Diet Helps Prisoner Flee Jail

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, Colo. (UPI) — Two doctors said Monday a hitchhiker they helped near Thompson, Utah, fit the description of Theodore Bundy, a convicted kidnapper and accused murderer who escaped from jail by dieting until he could slip through a hole in the ceiling of his cell.

Bundy, due to go on trial Jan. 9 for the 1975 slaying of a Michigan nurse, escaped from the Garfield County Jail Friday or Saturday.

Escaped Through Hole

Officials said he escaped by pulling himself through a ceiling hole that had been cut to accommodate a light fixture. He maneuvered 30 feet through an 18-inch high crawl space, dropping down into an unoccupied jailer's apartment and walking out the jailer's apartment door.

Dr. Dorr Burns of Grand Junction, Colo., said he saw the hitchhiker, who claimed to be out of gas, on U.S. 50 Saturday. Burns said he and his doctor companion drove the man to Thompson, Utah, where the man purchased gas. The pair then returned the man to his car.

Incident Reported Late

Burns said he did not report the incident until Sunday when he returned to Grand Junction, heard Bundy had escaped and noticed the description fit the hitchhiker.

The only other lead investigators have had in the three-day search for the former Utah law student was a scent dogs trailed to the hot springs pool in Glenwood Springs, Colo., but the scent vanished at the site.

Garfield County Undersheriff Robert Hart said Bundy apparently planned the escape shortly after arriving at the jail in April because he began losing weight. Hart said Bundy had dropped from 170 pounds to 140.

Earlier Escape

Bundy had been transferred from the Aspen jail because of an escape last summer. He had leaped from a second-story courtroom window during a hearing recess, but was recaptured six days later.

"He had lost a lot of weight. And in the last few days he was here he claimed he was feeling poorly and didn't eat breakfast. That caused him to lose more weight," said Hart.

"The weight loss became noticeable last summer. It is possible that he was losing weight for the escape. It certainly wasn't the food here. It is so good that some of the inmates come back for it," said Hart.

Bulletin Issued

Law officers throughout Colorado are searching for Bundy, Hart said. An all points bulletin has been issued and helicopters have been patroling the Utah-Colorado border.

Bundy, charged with firstdegree murder in the death of Caryn Campbell of Dearborn, Mich., was granted a change of venue to Colorado Springs, Colo.. because ofnpretrail publicity.

The former Washington state resident had been serving a 1-15 year term in the Utah State Prison for kidnapping before being sent to Colorado to stand trial.

PINT-SIZED STRIKER — Three month-old Cameron Dockery isn't quite sure what it's all about, but if Daddy says it's right, then he's all for it. The toddler is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Dockery of Whitharral. The Dockerys are farmers and strongly support strike efforts by American Agriculture members, although Dockery said prior commitments will prevent him from joining in today's planned tractorcade here around Loop 289. Tractorcade Rolls Today

OFF-DUTY city policemen will be called to work today as striking American Agriculture farmers plan to bring the second tractorcade through Lubbock in less than two weeks.

A police department spokesman said many off-duty officers would be called in to assist with traffic control and any problems that might arise from the striking group's activities.

American Agriculture farmers are scheduled to begin rolling toward the city about 8 a.m. today to form a "bumper to bumper" chain around Loop 289 in what they call a "show of strength."

Farmers farther north will begin rolling their tractors toward Oklahoma City along I-40 about the same time, but strike leaders have indicated throughout the planning stages that these sessions would not be violent.

Later today, 50-60 cropdusting planes are scheduled to fly over the city in support of the farmers' movement. That activity should come about 1:30 p.m. or 2 p.m., just after striking farmers travel from Loop 289 to MacKenzie Park for lunch, leaders said.

Strike leaders reportedly have asked striking farmers in their groups to honor agreements not to blockade or otherwise interfere with Lubbock businesses after the organized movement activities are over about 2:30 p.m. today.

The encirclement of Lubbock is billed as a "show of strength" by strike leaders because they say it should show agriculture secretary Bob Bergland and the nation's governors exactly how much support the farmers command — support that could become politically oriented, they claim.

On Jan. 6, several South Plains farmers will attend the Governor's Conference at Omaha, Neb., where American Agriculture officials from all 50 states are expected to attend to confer with the nation's governors and Bergland.

Some farmers, however, say they will not attend the meeting unless Bergland withdraws invitations he extended to several other farm groups to attend the same meeting.

Slow Warming Trend Due To Begin Today

A-J News Services

WARMER temperatures will dominate the area today as a large high pressure system slowly moves out of the region.

The slow warming trend will bring today's high in the lower 50s and the low tonight near 32, considerably warmer than Monday's chilly 18 degree low.

Only a trace of snow blanketed the Hub City Monday, but forecasters predict no snow or precipitation for Lubbock and the South Plains through Wednesday.

Winds today will be southwest 15 to 20 miles per hour and gusty, decreasing to 10 to 15 mph by tonight.

The last large area of snow moved out of Northwest Texas early Monday leaving amounts ranging from two inches in the Panhandle to one inchacross most of the South Plains.

Across the nation snow swept from the Midwest to the Northeast Monday and arctic cold brought chills from the northlands to the Gulf Coast.

Temperatures in Lubbock late Monday night had dipped to the mid-20s.

Six inches of new snow piled up in Rome, N.Y., and a 6-inch blanket of snow covered portions of Rhode Island. Portions of northeastern Ohio also reported 6-inch snowfalls. Four inches of snow hit Albany, N.Y., and Dubois, Pa., and 3 inches piled up in the Massachusetts cities of Worcester and South Weymouth.

Snow caused travel problems in New York City, including a 6-car pileup on the Queensboro bridge, which connects the boroughs of Queens and Manhattan. Snow also was blamed for a 20-car pileup on the Hutchinson River Parkway in Westchester County, N.Y.

Speed Limit Lowered

In New Jersey, state police lowered the speed limit to 35 mph along the length of the New Jersey Turnpike as maintenance crews tried to clear the highway.

Snow also swept over the Great Lakes and the upper Mississippi Valley.

Temperatures near or below zero were common Monday from eastern Washington into the northern and central Rockies and over much of the Midwest.

Wind gusts of 20 to 30 mph whipped up blinding clouds of snow in parts of the Great Lakes and piled snow into drifts. The strong winds also pushed the wind chill index to arctic depths.

More Snow Forecast

Travel advisories were in effect Monday for portions of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and Ohio and up to five inches of new snow was forecast for some areas.

Cold weather dipped as far south as the Gulf Coast and temperatures dipped near freezing or below in much of Dixie. However, there were no reports of crop damage.

Snow fell in Dallas and Houston. Freezing rain and sleet hit portions of Louisiana and southern Texas.

Violence Erupts In Coal Dispute

By United Press International

Two explosions in the Kentucky coalfields during the New Year's holiday may have signaled the resumption of violence in the four-week-old United Mine Workers strike by union members seeking to shut down non-UMW operations.

The explosions damaged the trailer home of a non-union miner employed by the Stearns Coal Co. and wrecked six pieces of heavy equipment at a non-union strip mine in Martin County, authorities said.

No one was injured in the blasts. Authorities refused to speculate whether the blast were related to the UMW strike.

Moonshine Business Moans From Pain Of Economic Hangover

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal "revenooers" report that changing times gave the moonshine industry a hangover in 1977.

Backwoods stills fell on such hard times last year that federal tax agents raided only 481, a far cry from 6,000 raids a year a decade ago.

Changing tastes are a big factor in the decline of moonshine, said the governmental Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in a year-end report.

The agency said "almost every sample of moonshine tested contains lead poisons ... For many people it takes a strong will and stomach to tolerate the paint-thinner odor and taste of moonshine."

Inflation Also Factor

Inflation too has hit "mountain dew," which has to compete in price with legal whiskey, said Rex Davis, bureau director.

"Americans have turned away from moonshine," he said.

Davis also credited increased effectiveness of law enforcement in cracking down on moonshine and said that with tougher juries convicting about 90 percent of indicted moonshiners, "the days of treating the moonshiner lightly are long over."

He gave this breakdown by state for stills seized in 1976 and 1977: Alabama 134, 139; Florida 3, 2; Georgia 138, 109; Mississippi 48, 33; North Carolina 151, 81; South Carolina 58, 24; Tennessee 29, 18, and Virginia 30, 52. A few stills were seized in other states.

Davis did not say whether the moonshine trade has converted to metric measure.

Bottle Sizes Change

But buyers of more conventional alcoholic beverages will find a greater variety of bottle sizes available this year, Davis reported.

By the end of 1978 all wine bottled for sale in the United States will be in seven metric sizes up to three liters, about four-fifths of a gallon.

Conversion of distilled spirits to metric standards will be completed by Jan. 1, 1980.

Davis also promised new wine labeling regulations early this year to identify bottlers and clarify the use of brand names.

Bombs Defused At Egyptian Embassy Site

BONN, West Germany (UPI) — Two powerful time bombs were discovered and defused Monday only two minutes before they were set to explode at the Egyptian embassy in Bonn, police said.

A police spokesman said an embassy official found a plastic bag containing the two explosive devices weighing two pounds each at 11:58 a.m. (4:58 a.m. CST) — exactly two minutes before they were set to go off at noon.

The spokesman said the bag containing the time bombs apparently was hurled over the fence lining the embassy premises at Kronprinzen Street in the Bonn suburb of Bad Godesberg.

The bombs were found only six feet from the embassy building in a bag marked with Cyrillic lettering, such as used in Russian, Bulgarian and other Slavic languages, police said.

The embassy building and the homes of embassy officials were searched but no more explosives were found, the spokesman said.

Police asked explosive experts from the Federal Criminal Police Office and officers from the crack Federal Frontier Protection Force to help in the investigation and search for those responsible.

Holiday Traffic Deaths Hit 284

By United Press International

THE NEW YEAR'S weekend death toll–bolstered by the flood of homeward-bound motorists–surged to the 284 mark at 9:30 p.m. Monday, nearing the National Safety Council's preholiday projection of between 300 and 400 persons.

Texas reported 23 deaths, California had 31 and Florida counted 20. New Mexico reported 13 deaths on highways.

Recorder Picks Up Complaint

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — President Carter privately warned Monday he would send a "cold and very blunt" letter protesting India's intransigence on nuclear safeguards, but then told a cheering Parliament he will sell India more enriched uranium.

Spokesmen for Carter and Indian Prime Minister Morarji Desai sought to gloss over the clash between the two leaders. A reporter's tape recorder caught Carter's whispered complaints to Secretary of State Cyrus Vance about Desai's refusal to sign a nuclear nonproliferation treaty.

White House aides, however, clearly were embarrassed that Carter's rift with Desai unwittingly became public. The bobble marred an otherwise warm, poignant visit.

Saudi Arabia Next

Carter ends his two-day stay in India Tuesday, flying to Saudi Arabia, then to Aswan, Egypt, for a meeting Wednesday with Anwar Sadat.

In Cairo, Egyptian sources said the key question of a Palestinian homeland will dominate the two hours of talks between Sadat and Carter. Sadat was upset by Carter's stand against a separate homeland for the refugees, and the American president will try to smooth things over.

The conference will be held in a special lounge at the Aswan airport, so the no time is wasted.

Whispered Remark Heard

As Carter and Desai sat across a round table in Rashtrapati Bhavan, the 340-room presidential palace, Carter whispered to Vance that the prime minister had been "pretty adamant about the nuclear fuel thing."

"I told him I would authorize transfer of fuel now ... just didn't seem to make an impression on him," Carter said.

"When we get back, I think we ought to write him another letter, just cold and very blunt."

But seven hours later, Carter stood under a huge portrait of Mohandas Gandhi, the father of modern India, and told Parliament the United States will ship nuclear fuel for India's Tarapur reactor.

Members greeted his 30minute speech with unrestrained pleasure, interrupting 26 times with applause.

Treaty "Discriminatory"

India steadfastly has refused to accept international safeguards on nuclear technology, claiming the nonproliferation treaty is discriminatory. Desai told Carter that India has no interest in nuclear weapons, but does not want to sign anything that might limit its development of peaceful nuclear energy.

At the previous stop on his seven-nation, nine-day tour, Carter agreed to sell Iran six to eight nuclear reactors — again, "strictly for peaceful purposes." The Shah agreed to international nuclear safeguards.

The administration supports a bill expected to pass Congress early this year setting certain restrictions and conditions on U.S. export of nuclear material and technology.

Indian Foreign Secretary Jagat Mehta, asked what effect the new legislation might have on Carter's promised sale, replied: "Dialogue on this question will continue."

Reporters were present for the first few moments of Carter's meeting with Desai. But Carter was unaware a reporter's tape recorder was attached to a boom microphone.

Time Zones Give Carter Problems With Sleeping

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — President Carter, who normally has little trouble sleeping at night, is having a bit of a problem adjusting to changing time zones.

Carter found one solution in the early hours Monday morning when he awoke, couldn't go back to sleep, and picked up the "Bhagavad Gita," a book of sacred Hindu writings.

He read for an hour or two, he said, and found the book "really an exciting thing." Then he went back to sleep.

The president, who on occasion reads the Bible in Spanish, read the Hindu book in an English translation.

Since he left Washington Thursday morning, Carter has visited three countries — Poland, Iran, and now India. Each is in a different time zone.

"Ordinarily I don't wake up in the night, but we've changed time zones," said Carter, who reported after his only other foreign travel in 1977, a trip to Europe, that he had not experienced jet lag and had had no problem falling asleep.

