraid of adversity. These children have long memories and find it difficult to forgive past hurts. Wise parents will teach them the benefits of forgiveness. They need to understand that holding grudges is a waste of energy. Tender and sentimental, these Virgos are big winners in romance.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	5 ♡	Pass
6 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ◇

Seeing only half your side's assets can be a tremendous handicap. This hand is from a national women's team championship some years ago.

North might have been content to raise three hearts to game, but she intended her jump to five hearts to show a good hand with no first-round control to cue-bid. South misinterpreted it as a general invitation, promising at least one ace, and with a pretty good hand for the auction she went to slam.

If the bidding does not elicit rhapsodies, the play was spectacular. Declarer won the first trick with the ace of diamonds, cashed the king of hearts and crossed to dummy with the queen, on which East discarded the two of spades. Not wanting East to have the chance to make another discard, and sure that a spade could not be sneaked through because the ace was with West, declarer returned to hand with the king of diamonds and led the jack of spades. West took the ace and exited overcautiously with a heart and the stage was set.

Declarer won and cashed the queen of diamonds and two more rounds of trumps, reducing the hand to this position:

On the last trump West made a fatal error by discarding the ten of diamonds rather than the five of spades. The king of clubs was sluffed from the table and East, convinced that declarer held the missing spade, let go of the ace of clubs. Now declarer scored all three of her clubs to land the slam.

NEW YORK (AP) — Donald Trump's book "Surviving at the Top" will hit the top of The New York Times bestseller list this weekend, the Times said Tuesday.

The book, released just over one week ago, climbed the charts faster than Trump's last tome, "The Art of the Deal." The buying public apparently was unswayed by recent reports of Trump's problems, both marital and financial.

"It's a great honor to again have a No. 1 bestseller. This book hit the No. 1 spot even sooner than 'The Art of the Deal.' I am really happy that people like it so much," said Trump.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Maybe it would have been more appropriate on Labor Day, but "Today" show co-host Deborah Norville waited until Tuesday to tell viewers that she's expecting a baby in March.

Norville

Norville, 32, is married to Karl Wellner, a Swedish businessman who is in the auction business. She became Bryant Gumbel's co-host on the NBC show in January.

Norville didn't say how long she planned to continue working, or how much time she might take away from the show after her child is born.

NBC recently tried to revive the slumping "Today" show by adding Joe Garagiola, Faith Daniels and Katie Couric to the team of Norville, Gumbel, Willard Scott and Gene Shalit.

The network announced Friday that Garagiola would be off for about four weeks to have elective surgery for an undisclosed medical problem.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — But seriously, success as a pop singer isn't all it's cracked up to be. Just ask Phil Collins.

Collins

The singer, known for hits like "One More Night" and "Sussudio," told an interviewer he's having trouble getting critics to accept that he's got a social conscience, too.

"Maybe I am a pop singer but I think I've got more to offer than that," he told the Nashville Banner.

Collins is touring for his latest release, "But Seriously," which contains songs about strife in South Africa, Northern Ireland and the African famine. The hit "Another Day in Paradise" is about the homeless.

"I've been accused of not having my heart where the lyrics are, which is complete bull," he said.

"They put me in a little box ... and don't look past "One More Night" or "Against All Odds." As soon as you poke your head out of that box they close it back on your head," said Collins.

Troubled times and troubled people affect him as much as they do other people and songwriters, he said.

"When I'm driving and I pass 60 or 100 homeless people on the street, I'm not immune to that. I have to write about them the same as Elvis Costello would want to write about them."

SOUTHHAMPTON, N.Y. (NYT) — Alden Whitman, a reporter for The New York Times who wrote the obituaries of many noteworthy men and women from 1964 to 1976, died early Tuesday at the Hotel de Paris in Monte Carlo. He was 76 and lived in Southampton, N.Y.

He died of a stroke, said his wife. the former Joan McCracken.

The Whitmans were in Monte Carlo for a 70th birthday celebration for Craig Claiborne, the food writer.

Over the years, Whitman wrote hundreds of advance obituaries — that is, obituaries of people written while they were living.

He traveled far and wide to talk to the subjects of his articles, among them Anthony Eden, Earl Warren, Charlie Chaplin, Charles A. Lindbergh, Graham Greene, Earl Browder, Henry Miller, Harry Bridges, Harry S. Truman and Andre Maurois.

Whitman was deft at interweaving the general and the particular, as in his obituary of Oppenheimer, which began:

"Starting precisely at 5:30 a.m. Mountain War Time, July 16, 1945, J. (for nothing) Robert Oppenheimer lived the remainder of his life in the blinding light and the crepusculine shadow" of the nuclear test bomb that was exploded, at that moment, at Alamogordo, N.M.

"That sunlight flash illuminated him as a scientific genius, the technocrat of a new age for mankind. At the same time, it led to his condemnation by the government when, in 1964, he was described as a security risk to his country and a man with 'fundamental defects in his character.'"

Researchers find gene related to osteoarthritis

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Researchers on Tuesday announced the discovery of a gene that in some families causes osteoarthritis, a degenerative disease that can lead to stiffness, pain and crippling of joints.

Dr. Darwin J. Prockop of Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, and Dr. Roland W. Moskowitz of Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland said the faulty gene was isolated in studies of three generations of one family.

The faulty gene appears to produce a protein mutation that leads to arthritis at an early age, they said.

"We have taken a disease and defined a specific cause," Moskowitz said. "Knowing where to target now will help us immeasurably" in developing a specific treatment for arthritis.

Osteoarthritis is the most common of a number of arthritic diseases, affecting some 16 million Americans.

Treatment now consists only of treating symptoms and relieving inflammation. Severe cases can lead to crippling that can be corrected only by replacing the diseased joint with an artificial one.

Ten families with several generations of arthritis have been examined, and the faulty gene found in three of those families, Moskowitz said. Examination of the genetic pattern of the others is not complete, he said.

"We think it is likely that other genes are involved," Moskowitz said, adding that it was unlikely that the single gene is responsible for all forms of inherited osteoarthritis.

He said a search is under way to find other genes that may play a role in the disease.

The cause of primary osteoarthritis has long eluded science even though it is one of the most common ailments among people past the age of 55. The disease causes a breakdown of cartilage that covers and cushions joints.

It can affect any joint, but most commonly is seen in the hands, ankles, knees and hips.

"We now know that a gene can cause the problem," Prockop said.

The studies, he said, showed that in some families there is one defective gene and one good gene for the production of collagen II, a protein that the primary component in cartilage.

'With this discovery, we hope to find ways to make the good gene work better and the bad gene work less well.'

— Dr. Darwin J. Prockop, Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia

The defective gene, Prockop said, changes a single amino acid in the collagen II. The result is an altered and weakened collagen, which leads to an early onset of arthritis.

"With this discovery, we hope to find ways to make the good gene work better and the bad gene work less well," Prockop said.

Researchers, he said, are looking for ways to manipulate the gene or block its action. But Prockop said much more research is needed before candidate drugs can be developed.

The arthritis gene was found after a physician referred to Moskowitz a family that experienced the disease in three generations. Some members developed symptoms as early as 16 years of age.

Using a tissue sample from one family member with arthritis, the scientists isolated the collagen II gene and found that it was mutated. They then checked that gene in the other family members and found it was defective in the nine who were affected with arthritis, but not in the 10 others.

Tests then were conducted on 57 unrelated individuals without arthritis and the gene was found to be normal.

John D. Stobo, a Johns Hopkins University medical professor and president of the American College of Rheumatologists, said the discovery "provides real hope that a cure will be forthcoming."

Dr. Arthur I. Grayzel, senior vice president of the Arthritis Foundation, said the research "has the potential for helping change the concept of osteoarthritis from a disease that is the inevitable consequence of aging to a disease that has a specific cause in different people."

The research was supported in part by National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases, one of the National Institutes of Health.

Dr. Roland W. Moskowitz, professor of medicine at Case Western University, points to a chart during a news conference at the National Institute of Arthritis and Mosculoskeletal and Skin Diseases Tuesday. Moskowitz, and other researchers, outlined a new study that for the first time identifies a gene defect that causes osteoarthritis, the most common form of arthritis.

