Teaching virtue: Panel offers core character traits to MISD

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland public schools should not "leave the teaching of virtuous habits to chance," according to Senior District Judge Pat Baskin.

Speaking on behalf of the district's Community Advisory Committee on Character Education, Baskin said the committee came to a consensus on nine core character traits that should be taught in public schools. Baskin presented those traits to Midland school-board trustees at their regular meeting Tuesday night. The nine traits selected are citizenship, compassion, courage, diligence, fairness, honesty, integrity, respect, and responsibility.

Baskin said the committee was charged with "determining a set of core character traits that will guide the systematic instruction of character education in the

Some fourth-graders may burn for igniting fire-in-locker prank

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Some fourth-graders at Anson Jones Elementary School may find themselves in hot water for a school prank that wasn't so funny.

Students discovered a fire in a locker in the original building at the school, 4919 Shady Lane, about 12:45 p.m. Tuesday, according to Principal Marillyn Odum.

Before the school day ended, fire and school police officials questioned students who were implicated by their peers.

Ms. Odum said the fire was started in a fourth-grade classroom while classes were changing. She said the class was being led by a substitute teacher.

"Someone obviously took advantage of the situation and set fire to some papers in a locker," Ms. Odum said.

She said the fire was started about the time the students were coming in from recess.

The principal said the fire was contained to one locker and there was no damage to the building other than smoke, which was cleared by large fans provided by the Fire Department.

Price gauge of wholesale goods holds

■ March report suggests economy is still on Fed's glide path for a 'soft landing.'

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The cost of energy and food fell at the wholesale level in March, giving the country its best news on prices in five months and suggesting the economy was still on the Federal Reserve's glide path for a "soft landing."

The Labor Department reported that its Producer Price Index, after posting worrisome gains of 0.3 percent in both January and February, showed no increase at all in March, as the price of gasoline, autos and women's clothing dropped.

Financial markets initially rallied on the news with economists taking heart from the fact that the steep slide in the dollar has so far failed to show up in higher prices.

But the gains melted away later in the day after remarks by Federal Reserve board member Janet Yellen called into question the market's view that the Fed is through raising interest rates.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished the day down 11.07 at 4,187.08. Bond prices, however, were up, pushing the yield on Treasury's benchmark 30-year bond down to 7.37 percent in late trading as many investors continued to hold to the view that benign inflation reports were showing the Fed's string of seven rate increases had accomplished its inflation-fighting goals.

Many economists said the PPI report added to their convictions that the central bank has put any further credit tightening on hold.

The March figures for inflation at the retail level will be released today. Some

Plants weather record cold snap

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A record-breaking cold snap may have brought coats back out of the closets Tuesday morning, but it did not do any serious damage to area vegetation.

"If it had stayed cloudy and/or rained (Tuesday), we probably would have seen a lot more damage to the plants," said Trudy New, owner of La Casa Verde nursery. "However, because we had nice, warm sunshine (Tuesday), little damage was reported."

Ms. New said none of the plants at the nursery suffered any serious damage and she said few customers spoke of plant damage at their homes.

Joe Sperel, operations manager at Alldredge nursery, reported the same thing.

"We had a little damage on some of the plants at the nursery, but not that much," Sperel said. "I'm surprised we had so little damage for the amount of time it stayed below freezing."

The National Weather Service reported that temperatures dropped below freezing for about four hours, beginning

2nd church beseeches judge to quiet loud-praying women

GREENSBURG, Pa. (AP) — A Roman Catholic church beseeched a judge Tuesday to hush up two women who last week were banned from another parish for praying so loudly they drowned out the choir.

For the third consecutive day, Joan Sudwoj and Cynthia Balconi shouted the rosary at Blessed Sacrament Cathedral before and after morning Mass.

On Friday, Judge Bernard Scherer banned the women from another church, Holy Cross Church in Youngwood, until they comply with the pastor's rules.

Parishioners at Holy Cross endured two years during which Sudwoj, Balconi and a third woman — who has since agreed to quiet down — disrupted services by splashing holy water around and shouting the rosary louder than the priest's preaching or the choir.

The Diocese of Greensburg on Tuesday asked Scherer for a second injunction, this time to ban any disruptions at Blessed Sacrament. Scherer set a hear-

Clinton, U.S. to pause, honor FDR 50 years after his death

By Mike Feinsilber
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It was the place where Franklin Roosevelt found solace from Washington and hope that exercising in the warm mineral waters would some day allow him to walk again.

The white clapboard cottage in western Georgia's red clay hills was also where he died on April 12, 1945. Ever since his death shocked a war-weary nation, Roosevelt has been a larger-than-life figure in America's memory. Both President Clinton — born the year after FDR's death — and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, his political nemesis, have used Roosevelt as a model.

Today, the 50th anniversary of Roosevelt's death, Clinton will pay tribute to him at the "Little

6 Aborigines sue government over forced separation

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — It could be the most brutal of separations: the door kicked in, the children snatched away, forever.

And under Australia's Northern Territorial law, in effect from 1918 to 1953, it was all legal.

Police used the law against Australia's aborigines, creating a "stolen generation" in a supposed effort to save a dying race by integrating its young into the white majority.

Light-skinned aboriginal children were seized, and then handed out to white families. Dark-skinned children were put in bleak orphanages.

"I wasn't bitter at anything," says Hilda Muir. Now 76, she was taken from her mother's side at age 8.

"But I still always regret that I never went back to see my people or see my mother especially. That was the saddest part, that we didn't go back."

On Tuesday, she and five other aborigines sued the government for forcibly removing them from their homes.

They walked into the High Court in Melbourne, filing papers that charge that the territorial law was unconstitutional and violated the U.N. Convention on Genocide.

"It was a very powerful moment. There was a lot of emotion as they went through the door to lodge the writ," said Wes Miller, director of the Katherine Aboriginal Legal Aid Service.

Thousands of aborigine children were removed from their homes from the 1920s to the 1960s. Authorities believed that aboriginal people would eventually die out. They thought they were doing the children a favor.

Muir said she spent six years at Kahlin, an Outback camp for mixed-race aboriginal children. She often slept on the floor and was beaten. She had to sneak off at times, risking more abuse, to scavenge for food scraps.

Another aborigine, Alec Kruger, described Kahlin as "a concentration camp" where the children were never allowed to associate with their families or full-blooded aborigines.

In Xavier Herbert's novel "Capricornia," Kahlin was described as "a miniature city of whitewashed hovels crowded on a barren hill."

If the challenge is successful, the aborigines will then seek damages for cultural, family and spiritual loss and suffering.

Hundreds of other cases would then be set to follow in a class action. Aborigines could be awarded millions of dollars in compensation from the federal government.

There are only about 125,000 aborigines left in Australia, just 1 percent of the continent's population. Of these, about 45,000 are pure-blooded, and the others are of mixed aboriginal and European origin.

There was no government comment on the lawsuit Tuesday.

However, Prime Minister Paul Keating's government, in power since 1991, has ushered in a new spirit of activism on behalf of the aboriginal community.

The High Court ruled several years ago that aborigines who could prove they still had a connection to their traditional land should retain their land rights. Keating's government responded by passing a land rights bill.

His Labor Party government is also devising what it calls the "social justice" package for aborigines, to provide housing, job training, education and improved medical services for aborigines.

U.N.: Iraq may have biological warfare program

UNITED NATIONS (NYT) — The U.N. official monitoring Iraq's weapons of mass destruction said in a report Tuesday that Baghdad might have been concealing a biological warfare program since the late 1980s.

In a six-month review of Iraqi compliance with Security Council resolutions on weapons control imposed in 1991 after the Persian Gulf war, the official, Rolf Ekeus, said Iraqi missile systems and chemical warfare agents were accounted for and under a functioning surveillance system.

But Ekeus, who heads a special commission created by the Security Council to destroy or account for Iraqi arms, came closer than he has in the past to saying that the presence of large quantities of imported media for growing bacteria indicated the possibility that Iraq was manufacturing biological weapons.

"The commission assesses that Iraq obtained or sought to obtain all the items to produce in Iraq biological warfare agents," Ekeus said in his report. "With Iraq's failure to account for all these items and materials for legitimate purposes, the only conclusion that can be drawn is that there is a high risk that they had been purchased and in part used for proscribed purposes — the production of agents for biological weapons."

The Ekeus report will deal a blow to Iraq's hopes of winning an early easing of sanctions that prohibit Baghdad from selling oil until it has met all requirements to abolish weapons and cooperate with the complex monitoring system. France and Russia, owed money by Iraq, had been urging at least a partial lifting of the ban.

Tuesday, France's chief delegate, Jean-Bernard Merimee, said he had to accept that the Ekeus report was "negative on certain points" and thus not very encouraging.

The report will also add some pressure on the Iraqis to accept a proposal for selling oil under a new Security Council resolution that could be adopted as early as Thursday.

That resolution, sponsored by Argentina, Britain and the United States, would allow the sale of $1 billion worth of oil every 90 days under certain restrictions and limits, but only to pay for relief supplies and to contribute toward compensation for victims of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in August 1990.

Police arrest Japanese cult member for allegedly kidnapping her father

TOKYO (AP) — A female member of the cult suspected in the Tokyo subway gas attacks has been arrested for allegedly kidnapping her own father, police said Tuesday.

Officers in the western Miyazaki Prefecture (state) said the father had been taken to cult facilities but would not elaborate further. News reports said the woman and other Aum Shinri Kyo followers demanded that her father donate money to the sect.

About 70 sect members have been arrested since March 20, when sarin nerve gas attacks on Tokyo subways left 11 people dead and 5,500 others sickened. Police have also confiscated tons of chemicals necessary to make sarin from the cult's compounds at the base of Mount Fuji.

None of the charges, however, are directly related to the subway attacks. In fact, some have been embarrassingly banal: riding a stolen bicycle, interfering with police officers, violating traffic laws and using a false name to register at a hotel.

Still, the arrests appear to have affected the distribution of food, water and information to rank-and-file members in cult compounds.

Some members told the Asahi newspaper Tuesday that water and food at their compound were limited, and they had to drive to another town for supplies because the local market refused to do business with cult members.

Another sect member interviewed by Asahi said since radio broadcasts from Russia stopped, Japanese cult members have had limited access to information, either about their leaders or the outside world.

The TBS television station reported Tuesday the cult's "finance minister" had ordered the destruction of all records pertaining to activities of sect officials and purchases of chemicals. But not all the records were destroyed before the police raids began March 22, the report said.

Mrs. Mandela challenges husband in court: Why was I fired?

By Patrick McDowell
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Winnie Mandela has a question for her estranged husband: Why was I fired?

Dismissed last month as deputy minister of arts, culture, science and technology, Mrs. Mandela filed court papers this week against her estranged husband, President Nelson Mandela, to explain why — and to demand her job back.

Moses Mavundla, Mrs. Mandela's lawyer, said Tuesday that both the president and Mrs. Mandela's successor, Brigitte Mabandla, would be expected to respond within 10 days. A hearing could be held by April 25.

Mrs. Mandela has maintained a low-profile since her dismissal, which followed a string of controversies. But her lawyers have worked busily behind the scenes.

She also has found an odd ally: Zulu nationalist leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi, leader of the Inkatha Freedom Party, the strongest black rival to the African National Congress. Both Mandelas are ANC stalwarts.

Buthelezi, embroiled in a battle of wills with the ANC-led government over greater autonomy for Zulus, filed a separate court document stating he, as home affairs minister, was never consulted over Mrs. Mandela's dismissal as the constitution demands.

The court action deepens a rift between Mrs. Mandela and the mainstream ANC leadership headed by her husband, who normally can appoint and dismiss ministers at will.

Mandela's spokesman, Parks Mankahlana, said Tuesday that the president's office had yet to receive any documents. He had no comment.

The court action deepens a rift between Mrs. Mandela and the mainstream ANC leadership headed by her husband, who normally can appoint and dismiss ministers at will.

But Mrs. Mandela isn't just anybody. She was one of the most prominent anti-apartheid activists during the 27 years her husband was in prison. She has built a following among poor blacks whom she says her husband's government has done too little to help.

Despite a conviction for kidnapping in 1991 and her separation from Mandela in 1992, she retained enough clout to garner a Cabinet post after last year's first all-race elections.

She has steadily become an embarrassment, however, criticizing government policy, dividing the ANC Women's League she heads and being suspected of having taken bribes.

Mandela refused to give reasons for firing her March 27. The dismissal involved only her Cabinet post; she remained an ANC member of parliament and head of the Women's League.

Clinton seeks to compensate Pakistan for equipment

WASHINGTON — President Clinton vowed Tuesday to work with Congress to find a way to compensate Pakistan for the purchase of more than $1 billion of military equipment that it has paid for but that has been held up by law for five years in a dispute over that country's nuclear program.

"I don't think it's right for us to keep the money and the equipment," Clinton said after a meeting at the White House with Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, who has demanded that the United States refund the money or deliver the equipment, including 28 F-16 jet fighters. "That is not right, and I am going to try to find a resolution to it."

"Your country has been a good partner, and more importantly, has stood for democracy and opportunity and moderation," Clinton said in a news conference with Ms. Bhutto in the White House foyer. "The future of the entire part of the world where Pakistan is depends in some large measure on Pakistan's success, so we want to make progress on this."

In her first working visit to Washington since her return to power in 1993, and the first by a Pakistani leader since the end of the Cold War, Ms. Bhutto tried to emphasize her country's long alliance with the United States, its willingness to help fight international terrorism and its place as a mainstream Islamic state in the face of more militant alternatives.

Clinton's strong language about the disputed equipment was an acknowledgment that his administration values Ms. Bhutto's efforts. But he also made clear that he did not intend to seek outright repeal of the Pressler Amendment.

The measure named after its Republican sponsor, Sen. Larry Pressler of South Dakota, has barred direct economic aid and sales of military equipment to Pakistan since 1990, when the Bush administration was unable to certify that Pakistan did not have a nuclear weapon.

COLD: City hits record low for date

at 4:50 a.m. Tuesday. During that time, the NWS recorded a record low of 28. The previous record low for that date was 30 set in 1988.

Sperel said he had reports of roses and other delicate plants sustaining cold damage and that more of the plant damage was located on the east side of Midland.

"Apparently, the west side didn't get quite as cold as the east side did (Monday) night," he said.

Late cold snaps like the one that blew into the area around 2 p.m. Monday have the potential to do a great deal more damage, according to Debbie Frost, a horticulturist with the Midland Agriculture Extension Service.

"During this time of year, many people are putting new plants in gardens and landscapes and plants and trees are starting to come out of their dormancy and are beginning to actively grow," she said. "Freezing weather this late in the year can kill leaves and wood and can seriously damage many plants."

Ms. Frost said the vegetation she saw Tuesday looked like it had survived the freeze in good shape.

"I have not noticed a lot of damaged plants," she said. "My tomatoes at home survived."

According to a NWS spokesman, a cold front that keeps the temperature below freezing for the duration it did Tuesday is unusual for this time of year. The average normal low for April is 48. The average normal high is 79.

Warmer weather is forecasted for today. After an overnight low that was predicted to drop into the upper 30s, the high for today should reach into the mid-70s, with skies remaining cloudy and winds at 5-15 mph, according to a NWS spokesman.

Tonight should be mostly clear with a low in the mid-40s.

Thursday should be sunny with a high back in the lower 80s.

After chilly overnight temperatures, Tuesday's high reached 71, compared to the record high for that date of 95 set in 1972.

STATE

An area of high pressure centered near Waco allowed for clear skies across Texas on Tuesday. Temperatures were lower as a result of 10 to 20 mile per hour northerly winds.

By mid afternoon, most temperatures were in the 50s and 60s. Readings ranged at 3 p.m. from 53 degrees at Dalhart to 81 degrees at McAllen following a night of record-breaking cold in West Texas.

Amarillo set a record low of 20 degrees Tuesday. The old record was 21 in 1940. Abilene's low of 32 set a record low temperature, breaking the 33-degree mark set in 1982. Midland's 28 broke a 1988 record of 30 degrees.

The forecast for North Texas is for sunny skies and higher temperatures today with highs from 73 to 78. Fair tonight with lows from 43 to 48. Mostly sunny Thursday with highs from 80 to 85.

South Texas is expected to have clear and cooler conditions. Today will be mild with sunny skies and light breezes. Highs in the 60s. Lows in the 40s and 50s.

Forecasters said West Texas will be sunny to mostly sunny days and clear at night through Thursday. Highs from the mid-60s north to the low 80s along the Rio Grande wednesday warming into the 70s and 80s in northern sections with the 90s along the Rio Grande on Thursday. Lows from the mid-20s Panhandle to the 40s south warming to the 40s and 50s by Thursday night.

VIRTUE: Panel presents nine core character traits

(From 1A)

Midland Independent School District."

He said committee members researched what other school districts had done in the way of teaching good character to students. "And we looked at considerable written material," Baskin said.

"We didn't agree on everything. In fact, there were some quite lively disagreements," the judge said. "But we did come to consensus on the nine character traits."

Committee member Gary Willis, a former school-board trustee, applauded the diversity of the character education committee. "I have served on many committees in the district, and never before have I seen a more carefully balanced committee — balanced as far as being representative of the whole community," Willis said. "We had people from different ethnic groups, faiths, age groups and roles in life."

Willis, the trustee who in November 1991 initiated the concept of teaching character education locally, said he was delighted to see the issue moving forward. "This is something the whole community can support," he said.

Although character education is being taught in various school districts across the nation, it has not been without its controversies. Opponents of character education claim that teaching good behavior traits opens the door to teaching moral values, which should be left to parents. Proponents, however, say the problem is that too many youngsters are not learning at home how to be good citizens. So, it is up to schools to step in.

"This is not going to be without its critics," Baskin said. "But, it is not a reason not to do it."

Willis said he initiated the idea of teaching good character because he thought it was being taught in the schools "more by accident and happenstance then by intent or design."

MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. said the issue of teaching good character curriculum will be put on the next board meeting agenda as an action item. "If the board adopts it, a plan will be presented to develop curriculum for it," Baressi said.

Members of the 22 member Community Advisor Committee on Character Education included Baskin, Willis, Margarita Alvarado, K. Michael Conaway, Jeanette Dragisic, Enrique Farias, Barbara Garber, Mujahid Ikrams, Becky Mims, Neela Patel, Ramesh Patel, Ricky Pena, Clare Petersberger, Bill Rooth, David Rosen, Joyce Silverman, Armando Subia, Cruz Tarango, Dee Dee Taylor, Ron Van Dyke, Jane Wolf and Rita Young.

Committee facilitators included Vernon Stokes of Region 18 Education Service Center and former MISD administrator Maridell Fryar. MISD participants were Baressi and administrator Dorsey Rushing.

The core character traits are:

Citizenship: Be a volunteer; serve your school and community, and encourage others to do likewise. Know and live by the principles upon which the United States of America was founded. Obey the law. Learn the history of your state and nation. Honor democracy. Vote. Stay informed about your country and its role in the world.

Compassion: Show that you care about self, others, and the environment through kindness, concern, and generosity. Demonstrate empathy for the feelings of others. Give of yourself and what you have for the benefit of others.

Courage: Take a stand. Hold to your convictions. Be willing to sacrifice self-interest for the greater good. Risk failure. Risk disfavor from others. Overcome fear and adversity.

Diligence: Work hard and work smart. Strive for excellence in everything you do. Do the best you can with what you have. Be attentive and persistent.

Fairness: Treat others as you would like to be treated. Listen and try to understand what others believe and feel. Be impartial. Give due credit to others. Be tolerant of diversity. Play by the rules; share with others. Strive for justice.

Honesty: Tell the truth. Be sincere. Be forthright and candid. Refrain from lying, stealing, cheating and misleading others.

Integrity: Hold firm to a high code of ethical principles and personal convictions. Be trustworthy and keep your promises and commitments. Abide by both the spirit and letter of an agreement. Exhibit appropriate loyalty in relationships. Be your best self.

Respect: Be courteous. Be considerate of other people's feelings, rights and property. Affirm individual rights and freedoms. Honor parents, elders, and those in positions of authority.

Responsibility: Demonstrate reliability, dependability, and accountability. Think before you act; consider and accept the consequences of your actions. Set a good example. Exercise self control. Be disciplined. Fulfill all of your obligations.

Committee members suggested that all nine traits be taught in each school grade and that character education should be integrated into the existing curriculum.

FDR: Warm Springs became Roosevelt's retreat

(From 1A)

White House" in Warm Springs.

In 1921, Roosevelt was a vibrant politician with the touch of greatness about him when he was crippled by polio at age 39. He would try anything to regain the ability to walk.

A friend and co-owner of the dilapidated resort hotel at Warm Springs told Roosevelt that the local waters had helped cure a young man paralyzed by polio from the waist down. Roosevelt rushed to Georgia.

From that moment, Warm Springs would become his retreat from the pressures of office — and from his wife, who served the president as a wise counselor but sometimes as his niggling conscience, too.

He'd visit every spring and fall if he could, swimming, soaking up sun, working on his stamp collection.

Eleanor Roosevelt could not abide Warm Springs. She was saddened by the surrounding poverty and appalled by the open prejudice against blacks. She left in a few days and returned as rarely as possible.

