Judge backs funds law

School-financing plan satisfies McCown

■ Court presumes constitutionality; retains jurisdiction over issue.

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — The Texas legislature breathed a collective sigh of relief on Monday when the latest law intended to change the state's system of school financing finally satisfied a judge who had threatened to halt state aid payments to public schools.

The judge, Scott McCown, of State District Court, said on Monday that he presumes that the new law, which would take some property tax revenue from wealthy school districts and give it to poorer ones, is constitutional. But he said the court would retain jurisdiction over the issue and would consider challenges to its constitutionality for several years.

The legislation, which was passed on Thursday, was signed by Gov. Ann W. Richards Monday morning. Twenty minutes later, the law was presented to

Wealthy district fears jobs loss

DENVER CITY (AP) — Residents of this oil rich West Texas city fear the state's latest public school finance proposal will cause the city to lose jobs and double taxes simply to maintain its current quality of education.

Gov. Ann Richards on Monday signed into law a school finance bill that shifts hundreds of millions of dollars in local property tax revenue from wealthier to poorer school districts.

"For the first time, this community is looking at some real dangers with the equalized funding," said city manager Ray Hohstadt. "The school sys-

Europeans to lift economic blocks against S. Africa

■ Monday's action marks a new step toward South Africa's reincorporation into world's economy.

N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — Ignoring appeals from the African National Congress, the 12-nation European Community agreed on Monday to lift its remaining economic sanctions against South Africa in response to the Pretoria government's continuing moves to dismantle apartheid.

Meeting in Luxembourg, community foreign ministers said the move would result in ending a five-year-old ban on imports of gold coins, iron and steel from South Africa. Last December, the ministers revoked a prohibition against new investments in South Africa.

Although the nations of the community are still bound by the U.N. embargo on arms sales to South Africa, Monday's action marks a new step toward South Africa's reincorporation into the world economy. In 1985, the year before European sanctions were adopted, South Africa exported some $700 million worth of gold coins, iron, and steel to community countries.

In Washington, a State Department official said the South African government must still fulfill two conditions — freeing all political prisoners and repealing laws that classify people by race — before American

Saudis illegally using oil-cleanup method, Midland man says

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

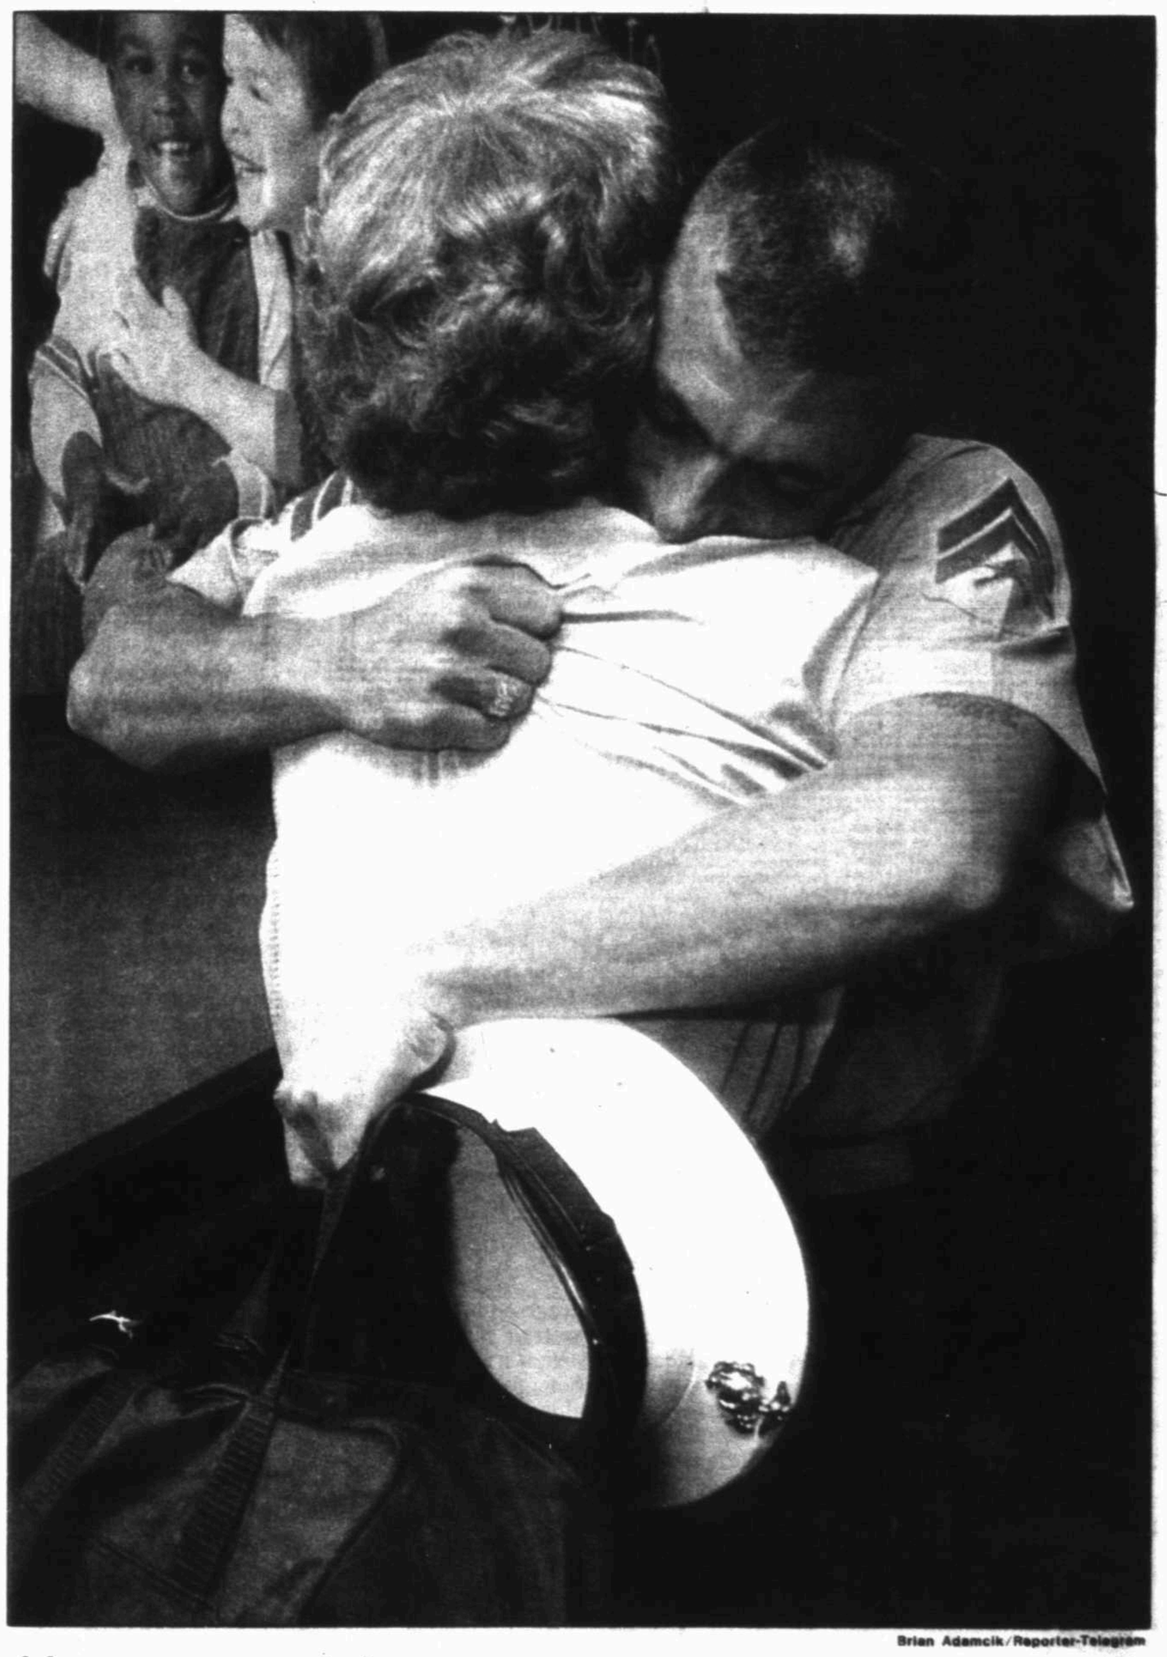

Midland businessman Clyde Veltmann charged Monday that the Saudi Arabian government and three of its largest contractors are using his proprietary design to clean up the massive Persian Gulf oil spill without compensating him.

Veltmann's accusation follows one made Sunday by Houston businessman Doug Poole, who claims that crews fighting oil-well fires in Kuwait are using his patented techniques illegally.

In his press conference, Veltmann said the Saudi Arabian Meteorological and Environmental Protection Agency (MEPA), Arabian American Oil Co. (ARAMCO), Adil Al-Misehal Trade Establishment (AMTE Inc.) and Crowley Maritime have been using his shallow-draft barge skimming system to clean up the oil spill.

He said he intends to seek restitution and will

Small cattle herd drives prices up at meat counter

N.Y. Times News Service

With barbecue season around the corner, a near 30-year low in the nation's cattle herd has resulted in the highest prices ever for steak, hamburger and other cuts of beef.

The government expects the herd to be larger by the end of the summer, but there is a puzzling discrepancy between the growing number of cattle in feedlots and the number actually slaughtered.

And until more cattle are slaughtered, beef prices are likely to stay high.

The beef shortage is the aftermath of economic problems that beset farmers in the mid-1980s. Thousands of financially strapped ranchers sold their cattle herds to pay off bank loans. A severe drought followed, making it too expensive for many remaining farmers to buy feed to expand their herds.

As a result, the number of cattle in the United States — in pastures and feedlots — has been hovering at slightly below 100 million head for the last several years, com-

Co-worker files charges of burglary against Hale

By David Morris
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital employee has filed charges against Bryan Allen Hale for stealing documents from her home, records show.

Hale, arrested last week in Midland on federal child pornography charges, was released on bond in Midland on Monday, only to be arrested and taken to Odessa for arraignment on the burglary charge, officials said.

He was free on $50,000 bond early today, Ector County Jail officials confirmed.

The burglary charge stems from a complaint that a Glenwood employee filed Friday with the Odessa Police Department, OPD spokesman Cpl. John McAhon said.

Marilee Anne Kyler, Glenwood's community-relations manager, told investigators that someone stole papers from her house in the 4600 block of Somerset Lane. The papers disappeared while Ms. Kyler was out of town between March 29 and April 1, according to an affidavit on file at the Ector County Courthouse.

The papers were later found among documents that U.S. Customs agents seized April 8 while executing a search warrant at Hale's Glenwood office, according to the affidavit.

The affidavit states that Hale had access to

Bush's tax tab

WASHINGTON — Losses suffered by President Bush's blind trust, apparently reflecting the recession, helped nudge the first family's income down to $452,732 in 1990 from $456,780 the year before, returns released by the White House showed Monday. As a result, their tax bill also declined slightly — $99,241 to the Internal Revenue Service from the $101,382 they paid on 1989 income. Although well over half the first family's income still comes from Bush's blind trust, it also included the president's $200,000 salary and $1,000 that Barbara Bush made for an article she sold to Reader's Digest last fall.

Special session

AUSTIN — It would be "foolish" to say a tax increase will not be needed to fund the state budget, which likely will be written in a special session around July, House Speaker Gib Lewis said Monday. The state faces an estimated $4.6 billion budget shortfall to maintain services over the next two years. "To say that we do not need a tax bill I think would be foolish," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth. Lewis has maintained that the state budget should be written this regular session, which ends May 27. But after meeting Monday with Gov. Ann Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, Lewis said he was willing to wait until comprehensive audits of state agency spending are completed and a special committee on taxes makes recommendations July 1.

Hang Saddam?

WASHINGTON — Barbara Bush said Monday she hopes Saddam Hussein will be hanged for war crimes against Kuwait and his own people. "He certainly is right up there with the people they tried . . . "I'd like to see him hanged if he were found guilty," by a war crimes tribunal, she said, adding that "We're talking about thousands and thousands" who were killed and tortured. She called the plight of the Kurdish refugees "heart-breaking," but defended President Bush's response to the crisis.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Via Associated Press GraphicsNet

Skies to be mostly sunny

Today forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high near 90 and south to southwest winds 15 to 20 mph and gusty, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be mostly fair with a low in the mid-50s.

Wednesday is expected to be partly cloudy with a high in the upper 80s.

After an overnight low of 45, Monday's high was 85 compared with the record high of 95 set in 1990. The record low for today's date was 34 set in 1947.

STATE

High pressure over the Lone Star State on Monday produced mild weather and clear skies across portions of the state.

In North Texas, temperatures warmed into the 60s and 70s under 5 to 10 mph southerly breezes. A light east breeze brushed the east, while south breezes prevailed over the central part with southwest breezes through the west.

Fair weather also was reported in South Texas, only days after strong thunderstorms rolled through the state and caused some flooding. Winds were generally easterly as surface high pressure began to move eastward out of the state.

Sunny skies prevailed across all of West Texas Monday morning. Low temperatures were in the 30s and 40s in most areas with some highs in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Rain fell Monday over much of the East and on parts of the Northwest, changing to snow over the northern Plains.

At midday, rain and occasional showers extended over much of New York state, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, western Virginia, West Virginia, western and central North Carolina, eastern Ohio, the Florida Panhandle and southeastern Florida.

In the Northwest, rain fell over northern California, northern Oregon, south-central Washington state and southeastern Idaho.

Rain over eastern Montana and south-central North Dakota became snow over southwestern North Dakota and central Minnesota. Snow reached over central Wyoming.

Elsewhere, rain and occasional thunderstorms extended over much of Michigan.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

LAW: Legislature breathes collective sigh of relief

(From 1A)

McCown.

The judge has twice found the current Texas school finance system unconstitutional because it allows a school district's property wealth to determine the quality of a child's education. He had given the legislature until Monday to submit a new plan or face the possibility of an injunction on aid payments and the imposition of the court's own school finance plan.

The new law divides the state into 188 education regions, roughly along county lines, and mandates that wealthy districts share some of their revenue with poor ones within each region.

Since October 1989, when the Texas Supreme Court upheld McCown's initial decision that the state's system of financing public schools was unconstitutional and ordered the state to alter it, the legislature has struggled through four special sessions before passing the legislation accepted by the court on Monday.

While the judge's decision marks a major step in the state's attempt to equalize school financing, the battle may be far from over.

Al Kaufman, a lawyer who represents the poorer school districts whose original lawsuit in 1968 led to the new law, said the financing plan was more equitable than the current system but still allowed some broad inequities.

Kaufman said he told McCown at the hearing on Monday that his group, the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, wants to study the plan further before agreeing that it is constitutional.

Similarly, Robert Luna, a lawyer representing 25 relatively prosperous school districts that sided with the state in the lawsuit, said it was too early to tell whether his clients would sue to block the law.

"Robin Hood has had his greatest day," Luna said. "This bill does a great deal of damage to our flagship schools. It is an example of 'dumbing down,' which we had hoped to avoid."

FEARS: Law might double Denver City's taxes

tem is probably the largest single employer.

"You're looking at hurting this district by about 30 or 40 percent in lost revenues," he said. "When that happens, a lot of people that work with the school system are liable to lose their jobs."

The new law sets a minimum tax rate and shifts local property tax revenue from wealthier to poorer school districts within new education regions drawn largely along county lines.

School districts do not have to share revenue generated over the minimum rate, which starts at 72 cents per $100 property valuation and rises to $1 in four years.

Denver City's current tax rate is 54 cents per $100 valuation. The oil town, about 80 miles southwest of Lubbock near the New Mexico border, is home to 5,200 residents.

School superintendent Howard Pollard said the jump in property taxes from 54 to 72 cents per $100 valuation will hurt. But he added that Denver City would likely have to raise taxes even higher to maintain its quality of education.

"We're not any different than a lot of places. The school is the main attraction of the town and the area," Pollard said. "If you want to convince someone to come to Denver City, where would you take them? The programs and the academics of the school ... you take that away, what do you have?"

School activities such as band concerts and athletic and academic competitions also attract people from outside Denver City who spend money in local stores, Hohstadt said.

"The school system is the nearest thing to a tourist attraction that we have," he said. "You're looking at this equalized funding (law) to tear all that up. It will cost jobs here. The trickle down effect will hurt."

The finance law will likely boost mineral taxes for Shell Western Exploration and Production Inc. — the largest oil company in the area — from $10 million to about $30 million a year, said David Bruton, a city council member.

If Denver City is forced to share its mineral wealth with other school districts, the school system's ability to pay higher-than-usual starting salaries to attract teachers may be damaged, Bruton said.

METHOD: Veltmann intends to seek restitution

choose a law firm later this week.

Although he seeks compensation "in the seven-figure range," the president of Veltmann Corp. said "We're not asking for anything exorbitant."

Even if no money results from the suit, "I want to bring out to the public that these people will take you to the cleaners," Veltmann said.

He said he tried to settle with the companies involved last week, but got no response. "We have no intention of going away quietly," he said.

"Our design and technology are being used to clean up one of the world's biggest and most potentially damaging oil spills — and we're going to get paid."

Veltmann recently returned from Saudi Arabia, where he spent two months observing the cleanup at the invitation of the government. He said his barge system is cleaning more than 300,000 gallons of oil and water a day.

"It's working like a charm. Still, despite repeated promises to put the Veltmann Corp. under contract, we haven't received a penny, and that's wrong," Veltman said.

He said the Saudi government gave him a letter of appreciation before he left. He still is waiting for a check to cover his travel expenses from his sponsor, AMTE Inc., to clear the bank, he added.

Veltmann acknowledged that the technology he said was taken from him cannot be patented.

He adapted existing technology and, with a friend, designed the scupper head used on the barge to skim the oil and contaminated sea water through booms in a V-shaped pattern behind the barge.

However, he insisted that the companies involved in the cleanup could not circumvent his ownership of the technology.

While in Saudi Arabia, Veltmann said he made a total disclosure of the technology, blueprints and detailed operating procedures at the request of MEPA, Aramco, AMTE, Crowley and the U.S. Coast Guard with the understanding that he would be awarded a contract.

"I guess I was a little gullible," he admitted. "But when you think you're protected by the royal family, and you know the technology is right and your politics are right... I thought I was fairly well protected."

Veltmann described the massive Persian Gulf oil spill as horrible.

"And officials have moved entirely too slow," he said. "If they had acted faster, there wouldn't have been near the damage to the tidal flats that there is. You just can't believe what that spill did."

Veltmann Corp. is a Midland-based environmental company involved in toxic and hazardous waste cleanup, laboratory testing, engineering, and project design and management.

MEAT: Many grocers are promoting chicken

pared with more than 110 million in 1980 and 132 million in 1976.

Faced with high meat prices, many grocers say they are promoting chicken breasts, which average $2.04 a pound compared with $5.48 a pound for a T-bone steak, and that more and more shoppers are choosing chicken. If beef prices climb higher, grocers say, they expect shoppers will buy less beef.

Grocers have been trying to hold down the price of beef to avoid driving away customers. "Retailers have eaten some of the price increases," one supplier said. Prices have gone so high that many retailers have stopped advertising beef.

But Dennis Smith, chief meat buyer for Super Valu Stores Inc., a large food distributor and retailer based in Minneapolis, said grocers would be unwilling to continue to accept smaller profits at their meat counters if the price of cattle on the cash market continued to rise.

Such a move would drive consumers into the waiting arms of chicken producers.

For nearly a year, Agriculture Department surveys have shown that an increasing number of cattle are fattening up in feedlots, the last stop before slaughter. But despite a 10 percent increase in the number of cattle in feedlots from a year earlier, the size of the slaughter has not grown.

That has caused a dispute about the accuracy of the government's monthly feedlot cattle count and a great deal of uncertainty over how much longer prices will stay high.

"They are out there," insists Robert Cole, head of the Agriculture Department unit responsible for counting the inventory. He said time would eventually prove the government's counts correct.

Cole said the cattle were bound to appear at slaughterhouses in several months. He said the nub of the problem was not that the government's cattle count was wrong but that cattle were arriving at feedlots sooner than they used to and were weighing less. That means they remain on feedlots longer to gain the required weight for butchering.

But Cole acknowledges the number of cattle being slaughtered this month is still less than he expected. "We have not seen that large surge yet," he said.

Faced with what several analysts are calling "the phantom herd" problem, the nation's biggest slaughterhouses, which have cut back production and hours for their employees because cattle are scarce, say they are planning output on a week-to-week basis.

"Nobody knows what is going to happen," said Gene Meakins, a spokesman for Monfort Inc., which is based in Greeley, Colo., and is the meat-packing subsidiary of Conagra Inc. of Omaha. "We can't get all the cattle we need," Meakins said. "People in the company say they cannot remember when it has been this difficult to get cattle."

The "missing cattle" mystery stems from the fact that for nearly a year the government has reported that the cattle herd is gradually building back from the ravages of the drought three years ago, and that more and more cattle are awaiting slaughter.

The recovery is gradual since it takes nearly two years to breed and fatten a calf and move it through the chutes to slaughterhouses. As the steers get closer to the kill, the government's counts are important to the meat processers who use them to set production and shipping schedules for fresh beef.

But the latest projections for the slaughter have been off by up to 240,000 cattle, or 5 percent, of the five million cattle the government projects for slaughter each quarter.

Cattle ranchers complain the government count is off because it relies on outdated methods. "Counting cattle is one of those things that most people in Washington don't think is very significant," said Richard Farr, of Farr Feeders, a feedlot with 30,000 head of cattle in Greeley, Colo.

For one thing, Farr said, the government is factoring in cattle from producers that have been out of business for years. Other ranchers and livestock analysts say some cattle are being counted twice. Double counting occurs, they say, when cattle occasionally are moved from feedlot to pasture and back to a feedlot.

Cole said the government numbers and methods are accurate. He said the survey takes steps to avoid double counts by subtracting cattle if they are taken from a feedlot.

But he acknowledged that it was possible that the government might occasionally include in its estimates cattle produced from farmers who have left the business. "We try everything to avoid it, but it is possible," he said.

When agents are unable to find ranchers counted in the past, they are allowed to assign a herd size to the rancher based on the size of other herds in the region, Cole said. He said that estimate amounted to a fraction of the total count.

Each month, the agency counts cattle in the seven top cattle-producing states.

LIFT: Move ends ban

sanctions can be lifted under the measure by which Congress applied them.

Washington's sanctions are wider than the European Community's. They included a ban on the export to South Africa of crude oil, petroleum products, munitions, and computers and computer services to security services. And the United States continues to ban new investment in South Africa.

The European Community's decision on Monday was signaled last February when community officials told Pretoria that remaining sanctions would be lifted as soon as South Africa proposed legislation to repeal important apartheid laws. The South African Parliament is expected to approve this legislation in July.

Last week, hoever, the secretary general of the African National Congress, Alfred Nzo, urged the European Community to maintain its sanctions, arguing that the apartheid system was still in place. Many members of the European Parliament also spoke out against Monday's community move.

But the foreign ministers were reportedly unanimous on Monday in supporting the lifting of sanctions and in denying the European Parliament an opportunity to debate the issue. Community officials said the ministers argued that they had exclusive authority to decide about the sanctions.

At the meeting on Monday in Luxembourg, which holds the rotating presidency of the community, foreign ministers also agreed to press for a war crimes trial for President Saddam Hussein of Iraq, accusing him of aggression against Kuwait, using chemical weapons against civilians, and condoning genocide against the Kurds.

European officials said that, after Germany's foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, made the proposal, it was agreed that Luxembourg's foreign minister, Jacques Poos, would raise the issue with the U.N. secretary general, Javier Perez de Cuellar, when they meet on Tuesday.

The officials said that Genscher had not clarified in what court and under what international conventions Saddam should be tried, but they recalled that, in the months leading up to the gulf war, the community repeatedly warned the Iraqi leader that he would be charged with war crimes.

Eager to play a diplomatic role in the wake of the gulf war, community foreign ministers are also to meet U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III in Luxembourg on Wednesday to coordinate their policies towards the Middle East in general and for the Kurdish refugee crisis in particular.

Much of Monday's meeting in Luxembourg, though, was given over to discussion of the community's broader moves towards closer integration, above all, plans to draw up common foreign and security policies that would enable it to play a more active role in future crises than it did in the gulf war.

