Verity feels Reagan's veto will carry trade message

WASHINGTON (AP) — Commerce Secretary William Verity said today he thinks President Reagan would accept a trade bill that encourages companies to give 60-day notice of plant closings but does not require employers to provide notification.

"I believe that the president has said...that he wants a new trade bill and he hopes that the closing will not be in it. I think that he would certainly accept something like — it's the sense of Congress that you should give 60-day notice," Verity said on NBC-TV's "Today" show.

"But what he doesn't like is Congress mandating to private business extra costs and things that should be handled through collective bargaining," he said.

Reagan plans to veto the 1,000-page trade bill today, but in his veto message he will praise the idea of employers at large companies giving workers 60-day advance notice of plant closings and layoffs, Verity said.

"He says in his message, of course he feels that it would be a good thing for notification to communities and to people," Verity said.

Reagan's veto seemed likely to be sustained in the Senate, if narrowly. The House, where the trade bill has wider support than in the Senate, was expected to take up the veto immediately after receiving it today.

A vote to override was expected to succeed this time in the House. However, a presidential veto can only be overridden if both chambers vote to do it by the needed two-thirds margins.

White House aides, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said Reagan's objections to provisions restricting the export of Alaskan oil also will be highlighted in the veto message.

At the same time, the veto message will express a desire to work with Congress on a pure trade bill, the aides said. Verity said he remains hopeful of that prospect.

"I think the president wants one, I think Congress wants one and if they work hard at it we'll get one," he said.

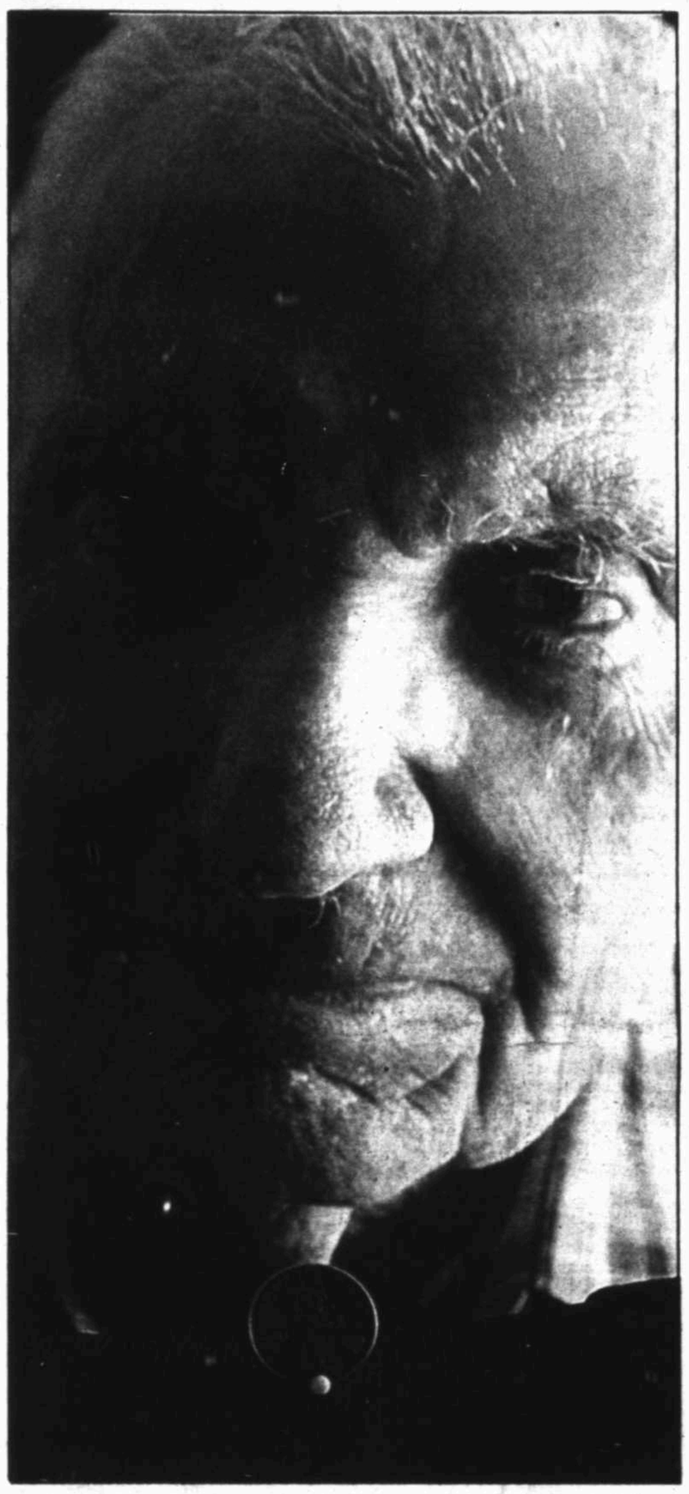

Congressional leaders, however, have thus far expressed little enthusiasm for working on a stripped-down trade bill.

A 63-36 Senate vote approving the compromise legislation last month was short of the two-thirds margin needed to override a veto, suggesting the veto is likely to be sustained.

In 1986 Congress upheld Reagan's veto of another major trade bill, one that would have slapped stiff quotas on textile imports.

Reagan announced his intention to veto the measure during his radio address on May 14, saying: "It is unfortunate, but I have no choice but to send this back to Congress." He said the measure "threatens to destroy jobs."

Leaders move to limit arms debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate's Democratic and Republican leaders said they would move today to limit debate on the superpower medium-range nuclear missile treaty and predicted it could be approved before President Reagan meets with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev next week.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said he would offer a cloture motion today to cut short the long series of amendments being offered by a small band of conservatives who oppose the pact.

"It is conceivable that we could finish the work on the treaty by Friday or Saturday," Byrd said outside the White House after a bipartisan leadership meeting with Reagan. "The chances now are pretty good," he added. "There's no reason why we should have continued delay for the sake of delay."

Byrd's Republican counterpart, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, said he supported the move to cut debate, and quipped that perhaps the way to do so would be to have Reagan "take Jesse with him" to Moscow, a reference to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the leading treaty opponent.

Reagan "said he'd have to ride on the wing," Dole cracked, "and somebody else said the right wing."

Helms and another opponent of the accord, Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., showed no signs of backing off from offering a long series of amendments to the treaty, despite an appeal on Monday from Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Shultz went to Capitol Hill to deliver the message that the Moscow summit, which starts in just five days, will be diminished if Reagan is deprived of the vote of confidence that positive Senate action on the treaty would give him.

"There is a time to inquire and there is also a time to vote," Shultz told reporters after a meeting with 17 Republican senators. "It would be a good thing to have it."

Helms was invited to the Shultz session but did not show up. And when Dole asked Helms how many amendments he would offer to the treaty, Helms declined to say.

Panel will study insurance proposals

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

County Commissioners agreed Monday to study their options after receiving proposals from several agencies anxious to sell law enforcement liability insurance.

The decision followed a lenghty discussion with Sheriff Gary Painter, who asked that the other plans be given equal consideration among a Texas Association of Counties Risk Management Pool offer, which the county received last month.

According to Painter, most of the proposals offered full coverage with no exclusions and were designed specifically for law enforcement.

Among those offering coverage were the Austin-based Texas Law Enforcement Self Insurance Fund, Imperial Casualty and Indemnity Co., New Mexico Casualty Co. and National Casualty Co.

However, Commissioner Win Brown said he knew little about any of the agencies, adding that he was "skeptical" of the plans.

An advocate of the TAC policy, Brown serves as vice president of TAC's Risk Management Pool, which didn't start offering liability insurance to county government until recently.

The county suffered a serious setback in its attempt to obtain liability insurance for law enforcement last month when TAC withdrew its offer to provide coverage because of the sheriff's department's past involvement in high-risk sting operations.

The TAC withdrawal extended only to law enforcement liability and did not include coverage for other public officials. The association agreed to re-instate its offer if the county excluded coverage of sting operations.

Don Gray, a spokesman for the association, told commissioners that the high-profile nature of the sheriff's stings on international weapons traffic and espionage was "beyond the scope of what other counties are involved in."

However, Painter has claimed TAC singled out his department's activities by excluding insurance coverage for those activities.

Greenwood man finds pearly prize in oyster

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Bethel Graham bit into a fried oyster to savor some of that seagoodness. He found a pearl.

"That was quite a surprise when I hit that thing," said Graham, an 82-year-old retired farmer in the Greenwood community. "It sure didn't give."

At first, the sensation felt as if he were biting into a bone that wouldn't crunch, but, Graham said, "I knew oysters didn't have bones."

The pearl is about the size of a No. 5 bird shot — about one-eighth of an inch in diameter — and may be suitable for affixing to Graham's bolo tie ornament.

Graham and his wife, Lou, had driven into Midland after church on Sunday to dine at Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppe near Midland Park Mall when Graham found his first Cracker-Jack prize in an oyster. His wife had ordered a salad.

"It's just a little bitty fellow," said his wife, "but it's a pearl" — the first one Graham ever found in an oyster."I haven't consumed that many oysters," said Graham, who said that at home he has "more steaks than fish in my icebox by far."

After the rock-hard bite, he dropped the oyster into his plate and "picked it apart" to find the snow-white gem.

Jobless figures indicate 'upswing'

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Local unemployment figures are beginning to reflect a general economic upswing in the Permian Basin, according to Joe Hatcher, office manager for the Texas Employment Commission in Midland.

In April, the Tall City's jobless rate dropped 1.1 percent to 6.0 percent, its lowest level since January of 1986. Odessa saw an even larger drop, 1.3 percent, from 8.4 percent in March to 7.1 percent last month.

Hatcher attributed the improvement to "business picking up across the board," in the local economy, particularly in the manufacturing and construction sectors.

"Job orders called in by employers looking to expand their work forces are up about 20 percent," Hatcher said.

Growth in total employment far outweighed a small increase in the labor pool during the month to drive jobless rates down, the TEC figures show.

In April, 46,288 workers in a labor pool of 49,254 held jobs, leaving total unemployment of 2,966 in Midland. That was down almost 500 from the previous month, when unemployment totaled 3,492 in a work force 48,953.

Houston laboratory fire forces evacuations

HOUSTON (AP) — Firefighters battling a laboratory fire in south Houston, had to contend with flames igniting toxic chemicals and cylinders of compressed gas that kept about 600 people away from their homes.

"It was a very big problem because we don't know what we're dealing with," said South Houston Fire Chief Jim Sybert. "We don't know what's contaminated."

As the fire at the Caleb Brett USA Inc. chemical-testing facility continued to smolder into Monday evening, about 600 evacuees remained away from their homes. Authorities monitored the charred laboratory for signs of lingering toxic or fire risk to the surrounding area.

During the afternoon, eight people were taken to Pasadena Bayshore Medical Center, where all but one were treated and released, said hospital spokeswoman Dorothy Westin. One victim was admitted for observation, she said.

Later Monday, eight firefighters sought treatment at Houston's Hermann Hospital, although all were expected to be treated and released, said administrative manager Theresa Kowpak.

Teen files suit over FBI's secret files on his foreign correspondence

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The FBI kept a top-secret file on a youngster who wrote 169 countries requesting information for a homemade encyclopedia and received at least 50 pieces of mail that had been tampered with, a federal lawsuit says.

Todd Patterson, now 17, said he wants to see his complete FBI file, and wants it expunged.

His lawsuit, filed Monday, also seeks a stop to mail tampering and surveillance, and unspecified damages for violation of his privacy.

"I feel that with a black spot on my record, it works against me getting a job," he says. "They invaded my privacy, but I can understand why if there's a potential threat."

FBI spokesman James Knights in Newark said he cannot comment on the suit, "same as in any investigation. We're not going to confirm or deny."

Most of the tampered mail came from the Soviet Union, according to the suit. In 1984, a year after he began the encyclopedia project as a sixth-grader, an FBI agent visited his North Haledon home and later questioned him on the telephone, the suit said.

The suit also charges that Patterson's First Amendment rights were violated on the grounds that he was being penalized for pursuing his education and expressing himself.

Eric Neisser, of the American Civil Liberties Union in New Jersey, says the case is the nation's first seeking the right to wipe out FBI files on First Amendment grounds.

A page from Patterson's FBI file, obtained under the federal Freedom of Information Act and provided by his lawyer, reads: "This communication is classified 'Secret' in its entirety."

It continues:

"TODD is in the seventh grade at the Most Blessed Sacrament School in Franklin Lakes.

"Newark indices as well as local criminal checks negative on subject.

"In view of the above, Newark contemplates no further investigation in this matter."

The papers also describe Patterson's encyclopedia project, which the youth said is unfinished.

The Postal Service told him it had no explanation for the damaged mail, which included torn booklets, empty envelopes, retaped letters and even an opened package containing a letter from Sweden addressed to someone in Wayne whom the youth didn't know.

The suit says that when Patterson's father, Edgar, first made a Freedom of Information request in October, he was refused. After an appeal, the FBI released six pages, much of them blacked out and half duplicated.

The rest was classified.

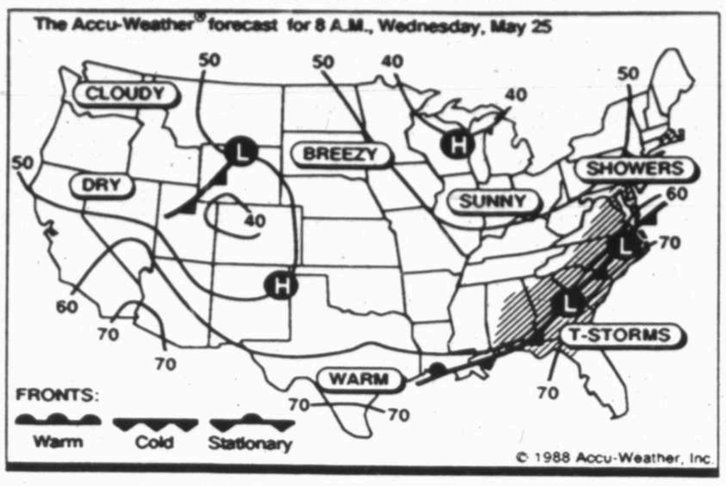

"It's not to deface the FBI," Patterson said of the suit. Patterson said he hopes to join the U.S. foreign service some day and his main concern is the effect of the file on that goal.

Patterson also said he is considering enrolling at the State University of New York at Plattsburgh, where he would need a security clearance for their government program internship with the Canadian government.

Patterson said he holds no grudge against the FBI.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Cloudy skies anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 50s and winds will be easterly at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday will continue to be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of afternoon thundershowers. The high will reach into the middle 80s and winds will shift southeasterly 10-15 mph.

Monday's high of 82 was 21 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 103 set for that date in 1958. The overnight low of 53 was five degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 48 set for this date 1940.

STATE

Showers were possible across Northeast Texas through tonight, but most of Texas was to have clear skies and continued mild to warm temperatures.

Forecasts called for mostly fair to partly cloudy over the most of the state except it will be mostly cloudy in Northeast Texas and extreme South Texas through tonight. Clouds will be decreasing over Northeast Texas tonight.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 60s, ranging from near 50s in the mountains of Southwest Texas to the mid 70s along the lower Texas coast.

Highs Wednesday will be be mostly in the 80s and 90s.

Patches of light fog were reported early today along the coastal bend of Texas and in northern sections of North Central Texas and Northeast Texas.

Skies were clear to partly cloudy over most of the state except along the coastal plains where low level clouds are being reported.

A weak, nearly stationary frontal boundary extended early today from near Texarkana southwestward to College Station and westward to near Del Rio.

Early morning temperatures were in the 50s and 60s north of the frontal bondary and in the 70s over the rest of the state. Extremes ranged from 49 at Amarillo to 79 at Brownsville.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 61 at Wichita Falls, 66 at Fort Worth, 63 at Waoc, 71 at Austin, 73 at Corpus Christi, 71 at Houston, 57 at San Angelo, 54 at Lubbock, 57 at Midland and 62 at El Paso.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled along the East Coast today after unleashing winds up to 72 mph that cut power to as many as 55,000 homes in North Carolina, Maryland and Washington.

Powerful thunderstorms hit the Middle Atlantic coast from southeastern New York to Delaware; showers and thunderstorms extended from western Pennsylvania to eastern South Carolina. Scattered light showers fell across New England.

Showers and a few thunderstorms lingered over Alabama and Mississippi, Arkansas, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. A few light showers dampened Kansas and Oklahoma.

Skies were mostly sunny in the northern Plains, California and Oregon.

On Monday, fierce thunderstorms downed trees and power lines, knocking out electricity to 23,000 homes in the Baltimore area, 9,000 homes in the Washington area and up to 23,000 homes in North Carolina, utility officials said.

In North Carolina, high winds blew the roofs off five apartment buildings in Burlington, forcing the evacuation of 50 people, said the Alamance County communications office.

At Piedmont Triad International Airport in the Winston-Salem area, winds were clocked at 72 mph, just 2 mph below hurricane strength.

The storms ignited several storms in Roxboro, but no injuries were reported, authorities said. Hail as large as golf balls fell in parts of the state.

In western Maryland, stiff winds blew a porch roof off an apartment house near Cumberland, but no injuries were reported, State Police said. A house was flooded in Friendsville, and flooding stranded motorists or closed roads in northwest Baltimore and Montgomery County near Washington.

Industrial fire stirs fears in Los Angeles

Associated Press

Industrial fires in Los Angeles and the Houston area forced the evacuation of thousands of people, including 200 who sought shelter at Dodger Stadium. And an explosion at a Virginia computer parts plant injured 16.

Los Angeles authorities evacuated up to 11,000 people Monday because they feared a lethal gas might form from cyanide and other chemicals stored by a plating company destroyed by fire, officials said. No injuries and no chemical cloud were reported.

A laboratory fire in South Houston ignited toxic chemicals and cylinders of compressed gas, injuring 26 people, forcing the evacuation of 600 and causing nearly $1 million in damage, officials said. Most injuries were minor.

Los Angeles firefighters were carefully removing an estimated 26,000 gallons of chemicals today, fearing a building collapse could form a deadly chemical mixture.

"If that happens," said fire inspector Ed Reed, "it can actually form a gas as lethal as what they use in the gas chamber at San Quentin."

The fire destroyed Builders Hardware Finishers Inc. in a heavily industrial section northeast of downtown early Monday.

The cleanup began slowly as fire officials debated who would pay for the expensive chemical removal operation, Reed said.

The removal cost was estimated at more than $25,000, he said.

A 14-square-block area was evacuated after hazardous materials crews determined the chemicals were unstable, said Fire Department spokesman Jim Williamson.

By evening, at least 11,000 people had been moved, said police Sgt. Mario Mojarro. However, Fire Department spokesman Greg Acevedo put the number closer to 3,800.

Police reopened most of the evacuation area early today but kept the block surrounding the gutted factory closed, said police Officer Bruce Nelson. It was immediately clear how many returned during the early morning hours.

The Red Cross set up an evacuation center with overnight accommodations under the centerfield bleachers at nearby Dodger Stadium. About 200 people showed up.

"I'm not going to be able to sleep, because I haven't seen my husband, and my husband doesn't know where I am," said Maria Cruz, who was at the stadium with her small son.

The fire caused an estimated $340,000 in damage to the building, Williamson said. The cause was under investigation.

In South Houston, fire officials monitored the charred Caleb Brett USA Inc. chemical-testing facility today for signs of any lingering risk to the area from Monday afternoon's fire.

"It was a very big problem because we don't know what we're dealing with," said Fire Chief Jim Sybert. "We don't know what's contaminated."

Twenty-five of the 50 firefighters who fought the blaze were treated for eye and skin irritation at hospitals, and released, officials said. A laboratory worker who inhaled fumes was admitted to Memorial Southeast Hospital for observation, said regional laboratory manager Russell Leach.

The chemicals included gasoline, crude oil, caustic soda, naphtha, acrylonitrile and benzene, Sybert said. There also were cylinders of nitrogen, argon and helium.

Gloria Rodriguez was in her home about two blocks from the lab when the fire began.

"I heard a big boom and fire started shooting up, then the phone lines caught fire and started sparking," she said.

Leach estimated damage at nearly $1 million.

In Sterling, Va., four people remained hospitalized today from Monday morning's blast at the Automata Inc. computer parts factory, which sprayed caustic chemicals throughout the plant, officials said.

Two were in critical conditon and two were in serious condition, Loudon County Fire and Rescue Department Director Bill Goldfeder said Monday night. The 12 others injured were treated at hospitals and released, he said.

The blast spewed a chemical containing sulfuric acid and hydrochloric acid into the plant.

"We had people get doused and drenched with the chemical when it exploded," said Fire Chief Jim Kiser. He said people continued to breathe chemical fumes as they were being treated.

FIRE

The only worker in the laboratory when flames broke out inhaled fumes and was taken to Memorial Southeast Hospital for observation, said Russell Leach, Caleb Brett's regional laboratory manager.

Chemicals in the laboratory, mostly stored in quart bottles for testing, included gasoline, crude oil, caustic soda, naphtha, acrylonitrile and benzene, Sybert said.

He said the laboratory also held cylinders containing nitrogen, argon and helium. Sybert said most of the chemicals are considered Level 3 on a 4-level indicator of toxicity, he said, with Level 4 being the most toxic.

Gloria Rodriguez lives about two blocks from the laboratory, and was home when the fire began.

"I heard a big boom and fire started shooting up, then the phone lines caught fire and started sparking," said

The evacuation order lasted into the evening as nearly 50 firefighters from South Houston, Houston and Pasadena, stymied by little information about what chemicals were inside the burning metal building, stood by and let the fire burn itself out.

INSURE

By law, law enforcement officers are required to investigate all criminal cases, the sheriff said.

"You never know what kind of criminal activity you're going to run into. To place that kind of exclusion on us puts a burden on the taxpeyers and on the Midland County Sheriff's Department," Painter added.

Most of the publicity surrounding the sheriff's department has centered around two volunteer deputies — Gary Howard and Ron Tucker — who have made worldwide headlines in their pursuit of bogus arms deals.

Howard, a former investigator for the U.S. Border Patrol, and Tucker, who served as a narcotics agent with the Texas Department of Public Safety, went to work for Painter when their Dallas-based security firm folded in 1984.

The sheriff deputized the men shortly after he took office in January 1985 because of their affiliation with several U.S. government agencies and their ability to gather intelligence information, he said.

Painter explained that Howard and Tucker, who live in Austin, lend their expertise to Midland County "when called upon." He said neither of the two were paid for their work.

The duo cemented their alliance to Painter last August by orchestrating an arms sting at Midland International Airport, in which a Portuguese national was taken into custody and later indicted with conspiracy to commit theft.

Victor Fonseca was lured to the hangar to inspect what he thought were radar parts for U.S.-built Hawk missiles, authorities said. However, the crates contained nothing but gravel.

Fonseca was arrested in front of national television news cameras, but State District Judge Vann Culp threw out the indictment, ruling that the allegations were too vague and failed to specify the owner of the "stolen" missile parts.

The district attorney's office declined to continue prosecution of Fonseca, and he was freed last January.

According to the Sunday Times of London, Howard and Tucker have earned a reputation as international "bounty hunters." The pair set up "sting" operations by luring American arms dealers into supposed supply roles to the Iranian government, the British newspaper reported.

Knight-Ridder newspapers, quoting "well placed sources," reported that Howard and a third Midland county deputy, Fred Lewis, had proposed an undercover opertaion "against" a Mexican airstrip allegedly used by international drug smugglers trading arms for narcotics.

A report on the proposal, estimated to cost $24,000 monthly, was carried in the March 10 edition of the Dallas Morning News.

Howard and Tucker filed suit in federal court in Washington last June, claiming that the U.S. government owes them $1.4 million for their expenses in a sting operation designed to nab alleged British arms merchant Ian Smalley.

The two have claimed that government officials lost interest in the investigation and ended it because it would have blown U.S. covert arms shipments to the Khomeini regime in Iran.

PEARL

"He's excited about it," said Mrs. Graham. "It doesn't seem that important, but we were so thrilled. You get that (pearl) in the hollow of your tooth, and you'll know it."

"I might have a partial plate," said Graham, "but no hollow tooth."

Graham said the cook at the seafood restaurant "did the best job of cooking oysters that I've seen. I think I found somebody who knows about frying them, and, sure enough, he does. Those were the nicest oysters that I've seen," said Graham, who had ordered a half dozen of "those buggers," which "make a good meal," he said.

Graham's wife said the restaurant's cook said he "was going to pay more attention" when he prepares oysters for frying just in case another pearl crops up.

Audrey Smith, a 27-year-old crew chief at the restaurant, said that it has been "quite awhile back" since a pearl was found in an oyster in Midland. "I wish I had found it."

Chuck Dover, assistant restaurant manager, said that Graham's finding the pearl was "something else." Not long ago, Dover said, a woman by the name of Pearl found a pearl in a Long John Silver's restaurant in Corpus Christi.

Three amendments offered by treaty opponents were defeated on Monday, bringing to nine the number of attempts to change the document's language that have been beaten back by the Senate since it was brought up for consideration a week ago.

First, the lawmakers voted 81-13 to kill a Helms amendment that would have required the president to certify as accurate a Soviet report on the number of triple-warhead SS-20 missiles to be destroyed before the treaty could take effect.

The Senate then voted 68-26 against an amendment by Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., that would have required a change in the treaty's text to eliminate what he said was a loophole that would have permitted construction of some Soviet missiles.

And it rejected, 81-5, an amendment by Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., that would have put the INF treaty on hold until the United States and the Soviet Union agreed on a more far-reaching pact providing 50 percent cuts in each side's arsenals of intercontinental atomic weapons.

Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, said the issues raised by treaty opponents "have been raised and resolved" during long consideration by the Senate committees on Foreign Relations, Armed Services and Intelligence.

"It's legitimate to raise them for public debate again, but it's necessary to resolve them," Cohen said. He said Shultz had warned that failure of the Senate to act would "diminish the luster" of the summit and saddle Reagan with the image of a president who "can't deliver the Senate" on matters he believes strongly in.

"It's important for the president to have that kind of visible, tangible support going to meet the head of the Soviet Union," he said.

Ratification, which requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate, ultimately appears assured. But conservatives have sought to bring attention to issues like the imbalance in U.S. and Soviet conventional forces in Europe and the problems of verifying Soviet compliance with the pact.

The treaty, signed Dec. 8 by Reagan and Gorbachev, requires destruction within three years of all atomic missiles with ranges between 300 miles and 3,400 miles. For the Soviets, that includes 400 deployed SS-20s and another 250 stockpiled SS-20s.

The Helms amendment defeated Monday focused on the number of SS-20s reported by the Soviets.

EMPLOY

Ector County figures exhibit similar trends with total employment climbing from 49,016 in March to 49,711 last month and the labor force gaining only an estimated seven workers to stand at 53,511 over the same period.

Compared to April 1987 levels, Midland's jobless rate is down more than a third from 9.5 percent and Odessa's has fallen by nearly half from 12.7 percent a year ago.

Over the same period, the statewide jobless rate dropped significantly less — 1.3 percent from 8.3 to 7.0 percent — meaning that the Petroplex is closing the gap on the rest of the state in terms of employment.

Total employment has grown by about 1,500 jobs in Midland and almost 3,000 positions in Odessa since April 1987, according to the TEC statistics.

Last month, Midland slipped one spot in the rankings of the state's 27 metropolitan areas to 9th, while Odessa gained two positions to 16th.

Bryan-College Station continues the state's lowest metropolitan unemployment area at 4.2 percent and McAllen the highest at 15.5 percent.

Hatcher said the rankings reflect regional strength in the West Texas job market, as Lubbock and Amarillo have moved up to the No. 2 and 3 spots respectively, displacing Austin and Dallas in recent months.

Outlying counties in the Permian Basin followed Midland-Odessa's lead toward lower jobless rates, with only a single exception.

Winkler County saw its unemployment rate move up from 7.3 percent in March to 7.9 percent last month.

Pecos County registered the greatest improvement during the month, down 2.3 percent to 7.0 in April. Other decreases were registered in: Reeves County, down 2.0 percent to 11.0; Howard County, down 1.3 percent to 6.9 percent; and Ward County, down 0.6 percent to 7.1 percent.

Dawson and Andrews counties each recorded a 1.1 percent drop to 7.8 percent and 4.7 percent respectively.

TRADE

On Monday, Reagan told a group of manufacturing and export leaders in a "World Trade Week" ceremony in the Rose Garden that, "I have no doubts that the Yankee trading spirit is alive and well."

He said recent trade statistics showing a $4 billion improvement in the U.S. merchandise trade deficit between February and March reflected "a genuine boom in exports."

The trade bill is a compromise between separate versions that passed both chambers last year — a strongly worded House measure that called for mandatory retaliation against foreign countries and a milder Senate version.

In addition to the provisions on plant closings and Alaska oil, the administration opposes provisions to increase some farm subsidies, expand a program for aiding dislocated workers and requiring an unfair-trading investigation of Japan for failing to open its public works projects to U.S. construction companies.

Nuclear arms race at sea accelerating, study says

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The five major navies of the world now have about 16,000 nuclear weapons assigned to them, including roughly 6,500 "non-strategic" warheads that are not covered by any type of arms control treaty, according to a new study.

"The nuclear arms race at sea is longstanding, and accelerating," the study concludes. "As of the end of 1987, 1,101 ships and submarines and over 3,250 aircraft (could) fire, transport or service one or more of these nuclear weapons.

"And all of the nuclear powers have ongoing nuclear research and development programs and are producing new naval nuclear weapons, as well as the ships, aircraft and missiles that carry or launch nuclear warheads."

The study, which focuses on the navies of the United States, Soviet Union, England, France and China, is entitled "Nuclear Warships and Naval Nuclear Weapons: A Complete Inventory" and was published today by the Institute for Policy Studies and the environmental group Greenpeace.

It was written by William M. Arkin, the director of the National Security Program at the institute, and a research associate, Joshua Handler. The institute is a non-profit, liberal think tank based in Washington that has frequently criticized the administration's military policies.

Arkin predicted the study could accelerate debate in countries around the world about allowing nuclear-armed ships to make port calls because it lists the individual ships in the five navies that have been certified to carry or fire nuclear weapons.

The 95-page report, by providing such specific information, also is attacking the official U.S. Navy policy of never confirming or denying the presence of nuclear weapons, Arkin said.

"The Navy argument that the policy bolsters deterrence is just baloney" because the ships certified to carry nuclear weapons can be identified, Arkin said.

"I don't think many people have any idea that there are 16,000 nuclear warheads at sea — one-quarter to one-third of the total in the world," he continued.

"But the naval proliferation (of nuclear weapons) is becoming a matter of concern to foreign governments. And I believe there is a growing interest and sense that controls are needed for naval nuclear weapons."

According to the report, the five navies currently deploy 14 types of long-range ballistic missiles on 17 types of submarines. That combined arsenal of strategic weaponry now totals 1,792 missiles with 9,487 warheads.

On the non-strategic, or short-range, side, the largest single category of nuclear weaponry is deployed for anti-submarine warfare. According to Arkin, there are now 3,300 such ASW weapons in the fleets of the United States, Soviet Union and England.

Short-range nuclear weapons also have been deployed for use against enemy aircraft, other ships and targets on land, the study adds. The United States and Soviet Union so far have deployed a combined 548 nuclear warheads on sea-launched cruise missiles and another 541 warheads on anti-aircraft missiles.

"The U.S. and Soviet navies are the most heavily 'nuclearized' of these nuclear weapons states," the study observes. "Seventy percent of the total U.S. fleet has a nuclear weapons capability, either in a combat or support role, while virtually all of the Soviet Union's principal warships are nuclear-capable.

