Bush to sound same themes; Dems ask: Where's the beef?

AUSTIN (AP) — At a recent staff meeting, it was suggested that Gov. George W. Bush might want to toss something "new" into Tuesday's state of the state address.

According to aides, his response was to remind them of the virtues of "focus and discipline."

Translation: Bush's speech to a joint session of the Legislature will showcase the same four topics he touted throughout his campaign — tort reform, welfare reform, juvenile justice reform and decontrol of education.

"I will focus on systemic changes in juvenile justice, decontrol of schools, changing the tort laws of the state of Texas, and changing aspects of the welfare system," the governor said when asked for a preview of his speech.

"I believe that if the Legislature passes substantive change in those four areas, Texas will be a

Texas man, son escape injury when plane stalls over airpark

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A Brownwood man and his son escaped injury Sunday after the plane they were in stalled and landed near the Midland Airpark west fence.

Sgt. David Garcia said 36-year-old Samson Guthrie III was attempting to land a 1978 Mooney aircraft at the Midland Airpark at about 6 p.m. Guthrie's son, 8-year-old Chappell Guthrie of Midland, also was aboard the plane.

Garcia said Guthrie was approaching from the east for a landing, when officials believe he reportedly misjudged the wind and attempted to bring the plane around to try to the landing again.

The plane stalled and Guthrie brought the plane down on the west end of the landing field, Garcia said.

Upon landing, the plane's land-

The Russian Mir space station is shown in a NASA computer animation image. Mission Control monitored the remaining leaking steering unit on Discovery .

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The message from the Russian Space Agency to NASA was clear Sunday: No way can your leaking shuttle come near our Mir.

With time running out, NASA ordered Discovery's astronauts to repeatedly shut down and repressurize a leaking jet in a long-shot effort to stop the drainage and permit a close encounter today with Russia's orbiting Mir station. It didn't work.

Russian officials insist that, unless the steering jet stops spewing fuel, Discovery must stay at least 400 feet from Mir — 365 feet farther than planned. They fear the small chunks of frozen propellant might damage critical optical sensors on a Soyuz capsule attached to the station and needed by the three Mir cosmonauts to return to Earth next month.

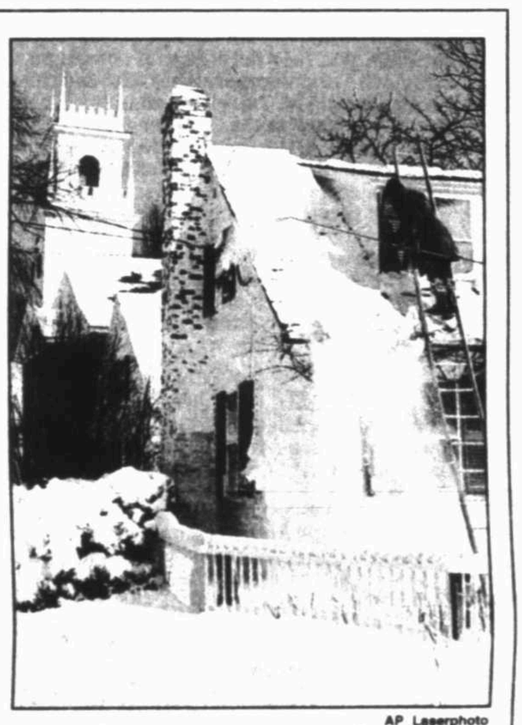

Mission operations director Randy Stone said National Aeronautics and Space Administration engineers believe the leaking nitrogen tetroxide would not attach to anything and poses no danger.

But the Russians aren't convinced, "and it's their call," he said.

"They don't fully understand all of the capabilities of our vehicle. ... It's mostly just the very methodical and conservative engineering approach that they take to things when they don't have a full knowledge of the system," Stone said.

"It's probably the same approach that I would take if I

Deep freeze follows Northeast 'big snow'

By The Associated Press

Nearly 2 feet of snow that fell across the Northeast in the region's first major winter storm froze solid Sunday as arctic winds kicked up and temperatures plummeted.

The snow that dumped half a foot to 21 inches from Kentucky to Maine on Saturday tapered off in most of the region, but was followed by numbing cold and winds gusting up to 50 mph.

In northern New York, the wind chill factor fell to 44 below in Massena and 40 below in Plattsburgh. In Maine, winds of up to 30 mph made it feel like minus 19 degrees in Portland and minus 17 in Presque Isle.

Chechens flood neighboring regions

NAZRAN, Russia (AP) — Refugees fleeing the war in Chechnya have caused a near crisis in neighboring Ingushetia, where the population has swelled by half, and more arrived Sunday in battered buses, packed cars and canvas-covered trucks.

About 10,000 people have been arriving in this Caucasus republic from Chechnya each week since Russian troops invaded the republic on Dec. 11 to suppress its claim to independence.

Some refugees have gone on to neighboring North Ossetia, Dagestan or elsewhere in Russia.

But most stay in tiny Ingushetia, crammed into emergency housing or squeezed into private homes and putting tremendous new strains on the already battered economy.

There are now more than 140,000 refugees, the majority of them from Chechnya, in addition to the 260,000 permanent residents. With an area of roughly 2,400 square miles, Ingushetia is only a third the size of Chechnya — slightly larger than the state of Delaware.

"Soon there may be a deficit of food, beds and medicine here," said Nazir Doskiyev,

Simpson's double-murder trial airs dirty laundry of witnesses

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The sometimes sordid personal lives of witnesses, and potential witnesses, in the O.J. Simpson murder case are facing minitrials themselves as relentless lawyers expose skeletons in their closets.

Administration leaves door open for resolving China trade dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The warning shots have been fired in the U.S.-China trade war, but both sides are leaving room for a truce before real damage is done to one of the world's most important trade and political relationships.

The United States, exasperated by China's failure to crack down on intellectual property theft, on Saturday announced 100 percent tariffs on $1.08 billion worth of Chinese products.

China promptly retaliated, complaining it's national dignity had been violated. It placed 100 percent tariffs on a variety of U.S. products, including video games, compact discs, cigarettes and alcohol.

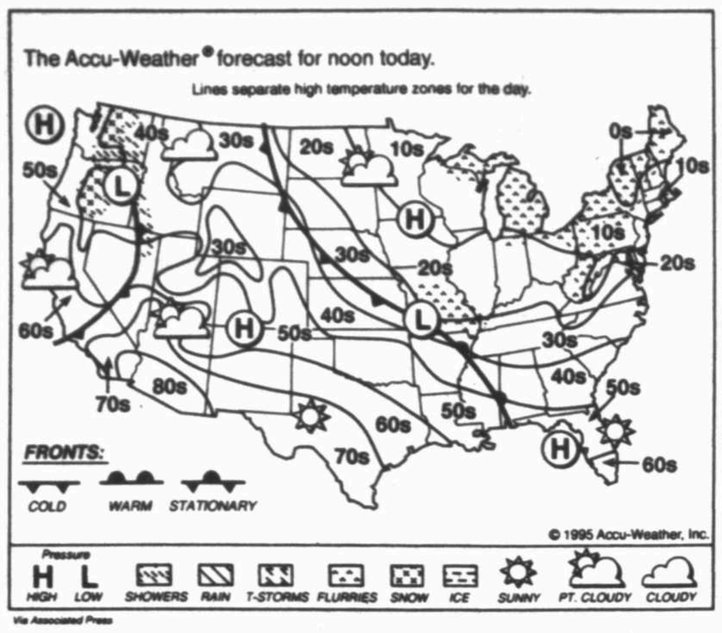

U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor's pronouncement that "we are drawing the line here today" on trade came just three days after an annual State Department report faulting China as an authoritarian state that had failed to improve its record of "widespread and well-documented human rights abuses."

Both were admissions that

Look for mostly sunny skies

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high in the lower 70s and south winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a low near 40, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly cloudy with a high near 60.

After an overnight low of 34, Sunday's high reached 58, compared to the record high for that date of 78 set in 1951. The record low was 10 set in 1989.

STATE

Skies were sunny and temperatures mild over Texas on Sunday despite a cold front that moved southward through the state.

Temperatures were in the 70s and 80s ahead of the front, while behind the front readings were cooler, in the 50s and lower 60s.

Afternoon temperatures ranged from 52 at Amarillo to 73 at Sanderson, in Southwest Texas near the Mexican border.

Late Sunday afternoon, high pressure was building on the heels of the front.

The National Weather Service said conditions should be springlike again today, with high temperatures in the 60s and 70s, cooling into the 40s in the Panhandle on Tuesday and in the 50s and 60s elsewhere.

Temperatures were in the 70s over South Central Texas on Sunday and in the lower 80s in the Rio Grande Valley. But readings were in the 60s in the Hill Country and Central Texas as brisk northeast winds were bringing cooler air.

The weather service said clear skies and mild temperatures would hold into the early half of the week. Overnight lows should dip mainly into the 40s with afternoon highs warming into the 60s and 70s.

The cold front and high pressure ridge building behind it brought mostly cleark skies and breezy north winds at 10 to 20 mph to North Texas and East Texas. Temperatures ranged from 50 degrees at Sherman to 68 at Lufkin.

NATION

Numbing cold propelled by winds gusting up to near 60 mph on Sunday followed the season's first major snowstorm into the Northeast. The Great Lakes and parts of the Midwest had bitter wind chills and blowing snow.

Up to 2 feet of snow fell from Kentucky to Maine Saturday and Sunday, and strong winds in the region created drifts up to 3 feet deep.

Winds throughout the Northeast gusted to 50 mph or more, with gusts up to 59 mph reported at Middletown, Pa., and 52 mph reported at Worcester, Mass.

Visibility was poor and roads were slick, contributing to at least six traffic deaths.

In northern New York, the wind chill factor fell to 44 below in Massena and 40 below in Plattsburgh. In Maine, winds of up to 30 mph made it feel like minus 19 degrees in Portland and minus 17 in Presque Isle.

Strong winds and new snow produced areas of blowing and drifting snow from Michigan and northern Indiana to the central Appalachians and the East Coast.

Temperatures below zero and even colder wind chills were expected through Monday night from the Great Lakes to New England. The cold and high winds stretched all the way into the Southeast and Florida.

Elsewhere, fog reduced visibility in portions of the San Joaquin and southern Sacramento valleys of California.

dirty laundry hung out to dry in front of the jury and millions of TV viewers.

Faye Resnick, one of Nicole Brown Simpson's best friends, wrote a book about the Simpsons' tumultuous relationship. She has appeared on a number of talk shows and has admitted using drugs. It's yet to be decided whether she will be called to testify.

Police Detective Mark Fuhrman, who found a bloody glove on Simpson's property, has been accused by the defense of being a racist.

Jill Shively, who said she saw Simpson driving erratically near Ms. Simpson's condo the night of the murders, accepted $7,600 from supermarket tabloids and "Hard Copy" for her story. She wasn't called as a witness during his preliminary hearing.

Mary Anne Gerchas, who says she saw four men — none of them Simpson — near Ms. Simpson's condo the night of the slayings, has a list of civil lawsuits filed against her for failing to pay suppliers for her jewelry store business. One prosecutor referred to her as a "known liar."

Shipp, who endured intense cross-examination, testified that after Ms. Simpson was dead, Simpson confided that he had had dreams of killing her.

Although he concluded his testimony for the prosecution last week, sources said the defense is probing further into Shipp's background and might recall him to testify.

Just what part of witnesses' personal lives are relevant to what they saw or heard the night of the murders? And does having a history of alcohol abuse or getting paid to tell your story to a tabloid TV show make you a liar?

The scrutiny of witnesses is an age-old legal tactic, but the international publicity and gavel-to-gavel TV coverage of the trial seems to have taken it to new heights.

Simpson's defense lawyers have private investigators checking into the backgrounds of witnesses. Deputy District Attorney Christopher Darden told Superior Court Judge Lance Ito he needed 30 days to investigate a list of 14 surprise defense witnesses he said included "heroin addicts, thieves, felons ... (and) a court-certified pathological liar."

"I think there's a lot of pressure in the Simpson case to attack with absolutely every weapon you have instead of selecting and crafting your weapon," said Tom Hoopes, a Boston criminal defense lawyer and former prosecutor.

And that, he said, has pushed lawyers "not to necessarily follow their best trial instincts" and instead be led by pressure and "the fear they will leave something out."

Lawyer Harvey I. Levin, who represents Gerchas, said the attacks against his client have been heartless. "This is a woman that came forward and she's being crucified by the press and the prosecution," Levin said. "That's not the way to try a case and expect people to come forward.

"This is just what people are afraid of when they say, 'I don't want to get involved.'"

Whether people's personal backgrounds are significant or not, legal experts say one thing is sure: Lawyers better choose their battles carefully or their attacks could backfire and leave jurors angry at mean-spirited attorneys and sympathetic to the witnesses.

"It's always a boomerang when you throw something at a witness like ... 'Do you have a drinking problem?'" said lawyer Gerry Spence, who successfully defended Imelda Marcos.

"It destroys not the witness but the lawyer, because there are people on the jury that have drinking problems or have people they love that have drinking problems."

Spence said he lost a case 26 years ago because he ruthlessly attacked a witness whom jurors found sympathetic.

"One of the jurors said to me, 'Mr. Spence, why did you make us hate you so?'" he said.

Roy Black, who successfully defended William Kennedy Smith against a rape charge, said he treated Smith's accuser "with kid gloves" because he knew the tearful woman could soften jurors. But he tore into the woman's friend who was with her that night for selling her story for $40,000 to "A Current Affair."

OPEN: Administration leaves door ajar

(From 1A)

President Clinton's decision last spring to remove the link between trading privileges and human rights had done little to promote improvements in either area. China's trade surplus with the United States was nearly $30 billion last year, second only to Japan and growing rapidly.

The trade dispute is serious. It could, for example, result in China turning to Europe for billions of dollars worth of future aircraft purchases.

But both sides are likely to work hard to keep it within manageable limits.

"I was surprised by the Chinese reaction; I thought it would be much worse than it is," said Robert Dernberger, professor of economics at the University of Michigan's Center for Chinese Studies.

"Who cares if they slap tariffs on U.S. cigarettes?" he asked. Both countries put off the effective date of the tariff increases until Feb. 26, providing a three-week grace period. Only last week, Kantor said the tariffs would go into effect "just a few days" after Feb. 4.

Even as he announced the trade sanctions Saturday, Kantor praised the Chinese for making some progress in enforcing a 1992 agreement on copyright and trademark protection. "China has begun to make important changes in its enforcement system. It has launched nationwide raids — but so far only against retailers and, frankly, the little guys," he said.

The higher tariffs directly affect only about 5 percent of total bilateral trade, which reached $46 billion last year.

Winston Lord, the State Department's assistant secretary for East Asian and Pacific affairs, stressed last week that "we are determined to keep our relationship on a positive note, and we'll keep working at it."

He noted that China helped ease dangerous situations in North Korea and Cambodia, and said some of the current U.S.-China difficulties may be related to the domestic political situation in Beijing.

With senior leader Deng Xiaoping near death and no longer exercising control, China watchers question whether top officials in Beijing have the political will to crack down on copyright piracy .

TIME: Success of mission is threatened

(From 1A)

were on the other side," he said.

The original plan called for Discovery and its crew of six to fly within 35 feet of the station as a dress rehearsal for the first shuttle-Mir docking in June. NASA wanted to see how well the shuttle handled next to a 100-ton station and test navigation and communication systems.

"Obviously, the closer we can get the better it will be," said Discovery pilot Eileen Collins. "But even if we only go to 1,000 feet ... we will still be getting a lot of good information."

At the end of his workday, shuttle commander James Wetherbee thanked flight controllers for all their hard work.

"You all know how much I would like to approach to 10 meters (33 feet) because I think it's valuable. However, if we can't then we're confident ... it's the right answer," he said.

Months before the mission, the U.S. and Russian space agencies agreed that Discovery would forgo the close encounter if any one of seven critical steering thrusters failed.

One of those key thrusters began leaking Saturday, but the five Americans and one Russian aboard Discovery stopped the seepage by turning the jet off and repressurizing it. They tried the same thing Sunday on the thruster that began leaking shortly after Friday's liftoff, but to no avail.

Later, they reduced the pressure even more in a last-ditch attempt to eliminate contaminants and thereby close that jet's valve. Again, no luck.

