Hostages safe; Hijacked plane explodes

Associated Press

Iranian Foreign Ministry officials in Tehran reported an explosion aboard a hijacked Air France jetliner today, but said all its passengers were safe.Air France said the three hijackers were with Iranian authorities.

The ministry officials, reached by The Associated Press by telephone from Beirut, Lebanon, said the people from the Boeing 737 were on the runway near the plane. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity.

"All the passengers, our passengers and the crew are safe," said Maurice Bouhog, a spokesman for Air France in Paris. "The hijackers are with the Iranian authorities."

One Iranian official said no one, hostages or hijackers, had been injured. He said it was not clear what caused the explosion, but that it apparently took place after everyone left the plane.

Air France said a total of 14 passengers — including a 10-year-old American boy — had been released in Tehran by the hijackers in addition to a steward who escaped in Cyprus. That left 46 passengers and crew — all men — on the airport runway in Tehran.

The hijackers of an Air France jetliner earlier rigged the aircraft with explosives and said they would blow up the plane and their hostages if France did not meet their demands, an airport official told The Associated Press.

The official, who had been reached by telephone from Beirut, reported, "They've given them (French officials) until 4:30 p.m. (Tehran time, 9 a.m. EDT)." He spoke on condition of anonymity.

It was the second deadline set by the hijackers. They said earlier they would kill a French hostage every hour after 9 a.m. local time if the French did not release five men from their prisons. That deadline passed with no one reported harmed.

The hostages aboard the airliner reportedly included French, U.S., Japanese, Indian, Swiss and Finnish passengers.

Among 14 passengers freed by the hijackers in Tehran was a 10-year-old American boy, Air France said. The airline refused to identify him, and would not say if his parents were aboard the plane.

Air France said 12 women, a girl and the boy were released from the plane at Tehran today and that a steward had escaped earlier in Cyprus. With 58 passengers and six crew reported on the aircraft originally, that would leave the three hijackers and 46 hostages.

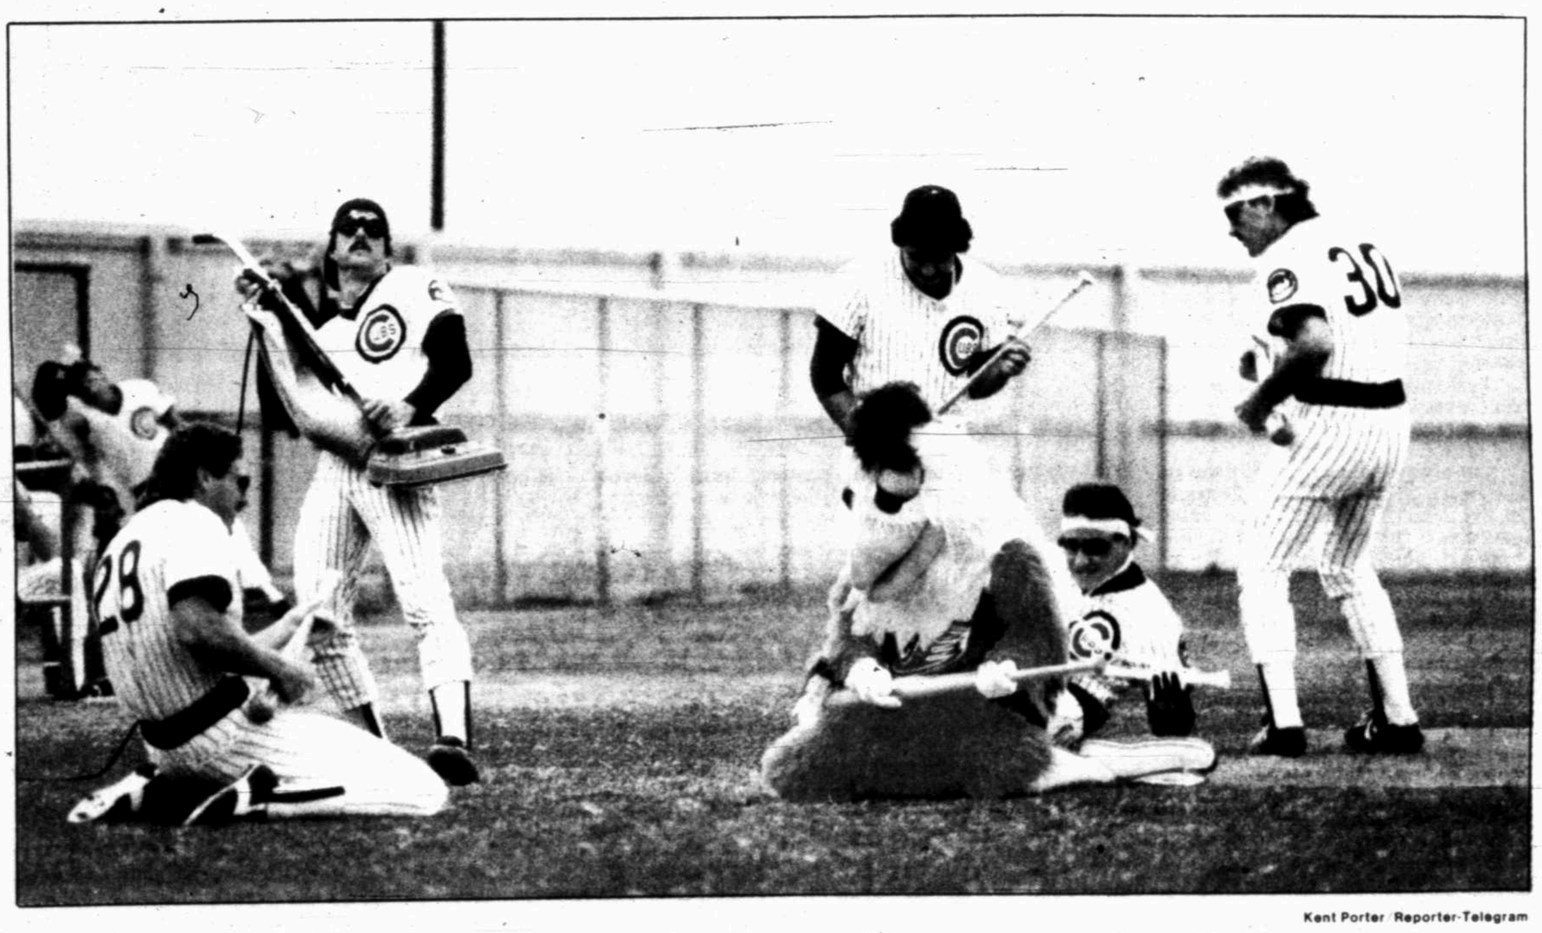

Cypriot authorities said the hijackers carried knives and perhaps explosives. The plane landed in Geneva, Switzerland, Beirut and Lanarca, Cyprus on the way to Tehran.

Tehran Radio reported the French pilot of the Boeing 737, Jean Nicol, had told Iranian officials by radio that the Arabic-speaking hijackers had set explosives throughout "most parts of the aircraft" and were "ready to blow it up."

The radio, in a broadcast monitored in London, said the hijackers took one passenger outside the aircraft and indicated they would execute him. The radio said the hijackers relented and returned the hostage to the plane after Iranian officials agreed to read their demands over the radio.

The Islamic Republic News Agency quoted a French Embassy official in Tehran as saying "it was not possible" for the government to free the prisoners on short notice.

The Iranian news agency said the French charge d'affaires in Tehran, Jean Perrin, was summoned to the Iranian Foreign Ministry and told of the hijackers' demands. With the reported French rejection of the demands, Iran "will not accept any responsibility...," IRNA said.

General testifies on El Salvador

Associated Press

■ Guatemala's new Constituent Assembly installed — Page 2A

WASHINGTON — The top U.S. general in Central America, opposing use of American combat troops in El Salvador, says the Salvadoran army should be able to defeat leftist guerrillas in two years if given enough aid.

But Army Gen. Paul F. Gorman, head of the U.S. Southern Command in Panama, said Wednesday that the army's recent performance has been a "mixed picture" with "some tactical debacles, some real triumphs."

Gorman told a House panel that he would like to boost the number of U.S. non-combat military advisers in El Salvador from 55 to 125. And he provided estimates of the number of American citizens who would be "potential evacuees" if the military crisis in Central America worsened.

In another development, the Democrat-controlled House passed a $5.4 billion emergency money bill that contains no new military aid for El Salvador, in defiance of President Reagan's request for $117 million in additional assistance for the Salvadoran army.

The bill passed 304-116, but there was no direct vote on the Salvadoran aid issue. An attempt by Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., to restore the money was ruled out of order because the amount exceeded the budget. Reagan's aid request is given a better chance in the Republican-dominated Senate.

Rep. Clarence D. Long, D-Md., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, said that to provide the funds with two months remaining in the current fiscal year "would be thrusting money down their throats."

The United States has provided El Salvador with $126 million in military aid this year, including $62 million in emergency assistance approved only a month ago.

While opposing the additional aid this year, Long, a leading critic of Reagan's Central America policy, has said he will support another $126 million in Salvadoran military aid in fiscal 1985, which starts Oct. 1. That is only about $6 million less than Reagan has requested.

Gorman, an architect of the expanding U.S. role in Central America, said the Salvadoran army has made gains against the leftist guerrillas, but continues to be plagued with ineffective leadership and corruption.

In testimony before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Latin America, the general opposed use of U.S. troops, saying they could spark anti-American nationalism in the region.

Texas Democrats, anti-abortionists greet Mondale

By SHARON HERBAUGH
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — Supporters of Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro exchanged shouts and insults with anti-abortion demonstrators when the Democratic presidential and vice presidential candidates stopped in Houston on the second leg of a two-day campaign tour in the Lone Star State.

About 500 people, many waving Texas and U.S. flags and hoisting placards that said, "Texas is Mondale-Ferror Country," waited for the candidates more than two hours Wednesday night at a private landing area at Hobby Airport.

About a fourth of the group represented pro-life groups. Many carried signs that read: "Shame On You, Geraldine!" "Ferraro & Fritz Kill Babies" and "This Catholic Mother Doesn't Believe In Abortion."

Ms. Ferraro, a Roman Catholic, has come under criticism repeatedly from anti-abortionists who disapprove of her pro-choice stance as a congresswoman from New York.

Mondale and Ms. Ferraro, who opened their first campaign swing through the South in Jackson, Miss., were scheduled answer questions from students at Houston Community College this morning before flying to San Antonio.

As the plane landed Wednesday night and the candidates emerged, demonstrators chanted "Life, Yes. Abortion, No." Protesters tried repeatedly to disrupt the candidates' speeches and Mondale-Ferraro supporters shouted at them for quiet.

Ms. Ferraro asked the crowd, "Tonight, you've given me yellow roses. On Nov. 6, will you give me the state of Texas?" Most of the crowd applauded, but pro-lifers shouted "No."

In one incident, several anti-Mondale demonstraters held up a sign saying, "Mondale and Ferraro kidnappers," in reference to the group's contention that Mondale friends and supporters were responsible for the kidnapping of the wife of a South American who was active in fighting drug smuggling.

A half-dozen police officers moved in to break up a confrontation between shouting and cursing Mondale supporters and members of the protest group after the sign was ripped from their hands. There were no arrests, police said.

Mondale and Ms. Ferraro ignored the protesters, most of whom were at the back of the crowd.

Earlier in Austin, Mrs. Ferraro said she won't ask Texans for their votes, she will earn them.

"I can show that I should have the confidence of the voters of this state," Ms Ferraro told a news conference before attending a Capitol rally with Mondale.

"I've worked hard for what I've gotten. I'm not going to ask these Texas voters to give me their votes. I'm going to show them that I earn it, and come Nov. 6 they're going to give it to me," Ms. Ferraro said before attending a Capitol rally with Monday.

The two spoke to a late-afternoon rally on the Statehouse steps.

Geraldine Ferraro finds chanting friends in Texas' capital city

AUSTIN — Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro met chants of "Gerry! Gerry!" from an outdoor crowd of about 7,500 Wednesday with an equally enthusiastic "You're incredible, you're incredible!"

"Anybody who thinks Texas won't vote for a woman doesn't know anything about Texas," she shouted to spectators. "I've got a feeling I'm going to like it here, and I'm going to be back before the fight is over."

Many at Wednesday's rally on the Capitol lawn waited more than an hour in the hot sun to see Ms. Ferraro and presidential nominee Walter Mondale, who flew in from Jackson, Miss., for a news conference and the rally.

They spent the night in Houston, and planned to campaign today in Houston and San Antonio.

State Treasurer Ann Richards, the only woman among Texas' statewide elected officials, introduced Ms. Ferraro by poking fun at cheerleaders who presented western-style hats to President Reagan and Vice President George Bush here on July 25.

"We don't have any cheerleaders — we've got a woman on the ticket," said Ms. Richards, adding that State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower "told me Ronald Reagan thinks 'gender gap' is a town south of Lubbock."

In reference to Mondale's choice of the New York congresswoman as his running mate, Ms. Richards said, "The Democratic Party and Fritz Mondale opened the door to the future, and a woman walked through it."

Ms. Ferraro and Ms. Richards hugged and shook hands after the introduction, which touched off the waving of yellow ribbons by women in the crowd.

Would you take $100 a day to do nothing?

Associated Press

BRAINERD, Minn. — George Libera goes to work daily at 7 a.m. at the Burlington Northern shop in Brainerd with nothing to do except wait for the day to end.

"I wouldn't wish it on anybody," he says.

Most days, he sits in a room and waits for 3 p.m. when it's time to go home. Sometimes he sweeps up, rakes or unloads boxcars.

He gets $100 a day. And he's guaranteed his job until he retires 15 years from now.

"It sounds like a good deal, but it's not," says Libera. "I actually leave there feeling more physically and mentally exhausted than if I'd worked eight hours. You don't do anything, and you don't feel like doing anything."

A railroad man for 23 years, Libera tells a story that is increasingly common in an industry that has more workers than work.

Back in the 1970s, when Great Northern and Northern Pacific merged to become Burlington Northern, Libera and other workers were guaranteed jobs until retirement.

When hard times hit, the railroad was one of the first to feel the pinch.

Since 1980, Libera said, about 14,000 railroad positions have been cut by the company.

Many of those whose employment is protected under the merger agreement simply sit all day unless supervisors can come up with something for them to do. They cannot play cards or read, and they cannot sleep, unless they do it on the sly, Libera said.

"You just kind of roam around, talk to each other. You have to stay out of the way of the people who are working, but, otherwise, you've got the run of the place."

Libera's last regular job with the railroad was in 1982, when he worked as a ticket agent in Aitkin. He has been on protected status since.

And, Libera said, he'll continue doing what he's doing for the next 15 years until he retires.

"If that's what they want me to do, I'll do it," he said. "I picked the railroad as my career and I figure on being there until I retire. That's the only place I've ever worked."

WEATHER SUMMARY

National Weather Service NOAA

AP Laserphoto Map

Clear skies and warm temperatures remain in the forecast for most of the nation Friday, according to the National Weather Service. Cooler weather is anticipated for the Northwest.

Partly cloudy skies still hover over Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy conditions will continue to prevail over the Permian Basin tonight and Friday, but the absence of sun won't provide any relief from the heat, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

There will be a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms tonight, with a low in the upper 60s and winds from the southeast at 5-10 mph. Friday, there will be isolated afternoon thunderstorms, a high in the low 90s and winds from the southeast at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday's high of 87 was 18 degrees below the record for the date of 105, set in 1944, while the overnight low of 73 was 12 degrees above the 1973 record of 61.

STATE

An upper-air low front over eastern Oklahoma brought showers and thunderstorms to much of Texas early today.

Heavy rain activity was reported near the Toledo Bend Reservoir, between Seymour and Abileene, and between Greenville and Paris.

South texas was fair before daybreak. Middle- and high-level clouds covered the northern portion of the state. Low cloudiness settled into the rain area from Wichita Falls to Abilene.

Other than local gustiness caused by thunderstorms, wind was generally light and southeasterly statewide.

Temperatures were generally in the 60s and 70s across the state overnight. Readings at 4 a.m. ranged from 64 at Amarillo and Guadalupe Pass to 80 at Del Rio and Galveston.

'Pure' Guatemalan polling promised

By ALFONSO ANZUETO
Associated Press Writer

GUATEMALA CITY — Guatemala's military chief of state installed a new Constituent Assembly and promised a "free and pure" presidential election after the assembly writes a constitution.

Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores on Wednesday swore in the first assembly president, Roberto Carpio Nicolle of the Christian Democratic Party, who was elected after negotiations among the assembly's three major factions.

Mejia Victores said there will be no "official candidate" in the election and promised a "democratic government based on free and pure elections, the product of the people's search for peace and democracy."

The 88-member assembly's task is to write a new constitution and, once it is finished, call a presidential election — probably early next year.

In Nicaragua, the country's nine Roman Catholic bishops demanded Wednesday that the government-run news media stop writing "slander" about Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo. And in Honduras, the armed forces chief said his country's relations with the United States are "magnificent" but that it does not intend to be Washington's "guard dog" in Central America.

In El Salvador, a rebel commander said leftist guerrillas ambushed a military convoy, killing 13 soldiers and wounding five.

The commander, who identified himself as Israel, said rebels set off two powerful mines Tuesday under a convoy of five trucks, then raked the surviving troops with rifle fire near El Paraiso, 36 miles north of the capital, San Salvador.An army spokesman said he had no information about the attack.

The presidency of Guatemala's three-man assembly directorate will rotate monthly among Carpio Nicolle, Hector Aragon Quinonez of the rightist coalition of the National Liberation Party and Nationalist Authentic Central, and Ramiro de Leon Carpio of the Union of the National Center.

The three groups agreed to a three-man directorate because of the even division of assembly seats in the July 1 election. The National Liberation-Authentic Central coalition won 23 seats, with 21 each going to the Christian Democrats and the Union of the National Center.

The other 18 seats are shared by six smaller parties.

Guatemala has been ruled almost exclusively by the military for 30 years, since the 1954 U.S.-backed overthrow of a leftist government.

In March 1982, Gen. Efrain Rios Montt led a coup that overthrew former President Gen. Romeo Lucas Garcia, who had taken power in allegedly fraudulent 1978 elections. Rios Montt was in turn replaced by an August 1983 coup that put Mejia Victores in power.

Since early 1982, several thousand Guatemalans have been killed in political violence, and the army has virtually crushed what had been a thriving leftist guerrilla insurgency.

Nicaragua's Catholic bishops issued a statement Wednesday saying, in part: "The campaign against the Roman Catholic Church ... continues, showing itself through the government communications media, especially against Monsignor Miguel Obando y Bravo since they attack him with slander."

News media controlled by the leftist Sandinista government contended last week that Obando y Bravo had gone to the United States recently to raise money for an overthrow of the Sandinistas.

In the Mexican resort of Manzanillo, Nicaragua and the United States reportedly ended their third round of bilateral talks.President Reagan's special envoy to Central America, Harry Shlaudeman, began the meeting Tuesday with Nicaraguan Vice Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco.

The Mexican daily Excelsior reported today that the meeting ended Wednesday and that both sides agreed to hold a fourth meeting.

Nicaragua has been trying to get the United States to end support for anti-Sandinista rebels, while U.S. officials want the Sandinistas to end aid to Salvadoran guerrillas and to reduce their ties with the Soviet Union and Cuba.

In Honduras, Gen. Walter Lopez Reyes said Wednesday that the United States and his country were cooperating against "Marxist-Leninism" in Central America, but that Honduras "is not the guard dog nor the policeman for the United States. Our nation has the right to find its own destiny."

Since January 1983, U.S. and Honduran soldiers have been conducting joint maneuvers as a warning to neighboring Nicaragua.

About 7,000 Texans hear Mondale

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Americans want a leader in the White House, and President Reagan doesn't measure up, Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale says.

"What Texans and Americans want is common sense. You don't want salesmanship, you want leadership in the White House," Mondale said Wednesday during a rally at the Capitol.

Mondale and his running mate, Geraldine Ferraro, spoke to a crowd estimated by authorities at 7,000 to 8,000. President Reagan and Vice President George Bush drew twice that many to a lakeside rally in Austin a week earlier.

Mondale said a pundit recently asked him if he could carry Texas, a state Reagan won in 1980 and which has been won by every Democrat elected president.

"I told him, 'Come with me to Austin, Texas and I'll show you the evidence,'" Mondale told the applauding crowd.

"I'm always pleased to be deep in the heart of Texas because Texas is in my heart," he said. "The campaign for the future of America begins in Austin."

On the day when Texans began paying higher taxes for education and highway improvements, Mondale praised the state's recently approved education reform package.

"A superb education system is essential and that's what you're saying here in the state of Texas. This generation of Americans must be the best educated in our history," Mondale said.

Ms. Ferraro wasted no time in addressing the most frequently asked question.

"Anybody who thinks Texas won't vote for women doesn't know anything about Texas," she said. "I've got a feeling I'm going to like it here, and I'm going to be back before the fight is over."

Texas' top state elected officials, all Democrats, lined the Capitol steps where Mondale and Ms. Ferraro spoke. State Treasurer Ann Richards introduced Ms. Ferraro as "a friend of mine from New York."

"We don't have to hire cheerleaders to be on our stage because we've got a woman on the ticket," she said, referring to the cheerleaders who welcomed Reagan and Bush last week.

Ms. Richards delighted the crowd by saying Reagan "likes women" but only "in the kitchen."

"If Ronald Reagan likes me any more, I'm going to have to take in ironing," she said.

Ms. Ferraro told the crowd she has much in common with Texans, including a former prosecutor's desire to jail criminals.

Mondale told Texans something they have frequently heard from candidates and commentators in recent months.

"We need Texas. We need the South. We need the rest of the nation," he said.

Some fear female name on ticket will hurt party's chances in Texas

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Democratic vice presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro says she knows enough about Texas to know its voters won't vote against her just because she's a woman.

But an Austin piano tuner who turned out for Ms. Ferraro's first Texas campaign appearance on Wednesday says the New York congresswoman might be surprised in November.

"We have a lot of so-called rednecks here," said Selby Barnett, a 63-year-old Democrat who is backing the party ticket. The female nominee "probably will hurt (Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale) in some situations."

Although Ms. Ferraro told the crowd that "anybody who thinks Texas won't vote for a woman doesn't know anything about Texas," a 58-year-old woman who identified herself only as Elaine said "the macho Spanish" might have trouble voting for a woman.

At least one rally attendee saw political advantages in the Ferraro nomination.

"Texans like good-looking women," said Russell Knight, a 70-year-old retiree.

After the rally, Republicans declared themselves the winners in the first "head-to-head" Texas battle between President Reagan and challenger Mondale.

Reagan and Vice President George Bush drew about 20,000 to a lakeside rally in Austin last Wednesday, while about 7,000 people turned out for the Democrats' appearance outside the Capitol.

Texas GOP Chairman George Strake said Reagan "drew a big and enthusiastic crowd in a city which is historically very Democratic. It seems the liberal national Democratic ticket didn't draw as well."

The Mondale-Ferraro visit did attract some protesters who marched to the Capitol in a "Pro Texas Family Rally."

"As for Ms. Ferraro, I doubt she even cared where Texas was until she found out about our 29 electoral delegates," said Greg Davidson, executive director of the Young Conservatives of Texas.

"The Mondale-Ferraro ticket is just another attempt by the Kennedys and the Tip O'Neills and the other East Coast liberals to bring Texas, the South, the West and the rest of America down to their knees and at their service," said Davidson.

The young conservatives were joined by several groups — including Austin Catholics Against Ferraro — "that support traditional Texas values and morals that have worked together to make this state great."

Ms. Ferraro described Texans as "confident, tough, can-do people who don't make excuses but get results." She added that "that's the kind of vice president I'm going to be."

At the news conference, Ms. Ferraro said, "I've worked hard for what I've gotten. I'm not going to ask these Texas voters to give me their votes. I'm going to show them that I earn it, and come Nov. 6, they're going to give it to me."

Texas is considered crucial by Democratic strategists, especially since no Democrat ever has been elected president without carrying the state. Mondale even considered two Texans — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen and San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros — before choosing Ms. Ferraro.

Mondale told the news conference he wanted Texans to get acquainted with Ms. Ferraro.

"I know Texas and the people of Texas know me," Mondale said. "This state has been a source of enormous support for me, and now they will get to know Geraldine Ferraro, and I'm confident they will love her enormously."

Ms. Ferraro was told that a recent opinion poll showed Mondale would do worse with her as running mate, and she was asked what she could do to get "good ol' Texas boys" to vote for a New Yorker.

"Just wait awhile until they get to know me," she replied.

On southern swing, dual message delivered

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — From Jackson, Miss., to San Antonio, Texas, Walter F. Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro are delivering a dual message: he says President Reagan is afraid to debate, and she says the South is ready to vote for a woman as vice president.

The Democratic ticket was closing out the southern swing today with appearances in Houston and San Antonio before both fly to Mondale's Minnesota home for a brief strategy session.

Meanwhile Bert Lance, whose designation as general chairman of the Mondale campaign was supposed to

"I don't think the president is worried the people will be bored and turn off that TV set," Mondale told a noontime crowd outside the Governor's Mansion in Jackson. "I think he's afraid they might be interested and keep the TV on and learn something."

Mondale repeated the theme during a rally on the State Capitol steps in Austin, Texas, and was set to keep hammering today.

At a news conference Wednesday in Austin, Ms. Ferraro said analysts are wrong if they believe southern voters will not be receptive to a woman vice presidential candidate. "If Mississippi is any indication, it's wrong, wrong, wrong, and I don't care what the polls say," she said.

Honest burglar tells police he hit Houston churches

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who had been in the Harris County Jail for 10 days for parole revocation called police and told them he was responsible for a string of church burglaries in the Houston area.

Michael M. Hout, 21, even provided Houston burglary detectives with a list of the churches.

Hout was charged Wednesday with two counts of burglary of a building and is being held on a $5,000 bond, Sgt. Dallas Bingley said.

Hout told police Monday from the Harris County Jail he had broken into seven Houston churches, two of them three times each, and stolen cash form collection boxes. He said he sometimes stole other things such as tape recorders, microphones, speakers and office equipment, Bingley said.

"One time he even made his own poor box from a coffee can and left it in the church," Bingley said. "He came back three or four hours later, and there was 30 bucks in it."

Reagan still wants space weapons talks

WORLD

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) - President Reagan, prompted by his wife, says he's doing everything he can to convince the Soviet Union to begin anti-space weapon talks, but a White House official maintains Moscow isn't seriously interested.

During a brief picture-taking session at the president's isolated mountaintop ranch, Reagan was asked Wednesday what he could do to lure the Soviets to the bargaining table to discuss anti-satellite weapons.

Standing outside his relatively modest, white adobe home, the president paused for a moment before answering. His wife, Nancy, standing at his side, gazed downward and mumbled softly, "Doing everything we can."

Reagan quickly replied, "We're doing everything we can."

Meanwhile, back at the Santa Barbara hotel that lodges the press corps, National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane had told reporters recent pessimistic statements emanating from the Soviet Union cast doubt on Moscow's intentions.

"The Soviet Union has repeatedly misrepresented the United States' position regarding the opening of arms control talks between our two countries in Vienna," said McFarlane.

"From this latest Soviet statement, it appears that the Soviets were not serious about their proposal. We regret this."

McFarlane's comments occurred a few hours after a Soviet spokesman, Alexander A. Bessmertnykh, declared the latest U.S. offer on space weapons talks "opened no prospects" for holding discussions.

The Soviet Union proposed on June 29 that officials from the two countries meet in Vienna to begin discussing ways to limit anti-satellite weapons. The Reagan administration accepted the offer, but said it also wanted to talk about resuming nuclear arms negotiations.

The primary obstacles to the talks are a Soviet-proposed moratorium on testing and deployment of space weapons, which would take effect at the start of the talks, and Moscow's insistence on limiting the agenda to a total ban on the military use of space.

The United States opposes a moratorium because it says that would preserve the Soviet monopoly on anti-satellite weapons.

And, the Soviets don't want to discuss resuming nuclear arms control talks that they walked out on last December to protest deployment of new U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe.

Bessmertnykh criticized the United States for not wanting to go along with the moratorium. "Washington's propaganda maneuvers are aimed at absolving Washington of responsibility for the fact that the line pursued by it is making the talks impossible," he said.

In another area the United States and the Soviet Union resolved some longstanding problems. After eight years of intermittent negotiations, the two countries on Wednesday settled a number of issues relating to visas and the functioning of the two countries' diplomatic missions.

The consular agreement, announced in Washington, will facilitate the travel of participants in educational exchange programs, expedite the issuance of certain categories of visas and improve traveling conditions of diplomats in the two countries.