Carter said he and his wife, staying in the 340-room Rashtrapati Bhavan, an elegant palace built 50 years ago by the British for their viceroy, went to sleep Sunday night at about 9 p.m. That would be 10:30 a.m. in Washington.

Although Air Force One is equipped with a bedroom for the president, Carter has had little chance to sleep in it, using flight time for studying about upcoming stops.

He talked about the sleep problem with Indian Prime Minister Morarji Desai, thumbing a copy of the book while he spoke.

The book in 700 stanzas tells the story of an epic battle that took place near New Delhi, offering condensed advice on all aspects of life.

"The explanation for the battle is quite interesting," Carter told the 81-year-old Desai. "It demonstrates the unimportance of the length of physical life."

Later, Carter touched down on "American soil" when he visited the U.S. Embassy here, shook hands with staff members and their families, and confided that he and his wife were "homesick for Amy," their 10-year-old daughter.

Carter presented Desai with a two-volume set of the works of the American writer Henry Thoreau. The Indians are

Chronicle Describes Ancient Earthquake

HONG KONG (UPI) — The Bamboo Chronicles, which record the earliest history of China, tell of the day more than 3,800 years ago when the rivers boiled and the mountains crumbled.

People offered sacrifices to appease the angry gods who had caused the earth to shake so violently.

What the chronicles provide is a description of the world's first recorded earthquake, a severe temblor that struck in 1831 B. C. in the region of China's most sacred mountain, Mt. Tai in what is now Shantung Province.

Four centuries later, China began a systematic recording of earthquakes, which provide its present-day seismologists with invaluable data for one of their most important projects — prediction of earthqukes.

For centuries, Chinese farmers had many methods of telling when a quake was imminent; it has only been for the last decade that seismologists have been engaged in systematic prediction work.

"A great deal of work has been done in a little over 10 years and preliminary achievements have been made," Vice Premier Li Hsien-nien said at a national seismology conference held in Peking last month.

In this short span, three major quakes were forecast in sufficient time to evacuate people and take other measures to reduce damage and loss of life. Two of these occurred in 1976 in southwest China.

A third major quake in 1976, possibly the most destructive in history, was not detected in advance and the Communist Party newspaper blamed this on political interference. This was the quake centered at Tangshan, a city of more than one million, located about 100 miles southeast of Peking. Some estimates put the death toll at more than 655,000 with more than 700,000 injured.

An editorial published by the People's Daily in connection with the December conference said radicals then in power "ignored the information" provided in advance, "thus severely interfering with and sabotaging the surveillance and forecasting of the Tangshan quake — a crime that cannot be pardoned."

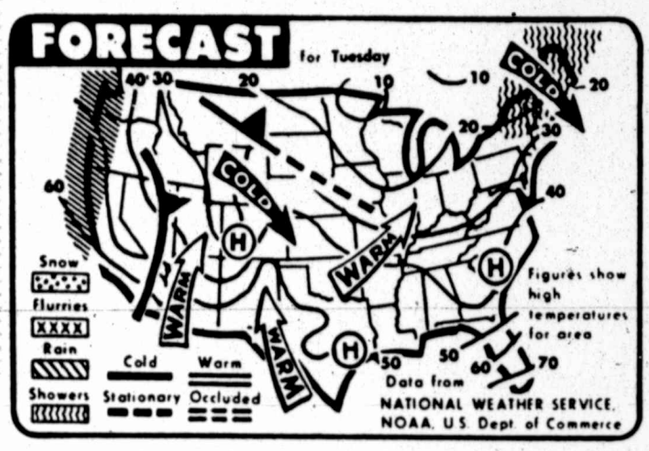

The editorial supported the conference decision to expand the already large network of detection stations.

"All localities must set up backbone detection and reporting stations with the emphasis on schools, factories and mines, and distribute the stations well," it said.

These stations provide seismologists with the same kind of information used by farmers for centuries: the strange behavior of animals and changes in streams and wells or other of the earth's physical features. Used along with more scientific data, this information can help forecast quakes.

"In overcoming the difficulty in forecasting earthquakes, we must put scientific research ahead of everything else. For thousands of years our ancestors have handed down to us many earthquake records but none on their experiences in predicting" on a scientific basis, the editorial said.

"We must make continuous efforts to improve the research, design and production of seismic instruments, strive to modernize observation techniques and keep an ear to the ground."

Two-Year Drought Has Towns Living On Edge Of Disaster

SERRINHA, Brazil (UPI) — The mayor of Serrinha scuffed the toe of his boot in the thin crust of dried mud overlaying the deep dust of the rural airstrip.

"Look here," he said, mashing a piece of the hardpan into a gray powder between thumb and forefinger. "It rained a bit yesterday, but not enough to sink in before the sun came out and dried it up.

"I planted soybeans last year... Then it didn't rain.

Serrinha, lying 90 miles west of the Bahia state capital of Salvador on the Atlantic coast, is one of bundreds of small cities and towns living on the edge of disaster in an area twice the size of California on the northeast shoulder of Brazil. This region is called the Sertao.

Sertao has variously been taken to mean "backlands", "scrublands," "backwoods," "bush" or simply "interior," but it has no translation. Sometimes it is green. But mostly it is a flat gray tableland swimming in the tropical heat, its parched surface dotted with cactus and bristly shrubs known as "catinga."

It is a country rich in legend and tradition, a land of blood feuds and bandits, of unspeakable crimes and dark romances, of mystery and terrible hardship. Its mixed-race population of whites, blacks and Indians are a hard people, raised on drought, hunger and poverty, accustomed to survival in a hostile environment.

The Sertao's cruelties are one reason why the Northeast is Brazil's most backward region, but its folklore also makes it a wellspring of Brazilian culture and literary inspiration.

Euclides da Cunha's epic historical novel, "Rebellion in the Backlands," takes place 150 miles north of Serrinha, in the Sertao town of Canudos, where some 25,000 virtually unarmed, starving followers of a fanatical holy man called Anthony the Counseler defied the Brazilian government for two years before a 4,000-man army backed by artillery razed the town and killed its defenders in 1897.

The Sertao also sired "Gabriela," "Tereza Batista" and others of the bold and beautiful heroines that inhabit the novels of Bahia Jorge Amado, Brazil's best-known living writer.

But for the people of the Sertao, 334,880 square miles of territory in ten different Brazilian states, life is seldom bold and beautiful. Most of the time it is a continuing struggle against the periodic droughts that strike without warning.

Brazil's geographers describe the Sertao as "semi-arid," and the region's moderate 25-inches-per-year average rainfall hardly seems cause for alarm. But the geographers also point out that the problem is not how much, but when. In many parts of the Sertao the rain all falls in one or two months to run off or evaporate before the land can absorb it.

The mayor of Serrinha, Aloisio Carneiro da Silva, says his rainy season is supposed to last from April to July with additional showers coming between October and January. In other parts of the Sertao the "season" is different, but everywhere in the Sertao there is always a possibility that, as in Serrinha, there will be no season.

The 1975-77 drought in Serrinha and the neighboring towns of Teofilandia, Ixu and Araxi, has destroyed money-making sisal crops, ruined corn, bean and manioc harvests, killed livestock and left a good part of the area's 70,000 inhabitants destitute.

Children two and three years old, suffering from malnutrition, couldn't walk, couldn't talk. Some had permanent brain damage, many others had retarded motor skills and growth impairment. Heads of household, with no crops to harvest, traveled to Salvador to take industrial jobs to support their families until Serrinha's next planting season.

"We had drought in 1968 the last time," said one Serrinha farmer. "It was bad, but not as bad as this. These last two years, the economy just evaporated."

For four centuries the primary solution to drought in the Sertao has been migration by its inhabitants, first to the sugar plantations that dominated the thin strip of fertile, moist tropical farmland along the Northeast coast and more recently to the shantytown slums of the region's main cities — Salvador, Recife, Natal, Fortaleza and Joao Pessoa.

The Brazilian legion for Assistance also brought food supplements to children under age three and to nursing and pregnant women from families with incomes of less than $300 a month.

Rosalynn Carter Visits Indian Children's Center

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — Rosalynn Carter ate a vegetarian lunch of pomegranate juice, onion quiche and strawberry mousse Monday, and visited a community center where she hugged and kissed the children of Indian untouchables.

Mrs. Carter, visibly moved by the affection shown by children at the community center run by the local city government, said, "We have the same kind of problems in regard to child welfare and community development as your country."

Wearing a blue-and-white striped skirt, a peacock blue blouse and a blue blazer, Mrs. Carter was delighted by songs and dances performed by the children, age 2 to 14.

She repeatedly kissed the smaller ones and lifted them for television camers. She helped model clay and paint in watercolors.

At one point, she tried to take a rubber ball from an 18-month-old boy, whose mother works as a day laborer at a nearby construction project. When the child refused, she kissed and hugged him.

Untouchables make up one fifth of India's 620 million people. Lowest of the four castes of the Hindu religion, they sweep roads, clean latrines and collect the carcasses of dead animals. Even their shadow falling on a person of higher caste is thought defiling.

Prem Latha, 2, placed a tilak — red mark — on Mrs. Carter's forehead, while Vijay Kumar, gave her a garland of chrysanthemums. Conch shells were blown in the background, a sign of good luck in India.

At the Hindu-style vegetarian lunch, Mrs. Carter agreed with a number of outstanding Indian women that there is a need to improve the status of women in both nations.

Mrs. Carter shook her head in sympathy and took notes when the women experts told her of the problems of infant mortality and the inadequacy of rural health care in India.

When informed that the lot of Indian women has improved, she smiled and said, "Of course, we're working on that pretty hard at home, too."

Among the guests was Mrs. Vijayalaksmi Pandit, sister of the late Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and aunt of former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. She also served as president of the U.N. General Assembly.

Mrs. Carter drank fresh squeezed pomegranate juice, saying, "I've never tasted it before, even though we have a pomegranate tree in my yard at home."

The menu included carrot soup, made with the special red-tinged carrots of India and served hot with dill and melba toast: imaam beyaldi — stuffed small eggplant, baked with oil, black olives, currants and onions; onion quiche, a spinach ring filled with mushroom sauce, rice pilaf with pistachio nuts and tiny pieces of carrot and onion; cheese and peas curry; and for dessert, strawberry mousse with strawberry sauce.

Horse, Human Motel For Sale

REDMOND, Ore. (UPI) — Howard and Catherine Miller have decided to sell their horse-and-human motel and return to the warm winters of Southern California.

The Millers purchased the Bell Air Motel about a year ago and found a four-stall stable out back that was rarely used. The had business cards printed up that read "Let your horse rest while you sleep."

"Everyone just laughed," Miller recalled.

But the former Anaheim, Calif., residents said they soon found a ready market, charging people $12 a night and $4 for a horse. Stallions cost $6 because they are more rambunctious, the Millers said.

The Millers say they want to return to California because of the weather.

No Comment On Energy By Public

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Despite some fears that the public would be angered if Congress failed to reach an energy agreement in 1977, the energy issue seems to have sparked little interest over the holidays.

In telephone interviews with a number of congressmen working on the House-Senate energy conference committee, UPI found the topic had been put "on a back burner" for the time being.

The conferees broke up Christmas week without finishing work on the energy package and some of them said they feared their constituents would justifiably take them to task for the failure.

Sen. John Durkin, D-N.H., said, "Even though all the polls show energy as by far the major concern, it has not been reflected here (in New Hampshire). Probably less than 10 percent of our mail deals with it."

Rep. Daniel Rostenkowski, DIll., said his constituents are not too stirred up on the issue and seem to have put it "on a back burner."

Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, said, "Amazingly, my mail does not indicate too much concern about the energy situation. I suppose this is because of the holiday rush. I am getting more communications on the Panama Canal."

Matsunaga said there is some sentiment to have Congress enact the three energy bills conferees have mostly completed — energy conservation, industrial conversion to coal, and utility rate changes. He said that would leave a different climate for completion of the two remaining issues — natural gas pricing and energy taxation.

Rep. Frank Horton, R-N.Y., said, "There isn't a strong feeling of what the energy problem is on the part of the average person. The average guy isn't concerned because he thinks there isn't a problem ... I don't know why people aren't concerned. I guess they have other things to think about. It's very frustrating..."

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., has had no mail on energy since the conference broke up, his office said.

Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., said the conferees probably will have a complete energy program ready by February. The original Carter package was "one of the most vomplex single recommendations made to a Congress in modern times," he said and "the president may have been overly ambitious: maybe he overloaded the system a little bit by trying to achieve all sorts of goals and campaign promises in his first year."

IN A FLAMING PANIC — Engulfed in flames, Daniel Yoder, 24, pushes his way through the crowd attending the Dallas Cowboys-Minnesota Vikings playoff game in Texas Stadium. Yoder suffered second degree burns on his legs and neck Sunday night when the snowman costume he was wearing caught fire. Fans wrestled Yoder to the ground and extinguished the flames. He is listed in fair condition in a Dallas hospital. The cause of the fire has not been officially determined.(Copyright: Paul Iverson — The Dallas Times Herald, Jan. 1, 1978 — AP Laserphoto)

Burning Spectator Incident Probed

IRVING (AP) — There was still no official comment Monday from investigating agencies on how a spectator caught fire during the National Football Conference championship game between Dallas and Minnesota.

Meanwhile, Dan Yoder, the snowman who became a human torch, remained in fair condition Monday at Parkland Hospital with second degree burns on his legs and neck.

Yoder, 24, was clad in a snowman costume he rented for a New Year's Eve celebration. As he started down an aisle, his costume suddenly caught fire.

The source of the blaze was believed to have come from a can of jell-like fuel used by a vendor to heat food.