CHARGES: Hale has been suspended without pay

(From 1A)

Ms. Hale's house keys, which she had left in her Glenwood office, while she was out of town.

McAhon said federal investigators learned that the documents were missing from Ms. Kyler's house while obtaining a statement from her last week.

Ms. Kyler filed the burglary complaint against Hale on Friday after investigators told her the papers had been found in Hale's office, McAhon said. However, she told investigators that she suspected Hale of the burglary when she noticed the papers were missing.

The documents were described in the affidavit as "two notes, a memo card with phone number, a florist card and note written by Bryan Allen Hale to her."

"The two notes were made by herself (Ms. Kyler) in regard to the behavior of her employer, Bryan Allen Hale. . . ," the affidavit goes on to say. "The note written by Hale was left for her at work, and she had taken it home."

The affidavit does not elaborate on the documents' contents. Ms. Kyler, reached at her home Monday, declined to comment on the papers.

If convicted, Hale faces up to life in prison for burglary of a habitation, a first-degree felony.

Meanwhile, he could receive up to 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine if convicted on the child pornography charges.

After being fitted with an electronic monitoring device — ordered as a condition of his release from federal custody — Hale posted a $25,000 bond in Midland Monday in connection with the pornography charge.

Agents arrested Hale last Monday after finding a videotape entitled "Educating Valerie" in his office during the same search that uncovered the supposedly stolen documents.

He was indicted Thursday for receiving and possessing the tape, which reportedly depicts a 10-year-old girl engaging in sexual activity with her father.

Federal prosecutors argued that Hale should not be released on bond because he represents a danger to the community and a flight risk. On Monday, they pointed to the burglary charges as further evidence of Hale's unsuitability for release.

Assistant U.S. Attorney William W. Torrey filed a motion Monday in U.S. District Court seeking to reopen Hale's detention hearing. The original hearing ended Friday with U.S. Magistrate Robert R. Sykes setting Hale's $25,000 bond.

The burglary charge "would have a material bearing on the issue whether or not there are conditions of release that will reasonably assure the appearance of (Hale) as required and the safety of any other person in the community," the motion states.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery, meanwhile, filed a motion Monday requesting that Hale be psychologically evaluated to determine his competency to stand trial.

A hearing on the motions is tentatively scheduled for Friday afternoon before Judge Sykes.

Hale, who was named administrator at Glenwood in August 1990, was suspended without pay last week following his arrest.

The arrest followed a three-month undercover investigation in which a person believed to be Hale, using the pseudonym "Ready Man," purchased the tape from Florida Customs agents via a computerized bulletin-board system.

Bentsen, Bush meet to talk about U.S.-Mexico free trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said he warned President Bush Monday that support for a free trade agreement with Mexico may hinge on the administration's plans to address fears about an exodus of jobs south of the Rio Grande and pollution on the border.

Bentsen, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, has asked Bush to respond by May 1 to questions about the disparity in wages and environmental regulations between the United States and Mexico.

"I emphasized to him that there are some senators that are still waiting to make up their minds, waiting to see what those answers would be," Bentsen, D-Texas, told reporters in his office following a private lunch with the president.

Bush's deadline to respond to Bentsen's concerns comes as Congress must decide whether to give the administration another two years to negotiate trade agreements that could not be later amended.

Without that so-called fast-track negotiating authority, Bush contends there will be no free-trade agreement because Mexico would not agree to an accord that could later be changed by Congress.

Congress can deny the fast-track with either a vote by the House or Senate by June 1. Bush and Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari have been lobbying furiously for the fast-track extension over the past week amid opposition from textiles, some fruit and vegetable growers, environmentalists and organized labor.

In a speech Monday to the Associated General Contractors, Bush again pushed for the fast-track extension, which would also be used to complete international trade talks under the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and for his Enterprise of the Americas Initiative.

Without fast-track, the president warned, "We lose trade. We lose jobs. And we jeopardize economic growth. And we unleash horrifying new waves of protectionism."

Opponents, however, say a free trade agreement with Mexico would cause massive job losses in the United States, as U.S. companies relocate south of the Rio Grande to take advantage of cheaper wages and lax enforcement of environmental regulations.

Environmentalists fear the result of those relocations would be an increase in pollution along the border and in Mexico, as U.S. companies skirt the costs of complying with environmental regulations.

But Bush said the United States would be helping Mexico deal with its pollution problems with the prosperity that could come from a free trade agreement.

"Only through economic growth will Mexico obtain the resources to address its tremendous environmental needs," Bush said. "They need new water systems for their border cities; they need air pollution control equipment for Mexico City."

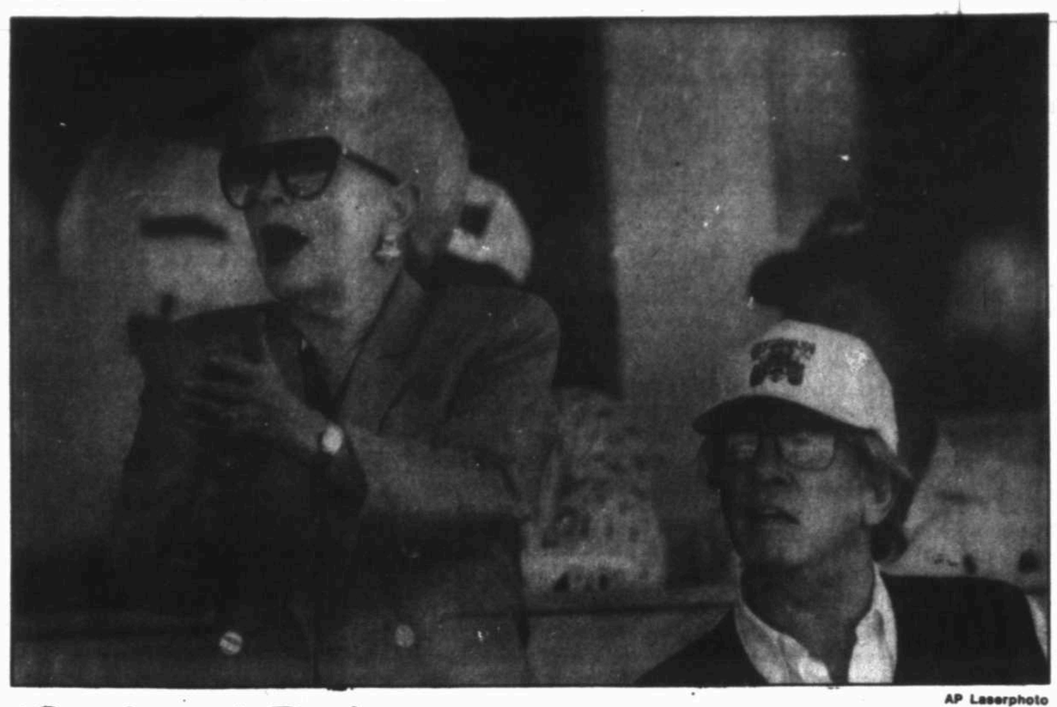

Bush said Salinas has promised the economic growth of a free trade agreement would be "clean growth" and that dirty industries would not be welcome.

Bentsen, meanwhile, warned that the environmental questions will not be addressed unless there are trade negotiations. Once there are talks, though, Bentsen said concerns such as pollution of the Rio Grande must be included.

"We can look at Nuevo Laredo, with 25 million gallons of raw sewage being dumped into that Rio Grande. We can look at that open ditch coming down from Juarez with raw sewage in it. Those are things we have to address," Bentsen said. "But we see a president of Mexico that has begun to take some affirmative steps in really trying to clean up that environment."

Bush also said the agreement would help Mexican workers, and pointed to an increase in Mexican wages, which he said has had no tangible impact on U.S. pay scales.

"And that being true, someone should then ask the opponents of fast track why they oppose prosperity in Mexico," Bush said.

Gov. Ann Richards and Austin writer Bud Shrake cheer on the winner of Sunday's Graham Farms Futurity Final at Manor Downs near Austin. The governor was on hand to present a check of $115,050 to the owner of Magic Dozen, the winner of the race by two lengths.

State Chamber vows to fight 'lawsuit abuse'

Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — The Texas Chamber of Commerce, which is supporting legislation to limit businesses' liability for damages suffered by consumers, also plans to launch a statewide media campaign against what it calls "lawsuit abuse."

Chamber President Larry Milner says that the organization's directors had approved a campaign similar to one already under way in South Texas that uses billboards and a television spot to attack lawsuits brought against businesses.

Milner said the chamber wants to target large damage awards and what it considers "frivolous" lawsuits.

"We want everyone to understand that when there's lawsuit abuse the price of that ends up in higher costs of products or lost jobs," he said.

Tommy Jacks, president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, called the chamber's tactics "shameful."

"Their campaign is based on falsehoods and misinformation," he said. "They're deceiving the public. It's unfortunate they've chosen to take this public debate to the gutter."

Jacks said trial lawyers, who represent the plaintiffs for a share of the damages in lawsuits against businesses, insurance companies and other defendants, will wait to see how the statewide business group conducts its campaign before deciding whether or how to respond.

"If it's anything like the campaign in the Valley, I don't suppose we can stand idly by," he said.

The $20,000-a-month advertising campaign by the Rio Grande Valley Chamber of Commerce has contended that "lawsuit abuse" costs jobs.

Milner wouldn't say how much money the Texas chamber will try to raise for its "Texans Against Lawsuit Abuse" campaign but said the organization's directors had approved the hiring of Read-Poland Associates, an Austin-based public relations firm, to handle the advertising and public relations.

Milner said the chamber wasn't trying to discourage all lawsuits.

He said the public's response to the Valley campaign "has been very favorable."

Jacks said he didn't think the business community as a whole would support the chamber's effort. "There is a small segment of the business lobby who thinks you win by misinformation and hard ball," he said.

■ Panel: Base-closing list not final

WASHINGTON — Members of a presidential commission appointed to reduce the number and size of military installations said they will treat the Pentagon's recommendations for closing 31 major bases as a good blueprint for their deliberations but not as the final word on which installations will close.

On Monday, in its first formal day of business, the eight-member Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission heard Defense Secretary Dick Cheney defend his proposals, which could result in thousands of military and civilian layoffs at installations in 20 states.

Cheney's recommendations, made public Friday, stirred immediate protests from lawmakers especially those from the 20 states affected. These members of Congress expressed hope that the commission, which must review the Pentagon decision, would keep some of the bases open.

■ Official proposes coal violation fines

WASHINGTON — Charging coal mining companies with a "flagrant disregard of the law," Labor Secretary Lynn Martin said she would soon announce new procedures to protect miners from black lung disease and would propose higher fines for several companies accused of particularly serious health violations.

In congressional testimony on $7 million in fines she has proposed against 500 companies for health violations, Mrs. Martin tacitly stated Monday that mining companies cannot be trusted to police themselves. She said she had barred 60 company supervisors from managing the air-testing procedures at mines.

She also said she had raised to $10,000, from $1,000, her proposed fines against five companies for violations she called egregious. At mines belonging to those companies — USX Corp., Bethlehem Steel Corp., E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., General Dynamics Corp. and CLI International Enterprises — she said miners having evidence of black lung had been transferred to safer areas, as regulations require.

But she said the companies had tampered with devices used to test air at the miners' new posts, raising the possibility that the air there was also excessively dust-laden.

PALM BEACH, Fla. — A supermarket tabloid published a photo and the name of the victim in the alleged assault at the Kennedy estate Monday despite a Florida law prohibiting the disclosure of rape victims' identities.

Also Monday, the results of forensics tests were turned over to police, who said they have identified new witnesses.

The Globe, headquartered in nearby Boca Raton, printed a photo of the woman who says she was sexually attacked at the Kennedy estate, along with a detailed story about her background.

"Everyone in the world knows the victim's identity, her name and photo had been published in newspapers and magazines worldwide," said Wendy Henry, editor-in-chief of the Globe.

"The Globe feels in matters of extraordinary public interest, our readers should also have access to all the facts. We must also point out there is no shame in being the victim of a mugger in the alley."

■ Kuwaiti joins supporters of soldier's family

NORTH FORT MYERS, Fla. — Kuwait's ambassador to the United States has offered financial support to a woman fighting eviction with her young children from an adults-only mobile home park while her husband is in the Middle East.

Melody Galka got a weekend telephone call from a staff member at the Kuwaiti embassy in Washington with the offer from Ambassador Saud Nasir al-Sabah. She said she was told the diplomat wanted to help her because her husband, Army Sgt. David Galka, is overseas helping the Kuwaiti people.

Mrs. Galka said Sunday she received the call after the ambassador saw a Cable News Network report Saturday about her fight to stay with her parents at the Fountain View RV Park, an adults-only community.

"He's very distraught," Mrs. Galka said of the ambassador.

The News-Press of Fort Myers newspaper said it confirmed the call's authenticity with the Kuwaiti Embassy. The embassy was closed Monday.

High court to hear segregation case

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Supreme Court agreed Monday to decide whether Mississippi has done enough to exorcise the ghosts of sanctioned racial segregation that still linger in its public colleges.

Nearly 30 years after federal troops enforced a court order to admit a black student named James Meredith to Ole Miss, "hardly a dent has been made in Mississippi's entrenched racial caste system in higher education," charged the NAACP Legal Defense Fund in urging the justices to take the case.

"We're glad they accepted it," said Phyllis McClure, a spokeswoman for the civil rights group. The Supreme Court decision, expected in 1992, could have implications for other states, she said.

The case could decide whether a state must do more than just provide free choice to current college students. It could set guidelines on how a Southern state should offset inequities stemming from earlier establishment of racially separate colleges and universities.

The Supreme Court will consider whether the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals was right in ruling last September that Mississippi had met its obligations by ending officially sanctioned segregation, even though a separation of the races still exists at the state's historically white and black colleges.

"The lower court found Mississippi has adopted race-neutral policies for operating its colleges and all students have real freedom of choice to attend the college or university they wish," argued Mike Moore, the state's attorney general, in a brief to the Supreme Court.

However, court documents showed that 99 percent of the state's white college students were enrolled in historically white institutions during the 1985-86 school year. Meanwhile, 71 percent of the state's black college students were enrolled in historically black schools.

That year, Mississippi spent an average of $8,516 for each student enrolled at historically white schools and $6,038 for each student at the historically black colleges.

The state argued that the current role of the individual colleges, not their racial origins, determined the spending per student. All schools are now open to students of all races, the state said.

The appeals court ruled that Mississippi has eliminated race as a factor in admission to its institutions of higher learning and was not perpetuating segregation.

This decision was wrong, said Ms. McClure.

In its brief, the NAACP said the lower court ruling meant "Mississippi is not required to take affirmative measures to correct its wrong; black citizens are not entitled to an effective remedy."

The case began when some black parents in Mississippi sued the state in 1975. Their cause was later joined by the U.S. Justice Department.

The Bush administration asked the Supreme Court to clear up the "considerable confusion over the proper legal standard" with which to measure a state's obligation to abolish a formerly segregated system of higher education.

The separation of black and white students in public schools was ruled unconstitutional in 1954 by the Supreme Court's ruling in Brown v. Topeka Board of Education. The end of official segregation in Mississippi's colleges came in 1962 when Meredith enrolled at the University of Mississippi.

Bush urges action to avoid nationwide rail strike

WASHINGTON (NYT) — President Bush said Monday that "it would be prudent that all efforts and actions be taken" to avoid a nationwide rail strike, saying it would "seriously disrupt" a fragile economy.

Speaking to the Association of General Contractors, Bush stopped short of asking Congress to intervene and head off a strike against freight railroads. He said the administration is "willing to work with the parties to help in any way possible."

Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner had said that if no progress had been made when the weekend was over the administration would consider asking Congress to pass legislation to settle the strike before it occurs.

Under the Railway Labor Act of 1926, the federal government has wide powers to deal with labor relations at railroads and airlines. The act keeps labor contracts in force during negotiations, essentially postponing their expiration indefinitely and provides for the appointment of a presidential commission to recommend a settlement.

In similar railroad negotiations in the past, after an automatic 90-day cooling-off period, Congress has used a commission's recommendations to legislate a settlement.

Congressional committees have been keeping track of the negotiations, but they have not introduced any legislation, hoping that the railroads and unions will reach a settlement.

The administration is prepared to force the issue through congressional action if the unions do not make a deal to stop a nationwide strike, scheduled to begin at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday, when the cooling off period between freight railroads and 11 unions expires.

Leaders of unions for about two-thirds of the country's 235,000 freight line workers have threatened to leave their jobs at midnight on Wednesday if a deal is not struck on the thorny issues of wages and health benefits. Leaders of three of the 11 unions have agreed to terms similiar to those recommended by the Presidential commission.

Contract talks continued into the night and were to resume Tuesday. The largest union, the United Transportation Union, did not take part in negotiations on Monday, but said it would join the talks on Tuesday.

The railroads say the wage recommendations of the commission go too far, and they are pressing to cut workers and change work rules. The unions' strongest objections have been to the reductions and plans to change work rules.

Skinner met Monday morning with a large group of union leaders as they were coming out of intense weekend bargaining sessions with the National Mediation Board. The negotiations on a new contract have been going on for three years.

Transportation officials said that while the administration is not keen to interfere in a labor-management dispute, Skinner was convinced that the strike would prolong the economic slump. More than a third of all goods shipped each month in the United States go by rail, and many industries, among them automakers, rely on timely delivery of parts and materials at assembly plants.

"That strike that looms for right after midnight tomorrow could seriously disrupt the economy just as the economy, in our view, is trying to turn around and get out of this recession," Bush, who was accompanied by Skinner, told the general contractors.

Congressional panel hears defense of fetus-to-fetus tissue transplant

WASHINGTON (NYT) — In poignant testimony, a husband and wife who oppose abortion told a congressional subcommittee Monday how they nevertheless agreed to use tissue from an aborted fetus in a desperate attempt to save their unborn son from a fatal genetic disease.

The experiment, carried out last May on the son of Guy and Terri Walden of Houston while the child was still in the womb, was the first fetus-to-fetus tissue transplant to be tried in the United States.

It is not yet known whether the experiment succeeded, but if it does, it would raise the possibility that a number of fatal diseases could be cured before birth with relatively uncomplicated procedures, Dr. Morton Cowan, a leading pediatric researcher, said in a telephone interview.

A similar procedure, for another genetic disease, was tried in France in 1988, but Cowan said it had failed.

The testimony came as the panel took up the financing of the National Institutes of Health. Research using fetal tissue has been a contentious issue at the NIH since the Reagan administration banned federal funds for it in 1988.

The new case "could be extremely important," said Cowan, who is chief of pediatric bone marrow transplants at the University of California at San Francisco.

"It is the only one in the United States," he said. "But it is very early in the history of fetal transplantation, and there is much that is not known."

Many die as Kurds' plight grows

ANKARA, Turkey (NYT) — Despite a huge-scale rescue campaign undertaken by the United States military, conditions for the Iraqi Kurdish refugees are still deteriorating rapidly, international relief experts and diplomats said on Monday. They warned that thousands more could die before help reaches them in their mountain enclaves on the Turkish border.

The relief effort, begun last week, has not swung into full operation as quickly as some officials would like. It certainly has yet to begin reversing the situation, and, if anything, officials said, the refugees' plight is growing worse.

"We're on the losing end of this one right now," said Donald M. Krumm, a senior State Department official coordinating the American effort. "The international system is not on top of it."

Relief officials estimate that several thousand Kurds have already died as a result of their arduous ordeal, although there are no reliable figures for the death toll to date.

The refugees began fleeing two weeks ago, as the forces of President Saddam Hussein moved to reclaim control over the rebellious Kurdish region in the wake of Iraq's defeat in the Persian Gulf war.

The basic problem in the relief effort remains what it has been for the two weeks of the crisis:

Supplies cannot be hauled overland to the mountain passes where the Kurds are camped in crazy-quilt fashion, beyond the reach of trucks unable to navigate roads of thick mud. The supplies are available. But a European diplomat estimated that 40 percent of them, pouring in from Turkey and around the world, cannot get where they are supposed to go.

The American solution is to carry in food, water, and other material on heavy-load helicopters.

AP Laserphoto

Kurdish refugees fleeing from Iraq walk in an endless line along the Haj Oramam Pass toward Iran and safety.

After initial reluctance to move the Kurds and other Iraqi minorities out of fear that they may remain in Turkey indefinitely, Turkish officials agreed over the weekend to relocate as many as 40,000 of them to the only stretch of flat land on the border.

The World

■ U.S. suggests U.N. establish 'presence'

WASHINGTON — A senior State Department official has suggested that the United Nations establish an "international presence" in Iraq so Kurdish and other refugees could return to their country from refugee camps in Turkey and Iran.

The proposal, made Monday by Princeton N. Lyman, director of the State Department's Bureau for Refugee Affairs, was the latest in a series of suggestions made by the Bush administration and by Europeans over the last week on how to create some sort of refugee enclave in northern Iraq.

■ Pretoria must still do more, U.S. says

WASHINGTON — A State Department official said Monday that South Africa, to win an end to American sanctions, still needs to comply with two conditions of the original five set by Congress in imposing the curbs.

Pretoria has complied with three of five conditions set by Congress: repealing state-of-emergency regulations, legalizing once-banned opposition political parties, and entering negotiations with representative political groups.

The law imposing the sanctions also mandates that all political prisoners — there are between 300 and 1,200 — must be released. In talks with the African National Congress last fall, the government promised all would be freed by April 30.

■ De Klerk welcomes lifting of sanctions

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President F.W. de Klerk on Monday night welcomed the European Community's decision to lift economic sanctions against South Africa, calling the latest move "positive and most encouraging."

In a statement, de Klerk thanked the European governments for standing by commitments to lift the sanctions.

"It is another important step for South Africa and all its people towards improved economic conditions and normal international relations," de Klerk said.

De Klerk said he would refer to the issue in greater detail when he visits Western Europe later this month.

■ Participants in coup attempt go to trial

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — The trial of 15 Argentine army leaders and almost 500 of their followers who staged a military uprising Dec. 3, just before a visit by President Bush, has opened in Buenos Aires amid tight security.

Col. Mohamed Ali Seineldin, who is charged with masterminding the uprising, and the other commanders, went before the country's highest tribunal Monday in the government's Palace of Justice as the country's chief prosecutor accused them of homicide, attempted homicide, staging an attempted military coup and stealing weapons.

The trial is in the same court where members of the country's three military juntas were tried and sentenced in 1985 for human rights abuses in the 1970s and negligence for their participation in the 1982 war with Great Britain over the Falkland Islands.

■ Former secret police disclose offer

BERLIN — Four former heads of the East German secret police have disclosed they offered Bonn government officials assistance in helping to limit the damage from unofficial disclosures of politically sensitive information. In exchange, they sought a general amnesty and pension benefits for former agents.

The government acknowledged the meeting, previously kept secret, had taken place but said it had refused the deal.

Experts: Afghan rebel victory a major triumph

KHOST, Afghanistan (NYT) — By routing government forces and capturing what had been a bastion of the Soviet-backed Kabul government in late March, Islamic rebels have revived their 12-year-old struggle and added new urgency to stalled efforts at reaching a political settlement to the conflict, according to rebel officials and Western diplomats.

The 16-day battle for Khost, a heavily fortified garrison 150 miles south of Kabul, revealed greater coordination among the seven guerrilla groups than had been apparant since the war began. Similarly, the rebels made greater use of armor and artillery than they had in earlier battles.

In overrunning the garrison, one of the best fortified outposts maintained by government forces, the rebels captured tanks and artillery, stocks of ammunition and thousands of firearms. Twenty-five senior military officers from the government side, including a deputy defense minister and four generals, surrendered, along with 2,500 troops.

Rebels now in command of the city say 175 of their fighters were killed and 300 more wounded. As for government losses, rebel leaders say they have not bothered to order a count. They often add that those who had fought for the Najibullah government had met with what they deserved, as did those among Khost's 50,000 civilians who had collaborated with government troops.

The most notable remnants of battle now visible in Khost are a dozen or so bodies of government troops contemptuously left unburied and the absence of all goods that could be carried away from stores, warehouses and private homes by the victorious rebels.

