Local oilmen greet pact with some optimism

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Oil industry reaction to finalization of a long-awaited OPEC agreement to curb crude oil production Tuesday was one of cautious optimism in the Permian Basin.

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president Permian Basin Petroleum Association (PBPA), said he thought the latest agreement was an indication that OPEC members had suffered long enough. "Evidently they thought now was the time to try production controls for at least 60 days. We are glad to see that they have finally come to some terms, but we are hesitant to put too much reliance on the actions of OPEC ministers who have not been able to keep agreements in the past."

He said if the production pact held, oil prices in the Permian Basin could be back at the $20 level by the end of the year. "This may not have an immediate effect in bringing investment back to the oil industry, but as the posted price responds to the spot price it will improve cash flow in oil companies and perhaps save some more jobs which are now on the line. It may also improve conditions for drilling and well service contractors, as deferred drilling and workovers are performed."

Bill Kleine, president Permian Corp., the largest crude oil buyer in the Permian Basin, said the posted price for West Texas Intermediate had already responded to Tuesday's upturn in the spot market. He said Permian and at least two other crude buyers had raised their posted price $1.

Said Kleine: "If the production quota they have imposed upon themselves sticks and the spot market holds we could see another jump in the posted price shortly. If it holds until the end of the year we will see an appreciable increase in the posted price." But he says to get oil to the $25 to $28 level, where the Saudi's have indicated they would like to see oil prices, would require production restraints of another 2-3 million barrels per day off the agreed to 16 million barrels daily.

The plan announced Tuesday calls for a return to October 1984 production levels which were approximately 16 million barrels per day.

Gas price war over temporarily

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The gas price war is temporarily over and local station dealers are predicting higher prices after Tuesday's OPEC decision to cutback production.

Several Midland and Odessa gas stations increased their prices by 10 to 20 cents Monday, saying they could no longer afford a price war that caused them to sell regular gasoline for 57 and 58 cents a gallon.

"We went up Tuesday due to the increase (in competition's prices) that went up on Monday," said 7-Eleven Food Store District Manager Keith John.

John said his Midland and Odessa stores have increased from 58 cents to 69 cents a gallon for regular gas.

"We had been in a very competitive gas war market for two or three weeks.

"I think it's just people wanting to get the market back to where it needs to be so they can make money," John said.

Glen Boenisch, Stop-N-Go district manager for Odessa, said, "We increased them because at 58 cents we were selling below costs and you can't do that for very long."

Boenisch said Odessa Stop-N-Go stores increased their prices Monday from 58 cents to 72 cents a gallon for regular gas.

Single-member district ruling voided

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans has voided U.S. District Court Judge Lucius B. Bunton's judgment for seven single-member districts within the Midland Independent School District.

Bunton is to submit another ruling after federal appellate Judges John Minor Wisdom, Alvin B. Rubin and Patrick E. Higginbotham "vacated" Bunton's judgment and remanded the case to Bunton's court "for reconsideration."

The appellate judges offered no written opinion for their order in nullifying Bunton's judgment.

"I'm perplexed," said MISD attorney Charlie Tighe. "I really thought they had enough (information) to go and decide the case."

Instead, the appellate judges said that their order was "in the light of Thornburg v. Gingles" case, which reportedly is similar in principle to the Midland lawsuit.

Tighe speculated that the appellate judges considered Bunton's 7-0 plan for all single-member districts as "not appropriate or not proper." "I think that would be a legitimate conclusion to draw."

The lawsuit was brought against the Midland ISD by the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) and the Black Advisory Council. Both minority groups maintained that the school system's at-large election system was "illegal," discriminatory, and unconstitutional.

Last January, Bunton had ordered that the MISD refrain from electing school board members under the present at-large system.

MISD originally had proposed a 4-3 plan for four single-member districts and three at-large positions, but Bunton rejected that plan.

Dettman: Illegal aliens commit 10 percent of misdemeanors

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Dettman

There's more to illegal aliens than their just crossing the river border without governmental permission and, when caught, being shipped back in a seemingly never-ending cycle.

"Illegal aliens," said Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman, "are responsible for 10 percent of our (misdemeanor) criminal cases."

Those crimes include driving while intoxicated (DWI), possession of marijuana, theft, and carrying illegal weapons, such as pistols and switch-blade knives.

"A lot of times, we'll stop them for DWI, search their cars and find drugs and weapons inside the cars, too," Dettman said.

Illegal aliens who are stopped for DWI often have no valid driver's license. "They never have insurance," he said.

"So, if they run over someone, guess who gets to foot the bill?"

The arresting law-enforcement agent is not always aware that the detained person is an illegal alien. The person may be bonded out of jail before that fact is uncovered through Texas Crime Information Center.

"They have the right to make bail just like anyone else if we don't know they are illegal aliens," Dettman said. Some can't afford to get bailed out of jail. Others do. "They'll make bond and leave. We'll never see them again a lot of times."

DETTMAN ESTIMATED that up to one-half of the illegal aliens at time of their arrest present fake identifications and give false names, false dates of birth, false driver's license numbers, false addresses and false Social Security numbers — which "just reflect how good noncitizens they are."

"A lot of them have prior convictions for illegal entry," Dettman said. "We'll notify the (U.S.) Border Patrol, prosecute them, and hold them for the Border Patrol."

Dettman estimated that illegal aliens in Midland County "are responsible for somewhere in the neighborhood" of 300 crimes in a year. "That's just misdemeanor crimes." Punishment for misdemeanor crimes includes fines of up to $2,000 and up to one year in jail.

The percentage of felonies — crimes which may result in prison terms — committed by illegal aliens in Midland is undetermined.

"I know we have illegal aliens who are charged with crimes," said First Assistant District Attorney David Rosado, but I don't know percentagewise."

But since the oil boom and associated building construction have fizzled, the illegal alien population has diminished, he said.

"I guess they have gone to greener pastures."

Rosado said that the "bulk of our crimes are indigenous. You can't blame it on non-citizens."

SHERIFF Gary Painter said that "there's no way" he could estimate "exactly how many" illegal aliens are arrested here. "I don't think it's been a terrific problem," he said. "The problem is not so great that we can't handle it."

Young boy saves friend with Heimlich maneuver

The Bright Side

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — Five-year-old Brent Meldrum knew just what to do when his young playmate began choking on some candy.

He ignored his mother's yells to stay away, calling, "No, Ma, I saw what to do on TV," as he expelled a piece of candy from his friend's throat, probably saving her life.

"He's my boyfriend and my hero," Tanya Branden, 6, said Tuesday after he saved her from choking, "but I never let him kiss me."

Dr. Peter Gross, assistant chief of the Emergency Department at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, said Brent was the youngest person he has heard of to perform the Heimlich maneuver.

The two youngsters were in the living room of Brent's home, while his mother, Susan, 27, was in another part of the house, when Tanya choked on some candy.

Brent's mother returned to the living room as Tanya began choking and turning blue in the face. Mrs. Meldrum yelled at her son to keep away from the girl, but Brent said, "No, Ma, I saw what to do on TV."

Brent, who weighs 45 pounds, slipped his arms around Tanya's body from behind, clasped his hands together and squeezed, lifting the 41-pound girl off the floor.

"Then I banged her feet down on the floor and the candy I got at a birthday party popped out on the floor and Tanya was all right again," Brent said.

Lewis says tax increase 'out of the question,' outlines budget plan

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

Lewis

AUSTIN — The Texas Legislature convened in special session this morning, just one day after House Speaker Gib Lewis drew a constitutional no-new-taxes line in the legislative sand.

Calling tax increases "out of the question", Lewis Tuesday outlined a $1.2 billion budget cutting plan that would cost 8,000 state employees their jobs.

Lewis said his proposal, which includes some temporary bookkeeping maneuvers and an early retirement option for long-time state workers would keep the state solvent through June. He said a permanent solution can wait until the regular session in January, when lawmakers will know just how bad the problem is and what state programs can best stand cuts.

It "gives us the time to plan our way out of this crisis, not tax our way out," the Fort Worth Democrat said.

Today the Legislature will address the $3.5 billion state deficit. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby favors a combination of tax increases and moderate budget cuts. Gov. Mark White will lay out his plan, with several recent reports indicating it will include some increased taxes.

Saying he's "been the odd man out many times," Lewis relied on the state Constitution to help him keep his promise. "Since the Constitution requires that all tax increases be implemented in this (House) chamber, it appears that a question of a tax increase is out of the question until more facts are at hand," he said.

The speaker said a tax increase large enough to handle the deficit would leave the state with a $4 billion surplus by fiscal 1989. "State government may be facing some hard times, but the people of Texas are facing some real tough times," he said.

"What we are here to do is help them if we can and not make things tougher."

Hobby's press secretary Saralee Tiede said the lieutenant governor had not seen Lewis' plan. Tiede said Hobby is "looking favorably" on a plan to avoid a surplus by linking a tax increase to the price of oil. Under that proposal, the taxes decline as oil prices rise.

Property at New York townhouse to be auctioned

By DAVID BEHRENS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The small pillows, tossed about the discotheque on the sixth floor, are embroidered with inscriptions:

"Daddies Are for Loving," reads one of them. "Noveau Riche Is Better Than No Riche at All" was imprinted on another. Most plaintive was a tongue-in-cheek complaint: "To Be Rich Is No Longer a Sin, It's a Miracle."

These pillows of the rich and famous are not the usual stuff of auctions. But then again, neither is the former Manhattan townhouse of Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos.

Until Feb. 25, when the Marcos government was overthrown in the Philippines, the posh six-floor establishment was part museum and part playground for Imelda Marcos and her friends.

Owned by the Philippine government, the house once served as a consulate but was commandeered some years ago by Marcos and furnished with a passion by his free-spending wife. Now, all of its contents, valued at more than $1 million, will go on the auction block, marking the first sale of Marcos property in this country.

The bidding will take place Aug. 15-16 at Kennedy International Airport's Viscount Hotel. About a thousand bidders are expected, according to auctioneer Al Erlichman of Sunrise Galleries of Valley Stream, selected by the Philippine government to run the sale.

While the 30-room townhouse, a half-block from Central Park, was sheltering the Marcos children, friends and staff, it also became a repository of a vast collection of antique furniture, elegant crystal chandeliers, porcelain vases, countless cases of sterling silverware, enough china and fine glassware to serve an army, more than a thousand pounds of monogramed silk and satin sheets, dozens of rare books, three grand pianos, an odd collection of family photos and, now missing, a fabled collection of paintings.

The auction will be held under the auspices of the Philippine government's Presidential Commission on Good Government, created to recover more than $10 billion in real estate, bank assets and artworks, "illegally acquired by Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos," said Petty Benitez, who heads the commission's art committee.

Proceeds will be used to finance the recovery campaign. Many of the missing paintings, valued at $100 million, once decorated the walls of the townhouse and "disappeared within three days after Marcos was overthrown," she said.

In their place, works by Philippine artists now hang, "a sort of camouflage," as appraiser Kenneth Linsner puts it. Linsner, a former Brooklyn Museum consultant, was hired by the Philippine commission to assess the furnishings. Searching cupboards and cabinets, Linsner and Erlichman found a number of display plaques, describing the missing paintings, including works by van Gogh, Picasso, Degas, Cezanne, Hals, Veronese, Monet and Rubens.

Now the antique furniture and household furnishings remain to testify to the affluence and the egocentricity of the Marcos lifestyle. The townhouse has become a Manhattan landmark of sorts, a political relic, which will be open to the public for the first time this week — for a modest $8 in entry and catalog fees.

Strolling through former Marcos country, counting kitchens (one on every floor) and bedrooms (more than a dozen), visitors will find a strange potpourri of the tasteful and the gaudy, enough Nouveau for a pocketful of auctions. Ten-foot-high portraits of Ferdinand and Imelda, for which the couple apparently paid more than $100,000, dominate several walls. Another painting places the former president beside a water buffalo. Linsner expects collectors might bid about $1,000 for them.

Mrs. Marcos will be represented with three pairs of shoes from her famous collection. Among the more expensive items are antiques purchased five years ago by Mrs. Marcos from the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie R. Samuels, just before it was scheduled for auction by Sotheby Parke Bernet.

"Imelda apparently bought up the collection and the auction was never held," Erlichman said.

Reflecting the best of 17th- and 18th-Century living, the pieces include:

— A George III gilt-wood mirror, circa 1770, with swan's neck and a flower finial. Hanging in the music room on the second floor, the mirror should draw bids exceeding $10,000, Erlichman predicted. Once owned by a Lord Wilton of Oxfordshire, the mirror is one of more than 20 in the house.

Auctioneer Kenneth Linsner conducts a tour of the 30-room New York townhouse of former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife Imelda prior to the public aution to be held Aug. 15-16.

— A mahogany harpsichord, dated 1763, made by Donald Boalseh, a London firm established in 1440, valued at more than $10,000.

— A George III rosewood and gilt-wood side table, circa 1780, expected to bring in up to $35,000. About 7 feet in length, the table stands against a wall in the main drawing room on the second floor.

— A 16th-Century, carved-walnut French cabinet, in the center hall near the main dining room. The first floor hall is dominated by Corinthian columns, an ornate stairway and a 19th-Century English chandelier with candleholders. The cabinet, circa 1590, may draw bids up to $30,000.

During the early weeks of search and assessment, a pair of 19th-Century, sterling-silver wine coolers, worth about $25,000, also were discovered. They were stored in a box disguised as the caretaker's property, Linsner recalled.

Linsner and Erlichman also found dozens of pieces of Steuben stemware lying on their sides on top of a kitchen cabinet. They are valued at $200 apiece. Hidden behind some vases on a mantle Erlichman found a 19th-Century shepherd's crook, made of glass and valued at $2,000. Dozens of crystal candleholders, in unopened boxes, were also discovered.

OPEC

For the 12 OPEC countries excluding Iraq, production will be 14.8 million barrels per day, and with Iraq's current production of 1.9 to 2 million barrels the level will be 16.7 to 16.8 million barrels. July production for the cartel was 20 million barrels.

Kleine said the crude oil purchasing business was highly competitive and that changes in the spot market would be reflected rather swiftly. He said the posted price responds much quicker to market conditions than it did five years ago, and said it would probably not go as high or as low as the spot.

"This agreement to restrict production is not the answer, but it's a start if it holds," said Kleine, who said he had no opinion on the ability of the pact to hold.

Charles Perry, president of the PBPA, was not optimistic about the ability of OPEC to abide by the production agreement. He thinks the agreement may fall apart by the end of the year, because of a tendency among OPEC members to cheat, but says some price stabilization could result in the immediate near term. In offering a scenario supported by many in the industry. He says a broken agreement later this year would likely be followed by a radical drop in oil prices followed by a final agreement that would stabilize and return oil prices to an acceptable level in 1987.

"I would advise oil companies to take this time of price stabilization, if it develops, to further consolidate their positions and reduce debt," said Perry. "I don't think we have arrived."

He added that the Saudis knew exactly what they were doing in reaching the latest agreement. "They didn't want to push this price war too far because of a hostile Iran which might come at them with a big army, also, there are some OPEC members, such as Nigeria, with basket case economies."

Perry said it was the intention of the Saudis to achieve a final world oil price of $25 to $28 per barrel, that would back out alternative energy supplies from the market as well as some high-priced stripper oil and insure a reliable oil market for decades to come.

In Washington, Alex Mills, communications director for the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said that organization was also taking a position of cautious optimism in regards to the announced OPEC agreement.

"We are glad they reached an agreement, but they have reached agreements before and cheated on them," he said. Mills said the oil industry trade group had been in contact with former Saudi Arabian Ambassador, Jim Akin, a noted authority on OPEC and now a consultant, and that Akin believes the cartel accord will hold. This is a departure from Akin's original script for revival of oil prices in which he said accord would be reached, followed by cheating, radical price drops and finally a permanent agreement.

"We feel that by now the rest of the OPEC members realize that the only winner in a broken agreement will be Saudi Arabia; they are the only one with the reserves to come out when prices drop to $10 a barrel," said Mills. "OPEC members have never been through this much pain before and they may be finally ready to stick with production quotas."

GAS

Fred Hobbs, of Hobbs Fred & Sons Gulf, 3211 Andrews Highway, said he had to increase his prices from 57 cents to 72 cents for regular on Monday because he was losing money.

"I had to get it up to where I wouldn't lose money on it. I was losing 7 cents a gallon on it," Hobbs said.

"It's pretty hard the way things are now to sell gas and pay money to sell it. That's what it amounted to.

"I imagine everybody decided there's no use losing money on it because that's the name of the game to try and make a little profit," Hobbs said.

The price of gas will probably increase again because domestic supplies are getting low, Hobbs said.

"Even if OPEC hadn't made a decision, I think you would see the gas prices go up anyway because of the supply," he said.

Darrel Pierce of Pierce's Fina, 500 W. Front St., said he expects the price to go up after OPEC's decision.

Pierce said he didn't participate in the gas war because, "I'm selling it for almost nothing."

Gas at his station has stayed at a steady 74 cents a gallon for the past four weeks, he said.

"I stay right where it's up. I pay 69 cents for regular and sell it for 74.9 cents.

"I make 5 cents a gallon and go by what the refineries say.

ALIENS

But, Dettman theorized that illegal aliens are responsible for a disproportionate number of misdemeanor crimes.

"I think it would be safe to assume that 98 to 99 percent of the people in Midland County are United States citizens," he said. And based on that premise, then the illegal aliens' crime rate would be about 10 times the average "if 1 percent of the population is responsible for 10 percent of the crimes," he said.

Each year, about 3,000 criminal cases are filed with the County Attorney's Office.

"Then that means that their (illegal aliens') propensity for crimes is 10 times greater than the population in general."

However, he noted that "not all" illegal aliens commit crimes outside of illegally entering the United States."

"I'm confident that a lot of them don't commit additional crimes, but a high percentage of them do."

Dettman said he has no qualms about luring illegal aliens, particularly those who previously have been deported, into custody and sending them back to their country of origin — Mexico in most cases.

"THEY ARE NOT citizens of this country," Dettman said. "And they have no respect for our laws. If they had respect for our laws, they wouldn't come over here in the first place. It's a crime to come into this country illegally."

Dettman noted that each year, thousands of people from other countries immigrate to the United States legally, become citizens, and become productive members of society.

"But the ones that come over here illegally — by the very nature of their entry — have demonstrated their disrespect for our laws."

The laws against illegal entry into this country are "not directed toward any particular nationality. It appears to be Mexicans and Cubans with whom we deal with most."

Dettman recalled talking to an illegal alien who was jailed for DWI. The man thought he was scot-free — that he would not be prosecuted for DWI.

" 'You're going to have to go to the penitentiary first," Dettman said he told him. " 'When you get out of prison, then we'll talk about deporting you.' "

"He thought that just because he was an illegal alien that he had special privileges," Dettman said. "He looked shocked."

MISD

In a compromise measure, the public school district asked Bunton to approve a 2-5 plan for two single-member districts and five at-large position. The at-large district predominantly would be Anglo.

LULAC and the Black Advisory Council wanted seven single-member districts and no at-large positions.

Edia Hernandez, president of LULAC's Midland Council, said "We'll have to present some other avenue."

"There are enough minorities to maintain two single-member districts," she said.

However, she noted that LULAC and the Black Advisory Council "always wanted" single-member districts exclusively.

"Once the lawsuit was filed, we decided we were not going to settle for anything else other than seven (single-member districts)."

Ms. Hernandez said that when minorities have campaigned for public office, "they carry minority boxes. Therefore, it proves everybody wants their own (district)."

"We still say there should be seven (single-member districts)."

She reasoned that to place minorities in "special categories...really wouldn't help" their cause.

Charlie Jackson, president of the Black Advisory Council, said he was confident of an eventual 7-0 judgment in favor of single-member districts — especially in view of the U.S. Supreme Court's revised definition of "polarized voting."

"It's like we're starting all over again," Jackson said of the appellate court's order. "It's a fresh start. We think we have a much better chance of getting the 7-0."

MISD Board President Bill Jackson today said that the appellate court's order to vacate Bunton's judgment simply indicated the case "should be looked at again."

"I respectfully disagree with him (Bunton)," Jackson said.

Tighe said that representatives of the plaintiffs, LuLac and the Black Advisory Council, and the defendant, MISD, would gather with Bunton for more conferences and hearings in an effort to resolve the issues in the case.

TAXES

Lewis' plan, some parts of which need White's approval, includes:

— $620 million in spending reductions spread across all state agencies and universities, with emphasis on cuts that will save money early in the fiscal year;

— No cuts in public education;

— Laying off 8,000 state employees, forcing the rest to take a 3-percent pay cut and lose an expected 3-percent raise, but offering 5,500 workers increased benefits for early retirement;

— Allowing the state to spend the past five years' profits from the sale of stocks in the investment portfolios of the Permanent University Fund and Permanent School Fund;

— Temporarily transferring money from some state accounts into the state's general revenue fund and delaying other payments, which would keep general revenue — the state's main checking account — from writing hot checks; and

— Taking $326.8 million away from money earmarked for highway programs and $22.6 million from state parks next year.

Members of the Mexican-American Legislative Caucus, who have opposed deep cuts in education and human services, said they want to see more details of Lewis' plan before they decide whether to support or fight it.

Gary Hughes, executive director of the Texas Public Employees Association, said his group would try to find alternatives to the layoffs and salary cuts. "We're not willing to give up the pay raises," he said.

Artist's anguished visions not grounded in tragedy

By LEIGH HOPPER

Abstract artist Kelly Alison of Wild Peach poses next to one of her creations, titled "Milkblood in a Crystal City," which she did in 1982.

WILD PEACH, Texas (AP) — Barking dogs, military helicopters, mouths open in anguish: Visions of destruction.

An intricately-drawn face among blurred, grasping hands, a shadowy human form fleeing a dark tornado: Images of despair.

The paintings are, in a word, angst.

But the artist is the picture of contentment, with her 2-month-old son Jacob dozing beside her, roosters crowing behind the house.

Kelly Alison, 29, of Wild Peach always has been a happy person; she doesn't know where this stuff comes from.

"People ask me all the time, 'What is the tragedy in your life? What terrible thing has happened to you?' "

Ms. Alison, who works in oils and pastels, is a bright new face in the art world. Her name pops up in magazines such as "Ultra" and "Texas Monthly."

Although she's enjoyed the respect of her peers for a number of years, the turning point in her career came last year with an exhibit titled "Fresh Paint: The Houston School," put together by New York scholar-critic Barbara Rose and Houston critic Susie Kalil. Ms. Alison was the youngest artist included in the show.

The well-received exhibit led to a couple of exhibits in New York and landed her a spot in Houston's Graham Gallery where she recently held a one-woman show.

BUT SUCCESS is nothing new to her. "I knew from a long time ago that I probably would succeed," she says.

Ms. Alison, born in Plainview, began painting when she was 5 years old. Her mother taught her about color and composition and took her to "little old lady" classes where they painted windmills and fields of bluebonnets.

In high school, she drew better than her classmates. Even at West Texas State University, she was leaps and bounds ahead of a lot of people in her classes.

Her parents were so proud and loved her realistic portraits and landscapes.

Then she made the switch. She was surprised at how easy it was to let go of the old rules and prejudices in her work. But other people thought she'd lost her marbles.

"Since I'd grown up in a pretty small West Texas town, abstract art was something really weird people did," she says.

She found her niche among artists in New York and at the University of Houston. Her father lamented, "I just wonder what would have happened if you had stayed at West Texas."

Her parents still are a little disturbed by her work. "They always say things like, 'Are you happy? Are you doing OK?' " Ms. Alison says.

Her mother helped choose the painting to use on invitations to Ms. Alison's recent exhibit. Her mother preferred one over the others because it was the least "pornographic," in her opinion.

Ms. Alison thought that was funny because her nude figures are so stylized it'd be difficult to call them even mildly risque.

"BUT PEOPLE get real offended by circles you might put in strategic places," she says. "To me, any kind of nudity in art there's nothing wrong with it at all."

Besides, she has no idea what kind of clothes her figures should wear. What does one wear in a metaphysical collage?

"Should I dress them preppy?" she wonders.

In her studio, a converted chicken barn behind the house, Ms. Alison wipes dust off an oil painting with her hand. She picks at a spot with her fingernail, with the meticulous, possessive care she'd use brushing a crumb from her baby's cheek.

One nice thing about oil paintings is they're tough. Just wipe with a damp cloth. If the canvas warps, spray the back with water.

Scraping the bottom of a large painting with her foot, she says, "That's when my parents really started to worry." The painting, titled "Milk Blood in a Crystal City" depicts a man sticking a hypodermic needle in his arm.

Ms. Alison values her background in realistic painting and drawing. Occasionally, she paints a tree or one of her cats just because it's a neat feeling to look at something and reproduce it on canvas or paper.

But she's not sure that sort of background is important. "One side of me says 'yes' because I want everyone to have to do it," she says. "I think the necessary thing to be an artist is to just want to do it."

"At a show, you'll always hear somebody mutter, 'I can do that,' " she says. "But the thing is, they didn't do that."

MS. ALISON has been anxious to get where she is, not doubtful that she'd get there, but anxious all the same. Right now she's waiting for the chance to have a one-woman museum show. That may be next year or 10 years down the road. You never can tell, she says.

She admits she's sometimes jealous of other people's recognition. And criticism still stings. One critic called her a "half-baked cake."

But the artistic climate in Texas is nothing like it is in New York where artists fight among themselves in ferocious competition to get in the best gallery, get the best reviews.

"The artists in Texas generally just sort of find 'em a hole and paint and hope someone will recognize them sooner or later," she says. "And I think better art comes out of that."

UT bests Harvard in battle of the brains

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Texas has beaten Harvard in the battle for the brains and is temporarily keeping them in boxes in the animal lab.

The two schools were among several institutions that wanted a collection of more than 200 brains amassed over 30 years by the medical pathologist at Austin State Hospital. Coleman de Chenar, who died last year, took the brains during routine autopsies on mental patients.

The search for a new home for the collection began last year because the state hospital could not legally dispose of the formaldehyde in which the brains are preserved.

"For the use we got out of them — they were not in constant use — it was not cost effective" to make the changes necessary to keep the brains at the hospital, said Linda Campbell, director of clinical support services.

When word went out that the brains were available, the requests flowed in. Ms. Campbell said she heard from six major institutions that wanted the whole collection and a handful of science teachers interested in a single brain for their classes.

"I was just overwhelmed with calls," she said.

The brains, many of them deformed by diseases that debilitated the patients, are valuable research tools, according to Ms. Campbell.

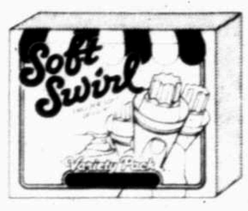

"When de Chenar would find something unusual, he maintained it. It includes quite a number of unusual specimens that doctors today never see," she said. "The pathologists can study them and see some of the cause and effect."

Dr. Edward D. Bird, associate professor of neuropathology at the Harvard Medical School in Cambridge, Mass., mounted his school's quest for the brains. Harvard has a "brain bank" from which tissue is supplied to researchers across the nation. The bank has more than 1,000 brains, but few from schizophrenic patients.

"There is so much information available in those brain tissues, and so many researchers are crying out to get such tissue, it would be a crime to throw it away," Bird said in a telephone interview. "I was just trying to make sure it didn't get thrown away."

The collection went to UT because the school is nearby and has programs in which students work at the state hospital.

Gramm drives automotive imagery into the ground

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Paul Jones had a motto, "Don't Give Up the Ship."

Some 200 years and a different era later, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and one of the co-authors of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction act has a motto: "Don't Blow Up the Car."

Gramm coined his phrase last week as the Senate debated amendments to the debt ceiling bill. Few had much to do with either debt or ceilings but one, perhaps, was relevant.

It was a bid to repeal Gramm-Rudman on grounds that it had become a legislative "Frankenstein," a monster that would run amok and wreck the government through automatic and "mindless" spending cuts.

Gramm obviously didn't think much of the idea of repealing a law that has made his last name practically a household word less than two years into his first Senate term.

And so he denounced the move, launching into his theme as though he was driving in a demolition derby.

Gramm noted that Gramm-Rudman had run into trouble when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that a key component was unconstitutional, a fault Gramm said was correctible.

"We had a car," Gramm said. "It was not a perfect car. It rattled. We drove by the Supreme Court and we got a flat tire."

"...What we have proposed was to put a new tire on it. Not a perfect tire. It could run over a nail, could come off, could have a flat. We thought it was a four-ply, steel-belted radial."

"Others say: 'Don't fix the tire. Redesign the car. Let's build an airplane or an 18-wheeler.' "
"We had a hard time with the car. I'm not sure if we can build an airplane or an 18-wheeler. We have to put a tire back on it. We are now going to try to drive out of the desert in it.
"Do not blow up the car. Reject this amendment."
— Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas

Gramm declared that the chief sponsor of the repeal amendment, Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., was saying, in effect, "Don't put the tire on — Blow up the car."