Dentist with AIDS writes former patients

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A Florida dentist who may have transmitted the AIDS virus to a former patient urged others he once treated to be tested for the disease in an emotional letter released Tuesday.

David J. Acer insisted in the letter he doesn't believe federal Centers for Disease Control reports that he may have given acquired immune deficiency syndrome to one of his patients, apparently during a routine tooth extraction.

The Atlanta-based CDC said last month it was the first case in the nation in which a health professional had apparently transmitted AIDS to a patient. The agency hasn't said how it happened.

"I do not understand how such a thing could have happened, and I do not believe it did happen," Acer wrote. "I am a gentle man, and I would never intentionally expose anyone to this disease."

A copy of the letter, which begins, "Dear former patient," was sent to the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, which released it Tuesday to The Associated Press.

It was unclear how many of the letters were sent to former patients. Acer, whose home telephone number in Stuart is unlisted, couldn't be reached for comment.

In the letter, Acer said he is dying of AIDS.

"I am sorry I cannot tell you this face to face, but I am dying of this disease," Acer wrote. "I am very close to the end."

Acer said he consulted experts after testing positive for the AIDS virus and was assured he could continue practicing dentistry. Among the guidelines he followed were those from the CDC itself such as wearing gloves and a mask, he said.

"Because I was aware that I had the HIV virus, I was extremely careful in how I practiced dentistry," he said.

Acer didn't say when he learned he had AIDS or how long he practiced afterward. He said he stopped when he got AIDS-related cancer.

Sabatini wins test of wills

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Gabriela Sabatini danced along a tennis tightrope before knocking off a tiny Soviet slugger, and American teen Mary Joe Fernandez delivered on the promise she showed in her first U.S. Open at 14.

The shaky victories by No. 5 Sabatini and No. 8 Fernandez on Tuesday set up a semifinal match between them, and both will gladly take two days off first to recover from their jitters in getting there.

Sabatini, considered from the start of the Open a solid contender to take Steffi Graf's title, found herself in a 2½ hour test of wills with unseeded Leila Meskhi before winning 7-6 (7-5), 6-4.

Sabatini, teetering on the edge of defeat in the first set, fought off a set point in the 10th game after the crowd rallied behind her, another in the 12th game when a lob by Meskhi landed an inch long, and came back from 2-5 down in the tie-breaker.

The athletic Argentine won the last five points of the tie-breaker as Meskhi's composure finally cracked. Meskhi had been winning points with deep, hard groundstrokes and an aggressive net game that belied her 5-foot-4 height and pixieish build.

But in the tie-breaker, she double-faulted for the first time at 5-4, then hit a forehand long, drilled an easy overhead into the net and lost the set on a weak backhand that Sabatini volleyed hard into the cement.

That set lasted one hour, 29 minutes — more than a half-hour longer than Graf took to beat Jennifer Capriati in two sets — but it served only as a prelude to an equally tense second set. A full moon shone brightly over the stadium, and the crowd of about 20,000 screamed and groaned with every exchange on seemingly endless rallies.

Sabatini, worried about early misses at the net, backed off and played into Meskhi's strength with topspin groundstrokes for most of the first set. But after realizing she could win points with low shots that Meskhi smacked into the net, Sabatini began to change her strategy.

Sabatini broke Meskhi twice to take a 4-2 lead in the second set. After the second break, at love, Meskhi looked glumly at the ground, as if already beaten, dispirited by bad calls and blown opportunities. Yet she rallied again, broke Sabatini back twice and was serving at 5-4 with a chance to tie the set.

Once more, though, Sabatini held on and broke Meskhi for the final time on a forehand long by Meskhi, ending the longest straight-set women's match of the tournament.

Fernandez's 6-2, 2-6, 6-1 victory over Manuela Maleeva-Fragniere, the fourth-round conqueror of Martina Navratilova, confirmed that the 19-year-old Floridian's trip to the Australian final last January was no fluke.

Fernandez, the youngest player to win a match here two weeks after she turned 14 in 1985, is still a tall, skinny teen with a long pigtail draping halfway down her back. But she's grown stronger, especially in the past year, and seems to be just on the brink of reaching her potential.

Dorsett's plea

"They don't have a running back out there that can do what I can do," Dorsett, 36, said in Tuesday's editions of the Dallas Times Herald.

The point may be moot. The Cowboys on Tuesday signed running back Emmitt Smith, their first round pick out of Florida, ending a 48-day holdout. It was the longest rookie holdout in the Cowboys history.

Dorsett, the Cowboys' all-time leading rusher with 12,036 yards and No. 2 on the NFL's all-time rushing list with 12,739 yards, has recovered from the knee ligaments he tore in training camp last year with the Denver Broncos. He retired last season.

"There's no doubt in my mind I could play for the Cowboys right now," he said. "Emmitt's no Tony Dorsett," he said.

Dorsett still is rankling over an abortive tryout he received with the Cowboys last month, when he was invited to Valley Ranch. Cowboys pro personnel director John Wooten liked what he saw, but coach Jimmy Johnson nixed a Dorsett return to Dallas.

"Supposedly, Jimmy thought I would be too intimidating a factor for the younger guys, which I didn't quite understand. They don't have many veterans on that team right now, and I guess he thought the type of veteran I was over the years would not be conducive to his way of coaching," Dorsett said.

McEnroe's comeback evokes peers' praise

McEnroe

Fellow quarterfinalist Andre Agassi: "I'd love to see him in the finals. I think he's good for tennis, the sponsors and TV."

Billie Jean King: "God, it's the best he's played in a year. He's just so focused ... People are appreciating what he can do and what he's done ... When you win too much sometimes people don't appreciate what you've done, but when you're older, they say, 'Gosh, he can still hit the ball.'"

Ilie Nastase: "I love to watch him play tennis. I appreciate his game on court. He's playing so well, serving and volleying great. I don't know if he can go on for two weeks. If he gets close to the semifinals and finals, you can beat anyone in one match. The problem is to get to the finals."

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball was dragged into the federal courts again Tuesday when a New York Yankees executive sued Fay Vincent and accused the commissioner of trying to run him and George Steinbrenner out of the game.

Leonard L. Kleinman, executive vice president and chief operating executive of the Yankees, made the allegation in a $22 million lawsuit against Vincent and John M. Dowd, the commissioner's special counsel who directed an investigation of Steinbrenner's dealings with gambler Howard Spira.

The lawsuit in Manhattan's federal court seeks to stop Vincent from holding a hearing Thursday to determine possible disciplinary action against Kleinman. U.S. District Judge Leonard B. Sand will hear arguments Wednesday on Kleinman's request for a temporary restraining order to block Vincent's hearing.

"Vincent's course of conduct from the very beginning of his involvement in this matter demonstrates that he has harbored a prejudice against Kleinman and Steinbrenner and a desire to find a way to exclude them from being involved with the Yankees," the lawsuit said.

Steinbrenner agreed to resign as the Yankees general partner after Vincent ruled acted against the best interests of baseball by associating with Spira and paying him $40,000. Two Yankees limited partners sued in Cleveland to keep Steinbrenner in control, but a judge turned down their request for a TRO.

Spira claimed Kleinman arranged a money-market account for him at the time he was paid last January. That is one of the matters Vincent wants to discuss at his hearing.

"The initiation of the charges against Kleinman," the lawsuit said, "was done in bad faith with the intent to undermine his contract with the Yankees and to prevent him from succeeding Steinbrenner as the managing general partner of the Yankees."

The lawsuit alleged that Vincent and Dowd conducted an unfair and biased investigation and that Dowd tampered with transcripts of witnesses.

Kleinman said he will not be allowed to call witnesses at the disciplinary hearing to support his position. He also said that Vincent has refused to hold the hearing in public.

"The contacts between Spira and the Yankees were known for years," the lawsuit said. "Despite this knowledge, Vincent charged Steinbrenner and Kleinman with misconduct."

Emmitt Smith ends holdout

■ The Dallas Cowboys reached agreement Tuesday with their No. 1 draft pick, whose 48 day holdout was the longest by a rookie in team history.

Associated Press

ADDISON — Running back Emmitt Smith, ending the longest rookie holdout in the history of the Dallas Cowboys at 48 days, signed a four-year contract on Tuesday worth an estimated package of $5 million.