But her husband found "heavenly warmth" in the buoyancy of the mineral-laden, 88-degree water. He could swim and kick his legs and build his muscles. He could feel life in his toes again.

The countryside took to Roosevelt and he, the squire of Hyde Park, N.Y., took to the countryside.

As a former secretary of the Navy and vice presidential candidate in 1920, he brought celebrity. The local sharecroppers, black and white, sent flowers or wood for the fireplace or a chicken. On his drives, Roosevelt would stop and chat. He took interest in their livestock and crops and learned much about the economic problems of the rural South.

Roosevelt's presence drew other polio victims and soon "Doctor" Roosevelt was the cheerful, laughing leader of games of water polo. He preached hope to his fellow victims as he would later preach to a Depression-stricken nation.

"Keep yourselves mentally alert," he would lecture. "Don't lose contact with the things you enjoyed before infantile paralysis."

Two years later, Roosevelt bought the place for $195,000, two thirds of his fortune, and turned it into a therapeutic center. He built a cottage for himself.

It was where he spent his last hours in the presence of three women who meant much to him: His secretary and dining companion, Grace Tully; his unmarried sixth cousin and close friend, Margaret Suckley; and his intimate companion, Lucy Mercer Rutherfurd.

Years earlier, Eleanor had come upon love letters from Lucy Mercer, her social secretary, to Franklin and had confronted him with a choice — either a divorce or a semblance of a marriage for the sake of the children. Roosevelt chose the latter, knowing a split would end his career. Lucy married Winthrop Rutherfurd and vanished from his life.

In the 1940s, after Lucy became a widow, the friendship resumed. While Roosevelt was relaxing at Warm Springs in 1945, she motored over from a visit in South Carolina.

She brought along a friend, the painter Elizabeth Shoumatoff, who was doing a watercolor portrait of the president when he suffered the cerebral hemorrhage that ended his life. Also present was another Roosevelt cousin, Laura Delano.

Mrs. Rutherfurd and Madame Shoumatoff fled. But Mrs. Roosevelt, upon arriving at Warm Springs to accompany the body back to Washington, learned that Mrs. Rutherfurd had been there when Roosevelt died. Most family and staff knew of the resumed relationship. But Mrs. Roosevelt apparently had suspected nothing and the news came as an embittering shock.

BURN: Pranksters may find themselves in hot water

(From 1A)

The fire was extinguished by a school custodian. "We know it was set deliberately," Ms. Odum said.

She said a special school maintenance crew, trained to clean up fires, was sent over.

An arson investigator, the fire marshal and Midland Independent School District police were on the scene following the fire.

"We are taking this very seriously to make sure it doesn't happen again and that no one is tempted to do so," Ms. Odum said.

"I have in mind the most severe punishment," she said.

Ms. Odum was concerned about danger to the students and staff, as well as the potential property damage, had the fire gotten out of control.

"Someone may have thought it was a funny practical joke ... but, we're taking it very seriously and we'll take it to the fullest extent possible to have this child learn a serious lesson," Ms. Odum said.

She said that rehabilitation through counseling, as well as punishment, would be appropriate.

She said that when it is determined which student is the perpetrator, he or she will likely spend the rest of the school year in EAEC — elementary alternative education center.

GAUGE: Initial gains in market melt away later

analysts said the better-than-expected wholesale number was causing them to revise downward their forecast for a rise in the Consumer Price Index.

Bruce Steinberg, an analyst at Merrill Lynch in New York, said he was looking for consumer prices this year to be up 3.25 percent, only a slight increase from the 2.7 percent gains registered in both 1994 and 1993.

"Any pickup in inflation will be minimal this year," Steinberg said.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, speaking to a gathering of central bank officials in Stockholm, hailed the "dramatic slowdown in the rate of price inflation on a worldwide basis" while emphasizing that "it is important that this progress continue."

But not all economists are convinced that Greenspan and his colleagues have succeeded in avoiding a recession in their campaign against inflation.

Alan Davidson, chief economist at Zeus Securities Inc. in Jericho, N.Y., predicted the economy would be in a downturn by the end of this year. He said the central bank should actually be lowering interest rates now but can't afford to do so because of the weakness of the dollar.

The zero rate of increase in March was the best showing since wholesale prices at the finished-goods level actually declined by 0.4 percent in October.

Even more significant to some analysts was the fact that price pressures eased significantly at the crude and intermediate levels of production, areas where steep increases in previous months had caused worries about growing pressures in the inflation pipeline. Crude prices fell by 1.3 percent while products at the intermediate level were up just 0.3 percent.

"These are terrific numbers," said Eugene Sherman, an economist at M.A. Schapiro & Co. in New York.

For the year so far, prices for finished goods have been rising at an annual rate of 2.6 percent, compared with an increase of 1.7 percent last year.

Energy prices fell 0.5 percent in March, reflecting a 2.1 percent drop in gasoline prices and the second straight monthly decline in natural gas prices, a decrease attributed to a mild winter, which translated into plentiful heating supplies.

Food prices fell by 0.2 percent in March as prices for pork, beef, coffee and fruit were all down.

But vegetable prices were up 5.7 percent as the price of squash doubled. Steep gains were also registered for broccoli, lettuce and cauliflower because of severe flooding in California.

The core rate of wholesale inflation, which excludes the volatile food and energy sectors, was well behaved in March, posting a 0.1 percent gain after rising 0.3 percent in February.

Analysts noted that prices fell 0.4 percent for passenger cars, the biggest drop since last October, a particularly encouraging development given that higher import prices caused by the dollar's record lows against the Japanese yen are expected to show up first in autos.

Bucking the trend to moderating prices, cigarettes and other tobacco products showed a 0.9 percent price jump in March, biggest in 15 months.

Arafat decides to disarm militants

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Yielding to U.S. and Israeli pressure, Yasser Arafat gave the go-ahead Tuesday for disarming his Muslim militant opponents despite fears it might unleash a civil war.

Arafat's security forces rounded up dozens more suspected militants, for a two-day total of 150 detentions. A new military tribunal sentenced Omar Shalah, a leader of the Islamic Jihad group, to life in prison for "inciting civil strife."

"I think we are entering a critical stage," Palestinian Justice Minister Freih Abu Medein said of the escalating confrontation between Arafat's government and the opposition.

The crackdown prompted cries of revenge from Hamas and Islamic Jihad, the two groups Arafat targeted after they carried out suicide bombings Sunday that killed seven Israelis and an American near Jewish settlements in PLO-ruled Gaza.

"The Palestinian authority is crossing the red line," warned Ibrahim Nasman, a Hamas official and administrator at Gaza City's Islamic University. "There will be a spontaneous uprising against the Palestinian authority."

Fatima Shalah, mother of the Islamic Jihad leader sentenced Tuesday, reacted angrily. "After what Arafat did to my son, I am ready to kill him by blowing myself up next to him," she declared.

For his part, Arafat accused Israel of provoking Palestinian civil war by permitting weapons to be smuggled to Muslim militants in the Gaza Strip and West Bank.

"Occupation has opened a market for the sale of arms in the West Bank and Gaza Strip," Arafat said Tuesday during a visit to Cairo, Egypt. "Israel's aim from this is to light the fuse to a Palestinian civil war."

The decision to disarm Hamas and Islamic Jihad came during an all-night meeting between Arafat and his security chiefs, said Abu Medein, the Palestinian justice minister.

"There is a decision to confiscate all illegal arms," Abu Medein said. He did not say how the guns would be seized. But a Palestinian source said there would be a grace period of several weeks during which weapons' owners could apply for a permit. After that, police will confiscate illegal arms, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Omar Shalah, a leader of the Islamic Jihad group, is sentenced to life in prison.

Hundreds of weapons are believed to be in private hands in Gaza. Some of the arms were left behind in previous wars involving the Turks, the British and Egyptians, while others were bought on the black market from Israeli criminals or found in stolen Israeli cars smuggled to Gaza.

Also Tuesday, Arafat's military intelligence chief said gunmen fired at him as he got out of his car on Sunday. The military intelligence chief was not hurt, but a bodyguard was slightly wounded.

In one clash Tuesday, about 300 Palestinian police stormed a Gaza City home. After an extended gun battle in which one officer was wounded, police arrested a Hamas mosque preacher and his four sons.

Arafat's government and the Islamic opposition, meanwhile, were locked in a fierce battle for public support in Gaza.

Americans face rough conditions as prisoners in Iraq, visitors say

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Two imprisoned Americans are languishing in rough conditions in a cellblock with 200 inmates and three holes for toilet facilities, a Polish diplomat and a reporter said Tuesday.

The diplomat, Ryszard Krystosik, visited the pair in the maximum-security Abu Ghraib prison. They were sentenced March 25 to eight-year terms for illegally entering the country.

"They are well. They're better than before. However, their conditions are difficult," said Krystosik, who represents U.S. interests in Iraq in the absence of direct relations between Baghdad and Washington.

The prisoners — David Daliberti, 41, of Jacksonville, Fla., and William Barloon, 39, of New Hampton, Iowa — were arrested by Iraqi border guards on March 13.

Cable News Network correspondent Brent Sadler visited the prisoners Tuesday and said they appear "more determined" and thinner than before.

He said Daliberti is increasingly concerned about his health and was seen Tuesday by two heart doctors and two eye doctors.

According to Sadler, the men said they are being held in a small cell along a cell block that holds about 200 prisoners, including murderers. Three holes in the floor function as toilet facilities for all of them, Sadler said.

The mens' wives, Kathy Daliberti in Jacksonville and Linda Barloon in Kuwait City, said they were grateful to hear about their husbands but the incarceration seemed unfair.

Sadler told the women their husbands had lost weight and were wearing the same jeans and jackets that they had on when detained, but that they appeared to be cleaner and to be wearing laundered clothing.

Daliberti and Barloon, who worked for U.S. defense contractors in Kuwait, say they unwittingly strayed into Iraq while trying to visit friends at a U.N. post near the Kuwaiti border.

Khaled Jarjees, the pair's Iraqi lawyer, has said he will argue in an appeal this week that the men entered Iraq unwittingly and unintentionally.

Krystosik met with Jarjees on Monday, but neither he nor the attorney would comment on the appeal. Iraq has banned journalists from meeting or calling Jarjees.

U.N. personnel in the demilitarized zone along Iraq's southern frontier admit they mistakenly waved the men through onto Iraqi soil, and the United States has repeatedly appealed for the pair's release.

But Iraqi officials suggest that the Americans entered with ulterior motives tied to U.S. efforts to prolong the U.N. oil and trade embargo imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

Dole's entry makes it interesting race

As expected, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole on Monday tossed his hat into the race for the Republican nomination for president in 1996, ensuring a more difficult race for some presidential hopefuls who had already announced.

Although immediately called the front-runner in the race for the GOP's nomination, Dole will face ample competition from the likes of Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas, Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana, Rep. Robert Dornan of California, former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, as well as conservative commentator Pat Buchanan and potentially several others.

Unphased by the odds, however, Dole declared in his announcement, "I am not afraid to lead, and I know the way." He embraced a conservative agenda that includes lower taxes, smaller government and a balanced budget.

One of Dole's major hurdles could be overcoming the memory of his 1988 race for president during which he refused to make a pledge to not raise income taxes, a failure that cost him critical support.

Dole was sounding conservative themes wholeheartedly in New Hampshire, saying, "Let us rein in our government to set the spirit of the American people free. Let us renew our moral convictions and strengthen our families by returning to fundamental values."

While Dole's entry into the GOP contest will make for rougher sledding for lesser known candidates, in Texas he will no doubt face his most difficult challenge from Gramm who is widely known and respected as a conservative. What could turn the election in Texas will be the commitment of the candidates to the major issues — lower taxes, smaller government, a balanced budget and, yes, that issue candidates appear to be going out of their way to avoid, abortion.

That appears to be the defining issue, again, for conservatives.

Nuclear components shouldn't be supplied without safeguards

The Clinton administration is rightly alarmed that a Russian contract to build nuclear reactors for Iran might help Tehran make nuclear arms. There are two ways to reduce that risk. One is to get Moscow to cancel the contract. The other is to negotiate additional safeguards, like those with North Korea, to prevent Tehran from using the reactors for bomb-making.

Russia has so far rebuffed American requests to call off the deal. In retaliation, some in Congress are threatening to cut aid, including help for Russia to disarm. That is unlikely to have the desired result, and may end up damaging American interests. A better way is to offer inducements for Russia to find other, safer nuclear work.

Moscow, which has no interest in arming its unpredictable neighbor and has taken precautions in the past against any spread of nuclear arms, has pledged to seek further safeguards with Iran. Until they are in place, no nuclear components of the reactors should be supplied.

Russia says the reactor deal is justified under the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. It is true that having signed the treaty and allowed international inspections, Iran has the right to acquire reactors — but only for peaceful purposes.

Iran, which is sitting on untapped oil reserves, does not need nuclear reactors to power its economy. Washington has now shared intelligence with Moscow showing how Iran is bent on building bombs, including importing chemicals needed to separate plutonium from spent reactor fuel and attempting to buy gas centrifuge equipment used to enrich uranium for arms.

Washington can try to find a better use for Russia's nuclear know-how. It could allow a Russian role in the nuclear deal with North Korea, financed mostly by South Korea and Japan, to supply uranium fuel for a new reactor to be built in North Korea. Russia might also be eligible for private loans to meet its own nuclear energy needs.

If these sweeteners are not enough to induce Moscow to cancel the deal, Washington should insist that Russia seek better protection against potential Iranian misuse of its reactors. Iran needs to allow more intrusive inspections of all its nuclear sites and to agree not to build reprocessing plants that extract bomb-making plutonium from the reactors' spent fuel. Russia also needs to prevent recruitment of its technicians to help Iran make bombs.

Without plutonium and bomb-making experts, Iran will find it harder to develop nuclear arms.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, April 12, the 102nd day of 1995. There are 263 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Fifty years ago, on April 12, 1945, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the 32nd president of the United States, died of a cerebral hemorrhage in Warm Springs, Ga., at age 63. Vice President Harry S. Truman became the nation's 33rd chief executive.

On this date:

In 1606, England adopted as its flag the original version of the Union Jack.

In 1861, the Civil War began as Confederate forces fired on Fort Sumter in South Carolina.

In 1862, Union volunteers led by James J. Andrews stole a Confederate train near Marietta, Ga., but were later caught. (This episode inspired the Buster Keaton comedy "The General.")

Let's look at CIA in reality, not fiction

The only kind of news the poor old Central Intelligence Agency makes is bad news. CIA officers say that's because — and it's probably true — they can't talk about their successes, but someone will always spill the beans about their failures or mishaps.

Reese

In this case, some anonymous soul in another agency claims that the CIA not only knew that one of its paid guys in Guatemala ordered the snuffing of an American and a Guatemalan married to an American, but that they tried to cover up the evidence of their knowledge. The CIA says it's not true.

I'm inclined to believe the CIA. For one thing, the CIA is a lot more law-abiding that most folks think. For another, I'm always suspicious of anonymous letters sent to Democratic congressmen with a penchant for holding press conferences. For still a third, the CIA is a lot less efficient and like James Bond than most people think. It's more than possible — it's likely — that someone being paid for information could do something without the CIA knowing about it.

Leftists, who are inclined in that direction anyway, tend to become terminal conspiracy nut cases when the CIA is involved in anything — and sometimes when it is not but they think it is. Thus they like to imagine that if the CIA is involved at all in Guatemala, then it is running the whole country — telling the president what to do, training the army, directing death squads, etc., etc., a la cheap movies and today's equivalent of the dime novel.

The reality is far different. In the first place, the idea that foreign leaders, especially Latin Americans who tend to be nationalistic in addition to whatever else they believe, will turn their countries over to Americans is a fantasy of screenwriters who (1) have never spent much time in Latin America and (2) know even less about intelligence operations.

It might put matters in perspective to look at the CIA as it is in reality rather than as it is portrayed in fiction. Unless it's been changed recently, the CIA bureaucracy is under the National Security Council. The director of Central Intelligence reports to the national security advisor, who reports to the president.

The CIA is not the only intelligence operation in the federal government. There are about 30, and they are not under the control of the CIA. The term "CIA agent" is frequently misused. The CIA people are intelligence officers; the foreigners they recruit are agents or spies.

Typically in a small country there might be three intelligence officers, including the station chief, and they would received their orders from Washington. They might try to recruit some locals as agents to gather information. These agents may or may not be paid, but even if they are, they are paid for the information they track down. They are not full-time employees, and they are certainly not under any kind of day-to-day supervision.

Despite the fictional image of guns, bombs and narrow escapes, the CIA's main function remains the collection of information. Even during the Cold War, paramilitary operations were few, and today they are probably nonexistent.

Often, when the CIA was assigned to provide training to, say, Afghan resistance fighters, it would sub the work out to the military but retain its main function as the supplier of money.

To return to the situation with Guatemala, if the CIA had an arrangement with the colonel in question for information, that was all it was. These agents are not numskulls. They know that the CIA is using them. They are using the CIA for their own purposes, and the CIA knows that. The CIA is interested in verifying the information it receives; it is not interested in shadowing its agents all day long, which would, of course, lead to exposure. And it darn sure doesn't run other people's governments.

The CIA is a government bureaucracy, and it makes mistakes. But if you're looking for rogue elephants or law-breakers, historically the best hunting ground has always been Capitol Hill and the White House.

Gambling stigma is out, corruption remains

HARPERS FERRY, W.Va. — At the age of 14, I was standing on a landing in the stairwell at Joan of Arc Junior High School in Manhattan, watching a crap game, when I felt the heavy hand of a teacher on my shoulder.

Safire

My protest that I didn't even have a bet down was unavailing; four of us, all seniors, were branded as gamblers. The shaming punishment: though permitted to be graduated, I was refused a place at commencement and denied a diploma.

That was back when gambling was viewed as wrong; when bookies and numbers racketeers were considered the scum of society; and when a lust for something-for-nothing was looked upon as a weakness of character.

Today, state-sponsored gambling is the national pastime. Nearly 100 million casino visitors, video gamblers and sports bettors wager close to a half-trillion dollars — with $40 billion going to the "house."

And today, aboriginal Americans are exploiting those of us who followed in neon casinos on their reservations. The tribes are becoming a nation of croupiers, in league with national gambling interests, while pretending ill-gotten profits are used primarily to educate their children.

The "gaming industry" — none of its pious proponents call it the gambling racket — is the source of the greatest sustained, bipartisan political hypocrisy of our time.

Liberals, professing a horror of regressive taxation, turn a blind eye to the way state-sponsored gambling redistributes income upward, and how new casino permissions snatch welfare checks to fatten per-share earnings of casino stockholders.

Conservatives, ostensibly upholders of public morality, approve government advertising campaigns to entice citizens to gamble in lotteries and play the ponies at off-track betting parlors.

Gullible voters were sold this notion: since many people liked to gamble anyway, why not turn gambling's profits to public benefit?

But the result is the gambling epidemic, with its associated money laundering by criminals, corruption of public officials and "cannibalization" of local economies. Thanks to the public blessing of gambling by government, the moral stigma was removed and the high roller has become a folk hero.

The media cannot escape their share of the blame. From the hysterical hype of the Publishers Clearing House to the front-page and prime-time publicity given sweepstakes winners (nobody covers the losers), we have glorified the pernicious philosophy of something-for-nothing.

Nothing is for nothing. Crime always goes hand-in-hand with gambling. Here in the relatively poor state of West Virginia, a former governor confessed to taking bribes from racetrack operators and a lottery director was jailed for rigging a video lottery contract.

Disgusted, church groups recently leaned on legislators to reject riverboat gambling, and the pols suddenly realized that a pro-casino vote could be a loser.

Now the media are at last awakening. Gee-whiz stories touting the craze are out and hard reporting of the spreading addiction is in.

The Economist cast into doubt the claim that gambling salvages local economies. USA Today headlined: "Nation raising 'a generation of gamblers,'" focusing on the ring corrupting schools in suburban Nutley, N.J. The best reporting was in Sports Illustrated's detailed expose of the gambling addiction rampant in the nation's colleges.

But television news is still gambling's friend. With young gamblers relying heavily on the sports ticker that runs at the bottom of CNN's Headline News, that network has a special responsibility to show how the lives of many students are being ruined by the compulsion its ticker helps feed. A "Gambling is for suckers" crawl among the scores would do for starters.

Will the pols sense the coming voter revulsion at the "painless" revenue source that failed? Rep. Frank Wolf of Virginia has introduced a bill to establish a "National Gambling Impact and Policy Commission"; let's see if the casino lobby can buy the votes to avert scrutiny and restigmatizing.

The yen to gamble is a personal weakness, but state-sponsored gambling is a banana-republic abomination that undermines national values. My gratitude goes to that tough teacher at Joan of Arc who stopped me before I started.

Crush on Kato Kaelin isn't the end of the world

Joe Berman's face was white as I came into the house. "What's up?" I asked him. "Jillian is in love with Kato Kaelin."

"Kato of the O.J. trial?"

Joe nodded his head.

"Does she know him?"

"Only from television, but her whole high school class is in love with him."

"Then it's no big deal."

"It is in one respect. Jillian wants him to be our house guest on Martha's Vineyard in the summer."