"Let us not blow up the only car we have," Gramm said. "Let us fix the tire."

"Others say: 'Don't fix the tire. Redesign the car. Let's build an airplane or an 18-wheeler.' "

"We had a hard time with the car," Gram said, roaring down the rhetorical speedway. "I'm not sure if we can build an airplane or an 18-wheeler. We have to put a tire back on it. We are now going to try to drive out of the desert in it.

"Do not blow up the car. Reject this amendment."

The Senate put away its repeal dynamite, defeating the amendent, 69-30.

The Gramm-Rudman-mobile drives on. But it is still controversial.

Gramm told the Senate that some say that he and the other two principal authors of Gramm-Rudman, Sens. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., have become "the best known trio since Larry, Curly and Moe," Hollywood's Three Stooges.

"Let me say it is appropriate since Larry, Curly and Moe were doing the budget before our process took over, and I think we are doing a better job then they were doing," Gramm said. "I think the facts bear that out."

Hart replied: "To say that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is doing a better job of balancing the budget than Larry, Moe and Curly is hardly a compliment to the process."

• • •

Making a point in Senate debate last week, Gramm, said this:

"One senator may be handsome. And another senator may be ugly. And that may be unfair. But it's not necessarily illogical. The handsome senator may have handsome parents. And the ugly senator may have ugly parents. That's still not fair. But it still isn't illogical."

Gramm did not identify which senators he considers handsome.

Nor did he say which senators he thinks are ugly.

Under a 40-year-old law, Congress is required to adjourn for the year on July 31st.

That may have been a realistic expectation in 1946.

It is miles from realism in 1986.

This year Congress hopes — with the stress on "hopes" — to adjourn by early October.

But Senate leaders say the pile of unfinished business is so high as to imperil that departure date.

So one night last week, at 12 minutes to midnight, the Senate voted by voice vote to waive the deadline.

It was the realistic thing to do.

In many recent years Congress left town, not in July's humid heat, but in December's snow flurries and Christmas bells. And in some years it adjourned even later than that — with the popping of champagne corks serving as background music.

In 1980, the 96th Congress, which had convened on Jan. 15, 1979, met until noon on Jan. 3, and then adjourned. The first session of the 97th Congress immediately took its place and met until the next Dec. 16.

Actually, Congress has adjourned on or before July 31 only twice since 1946. And 1946 was not one of those years. That year Congress went home on Aug. 2, breaking its own rule by two days.

In the 40 years that have passed, Congress adjourned five times in August, three times in September, 11 times in October, once in November, 15 times in December and three times in January.

Medicine man's gift of knowledge from 'Creator'

OLD FORT, N.C. (AP) — His examining room is the front porch of a battered, wooden farmhouse in rural McDowell County.

His instruments include six decades of experience and dozens of herbs and vitamins, and his patients are a surprising mixture of mountain folks and city people.

"I was born to traditional medicine," said Chief Two Trees, whose family was associated with Cherokee Indians in central Oklahoma. "My mother, father and grandparents were medicine people and each one had a turn teaching me. I didn't have any choice but to follow them. Our power comes from the Creator — it is a gift of knowledge that is bestowed on us."

Appointments aren't necessary, and between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. any Monday, Tuesday, Friday or Saturday, people with an assortment of ailments are usually waiting to be diagnosed.

Although it's been little more than 18 months since Two Trees staked his sign on a gravel road about three miles outside of Old Fort, the 60-year-old "medicine man" says he has already been visited by thousands of people in search of relief from chronic problems and diseases.

At the knee of his grandmother, Eyes of Fire, he learned that health can be maintained by treating the whole person and that the body's self-healing ability should be encouraged — beliefs that he said in many ways distinguished his practice from that of modern medicine.

Although Two Trees said he had never really forsaken his devotion to traditional medicine since those early days in Oklahoma, it wasn't until he retired from the U.S. Air Force in 1967 that he refocused his attention on the art by visiting with "native American elders" throughout the country.

O'Neill predicts vote will be 'close' on trade bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House and congressional sponsors of vetoed legislation to set stiff quotas on textile, clothing and shoe imports were scurrying for last-minute votes in a tense veto override showdown.

On the eve of the House vote, scheduled for today, neither side could predict a clearcut victory.

"It's going to be close," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. as President Reagan and top aides kept the pressure on wavering House members to sustain the veto.

An override "will open a full-scale trade war," Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III told a group of Republican leaders.

Administration officials also assert that the protectionist legislation would invite certain retaliation by U.S. trading partners, scuttle chances for a new round of global trade talks and ultimately result in higher prices to consumers.

But sponsors claimed the bill would help one of the most import-devasted of U.S. industries, put thousands of textile workers back to work and send a signal to the world that the United States would no longer tolerate huge trade deficits.

The House and the Senate must vote by two-thirds margins to override Reagan's December 1985 veto of the measure for the bill to take effect.

The House passed a stringent version of the textile bill Oct. 10 by a 262-159 vote, and then agreed 255-161 on Dec. 3 to the modified, Senate-passed version that was vetoed by Reagan two weeks later.

Sponsors of the textile bill generally viewed their chances as better in the Democratic-controlled House than in the Republican-run Senate. However, with an annual trade deficit swelling toward $170 billion, support for import curbs was widespread in both chambers.

If the House sustains Reagan's veto, then the administration could claim full victory, since no follow up Senate action would be needed.

The House vote comes on the veto of a bill that would impose cuts of up to 30 percent on clothing imports from Hong Kong, South Korea, Taiwan, China and other developing and newly industrialized nations.

Since the Dec. 17 veto, the administration has negotiated new accords limiting import growth from South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong to under 2 percent annually.

But textile bill sponsors and the U.S. textile industry claim that isn't enough. They want roll backs like the one contained in the legislation.

Shoe imports would be held to 60 percent of the U.S. market under the measure.

With the prospects of Congress completing action on an omnibus trade bill this year growing dim, the textile bill veto override has become the centerpiece trade vote of this congressional election year.

Thus, many votes for the override were anticipated from legislators opposed to Reagan's trade policies, claimed U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter. "It's a case where people have their individual agendas," he said.

Generally, support for the bill was viewed as divided among regional rather than political lines — with support the heaviest from Democrats and Republicans from the states hardest hit by unemployment caused by low-cost textile, clothing and shoe imports.

Women's groups to testify against Scalia's nomination

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Antonin Scalia's appointment to the Supreme Court appears to be sailing smoothly toward Senate confirmation but an array of women's groups still hopes to sink his nomination.

Representatives of groups including the National Organization for Women and the National Abortion Rights Action League were prepared to testify today in opposition to Scalia's nomination.

Testifying before the Senate Judiciary Committee over a nine-hour stretch Tuesday, a confidently glib Scalia was spared the rancor Chief Justice-designate William H. Rehnquist confronted when appearing before the same panel last week.

One of the few negative moments for Scalia on Tuesday came when Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., asserted that the nominee is insensitive to "the right of women to escape their second-class status under the law."

Kennedy offered no specifics in elaboration of the assertion.

Scalia, 50, told the committee, "I assure you I have no agenda. My only agenda is to be a good judge."

He said he is not joining the court to overturn past rulings, including the landmark 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

"I am not comfortable in imposing my moral view on society," he said.

Scalia, who as a law professor wrote articles critical of affirmative action plans giving special help to racial minorities, said that as a policy matter he does not favor such measures.

But he said his personal views would have "nothing to do with the way I will apply affirmative action laws that are enacted by the Congress."

At another point in the hearings, Scalia added, "There should be no doubt about my commitment to a society without discrimination."

On another topic, Scalia testified that he quit the men-only Cosmos Club in the District of Columbia last December after 14 years of membership because he used it infrequently, adding that he does not believe such clubs practice "invidious discrimination against women."

Several women's groups hope to dash Antonin Scalia's hopes for an appointment to the Supreme Court.

"I understand there are people who feel differently about it. I am sensitive to their views," Scalia said.

He also said that, if confirmed, he will disqualify himself from a pending case from California in which the Supreme Court is expected to decide whether the federal government may label as "political propaganda" three Canadian films on acid rain and nuclear war.

Scalia acknowledged that he already has voted on the identical issue in a different case before his appeals court.

Scalia's sense of humor surfaced several times during his lengthy testimony.

Invited by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., to introduce his family, Scalia rattled off the names of his wife, Maureen, and their nine children.

"You have a good memory," Thurmond said.

"Don't try me on the ages, senator," Scalia shot back.

When Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, referred to a past tennis match in which Scalia "whipped me on the court," the nominee replied, "It was a case of my integrity overcoming my judgment."

Meanwhile, the Reagan administration has agreed to show the Senate committee memos dealing with Rehnquist's role in controversial Nixon administration policies from 1969 to 1971.

The issue had threatened to delay Rehnquist's nomination as chief justice. The Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote on Rehnquist's and Scalia's nominations on Aug. 14 and the full Senate on Sept. 8.

Senate postponing judge's impeachment trial until September

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, caught in a crunch of urgent business before leaving in mid-August for a summer vacation, is postponing at least until September the impeachment trial of jailed federal judge Harry E. Claiborne.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole said Tuesday night the Senate was prepared to receive a formal message from the House today declaring that the articles of impeachment against Claiborne were ready to be presented.

Dole, R-Kan., said the actual Senate trial won't be held until September, after Congress returns from a three-week summer recess. Dole said the Senate had a busy schedule before the Aug. 15 break and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., told him the House wasn't yet ready to prosecute the case.

"We were prepared to do it before the recess," Dole said, "but I'm relying on a call the speaker made to me — I didn't make it, he made it to me, saying we're not going to be ready before the recess, let's postpone it."

Dole's announcement that the Senate would receive the formal House impeachment notification ended a brief parliamentary standoff that had raised tempers in the House, which approved the articles of impeachment 406-0 last month.

Members of the House Judiciary Committee were angry that the Senate had refused to accept the impeachment message on several previous occasions when the House tried to deliver it.

Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., said the Senate was "defying the public will that this matter be handled expeditiously."

Claiborne, serving a two-year sentence for tax evasion at a federal prison at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., has refused to resign and is continuing to collect his $78,700 annual salary as chief U.S. district judge for Nevada.

Under the Constitution, a federal judge is appointed for life and can be removed only through an impeachment vote of the House and conviction by the Senate.

Ordinarily, as soon as the House approves articles of impeachment, which are tantamount to an indictment, it sends a message to the Senate saying the articles are ready. When the Senate accepts the message, House members walk over to the Senate and formally present the articles.

Kastenmeier, who drew up the articles of impeachment and was House floor manager for the impeachment vote, said the House sent no fewer than three such messages since the July 22 vote, the latest on Monday and Tuesday.

He said the Senate refused them all and called the Senate's lengthening delay outrageous.

House committee members believed the real reason behind the delay was the Senate's confusion over procedures for its first impeachment trial in 50 years.

Senate leaders were supposed to have met late last week to work out details of the impeachment process, but the meeting was postponed because the chairmen of the Senate Rules and Judiciary committees were involved in the long-running confirmation hearing for William H. Rehnquist's nomination to be chief justice.

Moreover, the Senate is struggling to dispose of several other major issues before the summer recess begins Aug. 15, including the defense authorization bill, legislation to raise the national debt ceiling to $2.32 trillion, sanctions against South Africa and $100 million in proposed aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

British divers help excavate remains of American Revolutionary War brig

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — British Army divers are helping excavate the remains of what is believed to be the General Arnold, an American Revolutionary War brigantine that sank in a bitter winter storm 208 years ago.

"It's sort of poetic justice," said Lt. Collin Millar, 22, of Tignabruaich, England, as he worked recently at the shipwreck on a sand flat about one-half mile offshore from this community settled by Pilgrims.

The General Arnold, built in April 1778, captured the prizes of two British merchant ships just months before the sinking, said archaeologist Richard Swete, who has researched its history.

The recovery crew, which will work at the site until Aug. 19, hopes to lay to rest any doubts that the ship is the General Arnold by digging out the hull and finding any of its 20 cannon that may have been preserved in the sand.

"The cannon will prove without a doubt that this is the ship," said Charles T. Sanderson III, who discovered the wreck and is sponsoring its recovery.

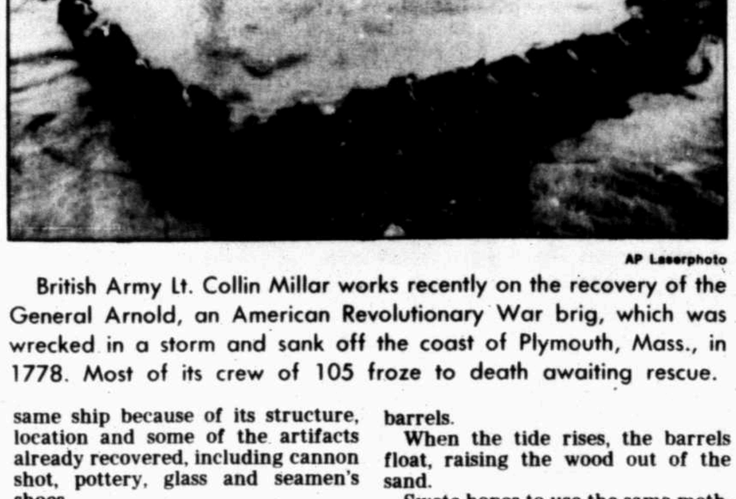

The General Arnold — named after Benedict Arnold, a widely respected general during the Revolutionary War before his treachery — ran aground during a violent northeaster on Dec. 26, 1778, and foundered in shallow water.

Most of its crew of 105 froze to death. About 30 crew members were rescued three days later, but several died soon afterward.

A survivor of the wreck, Barnabas Downs Jr. of Barnstable, wrote in a pamphlet 12 years later of the fierce storm and the ordeal of the crew that gathered on the quarterdeck as the ship sank.

"Those who were able to stand were obliged to huddle up close together, and breathe in each others faces to preserve them from freezing," he wrote. "In the morning a most awful sight presented itself to us; 60 of our comrades lay dead across each other."

Swete said he was convinced that the shipwreck discovered buried in sand on White Flat in 1976 is the same ship because of its structure, location and some of the artifacts already recovered, including cannon shot, pottery, glass and seamen's shoes.

AP Laserphoto

British Army Lt. Collin Millar works recently on the recovery of the General Arnold, an American Revolutionary War brig, which was wrecked in a storm and sank off the coast of Plymouth, Mass., in 1778. Most of its crew of 105 froze to death awaiting rescue.

"But I think there are a lot of skeptics and certainly any historian and archaeologist would want more proof," he said. "I want more proof."

Swete and his crew of 19 British volunteers, most of whom are working on the project as part of their military training, also are racing against time, which has eroded the sand flat, exposing the ship's pieces to air, waves and deterioration.

The crew recently has been preparing to raise a 44-foot-long, curved starboard section whose edges jut out of the eroding flat at low tide.

At high tide, the dotted outline of the piece and the main hull is hidden under about 10 feet of water.

The divers have used a vacuum machine to suck sand away from the heavy wood, into which they drive nails to attach lines holding empty barrels.

When the tide rises, the barrels float, raising the wood out of the sand.

Swete hopes to use the same method to hoist the bottom shell of the ship, which he said may contain panels of a collapsed deck, remains of a distinctive water pump or crew members' personal articles.

Items already recovered, including a 65-foot-long piece of the port side lifted last year, are being preserved at a laboratory in Plympton.

Besides excavating the ship, Swete said he planned to look closely at an area near the wreck that sonar tests this year showed may contain iron deposits, possibly from the ship's cannon.

Eventually, Sanderson wants to open a museum of the ship's artifacts in Plymouth.

"There's a gap in nautical architecture that this would fill," said Sanderson, who said he had no idea of the cost of the excavation work.

New monthly journal fishes for more than compliments

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — All you have ever wanted to know about catfish will be on display in the Catfish Journal, whether you grow them, sell them or just eat them.

The new paper, which made its debut in July, will be a monthly publication sponsored by the Catfish Farmers of America, an industry organization based in the Mississippi Delta.

The first issue featured color pictures, articles on actions by the Federal Drug Administration, articles by fish pathologists, and even the winning recipes in the 12th annual National Catfish Cooking Contest.

Editor Rosa Lee Jones said she thought it would be a part-time job for her, but she's finding it takes full-time work to keep up with all of the material.

"We want to be a source of information for the catfish industry, the farmers and the processors," she said.

"We see as a legitimate side effect marketing information to people using catfish, or potential buyers."

About 7,500 copies of the first issue were sent out, but the eventual circulation is expected to be about 5,000.

The newspaper will go to members of the catfish association, and will also be open to subscription.

Although Mrs. Jones does the editing, the Journal is actually published by Aquacom Inc., of Greenwood, a company founded by the Hammons and Associates advertising firm.

"We have been contemplating this for several years," said agency president Allan Hammons.

He said his organization had made a presentation to the CFA and the association decided to go ahead.

Mrs. Jones says initial reaction to the newspaper has been overwhelmingly positive.

"There were a few doomsayers who said there was not that much to say about catfish," she said. "That's not true. There's a lot to say about catfish."

Advertising is expected to meet almost the entire cost of the newspaper, she said.

One of the things producers are finding, she said, is the consistent good taste of farm-raised catfish.

"Fish from the ocean or wherever varies in its taste," she said. "But the farm-raised fish has a consistent taste that lends itself to processing."

The Journal has produced inquiries from as far away as Arizona, Minnesota and North Carolina from those interested in buying the fish.

The cooking contest also has attracted wide interest, she said.

"It's interesting to note that not one of the winning recipes called for fried catfish," the traditional way of cooking it in the South, she said.

"It's a versatile fish, and can be cooked in many ways," Mrs. Jones noted.

Researchers amazed at cleansing, curative power of lowly cattails

DISTANT, Pa. (AP) — Cattails sprout defiantly from the orange, acidic goo leaching from an abandoned strip mine off the bumpy backroads of western Pennsylvania.

Researchers are amazed, not by the plants surviving in such a wretched environment, but by the cleansing work they do. The cattails are removing iron and other metals from the water and, some believe, neutralizing the acid.

"It's nature healing itself," says Javed Mirza, district mining manager for the state Department of Environmental Resources. "There is something going on that lowers the iron content and makes the water less acidic. Some of these things grow in stuff you wouldn't want to touch with your foot."

Because of these curative powers, the lowly cattail has become a favored flower of environmentalists and coal operators working to curb the toxic damage of acid drainage from mines.

The method is still experimental, but about 40 cattail marshes have been started in the past three years. Officials estimate 100 will be planted this year, stretching the length of the Appalachian coal fields from Pennsylvania to Alabama. Others are being established in Montana and Colorado.

Acid is a nasty byproduct of coal mining. Coal seams to contain deposits of pyrite, a lustrous yellow ore made of iron sulfide and known commonly as fool's gold. When exposed to air and water, the pyrite becomes sulfuric acid — a smelly witch's brew that poisons streams and kills plants.

About 5,000 miles of streams and rivers nationwide are polluted by acid mine drainage, and more than one-third of them are located in Pennsylvania, according to the state DER and the U.S. Bureau of Mines.

"I consider it the major environmental effect associated with coal mining," says Dr. Robert Kleinmann, research supervisor with the environmental technology group of the U.S. Bureau of Mines.

"According to estimates, the mining industry is spending $1 million a day to treat acid mine drainage. Other than wetlands, there is no other technology available that is cheap, low-maintenance and applicable.

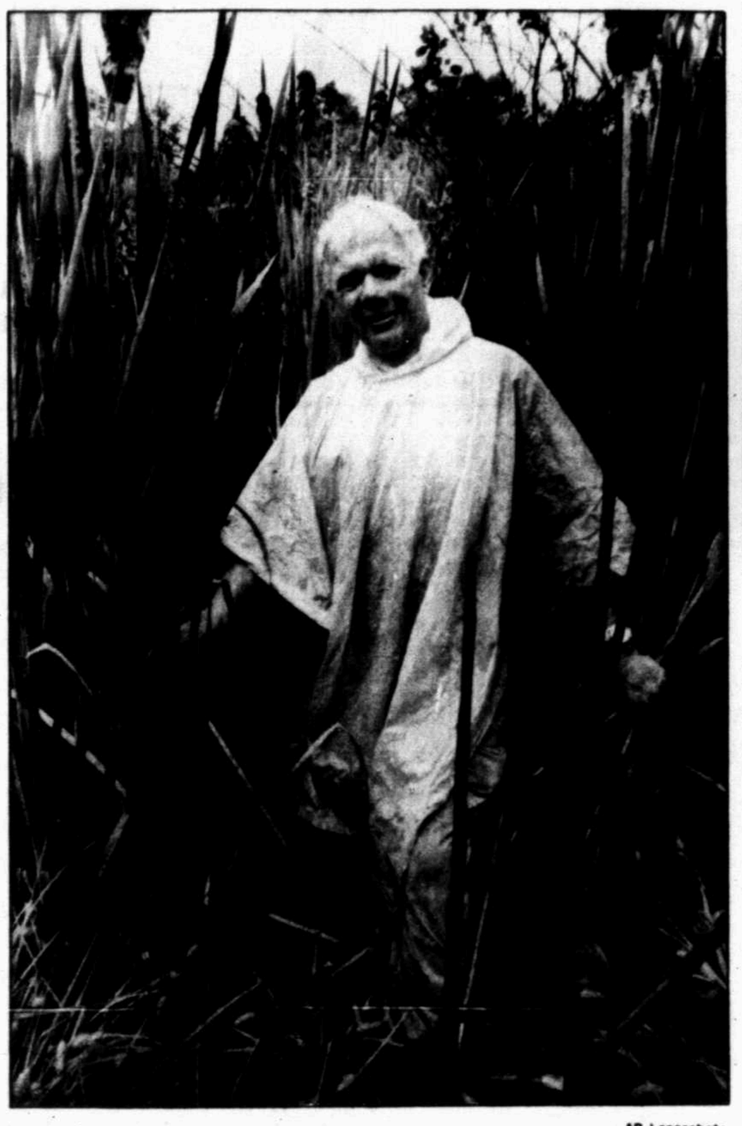

"It's not a panacea, but we see this as being one of the best possibilities we have for correcting a lot of the acid mine seepages throughout the nation."

Acid drainage is now being treated with caustic soda or limestone, which neutralizes the discharge. But the method means adding an expensive chemical and requires constant upkeep. If a coal company goes bankrupt, the treatment stops and nature has a chronic wound.

Cattail marshes occur naturally and are self-sustaining. Researchers know little about how and why cattail marshes work, Kleinmann says, but the method has so much promise coal companies are rushing to plant them.

The remedy means money. Coal companies are now required to put up bonds to insure they return mined areas to an acceptable state. Their bonds are held up if acid drainage is bleeding from the ground.

"The mining companies are so desperate for a solution to treatment costs they're not waiting for research," Kleinmann says. "Even if a car can only go 20 mph and can't get out of first gear, it will still get you somewhere. Hey, it's cheap. It's a low-cost gamble.

Summer theater gives youths chance to act

HOUSTON (AP) — About 25 underprivileged teen-agers are becoming stars this summer instead of criminals, thanks to the Houston International Theater School.

Operation Sunshine, a pilot summer theater program conducted by the school, gives youths living in city projects a chance to perform real life dramas.

Scenes from "The Me Nobody Knows," a light rock musical about growing up in the ghetto, will be performed by the teenage troupe. The play was written by New York ghetto children in the 1970s.

"It gives the children material they could be successful with," said Operation Sunshine director Kelly Daigle. "It deals with their feelings about having my heart's desire prohibited and knowing I'll never have all the things I want."

The scene-week program, financed by the city, teaches underprivileged youths how to present themselves confidently and now allows them to share the theater with families and friends at projects for the next two weeks, said Esther Delpolyi, a spokeswoman for the Houston Housing Authority.

"I want to do this again next year if they have it," said participant James Lockridge, 17.

Ms. Delpolyi said the youths, whose ages range between 14 to 18, were not excited about the theater and one teen runaway even dropped out.

"But when they got to the HITS theater, it was like, boom, the lights went on," she said.

Contra leaders educating troops against human rights violations

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Leaders of the Contra rebels fighting the Sandinista government in Nicaragua say they have begun educating their troops against human rights violations.

Each guerrilla now goes off to battle with a plastic card outlining the principles of human rights.

They also are given a blue and white code of conduct pamphlet written by the main Contra group, the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, and an International Red Cross booklet outlining guidelines established under the Geneva Convention, an international agreement establishing fair wartime practices.

The introduction to the Contra pamphlet says: "This code of conduct should not be just something to be carried in the knapsacks of the freedom fighter, but should be an essential part of his feelings and thoughts, to serve as an example of what our fight implies and what motivates us."

The Contras, who are supported by the United States, have come under criticism on charges that some of their guerrillas have violated the human rights of people living in the areas they infiltrate in Nicaragua, as well as in Honduras where they are based.

An investigatory office was set up in Costa Rica earlier this year to look into the charges.

"We are the first democratic guerrillas in Latin America," Indalecio Rodriguez, a director for the Democratic Force, known as the FDN, said in an interview in his office here. "We unilaterally have decided to follow the Geneva Convention. We are trying to change our image so people know who we really are."

Alleged human rights abuses by the Contras have been the focus of several reports by international organizations, including Americas Watch and Amnesty International, which also did not absolve Nicaragua's Soviet-armed Sandinista soldiers of blame.

But the Sandinistas' actions are not accountable to the United States, which following Senate approval will supply $100 million in aid to the Contras. The money is bound to put rebel behavior under closer U.S. scrutiny.

Asked about the human rights violations, Contra leader Arturo Cruz said: "It's been a curse. But it's not true that there has been a policy to abuse human rights."

The rebels have set up their own human rights commission to investigate abuses and stave off criticism.

"One of the challenges is to make the human rights commission really credible," said Cruz, one of three heads of the United Nicaraguan Opposition, an umbrella group for the armed rebels.

The head of the commission, Roberto Ferrey, acknowledged that a large number of alleged Contra crimes had been reported in Nicaragua and Honduras, ranging from murder and rape to robbery and torture.

Ferrey said efforts are being made to bring those responsible to justice.

The Contras' code of conduct lists crimes it says its fighters can be punished for: murder, torture or inhumane treatment, including biological experiments; illegal deportation, intentional suffering, forced recruitment, the taking of hostages, the deliberate destruction of goods and attacks on civilians.

"An FDN member who robs and pillages will be penalized with six months to two years of detention and dishonorable expulsion from the movement," the 53-page pamphlet says.

It adds that a member found to have committed murder will be detained for three years "with the obligation to work for the FDN" and dishonorably discharged.

The punishment is light compared to civilian criminal codes, but this is explained by the nature of a guerrilla organization which precludes an established prison system for long incarcerations; capital punishment is not standard in Latin America.

"Every armed group has established a military monitor and we can do independent investigations," Ferrey said. "Of course, the problem is we can't go into Nicaragua to investigate."

He said his group has sent teams to record complaints from Nicaraguan refugees in Honduras, but he added that the program has been slow in starting.

Ferrey said that human rights and fair wartime practices are being taught during basic training of recruits, who then are given the plastic cards laying down guidelines.

"It is generally well accepted," he said. "But some are cynical. They think human rights are used only as a means to attack them. And they want to know how a piece of plastic will protect them against the armed Sandinistas."

Contra rebels based in Costa Rica recently turned over a Sandinista prisoner of war to the International Red Cross, Ferrey said, "and within two weeks they saw him back fighting. It's not easy."

The rebel code of conduct stands in marked contrast to a manual on guerrilla warfare techniques formerly distributed to the Contras by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

The International Court of Justice in The Hague in the Netherlands has ruled that the manual "has encouraged the commssion by (the Contras) of acts contrary to general principles of humanitarian law."

Bush's Mid-East tour could give America chance to 'seize peace'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush returned to the United States today after a 10-day Middle East tour that he and his advisers say gives America the chance "to seize the initiative for peace" in the troubled area.

Bush, speaking with reporters as he flew back aboard Air Force II after visits to Israel, Jordan and Egypt, said Tuesday, "There are not many times when you get three countries in this day and age to agree on anything."

At a news conference in Cairo, Egypt, before flying to the U.S. air base at Mildenhall on his way home, Bush said, "I am convinced that there is enough common ground for progress to be made in the peace process."

His spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said that during talks with Israeli Prime Minster Shimon Peres on the first stop of the tour, Bush "began to feel that there might be a new flexibility, and a new opportunity, to seize the initiative for peace."

Fitzwater said a message Bush carried from Peres to Jordan's King Hussein when he flew to Amman "indicated that the two countries had many common purposes which might be the basis for a new peace discussion."

While in Jordan, Bush and key aides discussed "a concept paper... that stated several principles of common purpose," Fitzwater said, and it was cabled to John Poindexter, President Reagan's national security adviser.

Poindexter reviewed the file with Secretary of State George P. Shultz and sent back an approved statement for the vice president's use, according to Fitzwater.