Smith, the 17th player selected in the draft, said "I'm no savior for this franchise. It takes 11 guys. But it's an unique opportunity to grow together with a team. We hope to be in the Super Bowl in the next two or three years."

Owner Jerry Jones and Smith, who set 58 records at the University of Florida, wouldn't disclose the details. However, both compromised. Smith wanted a three-year contract and the Cowboys asked for five years.

Smith got a $1 million signing bonus and an estimated $650,000 per year plus an incentive package for starts, performance, and all-star teams that he might make. Smith and agent Richard Howell had asked for $700,000 per year.

"The terms in the incentive clause helped me make my decision," said Smith, who had a year remaining at Florida and had already enrolled there to resume studies for his public recreation degree.

A season full of thrills and pot holes

The football power structure of District 4-5A seems to have changed little from a year ago, but it's a new season with new thrills and pot holes.

Williamson

For instance, three teams earn the right this season under University Interscholastic League sanction to advance to the playoffs. Who, besides Odessa Permian and Midland Lee, will rise out of the 4-5A rubble to become the third power in the league? That is the major question of the season.

And we haven't forgotten the plight of the tradition rich Permian Panthers, who not only face allegations of violating UIL rules, but also face climbing out from under the tainted image left from the book "Friday Night Lights." Those factors alone could distract a Permian team that lost some of its best skill people in memory.

Can Lee add an eighth consecutive playoff berth to its well-traveled suitcase? Can Midland High end its 39-year playoff drought with anothe. team allowed to travel in November?

Can Odessa High coach Jerry Taylor survive in Mojo country after ringing the UIL bell on the Panthers? Can the MHS-Lee game ever be as exciting as the all-time classic we sweated through last year?

And even the sidelines gets a notice. Can 4-5A bands be held to 20-minute halftime performances as mandated last February by the 4-5A Executive Committee?

Finding all the answers promises to be exciting — even thrilling, and maybe disappointing. But here is how it will all end — barring some excitement or disappointments.

1. Midland Lee: No one in District 4-5A has arms long enough to wrap around the thighs of 250-pound Rebel fullback Jovan "Chico" Tellez. And even if one comes along, he would have to get through the Lee offensive line that averages the weight of the NCNB building.

2. Odessa Permian: Too many Friday Night Lights, allegations of preseason workouts and no Chris Comer, Stoney Case, Lloyd Hill or Arvey Villa. For most teams this would mean the end of an era. For Permian it's only second place.

3. Odessa High: Few remember that Odessa High was the sole possessor of third place a year ago after losing its first two district games to Permian and Lee. People will remember this year because a duplication of last year will put the Bronchos in the state playoffs.

4. Midland High: The Bulldogs are still one step out of the playoffs, but the game with Odessa High on the same night that Lee hosts Permian, could be the biggest battle of the district this year. That game could be the basket with all the eggs.

5. Abilene Cooper: To obtain this height, the Cougars will have to beat cross town rival Abilene High on the first district night of the season. It could be a downhill ride after that.

6. Abilene High: The Eagles didn't win a district game last year, but they will beat someone this year. We just haven't figured out which team that will be.

7. San Angelo: San Angelo returns little from a bad team and the sophomore and junior varsity teams were also pathetic. That could mean a bad year for the Bobcats. Oh yes, Abilene High finds a way to improve here.

Magrane headache for Mets

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Joe Magrane, with help from two relievers, beat New York for the third time in less than six weeks as the St. Louis Cardinals ended the Mets' seven-game winning streak 1-0 Tuesday night and knocked them out of first place in the National League East.

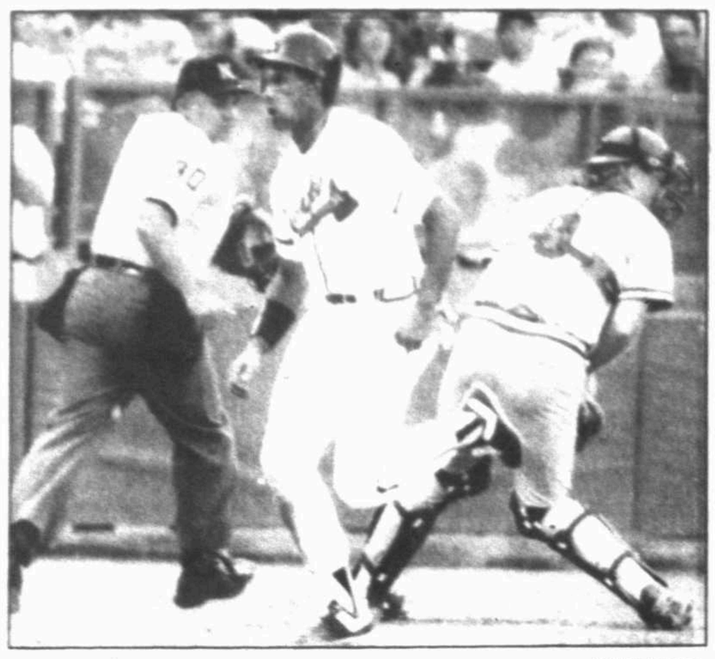
Magrane, Omar Olivares and Lee Smith combined on a five-hitter and Terry Pendleton's hit-and-run double in the fourth inning, only his second RBI since Aug. 8, scored Ozzie Smith from first with the only run.

The Mets fell one-half game behind Pittsburgh, which rallied from five runs down to beat Philadelphia 11-7. The Pirates and Mets begin a three-game series in Pittsburgh on Wednesday with a twi-night double-header.

Braves 7, Reds 4

Home runs by Ron Gant and Dave Justice on consecutive pitches in the fourth inning brought Atlanta from behind and Justice added another solo homer in the eighth as the Braves beat Cincinnati.

Tom Glavine (7-11) scattered six hits over eight innings in snapping a five-game losing streak dating back to July 17. Four of the hits and all of his three walks came in the third inning when the Reds scored four runs for a 4-1 lead.



AP Laserphoto

National

Pirates 11, Phillies 7

Bobby Bonilla broke the game open with a three-run homer and drove in five runs and Carmelo Martinez victimized his former team with a game-tying two-run shot as Pittsburgh rallied from an early five-run deficit and beat Philadelphia.

Barry Bonds also drove in two runs as the Pirates scored four times in both the fifth and sixth innings to rally from 5-0 and 7-3 deficits and win their third in a row.

With the Phillies leading 7-3 in the fifth, Jeff King singled and Andy Van Slyke drew a one-out walk ahead of Bonilla's RBI single.

Cubs 3, Expos 1

Ryne Sandberg took the National League lead with his 32nd homer — a tie-breaking two-run shot in the ninth inning off Dennis Martinez — to give the Chicago Cubs a victory over Montreal.

Martinez (10-10) had a one-hut shutout until Dwight Smith's sixth home run in the eighth inning tied the score. Gary Varsho, pinch hitting for Cubs starter Mike Bielecki, opened the ninth with a checked-swing single in front of the mound that Martinez (10-10) threw past first for an error.

Stewart outduels Clemens

Associated Press

BOSTON — Oakland's Dave Stewart outdueled Boston's Roger Clemens for the sixth consecutive time since 1986 Tuesday night as the Athletics capitalized on walks and errors for a 6-2 win over the Red Sox.

Stewart (18-10) allowed six hits in eight innings, while Clemens (20-6) had an eight-game winning streak ended as he failed to get through the sixth.

Clemens, who still leads the AL with a 1.98 earned run average, gave up four runs, two unearned, in his shortest outing since June 18, when he lasted less than two innings against Baltimore.

The two-time Cy Young Award winner struck out six, going over the 200-mark for a club record fifth time, but he walked six and committed two costly throwing errors.

As they did in ending Boston's 10-game winning streak with a 9-5 victory Monday night, the A's jumped to a quick lead, scoring twice in the first inning.

Indians 7, Rangers 5

Snyder staked Valdez to a 2-0 lead with his homer in the second inning. After the Rangers tied the game at 3-3, Baerga hit a solo homer in the fifth to put the Indians ahead to stay.

Mariners 7, Orioles 2

Ken Griffey, Sr. got three hits, including a three-run double, as the Seattle Mariners beat struggling Baltimore.

It was the first three-hit game of the season for the 40-year-old Griffey, who has an on-base percentage of .579 since joining the Mariners on Aug. 29 after spending most of the season with Cincinnati.