Buchwald

"Kato will never accept. He's making millions opening shopping malls. He doesn't have time to be a house guest."

"How can we be sure? From his past we know that he enjoyed sleeping over. He got along with both Nicole and O.J., even when they weren't speaking to each other. Being a house guest appears to be the only thing he likes to do."

"What does Jillian like best about Kato?" I asked Berman.

"His hair. She wishes the boys in her class had messy hair like that."

"They probably will if the Kato craze continues," I said. "Frankly, he looks awfully grungy to me."

"Jillian says that's what the girls like about him. He has a sincere grungy look and not a made-up one. She also thinks that he looks very vulnerable, and she just wants to hug him and say, 'Don't cry, Kato, everything will be all right.'"

"Wow, he's getting more out of this trial than anybody else. The guy was broke, had no place to live, had no idea what he was doing with his life, and now he's signing autographs on Rodeo Drive. Listen, Joe, I wouldn't be too upset about Jillian. After all, Kato lives in Los Angeles and you live in Washington. That's safe."

"You can say that now, but what happens if they ask him to open a Roy Rogers in Bethesda?"

"Frankly, I think it's quite healthy for Jillian to have a crush on Kato. Suppose she developed a crush on one of the defense lawyers? Then you would really have something to worry about. How does she express her adoration?"

"She has pictures of him from People magazine, the National Enquirer and Newsweek all over her room. She also taped his testimony in which he didn't remember anything, and she and her friends play it over and over again. It's awful. We're not talking about a rock star or a basketball player or Harrison Ford — we're talking about somebody who became famous because he didn't have a place to live."

I tried to cool Joe down. "It could be a lot worse."

"How so?"

"Jillian could have fallen in love with one of the Menendez brothers."

Dole calls for school prayer, television values

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Moving to shore up his conservative credentials, Bob Dole called for voluntary school prayer Tuesday and lashed out at Hollywood for promoting "casual violence and even more casual sex."

"We began as a people seeking religious freedom and have evolved into a nation whose government often seems the enemy of religion," the Republican presidential front-runner said as he campaigned in Ohio and Iowa. "The moral code we nurture in our churches and synagogues is under attack from our government."

Dole's overture to conservatives included tough talk on welfare reform and a promise to phase out federal funding for the arts and humanities, longtime targets of the Christian right. And he accused President Clinton of contributing to the nation's moral decline by abdicating leadership in the war on drugs.

Dole's courting of social conservatives came just a day after he made a major gesture to economic conservatives: pledging not to raise income taxes if elected president next year.

Taken together, the remarks underscored Dole's principal goal on his weeklong campaign announcement tour: to cement his position as the front-runner by strengthening his support among the conservative factions ascendant in GOP politics.

To rivals, these might be viewed as concessions to shore up weaknesses. But the Senate majority leader rejected that characterization during a conversation with reporters on his campaign plane.

He said he signed the tax pledge, after refusing to do so in his failed 1988 campaign, because this year's version allowed for the closing of loopholes.

As for his comments on values, Dole said that he had a proven conservative record on social issues but that it had received little attention in the context of his Senate career.

'If students can discuss sports and music or drama at school they should also be allowed to voluntarily — voluntarily — pray.'

— Bob Dole

Nonetheless, in dropping his usual reluctance to discuss social issues Dole highlighted the importance of religious conservative voters, and the competition among GOP contenders for their support. He made values the centerpiece of speeches at the Ohio statehouse and then later at the Iowa State Fairgrounds.

Wading into the school prayer debate, Dole said: "If students can discuss sports and music or drama at school they should also be allowed to voluntarily — voluntarily — pray."

Some Republicans support a constitutional amendment allowing school prayer; Dole voted in favor of such an amendment in 1984.

His preference, however, is legislation allowing students to pray and lead peers in prayer; school officials could not lead or dictate prayers. Dole has not introduced such legislation and told reporters there was virtually no chance such a bill could clear the Senate next year.

In taking aim at Hollywood, Dole sounded much like former Vice President Dan Quayle, whose decision to sit out the 1996 race is one reason the Christian conservative vote is not seen as committed to any one candidate.

"Every parent knows the greatest challenge to family values is the way our popular culture ridicules them," Dole said. "Our music, movies and advertising regularly push the limits of decency, bombarding our children with destructive messages of casual violence and even more casual sex."

Dole said censorship was not the answer because "we have more to fear than to gain from putting Washington in charge of culture."

Instead, he said families and communities needed to take the mission up themselves. "Shame is a powerful tool," Dole said. "We should use it. ... Let's put the heat on the entertainment industry."

Because of his 1988 campaign and this year's aggressive organizing, Dole has made inroads with Christian Coalition activists in Iowa, which opens the GOP nominating season in February. It was clear from Tuesday's emphasis that he hopes to spread the success elsewhere.

"This campaign recognizes that close to a majority of Republican primary voters are interested in these issues," said Dole campaign manager Scott Reed.

Program makes progress against killer diseases, cheats poor, couch potatoes

By Paul Recer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A program to improve Americans' health is making progress against the killer diseases but is faltering in caring for the poor, reducing teen pregnancy and persuading couch potatoes to start exercising.

At the halfway point in a decade-long campaign called Healthy People 2000, federal officials said Tuesday the project is showing mixed results and may require increased efforts to achieve goals set in 1990.

"We have good news but not good enough," said Dr. J. Michael McGinnis of the U.S. Public Health Service, which is coordinating the national program.

McGinnis said that deaths from heart disease, cancer and stroke are all moving down at a pace that will achieve the target values by 2000. But the rates of obesity, teen pregnancy, homicides and pneumonia and influenza deaths are actually worse than five years ago.

Also getting worse, McGinnis said at a news conference, are efforts to provide disease preventive medical care for the poor.

"We are failing to close the gap between the rich and poor in health care," said McGinnis. Financial barriers to preventive services existed in 16 states at the beginning of the program and now exist in 17 states, the report said.

Additionally, he said, 15 percent of Americans are not covered by health insurance. Among blacks, 21 percent are not covered and 32 percent among Hispanics, he said.

Healthy People 2000 is an effort by the PHS, state health departments, professional organizations and voluntary organizations to systematically promote healthful habits and good medical care.

The program has three primary goals: Increase the span of healthy life for Americans; reduce the differences in health trends among various American populations; and provide access to disease prevention services to all Americans.

The program set 300 specific goals, with baseline measurements at the start and target measurements for 2000.

WHY PEDIATRIC DENTISTRY?
• The American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry says that a child's first dental visit should be within six months of the eruption of the first tooth and no later than one year of age.
• Primary teeth are important in the development of speech, facial and oral muscles, upper and lower jaws. They save the space for and help guide permanent teeth into position.
• It is important, easier and more cost-effective to recognize and treat minor problems early, before they become major and inhibit the development of permanent teeth.
• A child's early exposure to dental treatment sets the foundation for future dental health.
• Together, we can give your children a lifetime of fewer cavities, healthier teeth and gums - and more confident smiles!

Student dupes Yale out of 2 years' education, university officials say

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Lon Grammer desperately wanted to go to Yale University. As a mediocre student at an obscure community college, that would have seemed a long shot. But Grammer managed to get in anyway.

Two years later, he was a month away from picking up an Ivy League diploma when police picked him up instead.

Grammer's downfall came when he bragged to a former roommate about forging his transcripts, police said.

The 25-year-old man was expelled, and Yale is pressing larceny charges, saying he stole two years' worth of a high-priced education from the school and the government. He owes $61,475 in grants and loans, authorities said.

Yale admissions officers refused to discuss how they were duped.

"Obviously, to get into Yale University the standards are very high," James Perrotti, assistant chief of campus police, said Tuesday. "He tried to show that he met those standards when in fact he didn't."

Grammer refused to comment on the case, but his attorney, Norman A. Pattis, said he will fight the charges.

Grammer arrived at Yale in 1993, transferring from Cuesta Community College in San Luis Obispo, Calif., where transcripts showed he had compiled nearly a straight-A average. He also presented Yale with an outstanding recommendation from Cuesta's dean of students and favorable letters from a political science professor and science instructor.

His high school record also was exemplary, with an excellent recommendation from the principal.

But the grades were doctored, some of the recommendations were from people who didn't exist, and those who do exist say they never wrote them, according to court papers.

Cuesta's records show his real grade-point average was a C, and his high school in Concord, Calif., told Yale that his transcripts, test scores and letter from the principal were fakes.

Grammer was caught when a detective from the Lebanon, N.H., police department contacted campus police about a forged driver's license and registration on a leased Jeep.

The vehicle was registered to John Miles, Grammer's former roommate in California. Miles, who had never been to Lebanon, N.H., told police that Grammer had bragged to him about getting into Yale with forged transcripts.

In December, Grammer was indicted in New Hampshire on forgery charges in connection with the Jeep. New Hampshire police contacted Yale in January.

At Yale, Grammer maintained a B average, his lawyer said.

Some students said they weren't surprised by the turn of events, noting Grammer's background seemed shady. Among other things, he claimed he had played minor-league baseball and was related to actor Kelsey Grammer.

The young man is not related to the actor, Pattis said. Whether he ever played professional baseball couldn't immediately be confirmed.

"He was a very shady kind of kid. A lot of his stories didn't really match," said senior Michael Ciaschini. "One day, he would tell us he was in Mexico for three years, then he said he was in the Bahamas for three years. When someone lies to you all the time, you kind of lose respect for them."

Perrotti said the forgeries Grammer used were very good, and the case has raised concerns at other institutions as well as Yale.

"We tend to take things on faith," said Ted O'Neill, dean of admissions at the University of Chicago. "If something stands out as being likely to be untrue, we will probably discover that, but it is a system built on trust."

Princeton University uncovered a similar scam in 1991 and expelled a student named James Hogue. The Ivy League school said Hogue enrolled under an alias in 1989. He fabricated his background, telling admissions officers he was self-schooled.

Cable company changes name as merger takes effect

■ Midland's Dimension Cable begins operating as Cox Cable.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Services won't change — and neither will prices — despite Dimension Cable's name change to Cox Cable Tuesday as a result of a nationwide merger in February.

Midland's Dimension Cable began operating Tuesday as Cox Cable because of a merger between Atlanta-based Cox Communications Inc. and Los Angeles-based Times Mirror Co., according to Missy Orr-Ryan, general manager for Cox Cable.

The merger was completed Feb. 1 when Cox acquired the cable television assets of The Times Mirror Co. Ms. Orr-Ryan said this merger forms the fourth largest multiple system operator, serving more than 3.2 million customers.

"This merger positions us to capitalize on the expanding media and communications marketplace. Today, it's essential to be a company of some size in order to bring new telecommunications services, such as wireless telephone service and interactive television to our customers.

"This merger gives us the resources to continue to be a leader in providing quality programming and services at reasonable prices," Ms. Orr-Ryan said.

She said that in the long term, things like wireless telephone could make its way to Midland.

Also, because of the increase in funds, the cable system locally will be rebuilt and upgraded. The improvements will begin at the end of this year and are expected to take a year.

Ms. Orr-Ryan said that as a result of the upgraded system from coaxial cable to fiber optics, more channels can be added because the fiber optics transmit signals longer and faster and provide an improved reliability and expanded capacity.

"Cox Communications is the most technically advanced company in the cable industry and is the leader in customer service. In addition, the two companies' operating philosophies and cultures are very similar, so we do not anticipate any difficulty in merging these two companies.

"We're both driven by quality customer service and a deep commitment to the communities we serve. For these reasons and more, I'm confident that our customers will benefit from our merger with a premier provider of telecommunications services," Ms. Orr-Ryan said.

Locally, Cox serves more than 31,600 customers.

Council examines possible answers to park's flooding

■ Requested study on excavation of area south of pond reveals effort would provide minimal relief, create eyesore.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Tearing down some houses and expanding Wadley-Barron Park may offer the best possible relief to nearby homeowners besieged by flooding from heavy rains.

"I think if there were any easy solution we would have already done it," City Engineer James Robertson told the Midland City Council Tuesday.

In a renewed interest to finding a solution to flooding of homes adjacent to the park, the City Council recently requested that city engineers examine the possibility of excavating the area south of the pond. A study submitted to the council revealed that the effort would provide minimal relief and create an eyesore.

'It seems to be they've done a pretty good study on that rascal. It's a shame we've got that situation out there and can't fix it without spending a boatload of money.'
— Larry Fitzsimmons, who owns home north of pond on Harvard Avenue

As a result, several other plans of action were briefly discussed. "I think some thought really needs to be given to what direction we want to look at," Robertson said.

Periodic flooding has always been a problem for about a half-dozen to a dozen homes near the park. Houses built near the duck pond have been described by a city official as being situated on the "edge of a bowl" where rainwater naturally collects.

The natural basin, coupled with development in the area — which increases the amount of water runoff — contribute to the problem. "It's a number of things. It's just not one thing you can point to," Robertson said.

Larry Fitzsimmons, who lives north of the pond at 800 Harvard Ave., agreed there's no easy solution to the problem. Fitzsimmons said his home has been seriously flooded — with about 3 feet of water — three times since the park was excavated in the early 1980s.

"It seems to be they've done a pretty good study on that rascal. It's a shame we've got that situation out there and can't fix it without spending a boatload of money," he said.

At one time, Fitzsimmons said, he attempted to sell his flood-prone home. "We couldn't even get the real estate agents to show it," he said.

One possible solution, raised by city officials, would be to purchase Fitzsimmons' and others' homes and expand the park and accommodate the water basin.

Mayor Bobby Burns said city officials will examine that possibility and others during the council's annual work retreat in mid-May.

Some considerations for park expansion, brought up by officials, include the extent to which the problem would be solved, the cooperation of homeowners to sell and to what degree of obligation the city has to rectify the problem.

As city officials continue to examine the situation, some improvements at the Wadley-Barron Park are in the works. Part of a $350,000 state grant (20 percent matched city funds) for a bike/hike trail from DeZavala Elementary School to the duck pond will be used to enhance the park. Construction contracts for the planned trail probably will be awarded this fall.

New club strives to foster cultural awareness, 'better our community'

By Ed Todd

The newly founded Women of Color Civic & Social Club, which is dedicated to promoting cultural awareness and seeking to "better our community," will sponsor an Easter egg hunt at 3 p.m. Saturday at Washington Park.

The Easter egg hunt will be the club's third monthly major event since becoming affiliated with the Midland Federation of Black Women's Clubs. In February, the club sponsored a Valentine Gala and in March, held an HIV-AIDS awareness program.

"Our goal is to be visible and to better assess the needs of our community," said Shirley Howard, club president. "We would like to focus most of our community work toward children and teens, so that they might get involved in projects that will better themselves at home, school and in the community.

"We want to be there for the needs of senior citizens, providing them transportation and just talk to them," she said. "Sometimes they are lonely. We can learn from them as well. And we are not just talking about minorities."

The club's focus is on the community as a whole and embraces people throughout Midland's various cultural and ethnic realms.

"It's not just for blacks. Anybody is eligible to get into the club if they are willing to abide by the creed and the bylaws."

The club plans to offer tutoring services to students and to work with teen-agers and oth-

OC unveils new scholarship fund in preparation for 50th anniversary

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Hoping to put money woes behind them in preparation for a 50th-anniversary celebration, Odessa College officials on Tuesday announced an ambitious scholarship endowment fund program.

"Very, very shortly, we will have completed a half-century of service," said President Vance Gipson.

Called the Half-Century Academic Scholarship, scholarship committee chairman Jeff Melton said plans call for $500,000 to be raised for the endowment fund by the fall of 1996 — the beginning of the 50th anniversary.

To kick off the fund drive, Jim Gotcher, director of supply development for Tenneco Gas, presented a $10,000 check to Gipson for the endowment fund.

"We really like to give back to the communities in which we do business," Gotcher said. Tenneco is a Houston-based gas pipeline company.

In the fund-raising campaign, Melton said OC employees and retirees will be targeted first. The scholarship committee hopes to raise at least 10 percent, or $50,000 from these current and former employees.

The results of this phase will be announced at the OC commencement ceremonies on May 12, he said.

The second phase of the fund-raising project begins in May and

Right-to-carry legislation moves step closer to passage

AUSTIN (NYT) — Legislation to license the carrying of concealed handguns cleared another hurdle on Tuesday when a House committee approved the Senate's version after making several significant changes.

Key among them was the addition of wording to make it illegal to carry handguns at hospitals, although administrators could grant written permission to doctors, nurses and other staff.

The Senate sponsor said the hospital prohibition is unacceptable and will force the measure into a House-Senate negotiating committee. Sen. Jerry Patterson, R-Pasadena, said including hospitals in the list of prohibited places could "open the door" to debate about other sites.

"You give the criminals a place to go to seek out unarmed people," he added.

Vigorous floor debate in the House is expected the week of April 24, said Keith Oakley, D-Terrell, chairman of the House Public Safety Committee.

Nevertheless, "I would think it would pass probably without any 'no' votes," Oakley said.

The proposal, which passed his committee in a 7-1 vote, would authorize the Texas Department of Public Safety to issue licenses good for four years to qualified adults for $140 each. At least 10 hours of range and classroom training, costing an estimated $100, would be required, along with a DPS background check.

Nearly 20 changes were made in Patterson's bill, most of them minor, Oakley said. Among them were provisions to require DPS to render an initial determination of eligibility within 15 days of application; to require applicants to prove proficiency with at least a 9 mm or .38-caliber handgun; and to declare "chemically dependent" anyone twice convicted of alcohol or drug offenses in the previous 10 years. Anyone so classified would not be allowed to have a concealed-handgun license.

House members plan to submit to the full House several amendments rejected in committee. These would submit the right-to-carry issue to a statewide vote, require drug testing of applicants and raise the minimum training requirement to as much as 40 hours instead of 10.

The House committee removed several elements of the Senate bill. Among them were provisions to deny licenses to undocumented immigrants, people delinquent on student loans, people named in protective court orders and people found guilty of delinquent conduct within the previous 10 years.

The House also removed a ban on carrying a concealed handgun at racetracks and at polling places on election days. Patterson said those prohibitions duplicate other laws.

Another change deals with the confidentiality of licensing records.

Business tries to recover from shooting rampage

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Amid tighter security, an inspection service where an ex-employee killed five people last week has reopened its doors with hopes of continuing the progress of its slain owner.

"We all have one agenda: to stabilize the business and make it grow," Lisa Rossler said Monday, the first day of business at Walter Rossler Co. since James Daniel Simpson's violence on April 3.

Ms. Rossler's parents, Walter and Joann Rossler, were killed along with secretary Wendy P. Gilmore, executive Richard Tomlinson and salesman Derek Harrison.

Simpson, 28, an ex-employee whom the company had sued and given unfavorable job references, then shot himself, police said.

Colorful flowers, wreaths and plants now line the recarpeted hallway that Simpson stalked through during his rampage.

Several workers had red, swollen eyes and others wore solemn expressions as they walked through the office a week later.

Another Rossler daughter, Rhonda Knoblauch, who has worked many years at the company, said her ex-husband will serve as interim chief executive officer.

"There wasn't a question about it," she said. "We just took it for granted that he would do it."

Ronnie Knoblauch worked for Walter Rossler's refinery inspection service for 15 years. He went into business for himself about two years ago but decided last week to return to fill the void of his former employer.

"We'll keep the same format, as close as we can," he said. "There will be some changes along the way for the good."

Company officials said they have taken steps to ease the fears of workers. The front door through which Simpson entered is kept locked now. Monitors and an intercom system are being installed.

"The company is offering counseling for employees, if needed, especially for the girls who were in the office when it happened," Ms. Rossler said. "Our concentration is making sure morale is kept up for the employees."

Local residents have been supportive, she said.

"We've been getting calls from people that I don't even know," she said. "The community, as a whole, has really, really helped."

Several friends of the family have spent hours at the business to fill in for the victims.

Campus squabbles should stop, education chief says

HOUSTON (AP) — The two largest universities in Texas need to quit squabbling over new campus sites, the state's higher education commissioner says.

"There are more schools and students in either the (Texas) A&M or UT (University of Texas) system than many states in their entire state university systems," says Texas Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth.

Recent moves by both schools to add more campuses have some education observers speculating that both Texas A&M and UT are getting too big for the good of Texas.

There's the recent action by legislators to transfer a Laredo university from the Texas A&M system to the University of Texas system.

There already has been animosity stirred among alumni of state public colleges gobbled up by UT or Texas A&M because their alma maters have changed names to adapt to new ties.

Ashworth believes management of such diverse systems might become too unwieldy and too much responsibility for just two governing boards of regents, particularly since the number of college students is expected to grow to more than a million during the first decade of the next century.

"Some of the campuses are just not going to get the attention they need from a board of regents whose attention span is spread too thinly," Ashworth said.

Of the five university systems operating in Texas, the University of Texas System is the largest, with nine academic campuses and six medical school campuses. Total enrollment: 152,014 students. Texas A&M is second, with eight academic campuses and 75,906 students.

Focus on university systems intensified recently because of an effort by Rio Grande Valley legislators to have Texas A&M International University-Laredo, which only recently became part of the Texas A&M system, switched to the University of Texas system.

"I don't want this to become the UT-A&M Thanksgiving battle in Laredo," said Texas state Rep. Henry Cuellar, D-Laredo, sponsor of the legislation in the Texas House. Senate sponsor for the bill is state Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo. Both are UT alumni.

