Reagan believes peace worth price

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan, trying to bury proposals to cut defense spending, says the alternative to a big Pentagon buildup is "a larger and increased possibility of war."

Reagan coupled his blunt statement Tuesday with a declaration that he is willing to run up a big budget deficit "if that is what it takes to buy peace for the rest of this century."

In an attempt to whittle down the $91.5 billion deficit projected by the administration for 1983, congressional Republicans and Democrats alike are urging Reagan to scale back his plan for an 18 percent boost in military outlays.

"What they say is absolutely true," Reagan said, referring to his critics. "There is an alternative to a larger defense budget. It is a larger and increased possibility of war....

"A cutback in defense," Reagan said, "would be a cutback in our chance of peace and security."

Reagan sounded the warning before a cheering, clapping, whistling audience at a campaign rally at Albuquerque, N.M., for Republican Sen. Harrison Schmidt. The president also got an enthusiastic welcome earlier at a campaign rally in Cheyenne, Wyo., for Sen. Malcolm Wallop, another Republican.

His message at both stops was that Congress should not cut Pentagon spending or trim the personal income tax cuts enacted last year as a means of reducing the deficit.

Reagan also dismissed proposed revisions of his deficit, saying, "many of these are not genuine budget alternatives at all, but political documents designed for saving certain legislators' political hides rather than saving the economy."

The president planned to address the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors today about the budget and his "new federalism" program before heading to Santa Barbara for a 4-day vacation at his mountaintop ranch.

Despite Reagan's tough talk, presidential counselor Edwin Meese III struck a more conciliatory note as he spoke with reporters on Air Force One heading for Los Angeles.

"When you start negotiating, you have to start from someplace," Meese said. "We're staking out the place to start from."

Meese hinted that although the personal income tax cuts and the bulk of the defense buildup are not negotiable, there are items in both areas that could be subject to discussion.

Reagan, acknowledging that the deficit is a political liability during this election year, tried to put the blame for the red ink on Democrats.

Only once in the last 25 years has the budget not carried a deficit, Reagan said.

"Suddenly, now, the deficit is the all-important issue of the coming election," said Reagan. "Well, we hate deficits too. We hated them all the time they were piling them up."

Defending his plan for a $221 billion defense budget, Reagan said, "As much as I detest the idea of deficits, as president I must accept a large deficit if that is what it takes to buy peace for the rest of this century."

'Boll Weevils' oppose Hollings' defense plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic sponsor of last year's tax bill says he and other Boll Weevils find "totally unrealistic" the defense-spending cuts Sen. Ernest F. Hollings recommends as a way to reduce the 1983 budget deficit.

Hollings, D-S.C., met for about an hour Tuesday afternoon with about 25 members of the Conservative Democratic Forum, a group that provided the swing votes that won victory for President Reagan's economic legislation last year.

After Hollings left, CDF members stayed for an hour to discuss his ideas and suggestions of their own.

"I and others thought Hollings' position on defense was totally unrealistic," said Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, of College Station after the meeting.

"He is suggesting levels of defense cuts that not only cannot be made in terms of the political ramifications involved, but that are not even technically feasible, given the spendout rates under procurement programs," Gramm said.

Gramm, the Democratic sponsor of Reagan's 1981 budget legislation, said there is a consensus among the Boll Weevils that decreases will have to be made in the growth rate of defense.

"But anyone who thinks we are going to balance the budget by slashing defense is crazy. First, the money is not there, and second, the people are not going to stand for it," Gramm added.

Rep. Richard White, D-Texas, of El Paso left the meeting troubled over Hollings' proposal.

"The timetable is wrong. There is a general compulsion to come to decisions about cutting defense, but we shouldn't be making those broad decisions before looking at the particular programs involved," White said.

"We need to look at particulars and then decide where to make the cuts. We may do great harm to some vital system," said White, a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

Hollings, in a brief news conference outside where CDF members continued to meet, criticized Reagan for journeying around the nation to blast those who disagree with his budget.

Despite Reagan's insistence that the main parts of his budget must prevail, Hollings said, there is a strong feeling on Capitol Hill that there must be compromise.

Hollings said that Reagan, not Congress, will have to come up with meaningful changes to cut the $91.5 billion deficit projected in the 1983 budget the president recently submitted.

And speaking of pay phones...

BIG SANDY, Texas (AP) — Continental Telephone Co. apparently thought Gary Thomas was letting his fingers do the walking for an entire community when it billed him for more than $35,000 in long-distance calls.

Thomas and his wife, Mary Kay, received 11 stacks of itemized calls this week that cost the phone company $7.60 in postage to mail. Thomas said last month's boxed bill came after a company official called to ask how he planned to pay for it.

"At first I could have cried, but then it got funny," Thomas said. "It had to be a mistake and it was ... belonging to the telephone company."

A keypunch error prompted the long-distance calls of more than 700 residents of this East Texas community to be combined and sent to the Thomases at their business office.

"We're embarrassed," Continental spokesman Phil Campbell in Dallas said.

Federal judges find another redistricting obstacle

Panel expected to issue new legislative lines this week

By SALLY CARPENTER
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — A three-judge federal panel encountered yet another obstacle — the government — before hearing closing arguments in their effort to draw new legislative district lines in time for a May 1 primary.

The judges had sidestepped potential problems in Houston and taken a filing deadline shortcut Tuesday before a government attorney warned that the Justice Department might have to clear the plan they approve, a process that could take up to 60 days.

At issue is whether the plan is considered to be legislative or judicial, the latter requiring no government clearance. Justice Department attorney Robert Berman said the distinction lies in the degree to which the judges change the lines drawn by the Legislative Redistricting Board.

Earlier in the day, the panel moved from March 19 to 6 p.m. March 12 the filing deadline for Texas Senate and House candidates. The judges also set the Texas election certification date for March 16.

Without actually ruling on where district lines would fall, they also promised not to tamper with Harris County's precinct lines.

The tribunal — 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Carolyn D. Randall and U.S. District Judges Barefoot Sanders and Jerry Buchmeyer — said they will rule on district lines for the entire state by the end of the week. Judge Randall said the statewide ruling will be followed in about two weeks by an expanded order.

The judges are considering alternatives to the LRB plan, which was rejected by the Justice Department for violating the Voting Rights Act by spreading minorities too thinly.

The all-Democratic LRB drew its map after Gov. Bill Clements vetoed the Senate plan and a state court threw out the House plan — both of which were devised during last year's legislative session.

Since neither the LRB nor the Legislature was convened, the task of redrawing the lines fell to the three judges.

In the two-day hearing, they heard a variety of plans from the three major plaintiffs — the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund and Republican opponents of the House and Senate plans.

The offices of the secretary of state, attorney general and House speaker also were involved.

The court could redraw only a few districts since most of the plans presented dealt with Harris, Bexar, El Paso and Dallas counties. Other changes are possible in Lubbock, Val Verde and Zavala counties.

According to Berman, "minor modifications" to the LRB map could transform the plan into a judicial function. But Judge Randall said such changes would not be minor.

She termed the situation a "Catch 22" and said the court has no intention of performing a legislative function.

Berman said the Justice Department was "aware of the very strange situation" in Texas but Judge Randall, noting the tight time schedule, said:

"There is nothing more clearly designed to disenfranchise the people of this state than not to have the election on time."

Another scheduling problem was averted Tuesday when Harris County representatives softened their position and said they might be able to meet the May 1 primary date.

In testimony Monday, Harris County Clerk Anita Rodeheaver was adamant that her office could not be ready for an election until May 12.

After a late-night meeting, attorney Rex van Middlesworth, representing the county, said Tuesday the scheduling changes approved by the judges and a printer's promise to get help would "give us the chance" to meet the deadline.

"We're going to give you the chance, and we're going to expect you to do it," admonished Sanders.

In closing arguments, attorneys for the three groups presenting alternate plans accused the other plaintiffs of slighting minority groups.

Attorneys for House and Senate plaintiffs claimed MALDEF's maps split black communities and paired black incumbents with other legislators.

MALDEF "created their own plan at the expense of the black community," said San Antonio attorney John N. McCamish Jr.

But Joaquin Avila, representing MALDEF, said his plans split fewer precincts than the others' and that blacks were given a higher statewide percentage than Hispanics.

The court was asked to approve the LRB map intact by representatives of Texas Attorney General Mark White. But White's representatives also praised MALDEF's plans.

Senate votes to allocate unwanted energy powers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is moving to empower President Reagan to impose price controls and allocate crude oil supplies in an emergency even though the president insists he doesn't want that authority.

The Senate voted 86-7 Tuesday to give Reagan the standby powers despite grumblings from the White House that the president may veto the bill. The vote margin was far more than would be needed to override a veto.

The bill now goes to the House where final passage is expected.

Reagan has consistently argued that the free market — including higher prices — could best handle any future supply disruptions.

But leaders of the Republican-controlled Senate Energy Committee have disagreed, saying testimony has indicated the marketplace could handle only a small disruption.

At any rate, they argued, a standby emergency plan should be in place if it turns out Reagan is wrong.

Part of the bill requires the president to come up with a standby plan within 180 days telling what he would do in case of a severe disruption in supply.

Supporters of the bill pointed out that the United States now has no emergency plans or powers to deal with a major cutoff in imports such as the 1973 Arab oil embargo.

Several senators noted the president would have full discretion over whether to use the emergency powers and or implement the standby plan. He would also be responsible for determining what constitutes a severe disruption.

"If he doesn't like it, if he doesn't want to use it, he doesn't have to," said Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La. "Nobody's going to require Ronald Reagan to take this plan off the shelf and implement it."

The bill deals principally with allocation of crude oil to refiners and specifically bars the president from imposing gasoline rationing. It would replace emergency powers that expired last year.

Sponsors, including Johnston and energy committee chairman James A. McClure, R-Idaho, helped persuade conservative Republicans to support the measure by noting it expires Dec. 31, 1984, about the time Reagan's first term ends.

Because the powers will cease, they could not be misused by a more liberal president, supporters said.

Opponents said the plan is too similar to the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973, the law that expired last year.

Critics claimed that measure failed in dealing with oil shortages and they cited instances when shortages forced long lines of cars at gasoline pumps.

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., who favors a different approach, said the bill "falls back on the failed policies of the past." And Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., said the bill "would do more damage than good."

The bill is technically a conference committee report resolving differences in legislation passed last year by both the House and Senate.

The Energy Department has recommended that Reagan veto the bill, and Bradley argued that Reagan will have little choice.

City fireman escapes serious injury

A city fireman escaped serious injury when his car went out of control and struck a house in the 1100 block of North A Street early this morning.

Tobe Robert Partridge Jr., 26, of 2601 North A, was released from Midland Memorial Hospital after treatment for facial cuts. A passenger, 19-year-old Donald Gene Meyers, of 2610 North A, apparently was not injured in the wreck, which occurred shortly before 2 a.m. today.

Police said Partridge was northbound on A Street in a 1979 Thunderbird when he left the road and hit a house owned by John Tompkins of 1102 North A. The house was badly damaged, according to police, but no one in the house was injured. No charges were filed.

Ex-waiter goes on trial for 26 deaths

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Jurors in the arson-murder trial of ex-waiter Luis Marin will hear from people who "raced with death down the corridor" when Stouffer's Inn burst into flames, killing 26 people, a prosecutor says.

The former coffee waiter's trial opened Tuesday and the state was to call its first witness today as it builds its case alleging that Marin angrily doused a hotel hallway with a volatile liquid and ignited it.

"You will hear from some who survived. You will hear how some lost that race" with death, Geoffrey K. Orlando, an assistant Westchester County district attorney, told the jury Tuesday.

Orlando said he had no witness who saw the fire begin the morning of Dec. 4, 1980, at the hotel in Harrison.

But he said Marin "had the means, the opportunity, was in the right location and had the motive to set the fire."

Marin, 26, an illegal alien from Guatemala, had been told by the hotel he was to be fired for giving a phony name at the time of his employment. Orlando said Marin set the fire "to get even" or to be a hero by rescuing fire victims.

But Marin's lawyer, J. Radley Herald, told the jury in his five-minute opening statement that the state's case will fail to prove arson.

"And most assuredly, the people's case will not link that fire, no matter how it occurred, to my client, Luis Marin," Herald said.

Marin, 26, could face 26 consecutive life sentences if convicted on charges of murder, arson and criminal mischief. His trial is expected to last two months.

Senate busing foes win first round

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate foes of busing for desegregation are winners of the first round of efforts to strip the federal courts of authority to act on a wide variety of social issues.

But the anti-busing legislation approved by a wide majority in the Senate Tuesday faces tough going in the House.

After nine months of intermittent, often acrimonious debate, the Senate voted 57-37 for legislation that would reopen old busing cases and virtually eliminate the transporting of students to erase racial segregation in the schools.

Critics describe the measure as a serious threat to constitutional separation of powers which likely will be struck down by the courts if finally enacted into law.

"This is the beginning of the end of constitutional guarantees in this country," said Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark.

The anti-busing measure drafted by Sens. Bennett Johnston, D-La., and Jesse Helms, R-N.C., is a "sinister, devious attack" on the Constitution which makes possible creation of a "tyrannical government," Bumpers said.

Similarly, Sen. Lowell Weicker, leader of the opponents of the legislation, declared, "This is the most serious constitutional threat in my lifetime."

The Connecticut Republican added, "The fight is not over," predicting the proposal will hit a brick wall in the House. "This legislation will not be enacted into law in this session of Congress," he said.

"If there is tyranny," said Johnston, "it is the tyranny of an unelected court dictating a new right...without the consent of the governed. Busing doesn't work. It has been proven it doesn't work."

He predicted strong House support for the legislation, but conceded there is "a big hill to climb" before final congressional approval.

THERE IS WIDESPREAD public disaffection with busing as a remedy for segregated schools, but Democratic leaders in the House have indicated opposition to the so-called "court-stripping" bills.

Conservatives, mainly in the Senate, are seeking to change national policy on issues such as busing, abortion and school prayer by passing legislation to remove them from federal court jurisdiction.

Critics, whose supporters include the American Civil Liberties Union and the American Bar Association, condemn such efforts as a back-door effort to amend the Constitution.

The anti-busing bill approved Tuesday would prohibit federal judges from issuing busing orders under which students would be transported to schools more than 15 minutes or five miles from their homes.

Existing court orders with busing plans in excess of those limits could be challenged and dissolved at the request of parents or local school boards.

The legislation also would bar the Justice Department from asking courts to use busing to achieve desegregation — a provision with little immediate impact because the Reagan administration already has dropped busing as a desegregation tool.

Conservative Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., joined opponents of the legislation, saying a true conservative would want to protect the Constitution and the courts, regardless of the unpopularity of busing.

Weicker and Goldwater said the Senate should forget social issues and concentrate on the problems of the economy and American foreign and defense policy.

Although Weicker lost his campaign to block a final vote, he succeeded in parliamentary maneuvering which hampers the chances of House passage of the proposal.

Weicker threatened a further filibuster in the Senate, forcing Majority Leader Howard Baker to send the authorization bill to the House, unattached to the House legislation.

The result is to put it in the control of Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, who opposes the bill.

Supreme Court hears school book banning issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court is weighing a decision on where to draw the line between a student's right to read and a school board's authority to keep certain books out of public school libraries and classrooms.

During oral arguments Tuesday, justices raised the question of what standards can be used as the basis for the nation's 16,500 school boards in deciding which books are approved and which are not.

"I don't really know what your standard is," Justice John Paul Stevens impatiently told attorney Alan H. Levine.

Levine is representing five students who challenged the Island Trees, N.Y., School Board's removal of nine books from school libraries and its ban on their use in the classroom.

Some of the books deal with sex and drugs and occasionally use "four-letter" words.

"What is a federal judge to do?" Stevens asked, referring to lower federal court judges facing similar challenges stemming from the growing movement to ban books from schools.

Levine said that to avoid violating students' First Amendment rights, school boards cannot act arbitrarily and cannot base their decisions on excerpts from books.

While some of the banned books use vulgar words, there is no assertion that those banned from the Island Trees junior high and senior high are legally obscene.

"Just random instances of vulgarity is not a constitutional basis for permanently proscribing these books," said Levine. He argued that all nine books should be put back in the schools.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor seemed troubled by School Board lawyer George W. Lipp Jr.'s argument that school boards can exclude books to further their "moral, social and political values."

"DID I UNDERSTAND you to say political values?" she asked angrily, wondering whether Lipp meant a school board should be allowed remove all books because they dealt with the wrong political party.

"The mere allegation of the word 'political' does not taint the action," Lipp responded, adding that he was not asking the high court to give school boards an "absolute right" to ban any book.

Justice Thurgood Marshall wanted to know what criteria the Island Trees School Board used to judge the banned books, which include the Pulitzer Prize-winning "The Fixer," by Bernard Malamud and Kurt Vonnegut's "Slaughterhouse Five."

"You can't point to any standards?" Marshall asked Lipp.

Lipp said the board had no applicable "regulations."

"I didn't say regulations. I said standards," Marshall shot back. "How can you regulate without standards?"

Justice Lewis F. Powell, the only court member who has served on a local school board, said:

"Is not the primary function (of the school board) to determine what is educational and suitable?"

"I don't think that a school board can cloak its political concerns in the mantle of educational suitability" to get rid of books," Levine responded.

POWELL SERVED FOR a time as the head of the Richmond, Va., school board.

The court's decision is expected by July.

The other books banned from the Island Trees school libraries and classrooms include "The Naked Ape" by Desmond Morris and "Down These Mean Streets," by Piri Thomas.

Also banned are "A Hero Ain't Nothing But a Sandwich," by Alice Childress, "Soul on Ice," by Eldridge Cleaver, "Best Short Stories by Negro Writers," and "Go Ask Alice" by an anonymous author.

The book removed from the junior high library is "A Reader for Writers," a collection of short stores and essays.

Packwood gives Reagan 'brisk' apology for remarks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The conversation was described as "brisk" and the apology was accepted, but no one thinks Bob Packwood will ever rank as one of President Reagan's favorite senators.

"I'm pretty upset about it, but I accept your apology," Reagan was quoted as telling the Republican senator when he called to apologize on Tuesday.

What upset the president was an Associated Press interview in which Packwood said that during meetings with congressional leaders Reagan sometimes is "on a totally different track."

The Oregon senator, who is chairman of the Senate GOP Campaign committee, also said some of Reagan's policies were driving women and minorities away from the Republican Party.

The incident appeared certain to revive speculation that the White House might support a move to oust Packwood as head of the campaign committee.

Some Republican contributors reportedly were angered last fall when Packwood was a leader of the opposition to Reagan's plan to sell $8.5 billion in arms to Saudi Arabia, but no real threat to the senator's position materialized.

Packwood's remarks reached the White House Monday, shortly after the senator had attended yet another leadership meeting with Reagan to discuss the president's economic program.

Reagan was described by one source as "livid."

Senate Republican leader Howard Baker Jr. of Tennessee had a long, private conversation with Packwood Tuesday morning.

THE OREGON senator called Vice President George Bush and White House staff chief James A. Baker III in an effort to find a way to smooth things over. Arrangements were made for him to apologize.

A call was put through while Reagan was flying on Air Force One from Cheyenne, Wyo., to Albuquerque, N.M.

Larry Speakes, deputy White House press secretary, told reporters flying with the president that Packwood said, "I'm sorry. I made a mistake."

Speakes described their conversation as "brisk."

Packwood was not available for comment, but his press secretary, Etta Fielek, said the senator told Reagan he "meant no disrespect and that he perhaps should not have discussed what happened at leadership meetings."

Apparently, what particularly upset the White House was Packwood saying that during one leadership meeting when Senate Budget Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., warned that the budget deficit could reach $120 billion, Reagan responded with a story of an abuse of the food stamp program.

David Gergen, White House communications director, told reporters at a breakfast meeting on Tuesday that Packwood's remarks "if true, were very unfortunate."

He said Reagan "has a wonderful storehouse of anecdotes he has built up over the years."

Yellow blanket, 'lies' lead to Williams conviction

ATLANTA (AP) — A missing yellow blanket, "lies and inconsistencies" in Wayne B. Williams' testimony and a surprise witness were the major factors which led to Williams' double murder conviction, four jurors have told The Atlanta Journal.

The panel initially focused on the "numerous lies and inconsistencies" in Williams' explanation for his presence in the area of the Jackson Parkway bridge the night he was stopped by a police stakeout team, one juror said.

"We discussed his smart-aleck remarks," the juror said. "If my life was on the line, I wouldn't alienate the jury that way."

Another juror noted "the defense said he doesn't have a temper. But when the prosecution badgered him, he showed his temper of violence."

The Journal said the jury quickly reached a verdict of guilty in the Cater case but remained divided in the Payne case Saturday afternoon, with six voting guilty, two voting not guilty and four undecided.

At that point, one juror asked about the yellow blanket, which police had said was under Williams' bed when his home was searched June 3 but was gone when a second search was conducted June 22.

"The missing blanket was incriminating," one juror said.

Carpet and blanket fibers found on the bodies of Cater and Payne "raised the question of whether the victims were in Williams' house," one juror said. "We believed the victims were in the car, but we didn't think they were in the house with Wayne's mother, who was sick, being there."

The jurors decided the two types of fibers could have gotten on the bodies if Williams "pulled the blanket out from under the bed so the carpet fibers got on the blanket," which then came into contact with the victims' bodies, leaving both types of fibers.

The jurors also said they believed the testimony of Robert Henry, who said he saw Williams and Cater holding hands on an Atlanta street hours before Williams was stopped by police. Henry said he didn't want to testify but had been subpoenaed by prosecutors.

House panel rejects spending cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Agriculture Committee, rejecting a 20 percent spending cut proposed by the administration, is calling for a 1983 Agriculture Department budget ranging from $6.4 billion to $9 billion higher than President Reagan is requesting.

A major part of the increase in the spending plan approved by the panel on Tuesday stems from the committee's rejection of the administration's admittedly understated estimate of the cost of farm price supports in the next fiscal year, which starts Oct. 1.

Reagan proposed a $23.5 billion agriculture budget for 1983. This year's budget is $29.4 billion.

Nearly $5.6 billion of the committee's higher proposal comes from the panel's decision to accept a $7.4 billion estimate of the cost of 1983 commodity supports as more realistic than the administration's outdated $1.8 billion estimate. That does not mean price support levels would be increased, only that at current levels the program will cost more than Reagan planned for.

The panel also recommended $500 million to $1 billion in credit for farm exports, a plan Agriculture Secretary John Block says the government can't afford.

The House committee's spending proposal is a recommendation to be submitted later this month to the House Budget Committee. That committee will use it and others from other committees to draft a 1983 budget blueprint for the entire House to consider. It was last year's battle over the 1982 budget blueprint that started Reagan's string of economic victories in Congress.

"Decisions that are made beyond this committee will have a great bearing on it," said Rep. William Wampler of Virginia.

Wampler, the ranking Republican on the committee, supported the spending recommendations, as did other GOP members. But he also pointed out that until there is a consensus in Congress on how to deal with the huge federal deficit, increased defense spending and tax cuts, no spending recommendations are final.

Because of the uncertainty of the budget situation, the Senate Agriculture Committee is delaying its 1983 spending recommendations, and instead is outlining by letter concerns over Reagan's proposals for nutrition programs, rural credit and funding for commodity price supports.

The House committee also ignored the president's plan to move the federal government out of the credit business, calling for as much as $4.6 billion more than Reagan wants in lending authority for the Farmers Home Administration and the Rural Electrification Administration.

The committee declined to take an official stand on one of the most controversial of Reagan's budget proposals, another $2.3 billion cut in the food stamp program.

Cooler weather forecast

WASHINGTON (AP) — Temperatures are expected to be below normal in most of the East in March, according to the National Weather Service 30-day forecast Tuesday.