While the leaking jet is not crucial for a close approach to Mir, it's linked to two other jets, one of which is. To turn off one jet in the cluster knocks out all three.

Stone said if the leak continues — and it probably will — all three jets in that cluster would be shut off, thus eliminating the leak but keeping Discovery at a distance of 400 feet. NASA could wait until early afternoon Monday when Discovery is 400 feet from Mir to make that decision, because the approach is the same whether the shuttle zooms in close or hovers at a distance. Most likely, a decision would come earlier in the day.

"I hope we're not still debating it at 400 feet," Stone said. He added that NASA had not given up yet on the close approach.

If this were the June docking mission, the linkup would proceed as planned despite a leaking shuttle jet because of the crucial need to switch Mir crews, Stone said.

head of the Ingush immigration office. "If the refugees stay until summer, there may also be an epidemic."

The refugees continued to arrive Sunday amid reports of heavy new shelling in Grozny and a Russian ground attack on a village west of the capital.

"People in Grozny are dying under destroyed houses — old women and children are dying of hunger," said Murat Gazdiyev, 59, who holed up in the besieged capital for weeks with his wife and six-year-old son before heading to the Ingush capital of Nazran.

"It's impossible to live there," he said.

Entering the sixth week of their siege of the capital, Russian forces pounded two neighborhoods in southern Grozny on Sunday, Ingush officials said.

Moscow's troops also launched an attack with armored vehicles Sunday morning on the village of Yermolovka, 9 miles southwest of Grozny, according to Russian military sources in Nazran quoted by the ITAR-Tass news agency.

Stepped-up Russian attacks around Grozny are expected to exacerbate the refugee crisis. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which has distributed aid and supplies worth over $1 million in the region, says more than 400,00 people have been displaced by the fighting in Chechnya.

"It's becoming worse every day," said Helena Baer, of the UNHCR emergency office in Vladikavkaz, in the neighboring region of North Ossetia. "Their needs are becoming greater and greater," she said.

In Nazran, several thousand refugees occupy railroad cars on sidings, a school and other emergency housing.

Each refugee is given free housing, blankets, some food and $5 by the Russian government — the very force that bombed them out of their homes.

Sunday.

At least six traffic deaths — two each in Kentucky and New Jersey and one each in Massachusetts and New Hampshire — were blamed on the weather Saturday. Power was temporarily knocked out to thousands across the region.

Airports were reopened and most roads were clear Sunday, although whiteouts caused by blowing snow were reported along some sections of the New York State Thruway near Syracuse.

People were digging out.

Last year's severe winter made snow blowers a hot commodity. But with this year's mild weather, most were gathering dust in the garage — until now.

"I was hoping I'd never have to use it," Robert Wheeler said as he cleared snow from the driveway of his home in Johnson City, N.Y.

Winds buffeted West Virginia on Sunday, bringing the mercury down to minus 22 in Wheeling, minus 21 in Morgantown and minus 20 in Martinsburg.

"It's cold and it's windy and we've got big, big snow here," said Gary Berti of Davis, W.Va.. "There's powder everywhere. It's hard to tell how much is here because it's blowing so fast."

Although major roads were cleared by Sunday, people who didn't shovel during the storm were likely to be stuck with the icy snow for the rest of the week, with temperatures around 0 expected Monday.

"It will be the coldest so far" this winter, said meteorologist George Klein of the National Weather Service in Taunton, Mass. "Whatever is here is going to be staying for a while."

better place."

Since declaring for the Republican nomination in November 1993, Bush has pounded on those issues. They were featured in every major speech: announcing his candidacy, addressing the GOP state convention, taking the oath of office.

"I believe that's why I got elected," he explains simply.

The state of the state address, which Bush promises "will not be longer than President Clinton's" 81-minute state of the union speech, comes three weeks into his term and four weeks into the 1995 legislative session.

Democrats say it's time for Bush to give specifics, the fine print they say has been missing.

"Legislators are already working hard on detailed public policy matters, so if the governor has specific suggestions to offer in the spirit of bipartisanship, now is the time to do it, not later in an attempt to take credit after someone else has done all the heavy lifting," said Bob Slagle, state Democratic chairman.

Slagle said that was reflected in the cool response Bush received after a speech to education leaders.

"Bush campaign TV ads suggested Ann Richards and the Legislature did not do enough to improve education, but when Gov. Bush addressed educators from around the state they went away asking, 'Where's the beef?'" Slagle said.

Karen Hughes, Bush's communications director, said the governor has been meeting with lawmakers to push his priorities.

"He is meeting regularly with different legislators to discuss his priorities. Our legislative staff is charged with making sure that there are bills submitted that reflect the governor's policies," she said.

She said he is mindful of the separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches.

So far, two Bush priorities have gotten the most attention.

The governor designated tort reform — changing the state's civil lawsuit system — an emergency. The Senate already has passed bills designed to end frivolous lawsuits.

Two days of hearings last week examined other measures to cap punitive damages; change the standard of proof for plaintiffs trying to collect such damages, and cause plaintiffs to prove a defendant acted with "malice" or "fraud" rather than the current standard of "gross negligence."

As for decontrolling schools, one of Bush's first acts was to dump Education Commissioner Lionel "Skip" Meno.

In a letter, he told the State Board of Education that the new education czar needs "a demonstrated belief that Texas communities and educations are best able to identify and develop solutions to meet their local needs."

Activists teach Egyptians to help themselves

By Anthony Shadid
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt — The stench sickens. The smoke of smoldering fires waters the eyes. In Manshiet Nasser's labyrinth of crowded, muddy alleys, the garbage of modern Cairo is dumped — and the residents eke out a meager living.

The streets of the village of 17,000 people are paved in crushed cans, splintered plastic, newspapers, spoiled food and flies. Pigs nurse litters of young in heaps of rotting lettuce, onions and banana peels. Burning refuse, just steps from tin-and-concrete huts, breathes acrid smoke into the air.

In the alleys, the barefoot "zabbaleen" — literally trash people — make their living by collecting, sorting and recycling Cairo's garbage. They sell the paper, plastic and metal for a few cents. The food goes to the pigs, which are raised for foreigners and the Christian minority, the lone consumers in Muslim Egypt.

Manshiet Nasser, whose population has doubled in a decade, stands as an apocalyptic vision of overpopulation and poverty that the 3,500 delegates to the U.N. population conference last September in Cairo hoped to head off. It is also a window to a different future.

At the foot of the settlement, overlooking a vast compost ditch, is the Association for the Protection of the Environment, a 10-year-old group that teaches zabbaleen women reading and writing, a simple trade and health.

'There is a recognition that you can no longer separate population from development and development from the environment.'

— Sally Ethelston, Population Action International

Practical lessons like these were recommended by the U.N. conference. They are what distinguish the meeting's ambitious 113-page plan from predecessors in 1974 and 1984.

Now, governments and aid groups are being urged to provide reproductive health services, educate women and girls and better women's economic status.

The assumption, corroborated by several studies, is that better educated women with economic prospects have fewer children.

It is a far cry from simple population targets that governments often tried to meet by passing out handfuls of condoms.

But it is an agenda that will take years and will undoubtedly meet considerable resistance. In essence, it calls for a change in the social conditions that have condemned most Third World women to second-class status: illiteracy, poverty, lack of education, inequality before the law and few prospects for healthy lives.

"There's a recognition that you can no longer separate population from development and development from the environment," said Sally Ethelston, a spokeswoman for Population Action International, an activist group in Washington. "If the political will and money are there, it's a real working plan for the next 20 years."

Activists say the success of such projects and the willingness of rich countries to give billions of dollars in aid will decide the fate of the Cairo conference's 20-year plan. Will it gather dust in offices or pave the way for women to raise smaller families in a world where population is forecast to reach 10 billion by 2050?

Nearly 25 million babies have been born in the four months since the conference, U.N. figures indicate.

The staff of 40 at the Association for the Protection of the Environment runs a rag recycling project where dozens of zabbaleen girls and women learn to weave rugs and make blankets from donated cloth after spending their morning sorting trash. They are deloused, instructed on the use of toilets, sent to literacy classes and taught about female genital mutilation — many of the zabbaleen women are circumcised.

Workshops on family planning are held every week.

The women are paid for their work, the equivalent of a few dollars a week. After a few months of training, the group helps them set up looms in their homes and buys their handiwork.

"They're free to come here, free to learn or not. There's no coercion, but they're responsible for their decisions," said Laila Kamel, a board member. "Once you get them to earn money, you get a new rhythm, a rhythm that builds into their lives."

The linchpin for the U.N. strategy and for the grass-roots projects needed to carry it out will be money — and lots of it.

The Cairo plan urges the world's nations to spend $17 billion a year by 2000 and nearly $22 billion by 2015 on family planning, reproductive health and AIDS prevention. Of that, rich nations are being urged to contribute one-third: $5.7 billion by 2000 and $7.2 billion by 2015.

World reflects on World War II conference after 50 years

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
AP Special Correspondent

■ News analysis

After 50 years, the secret of Yalta can finally be told:

The vision of a new world that Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin took from that famous — or infamous — World War II conference simply needed a half-century to fall into focus, and into ordinary lives.

Today's East European democracies, after all, are what the statesmen of Yalta had in mind — even Josef Stalin's mind, if an old comrade has it right.

Thanks to Stalin, however, "Yalta" became a synonym for betrayal.

It was 50 years ago this week, on the Black Sea shore of a Soviet nation in ruins, that the Big Three met: the smiling tyrant from Moscow; the dying American president; the prime minister of an exhausted Britain.

They were on the verge of a gigantic victory over Nazism.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, riding six hours from an airport to the Crimean resort town of Yalta, was shocked to see through his automobile window the utter devastation of the Russian front.

His fellow conferees, later, were shocked by the sight of Roosevelt: frail, wan, wasting. He would live just two more months.

But ill or not, Roosevelt and the others — backed by hundreds of aides, in sessions at all hours, at dinners and receptions, in corridor conversations — made fateful decisions:

■ Russia would enter the war against Japan, in return for Japanese-held islands in the Far East.

■ Germany would be divided, to keep it too weak to attack its neighbors again.

■ Much of eastern Poland would be ceded to Soviet control, and some of eastern Germany to Polish control.

■ "Free elections" would be held in Eastern Europe.

The Crimea was fertile ground for compromise.

Roosevelt badly needed Russian military help to finish off Hitler and, he thought, the Japanese. Stalin hoped for post-war aid from Washington.

The Red Army already occupied Eastern Europe. Trying to undo that, Roosevelt's advisers noted, would invite war against the Russians.

Roosevelt and Churchill recognized Eastern Europe as a Soviet sphere of influence. They rebuffed Stalin's bid to "deindustrialize" Germany. Stalin granted their wish for a French role in the German occupation.

In the end, the Big Three declared their conference of compromise a grand success.

Within two years, however, Stalin reneged, and Communists were imposing one-party states in Eastern Europe.

Valentin Berezhkov was Stalin's English interpreter, though not at Yalta — Kremlin intrigue had undercut his position. But this historian later made a study of the Feb. 4-11, 1945, conference, and he insists his old boss's motives are still misunderstood.

"By the time of Yalta, Stalin had dropped the idea of a world communist revolution," Berezhkov said in an interview. He would have accepted democracies on his western borders, "as long as they were not anti-Soviet."

But after FDR's death, Truman turned hostile toward the Russians, and the atom bomb was dropped on Japan, Berezhkov recalled. "Stalin was scared. He feared an American nuclear attack. And so he tried to push his influence as far as possible to the west."

Now 78 and teaching at California's Claremont College, Berezhkov has just published his memoirs, "At Stalin' Side."

Many who were not at Stalin's side declare confidently, of course, that the dictator went to Yalta with deception and betrayal in mind.

Whatever the truth, the Cold War is now over, and lofty ideals espoused at Yalta have finally come to earth, in free elections in Eastern Europe, even in Russia itself.

But a double-barreled question lingers still from 50 years ago: Where do Germany and Russia fit into the European equation?

The answer, said another Yalta scholar, former U.S. national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, lies in long-lasting security arrangements to make those two powers comfortable in Europe, and Europe comfortable with them.

"Anything less than that will mean the original failure of Yalta will be perpetuated," he said.

There's one final legacy of Yalta that makes few lists of successes and failures — curiously, since it was one Roosevelt cared most about.

In those long hours of talks, the three leaders worked out the balances, votes and powers of the new United Nations. It was this that spurred Winston Churchill, in a Yalta dinner toast, to declare that they all stood "on the crest of a hill" with a glorious future ahead.

Border wars continue; no truce in sight for South America

LIMA, Peru (AP) — New fighting was reported between Peruvian and Ecuadorean troops along their disputed jungle border Sunday as cease-fire talks in Brazil broke up without a truce.

Ecuador charged that Peruvian fighters attacked its posts at the headwaters of the Cenepa River, where the two countries have been fighting on and off for 10 days — the latest flare-up in a dispute that dates to 1941.

President Alberto Fujimori, who visited the border region Sunday, said Peruvian troops had surrounded the base of Tihuinza and were advancing on the post.

No new casualty figures were available.

At least 20 people have been killed in fighting that erupted Jan. 26 over the unmarked 50-mile portion of the border. The conflict over the area, which may contain gold, uranium and oil, stems from a 1941 war that Ecuador lost.

Ecuador's president, Sixto Duran-Ballen, left for Chile, Argentina and Brazil on Sunday to present his nation's case.

Delegates from those countries and the United States ended five days of cease-fire talks in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, saying Ecuador had asked for more time to study their proposals.

"I prefer not to think of the talks as a failure but rather as a preparation for more complete understanding and what we all hope will be a cease-fire and a permanent peace," said Sebastiao de Rego Barros, Brazil's acting foreign minister and chairman of the talks.

Both Peru and Ecuador had accepted an observer mission, the mediators said in a statement.

But sources in Rio said Peru had agreed to a demilitarized zone nearly five miles wide, while Ecuador wanted a half-mile zone. Ecuador also wanted to keep its military posts in the disputed area. The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

Barros said efforts for a truce would continue.

As the talks broke up, Ecuador claimed Peruvian jungle troops attacked four more of its posts in the disputed stretch of dense jungle. It accused Peru of using guerrilla warfare in its efforts to dislodge Ecuadorean forces.

Fujimori said his forces had "taken the hills that overlook the outpost" of Tihuinza. "Let's hope by now it (the outpost) has been taken by our army," he said during a stopover on his return to Lima.

Ecuadorean officials said they had repelled an attack on the same base, which both say is in their territory. They also claimed Peru was using artillery helicopters to attack other posts.

The fighting is taking place in rugged, jungle-covered mountains called the Cordillera del Condor, around 530 miles north of Lima and 220 miles southeast of the Ecuadorean capital of Quito.

Peru sent soldiers experienced in fighting Maoist guerrillas to the disputed region last week. Reporters who have seen the area say the Ecuadoreans are dug into the mountaintops and have honeycombed the terrain with tunnels.

Peru contends the entire 1,000-mile border was established in a 1942 agreement. Ecuador declared the agreement null in 1960, before the border was fully marked. Each side claims the other started the latest fighting.

The World in brief

■ Dowry killings may get death penalty

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Men who kill their wives for not bringing enough dowry may face the death penalty in Bangladesh.

Introducing a bill in Parliament on Sunday, Interior Minister Abdul Matin Chowdhury said the government wants to deter men from committing grievous offenses against women and children. The bill is likely to pass.

Last year, at least 370 women were killed by husbands or in-laws who had demanded a hefty dowry, according to news reports. Such offenses are increasing, Chowdhury said, but he did not give any figures.

Many families go bankrupt paying dowries for their daughters. The dowries often include land, apartments, consumer goods and cash, and often amount to several years' salaries.

The bill would also establish life sentences for those who traffic in women and children for prostitution, smuggling them out of Bangladesh to serve in brothels in the Middle East, India, Pakistan and other countries.

■ Women are essential for peace, pope says

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II appealed to women Sunday to become the foundation for efforts to reach "true and lasting" peace and social justice.

The pope said that modern women should follow the example of women who have made sacrifices through the centuries to "confront situations of abuse, discrimination, violence and warfare."

He said women are essential "to build a true and lasting peace."

The pontiff also repeated his condemnation of the war in former Yugoslavia. "While some regions of the (European) continent are on the path of unification, others still exhibit worrisome and absurd explosions of civil hatred and make threats of armed outbreaks," the pope told a crowd in St. Peter's Square.