Quick-thinking fans finally managed to subdue Yoder, who had panicked, and smothered the flames with the blankets they were using to warm themselves in the freezing temperatures.

The whole scene was captured by national television cameras. Game commentators had first thought a blanket had caught fire.

An Irving fire department spokesman said a report of the investigation would not be released before today since Monday was a holiday.

However, Irving police spokesman John Sweeny said fire investigators had talked with four witnesses and concluded that Yoder bumped into a stadium vendor using the can of sterno.

However, when Sweeny was told that stadium officials denied their vendors carried canned heat, he checked again with the fire department and told The Associated Press that "the matter is still under investigation. All we have is hearsay right now."

There were conflicting reports from fans. Some said a vendor had the liquid fuel. Others said a fan had it.

Clarence Williams of Dallas, sitting near Yoder, said, "He started running up the steps. He ran right into me. I didn't realize he was on fire, suddenly he just burst into flames. I tried to tackle him, then people started throwing blankets on him.

Yoder's female companion, Madeline Gray, 21, said Yoder had just left his seat in the stands behind the Vikings with the intentions of vaulting the rail to the field "to dance with the Cowboy cheerleaders in his snowman costume covered with Cowboy buttons."

Elderly May Receive Lower Mail Rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service is investigating two organizations that represent 11 million elderly Americans to see if they qualify for millions of dollars per year in lower mail rates.

The investigation has been launched into the American Association of Retired Persons, the largest group of elderly persons in the country, and the National Retired Teachers Association, said Arthur S. Cahn, assistant general counsel of the Postal Service.

It seeks to determine whether their relationship with Colonial Penn Group Inc., which sells insurance and travel services endorsed by the two associations, disqualifies them from getting non-profit mail rates.

If the Postal Service finds that the associations are used as a front for a profit-making company, the groups could lose their non-profit permits. The organizations are heavy mail users, sending monthly magazines and numerous other mailings to their members.

Cahn ordered the investigation in a memo that he allowed The Associated Press to copy. It said the relationship between the two non-profit organizations and the profit-making company "appears to be less than arms length business dealings."

Cyril F. Brickfield, executive director of both associations, said the groups endorse Colonial Penn insurance and other services "because we have faith in their products and know they are good for our members. They offered life insurance for older people before anyone else would.

"We feel secure and responsible in dealing with an organization like Colonial Penn," he said in an interview.

The two groups represent 11.3 million members, with 568,000 in the National Retired Teachers Association and the rest in the American Association of Retired Persons. They share the same administrative staff and Washington headquarters building.

"It appears that the services provided to the membership of the associations represent in excess of 80 percent of the total business of the enterprises comprising the Colonial Penn Group," Cahn's memo said.

"We specifically question whether any of the activities engaged in by NRTA-AARP are subsidized by the Colonial Penn Group in order to promote its own business growth," the memo said.

The memo continued that Colonial Penn makes large payments to the associations which "greatly exceed any costs incurred by the associations in marketing and administering the services of the Colonial Penn Group.

"We are specially interested in determining why Colonial Penn has concentrated its marketing strategy on providing services to the members of NRTA-AARP."

In an interview, Cahn said, "We're trying to track down whether the associations are being used primarily as marketing agents for an insurance company. If they are, then they are not entitled to the non-profit rate."

The associations' voluminous responses to Postal Service questions have filled several boxes. A decision on the matter is not expected for at least several months.

The difference between non-profit and regular mail rates is substantial. For third class, the non-profit rate is 2.1 cents per piece, compared to 7.5 cents for regular third class. Second class rates depend on the weight of the item and how far it is sent, but there is a substantial difference between non-profit and regular rates. Even before the Postal Service investigation, the relationship between the non-profit associations and the for-profit company had been called into question.

A pending suit in New York state charges that the associations serve as "a merchandising showcase" for Colonial Penn.

Despite Detente Trade With Red Nations Declining

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Despite detente and the overall growth of U.S. foreign trade, the nation's commerce with communist countries declined in 1977, according to a special economic report prepared by the State Department.

The United States ranks as the fourth largest NATO trader with communist countries. But since 1973, the first year included in the report, U.S. trade with those countries has never exceeded 2.2 percent of its total foreign trade.

The study said that between January and August of this year, compared with the same period in 1976, '&there was a downward trend" in U.S. trade with all communist nations, especially for exports.

Imports from the communist world were $1.87 billion during those eight months (2.4 percent of total imports), down from $2.65 billion (3.5 percent) in January-August 1976.

Exports to communist nations totaled $791.4 million during January-August (0.8 percent of total U.S. exports), compared with $699 million (0.9 percent).

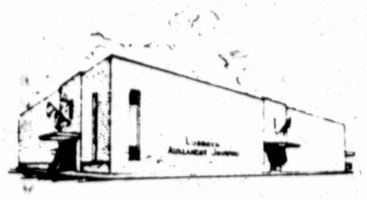

In 1976, the last full year included in the report, U.S. imports from the communist countries amounted to about $1.1 billion and U.S. exports to them $3.6 billion. Of the exports, more the $2.3 billion went to the Soviet Union.

Other communist countries listed in the report are China, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Albania, Vietnam, North Korea, Mongolia, and Cuba.

AN EDITORIAL:

Making Up Is The Hard Part

WE KNOW all about the Cairo conference (how could we avoid it?).

And if there's a question about the Geneva talks, it's probably which of those semi-permanent floating consultations are we talking about: Mideast, strategic arms, nuclear tests, or chemical and radiological weapons?

Now you take the Paris conference... Yes, indeed, there is a Paris conference. It began last May. The participants are the U.S. and Vietnam. The subject is peace.

It's was back in brief session just long enough to attract some notice from the press but virtually none from the public.

NOT THAT there was any measure of progress to report, you understand. Yes, the Vietnamese will send scientific representatives to a laboratory in Hawaii to study U.S. Defense Department techniques in identifying the remains of Americans missing in action.

And, yes, the conferees did agree to meet again at a later but, uh, unspecified date.

Beyond the agreement of the parties to talk to each other at all, the major achievement has been the admission of the Hanoi regime to the UN, in fulfillment of the U.S. pledge at the opening of the talks to drop its opposition to Vietnamese membership.

BUT THE basic differences between the two parties have if anything hardened since face-to-face negotiations began.

On the Washington side, there is the demand for a complete accounting by Hanoi for Americans still listed as missing.

For Hanoi, the key points are postwar economic reconstruction aid—which, among other things, it hypocritically claims would speed its search of the countryside for missing Americans—and the U.S. economic embargo of Vietnam.

THE AID ISSUE is the key one. Acknowledgement that $3.25 billion in reconstruction funds was at least discussed at the original 1973 Paris negotiations comes from no less an authority than ex-Sec. of State Henry Kissinger.

But he more recently said he found it absurd that Hanoi should take the position that it had any "right" to aid.

Anyway, it is clear that any reconstruction assistance was and is dependent on congressional approval and tied to the fulfimentersions of the cease-fire.

Except for the families of the American missing, for whom the tragedy of Vietnam can never be marked closed, this final drawn-out chapter of an event that preoccupied us for so long seems of no great matter.

But it does point up one thing about human relations, i.e., that to make peace, not war, as the demonstrators used to chant, is much easier said than done.

AN EDITORIAL:

You Ain't Seen Nothin' Yet

OF COURSE, the Republican Party cares about the problems of us ordinary folks...

If you think otherwise, just keep an eye on your favorite television channel during the next few weeks.

Are you buying a new home? Rep. Robin L. Beard, R-Tenn., will be along shortly with helpful hints on what to look for in a house and how to find a mortgage loan.

Do you worry about what to do in a medical emergency? Then join Rep. Jim Jeffords, R-Vt., for a short televised course on cardio-pulminary resuscitation.

SHOULD HOUSEWIVES be eligible for their own pensions? Tune in when Rep. Paul S. Trible Jr., R-Va., explains his proposal to allow homemakers to set up individual retirement accounts like other workers with no company pension programs.

These and other little vignettes on coping with exigencies of everyday life will be appearing soon in 16 media markets from Sacramento to Hartford, compliments of the National Republican Congressional Committee.

IT'S ALL Part of a $1.5 million image-polishing program designed to lighten the baggage GOP candidates will be lugging into this year's elections.

The campaign committee tested its five-minute "America Today" spots for three weeks last summer in Evansville, Ind., and Cedar Rapids, Iowa, concluding the response justified a nationwide media blitz.

BEFORE-AND-AFTER polling in the test markets indicated viewers were "highly receptive" to the soft-sell GOP ads, according to campaign committee chairman Steven Stockmeyer.

"We found they generated considerable good will for Republicans, and actually helped raise the credibility of all politicians," Stockmeyer reported.

If survey results show this month's series of ads producing similar positive effects on the GOP image, the spots will be shown in additional markets from now until who knows when.

So stay tuned, folks. We ain't seen nothin' yet.

M. STANTON EVANS:

It's Hard To Determine Who's Making Our Laws

WASHINGTON—From time to time, this column has discussed the effort of the United Nations—and the American government—to shut down the Rhodesian Information Office.

Last spring the UN Security Council adopted a resolution barring the international transfer of funds by the "illegal regime" of Ian Smith.

The effect of the resolution, if honored by the United States, would be to close down the Rhodesian Information Office, a tiny outpost of dissenting opinion in our nation's captital.

As many journalists know, the RIO is often the only available source of information on events in Southern Africa apart from the official "Third World" view of Andy Young and the United Nations.

ACCORDINGLY, BACK in June, a group of 17 journalists, myself among them, addressed a letter to President Carter, protesting the UN action as a violation of the public's "right to know" and asking if the Administration meant to follow through on this repressive policy.

At the same period, the U.S. Senate passed a resolution urging a stance of openness toward information offices in our federal city—with explicit emphasis on Rhodesia.

Forty-four members of the House, meantime, addressed a protest to Sec. of State Cyrus Vance.

After this initial flurry, the White House subsided into relative silence on the subject, and the impression prevailed that the Rhodesian Information Office was to be spared from the financial strangulation dictated by the United Nations.

THIS IMPRESSION, however, turned out to be mistaken. It develops that the Carter regime is fully intent on implementing the UN order and has never intended otherwise.

This policy is clearly stated in the reply of the State Department—given six months after the original inquiry—to the letter written in June by the 17 journalists.

In this response, Donald K. Petterson of the Office of Southern Afican Affairs informs us that, "as a party to the United Nations Charter, the United States is obliged to comply with sanctions decisions of the Security Council.

"Authority to implement the sanctions resolutions is provided under the UN Participation Act.

"In coordination with the Department of Treasury, which has responsibility for enforcement of the relevant regulations, the Department of State is considering ways to implement (the UN prohibition)."

IN OTHER WORDS: the UN has spoken, and it is up to the United States to comply. Since the Third World types have decided to silence an information office in the American capital, the American government will dutifully go along with the suppression.

As for freedom of information, Petterson adds, there is really no problem, since the UN-ordered crackdown "will not prevent U.S. citizens from acquiring materials directly from Rhodesia" —which is only 13,000 air-miles from Washington, D.C.

That reply, it seems to me, raises two important, and ominous, questions. One concerns the matter of openness in public discourse, to which the Carter Administration is professedly pledged.

IT IS BY NOW abundantly clear that the administration's openness is pretty much reserved for traveling Marxists—such as Australian correspondent Wilfred Burchett, discussed here recently, or Spanish Communist Santiago Carrillo and does not extend to anti-Communist Rhodesia.

The second question is in a way even more serious, namely: Who is making law in the United States?

Is it the U.S. Congress, one house of which has expressed its clear intent that the Rhodesian Information Office be left alone and allowed to function?

Or is is the Third World dominated United Nations, which has decreed that the office be shut down?

According to Petterson, it is the UN which legislates for us on such matters, up to and including the silencing of dissent on American soil.

Compliments of the area MENSA Society: "If a parachute doesn't open, it is said to be jumping to a conclusion."

Denver City Reader Has Comment On Eagle Case

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

The trial and conviction of three Hill Country ranchers for allegedly killing Golden eagles, brings to my mind two incidents that occurred on my parents' ranch here in Yoakum County about 1919 and to which I was a witness.

The first incident was my finding a very young, live calf that had a large hole eaten in one hip, leaving the ball and socket joint completely bare of flesh and muscle.

Naturally, we were at a loss to understand how a predator could have eaten the flesh away from the bone in such a manner, but the puzzle was soon solved by a second incident.

About a week later, while riding in the same area where the first mutilated calf was found, I saw a black eagle fly up from the ground and rode over to see what it had been eating to find that the eagle's prey was another live calf with long gashes eaten in both hindquarters. The last calf lived but was scarred for life.

While it may be true that eagles do not always kill calves, it is an undeniable fact that they do eat their fill from live calves and leave the helpless animal to die.

If Audubon Society members would examine eagle nests in the sheep and goat country, they would very likely find skulls of lambs and kids where the parent birds had brought them for the young eagles to feed on.

The claim that predatory birds and animals eat only the weak and sick animals, if true, would be more reason than ever to kill the predators to prevent their spread of the disease to healthy animals.

Since it was claimed that 70 eagles have been killed in the area where the ranchers supposedly hunted, it seems that the eagles can hardly be classified as being an endangered species.

Morton Woman Offers Research On Humanism

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

We hear so much about humanism and humanists these days—(the Dec. 9 issue of the University Daily contained the following statement: "Humanists Ideals are consistent with belief in God and the family")—that I decided to check into this humane sounding philosophy.

Following are direct quotes from the Humanist Manifestos I & II.