"The other three fleets have a much smaller proportion...Some 32 percent of the United Kingdom's; 12 percent of France's, and 2 percent of China's major warships and submarines are nuclear capable."

Beyond the number of ships that carry nuclear weapons, "approximately 544 nuclear-powered reactors are located at sea," the study found.

"The Soviet Union uses 342 reactors to run its fleet of nuclear-powered submarines, cruisers and ice-breakers. The United States has 169 nuclear reactors (at sea)."

"As of the end of 1987, 1,101 ships and submarines and over 3,250 aircraft (could) fire, transport or service one or more of these nuclear weapons."

Delvalle protests U.S. tactics with Noriega

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is now facing protests from exiled Panamanian President Eric Arturo Delvalle for its handling of negotiations to get Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega to resign.

At the same time, the administration is displaying weariness with the prolonged negotiating process and said it hopes an agreement can be reached before President Reagan leaves Wednesday for the Moscow summit.

In a statement issued Monday from hiding, Delvalle and his allies said the negotiations with Noriega, as reported in the media, "would mortgage the future of Panama for a long time to come."

The statement was issued through the pro-Delvalle Panamanian Embassy in Washington by Delvalle and Panama's "democratic forces."

The administation's chief Panama negotiator, Michael G. Kozak, was ordered back to Panama late Sunday by the White House to continue negotiations with Noriega even though Vice President George Bush has counseled against any dealings with drug dealers, whether foreign or domestic.

Delvalle was forced out of office after he tried to fire Noriega as head of the Panamanian Defense Forces. Delvalle continues to receive U.S. backing as the legitimate president of Panama, but the statement indicated he believes the administration has made too many concessions in its negotiations with Noriega.

It said Noriega would be able to to continue to exercise authority even after resigning as defense chief unless the Defense Forces are revamped.

U.S. officials who have described the negotiating process have not suggested that a major overhaul of the Defense Forces is contemplated.

The embassy statement also demanded the "immediate exit" of Noriega from Panama, suggesting unhappiness with the August departure date now planned.

The U.S. officials have said that, as foreseen in the negotiations, Noriega would leave Panama in August and return after the May 1989 presidential elections. They said Noriega would have a hand in the selection of an interim government which would serve until after the elected government takes office.

The embassy statement called for Delvalle's reinstatment as president and for the formation of a government of national reconciliation.

Noriega, the de facto Panamanian ruler who is under drug-smuggling indictments in the United States, has successfully resisted prolonged U.S. pressure to force him out.

Man could get death sentence

KANKAKEE, Ill. (AP) — A man convicted of kidnapping and murdering a businessman by burying him alive in a coffin-like box "took the American dream...and turned it into an Edgar Allan Poe nightmare," the prosecutor says.

Assistant Attorney General Michael Ficaro is seeking the death penalty for Daniel J. Edwards, 31, of Bourbonnais, who was convicted Monday.

The jury deliberated about an hour before finding Edwards guilty in the September 2 abduction of Stephen Small, who suffocated while buried in a rural section of Kankakee County in northeast Illinois before his family could pay the $1 million ransom.

Small, 40, was a great-grandson of former Gov. Len Small and a member of a family with major media holdings. He was vice president of Mid America Media, which owned radio and cable television stations before its sale in 1986.

Edwards showed no emotion when it was announced he had been convicted of three counts of murder and 10 counts of aggravated kidnapping.

The jury will reconvene Wednesday to determine whether he should be sentenced to death.

In his closing argument in the week-long trial, Ficaro said Edwards knew the Kankakee businessman wouldn't survive the burial. "I never saw anybody come out of a grave," Ficaro said.

"Take a good long look," he told jurors as he pointed to the homemade plywood crate in which Small died. "Danny Edwards' greed for the big score drove those nails, dug that grave and buried Stephen Small alive.

"All Danny boy had to do to cash in on that jackpot was put Stephen Small...in a box," said Ficaro, slamming his hand on the crate. "He took the American dream...and turned it into an Edgar Allan Poe nightmare."

Edwards was "a man who made greed his god," and planned for Small to die so he could not tell police what had happened, said Assistant Attorney General Frank Nowicki.

Defense attorney Sheldon Reagan argued that a faulty air supply system caused Small's death. He pointed out that Small was buried with candy bars, lights, and water, and had not been harmed.

"It's an accident but it's not an intentional murder," said Reagan, who sugggested someone else abducted Small.

"You don't make a box by accident," countered Ficaro. "Stephen Small didn't wander by and fall in."

The prosecution argued that the candy bars, lights and water — along with the plastic pipe the kidnapper claimed was for air — were used to lure Small into the box.

Small was lured from his Victorian home after midnight Sept. 2. His wife, Nancy, received ransom calls throughout the day but could not understand her husband's tape-recorded instructions for delivering the cash.

Two days later, police found Small's body buried under 3 feet of sand about 1,3 miles southeast of Kankakee.

"Danny Edwards needed Stephen Small to make those tape recordings and...get in that box without a fight," said Nowicki.

He said Small clawed, scratched and struggled to get out of the box as he used up the limited air supply, but probably died within hours.

Edwards' live-in girlfriend, Nancy D. Rish, 26, awaits trial on kidnapping and murder charges.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: It may not seem so, but the grass is greenest right where you are. Look at offers, but do not be too quick to jump at them. A partnership will grow in understanding — and so will your happiness. If unattached, you will be eager for romance. Dependability counts big in a relationship. It is important to be where you say you will be consistently.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Connie Sellecca, opera's Beverly Sills, singer Jessi Colter, lyricist Hal David, philosopher Ralph Waldo Emerson, singer Tom T. Hall, coach K.C. Jones.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not reach out to the wrong people in your eagerness to expand your social life. Probe deeper. A financial decision is required. Insist on having all the facts and figures today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your winning personality nets you a variety of business opportunities. Seek companionship rather than romance this evening. Entertaining at home is more fun and less expensive than going out.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Contact people for social as well as business reasons. A timely letter or phone call will help you boost your income. Parents prove to be more savvy than you gave them credit for being.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This might be the right time for fulfilling your dream of having a house in the country. A relationship that seems shaky is probably not right for you. Look around.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A trip or visitor is the key to making a deal that will help you get rid of some debt. Guard against a tendency to be accident-prone. Protecting your health is good business. Do not let yourself get run-down.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will accomplish more by working behind the scenes. Try to follow through on an early afternoon suggestion. Do not allow someone's muddled financial idea to sway you. Get the facts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stay alert and be prepared to deal with unexpected emergencies. You may have to make a tough decision involving a key relationship. A lunch date could spell romance for you. Trust your instincts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Others may be difficult to deal with today. Clear up important tasks before launching a new, joint project. Try to keep things on the home front on an even keel!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Steer clear of far-fetched financial proposals involving your money. An old grievance is likely to resurface. You handle the situation with style! Do not gloss over your differences with loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Weigh all the pros and cons before making an important decision. A bonus or sudden raise can make a dream vacation come true. Consult loved ones before finalizing travel plans. Welcome their suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An influential person recognizes your effort and painstaking attention to detail. Good financial luck puts a smile on your face. Enjoy a special evening with your loved ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Listen to partner's ideas, but do not feel that you must always agree. A financial deal becomes more profitable. Welcome good news regarding travel or a job. Your ESP is very powerful.

Opening lead: Three of ♠

Trumping your partner's ace could make you the subject of ridicule. Nevertheless, there are times when it is the only right play. This hand is from the recent Spring North American Championships, held in Buffalo.

Since he was a passed hand, South could afford to bid his ratty suit at the two-level. North had a good deal in reserve for his raise to three hearts, but he knew that his partner was bidding competitively.

West made the normal lead of his singleton in partner's suit. East won the king and continued with the ace. Had West routinely discarded, the contract would have been safe. On the third spade, if West ruffed low, declarer would overruff in dummy; if he ruffed high, declarer would discard a diamond.

Either way, the defenders would never get more than four tricks.

However, several defenders rose to the occasion. They ruffed partner's ace of spades to shift to the queen of diamonds. If declarer covered, East would win the ace and return the suit, and a third diamond would ensure a trump trick en passant for the defenders. If declarer ducked in dummy, East would win the second diamond and shift back to spades. This time West would ruff the third spade with the queen of trumps, and when dummy overruffed East's jack of trumps would be promoted to the setting trick.

Accurate defense forced declarer into a position where his only choice was how he would get beaten!

Miss Thailand wins pageant

LINKOU, Taiwan (AP) — A 19-year-old psychology student who has born in Thailand but lives in southern California captured the 1988 Miss Universe crown today in a pageant dominated by Asian women.

Porntip Nakhirunkanok, the reigning Miss Thailand, wiped away tears of joy and joined her hands in a Thai sign of thanks after she was named to succeed 1987 Miss Universe Cecilia Bolocco of Chile.

Miss Nakhirunkanok, a black-haired woman from Bangkok, will receive more than $250,000 in cash and prizes, including a Maserati convertible and a mink coat.

Three of the other four finalists were from Asia, including first runner-up Yunjung Chang of South Korea. Amanda Olivares of Mexico, Mizuho Sakaguchi of Japan and Pauline Yeung of Hong Kong were finalists in a field that began with 66 contestants.

Miss USA, Courtney Gibbs of Fort Worth, Texas, was one of 10 semi-finalists.

Gibbs

Taiwan authorities lifted a 23-year-old ban on beauty contests in October to bring the 37th annual pageant to this island.

Organizers estimated about 700 million people watched the event beamed around the world from Linkou Stadium in suburban Taipei.

The new Miss Universe said she is a sophomore studying psychology at Pasadena City College in California and that she briefly attended UCLA. She also is involved in charity work for youth in Thailand.

Missing from the program was long-time host Bob Barker, an animal rights activist who resigned after last year's competition in Singapore to protest the use of furs.

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite lampoons in "Doonesbury," actor George Hamilton says he lives to tan.

"For me it's direct energy. It's like plugging my battery in. It isn't just the actual feeling I get," the tawny actor said in June's Vogue magazine.

And he doesn't worry about the damage it may cause, either.

"If anybody should be a piece of parchment, it's me. My skin, though, is as smooth as anybody's who hasn't been in the sun," said Hamilton, whose sunning passion provides Garry Trudeau's "Doonesbury" comic strip with plenty of fodder. One of Trudeau's characters regularly attends "The George Hamilton Cocoa Butter Open."

The actor recalls a time in London when he was staying at the Grosvenor House Hotel, and the weather was typically English.

"All of a sudden the sun came out," Hamilton said. "And it was hitting a spot on the wall outside my room. So I climbed out onto the ledge and positioned myself for maybe half an hour to get some sun."

A crowd quickly gathered and one woman began shouting, "Look at 'im. 'E's gonna jump," Hamilton said. "Soon there were 20 people gathered below thinking I'm trying to commit suicide.

"All I wanted was a little sun."

NEW YORK (AP) — David Schoenbrun, a World War II correspondent recruited for CBS News by Edward R. Murrow and the first broadcast journalist to report from Vietnam, has died at age 73.

"David Schoenbrun was one of broadcasting's true originals," said Howard Stringer, president of CBS News. "His access to the great newsmakers of Europe was extraordinary, and his understanding of foreign affairs remarkable. He will be long remembered by colleagues and audiences alike."

Schoenbrun, who had left CBS in the 1960s to become a full-time lecturer and commentator, died Monday at Beth Israel Hospital after suffering a heart attack, said Marty Appel, a spokesman for WPIX-TV, for whom Schoenbrun had done freelance work.

He was the only American correspondent inside the French garrison at the historic 1954 battle of Dien Bien Phu won by North Vietnam, and the first broadcast journalist to report from North Vietnam.

He is survived by his wife.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Knot's Landing" star Michele Lee teamed up with other celebrities and safety representatives to strap what they called the world's largest seat belt around the landmark Hollywood sign.

The 400-by-10-foot strap was fastened with a symbolic click around the 55-foot high letters Monday to kick off Buckle Up America! Week. Promoters hope drivers below will get the idea.

Miss Lee, chairwoman of the Committee for Safety Belt Awareness for the Entertainment Industries Council, was joined at the ceremony by National Highway Traffic Safety Administrator Diane Steed and members of the American Coalition for Traffic Safety.

"Buckling up and drunk driving have long been priority issues for myself and for the Entertainment Industries Council," Miss Lee said. "We welcome this opportunity to show America that Hollywood cares about saving lives and that the entertainment community is committed to these two vital issues."

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Bill Cosby's getting a new arrangement for his theme song next week, thanks to the Oregon Symphony and a high school classmate.

The comedian asked conductor James DePreist and the 84-member orchestra to record the theme for "The Cosby Show." Cosby and DePreist were friends and high school classmates in Philadelphia.

A crew from Carsey-Warner, producers of the NBC-TV show, will help with the taping June 2 at the Arlene Schnitzer Concert Hall.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Bette Davis, who left Los Angeles as filming was beginning on "Wicked Stepmother," is due back on the set this week, says the movie's producer-director.

Davis

"Everything's amicable. She's coming back," Larry Cohen said.

Patience is the key to working with Miss Davis, whose comings-and-goings on the set have created a stir, Cohen said last week.

"She's 80 and you have to be patient with her because you do get a great performance and it is Bette Davis," Cohen said.

Besides, Cohen said of the stir, "Any publicity is good publicity."

"It was basically a health problem. If you're not feeling well and things are bothering you — like dental problems — it's hard to work. Now that that's been taken care of, she's coming back."

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Billy Carter, brother of former President Carter, is undergoing an experimental treatment at the National Cancer Institute beginning today that he hopes will cure his pancreatic cancer.

Dr. Steven Rosenberg, chief of surgery at the federally run institute said Carter would be in the hospital about three weeks.

"He will be receiving a very experimental treatment," he said. Rosenberg was one of President Reagan's physicians when he received colon cancer surgery in 1985.

Carter, 51, will be treated with the new protein drug interleukin-2.

Congratulations to the winners; Thanks to all

Congratulations to the four men and one woman who won in Saturday's runoff election for the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

Adela Marmolejo, Ken Morrison, George Staley, Bob Rich and Ken Marks will join James Fuller and Jim Builta, who won their seats in the first go-round, on a totally new school board. The two incumbents who had sought re-election — Betsy Robinson and Joe Reed — failed to win sufficient support from voters to retain positions on the board.

There had been concern that a single-member district board would result in a group of trustees who would be narrow-viewed and interested too much in only those issues that might concern their own sections of the city or schools located in them. There had also been concern that quality candidates might not emerge in a single-member system.

We believe the recent field of candidates and final election results should diminish both worries.

Of the slate of 23 candidates which emerged, the overwhelming majority seemed to be well qualified for roles of leadership where Midland's public schools are concerned. Likewise, as we look at the seven individuals elected, we see no reason for concern on the part of anyone who seeks quality education for all Midland students.

It will be up to the current new board to determine what changes, if any, they wish to make in policies that had been set by the previous trustees. It is possible there will be some changes since different viewpoints do exist on some of the important policies enacted by the past board.

For now, the new trustees will be getting their feet on the ground, so to speak, and familiarizing themselves even moreso with the duties of trustees and the needs facing the Midland school system. We are confident they will meet the task admirably.

We're sure also they will have all the special assistance they will need from MISD administrative personnel during their initial period of office.

So, congratulations again to all the winners. And thanks to all who offered themselves for election — and re-election — in these important races.

Good news galore!

We often hear that too much attention is paid by the news media to negative stories involving young people at the expense of positive ones.

But there are many achievers among our young men and women, particularly those in Midland, as a look at this past Sunday's Reporter-Telegram, Local Section B, illustrates.

It included an 11-inch story about Anson Jones Elementary to host a Young Author's Celebration; almost 40 inches devoted to photos and stories about outstanding students named at Lee and Midland Freshman High Schools; and a 20-inch story on vocational students taking honors.

Other, smaller stories in the edition reported that gifted students would attend a program at Palo Duro Canyon, that winners of the Julie Conway Memorial Scholarships had been named, that seven students would graduate from Permian Basin High.

Rounding out the section were 21 inches devoted to naming of scholarship winners by the Crown Royal Hispanic Society with another whopping 69 inches (that's right, 69 inches of type) devoted to "Making The Grade," a regular listing of student honors and achievements.

Granted, such reports are especially frequent during this time of the year as scholarship winners are announced prior to the end of school. But year-around this newspaper publishes as much news of a positive nature regarding our young people as space, time and other factors inherent in our business will allow.

And we will continue to do so.

Another View:

Arbitrary government

On the U.S.-Canadian border, U.S. Customs agents confiscate the car of a Canadian motorist after they use tweezers to pick one-tenth of a gram of marijuana out of the lint at the bottom of her purse. On the open waters of the Caribbean, the Coast Guard seizes a $2.5 million yacht when it discovers the butt of a marijuana cigarette in a trash can. The government calls this nitpicking getting tough on drugs, but the policy is a waste of law enforcement resources and a dangerous violation of American standards of due process.

Under the policy, dubbed "zero tolerance," any boat or vehicle in which the feds find any detectable amount of an illegal drug, plus all other assets of drug violators, are subject to seizure. But the most recent "zero tolerance" seizures involving trace amounts of drugs are not directed at smugglers. Nor do they always hit at drug users. In the cases of the boats that were seized, cases involving small quantities of drugs, no criminal charges were filed against those on the boats. Nevertheless, the owners of the boats, who were not on the scene, have been forced to go to court, an expensive undertaking to prove why their property should be returned to them.

And to what purpose? How did it prevent smuggling to seize at the Canadian border a semitrailer truck owned by a North Dakota shipping company because the driver had a few grams of marijuana in his coat pocket? What policy purpose is served by confiscating a Caribbean charter boat because a guest left traces of marijuana in a bedroom drawer? By the same logic, the government could seize jet airliners that carry passengers with a few amphetamines in their luggage or commuter buses that transport workers back and forth between Detroit and Windsor, Ontario.

The government seems to be sending a message that owners of conveyances that cross the border or sail in waters near the United States have an absolute duty to be sure that no trace of drugs ever enters their property. Does anyone in Washington suppose there is any practical way for even the most conscientious charter boat owners, airline or trucking company to comply with such a demand? The Reagan administration's "zero tolerance" policy is arbitrary government power exercised maliciously and senselessly. It deserves zero tolerance from the American people.

Dukakis dry but competent candidate

WASHINGTON — In the privacy of Washington's smoke-filled back rooms, Democratic leaders acknowledge that they have been choosing poor candidates for president. In 1976, Jimmy Carter was unknown beyond Georgia, untested in national politics and unqualified for the job. Then, the Democrats nominated Walter Mondale who was qualified, but boring.

Jack Anderson

Now they are about to nominate a candidate as unknown as Carter and as unexciting as Mondale. Michael Dukakis has emerged too suddenly from national obscurity for Americans to really get to know him.

We looked into this virtual unknown who wants to be president of the United States, and here is our appraisal:

Dukakis comes across as dry and dull, but competent. Yet those who know him unanimously agree he is a politician of broad gauge, deep thought and lofty vision.

He not only believes in the American Dream; he has been living it. His father, Panos Dukakis, arrived on these shores at the age of 15, penniless and unable to speak English. Within eight years, Panos Dukakis was working his way through Harvard Medical School. He impressed on his son that America is "the land of opportunity."

Prodded by his demanding father, Mike Dukakis became a straight-A student, a Phi Betta Kappa graduate of Swarthmore College and a cum laude graduate of Harvard Law School. Yet he found time to play the trumpet and participate in athletics.

Dukakis was revolted by the rough-and-tumble of Boston politics, yet inspired at the same time by the sophistication and idealism of his hero John F. Kennedy. He has explained his choice of politics as a career: "I was bound and determined to remake the Democratic Party in Massachusetts to reflect what I saw in Kennedy."

If Dukakis lacked the Kennedy magic, he faithfully pursued in his humdrum way the Kennedy ideal. There was a note of equable dignity that characterized Dukakis, the reformer. He demonstrated his ability to suppress his sense of outrage and impulse while he used his analytical prowess to penetrate the system he wanted to reform.

Though he avoided the corruption, he embraced the liberalism that also characterizes Massachusetts. He might even qualify as a flaming liberal, except, of course, Dukakis never flames. He has a capacity for reducing provocative liberal orthodoxy to mundane facts and arguments.

A group of University of Utah political scientists has conducted a thorough examination of Dukakis' record for the Voters Caucus, a nonprofit voter education group. They say Dukakis advocates government solutions to the problems that ail America and is willing to raise taxes to pay for more federal solutions.

He believes strongly, for example, that "the government must actively intervene in the economy and attract and promote new businesses with federal tax dollars to develop and create needed employment here in the United States."

On foreign and defense policy, Dukakis adheres to the liberal line: against U.S. intervention in Third World affairs; against military intervention in Central America; for more limits on armaments; for a "substantial" reduction in nuclear arms and against underground nuclear testing. He would halt research on Star Wars and reduce funding for the space program. Politically, he might be described as Ted Kennedy with eyebrows.

Of small physical stature, Michael Dukakis seems to be larger than he is, through knack of carriage. Those who know him believe he will live up to the illusion.

Footnote: The Voters Caucus is a non-partisan, non-profit, all-volunteer group founded by the International Platform Association to promote voter education. Jack Anderson is president of IPA.

NO TURNING BACK — Once the wheels of government get rolling in the wrong direction, it is nearly impossible to reverse them. The case of the Tongass National Forest on the Gulf of Alaska is a perfect example.

In 1980, Congress declared that 5.5 million acres of the 16.8-million-acre forest to be wilderness. At the time, the Tongass was a profitable logging area for Japanese and American pulp mills. To protect the logging economy, Congress ordered the U.S. Forest Service to spend at least $40 million a year to make timber easily available in the non-wilderness parts of the Tongass.

Since 1980, the timber market has taken a nose dive, but the Forest Service, under a mandate from Congress, has continued to spend money in the Tongass, mostly for roads to reach timber stands that no one wants to cut.

The timber industry interprets the act of Congress to mean that the U.S. Forest Service is supposed to keep the Tongass logging operations profitable, no matter what the market conditions. The General Accounting Office says Congress never intended to protect the industry from a declining market, but only meant to make the timber readily available.

Class of '88 could help alter political future

WASHINGTON — This year's college graduates were freshmen in high school when Ronald Reagan became the 40th president, and they will be in their middle 30s, or thereabouts, at the turn of the century.

James Reston

To get from here to there, they must rely mainly on their experience with the Great Communicator and his literary circle, but despite this handicap they may be a lucky bunch.

Unemployment, taxes, inflation and ideology are down. Wages and astrology are up. Marriage is coming back in style, and the government is getting into the baby-sitting business.

Also, the country has had its fling with the handsome troubador from Hollywood and seems ready to settle down with some steadier type. Even the cold war seems less scary, so the outlook is not too bad.

There are some troublesome details: a budget deficit of more than $150 billion a year, a trade deficit, uncertainty on Wall Street and anxiety on Main Street, the Middle East and Central America tangles. But the graduates can't do much about all that.

The one thing they can do something about: Their first decision will be to help elect a president for the '90s, and here they may tolerate one or two ideas.

This election will not be a referendum on the Reagan administration, which is now irrelevant to the future, but a referendum on the American people. Will the graduates vote or, like most of their predecessors, just sit around complaining that the party's over?

I have a suggestion. The main question is not George Bush or Michael S. Dukakis but which of them can put together a team of talented men and women who can hold the respect of the Congress and help unite and govern the country. It cannot be done by a man and his cronies and a Teleprompter.

There is a threshold problem: how a voter, even with a new university degree, can make a decision by listening to the remarks made by Vice President Bush, Gov. Dukakis and the Rev. Jesse Jackson so far. It's impossible to make a clear judgment on their speeches, most of them written by somebody else.

Accordingly, I have a frivolous suggestion. What this country needs is a truth detector, which the computer industry should be able to produce.

Essentially, this would be a decontamination machine that could minimize political pollution and raise the level of the campaign debate. For example, if you ran a Bush or Dukakis speech through the thing and pressed the "delete" button, it would eliminate all lies and print slanted half-truths in italic type.

It would be voice-activated so that you could take it to a political hall or put it in front of your television, and whenever it heard some outrageous whopper from the candidate, it would flash "error" or even giggle. In cases of extreme deception, it could be made to emit an insurgent hum throughout the hall, thus serving as a mechanical heckler.

Obviously, the candidates, knowing they were under mechanical surveillance, would hesitate to promise that they would cut taxes, raise defense appropriations and balance the budget lest the machines erupted in derisive laughter.

There are two difficulties with this machine (temporarily named Uniquack III). It is still in the development stage, and it is opposed vigorously by Ed Meese, the so-called attorney general, who argues that lies are protected under the free speech amendment to the Constitution.

Bush says he was "out of the loop" when Meese passed judgment on the invention but that he has always supported the First Amendment and sees no reason to interfere with free speech now. Dukakis says Uniquack III wouldn't bother him, since he hasn't been saying anything and doesn't intend to change his winning strategy.

Jackson says the main beneficiary of the thing would be IBM, and anyway poor folk couldn't afford it. And the president says this is just one more trick by the media to embarrass honest politicians.

All are talking as if the election is a judgment on the past rather than a bet on the future, but the Class of '88 may disagree. After all, as Uniquack III says, the future belongs to the young.

Unfriendly skies put trains back on track

I've heard enough about airlines taking care of their planes so that they break in half on landing or the top rips off in flight.

I don't want to know anymore about how many near-miss midair collisions there are and about how we don't have enough air traffic controllers.

Grizzard

And I don't want to hear anything else about unhappy airline employees. Deliver me from the guy who's mad at his boss and is in charge of making certain all the bolts are tight for the flight to Omaha.

I've been saying this for years and nobody will listen to me, but maybe now with all the frightening things that are going on in the airline industry, somebody will.

Bring back the train!

All we've got now in this country as a passenger rail system is the government-subsidized AMTRAK that is far behind the systems of other countries. So much so, it is an embarrassment.

The French and the Germans and the Japanese know something about passenger trains. They run them at speeds over 200 miles per hour and very few of them ever get hijacked, rerouted during bad weather or cancelled because there's nobody to drive them.

We need an alternative to air travel. Driving is unsafe and tiresome and if you want to ride the bus, you'll get a seat next to some guy with a bad cough and there's nowhere to go to get away from him.

But a train. If the French can build one that runs smoothly at 200 miles an hour certainly we can.

Let's say you are traveling from Chicago to Atlanta. That's about 700 miles.

To fly you have to get to O'Hare from the Loop, which is a pain and costs you. You leave at 4 p.m. for a 5:30 flight.

Your plane backs out of the gate at 5:45 and doesn't actually take off until 6:15. The flight is just over an hour, but due to heavy traffic at Atlanta's Hartsfield you have to hold for 20 minutes.

You finally touch down in Atlanta three hours and change after you left for O'Hare.

But then you've got to ride the shuttle to the main terminal and wait on your bags. After that, it's a cab ride into town. You get to your hotel after what has at least been a four-hour ordeal.

But the 200-mile-an-hour train from Chicago to Atlanta:

It leaves Union Station, a short cab ride from the Loop, where you work. Zoom, off you go. It's smooth. It's relaxing. There's a guy next to you coughing, so you go to the club car for a drink.

There's a few quick stops, like the old days when the train stopped at every crossing. Maybe there's 10 minutes in Louisville. And another in Nashville. And Chattanooga.

You arrive in Atlanta's downtown station, let's say in five hours.

It's about the same as the flight, only think of the hassle you've avoided and the money you've saved in ground transportation.

Putting a modern, efficient passenger system to work in this country would probably cost trillions, I admit.

So let's make peace with the Russians then and use all the money we're spending on missiles to bring back the trains.

What a great idea, and I know how to get the new president to agree.

Take Air Force One away from him and put him out there in the crowded, unfriendly skies with the rest of us.

Dukakis defends spending priorities

Associated Press

Democratic presidential front-runner Michael Dukakis defended his spending priorities and took a mild poke at rival Jesse Jackson's five-year budget blueprint, saying there's "no way" specific spending can be figured so far in advance. And Idaho was holding its primary today, but it was a fairly low-key affair.

There were 18 Republican delegates up for grabs in Idaho, but Vice President George Bush's mathematical lock on the GOP nomination has taken the suspense out of the contest. There were no Democratic delegates at stake; most are to be chosen at a state convention next month. Officials in Idaho said a low turnout was likely.

Dukakis was tending to gubernatorial tasks in Massachusetts today, and traveling to Virginia for an evening appearance. Bush was in Washington, preparing to see President Reagan off later this week for next week's superpower summit in Moscow.

For Jackson, however, business as usual meant campaigning in California, where primary day is two weeks from today.

Jackson released a budget plan on Monday that would raise taxes on the rich, freeze defense spending and boost support for social programs.

The five-year proposal would hike taxes on the wealthy by $244 billion and on corporations by $104 billion. It would cut the defense budget by $164 billion by freezing projected spending hikes, and would increase spending on social programs by $344 billion.

Jackson said his plan would cut the nation's deficit from a projected $134 billion in 1993 to $49 billion.

Dukakis did not take issue with the specifics of Jackson's spending plan, but said his own experience as governor had taught him that budgets cannot be mapped out in such detail years ahead of time.

"There's no way you can prepare a budget today for 1989," said Dukakis, who is struggling to cope with changing revenue projections at home in Massachusetts. The governor also brushed aside Jackson's criticism of his own economic proposals as "radically conservative."

"It does represent a fundamental change," Dukakis said of his spending policy, which has been expressed in much more general terms than Jackson's.

Dukakis' comments came during a quick visit Monday night to New Jersey, which holds its primary on June 7, the same day as California. New Mexico and Montana also hold primaries that day.

Jackson has been stumping hard in California, whose season-closing contest offers him a last chance to demonstrate his clout as the Democratic party prepares for its convention, beginning July 18 in Atlanta.

Dukakis expects the contests of June 7 will lock in the number of delegates he needs for the nomination.

Task force formed to investigate killer

WINNETKA, Ill. (AP) — As this suburb mourned a slain boy, police formed a task force to investigate the final year in the life of a woman who opened fire at a grade school, killing the child and wounding five others.

Police in a nearby suburb, meanwhile, said Monday they considered the woman, Laurie Dann, dangerous enough two years ago that they asked her parents to turn over her handgun. Her parents refused, but promised to lock it in a safe deposit box, officials said.

Paper tulips hung from the ceiling of a second-grade classroom Monday and more than 1,000 mourners, dozens of them children, braved a downpour to crowd a synagogue where funeral services were held for 8-year-old Nicholas Corwin.

"I never really knew that kids cared so much," said 11-year-old Brian Lewin, minutes before the memorial service ended. "Now that he's dead, it's hard to think that so many people felt that way."

Nicholas and four other youngsters were wounded Friday after Ms. Dann burst into their classroom at Hubbard Woods Elementary School and opened fire. She also shot an 8-year-old boy in a bathroom.

After fleeing the school, she shot a 20-year-old man at a house and killed herself after a nine-hour standoff with police.

Police Chief Herbert Timm on Monday announced the formation of the task force to investigate the final year in the life of Ms. Dann, a 30-year-old baby sitter who police say was upset because the family she worked for was moving.

Police say tracing the trail of Ms. Dann's bizzare behavior has led to the discovery of 15 or more poisoned food and fruit juice packages, attempted firebomb attacks, hundreds of harassing telephone calls and a possible stabbing attack on her ex-husband, Russell Dann.

"Why couldn't it have been stopped? Here was a person reaching out for help. She didn't get it. it was a matter of time before this bomb exploded," Dann said Monday, criticizing police for failing to heed warnings about her.

"I hired attorneys. I hired private detectives...This was the North Shore of Chicago reaching out for help, not just Russell Dann...I'm not saying we got no help, but Friday happened," Dann said on ABC's "Nightline."