"It's a better fit," Zaffirini told The Associated Press about the proposed switch. "We mesh well. We have a lot of the same goals. We get excited about the same issues."

Texas A&M Chancellor Barry B. Thompson told a Senate committee that the legislation "proposes to tear out one of our universities ... because it is perceived that we maybe are not orange enough or white enough or have our horns long enough."

UT System Chancellor William Cunningham welcomes the addition of the Laredo university campus, although he stresses it was the legislators, and not the system, that sought the transfer.

In the past 10 years, a number of South Texas universities — including Texas A&I University in Kingsville, Corpus Christi State University and Pan American University in Edinburg — merged into the Texas A&M and UT systems.

Senate panel postpones action on bill for drunken driver checks

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate Criminal Justice Committee has put off action for at least a week on a bill to allow law enforcement agencies to operate temporary checkpoints to catch drunken drivers.

Committee Chairman John Whitmire, D-Houston, said Tuesday that senators had questions about the measure, including who should be allowed to set up the checkpoints and "how they're going to have a checkpoint with the concealed gun law."

The Legislature is expected to pass a bill allowing Texans to carry concealed handguns. Whitmire said that could make stops more time-consuming, if an officer sees someone carrying a gun and wants to check whether the person is licensed.

"We just can't have checkpoints in urban areas that's going to tie people up for long periods of time. It'll be something that people don't respect, don't support," he said. "It's got some major concerns."

Sen. David Sibley, R-Waco, the bill's author, said he sees no problem in enforcing the measure in conjunction with a concealed handgun law.

Gipson, who began work as president of OC on Monday, said that each year the college awards about $3 million in financial aid, in the form of grants, scholarships, loans and campus employment.

This new scholarship will allow OC to aid even more students and is the beginning step in a new emphasis on scholarship fundraising and other development at the institution, he said.

School officials are finishing up details about how the scholarships will be awarded, Melton said. The funds will be awarded to part-time and full-time students who are seeking associate degrees in both university-preparatory and vocational-technical programs, he said.

Students in OC's eight-county service area will be eligible for the scholarship. This includes Ector, Andrews, Crane, Winkler, Upton, Ward, Reeves and Gaines counties.

OC is continuing to recover from the loss of investment principle in various funds in 1994.

Human rights group charges Border Patrol with abuse of immigrants

■ Study is third in series of highly critical reports of U.S. immigration agents issued by the organization.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Border Patrol agents routinely abuse people seeking to enter the United States legally and illegally from Mexico, enjoying virtual impunity under a system that provides little oversight, a human rights watchdog group charges.

Human Rights Watch/Americas, in a report being issued today, contends that the Immigration and Naturalization Service is doing little to remedy its "abysmal human rights record."

INS officials didn't return repeated telephone calls seeking comment. But in response to earlier Human Rights Watch reports, agency officials said the criticism amounted to a string of unfounded allegations.

The study is the third in a series of highly critical reports of U.S. immigration agents issued by the group, formerly known as Americas Watch. The study, entitled "Crossing the Line," was based on a fact-finding mission along the southwestern border last July.

The INS, which oversees the Border Patrol, is frequently cited as one of the government's most troubled agencies, hampered by widespread management breakdowns and a mission that exceeds its manpower.

At least 3.5 million people are believed to be in the United States illegally, with another 300,000 or more entering without permission each year.

Human Rights Watch argues that the Immigration and Naturalization Service has done little to halt Border Patrol abuses despite years of prodding by civil-rights advocates.

The report chronicles beatings, shootings, rapes and deaths alleged to have occurred at the hands of Border Patrol agents.

"The Clinton administration has abdicated its responsibility to correct the ongoing abuse problem by failing to follow through with its pledges of reform and by refusing to consider alternatives, such as an independent review of Border Patrol agents," charged Allyson Collins, a principal author of the study.

The Border Patrol has long been dogged by complaints that some of its agents abuse the illegal immigrants they apprehend and harass those who look Hispanic, citizen and non-citizen alike.

Human Rights Watch is advocating creation of an independent review commission that would receive and investigate complaints against Border Patrol agents. The U.S. Commission on Immigration Reform, headed by former Texas Congresswoman Barbara Jordan, also has urged establishment of a complaints process that could be monitored by the public.

A Citizens Advisory Panel established last year will hold its first meeting today. Human Rights Watch is critical of the new panel, pointing out that it doesn't have investigators or the ability to examine individual cases.

Currently, complaints are forwarded to the FBI, which like INS comes under the Justice Department umbrella; Justice's Office of the Inspector General; or Justice's Civil Rights Division.

According to Human Rights Watch, the Civil Rights Division's criminal section received 1,322 civil-rights complaints against INS personnel between October 1988 and September 1994. Of those, only 16 cases were presented to a grand jury for possible indictment; and of the 12 Border Patrol agents indicted on federal civil rights charges since September 1983, only two have been convicted, Human Rights Watch said.

"Serious abuses continue because complaint, review and disciplinary procedures that should serve as a deterrent and hold abusive agents accountable do not exist for Border Patrol agents," the report said.

INS has long contended it has a complaint rate of 1 complaint for every 17,000 apprehensions — which compares favorably to those of other law enforcement agencies.

The Border Patrol's abuse record likely lies between the extremes painted by human-rights advocates and the agency itself, some immigration experts said Tuesday.

Panel hears testimony on judicial selection reform

AUSTIN (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said Tuesday he was "skeptical" that a bill to reform the state's judicial selection process would pass.

His statements coincided with those of two Texas Supreme Court justices, who told a Senate committee the selection system lacks racial balance and is overly politicized.

The comments concerned a bill by Sen. Rodney Ellis, D-Houston, that would institute nonpartisan elections for state district judges and gubernatorial appointment of appellate court judges.

Supporters say the change is necessary to get a more racially and ethnically diverse judiciary and to end the partisan system under which justices are currently selected.

"I think it's critical to Texas, and I think it's important to our future," Bullock said. "I feel very strongly about it."

Still, Bullock said he was "rather disappointed" the bill was still in committee.

"I had hoped that bill would get out of committee. The chair has pretty well indicated to me that he's not in favor of it," he said. "In fact, I don't know what to do: get me another chair next session or get me another plan."

He said he was uncertain when or if Sen. Don Henderson, chairman of the committee, would let the bill come up for a vote.

"He may let it come up at some point for a vote, but if it's the last week or two that wouldn't do us much good," Bullock said.

Henderson, R-Houston, said he thought support was split along party lines on the committee: four Democrats for the bill, three Republicans against.

Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips and Justice Bob Gammage testified before the Senate Jurisprudence Committee, which began hearing testimony on two bills aimed at reforming the way judges are selected in Texas.

"The singular distinction Texas has as (having) the most expensive judicial races in the world and the most politicized judicial races in the world, in my opinion, very badly hurts our state," Phillips said.

"The current partisan, high-dollar, open election system has not given us an inclusive judiciary," he added. "This failure also threatens public confidence in the judicial system."

Gammage agreed, "Generally, courts don't have the credibility that they historically had."

"There's no way to take politics out of judicial selection. ... It is a political process," he said. "What we don't want is politics in their performance."

The U.S. Supreme Court has upheld Texas' method of selecting judges, but the U.S. Justice Department has blocked several proposed new courts in the state, saying the selection process violates the Voting Rights Act.

Texas has filed a lawsuit fighting the Justice Department's action.

"I think the Texas system of electing judges has been a national embarrassment historically. It's not just something that's come about with the emergence of a viable Republican Party. It was a problem when Democrats controlled the four largest counties in the state," Ellis said.

The committee was also considering a bill by Sen. Mario Gallegos, D-Galena Park, which mirrors Ellis' bill but would set up nonpartisan trial judge elections along state representative district lines as opposed to commissioners court district lines as suggested in Ellis' bill.

Citizenship bill for cities' police gets tentative OK from Senate

AUSTIN (AP) — Cities could require police officers to be U.S. citizens under a bill tentatively approved Tuesday by the Texas Senate over objections from some Hispanic senators that it would unfairly discriminate.

"It is the equivalent of (Proposition) 187 in California, which is racist," said Sen. Gregory Luna, D-San Antonio.

He referred to the California ballot proposal to deny illegal immigrants access to public schools and most health and welfare benefits.

> 'It is the equivalent of 187 in California, which is racist.'
> — Sen. Gregory Luna from San Antonio

Sen. Teel Bivins, R-Amarillo, sponsor of the bill, said, "I don't think it's fair to use that type of argument against this piece of legislation."

He said Texas law previously provided for citizenship as a prerequisite to being a peace officer, and that many communities have maintained the requirement in the belief they were allowed to do so.

Bivins said he was sponsoring the bill at the request of police chiefs concerned that they cannot do proper background checks on applicants from other countries.

The reasoning by cities that require citizenship "has nothing to do with discrimination. It has everything to do with public safety," he said.

Bivins said he didn't expect the opposition to the bill, which was tentatively approved 21-10 in a vote that divided largely along racial lines.

Before he brings the measure up for a final Senate vote, Bivins said he would check with bill backers to see whether opponents' concerns could be satisfied.

The only minority member of the Senate to vote for the bill was Sen. Eddie Lucio, D-Brownsville. Two white senators joined black and other Hispanic lawmakers in voting no: Sens. John Montford, D-Lubbock, and Peggy Rosson, D-El Paso.

Lucio, who noted that his father was a deputy sheriff who had to obtain proof of citizenship before receiving Social Security benefits, said he understands opponents' concerns.

But Lucio said he has been distressed to find people who live in the United States and receive benefits such as public schooling but have not become citizens.

"If you live in this country, you need to be proud to be a citizen of this country," he said. "My vote is simply one of patriotism."

Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, said, "We have not done enough to encourage people to attend classes to become citizens ... and now, we are fixing to discriminate with this piece of legislation."

LaTonja Williams sits with children George, 8 months, Laquita, 18 months, and Yasin, 4, at a day-care center in Chicago, Monday. LaTonja is aware that Republicans want to revamp government in a way that could change her life — take away her welfare check.

Revamp or rerun? Voters split on GOP control

By Sharon Cohen
Associated Press

LaTonja Williams doesn't know who Newt Gingrich is or what his plans are, but she is keenly aware the Republicans want to revamp government in a way that could change her life — and take away her welfare check.

"You want welfare reform? Fine," said the 24-year-old single mother, cuddling her 8-month-old son, George, in a drafty church at Cabrini Green, a Chicago housing project. "But how can you cut everything and expect us to survive? ... Give us the programs to get us back on our feet."

"Everything I have now is given to me," added Miss Williams, who also depends on food stamps and Head Start for her three children. "The day they take it back, I have nothing."

Welfare reform is a cornerstone of the Contract with America, the 10 commandments of change proposed in Congress by the GOP, which on Thursday marks its 100th day in power. And while Republicans gloat and Democrats gripe, voters across the nation are just as divided over this political shift.

Despite hearing debate on taxes, welfare and the need to cut federal government, some voters see the GOP majority rule as a political rerun — only the leading roles are reversed.

"We had gridlock in government the first year Clinton was president," said Bernie Deick, a 73-year-old retired high school teacher and political independent sitting in a Sun City, Ariz., coffee shop. "And now we have the same thing. They want to embarrass each other to get the leverage at the voting booth."

Others, though, see Gingrich & Co. as a new cast with a fresh script.

"What I like about the first 100 days is that there may be some significant changes — or there may not be — but at least it looks like they're trying something different," said Clark Carlson, a Bismarck, N.D., real estate developer.

Among the most controversial provisions in the GOP's contract is a plan to cut welfare rolls sharply by limiting those who receive aid.

That worries Tommie Turner, a 49-year-old lab technician in Tulsa, Okla.

"The problem I have right now is they're so gung-ho about kicking people off of welfare," she said. "I'm really for a change but ... I don't like anything that messes with children or Medicare, cuts that cause a hardship."

Some voters, however, endorse "tough love" measures to scale back costly social welfare programs.

"I'm tired of paying my taxes for all the other foreign countries and the deadbeats who don't want to work," said Scot Johnson, 59, a lifelong Democrat and insurance provider in Tulsa.

Martin Moreira, a 71-year-old Cuban-born self-made businessman in Miami, thinks Republicans are taking the first steps toward restoring personal responsibility, though he concedes the GOP contract has unpopular elements.

"The surgery is not pleasant, but sometimes it's necessary," he said, wearing an easy smile and a red pinstriped, loose-flowing shirt. "This country has to go back to what made it big, rich and moral."

Of 10 major Republican bills brought to the House in the past 100 days, nine passed, including welfare changes, a tax cut and a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. The only failure — proposed term limits — disappointed but did not surprise voters.

"I thought with this new wave of people there'd be some big changes," said Russell Bean, a 37-year-old computer service entrepreneur in Atlanta. But, with his voice rising, he offered his explanation of why term limits fizzled: "They don't want to lose their fat-cat jobs."

Eddie Merritt, a 26-year-old tax examiner for the state in Washington, agrees politicians are "not going to do anything to make things harder on themselves."

Merritt isn't impressed by GOP House Speaker Gingrich, didn't watch his prime-time TV speech and bristles at what he perceives as arrogance on Capitol Hill.

"It seems like sometimes Congress thinks we're a bunch of little kids who don't understand what's best for the country," he said, while grabbing lunch in an Olympia deli. "They do what they want to do."

The consequences of that remain to be seen.

O.J. defense hammers away at handling of evidence

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The trail of blood prosecutors promised would clearly prove O.J. Simpson a murderer was muddied Tuesday when a criminalist conceded he didn't detect blood on socks at Simpson's home or on a back gate at his ex-wife's condo until weeks after the crime.

The daylong attack on criminalist Dennis Fung's handling of evidence came after a five-day hiatus dominated by juror problems and an investigation by the judge.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito appeared determined to get the trial back on track with testimony, although he also disclosed that someone tried to communicate with jurors on a weekend outing.

In another development, the defense filed a wide-ranging motion seeking an investigation into whether prosecutors are trying to "engineer a mistrial" through the ouster of jurors. The document suggested that if the number of jurors falls below 12, Simpson should be released and prosecutors should be barred from trying him again on charges he killed his ex-wife and her friend.

In a display of courtroom theatrics worthy of "Perry Mason," defense attorney Barry Scheck showed Fung two photographs of a gate, one taken June 13, the day after Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were found slain, and a second taken July 3.

The earlier photo appeared not to show the blood stain collected from the gate by Fung three weeks later. Prosecutors have said the blood matches Simpson's.

"Where is it, Mr. Fung?" Scheck shouted as he showed jurors the first photo. "Where is it?"

"I can't see it in the photograph," Fung said as he squinted to view a courtroom monitor.

Asked if he knew of any other photo showing the same blood drop in the same place on June 13, Fung said, "That's the best photograph I'm aware of."

Scheck also elicited from Fung testimony that he did not see blood — wet or dry — on a pair of dark socks found at the foot of Simpson's bed June 13. The blood was discovered Aug. 4, and tests show the socks were stained with both Simpson's blood and that of his ex-wife, the prosecution has said.

The defense contends that blood could have been planted in Simpson's home and at the murder scene to frame him. Scheck pointedly showed jurors a winding, white-carpeted staircase in Simpson's home. Not a drop of blood was found on it, Fung said, nor was any blood found in the similarly carpeted hallway to the bedroom.

Attacking the collection of evidence as so flawed that test results can't be trusted, Scheck drew gasps from spectators with a newly revealed TV news tape that appeared to show Fung and rookie colleague Andrea Mazzola touching a key piece of evidence with their bare hands.

Fung, appearing weary and glum despite the five-day break, said Scheck was wrong in his interpretation of the brief videotaped scene, which television viewers did not see because of courtroom technical problems.

Scheck suggested the object in question was an envelope containing the prescription glasses of Ms. Simpson's mother, left behind at a restaurant and returned by Goldman, who worked there as a waiter. That envelope, with the glasses still inside, was later found at Goldman's feet.

"That's you getting the prescription envelope from Andrea Mazzola, grasping it in your bare hands, isn't it?" Scheck asked Fung after the video was played at various speeds both backward and forward.

"No," Fung said. "I know my fingerprints are not on that envelope."

When Scheck asked what the object in the video could possibly be, Fung replied, "A notepad maybe? ... I'm saying it could be anything, but it's not the envelope."

Then Scheck showed the tape again, freezing a frame that depicted Mazzola holding a letter-size object in her hand before passing it to him.

"There! There! How about that, Mr. Fung?" Scheck exclaimed. "Does that refresh your recollection that you took the envelope from Andrea Mazzola with your bare hand?"

Jury convicts mother who told kidnapping story of murder, abuse

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A mother who claimed her 7-year-old daughter was abducted from a flea market and pleaded tearfully on television for the girl's safe return was convicted of murder Tuesday in her beating death.

Pauline Zile, 24, lowered her head and fought back tears as the guilty verdicts on charges of murder and child abuse were read.

She faces either the death penalty or life in prison without parole. Prosecutors said they will seek the death penalty. No immediate date was set for the jury to return to consider the sentence.

Mrs. Zile was accused of abusing Christina Holt and causing her Sept. 16 death by not protecting the girl from her stepfather, John Zile. In October, a sobbing Mrs. Zile went on TV with her husband with a concocted story about how the girl was kidnapped from a flea market bathroom. Later that month, Zile led investigators to the child's grave.

"I think this verdict is an outrage," Mrs. Zile's attorney, Ellis Rubin, told Circuit Judge Stephen Rapp outside the jury's presence.

Women save historic 1855-vintage house from federal demolition

By Alexei Barrionvevo
The Dallas Morning News

BETHEL — Frances Dunaway-McGregor, at age 93, rode shotgun late last month as a truck carried the house her grandfather built to its new resting place.

Flanked by a caravan of four-wheel vehicles, the truck drove the house from the hilltop spot it had occupied for 140 years to the tiny Ellis County community of Bethel, a quarter-mile away.

"I was crying," Mrs. McGregor said. "I was born in that house. You couldn't help but cry."

Despite her tears, Mrs. McGregor said she knows that moving the house was the only way to get it back into family hands. The move also saved it from federal bulldozers brought on by the cancellation of the super collider.

She has her daughter, Dow Anna McGregor, to thank.

Ms. McGregor, 54, struck a deal in January with the U.S. Department of Energy for the deed to the Dunaway family house — the last of a dozen historic structures that were either destroyed or moved to make way for the now-defunct collider.

The white house with the green roof was the only one the federal government gave back to the original family that built it.

"People nowadays don't realize how precious family is," said Ms. McGregor, who began her fight for the house three years ago. "This house has survived this long for a reason. For the family, it's a rallying point."

The Dunaway home is among the oldest in Ellis County — 35 miles south of Dallas — and represents a way of life found only in history books, Ms. McGregor said.

To get it back for the family, Ms. McGregor had to satisfy federal and state agencies, which wanted to demolish the house, and the Texas Historical Commission, which didn't want it moved.

She finally agreed to move the house March 27, five days before the government said it would tear the house down. Once it's unloaded from the truck, it will sit beside a creek on property owned by Ms. McGregor's uncle.

"There was compromise all around," said Linda Roark, a preservation consultant with the Texas Historical Commission. "It is not the best preservation that could have happened, but it is better than what happened to the other buildings."

The Super Collider forced the family to sell the home and 148 acres of property to the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission, which oversaw land acquisition and site development for the $8.2 billion project.

Mrs. McGregor's sister, Bessie Dunaway, sold the homestead in 1991 for $365,000. If she hadn't, the SSC would have simply taken it through eminent domain.

The Energy Department never used the home, although it was boarded up for possible use later as office space or as a visitors center.

When the collider project was killed by Congress in October 1993, the Energy Department began deeding back land to the state.

Texas didn't want any buildings on the Dunaway property because the state wanted the federal government to carry through with its responsibility to dispose of the house, said Jim Doskocil, team leader for environmental safety and health at the Energy Department.

The federal government could have demolished the Dunaway house to satisfy the state's requirements. The National Historic Preservation Act only requires that federal agencies "document" historic structures before disposing of them, unless they are national landmarks.

The Dunaway house stood out from others on the SSC property because it already was a state historical landmark.

"We determined that (the Dunaway house) was in good enough condition that it would be a shame to bulldoze it," Doskocil said. "So we were going to offer it to anyone who would restore it and move it off the property."

Five years ago, state officials began efforts to preserve the home by conducting a study of all historic structures on Super Collider campuses.

The state identified 53 sites, dating back more than half a century.

Twelve of them, including the Dunaway house, were eligible for permanent protection on the National Register. Three were donated to private individuals and moved, and the rest were destroyed, said Phillip Stafford, director of site development for the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission.

That left only the weathered Dunaway house, which still rested precariously atop the house-moving truck last week while Ms. McGregor and her mother watched workers plant bushes and prepare the new lot.

Mrs. McGregor held her cane as she remembered the house, built by her grandfather, Jefferson Madison Dunaway, in 1855.

Born in Tennessee, he was part of a large migration of Southerners who moved to Texas during the 1840s and 1850s.

Dunaway, a tailor who once sewed Sam Houston's clothes, was headed to California to take part in the gold rush, Mrs. McGregor said.