"Religion humanists regard the Universe as self-existing and not created."

"Religious humanism considers the complete realization of human personality to be the end of man's life and seeks its development and fulfillment in the here and now."

"A socialized and cooperative economic order must be established."

"...We begin with humans not God, nature not deity."

"We need radically new human purposes and goals"

"No deity will save us, we must save ourselves."

"A recognition of an individual's right to euthanasia, and the right to suicide."

"...To move toward the building of a world community"

"...We look to the development of a system of world law and a world order based upon transnational federal government"

I could not find anything about the humanist attitude toward marriage or family. The closest quote to express their philosophy that I could find is the following:

"The right to birth control, abortion and divorce should be recognized."

This is what I learned about humanism and I cannot find anything in it that is consistent with "belief in God and family"!

Reader At Morton Sees Blasphemy In Two Movies

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Saturday night, Dec. 3, 1977, I viewed a television special entitled: "The New Sacreligious Movies". From this television special (on Channel 13) I learned of two movies being produced that in my opinion intend to blaspheme the word of the Bible and expose Jesus as some type of "freak."

One movie, "The Passover Plot," which is already being premiered in England, attempts to show that Jesus of Nazareth plotted his crucifixion as to make it appear that he died on a cross, but in reality did not.

This movie asserts that Jesus drank a narcotic which made him appear to be dead, consequently he arose on the third day, not from the dead, but from a deep sleep. This film exposes Christ as a mere person of deceit and trickery—a "fake."

The second movie, "The Many Faces of Jesus", concerns itself with the sexuality of Jesus of Nazareth. "The Many Faces of Jesus" will show Jesus as a homosexual and a bisexual.

This production exploits Jesus' being as that of a pervert and a deviate, trying to prove that Jesus and God are not one in the same.

This film exemplifies that Jesus is not the Son of the Living God, only that Jesus is sexually deviate and no different from man himself. Here too, Jesus is shown as a "spurious."

If we, as American citizens, allow this type of decay to come into our community, then perhaps we deserve the final destruction of morality that will possibly be the ruination of our country.

According to the ruling of the highest court in our land, it is up to each individual community in deciding whether to show such films. Therefore, I urge Lubbock and the surrounding rural communities to put a stop to this blasphemy.

But now, the time has arrived in which blasphemy will be sold through the purchasing of movie tickets. As moral American citizens we should be willing to say no to the myriad of social decay.

We must set out to change the downgrade course of our society and gird ourselves for positive practical action. We must not be raving reactionaries, however, we must be aware and willing to take a stand.

Levelland Resident Takes Issues With Smoke Rights

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

I would like to comment on an article that appeared in your paper Nov. 30, 1977 about Mr. Rick Arnold and what he had to say about not being able to smoke where and when he wanted to in public places.

He stated he and his wife on a plane trip to Arizona were insulted when there were only four designated seats for smokers and there were eight persons on the plane that wanted to smoke.

He also said he was going to speak out for the silent majority and see if he couldn't get something done through an organization called "PUFF", so smokers could smoke anywhere they wanted to.

I cannot believe that the majority of the American people smoke, when you think of the millions of men, women, you people and little silent children that do not smoke, but yet are forced to breath the smoke many times whether they like it or not.

Let me tell you about a trip that my wife and I made by plane to Houston a few weeks ago.

Our seats were immediately behind the smokers section and we both were sick when we arrived in Houston. No it wasn't air sickness—you see I am a pilot myself and flying does not make me sick.

For the life of me, I could not see the silent majority as smokers when there were 10 to 1 who were not smoking on that plane.

I would like to suggest a bumper sticker and a sign for public places that could not possibly insult a smoker: "Smoking Hurts Others"

If enough people wanted one of these stickers —I as a committee of one would see that they got one. Most smokers, I am convinced, do not realize their smoking hurts others.

J.E. Van Stavern, Rt. 5, Levelland

Curse In Disguise

WASHINGTON GNOMES who are sweating out Carter's $61-billion-in-the-red budget may not believe this, but too much government money can be almost as much trouble as too little. Ask Holland. Or Alaska.

They don't have as much as the Arabs but, thanks to gas and oil bonanzas, the millions are rolling in so fast they have committees sitting around pondering how to spend time.

And still they have economic woes.

In Fairbanks, a pipeline worker is receiving unemployment benefits after years of $1,000-a-week paychecks. And griping about not getting a bigger share of the oil profits "to spend on ourselves."

In Amsterdam, the head of the Dutch Central Bank calls the North Sea gas boom "a curse in disguise."

And Britain and Norway, who are banking their share of the North Sea royalties, are taking notes to be sure they don't make the same mistakes.

What happened to Holland, apparently, is what happens to a lot of sweepstakes winners who suddenly find themselves with a lapful of money: It went on a gigantic spending spree.

ANXIOUS TO USE the extra billion to help its people, the Dutch government turned into Santa Claus. It built roads, subsidized schools, financed hospitals, improved the railroads, made its social-security system one of the best in the world, and paid jobless workers up to 80 per cent of their salary for the first year and 70 per cent for the next two.

Overnight, Dutch citizens were living better than they ever had, with fatter pay, a higher standard of living, and a Dutch-uncle government dedicated to keeping the social benefits coming.

The gas reserves were huge, the guilder was one of the world's strongest currencies, and feeling rich was more fun than worrying about tomorrow.

The only folks who did that were the businessmen, who weren't getting their share of the gas goodies. Not only that, they had to help finance the social programs with taxes and contributions. It was time, they warned, to use some of the money for job-creating capital investment.

NOBODY PAID MUCH attention until recently, when government planners woke up to the fact that things weren't all that hotsy-totsy in Holland.

Business profits have slipped 50 to 75 per cent; unemployment is up to six per cent, which is high for the Dutch.

The strong guilder has made their products too expensive to compete in the export market; and government spending is up to more than 50 per cent of all goods and services produced in the country.

Even with a $2.5 billion surplus, Holland is in trouble.

Bankers accuse the politicians of mortgaging their future on popular give-aways. They say a lot of their problems could have been averted if more money had been spent on private industry in the form of direct grants to big manufacturers and tax incentives to help small businesses.

Belatedly, the government is catching on that it's time to slow down a bit on the lavish spending. But, after all these years of high living, they're afraid it's going to take something like "a catastrophe" to convince the people any thrift is necessary.

This go-slow approach is no more popular in Alaska than it is in Holland. Most folks consider Gov. Jay S. Hammon's warning that the oil won't last forever as anti-growth, anti-development, anti-business miserliness.

"There's a general misconception that Alaska has unlimited funds," he said recently. "The anticipation level is way up there."

The governor admits oil and gas royalties are "huge," but says they are limited and should be used to develop Alaska rather than pay for operating expenses and special-interest programs.

He points out that state expenditures have risen "astronomically" in the past few years, and one of the reasons is that state salaries have gone up 226 per cent in a period in which the cost of living rose 80 per cent.

IN AN $800-MILLION budget, 61 per cent is based on royalties from North Slope-Prudhoe Bay oil. And after an explosion in a pump station last summer, pipeline production has slowed to where the government is looking at a shortfall this year of around $100 million.

What bothers the governor is the way Alaskans are willing to depend on oil income to offset any rise in taxes. Which, without the royalty money, would mean a quadruple hike in income taxes and higher resident taxes.

But there are signs that folks are beginning to catch on. Last year they voted to set up a Permanent Fund, which will get 25 per cent of all gas and oil revenues as sort of a giant savings account.

By 1995, if the estimates are right, the fund will be more than $4 billion which, at six per cent, would mean a pretty good cash flow for the government.

Predictably, labor is agitating for spending the rest on whatever will create jobs; social planners are pushing for housing and family services for impoverished people in underdeveloped areas; businessmen want help for industry; and everybody wants to keep taxes low.

Sounds familiar, doesn't it?

L.M. BOYD:

...Pass It On

ITEM NO. 634B in our Love and War man's file on compulsory matrimony is a report out of Austin where a 76-year-old man and a 60-year-old woman disclosed they had to get married.

House rules at their convalescent home prohibit unwed couples from watching late-night television together. An unendurable deprivation, they felt, evidently. Marriage was the only answer, they said.

Please note, though, there's another item elsewhere our L. and W. man's file that suggests seasoned citizens do not always announce to the world the whole truth about such intimate matters as loneliness and love.

It's not only uncouth but unwise anymore to bet that a blind child can't play softball. Somebody in an outfit called the Telephone Pioneers of America has invented a softball with a built-in beeping mechanism that lets a sightless batter hit by ear, remarkably enough.

If you haven't been married at least nine times, senor, you haven't matched the Love and War record of Mexican bandit chief Pancho Villa.

Air Escape Delayed By Weather

MASERU, Lesotho (AP) — Bad weather in Botswana prevented fugitive South African editor Donald Woods and his family from leaving here Monday and their departure was rescheduled for Tuesday afternoon.

The dissident editor, who is white, escaped from house detention in East London, South Africa, late last week and hitchhiked to Lesotho. He met with Lesotho Prime Minister Chief Lebua Jonathan Monday and was hailed by him as a "brother" and as a "fellow African."

Woods, 43, an outspoken liberal, said he hopes to settle in England or the United States and to devote his exile to ending racial repression in South Africa.

Woods had been under a five-year banning order since October. The order prevented him from being involved with his newspaper, being quoted in the press, leaving East London and from having most visitors without permission.

The chief pilot decided against the 350-mile flight out of Lesotho, which is surrounded by South Africa, because he was not certain the weather would enable him to land in Botswana. If he was forced to land in South Africa, Woods would be arrested, said Capt. Ritchie de Montalk.

Exiled black nationalists wanted in South Africa have flown in and out of Maseru prevously without difficulty.

Jonathan said he was sending his representative on the Woods flight "to ensure their safety under provisons of Lesotho's overflight rights over South Africa."

Lesotho relies on South Africa for electricity and telephone service and for all imports and exports.

More than 200,000 Lesotho citizens work in South Africa. Thousands of South African whites visit Maseru for the gambling, blue movies and interracial sex, forbidden them at home.

Diplomatic sources here said Jonathan welcomes the opportunity to prove he is not a stooge of South Africa.

Election Raises Dilemma For Chileans

SANTIAGO, Chile (UPI) — The call for a national referendum to allow the Chilean people to say whether they support military leader President Gen. Augusto Pinochet has triggered a moral dilemma for a sector of the citizenry and questioned the unity of the armed forces regime.

Analysis

The national vote was called by Pinochet in late December after 96 members of the United Nations condemned his government for violation of human rights.

The vote — the first national election since the 1973 military coup — is scheduled for Jan. 4.

All citizens over 18 will be obliged to vote, including foreign residents living in Chile.

The simple ballot that the people will vote on has only two choices, "yes" if they support Pinochet and "no" if they do not.

Pinochet often has stated that the vote is designed merely to show the Chilean people's rejection of "international aggression" by the United Nations and is not related to the nation's internal affairs.

However, in a highly-politicized nation like Chile, it was inevitable that the simplistic vote against the U.N. would take a deeper meaning.

Most Chileans — whether supporting or against the military regime — consider the U.N. condemnation unfair because the world body has taken no similar actions against other nations where human rights are violated.

For some, to cast a "yes" for Pinochet is considered not only defense of Chile's dignity but also to "reaffirm" the 62-yearold military president's mandate over this country.

A vote against Pinochet, on the other hand, could in effect mean a vote against Chile and for the UN, which is unacceptable to most Chileans.

Well-informed sources in Santiago have indicated that the call for the referendum was seriously questioned not only by those opposed to Pinochet but by two other members of the four-man junta government.

They are Gen. Gustavo Leigh of the air force and Adm. Jose T. Merino of the navy.

The other junta member, in addition to Pinochet, is Gen. Cesar Mendoza of the carabineros (national police).

On Dec. 28 Pinchoet admitted he had received a letter from Leigh in which the air force commander called the referendum "illegal" and potentially damaging to the "prestige" of the armed forces.

Pinochet said, "It is natural that there be differing opinions when dealing with thcs material at this level," but emphasized that the armed forces were "still as united as before."

The legality of the referendum also was questioned by the comptroller general of Chile, Hector Humeres, who rejected the official decree calling for the vote because "it does not follow the law."

Cooperation Called For In Labeling

WASHINGTON (AP) — With several federal agencies proposing consumer product labeling, the Commerce Department is urging that they cooperate rather than collide.

Labeling proposals have been put forward by Commerce, the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the Food and Drug Administration, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Energy.

The system proposed by Commerce is a voluntary labeling program under which manufacturers would develop standard labels for a class of products — such as vacuum cleaners or toasters — and these labels would help consumers compare various brands.

Taking note of the variety of other labeling proposals currently under consideration, Commerce officials proposed this week that information required by other agencies be included in the Commerce system, if the other agencies agree.

This means that if the Energy Department required a label telling how much electricity a vacuum uses, and EPA demands one telling how much noise it makes, both of those items would be included in the general Commerce performance label.

The Commerce Department said "it would be desirable to provide on a single label information of interest to consumers about a wider range of attributes than is being considered for labeling requirements by any one agency."

Such action would both reduce the problem for manufacturers and would assist consumers in comparing similar products, the department said.

When initially proposed, the Commerce labeling system was aimed at rating the performance of an item. For example, it would provide information on such things as load capacity, strength and durability.

The data would be provided by tests on the various products developed by the National Bureau of Standards.

Labeling required by the Food and Drug Administration and the Consumer Product Safety Commission generally concerns the safety of products, while the EPA has proposed requiring noise labels and the Energy Department wants labels telling how efficient various items are.