He said a revised paper "was drafted incorporating the views expressed by King Hussein, as well as Secretary Shultz and Adm. Poindexter on behalf of President Reagan."

Fitzwater said the next morning, Jordan's prime minister, Zayd al-Rafai told reporters, "As far as we can tell, on the whole, there is nothing new" in what Bush had submitted.

The spokesman gave the following account of the developments:

Bush met with Hussein to review the statement and "there were some points of concern." There were expressions Bush wanted in the statement that Hussein did not agree to, and "others objected, too, to some of our original ideas."

When he arrived in Cairo Sunday, the vice president sent a cable to Reagan containing "his own personal reflections on his meetings with Peres and Hussein."

On Monday, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak referred the draft statement to his foreign minister, Esmat Abdel Meguid, and Fitzwater quoted Meguid as saying, "That is music to my ears."

Bush had an aide call U.S. Ambassador Thomas Pickering in Jerusalem to have him brief Peres, and the Israeli prime minister suggested changes dealing with economic development and terrorism.

At about 4 a.m. Tuesday, Bush cabled a revised draft to Tel Aviv and Amman for comment.

"When we got downstairs at 2:30 (p.m., for Bush's news conference), we had not reached final agreement on some of the language," Fitzwater said.

Bolivian police, Army destroy six cocaine labs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bolivian police, aided by U.S. helicopters and Army troops, have destroyed six cocaine laboratories, and Bolivian farmers are showing new interest in switching to legal crops as a result, a top U.S. official says.

Ambassador Edward M. Rowell told a news conference Tuesday that the six laboratories — all burned to the ground by Bolivian police — had a potential production capacity of 5 to 5½ tons a week.

Rowell said the operation has also destroyed 289 other types of facilities involved in cocaine production.

He said the operation is having the intended side effect of forcing down the value of coca leaves, thus prompting farmers to consider switching to alternate crops, such as citrus fruits, rice and beans.

"We're seeing the first signs of the kind of reaction we were hoping this whole operation would produce," Rowell said.

The operation is continuing with its complement of six U.S. Black Hawk helicopters and about 170 U.S. soldiers, Rowell said, adding that the program may someday be run entirely by Bolivians. The U.S. troops assist in transporting the Bolivian police and are not involved in raids on the cocaine installations, he said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Thatcher to have surgery performed on right hand

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will have surgery performed on her right hand Wednesday and is expected to spend three to five days in the hospital.

She was driven to King Edward VII's Hospital for Officers in the Marylebone district of London's West End on Tuesday after a mini-summit of Commonwealth leaders.

Her condition is known as Dupuytren's contracture, for the French surgeon who first described it, and involves an inward contraction of the little finger that pulls it toward the palm.

Staff members at her No. 10 Downing Street office said she has had the condition for 10 years and it is not serious. The hand is expected to be in a sling for up to a month.

A bulge was visible at the base of Mrs. Thatcher's little fingers. Doctors say that without surgery the problem could cause deformity and loss of the hand's function.

Lord Whitelaw, the deputy prime minister, will be in nominal charge of the government.

Mrs. Thatcher, 60, was hospitalized last in 1983 for surgery on a detached retina in her right eye, but government papers were delivered to her regularly for study and decision.

When the planned surgery became public last week, she joked to members of the House of Lords: "I am not risking going into the next general election without a good right arm."

Pilots safe as jets crash

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Three Mirage jet fighters of the Venezuelan air force crashed Tuesday in stormy weather while returning from a training flight but all three pilots managed to parachute to safety, the Defense Ministry said.

Defense Ministry spokesman Ennio Torres Izarra said four jets had conducted target practice and were returning to base when three of the single-seat craft crashed at 10 a.m. because of "adverse meteorological conditions."

He said the fourth Mirage landed at the Libertador air force base at Palo Negro, 40 miles west of Caracas.

Radio America, a station in Valencia 75 miles southwest of Caracas, had quoted civil defense and air force officials as saying the French-built jet fighters collided while flying in formation through bad weather.

But reporters from the newspaper Noti-Tarde in Valencia said they interviewed one of the downed pilots and he said the planes ran out of fuel when the weather over the Libertador base forced the pilots to look for other landing sites.

Noti-Tarde identified the pilots as majors Oscar Perez Escalona, Leonardo Blas Valdes and William Castro Soteldo.

It said they were rescued uninjured by civil defense and air force personnel within two hours after they had ejected from their planes.

One pilot was found in Carabobo state 75 miles west of Caracas and the two others about 25 miles farther west, the newspaper said, attributing its report to air force sources.

It said all three jets crashed inside a military controlled zone and placed the locations at 62, 110 and 130 miles west of Caracas.

Radio America had reported the officials in Valencia said only one parachute was seen after the planes disappeared. It also said the number of crewmen involved was not immediately knwon because the air force has both the single-pilot and the pilot-and-navigator versions of the Mirage.

Venezuela bought 15 Mirage jet fighters from France about 15 years ago and four were lost in previous crashes. Tueday's accident left the air force with only eight Mirages.

In recent years the government has made major purchases of military equipment to modernize the armed forces.

In 1983 it purchased 24 U.S.-made F-16s at a cost of $615 million, and earlier this year it bought 30 Tucano trainer planes from Brazil for $52.5 million.

Impostor says story a hoax

BERLIN (AP) — A man who claimed to have escaped from communist East Berlin by dressing himself and three mannequins in Soviet military uniforms has admitted his story was a hoax, a television network reported.

The ARD network, quoting unidentifed Allied sources, reported Tuesday that Heinz Braun had said he invented the story he told a Friday news conference about driving through the Berlin Wall in a station wagon painted to resemble a Soviet patrol vehicle.

In its public affairs program "Contrast," ARD said Braun, 48, gave an "oral confession" during questioning by military authorities of the Western Allies last weekend.

Thomas Homan, spokesman for the U.S. diplomatic mission in West Berlin, would not confirm or deny the television report. He said Tuesday night that the American, British and French authorities who oversee Berlin's Western sector had agreed to make no statement on the Braun matter.

He confirmed earlier in the day that Braun was questioned over the weekend, but refused further comment.

Dieter Piete, spokesman for the West Berlin police, said they did not register passage of a Soviet patrol car at the Invalidenstrasse crossing point on the night of July 30, when Braun said he passed through it.

Uniformed military patrols of the Soviet Union and the three Western Allies may pass freely between the divided city's Eastern and Western zones under the terms of occupation agreements.

Calligrapher changing bad penmanship

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Everybody complains about penmanship, but few do anything about it.

Calligrapher Bob Lampee, unhappy with the scribbles and chicken scratches he sees, is trying to change that.

Children have been taught manuscript printing in the first grade for the past century. It is legible, but "as slow as molasses" and 6-year-olds have trouble making circles with their fat pencils, said Lampee, founder of the Calligraphic Society of Arizona and owner of a calligraphy business that hand letters certificates, diplomas and other documents and publications.

Lampee says that in the third grade, about the time children are mastering manuscript as a form of handwriting, they are taught what is called commercial cursive. With its loops and slants, it is difficult for children to learn and can be difficult to read, he said.

The switch from printing to commercial cursive handwriting is often traumatic for children, Lampee noted.

Commercial cursive writing also "falls apart" and becomes illegible when students try to write with any speed, he said.

As an example of the failure of handwriting techniques used in this country, Lampee points to the 45 million pieces of mail each year that end up in the U.S. Postal Service dead-letter file, mostly because of illegibly written addresses.

He proposes teaching children a form of handwriting known as italic, which is based on a 16th-century script known as Chancery. Italic is legible and fast, Lampee pointed out, adding that students, teachers and parents seem to like it when he has taught it free in more than 80 school workshops.

Italic also is a beautiful handwriting and it demands attention, which increases one's ability to communicate, he said.

In Oregon, the state Board of Education approved italic as an optional form of handwriting in 1974, and the Portland school system has adopted italic as its form of handwriting instruction, Lampee said. Sweden adopted italic nationally and it is used in other schools in Europe, he said.

First-graders could learn to form the italic letters with a regular pen or pencil and in second grade they could be taught to form the letters smaller. By third grade, the students could begin using a broad-edged pen that gives italic its characteristic look, Lampee said.

He said that using the inexpensive pens would be a reward for the students.

Liar's Branch president proud of never telling truth

By MARY ANN KREPS

HAMILTON (AP) — J.A. "Flintrock" Hodges is the biggest liar in Hamilton County, if not the Lone Star State. And he's darn proud of it.

As president of Liar's Branch over the past 38 years, Hodges claims to have lived up easily to the club's only motto — "Don't ever be caught telling the truth."

And it's hard not to, er, believe him.

Liar's Branch consists of two members — "Just me and the public," Hodges said. It was a legacy handed down to Hodges from a man he leased land from in 1948. The land contained a creek called Liar's Branch.

Hodges and his wife, Myrtle, live in a big, white farmhouse with a huge front porch just right for sittin' and rockin' while listening to Hodges' yarns.

In his faded overalls, the Hodges' bright blue eyes shine as he launches into one of his favorite tales, followed every time by a big toothless grin. Mrs. Hodges, who has heard each tale more times than she can count during their 51 years of marriage, still laughs heartily at every punch line.

"Right there, east of where I used to live, that was a rough country. What I mean, it was noted for its flintrock, ya know," Hodges says in his country twang.

"Another boy asks me, he says, 'Hey, how in the world did y'all keep shoes up there in those flintrocks?' I said, 'Well, we didn't have no shoes. We was so poor we couldn't buy 'em.'

"He says 'Well, how in the world did you get along?'

"Well, our old feet got so tough the flintrocks didn't bother us a bit," Hodges said.

"He said, 'Well, did you ever get caught out after night? Did you ever have a light? How in the world did you see your way to get out of there?'

"I said, 'Well, when it come night on me I just struck up a trot and kicked the tar out of them rocks and just lit up the field and went right on in home.'

"So that's where I got the name Flintrock."

Hodges acknowledges that a few of his tall tales have been stolen from others during yarn-swapping sessions, but he says most are originals he thought up while working on his farm.

"I'd just be riding that tractor and the idea would hit. For years I'd be riding that old tractor, you know, and get to thinking about things like that and I'd even get tickled at myself," Hodges said.

Hodges' fame has been confined mostly to Hamilton-area locals although radio personality Tumbleweed Smith visited about six years ago with a recorder and taped some of his tall tales.

Occasionally, Flintrock Hodges' yarns can still be heard on the radio although Hodges has never heard himself.

He has confined his story-telling to sitting around the front porch or the domino parlor with his friends and has never spoken in public. He says he couldn't do it. "I'd get excited and couldn't think of a thing," he said.

The 74-year-old quit farming last year after he figured out one day that his farm was gobbling up more money than it was earning him. Now, although suffering from arthritis, Hodges mows lawns to make ends meet.

"I farmed for 52 years and never had $100 in my pocket. I've been mowing lawns for six months and now I've got $100 in my pocket. Of course now, that's a pretty big yarn," he said with a grin.

Another of his tales goes like this:

"Up here on the cowhouse west of Hamilton way back there — must have been about 1935, dry and hot — there was some cattle froze to death in August.

"That old boy had four rows of popcorn planted along the fence, and the wind was blowing out of the south real hard. It got so hot the corn went to poppin' and them cows though it was snowin'."

But there was the time he almost lost his title as president of Liar's Branch.

A group of men were sitting around discussing the tough chores their parents asigned them when they were young when one of the men piped up with a story. "He said, 'Boys, I'll admit y'all had some pretty tough chores assigned to you. But the toughest one Pa ever assigned me was when we moved from Oklahoma to Texas in covered wagons. Pa had me drive a swarm of bees across the Red River.'

Hodges was called upon to top that one, and he failed. "That's the nearest I come to losing my office. The only thing that saved me there was my seniority," Hodges said.

Mrs. Hodges said when Hodges friends see him, the first thing they want is a story.

"If I'm in a hurry I tell 'em I quit," Hodges said. "And then they know that's the biggest lie of all."

UNESCO's press

Constructive criticism is commentary which includes well-documented evidence of a program or organization's flaws and a concrete suggestion of an alternate way to seek the proposed goal. A case in point is the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and its attack on the world press.

UNESCO wastes time and money conducting theoretical studies about the world's press. These studies serve no useful purpose and should be abandoned, according to a recent report by the International Federation of Newspaper Publishers (FIEJ).

The challenge to UNESCO to change course came from publishers in 27 countries. FIEJ includes publishers' associations in the United States, Japan, India, Western Europe and some countries in Latin America. In its opinion the theoretical projects should be replaced by more concrete efforts to help the press, especially in developing nations.

This latest negative criticism comes as no surprise to those who have been watching UNESCO's wayward ways in recent years. The UN body is supposed to champion freedom of the press and contribute to the free flow of information throughout the world. Instead, its leadership has concerned itself with getting governments involved in gathering and distributing news, and suggestions for licensing journalists. That is one of the reasons the United States withdrew its membership and its money from the Paris-based organization at the end of last year.

UNESCO's leaders should take seriously the proposals from a group of highly responsible publishers — individuals who are well aware of the impact of constructive criticism. A hope for reform often has been expressed in the past, but it has turned out to be forlorn. If UNESCO is to achieve the missions for which it was founded nearly a half century ago, drastic changes in its press policies should be a first order of business at the next meeting of the board of directors.

FIEJ has made its own concrete contribution to press freedom by its constructive critique of UNESCO.

Another View: Kremlin reforms?

WASHINGTON — A new "reform manifesto," distinctive for being presented as the work of members of the elite, not of dissidents, came out of Moscow the other day, courtesy of NBC News and the Manchester Guardian. It has sparked a certain lively discussion of who might have written and surfaced it and What It Means.

One more underground document, to be sure, is no big deal, even one endorsing such tantalizing un-Russian ideas as a multiparty system — justified on the ingenious grounds that with socialism now triumphant the requirement for a single-party dictatorship of the proletariat is no more. This one, dated November 1985, could be simply the last going-public gasp of a few frustrated souls who'd tried and failed to get some of their ideas into broader circulation through the window of permitted ferment before the February Communist Party Congress.

All the same, the broader question underlying the curiosity about all such expressions remains. It's whether Mikhail Gorbachev could yet father reforms that might be much less ambitious than the ones recommended here but momentous in their way.

The Guardian's hopeful intimation that democrats are bidding to burst out of their Kremlin closets is silly and not nearly so interesting as the possibility that the pressures forcing the Politburo to consider reform are strong and, if anything, getting stronger. The basic pressures come from low growth, low initiative and low morale, and are compounded by the American challenge. To these have been added the fresh embarrassments of Chernobyl, the collapse in the price of oil (Moscow's leading dollar earner) and — the unkindest cut — the fall in the value of the dollar.

Internal critiques, freeswinging to a point, have been a feature of the Russian establishment for years, if not centuries, and the patronage that Gorbachev seems to have offered some of the critics has caught up Western Kremlin watchers. Indeed, this is the basis of speculation that the KGB put out this latest document in order to smear its adherents, or even Gorbachev himself, for thinking to follow in the footsteps of Alexander Dubcek — the Czech communist-turned-reformer who was removed by Soviet tanks in 1968.

What counts, however, is the point up to which the critiques are freeswinging. Generally, they describe vividly the mess Soviet society is in but, after calling for a loosening of central economic control, stop at anything that comes near suggesting a loosening of the Communist Party's central political control.

Gorbachev himself has yet to go even this far. Though he is regarded as a reformer in the West, mostly he just promises greater "openness" in the press-public discussion of problems and subordinates' performance, for instance, and demands for harder work, personal accountability and less drinking. By this leadership style, says Seweryn Bialer, a Columbia University scholar with unusual access in Moscow, Gorbachev is not trying to make sweeping changes but to avoid sweeping changes.

Last summer, Bialer recalls in his new book, "The Soviet Paradox," Gorbachev warned the comrades in Eastern Europe not to look at the market as a life-saver — some of the East Europeans have dipped a toe in the market and the Chinese have a whole leg in it. Think not about life-savers "but about the ship, and the ship is socialism," he said. Translation: do nothing to threaten the Soviet Union's control of its empire.

Not by accident does Gorbachev pass up use of the term "reform" for the unlovely but carefully chosen words "improve the economic mechanism" — that is, make the existing system work better. Bialer does not dismiss this approach as meaningless. He points out, as others have, that there is plenty of slack to be taken up in the wasteful and inefficient Soviet system — a system whose chosen symbols remain the old-fashioned hand tools, the hammer and sickle. But this is a way of escaping the requirement for economic reform and obviating the possibility of the political reform spoken of in the Moscow document.

With everything, nonetheless, a small space remains in Russia where a few people are courageous or desperate enough to think fugitive thoughts about another way. The new document at least has the value of reminding us that such possibilities are more than the figment of a Western imagination.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

At 8:15 a.m. local time, Aug. 6, 1945, an American B-29 Superfortress, the "Enola Gay," dropped an atomic bomb on Hiroshima, Japan. The bomb killed an estimated 80,000 people outright, not including those who died later from radiation poisoning.

On this date:

In 1806, the Holy Roman Empire went out of existence as Emperor Francis I abdicated.

In 1825, Bolivia declared its independence from Peru.

In 1890, the electric chair was first used, at a prison in Auburn, N.Y. The execution of convicted murderer William Kemmler raised a storm of controversy over whether the chair was humane.

A new milestone in race against AIDS

WASHINGTON — In a desperate race against time, doctors and scientists are trying to find a cure for AIDS, the virus-borne disease that destroys its victims' immune systems with fatal results. So far, one of the brightest hopes for AIDS patients is an experimental drug that has — temporarily at least — held the crippling virus at bay in limited tests.

Jack Anderson

The drug is azidothymidine, or AZT. It is manufactured by Burroughs Wellcome Co. at Research Triangle Park in North Carolina. "AZT is an experimental drug first identified as possibly being effective in the treatment of AIDS in the spring of last year," explained Tom Kennedy, a vice president of Burroughs Wellcome.

Following this tentative discovery, the first scientific testing began last fall on 19 patients at several different institutions, including the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. Fifteen of the patients given AZT showed increases in the number of cells that are part of the human body's natural immune system.

Word of that success, though hardly a cure, spread throughout the medical community with predictable results: Demand for the drug became enormous.

"Thousands of people are asking for the drug," Kennedy told us. "It's a whole, big, complex issue of attempting to determine whether or not these things work, against a desire to get the drugs, period."

The company has received hundreds of calls from AIDS patients and their families. Some fatally stricken patients have even walked into the company headquarters building lobby to beg for the drug. "It's a very difficult, emotional issue with all of us in the shop right now because it is a life-and-death matter," Kennedy said.

The latest statistics show that 10,475 men, women and children are now dying of AIDS. From all these thousands, just 28 have had the privilege of being AZT guinea pigs at the National Institutes of Health. One of these, as we reported, was the recently deceased Roy Cohn, the New York celebrity attorney who cut his professional teeth on suspected subversives in the 1950s as chief red-hunter for the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis.

A spokeswoman for the government hospital vehemently denied that anyone could use political connections to get admitted to the AZT program. She explained that the extremely selective process requires potential patients to fit an exacting "protocol," or criteria for the clinical testing. Applicants are usually referred by physicians across the country, and are subject to review by at least one professional committee.

An NIH nurse who has dealt with AIDS patients told us the new drug has demonstrated an ability to "kick up the immune system enough ... so they don't get pneumocystis (pneumonia), which is the biggest killer."

The nurse, who requested anonymity, added: "It's a drug that can actually hold the AIDS patients where they are and keep them from getting any worse. It does not cure. And they are well aware of that. But what it does is buy them a year, maybe two, maybe three. We don't know yet. We're only up to about a year now — of time — so that bigger and better drugs that might be able to kill (the virus might come along)."

One of Cohn's doctors, Robert Yarchoan, has emphasized that "although patients receiving azidothymidine showed some improvements, they still have AIDS." He added: "We do not know if the drug will be useful for patients in the long run. We have no evidence that AZT is a cure for AIDS."

Footnote: Because the drug testing program will be expanded by the end of the year, AIDS patients interested in treatment may have their physicians contact the Medical Department of Burroughs Wellcome at 919-248-3000. Individual patients or family members should NOT call.

UNDER THE DOME: Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is more like Caspar the Unfriendly Ghost to some members of Congress. A study made for Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., showed that in the 20-year period ending in 1984, defense secretaries averaged 70 hours a year of testimony before Congress. Weinberger's average is 26 hours. The Pentagon official who was seen most often on Capitol Hill last year was former assistant secretary Lawrence Korb — who recently was fired from his job with a defense contractor after Navy officials complained about his heretical views on the Pentagon budget.

FLIMFLAM: The South African embassy here has just produced a 15-minute videotape it evidently hopes will quell the call for sanctions against the white-minority regime. With the U.S. Capitol as a picturesque backdrop, the film's narrator pushes a dubious "Good Neighbor" theme: Sanctions against South Africa will harm all 12 nations in southern Africa, which depend on Pretoria as an economic lifeline. No mention is made of South Africa's military invasions of several of its good neighbors.

MINI-EDITORIAL: The obscene practice of grave robbing should be a thing of the past, but unhappily it is not. No sooner had the latest scientific expedition to the sunken British liner Titanic renewed interest in the 74-year-old tragedy than an entrepreneur announced plans to loot the wreckage and sell the retrieved artifacts as souvenirs. This ghoulish exercise deserves to be discouraged firmly by Congress, which is considering legislation that would forbid disturbing the watery grave of 1,500 men, women and children. Let them rest in peace.

Faint rumors of reform in the Soviet Union

PARIS — The mysterious document brought from Moscow by the correspondent of The Guardian of London may be a fake, but it is an interesting comment on the Soviet atmosphere behind the scenes nonetheless.

Flora Lewis

It is purportedly a manifesto written by some senior officials calling for dramatic reform, with full freedom of press and speech and contending political groups. The police apparently knew about it, because they confiscated a second copy, which NBC's correspondent also received and tried to take out of the country.

The Guardian's correspondent himself warned in his article that the manifesto might have been a provocation from anti-Gorbachev factions trying to block essentially modest economic reforms by showing where they could lead. But he tended to believe it authentic. After publication, experts in London said they thought it was a falsification by emigre Russians, given to Western reporters in Moscow so as to make it credible.

Still, if its real origins were Soviet whether in earnest or as an attempt to discredit the general secretary, Mikhail Gorbachev, it would show that some political ferment is going on well beyond what is visible.

And even if it was concocted in the West in hopes of stirring up new ideas, it shows that the debate among the Soviet elite seems to have reached a point where some challenge to the rigid system is conceivable within the ruling Communist Party.

In China, where economic reform has gone far beyond anything suggested by Gorbachev, there is apparently another start on examining what kind of political changes might be required to accompany the new economic methods and make sure they work effectively.

This has been tried twice before in China, in Mao Tse-tung's "Hundred Flowers" period and when Deng Xiaoping allowed "Democracy Wall" to air repressed views in Peking. Both times, Chinese who dared to participate paid a heavy penalty.

People are likely to be chary about advancing challenges to the Leninist system this time. But even the suggestion of political change shows an awareness that something more than market competition and material incentive is needed to modernize the society.

Soviet citizens who are important enough to be well informed know a lot about what is going on in China. There is a certain tendency to be disdainful, since the Chinese Communists have such a drastic zigzag record and the country's technological and living standards are way behind the those of the Soviet Union. But progress has been extraordinary, and Soviet officials must be concerned if the Chinese find a better way to run the socialist system.

Parts of the Moscow document come from various studies done in Soviet think tanks, which the dubious experts concede since some of these studies have trickled Westward. So it may well be that the argument for political reform to give more substance to the effort for greater economic vigor is starting in pockets of Soviet officialdom.

This would be very different from the courageous but futile activity of dissidents, who have no real influence in their country. If anything does begin to move in Soviet society, it would have to come from upper and middle party ranks because the rest of the people have long shut off any notion of political thought beyond mouthing slogans.

There seems to be a human law of social change that a little whets the appetite for more. That is why Soviet leaders are so fearful of releasing natural momentum, though they have also had to learn that no change means decay.

The New York Times's Harrison Salisbury reported after many sessions with high-level Moscow officials that the Chernobyl accident and its handling had strengthened Gorbachev's conservative critics. Perhaps he is being more cautious out of weakness, or perhaps he doesn't want to go further or faster. Success in negotiating a major agreement with the United States would certainly bolster him.

The signals of subsurface movement in Moscow are faint, as always. They should not be overestimated. But they should not be ignored on the assumption that Communists are all and always the same. This is a time to watch closely and skeptically, to examine assumptions about what could happen in the Soviet Union. Something may be germinating.

Buying firearms in Paris is no easy matter

PARIS — You would think that after all the United States has done for Europe, the least the Europeans could do is make it easy for an American to buy a gun. But such is not the case and, in spite of their great claims to being civilized, the Europeans are still living in the dark ages when it comes to making firearms available to the public.

Art Buchwald

I discovered this accidentally when I was overcharged by a waiter in a Left Bank cafe. He claimed that it was an accident, but I knew he did it on purpose.

I told my wife I was getting sick and tired of being pushed around, and the only thing to do was buy a gun and carry it with me at all times. Then if someone tried to overcharge me, I'd let him have it.

"Isn't that a bit strong?" my wife asked.

"Can you think of a better reason for using a gun than when you get the business from a surly waiter?"

The next day I went to a gun store near the Paris Opera and told them I wanted a revolver. "What do you want it for?" the dealer asked.

"I am an American citizen," I said, "and according to our Constitution, I am allowed to bear arms, any place, any time, anywhere. Now be a good man and give me a gun."

"We cannot sell a gun just like that, Monsieur," the dealer said. "We have regulations in France concerning guns."

"Regulations?" I said incredulously. "What on earth for?"

"The French government does not want everyone in the country to have a gun. There is too much chance of accidents."

"That doesn't bother us in the United States," I said, with a certain amount of pride. "Do you know last year we had over 5,000 people killed by firearms alone?"

"Alas," said the dealer sadly. "We only had 12. The rules here are too strict."

"Don't you have a National Rifle Association?"

"We have something like it, but Parliament tells them what they can or cannot do."

"In my country," I boasted, "the National Rifle Association tells Congress what it can or cannot do."

"Quelle chance," the dealer said. "Please, sir, what can I do for you?"

"I want a gun to shoot surly cafe waiters."

"Tres bien, fill out these papers. Then go to your local police station with all your identification, and explain to them why you want a gun."

"Good, and then I can have it?"

"No, not yet. They will investigate you for three months. After that they will send their recommendation to the main police station, which will ask why the local police station gave permission to let you have the gun. This will take three more months. If they agree, you can come back and buy the gun."

"Six months to get a lousy gun?"

"That's for the gun. Buying ammunition requires another investigation."

"Do you know if we had red tape like that in America, almost nobody would be able to own a revolver?"

"That's why we don't sell too many revolvers," the dealer said. "Do you want to start filling out the papers?"

"No, I don't, and if the French had sense they'd permit Americans to buy handguns just by showing their passports. How else can we protect ourselves from waiters while we're traveling abroad?"

Stutterers regain self-esteem in five-week summer program

GENESEO, N.Y. (AP) — One after another, they raise their hands and volunteer to stutter and stammer in front of a group of people, unafraid of being called stupid or getting laughed at.

At the Geneseo State College stuttering clinic, they're among fellow stutterers who come to the five-week program to learn how to stop feeling ashamed about their speech.

"They come here and say do with me what you will," said Pat Sacco, who runs the annual summer clinic.

Tom Murray came from Sandusky, Ohio, because he wants to help his father run for Congress. Rose Moussa came from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., to teach her 4-year-old son that people can overcome their problems. And 12-year-old Robin Kurzel came because she wants to talk better in the eighth grade.

They spend their time stuttering — in front of the whole clinic, to store clerks in the village, to the college president, to the Kiwanis Club and to each other.

"Now I want you to use this lunch hour: find one person you don't know, in the cafeteria or outside, and stutter at them," says Sacco, sipping coffee from a cup bearing the slogan, "Some people c-c-can't start their d-d-day without c-c-coffee."

Stuttering is a speech problem that affects an estimated 2 million Americans, and one that decades of research has been unable to solve.

"It's a very complicated problem and I think ultimately we'll discover that it's a series of different disorders that may be different from stutterer to stutterer," said Dr. James Lingwall, director of professional affairs department at the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association.

Lingwall, who researched stuttering for 20 years before joining the association, says more research is being done into whether stuttering is a physical, psychological or environmental problem.

"I believe we'll find evidence that one individual may stutter for one reason and another for a different reason, and if we can get that far we can match up individuals with specific treatment designed for them. But we have a long way to go," Lingwall said from his Rockville, Md., office.

John Ahlbach, executive director of the San Francisco-based National Stuttering Project, illustrates the frustration people who stutter face with a story about an 11-year-old girl who was asked to read in front of class and tried for 90 seconds to get out the first word of the passage: "I."