But when he reached what is now the Dallas area, his mare foaled. The family decided to settle in nearby Farmers Branch, Texas. Later, Dunaway traded the mare and its colt to a man for 640 acres in the Ellis County community known as Boz, she said.

Fearing someone would claim the land, he divided it among his seven sons.

"So if they (the government) ever came to take it, no son would lose more than the other," Mrs. McGregor said. "But they never did come."

Dunaway served in the Confederate army and later bred mules on the farmstead, which swelled to about 2,000 acres.

Ms. McGregor said she plans on living in the five-bedroom house once it is restored.

"I want the descendants of these families to always have a place to come to," she said, referring to families from Boz. The community was bought up and the homes razed by the collider project.

The restoration will be costly, she said. The home needs a new roof, foundation and porches. And thieves carted away parts of the house, including a favorite mantel and a bathroom sink.

But once the house passes a Department of Energy inspection, the government will cut her a check for $18,500 — the amount it would have cost to bulldoze the house, Doskocil said.

Ms. McGregor is still fighting the state for a 21.5-acre swath of land off Dunaway Road that was sold for the collider project. She wants to lease the land with an option to buy.

It's family that's kept her motivated.

"This is my inspiration for the battle I keep up," she said, pointing to her mother.

"I want to get it done for her."

Texas Democrats lend support to Republican contract

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Al Gore describes the 100-day Republican "Contract With America" as a "highly partisan, extremist" manifesto that benefits the well-heeled at the expense of everyone else.

House Democratic Leader Dick Gephardt has branded the contract as "immoral."

But the same GOP blueprint that Democrats attacked in a frenzied public relations blitz last week as Republicans sprinted to the "Contract" finish line has drawn a significant measure of support among conservative Democrats.

That backing is especially noticeable in Texas, where seven of the state's 19 House Democrats voted for more than half of the key "Contract" items — everything from a constitutional balanced-budget amendment to regulatory relief and wider use in court of unlawfully seized evidence.

With the 230-member Republican class voting in near-unison on just about every "Contract" item, the Democratic support helped beef up GOP victory margins.

The Texas Democrats parted company with the Republicans on term limits, welfare reform and parts of a GOP crime bill that undoes much of the anti-crime package adopted last year by Congress.

That notwithstanding, a core group of conservative Texas Democrats found a large area of accord with their GOP colleagues on the 16 major "Contract" provisions that hit the House floor.

One, conservative Rep. Ralph Hall of Rockwall, voted for 15 of the 16 GOP agenda items. The eight-term lawmaker, who has fended off numerous media queries about a possible change in party affiliation, broke with Republicans only once. That was on a vote that would have forced the administration to plan for deployment of a national antiballistic missile system. Hall also was one of only nine Democrats in the 204-member caucus voting for the GOP welfare plan.

The Republicans' second-most dependable votes within Texas Democratic ranks came from conservatives Pete Geren of Fort Worth and Greg Laughlin of West Columbia, who voted for 13 of the 16 major provisions. The two parted company with Republicans only on term limits, welfare reform and deployment of the missile system.

Hall, Geren, Laughlin and another "Contract" sympathizer, Chet Edwards of Waco, didn't return calls seeking comment. Unlike the others, Edwards is in the party leadership, having been tapped this year as one of four chief deputy whips. As a member of the whip organization, Edwards is tasked with lining up Democratic votes for — and against — legislation.

Other Texans embracing major "Contract" items frequently were Reps. Jim Chapman of Sulphur Springs, Charles Stenholm of Stamford and Charlie Wilson of Lufkin.

Hall, Geren, Laughlin and Stenholm are among 23 members of a newly-formed group of conservative and middle-of-the road Democrats known as "The Coalition." The group, which hopes to steer the party to the right, meets regularly with Republican and Democratic leaders and has garnered sitdowns with everyone from Clinton to House GOP leader Newt Gingrich.

Despite the high-powered Democratic barrage against the GOP agenda, party officials are careful not to criticize Democrats who sided with Republicans on much of their early agenda.

"We absolutely believe that members are entitled to vote the way they see fit and in the best interests of their district," said Tricia Primrose, spokeswoman for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, which funds House campaigns.

Dallas Democratic Rep. John Bryant, who voted against most of the "Contract" provisions, wasn't surprised that many of his colleagues supported key GOP initiatives.

"All of that was predictable," he said in a recent interview. "The same Democrats who have voted with Republicans 100 percent of the time during their careers voted with them on the 'Contract.' Nothing is new."

Texas Democratic Party executive director Ed Martin blasts many elements of the GOP blueprint — but says the Democratic Party is big enough to embrace many diverse viewpoints.

Scientists use Antarctica studies as hints to discovering life on Mars

N.Y. Times News Service

LAKE HOARE, Antarctica — It has been nearly 19 years since two Viking spacecraft analyzed Martian soil and failed to find any evidence of past or present life. But some biologists believe that at least fossil remnants of extinct life may yet be found on the red planet, and that Antarctica offers clues to where future Mars explorers should look.

Almost since the time of the two Viking missions in 1976, planetary scientists have focused attention on the region of Antarctica known as the dry valleys — a network of glacial gorges and valleys transecting the Royal Society mountain range and leading to the west coast of the Ross Sea.

As a result of high winds that sweep away the snow and the mountain range that obstructs the downward flow of ice from the polar plateau, the valleys are almost bare of snow and ice all year-round, except for the snouts of some intruding glaciers and the crusts of ice that perpetually cover a scattering of small lakes.

The dry valleys are as inhospitable to life as any place on this planet. From time to time a straying seal or penguin wanders inland into one of these bleak places, doomed to die of starvation; seal and bird mummies lie scattered across the harsh gray landscape.

But despite the intense cold, dryness and lack of light during half of each year, life maintains a tenuous toehold in the Valleys. Some lichens and bacteria have colonized spaces between protective layers of sandstone, and bacteria have formed dense mats at the bottom of ice-covered lakes. Nematode worms, yeasts and even a few insects have found niches in the generally hostile ecology.

Dr. E. Imre Friedmann of Florida State University has spent 13 Antarctic summers studying the hardy but elusive organisms inhabiting the dry valleys. Now 73, he completed his latest arduous research season in the dry valleys in January. He believes that more discoveries await scientists in the region.

It could be, some scientists believe, that life at a similarly primitive level once existed on Mars — if, as they believe, Mars once had lakes.

Liquid water is not known to exist anywhere on present-day Mars. But between four billion and two billion years ago, Mars may have had lakes very much like Antarctica's Lake Hoare, Lake Vanda, Lake Bonney, Lake Fryxell and several other small ones, in the view of Dr. Robert A. Wharton Jr., of the Desert Research Institute, in Reno, Nev.

Wharton, who formerly conducted research for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, has led a long series of research expeditions to the dry valleys and spent most of the past Antarctic summer at Lake Hoare, a four-mile-long lake in Taylor Valley.

During Mars's early history, the planet may have had a much denser atmosphere than it does now, its climate may have been warmer, and liquid water was probably prevalent, especially in the form of outflow channels discharging water from underground aquifers.

Photographs of Mars show many valleys similar in appearance to terrestrial river valleys, with tributaries, meanders, deltas and other river features common on Earth. "From a biological perspective," Wharton said, "it is during this period when life could have arisen."

A system of Martian canyons some 1,500 miles long named Valles Marineris may be a particularly good place to look for the fossil remnants of primitive life, Wharton and other scientists believe. There are features in the region that look very much like the layered deposits of silt that form in lakes like those in Antarctica, and these may actually be the remains of "paleolakes" where Martian microorganisms or other simple life forms could once have lived.

"While life outside the Earth's atmosphere has yet to be observed," Wharton said, "there is a general consensus among exobiologists that the most productive search strategy for life would be based on locating liquid water."

Republicans have set fast pace for themselves

By Mike Christensen
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — It is just 9 in the morning, and Rep. Bob Barr is already running late.

He has just left a meeting on firearms legislation and is hurrying to a Republican caucus on welfare reform when he pauses to greet four pleasant middle-aged women from Georgia waiting in his lobby. A sign on the door says "Y'all come in," and they have.

Each runs a public housing agency back home, and they pepper Barr with their worries. The women pointedly ask Barr to vote against a bill cutting billions from social programs. He shakes his head.

"I'm going to vote for it," he says. "I'm not going to mislead you."

Such is life in the trenches of the new Republican Congress.

"I think we have raised the public's awareness of what Congress is doing, and we have very clearly changed the public's perception of what it means to be in Congress," Barr says. "We have a Congress that really is working."

Whatever you think of their politics, the Republicans who now control Congress have brought with them a sense of purpose, a set of clear goals rare in recent years.

Driven by their promise to vote on, if not pass, the 10 points of their "Contract with America," Republicans have set a blistering pace, forcing House action on 20 major pieces of legislation in less than three months.

The foot soldiers in this campaign are junior Republicans such as Bob Barr, one of 73 freshman House members who gave the GOP a majority for the first time in 40 years.

At age 46, Barr is contained, energetic and conservative to his toes. A former U.S. prosecutor, he is given to dark suits and stylish ties, walks briskly even when not in a hurry, and seldom smiles.

His habits seem as economical as his politics. Even when talking to his staff on a fine point of law, he continues to scratch out letters to constituents beneath a high-intensity desk lamp.

"You have to take advantage of every minute of the day," he says.

On this particular Wednesday, Barr will work from just after dawn to long after dark attending a business meeting of the Judiciary Committee, two meetings on firearms legislation, a party caucus, four conferences with constituents and two evening receptions. He will walk to the House floor just four times, each time only to vote.

His day begins at 6:30 a.m. in a rented basement apartment in the well-to-do Chevy Chase section of suburban Maryland, several miles from Capitol Hill. Furnishings are spartan. "I'm only there a matter of hours each night, almost entirely when I'm sleeping," he says, "so there's really no need to have a lot of stuff there."

His wife and two teen-aged sons live outside Smyrna in Cobb County, Ga. Like most House members, he spends only three or four nights a week in Washington, flying home for the long weekends at government expense.

Sunday is reserved for church and family, the only day he protects from politics.

He commutes through the potholed streets of Washington in a Ford Crown Victoria, and by 7:30 a.m. reaches his office on an upper floor of the aging Longworth Building, notable for its cramped quarters and balky elevators.

By 8 a.m. his staff has assembled. With the exception of chief of staff Dan Levinson, a close friend from college days at the University of Southern California, they seem painfully young but eager.

Early on this particular morning, Barr presides over a private meeting of House colleagues writing legislation to repeal last year's ban on assault weapons and to raise penalties for crimes committed with a gun.

Crime is Barr's central issue. He received substantial aid from the National Rifle Association in last year's campaign. Behind his desk is a framed movie poster for "The Untouchables."

He also spends more than two hours in a Judiciary Committee "markup," or business meeting, on bills that would allow senior citizens to exclude young families from their housing complexes, increase penalties for child pornographers and set the membership of the U.S. Commission on Immigration Reform.

In years past, House members could vote by proxy in such meetings, but Republicans have ended the practice. Lawmakers must now attend, or at least be within earshot, for their votes to count.

Barr slips out twice to meet in a back room with constituents, including a half-dozen members of the Georgia Farm Bureau from his district. A House photographer takes their photograph with Barr around the conference table.

Lunch is a sandwich in the House cloakroom, just off he floor, and by mid-afternoon, Barr is in his office with two labor union officials from Lockheed. They have little in common beyond a desire to help the aircraft company sell more planes.

One of the union officials, Van Mobley, tells Barr he is opposed to a plan to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission. "But if you're hell-bent to do that, please see that the employees' rights are transferred to the Labor Department."

Barr looks at him steadily. "What if we dismantle the Labor Department?" he asks, then smiles. "Just kidding."

The afternoon winds down into paperwork. A group of mortgage bankers fail to show for their appointment. By 6:30 p.m., dinner time, Barr is wading through a noisy crowd of union machinists holding a reception. Ten minutes later, he is shaking hands with fellow members of a legal fraternity. He munches on a chocolate eclair. There is yet another meeting on firearms, a series of evening votes on the House floor, then a television interview for the National Rifle Association.

In a quiet moment, Barr is asked how he keeps it all straight, the conflicting issues, questions and demands. He looks back thoughtfully. "I don't know," he says.

BUSINESS WATCH

OIL PRICES

Previous Close $19.59
Year Ago $15.87

POSTED
Today $18.25
Previous Close $18.00
Year Ago $14.25

Prices climb

NEW YORK — Energy prices rose Tuesday on technical trading that followed a jump in oil prices overseas.

The surge ended two days of price declines that were viewed as profit-taking after a strong rally last week.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in May settled at $19.88 per barrel, up 29 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange. The spot oil price reached a 35-week high of $19.93 at one point Tuesday.

Local crude purchasers raised their posted price 25 cents to $18.25 a barrel.

There was little fundamental news to drive oil prices. Demand for oil typically rises from March to May, reflecting, in part, the increase in driving that occurs in summer.

After trading was over, the American Petroleum Institute reported declines in the nation's inventories of crude oil and gasoline.

There were 336.4 million barrels of crude in inventories at the end of last week, down from 337.3 million a week earlier. Gasoline stocks dropped to 213.2 million barrels last week from 213.8 million the previous week, the API said.

Natural gas prices were also higher, with contracts for delivery in May settling at $1.623 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 2.6 cents.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar mostly fell in foreign exchange trading Tuesday as a government report on inflationary pressures further dampened hope that the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates to help the troubled currency.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 1.4015 marks, down from 1.4100 late Monday. The dollar also was changing hands in New York at 83.60 yen, down from 83.90.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Monday: 1.1545 Swiss francs, down from 1.1600; 4.8865 French francs, down from 4.9000; 1,723.50 Italian lire, up from 1,721; and 1.2832 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3795.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5923, down from $1.5943. In London, the pound was quoted at $1.5950 in London, down from $1.5963 late Monday.

Stocks stumble

NEW YORK — Stocks stumbled to a mostly lower close Tuesday despite a government report that suggested inflation remains benign, news that often spurs buying on Wall Street.

After surrendering an initial gain inspired by the favorable inflation news, the Dow Jones industrial average displayed negative readings throughout the session and finished off 11.07 at 4,187.08.

Broader stock gauges also declined. The New York Stock Exchange composite dipped 0.69 to 273.29 and Standard & Poor's 500 stock index fell 1.48 to 505.53. The American Stock Exchange market value index shed 0.50 to 470.73.

Losers had a slight edge over gainers on the NYSE and a closing tally showed 1,123 stocks down, 1,066 up and 771 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board's floor expanded to 309.71 million shares from 260.99 million on Monday.

Folger's Superstore reinvents itself

■ Folger's reinvents itself to handle increased competition and better serve the customer.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Curt Wiest/Reporter-Telegram

Van Folger, owner of Folger's Superstore, sits amid a collection of home appliances. Folger's is restructuring itself to better meet the current business atmosphere in Midland and will open Monday as Folger's Factory Direct Showcase Store, carrying RCA electronics and Roper, Whirlpool and KitchenAid home appliances.

Intensifying competition in the Midland marketplace from such national electronics chains as Best Buys, Rex and Circuit City have prompted one longtime Midland business - Folger's Superstore - to restructure itself.

"Folger's Superstore, as everyone has known it, will close on Friday at 7 p.m.," stated owner Van Folger.

Then, on Monday, April 17, the store will open as Folger's Factory Direct Showcase Store.

According to Folger, the revamped store will carry only RCA home electronics and Roper, Whirlpool and KitchenAid appliances. "But we'll offer every RCA model made, every Roper, Whirlpool and KitchenAid model made," Folger said.

Folger explained that the change was made not only in response to the intensified competition but to provide what market research found customers want.

"Customers want more to choose from and they want a better price. This strategy was adopted to meet those needs," Folger said.

Folger's Showcase will be filled with models of over 1,350 home appliances - from washers and dryers to refrigerators - and hundreds of home electronics products from videocassette recorders to big screen televisions. The customer can actually see the product, which can then be special-ordered and, with four overnight trucks arriving each week, delivered within two to seven days straight from the factory.

By carrying only display models, the business will dramatically reduce its overhead by saving on the cost of insuring the product and warehousing it, and this will allow customers to buy products at what Folger called "prices the marketplace has never seen before. We will be selling at contractors' prices or less."

The store will continue to service the appliances as well as offer delivery, installation and hookup services.

Until Friday, Folger's is continuing to close out the brands it will no longer carry and is in the process of putting the Showcase in place.

Folger said customer reaction to the new concept has been very positive.

Most powerful female CEO named

Magazine tabs woman who took over reigns of TLC Beatrice

NEW YORK (AP) — Loida Lewis, a lawyer who assumed control of the nation's biggest black-owned business a year after husband-founder Reginald Lewis died, is the most powerful female CEO in America, Working Woman says.

The magazine's May issue, distributed Monday, ranks her No. 1 in its fourth annual list of the top 50 women business owners. TLC Beatrice's annual revenues totaled $1.82 billion in 1994, the biggest of any women-run company.

Five Texans, led by No. 6-ranked Liz Minyard and Gretchen Minyard Williams, co-chairs of the Dallas-area Minyard Food Stores, also made the list. Minyard had $800 million in revenues last year.

Reginald Lewis led a $985 million debt-financed takeover to form TLC Beatrice in 1987, and his Philippine-born wife was his closest confidente and adviser. The food processor and distributor, which operates primarily in Europe, flourished until his death from cancer in 1993.

After that, TLC Beatrie foundered from a combination of European recession, management uncertainty and a minority stockholder revolt.

She took control in early 1994 with the Lewis family's support, sold underperforming units, strengthened the management, refinanced expensive debt and mollified dissident shareholders with a plan to let them sell their stock.

"My first year was spent putting out fires," Lewis, 52, told Working Woman in its cover story. "Now I'm ready to do business."

It's the first time a newcomer has topped the list. Lewis bumped Marian Ilitch, co-founder of the Little Caesar's pizza chain, who finished in fourth place, with 1994 sales of $1 billion.

No. 2 is Joyce Raley Teel, co-chair of Raley's grocery chain in California, with sales of $1.8 billion. No. 3 is Lynda Resnick, co-chair of Roll International, a mail-order marketing conglomerate, with sales of $1.4 billion.

Other Texans on the top 50 list were Dian Graves Owen, chair of Owen Healthcare of Houston, $320 million in revenues, No. 14; Kathy Prasnicki, president of Sun Coast Resources of Houston, $158 million in revenues, No. 34; and Nanci Mackenzie, president of U.S. Gas Transportation of Dallas, $130 million in revenues, No. 40.

Working Woman's list, compiled in conjunction with the National Foundation for Women Business Owners, also illustrates the rapid growth of women-run businesses nationwide.

The list includes five agri-businesses, four computer-retail service companies, nine industrial companies, three grocery chains and 11 clothing companies. All 50 run companies with sales of $17.9 billion in 1994, up nearly 10 percent from the $16.3 billion a year earlier.

Revenues weren't the only qualifying factor to make the list. At private companies, the woman must own at least 20 percent of the stock, and at public companies, at least 10 percent. She also must be involved in day-to-day management have no title below chief operating officer.

Nor do the companies need be American, as long as they do significant business in the United States. No. 5, Antonia Anson Johnson, for example, is chairwoman of Axel Johnson, a Stockholm shipping company with 1994 revenues of $815 million.

Mrs. Baird's names first non-family president

By Susan Hightower
AP Writer

DALLAS — Mrs Baird's Bakeries Inc., the nation's largest family-owned bakery, broke with tradition Tuesday and for the first in its 87-year history picked a president from outside the Baird family.

Larry G. Wheeler, 49, will become president and chief executive officer of Fort Worth-based Mrs Baird's on May 1. He succeeds Carroll Baird, 67, who will continue as a director.

Wheeler comes to the company from Pillsbury, a unit of Grand Metropolitan PLC, where he worked for 17 years. His experience there included work with bread and mix products, general manager of the company's pizza brands, and president of ALPO Pet Foods. Before Pillsbury, Wheeler worked in marketing and operations at The Coca-Cola Co. and Coca-Cola Foods for nine years.

Mrs Baird's had said in December that it would start its search for Carroll Baird's successor.

By going outside the family, the company hopes to benefit from a fresh viewpoint, said chairman Allen Baird, who praised Wheeler's marketing experience.

"This is just one step of an orderly progression of things to take us into the next century. We feel that bringing somebody in from the outside is an opportunity for us to benefit from different thinking, and having somebody that's been involved in other phases of the food business gives us kind of a different outlook or a different look at the food business overall," he said.

"We think it's an opportunity for all of us to learn, and also gives some of the family the opportunity to do some long-range thinking and so forth, planning as far as the company's concerned," he said.

Mrs Baird's Bakeries was founded in 1908, when Mrs. Ninnie Baird began baking bread for her Fort Worth neighbors to support her eight children. The company now employs more than 3,000 people and has 11 bakeries in Texas.

Nineteen Baird family members remain involved in the business, Allen Baird said.

Swiss group to acquire Kemper

LONG GROVE, Ill. (AP) — Kemper Corp. agreed to be acquired by a Swiss investor group for more than $2 billion after a year of searching for a buyer, the money-management company announced Tuesday.

Zurich Insurance Group, one of the world's largest insurance companies, has succeeded where two other suitors dangling higher offers failed.