The Commerce Department has asked for comment from the public on its proposal for cooperation among the agencies and letters should be received by Jan. 30. If you have something to say, write to Dr. Howard I. Forman, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Product Standards, Room 3876, U.S. Department of Commerce, Washington, D.C., 20230.

Debakey Recovering From Fire Injuries

HOUSTON (AP) — World renown heart surgeon Michael Debakey is in Methodist Hospital "improving" from smoke inhalation he suffered in a fire at his home, a Methodist Hospital spokesman said Monday.

The doctor's wife and 10-month-old child escaped unhurt Saturday night when the fire broke out. Debakey, 68, suffered superficial facial burns, but his eyes were not damaged.

Research Echoes Eugenics Movement

Third In A Series

By TED HOWARD
and JEREMY RIFKIN
Pacific News Service

"Some day we will realize that the prime duty, the inescapable duty of the good citizens of the right type is to leave his or her blood behind him in the world; and that we have no business to permit the perpetuation of citizens of the wrong type. I wish very much that the wrong people could be prevented entirely from breeding; and when the evil nature of these people is sufficiently flagrant, this should be done. Criminals should be sterilized and feebleminded persons forbidden to leave offspring behind them...the emphasis should be laid on getting desirable people to breed."

Unique Historical Chapter

These remarkable words were issued by one of the great political leaders of American history, the 26th president of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt. They represtded the "enlightened" view of millions of Americans caught up in an ideological movement that has virtually disappeared from American history books. The movement was called eugenics, and in a 30-year span (1900-1929) it captured the attention of America's leading reformers, academics, professionals and political leaders.

Believing that criminals were born and not made, the famed criminal anthropologist Cesare Lombroso claimed it was possible to draw a composite profile of those people liable to commit particular types of crime.

Viewing The 'Criminal Type'

"Thieves," he declared, "were characterized by small restless eyes, thick eyebrows, a crooked nose, thin beard and a narrow receding forehead.

"Sex criminals had bright eyes, a cracked voice, blond hair and a delicate face.

The major tool in the eugenicists' campaign to weed out these biologically inferior stock was sterilization. As a result of a systematicd and coordinated drive, tens of thousands of individual states after the turn of the century.

Institutional Sterilization

In the mid-1890s the superintendent of the Kansas State Home for the feebleminded castrated 44 boys. Castration, however, proved lessd than popular with the general public, so that when the first eugenic vasectomy was performed in 1899 it was heralded as a more efficient tool. The vasectomy was performed at Indiana Reformatory by Dr. Harry Sharp as a eugenic solution for a 19-year-old boy who had become "addicted" to excessive masturbation.

Within three weeks of the operation, according to Sharp, the lad was excelling in his classwork once again. Sharp was so encouraged by the results that he took it upon himself to operate on 76 more youngsters by the end of the year.

The same state, Indiana, pass the first sterilization law in 1907. The bill called for mandatory sterilization of confirmed criminals, idiot, imbeciles and others in state institutionsd when approved by a board of experts. It was later fondly referred to by eugenicists as "the Indiana Idea."

Eugenicists also began to use family trees as a major propaganda weapon in their battle to equate hereddity with inferior biological types. By concocting elaborate family histories the eugenicists purported to show that inferior traits were passed down from generation to gererration and that the social costs of allowing such reproduction to continue was not worthwhile.

The second element that eugenicists introduced to push their claims was the Binet Intelligence test, administered among the institutionalized to prove that they were mentally and biologically incompetent and a drain on society who should not be allowed to reproduce. Together the family trees and the Binet test fueled the propaganda fires even further and hastened the passage of more state law a sterilization.

Height Of The Movement

With the chorus of demands for sterilization reaching a crescendo pitch, 15 states enacted sterilization laws between 1907 and World War I. A bill introduced in the Missouri Legislature even called for sterilization of those "convicted of murder, rape highway robbery, chicken stealing, bombing or theft of automobiles." By 1931 30 states had passed sterilization laws and thousands of American citizens had been surgically fixed.

Nuclear Scare

Until the U.S. dropped the first atomic bomb on Hiroshima at the end of World War II, the eugenics movement lay virtually dormant. Then, in 1945, scientist and officials at the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) realized that the atomic age would bring with it a dramatic increase in radiation that would, in turn, have serious and harmful effects on human gene mutation. That concern over atomic radiation and gene mutation sparked a renewed interest in genetics research.

The AEC began to pour funds into genetics research. One of their grants came to a young geneticist at the University of Indiana named James Watson who won a Nobel Prize for his discovery of the DNA molecule.

Watson's and other biologists' pioneering work triggered a renewed interest in eugenics as well. Many prominent scientist began to claim that increase radiation was causing massive mutation in the human gene pool that were spreading with each new generation of babies. New breakthroughs in medical treatment of genetically defectively individuals, it was argued, were keeping more biologically unfit people alive who, in turn, were passing on gene defects to their offsprings.

Regeneration Of A Movement

As a result of these concerns a whole new generation of modern-day eugenicists have emerged from within the scientific community. They are advocating a range of new eugenic procedures and programs to both arrest the "deteriorating trend" in the human gene pool and upgrade the genetic worth of the human species.

Bernard Davis, professor of bacterial physiology at Harvard, speaks for many of his scientific colleagues when he says that we need a eugenics program "alimed primarily at reducing the production of individuals whose genetic endowment would limit their ability to cope with a technologically complex environment."

Criminal Behavior Researched

Now once again scientists in universities all over America are beginning to issue reports and studies that purportedly demonstrate that crime, poverty and intelligence are more the direct result of people's genetic make-up than of the environment in which they live. And nowhere is this trend toward biological determinism more evident than in the new research studies into criminal behavior.

One such research study was conducted over a six-year period at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington by Dr. Sam Yochelson and Dr. Stanton Samenow. Yochelson and Samenow interviewed hundreds of convicts who had been placed at St. Elizabeth's because the courts had decided they were "disturbed people."

Criminals are not made by society, the study concluded: they are born that way.

"In a sense," says Samenow, "you would say he (the criminal) is programed for killing, not by someone else, but he has a mind that reacts to adversity, not with surmounting adversity, but eliminating it." Samenow's conclusion is that the solution "isn't just changing his (his criminal's) environment. We found," he says, "that the task of change involves changing a man's thinking."

Views Widespread

Drs. Samenow and Yochelson are not alone in their views on the genetic basic for criminality. Several years ago the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) gane a grant of $109,000 to Boston City Hospital, the UCLA Medical School and Massachusetts General Hospital to "develop a technique by which 'violence-prone' individuals could be indentified." The assumption upon which the grant was awarded is that criminal behavior is, in fact, a biologically identifiable trait. The researchers' thesis was that criminal behavior is genetic, not environmentally based.

The beginnings of new eugenics movement is well under way in America. Forty-six states already have some type of genetic screening program. Typical is a recent screening law drawn up by the Chicago Bar Association that would require genetic screening of all marriage license applicants in an effort "to reduce the number of non-productive members of our society," one of its supporters proclaimed.

William T. Vukowich, associate professor of law at Georgetown University, believes a tax deduction scheme could be adapted to "a eugenics program by limiting deductions for couples with inferior genotypes and increasing the number of deductions for couples with superior genotypes."

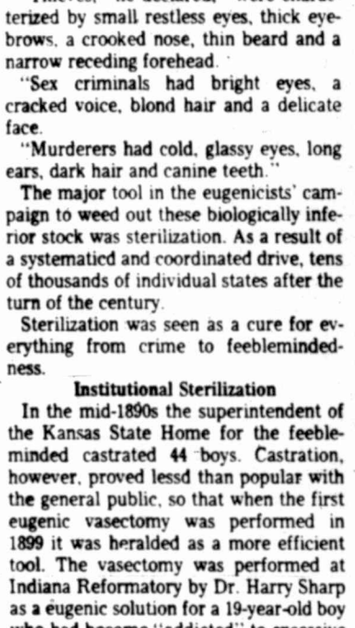

The new eugenics movement in America, like its predecessor 60 years ago, has the enthusiastic support of some of the most distinguished scientists alive, for it is no trivial matter when scientists of the stature of DNA Nobel laureate Sir Francis Crick remark:

"...no new-born infant should be declared human until it has passed certain tests regarding its genetic endowment and that if it fails these tests it forfeits the right to live."

HARRY DE LA ROCHE

Accused Killer Goes On Trial

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — About 120 miles south of the scene of the crime, a jury will be picked to try a 19-year-old accused of murdering his family. Then the jurors will be transported north to hear the evidence.

Jury selection begins Tuesday in the trial of Harry De La Roche, 19, of Montvale, a suburb near New York City. He is a former military college student charged with murdering his parents and two younger brothers at their home during Thanksgiving vacation in 1976.

Although testimony will be held in Hackensack — which is also near New York — lawyers and Bergen County Superior Court Judge John Madden have come to Camden, a community near Philadelphia, to pick a jury of Camden County residents who they feel will be unprejudiced.

Once selected, the 12 jurors and four alternates will be sequestered in Bergen County to hear the evidence.

This is how the unusual procedure came to be adopted:

Last October, The Record of Hackensack published an interview with the defendant in which De La Roche said his 15-year-old brother Ronald had gunned down the family. According to the newspaper, the defendant said he killed his brother when he came home and found what Ronald had done.

Californians Spend To Lose Weight

By LINDA DEUTSCH

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In California, where movie stars' figures are their fortunes and bikinis are haute couture, the business of weight reduction is — pardon the expression — a big, fat success.

They have cellulite massages, have their bodies wrapped in wet flannel and lift weights.

Some turn to doctors who put them on semi-starvation diets or administer shots derived from the urine of pregnant women. Others join diet clubs and hire private exercise coaches.

"People in California seem to be more thin-oriented," says Gary Mertes of Schick Laboratories, a branch of the razor blade concern that has taken up weight reduction.

That's not to say people aren't weight conscious elsewhere. The California phenomenon is part of a nationwide business that a recent report found caters to 70 million Americans and takes in $10 billion a year. Weight Watchers of America, one of the oldest and best known reducing plans, will gross well over $30 million this year.

'People are realizing that as they expand, their experience of life is constricted," says Dr. James J. Julian, a Hollywood physician who specializes in taking inches off the wastelines of movie stars. "They are separated by a wall of fat from the joy of life."

Few Guidelines

There are few bonafide medical guidelines. The California Medical Association's policy says: "The treatment of obesity by unscientific methods may well be a menace to the health of California citizens." It urges caution in using drugs and advises "safe dieting."

Among the more popular methods of reduction are health spas offering a week or more of intensive exercise, dieting and beautification treatments at remote hideaways. One of the best known is The Golden Door at Escondido where, for $1,250 a week, the visitor — usually a woman — gets a blend of exercise and pampering.

Other spas offer a less expensive variation on the same formula. At Rancho La Puerta, a visitor pays $45 a day for a program emphasizing health food and yoga. Pala Mesa, a couples-oriented resort near San Diego, offers tennis and golf as part of a "Total You" package. Not far away, the La Costa resort offers a health and sports program.

Weight Reduction Star

One of the stars of the weight-reduction game is Dr. Julian, who says, "I didn't choose this field, the movie stars chose it for me."

Julian has four thriving "weight normalization centers" in the Los Angeles area and lives in a Spanish hillside villa built for William "Hopalong Cassidy" Boyd. He is planning a private theater for mass lectures on weight control.

Julian uses four basic treatments, three of them diets. The fourth is the controversial HCG "fat mobilizing" shots, which come from the urine of pregnant women. He insists the shots, which have been denounced as useless by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the California Medical Association, are effective.

Julian looks for things to congratulate patients about, not to punish them.

Not so at Schick Laboratories, where punishment is part of a method that has cured alcoholics and smokers. The key is electric shock, called "negative stimulus."

Every day, clients arrive at Schick centers bearing their favorite fattening foods. Each goes to a room where a therapist attaches an electrical device to his wrist. He chews on his brownie or pizza, but if he swallows it, he gets a mild electrical shock.

"We are removing years of programming in the memory," says Curtis Kent, Schick's vice president and general manager.

Critics worry about the mind control aspects, but Kent says, "What we're really doing is returning to a person their free choice to eat something or not to eat it."

Henry Goetz, director off the Schick center in Beverly Hills, says: "Aversion therapy is as old as Pavlov. Nobody likes to go to a dentist either. But you cope and accomplish."

Goetz, who also directs the anti smoking program, says those who resort to Schick usually have tried crash diets, pills and clubs. What defeats them? "Cake and ice cream. They're absolute freaks. A girl can eat a gallon of ice cream in one sitting. It's boredom, frustration and loneliness," he says.

Mertes, Schick's executive director, says clients also learn to see food differently: "If a person eats doughnuts, we have them take a doughnut and squeeze it until it becomes a ball of dough. We have people squeeze french fries and see the grease come out of them. Later, they will remember the grease on their hands."

Schick, founded by razor millionaire Patrick Frawley, has 22 centers across the country, most specializing in smoking and alcoholism. Mertes estimates that 20,000 persons have completed the six-month weight program, including several movie stars.

For those who shun electric shock, there's acupuncture, the ancient Chinese method of using needles to cure ailments.

Dr. James Y. P. Chen, who has written books on Chinese medicine and consults with U.S. government agencies, treats obesity with acupuncture at his Santa Monica and San Francisco offices. "The main thing is to relax the patient and curb the appetite," he says.

His treatment consists of placing tiny steel "press needles" in the upper edge of a patient's ear. To curb the appetite, the patient presses the needle for about a minute before eating.