Acknowledging a group of Rome physicians who had organized a conference to discuss biomedical issues, John Paul called on doctors to "serve life and protect it against any form of manipulation."

■ Penguin chicks are dying in foodless desert

SYDNEY, Australia — Penguin chicks are starving to death near one of Australia's Antarctic bases in a foodless "desert" patch of ocean, scientists said Monday.

About 1,800 Adelie penguin chicks have died in one colony near Mawson Base, said Steve Nicol, a biologist with Australia's Antarctic Division in Hobart. About 50 chicks have been dying each day.

It appears the penguins can't find enough krill, the small shrimplike crustaceans that are their dietary staple, he said. The 3,600 adult birds in the colony feed off the krill in nearby waters, and regurgitate their meal into the chicks' beaks.

Studies show the Mawson adults are traveling farther and diving deeper to find their meals.

With their fat reserves, adult birds can survive temporary food shortages. But they cannot leave their young for long, since the chicks fall prey to skuas, carnivorous Antarctic gulls.

Nicol believes the lack of food in the area around Mawson is a temporary natural phenomenon, and that the population will rebound next year.

Millions of the birds live in Australia's Antarctic waters.

All-State honorees bring 'good news'

We get our share of comments from readers about the amount of "bad news" about young people these days compared to the number of articles that most people consider "good news" because it cites the positive, uplifting involvement of youngsters in Midland.

Just the other day we saw two "good news" mentions that are deserving of comment. One listed band and choir students at both Midland High School (MHS) and Lee High School (LHS) who were named to All-State. The MHS band members who made All-State were Dave Allmon, Victor Leggett, and Daryl Lewis. LHS band members who were named to All-State include Jennifer Baer, Lisa Oetting, Wesley Korner, Eric Blake, Taylor Callaway, Kyle Schwamkrug, Cindy Fryer, Susan Robinson, Tara Bidwell, and Cindy Abshire, who was an alternate. LHS choir members named to All-State were Jeremy McPeak, Jeff Larson, Liz Conn, and Kim Holleman.

Blake Johnson, another Midland High student, also was named one of 44 finalists for the 1995 FINA/Dallas Morning News All-State Scholar-Athlete Team. Johnson was chosen from nearly 2,500 applicants representing more than 900 public and private high schools.

All these young people are outstanding examples of the very best Midland has to offer and we are proud of each and every one of them. The fact that they have been chosen for these honors testifies to their dedication and willingness to go the extra mile to be the very best they can be.

Regrettably, we can't control the amount of "bad news" that occurs and must be reported to keep the public informed. It's certainly much more pleasant, however, to get to report the good things our young people are doing!

Gays in military are very likely to get hurt

The issue about gays in the military has been brought up many times in the past couple of years. Many gays that will admit their sexual preference have been brutally murdered or hurt. I believe that gays should not in any way be allowed to embarrass our country by being in the military!

If gays continue to serve in the military, there is a high chance that they will get hurt. Eighty-one percent of troops responding to a Los Angeles Times poll said that violence was "likely" if openly gay people were permitted to serve. Lt. Spann of public affairs said every time a gay was hurt it was "still just a little gay bashing" ("Esquire," December 1993). And if homosexuals continue to serve the rate of gay bashing will probably not go down. In December of '93 "Esquire" quoted, "The tragedy of the talk about the ban of gays is that it nourished rather than confronted the hatred of soldiers."

Mexico should sell assets before bailout

We live in an upside down world! At the same time that our Congress is considering a Balanced Budget Amendment, our president has decided by executive order to authorize a $40 billion "loan guarantee" for Mexico. Surprisingly, there is support from both parties on this issue, and some of those who see "red" when spending is increased for domestic welfare, seem to be supporting this measure.

Is there something fundamentally wrong in Mexico? After all, we bailed them out of a similar mess in 1982. Mexico is ruled by a one-party tyranny, which never checks itself out for corruption and embezzlement. To its credit it has taken some steps toward privatization recently. But Pemex and the mining interests and many other assets remain unsold. They should have been required to sell all those assets before asking us for another bailout. The PRI political party has controlled their country for a hundred years. Do the U.S. taxpayers have any interest in perpetuating this corrupt one-party system?

If you share my desire of lower taxes and a balanced budget, I encourage you to write or call your congressman and tell them you feel that President Clinton has overstepped his Executive Order privilege since all appropriations or money matters have to originate in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being resubmitted.
- We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

Drug cartels outfly DEA officials' efforts

WASHINGTON — Colombian drug barons have risen to new heights in their efforts to smuggle cocaine into the United States.

Anderson

According to a confidential report by the Drug Enforcement Administration, Colombian cartels have purchased a fleet of more than 40 used long-range passenger jets, which they are now using to ship huge loads of cocaine to Mexico, Canada, Portugal and West Africa for sale in the United States and Europe.

For the cocaine bosses, buying the old passenger jets is a bottom-line decision. Passenger planes hold multi-ton loads, and are widely available outside the United States at relatively bargain prices. More importantly, the planes can often outrun anti-drug aircraft deployed by American and Mexican officials.

"While smaller turboprops are still being used, all primary indicators suggest that the majority of the cocaine that is transported by aircraft from Colombia for the United States market is being handled by Boeing 727s, Caravelles and the Turboprop Lockheed Electras," the DEA report states.

Some of the planes have been rigged with auxiliary fuel systems, allowing them to fly as long as 20 hours — or 8,000 miles — without refueling. One aircraft cited in the report has delivered cocaine off the coast of Portugal and returned to Colombia without a refueling stop.

Flying at night with their lights and radar transponders turned off to avoid detection, cartel-owned Boeing 727s can haul up to 22 tons of cocaine on a single flight, according to the DEA. The seats are ripped out to maximize space for the cocaine cargo. By the time such a load finally hits the streets, it is worth about $1.8 billion — or the entire gross domestic product of Barbados.

Clinton administration officials are clearly vexed by what this new trend portends for the volume of cocaine entering the United States. "It's a really big problem," says one high-level administration official. "It creates a huge mechanism for the cartels to bring cocaine into Mexico and eventually the U.S."

During three flights last winter, the DEA report reveals, one jetliner delivered an estimated 42 tons of cocaine to Mexican drugs lords. Other reports in the DEA analysis indicate that a single drug organization in Mexico receives up to 60 tons of cocaine per year, much of it hauled from Colombia by the refitted aircraft.

CHARLEY REESE

Many use rhetoric to justify unjustifiable

As the battles rage between the tax hogs and the taxpayers — "Operation Beltway Angst" we might call it — you can make an amusing game of studying the rhetorical tricks used to justify the unjustifiable.

Reese

You will notice, for example, that often defenders of a federal program will equate that program with the whole of the subject area. Hence, to stop funding the National Endowment for the Arts would be to "stop funding art in America."

That's nonsense. The federal art dollars are a spit in the ocean, and American art and culture thrived without federal funding for most of the country's history — and even today thrives mainly without it. The NEA dollars go mainly to a clique of cronies of the NEA elitists.

But the same technique — equating the federal program with the whole — crops up everywhere. Thus, the Mexican bailout is not about saving the fannies of Wall Street investors and banks, it's about "America's economic security." Hogwash, of course. Foreign aid is not about giving away American tax dollars to dictators and countries with big American lobbies, it's about "leadership of the world."

Nonsense, naturally. Ask these folks just where America is leading the world — to the bankruptcy court? Ask them why one sovereign nation has any right to lead the rest. Ask them to find one example anywhere in literature where someone said the quality of a good leader is to be gullible and weak. Like "national security," another piece of cant, "leadership of the world" cannot be defined. That's why they use it.

Another trick is to try to pretend that big expenditures are small expenditures. "Why, this takes up only a tiny percent of the federal budget," they say, or, "This amounts to only one penny of the federal dollar." In both cases irrelevancies are being used to deceive the public.

If some expenditure is wasteful or injurious, it is wasteful and injurious, no matter how large or small it is. The size of the expenditure cannot be used to justify the expense. Try telling your boss the case of liquor on your expense account is only a small percentage of your annual expenses.

As for the famed federal dollar and its pennies, just remember that the metaphorical "federal dollar" represents $1.4 trillion real dollars. In the case of foreign aid, the penny in the federal dollar is really $14 billion. To grasp that, suppose we take people whose annual federal income taxes after all deductions and credits amount to $10,000. How many people's incomes are required to generate the federal revenue necessary to fund foreign aid? The answer: 1.4 million. More than a million Americans whose tax liability is $10,000 each will have to labor an entire year to fund foreign aid. That's 1.4 million man-years of labor. Now, does that sound like a penny to you?

Another rhetorical trick is what I call the uniform-benefits ploy. That's when some federal boondoggle is justified by claiming that it "benefits the American economy." The American economy, however, is a verbal abstract. The real America consists of real, individual people located in real and specific places.

Sports heroes reveal that they are people too

The TV talkers repeatedly tell us that the Simpson trial is teaching us that sports heroes can be real people with character flaws.

Yes, that's true. But does that surprise anyone except tiny children?

Royko

There have been days when the sports pages read like the daily police blotter, with athletes being accused of selling or using dope, assaulting females, evading taxes, walloping fans, throwing mini-bombs and even committing armed heists.

If someone did a study, it would probably show that the misbehavior rate among athletes is probably higher than any other group of public figures except Chicago aldermen.

And that is despite sports reporters trying to be kind by sparing us an overdose of true-life portraits of the athletes they cover.

Or maybe they aren't being kind, but fear that if they tell us too much, they won't be able to go in a locker room without having a limb ripped off.

Whatever the reason, sports reporters have, to some degree, tried to shield sports idols from being publicly unveiled as mopes or menaces. And maybe that is only fair, since the athletes and reporters can be brought together so intimately. Few political reporters get to interview politicians when they limp naked and dripping out of a shower. They're grateful for being spared the sight.

And maybe the sports reporters believe that the fans — already yawning through contract squabbles and labor disputes — really don't want to know that the splendid athlete they cheer eats dinner with his fingers. Even the soup.

At one time, everything off the field was considered confidential. That's why we didn't know that Babe Ruth was an incredible glutton for food, booze and any woman who was handy. Or that Ty Cobb was a vicious racist. Or that other stars beat their wives, kept bottles in their lockers, or made goo-goo eyes at their teammates. We were happier believing they all ate Wheaties and dedicated every home run to a sick child.

In recent years, there has been more peeking into the laundry hampers. Not only of athletes, but of everyone else. But there is much that we aren't told, and I'm glad. When I go to the ballpark, I want to yell, "Way to go," instead of, "Call the cops."

But because I have friends who are sportswriters, I've heard many of the stories they tell over lunch or a beer. And it gives me a clearer idea of why there is no cheering in the press box.

A few examples:

One day the Bears announced that they had traded a player for a low draft choice.

Like many fans, I was surprised because that player was one of the few bright spots on a really pathetic team.

The writer who covered the Bears team was a proper fellow and a churchgoer. When I asked him about the strange trade, he looked uncomfortable.

"The coach told me, off the record, that the other players had been complaining about him," the writer said.

Why?

Grimacing, he said: "Well, they have this one big shower room that they all use. And he was always ... always ... well, he was always abusing himself in there."

In front of his teammates?

"Yes. You know, he's not the brightest person in the world."

Does the coach of the team he was traded to know about this?

"Sure, but he says it won't be any problem because they have separate shower stalls."

Then there was the female feature writer assigned to interview one of the greatest baseball players of any era.

This was shortly before women became sports reporters and she was supposed to write about the great player in his role as a husband, father, neighbor and family guy.

He agreed to meet her in the bar of the hotel where his team was staying. She left after only a few minutes and appeared flustered when she returned to the newsroom.

After some coaxing, she explained why the interview was cut short.

She said she told him the sort of story she had in mind, and he said something like: "OK, we can talk all you want after we go up to my room and (deleted)."

"After we what?" she said.

"Let's go to my room and (deleted)." At which point, she grabbed her purse and left.

Finally, there was the pitcher who was traded to the Cubs, and almost immediately went on the disabled list.

When I expressed puzzlement that the pitcher had been injured even before he had a chance to play, the baseball writer said: "Just between you and me, I'm told he just came down with VD, a case of clap. It'll take a little while before the shots clear it up."

Does that prevent him from pitching?

"Not really. But he's married and he told his wife that he can barely move around in bed because he has a bad back, so the team has to cover for him."

So we shouldn't be surprised that O.J. has turned out to be something less than a church deacon. And regardless of what he has done, it should be remembered that his teammates didn't mind sharing a shower with him.

PBS to survive budget cutbacks, while local programming suffers

By Calvin Woodward

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Like a prancing gazelle on one of the ubiquitous nature shows, the people at public television cover a lot of ground.

They send a millionaire purple dinosaur into our homes until we are blue in the face. They teach quilting, examine the presidency and film the Alaskan tundra under the celestial dance of the Northern Lights.

Public TV, seeking self-preservation, tells Americans it helps them "proclaim who we are." It says it explores issues crucial to making this society a "civil, decent, and humane one."

A society, too, that can cook up a storm, fix old houses on weekends and exercise first thing in the morning.

Few in the public broadcasting debate doubt Bert and Ernie will land on their padded feet if Congress stops or — more likely — reduces spending its funding in the next few months.

More clouded are prospects for the already spotty local programming in many areas and the variety of folksy, educational and arts shows undergirding the kid sensations and adult glitter.

So who are Americans, in the eyes and through the programs of the Public Broadcasting System? Time glued to the tube offers this portrait:

We are handy as can be, able to make fine furniture using the old ways, immersed in the "Joy of Painting," capable of "Sewing with Nancy," expert in making foie gras and side dishes in 30 minutes — no commercial breaks.

We dote on our children, shielding them from violence, bombarding them with Barney the dinosaur until some grownups want to tear him apart limb by pudgy limb.

Americans through the PBS lens are ethnically balanced, so that almost any group on screen will be a calibrated rainbow of races.

But some nights we go ethnically off kilter, taking on a cultured British accent and assuming names such as Jeeves and Wooster.

PBS tackles creepy-crawly subjects with gusto, showing tarantulas being roasted and eaten in the rain forest and federal programs being graphically dissected by Washington pundits.

And it's anchored in history, from its popular "Civil War" series to one on the War on Poverty that some said borrowed too heavily from the liberal canon.

Many conservatives accuse PBS of a liberal bias unsuitable for a service supported by all taxpayers. Some on the left accuse it of being scared timid by the right's attack.

Far from the center of that debate, public broadcasting takes on a unique face in Alaska, where native hunters, fishermen and trappers bring in their bounty at fund-raising time to be auctioned off at KYUK-TV and radio.

"We end up with a lot of meat, fish and fur hats," general manager John McDonald said from Bethel, center of a cluster of villages 400 miles from the road system.

KYUK, broadcasting in English and Yup'ik, covers news and public affairs by the dog sleds, bush planes and boats that link villages. Fishing updates and "Masterpiece Theater" share arctic air time.

Public broadcasting is getting 14 percent of its income, or $285 million, in federal money this year. Dependence on federal dollars varies, with rural stations generally getting a larger share.

"If we lost the (federal) check, the doors would be closing quickly here," said McDonald, whose station gets 40 percent of its income from Washington and has seen state support shrink.

Republicans may try to funnel money to small stations like KYUK while larger ones get less, nothing, or go on the block.

Increase in airbag thefts worry insurance companies

NEW YORK (AP) — OK, New Car Driver: You've pulled out your detachable radio, packed up any valuables and installed The Club. Now is it safe to leave your car on the street?

Not quite, police say — the most attractive item to thieves is still there on the steering wheel, ripe for the plucking: your air bag.

"It's the fastest growing scheme in stolen parts," said Jack Dever, who oversees fraud control programs for USAA auto insurance. "You can get a brand-new Mercedes or other high-priced car, they'll forget everything else and go to the air bags."

Auto companies spent years figuring out how to make air bags safe, reliable and easy to replace after an accident. This also makes them easy to steal.

"It takes three minutes," said Kim Hazelbaker, senior vice president of the Highway Loss Data Institute, an insurance industry research agency in Virginia. "You unfasten four bolts, there's a clip connector that you unplug, you walk away from the vehicle and you now have a part that retails for $1,000."