East of the Mississippi River only Illinois, southern Indiana and Florida should anticipate normal readings for the season.

Turning to the west, above normal temperatures are expected in the Dakotas, Montana, western Washington, southern California, Nevada, Utah and Arizona. Other areas can anticipate normal readings.

Precipitation during the month is expected to be heavy in Washington, Oregon and northern California, along the Gulf Coast and the Atlantic Coast north to Cape Hatteras and in South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, northern Illinois and the northernmost portions of New York, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine.

Conditions for hog producers now easing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Livestock economists in the Agriculture Department say a 3-year financial crunch on hog producers finally is easing.

Since early 1980, producers "have continually reduced the pig crop" from year-earlier levels, a new report by the department's Economic Research Service said Tuesday. In surveys last December, they indicated further cuts in the first half of 1982.

"These reductions should lead to substantially higher hog prices," the report said. "Large corn and soybean crops have resulted in lower grain and protein supplement prices, which have reduced feeding costs."

Thus, lower feed costs along with "moderating prices of other inputs" may reduce the total cash costs of farmers who carry out farrow-to-finish programs — from baby pigs to market hogs ready for slaughter, it said.

"However, a major uncertainty exists about the retail demand for pork because of general economic conditions and the resulting reductions in consumer purchases," the report added.

Although beef output has been edging above year-earlier levels for some time, it also is expected to decline this spring.

With the declines in pork, veal, lamb and mutton, total red meat supplies are expected to be down 3 percent to 5 percent from a year earlier in the first half of 1982, more than offsetting slight increases in broiler output.

In a review of what happened in 1981, the report said U.S. commercial pork production totaled 15.7 billion pounds, down 4 percent from 1980 but still the second largest on record.

Commercial slaughter of hogs totaled around 91.5 million head, down 5 percent from 1980. But dressed weights averaged 1 percent higher.

Dairy group to aid in supports

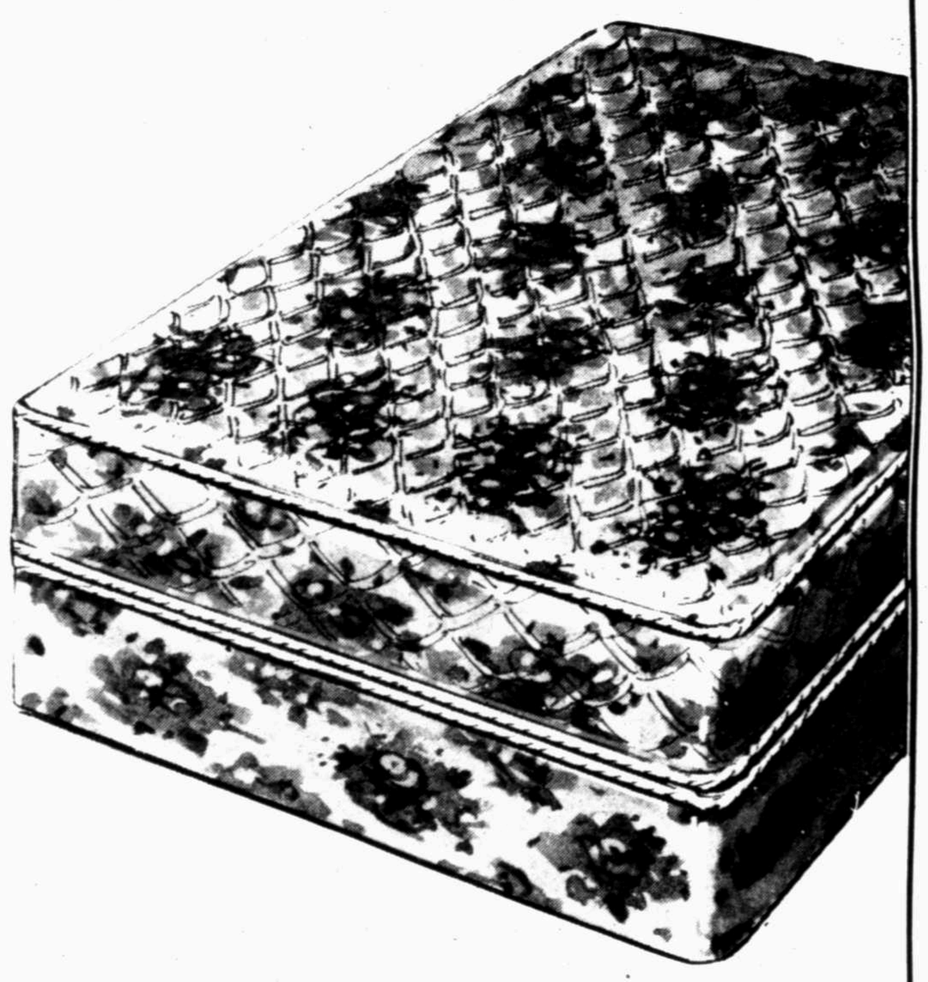

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Milk Producers Federation's board of directors has approved a plan to have dairy farmers pay for part of the cost of the government's milk price support program.

The board decided Tuesday to seek congressional approval of a "Dairy Stabilization-World Price Program" which would provide a two-tier price level of supports, said federation spokeswoman Donaileen Dondero.

Currently, the dairy support program requires the government to buy surplus butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk to prop up the price of milk paid farmers. There is no limit on how much the government must buy.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Alcohol abuse is serious health problem

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

Alcoholism and alcohol abuse are among the most serious of health problems facing this nation. Conservative estimates are that there are as many as nine million chronic alcohol abusers in this country. There are many more occasional abusers of alcohol, some of whom have what may be described as serious drinking problems. The chronic abuse of alcohol has serious physical, psychological social and family consequences.

Treatment services are provided to the alcohol abuser and his family by the Permian Basin Community Centers for MHMR. Alcoholism treatment is divided into four distinct programs. Detoxification services are provided at the Johnson Center for a five to seven day period of time. During detox, the client is given 24-hour supportive supervison and is introduced to the concepts of Alcoholics Anonymous. Detox services are non-medical in nature with referral to medical services, as needed.

Day treatment services are provided on a daily basis to those clients who can benefit from daily, structured activities. These clients come to the program on a daily basis and return to their homes in the evening. Clients who can benefit from this program are those who have had long-lasting problems with alcohol abuse and who have little or nothing to do with their time during the day. It is well-known that with this much time on one's hands, the temptation to return to drinking can be overwhelming. Day treatment services are provided at Johnon Center from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. Services are supervised by trained experienced alcoholism counselors.

Transitional living services are provided to those alcohol abusers who require, for a brief period of time, a place to live. These services are also provided at Johnson Center for up to forty-five (45) days. The person must be employed and must abide by all the rules of the program in order to qualify. Clients in this program work in the day and return to Johnson Center each evening. Within 45 days, the client is expected to have made other living arrangements. This program is designed to help clients get settled into a work routine and thereby facilitate his recovery.

Outpatient care is offered through the MHMR Clinic. These services are provided to alcohol abusers and their families. They are designed to help the alcohol abuser sustain his recovery and to cope with the pressures of living without returning to alcohol abuse. Extensive use is made of AA concepts in the treatment process. With alcohol abuse so widespread, services such as these are designed to alter the destructive impact alcohol abuse has on the individual and on society.

Suit begins against Procter & Gamble Co.

DENVER (AP) — Toxic shock syndrome so damaged an "exceptional" high-school student's mental ability that she "is no longer exceptional," a lawyer said as the first lawsuit against Procter & Gamble Co.'s Rely tampons went to trial.

The suit, seeking $5 million in compensatory damages and $20 million in exemplary damages, is the first of more than 200 against the Cincinnati-based manufacturer to reach the courtroom. Jury selection was to begin today in U.S. District Court.

Many other American makers of tampons also face legal action in connection with the deadly disease, which is still a mystery in many ways.

Two months ago, a federal jury in Greenville, N.C., rejected a 44-year-old woman's claim that she contracted toxic shock from Johnson & Johnson Co.'s OB brand tampons.

In this case, 18-year-old Deletha Dawn Lampshire and her parents, of Littleton, Colo., allege her bout with the rare disease two years ago impaired her ability to perform intellectually and left her depressed and prone to memory lapses.

"Prior to getting toxic shock, she was the all-round girl, the president of her junior class, top of her geometry class," said Steve Kaufman, one of two attorneys for the plaintiffs. "She has since become pretty apathetic, and is in remedial math.

"She was an exceptional girl who is no longer exceptional."

Kaufman's case consists of six claims: strict liability, negligence, breach of warranty, misrepresentation of the product, exemplary and punitive damages and recovery of the Lampshires' medical expenses — some $4,000 to date.

On the other side is Procter & Gamble, which maintains a stance formulated in September 1980, when it recalled Rely tampons and began a massive advertising campaign warning women of the potential TSS hazards associated with tampon use.

Toxic shock is characterized by high fever, low blood pressure, peeling skin and a scarlet rash and is caused by a bacterium known as staphylococcus ayerus, according to the CDC. It was first identified by Dr. James Todd of Denver in a November 1978 magazine article, but was not linked with tampon use until the CDC notified Procter & Gamble in June 1980.

The company contends there is no medical evidence to prove Rely tampons were defective or contributed to the development of TSS. It terms "inconclusive... and fragmentary" statistical studies by the federal Centers for Disease Control linking Rely to the disease more frequently than other tampons.

"It is important to note that the litigation surrounding Rely will not answer the scientific questions about toxic shock syndrome," syays Carol Boyd, the company's chief spokesman on toxic shock. "Those answers will come from medical and scientific research that is ongoing."

Mrs. Reagan visits ward

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nancy Reagan, visiting the cancer ward of a children's hospital, got a lesson in bravery as she watched young patients perform "surgery" on dolls.

"I don't think they had it that way when I was a child," the first lady said Tuesday as her guide, 15-year-old Shannon Campbell, explained that she and other cancer patients simulate on Raggedy Ann and Andy dolls the painful bone marrow sampling and spinal tap procedures they must undergo themselves.

Ms. Campbell, who invited Mrs. Reagan to visit the hospital and organized the tour, said the medical procedures the young patients perform on the dolls makes them less afraid of their own leukemia tests.

She was treated for acute lymphocitic leukemia three years ago and her leukemia went into remission after one month of treatment at the hospital. Hers is considered a success story, said hospital spokeswoman Edith Anderson.

Ms. Campbell, the daughter of a construction worker, is a sophomore at Bonita High School. Lymphocitic leukemia, the most common form of childhood leukemia, was diagnosed in January 1979 and the teen-ager's disease went into remission in February 1979.

Principal Lee Rosen said Ms. Campbell Shannon is a "marvelous example" for other students "that you can be very ill and still lead a normal life.

"At times she has had a bad time," he said. "But she's handled it pretty well. Heretofore, I think only her best friends knew she was ill."

In the patient activity room, Mrs. Reagan hugged every child who came near her and left reluctantly.

"Let me see you put the Band-aid on. Finish it up," she said to young Raymond Paredes who "operated" tap on a doll.

She also visited teenagers who were making clay models in a recreation room. David Ritchey, 14, of La Crescenta, Calif. asked Mrs. Reagan, "Don't you get nervous with all those cameras around all the time?"

She said, "No, not really."

Senate to begin debate on Williams expulsion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate's second-ranking Democrat says his colleagues should censure rather than expel Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr. for his Abscam conviction because of allegations the FBI abused its power in the investigation.

The Senate was scheduled to begin debate today on a Senate Ethics Committee resolution that the New Jersey Democrat be expelled. The panel approved the measure on a 6-0 vote last August.

But Sen. Alan Cranston, the assistant Democratic leader, said Tuesday he will urge that Williams be censured and allowed to remain in office instead of being expelled.

It is not clear how much support Cranston will have, but he is a popular figure among senators of both parties and his view is often influential on various issues.

Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., chairman of the ethics committee, said a move to censure "could very well be successful.

Cranston said he has examined the FBI's record in the Abscam investigations and concluded officials went too far in attempting to get convictions against members of Congress.

In a related development, Cranston and his Republican counterpart, GOP Whip Ted Stevens of Alaska, said they will propose a separate Senate investigation into allegations that the FBI and other agencies have misused their power to investigate members of Congress.

"It is my belief that abuses of that power of the magnitude of Watergate will be revealed to have occurred," Cranston said.

In the Williams case, the milder censure would take a simple majority vote of the Senate, while expulsion requires two-thirds.

Williams, a senator for 23 years, was secluded except for a brief interview Tuesday in which he said, "I'm just getting my case ready for tomorrow."

Appearing fit, the 62-year-old New Jersey Democrat said he felt "real good" following hernia surgery five weeks ago which delayed Senate consideration of his case. He added that he has made calls to other senators.

Williams, a popular liberal identified with labor union interests during much of his career, has been sentenced to serve three years in prison and fined $50,000 for his part in Abscam crimes.

Specifically, he was convicted on bribery and conspiracy charges for promising to use his influence in the Senate on a private immigration bill and on behalf of a titanium mine in which he had a hidden interest.

Unknown to Williams, the FBI secretly made a television tape of his meetings with investigators, one of whom posed as an Arab sheik looking for lucrative investments.

Besides Williams, six House members also were convicted in the Abscam case. All have either resigned or been defeated for re-election.

Williams, who has maintained he is innocent of any wrongdoing, dismissed the possibility that he might settle for a lesser penalty.

The senator said he would continue to seek complete exoneration. "That's what I'm fighting for," he said. "Expulsion on the facts of my case, that's preposterous."

The last time a senator was expelled was 1862 during the tumultuous Civil War years when a member was accused of selling guns to the Confederacy.

Many senators expressed a dislike for the way the FBI built its case against Williams, but few were willing to say how they would decide when voting on the proposed expulsion begins, probably Thursday. The case could continue until Monday.

"Until the actual presentation starts, I don't think there is any way to forecast what will happen here," said Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich. "I want to hear the case before I consider specific courses of action."

Bill Owens to visit OC

ODESSA — Bill Owens, nationally known photojournalist and author of five photography books, will visit Odessa College March 10-11.

Owens, whose visit is sponsored by OC photography department and student activities office, will speak on photography at 7:30 p.m. March 10, in room 201 of the Odessa College Instructional Building. The public is invited to hear him speak. His work will be on display at OC beginning Monday in the Instructional Building.

According to Owens, the heart of photography is the documentary image as a record of people, places and events. "The documentary photograph contains the symbols of our society and tells us about ourselves," he said.

Owens has published five photography books, including "Suburbia," "Our Kind of People," "Working: I Do It for the Money," "Documentary Photography: A Personal View," and "Publish Your Photo Book."

His work has been exhibited in galleries and museums in the United States and Europe. He completed his bachelor's degree at Chico State College in Chico, Calif., in 1963 and worked as a news photographer from 1968 to 1978.

In addition to his speaking engagement at Odessa College, Owens will critique photographs for photography students from Odessa College and The University of Texas of the Permian Basin at 9 a.m. March 11 in room 201 of the Instructional Building.

Green trial begins soon

The murder trial of Booker T. Green Jr., who is accused of shooting Midland businessman-gambler Robert James "R.J." Morris, 50, through the plate glass of an east-side liquor store last Nov. 14 is to begin next week in Midland's 238th State District Court.

Green, a 42-year-old U.S. Postal Service supervisor, was indicted for murder on Nov. 18 and was released under a $25,000 bailbond after one of five rifle shots he allegedly fired into the M&M Liquor Store struck Morris in the heart on that Saturday night.

Moments earliers, Morris and Green purportedly had been arguing over a gambling bet when Morris, who allegedly was armed with a pistol, ordered Green out of his store. In turn, Green got the rifle out of his car and peeled off five rounds.

Morris, who owned RJ Real Pit Bar-B-Que at 2301 E. Kentucky Ave., was a leading businessman in "the flats," Midland's black business district.

Prosecuting the case in Judge Vann Culp's court will be District Attorney Vern Martin and assistant prosecutor Marian Bentley. Defending Green in the jury trial will Odessa attorney H. Thomas Hirsch.

Jury selection is to begin Monday morning.

Grocery bills down some, but trend not encouraging

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Grocery bills dropped by more than 1 percent last month, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey, which found lower prices for hamburger, hot dogs and eggs.

A look at the long-term price picture, however, was less encouraging. The cost of the items checked by the AP has doubled in the nine years since the survey began.

The AP drew up a random list of 14 food and non-food products and checked the prices at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973. Prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

Among the findings of the latest survey:

—The marketbasket bill went up last month at the checklist store in four cities, rising an average of 1.2 percent. The bill went down in nine cities, dropping an average of 2.2 percent. The average, overall change last month was a decrease of 1.1 percent.

—Last month's drop was the biggest since a 2.7 percent decline in May 1981. It compared to a 1.2 percent increase in January.

—Comparing prices today with those on March 1, 1973 when the survey began, the AP found the marketbasket bill was up in every city, rising an average of 100 percent. That means prices are exactly double what they were.

—Eggs led the list of items decreasing in price last month. The price of a dozen eggs decreased at the checklist store in 12 cities and was unchanged in the 13th city. Chopped chuck decreased at the checklist store in seven cities and all-beef frankfurters went down in six cities.

—A look at the overall number of items checked by the AP showed tht about one-fifth of them increased during February, while more than one-fourth decreased. There was no clear pattern to the increases. No single item increased in more than five cities.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has said that another round of price increases may be ahead. The department says prices paid to farmers went up in February for the second month in a row. The February boost — eight-tenths of 1 percent — was much less steep than the January rise — 3.1 percent. But the USDA says the increases will, eventually, show up on supermarket shelves.

For all of 1982, the USDA predicts an increase in food prices of between 5 percent and 9 percent. It says most of the increase will be due to higher costs for marketing rather than to higher farm prices.

There were fewer increases during February than during January. Here are the specific percentages of increase and decrease:

	Jan.	Feb.
Up	34.6	20.9
Down	19.8	27.5
Unchanged	37.4	43.4
Unavailable	8.2	8.2

No attempt was made to weight the AP survey results according to population density or in terms of what percent of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes were used when available. If the requested size and brand was not available on March 1, 1973, a comparable substitute was selected. Items temporarily out of stock on one of the survey dates being compared were not included in the over-all total.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another. The only comparisons were made in terms of percentages of increase or decrease — saying a particular item went up 10 percent in one city and 6 percent in another.

The items on the AP checklist were: chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade-A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, frankfurters and granulated sugar. A 15th item, chocolate chip cookies, was dropped from the list when the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, N.M., Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

Industries seek help as U.S. housing sales plummet

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

Leaders of the banking and housing industries warned President Reagan today that huge federal deficits threaten to return the country to the economic conditions of the 1930s, and urged him to solve the problem even if it means raising taxes.

The appeal came after the government reported Tuesday that sales of new single-family homes plunged 22.8 percent in January from December, ending three straight months of increases and falling to the second-lowest rate in the 20 years such figures have been kept.

Reagan, in appearances Tuesday in Wyoming and New Mexico, said he would not retreat from his tax-cut program and planned defense buildup to reduce huge budget deficits.

Despite deficits widely projected at over $100 billion in the coming years, Reagan said his economic program would "guide our country out of this dark tunnel of recession and decline."

But Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker warned the Senate Budget Committee that unless the deficits are cut, the economy could "slip back into the morass again."

In a letter to Reagan released in advance of today's delivery, the banking and housing organization leaders said: "More than anything else, it is the spectre of an overwhelming volume of deficit financing which haunts housing and financial markets and poses the threat of economic and financial conditions not seen since the 1930s."

The letter came from the heads of the American Bankers Association, United States League of Savings Associations, National Association of Realtors, National Association of Home Builders, Mortgage Bankers Association and National Association of Mutual Savings Banks.

It said persistently high interest rates "are creating an economic and financial crisis in this country" and called for slowing spending for both defense and social programs. If necessary, it said, previously enacted personal income tax cuts should be deferred or taxes should be raised.

A sign of difficulty in enacting Reagan's budget plan came from the Senate Finance Committee. While the panel voted to cut the budget for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 by at least as much as Reagan proposed, it also reserved the right to raise taxes more and reduce spending less than Reagan wants.

Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. of New York, the nation's fourth-largest bank, said in its weekly Financial Digest that based on Reagan's projection of a $98.6 billion budget in the current fiscal year, a cumulative deficit of $60 billion will be recorded over the next eight months. That would be 3½ times larger than the deficit posted in the final eight months of the previous fiscal year.

"This suggests that Treasury financing requirements could be soaring at precisely the same time that the private economy is expected to attempt a modest revival — enhancing the likelihood that public and private sector borrowing requirements will clash, interest rates will again rise sharply and any nascent economic rebound choked off," the bank's report said.

Meanwhile, oil prices continued to fall, as Great Britain reduced the price of its North Sea crude oil by $4 a barrel to $31 and Venezuela confirmed it had reduced the price of its heavy, lower-quality crude oils by $2.50, to between $18.90 and $27.12 a barrel.

But the Energy Department issued a report predicting that despite falling gasoline prices now, consumers will be paying more than $2 a gallon in 1980 dollars by 1995.

Demonstrators greet Reagan at each stop

By The Associated Press

President Reagan, stumping the West for his "new federalism" program, was greeted at each stop by demonstrators upset by his stands on women's rights, El Salvador, defense and the economy.

When he arrived in Los Angeles Tuesday night, about 30 protesters carrying signs in support of the Equal Rights Amendment marched outside the Century Plaza Hotel.

Earlier Tuesday, about 700 people protested the administration's economic policies and intervention in El Salvador while Reagan spoke in Cheyenne, Wyo., and another 600 demonstrated during his stop in Albuquerque, N.M.

In Cheyenne, a coalition of the elderly, union members, women's rignts activists and anti-war protesters marched peacefully under the name "Ronald Reagan Welcome Committee."

"We'd hate to see Reagan come to Cheyenne and walk away thinking we're all happy," said Keith Henning, the AFL-CIO executive secretary for Wyoming.

In Albuquerque, protesters carried placards that read, "Send Reagan back to B-rated movies," and chanted, "No more war, U.S. and El Salvador."

Congressmen criticize troops in Europe

By DON WATERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon chiefs are running into a "bring-the-boys-home" attitude from some members of Congress perturbed that U.S. allies in Europe are not doing enough to defend their own countries and are too accomodating to the Soviets.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Air Force Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, ran into some of that sentiment Tuesday when they went before the Senate defense appropriations subcommittee.

A few hours later, Army Gen. Bernard W. Rogers, U.S. commander in Europe, got a taste of the same concerns from members of the House Armed Services Committee.

Significantly, much of the criticism came from members normally supportive of U.S. defense policies in Europe and elsewhere.

All the Pentagon officials insisted that a partial withdrawal of U.S. troops from Europe would have disastrous consequences for the security of the United States.

But Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska, assistant Senate Republican leader and chairman of the appropriations panel, said he was angry enough about a natural gas pipeline deal the United States' NATO allies have struck with the Soviets that he may introduce legislation to withdraw some American troops from Europe.

"It's our taxpayers' money that is supporting the defense capability for Western Europe (while) they indicate they're perfectly willing to rely upon the Russians for 20 percent of their energy," Stevens said.

If the West Germans and others feel that confident about the Soviet Union, he suggested, perhaps the United States does not need to station 300,000 troops on the continent to protect against invasion.

"Isn't it an inconsistent position for us to be paying for their defense and they're going over to buy gas from Russia in such great quantities?" Stevens asked.

Weinberger said the administration is on record against the project, which would pump natural gas 3,000 miles from Siberian fields. But, he said, the pipeline "is very far advanced, and when we talk to most European countries about it, they figuratively shrug their shoulders and say it's too late" to cancel it.