Seattle, which has won four of five, is 4-0 with Griffey and his son, Ken, Jr., in the lineup. Ken, Jr., also knocked in a run for the Mariners Tuesday night with a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

Baltimore lost its fifth straight game for the fifth time this season. The Orioles have lost 10 of 11 and 21 of 28.

Tigers 3, Blue Jays 1

Frank Wills, Duane Ward and John Candalaria combined on the four-hitter, giving up 10 walks and striking out 10 as Tigers beat the Blue Jays for the second consecutive day.

Chet Lemon started the seventh with an infield single and was sacrificed to second by Mark Salas. Ward walked Tony Phillips and Lou Whitaker to load the bases for Trammell, who lined a 1-0 pitch into left for a double.

White Sox 6, Royals 3

Dan Pasqua had two hits and three RBI and Lance Johnson had two hits and scored three runs to key the Chicago offense as the White Sox remained 6½ games behind the AL West-leading Oakland Athletics, who beat Boston 6-2.

Twins 7, Brewers 1

Gary Gaetti and Pedro Munoz each had four hits in an 19-hit Minnesota attack and the Twins beat Milwaukee.

Thigpen says Eckersley is best

CHICAGO (AP) — Bobby Thigpen may have the major league record for saves, but he isn't ready to be called the best reliever in baseball.

"I'm not the best," said Thigpen, who earned his record-breaking 47th save Monday night in Chicago's 4-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Thigpen concedes the honor to Oakland's Dennis Eckersley.

"I've blown seven saves and that guy's blown only two," Thigpen said. "He's walked three the last two years. To me he's the best."

Actually, Eckersley, with 41 saves, has walked six in the last two seasons. He has only two blown saves but he had six last year to go along with his 33 saves.

Thigpen had 34 saves in each of the two previous seasons and each year had nine blown saves. He is not pleased with his seven lost opportunities this season but concedes "I'm not perfect. I'm not going to make the right pitch every time."

He did Monday when he took over in the ninth after Barry Jones, his personal set-up reliever, had worked through the seventh and eighth innings.

Thigpen retired pinch batter Kevin Seitzer on a grounder, gave up a single to Brian McRae but got George Brett to hit into a game-ending double play. He was then mobbed by his teammates.

"It seemed like it," said Thigpen, who broke the record of 46 set by Dave Righetti of the New York Yankees in 1986. "It was more emotional than I thought it would be. But there are more games to go and I hope I can put a bunch more up."

Thigpen is on a pace to finish with 57 saves.

"I believe he's going to annihilate the record," said Manager Jeff Torborg.

Lady Bulldogs capture pair

Staff Report

Midland High's volleyball team upped its season record to 10-1 Tuesday by defeating both Crane and Seminole in a dual match at the MHS gymnasium.

In their first match of the day, the Lady Bulldogs downed Crane in straight games, 15-8, 15-7. MHS then jumped out in front of Seminole with 15-10 win in the first game of the second match.

MHS is back in action Friday and Saturday when it competes in the Seminole tournament, then opens District 4-5A play Tuesday at Midland Lee, at 8 p.m. in the Lee gymnasium.

From 1C

Jones bounced up and said "Well, why didn't you ask me earlier? Ladies and gentlemen I'd like to introduce you to Emmitt Smith."

Smith came up from the audience. It was a good public relations shot for the Cowboys who are 22,000 seats short of selling out their opener.

Johnson said he wasn't sure Smith would play in Sunday's NFL opener against the San Diego Chargers in Texas Stadium.

"It's possible," Johnbson said. "He was at all of our quarterback schools and mini-camps. He's very intelligent. We'll see how fast he adjusts in practice but I tend believe realistically he will be more ready to concentrate on the New York Giants in two weeks."

Majkowski, Packers come to terms

Associated Press

Don Majkowski, the Majik Man who quarterbacked Green Bay from 4-12 to 10-6 last season with his last-minute heroics, ended a six-week holdout Tuesday and reported to the Packers.

Majkowski ended his holdout on a busy day for NFL teams as they continued to adjust their rosters for Sunday's season openers.

Dave Duerson, the former All-Pro safety cut last week by Chicago, found a new home with the New York Giants and Freeman McNeil returned to the Jets.

Majkowsik, a 10th-round draft choice who emerged last year to direct the Packers to four last-minute victories, had been demanding $2.8 million a year, a salary that would put him in a class with the league's top quarterbacks. He later lowered that to $1.7 million with incentives that would bring it over $2 million.

No terms were disclosed, but the Packers and Majkowski's agents said an agreement will be signed Wednesday. Second-year man Anthony Dilweg has been scheduled to start in his place in Sunday's opener against the Rams.

The 29-year-old Duerson, a fixture with the outstanding Bears teams of the mid-'80s, signed with the Giants as a replacement for strong safety Adrian White, lost for the season with a knee injury.

The 31-year-old McNeil, risked on waivers by the Jets Monday, was reclaimed in a move typical of the day — many teams claimed back players they had waived after conforming with the often-confusing injured-reserve rules is an art in itself.

"Experience in the league has taught most people who deal in personnel that there are very few players claimed at the final cut because people have a difficult time cutting down themselves," Jets' general manager Dick Steinberg said in explaining why he had waived McNeil, the team's all-time leading ground-gainer and a probable starter against Cincinnati Sunday.

"It was a calculated risk but we figured the odds were well in our favor."

Duerson, a Pro Bowler from 1985-88, had been negotiating with San Francisco and Kansas City when the Giants called.

"It didn't take much of a selling job," said Duerson, who was convinced in part by another new Giant, former Cowboy Everson Walls. "This is just the right situation for me. It's a great organization and I like the style of defense they play. It's the style the Bears had in their glory days."

"He'd fit anybody's style," Parcells said. "I obviously thought he was an excellent player. He can fill an obvious void created by an unfortunate circumstance."

Stover, a 12th-round pick, said he injured a groin muscle kicking the final extra point in Saturday's exhibition game with Cleveland. He had been impressive enough in exhibitions to keep as insurance for oft-injured kicker Raul Allegre.

That was typical of Tuesday's action in the NFL, where players put on injured reserve after the 47-man roster is set can be brought back during the regular season and playoffs. Anyone cut before the roster is set must miss the entire season and can't practice with the team.

Atlanta, for example, claimed wide receiver Reggie Thornton on waivers from Minnesota, where he had been a fifth-round draft choice. The Falcons also re-signed wide receiver Stacey Bailey, tight end Troy Sadowski and safety Elbert Shelley while placing four players on injured reserve.

In addition to McNeil, the Jets reactivated linebackers John Galvin and Dan Murray and tight end Chris Dressel from waivers and also claimed linebacker Troy Johnson from Chicago and tight end Doug Wellsandt from Cincinnati.

The Rams added some much-needed depth to their secondary by claiming cornerback Mickey Sutton off waivers. Sutton, who played for the Rams from 1986-88, was cut by Buffalo.

Due to injuries to Jerry Gray and Darryl Henley, Sutton could be a starter. Henley, Gray and inside linebacker Larry Kelm went on injured reserve.

Tagliabue comes down on 49ers for violations

NEW YORK (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers were fined $500,000 Tuesday for violating the NFL's corporate ownership policy but were spared even harsher penalties that could have included the loss of draft choices.

Commissioner Paul Tagliabue ruled that the violations occurred when 49ers owner Edward DeBartolo Jr. made the four-time Super Bowl champions a subsidiary of the DeBartolo Corp. in December 1986 without notifying other owners and getting league permission.

It also made the 49ers part of the same corporation that owns the NHL Pittsburgh Penguins, a violation of the rule against an NFL team having an interest in another professional sport.

However, Tagliabue said he didn't believe the 49ers had purchased their Super Bowls, a charge levied by other owners who complained about large contracts given to such free agents as Matt Millen, Jim Burt, Fred Smerlas and Dave Waymer. That could have led Tagliabue to take away future draft picks.

"I find that the 49ers' transfer has not to date resulted in any identifiable competitive advantage that would warrant such a sanction," the commissioner ruled.

"In particular, I find that the 49ers' extraordinary playing-field success during the 1980s — both before and after the . . .ownership transfer — was achieved on the merits and not by reason of any violation of the league constitution or other policies."