But Chen says acupuncture is not a remedy in itself. "They have to use common sense — cut down on sugar, carbohydrates and fatty foods."

Some With Little To Lose

In Beverly Hills, where slim is in, the people who want to lose weight often don't have much to lose.

"Here you have the beach crowd," says Goetz. "They're maybe 10 pounds overweight. They want to get their tushie into a bikini; that's all they're interested in. For them, it's an easy go."

Some work out at exclusive exercise studios such as Ron Fletcher's "Contrology," where they build muscle and burn fat.

Movie stars flock to Aida Thibiant's exclusive salon for facials and cellulite massages. The latter, a deep massage under heat lamps, is aimed at dissolving fatty deposits in thighs, buttocks and arms.

In addition, "Panthermal" steam treatments are available in a large body-enveloping machine. The French-born Madame Thibiant keeps her clients informed of all new developments in body beautification.

Cellulite, a problem affecting women, is also treated with other methods.

In West Los Angeles, models and starlets join everyday housewives for flannel wraps at "The Wrap Up," where Paula Burke uses a European wrap method promising to break down cellulite.

"We saturate flannel strips with warm lotion and natural minerals," she explains. "Then we wrap them around your body mummy-style."

Everyone in California, it seems, has a diet story. This almost universal search for a slim shape continues to inspire businesses — some, non-therapeutic spinoffs from the weight reduction specialsts.

Individual diet restaurants with names like, "Thin World" and "Dieter's Gourmet," open daily in Los Angeles. A local radio station devotes an hour weekly to "high and low-calorie conversation," interviews with diet advisors and doctors.

Now, a popular item at one decorator boutique is a pillow delicately needlepointed wih the slogan, "You can't be too rich or too thin."

Firms Seek To Reshape Executives

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The price of executive success frequently includes a pot belly, a martini habit and sudden awareness of heart attack statistics.

Now corporations who have lost too many top people in their prime are fighting back with company-funded fitness programs for the flabby and fatigued.

In downtown Los Angeles, an outfit called Fitness Systems Inc. has a membership of some 400 executives who work out at a modern "fitness center' located deep in the bowels of a high-rise office building and shopping plaza.

"In two years, our members have lost an average total of 1.2 tons," says Cindy Miller, FIS director of marketing.

With employers paying half or more of the $500 annual tab, executives are encouraged to trim down and tone up.

"The company is saying, 'We think you're important,'" explains Miss Miller.

"Many members come here instead of joining the lunch bunch. After they work out, they grab some juice and a protein bar instead of prime rib and three martinis."

Elsewhere in the Los Angeles area, FIS installs in-house exercise facilities at corporations willing to make the investment.

They range from a mini-gym of 200 to 1,000 square feet to a 6,000 square-foot facility with an indoor jogging track. Physiologists supervise each exercise program.

FIS has built private gyms for such companies as Fluor Corp., Teledyne Inc., Great Western Savings and the Los Angeles Times.

At FIS headquarters, the exercise plan, developed by fitness expert and author L. E. Morehouse, has a double thrust — weight loss and cardiovascular development.

"We tell them, 'You'll be able to run to catch the plane without being winded,'" says Miss Miller.

The program includes indoor jogging, electronic bicycles that monitor the heart rate, and stretching and flexibility exercises. The typical regime is 30 to 40 minutes three times a week.

FIS was started by former corporate executives William L. Horton and F. Paul Karres, Harvard business school graduates who felt their colleagues would see fitness as money in the bank.

The enthusiasm of their current executive members appears to strengthen their theory.

"Many men come in here as early as 7 a.m. without showering or shaving," says Miss Miller. "We supply the razor blades, hair dryers and toiletries. By 8 o'clock, they're up at their offices feeling great."

Inmates Learning About Computers

The Southeast Correctional Center is the fourth Boston-area state correctional facility to offer computer programming courses taught by Honeywell volunteers. At the request of a single prisoner, the computer company held its first behind-bars data processing class 10 years ago at the state's maximum-security prison in Walpole.

During the following decade, 350 inmate-graduates of the intensive computer course have been paroled from prison. Upon release, 300 accepted positions in the data processing field and the remaining 50 found employment in other businesses. For graduates of the course, the return-to-prison rate has been under 4 percent, 95 percent better than the national recidivism average, Massachusetts prison authorities say.

New Year's Weekend Hampered By Crime

While most Lubbockites were busy celebrating the New Year's holiday weekend, at least a few city residents had more devious thoughts on their minds than welcoming in the new year.

An 8-year-old Lubbock youth told officers he went to a city convenience store late Thursday night where a man tried to molest him.

The boy said he was offered $1 and a candy bar to "play doctor" with the store attendant.

Clothing and a television set valued at more than $1,000 disappeared from Manuel Trevino's 3301 Duke St. home Saturday or Sunday.

Rayma Patterson of a 1716 Ave. H shop told police someone took $300 of costume jewelry from her store between 5:30 p.m. Saturday and 7:45 a.m. Sunday.

Diaz Day of a 19th Street drug store told officers someone made off with $500 of narcotic drugs from the pharmacy between 9 p.m. Saturday and 4 a.m. Sunday.

Jose Mario Zamora of 626 40th St. told police someone stole a stereo and several eight-track tapes from his home sometime last week.

Twelve cans of canned meat and a $120 television set were missing from Dean Kirkpatrick's home after burglars made their way through the 1621 19th St. Rear address.

Lester Luchs of 2211 27th St. reported the theft of a $55 tool box from the back of his vehicle between 3 p.m. and 11 p.m. Sunday.

While Lubbock was bringing in the new year, police were bringing in a load of drunks as well as looking for suspects in a reported rape and an attempted murder.

About 8 a.m. Sunday police went to the St. Mary's Hospital emergency room, where they met a 21-year-old waitress who told them she had been raped by four men who pulled her into their old, gray pickup about 10 p.m. Saturday at the intersection of 2nd Street and University Avenue.

She said the men stopped alongside a dirt road where two of the suspects raped her. She said she was then taken to a house in the 3000 block of 2nd Street where she was sexually assaulted again.

Three of the suspects were described as "long hairs," and all were said to be wearing blue jeans. The victim said one of the rapists had a tattoo on his forehead and arm.

Gas Wells Successful

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — With energy concerns in mind, a company here is drilling natural gas wells on its own property instead of waiting for another shortage.

So far, three Goodyear wells have been successful and will supply 50 percent of its plant needs this winter, the company says.

FBI Agents Raid Club At Plainview

PLAINVIEW (Special) — Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation Monday raided a Plainview club and a rural Hale County residence in connection with alleged violation of federal gambling laws.

James Abbott, special agent in charge of the Dallas FBI office, said FBI agents served search warrants on two Hale County locations and on two sites in Dallas simultaneously Monday.

The warrants were issued by U.S. Magistrate Bill Brister of Lubbock on the basis of affidavits filed by FBI agents alleging the possible violations.

Abbott said evidence seized in the raids will be presented to a federal grand jury in Lubbock at a later date. No arrests were made, he said.

The searches, Abbott said, were in conjunction with a continuing investigation by the FBI, the U.S. Attorney's office, the Plainview Police Department, the Hale County Sheriff's Office and the Texas Department of Public Safety into illegal gambling activities in the Panhandle area.

Hypnosis Clinics Becoming Popular

(EDITOR'S NOTE — Hypnosis for self improvement or self awareness is a growing trend in the United States. To help accommodate the seekers is a growing number of hypnosis clinics.)

By TIMOTHY HARPER

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Soft, indirect lighting plays on contemporary Oriental paintings and statues. Plush carpeting, recliner chairs and floor pillows in earth tones create warmth. Soothing sounds of the surf come from stereo speakers behind wood paneled walls.

Quiet and dark and comfortable, this is a hypnosis parlor.

It is the Rand Hypnosis Institute Inc., one of dozens of self-improvement hypnosis clinics which have sprung up across the nation in the past few years.

"Hypnosis," says owner Tamara Rand, "is coming out of the closet. Society has opened up enough to accept hypnosis. People are always looking for ways to help themselves."

'We don't cure people of their problems. We show them how to help themselves...'

Miss Rand, who also runs a hypnosis clinic in Los Angeles, where she lives, says her clients range from entertainers, politicians and businessmen to students and farm wives.

They turn to hypnosis as another extension of the so-called human potential movement. Some, graduates of transcendental meditation or yoga, want to delve more deeply into their souls; others are looking for easier way to fight such personal demons as smoking, drinking and overeating.

People also try hypnosis to learn to relax, deal with success or improve the memory, but the current interest in the field has also led to important new uses in law enforcement and medicine.

"We don't cure people of their problems," Miss Rand says. "We show them how to help themselves. We are what we think we are. We have a mental image of ourselves in our minds. For example, hypnosis can help a smoker learn to visualize himself as a nonsmoker."

Hypnosis was used as long as 5,000 years ago, but today's experts still know little about what it is or how it works. They describe it in vague terms — a state of complete relaxation and intense concentration with heightened suggestibility. All agree there is no "trance" as such, and a hypnotized person is never really asleep.

Daydreaming is a state of hypnosis. So is staring at flickering fireplace flames or becoming absorbed in a book. So is driving for hours and then not being able to recall much of the trip.

And the appeal of some charismatic speakers, such as Adolf Hitler with mass audiences and Jimmy Carter with small groups, may be due at least in part to their hypnotic deliveries.

Dr. Paul Sacerdote, a Riverdale, N.Y., psychiatrist who uses hypnosis in most of his cases, says blood pressure drops and other body mechanisms slow under hypnosis.

Some people are much easier to hypnotize and go into a much deeper hypnotic state than others, but authorities can't always pick them out. They do know, generally, that very young children and people with very low IQs are the least susceptible to hypnosis.

People who have been hypnotized usually describe it as very relaxing; they are aware of everything happening. Some question whether they were really hypnotized even though they follow the hypnotist's instructions explicitly in their mind's eye.

Most hypnotists who help people who want to stop smoking or lose weight rely heavily on self-hypnosis, teaching clients to perform various mental exercises with key words to help visualize themselves as a non-smoker or slim.

Dr. William Kroger, a Beverly Hills, Calif., psychiatrist, says the principles of hypnosis actually are the basis for such relatively new movements as TM, yoga, EST, biofeedback and acupuncture. He says the peace some find in prayer may also be a kind of hypnosis.

Still, hypnosis holds a place in American culture among the occult. In the movies, a hypnotist is always a Svengali type who controls zombie-like victims.

"Everybody thinks we should have piercing eyes and beards and cloaks," Miss Rand says.

"A lot of the popular interest in hypnosis now is a naive one that magic can be done," says Dr. Milton Kline, a psychologist who heads the Morton Prince Hypnosis Clinic in New York. "It's the magic that attracts the groundswell, but behind the magic is some reality."

Most hypnotists scorn the mysticism, but others say mysticism can help if the subject believes magic will work.

"That in itself may produce a feeling of peacefulness," says Sacerdote, who does extensive work with hypnosis in easing the pain of terminal cancer.

At Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, more than half the pain clinic patients are hypnotized regularly as an alternative to mind-dulling drugs.

Hypnosis also has been effective in easing the pain of childbirth and minor surgery. Many dentists use it. It also has helped cerebral palsy victims to speak and, curiously, eased psoriasis and made warts disappear.

Kline believes hypnosis not only relieves pain, but may have indirect curative powers of its own, as in treating victims of Parkinson's disease. "There is evidence that cellular changes take place with attitudinal changes," he says.

Sacerdote says hypnosis also is useful in helping psychiatric patients reach deeper into the subconscious.

And Dr. Thomas Kempf of the University of Wisconsin-Oshkosh recommends hypnosis to help students remove tensions and concentrate more on their studies.

In law enforcement, a person under hypnosis may have vivid recall of small details from the past.

'There is evidence that cellular changes take place along with attitudinal changes...'

An example was Kroger's work in the Chowchilla, Calif., school bus kidnapping when the bus driver could not describe the kidnappers' car. Under hypnosis, he remembered the license plate.

Martin Reiser, head of the Los Angeles police department's "Svengali squad," says hypnosis can help in 65 percent of all criminal investigations. He instructs hypnotized witnesses to describe what they saw as if watching it on television.

Some civil liberties groups frown on hypnosis in law enforcement, saying it could elicit confessions unfairly, but police say they use hypnosis only for investigation.

The U.S. Supreme Court, however, has characterized hypnosis as "mental coercion" and ruled it out as evidence. But some authorities believe further research and acceptance will one day make hypnosis as common as handwriting or ballistics evidence.

Among the more bizarre uses of hypnosis was the military's "hypnotic courier" in World War II. A courier would be given a message under hypnosis which could be "unlocked" only by another hypnotist.

The strange power of hypnosis has prompted many other tales. Marion Kenn, an official of the Society for Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis in Liverpool, N.Y., tells of a student who was hypnotized on stage and later had to be institutionalized for psychosis.

"Why pay someone who is only half trained?" she says. "I would not want to be the one caught up in their errors."

Harry Arons, whose 1,500-member Association for the Advancement of Ethical Hypnosis includes both nonprofessionals and doctors, scorns the horror stories.

'A lot of what you see on stage is phony...60 to 70 percent of it ... It also belittles and degrades a serious thing...'

"There are no documented cases of this sort," he says. "Hypnosis does not have that kind of power."

Arons, of South Orange, N.J., admits the boom in hypnosis has "stimulated quackery among non-professionals" and his association expelled a dozen members last year. But he says they still operate outside the association, along with what he estimates to be 15,000 "unethical" hypnotists in the United States.