Insurers aren't reporting such a problem with passenger-side air bags because they tend to be built into the dashboard and are harder to reach.

Thefts of unexploded air bags are still fairly rare in many places, but insurance companies and police say it has become a serious problem in urban, high-theft areas such as New York City and parts of New Jersey, Florida and California.

Car-theft rings are creating their own market for unexploded bags in some areas by stealing them from cars and selling them back to body shops.

One such ring stocked up in December at a dealership in San Gabriel, Calif. They cut through a fence, broke windows and removed 17 air bags from new Camrys in less than 30 minutes, said Mike McGuigan, general sales manager at Puente Hills Toyota.

Body shops and salvage yards also pay petty criminals to supply them with air bags from specific models of cars, police say.

"They deal a lot with crackheads," said Officer Joseph Clark, who investigates auto theft in New York City's Queens borough. "They'll send them out with a shopping list to get the things they need, and hopefully they'll come back the next day with an air bag."

The New York Police Department recovered 2,100 stolen air bags and engine computers in a sting last August that netted 14 arrests.

"The majority of places were more than willing to take the stuff," said an undercover officer who spoke on condition of anonymity. "I sold the air bags for $25 to $50, then we bought them back posing as car owners for $250 to $300."

With factory-made replacements costing from $360 to $1,800, there's big money in stolen bags. And once they're put back in, it's very difficult to tell what's inside.

"The crooked auto body shops are pulling one over on you when they say it's new, and they're pulling one over on the insurance company when they bill them," said John Hoch, a spokesman for the National Insurance Crime Bureau, an agency financed by insurance companies to combat fraud.

Disability replaces golden years in Appalachian Kentucky

By DAN SEWELL

Associated Press Writer

MARTHA, Ky. — Perking up at the sight of visitors, 88-year-old Tommy Vanover uncurled and raised himself up on the couch. Even though smiling, he offered a bleak assessment of his health.

"I'm not doing no good," he said. "I've had trouble breathing ... what is they call it?"

Emphysema, says his nephew. Then Vanover, who in his prime made his living working in construction and digging coal, began talking about a daughter he said lives out back. His relatives confide that the daughter died last August of cancer; Tommy has Alzheimer's disease, too. And arthritis.

"I ain't been well," Vanover summarized. "They want me to go to town to the doctor, but it's no use. It won't do no good."

For Tommy, as for so many Appalachian elderly, there are no "golden years," only the dark advance of aches and ailments that have mounted over years of hard lives in the poverty-stricken mountains.

A 1990 Census survey asked Americans over 65 about limitations that keep them from working, being mobile or caring for themselves. Ranked by county in American Demographics magazine, six of the nation's 10 counties with the highest percentages of sick elderly were in eastern Kentucky as were 13 of the 50 highest nationally.

The top 50 list of the sick and old was predominantly Southern, with 49 of the highest-rated counties in Southern or border states (the highest rate nationally was in Apache County, Ariz., where the majority of residents live on the Navajo Indian Reservation).

In seven eastern Kentucky counties, more than 35 percent of the elderly had limitations, compared to a national average of 20.1 percent.

Such statistics reflect what health care veterans see every day in eastern Kentucky.

Sound background is good for run, Dole says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bob Dole said Sunday he "has been tested in a lot of ways," giving him a sound background for his upcoming run for president. He mentioned several possible running mates, including Jack Kemp, Colin Powell and governors from California and several other states.

The Kansas Republican said he will formally announce his candidacy in April, around the 50th anniversary of one of his most severe tests, a World War II injury.

Dole will be 73 years old in 1996, making him older than any president at the start of his first term if he is elected. In light of that, he was asked on NBC's "Meet the Press," whether he would commit to only serve one term as president.

"Well, I must say that's an option that people have talked about," he said. "But ... we have not made a decision. I assume we will make that decision before we announce so the American people will know it.

"Some people might like it," he mused. "Some might say, 'Well, you're a lame duck on day one.'

Dole said Republicans are reviewing the whole issue of affirmative action.

There have been a lot of one-term presidents the past few years, the past two decades or so. But it's a judgment we haven't made."

Dole sought to identify himself with Kemp as a fiscal conservative who "also understands that we need to reach out as a party ... when dealing with black Americans, Hispanics. It seems to me that if we're going to be a majority party, it's going to be up to us to make that happen. That means we reach out to people."

Asked about his position on a 1996 California ballot issue to eliminate race as a criteria for discriminating for or against someone, Dole said Republicans are reviewing the whole issue of affirmative action.

"We've asked the Congressional Research Service to send us all the bills that involve preferences, and we're looking at it," Dole said. "Again, with my record, I think I can look at it with some credibility. Has it worked? Has it had an adverse, a reverse reaction? Why did 62 percent of white males vote Republican in 1994? I think it's because of things like this, where sometimes the best-qualified person does not get the job because he or she may be one color. And I'm beginning to believe that may not be the way it should be in America."

He declined to comment specifically on the California referendum, but added:

"I want to be fair. I want people to have opportunities in America by creating more jobs and not having to struggle every time if you have somebody that wants a raise. 'Well, what's your color? What's your ethnic background?' You know, the people in America now are paying a price for things that were done before they were born. We did discriminate. We did suppress people. It was wrong. Slavery was wrong. But should future generations have to pay for that? Some would say yes. I think it's a tough question."

There has been speculation that Dole could name his selection for vice president when he announces his candidacy, and Dole was asked whether he would consider tapping Kemp, who recently bowed out of the presidential race.

Dole said he would consider Kemp and went on to mention former Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell and Gov. Pete Wilson of California.

"You know, it's not really a short list," he said. "It includes a number of people. We have a number of outstanding governors: Governor (George) Voinovich (of Ohio), Tommy Thompson (of Wisconsin), who is thinking about running, Jim Edgar (of Illinois), Bill Weld (of Massachusetts), Governor (Christine) Whitman (of New Jersey). You've got this whole list of people that I think would be outstanding running mates, and some may run for president."

Former Honda executives face trial following kickback incidents

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — It started with a local Acura dealer upset that he didn't get all the cars he says he was promised.

It turned into a nationwide investigation of kickbacks in which 19 people have pleaded guilty, three face trial this week and two more have been charged.

Prosecutors allege that dealers in 30 states gave executives of American Honda Motor Co. up to $15 million in cash, Rolex watches, fur coats, Mercedes-Benzes, furniture, pricey business suits and college tuition. In return, dealers allegedly were given lucrative franchises and scarce Hondas and Acuras that could be sold for $3,000 above sticker prices.

The case unfolded in New Hampshire because Richard Nault, a dealer in Concord and Manchester, sued Honda, claiming he had been treated unfairly. Allegations of graft during the federal trial prompted the judge to ask for a criminal investigation.

Fifteen former Honda and Acura executives, two former dealers, an advertiser and a lawyer have pleaded guilty to charges including racketeering, perjury and mail fraud.

Three former executives have pleaded innocent: John Billmyer of Raleigh, N.C., Stanley James Cardiges of Laguna Hills, Calif., and Dennis Josleyn of Penn Valley, Calif. Their federal trial begins Tuesday.

Assistant U.S. Attorneys Michael Connolly and Don Feith said they know of no commercial bribery cases this big.

Prosecutors allege that Honda, which manufactures Acura luxury cars as well as Hondas, is the biggest victim because it was defrauded of property and millions of dollars intended for advertising and training — and because it faces lawsuits from dealers who didn't receive preferential treatment.

But Cardiges' lawyer, Philip Israels, contends the government has information that "Honda management not only knew but also encouraged what they now call criminal behavior."

American Honda spokesman Jeffrey Smith said he was appalled at the claims.

"If that were true, Honda would be a defendant rather than the victim," he said from Torrance, Calif., where the company is based.

Honda's top U.S. sales executives — Billmyer from 1983 to 1988 and Cardiges from 1988 to 1992 — oversaw regional and zone managers. All three levels of management helped decide where cars were distributed and who received dealerships, which were supposed to be awarded on merit.

But court documents, lawyers and those involved in the case say that wasn't the way it worked for more than 50 of the approximately 1,000 Honda dealers and 300 Acura dealers in the United States from 1979 to 1992.

Prosecutors charge that Cardiges, 49, got most of the kickbacks during his four years as top sales executive.

Welfare definition continues to expand as reform gains steam

By CONNIE CASS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Five-year-old Joey Acevedo is learning to write his first words at a Head Start preschool center. Nellie C. Russell, 82, eats a lunch of meatloaf and mashed potatoes delivered to her home for free. Which of them gets welfare?

Both. Or neither, depending on whom you ask.

The definition of "welfare" is expanding as the new Republican majority in Congress sifts through a diverse array of federal spending in the name of welfare reform.

"The last few months, I've stayed away from using that word because it's become confusing to people," said Sharon Parrott, a researcher for the liberal Center on Budget and Policy Priorities.

Until recently, the welfare reform debate was mostly about how to put the idle to work and discourage unmarried teen-agers from getting pregnant.

"Welfare" was often used as shorthand for a few large, well-known programs, especially cash benefits from Aid to Families with Dependent Children — what most people call welfare checks — and sometimes food stamps and rent assistance.

But conservatives see those as merely stubborn roots in a costly thicket of welfare programs that must be pruned to help balance the federal budget.

AFDC remains "in the eye of the storm," said Rep. Clay Shaw, R-Fla., chairman of the Ways and Means subcommittee on human resources. But, "there are many facets of welfare and kinds of welfare."

That's where Head Start and the service sometimes called "meals on wheels" come in.

They are on a list of 336 federal programs, costing a total of $126 billion per year, that House Republicans have labeled welfare. Essentially, the list includes programs that dispense aid based on need (although some are not limited to low-income or poor people).

Among them are grants and guaranteed loans for college students, help for runaway teenagers, aid for the homeless, care for abandoned babies, the foster grandparents program, literacy programs, the Job Corps, childhood immunizations, health care for American Indians, aid to blighted communities, the national service program AmeriCorps, and others.

In addition to the list, Republicans want to whittle down two other big programs — $87 billion in Medicaid coverage for the poor and $28 billion in Supplemental Security Income for the disabled.

Many of these programs, large and small, reach beyond the impoverished and jobless who are typically associated with welfare.

"I'm sure all the voters think we can erase the deficit without cutting anything that affects them," said Rep. Jim Greenwood, R-Pa., whose wife is a meals on wheels volunteer. "That's not true, be it college programs, senior programs, or programs that affect kids."

While Joey is in Head Start, his mother, Fontella Acevedo, 29, works as a medical assistant in Alexandria, Va. She is separated from her husband and raising their two children and two nieces in her custody.

Short of both time and money, Acevedo is grateful for Head Start: It's preparing Joey for first grade and replaces $100-per-week day care, helping her keep her job.

"I don't think it should be categorized as a welfare program because there are a lot of us in it that are working," Acevedo said. "Not everybody wants to be on AFDC."

After a 42-year career managing restaurants, Nellie Russell can no longer shop or cook for herself — walking is almost impossible, her one good eye is weak, her hands are bent and stiff.

Russell depends on the hot meals delivered to her Central Square, N.Y., home by a county program that gets federal funds. She donates $1 a day for the food when she can spare it. And she doesn't call it welfare.

"I don't get no help from welfare. I never did," Russell said. "I worked all my life, and now I can't."

Congress is considering proposals to eliminate all 336 federal programs on the welfare list. Most of the money would be turned over to the states — with limits on future increases — to be spent on broadly defined needs, such as nutrition or housing.

Some mistake skin conditions for child abuse

By Janet McConnaughey
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS — Strep infections, bowel disease, lice, folk medicine and even celery soup can leave marks that people mistake for child abuse.

These conditions are extremely rare, but can have devastating consequences, said Dr. Howard B. Pride, who was among the lecturers at the American Academy of Dermatology convention, meeting here through Thursday.

Medical journals include reports of parents ordered to stay away from their children before the medical condition was diagnosed, and even of one father who killed himself in jail, he said.

"Obviously, it's devastating for parents to be accused of molesting their child or told that someone in their environment has been molesting when it hasn't been occurring," Pride said.

Out of roughly 500 children a year brought to Children's Hospital in New Orleans for suspected sexual abuse, 20 to 30 turn out to have medical conditions that included diaper rash and infections, Dr. Kathryn Coffman said.

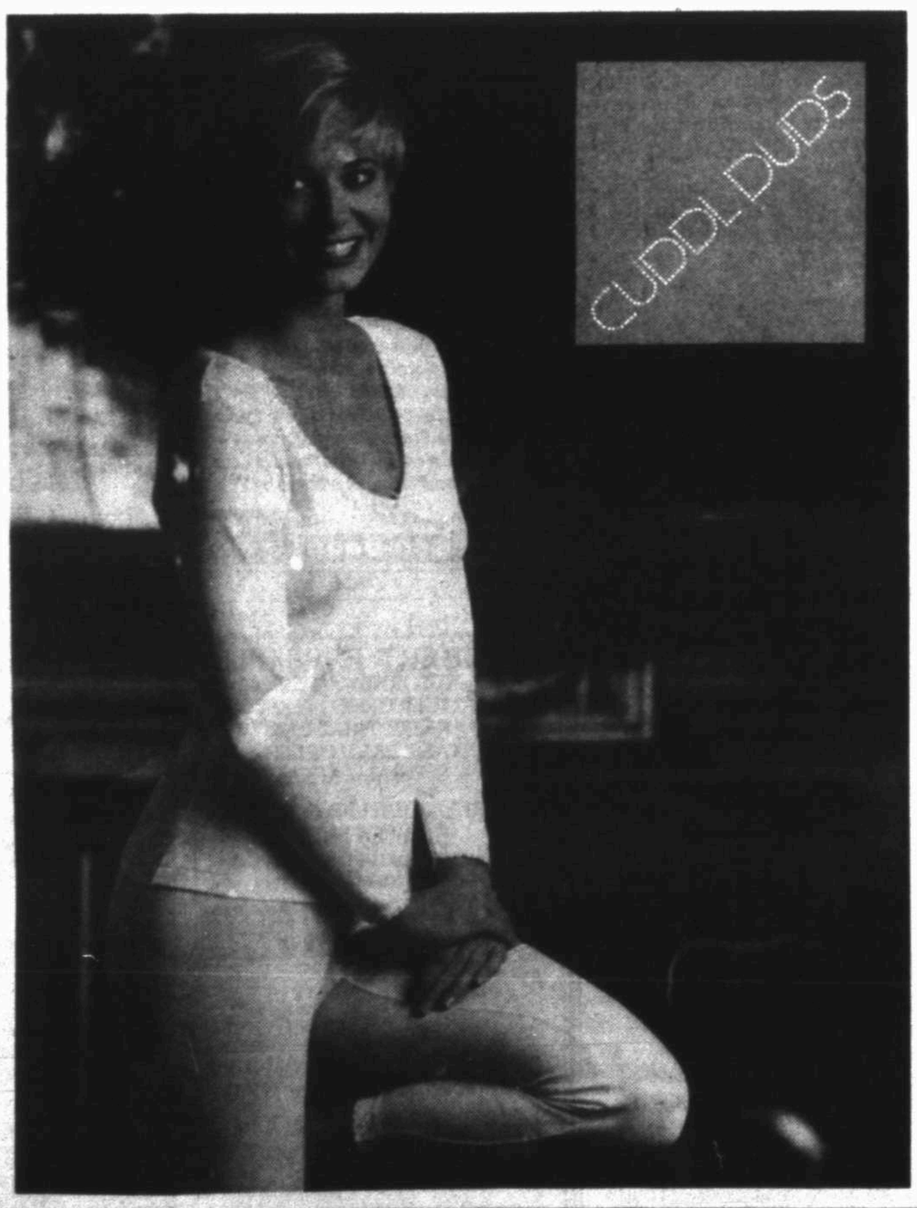

Some conditions look like bruises, burns or blisters, or make hair fall out in clumps. Others cause redness, bleeding, blistering or what look like scrapes or scratches on the genitals or around the anus, she said.

Pride of Danville, Pa., remembers one young patient brought in with brownish, bruiselike marks on her face that suggested she'd been beaten up.

It turned out the marks were an allergic reaction to celery soup.

The 20-plus conditions Pride described make up such a small percentage of all suspected abuse cases that they are easy to overlook, he said.