In the traditional scramble for "ghanimat," the Afghan term for loot or spoils of war, almost everything down to door hinges and kitchenware has been hauled off. Some items left behind, including books and clothing, can be seen lying in sodden heaps in muddy courtyards.

Despite the purely military gains the rebel "mujahedeen" are claiming, the seizure of Khost has inflicted a major psychological blow to the government, since the city had long been portrayed and perceived in Afghanistan as a symbol of government invincibility.

"I'm shocked," said a longtime military observer of the war, summing up much of the local commentary on the attack. "I thought the mujahedeen would take Moscow before they ever took Khost."

FORMULA FOR THE FUTURE

Vision + Planning + Effort = Success

I see Midland as a city on the grow, with plenty of good jobs for anyone who wants to work. This won't happen overnight, but with planning, strong leadership, and efficient, business-like management of our city's resources, it will happen in time.

A first class city deserves a first class airport. I believe expanding airport facilities, attracting new airlines, and extending control tower operations to 24 hours a day crucial to improving our economic future.

We need strong leadership to hasten an economic turn-around, leadership with vision. I would deeply appreciate your vote on May 4th.

Baker to return to Middle East to push talks

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III will head back to the Middle East today for the second time in two weeks, seeking to overcome remaining obstacles to an Arab-Israeli peace conference, administration officials said on Monday.

Baker completed his last trip through the region on Friday, having found broad support for some kind of peace conference that would include Israeli, Arab, and Palestinian representatives, but still unable to reach a final agreement on the framework and agenda for such a meeting.

Administration officials say the main reason Baker is returning to the region so soon is because he believes that he is making some headway and is convinced that unless he makes a major effort to reach a final agreement right now, all of the parties will drift away or fall prey to domestic infighting.

Baker will first travel to Luxembourg, where he will consult with European Community officials about Kurdish refugees fleeing the Iraqi army into Turkey and Iran.

The officials will try to come up with a consistent position on how the United Nations and International Red Cross can extend humanitarian aid inside Iraq and to better coordinate and finance relief efforts for refugee camps.

Baker is also likely to discuss with them a European Community decision made on Monday to seek to bring President Saddam Hussein to trial as a war criminal.

From Luxembourg, he is scheduled to fly to Israel, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria, and almost certainly Jordan.

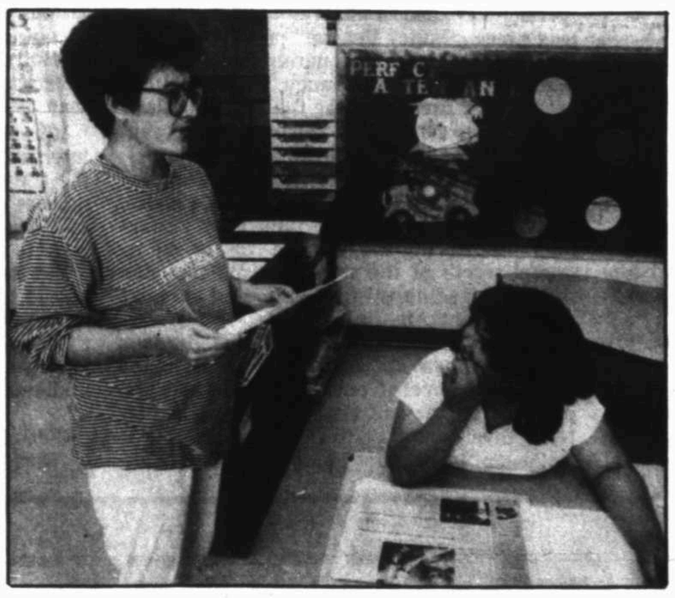

The stop in Jordan, which is expected by American officials, would be particularly noteworthy since it would represent at least a partial reconciliation between the two countries.

The administration resented King Hussein's public support for Iraq during the Persian Gulf war, and threatened to cut economic aid.

Israel continues to refuse to consider a trade of land for peace.

Faircloth, Castro deserve approval

Voters in the May 4th Midland City Council election will elect two council members to serve at-large and two to serve single-member districts. They also will decide the fate of two proposed amendments to the Midland City Charter.

James David Faircloth and John M. Castro both are ending their first terms on the council and both have served admirably in helping guide the city through difficult economic times.

Faircloth, a conservative, has worked to hold city spending in check since he believes that taxpayers are fed up with tax increases. Noting that he did violate a campaign pledge in his first term not to vote for a tax increase, he said he did so in exchange for support on a hiring freeze and that he believed the tax increase in question was justified.

Castro noted the possible future need to reduce city staff as a way of holding future tax increases down and cited as major needs for Midland's future both economic diversification and a solution to the problem with effluent.

Castro and Faircloth are abreast of major issues facing the City of Midland in the future and should be returned to the council for another term.

The other candidate in this race, Hugh G. White, has served the city capably in an appointive capacity on the Zoning Board of Adjustment and offers sound ideas for the city's future, but Faircloth and Castro are the better choices in this three-way race for only two positions.

Devenport best choice for Council District 1

In the race for District 1 on the city council, the best choice is James F. Devenport, a self-employed petroleum landman. A strong conservative, Devenport says the city must live with the budget that it has and even do some cutting of expenses where possible.

At the same time, however, he is supporting of the city's effort to expand Midland International Airport, saying it is critical to the city's future.

Devenport should be elected to the District 1 council seat.

Zertuche can serve those in District 2

Jose A. "Beau" Zertuche, a lifelong Midlander, offers the residents of District 2 an outstanding choice for Midland City Council. He says that on the council he would work to improve the quality of life for all Midland residents by bringing new business and industry to the city.

The owner and manager of Maverick Management Co., Zertuche says he would attempt to get retail outlets to locate along Lamesa Highway.

His interest in helping all residents of the community is good and Zertuche's business knowledge and contacts would make him a good council representative for District 2.

City Charter changes should gain approval

Two proposed amendments to the Midland City Charter should be approved by Midland voters.

Amendment No. 1 would change Article IV, Section 30 to allow the city of Midland to transfer funds through the use of electronic wire transfers.

City Attorney David Reagan says this change is really "just modernizing our abilities" and will additionally give the city the opportunity to pay city employees through direct deposits. He says the change will speed the city's work and reduce costs on cutting checks.

Amendment No. 2 would change Article III, Section 26 to authorize the city to authorize contracts for up to $10,000 or the maximum allowed by state statute, whichever is greater, without a formal bidding process for bids.

Reagan said competitive bidding really serves no useful purpose on minor purchases and that this change is needed to save the city both time and money on the expenses of competitive bidding. The city now is required to call for bids on all items costing over $5,000.

These two proposals appear reasonable and in the best interest of efficient city government. Voters should approve them.

Pittman's familiarity, compassion would help

Challenges and concerns are gripping the medical industry presently and the race for one seat on the Midland County Hospital District board attracted three candidates.

Our choice in the District 5 race is Carolyn Jean Pittman, who would bring to the MCHD board not only a familiarity with health-care industries but also an attitude about cost-effectiveness that balances health concerns against the economic concerns expressed by taxpayers.

We believe Ms. Pittman's service will ensure that neither the health professionals nor the taxpayers will be forgotten in the maze of health care entanglements.

She should be elected to the MCHD board.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, April 16, the 106th day of 1991. There are 259 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 16, 1889, comedian and movie director Charles Chaplin, creator of such film classics as "The Tramp," "The Gold Rush," "City Lights" and "Modern Times," was born in London.

Thought for today: "The only graceful way to accept an insult is to ignore it; if you can't ignore it, top it; if you can't top it, laugh at it; if you can't laugh at it, it's probably deserved." — Russell Lynes, American editor and author.

Computer systems open to sabotage

WASHINGTON — Most Americans treat their computers like small-town residents treat their cars. They leave the doors unlocked and the keys in the ignition. As a result, experts say, American computers are wide open to sabotage.

Anderson

There was the student who put a virus into a nationwide computer system, the hackers who tried to rip off $15.2 million from the Pennsylvania lottery and the thieves who tried to pass off thousands of fake automatic teller machine cards.

But even more alarming are recent security breaches of government computer systems. A German hacker broke into at least 30 U.S. military computers and some at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The Justice Department sold surplus computers to a Kentucky man but forgot to erase the memory bank, which contained sensitive information on sealed court cases, undercover agents and protected witnesses. The General Accounting Office has investigated the Justice Department security three times and panned it each time. In the most recent report last month, the GAO said, "one simply cannot trust that sensitive data will be safely stored at the Department of Justice."

What does it mean for the future? Computer security expert Winn Schwartau told our associate Dean Boyd that Americans are inviting computer terrorism. Schwartau is president of American Computer Securities Inc. and executive director of the International Partnership against Computer Terrorism. He is about to publish a book on the subject, "Terminal Compromise."

According to Schwartau, an electrician with only $100 can buy parts and assemble the equipment he or she needs to eavesdrop on almost 95 percent of the computers in America. Anyone with $1,500 can buy the equipment off the shelf, already assembled.

After figuring out a password, an eavesdropper could tap into banks, federal agencies, air traffic control systems, congressional offices, even computerized voting systems, without being detected. With a little imagination, one could change bank balances, pay off loans or make debts disappear altogether. A terrorist with a more sinister agenda could stymie entire economic systems or military operations through computers.

The government has developed the technology to counter such terrorist attacks, but the specifications are classified and only available to a few government computers with highly sensitive data. The private sector has few protections. As one expert put it, "The commercial sector doesn't even have seat belts for its computers right now."

Another potential threat is a computer virus, a term that is quickly becoming a household word. A well-placed virus in a popular software program could prove catastrophic, especially if it were timed to be activated after lying dormant for years.

But perhaps the most alarming threat is that posed by people who already have legal access to computers — disgruntled employees or those who deliberately infiltrate a federal agency or a private business to sabotage the computer systems.

A recent report from the independent National Research Council echoes Schwartau's bleak assessment of computer security in America. Massachusetts Institute of Technology Professor David D. Clark, who chaired the committee preparing the report, said, "So far, the nation has been remarkably lucky in escaping any successful systematic attempts to subvert critical computing systems. Unfortunately, there is reason to believe that our luck may run out soon unless we take action now."

According to Clark, "A thief today can steal more with a computer than with a gun; a terrorist tomorrow can do more damage with a keyboard than with a bomb."

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Read 'revenge' between Kitty Kelly's lines

Why do I look now and then at "Entertainment Tonight," the most bubble-headed program in the history of television? Partly because it follows the 10 o'clock news; partly because "ET" sometimes tosses me nuggets like Kitty Kelley's reply to the question, didn't Nancy Reagan have any redeeming qualities? Miss Kelley's answer: "She was a great president."

Murchison

I mean, these people can't help it, can they? Reagan-bashing is a diagnosed psychological addiction. A few hours without it, and the fingers start to shake; beads of perspiration break out on the forehead.

Maybe, years from now, Kitty Kelley will show up at a Hollywood or Washington support group meeting and avouch: "My name is Kitty, and I hate the Reagans ... "

It could be a vast swarm — media celebrities, professors, Democratic politicians. Oh, how they all hate the Reagans. How they hated them during the Reagans' high noon of power. More remarkable yet: how they go on hating them even in the twilight years of retirement.

Nothing is too bad, from the Hollywood-Harvard liberal perspective, to say about a president who cut taxes, rebuilt the country's defenses and preached with maddening persuasiveness the futility of dependence on government. If he'd been just another "right-wing kook," enlightened opinion could have ignored him. Unfortunately, he was both popular and effective.

Too much so, I gather, for Kitty, who leaves literary claw marks all over the former first lady's face. "Nancy Reagan" purports to show the dumb old prez as squarely under his termagant wife's thumb. Nancy, bad and bitchy as she was, functioned as the real president, according to Kitty. Ron apparently just went around for eight years with a vacant stare.

Aha! So that's how the Reagan Revolution happened! There couldn't have been a logical reason for it — like the failure of welfare liberalism during the '60s and '70s, or the inherent worth of the strategies and remedies the Reagan administration employed to revive a despondent America.

In fact, America was stagnating. In fact, Ronald Reagan did bring new ideas to the conduct of government — ideas he had propounded on the speaking circuit and as two-term governor of California.

Reagan, in his first inaugural message, declared: (G)overnment is not the solution to our problems; government is the problem ... it is my intention to curb the size and influence of the federal establishment ... "

That might have been what the people wanted to hear at such a juncture; it manifestly wasn't what the Hollywood-Harvard liberals wanted to hear, far less see put in practice. Reagan was challenging the whole idea of government as the great mother and protector of us all. No president since the New Deal had seriously challenged this idea — not Eisenhower, not Nixon, not Ford. Here suddenly was an ex-Hollywood leading man asserting that Americans could order their own lives better than politicians could. It was maddening.

It is still maddening. The vested political interests have spent the last decade denigrating the policies of the Reagan years, which policies led to the longest economic expansion in U.S. history and pressured Mikhail Gorbachev to end the cold war.

Did Reagan, as president, do everything he should have done? Absolutely not. Did he do some wrong things? Absolutely he did. Was he a hen-pecked charlatan nimbly pretending to lead a country whose needs he didn't even understand? Look at the record.

CHARLEY REESE

America's history is not a tale of angels

During the Persian Gulf crisis and later in the war, some people exhibited an immature patriotism. I mean they seemed convinced that the president was Roy Rogers, king of the cowboys, and that the administration, in word, deed and thought, was as pure as new fallen snow in the pre-industrial age.

Reese

More significantly, they continue to cling to this belief in sweaty desperation, as if even the slightest crack in their vision would shatter their souls and plunge them into despair. Hence, they lash out wildly at the president's critics.

Well, the dear old Republic deserves more than neurotic devotion. It needs stouter patriots than people whose love of country depends on maintaining an illusion of its perfection.

The United States, God bless it, began to fall short of its ideals even before it was born. It fell short the day the Constitutional Convention was convened. It had fallen short during the Revolution itself.

Pure ideals and perfection are the stuff of dreams. The instant men and women leave theory behind and take up the task of nation building or nation running they are confronted with the necessity of compromise, with the unavoidable choice of pragmatism over idealism.

Most of the people at the Constitutional Convention, for example, knew that slavery was an evil institution. They also knew, however, that if they tried to tackle that problem, they would never form a unified nation. So, they just put the problem off for another day. They compromised on this and on other issues.

And our elected leaders have followed that pattern ever since. American history is not a gentle tale of angels. It is a saga of flawed humans doing the best they could as they saw it at the time. It's a history of contention, dissent, struggle, conflict, battles, chicanery, and often outright fraud. In short, it is not unlike the history of other nations.

The first delusion to get rid of is the notion that the United States has been anointed by God to lead the rest of mankind out of the darkness.

It is, from my point of view, the greatest nation on earth, offering the most freedom and opportunity. But it is what it is, not only because of American ideals, but also because earlier generations outfought and outschemed the British, the French, the Spaniards, the Mexicans, the Indians and everybody else who got in their way.

It is unseemly to enjoy the fruits of sins while denying or denouncing the sinners. Everytime we eat American grains, we are enjoying the benefits of those who slaughtered the buffalo herds and drove the Plains Indians to near extinction. The fate of the American Indian was a human tragedy. The institution of slavery, including the Yankee slave traders, was an evil. The Mexican Wars were outright land grabs. The railroad barons bribed whole legislatures and in effect stole public lands — out of all this the nation we enjoy today was built.

So the second delusion to get rid of is that there was once a golden age. Childish daydreams. There were just different problems and different people struggling with them. Men we revere today were in flesh and blood controversial and embroiled in bitter conflicts — men like John Adams and Tom Jefferson. If they were alive today, they'd be controversial today.

People who think patriotism consists of agreeing with politicians who happen to be in office need to learn more about their own country. It is dissent, not blind blockhead obedience, that is the American tradition. People who love their country because they insist it's perfect should just grow up. That's like a man telling his bride he'll love her only as long as she remains young and beautiful. Healthy love recognizes faults and isn't afraid to disagree.

Rock shards only proof that meteorite hit Montana

The funny-shaped rock Hargraves found is a "shatter cone," a triangular shard of rock formed by the force of a meteorite hitting Earth.

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Robert Hargraves was walking with friends through a valley in southwestern Montana two years ago when a funny-shaped rock caught his eye.

To Hargraves, a Princeton University geology professor, it was more than a peculiarity. It was proof that a meteorite slammed into Earth near where he was standing. He since has calculated the meteor left a crater some 40 miles wide — one of the largest ever discovered.

Most people usually notice things like big craters, but Hargraves says this one went undetected for thousands of years because, quite simply, it isn't there anymore.

"One normally thinks of meteorite sites as a big hole in the ground, but that's a very young feature," Hargraves said from his office at Princeton. "What we have in that valley is extremely old. There's nothing remotely resembling a hole in the ground."

Hargraves said he believes the meteorite exploded into the Earth probably 300 million to 1.5 billion years ago, and has been distorted and covered by erosion and seismic movement.

The funny-shaped rock Hargraves found is a "shatter cone," a triangular shard of rock formed by the force of a meteorite hitting Earth. He likened the cones to the small triangular glass shards formed when a bullet is fired through plate glass.

Since finding the first shatter cone, Hargraves and other geologists from Princeton, Stanford University and the U.S. Geological Survey have returned to find dozens of the small rocks scattered all over Montana's Beaverhead County and into Idaho.

Hargraves said it was pure luck that he spotted the first rock. He said he had seen the same rock formations while studying a meteorite crater in South Africa years before.

But even with his experience, Hargraves said he's not an expert on meteorites and asked for help from geologists who have done a lot more work with meteorites.

"I usually don't work with (meteorites) at all," he said. "But this has rekindled my interest."

A group of about 20 geologists are to meet in Dillon, Mont., this summer to study the area and try to determine exactly where the meteorite hit. Hargraves said he's trying to get a federal grant so he can stay in Montana for at least a month to study the area.

Hargraves said one goal for the geologists will be to prove that a meteorite actually landed in the area south of Dillon.

Many college dorms can't handle students' power requirements

By Michel Marriott
New York Times News Service

College students nationwide are abandoning the minimalist look in dorm rooms for the high-tech glint of a space shuttle flight deck as they stuff a dizzying array of consumer electronics and electrical appliances into campus housing.

Some colleges are even rewiring residence halls to keep up with rising energy demands.

"Students have so many more things than they did before that they are not willing to accept four walls and a basic room anymore," said Doris Collins, the associate director of residential housing at Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge.

The average undergraduate, college administrators say, is likely to live in a dormitory room crammed with high-technology creature comforts, including personal computers and high-speed printers, color televisions and videocassette recorders, microwave ovens and electric popcorn poppers, hair dryers and electric shavers, powerful stereo systems and compact disk players and more. Much more.

Ms. Collins, who is also the president of the Association of College and University Housing Officers International, said American colleges have only gradually become aware of these mounting electrical needs, and can only gradually respond.

"WE HAVE to take one building or a section at a time," she said, describing the arduous process of upgrading older buildings, often World War II-vintage brick and wood, for the needs of gadget-laden students. "We can't afford to turn it all around at once."

At Haverford College, a small liberal arts institution outside Philadelphia in Haverford, Pa., workers will soon swarm over a 168-unit student apartment complex. In what is becoming a new rite of summer there, several of these apartment buildings at the edge of campus are shut down each year and rewired just after commencement in May.

Last summer the work included protecting computers from interruptions in power and boosting overall electricial capacity 50 percent, said Norman Ricker, director of the college's physical plant. The renovations cost about $13,000 for each building, Ricker said.

Haverford's president, Tom G. Kessinger, said students now own so many appliances that "the walls in some students' rooms look like the flight deck of the space shuttle."

Time was when those rooms looked more like the garret of a poverty-stricken writer, equipped with a few ancient outlets and fragile fuses. With a chuckle, Kessinger recalled the Haverford of the 1950s, when he was a student.

"I had a three-speed Victrola and a manual typewriter and thought I was well off," he said. "Now, typewriters are out and Victrolas are in museums, and students have computers, little refrigerators, VCRs and color televisions."

COMBINED WITH expanded use of computers, photocopying machines and air-conditioning, student hunger for power has boosted Haverford's electrical consumption 5 percent per year, Ricker said.

Comparable increases in electrical energy use are being experienced at colleges nationally, according to the Association of Physical Plant Administrators of Universities and Colleges, a nonprofit group based in Alexandria, Va., that has surveyed national college energy consumption for the last 15 years.

"Although enrollments have been stable or flat, at residential campuses electrical uses have been creeping up 3 to 5 percent simply because of student increases in consumer items," said Wayne Leroy, the organization's vice president.

By comparison, sales of electricity, an indication of use, rose 1.7 percent from 1989 to 1990 in the Consolidated Edison service area, which includes New York City and Westchester County, a company spokeswoman said.

At the University of California at Los Angeles, a number of older student residential halls have undergone significant renovations, including rewiring, to meet the rising demand.

"In the housing being built right now, we had to sit down and calculate how many electrical outlets were necessary for a two-person room," said Sam Morabito, a UCLA vice chancellor.

"WE WERE astonished to find that now it requires 16 outlets, which is four or five times the number that was needed 25 years ago."

Woman, distraught over losing fiance, claims to have cancer

By Malcolm Ritter

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman jilted by her fiance sought sympathy by faking terminal breast cancer for two years, shaving her head and dieting away 20 pounds or so, a psychiatrist says. She even fooled a cancer support group.

The woman, who also feigned listlessness and loss of appetite, built up a network of close friends among support-group members.

That was gratifying for somebody who usually had trouble establishing relationships, and who faced the aftermath of the broken engagement.

"She felt that the process of rebuilding a social life for herself was simply overwhelming. She needed a shortcut," said Dr. Marc Feldman.

Feldman, a psychiatrist in Birmingham, Ala., is a co-author of a report on the case in the spring issue of the journal Psychosomatics.

The woman had what psychiatrists call a factitious disorder. In this condition, a person consciously fakes an illness for some psychological gain. A well-known variant is Munchausen syndrome, in which a person virtually makes a career of being a patient.

Nobody knows how common factitious disorder is, said Dr. David Folks, a professor in the department of psychiatry and behavioral neurobiology at the University of Alabama School of Medicine in Birmingham.

But, he said, "on any one day, you could probably go into your local hospital and find one patient who either had factitious disorder or was a Munchausen patient. So it's not rare by any stretch of the imagination."

Feldman treated the woman after her ruse was discovered and while he was director of psychosocial programming at the Duke University Medical Center's cancer center in Durham, N.C.

The woman, who by then was 35, began the charade while working as a corporate secretary. She told co-workers that the cancer had already spread and that her prognosis was grim. She modeled her symptoms on the genuine cancer of an acquaintance.

After experiencing a gratifying outpouring of warmth from coworkers, she joined a support group because it was a ready-made social network, Feldman said in a telephone interview.

"The groups there really work to be unconditionally supportive, very nurturing and warm. ... The very first day she showed up she was embraced and welcomed."

Yet, he said, "she was quite confrontative at times in group with other cancer patients, saying that they needed to face their illness head on, needed to be much more direct in dealing with the issue of cancer."

The charade was uncovered when a routine check of medical records showed that she had never seen the cancer specialist she claimed was treating her.

When confronted, the woman confessed immediately, which is unusual for factitious disorder, Feldman said. Then, distraught and remorseful, she contacted Feldman and agreed to be hospitalized, he said.

She was diagnosed with major depression and a personality disorder. She made good progress during four weeks in the hospital, Feldman said. When she was discharged, she said she would move to a new state to start her life over.

Feldman said he has not had any contact with her since that time, about 18 months ago. She apparently did not get back together with her fiance, he said.

An official of an organization that runs breast cancer support groups in 12 states said she had never heard of an imposter in such a group.

"I can see where she wouldn't be detected," said Sharon Green, executive director of the Y-ME National Organization for Breast Cancer Information and Support.

Professor studies antelope behavior

■ Zoologist sees similarities in behavior of children and pronghorn fawns.

Associated Press

MOSCOW, Idaho — The relationships of antelope siblings at home on the range may illuminate the behavior of human children at home in the suburbs, says a researcher.

Firstborn children are more likely to be famous and to score better on national achievement tests. Pronghorn antelope fawns don't take exams or make talk-show appearances, but the early born among them tend to be dominant.

University of Idaho zoology Professor John Byers has spent nine summers studying antelope at the National Bison Range in the shadow of western Montana's spectacular Mission Mountains.