The Danns' three-year marriage ended in divorce in 1986.

Dann also made a plea for gun control, saying it was "horrible" that his ex-wife was allowed to purchase a gun.

"On many occasions, we tried to get her arrested," he said, but police did not pursue her case actively enough.

Prosecutors have said they were investigating Ms. Dann, but had not developed enough evidence to arrest her.

Robert Bonneville, police chief of Glencoe, said authorities asked her parents to surrender Ms. Dann's .357-caliber Magnum handgun two years ago because of allegations that she had made harassing phone calls and had committed theft.

Her father, Norman Wasserman, refused, but "agreed to have it locked up in the safety deposit box," Bonneville said.

One of the three guns Ms. Dann carried at the school Friday was a .357-caliber Magnum, police said.

The Wassermans as cooperative with police, Bonneville said, but refused to believe their daughter was making the telephone calls and took her side in the other incidents.

In at least two cases, Bonneville said, Wasserman made restitution to families for whom Dann worked as a baby sitter or domestic after she was suspected in thefts of food and clothing from the homes.

The Wassermans refused to comment.

Four of the children wounded in Friday's attack have been upgraded from serious to fair condition and one remains in critical but stable condition, hospital officials say. The wounded man was upgraded from serious to fair condition.

Pall bearers carry the casket of Nicholas Corwin, 8, at his funeral service Monday in Northfield, Ill. Corwin was a victim of Friday's shooting spree at a Winnetka elementary school.

Maryland voters to have final say on gun ban

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Maryland has become the first state to ban the sale of inexpensive handguns, including "Saturday Night Specials," but voters probably will have the final say on whether the law actually goes into effect.

With 200 police officers from five states present, Gov. William Donald Schaefer on Monday signed the law forbidding manufacture and sale of the weapons.

"This is the first time a legislature has stood up and said, 'These guns are wrong,'" said Schaefer.

Well before the ceremony, opponents were gathering signatures to hold a referendum on the law in November's general election.

"I'm confident that we are going to have the numbers that we need for the ballot," said Fred Griisser, spokesman for the Maryland Committee Against the Gun Ban. The committee must have the signatures of 33,044 registered voters by June 30 to put the issue on the ballot.

Griisser was less confident about the outcome of a referendum, saying gun groups face "an uphill battle" in explaining the law's "true nature" to voters.

He said the statute bans all handguns, not just Saturday Night Specials, and complained it does not require that any guns be approved for sale by a review board established by the law.

Gun control supporters said Maryland's law and the expected referendum are crucial to efforts to ban Saturday Night Specials in other states.

"It's important that we win. It's critical, and I'm sure we will win," said Sarah Brady, who attended the signing ceremony with her husband, White House press secretary James Brady.

"I'd like to see other states like dominoes fall into line," said Brady, who was wounded by a Saturday Night Special in John Hinckley's 1981 assassination attempt on President Reagan. Brady has been in a wheelchair ever since.

Mrs. Brady accused the law's opponents of spreading false information that the bill would ban all handguns, and said it is aimed only at Saturday Night Specials.

The Bradys joined state leaders and 200 uniformed police officers from Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia and West Virginia on the steps of the State House for the signing.

Schaefer called the measure a step toward stopping "the senseless killing on our streets."

Saturday Night Specials have been used to kill 250,000 people and wound 1½ million in the last 20 years, said Mrs. Brady, who called the law "a great step for public safety."

The law makes it illegal after Jan. 1, 1990, to sell or manufacture a gun in Maryland unless it is on a list prepared by the newly created nine-member review board. The law does not mention Saturday Night Specials, but directs the board to exclude easily concealed, inaccurate, unsafe and poorly made handguns.

The law also allows the board to ban plastic guns that can be slipped through metal detectors.

Manufacturers can be fined up to $10,000 and dealers and gun owners up to $2,500 per violation. Each time a gun is made or sold constitutes a separate violation.

Mrs. Brady, who has been campaigning for tougher gun laws since her husband was shot, said Maryland's approach solves the difficult problem of trying to define Saturday Night Specials by leaving the decision to a review board.

The board will consist of three civilians, the superintendent of state police and one representative each of a state prosecutors association, the Maryland Association of Chiefs of Police, Marylanders Against Handgun Abuse, the National Rifle Association and a Maryland gun manufacturer.

Polish sailor grateful for help in asylum bid

EVERETT, Wash. (AP) — A Polish sailor who jumped ship in a bid for political asylum has been released from jail after two months, still facing possible deportation but flooded with offers of money and shelter.

"It's wonderful, finally free," Andrzej Piotr Prajzner, 27, said after paying bail and leaving the Snohomish County Jail on Monday.

Offers of aid, including donations to meet Prajzner's $1,500 bail, began arriving when news reports described his plight after jumping ship in British Columbia on March 15 and being thrown in jail by a U.S. immigration judge.

"It constantly amazes me how a Soviet seaman who jumps ship can get asylum in four hours, and a Cuban bicyclist in Mexico denied asylum there, was brought to Texas and given instant asylum. It's quite a contrast. That's why so many people were outraged" by Prajzner's case, said Daniel P. Danilov, a lawyer who is representing the sailor.

An Immigration and Naturalization Service official said Prajzner's case differs from the cases cited by Danilov because he did not have permission to be in the United States when he requested asylum at the U.S.-Canadian border at Blaine on March 23.

Reading survey revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly all parents think reading is very important to their children's success and most believe they are primarily responsible for motivating their kids to read, according to a national survey released today.

But only half the parents in the survey reported that their children were very interested in reading, and less than half said their child reads for pleasure every day.

The telephone survey of 1,000 people, conducted by the Roper Organization for Jell-O Desserts, involved what the company called a nationally representative cross-section of parents of children ages 3-14. The survey results are based on evaluations of one child in each household.

The survey found that how much children read is directly related to their parents' educational background and reading habits. But it said the high value placed on reading cut across parents of all educational backgrounds and demographic groups.

"Parents with less education...may not possess the knowledge or skill to help their children read," the survey said. "However, they do not diminish in any way the value of reading, nor do they lack the desire to help their children become better readers. This provides a solid ground for optimism about the future."

Swaggart donations down

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The financial situation of evangelist Jimmy Swaggart's ministry has reached a stage where it is going to start "picking up again," the ministry's attorney says.

"Revenues have leveled off to a point now that we can maintain the ministry at its present level and we can build from here," William Treeby, a New Orleans lawyer who represents Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries, said Monday.

Treeby said that donations that once surpassed $500,000 per day have dropped by almost half since the first of the year. Donations began falling off early this year and dropped sharply after Swaggart confessed to an unspecified sin on Feb. 21.

A convicted prostitute has said Swaggart paid her to pose nude for him. In April, the Assemblies of God defrocked Swaggart after he refused to accept a suspension of at least one year from the pulpit and television.

Fever found in Big Apple

BOSTON (AP) — Rocky Mountain spotted fever, largely a hazard of the suburbs and countryside, has turned up in New York City, where four cases were confirmed recently, including one that proved fatal, doctors said.

The cases occurred last summer, and all four New Yorkers apparently caught it near where they lived in the borough of the Bronx, according to Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"There are many dangers of life in New York City, but until now they have not included Rocky Mountain spotted fever," Dr. David T. Durack of Duke University commented in an editorial in the journal.

A team headed by Dr. Miklos P. Salgo of Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York reported tracking down the probable culprits — ticks in the Bronx' Soundview park that carried bacteria responsible for the fever.

Court rules on pictures

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court says it will tell states whether they may combat child pornography with laws so restrictive that parents could be prosecuted for taking pictures of their naked infants.

The court agreed Monday to consider reinstating a Massachusetts law struck down by that state's highest court as too broad a restriction on free-speech rights.

A decision is expected from the justices sometime next year.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court threw out the criminal prosecution in Worcester County of Douglas Oakes, who had been convicted and sentenced to 10 years in prison for "soliciting a child to pose for pornographic purposes."

Students favor law, business as career choices

NEW YORK (AP) — As college students sort out their academic and career choices for next fall, law school looks hot. So does business. But engineering, a craze five years ago, keeps sliding.

Teaching, down and out since the 1970s, shapes up as next fall's comeback story.

Medicine and nursing continue to fall from favor. But there are hints that the sharp, decade-long enrollment slide may be slowing.

College admissions counselors add it all up this way: most students still put great weight on financial prospects in making career and study choices.

But social service seems to be slowly resurfacing as a goal among at least some of next fall's students.

"I see a little bit of a rise in idealism again," said Beth O'Neil, a spokeswoman for the Law School Admissions Council.

Here, in brief, is what officials say is the fall outlook for half a dozen major fields of study.

— Law: The nation's 175 accredited law schools are being flooded with more than 300,000 fall applications from 75,000 students, 19 percent more than last year and the most since 1980, according to the Law School Admissions Council. Applications dropped in the mid-1980s but began recovering last fall and are now surging.

At Georgetown Law School, applications rose 32 percent, while Berkeley saw a 30 percent increase. The University of Michigan stopped accepting applications for its 370 openings at 5,500.

"Starting salaries in excess of $65,000 and $75,000 have not gone unnoticed," said O'Neil.

— Teaching: The national attention showered on teaching, improved starting salaries and hints of renewed idealism are pushing next fall's enrollments up. A few top graduate schools like Harvard report 50 percent gains in applications for next fall.

More typical, however, is the University of South Carolina, where the number of teacher candidates next fall is expected to exceed slightly the 215 of last year, but come nowhere near the peak of 650 in the mid-1970s, according to Leonard F. Maiden, director of student services of the College of Education. "The news is getting out that teaching does pay reasonably well," Maiden said. The national average is now $28,000.

In addition, he said, "I get more and more women who say, I want to be a teacher, because I see that bringing much joy in my life. I hear that weekly, and sometimes daily."

— Nursing: Undergraduate rolls at nursing schools dropped 21 percent from 1983-87, according to the American Association of Colleges of Nursing, which represents 400 schools of nursing.

The 1987-88 school year counted 85,477 undergraduate students, down 14.5 percent from 99,923 the previous year. Only 4 percent in an annual national survey of freshman attitudes expressed interest in nursing, compared with 10.2 percent in 1974.

Starting salaries are up, exceeding $30,000 in some cities. But nursing is still having trouble competing with other career opportunities for women.

"I don't think the shortage is going to be resolved quickly," said Diane McGivern, chairwoman of New York University's graduate nursing school, where next fall's freshman class will number just 30, down from about 80 in 1980.

— Business: Despite Wall Street insider scandals and last October's market crash, business has lost little of its luster. One quarter of entering college freshmen express interest in business careers, continuing a steady increase since the early 1970s. One-quarter of all bachelor's and master's degrees awarded last year were in business, far ahead of any other field, according to the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business.

But some schools report applications for next fall are not up as spectacularly as in previous years.

Nancy Anderson, director of admissions at NYU's graduate school of business said fall applications were up 5 percent to 2,500 for her school's 360 spots. A year ago, application gains of 20 percent were commonplace at NYU and other leading schools.

"Our sense is that we will see a slow increase every year. An MBA (master's degree in business administration) is quickly becoming the equivalent of an undergraduate degree as a requirement for entry level jobs," Anderson said.

— Medicine: The nation's 127 medical schools will receive a projected 26,700 applications for about 15,000 freshman spots, a 4.7 percent decrease from the previous year. No one sees the 14-year downtrend reversing yet, but this fall's expected decline is about half that of the previous year, said Joan Hartman Moore, spokeswoman for the Association of American Medical Colleges.

Cost is probably the biggest factor. A year at a public medical school averages about $13,000 for residents. At private colleges, the cost typically runs $24,000, according to the association.

Eighty-two percent of medical students graduate in debt, averaging $35,621, and 20 percent have debts exceeding $50,000. That, plus rising malpractice insurance costs and starting salaries averaging about $25,000, has made students think twice about medical careers.

— Engineering: The number of undergraduates doubled from 201,000 in 1974 to a peak of 406,000 in 1983, but the number has since tailed off to about 369,000. And the number of freshmen engineering students has likewise fallen, from 115,303 in 1982 to the current 99,238, according to the Engineering Manpower Commission in Washington.

At Texas A&M, which has one of the largest engineering schools, admissions director Bill Lay said the school has admitted 2,732 students for next fall, compared with 3,566 in 1982.

The decline is not necessarily unhealthy, said commission spokesman Richard Ellis. "It's not a craze or fad anymore," he said. "Interest is now reverting to people wanting an engineering career for its own sake, not just because of the economics of a given era."

American Jews urged to support 'reasonable' PLO policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Arab member of Israel's parliament on Monday urged American Jews to join American Arabs in opposing the Israeli government's hostile policy toward the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"The Arab community in the (United) States and the Jewish community in the states have a common interest as peace lovers, and I'm waiting for the Jewish community here to play a positive role convincing the Israeli government to adopt a more reasonable policy toward the Palestine issue," said Abdel-Wahab Darawshe.

Darawshe, a Knesset member who recently quit the Israeli Labor Party to found a new Arab party in Israel, made the statement at the 16th convention of the National Association of Arab-Americans.

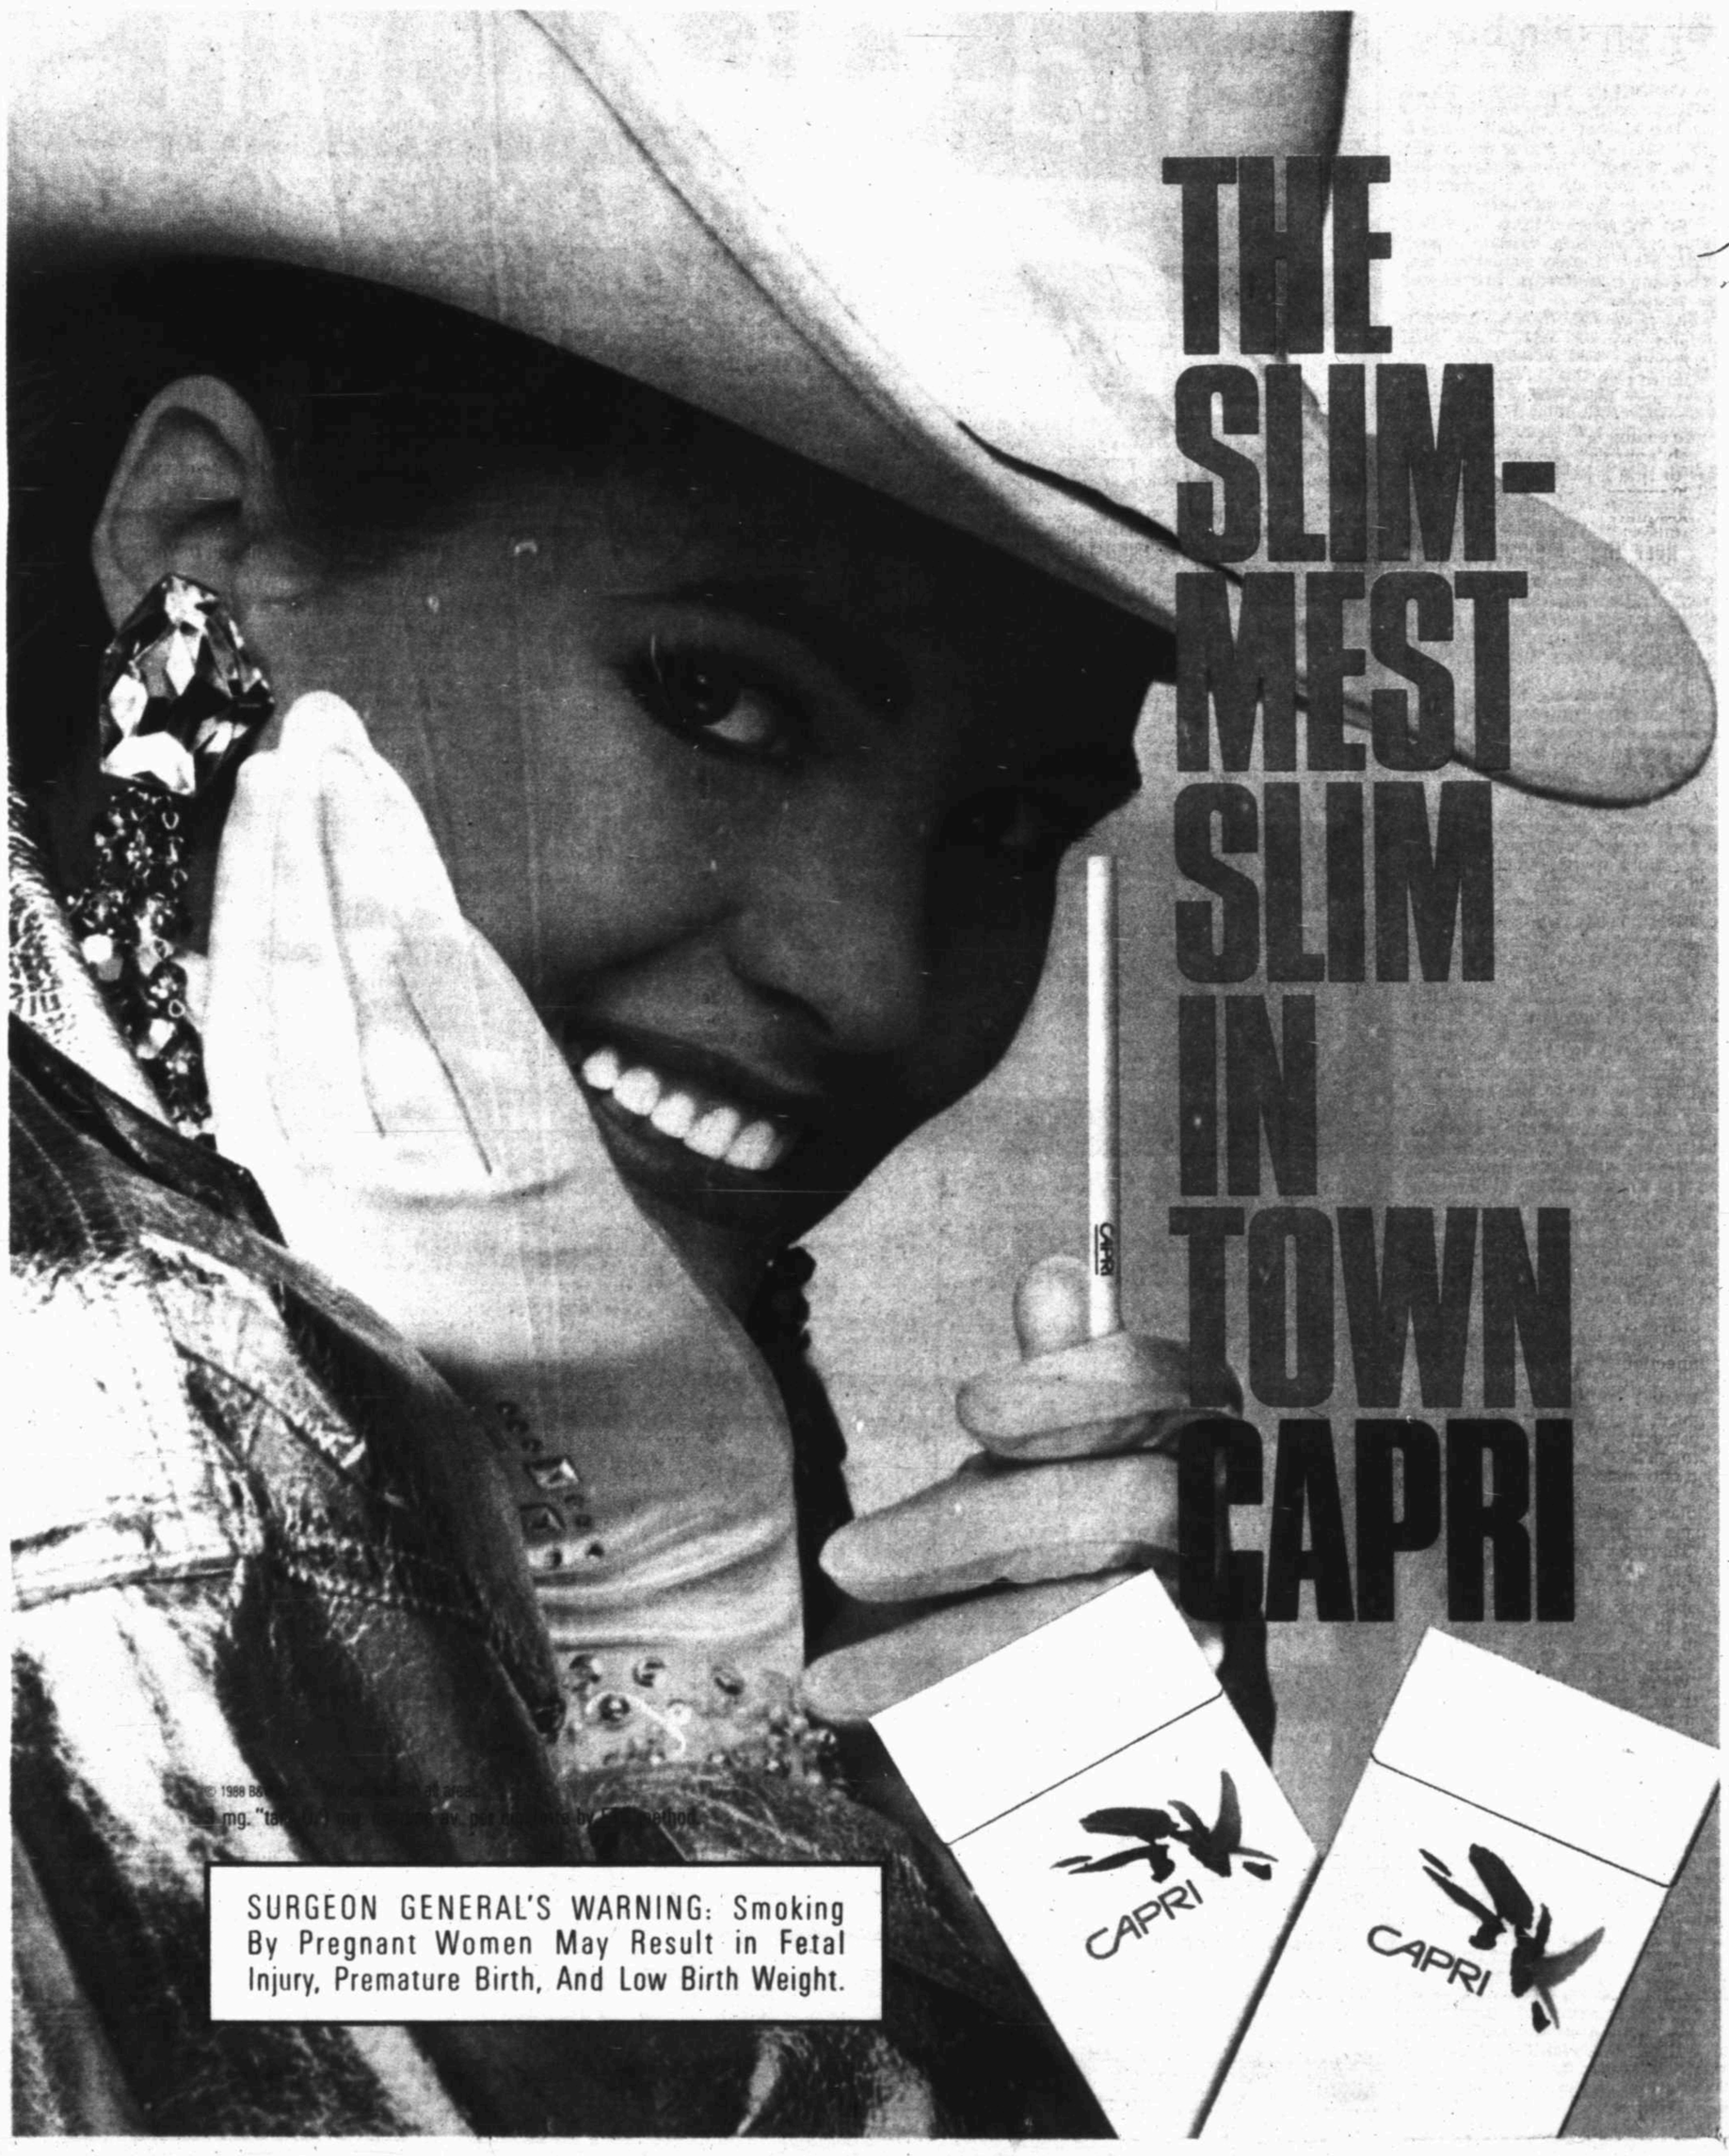

The association, which seeks a stronger political voice for Americans of Arab ancestry, used "campaigning for peace" as the theme of the annual convention. Speakers condemned Israeli measures against Palestinian demonstrations in the occupied territories during the past half year and urged the United States and Israel to accept the PLO as the authentic Palestinian representative in peace talks.

"The Palestinian people have decided who is their representative and any attempt to find alternatives is just wasting time and bringing causes for more bloodshed," Darawshe said. He also said the PLO should formally proclaim a Palestinian government in exile.

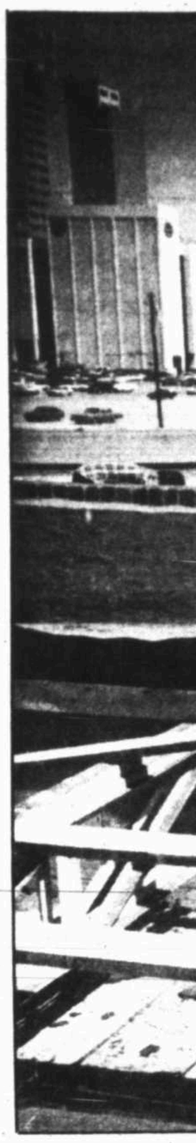

Israel and the United States refuse to deal with the PLO unless it acknowledges Israel's right to exist.

Invitations to Monday's session said an unnamed, prominent Israeli official would appear, and an empty chair at the head table symbolized the official's absence.

Hanna Siniora, editor of the Arab newspaper Al-Fajr in Jerusalem, told the gathering "It is high time to have the international community and the United States bring the adversaries to the negotiating table," because "the alternative is disaster to the whole area...with national suicide for all parties in the region," he said.

Rehabilitation center may save lives, money

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The building of a new rehabilitation center that may "salvage" many people from the dregs of criminal life and, at the same time, save taxpayer dollars is being planned by the Midland County Commissioners' Court and Midland County Adult Probation Office.

The commissioners Monday unanimously approved the advertising for bids to find a contractor to build a 12,500-square Midland Community Rehabilitation Center metal building, near the proposed Midland County Jail, this year.

The 48-bed community-corrections facility for rooming and boarding probationers who otherwise might be serving "hard time" in the Texas Department of Corrections would replace the 35-bed facility being rented at the Midland Dorm in far south central Midland.

"We feel like the way things are going in the state," said G.W. Thompson, Midland County's chief adult probation officer, "community corrections are here to stay. And I think they will be building more restitution centers in Texas."

The rehabilitation center, formerly known as a restitution center, was established in Midland in 1985 as part of a statewide effort to reduce the influx of non-violent prisoners into the state's penitentiary system.

The center's building was supported by the three state district court judges, who form the Midland Judicial District and who monitor the program. Thompson reports to the judges on the Adult Probation Department and overseeing the center.

Center director is Terry Luck. "I'm excited about it," Luck said. "It's not a financial burden by any means to the county."

Judge Vann Culp of the 238th State District Court noted that in addition to helping "salvage a lot of people" from the criminal life, the rehabilitation center program saves taxpayers' money by reducing the penitentiary population.

In addition, center residents are required to work outside jobs to pay for their room and board and to carry out volunteer community service.

The statewide program was authorized by the Texas Legislature in 1984, noted Culp, to "divert people from the penitentiary" — those, including repeat offenders, who otherwise would be prison bound. Recently, the program has been expanded to take in first offenders "to help prevent them from becoming full-time criminals," Culp said.

The rehabilitation center program is operated in a disciplined, structured atmosphere.

"One of the main problems," Culp said, is that many probationers "never really learned to work. They've never learned to get up in the morning and go to work and keep steady jobs."

After three months to a year in the program, many men and women residents there have been "very, very successful" in leading productive lives by learning job and living skills.

The success rate here reportedly is about 83 percent and exceeds the state norm.

"We have a certain number of people who do not make it," Culp said. "They are there a little while and then we send them to the penitentiary. And that will always be" the case. "I agree with George (Thompson) that these things (community corrections centers) are here to stay."

Judge Pat Baskin of Midland's 142nd State District Court said the three state judges, who work with the center's program, have been "generally pleased" with the program.

"We believe that it has a great deal of merit," Baskin said.

Judge Dean Rucker of the 318th State District Court said the forces behind the rehabilitation centers have "demonstrated leadership" in the statewide community-corrections program.

The 48-bed center, which is to be built on the site of an old warehouse just south of downtown Midland, will cost an estimated $557,000, which would include the building, equipment and furnishings. The Texas Adult Probation Commission already had committed $150,000 toward "finishing out" the building, which is to be built and owned by Midland County.

Commissioner Durward Wright said the proposed facility "will do the job and do it adequately.

"It's a do-able deal from the standpoint of dollars and cents," said Wright. "There are several financing vehicles available to us (commissioners)," he said.

The financing apparently would not result in county tax increases, Wright said.

"It will be a virtual revenue-neutral situation," Wright said.

Once built, the building would be leased to the Midland Judicial District by the county. "It's a solid deal," Wright said.

Thompson said the new center, which would be less costly to operate than the older facility, would permit the expansion of career and day-to-day living programs for the residents, who generally are in their 20s and 30s.

City counts on clubs to aid in street's move

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

With funding approval already in hand for a road project that is intended to revitalize Midland's east side, city officials are counting on three recreation clubs to help smooth relocation of a major intersection.

Moving Lamesa Road's intersection with Loop 250 about 100 yards east of its current location presents a difficult logistics problem for the city, two soccer associations and an amateur radio club.

The change is necessary so the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation can fulfill a state law pertaining to the distance between major highway intersections, Midland Parks Director Mike Casey said.

Currently, the Lamesa-Loop 250 intersection lies too close to the loop's connection with Big Spring Street, Casey said.

While only two to three acres of right of way will be needed for the construction, its planned route runs through six Hogan Park soccer fields and cuts a corner off land owned by the Midland Amateur Radio Club, Midland recreation director George Logan explained.

"There isn't really much choice," Logan said of the Lamesa jag. "We're trying to talk with all the people who have been good neighbors to us in the case of the radio club and good service providers in the case of the soccer associations."

"We're just hoping they'll work with us," he said. "It's in the citizens' best interest."

Spokesmen for the two soccer associations said they have come to an agreement with the city for an "interim" plan for game scheduling during the 2½ years the project will take from beginning to end.

The two associations are the Midland Soccer Association, which schedules games for youth between the ages of 4 and 18, and the Permian Basin Soccer Association, which holds matches for about 500 adult players.

Under the agreement, the two associations will schedule around each other to share three of the remaining Hogan Park fields, adult soccer association president John Connelly said.

During construction, the Hogan Park soccer complex still will maintain 11 fields for soccer games. "The complex at Hogan Park will always be there," Logan emphasized.

In addition, the youth soccer league will move games scheduled for players under 10 years old to Windlands Park near Wadley and A streets, Jimmy Hicks, youth soccer association executive vice president said.

That change will go into effect after the youth league's fall schedule ends this year, Hicks said.

The youth soccer official noted some temporary loss to the league in the form of improvements made at the Hogan complex with about $160,000 in league funds.

However, "In the long run, I think it will benefit all of us," he said, a sentiment that Connelly echoed.