Toilet trivia

If you think the bathroom medicine cabinet is a good place to hide things, forget it. The 1995 Bathroom Tissue Report, a survey sponsored by toilet paper maker Quilted Northern, found 39 percent of respondents look inside the medicine cabinets of people they visit. Some of the respondents reported finding some surprises: a gun, an ice pick, whiskey, a hairpiece and a picture of Richard Gere. Some hosts' dirty secrets, however, are a little too obvious, the survey found — 39 percent of the respondents said they avoided using a bathroom because it hadn't been cleaned. Other guests made themselves right at home — 25 percent of the respondents said they'd used their hosts' toothbrushes, combs or makeup.

Expensive accounts

Business travelers can find themselves shelling out quite a bit in cities around the globe, says Runzheimer International, a consulting firm. Runzheimer found business people spending a night in Tokyo paid $464, including breakfast, lunch, dinner and lodging in business-class establishments. The second-most expensive city was Hong Kong, where business travelers paid $348 a night, followed by Paris at $342, New York at $338 and Moscow at $319.

Geographic earnings

How much you earn can be affected dramatically by where you live, says William M. Mercer Inc., a human resources consultancy. The company found that a lower level-salaried job that pays about $25,000 in Houston or Pittsburgh would pay nearly $31,000 in San Jose, Calif. and $29,000 in New York. A middle-management job that pays $50,000 in Houston or Pittsburgh would pay $61,000 in San Jose and $58,000 in New York. Of course, what you earn is affected by the local cost of living, so ideally, employees in the lower-paying regions would have lower bills for housing, food and utilities.

Cleaning up the air

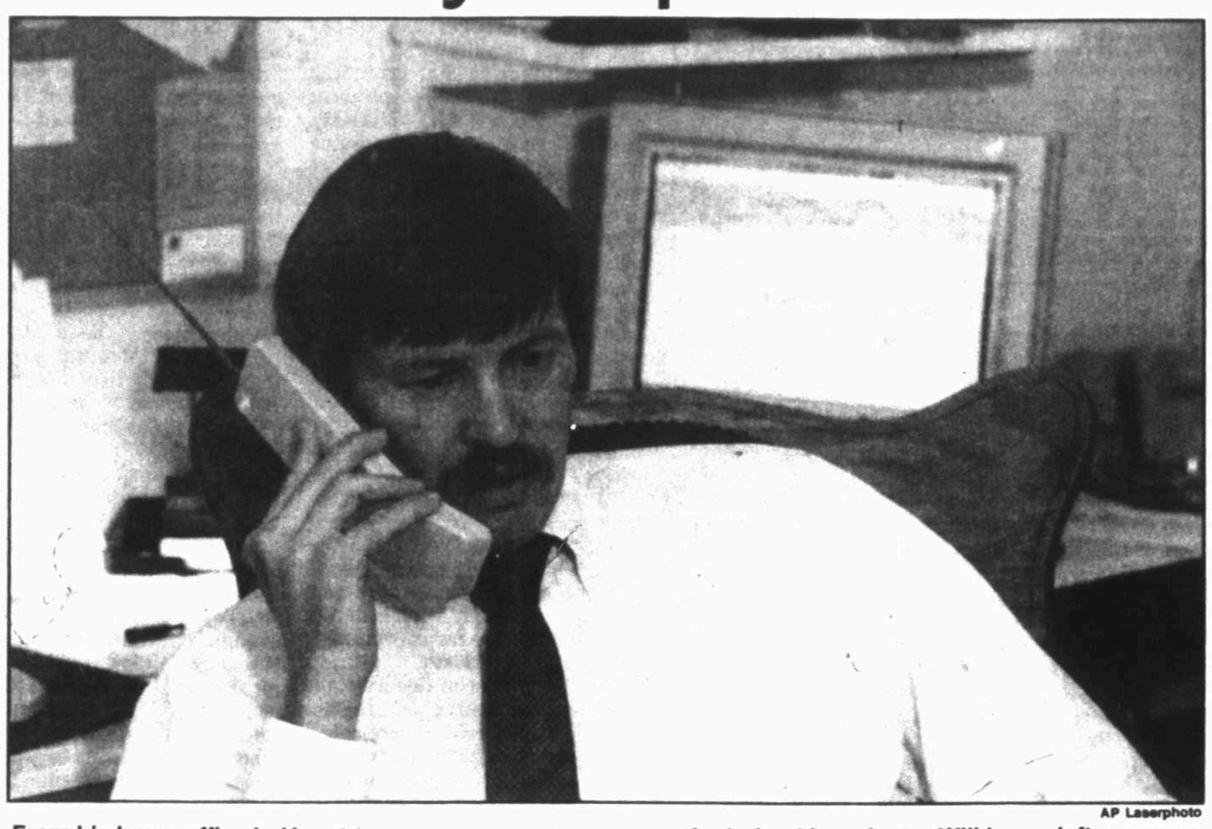

It's getting harder for smokers to find a place at work to light up. The International Facility Management Association found in a survey of its members that 71 percent of workplace facilities don't allow smoking in any areas of their buildings, up from 42 percent in 1991. The survey also found employers are more concerned about indoor air quality in general, with a growing number checking the air for contaminants. More employers are either testing their facilities' drinking water, or using bottled water.

Currency expert starts own firm

From his home office in Houston, currency expert Craig Wilkinson is competing with some of the nation's banking giants. Wilkinson left a secure, high-paying job to become an entrepreneur.

By Debra Beachy
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — Just a few years back, Craig Wilkinson ran the Bank of New Zealand's spacious trading floor overlooking Wellington Harbor as senior vice president.

He traded that for a coveted office on the 12th floor of Texas Commerce Tower, where he managed foreign risk for Houston's largest bank.

Now Wilkinson's office is the den of his west Houston home, also the headquarters of his company, Treasury Management Services, a currency hedging and financial markets advisory firm that opened for business in December and competes with some of America's most powerful financial institutions.

Wilkinson has spent more than a year acquiring the necessary licenses (four), registrations (six), and computer equipment ($25,000 worth) to start the business. He's had to take courses to upgrade his computer skills and learned to do things he once depended on his staff to do for him — such as pulling a simple spreadsheet or creating a brochure.

So what compels someone who has scaled the heights of international finance to leave gleaming corporate towers and assume the risk of starting a business, much less the kind of risky business that depends on how good you are at guessing what the peso and the yen will do?

Dreams die hard

■ One of the American dreams is to retire early, yet it is becoming more difficult financially.

By Vivian Marino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Six year ago, Jerry Morrissy swore off business meetings, tossed aside his office memos and abandoned the tedious commute to work every day.

The General Foods executive, then 55, left the rat race while still in his prime to become a hospice volunteer, tutor disadvantaged kids and run for local office. (Yes, he even took up golfing.)

"I started with the company when I was 23; put in 32 years," said Morrissy, who lives in Briarcliff Manor, N.Y. "I'm really involved in community affairs now. I was never able to do that before."

Morrissy is among millions of workers to take advantage of early retirement packages offered by cost-cutting companies over the last decade.

Job applicants face thorough computer screening

By Dan Piller
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH — The scene is as old as business itself: A prospective employee sits nervously in front of a personnel officer, who gazes over the application that is supposed to be a capsule history of the job seeker's life.

When the interview ends, the personnel officer tells the applicant that she will "get back to you." Then, she turns to the laborious task of telephoning or writing previous employers, references, landlords, etc.

But now, in the information age, corporations can tap various electronic data bases that provide detailed financial, criminal, professional and just about any other kind of personal histories that may be needed to get a complete picture of a potential employee.

That kind of search goes far beyond the old-fashioned application, where the most revealing information might come from a former teacher or minister recalling anecdotes from a decade earlier. Today's reference checks come with hard numbers, dates and facts.

"Eighty-five percent of the so-called 'gut hires' are mistakes," says Steven Kohs, marketing director for Worldwide Information Network of Fort Worth, which uses a computer gateway provided by a Florida company to offer detailed background histories to businesses to help screen applicants.

Worldwide and its clients don't need George Orwell to tell them of the nervousness in society about such electronic checks. Congress has layered several privacy acts that generally forbid searches for anything other than current addresses unless the subject has signed a waiver for a more extensive search. Worldwide and its gateway providers insist on such waivers.

Ironically, legal roadblocks that formerly might have worked against widespread use of sensi-

Fee on treasuries

Q: In the past I have not paid a fee when I bought Treasury bills and notes directly from the government. On my most recent statement of account, there was this note: "In May 1995, Treasury will begin charging an annual account maintenance fee of $25 on each Treasury Direct Account exceeding $100,000 in total holdings."

I do not question the fee because there is obviously an administrative expense involved. But why is the fee applied only to accounts of $100,000 or more? \nd how will the fee be collected?

— P.L. Thomas, New York

A: The fee was designed to recover part of the cost of running the Treasury Direct program, said Peter Hollenbach, a spokesman for the Bureau of Public Debt. The program costs $25 million a year, and the fee is expected to raise $2.5 million a year.

Beginning in May, investors with accounts of more than $100,000 will be sent a bill for $25.

The fee was not imposed on smaller accounts because the impact on investment return would have been greater, Hollenbach said.

"We looked at the structure of the program and we wanted to try to achieve two goals," he said. "First was to have it affect the fewest number of investors possible and second was to have the least impact on total return to investors."

How much is a $5 bill worth?

Q: Years ago my grandmother gave me some $5 bills dated 1963. The serial number and Treasury seal are red. She told me to hold on to them as they might be worth something one day. Are they?
— Grace D'Esposito, Fort Lee, N.J.

A: Your bills are called U.S. notes, which are slightly different from the Federal Reserve notes that the government now prints, explained Joseph Coyne, a spokesman for the Federal Reserve Board in Washington. "It is legal tender," he said. "You can spend it."

Martin Gengerke, in charge of paper money for Stack's, a New York City dealer in coins and paper bills, said U.S. notes were issued until 1963. If they are used, they are worth only their face value, but if they are new and have never been folded, they could be worth $10, Gengerke said. The price, he added, is unlikely to appreciate substantially.

IRA qualifications

Q: Last year I retired from a job where I was covered by a pension. Because I worked, my wife was prevented from making tax-deductible contributions to an individual retirement account. Now that I am no longer an active participant in the pension, is my wife eligible for the IRA deduction?
— Irving Goldstone, Elizabeth, N.J.

A: Yes. As long as neither of you is an active participant in a pension plan, your wife can deduct contributions of up to $2,000 a year in earned income.

RETIRE: Companies cutting costs to offer early packages deal between 1991 and 1993, and 81 percent of those companies got the retirements they sought, mostly by sweetening benefits or relaxing eligibility requirements, according to a survey by the consulting firm Wyatt Co.

This work force streamlining has helped lower the average retirement age to around 58 today — two years younger than a decade ago and seven years earlier than what was long considered the typical "gold watch" age, said Paul Westbrook, who runs Westbrook Financial Advisers in Watchung, N.J.

But Westbrook and other experts believe the trend is reversing. By the next century, many aging baby boomers — who comprise a third of the population — will have to work longer because fewer companies will offer early buyouts and many will have eliminated traditional pension plans altogether.

Full Social Security benefits also won't be available for most boomers, the oldest of whom turn 50 this year, until after age 66.

Although more than half of all Americans hope to retire before age 65 — 55 percent, according to a 1993 Money magazine poll — most will lack the financial wherewithal to get by on their own.

"It's a lifestyle desire for a lot of people. (But) most people can't do it ... unless they increase their savings and make drastic changes in their lifestyle," Westbrook said.

In fact, he said, by the year 2025 only half of all people ages 60 to 65 will be able to retire, compared with 95 percent now. By 2050, only 5 percent can reach that goal, he said.

Westbrook says he's seen a recent increase in baby boom clients coming in with dreams of beating the odds.

"I don't sense from people that they are happy. They are tolerating the work force because they need a job," he said.

Anette Kolenda, 41, a Chemical Bank executive, survived a banking industry restructuring a few years back. Although she feels secure in her job and enjoys her work, she isn't counting on being there until 65. With a goal of retiring by age 55, she contributes the maximum permitted to her company-sponsored, tax-deferred 401(k) plan and invests heavily.

"I don't think you can plan on having a 30- or 40-year career," the New Canaan, Conn., mother of three said. "Even if you can, most companies have passed the responsibility for retirement investment to their employees."

Even Morrissy doesn't see the same opportunities for his five children and two grandsons.

"I think they'll have a tougher time. I think they'll have to fund more of their own retirement," he said.

His is almost a textbook example of early retirement at its best: Morrissy, 61, and his wife, Mary Lou, 60, a retired teacher, live comfortably on a generous lump-sum payment from General Foods, their pensions and extended medical benefits, as well as accumulated savings. Their house is paid off and worth at least 10 times what they bought it for 28 years ago. Within the next two years, they'll also start collecting Social Security. (The earliest you can collect partial benefits is 62.)

That leaves the Morrissys free to play golf, travel and perform community work. Mrs. Morrissy started a special tutoring service for disadvantaged children, to which her husband regularly volunteers his time.

The couple, and many others like them, will likely have plenty of years to remain active — something retirement experts call a second middle age.

The average life expectancy today is around 75 years (79 for women) and rising. That's about 60 percent longer than at the turn of the century, when life expectancy was about 47.

To maintain their lifestyles, most individuals will need to generate an annual retirement income of between 60 percent and 80 percent of their pre-retirement earnings (average income during your last five years of working), financial advisers say.

Right now, Social Security and company pension plans replace around two-thirds of pre-retirement income, with the rest coming from savings. But many experts believe that by the next century, individuals will have to supply the larger share.

"During merger mania in the '80s, some companies canceled traditional pension plans ... in favor of defined contribution plans like 401(k)s," said Robert C. Atchley, director of the Scripps Gerontology Center at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio.

Atchley believes Social Security will be around in the future, but "there probably will be some jockeying around of benefits," with either a reduction in cost-of-living increases or a higher eligibility age.

Individuals who regularly set aside money for retirement, either through a 401(k) or Individual Retirement Account, will withstand these changes the best, said Jonathan Pond, a financial consultant in the Boston area.

Unfortunately, he noted, most people don't. A recent survey by the accounting firm KPMG Peat Marwick found 89 percent of employers with at least 200 workers offered 401(k) and other retirement programs last year, but only 61 percent of eligible workers participated. What's more, the average employee contributed onlv half the maximum amount allowed.

"The odds are you're going to live quite a while into retirement. If you don't plan for it now, you just better ... hope you die before you retire," Pond said. He echoed some of the warnings used by many financial firms to get people to invest for retirement.

Pond says early retirement can be achieved by many, although individuals need to start planning in their 30s and 40s.

Most people may have to buy a smaller house in a less expensive part of the country, buy used cars or forgo an Ivy League education for their kids — and, of course, save more, he said.

"Early retirees make a lot of sacrifices during their working years. They consciously decide to not save 10 percent of their income but 20 percent," Pond said.

Westbrook says early retirees of the future may decide to work part time, either because they enjoy working or need the extra income. "This is sort of a middle ground," he said.

Such was the case with Don Trinite, of Great Falls, Va., and Phil and Carol Baily, of Temecula, Calif.

Since taking early retirement from Mobil Corp. three years ago, Trinite, 60, started a small accounting business. He's busy around tax season, but the rest of the year he makes his own hours, in between volunteer work.

The Bailys are also easing into retirement, although they've been at it longer. The couple, in their early 50s, dropped out of the traditional work force about a decade ago and put their life savings into a 15-acre spread in the heart of Southern California's wine country.

The small winery and restaurant they've opened are just starting to make money.

Thinking of Early Retirement?

Many people can retire early with some careful planning. Tips from financial experts on reaching that goal:

- Start planning early. You can't decide at age 50 that you want to retire in five years. Most successful early retirees have long-range plans in place before they reach 40.
- Stick with a good employer. Unless you're certain you can strike it rich on your own, work for secure companies with generous pension plans. Avoid excessive job hopping so you can accrue substantial pension benefits.
- Make use of employer-sponsored investment programs. Place a percentage of your paycheck into tax-deferred 401(k) plans. Experts urge participation to the maximum. You have to be 59½ to begin withdrawing without penalty.
- Save and invest wisely. Since you can't count on Social Security or a company pension early on, you'll have to live off savings for a while. You'll need between 60 percent and 80 percent of pre-retirement income. To help your nest egg grow, put a chunk of it in stocks or stock funds. The Social Security Administration can provide an estimate of retirement benefits.
- Plan for medical bills. Unless you have an early retirement package that extends your health insurance coverage, you'll need to factor in high insurance premiums until Medicare begins at 65.
- Scale back your lifestyle. There are many ways to do this. You might buy a smaller house, forgo extravagant vacations or send your kids to public colleges instead of Ivy League schools.
- Explore career directions you can pursue later in life. You may want to work a few months a year or hours a week. Lucrative opportunities may exist in consulting. Some individuals have turned a hobby into a way to make money.
- Mentally prepare yourself. Assess your values, goals and aspirations and relate them to how you'd like to live given more time and sufficient income.