But a family studies expert says he's skeptical about making a connection between antelopes and children.

Dominance among fawns, particularly females, is decided by birth order and that social position usually carries on to the next generation, Byers said.

In other words, the meek don't inherit the earth among antelope.

"It's the first study that shows natural variation in early experience has a lifetime effect," Byers said.

His research shows that fawns born early in the four-week birthing season are usually the most mature, the biggest and the strongest when they come out of hiding and join the group.

"The fawns start contesting for dominance," Byers said. "They push each other around a lot."

The littlest, youngest fawns — the ones usually bullied around the range — become subordinate in the social group.

"They are more likely to be found on the periphery of groups or alone," Byers said. "Their personalities are set by early experience."

And subordinate, or later-born, antelopes tend to have subordinate fawns, Byers said.

"When their fawns get into tussles with other fawns, they can't intervene as much. Dominant mothers occasionally step in," Byers said.

When it comes to the mating game, male antelope show no preference for females based on either sex's birth order. "The males mate with anything standing still."

Randal Day, a professor in Washington State University's department of child, consumer and family studies, is reluctant to link animal and human behavior because family life and animal life are so different.

"Family life is about emotions and feelings ... and solving problems and making decisions. Much of animal behavior is about survival," Day said. "I'm just a little skeptical. These are huge conceptual jumps for me."

But Day noted there are studies showing dominance among first-born children.

"We've been doing research on this subject called ordinal position for about 100 years or so," Day said. "Here at WSU more firstborns get admitted every year because they're always out getting good grades and hacking away at computers. They score higher on national achievement tests and in verbal reasoning skills."

In one study, when first-born high school students were asked what they wanted to be, they were more likely to say they wanted to go to the moon or invent the cure for cancer, Day said. "The later-borns will probably say they want to be a wind surfer."

Byers is building the base for a mammalian model — observations about like behavior among mammals — the information for which is logged at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

"You can't do the kind of studies or experiments that we do with mammals to humans. We use other mammals for substitutes to get at processes that might be going on in humans," Byers said.

Police recovered this handgun from the seat of stabbing victim David Perez's car Sunday. Perez told police he shot the men who stabbed him in self-defense.

Local police continue probe of shooting

Staff Report

Police have made no arrests in connection with a double shooting — that left one man dead — and a stabbing that happened Sunday afternoon in a convenience store parking lot.

Information from an ongoing police investigation is expected to be turned over to the District Attorney's Office, which will present evidence to the grand jury to determine charges, police said.

Pablo Lara Munoz, 19, initially identified as Pablo Lara, died Sunday from two gunshot wounds to the chest, police said.

His brother, Adrian Lara, 22, remained in fair condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center after sustaining a shot to the groin Monday, hospital officials said.

David Perez, 22, who reportedly shot the two men in self-defense, was released from the hospital Sunday evening after being treated for stab wounds to the stomach and leg.

Police said Perez was attacked after pulling up to Al's Grocery No. 2, 1306 Lamesa Road, to purchase gasoline.

Police investigating the incident said Monday that a motive for the attack has not been determined.

Judge orders revisions to Ector County sex-shop law

■ Attorney for shop owners who challenged the ordinance calls it a 'moral victory.'

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Portions of an Ector County ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses are unconstitutional, a federal judge ruled Monday.

Judge Lucius D. Bunton III also ordered the county to pay $1,500 in damages, plus attorneys' fees, to the adult-bookstore owner and employees who challenged the ordinance in Midland's U.S. District Court.

County officials will consider an appeal, said County Judge Jim Jordan.

Sharon Lee Wright, owner of the B&L Adult Bookstore at 5890 W. University Blvd., filed suit against the county last June after sheriff's deputies arrested her and five of her employees for disobeying the ordinance.

Those arrested — Ms. Wright, Terry Dale Miles, Loretta Mae Johnson, Jimmy Wayne Wright, Wanda Jean Barrett and Paul Eugene Hudson — claimed the law was unconstitutional and that the arrests violated their civil rights. They sought at least $3 million apiece in damages.

John W. Cliff Jr., an attorney for the plaintiffs, said his clients were "a little disappointed" with the damages — $1,000 to Ms. Wright and $100 apiece to the other five plaintiffs.

"It's at least a moral victory," Cliff said. "We were concerned with the court recognizing and identifying those portions of the ordinance that we felt were unconstitutional."

Although Bunton declared that there was no conspiracy to violate the plaintiffs' civil rights, he agreed with their contention that the ordinance requires revision.

"The ordinance in question... does not pass constitutional muster," the opinion states. "It needs additional 'fine tuning' in order to do so."

County commissioners approved the ordinance in February 1990 and began enforcing it the following June. It requires inspections and licensing of sexually oriented businesses, including adult bookstores, massage parlors and nude dance clubs.

Among other things, Bunton said, the ordinance needs to be altered to include:

- A provision stating why such an ordinance is needed in Ector County.
- A requirement that the sheriff's office make a specific ruling on each license application it receives rather than "implicitly" denying licenses by refusing to rule on them.
- A requirement that a business be allowed to continue operating while its license renewal application is pending.
- A provision for "prompt judicial review" for a license applicant should a license be denied.

Bunton also pointed out that the ordi-

■ Amiable Midland security guard is key to family atmosphere at Angels' Stadium

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Whether as a security guard at Angels' Stadium, a Midland police officer or a survivor of an often-fatal form of cancer, Joe Ortiz lives to help others.

To many Midland Angels' fans, Ortiz is like one of the family.

"I've seen mothers and dads go out there and carry their babies. Some ask for me to hold the babies and they take a picture," Ortiz said.

Some of the babies aren't babies anymore. Some are young baseball fans who still come out on game nights, said Ortiz, 48, who is starting his 12th year as a security guard at the stadium.

"It is mainly a family-oriented park and we try to keep it that way," said Ortiz, who works surrounded by family at the stadium.

His wife, Becky, has worked at the customer service window for the last eight years, and his son, James, 18, is starting his second year at a concession stand. Ortiz's eldest daughter, Tonya, 25, worked as a concessioner about nine years ago.

Ortiz's 12-year-old son, John Mark, also likes to frequent the ballpark.

"He likes to help out but he doesn't get paid," Ortiz said.

Ortiz has a daughter, Suzanne, 21, who doesn't and hasn't worked at Angels' Stadium.

Taking safety precautions, controlling traffic, escorting fans, responding to complaints and checking minors for alcohol are some of Ortiz's duties at the park.

"It's been a lot of fun. But you can't forget about the money because it's a part-time job and helps meet some of the expenses," he said.

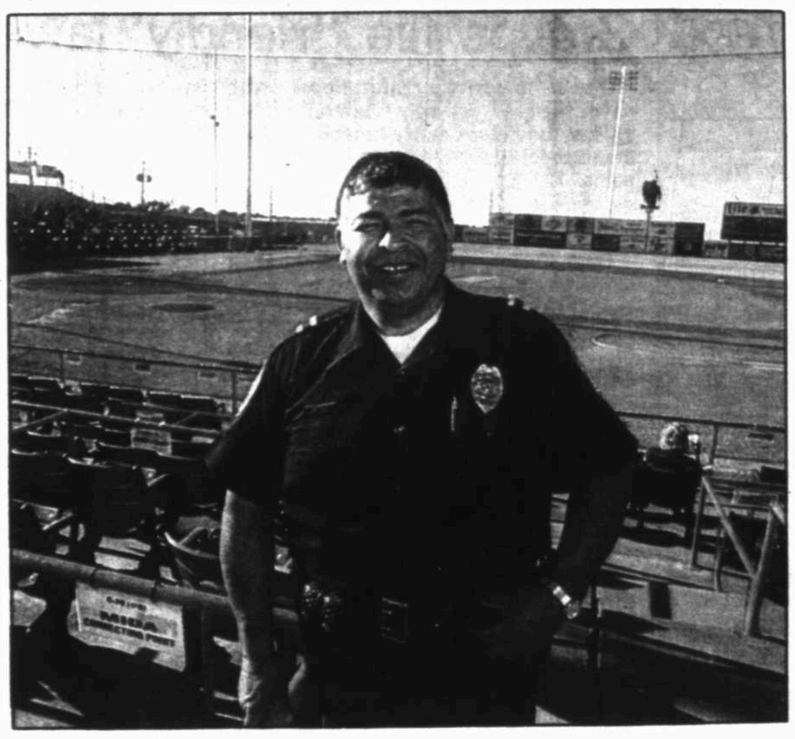

"You get to meet a lot of interesting people out there ... a lot are dedicated fans," said Ortiz, who admitted to being more of a Cubs fan.

The Midland Cubs occupied the park in the mid-1980s before the Angels came.

In 1983, Ortiz was forced to bid a temporary goodbye to his friends at the ballpark because of a cancer diagnosis.

"They found cancer in my ankle,

Gay issues are focus of panel

Should homosexuals have equal rights?

While the question wasn't answered directly, a Midland College "talk show" panel addressed the public perception of homosexuals Monday.

The noon talk show, recorded for students, was hosted by Holly Schroeder of Channel 9 news.

A panel of eight — including Midland College teachers, HIV counselors, an MC administrator, a student, and a member of the Gay/Lesbian Alliance in Alabama — attempted to quash stereotypical perceptions of homosexuals.

"Discrimination starts small but it has a huge ... a great weight on a person," said Ronnie Anderson, a member of the Gay/Lesbian Alliance at the University of Alabama.

"People give you bad looks if you just walk down the street with your lover," Anderson said. "And I'm not talking about holding hands or kissing."

Anderson said some people don't want to eat restaurant food prepared by homosexuals.

Midland teacher Madeleine Maehl said discrimination of homosexuals often exists in the work place.

She said employers may hire people based on ability, then balk when they realize the person is a homosexual. "They say: 'You didn't tell us that.' Well, you didn't ask," she said.

Concerning the legality of homosexual activity, MC government teacher Jerry Franks said that there are "very few states left with sodomy laws,

Girl Scouts tuck away their reading lists in 'time capsule'

If the mayor says that the library "opens doors to the wonder and excitement of the world of ideas," it must be so.

Right?

Well, that's what the children seemed to think after they read books, wrote out synopses of their adventures in reading, and got caught up in the literary spirit of the Midland County Public Library Monday.

"I like to reading because you can get into the characters," said 10-year-old Stephanie Karnavas, "and (you realize that) something that you read can really happen."

Stephanie one of a troop of Midland Girl Scouts who presented a "time capsule" of their recent book readings to the Midland County Public Library at the onset of National Library Week, which continues through Saturday.

The capsule is to be opened in 2002, when the girls will be into their early 20s.

"I like to read 'Nancy Drew,' " Stephanie said of the adventure series similar in spirit to the "Hardy Boys." She, like some other members of Girl Scout Troop No. 88, fancies selections from The Baby-Sitters Club.

In a brief ceremony in the library's Children's Department, Midland City Councilman J.D. Faircloth read Mayor Carroll Thomas' proclamation on Library Week and praised the library's nurturing qualities for children and youth.

Ms. Garcia died Sunday in a traffic accident between Midland and Odessa.

She was born on Feb. 10, 1967, in Monahans and lived in Andrews before she moved to Midland 10 years ago.

Ms. Garcia was a 1985 graduate of Robert E. Lee High School in Midland. She was a clerk for The InWest Group Insurance Associates of Midland.

Survivors include a daughter, Kassie Garcia of Midland; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Garcia of Monahans; a grandparent, Domingo Garcia of Monahans; a brother, Albert Garcia II of Midland, and a sister, Monica Garcia of Monahans.

READING: Girl Scout troop preserves its reading list

(From 1B)

"The library is a treasury of reading," Faircloth said, "where muse and spirit enrich the soul, and dreams excite discovery."

And that's much of what the 14 Girl Scouts seemed to appreciate in their readings.

"I like the excitement of reading," said Sarah McGee, 11. "It helps you learn a lot. I think reading is the best (learning process) because you can picture the characters in your mind in your own way."

"I like books," said 11-year-old Kristin Gassiott, who recently read "A Taste of Blackberries," "because you get to know the characters in the book, and you get a picture of the book in your head. I like books of all kinds."

Diane Salisbury, 11, agreed that reading is an idea way to learn, "but (watching) TV is the most fun."

"I like reading books," said Kathy Stephenson, 10, "because reading is more interesting that watching TV."

Lauren Hooker, 11, said she enjoys "the fun of reading."

"I don't like to watch TV," asserted Mary Elizabeth Prentice, 10. "I like to read long books."

Faircloth, who is mayor pro tem, cited the importance of young people learning to read and effectively using the library.

"It's important when they get into college, doing research and all, and basically to learn and understand that a library is a friendly place," he said.

Faircloth surmised that it is "absolutely" true that a person tends to retain more knowledge and concepts in reading than in watching television or listening to radio programming.

"I think that's true," the councilman said. "Your brain, your mind, doesn't seem to retain" as much information from radio and television programs as it does from "the written medium."

Faircloth said that "a lot of people don't realize how much research material there is in a library.

"Even college students, a lot of times, don't know how to use a library," he said.

He zeroed in on the importance of a "good library" for the benefit of children.

"I hope with the library expansion, they will really expand the children's part and really make it almost a research area," he said.

Marita Richards, head children's librarian, said "children's literature has come a long way" over the years.

"Children are what make the public library," she said. In browsing the library, children often bring their parents and teen-age siblings to the library.

"Plus," said Constance "Connie" Roe, assistant county librarian, "you are starting a life-time (reading) habit."

Betty Ann Prentice, co-leader of the Girl Scout troop, said that the girls were excited about reading books "on their own" and without the motivation of grades associated with the classroom.

"We did some research on what good literature is," Mrs. Prentice said. "It's literature that will last — books that will last and have value."

and it got in my bloodstream and up into my lungs," said Ortiz, who suffered from melanoma sarcoma, now in remission.

As a result, he underwent lung surgery, 27 months of chemotherapy and had his left leg amputated half-way between his foot and knee.

"It was a shock. No one likes to loose a part of his body — especially your feet — that's how you get around," said Ortiz.

He said he once thought he was going to die from cancer.

"It makes you cry to know you're not going to live and see your family. You re-evaluate everything you have — you attitudes and whether there is a God ... I found out there is one," Ortiz said.

"He's let me live to help other people," said Ortiz.

These days, Ortiz takes time out to speak to support groups and others who are fighting the disease.

Support of family and friends is important for those with cancer, said Ortiz, speaking from experience.

"I give a lot of credit to my wife for support and the involvement of my family," he said.

Whether comforting those suffer from cancer or directing Angels' fans, Ortiz said he sees it all as a police officer.

"That is what a police officer does — help the public — and I take joy in that," Ortiz said.

He said he sees himself as an ambassador for Midland when he works at Angels' Stadium.

"You are a representative of the city and you have to represent good things," Ortiz said.

A property officer for the Midland Police Department, he has been an officer for 21 years and has served with the Midland Police Department for 15 years.

Although Ortiz no longer works as a patrol officer because of his leg, he said wearing a prosthesis doesn't handicap him.

"I can walk and people don't know I have an artificial leg," Ortiz said.

As far as being a police officer goes, "I can still perform up to standards," he said.

"I'm not going to let that get in the way. As for my job, I'll do it the best I can for as long as I can."

REVISION: Ordinance needs 'fine tuning'

nance does not define the terms "church" and "school," although it forbids sexually oriented businesses from locating within 1,000 feet of such institutions.

He wrote that while the distance rule is not necessarily unconstitutional, it is not sufficiently justified in the ordinance.

"Should a non-conforming business come before this court in the future challenging the 1,000 foot requirement, the court may find it to be an arbitrary and unreasonable requirement," Bunton wrote.

County Judge Jordan said he hadn't seen a copy of the ruling but added that county commissioners probably will consider an appeal at one of their next two meetings.

He said he was pleased with Bunton's ruling that county officials were innocent of conspiring to violate the plaintiffs' civil rights.

"They were just trying to do the best job they could, given the circumstances," he said.

Besides the county itself, defendants in the suit included Jordan, former County Judge Jan Fisher, county commissioners Jack Crider, Bryan Henderson and Richard Jorgenson, former Commissioner Joe Hernandez, County Attorney Tracey Bright, Sheriff Bob Brookshire, ex-sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss, and Chief Deputy Bob Eaton.

Current county commissioners either had no comment Monday or could not be reached.

Police find man dead outside lounge

Staff Report

ODESSA — Police are investigating the death of a man found unconscious in a car in the parking lot of a lounge Sunday evening, police said.

When police responded to a fight at the El Rancho Grande Lounge, 509 W. Clements Street, they found Demeterio Hernandez, 22, of Odessa, unconscious in a car.

Cause of death was not apparent and an autopsy has been ordered. Police are investigating the death as a possible homicide.

Groups file 'friendly' lawsuit

Odessa minority organizations have filed a "friendly" lawsuit against the Ector County Independent School District in order to expedite ECISD's conversion to single-member districts, an NAACP official said.

Gene Collins, president of Odessa chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the suit — filed Monday in Midland's U.S. District Court — should result in quicker federal approval for the ECISD single-member district plan.

The school board has agreed to the plan in principle and is scheduled to vote on it later this month, Collins said. However, the plan will require federal "preclearance" by either a U.S. District Judge or the U.S. Justice Department, he said.

Collins said preclearance from a judge is quicker and easier to obtain, but requires litigation to be filed.

Representatives of the NAACP and the League of United Latin American Citizens are listed as plaintiffs in the suit.

Collins said ECISD's voting boundaries will include two minority districts under the plan, which was agreed upon in negotiations among district representatives, LULAC and the NAACP.

FORUM: Debate slated Thursday

(From 1B)

"This kind of activity is what CATA is really all about," she said. "The prime goal is not to be solely an adversarial body, but one dedicated to encouraging private citizens to participate in the regular deliberations of taxing entities, to learn how government functions, and, perhaps at some time in the future, to become inspired and dedicated enough to seek to serve their community by filing for a seat on one of our governing bodies.

"Citizens must be educated to know that the public servant seated to represented a constituency is not unapproachable," Mrs. Walger.

"If your representative casts a vote with which you do not agree, phone him and allow him to express the rational behind his decision. At the least, it will let him know there is a citizen-taxpayer-voter interested in what is going on in their behalf."

The general election will be held May 4.

Anderson said that for years society interpreted the Bible as saying "no sex for pleasure was right."

"It was only right if used for procreation," he said. "Sex is still considered wrong in many states where it's wrong for married couples to perform many acts."

"Sex, sex, sex," that's all I am hearing," said Ms. Maehl. "There is a difference between sex and having a relationship. We are avoiding the aspect of relationships."

Ms. Schroeder asked the panel if AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) was still associated with "gay white males."

"We are all at risk," said Barry L. Cole, a local HIV counselor. Cole noted that he has seen an AIDS increase in Hispanic male intravenous drug users.

"But it's hard to track since people becoming infected now may not develop full-blown AIDS until close to the year 2000," he said.

Texas HIV Services advisor Chinwe Odeluga said HIV positive cases she sees are evenly distributed between males and females.

Several audience members said they would take their children out of school if they found a teacher was a homosexual.

"More 'straight' teachers (than homosexual teachers) molest children" Anderson said. "About 99 percent of all children molested are molested by heterosexuals."

Ms. Maehl noted that it was a misconception that all homosexuals are child molesters.

Several MC students said they didn't support homosexuals raising a child.

"It's an oddity for a child to be a homosexual because he or she was raised by a homosexual child," Anderson said.

"I don't think a child should be raised in that kind of sick atmosphere," Shackleford said.

"We seem to be trying to simplify things," said Donna Thompson, a psychology teacher. "Is homosexuality sinful? Is it legal?

'We seem to be trying to simplify things. Is homosexuality sinful? Is it legal?'

— Donna Thompson, psychology teacher

"Homosexuality was once medically defined as abnormal," she said. "We used to say: 'Let's cure it.' As of 1973 it was removed from medical lists as any kind of sick, mentally ill or abnormal problem."

Ms. Thompson said that there was no indication that decisions concerning sexual preference are based on parents. "We have heterosexual parents raising homosexual children," she said.

"America is still very closed-minded concerning sex," Shackleford said. "It is the leading country as far as sexual harassment. We just don't discuss sex at home."

Ms. Odeluga said that in the light of AIDS, sexuality and societal influences on homosexuality "need to be talked about."

MC student considers forming gay/lesbian club

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

While some students at the sexuality panel discussion Monday said homosexuality was morally wrong, others said they were interested in forming a Gay/Lesbian Alliance at Midland College.

"I haven't been actively recruiting anybody, but I am getting a proposal together to form the club," said MC student body president Arnulfo Zamora.

Zamora said he is interested in forming the club to provide a "political base for equal rights on campus."

He said many MC students have negative misconceptions about homosexuals.

"People don't talk about homosexuality here. They don't talk about sex here," he said.

Other MC students brought up the issue of having the Gay/Lesbian Alliance on campus during a "talk show" initiated by students Monday. Some discussion also involved installing condom dispensing machines in MC rest rooms.

Students addressed a panel of teachers, social workers and several representatives of homosexual communities.

Panelist and MC Dean Camal Dakil said "All clubs are approved through student activities. Truthfully, I think it would meet some resistance from the community. This is a community college and we would have to ask: 'How does it fit in with the philosophy of the college?' "

The dean said approving a club depends on the club philosophy.

"I'm not sure I would recommend a student join a club which stresses sexuality as the first defining characteristic. It's not good to over identify with your own sexuality," said Jerry Franks, an MC teacher and panelist.

Ronnie Anderson, a representative of the Gay/Lesbian Alliance at the University of Alabama, said his club is a political and social organization. "Our first concern is educating the media," he said.

"Our group is based on obtaining ideals, beliefs, freedoms and rights, including women's rights. We aren't out to have just a social club. We are not a dating service and we don't sit around psychoanalyzing each other," he said.

Zamora said he wanted to have a place where homosexuals could relate to each other and deal with their homosexuality in the open.

The student body president said student senate members have also discussed providing condom dispensing machines for campus rest rooms as "a gift to the administration."

"We need to deal with these issues," he said.

Anderson agreed. "It's not easy being homosexual and being accepted. I didn't realize that this was the lifestyle I should be living until I was 19. I changed by lifestyle to fit what's inside."

Zamora added that forming the club was still in the planning stages and would depend on student interest.

TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The business outlook is especially promising for those who are self-employed. Members of small business concerns must be sure to do their fair share. Cultural activities could help you win wider public recognition in September. Those involved in the entertainment world are most likely to sell a book or land a plum role in November. An investment portfolio leads to a sizable windfall in early 1992.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: aviator Wilbur Wright, actress Ellen Barkin, basketball great Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, actor Peter Ustinov.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The promise of financial gain is strong today. Remember your values in both thought and deed. An outpouring of love and benevolence will help you win over former enemies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An excellent day to discuss your goals with loyal followers. Guard your domestic privacy but maintain a high profile at work. You have all the data you need to make a business decision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep a clear head during business hours. Drinking alcohol at lunch can dull your judgment. Give your associates the encouragement they need. An afternoon revelation could transform your life.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your confidence in someone is renewed. You look ahead to more promising days. Lots of changes are in the works. Financial considerations will determine certain social choices.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make a new professional start today. Look to your loved ones for support and guidance. Long-term business prospects are excellent. Hobbies and research projects enjoy highly favorable influences.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Professional concerns are in the spotlight. An authority figure plays a major role. Be prepared to make adjustments. You have a better idea of where a romance is heading. Be sincere.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your creative juices are flowing. New friends and an action-packed social schedule keep you on the run. A professional make-over may be necessary if you want to change your image. Wear bold colors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): An influential person seeks you out. Seize the opportunity to reveal your ambitions. Special favors will be granted, including a bonus. Banish any fear of failure; you are on your way up!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A challenging workday lies ahead. Watch your step when talking with competitors. A social occasion holds special appeal for seniors. Keep in touch with your older loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Seek professional advice before entering into a new agreement. Your conscience helps you make the right decision in a difficult personal matter. Do not forget that you are part of a team.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Mental pursuits are favored today. Work conditions improve following a constructive conversation with an authority figure. A sensitive counselor could help you deal with a troubling situation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stick to projects already under way. You are on the right track. Emphasize sincerity over arm-twisting maneuvers. Put your financial house in order. Making intelligent compromises pays big dividends.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are tenacious, hard-working and very affectionate. Praise works wonders with these eager-to-please youngsters. Artistically and musically inclined, they could grow up to be designers or composers. Although confident of their abilities, these Aries may balk at being pushed into the limelight. Colors are very important to them. Let them choose their own clothes as much as possible.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣

We'll give you an edge that you won't get at the table. Study all four hands and then decide whether, after West leads the king of clubs, you would rather play or defend a contract of four hearts by South.