"Finally, she stopped and turned to the person next to her and said, 'I just can't say that word,'" said Ahlbach.

Helicopters, blimps joined in sky an unlikely sight?

By DOUG FISHER

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Bernard Lindenbaum has this idea for dangling a helicopter from a blimp.

If that sounds strange, he explains it's not a lot of hot air. In fact, it could lead to airships with a greater lifting capacity than any designed before.

"You can get the very heavy lift capability from the gas bag at low cost and you get the maneuverability by attaching a helicopter in one way or another," the retired aeronautical engineer said.

Lindenbaum, 69, is retired from Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, where he spent 34 years developing vertical- and short-takeoff and landing aircraft. Now he and two other engineers have formed Aerial Mobility Inc., to develop and market their idea.

"It's a whole new aerospace industry," said J. Paul Bowling, director of the Miami Valley Regional Small Business Incubator in Yellow Springs. He is helping them assemble financing, including a proposal for a state grant for $250,000.

Lindenbaum estimated it would take seven years and $20 million to build a full-scale craft, but said a scale model to prove the concept could be built for $4 million.

The largest helicopter in the world is the Soviet MI-26, which can lift 25 tons, Lindenbaum said. A blimp-helicopter arrangement could lift as much as 75 tons at reasonable cost, he said.

Aside from the possibility of lifting heavy military loads, the blimp-helicopter arrangement would have a wide market for logging, loading and unloading ships and possibly in lifting ready-made homes to their lots, he said.

A study about five years ago for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration projected that a combination with 25 tons of lift capability would sell about 1,000 units at $10 million each, he said.

There would also be a need for about 600 75-ton units at about $30 million each, Lindenbaum said.

A plant making just the 25-ton units would employ 600-700 people, he said.

"So what you're talking about is a pretty big potato if you can make the thing work," said the native New Yorker, who's been working on the idea for about five years.

Lindenbaum's group, which includes Walter Grady, another Wright-Patterson engineer, and David Quam, an engineer from Washington state who worked for Boeing and Lockheed, isn't the first to come up with the idea.

The problem has been giving the blimp, a notoriously sluggish craft, the maneuverability needed for lifting cargo.

One group working with Canadian lumber companies has a blimp rigged with propellers and fins that rotates around the horizontal axis, called the Cyclo-Crane, he said.

Another, the Piasecki Aircraft Corp., is working with the U.S. Forest Service to develop a blimp on a metal frame with four helicopters at the corners.

In that design, the blimp balances the dead weight of the helicopters, but doesn't really contribute to the lift capability, Lindenbaum said. A version of the Heli-Stat caught fire and crashed July 1 at Lakehurst, N.J., killing one crew member.

Lindenbaum says his design is superior because the blimp, attached to the helicopter through a cable made of steel or stronger-than-steel DuPont Kevlar, does most of the lifting.

"Ours is a completely different approach," Lindenbaum said. "It's such an obvious thing to do, why didn't someone think of it before?"

One reason may be because it is tricky to dangle a helicopter from an oversized balloon — about 1 million cubic feet, a third larger than the Goodyear blimp — without having the cable get tangled in the rotor. Lindenbaum said the key was developing a swivel that allows the cable to attach through the center of the rotor.

A helicopter or other propellered vehicle dangled from a 500-foot cable would be able to maneuver within about a 100-foot radius, much like a pendulum, but with power, he said.

Advances easing pain of TMJ woes

ABINGTON, Pa. (AP) — Bothered with headaches? Got a pain in the neck, an aching back, ringing in the ears?

Those hurts may all have the same cause — a joint that operates the jaw, according to Dr. Neil Gottehrer, a dentist who operates the Craniofacial Pain Center with orthopedic surgeon Ronald Greene.

Gottehrer claims Temporomandibular Joint Syndrome, also known as TMJ, causes many unsolved pain problems that people thought they had to live with.

The understanding of TMJ dysfunction is rather new, and is being recognized by an ever-increasing number of medical and dental practitioners, Gottehrer said.

"The head, face and neck are subject to chronic pain more often than any other part of the body," he said during an interview at his suburban Philadelphia center where medical and dental disciplines — a periodontist, an orthopedist, a psychologist and a therapist — work together.

Gottehrer zeroes in on TMJ as the prime source of pain that other health-care professionals ignore.

"It is one of the most misdiagnosed disease entities in medicine," he said. "Medical schools do nothing about TMJ. There is a big zero in instruction.

"The TMJ is an orthopedically functioning joint that is in the mouth, and thus was left to dentistry, and dentistry doesn't do anything about it either. Dentists generally concentrate on teeth and gums," he said.

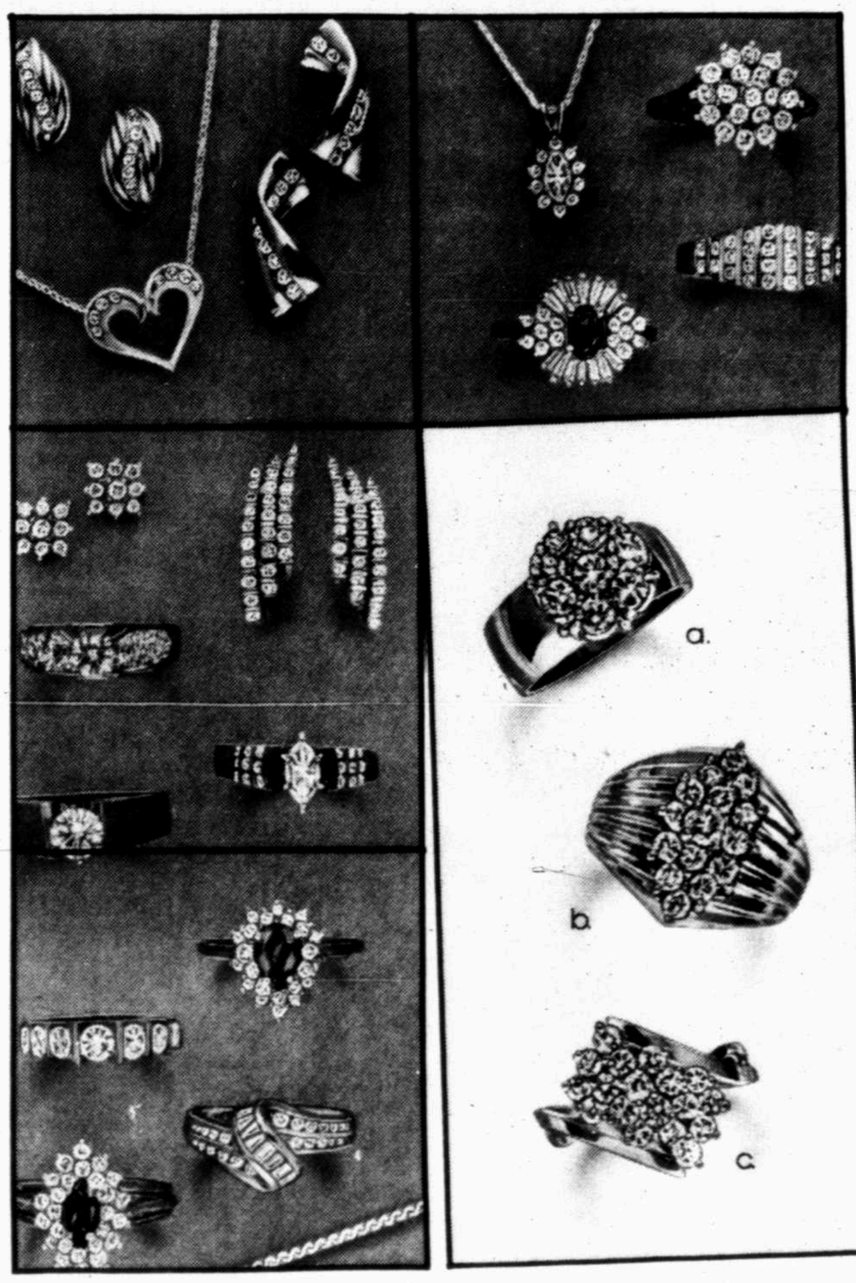

Gottehrer uses sonography, a digital stethoscope, to listen to the jaw joint. If a patient has a particularly noisy jaw which actively clicks when it moves, he knows there is trouble and pain somewhere.

"We're taught to do all kinds of dental procedures but no one ever centered in on that joint which is located directly in front of the ear, on each side of the head," he said.

"It is very unique, making the jaw open and shut, and slide forward. It is more susceptible to injury because it is only secured by soft tissue and muscle and when it isn't functioning properly the bite will change, or shift, and can be the source of headaches, and shoulder, neck and back pain," said Gottehrer.

A bite plate, which is an appliance placed on either the upper or lower teeth, will straighten the joint, eliminate grinding and gritting and also get rid of the pain, Gottehrer said.

Besides the acrylic appliance other successful treatments of TMJ dysfunction include muscle relaxant drugs, muscle exercises and moist heat.

Hot weather will continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Hot, fair weather will continue over the Midland-Odessa area through Thursday, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. A high in the middle 90s is expected once again.

A low in the upper 60s and light southeasterly winds are in the NWS forecast for tonight. Winds will shift to the south at 10-15 mph on Thursday.

Tuesday's high was nine degrees below the record high of 103 set in 1964. This morning's low of 67 was six degrees above the record low set in 1975.

STATE

A tropical weather system that prompted showers and thunderstorms over parts of the lower to middle Coastal Plains pushed the rain inland today across parts of South Texas and the San Antonio metropolitan area.

The National Weather Service said heavy rains drenched parts of the Coastal Bend. More than three inches of rain fell at Corpus Christi through early today.

Port Isabel received more than five inches of rain and reported some street flooding on Tuesday. High winds in Houston twisted signs and damaged a discount store.

Storms and thunderstorms, some producing heavy rain, also continued over the Texas Panhandle and across the northwest corner of the South Plains into eastern New Mexico today.

Otherwise, skies were mostly clear across the rest of the state.

A chance of isolated to widely scattered showers and thunderstorms was expected over sections of North and West Texas this evening. Skies should be fair to partly cloudy. Highs this afternoon will range from the mid to the upper 80s in the mountains and along the coast to the 90s and low 100s elsewhere.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms ranged from the nation's midsection to the Rockies today.

Elsewhere, thundershowers dotted the northern Plains, the south Texas Coast, the Southeast, New York and northern New England.

Fair skies prevailed from the northern Rockies across to inland sections of the Pacific Coast region.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from the Great Lakes across the middle Mississippi Valley, the lower Missouri Valley, Oklahoma, Arkansas and north Texas to the southern Rockies.

Port Isabel gets more than five inches rain

PORT ISABEL (AP) — Showers and thunderstorms generated by a tropical weather system dumped more than five inches of rain on this South Texas city and caused street flooding.

High winds on Tuesday in Houston twisted signs and damaged a K-Mart Discount Store, assistant manager Ray Campbell said. The winds were caused by a tornado that touched down, he said.

The National Weather Service warned residents of the Rio Grande Valley about gusty winds and the potential for more rain through today.

"It was flooded for about two hours, but as soon as it quit raining, it drained out real nice," said Port Isabel Police Chief Lorénzo Rosales. "There were no major problems, just a few cars stranded down the boulevard."

Angels strand 12 in 8-4 loss to Dodgers

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

San Antonio first baseman James Chapman jumps over Midland's Kevin King as he chases down a wild pickoff throw.

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

It might be a good idea if Midland Angel manager Joe Maddon gave his troops a day off to go hunting ducks on a pond.

The Angels stranded 12 ducks on the pond at Angels Stadium Tuesday night in an 8-4 loss to the Texas League's Western Division leading San Antonio Dodgers and that had Maddon a bit upset.

"We just left too many people on the pillows," Maddon said. "We didn't score when we had the opportunity. We kept stranding folks out there.

"We did give up eight runs, but San Antonio may not have scored eight if we had brought home some of those runs and established momentum."

So it was fitting for this game that the Angels stranded a full pond of runners in the bottom of the ninth without scoring against three Dodger pitchers. A key hit there...well, use your imagination.

THE ANGELS collected 13 hits off five Dodger pitchers, the same number of safties as San Antonio's offense, but had half the runs to show for it.

The Angel offense can share some of the blame for this loss, which gave San Antonio a 3-2 series victory, but the Midland bullpen didn't help matters either.

Angel starter Phil Venturino and Dodger starter Barry Wohler tangled in a scoreless duel through four innings of play before the Dodgers got an RBI double from Mike Ramsey and a sacrifice fly from Lenny Faedo for a 2-0 lead in the fifth.

Midland came back to cut the margin to 2-1 in the bottom of the inning when James Randall scored David Heath from third on a fly to right and took a 4-2 lead in the sixth when Kevin King blasted his 21st homer of the year, a two-run bomb that soared well above the scoreboard in left. Pete Coachman delivered an RBI single later in the inning.

That had the bumper Tuesday crowd of 2,290 roaring approval until the fatal seventh when San Antonio sent 11 batters to the plate. Maddon lifted Venturino with one out, one run in and runners at first and third.

It was a move that lacked results. Julian Gonzalez got one out, but gave up two hits and two runs charged to Venturino. Then Maddon called on Randy Harvey, who couldn't get anyone out while giving up a hit, two walks and two of Gonzalez' runners and one of his own on a two-run single by Gary Newsom. Terry Clark came in to get the final out, but it was 8-4.

"It was still the right move to take Phil out. He was getting the ball up in the strike zone. He did get one grounder, but it was a high chopper. Then he walked one and gave up another hit," said Maddon.

DOUG BANNING did pitch two scoreless innings of relief at the end, but damage had been done. San Antonio's staff also used five pitchers, but they were able to pitch out of trouble and the bullpen moves worked.

San Antonio brought in lefty Dennis Livingston in the ninth to face lefty pinch hitter Dave Montanari with two outs and the bases loaded and Montanari flied to center to end the game.

That wasn't the worst of the Angels' woes, however.

"Now we face a beautiful 11-hour bus ride to Beaumont," lamented Maddon. "We're leaving at midnight."

The Angels will be gone for only five days before returning home Monday for a 10 game homestand.

San Antonio needed the victory. El Paso escaped Beaumont, 13-12, to stay within ½-game of the Dodgers. The Angels fell 9½ games off the pace.

Astros snap L.A. string

Dodgers' streak ends at eight, 10-2

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Denny Walling's offensive exploits haven't earned him much fame during his career. But Tuesday night, he was the main attraction as the Houston Astros used a 15-hit attack to hand the Los Angeles Dodgers their first loss in nine games, 10-2.

"I was surprised as anyone," said Walling, who climaxed his seventh career four-hit game with his seventh and eighth homers of the season for a single-season career high.

The victory dropped third-place Los Angeles 6½ games behind the first-place Astros in the National League West. More importantly, it prevented the Dodgers from sweeping this three-game series.

"It's important not to give a psychological advantage to any team," said Walling, whose solo homers came during a nine-run avalanche in the last two innings against four Los Angeles pitchers.

"We're beginning to believe in ourselves. After the All-Star break, we won five straight games in our last at-bat. If that doesn't breed confidence, I don't know what does."

Walling was aware that the Dodgers were building confidence after a season-high eight-game winning streak and couldn't deny the significance of taking at least one game in their three-game series here.

"They're playing good, sound baseball, but we are too and they haven't gained much ground against us," he said. "You never feel confident enough with any lead. I don't think that the division will be won by that much."

Billy Hatcher hit a grand slam home run for the Astros in the ninth inning. It was his second homer of the season.

Walling, who went 4-for-5, homered off Dodgers starter Bob Welch to tie the score 2-2 in the eighth, then homered again in the ninth inning, giving him eight this season

Bass, who extended his hitting streak to 12 games with a fourth-inning double, hit a sinking liner off losing pitcher Ken Howell, 4-7, past a diving Reggie Williams in center field.

After Walling's homer chased Welch, Glenn Davis greeted Howell with a single and scored on the Bass triple. Jose Cruz and pinch-hitter Davey Lopes completed the scoring with RBI singles.

Dennis Martinez pitched a four-hitter for his first victory since last September and his first shutout in more than a year as the Montreal beat Pittsburgh.

Martinez, 1-3, didn't walk a batter and struck out two as he won for the first time since Sept. 26, 1985 when he defeated the Milwaukee Brewers as a member of the Baltimore Orioles.

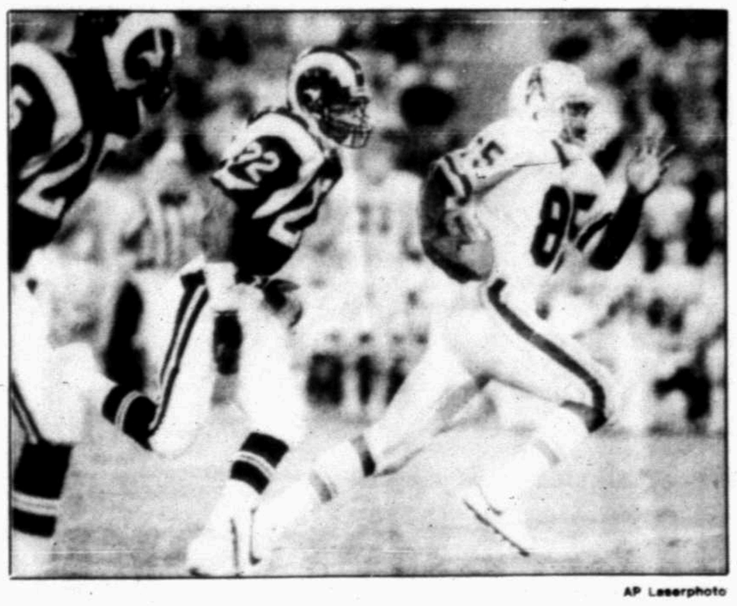

"It was a miracle," said Martinez, who spent seven weeks in an alcohol treatment program in early 1984. "When I gave up drinking, people didn't know how tough it was. I struggled a long time. People wanted to see me overcome it overnight but it's not like that."

The shutout was Martinez's first since he beat California 1-0 with a one-hitter on June 5, 1985.

Oilers ride quick TDs to 17-14 win

By TIM LIOTTA
AP Sports Writer

ANAHEIM, Calif. — With two long first-quarter touchdowns, the Houston Oilers showed what kind of team they hope to be this year.

Drew Hill caught a 61-yard touchdown pass and Avon Riley returned an interception 97 yards for another score Tuesday night as the Oilers held on to claim a 17-14 victory over the Los Angeles Rams in an NFL exhibition opener for both teams.

"We played a good, hard-hitting game," Oilers first-year Coach Jerry Glanville said. "We came up with the big plays, which will be evident the rest of the season because we will be a big-play team."

Rams Coach John Robinson, whose club has been injury-riddled since training camp began, expects his defense to shore up as the season approaches.

"We were missing five of our 11 defensive people, that makes a difference," Robinson said. "Once we get everybody to camp, we'll smooth everything out."

There were some positive signs for the Rams in the loss.

"I thought we moved the ball with variety," Robinson said. "We did not settle into any one thing. We just kept working on plays we wanted to see.

"We moved the ball well. We had 22 first downs and that's a good number."

The Rams squandered a chance to take the lead early in the final quarter after marching to the Houston 3-yard line. On a third-and-goal play, reserve quarterback Steve Dils fumbled a snap which was recovered by Houston linebacker John Grimsley to send the Rams away empty-handed.

HOUSTON JUMPED to a 14-0 lead in the first quarter. Warren Moon connected with Hill for a 61-yard scoring pass and Riley, a seventh-year linebacker, romped nearly the length of the field on an interception return for the Oilers' second touchdown.

Charles White scored two touchdowns in the second quarter as the Rams cut the Oilers' lead to 17-14 by halftime. He caught an 11-yard touchdown pass from Steve Bartkowski and added an 8-yard scoring run 1:13 before intermission.

White, a sixth-year pro out of Southern Cal, was the game's top ground-gainer with 95 yards on 24 carries.

Tony Zendejas kicked a 39-yard field with 3:21 left in the second quarter to give the Oilers a 17-7 lead.

Trump thinks Walker, Kelly won't leave

By GEORGE USHER
Newsday

Generals owner Donald Trump said Tuesday night that he thinks running back Herschel Walker and quarterback Jim Kelly would like to stay with the Generals rather than go to the NFL. An agent for Kelly said, however, that plans are being made for the quarterback to break away from the USFL and play in the NFL.

USFL owners voted Monday to suspend play until next year, in the hope that the $1 in damages awarded in their antitrust suit against the NFL will be increased, and that the league will be able to acquire a network television contract in 1987 for its fall season.

Kelly, contacted at home in Houston, said only he intends to meet with his agents Wednesday, to "talk and see what's up." He said he then wants to talk to Generals president Jerry Argovitz and Trump before making a decision. Walker could not be reached but his agent, Peter Johnson of Cleveland, said he will talk to the Generals and a decision should be reached by Friday. A spokesman for the Dallas Cowboys, who own the rights to Walker, said they would like to have him play in their Sept. 8 opener against the Giants.

"I have to see what their needs are, what's good for them," said Trump, who is expected to try and convince his stars the USFL is committed to playing in 1987. "But they're well off, it's the other players, all the other guys with families, that the NFL hurt. They're the ones we have to be concerned with."

Trump and Baltimore owner Steve Ross, a friend of Trump, voted down the other six owners who opted to play this season, opening the door for players such as Walker and Kelly to join the NFL and putting others in the predicament of not having teams to play for this year. "I did," said Trump, "because it was determined in the trial that you needed network TV to play. We're after that now, and we'll play next year if we win the lawsuit (a new trial for damages and acquiring injunctive relief against the networks). So much depends on the lawsuit, but we feel we'll be successful."

Kelly, who has been paid a third of an $800,000-per-year contract that is guaranteed whether he stays with the Generals or not, expressed disappointment over the USFL situation. "I wanted to put this club on the field and prove it would work," he said. "With Herschel and the receivers, it could have been something."

Bethea arrested for assault, theft

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboy Larry Bethea was in jail Tuesday night on charges of assaulting his wife and stealing his mother's life savings of $64,000, authorities said.

Bethea, who was named Big Ten most valuable player in 1977 when he played for Michigan State, was arrested at about 11 p.m. Monday night outside the downtown Sheraton Hotel. He was being held in Lew Sterrett Justice Center on a misdemeanor assault charge and on a charge of grand larceny filed by authorities in Newport News, Va., said police clerk P.M. Ezell.

Bond was set at $200 on the assault charge and $50,000 on the theft charge, said Magistrate Ken Hurrington. Hurrington said Bethea was trying to raise the bond money and had refused to sign a waiver of extradition to Virginia.

The 30-year-old Bethea, a No. 1 pick of the Cowboys in 1978, had been staying with his mother in Newport News, police said.

Gloria Bethea, 31, told police he was following her in a taxicab Monday evening and forced his way into her car while she was stopped.

Stretching best way to avoid shoulder problems

One of the most frustrating problems of the middle-aged athlete is a painful shoulder. This condition is seen in people of all ages and is not limited to athletes.

The patient complains of pain in the shoulder, the inability to raise the arm above the head and difficulty in sleeping at night. Rather than one specific cause, there are several entities or pathological conditions that cna occur. In order to understand the different causes of shoulder pain, an appreciation of the anatomy of the joint is needed.

The shoulder is basically a ball and socket type of joint. Four muscles are situated just outside of the joint and they serve to stabilize the ball and the socket. The muscles are collectively called the "rotator cuff."

With advancing age, the tendons of the rotator cuff tend to undergo degeneration. This is commonly seen in the supraspinatus muscle (the rotator cuff muscle that is located on top of the shoulder). The deltoid muscle lays on top of the cuff muscles.

This is the muscle that gives the shoulder characteristic shape. It is the powerful muscle that moves the arm. The biceps muscle is situated on the front of the arm. Its tendon courses inside the shoulder joint. There are, in addition, various lubrication sacs around the shoulder (bursal sacs) that aid the joint and muscles in moving easily.

OF THE painful conditions of the shoulder, probably the most common is a tear of the rotator cuff. This generally occurs in a degenerative area in the supraspinatus muscle. This tear can either be partial or complete.

The patient will notice pain in the arm and shoulder whenever attempts are made to elevate the arm above the head. With complete cuff tears, the patient cannot get the arm above the head no matter how hard he or she tries. The muscle power is just not there — the patient has lost range of motion.

If the patient rolls over on the shoulder while sleeping, frequently, pain will occur. Strangely enough, only little discomfort is produced by the joint. However, if the patient has irritation of the biceps tendon, pain can be produced by feeling or palpation of the front of the joint.

Occasionally, the lubrication sacs or bursal sacs, may become irritated or inflamed. This produces a condition known as "bursitis." Generalized soreness and aching is noted but the patient has a full range of motion. The additive effect of all these conditions is known as "adhesive capsulitis." Another name for this problem is "frozen shoulder." The patient cannot move the arm. The shoulder hurts continuously and the patient is miserable.

How are these shoulder problems avoided? The best and easiest method is slow, gentle daily stretching. This can be done in the morning shower, with the hot water helping to relax the muscles. Before any sporting event, the shoulders (as well as the rest of the body) should be taken through full range of motion, gently stretching.

Once the patient gets to the point where shoulder pain is present, then a reduction of activity level is definitely needed. Range of motion exercises should be continued to prevent adhesive capsulitis. Frequently, an anti-arthritic medication is useful. In advanced cases, surgery may be necessary, but only after thorough, conservative treatment has been tried without success.

(Dr. Cochran is president of the Midland Orthopedic Clinic and specializes in sports medicine and arthroscopic joint surgery)

CORNER KICK

By Paul Breitzman

In European soccer over the last 85 years, very few teams have enjoyed the reputation or the success of the storied Real Madrid team.

It stretches the imagination to think that a young man, having played his final year of high school soccer in the shadow of Estadio Bernbeau, home of the legendary Real Madrid, would decide to come to the high plains of the American Southwest to play soccer.

But that is exactly what Fernando Gomez-Pallete, a former exchange student at Midland High, decided to do when he accepted a soccer scholarship to attend the College of the Southwest in Hobbs, N.M., this fall.

At a time when economic troubles are giving many people thoughts of leaving this area, it is almost amazing to hear of someone who thinks of the southwest as a greener pasture worth traveling 6,000 miles to reach.

"I wanted to go to school without leaving soccer," says Gomez-Pallete in a recent stop in the Tall City to visit with friends from MHS. "In Spain, if I want to play soccer, I have to give it all my time and wouldn't have enough time to take care of my studies. In Spain, not as many people play sports, but when you play you almost have to sacrifice yourself to be able to have time to practice.

"(At MHS) we had a fun season, we had good people on the team. Everybody tried real hard to win the games, but after the game, studies were more important for most of us."

THE STYLE of soccer in this country is quite different, Gomez-Pallete said, allowing for more improvisation than the highly structured European game.

"The most goals I ever scored in a game at home is two, because fullbacks aren't supposed to look to try and score," Gomez-Pallete said. "In Spain, if I go up too much the team will worry about me. At Midland High I got to score four goals in a six-game season. Here, the coach didn't mind for me to go up when I had a chance to score... because the other players would come back and cover for me."

Fernando Gomez-Pallete

At College of the Southwest where he expects to study American business methods, Gomez-Pallete will join former Bulldog teammate Tim Madonna.

"The games there are on the weekends and the heavy practice is done before the classes start. I can play and keep studies first."

And rather than attend a Spanish university of 40,000-100,000 with classrooms of 250 people, Gomez-Pallete can enjoy the one-on-one learning atmosphere of a small school.

"I know when I get out of school, I will leave soccer because it will be time to make a living," he said. "But I really like soccer and I want to play it now. To come here, I now have the chance to play and still have time to prepare myself for the future. It is great."

Close friend in McEnroe's way

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. (AP) — Returning to the game after a self-imposed hiatus, John McEnroe today continues his bid to return to the top of the tennis world.

McEnroe will face one of his closest friends in the second round of the $315,000 Volvo International tournament today when he takes on doubles partner Peter Fleming.

"It's not surprising that something like that happened," McEnroe said of the "luck" of the draw. "I figured that something like that would happen, either him or my brother."

Last year, McEnroe played his younger brother, Patrick, in an opening round match en route to the title on the hard courts in the midst of the Green Mountains. On Tuesday, Patrick McEnroe failed once again to last past the first round, losing to ninth-seeded Johan Kriek 6-2, 5-7, 6-4.

John McEnroe, seeded fourth in this 64-player tournament, got past Yugoslavia's Marko Ostoja 7-5, 6-3 in an uninspired performance.

"It was a strangely mediocre match," McEnroe admitted. "It did feel a little bit strange" playing a match, his first since Jan. 15. "I never really got into a flow. But it felt good being out there."

Today's opening second-round match on the stadium court pitted top-seeded Ivan Lendl against South Africa's Barry Moir. Also scheduled to play today were second-seeded Boris Becker of West Germany, No. 3 Jimmy Connors and No. 5 Tim Mayotte.