In any case, the secretary added, the United States considers it "enormously in our own interest, if nothing else, to make sure that Europe is not overrun. I don't think we could exist" if that occurred.

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, then-Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., tried unsuccessfully to enact a partial withdrawal of U.S. troops from Europe, and Weinberger said, "I hope we wouldn't get the Mansfield amendment syndrome" again.

"I might do it, I want you to know," Stevens interjected. "I'm getting awfully disturbed with an international community that will finance a Soviet pipeline into Western Europe but won't finance an Alaska pipeline into the central United States."

Stevens told reporters later that his staff is researching a latter-day Mansfield amendment and that if he does not introduce it some other senator probably will.

Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss., a longtime NATO supporter, said it would take a lot of explaining to convince the American people to support the continuing big U.S. manpower investment in Europe.

And Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said his concerns extend to Japan, which also depends on this country for much of its defense. He noted that a manufacturer in that country moved in to supply pipelaying equipment for the gas project after a contract by Caterpillar Tractor was canceled on Reagan's order.

In the House Armed Services Committee, Reps. William L. Dickinson, R-Ala., and Bill Nichols, D-Ala., told Rogers they are disturbed by what they perceive as complacency among Europeans about the Soviet threat to the continent.

"I find myself wondering if the time has come to whistle up the dogs, put the chairs in a wagon and bring the troops home," said Nichols. "I really don't believe that, general, but the complacency bothers me."

Rogers said the solution is to encourage European leaders to convince their citizens that a strong defense is vital. This would have more effect than depending upon the U.S. "propaganda machine" to spread the word, he said.

Head of MGM-United Artists takes over Continental Airlines

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Frank Rothman, head of MGM-United Artists, was named a director of Continental Airlines, but that was the only news released as company directors met to discuss its precarious financial situation.

Continental spokesman Bruce Plowman said Tuesday there would be no other statement from the airline's management.

Continental, which lost $60 million last year, recently was acquired by Texas Air Corp., which purchased 51 percent of its common stock after a long and bitter takeover battle. A stockholder's meeting is scheduled for March 30.

The directors presumably discussed the announcement last week by Continental's auditors, Peat, Marwick & Mitchell, that the accounting firm would qualify its certification of the airline's 1981 financial statement with a clause questioning the company's ability to survive.

Continental's debt totals about $200 million after it borrowed an additional $25 million last month, and some analysts have questioned its ability to repay the loans.

The airline has asked three unions — the Union of Flight Attendants, the Air Line Pilots Association and the Machinists union — for wage and work-rule concessions it estimated would save $60 million a year.

However, talks with the unions are still in preliminary stages and there is no indication an agreement will be reached.

"We had talks that ended nowhere because management gave us a proposal containing things that really were overkill," said Claudia Lampe, a spokeswoman for the flight attendants.

Too few calories detrimental as too many

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know you advocate nutritionally well-balanced diets. But if a person wants to lose weight in a hurry, what's wrong with going on a very low calorie diet for a while? — Evelyn, Muskegon, Mich.

Dear Evelyn: One thing wrong with such diets is that the person may not only lose weight, but his or her life as well. Dr. Harold E. Sours, of the Centers for Disease Control, has reported on 17 deaths that were linked to very low-calorie diets. There was no evidence that any of the deaths was due to some underlying disease.

The diets I prescribe for my patients contain all the essential nutrients as well as being low in calories. I want my patients to be in better health when they reach their ideal weight — not worse.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter has finally decided to go on a diet to lose about 20 pounds, and I want to do what I can to help. I know about the kinds of food I should serve, but are there any general suggestions you feel might be of help? — Mrs. D.E., Silver Spring, Md.

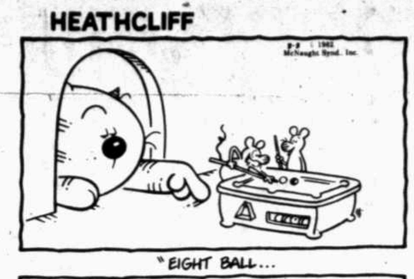

Dear Mrs. E.: Since a dieter's success often depends on the attitudes of family members, your letter suggests that your daughter has an excellent chance of being successful. In many respects, dieting must be a family affair.

Among the suggestions I would make is to use low-fat milk and cheese in your recipes, and to keep candy and snack-type foods out of the house. Your daughter may eventually reach the point where she won't be tempted by such high-calorie items, but it's better not to have them around when a person first starts dieting.

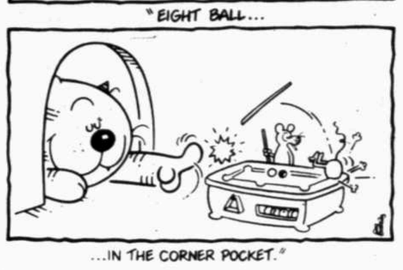

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a mild form of diabetes. During my last visit to my doctor, he recommended that I add some fiber to my diet. Is this his own idea, or has it been found that fiber is actually beneficial in patients with diabetes? — Ron, Salt Lake City

Dear Ron: Recent studies have indicated that a high fiber intake may be beneficial in diabetes. One such study at the University of Oxford suggests that a high fiber and a high carbohydrate diet may be best, both for insulin dependent and non-insulin-dependent patients.

Equipment improves heart patient treatment

BIG SPRING — "You can talk to a patient until you're blue in the face and not know what's behind his symptoms," said Dr. Robert Griffin of Big Spring's Malone-Hogan Clinic of the common complaints he hears of heart flutters and palpitations.

A standard electrocardiogram (EKG) is of short duration and many times will show no indication of a suspected cardiac problem. For years the electrocardiogram was the physician's mainstay in diagnosing heart problems. It still is.

However, a new tool — the portable cardiac monitoring system — has been added to the physician's arsenal of diagnostic equipment.

Malone-Hogan Clinic recently purchased one of these devices, the Holter Cardiography system, according to Dr. Buerk Williams, president of the Malone-Hogan Clinic board of directors.

The 22-physician clinic has used heart monitoring systems for several years, but when superior technology became available the multi-specialty group decided to purchase the Holter monitor.

The device is used to follow heart function in hospitalized cardiac patients, but its prime value comes in letting a physician monitor persons on an outpatient basis, explained Griffin, who is one of the six Malone-Hogan Clinic internists who use the Holter unit. The equipment permits monitoring of two patients daily.

Griffin catalogued the many uses of the heart monitor.

"We use it following acute myocardial infarction," he said.

Myocardial infarctions are heart attacks in which heart muscle dies. After such attacks, physicians look in particular for heart irregularities such as premature ventricular beats. The monitor can find them.

Determining whether a patient's undiagnosed chest pain is cardiac in origin is a basic use of the monitor, according to Griffin.

"In patients complaining of palpitations or fast heart beat, we can use the monitor to detect the exact nature of the abnormality. The results help determine a course of treatment," the internist said.

Dizziness, fainting or seizures can be symptoms of cardiac malfunctions, according to Griffin. The monitor is an important aid in correlating these patient complaints to the heart malfunctions that may be causing them.

Griffin said the monitor's other uses include detection of abnormal cardiac rhythms in patients with mitral valve prolapse and identification of coronary artery spasm, a condition which is now treatable with the new drug Procardia.

"The EKG technician is an important part of a cardiac monitoring program like this," indicated Griffin. The technician hooks up the patient and instructs him in use of the recorder. She also scans the completed 24-hour tape, making EKG printouts of abnormalities for the physician to evaluate.

A Big Spring patient whose heart was monitored recently explained that she was able to carry the heart monitor as easily as a shoulder bag. If she noticed any symptoms of cardiac problems, she was instructed to press a button that marks the tape. Then she was to record in a pocket diary the time shown on the recorder's digital clock, noting her symptom and activity at the time the symptom occurred.

"I hardly noticed the monitor," the woman commented, "but I did faithfully record what I was doing throughout the day, so my doctor would have a good idea how various activities affected my heart."

"Patients wearing the monitor may feel somewhat 'bionic' at first," chuckled the patient. "When wearing the monitor, you have five small electrodes taped to your chest. It doesn't take long to forget they're there."

These five electrodes are attached to the recorder, which holds a 24-hour cassette that documents heart activity over the course of an entire day. The Holter unit can be carried by a shoulder strap or attached to a belt.

Physicians are careful to point out that the Holter cardiography unit and systems like it do not replace standard electrocardiography. Electrocardiograms still provide a more complete short-term picture of heart activity because they can look at heart action from 12 angles instead of the two that a portable monitor uses.

Portable cardiac monitoring systems do, however, add new dimensions to the diagnosis and treatment of heart problems, according to Malone-Hogan physicians.

Strains on 'the family'

The relationship between the United States and Canada can be likened to that of a family. History, geography and a common cultural heritage cause some Americans to look upon Canada as a son who is old enough to assert his independence but still relies on money from home to get through college. For their part, Canadians complain that too many Americans, especially in the business world, regard Canada as a fairy-tale stepchild of the United States, or a 51st state.

Both views are wrong, of course. But it is well to understand them because they are at the root of Canada's increasing effort to establish greater economic independence which is causing unbecoming strains between two neighbors that have traditionally enjoyed the warmest of friendships.

For seven years a Foreign Investment Review Agency has been screening new foreign investment to make sure that it serves Canadian interests. The agency triggered strong opposition from U.S. investors last year when Canada announced a National Energy Plan aimed at bringing its growing oil and gas industry — now largely controlled by U.S.-based multinational oil companies — under a 50 percent share of Canadian ownership by 1990.

The Reagan administration has cried foul, accusing Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's Liberal government of protectionism and nationalization with an anti-American flavor. Ottawa responded by pointing out that the United States would never countenance as much foreign economic influence as it now enjoys in Canada.

The point is well taken, but we suspect that many U.S. investors don't object so much to Canada's goal of increased economic independence as the heavy-handed methods it is following to achieve them.

And at the risk of appearing condescending, it does seem apparent that pursuing "Canadazation" to extremes will only drive away the capital investment needed by such a vast nation with a population of only 24 million, about the same as California's.

Already the National Energy Plan has led to a sharp drop in exploratory oil and gas drilling in Canada while it is booming in the United States. The $400 billion in "megaprojects" for resource development that Canada hopes to carry out in the next two decades must rely heavily on outside capital.

Canada certainly is coming of age and it behooves this country to give it all the respect that it would ask in return. At the same time, our neighbor ought to recognize that much of its current prosperity is due to U.S. capital, and it should avoid taking measures that would only prove counter-productive to further development. In short, the United States and Canada need to pursue the good qualities of a happy family.

Trouble over Taiwan

Seldom does a week go by without the carpenters of the nation's foreign policy being reminded of that obvious truth that you cannot please all of the people all of the time.

Israel and Egypt are cases in point. When the State Department tilts toward Cairo it causes consternation in Jerusalem, and vice versa. Similar problems persist in our dealings with India and Pakistan.

Washington's diplomatic relations with the Chinese have for years provided examples of the impossibility of pleasing one side without giving fits to the other. A reminder of this surfaced this week as the United States marked the 10th anniversary of the renewal of normal relations with Peking. Opening that door made us look like traitors to Taipei, which long looked at America as a friend and defender.

It was 10 years ago that the Shanghai communique brought Washington and Peking together after the Chinese had isolated themselves from the world community for more than two decades. President Nixon called his visit to China, and the signing of the communique by him and Chinese Premier Chou En-lai, "a week that changed the world."

It was indeed a diplomatic event of high drama. Other doors soon opened, as the People's Republic of China joined the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and the Olympics.

Throughout this period Washington has tried to remain on good terms with both Peking and Taipei, but it has not been easy. A decision not to sell some sophisticated jet fighters to Taiwan angered the Taiwanese, and continuing plans to sell lesser hardware to Taipei has annoyed Peking.

The conflicts of interest continue on this 10th anniversary of normalization. While the United States cannot be all things to both capitals, let us hope the State Department can find ways to remain on reasonably good terms with Peking and Taipei. That would be the best way to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the Shanghai communique.

Watt now making moves as 'Indian fighter'

WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary James Watt hardly fits the classic image of an Indian fighter. Yet the bald, bespectacled bureaucrat was such a notorious enemy of Native American causes that more than 200 tribal leaders protested his nomination last year. Now the Indians' worst fears are coming true.

Jack Anderson

Watt privately supports a bill introduced by Rep. Gary Lee, R-N.Y., that would wipe out Indian claims to thousands of acres of valuable land in New York and South Carolina, even though the Interior Department has made no official announcement of its position on the controversial legislation.

Furthermore, newly drafted department regulations would make government-paid legal assistance for Indian tribes much harder to get. Without such funds for private lawyers, the tribes would have to depend on the tender mercies of Watt's underlings to plead their cases.

Perhaps the most disturbing evidence of Watt's anti-Indian proclivities — an apparent hangover from his days as head of the conservative Mountain States Legal Foundation — is a backroom deal he made with Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, at the expense of the Omaha Indian tribe.

Grassley is another unlikely Indian fighter. Though he has managed to keep the loyalty of Iowa voters for most of his adult life — 16 years in the state legislature and three terms in the House before his elevation to the Senate in 1980 — he is not highly regarded by his colleagues on Capitol Hill.

Grassley seems to suffer from chronic foot-in-mouth disease. He embarrassed President Reagan by asking him, in front of several Democratic senators, if he had secured an anti-abortion commitment from Sandra Day O'Connor before appointing her to the Supreme Court.

But party disloyalty is not one of Grassley's faults. The attorney fighting the Omaha tribe's claims to the Iowa farmland is none other than Wiley Mayne, a GOP stalwart and former congressman who was one of Richard Nixon's bitter-end supporters on the Judiciary Committee during the impeachment hearings in 1974.

Grassley began pressuring the Interior Department on the Omaha case even before he was elected to the Senate. Grassley "has made our life extremely rocky on this issue," said a senior Interior official. "He's had conversations with Watt and the White House."

In their secret deal, Watt and Grassley cut off Interior Department funding for the Omahas' private attorney. The reason was that the Indians had won back 3,000 acres of the $5,000-an-acre land they claimed, and seemed likely to get back another 8,000 acres. The Indians had lost the land when the Missouri River changed course in 1923.

Last year Grassley tried to push through an appropriations amendment that would have cut off the Omahas' government legal funds. My sources say that at Watt's urging, Grassley expanded the rider to cut off funds for all Indian tribes' legal fees in land contests.

Blocked at the legislative pass, Watt and Grassley took a simpler route — cutting off the Omaha tribe's legal funds by Interior Department fiat.

While they were at it, the two Indian fighters tried to ambush the Omahas' attorney, William Veeder. Grassley claimed that Veeder, as a former Interior Department lawyer who had worked on the tribe's claim, was involved in a conflict of interest. But an internal department memo, reviewed by my associates John Dillon and Donald Goldberg, states flatly that there is no conflict as long as a former employee doesn't use the expertise he gained on the federal payroll in a case against the government.

It was a strange theory for Grassley to push. His buddy Watt was an Interior Department employee before he took over the Mountain States Legal Foundation, which was in fact engaged in battles against the federal government's environmental policies.

UNDER THE DOME: The Senate's senior citizens, like Russell Long, D-La., John Stennis, D-Miss., and Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., are cool to the idea of televising the august body's proceedings. But a freshman senator, Larry "Press Release" Pressler, R-S.D., renowned for his avid courtship of the media, thinks it's a great idea. He's even introduced an amendment that would allow charts and graphs to be part of the coverage, and another permitting public and commercial TV use — which could lead to coverage on the evening news.

— Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., held a scheduled hearing in San Francisco recently, then returned to his hotel room and fainted dead away. When he came to, the senator checked himself into a local hopsital. The diagnosis: some kind of flu.

— At 5 foot 7, Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., is diminutive enough to make jokes about his height. One reason he and House Speaker Tip O'Neill "don't always see eye-to-eye is because he's 6 feet tall," Baker told the governors' conference. And in a possible reference to Gov. Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, Baker said of a budget issue, "Fifteen percent might not mean much to someone who's 6 foot 7. That's why the country needs shorter leaders."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, March 3, the 62nd day of 1982. There are 303 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 3, 1974, a Turkish airliner crashed in a forest near Paris, killing 345 people.

On this date:

In 1932, Chinese forces were driven back from Shanghai by the Japanese.

In 1945, the U.S. and Canadian armies joined up as the German army went into a full retreat along the Rhine River in World War II.

In 1967, Poland refused to issue a visa to then-former U.S. Vice President Richard Nixon to make a private visit to Warsaw.

In 1979, President Jimmy Carter and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin met privately in an effort to resume negotiations toward a Middle East peace treaty.

Ten years ago: The Labor Department reported the nation's unemployment rate had dropped to a two-year low of 5.7 percent.

Five years ago: President Jimmy Carter won his first legislative victory when the House rejected the Navy's bid for a fourth Nimitz-class nuclear-powered aircraft carrier.

One year ago: President Reagan said it did not seem likely the United States would send troops to El Salvador to help the right-wing government hold down a threat from leftist insurgents.

Today's birthday: Jacqueline Onassis's sister, Lee Radziwill, is 49.

Thought for today: People ask you for criticism, but they only want praise. — W. Somerset Maugham, English author (1874-1965).

ART BUCHWALD

El Salvador takes a bit of understanding

There were four of us at lunch, all American patriots who were very disturbed about what was going on in Central America.

Art Buchwald

"We've got to save El Salvador," George said.

"Here, here," we all said, raising our glasses.

Then Joe, who isn't very bright, said, "Who are we going to save in El Salvador?"

"The people," I replied.

"Of course," said Joe. "We have to save the people. How do we do it?"

"By giving arms to the El Salvador military, so they can kill the people who are fighting them," Hilary told Joe.

"How many people do they have to kill to save El Salvador?" Joe asked.

George said, "That's for them to decide and not us. The more people they kill now, the less they will have to kill later."

We watched Joe turning that one over in his mind.

"Why do the military have to kill so many people?"

"Because the people are trying to kill them," I told him. "El Salvador is teeming with guerrillas who are being trained in Nicaragua, with arms sent to them by Cuba from the Soviet Union. If the El Salvador military doesn't kill them, we could lose the Panama Canal."

Joe is so thick, he asked, "How does the military know who the guerrillas are?"

"They don't, so they have to kill anyone who looks like a guerrilla," George said. "It's better for a peasant to be dead than red."

We thought we had gotten through to him, but Joe can be very stubborn when he doesn't understand something.

"If the military keeps killing people who aren't guerrillas, won't the other people be more sympathetic to the guerrillas than they are to the military?"

Hilary was getting exasperated. "No, it will have exactly the opposite effect. The more people the military kill, the more frightened the people will become of supporting the guerrillas. That's why we have to supply the El Salvador government with tanks and planes and napalm."

"It's a pity so many people have to be killed," Joe said.

George put his hand on Joe's shoulder. "I know how you feel, Joe. I don't like to see El Salvadoran people killed any more than you do. But war is a dirty business, and if we don't stop them in El Salvador, we're going to have to fight them in Alabama."

"You don't have any relatives in El Salvador, do you, Joe?" I asked him.

"None that I know of."

"Then what are you so upset about? It's only a tiny Central American country, and they've been killing each other for years. They're used to it."

"Maybe so. But if we send in all that military stuff, the peasants are going to say that we killed them. Why do we have to get involved in their revolution?"

"It was their revolution," Hilary said, "until the commies got into it, and made it our revolution. If we walk away now, no military junta in this hemisphere will ever trust us again."

We thought we had Joe turned around, when he suddenly said, "Couldn't we be getting ourselves into another Vietnam?"

George lost his temper. "Dammit, Joe, El Salvador can't be compared to Vietnam. We went into Vietnam with our eyes closed. We're getting involved in El Salvador with our eyes wide open. Besides, President Reagan said he has no plans to send any American boys there. It's their war."

"I'm sorry I upset everyone," Joe said. "It's just that I don't understand what's going on."

"That," said Hilary, "is because you don't read the papers."

A CHANGING WORLD

It's time for a hard look at U.S. commitments to Israel

It isn't easy for one with many years affection for Israel to say this, but it would seem the time has come for President Reagan to take a hard look at U.S. commitments to the Jewish state, particularly Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

John Pinkerman

Any kind of a review of U.S. policy toward Begin and Co. will anger and/or frighten the sizable American Jewish community, but the risk is worth it, regardless of the bloc votes organizations like the American Jewish Congress control.

The facts simply demand such a review. Begin continues to behave like the rascal he accuses every Arab leader of being and he continues to be the most formidable barrier to peace in the Mideast.

The most recent Begin outrage that should give Mr. Reagan reason to think anew about favoring Israel in the Mideast peace-seeking process remains his last Dec. 14 annexation of the occupied Golan Heights. Now that most tempers have cooled on this travesty, it would seem safe to comment on it.

Anyone who has stood at the top of the Golan or has looked up from the Galilee Valley below would acknowledge that to ask Israel to give up this strategic ground under present circumstances would be ridiculous. Holding much of the occupied area is vital to Israel's security, perhaps even survival.

However, there was no need whatsoever, particularly at a time when the moderate Arab nations like Egypt and Saudi Arabia were moving toward accommodation with Jerusalem, to formally annex this Syrian territory into official Israel. It was the worst possible move at the worst possible time by the worst prime minister Israel has had in its 33-year history. It is difficult to weep for Syrian's claim to the Golan but that does not make Begin's move any more acceptable.

When the United States protested such an outrageous action, Begin blew his top (and still has not softened his words). He used words like "vassal" state and "banana republic" and vowed to get along very nicely without the U.S. economic and military aid that has kept Israel afloat since it became a nation and saved its skin during the 1973 Yom Kippur War.

Former Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban, one of the great statesmen of the world, called Begin's intemperate behavior a "diatribe" and said it "made Israel the most virulent spokesman of anti-Americanism in the world." Let it be said here and now that if Eban were handling Israel's role in the peace process today, the whole Mideast would be closer to tranquillity and agreement.

Despite Begin's irrational behavior, the Reagan administration has faithfully pursued America's historic role of trying to be Israel's best friend. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick worked tirelessly in an effort to avoid a United Nations General Assembly move demanding all members sever diplomatic, political and economic ties with Israel. She failed, but her efforts reduced the usual communist-Third World anti-West majority significantly.

But, Begin continues to rage against America, to the point where the Jerusalem Post, principal Israeli newspaper, has found it necessary to say, "Begin has in fact written off the peace, no less than President Assad of Syria."

American Jewish lobby notwithstanding, Begin, Israelis and all friends of Israel should be aware that even the American public is having some second thoughts about "Israel, first, last and always." A Lou Harris Poll for the first time has shown that Americans see Egypt as a closer friend and ally than Israel.

Begin even spits in the eye of Saudi Arabia, a moderate Arab state, when it offers a far more accommodating thrust toward peace than any Israeli foe, other than Egypt, has offered before. The thrust even used the magic word "recognition" of Israel, something the Jewish state has longed for in any dealing with the Arabs.

The London Daily Telegraph says it like it is in an editorial denouncing Begin: "Israel's continued existence as an independent nation, surrounded by well-armed enemies, depends and always has, on American support. ... It has been argued that other Arab governments should have the guts to follow the example of President Sadat of Egypt and enter direct negotiation for peace with Isreal. So they should, but Mr. Begin makes the prospect more remote all the time."

There is no need for Mr. Reagan ever to respond to Begin's question, "Are we a vassal state of yours?" No, you are not, Mr. Prime Minister, but you are wearing out your welcome in America and perhaps the time has come for we Americans to review and revise our "best friend" policy toward you and your people.

Charles Roberts, the von Bulow family chauffer, told Newport Superior Court Tuesday that he frequently took Mrs. von Bulow to doctors when they were living in New York.

Butler contradicts defense claim

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A butler called by the defense in Claus C. von Bulow's attempted murder trial contradicted one of the defendant's chief claims when he said that von Bulow's now-comatose wife had no problems with alcohol.