South's hand was worth an opening bid of four hearts at any vulnerability. There are six playing tricks in the trump suit, and the diamond holding is worth a length trick as well as one on power.

Let's suppose you choose to play four hearts. If, after the king of clubs wins as East signals encouragement with the nine, West were to continue with a club, you would have an easy path to 10 tricks. You would win any continuation and lead the king of hearts, and the ace would be the defenders' third and last trick.

A more enterprising defense would be for West to shift to a diamond at trick two. If declarer wins and routinely goes about extracting trumps, the defenders will prevail. West can win the ace of hearts on the first or second round of trumps, get to East with the ace of clubs and score a diamond ruff to scuttle the contract.

However, don't bet too much on being able to defeat the game. A fine declarer can foil even your best efforts.

Obviously, West's shift to a diamond is, more than likely, a singleton. If West has more than one trump and East the ace, South is fighting a lost cause. The only hope is that West holds both major-suit aces. Declarer must win the diamond in dummy and lead the king of spades at trick three. If East fails to cover, South must not ruff; instead, declarer discards the remaining club. As the cards lie, there is now no way for East to gain the lead to give West a diamond ruff. Declarer can go about forcing out the ace of trumps and raking in 10 tricks.

Jennings admits he studied for GED because of his son

TULSA, Okla. — Country singer Waylon Jennings admits that studying for hours on the road so he could pass his high school equivalency exam did nothing to boost his career.

Jennings

But he says he couldn't preach the importance of education to his 11-year-old son unless he had a diploma himself.

Jennings, who passed the General Education Development test in December 1989 at age 52, spoke Sunday at a banquet that kicked off a three-day conference sponsored by the National Drop-Out Prevention Center at Clemson University.

"I wanted him to know how important it was to me," he said of his son, Shooter. "If he doesn't have an education today, he doesn't have a chance. When you quit school, you limit yourself the rest of your life.

"If I didn't have a God-given talent, I don't know where I'd be."

Jennings' hits include "Mama, Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to be Cowboys," with Willie Nelson, and the theme to "The Dukes of Hazzard" television series.

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Three-time Grammy-winner Ricky Skaggs will be featured at an upcoming Oakland County schools benefit that replaces the usual bake sales and raffles.

"We did the normal small fund-raising activities and came to the conclusion that you really can't function very well if you don't have much cash," said William Bliesath, chairman of the May 18 event at the Palace of Auburn Hills.

The appearance by Skaggs, whose hit records include "Country Boy" and "Lovin' Only Me," is expected to raise up to $150,000 for art and science projects at schools in five county districts.

"We had a lot of mothers bake a couple of cookies, and when they get all done, they get a few pennies. And these are also high burn-out activities," said Bliesath, president of the Clarkston district's educational foundation. "With this event, we'll have more money for the kids and we'll have parents with energy left to spend with the kids."

HUNTINGTON, Ind. — Dan Quayle's Little League uniform, his favorite childhood sweatshirt and a purse made by his mother will be part of a May exhibit devoted to the vice president.

The memorabilia will be on display May 11-20 at the Huntington City-Township Public Library. The event is the first sponsored by the Dan Quayle Commemorative Foundation Inc.

"I want it to be a gala celebration that Huntington, northeast Indiana and the state has a vice president," said David Schenkel, coordinator of the event. "Politics aside, that's an honor."

Quayle graduated from Huntington High School in 1965. He returned to Huntington after graduating from law school in 1974.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Guitarist Chet Atkins says technology can do everything but lend spontaneity to a recording.

"Now you can make perfect records. You can correct all your mistakes," Atkins said in a recent interview.

"The way they make records now, the musicians hardly ever meet. They put their parts on separately. There's a lot of slickness to records now," said Atkins, who has recorded more than 80 solo albums.

Atkins

He won two Grammy awards for "Neck and Neck," a recent collaboration with guitarist Mark Knopfler of the rock 'n' roll band Dire Straits.

That album was recorded in London and Nashville but both men played together on all parts, Atkins said.

"You can speed up electronic drums a little bit, but it's just not the same as when you get all the musicians in the building playing together," he said.

LOS ANGELES — It's a boy for actor James Caan and his wife, Ingrid.

Alexander James Caan was born Wednesday at UCLA Medical Center, the actor's publicist, Paul Bloch, said Monday. The baby weighed 7 pounds, 10 ounces and measured 21½ inches long.

"The baby and mother are terrific and in excellent health. Of course, the father is ecstatic," Bloch said.

It was the first child for Caan, 50, and Ingrid, 30, who were married last September.

Caan was in Los Angeles shooting his next movie, "For the Boys," with Bette Midler. The film will be released later this year, Bloch said.

The Cutting Edge: The knife store with a Southwest flair

For Mother's Day, graduation and wedding gifts, look no further than The Cutting Edge. The Cutting Edge, formerly in Midland Park Mall, is now located in Midland Plaza on Loop 250, just down from Hastings. Not just a knife store anymore, The Cutting Edge's expanded inventory includes a variety of collectibles and home decorating items.

The Cutting Edge is perhaps best known for its big line of all types of knives, ranging from hunting knives to small pocket knives. All are impressively displayed for easy selection. Select from such brand names as Buck, Case, Schrade, Cold Steel, Puma, Swiss Army, Camillus, Eye Brand, Explorers, Kershaw, Gerber and Boker.

A nice line of collectible knives, sharpening stones and steels complete the inventory.

For your kitchen or for a thoughtful, practical wedding gift, select kitchen cutlery from The Cutting Edge.

The store carries fine lines such as Henckels, Gerber, Case, Forschner and others. Knives may be purchased separately or in boxed sets. Chinese cleavers are in supply at The Cutting Edge, as are a number of kitchen tools and gourmet baking items, such as cookie sheets.

Sewers and crafters will appreciate the fine selection of quality sewing scissors and pinking shears by Gingher. Gingher also makes garden nippers for rose bushes, and they would make a great Mother's Day gift.

Straight shaving scissors, accessories and Col. Conk soap make unique and long lasting gifts.

To keep your knives in peak operating condition, take advantage of The Cutting Edge's sharpening service for sewing scissors and knives.

The Cutting Edge is also an excellent source for collectible items such as candles, Windstalker pottery, mandelas, arrowheads, trade beads, Native American artifacts and Tuf Times, the whimsical Western hand painted carved art statues by J.B. Taylor. A new addition to Tuf Times is "I re One," with its own diploma for you to personalize for that special grad. A large line of plaster statues feature the look of bronze without the price. Animals and Western art such as cowboys and large team ropers are popular choices.

New to the store are handpainted bell windchimes, from 18 to 50 inches long. Choose from such great decorating colors as blue, terra cotta and white.

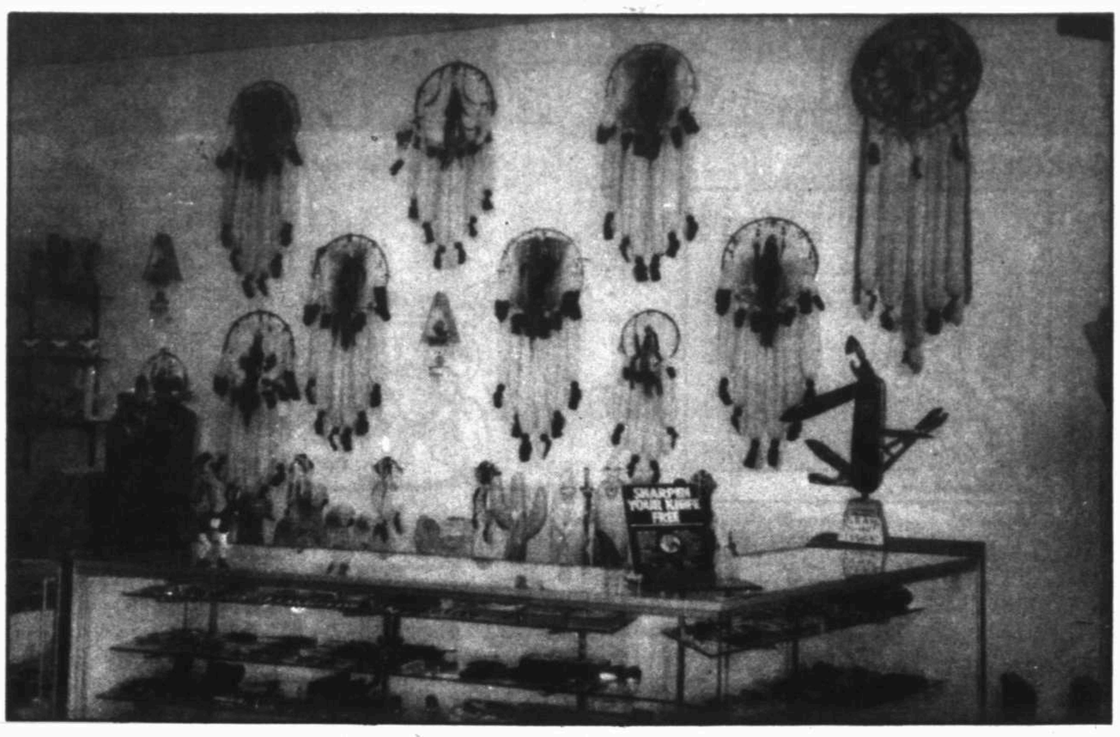

Also new is antler artwork — beautiful decorations for the home which feature genuine antlers. The antler candelabras and bowls are absolutely stunning.

Plan ahead for Mother's Day and stock up on wooden music boxes or a large variety of delightful miniatures for printer's boxes and shadow boxes.

Another great gift idea are Coaster Stones — boxed sets of four coasters in a nice variety of Southwest and Texana, along with beautiful wildflowers and bluebonnets. Also available for men's gifts, are ducks, cars and quail.

The Cutting Edge is also the home of Water Dawg and Bandito products.

Store hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Gift wrapping is free. MasterCard, Visa and American Express cards are welcome. Call 694-8346 for more information.

Just a sampling of many interesting items at The Cutting Edge is this wall of mandelas, which overlook a case of knives. The Cutting Edge is located in Midland Plaza, near Hastings.

Lifetime Siding & Window Co.: Save on siding, storm windows

Have you recently received an estimate for storm windows or siding that you thought was too high? Do you keep painting and repainting the outside of your home because you think maintenance-free siding is too costly?

Just one more estimate might change your mind.

Neil Letkeman, owner of Lifetime Siding and Window Company, encourages you to call 689-0307 now for a free estimate and special savings on storm windows, storm doors and vinyl, steel and cedarwood-style siding. He is able to offer lower pricing on home improvement products and expert installation with screws and rivets, rather than staples, thanks to smaller overhead costs.

Cecil Hernandez, who lives at 4605 Thomason Drive, refers Lifetime Siding and Window Company to his friends and neighbors. "I got several quotes on soffit, fascia and storm windows from other businesses, but no one came close to Neil's bid. We are extremely pleased with his work."

"I had other friends who had some bad experiences with other contractors," Hernandez recalled. "One friend had soffit and fascia installed with staples and before long, it was warping. I won't have to worry about that on my house because Neil uses screws and rivets in his installations."

"The job Neil did for us has really improved the appearance of our home."

Through the end of the year, be sure and save $20 per storm window and storm door from Lifetime Siding and Window Company. Make your home energy efficient, and keep noise and dust to a minimum with storm windows and doors. And don't pass up the additional opportunity to save 20 percent on siding, eaves and overhang improvements.

"If you've ever had an estimate," said Letkeman, "be sure to call and get a money-saving estimate from us. We find that the people who are most pleased with our estimates are those who have had previous estimates from other companies."

"We offer the same materials to our customers that the bigger companies have," Letkeman explained. "Our craftsmen have many years of experience and specialize in installing a variety of improvements."

You won't have to be convinced at the affordability of siding and other home improvements. The dollars and sense of an estimate by Letkeman speaks for itself.

If you own a brick home, Letkeman said, you may not be aware that you, too, can benefit from steel or vinyl siding. If you have any problem areas on your home's exterior which require painting, such as eaves and overhangs, siding is the answer for you. You'll never have to paint again!

You don't even have to do all of the house at once, if your home improvement dollars need to be spread out.

All siding products come with a lifetime warranty system. You can also have insulation installed under your new siding. Lifetime Siding and Window Company also sells and installs at reduced prices other home improvements such as storm and replacement windows and storm doors.

You can count on Letkeman's experience as a home improvement products salesman, manager and applicator when you place your order with the company.

There's no better time than now, with the special incentives for savings, to give Lifetime Siding and Window Company a call. See for yourself how affordable improving your home can be! For a free estimate, please call 689-0307.

Dress your summer best with TANtalizing active, swimwear

Choose from a bright, comfortable and stylish collection of swimwear and activewear at TANtalizing. Brands you can trust such as Jag and DeWeese are available in one or two piece suits, and cover-ups as well. Neet Feet thongs can also add a bright look to your summer wardrobe. Play all day and night in shorts, baggies and shirts by California Imports.

Now that you have your wardrobe ready for hot weather, get a beautiful head start on summer — gradually — with some help from TANtalizing. TANtalizing, located in the San Miguel Square Atrium at the corner of Midkiff and Wadley, has been tanning Midlanders since 1984.

Locally owned by Midlanders Mark and Becky McCraney and operated by them and their qualified staff, TANtalizing is the place to go for an easy-to-achieve year round golden look.

If you haven't tried a tanning bed before, consider this: now you don't have to depend on the weather to get a tan. You don't have to sit out in the hot sun for hours while you sweat and burn, and possibly later, peel.

And then what do you have to show for your efforts?

At TANtalizing, however, you tan under controlled conditions — gradually, just a little bit at a time. You tan in a private room, in tanning equipment which is clean and sanitized after every use. Bring your own tapes or listen to the stereo in your room while you relax and tan. Protective eyewear and clean towels are provided for your comfort and safety.

Many people have found that tanning at TANtalizing not only produces a great tan, but it serves as a form of stress therapy and relaxation.

How fast can you get a tan? As an example, if you are a person whose skin burns moderately and tans easily, the TANtalizing staff will recommend that you gradually tan with one to three 15 minute treatments, followed by four to six 20 minute treatments and then seven to ten 30 minute treatments. This schedule is based on everyday or every-other-day tanning. Different skin types will follow a different recommended schedule.

It is then recommended that you maintain your tan with one or two 30 minute treatments per week. Clients can tan with individual sessions or one to three month memberships.

TANtalizing has recently expanded its line of skincare products. Choose from a complete line of accelerators, gels, sprays, lotions and moisturizers. Each one is specifically designed for indoor tanning and tan enhancement. Also select bath gels and hair and body shampoos.

The key to the continued success of TANtalizing is a continuous commitment to industry-sponsored education and a highly trained staff.

Watch for details on a San Miguel Square beach party, which will include TANtalizing, next month.

TANtalizing hours are Monday through Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. and 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturdays. Charge your visits or merchandise on your Visa, MasterCard, American Express or Discover. Call the friendly staff at 699-6698 for information.

Phelps retires

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Notre Dame basketball coach Digger Phelps said today he was retiring from coaching after 20 years with the Fighting Irish.

"For the last two decades, it has never been a job," Phelps said. "Every day, despite the ups and downs, was like Christmas Day when you opened up the present you wanted most."

Phelps, the subject of resignation rumors after Notre Dame went 12-20 this season, said he had no immediate plans.

"It's time to move into the next decade," he said.

Earlier, Phelps' son wrote in a student newspaper that his father would announce his retirement today.

Rick Phelps, sports editor of The Collegian at the University of Toledo, wrote in a column that his father would leave the Fighting Irish after 20 years. Phelps said his father, who turns 50 on July 4, plans to spend time with a soon-to-be-born first grandchild.

Phelps was regularly booed at home games this season, Notre Dame's worst since going 6-20 in his first year at the school.

He compiled a 393-197 record at Notre Dame and took 14 Fighting Irish teams to the NCAA tournament. Including one year as head coach at Fordham, Phelps has a head coaching record of 419-200.

However, only one of his Notre Dame teams ever reached the Final Four.

Europeans continue title roll

■ Ian Woosnam joins a long list of Europeans who own a green jacket from the Masters.

Associated Press

LONDON — They come in all sizes and shapes, with different personalities and nationalities.

But what Ian Woosnam, Nick Faldo, Sandy Lyle, Seve Ballesteros and Bernhard Langer have in common is a green jacket — and their role in the European dominance of the Masters for the past decade.

Woosnam's one-shot victory over Spaniard Jose-Maria Olazabal on Sunday marked the sixth time in the last nine years — and seventh time since 1980 — that a European had won the world's most prestigious golf tournament.

Woosnam, a Welshman, gave Britain its fourth consecutive victory. Englishman Faldo won it in 1990 and 1989, while Scotland's Lyle was the champion in 1988.

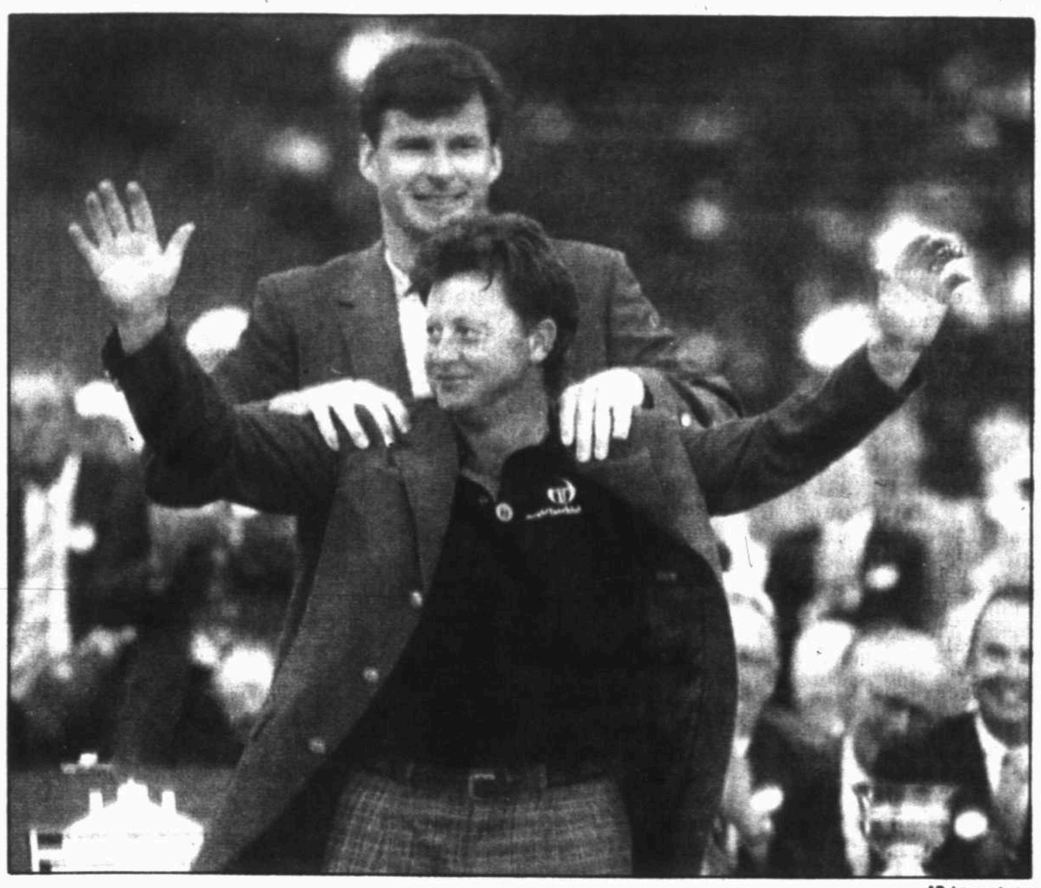

There are a plethora of theories to explain Europe's success, ranging from the lack of a killer instinct in young American golfers to the advantages of playing in widely varied conditions throughout Europe.

There is no single personal or physical trait shared by the five Europeans who have captured the champion's green jacket.

Woosnam is short and pudgy, while Faldo is tall and lean. Lyle is the son of a golf pro, while Woosnam's father is a dairy father. Ballesteros, winner in 1980 and 1983, comes from a golfing family. Langer's father escaped from a Soviet prisoner of war train.

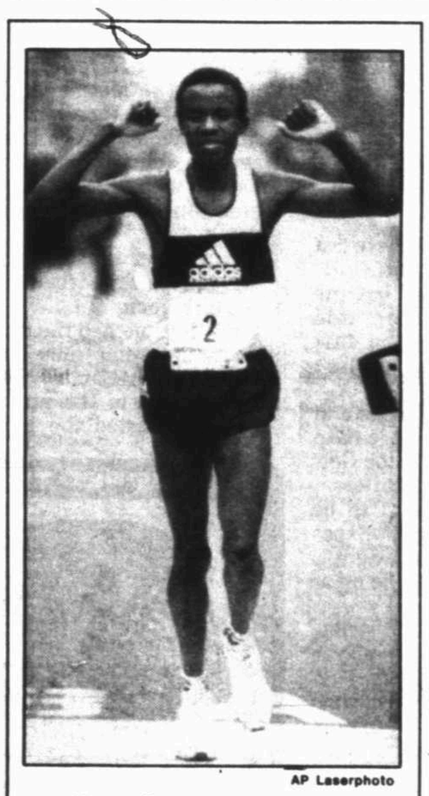

But the ascendancy of the Europeans no longer can be considered a fluke or a phase. While Ballesteros, Lyle and 1985 Masters champion Langer are fading, Woosnam, Olazabal and Faldo are ranked 1-2-3 in the world.

And unlike many of the top Americans, who are in their 40s, the trio is young. Woosnam and Faldo are 33, Olazabal is 25.

Kenya's Ibrahim Hussein ...another win at Boston

Africans dominate marathon

Associated Press

BOSTON — For the first 92 years of the Boston Marathon, no African runner won the race.

Ibrahim Hussein of Kenya ended that drought in 1988, beating Juma Ikangaa of Tanzania by one second in the closest Boston Marathon ever.

Monday, the 32-year-old Hussein won again, the third victory by an African in the past four years. This time, Hussein won easier than three years ago.

Running a smart, controlled race, staying with the lead pack throughout, Hussein was timed in 2 hours, 11 minutes, 6 seconds, beating Abebe Mekonnen of Ethiopia, the 1989 champion, by more than 50 yards.

Mekonnen came on fast in the closing miles and overtook Andy Ronan of Ireland in the final mile, finishing second in 2:11:22. Ronan was third in a personal-best 2:11:27, while favorite Douglas Wakiihuri of Kenya, winner of three straight marathons over the past two years, wound up sixth in 2:13:30.

The women's favorite, Ingrid Kristiansen of Norway, also was badly beaten, losing for the first time after six victories since 1985.

The women's 1-2 finish was the same as at the New York City Marathon in November, with Wanda Panfil of Poland the winner in 2:24:18, the second-fastest ever by a woman at Boston, and Kim Jones of Spokane, Wash., the runner-up. It was the first victory by a Polish runner — man or woman — in the Boston Marathon.

Second place up for grabs

■ Today's District 4-5A baseball winner between Midland High and San Angelo owns second place.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Even though San Angelo has not been able to crack the Top 2 in the District 4-5A baseball standings, the Bobcats will offer plenty of challenge for Midland High as the Bulldogs travel to San Angelo for a 4:30 p.m. game today.

In other 4-5A games today, Odessa Permian visits a red-hot Abilene High team, a rejuvenated Odessa High entertains Abilene Cooper and Midland Lee takes the day off.

With MHS battling Lee for the league lead all season, San Angelo has not-so-quietly been breathing down both local teams necks. While Lee is alone in first place with a 15-8 overall and 7-2 district record, the Bulldogs are 10-9 and 6-3 after a 9-6 loss to Odessa High Saturday.

But the Bobcats, who blew a chance to pass MHS by losing 5-4 in eight innings to AHS Saturday, are still just ½-game off the Bulldogs' pace at 12-11-0 and 5-3.