Both leagues are counting on the city's construction of a major new sports complex in northwest Midland with funds from a bond issue the City Council tentatively plans to present to voters in September.

The new 150-acre complex — which would cost between $3 million and $4 million and hold facilities for other sports like baseball, softball and T-ball — also should provide enough room for expansion of both soccer leagues.

Meanwhile, the city is continuing negotiations over the next two weeks with the Midland Amateur Radio Club for relocation of its building, which is adjacent to Hogan Park.

The club bought the land from the city during the mid-1950s, but neither Logan nor radio club executive board member Sterling Talley have been able to pin down how much the club paid for the land.

Logan is hoping that the club will agree to relocate with a 25-year lease to a now out-of-use activities building in the Hogan Park complex, he said.

While Talley said the proposal "on the surface seems to be satisfactory," he was unsure what outcome the negotiations will yield.

"The club has to vote on it and all that," he said.

The state highway department received funding approval in January to widen to five lanes north Lamesa from Wadley Avenue to Loop 250 and south Lamesa from Louisiana Avenue to U.S. Interstate 20.

2 people killed, 2 hurt in unrelated mishaps

From Staff Reports

Two persons were killed and two injured Monday in separate traffic accidents which occurred only 25 minutes apart, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Two women were killed in a two-vehicle head-on collision which occurred at 6:20 p.m. six miles west of Lamesa on State Highway 180 in Dawson County.

Killed were Mary Haynes Crider, 49, of Denver City, and Jacquelyn Ann Rohner, 24, of Bushkill, Pa. They were pronounced dead at the scene by Dawson County Justice of the Peace Denise Dyess minutes after the accident, DPS reports said.

The 1985 Pontiac two-door driven by Ms. Crider was eastbound in the westbound lane of S.H. 180, when another vehicle which was also eastbound in front of the 1982 Dodge two-door driven by Ms. Rohner swerved to avoid a collision, according to DPS reports.

The road was dry and clear at the time of the accident, and neither woman wore seat belts, reports said.

Two persons were injured in a two-vehicle accident which occurred at 7:05 p.m. 21 miles north of Rankin at the intersection of S.H. 349 and FM 2401, according to DPS reports.

Terry Gene Taylor, 42, of Midland was listed in guarded condition at Midland Memorial Hospital with possible internal injuries, reports said.

Sharon Margaret Claus, 18, of Midkiff, was treated for cuts and abrasions at Rankin General Hospital and released, according to reports.

The car driven by Ms. Claus pulled out of a private drive into the path of the pickup truck driven by Taylor, which was northbound on S.H. 349. The vehicles skidded and caught fire on impact, and Taylor was thrown from his vehicle.

Neither driver wore safety belts, DPS reports said.

Teacher cites need for suicide prevention training

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Teachers often are the first to spot signs of a troubled student, but lack the proper training to help prevent the growing problem of teen-age suicides, the head of the state's largest teachers group said Monday.

"School personnel very likely may be the first people to notice the change in behavior, the symptoms, the signs of stress that can lead to suicide attempts among young people," said Charles Beard, a Beaumont teacher and president of the Texas State Teachers Association.

However, teachers and other school personnel know little about the proper steps to take to prevent such tragedies, he said.

"The training necessary to take those sometimes small signals and then to know what to do with them, to be able to ask the right questions and offer the right kind of help — that's the area where we know very little about," he said.

Beard made the comments during the first public hearing of the House Committee on Teen-age Suicides. The committee will make recommendations to the Legislature.

Committee Chairman Bob Melton, D-Gatesville, said suicide is the second-leading cause of death — after accidents — among teen-agers. About 5,000 teens nationwide commit suicide each year, he said.

There have been three teen-age suicides in Midland this year.

"Experts say this can be avoided if we recognize the warning signs," he said. Melton said 40 states so far have created task forces to study the problem.

Beard said the stress of moving to a new school, failing courses or having trouble with teachers often contributes to a student's thoughts of suicide. Also contributing are the anxieties of trying to meet higher academic standards set by the state and being kept from extra-curricular activities under the no-pass, no-play rule.

Students having to deal with financial and family problems in the home also are at greater risk, said Margarat Williams, a senior counselor at David Crockett High School in Austin.

Beard recommended local school programs be established to address prevention of teen-age suicides; intervention once a potential problem is identified; and the implementation of a "coping strategy if the crisis does occur."

He recommended the involvement of school personnel, local school boards, professional education associations, parent-teacher groups, the Legislature and professionals.

James L. Crouch, executive director of the Texas PTA, said his group would support legislation to coordinate national, state and local resources, plus the creation of suicide prevention programs, to help fight the problem.

"Whatever program it is," Beard said, "it's going to require careful planning and careful training by people who really know what they are talking about in dealing with this problem."

Ector County Commissioners delay action on raises

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday indefinitely postponed action on a proposal that would have given county employees raises.

Commissioners declined to approve recommendations that would have provided county employees raises during their first five years based on five percent of an employee's starting salary. Thereafter, raises would would have been given every three years at the discretion of individual supervisors.

A fund of $350,000 had been set aside to take care of proposed raises, according to Fiscal Services Director Tom Pace, who also chaired the reclassification committee, but commissioners put off action until some "future date," claiming they couldn't accurately determine how much raises will cost the county in the future.

County Judge Jan Fisher, who has supported efforts to develop a system that would allow raises for county employees was not present for Monday's meeting due to an out-of-state commitment.

Some county employees informed of action by Commissioners Court members indicated their votes for commissioners court candidates in November, and in the future, will go to candidates who support raises for employees.

Earlier this year commissioners approved a five cent an hour increase for all county employees aimed at offsetting an increase in deductions for Social Security (FICA).

In other action Monday, commissioners interviewed four engineering-consulting firms in connection with planned work at Schlemeyer Field.

The firms of Odessa-based Landgraf, Crutcher & Associates and Parkhill, Smith & Cooper Inc., a firm with offices in Midland and Lubbock emerged as the two firms the county would begin negotiating with.

However, commissioners deadlocked on which firm would be first. Two supported the Lubbock-Midland firm and two supported the Odessa firm.

Action was deferred until June 13, when Judge Fisher is expected to be present to break the tie vote.

County Engineer Don Bonifay said the application to the Federal Aviation Administration has not yet been approved, but a consulting-engineering firm is needed to begin preliminary work in anticipation of approval.

The proposed improvement of the airport's drainage system, taxiways and runways, and the addition of fencing, according to Bonifay, would bring the airport in line with the master plan developed several years ago.

Texas' 'safety net' for poor full of huge holes, policy center claims

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The so-called "safety net" for poor people in Texas is among the weakest in the nation and gaps in the net are widening, according to a state-by-state assessment of programs to assist the nation's neediest citizens.

The report by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, an independent Washington research organization, set 10 standards for judging the adequacy of each state's safety nets. Texas was one of only two states (Indiana was the other) that failed to meet any of the study's standards.

The study found that, in 1987, the maximum benefits available in Texas through the major joint federal and state welfare program — Aid to Families with Dependent Children — amounted to only 24.3 percent of the federal poverty line.

For instance, a Texas mother and two children with no other income received a maximum AFDC benefit of $184 a month, or $2,208 per year, compared with a poverty line of $9,069-per-year.

Since 1970, AFDC benefits have declined more in Texas than anywhere else and the state now ranks 48th among the 50 states and the District of Columbia.

The assessment noted that in Texas, AFDC benefits are available only to single-parent families and no provisions exist for the delivery of emergency AFDC assistance.

The study focused on AFDC, Medicaid, Supplemental Security Income and unemployment insurance. Each of these programs is only available if need can be proven.

AFDC, Medicaid and unemployment insurance are all jointly funded by the states along with the federal government. As a consequence, how well they serve as safety nets for the poor varies widely, according to Robert Greenstein, director of the Budget and Policy Priorities center.

Supplemental Security Income is the primary cash assistance program for the elderly and disabled poor. While benefits are provided solely by the federal government, a number of options are available to the states for enhancing these benefits. Texas provides no supplements to the basic, federal SSI program.

The study also found that eligibility for Medicaid, which provides health care for the poor, is tightly constrained in Texas.

Many poor families are left out of the program, the study said, noting that single-parent families of three must have no income in order to be eligible for Medicaid. Large numbers of pregnant women and children also are not eligible for Medicaid in Texas because the state has not adopted a federal option.

CENTER

Thompson said he didn't visualize "any real" advantage to the center being near the proposed jail.

However, he said, the nearness of the jail probably would be a "grim reminder" of where the residents could go if they violate terms of probation.

The upshot of the program is to make "better citizens" out of the probationers by their working at jobs, paying taxes, "carrying their fair share of the load, and reducing criminal offenses, Thompson said.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter indicated support of the Center.

"If it can take one individual in his first time in the criminal judicial system and give him an opportunity to clean his act up and keep him out of the penitentiary and rehabilitate himself to become a useful citizen," Painter said, "then the program is worth it."

MOVE

The funds were allocated under the 1988-92 Urban Systems Program of the U.S. Department of Transportation, highways department District Engineer Marshall Huffman said.

About $2.2 million in federal funds will be spent on the north and south Lamesa widening projects, Huffman said.

Within that amount, about $800,000 will be spent on widening north Lamesa and moving the street's intersection with Loop 250, he said.

In return for the state contribution, the city must provide the right of way on both north and south Lamesa and build the road's curb and gutter.

The city has set aside $767,803 in federal community development funds to buy about 150 pieces of property for the road's right of way on south Lamesa.

About 15 homeowners, 14 renters and three businesses are expected to be relocated by the south Lamesa project.

The road project is expected to revitalize the city's east side by doubling traffic into the area, city officials have said.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Cause of fire that killed two women being probed

From Staff Reports

The cause of a blaze that killed two Midland women early Sunday is still under investigation, fire officials said early today.

Ella Mae Andrews, 53, and her mother, Myrtle Bell Galloway, 83, perished in the blaze at the home they were renting at 1905 English Dr., fire inspector Emmett Roch said.

The blaze started about 6:30 a.m. in a southwest bedroom, and spread as a mattress, clothing and bed clothes caught fire, reports said.

Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said investigators are not sure why the fire started, but it appears it had smoldered for several hours.

The older woman could not hear or speak, and Ms. Andrews may also have been unable to hear, Roch said.

Damage to the two-bedroom brick home was near total, according to reports.

Agriculture official to speak

From Staff Reports

Mike Moeller, Texas deputy commissioner of agriculture, will host a reception Thursday in conjunction with the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and the Odessa Black Chambers of Commerce.

The event is planned for 6 p.m. at the Region 18 Educational Center in Room D of the Computer Service Building. The center is located at 2811 La Force at Midland Air Terminal.

Moeller will address questions from the public during the reception.

Seniors hold election

From Staff Reports

Local voting in the Texas Silver Haired Legislature election is being held today at the Senior Citizens Center and the Casa de Amigos Center.

Voting will continue until 5 p.m.

The Silver Haired Legislature works with the Texas Legislature on legislation affecting senior citizens.

El Paso police shoot man

EL PASO (AP) — A transient was in critical condition early today after he was shot several times after he grabbed an El Paso police officer's gun, authorities said.

Elliott Luce, 30, of Seattle, was in surgery at Providence Memorial Hospital early today. A nursing supervisor said the man was in surgery and a neurosurgeon had been called in.

Local medical auxiliary honored

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Medical Auxiliary, represented by Mrs. William M. Hibbitts, received an award at the recent San Antonio convention of the Texas Medical Association Auxiliary for the best project in the state for its size group.

The award-winning project was "A Valentine for Your Doctor" which raised funds for health career scholarships given to area high school graduates while focusing attention on the positive contribution Midland's physicians make to the community.

The local medical auxiliary is well-known for its involvement with community health education, especially in the areas of chemical dependency, child abuse, family violence and mental and physical health.

New officers for the local group are Iris Foster, president; Jann Wiesenfeld, president-elect; Bambi Nix, first vice president; Billie Meckley, second vice president; Claudia Traxel, secretary; and Linda Carter, treasurer.

Jet should have stopped on runway, NTSB says

GRAPEVINE (AP) — A federal safety inspector says an American Airlines jet that aborted its takeoff and skidded into a grassy field should have been able to stop on a runway.

The mishap at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport was not the first time a DC-10 has failed to stop at the end of a runway, National Transportation Safety Board investigator Armond Edwards said.

Clothing costs cause sticker shock

By LEONARD SLOANE
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — This is no time to need clothes, especially if you're a woman.

Not only are the fashions confusing, but prices are giving shoppers a case of sticker shock. If you're a man, stock up now; experts say the price of men's wear is headed up the same path.

The increase in apparel prices distorted the Consumer Price Index for March, accounting for half its monthly rise of five-tenths of 1 percent. After seasonal adjustment, apparel rose at four times the rate of the overall index, or 2 percent. The advance was 3.9 percent for women's apparel and 1.2 percent for men's.

"Certainly the story of March was apparel prices," said Patrick C. Jackman, chief of the Consumer Price Index branch of the Labor Department. "And you would expect a fairly large increase in April." The April figures will be released next Friday.

When people shop, what they notice are year-to-year increases, and those are in double digits. Take Anne Klein II, a mid-priced line of clothing marketed for working women. One Anne Klein II jacket is selling for about $300 this spring, about 25 percent more than a year ago.

Jim Griebenow, a vice president at Marshall Field's in Chicago, attributes the rises to "pressure on pricing."

Where is the pressure coming from? From all over.

The apparel marketplace is global, with raw materials purchased everywhere and garments often processed in several countries to take advantage of lower labor costs and the vagaries of trade restraints that the United States has negotiated to protect American industry.

All told, imports account for almost half of American apparel sales.

Imports cost more as the dollar falls, and the dollar is down 8 percent just in the last year and 22 percent from its peak in March 1985, according to an index maintained by the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas. As it falls, more dollars are needed to buy the same amount of foreign goods.

Take the case of a certain hand-knit sweater imported from Italy, whose currency has appreciated around 30 percent against the dollar over the last 12 months. A year ago, the cost of the sweater to American retailers was $100; its retail price was marked up by most stores to $220. Because of the currency change, the same sweater's costs $130 this month, with the public being charged $285.

The falling dollar is not the only thing making foreign goods costlier. The United States has 41 bilateral agreements that limit imports of garments, fabric, yarn and fiber from countries including such apparel powerhouses as Hong Kong, South Korea and Taiwan. By restricting what can be sold to the United States, these agreements encourage foreign suppliers to ship higher-priced items.

Wool is under such constraints, and the price of woolens has soared as foreign contractors have scrambled to purchase quota allotments, adding that cost to the price of foreign goods. "There's a very live trade going on in quotas in the Far Eastern countries," said Kurt Barnard, a publisher of Retail Marketing Report.

Now new market pressures are coming into play, as demand increases in countries like China and the Soviet Union that were not previously major importers of wool. The result: Men's suit manufacturers have pushed their prices significantly higher this spring and expect even larger increases a year from now.

"You haven't seen anything yet," said B. G. Cox, president of the Joseph & Feiss Co., a major producer of men's tailored clothing.

CNS Graphic

At Paul Stuart, a men's clothier in New York, the average price of suits is "about $650, between 15 and 20 percent over last spring, and there's going to be a 20 percent-plus increase for fall," said Clifford Grodd, the store's president.

"To the extent that it is more difficult to source overseas, the domestic manufacturers will raise their prices," said Martin Lewin, a partner in the Washington office of Mudge Rose Guthrie Alexander & Ferdon, the law firm that represents the American Association of Exporters and Importers.

So will the stores. "There's no secret about it," said Bernard Ozer, vice president of the Associated Merchandising Corp., a marketing and merchandising organization in New York for department and specialty stores. "When a store pays more, it charges more."

But some think that is not the whole story. "I'm not sure apparel producers have raised their prices as much as retailers have raised their prices," said Emanuel Weintraub, president of Emanuel Weintraub Associates, a management consulting firm in Fort Lee, N.J.

Monroe Greenstein, an analyst for the securities firm of Bear, Stearns & Co. in New York, agreed: "More and more retailers, particularly department and specialty stores, have been lopping off their low-end merchandise. Basically they believe in the more affluent consumer. That's the wave of the future."

Retailers have reason to think that the women who shop in their stores will try to accommodate the increase. Fashionable suits and separates have become the uniforms of many women in the work force. American working women spent almost $1,700 on average for apparel in 1986, according to a survey by Mademoiselle magazine. Last year, overall retail sales of women's apparel rose 6.4 percent, to $92 billion.

Most experts are predicting further increases.

John F. O'Neill, executive director of the Clothiers Corp., a New York buying office for men's specialty stores, was blunt: "There's no doubt in my mind the consumer is going to be paying more for the same quality or the same for less quality."

Impulse buying becoming a luxury purchase of past

By ANNE-MARIE SCHIRO
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Shoppers don't need the Consumer Price Index to tell them that clothing prices have gone up.

"Prices have skyrocketed," said Helen Bozan, a real estate broker who was inspecting the sale racks at Bloomingdale's one day this week. "I'm looking and waiting for markdowns."

"I used to shop at the beginning of the season," she added. "Now I'm shopping later and later. I come through every day on my lunch hour and just wait for things to go on sale."

Julie Weiss, who is in television advertising sales, was combing through a nearby rack of markdowns. "Either my taste has increased or prices have increased," she said.

She was shopping with her friend Margaret Tjepkema. "I've started to buy less," said Tjepkema, the New York sales manager for Katz Communications. "It's come down to, if we don't love it, we don't buy it."

Dawn Dankner, a public relations executive at the Kinney Shoe Corp., said that impulse buying is a thing of the past for her. "I saw a red jacket by Anne Klein II that I love," she said. "It's $500. I've been thinking about it and looking around, but there's nothing I like as much, so I'll probably go back and get it. I don't have time to look for sales or search out bargains, and I need clothes for work."

Judith Burger, an educational therapist, said: "I don't have to look different every day, but the prices really knock me out. By the time you put all the pieces together for an outfit, it adds up to more than $1,000 for a little daytime something or other."

Muriel Myerson, whose husband, Bernard, is the president of Loews Theaters, no longer works outside the home but, like many corporate wives, leads an active social life.

"A dress can cost as much as a small automobile," she said. "It's very difficult to pay these prices if you've been around a few years and seen the escalation. I feel a certain amount of guilt about paying these prices. Many of my friends say they're buying less."

She has also found that styles are not that tempting. "Many are unwearable for the average woman," she said. "I'm much more careful about what I buy. In the motion picture business, they talk about movies with staying power as having legs. I look for clothes that have legs."

Roberta Burk Schoenfield, a broker at the Chilmark Commodities Corp., has a special problem. "I lost almost 50 pounds," she said, "so I'm forced into buying clothes, and I'm appalled at the prices. I'm not a shopper and I don't have time to shop the sales, so I'll just buy less.

"A few years ago," she added, "you could get a nice, decent dress for $100. Today you have to pay $350 or $400 for a dress that isn't even terrific. And the hemline issue is incredible. If you're going to spend a lot of money, you want something to last."

And then there was Carol Simmons, a social worker in Birmingham, Mich., who said: "Sometimes I'm up for it and can look for bargains. Other times I'm tired and just say: 'Give it to me. I'll take it.'"

School leaders set fashion pace on campus

By CHARLENE BAUMBICH
Copley News Service

MISSION: Find out if it really matters how kids under high school age dress. That is, matters in terms of popularity, acceptance, doing their own thing and, of course, the all-American buck.

ANSWER: You can bet your Benetton shirt, Swatch watch and Guess jeans it matters. Of course, if you owned these articles of clothing, that would be all you would have to bet with because you certainly wouldn't have any cash left. Unless Grandma bought the clothes for you — which she often does.

When it comes to kids and looking good, who sets the pace?

School leaders do, according to Scott Stevens, a guidance counselor. "Even more so than what the fashions are out there." And, he says, "I would say essentially that our students are very conscious of their personal attire.

"I believe you are treated and you act the way you dress," Stevens says. He believes about 80 percent of the students at his school fit the mold in terms of up-to-the-minute fashions. This fact personally pleases him.

"I am all for conformity because I know when the kids conform, they obey the rules,' he says.

Well, what about that other 20 percent?

Fact, according to Stevens: "They are not treated nicely because they can't dress right." Stevens says this with firm conviction. "That has existed for a long time, though," he says.

Confirmation comes from a fifth-grade girl who told the tale of how she used to sit at the "cool" kids' table at lunchtime before she got kicked out for not "dressing right."

Mandy Navarre, a fifth-grader, says that sometimes the popular girls will tell her, "That looks bad on you."

"I don't care what they think," she says. "I will wear it again because sometimes they can be just sassy and be that kind of person."

So there. The "in" group may rule, but they don't always rule supreme.

For some age brackets, it's hard to even identify who the "in" group might be. Case in point: Lorin Kubina.

Lorin is "into skirts and dress," according to mother Kathy. "The weather doesn't bother her," Kathy vs. "If it's 30 degrees, she still wants to wear one." And so do her friends.

Now explain this tendency toward femininity. Who set that trend? Lorin is 4 years old.

Mothers themselves play a big part in children's fashion statements, according to Connie Milazzo, assistant manager of the Canary and the Elephant store ("We sell big things for little prices") in Illinois.

"I will buy you candy," Mother says, "or more earrings." This dialogue goes on while Connie comes at the little cherub with an earring gun.

"I get one (ear) done and the child starts crying and runs out of the store and goes and hides under a rack in another store; then they come back a week later and get the other ear pierced," she says — all in the name of fashion and to the tune of $4.59.

But what about when the child insists, "Oh, I need it (cool clothing article), I need it," and Mom doesn't want to, or can't afford to, buy it?

"She makes me pay half if I want it bad enough," is a response heard over and over.

Debbie Rehmus, leader of a Girl Scout troop as well as mother to Girl Scout Christi, says it's very important for children to own at least one trendy, fashionable outfit — even if it costs more. "Even if it is one outfit that is perfect, it is more important than five outfits that aren't."

Fifth-graders have very definite ideas about "perfect." Missy Missbach recently tried on an outfit in a Mother Goose store to be modeled by her in a fashion show. It was a three-piece red and white short set.

Missy felt the outfit would look "better if the shorts were smaller and the jacket was a little bit longer and it had a better-style T-shirt," But other than that, she liked it.

Although name brands are important — but not as important as last year, it seems — the overall look is what matters.

Pat Warner, owner of a popular Bananas clothing shop says, "When I started this (Bananas), I could have very quickly filled this store up with Esprit and Guess; but I decided not to do that. I just decided I was going to carry lines that you couldn't find anywhere else."

Pat wants her customers to feel safe shopping at Bananas. For one thing, she never hires anyone over 25 years of age to work there. "Girls will listen to a 23-year-old who looks cute," she says.

Cooking improvisation: It's a piece of cake

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Sukki Wilson served the greatest dessert a few weeks ago. I rarely eat sweets anymore, but you have to know how sensitive Sukki is when you don't try one of her creations. It was so impressive that I even asked for the recipe. I rarely do that, as they never turn out for me the way they do when someone else makes them.

Last week, my dinner was sort of sparse, so I thought I'd give it a big finish with Sukki's poppy seed cake. Not having the package of yellow cake mix it called for, I substituted a lemon mix on the shelf. Same thing. Next it called for a package of instant vanilla pudding. I could have sworn I had a package of vanilla pudding behind the extra can of coffee, but it turned out to be banana-flavored. Close enough.

Sukki's recipe called for a cup of sour cream. I ask you, who has sour cream sitting around getting sourer by the minute? There was a little bit of buttermilk left in the carton in the refrigerator, but one whiff and I realized it had gone on to a better life. Luckily, I have been taught to improvise. A couple drops of vinegar in regular milk gave it the curdle it needed.

The next thing on Sukki's list of ingredients was 1/2 cup of cocktail sherry. Get real, Sukki! If I had a half-cup of cocktail sherry sitting around, I'd take a belt and forget dessert. I substituted a cheap white wine.

The vegetable oil and the four eggs were easy. It was looking good. But the next ingredient threw me for a loop. It listed 1/3 cup of poppy seed filling. It sounded like a prescription you had to have filled at the drugstore. I left it out.

The recipe called for the batter to be poured into a bundt pan, but who has one of those? So I put it in a regular sheet-cake pan and subtracted 20 minutes from the baking time.

While the cake was cooling, I started to assemble the glaze in a bowl, substituting granulated sugar for the powdered sugar, two more tablespoons of white wine for the sherry and grated orange for the lemon peel.

When the family tasted it, my husband asked, "Did you leave something out?"

My daughter said, "Maybe you have to eat it while it's hot."

Her brother said, "Is this one of those packaged deals that come with their own doggy bag?"

When Sukki called, she asked about the cake. She said she forgot to tell me it was great for a party, as it yielded 12-15 servings. I told her she was wrong. Mine would have served the entire NFL.

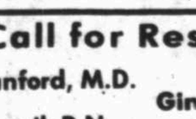

"What happened?" she asked.

I didn't want to tell her I thought she left something out of the recipe, so I told her I thought it was my oven.

DEAR ABBY

Husband mends violent ways too late

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 35-year-old man in the middle of a divorce because of my own stupidity. I was guilty of cheating and beating.

When my beautiful, faithful wife found out that I was cheating on her, she confronted me, and I not only denied it, I beat her up! It got to be a habit with me. Every time we had an argument, I would hit her. I don't know how she took it for so long. This went on for four years. Then she left me for good.

I went to my girlfriend's house. We got into an argument and I hit her once, and she had me arrested. It was the best thing that ever happened to me. When I went to court, I was given a choice of facing the charges of assault and battery or taking a six-week course called "How to Control Your Anger." Well, I have been through the course, and let me tell you, Abby, if I had known there was a class like the one I took, I would have sought help sooner. It really works. I have learned how to control my anger, and I don't let myself get violent anymore.

It's too late for me because I lost the only person I ever really loved. Please let people know they can be helped — that beating women is not only a crime, it's usually learned behavior. (My father beat my mother.) If I could be cured, anyone can. — CURED IN CONNECTICUT

DEAR CURED: Good for you! I called Connecticut to find out more about this course. I was told it is offered to people who are charged with violence in domestic situations. There are comparable courses in other states. Any man or woman who settles an argument by hitting should call his or her county family or domestic relations counseling office and inquire. Don't wait until you assault someone; prevent it from happening by learning how to control your anger.

DEAR ABBY: I came to this wonderful country 20 years ago, and I have nothing but the highest praise and respect for the United States. I am proud to be an American and I've never suffered any kind of discrimination. However, I do have one minor gripe that I wish you would air to your readers on my behalf, and the thousands of other people in my situation.

I have made a tremendous effort to learn the language and acquaint myself with U.S. culture. But in reciprocity, very few Americans make an effort to pronounce my name correctly. Abby, my name is part of my heritage, but people tend to make up nicknames, or else they totally mispronounce my name. — MADAR CHOAT (NOT 'MIKE CHARLES')

DEAR MADAR CHOAT (NOT 'MIKE CHARLES'): Americans often give people instant nicknames. It is considered a gesture of affection and done only with people they like. There is no offense intended.

DEAR ABBY: Can you stand one more version of that riddle that has everybody crazy?

I am 76, and have heard it this way:

A man was in prison. He had a male visitor. When the visitor left, his cellmate asked, "Who was that?" The prisoner replied, "Brothers and sisters I have none, but that man's father is my father's son."

Who was the visitor? — EDITH P. DAVIS, WOODSTOWN, N.J.

DEAR EDITH: Same answer. The visitor was the prisoner's son.

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you had a letter from "Debating in N.J.," describing her hurt and disappointment from not hearing from close friends following her serious accident.

I have recently had a similar experience. My daughter just had an illegitimate baby, and I left home to be with her and lend my support. On my return home, I told my friends, and now the fact is generally known — as it should be. What dismays me is that almost everyone I know has dropped the subject, and it is never mentioned. In my heart, I know they are puzzled about what to say, but the word from here is to say something — even if you aren't sure of what to say. Fumbling for the right words is infinitely better than not saying anything at all. This applies for a new divorce, a new widow (widower), a parent whose child has gone to jail — any number of embarrassing incidents when you don't know exactly what to say. Here's a sample:

"I know Carolyn has a new baby. I hope she's managing. Does she need anything?"

"You've had a great loss. I'm thinking of you."

"Now that you are single again, I will call each week to see how you are. I care."

"We know John is in prison. Is he doing all right? What word have you had?"

If any of the above is too difficult, send a card. You can surely find one that will express your feelings perfectly.

Thank you, Abby, for letting me say this. — PEOPLE LOVER

DEAR PEOPLE LOVER: You hit the nail on the head when you said, "People are puzzled about what to say," but not everyone would welcome an inquiry about a child in prison or some other embarrassing or unfortunate happening. Much depends on how close a friendship exists between you. Talking openly does clear the air, but I wouldn't presume to console a friend about an embarrassment — unless he or she initiated the subject.

DEAR ABBY: I work in the public relations office of the Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital in Columbus, Ga., and one of my duties is to forward mail to patients after they are discharged. Sometimes this is next to impossible.

For example: Mrs. John Smith. We have hundreds of discharged Smiths on file, but I don't know which Smith is married to John, so I have to go through every Smith in our files to find the most recent patient. If there are three or four, I must return this card to the sender.

I have the same problem trying to find Buddy, Cissy, Tootie, Red or Slim. Our patients' names are listed under their legal names, not their nicknames, so all cards addressed in this manner must be returned to sender – if the name of the sender is on the envelope. If it's not, it must be returned to the post office and put in the "dead letter" office.

Please, Abby, print this so people will remember that hospital patients must register under their LEGAL names, and a married woman uses her GIVEN name — Dorothy, Helen, Esther, Pauline — she is not "Mrs. Anybody." — PAT BROWN, PUBLIC RELATIONS SECRETARY

DEAR PAT: Consider it done. What a shame when someone has found "just the right card" to let a special friend or relative know that he or she is remembered, loved and prayed for, and that person never receives the card.

Abigail Van Buren is a columnist for Universal Press.

Price breakdown: Why it costs so much

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Here's some basic retailing arithmetic:

A $400 jacket typically costs the store that sells it $200. Of that, fabric may account for $50, production (the trade term CMT, for cut, make, trim) $50 more, and the manufacturer's overhead $100. Included in overhead are such expenses as office rental, showroom and shipping space; salaries; utilities; insurance; shipping, hangers, buttons, zippers, thread and linings, advertising and public relations. And, of course, a profit.

Hats return to fashion prominence

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — It's true. The hat is back. For several seasons fashion oracles have been telling us that hats would return to high style. Now it seems to be happening. Stores like Bergdorf Goodman and Barneys New York have been steadily enlarging their millinery areas and report increased sales to women of all ages.

The sort of snappy young women who are always in the forefront of style are taken with hats. They say that wearing a hat gives them a lift.

Will the trend continue for fall? Probably. Once a woman gets used to maneuvering with a hat and enjoying the compliments, she will undoubtedly want to continue.

One thing a woman will probably not do is wear her hat in the office. We haven't yet got back to the way working women were portrayed in 1940s films by stars like Rosalind Russell and Katharine Hepburn.

Flight attendant's hair approaching six feet in length

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Flight attendant Debra K. Hinkson is asked many questions:

What time will we arrive in Los Angeles? May I have another martini? How long is your hair?

Passengers on her flights can't resist that last one, because Hinkson's hair, while having a clearly defined beginning, seems to have no end.

The last time she had a major haircut, she was only 14 years old. She is now 33, and except for her bangs, her naturally blond hair is approaching 6 feet in length. When it is combed out, she has to wear high, really high, heels, or she'll walk on her own hair.