Arons says several hypnotists have been arrested in recent years for practicing medicine without a license, but convictions are rare because of the fine line between medical and non-medical practice.

Arons advises against hypnosis clinics which promise one-day cures for anything, as well as nonprofessional clinics which treat physical or psychological disorders such as impotence or frigidity.

"Find a hypnotist through your own doctor," he suggests.

Miss Rand says one in four of her cases are referred by doctors and that her success rate of 70 percent with smokers is as good as any doctor's.

Kline claims he could teach a 7-year-old to be a proficient hypnotist in 20 minutes, but aside from a few graduate programs at schools such as Columbia University, formal education has pretty much ignored hypnotism.

Most lay hypnotists learn their work in informal apprenticeships under other hypnotists, and most doctors learn either in courses under hypnotist doctors or at weekend seminars run by lay hypnotists.

"The doctors come to us for courses in hypnosis and then charge $100 an hour," laments Gayle Ashby, a former professional singer who now hypnotizes clients for $25 an hour on a waterbed in her small New York apartment.

Despite their differences, doctors and laymen have one thing in common: contempt for stage hypnotists.

"They're awful," says Miss Ashby.

"Considerable evidence exists for the need for legislative control to eliminate the use of hypnosis as a means of entertainment," Kline says.

"A lot of what you see on stage is phony — 60 to 70 percent of it," says Arons, who himself did hypnosis demonstrations for a few dollars in the 1930s. "It also belittles and derogates a serious thing."

LAKE SPAWNS WHITE SANDS

At Lake Lucero in southern New Mexico, the warm sun and dry winds evaporate the water, leaving a gypsum-crystal encrusted dry lake bed. Weathering disintegrates the gypsum crystals into sand size. These glistening white grains make up the embryonic sand dunes at White Sands National Monument.

Soviets Back Cambodia, Vietnam Dispute Talks

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union indicated support Monday for Vietnam's offer to negotiate its border dispute with Cambodia, but avoided comment on which side was to blame for the fighting.

Cambodia broke diplomatic relations with Vietnam on Saturday, claiming divisions of Vietnamese troops backed by tanks and planes had invaded Cambodian territory in an attempt to overthrow the government.

Hanoi radio replied Sunday by accusing Cambodian troops of massive strikes into southern Vietnam, but urged talks to end the conflict.

The Soviet news agency Tass reported that the World Peace Council, a Soviet-backed group headquartered in Helsinki, issued a statement Monday in Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon, backing Vietnam's offer to negotiate.

213 Feared Dead In Crash

BOMBAY, India (AP) — Rescue workers recovered seven bodies Monday and officials said there was no chance of survivors among the 213 persons aboard an Indian jumbo jet that exploded and fell into the Arabian Sea.

All but 11 of the 190 passengers and crew of of 23 of the Air India 747 were Indians.

Foreigners included two Americans identified as Askhan Azim Mohammad Abdul, 53, and Khan Anna Loreigns, 50. Both lived in Saudi Arabia but carried American passports issued in San Francisco.

No cause has been listed for the Sunday crash that occurred just after takeoff from Bombay.

The navy sent eight ships to comb a 50-square-mile patch of sea for survivors. Parts of wreckage, life jackets and clothing were recovered.

Earlier reports that 35 bodies had been spotted were denied by the navy.

If all aboard died, it would be India's worst air disaster and the third worst in the history of civil aviation.

In 1966 an Air India Boeing 707 crashed in to Mount Blanc in the European Alps killing all 117 aboard.

Civil aviation's worst crash was in March 27, 1977, when KLM and Pan American jumbo jets collided on the runway in the Canary Islands killing 582 persons.

The next worst was in March, 1974, when a Turkish DC-10 crashed in a forest near Paris killing all 346 aboard.

A.K. Sarkar, India's deputy civil viation chief, said in New Delhi, "If some were alive, even after the explosion, they might not have withstood the aftermath, plunging into the sea..."

The plane, Air India's first jumbo which it purchased in 1971, was on an 1,-100-mile flight to Dubai, United Arab Emirates.

PASADENA (AP) — The 89th Tournament of Roses survived fires and threatened rain Monday to provide nearly 1.5 million eager parade-watchers with the traditional flowery splendor.

The 2½-hour parade, with the theme, "On the Road to Happiness," began on time at 8:30 a.m. PST under partly cloudy skies and went off with hardly a hitch.

The float was decorated with 16 shades of carnations, calendulas, stock, lemon leaf, bells of Ireland and Chinese lentil seeds.

For the second year, Eastman Kodak won the grand prize with a nature float. This year's carnation-and gladioli-covered entry, "The Wonder of Color," depicted two birds fighting over a bird bath.

The theme prize was won by the city of St. Louis, which built a hayride scene. The horse-drawn wagon was depicted crossing a covered bridge in a country setting.

The parade was led by former President Gerald R. Ford as grand marshal. He was greeted with a standing ovation. His wife, Betty, did not accompany him.

The chilly weather — 47 degrees at the parade's start — was emphasized by 18-year-old Rose Queen Maria Lynn Caron, who lifted her white gown to reveal yellow boots beneath. One of her princesses wore long underwear.

But the same cool breeze wafted the all-encompassing perfume of the roses through the air, reaching spectators lined up 12 or 13 deep.

Sixty-one floats, 22 bands and 33 equestrian groups traveled along the 5½-mile parade route on Orange Grove and Colorado boulevards. In addition to the estimated 1.5 million people who showed up in Pasadena to watch the event, another estimated 125 million worldwide watched the festivities on television.

Nearly 100 persons had been arrested by Monday morning, most for public drunkenness, police said. Last year 153 were arrested. The record was 296 in 1975.

A few signs remained of a fire that struck on the eve of the parade, disrupting 2,000 spectators who had gathered more than 24 hours in advance to secure prime viewing spots.

The Sunday night fire in the old Taylor Hotel along the Colorado Boulevard parade route forced the evacuation of about 70 tenants, authorities said.

Earlier Sunday, about 10,000 spectators were treated to the "Doo Dah Parade," a Rose Parade parody featuring such acts as a violin-playing spider and a troupe of belly dancers.

The Doo Dah parade was staged in an effort to fill the gap created when Rose Parade organizers scheduled the big parade for Monday instead of the usual Sunday.

Early Monday morning, another fire created a problem aboard the Occidental Life Insurance float depicting an old-fashioned newsroom but it was quickly extinguished.

The Governor's Trophy was won by Winchell's Donut House for the second consecutive year with its float entitled, "There's No Place Like Home." The float showed an ornate Victorian house made of ti leaves, palm, redwood and eucalyptus bark, and live ducks swam in a pond on the float.

The city of Arcadia took the Isabella Coleman Award for most effective use of color harmony. With the theme "Follow Your Dreams," the float consisted of a huge rainbow of spinning discs covered with many-hued petals.

The Queen's Trophy for most effective use of roses outside the business category went to the Order of the Sons of Italy's "All Roads Lead to Rome" float. It showed Roman columns and chariots made of more than 100,000 white mums, accented by red roses and lavender orchids.

The Canadian province of Nova Scotia's "Voyage Home" float took the International Trophy for its lighthouse scene and scale model of the province's famous racing schooner Bluenose II. Black croton leaves gave the ship a slick, wet appearance and blue and white irises highlighted with white carnation petals formed the lighthouse and ocean water.

The President's Trophy for most effective use of roses by a business was won by Credit Union National Association, for "Down by the Old Mill Stream," which featured 18 stylized rose trees and a replica of an old mill house built of striped juniper bark.

Report Reviews Military Housing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The military services have been building unneeded government housing for married personnel rather than using civilian housing available near most military installations, a report to Congress says.

The report by the General Accounting Office appears to contradict recent testimony by top Pentagon officials who said married men in the lower ranks are suffering great financial difficulties because there is not enough on-base housing available for them and off-base civilian housing is too expensive.

The GAO said the services have not been abiding by Defense Department and congressional policy which says onbase family housing should be built only as a last resort.

Each military installation conducts an annual housing survey of its area and when the housing supply appears short the data is used to justify requests for funds to build additional government housing. The GAO said those surveys are often unreliable.

The report said Defense Department procedure calls for the housing surveys to consider rental units available within a one-hour commute to the base, but some base surveys have been limited to housing no more than 15 or 30 minutes distant.

Also, while there is an increasing trend for military families to buy their own homes, the housing surveys only include houses for rent, not for sale.

The GAO said the civilian community is often ignored when the military is making plans and decisions on how to meet the housing needs of military families. In several cases, local realtors and builders were not consulted before decisions were made to build more government housing.

Most communities are willing to build to meet the military's housing needs, but the military does not let them know what the long-range needs will be, the GAO said.

Contrary to Defense Department policy, military families are assigned on-base housing on the basis of rank, not need, the GAO said. "At three military installations reviewed, more than 800 families with a need for only one-and two-bedroom units were assigned to threeand four-bedroom units because of the high rank or grade of the military sponsor." At the same time, larger, but lower-ranked families had to make do with two-bedroom rental homes in the civilian community.

The GAO said that since 1973, Congress has authorized about $931 million for the construction of more than 33,000 military family housing units. However, Defense officials say fewer large-scale housing projects will be needed in the future, in part because higher pay scales allow more military families to buy or rent in the civilian community and because the overall size of the military has decreased.

Sailors Want To Preserve Ship

RELIC OF A BYGONE ERA — John S. Pottinger, the Maritime Administrations's fleet superintendent at the Suisun Bay Mothball Fleet at Benicia, Calif., walks across the deck of the Jeremiah O'Brien, the only remaining authentic Liberty Ship. Old time sailors are working to have this relic of a bygone era preserved as a museum.(AP Laserphoto)

BENICIA, Calif. (AP) — Franklin D. Roosevelt called them "Ugly Ducklings." To German submariners who torpedoed them they were "Kaiser's Creeping Coffins."

But to the thousands of men who sailed on them they were Liberty ships, the backbone of America's massive sea force that helped crush the Nazi and Japanese war machines in the 1940s.

In an incredible surge of national productivity, 2,742 were mass-produced between 1941 and 1945 in 18 American shipyards — the largest number of ships ever built from a single design.

Now, only one authentic Liberty remains — the Jeremiah O'Brien — and oldtime sailors are working to have the relic of a bygone era preserved as a museum.

The O'Brien, now rusty with peeling paint and a nesting spot for pigeons, lies at anchor 40 miles northeast of San Francisco among 140 ships in the Suisun Bay Mothball Fleet.

"She may not look like much, but she's in remarkably good condition," said John S. Pottinger, the Maritime Administration's fleet superintendent who as a merchant seaman sailed on six Liberties, three as chief engineer. "All of that rust is just surface corrosion. A good sandblasting and paint job and she'd look as good as new."

Among the debris on a recent visit to the old ship, Pottinger came across the engineer's log that told of the OBrien's last voyage, which ended here on Feb. 8, 1946. Other than that, the O'Brien's history is skimpy.

Thomas J. Patterson Jr., regional director for the U.S. Maritime Administration, whose command includes the Suisun fleet, estimates it would cost about $300,000 to get the O'Brien cleaned up, painted, sealed and moored permanently for display.

Patterson, a former Merchant Marine captain who began his sea career as a cadet aboard a Liberty, said efforts are being made to have the O'Brien declared an historic object — the first step in moving toward the public museum project.

Like Henry Ford's Model T, the Liberties were classics of simplicity, low cost and utility.

Hundreds of thousands of men and women workers in factories in 32 states built the 30,000-plus components which headed for speedy assembly at shipyards on the East and West coasts.

Many were built by the Henry J. Kaiser industrial empire, and that combined with their slow 10-knot speed accounted for one of the nicknames.

The first of the breed was the Patrick Henry, launched 2½ months before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. There were so many of them that the names sometimes seemed far-fetched, such as the Stage Door Canteen — named in honor of a New York recreation club for servicemen.

Liberties carried troops, planes, tanks, guns, gas and bombs to battlefields around the world in the '40s, to Korea in the '50s and Vietnam in the '60s.

More than 200 Liberties sank from storms or enemy torpedoes, many with heavy loss of life. As hospital ships, they brought the wounded home. Some were sunk deliberately to provide a harbor breakwater on the invasion beaches of France.

Then, for more than 20 years they were the backbone of the world's tramp steamer merchant fleets. Finally they were obsolete — too slow, too old and too expensive to operate.