Kemper put itself up for sale last year after spurning a $60 a share, or $2.4 billion, takeover bid from General Electric Co. A $68 a share, or $3.96 billion, offer from Conseco Inc. fell through in November after Conseco had difficulty financing the deal.

The offer from Zurich Insurance is valued at $49.50 a share in cash and securities, well below the offers of last year but above analysts' expectations of the company's value.

In a statement, Kemper Chairman David B. Mathis said the Swiss deal is in the best interest of shareholders. Zurich is well-respected, he said, and has "significant financial resources, which can help us continue to grow."

A definitive agreement is expected early next month and would be subject to approval from Kemper's board and stockholders, as well as Zurich's board.

Zurich Insurance is Switzerland's second-largest property and casualty insurer and has recently been expanding its presence in the United States.

Kemper Corp. has about $98 billion in life insurance in force, and also claims the nation's 11th-largest mutual fund family with $42 billion in assets.

Two new merchants have joined TALK O' THE TOWN, located in Oak Ridge Square.

The AMAZON TRADING COMPANY, formerly located in Midland Park Mall, carries Ecuadorian paintings, pottery and sterling.

CREME DE LA CREME of Houston specializes in Miller-Rogaska crystal and finer collectibles and antiques.

Talk O' The Town has scheduled an open house for April 20 to celebrate its first anniversary. Part of the festivities will include a Tom Clark seminar from 6 to 8 p.m. that evening with special pieces available to collectors.

Open in its new location at 4712 N. Midkiff - behind Albertson's in the North Park Shopping Center is PEYTON'S BIKES.

Peyton's built its new store when its former home, La Villita Shopping Center, was purchased by H-E-B.

The new building features a large showroom for bicycles, accessories, clothing and exercise equipment. The service area has also been slightly increased, with a separate entrance available to the service and repair department.

In Midland Park Mall, AIRE SERV will have a booth in front of Foxmoor Friday and Saturday, offering heating and air conditioning systems.

Also, MARIE'S will be opening Monday in a new location next to Kaybee Toys. Marie's offers wedding items, from wedding accessories to the full wedding.

The Easter Bunny will be available through Saturday for a visit. Photo packages are available, and optional.

The NASA Space Shuttle exhibit will be open through April 18.

Girl Scout Troop 374 will operate the train Friday and Saturday during mall hours as a fundraiser.

Drop in songbird population linked to fragmentation of forests, studies show

N.Y. Times News Service

Study by study, evidence has mounted to support the theory that fragmentation of forests in North America is a major cause of population declines among songbirds.

In many parts of the eastern United States and southern Canada, once-large woodland tracts have been splintered into small islands of habitat by suburban development, agriculture and logging. The theory holds that this fragmentation of the breeding grounds of neotropical migrant songbirds is leading to widespread reproductive failure.

Now a research project in five Midwestern states "confirms what we've been saying for a long time but without good data," said Dr. Scott Robinson, a biologist with the Illinois Natural History Survey in Champaign.

Nest predation and parasitism by a species called the cowbird rose as fragmentation increased on nine landscapes where the amount of forest cover varied from 6 percent to 95 percent, Robinson and his colleagues reported in the current issue of Science.

In study areas with little forest cover, the number of nestlings fledged each summer was too low to compensate for normal adult mortality. Local populations of some species were maintained only by an influx of birds from distant areas. "Further loss or fragmentation of habitats could lead to a collapse of regional populations of some forest birds," the scientists warned.

In study areas with little forest cover, the number of nestlings fledged each summer was too low to compensate for normal adult mortality. Local populations of some species were maintained only by an influx of birds from distant areas.

Many of the songbirds that breed in the Northern Hemisphere but spend the winter in Central and South America or on Caribbean islands are insect-eaters that nest in the forest interior. These species include the well-known wood thrush and scarlet tanager and their relatives plus a colorful assortment of warblers, vireos and flycatchers.

Forest migrants typically build open-cup nests, which are inviting targets for predators, and they have not evolved defenses against cowbirds, which leave their eggs for other species to hatch. The unwitting foster parents spend so much time and energy feeding the larger and more aggressive cowbird young that their own nestlings often starve.

"The key to the problem is the forest edge, the often sharp boundary between the woodland and surrounding pasture, cropland or residential areas," Dr. Robert Askins, professor of zoology at Connecticut College in New London, wrote in a separate article in Science.

"Small mammalian predators, such as raccoons and feral cats, and egg-eating birds like American crows and blue jays concentrate their hunting along the forest edge. The brown-headed cowbird also tends to be most common near the forest edge."

Both cowbirds and nest predators are most active in the forest within 100 or 200 meters, or 328 to 657 feet, of the edge, Askins said, "so the interior of the forest represents a relatively safe haven for nesting."

He added, "In a small forest, however, most or all of the potential nesting habitat may be within 100 meters of the forest edge, leading to low reproductive success."

Fragmentation also has a negative impact on the number of songbird species nesting in an area since some neotropical migrants avoid small forest patches.

For example, the breeding territory claimed by a pair of warblers might be only one acre, but it has to be part of at least 1,000 acres of unbroken forest.

The study led by Robinson involved five teams of 5 to 25 researchers and dozens of assistants who measured nest predation and brood parasitism in areas in Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri and Wisconsin. The landscapes surrounding the study sites ranged from over 90 percent agricultural to more than 90 percent forested.

From 1989 to 1993, the scientists monitored the fate of more than 5,000 nests of thrushes, tanagers and such species as the Acadian flycatcher, indigo bunting, Kentucky warbler, worm-eating warbler, hooded warbler, overbird, red-eyed vireo and northern cardinal.

Most wood thrush nests in landscapes with less than 55 percent forest cover were parasitized, the scientists reported. "In some landscapes," they wrote, "there were more cowbird eggs than wood thrush eggs per nest." But in heavily forested study areas, cowbird parasitism was too low to be a significant cause of reproductive failure.

Levels of nest predation also soared as forest cover decreased. Species that nest on the ground (ovenbird, Kentucky warbler and worm-eating warbler) and in low shrubs (hooded warbler and indigo bunting) lost more than 80 percent of their nests to predators in the most heavily fragmented landscapes.

'The key to the problem is the forest edge, the often sharp boundary between the woodland and surrounding pasture, cropland or residential areas.'

— Dr. Robert Askins, professor of zoology at Connecticut College, New London

The extensive forests of the Missouri Ozarks, northern Wisconsin and south-central Indiana may provide enough colonists to maintain songbird populations in the fragmented forests of southern Wisconsin, Illinois and northern Missouri, the report said.

"As long as an adequate number of large, unfragmented regions remain in North America, it is unlikely that fragmentation alone will drive populations of migrant birds to extinction," the scientists wrote.

The paper in Science follows two other recent reports on the impact of forest fragmentation.

In Pennsylvania, researchers found that the loss of wood thrush nests to predators was nearly six times greater on woodland plots smaller than 200 acres than on 25,000-acre blocks of contiguous forest. And thrush nests near the forest edge were almost twice as likely to be destroyed as were nests in the forest interior.

This study, led by Dr. Margaret Brittingham of the School of Forest Resources at Pennsylvania State University in University Park, monitored wood thrush nesting success over two breeding seasons on two large areas of deciduous forest at Hawk Mountain Sanctuary near Kempton, Pa., and on nine privately owned wood lots ranging in size from 23 to 312 acres.

The findings were reported in The Auk, the journal of the American Ornithologists' Union.

On small forest fragments, 56 percent of the wood thrush nests were lost to predators, compared with just 10 percent in the undivided forest tracts.

The distance of a nest from the forest edge also was critical: young birds were fledged from 79 percent of the nests located more than 100 meters (328 feet) from the edge, but only 47 percent of the nests within 50 meters of the edge were successful.

The researchers attributed 8 of 10 nest losses to avian predators, small mammals and snakes, while raccoons were held responsible for most of the remaining raids.

To measure the level of activity by mammalian predators on the nine study sites, the scientists cleared leaf litter from 40-inch circles on the forest floor, covered the exposed ground with flour and left a scent-soaked cotton swab in the center of each circle.

Raccoons, identified by their tracks in the flour, were the most common callers, and the number of visits by all mammals was three times higher in small forest fragments than on large tracts.

The rule of thumb among biologists is that forest areas must be separated by at least 100 meters of open land to be considered discrete fragments.

In a New Jersey study, however, narrow rights-of-way for roads and power lines that crossed large forest tracts were found to have the same negative impact on neotropical migrants as more conspicuous kinds of fragmentation.

Corridors as narrow as nine yards became what the researchers called "ecological traps" for the songbirds because the openings attracted large numbers of brown-headed cowbirds and avian nest predators.

In the southern New Jersey counties of Cumberland and Cape May, scientists looked at rights-of-way dividing otherwise contiguous tracts of oak and pine and hardwood swamp forests larger than 2,500 acres. Three types of corridors were studied: unpaved roads 9 yards wide, paved roads 17 yards wide and power lines 25 yards wide. Breeding birds were counted at different distances from the corridor edge. The research was led by Dr. David Dobkin, at the time a biologist at Rutgers University in Camden, and Lawrence Niles, chief of the New Jersey Endangered and Nongame Species Program. Their report was published recently in the journal Conservation Biology.

Neotropical migrant songbirds that breed in the forest interior, the scientists found, did not view these narrow corridors as breaks in their habitat.

But they said that nests in the forest margins along these rights-of-way would be subjected to increased levels of predation and brood parasitism. Blue jays, crows and grackles were numerous along the corridors, and cowbirds were more than twice as abundant as all avian nest predators combined.

In all three reports, one message was clear: forest conservation efforts must be planned at the regional level. "No matter how carefully they are protected," said Askins, "small nature preserves may progressively lose their most distinctive species if they are surrounded by a hostile landscape."

Interstate 35 is major artery for drugs, officials say

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Its link with Mexico and its straight shot through Texas have turned Interstate 35 into a major artery for pumping illegal drugs into the heartland of the United States.

"(Interstate) 35 without a doubt is a primary — probably the most traveled — interstate with trafficking," said Robert Paiz, spokesman for the Drug Enforcement Administration in Houston.

Drug busts along I-35 are common and often big.

In one traffic stop last year, for instance, 100 pounds of cocaine and a ton of marijuana were seized from a northbound tractor-trailer rig on I-35 in San Antonio.

Smugglers who make it past law officers move their wares into Texas towns or farther north into other states.

In 1994, 4,301 kilograms of marijuana, 201 kilograms of cocaine and more than 10,000 dosage units of LSD, speed and methamphetamine were seized along I-35, according to DEA statistics.

Also in the drug stops, $202,753 in currency was seized. The DEA figures, collected from several law enforcement agencies, pertained to northbound vehicles at various points on the interstate highway, Paiz said.

"They're all headed in the northern direction. They're coming into the U.S. These are obviously incidents of smuggling," he said.

In a controversial attempt to combat the trafficking, the Alamo Area Narcotics Task Force in 1992 set up a daylong checkpoint on I-35, north of San Antonio near New Braunfels, that netted about 500 pounds of marijuana, said task force supervisor Jim Wells.

Officers displayed a flashing "Narcotics Checkpoint" sign and watched for motorists' reactions. Some tried to turn around by cutting across the highway median. Others tossed marijuana from their vehicles. The rest consented to searches.

The checkpoint program met with claims that it violated constitutional rights and now is "at a standstill because of some people that were crying about it," Wells said.

Most marijuana entering this country from Mexico through South Texas reaches I-35 at least by San Antonio, Wells said.

"(Interstate) 35 is one of the major highways. It's a very common route," he said.

I-35 meets the Texas-Mexico border at Laredo. In San Antonio, the highway connects with I-37 from Corpus Christi, which in turn is fed by U.S. highways 281 and 77 from the Rio Grande Valley.

All these roads are drug smuggling routes, law officers said.

South Texas and I-35 became more heavily used by cocaine traffickers after crackdowns on drug smuggling in south Florida in the early 1980s.

"Then the Colombian cartels started to look for alternatives," Paiz said. "That's what forced the arrangement with the established Mexican (marijuana and heroin) traffickers."

In the early 1990s, the cocaine flow into Texas slowed and prices increased, Paiz said. Drug enforcement agents attributed much of it to stockpiling in Mexico and elsewhere amid disagreements among some traffickers.

But those days have passed, and I-35 continues as a busy drug corridor.

"We see that cocaine has been steady," Paiz said. "It's very available."

Locked-out umpires may picket spring games

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK — Major league umpires, locked out by owners because of a contract dispute, could picket spring-training parks when exhibition games start Thursday.

"It's a possibility. The discussion has come up," Bob Opalka, an associate of umpires' union head Richie Phillips, said Tuesday.

The picketing, not yet approved by the umpires' executive council, would be informational and not intended to stop people from entering stadiums.

'At this point, I don't see any way the regular umpires could be back for the start of the exhibition games.'
— Bob Opalka, Umpire union head associate

Exhibition games for the regular big league players begin Thursday, and the rescheduled opening day is set for April 25. Picketing at regular-season games remains a possibility if there's no settlement, Opalka said.

A collection of former major and minor league umpires, along with college and high school umps, called exhibition games held with replacement players earlier this spring. A similar group of ex-pros and amateurs would likely handle the upcoming games; no active minor league umpires were asked to fill in.

Phillips and management negotiator Robert Kheel spoke Monday, but did not set a date for further negotiations. Umpires have been locked out since Jan. 1, and the sides have made little progress since then despite talks almost weekly.

"I don't know of anything that's planned in the way

Rebs clinch playoffs with 11-1 triumph

■ Midland Lee's 15-hit attack stuffs Odessa High and assures the Rebels a return to the state playoffs.

By Bill Petitt
Sports Writer

Drag out the baseball book on cliches and turn to any page. Close your eyes and then point. For Tuesday's 11-1 win over Odessa High was a game of domination from top to bottom.

Offensively, Lee was stout as every Rebel picked up a hit in the 15-hit barrage. The 15 hits were the most in district play this season and the Rebels made the most of those hits, scoring at least two runs in every inning played.

"It's been a long time since we hit the ball like that," said Midland Lee coach Jesse Benavidez. "I didn't realize that we had 15 hits until I looked up at the end of the game. We just did a good job. I thought our defense was good with the exception of letting one run score in the fourth and offensively you can't ask for much more than that."

The win, coupled with Midland High's 10-3 loss to Odessa Permian, assures Lee of a playoff berth. Lee also retains sole possession of first place in the district with an 8-1 record, a game and a half ahead of Permian who is 6-2. Odessa falls to 8-10-1 on the year and 2-7 in league play.

Rebel third baseman Raymond Martinez came out of what has seemed to be a season-long slump with a 4-for-4 game with three runs scored and three RBIs.

"It felt great. A lot of people have told me to relax and just play and that's what I did today," said Martinez, who hit a double in his first at-bat to drive in Daniel Carrasco who led off the game with a double. "Anytime you start off like that, it catches on with the rest of the team. Everybody hit the ball hard and we were able to capitalize with runners in scoring position."

"Last year Ray came in as the back up to Alex Hale at third base and took over his position when he got hurt," said Benavidez. "He worked hard and did a good job filling in for him. I think he real-

Today is a day junior college players have waited two years for as they hope to sign with a major college on the first day of the national signing period for spring sports.

The Western Junior College Athletic Conference player of the year in men's basketball, Kevin Rice of Midland College, is expected to sign with Utah State.

"I'm really happy for Kevin. I think Utah State is a program that is on the rise. They won the Big West Conference this year," said Midland coach Pat Rafferty. "I think this is a good marriage. They are getting a great kid and great player, but more importantly, they will be able to help him in his career and academics."

Rangers' new pitching staff nears completion

■ Texas signs reliever Roger McDowell to add depth to its bullpen.

McDowell

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. (AP) — The Texas Rangers have almost put the finishing touches on their new and improved pitching staff.

Texas decided Monday to spend $500,000 on reliever Roger McDowell and agreed Tuesday to a one-year contract for $500,000 with the club's all-time save leader Jeff Russell to further bolster the bullpen. Russell's contract also calls for potentially $200,000 in performance bonuses.

That movement comes after signing starters Kenny Rogers and Bob Tewksbury. The Rangers added starter Kevin Gross early in the strike.

McDowell signed a one-year deal with $100,000 available in performance bonuses after negotiations stalled with Zane Smith, who would've been the fifth starter.

"We're just looking for depth," manager Johnny Oates said. "We're not going to have just one closer. We'll just see how he throws the ball. But he's a guy with veteran experience who you can fill comfortable giving the ball to."

Tom Henke was Texas' closer last year, but he's gone to St. Louis. Lefthander Darren Oliver is being groomed to eventually take his place, although he, Matt Whiteside and McDowell will likely share the job this season.

"She was putting me in to do the job and it felt wonderful," Netherland said. "She could rely on me 'cause I believed I could do it and I did it."

Midland High, 17-6 overall and 7-5 in district play, later got an second RBI single from senior starting catcher Shelia Vines to tie the game at 6-6. With the team's confidence soaring from that point on, it would be a matter of getting the one last big play of the season. That big play would come in the bottom half of the seventh inning.

After a single from junior shortstop Jamee Stennett and a series of fielder's choice plays, Midland High loaded the bases with nobody out. The Lady Bulldogs were unsuccessful the first go around to drive the runner in, but sophomore Katrina Kelley, who allowed a two-run home run to San Angelo's Heather Boyd in the top of the sixth, drilled a Gonzales pitch to right field to give MHS the 7-6 win.

"I thought anything close you better hit it," Kelley said. "It (the home run) was a whole lot of motivation for the last at bat of the game. I still felt nervous."

Kelley, who settled down to pick up the win and raised her record to 8-8, joined Moss, Netherland and junior Julie Williams as players that came off the bench to make an impact when replacing seniors. It made all the difference in the game in the eyes of the MHS coach.

"That shows we can go to our bench and that I'm not afraid to do it," Culwell said. "Had I not gone to the bench, I don't know if we would have won because we weren't getting it done."

San Angelo, 2-15 and 0-12, had nine hits off MHS pitching while giving up 11. The Lady Bobcats attempted comeback, helped by four MHS errors, almost spoiled the last game for the Midland High seniors and Culwell, who moves to Houston after the school year and will not return to MHS next season. Down 3-0 in the second inning, San Angelo would come back to take a 4-3 lead, scoring their first four runs of the game off Midland starting pitcher sophomore Jennifer Shelton. Midland came back with one in the bottom of the fourth when Vines drove in Jennifer Thompson for Vines' first RBI of the game.

Going out a winner in such a tight game might have put some gray hairs on Culwell, but is was also a special way for her to go.

"It was neat going out where you have to think and play ball," Culwell said. "We're still thinking and reacting. It was a scary one, but a win is a good way to go out."

Culwell also feels that despite missing out on the playoff this go around that Midland High will be there for years to come.

"The foundation should be laid," Culwell said. "They should be one of the top two (teams) every year. They should be 'top dog' so to speak."

ized that he was going to have to put forth the same effort to be successful and he has done that lately."

Lee opened the scoring with three runs in the first. Following back-to-back doubles by Carrasco and Martinez, Lee took advantage of an error by Odessa shortstop Ryan Roman on a bouncer off the bat of Britt Harper to put runners at first and third and give Lee a 1-0 lead.

Mark Holly rapped a single up the middle to score two runs for a 3-0 lead.

Holly took over on the mound for his third win in district play. He threw 86 pitches in his five-inning stint, throwing primarily breaking pitches.

"Those runs early really relaxed me, just like last year when we were scoring a lot of runs every game," said Holly, whose earned run average dropped to 1.00 in district play after the performance. "I was throwing a lot of breaking pitches. They are not great at hitting the breaking ball, but if you throw a fastball they will slap it. I just kept throwing my breaking ball and it worked."

The Rebels return to action on Saturday when they face San Angelo Central at 2 p.m. in San Angelo.

JUCO: OC forward to Texas Tech

will sign with Texas-Pan American. Ashe becomes the third former Midland College player to sign with coach Mark Adams' team. Two years ago Kelon Haynie and Terrance Rone signed with the Broncos.

Odessa College, which had six sophomores on a squad that lost to Hill College in the opening round of the Region V Tournament in Waco, will have three players sign today.

Da'Mon Roberts, a 6-8 forward from Dallas, will sign with Texas Tech. The Red Raiders look to replace the second leading scorer in school history, graduating Lance Hughes, inside players Bernard Lloyd and Mark Davis, formerly of Howard College, and starting center Darvin Ham.

OC guard Corey Williams will sign with North Alabama and 6-10 center Neil Hood will continue his career at Duquesne.

Elsewhere in the WJCAC, the New Mexico Lobos will take two plums off the recruiting tree when they sign Howard College guard Kavossy Franklin and New Mexico College guard Shawn Baker. Franklin ranked in the top 10 in five of the eight individual statistical categories compiled by the WJCAC. He led the conference in scoring with 20.4 points per game and led the league in free throw percentage with 81.7 percent.

Baker, along with NMJC guard Lenny Holly, formed what many considered one of the best JUCO backcourts in the nation. Baker led the league in three point field goals with 56 prior to the regional and national tournaments. The former high school player of the year in the state of New Mexico also average 2.7 steals per game for NMJC.