Interest rates and American dreams

By John Cunniff
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — Whatever tax cuts that middle-income homeowners may receive from Congress could be more than offset by higher interest rates.

Effectively, the higher home mortgage rates that soon will show up on monthly bills are a tax increase, but not "just another" tax increase. They add up to a whopper that could put some families into a serious bind.

The Federal Reserve, which raised interest rates for the seventh time in a year on Wednesday, has what it considers valid reasons for making the cost of borrowing more expensive. Still, the Fed uses a blunt instrument to slow economic growth when a surgeon's scalpel might be more appropriate.

The result is that already stressed homeowners are destined to take a big hit when their adjustable rate mortgage rates are raised by the allowable limit.

The Fed's actions since February 1994 have been justified by reference to a sharply lower jobless rate, a plant capacity level of 85 percent, and strong consumer demand — all of which are said to threaten inflation.

But one consequence is to create a muddle of questions in the public mind.

—Why, for example, should homeowners be so harshly penalized if, as Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan suggested, the already low rate of consumer inflation might be even lower still if statistics were more accurate?

—Why, after housing affordability opened up for young families for the first time in many years, is the door slammed after only a year or two?

—Aren't homeowners and consumers in general sufficiently stressed already? The ratio of household debt to disposable income was less than 40 percent in the early 1950s. It is more than 90 percent in the 1990s, a record high.

—Aren't there enough signs that consumers reached their limit? Credit-card debt is near record highs, and not likely to rise voluntarily. Current usage may indicate stress rather than confidence. Consumer buying has tailed off.

The increases in adjustable rates soon coming, if they haven't arrived already, will have wide impact. Such loans account for nearly half the nation's total household mortgage obligations.

A family with a $130,000 adjustable-rate mortgage, the national median, is destined to get a 2 percentage-point rise in monthly payments. That amounts to about $180 a month, or $2,100 a year, a significant blow to the budget.

Rising rates produce a more general concern too: Homeownership rates for all age groups under 55 years declined during the 1980s, but the drop for 30- to 34-year-olds was severe — a startling 9.6 percentage points.

These rates were just beginning to improve when the so-called window of opportunity — the first affordable ownership opportunity for many people in their 30s and early 40s — was shut with a bang. Hopes were raised, then dashed.

Baleful numbers from Harvard University's latest "State of the Nation's Housing" report document a distressing trend.

SCREENING: Legal roadblocks not as constricting today

case of workplace violence, the company is at fault for not checking out prospective hires carefully enough.

From an unimposing house on South Hemphill Street in Fort Worth, Worldwide Information Network uses ordinary personal computers to tap sources around the globe to put together a profile that can be stunning in detail.

"We might be able to tell when a person last flushed the toilet," says Mark Tyree, Worldwide's chief computer guru, who notes that water department records are generally public because they come from municipalities.

"During an interview, the applicant's signature on a waiver — the kind most people sign as part of the employment screening process — can be faxed to us and within an hour or two, we can get what is called a 'header,' which verifies addresses and employment," Koh says.

A header can be generated by the simplest of acts. A person who moves to a distant city to start over will trip the electronic wire simply by applying to lease an apartment, because an apartment owner or manager is virtually certain to check credit reports. When that happens, the electronic Big Brother at least knows the new locality, if not the exact address, of an individual.

That is one reason why investigators are having increasingly good luck running down bad-check artists and deadbeat parents. But it is employers who are in a position to benefit most from the new ocean of electronic information.

The expansion of public information via computer is not a joy to those interested in preserving privacy, such as Evan Hendricks, editor of "Privacy Times" in Washington, D.C. Hendricks follows privacy issues and says that "right now, the computer allows a company to do an unrestricted fishing expedition on people."

Hendricks says his organization acknowledges the right, and need, for companies to check out job applicants.

But "the search should be restrictive," he says.

"For instance, an applicant to be a bus driver should be checked to see if he has problems with his driving record," Hendricks says. "But does that mean that you have to get an entire life history?"

Hendricks is also troubled by what could be called the "garbage in, garbage out" problem. He notes that some independent studies have pegged the error rate at major credit reporting services at 30 percent. Similarly, fraudulent uses of Social Security numbers have been put at higher than 20 percent.

Worldwide Information is the brainchild of Eddie Ashbrook, a Fort Worth accountant who has jumped onto the federal government's electronic tax filing service to form One Day Tax Services. One Day has more than 60 offices statewide but hasn't been able to solve the ancient bane of tax preparers, the seasonal nature of the business.

"We're busy as all get-out for the first four months of each year, then slow the rest of the time," Ashbrook says. "I have more than 60 computers sitting around and need something to keep them busy."

By delving into on-line computer services, Ashbrook is traveling a path trod by the national tax preparer, H&R Block, which owns the CompuServe on-line service.

Worldwide is taking advantage of the fact that most gatherers and holders of information, such as credit bureaus, government agencies and some law enforcement departments, have put their information in electronic form. Someone with access to an electronic gateway can tap that data.

Different states treat electronic law enforcement information differently, he says. Texas is not one of the handful of states that have put criminal information on-line statewide, which means that investigators are frequently obliged to go to individual courthouses.

CURRENCY: Starting your own business 'very high risk'

(From 1B)

Wilkinson said he left Texas Commerce Bank to start his own company because he wanted to work for himself.

"Starting your own business is tremendously high risk," Wilkinson says. "But it also is a reaction to the reality we live in. America has been downsizing aggressively for five years. Those who wish to survive and prosper in America of the '90s have to make their own way."

Wilkinson says he has been able to do this for a number of reasons.

First, he had enough savings to launch his business. He could afford to be without a job while he set up his business, and he could afford to buy his own equipment. He was able to raise funds by using his own money to trade in the currency and interest rate markets.

Second, he had 20 years of experience that enabled him to draw on contacts at major investment banking houses.

Third, he had expertise in a field — currency hedging — that is in demand.

For a typical client, Wilkinson looks at the company's exposure in currencies and hooks the company up with big investment and commercial banks. He then tries to get the best exchange rate for the client's transactions.

He is looking for his niche in the small and middle players, companies with $2 million to $200 million in sales a year that are doing a lot of exporting.

Especially now, with Mexico's peso crisis, many companies are looking for ways to hedge their exposure in pesos.

"The Mexican peso crisis brings home to roost that if you take wrong risks, there are severe consequences," Wilkinson says. "In Houston, there is tremendous interest in the Mexican peso because of proximity. I have a half dozen meetings with clients in the next few weeks that have an interest in managing their peso exposure."

Wilkinson's giant competitors won't talk about their upstart rival, but one person who sees a bright future for the company is Ian Bishop, a consultant at the University of Houston International Trade Center who helped Wilkinson put the company together.

"The idea is viable," Bishop says.

In addition to the experience that gives Wilkinson access to New York financial institutions, Bishop says, the entrepreneur can provide services at a discount. Since Wilkinson has no secretarial or maintenance staff to pay, no huge rental fees or electric bills and no need to plan for big executive bonuses, he has competitive pricing edge against large financial institutions. He can work on a retainer instead of charging a markup for every transaction.

Others who know him say his past should go a long way in building his future.

"Craig Wilkinson has a good reputation in the international financial community," says Victor Polce, vice president and manager in the New York branch of Commerzbank.

Employees and independent contractors: There's a difference

At some point, many business owners will hire someone to do work for them. They may get an accountant, builder, lawyer or other professional.

No matter who is hired, the last thing the owner may think might be "is this person an employee or independent contractor?" Knowing the difference is important for tax purposes.

Business owners must withhold income tax on employees' wages, and must pay Social Security tax (FICA) as well as withhold the employees' portion of FICA. They also are responsible for unemployment tax (FUTA).

So how do they know the difference? It comes down to the right to control. An employee is controlled by an employer in ways an independent contractor is not.

According to the Internal Revenue Service, "In a nutshell, if you have workers and you set their hours, provide their tools, tell them what to do and how to do it, and can fire them, then chances are they're employees, not independent contractors."

Jennifer Nichols, 16, watches Porter demonstrate a step.

On Tap

With taps jingling, local hoofers recently jumped with both feet into a fast-paced tap dance workshop led by New Yorker Van "The Man" Porter.

A featured dancer in the Broadway musical "Black & Blue" and a dancer in the Gregory Hines movie "Tap," Porter put some dancing feet through some furious paces at the Lee Youth Center.

"It was fast work, but I really enjoyed it," said Beatrice Henry of Odessa, a self-taught tapper. Although Ms. Henry, 74, had never had a tap dance lesson in her life, she managed to keep up with the advanced tappers.

"I would go to the movies and grew up watching Fred Astaire. I would go home and try things myself," Ms. Henry said.

She said Porter taught routines at a slow pace. "Then he would speed it up."

"Van Porter is a really, really gifted teacher," said James Van Stavern who came up with the idea to bring the New York dancer to Midland.

"My children both dance and take dance in New York in the summer," Van Stavern said. "One day, after class, we asked Van if he would come to Midland. It was an opportunity to put on a fund-raiser for the youth centers (Midland-Lee Youth Centers) and to expose people to some fabulous dancing."

Tap dancers from Monahans, Hobbs, N.M., and other nearby cities flocked to test their skills with a professional and pick up some new footwork.

Local dancers said they were in awe of Porter, an eight-time winner on Star Search, who reached the finals as a member of the Rhythm Kings.

Stephanie Howard, 15, a tap dancer since age 3, said she left the workshop "very impressed and very tired."

The Midland Freshman High School student said Porter taught her some new techniques and tap combinations. "It was a challenge, but I attended all sessions," she said.

"We are thinking about doing this again next year, bringing in some more big names," Van Stavern said. "The success of this is going to be the support of all the local dance studios. We really need the support of local people. This is strictly a fund-raiser," he said, noting that all proceeds benefited the youth centers.

DEAR ABBY

Some remember orphanage experiences gratefully

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: I asked my readers who had been in an orphanage to share their experiences with me. Did I get letters! Read on:

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: It was a hot day in August 1946 when I learned that my mom was sending me to a children's home. I was 10, scared to death, and puzzled as to why she was keeping my younger brother and sister. She told me I was a troublemaker and too hard to handle. I panicked and ran away, but was captured hours later, and a very nice caseworker took me to Cleveland.

Feeling unwanted, I withdrew, developed a severe stuttering problem and cried constantly. Seven years later, with the kindness and compassion of a thoughtful staff, I had developed a sense of values and an inner strength. My assigned "Big Brother" and his family greatly helped me develop these assets.

I left the home at 17 to make my mark and take on the world. I educated myself, overcame my stuttering, became a successful corporate CEO, and now enjoy multimillionaire status. I retired at 52. Thank you, Bellefaire and the Big Brothers organization! — IRWIN KAHN, FRANKLIN, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: When I was 7, my mother left me in the middle of the night. She never even said goodbye. I lived with my grandparents for a while, where I was molested by my father and my uncle. Then I was sent to an orphanage until I was 15. I learned to cook, sew and get along with other people. I went to a private Catholic school; the sisters loaned me money to get through nursing school. I shudder to think what my life would have been like if I had stayed with my father and grandparents. — LUCKY GIRL FROM NEW YORK

DEAR ABBY: My father died when I was 3 years old, and I was placed in an orphanage in Philadelphia. It was surrounded by a stone wall 10 feet high. My two-year stint in the Navy was a breeze compared to that orphanage, but I have no regrets. It taught me how to cope. — RICHARD WINTERS, FRESNO, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Newt Gingrich is not a nut living in a Boys Town fantasy. When I was 4 years old, I was placed in an orphanage in New Orleans along with my sister who was 6, and my brother, 8. When I look back on those years, it wasn't so bad. We were in a safe place, and never mistreated.

I'm 64 now and feel lucky. It sure beats what's happening to some kids today. — MILDRED K., MISSISSIPPI

DEAR ABBY: My mother died at the age of 32. I was 6, the youngest of four. Our father was an alcoholic. My teacher had reported my poor school attendance to the juvenile authorities, who visited my home and found that I was neglected — there was little food, and the house was filthy. I was immediately placed in the Iowa State Soldiers' Orphanage in Davenport, Iowa, where I lived for 10 years.

There were 950 boys and girls living on campus, segregated, of course. We all dressed in uniforms and were served three healthy meals a day. There was no evidence of love, but I was lucky to have a clean, safe place to live. — ANOTHER ORPHAN

Independent colleges, universities ask state for more aid to minorities

HOUSTON (AP) — Independent Texas colleges and universities are lobbying state officials for at least a $10 million boost in college aid for needy students, particularly ethnic-minority members.

The Legislature created the Tuition Equalization Grant program in 1971 to provide financial aid to needy students wanting to attend private universities.

College administrators and lobbyists say program funding should be increased by $10 million, to about $35.2 million a year.

However, some administrators would prefer an increase of about $50 million in the fund, which was created, in part, to help ease overcrowding at state schools.

Either way, it will fall short of the $143 million a Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board survey says is needed to fully meet the needs of a growing number of lower-income and middle-class families.

Texas' 40 independent colleges and universities have an enrollment of more than 91,000 students.

Texas is expecting dramatic increases in the number of students seeking a college education in the next 15 years, said Carol L. McDonald, president of Independent Colleges and Universities of Texas Inc., a non-profit association based in Austin.

In 1984-85, the program's state funding allowed it to provide about 85 percent of the money needed for tuition assistance. Today, that percentage has fallen to about 35 percent.

"We are talking to the Legislature about closing the gap," Ms. McDonald said.

"These grants afford the opportunity for students to have real choice," said University of St. Thomas President Joseph M. McFadden. "It puts grant money in the hands of people who most need it."

Currently, the average family household income of a student who receives an average $1,416 TEG grant is $23,000, $9,000 above the poverty guideline. Annual college expenses are about $13,800 a year.

About 42 percent of the recipients are minority students.

Students who opt for a private college and use the financial aid from the state actually save taxpayers money, McFadden said.

The average TEG grant is less than one-third of what taxpayers must pay — $5,130 — for each full-time student enrolled at a state university, Ms. McDonald said.

Black pilot files complaint against military officials

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A black pilot who was dropped from an advanced jet training program alleges he was forced out for reporting racist comments.

Lt. j.g. Gary Commock, who "washed out" from the advanced jet training program at Naval Air Station Kingsville in June 1994, has filed complaints against military officials.

The complaint alleges failure to take immediate remedial action, failure to conduct an impartial investigation of his complaint and retaliation.

Meanwhile, the Navy has accused Commock of larceny, making false official statements and conduct unbecoming an officer relating to an allegedly unwarranted housing allowance. A hearing on the criminal charges is scheduled for Thursday.

"All I ask out of this whole thing is to be made whole and given a fair chance — to be able to make it on my own or to fail on my own," Commock said in Sunday editions of the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "To get my wings would be more than its weight in gold."

Commock was seven formal flights away from obtaining his gold wings as a naval aviator.

Navy officials said Commock, 30, was removed for substandard performance, a contention supported by internal Navy documents obtained by the newspaper.

"Lt. j.g. Commock was simply unable to perform adequately in the cockpit and unable to meet the minimum naval aviation training standards," the documents state.

Capt. Charles W. Nesby, a black aviator and former squadron leader at Naval Air Station Kingsville, agrees with the Navy assessment.

"In my professional and personal opinion, Gary Commock's race is not at issue," said. "When we talk about his ability to fly a tactical jet aircraft, he just doesn't have the right stuff."

However, the documents also confirm that Commock was subject to racist comments and was regarded as his commanding officer's "whipping boy."

According to a letter written by Rear Adm. William Hayden, Chief of Naval Air Training, two officers were later recommended for racial sensitivity counseling.

Commock and his attorney say the criminal allegations are retaliation for the flier's battle for reinstatement.