After his briefing, McFarlane flew by helicopter to Reagan's ranch in the Santa Ynez Mountains to attend a lunch.

The archbishop was invited to give Reagan the Roman Catholic Church's view on whether he should ease economic sanctions against Poland in light of that nation's recent decision to grant amnesty to 632 political prisoners.

As for space weapons talks, a senior U.S. official, speaking on the condition that he remain anonymous, told reporters that the latest Soviet reply "surely is not encouraging."

Lutherans suspend two churches

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The Lutheran World Federation has suspended the membership of two churches — one in South Africa and one in South-West Africa — for refusing to admit blacks, a federation spokesman says.

About 80 percent of the delegates at the federation's assembly supported the motion Wednesday to suspend the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Southern Africa and the German Evangelical Lutheran Church in South-West Africa, the South African territory also known as Namibia. A two-thirds majority was required.

In a secret ballot, 222 delegates voted for the suspension, spokesman Roger Kahle said. He said 23 delegates were opposed and 29 abstained.

Soviet Union briefs media on proposals

An Analysis

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL

MOSCOW (AP) — In the diplomatic wrangle over proposed talks on space weapons, the Soviet Union has launched a publicity offensive with weekly briefings on each exchange between the Kremlin and Washington.

At the most recent briefing, held Wednesday by a ranking Foreign Ministry official, the Soviets publicly rejected the latest American statement on what would be discussed at a Vienna space weapons conference in September.

While the state-controlled Soviet media regularly publicize the Kremlin's positions, the Foreign Ministry briefings provide an "event" for Western journalists to cover, boosting the story's sense of immediacy and ensuring more attention in the West.

Since Moscow proposed June 29 that negotiations on banning space weapons should be started, the Foreign Ministry has conducted four briefings for Western and Soviet journalists to publicize each new step in a diplomatic process that otherwise would be conducted largely behind the scenes.

In each of four briefings held on space weapons over the past four weeks the Soviets have revealed details of diplomatic discussions.

The U.S. Embassy has declined each time to comment, saying the negotiations are "a diplomatic matter that we are not going to comment on in public."

Asked Wednesday if the Soviets were not guilty of the same "propaganda maneuvering" they accuse Washington of, Foreign Ministry official Alexander A. Bessmertnykh replied: "Press briefings are not a court where accusations are made. We are just stating facts."

Western diplomats see the briefings, previously rare in the secretive world of Soviet officialdom, as an attempt to pressure Washington into conceding to Kremlin demands that the Vienna talks be limited to the space weapons issue and be preceeded by agreement to halt development or deployment of space weapons.

Washington has said it would take part in the talks, but has insisted that other questions of nuclear arms limitations be taken up at any negotiations. The exchange of messages and public statements between Washington and Moscow have so far been on an agenda.

Diplomats say the Soviet publicity barrage also seems intended to portray the Soviet Union as being open and aboveboard, and therefore not to blame if the talks don't come off.

The Soviet effort has irked some U.S. officials, who have complained in Washington that Moscow is making public a discussion that would best be kept private.

Some Western diplomats say the publicity the Soviets give to the space weapons talks makes it more difficult to achieve a compromise. "They are making a public spectacle out of a diplomatic matter," said one Western diplomat in Moscow, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

But the Washington-style briefings have been effective, at least from the Soviet point of view. And there are signs that, having found a formula that works, the Soviets will continue the practice.

On Wednesday, the official who introduced Bessmertnykh, head of the Foreign Ministry's U.S. Department, welcomed reporters to "one of our regular briefings."

The top echelon of Soviet government almost never meets with the press. Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko conducted a news conference on arms control in April 1983, but has not done so again.

But lower-level news conferences became more frequent last year as the Soviet Union was faced with a series of crises starting with the Sept. 1 downing of a South Korean airliner.

Negotiations continue on forming Israeli national unity government

JERUSALEM (AP) — Negotiations between Israel's two major political parties continued today on the possibility of forming a bipartisan unity government, but Israel army radio said President Chaim Herzog may pick one of the parties Friday to try on its own.

Labor Party leader Shimon Peres and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of the Likud bloc met for four hours Wednesday to discuss the possibility of setting up a joint government, and they scheduled a second round of talks focusing on economic policy for this evening at the King David Hotel.

Despite intense rounds of bargaining, neither party has been able to round up enough support in the 120-seat Knesset for a majority.

The state-owned army radio said Herzog could finish his consultations with the 13 small parties that won seats in the July 23 elections and be ready to make a decision by Friday on who will get the first chance to form a new government.

Traditionally, the party with the most votes gets that chance. Labor won 44 seats to Likud's 41, and Herzog was a member of the Labor Party before his election to the largely ceremonial post of president.

But even if Labor gets the first nod, there are doubts that it will be able to collect a coalition of 61 seats, a majority in the 120-member Knesset.

The army radio, the pro-Labor Davar and Al Hamishmar newspapers said today that Herzog was most likely to choose Peres after finishing his consultations because Labor had greater support among the small parties.

However, Shamir spokesman Yossi Ahimeir said, "We are hoping the president will give Shamir the mandate." He argued that Shamir had the most support in parliament if the Arab parties that control six seats were excluded.

The predominantly Arab Communist Party with four seats and the Arab-led Progressive List for Peace with two seats both were expected to back a Labor-led government, although they were not expected to be invited into any governing coalition.

Labor had a bloc of 59 Knesset members lined up against a Likud-led coalition of 52.

Maoist guerrillas kill officials, others in Peru

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Police say Maoist guerrillas killed 29 local officials and other residents in attacks on three isolated Andean villages where peasants recently formed anti-rebel units.

Three columns of guerrillas of the Shining Path movement entered the villages of Querobamba, Morcolla and Kocha in Lucanas province, police said Wednesday. They reportedly killed justices of the peace, mayors, council members and other residents in the attacks Tuesday.

The killings were in reprisal for decisions by community leaders to support army patrols hunting guerrillas in the area, according to police in Ayacucho, a city in the heart of the rebel zone about 350 miles southeast of Lima.

President Fernando Belaunde Terry has ordered the military to take whatever steps necessary to defeat the guerrillas, who have been battling to overthrow the government for four years.

Royalty to donate oaks

YORK, England (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II, Prince Charles and 29 other landowners plan to donate oak trees to help rebuild the burned roof of historic York Minster cathedral.

The dean of York, the Very Rev. Ronald Jasper, said Wednesday the oaks would be hand-carved to recreate the vaulted roof in the south transept, one of the cross-shaped arms of the 500-year-old cathedral. The south transept was heavily damaged in a July 9 fire caused by lightning.

Most of the oak trees will be felled this winter and then transported to York, said Anthony Eden, manager of the Duchess of Norfolk's estate in Arundel in southeast England. Eden appealed for the oaks through his contacts with estate managers throughout Britain.

Chileans try to go home

BOGOTA, Colombia (Ap) — Three Chileans expelled from their country for allegedly being "agents of Soviet communism" say they will try to return home this weekend.

The three men are Luis Godoy, a former federal senator; Osiel Nunez, an official of the Democratic People's Movement; and Renee Largo, a radio announcer. They were expelled July 24 on order of President Gen. Augusto Pinochet, whose military regime has been in power since 1973.

Six reported injured in Israeli attack

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Police said today that six people were wounded in attacks by Israeli gunboats and helicopters on targets at a Palestinian refugee camp in Syrian-controlled north Lebanon.

The Israeli military command, in reporting Wednesday's raids, said they were aimed at guerrilla bases in the Nahr el-Bared camp that served as staging points for sea attacks against Israel. The command did not report casualties.

Two Israeli soldiers were wounded today by a hand grenade thrown from a rooftop in the south Lebanese town of Nabatiyeh, the Israeli command said. The command said the soldiers were evacuated to hospitals for treatment and Israeli troops searched the large Shiite Moslem market town after the attack.

A witness who telephoned The Associated Press but refused to identify himself said the grenade was thrown at a four-man foot patrol walking through a crowded square. He said a 10-year-old Lebanese boy also was hurt, but he could not tell whether it was from grenade shrapnel or a stray bullet fired by the Israelis.

A Lebanese police spokesman said Israeli helicopter gunships strafed and rocketed Nahr el-Bared, about 58 miles north of Beirut on the northern fringe of the port city of Tripoli, in two assaults 20 minutes apart Wednesday evening.

Two gunboats then shelled the camp two hours after the helicopter assault, and at midnight two Israeli missile boats struck the camp, the spokesman said. He declined to be identified.

The Israeli command said accurate hits were made on targets, and that the helicopters returned safely to bases and the navy boats sailed unharmed back out to sea.

The police spokesman said Lebanese authorities were not able to determine whether those injured in the attacks were Palestinian guerrillas or civilian refugees from the camp's estimated 30,000 population.

The camp has been controlled by Syrian-backed Palestinian guerrilla groups since the ouster of Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat from his north Lebanon headquarters last December.

The police spokesman said several fires burned in the camp through most of the night after the assaults. The flames and smoke could be seen from Tripoli, he added.

Beirut newspapers quoted an unnamed spokesman for anti-Arafat guerrillas as saying the "Israeli attacks missed their targets."

Israeli military communiques said the assaults were "part of the standing policy of striking at terrorists wherever they may be and disrupting their organizational and operational capability."

Israeli military sources who spoke on condition they not be identified said the base strafed by the helicopters was used by the pro-Syrian Abu Moussa faction of the PLO that evicted Arafat loyalists from Tripoli last year.

It was Israel's second air and sea operation in north Lebanon in five weeks. The previous assault on June 27 left 12 people dead and 20 wounded at Tripoli's Palm Island.

Israeli authorities are holding 10 people allegedly connected with planned Arab guerrilla forays into Israel by sea.

Two of them are a Lebanese brother and sister of Palestinian origin who were passengers on a ferry boat detained by the Israelis en route from Cyprus to Lebanon in June. The Israelis also are holding eight crew members of a Lebanese ship that Israel claims was taking guerrillas from Tripoli to Israel.

The Israelis invaded Lebanon in June 1982 to drive Palestinian guerrillas out of southern Lebanon bases that the Jewish state said were used for attacks on its northern border settlements.

Flood of criticism 'washes away' appointment of Anne Burford

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stung by Congress, former EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch Burford sought to defuse an election-year furor by withdrawing as the new head of a federal environmental advisory group.

The controversial former head of the Environmental Protection Agency withdrew as chairwoman of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere Wednesday. She was to have been sworn in today.

President Reagan's announcement early in July that he would name Mrs. Burford to the post stirred a storm of outrage among environmentalists, both Democrats and Republicans.

The Republican-controlled Senate voted 74-19 last week to urge Reagan to rescind the choice, and the House echoed that sentiment on Tuesday by a 363-51 vote.

Reagan defended Mrs. Burford at a news conference after the Senate vote, but accepted her withdrawal on Wednesday, according to Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes.

"Neither she nor the president was prepared for the groundswell of outrage that swept the country ... it illustrates that the environment is an extremely high priority for all Americans," said Sierra Club spokeswoman Diane MacEachran after announcement of the withdrawal.

Anne Burford

"The public outrage over her appointment is one indication of how far out of touch Reagan is on environmental issues. Reagan's repeated assaults on the environment will come back to haunt him in November," said Geoffrey Webb, political director of Friends of the Earth.

Jay D. Hair, head of the National Wildlife Federation, termed her move "the second best thing Anne Burford has done for the country in the past three and one-half years. The best was her resignation as head of the EPA."

The administration has been seeking to improve its image among environmentalists in recent weeks, but Mrs. Burford's appointment had drawn widespread opposition among such groups.

Mrs. Burford resigned as EPA administrator in March 1983 under pressure of congressional probes into the agency's management.

The Justice Department later said an investigation cleared her of any legal wrongdoing. Reagan said she had dutifully carried out her orders and become an innocent victim in a dispute between the administrative and legislative branches of government.

While her selection to head the advisory committee drew criticism early, the attacks peaked over the weekend following reports of Mrs. Burford's comments at a speech in Colorado.

Asked about her new job, she derided the advisory group as a "nothingburger."

"It meets three times a year. It doesn't do anything. It's a joke," she told reporters.

Mrs. Burford's home telephone is unlisted and attempts to contact her through her husband's office at the Bureau of Land Management were unsuccessful.

Missing couple's car found at airport

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A Volkswagen Rabbit owned by a family who disappeared last week has been found at a parking lot near San Francisco International Airport, police reported.

Inspector Richard Heller said the tan car found Wednesday was owned by Harvey and Deborah Dubs, who vanished with their 16-month-old son without a word to their family or friends.

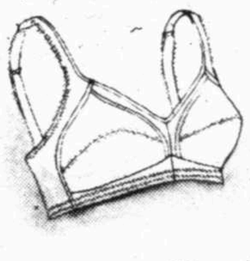

The family was reported missing July 26 by Mrs. Dubs' father, James Nourse of Palo Alto, who said it was unlike his daughter to leave without telling him.

Police also were checking a mysterious phone call to Dubs' employer. A man identifying himself as "Jim Bright" said the Dubs family had gone to Washington state unexpectedly to take care of an ailing relative. Nourse said he knew of no friends or family of the couple in Washington.

Dubs, 29, is a phototypesetter who also had a videotape business out of his house.

Republicans want help from Mondale

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans pushing one of President Reagan's pet legislative initiatives are calling for help from an unusual source: Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale.

The Republicans, Reagan's campaign lieutenants in Congress, said Wednesday they cannot force a House vote on a constitutional balanced budget amendment without some persuasion applied by Mondale and his running mate, Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, on House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill.

Neither Mondale nor Ferraro supports the measure, but that didn't stop Rep. Carroll Campbell, R-S.C., from making the plea at a news conference.

"With the Democrats' 102-vote majority in the House and their control of all House committees, the balanced budget amendment cannot reach the floor without the speaker's blessing," said Campbell, chairman of Reagan's campaign congressional steering committee. "... Mondale and Ferraro are both close to Speaker O'Neill."

The proposed balanced budget amendment is one of six items in a legislative agenda Reagan outlined last week at a news conference and in paid political advertising..

House Democratic leaders have opposed efforts to bring the measure to the floor. Campbell told reporters that a petition drive to force a floor vote on the measure has, at best, 170 signatures, 48 short of the required majority.

"We challenge the Democratic standard-bearers to meet their responsibility to live up to their promises to end ... deficits by joining President Reagan in seeking passage of a balanced budget amendment," Campbell said.

The congressman said he was speaking on behalf of the entire GOP House leadership. House Minority Leader Robert Michel of Illinois and assistant leader Trent Lott of Mississippi were among the dozen Repubican lawmakers to attend the news conference, but they let Campbell field all questions on the balanced-budget issue.

Responding to the challenge from GOP leaders, O'Neill said: "Any day the president wants to send up a balanced budget, I'll put it on the floor within 48 hours. President Reagan talks one way and acts another."

Meanwhile, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee said Senate action on the balanced budget may come in September. "We passed it before, we can pass it again," Baker told reporters.

Mondale in his convention acceptance speech vowed to reduce the current federal deficit by two-thirds in four years if he is elected. Ms. Ferraro voted against the balanced-budget amendment when it was last consdered — and rejected — by the House, in 1982.

No deals to make

"With all due and necessary concern for the safety of the passengers," said Netherlands Antilles Prime Minister Don Martina, "we couldn't give in to their demands."

In explaining why his country decided to launch a daring raid early Tuesday morning that resulted in the deaths of two hijackers and the freeing of 79 people aboard a Venezuelan jetliner, Martina noted: "If Curacao gave in, it would encourage other terrorists to do the same thing."

Of course there are plenty of arguments that can be offered as to why the course taken by Curacaon officials may not be advisable in every situation. First and foremost is the safety of the passengers that Martina cited.

But what is terrorism except outlaw activity designed to achieve the goals of the perpetrators with no thought of the lives of those terrorized? Is it better to not attempt rescues that might endanger passengers and leave passengers to the insane whims of the outlaws? Not hardly.

Terrorists operate in the shady realm of life outside civilized society, only braving entry into civilized society to carry out their misdeeds. For a government, any government, to condone the violence of terrorists through either word or deed is to give the terror network validity, purpose. That's foolish.

"The policy of our government is not to enter into negotiations with sky pirates or hijackers," said Henry Lopez, head of Venezuela's Division of Security, Intelligence and Prevention. He said at no time during the hijacking crisis was it even proposed that the hijackers be taken alive.

That's a good and courageous policy, and one that would be much more effective if it was practiced unwaveringly throughout the nations of the world that value civilized society.

Hijackers and terrorists are outlaws and should be treated as such. If allowed to prey on society, they will prey on society.

Helping 'neighbors'

United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick did a good job the other day of explaining and defending the Reagan administration's foreign policies. She said recent Democratic criticism of those policies was "mistaken" and reflected a lot of "wishful thinking."

With special emphasis on hemispheric problems to the south, Mrs. Kirkpatrick declared that the key to the Reagan approach is to prevent war. The Democrats, on the contrary, have been talking darkly about the likelihood of American policies increasing rather than decreasing the possibility of armed conflict.

Ambassador Kirkpatrick laid it on the line when she said the president's approach to "the big, important issues of our defense and the defense of Western civilization ..." is "more likely to keep us at peace."

Addressing herself specifically to problems right on our back doorstep, the ambassador noted that "the United States is not at war in Central America .... What we're trying very hard to do in Central America is to help them — the countries that are under attack there — help themselves."

Our spokesman at the United Nations did the Reagan administration a favor by articulating so ably its efforts to stay strong and keep the peace. She also performed a public service by reminding the nation of what folly it would be to ignore the fomenting of revolution so close to home.

Another View:

Silence in Gorky

Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner, were last seen alive by a friend on May 4, in a fleeting encounter on a street in Gorky. Before the police intervened, Dr. Sakharov said he was in the third day of a hunger strike to protest the authorities' refusal to let his wife seek medical treatment abroad.

Since then there's been no independent word of the Soviet couple — only a few sentences by Tass and other official sources insisting the eminent scientist and dissenter is in good health.

In the Soviet Union, this appalling secrecy and silence is routine. Unable to sustain morale and reputation with enough genuine achievement, state propagandists confect its facsimile: a society where active leaders are always right, bad news is negligible and troublemakers get only what they deserve.

Nothing has changed since Roy Medvedev, a dissident Soviet scholar, recorded in 1971 that "People are ill-informed on the simplest level about things going on in their own country.... The overwhelming majority of Soviet citizens have no available means of finding things out.... In the summer of 1970 our newspapers were quick to report the epidemic of measles in Chile. But only after a 2½-month delay were we told about the outbreak of cholera in Astrakhan, Kerch and Odessa."

Without trustworthy news, it is sadly imaginable that the Sakharovs are being drugged or force-fed, or worse. A system that withholds the most rudimentary information cannot be believed when it asserts that they are alive and well. If they are, when can they be seen and heard? If not, the moral damage to the Soviet Union will not be reparable, even by the fabulists of Tass.

Syria now has Soviet missiles

WASHINGTON — During the Lebanon civil war, the U.S. Sixth Fleet appeared off the coast of Lebanon in imposing array. Carrier planes and the battleship New Jersey's big guns pounded Syrian coastal positions with virtual impunity.

Jack Anderson

This caused intense consternation inside the Kremlin, intelligence sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado. Apparently, the Soviets felt that the Sixth Fleet brought more firepower to the scene than they were able to provide their Syrian surrogates.

Though the Lebanon intervention ultimately ended in humiliating failure for the United States, the Soviets learned a lesson from the U.S. power play.

Now they have reportedly taken drastic measures to counter the threat posed by the Sixth Fleet. Highly classified intelligence reports indicate that the Kremlin has provided Syria with a network of lethal, long-range, surface-to-surface missiles capable of blowing U.S. warships out of the water.

Pentagon sources have identified the missiles as the latest and most sophisticated in the Soviet arsenal: "shore-to-sea missiles, with a flat trajectory like the cruise missile," a 150-mile range and a short reaction time. They have just been deployed along the Syrian coast.

What this means is that any naval craft in the eastern Mediterranean can be sunk.

"In naval warfare, reaction time is what really counts," one well-placed source explained. "This missile gives the Sixth Fleet very limited reaction time." Earlier, the Soviets also rushed to Syria several SS-21's, with a 75-mile range and a 15-minute reaction time.

According to a secret Pentagon weapons report, the SS-21 is a ground-to-ground missile "mounted on a transporter-erector-launcher," which gives it mobility. Even more ominous, "the missile payload may consist of a low-yield nuclear, chemical or (conventional) warhead."

Apparently, the Kremlin strategists weren't the only ones who were upset over the presence of the Sixth Fleet off the Lebanon coast. Syrian President Hafez Assad was also reported to be dismayed by Syria's inability to defend itself adequately against the deadly pounding by Sixth Fleet guns and planes.

He secretly negotiated with the Soviets for the anti-ship missile system whose deployment will make any replay of the Sixth Fleet's show of strength extremely risky. The new missile system, meanwhile, gives the Syrians a weapon that can be used not only defensively but offensively.

TILTING AT LANCE: Republicans were delighted with Walter Mondale's appointment of Bert Lance as his general campaign chairman. They hope it will co-opt any Democratic attempt to make the so-called "sleaze factor" a campaign issue.

One Reagan administration scandal the Democrats had hoped to use was the Securities and Exchange Commission case against W. Paul Thayer, who resigned as deputy defense secretary in the face of charges that he had illegally given "insider" information on stocks to his friends. Thayer denied the charges, but quit anyway.

Lance has been identified as a beneficiary of one Thayer tip. He was one of several investors who purchased a total of 106,000 shares of common stock in Campbell Taggart shortly before it was taken over by the Busch conglomerate. The early birds paid $25 to $30 a share, and Busch offered to buy Campbell Taggart stock at $36 a share.

According to SEC documents seen by my associate Tony Capaccio, Lance was not one of the Thayer group that got the inside information directly. As the SEC investigators pieced it together, Thayer called August Busch III, chairman of Busch, on July 6, 1982, and allegedly discussed the Campbell Taggart situation. On the same day, the investigators say, he called Billy Bob Harris, a Dallas securities broker.

The next day or so, according to SEC documents, Harris "improperly disclosed" information on the Campbell Taggart takeover to William "Billy" Mathis, a former New York Jets running back who is now an Atlanta securities broker. Mathis allegedly bought 38,800 shares of Campbell Taggart, which he then sold for a $146,829 profit.

Mathis "also improperly disclosed" the inside information to "other persons who then purchased CTI stock," the SEC charges. One of those other persons was Lance, who "purchased substantial amounts of CTI stock based on discussions with Mathis," according to the SEC documents.

Though there is no evidence to suggest that Lance knew the advice he got from Mathis was tainted, the SEC documents make clear that Lance is a potential witness in the case.

Footnote: Mathis, through his Washington attorney, declined to comment. Lance ignored repeated attempts to get his comment.

GEORGE F. WILL

Remembering politics of past

WASHINGTON — Democrats specialize in stormy emotions, so it is fitting that Andy Ireland, who seems about as emotional as an electric typewriter — smooth, quiet, precise — departed the Democratic Party with no act of passion. He went so quietly, in fact, that few noticed, which was fine with him.

George F. Will

With a name like that he should be a Democratic congressman from the Bronx. By a whim of the universe he was, until a month ago, a Democratic congressman from central Florida. He is as Southern as ... well, in his reception room there is a citrus-juice machine and his administrative assistant, Kathy Calhoun, is a descendant of the great senator, vice president, philosopher and troublemaker from South Carolina. Now Ireland is a Republican congressman.

Although 30 years of Southern living have given Ireland, 53, a pronounced Southern accent, he was raised in Cincinnati and educated at Andover, Yale and Columbia business school before becoming a Florida banker. In the 1950s, if a young businessman wanted to become politically involved — say, participating in a campaign for mayor or county commissioner — he registered Democratic, as Ireland did. Ireland ran successfully for Congress in 1976, when a 13-term Democratic incumbent retired.

In 1978 he was unopposed for re-election. In 1980 he had only token opposition, as his district gave him — and Ronald Reagan — 69 percent of the vote. His area has not voted for a Democratic presidential candidate since the 1940s and until now has never had a Republican congressman.

In the "Reagan summer" of 1981, when the tax and spending cuts were passed, Ireland was one of the nine "boll weevil Democrats" with a record of complete support for Reagan's program. His constituents were content: In 1982 he again was unopposed. On July 5 of this year he made official what he had announced, almost inaudibly, in March: He re-registered as a Republican.

"The South," he says startlingly, "has the same problem Jesse Jackson has." Say what?

He means that Southern Democrats are used, as blacks are, to maintain the Democratic Party's national leadership, but have little leverage over the direction of the party. His decision is one kind of resolution of a long-standing tension. It is tension between the way many Southerners register to vote in local primaries, and the way they vote in presidential contests. His task, he says, is to convince constituents "that, for reasons of local-election participation, they have been voting for a party that simply does not represent their interests, nor their views on national policy."

A party can not be built by defections of officeholders from the other party. But the political incongruities that led to Ireland's decision are among the factors that have made some Republicans hopeful about overtaking the Democrats in the House of Representatives — if not this year, at least soon.

In 1982, at the depth of the worst recession since the Depression, Republicans lost only 26 seats — "only," because about half were lost to the cunning of Democratic state legislatures which aggressively gerrymandered after the 1980 census. Furthermore, in 1982, 41 Democrats and 41 Republicans won with 55 percent or less of the vote. Those Republicans who survived the economic slump must be considered relatively secure; some of those Democrats who did not do better than that during the slump must be considered relatively vulnerable.

Horace Busby is a Texan and a keen student of "Tory Democrats" down South. He notes that since 1860, when American politics became defined by the rivalry of the Republican and Democratic parties, Republicans have won 20 of 31 presidential elections, and by the end of this year will have held the White House 61 percent of the time. But Democrats have controlled the House of Representatives 61 percent of the time. So we have, Busby says, two "60-40" political systems: one in the Congress, one involving the presidency.

For many years, he says, the nation's 40 most populous counties have had at least 100 members of the House — slightly more today — and Republicans have not had more than five of the 100. Busby believes the Democrats' domination of the House is based less on liberalism than ethnicity. There are, he says, just too few Republican ethnic candidates.

Sunbelt counties should be more hospitable to "Republican ethnics," a phrase that is not quite a contradiction in terms. It denotes, among others, people like Ireland, refugees from their political "old country," the Democratic Party. Okay, the path of the normal "ethnic" does not usually run through Andover, Yale and Columbia. But if America is still the land of opportunity, it must be a place where any boy or girl can grow up to be an ethnic.

ART BUCHWALD

Not every loser is a loss

Not everybody at the Los Angeles Olympics is there for fun. Seated in the bleachers, making notes and rarely smiling, are scouts for almost every advertising agency in the world. Their dream is to find another Bruce Jenner or Mark Spitz to push their products for the next four years.

Art Buchwald

I asked Morgan Whiteley, who has been scouting every Olympics for the last 20 years, what he looks for in an Olympic star. "I don't care how high he can jump or how fast he can run, he has to have credibility with the public to sell razor blades. Other people may be looking at his legs, but I'm looking at his face. Some athletes never look properly shaved."

"Are you only looking for a gold medal winner who can sell razor blades?"

"No. I've got a list of clients who want to sign up this year's stars. But the competition is rough and amateur athletes are now wise to how much noney there is to be made in going for the gold. Every time you approach one on the field he refers you to his agent. Endorsements don't come cheap any more. I could sign up a four-man relay team eight years ago for what it cost me for one lousy amateur boxer this year."

"I assume that you're only interested in gold medal winners."

"That's the ticket. You're not going to get anyone to buy Wheaties from a guy who finished 25th in the marathon."

"Are you scouting the swimmers as well?"

"Of course. Everyone likes swimmers. I've got a bathing suit client who is willing to pay $100,000 for an American breast-stroke champion."

"That shouldn't be a problem."

"It is if she doesn't look good in a bathing suit. Unlike most people who watch swimmers when they're in the water, I have to look at them when they're walking around the pool. Just because you're a champion breast stroker doesn't mean you have a champion's chest."

"I don't imagine everyone who wins a gold medal is on your shopping list."

"That's true. You can forget scullers, archers and volleyball players. They don't even make good American Express Card commercials. What you're looking for is a star. Nobody cares if an equestrian rider drinks milk or not, or whether a cyclist uses underarm deodorant. What I really want is a 4 ft., 6 in. gymnast who can carry a 35-pound portable computer through an airport terminal."

"That would make a great commercial," I said. "Are you in the market for divers?"

"We have a wristwatch client who will take one to prove you can dive from a 60-foot tower into water and not lose a second of time."

"Do you think you can find a gold medal diver to do it?" I asked.

"That won't be the problem. The watch company is still trying to develop a timepiece that won't stop when it hits the water."

"Have you ever signed an athlete and been disappointed?"