Under the NFL constitution, the 49ers could have been fined a total of $1 million, $500,000 each for having corporate ownership and for cross-ownership with another sport. Instead, Tagliabue levied a fine of $250,000 for each.

Tagliabue also said he is continuing his review of the team's ownership and is postponing any decision on a change in the structure pending the outcome of the review.

Futures surge

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil futures prices surged Tuesday as fading hopes for a settlement to the Middle East crisis helped turn traders' attention to the prospects for tight supplies in the last three months of the year.

The October contract for light sweet crude oil rose $1.80 a 42-gallon barrel to settle at $29.12 on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The contract had risen 55 cents on Friday, the last trading day before the Labor Day holiday.

The posted price for The Permian Corp., Texaco, Inc. and Marathon Oil rose $1.75 to reach $27.50 per barrel, up from Friday's $25.75 posted price.

Higher oil prices, which are a harbinger of higher inflation, sent bond prices lower. In other markets, stock prices were mixed with the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials falling less than a point. In currency dealings, the dollar slumped.

Even in the absence of significant developments in the Persian Gulf, analysts had expected energy futures prices to spike higher following a sharp advance in London on Monday.

Traders turned their attention to the basic "supply and demand balances," said oil analyst Jim Murchie of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. "Things are quiet enough now for people to go back and do the basic work."

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar was mixed in domestic trading after rising overseas Tuesday, but analysts were at a loss to explain the U.S. currency's strength.

Gold prices were also mixed, rising in New York and dropping in Europe and Asia.

The dollar was up in early trading in New York, following the trend sent on foreign markets, but then lost some ground. Dealers said they had no explanation for the dollar's healthier tone, and shied away from predicting what course the U.S. currency would take.

The British pound was down against the dollar when compared with late Friday's price, falling to $1.8810 from $1.8905. In London, sterling rose to $1.8750 from $1.8730 late Monday.

On the Commodity Exchange in New York, a troy ounce of gold rose $1.40 to $383.70. Republic National Bank later quoted a bid of $384.60, up $1.85.

Oil consumption has Detroit in jitters

■ Detroit is nervous as they await to see how Congress may react to a shortage of oil.

N.Y. Times News Service

Auto executives are growing apprehensive that the renewed interest in Washington in reducing oil consumption will lead to stricter federal regulations on the fuel efficiency of automobiles.

If this happens, they warn, automakers might have to cancel production of larger and more powerful cars, which have made a comeback in the 80s.

Some of the industry's current anxieties stem from a proposal gathering new momentum in the Senate that would force each automaker's domestic car fleet to average 40 miles a gallon by the late 1990s. The corporate average fuel economy standard is now 27.5 miles a gallon.

Rising oil prices make passage of stricter fuel-economy standard more likely, although not inevitable, according to automakers. The mere discussion of the idea worries them. For several years, American auto companies have relied heavily on the fat profit margins that come from full-size car sales to buttress their dwindling earnings.

"Any time people get emotional, you can get a knee-jerk reaction that isn't thought through," said Joel Pitcoff, a sales and marketing analyst for Ford Motor Co.

The bill proposes a gradual percentage increase in each company's current fuel-mileage average. Since Japanese automakers already are more fuel efficient than American companies, raising their fuel-economy levels by the same percentage as those of the American companies would force them to attain a higher standard.

The Persian Gulf crisis has also rekindled a longstanding public debate over who should bear the responsibility for reducing imports of oil.

Conservation and environmental groups supporting the Senate bill, which is sponsored by Richard H. Bryan, D-Nev., favor tightening efficiency standards for cars, which they believe will force automakers to develop various energy-saving technologies.

Aside from reducing dependency on foreign oil, fuel conservation was being urged by these groups, even before the Iraq crisis, as a way to alleviate global warming.

Neighbors squawk over chicken plant

DALLAS (AP) — East Texas chicken czar Lonnie "Bo" Pilgrim may have named his company Pilgrim's Pride, but some Mount Pleasant residents say Pilgrim has little to be proud about where pollution is concerned.

Pilgrim wants permission to increase the wastewater output at his Mount Pleasant processing plants from 2 million gallons a day to 3 million. Neighbors say the area smells bad enough.

"This dude, he hasn't done anything but cause us problems," said Kenneth Jackson, who keeps cattle on a 300-acre ranch about four miles south of the Mount Pleasant complex.

Tankersley and Cypress creeks join on Jackson's property, and he said the creeks have been "tremendously black" at times with "a terrible scent."

Another nearby resident, Evelyn Burke, said buzzards sometimes converge on her property when chicken entrails and feathers are discarded outdoors.

"We have to go out and guard our cows with a shotgun while they're calving," she said.

Four people spoke out against the request at a Texas Water Commission hearing last Thursday. They said others are upset but afraid to come forward.

"There's been foam in the (Tankersley) creek and, at times, red water that looked like blood," said Lola Barrett, who has lived about 1½ miles from the plants since 1964.

"People in town will tell you they don't like it, but they have relatives ... working for (Pilgrim) and they don't want to jeopardize their jobs," Ms. Barrett told the Dallas Times Herald.

Last week, Pilgrim acknowledged that his plants have had problems in the past — especially with excessive pollutants in their wastewater — but said he has spent "millions of dollars (to) comply with environmental laws" and believes the problems have been curbed.

"You're always going to have, from now until we see Jesus, these complaints," Pilgrim told the Times Herald from his Pittsburg headquarters in East Texas. "In some cases its something we may be behind on, but in most cases its just overreaction."

Vernon Row, vice president of engineering for Pilgrim's Pride, said the company has spent about $5 million in the past three years to expand and upgrade its Mount Pleasant wastewater treatment plant.

Earlier this year, Pilgrim's Pride was fined $55,000 by the water commission and $50,000 by the Environmental Protection Agency for violating discharge limits for certain contaminants in the treated flow that enters Tankersley and Cypress creeks.

Four years ago, the Texas attorney general's office, acting on behalf of the Texas Air Control Board, slapped Pilgrim's Pride with a $52,000 civil penalty for several "nuisance" odor violations, said board spokesman Steve Davis.

Sears business

The Sears Merchandise Group has introduced the IBM PS/1 at about 800 stores and business centers around the country. Sears says the system is designed to serve a variety of needs. The system is powerful enough to run most business software, but simple enough for the entire family, claims Sears. The company expects the home computer market to double in the next five years as a result of power and simple systems. The IBM PS/1 offers one-button start, internal modem and built-in software and on-line systems.

Productivity shows improvement

■ For the first time in a year productivity of American workers as inflation fears set in.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The productivity of American workers improved for the first time in more than a year, climbing in the second quarter at an annual rate of 1.5 percent, the government said Tuesday.

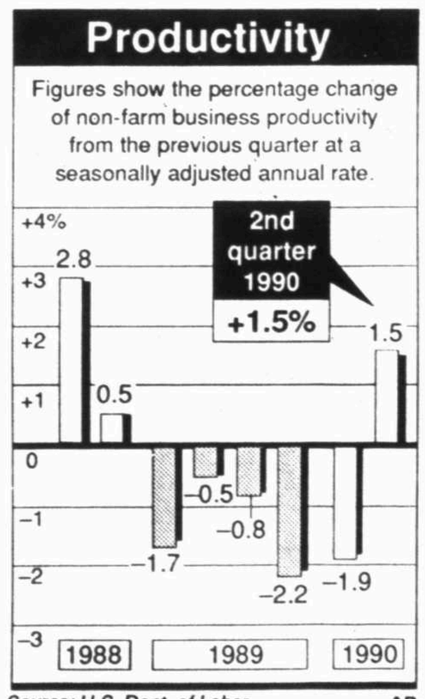
However, analysts said the rebound was still well below the level needed to significantly boost Americans' living standard.

In addition, figures showing steep labor cost increases heightened analysts' concerns that the nation's inflation problems are worsening, especially in light of the Middle East oil crisis that threatens to push inflation higher.

"It exacerbates the situation, no question about it," said Elliott Platt of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp.

"Even before the Iraqi situation, the U.S. economy was facing an entrenched, underlying labor cost inflation of between 4 and 5 percent. That doesn't allow for any profits," added Allen Sinai, chief economist at the Boston Co.