In the first meeting between the two teams, March 23 at Angels Stadium, the 'Dogs exploded for 11 runs while San Angelo committed five errors in the third inning and a total of seven in the game.

The pitching matchup will be the same as the first game, as MHS senior James Madrid is expected to take the hill against Bobcat Ethan Lopez. Lopez has a 7-2 record with a 2.22 ERA, but took his last loss against the Bulldogs.

In that game, Lopez allowed nine hits and 10 runs, eight earned, in 4⅔ innings of work. The first game also was Madrid's first appearance in two weeks because of a tender throwing arm.

However, he struck out nine and allowed one earned run while getting a full game under his belt. Since then, Madrid (5-1) has not lost while posting a 1.26 ERA and averaging more than 1½ strikeouts an inning in district games.

And even though Madrid was rested for OHS, Bulldog head coach Rick Wood opted to save him for this game and started junior Brian Rounding against the Bronchos. Rounding posted an effective outing with 3⅔ solid innings, but was removed after defensive gaffs got him in a jam.

"We feel we have to beat San Angelo and, really with Brian getting into shape after a slow start because of basketball, it was his turn to throw the ball," Wood said after the loss to OHS.

4-5A NOTES: Lee moved into the state's Top 10 for the first time this season, moving into the 10th position ranking. The poll is compiled by the Texas High School Baseball Coaches Association and the Houston Post.

Angels beat Wichita in 11

■ Marcus Lawton delivers as Midland gains its second consecutive Texas League victory.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

If Midland manager Don Long's theory is correct, the Angels have gotten over the jitters of their first pair of Texas League baseball games.

After dropping the first two games to Wichita in the season opening series, Midland earned its second straight win over the Wranglers in a 7-6, 11-inning game Monday at Angels Stadium.

"It's a continuing thing to be able to be put in a situation where you can have success, and I think we got past the nervousness of the first couple of nights," said Long, who saw his troops ding out 14 hits.

And the Haloes, now 2-2 for the season, did have success, doing it in something of a dramatic fashion. After starting pitcher Dave Shotkoski put in six innings and left with a 4-2 lead, Wichita began to make its presence known. The Wranglers (2-2) scored three runs in the seventh to take a 5-4 lead, despite only one earned run being credited to Angel middle reliever Sherman Corbett.

Wichita added an insurance run in the top of the ninth and looked to be well on its way to win No. 3. But in the bottom of the ninth Angel shortstop Damion Easley took a one-out base on balls and Bobby Jones reached on a fielder's choice that should have put Easley out.

But Wrangler second baseman Luis Lopez pulled his foot off the bag hauling in the 5-4 throw, allowing pinch hitter Daryl Sconiers a chance to be the hero.

Sconiers came through with a single to left field that scored Easley and moved Jones to second. Kevin Flora followed with a deep flyout to center that sent Jones to third, and designated hitter Ramon Sambo, who was 4-for-5 on the night, tied the game at 6-6 by driving Jones home with a deep infield shot that Lopez stopped, but could not make the throw on.

Marcus Lawton ended the inning with a strikeout to sent the game into extra innings, but he would have a chance to make up for it.

After Wichita failed to scored in 10th and 11th and the Angels went quietly in the 10th, Midland began to light up reliver Brian Wood. Easley reached on a bouncer to the hole between shortstop and third base, then Jones took Wood to right for a single. Flora came up after Kevin Davis struck out and drove another hit to right.

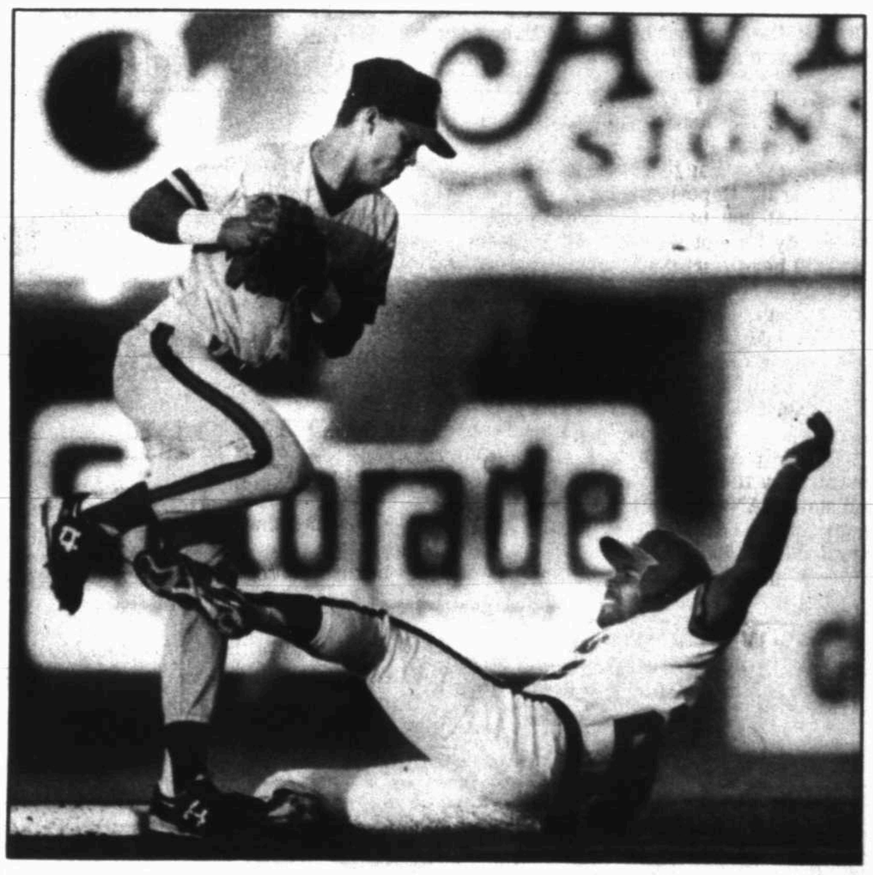

Easley made the turn at third and headed for the game-winner, but was thrown out at the plate by Wrangler right fielder Tim McWilliam. Wood then intentionally walked Sambo, setting the stage for Lawton.

"My first impression (upon seeing the intentional walk) was 'OK, here we go, I have got another chance.' I didn't want to do what I did in my last at-bat," Lawton said.

So he stepped up and took Wood's first pitch straight up the middle to drive in Jones for the victory.

"It was a little slider. I was looking for

AL Roundup

BOSTON — Brook Jacoby broke up the longest scoreless tie in Fenway Park since 1983, hitting a home run in the 13th inning as the Cleveland Indians beat the Boston Red Sox 1-0 Monday.

Former Midland Cub Dennis Lamp (0-1), the fourth Boston pitcher, retired Albert Belle to start the 13th before Jacoby hit the next pitch over the screen atop the left-field wall for his first homer of the season.

Steve Olin (1-0) bailed out starter Charles Nagy with one out in the ninth inning and held the Red Sox hitless for 3⅓ innings before giving way to Doug Jones in the 13th. Jones earned his third save of the season.

The 12 scoreless innings were the most in Boston since Texas beat the Red Sox 1-0 in 14 innings on April 17, 1983.

Boston's Matt Young, 0-4 against Cleveland last season while pitching for Seattle, hooked up in a scoreless pitching duel with Nagy.

Young allowed two hits in nine innings — singles by Jacoby in the fourth and Jeff Manto in the ninth. He walked six, including a pair in the second and seventh innings, and struck out four.

Athletics 5, Angels 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Jose Canseco broke a seventh-inning tie with a three-run homer as Cy Young winner Bob Welch led the Oakland Athletics past the California Angels.

The loss, in the Angels' home opener, denied them their best start ever. They dropped to 5-2 and matched the club best, set three times previously. It was the fifth consecutive victory for Oakland, the three-time American League champions.

Blue Jays 4, Tigers 3

DETROIT — Kelly Gruber homered for the second consecutive game and Toronto beat Detroit for their best start since 1984.

Toronto leads the American League East with a 6-2 record, topping its previous eight-game best of 5-3 in 1977 and 1984.

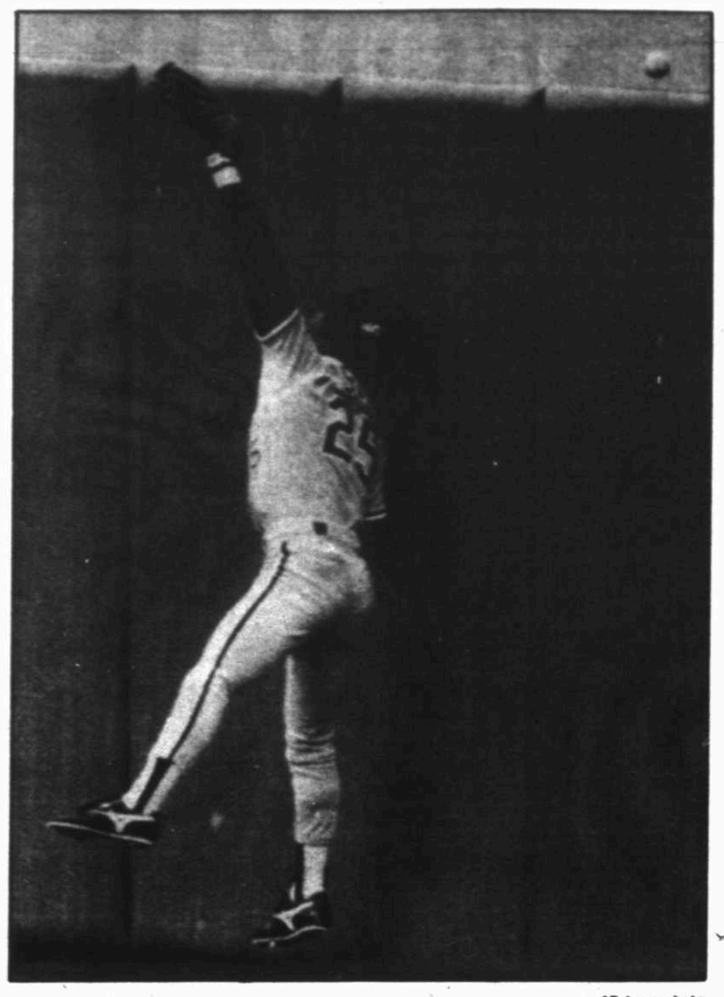

Todd Stottlemyre (1-0) allowed two runs, only one of them earned, on four hits in six innings. He struck out eight and walked five. Jim Acker pitched two innings and Duane Ward finished the five-hitter for his first save.

Mariners 8, Twins 4

SEATTLE — Seattle won its first game of the season, stopping a six-game losing streak behind home runs from Edgar Martinez and Tracy Jones.

Randy Johnson (1-1) scattered seven hits, struck out six and walked four to end the worst start in the Mariners' 15-year history. Johnson led off four innings with walks, committed a balk and threw a wild pitch.

Martinez gave Seattle a 3-0 lead in the first inning off Allan Anderson (1-1) with his second home run of the season. Harold Reynolds and Jones opened the inning with singles.

Chicago White Sox outfielder Sammy Sosa jumps but can't reach a ball hit by New York Yankee Kevin Maas.

Anderson, 7-18 last season after winning 17 games in 1989, was pounded for six earned runs and eight hits in 2 2-3 innings.

White Sox 6, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — The Chicago White Sox remained baseball's only unbeaten team, sloshing to their fifth straight victory, all on the road, and spoiling the New York Yankees' home opener on four hits by former Midland Cub Scott Fletcher.

Robin Ventura and Fletcher, who went 4-for-4, each hit two-run homers early off Scott Sanderson before Frank Thomas' single in the seventh made it 5-4.

Orioles 7, Brewers 2

MILWAUKEE — Sam Horn hit a grand slam and Glenn Davis got his first American League homer as Baltimore beat Milwaukee in its home opener.

Cal Ripken added a two-run homer and two singles as the Orioles handed Chris Bosio his first loss in April since 1988.

Associated Press

NL Roundup

ATLANTA — Jeff Bagwell's first major-league homer, a two-run shot in the ninth inning, gave the Houston Astros a 3-1 victory over the Atlanta Braves on Monday night.

Ken Caminiti, who had three hits, singled with two outs off Kent Mercker (0-1) and Bagwell followed with a drive over the left-field fence.

Bagwell, acquired from Boston last season for reliever Larry Andersen, won a job with Houston by having a strong spring training.

Houston reliever Al Osuna (1-0) picked up the victory by pitching two-thirds of an inning and Curt Schilling got the last two outs for his second save.

The Astros tied it 1-1 in the sixth when Craig Biggio hit a home run over the left-field fence off starter John Smoltz. It was Biggio's second of the year and extended his hitting streak to six games.

Mets 9, Pirates 3

PITTSBURGH — Howard Johnson drove in four runs, including a run-scoring single in a six-run ninth inning, to carry New York over Pittsburgh and keep David Cone undefeated in seven career decisions against the Pirates.

With the score 3-3, reliever Bob Kipper (1-1) started the ninth by walking Gregg Jefferies and Vince Coleman. The Mets broke the tie when Kipper threw wildly on Keith Miller's bunt single. Dave Magadan, Johnson and Tom Herr followed with RBI singles as the Mets won their third straight game.

Kevin Elster then drove in two more runs with a triple to break the game open.

Cone (1-0), pitched the first eight innings, allowing nine hits and three runs. Alejandro Pena retired the side in the ninth.

Johnson started the second inning with the the eighth upper-deck home run in the 20-year history of Three Rivers Stadium. He hit Zane Smith's 3-2 pitch off the facing of the fifth level of seats to become the fifth player to reach the upper deck.

Dodgers 2, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Tim Belcher scattered five hits in 6 2-3 innings and survived three Los Angeles errors as the Dodgers defeated San Francisco in the Giants' home opener on a cold and windy night.

As temperatures fell into the 40s and winds reaching 20 mph whipped across Candlestick Park, Belcher and two relievers surrendered one unearned run to a Giants offense that scored more runs than any other major league team the first week of the season.

Cubs 5, Phillies 4

CHICAGO — Greg Maddux pitched three-hit ball for seven innings and Andre Dawson hit his first home run of the season as Chicago took advantage of four wild pitches by starter Jason Grimsley to beat Philadelphia.

Maddux (2-0) retired nine consecutive batters after John Kruk's fourth- inning single and worked out of trouble in the seventh inning. Paul Assenmacher pitched a hitless eighth and Dave Smith finished for his third save despite allowing Dale Murphy's leadoff homer in the ninth.

Grimsley allowed four runs and six hits in 5⅔ innings, walked four and struck out four. Two of his wild pitches resulted in runs.

Cardinals 5, Expos 4

MONTREAL — Pedro Guerrero hit two homers, including a leadoff blast in the ninth inning that sparked a three-run St. Louis rally in Montreal's home opener.

With the Cardinals trailing 4-2, Guerrero opened the ninth with a homer off Tim Burke (1-1). Felix Jose followed with a single and scored when Todd Zeile tripled off the center field fence. Zeile then scored the go-ahead run on Tom Pagnozzi's sacrifice fly to right.

Cris Carpenter (1-0) pitched two-thirds of an inning for the win.

Week One: Some hot, some not

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

One week into the season, here's what's happening:

— Who's Hot: Kevin Mitchell and Dave Winfield, Roger Clemens and Dwight Gooden.

Mitchell homered in his first three games, coming within one of Willie Mays' all-time record for fast starts, and leads the majors with five home runs. Winfield hit three homers in a game for the first time in his career, and leads the majors with 12 RBIs and is batting .409.

"When you're locked in, you're plain locked in," Winfield said. "I've been that way all spring."

— Who's Not: Darryl Strawberry and Cecil Fielder, Doug Drabek and Dave Stieb.

Strawberry is 3-for-19 and Fielder and Glenn Davis both are 3-for-18. Strawberry, Fielder, Davis, Mark McGwire, George Bell and Will Clark have combined for zero home runs; Bill Spiers, a Milwaukee infielder who hit six home runs in 708 at-bats before this year, already has three.

"It looks like he's a little anxious," San Diego's Tony Gwynn said after seeing Strawberry struggle in his first game at Dodger Stadium.

Drabek, the National League Cy Young winner, is 0-2 with a 7.00 ERA. Stieb (7.36 ERA) and Scott (12.86 ERA) each lost their first two starts and Mark Davis has a 20.25 ERA after two relief appearances.

— Who's In: Albert Belle and Mike Timlin, Kirk Dressendorfer and Joe Slusarski.

Belle, called Joey before undergoing alcohol rehabilitation last year, led all spring training hitters with 11 home runs and 26 RBIs. He's homered three times for Cleveland in games that count.

Timlin is 2-0 with a 0.00 ERA in relief for Toronto and Slusarski and Dressendorfer each starred in their major-league debuts as starters for Oakland.

Slusarski's name was spelled "Sluzarski" on his hastily assembled uniform. The tape above his locker had it like that, too.

"That's OK. It's easier to pronounce that way," he said, sounding every bit the humble rookie.

— Who's Out: Rickey Henderson and Barry Bonds. Both MVPs are out with injuries, hurt while hustling.

A lot going on, for just seven days. And there's more, because so far it's been the year of the:

— The Near No-Hitter: Scott Sanderson and Dennis Martinez, almost picking up where last season's record nine no-hitters left off.

"The pitchers have been in form, but the weather has been obviously a big factor," said Detroit's Alan Trammell, who hit the first home run of the year. "Cold weather just isn't conducive to hitting."

Rain already has claimed a few games and delayed another in Pittsburgh for more than two hours. But steady showers didn't stop Gooden from striking out 14 Montreal batters.

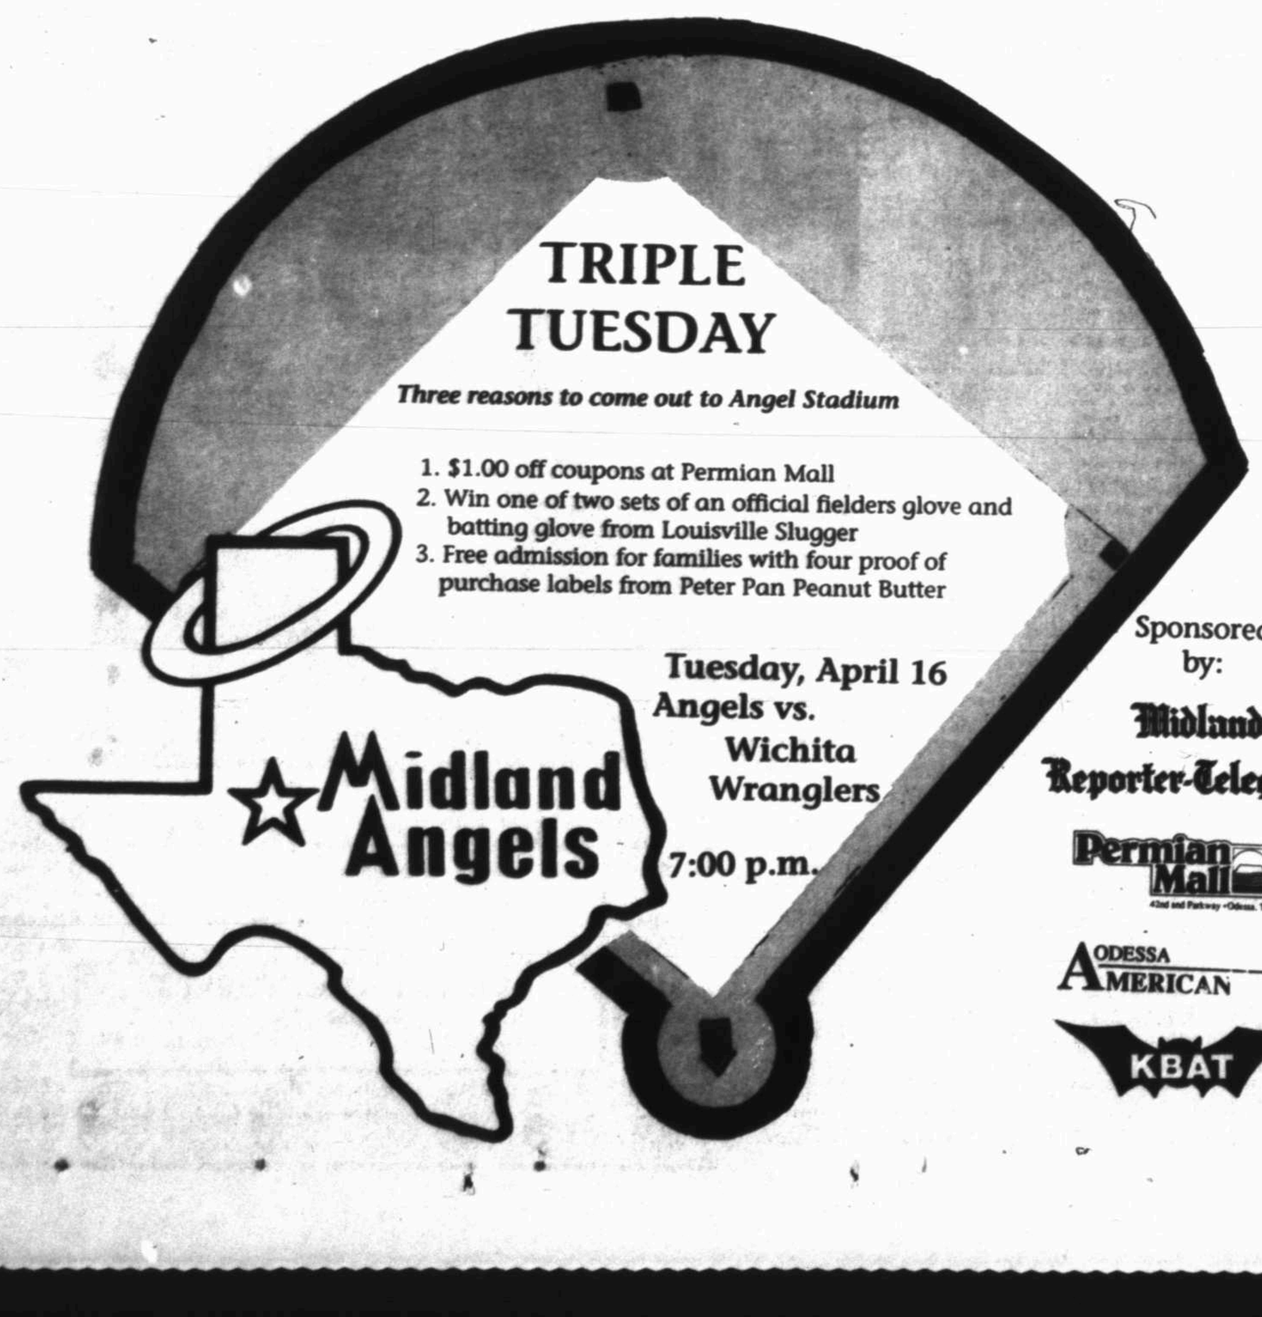

"On days like that, you don't want to be standing out in the field, getting wet," Expos reserve Tom Foley said. "And when Dwight is throwing like that, you don't want to be up at the plate."

Gooden is 2-0 with a 2.12 ERA and 21 strikeouts in 17 innings. Clemens, the only player making more than Gooden, is even better — 2-0, one earned run in 17 innings, 17 strikeouts and no walks.

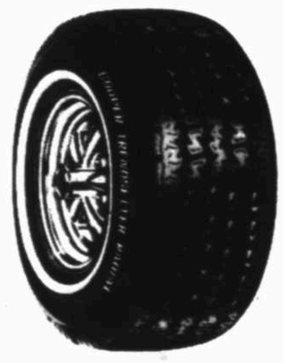

"That," Cleveland's Carlos Baerga said after Clemens' three-hitter Saturday, "is why they pay him $5 million."

Jack McDowell also is 2-0 with a 2.00 ERA and 20 strikeouts for the Chicago White Sox, baseball's last undefeated team.

President Bush doesn't make anything close to the average major league salary of $891,000, but then again, he doesn't throw 90 mph.

ANGELS: Rubber game with Wichita on line today

a hard pitch I could take back up the middle. Not that I hit it all that hard, but I still hit it," he said.

The win for the Angels also evened the season series up at 2-2. Midland and Wichita will play the rubber match of the five-game set at 7 p.m. tonight in Angels Stadium, then the Angels will host El Paso for five games.