"I had a case the other day. I signed up a 350-pound weightlifter to kick the hell out of the luggage we represent to show it could take a beating. Then he took a test and they found out he was using hormones."

"What a blow," I said.

"Fortunately it wasn't a total loss. We also handle a large pharmaceutical company which was looking desperately for someone to endorse their steroids."

Jury process explained to children

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Prosecutors are explaining the grand jury process to students who will testify about alleged sexual misconduct at a children's theater school, hoping to lessen the trauma of their appearance before the panel.

The grand jury will begin hearing testimony Monday regarding the Children's Theater and School. School founder John Clark Donahue, 45, goes on trial Oct. 1 on charges he abused three boy students.

An actor and a dance instructor at the school also have been charged with having sex with students, and four other staff members have been suspended or have taken leaves of absence.

Killer to implicate official's friend

HONOLULU (AP) — A reputed organized crime contract killer who confessed to murdering a state senator and three other people has agreed to implicate a close friend of Gov. George R. Ariyoshi, a lawyer for the friend said.

Attorney David Schutter said he expects his client, Larry Mehau, to be named in a criminal indictment within two weeks based on the testimony of Ronald Ching.

Ching pleaded guilty Tuesday to killing state Sen. Larry Kuriyama and three others. Schutter charged that Mehau is the target of a "political vendetta."

Ex-doctor convicted of rape

CINCINNATI (AP) — Former physician Edward F. Jackson has been convicted of multiple rape charges for the second time and handed a sentence that boosts his maximum prison term to nearly 1,000 years.

A judge sentenced Jackson on Wednesday to 91-320 years in prison and fined him $60,000. Jackson pleaded innocent by reason of insanity.

Jackson, 40, a former Columbus internist, was convicted of 26 felony counts, including charges that he raped 11 women and committed 13 burglaries between 1975 and October 1978 in the Columbus area. The other two charges were attempted rape and gross sexual imposition.

He already had been convicted on similar charges in September in Akron.

Elderly couple dies hour apart

CHICAGO (AP) — A woman who had just returned from visiting her husband of 51 years in his hospital room returned to her own room, and at the exact minute her husband was pronounced dead, her heart also stopped.

The woman died an hour later, hospital staffers said.

"He was a sick man, and his death was not a surprise," Dr. Nancy Streitmatter, a cardiologist at Illinois Masonic Hospital, said of 79-year-old Salvatore Graziano. "But she (Mrs. Graziano) had a small heart attack with no complications and would have been released soon. Everyone here was stunned."

At about 9 a.m. Monday, Graziano's 70-year-old wife, Florence, was wheeled into her husband's room. She knew he was dying and that she would be saying goodbye. Minutes later, after she had returned to her room, Graziano died and his wife suffered a cardiac arrest.

"She arrested at the exact time that her husband was pronounced dead — at 9:09 a.m.," said Joy Clich, head nurse of the coronary care unit. "It was an eerie thing, and nobody on staff can believe it."

"We try to be scientific as doctors, but we're very human," said Dr. Streitmatter. "And when the son-in-law said to me, 'I think she just couldn't live without him,' I had to say yes."

Graziano had been hospitalized for more than a week after suffering a series of heart attacks when his wife, while making her daily visit July 22, complained of chest pains. She was admitted to the hospital and placed in a room next to her husband's.

Linda Ignowski, one of the couple's three daughters, said her father was not told of her mother's illness because "he was too sick to know, but we couldn't convince him she was OK."

The couple married in 1933, a year after they met at a ballroom on the city's North Side. On June 10, 1983, they danced at a nightclub to celebrate their 50th anniversary with more than 100 family members and friends.

"They were dependent on each other," said another daughter, Judy Koehler. "My mother didn't drive. My father took her everywhere, and she took care of everything for him. They kept each other young."

"Part of it," explained the oldest daughter, Rosalie Kowalske, "was that their emotions were so tied to each other, even more than any of us knew."

Dallas being sued over fence

Group says it violates free speech rights

DALLAS (AP) — Protest coordinators say they are ready to compromise on a controversial fence around the site of the Republican National Convention.

The Dallas March and Rally Commmittee has sued the City of Dallas over the 1.5-mile long, 6-foot high, chain link fence.

The committee says the fence violates the free speech rights of demonstrators by isolating them from their intended audience of Republican delegates and officials.

The city maintains the fence was not intended to segregate protests and is necessary for security and traffic control. Demonstrators, the city argues, are not entitled to a "captive" audience.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders said he would rule at noon today on the committee's request for a preliminary injunction.

The committee at first wanted Sanders to halt construction of the green vinyl-clad fence.

By the end of a hearing Wednesday on the injunction, the American Civil Liberties Union attorney representing the protest committee said his clients "conceded" convention security needs. He said they would be satisfied if the city was told to move part of the fence so demonstrators would be closer to the convention center entrance.

The fence now corrals demonstrators more than 700 feet from the entrance in the back third of a parking lot reserved for the cars of GOP officials.

A grassy slope, a wall and a cemetery also stand between the designated protest area and the convention center.

Police and Secret Service officials testified Wednesday that crowds should be kept at least 350 feet from delegates and party officials — a distance based on the range of most handguns.

Protest organizers also said they want the fence moved in spots that block city streets and sidewalks so they can "encircle" the convention center.

Sanders prepared for the hearing with a 90-minute walk along the perimeter of the fence Tuesday.

Doctors: Rabies victim 'incurable'

HOUSTON (AP) — The pediatrician treating a comatose 12-year-old rabies victim refuses to deem the girl's case "hopeless" but concedes the child is "incurable."

"We all feel that we're dealing with an incurable situation," Dr. Dixie Swanson said Wednesday at a news conference about the Laotian immigrant. "But we all go home and hope in our private moments."

Doctors at Texas Children's Hospital have refused to identify the girl further. The child was in "very critical condition," in a coma and on life support systems, doctors said.

An experimental anti-virus drug has had no apparent effects on their patient, Ms. Swanson said.

"So far we have seen no response," she said. "She is very far advanced in her disease."

Dr. Ralph Feigin, the hospital's physician-in-chief, said that the experimental drug ribavirin had been effective against rabies virus in lab tests.

"To the best of my knowledge, no one has ever used this drug in a patient who had rabies," Feigin said. He said doctors were using it in this case because there is no other treatment known for the disease.

Ms. Swanson said extensive questioning of the girl when she was conscious and of her family turned up no source of the disease.

Houston Health Director Dr. James Haughton said epidemiologists from the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta have taken blood samples from the child and hope to be able to identify by the middle of next week the type of animal which gave her the disease.

Ms. Swanson discounted the possibility a dog bite in Laos could have caused the illness.

A family friend, Sang Seunsom, told The Houston Post Tuesday that he called the child's father to express his sympathy and the man recalled the biting.

"In an extensive search to determine the source of the infection, the father recalled an incident years and years ago where the girl was walking down the street carrying some food," Ms. Swanson said. "A neighborhood puppy, who was well, nipped her heel to get to the food. To the best of the parents' recollection, the dog remained well."

Ms. Swanson said the incubation period for rabies is "weeks to months — not five to 10 years. If the encounter proves to be the source of her infection, it will be the longest recorded incubation period in medical history."

Doctors had difficulty diagnosing the rabies because the patient did not show typical symptoms, Feigin said. Physicians first believed she was suffering from encephalitis and then from herpes simplex.

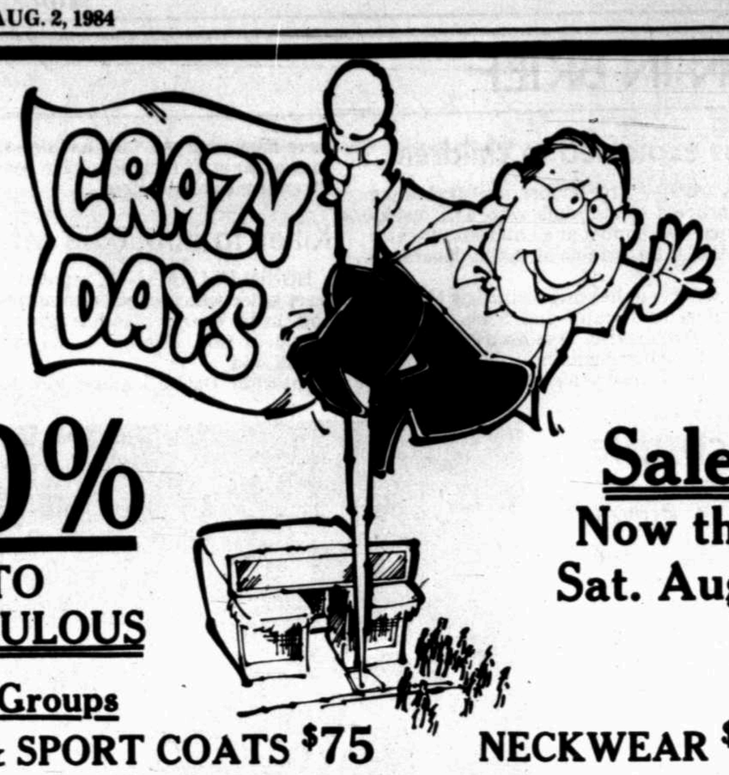

Amarilloans die in plane crash

FORT LUPTON, Colo. (AP) — The body of a third plane crash victim was found in the wreckage of a twin-engine plane, the Weld County coroner confirmed early today.

The Cessna 421 crashed in a cornfield Wednesday after one of the engines exploded. The two victims first discovered were Beryle Brister, 56, and his son, Jerry Brister, 30, both of Amarillo, Texas.

Coroner Paul Stoddard said the body of a third, male victim, whose identity was not yet known, was discovered after authorities returned to the crash site late Wednesday. Stoddard said the third victim's body was found toward the front of the plane, where wreckage had first concealed it from authorities.

The search for a third body was spurred by the information from families of the other two victims that neither of them had a pilot's license, Weld County officials said.

One-two punch powers Cubs past Mets

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

The San Diego Chicken gets revenge for the fans Wednesday night, beating up on a rubber umpire for all the calls disagreed with over the years.

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The San Diego Chicken was having great luck in punching out his rubber umpire, Midland pitcher Joe Housey was doing a good job of shaking off the distraction and Cub Joe Henderson was punching at the fences Wednesday night at Cubs Stadium.

The final result — and there was probably many of the 2,642 fans on hand who didn't know the score — was Midland 6, Jackson 4.

One can't really blame Housey for being distracted because "The Chicken" is a show in himself. Baseball almost becomes the sideshow. But Housey handled the chore well before losing his rythym in the eighth inning. He got the victory, allowing only seven hits and three earned runs. He walked only one and KOed four.

"To tell the truth, the Chicken is a distraction," said Housey. "He's running here and there and doing everything. I don't think there is a pitcher around who will say he isn't a distraction. But you have to pitch under all kinds of circumstances when you're out there. I thought I handled it all rather well. I kept my fastball down and was mixing in the slider as the out pitch. I had good control and that never hurts you. I think I lost my rythym in the eighth after a long layover in the inning before."

But Henderson was the man of the hour for those who were able to keep their minds on the game. He powered two opposite field homers while batting left against Jackson's Dewayne Vaughn, bracketing the stadium scoreboard.

In a rare appearance from the right side of the plate against Jackson lefty Rich Pickett, Henderson drove one deep to right that Darryl Denby hauled in at the fence. In all, Henderson doubled, homered twice, drove in three runs and scored twice in three official trips to the plate. His "almost" shot came in the seventh with the bases loaded and plated one run. Two more feet and Henderson would have had three homers and six RBI on the night.

"I honestly thought that third one was going out because I hit the ball pretty good," Henderson explained. "I wasn't really trying for a third homer because I don't get too many at-bats from the right side. If I've batted 240 times, about 210 has been from the left side. All nine of my homers have come from the left side of the plate. I'm not that comfortable from the right side.

"Sometimes, it feels like you can't miss the ball. I'm a streak hitter anyway. I was hitting around .300 and fell to .265 in one month. I've been taking a lot of extra batting practice with Chicago batting coach Cal Emery and I think that has helped a lot."

Don Hyman knocked in two runs for the Cubs and another scored from third base on a wild pitch by Pickett. The Cubs never trailed in the game, but Jackson made it close when they scored three times in the eighth to cut the margin to 6-4. Ron Kaufman, who had a shaky start in relief, settled down for his fifth save.

The victory gave Midland a 5-5 split on the homestand and they will carry a two-game winning streak into San Antonio Friday night.

CUB PAWS: The Cubs do not face Jackson again this season and end that series with a 4-6 record against the Met farm...Today is the last day off for the Cubs this season. "We play something like 30 straight days beginning Friday and everyone on the team knows how important it is for us to play well in the August stretch run," said Henderson...The road trip will be brief. The Cubs return home Wednesday...Mike Brumley's bat seems to be coming around. He has five hits in the last two games, getting three Wednesday...San Antonio, a loser to Arkansas Wednesday, is only one game ahead of the Cubs in the Texas League West standings, so the next five games are important for the Cubs...

Lost Chicken finds his home in America's stadiums

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Some mornings Ted Giannoulas doesn't know what city he is in. He was in Oakland Tuesday, Midland Wednesday and is in Oklahoma City today. But when the lights shine at night, he's ready to ruffle his feathers.

Giannoulas is the body in "The Chicken" suit. You don't have to say anymore. There are few among the young and old who don't know who — or what — "The Chicken" is.

He is known from California, his home base, to New York. If you want a crowd, just invite him to one of your games — basketball, football, baseball, hockey — it doesn't really matter. He has a show for all of them.

All of them that is except maybe the Olympics. It seemed strange that "The Chicken" would be in Oakland, Midland and Oklahoma City when the Olympics were going strong in Los Angeles. But even that obvious snub doesn't shake his perpetual "foul" mood.

"The Olympics are very sensitive and politically motivated and I'm sure someone would object if I was there," said Giannoulas.

Does that mean that the Chicken act would be out of place at the Olympics?

"No, I really don't think so. I would hate to think that comedy would be out of place anywhere in the world at any time, but the Olympics are politically charged and there would be those who wouldn't appreciate the Chicken."

But before you feel sorry for the man in the Chicken suit, just remember that he doesn't need the Olympics to keep a busy schedule.

"I've only been booked for 200 events this year, but you have to keep in mind that the basketball and hockey teams have yet to decide their promotion nights. I'll have over 300 events before Jan. 1. I'm full up through Labor Day though," said Giannoulas.

The story is well known how Giannoulas started his Chicken craze as a radio station disc jockey in San Diego 10½ years ago. A lawsuit was brought against him by the radio station when he started taking his act out on his own.

He changed his costume somewhat and had a "Grand Hatching" at a Padres' baseball game a few years ago.

"The Grand Hatching was the biggest thrill of my life after the law suit and everything. Over 47,000 people were there and gave me a standing ovation for over 10 minutes. It was a great thrill — one that can't be topped."

Since the Grand Hatching, the Chicken has averaged over 300 events a year, but Giannoulas claims that the fast-paced lifestyle doesn't bother him.

"I've performed live for over 50 million people and I think I can do this for another decade or so. If I have the energy after that, I'll keep going.

"I never get burned out. The travelling is burdensome because I don't know where I am some mornings. But when it's time to perform, I'm ready to go regardless where I am. I love this job. Who wouldn't?

"I love it when things start clicking with the crowd and I have very few 'foulups', no pun intended. When everything is going well this act is the aphrodisiac of comedy."

Giannoulas adds new gags to his bag of tricks frequently, but is the first to admit that he likes to stay with the old favorites.

"You never want to stand still and I'm always looking for new gags to put into the act. But I always try to keep the old favorites in. Frank Sinatra always has to sing 'My Way' and Rodney Dangerfield always has to say, 'I don't get on respect.' I have some things that people want to see over and over. After 10½ years at this, I must be doing something right."

Comedy is the treat the Chicken gives his fans and he claims nothing more. Giannoulas is single and has no children, but yet, kids love his act.

"I gear my act for the adults, but the kids just love the Chicken," says Giannoulas. "Kids are enamored by the idea of the Chicken. It's like believing in Santa Claus and the Easter Bunny. The Chicken is real to the kids."

And when Midland watched the funny foul Wednesday night at Cubs Stadium, "The Chicken" did seem to have life. It's hard to separate the fantasy from the person when Giannoulas works.

His success secret is now out. Now if he can figure out where he is...

The United States won its only Olympic soccer match ever when an American team defeated Estonia in Paris. The United States has not qualified for medal competition in soccer since 1956, except for 1972.

1932

The United States won the bronze medal in the men's field hockey competition despite losing both games they played by an aggregate score of 33-3. Baseball Today...

August 2

1906 — The "Hitless Wonder" Chicago White Sox began their American League record 19-game winning streak, one that would be tied only by the 1947 New York Yankees.

1907 — Walter Johnson made his major league debut with the Washington Senators and lost 3-2 to the Detroit Tigers. The first hit he ever yielded was a bunt single by Ty Cobb.

Romania women edge U.S. for gold

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The United States women's gymnastics team, rattled by delays and disputes in the judging, settled for Olympic silver to Romania's gold, literally falling short of duplicating the feat of the American men's team.

One day after the U.S. men achieved their first team gymnastics gold in 80 years, the American women finished higher than ever before in the event, surpassing their bronze performance in the 1948 London Games.

They might have done even better, but after a delay of nearly eight minutes over the judging of Kathy Johnson's routine on the balance beam, and a 9.6 score which displeased the Pauley Pavilion crowd, teammate Julianne McNamara took a tumble from the beam. And just about any hope the Americans had of catching the Romanians fell with her.

"I had to wait up there an awfully long time," McNamara said. She appeared distracted as she paced during the delay. Twenty seconds into her routine, she fell to the mat, clambered back onto the beam and finished, but for only a 9.2.

"I definitely think the long pause affected her," Don Peters, the U.S. women's coach, said. And despite filing some protests over the scoring — they had to do with other routines, not Johnson's or McNamara's — Peters acknowledged: "We lost. The Romanians simply beat us. The Romanians did a better job. Overall, the scoring was very fair.

"The gold medal is a little shinier, but we're happy with the silver," he added. "This team worked very hard to get it."

The men return to the gym tonight with the all-around individual title at stake. Peter Vidmar of Los Angeles, with 118.55 points, holds a slender edge over China's Li Ning, at 118.45, in the duel for the championship.

Wednesday night's bittersweet ending couldn't dull McNamara's perfect performances on the uneven bars and in the floor exercises. The 18-year-old from San Ramon, Calif., became the first American woman ever to chalk up 10s in Olympic gymnastics. Nor could it wipe away the 10 by 16-year-old Mary Lou Retton of Fairmont, W. Va., in the vault.

Nor could it tarnish the finish of two unprecedented gold-medal triumphs earlier in the day — by cyclist Steven Hegg of Dana Point, Calif., in the 4,000-meter pursuit and Greco-Roman wrestler Steven Fraser of Ann Arbor, Mich., in the 198.5-pound class.

Also on Wednesday:

— Mark Breland of Brooklyn, N.Y., stopped Pedro Reyes of Puerto Rico in the second round of their 147-pound match and Jerry Page of Columbus, Ohio, outpointed Helmut Gertel of West Germany at 139 pounds.

And, in U.S. team events:

— The men's basketball team rolled past Uruguay 104-68 as Patrick Ewing of national-champion Georgetown scored 17 points and had nine rebounds, three blocked shots and four of the team's 13 slam-dunks.

— The women's volleyball team rallied from seemingly certain defeat by upset-minded Brazil to win 12-15, 10-15, 15-5, 15-5, 15-12.

— The women's field hockey team beat Canada 4-1.

— The women's handball team edged China 25-22.

— The men's water polo team defeated Greece 12-5.

Going into today's competition, the United States has 29 medals, 18 of them gold. China, which won the bronze in the women's gymnastics after getting the silver in the men's competition, is second in overall medals with 13 and in gold with six.

South Korea and Great Britain each picked up its first gold of the Games on Wednesday as Weon-Kee Kim won in Greco-Roman wrestling at 134 pounds and Malcolm Cooper took the three-position small-bore rifle, while China swept to its fourth weightlifting gold as Yao Jingyuang won the lightweight division.

And Italy took three golds, two in the modern pentathlon, as it won the team event (the United States got the silver), Daniele Masala won the individual and Vicenzo Maenza won at 106 pounds in Greco-Roman wrestling.

The Romanian women started the optional exercises with a .45-point lead over the United States gymnasts and quickly widened it, aided by two 10s — Ecaterina Szabo in the vault and Simona Pauca on the balance beam.

When the counting was done, the Romanians had a winning margin of 392.20-391.20 and their first gold of these Games. And, more notably, they had their first women's gymnastics gold ever — a feat they had failed to achieve when Nadia Comaneci was capturing the hearts of the world in Montreal eight years ago.

Szabo has been touted as Comaneci's successor, the next unbeatable darling. But after Wednesday night, she was second in the overall performance with 78.75 points to Retton's 79.05. The women's individual championship will be decided Friday night.

Hegg was timed in 4 minutes, 39.5 seconds as he beat West Germany's Rolf Golz by 4.47 seconds in the 4,000 pursuit cycling. Leonard Harvey Nitz of Sacramento, Calif., won the bronze.

Hegg's triumph gave the United States its third cycling gold in four events, "It's everything I've been training for," he said.

"It's overwhelming. ... Someday my grandkids are going to look in the history books and they'll know I was the first guy to win a gold medal in track cycling. It's great."

U.S. swimmers taking aim at team gold medal mark

LOS ANGELES (AP) — America's gold-rush swimmers, inspired by a fiery pep talk from Coach Don Gambril, took aim at their Olympic Games' record of 20 gold medals today.

"I just rallied the troops for the next three days," said Gambril, who learned some of his motivational speeches at Alabama watching the late Paul Bryant fire up his football team. Bryant hired Gambril.

The U.S. swimmers have 11 gold medals at the halfway mark of the XXIII Olympiad — including an unprecedented double gold in one event.

But Gambril called a "very important" meeting Wednesday — an off-day in the competition — to lecture his squad on the dangers of overconfidence.

"We've won more gold medals than I thought we would at this stage but I feel we've let some silver and bronze medals slip away we could have won," Gambril said.

Overall, the U.S. swimming team has 16 medals.

In the 1968 Olympics in Mexico City, the United States won 20 golds and 51 medals overall. The total medal count is no longer a realistic target because only two swimmers per country can compete now per event.

The United States swept all five gold medals in Tuesday's competition at the Southern California Swim Center.

America's George DiCarlo and John Mykkanen were expected to battle for the 400-meter freestyle gold medal late today with the Soviet Union's world record-holder Vladmir Salnikov out of the competition because of the boycott.

The women's 100 butterfly should be a joust between Jenna Johnson and Mary T. Meagher of the United States.

The men's 200 breastroke had world record-holder Victor Davis of Canada as the favorite with America's Richard Schroeder an upset hope.

"Rich has been coming on and could react well under the pressure," said Gambril.

Cubs pass Mets in race for East Division crown

Associated Press

The Chicago Cubs have worked hard and fought long for first place in the National League East.

They took over by winning seven of 10 games against their two division rivals, the New York Mets and the Philadelphia Phillies.

They displaced the Mets from the top for the first time since July 7 with Wednesday's 5-4 victory over Philadelphia. It was the third consecutive one-run game between the teams, of which the Cubs have won two.

With Jody Davis' ninth-inning sacrifice fly, the winning run scored in the final inning for the second straight day. The Cubs hit three homers on Wednesday.

They won because of a misplaced bunt that traveled barely 60 feet.

"I'd certainly like to think the breaks go with you when you're playing well," Cubs Manager Jim Frey said.

"It was a bad bunt that landed in a good place," said Philadelphia Manager Paul Owens."It was a big one for the Cubs, it put them in first. It could have been a big one for us."

The Phillies scored in the top of the ninth off reliever Lee Smith, 6-4, to draw even 4-4.

But Henry Cotto led off the bottom of the inning with a double off Al Holland, 5-6, and the Phillies elected to walk Ryne Sandberg intentionally. Owens brought in right fielder Von Hayes as a fifth infielder. Gary Matthews attempted to bunt to the right side to put the runners in scoring position.

But the ball struck Matthews' bat near the label and what resulted was a lazy infield fly that landed left of the mound — which Holland had just vacated in hopes of cutting off the bunt.

"It hit the bat and it just jumped," Matthews said. "Believe me, I was just trying to get it towards first."

That loaded the bases with none out, and after Keith Moreland struck out, Davis lined the game-winner to left.

National League

Philadelphia's Steve Carlton carried a 3-2 lead into the sixth, only to have Moreland lead off the inning with his 11th homer. Two outs later, Ron Cey and Larry Bowa singled, and Dick Ruthven punched a grounder into right field for a single and the lead.

Len Matuszek doubled to lead off the second and eventually scored on Carlton's single.Philadelphia made it 3-0 in the third as Hayes led off with his 11th homer and Matuszek followed one out later with his 10th.

But the Cubs scored single runs in the fourth and fifth. Sandberg homered in the fourth inning, his 15th, extending his hitting streak to 11 games. Cey led off the fifth with his 15th of the season make the score 3-2.

Padres 4, Dodgers 3

Kevin McReynolds went 4-for-4 and drove in three runs, including two on a solo homer and a tie-breaking eighth-inning double.

Alejandro Pena, 11-6, got two outs in the eighth before Carmelo Martinez singled. McReynolds then lined Pena's first pitch to the center-field fence to score Martinez.

Craig Lefferts, 2-3, pitched 1 1-3 innings to gain the victory, with Rich Gossage recording the final two outs for his 21st save.

McReynolds tied the game with a bases-loaded single in the bottom of the second, then put the Padres on top 2-1 in the fourth with his 15th homer.

The victory was the fifth consecutive and eighth of nine for the Padres, who completed a sweep of their three-game home series with the Dodgers.

Pirates 4, Expos 0

Larry McWilliams pitched a six-hitter and Lee Lacy's two-run homer capped a four-run Pittsburgh sixth inning.McWilliams, 6-8, tossed his second shutout of the season.

Lee Mazzilli led off the sixth with a triple down the left field line, but was thrown out at the plate on Jason Thompson's grounder.Tony Pena's double scored Thompson, and Johnny Ray followed with an RBI single. Lacy then stroked his eighth homer of the season.

Charlie Lea, 14-6, pitching two days later than planned because of a stomach virus, failed for his third consecutive start to win his 15th game.

Cardinals 11, Mets 2

Joaquin Andujar won his major league-leading 15th game and St. Louis pounded out 17 hits against Dwight Gooden, 9-7, and two relievers as the Cardinals won their sixth in a row. The Mets dropped their sixth straight.

"I was surprised to see us get 17 hits," Andujar said. "I expected a four- or five-hitter — because he (Gooden) is tough."

Andujar, 15-9, allowed seven hits and struck out five. It was his 10th complete game of the season, also tops in the majors.

Braves 6, Astros 5

Dale Murphy's league-leading 26th home run, a two-run shot in the eighth inning, gave Atlanta a comeback victory. Phil Garner's RBI single and a two-run pinch-single by Jim Pankovits gave Houston a 5-4 lead in the bottom of the seventh.

Rafael Ramirez led off the eighth with a single and Murphy followed with his drive off reliever Julio Salano, 0-1.

Reds 6, Giants 3

Gary Redus drove in three runs with a homer and a seventh-inning single while Joe Price hurled a four-hitter to send the visitors to their fourth straight defeat.

Redus highlighted the three-run seventh inning with his RBI single. His two-run homer gave Cincinnati a 2-0 lead in the third. Nick Esasky added a sixth run with his eighth homer in the eighth inning. Bob Brenly drilled his 12th in the sixth.

Midland gains state little league berth

From Staff Reports

The Midland North Central Little League All-Stars came back from their first loss of the season to win the next two games, the regional title and qualify for the state tournament in Waco, beginning Monday.

At state, North Central will be fighting for the right to represent Texas in the Southern United States Regional Tournament in St. Petersburg, Fla.

In the first game of three against Pecos, North Central dropped a 6-5 decision. Ricky Flores was the winning pitcher while John Dickenson suffered the loss.

In game two, North Central came back to claim a 6-3 victory with Jason Stone pitching for the win. North Central then wrapped up the title with a 9-3 victory. Dickenson rebounded from his first game pitching defeat for the win while Flores took the loss.

North Central will open state play Monday at 5:30 p.m. on Norcors Field in the little league complex adjacent to Baylor University. Sixteen teams will be fighting in the single elimination play.

Chisox down Bosox, 5-3

Associated Press

The first inning has been the worst inning for Chicago White Sox pitcher LaMarr Hoyt this season.

So Wednesday night's complete-game, 5-3 victory over the Boston Red Sox was a satisfying moment for the 1983 Cy Young Award winner.