The 1.5 percent rise in non-farm productivity — defined as output per hour of work — was the first increase since productivity climbed 0.5 percent in the final three months of 1988, the Labor Department said.



The rebound was a departure from productivity's poor performance in recent months. Productivity declined 0.3 percent last year, the worst showing since output fell 0.9 percent during the 1981-82 recession. It had plunged 1.9 percent during the first quarter of this year, the government said.

During the April-June period this year, there was no increase in the number of hours worked. Sinai called that a sign that employers weren't hiring new workers or letting employees work more hours.

"The productivity increase is being eked out by squeezing down on labor," Sinai said. "It still shows an anemic performance for U.S. productivity growth. What businesses are doing in light of ... an anticipated recession is to cut back on jobs and hours worked."

Hourly labor costs, a major inflation measure for businesses, shot up at an annual rate of 5.8 percent for the second quarter of 1990, far above the 3 percent rise for all of 1989.

Meanwhile, unit labor costs, a key gauge of future price inflation, rose 4.3 percent for the second quarter, compared with a 3.3 percent rise during all of 1989.

ANALYSIS

Analysts said the market was concerned about the inflationary effect of higher oil prices. The October contract for crude was up $1.63 to $28.95 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange at 2 p.m. EDT.

Investors also were troubled by weakness in overseas stock markets and signs that the U.S. economy is continuing to slow.

In one such sign, the National Association of Purchasing Management said today its purchasing managers index declined in August for the second consecutive month, to 47.0 percent from 47.4 percent in July. A reading below 50 indicates the manufacturing sector of the economy generally is declining.

Continuing pessimism over the Middle East sent prices plummeting on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. The Nikkei Stock Average, which fell 557.94 points Monday, shed 512.79 more points, or 2.20 percent, closing at 24,907.64.

Prices also closed lower on the London Stock Exchange, but the key index, the Financial Times Stock Exchange 100-share index, fell only 0.86 percent.

Among most-active blue chip issues on the NYSE, Boeing fell ⅛ to 48⅛, General Electric slipped 1⅜ to 60⅝, Philip Morris fell ¼ to 44⅞ and IBM was down ⅛ at 101¾.

DETROIT: Gets oil jitters

(From 5C)

They point out that the current rules on fuel economy have not forced anyone to do without big or powerful cars, as some automakers had predicted when the corporate average fuel economy standard was developed after the energy crisis in the early 1970s.

Last week, Energy Secretary James D. Watkins unveiled a "short-term strategy" for stabilizing oil markets by raising domestic production and encouraging conservation. He suggested that the government should not bog down stabilization efforts by trying to revise the fuel-economy standard and other issues that are bound to involve lengthy debates.

For their part, automakers contend that further big gains in energy efficiency are not possible without limiting the selection of cars that Americans have grown accustomed to driving.

Yet, as long as gasoline remains relatively cheap and readily available, they argue, drivers will not buy highly efficient vehicles in great number. Indeed, fuel is now so cheap on a historical basis, when adjusted for inflation, that even the recent run-up in prices is not financially significant for most drivers, they say.

"Fuel prices have gone up only 15 to 20 cents a gallon, and the principal effect of that on car buying is short-term," said George Eads, chief economist for General Motors Corp.

But analysts agree that much higher prices or a fuel shortage would sharply reduce sales of big cars.

Automakers argue that if the nation wants to be less reliant on foreign oil, lawmakers should pass some type of energy tax to raise the price of fuel, which would in turn spur consumer demand for fuel-efficient vehicles.

The industry has no consensus on precisely what type of regulation it wants, but an energy tax is not likely to win wide support in Washington.

Chrysler Corp. and Ford support a tax specifically on gasoline, although Ford stipulates that the proceeds should be used to reduce the federal budget deficit.

WORKER: Productivity up

he or she works, is vital to increasing Americans' standard of living without inflation, many economists believe.

Tuesday's report provided revised figures on the second quarter of 1990. The 1.5 percent revised increase was slightly below the 1.6 percent increase first reported by the Labor Department.

In the manufacturing sector, productivity increased 4 percent, or double the 2 percent rise for all of 1989, Tuesday's report said. Unit labor costs in that sector rose 2.2 percent, the same as the 2.2 percent increase during all of last year.

Total business productivity, including farming, rose 1.7 percent for the second quarter, compared with a 0.2 percent drop for all of 1989.

Since 1982, productivity growth has averaged 1.4 percent a year, a slight improvement over the 1.2 percent average growth rate in the 1970s but far below the 3.3 percent rate of increase posted in the two decades after World War II.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Capital losses can be carried to next year

By Bill Doyle

Q. In August 1986, I purchased 500 shares of stock at a total cost, including brokerage commission, of $14,907.17. This past April 16, I sold those 500 shares for $9,100.37, after commission. So my loss was $5,806.80.

I understand I can only claim up to a $3,000 loss on my income tax return in any one year. If I take a $3,000 loss on my 1990 return, can I carry the remaining $2,806.80 of the loss over to my 1991 return?

A. Sure. If you have no other capital losses this year or next, taking that carryover $2,806.80 loss on your 1991 return will account for your entire 1990 capital loss.

Doyle

Actually, the $3,000 per year limitation you mention applies only to using capital losses — on the sale of stocks and other capital assets — to offset ordinary income, such as salary, interest and dividends, thereby reducing your tax bill.

If you have capital gains from the sale of capital assets and/or capital gains distributions from mutual funds and other investment companies, you are required to use your capital losses to offset those items first. Then, any excess capital loss is used to offset ordinary income to the tune of $3,000 per year.

Q. I bought 900 shares of electric utility company common stock in 1980 for $11,925.00. In 1981, '83 and '84, the Internal Revenue Service allowed the company to treat a percentage of its dividends as a non-taxable "return of capital." The total return of capital I received was $4,172.40.

I am in the 15 percent federal income tax bracket. The market value of the 900 shares now is $20,700. If I sell at that price, will I finally have to pay tax on the return of capital I previously received?

A. Sort of. The return of capital decreased your "basis" — cost for tax purposes — thereby increasing the profit you will realize when you sell. The greater your profit, the larger the tax you must pay.

Your original basis on those 900 shares was the $11,925 you paid for them. The $4,172.40 return of capital lowered your basis to $7,752.60. If you sell for $20,700, you will have a capital gain of $12,947.40 — the difference between your basis and the proceeds from the sale. The sale proceeds number is the net amount you receive, after brokerage commission and any other selling costs.

A close to $13,000 capital gain might lift you out of the 15 percent and into the 28 percent federal income tax bracket. If that's the case, you probably could save tax dollars by selling some of those shares this year and the rest in 1991.

Q. You sometimes mention the three federal income tax brackets of 15, 28 and 33 percent. Do those brackets change every year? And what are the brackets for 1990?

A. The percentage tax bites do not change, but the amounts of taxable income to which the tax rates are applied have been adjusted upward annually since 1987. That results from a provision in the Tax Reform Act of 1986, aimed at preventing inflation from automatically increasing income tax.

Married couples filing joint returns and surviving spouses pay 15 percent tax on their first $32,450 of taxable income, 28 percent on the next $45,950 and 33 percent on taxable income between $78,400 and $162,770. Income above that is taxed at 28 percent.

Unmarried individuals pay 15 percent on the first $19,450 of taxable income, 28 percent on the next $27,600 and 33 percent on taxable income between $47,050 and $97,620. Higher income is taxed at 28 percent.

Heads of households pay 15 percent on the first $26,050 of taxable income, 28 percent on the next $41,150 and 33 percent on taxable income between $67,200 and $134,930. Higher income is taxed at 28 percent.

And married individuals filing separate returns pay 15 percent on the first $16,225 of taxable income, 28 percent on the next $22,975 and 33 percent on taxable income between $300 and $123,570. Higher income is taxed at 28 percent.

New cookbook features fudge

By Florence Fabricant
N.Y. Times News Service

AMBLER, Pa. — Fudge may be what you do intentionally on your tax return, but fudge, the candy, began as a mistake: ruined caramel.

It happened in someone's kitchen in Maryland, or maybe in Michigan, around 100 years ago. The confection was too good to throw away and good enough, in fact, to reproduce.