On Tuesday, Lendl defeated Amos Mansdorf of Israel 6-2, 7-5; Becker stopped Bud Schultz 6-4, 7-6; Connors outlasted Eric Korita 6-7, 6-3, 7-5, and Mayotte nipped Chip Hooper 3-6, 7-5, 7-6.

Other seeded players to post victories Tuesday included No. 8 Paul Annacone and No. 12 Robert Seguso.

Marino might sit out season

MIAMI (AP) — Still frustrated by the lack of negotiations for a new contract with the Miami Dolphins, Pro Bowl quarterback Dan Marino is considering the last-ditch possibility of sitting out the 1987 season.

Missing an entire season would be the final alternative in a scenario which must go several more steps before it reaches that point, Marino cautioned.

"There's a possibility that if you don't get offers from other teams and you don't get what you want here, you might have to sit that out," Marino said.

The logic behind sitting out is based on the planned renegotiation of the agreement between the NFL and the players union. If the players get their way, the current free agency system will be altered to make it easier for players to move from team to team.

Currently, a team would have to give up two No.1 draft choices to sign Marino. Also, the Dolphins would have the right to match any offer another team makes to their star quarterback.

"Until the owners have some incentive to sign players, there isn't going to be much movement," Marino said. "They don't have any incentive now because they all share in the revenue."

Marino said he wants to stay with the Dolphins, but he is upset by the lack of progress in his contract negotiations. Last year, he walked out of training camp for 37 days to show his disapproval of renegotiation offers made by Dolphins owner Joe Robbie.

UH athletes fail to meet standards

HOUSTON (AP) — A majority of University of Houston athletes fail to meet admission standards and many are not enrolled in programs leading to degrees, according to findings of a special academic committee.

Those failing to meet standards are admitted by special admission procedures, and among those athletes with deficient academic backgrounds, 59 percent either have not passed or have not registered for required remedial English, the committee said Tuesday.

The committee recommended 25 changes the school could make to encourage better academic performance among its athletes.

"With proper support, they can achieve academically," Hugh Walker, vice president for academic affairs, declared at a press conference.

Houston is part of a larger national problem that haunts colleges, he said.

"Indeed, the University appears to find itself competing for a pool of highly skilled high school athletes, a distressing proportion of whom are inadequately prepared by their previous educational training and experience to cope successfully with the rigorous academic demands of a university program," the report said.

University of Houston officials started the internal investigation after the news reports that two former athletes did not meet minimal academic requirements but were still readmitted to the university.

Newspaper reports earlier this year also triggered another investigation into allegations that several former Cougar football players were given cash and received favors from coaches, including Head Coach Bill Yeoman.

Payments to players and granting of favors, such as use of gasoline credit cards and arrangement of bank loans, would violate NCAA rules and could mean penalties for the football program.

That investigation, conducted by Houston attorney Walter Zivley, is finished but its findings won't be released until an NCAA investigation is completed, said Michael Johnson, interim athletic director.

"I'm afraid that's all I can say at this time," Johnson said.

The academic committee recommended Tuesday changes in policies on admission, academic performance and financial support of athletes.

Walker said the other investigation revealed problems between academic departments and athletes.

Academic department officials did not understand athletes' special problems such as scheduling, and the departments did not always help the athletes, he said.

The special committee, which included representatives from the faculty and administration, suggested the school seek higher admission scores for athletes, that an academic committee evaluate requests for special admissions and that all student athletes work toward a degree as required by NCAA standards and in a period of five academic years.

The panel also recommended that all student athletes declare an academic major after completing the basic skills portion of the required core curriculum.

The committee made the recommendations after reviewing more than 100 current and former athletes and conducting interviews with athletes, coaches, advisers, administrators and faculty.

Other findings listed in the report included that many athletes do not have a declared major and "emphasis on progress toward a degree is not evident in many cases."

New McEnroe returns to tennis with rough victory

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. (AP) — His life enriched by a bride and a baby, John McEnroe says tennis no longer is the center of his life.

"I'm willing to forego being No. 1 in order to be happy," McEnroe says. "Of course I'd like to be No. 1, but that's not the most important thing at this point."

The winner of seven Grand Slam singles titles, McEnroe said his marriage to actress Tatum O'Neal, the birth of Kevin John two months ago and his sabbatical from tennis has helped change his outlook on life.

"I needed some positive things in my life to get me through the periods where I was very resentful of the press and the tennis establishment," McEnroe said Tuesday following his uninspired 7-5, 6-3 first-round victory over Yugoslavia's Marko Ostoja in the $315,000 Volvo International tournament. "I was going in a bad direction.

"I got myself away because I certainly wasn't helping myself and probably wasn't really helping the tennis circuit. I just felt like it was important to me at this time to get away.

"I'm starting to look at things a little differently in a sense that I'm trying to take it day by day and try to think how I'd like to spend my day and be as positive as I can as much as I can."

In a 70-minute news conference following his victory, McEnroe said his negative frame of mind caused him to walk away from the game that he has dominated over the past several years. Until Tuesday, McEnroe hadn't played competitive tennis since a first-round loss to Brad Gilbert in the Nabisco Masters in New York on Jan. 15. But he said he never planned to follow Sweden's Bjorn Borg into early retirement and had always planned to return to the court.

Terps toughen drug testing program

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — The University of Maryland will begin a stricter drug testing program for athletes this fall that will include three unannounced tests a year, the chancellor said Tuesday.

The tests will be administered to every man and woman who participates in intercollegiate athletics at the main campus at College Park. The program last year consisted of only one unannounced test plus a test for drugs that was part of each athlete's annual physical exam.

But even the new program probably would not have prevented the death of basketball star Len Bias from cocaine intoxication, said John B. Slaughter, chancellor of the College Park campus.

The drug testing program was under review before Bias died in his dormitory room June 19.

"There is no guarantee that any testing will prevent an isolated incident" such as the death of Bias, Slaughter said.

He said the purpose of the stricter testing is to "create a program that will come as close as possible to ensuring a drug-free environment for all of our student athletes."

The new program will be administered solely by the University Health Center, a duty that was shared with the athletic department last year.

In addition, there will be direct observation of athletes to ensure that urine samples are not switched. There have been reports since Bias died that some athletes who used drugs evaded detection last year by obtaining urine samples from friends who were not taking drugs.

Slaughter said he doesn't know if there were switches, but that "the environment was such that it could have occurred."

"We want to make sure that it doesn't happen," he said.

The chancellor said about 25 percent of Division I colleges have mandatory drug testing programs for athletes. "I doubt seriously that ours would stand out (from the others)," he said.

Athletes who fail a test once will be required to undergo drug counseling and will be subject to more frequent, unannounced tests. A second positive test for drugs will result in a two-week suspension from athletic activities, and a third infraction will lead to penalties as severe as loss of a scholarship or suspension from the university, Slaughter said.

Any athlete who refuses to take a test will not be allowed to take part in sports programs and will eventually lose his or her scholarship, he said.

Slaughter was asked whether he thinks the university is discriminating against athletes since other students are not tested for drug use.

"It is not unreasonable to hold student athlete to a higher degree of responsibility. They represent the university. They are given scholarships," he said.

Slaughter refused to answer questions about whether he is considering any disciplinary action against anyone in the athletic department, including basketball Coach Lefty Driesell and Athletic Director Dick Dull, because of alleged drug use by athletes and the poor academic performance of some athletes, particularly basketball players.

He said he is giving a lot of thought to the direction the athletic program has taken and the direction it should take in the future.

Slaughter predicted there will be changes not only at Maryland but at many other univerrsities with major athletic programs.

"You are going to see more major universities putting stronger and stronger emphasis on academic programs" for athletes," he predicted.

Opening lead: King of ♠

In nautical terms, to jettison means to throw cargo overboard in an attempt to save an endangered ship by lightening its load. In bridge, it means to discard high cards to free others so they can take tricks. There are some very dramatic jettison plays involving dumping five winners from one hand or the other, but we prefer this quieter, more instructive version.

Had the vulnerability been reversed, North might have settled for a penalty double of West's two-spade overcall. However, he judged that at this score the game bonus would be worth more than the set, and that his five-card suit plus honors in the other suits would be enough for his partner to make game.

West led the king of spades, and a careless declarer would see no problem. He would count one spade trick, two hearts, one ~~diamond~~ and — five clubs for a total of nine, and go down quickly.

For the clubs will produce five tricks only if the suit breaks 2-2; if it splits 3-1, as is the case here, there are only four tricks to be had, since declarer will be forced to win the fourth round of the suit in hand and will have no way back to dummy to cash the long club.

Declarer found a pretty way out of this predicament. He allowed West to win the first trick and ducked again when West continued with the queen. He took the third spade with the ace, discarding a club from hand. Now, the ace, queen and king of clubs drew the outstanding cards in the suit, and dummy's long clubs could be cashed.

It might seem that West can foil declarer by switching at trick two, presumably to the king of diamonds. Not so. Declarer wins and returns a spade, allowing the defenders to win the trick! He wins any continuation, plays off the ace-queen of clubs and continues with a club to the king. Now declarer cashes the ace of spades, jettisoning his remaining club from hand, and takes nine tricks.

American songwriter found dead in Boy George's home

LONDON (AP) — Police said an American songwriter was found dead today in a London mansion owned by pop singer Boy George, who pleaded guilty last week to heroin possession.

Boy George was not at the house when the body was found shortly before dawn, and Scotland Yard spokesman Nick Jordan said the singer "was not involved at all."

Jordan said the 27-year-old victim had apparently traveled from New York in recent days to work with the flamboyant singer, whose real name is George O'Dowd.

Police were withholding the dead man's identity pending notification of his family. He was believed to be a friend of Boy George, Jordan said.

"It is not being treated as a suspicious death," said Jordan, who would not rule out the possibility of a drug overdose.

The Scotland Yard spokesman said that neither drugs nor drug paraphernalia were found near the body, and said there was no evidence "to suggest violence or criminal activity."

The songwriter's body was discovered at about 5:30 a.m. by Boy George's brother, Kevin O'Dowd, 26, who was staying in the house, Jordan said. "O'Dowd was charged last month with supplying heroin to the singer and is now free on bail.

The body was lying on the floor of the living room, the police spokesman said.

He said O'Dowd, who called police, was the only other person staying at his brother's house, a rambling Gothic-style mansion in north London's fashionable Hampstead district.

Police said O'Dowd, an unemployed musician, had given a statement to police but said no one had yet been formally questioned at a police station.

Later, O'Dowd spent three hours with Boy George at his 25-year-old brother's other house in north London.

Boy George was convicted July 20 of possessing an unspecified amount of heroin and fined the equivalent of $370.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The family of the world's longest-living artificial-heart recipient, William J. Schroeder, has been called to his bedside as Schroeder has taken a turn for the worse, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Schroeder's condition stabilized Tuesday night after deteriorating sharply earlier in the day, said Donna Hazle, spokeswoman for Humana Hospital-Audubon.

Schroeder's family was called to the hospital Tuesday morning and planned to spend the night there, Ms. Hazle and family members said.

"We don't know for sure what's happened, we just know that it is serious and that it was important for them to come to the hospital," said Patti Schroeder, the artificial-heart recipient's daughter-in-law.

The family of the 54-year-old Jasper, Ind., man asked hospital officials not to release detailed information about his health. Ms. Hazle did say it is rare for family members to be summoned as they were Tuesday.

Schroeder has suffered three strokes since the Jarvik-7 heart was implanted in his chest on Nov. 25, 1984. He has remained hospitalized since the most recent of those, on Nov. 10, 1985.

The surgeon who implanted Schroeder's artificial heart 620 days ago, Dr. William DeVries, declined to assign a specific condition to Schroeder's health.

Recently, doctors implanted a tube into Schroeder's stomach because he was having difficulty taking in food through the nasal tube he had been using, DeVries said.

Schroeder has had difficulty speaking and recognizing people in recent weeks, his uncle, the Rev. Sylvester Schroeder, said Tuesday night in a telephone interview from his home in Ferdinand, Ind.

ROSEBURG, Ore. (AP) — Country and western singer Merle Haggard abruptly canceled a show opening the Douglas County Fair, saying sudden illness prompted him to go home.

Tuesday's cancellation came a day after Haggard disappointed 10,000 fans at the Clark County Fair in Richfield, Wash., by leaving without performing his evening show.

Dennis Bottomley, Haggard's director of business affairs, said the singer returned to his home outside Redding, Calif., where he was recovering from dysentery and planned to see a physician.

Clark County Sheriff's Department spokesman Gary Lucas said he was told Haggard left the fairgrounds after some sort of misunderstanding with his wife.

Van Doren

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Mamie Van Doren and about two dozen other fans and friends of Marilyn Monroe visited her crypt for memorial services on the 24th anniversary of the actress' death.

"Marilyn was balanced precariously on the pinnacle of fame," Miss Van Doren said Tuesday. "We did not stretch out our hands in time to catch her and she was gone."

Miss Van Doren, a close friend of Miss Monroe and the last survivor of the "Three M's" — Marilyn, Mamie and Jayne Mansfield — said Tuesday marked the first time she had visited Miss Monroe's crypt in Westwood Village Cemetery.

Miss Monroe died Aug. 5, 1962. Her death was believed to be a suicide.

TORONTO (AP) — Would you believe Don Adams was to tape a scene this week in which he was to portray a man going into hospital for a hernia operation?

Well, would you believe the taping had to be postponed because Adams had his appendix removed Tuesday at Toronto General Hospital?

Adams, 60, was preparing to tape the hospital scene for his weekly CTV comedy series "Check It Out" when he had a pain in his side Monday. The house doctor at his hotel diagnosed appendicitis, the news agency Canadian Press reported.

A hospital spokesman said Adams was in good condition after undergoing the appendectomy Tuesday.

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Chief Justice Warren Burger received a standing ovation in absentia as justices and court administrators from about 40 states opened a conference here.

The retiring U.S. Supreme Court chief justice was hailed Tuesday at the meeting of the Conferences of Chief Justices and State Court Administrators.

Edward Hennessey, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court and president of the conference, said Burger is responsible for a new spirit of cooperation between federal and state judiciaries.

Orioles gain game on Red Sox, beat Rangers 9-2

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Jim Traber, a rookie with supreme confidence, refuses to admit he has been surprised by his incredible start with the Baltimore Orioles.

"I wouldn't say I'm amazed...I'm just overjoyed at what's going on," Traber said after he hitting his eighth home run in 17 games as the surging Orioles trounced the Texas Rangers 9-2 Tuesday night.

The Orioles won for the ninth time in 12 games and moved within 2½ games of American League East-leading Boston. The Red Sox, who lost to Chicago 3-1, now hold their smallest lead since June 1.

"I didn't expect to do what I have been doing," said Traber, recalled from the minors after first baseman Eddie Murray was placed on the disabled list. "I'm getting pitches to hit and I'm hitting them."

Traber's two-run homer and a solo shot by Larry Sheets capped a five-run rally in the third inning, easing the way for Storm Davis to continue his mastery over the Rangers. Traber has 22 RBI in 62 at-bats since his recall.

"I try to get a pitch I can hit out of the park," Traber said, "but that doesn't mean I'm thinking about hitting only home runs. I actually try to get a pitch I can drive, and if I get it up it will go out of the park."

"Traber has helped more than anybody thought he could," said Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver. "He's doing exactly what we needed."

"You only expect a player to stay hot for so long," Weaver said. "How long will he stay hot? I hope until the end of the year."

Davis, 8-8, raised his career record against Texas to 10-0. He scattered eight hits over eight innings.

American League

White Sox 3, Red Sox 1

Carlton Fisk and Harold Baines hit home runs and Richard Dotson pitched three-hit ball for seven innings Tuesday night as Chicago spoiled the return of Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd with a victory over Boston.

The Red Sox lost for the 14th time in their last 19 games. The defeat, coupled with Baltimore's 9-2 rout of Texas, trimmed Boston's lead in the American League East to 2½ games — its slimmest margin since June 1.

Boyd, 11-7, allowed eight hits in 7⅔ innings in his first appearance since July 8. Boyd's second suspension imposed by the Red Sox this season was lifted last Friday.

Dotson, 8-12, and Gene Nelson combined on a three-hitter. On Monday night, Chicago pitchers teamed on a three-hitter to beat Boston 1-0.

"Their offense is struggling a little bit," Fisk said. "If they're scuffling to get base hits, it makes everybody's pitching staff look better."

Fisk hit a two-run homer in the fifth and Baines connected with two outs in the eighth. Chicago has won six of its last seven games.

Dotson, who had lost his previous five decisions, held the Red Sox hitless until Tony Armas led off the sixth with a home run.

"In the last five games I felt some pressures," Dotson said. "People wanted me to throw like I did two years ago" before he had surgery on his right shoulder late in July 1985.

Royals 8, Blue Jays

TORONTO — George Brett hit a two-run homer and Kansas City scored five runs in the third inning, helped by two errors and a wild pitch, as the Royals beat Toronto.

Rookie Scott Bankhead, 5-5, who had lost five of his last six decisions, got the victory and Steve Farr picked up his sixth save. Dennis Lamp, 2-6, took the loss.

All of Toronto's runs scored on four homers. Lloyd Moseby hit a pair of solo home runs, George Bell also hit a solo shot and Rick Leach connected for a three-run homer.

Angels 13, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Mike Witt pitched a three-hitter and Bob Boone drove in four runs as California snapped a three-game losing streak with a victory over Minnesota.

Wally Joyner hit a two-run homer while Brian Downing and Gary Pettis each rapped four of California's 18 hits. The Angels also drew 11 walks from five Minnesota pitchers, and left 17 runners on base.

Boone had an RBI double, drew two-bases loaded walks and had a run-scoring groundout.

Witt, 12-7, allowed only an unearned run in the first as he pitched his league-leading 11th complete game. Allan Anderson, 3-4, got the loss.

Brewers 2, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Cecil Cooper singled home Paul Molitor from second base with one out in the 10th inning and gave Milwaukee a victory over New York.

Milwaukee beat the Yankees for the fifth straight time and dealt New York its ninth loss overall in the last 12 games.

Molitor doubled with one out in the 10th off Dave Righetti, 7-6, and Cooper singled through the left side of the infield.

Reliever Dan Plesac, 7-6, pitched two scoreless innings for the victory. Mark Clear worked the final inning for his 10th save.

Tigers 6, Indians 5
Tigers 11, Indians 9

DETROIT — Lou Whitaker hit two home runs, sparking Detroit's 13-hit attack and leading the Tigers to a second-game victory and a doubleheader sweep of the Cleveland Indians.

Whitaker and Alan Trammell hit consecutive homers in the first inning off John Butcher, 1-8. Whitaker and Tom Brookens added two-run homers in the third inning.

Frank Tanana, 9-4, won his fifth straight decision and Randy O'Neal got his first save. Tony Bernazard and Carmen Castillo homered for Cleveland.

In the first game, Darrell Evans hit a three-run homer with two outs in the seventh inning as Detroit overcame a 5-3 deficit. Evans' 17th homer came off Scott Bailes, 8-7. Reliever Mark Thurmond, 1-1, won his first AL game.

130 yards and one touchdown before being replaced by Oliver Luck at halftime. Luck was 2-of-8 on pass attempts in relief.

Dieter Brock completed 5-of-10 passes for 83 yards before being forced from the game with a bruised left knee late in the first quarter.

Bartkowski, in his first game since being released early last year by the Atlanta Falcons, was successful on 5-of-14 pass attempts for 47 yards. He threw for one touchdown and was intercepted once.

Dils, the Rams' third quarterback, completed 5-of-14 passes for 79 yards after coming on in the middle of the third quarter.

Butch Woolfolk led Houston with 27 yards on five carries.

LOS ANGELES running back Eric Dickerson pulled a hamstring in his left leg midway through the first quarter and did not play after that. Dickerson carried the ball twice for minus-4 yards and had one reception for 25 yards before his departure.

Houston, which finished 5-11 a year ago, next plays the Buffalo Bills in Houston on Aug. 16.

The Rams, who advanced to the NFC championship game after going 11-5 during the regular season a year ago, will meet the San Francisco 49ers on Aug. 18 for their second exhibition game.

The Mets had tied the score 5-5 when Keith Hernandez hit a three-run homer in the top half of the inning.

In the Cubs eighth, Ron Cey singled for his third hit of the game, Manny Trillo singled and Shawon Dunston reached on a sacrifice bunt when second baseman Tim Teufel was credited with an error covering first. Terry Francona bounced into a double play, but Mumphrey then came on to hit for Bob Dernier.

Cardinals 7, Phillies 4

ST. LOUIS — Bob Forsch matched the longest winning streak of his career by capturing his fifth straight decision, and he doubled to trigger a four-run fifth inning that boosted St. Louis to a triumph over Philadelphia.

Tommy Herr had two hits and three RBI, and Terry Pendleton added a two-run double in the big inning as the Cardinals won for the 13th time in 18 games since the All-Star break.

The right-hander Forsch, 11-6, allowed six hits, struck out four, walked one and retired nine in a row before running into trouble in the ninth. Todd Worrell got the final two outs for the Cardinals after allowing a two-run single by Von Hayes.

Braves 3, Padres 2

SAN DIEGO — Cliff Speck, a last-minute replacement for scheduled starter Zane Smith, went 5⅔ innings to earn his first major league victory as the Atlanta Braves beat San Diego

Shortstop Andres Thomas had three hits, scored one run and drove in another for the Braves.

The 29-year-old rookie Speck, who had pitched only one inning in the major leagues, was pressed into action when Smith reaggravated an injury on the middle finger of his left hand.

He allowed just one run on five hits before needing relief help from Ed Olwine, who retired nine in a row before Carmelo Martinez homered with two out in the ninth. The homer was Martinez's sixth.

Reds 11, Giants 6

SAN FRANCISCO — Dave Parker and Bo Diaz each drove in three runs to spoil a milestone night for San Francisco's Steve Carlton as the Cincinnati Reds defeated the Giants.

Buddy Bell also scored four times for Cincinnati, which benefited from two San Francisco wild pitches and two balks resulting in four runs. Mario Soto, 4-9, went five innings for his first victory since May 22, giving up four hits and two earned runs.

Carlton, 5-11, got the 4,000th strikeout of his career in the third inning when Eric Davis swung at and missed a 1-2 pitch. That was Carlton's third strikeout of the game. He received a prolonged ovation, but he left the game with two out in the fourth, having given up seven runs on seven hits, three walks, a wild pitch and a balk.

Kristiansen adds 5,000 meters to long distance records

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Norway's Ingrid Kristiansen has only herself to chase after completing a "triple crown" sweep of the records in women's long-distance running.

Unhampered by a chilly, rainy evening and by what was, in retrospect, a slow early pace, Kristiansen lowered the world record for 5,000 meters by over 10 seconds with a time of 14 minutes, 37.33 seconds. Britain's Zola Budd set the previous mark of 14:48.07 last year.

The record run on Stockholm's Olympic Stadium track gave the slim Norwegian the fastest times ever in the three longest races in women's track. She lowered her own 10,000-meter record by an amazing 46 seconds, to 30:13.74, on July 5 at Oslo's Bislett Stadium, and established a world-best of 2 hours, 21 minutes, 6 seconds in winning last year's London Marathon.

"I've never been running so well before as in the last few weeks," Kristiansen said Tuesday night. "I felt very confident that I'd break the record tonight.

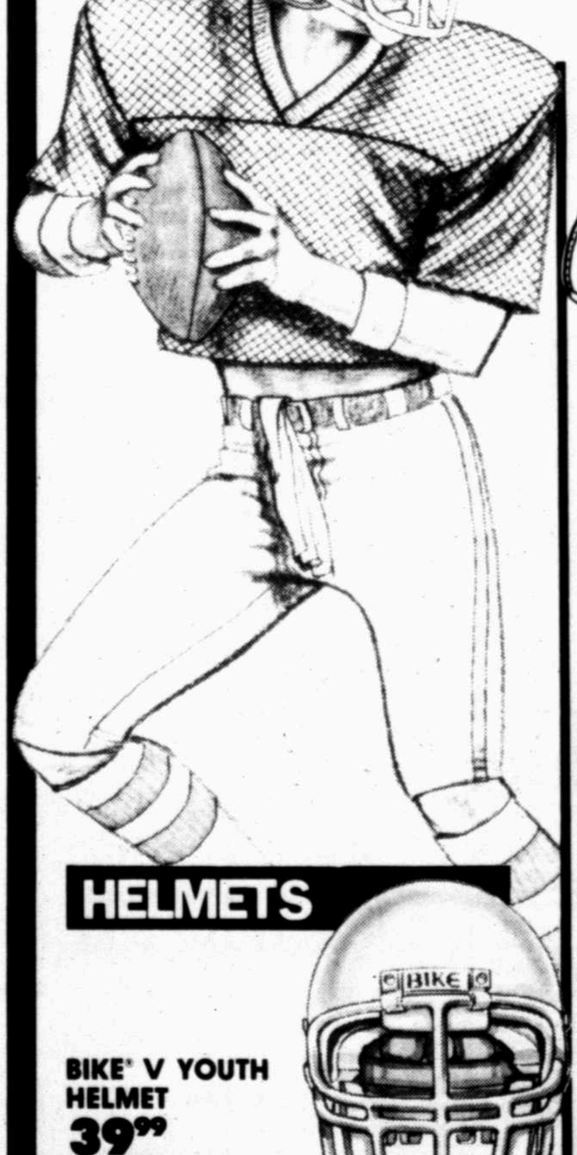

"I predicted a time between 14:35 and 14:40. When I decide to run fast, I do it."

A former member of Norway's cross-country ski team, Kristiansen believes she can break the 14-minute barrier, given perfect conditions and first-rate opposition.

DEARBORN HEIGHTS, Mich. — Jeanne Maiden of Solon, Ohio, rolled games of 279 and 257 to race to a 214-pin lead over Robin Romeo of Van Nuys, Calif., after four rounds of the $30,000 Ladies Pro Bowlers Tour Bonanza Classic.

Maiden, who was playing for her second title in a row and third of her career, averaged 214 and won five of her eight matches to finish with a 26-game total of 5,722.

CHEEKTOWAGA, N.Y. — Randy Johnson finished the sixth round 108 pins ahead of the field in the Professional Bowlers Association $115,000 Greater Buffalo Open.

Joining Johnson in the televised finals will be Jeff Bellinger of Columbia, S.C.; Brian Voss of Tacoma, Wash.; Ron Palombi Jr. of Erie, Pa., and veteran Les Zikes of Palatine, Ill.

Johnson finished with a 42-game pinfall total of 10,114 and a 230 average. Bellinger was the closest player with 10,006.

Track and Field

GATESHEAD, England — Scotland's Allan Wells, an Olympic champion without a major victory in four years, scored a surprising sweep of the 100-meter and 200-meter dashes, upsetting Canadian sensation Ben Johnson, while Zola Budd suffered a surprising setback in the women's 2,000.

In a track meet between Britain and the Commonwealth, Johnson, who ran the fastest 100-meter race at sea level last month, finished fourth this time.

Budd, after a sizzling start in the 2,000, faded to fourth, behind Canadian Debbie Bowker's winning time of 5:39.90.

Midland sophs take second at state

From Staff Reports

CEDAR HILL — Midland's Berg Motor Company advanced to the Sophomore League state finals here over the weekend before losing to Spring Klein of Houston 11-1 in the sixth game of the tournament for the Midland team.

Berg Motor defeated Spring Klein by a 13-4 margin in Game 5 to force a deciding championship contest as Steve Guerrera got the win in relief while Kevin Irish hit two homers. Bob Belcher and Patrick Mowles each had three hits.

However, in the final game, Spring Klein took the win as Midland had run out of pitchers. Guerrera had pitched the maximum 14 innings in the tournament and Jimmy Martin developed a blister on his pitching hand. The remaining pitchers were arm weary due to being in the losers bracket, being forced to play three games in one day, including a 1 p.m. contest in 106 degree weather.

In the first game of the tournament, Berg Motor defeated Van Zandt by an 11-1 margin with Martin getting the win while Ty Chambers had three hits.

Berg took a 2-1 win over Pleasant Grove with Kevin Irish taking the victory and knocking in the winning run.

Spring Klein then put Midland in the losers bracket in a 6-3 victory. Guerrera had three hits and Patrick Mowles added a triple in the losing cause.

Midland rebounded with an 8-1 win over Pleasant Grove with Brad Fortune getting the victory. Belcher, Guerrera, Mowles and Joe Herrera all had three hits in the win.

That put Midland back against Spring Klein in the championship set.

The Berg Motor team is managed by Jimmy Mowles and coached by Hector Guerrera. Other coaches are Ron Greeley, Don Schroeder and Bill Worley.

Pro-Am offers $100,000 purse

OAKMONT, Pa. (AP) — A $100,000 pro-am golf tournament featuring PGA tour players and members of the Senior PGA tour is scheduled for next June at the Oakmont Country Club.