"I want to win every game, but I can't do that. The idea for me is finishing games, and I wanted to finish this one badly," Hoyt said.

Hoyt, who had been knocked out by the New York Yankees after just two-thirds of an inning last Friday night, said he relied on his fastball early in the game, and on breaking balls in the final three innings to limit Boston to seven hits and one walk. He struck out four and issued a ninth-inning homer to Bill Buckner.

Hoyt also managed to get out of the first inning without allowing a run for only the ninth time in 23 starts.

Hoyt, 9-11, broke a personal three-game losing streak with the victory, getting support from Ron Kittle's three-run homer.

"I pitched good inside tonight," Hoyt said. "I used the fastball more than any other time this year."

Mariners 5, Twins 1

Salome Barojas combined with two relievers to scatter nine hits as Seattle defeated Minnesota and stopped the Twins' five-game winning streak.

Barojas, 7-3, worked five innings and allowed one run on six hits while walking four and striking out two. Dave Beard worked the next three innings, and Mike Stanton pitched a hitless ninth.

Seattle took a 1-0 lead in the first on an RBI groundout by Spike Owen off Mike Smithson, 11-9. The Mariners scored twice in the third on Dave Henderson's bases-loaded single and an error by Smithson on Barry Bonnell's chopper in front of the plate for all the runs they needed.

American League

Angels 6, A's 4

Tommy John allowed six hits over 7 1-3 innings and Rob Picciolo contributed two RBI to lead California over Oakland, the Angels' third straight victory. John, 6-9, picked up his first win since July 8 with relief help from Luis Sanchez, who worked 1 2-3 innings.

Loser Bill Krueger, 7-8, lasted only 3 2-3 innings before leaving the game after giving up four hits, five walks and four runs.

Orioles 7, Rangers 2

Cal Ripken Jr. and Wayne Gross clouted two-run homers and Storm Davis scattered seven hits as Baltimore defeated Texas.

The Orioles rapped out seven extra-base hits, easing the way for the 22-year-old Davis, 11-4, to match his career high of five consecutive victories.After Texas scored an unearned run in the second inning, the Orioles rallied for five in the third while chasing Charlie Hough, 1-9.

Indians 4, Tigers 2

George Vukovich blasted two solo home runs to back the combined three-hit pitching of Steve Farr and reliever Ernie Camacho and lead Cleveland over Detroit.

Farr, 2-7, retired the first 14 batters he faced and allowed two hits through 6 1-3 innings before Camacho blanked the Tigers the rest of the way to earn his 13th save. Farr struck out eight and walked two to earn his second victory since being recalled May 15 from Maine of the International League.

Blue Jays 4, Royals 1

Damaso Garcia snapped a 1-1 tie with a run-scoring single in the seventh inning and pinch-hitter Ernie Whitt blasted a two-run homer in the eighth to lead Toronto over Kansas City.

Garcia's single scored Tony Fernandez, who had tripled, and made a winner of Luis Leal, 12-2. Leal checked the Royals on eight hits through seven innings. Jim Gott, the third Toronto pitcher, collected his second save in as many games. Whitt's homer, his seventh this season, came off reliever Bret Saberhagen.

Yankees 7, Brewers 3

Phil Niekro won his 13th game and Ken Griffey's three-run homer highlighted a five-run first inning as New York coasted over Milwaukee.

Niekro, 13-5, scattered five hits in posting his 281st career victory. He walked three and struck out three as the Yankees won for the sixth time in their last seven games. The Yankees supported Niekro with a 14-hit attack, including a string of five straight hits off losing pitcher Jamie Cocanower, 7-11, when the Yankees broke the game open in the first.

Clear Lake's Puddy leads South to 108-99 victory

Texas Basketball All-Stars

HOUSTON (AP) — Clear Lake's Glenn Puddy may want to share his most valuable player trophy with teammate James Gulley following the South's 108-99 victory over the North in the Texas High School Coaches Association All-Star basketball game.

"We worked real hard all week in practice," the Southern Methodist-bound Puddy said. "I went against Gulley every day and he beat me up pretty good. That helped tonight."

Gulley, 6-8, 280, also was a crowd-pleaser, finishing with eight points, including a booming dunk shot late in the game.

Puddy scored 21 points in the game including eight quick points to start the third quarter when the South built up a 17-point, 77-60 lead.

"I just got into the flow of things and it started happening for me," Puddy said. "I love it. It was great to end it like this."

The North was led by Frank Williams of Dallas Samuell. Williams had 20 points and earned MVP honors for his team.

"I'm not saying I didn't deserve it but I don't feel I accomplished what I really wanted in this game," Williams said. "I wanted to see how I could hold up against people my own size and I didn't feel I accomplished that."

A crowd estimated at 3,300, the lowest basketball attendance since 1954, watched the free-wheeling game in Hofheinz Pavilion on the University of Houston campus.

The South victory avenged a 91-86 loss last year at Fort Worth and narrowed the North's overall lead in the series to 20-19.

The Rebels took the lead for good with 7:26 to go in the second quarter on a pair of free throws by Cross Road's Danny Hughes although the North tied it at 45-45 shortly before halftime.

The South was leading 100-90 with 2:36 to play when the North put on one last surge cutting the margin to 104-99 with 48 seconds remaining. Hughes sanks a pair of free throws with 13 seconds left to put off any North comeback hopes.

"They (South) didn't have a weak link on their team and we kind of ran out of gas at the end of the first half," North Coach Ton Mauldin of Morton said.

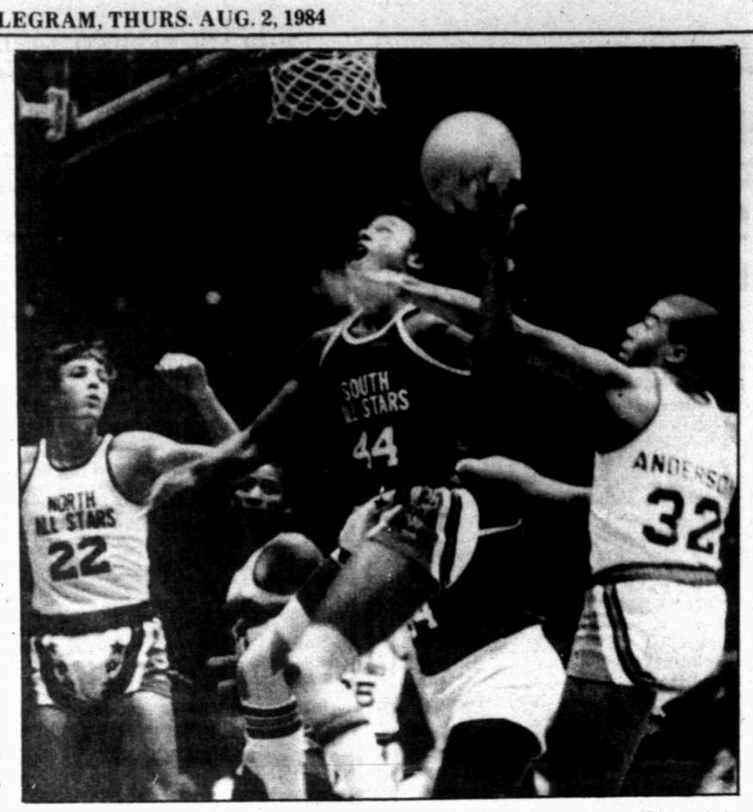

Aldine Nimitz' Tom Grant, headed for the University of Houston, scored 13 points for the South and Coyle Winborn of Pampa added 12 points for the North, including 10 in the fourth quarter.

Bryan's Darrell Mitchell, who finished with 13 points in the game, won a halftime dunk shot contest.

Mize hoping to repeat at Memphis

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Larry Mize, who broke through to his first career victory here a year ago, is hoping a return to Memphis will provide a turnaround in his golfing fortunes this season.

"Coming back to Memphis can't do anything but help," the 25-year-old Mize said before teeing off today in the first round of the $500,000 Danny Thomas-Memphis Classic.

"This is like coming home.There are good memories here. I'm really looking forward to it, looking forward to turning it around here.

"I played pretty well the first half of the year, but the last few months my game hasn't been exactly what I'd like it to be.

"Actually, I'm playing pretty well. I feel real good about the way I'm hitting the ball," said Mize, who has collected $126,509 in this, his third season on the tour, and has had four top-10 finishes.

"I'm just not scoring very well, not as well as I should. I'm playing well and not scoring. It's just a matter of getting the putts to fall.

"But just last week I started putting a little better. It's moving in the right direction. And I'm looking for the chance to turn things around this week."

Mize, who played with former President Gerald Ford in Wednesday's pro-am, has major opposition in Tom Kite and Gary Koch, each a two-time winner this season, and such consistent performers as Gil Morgan and former U.S. Open and PGA champ Larry Nelson.

The 156-man field that will be chasing a $90,000 first prize over the 7,249-yard Colonial Country Club course also contains 1984 tour title-winners Andy Bean, Bob Eastwood, Scott Hoch, Hale Irwin, John Mahaffey, Tom Purtzer and Scott Simpson.

Also on hand are Gary Player, four-time Memphis winner Dave Hill, Jerry Pate and 54-year-old Gene Littler, making his first start since suffering a broken arm five months ago.

Beaumont pounds out 7-1 Texas League win over Tulsa

Associated Press

The Beaumont Golden Gators scored early and held on for a 7-1 victory over Tulsa in Texas League baseball action Wednesday night.

Mark Washington doubled in the first of two first-inning runs. He singled and scored on James Steels' double in the third.

Beaumont added to its lead with runs in the third, fifth and eighth. Jimmy Thomas picked up his seventh homer for Beaumont.

Bill Long, 10-3, was the winning pitcher over Terry Johnson, 6-9. Pete Kutsukos got his 19th save.

In other league games Wednesday, El Paso beat Shreveport 7-4, and Arkansas edged San Antonio 6-5.

Stan Davis homered twice, his eighth and ninth of the season, for El Paso in its win over Shreveport. He slugged a two-run homer in the first inning to get the Diablos into an early 3-1 lead, then followed with a solo homer in the third that raised the lead to 6-1.

Mike Felder scored three runs for El Paso and stole his 44th and 45th bases of the season.

Stan Plesac, 1-0, was the winning pitcher and Jim Teahan, 0-1, the loser.

Arkansas, which had lost eight of nine games in the current homestand, scored three runs in the seventh inning for a 6-2 lead and held on for a one-run victory over San Antonio.

Catcher Harry McCulla scored on a ground out by Eddie Tanner, Bob Helsom scored on pinch hitter Curt Ford's sacrifice, and Mike Harris scored on a single by Larry Reynolds.

SWIMMING

John Moffet of the United States was scratched from the event because of a pulled groin muscle. "John just can't go," said Gambril. "It's a big disappointment but maybe Schroeder can pickup the load."

The women's 100 breastroke loomed as a duel between Tracy Caulkins and Susan Rapp of the United States although Canada's Anne Ottenbrite, the gold medalist in the 200 breaststroke, was a distinct threat.

The men's 400 freestyle relay could produce another classic confrontation between the United States and the West German team led by Michael Gross.

"The relay should be exciting but don't forget the Australians," said Gambril. "This could be their best chance for a gold medal."

The swimming competition continues daily until the finale on Saturday.

Diving preliminaries begin Sunday morning with the springboard competition, and the competition continues through the final day of the Olympics, Aug. 12.

Hasek gives best effort for COM at TAGS state

From Staff Reports

Michella Hasek, 13, gave her all in the Texas Age Group Swimming state meet in San Antonio this weekend and as a result led City of Midland with the highest finishes of the meet.

Competing in the 200 backstroke, Hasek came away with a fourth place finish with a time of 2:30.56, eight seconds off her previously best time and one-half second off the pace needed to qualify for Junior Olympics.

Though Hasek missed her JO time, she still has five years of eligibility remaining.

In the 100 backstroke, Hasek placed fifth in 1:10.90.

Ryan Bell was a a ninth place finisher in each of the 100 and 200 backstrokes.

COM coach Brad Swendig was impressed with his team's performance, saying, "I would have been happy if they would have only cut two or three seconds off their times. Not only did Michella take eight seconds off her time, but two relay teams cut seven and 11 seconds off theirs and Stacy McClure, who barely qualified for the mmet, took a full second off her time in the 50 freestyle. She moved up from about 40th place to 20th with her time. To drop that much in the 50 is incredible."

The two relays that shaved the time off their previous best was the 10 and under boys in the 200 freestyle relay: Clay Brown, Jon Green, Tim Yarborough and Matt Welch. They took 11 seconds off their time and will all be back this winter to try and improve it even further.

The senior boys 400 medley relay shaved seven seconds off their time and consist of Sam Perry, Alan Reed, Ryan Bell and Jay Green.

"A lot of times, swimmers have to do everything they can to get to state and once they get there they have nothing left to give," said Swendig. "I thought this was a very successful meet for us and I hope we can improve as individuals and as a team in the future.

Smerek prefers defensive end

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — A reluctant Don Smerek, who has been tapped to fill in for missing defensive tackle Randy White, says he'd just as soon stick to chasing the defensive end spot for the Dallas Cowboys.

But with White on an extended fishing trip that may linger into the regular season, an equally reluctant defensive coordinator Ernie Stautner has settled on Smerek to fill in.

Smerek, who had been given first shot at Harvey Martin's old job at right defensive end, was informed this week that he is to be the new Randy White — at least for the time being.

"I'll be the starting tackle if they don't move me to linebacker or defensive back before Saturday," Smerek said with a laugh.

Smerek's shift means 1983 No. 1 draft choice Jim Jeffcoat will be the starting right end in Saturday's exhibition opener against the Green Bay Packers at Texas Stadium.

Coe looks more like Lord Byron than an athlete

LOS ANGELES — The first look you get at Sebastian Coe, you figure this is what Lord Byron must have looked like. This is not a major British athlete, this is a minor British poet.

You see him on the track and you're tempted to ask: "Shouldn't you be composing odes to a waterfowl or Sonnets to the Portuguese or reading verse beneath a balcony in Venice?" Or, "How is Keats these days?" You politely ask him if his first names aren't Percy Bysshe.

He looks — well, "effete" isn't the word, but, it's close. Put it this way: You wouldn't be too surprised if he had posed once for Gainsborough's Blue Boy.

First of all, there's the dark curly hair, the aquiline nose, pale forehead. The faintly haunted look. This is either David Copperfield or a character out of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," not a locker room. He should be sniffing a rose, harking a lark, eulogizing an urn, not running around in his underwear. He should be a sad, melancholy young troubadour brooding on the fate of a buttercup, not running down the flower of the world's racers. There's the look of the perennial English schoolboy about him. A "Chariots of Fire" scene come to life.

Even the name is evocative of the England of (ital) belles lettres, (unital) the Romantic poets. "Sebastian Coe." It's not a runner's name, it's a writer's. Runners are named "Chuck" or "Steve," or "Emil," or "Ivan." "Sebastian Coe" suggests somebody who writes with a feather and calls his mother, "Mater," lives in the family castle at Brideshead.

Mile runners, to be sure, are not NFL linebackers as a class. There's a neurasthenic quality to the best of them. But Coe adds another dimension to it. The bard's "wan and palely loitering" look.

It's nature's joke. This pale and skinny little Brit is one of history's toughest competitors. You watch him and you'll understand where they got that Empire.

The camouflage exists right into the race. If Seb Coe were an animal, he'd probably be a spotted deer, a modern Bambi. He runs with the loping grace of a startled fawn. He does not appear so much to be running a race as chasing a butterfly. You wonder what he did with his net.

When he first came to Moscow four years ago, a lot of people there thought Britain had made a mistake and sent their poet laureate. The other British runner looked more the part. There's nothing poetic about Steve Ovett, but the hard-bitten press corps wondered about this other youngster who looked like an angel in a school play.

The Russians called him "the young English lord" or "young Master Coe," and, when he lost the 800 meters after getting pushed around to the outside of the track, they thought he was just another picture runner, pretty to look at and dangerous to a clock but no threat at all when it came to the rough-and-tumble of the Olympic Games.

Steve Ovett, the eventual winner in the 800 at Moscow, thrashed his way through tightly-bunched packs of competitors like a peer of the realm caning his coachmen. Coe ran his usual esthetic race parked outside two or three runners the whole way. "Seb must think it's a bloody ballet!" growled one of the British newsmen watching. Winner Ovett was not the most popular athlete over the gin-ands of Fleet Street at Moscow.

Coe himself recalled the race over lunch at the UCLA Olympic Village the other day. "I made he cardinal mistake of losing contact with the true competition. When the opportunity came, I didn't respond quickly enough." He spent the whole race in Lane 2 which meant ultimately that, in 800 meters, he ended up running 10-to-11 meters more than any other leader in the race.

When the metric mile came along, even Track & Field News was ready to give up on the great Brit who had set four world records. It was sadly concluded he belonged in the roll of British runners who ran best over foggy moors like Roger Bannister, breaking 4-minte barriers but not Olympic tapes.

Coe himself was made of sterner stuff. A reporer ran into him in a top floor corridor of the Hotel Rossia near Red Square on the eve of the mile final. "A lot of people are hoping you can bring it off," he said. "Oh," said Coe. "I'm sure I can."

In the ensuing 1500, the crowd fancied Ovett who had won 41 straight races at that distance or the East German, Jurgen Straub, another noted infighter.

But Keats and Shelley or Lord Byron would have loved Sebastian Coe's race. Because of the conditions of the race — Straub and Ovett bristling away — Coe was able to run freely. "It's what I do best." He struck his beautiful form like a hunter going over hedges. He swept past the German on the turn, blazed the final hundred in 12 flat and flashed across the finish line. He had finally run a race that rhymed.

Seb Coe is back at the Olympic Games this year, as usual discounted as a semi-literary figure. As at Moscow, he is deemed not at top form, a debilitating glandular disorder akin to the dormitory disease, mononucleosis, having drained some of his energy for training. (You would imagine Lord Byron would have glandular disorders, too. It fits the image.)

But the Ovetts, the Crams, the Steve Scotts, Marees and Jim Spiveys would do well to check that fragile little Englishman at their shoulder. He's not as ethereal as he might look. This is one of the great athletes in the world, never mind if he looks like Childe Harold in cleats.

Houston's Ransom still No. 3 QB

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Brian Ransom thought he was being groomed as the Dallas Cowboys' No. 3 quarterback a year ago — until he became the final player the Cowboys cut.

That put Ransom back on the streets looking for a job, until the Houston Oilers offered him a free agent contract.

Ransom has a job with the Oilers this season, but he faces the same situation that would have confronted him in Dallas. He'll still be No. 3 behind Warren Moon (and Moon's $6 million contract) and Oliver Luck, the only player among them who has played in the National Football League.

But Ransom looks only for silver linings. For now, he's happy with clipboard-toting.

"Being my second year, I feel I have to be patient and keep a positive attitude because I'm the youngest guy," Ransom said. "It puts me in a position to say, 'Hey, I just turned 24, I still have time to build on my career. It's not like I just turned 30 and have only a couple of years left.' "

Ransom has had moments during the last two years when it was hard to find the positive side.

He entered his senior year in 1982 at Tennessee State with great expectations for himself and the team, but a shoulder separation before the first game wiped out most of his season. He also thinks it kept him from being drafted in the NFL.

Ransom sought invitations to pro scouting combine workouts to prove he still could play, but no invitation came.

After being cut by the Cowboys and picked up by the Oilers, Ransom thought some playing time might be around the corner. But then came the signing of Moon, who had spent six years breaking passing records in the Canadian Football League.

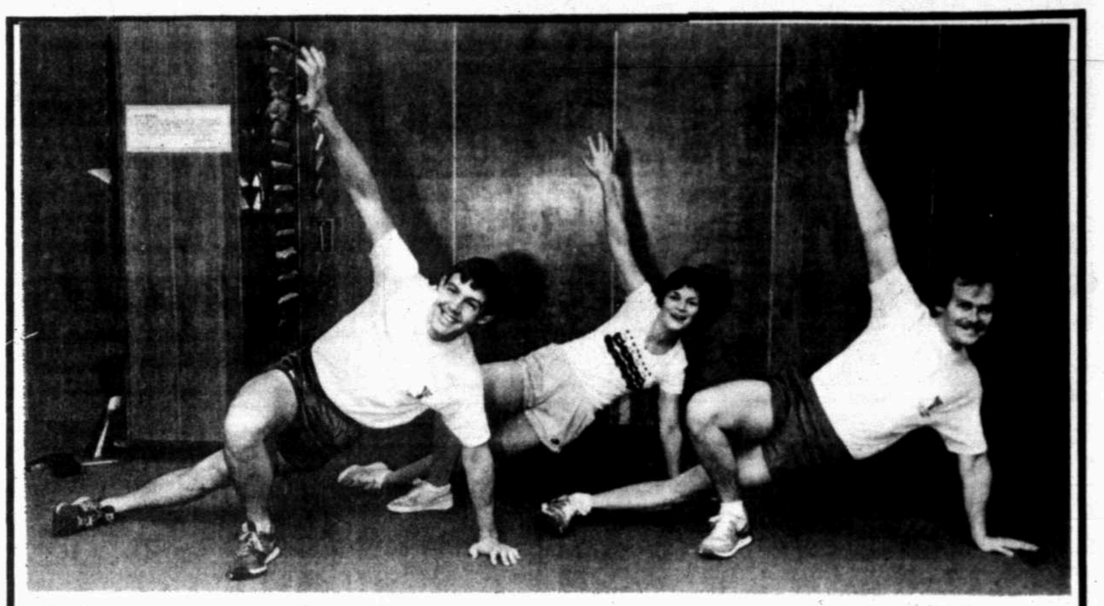

"The signing of Warren was a setback for me because it meant a guy was coming in with quite a bit more professional experience," Ransom said. "But it also had its positive points in that I could work with him and learn from him.

"I'm just going to prepare myself as though I'm going to play. If I play, I think I'll do well and if I don't, I'll be ready to do well," he said. "So as long as I keep the attitude and discipline to keep myself prepared, good things will happen for me."

Ransom also expects good things to happen to the Oilers this season after a 2-14 finish last year. Ransom sees a big attitude adjustment since his arrival last September.

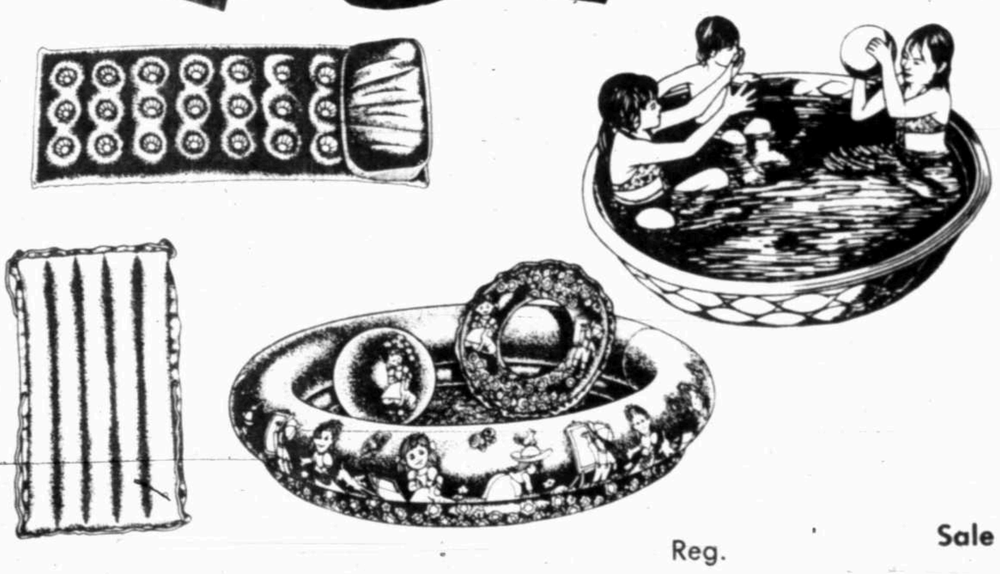

"When I arrived last year, the guys were working hard and trying to do their best but there was always a shadow cast over the team," Ransom said.

"When we were alone and off the field, we would always talk about it. The older guys would talk to me, 'What do you see as being wrong, just coming in.' We'd always talk about why can't we win a game? It was why this and why that."

Forecasters: No sure hits expected

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — None of the new network shows stands an "excellent" chance of becoming a hit in the upcoming fall season, according to a leading New York advertising company.

Four shows, two each on ABC and CBS, have a "good" chance of becoming hits, based on the annual season analysis by Dancer Fitzgerald Sample.

It's hardly surprising that the new shows face a rigorous shakedown, since ABC's "Hotel" was the only new fall show to make it into the Top 10 for last season. CBS's "Scarecrow & Mrs. King" and "AfterMASH" were the only other fall shows to make it into the Top 20. Most series fail.

The three networks are introducing 22 new shows in the fall, and half of those are given little chance of success by DFS. It says nine shows are longshots and two are sure failures.

"This could be the tightest three-network race in years," said the report, edited by Phil Burrell. CBS is expected to squeak to a very narrow victory based on its regular programming.

Burrell said he found a sense of optimism at the networks because the ratings have stabilized for the first time in four years. They are also buoyed by record high household usage levels.

Here are the shows given a "good" chance of becoming hits:

— ABC's "Paper Dolls," a serial centered on the world of fashion and modeling. DFS sees its strongest asset in executive producer Leonard Goldberg, "who worked miracles with a similarly airy 'Charlie's Angels' nearly a decade ago. In his hands 'Paper Dolls' might well emerge as million dollar mannequins along ABC's runway to fame."

— ABC's "Finder of Lost Loves," in which Tony Franciosa plays a worldly man who helps people find old love interests. It combines love and mystery and offers the same kind of potential for anthological stories as "The Love Boat" — also incidentally produced by Aaron Spelling and Douglas Cramer.

— NBC's "The Bill Cosby Show," which marks the comedian's return to TV after an absence of 13 years. He plays a New York doctor who has to use his sense of humor to retain his sanity around his children.

— NBC's "Hunter," which stars Fred Dryer as a maverick cop (is there any other kind on TV?). It's from Stephen J. Cannell, who molded "The A-Team" and "Riptide" into hits.

Burrell gives a "good-fair" chance to CBS' "Murder, She Wrote," in which Angela Lansbury plays an Agatha Christie-type who also solves as well as creates mysteries. The producers and creators are Richard Levinson and William Link. Not a fast car or a flying fist in the whole show. Now, that's something to celebrate.

The two shows given the least chance of success are NBC's "Punky Brewster" and CBS' "Dreams."

DFS calls "Dreams," a comedy about a struggling rock 'n' roll band, "exclusively kidvid." It says, "IF this is the stuff that 'Dreams' are made of ... nightmares are sure to follow."

"Punky Brewster" centers on the relationship between a feisty 7-year-old girl and a cranky old photographer. The analysis says it will probably appeal more to "old folks who think it's cute."

'La Cage aux Folles' nets nearly $1 million

NEW YORK (AP) — It will buy a lot of feathers. The combined grosses for the New York and West Coast companies of "La Cage aux Folles," the saucy musical smash set in a French Riviera nightclub, reached nearly $1 million for the week ending July 15.

The New York production, which begins its second year Aug. 21, grossed $482,662, setting a new house record at the Palace Theater for a regular week, said Shirley Herz, spokeswoman for the show. And a second company, currently playing the Golden Gate Theater in San Francisco, took in $483,600 for the same week.

The touring edition moves to Los Angeles' Pantages Theater in September, where, according to producer Allan Carr, the musical already has an advance sale of more than $4 million.

Sheriff ready with responses

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — For the next seven weeks, when anyone talks to Gwinnett County Sheriff W.J. Dodd they may hear a recording, even though he's standing right there.

Dodd had corrective oral surgery and will have his mouth wired shut. So he's taping several messages he might need to say.

The surgery is to correct a problem caused years ago when he was hit by a piece of lumber.

The sheriff will carry around a tape recorder, and if he needs an answer to a common question, he'll be ready.

Dodd, a Democrat seeking re-election in November, says he'll be able to talk in September.

Opening lead: Ace of ♣.

On defense, choosing the right suit to attack is often only part of the problem. Equally important is which card you lead.

North-South conducted a routine auction to an acceptable game. The contract would have been virtually a laydown had there been no wasted values in clubs. With nothing to guide him, West chose the ace of clubs as his opening lead.

When dummy appeared, two things were obvious: It was futile to continue clubs; and the defenders would have to get their tricks in a hurry, because the diamond suit on the table offered a rich source of discards.

It was also clear the only suit that offered any hope for the defense was hearts. So West shifted to the ace of hearts and continued with the jack—"I had to find you with the K-10 of hearts, partner!" Declarer covered with dummy's queen and his 10 became a trick—making four-odd.