It's rare, though, that Hinkson wears it loose, she says. Usually she keeps it braided and wears the braids looped several times so that they decorate her shoulders and upper back. Or if she's feeling casual, she'll let the braids swing down to her waist.

Hinkson is accustomed to questions and feels no stresses about her tresses. Her replies are always polite, in a voice that betrays a bit of shyness.

"People want to know what kind of shampoo I use and how often I wash my hair and how long it takes," she said.

Answers: Jhirmack shampoo with conditioner. Every three days. Two hours.

The task is done in the shower. Hinkson sections her hair and works the shampoo in a little at a time. Then she rinses and rinses and rinses. Next, she combs it while wet. Brushing, she figures, would cause it all to split and fall out, so she combs and combs and combs. Then she braids and braids and braids.

Somehow she gets to the airport on time.

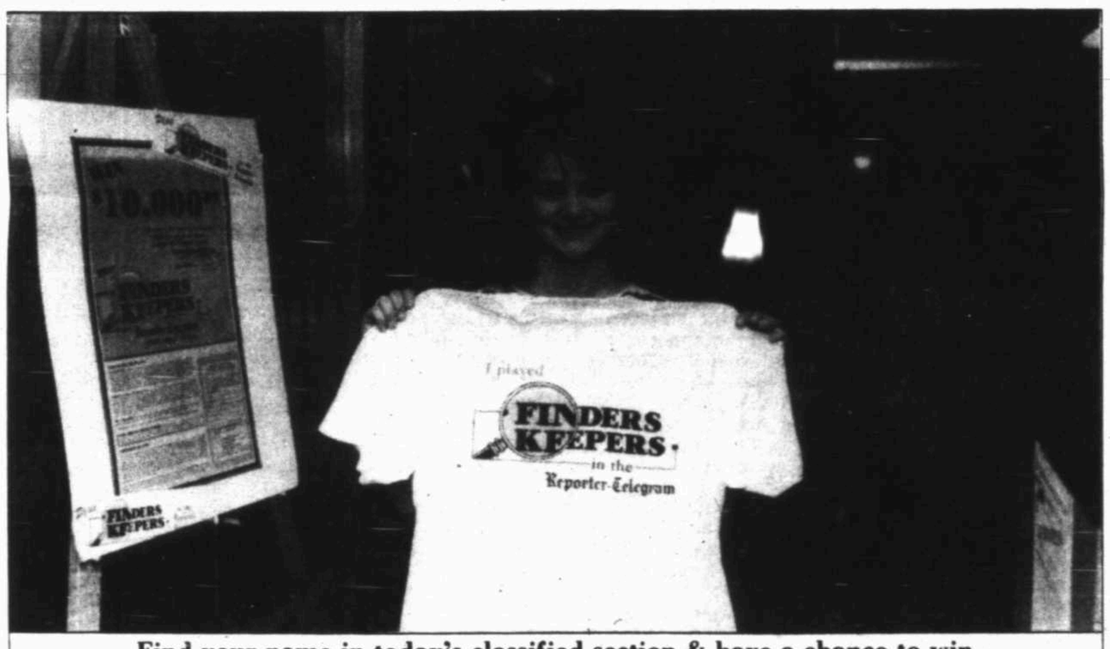

Once in a great while, Hinkson snips a little of her flowing mane off in what she calls a "trim," but she plans to let it go uncut for the rest of her life. Yes, even when she becomes an old lady, she says, ". . . if I am fully capable of keeping it clean and nice." Anyway, it is not such a chore on the days between shampoos. On those mornings it takes her only 20 minutes to braid her hair and pin it up.

Then there's the question: Doesn't all that hair hurt?

People really do ask her that, and they seem surprised at the answer: "If I wear it on top when I go swimming, the weight of it starts pulling and that does hurt!" Otherwise, no, not at all.

Hinkson, a Southern Californian, has been based in Houston for the 3 1/2 years that she has been a flight attendant for Continental Airlines. Between flights, she does a lot of church work, the kind that involves many appointments to counsel people in need. For all her motion, she manages to remain as well-groomed as a model, hair included. But answering so many questions all at once about her hair did give her a new perspective:

"Actually, I've gotten it a little longer than I anticipated," she said.

The non-experimental V-22 Osprey aircraft is rolled out of a hangar at the Bell Helicopter Textron Inc. plant in Arlington Monday.

Osprey gets standing ovation at its debut

ARLINGTON (AP) — Legislators and military officials hailed as a milestone the unveiling of aviation's first non-experimental craft that hovers like a helicopter and flies like an airplane.

The camouflage-hued V-22 Osprey received a standing ovation Monday when it was towed onto the tarmac at the flight research center of Bell Helicopter Textron Inc.

The Osprey — a tilt-rotor craft — was unveiled before a crowd of 1,600.

"It's kind of awesome," Marine Corps Commandant Alfred M. Gray Jr. told the throng gathered for the presentation.

"Yet, in a way, as steward of your Marines for a few years, it's kind of nice to know that we are continuing to do our part on the very frontier of research and development and ultimately helping to keep the freedom of this grand land and the freedom of others throughout the world who desperately seek it."

Fort Worth-based Bell and Philadelphia-based Boeing Helicopter Co. of Philadelphia are jointly developing the Osprey for the Navy, Marines and Air Force. The three services plan to buy 682 of the twin-engine aircraft at an estimated cost of $16.6 million each.

The first scheduled flight of the Osprey is Aug. 15.

"It works, it's ahead of schedule and will be a sound investment for taxpayers' money," said Navy Secretary William L. Ball III, comparing the tilt-rotor's production to the jet engine's development as aviation milestones.

"You are proving every day that a great country can still out-think, out-design and out-produce all comers," Ball said.

The three military services plan to use the Osprey for combat assault, search and rescue, medical evacuation and special-forces missions. Other uses, including anti-submarine warfare, are being studied.

"On our abortive rescue attempt made in Iran a few years ago, think what could have happened if they'd had an Osprey," said House Speaker Jim Wright, referring to the 1980 rescue attempt of 44 American hostages that failed when sand caused several U.S. helicopters to malfunction in the Iranian desert.

The Osprey, about the size of a medium transport aircraft, has a stocky fuselage and twin engines mounted at its thick, stubby wings. Its engines point upward during takeoff and landing, with 38-foot diameter rotor blades that parallel the ground.

The engines rotate, or "tilt," forward once the Osprey is airborne. Rotors lock into place and act like oversized propellers, pulling the craft through the air like a conventional aircraft.

The tilt-rotor can fly with the speed and range of a turboprop plane — more than 360 mph — but doesn't require an airport or runway. It also can hover like a helicopter.

"I'm convinced that in the next 20 years there will be thousands of these in use," said Bell President L.M. "Jack" Horner.

Bell has talked with American Airlines and several commuter companies about civilian uses for the craft, a spokesman said.

"The New York Port Authority is a strong supporter of this concept," said Horner. "We could build a lot of V-22s for the cost of one airport."

The craft's debut caps more than 30 years of work on tilt-rotor aircraft. Bell's first experimental tilt-rotor, the XV-3, was built in 1955, and an advanced experimental model, the XV-15, has been flying since 1977. The Osprey is the first tilt-rotor aircraft to go into production.

Air Force wasted millions to buy spares, GAO says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The San Antonio Air Logistics Center spent between $13 and $19 million more than needed for spare parts of C-5B cargo planes, a report by the General Accounting Office says.

The report, issued Monday by Congress' investigative arm, said purchasers at the Kelly Air Force Base facility bought the spare parts through a middleman, contrary to Defense Department Policy.

"Inappropriate procurement practices at the San Antonio Air Logistics Center may have resulted in the Air Force paying between $13 million and $19 million more than necessary for C-5B spare parts," the GAO report said.

Officials at Kelly, contacted late Monday, told the San Antonio Light they had not had time to prepare a response.

The GAO report was requested by U.S. Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

The C-5B is the latest version of the free world's largest cargo aircraft. Officials at Kelly manage the C-5B maintenance program.

The secretary of the Air Force ordered Kelly's parent command to stop buying through a middleman, in this case Lockheed Corp., and go direct to the vendor.

Officials say middlemen generally mark up prices 20 percent or more.

The report, part of a continuing series looking into procurement issues, focused on purchases of spare parts at Kelly between January 1985 and August 1986.

Several examples were cited, showing how purchasers at Kelly wasted money by buying parts from Lockheed.

One example cited in the report showed Kelly purchasers bought five computer ground wiring units from Sunstrand Corp. at a cost of $15,584 each in May 1985.

Three months later they bought 12 of the same units for $24,464 each, from Lockheed, a 57 percent markup.

In April 1985, Kelly officials bought four data recorder units from Honeywell Inc. for $40,531 each. In August 1985, they bought more of the same units for $60,100 apiece from Lockheed.

The report noted the Air Force told the GAO it went to Lockheed because it needed the parts quickly.

There was no reason for Kelly to buy the parts from Lockheed since it already had bought parts directly from the subcontractors and knew where to get the parts, the GAO said.

The report also noted that even Lockheed advised Kelly officials to go to their subcontractors.

Kelly officials were also faulted by the GAO for overestimating the cost of various spare parts. In so doing, they budgeted between $9.7 million and $30 million too much to buy the parts.

Juarez juvenile board judge resigns

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — A juvenile board judge who last week released a U.S. teen-ager accused of taking part in the shooting death of a Juarez policeman has resigned from the board.

Associated Judge Luis Hernandez Palomino resigned Friday for "unknown personal reasons," City Manger Luis Calderon Trueba told the El Paso Herald-Post Monday.

A day before he quit, Hernandez honored a court order to release 18-year-old Rawn Yates from the Juarez juvenile detention center. Yates, of El Paso, had been held as an accomplice in the May 7 shooting death of a police officer and the wounding of another.

Another teen-ager arrested in connection with the shootings said Yates had nothing to do with the incident, and authorities ordered Yates released on $2,300 bail after 12 days in custody.

Yates still faces conspiracy charges in the incident and the judge's resignation should have no bearing on the case, Calderon said.

The city manager denied reports in a Juarez newspaper that Hernandez was fired for not turning Yates over to immigration authorities for deportation as an undesirable alien.

Gently pre-owned furniture is great for that college apartment, rent home or den. Wood You Like in Imperial Shopping Center is the place to come if you're looking for new or used furniture.

Wood You Like now stocking pre-owned furniture for every room in your house

You've done your spring cleaning and need to move some old furniture, but its too nice to throw away. Bring it in to Wood You Like, The Unpainted Furniture Store and let Kaye Horschler and her staff sell it for you.

"We are now accepting gently pre-owned furniture for consignment sales," Kaye said. Keep in mind that Wood You Like doesn't buy used furniture, but will sell your used furniture for you for a small fee. If you have some well-cared-for furniture that you no longer use or need, this is an ideal way to sell it.

And if you're getting ready to furnish that college apartment, rent home, vacation home, or children's rooms and dens, consignment furniture from Wood You Like can save you money and look almost like new.

"Get ready for summer entertaining with a fresh new look," Kaye advises. "We sell only top-quality used furniture and unfinished new furniture at Wood You Like."

If you would rather have new furniture, consider the quality unfinished furniture at Wood You Like.

Student desks in a variety of sizes can get your youngster ready for fall, or make summer school less of a chore.

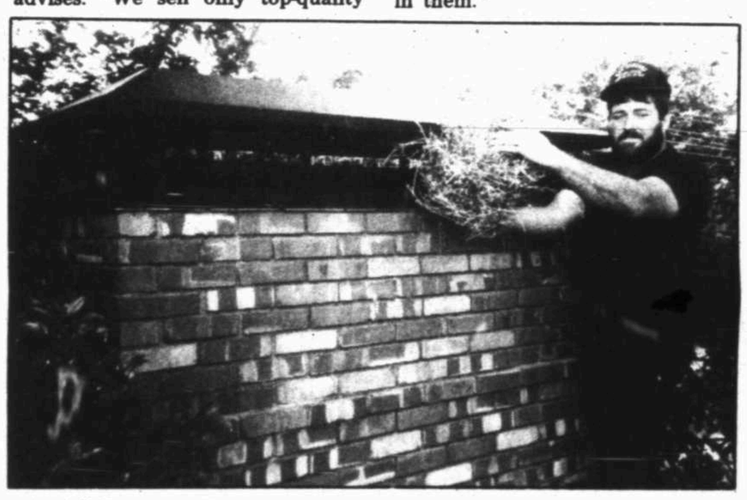

Bedroom suites, chairs, computer furniture, wall units and other pieces of beautiful solid wood furniture are in stock now at Wood You Like, located at Midkiff at Wadley in the Imperial Shopping Center. "We currently have a large stock of barstools available, and we can help you in deciding the right size for your kitchen or den," Kaye added.

"The materials used in unfinished furniture are often of a finer quality than that used in pre-finished products," Kaye explained. "Also, the unfinsihed pieces have more wood in them."

"And you can choose the finish that will match your individual decor," Kaye added. "Easy, wipe-on varnish is available for do-it-yourselfers or let the staff at Wood You Like apply the finish of your choice and deliver your new furniture ready to go."

Financing is available through the store with 10 percent down and approved credit. Wood You Like also accepts Visa, MasterCard and Discovery and lay-away is available.

Wood Your Like, located at No. 16 Imperial Shopping Center - corner of Wadley and Midkiff, is open Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

DEAR ABBY

Husband mends violent ways too late

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 35-year-old man in the middle of a divorce because of my own stupidity. I was guilty of cheating and beating.

When my beautiful, faithful wife found out that I was cheating on her, she confronted me, and I not only denied it, I beat her up! It got to be a habit with me. Every time we had an argument, I would hit her. I don't know how she took it for so long. This went on for four years. Then she left me for good.

I went to my girlfriend's house. We got into an argument and I hit her once, and she had me arrested. It was the best thing that ever happened to me. When I went to court, I was given a choice of facing the charges of assault and battery or taking a six-week course called "How to Control Your Anger." Well, I have been through the course, and let me tell you, Abby, if I had known there was a class like the one I took, I would have sought help sooner. It really works. I have learned how to control my anger, and I don't let myself get violent anymore.

It's too late for me because I lost the only person I ever really loved. Please let people know they can be helped — that beating women is not only a crime, it's usually learned behavior. (My father beat my mother.) If I could be cured, anyone can. — CURED IN CONNECTICUT

DEAR CURED: Good for you! I called Connecticut to find out more about this course. I was told it is offered to people who are charged with violence in domestic situations. There are comparable courses in other states. Any man or woman who settles an argument by hitting should call his or her county family or domestic relations counseling office and inquire. Don't wait until you assault someone; prevent it from happening by learning how to control your anger.

DEAR ABBY: I came to this wonderful country 20 years ago, and I have nothing but the highest praise and respect for the United States. I am proud to be an American and I've never suffered any kind of discrimination. However, I do have one minor gripe that I wish you would air to your readers on my behalf, and the thousands of other people in my situation.

I have made a tremendous effort to learn the language and acquaint myself with U.S. culture. But in reciprocity, very few Americans make an effort to pronounce my name correctly. Abby, my name is part of my heritage, but people tend to make up nicknames, or else they totally mispronounce my name. — MADAR CHOAT (NOT 'MIKE CHARLES')

DEAR MADAR CHOAT (NOT 'MIKE CHARLES'): Americans often give people instant nicknames. It is considered a gesture of affection and done only with people they like. There is no offense intended.

DEAR ABBY: Can you stand one more version of that riddle that has everybody crazy?

I am 76, and have heard it this way:

A man was in prison. He had a male visitor. When the visitor left, his cellmate asked, "Who was that?" The prisoner replied, "Brothers and sisters I have none, but that man's father is my father's son."

Who was the visitor? — EDITH P. DAVIS, WOODSTOWN, N.J.

DEAR EDITH: Same answer. The visitor was the prisoner's son.

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you had a letter from "Debating in N.J.," describing her hurt and disappointment from not hearing from close friends following her serious accident.

I have recently had a similar experience. My daughter just had an illegitimate baby, and I left home to be with her and lend my support. On my return home, I told my friends, and now the fact is generally known — as it should be. What dismays me is that almost everyone I know has dropped the subject, and it is never mentioned. In my heart, I know they are puzzled about what to say, but the word from here is to say something — even if you aren't sure of what to say. Fumbling for the right words is infinitely better than not saying anything at all. This applies for a new divorce, a new widow (widower), a parent whose child has gone to jail — any number of embarrassing incidents when you don't know exactly what to say. Here's a sample:

"I know Carolyn has a new baby. I hope she's managing. Does she need anything?"

"You've had a great loss. I'm thinking of you."

"Now that you are single again, I will call each week to see how you are. I care."

"We know John is in prison. Is he doing all right? What word have you had?"

If any of the above is too difficult, send a card. You can surely find one that will express your feelings perfectly.

Thank you, Abby, for letting me say this. — PEOPLE LOVER

DEAR PEOPLE LOVER: You hit the nail on the head when you said, "People are puzzled about what to say," but not everyone would welcome an inquiry about a child in prison or some other embarrassing or unfortunate happening. Much depends on how close a friendship exists between you. Talking openly does clear the air, but I wouldn't presume to console a friend about an embarrassment — unless he or she initiated the subject.

DEAR ABBY: I work in the public relations office of the Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital in Columbus, Ga., and one of my duties is to forward mail to patients after they are discharged. Sometimes this is next to impossible.

For example: Mrs. John Smith. We have hundreds of discharged Smiths on file, but I don't know which Smith is married to John, so I have to go through every Smith in our files to find the most recent patient. If there are three or four, I must return this card to the sender.

I have the same problem trying to find Buddy, Cissy, Tootie, Red or Slim. Our patients' names are listed under their legal names, not their nicknames, so all cards addressed in this manner must be returned to sender — if the name of the sender is on the envelope. If it's not, it must be returned to the post office and put in the "dead letter" office.

Please, Abby, print this so people will remember that hospital patients must register under their LEGAL names, and a married woman uses her GIVEN name — Dorothy, Helen, Esther, Pauline — she is not "Mrs. Anybody." — PAT BROWN, PUBLIC RELATIONS SECRETARY

DEAR PAT: Consider it done. What a shame when someone has found "just the right card" to let a special friend or relative know that he or she is remembered, loved and prayed for, and that person never receives the card.

Abigail Van Buren is a columnist for Universal Press.

Price breakdown: Why it costs so much

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Here's some basic retailing arithmetic:

A $400 jacket typically costs the store that sells it $200. Of that, fabric may account for $50, production (the trade term CMT, for cut, make, trim) $50 more, and the manufacturer's overhead $100. Included in overhead are such expenses as office rental, showroom and shipping space; salaries; utilities; insurance; shipping, hangers, buttons, zippers, thread and linings, advertising and public relations. And, of course, a profit.

Hats return to fashion prominence

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — It's true. The hat is back. For several seasons fashion oracles have been telling us that hats would return to high style. Now it seems to be happening. Stores like Bergdorf Goodman and Barneys New York have been steadily enlarging their millinery areas and report increased sales to women of all ages.

The sort of snappy young women who are always in the forefront of style are taken with hats. They say that wearing a hat gives them a lift.

Will the trend continue for fall? Probably. Once a woman gets used to maneuvering with a hat and enjoying the compliments, she will undoubtedly want to continue.

One thing a woman will probably not do is wear her hat in the office. We haven't yet got back to the way working women were portrayed in 1940s films by stars like Rosalind Russell and Katharine Hepburn.

Flight attendant's hair approaching six feet in length

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Flight attendant Debra K. Hinkson is asked many questions:

What time will we arrive in Los Angeles? May I have another martini? How long is your hair?

Passengers on her flights can't resist that last one, because Hinkson's hair, while having a clearly defined beginning, seems to have no end.

The last time she had a major haircut, she was only 14 years old. She is now 33, and except for her bangs, her naturally blond hair is approaching 6 feet in length. When it is combed out, she has to wear high, really high, heels, or she'll walk on her own hair.

It's rare, though, that Hinkson wears it loose, she says. Usually she keeps it braided and wears the braids looped several times so that they decorate her shoulders and upper back. Or if she's feeling casual, she'll let the braids swing down to her waist.

Hinkson is accustomed to questions and feels no stresses about her tresses. Her replies are always polite, in a voice that betrays a bit of shyness.

"People want to know what kind of shampoo I use and how often I wash my hair and how long it takes," she said.

Answers: Jhirmack shampoo with conditioner. Every three days. Two hours.

The task is done in the shower. Hinkson sections her hair and works the shampoo in a little at a time. Then she rinses and rinses and rinses. Next, she combs it while wet. Brushing, she figures, would cause it all to split and fall out, so she combs and combs and combs. Then she braids and braids and braids.

Somehow she gets to the airport on time.

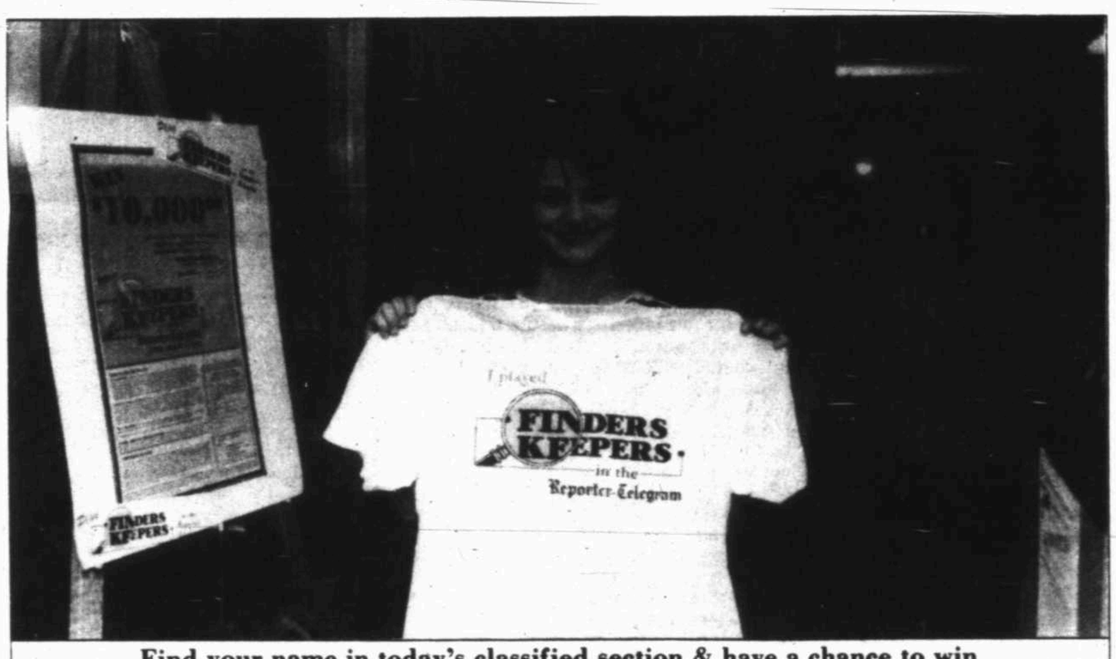

Once in a great while, Hinkson snips a little of her flowing mane off in what she calls a "trim," but she plans to let it go uncut for the rest of her life. Yes, even when she becomes an old lady, she says, ". . . if I am fully capable of keeping it clean and nice." Anyway, it is not such a chore on the days between shampoos. On those mornings it takes her only 20 minutes to braid her hair and pin it up.

Then there's the question: Doesn't all that hair hurt?

People really do ask her that, and they seem surprised at the answer: "If I wear it on top when I go swimming, the weight of it starts pulling and that does hurt!" Otherwise, no, not at all.

Hinkson, a Southern Californian, has been based in Houston for the 3 1/2 years that she has been a flight attendant for Continental Airlines. Between flights, she does a lot of church work, the kind that involves many appointments to counsel people in need. For all her motion, she manages to remain as well-groomed as a model, hair included. But answering so many questions all at once about her hair did give her a new perspective:

"Actually, I've gotten it a little longer than I anticipated," she said.

The non-experimental V-22 Osprey aircraft is rolled out of a hangar at the Bell Helicopter Textron Inc. plant in Arlington Monday.

Osprey gets standing ovation at its debut

ARLINGTON (AP) — Legislators and military officials hailed as a milestone the unveiling of aviation's first non-experimental craft that hovers like a helicopter and flies like an airplane.

The camouflage-hued V-22 Osprey received a standing ovation Monday when it was towed onto the tarmac at the flight research center of Bell Helicopter Textron Inc.

The Osprey — a tilt-rotor craft — was unveiled before a crowd of 1,600.

"It's kind of awesome," Marine Corps Commandant Alfred M. Gray Jr. told the throng gathered for the presentation.

"Yet, in a way, as steward of your Marines for a few years, it's kind of nice to know that we are continuing to do our part on the very frontier of research and development and ultimately helping to keep the freedom of this grand land and the freedom of others throughout the world who desperately seek it."

Fort Worth-based Bell and Philadelphia-based Boeing Helicopter Co. of Philadelphia are jointly developing the Osprey for the Navy, Marines and Air Force. The three services plan to buy 682 of the twin-engine aircraft at an estimated cost of $16.6 million each.

The first scheduled flight of the Osprey is Aug. 15.

"It works, it's ahead of schedule and will be a sound investment for taxpayers' money," said Navy Secretary William L. Ball III, comparing the tilt-rotor's production to the jet engine's development as aviation milestones.

"You are proving every day that a great country can still out-think, out-design and out-produce all comers," Ball said.

The three military services plan to use the Osprey for combat assault, search and rescue, medical evacuation and special-forces missions. Other uses, including anti-submarine warfare, are being studied.

"On our abortive rescue attempt made in Iran a few years ago, think what could have happened if they'd had an Osprey," said House Speaker Jim Wright, referring to the 1980 rescue attempt of 44 American hostages that failed when sand caused several U.S. helicopters to malfunction in the Iranian desert.

The Osprey, about the size of a medium transport aircraft, has a stocky fuselage and twin engines mounted at its thick, stubby wings. Its engines point upward during takeoff and landing, with 38-foot diameter rotor blades that parallel the ground.

The engines rotate, or "tilt," forward once the Osprey is airborne. Rotors lock into place and act like oversized propellers, pulling the craft through the air like a conventional aircraft.

The tilt-rotor can fly with the speed and range of a turboprop plane — more than 360 mph — but doesn't require an airport or runway. It also can hover like a helicopter.

"I'm convinced that in the next 20 years there will be thousands of these in use," said Bell President L.M. "Jack" Horner.

Bell has talked with American Airlines and several commuter companies about civilian uses for the craft, a spokesman said.

"The New York Port Authority is a strong supporter of this concept," said Horner. "We could build a lot of V-22s for the cost of one airport."

The craft's debut caps more than 30 years of work on tilt-rotor aircraft. Bell's first experimental tilt-rotor, the XV-3, was built in 1955, and an advanced experimental model, the XV-15, has been flying since 1977. The Osprey is the first tilt-rotor aircraft to go into production.

Air Force wasted millions to buy spares, GAO says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The San Antonio Air Logistics Center spent between $13 and $19 million more than needed for spare parts of C-5B cargo planes, a report by the General Accounting Office says.

The report, issued Monday by Congress' investigative arm, said purchasers at the Kelly Air Force Base facility bought the spare parts through a middleman, contrary to Defense Department Policy.

"Inappropriate procurement practices at the San Antonio Air Logistics Center may have resulted in the Air Force paying between $13 million and $19 million more than necessary for C-5B spare parts," the GAO report said.

Officials at Kelly, contacted late Monday, told the San Antonio Light they had not had time to prepare a response.

The GAO report was requested by U.S. Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

The C-5B is the latest version of the free world's largest cargo aircraft. Officials at Kelly manage the C-5B maintenance program.

The secretary of the Air Force ordered Kelly's parent command to stop buying through a middleman, in this case Lockheed Corp., and go direct to the vendor.

Officials say middlemen generally mark up prices 20 percent or more.

The report, part of a continuing series looking into procurement issues, focused on purchases of spare parts at Kelly between January 1985 and August 1986.

Several examples were cited, showing how purchasers at Kelly wasted money by buying parts from Lockheed.

One example cited in the report showed Kelly purchasers bought five computer ground wiring units from Sunstrand Corp. at a cost of $15,584 each in May 1985.

Three months later they bought 12 of the same units for $24,464 each, from Lockheed, a 57 percent markup.

In April 1985, Kelly officials bought four data recorder units from Honeywell Inc. for $40,531 each. In August 1985, they bought more of the same units for $60,100 apiece from Lockheed.

The report noted the Air Force told the GAO it went to Lockheed because it needed the parts quickly.

There was no reason for Kelly to buy the parts from Lockheed since it already had bought parts directly from the subcontractors and knew where to get the parts, the GAO said.

The report also noted that even Lockheed advised Kelly officials to go to their subcontractors.

Kelly officials were also faulted by the GAO for overestimating the cost of various spare parts. In so doing, they budgeted between $9.7 million and $30 million too much to buy the parts.

Juarez juvenile board judge resigns

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — A juvenile board judge who last week released a U.S. teen-ager accused of taking part in the shooting death of a Juarez policeman has resigned from the board.

Associated Judge Luis Hernandez Palomino resigned Friday for "unknown personal reasons," City Manger Luis Calderon Trueba told the El Paso Herald-Post Monday.

A day before he quit, Hernandez honored a court order to release 18-year-old Rawn Yates from the Juarez juvenile detention center. Yates, of El Paso, had been held as an accomplice in the May 7 shooting death of a police officer and the wounding of another.

Another teen-ager arrested in connection with the shootings said Yates had nothing to do with the incident, and authorities ordered Yates released on $2,300 bail after 12 days in custody.

Yates still faces conspiracy charges in the incident and the judge's resignation should have no bearing on the case, Calderon said.

The city manager denied reports in a Juarez newspaper that Hernandez was fired for not turning Yates over to immigration authorities for deportation as an undesirable alien.

Gently pre-owned furniture is great for that college apartment, rent home or den. Wood You Like in Imperial Shopping Center is the place to come if you're looking for new or used furniture.

Wood You Like now stocking pre-owned furniture for every room in your house

You've done your spring cleaning and need to move some old furniture, but its too nice to throw away. Bring it in to Wood You Like, The Unpainted Furniture Store and let Kaye Horschler and her staff sell it for you.

"We are now accepting gently pre-owned furniture for consignment sales," Kaye said. Keep in mind that Wood You Like doesn't buy used furniture, but will sell your used furniture for you for a small fee. If you have some well-cared-for furniture that you no longer use or need, this is an ideal way to sell it.

And if you're getting ready to furnish that college apartment, rent home, vacation home, or children's rooms and dens, consignment furniture from Wood You Like can save you money and look almost like new.

"Get ready for summer entertaining with a fresh new look," Kaye advises. "We sell only top-quality used furniture and unfinished new furniture at Wood You Like."

If you would rather have new furniture, consider the quality unfinished furniture at Wood You Like.

Student desks in a variety of sizes can get your youngster ready for fall, or make summer school less of a chore.

Bedroom suites, chairs, computer furniture, wall units and other pieces of beautiful solid wood furniture are in stock now at Wood You Like, located at Midkiff at Wadley in the Imperial Shopping Center. "We currently have a large stock of barstools available, and we can help you in deciding the right size for your kitchen or den," Kaye added.

"The materials used in unfinished furniture are often of a finer quality than that used in pre-finished products," Kaye explained. "Also, the unfinsihed pieces have more wood in them."

"And you can choose the finish that will match your individual decor," Kaye added. "Easy, wipe-on varnish is available for do-it-yourselfers or let the staff at Wood You Like apply the finish of your choice and deliver your new furniture ready to go."

Financing is available through the store with 10 percent down and approved credit. Wood You Like also accepts Visa, MasterCard and Discovery and lay-away is available.