Robert Biastre, the butler at the von Bulows' Newport mansion, testified Tuesday as the defense began presenting its evidence that he served Mrs. von Bulow up to two drinks on perhaps a dozen occasions, but said she frequently would not finish the first.

Von Bulow is accused of trying to kill his wife with a drug injection, but the defense has maintained that she fell into a coma because of she drank heavily, ate too many sweets and abused drugs, worsening a blood sugar condition.

"Would you say she was a woman who drank regularly?" asked prosecutor Stephen R. Famiglietti.

"No," said the butler, a member of the staff at the von Bulows' mansion, Clarendon Court, for 10 years.

"Was she a woman who had a problem with alcohol?"

"I would say no," Biastre said.

Biastre also said he gave Mrs. von Bulow three or four glasses of bourbon-laced eggnog the night before she first fell into a coma on Dec. 27, 1979.

Von Bulow, 55, a Danish-born financial consultant, is accused of twice trying to kill his wife with insulin and barbiturate injections during visits to their Millionaires Row mansion in 1979 and 1980.

Martha "Sunny" von Bulow, 50, recovered from the 1979 coma but fell into another coma Dec. 21, 1980. She remains comatose in a New York City hospital with little hope of recovery.

THE PROSECUTION MAINTAINED through four weeks of testimony that von Bulow was motivated to kill his wife by love for another woman and desire to inherit half of his wife's $28 million estate.

Another defense witness, von Bulow's chauffeur, testified Tuesday he never believed his employer tried to murder Mrs. von Bulow, and advised his fellow servants to remain loyal to the master of the house.

"I don't think he would do anything like that because he was so fond of his young daughter (Cosima, age 14,)," chauffeur Charles Roberts said.

"Did that comment have anything to do with the fact that staying loyal to Mr. von Bulow meant keeping your job?" Famiglietti asked.

A defense objection kept Roberts from responding.

Under questioning by defense lawyer Herald P. Fahringer, Roberts brought a new element into the trial, saying his daily routine of driving Mrs. von Bulow to a gymnasium, beauty parlor and stores in Manhattan often included visits to three doctors.

According to earlier testimony, Mrs. von Bulow rarely went to a physician unless she felt she urgently needed treatment.

Roberts said he never knew the names of two of the doctors.

"The gym, the hairdresser, the doctors, Bergdorf-Goodman and Saks — that was my route," Roberts said.

Roberts added he was no longer employed fulltime by von Bulow, but occasionally drove him places and housed the von Bulow's Mercedes automobile at his Staten Island home, sometimes using it himself.

Biastre said after Mrs. von Bulow fell into her first coma, von Bulow told him to water her drinks and not give her so many sweets.

Doctors had advised Mrs. von Bulow she suffered from reactive hypoglycemia, and eating sweets and drinking alcohol could dangerously lower her blood sugar, according to earlier testimony.

The defense argues Mrs. von Bulow was an alcoholic and von Bulow thought she was sleeping off a drinking bout when he delayed calling a doctor the day she suffered the first coma.

Confessed killer wants transfer to state hospital

EWING TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — In 1949, Howard Unruh walked quietly through the streets of his dreary East Camden neighborhood and, with the precision that earned him Army sharpshooter ratings, killed 13 people in 20 minutes.

Although he confessed to the killings, Unruh was never brought to trial and has been held in a state facility for the criminally insane for more than 32 years.

But debate on his status continues as authorities consider whether the criminal charges should be dropped so he can be transferred to a regular state hospital. The Marlboro State Psychiatric Hospital, where his attorneys want him moved, is close to his 82-year-old mother's home.

A Camden County Superior Court had ruled in 1980 that the murder indictments should be dismissed against Unruh so the transfer from Trenton State Psychiatric Hospital's Vroom Building could be made.

But Dennis Wixted, Camden County first assistant prosecutor, appealed the ruling.

"I know from past cases that moving him to Marlboro is the first step toward a full release," Wixted said.

The 60-year-old Unruh will be represented at an appellate court hearing Tuesday by public defender James Klein.

One of Klein's arguments is that after three decades in Vroom — a facility that has been criticized even by its administrators as not able to help any long-term resident — the indictments should be dropped so that Unruh can be transferred.

But Wixted insists that justice would not be done.

"We're ready to try this (murder) case in 90 days," he said. "There is little doubt he would have been executed then (1949), and he should still face those charges."

DEFENSE ATTORNEYS also have argued that the case against Unruh has deteriorated because he has outlived many of the witnesses.

Wixted disagrees.

"They're coming out of the woodwork. For example, I recently heard from a Dr. Cohen who would like to see this matter go to trial," said Wixted.

Charles Cohen was the son of a pharmacist and his wife, who were believed to be the primary targets of the rage Unruh later told police had been festering because of derogatory remarks they and other neighbors had made about him.

The young Cohen hid in a closet while his mother was shot to death through another closet door never opened by the killer. Cohen's father and grandmother were shot with the same German Luger as they tried to flee.

The other victims of the Sept. 6, 1949, were four passengers in cars, a 2-year-old in an apartment window, an insurance salesman, the local shoemaker, the tailor's wife, the barber, and a 6-year-old boy sitting on a carousel-type horse in the barber shop.

Unruh was declared unfit for trial after court psychiatrists testified he was suffering from schizophrenia that included delusions of persecution.

He was sent to Vroom, where the average stay for patients is now about eight weeks, according to section chief Elmer Hargis. He has been there ever since.

Little has been learned about Unruh since he came to the facility.

A graduate of Woodrow Wilson High School in Camden, Unruh was a veteran of many artillery battles during World War II. He briefly attempted to study pharmacy but was mainly unemployed after he left the service.

He kept diaries, which apparently showed his brooding hatred for his neighbors. He read the Scriptures, listened to the radio and collected war souvenirs and stamps, but his most active hobby appeared to be firing pistols at a practice range in the basement of the building where he shared an apartment with his mother.

A GAUNT MAN NEARLY 6 feet tall when he was arrested, Unruh has added weight and still spends most of his time alone, walking quietly about the cages known as "day rooms" in the antiquated Vroom Building.

He and his relatives have refused to grant interviews, and officials say his fears of attack from the younger patients are increasing.

Rebels' radio broadcast claims government troops routed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The leftist guerrillas reversed the government's casualty claims in the fighting on Mount Guazapa as unofficial sources reported the army's big offensive north of San Salvador had ended.

Without going into details, the rebels' Radio Venceremos claimed the guerrillas killed or wounded 200 government troops in heavy fighting around the country last week.

"The army finds itself in a complete rout," the broadcast said.

The guerrillas' casualties were not reported.

This contrasted with the claim Monday of Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia that the army lost only nine men killed and 23 wounded while killing 122 guerrillas in the government's major action reported last week, the offensive on the Guazapa volcano 16 miles north of San Salvador.

Unofficial sources said the offensive ended Tuesday in its ninth day. It was the army's ninth attempt to drive the guerrillas from the caves and tunnels honeycombing the 4,700-foot mountain.

Garcia estimated there were 400 to 600 guerrillas in the area and said nearly 3,000 troops were hunting them, backed by artillery and aircraft.

One Defense Ministry source, who requested anonymity for security reasons, claimed several rebel camps were dismantled and a guerrilla cemetery was found.

The source said "many bodies" were in the cemetery. The government frequently claims in combat reports that the number of guerrillas killed could not be determined because their bodies were carried off.

Meanwhile, President Jose Napoleon Duarte called on "the democratic people of the world" to support the election of a constituent assembly March 28.

Reagan clashes with UAW's Fraser

By ROBERT L. SHAFFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the United Auto Workers is clashing with Reagan administration officials over whether a bill requiring American carmakers to use U.S. products is the best way to revive the slumping auto industry.

UAW President Douglas A. Fraser told a House subcommittee Tuesday that the so-called "local content" legislation would create 868,000 auto industry jobs.

Fraser testified in support of a bill that would set increasing limits on the amount of local content required in vehicles sold in the United States, starting in 1983.

The bill, written by Rep. Richard L. Ottinger, D-N.Y., would require automakers to show that 90 percent of their product was made in America by 1985.

"Without local content legislation, U.S. auto production will not get the full benefit from any recovery in our auto market," Fraser said.

Reagan administration spokesmen differed sharply with Fraser and other union leaders.

David R. MacDonald, deputy U.S. trade representative, said the administration opposes the bill "on both trade policy and economic grounds."

MacDonald also said that any kind of quota system to stem imports into the United States would "raise legal and policy problems in relation to our commitments under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and other international agreements, and could well result in perverse effects on U.S. employment and economic well-being."

Sue Roberts wins award

Sue Roberts of Midland was awarded the Outstanding Volunteer Award at the annual meeting of the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council in Odessa.

Ms. Roberts has been active in Girl Scouts in Midland and at the council level for more than 10 years, serving as a troop leader, day camp director, work group chairman, member of the Council Nominating Committee and board member.

A new board of directors for the council was also named.

Delegates and visitors, numbering 117, represented Girl Scout communities throughout the Council's 16-county jurisdiction. Thirty-two adult volunteers and senior girl scouts were in attendance from Midland.

Council President Sally Steward of Midland presided over the business meeting. Other items on the agenda besides election of officers included presentation of the 1981 annual report and an operational projection for 1982.

Brooke Wiseman, executive director, was officially introduced to the council, having assumed her responsiblities on Jan. 1.

Officers of the board of directors elected for a three year term were Ms. Steward, president; Carol Orem, first vice president of Midland; Anne Josefy, second vice president of Midland; James O. Gerst, third vice president of Odessa; Barbara Jones, secretary of Odessa; and Leigh Prieto, treasurer of Midland.

Elected to one year terms as members-at-large from Midland were Ms.Roberts, Pat Tompson, Wanda Anderson, Mary Josefy and Karen Carpenter.

Janet Foster and Kerry Faudree, both of Midland, were elected to three year terms as members of the Council Nominating Committee.

The program focused on the 70th anniversary of Girl Scouts of USA being celebrated this year throughout the country. Birthday cake decorated with the 70th anniversary symbol was served to all in attendance. Lou Ann Tompkins, executive staff member, led entertainment.

A slide and tape presentation served as the report on "Hot Diggity Dig," an archaeological event for older Girl Scouts from throughout the United States and abroad. The event was sponsored by the council in 1981. Ms. Roberts of Midland directed the group responsible for the opportunity.

Anne Josefy, second vice president, announced the Girl Scout neighborhoods which increased their membership in 1981. Midland neighborhoods recognized were Great Bear, chaired by Lou Ann Graham; Leo, led by Bobbie Johnson; Orion, directed by Freda Kinsey; and Pleiodes, managed by Bonnie Allen.

Recognitions and awards were presented by Schatzie Tighe of Midland and Ms. Steward. Those honored from Midland were Jane Ramsoure, retiring board member, and members of the Council's Self-Evaluation Task Force, Ms. Tighe and Ms. Anderson.

Ms. Graham of Midland was recognized for chairing the Council's Junior Event and Ms. Anderson for organizing the Cadette Event in 1981. Ms. Steward and Ava Jane Warren were recognized for their efforts on the Council's Interim Management Team last fall while the Council was without an executive director.

DEAR ABBY

Lawyer's fee strikes sour note for pianist

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a professional pianist and organist. Until recently, an attorney, Mr. R., whom we also knew socially, handled my husband's business affairs. When he started to charge my husband $35 every time he phoned to ask him a simple legal question that took five minutes to answer, my husband found himself another attorney.

We still see Mr. R. and his wife socially, and from time to time we're invited to their home for parties. On these occasions, Mr. R. always asks my husband to play the piano and, of course, he does.

Do you think Mr. R. should expect my husband to perform gratis at parties considering the value Mr. R. places on his own professional services? — C.K. IN ILLINOIS

DEAR C.K.: As an invited guest, your husband is under no obligation to perform. If he suspects that he's more an unpaid entertainer than a guest, he should politely decline to play and see if he's invited back.

As for Mr. R. charging a fee to answer a "simple legal question" on the phone: All a lawyer has to sell is his legal expertise, so whether it's delivered in person or by telephone, it should be paid for.

DEAR ABBY: The most effective method yet found for birth control is a large dog sleeping in the middle of the bed on top of the covers.

Try it. It works. That's what we've been doing for 17 years. — FED UP IN THE DOGHOUSE

Frame prints with care

Copley News Service

Art prints, photographs, and all artworks on paper are surprisingly fragile. In time, pollution, humidity, sunlight, and insects can damage your most precious artworks. The wrong framing materials and techniques only speed the decay.

The proper framing techniques are fortunately not very difficult to learn. In his book, "Building a Print Collection," published by Van Nostrand Reinhold, author Glen Warner devotes a chapter to the subject.

Whether you send your prints to a professional framer or frame everything yourself, Warner's framing tips are valuable to know. Some of his advice follows:

THE BASICS: Frame prints under regular glass or rigid plastic to protect them from dirt and pollution. Regular glass is cheap, durable, and in many ways better than non-reflective glass which often makes a print look dull.

Under high humidity conditions, the glass may become damp with condensation. Therefore, a thick mat board, called an "overthrow," is necessary to keep thg print a safe distance from the glass. The print shows through a window cut into the overthrow.

MATTING: Usually, a 4-ply mat board is sufficiently thick for the overthrow. If a print is particularly large or heavy, however, use a double overthrow.

Two overthrows in different colors enhance a print's appearance in addition to providing extra protection. The inner mat frames the print with color; the outer mat, with a larger window, shows enough of the inner mat to outline the print.

CHOOSING ACID-FREE MAT BOARDS: Use only good quality, acid-free mat boards, also called "museum boards," by their characteristic white edges. Poor quality boards usually have light gray or brown edges.

CUTTING THE BOARDS: Cut a window into the overthrow with a wider margin at the bottom than on the top and sides. If your print is signed and numbered, make the window generous enough to show off the markings.

MOUNTING: Tape overthrow to backboard along the top edges. Then, attach print's top edge to backboard with small pieces of tape, as shown in illustration (a). Use acid-free linen tape, rather than sticky, gummy tapes.

SEALING: Before assembling the frame, tape glass to backboard all around the edges. Although some experts feel that prints should "breathe," Mr. Warner recommends a tight seal to protect prints from pollution in the air.

Light your print with ordinary bulbs. Lighting equal to 150 watts, four feet away, is ideal.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Getting glass rings off furniture

DEAR HELOISE:

Someone set a glass down on one of my tables which left a water ring. I have no idea how to remove and would really appreciate any suggestions you might have to offer. It is an expensive table, made of solid wood, and I'm just heartsick. — Mrs. Carolyn Parks

+++

Don't despair... if it's a simple water ring and the wood has not blistered or buckled, try covering the spot with petroleum jelly and let it sit.

If the stain remains, add a little more jelly each day, wiping off the excess. The stain will be less noticeable and should gradually disappear. — Heloise

STAMP HOLDER

Dear Heloise: I cut out a square of clear plastic wrap a bit smaller than the back cover of my address book, then taped it securely with transparent sticky tape to make a pocket for stamps.

They are always convenient when needed. — Mrs R.A. Osborn

RECYCLE PANTYHOSE

Dear Heloise: Nylon net is great but so are pantyhose that have developed runners. Everyone has an abundance of them...

I cut off the leg with the runner, then wear two pairs of the panties, with one good hose on each leg. It's warmer in cold weather...

I use the leg I cut off which had the runner to clean my bathroom fixtures. Fantastic! When finished cleaning, it's tossed in the trash. No laundering to do. A great way to get one more use out of the pantyhose. — Jeanie Karklin

SHELF SAVER

Dear Heloise: Use shallow plastic trays on the shelves of the refrigerator to place the many small jars, bottles, etc., that somehow find their way to the back of the shelf.

When looking for a needed item, just pull the tray forward — about half-way is usually sufficient — and there it is!

No fuss, no muss and saves wear and tear on the shelf! — Mrs. L.B. Ward

KEEP IN TOUCH

Dear Heloise: Please let me tell you about the thoughtful way in which my daughter lets me share in the life of my little granddaughter, who is 1,000 miles away.

Each morning or at least twice each week, she records on a cassette the baby's cries, laughter and gurgles and dates each recording. At the end of the month, she sends them to me.

Sure does beat a three-minute phone call and I can listen any time I'm feeling lonely. They are "visits" to last a lifetime and ones I treasure immensely. — Mrs. L.J. McKay

JAR OPENING

Dear Heloise: If you can't open a screw top jar even after tapping around the edge of the lid or placing it under running hot water, try this:

Insert a thin-handled spoon or anything skinny between the lid edge and the jar and gently pry outward slightly.

The cap may then be twirled off so easily you'll be delighted. — Bobbs

THRIFTY TIP

Dear Heloise: I save the sheets of waxed paper from large cereal boxes for rolling out pie dough, placing the dough between two layers of paper.

The paper can be rolled around a cardboard tube and stored in a drawer. — Olive Korteheln

+++

Found a good way to recycle paper, plastic containers, bleach bottles? Send it to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000 San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't reply to your letter personally but she will feature the best hints received in her column.

Save in meal preparation

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Has continuous "kitchen duty" drained your energy and time banks? Maximize your efficiency with steps designed for saving time and energy — especially human energy — in meal preparation.

A good way to begin is by spending some time organizing your kitchen. Arrange storage and work areas so that equipment and supplies stay within easy reach. This will save steps across the kitchen each time you need something.

If you've been struggling along with prehistoric tools, maybe now is the time to replace them.

Proper equipment and utensils that get the job done — and knowing how to use them — will go a long way toward time and energy savings.

For instance, using a blender to grate and crumble bread and cheese takes less time than hand grating or grinding them.

Granted, new equipment does cost more money initially, but most items, if chosen wisely, will be one-time investments.

Another factor to consider is time spent in the kitchen, both busy time and watching time — the latter often wasted.

Instead of standing idle, use watching time to prepare other meals.

For example, make up juice for tomorrow's breakfast, sandwich fillings for tomorrow's packed lunches or salads and desserts for tomorrow's dinner.

In order to prepare as much food — with as little energy as possible — maximize time and energy — both human and fossil-fuel energy.

Prepare a roast large enough for two or three meals, or make two pies and freeze one. Prepare enough of your favorite casserole for two meals and freeze half. This way you've saved not only time but energy.

Be sure to estimate time needed to prepare each item in the meal. This will help you determine in advance the order of preparation.

One of the greatest enemies of efficiency is procrastination. Don't put off cleaning up, but instead save time by cleaning as you work. This will provide you with more clutter-free space.

Soak used utensils and equipment immediately or place in a dishwasher. Dried-on foods are difficult to remove from utensils, so avoid waiting to clean them.

Another way to save time is with the assembly-line approach — perform all tasks of one kind at one time. Do all trimming and peeling before starting to chop, or measure all dry ingredients before wet ones.

Menu-planning can also save the cook time and energy. Planning ahead helps determine the length of meal preparation, and it ensures efficient shopping.

Finally, to control the use of time and energy, be receptive to new ideas. Try new meals, recipes or even methods of cooking and baking that save time and energy. Also try out new products that are time savers.

Man skydives despite handicap

By STEPHANIE CHAVEZ
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PERRIS, Calif. — The novice skydiver had fallen 3,500 feet on the second jump of his life when he landed and let out a triumphant "Whoo-wee!" to the applause of 200 onlookers.

Chris Richards, 29, had it all wrong, according to the traditional technique. He hit the ground with his rump, not his feet. But that was what triggered the cheers.

The skydivers and others at Perris Valley Airport were watching the only legless skydiver in California, a man with long, muscular arms, a crushing handshake — and two 10-inch stumps.

He lost his legs while trying to hop a freight train eight years ago. It was moving too fast for him to keep his grip, and he fell beneath the moving steel wheels.

But "I didn't want to give up on the idea of doing exciting, thrilling, adventurous acts when I lost my legs," Richards, a draftsman, said. "Once you get the desire to experience something exhilarating, you don't want to give it up.

"The disability doesn't stop me. Skydiving is something I've always wanted to do. Gravity does its own thing, no matter how whole of a person you are."

After hitting the ground on the second jump of his skydiving career one recent afternoon, Richards immediately began preparing for another.

He sat on an elevated platform while his instructor, Bob Celaya, strapped him into his gear and recounted meeting Richards for dinner last December to discuss skydiving. The encounter, by Celaya's account, was Richards at his best.

"At the dinner table, I pulled the chair out of the way so he could move his wheelchair up to the table. Instead, he hopped out of the wheelchair and into the dining room chair and then scooted up to the table," Celaya said. "I knew right then he would be no problem."

Richards demands rowdy activities. He water skis by holding on to a board with one hand and the rope tow with the other and plays wheelchair basketball nearly every weekend.

"If I believe I can do it, I will," he said, "I believe I'm tough. I've always been a physical person. The fact that I can get hurt doesn't scare me. It's important for me to go beyond the 8-to-5 dull day-to-day thing and get a thrill."

Richards said that there is nothing unusual about his skydiving techique "except I have to have three guys yank me into the plane.

"It's cheaper for me too," he quipped. "I don't have to pay the boot rental fee."

Now Richards wheeled his wheelchair up to the 22 skydivers waiting for the plane that would take him to his third jump. Some jumpers gave him last-minute pep talks, a few approved with thumbs-up signs, one told Richards about a blind skydiver he knew — and others stared.

"Before I go up, it kind of bothers people to see a person with a disability like me," he said. "They say, 'Ah, shoot, I hope he doesn't break his back or something.' Then when they see me land and evething is OK, the tension disperses."

When the twin-engine plane landed, Celaya shouted for help, a couple of divers jumped into the plane and seconds later Richards was grabbed at the shoulder straps and lifted into the aircraft.

As the plane soared skyward, Richards positioned himself next to the open door, using his arms to balance his body on the floor. Celaya put his arm around Richards and shouted final instructions into his ear.

"He jumps out by himself," Celaya said. "People think I'm going to push him off or throw him out or something, but he does it himself. He pushes out of the plane with his hands."

Grasping the edges of the door, Richards shouted over the plane's engine about that "incredible adrenalin rush" that moves him to hurl out when Celaya yells, "Ready, go!"

He glared out and into the sky. He took deep breaths and when Celaya gave the jump command, he arched his back, raised his stumps off the floor and pushed himself out.

"You lose all sense of everything going on outside you. You are so intense when you jump," he said later.

When he hit the dirt landing field, a pickup truck was waiting to take him back to the airfield, where he received his second round of cheers for the day.

"How does it feel when you hit like that? Does it hurt?" one skydiver asked.

Richards answered that he felt "all tensed up" — not whether it hurt. He later said he would have a sore back for weeks.

"Hey, are you going to do it again? You are? Right on!" another man said.

"People are so nice out here it's embarrassing," Richards said. "It's nothing radical — just neat. I don't like to think about being a role model or inspiration. I'm just another guy enjoying the things this life offers. If I had the money, I would motor race."

Create your own dining area

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. I have moved into a new apartment with a fairly large living room but no dining room. I plan to set aside a dining space in the living room but need some ideas.

I like to have dinner guests on occasion so I can use my family's pretty dishes and accessories. How might I furnish this area to be used for dining but to double for other activities as well, perhaps reading and writing? — T.M.

A. You might literally create your own dining space with a series of etageres and consoles set cut from one wall in a free-standing arrangement. Within the dining space place a small but expandable table — one that would be good for writing and cards as well as dining.

Instead of traditional dining chairs, how about modified wing chairs — scaled down in size with casters for easy moving. The chairs, which could be covered in a handsome fabric, would be comfortable dining chairs and provide you with significant additional seating in your living room when entertaining there. The multi-purpose quality of such dining room chairs would allow you to use one or two of the chairs in a bedroom as well.