The first prize in the June 29-30 tournament will be $25,000, with the minimum pro prize $1,000, according to tournament founder Frank B. Fuhrer Jr., an insurance company and beer distributor executive.

"I want it to be a pretty elite event," Fuhrer said.

The tournament, which will benefit Pittsburgh's Family House, was first held earlier this summer and raised $60,000. This year's purse was $43,000.

Family House is an inexpensive lodging facility for the families of patients at the University Health Center in Pittsburgh's Oakland section.

Dollar loses momentum

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against most currencies in Europe early today, losing momentum it had gained from OPEC's agreement to cut oil production.

Gold bullion prices drifted down from a higher opening, but remained above levels of late Tuesday.

The dollar had risen in New York late Tuesday in what traders described as a reaction to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreement to cut production in an attempt to boost oil prices.

But traders said today the OPEC agreement was overtaken by continuing bearish sentiment for the dollar based on sluggish U.S. economic performance.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Tuesday:

–2.0820 West German marks, down from 2.0995

–1.6802 Swiss francs, down from 1.6907

–6.7595 French francs, down from 6.8025

–2.3405 Dutch guilders, down from 2.3625

–1,432.00 Italian lire, down from 1,443.00

–1.38295 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3797

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a midmorning recommended gold price of $360.75 a troy ounce, up from $358.75 late Tuesday. Gold opened in London today at $361.00.

In Zurich, gold was quoted at midday at a bid of $360.75, up from $359.00.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold closed at a bid of $359.44, up from $356.80.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $5.20 an ounce, down 1 cent from late Tuesday.

World gauges impact of OPEC agreement

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil industry watchers around the country are cautiously skeptical of the agreement and say that it won't be an immediate antidote for the American petroleum industry.

Government and private economists say that the pact should not have much impact on the U.S. economy, but could give breathing room to troubled American producers.

Some oilmen across the Southwest hail the OPEC accord as a sign the protracted nightmare of sliding revenue, rising debt and deepening layoffs may be ending.

"I'm better than I was yesterday," said R.L. Parker, president and chief operating officer of Parker Drilling Inc. in Tulsa. "But I still have a fear in the bottom of my heart" that the OPEC agreement "could fall apart."

Tony Proffitt, a spokesman for the Texas comptroller's office, downplayed the OPEC moves. "It won't have any immediate effect," he said. "It may tend to drive up the Texas oil prices near our year average (used for the deficit estimate), which was in the $15 range. But this is just a temporary agreement and only good for a couple of months."

Federal Administration officals, while publicly reiterating that free market forces should determine oil prices, privately expressed guarded satisfaction over the agreement.

"It takes a little heat off what had become a very nasty situation," said one adminstration official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

The official was referring to the thorny election-year political dilemma of helping an ailing energy industry possibly at the expense of energy consumers.

WHILE SOUTHWESTERN energy-producing states, are expected to benefit from higher oil prices, other regions of the U.S. stand to lose. One area expected to suffer from higher-priced heating oil is the Northeast.

But even with such losses, Allen Sinai, chief economist at Shearson Lehman Brothers in Houston and others, conclude that the overall benefits could outweigh the damage to the U.S. economy through an immediate boost to the oil patch and banking system.

What "$15 a barrel might chop out of the economy's growth by higher energy prices will be offset by an arresting of the depression in the oil and gas states," Sinai said.

Dale Steffes, an independent analyst in Houston, said OPEC's decision was better news for exploration companies — but not good enough.

"The thing they need to see is stability," Steffes said. "This two months doesn't show that yet. We need two years."

Steffes predicted the financial community would lead the charge toward price stability.

"The financial commnity has a lot of problems and one more they don't need is instability in the energy world," he said. "Today, the energy market looks at 60 days as long term and bankers don't like that."

"I think they want to see prices sustained in the long timeframe and not subject to the violent rapid moves of this year," said James L. Cochrane, senior vice president at Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc.

"I think if we're able to have price and production stability for the rest of this year, toward the end of the year you can get people more enthusiastic about spending money on exploration," he said.

Alan L. Edgar, an industry analyst with Schneider, Bernet & Hickman, Dallas, said he doubts Saudi Arabia would allow prices to exceed $18 a barrel because it could help rejuvenate an American oil industry that was in the process of being dismantled by low prices.

Edgar explained that American companies' average $14 a barrel finding cost, plus another $6/bbl for extraction and another $3 to cover debt payments. Adding a small profit margin, " you need a price in the low 20s to get the market moving again," he said.

INTERNATIONALLY, reaction from non-OPEC producing companies has been divided as well.

In Mexico City, Energy & Mines Secretary Alfredo del Mazo said Mexico plans to cut oil exports by 10 percent, to 1.35 million barrels a day.

Del Mazo said the production cutback will be effective this month.

Mexico will continue to watch the evolution of the current arrangement and further steps which may be adopted at OPEC's next meeting in October.

The production cut, he said, will cost Mexico $480 million a year at current prices.

AIME board meets here to discuss goals

From Staff Reports

When the board of trustees of the American Institute of Mining, Metallurgical and Petroleum Engineers (AIME) convened here last week to consider long range goals for the organization.

The institute is an umbrella organization comprising the Society of Petroleum Engineers, the Society of Mining Engineers, the Iron & Steel Society and The Metallurgical Society of America.

Fourteen trustees of the member societies met, along with AIME president and long-time Midland resident Arlen Edgar, adopted a long-range goal statement, drafted by an ad hoc committee with representatives from all four member societies. The plan was left open for comments by trustees for four months.

Edgar says final approval of the statement is expected to to be completed by mail ballot before the board next meeting in Spring 1987.

The group set goals in seven areas of concern: AIME traditions; intra-institute affairs; the international role of the member societies; engineering education; inter-society affairs and cooperation with other professional groups; public relations; and governmental affairs.

Among the goals set by the board is performing a more meaningful role in framing governmental policies affecting the minerals, metals and petroleum industries, Edgar says.

Reagan nominees Robert Heller and Michael Mussa testify before Senate Banking Committee. Heller says more rates cuts are possible.

Fed nominee says rate cut possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board, which has already reduced the discount rate three times this year, may want to cut it again to stimulate the sluggish economy, the newest Reagan nominee to the board says.

"In the framework of declining interest rates overall, I think there may well be room for further discount rate cuts in the future," Robert Heller said Tuesday, citing the fee the Fed charges to make loans to member banks.

Reductions in the discount rate are the most dramatic move the central bank can make to signal efforts to push down a variety of interest rates, including those on mortgages.

Heller said he believed economic conditions, including low inflation rates, supported declines in a variety of interest rates.

His comments in a confirmation hearing before the Senate Banking Committee indicated he was likely to side with three other Reagan appointees to the board, who have been pushing for interest rate reductions to spur lagging economic growth.

New plan would put oilfield back to work

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Asset Alliance, a non-profit association based in Houston, has come up with a unique networking system that could put many unemployed oil patch professionals back to work, while saving many marginal wells, according to William T. Davie executive director of Asset Alliance.

According to the former oil company president, the idea is to put landowners and mineral owners who have property to evaluate in touch with a qualified team of energy experts who can evaluate the property and bring about production says Davie.

The Bright Side

Said Davie: "The whole plan works on the barter system. For example a landowner with shut-in or abandoned production or with acreage to be explored in a potential oil producing area lists his property with us. We in turn assign, him a geologist, landman, engineer, energy team to do an initial evaluation of the project and determine if it can be restored to production or additional drilling is economical. Asset Alliance gets 5 percent of the project if production is developed and the mineral owner and energy team split the remaining 95 percent down the middle. The bartering comes in when the landowner and energy team, in mutual agreement, begin to barter away their 47.5 percent interest in the project to others to bring about production."

Davie said it may require drafting, tubing, squeeze jobs, swabbing, fracing, drilling as well as capital and many more services to make a project a reality, and that capital and each of the services would enter the project in exchange for an agreed upon working interest.

"All Asset Alliance will do is bring the mineral owner and energy team together and supply a list of service and supply firms participating in the network. We do not negotiate the final deals," said Davie.

He said he plan could result in the saving of valuable oil industry talent that could be lost forever, without an opportunity to continue participation in the oil business.

"We won't tell a geologist to quit sending out resumes or to give up his job slinging hash at the local restaurant to join us. But we will tell him if he has some time to spare here is an opportunity to work on a deal that may or may not result in something," said Davie, the former president of Petroland Petroleum and North Star Minerals, who came up with the plan.

North Star Minerals Inc., an independent oil and gas firm based in Los Angeles, is putting up $100,000 to establish the computer network. "They would not finance the program unless I agreed to run it," he said.

Davie said annual dues and the 5 percent charged on to each deal would cover only the operating costs of Asset Alliance, which will match projects and energy teams by Texas Railroad Commission districts.

Landowners and mineral owners with projects to evaluate can join the network by calling 1-800-327-2079, and energy professionals or material and service companies with skills and assets to barter may call 1-800-327-2078.

OPEC asks other producers to join cut backs

GENEVA (AP) — After finally reaching agreement to reduce oil production, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has asked producers outside the cartel to contribute their own cutbacks to boost oil prices.

In a communique issued Tuesday, the 13-member producers group made the request to other nations "with a view to shouldering, together with OPEC, the burden of defending market stability."

If non-OPEC producers fail to comply, the cartel warned it would not be "committed to defending the price structure alone," the communique said.

The communique marked the end of a nine-day conference by OPEC oil ministers in which the cartel said it was returning to its production level of October 1984.

The move is aimed at removing more than 3 million barrels a day from the glutted world oil markets.

A unanimous accord by OPEC members on production cuts is considered crucial to reversing a worldwide slump in world prices, which have dropped from about $32 a 42-gallon barrel late last year to current levels ranging from $7 to $12.

The accord, proposed by Iran on Sunday and agreed on by the ministers late Monday, excludes Iran's war enemy, Iraq.

It will cut OPEC production for two months starting Sept. 1 and is intended to boost prices to "reasonable levels."

OPEC's president, Nigerian Oil Minister Rilwanu Lukman, told a news conference: "We are seeking the cooperation of all oil producing countries, including Norway and Britain."

"We think they all have an interest in higher oil prices," Lukman said.

He said four of five non-OPEC producers contacted by OPEC — Mexico, Egypt, Angola, Malaysia and Oman — had promised to implement cutbacks pledged earlier. The reductions are believed to be about 10 percent of the current production.

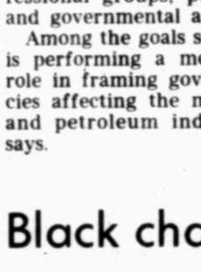

Lukman did not specify which country still had not replied, but said it was because its oil minister was ill and unreachable.

Malaysia and Mexico both issued statements announcing their intention to support OPEC's request and reduce oil production.

However, Malaysia, in a written statement released today in Kuala Lumpur, did not say by how much or when it would reduce production, which currently runs at 510,000 barrels of oil daily.

Mexico, the world's fourth-largest producer, announced a 10 percent cut in crude oil exports over a two-month period to be effective as soon as officials work out final details this week, Energy and Mines Secretary Alfredo del Mazo said Tuesday. That would cut Mexico's production to 1.35 million barrels daily. Libyan Oil Minister Fawzi Shakshuki said the cartel hoped non-OPEC producers would contribute 500,000-800-000 barrels in combined cutbacks.

Gulf retirees take dip in ice cream business

Ice cream lovers sit up and take notice: there's a new ice cream store in North Park shopping center next to Video One and Nature's Pantry.

Midlanders Clarence Marley and Zonnelle Eddy have just opened ZODY'S, which sells a variety of cream confections: scoops of ice cream, sundaes, floats, shakes and malts. There's even a "walking split" — a banana split prepared in a cup rather than a boat.

For calorie counters, Zody's makes sandwiches: pimento and cheese, turkey, ham, club, and pita sandwiches. There's also a variety of soft drinks, coffee, tea or milk. Sandwiches can be made on white or wheat bread, plain or toasted. All of Zody's offerings are available for carry-out as well as dining in.

Marley says he and Eddy recently retired from Gulf and "decided to see what we could do with a business like this."

Vending money orders

Vending machines are as much a part of life in America as baseball and apple pie. In the rush of the everyday work life, Americans often eat and drink breakfast, lunch and even dinner from a vending machine. A new development by Republic Money Orders, Inc. (RMO) will enable people to purchase money orders out of vending machines.

The patented electronic money order dispenser, developed by RMO through five years of research, can dispense money orders in far less time than conventional methods, according to company officials.

Tracor Instruments, Inc., a subsidiary of Tracor, Inc. of Austin, has received a multi-million dollar contract to manufacture the dispensers. They currently are preparing for production, with the first deliveries projected to be "possibly as early as this November," according to RMO president Fred L. Gray.

Safeway and Kroger, the nation's two largest supermarket chains, and other prominent selling agents have signed contracts to install the dispensers in their locations nationwide. Gray noted that the dispensers are designed for use in chain store environments — large to small — as well as in financial institutions.

Noteworthy success

Everybody loves Post-it Notes — the little yellow pieces of paper that stick to other pieces of paper or to any flat surface and then unstick easily.

Since their introduction in 1980 by the Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. in St. Paul, the little notes have become as common a feature of office life as pencils and paper clips.

Post-it Notes are now "one of the top moving items in the number of sales in office supply products," says Joe Ramey, group vice president for commercial markets at 3M and the executive who steered the little notes to a marketing triumph. "They rank with Liquid Paper, paper for copying machines and pens and pencils. Post-it Notes created a need people didn't know they had."

The product came as a surprise to virtually everyone. The original research at 3M was designed to develop a very sticky adhesive. But the batch was botched, and the result was an adhesive with very low stickiness.

Most people at 3M — which is best known for its Scotch brand tapes — thought the low-stick adhesive developed by accident was worthless. But one technical engineer had a different idea.

Art Fry was frustrated when he constantly lost his place while reading. "It was then I conceived of a bookmark that would stick to the page but at the same time come off without laminating the paper."

The low-stick adhesive created by accident is perfectly suited for that purpose.

It's a humdinger

Ronald Reagan has his Strategic Defense Initiative; Herb Lindsay has his Humdinger.

He has spent about $250,000 of his own money funding lab work, field testing and manufacturing the item. The breakthrough was in miniaturizing and refining the electronics and ultrasonics, he said.

The result is the Humdinger, a 3-inch-long cylindrical gadget that hit the market about two months ago. The device, with two small integrated circuits, operates on a 9-volt battery. Lindsay, now the president of Humdinger Inc. of Longmont, about 30 miles north of Denver, said about 30,000 Humdingers already have been sold. The suggested retail price is $14.95.

Lindsay's effort is not the first attempt to build an ultrasonic bug zapper. Several years ago Consumer Reports surveyed the field and generally panned it. One invention, the magazine reported, offered to "rid you home or your plant forever of mice, rats, roaches, bats, fleas, spiders and other nastiness."

Foresters invent poison ivy cure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Smokey the Bear's buddies in the Forest Service have invented a spray-on chemical that prevents poison ivy from turning campers' skin into a mass of itchy, painful welts.

The product, called Ivy Block, was developed in five years by the Agriculture Department's equipment development center in Missoula, Mont. A private company may be ready to distribute it commercially by the end of the year, Jay Humphreys, a Forest Service spokesman, said Monday.

Humphreys said the distributor, United Catalyst Co. of Louisville, Ky., already manufactures organoclay, a common ingredient in antiperspirants, which is the poison ivy stopper.

Jim Stevens of the Forest Service's safety and health office said thousands of the agency's employees come into contact with poison ivy, poison oak and poison sumac every day. Last summer, he said, more than 400 employees received medical treatment for severe cases of poison ivy.

"What we did was come up with a way to prevent poison ivy, not cure it," said Jerry Oltman, who headed the research effort. "We concentrated on finding some way to prevent urushiol, the substance in poison ivy sap that causes the rash, from contacting the skin."

The breakthrough came when it was found that organoclay would absorb urushiol. The Forest Service researchers put organoclay in a pressurized can so it could be sprayed directly on the skin.

"What Ivy Block does is prevent urushiol from bonding with the skin by setting up a harmless barrier that lasts for about 24 hours," Oltman said in a report issued by the agency. "For most people, this is sufficient protection against poison ivy."

Oltman said the product also works when sprayed on clothing and tools.

"Four-ounce aerosol cans of Ivy Block have been distributed to hundreds of Forest Service employees for their use this summer, and as a result we hope we'll see a major decrease in health problems resulting from poison ivy," he said.

The Fed has already cut the discount rate three times, including a reduction on July 10 to the present level of 6 percent. But the economy has not revived and Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker has been under pressure from Congress to push interest rates down even further.

Heller, head of international economic research for Bank of America, was nominated to the seven-member Fed board to take the place of Preston Martin, who resigned to return to private business.

His nomination encountered no opposition among committee members and chairman Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, indicated he planned to move the nomination through the Senate as quickly as possible.

The committee also heard Tuesday from Michael Mussa, an economics professor at the University of Chicago, who has been nominated for a vacancy on the president's three-member Council of Economic Advisers.

Mussa said he believed economic growth would pick up in coming months as the beneficial effects of lower energy prices and falling interest rates overcome any weakness coming from a drop in federal government spending.

Some economists have expressed fears that the steep budget cuts envisioned by the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction goals could plunge an already sluggish economy into a recession.

OPEC pact impacts politics

WASHINGTON (AP) — The OPEC agreement to temporarily cut oil production to boost prices should not have much impact on the U.S. economy, but could give breathing room to troubled U.S. producers, government and private economists say.

If the agreement holds, it also could help ease the Reagan administration out of what had become a thorny election-year political dilemma: whether to help ailing Southwestern energy companies at the expense of American energy consumers.

Administration officals, while publicly reiterating that free market forces should determine oil prices, privately expressed guarded satisfaction over the agreement that broke a long OPEC deadlock.

"It takes a little heat off what had become a very nasty situation," said one adminstration official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

The drop in world petroleum prices has produced a serious economic slump throughout the oil-producing Southwest — while the rest of the nation has been reaping the benefits of lower costs.

"Somebody has tossed the U.S. oil industry a life preserver, but it's a tenuous one at this point," said Stephen A. Smith, an energy economist with Data Resources Inc., a Lexington, Mass., economic forecasting service. "It may be leaky. But it looks like something they can hold on to a little longer."

Analysts generally suggested that Tuesday's action by the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to reduce production from the current level of 20.5 million barrels a day to 16.7 million could cause about a dime-a-gallon increase in U.S. gasoline prices at the pump over the next few months.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said it was unclear whether the OPEC decision was good or bad news for the U.S. economy.

"Our view is that we've long felt and continue to believe that the free market and the laws of supply and demand should determine oil price and oil supply levels," he said.

However, some administration officials have voiced concern that oil prices might fall so low that the U.S. oil industry's ability to meet defense requirements would be undermined.

"It is good for the economy to have lower inflation. But there was an additional long term problem. At $10 a barrel, the oil companies virtually had stopped exploration," Ortner said.

In the long run, that could only result in a new shortage of oil and higher prices. "If prices stabilize at $14 or $15 a barrel, that would be helpful ... Obviously, the oil industry is a special interest and would prefer to see even higher prices instead of lower prices."

REACTION—

But, if the action boosts sagging prices by $2 a barrel, Mexico will gain an additional $500 million a year, he said.

Del Mazo said Mexico and other non-OPEC countries were willing to "go ahead with their cooperation in adjusting their exports to level and stabilize the market."

In Oslo, Norwegian Oil & Energy Minister Arne Oien said Norway would study the agreement but did not indicate whether the North Sea producer would lower its output.

OPEC spokesman James Audu said Egypt, Malaysia and Oman informed OPEC they they would reduce production by 100,000 barrels a day. Curtailments pledges were expected from Angola and Brunei, Audu said.

But Britain, a key producer, remained aloof from any cooperation that might restrain free trade.

Britain is the world's fifth largest oil producer and news of the OPEC agreement boosted the British pound sterling on the foreign exchange markets.

The sudden pickup in oil prices also benefited the British Treasury, which derives considerable revenue from tax on North Sea oil sales. Government officials estimate each $1-a-barrel increase in the oil price is worth $450 million more in annual revenue.

VENEZUELAN Congressman and oil expert Rafael Tudela said Monday that OPEC has made "a real disaster out of its policy," and its decision to reduce production 1.6 million barrels a day "means absolutely nothing.

"The policy which OPEC has followed has been totally wrong," said Tudela, a successful international oil broker. "The policy lacked credibility because if the original idea was to start a price war in order to recapture markets, the policy should have been seriously applied — even if for only a short time — so that OPEC's impact would have been felt."

Tudela said Saudi Arabia was the only OPEC member to successfully adopt the strategy.

"Saudi Arabia increased production to 6 million barrels, from 2 to 6 million barrels overnight, and they used a netback pricing policy which threw off the (international) price system," he said.

Once OPEC made the decision to go along with Saudi Arabia's plan, the group should have better developed the policy, Tudela said.

"You can't make a decision and then just throw it out. Now OPEC says it will lower production again. They don't know whether they are coming or going," Tudela said.

Algerian Oil Minister Balkacem Nabi said that the agreement meant a truce in the oil price war because OPEC and independent producers were now in the same boat.

Kuwait Oil Minister Ali Khalifa Al-Sabah warned the price war could continue and served notice he would tear up the agreement if "any country exceeded its quota by a single barrel."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Co-ownership bonds belong to survivor

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My husband bought an awful lot of U.S. Savings Bonds at his place of work. All the bonds have two names on them — my husband's name "or" his daughter's name.

He had a will made out, leaving everything to me. When he dies, can I cash the savings bonds? Or does his daughter get to cash them?

A. Those bonds are in co-ownership form — meaning that both your husband and his daughter own them, even though he paid for them.

Doyle

If he dies while the daughter is still living, the bonds will belong to her and her alone. At that point, she'll be able to do anything she likes with the bonds. She'll be able to cash them, if she so decides.

You can't redeem those bonds now and you won't be able to redeem them after your husband's death, for the simple reason that the bonds don't belong to you now and will not belong to you after he dies.

When one co-owner of U.S. Savings Bonds registered in co-ownership form dies, the bonds automatically become the property of the surviving co-owner. The bonds pass to the surviving co-owner and are not subject to probate.

The fact that your husband has named you as his sole heir in his will doesn't change the situation. As long as those savings bonds remain registered in co-ownership form, your husband's daughter will own the bonds when your husband dies.

This answer, no doubt, makes you very unhappy. I suspect you'll want your husband to change things. That can be done by having the savings bonds reissued in co-ownership form, with his name "or" your name.

However, to accomplish that change, the co-owner whose name is removed has to sign the necessary papers — Form PD 1938. I suspect you'll have difficulty getting your husband's daughter to sign.

Q. A $25 Series E, U.S. Savings Bond was issued to me in 1953 in my former marriage name. I do not have copies of my divorce papers. How can I cash this bond?

A. Technically, you can't. To redeem that bond, you sign your present name "changed by divorce from" your former name. And you're supposed to provide a certified copy of your divorce decree.

Now, if you're well known at the bank or other savings bond paying agent, you might be able to cash the bond without the divorce papers. But the bank would be going out on a limb.

To be sure of being able to redeem that bond, write to the court where the divorce took place and get a copy of the divorce decree.

Q. We tried to buy a $500 Series HH, U.S. Savings Bond, at our bank and were told they were not issuing them any more. They tried to sell us Series EE bonds, which we don't want. Is what we were told at the bank correct?

A. Sure. Series HH bonds have not been sold for cash since Oct. 31, 1982. Since that date, HH bonds have been available only in exchange for E and EE bonds and U.S. Savings Notes.

HH bonds, like H bonds issued until 1980, pay interest by check twice a year. That makes them different than Es, EEs and Savings Notes, on which interest accumulates and is not collected until redemption.

Q. I bought $1,000 of Series H, U.S. Savings Bond, in November 1966. It was a terrible shock to be informed that those bonds reached their final maturity in July 1986 and no longer will pay interest. Isn't there any hope these bonds bonds will be extended?

A. Nope. The earliest H bonds — those issued from June 1952 through January 1957 — had original maturities of nine years, eight months and were granted two 10-year extended maturities. That kept them in force for 29 years, eight months.

The Treasury Department announced, way back in 1979, that there would be no further extended maturities for those old H bonds.

Perfectly Peachy Summer Desserts

It's summer — the season when nature takes center stage to produce an extravagant abundance of fresh and delicious things to eat. One of summer's chief delights is a fragrant, juicy peach, brimming with good nutrition — vitamins A & C — as well as good taste.

Here are some inviting new ways to enjoy this favorite summer fruit: four alluring desserts, as refreshing to eat as they are to look at. Festive and easy to whip up — who wants to be in the kitchen on a warm summer day? — these flavorful treats will delight family and friends.

Spirited Peach Sorbet is an ultra-light dessert perfect for those sultry summer nights. The ingredient list is simple and so is the preparation. Garnished with mint and served with your favorite cookies, this sorbet is a refreshing alternative to ice cream or sherbet.

Peach Tart Messalina is a spectacular-looking, party-perfect dessert.

Another festive way to end a meal is with a Peach Ribbon Loaf. Alternating layers of ice cream, graham cracker crumbs and raspberry puree create a colorfully appealing frozen confection. Peach slices, whole raspberries and mint leaves lend the final elegant touch to this cooling dessert.

And if guests are craving "just a little something sweet" after dinner, Melba a la Creme is just the thing to serve.

Each of these sumptuous desserts is a perfect way to celebrate summer with family and friends.

Melba À La Creme

- 3 large ripe peaches, pitted, peeled, sliced
- 1-1/2 cups fresh raspberries
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 3/4 cup Peach Schnapps, divided
- 1 cup heavy cream

In medium bowl combine peaches, raspberries, sugar and 1/2 cup schnapps; mix well. Let stand at room temperature at least 30 minutes. In small mixing bowl beat cream with remaining 1/4 cup schnapps. Spoon fruit and liquid into 6 balloon wine glasses. Spoon whipped cream into a pastry bag fitted with a large star tip. Pipe cream over fruit.
Yield: 6 servings.

Peach Tart Messalina

- Pastry for single crust 9-inch pie
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 2 tablespoons cornstarch
- 1-1/4 cups milk
- 1/3 cup plus 1 tablespoon Peach Schnapps, divided
- 1/2 cup peach preserves
- 2 ripe peaches, peeled, thinly sliced
- 3 strawberries, thinly sliced

Prepare pastry from a packaged mix or favorite recipe. Fit pastry into a 9-inch tart pan with removable bottom. Prick bottom and sides of pastry thoroughly with a fork. Fit a piece of wax paper into pastry shell; fill with raw rice or beans. Bake in a 450°F. oven 8 to 10 minutes; remove rice or beans and paper. Bake 8 to 10 minutes longer or until golden brown. Cool before filling. Meanwhile in medium saucepan combine sugar and cornstarch; stir in milk. Stir over medium heat, until mixture boils and thickens; cook 1 minute longer. In small mixing bowl beat egg yolks. Gradually pour some of the hot milk mixture into yolks, beating constantly. Return mixture to saucepan. Cook, stirring, until mixture is thick. Remove from heat; cool slightly. Stir in 1/3 cup schnapps. Spread filling into cooled tart shell. Cover with wax paper. Chill 2 to 3 hours. Remove wax paper from tart; arrange sliced peaches around tart; arrange berries in center. Press peach preserves through a fine sieve. Stir in remaining 1 tablespoon schnapps. Brush over fruit.
Yield: 6 servings.

Peach Ribbon Loaf

- 1 quart peach ice cream, softened slightly
- 2/3 cup Peach Schnapps, divided
- 2 cups graham cracker crumbs
- 1/3 cup sugar
- 1/3 cup butter or margarine, softened
- 1 package (10 ounces) frozen raspberries, thawed

Line a 9 x 5-inch loaf pan with plastic wrap. In large bowl mix ice cream and 1/3 cup schnapps. Spoon 2 cups into prepared loaf pan. Place bowl with remaining ice cream mixture and loaf pan in freezer 20 minutes. Meanwhile in small bowl combine graham cracker crumbs, sugar and butter; mix well. Layer 1 cup crumb mixture over ice cream in loaf pan. In blender container puree raspberries; strain seeds. Combine puree and remaining 1/3 cup schnapps. Pour over crumbs in loaf pan. Freeze 20 minutes. Carefully spread remaining ice cream over raspberries. Cover with remaining crumb mixture pressing lightly into ice cream. Freeze overnight for best results. Turn out loaf onto serving plate. Remove plastic wrap. Garnish with peach slices, fresh raspberries and mint, if desired.
Yield: 8 to 10 servings.