Wood Your Like, located at No. 16 Imperial Shopping Center - corner of Wadley and Midkiff, is open Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Let the professionals at Adventure Travel take the headaches out of your next trip

Proper planning can save you headaches and hassles on your next trip.

"If you are planning to go on vacation this summer, start now making your reservations," advises Patsy Welmaker, owner of Adventure Travel. "Summer is a very busy season and planning ahead gives you a better chance of getting what you want."

Some of the most popular family vacations include Disneyland, Disney World, San Diego and San Antonio Sea Worlds, the Caribbean and Mexico.

"And we never hesitate to recommend a cruise," Welmaker added. "It is a wonderful vacation for a family! The cruise lines provide children's activities, leaving the parents free for well-deserved rest and relaxation." A fact that some people may not be aware of is that Club Meds have family vacation packages, too.

The entire crew at Adventure Travel recently went to Santa Fe, New Mexico and they all highly recommend they destination for families as well as couples or singles. Come by or call a travel advisor for suggestions on where to stay and what to do and see.

Popular destinations for couples and singles are always the Caribbean Islands and Mexico. Club Med and Jack Far Villages, the all inclusive vacation, is high recommended as a no-hassle, fun trip (a super honeymoon choice).

The Pacific Northwest, USA and Canada are good choices for a summer trip. Seattle, Vancouver and Victoria being the top favorites. Then there is always lovely, lush Hawaii, everyone's favorite repeat trip, and if you haven't been the first time, now is the time to go.

Hong Kong, Singapore and Bangkok are fascinating destinations, full of history and unique sights. The shopping is unbelievably inexpensive and fun.

The 1988 Summer Olympics will be held in Seoul, Korea this year. If you've never attended, now is the time to go.

Australia is observing its bicentennial in 1988. "Why not see the celebration there and stop off at New Zealand or Tahiti on your way there or on the return," Welmaker suggests.

It is not too soon to book Fall Foliage trips to the northeast and Canada," Welmaker reminds you. "Some of these tours fill up as much as a year in advance, but there are alternatives and if booked several months in advance, an opening can always be found."

"Although the dollar is not as strong in Europe as it has been in the past, it is still a prime place to go," Welmaker pointed out. "Particularly in an escorted package that is paid up-front before leaving. This way your price is guaranteed and the fluctuation of the dollar has no effect on the cost of the trip."

Excitement and fun await you in such exotic and interesting places as Great Britain, France (visitors must now have a visa for France, but not for other countries), Germany Austria and Switzerland. "Scandinavia has been a favorite destination from our area," Welmaker added, "and should be considered for summer and early fall. These trips are available by land, air or sea."

Using these suggestions and your own ideas, Adventure Travel can make your arrangements and at no additional fee to you. Call 683-4211 or come by 16 Oak Ridge Square (corner of Garfield and Wadley).

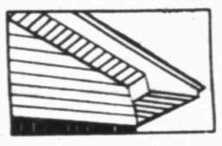

A fabulous vacation is waiting for you at Adventure Travel.

Patsy and Polly Welmaker, shown here on a recent visit to Santa Fe, and all the professionals at Adventure Travel can help you make the arrangements for your next trip. Whether for business or pleasure, call Adventure Travel, 683-4211.

Midland Angels' David Martinez
...taking the slow route back

Angels cautious with Martinez

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

It's a scenario that has been repeated throughout baseball history.

Young pitcher hurts arm. Said pitcher throws a couple more games, then rests arm to effort to relieve pain.

But too often budding careers have been ruined by coming back too soon from an arm injury. The California Angels want to make sure that David Martinez doesn't suffer that sort of fate.

That's why the Angels are being very cautious with the righthanded hurler from Austin, who has been on the Midland Angels' disabled list with a bum shoulder all season.

"We have no timetable for his return," Midland pitching coach Tim Kelly said recently. "It's just a matter of getting his shoulder healthy without rushing it."

CALIFORNIA farm director Bill Bavasi said the Angels are cautious with all of their prospects, no matter how successful they have been.

"We take the approach that if a kid gets hurt, he deserves the proper treatment," Bavasi said. The brass still has big plans for Martinez despite the long period of convalescence, however.

"When he is healthy, he compares favorably to anybody in the organization — arm-wise," Bavasi said.

Martinez is hoping to return by the end of this season after having been sidelined since last June with torn cartilage in the front of his shoulder. It was originally thought that rest might be enough to heal the injured wing, but Martinez underwent surgery in December when the shoulder didn't respond to rest.

The stocky six-footer spurned scholarship offers from such college baseball powers as Texas and Miami (Fla.) to sign with the Angels as their top pick in the January, 1984, free-agent draft after outstanding seasons at Austin Travis High School and Blinn Junior College. He struggled with a composite record of 14-18 during his first three minor league seasons, but still managed to earn promotion to Midland last season.

With a 3-6 won-loss mark and 5.60 earned run average, Martinez was struggling through the early 1987 season in the hit-happy Texas League after the Angels expected him to be their ace. He was starting to come around before he felt the first tinges of pain in a May start against Arkansas.

MARTINEZ started twice more, but the shoulder worsened and he was placed on the disabled list June 3. After rest and surgery, he then started the long process of rehabilitation.

The 24-year-old righthander started the road back with about 10 pitches every other day at the end of spring training. As of the Angels' current homestand, he was up to 70 pitches every other day — all fastballs at a moderate effort.

"Right now, I'm just taking it day by day," Martinez said. "I'm throwing pretty much without pain."

When Kelly gives the word, Martinez will start working on his breaking pitches. But again, there's no timetable for when that will happen.

"A timetable would be irresponsible on our part," Kelly said. "Real good arms like his are hard to come by.

"The most common mistake is to rush people too soon."

While Martinez and Kelly agree that the rehab process is progressing smoothly, the fact still remains that the former is forced to watch his teammates compete.

Not even a stint as videotape cameraman on a couple of earlier homestands could ease the emptiness, Martinez said.

Alicea shines, but Angels still lose

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

For 4⅓ innings Monday night, Midland reliever Miguel Alicea was darn near perfect. Unfortunately, the damage had already been done by the Arkansas Travelers.

Arkansas denied the Midland Angels their chance at stringing two Ws together, as the Travelers, behind a combined five-hitter, downed the Halos 6-2.

The Travs put five runs on the tally sheet in the first and second innings, sending Angel starter Chris Collins to an early exit, stage right.

Arkansas right-fielder Mike Robinson drove in three runs with a bases-clearing double in the first. A single and triple in the second drove in two more for the Travs.

Behind 5-1 in the third, manager Max Oliveras put his Puerto Rican Connection into play, bringing in Alicea for some nifty relief work. Oliveras knew what he was doing, as the Midland reliever pitched for Oliveras with the San Juan Metros in the winter league last year.

ALICEA FACED thirteen batters. Thirteen up, thirteen down.

For the former Edmonton pitcher, it was a work of art. Four batters were sent down on strikes as they tried to determine just what Alicea would pull out of his bag of tricks next. Five of the remaining nine batters grounded out, and of the 37 pitches Alicea threw, only eight missed the strike zone.

The 13 successive outs the Puerto Rican recorded were not enough, though, as the Angels could never string together enough hits to make a dent in an already sizeable Arkansas lead.

"I think I had good control tonight," Alicea said. "I've been working on that. I think the hitters were thinking, 'What do you throw now, what do you throw now?' The hitters would go for a slider, but I'd throw a fastball."

In the Winter League, Alicea led the San Juan team with a 2-2 record, two saves and a 0.93 earned run average over 50 innings pitched.

ARKANSAS ADDED its final run in the seventh when second baseman Brett Harrison connected for a lead-off homer over the right-field wall, his third of the season.

"I think it was a slider or curve," Harrison said of the Kurt Walker pitch. "It was a breaking pitch and he just left it up."

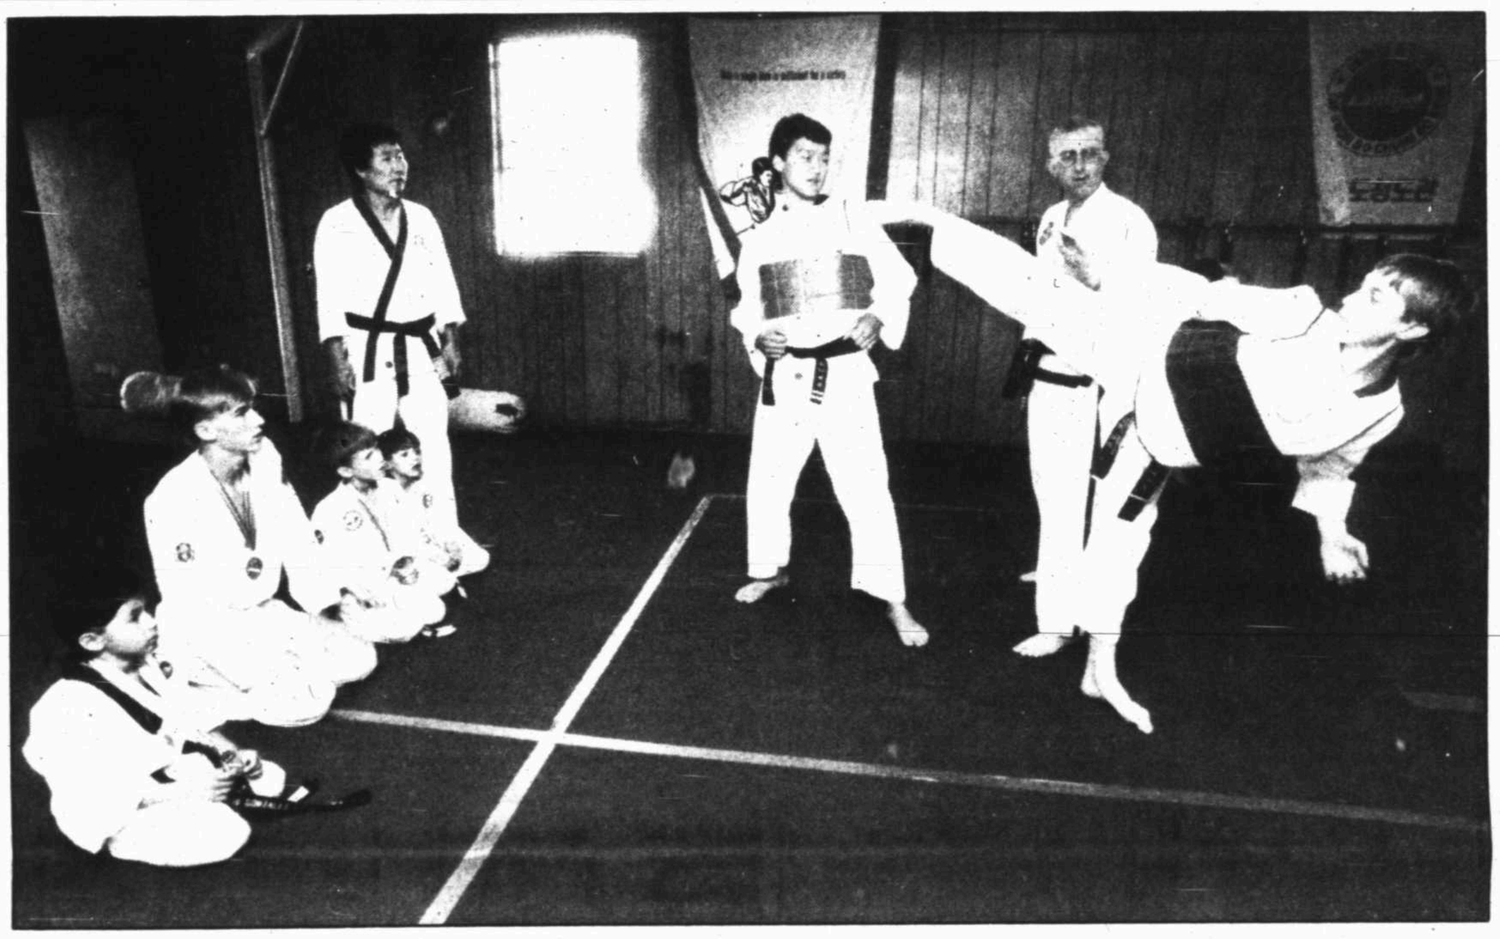

"Harrison's hit was a big one," Arkansas manager Jim Riggleman said. "It didn't look like we were going to string together anything against those guys."

Indeed, after the second inning, Angel pitchers retired 21 of the next 23 batters to end the game.

For Midland hitters, only 24 hours after they tagged Arkansas pitcher Benito Malave for four runs in an 11-4 win, they found themselves hard pressed to figure out just how to turn the trick again. In the final 2⅔ innings, Malave did not allow an Angel hit, but walked three.

IF THERE was an offensive highlight for Midland, it would have been the play of left-fielder Dan Grunhard. The first-year Angel had a double in two trips to the plate. Grunhard also scored both Angel runs.

Eight qualify for Junior Olympic Tae Kwon Do

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Eight Midland-area youths with varying martial arts backgrounds have advanced to the eighth National Junior Olympic Tae Kwon Do competition in Tampa, Fla., July 7-9.

Some of the eight, like San Lee, have been exposed to the martial arts their entire lives. Others, like Lee High School students David Tweden and James Holdridge, have just been introduced to the sport.

Lee, 15; Holdridge, 17; and Tweden, 15; will be joined by Albert Garcia, 17; Stefan Durham, 14; Sergio Gonzales, nine; and Ronnie Smith and Maxie Johnson, both seven, as Midland representatives at the Junior Olympics. All eight work out under the instruction of Yoo Sun Lee and Sam Manning at either Lee's west Midland school or, as in the case of Holdridge and Tweden, at Manning's Tae Kwon Do class held at Lee High School for partial credit — the first of its kind in a Texas high school.

Lee, Durham and Gonzales are black belts, while Garcia is a blue belt, and Tweden, Holdridge, Smith and Johnson are all yellow belts.

The black belt competitors qualified by placing high in the state Tae Kwon Do association tournament in Dallas last February.

Lee, the son of eighth-degree black belt and Tae Kwon Do pioneer Yoo Sun Lee, has been competing about five or six years and is the state heavyweight sparring champion. The Lee Freshman High School student said Tae Kwon Do was more competitive and demanding than the other sports he has competed in, such as football.

"There's more physical strain, and more coordination is required," young Lee said. "It's also more exciting."

Lakers beat Mavs in Game 1, but now the scary part

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers have been virtually invincible in opening games of playoff series. But all of a sudden, they find second games a little scarier.

"Our objective is not to get full of our ourselves because we won Game 1 like we did against Utah," Lakers coach Pat Riley said Monday night after Los Angeles beat the Dallas Mavericks 113-98 in Game 1 of the NBA Western Conference final.

"Dallas will be better in Game 2," Riley said. "I want my players to get some rest and then to be disciplined and only think about Dallas. It's easy to get distracted.

"We can't assume it will be easy at home. We really have to take care of business on our own floor."

Game 2 is Wednesday night at the Forum. The series then shifts to Dallas for Games 3 and 4 Friday and Sunday.

The winner will meet the Boston-Detroit winner. Those teams open the Eastern Conference final series Wednesday night in Boston.

Monday night's victory marked the 10th consecutive time the Lakers have won the first game of a playoff series.

Riley implored his players not to follow the bad example they set in the conference semifinals, when they humbled Utah in the opener but then lost the second game.

"We won't take them too lightly," said Lakers guard Magic Johnson, who had 19 points and 12 assists against the Mavericks. "Only five minutes after the game, Riley already had reminded us of Game 2 in the Utah series."

Take that job and shove it, please

You could tell that Midland High football coach Doug McCutchen was fed up with all that second quessing by the golden throats and the poison pens.

Why else would he ask members of the Petro-Plex media to coach his spring football game last Saturday?

McCutchen certainly wanted the last giggle for a change. And he got it. The formula was simple enough. Place KTPX-TV's Jay Hendricks and KOSA's Kurt Kiser on one side of the field and KMID-TV's "Skipper" Baldwin and the poison pen on the other side. "Giggle Time" at Memorial Stadium.

I can tell you that the Memorial Stadium press box isn't Texas Stadium, but it is from that vantage point that second quessing is most fun. You can't see a thing from the sideline and players tend to run over you, whether you wear a coaching cap or not. This coaching business isn't all it's cracked up to be.

Who wants to smell sweaty kids for 32 minutes of football or have your salary depend on the efforts of young high school students? You can have your job, McCutchen.

This corner shows up early to determine who is on which roster. Homework time. Kiser and Hendricks show up about 1½ hours later and warm-up by tossing the football to each other. Baldwin makes the kickoff — but barely.

Meanwhile, MHS assistant coach Bernie Hagins insists that I have the best team. That's why he sides with Kiser and Hendricks, I guess. Greg Manship and Randy Quisenberry just smile at me while wondering if Baldwin is going to show up or make a grand entrance at halftime.

Davis Corley is going to call the defensive plays for Baldwin and me, so he isn't worried much. Rick Wood was instructed by McCutchen to get the plays from the real head coaches, but his eyes would just roll every time we called a play and just call another one. It's a shame when you have no control over your assistants. I wonder if McCutchen has this problem with Wood?

Baldwin always wanted to throw the ball against the wind and in his own end of the field. I wanted Will Sowders up the middle to kill the clock and escape with anything we could get — mainly some resemblance of respectability.

Baldwin and I wanted the wind or the ball to open the game. Good choices, huh? Somehow we got to kickoff into the wind because the refs gave our captain three choices instead of two. Baldwin was irate and demanded a recount. We didn't get it.

After fighting to a 0-0 tie with time running out in the first half, Sowders scores with one second left to stake the Purple to a 7-0 lead. Baldwin and I took the credit, but Baldwin really wanted to throw the ball. That was enough for Kiser and Hendricks and they left. Baldwin also left. You know those TV guys never stay to the end of any event and they didn't want to ruin their record.

I stayed and watched the horror unfold as Dwane Roberts, on the other team, scores three times to help the Gold beat the Purple. But I did one thing I've never seen McCutchen do. I walked to the other side of the field and took the place of Kiser and Hendricks. The view on the "other" side of the field was no better, but the score was — and Wood wasn't there. I'm not speaking to him right now.

Now it's on to Midland Lee's spring game Thursday night — and the press box. It shakes a lot when the wind is blowing, but I think better sitting down. I can see my first line now — "Now, Earl, that was a dumb play!"

SCOUTING

Columbus (Yankees) shortstop Randy Velarde of Midland was selected as International League player of the week for last week. In six games, Velarde batted .458, scored four runs, had five doubles, one triple and one home run, and drove in six runs. This was the second time this season Velarde was chosen as hitter of the week.

SWINGS

Pittsburgh's Al Pedrique, who led all major leaguers by hitting .458 with runners in scoring position last season, is .095 this season, 2-for-21.

Cubs greet newest Brave with hated doubleheader

CHICAGO (AP) — Russ Nixon says he doesn't like rainy days or doubleheaders and hopes the sun shines today when he makes his managerial debut for Atlanta.

Nixon succeeded Chuck Tanner, who was fired Sunday night, but must wait until today to manage his first game with the Braves. Monday's game against the Chicago Cubs was rained out and re-scheduled as part of a doubleheader today.

"I never liked doubleheaders and I never liked rain delays," Nixon said. "At least we haven't been scored upon yet."

HOWEVER, NIXON conceded the rainout gave him a chance "to get my thoughts together and time to meet with and talk to some of the players. It's something that's needed but I would rather have played, definitely."

When Nixon does lead the Braves, he will be in charge of a team with a 12-27 record, the worst in the National League.

"This isn't te first time I've been in that situation," said Nixon, who took over Cincinnati in July 1982 and managed them through 1983 with the team finishing last each year.

"I don't think anybody wants to be in last place, but usually when you take over a team it is in last place or close to it," Nixon said. "If a club is going good, you don't replace the manager unless there is a complete breakdown in communications."

Unlike some situations where the incoming manager says he is taking the job with mixed emotions and feeling empathy for his predecessor, Nixon said he was elated.

"I'm glad they made the change, I'm happy, I'd be a fool if I said I wasn't," said Nixon, who recalled "A long bus ride from Memphis to Greenville" before being called up to Atlanta by General Manager Bobby Cox.

"The club is struggling," said Nixon, "got a ways to go. We've got some work to do."

HE DOES expect better results than he produced when he was at Cincinnati.

"I have a better grade of players here than I had at Cincinnati," Nixon said. "The biggest name I had there was (Mario) Soto and we knew (Johnny) Bench was in his last year."

Nixon doesn't believe Atlanta's poor record can be blamed on the everyday position players.

"My primary concern is to get the pitching staff going," Nixon said. "Zane Smith is a question mark and there are other question marks. The younger guys are having problems and that's a primary concern."

Zane Smith led the Braves with a 15-10 record last season but is 2-3 this year. He has a bone spur in his left pitching elbow which will be re-examined Tuesday.

Nixon, 53, was brought in from Greenville, S. C., where he had been managing the Braves' Class AA farm club in the Southern League.

Cox, who made the changes, said "It was just a situation where we had to make a move."

Cox spent four years as a field manager with the Braves and four more at Toronto before stepping into the Atlanta front office.

"Chuck ha them playing hard," Cox said. "I don't think he had lost control of the club but a change had to be made. Chuck is a great guy and I had a very tough day yesterday. Knowing Chuck, he'll land on his feet."

Cox said Nixon was a logical choice.

"Russ had been with us for two years and he knows the personnel well," Cox said. "I considered other people in the organization but decided to give him a crack at it. He knows who can do what and those little things help win ball games."

TANNER, 58, had managed for 17 consecutive seasons in the major leagues. He also managed the Chicago White Sox, Oakland and Pittsburgh. He led the Pirates to the World Series championship in 1979.

"This is the first time I've ever been fired in my life (in a season)," a stunned Tanner said, before leaving for Atlanta Monday morning. "We were improving. We had a lot of young players on this team."

Tanner came to the Braves from Pittsburgh in 1986 and was in the third year of a five-year contract. The Braves finished fifth in 1986 and last in 1987 with a 66-96 record.

Tanner's record at Atlanta was 153-208 and his overall record in the major leagues was 1,352-1,381.

Boddicker ends 13-game skid

Associated Press

Maybe if the Baltimore Orioles faced Dave Stewart more often they might have baseball's best record instead of its worst.

Mike Boddicker ended his team-record 13-game losing streak Monday night and the Orioles beat Stewart and the Oakland Athletics 7-3.

The Orioles, 9-34 overall, won their third straight game and defeated Oakland's ace for the second time in 11 days. Baltimore had not won more than two consective games until this current mini-streak.

Boddicker, 1-8, got his first victory since last Sept. 4. Stewart fell to 8-3 as the American League West-leading A's lost their third in a row.

"There were games I should have lost, but there were some games I should have won, too — maybe not should have won, but could have," said Boddicker, a former 20-game winner. "But there were games other guys could have won, too. I wasn't the only one having trouble winning."

Boddicker lost five times as the Orioles dropped their first 21 games this season. Baltimore won for the second time in 20 road games.

Stewart, a 20-game winner last season, had sought a tryout with the Orioles two years ago when his career appeared over. Baltimore rejected him, Oakland plucked him off the scrap heap and he's prospered since then.

"I thought I had good stuff. They scored four runs in that second inning but a lot of things went in their favor. I consider it just one of those nights," Stewart said.

Boddicker gave up one run on four hits in five innings. He left because of a tight right shoulder.

The Orioles had scored only five runs in Boddicker's previous five starts. This time, they scored six in the first three innings against Stewart.

Larry Sheets and Rick Schu doubled, Eddie Murray and Jim Dwyer singled and Billy Ripken had a squeeze bunt during a four-run second inning.

Cal Ripken hit a two-run homer, his eighth, for a 6-0 lead in the third. Fred Lynn homered in the eighth off Stewart, who pitched his fourth complete game.

Carney Lansford, leading the majors with a .392 average, hit an RBI single in the Oakland third. He singled and scored on Dave Parker's double in the sixth and Jose Canseco hit his 11th home run in the ninth.

Tom Niedenfuer got the final out with the bases loaded, retiring pinch hitter Ed Jurak on a grounder. Oakland is 5-7 since its 14-game winning streak.

AL Roundup

White Sox 3, Indians 2

Ozzie Guillen's run-scoring double broke a 2-2 tie in the sixth inning and Chicago ended a seven-game losing streak by beating Cleveland.

Mark Salas singled and scored on Guillen's two-out double, his first RBI since April 30.

Melido Perez, 4-1, allowed two runs and six hits in 6⅔ innings. Bobby Thigpen closed for his seventh save.

Tom Candiotti, 6-2, gave up nine hits in his seventh complete game, tied for the most in the majors.

The visiting Indians lost for just the third time in 13 games.

Mariners 14, Red Sox 3

Jim Presley hit a two-run homer and three-run double as Seattle erupted for a season-high 18 hits against Boston at the Kingdome.

Presley, Mickey Brantley and Henry Cotto homered in a six-run second inning against Dennis Boyd, 5-3.

Alvin Davis also homered, Harold Reynolds had four hits and Brantley added three in the Mariners' highest-scoring game this year.

Bill Swift, 4-1, gave up eight hits and recorded 20 groundball outs in the complete game.

Yankees 5, Angels 2

Don Mattingly hit a two-run single and Rafael Santana's RBI single snapped a 2-2 tie in the sixth inning as New York won at California.

The Yankees got 10 hits, with every starter having at least one.

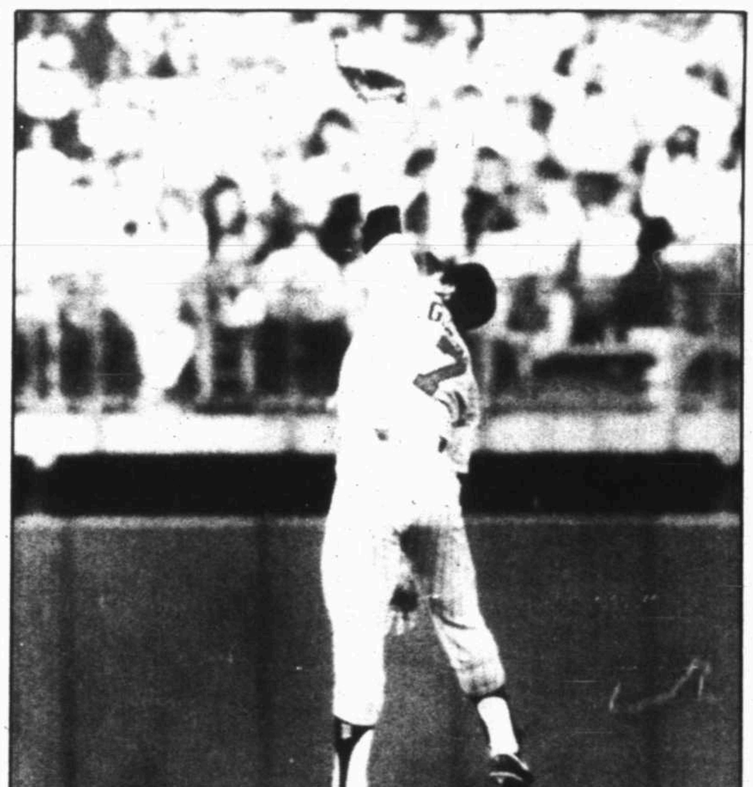

Cecilio Guante, 3-2, went 2⅔ innings for the victory and Dave Righetti pitched two perfect innings for his eighth save.

Mike Witt, 1-6, is 2-12 in his last 19 starts since Aug. 22.

Brian Downing homered for the Angels. He has hit six homers this season, including four in as many games against New York.

Twins 7, Royals 5

Gary Gaetti doubled for his third hit and scored on Gene Larkin's single in the eighth inning for a 6-5 lead and Minnesota held off host Kansas City.

AP Laserphoto

Minnesota shortstop Greg Gagne gets the height, but can't get this single by Kansas City's Willie Wilson Monday.

Twins center fielder Kirby Puckett threw out Bill Pecota at the plate, trying to score on a fly ball, in the bottom of the eighth and Tom Herr hit an RBI single in the Minnesota ninth.

Keith Atherton, 2-1, got the victory and Jeff Reardon earned his eighth save. Bret Saberhagen, 5-5, allowed seven runs on 11 hits in 8⅓ innings.

Gaetti scored in the sixth when he bowled over Royals catcher Mike Macfarlane for a 5-4 lead. George Brett tripled home the tying run in the seventh.

Brewers 9, Blue Jays 7

Glenn Braggs homered and Milwaukee used a 14-hit attack to overcome Toronto's five home runs.

Tony Fernandez led off the game with a homer and George Bell, Fred McGriff, Pat Borders and Rance Mulliniks also homered for the visiting Blue Jays.

The Brewers scored five runs in the third inning after Todd Stottlemyre, 1-6, struck out the first two batters. Greg Brock and B.J. Surhoff hit RBI doubles, Robin Yount and Ernest Riles had run-scoring singles.

Odell Jones, 2-0, who relieved after Ted Higuera developed stiffness in his lower back in the second inning, gave up one run on two hits in five innings. Dan Plesac got his ninth save.

Wind harmless, but Scott isn't

Associated Press

The Pittsburgh Pirates were nearly blown off the field in the ninth inning by swirling 50-mph wind gusts that accompanied a sudden thunderstorm.

But even the storm couldn't compare to the way Houston pitcher Mike Scott blew through the Pirates' lineup.

The unbeaten Scott, armed with a nearly unhittable split-finger fastball, registered his sixth consecutive victory with a four-hitter as the streaking Astros beat the Pirates 3-0 Monday night.

"He was awesome," the Pirates' Bobby Bonilla said. "The man was great. We didn't score any runs, we didn't have many hits. He pretty much blanked us."

The Pirates' big guns — Andy Van Slyke, Bonilla, Sid Bream and R.J. Reynolds — fired blanks all night long and were a combined 1-for-10. Scott didn't allow a hit until the fifth inning and his six-game winning streak is the longest of his career.

"The split-finger was the best I've had all year," said Scott, who beat the Pirates for the second time in a week. "I've been in a pretty good groove all season, really, from the end of spring training. I haven't had a bad day."

Scott was removed in the top of the ninth for a pinch hitter but received credit for a complete game when the rains came before the Pirates could bat in the ninth. Scott was dressed and ready to conduct interviews when he found out the game had been called after the umpires waited one hour, 15 minutes.

"It's the first time I've ever finished a game in my street clothes," he said.

Scott said the severe storm, accompanying winds and lightning bolts that pierced the sky above Three Rivers Stadium rivaled anything he has seen in San Francisco's windswept Candlestick Park.

Newspapers and hot dog wrappers swirled out of the stands and into the players' faces and Jim Gott, Pittsburgh's 6-foot-4, 220-pound reliever, was nearly blown off the mound several times.

"There was a strange satanic glow over the stadium," Gott said.

"I thought we were going to blow to Kansas," Scott said.

Scott, who beat the Pirates 3-2 in Houston last Tuesday night, got the only run he needed in the fifth on Kevin Bass' leadoff double and Rafael Ramirez's RBI single off John Smiley, 3-4.

The Astros, winning for the sixth time in seven games, scored a run in the seventh on Chuck Jackson's sacrifice fly. Gerald Young's single and reliever Barry Jones' throwing error in the eighth preceded Jim Pankovits' sacrifice fly.

Scott said he usually doesn't like to pitch consecutive games against the same team — "I'd rather see different faces," he said — but has had to do it three times already this season.

"If you're hitting, you don't mind seeing the same guy again," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "But when the pitcher's going good, it works the other way. It's a shame we lost because I thought John Smiley pitched great, probably his best game of the season. But we didn't have much of a chance against Scott."

Houston manager Hal Lanier said he felt comfortable after the Astros scored "because the way Mike was pitching I thought one run would do it."