Also, Commock said that when he discovered that he was receiving the unwarranted payments, amounting to $11,000 in two years, he reported it and took out a loan to repay the military.

The Navy denies the retaliation charge.

"It is not reprisal. It is the Navy's responsibility to investigate any charges of wrongdoing by a service member and take appropriate action," according to a written statement from the Naval Air Training Command in Corpus Christi.

Family demands wall around range after stray bullet hits teen-ager

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A Nueces County family wants the county to enclose a firing range used by sheriff's deputies after a teen-age family member said he was wounded slightly by a stray bullet from the facility.

Trey Youngblood, 17, said he was wounded in the side about 4 p.m. Saturday while walking along the fence on his family's property, about 200 yards downrange from the firing range.

The Calallen High School senior was treated and released from Spohn Hospital, a spokeswoman said.

The Nueces County Sheriff's Department said it will investigate the incident.

"We're concerned because we had firing going on at our range," said Maj. William Edge. "We're starting an investigation to see if the bullet came from one of our weapons."

About 10 deputies had been taking a required marksmanship test, Edge said.

Clinton orders sides to table

■ President Clinton sends baseball negotiators back to table for another day of talks.

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON — President Clinton refused to take no for an answer Sunday when baseball's negotiators said they couldn't agree on a deal, ordering the sides back to the bargaining table for one more day of talks.

Five hours after mediator W.J. Usery announced the sides were too far apart to hope for a settlement, Clinton demanded players and owners try again.

Usery met with Clinton in the Oval Office for 45 minutes and reported that four days of talks had been futile. Usery then returned to the negotiations and said the president wanted another report by 5 p.m. EST Monday — the 100th anniversary of Babe Ruth's birth.

"It's not at all clear that we can get them to settle," Clinton spokesman Mike McCurry said, "but we are hopeful."

While the president could propose special legislation to Congress, White House aides said he wants the sides to work it out themselves.

Players and owners have made little progress since the strike started Aug. 12, and are still billions of dollars apart.

"Obviously, it's a big order to accomplish," Usery said. "I know we must try to do the job."

Labor Secretary Robert Reich attended the White House meeting and stood at Usery's side during a news conference, dramatizing Clinton's message.

"He emphasized the urgency of bringing this problem to a rapid settlement," Reich said. "He wants to make sure there is a 1995 season, to make sure there is spring training."

Workouts start a week from Thursday, and administration officials have said they are against the owners' plan to use strikebreakers. The regular season starts April 2.

"Time is running out on us," said Usery, who was appointed special mediator by Clinton last Oct. 14. "We all know the effect this is having on our nation. It's absolutely essential we try to get baseball playing again."

Players and owners thought they could be asked to negotiate through the night.

"We take it with the greatest seriousness," said At-

Faulk, AFC run off with Pro Bowl win

■ Colt star Marshall Faulk breaks O.J. Simpson's rushing record as the AFC routs the NFC 41-13.

By Ken Peters
AP Sport Writer

HONOLULU — In still another NFC-AFC blowout, Marshall Faulk turned the tables on the NFC.

The Indianapolis Colts' star, the only rookie in the game, staged the most spectacular running show in the quarter-century history of the Pro Bowl on Sunday, rushing for 180 yards to shatter O.J. Simpson's 22-year-old record in the AFC's 41-13 rout of the NFC.

The AFC, whose champions have lost 11 straight, mostly by lopsided scores, to the NFC in the Super Bowl, won the Pro Bowl for the third time in five years.

Closing the books on the 1994 NFL season, Faulk carried 13 times and scored on a 49-yard run to top Simpson's record of 112 yards rushing in the 1973 Pro Bowl.

"I've watched this game many times and for it (the record) to happen to me is incredible," Faulk said. "To have a big game here means a lot. I ran behind an All-Pro line and it showed. We just blew them off the ball."

The AFC, coached by Bill Cowher and his Pittsburgh staff, dominated on both sides of the line of scrimmage.

Seattle's Chris Warren also went over the previous rushing mark with 14 carries for 127 yards for the AFC, which ed up a Pro Bowl-record 400 yards on the ground against the NFC's all-star defense.

The AFC defense, with linebacker Junior Seau of San Diego logging seven tackles, gave up just 209 yards of offense to the NFC, only 41 yards rushing.

Warren had the rushing record late in the game, but Faulk ended up with it when he reeled off his 49-yard TD run off a fake punt in the closing minutes of the game at Aloha Stadium.

"We were informed when I was in the process of breaking the record," Warren said. "They wanted to get me the ball so I could break it. Then they took me out and put Marshall in and he broke it.

"We were going back and forth (with the record). I felt like whoever got the ball last would have the record."

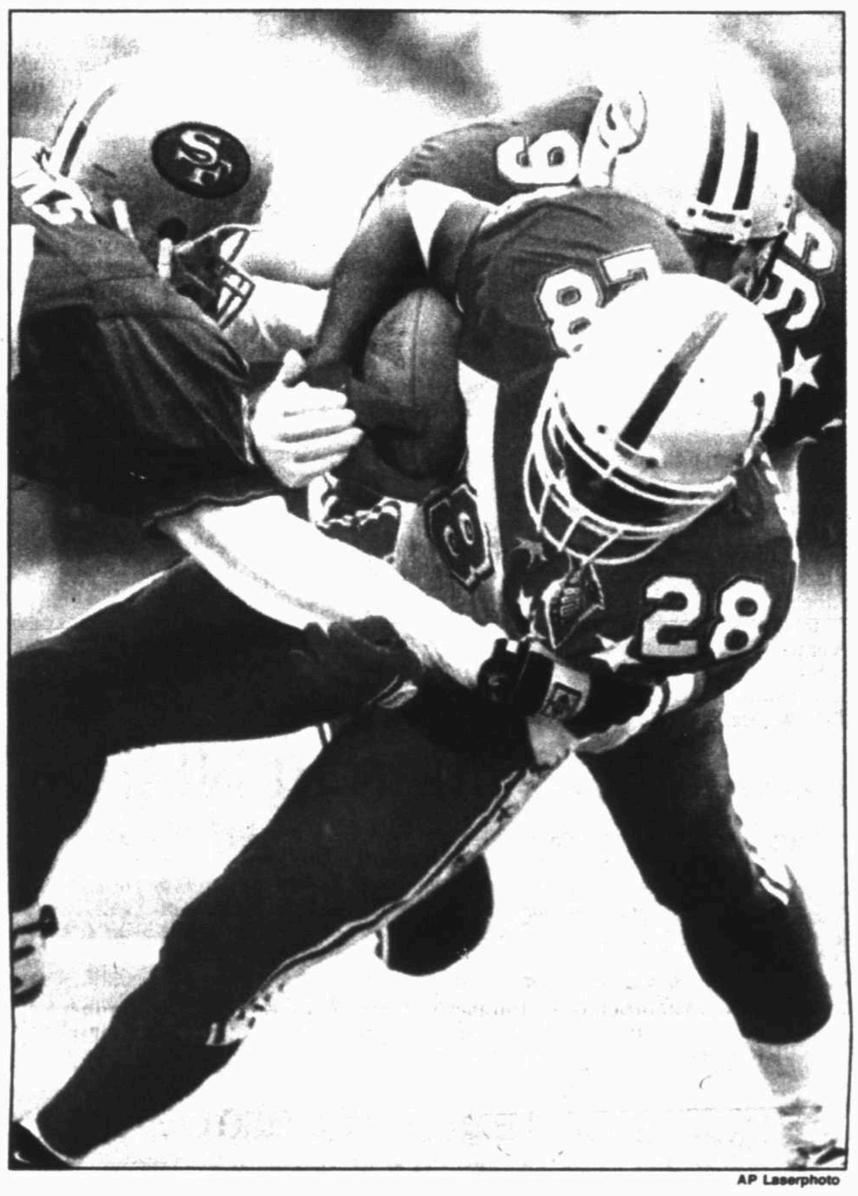

The AFC players earned $20,000 each for the victory and the NFC players got $10,000 apiece.

"I wasn't really surprised at the outcome," said Barry Switzer, whose Cowboys staff coached the NFC. "These all-star games, guys make big plays here and there."

Tight end Eric Green of Pittsburgh had two touchdown receptions, including a 22-yarder from Denver's John Elway in the second quarter that helped bring the AFC back from a 10-0 deficit. He then had a 16-yard TD reception from the Los Angeles Raiders' Jeff Hostetler in the final quarter, when the AFC broke the game open with three touchdowns.

Steve Young of San Francisco, the MVP of the 49ers' 49-26 Super Bowl blowout of San Diego a week earlier, helped stake the NFC to a 10-0 lead in

Rockets glare crushes Suns

■ Hot 3-point shooting and Hakeem Olajuwon's inside play lead Houston to a 124-100 rout of Phoenix.

Associated Press

PHOENIX — The Houston Rockets haven't exactly beat up on the rest of the NBA this season as defending champions.

If the Rockets could clone their performance Sunday against the Phoenix Suns, though, they'd be playing their role much better.

■ NBA Roundup

"I thought the real Houston Rockets showed up for this game," said Vernon Maxwell, one of two guards whose 3-point sharpshooting blended with Hakeem Olajuwon's strength inside in a 124-100 rout of the Suns.

"It was just a great game for us," Maxwell went on. "We got the post play out of Hakeem, and the guys on the outside were knocking down the 3s."

Olajuwon, who had 28 points, 11 rebounds and three blocks, said the Rockets were psyched to play the Suns on national television.

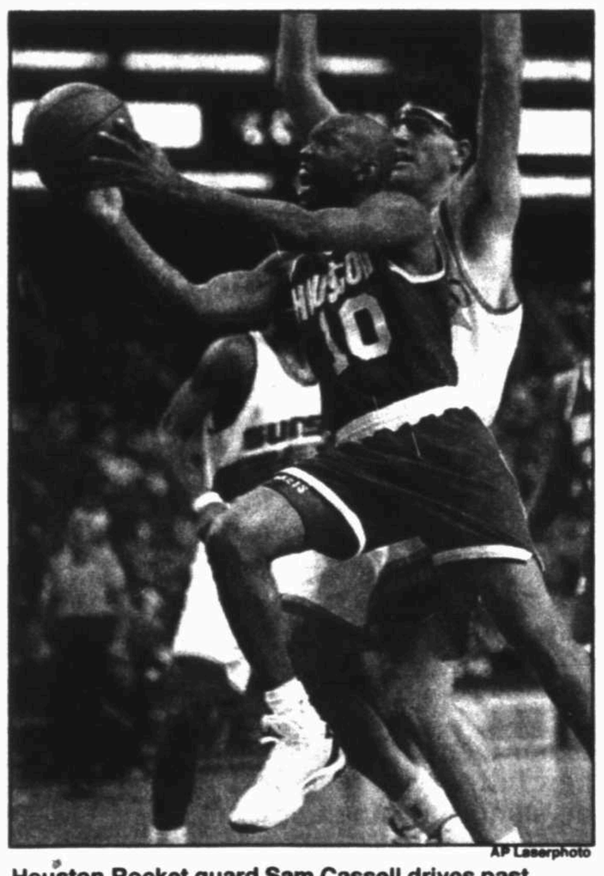

"The only problem with this team is sometimes we lose focus and play individual basketball," he said.

Houston, which knocked the Suns out of the Western Conference semifinals in seven games last season and beat them 114-106 at The Summit on Dec. 22, became only the third team to defeat Phoenix at home this season and the first to beat them twice.

The defeat dropped Phoenix into a tie with Orlando for the NBA's best record, but Charles Barkley was philosophical about it.

"They shot 12-of-24 from 3-point land," Barkley said. "There isn't much you can really do about that. They shoot 12-for-24, they're going to beat us every time. We've

MC teams take on Wranglers

Staff Report

The last time the Midland College basketball teams played Odessa College, the Chaparrals swept the Wranglers right out of the Odessa Sports Complex.

Junior College for the conference and ranked No. 20 in the latest national poll.

Odessa College, 20-4 overall, is starting its second half of conference play like the dog chasing the mechanical rabbit. They are 3-3 in league action after a shocking 90-87 loss to last place Frank Phillips one week ago. A win today would reel OC back into the thick of the conference hunt.

It's not a good time for a letdown, but Midland men's coach Pat Rafferty is afraid the light at the end of the tunnel is a freight train.

UIL reconsidering proposal to allow Sunday games

■ Pressure from Baptists has sports governing body changing its mind about Sunday tournament play.

DALLAS (AP) — Bending to pressure from Baptists, the University Interscholastic League is rethinking a proposal that would allow high school tournament directors to more easily reschedule athletic and academic events on Sunday.

UIL members had planned to forward the proposal next week to the State Board of Education, which has the final say.

But the Austin-based body that oversees academic and athletic activities in Texas public high schools sent letters last week to its 28 legislative members, asking them if they still support the change, which they approved in October.

Under UIL rules, no competitions can be scheduled on a Sunday, but can be rescheduled for Sunday if the event is a regional or state tournament that was postponed because of weather or disaster, provided all schools involved give their consent.

The proposed change scheduled to go into effect would allow tournament directors to reschedule events on Sunday even without the approval of all schools involved. The proposal would apply to all high school events that have regional or state tournaments, ranging from debate to soccer.

"We're trying to address certain situations where everyone has to pick up their stuff, go home, come back on Monday and miss classes just because one school doesn't want to play on Sunday," said Bill Farney, director of athletics for the UIL.

Conner streak over

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Young America rallied during the last leg Sunday to defeat Stars & Stripes on the America's Cup defender course, ending a five-race victory streak for Dennis Conner's boat.

Young America had fallen behind by more than two minutes because of a tangled sail, but caught Conner's dark blue yacht on the home stretch.

After a strong start in the competition, Young America has struggled lately. Sunday's win snapped a three-race losing streak.

The match with Stars & Stripes started well for Kevin Mahaney's boat. In patchy 5 to 6 knots of breeze, Stars & Stripes headed left and Young America sailed right with a two-second edge at the gun.

Up the first beat, Young America seamed to find the better wind on its side of the course and cleared out to a 1 minute, 56 second lead at the top mark.

But trouble struck for the syndicate from Bangor, Maine, at the end of the first run. During a down wind tack, its its sail twisted into an hourglass shape. As the sail was dropped to clear the tangle, a halyard twisted around the mast causing more problems. Young America continued on with a partly set sail.

Two for Hall

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA scoring king, and former Boston Celtics defensive ace Tom Sanders are among the nominees for the Basketball Hall of Fame, which is to announce its selections Monday.

Leading the list of 11 nominess is Abdul-Jabbar, a six-time MVP who entered the league with Milwaukee in 1969, anchored the Los Angeles Lakers' "Showtime" teams and made the skyhook part of the NBA's vocabulary.

CHAPS: Playoff spot at stake for MC men

(From 1C)

"We have looked just horrible in practice this past week. Ever since the Howard game (a 78-69 loss last Monday) we have just been going through the motions.

"I don't know if Howard took the heart out of them. You would think the guys would have something to prove. Maybe we need to get our tail whipped at home to get their attention. I hope not, I hope they realize what is at stake here."

At stake is a possible playoff spot. A win by Midland over Odessa College and losses by South Plains and New Mexico Military today would assure Midland of at least a fourth place tie. The top four teams in the WJCAC advance to the Region V Tournament in Waco March 3-6.

Today's game will be a rematch between Midland guard Kevin Rice and Odessa's sophomore guard Desmond Greer.

Rice shut down Greer in the second half of the Chaps' 78-74 win over Odessa in the first meeting. Greer, who finished with a game-high 26 points, scored just eight in the second half as Rice hounded Greer despite a pulled groin.

"There is no question in my mind that (Odessa coach) Dennis Helms will have his team in the right frame of mind. They are coming off a loss and have had a week to work things out. They could be like a shark in bloody water."

D'Juan Baker, who scored 25 points for Midland in the first meeting, is coming off a 33-point performance against Frank Phillips last Thursday in the Chaps' 82-76 win.

Head Coach Ron Jones and his Midland College womens team, 20-5 for the season and 5-2 in conference play, are staring a spot in the Nation Junior College Athletic Association regional V tournament right in the face. The Lady Chaps are coming off a last-minute victory over Frank Phillips College Thursday in Borger. Shannon Jordan had the hot hand on that night, lighting the Lady Plainsmen for 26 while Roslynn Dunn threw in 16.