Spirited Peach Sorbet

- 1 cup water
- 3/4 cup sugar
- 6 large ripe peaches, pitted, peeled
- 3/4 cup Peach Schnapps
- 1 large egg white

In small saucepan combine water and sugar; bring to boiling. Reduce heat, simmer 5 minutes. Chill. In food processor or blender puree peaches. (You should have 3 cups.) Combine chilled syrup, puree and schnapps; mix well. Pour into shallow metal pan; freeze about 2 hours or until mixture is frozen one inch around edges. Transfer mixture to food processor or bowl of electric mixer; add egg white. Process or beat just until smooth. Return to freezer. Cover. Freeze about 4 hours or until firm, or overnight for best results.
Yield: About 5 cups.

DEAR ABBY

Smoking kills

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You recently listed some famous people who died from lung cancer as a result of smoking. Smoking also kills in other ways — emphysema and heart damage, for example.

Add these famous lung cancer casualties to your list: Jesse Owens (he took up smoking after having won four gold medals for track at the 1936 Olympics), Walt Disney, Dick Powell, Sen. Richard Russell of Georgia, Frank Loesser (composed "Guys and Dolls"), Jacqueline Susann, Thomas Mann (he chain-smoked cigars), Chet Huntley, Duke Ellington, Gypsy Rose Lee, Zeppo Marx, Dick Haymes, Josef Krips (conductor, San Francisco Symphony), Peter Lisagor (distinguished journalist) and Illinois' Sen. Everett Dirksen, whose last words were, "Give me a cigarette."

Some heavy smokers who escaped lung cancer but died of emphysema included King Zog of Albania (six packs a day), Galla Curci (world-renowned opera singer), Tallulah Bankhead, Richard Arlen, Errol Garner and, ironically, R.J. Reynolds, who made his fortune from tobacco. — GILBERT VAN VRANKEN, CLAREMONT, CALIF.

DEAR MR. VAN VRANKEN: Read on for a letter I knew was sure to come:

DEAR ABBY: You added to the current cigarette scare that is now sweeping the country by printing a long list of people who had supposedly died from smoking. Why not give equal time to a few people who smoked for years and lived to a ripe old age — Winston Churchill and Eubie Blake, to name two? And George Burns is still going strong. — WILLIAM HORN, VERNON, CONN.

DEAR READERS: I recently recounted in my column this bizarre accident: A toddler wandered off during a picnic and was later found dead in an ice chest containing just enough melted ice to have drowned him. I said, "If this happened once, it could happen again." Many readers wrote to thank me.

A few days later I received a letter from "Bonnie from Carson" whose good friends had just lost a 14-month-old grandson in another equally freak accident. His sitter had strapped him into his high chair and went outside for "a few minutes." When she returned, she discovered that the child had wiggled himself down and hanged himself on the strap. Bonnie repeated my admonition: "If it could happen once, it could happen again."

Recently I received this letter:

DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of the child who died as a result of a freak accident in his high chair.

Abby, my baby did not "wiggle himself down and hang himself on the strap." The strap that went between his legs to hold him up had broken, causing the child to slip down, catching his neck so that he strangled on the high chair tray!

I just want to warn others to never leave a child alone for even a few minutes. A minute is all it takes for a child to be lost forever. — PAM MYRICK, DENVER

DEAR PAM: My heart goes out to you. Please accept my deepest sympathy. Thank you, Pam, for writing so that others may be spared the tragic loss that you and your family have suffered.

DEAR ABBY: I know that you get mail about all kinds of subjects, but this has been bugging me for months. What's with those white stockings so many of the ladies are wearing now? Nurses don't even wear the ugly things anymore. At first I thought they were support hose and wondered why suddenly so many women had varicose veins. White stockings aren't at all flattering to the legs, and do nothing for the wearers' outfits.

Do you think this is just a passing fad, and soon beautiful sheer nylons the color of natural flesh will once more return to flatter the ladies' legs? — HATES WHITE STOCKINGS

DEAR HATE: I hope so.

CONFIDENTIAL TO IN DOUBT IN SHERIDAN, WYO.: I'm on your side. Go to a trade school if that's what you want to do.

"An excellent plumber is infinitely more admirable than an incompetent philosopher. The society that scorns excellence in plumbing because plumbing is a humble activity, and tolerates shoddiness in philosophy because it is an exalted activity, will have neither good plumbing nor good philosophy. Neither its pipes nor its theories will hold water." (John Gardner)

Distillers' new products take shots at 'coolers'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The cooler is where it's at in the alcoholic beverage business and the nation's makers of hard liquor want a piece of the action.

The popularity of wine coolers and lower alcohol beverages have left distillers suffering a decline in sales. They hope to catch up with the "spirit cooler," a fruity tasting drink that replaces wine with distilled liquor.

One of these is the Fletcher and Oakes brand, a fruit schnapps and soda beverage that the James B. Beam Distilling Co. calls "the original schnapps spritz." The company says its alcohol content of 5.5 percent is lower than most wine coolers.

Another is the new Seagrams Golden Spirits line, including Peach Melba Rum, Sun Fruit Gin, Spiced Canadian (whiskey-based) and Mandarin Vodka. With an alcohol content of 5.1 percent, the Golden Spirits are sold in four-packs that cost about $1 more than the popular Seagrams Premium Wine Cooler. Sales in the first month have been "excellent," said a spokesman.

Despite their low alcohol content, the new spirits coolers will not be advertised on television or radio because distillers voluntarily refrain from such promotion, reports the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States.

Meanwhile, even the original wine and fruit beverage, sangria, has also been given a new look. One brand of sangria is now being packaged in unbreakable, unspillable, single-serving punch boxes with a straw taped to the side.

Yago Sant'gria is marketing its sangria in packs of three in the New York area with plans to distribute it in major markets nationwide beginning mid-summer.

Pie prepared with conserves

PORT READING, N.J. (UPI) — One of the hottest areas of the current gourmet food market takes in all-natural fruit products that mix health considerations with great taste.

In fact, the specialty food category that has grown up around jellies, jams and preserves is now estimated at $600 million in sales per year.

One of the most innovative companies laboring in this field calls itself Sorrell Ridge Conserves. The company, owned and distributed by Allied Old English Inc. of Port Reading boasts 14 unsweetened fruit flavors along with eight honey-sweetened versions of each.

These conserves are made of 58 percent fruit solids, with fresh fruit juices filling in the rest. In addition to the more common uses of preserves, these conserves are more than good enough to take their place in fine cooking — as the following recipe demonstrates.

BLUEBERRY CREAM CHEESE PIE

Crust:
1½ cups graham crackers, finely crushed
¼ cup melted butter or margarine

Filling:
1 8-ounce package cream cheese, softened
¼ cup sour cream
2 tablespoon milk
½ teaspoon vanilla
⅛ teaspoon salt
¼ cup finely chopped walnuts

Topping:
2 tablespoon unflavored gelatin
½ cup hot water
½ teaspoon lemon juice
½ cup blueberry conserves
2 cups blueberries, fresh or frozen (thawed)

To prepare the crust, combine the graham cracker crumbs with the butter or margarine. Press the mixture firmly into a 9-inch pie plate. Bake at 350 degrees for 8-10 minutes, then allow to cool.

For the filling, beat together the cream cheese, sour cream, milk, vanilla and salt. Stir in the walnuts. Spread the filling into the cooled graham cracker crust and refrigerate to partially set while preparing the topping.

In a medium bowl, dissolve the gelatin in hot water. Stir in the lemon juice and blueberry conserves. Fold in the berries. Pour over the pie's chilled cream cheese filling. Chill until firm, about 1 hour.

WHAT'S COOKING

Recipe can make a splash

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Debbie Erdwurm of Alamo YMCA will tell you that her job as aquatics director doesn't leave her much time to lounge by the pool.

"I am responsible for all aquatics programs, all scheduling of the pool, all the instructors — training, hiring, firing — all the classes, maintenance of the pool — anything that has to do with aquatics, that's me," she said. "And anything else Terry (Seth, Alamo's executive director) delegates."

Hundreds of people, both children and adults, make use of Alamo's swimming pools and swimming programs each year, Mrs. Erdwurm said. So far this summer about 1,200 swimmers have used the Y's facilities, with about 600-800 people in swimming classes, she added.

Because her job keeps her so busy, Mrs. Erdwurm doesn't have much time for cooking, either. "If I start something (cooking) that needs my attention, the phone invariably rings ... and it burns up."

That's why Mrs. Erdwurm — along with her husband and two children — likes this recipe. "It's extra easy. "This one you can't burn up."

The dish is tasty, too. "I think this is something everybody likes," she said, "as long as they like strawberries."

Baked 9-inch pie shell
Whipped cream

Bake pie shell; cool.

Mix sugar, corn starch and water and cook over low heat until thick and mixture becomes clear. Add gelatin powder; cool completely.

Strawberry season short but sweet

By BETTY WILSON
Hearst News Service

Fresh strawberry season is very short, so make the most of it while it's here. When buying strawberries, buy only the amount of berries you plan to use in one or two days.

For planning purposes, remember that one quart of berries contains 5 to 6 servings and will make about 2 cups crushed fruit. Two quarts will make four 8-ounce jars of jam without pectin or about six 8-ounce jars with pectin.

FRESH STRAWBERRY PIE
1 baked 9-inch pastry shell
1½ quarts fresh strawberries
1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons cornstarch
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ cup whipping cream, optional

Set aside half of the hulled berries. Mash the remaining berries. Blend the sugar and cornstarch and add to the mashed berries. Cook over medium heat 5 to 6 minutes, or until clear and very thick. Stir in the lemon juice. Cool.

Select a few of the remaining berries for garnish. Add the rest of the berries, whole or cut, to the cooled mixture. Pour into the pastry shell. Garnish with whipped cream if desired. Serves 6.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE
2 cups flour
¼ cup sugar
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
A few grains nutmeg
½ cup margarine
1 egg
⅓ cup milk
1 quart fresh strawberries
Sugar to taste
Whipping cream (optional)

Preheat the oven to 450 F and grease an 8-inch square or round pan.

Sift the flour, sugar, baking powder, salt and nutmeg together in a mixing bowl. Cut the margarine in with a pastry blender until the mixture looks mealy.

Beat the egg and add the milk. Pour into the flour mixture and stir until all floury particles are mixed in. Do not beat. Spoon into a baking pan and smooth the top. Bake 12 minutes or until the center tests done. Cool on a rack.

Slice the washed berries and sweeten with sugar. At serving time, cut the cake into two layers and put the berries between layers as well as on the top. Serves 6-8.

SUGAR-FREE STRAWBERRY FREEZER JAM
2 cups crushed strawberries
4 teaspoons unflavored gelatin
1½ tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons liquid artificial sweetener, to equal 1 cup sugar

Soften gelatin in ½ cup berry juice. Heat the remaining 1½ cups crushed berries to boiling. Remove from the heat and add the softened gelatin, stirring until it is dissolved. Add the lemon juice and artificial sweetener. Stir and cool.

Pour into containers suitable for freezing. Makes two 8-ounce jars.

Preseason meats to bring out flavor, form crust

By MERLE ELLIS

Many of you have been brainwashed into believing that you should NEVER salt meat before cooking because "salt draws out the juices that keep meat tender." But you have been misled. I don't know when, how or why the myth got started but it must have been back before Malory Todd began curing country hams in Smithfield or Sitting Bull made jerky just outside Sioux Falls. Sure salt draws the moisture out of meat — if you put meat down in salt after the first frost and leave it there till early spring! But we're not talking about curing hams or making jerky; we're talking about when to season a steak or roast, or chicken or chop. Before or after cooking? Believe me the answer is BEFORE. No? Don't believe me?

Alber Levie is president of Gulliver's Inc., a chain of restaurants with headquarters in Los Angeles. More importantly to this discussion, he is author of a book titled "Meat Handbook" published by AVI. It is one of the most authoritative treatments on the subject of meat, its processing, cooking and palatability. It is a text in most colleges and universities that have a department dealing with meat.

On the subject of "when to salt," Mr. Levie has this to say: "Preseason meat with salt and pepper, and other condiments, and the seasoning will become part of the crust. Salt brings out the flavor of the meat, but retards caramelization. Seasoning must be done before cooking, as the flavorful crust forms during cooking. There are some who object to preseasoning for fear of loss of fluids. This loss is not significant in quantity."

Louis Szathmarg, owner of the famed "Bakery" restaurant in Chicago and one of the most respected food experts in the country, seasons meat BEFORE cooking with his special "Chef's Salt."

Ask any Texas barbecue expert — and most everybody in Texas is one of those — when to season meat. You'll probably get a dissertation on his special "Dry Rub." Every Texan has one of those and rubs it on the meat BEFORE it is cooked.

Below are some special seasoning mix recipes given to me over the years by some of those folks who really know how and WHEN to season meat. Try them on meat BEFORE you cook it. And if you're still not convinced, try Maggie Waldron's "Salt Roasted Steak."

LOUIS SZATHMARG'S "CHEF'S SALT"

1 cup salt
1 tablespoon paprika (Hungarian or Spanish)
¼ teaspoon ground white pepper
¼ teaspoon garlic salt (not garlic powder)

Mix all ingredients well and keep in a jar. Use instead of salt. Makes approx. 1 cup.

LINDA WEST ECKHARDT'S BASIC DRY RUB FOR BAR-B-Q

BASIC RUB FOR BEEF:
3 tablespoons salt
3 tablespoons pepper
3 tablespoons paprika

Mix together and rub on beef before barbecuing.

MAGGIE WALDRON'S SALT ROASTED STEAK

3 pounds (7½ cups) coarse-medium salt
2 pounds beef tenderloin, in 1 piece
¼ pounds butter or margarine
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 loaf French bread, cut in ½-inch thick slices and toasted on one side

Mix just enough water (about 2¼ cups) with the salt to make it like damp sand. In a hinged grill, place a double thickness of paper towels, about the size of the meat. Pat out half the salt on the towels; top with meat. Completely cover meat with remaining salt, coating evenly (this keeps the juices in). Now cover with a double thickness of paper toweling, overlapping the edges (don't worry, only the towel edges will burn). Close grill. Grill close to coals 12 to 15 minutes per side. Crack off hardened cakes of salt, scraping off any that clings. Thinly slice meat. Melt butter in a skillet and add garlic. Dip untoasted side of bread in garlic butter and top with slices of meat. Makes 8 servings.

City proposes funding nearly every group

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The City Council proposed Tuesday giving something to almost every group requesting Community Development funds, including increasing a grant to the Black Advisory Council from $4,000 to $40,000.

However, representatives from the black council said they were disappointed that their full $66,000 request for a senior citizen/tutorial center was not granted.

"We need as much funding as any of the other organizations, to do what we need to do," said James Fuller, member of the Black Advisory Council.

Fuller said the group will seek other sources of funding to couple with the $40,000 to make the center a reality.

"We'll be able to accomplish quite a bit, but we'd be able to accomplish a lot more if we had the additional money," Fuller said.

The council doled out $894,424 in Community Development Block Grant funds during a work session Tuesday. A final decision on the allocations will be made at Tuesday's council meeting.

The council also increased a grant from $139,000 to $161,000 to the Eastside Economic Development Task Force for a small business revolving loan fund.

Another large allocation, $102,000 for code enforcement, sparked some dissent from council members.

"If we made people be a citizen and mow their own lots, then we could use this money for something else," said Councilman David Godfrey, of the money used to clear weedy lots.

Councilwoman Oralia Corrales said she hasn't seen the results of past money allocated to clear lots.

"For the amount of money we're spending, we don't seem to be getting anything out of it," Ms. Corrales said.

Code Enforcement Officer Ronnie Lewis told the council that difficulty in finding lot owners and filing liens has caused a slowdown in the program.

City Manager Jim Brown told the council to have patience with the program.

"I think you'll find more success, but you won't have instant success. Give it two or three years. You'll see more improvement with the owners," Brown said.

The council also recommended $50,000 be allocated to public works to pave streets in the area between Carver and Mineola streets south of Industrial Avenue.

Another $16,000 was given to public works to pave streets around Ulmer Park.

Other proposed allocations include:

— $105,000 for the administration of community funds.

— $75,000 for the Housing Authority to rehabilitate homes.

— $75,000 for the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children to construct a new shelter.

— $45,000 for ball field lights at Washington and Hidalgo parks.

— $20,000 for Midland police to begin a lock program in the southside of the city.

— $10,000 for a contingency fund.

— $5,000 for Taylor Park Day Care to buy educational equipment, a clothes dryer and to repair playground equipment.

— $4,000 for the Freewill Foster Home for roof repairs, playground equipment and air conditioning.

— $3,000 for City Community Services for the Aged for "deep cleaning" homes of the low income elderly.

— $2,700 for Clean Midland.

UTPB campaigns to raise money for energy center

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

University of Texas of the Permian Basin officials today launched a campaign to raise part of the $15 million needed to construct its Center for Energy and Economic Diversification.

Phase I construction activities for the Center to be located at the intersection of Farm-to-Market Road 1788 and State Highway 191, include a 30,000 square foot building encompassing offices, laboratory space, a library, computer facilities and workspace.

Site preparation, furnishings, equipment and other costs are included in the $5 million Phase I goal scheduled to conclude in February 1987.

During an on-campus news conference, UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach said the Center is "absolutely vital to the region as it seeks to grow in scope benefiting the people and businesses of the Permian Basin.

"Now we must build the facility that will serve the needs of this cooperative enterprise," he said.

Leach cut a portion of a giant check as a "symbol" of the partnership between the university and Permian Basin residents and presented it to Odessa's Ref-Chem Corp., President Harvey Page for his donation to the "Partnership for the Future" campaign.

"This piece of the check represents the investment you have made financially as well as personally in this community-wide project," Leach said.

"At the conclusion of the campaign, we will ask all the partners to meet again to rejoin this check as we move forward on the new Center for Energy and Economic Diversification."

Leach said the Center is working on projects to benefit the Permian Basin economy.

Included among them is the creation of a National Center for Excellence representing 23 companies involved in specialized manufacture of materials.

Negotiations also are underway to attract a "large" manufacturing project to the area by bringing together local business owners in a consortium, Leach said.

The Center, in its capacity as an applied research center, also is being considered as one of two universities in the nation to work in direct cooperation with the federal government to license patents and technology.

The purpose, said Leach, is to provide a broad base for delivering technical and managerial support services to industry in the region.

"With these kind of projects in process, the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification is clearly demonstrating that its work is of the utmost importance for the people of the the Permian Basin," Leach said.

"Talent, technology, capital and know-how are required to build successful ventures. These characteristics are indigenous to the Permian Basin and will be the strengths that make 'Partnership for the Future' a success for all."

Shelburne benefit scheduled Saturday

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

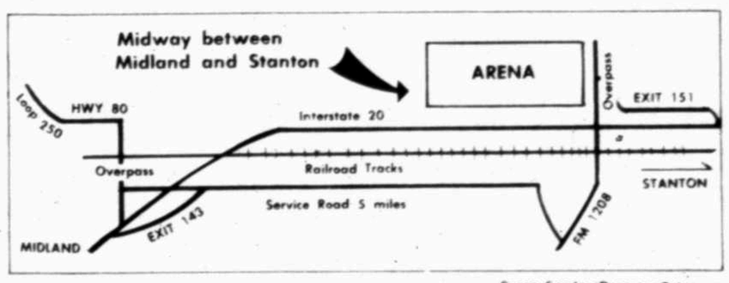

A benefit scheduled prior to the death of Cherie Shelburne to help her parents offset the medical expenses associated with her liver disease and transplant will go on, as scheduled, Ray Davis, benefit organizer said.

The 14-hour benefit will be held Saturday at the arena of the D&D Corral located at the intersection of FM 1028 and Interstate 20, from noon until 2 a.m., Davis said.

"We would rather celebrate her life than mourn her death," Davis said.

Use of the D&D Corral was donated by its owner, Dave Leonard, Davis said.

"We will have nine bands playing throughout the day and night — everything from country western to bluegrass to rhythym and blues and rock and roll.

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

Local bands such as The Shades, The Marbles, Dave Price and the Texas SwingBand and Southern Pride will be there, Davis said.

Other festivities slated for the day include a pie baking contest with Sheriff Gary Painter judging, as well as a pie eating contest later.

"We're going to have a dunking booth, horse rides for children, bull riding exhibitions and an auction on donated items from various Midland merchants," Davis said.

Also on the agenda are concession booths.

Food from Gardski's, Texas Tumbleweed, Scotties Ice Cream, J.B.'s Barbeque, Lakeside Catfish and Chez Vous Catering will be available in addition to independent concession booth operators offering nachos and burritos, Davis said.

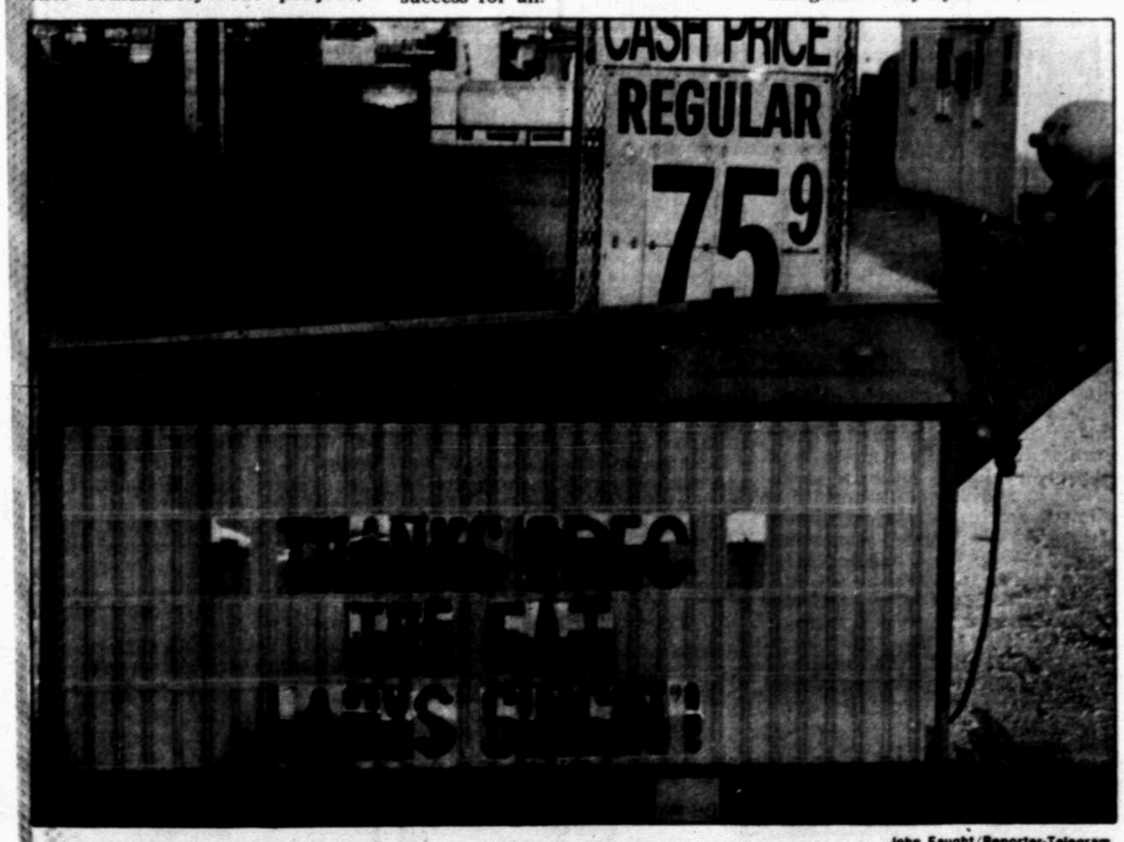

On a more serious note, Davis said there will be a booth set up to register volunteers to donate bodily organs when the time should arise.

"There should be something for all there and we would be very pleased if we could raise about $10,000," Davis said.

The Shelburne family faces a remainder of about $50,000-$60,000 in debts resulting from Cherie's bout with bilary atresia and liver transplant on July 17 and 18.

Tickets may be purchased in advance for $5 by calling 694-4929 or 694-2678 or for $6 at the door. Children ages six to 12 may enter for $3 and those under six are free, Davis said.

Businessman refunded $430 after FDIC auction squabble

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

Richard Bowdon, a Midland businessman, apparently will get a $430 refund for some office furniture bought at last week's FDIC auction.

The decision comes a day after Bowdon, 29, said he was told by an auction official that he could not get a refund — despite the fact his merchandise had been stolen.

"If he calls me, I don't see a problem in giving him a refund," said Mark C. Thomas, whose company handled the FDIC auction.

"My guy made a mistake if he told him he could not get his money back."

The issue began Thursday when Bowdon said he bought two executive chairs and a bookcase for his office at the FDIC auction for $430.

But when he went to pick up the merchandise Tuesday, Bowdon said he was told it no longer existed.

Someone had apparently taken the merchandise, auction officials told him, Bowdon said.

And when he questioned an auction official, Bowdon said he was told there was no way to recover his money.

"I'm upset about it," noting he did sign a disclaimer freeing the FDIC and the auctioneer of any blame. "I had no idea the risk was this high."
— Richard Bowdon

"I'm upset about it," Bowdon said this morning, noting he did sign a disclaimer freeing the FDIC and the auctioneer of any blame. "I had no idea the risk was this high."

But FDIC officials and Thomas today said Bowdon's money should be refunded.

Thomas said the case apparently was a misunderstanding.

"I've already refunded $1,500 to people in the auction who also had merchandise taken," Thomas said. "It's (getting a refund) a simple procedure."

Thomas said such theft is common in auctions.

"A guy might buy some items and then send his hands out to pick it up. They may accidentally load another guy's things on the truck.

"There also may be people who purposely take something," Thomas said. "We try to secure the place as best we can."

Thomas said his auction company pays $7.50 to $12.50 an hour for security officers.

Mike Kimbrow, FDIC liquidation assistant, said the auction company is responsible for the losses.

"We don't take care of the security check-out," he said. "Unless there is a severe problem, we don't get into it."

Kimbrow said the auctioneers warn customers at the auction to pick up their merchandise as soon as possible.

"When there's 4,000 people buying material, the auction company trys to secure it as best they can," Kimbrow said. "As a past buyer, it is a good idea to pick it up as soon as you can."

Amendment proposed to prohibit state tax

AUSTIN (AP) — State Sen. Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth, has introduced a proposed constitutional amendment that would prohibit imposing a state income tax.

"With economic times as tough as they are in Texas and with the state facing continual budget problems, there will be increasing pressure on the Legislature to turn to an income tax," Parmer said Tuesday.

NASA administrator assuring that city stays 'synonymous with space'

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher assured Texas congressmen at a House committee hearing that Houston will continue to be "synonymous with space."

Texas' congressional delegation reacted angrily when the space agency announced last month that it would realign work assignments on the space station program, moving some of the research from Johnson Space Center to the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala.

Houston business leaders see the JSC and its reputation as a research center as an enticement to new industry. The area is suffering from high unemployment because of the fall in oil prices.

Last week, after meeting with Texas congressmen, Fletcher agreed to wait 90 days before going ahead with changes.

He assured the congressmen during a Tuesday hearing before the House Science and Technology subcommittee on Space Science and Applications that Houston's continued participation in both the space shuttle and space station programs "will assure Johnson's pre-eminence in manned space flight."

"Houston still will be synonymous with space," he said.

Fletcher said management of the space station program would be relocated to NASA headquarters in Washington. Work on space station propulsion would be moved from Marshall to Johnson, but outfitting of the living quarters would go from Johnson to Marshall.

"Many of the proposed changes were made to eliminate overlap," Fletcher said. "But the primary rationale for the work package proposals was to achieve clarity in accountability for delivered-end items."

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, complained that "on the face of it, NASA's decision doesn't make sense," because Marshall is responsible for propulsion and Johnson for manned flight.

Texas Electric to request customer refund of PUC

From Staff Reports

In accordance with a new permanent fuel rule recently adopted by the Public Utility Commission, the Texas Electric Company announced Wednesday it will file an application with the PUC asking authorization to refund to its customers about $64.8 million that has been saved because of lowered fuel costs.

The company will ask the PUC to authorize the refund at the earliest possible date, which probably would be in October, through a credit to customer's bills.

Under the company's proposal, the residential customer with an average October usage of 1,000 kilowatt-hours would receive a refund of about $10.50.

The PUC rule requires that refunds be made if amounts overrecovered from customers exceed 4 percent of its annual fuel costs or $40 million, whichever is lower.

Because of the drop in market prices of natural gas in late 1985 and early 1986 and the company's aggressive effort to obtain lower-priced gas supplies, the company was able to lower rates charged to its customers by about 5 percent, effective in March, according to a company press release.

Most of the revenue the company will ask to refund was overcollected during February, before the lower rates took effect.

Texas Utilities Electric Company Senior Vice-President Tom Baker said the Company is continuing to pursue the lowest-priced fuel supplies available in order to maintain savings to its customers.

Benny Zamudio, of Corpus Christi, helps his daughter Carol read during a recent visit to a neighborhood center where youngsters participate in a Summer Reading for Fun program.