Holly, who originally signed with Texas Tech and was named the freshman of the year following his only season in Lubbock, signed early with Arizona State.

Fellow Thunderbird Larry Mayo, who saw limited action last season after starting a portion of his freshman year, is expected to sing with Western Carolina.

New Mexico Military Institute is not expected to have anyone sign today. Mike Elam, a forward for the Broncos, will visit Cameron University in Lawton, Okla., before deciding and Clifton Wilkinson is weighing his options with, among other schools, Eastern New Mexico and Lubbock Christian.

Midland players Ben Radford and Randy Webster and Odessa College's Brian Hamer, Stacey Bryant and Desmond Greer are uncommitted and not will not sign today.

Coach changes mind on UNM

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Don Flanagan, who last week was hired to turn around New Mexico's struggling women's basketball program, changed his mind Tuesday and said he is keeping his options open for the future.

The former Eldorado High School girls coach was among four finalists in New Mexico's search to replace Mo Eckroth, whose contract wasn't renewed after she compiled a 14-95 record over four seasons.

New Mexico athletic director Rudy Davalos appointed Flanagan coach last Friday, but said he suddenly changed his mind.

"He was excited about it, he was anxious to do it and felt he could do it," Davalos said. "There was never anything negative in the interviews. I was shocked and disappointed when I heard."

Flanagan did not immediat ly return messages left by The As. ciated Press. He told Albuquerq television station KOAT he wasn sure if he would return to coachin at Eldorado and was keeping his options open.

Roberts, Pavin win in U.S. Section

LAKE OCONEE, Ga. (AP) — Loren Roberts and Corey Pavin advanced in first round play Tuesday in the new Andersen Consulting World Championship of Golf.

Roberts eliminated a slumping Tom Kite 3 and 2, and Pavin beat Phil Mickelson 3 and 1 in the conclusion of United States Section first round play.

Roberts and Pavin will join Paul Azinger and Mark McCumber, Monday's winners, in the American semifinals and finals at Kohler, Wis., July 31-Aug. 1.

The winner there will join the winners from the Japanese Section (Massy Kuramoto), Europe and the Rest of the World, Dec. 30-31 in Scottsdale, Ariz. with the winner gets $1 million in total prize money.

Azinger came back from 4 down with 8 holes to play and salvaged a 1-up victory Monday over Fuzzy Zoeller.

McCumber scored a double eagle on the second, but had to birdie the first extra hole to subdue Tom Lehman 1-up in the other Monday match.

Vikings make Carter highest paid player

The Associated Press

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. — Five years ago, the Minnesota Vikings spent $100 to grab Cris Carter off waivers. On Tuesday, they agreed to pay him more than any player in the history of the team.

Carter, who set an NFL record with 122 catches last season, agreed to a contract extension worth $11.5 million through 1998. That makes him one of the highest-paid receivers in the game and eclipses the five-year, $8.75 million contract the Vikings gave Chris Doleman in 1991.

"This is a time in my life that I can rejoice," Carter said. "I've been able to overcome. The Vikings have believed in me when nobody else believed in me. I'm thankful for what they've done."

Carter, who could have become a free agent when his old contract expired after the 1995 season, will earn $1.7 million next fall under the terms of his previous pact. His new deal includes a $2.7 million signing bonus that will be paid over the next two years.

The four-year average of $2.9 million is about $500,000 short of the yearly average of the five-year, $17 million contract Andre Rison recently signed with the Cleveland Browns. Rison is the NFL's highest-paid receiver.

Talley to Falcons

ATLANTA — Buffalo free-agent linebacker Darryl Talley, called the "heart and soul" of the Bills' defense, agreed Tuesday to a two-year contract with the Atlanta Falcons.

Details of the contract were not immediately available, but the Buffalo Evening News had reported Talley was considering a two-year deal worth about $1 million a season. He received $1.4 million from the Bills in 1994.

Talley had been considering contract offers with the Falcons and the Los Angeles Raiders from his home in Orlando, Fla.

A 12-year NFL veteran, Talley led the Bills in tackles four of the past five seasons. He had 124 in 1994.

Talley, 34, became the sixth NFL veteran to join the Falcons in the offseason, and the second two-time Pro Bowler to join the team recently. Running back Eric Metcalf signed with Atlanta last week.

Although he was Buffalo's all-time leading tackler and held a team record for playing 204 consecutive games, Talley became expendable last month when the Bills signed free agent linebacker Bryce Paup to a three-year contract.

Redskins release Collins

ASHBURN, Va. — Linebacker Andre Collins, the Washington Redskins' leading tackler in the 1994 season, was released by the NFL team on Tuesday.

Collins, Washington's top pick in 1990 out of Penn State, led the team with a career-high 170 tackles and had four interceptions last season, two for touchdowns.

"With the additions to our linebackers during the offseason, we felt it was in the best interest of Andre Collins to let him go now," Redskins general manager Charley Casserly said. "By releasing Andre at this time, it will enable him to have time to catch on with another team."

Raiders sign Swilling

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. — The Los Angeles Raiders have signed five-time Pro Bowl linebacker Pat Swilling and apparently plan to use him at defensive end, the position he played in college.

No terms were announced, but according to published reports, Swilling signed a one-year contract with a base salary of about $500,000.

Swilling, 30, an unrestricted free agent, played for the New Orleans Saints from 1986 to 1992 and for the Detroit Lions the last two years. He was a Pro Bowl selection from 1989 through 1993.

"We're excited to have Pat Swilling with us," Raiders coach Mike White said in a press release distributed Tuesday. "He has been an outstanding pass rusher throughout his career and can help us as a rush defensive end."

The Raiders said they plan to utilize second-year pros James Folston and Rob Holmberg at outside linebacker in place of Winston Moss, who signed with Seattle.

With that in mind, the Raiders said, Swilling will be worked at defensive end.

Swilling, a 6-foot-3, 245-pounder, has played in 137 regular-season NFL games, with 109 starts. He has 86 1/2 sacks, 412 tackles and 29 forced fumbles. In 1991, he led the NFL with 17 sacks.

Chicago mayor looks past Bears

CHICAGO — If the Bears leave Chicago for the suburbs, Mayor Richard Daley intends to bring another NFL team to the city.

But Daley said he doesn't think the Bears will move, despite reports that say the Chicago Bears have come up with three locations for a new stadium, all in the suburbs.

"I think they like Chicago fans and they like Soldier Field," Daley said Tuesday. "It's a great stadium and we're putting more money into it."

The specific sites remain a secret, but the Bears are considering locations in DuPage County and in Hoffman Estates in suburban Cook County, the Chicago Tribune reported, citing unidentified sources familiar with the plans.

Bears president Michael McCaskey has long criticized Soldier Field, saying the old stadium cannot be upgraded to attract new fans. The Bears' lease with the city, which owns Soldier Field, expires after the 1999 season.

McCaskey has decided to look outside Chicago for a stadium site because the political climate favors a jump to the suburbs, where he may stand a better chance of acquiring land and getting help to build infrastructure, the Tribune reported.

Yankees pen makes them AL East favorites

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The New York Yankees will be the choice of many to win the AL East, and their greatly improved bullpen will be one of the primary reasons.

"We've got to feel very good if we have a lead late in the game," pitching coach Billy Connors said.

Very good, indeed. While some teams must use the brief spring training period to search for a closer, manager Buck Showalter can choose between a right-hander and a left-hander.

Newly-acquired righty John Wetteland will undoubtedly carry most of the load, but left-hander Steve Howe showed last year he can still be a lethal weapon at the end of games. Bob Wickman and another addition, Scott Bankhead, add two capable right-handers to the mix.

"If we're all throwing the ball the way we're capable of, we're going to be very difficult for clubs," Howe said.

Wetteland, obtained from financially-strapped Montreal for Class A prospect Fernando Seguignol, a player to be named and cash should give the Yankees their most imposing closer since Rich Gossage from 1978-83.

"He's an intimidating type of guy the way Gossage was," Connors said. "He comes right at you."

Wetteland, 28, has saved 105 games since becoming a closer three years ago following a trade from Los Angeles to Montreal. He preserved 25 of the Expos' major league-leading 74 victories last year and went 4-6 with a 2.83 ERA. Opponents hit just .202 against him, and he struck out 68 in 63 2-3 innings.

Howe converted 15 of 19 save opportunities last year to go with a 3-0 record and a 1.80 ERA in 40 appearances covering 40 innings.

But Howe's history of substance abuse has always raised questions about his dependability. He is 37 years old now and has been sidelined for one reason or another for parts of each of his four seasons with the Yankees. Those factors almost surely led to Wetteland's acquisition.

Whatever the reasons, Howe is not objecting.

"I just look at it that if we all stay healthy we're getting that much closer to the world championship I want," he said. "I'm not insecure enough to think, 'Here comes my end.' "

Showalter expects Howe to remain a major contributor. "In some ways he's even more important," the manager said.

Howe is adept at retiring both left- and right-handed hitters. He held lefties to a .205 average last year. Surprisingly, righties hit 15 points lower than that against him.

Wickman, a converted starter, is a durable setup man. He led the AL with 53 appearances last year for the aborted season while working to a 5-4 record with a 3.09 ERA and six saves. He retired the first batter he faced 40 of 53 times and stranded 29 of 39 inherited runners.

Bankhead was 3-2 with a 4.54 ERA in 27 appearances for Boston when the Yankees acquired him last Aug. 31. The Yankees obtained Bankhead with an eye toward post-season play since they led the AL East by 6 1/2 games when the strike began on Aug. 12.

Bankhead, of course, still awaits his Yankees debut.

Free agent frenzy rolls on with Butler's big deal

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

■ Baseball Roundup

NEW YORK — Just two days before the start of exhibition games, baseball's free agent frenzy rolled on. And so did the salary cuts.

Outfielder Brett Butler, one of the union's most vocal supporters during the strike, got the big deal Tuesday, a $2 million, one-year contract from the New York Mets. The new deal is $1.5 million less than his 1994 salary.

Todd Stottlemyre agreed to go to Oakland for $1.8 million — a $550,000 cut — and the Athletics announced pitcher Steve Ontiveros had accepted the team's offer to go to salary arbitration.

Pitcher Erik Hanson went to the Boston Red Sox for $1,125,000, down from $2.7 million last year.

Milwaukee came up with outfielder Derrick May, cut loose by the Chicago Cubs last Friday. He got a minor league deal that would be worth $325,000 if he makes the team.

Pitcher Greg W. Harris took a big cut, agreeing to a minor league contract with Minnesota that would pay him $525,000 in the majors. He made $1,325,000 in 1994.

Infielder Randy Velarde returned to the New York Yankees for $350,000, less than one-third his 1994 salary of $1,125,000.

Pitcher Jeff Russell, who finished last season with Cleveland, went to Texas for $500,000, less than a quarter of his $2,175,000 salary a year ago.

Butler, among the top leadoff hitters in the game, was offered $3.5 million by the Los Angeles Dodgers during the offseason, but that deal was pulled off the table when owners' rescinded their salary cap plan.

New York entered the bidding this week with a $1.5 million offer.

"I got to be at a point," Butler said, "where I was fed up with what was going on. I said, OK, I've got a number I'm going to play for and if there a number less out there, I'm going to retire. I'm financially secure."

Oakland general manager Sandy Alderson said last week he didn't expect to be able to sign Stottlemyre, but the market has fallen for free agents in recent days and the A's increased their offer. The A's got another pitcher Tuesday when free agent Steve Ontiveros agreed to salary arbitration.

"At this point, it's less likely that we will do anything else," Alderson said. "Signing Stottlemyre and having Ontiveros in camp affects what we can do for a middle infielder. It doesn't mean that we won't do anything else, but it's not likely."

Maryland star may surpass junior year for NBA

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — University of Maryland basketball star Joe Smith said he is leaning toward entering the NBA draft this summer instead of staying in school for his junior year.

The 6-foot-10 center said he discussed the situation with his mother over the weekend and told her he feels ready to play in the NBA.

"We sat down and talked over the weekend and I told her that I thought I was physically and mentally ready for the next level," Smith said Monday before leaving for Atlanta to accept the Ban-Naismith Award as national Player of the Year. He won the Associated Press Player of the Year award last month.

Smith

"She might disagree, but more than likely, she'll go along with what I want to do," he said.

Smith, who is expected to be among the top five picks if he decides to leave school, said he is close to making an announcement.

"I want to talk to my mom a couple more times," said Smith, who has until May 15 to declare his intentions. "It's not something we want to talk about on the phone, so I'll have to go down or she'll have to come up."

Maryland coach Gary Williams said he and his staff have given Smith a list of players who have left college after their sophomore year and those who have left after their junior year to give him an idea of the difference a year can make.

"The one thing I've told Joe is to make sure that there's not a salary cap in place for this year," Williams said. "And to make sure you don't sign with an agent before the draft."

Jerrod Mustaf left Maryland after his sophomore year and was the top pick of the New York Knicks in 1990. He spent four unproductive years in New York and Phoenix before he was released by the Suns this year.

Head coach Steve Alford hires father Sam for assistant job at SMSU

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — There will be two coach Alfords on the Southwest Missouri State bench next season.

Steve Alford, who was hired as the Bears' head coach March 30, on Tuesday hired his father, Sam, a longtime high school basketball coach in their hometown of New Castle, Ind., as an assistant.

It's believed to be the first time in NCAA basketball a father and son have shared coaching duties, with the son holding the top job.

"I've grown up in a basketball home where we always talked a lot about basketball and had a lot of great experiences, and now the thing has come full cycle," Steve Alford said. "It's a dream come true for me, and it's a neat opportunity for him."

Sam Alford, 52, has a 452-245 record in 29 seasons of coaching prep basketball in Indiana, including a 300-188 mark in 20 years at New Castle. He was named Indiana Coach of the Year in 1979, 1984 and 1995.

"I had a lot of opportunities earlier to coach in college but I wanted to stay at New Castle."

TEXAS: Russell played with two clubs in 1994

(From 1D)

McDowell, a 34-year-old righthander, made $1.25 million last season while going 0-3 with a 5.23 ERA in 32 games with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"Our scouts said the stuff was still there," Rangers general manager Doug Melvin said. "He should have been better than he was with the Dodgers."

McDowell has a 62-65 career record with a 3.17 ERA and 151 saves in 618 games with the New York Mets (1985-89), Philadelphia Phillies (1989-91) and Dodgers (1991-94).

In 905 2/3 innings, McDowell has allowed 38 home runs — an average of 0.38 per nine innings, the best ratio among active pitchers.

"He keeps the ball in the park. We just have to catch it," Melvin said.

The only other addition to the Rangers' staff may be Russell, who saved 111 games for Texas before being traded to Oakland in August 1992.

Russell, 33, split last season between Boston and Cleveland, going 1-6 with 17 saves and a 5.09 ERA.

Melvin spent part of Monday on the phone with Russell's agent, Alan Hendricks.

"I think it would be a good fit," Hendricks said. "Everybody knows Russ wants to play."

The Rangers had been talking to agents for Smith, but apparently one of the sticking points was whether he could be in camp today.

"We've been talking to his agent, but he said (Smith) wasn't prepared to do it at this time," Melvin said. "I felt if we didn't get pitchers in camp by (today), it would be tough to have them ready to start the season."

With today's signing, the Rangers have 15 of 40 players on the major league contract for 1995.

UMPS: Contract expired on Dec. 31

of further negotiations before Thursday, at the earliest," Opalka said.

"At this point, I don't see any way the regular umpires could be back in place for the start of the exhibition games," he said. "From the umpires' standpoint, I think they'd like to get in a couple of games before the regular season, but we're just in a wait-and-see situation."

Umpires staged a brief walkout in 1991, and replacement umps called every game on opening day except one after owners and umpires worked out a four-year contract early that morning.

The start of the regular season was postponed about three weeks after the players' strike ended March 31. Umpires hoped that agreement would help spur a settlement in their dispute, but they were rebuffed in talks with Kheel last week, and instead told that owners thought the replacement umps had done a good job.

Umpires originally asked for a 60 percent pay raise during a four-year period, up from their base salaries ranging from $60,000-$175,000. They also sought to double their postseason pool, about $20,000 per umpire in many cases, because of the increase in games under the expanded playoff format.

Owners offered a yearly cost-of-living increase to match inflation, which was 2.7 percent last year. Umpires later lowered their proposal to a 53 percent increase.

The umpires' contract expired Dec. 31. They continued to get paid after the players struck on Aug. 12.

The bidding:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♠ | Pass | 2NT | Pass |
| 6NT | Pass | Pass | Pass |

Opening lead: Ten of ◇ North-South dodged a bullet in the auction by managing to stay out of a heart slam which had to fail because of a distributional quirk. Then South showed superior technique in bringing home six no trump.

Had South responded one heart rather than two no trump, hardly the most descriptive action with a square hand and a weak four-card heart suit, six hearts would almost certainly have been the final contract. And North judged well to make the value bid of six no trump rather than introduce the four-card heart suit. With almost half the high cards in the short suits, North felt that no trump would play as well as any suit contract.

West led the ten of diamonds, and declarer could count ten tricks off the top. If either clubs or hearts split 3-2, or if the king of hearts were singleton, one of those suits would provide two additional tricks, and the slam would be home regardless of how many tricks were available in the other.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy, cashed the ace of clubs and led a club to the king. When East discarded a diamond, South correctly refused to be tempted by the heart finesse. Instead, declarer led a heart to the ace and returned a low heart toward the queen — and the defenders were helpless. Since rising with the king would concede two more tricks in the suit, East was forced to play low.

When the queen of hearts held and West showed out, it was a simple matter for declarer to abandon the suit and revert to clubs. A club trick was conceded safely, and three tricks each in spades and diamonds, together with four club tricks and two hearts, brought declarer's total to 12.

First lady can't seem to get a break, not even from Clinton's half-brother

NEW YORK — Hillary Rodham Clinton can't get a break, not even from family.

Roger Clinton, President Clinton's half-brother, says in a soon-to-be-published book that that he was not impressed when he first met Mrs. Clinton.

Quotes from the book appear in this week's New York magazine.

"Hillary didn't fit my definition of particularly attractive. She wore Coke-bottle glasses and her hair was braided," Clinton writes.

He also depicts her as being a bit stuck up.

"Hillary came from a different culture, from a different society. Her family, she later told my mother, didn't have a crisis every few days," he says. "You get along with Hillary about as well as Hillary wants you to get along with her."

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson is going from a prison cell to an 11,000-square-foot home patterned after a French castle.

The former heavyweight champion paid a reported $3.7 million in cash for the house, which has seven bedrooms, a gourmet kitchen, wine cellar, exercise room, tennis court, swimming pool and a guest house. And it's near Wayne Newton's ranch.

Tyson reportedly pays $3.7 million for a Las Vegas home.

"Everyone is excited. Everyone is rushing to accomplish this and try to get everything done today," said Phyllis Schwartz, the real estate agent handling the transaction. "It's a quick deal."

Tyson, 28, was released from an Indiana prison March 25 after serving three years for rape. He signed a six-fight deal with the MGM-Grand Hotel and a two-year deal with Showtime, which gave him a $20 million advance.

ARLINGTON, Va. — Fans went a little too far, so the Love line got cut off.

America Online took the unprecedented step of deleting the computer message board devoted to grunge-rock singer Courtney Love and her band, Hole.

The network said fans repeatedly broke the computer network's rules, USA Today said Tuesday. One user made a death threat and was stripped of membership, America Online spokeswoman Margaret Ryan said.

The rules prohibit criminal activity, profanity, and racial, ethnic, religious or sexual slurs.

The Hole forum contained messages detailing Love's relationship with Nirvana singer Kurt Cobain, who committed suicide last April.

BURBANK, Calif. — A loaded pistol was seized from Eddie Van Halen's carry-on luggage as he was about to board a United flight, police said.

No immediate charges were filed against the 40-year-old guitarist.

He was detained for half an hour Friday, forcing postponement of his concerts in the San Francisco Bay area.

"He was very cooperative. He stated he normally travels by charter, where you more or less do what you like," said Airport Police Chief Tony Lo-Verme. "This time he traveled by commercial aircraft and forgot to take the gun out."

NEW YORK — Glenn Close will be right at home at this year's Tony Awards.

The star of "Sunset Boulevard" will join Gregory Hines and Nathan Lane as co-hosts of the ceremony, which will be held at the Minskoff Theater.

That's where "Sunset Boulevard" is playing.

Close apparently has patched up her differences with Andrew Lloyd Webber, the musical's creator. She had complained that his company inflated box-office figures during her vacation to make her understudy look good.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — George Will will bring his buttoned-down brand of politics to Harvard in the fall.

The conservative Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist will lecture on American politics as a visiting professor, the university said Monday.

Faculty members in the government department voted to invite Will despite objections from several professors.

"Sure he has a Ph.D. So does Newt Gingrich, and we don't invite him to teach undergraduates," Louise Richardson said.

GOLF: Lee girls qualify for region for third year in a row

home course for our two seniors (Christin Sutton and Betsy Brinninstool). All year this has been a comeback team. They thought they could do it and they did it."

Lee's girls have now won Region I placement three years in a row and will play in Lubbock on the Elm Grove course on April 24-25. Lee has been to the state tournament two years in a row, winning the state title in 1993 and placing third in '94 while giving way to San Angelo, who is bidding for a repeat with three golfers off last year's state championship team.