Americans have enjoyed fudge and struggled to make it ever since. Those anxious moments as you stir, hoping the mixture of sugar, liquid and flavorings will thicken or "candy" properly and not remain soupy, are shared by fudge makers of all ages. Fudge, spawned of failure, is still stalked by it.

Failure is so much a part of fudge making that in a new book, "Oh Fudge!" by Lee Edwards Benning (Henry Holt, $19.95), there is an entire chapter on fudge failures and how to fix them.

The book covers the subject of fudge about as thoroughly as a doctoral thesis would, with recipes instead of footnotes.

It gives instructions for making hundreds of fudges and related candies like divinity, calling for ingredients that include not just the typical chocolate or nuts but licorice, bananas and goat's milk.

It is likely to be the bible for anyone determined to make a good batch of fudge.

MRS. BENNING, who lives in this town outside of Philadelphia and has also written a novel and other nonfiction, said she never particularly cared about making fudge.

"I made it once in college, but it was the men in my family, my father and then my husband, Arthur, who made the fudge," she said as she scored a fresh five-pound batch of delicious chocolate-walnut-vanilla chip slab fudge in her kitchen.

"I became involved in this project because I was puzzled by a recipe Arthur was trying for buttermilk fudge," she said. "It was 11 o'clock at night and the recipe said to cook the mixture for 45 minutes. I wondered why 45 minutes. The next thing I knew I was researching fudge in every cookbook I owned and finding recipes, but very little in the way of explanation for doing things one way or another. Arthur suggested I write a book."

She spent six months exploring fudge both technically and historically. Cooking the buttermilk fudge for 45 minutes made it seductively creamy, she discovered, but it was not absolutely essential to its success. That recipe and a shorter version are in her book.

Determining the origin of fudge was not as easy. It was evident that unlike caramel, nougat, fondant, marzipan, pastillage and toffee, fudge was strictly American, and a relative newcomer to the candy lexicon.

In trying to find the first recipe for something called fudge, Mrs. Benning consulted cookbooks in the Library of Congress, in the Schlesinger Library at Radcliffe College, at the Winterthur Museum in Delaware and in dozens of other archives.

THE FIRST mention she found was in a letter that placed fudge's fortuitous creation in Baltimore in 1886 by somebody identified only as a cousin of a schoolmate of Emelyn B. Hartridge, Vassar College, class of 1892.

In the letter, Miss Hartridge described how she brought the recipe to Poughkeepsie, N.Y. In 1888, she reported, she made 30 pounds of it in a dormitory room over a spirit lamp for the senior auction.

Matthew Vassar may have been a brewer, but the college he founded put fudge on the map. From Vassar, the pastime of fudge making, and especially of fudge eating, spread to Smith College, where it was made with molasses, and Wellesley College, where marshmallow was added.

From Eastern women's colleges, where fudge was often responsible for those extra pounds called the Freshman 15, fudge gradually made its way to the Midwest.

By the turn of the century, Philip Murdick was selling slab fudge at his candy shop on Mackinac Island in northern Michigan, a place that might be called the fudge capital of the world. Today there are about a dozen fudge shops on the island.

There are some who credit this region with inventing fudge. Jim Garrahy, who started in the fudge business in Michigan in 1964 and now owns 28 Fudge Kitchen shops around the United States and in England, contends that his recipe is from a Catholic girls' school in northern Michigan.

HE SAID it was mentioned in a letter dating from 1830 found in an archive in England.

"I went round and round on that one," Mrs. Benning said, "and I couldn't find a shred of documentation for it." She may question the quality of Garrahy's scholarship, but not his fudge.

None of it failed. Garrahy said it takes the best part of a year to train a fudge maker. "And some people can never get it," he said.

Surprising fudge cake recipe made from boxed mix

Associated Press

COFFEE-ORANGE FUDGE CAKE

1 package 2-layer-size devil's food or German chocolate cake mix
1 8-ounce carton dairy sour cream
½ cup cooking oil
4 eggs
1 4-serving-size package instant chocolate fudge pudding mix
¼ cup coffee liqueur
2 tablespoons finely shredded orange peel
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 12-ounce package semisweet chocolate pieces
Powdered sugar

Grease and flour a 10-inch fluted tube pan. In large mixer bowl combine cake mix, sour cream, oil, water, eggs, pudding mix, liqueur, orange peel and cinnamon. Beat with an electric mixer on low speed until blended, scraping sides of bowl constantly. Beat on medium speed for 4 minutes. Stir in chocolate pieces. Pour into prepared pan. Bake in a 350-degree F oven for 50 to 60 minutes or until a toothpick inserted near the center comes out clean. Cool on wire rack for 10 minutes. Remove from pan and cool on rack. Sprinkle with powdered sugar, if desired. Makes 12 to 16 servings.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Will you please do me a big favor and print the following message in your column:

"If you see someone in a shopping mall — or on the street — and this person has a child on the other end of a leash, please keep your mouth shut!"

Van Buren

I am the mother of two very active boys. They are 13 months apart; the oldest is 4½. I have nobody to leave them with, so when I go shopping, I take them with me, and yes, I put them in harnesses for their own safety and my peace of mind.

Every time I take the kids out in public with their harnesses on, I get dirty looks and nasty comments from strangers who say, "Those ain't dogs, lady — they's children!" Maybe if you put this in your column, people will realize that I keep my kids on a leash because I love them — not because I'm mean. — A LOVING MOM IN DURHAM, N.C.

DEAR MOM: Here's your letter. Don't worry about dirty looks or nasty comments. I wonder how many people reading this wish they had had their kiddies on a leash when they broke away from them and ran into the street in the middle of traffic.

DEAR ABBY: We just received an invitation to the wedding of a friend's daughter. It was addressed to "Tom and Mary Jones." Included was a response card to fill in: "Number of People Attending?"

Would it be proper to write in "3" to include our grown daughter who lives at home part time due to a job situation? I think she will be very disappointed if we don't include her.

How should this be handled? Please answer soon. — MRS. JONES

DEAR MRS. JONES: It would be improper to include your daughter — or to write "3" on your response card, since only you and your husband were invited.

And I wish response cards would not ask the number of people attending. It is often mistaken for an invitation to include children or others who were not expressly invited.

Bottom line: Only those whose names are on the envelope are invited, so do not put anyone on the spot by phoning to ask, "Are the children included?"

DEAR ABBY: I am going crazy trying to figure something out. Is it possible to have an aunt who is younger than you are? And if it is possible, please explain how it can be. Thank you. — GOING CRAZY

DEAR GOING: It's possible, and here's how:

An aunt is the sister of your mother or father. Right? Let us say that when you were 5 years old, your father's mother (who is your grandmother) gave birth to a baby girl whom she named "Paula." Well, because Paula is your father's sister, even though she is 5 years younger than you, she is your aunt. Got it?

People are eating them up! For Abby's favorite recipes, send a long business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Always grind your beans just prior to brewing, says J. Martinez & Co. of Atlanta, and always use the correct grind for your particular brewing method. Use a coarse grind for French Press, medium grind for drip coffee makers and fine grind for espresso or Turkish coffee.

Use ¼ ounce of coffee per 6-ounce cup of water — plus one for the pot. However, you can adjust this ratio to your own tastes. Brew only what you plan to drink immediately. Never boil or reheat coffee.

Columbia starts new countdown

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA enjoyed a calm, uneventful countdown Tuesday as the space agency moved closer to its third attempt to send Columbia on an astronomy mission and its first shuttle flight in months.

Columbia is scheduled to lift off at 1:20 a.m. Thursday with seven astronauts and the $150 million Astro observatory.

"Everybody's very comfortable. The firing room is very calm," said test director Al Sofge. "We're just proceeding down through the count, business as usual, doing what we do best, no problems."

NASA's first attempt to launch Columbia with Astro ended six hours before the scheduled May 30 liftoff when hydrogen leaked during fueling. The next countdown was halted Thursday after engineers lost contact with one of four telescopes inside Columbia's cargo bay.

The communications problem with the X-ray telescope was corrected Sunday, allowing NASA to begin counting down once again.

Penny pulls clothes

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A line of boys' clothes that carry an anti-hunting message is being yanked from the shelves at J.C. Penney Co. Inc.'s 1,330 stores, the company said.

Duncan Muir, public relations manager for the Dallas-based retailer, said it took the step after complaints about the clothes nationwide.