ANGEL NOTES: Center fielder Tim Salmon continued to send home runs away from left field Monday, as he gave the ball a 400-foot ride to center in his first at-bat. His first homer of the season Sunday night went to right ... Shotkoski pitched last season in Parma, Italy. Monday's start was his first in the U.S. since 1987. He has also played in the Atlanta Braves and Oakland Athletics systems.

Riders punish Skyhawks

Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — Broderick Graves rushed for 92 yards and two touchdowns and Ricky Blake ran for 140 yards and another score Monday night as the San Antonio Riders trampled the winless Raleigh-Durham Skyhawks 37-15.

Blake had 83 yards in the first half as defense and special teams helped the Riders (2-2) take a 16-0 halftime lead. Raleigh-Durham (0-4) has been outscored 130-52.

Graves scored on runs of 5 and 24 yards in the second half and Blake added an 8-yard run as San Antonio controlled the game with its rushing attack. The Riders ran for 290 yards and had 477 yards of total offense.

WLAF Roundup

Monarchs 27, Fire 0

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — London quarterback Jim Gelbaugh threw for 302 yards and two touchdowns to lead the unbeaten Monarchs to a 27-0 win over Birgmingham.

London is now 4-0 in the young WLAF season while the Fire drops to 1-3.

Home run leader suspended

NEW YORK (AP) — Kevin Mitchell of the San Francisco Giants was suspended for two games and fined an undisclosed amount by National League president Bill White on Monday for his role in a brawl on April 10 at San Diego.

The suspension is set to begin Tuesday, when the Giants play Los Angeles. Mitchell could delay the suspension by filing an appeal with White. If an appeal is filed, any penalty would not be imposed until after a hearing.

"We're going to make decision in the morning," said Mitchell's agent, Joe Sroba.

Mitchell, whose five home runs lead the major leagues, was brushed back by Padres pitcher Bruce Hurst in the fourth inning of last Wednesday's game after hitting a home run in his first at-bat. Mitchell was restrained from going after Hurst following the brushback pitch, but charged the mound when the next pitch bounced and hit him in the foot.

Mitchell hit Hurst with a body block before being tackled by the Padres' Fred McGriff and was ejected from the game.

Tony Dorsett gets movie role

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys running back Tony Dorsett stymied NFL foes on the football field, and now he's ready to do the same on the big screen in an action adventure film.

Dorsett will star with David Carradine in a Vietnam action adventure feature titled "Kill Zone," said the former player's Santa Barbara, Calif.-based press agent Milton Kahn.

"They wanted a superstar's name," Kahn said Monday. "Tony's interested in show business. Why not Tony?"

In the film, Dorsett will portray a Marine sergeant who is sent out on a secret mission to destroy an enemy dump.

Dorsett's agent, Chris Schiffrin of Contemporary Agency in Beverly Hills, Calif., negotiated the role for Dorsett with Roger Corman's Concorde productions Friday.

"It's a good role. He's been exploring it," Schiffrin said.

Corman, who has made such B movies as "Attack of the Crab Monsters," and "Teen-age Caveman," also made the original "The Little Shop of Horrors," featuring Jack Nicholson, in 1960.

Corman is credited with giving early breaks to aspiring Hollywood newcomers such as Nicholson, Sylvester Stallone, Martin Scorsese, Charles Bronson and Ellen Burstyn.

Pitt Penquins blank Devils

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jiri Hrdina scored twice and Mario Lemieux added a goal before leaving with back spasms as the Pittsburgh Penguins, given an emotional lift by Paul Coffey's unexpected return, beat the New Jersey Devils 4-0 Monday night to win their Patrick Division semifinal series.

Reserve goaltender Frank Pietrangelo, playing only because starter Tom Barrasso has an injured right shoulder, stopped all 27 Devils' shots for the shutout in just the second NHL playoff game of his career.

NHL

The Penguins, who won a division title for the first time in their 24-year history, will meet the Washington Capitals, third-place finishers during the regular season, in the division finals beginning Wednesday night in Pittsburgh.

The Penguins, on the brink of elimination after trailing 3-2 in the best-of-seven series, rode the momentum generated by Saturday's 4-3 victory in New Jersey and Coffey's quick recovery from an eye injury to take a 2-0 lead in the first period.

Coffey, expected to miss the rest of the playoffs with an injured left eye, was cleared to play by team doctors earlier in the day and played his regular shifts wearing a protective face mask.

Coffey scored the Penguins' fourth goal by powering a slap shot from the top of the right circle past goaltender Chris Terreri early in the third period, but the Penguins put the victory on ice well before that.

Tech beats MHS in polo match, 6-2

Staff Report

Midland High's first polo team since 1974 lost to Texas Tech by a 6-2 margin Sunday at the Midland Polo Club.

The Tech team, which has been organized six years, got four goals from Carlos Cranford and one each from Gena Larman and Chris Gailey in the four chukkar match.

MHS got goals from Lauren Beal and Will Shorre.

Jordan scores 46 points

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored a season-high 46 points and the Chicago Bulls won a club-record 58th game by defeating the Milwaukee Bucks 103-94 Monday night.

The Bulls upped their record to 58-21 to surpass the club mark of 57-25 in the 1971-72 season. The victory also gave Chicago a 1½-game lead over idle Boston in the race for the Eastern Conference's best record and homecourt advantage through the playoffs. The loss dropped Milwaukee one game behind Detroit in the race for the third seed in the conference.

Jordan, scoring 40 points for the 10th time this season, had 20 in the first half on the way to surpassing his previous season high of 44 points against Orlando.

Jordan and Hodges teamed up to score 12 of the points in a 14-0 run late in the third quarter as the Bulls turned a 64-62 deficit into a 76-64 advantage.

Lakers 112, Mavericks 106

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson surpassed Oscar Robertson as the NBA's all-time assist leader, getting 19 to lead the Los Angeles Lakers over the Dallas Mavericks.

Johnson, a three-time league MVP, needed nine assists to break Robertson's record of 9,887. He finished the game with 9,898 assists.

NBA Roundup

Johnson tied the record with 6:46 left in the second quarter, setting up James Worthy for a short jump shot. He got his record-breaking ninth assist with 5:44 left in the period, lobbing a pass to Terry Teagle, who made a 15-foot jumper from the right basline.

The game was then stopped and Johnson received a standing ovation from the sellout crowd of 17,505 at the Forum, hugs from his teammates and a trophy from Lakers owner Jerry Buss. The game was delayed for nearly 15 minutes.

Worthy led the Lakers with 23 points. Teagle finished with 21 and Byron Scott added 16 for Los Angeles.

Johnson finished with only seven points.

Timberwolves 112, Kings 94

MINNEAPOLIS — The Sacramento Kings entered the NBA record book the hard way, losing their 35th straight road game when a third-quarter cold spell doomed them.

Sacramento broke the record set by the New Jersey Nets, who lost their final 28 road games last season and first six of this season. The Kings, who are 22-17 at home and 1-38 on the road, last posted a victory away from Arco Arena on Nov. 20 at Washington, the fourth road game of the season.

Rockets 97, Sonics 93

SEATTLE — Otis Thorpe scored 28 points, including the go-ahead basket with 6:05 to play, and the Houston Rockets beat Seattle to pull into a second-place tie with Utah, one game behind San Antonio in the Midwest Division title chase.

The Rockets, 24-6 since the All-Star break, and Jazz are 51-27 overall to San Antonio's 52-26. Each team has four games remaining. Because of tiebreaker formulas, Houston must finish ahead of San Antonio and Utah in order to claim the division title.

The Rockets used free throw shooting to set up the surge that snapped Seattle's five-game winning streak. Five free throws preceded Thorpe's basket that put the Rockets on top for keeps at 86-85. Houston pushed the advantage to 94-85 lead before the Sonics rallied.

Prices rally

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures rallied Monday on speculation that gasoline supplies would stay tight as the warm weather brings on more driving.

The market got an early lift from a weekend fire that halted a significant part of the oil refining capacity at the Phillips Petroleum Co. plant in Sweeny, Texas. Petroleum futures prices gained further momentum on the belief among many traders that the nation's dwindling supply of gasoline may be falling even further.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in May settled at $21.91 per barrel, up 43 cents. Over the past few trading sessions crude has risen to its highest closing levels since Feb. 14, when the settlement price was $22.32 per barrel.

Oil was also given some strength by a report that producing nations were exporting less crude.

Natural gas for delivery in May closed at $1.382, up .6 cent per 1,000 cubic feet.

Stocks recover

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market ended higher Monday in a topsy-turvy session influenced by the Federal Reserve's stance on interest rates and a flurry of corporate earnings reports.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 12.38 to 2,933.17.

Dollar drops

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar fell against other major currencies Monday amid concerns about U.S. interest rates.

The dollar fell more than a pfennig against the mark. In New York, the dollar slumped to 1.6710 marks from late Friday's 1.6880.

The U.S. currency also fell against the Japanese yen, closing at 134.25 yen in New York, down from 136.40 late Friday.

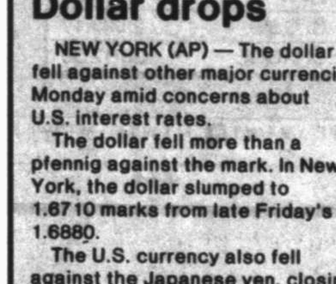

The British pound rose against the dollar. In New York, sterling advanced to $1.7910 from late Friday's $1.7725.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday's rates, included: 1.4185 Swiss francs, down from 1.4320; 5.6385 French francs, down from 5.7020; 1,237.25 Italian lire, down from 1,252.25; and 1.14815 Canadian dollars, down from 1.15085.

Gold prices rose in New York, gaining 30 cents on the Commodity Exchange to $361.60 a troy ounce.

Gold fell in London to a late bid price of $360.50 a troy ounce, from $361.25 bid late Friday.

Silver picked up 0.4 cent to close at $3.981 a troy ounce on the Commodity Exchange.

Western Europe faces uncertain economy

By Steven Greenhouse
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — A year ago, as the United States was sliding toward recession, many European officials boasted that the European Community, spurred by German unification, would take over as the locomotive of the world economy.

Instead, Western Europe's economy has stalled, with the Persian Gulf crisis pushing much of the continent, already weakened by Germany's high interest rate, to the brink of recession.

Worried by the crisis in the gulf, consumers shunned department stores and auto showrooms. As consumer confidence declined and oil prices jumped, businesses had second thoughts about investment. Some industries began idling workers late last year.

Now, the allied victory in the gulf has made European officials optimistic about avoiding a recession and soon picking up speed. Many economists predict that Europe's high interest rates have peaked and that American imports of European goods should grow when the recession in the United States ends.

But few economists foresee a robust European rebound. The "Europhoria" that swept the Continent in the late 1980s, when the prospects of a barrier-free market in 1992 touched off a boom in investment, has given way to a cautious period of "Eurorealism." Executives wonder when consumers are going to rush back to buy cars and computers.

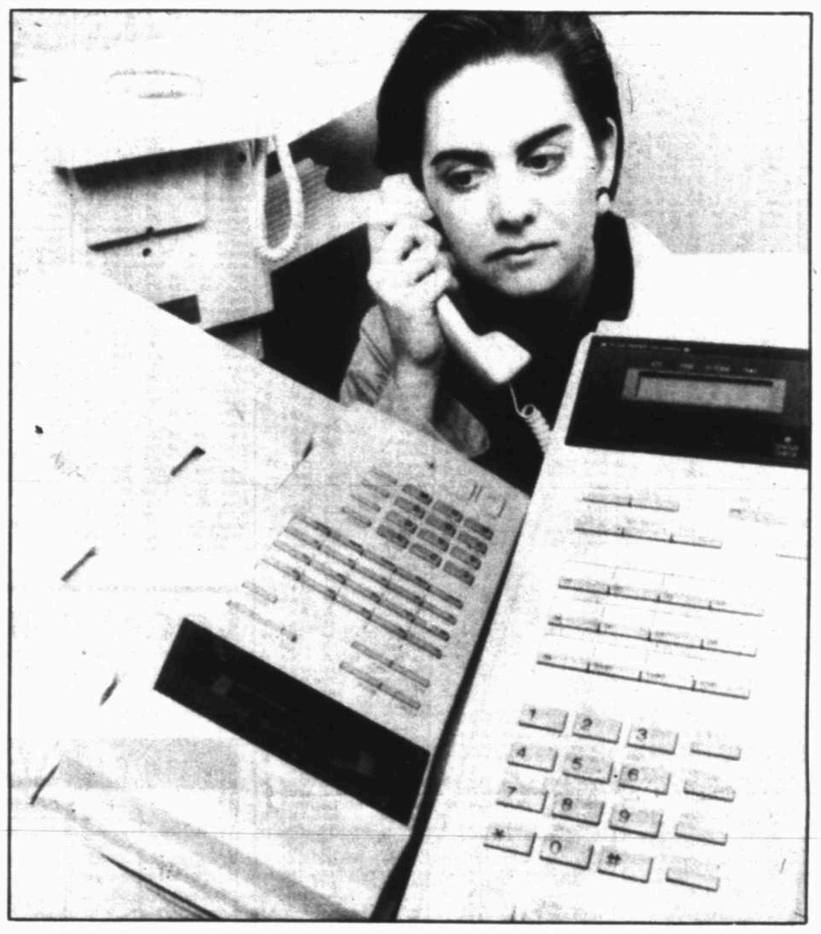

"The situation is very uncertain at the moment," said Ian Harwood, chief economist for Warburg Securities, a London investment bank. "Once the gulf war was over, business confidence was supposed to pick up, but we haven't seen a sharp lift in spirits."

Europe's slump is one factor helping to hold back the U.S. economy. European shoppers are buying less and that is not only hurting American exports but also profits at some of America's largest corporations with major European operations, like the International Business Machines Corp. In addition, Europe's high interest rates have nudged up interest rates in the United States, reinforcing America's recession.

Despite today's bumps and uncertainties, many economists say Western Europe might still enjoy a dynamic decade. "Over all, Europe's prospects for the 1990s are very good indeed," said Richard Portes, director of the Center for Economic Policy Research in London. "That's not to say that Europe is going to grow faster than Japan, but it's likely to grow faster than the U.S."

The European Community's plan to drop tariffs and trade restrictions to form a single market of 340 million people by late 1992 is on schedule, but other ambitious measures have stumbled.

Plans to form a European central bank and adopt a single European currency by the mid-1990s are snarled in debate. Eastern Europe, expected to be a hungry new market for Western Europe, is finding its journey toward Western-style capitalism and prosperity far longer than anticipated. German reunification is proving difficult and expensive as eastern German industry verges on collapse.

Plain fax

A quality control specialist from Sharp Electronics of Mahwah, N.J. tests laser fax models capable of printing on plain bond paper. In little over five years since the start of the facsimile machine boom, over five million units have been sold in the U.S. Sharp recently became the first supplier ever to sell its one-millionth fax domestically.

Court rule may mean big refunds

N.Y. Times News Service

Audits by the Internal Revenue Service usually do not result in windfalls for taxpayers. But many big companies facing audits of tax returns from past years may now be entitled to a big refunds, thanks to a recent court decision, accountants say.

On Thursday, a federal tax court judge rejected the treatment of write-offs of goodwill the Internal Revenue Service sought to impose upon Philip Morris Inc., the tobacco and consumer products concern, as a result of its 1978 hostile takeover of Seven-Up Co.

Had it lost, Philip Morris would have owed an additional $160 million in tax, roughly 20 cents a share.

Companies that followed the rules on goodwill in takeovers that the IRS sought to impose on Philip Morris, would seem to be out of luck. For one thing, transactions that took place after 1986 must be treated in the manner preferred by the IRS, and for another, taxpayers ordinarily have only three years to amend tax returns.

But there is an exception for companies that have agreed to keep their tax books open beyond the statute of limitations because of a pending audit, and there could be hundreds of them.

"Any large company that I have ever been involved with has always had 8 or 10 years open at any point in time," said Robert Willens, a tax expert at Lehman Brothers in New York.

"It's quite an important decision. A lot of companies will be affected by this, for the better," he added.

The IRS has 90 days to decide whether to appeal the decision by Judge Julian I. Jacobs in Washington.

The difference of opinion that led to Thursday's ruling arose because of a sizable goodwill charge that Philip Morris faced when it bought Seven-Up, a soft-drink company.

Goodwill is the difference between what a buyer pays for a company and the value of its hard assets like buildings and inventory. The gap typically reflects the contribution that intangible assets like franchises, patents or brand names make to the business's worth.

Companies generally loath putting goodwill on their books because writing it off over several years hurts their reported earnings and yet is not deductible for tax purposes.

Western Union seeks name change

■ Fighting for survival the firm that linked America coast-to-coast will ask stockholders to change its name.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Western Union Corp. remains one of the best-known U.S. companies, the builder of the telegraph network that linked a young nation and helped generations of Americans announce the births, marriages and other milestones of their lives.

But a long, sorry decline has left the 140-year-old company a shell of its former self. Today, it is fighting for its very survival.

Western Union fell victim to technological advances like the fax machine that made its telegrams and telexes almost obsolete. Its decline was hastened by an expensive unionized work force and crushing interest payments on junk bonds it sold in the 1980s to prop up its faltering finances.

Nearing bankruptcy, the company sold the majority of its operations in the past few years. All that's left of the one-time giant are its money transfer and bill-paying services and several electronic letter-delivery services.

Once the owner of one of the largest communications systems, Western Union now sends its services over leased lines. Among the assets sold were its satellite and phone network.

But in what could be the saddest blow of all, Western Union will ask its stockholders on Thursday to change the company's name.

Western Union's directors believe the once-proud moniker has acquired too many negative connotations due to the company's financial troubles. Should the company file for bankruptcy — an all-too-real possibility — the name would be dragged through even more mud and could hurt its remaining operations, they say.

The company will continue to use the Western Union name for its services, but it wants to change the parent company's name to New Valley Corp. It says the new name harkens back to its founding in 1851 as the New York and Mississippi Valley Printing Telegraph Co.

Back then, Western Union's founders were among the first to see the potential of a telegraph network that would unite the dozens of small systems in operation at the time. During its first five years, it bought 11 other lines in Eastern states and joined them with a line running to Missouri.

In 1861, the renamed Western Union Telegraph Co. completed the first transcontinental telegraph. The innovation ended the need for the pony express — previously the only means of communication with the growing West.

Bank can hold interest until funds collected

By Bill Doyle

Q. When I deposited a large check from a brokerage firm in my bank money market deposit account, the teller put a hold on the check and the money did not earn any interest until that check cleared. I know this because I calculate the interest monthly to keep everybody honest. When I complained, I was told this is the bank's policy and is spelled out in the literature I received when I opened the account.

Doyle

I next went to two other banks I use. At both, I was told such a check would earn interest from the day of deposit but a hold would be placed on the use of the money until the check cleared, which is reasonable. Then, if the check is no good, the interest would be canceled. Again, reasonable.

Is the first bank's action correct or incorrect? Are there any federal regulations on this?

A. The first bank has every right to delay paying interest on the amount of deposited checks until it collects the money involved.

The Expedited Funds Availability Act lays down rules on how long depository institutions, such as banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions are allowed to place holds on deposited checks. But that federal legislation decrees only how long depositors can be prevented from withdrawing money resulting from deposited checks. It does not touch on interest payments.

The law set the following maximum hold periods, effective Sept. 30, 1990:

Money deposited in the form of cashier's checks, certified checks and government checks must be available to depositors the next business day.

"Local" checks written on depository institutions in the same metropolitan area or in the same Federal Reserve check-processing region can be put on hold no longer than two days.

Out-of-town checks can be on hold for five days.

The surprising thing about your letter is that people at two of your three banks say their banks pay interest on money deposited by check from the day of deposit.

Most depository institutions pay interest only on "collected funds," meaning money it has received. It wouldn't make much sense for a bank to pay interest on money it does not have on hand.

Since you pride yourself in "keeping everybody honest," I suggest you double-check the interest payment policies of those two banks. You can do that with your monthly calculation and/or by studying the fine print of your account agreements.

You might find out those two banks are doing the same thing your first bank does.

Q. I took my retirement money in a lump sum and placed it in certificates of deposit. I do not want to take any chances with these funds. A stock broker states I should cash in the CDs and get more interest with Ginnie Maes or Fannie Maes, where he says there is absolutely no risk.

I do not believe these are "no-risk" investments. Are they?

A. No. Ginnie Mae, or GNMA, is the Government National Mortgage Association, a federal government agency. Fannie Mae, or FNMA, is the Federal National Mortgage Association, a stockholder-owned corporation.

"Ginnie Maes" and "Fannie Maes" are the nicknames of "pass-through" securities backed by pools of mortgages. Payment of interest and repayment of principal on Ginnie Maes is pledged by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Treasury. Although Fannie Maes do not have that guarantee, the risk of default if virtually nonexistent.

Nonetheless, between the time those securities are issued and they are fully paid off, their values can rise or fall. That's "market risk." If you buy such securities and later have to sell, you might have either a profit or a loss.

That broker's claim might be written off as over-enthusiastic salesmanship, were it not for the fact that he lied.

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market continued to fluctuate today and posted modest gains after technology issues took a beating and the Federal Reserve indicated it wasn't ready to cut interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was up 9.41 at 2,930.20. Volume on the Big Board was light at 115.41 million shares.

Advancing issued led declines by a ratio of about 7-to-6, with 827 up, 705 down and 486 unchanged by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

After an opening rally, stock prices fell when the Federal Reserve indicated it wouldn't ease interest rates in the wake of last week's favorable inflation report. Technology stocks tumbled after Apple Computer Inc. reported its second quarter net profit was $1.07 per share, compared with $1.04 per share for the same period a year ago.

The weaker-than-expected earnings sent Apple's stock down 8⅞ at 62⅞ in over-the-counter trading.

International Business Machines' stock also depressed the Dow's performance. The giant computer maker, a major component of the Dow Jones average, was down 2⅜ at 106⅛ after it reported a large first-quarter loss last week, said Daino.

Some financial stocks posted good results after release of first quarter earnings reports. Chase Manhattan Corp. said its first quarter net profit was $117 million, or 73 cents per share.

Bidders snap up federal leases

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Willard B. Simmons Jr. had no trouble latching onto better than 3,000 acres in Natchitoches Parish — getting most of it for the minimum bid of $2 an acre.

"This is highly speculative," Simmons said. "It's another form of gambling, but sometimes longshots pay off."

Simmons was one of 75 bidders who divvied up the oil and gas leases on almost 900 tracts of land in seven states auctioned off by the U.S. Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management. It was a record number of bidders for such a sale.

"If I had to say today if we'd drill a well on any of this, I'd say no, but you never know," said Simmons, a certified professional landman for Energy Land Management in Mobile, Ala.

The five-year leases on land in Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Kentucky, Florida, Mississippi and Virginia give a company time to do the tests necessary to determine if a well is feasible, Simmons said.

"Fewer than 10 percent are actually drilled," said Lonna O'Neal of the Eastern States Office of the Interior Department. "In certain areas that figure would go up as high as 50 or 60 percent.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Delaware discovery flows 229 barrels

Staff Report

TEXACO PRODUCING INC. has completd a Delaware discovery in Eddy County, N.M., south of the Remuda field.

On potential test, the No. 1 Malaga Harroun "31" flowed 229 barrels of 47.7 gravity crude, 708 Mcfd and 170 barrels of water on an 18/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 450 psi. The well flowed from perforations 6,360 to 6,386 ft., which had been acidized with 2,000 gallons of 7.5 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 51,000 gallons of gel and 97,000 lbs. 20/40 sand and 15,000 lbs. 12/20 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 3,092:1.

Drilled to 12,082 ft., the well was plugged back to 6,415 ft. A 5 inch liner was set from 10,195 to 12,082 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,943 ft., include the Base Salt at 2,752 ft., Delaware at 2,798, Bone Spring at 6,449, Wolfcamp at 10,190, Strawn at 11,662, and Atoka at 11,906 ft. Pay was topped at 6,360 ft.

Location is 2,012 ft. from north and 1,899 ft. from east lines of Section 31, T23s, R29e.

Schleicher County yields Canyon discovery

Schleicher County has gained a Canyon sand discovery, east of the Chasco field.