Neighborhood center gives youths chance at reading

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Sonia Noyola sat at a table piled high with mystery books for young readers.

"It's a story about a reporter whose editor sends her to Mexico to do a story about the Mayans, and the adventures she has while she's there," the fourth-grader said, giving a summary of the book she was reading.

Sonia was attending one of the "Reading is Fun" sessions at the Molina Neighborhood Center this summer by the West Oso Minded Organization.

The children gather around the patio to read. Some read together, some alone, and older children and adults help younger ones. They read everything: mysteries, adventures, magazines, paperbacks and hardcovers. But they read.

"The program began in an attempt to promote, provide and create educational opportunities in the West Oso district. Reading for fun is one of the methods we came up with," said Danny Noyola, a volunteer at the center.

Parents, ex-students and community leaders formed the organization that sponsors the program. Neighborhood members, like Noyola, volunteer their time to help at the center.

Others from outside the neighborhood, like County Attorney Carlos Valdez and Jon J. Kelly, a local attorney, also donate their time.

"Children often find that reading what they want to read instead of what they are told to read is an enjoyable experience. This is what we are trying to show them — that reading is fun," said center director Rudy Sosa.

The participants in the program range in age from preschool children to high school students. Adults will read to younger children who haven't learned to read.

Sosa said the reading does not necessarily have to last the entire hour.

"We try to remain flexible. If the kids are ready to play basketball, we start the game. It is important to keep the atmosphere fun and relaxed. If they read for 20 minutes, that's a success."

Noyola said many of the children lack access to reading material in their homes.

The members of the center try to encourage parental involvement.

"Parental reinforcement is very important," Noyola said. "It all begins in the home."

The center obtains most of its books and materials from the donations of individuals and organizations including the U.S. Postal Service, Corpus Christi Police Department and Brandeis University National Women's Committee, Sosa said.

At the end of last year's program, the center gave away nearly 2,000 books as part of an end-of-summer party.

Noyola said the children were allowed to take any books they wanted home with the hope that by having the books in the house, the children might read even more.

"This program is only one part of a larger effort to improve the entire neighborhood and make it a place that encourages growth and development. We still have a lot to do," Sosa said.

Officials designate hall bone transplant center for services

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Officials say Wilford Hall U.S. Air Force Medical Center is designated the bone marrow transplant center for armed forces.

The Air Force hospital will be the first facility in the Department of Defense to perform bone marrow transplants, said Brig. Gen. Thomas P. Ball, hospital commander.

He said personnel are being selected and equipment assembled. Plans call for the first transplant before the end of this month, Ball said.

"We want to make certain that everything is in proper place and to make sure we avoid any possibility of complications," Ball told the San Antonio Express-News on Tuesday.

Dr. Gerald L. Messerschmidt, a medical oncologist who will head the program , said four patients are currently under evaluation for the first transplant.

Assistant director will be Dr. James M. Thompson, also a medical oncologist.

Messerschmidt said the hospital has been gearing up for a bone marrow transplant program for the past three years by doing 120 autologous transplants, in which a patient's own bone marrow is removed and then given back to the patient.

The new service, however, will do allogeneic transplants, in which healthy marrow is taken from a donor and infused into a sick patient.

"All proceeds will go to Cherie's trust fund which is administered by Dr. Kenneth Hall, pastor of the Crestview Baptist Church," Davis said.

Davis said if enough money was raised to pay off all the Shelburne's bills, the surplus would go directly to the National Liver Foundation, of which Shelburne is a board member.

"We don't expect that to happen though — we just want to help as much as we can," Davis said.

Chamber leaders agree cuts needed to solve crisis

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Most representatives of 33 chambers of commerce who met here Tuesday agree that budget cuts and revenue expansion, including tax increases, are necessary to solve the state's fiscal crisis.

But the 80 chamber officials from across the state did not reach a consensus on when or how the cuts or revenue-raising measures should be implemented.

The group gathered in Austin, on the eve of a special legislative session, to learn more about the severity of the state's financial crisis. They heard from House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Salado, and Senate Finance Committee Chairman Grant Jones, D-Abilene.

"I think we all agree it's going to take a combination of (budget cuts and tax increases) to resolve our problem," said Sam Bell, chairman of the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce.

"But timing is a question. ...We were not totally convinced it could be solved in a 30-day special session."

Bell said many of the chamber officials also would consider supporting pari-mutuel betting or a state lottery to generate state revenues.

But he stressed that the group did not reach a consensus on specific ways to solve the budget shortfall and said the group probably would convey its views to the Legislature "on an individual chamber basis."

"The instructions that the representatives got from each other...were to go back to our respective chambers...to call special sessions of those chambers if a regular one is not scheduled to brief them on the input we have received today...and to get back to our legislative representatives immediately on what the position of our various chambers will be," said Bell.

He said some members of the group support Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's plan to cut spending and increase revenues by broadening the sales tax base.

Murder trial witnesses differ over evidence

WACO (AP) — Expert witnesses in a capital murder trial differ on whether muddy footprints found at the victim's home match up with tennis shoes found at a suspect's trailer.

Defense attorneys for Clifton Eugene Belyeu rested their case Tuesday in state District Court in Waco. The court-appointed attorneys, Ken Ables and Fred Horner, called two witnesses who testified for less than 30 minutes.

Belyeu, 27, is charged in the stabbing and shooting death of Melodie Bolton on Dec. 10. Earnest Ray Moore, 21, also is charged in the death. Both men are from Cleburne.

One of the defense witnesses, Roger Smith, of the Dallas County Institute of Forensic Sciences, testified that he compared footprints found in Mrs. Bolton's home in West with the soles of tennis shoes found in Belyeu's trailer home.

Smith said he could not positively identify the left tennis shoe as the shoe that made the footprint.

However, earlier in the trial, Dr. James Ebert, a forensic photography expert from New Mexico, testified the left tennis shoe made a muddy footprint in the Bolton home.

Ebert, who was called by the prosecution, said he found three unique, individual correspondences. He said there is no likelihood any other shoe made that impression.

Convention continues with Bishop Coleman presiding

From Staff Reports

Bishop Coleman

The 52nd session of the Northwest Texas Annual Convention is continuing this week at St. Paul C.M.E. Church, 409 Lee Street, in Midland. It is being presided over by its Prelate of 12 years and newly installed Senior Bishop of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, Bishop Caesar David Coleman.

Coleman, "a son of the parsonage" and the 36th Bishop of the C.M.E. denomination, was installed as Senior Bishop and Chief Executive Officer at the 31st Quadrennial Session of the General Conference, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church in Birmingham, Ala., on July 3.

Coleman's service to the church marks the third generation of Colemans to work within the C.M.E. church. His grandfather was a lay delegate to the C.M.E. Conference 1870 and his father was an ordained minister.

Of his family heritage and tradition, Coleman said, "the Coleman family has freely given 165 years to the ministry of the kingdom of God through our Zion. For this service in our church, I am extremely proud."

He also urged black churches to get involved. Although C.M.E. is a "black church working in the black community...we are concerned about black humanity because it seems to be the most oppressed."

Coleman, chairman of the board of trustees of Texas College in Tyler, is currently active in leading negotiations of a possible merger between Texas College and Wiley College in Marshall.

The Northwest Texas Annual Conference will close Friday with the "sermon of commission" and reading of pastoral appointments for 1986-87.

Rev. Woodrow Wilson Bailey Jr., is pastor of Midland's St. Paul C.M.E. Church.

Libertarians: Deficit chance to trim government

By GARTH JONES

Theresa Doyle

AUSTIN (AP) — The Libertarian Party of Texas says the state's $3.5 billion deficit is a "golden opportunity" to reduce state government.

"Let us look at this $3.5 billion budget shortfall as a Godsend," Theresa Doyle, a San Antonio travel agent who is the party's gubernatorial candidate, told a news conference Tuesday.

"The way to prosperity is through less government, less taxes, less regulation," she said.

William Howell, a Dallas bookkeeper, said he was running for lieutenant governor on the platform of abolishing the position.

"Eight other states don't have this office and don't need it," he said.

George Meeks, a San Antonio businessman who said he spent 14 months in federal jails because of tax protests, challenged incumbent Democratic Comptroller Bob Bullock to debate.

Meeks claimed Bullock had violated the U.S. Constitution by accepting "pieces of paper" instead of the legal tender of gold and silver in payment of state debts.

The party announced Tuesday that it had completed its ballot drive by submitting more than 39,000 signatures of voters to the secretary of state on July 17.

However, party director Dianne Pilcher said the secretary of state's office was making a spot check of the signatures to determine if the petition contained only the names of registered voters in the Republican and Democratic primaries.

Under state law, the Libertarians must have 31,911 qualified signatures to earn a place on the November ballot.

Ms. Pilcher said a challenge to the signatures was filed by Orlando Garcia, a Democratic legislative candidate who has a Libertarian opponent in November.

The check of the petition is due to be completed Sept. 10.

Other statewide Libertarian candidates include:

State treasurer — Robert F. Reid, a Fort Worth accountant;

Attorney general — Mike Stephens, a Dallas systems analyst;

Agriculture commissionier — Rebecca Reed, a University of Texas senior from San Antonio;

Land commissioner — Honey Sue Lanham, of Dallas.

Police say three armed men allegedly attacked alien

PRESIDIO (AP) — Authorities say three heavily armed men dressed in army fatigues allegedly attacked and beat an undocumented alien who had crossed illegally into the United States near this West Texas community.

Gary Brown, Presidio County sheriff's chief deputy, said Tuesday that the beating occurred July 24 between Ruidosa and Presidio.

Brown told the El Paso Times that an investigation by the sheriff's department did not produce any arrests at the time of the attack. But three Odessa men were arrested by Presidio deputies July 30 and charged with unlawfully carrying weapons.

Brown said a farmer spotted three heavily armed men wearing army fatigues traveling along the U.S.-Mexico border outside Presidio. They had an assortment of weapons, including an AR-15 semi-automatic rifle, pistols, hunting knives and throwing knives, he said.

"They fit the description of the three men who beat up the man, but that has not been proved and they haven't been charged with assault," said Brown. "It has not been determined what these men were doing along the border."

Last month in Arizona, a paramilitary group set out to stop drug trafficking along the U.S.-Mexico border by starting patrols.

Hugh Rushton, chief U.S. Border Patrol agent for the Marfa sector, said his agents are investigating the assault and the arrests to find out what the men were doing at the border.

"We have not been able to link them with any paramilitary operations," said Rushton. "And they do not claim to be a part of the CMA."

CMA is the Civilian Materiel Assistance group formed by former Marine Tom Posey of Decatur, Ala. In July, the group was under scrutiny when several members stopped illegal aliens in Arizona for questioning.

Posey said Tuesday in a telephone interview that the three men who allegedly beat up the Mexican man near Presidio are not a part of his group.

Former Army captain denied reinstatement, back pay by judge

By KATHRYN BAKER

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former Army captain who said he was forced out 10 years ago after complaining about combat readiness has been denied reinstatment and back pay by a federal judge.

U.S. Claim Court Judge Mastin White ruled that Peter C. Cole was rebuffed by the Army when he sought to withdraw his resignation because he was a disruptive influence, not because he said his superiors were lying about the success of the all-volunteer Army.

White heard nine days of testimony in Austin last year. At that time, Cole, now 39, was a civilian employee at his former military post, Fort Hood, Texas.

Neither Cole nor his attorney could be reached Tuesday for comment about the ruling, which was issued last week.

In his written opinion, White recounted the events that led to Cole's lawsuit against the Army:

Shortly after the 2nd Armored Division arrived in Germany in April 1976 for training exercises, Cole complained to his superiors about combat readiness and alleged logistical and financial mismanagment.

In June 1976, Cole was relieved of his duties as supply officer. The next day he offered a letter of resignation saying he had lost faith in the Army because the new recruits were "largely uneducated and, for the most part, are the failures of society."

"The senior Defense officials who have been boasting of the success of the volunteer Army have been outright lying when it comes to the education levels of the soldiers in the Army and the daily performance of these same soldiers," Cole wrote.

A month later, however, Cole asked to have his resignation withdrawn. His superiors declined, and Cole was honorably discharged in 1977.

During the months that he sought to have his resignation withdrawn, Cole complained to various Army commanders and to members of Congress about alleged mismanagement. The letters resulted in inquiries from Congress and several internal investigations.

At the trial, one of Cole's superiors, Maj. Gen. George Patton, son of the famous World War II general, said Cole did a good job technically, but that the resignation letter led Patton to recommend a discharge.

White ruled that the evidence failed to prove that Cole's superiors acted on the basis of his complaints about the Army.

"Rather," White wrote, "it appears from the evidence in the record that the persons who refused to permit (Cole) to withdraw his resignation were mainly concerned with Captain Cole's reputation as a person who dealt harshly with his peers and subordinates, thereby causing dissension and bad feelings in the battalion and...the intemperate and bitter language about the Army which Captain Cole used in his letter of resignation."

White said a previous ruling in the case had established that it was legal for the Army to refuse to withdraw Cole's resignation.

"As a result," he wrote, "the Claims Court was left with a relatively minor issue to decide — i.e., whether Captain Cole was separated from the Regular Army in retaliation for his exercise of his First Amendment right to freedom of speech, or to prevent such exercise in the future. The evidence in the record would not support a finding to that effect."

Authorities have few leads to jail escapee

BRECKENRIDGE (AP) — Authorities entering their third day of searching for fugitive death row inmate Richard Donald "Stony" Foster said they had few leads to the jail escapee.

Law enforcement officials plan to keep combing through the Possum Kingdom Lake area in north central Texas, said Texas Ranger Billy Peterson.

"We'll search 'til that sucker's caught," he said.

Meanwhile the Vietnam veteran's former lawyers warned Foster would not give up easily and said he is suffering from post-traumatic stress.

"I think I know where he is, at least in his own mind," said Fort Worth lawyer Jim Lane. "He's back on the Mekong Delta in Vietnam."

"That is pure nonsense," Peterson said.

Foster, 33, escaped from the Stephens County Jail Sunday night with another inmate, Cindy Davis, 27. Ms Davis was captured at about 8 a.m. Monday on the east side of Possum Kingdom Lake, about 25 miles northeast of Breckenridge.

Since then, few leads have turned up, authorities said Tuesday.

"We're going on any thread of information we can get," said C.A. Busby, an investigator with the Palo Pinto County Sheriff's office. "We got reason to believe this old boy is where he can watch TV, read a newspaper or listen to the radio. That causes a whole lot of problems."

Attorney Lane, his brother Bill Lane, and Jack Strickland, all of whom defended Foster in a capital murder case, are attending a law seminar in Houston this week.

Jim Lane said he hopes to be contacted if Foster is found. "I just want to avert a killing," he said. "The main thing is if they get him cornered I hope they'll call me before they start shooting. I think he'll talk to me."

Foster, who earned his nickname in Vietnam because of his characteristic silence, is a product of the war, said Lane. He enlisted in the Army in 1969 and was sent to Vietnam a year later.

At the time of Ms Davis' escape, she was being held on a charge of attempted capital murder for allegedly shooting at a police officer. Her parents said they believe she was taken as a hostage. Stephens County Sheriff James Cain said that is under investigation.

Foster was sent from death row to Breckenridge for a pretrial hearing on a kidnapping charge, said Charles Brown, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Corrections.

Foster was charged in connection with an attack in May 1984 during which seven people were held hostage at Citizens National Bank in Breckenridge. He had been convicted in November 1985 in Parker County for the murder of a Springtown man in April 1984. His execution date had not been set.

STATE IN BRIEF

Senate accepts Gramm's Army hospital revisions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate accepted Sen. Phil Gramm's amendment adding $129 million to the defense authorization bill for a new Brooke Army Medical Center hospital in San Antonio.

Dr. William Mayer, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, had suggested replacing BAMC with a smaller facility and using civilian hospitals and the Air Force's Wilford Hall Hospital in San Antonio instead.

But Gramm, R-Texas, said last month that Mayer had agreed to go along with replacing the hospital, 200 beds at first, with possible expansion to 450 beds later. The 200 beds would include 50 for the BAMC's well-known burn unit.

Amarillo man hits jackpot

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A hunch has paid a $250,000 dividend for a Texas man who made it a habit to play $40 on his favorite slot machine each time he visited Las Vegas.

Homer Bradley, 57, of Amarillo, won the big jackpot Monday afternoon by lining up five 7s on a Flamingo Hilton slot machine.

Bradley and his wife, Shirley, arrived at the hotel Saturday. He said he has made 10 trips to Las Vegas and played $40 at the same machine each visit.

"I still can't believe it," Bradley said. "I'm just afraid someone will wake me up and this will all be a dream."

Court rules in reform case

AUSTIN (AP) — A federal appeals court has ruled in the state's favor in a jail reform case that could have been costly to the state and many counties, Attorney General Jim Mattox said Tuesday.

The lawsuit was filed in 1978 by plaintiffs who wanted the State Commission on Jail Standards to be held responsible for conditions in county jails.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin of Austin dismissed the suit last year, and the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans has upheld Nowlin's decision, Mattox said.

The attorney general said the plaintiffs sought "sweeping, expensive court orders" similar to the ones handed down in the prison reform suit filed against the Texas Department of Corrections.

DPS awarded in drug raid

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Public Safety will be awarded $898,998 by the U.S. Customs Service as its share of the loot seized in a South Texas drug raid, Sen. Phil Gramm announced Tuesday.

The money came from a raid carried out Feb. 6 at the Kingsville airport by DPS officers, customs agents and the Kleberg County sheriff's department.

Larry Neal, spokesman for Gramm, R-Texas, said in a phone interview from Washington that the sheriff's department recently was awarded about $1 million of the money.

The DPS had sought $200,000, he said, adding that DPS officials could use the funds for whatever law enforcement purposes they wish.

In announcing the award, Gramm said, "This is the culmination of a coordinated enforcement effort by state, local and federal authorities. I am delighted to make this announcement and to provide funds to the Department of Public Safety for law enforcement."

Teen dies from slide fall

HOUSTON (AP) — A 16-year-old boy died of injuries after falling more than 50 feet from atop a Houston water park slide, officials said.

David Ebarb died Tuesday after suffering massive head injuries last week from the fall. He underwent facial surgery at Houston's Hermann Hospital, said Dexter Roberts, a spokesman for Life Flight, the hospital's helicopter ambulance service.

Witnesses said the teen-ager was sitting on a rail waiting in line to go down the Body Slide at Water World, a water theme park that is part of the Astroworld amusement park complex, before he fell.

Water World spokesman Gary Dalton said the four lifeguards on duty at the slide are not positioned to watch guests on the stairway but the park may change the guards' positions if necessary.

NATION IN BRIEF

Malta warned Libya of raid, paper says

NEW YORK (AP) — Malta warned Libya that planes were heading its way as U.S. plane flew toward the North African country on their April bombing raids, The New York Times reported today.

"Any information that might be beneficial to our allies we pass on to them. We do that regularly and systematically and will continue to do so," Prime Minister Karmenu Mifsud Bonnici told the newspaper.

"It is the withholding of information that is dangerous," he said. "If we know that any nation is planning an attack against Libya, we will pass it on, just as we would to Italy, or to the United States."

The prime minister said that Maltese air traffic controllers had not been able to identify the planes that were picked up on their radar screens 30 to 45 minutes before the raid, but, the controllers notified their Libyan counterparts that a "number of unidentified planes were going down toward North Africa."

During the attack, one United States Air Force plane was shot down, with the loss of its two-man crew.

Bonnici said there was no indication that Libya acted on the Maltese information. He attributed Libya's failure to mount a stronger defense to "negligence of the Libyan air controllers."

Police: 'Knockout thefts' occur nationally

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hundreds of businessmen lured to hotel rooms by women have been drugged and robbed in a wave of similar cases in at least 10 U.S. cities, police say.

The crimes are similar — prostitutes make a pass in a bar, then slip knockout drops into drinks in the victim's hotel room — but they don't appear to be part of an organized ring, said Jim Kaminsky, a vice investigator in suburban Newport Beach.

Hundreds of the knockout thefts involving women preying on out-of-town executives have been reported in New York, Miami, New Orleans, Houston, Dallas, Denver, Las Vegas, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Phoenix, investigators said.

"It's occurring nationally," said Los Angeles vice Detective Alan Vanderpool. "Guys used to give the Mickey (Finn knockout drops) to the girls for sex. Now its the reverse, but it's not for sex, it's for money."

Many cases may go unreported because victims are married or embarrassed, officers said.

More than 100 cases have been reported in Houston in the past two years, 30 have been reported in Dallas during the past eight months and 45 have occurred in Los Angeles, Kaminsky said.

Man kills estranged wife, himself

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. (AP) — A man kidnapped his estranged wife, shot and killed her and tape recorded a confession on his telephone-answering machine before killing himself, police said.

The bodies of Kevin Kish, 25, and Kathleen Kish, 21, both shot in the head, were found Tuesday in Kish's trailer home.

On the taped message, Kish "seemed to be crying and rattled on about the divorce. He had killed his wife and was going to kill himself," said Macomb County sheriff's Detective Sgt. Stewart Compton.

The couple had been separated and Mrs. Kish was living with her parents, detectives said. She was abducted Tuesday morning as she arrived for work at an electronics company.

A friend apparently called Kish's trailer later that morning, heard the recorded message and notified authorities, who found the bodies.

Jesse James robs Miami Beach bank

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Jesse James and an accomplice robbed a bank here but police headed them off at the pass, the FBI says.

Firefighters, pilot killed when chopper crashes on way to brush fire

Associated Press

A helicopter crashed, killing four people en route to a Colorado brush fire that proved to be a false alarm, as 2,700 firefighters from six states headed to Oregon and Washington to battle wilderness blazes covering 57,000 acres.

Four wildfires also continued to rage in Idaho after charring 43,000 acres.

In western Colorado, three firefighters were being flown Tuesday from a blaze near Delta to Hotchkiss, where a fire had been reported, when the copter crashed in the rugged Gunnison Gorge. The three and the pilot died.

The report of the Hotchkiss fire turned out to have been a false alarm, said Doug Huntington, a Bureau of Land Management spokesman. The cause of the crash was under investigation.

In Oregon and Washington, gusty winds fanned scores of fires Tuesday and 2,700 firefighters were en route from Montana, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, California and Alaska, said Mike Ferris, spokesman for the U.S. Forest Service in Portland, Ore.

Hundreds of firefighters battling the blazes also have been hampered by low humidity and 90-degree temperatures.

"The weather has not been in our favor," Ferris said.

Scores of fires were ignited during the weekend in Oregon and Washington by lightning strikes.

The fires were burning across timber and ranch land, Oregon Forestry Department spokeswoman Shawn Morford said from Baker.

Some of the 38 fires in the Wallowa-Whitman National Forest of eastern Oregon threatened property 15 to 30 miles to the south and west of Baker, a city of 9,500 people. The fire threat closed two highways in Baker County.

One fire burning northwest of Baker raged to within a mile of the Anthony Lakes ski area, and Ferris said campers and others have been asked to evacuate.

No serious injuries were reported.

The largest raged over 2,000 acres, with three other fires covering 1,800 acres, 1,400 acres and 1,000 acres.

In south-central Oregon, three fires that scorched more than 43,000 acres near Lakeview were contained. And fires of 500 acres and 835 acres were reported in the Malheur National Forest of central Oregon.

In the Umatilla National Forest, high winds fanned a fire that was burning more than 200 acres near the Greenhorn Mountains scenic area, said forest spokeswoman Margaret Shemwell. The blaze threatened three parcels of private land that include a mine and a cabin.

Other fires had burned about 6,300 acres in Oregon, officials said.

In north-central Idaho, National Forest Service planes dropped more than 14,000 pounds of retardant on a raging fire that spread from 15 to 80 acres in the Nezperce National Forest in less than 24 hours. About 350 firefighters battled the fires and 200 others have been called in.

No injuries were reported, and the fire was not threatening any structures.

Fires crews numbering some 200 men contained a pair of wildfires that had scorched over 32,000 acres southwestern Idaho range, and 110 firefighters began to scale back efforts in the central Idaho mountains after containing nine fires ranging up to 20 acres mostly around the breaks above the Middle Fork of the Salmon River.

Bickering mars bi-partisan anti-drug bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — House leaders are touting their election-year anti-drug initiative as a bipartisan campaign, but political wrangling is quickly surfacing over who will get credit for the legislation.

"When they sell their poisons on the streets and in the suburbs of America, the drug pushers don't check their customers' party registration," Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said Tuesday as he announced an appeal by 338 House members for more public service ads about drug abuse on network television.

"All they want is the money. We need to be just as single-minded, just as bipartisan in our attack," said O'Neill, who was flanked by House GOP Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill, and Rep. Benjamin Gilman, R-N.Y., ranking Republican on the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control.

But in the House Ways and Means trade subcommittee, Rep. Richard Schulze, R-Pa., accused Democrats of excluding the panel's Republican members from sponsoring a bill to increase the Customs Service's enforcement powers against drug smugglers.

"We are sort of playing political one-upmanship on this issue and it's a damn shame," Schulze said, accusing Democrats of "trying to play games to get ahead of the president."

"That's a bunch of garbage," Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla, the panel's chairman replied. "Anybody who says otherwise is a damn liar..If your name is not on the bill it's not my fault."

But Gibbons became conciliatory after panel staff members acknowledged under questioning that Republicans were only contacted at the last minute because the bill was being expedited by House leaders.

"I regret we started off on the wrong foot," Gibbons said. "Let's let bygones be bygones. I want this to be bipartisan legislation."

He offered to refile the bill to give Republicans a chance to be listed as co-sponsors.

The panel plans to mark up the bill Thursday to meet O'Neill's Aug. 12 deadline for completion of committee action on bills that will be included in the anti-drug package. The legislation is aimed at expanding drug abuse rehabilitation and education and increasing interdiction efforts at the borders.

The speaker has scheduled floor debate as soon as Congress returns from its Labor Day recess in September.

Senate Democrats, meanwhile, announced a package of legislation to increase the penalties for possessing and manufacturing freebase cocaine, the drug popularly known as "crack."

First-time possession of more than five grams of crack would be punishable by up to 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine. It would also be illegal to employ children in so-called "crack houses."

The measure also would authorize $50 million in grants for local school districts to set up anti-drug educational programs.

Another bill would establish a Cabinet-level office to coordinate the nation's strategy to combat drug trafficking and narcotics abuse. President Reagan vetoed a similar bill in 1983 and Congress later gave the powers of the so-called "drug czar" to the attorney general.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who said last year he would quit rather than take a lie-detector test, will submit to the drug test President Reagan is ordering for all federal employees in national security and other sensitive posts.

Shultz had registered strong objections to government use of lie-detectors in December, but takes a different view of drug testing, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said Tuesday.

"Drug testing is a much more reliable scientific tool," Redman said. "It's a definitive test. It's relatively non-intrusive. It's extremely accurate."

California inmates pitch in to load hay

Associated Press

Three busloads of California jail inmates pitched in to load hay for Southern livestock, while five Pennsylvania counties were named disaster areas and federal help was sought for 22 Tennessee counties as drought's toll widens.

A 94-car train carrying 72,000 bales of hay from Wisconsin and Minnesota arrived Tuesday in Birmingham, Ala., and a 71-car train with 1,440 tons of hay from Vermont reached Georgia.

The shipments are to help feed starving livestock in the South, where drought and heat has dried up pastures and forests, causing nearly $2.5 billion in losses from southern Pennsylvania to Florida. The heat wave has killed 104 people in the South and Midwest.

In Gilroy, Calif., farmers and volunteers were joined by about 80 jail inmates Tuesday to load 2,500 bales of hay onto a train that will carry the fodder to Alabama. Haylift organizers hope to contribute 10,000 bales by week's end.

"It's OK, but I've had nicer jobs before," said Rene Renaud, one of the Elmwood Jail inmates.

Without their assistance, said organizer Kip Brundage, "we'd have had a whole lot of tired-out farmers and volunteers."

In Tennessee, Gov. Lamar Alexander on Tuesday requested federal assistance for 22 counties in the eastern part of the state to enable farmers to receive low-interest loans. In his letter to U.S. Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng, Alexander also sought feed assistance for 30 counties.

The request came as the Tennessee Agricultural Statistics Service rated 86 percent of the state's pastures as in poor to very poor condition. Most summer crops were listed in fair to poor condition.

Also Tuesday, Lyng declared five counties in south-central Pennsylvania a federal disaster area, clearing the way for low-interest loans.

Last week, the Reagan administration announced special loan programs and other federal aid for farmers in Alabama, Delaware, Maryland, the Carolinas, and Virginia.

Lyng, however, has not made any such declaration for Georgia, where officials estimate the drought damage at more than $500 million.

"I'm very disappointed in him, and that's not a political stand," Rep. Lindsay Thomas, D-Ga., told a civic club in Savannah. "We have been talking with him and working with him continually, and he's been very unwilling to consider the kinds of action that are desperately needed."