West's analysis was right as far as it went, but it did not go far enough! If West finds the right shift at trick two, he need find his partner with no more than K-9 of hearts to defeat the contract.

The winning defense at trick two is to shift to the jack of hearts. (A low heart is no good—declarer simply plays low from the board.) East captures dummy's queen with the king and returns the suit. Now declarer's 10 is trapped by the combined East-West tenace. Try it.

'Joy of Sex' film isn't sex movie

LOS ANGELES (AP) — From "Valley Girl" to "Joy of Sex," Martha Coolidge's recent career as a film director seems at first blush to be based on libidinous sensation.

Not so, insists the film maker, who found early success with serious docudramas.

"Valley Girl," which sounded like a ripoff of the Val-Girl fad, was praised by many critics as a funny and touching depiction of young love. The returns are not yet in for "Joy of Sex," which Paramount is releasing this month. Miss Coolidge insists the title is misleading.

"It's about sex, but it isn't a sex movie," explains the articulate, businesslike director. "It's about a 17-year-old girl who has been over-protected and wants to get experience. She wants love, but she doesn't know how to find it.

"She goes through the agonies of adolescence that all of us have endured, not knowing about sex, wondering how it is done, yearning to be alone with a boy, insecure of doing the right thing.

"The movie is extremely joyous, and it's the first adolescent sex comedy with no prostitutes. There is only a flash of background nudity, nothing important. The rating is R, but I don't think it should be. A PG13 (special guidance for children under 13) would be more appropriate. The picture is too sweet to be an R."

"Joy of Sex" has had a long history. Paramount Pictures bought title rights to the Alex Comfort sex manual 10 years ago, tried many approaches to a movie. All failed until the National Lampoon people took it on. Meanwhile, Paramount had been impressed by "Valley Girl" and proposed the project to the 37-year-old Miss Coolidge.

She had filmed "Valley Girl" for an incredible $350,000 (reported gross: $17 million) and looked forward to the luxury of working for a major studio. Forget it. Paramount wanted "Joy of Sex" filmed for under $3 million. Miss Coolidge did.

"And I had only two weeks to prepare, because Paramount would lose rights to the title if the picture wasn't started before May 31 last year," she added.

The film was originally called "National Lampoon's Joy of Sex," but the Lampoon dropped out. "The tone of the picture is not what you associate with the National Lampoon," the director explained.

Miss Coolidge, who recently married producer Michael Backes, is now working in the Century City luxury of Tri-Star Pictures, preparing for a fall start of "Real Genius." Yes, it's another youth comedy, but this time she'll have a budget befitting her status as a can-do director.

Movie elevates human spirit

A Review

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"THE NEVERENDING STORY" is a wondrous journey into the uncharted realm of pure imagination. For sheer originality, it recalls the golden era of Disney animation and the first "Star Wars."

How refreshing to encounter a movie that not only entertains but elevates the human spirit. Hearty applause for German filmmaker Wolfgang Petersen, his international cast and his crew of magic makers. Their achievement is even more impressive when you consider that the film is not based on a classic book, nor is it a remake.

"The Neverending Story" begins at breakfast with a disconsolate schoolboy (Barret Oliver) and his unfeeling father (Gerald McRaney). Menaced by three bullies on his way to school, the boy ducks into an old bookstore. He picks up a book, takes it to the school attic and starts to read.

Suddenly he is transformed to the strange, wonderful world of Fantasia (a tribute to Disney?). The wildly divergent characters live in harmony, but their entire existence is being threatened by the Nothing, a malevolent force that is sweeping over the land, destroying everything. To make matters worse, the Empress is dying.

Citizens of Fantasia gather in the Ivory Tower for an emergency meeting. Who could possibly find a cure for the Empress and stop the Nothing? All agree it should be the hunter Atreyu. They are shocked to discover he is a small boy (Noah Hathaway).

The swift-moving episodes are impossible to recount. Excitement is always at high pitch, without the cheap thrills of other summer movies. The film cleverly moves back and forth between the adventures and the astounded reader, so you are ever aware of his reactions.

Wolfgang Petersen directed "The Neverending Story" and wrote it with Herman Weigel. The credits list scores of technicians, but Petersen earns the major credit for pursuing his vision and keeping it pure. The cast is ideal, especially the two California lads, Oliver and Hathaway, and Tami Stronach as the incredibly beautiful child Empress.

One minor complaint: the rock-style title song at the beginning and end almost destroys the mood of fantasy.

Rated PG because the very young might be scared. The rest of the family should find total enjoyment.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, August 3, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Singer Tony Bennett, author Leon Uris, Toronto Blue Jays' Jim Gott, actor Martin Sheen and Senator John Stennis of Mississippi share your birthday. Also born on this date: the late actress Dolores Del Rio. Work requires your undivided attention in the months ahead. Take things one at a time, both in the office and at home, and you will enjoy a banner year. Financial pressures ease when you learn to put your money where it will bring the greatest return. A born leader, you find it difficult to accept criticism or contrary views. Realize that anyone can make a mistake and welcome suggestions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A long-standing disagreement can be resolved now. Accept a compromise. A change of environment gives you a chance to make a new start. Develop a neglected artistic talent.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take full advantage of a golden career or financial opportunity. A special love relationship buoys your spirits. Confide only in those who have proven their loyalty. A windfall reduces tension.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Being temperamental could slow your rise to the top. Rethink your priorities. A positive attitude is the key to success. Some good news arrives late in the day. Romance is favored.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be more compassionate. You feel strongly attracted to a newcomer. Do not be afraid to show your feelings. A financial dilemma is best handled by experts. Know your limitations.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If a business plan seems unrealistic, speak up. Your common sense saves the day. Do not let other people's mistakes slow you down. A phone call enhances romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A romance becomes more intense. Force yourself to put business before pleasure. Your financial success makes you popular. Let mate know if you change your plans. Consideration pays big dividends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your creative writing gets a better reception now. Keep at it. You could make big money in the near future. Wield your power wisely and you will quickly climb to the top.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your schedule is busier than you anticipated. Sticking to it could produce a bonus or promotion; accelerate your efforts. A romantic overture surprises and delights you. Be assertive in love.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A conflict could arise with a friend, slowing you down. Take evasive action. Put on a cheerful face and think positive at all times. The romantic outlook shows dramatic improvement.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your faith is restored, making you feel whole again. Celebrate in a favorite restaurant, but avoid running up a big tab. Give more thought to your personal needs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Play your cards right and others will share a secret. Financial backing is available to form a partnership or buy a home. Children have special needs. Hear them out. Love triumphs.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Communication with management or a union improves. Settle a dispute with mate before it escalates. Publishing can be a source of large financial rewards. Devote more time to creative self-expression.

Therapy helps infants with delayed skills

Jerry Mennenga/Midland Reporter-Telegram

Beth Ledbetter, MHMR registered occupational therapist, works with Priscilla Jimenez and her son Anthony, a victim of Down's syndrome, in MHMR's Infant Stimulation Program.

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When Priscilla Jimenez's son was born with Down's syndrome in December, her physician told her to contact Janet Kirkpatrick.

When Ms. Kirkpatrick's daughter was born almost 25 years ago with the same congenital condition, she really didn't know where to turn.

"We really were very much unaware of what was going on," Ms. Kirkpatrick said. "Everything is much better for parents of Down's syndrome today."

Linked with a defect in the 21st chromosome, Down's syndrome, formerly known as mongolism, is characterized by physical malformations and some degree of mental retardation.

Although most parents of Down's syndrome children don't seek physical, speech or emotional therapy until their child's delays in walking or talking is noticable, Beth Ledbetter said the number of children receiving therapy at an earlier age is increasing.

"I think people are realizing that the earlier you start therapy, the more likely you are to develop better muscle tone," said Ms. Ledbetter, Mental Health-Mental Retardation registered occupational therapist.

MHMR's Infant Stimulation Program, with 36 Midland children up to three-years-old participating, assists parents of children with Down's syndrome, cerebral palsy and delayed speech and motor skills.

"A lot of our kids don't really have a diagnoses other than developmental delays," Ms. Ledbetter said. "And a lot of what I do is train parents about normal movements."

Active for at least 10 years, MHMR's Infant Stimulation Program was expanded two years ago from the one therapist to two occupational therapists, a speech pathologist, a psychologist and an eduational specialist, who coordinates and also makes home visits.

Coordinator Melba Seth said much of what the employees of the program do is train parents with "play therapy."

"A lot of it is just training parents and getting them to think about it when they are playing with their children," Ms. Ledbetter agreed.

Referrals for the program, which is free, can be taken from anyone, Ms. Seth said. As an example, Ms. Kirkpatrick, a member of the Midland Association of Retarded Children which shares many clients with MHMR, is the one who referred Ms. Jimenez to MHMR's Infant Stimulation Program.

"We do evaluations first to see where the delays are and what areas need to be worked on," Ms. Seth said. Then the weekly home visits begin.

Anthony, the surviving twin born a month prematurely to Ms. Jimenez, has some of the characteristics of Down's syndrome: stubby fingers, slanted eyes, slack cheeks, low set ears and little muscle strength.

"Their (victims of Down's syndrome) overall muscle tone is just real low," Ms. Ledbetter said. "They flop all over."

To increase muscle strength in Anthony, now 7½-months-old, the therapy began at the age of three months. Because the normal tendency of parents is to hold their baby's head if the infant doesn't have control of keeping it up, Ms. Ledbetter instructed Anthony's mother to allow him to try and steady his head on his own. Using a large beachball, Ms. Jimenez also places the infant on the ball, which forces him to use his neck muscles to keep his head up while he rolls around.

"When you see some progress, everyone gets so excited," Ms. Seth said. "Even if he can only roll halfway over, it's progress."

The therapists also encourage parents to help their children's speech development by carrying on conversations with the children.

After a child reaches the age of 3, he or she is referred to the school district's early childhood program, which carries the child through the age of 21. The Opportunity Center, a day care for handicapped children ages one through 12, is available on a sliding scale fee.

A Child Check, sponsored by MHMR's Infant Stimulation Program at no charge, will be held at Midland Park Mall Sept. 8, for parents who wish to have their child's development diagnosed. Ms. Ledbetter, Ms. Seth, a speech pathologist and psychologist will be available.

"What our main goal is now is to get them at the earliest possible age," Ms. Seth said. "I think parents and physicians are becoming aware of early intervention. And once they find out there is help in the community, they come."

'Peace vigil' to be staged at Pantex

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A "peace vigil" outside the gates of a nuclear weapons plant in the Texas Panhandle is gearing up for this weekend to observe the 39th anniversary of the first atomic bomb dropped over Hiroshima, Japan.

Several hundred Texans, including Midlander Mike Gray, and other anti-nuclear weapons protestors from New Mexico, Colorado, Oklahoma and Kansas are converging on the Pantex plant 13 miles northeast of Amarillo.

The plant is the nation's facility for the final assembly of nuclear weapons. From there, the weapons are shipped to the military.

As a byproduct, the gathering also is to focus on the nation's building of nuclear-waste dump sites.

"Texans aren't aware that all of this is going on," said Gray, a 32-year-old Quaker involved in the movement, "because they (the federal government) pick sparsely populated counties" to bury the debris.

More than that, though, the gathering is to heighten the public's awareness of nuclear proliferation, unite persons opposed to war and the nuclear arms race and foster "an economic conversion to industries which serve people in areas of nutrition, education, medicine, housing and others," according to the Red River Peace Network.

"We will conduct vigil watches at the gate, a continual walking vigil around the perimeter of the camp," according to Carol Hust, Austin coordinator of the Red River Peace Network.

On Monday, the anniversary of the atomic bomb dropped over Hiroshima, the gathering will hold an interfaith service.

On Aug. 6, 1945, a United States B-29 Superfortress named the Enola Gay dropped an atomic bomb over the industrialized city; 70,000 were killed and just as many were injured by the blast. Three days later, on Aug. 9, the U.S. dropped another atomic bomb over Nagasaki; 40,000 were killed, and another 40,000 were injured.

On Aug. 14, 1945, Japan surrendered to the Allied Forces and World War II ended.

The Pantex rally will include several groups opposed to the buildup of nuclear arsenals of the United States, the Soviet Union and other world powers.

"We're stopping at nothing short of the abolition of war," said Gray. "We're for pure non-violence."

The groups are advocating a nuclear freeze, stopping the nuclear buildup and ending testing of nuclear weapons.

Colt 'Sir Prize-s' mare's owners

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Horses can be temperamental creatures, so their owners must be prepared for surprises.

The birth of a colt, however, usually isn't one of them.

"We were watching the opening ceremonies of the Olympics Saturday night, and my son came in and said, 'Mom, I think Nicki's having a baby!' " said Dorothy St. Germain.

Now, this in itself wasn't that unusual. Dorothy and Lou St. Germain, of 204 Todd, have owned Nicki about 10 years, and she's had three foals before. But this time, Dorothy and Lou had no idea Nicki was even pregnant.

"She looked to me to be pot bellied," said Lou. "I thought she was developing a grass belly."

Instead, the 23-year-old Appaloosa mare gave birth to a dark brown colt, which the St. Germains named Sir Prize. Such surpises are not frequent among horse breeders, who usually keep a tight rein on their horses' social life.

"Horse people plan these things!" said Dorothy. "We really took great precautions. When you have stallions and mares you know something is going to happen."

It apparently happened about a year ago with Nicki and Silver Heels, the St. Germains' Arabian stallion.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Sir Prize was quite a surprise to his owners, Lou and Dorothy St. Germain, when he was born Saturday night. They hadn't known his mother, Nicki, was pregnant.

Odds good Midlander will get jury duty

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

In a city the size of Midland, the odds of being summoned for jury duty in the near future are fairly good.

Even if that prospect meets with a citizen's favor, he no doubt will have some questions about this country's often confusing system of legal jurisprudence.

There are, for instance, two kinds of juries in this country: grand and petit.

Grand juries, according to Midland County Court Coordinator Roberta Hurt, are investigative bodies that normally meet once a week to review evidence and decide if a person should be indicted to stand trial for a particular felony offense.

Grand juries sit for six-month periods and are chosen by a special five-member commission appointed by the district judges in each jurisdiction. The commission in turn selects 12 names drawn from voter registration lists and representing each section of town.

On the other hand, petit — or trial juries — decide guilt or innocence in criminal cases and often set sentence. Defendants have the option of letting the jury or judge determine punishment.

Petit juries also determine liability and set the amount of dollar damages in civil cases.

Jury summonses are mailed out by each district court. Names are selected at random by computer and are pulled from voter lists. The summons will tell that citizen which court needs his services and he will join a pool of prospective jurors known as the "jury panel."

The panel, generally consisting of 40 to 50 persons, then goes through "voir dire" — a Latin phrase meaning to "tell the truth."

That process involves questioning by attorneys from both sides to determine if a person has any biases which would make him or her unsuitable to sit on a particular case.

Twelve jurors are finally chosen from the panel, which meets for a week. The rest — depending on the judge — either go home and wait for a phone call telling them if they need to come in the next day, or are allowed to call in themselves to see if they're needed.

After the week is over, the panel is dismissed and its members won't be called on again until the voter list is exhausted.

There are roughly 50,000 registered voters in Midland County. At the current trial rate, a voter's name won't come up again for for four or five years. To disregard a jury summons can result in a contempt of court citation, which can lead to a fine and jail sentence.

Judge denies defense motion to end attempted murder trial

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Defense motions to end the aggravated capital murder trial of the widow of the man shot to death when a planned undercover cocaine "buy-bust" fell through Dec. 9, 1983, were denied Wednesday afternoon.

Attorney Dan Sullivan's call for an instructed verdict acquitting 22-year-old Jana Matheny was refused by District Judge Gene Ater in the 70th District Court.

The state rested its case before Sullivan made motions claiming prosecutors had failed to prove his client was guilty of attempted capital murder under the "law of parties," in which defendants can be convicted as accomplices.

Michael Grant Matheny, 33, died during an exchange of gunfire in and outside a room at the La Quinta Motor Inn, 5001 E. Highway 80 in Odessa, where undercover narcotics officers had planned to trick the Mathenys into selling them some cocaine. Two officers, Phil Harrold of the Odessa Police Department and Jim Dickson of the Ector County Sheriff's Department, were wounded as they attempted to force their way into the room where shooting reportedly had already begun.

OPD narcotics officer Steve Frederick, who was the single officer inside the room where the transaction was to take place when the plan went sour, fired the shot which wounded Dickson, according to testimony. The bullet which wounded Harrold has not been recovered.

Ms. Matheny also was indicted for delivery of cocaine, and Gerald Leon Hardin, who allegedly was serving as look-out for the Mathenys, has been indicted on delivery of cocaine and attempted capital murder charges.

Dickson testified that he and Harrold fell simultaneously when shots fired from inside the room struck them as they tried to force open the room's door. Ms. Matheny reportedly had deadbolted the door as the officers were making their way from an adjoining room on a prearranged signal from Frederick, who was wearing a hidden microphone.

According to testimony, Hardin, 33, managed to escape the scene in a pick-up truck as a DPS officer who had taken him into custody rushed to the aid of the fallen officers. The two men were lying outside the door when Hardin backed the truck toward them.

Detective Jerry Smith told jurors how the truck driven by Hardin, also known as Kelly Grandstaff, emerged from a bar ditch and went airborne as it passed through a vacant lot into an adjoining parking lot.

Someday man will wonder where all the water went

Out here in West Texas, there's plenty of most everything.

The horizons are as wide as the vision can project.

The sunrises and the sunsets are spectacular whether or not we take precious time to witness them.

The winds last forever, even as they die out and pick up.

The sand dunes shift eternally.

The rains always come but when and how much is the uncertainty.

There's lots and lots of land. To some people, there's lots and lots of nothing. To others, the land is teeming with life, and the music is the sound of the pump jacks; they are the nickelodeons of the plains.

But this is not paradise.

The taste of tap water should tell us that.

And that — water — is not in abundance, though we treat it as if it were as common as dirt. Water is precious, yet by our actions we treat it with disdain. We dirty it and throw it away and somehow expect the miracle of nature to supply us with more.

We are a silly lot. The dear Lord loaned us these resources — the lower heavens, the waters and land. And we spoil them, for there is always more. Tommyrot! We have much, but we lack reason and foresight to conserve.

There's no limit to space and the creations, but earth and all of its resources are finite and delicate. Yet, we break the laws and don't expect to be answerable for our actions.

Man rarely acts unless it's out of pleasure, greed, pain or just to survive. And one of these days, if war and holocaust don't consume us, we're going to wonder where all the good waters went. Water won't be virtually free as it is today; you may complain about your water bill, but you're getting a lot for a little, and I'm certainly no herald for City Hall.

Our governors, the bunch at City Hall, are like most everybody else on the plains. They're wastemakers, 'cause we're in a land of plenty; there's lots of everything, including money, which is more hoarded than spread out. OK. Who wants to give it away?

The people have the option of demanding the optimum. But since they couldn't get together on any issue, we have elected officials to look after our welfare.

I think they are blind and insensitive.

From my biased viewpoint, the City Hall powers pulled off a strange trick when they elected to build a $20 million wastewater line just to "get rid" of the effluent. It's going to be dumped and used on crop land, so they say. They could have invested the funds toward building a water re-cycling plant. But no, that's too expensive; the taxpayers, the citizenry, wouldn't stand for that. Baloney! Eventually, when there's no other option and water rationing coupons are issued, the "right thing" will be done if it's not too late. If Midland is still around, the waters will be re-cycled.

Why not start now?

And do we, blessed with a bountiful land, appreciate our resources? No.

We pollute our waters, our air and waste our land. We become insensitive to one another. We care not as long as we are not adversely affected or bothered. We kill off our wildlife even as we marvel at its beauty and intricacies. We are foolish and probably won't change even as our very survival is threatened.

We are in a land of plenty. Right?

Bullock gives up on dream

Bob Bullock

AUSTIN (AP) — State Comptroller Bob Bullock had a simple campaign strategy mapped out for the governor's race: "After the first of the year, I'll just get in my car and leave."

Bullock seemed so sure of himself during the recent special legislative session that he sketched what he would — and would not do — as governor.

He said he expected Gov. Mark White to run for re-election, but predicted he (Bullock) would win. Bullock said he was twice as good an administrator as White, or anyone else in statewide elected office.

A race against Bullock would tax nerves and resources, and when one major White supporter was asked how White would run against the indomitable comptroller, he responded, "The governor would run scared."

On Monday, however, in a one-page statement, Bullock said he was quitting the governor's race because Texans just didn't want him. The dream had died, his lifetime quest for governor was over.

"I found that there just wasn't any demand for my services, frankly," Bullock, 55, told a reporter.

He also spoke about the cost of a campaign, as high as $10 million, and said it also would be expensive just to hold office.

It seemed a quiet way to bow out for a man who 10 years ago used a credit card and long solo miles on the road to win his first race for comptroller, and has since exerted more power in that office than anyone else.

In an interview in his office last month, Bullock was reminded of his vow in January 1983 to make White a one-term governor, and he was asked if he was still "dead certain" that he would run in 1986.

"I don't know — I wouldn't necessarily, that's what I want to do," Bullock said.

As certain as he could be?

"Yeah. That's what I want to do," he replied. "I enjoy government. I enjoy doing something. I enjoy running things."

Bullock was asked "realistically" what his chances were, and he said, "Well, my predictions generally come true, I think. I didn't miss a revenue estimate by four-tenths of 1 percent. I don't figure I'll miss this one. I think I'll win."

Bullock, a Texas history buff, said in the interview that he might be the first gubernatorial candidate in the state's history to draw his major support from auto dealers.

"Dealers have always helped me more than anybody else, collectively and individually," he said.

He also said he if he was elected governor, he would not live in the 19th century executive mansion — for historical and personal reasons.

"Every governor's got to change it ...one comes in with kids and they've got to make a kindergarten over there, and another one doesn't have any kids. One of them drinks — he's got to have a big bar, the other one doesn't. One of them wants a sauna, the other one doesn't. That's what has happened so far," said Bullock. "I think that thing ought to be turned into a state museum and ought to be preserved."

As for himself, he said, "I wouldn't want to live over there with a bunch of DPS (Department of Public Safety) people watching me come and go all the time, watching my friends come and go — what I eat, that's my business."

White, he said, was "the most surprised person in Texas" when White defeated Republican incumbent Bill Clements for governor in 1982.

The next year, during the regular legislative session, "you (the media) ate him (White) up and the Legislature ate him up for a so-called lack of leadership," Bullock said.

"I'd like to try to straighten out government a little bit," he said. "Right now everything we do is government by crisis...We not only get bit by that rattlesnake, we don't even see him — prisons, education. We've got a sleeping giant out there that's about to wake up and knock everybody out of Texas government on money and that's mental health. ...Unemployment (insurance). Everything now is a crisis."

Bullock said he thought White "very definitely" would run for re-election, and he was asked what he could do better than White.

Fire destroys house

From Staff Reports

Fire of undetermined origin destroyed a vacant house in rural Midland Wednesday afternoon.

City firefighters responded to the 3:18 p.m. call at County Road 1197-South and CR 121-West and used 2,200 gallons of water extinguishing the blaze. The owner of the house was not immediately known.

Mattox: Parents must 'pay up'

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox has given people who are behind in their child custody payments the month of August to catch up, or else.

"People are either going to pay up or go to jail," Mattox told a news conference Wednesday. "When a child does not have proper clothing or food or housing because there are no custody payments that is child abuse, as far as I am concerned."

Mattox said August had been designated "Pay-Up Month" by the Legislature to give absent parents the opportunity to voluntarily make their delinquent child support payments without penalaty.

"My office will be making a strong push throughout this month to have absent parents who are behind in their child support payments to voluntarily come in and catch up,' Mattox said.

"I guess they had a little romantic interlude," said Dorothy.

The St. Germains originally got into horse breeding because their oldest son was in 4H. They used to raise Shetlands.

"But we were in the process of getting out of the horse business," said Dorothy.

Still, the St. Germains are not ones to look a gift horse in the mouth.

"You're always happy when you get a new baby," said Dorothy. "We went out and watched the baby being born. There were no complications at all — the baby was up and walking within an hour."

"Pretty weird," commented 15-year-old John, who obviously is not in 4H.

Though the St. Germains are happy with their new colt, they plan to make sure Nicki doesn't present them with another surprise.

"She'll be in season within a week, and we're going to have to watch that very closely," said Dorothy.

"We're going to make sure," added Lou.

It looks like Silver Heels may have sown his last wild oat. But at least he'll have his memories, which is more than his new son ever will have. According to Dorothy, Sir Prize has an unpleasant surprise of his own waiting for him around the time of his second birthday.

"I imagine he'll probably be gelded," she said.

DEATHS

Mae Lieber

Mrs. (Mae) Houston Lieber of Midland died Wednesday at the home of her daughter, Beulah Prichard.

Graveside services will be at 11 a.m. Saturday at Resthaven Memorial Park directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Frances Franks

Frances Franks of Midland died in a local hospital Wednesday morning after a brief illness.

Services will be at 1:30 p.m. Friday in Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Ralph Buffington officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Franks was born June 8, 1929, in Bartlesville, Okla. She married Toney Franks Aug. 7, 1947, and they lived in Bartlesville until moving to Midland 22 years ago. She was employed as a LVN at Trinity Towers since it began operating.

She was a member of St. Paul's United Methodist Church.

Survivors include her husband; two sons, Kirk Franks of Roanoke and Gary Franks of Midland; a daughter, Karen Smith of Midland; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C.W. Beard of Bartlesville; a brother, Virgil Beard of Bethany, Okla.; and six grandchildren.

JURY

By law, there are only four reasons for excusing a person from jury duty. They're outlined in the summons. In addition, the judge can grant dispensations in special cases where a person is ill, hard of hearing, visuallly handicapped or has some other particular situation that would preclude jury duty.

The county pays $6 a day to panel members and $12 a day to jurors. Employers, while not required to do so, often pay a person's wages while they're on jury duty.

There are no special parking places for juries, according to Mrs. Hurt. She recommends that if the courthouse lot is full, jurors simply pull up to the nearest meter and submit parking tickets to the court bailiff. The county will then see to it that the tickets get "fixed."

When a citizen is picked as a juror on a given case, he or she will serve for the duration of the trial. It generally doesn't happen very often, but a person can be picked as a juror for more than one case in a jury week.

There's no dress code for jurors at the state level, but there is a coat and tie requirement for male jurors on the federal level.

"Jury duty shouldn't be taken lightly," said Mrs. Hurt. "Often, these cases are the most important thing in a person's life at the time — whether it's a civil or criminal case."

In general, the process for selecting federal juries is the same as the one employed for picking state district jurors, according to Deputy Federal District Clerk Larry Bick.

Names are drawn from voter lists, but from a six-county area: Midland, Andrews, Ector, Crane, Martin and Upton.

The pay is better at the federal end, with jurors and prospective jurors alike being paid $30 a day — whether they spend 10 minutes or 10 hours a day in court. In addition, they're paid 20.5 cents a mile in travel expenses.

Federal jury panels sit for up to nine months, and there's currently a 64-member panel available, said Bick. The number of cases coming up determines how many panelists are called in for voir dire.

Each member of the panel can be selected for more than one case, and the parking is ample.

Bids being accepted for road work

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Public Transportation will accept bids until mid-August on three highway projects in the Midland County area.

One project involves an estimated $676,373 worth of safety standard upgrading along 16.4 miles of IH 20 in Ward County. Project engineer is Thomas Schlegel of Pecos and the project is estimated to take 140 working days to complete. The work is near Pyote, according to the department.

Another project involves an estimated $88,156 worth of traffic signal modernization along intersections in Winkler, Andrews, Pecos and Ector counties. The project is expected to take 80 working days to complete, and project engineer is Robert Wilson of Odessa.

The work is on Texas 18 in Winkler County; RM 87 in Andrews County; FM 1882 in Ector County.

The last project involves an estimated $1.2 million worth of road grading and flexible base work along US 67 in Presidio County. Project engineer is Glen L. Beckner of Alpine and the work is due to be completed in 200 working days.

Bids are due by 9 a.m. Aug. 21 for the latter two projects, and by 9 a.m. Aug. 22 for the Ward County project.

Waste disposal application approved

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Health has approved an application by the City of Midland for a solid waste disposal facility on 412.42 acres in Midland County.

The site is located six miles east of Midland and seven miles southeast of the intersection of IH 20 and SH 158, and three-quarters of a mile north of SH 158.

The application was approved subject to the usual provisions of such facilities.

Hearing on the application was held in Midland on May 24.

MOTION

Smith, who said he was rushing to the scene when he spotted Hardin exchanging fire with another narcotics officer while driving the truck, recounted a high-speed chase around the vicinity of U.S. Highway 80 and Loop 338 through neighborhoods, apartment complexes and vacant lots.