If you wish to add further delineation to the dining area, consider an area rug under the table. Eliminate the contrasting rug if you would prefer a more subtle blending of the dual space.

Q. What is the best way to hang a quilt without damaging it? I have just made on for my child's room and I want to hang it on his wall. — W.P.

A. One of the easiest ways is to hand-stitch a two-inch casing of muslin or other heavy cloth to the top edge of the quilts wrong side. After inserting a curtain rod through the casing, hang the rod on concealed hooks.

Stitching Witchery: Some days are like that

This should make your day — yesterday, when I had finished stitching the inseams and side seams of my new culottes, I found I had the crotch curve going from side to side rather than from front to back.

Please don't ask how I managed that. I really don't know.

So, I ripped and restitched. This time I had one leg inside out.

It wasn't my best day.

The trouble started — I think — with the fact that the right and wrong sides of the fabric were so difficult to tell apart. That, coupled, with my total lack of competence at the time, led to the confusion.

If you should ever work with such a fabric, here is a simple way to keep everything straight (and keep you from having to walk sideways in your culottes).

Before pattern pieces are removed from fabric, stick a 2- or 3-inch length of transparent tape to the wrong side of each piece. Leave tape in place as long as you need it, but do not press over it with your iron.

So often the right and wrong sides of a fabric are so similar, you really can't see the difference. But that's no big problem. Just decide which side you want to use, then stick with it.

Even though you may not be able to notice a difference while you are working, it could be noticeable on the finished garment.

NOTE: Do not use tape on fabric that could be harmed by its application.

IS YOUR SEX LIFE GOING UP IN SMOKE?
Science has long known that heavy smoking can cause stillbirth and miscarriage. Now there is suspicion that sexual performance may also be impaired.
Paul and Linda Conrad had been married six years, and since the third anniversary had been going from doctor to doctor in a vain attempt to discover why "we can't have a baby!"
Finally Paul agreed to be tested, despite a typical male ego. "I'm sure I'm not to blame!"
The Lansings were also childless, but their problem was somewhat different.
Patricia's first baby had been stillborn—a tiny full-term girl, barely weighing four pounds.
They desperately wanted another baby but feared "something might happen again!"
Although he was only 31, Ken Farrell was worried about his health.
His lists of complaints included shortness of breath, fatigue, edginess, occasional pains in the legs, chronic cough and a recent decline in his sexual capabilities.
"I keep reading about guys that are 70 and going strong," Ken confided to a doctor, "and I'm having trouble at 31!"
Three medical cases involving real people who seem to have little in common, except all have a problem that is sex related.
And, the prescription for each was identical—STOP SMOKING!

Spring is in the eye of the particular gardener

By HENRY MITCHELL
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Snowdrops are blooming, crocuses are up and so are some of the daffodils, and here and there the grass is quite green. Spring is here.

Of course, it depends what you mean by "spring."

For most gardeners, spring is when things at last start to grow again and snowdrops bloom and buds swell. The witch hazels are out, the new leaves of clematis are half an inch long.

For others, spring means no shirt and coffee in the summerhouse. They will never acknowledge spring until April 14. But for us, the die-hard gardeners, spring is already here, even though we may have snow, an ice storm or two and ground frosts for another six weeks.

This is a good time to be warned against sowing too many seeds indoors. I am already up to my ears in pots of sweet peas, and that is virtuous, since they go outdoors as soon as I can harden them off and as soon as the earth is diggable.

But it is not virtuous, it is merely folly, to fill the house with zinnias and tomatoes now. They go outdoors after May 10, and April 1 is soon enough to start them in flats or pots inside. If you sow them now and they sprout promptly, you have weeks and weeks to keep them going indoors before you can possibly set them out. During those weeks, they will not get enough sun; they will grow spindly and weak. So wait.

I should remind you that every year thousands of gardeners show up to buy clematis in April. They are always astonished to see clematis plants in cardboard cartons in the seed stores already sprouted. Usually the stems are a foot long and pale whitish-green, utterly tender, and obviously they will perish if the long, pale sprouts are set out then.

Check with the garden center you go to, to see when their clematis are due to arrive. Plant them out the instant the plants are received. They will not have any leaves on them, and all will be well. But once they have sprouted in warm stores, you cannot set them out until settled weather arrives. This means you take the sprouted pale clematis home and put them in pots, give them as much sun as you can indoors and set them out in May.

It is much better to plant them outdoors in the first place, before the pale, drawn shoots have sprouted. And you accomplish this either by planting them outdoors in March, as soon as you can get the dormant plants, or by planting them outdoors in November and January (from clematis specialists who have shipped them to you then).

All through the late fall and winter, the clematis looks as if it is dead. Gardeners often feel cheated by fall-shipped clematis. They do indeed look dead, and the worst thing is that the old leaves are hanging on, withered.

All the same, that is the best time to plant them.

Since gardeners rarely do anything really right or really well, it is all right to plant them in the spring. But either get them planted outdoors before the shoots lengthen, or else pot them up, get them growing well indoors, and plant them out in May.

Surely there are enough options here. But commonly the gardener waits till April, sets out spindly shoots that are killed back and complains for some years afterward that clematis are hard to grow.

Such a gardener has refused all three options and is angry that his own notion has not been a success.

There are several delightful vines that are annuals, such as morning glories, moon vines, cardinal vines, cup and saucer vines and so forth, that will not do anything until warm weather arrives. It may indeed be an advantage to start these things from seed indoors, but remember they may not be planted out until the second half of May.

So I would never plant any of them indoors before the first week of April. And often nothing much is gained by that, either. Often it works equally well or better to plant the seeds outdoors, where you intend for the vines to grow, on May 5. It is not merely a case of these vines' being killed by frost; it is the case that they will not begin to grow properly until settled warm weather arrives in May.

This is an ideal time to spread stable manure about the garden. People say they cannot get stable manure. I never said they could; merely that this is a great time to spread it about.

Horse manure often is a miracle on heavy soils such as those that most of us are lucky to be gardening in.

One year I used fowl manure on some Japanese irises. All but two of them died, and I suspect the manure. Probably fowl manure is alkaline, and Japanese irises will die if lime gets near them. I shall not use it again on them but shall stick to horse manure.

Incidentally, gardeners who see Japanese irises listed in catalogues for several dollars a plant should know they are as easy as radishes from seed. Plant the seed any time now. They will bloom a year from this June from seed planted this spring. Park Seed Co. offers a superb mixture, "Higo," that will give flowers as good as the named varieties listed in catalogues.

This year I am growing — or at least I have planted — a batch of iris seeds from the cross of two spuria irises, I. ochraleuca and I. monaurea. There was a time that I was on fire for spuria irises (which are like Spanish or Dutch irises such as you see now in florist shops, only with several flower on a stem about 3 or 4 feet high; the leaves growing from 2 to 4 feet high) and acquired anice collection of the newer varieties. None of them ever bloomed worth a hoot.

They really abhor being transplanted, I think.

The old wild or semi-wild spuria varieties I mentioned are favorites of mine. The first is white with a yellow patch on the falls, the other pale, soft yellow. But even they may require two full years of settling down before they bloom.

At least they do bloom, once they settle in, which is more than can be said for many of the fancier, newer sorts.

Garden questions

By TOM STEVENSON
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Q: I bought a living hemlock tree for Christmas, intending to plant it outdoors immediately after the holidays. The weather was bad, and I still have it in the house. Is it OK to keep it there until spring and then plant it?

A: In the fall, as days get shorter, most trees and shrubs in temperate and frigid areas became dormant in order to survive freezing weather. Before they can resume growth, they must experience a period of cold, usually below 45 degrees, for about 1,000 hours or more.

Q: We have a problem with cauliflower every spring. They get magnificient heads but do not bleach. We tried tying the leaves; the heads did bleach but rotted also.

A: The curds (heads) are made up of tight flower-bud clusters, and when hot weather sets in, they just go to seed, failing to develop a usuable head. Try Snow Crown, which matures in 53 days.

Q: All our lives we've had worms in the yard in the ground, big, fat ones — but we seldom see a worm in our garden. What has happened to them?

A: If the soil is suitable, it is difficult to keep the worms away. If it is badly compacted, there will not be any.

Q: Do you recommend putting coal ashes on the garden?

A: Wood ashes have some value as a liming material; coal ashes have little or no value.

Q: I try every spring to grow parsley from seed, and the see never come up. What do they need?

A: Parsley seed are slow to germinate, so be patient with them. Plant them off to one side and keep them moist but not soggy wet. A different way is to plant the seed indoors in Jiffy-7s, and when they sprout, plant them, pot and all, outdoors. Planted outdoors, seed should be covered to a depth of about one-fourth inch.

Q: We have two holly trees. They have grown tall instead of bushing out. Can we cut off the tops to make them bush out?

A: American holly can be grown as a shrub and used for hedge plants at almost any height, but this training should start early when they are quite small. To induce branches down near the ground, it will be necessary to cut back almost to that point. To keep on getting branches lower down, it may be nessary to cut back again and again.

Grow better asparagus

By TOM STEVENSON
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Home-grown asparagus, cooked soon after harvest, has a high-quality flavor, much superior to store-bought asparagus. Planted and taken care of properly, it may provide food of the gods for 15 or 20 years and even longer. Otherwise, it can be a disappointment.

A serving of 4 spears (60 grams) contains just 10 calories, 1 gram of protein, 2 grams of carbohydrates and only traces of fat, the specialists say.

Planted as early as possible in the spring, a few spears can be harvested the following spring. Cutting too much soon after planting, or extending the cutting season too late into summer, limits the amount of food reserves that can be accumulated in the roots, reducing the following year's crop.

Most asparagus strains grown in the United States are seedling populations selected from the Martha Washington variety. Either seed or roots can be purchased and planted. Roots are by far the best; they cost very little, and you get a crop two years sooner.

The underground asparagus system consists of an extensive network of fleshy roots with small feeder roots that absorb water and nutrients.

Through photosynthesis, the mature plant produces carbohydrates and synthesizes other essential nutrients that are translocated to the storage roots. The stored reserves supply the energy required to produce the spears during the following growing season.

For this reason, it is important to protect the fern-like foliage from injury, and to prevent weeds from competing for moisture and nutrients.

Asparagus should be planted where it will not have to contend with the roots or the shade cast by a tree. One way to get started, if the soil is badly compacted, is to dig it out to a depth of 6 to 18 inches, haul it away and bring in good top soil.

But unless your soil contains too much rubble, your best bet probably is to work toward improving it. It is fantastic how much soil can be improved by working organic matter into it. This animal or vegetable matter is called humus after it becomes partially decomposed, and the improved condition remains long after the organic matter has disappeared.

Organic matter includes barnyard manure, peat moss, rotted leaves, compost and similar materials. A 3-inch layer of peat with some lime and fertilizer mixed with the top 10 inches of soil will get you off to a good start.

Plant roots take in oxygen and give off carbon dioxide. The oxygen has to come down to the roots from the air above the soil. The carbon dioxide has to get out the same way.

Air must move through the spaces or pores between soil particles. The smaller the particles, the slower the air moves. If the particles are too small, plant roots suffer from lack of oxygen and to much carbon dioxide. The pores must be large enough to let excess water pass through.

Air moves very slowly in a water-soaked soil. If water fills all the pores for quite a while after a heavy rain, the roots may suffer severe damage or even be killed.

Organic matter is the best soil conditioner. It helps unite fine clay particles into larger ones and increases the size of channels through the soil.

Study shows differences

A major Johns Hopkins University study shows sex differences in mathematical ability and suggests that differences in mental functioning between males and females are not due to social, cultural and environmental influences.

It also tends to confirm that males excel in numerical reasoning and spatial judgment while females are superior in verbal fluency and rote memory.

Eroding topsoil

Every year, the United States loses about 5.5 billion tons of topsoil. Enough topsoil erodes into the Mississippi River alone each year to build an island a mile long, a fourth of a mile wide and 200 feet high.

Danielle Steel.

So, who's Danielle Steel?

She's a 34-year-old San Franciscan who, over the past 12 years, has managed to write 21 novels and get 14 published. Her books now are selling in 14 countries.

She's a mother of four who never learned to cook. But she doesn't need to be good in the kitchen. She's good at the typewriter. For example, her last paperback, "A Perfect Stranger," was published by Dell in February with 1.7 million copies in the first printing.

Her first manuscript, composed at 22, was single-spaced with no paragraph indentations and little punctuation.

An agent, she remembers, "told me to go home and learn how to cook. I never did learn how to cook."

Now, scads of heroines later, she says she can send her manuscripts in "with applesauce all over them" and no one complains.

Romantic characters of beauty and allure become drug addicts, break hearts and die on Ms. Steel's typewriter. Yet, she says none of her books are romance novels and none are written by formula.

"I think of romance novels as kind of bodice-rippers," Ms. Steel says, sipping ice water. "The publisher pushed them as that and it worked. I like to think of them as contemporary novels."

Outlines for new books take about six months, she says, and the balance of the year is spent writing a first and final draft.

When a book reaches first-draft stage, Ms. Steel works 18 to 20 hours a day. At the start, she produces five to 10 pages a day. When she nears the end, she's churning out 60 to 70 pages a day.

"I am always pretty high energy," she says. "That's polite for compulsive."

When she's not writing a first draft, she works on several books at a time, reading galleys of one, outlining another, writing a final draft of still another. She juggled four novels that way last year.

One of them, "Now and Forever," currently is being filmed by Interplanetary Productions in Australia.

Dell published her first hardcover, "Remembrance," late last year. "Remembrance," formula romance or not, is syrupy.

Witness the following: "How could he love a girl he barely knew? And yet, he knew, as they sat huddled in the moonlight, that he did, and as she felt his arms around her Serena knew it too. He kissed her again then, long and hard and with passion and hunger."

Despite the saccharine, Ms. Steele says her work follows no formula.

"Unless people work by formula, which I don't, I think most authors will tell you they have no idea how it happens, why it's a success." she says. "I think it's a very ephemeral thing.

"When you do the first book, everybody says you can write one. But can you do it again?

"I have graduated. People used to tell me that their cleaning ladies loved my book ... their secretaries loved my book. Three years ago, at a party, some man I didn't know came up and whispered in my ear that he had read my books."

By 1981, she says, the praise from men was open — a seemingly long initiation for a woman who once considered being a fashion designer.

"I turned 22 that summer," she says, remembering the start of her writing career. "It was a stage when you are not quite sure what you are going to be when you grow up.

"Agatha Christie wrote until she was 94. I want to write until I am 95."

Have a better body at 40 than 20

By TRISHA YEAGER
Copley News Service

Anyone who saw Jane Fonda in "On Golden Pond" is no doubt convinced that it is possible to have a great body after 40.

But, you may be thinking, she has access to the best coaches and equipment that money can buy.

This may be true. Still, it's possible to achieve excellent results without such things. I have. So have many other people I know.

Although I weigh about the same as I did 20 years, I have a firmer and more shapely body today. Why? Because I work at sculpting it according to how I want it to look. When I was 20, I didn't realize I had that option; I thought I was stuck with the body I was born with.

Here's the method I use.

1. Start with an image of how you want to look, and think you can look. Draw it on paper, or cut out pictures of people whose bodies represent your ideal. (Stay within the limits of your height and bone structure.) Study the drawing or pictures often, imagining yourself looking like that, too. By seeing yourself clearly and regularly in a new body shape, you will unconsciously begin to make the adjustments necessary to make this new body a reality.

2. Develop a workable plan. You can devise your own program or join an organized exercise class. Start with 25 minutes a day, three times a week, increasing this as your fitness level grows. My current exercise regime consists of two half-hour sessions per day, five days a week. One session is stretching and toning with weights; the other is aerobic (running, swimming, dancing, skating, or jumping rope). Remember: the more you exercise, the more you will want to.

3. Follow your plan, resisting the obstacles (boredom, discouragement, impatience, rationalization and lack of discipline) until you reach your goal. This is a good opportunity to practice the art of choice-making!

Make your own wrist and ankle weights: If you can sew, you can make a set of weights that can be used for either wrists or ankles. I made mine in under an hour for less than $7.

Here's how. Cut poplin or other heavy fabric into two strips measuring 5½ inches by your wrist size plus seven inches. Fold strip lengthwise and stitch ends ⅛ inch from edge. Turn and press. Sew 2x3½ inch strip of Velcro to one end through one thickness of fabric. Sew other half of Velcro to opposite end, opposite side of fabric, single thickness. (So that Velcro will attach when fabric is wrapped around wrist or ankle.)

Then, starting 1½ inches from end, make six seams, 1¾ inches apart, through double thickness of fabric. Repeat with other strip of fabric.

Then insert five five-ounce lead weights into the pockets of each strip. You can buy these weights in the fishing department of sporting goods or drug stores; they look like small donuts with the holes still in. Close top with seam binding or stitching.

Simple exercises with weights: To firm arms and chest, attach weights to wrists, and extend arms outward. Make small, rapid circles first in one direction, then the other. Rest, and repeat.

To firm hips, thighs and calves, attach weights to ankles. Do leg raises in sitting position, and on hands and knees to the back and side. Alternate with flexed foot and with toes pointed. Start with one set of 10 on each leg and work up to several sets.

Dear Trisha: I am 23 and I want to start now to avoid the ravages of old age. What do I have to watch out for and what can I do to prevent it? — W.P.

Dear W.P.: You're smart to begin early; prevention is easier than remedy. The effects of overindulging and under-exercising generally show up in the tummy, hip and thigh areas, waist, and upper arms where fat accumulates and muscles get flabby. Such changes can affect the health (back problems, for instance) as well as appearance.

Over the next four weeks, I will devote a column sculpting each of these areas.

Please send your questions about beauty to Trisha Yeager, P.O. Box 1017, Novato, CA 94948. Questions of general interest will be answered in this column. Volume of mail prohibits individual replies.

Galella cited for contempt of court

Onassis

NEW YORK (AP) — Ronald Galella was the only American photographer "unchecked by inner prohibitions" as he sought out Jacqueline Onassis and her daughter for celebrity photos, said a judge who cited him for contempt of court.

Galella faces possible fines or confinement after U.S. District Judge Irving Ben Cooper concluded Tuesday that Galella violated a 1975 order barring him from annoying Mrs. Onassis and Caroline Kennedy.

Galella, of Yonkers, N.Y., was ordered by Cooper in 1975 to keep a distance of 25 feet from Mrs. Onassis and 30 feet from Miss Kennedy and to avoid harassing them.

Mrs. Onassis and her daughter said during a hearing in December that Galella had crowded them while taking pictures. Testifying that Galella annoyed her and Miss Kennedy on Martha's Vineyard last fall on Martha's Vineyard last fall, Mrs. Onassis said she was "despairing in a way because I thought Galella was going to start all over again with me and my child."

"Galella profited by being the only American paparazzo," Cooper said, using a term coined to describe aggressive European celebrity photographers.

"He had the field to himself; no one else was willing to harass, torment and victimize a subject,"the judge. "He alone was unchecked by inner prohibitions."

Cooper said he will hold another hearing to determine penalties.

Carter, 32, had been considering a race for the 3rd District congressional seat being vacated this year by U.S. Rep. Jack Brinkley, D-Columbus.

"It has been one of my long time ambitions to serve in Congress, and I have received encouragement from many," Carter said Tuesday.

Frank new president of NBC News

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The new president of NBC News, Reuven Frank, says he anticipates no immediate changes in structure of style in the network's news operations.

"I don't think things will look any different right off the bat," Frank said Tuesday, shortly after Robert Mulholland, NBC's president, made the appointment official. "I've still got a lot of learning to do.

"The thing about NBC News," said Frank, who begins his second tenure as president, "is that there is nothing urgent — no real emergencies to deal with."

Frank ran the division 1968-73.

NBC's "Nightly News" is second to CBS' "Evening News" as Frank takes charge, with the network's "Today" running neck-and-neck with ABC's "Good Morning America." Only "NBC Magazine" has failed to keep up with the competition — "60 Minutes" on CBS and ABC's "20-20."

Frank, the man credited with teaming Chet Huntley and David Brinkley as evening news anchormen in 1956, succeeds William J. Small, who resigned Friday, reportedly under pressure.

Small, a former CBS News executive, took the job at NBC in September 1979. He later hired several middle-level news executives away from CBS News, and that policy reportedly contributed to his departure.

Frank, 61, will be joined in the front office by Tom Pettit, an NBC News correspondent since 1959. "I'll tell Pettit what to do, and he'll figure out how to do it," Frank quipped shortly after Mulholland announced his appointment to affiliaites.

Small's resignation caught NBC employees and the industry in general by surprise, and Frank said he was shocked when he was offered the job. "I was, for the first time in my life, speechless," he said.

Both Frank and Pettit reportedly were given three-year contracts, and Mulholland told affiliates, "The management of our news division is now firmly in place for the years ahead."

Frank joined NBC News in 1950 and, in organizing the network's political convention coverage six years later, teamed Huntley and Brinkley as co-anchors. The two broadcast news pioneers anchored the first "Huntley-Brinkley Report" nightly newscast Oct. 29, 1956, with Frank as producer.

He has been a senior executive produce since voluntarily stepping down as president in 1973. His credits include the acclaimed late-night "Weekend" magazine show, as well as several documentaries, notably "If Japan Can...Why Can't We?" on American productivity, broadcast in 1980.

A 90-minute documentary called "The Tunnel," produced by Frank and broacast Dec. 10, 1962, won three Emmy awards, and is the only news program ever to have been honored with an Emmy as the year's best production.

Pettit spent more than 10 years as an NBC correspondent in Los Angeles before moving to Washington in 1975. He has been the network's Senate correspondent since January 1979.

Carson jokes about his arrest

By YARDENA ARAR
Associated Press Writer

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — A nervous but game Johnny Carson joked about his drunken driving case in his first "Tonight Show" monologue since his arrest, but later told his late-night television viewers "you will never see me do that again."

Carson

"I wish I could explain to all of you that I was doing research for my new special called 'Johnny Goes Home to the Slammer,'" the 56-year-old comedian joked Tuesday in a reference to his recent television special about returning to his hometown in Nebraska.

Carson was accompanied onstage for the taping of his show by an actor dressed in a police officer's uniform. The same actor later ushered the host off at the end of the show.

Carson, who earlier in the day was charged with two misdemeanor counts and one infraction stemming from his arrest last Saturday, devoted the first few minutes of his standup routine to the incident.

"You don't know how nice that sounds," he told the cheering studio audience. "Would you like to be my character witnesses?

"For you people watching this show at home right now, please do not adjust the color on your set — it is just me blushing."

"What luck I have — my lawyer is F. Lee Bailey," Carson added later, referring to the prominent criminal attorney who also faces drunken driving charges. Bailey pleaded innocent to the charges Monday in San Francisco.

Despite his bravado, Carson appeared somewhat flustered, and he forgot his usual announcement of the night's guests at the end of the monologue.

Off camera, he thanked the studio audience for "not making me feel that I murdered someone."

After the monologue and before his first guest appeared, Carson spoke more seriously about his arrest, saying "it would be probably impossible for me to do this whole show tonight without saying something about what has happened."

He said that he was stopped by a police officer because he did not have a current license plate sticker about two blocks from a Beverly Hills restaurant where he and his wife Joanna had just finished dining with friends.

"Subsequent to that I complied with every request made by the police, which included a test to determine whether too much wine may have been consumed with our dinner," Carson said.

"That's really all the further I want to go with it, except to say that I regret the incident, and I'll tell you one thing — you will never see me do that again."

A complaint filed by Los Angeles Deputy District Attorney Philip Wynn accused Carson of driving under the influence of alcohol, driving with a blood alcohol level of .16 percent, and the infraction of driving without a license in his possession.

An arraignment was set for March 23 in Beverly Hills Municipal Court, where Carson's lawyer can appear for him.