The Astros lead the Los Angeles Dodgers by two games in the National League West. They are 4-0 against the Pirates, who must face Nolan Ryan, 4-2, tonight and Bob Knepper, 6-0, on Wednesday night.

"It's good for us to face the good pitching," Bonilla said. "To get better, you've got to face this good pitching and accept the challenge."

NL Roundup

Reds 8, Cardinals 3

Lloyd McClendon, Paul O'Neill and Terry McGriff drove in two runs apiece to lead a 13-hit attack that helped Dennis Rasmussen snap a personal three-game losing streak. He allowed six hits and three runs in 5 1-3 innings in winning for the first time since April 19.

Loser Jose DeLeon gave up eight hits and six runs in 5 1-3 innings.

"We were bound to score some runs some time," Rasmussen said. "I've been throwing the ball pretty good, but I think I had four runs to work with my last four starts."

O'Neill drove in a run with a groundout as Cincinnati took a 2-0 lead in the fourth inning and he had an RBI single as the Reds batted around with five singles and a walk in a four-run sixth. McGriff had a two-run single that chased DeLeon and McClendon hit his first home run of the season, a two-run shot, in the seventh off Bob Forsch after the Cardinals scored three times in the bottom of the sixth.

By winning, the Reds moved into a third-place tie with San Francisco in the NL West.

"We feel we can start to play well if we can just get healthy," interim manager Tommy Helms said. "We have a lot of injuries. It seems like every night somebody's dropping."

The Cardinals got 10 hits but couldn't do much with them.

"We're getting some hits, but not timely hits or something you can get an inning going with," Tom Brunansky said.

Thompson has to be on Olympic guard(s)

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — John Thompson has to be on guard as he selects the 1988 U.S. Olympic basketball team.

Things seem more than solid up front for the team that will try to defend the gold medal in Seoul in September.

There are names such as David Robinson, Danny Manning, Charles Smith, Sean Elliott and high school phenom Alonzo Mourning.

But the most interesting part of the list of approximately 20 players — to be released today — who will continue in the selection process was the guards. Thompson spoke Sunday of his concern with outside shooting and at point guard.

"If we can play good defense and run, shooting's not as important, if we don't play good defense and are forced to play halfcourt then outside shooting becomes extremely important," Thompson said after watching the four teams in a public doubleheader scrimmage at McNichols Arena make just eight of 24 3-point shots.

"If we are forced into playing a halfcourt game then we better have people that are capable of shooting," he said. "I don't know if we have a lot of 3-point shooters, but I think we have some reasonably good shooters."

Among the guards that made the cut to 48 that are considered good outside shooters were Rex Chapman of Kentucky, Steve Kerr of Arizona, and College Player of the Year Hersey Hawkins of Brdaley.

None stood out Sunday as Hawkins went 4-for-7, Kerr 2-for-5 and Chapman missed all five of his attempts.

Rod Strickland of DePaul made all four of his 3-point attempts and Vernell Coles of Virginia Tech made four of seven. Both are considered more for the point position, however.

"I think the concern at point guard is similar to that in shooting. We're only concerned if we can't get into transition," Thompson said. "If we can get into transition there are a lot of kids out there who have ballhandling skills but are not point guards.

"Danny (Manning) has exceptional ballhandling skills for someone his size (6-foot-9), but I don't know that he can come down the court, set up an offense and run the point. But in transition he's very gifted at what he does. If we can play the defense it doesn't cause the necessity for a lot of pure point guards."

Ten players who could be considered point guards made the cut to 48 and two of the surprises in the scrimmages were Charles Smith of Georgetown and Brian Shaw of Cal-Santa Barbara.

Smith made two outstanding passes and had four assists, while Shaw led everyone in that category with eight.

"I have an understanding of Charlie. I haven't watched him as closely," Thompson said. "He is extremely effective in the way he plays in different dimensions that you're looking for. He threw some exciting passes today.

"Charlie is special to me. I never thought he'd start at Georgetown and here he is at the Olympic Trials and people are clapping for him when he leaves the game."

Shaw was one of the few players to receive public praise from Thompson.

"Shaw played well today as he has throughout the Trials, but that doesn't mean he's made the team," Thompson said.

Thompson has said from the start he wants a team that will press and extend the defense. If he puts together one that does, shooting and point work may not be that important.

But once the team is selected, there will be no changing of the guards.

LAKERS

James Worthy scored 28 points, Byron Scott 23, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar 17 and A.C. Green 14 for the Lakers, who are trying to become the first team to repeat as NBA champion since the 1969 Boston Celtics.

For the Mavericks, making their first appearance in the conference final, Roy Tarpley had 18 points and 20 rebounds, and Mark Aguirre and Rolando Blackman had 18 points apiece. Derek Harper added 17 points.

The Mavericks know what adjustments need to be made. The Lakers, who led 52-49 at halftime, got their fast break going in the third quarter.

Worthy, Scott and Green had three baskets each — and two of Scott's were 3-pointers — as they built a 76-63 lead. Los Angeles led 80-69 at the end of the quarter.

"We wanted to come out and make a statement to start the second half but instead we came out lax and allowed them to dictate the action," Blackman said.

"We hit our first shot (a hook by James Donaldson) to start the second half and thought we were in good shape," Tarpley said. "But then they took advantage of all our mistakes."

Abdul-Jabbar, who made five hook shots in the first half, including four skyhooks from the same spot on the baseline, hit the Lakers' first basket of the third quarter.

"We stayed on top of them until they couldn't get back in the game," Abdul-Jabbar said. "I don't think we surprised them with anything. They had time to prepare for us."

Dallas had three days off after beating Denver on Thursday night to clinch that semifinal series 4-2. The Lakers, though, were stretched to seven games by Utah and didn't wrap up the series until Saturday afternoon.

"It says something about the Lakers that they just finished a tough series against Utah and they were able to come back and play as well as they did in this game," Dallas coach John MacLeod said.

But, MacLeod added, "I just hope the Utah scenario repeats itself for the Lakers."

It could have repeated itself in the second quarter.

Down on luck? Try Foyt

Moran, Fox get Indy 500 rides

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Two of the most surprising names in Sunday's Indianapolis 500 lineup, Rocky Moran and Stan Fox, are there thanks to longtime Indy star A.J. Foyt.

The two drivers will start side-by-side in the 10th of 11 three-car rows in cars owned by Foyt, one of only two four-time winners at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Foyt's team entered five cars here, but he was the only driver listed.

THAT HAS been his usual procedure in recent years, qualifying his own car first, then setting up his extra cars for a variety of other drivers. Some of them are youngsters looking for some help getting started, others with some sponsorship money to spend, and still others veterans a bit down on their luck.

Moran and Fox, both in the latter category, began the week without sponsorship money or a ride and without much hope of getting either.

"I was looking for a ride, and I stuck my head in A.J.'s garage (last) Monday," Moran said. "We had a good talk that afternoon, talked again on the phone Tuesday afternoon and I was in the car Wednesday.

"It was a matter of the right circumstances," he added with a smile. "I feel like an old man — a rookie at 38 years old."

As for driving for A.J., Moran said, "It's super. It's like going to graduate school for a race driver. And you have a wealth of expertise when you're driving for Foyt's outfit."

Fox, 35, drove a Foyt car here in 1987, finishing seventh as an Indianapolis rookie. But he was out of work at the start of May.

"Most guys come here with a lot of sponsorship behind them, and I come with a helmet bag," Fox said. "I just kept hanging around and bugging A.J.

"I went out and bought myself a watch to time the cars and had written off this year. Then came the page over the loudspeaker system (at the Speedway) telling me to report to Foyt's garage.

"He asked me if I felt like driving a Chevy. I thought I was going to jump in the air."

That car, powered by an unproven Chevrolet V6 engine, actually was reserved for longtime Foyt friend George Snider, a starter in 22 Indy 500s. But Snider declined the ride this time, leaving it open for Fox.

"I really have George Snider to thank," said the Janesville, Wis., driver.

Foyt, who will be starting from the inside of the eighth row in his record 31st consecutive Indy 500, had his own problems getting into Sunday's race. Engine failures kept him from qualifying on the first weekend of time trials, when he aborted two qualifying attempts.

Even while the 53-year-old Texan was struggling with his own cars, however, he was helping Moran get into the race. Moran, from Pasadena, Calif., preceded Foyt into the lineup on Saturday with an average of 207.181.

"I just wanted to get him in where he could be happy," Foyt said at the time. "Now I'm in deep trouble. If I can run 208 or 207 I'll take it."

Foyt then went out with his own backup car, a 1987 Lola, and put it into the field easily with a four-lap average of 209.696 mph last Saturday.

ON SUNDAY, he turned his attention to Fox in his 2-year-old March-Chevy.

"I went out and practiced and got up to about 202 and the car was terrible," Fox said. "It was all I could do to keep it on the track. Then, A.J. took it back to the garage and made some changes. When I went out to qualify, it was like a different car."

What Foyt did was reverse the springs, putting those that had been on the front on the back of the car, and vice-versa.

"It was just something else to try," said Foyt, who then gave Fox a pep talk.

Fox qualified solidly at 208.578.

"That talk was a real confidence builder," Fox said. "He told me to drive as hard as I could and still feel comfortable. It felt great."

The track will remain closed until Thursday, when the starters will be given a two-hour practice period, the only time until the race starts that they will be allowed on the 2½-mile oval.

MC begins title net hunt

Chaps seek second crown in two weeks

From Staff Reports

TYLER, Texas — A five-day quest for the men's National Junior College Athletic Association's tennis title began for Midland College this morning at Tyler Junior College.

Action continues through Saturday and the Chaps are seeking to make it a sweep, since the women's team won the NJCAA title last week.

"The seedings came out pretty well for us," said MC coach Joe Williams, "But there are a bunch of really good teams here and we'll have to be very careful the first couple of days not to drop any matches."

All the Chaps are seeded at least sixth or higher in both singles and doubles. And with their season record of 21-3, they have to be considered one of the title favorites. Their only losses were to Pan American University, Texas Tech, and Anderson Junior College.

In the Anderson loss, the Chaps were playing without their number one player and only lost 5-4. Other top teams expected to contend for the title include host Tyler, North Greenville and Anderson, both from South Carolina, Palm Beach, Florida, plus the other Texas entries, Alvin and McLennan.

Tuesday's action includes two rounds of singles and one round of doubles. The number one singles and number one doubles brackets are 64-draw events, while the other brackets are for 32. The number ones in singles and doubles will have to win six matches for the titles, while the others will play a maximum of five matches.

Midland's Johan Dysholm, playing the number one singles bracket, drew the second seed behind Stephen Simian of Palm Beach. Number two Gilles Ameline is seeded first in his flight; Amine Boustani is seeded fourth, Tommy Heiting is seeded second, Scott Randolph is seeded sixth, and the Chaps' number six bracket player, Robert Antoun, is seeded second.

The number one doubles team of Dysholm and Luke O'Loughlin is seeded sixth, the number two team of Boustani and Randolph is seeded second, and the number three tandem of Ameline and Antoun is seeded fourth.

Midland is seeking the school's second national men's title. The 1978 team tied with two other teams for the national crown. Dysholm and Ameline were on the 1987 team which finished third.

"Our men's team was in Houston for the last two days of the women's tourney and I think that might have them fired up and ready to take the men's title. They've practiced well and we don't have any injuries," Williams said.

Basewoman Splendorific

By NEAL FARMER
Houston Chronicle

SPLENDORA, Texas (AP) — The Splendora High School baseball team, ranked No. 3 among Texas' Class 3A squads, wrapped up the District 22 championship with 23 straight victories.

But what makes the team unusual is that opponents who hit hard, screaming liners at the second baseman use harsh, screaming one-liners when they find out their shots are being fielded by a second basewoman.

Score an error on the male ego.

"When she first came out for the team as a freshman, I said, 'Yeah, let her come out,'" said Coach Kevin Weldon. "To be honest, I had an attitude that she could come out and that would be that.

"But she impressed us. We told her to come back the next day. Now she's one of the hardest workers we've got and she's improved every year. Fundamentally, she's the best fielder on the team.

"The issue of her being a girl is no longer an issue. It bothers other teams more than it bothers her."

Move over, major-league umpire hopeful Pam Postema. Here's someone who has managed to overcome baseball's hard line against women. A baseball diamond is her best friend.

Sloan started playing baseball and softball in the pee-wee leagues, but wanted to play in Little League in nearby Cleveland when she was 10. Her parents obtained a special ruling from league officials to allow her to play, and she has participated in a boys' league ever since.

One year in Little League, her team went to the state tournament with Sloan as a catcher. She decided she would not be able to throw out base runners in high school and chose to play second because of the short throw to first base.

"When I was little, my brother, Jason, and I would throw the ball around all the time," Sloan said. "So I knew I could do it. My mom and dad told me high school would be different than Little League, but I was encouraged by them and my friends. I just wanted to play and I didn't care what others said."

ANGELS

"I've been having some difficulties over the last couple of weeks," Grunhard said. "I've been trying to pull the ball. I kind of got away from my aggressive attitude but I'm starting to feel more confident."

Over the last month, Grunhard has seen his average fall from .305 to .265.

First baseman Jim McCollom continued his hot streak, going 1-for-2 and drawing two walks. In three games against the Travs, McCollom is 8-for-10 with three runs and three RBI.

Mike Knapp, Craig Gerber and Norm Carrasco accounted for the remaining three Halo hits.

Two additional Angels found themselves in a rather redundant rut: Second baseman Jim Thomas went 0-for-5, flying out each time; centerfielder C.L. Penigar was 0-for-3 with a walk and three strikeouts.

AT LEAST on this Monday night, it was Alicea who proved to be the brightest Angel bullpen star. His time could be limited, though.

Sent to Midland from the Angels' Triple A Edmonton farm team to fill a roster spot left vacant by pitcher Mike Fetters, Alicea's days in Midland could be numbered. When he reported to Angel Stadium, he was told he would be with the club for two weeks to 16 days. It's been fourteen days — not that Alicea is counting.

"I'll be back with Triple A again soon," Alicea said.

"He's been pitching for me for the past three or four years," Oliveras said. "It's always tough to lose a guy like that."

And if Monday night was any indication, he could soon be promoted out of the minor leagues, where he has toiled for eight years.

ANGEL NOTES: Shane Young (0-2) will start for Midland tonight ... Tonight is also Midland/Odessa Merchant Night and Bingo Night at Angel Stadium ... Pitcher Mike Fetters, out for two weeks with a staph infection, is due back next week, according to Midland manager Max Oliveras. Before his time on the disabled list, Fetters was 2-2 with 7.27 ERA in 26 innings pitched ... After giving up five earned runs in 1⅓ innings Monday night, Midland starter Chris Collins upped his ERA from 8.76 to 9.66.

Klein says trainer Stephens belongs in 'hall of shame'

NEW YORK (AP) — Gene Klein, owner of Kentucky Derby winner Winning Colors, called Woody Stephens a "hall of shame trainer" for his efforts to ruin the filly's chances at a Preakness victory, according to a published report.

"I think it's very obvious that Woody Stephens was out to deliberately stop our filly from winning," Klein told the New York Daily News in its Tuesday editions. "This cost the ownership of Forty Niner a tremendous amount of money because his syndication value was cut in half after that race."

The harsh words stem from last Saturday's Preakness Stakes, when Stephens' colt, Forty Niner, battled with the D. Wayne Lukas-trained filly from the gate, until both tired in the stretch run. Winning Colors held on for third, while Forty Niner fell to seventh.

"He (Stephens) is obviously so jealous of Wayne Lukas that he threw away any chance he had to win the race to see that she didn't win," Klein told the newspaper. "It's probably as stupid a manuever as anyone has ever pulled in horse racing and one that did the sport a tremendous amount of harm.

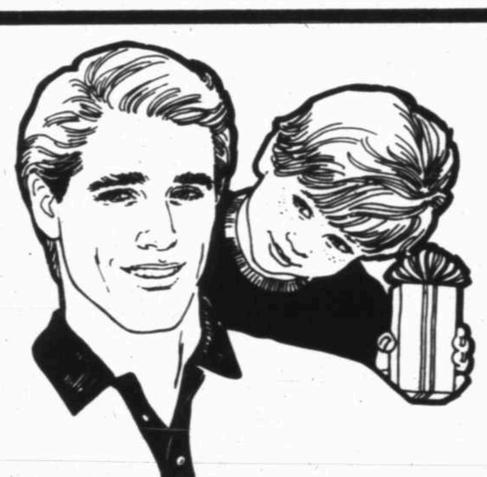

"He knew he had no chance to win that way and he just destroyed his colt. I understand Forty Niner didn't come out of the race very good. He may have ruined his horse for all time."

Winning Colors' jockey Gary Stevens accused Stephens on national television of deliberatly trying end the filly's Triple Crown chances without regard to Forty Niner's well-being.

Stephens said he told his jockey, Pat Day, to run with Winning Colors because he thought it was Forty Niner's only chance for victory.

"He's gone from a Hall of Fame trainer to a hall of shame trainer," Klein said. "I think the owners of Forty Niner have got to be awfully upset with him."

High court to hear gas rule case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court agreed Monday to study the power of states to regulate natural gas production, including "use-it-or-lose-it" rules designed to stimulate production.

The court will review a ruling that upheld the power of Kansas officials to control production from what is believed to be the largest natural gas reservoir in the world. The justices are not expected to decide the case until 1989.

The Kansas Supreme Court in 1987 upheld rules adopted by the Kansas Corporation Commission that officials said would encourage production, prevent economic and physical waste and protect the rights of producers.

At issue is gas from the Huguton Field, which extends across portions of Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. About two-thirds of the field is in Kansas, containing some 4,000 wells as of 1983. Most of the gas is carried outside the state through pipelines.

The Kansas Corporation Commission since 1944 imposed rules aimed at assuring that each well will ultimately produce approximately the amount of gas underlying the land held by each leaseholder.

The idea was to treat well owners equally, since gas can migrate underground from an underproducing area to a well that is overproducing.

To assure equal treatment, the state fixed the maximum amount of gas that can be produced per month from each well.

In practice, wells cannot always be operated to meet monthly ceilings for various reasons. For example, a well may be shut in or there may be low demand in a given month and therefore the well underproduces.

To allow for these variables, state officials permitted owners of underproducing wells to "save up" their production ceilings — creating what are called "underages" — and overproduce in future months to make up for shortfalls.

To create a production incentive, the Kansas commission changed the rules in 1983 by declaring that underages must be used within specified periods of years or they would be canceled.

The use-it-or-lose-it rule was challenged by Northwest Central Pipeline Corp., one of the major buyers of the Huguton gas for transport outside the state.

Northwest Central said the 1983 rule change prevents it from purchasing gas reserves that it is entitled to by contract. The pipeline company said cancellation of the underages means that it unfairly may lose reservoirs of gas when they migrate underground and later are replaced by other migrating supplies.

The pipeline company asked the Supreme Court to strike down the 1983 regulations on grounds that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has exclusive authority over natural gas production.

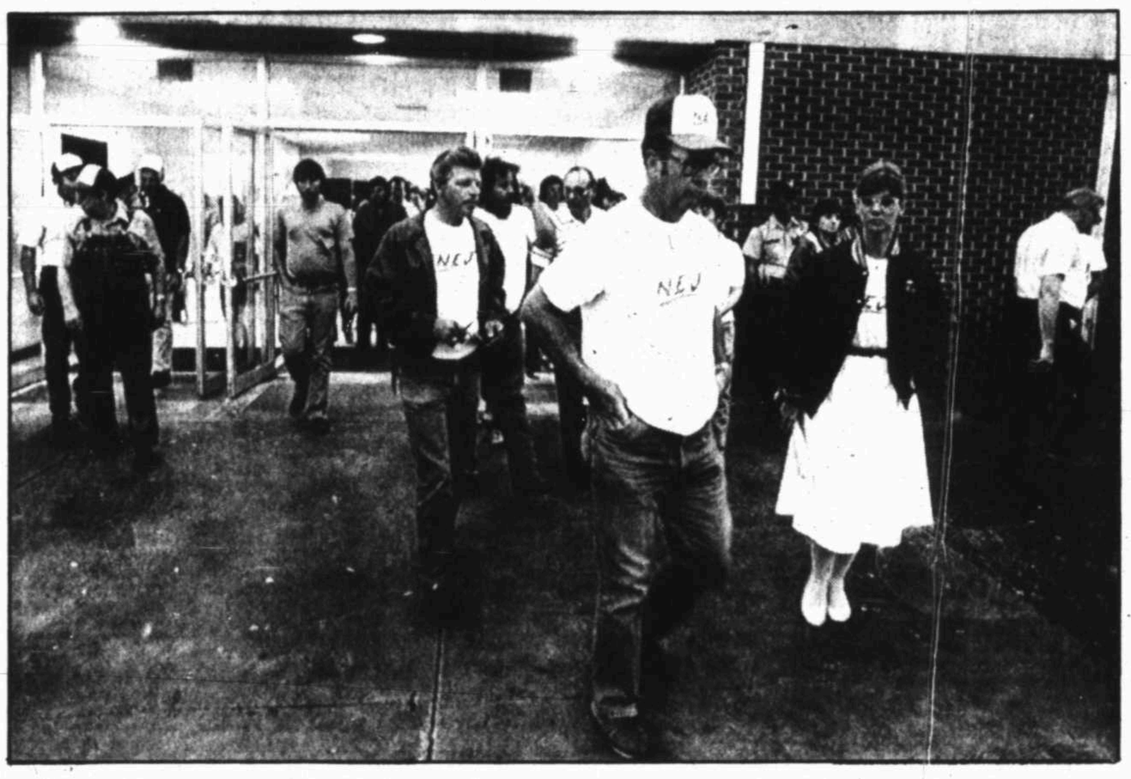

The Reagan administration sided with Kansas officials in urging the high court not to disturb the Kansas Supreme Court ruling.

The Justice Department said the Kansas commission lawfully is regulating production and is not directly regulating the interstate pipeline companies that are subject to federal authority.

The department said the Kansas case is distinct from a decision by the Supreme Court in 1986 that added a new limitation on states' power to regulate natural gas prices.

The court said then that Mississippi may not require an interstate pipeline to buy gas from all owners of a common gas pool when the pipeline had pre-existing contracts with only some of the owners.

The case acted on Monday is Northwest Central Pipeline vs. Kansas, 86-1856.

Just say 'Nej'

Some 3,000 employees of Murray Ohio Manufacturing Co. met with company officials in Lawrenceburg, Tenn. Monday night after a U.S. court ruling freed AB Electrolux of Sweden to pursue its takeover of the lawn mower and bicycle maker.

After the meeting, John L. Duncan, Murray's president and CEO, said he did not know details of AB Electrolux's increased bid.

In a letter to Murray Ohio's directors, AB Electrolux President Anders Scharp wrote, "We are not 'hostile outsiders.' We are as familiar as our major brand names, Frigidaire, Tappan and Eureka in American homes, and Poulan and Weed-Eater in American back yards."

Weak dollar bolsters Texas manufacturers

DALLAS (AP) — The continued decline in the value of the dollar bodes well for the Texas economy, according to a study released by the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas.

Since March 1985, the dollar has dropped an average 23 percent against foreign currencies, which benefits U.S. manufacturers of electronic and transportation equipment, non-electrical machinery, leather goods and scientific instruments, said the study.

Since Texas figures prominently in those industries, that's good news for the state, and the Dallas-Fort Worth area in particular, Harvey Rosenblum, senior vice president and director of research at the Federal Reserve Bank, said Monday.

"As we look upon the lower dollar, what we see is that it will benefit manufacturing (employment) and durable goods the most," Rosenblum said.

"It probably will prove to be the most significant factor in the economic upturn in this part of the country. Dallas-Fort Worth, with its diversified economy, will perform 18 percent above the national average," Rosenblum said.

The 2-year study released by the Federal Reserve Bank coincides with a similar study recently prepared for Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, by economists at Southern Methodist University.

"Their conclusions are very much in line with ours," said Bernard Weinstein, director of the Center for Enterprising at SMU's Cox Business School.

Weinstein said SMU researchers tried to quantify job gains that could be attributed to the lower dollar and concluded that at least half of the 79,000 non-agricultural jobs that accrued in Texas since January 1987 were a result of the lower dollar and increasing American competitiveness.

One of every seven manufacturing jobs in Texas is tied to exports, Weinstein said.

SMU's study found that while tremors from the oil and real estate collapse are still being felt, and likely will be for some time, Texas' bedrock industries have been in a recovery mode over the past year.

"The ongoing recovery in Texas gives strong testimony to the benefits of an open international economy," the SMU study said. "A more realistic exchange rate for the dollar has helped to revive the state's basic industries and recover some of the jobs lost during the first two-thirds of the decade," he told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

More durable orders in April

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for "big ticket" durable goods rose 0.8 percent in April, boosted by a jump in orders for military communications equipment, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said orders for durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, totaled a seasonally adjusted $116.3 billion last month.

It was the third consecutive monthly increase and followed gains of 0.9 percent in March and 0.1 percent in February.

Analysts had worried that declines in new orders in November and January indicated some softening of the economy in the wake of the October stock market crash, but the increase in April confirmed most analysts' views that the economy is now growing robustly. Most had expected a rise about in line with today's report.

Overall, orders in April were 8.5 percent ahead of a year earlier.

In April, a large increase in orders for new military communications hardware more than offset declines elsewhere in electrical machinery, contributing to a sharp 4.4 percent increase in that category. It followed a 3.7 percent drop in March.

Orders in the volatile defense goods category rose 1.4 percent, following a big 15.1 percent increase in March. Orders excluding defense goods rose 0.8 percent to $106.3 billion.

There was also strength in primary metels such as steel. Orders rose 0.2 percent following a 5.5 percent increase in March.

The key category of non-defense capital goods, considered a good sign of business expansion plans, rose 1.4 percent last month following a 3.9 percent decline. But at $32.9 billion, orders were still 15.1 percent ahead of last year.

Orders for civilian aircraft, particularly to Boeing Corp., increased.

Business Council plans seminar

A number of state officials will visit Midland Thursday to present a program on doing business better in Texas.

The Texas Business Council will hold its seminar at the Holiday Inn Country Villa from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. The five state agencies participating are the Department of Commerce, Industrial Accident Board, State Board of Insurance, Department of Agriculture and the Texa Employment Commission.

"Employers and employees alike will benefit from the three-hour session," stated Mary Scott Nabers of the Texas Employment Commission. "We belive that programs like this will be a big part of the solution to these tough economic times. Participants should leave with information that will impact the bottom line for their businesses."

The Texas Business Council is designed to increase interaction between the public and private sectors while promoting economic growth throughout the state.

Free trade fading as U.S. policy goal

By PETER T. KILBORN
New York Times News Service

NEWS ANALYSIS

WASHINGTON — Free trade, a hallowed tenet of Western economics, is fading as a goal of American policy, as the debate over the trade bill shows. Now a minority among those who study the nation's trade policies is saying that, in an imperfect world, some second thoughts about free trade are long overdue.

In its view, "free trade" and free markets is a Western concept that does not fit the more centralized, protectionist economies of Japan and East Asia. This minority concludes that if Western nations are to hold their own in the world economy, they must accept the Asian view in forming their own trade policies. They must break open the labyrinthine distribution networks that these countries weave to keep foreign competitors at bay, using actions such as demanding certain shares of various overseas markets and denying the nations access to Western markets if they do not provide them.

What is more, it is argued, some industries like supercomputers and aerospace are so immense and hard to establish that what amounts to a national mobilization is essential.

The current trade legislation, which takes some tentative steps in this direction, faces an imminent presidential veto, probably on Tuesday. But President Reagan is objecting not to the many provisions that would make the United States more protectionist but to the provision that would require companies to give workers 60 days' notice of layoffs or a plant closing.

To be sure, many economists still do not doubt the desirability of free trade over the protectionist alternative. It remains an article of faith that free trade — the unimpeded global flow of goods and services, with each nation selling worldwide what it produces best — helps assure healthy economic growth for all. Protectionism stifles it.

In this widely accepted view, countries that do not protect home industries still prosper because their more open markets draw in more and cheaper goods, keeping down inflation and interest rates. Their industries are toughened by having to meet global competition.

But the world has never known true free trade, not as it was defined and explained by two 18th-century fathers of economics, Adam Smith and David Ricardo. And even free trade's strongest advocates acknowledge that national security may require protecting munitions industries and some agriculture from foreign competition.

Of late, moreover, some economists have been struck by developments that cast doubt on traditional notions of free trade.

They cite the wholesale use of protectionism, far exceeding Western practices, by such hugely successful East Asian economies as those of Japan, South Korea, and Taiwan.

And they also say that the growth of promising but costly technologies like supercomputers and aircraft have begun to test the classical view of competition among nations because no more than a few nations might ever establish footholds in the industries born of the technologies.

"Economists feel they have to defend the vestal virgin of free trade, but, under the surface, there's some different thinking," said Lester Thurow, an economist and dean of the Sloan business school, at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"There is, you could say, a thinking man's view of protectionism," said Gary Clyde Hufbauer, professor of international financial diplomacy at Georgetown University.

One proponent of the contrary view is Clyde V. Prestowitz Jr., long a trade negotiator with the Japanese in the Commerce Department during the Reagan administration and now a scholar at the Carnegie Endowment. He is the author of a new book on the issue: "Trading Places: How We Allowed Japan to Take the Lead."

Prestowitz maintains that Japan, South Korea, and Taiwan are not market economies according to the classical Western definition. The assumptions they make are inimical to free trade.

Japan and its neighbors encourage their businesses to exploit foreign markets, deciding which industries to favor with protection and government largesse. In their youth, the favored indus-

Oil futures prices edge lower

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices edged slightly lower at midmorning, dipping 2 cents to stand at $17.33.

Prices fell in light trading Monday as the market worried about speculation of growing supplies amid weaker-than-expected demand.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for July delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, closed at $17.35 per 42-gallon barrel, down 35 cents from Friday.

Among refined products for June delivery, wholesale unleaded gasoline settled at 51.44 cents per gallon, down 0.92 cent, while wholesale heating oil closed at 46.91 cents per gallon, down 0.80 cent.

"This was a dull day," said Jayne Ball, an analyst at the Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. securities firm.

Prices fell because "OPEC's production is still up there, while there's some speculation that demand is not as good as a lot of people thought," she said.

Dollar trading lower overseas

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar traded lower against major foreign currencies in Europe today. Gold prices also fell.

Early trading was quiet, with many traders on the Continent extending a holiday weekend.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.55 yen to a closing 124.25. Later, in London, it was quoted at 124.35 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

—1.6996 West German marks, down from 1.7030

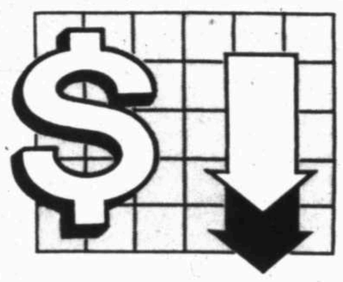

—1.4165 Swiss francs, down from 1.4198

—5.7485 French francs, down from 5.7570

—1.9026 Dutch guilders, down from 1.9075

—1,262.70 Italian lire, down from 1,263.75

—1.2412 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2427

In London, one British pound cost $1.8705, more expensive for buyers than $1.8675 Monday.

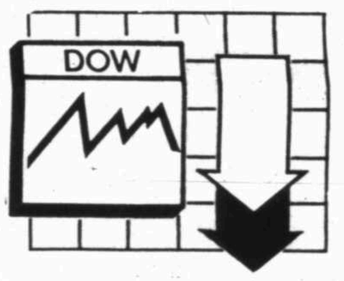

The price of gold weakened in quiet London trading in the wake of overnight profit-taking that followed gold's rise above $460 an ounce Monday.