"This is just an awesome group and they came to play," said San Angelo coach Rick Harvey, who had the only three girls in Tuesday's round to break 80 (Kasi Alexander, 78; Julie McMahon, 79; and Allison Hooker, 78). "With the lead we had, our girls didn't have to play head-to-head like Lee and Cooper. We just played the course and you could see the scores go up from those other two due to the pressure of the situation."

Lee senior Christin Sutton led the Lee charge with an 81, but she was playing against Cooper's April de Vries, who had an 80 to win the medalist title for a third consecutive year. That was not the battle that was going to determine Lee's fortunes.

"I felt like I just had to shoot in the low 80s to help Lee get second place," Sutton said. "I tried not to think about what April was doing. I just tried to play every hole by itself."

The key to victory for Lee probably came from sophomore Kelly Feavel and senior Betsy Brininstool. Feavel matched up with Cooper's Kelly Fox and won that battle by a 10-stroke margin, 87-97. Brinninstool took a nine-stroke margin (87-96) over Cooper's Tiffany Hartaraves. That was 19 strokes Cooper couldn't recover from.

Brininstool felt double pressure going into the tournament.

"We were one shot behind Cooper and I was tied for 10th place in the medalist race, so I was really nervous," Brininstool said. "To make all-district you have to place in the top ten. That was my goal this year. But the team also needed to do well. It was neat to win my part by nine strokes."

Feavel, who has more years to add to her golf exploits, didn't seem to feel the same pressure as Sutton and Brinninstool.

"I knew we had to beat Cooper, but I was fairly relaxed considering the situation," Feavel said. "I was pretty bad on the front side, but I saved myself on the back and it was nice to come in 10 strokes better (than Fox)."

Cooper's de Vries has been a dominant force in 4-5A golf since she was a freshman. She has now won three medalist titles in a row and is now seeking her third trip to the state tournament. But this time she will have to do it as an individual since Lee knocked the Lady Cougars from the Region I field.

"I've gone to regionals as a medalist and with a team, so I've done it both ways," de Vries said. "I'm really disappointed because I'd much rather go as a team. It feels awkward as an individual, like something is missing. I'm more nervous when I go alone because it's all up to me. Your teammates can't pick you up."

But don't get the wrong idea. De Vries will show up at the region tournament in Lubbock. After all, she has a reputation to uphold.

"I'm going back to state. This is the last time around. You can bet on that," de Vries said.

San Angelo and Lee will also be there. It'll be almost like old home week.

Ham's perfect for easy, elegant Easter menu

Associated Press

Along with pastel-colored eggs and baskets of chocolate goodies, Easter in many homes means ham as a main course.

This year, serve precooked, smoked ham with cranberry chutney. Round out the menu with fresh asparagus, dilled peas and potatoes vinagrette and a goat cheese, pepper and bacon tart.

Since ham is precooked, it just needs heating up. When serving boneless ham, plan on four to five servings per pound. For bone-in ham, count on two to three servings per pound.

Serve Hot Cross Buns for Easter breakfast

Associated Press

Hot cross buns are a traditional Easter food. You can bake them in advance and freeze unfrosted. When ready to serve, reheat foil-wrapped buns in a 325-degree oven. Drizzle cream cheese frosting in the shape of a cross over the buns after reheating, otherwise the heat from the oven will cause the frosting to soften and lose its shape.

2 packages active dry yeast
½ cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon ground cardamom

Colleen Scury spends some time in the kitchen preparing a favorite recipe.

Modest cook claims her children were 'Twinkie' kids

By Linda Anderson

Colleen Scury of Midland is involved in many civic, community and social groups, including Friends of the Library, Progressive Study Club, En Amie, University Graduate Women, Midland Woman's Club and Midland Senior Center, where she does some office work and recently "judged a pool tournament," she said.

In spite of all her activities, Mrs. Scury still loves to cook. One of the University Graduate Women groups she belongs to is the Dining Group, a group of 15 couples who meet once a month to share dinner and recipes.

Mrs. Scury said that although her mother is a wonderful cook, she really didn't learn to cook from her mother. "I've always said that my kids were 'Twinkie' kids because I never learned to bake. The only thing she (Mrs. Scury's mother) baked was a devil's food cake in an iron skillet. I just learned on my own. And yet she was a good cook."

COOK: Time in kitchen is much less these days

(From 1E)

Now that Mrs. Scury's children are grown and have children of their own, her time in the kitchen is much less than it used to be. Besides, she laughed, "My family has a limited palate, so I get bored (cooking the same foods over and over) and I burn things."

In spite of her modesty, Mrs. Scury is an excellent cook who enjoys trying new recipes. Some of her favorites include this one that was featured in an issue of Sunset Magazine from somewhere in the 1950s, she said.

BARBECUED MARINATED FLANK STEAK

MARINADE:
½ cup salad oil
¼ cup soy sauce
1 tablespoon (at least) powdered garlic or garlic powder
1 teaspoon powdered ginger

DO NOT SCORE OR TENDERIZE FLAKE STEAK.

Combine all ingredients; mix and pour over flank steak. Marinate at least six hours, turning the meat in the marinade. Cook over low coals about 15 minutes for medium rare. Dip meat in marinade or brush on marinade as it cooks. When done, slice at an angle, making thin slices. Excellent served with fried rice or mixed Oriental style vegetables.

The following is a recipe that was served at a recent meeting of the UGW Dining Group, Mrs. Scury said:

PASTA WITH PEPPERS AND ONIONS

¼ cup butter or margarine
½ cup coarsely chopped walnuts
2 large onions, thinly sliced
3 medium-sized red, yellow or orange bell peppers (about 1 pound total), seeded and cut into ¼ inch wide strips
8 ounces dry fettuccine or 10 to 12 ounces fresh fettuccine
½ cup regular-strength chicken broth
½ cup whipping cream
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
½ cup grated parmesan cheese
Salt and pepper

Melt 1 tablespoon butter or margarine in wide frying pan over medium-low heat. Add walnuts and cook, stirring often, until lightly toasted (about 2 minutes). Lift out and set aside. Add remaining 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, onions and bell peppers to pan; cook, stirring often, until onions are very soft and light golden (20 to 25 minutes).

Meanwhile, in 5- to 6-quart pan, cook fettuccine in 3 quarts boiling water just until tender to bite (8 to 10 minutes for dry pasta, 3 to 4 minutes for fresh); drain well.

To bell pepper mixture, add broth, cream and nutmeg. Increase heat to high and bring to full boil. Reduce heat to low; add fettuccine and cheese. Mix lightly, using two forks. Season to taste with salt and pepper; sprinkle with walnuts. Makes four servings.

(From 1E)

ing water for 2 minutes; drain well. Toss peas, green onion and potatoes with dressing; cover and let stand up to two hours, stirring occasionally. Arrange salad on a serving platter or in a salad bowl. Serve at room temperature. Makes 8 servings.

GOAT CHEESE, PEPPER AND BACON TART

8- or 9-inch pie shell
4 slices bacon, cooked crisply and crumbled
½ red bell pepper, finely chopped
½ green bell pepper, finely chopped
4 ounces goat cheese
4 eggs
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon seasoned salt
⅛ teaspoon ground white pepper
1 teaspoon dried minced onion

Place pie shell in pie plate. In bottom of pie shell evenly scatter the crumbled bacon and chopped peppers. In medium bowl, beat together the cheese, eggs, milk, seasonings and onion. Pour over bacon and peppers in pie shell. Bake at 325-degree oven for about 1 hour, until set — knife inserted into custard halfway between center and outer edge comes out clean — and lightly browned on top. Serve warm or at room temperature. Makes 8 servings.

cake meal; stir about half into chocolate batter.

In a small mixer bowl, beat egg whites until foamy; gradually add remaining ½ cup sugar, beating until stiff peaks form. Fold remaining almond mixture into beaten whites. Gradually add egg white mixture to chocolate batter, folding gently until well blended.

Pour batter into prepared pans. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 30 to 35 minutes or until wooden pick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool 10 minutes; cake will settle slightly. Remove from pans to wire racks. Cool completely.

Place one layer on serving plate. Heat apricot preserves; strain. Reserve fruit for another use. Spread melted preserves over top of layer. Top with remaining layer. Prepare Chocolate Cream Frosting. Spread over top and sides of torte. Garnish with whole almonds, if desired. Refrigerate until serving time. Cover, refrigerate leftover torte. Makes 12 servings.

Chocolate Cream Frosting: In a medium bowl, stir together ½ cup sugar and ¼ cup cocoa. Add 1 cup (½ pint) whipping cream and ½ teaspoon vanilla extract. Beat until stiff. Makes about 2 cups frosting.

DEAR ABBY

Mom feels rehearsal dinner should include out-of-town relatives

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My daughter, "Alice," is being married in six weeks. Four family members are coming from out of town to attend and will be staying with me. They are my parents and two of my closest sisters.

Van Buren

The groom's parents, "Mildred" and "Alfred," are hosting the rehearsal dinner. Alice advised Mildred that her grandparents and aunts would be coming to the dinner. Mildred said "No." I then offered to pay for their dinners, but she still refused. Alice and her fiance tried to reason with Mildred, explaining that they could not tell the relatives they were uninvited, but she still said "NO!"

I see no logical reason for this decision, but there has been a continuous struggle with Mildred from the start. I have read a few etiquette books, and they all say that out-of-town guests should be invited.

My husband and I are extremely upset, to say the least. My first reaction was to tell Alice that either we would bow out of the dinner, or we'd make our own reservations, invite my family and be responsible for our own expenses. Our daughter became very upset and begged us not to make a scene. She wants us to just attend and say nothing.

How should this be handled, Abby? I don't want to hurt my daughter, my future son-in-law or my family. —FRUSTRATED BRIDE'S MOTHER

DEAR BRIDE'S MOTHER: In the interest of family harmony, abide by your daughter's wishes and attend the rehearsal dinner. If you refuse, you will only increase the tension and unhappiness, which is no way for the young couple to start a marriage.

So that the grandparents and your sisters won't feel left out, consider having a dinner party for them and the happy couple on the evening before the rehearsal dinner (or a luncheon for them on the day of the rehearsal). This will give them some special time with the bride and groom, and give everyone a chance to catch up on family news.

And that evening, you might ask a close friend to invite them over (or out) since you will not be available to entertain them. They may have a better time that night than you!

DEAR ABBY: I am expecting my second child in two months, and I'd like to know why people feel free to ask a pregnant woman personal questions. The most common: "Was this baby planned?" If I say "No," they feel bad that I will be saddled with an unwanted child.

If I say "Yes," I am asked follow-up questions, such as, "How long did you have to try?" Or, "Why did you pick this time of year?" Another nosy question: "Are you planning to breast-feed?"

Abby, why would anyone care whether I'm going to breast-feed or not? How should I respond to such questions? — SICK OF STUPID QUESTIONS, NASHUA, N.H.

DEAR SICK: First, you are not obligated to respond to a jackass just because it brays. Use a one-size-fits-all noncommittal response:

1. "Why do you want to know?"
2. "That's a very personal question; if you'll forgive me for not answering, I'll forgive you for asking."

DEAR ABBY: I'm attracted to a man who "gets around." I know I deserve better than to be some man's "flavor of the week," but I can't get over him. He's attractive, intelligent, talented and popular — and I keep hoping he'll change his ways and want to be with me exclusively.

I know what I ought to do, but I don't want to do it. If these casual rendezvous continue, I'll lose my self-respect. Is there an easy way to get someone out of my heart and mind? — IMMOBILE

DEAR IMMOBILE: No! You have two choices: Allow the situation to continue until he loses the craving for your "flavor," or take control of the situation and do what you know has to be done.

Munch'ems introduce new Southwest flavors

By Linda Anderson

By now I'm sure you're familiar with what I like to call the Snack Food Wars. Seems like every food manufacturer in the book is trying to come out with some new — or at least new flavor — snack food to tempt us to spend our hard-earned money. (From what I can gather just by personal observation, the two fastest-growing segments of the food industry are low-fat items and snack foods. Go figure.)

Anderson

Keebler introduced Munch'ems a few years ago as a combination of crackers and chips. In fact, the company calls Munch'ems "cracker chips," so I guess that's exactly what they are supposed to be.

Well, they have introduced a couple of new flavors of Munch'ems designed for Southwest palates, called, cleverly enough, Munch'ems Southwestern Style. I bought a box of the chili-cheese flavor. The other "Southwestern Style" flavor is salsa.

A 7.25-ounce box of chili-cheese Munch'ems cost $2.19 and is supposed to contain seven servings (28 crackers each) at 140 calories per serving (35 calories from fat. Not too bad.)

Label advertising claims the cracker chips have "Less Fat," and "33 percent less fat than tortilla chips" (but doesn't say which chips, of course). The back of the box gets more flowery: "The Keebler Elves have baked-up a totally new Munch'ems snack with a big bold taste that's sure to make you kick up your heels!

"Southwestern Style blends real red and green chili seasonings with other authentic ingredients to bring the true taste of the southwest alive...but with 33 percent less fat than regular tortilla chips.

"So if you're looking for a fun new munch, try the snack with a flavor and crunch that's as big as Texas!" You realize, of course, that that statement comes direct to you from a company based in Elmhurst, Illinois. Remember the "New York City!" salsa commercials?

A look at the ingredients label shows that yes, the product does have chili pepper and dehydrated jalapeno listed, but both are way, way down on the list, after a bunch of ingredients with strange-sounding names.

We dug through all the advertising hype and found the cracker chips, and they turned out to be decent little snack chips. They have a pleasant chili cheese flavor and a nice, crispy crunch.

I'm not sure how accurately an Illinois-based company can produce a "Southwestern Style" snack, but these cracker chips aren't half bad. I may even buy a box again.

However, they will never make me want to "kick up my heels." Not a chance.

Computer scientists could benefit from DNA computations

N.Y. Times News Service

To the astonishment of even the most wild-eyed optimists, a promising new avenue is opening in computer science. Spurred by a paper published a few months ago describing the solution of a difficult mathematical problem using the chemical units of DNA as computing symbols, researchers are planning systems that would use the genetic material for computations that would in some cases thwart even the fastest supercomputers.

One new proposal is for a memory bank containing more than a pound of DNA molecules suspended in about 1,000 quarts of fluid, in a tank about a yard square. Such a bank would be more capacious than all the memories of all the computers ever made.

The reason is that chemical reactions occur very fast and in parallel, so that if the DNA molecules are synthesized with a chemical structure that represents numerical information, a vast amount of number-crunching is done as the reaction proceeds.

Another project is a computation that would involve manipulating DNA molecules. It would take four months to complete and would yield, at its end, the answer to a problem that with a conventional computer would require more operations than all those ever performed on all the computers ever built.

Bubbling with excitement at the new concept, computer scientists have sketched out ways in which DNA computing systems might in principle break the government's data encryption standard system and attack the notorious challenge known as the satisfiability problem.

Researchers explain that they now realize that in DNA nature has created an extraordinary, special purpose computing system. DNA and the genetic machinery that processes it store and retrieve a prodigious amount of information — all that is needed to design and maintain every kind of living organism. Scientists think they can make DNA work for them by using the same genetic machinery that generates living organisms to solve mathematical problems.

The nascent field of DNA computing got started only five months ago with an article in Science by a leading computer theorist, Dr. Leonard Adleman of the University of Southern California in Los Angeles.

Adleman explained how a problem could be set up by synthesizing DNA molecules with a particular sequence, and solved by letting the DNA molecules react in a test tube, producing a molecule whose sequence is the answer. In his paper he recounted how he had put his theory into practice by solving a standard problem with a DNA reaction system.

Adleman dubbed his DNA computer the TT-100, for test tube filled with 100 microliters, or about one-fiftieth of a teaspoon of fluid, which is all it took for the reactions to occur.

One new proposal is for a memory bank containing more than a pound of DNA molecules suspended in about 1,000 quarts of fluid, in a tank about a yard square. Such a bank would be more capacious than all the memories of all the computers ever made.

Some scientists were intrigued but skeptical, wondering if Adleman had just happened to find the one problem amenable to such an approach. But others at once began trying to improve on the idea, proposing ways to use DNA to solve even harder problems and suggesting how to design a sort of universal DNA computer. Although the field of biological computing is still in its infancy, computer scientists are likening today's first wobbly steps to the early development of electronic computers.

"The floodgates have started to open," said Dr. Richard Lipton, a theoretical computer scientist at Princeton University. "I have never seen a field move so fast."

Dr. Ronald L. Graham, a mathematician at AT&T Bell Laboratories in Murray Hill, N.J., said that he feels like "a door opened to a whole new toy shop."

Dr. Eric Baum of the NEC Research Institute in Princeton, N.J., a research arm of the NEC Corp. of Japan, said, "It's an industry at this point." Although, he added, some investigators "will have cautions, naming this obstacle or that obstacle," the idea of DNA computers that solve some practical problems better than conventional computers "is a real possibility."

Last week about 200 enthusiastic researchers, mostly computer scientists but also physicists, chemists and molecular biologists, jammed into a room at Princeton University for a hastily called meeting on DNA computers that had been advertised on the Internet.

The computer scientists were racing to plunge into the strange new world of molecular biology, passing around test tubes and a catalogue from a biochemical supply company.

So eager was the crowd that when one computer expert, Dr. Warren D. Smith of the NEC Research Institute, presented a more pessimistic view of the possibilities of DNA computing, he found himself in a distinct minority.

"It's sort of dangerous in science to get too enthusiastic and overhype things at the beginning," Smith warned. "This is the beginning of this field and it's probably too early to tell what's going to happen."

A DNA computing system would bear no resemblance to a conventional computer, raising the question of what a computer is. "To some, a computer is a physical device in the real world," Adleman said. But, he added, DNA computers have made him think that instead, "being a computer is something that we externally impose on an object." That means that DNA might not be the only new type of computer. "There might be a lot of computers out there, and I suspect there are," he said.

Conventional computers represent information in terms of 0's and 1's, physically expressed in terms of the flow of electrons through logical circuits. Builders of DNA computers represent information in terms of the chemical units of DNA.

Calculating with an ordinary computer is done with a program that instructs electrons to travel on particular paths; with a DNA computer, calculation requires synthesizing particular sequences of DNA and letting them react in a test tube. In a scheme devised by Lipton, the logical command "and" is performed by separating DNA strands according to their sequences, and the command "or" is done by pouring together DNA solutions containing specific sequences.

The advantages of DNA computers would be that they are a billion times as energy efficient as conventional computers. And they use just a trillionth of the space to store information.

No one expects DNA computers to replace laptops or other compturs based on silicon. Instead, researches said, the two types of computers could complement each other, perhaps in the form of hybrid machines.

But, most important, computer scientists describe DNA computers as "massively parallel," meaning that with billions or trillions of DNA molecules undergoing the chemical reactions, it would be possible to do more operations at once than all the computers in the world working together could ever accomplish. For example, a DNA computer could easily have 10 to the 20th power DNA molecules (that number is 1 followed by 20 zeros) in a tiny test tube doing calculations simultaneously. A conventional computer would have no more than a few hundred to perhaps a thousand independent processors.

No one expects DNA computers to replace laptops or other computers based on silicon. Instead, researchers said, the two types of computers could complement each other, perhaps in the form of hybrid machines. Some memory, for example, might be stored in DNA, or certain huge calculations might be done in the laboratory with DNA and the results fed into a conventional computer for further analysis.

One of the simplest ways to use DNA might be as a memory system, said Baum. "You can store vast quantities of information in a test tube," he said. The information could be encoded into DNA sequences and the DNA could be stored. To retrieve data, it would only be necessary to search for a small part of it — a key word, for example — by adding a DNA strand designed so that its sequence sticks to the key word wherever it appears on the DNA.

A DNA memory could hold more words than all the computer memories ever made, Baum said. For example, with DNA, some 10 to the 14th power words could fit easily in a test tube and, Baum added, "you might get 10 to the 20th power words in 1,000 liters," or about 1,057 quarts. In contrast, he said, the human brain is thought to store about one million words, meaning that DNA in the bottom of a test tube could store at least a million times as much information as the brain and a DNA memory in a 1,000-liter container would have 10 to the 14th power times the capacity of the brain.

Searching a DNA computer memory would be slow, however, Baum said, taking about 17 minutes to nearly three hours, to find a sequence, so it would be most useful when speed is not of the essence.

Still, DNA computers might solve certain kinds of problems faster than the fastest supercomputer. One is the satisfiability problem, a notoriously difficult computer science problem that involves lengthy logical equations. Lipton noted that a DNA computer should be able to solve a satisfiability problem with 70 variables and 1,000 and-or connections. And that, Adleman said, "is hugely beyond what we would even consider doing on a supercomputer." It would require 10 to the 70th power steps, he added, which "is more than all the operations ever computed on man-made devices in history."

Yet such a huge satisfiability problem could be solved in 11 days with about 425 grams, or about a pound, of DNA, Adleman said. A human body contains about 300 grams of DNA.

A possible approach to such a problem, as sketched out by Lipton, would be to assign various DNA sequences to represent 0's and 1's at the various positions of a 70-digit binary number.