Hardin gave up the chase, which eventually included an entourage of patrol cars, when the truck's engine blew up. The vehicle came to rest over the curb in front of a residence at the intersection of University and Tanglewod.

Officers at the scene testified one of the truck's tires had blown out earlier and had been worn completely away by the chase's conclusion.

The truck body was dented from being rammed and riddled by bullet holes and the rear window shattered when officers took Hardin into custody. "It was just a wreck," testified OPD Officer Harold Salmon.

A DPS chemist verified that the 3½ ounces of white powdery material which Ms. Matheny allegedly handed to Frederick was cocaine. Officers had valued the quantity at $8,000.

The chemist's test put none of the material in the four plastic bags at as much as 30 percent pure. He estimated that cocaine sold in Midland/Odessa averaged 60-70 percent pure.

Ms. Matheny's statements, which prosecutor David Rosado read to jurors, said Hardin was her nephew and that she and Matheny, an oilfield worker by trade, had been married two months before.

They traced the cocaine, most of which they got from a man at a lounge in Odessa shortly before the deadly deal, to the room. She ran and hid in the bathtub when the shooting started, according to the statements.

Sullivan's motions urged Ater to end the attempted capital murder proceedings, insisting that the state had not proven Matheny knew the officers were policeman. (None of the narcotics officers were in uniform.)

He also noted testimony had not proven Matheny had fired either shot which struck the officers. The Andrews attorney suggested the case would be more legitimate if tried as attempted murder, which has a lesser punishment.

Truck driver in critical condition

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 32-year-old truck driver from North Carolina was listed in critical condition after suffering burns to 14 percent of his body early this morning, reportedly suffered when he opened his truck's diesel fuel tank while smoking a cigarette.

Robert Douglas Owens, 32, an independent trucker from North Carolina, had been transferred to the burn intensive care unit of Lubbock General Hospital in critical condition this morning, according to preliminary police reports.

Owens suffered first and second-degree burns on his arms, face and chest, when he opened the fuel tank in the 400 block of S. Grandview about 4:40 a.m. today, according to reports.

He reportedly told officers that he had been smoking and that he had a special fuel mixture in the tank.

Store robbed of concert tickets

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police are looking for two black men who reportedly robbed an Odessa Endless Horizons store of $1,250 and $1,380 in tickets to the Aug. 15 concert of the Jefferson Starship about 1:30 p.m., Wednesday.

The store manager told police the two suspects had entered the store and were browsing when one struck him over the head with a revolver and shouted for others in the store to move from his line of fire.

The second man then went behind the counter and took two bank money bags, holding a total of $1,250, and 120 tickets to the upcoming rock concert, according to reports.

Last seen heading west from the store at 2525 Andrews Highway, a customer who followed the suspects identified the car used in the escape as a 1975 maroon Thunderbird with a white top. The two were described as black men, 30-35 years of age; one thin, about six-feet tall and weighing 160 lbs.; and the other, stockily built, about five-feet, nine-inches tall and about 160-175 lbs, wearing a brown felt hat.

Festival tells story of Texas' heritage

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — There's more to Texas than rodeos, ten gallon hats and country music, and the Texas Folklife Festival is coming to prove it.

The four-day event begins tonight with a host of activities and exhibits designed to tell the story of Texas' varied heritage and ethnic history.

More than 100,000 people are expected to show up for the festivities, to be held on the 15-acre site of the Institute of Texan Cultures.

"The real purpose of the festival is to educate," said Jack Maguire, executive director of the institute, which is sponsoring the event.

"It's our intention each year to bring exhibits alive by showing Texans through dance, crafts, folklore and heritage their history," he said.

The bill of fare will include artifacts, arts and crafts, traditional tunes and folk dances, "vittles" and haute cuisine and other attractions.

Ten stages have been set up so singers and dancers of various ethnic backgrounds can perform continuously.

More than 30 food booths will offer an international menu ranging from Jewish falafel (pita bread with stuffing), to Irish stew to Spanish gambas al ajillo (shrimp in garlic.)

About 6,000 participants representing 30 ethnic backgrounds will put on the festival.

Participants, dressed in the garb of Texas settlers, will be demonstrating various pioneer skills.

One group will be making "hoecakes," corn patties cooked on the blade of a hoe.

Other demonstrations will include brewing a kettle of lye soap, making rush lights, throwing clay pots on a wheel, spinning and bobbin lacing and whittling.

Also expected are goose plucking and syrup-making — the kinds of tasks performed in early Texas by all cultures.

Replicas of frontier buildings also will be on display, including a smokehouse, schoolhouse, an 1880 windmill, an Alsatian barn and livestock pens.

Maguire said last year residents of 30 countries visited the festival, one of the oldest of its kind in the nation.

Teen to be tried for attempted murder

Student had shot at former teacher

HOUSTON (AP) — A 16-year-old high school student will stand trial as an adult on an attempted murder charge in the shooting of his former history teacher, prosecutors say.

State District Judge Robert Lowry heard evidence that Norman Joseph Theard shot at his former teacher, Charles Perridon, in the classroom Feb. 21.

Defense attorney Mike DeGeurin said Theard was an intelligent teenager whose family of superachievers pressured him to do better in school. A series of illnesses kept the youth out of school and caused him to fail, DeGeurin said.

"He perceived that his family didn't think he was intelligent, didn't think he had achieved where he should have," DeGeurin said. "All that anxiety and stress built up and materialized in this incident."

The maximum penalty for attempted murder is 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Theard still faces an examination hearing and must be indicted by a Harris County grand jury before he can be tried.

Testimony in the certification hearing Tuesday indicated that Theard, who failed one of Perridon's classes, fired at least four shots from a .38-caliber gun during the school lunch period and hit Perridon twice.

Perridon, 30, was hospitalized for wounds in the face and shoulder.

Evidence showed that another teacher heard Perridon screaming, and that a gun and a set of brass knuckles with a knife were taken from Theard.

Perridon said he agreed Theard should be sent from the juvenile courts to the felony courts.

"I don't want to see the young man totally destroyed and sent to prison," Perridon said. "But there has to be some kind of punishment. Discipline in our schools has gone downhill. And if punishment is not available, they will have to make it legal for teachers to carry guns."

He said the incident has forced Sharpstown school officials to follow school rules — such as suspending students and checking hall passes — more carefully.

Assistant District Attorny Kent Ellis told the judge the court "has to be concerned with the school system itself."

"When (Theard) made his attack on Charles Perridon, he made an attack on the entire public school system."

Ellis said the teen-ager's personal problems did not excuse the crime he allegedly committed.

Women refuse to tell where friend has cash

SHERMAN (AP) — Two Denison grandmothers say they'll "continue to stand our ground" and refuse to reveal where a friend kept her assets, even though a U.S. magistrate says they could go back to jail.

U.S. Magistrate Roger D. Sanders says that a Grayson County judge did not violate the pair's Fifth Amendment rights when he jailed them for refusing to testify in his courtroom.

And if a third judge involved in the case, U.S. District Judge William M. Steger, follows Sanders' recommendation, the grandmothers may be returned to jail.

In April, Evelyn Hertzog and Dorothy Pauline Lindsay, both 65, were jailed by County Court-at-Law Judge Lloyd Perkins for contempt of court after they refused to disclose the location of $45,000 in cash assets belonging to 55-year-old Mary Ellen Bader of Sherman.

Their refusal came during a competency hearing to determine whether Mrs. Bader's son, Walter Bader Jr., should be given temporary guardianship of the assets.

The grandmothers were released after five days from the Grayson County jail pending further inquiries on an order by Steger.

Sanders now says the attempt by Mrs. Hertzog — who is Mrs. Bader's sister — and Mrs. Lindsay to seek relief under the Fifth Amendment was "pure afterthought" and not based on the legal requirement that there be reasonable grounds to "apprehend danger...from being compelled to answer."

Despite Sanders' recommendation, Mrs. Hertzog said she still refuses to disclose the location of the cash.

"I have no reason to tell where the money was," she said Tuesday morning after learning of the ruling. "We stood our ground and we will continue to stand our ground."

It is uncertain when Steger will rule on the case.

Oil spill clean up efforts continued throughout the day Wednesday as the U.S. Coast Guard attempted to contain the spreading crude oil. The Alvenus, a British registered tanker, ran aground in the Calcasieu Ship Channel Monday causing the mishap to occur.

Goo to hit Texas coast

Associated Press

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — A 25-mile-long oil slick as thick as molasses was six miles off the Texas coast early today, and Coast Guard officials said it will hit beaches between Galveston and High Island with a mass of tar-like goo sometime before late Friday.

"It's now just a matter of waiting for it to arrive," said Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler. "We have clean-up crews — vacuum trucks and the like — standing by."

The oil, spilled from a British tanker grounded off the Louisiana coast, could wash ashore anywhere along the 25-mile stretch between High Island and Galveston between tonight and Friday evening, Spangler said.

Shortly before midnight Wednesday, the slick was six miles south of McFadden Beach below Sabine Pass, and winds were blowing east-southeast at about 10 knots per hour, he said.

Lt. Joe Ocken, a spokesman for the Coast Guard office in Galveston, said he had lined up contractors ready with loads of straw and dirt-moving equipment to begin mopping up beaches when the oil hits.

Spangler said winds are "moving the oil about twice as fast as it was before. We really don't know the extent of this — what it will cause — but with 1.25 million gallons in the water, you're going to have some on the beaches."

Specialists from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the state Parks and Wildlife Department arrived on the scene Wednesday night to survey the slick and assess possible damage to marine life.

Spangler said the oil will be thick and gooey when it hits, tarring any bird or other wildlife it contacts.

"Someone just brought in a sample of it, from the leading edge of the spill that will make contact with the beach, and it's very thick. We turned the container upside down that it was in, and it wouldn't come out. It's hard and thick and glossy black," Spangler said at 6 a.m. today.

Dennis Palafox, pollution surveillance program leader for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, said that if the oil passes into inland bays through Rollover Pass or Bolivar Roads, it could devastate aquatic nurseries.

"If the oil gets in there, it can go just about anywhere the winds and tides push it," he said.

Spangler said workers have abandoned efforts to vacuum up the oil already in the water and are concentrating on getting the rest of the tanker's cargo safely unloaded.

"Ten times the amount of oil that's in the water is still on that ship," he said.

With seas getting higher in the stiffer winds, only about 1 percent of the oil already in the water could be recovered, he said.

"Since we can't do much about what's in the water — and we're going to have to clean the beaches anyway — we're saying let's put all of our efforts on the ship and make it safe."

When the 690-foot Alvenus struck and ran aground Monday afternoon, a split opened along either side of the bow and across the deck.

Booms that had been deployed to contain the slick were picked up and moved to the ship itself, Spangler said. Workers prepared to surround the ship with the booms to contain any oil that spilled during the move and transfer.

The team of experts assembled here to cope with the spill estimated it could be about half as bad as the spill resulting from an oil well blowout in the Bay of Campeche in 1979. Some of that oil drifted ashore at Padre Island on the eastern Texas coast and onto the western coast of Louisiana.

Huge gold find reported in central Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Officials here are downplaying the discovery of a gold mine in central Mexico, unwilling to risk a repeat of the oil boom that only two years ago led to economic bust.

El Barqueno mine, found last November in Jalisco state 335 miles northwest of Mexico City, has a motherlode 3 miles long and about 13 yards wide. Its earth contains an average of 5 to 15 grams of gold per ton, with 20 grams of silver and variable quantities of lead, iron and zinc.

The mine near a village known as Panico has been described in local newspapers as potentially the richest in the world.

Only 5 percent of the 12,103 acres where gold is believed to lie, according to the government's geophysical and geochemical studies, has been explored to date.

The influential Mexico City daily Excelsior wrote that "here gold is found in plain view. ... This is only the beginning, since other, richer veins exist, with gold in chunks, at depths of between 30 and 60 yards."

The newspaper predicted that the mine holds enough gold to produce 1,500 kilograms of gold and each year.

Mexican authorities, although they have recognized the importance of the discovery and have not denied any such reports on the mine's potential, have been reluctant to trumpet it.

The oil boom that took off during the preceding administration of President Jose Lopez Portillo may explain their reticence.

Rapid development of petroleum discoveries brought unprecedented prosperity to Mexico from 1978 through 1981. Ambitious development projects were funded on the basis of the new oil wealth, pushing Mexico's foreign debt to the second largest in the developing world after Brazil's.

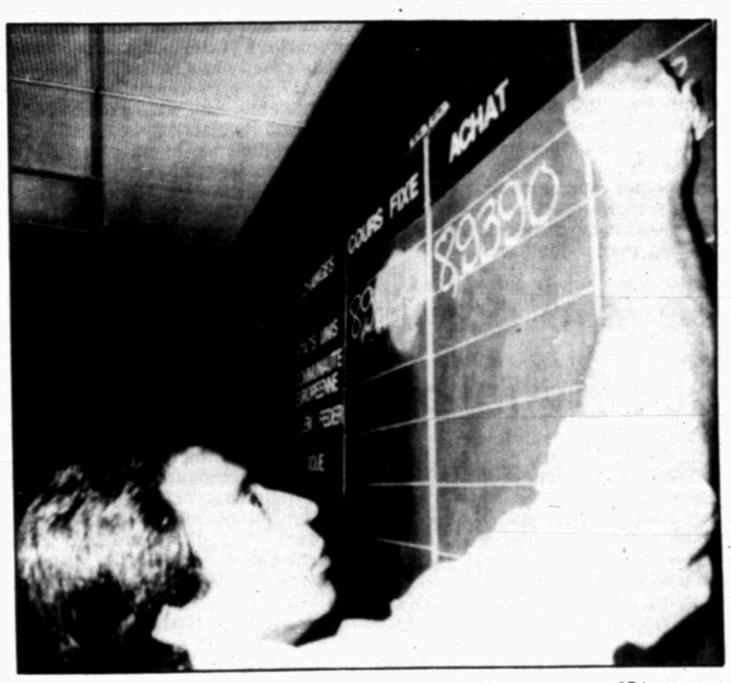

The oil bonanza produced a climate of spending without limits, but in 1982 the world oil glut became evident and falling prices reduced income below expectations.

Mexico could not meet its foreign debt payments and the economic bust developed that persists two years into the administration of President Miguel de la Madrid, who took office in December 1982.

Energy and Mines Secretary Francisco Labastida Ochoa has said, "The announcement about the mining potential of gold and silver responds to the policy of keeping the public informed and not to the triumphant desire to signal a new resource with which the development of Mexico can be sustained.

"We must not ever again fall into illusions. We must not again make the mistake of thinking that a natural resource will be the solution," he said.

On several occasions Labastida Ochoa has stated that the El Barqueno mine "has particular importance because of its magnitude," which he described as being "the greatest known oil mine existing in the country."

Common market, IBM agree on compromise

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The European Common Market today announced a compromise settlement of its four-year-old antitrust case against U.S.-based International Business Machines Corp.

The European trading bloc's complaint against the world's largest computer maker centered on its contention that IBM was abusing its dominant position in the European computer market. IBM denied the charge.

"I have just accepted an undertaking from IBM to change its business practices in the Common Market," Frans Andriessen of the Common Market's administrators commission, told a news conference today.

As a result, he said, the commission agreed to suspend legal proceedings brought against IBM for infringements of Common Market competition law.

Under terms of the settlement, announced after a series of intense negotiations in Brussels, IBM agreed to disclose "sufficient interface information" to allow European competitors to design equipment that can plug into the IBM machines, Andriessen said.

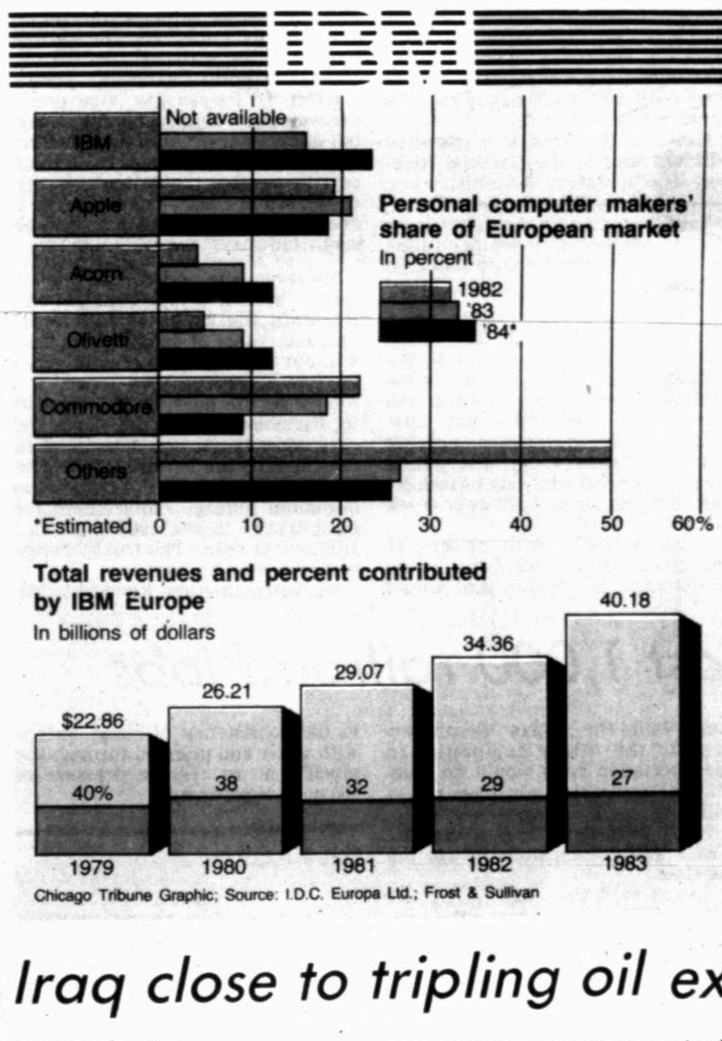

The Common Market, had contended that U.S.-based IBM was not providing this information early enough to allow its rivals in Europe to design compatible "software" equipment, which IBM also makes.

A spokesman at IBM's European headquarters in Paris said today the company had no immediate comment on the announcement. Andriessen said the agreement covered an indefinite period but that IBM had the right to pull out with a year's notice not earlier than 1990.

IBM, which holds about 40 percent of the European computer market, had resisted the Common Market's urgings on earlier disclosure of information about its new products. The company had contended that such disclosures could undermine its competitive position worldwide.

Andriessen said today's settlement meant IBM had agreed to change its practices "in a way which meets the main objectives of the commission."

"This settlement will bring new opportunities for competition in this sector, which becomes every day more important," he said. "The European industry has now a chance to increase its share in this market."

Strong dollar working in U.S. and foreign markets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans traveling abroad this summer may find they're spending less and less for French meals, British woolens and German cuckoo clocks — thanks to the strong dollar.

Back home, prices at the checkout counter aren't rising as much as they did a few years ago and, indeed, may be slipping a bit for some goods. Again, the strong dollar is at work.

But on the flip side, the dollar's spectacular climb in recent weeks against other major currencies hurts U.S. firms exporting goods overseas and developing nations struggling to repay their debts.

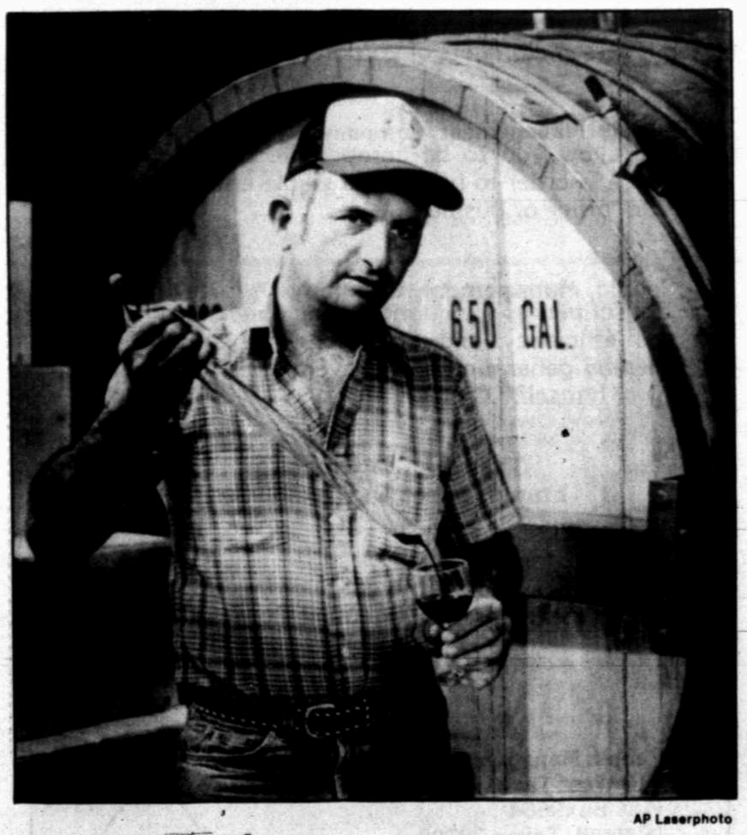

"The dollar is extremely high and that's very good if you're planning to go overseas or buy foreign goods, but bad if you're trying to sell American goods (abroad)," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass.

In early trading in Europe on Wednesday, the dollar hit a series of record highs, reaching its highest level in seven years against the Swiss franc and its highest level in about 10 years against the West German mark and the Dutch guilder. Profit-taking pushed the greenback a bit lower in later trading.

While private analysts shy away from calling the strong dollar a threat to the continued world recovery, they readily point to its troublesome aspects.

Reagan administration officials have acknowledged the serious consequences of the dollar on American exporters, but they seem almost to take pride in its strength compared to other major currencies — and to its weakness in the 1970s.In the 1980s, it has risen nearly 65 percent.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan says the dollar's strength mostly reflects the vigor of the U.S. economy.

Iraq close to tripling oil exports via Red Sea pipelines

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq is close to completing plans to triple its oil exports through three new pipelines to the Red Sea and Mediterranean within the next three years, thereby ending its reliance on outlets through the Persian Gulf and Syria.

If all goes as projected, Iraq will have the capacity to export at least 3 million barrels a day across Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Turkey by 1987. This is more than twice its present quota of 1.2 million barrels a day quota set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. The amount could reach 4.1 million barrels daily.

The political and strategic implications of the Iraqi plan to build the new pipelines are considerable. In the first place, the pipelines would forge close economic links between Iraq, once one of the most radical Arab states, and two of the most conservative prowestern Arab states, as well as Turkey, a member of NATO.

In effect, Iraq may be laying the economic basis for a new political policy in the Arab world and toward the West.

Second, the pipelines would free Iraq from the kind of economic pressure Iran has been able to exert on it during the four-year-long war by closing down its oil terminals in the gulf and reducing its exports from more than 3 million barrels a day to as little as 650,000 barrels.

Finally, Iraq would free itself of any dependence on its old 1.2 million barrels a day pipeline running through Syria to the Mediterranean port of Baniyas that Syrian President Hafez Assad ordered shut down in April 1982 as a gesture of his support for Iran.

Iraqi plans to build two new pipelines through Jordan and Saudi Arabia with the help of U.S. companies were already known. But President Saddam Hussein also disclosed in a speech July 16 that Iraq was "seriously considering" the construction of a third pipeline through Turkey.

Work on the expansion of the already existing 612-mile pipeline, running from Kirkuk to the Turkish port of Ceyhan on the Mediterranean, has just been completed this month, allowing Iraq to increase its exports from 700,000 to 950,000 barrels a day.

According to Abdul Moneim Samarai, undersecretary of the Iraqi Oil Ministry, Iraq is sending a delegation to Ankara next week to begin negotiations on the building of a second pipeline. This would run parallel to the first and be comparably easy to build since it could make use of the five old pumping stations and five new ones to boost Iraqi exports through Turkey to 1.5 million barrels a day, he said.

Samarai said it was an old project, which Turkish authorities had taken the initiative to revive. He added that a decision could be reached "very soon."

There has been some speculation here since Saddam Hussein's mention of the new Turkish project that Iraq was using it to put pressure on western contractors bidding on the two other pipelines. But Samarai seemed to indicate the second Turkish line was part of an overall strategy to diversify Iraq's outlets away from the gulf.

Samarai said "top priority" was still being given to the 400-mile linkup with Saudi Arabia's east-west pipeline ending at the Red Sea terminal at Yanbu.

"It is our desire and intention to construct the first phase of the Saudi pipeline ahead of any other project," he said in an interview last week. "We are giving it top priority consideration in our plans to diversify our outlets."

Petroleum prices rally on N.Y. Mercantile Exchange

By KEITH E. LEIGHTY
AP Business Writer

Petroleum prices rallied sharply Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, with support primarily from reductions last week in inventories of crude oil and gasoline.

Crude oil settled 40 cents to 53 cents higher with the contract for delivery in September at $28.13 a barrel; heating oil settled 1.86 cents to 2.11 cents higher with September at 74.45 cents a gallon; and leaded gasoline settled 1.30 cents to 1.35 cents higher with September at 72.58 cents a gallon.

Wheat and soybean futures prices were higher and corn was mostly lower at the close of trading Wednesday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Wheat settled 1¾ cents to 4½ cents higher with the contract for delivery in September at $3.51½ a bushel; corn was unchanged to 2 cents lower with September at $2.93¼ a bushel; oats were ¼ cent to ½ cent higher with September at $1.73¼ a bushel; and soybeans were 5¾ cents to 8 cents higher with August at $6.17 a bushel.

Gold and silver prices were substantially higher on the Commodity Exchange in New York.

Gold settled $7.70 to $8.30 higher with the contract for delivery in August at $345.70 a troy ounce; silver settled 41.7 cents to 47.3 cents higher with August at $7.435 a troy ounce.

Reagan calls on auto workers to hold line

DETROIT (AP) — President Reagan says auto workers who gave up billions of dollars in wage increases in 1982 gained from the industry's strong comeback, and he warned that excessive demands in contract talks this summer could endanger the recovery.

In an interview with television station WDIV, Reagan called on the United Auto Workers to use "some restraint" in its bargaining with General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co.

Otherwise, Reagan said, "the recovery, the expansion that we're having" could be in danger.

Reagan was interviewed Friday, but at his request the remarks were not televised until Tuesday, the station said.

Peter Laarman, a spokesman for the UAW, said union President Owen Bieber was in New York for a meeting and was unavailable for immediate comment on Reagan's remarks.

The contract negotiations, which began last week, cover 350,000 workers at GM and 115,000 at Ford. Contracts at both companies expire Sept. 14.

UAW members gave up billions of dollars in wage and benefit increases in 1982 at the height of the worst auto sales slump since the Great Depression. The industry lost a collective $4.2 billion in 1980 alone.

But Detroit automakers are headed toward record profits of perhaps $12 billion this year, and union leaders have said members want their share. GM made $3.73 billion last year and Ford made $1.87 billion. Both records are expected to be surpassed this year.

"I do think that we have to keep in mind: Yes, the workers did make some concession" in 1982, Reagan said during the interview.

"On the other hand, while the automobile companies now are back in a profit position, there were several years there in which they were running tremendous losses.

"And I hope that there will be not only fairness, as there should be, but some restraint, also, in the negotiations — that we don't do anything right now at this point to turn off the recovery, the expansion that we're having."

Bieber long has been an outspoken critic of Reagan and his economic policies. The union is perhaps labor's biggest booster of Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale.

The UAW has said it is prepared to strike if necessary to win contract gains, although union officials so far have called the talks harmonious.

Average production wages have been frozen for 2½ years at $9.63 an hour at GM and a penny more at Ford, although cost-of-living allowances have accumulated to $3.04, making the average GM wage $12.67.