For first-time offenders, the misdemeanor counts carry a mandatory penalty of either at least two days in jail or a 90-day restriction whereby the offender can only drive to and from work. In either case there are also fines ranging from $375 to $500 and a requirement to attend an alcohol education class.

The infraction is punishable by a $50 fine.

Wynn said Carson was not charged for the invalid license plate sticker because it appeared the updated sticker, which a car dealer had failed to transfer to the entertainer, "would be forthcoming."

Union leaders to suggest escrow accounts for New York Daily News employees

NEW YORK (AP) — Union leaders representing 3,800 craft workers of the New York Daily News will recommend to their members a proposal to set up separate escrow accounts for pay increases due March 31.

The raises, averaging $36-a-week per employee, would be channelled into high-interest yielding accounts under the plan.

George E. McDonald, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council, said the union leaders agreed unanimously at a 2½-hour meeting Tuesday to recommend the plan to their memberships.

"This is no giveback," said labor-lawyer Theodore W. Kheel, who set up the plan. He explained the pay raises would still be paid by The News, but the funds would be available to help keep the nation's largest general-circulation daily from going out of business.

Kheel estimated that through escrow funds, as much as $15 million could become available in the next year to help The News in ways to be determined later.

The leaders of the 10 craft unions under Allied and the head of the independent Newspaper Deliverers Union elected to set up 11 escrow funds — one for each union — rather than a single fund.

The escrow plan proposed by the unions does not now apply to a cost-of-living increase due in June.

The proposal would be a further effort by employees to help keep the major daily publishing. The parent Chicago-based Tribune Co. put the Daily News up for sale last Dec. 18. Since then, the unions have sought to help either the current or the new owner to avoid the alternative of the paper's shutdown.

Kheel, a veteran private mediator serving as adviser to Allied, said that a News Employees Stock Ownership Plan he set up for the unions was intended only as "a buyer of last resort."

The local Board of civil Authority opened ballot boxes after each vote at Tuesday's town meeting in Wolcott, Vt., and counted the paper ballots. Vermont towns overwhelmingly adopted a resolution calling for a nuclear arms freeze.

Nuclear vote margin surprises organizer

PUTNEY, Vt. (AP) — Vermont residents have used their annual town meetings to speak out against nuclear weapons by a margin that surprised even an organizer of the disarmament drive.

"It's a giant step forward," organizer David McCauley said early today, adding that the vote for disarmament from 146 of the 175 towns that considered the issue was a bigger win than he expected.

U.S. Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., hailed the vote, saying, "I have never been more proud to represent Vermont than I am today."

But one of the leading opponents of the resolution, Republican State Sen. Madeline Harwood, expressed disappointment.

"This is very threatening to me," said Ms. Harwood, who had waged a letter-writing campaign against the effort and called it "communist propaganda."

The resolution, discussed in town halls and schoolhouses throughout Vermont, calls for an immediate freeze on the manufacture, testing and deployment of nuclear weapons and the missiles and bombers that deliver them.

It asks the Legislature to ask Vermont's congressional delegation to bring before the full U.S. Congress a request that President Reagan and the Soviet Union join in a moratorium on nuclear weapons. McCauley said a resolution to that effect would be introduced in in the Legislature this week.

Officials said 175 of Vermont's 246 communities put the issue on their town meeting agendas. Tallies today showed 146 communities supported the freeze, 20 opposed it and nine tabled action.

"If the Reagan administration is listening at all, it should listen to this," said McCauley, Vermont field secretary of the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization. "It is not easy to dismiss what's happening in Vermont as the strident voice of a few hard-core peaceniks."

Organizers said the battle against nuclear proliferation will move to other New England town meetings next week. Forty New Hampshire communities and between 75 and 100 Maine towns are to debate resolutions similar to those approved in Vermont.

The New England votes are the first step in an effort to make nuclear stockpiling an issue in at least half of the nation's 435 congressional races this November.

More than 400,000 signatures have been gathered in California, apparently enough to put the nuclear question to a statewide vote this fall. Efforts are under way to generate November referenda in Michigan, New Jersey and Delaware, too.

The Vermont votes Monday and Tuesday were sandwiched between lively debates on local budgets, patching potholes and electing cemetary commissioners.

In some communities, the nuclear question was approved without debate or dissent; in others, it generated considerable discussion.

In Ludlow, one of those communities voting against the resolution, opponents argued that passage would be a sign of weakness that would be disrespectful to those who had fought in past wars.

Isaac Patch, a retired foreign service officer now living in Weston, urged approval of the resolution as a way to "tell the world that we recognize the seriousness of the nuclear arms race."

Waste disposal firm sues Ogg

HOUSTON (AP) — State Sen. Jack Ogg denounced as "hogwash, garbage" a $50.2 million lawsuit filed by a waste disposal firm. He called the suit a political manuever to undermine his campaign for Texas attorney general.

Conservation Management Inc. filed the suit Tuesday against Ogg, claiming the legislator used his position to block its efforts to develop a landfill west of Houston.

Also named in the suit were Browning Ferris Industries; Norman Meyers, the company's executive vice president; and Jack Carmichael, head of the Texas Department of Health solid-waste division.

The suit was filed under the federal anti-racketeering law, and the Houston-based firm could win triple damages, or $150.6 million, if a favorable judgment is returned.

The suit said the Conservation Management in October 1977 sought a landfill permit from the Health Department and purchased a 982-acre tract for the landfill a year later.

Ogg pressured Carmichael to block the permit and in April 1980, Carmichael recommended the permit be denied, the suit said.

The suit accused Browning-Ferris of paying $25,000 to Ogg for his assistance in defeating the landfill application.

Ogg receives a percentage of all fees paid to Browning-Ferris for disposing of garbage because the senator sold the firm a permit to operate a landfill, the suit charged.

Garbage collected in Houston is dumped at Browning-Ferris landfills.

The suit contends Ogg has a financial relationship with Browning-Ferris and had a stake in preventing competiton.

Jamail said Ogg has collected $200,000 and stands to get an additional $300,000 from Browning-Ferris through the agreement.

In a prepared statement, Ogg called the suit "hogwash, garbage" and claimed it was a calculated tactic to harm his campaign.

Don Fitch, a Browning-Ferris spokesman, acknowledged the company retained Ogg as an attorney and paid him "in connection with an unrelated transaction" but denied there were any improper payments.

Browning-Ferris, primarily engaged in waste disposal, has 150 operations in the United States and Canada and employs 8,400 people.

Socialist mayor gets vote of confidence

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Voters in Vermont's largest city gave their socialist mayor a new power base along with a rousing vote of confidence, tossing out a coalition of conservative Democrats that had controlled the Board of Aldermen for three decades.

"This is the beginning of a government by the people of Burlington," an exhausted but exuberant Mayor Bernard Sanders said Tuesday after three of his followers won election to the board. "This is a mandate."

In a way, Sanders said, Tuesday's vote was more significant than his own dramatic election one year ago.

"Then, I was an outsider campaigning against the things that were happening here," said the 40-year-old Brooklyn, N.Y.-born mayor. "This time, I think people were voting for something, a new way of governing the city. Before, people were saying the old way wouldn't work. Now they're saying they think the new way will."

University of Vermont psychology professor Richard Musty unseated former Board President Joyce Desautels, who had warned that the "fungus of socialism" was spreading.

In the city's Old North End, home to many of Burlington's low-income residents, neighborhood organizer Zoe Breiner toppled Democratic incumbent Russell Niquette, an attorney.

And youth counselor Gary DeCarolis shouldered aside Democrat Ronald Paquette, a cousin of the longtime mayor who went down to defeat at Sanders' hands last March.

Besides the three seats won by Sanders' forces, Republicans picked up two seats. Seven seats were up for grabs on the 13-member board, and two run-offs were slated.

"SURPRISED? I guess," said the ousted Niquette, gathering with glum fellow Democrats as the results came in.

At City Hall, Sanders' supporters who gathered to hear the results, appeared delighted when they won one seat, incredulous when they garnered a second, and nearly delirious when they captured a third, whooping and hugging one another.

"We're going to show that government can work," said a hoarse Sanders. "Government in America doesn't work because it is controlled by a few wealthy people. This is going to be a government by the people, not the ruling class."

After taking office last year, Sanders said he was rendered nearly powerless because aldermen could block his every move.

The board fired his secretary, rejected his appointees for top city posts, fought him in court and scoffed as his proposals.

Sanders had only two allies on the board — a feisty septuagenarian and a young Citizens Party activist who had been backed by the same coalition of students, union activists, neighborhood organizers and poor people that had helped him capture the mayor's office.

This year Sanders mounted an all-out offensive to win control of the board. He campaigned feverishly in favor of half a dozen aldermanic candidates, all of them running as either independents like himself or on the leftist Citizens Party ticket.

In addition to Tuesday's victory, Sanders has been buoyed in recent weeks by a victory in the Vermont Legislature and another in the courts, which he said foreshadowed a strong showing by his backers.

Court axes ballot access law

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Michigan's minor political parties won't have to worry about getting a certain number of primary votes to field candidates in this year's general election following a ruling by the state Supreme Court.

The high court has thrown out rules requiring candidates to get a chunk of the primary vote in order to get on the general ballot.

The high court's 5-2 ruling Monday came down on the side of the Socialist Workers' Party, which said its candidates were unreasonably denied access to Michigan's 1980 general election ballot.

In a 16-page opinion, the court struck down a requirement that "new" political parties must pull three-tenths of one percent of the total votes cast in the August primary election to earn a spot on the November ballot.

Andrew Walden of Detroit, one of the party's candidates for the city school board, said the restriction violated the First and 14th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution and a clause of the Michigan Constitution affording "equal protection" of laws to all.

Chaps alone on empty campus

The Midland College campus is so deserted, you'd think it was Sunday morning...only there aren't even the joggers and walkers on this warm, dreary day you find on the Sabbath.

The lone pocket of activity is the small knot of the basketball players, half clad in green and half in gold, on the light-bathed floor of the cavernous, hauntingly empty Al Langford Coliseum, where not even an echo is left from a tumultuous season not long over.

Coach Jerry Stone is putting his WJCC champion Chaparrals through a time-marking workout before the long-awaited, anticipated Region V junior college basketball tournament at Big Spring, which begins today with two afternoon "playoff" at Dorothy Garrett Coliseum.

"WE'LL WORK out Wednesday morning so I can go over and scout the two afternoon games," says Stone, whose Chaps play the winner of the 2 p.m. Hill County-Clarendon at 7 p.m. Thursday. Winner of the Howard College-Cisco game today will face Northern Conference champion McLennan at 9 p.m. Thursday.

Stone admits this has been a tough week to adjust to with MC in the midst of spring break, therefore, no classes and no cafeteria for meals. "It's strange. We've had two games a week all season, one on the road, so it seems like we're always playing basketball. Then, all of a sudden, Wham! It's all over. All I told them was to keep busy. Go out to the mall. Do something."

THE CHAPS unexpectedly find themselves in the same situation last year's 30-3 team was in going into the Regional. Unexpectedly, because MC didn't seem destined to be going into the tournament as the WJCC champion back in the season's early days when Amarillo College was an all-conquering juggernaut.

Still, Stone doesn't feel this team is carrying the pressure burden of last year's team, which lost in the finals to Cooke County, a team that didn't make it this year.

"We're not going into this with any expectations except from game-to-game," says Stone, who really doesn't resemble Don Knotts when he assures that he is not nervous.

ALTHOUGH MC lost four games early in the year and at one point languished at 4-4, the team came on to win the WJCC with a better record than the '81 club, which spent six weeks ranked as the nation's No. 1 team.

From Stone's standpoint this club "has the best disposition of any team I've coached at Midland College. We want to win, but we haven't made that big a deal of it. Practice has been a learning experience for us all year long...we're still working on fundamentals."

HOW DOES this year's 27-4, never nationally-ranked club compare with last year's glamor team?

Stone believes last year's team hit a plateau and didn't improve that much as the season progressed. "We hit a certain level in January and never got off it. With last year's team the national ranking put pressure on the team and it was constantly trying to perform up its reputation. This year's team just came to play.

"No," Stone continues, "our present situtation doesn't surprise me now. In December it would have, but this is a team that improved continually as the season progressed."

Although the series of narrow escapes in January wore their fans to a frazzle, Stone believes they made the Chaparrals a good team. "It built up their confidence, especially that overtime win over Western at Snyder when they had a chance to win with two free throws and missed both and the road wins at Amarillo and Frank Phillips."

"Puntus Wilson is a more consistent and confident player than he was last year and I think that taste he got last year makes him want Regional even more this year."

But Wilson and Lance McCain were proven talents. The progress of such freshmen as 6-6 Chester Smith, 5-6 Spud Webb and Jerome Crowe have made this a championship team.

"Spud has always been a great athlete," Stone notes, "But he now knows how to rn a team and feed the ball from the floor instead of jumping up a lot, as he was doing early in the year."

Overall, it's a team that has faith and confidence in one another. "When they come down court they will hit anybody with a pass, without thinking 'if I throw it to him he'll just miss the shot. I may as well shoot,'"

"If we don't get in foul trouble or get somebody hurt, I think we have as much of a chance to win it as anybody in the tournament," says Stone. "Last year we didn't worry about foul trouble so much."

If the Chaps get by their Thursday test, they will play the Frank Phillips-Ranger winner in the 9 p.m. game of Friday's semifinals.

SWC coaches select All-Conference Team

Rice's Ricky Pierce has been named The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Year and Texas Tech's Jeff Taylor the Defensive Player of the Year on the 1981-82 All-Southwest Conference Basketball team as selected by the league's coaches

Jim Killingsworth, who guided Texas Christian to a fourth-place finish, highest for the Horned Frogs in a decade, was named by his peers as the Coach of the Year.

The All-SWC first team included Pierce, Baylor's Terry Teagle, Arkansas' Scott Hastings, Houston's Rob Williams and Texas' LaSalle Thompson. All five were repeaters from last year.

The Newcomer of the Year was TCU forward Doug Arnold while the Freshman of the Year was Southern Methodist's Larry Davis.

Taylor led an All-SWC second team that included Arnold, Darrell Browder of TCU, Claude Riley of Texas A&M and Clyde Drexler of Houston.

The third team included Arkansas' Darrell Walker, Tech's Clarence Swannegan, Texas A&M's Reggie Roberts, Houston's Larry Micheaux, and SMU's Davis.

The All-Newcomer team included Tyron Nalls of Texas A&M, Arnold, Davis, Houston's Akeem Olajuwon, and Texas' Dennard Holmes.

On the first team, Thompson and Williams are juniors who will return next year.

Pierce was the second leading scorer in the nation with 27 points per game while Thompson led the nation in rebounding with an average of 14 caroms per game.

Texas-Arlington, McNeese place two on All-SLC Team

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Texas-Arlington and McNeese State finished third and fourth in the Southland Conference basketball race this season, but each school placed two players on the league's all-conference team, announced Tuesday.

Mavericks Al Culton and Ralph McPherson joined Joe Dumars and Fred Chaffould of McNeese on the all-star team, along with Alford Turner of Southwestern Louisiana.

There were no unanimous choices on the squad chosen in a vote by sports reporters, but Culton, McPherson, Dumars and Turner were just one vote short of that honor.

Southwestern Louisiana and Lamar, the one-two finishers in the final league standings, were not represented on the first team all-star squad.

The five first-team members were the top five scorers in the Southland Conference this season. Dumars led the league with an 18.11 average, followed by McPherson's 18.08, Culton's 18.0, Turner at 17.4 and Caffould at 16.3.

Dumars is the first freshman to make the first team in four years.

'Machine Gun' Kelly, Norris headline All-SWAC Team

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Texas Southern's Harry "Machine Gun" Kelly, the nation's top scorer with 30.5 points per game, and No. 5 rebounder Audie Norris of Jackson State headline the 1982 All-Southwestern Athletic Conference basketball team announced here Tuesday.

Kelly, a 6-7 junior forward, has scored 2,161 points in three seasons and is averaging 11.1 rebounds per game. Tied for the league's outstanding player last season, he was nearly the unanimous MVP choice this season.

Kelly is complemented by Norris, who scores 17 points per game to go with his 13.2 rebounding average.

Joining Kelly and Norris on the first team, with their scoring averages in parentheses, were Henry Ellis (16.1) of Mississippi Valley State, Kenneth Simpson (18.7) of Grambling State and Alkbert Irving (16.2) of Alcorn State.

Only three members were named to the second team — Doinald Seals (14.2) of Jackson State, Roosevelt Pritchett (11.2) of Mississippi Valley State and Arnold Scott (13.6) of Southern University, which hosts the SWAC tournament here Thursday through Saturday.

Alcorn's Eddie Archie was named freshman of the year and his coach, Dave Whitney, was named coach of the year.

Sears' jumper gives Andrews 45-44 victory

LUBBOCK—Scott Sears' 23-foot jump shot with 45 seconds left gave the Andrews Mustangs a 45-44 bidistrict basketball victory over Borger here Tuesday night as the Ponies rallied to overcome a six-point deficit going into the fourth period.

Andrews got a 16 point performance from Mike Murry while Sears and Keith Brooks each scored 10 as the Mustangs ended the notorious bidistrict jinx that has seen Andrews teams lose in the first round of state playoffs in football the last two seasons, and girls basketball this year.

The victory gives the state's No.1 ranked 4A team a 31-2 record heading into second round play against Cleburne, a bidistrict winner over Wichita Falls Hirschi.

IN OTHER bidistrict action Tuesday, Denton expelled District 5-5A champion Abilene, 54-52, at Stephenville as Tim Duryea led the 6-5A champs with 18 points. Eastland edged Reagan County in overtime, 60-58, in a Class AA bidistrict at Snyder and Denver City paddled Kermit, 91-65, in an AAA game at Seminole.

Denton's win sends the Broncos to the Region I tournament in Midland Friday and Saturday. Don Duryea had 28 and Joe Jackson and Fred Franklin 12 each to pace Denton.

Gary Nelson scored 25 and Rodney Curtis 20 to lead Denver City. Kermit, which finished 26-5, got 30 points out of Barry Kimball.

Reagan, which finished 19-11, led 32-21 at half, but Corlis Sanders' basket with three seconds left in overtime

Rebels drop season-opener to Coronado

LUBBOCK — The Midland Lee Rebels opened their 1982 baseball schedule on a sour note Tuesday as they dropped a 9-5 decision to the Lubbock Coronado Mustangs here Tuesday.

The Rebels built up a 5-2 lead after two on the strength of a Barry Blackwell double only to see Coronado wipe it out in the bottom of the third when Jay Lindstrom connected for a two-run homer followed by four singles that produced three more runs.

The Mustangs added two insurance runs in the fifth inning on a Gary Beard two-run homer.

Richard Smith went six innings to claim the victory for Coronado with Brad Marshall pitching relief. For Lee, Kerry Robertson suffered the loss with Chris Parker relieving in the third and Craig Ray in the fourth.

The victory upped Coronado's record 2-0 on the season while the Rebels fell to 0-1.

Lee's next game will be on Friday when the Rebels travel to Odessa to compete in the Pre-District Tournament.

Tulsa dumps Creighton in MVC play

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

Tulsa Coach Nolan Richardson liked what he saw in the first round of the Missouri Valley Conference tournament. And if his Golden Hurricane continues to play as it did against Creighton, he might be enjoying himself right through the NCAA basketball tournament.

Richardson used all 13 of his players Tuesday night as No. 10 Tulsa whipped Creighton 106-81. The Golden Hurricane, 22-5, advanced to the MVC semifinals at home against New Mexico State Thursday night.

"We need to play with this type of intensity throughout the tournament. We had a slow spot in the first half but we got our transition game going and the momentum going in the second half," said Richardson, who guided Tulsa to the NIT title last year, his first at the school.

"I'm happy with all the young men that played tonight. It was the ultimate team effort, everyone got a chance to play and everyone contributed."

In tournament play involving ranked teams, No. 5 Missouri downed Colorado 72-60 in the opening round of the Big Eight event; No. 9 West Virginia routed Massachusetts 91-70 in the Eastern Eight, and No. 17 Kansas State eliminated Kansas in the Big Eight 74-62.

Top Twenty

Missouri shot 61 percent from the field, got 24 points from conference player of the year Ricky Frazier, and advanced to a meeting with Nebraska at Kansas City. Mo., Friday night in the conference semifinals. Nebraska topped Oklahoma State 60-49.

"It was kind of a see-saw game," Frazier said. "We ran a few buckets, they ran a few buckets. But it was good that we kept the tempo."

Kansas State's Randy Reed scored 24 points to move the Wildcats into the semifinals against Oklahoma, which nipped Iowa State 71-67. The loss gave Kansas, 13-14, only its third losing season in 18 years.

In the Eastern Eight tournament, West Virginia bombed Massachusetts behind Greg Jones' 23 points. The Mountaineers led by as many as 27 points in extending their homecourt winning streak to 32 games.

West Virginia, which won the regular-season Eastern Eight title, takes on St. Bonaventure in the conference semifinals at Pittsburgh Friday night.

Unranked Teams

St. Bonaventure whipped George Washington 69-66.

The other semifinal pits Rutgers, which downed Rhode Island 67-63 thanks to a 17-point effort by Roy Hinson, against Pitt, which withstood a furious rally by archrival Duquesne to advance with a 66-64 verdict.

In the Mid-American tourney, which moves to Ann Arbor, Mich., for Friday's semifinals, it will be Bowling Green against Northern Illinois and Ball State playing Western Michigan.

Bowling Green edged Miami, Ohio, 81-78 behind 22 points by Marcus Newburn; Western Michigan nipped Eastern Michigan 44-42 when substitute guard Tim Waun hit a jumper with three seconds remaining, and Leonard Hayes' two free throws with 41 seconds left in overtime provided Northern Illinois with a 70-68 decision over Ohio U. Ball State, which won the regular-season title, drew a bye into the semis.

The Midwestern City tournament will continue Friday night in Tulsa, with Oklahoma City facing Evansville, which had a pass into the semifinals after winning the regular-season title, and Loyola, Ill., taking on Xavier, Ohio.

Coach Susan Holland's golfers will be making their first start of the season.

Competing for the men will be Bruce Carroll, Steve Goetzman, Pat O'Connor, Mike Petersen, Bobby Tuttle and David Waszak while Deborah Latham, Jill Himmelman, Wendy Swift, Rebecca Bradley, Ann Coombes, Sabra Srader and Kristy Keith will compete for the women.

Greenwood happier under new coach

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

When Jerry Sloan was fired as the Chicago Bulls coach last month, at least one player was happy — David Greenwood.

"Nobody knows better than I do how I was denied my role of being a rebounder and a shotblocker with Sloan," says Greenwood.

Under interim Coach Rod Thorn, Greenwood says he has been playing more his "natural" game. Tuesday night, he drove his point home while leading the Bulls to a 112-109 National Basketball Association victory over the Philadelphia 76ers.

Greenwood collected 11 rebounds, blocked three shots and scored 15 points to help the Bulls win their fourth straight game.

"Greenwood is a player who has become possessed and a player whose rebounding skill is just about as good as Artis Gilmore's," said Thorn, the Bulls' general manager.

"I was forced to play away from the basket under Sloan," said Greenwood. "That kept me from doing what Mr. Thorn knows I can do best."

Reggie Theus, who scored a team-high 22 points for Chicago, also is happy with the Bulls' circumstance. "For the first time his season, I felt good about playing in a Bulls' uniform," he said. "I felt we had our finest team effort of the season."

Gilmore added 19 points for the Bulls, who have a 4-1 record under Thorn after going 19-33 with Sloan. Andrew Toney led the 76ers with 28 points.