Stocks fall amid trader concerns

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined broadly in listless trading Monday, bogged down by worries about inflation and interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 11.11 points to 1,941.48, its lowest close since it stood at 1,914.46 on Feb. 9.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange issues, with 424 up, 1,078 down and 470 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 102.64 million shares, down from 120.60 million Friday and the smallest total since 86.36 million were traded in a post-Thanksgiving session last Nov. 27.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Contractors host Railroad Commissioner

Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance will be the guest speaker at the first major meeting of the West Texas Contractors Association Friday at the Holiday Inn Centre, Odessa. The meeting will get underway at 11 a.m.

Hance will discuss his recent trip to the OPEC meeting in Vienna, giving his perspective on meeting various members and non-members of OPEC and the future stability of world oil prices.

Cost of the luncheon is $10 per person, and reservations should be made by calling 806/592-5424 by 4 p.m. Wednesday.

Court: Fixed annuities can be regulated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court let stand a ruling that put millions of so-called fixed annuities under the jurisdiction of federal securities laws.

Under the lower court ruling, fixed annuities paying fluctuating interest rates could be regulated the same as stocks and bonds.

In other business-related actions Monday, the high court agreed to study the power of states to regulate natural gas production and refused to unravel a merger between units of Eastman Kodak Co. and Fuqua Industries Inc.

Japanese plan seeks more open markets

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita received a draft of a five-year economic plan, promoting an increase in domestic consumption and investment.

The plan will be debated in Takeshita's Cabinet in coming weeks and its broad outlines are expected to be confirmed as the directions of Japan's economy through 1992.

The draft, unveiled Monday, calls for a wide range of measures to open and deregulate Japan's markets to foreign competition, improved quality of life for the 122 million Japanese and more Japanese aid to poor countries.

Failed land bank's customers to get loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Loans to customers of the insolvent Federal Land Bank in Jackson, Miss., are expected to resume quickly under a receiver's supervision, the chief regulator of the Farm Credit System said.

The doors of the billion-dollar lending cooperative were closed Friday after heavy losses. The land bank serves 90 local lending associations in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Since the bank itself is not permitted to make loans, other institutions will make loans through it, Frank W. Naylor Jr., chairman of the Farm Credit Administration, said Monday.

Nation's farm banks looking healthier

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Stress is easing on the nation's farm banks and many now are flush with cash as signs emerge of a rebound in loan demand, the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago reported.

The new report released Monday is further confirmation of the improved financial health of the banks that survived the severe farm recession of the mid-1980s.

Within the Chicago Federal Reserve District, the percentage of banks with undesirably high ratios of loans to deposits has dropped to 4 percent as of the first quarter of this year, down from 58 percent in the first quarter of 1979.

OIL AND GAS DIGEST

Low oil prices cut public education funding

SANTA FE — Sharp declines in crude oil and natural gas prices have not only meant fewer jobs in Hobbs and Farmington but the loss of millions of dollars for public education throughout New Mexico.

Oil and gas-related revenues for state schools and colleges dropped 25.6 percent from 1985-1986 to 1986-1987, according to a recent study by the New Mexico Oil & Gas Association. The total amount for public education decreased about $140 million during those two years, going from $543.4 million in 1985-86 to $404 million during the last school year. Those lost dollars had to be made up by increases in other state taxes.

Houston firm spends $1.4 million for reserves

HOUSTON (SWN) — K P Exploration, Inc., a Houston-based producing oil and gas company, announced that it had acquired approximately 200,000 barrels of oil and one million MCF of gas.

The reserves, located in Harris and Calhoun counties, were acquired in two separate transactions which totaled approximately $1.4 million. K P Exploration said it operates the properties and that it plans to drill at least one additional well which should add to the producing reserves acquired.

Tenneco, Occidental sign Malaysian accord

HOUSTON (SWN) — Tenneco Oil Exploration and Production and its partner Occidental Petroleum Corporation announced that they have signed a production sharing agreement with Petronas, the Malaysian national petroleum company, to embark on a $13.3 million exploration program of Block SB-2 in the South China Sea. Tenneco acquired the block with Occidental Petroleum and Petronas Carigali, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Petronas, in March 1988.

The exploratory program will include shooting a minimum of 2600 kilometers of new seismic data, reprocessing 500 kilometers of existing seismic data, and drilling four wildcat wells.

Union Texas completes Indonesian discovery

HOUSTON (SWN) — Union Texas (South East Asia), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Union Texas Petroleum Holdings, Inc., and Pertamina, the Indonesian state-owned petroleum enterprise, reported the results of an exploration well drilled onshore the island of Sulawesi in Indonesia.

Located on the Tomori production sharing contract area, the Minahaki No. 1 well flowed 18 million cubic feet of gas and 328 barrels of condensate daily on a 3/4-inch choke with 1,215 pounds-per-square-inch flowing tubing pressure. The companies said that they had abandoned the well, as there is no market for natural gas in the area.

Union Texas, as operator, said that the 1988 drilling program for the Tomori production sharing contract area is designed to assist the joint venture in determining the area's commerciality.

'Tex-Pek Partnership' reports first discovery

DENVER (SWN) — Texaco and Peko USA announced that the first well drilled under the companies' "Tex-Pek Arkoma Basin Partnership" yielded a commercial discovery of natural gas in Pope County, Ark. The well is located about nine miles northeast of Russellville.

The Lunningham No. 1 Well tested at an initial production rate of 5.8 million cubic feet of gas per day through a one-half inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 891 pounds per square inch. The discovery well tested an interval between 6,485 and 6,536 feet in the Middle Hale sand, after being drilled to a total depth of 6,856 feet. TXO Production Corp. is operator of the well.

The Partnership plans an offset well to the east of the Lunningham. No. 1 Well.

Transco subsidiary now open access pipeline

HOUSTON (SWN) — Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp., a subsidiary of Transco Energy Co., announced that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) has granted TGPL a blanket certificate to become an open access pipeline, thus enabling TGPL to begin recovery from customers, over a five-year period, of 75 percent of its producer settlement costs, or an estimated $675 million, under the terms of Order 500.

OIL FACTS

1962

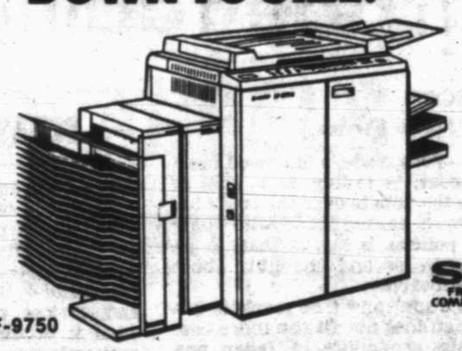

January 11 — Mid-America Pipeline Co. reaches an 89,200-barrel delivery through the world's first major LPG pipeline, thus setting a record one-day LPG pipeline delivery from Texas to the Middle West.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Investors shaky over possible earthquake

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Although we do not live in California, my husband and I have a share of a large certificate of deposit at a bank there. The certificate is held by a relative who does live in California. The bank is a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Should California experience a catastrophic earthquake, what would happen to our savings if the actual certificate and the bank's records are destroyed or lost?

Doyle

A. In all probability, your savings would be safe. FDIC strongly recommends that banks maintain back-up date in secure areas away from their places of business. The Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. makes the same recommendation to insured thrift institutions.

There's no absolute requirement on this. But every well-managed bank and S&L has copies of its records tucked away in secure locations, such as deep caves, well removed from its main office and branches.

These precautions aim to prevent losses not only from the often-predicted California-falling-into-the-Pacific quake but also from other disasters, ranging from fires, to airplane crashes to nuclear war.

If you're truly concerned about this, check with the bank that issued the CD. Ask where its backup data is maintained.

Q. How safe are wills, jewelry and other valuables kept in safe deposit boxes at banks and S&Ls in California? Couldn't the things in those "lock boxes" be lost forever or destroyed by fire or looting in the event of an earthquake?

A. The contents of safe deposit boxes are not covered by FDIC or FSLIC insurance. Some banks and S&Ls have private insurance coverage on what customers keep in safe deposit boxes. Most don't. If you want to insure the contents of your lock box, you usually have to buy your own policy from an insurance company.

Don't get all upset. Despite occasional headline-grabbing stories about burglaries of safe deposit vaults, such happenings are extremely rare.

While there is no way of knowing, for sure, what would happen in the event of a catastrophic earthquake, the management of your bank or S&L almost certainly would have armed guards on the scene in a hurry. I have to say you are worrying unnecessarily.

Q. We owned 600 shares of stock in a local bank, which was declared insolvent and taken over by the FDIC. This represented a substantial loss to us. What bothers us most, however, is the way things were handled.

Another bank took over our insolvent bank, so depositors lost nothing. News stories about our bank's troubles thwarted any chance for a take-over by other banks before the FDIC took charge. Now, after writing several letters to the FDIC and receiving vague answers, we know there will be nothing left for stockholders.

What government agency monitors the FDIC? If anyone is found guilty of fraud, what recourse do we have?

A. The FDIC is a federal agency, created by act of Congress. It is subject to oversight by Congress. Its books are audited by the General Accounting Office.

Your gripe is not with the FDIC. Your wrath should be directed at the management of the busted bank — its officers and members of its board of directors.

FDIC and FSLIC protect depositors — not stockholders. As a stockholder, you were a part owner of that failed bank. As you learned through unhappy and expensive experience, stock ownership involves risk.

If any of those officers and/or directors are charged with fraud, it's safe to say they will be brought to trial. Some such cases have been tried; many more are pending. If you're looking for recourse from dishonest bank officers and directors, you had better retain a good attorney.

New housing starts fall to 5 year low

NEW YORK (AP) — Builders started 16 percent fewer new housing units in the first quarter than in the same period of 1987, pushing the total to its lowest point in 5½ years, a business information group reported.

A nationwide survey released Monday by the F.W. Dodge division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co. found that 318,967 units were started in the first three months of the year, down from 381,292 units in the 1987 period.

Dull days in the market

NEW YORK — Compared to other periods over the past two decades, these are dull days in the marketplace.

"There are no new issues on the economic front," says a report from Data Resources Inc., supplier of economic numbers and projections to government and industry.

About the only thing new, it says, is that the allegedy overextended recovery is simply one month older. Next month, it seems to suggest, the news is likely to be that the recovery is older by still another month.

Everyone is watching for a rise or fall of interest rates, but the rates don't respond. Inflation seems to be safely tucked away, for the moment at least. The dollar has stopped moving. The stock market seems tired of it all.

Congress and the White House aren't doing much to stir things, since it is well known that any brief period of calm can be destroyed by one ill-timed proposal or careless comment. Besides, it's an election year.

Even the trade bill, once thought of as landmark legislation, isn't likely to make a very big difference in the economy. The consumer seems neither very bullish nor bearish. Investors hang around the sidelines. Quiet pervades.

Every now and then there is an attempt to produce a little action. A report hints at inflation, but the next one buries the thought. Interest rates jiggle higher, but then fall back almost all the way.

Concern develops that the expansion is turning into boom or bust, but the latest gross national product figures neutralize the fears, showing that growth is in the non-inflationary, non-recessionary range of 2.5 percent and steady.

Such intervals have been rare in the past, and usually brief, and always have preceded movements one way or the other. This knowledge is a factor in the current quiet; it makes investors observers, waiting for cues to develop.

Consider the contrast with the 1970s, when prices, interest rates and most other economic elements were out of whack. People knew then that prices and interest rates would continue to soar, so a wild enthusiasm was generated.

Real estate hucksters appeared everywhere, selling desert land, swamp land and land that wasn't even theirs to people who bought from a brochure and then went looking for it later.

Get-rich-quick seminars roamed the country, with financial evangelists mesmerizing folks with tales of how they were down, out and broke a few years ago, but how they, just ordinary folks like you, learned to make a fortune.

But that was more than offset by a decline in orders for military planes, leading to an overall 0.3 percent decline in the transportation category, following a 2.8 percent increase a month earlier.

There was also a decrease in orders for non-electrical machinery. They fell 1.3 percent following a 2.5 percent increase in March.

Shipments of durable goods fell 1.1 percent in April to $112.6 billion, following a 3.0 percent increase in March.

Only 5 of 70 potential jurors hadn't heard of murder case

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — All but five of 70 prospective jurors said they had heard about the case of a woman accused of killing her husband, a prominent Brownsville car dealer.

At the start of jury selection Monday, six potential jurors said they had formed opinions and four said they could not be impartial.

State District Judge Gilberto Hinojosa in February rejected a motion by defense attorney Abel Toscano to move the trial to another city because of excessive publicity.

Susie Mowbray, 40, was indicted Dec. 4 on a charge of killing her husband of eight years. She pleaded innocent at a Dec. 16 hearing. She said her husband killed himself.

Jay William Mowbray Jr., 43, suffered bullet wounds to the right side of the head and left hand early on the morning of Sept. 16, 1987, according to an autopsy report. His body was found in bed, and a .357-caliber handgun was found at the scene.

Investigators and prosecutors have revealed few of the facts in the case.

Assistant County Attorney Ed Cyganiewicz told potential jurors that prosecution witnesses will include law enforcement personnel, the doctor who performed the autopsy on Mowbray, an employee and patrons of a local health club, employees of clothing stores at South Padre Island and the Mowbrays' maid.

Many of the potential jurors said they knew individuals involved in the case. One woman said she was the fourth grade teacher of County Attorney Benjamin Euresti, the chief prosecutor.

Mrs. Mowbray, the former Susie Wright, grew up in Shreveport, La., where she was a popular cheerleader and 1966 homecoming queen at Woodlawn High School.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texan charged in scheme

TWIN FALLS, Idaho (AP) — The Idaho Department of Finance has charged four Carey residents and a Texas woman with a $3 million securities-fraud scheme.

The department says the group sold worthless "sight drafts" to an estimated 33 Idahoans, telling them the drafts were a valid method of paying off debts.

It names as defendants Carey residents Robert K. Adamson, Robert D. Adamson, Craig Adamson and Jed Adamson.

The state says the defendants did business under five fictitious business names, including Quantum Investment Corp. de Panama, Panora Credit Trust, International Credit Exchange, World Credit Reserve and Global Credit Reserve.

The suit alleges Ms. Dutton gave the drafts to the Adamsons, who told Idaho residents last year they could be used to pay off debts by presenting the notes to a financial institution.

CWS investigation begun

ARLINGTON (AP) — An investigation was under way today into the resignation of the head of the Church World Service Organization of the National Council of Churches.

J. Richard Butler resigned after a breakdown in efforts to resolve a longstanding feud between Butler and the Rev. Arie Brouwer, general secretary of the National Council of Churches.

An NCC commitee received Butler's resignation "with deep regret" and criticized Brouwer, saying his leadership has caused "low morale among staff at all levels."

The executive committe was asked to "conduct an immediate and full review and assessment" of his ability to "continue effectively."

Judge says suit groundless

GALVESTON (AP) — A state judge has ruled that the former Miss Galveston-USA beauty pageant winner filed a groundless lawsuit intended to harass the local pageant and its director.

District Judge Ed Harris Monday denied a court injunction sought by Karen Wilson and invoked a recent law designed to discourage groundless lawsuits by ordering Houston lawyer Joe B. Stepehen to withdraw a companion suit for damages by Aug. 21 or to personally pay more than $10,000 in legal expenses.

North Texas group casts cold water on hot topics

ARLINGTON (AP) — A group that calls itself the North Texas Skeptics is willing to listen to claims of flying saucers or life elsewhere in the celestial system.

But they have their doubts.

"The jury is still out," says the group's founder, John Thomas. "We're certainly not saying there's no life on other planets. There may well be. But the burden of proof is on the people who make the claims."

Thomas' group dedicates itself during its monthly meetings to challenging wild claims that don't stand up to scientific scrutiny. The group proclaims that rumors, hunches and intuition don't count for anything, anytime.

"Nobody has been able to produce a piece of a spacecraft, the body of an extraterrestrial or a picture" that has not been challenged, added Thomas, leader of the 82-member North Texas Skeptics.

Thomas, a Dallas-area lawyer who admits he believed in the Tooth Fairy as a child, says, for instance, the group rejects astrology as "taking advantage of human weaknesses."

"Astrology works because we want to believe it works," he said Sunday. "People have a tendency to validate things about themselves."

Another of the group's hot topics is UFO sightings. UFO reporting, he said, "tends to feed on itself" with one report spurring people to see more.

When it comes to extrasensory perception, Thomas said, the skeptics are keeping a list of predictions made earlier this year by the North Texas Parapsychology Association. At year's end, he said, the group will report how many predictions came true.

"Most are lucky guesses," Thomas said. "They don't keep records of their misses, just their hits."

The skeptics have ventured to the Paluxy River at Glen Rose, the site of dinosaur tracks where people continue to look for evidence that man walked with the dinosaurs.

Typically, the skeptics doubt it.

Regarding conflicts with the Bible, Thomas said, "We don't take any religious positions. We're all just interested in scientific claims."

"We've been accused of not being open-minded," said Thomas, who formed his skeptics group last year. But he insists the group is willing to listen.

"Our customers are the driving force behind our success."

When it comes to the West Texas economy, auto dealers like Jack Sherman and Steve Late know what it means to have the support of their Permian Basin customers.

Their success depends on the number of West Texans who buy the vehicles they sell. And they, in turn, invest their resources back into the local economy as major purchasers and employers, and personally through community service and civic endeavors.

Over $334 million in retail sales alone leaves the Midland-Odessa area each year. If just 30 percent — $102 million — were spent locally, it would have a substantial positive impact on our economy.

So get in gear — "buy West Texas" and help get the Permian Basin on the road to recovery.

Passengers flee before plane explodes

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — A Miami-bound jetliner taxied down a runway, crashed through a fence and exploded into flames, but all 22 people aboard evacuated the plane moments before it caught fire.

The accident occurred as the Lacsa Boeing 727-100 tried to take off Monday carrying eight crew members and 14 passengers, including seven Americans.

"Miraculously, there were no deaths," said Juan Manuel Fernandez, financial vice president of Lacsa, the Costa Rican airliner.

Ten people were treated for minor injuries and released from Alajuela Hospital, airline officials said.

Lacsa Flight 628 was scheduled to stop in Managua, Nicaragua, before continuing to Miami.

Officials said the plane left the terminal of the Juan Santamaria International Airport at 4:55 p.m. (6:55 p.m. EDT), taxied down the runway and crashed through a fence surrounding the airport after failing to take off.

The plane came to a stop about 600 yards beyond the fence on a grassy area, where it burst into flames. The aircraft broke into three sections.

"During takeoff, for unknown reasons, the plane left the runway, stopping finally outside the airport boundary," said the Lacsa statement.

"After the successful evacuation of all the passengers and crew members, the plane was consumed by flames," it said.

The wreckage was still blazing 1½ hours after the explosion and wreckage was spread over a wide area.

"Thanks to the skill of the pilots, they were able to evacuate the passengers, just a few minutes before the plane burst into flames," Fernandez said.

Co-pilot Armando Rojas told reporters that the passengers remained calm.

"With nerves of steel we were able to evacuate all the passengers," Rojas said. "A few minutes later, maybe five minutes, the plane burst into flames."

In addition to the Americans, the passengers included a West German, two Cubans living in Miami, two Nicaraguans and two Costa Ricans, the airline said. The crew was Costa Rican.

Fernandez told reporters the cause of the explosion was under investigation by officials of Lacsa, Boeing and the Costa Rican civil aviation agency.

Witnesses said flames shot up more than 130 feet after the explosion.

The plane broke up into three parts, with the cockpit in one section and the passenger cabin split in two, witnesses said.

Fernandez said the plane was 16 years old and was leased a year ago from Avensa Leasing Corp., a subsidiary of the Venezuelan airline Viasa.

He said the plane was not originally scheduled to be used Monday. It was put into service after another flight to Miami, via New Orleans, was overbooked.

It was Lacsa's first accident in its 43-year history, he said.

Lacsa owns four Boeing 727s, two of them purchased from Boeing Co. in August 1978, said David Jimenez, a spokesman for the aircraft maker in Seattle.

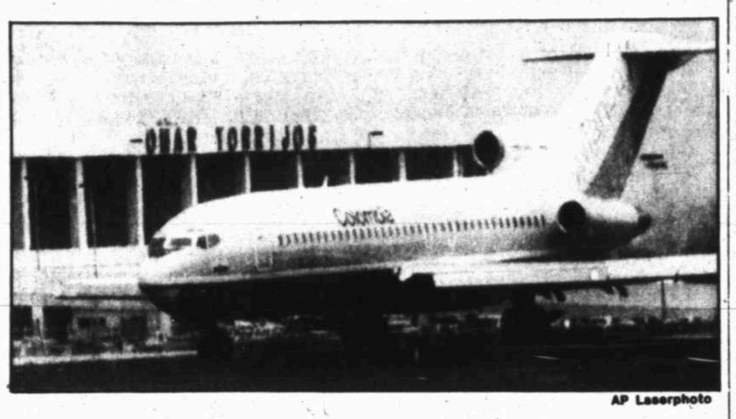

The three-engine planes can hold approximately 160 passengers and require three crew members in the cockpit, Jimenez said.

Boeing produced 1,831 of the planes before discontinuing the model in September 1984.

A Lacsa recording at Miami International Airport said the flight was due in Miami at 10:50 p.m. EDT.

Michael Carter, 23, rushed to Miami International Airport after hearing on television that there had been a crash. He said his stepfather, David Jones, was flying to Miami from San Jose on Monday.

After learning there were no deaths reported in the crash, Carter said: "I'm going to see if I can find a drink, I need one."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Letter threatens hostages' lives

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A statement purportedly issued by the captors of foreigners in Lebanon said today the hostages would be killed if their governments did not initiate direct negotiations with the kidnappers.

The threat was made in a typewritten Arabic statement signed by the pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad and delivered anonymously to a French news agency reporter in Baalbek.

The east Lebanon city is a traditional stronghold of Hezbollah, or Party of God, the pro-Iranian group that is believed to be an umbrella for the captors of 18 foreign hostages in Lebanon.

There was no way to verify the authenticity of the statement. Islamic Jihad has said previously it would always send a picture of a hostage with its statements. The latest statement was not accompanied by such a photograph.

One killed in ferry fire

LONDON (AP) — Fire broke out on a freight ferry carrying 75 people in the English Channel, and one crewman was killed and another severely burned before firemen flown in by helicopter put out the blaze early today.

Emergency services on both sides of the channel, the world's busiest waterway, launched a rescue operation when the fire began in the ferry's engine room at 9:30 p.m. (4:30 p.m. EDT) Monday.

The fire was reported two hours after the Seafreight Freeway left the southeast English port of Dover for the Belgian port of Zeebrugge.

Sealink U.K. Ltd., owners of the 5,917-ton ferry, said in a statement that 15 firefighters and their equipment were flown by helicopter to the vessel.

It said the firefighters would remain aboard until the ferry arrived at the French port of Dunkirk, where a tugboat was towing it today.

Rioting blamed on U.S.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The nation's main opposition party today blamed U.S. policies and the South Korean government's "humiliating subservience" to the United States for a wave of student riots.

The Party for Peace and Democracy, led by former presidential candidate Kim Dae-jung, said the protests were caused in part by attempts to subordinate Korean policy to U.S. interests.

The party also called on protesters to halt attacks on U.S. diplomatic offices and said it did not endorse protesters' calls for the removal of U.S. troops from South Korea.

But the statement it released today was the party's harshest criticism of the United States in recent months.

Mexican party to protest

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The opposition National Action Party plans protest meetings this week of alleged fraud in a special mayoral election in the northern steel-producing city of Monclova.

The party, known as PAN, began protests Monday of the preliminary election results, claiming they were rigged against the PAN candidate.

Protest meetings were also planned throughout the northern border state of coahuila to pressure the state legislature into rejecting the figures, said Juan Antonio Garcia Villa, PAN president in Monclova.

Garcia said PAN supporters already were marching in protest near the international bridges at Ciudad Acuna and Piedras Negras, just south of the Texas border.

Cease-fire extended

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega extended for 30 days a cease-fire to give his leftist Sandinista government and the rebels more time to arrange a permanent truce.

However, the two sides remained deadlocked on Monday over the site of their next round of peace talks.

Ortega insisted that the three days of negotiations scheduled to begin on Wendesday be held in the Nicaraguan capital of Managua.

In a statement issued in Miami, the rebels said they were planning to meet in Sapoa, a small Nicaraguan village on the Costa Rican border.

Both sides had agreed in March to a 60-day truce that would have expired May 30. The extension means the temporary truce ends June 30.

Will tour boost talks?

PORTON, England (AP) — British officials hope that an unprecedented Soviet tour of a Western Europe chemical warfare facility will speed negotiations aimed at achieving a global ban on the toxic weapons.

A team of 13 Soviet scientists and military experts met on Monday with Ian Stewart, minister of state for the armed forces, and planned a three-day tour beginning today of Britain's Chemical Warfare Defense Center in Porton Down.

The Soviet tour — the first part of a British exchange program aimed at making progress on a worldwide ban on chemical weapons — comes just a week before the superpower summit in Moscow.

While nuclear weapons will be the centerpiece of the Moscow talks, progress on a chemical weapons ban has so far proven elusive.

The 40-nation Geneva Conference on Disarmament ended its spring session April 29 with no breakthrough in sight on a convention to ban development, production and stockpiling of such weapons.

Teachers staging strike

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Tens of thousands of striking school teachers converged on the capital to press demands for higher wages.

The 40,000 teachers marched on the capital Monday, five days after beginning a nationwide walkout to demand a minimum wage of 640 australs ($90) a month for the country's 500,000 primary and secondary school teachers.

An earlier strike that began March 14 at the opening of the Argentine public school year lasted six weeks until the government ordered teachers to begin work while negotiations continued. Negotiations later broke off.

Union leader Marcos Garcetti and Labor Minister Ideler Tonelli negotiated for an hour on Monday without reaching an agreement, union sources said.

About 7.2 million schoolchildren aged three to 18 have been affected by the walkout, which has generally not affected private schools.

Hijacker escapes on return to Colombia

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A man who hijacked a Colombian jetliner and forced it to fly to Panama and Aruba jumped off the aircraft and escaped as the plane rolled toward the terminal after a surprise return to Colombia.

All 128 passengers and the three flight attendants were released shortly after the hijacking began. The three-member cockpit crew returned safely.

No one was hurt during the 11-hour hijacking of the Avianca Boeing 727 that ended Monday night in Cartagena, a city on the Caribbean coast 400 miles north of Bogota. Police were searching for the man today. He was described as blond, 5-foot-5, in his 30s and wearing sports clothes.

Officials said the passenger list identified the man as Albeiro Jimenez, a Colombian, but that it could be a phony name.

The hijacker claimed he was dying of cancer, demanded $100,000 and to be taken to Cuba, authorities said. The man never received the money and the pilot persuaded him to return to Colombia.

"He wanted the $100,000 so he could spend the last few days of his life happily," pilot Luis Eduardo Gutierrez told a news conference in Cartagena. "He told us he had nothing to lose and that he would explode a grenade he carried in his hand if we failed to obey his instructions."

The jetliner had left Medellin at 8:09 a.m. (9:09 a.m. EDT) Monday on a flight to Bogota, Colombia's capital 250 miles southeast.

Shortly after takeoff, passenger Javier Robledo said, the hijacker gave a note to a female flight attendant. Robledo, who was sitting next to the man, said the stewardess led the hijacker to the cockpit.

The passengers and the flight attendants left the plane when it returned to the Medellin airport, said Yezid Castano, the Colombian Civil Aeronautics Administration chief.

Supreme Soviet opening its parliamentary session

MOSCOW (AP) — The 1,500 deputies of the Supreme Soviet parliament opened their spring session today with an agenda that focuses on domestic issues and does not include a vote on ratifying the superpower missile treaty.

Such a vote is not required by Soviet law, but could have been used to ratify the treaty before the Moscow superpower summit between Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan, which begins Sunday.

Gorbachev and the rest of the Kremlin leadership filed into an ornate cream-colored hall of the Grand Kremlin Palace shortly before 10 a.m. for the beginning of today's legislative session.

The Supreme Soviet, a rubber-stamp body that gives force of law to decisions already taken by the Communist Party leadership, then adopted an agenda that focuses solely on domestic concerns.

On Monday, the foreign affairs commissions of both houses of the bicameral Soviet parliament endorsed the superpower intermediate-range nuclear missile treaty and called on the Presidium, the nation's highest executive body, to ratify it.

The pact banning medium- and shorter-range nuclear missiles was signed by Gorbachev and Reagan at the Washington summit on Dec. 8 and does not become legally binding until it is ratified.

The Soviets have repeatedly indicated that they are in no hurry to ratify the treaty before the U.S. Senate does.

Viktor P. Karpov, head of the Foreign Ministry's arms control and disarmament desk, told Western reporters on Monday that his country should not act until approval by the Senate is certain.

"We should be sure that we are not alone," Karpov said.

At least 67 of the 100 U.S. senators must ratify the treaty before it becomes binding on the United States, and a small band of opponents have shown no signs of allowing the pact to be put to a vote before the Moscow summit.

Ratification by the Presidium, a body of 30-odd members headed by Andrei A. Gromyko, the titular Soviet head of state, would formally commit the Soviet Union to the treaty.

Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov called the measure "of immense social and political significance."

Factional tank, artillery fire rock Beirut area

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Thunderous blasts of tank and artillery fire jolted Beirut today as fighting between Shiite Moslem factions escalated after the collapse of Syrian and Iranian talks aimed at reining in their allies.

In east Beirut, right-wing Christian militias clashed overnight in a resurgence of a power struggle within the Christian community. Police said one person was killed and four were wounded.

Police said 15 people were killed and 42 wounded today as the pro-Iranian Hezbollah and the Syrian-backed Amal fought one of their heaviest duels yet in Beirut's southern slums. The casualties raised the toll since the Shiite fighting broke out May 6 to 294 killed and 993 wounded.

Police said Hezbollah was inching toward Amal's last stronghold in the 16-square-mile enclave where most of the 18 foreign hostages are believed held.

There has been no confirmed news on the fate of the hostages since the fighting began. Lebanese reports have said the captives, who include nine Americans, have been moved several times.

Also today, a statement signed by Islamic Jihad, which claims to hold some hostages, said the captives would be killed if their governments did not initiate direct negotiations with the kidnappers.

There was no way to verify the authenticity of the statement. Islamic Jihad has said it would always send a picture of a hostage with its statements, but no photograph accompanied the statement left at the home of a reporter today.

The statement said: "The Islamic Jihad Organization advises countries interested in the hostages' problem to speed up direct negotiations for their safety, because the application of pressures as well as the current plans and recipes on the ground targeting the Islamic fervency will lead to liquidating all the hostages and throwing their dead corpses out."

One daily, Ad-Diyar, which is published in Christian east Beirut, reported today that two American captives are being held at the Iranian Embassy. The report, which did not name the hostages, could not be verified independently.

Iran last week denied that foreign hostages were being held in its embassy.

A police spokesman said Amal militiamen withdrew today from positions in the Ghobeiry district under a fierce barrage of howitzer and mortar fire.

Amal fighters withdrew to the district of Shiyah at the northern edge of south Beirut, said the spokesman, who cannot be named under standing regulations.

Hezbollah controlled the southern and western flanks of Shiyah and its gunners were pounding Amal's threatened supply lines at the northern edge of the area, he said.

"Hezbollah has managed to achieve some gains across the Ghobeiry positions," an Amal communique said.

It said Hezbollah gunners blasted Shiyah and the surrounding area with 1,500 shells in a nine-hour barrage.