"It is our company policy not to take a position one way or the other on these sorts of issues. This is taking a position and an anti-position," he said.

"Obviously, this was pointed out to us and frankly we feel we've made a mistake. All we can do is just withdraw it from the stores," he said.

Michigan United Conservation Clubs, a sportsmen's group, was among those criticizing Penney last week for carrying the clothing.

Blood heating opposed

ATLANTA (AP) — A controversial AIDS treatment that involves heating patients' blood offers "no benefits" and shouldn't be repeated, federal investigators said Tuesday.

A team of researchers from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases concluded that two patients who submitted to hyperthermia were neither cured nor significantly helped.

"Hyperthermia, as applied in these two cases, appears to have offered no clinical, immunologic or virologic benefits to these two patients," according to a summary of the team's findings, released by the institute.

There does not "appear any support for further human experimentation in this area at this time," the summary concluded. It didn't say whether the technique, tried by two Atlanta physicians, should be tested on animals.

Dr. Kenneth Alonso, one of the physicians who used the technique, characterized the team's findings as a "report that is replete with errors." The report was an attempt to try to discredit his findings, Alonso said in a letter sent to Dr. Lawrence Deyton, who headed the government investigation. "Apparently any work which does not fit your thesis is ignored," Alonso wrote in the letter, which he released to The Associated Press Tuesday.

Man survives bad day

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — In a chain of misfortune, a man was shot by a would-be robber and his car was wrecked as a stranger rushed the bleeding victim to a hospital, authorities say.

Anthony Christensen, 24, of Thousand Oaks, Calif., was listed in good condition in a San Fernando Valley hospital with a gunshot wound in his side. He suffered a two-inch bruise on his forehead in the traffic collision, Los Angeles police said.

The good Samaritan was driving Christensen's car when it collided with a tractor-trailer rig and overturned about 3:05 a.m. Tuesday on Sepulveda Boulevard at the 118 Freeway in suburban Mission Hills, said Officer Joseph Gomez of the Los Angeles Police Department.

Fairchild gets stay

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — An appeals court panel Tuesday postponed the execution of an illiterate North Little Rock man 30 hours before he was scheduled to die. The stay gives defense attorneys time to develop evidence that the man's confession was coerced.

Barry Lee Fairchild, 36, was to die at 9 p.m. Wednesday for the abduction, rape and murder of Little Rock Air Force Base nurse Marjorie "Greta" Mason, 22, originally of Texas.

Fairchild's attorneys told a three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Tuesday that their client was one of six black suspects beaten by then-Sheriff Tommy Robinson and his Pulaski County deputies. The men were urged to confess to the 1983 rape and murder Ms. Mason, the attorneys said.

The attorneys also contend that someone other than Fairchild confessed to the murder of Ms. Mason. They said police later dropped the man as a suspect because he provided few details about the crime.

Fairchild, who defense attorneys say is mildly retarded, was easy prey for police, his attorneys told the court Tuesday. He confessed twice, but later said the statements were coerced.

Possible debris found

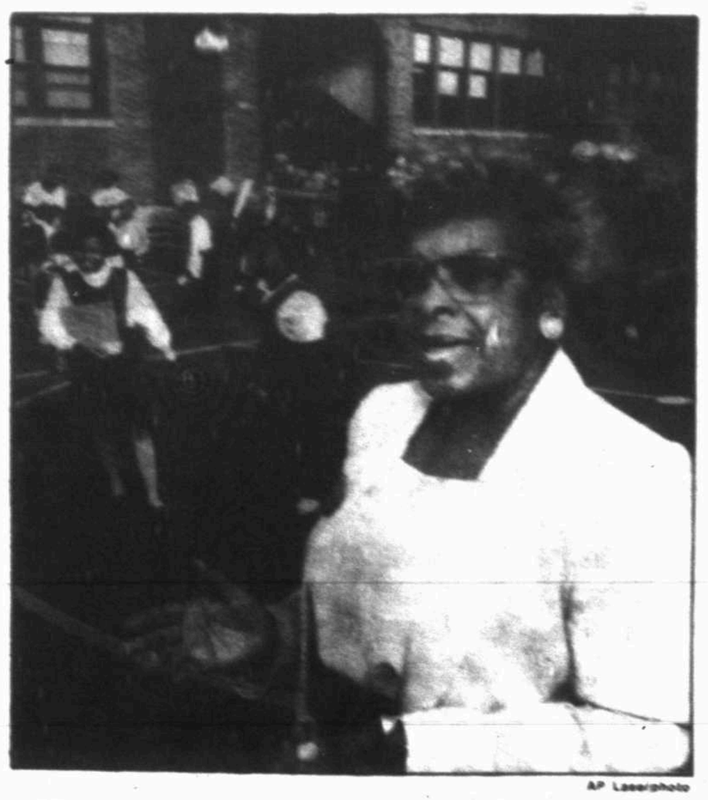
HONOLULU (AP) — A Navy submarine will investigate and possibly retrieve what searchers believe is debris from a United Airlines jet on the ocean floor near here, the military said Tuesday.

Nine people died when a cargo door and a large chunk of fuselage tore away from the Boeing 747 shortly after takeoff from Honolulu International Airport last year.

In July, an unmanned submersible using sonar located metallic objects 14,000 down and 90 miles south of Honolulu, including a large piece roughly the size of the 10-by-10-foot cargo door.

After reviewing information on the debris field, the National Transportation Safety Board decided to call for further investigation, said Lt. Cmdr. Sandy Stairs, a spokeswoman for the Navy's Pacific Command.

State money sends Milwaukee students to private schools



AP Laserphoto

Wisconsin State Representative Annette "Polly" Williams, talks about an experimental program she has sponsored, the School Choice Program, which allows poor Milwaukee students to attend a private school with funds provided by the state. Williams greeted some of the new students in the program at Urban Day School in Milwaukee when classes began Tuesday morning.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — When buses rolled up Tuesday at schools throughout the city for the start of another academic year, nearly 400 students embarked on a new journey: to private schools with taxpayers' help.

The experimental Milwaukee Parental Choice Program, eventually expected to help send 1,000 poor Milwaukee students to non-sectarian private schools, survived two court challenges led by the state's chief education official.

The debut drew raves from parents whose children qualified, including single mother Yvette Harris, who attended a private school as a child but could not afford the same for her three children.

"For my 12-year-old to go to a private school, it's really a privilege for us. They were always praised for a quality education. I couldn't afford the tuition at all," said Ms. Harris.

She enrolled her eldest, Jamal, in seventh grade at Juanita Virgil Academy and Josh Jr., 4, and Angelica, 3, in preschool under the program, which pays up to $2,500 for each child's tuition.

The state vouchers completely covered the tuitions, said Ms. Harris, who attended a parochial elementary school in Chicago.

The program's funding is deducted from the operating budget of the Milwaukee Public Schools system, which has about 98,200 students.

Families not more than 75 percent above the federal poverty level, which allows a $12,000 annual income for a family of four, are eligible. Parents receive state vouchers that are redeemed by the schools.

The plan's chief sponsor, state Rep. Polly Williams, greeted pupils at Urban Day elementary school, where more than 100 new students enrolled with the help of the state. The school has a total enrollment of 500.

Ms. Williams, a Democrat, said the program gives hope to poor students who suffered in crowded public schools that reinforce the cycle of poverty.

"These kids are getting something out of these schools they can't get in the public school system. Every child who walks through those doors is expected to achieve. It's going to make a difference in the lives of a lot of children," she said.

Among the school's new students was Antonio Johnson, an eighth-grader. "I'm going to try to do the best I can do," he said.

The Legislature authorized $2.5 million for the program — enough for 1,000 students — but only 390 were registered in private schools by Tuesday. The eight participating private schools said they were forced to reject hundreds of students because of limited classroom space and teaching staff.

Urban Day administrator Zakiya Courtney said the school lost students in recent years because of rising tuition, which now costs $3,300 a year.

"Private school has basically been afforded to those who can afford it. If a low-income parent couldn't make the sacrifice, they couldn't do it. We advocated for this program," she said.

Although the program was praised by Gov. Tommy G. Thompson and the Bush administration, State Schools Superintendent Herbert J. Grover opposed it, saying it undermined public schools.