Dunn is one Lady Chap who has experienced success against OC this season. Dunn has already burned the Lady Wranglers once this season. The freshman lit up OC for 25 points in the 93-66 win. Also, sophomore post Joanna Kailahi had 23, and freshman guard Pam Hicks threw in 12 in the Jan. 12 win.

"Last time was a separate issue," Jones said. "That night, we handled their pressure better than we have against other teams this season. We're still trying to score a playoff spot."

Dunn also knows that the Lady Wranglers, a team that has beaten nationally-ranked Howard College in the past two weeks, will pose a problem for the Lady Chaps even at Chap Center.

"We know they are going to be pumped," Dunn said. "We're still going to have to get out there and do the job."

Along with the strong outside game of Jordan and Dunn, MC will also attack the Lady Wranglers with their big girls in the middle. Kailahi leads the group, averaging 20 points and 8 rebounds a game. Stacey Johnson, MC's leading rebounder with 8.2 boards a game, Rashunda Jarmon and Brandy Wright should also give immediate production down low.

The one missing piece to the Midland club that beat Odessa earlier is point guard Amber Follis, who will miss her fourth-straight game since bruising her left knee against Clarendon College on Jan. 23. Follis aggravated the injury this weekend and will be reevaluated by team physicians this week.

Odessa, 12-10 and 2-5, is a team on a roll of sorts. OC has won two out of their last three district games after starting district at 0-4.

"Odessa has got a lot on the line," Jones said. "They are coming here with a purpose."

What few playoff hopes that are left for the Lady Wranglers will be helped greatly with a win today, and any chances for that win will depend on their ability to force turnovers with their pressure defense that has averaged a conference-high 14.9 steals a game.

Offensively, Odessa will be lead by the tandem of Trentia Shields and Brinda Owensby. Both players are averaging 14 points a game for a team that scores 73.2 points per game. Shields and Nicole Crawford are the team's leaders on the boards with 9 and 7.4 rebounds a game.

CHAP NOTES: MC leads the overall series 30-22 with Midland winning the last three meetings ... OC has won at the Chap Center the past two seasons (90-78 last year and 86-82 in 1993).

STRIKE: Union intent on preserving its gains

(From 1C)

lanta Braves president Stan Kasten, a member of management's negotiating committee. "When the president of the United States and the secretary of labor intercede, that's not an everyday occurrence."

Owners want a new economic system that will control players' salaries, which averaged nearly $1.2 million in 1994. The union, intent on preserving its gains of the past two decades, walked out to fight off the owners' demand to cap costs.

If he is forced to propose a settlement, Usery said he would give the terms to the president before divulging them to both sides. Usery would urge players and owners to accept, but if they don't, the next move would be up to Clinton.

"We can't make any judgment at all about any recommendations that could be made until we see them," union head Donald Fehr said.

If the president proposes to settle the strike with legislation, it would have to be approved by the House and Senate.

"I think they'd better pay attention to this president," Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Orrin Hatch told CNN. "I think he means business. I'm going to support him on it.

"And if we have to, if they're not going to get it done, then we're going to have to see if we can do it through Congress," the Utah Republican said.

Acting commissioner Bud Selig, who has attended just one bargaining session during his 2½-year tenure, was to arrive in Washington on Monday. It was Selig, the Milwaukee Brewers owner, who last Sept. 14 announced the cancellation of the World Series.

Usery, a labor secretary in the Ford administration, cajoled owners into withdrawing their salary cap demand last week, but teams still are insisting on a luxury tax that will place a drag on salary growth.

The union will not accept a significant payroll tax, leaving the sides bitterly divided on the 178th day of the strike, the eighth work stoppage in the major leagues since 1972. The walkout wiped out the World Series for the first time since 1904.

The day after talks broke off Dec. 22, owners imposed their salary cap plan. On Jan. 26, Clinton ordered talks to resume.

Owners made their new proposal Wednesday, asking for a 75 percent tax on the amount of payrolls between $35 million and $42 million, and a 100 percent tax on the amount above that.

On Friday, owners withdrew their salary cap after the National Labor Relations Board said it was prepared to issue an unfair labor practice charge that the system was illegally imposed. That led to speculation that progress might follow. Instead, the sides turned snippy Saturday.

In response to the withdrawal of the salary cap, players lifted the union's signing freeze, effective Monday, when baseball's old business rules go back into effect.

AFC: Young completes 8 of 15 passes for NFC

(From 1C)

the first quarter, but a third-quarter field goal by Minnesota's Fuad Reveiz was the only other NFC scoring.

Young completed 8 of 15 passes for 129 yards and one TD.

"We didn't stop them on the first couple of drives, but then we shut them down and controlled the ball on offense," Cowher said.

Faulk made several spectacular runs, including a 41-yarder early in the fourth quarter. On his late touchdown, he broke tackles in the secondary for the game's final score.

Cleveland's Leroy Hoard put the AFC in front to stay when he threaded his way through the defense on a 4-yard touchdown run for a 17-10 lead 2:07 before halftime.

Hostetler, a replacement for the injured Dan Marino on the roster, drove the AFC to the TD by Hoard, with a 10-yard scramble and a 35-yard completion to Miami's Irving Fryar down to the NFC 11-yard line.

Denver's John Elway, unable to generate any offense for most of the first quarter, put the AFC on the board when he hit Green, all alone down the middle, for a 22-yard touchdown in 43 seconds into the second period.

Natrone Means of San Diego broke loose outside on a 41-yard run to the NFC 47 on that Elway-engineered 88-yard touchdown march.

John Carney's 22-yard field goal on the AFC's next possession made it 10-10, then Hoard scored the next time the AFC had the ball.

Sabatini ready to bid for title

CHICAGO (AP) — Gabriela Sabatini says she's back to top form and ready to make a strong bid for the title in this week's Ameritech Cup women's tennis tournament.

The Argentine said she is recovered from a back injury that led to her elimination in the first round of last month's Australian Open.

"My game is back," she said. "I've seen a lot of improvement with my game."

Three win titles at NHRA Winternationals

POMONA, Calif. (AP) — Eddie Hill, Cruz Pedregon and Darrell Alderman won titles Sunday at the NHRA Winternationals at Pomona Raceway.

Hill won in Top Fuel, Pedregon in Funny Car for new team owner Joe Gibbs and Alderman in Pro Stock in the opening event of the 1995 NHRA Winston Drag Racing Series.

Hill, from Wichita Falls, Texas, defeated Scott Kalitta in the Top Fuel final. Hill produced a pass of 4.859 seconds (299.50 mph) while Kalitta encountered traction problems at the starting line and limped to the finish in 11.879 seconds (77.31 mph).

Hill, 58, is the oldest driver to win an NHRA national event.

"I don't know what we're going to call this car, but we're going to call it fast," said Hill, who won for the first time since August 1993.

Pedregon, from Moorpark, Calif., beat Chuck Etchells in the Funny Car final. Pedregon finished at 5.304 seconds (278.72 mph) in a Pontiac Firebird owned by former NFL coach Gibbs. Etchells had clutch problems in his Dodge Avenger at the start and never reached the finish line.

"This is easier than making the call on fourth-and-1," Gibbs said of his victory celebration, which included a Gatorade shower from his team.

UIL: Church leaders campaign against Sunday events

From 1C

But leaders of some Baptist churches have been urging worshipers to write or call State Board of Education members about the proposal.

"We feel this would set a bad precedent," said the Rev. David L. Jenkins of First Baptist Church of Gilmer. "We need a day when our families can stay together. Naturally, as a pastor, I'm interested in keeping Sunday free for families."

In the Feb. 1 edition of the Baptist Standard, a newsletter published in Dallas by the Baptist General Convention, an editorial carried the headline "Keep Sunday free of high school athletics."

Weston Ware, associate director of the Baptist General Convention's public policy arm, said the convention, which represents 2.5 million Baptists, has not formally condemned the proposal.

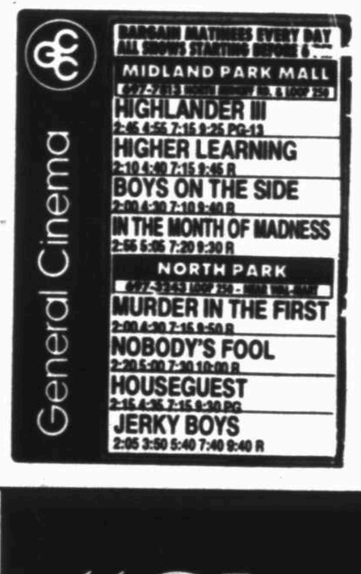

But, says Ware, "I think it's safe to say most Baptists would be opposed to the changes being suggested."

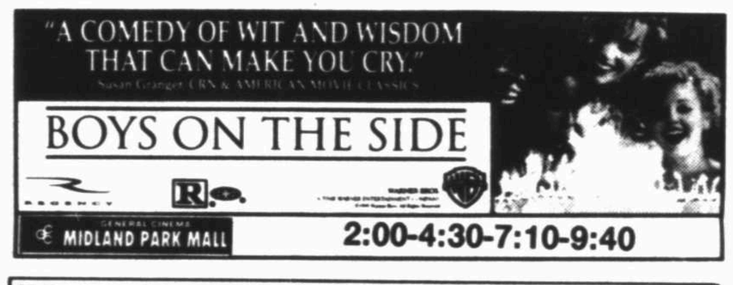

Terry King is a Baptist, but he's also baseball coach at Arlington Martin High School. He favors the rule change.

"We don't want to interfere with families and church," he said, "but in some instances, you have to get these games done. The kids are so excited, they want to go on. It's a very emotional time."

GOREN BRIDGE

With Omar Sharif and Tannah Hirsch

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q. 1 - East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A 8 ♡A 9 7 6 3 ◇A J 7 6 2 ♣7

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	Pass	1♠	Pass
2◇	Pass	2♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A - Partner's bid is not forwardgoing. It simply shows a six-card suit and no particular liking for either of your suits. However, your three aces and a singleton are worth a lot on this auction and your hand certainly merits a move toward game. Raise to three spades.

Q. 2 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K Q 8 ♡9 8 7 3 ◇10 7 2 ♣K J 8

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1◇	Pass	1NT	Pass
Pass	2♠	?

What action do you take?

A - It is not often that a one-no-trump responder can contribute three or four tricks on defense against a low-level contract. Tell partner this happy news by doubling.

Q. 3 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠Void ♡A K 9 4 ◇A 8 6 4 2 ♣A J 9 5

The bidding has proceeded:

EAST	SOUTH	WEST	NORTH
1♠	Dbl	2♠	3♡
Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A - Since partner bid freely, he must have some values, so you should not lightly dismiss the possibility of slam. The way to get this message across to partner is to cue-bid three spades now.

Q. 4 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠6 3 ♡A Q 10 9 6 ◇A Q 10 ♣K J 9

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	Pass	1♠	2◇

What action do you take?

A - If there are a couple of entries to partner's hand, you could be cold for game at no trump. Without a means of communication, however, this hand is going nowhere. On defense against diamonds, you rate to take five or six tricks, and anything partner can contribute will sweeten the pot. Double.

Q. 5 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A 8 3 ♡Q 5 2 ◇10 6 ♣J 7 5 4 3

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
Pass	Pass	1NT	Pass

What action do you take?

A - While we have been known to invite game by raising one no trump to two with seven points and a five-card suit, hand does not qualify. The quality of the club holding is so poor it needs too much from partner for the suit to run. Pass.

Q. 6 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A J 10 7 6 2 ♡Void ◇6 ♣K Q J 7 6 2

Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?

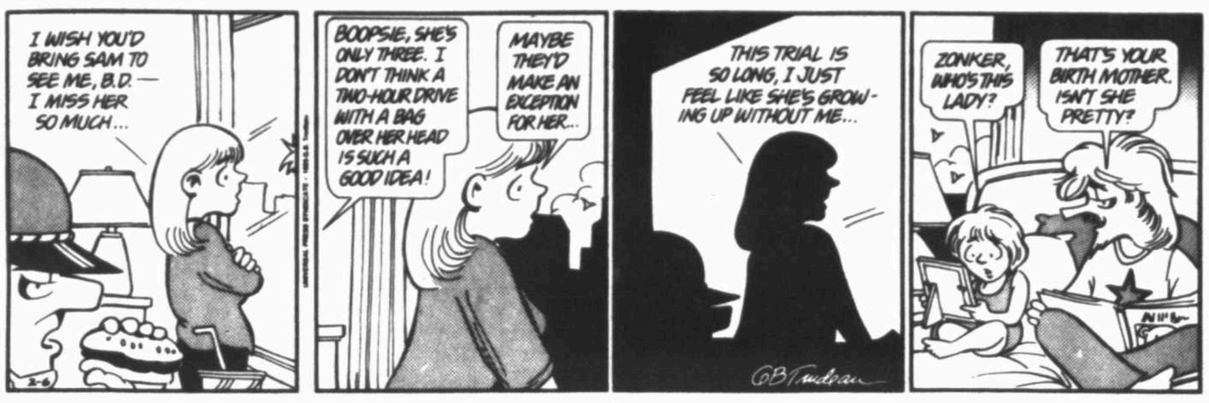

A - If you overcall one spade, the auction may be at the four-level before it gets back to you. Now you will have to go to the five-level to show your second suit. If, instead, you overcall two clubs now, you will be able to compete in spades next without unduly misrepresenting the quality and length of your suits. Two clubs gets our vote.

Director of 'Before Sunrise' made up scenes on spot, co-star Hawke says

PITTSBURGH — Ethan Hawke said director Richard Linklater made some scenes up as he went along in "Before Sunrise."

Director made up some scenes co-star Ethan Hawke says.

Hawke, who co-stars with Julie Delpy as lovestruck travelers in the new movie, said Linklater honed his ideas for the film during a four-week rehearsal in Vienna, Austria, where the action takes place.

"There were a lot of things where Rick would say in the script, 'Scene 17, funny scene where Ethan and Julie meet up with a Viennese local,' and we didn't know what that would be.

"And then Rick would meet these weird guys who were in a play and Rick would say, 'Why don't you come be in this movie and hand out fliers for your play?' There were a lot of scenes like that.

"It was mostly scripted improv. We would improvise, talk about it and Rick would go home and write a scene."

NASHVILLE, Tenn.— Country singer Lorrie Morgan says that even though husband Keith Whitley died of alcohol poisoning, she never saw him drink.

Lorrie Morgan says she never saw her husband drink.

"I knew things were wrong when I didn't hear from him or if he was late coming home. He would show up at the house, not like falling down drunk, but I would know that he had been drinking," Morgan says in an interview to be broadcast Wednesday on cable TV's The Nashville Network.

"We didn't have liquor in the house. He would keep it somewhere I didn't know where it was."

Whitley, also a singer, died of an accidental overdose of alcohol in 1989 at age 33.

Morgan, whose hits include "What Part of No" and "Dear Me," was a co-host of last week's American Music Awards.

SANTA ANA, Calif. — No cameras were rolling as soap star Deirdre Hall tearfully recounted how she loaned all her money to her cancer-stricken therapist.

The "Days of Our Lives" star was in Orange County Superior Court to reclaim the $800,000 that George Barkouras got before his death in January 1992. "That was all the money I had," the actress testified Friday.

Hall, who paid for Barkouras' advice from 1982 through 1991 and says the loan was her way to help in his battle with cancer, is suing his family and former associates.

"I think everybody around Dr. Barkouras was dedicated to his recovery, his peace of mind and his comfort," she said. "I don't think anyone who knew him would have done less than I did."

VANCOUVER — Marriage is like milk to Ray Charles.

"Milk is a great drink but not everybody can drink it," he says. "It's the same with marriage. Marriage is a great institution. I have tried it but I cannot handle it."

Marriage is like milk to 64-year-old Ray Charles.

Charles, who acknowledges nine children by seven different women, was married twice. "I figure that was enough," he says. "I don't want to give anyone else any more misery."

The 64-year-old Charles, now single, says his work is his life and that can be pretty hard to take.

"I'm not the kind of man who can take my wife with me everywhere I go," he says. "I cannot stand the pressure of the two things, making sure that she is this and that. You're too busy and your wife gets lonely, it can create havoc unless a person really understands."

Charles will make his annual appearance Saturday on the Variety Club Telethon in Vancouver.