REMUDA OPERATING CO., Midland, completed the No. 2 Helmers to pump 38 barrels of 40.4 gravity crude and no water from perforations 4,787 to 4,898 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 6,700 ft. the well was plugged back to 6,498 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 6,528 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,272 ft., formation tops include the Palo Pinto at 5,312 ft., Strawn Sand at 6,199, Strawn Lime at 6,370, and Canyon Sand 4,786 ft.

Location is 568 ft. from south and 3,550 ft. from east lines of Tom Green CSL survey 3, Abst. 540, six miles south of Christoval.

Marathon completes find in Reagan County

A minor Clearfork discovery has been announced in Reagan County, near the Big Lake field.

MARATHON OIL CO., Midland, tested the No. 196 University to pump eight barrels of 40 gravity crude and three barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 4,195 to 4,658 ft., which had been acidized with 5,500 gallons of acid and fractured with 500 sacks of sand. Gas-oil ratio is 375:1.

Drilled to 7,100 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 5,450 ft.

The well topped the Clearfork at 4,100 ft., Upper Spraberry at 5,487, Lower Spraberry at 6,270,and Dean at 6,730 ft. on ground elevation of 2,663 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from north and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 25, Block 9, ULS survey.

DEVELOPMENT WELLS

■ TEXACO STAKES FOUR IN ECTOR FIELD. Texaco Producing Inc., Midland, has staked four wells in the TXL (Tubb) field of Ector County, 21 miles southwest of Goldsmith. All four are in the TXL South Unit, Block 45, T-1-S, T&P survey. Contract depth ranges from 6,500 to 6,700 ft.

■ SIX STAKED IN STERLING FIELD. Wagner and Brown plans to drill six wells in the Conger (Pennsylvanian) field of Sterling County. Contract depth on all six is 8,700 ft.

■ PROGRAM SET FOR GAINES FIELD. Four wells have been staked in the Harris field of Gaines County by Coastal Oil & Gas Corp., Oklahoma City. All four are in the South Harris Unit, Section 15, Block A-22, PSL survey, 11 miles south of Seminole. Contract depth is 6,100 ft.

phones. Its singing messengers and terse telegrams became fixtures in songs and movies. Its transmission network, which covered the nation like a spiderweb, also sent stories for news services and important documents for corporations.

But according to some experts, the seeds for Western Union's decline were sown shortly after its founding: The young company was offered the chance to buy Alexander Graham Bell's patents for the telephone, but turned them down.

"They said it was very frivolous. They said they would stay with telegrams," said industry analyst James McCabe.

He said Western Union also failed to capitalize on other opportunities to leverage its investments in its communications network.

"They had every opportunity to be successful," McCabe said. "There's so much pain in the history of Western Union."

It's not that the company didn't try. It took advantage of new technologies to replace its wires with microwave and satellite links. It entered the long-distance phone business after AT&T lost its monopoly. It even helped develop the Airfone, the airplane-to-ground phone service.

But the company remained saddled by high costs that ate up too much income and a bureaucratic structure that stifled innovation. Both were promoted by years of government regulation of its operations, analysts said.

"They had a work force that was basically blue collar, with very strong labor unions," McCabe said. When improved communications technology reduced the need for maintenance work, "their employees were really obsolete."

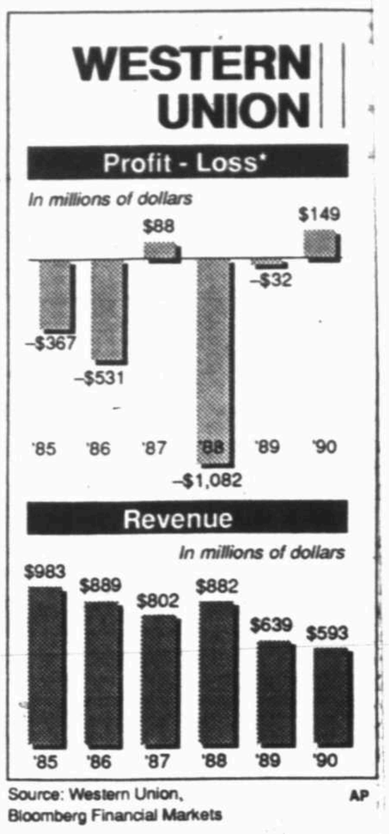

Even after reducing its payroll drastically, Western Union remains burdened today by $25 million a year in pension and other obligations from its retired workers. Its retiree population is six times greater than its active work force of about 2,100.

Meanwhile, Western Union's traditional businesses, the telegram and telex, declined in popularity.

To keep even, the company had to continually increase the prices of these services as the number of users dwindled, McCabe said. That drove away even more customers.

Western Union took a major step to ease its financial problems in December, when it sold its telex and electronic mail businesses to American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for $180 million. It used the proceeds, along with other funds, to buy back some of its junk bonds, lowering its interest payment burden.

But the bond repurchase did not end the troubles. Western Union still owes more money on its remaining debt — about $52 million a year in interest — than it takes in from its operations. It is fast running out of cash.

Western Union spokesan Warren Bechtel called the pension obligations and bond payments the company's "two cost clouds."

The company said in government filings that unless things improve, it may have to file for bankruptcy by June 15, when it faces $42 million in bond payments.

To raise money, Western Union is trying to sell its priority-letter services, which include Mailgram, a type of telegram that is delivered to recipients the next day through the mail. These services are popular with businesses and others who use targeted mailings for advertising, bill collection and advocacy purposes.

In addition, the company says it will try to persuade its bond owners to renegotiate the securities to ease payment terms. Among its major bondholders are investor Carl Icahn, the owner of Trans World Airlines; and First Executive Corp., a life insurance holding company in financial trouble due to its junk-bond investments.

AT WIT'S END

Hey, kids! Go away!

Grown children must assume full custody of all their belongings, including old yearbooks, stolen street signs, pets, high school and college memorabilia, and cars that no longer run. Storage fees will be assessed and payable monthly.

Bombeck

I always liked the part in the Bible that read, "Go ye forth ... be fruitful and multiply." Especially the "Go ye forth" part. It seems like a reasonable suggestion. After a kid spends 20 or so years at home, he should be ready to leave the nest, get married and repeat the cycle of life.

This has not happened. There is barely a day goes by that I don't receive letters from parents whose grown children have returned to the center stage of their lives for yet another performance. Only this time it is different. As adults, the kids enjoy all the benefits of a family without the shared responsibility or parental control.

One mother moved 150 miles away from one son and 700 miles from the other one. She said goodbye to 43 guitar picks, five Frisbees (one wedged in the draperies) and a revolving door at mealtime. On weekends, however, she still trips over sleeping bags with her sons zipped inside, has cars in the driveway with gas gauges on empty, and relinquishes her TV tuner to her weekend guests.

Another mother suggested I deal with the universal problem by writing a "Bill of Divorcement" for parents to give their grown children. This is a start.

— Grown children must assume full custody of all their belongings, including old yearbooks, stolen street signs, pets, high school and college memorabilia, and cars that no longer run. Storage fees will be assessed and payable monthly.

— Visits to the refrigerator and access to the VCR must be scheduled in advance at the convenience of the parents.

— Occupancy in the same room throughout the night with a member of the opposite sex to whom you are not currently married is forbidden. You may refer to this as the Twilight Zone of morality, but that's where you have chosen to spend the night.

— Cars "borrowed" from home must be returned with gas tanks filled and speakers intact.

— Mail and phone messages directed to you at your parents' home must be claimed within 90 days or be returned to the sender.

— Parents love for their children to visit. However, a simple phone call if you are coming for dinner will negate the embarrassment of dividing two chops. Please feel free to help with the dishes even though you have outgrown the "It's your night" years.

— Last, it's nice of you to visit when you don't want a recipe for potato salad, want to know if you were ever exposed to measles, or need the answer to "Where did you store my skis?"

DEAR ABBY

Unwittingly, diabetics may be in danger

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday I read in the Juneau (Alaska) Empire your list of symptoms for detecting diabetes. Had I seen it two months ago, I would have insisted that my daughter consult a doctor immediately. When she called last month from her home in New York, she complained of several symptoms you named for diabetes. She would have scored 13 on your scale, which indicated that a score of above five suggests possible diabetes.

My daughter eventually saw a doctor who said that had she waited a day longer, she might have fallen into a fatal coma! As bad as she felt, the doctor said she didn't feel nearly as sick as she was.

Please warn your readers, Abby, that if they have the symptoms, even if they don't feel very sick, they may be in grave danger. — JOHN B. D'ARMAND, JUNEAU, ALASKA

DEAR JOHN d'ARMAND: Thank you for writing. Some readers have complained about the number of letters I use concerning diseases, but now that we know that early detection can save lives, I feel more or less vindicated.

Readers who want more information on diabetes, please contact the American Diabetes Association National Center, 1660 Duke St., Alexandria, Va. 22314. The toll-free telephone number is (800) 232-3472.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the person who wrote that insulting "Cat's Prayer." That person obviously never had a cat, and it's probably just as well.

I am submitting a Cat's Prayer by someone who genuinely loves cats, so please, be a sweetie, and give the other side a chance to be heard:

A CAT'S PRAYER

Dear Human Companion, please keep in mind that we came to be together for our need for mutual companionship and affection. My affection is not born of blind obedience, yet in my own way, I am a most loving and companionable animal. I ask that you show me proper respect and remember that I am a naturally clean being. Therefore, I expect you to feed me from a clean dish and to keep my water bowl clean and fresh. Naturally, if I share your home, I expect you to keep my litter box properly clean. I wouldn't dream of soiling your possessions unless you provoke me beyond all reasonable limits by your own filthy habits. Although I may seem aloof and reserved, my love and affection is genuine. Understand that the ways of a dog are not my ways, and if you mistreat me, I will leave the first chance I get. I will never be much of a pet, but if you meet me halfway, I will happily be a loving companion for life.

— CAROLYN MOBLEY, HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

DEAR CAROLYN: The prayer is (for the most part) lovely, but for a cat to accuse its owner of having "filthy habits" is risky business.

However, if cats have nine lives, the author of that "prayer" can probably spare one.

Is it a bagel if it wasn't boiled?

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The issue is quite clear in the marketplace bake-off between Berkeley bagel vendors: Is a bagel authentic if it wasn't boiled before baking?

Loyalists of the decade-old Brothers Bagel Factory say boiling a bagel before it goes into the oven gives it its characteristic crust.

But there's no boiling of bagels baked by upstart Noah Alper, who opened Noah's New York Bagels almost two years ago. Steam is injected into Noah's oven to create fluffy, puffed-up bagels.

So what does an outside expert say?

"An official bagel is a water bagel," said Adam Silverstein of Columbia Bagels on New York City's upper West Side. "Steam bagels? They look like ugly little rolls with a hole in the middle."

It may just, uh, boil down to a regional bias.

Bernard Pacyniak, managing editor of Bakery Production and Marketing, a trade publication, said the softer steam bagels are increasingly popular in the West. "But in the Northeast, a bagel means a water bagel."

Legend gets dose of reality

Historian says it's time to put into perspective a man's claim — made in 1948 — of being legendary outlaw, Jesse James.

By Kathy Metzer
Associated Press writer

LAWTON, Okla. — When Col. Frank J. Dalton stepped forward in Lawton and claimed to be the famed Missouri outlaw, Jesse James, who buried gold during a hideout in the Wichita Mountains, it was news.

"Jesse James Is Alive! In Lawton," the headlines of The Lawton Constitution said on May 19, 1948, introducing a three-page saga of a man who said he sang at his own funeral in 1882 and lived to tell about it more than 65 years later.

The insatiable desire to prove or disprove his claims, however, would continue to make headlines decades later. And this month, 109 years after James' official death, local historian Bob Hiatt says it's time that Dalton's claims be put into perspective.

As Dalton's story goes, the murder victim believed to be James was in fact that of his personal enemy, Charlie Bigelow, gunned down by James in a scam to make people think it was James and reward him with a ticket to freedom.

Many heard the claims and some believed, but Hiatt said unanswered questions about Dalton's identity suggest a different story.

Hiatt said he still wants to know the answers to questions such as why Dalton was not missing the third finger on the left hand, which James shot off as a boy; why, if in hiding, he would choose an alias that had long been identified with the James gang, and why at the age of 100, would he have made no attempt to contact his children?

And moreover, if James knew the location of money hidden in the Wichita Mountains or elsewhere, why didn't he return to claim it? Hiatt said research indicates that the real James wanted to buy a Nebraska farm and move his family there, but had no money to buy it.

"Old Man Jesse laughs with a keen twinkle in his eyes when he recalls the episode of his official demise," the 1948 article stated, alluding to Dalton's claim that even his own mother at first would not go along with the plan to identify the dead man as her son.

But according to Hiatt, who grew up in St. Joseph, Mo., amidst the museum operators and townspeople who knew members of the James family, that twinkle more likely was sparked by the thrill of deceiving people into believing he was James.

While there were people in Oklahoma and Missouri who wanted to believe the news that James was alive, others from the "Show Me" state demanded proof.

For Roy Coy, a former director of the Jesse James Museum in St. Joseph and an acquaintance of the James family, all doubt about Dalton's identity was removed one afternoon, when Coy confronted him at a St. Joseph hotel.

"By the time Dalton came out and said he was Jesse James in Lawton, I'd heard of a man named George Sweat in Plattsburg, Mo., who knew Jesse as a little boy and lived on the farm adjoining the James farm near Kearney.

"He was 103 years old at that time, and I went down to see him. He was a curly-headed man, and of course, he was upset by Dalton claiming he was Jesse James," Coy said. "He told me to ask him (Dalton) what happened at the old swimmin' hole on the James farm

> "The people who knew the family, the people who laid him in the casket, they knew it was Jesse James.'
> — Roy Coy, former director Jesse James Museum

when they were kids. If he was Jesse James, he'd know, he said.

"What happened was that Jesse nearly drowned, but a black slave saved Jesse's life, threw him over a barrel and pumped the water out of him.

"When I went back to St. Joseph, Dalton was here, and I went up to see him. I asked him what happened at that swimmin' hole on the James farm, and he pulled out an old-time gun from under his pillow and said, 'You get on out of here.' I wasn't scared, really. His gun looked so old, I'm not sure it would have even fired." Nevertheless, Coy "got out of there pretty fast," he said.

"He (Dalton) said he was tired and he didn't want to talk about it. He was mad, of course, that I was asking questions he couldn't answer. I asked him several questions and he couldn't answer any of them," he said.

While James' family has kept a low profile over the years, Coy said there is little question that Jesse James was killed and buried in 1882.

"The people who knew the family, the people who laid him in the casket, they knew it was Jesse James," he said.

Dalton was nothing but "an old man looking for some notoriety," he said, just like the others who came before him.

As Coy tells it, another man claiming to be James said he'd buried a gun in the yard in front of the James house, and went and dug up the gun. What he didn't know is that the land the house was on had been graded years before, and 20 feet of dirt removed.

"He must've dug a pretty deep hole for that gun," Coy joked.

Dalton's claim to fame is a classic example of how strong American ties were, and still are, to the Old West, Hiatt said.

"Americans love the heroes of the Old West, and to have someone like Jesse James pop up in modern times gave credibility to those hopes," he said.

With the passing of years, the opportunity for a living James to reappear have become obsolete. But as Coy pointed out, there are still plenty of "relatives" to keep the legacy alive.

Coy laughs when he recalls the numbers of people who confided their secret to him.

"Any nut who passed through would come up there (to the museum) and talk to me. After awhile, they'd get real confidential and they'd say (with a whisper) 'You know, I'm related to Jesse James.'

"I always thought that was kind of funny, since the people here who I know are related to Jesse, they don't want anybody to know it. They don't want to be bothered. But the others, they all want to be relatives of Jesse James," Coy said.

Conversations with tourists who stopped by the museum during the 28 years he was director have undoubtedly brought Coy many laughs. And Coy, now 75, hasn't missed many opportunities to poke a bit of fun in return.

"I used to answer the phone at the museum, 'James home, Jesse speaking.' You'd hear a long period of silence and then they'd start laughing," he said. "It was a lot of fun."

Preserving those 'golden oldies'

By Jacqueline Larson
McAllen Monitor

PHARR (AP) — For five cents and the push of a button, the ancient jukebox will crank out a sound you could waltz to on the checkered floor of a diner — perhaps Elvis Presley's "Are You Lonesome Tonight?"

Hundreds of hours of painstaking restoration have turned a Pharr storefront into a Who's Who of jukebox memories, a store with one of the most complete collections in the country, and the best in Texas.

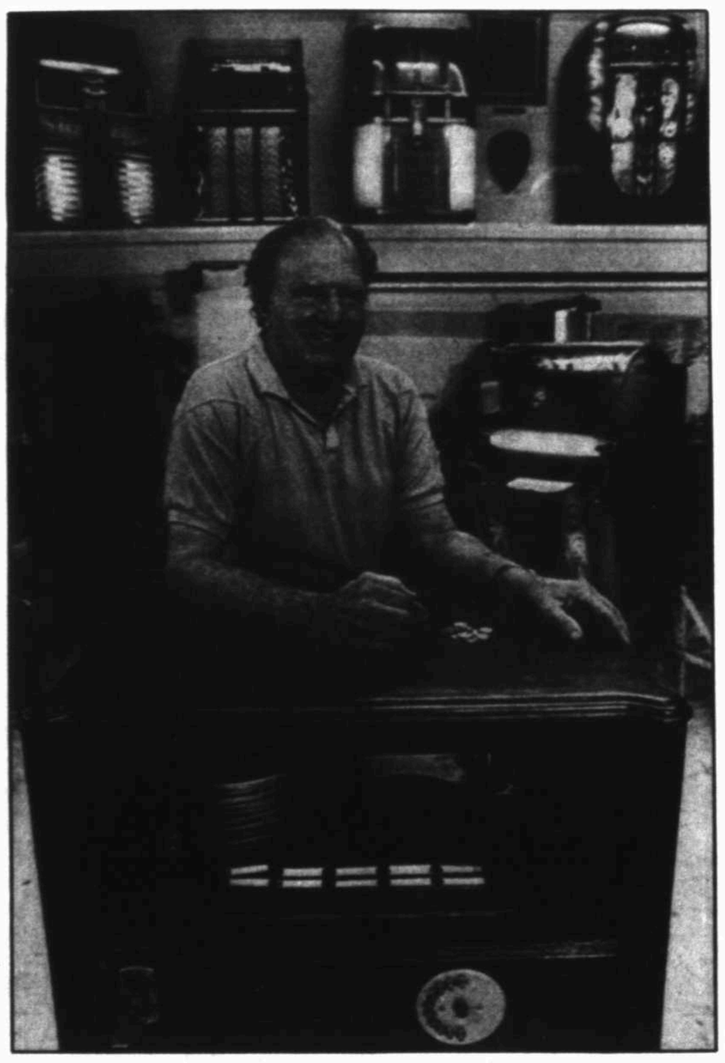

The patinaed machines and the disks they play chronicle the youthful zest of three generations at Smitty's. From the Lindy to the Jitterbug and on to the Hustle and the Lambada, these musical guardians kept beat with the pulse of youth — despite being pronounced wicked and shocking by the more conservative of their day.

While modern day jukebox, pool and pinball routes keep Leo "Smitty" and Helen Schmitt, Sr. in business, the dinosaurs of the jukebox industry keep dreams alive. Schmitt's wife Helen, son Glen and his wife Kimberly, and sons Dennis and Lew Jr. with helpers Beverly Peel and Jorge Garza in business work on the boxes with Smitty.

Their goal is to open a museum that will preserve what Smitty, Sr. calls "the older, golden days."

"I was always fascinated by juke boxes. Even when I was a kid, I'd mow the lawn all day, go to town and put the damn nickel in the jukebox." He chuckled, bemused, over the memory of a lifelong love affair with the mechanized songsters.

Salvaging old machines and fixing others on a commission basis, they work from copies of old manuals and long experience. The older models' powerful motors and iron-gripped works pose hazards, even for the skilled machinist — Smitty almost lost a finger last year in a momentary slip of concentration. And work on the bulky music boxes (which come to them in varying stages of dilapidation) often moves at snail's pace as the family waits for rare parts to turn up.

AP Laserphoto

Leo "Smitty" Schmitt Sr. shows off Wurlitzer's first jukebox, the P-10. His store in Pharr, in South Texas, is home to one of the most complete jukebox collections in the country.

"We get 'em in here with rat's nests in the wires — no kidding," said son Dennis Schmitt with a grin.

"You can't just go all the way through on one of these. Waiting for a part, you may have the mechanism in a jam for weeks," he added.

Student groups entering the dusty storefront are fascinated by the machines their grandparents jived to, he said.

On an elevated, recessed ledge, a jukebox hall of fame surrounds the store's interior. In bygone eras, they adorned the juke joints and diners that on occasion lived up to the meaning of "juke" — Southern slang for "mess around" or "wicked."

At Smitty's, though, the air is one of mild innocence.

For five cents you can hear Larry Green's lively "I Haven't Got a Word" on the granddaddy of all the Wurlitzers — the modest P10, created in 1934 with a 10 record range. The 78's made by Victor, Columbia and Decca Records, cost 32 a piece — 28 if you got them on sale.

The wood of the earlier models eventually gave way in the 1940's to the latest rage in decoration — plastic, vinyl and chrome. The biggest gimmick of all, however, was light.

Perhaps the flashiest was 1940's Wurlitzer Model 800. Mammoth compared to earlier models, it had superb sound reproduction — and a feature that earned it a nickname that stuck. "The Bubbler" had a vertical panel of fluted plastic and three narrow illuminated bubble tubes filled with alcohol. Revolving plastic panels changed the colors, and dancing bubbles were an ingenious touch. But the most outlandish feature, years ahead of '60's psychedelics, was zebra-patterned light screens that produced a wavy, flickering effect.

Bob Wills' wails his trademark falsetto "Aw - haw, now" on "Stay a Little Longer" playing on the restored 1942 Satyr. Its lack of glitter reflected the more somber mood of a nation preparing for war. Only 150 of the Satyrs are known to exist today.

The Rockola 1422, the last of the Art Deco inspired jukeboxes, rolled off the assembly line in 1946. A contemporary, the Wurlitzer 1100, marked the last of their models to dominate the jukebox market. Advertised in 1948 as "the World's First Post-War Phonograph," a plastic dome window was designed in the cornered arch-style of a bomber's nose. Then in 1950, progress changed the face of jukebox technology: Wurlitzer added a second tonearm in 1950 allowing the 'B' sides to be played.

In Smitty's store, a 1945 Rockola with frosted glass has an almost delicate appearance belied by its bulk and a rock-steady mechanism. A boxy Seeburg looks ready to belt out Rock Around the Clock.

"We call it the Fonzie — I think that's the kind from Happy Days," the younger Schmitt said.

Later jukeboxes are dutifully represented here, too (their boxy shapes were once futuristic), all utilitarian, but none as appealing to Smitty, Sr. as the first majestic paragons of music and design.

"It's the difference between daylight and dark," he grumbles good-naturedly.

Officials agree on summer budget session

AUSTIN (AP) — It would be "foolish" to say a tax increase will not be needed to fund the state budget, which likely will be written in a special session around July, House Speaker Gib Lewis said Monday.

The state faces an estimated $4.6 billion budget shortfall to maintain services over the next two years.

"To say that we do not need a tax bill I think would be foolish," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

"I don't see any way that anybody that wants to be practical about state government can say we will not require some type of a tax (increase)," he said.

Lewis has maintained that the state budget should be written this regular session, which ends May 27.

But after meeting Monday with Gov. Ann Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, Lewis said he was willing to wait until comprehensive audits of state agency spending are completed and a special committee on taxes makes recommendations July 1.

"They felt very strongly about waiting until July," Lewis said.

Richards and Bullock have supported a summer budget session.

"That was the agreement in January, when we passed the audit bill. All of us agreed to take state government and give it a good shaking and get to the bottom of our state budget," Bullock said.

Lewis said lawmakers planned to write a two-year state budget, as they traditionally do.

But State Comptroller John Sharp, whose office is conducting the audits and who participated in the meeting, said it had not been decided whether the budget bill would be a one-year or two-year measure.

Richards said whether a two-year budget is written under the current tax structure "depends on the necessity for a tax bill, and the availability of the votes to pass it."