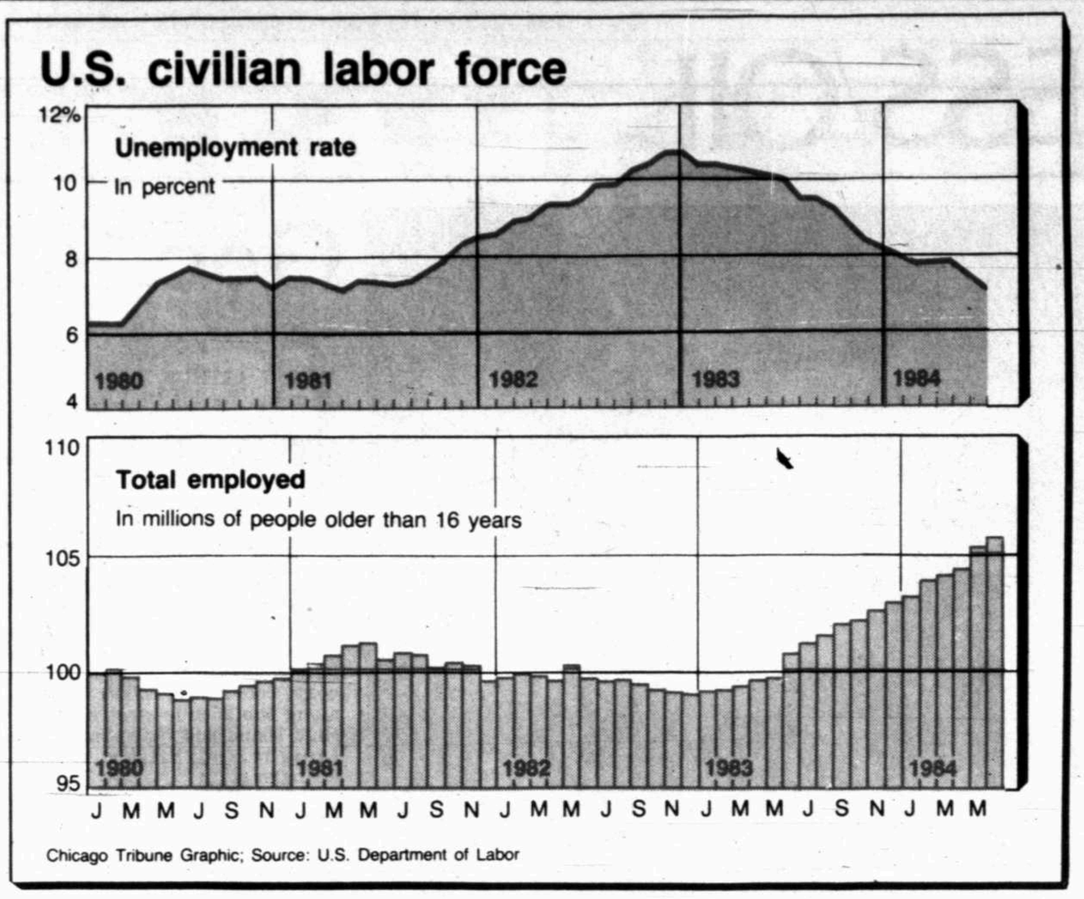

The only specific UAW wage demand so far is for establishment of $12.67 as the base wage in the new contract.

Reagan said during the interview that America is experiencing "one of the best recoveries in all the seven or eight recessions that have occurred since World War II.

"Now, I hope that in the coming negotiations — certainly government should not interfere — as a former union president myself, I believe that these problems are between management and labor to work out ...." he said.

"And other than that, I'm not going to inject myself into the middle of that battle," Reagan said. "But I don't think it's fair for anyone to suggest that they have not benefited from this recovery. We were in a precarious state, our entire industrial capacity as a nation."

UAW Vice President Donald Ephlin, the chief union bargainer at GM, criticized Reagan last week, calling a $422 million tax break given GM a "lesson in Reaganomics." The one-time tax break was listed in GM's second-quarter balance sheet and contributed to a profit for the three months of $1.6 billion.

Of the total U.S. civilian labor force, white males now claim a smaller share of the job market.

White males decline in U.S. labor force

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adult white men, society's principal breadwinners through colonial times, the Industrial Revolution, two world wars and the advent of the Space Age, now make up less than half of the U.S. labor force, government figures show.

Women, blacks and Hispanics have been entering the labor force in increasing numbers in recent years, and many of the jobs created by an economy in transition from heavy industry to service and information jobs have gone to these workers.

As a result, adult white men, those aged 16 and over, comprised just 49.7 percent of the U.S. labor force in 1983, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has confirmed.

It's the first time white men have constituted less than half of the labor force, statisticians say, although they note that the government did not track such trends before 1954.

The U.S. civilian labor force, which totaled 111,550,000 last year, is comprised of those Americans who held jobs and people who government surveys showed were actively seeking work. Of the 111,550,000 in the labor force, 55,480,000 — or 49.7 percent — were white males aged 16 and over.

In June 1984, the most recent month for which figures were available, the percentage of white males in the labor force was down to 49.3 percent, said bureau analyst Deborah Klein.

White males did, however, barely continue to claim slightly more than half of all people who actually held jobs last year, she said.

Of 100,834,000 people who worked in 1983, some 50,621,000 — or 50.2 percent — were white males, Ms. Klein said.

White men constituted 50.0 percent of the labor force in 1982, down from 50.5 percent in 1981 and 50.9 percent in 1980. In contrast, white males represented 62.5 percent of the labor force in 1954, when the bureau began keeping such records. In 1970, white men made up 55.6 percent of the labor force.

"Obviously, the most dominant trend in all of this has been the increasing labor force participation rate among women," Ms. Klein said. "That is the driving force in all of this."

The proportion of America's adult male population as a whole, including blacks, Hispanics and others, fell to a record low level last year.

Of the approximately 83.3 million men aged 16 and over in the U.S. population in 1983, roughly 64.7 million — or 77.6 percent — worked at some time or other during the year.

Fuel regs impossible with options

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American appetite for big, powerful, option-loaded cars is making it impossible for manufacturers to meet the government's minimum fuel-economy standards, officials of General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. told Congress.

Chrysler Corp., the third-largest automaker, told a different story. "If Chrysler can meet the federal fuel-economy law, then why can't our larger competitors?" asked Robert M. Sinclair, vice president for engineering at Chrysler.

Reducing the mileage standards "would send a message to the American people that we are willing to risk another energy crisis for the selfish interests of two giant law-breaking corporations," Sinclair added.

At the request of Ford, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has served notice it will reduce the minimum mileage mark for light trucks — but not for cars — for 1985, 1986 and 1987 models. General Motors endorsed that action Tuesday at a hearing before the House Commerce subcommittee on energy.

Helen O. Petrauskas, a Ford vice president, said Ford's inability to meet the automobile standards and the prospect of paying large penalties are forcing the company to consider "actions that may include curtailing product offerings — actions which could have serious impacts on competition, employment and consumer choice."

Richard L. Klimisch, executive director of environmental activities at General Motors, said his firm, like Ford, expects to fall short of the 27-mile-per-gallon fleet average for cars that the law requires of 1985 models. However, he added, General Motors has no plans to ask for a reduction in the fuel-economy standard for cars.

The standards were mandated by Congress in 1975 as the nation's top energy conservation measure after the Arab oil embargo. Authorities estimate that by 1985, the standards will have reduced U.S. oil consumption by 1.8 billion barrels. In 1976, the average fuel economy for new domestic cars was about 15 mpg; for 1984 models, it is 25.4 mpg.

Senate committee calls for quality in building trades

WASHINGTON (AP) — The majority staff of the Senate Labor Committee, concluding an investigation into alleged corruption involving building trades unions, called today for legislation "to ensure the safety, proficiency and durability" of construction work in the United States.

The staff of the committee headed by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, stated in a report that "unqualified workers have been routinely referred for work (by their union locals) as skilled craftsmen, working qualification tests have been circumvented and favoritism has been rampant ...

"Since many of the construction sites involved are at nuclear power plants, chemical plants and other industrial facilities, the potential safety hazard for co-workers and the general public cannot be underestimated," said the report, which was released today.

In a letter to colleagues on the labor panel, Hatch invited senators to file their own findings and recommendations involving hearings over the past two years into allegations of corruption involving local lodges of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers.

The report reiterated many of the charges aired against the leadership of the union by some rank-and-file members during earlier hearings before the committee — including assertions that officials of boilermaker lodges placed unqualified welders at work on nuclear construction sites.

Charles W. Jones, president of the boilermakers union, told the committee in June that the allegations of improprieties were "false, fictitious and untrue."

The report urged heightened government efforts "to ensure that (job) qualification standards are imposed uniformly and are not manipulated to punish dissidents or protect local leadership."

"Employers associated with electric utility or government construction projects should pay workers in accordance with collective bargaining agreements when such an agreement exists," it said, adding:

"To violate the agreement is to overcharge the ratepaying consumer or taxpayer."

The report also urged enactment of legislation "to require contractors to certify that workers are qualified for the journeymen positions to which they are referred in the nation's key industrial facilities.

"Must we wait for a major accident caused by a bad welder doing a bad weld before we take the necessary action to ensure the public safety?" it asked.

Reagan opposes stricter auto fuel efficiency

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, which is cutting fuel-economy standards for light trucks, is vigorously opposing a bill that would force manufacturers to meet even stiffer efficiency requirements for cars.

Howard M. Smolkin, deputy administrator of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, says a bill by Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., requiring a manufacturer's fleet to average 45 miles per gallon by 1995, "would be a substantial intrusion into the free market."

Even if the 45-mpg standard were attainable, Smolkin told the House Commerce energy subcommittee Tuesday, "the result of the legislation could be to deny to American consumers the larger and adequately powered vehicles they are able to purchase today. The station wagon, the full-size, six-passenger car, and the large, light-duty truck could become obsolete."

Clarence M. Ditlow III, director of the private Center for Auto Safety, praised the bill as one that would require the administration "to plan and implement rational transportation energy policy for the future rather than waiting for future energy disruptions to occur. ..."

Helen O. Petrauskas, vice president of Ford Motor Co., called the bill unnecessary. "Auto manufacturers have stepped forward to do their part in meeting the nation's energy conservation goals — undoubtedly a greater contribution than any other single industry," she said.

However, she added, "we see no way to build a 45-mpg car fleet and maintain the range of functional characteristics of today's vehicles" without cutting 1,000 pounds from the typical car.

Most of the hearing was devoted to discussion of fuel standards for cars, although it was scheduled in response to the safety administration's announced plan to reduce the minimum mileage requirement for light trucks in the 1985, 1986 and 1987 model years. The truck change was requested by Ford.

Ms. Petrauskas and Richard L. Klimisch, executive director of environmental activities at General Motors, said their firms will continue having difficulty meeting the standards for cars. They both blamed consumer buying habits.

"Our shortfall is not because we have failed to provide highly fuel-efficient cars and the capacity to supply them in high volume," Klimisch said. "Rather, our shortfall is the result of our customers' shift toward family-size cars and larger engines. This shift is the direct result of low fuel prices and stable fuel supplies."

"If Chrysler can meet the federal fuel-economy law, they why can't our larger competitors?" demanded Robert M. Sinclair, engineering vice president for Chrysler, the third-largest U.S. automaker.

Reducing the mileage standards "would send a message to the American people that we are willing to risk another energy crisis for the selfish interests of two giant law-breaking corporations," Sinclair added.

Ms. Petrauskas said Ford's inability to meet the automobile standards and the prospect of paying large penalties are forcing the company to consider "actions that may include curtailing product offerings — actions which could have serious impacts on competition, employment and consumer choice."

Klimisch said General Motors has no plans to ask for a reduction in the 1985 and 1986 standards.

The standards were mandated by Congress in 1975 as the nation's top energy conservation measure after the Arab oil embargo. Authorities estimate that by 1985, the standards will have reduced U.S. oil consumption by 1.8 billion barrels. In 1976, the average fuel economy for new domestic cars was about 15 mpg; for 1984 models, it is 25.4 mpg.

Sinclair said Chrysler expects to surpass the 1985 car standard of 27 mpg "because we have taken the energy conservation issue very seriously," spending $4 billion to convert most of its production to energy-efficient front-wheel-drive models.

Coal slurry pipeline could cost 1,000 railroad jobs

RICHMOND, Texas (AP) — A proposal to transport coal by pipeline from Wyoming and Montana to Texas utilities could cost at least 1,000 railroad jobs and eliminate rail service in small towns, a railroad union official says.

The proposed $3.5 billion coal slurry pipeline would reduce rail operations along routes now used to transport coal, said J. M. Brunkenhoefer, state legislative director for the United Transportation Union.

The Railroad Commission of Texas held the last of nine sessions Tuesday to hear from owners of property along the designated route of the pipeline.

The 1,670-mile pipeline would begin in Wyoming and stretch 800 miles across Texas before terminating at Houston Lighting & Power Co.'s coal power plant near Rosenberg, south of Houston.

Transporting coal by pipeline would be cheaper, said Earl Evans, a spokesman for ETSI Pipeline Project, the Houston company seeking to build the project. He said savings to the utility companies in transportation costs would be "substantial" and ultimately lower utility bills.

ETSI is negotiating with four Texas utility companies to use the pipeline.

Evans said the coal slurry the pipeline would carry would be nontoxic, nonflammable and pose no environmental risks.

The coal, now transported in chunks in rail cars, would be ground to the consistency of sugar, mixed with water and pumped through the pipeline at an average pressure of 400 pounds per inch.

"THE BEST LOG ANALYSIS BOOK I'VE EVER READ". S. Pate, Geologist
"Your book has given me confidence in my investments."
A. P. Fische, Investor
"Truly an invaluable book." D. Heath, Petroleum Engineer
Log Analysis has been a subject of confusion, misunderstanding, and guesswork for many years. Today "Analyzing Your Logs" places within your grasp the knowledge you need for a clear understanding.
Over 100 illustrations guide you through resistivity basics, porosity measurements, SP, saturations, and much more, clearly showing you each step of the analysis process.
Its unique format presents two methods of analysis. The Chart Method allows beginners to understand the principles, while the Mathematical Method gives the more advanced reader an opportunity for in-depth study.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

OPEC members may turn to outside help

HOUSTON — Some members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries may be turning to more outside help in an effort to police production of crude oil production by member states, according to Petroleum Information. The publication says the move may be part of a broader plan to tackle the tricky problem of how to define production more precisely.

Oil firm plans $2.4 million drilling program

DENVER — Barrett Resources Corp. recently spudded the Crystal Creek A-2 wildcat well located in Section 23, T-6-S, R-97-W, Garfield County, Colorado. The Crystal Creek A-2 will be drilled to a depth of 8,900 feet and will test the Green River, Wasatch, Fort Union, Lance, and Mesaverde formations. This is the first well of a planned $2,400,000, seven-well drilling program in Barrett's Grand Valley Prospect.

Mesa announces public offering of notes

AMARILLO — Mesa Petroleum Co. has announced tht it has commenced its public offering of $500,000,000 principal amount of subordinated exchangeable variable rate notes. Net proceeds of the offering will be used to reduce outstanding bank indebtedness. Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. is the sole underwriter of the offering.

Cosden names new La Porte plant manager

DALLAS — Cosden Oil & Chemical Co. has announced the appointment of Wm. A. (Bill) Loubiere as plant manager at La Porte, Texas, for the recently acquired 470 million pound per year polypropylene plant. Cosden acquired the La Porte facility and polypropylene business from Arco Chemical Co. on July 1 of this year.

Pennzoil bids on 14 offshore tracts in Gulf

HOUSTON — Pennzoil Co. said it participated in high bids for 14 tracts in the federal offshore oil and gas lease sale held in Houston. So far this year, Pennzoil has participated in 41 top bids for government leases in the Gulf of Mexico and Offshore Alaska.

If the bids are accepted, the company's share of the lease costs will amount to $18.9 million.

Conoco plans $42 million coke calciner

LAKE CHRLES, La. — Conoco Inc. has announced plans to construct a $42 million premium coke calciner at the company's Lake Charles refinery.

The facility will process 300 thousand tons per year of green premium coke into higher-value, calcined premium coke used in the production of steel. Green coke must be calcined or "roasted" to eliminate impurities before it is used to manufacture high-grade graphite electrodes used in electric arc steel furnaces.

Is there actually solid market for financial services?

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — The expansionists say the selling of insurance is destined to be merged into the larger industry called "financial services," joining stocks, bonds, mutual funds and other products.

The purists disagree. Insurance, they say, should remain separate and distinct from other products simply because it is special — a necessity rather than an investment choice, estate security rather than a risk opportunity.

Seldom has an entire industry been placed so precisely at the crossroads, with one track leading to an expansion of services, a la Prudential Bache, and the other to refinement of the original product in the New England Life mold.

"It's 50-50 in terms of purists and expansionists," said Irving "Skip" Stein, president this year of the American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters.

This might surprise those who thought the insurance industry already had evolved to the point where all insurers would soon offer just about any product to which a dollar sign could be affixed. But it isn't so.

"The integration of stocks and insurance has not come about," said Stein recently after spending many months speaking to heads of various financial institutions. "What I heard makes a 360-degree circle," he said.

The confusion, said Stein, can be found throughout the life insurance, banking and equities businesses. "Everybody's putting their toe in the water, but they are not jumping," he said. They are reflecting instead.

They are reflecting, according to Stein, about whether the financial services thrust is simply a passing fad, and whether or not each element of the industry will be back on its own turf in a few years.

Insurers, he said, recall their fascination with mutual funds back in 1969 and 1970, and how positive some of them were that their future lay in that direction. "It was a puff of smoke," he said. "Is this the same?" he asks.

Stein's concern involves a basic question of whether the cry for financial services emanates from customers or companies. "There's a lot of noise," he agrees. "But we're not certain the public is making the demand," he says.

Determining just where the cry comes from and why it is made is important to Stein in his own business, American Benefit Group of East Orange, N.J., and to the American College at Bryn Mawr, Pa., which trains insurance personnel.

Since the college certifies both Chartered Life Underwriters, who specialize in insurance, and Chartered Financial Consultants, whose activities are broader, it behooves the college to know industry trends.

Says Stein, who holds both certificates, "We're providing education for members in pure life insurance, and financial planning for those who want it, and we want to be in a position to go either way."

Regardless of how the selling structure shapes up, the product itself has changed greatly. As homeowners now do with adjustable rather than fixed-rate mortgages, the life insurance buyer today assumes greater risk than before.

Specifically, the insurance buyer of yesterday usually received a guaranteed premium payment schedule, guaranteed death benefits and guaranteed cash values. But inflation and volatile interest rates changed that.

Today's policyholder is likely to receive an "interest-sensitive" policy, meaning the premiums and cash value might fluctuate. While the death benefit might also vary, a minimum payout usually remains guaranteed.

Within the industry, even this accommodation to the realities of the marketplace is controversial. "Insurers themselves don't know if this is good or bad," said Stein.

"The winds are blowing in a dozen directions."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Take advantage of stock purchase plan

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. My husband is in a savings plan at work. For every dollar he has deducted from his salary, the company puts up 25 cents and the money is used to buy the company's stock. Is this really considered a good investment? Would we be better off investing the money in another way?

A. It's an excellent employee stock purchase plan, through which your husband is buying the company's stock at a 20 percent discount. If your husband has $800 withheld from his salary, the company contributes $200 and your husband gets $1,000 worth of stock.

Different companies' employee stock purchase, savings and investment plans come in many different forms. The one you outline seems to be one of the best. It would be more than foolish not to take advantage of it.

This column has long advocated employee stock purchase plans. When your husband buys stock, he becomes a part owner of the company. There's nothing quite like "having a piece of the action" to motivate employees to make a company more profitable. That helps the company and all its stockholders.

You might or might not do better investing elsewhere. However, the value of any other investment you make would have to rise 20 percent just to equal the deal your husband has in his company's stock purchase plan. My advice is to stay with that plan.

Silly names discovered in grocery store travels

By LINDA ANDERSON

I have four children, all going through different stages of growth and appetite. Therefore, I spend a lot of time in the supermarket, trying to keep them supplied with essentials like milk, pantyhose and notebook paper.

In my travels down grocery store aisles, I have been struck by some of the really dumb names some manufacturers give their products.

Don't get me wrong — I don't mean to slur the quality of these products. (Some of them I have used for years and am extremely satisfied with.) It's just the names...

For instance:

Ocean Spray (what do cranberries have to do with the ocean?), Franco-American spaghetti (Doesn't "Franco" mean French? Isn't spaghetti Italian?), Rice-a-Roni (I know what rice is, but what's "a-Roni"?), Chock Full 'O Nuts coffee (Coffee is made from beans, not nuts!)

Pet food and pet supplies can be the source of some really strange product names. Some of the best of these names are Mighty Dog, Happy Cat, Bright Eyes, Crave, Thrive, Love Me Tender Chunks, Come and Get It and Kibbles and Bits and Bits and Bits.

Then there's the household cleaning supplies with funny names: Resolve Carpet Cleaner, Shout, (which is usually what I do at my kids when they mess up their clothes enough for me to use Shout for removing the stain), Tough Act (oh, come on), Renuzit, Love My Carpet, Bounce (a fabric softener named Bounce?).

Hand and body soaps called Coast, Irish Spring (I'm sure the Irish use soap during the other three seasons, too), Dial, Tone, Caress, Gentle Touch and Dawn also have names which don't always fit the product.

And what in the world are Living Gloves? Sounds like a 1950s monster movies — "The Attack of the Living Gloves!"

Cookies and crackers with unusual names include Hi Ho (from the theme song of Snow White's seven friends?), Hydrox (good cookie, but not a pretty name), and Pitter Patter (which is made with peanut butter and has nothing to do with tiny feet).

Ever tried to figure out what Upper 10, Squirt, Big Red and Crush are just from their names?

What is a Cheez Whiz? What does a Blue Bonnet have to do with margarine?

Paper products' names include Viva!, Job Squad, Spill Mate, Bounty (which I thought was a movie or a ship), Glad and Charmin (toilet tissue can be soft, come in colors and given a scent, but is it ever really charming?).

Perhaps the richest source of strange product names is in hair products and personal care. How about Rave, Aqua Net, Loving Care, Flex, Squeek (don't ask me), Agree, Gee Your Hair Smells Terrific, Finesse, For Oily Hair Only, Pert (not to be confused with Perk floor care product), Body on Tap, and my personal favorites, The Aussie Mega Shampoo and Australian Hair Salad (no, I am not kidding).

Like I say, I'm not questioning the quality of these products, many of which we use at my house. But when you really start thinking about their names, some of them really are funny.

I guess it doesn't take much to keep me amused.

BETTER BUSINESS

Program keeps communications open

By LINDA TRUITT

In recent research the Institute for Civil Justice found only 7 percent to 20 percent of the total cases filed in U.S. courts went to trial, but (based on 1980 and 1981 records) ICJ estimates the national annual output for processing civil cases at all court levels to be $2.2 billion.

These figures represent the expenses of utilizing the court system which are costs paid by taxpayers. They do not include dollars paid for attorney's fees, witness expenses and resulting awards.

Not only is a lawsuit expensive, but litigation is time consuming. One large national insurance company estimated a routine suit takes an average of 17.2 months from filing to closing, according to statistics supplied by the Journal of American Insurance 1984.

Arbitration is being recognized more and more as the way to settle marketplace disputes. Fast, efficient and fair, arbitration offers an alternative to expensive and time-consuming litigation.

Television and newspaper advertisements displaying a "Pledge to Arbitrate — Customer Concern Program" logo have been seen recently. Businesses displaying this logo are precommited to Better Business Bureau arbitration. Consumers who have problems with businesses which cannot be mediated through the BBB businesses that display this logo are letting customers know in advance of their willingness to arbitrate.

Arbitration is a legal process in which two or more people agree to permit a third person to make a final decision in a dispute between them.

When the BBB is called about a problem with a business participating in the Customer Concern Program, the BBB contacts the company by telephone to try and resolve the problem immediately.

If for some reason the problem is not solved, arbitration is offered, and if the consumer agrees, the consumer and the company select the arbitrator from the BBB's pool of trained community volunteers. Once a mutually convenient time and place are selected, the arbitrator will hear each side.

After each party has had a chance to give evidence and ask questions and the arbitrator has gathered the necessary facts, the arbitrator has 10 days to make a decision regarding the company's liability in meeting the consumer's request. The decision is final under Texas law.

Generally a business would not be allowed to advertise its affiliation with the BBB because the BBB cannot give the impression it is recommending any company's product or service. But because the Customer Concern Program is designed to help keep the business and customer communicating until all methods of resolving the problem are exhausted, it was decided the customer needed to know which businesses are Customer Concern participants.

For help in resolving a marketplace dispute, regardless of whether it is a business or individual problem, call the BBB.

Survey says pet owners content

NEW YORK (AP) — Pet owners responding to a survey felt better about themselves and the world than non-owners of pets, a magazine said.

The conclusions were based on answers from 13,000 readers who filled out a four-page questionnaire printed by Psychology Today in April. Eighty-three percent of those answering were women, 78 percent were under 45 years old, 88 percent have pets now and 89 percent said they had pets while growing up.

Pet owners were more likely to check positive responses than non-owners when asked how they felt about their lives, the magazine said.

The readers ranked pets ahead of jobs in importance and just behind friends and family, the magazine said, with 79 percent saying that at times pets were their closest companions.

Seven out of 10 said they thought pets helped young couples prepare for parenthood "by getting them used to responsibility and to having someone depend on them," it said.

One in four looked on pets as human members of their families and the rest as "almost-human members," the magazine said.

High-tech invasion brings change to rural life

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — Satellite dishes are sprouting up throughout rural Georgia in a high-tech invasion that is bringing news, sports and entertainment from around the globe to isolated farm families.

Nationwide sales of the satellite systems, which cost an average of $3,000 each, jumped from 20,000 in 1981 to 60,000 in 1982 and about 180,000 in 1983, according to Peter Dalton, president of the Society for Private and Commercial Earth Stations, an industry group.

Dalton estimated 560,000 systems would be installed this year, with sales of at least $1.4 billion.

"For people who are out in the boonies, where cable will never be, they don't have any alternative," said Ken Rodd Jr., whose family owns an electronics firm here that installs the systems.

Industry estimates show there are about 37 million homes in the United States that are not hooked up to cable systems, many in the rural South. However, with a dish and related components, these households can receive signals from more than 30 communications satellites located 22,300 miles above the Earth.

The major television networks and cable TV companies, such as Home Box Office, Cinemax and Showtime, beam their signals up to the satellites for distribution to affiliates in far-flung areas.

By tuning in the satellite signals, dish owners gain access to 60 to 100 channels with a wide choice of programming, ranging from movies and sporting events to news and educational shows.

This policy was adopted officially in 1983, when the Federal Communications Commission ruled that local and state governments cannot regulate television programming distributed by satellites to private dwellings.

"We have a lot of people who are interested in sports and there's no way they're going to get it without a dish," Rodd said. "They have unlimited things to watch ... " with the satellite dish.

Bobby Smith, 52, who lives in a rural area 9 miles east of Albany, purchased a dish about five months ago and said it has greatly expanded his family's television viewing options.

"It opened up a whole new field for us as far as TV was concerned," said Smith.

Eyeglass production anything but simple

Hearst News Service

Eyeglasses get dropped, sat on, jammed unprotected into pockets and handbags, rubbed with abrasive cleansers and cloths and steamed up — in the name of cleanliness — by some very germy breaths.

Considering the price of prescription glasses these days, that's a strange way to treat what constitutes a major monetary investment to many wearers. Nor, if you value time and effort, would you probably condone such behavior toward the end result of a complex process that begins with an eye examination by an optometrist or opthamologist.

If corrective lenses are recommended, the patient is asked what would most suit his lifestyle — glasses, contact lenses or other prescription aids — before writing out a prescription.

This prescription is probably as confusing to the average person as the ones written for drugs. There are puzzling terms such as spherical and cylinder correction, which basically boil down to numbers which tell whether the patient is near- or far-sighted or has special needs such as bifocals or trifocals. Also included, after the patient has selected his frames, is information indicating the shape and measurement of the frame at the lens' longest point, which is necessary to determine the size of the lens blank that will be selected for cutting.

The next step is to surrender both frames and prescription to the optical department, where they disappear for an average of about nine days, to reappear as a completed pair of glasses. Here's what happens in between:

Prescription and frames usually are placed in a tray and sent into a stockroom. Blanks, which start out looking like very thick (about ½-inch) round plastic coasters, are placed in the tray while "the power" — numbers from the prescription form — is fed into a computer, which in turn gives the laboratory the optician's measurements and settings for the special lathe — also called the "power" generator.

Next, the blanks are marked with geometrical centers and optical centers and then covered with protective plastic on the front. Each blank now is clamped into a ring mold while an alloy of cadmium, magnesium and zinc is poured over the plastic and quickly cooled. This metal block is designed to hold the lens in place on the lathe.

Then each blank goes into the lathe or "power" generator. The technician, referring to his computer readout, dials the correct settings on the machine, places a blank lens inside and then closes it while a water-cooled (for plastic) or oil-cooled (for glass) diamond cutting wheel carves out the back or concave side of the lens to the curve requested on the prescription. This takes about 90 seconds for each plastic lens, twice that for a glass lens.

Each lens, now about half its original thickness, then is covered with a rough, flower-shaped pad similar to a piece of sandpaper and placed on a disc in the fining machine where the rough edges are cut off.

The final step is to dip the frame into glass beads heated to 250 degrees, then quickly snap the lenses into place before the gooey plastic hardens at room temperature. After a last check of the prescription on a computer, where the lenses may need minor adjustments to make sure they're in exactly the position they should be in the frame, the glasses are ready for the customer.

DEAR ABBY

Jokes make brunette see red

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are the proud parents of a beautiful son, now nearly 3. As he began to grow and change, we were astonished that his hair color was totally different from ours. Although there are blonds further removed from our family line, my husband and I and everyone else on both sides have black hair.