Bucks 101, Pistons 91

Brian Winters scored 21 points and sparked a fourth-quarter rally that helped Milwaukee beat Detroit. Winters hit three long jump shots for six of his team's first eight points of the fourth quarter, as the Bucks pulled away from a four-point lead, 79-75, after three quarters to lead by as many as 12, 101-89, in the closing moments.

Quinn Buckner added 18 points and Sidney Moncrief 16 for Milwaukee, which won its seventh straight home game. Recently acquired center Bill Laimbeer led the Pistons with 19 points and rookie Isiah Thomas had 18.

Celtics 101, Mavericks 97

Rookie guard Danny Ainge, pressed into full-time duty by injuries to other players, responded with a career-high 17 points to lead Boston over Dallas.

Boston won its fourth straight game despite the loss of starters Larry Bird, out with a broken cheekbone, and guard Nate Archibald, nursing strained wrist ligaments. Chris Ford also saw limited duty for the Celtics after missing three straight games with a bad back.

Nets 130, Bulls 124

Two baskets by Albert King and another by Buck Williams in the final three minutes of the second overtime period led New Jersey over Washington.

King scored 20 points for New Jersey, Ray Williams had 19 and Len Elmore 18 as the Nets won their third game in a row. Greg Ballard had 25 for Washington and Jeff Ruland added 24.

Knicks 108, Clippers 101

Randy Smith came off the bench to score 12 second-quarter points and 24 overall and Marvin Webster blocked six shots to lead New York over San Diego.

Jerome Whitehead had 27 points for the Clippers, who suffered their 11th loss in their last 12 games. The victory marked the Knicks' fourth straight at home, their longest homecourt streak of the year.

"Webster got the Knicks inspired," said San Diego Coach Paul Silas in reference to the New York center's six blocked shots. "If it wasn't for Marvin, I don't know how they would have handled us."

Spurs 119, Rockets 117

George Gervin scored 38 points and Mike Mitchell added 22 as San Antonio held off a fourth-quarter Houston rally to defeat the Rockets.

Houston center Moses Malone led all scorers with 43 points, 14 of them in the final period as the Rockets made up a 15-point deficit and briefly took the lead, 109-108, on a Calvin Murphy field goal with four minutes to play. The Spurs regained the lead on field goals by Mitchell and Dave Corzine.

Kings 125, Jazz 117

Ernie Grunfeld and Eddie Johnson combined for 25 points in the final quarter to lead Kansas City over Utah. The victory snapped a five-game losing streak for the Kings and was the first victory in the last 16 road games for Kansas City.

Warriors 117, Cavaliers 108

Bernard King scored 28 points in 26 minutes to lead Golden State over Cleveland. The Warriors broke away from the Cavaliers' midway through the game. They scored the last eight points of the second period to take a 52-50 halftime lead, then scored the first nine points of the second half.

Trail Blazers 119, Suns 108

Kelvin Ransey scored 10 of his 30 points in overtime to lead Portland over Phoenix.

The Blazers, down by six points in regulation play with 49 seconds left, tied the game at 100 in regulation on three-point field goals by Jim Paxson and Billy Ray Bates.

Pacers 132, Nuggets 124

Johnny Davis scored five straight points in overtime to break the final tie and help lift Indiana over Denver. Davis, who scored 25 points, took charge in the overtime with the game tied 118-118 when he scored on a drive, completed a three-point play with a free throw and then hit a jumper with 3:19 left to open a five-point Pacers lead.

NHL ROUNDUP

Lindstrom scores five against Flyers

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

Willy Lindstrom is keeping some fancy company.

The Swedish-born right wing of the Winnipeg Jets joined Wayne Gretzky and Bryan Trottier — only two of the best players the National Hockey League has ever known — as three players who have had five-goal nights this season against the Philadelphia Flyers and goalie Pete Peeters.

Chicago's Grant Mulvey also scored five goals in a game this season, but he did it against St. Louis.

Lindstrom paced the Jets' 7-6 victory over the Flyers Tuesday night by scoring once in the opening session and twice in the second and third periods.

Edmonton's Gretzky, who had two assists in a 3-3 tie with Montreal Tuesday, scored five times Dec. 30 — giving him 50 goals in the season's first 39 games as the Oilers topped Philadelphia 7-5.

Trottier, who got his fourth hat trick of the season Tuesday as his New York Islanders belted Calgary 6-3, scored five times against Philadelphia Feb. 13 in an 8-2 romp.

"It just went my way tonight," said Lindstrom, who also had an assist. "Sometimes it goes the other way, too, and you always hit a stick or a goalpost or something.

"I can't remember whether I ever had four or five in a game. I know I've had hat tricks before."

Lindstrom received plenty of help from Morris Lukowich, who assisted on three of his five goals and had four assists on the night.

"It was all Willy," said Lukowich. "A couple of great shots by him and a lucky one too — that backhander that gave him the hat trick."

That goal made it 4-2. But his biggest goal of the game was the fifth, which came on a 20-foot slapshot with 6:14 remaining and was the game-winner.

"It was the night of his career," Winnipeg Coach Tom Watt said of the 30-year-old Lindstrom, who has been with the Jets since 1975, when they were part of the World Hockey Association.

Oilers 3, Canadiens 3

Keith Acton paced Montreal with two goals and Gretzky upped his NHL record points total to 183 with his two assists, the second of which came on Glenn Anderson's second-period goal that produced the tie. Gretzky has scored at least a point in 23 straight games.

Islanders 6, Flames 3

Bryan Trottier notched his fourth hat trick of the season, including one five-goal game, and stretched his personal scoring streak to 21 straight games. The Islanders upped their home record in the last 16 contests to 15-0-1, while the Flames are winless in their last seven road games.

"I don't know why I've got the streak but I like it," said Trottier, who has 48 goals this season, one more than his previous high, set in 1978-79. His final score of the night came on a power play, his 16th of the campaign, another personal record. "It's enjoyable scoring."

Bruins 2, Blues 2

Terry O'Reilly's score on a rebound in the third period produced the tie. Don Marcotte's backhander was blocked by the St. Louis defense, but O'Reilly fired a waist-high drive behind Blues goalie Mike Liut.

The Blues had taken a 2-1 lead 57 seconds earlier when Brian Sutter flipped a 15-footer over Boston goalie Rogie Vachon.

Two Midland rodeo bull riders, Terry and Monty Davis, recently finished in the money at the San Antonio Fat Stock Show and Rodeo in two seperate go rounds.

Both riders qualified for the short go but finished out of the running in the averages.

This week, Monty and Terry are riding in the Houston Rodeo which runs through Sunday. At the rodeo, Monty was awarded the Texas International Hard-Luck Cowboy Award. The winner of the award is selected by the audience using an applause meter.

Lendl says no to 1982 Wimbledon

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The world's hottest tennis player, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, will not play in this year's prestigious Wimbledon, Czechoslovakian newspapers reported today.

"I definitely will not play there (at Wimbledon)," Lendl was quoted as saying at a news conference. "Last year, I was preparing for 13 days on grass, six hours a day. Still, the desired effect did not show."

Lendl, who had a winning streak of 44 straight matches broken last month, said grass-court training last year hurt his performance for the rest of the tennis season.

Lendl will be Czechoslovakia's anchor man in the Davis Cup clash with West Germany in starting Friday in Prague.

Lendl was beaten in first round at Wimbledon last year, but he defeated champion John McEnroe four times starting in October 1981.

"I am playing many tournaments now, and in the middle of the year I shall take the break I normally take in December," said Lendl.

According to the newspaper Mlada Fronta, he said during that break he would prepare for the second round of the Davis Cup tournament, provided the Czechs advance.

Czechoslovakia does not have a single public grass court which may explain Lendl's reluctance to go to Wimbledon this year.

Newspapers said American Vitas Gerulaitis had offered to come to Czechoslovakia to act of Lendl's sparring partner. But they said Lendl refused because the only grass court in the country is the one fellow Czech Jan Kodes set up near his Prague home.

Even when he's down, Edmonton Oiler Wayne Gretzky isn't out. The 21-year-old was awarded his fifth NHL Player-of-the-Month award of the season on the strenght of 15 goals and 20 assists in 11 February games.

Gretzky awarded fifth Player-of-Month honor

Compiled from R-T Wires

Center Wayne Gretzky of the Edmonton Oilers continued his domination of the NHL Player-of-the-Month award Tuesday when he was named its recipient for the fifth time in as many months this season. Gretzky was the choice for February on the strength of the 15 goals and 20 assists he picked up in 11 games. He edged center Bryan Trottier of the New York Islanders for the honor.

Both Gretzky and Trottier had points in every game played by their respective teams during the month. Trottier scored 17 goals and added 15 assists in 14 games...

Moses Malone, the overpowering center who led the Houston Rockets to an 11-3 record in February, the best month in the franchise's 15-year history, Tuesday was named the NBA Player of the Month. The 6-foot-10 Malone averaged 38.1 points and 17.3 rebounds per game in February, surprassing 30 points in 13 of 14 games and 40 points six times, while grabbing 20 or more rebounds six times.

He started his big month with a career-high 53 points in a 122-106 victory over San Diego Feb. 2. Nine days later, he grabbed 32 rebounds, the most in the NBA this season, and set a league record with 21 offensive rebounds in a 117-100 triumph over seattle. For the season, Malone tops the NBA in reounding with 14.5 per game and is third in scoring with a 30.5 average.

Buck Williams of the New Jersey Nets and Jay Vincent of the Dallas Mavericks Tuesday were named the NBA Rookies of the Month for February. Williams, who averaged 15.9 points and 11.8 rebounds last month, was the Eastern Conference winner. Vincent, the Western Conference winner, averaged 25.1 points and 6.3 rebounds in February.

The Soviet Union has named four gymnasts, none internationally known, to compete in the United States Cup in New York next weekend. The Soviet Gymnastics Federation said its top stars would not make the trip because they are resting after a strenuous season.

Tatyana Frolova, Albina Shishova, Alexander Tumilovich and Alexander Pogorelov were selected.

The North American Soccer League had a 23 percent increase in attendance during its indoor season over last year's winter league, NASL said Tuesday. Each of the 13 teams which took part in the indoor season played a nine-game schedule. Chicago drew the highest average crowd — 13,322, followed by Montreal (9,152) and New York (8,691).

Dan Issel of the Denver Nuggets is seeking a ruling from the NBA on whether he will be a free agent on May 1, as it says in his contract, or at the end of the playoffs, as specified in the league's collective bargaining agreement. The Nuggets' lawyers say it's after the playoffs. The Denver center and his agent, Ted Steinberg of Los Angeles, disagree.

"It's important because I could be in the marketplace — if I don't strike a deal with Denver before then — a lot sooner than the rest of the free agents and well before the draft," Issel said. "That would be advantageous to anybody."

Qualifying School more than getting a TPA Card for aspiring young pros

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The Tournament Players Association's annual Qualifying School provides the proving ground through which aspiring young pros can gain their playing rights on the pro golf tour.

They gain those rights, acquire the coveted TPA Card, through a series of competitions. The top 25 from the hundreds of applicants annually join the tour.

But the school is more than that.

It also consists of classroom work and lectures which provide the young players with instruction and advice on a variety of matters relating to their life and conduct on the tour.

Jack Tuthill, the veteran Tournament Director for the Tour, has a set piece he delivers. In this address, he advises that there are only three things a pro must do on the tour, three things only he can do, three things no one else can do for him:

Show up for your tee time. Sign your card. Commit for the next tournament.

All too often the players are overly involved with the competitive side of the school and tend to disregard the classroom work.

It can be expensive.

There's the case of rookie Ronnie Black. He recently made the first cut of his career. For the very first time he'd qualified to play in the final two rounds and thereby had automatic exemption into the next tournament. For the first time he would not have to undergo the Monday qualifying round.

The young man was very excited. He immediately went to the telephone to relay the good news home. The conversation was happy and extended. It lasted some time.

Then, when it was over on an early Friday evening, he came in to commit for the following tournament. And he was too late. He'd missed the deadline, 30 minutes after the close of play on Friday. He'd had four full weeks to commit and hadn't gotten around to it. He missed the deadline, was not allowed to play in the next event and had to qualify for the one after that.

It was a difficult and painful learning experience. It is called a rookie mistake.

But it isn't restricted to rookies.

Part of the tour's lore is the story about a player named Billy Dee. He played the tour for several years. Or attempted to. For years Billy Dee was among those Monday players attempting to gain a spot in the tournament field. For years he was unsuccessful. He played only on Mondays, failed to qualify, and went on to the next tournament stop. He never qualified. Never.

Then, at last, came that great day at a small event in which Billy Dee qualified on Monday. He finally made it into a tournament field.

And he failed to sign his card for the qualifying round. The infraction calls for disqalification. Billy Dee was out again.

The rules apply to all, to the world class players as well as the rookies and the also-rans.

An incident of international proportions arose a couple of years ago when Seve Ballesteros of Spain, a former Masters and British Open champion, missed his starting time and was disqualified from the U.S. Open.

And now it's Lee Trevino.

He'd planned to play in this week's Bay Hill Classic. He'd made his hotel reservations. His travel plans were in order. The tournament sponsors were delighted to have one of the world's great drawing cards in the field.

Then, long after the deadline had passed, it was discovered Trevino had failed to sign a commitment for the event.

He's out. He'll be among the missing when the event gets under way Thursday.

Rangers add shrink to staff in effort to cure mental letdown

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The Texas Rangers, still searching for an American League pennant after 11 baseball seasons, took another tack Tuesday — they called in a head doctor.

"The principal idea is to establish clearly in their minds what they can accomplish personally and collectively," said Lou Tice, head of a Seattle-based motivating concern known as the Pacific Institute after a 2½-hour seminar. "The purpose is to show them that, regardless of their physical skills, their performance can suffer from mental letdowns.

"They must learn to block from their minds outside distractions and obstacles to reaching their full potential."

It's a unique addition to baseball training. It's a combination of a session on the psychiatrist's couch and mandated reading of Dr. Norman Vincent Peale's "The Power of Positive Thinking."

"I am not a psychiatrist," Tice explained. "You might refer to me as a psychological educator. I don't claim to know baseball.

"I do know the mind and what an important part it plays in everyone's effort to succeed.. This is the only baseball team I have worked with. We deal with all sorts of people — from convicts in prison to large corpoartions."

Tice is chairman of the board of the Institute which, he says, employs 60 specialists, some of them psychologists. Clients have included such corporate giants as General Motors and AT&T.

Suzuki: Method or madness?

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — They are products of another type of Japanese import — the Suzuki method — and they're aspiring to become virtuosos such as Itzhak Perlman or rising stars like Dylana Jensen.

From ages 15-months to 18 years, about 200,000 American children are listening to music, learning basic eye-hand-ear coordination, receiving positive reinforcement from parents, and experiencing, according to Professor Jeanne Rubin of the Stark Campus of Kent State University, an environment devoted to excellence.

For $92.50 and the investment in or rental of a 32nd-size, 16th-size or quarter-size violin, or a small cello, viola, flute, or piano, children can get 13 semiprivate lessons lasting 20 minutes each and six group lessons.

Shimichi Suzuki, 88, son of a Japanese violin-maker, brought the method to the United States in the early 1960s, says disciple Margery Aber, professor of music at the University of Wisconsin's Stevens Point campus, the nation's premier Suzuki training center. She helped teach Rubin and her five assistants in the method.

Stevens Point's American Suzuki Institute was the first American school, but is now one of scores around the United States, which follow the Japanese violinist's methods but are not franchised.

"We have started children as early as 15 months," says Ms. Aber. "That doesn't mean they are actually playing the violin. They're listening to records and simulating playing using a Cracker Jack box. Discipline and the love of music are instilled in them at a very early age." Within years, they may be playing tunes from Mozart.

"Our purpose is not to help make geniuses or flood the markets, our real purpose is to give the children a fine education and a [illegible]ivity to the beauty in life," she says.

A full-size violin, right, dwarfs a smaller version used in the Suzuki Method of teaching the instrument the children — some as young as 15 months.

Home Spa offered at Acme Marketing

Acme Marketing at 3103 E. 31st Street in Odessa has over 3,000 satisfied users of the incredible Home Spa water purifier. It is one of the most simple, economical and trouble free water purifiers on the market today. No electrical or plumbing hook up is needed.

The Home Spa dispenser, with the activated charcoal filter, not only removes bad odor and taste from city or well water but also removes chlorine, sulphates, rust, algae and other pollutants, giving you delicious drinking and cooking water for about 2 cents a gallon. House plants, pets and people all love and thrive on Home Spa water.

The unit retails for only $24.95; replacement filters are $9.95 each and three for $24.95. Each filter is good for purifying approximately 500 gallons, depending on pollutants in your area.

Acme Marketing also has filters for automatic ice makers, drinking fountains, ice machines and coffee machines. The filters will keep the machines from clogging up, saving huge plumbing bills.

DMSO, (Dimethyl Sulfoxide) 99.9 percent undiluted, 99.9 percent pure, is available at Acme Marketing. It can be delivered locally and mailed anywhere in the nation for an extra charge.

New products carried by Acme Marketing are Willard Wonder Water, Meadow Fresh Cocoa Mix, (tastes much better than chocolate milk,) and Meadow Fresh Low Fat Dry Melloream (tastes much better than milk). The latter two have a shelf life of at least five years. Families can save over a dollar a gallon on their milk bill with these products. Samples can be obtained by calling Tony Rogers at 367-6977.

What's wrong with leftovers?

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — This sometimes generous old town suffered a small embarrassment not long ago, when some school children had failed to qualify for the federal free lunch program early enough.

Pragmatic school officials, with hungry kids on their hands, simply offered them what other children had left on their trays.

Newspapers and television news shows focused on the incident, and there was an implied outrage, as if it were somehow degrading to be fed leftovers.

A quick survey of friends, associates and others found them almost universally pondering the question, "What's wrong with leftovers?"

Most couldn't remember leftovers being a matter of sacrifice. They were, instead, a mark of prudence and ingenuity — from the Depression days of stingy and infrequent pay, through World War II days of rationing, and even today when the price of one hotel dinner would have fed a family for a week a decade ago.

Leftovers have always fed the multitudes.

And when Christ fed the throng (some 5,000) with five loaves and two fishes, the disciples went among them and collected the leftovers.

Julia Child, the culinary artist, says, "People are just not good cooks unless they know what to do with excess food."

The word "leftovers" is its own worst enemy. Perhaps, she says, we should call it "feasting on the remains."

She remembers one television show when she made a lasagna from leftover turkey and drew angry phone calls and letters from Italians who saw sacrilege in what was done to their national dish.

There are even books on menu planning which begin with the notion of cooking too much, so there will be enough left over for a second meal. You could call it "planned consumption."

As a child in a Georgia family of six, one transplanted New Yorker remembers, "We had a very small garbage can."

"Everything got eaten. You had chicken, then you had chicken soup. There was always a soup simmering on the stove. All the bones went into the soup, ham bones, beef bones. And it was as anticipated as the original meal."

There was deviousness in leftovers. One man remembers his passion for leftover mashed potatoes, heated up and mixed with milk. His mother knew his passion too. "She used to mix in spinach to get me to eat spinach."

"I still like second day mashed potatoes mixed with milk, but not with spinach."

One can only imagine the soup pots simmering the day through in a land which promised a chicken for every pot, but they must have been myriad. In some Jewish households, there were planned leftovers because one was not supposed to cook on the sabbath.

Stew, begun from leftover chunks of meat, was sustained with letover chunks of meat. It was a study in rejuvenation. By the time the original meat and vegetables had boiled down to sauce, there was new leftover meat to replace it.

Hash. One has great difficulty in this Big Apple finding a decent dish of roast beef hash in a restaurant. Loads of good roast beef, but oh, the heart yearns for hash.

Turkey traveled post-Thanksgiving from bird of feast to hash to salad to soup.

And spaghetti sauce. One never knew whether the tomatoey lumps would be leftover pork chops or chicken liver.

The health departments would have been greatly depressed to see how leftovers were handled back a ways in time. Some people had cold pantries, some had iceboxes. But the best answer was to keep something hot and on the stove.

Lunch was another great consumer of leftovers, whether it was cold meat loaf sandwiches, or a mother and an aunt smilingly indulging themselves in a chicken salad and vegetables for lunch with the offspring and men off on other endeavors.

One woman who grew up in rural Indiana asked, "What leftovers?" She couldn't remember any, except maybe beans and corn combined to become succotash.

Another who grew up in southern Ohio remembers meat loaf surfacing again with new companions, covered over with a can of soup and relaxing in a bed of rice or noodles. Leftover potatoes became potato pancakes.

And so many remember that when mother didn't want to cook — on Sunday or Saturday or whenever — there were pots of soup, or bowls of assorted mixed leftovers to graze on, a moveable feast.

We are what we are, what we were brought up to be, but people have a generally warm feeling for leftovers. They rarely carry the same reputation as hand-me-downs, or second-hand clothes.

We are aided and abetted these days with regular garbage pickups, compactors and disposals, super-strength trash bags to hold all of our debris.

In an earlier time, leftovers were considered precooked meals, the covenience foods of their time. Today, we buy our leftovers in aluminum trays, carefully wrapped and preserved, frozen. We just heat them up.

Somehow it's not the same.

Inn caters to canines

PAOLI, Pa. (AP) — The brochure for the luxurious inn is inviting.

"Relax and enjoy the pleasures of a carefree vacation at our year-round resort. You will find all of our rooms are spacious, heated and air-conditioned," the pamphlet reads. "Patios and family suites are available."

Yes, and all dogs are welcome.

The Main Line Animal Inn, run by a husband-and-wife team of avowed dog lovers, caters only to canines.

"People who bring their dogs here don't feel guilty," said owner Marcia Wolpert, "because they don't have to."

"When you think of kennels, you think of slop houses," she added.

Dog lovers who pay up to $9 a day to keep their pets here don't have to worry about slop. The pets, known as "clients," can have mood music, tapes of stories, and individual television.

This summer, the Wolperts plan to build a 3-foot-deep swimming pool, shaped like a dog biscuit.

Mrs. Wolpert, 38, said she had been involved with dogs for about 17 years. She and her husband, Fred, raise, train and show Yorkshire terriers. They own 65 of them.

The inn is about a year old, and Mrs. Wolpert said she wanted it to be different from the average kennel.

At Christmas, a special holiday menu included a cheese appetizer, people crackers for dessert and rawhide treats. Each boarding dog received its own stocking hung on the door to its cage, officially known as a "suite."

Then there's the food. The brochure assures: "All our guests enjoy home-cooked meals. Finicky eaters are welcome.You will find our fabulous doggie-deli of gourmet meals irresistible."

"They've got to have a homey feeling or they pine," said Mrs. Wolpert, who cooks seven days a week for her clients. Gourmet meals for dogs generally mean cooking up about 15 pounds of beef or chicken a day, mixed with rice, kibble and vitamins.

"I'll boil chickens. I'll do anything to get a dog to eat," said Mrs. Wolpert, who adds special treats like applesauce or cranberry sauce to meals on holidays.