I am fed up with people who constantly make jokes like, "It must have been the mailman," etc. Now, my husband is saying the same thing in the presence of other people, and I am burning! It's as though he is apologizing for the fact that our son is a blond. Or maybe he wants to get his cheap comment in before someone else does.

What can I say when these remarks are made? And what is our son going to think when he's old enough to understand that people are accusing his mother of adultery? I need a snappy comeback. — OUTRAGED

DEAR OUTRAGED: Forget the snappy comeback. If you try too hard to defend yourself, people may think you protest too much.

You can, and should, tell your husband that you are hurt, not amused, by his "jokes." But as far as the others are concerned, don't make an issue of it. When your son is old enough to "understand," he will realize that these comments are not meant to be taken seriously.

DEAR ABBY: A young man wrote that he was devastated because he had been losing his hair since age 17. How I wish I could look him in the eye and tell him that he is nuttier than a Christmas fruitcake!

The same thing happened to me. I looked back down my ancestral line and saw bald men like fence posts. Here and there could be found a post with moss growing on top (hair on an occasional head), but those with hair performed not one whit better as fence posts than the "baldies."

Abby, please tell that young, "intelligent," average-looking 22-year-old fellow to quit feeling sorry for himself. Instead, he should look in the mirror and keep telling himself that bald is beautiful. If he accepts himself as he is, others will accept him at his face value — not his skull value. Sign me ... AGE 82, BALD AT 19

DEAR 82: Bravo for you, my friend. But unfortunately not all men have your inner strength and value system.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a divorced mother of two daughters, ages 12 and 14. The three of us have been living on child support, welfare and an occasional part-time job when I can get one. Believe me, we barely make ends meet.

My 14-year-old daughter makes $40 a week baby-sitting, and we've had some heated arguments because I asked her for $5 a week toward her room and board. She's threatened everything from running away, to quitting her baby-sitting job, to doing nothing until she's old enough to live away from home, if I demand any of her wages.

I feel like a villain for asking for a lousy $5 a week. Was I out of line to ask? And should I quit asking? — HURTING

DEAR HURTING: You were NOT out of line to ask, but in view of your daughter's attitude, you'd be wise to quit asking. If she should bite the hand that feeds her, you may be stuck for rabies shots.

DEAR ABBY: A cousin of mine was married 10 months ago. It was her first marriage and his third. The bride was 24 and the groom (are you sitting down, Abby?) 81, but he could have passed for 65 or 70.

This cousin had a baby boy last week, and she and her husband are happy as a pair of teen-agers.

I've never heard of a man in his 80s fathering a child. I think he set a record, don't you? — PENNSYLVANIA DUTCHMAN

DEAR DUTCHMAN: Probably not. But if somebody out there can top this, I'll hear about it.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

FDA issues warning about 'herbal pills'

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — A brand of "herbal pills" being sold over the counter in up to 40 states — including California — as a remedy for arthritis and high blood pressure actually contains potentially dangerous levels of prescription drugs and should not be bought or consumed, the federal Food and Drug Administration warned recently.

The FDA said Sup-Herb brand herbal pills contain drugs similar to those in a so-called Chinese herbal pill that was linked to two deaths and a number of hospitalizations in 1974 and 1980. Sup-Herb pills have been heavily promoted in Hawaii and sent to some 1,100 distributors across the nation, the FDA said. The agency said it knows of no deaths so far connected to consumption of the pills.

The pills are advertised as a natural herbal remedy, but the FDA's San Francisco laboratory said they actually contain a prescription arthritis drug called indomethacin; a diuretic called hydrochlorothiazide, prescribed for high blood pressure, and traces of a prescription tranquilizer commonly called Valium.

Indomethacin can have serious side effects. Any of the drugs could be especially dangerous when taken in combination with other prescription medications, the FDA said.

Robots entering entertainment market

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — Not so long ago, robots were mostly found in factories, faceless machines with spindly arms that did the work of real people, twisting bolts on assembly lines and welding metal to metal.

But now Warner Leisure Inc., a subsidiary of Warner Communications, has installed a fully animated robot, a lounge singer, in a bar in suburban Atlanta.

"You remember World War II," says the molded fiberglass figure called Sammy Sands, an oversize, cartoonlike character who sits behind a piano. "It was in all the newspapers." A pack of cigarettes, a dirty ashtray, a half-finished manhattan and a jar for tips are arranged atop the piano, a nonfunctional prop.

Once each hour at night and several times during the day, Sammy performs one of six 12-minute-long prerecorded sets of jokes and music. Wearing a silver lame jacket and bow tie undone at the neck, he sings, plays country-and-western arrangements of hits and winks at the audience. The music and jokes are all on a reel-to-reel tape, activated by bar employees, and although Sammy's hands and mouth move, the sound actually comes from a speaker behind the robot.

Furniture bought by mail

Associated Press

Are the sophisticated new home furnishings shown in magazines available at retail stores across America?

According to some mail order retailers and decorating service providers, they are not. That's one reason why catalog sales of stylish new home furnishings and other products are on the increase, they say.

Recently, for example, a large catalog retailer began selling custom upholstered furniture by mail. Around the same time, an international decorating authority launched a mail order business to provide interior decorating services and home furnishings products normally available only through designers.

As an individual primarily headquartered in New York and London, Mary Gilliatt, the decorating authority, says she used to think that people could easily obtain the new materials.

"When I wrote a decorating book in 1981, I included pages of samples showing a representative selection of the latest fabrics, wall coverings, tiles, carpets and so on. I had many letters from readers about them and their lack of availability.

"I found there is a huge market outside the major cities — people who are not near a designer, are hesitant about hiring one, don't want to use one or cannot afford one. Yet, these people would want an occasional roll of wallpaper or a bolt of fabric."

As a result, she has written the "Mix and Match Decorating Book" (Pantheon) which is a guide to currently-available soft home furnishings.

Readers may use it in several ways. "My idea is that the book could work as an armchair shopping guide, as a guide to mixing colors and choosing color schemes and as an aid to mixing and matching patterns." Ideas on room design are also included.

Since many of the samples shown are available only through decorators, Ms. Gilliatt said she set up a mail order company which would fill orders for the materials shown.

The company will also offer a decorate-by-mail service for a fee in which clients fill out a mailed questionnaire and provide other information and receive a decorating scheme complete with fabric swatches and color schemes, said Diane E. Brandis, general manager of the New York-based Mix and Match Decorating Service.

Offering such special services is a fairly new wrinkle in mail-order shopping. It has been made possible by an already-large number of consumers who feel comfortable ordering expensive items by mail, according to Albert Paul.

Paul, a vice president at Spiegel Inc., says the ability to offer greater variety and items not found locally coupled with the convenience it provides has made mail-order home furnishings sales a great growth area for his company.

He says close to 80 percent of Spiegel's home furnishings sales come from areas with population densities under 500,000.

"We are reaching localities not served by major stores and where selection of merchandise is not so large as people would like," he said.

Spiegel's sales figures indicate that unique or unusual decorative items — especially lamps, area rugs, home accessories and occasional furniture — are in special demand.

Spiegel's new special-order upholstered furniture program enables customers to select from among a number of fabric swatches of the fabric they like best and the furniture style they prefer.

Two collections of furniture and fabric have been prepared — one featuring traditional styles and one with contemporary styles.

There is a fee for the packets of fabric and furniture styles, but they may be returned if the customer chooses not to order.

Once a packet has been ordered, Spiegel will take the initiative to call the customer to provide additional information or to take orders.

The mail order firm is promising shipment of the finished furniture within 30 days with an additional time period of up to two weeks for the furniture to reach the customer.

Although Spiegel will permit returns if a customer is not satisfied, Paul is not concerned that a great deal of furniture will come back.

Customers are searching for convenience, value, quality and style, he says. They will have little reason to return merchandise that delivers these things, in his opinion.

Paul predicted home furnishings would continue to grow as a percentage of mail order sales. Figures the catalogue retailer has gathered indicate that mail order sales as a whole will also grow substantially.

A mock psychological exercise takes place between seminarian Mark Dolson (Matt Mabe), left, and Father Tim Farley (Jess Kozman) in Bill Davis' "Mass Appeal," set to open Friday in Theatre Two at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. The play focuses on the relationship between a young fervent seminarian and a popular parish priest. Scheduled for nine performances, "Mass Appeal" closes Aug. 18. For reservations call the theater's box office, 682-4111.

ENTERTAINMENT

Midland Suburban Lions sponsor demolition derby

The 1984 Super National II Demolition Derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club, will be at 8:30 p.m. Saturday at Twin Cities Speedway, located 15 miles west of Midland on Highway 80.

The Nevada Demo Champion, Minnesota Champion, Oklahoma, East Texas and all of the West Texas champions, including several female daredevils, will battle it out for the prizes.

Prize money for the derby will be paid out to the first five places, with first place receiving $1,000. A prize of $100 will be awarded to the farthest towed distance to Twin Cities by a car running in this derby. In all, $2,500 will be awarded.

Admission to the derby for spectators is $6 for adults, $1 for children ages 6 to 11 with children under 6 admitted free.

Under the established rules, no vehicle can remain stationary longer than five minutes. The demolition derby is scheduled to continue until one car is left running. Drivers may maneuver forward or backward. Rules prohibit deliberate head-on collisions or hitting an opponent's car in the driver's side front door. All glass must be removed and all doors and wagon gates must be strapped, wired or welded. Team entries will be accepted.

Cars will be accepted as entries Friday or Saturday night. Entry fee for a car in the derby is $25 per car.

For more information call J.A. Coldwell, a member of the Midland Suburban Lions Club, 683-8541.

Museum to play host to seminar

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum will play host to a museum seminar Friday. In an event co-sponsored by the Texas Historical Commission and the Permian Basin Museum Institute, museum consultant David Estabrook will speak on "How to Read and Research Artifacts for Interpretive Exhibits."

Estabrook, who formerly was with the Smithsonian Institution, will demonstrate how primary materials, such as letters, diaries, photographs and clothing, can enrich the understanding of a period and its people. Other topics to be covered include interpretation of three-dimensional artifacts, relationships between art and history in interpreting culture and the inquiry method of teaching in a museum.

Registration and coffee will begin at 9 a.m. There is a $5 fee payable to the Texas Historical Commission. The presentation will get under way at 9:30 a.m. and will last until about 3 p.m.

The seminar is open to the public. A lunch break will be provided.

Breakdance contest set for mall

The Midland Parks and Recreation Department and Midland Park Mall will host a breakdance contest Saturday beginning at 1 p.m. at the mall.

The competition is open to any interested parties. Teams and individuals will be accepted. Entry fee is $15 per team or $5 per individual. Only 10 entries in each category will be allowed. Registration and entry fee deadlines are Friday.

Prizes will be awarded to the first three places in each division.

Registration forms or more information may be obtained by contacting the Parks and Recreation office, 683-4281, or the mall offices, 694-1663.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

We're eating too much protein

Dear Dr. Solomon: I become confused when I read about the need for protein as so many grams a day and so on. Can you give me some example of how much protein a man needs using foods that are commonly eaten? — Joe, Chicago

Dear Joe: Just as an example, a man who weighs about 150 pounds would have his daily protein needs satisfied by having two 8-ounce glasses of milk and a 6-ounce portion of meat or fish. As you can seem most American diets contain more protein than the recommended allowance.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A classmate of mine who would gorge herself and then cause herself to vomit finally went to a doctor. He prescribed some medication which I believe is an antidepressant, and it seems to be doing some good. Are drugs the only treatment for this condition? — Pam, Akron, Ohio

Dear Pam: Bulimia, the condition you describe, has also been treated with behavior modification. In fact, a report from the Michael Reese Hospital and Medical Center in Chicago notes that behavior modification can be even more effective than drugs.

Dr. Craig Johnson, director of the Eating Disorders Project, suggests that screening before the start of treatment may help determine which patients might benefit from each method.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You answered a question similar to one I'm going to ask, but I would appreciate it if you would give me a little more information. You wrote that a candy bar will not give a ballplayer an extra energy boost before a game. But candy bars do contain sugar, which releases energy, so why won't they give a boost? I don't see the logic in your answer. — Gus. N.Y.

Dear Gus: Dr. Wayne R. Bidlack, of the University of Southern California School of Medicine, notes that it takes too long for a candy bar to be digested for it to provide an immediate boost in energy. Furthermore, in healthy people the body will manufacture insulin so that the noraml blood sugar level is maintained.

For Jeffrey, Syracuse, N.Y.: Grains, vegetables, and fats are important for all people, regardless of age. They provide both vegetable protein and fiber, which has been said to protect against colonic cancer.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist with the Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write to Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. He will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Hepatitis strain strikes four nurses, kills one

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A 40-year-old nurse has died and three others became ill after contracting a strain of hepatitis at the University of Michigan Hospitals, a hospital spokesman said.

Nurse Caroline O'Donnell of Milan died Tuesday in St. Joseph Mercy Hospital. Hause said Ms. O'Donnell and another nurse, who is recovering at home, contracted the disease July 24.

'Sting participants used bad judgment'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The FBI sting that resulted in automaker John De Lorean's arrest on cocaine charges was a "steamroller" that caused its creators to use exercise judgment, an ex-government agent who participated in the operation testified.

In his second day on the stand in defense of De Lorean, ex-Drug Enforcement Administration agent Gerald V. Scotti said a mood of triumph swept the agency when it learned that the onetime General Motors executive had been arrested.

"I, like every other agent in the case, was on a real high that we had made a case that had so much notoriety," Scotti said Wednesday of the Oct. 19, 1982, arrest.

"Did you think De Lorean was guilty or innocent?" asked Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Perry.

Scotti answered reluctantly, saying he believed only the jury could make that decision.

"My state of mind was I felt he was guilty myself. I thought we had made a good case," he said.

De Lorean, 59, is charged with conspiring to distribute $24 million worth of cocaine to save his failing car company in Northern Ireland. If convicted on all counts, he could face 67 years in prison.

Scotti, who resigned last year during an investigation of a leak of government information, said he believed DEA agents "cared" about establishing De Lorean's true intentions.

"But I think we were all blind to what we were doing," he added. "This thing was on a steamroller and we lost sight of where we were. This case was so important that a lot of us who would have used better judgment on another occasion used bad judgment."

Asked if he thought at the time of the arrest that De Lorean had negotiated a drug deal, Scotti said: "We all really hoped so and wanted to believe it. I'm not sure anybody knew what he had actually done."

Throughout the De Lorean sting, Scotti said, "We were all blind to what was going on.... We were all caught up in a zeal to press this case further."

The defense contends that De Lorean was targeted for a drug arrest by a government informant and that agents leaped at the chance to arrest a celebrity.

Perry asked if Scotti was among those "blinded.".

"I was part of it," Scotti said. "I was caught up in it as much as anybody else. I wanted to see it happen."

Scotti was grilled for a full day Wednesday by Perry, who drew on Scotti's DEA personnel records to imply his judgment was impaired during the De Lorean investigation — not by ambition, but by the breakup of his marriage and subsequent financial problems.

Scotti denied this, and the defense demanded to see the personnel files.

The witness acknowledged he had family problems in 1982 and said he confided in his supervisor once that his work performance was suffering.

But when Perry suggested that the witness lied to the supervisor, William Waters, about his role in providing secret information to a defense attorney in another case, Scotti became incensed.

"I did not lie to Bill Waters," he said adamantly.

The agent, defending himself against a barrage of accusations from Perry, stood fast in his claim that the government's "star informant," James Timothy Hoffman, boasted of being able to "get De Lorean" four months before the automaker's arrest.

He said he suspected the informant's plan could be entrapment.

Regan: Taxes unnecessary to balance budget

Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan Wednesday said it is possible to balance the federal budget by 1989 without raising taxes because a growing economy will generate $1 trillion in new revenues.

The Reagan administration has been accused by Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale of hiding from the public a "secret plan" to raise taxes after the November election to close mounting federal deficits predicted to reach $200 billion annually by the end of the decade.

But Regan, in a press conference, suggested an expanding economy would bring a huge influx of new revenues while simultaneously reducing federal outlays, presumably for social welfare programs.

"Five years up, we will be getting $300 million to $350 million (annually) more in revenues than we are now," declared Regan. That means, he said, that $1 trillion in additional tax dollars will be generated over that period "with no change in the tax code."

SOUNDING THE Reagan administration theme in response to the Mondale charges, Regan went on to say: "For heavens sake, we have enough money to spend. I don't think we need new taxes."

"It's possible (to balance the budget) simply by not spending all that we take in," he said, because "of the continued recovery that we are in."

Regan said part of the deficit reduction would come because "there won't be the need for some of the federal expenditures we're now in." He did not detail which ones he had in mind.

BUT IN A speech to a San Francisco civic group, the secretary also stressed that the administration did not expect the deficit problem to simply take care of itself.

"We have some unfinished business," Regan told the Commonwealth Club. "We got a downpayment on the deficit this year. But that's only the beginning. Hand-in-hand with reductions through economic growth, we will continue to push for deficit reductions through spending cuts and spending restraints."

He did not specify what cuts would be recommended.

Added Regan: "Keep in mind, you don't have deficits because the working American isn't taxed enough. We have deficits because your federal goverment spends too much."

Democrats, including Mondale, have instead contended that the massive deficits are due to overspending by Mr. Reagan on the military and overly generous tax cuts for the rich and corporations. And they hope to remind voters this year that the president campaigned for office in 1980 on a promise that the federal budget would be balanced by 1984.

BUT THE secretary, in his speech, hailed Reagan administration policies he said produced "the strongest economic recovery in the postwar years."

He recited figures showing that inflation has subsidied, unemployment has dropped, while savings, profits, capital spending and productivity are on the increase.

"We fully expect the good numbers to keep rolling in," said Regan. "The indication is that our expansion will move towards a sustainable and still-strong rate over the second half of this year, somewhere in the 4 (percent) to 5 percent range."

Regan was referring to the growth in the U.S. Gross National Product.

Union: Management 'provoking' employees

WASHINGTON (AP) — The presidents of unions representing half a million Postal Service employees are warning management of an increasing militancy by workers upset over a collective bargaining impasse.

Without predicting whether the members of the American Postal Workers Union and the National Association of Letter Carriers would actually carry out a strike, which would be illegal, these labor leaders said management has been provoking union members.

"If the ingredients for a strike do not exist, no demagogue can make it happen," Moe Biller, president of the APWU, told the National Press Club Wednesday. If conditions are ripe for a walkout, "no leader can prevent it," he added.

Biller and Vincent F. Sombrotto, head of the letter carriers, said a decision on whether to strike or accept binding arbitration of the dispute with the Postal Service will be left to some 8,000 delegates to the unions' conventions scheduled later this month in Las Vegas, Nev.

"It is up to these representatives, elected by over 500,000 good and decent people, to make some serious decisions," Sombrotto said. "And we as leaders will heed their wishes."

Meanwhile, provisions of the Postal Reorganization Act calling for appointment of fact-finding boards have been set into motion, and any resort to arbitration would involve a months-long process which would result in a binding and final settlement imposed on the two sides by sometime in December.

Biller and Sombrotto accused Postmaster General William F. Bolger and the nine-member Board of Governors of "wanting an impasse."

Spokesmen for Bolger had no immediate comment.

Biller and Sombrotto also said in answer to a question that they would risk going to jail if they became convinced that a strike were the only remaining option.

"If we have to go to jail ..., there's no more noble cause than on the behalf of postal workers and on behalf of labor," Biller said.

Negotiations on a new three-year contract collapsed just before the July 21 expiration of the old pact and bargaining has reached an impasse.

The postal unions demanded healthy pay raises for their members, including wage and benefit increases amounting to about 10 percent in the first year of a new pact. A typical postal worker now earns about $23,000 a year, not including fringe benefits.

Among the "provocations" cited by the two union leaders is an attempt by management to implement its principal demand in the contract negotiations — creation of a two-tier wage scale in which new employees would be paid an average of $5,300 a year less than veterans in the same jobs.

Remains buried after 26 years

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The remains of a woman who died in 1947 have finally been buried after being left for 26 years in a police department property room.

The cremated remains of Annabelle Ickes, in a small brass replica of a coffin, were turned over to Kansas City police Sept. 12, 1958, after they were found in a safe at the Barclay Hotel in Kansas City. The urn had apparently had been left at the hotel in the early 1950s by Mrs. Ickes' daughter, Charlotte Martin.

A police investigation in 1958 found that Mrs. Ickes had died in 1947.

MIDLAND CENTER LOGO CONTEST

The Midland Center announces the kick off of the Midland Center Logo Contest. The winning logo will be used on the new electronic billboard to be installed on the Wall Street entrance and in conjunction with official Midland Center activities.

In addition to the logo, our objective is to educate the community about the Midland Center and what it has to offer to all members of the community as well as the upcoming events in the Center.

RULES OF THE CONTEST

1. All entries should be submitted on 8½ x 11, heavy grade white paper. Only two colors of medium should be used. All mediums are acceptable.
2. Entries should be mailed to: Midland Center Logo Contest, c/o Nancy Mehlert, 105 N. Main, 79701.
3. Only one entry per person will be allowed.
4. Entries should be received by August 20, 1984.
5. The winning logo will become the permanent property of the Midland Center and all rights to and use of the logo will be reserved to the contest.
6. No artwork will be returned to entrants following completion of the contest.
7. The Midland Center reserves the right to restrict uses of the logo.

Fair's workers may have stolen tickets

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — "Low-level" workers at the debt-ridden World's Fair may have stolen season passes worth up to $150 apiece and sold them, say authorities who seized thousands of records in a sweep of the exposition's ticket sales office.

The seizure of documents Wednesday by a task force armed with search warrants came as a legislative council began its own probe of the fair, which is expected to be about $60 million in debt when it closes Nov. 11.

The fair estimates it sold 160,000 season tickets at costs ranging from $90 to $150, but fair officials have been concerned that some of the money has not been reaching the exposition's coffers.

Season pass holders account for more than a fourth of the daily average attendance of 43,000.

Members of the staff of Orleans Parish District Attorney Harry Connick confirmed Wednesday that they were investigating allegations of theft and fraud in the distribution and sale of season passes.

"There are for sure some low-level employees involved. How high up it goes, we don't know," said Assistant District Attorney Eric Dubelier.

Assistant District Attorney Fred Harper said no one involved with the fair made the complaint that resulted in the seizure of the documents. Authorities would not say how much money is involved.

The season tickets originally were sold for $90. After last Jan. 1, the price went to $150. On May 23, hoping to boost attendance, the fair lowered the price to $99.

Purchasers were given certificates which had to be converted to laminated identification cards bearing the owner's photograph. The certificates were supposed to be canceled when the photo ID was issued, but some were collected and sold again, WDSU-TV reported Wednesday, quoting prosecutors and a fair official.

A special investigative council formed by the Legislature to handle the fair's finances was to have met for the first time today, but officials said the session has been delayed for about two weeks.

A week ago, members of the Joint Legislative Audit Council expressed concern that there might be holes in the fair's system for keeping track of its money.

Ann Brown, the fair's lawyer, said Wednesday that the exposition's staff has been concerned about reports that some money was not reaching the fair's coffers.

On Wednesday, however, committee members declined to elaborate on the reports that they had heard rumors of missing money.

The fair owes the state $10 million. In addition, the state has guaranteed $15 million in bank loans that were part of a bailout approved by the Legislature in June. The state also agreed to guarantee another $2.5 million in loans if the fair's finances do not improve.

The legislative panel has subpoena power and the authority to cite uncooperative witnesses for contempt. It is expected to meet within two weeks, Senate President Sam Nunez said.

Also on Wednesday, Gov. Edwin Edwards recommended that the fair pay its debts to the state with free tickets for school children.

He told a Chamber of Commerce "governor's luncheon" that each ticket given away would deduct $5 from what the fair owes the state.

Letters to legislators were mailed Wednesday, outlining the proposal and asking them to approve it in a mail ballot as soon as possible.

"It's not exactly legal," Edwards said of the mail ballot, "but if they approve it on a mail ballot I think we can make it official at the next (legislative) session.

"Anyhow, who is going to oppose it?" he added.

Edwards also held up a check for $1,125,000, which he said was the fair's first payment on "advances we made to the fair." He said more payments will come.

Comedian close to settling libel suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Pryor is "very close" to settling a $10 million libel suit against the National Enquirer over an article which said the comedian used cocaine while in the hospital for treatment of severe burns, his attorney said.

Attorneys in the case had been scheduled to meet Wednesday with Judge Philip Saeta for a mandatory settlement conference. But a lawyer for Pryor, Randall L. Hite, canceled the session in a letter informing Saeta that the settlement had been reached out of court.

Another lawyer for Pryor, Terry M. Giles, confirmed that a settlement is "very close" and should be completed within 30 to 60 days. But he declined Wednesday to reveal any terms.

Calls to the Enquirer offices in Lantana, Fla., went unanswered Wednesday night.

The suit involved a Sept. 9, 1980, article by the tabloid that said that Pryor had continued to use cocaine while being treated in the hospital for burns he suffered in an accident at his home in June 1980.

Pryor made headlines when he ran from the house and down the street engulfed in flames. At the time, he said his cigarette lighter ignited a rum drink he was holding.

Newman introduces popcorn

WESTPORT, Conn. (AP) — Actor Paul Newman has put another jar in the cupboard, introducing his third food product — Newman's Own Oldstyle Picture Show Popcorn.

Accompanied by banjo music and three women calling themselves Molly and the Popcornettes, Newman sang the virtues of his new popcorn to the tune of "I Am the Very Model of the Modern Major General" at an introduction ceremony Wednesday in a historic mansion.

Among the hundreds of guests who showed up to mark the occasion in Newman's hometown were actress June Havoc, who lives in the nearby town of Wilton, and television movie critic Gene Shalit.

Newman's popcorn follows Newman's Own Salad Dressing and Newman's Own Industrial Strength Spaghetti Sauce as food products introduced by the blue-eyed actor and race-car driver.

All proceeds from the sale of the foodstuffs go to charity through Newman's corporation, the New York-based Advantage Food Marketing Corp.

CHICAGO (AP) — Hugh Hefner's 72-room Playboy mansion, once the domicile of the men's magazine founder and his scantily-clad bunnies, will become the first student residence for the Art Institute of Chicago under a lease agreement.

The Victorian-style mansion, estimated to be worth $3 million, eventually will be donated to the school for use as a coed dormitory, Playboy officials said Tuesday.

The one-time bunny hutch on Chicago's posh Gold Coast, complete with a game room, steam room, bowling alley and indoor pool featuring a waterfall and underwater bar, will be named "Hefner Hall." Hefner lived and worked in the mansion from 1959 to 1971, when he moved to California.

"It is our intention and their hope it will become a permanent gift," said Christie Hefner, Hefner's daughter and president of Playboy Enterprises Inc.

Infant holding up well after bowel surgery

LONDON (AP) — Thirteen-day-old Hollie Roffey, the world's youngest heart transplant patient, made "a very slight improvement" today, getting some color back after undergoing surgery for a perforated bowel, a hospital spokesman said.

But Tom Cosgrove, chief administrator of London's National Heart Hospital said she remained in "very critical condition."

Doctors were "quite pleased" with the infant's progress after Wednesday's two-hour emergency operation to repair a hole in her bowel, said Cosgrove. "She has a lot better color than she had yesterday, she's moving about a little and she's awake, which is nice," he said.

Her transplanted heart was holding up "extremely well," he said.

The baby was under constant observation, attached to a respirator in a germ-free incubator.

Hollie was born July 20 with the left side of her heart missing, and was given the heart of a brain-damaged three-day-old Dutch baby in a 5½-hour operation Monday.

Hospital staff said that after the heart transplant the infant was "quite active" and that they were optimistic about her recovery. But on Wednesday she developed an abdominal problem, and was taken to surgery where doctors repaired a hole in her bowel.

Cosgrove said the bowel complication was unrelated to the heart transplant.

"It has arisen independently and is simply an unfortunate development," Cosgrove said.

On Wednesday night, Cosgrove reported that Hollie's condition was "extremely critical. She has just undergone another operation (the intestinal surgery) and for a very small child to undergo such surgery again is, of course, extremely difficult and extremely complex."

But Hollie's pulling through a second major operation so close after the first trauma gave doctors hope she would survive.

"We are very pleased by the fact that her new heart has managed to cope with the invasion of another surgical procedure," Cosgrove said Wednesday night. "It is, of course, still very, very early and we just hope that the surgery that has been carried out will have managed to sort out the problem that has arisen today."

Hollie's fight for life has pulled at the heartstrings of the nation.

British radio and television carried hourly reports of her condition and TV pictures Wednesday night showed her in a incubator attached to a battery of tubes and tapes, being fed milk through a nasal tube.