The inn boards an average of 30 dogs a day, for owners who come from all over, Mrs. Wolpert said. She said dog owners — who may not be rich themselves — would not spare any expense for their pets.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, March 4, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The great Notre Dame football coach Knute Rockne was born on this date, as was bridge expert Charles Goren. Also sharing this birthday: actresses Barbara McNair and Paula Prentiss. Although money remains tight in the months ahead, you will make more than your share of it if you will become more aggressive about your goals. Wishful thinking can prove expensive. Rely on pure common sense when it comes to business and financial matters. Long-term success depends on your ability to make far-reaching decisions. Intuitive and unconventional, you are willing to reject unworkable strategies. Late marriages fare better than early ones.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Member of opposite sex may try to pull the wool over your eyes. Guard your assets. Do not try to match the extravagance displayed by a fair-weather friend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pay-later travel arrangements can add to your expenses at a time when you are short of cash. Look ahead before agreeing to loved one's plans. A new job will probably be yours.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Alternating moods of cynicism and lighthearted optimism leave some of your friends wondering how to approach you with a proposition. Flash them the green light!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your social life is more active than usual and could interfere with work. Do not neglect your domestic responsibilities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Money matters will keep you tied up in red tape unless you seek expert advice. Keep a close eye on your valuables. Friends appreciate your ability to get to the heart of things.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take another's financial advice with a grain of salt. Postpone major trip until end of month. Previously rewarding relationships are no longer fulfilling.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Business negotiations on the verge of completion should be handled with speed, diplomacy. Be more objective! Hurt feelings could blind you in a situation that requires all of your wits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Romance and friendship are in the spotlight. Make the best possible use of your contacts and past experiences to land new employment or business. Guard against hasty decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A casual meeting could turn into a delightful love fest. Profits increase when you open new lines of communication with those who have been unaware of what you are doing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Settlements, contracts and real estate transfers can be successfully concluded today. Move quickly but not impulsively. By exercising patience, you gain the advantage over a foe.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone delights in trying to confuse you today. Take this mischief in stride and you will end up the victor. Enlist mate's assistance. Substantiate a claim before making a fuss.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Medicine, politics and religion rank high on your list of interests. Refuse to put up with unequal relationships. Romance takes on a special glow after you and mate talk.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 ◇	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Seven of ◇.

Many people have a grudging respect for the con man. At the bridge table, he is often venerated. Here's one in action.

The bidding is of only passing interest. East held a sound opening bid and South bid what he thought he could make.

West led his top diamond. East won the ten and continued with the king and ace. Declarer ruffed with the ten of trumps and West sluffed a club!

Declarer was convinced that the king of spades was to his right. Since he wanted to get to dummy to take the trump finesse in case East held a guarded king of spades, declarer conceded a club. East won and continued with the queen of diamonds, and now West overruffed with his king of trumps for a one-trick set.

Perhaps you don't fully appreciate West's bit of larceny, but let us look at what happened at the other table in the team match from which this hand was taken. Here, too, the contract was four spades and here, too, the defenders started with three rounds of diamonds. However, this time when declarer ruffed, West overruffed with the king and shifted to a club.

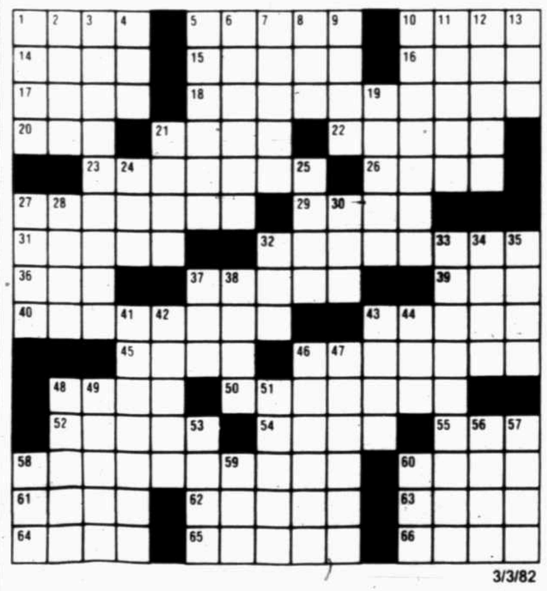

Declarer won the ace of clubs and drew the outstanding trump with the ace of spades. Now declarer crossed to dummy by leading the three of trumps to the six. On the ace of hearts he discarded a club, and then led the queen of hearts for a ruffing finesse. East covered with the king and declarer took care to ruff with a high trump. He re-entered dummy by leading the four of trumps to the seven and disposed of his remaining club loser on a high heart. So declarer ended up with ten tricks, losing only two diamonds and a trump.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. For a copy and a scorepad, send $1.75 to "Goren-Four Deal," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Professor says punishment should be painful

By MAUREEN DANA
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — Graeme R. Newman believes citizens who don't obey the rules of society should be shocked into obedience — literally.

Electric shock, and the brief, but memorable, spasm of excruciating pain it inflicts, would be a far less expensive and more humane punishment for two-thirds of the $15,000 criminals languishing in American prisons, says a professor of criminal justice at the State University of New York here.

Newman, associate dean of the university's school of criminal justice, proposes that prisons remain open to protect society from "the terrible, terrible few" who commit murders and other heinous crimes.

But for the tens of thousands of small-time criminals, corporal punishment is the best alternative, insists Newman, a published author and recognized authority on criminal punishment.

Newman says that in addition to saving some of the $10 billion a year now spent to imprison criminals, finding a more humane way of dealing with them is high on his list of priorities.

"If you're going to tell me the homosexuality and the rape and the murder that goes on in our prisons today is a humane reform, I don't buy it. I think it's a step backwards," he said.

NEWMAN says electric shock would benefit society by saving tax dollars, and help the criminal by providing a painful but brief punishment that could be administered in a half-hour. Then allow the culprit to return to the business of living.

"What I'm talking about is reintroducing a form of corporal punishment that is non-lasting. We could get these people back on the street and stop warehousing them and ruining their lives."

The criminologist says he also advocates the use of public flogging in cases where the criminal has committed a "particularly humiliating offense" that resulted in public discomfort to the victim.

"I believe we should rediscover the pain part of punishment. I'm not talking about cutting off hands." Newman notes.

University project may harvest profits from West Texas lands

BAKERSFIELD, Texas (AP) — In a valley ringed by flat-topped mesas, the University of Texas is raising grapes that one day could produce a Riesling de Texas or a Cabernet Longhorn.

The university, which owns more than 2.1 million acres in West Texas, is trying to put some of its land to work as vineyards.

"The value of this land as it stands now is not much," said Gene Drennan, a viticulturist, or grape expert, who is running the project. "We started about seven years ago looking at the land and ways to improve it. We tried a lot of things — kiwi fruit, jojoba — which wouldn't live through the winters.

"When we got to grapes, we found something that would grow out here," he said.

"Out here" is the sprawling ranges between Bakersfield and Fort Stockton. The main vineyards lie in a valley divided by Tunis Creek, which Drennan said is "dry 99 percent of the time."

The valley is thickly covered with tough mesquite, cactus and creosote bushes. To clear the land for the vineyards, Drennan's crews used a bulldozer with a root plow to tear up the desert plants, raked and burned them and then ripped the ground four feet beneath the surface.

"It's a slow process," Drennan said. "It costs $5,000 to $6,000 an acre to bring the plants to the third year, when they start producing. Anybody who gets into it big in Texas is going to have to spend money."

Money is Drennan's current problem. He wants to plant 1,000 acres of grape vines in the valley, but the plans are being held up while an economic feasibility study is done by the university.

"From an agricultural standpoint, it's feasible," he said. "It's the best investment we could make agriculturally with our land. Now, they're studying the market."

A 12-acre test vineyard was planted near Van Horn. Sixty varieties of grapes were planted to determine which were best-suited to the arid West Texas region.

"Most of them grew pretty well," Drennan said. "Some there was no market for. If they grow, big deal, you can't sell them. We took the best 10 varieties and planted them in one-acre blocks near Bakersfield."

Those plants now are coming to maturity and producing grapes. This time of year, the grapevines look dry and dead, their pruned vines pointing skyward. But as spring comes, Drennan said, the plants will sprout leaves and flowers and produce more grapes by July.

LAST YEAR, DRENNAN AND his crews planted 160 acres of two varieties of white grapes. They are now planting 80 acres of white grapes and two 40-acre blocks of red grapes.

The larger tracts look little like vineyards so far, with only the symmetrical rows of trellises and posts to indicate where the plants will grow.

After the ground is prepared, the rows are plotted and drip lines are strung between the trellises. The hoses are turned on every third day, dripping a gallon of water an hour on the plants.

Drennan said the location of groundwater was one of the criteria for choosing the valley, which has two wells.

Even with a rechargeable water supply, raising grapes in the region is a challenge. Drennan outlined some of the hazards — a late spring frost, hail and an array of animals with a tooth for the plants.

"We're always pruning, planting or building fences," Drennan said. "There's always something to do."

When the experimental vineyards were begun, wine, table and raisin grapes were planted.

Proposed notification plan opposed

Groups fear 'intrusion' would lead to teen pregnancies

By BETTY ANNE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several establishment groups are opposing the Reagan administration's plan to require parental notification when teen-agers are given contraceptives, saying the measure could lead to more unwanted pregnancies.

Annette Daum of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, said Tuesday that the regulations are "unwarranted government intrusion into private family matters."

She also said the proposed rules were dangerous to the health and welfare of young teen-age women because they could discourage the adolescents from obtaining information to prevent pregnancy.

"The result for many would be unprotected intercourse, the use of less effective contraceptives and the consequent greater risk of becoming pregnant," said Elizabeth Johns, executive vice president of the National Council of Negro Women.

Mildred Wurf, director of the Girls Clubs of America's Washington office, said the proposal "attempts to drastically change public policy without evidence of any benefit and, indeed, only the potential for harm."

About 1.2 million teen-agers become pregnant each year and 75 percent of those pregnancies are unintentional, according to statistics compiled by the Alan Guttmacher Institute. In 1979, 449,000 teen-agers had abortions, nearly twice as many as in 1973 when abortion was made legal.

In the same year, 560,000 teen-agers had babies.

The regulations, which would apply to all federally subsidized family planning clinics, were proposed by Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker.

Under the plan, clinics would be required not only to notify parents, but also to conduct follow-ups to make sure the notices were received. Exceptions would be made only if there was a documented history of child abuse in the teen-ager's family.

The regulations are subject to public comment before the administration decides whether to implement them.

Dr. Allan Rosenfeld, a gynecologist from Columbia University, said there already are signs that teen-agers may be scared away from family planning clinics because of the administration proposal.

He said a Planned Parenthood affiliate in Contra Costa County, Calif., has reported a 10 percent drop in teen-agers receiving services in the January-February period.

Counselors there attribute the decline to the mistaken belief by some adolescents that the rule already is in effect, he said.

"In those families where good family communication on sexuality already exists, this rule will have little effect one way or the other," Ms. Johns said. "Tragically, in those families where communication is poor and where help is most needed, the rule would do the most harm."

The National Urban League and the United Presbyterian Church USA also joined in criticizing the proposal.

And Jo Uehara, the YWCA's Washington representative, said the organization's various types of sex education programs are operated so as to allow confidentiality.

"We support a voluntary approach to family involvement," she said. "A voluntary approach assures that individuals in different circumstances and from all economic levels have access to confidential family planning information services," she said.

The specialty of the house: Schooling for gourmet diet

Special from Reader's Digest

Returning home on a flight from California, I was seated behind two women. One had just completed a course at a gourmet cooking school. She was enthusiastically describing the making and sampling of such delicacies as pickling with orange sauce, beef Wellington and cream-filled pastries.

"How wonderful!" exclaimed the other traveler. "And after you return home, what will be your specialty?"

Her seatmate's response was quick. "Dieting," she said.

Many of the residents of Old Wethersfield, Conn., are justifiably proud of the age of their homes. A trip down most any street will find small signs gracing the fronts of houses with such statements as: "Built 1790" ... "Built about 1787" ... "Built in 1740." Near the end of one street is a happy little house with the sign: "Built about 1955."

— DON F.E. FOX, N.Y.

My daughter, who lives near Fairbanks, Alaska, asked each of her Cub Scouts to bring a "sign of spring" to their first April meeting. She was amazed when two boys brought rocks, until it dawned on her that seeing rocks for the first time since October is a true sign of springtime in Alaska.

— MRS. RUSSELL BATIE, Neb.

During spring vacation, I took my three small children to a department store in Austin, Texas, to buy shoes. There was much wiggling, complaining and roaming the aisles before each was fitted with two pairs. As I started to write out the check, I said to the patient young clerk, "Since we're from out of town, I suppose you'll need some kind of identification."

He looked at me and the children, smiled wearily and said, "Oh, no, ma'am. I feel like I've known you-all all my life."

— MRS. SHANNON L. DOSS, Texas

Our newspaper delivery boy left the following message: "I will be on vacation from June 5 until June 15. My dad will deliver my papers. It will be later when you get yours. Dad is one of the older generation, and it will be hard for him to cope with folding papers and newfangled five-speed bikes, so please be patient with him. If you miss your paper, call 555-4601. Thanks, Gary Foster."

— BILL GUY, Okla.

After dusk on a snowy winter's evening, I drove home from work through a desolate area on a road bordered with black-trunked, snow-capped trees. Through the gloom, I could see blinking red lights. As I got closer, I saw they were the warning lights of a tractor-trailer parked on the shoulder of the road. More hazy lights ahead proved to be those of a second truck. Then, across the road, there appeared three more tractor-trailers, each rig showing lights flashing against the snowflakes.

In the glow of blinking lights, I could see figures moving about. Fearing the worst, I pulled up opposite the group — to find the five truck drivers happily building a snowman.

— THOMAS L. WHITE, Ill.

Since large interstate buses are an unusual sight in our small Maryland town, my wife and I took particular note when two of them passed our car on the main street. As the first one rolled by, a sign on the back proudly announced that it carried the "Sharpstown Baptist Church Youth Choir, Houston, Texas." We slowed down for the next one to pass us, as they seemed to be traveling together. Painted on the back of the second bus was a sign quietly boasting: "Same Song, Second Verse."

— THOMAS DAVIS III, Md.

I had lived on a farm for over 20 years and, when I moved to the city, there were naturally many adjustments to be made and habits that needed to be broken.

After shopping one day, I returned to the parking lot to find my car missing. I remembered that I had made the farm-oriented mistake of leaving the keys in the ignition. Certain that the car had been stolen, I looked for a phone in order to call the police. But, as I turned around, I saw my car parked at the other end of the lot.

Relieved but puzzled, I hurried to the car where I found a note on the windshield reading: "I was walking past your car when I saw a meter maid approaching. I had no change, but noticed that you had left your keys in the ignition. I moved your car to a meter that still had time on it. Your keys are under the driver's seat."

British price cut pressures OPEC

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Great Britain's decision to lower its crude oil prices by $4 a barrel puts more pressure on OPEC to convene an emergency meeting soon to resolve its rift over prices and production, analysts say.

British National Oil Corp., the state-owned company that controls most crude sales in the United Kingdom sector of the North Sea, told its customers Tuesday that the new price of its top-quality crude is $31 a barrel.

Iraqi Oil Minister Tayeh Abdel-Karim responded by calling for an emergency meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to discusss the weakness of the world oil market.

"There's no question about it, this just emphasizes the need for OPEC to get together and do something quickly," said Herbert Krupp, an energy economist at Bankers Trust Co. "This certainly increases the pressure."

OPEC Chairman Sheik Mana Said Oteiba, who also is oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, traveled to Saudi Arabia and Qatar on Tuesday to discuss the oil situation. Reports from Doha, the capital of Qatar, said Oteiba indicated no decision had been made on whether to hold an emergency meeting of oil ministers.

Saudi Arabia, the dominant member of OPEC and the world's largest oil exporter, is believed to be arguing against an emergency meeting of the cartel, while the United Arab Emirates and Iraq have called for such a session. OPEC's next regular meeting is scheduled for May in Quito, Ecuador.

While Great Britain is not a member of OPEC, its crude oils usually are priced slightly above the Saudi Arabian Light grade that serves as a benchmark for all OPEC crudes. That Saudi price currently is $34 a barrel.

Although oil companies that buy British crude had pressed for the $4 reduction, the British government had been reluctant — partly for diplomatic reasons, sources say — to undercut the Saudi Arabian benchmark price.

The Saudi oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, has been reportedly pressing for the cartel to reduce its prices to about $28 a barrel. He believes that lower prices will curb development of alternate energy sources by OPEC's big customers, the recession-battered industrialized nations.

Oil prices have fallen sharply in recent weeks amid a worldwide oversupply of oil. The glut is the result of recession in the industrialized countries, larger-than-normal oil company inventories and continued efforts in the oil-importing countries to conserve.

That has led to a dwindling of OPEC oil production. OPEC production last year was down to its lowest level since 1969 and now is estimated at 20 million barrels a day, just under half the total world output. OPEC production reached a peak of about 30 million barrels a day two or three years ago.

Britian produces 1.9 million barrels a day from 20 North Sea fields, higher than any OPEC country apart from Saudi Arabia.

British Petroleum Co., one of BNOC's biggest customers, said it would accept the new terms. Haakon Lavik, spokesman for the Norwegian state oil company, Statoil, said oil companies operating in the Norwegian sector of the North sea have no other choice but to conform with BNOC's price reductions, according to a report in today's editions of the Oslo newspaper Aftenposten.

"We can hardly avoid a similar price reduction. We must discuss the situation with our customers. It will take a little time before the new Norwegian oil prices are fixed," Lavik was quoted as saying.

But with oil in some other regions selling even lower than Britain's, not all buyers indicated they would accept the latest cut.

"It still doesn't particularly interest us," said one American oil executive whose company buys a relatively small amount of North Sea oil from Britain.

Indian Point set for major accident drill

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer

BUCHANAN, N.Y. (AP) — A major accident was simulated at the Indian Point 3 nuclear plant north of New York City today to test emergency planning procedures for the 280,000 people living in the immediate area.

The Power Authority of the State of New York, operator of the unit, said the test began shortly after 7:30 a.m. when a leak that supposedly developed during the night in the reactor coolant system increased in flow from one gallon per minute to two gallons per minute.

An unusual event, the lowest of four emergency classifications, was declared.

Cliff Spieler, spokesman for the utility, said that under the test scenario plant, workers had been unable to find the source of the leak.

The utility opened its emergency news center at the Fire Department headquarters in nearby Verplanck.

A decontamination center for plant workers, evacuation buses, Red Cross assistance, "congregate care" centers, hotlines and radiological monitoring were among the features of the test.

The all-day exercise was to take up to 10 hours to complete but officials said it would be conducted in "compressed time," meaning that plant operators and emergency planners would act out activities for an accident lasting as long as 40 hours.

There was no advance announcement about what time the drill would begin or exactly what would be the circumstances of the incident.

It was expected, however, that the simulation would eventually escalate to a site emergency or general emergency, the two most serious classifications for nuclear plant accidents.

The drill is similar to those ordered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency at 57 other sites in the country but drew particular attention because of its location.

The area where the 288,000 people live is the 10-mile plume-exposure pathway, and is the highest such figure for nuclear plants in the nation.

New York City, 24 miles south of the plant, is within the 50-mile ingestion pathway, where initial concern is about radiation possibly getting into the food chain.

A similar drill must be held at the adjacent Indian Point 2, owned by Consolidated Edison. Unit 2 is one of four sites across the country that has received an extension of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's April 1 deadline for completing such testing.

Both Indian Point units also are currently the subject of a special Atomic Safety and Licensing Board hearing to determine if the plants should be shut because of extra safety problems brought on by the high population.

The Union of Concerned Scientists and the New York Public Interest Research Group, both parties in that action, had obtained permission from the board to observe today's test from both control rooms as well as the site's emergency operations center.

ARCO to discontinue credit card use

LOS ANGELES (SWN) — Atlantic Richfield Company has announced it will discontinue its credit cards on April 15 and pass the savings along to dealers and distributors in the form of significantly lower gasoline prices — nearly three cents a gallon lower.

The new policy means that no credit card, including the ARCO credit card, will be honored by ARCO Petroleum Products Company after April 15, 1982.

"We realize this is a bold step," said James S. Morrison, president of ARCO Petroleum Products Co., a division of Atlantic Richfield.

"We considered various alternatives and concluded that our dealers and customers would benefit most by doing away entirely with the credit card system. Maintaining the credit card system cost some $73 million last year, and the cost will probably rise in the future. That cost is borne not only by card holders but by all ARCO customers, most of whom pay cash for gasoline. In fact, 70 percent of the gasoline sold at our stations is bought with cash."

Morrison said that the new policy also reflects the changing marketplace and ARCO's role as an innovative leader in gasoline marketing. ARCO was the first major oil company to promote self-serve and mini-serve operation and has pioneered the one-stop shopping concept through its am/pm mini-markets.

"This is another important step toward giving the motorist what he wants — lower prices, fast service, and the top quality associated with the ARCO brand," said Morrison. "We intend to upgrade our stations in other ways so that ARCO becomes the best value in the country."

Morrison conceded the possible loss of some ARCO customers who want the convenience of credit cards, regardless of cost. "But, if dealers, as independent businessmen, pass on the price savings to their customers, the lower prices should more than offset the lost credit business. The company does not set the price its dealers charge, but historically, by and large, they have been most responsive to innovative programs, and we would expect most dealers will indeed want to pass these savings to the consumer."

Morrison pointed out that before the 1973 Arab oil embargo, gasoline sold for about 30 cents a gallon and interest rates were in the five percent range. Last year, gasoline prices were around $1.30 a gallon and interest rates averaged close of 20 percent, which affected the cost of carrying receivables.

Penn Central to acquire Cooper Manufacturing

NEW YORK — The Penn Central Corporation has signed a letter of intent to acquire Cooper Manufacturing Corp., a privately-owned, leading manufacturer of equipment for servicing and workover of producing oil and gas wells.

Under the terms of the letter of intent PCC wil pay $25 million in cash and issue $225 million par value of non-convertible, non-voting Penn Central preference stock.

The new issue of Penn Central stock is non-callable for five years with mandatory redemption at the end of 12 years. The stock will carry a 10 percent annual dividend for the first three years after issuance, with adjustments by market rate formula in the fourth and sixth years. The stock will be issued in a "private placement" but may later be registered for a public offering distribution if not previously redeemed.

The transaction is subject to execution of a definitive agreement and compliance with regulatory requirements.

Cooper manufactures a full line of production rigs and equipment specially designed for oil and gas well service, workover and completion. Such equipment, which differs markedly from the heavier drilling rigs, is regulary used to maintain efficient production of oil and gas wells in the U.S. and in various international oil and gas fields.

Cooper is headquartered in Tulsa, Okla., and has manufacturing plants there and in Odessa, and 16 sales locations and 11 servicing centers in the oil and gas fields of the United States and Canada.

Richard Dicker, chairman and chief executive of Penn Central, noted the "acquisition as an especially attractive investment opportunity because this segment of the energy industry enjoys a wide, stable and growing market base for the use of equipment to maintain and service the entire land population of wells in production plus those being addd by successful new drilling. Cooper's business is not primarily dependent upon the vagaries of current oil and gas pricing or the drilling of new wells.

"In addition, the relative cost of servicing or workover of producing wells is very small compared with the total value of production, so that there is little incentive for deferral of the maintenance and workover service provided by Cooper equipment. Rather, we anticipate a continuously growing need for that service as the land population of producing wells inevitably increases, and we anticipate that Cooper's market share with its fine competitive products will be maintained or increased. Further, Cooper has a fine management team which will continue in place after the acquisition.

"We are targeting the acquisition for consummation in April so that Cooper can stat making a contribution to Penn Central's earnings before the end of the second quarter."

Richard A. Voell, Penn Central's president and chief operating officer, pointed out "This acquisition will be combined with Marathon Manufacturing Company's activities as a logical extension and strengthening of Penn Central's presnet participation in the oil field equipment sector of the energy industry."

Penn Central's operations in the energy industry include Marathon Manufacturing Company which is the world's largest manufacturer of offshore, mobile, self-evaluating drilling rigs for oil and gas exploration, and the Buckeye companies which have a 3,600-mile oil pipeline system and a large propane gas marketing system. In addition, the energy group provides contract drilling services in the oil and gas fields.

Penn Central is a decentralized operating company which manufactures products and supplies services for the energy, natural resources, electronics and telecommunications industries.