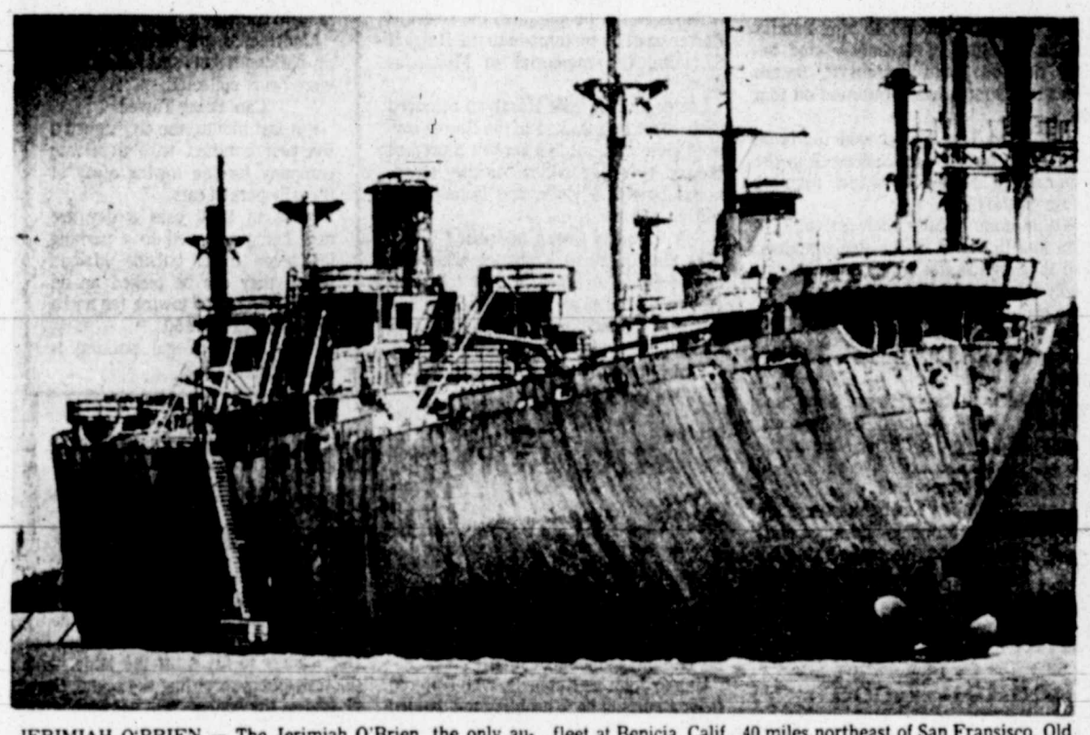

Many were cut up for scrap. Others were sunk deliberately to create artifical ocean reefs to improve fishing in the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific.

The few other remaining Liberties were modified for a variety of tasks, ranging from oil tankers to radar picket duty of the coastline as part of the nation's early warning system against air or missile attack.

One of the most popular modifications, never made on the O'Brien, was to reinforce the ship with a steel band because of a dangerous and sometimes tragic tendency to break apart during storms. That was because the ships, to speed their construction, were welded and not riveted together.

INSCRIPTIONS LEAVE RECORD

Congress Tables Gas Pricing Legislation With Loud Bang

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House-Senate conferees on energy legislation may have learned that you can't hope to hammer out a compromise energy bill without a table that can stand the hammering.

That and maybe a soundproof room.

They did their work behind closed doors. But the shouts of anger that could be heard at times by the dozen or so reporters maintaining a vigil outside the room suggested it wasn't an easy assignment.

At one point, a succession of loud, heavy crashes were heard. And voices of brawling lawmakers emanated from the room. It sounded like they were tearing the place apart.

The raised voices of Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, and Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., could be heard clearly above the din.

Reporters crowded closer to the door to try to make out what the commotion was all about.

But a disapproving secretary in a nearby office off the same corridor looked up from her desk and asked, "Are you eavesdropping?"

"That's tacky," she scolded.

"I'm going to go inside and tell them exactly what you're doing," she said. "I really am."

Everyone backed away from the door to let her pass. As soon as she entered the room, the shouting inside gave way to utter silence.

After several minutes, an aide ventured out timidly.

What's going on in there? she was asked.

"I've been instructed to only say that we've sent out to have the table repaired," she joked.

Aides and congressmen leaving the room were tight-lipped on who had vented his anger on the conference table, guarding it as they would a state secret.

But Metzenbaum dropped a not-very-subtle clue.

"I won't tell you who hit the table, but I'll say that it wasn't me and that my hand isn't sore now but I don't know if Dingell can make the same claim."

As it turned out, Dingell couldn't.

Actually, the table Dingell attacked turned out to be far more durable than the natural gas compromise the conferees assembled in their 11th hour bid to arrive at an "agreement in principle" on the energy bill.

Not only were the public and press barred from the sessions, but so were most conferees. One, Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, got in only after making a fuss about being excluded.

And then he was a little leary of talking to reporters, noting that the conference chairman, Rep. Harley M. Staggers, D-W.Va., had sworn everyone to secrecy.

"You'll have to talk to Chairman Staggers." Wilson told reporters pressing him for a report on the deliberations. "He does all my thinking for me."

Conferee Sen. James Abourezk, D-S.D., who along with Metzenbaum brought the Senate to a grinding halt for more than two weeks last autumn with a filibuster against natural gas deregulation, was also among the outcasts.

"All right, no more Mr. Nice Guy," Abourezk was heard grumbling.

Republican members of the conference committee were also excluded.

The fact that so few conferees were invited to help draft the "compromise" probably contributed to its demise. Of the 18 senators on the conference committee, only two supported it.

At first, some conferees tried to keep the location of the meeting secret. They were held in a room on the third floor of the Capitol used House Administration Committee, a hideaway not easily accessible from other parts of the building. It takes a special elevator to get there, and to get to the elevator you have to pass signs warning the public to keep out.

But reporters got wind of the location and arrived there the first day about the same time as Staggers. "Is this a meeting we can attend?" Staggers was asked.

"What meeting?" Staggers said. "I'm just going to a room down the hall." He sauntered past and ducked into a room several doors away. But he was immediately spied scurrying through the back connecting offices into the meeting room.

U.S. Citizen Released

TORONTO (AP) — Frank Emmick, freed from a Cuban prison after 14 years, was back with his family Monday and en route home to Ohio.

Emmick, 63, one of the last five United States citizens to be held in Cuba's prisons, was greeted at the Toronto airport Sunday by his former wife, Raphael, 59; his daughter, Carolyn Schaefer, 32; his son, Thomas, 29, and his son's wife, Judith.

Emmick was jailed in 1963 after being convicted of spying for the United States.

His family drove from Toledo, Ohio, to meet him.

"We never got pictures of him when he was in jail," Mrs. Schaefer said as she waited for the plane to arrive from Havana.

"We used to get letters . . . the ones that they were able to get out from prison. He didn't say very much."

Mrs. Emmick said she and her former husband have been planning for many years to remarry. Emmick had been in the seafood exporting business in Cuba without his family when he was arrested.

NEW YEAR'S DAY BLAZE — Firemen battled a three-alarm blaze Sunday night, which destroyed a vacant rooming house and damaged several downtown businesses in the 800-block of Broadway. Damages estimates on the fire had not yet been determined late Monday. The blaze was reported about 7:45 p.m. and is believed to have started at a stairwell located back of the building. Carter Remark Bares Discord In New Delhi

Powell said Carter's words did not reflect the warmth of the president's meeting with Desai. Powell said the remarks were part "of a very hurried conversation ... in which he was not giving care to a choice of words."

Desai said he was "not at all upset about it."

Carter told Vance:

"I pointed out that we put (India) in the same category of a great nation like Germany and Canada. He agreed with that and said if we could sign a comprhensive test ban (treaty), that might be enough to warrant a modification in their position.

Blast Angers Canada

In May 1974, India detonated an atomic bomb, drawing sharp criticism from the West. Canada, which had helped India develop its nuclear program, angrily cut off all aid to New Delhi except food.

In his address to Parliament, Carter, without mentioning names, compared the regime of former Premier Indira Gandhi with Richard Nixon's Watergate scandal.

"In different ways, the values for which so many have lived and died were threatened," Carter said. "In different ways, and on opposite sides of the world, those values have now been triumphant."

In the speech, devoted largely to matters of human survival, Carter said he and Desai want the agricultural colleges of their countries to work on joint development projects and come up with specific proposals in the next few months.

He specifically cited the regions of eastern India and Bangladesh where alternating droughts and floods have cut cruelly into food production.

Thousands of people lined the street as Carter went by motorcade to the Rajghat Samadhi, the memorial to Mohandas Gandhi.

Carter and his wife Rosalynn removed their shoes and walked to the flower-covered memorial, set in a sunken courtyard banked by bougainvillea. As they stood, heads bowed, a violin and flute played softly.

Embassy Group Addressed

At the American Embassy, where he hosted Desai at lunch, Carter talked to embassy families about his touching moments at the memorial. He called Gandhi "a man who represented in his simple, courageous and dedicated life, principles that don't change."

"He represents principles that I try to keep ever-present in my own mind — the hope for peace, nonviolence, pure truth, dedication, compassion, understanding, love, simplicity."

"There is a sense in the world in that moral leadership derives from the Indian people in a direct and continuing fashion," Carter said.

Dogs Share Perils Of New Decree

MADRID (UPI) — If you smoke or own a dog in Madrid, beware — it can get expensive.

Under a city ordinance that came into force on New Year's Day, a $12.50 fine will be levied by policeman on anyone caught littering the street. This includes throwing away paper or cigarette stubs and allowing a dog to dirty the sidewalk.

Litter Baskets Installed

Authorities have installed 60,000 litter baskets in the city —but no advice has been given to dog owners what to do about the daily needs of their animals.

The mayor's office is backing the "keep the city clean" campaign with reinforced efforts to hose down streets and sidewalks every night.

In another campaign, city authorities are cracking down on illegal parking, long a scourge of Madrid traffic.

Madrillenos are used to tearing up parking tickets since such fines were never collected.

Cars Being Towed

But last month, the city signed a five-year contract with a private company for the towing away of illegally parked cars.

Close to 1,000 cars a day are now being removed to a parking lot seven miles outside Madrid where they can be picked up on payment of a $25 towing fee and a fine of at least $12.50.

As a result, illegal parking is quickly decreasing.

Whites Now Outnumber Blacks On Death Row

WASHINGTON (UPI) — There now are more whites than blacks on death row in the Uncted States, according to an NAACP Legal Defense Fund survey.

But some researchers claim discrimination — of a subtler sort than the color of a convicted murderer's skin — still determines who gets the death penalty.

Murderers of white people are far more likely to be sentenced to death than killers of blacks, according to preliminary findings of a study being conducted by the Center for Applied Social Research at Northeastern University in Boston.

The Legal Defense Fund, which offers free counsel to indigent inmates appealing death sentences, said as of Dec. 15, a total 407 persons were awaiting execution in 23 states.

It said while more blacks than whites have drawn the death penalty throughout U.S. history, 183 or 44.96 percent of those on death row under today's laws are black, and 202 or nearly 50 percent are white. Of the remainder, 14 are described as Spanish-surnamed, two as native Americans and six others as of unknown heritage.

The percentage of blacks among those facing execution remains far out of proportion to their race's 10 percent of the population.

But John Carroll, a lawyer at the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala., said it is "less disproportionate" than before for a variety of reasons, including elimination of the death penalty for rape — a sentence that was applied almost exclusively to blacks.

Poverty Plays Role

"The common denominator today seems to be poverty and the race of the victim," Carroll said, rather than the race of the offender.

"The death penalty is almost exclusively reserved for killers of white people," he said. "Prosecutors and juries don't see killers of black people as reason to impose the death penalty."

The poverty law center is supporting a study headed by William Bowers, director of Northeastern's Center for Applied Social Research and author of the book "Executions in America."

Bowers says the center is checking the race of all homicide victims, and the fate of their killers in the courts, in Florida, Georgia and Texas, the states whose capital punishment laws were upheld by the Supreme Court in 1976.

Patterns Emerge

Final figures have not yet been compiled and crosschecked, he said, but patterns have emerged.

"We found out, for example, that people who kill blacks seldom get to death row.

"The pattern used to be that discrimination was against offenders. If a black man came in on a murder charge, he would get a death sentence. A white man would be much less likely to. Now it appears that a new form of discrimination has emerged — not in who did the killing, but who got killed."

Of the more than 90 persons on death row in Florida, fewer than 10 killed blacks, he said, and the pattern is similar in Georgia and Texas.

Italy's Kidnappings Set Record In 1977

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Italy's kidnapping business, a booming industry in a sluggish economy, netted an estimated $36 million, more than many major businesses and most of it profit, in 1977.

Police put the haul since 1970, when the kidnapping rate increased sharply, at over $175 million. The overhead is low, and there aren't any taxes.

There have been 326 abductions for ransom reported in Italy since 1960. A record 72 of those were reported in 1977.

Most hostages were released unharmed after payment of huge ransoms.

But some have been killed and 17, kidnapped in 1976 and 1977, are still believed held. Negotiations for their release continue.

Mafia Backing Claimed

Police say the rings, backed by the Sicilian and Calabrian Mafia and sometimes by the common underworld, are hard to fight because of their tight and secretive organization and the willingness of the families of victims to deal secretly to ensure the safety of those kidnapped.

In one case, however, police recovered $250,000 in banknotes, which they traced to five different kidnappings, when a trunk broke open in the railway station of the north Italian town of Alessandria.

But the shipper was a Sardinian worker with no criminal record. He was arrested but provided no leads to the kingpins.

Two-thirds of the 1977 kidnappings were carried out in the triangle formed by the north Italian cities of Milan, Genoa and Turin, where many wealthy industrialists live.

Efforts by the government to seize properties of those abducted to prevent payment of ransoms, and the recent tendancy of wealthy Italians to hire bodyguards, have not slowed the pace of kidnappings.

"Many industrialists turned their villas into real fortified bunkers guarded by dogs, bodyguards and sophisticated electronic equipment. Yet they could hardly avoid abduction if a ring decided they are the target," a Milan police officer claimed.

"The ring can tag them for weeks until the right moment for the abduction comes, such as when they are defenseless even for half an hour," the officer added.

A police official said recently that only a better equipped and more efficient police force could defeat the kidnapping rings.

Fumes Fatal For Three Tank Cleaners

BENICIA, Calif. (UPI) — Three workers were killed and five others injured by a mysterious escape of fumes in a closed storage tank area at an Exxon refinery Monday, police reported.

Police chief Pierre Bidou said the fumes overcame the workers "and three expired." Two others were in "extremely critical" condition in the intensive care unit of Broadway Hospital in the nearby town of Vallejo, Bidou said.

The other three workers were reported in stable condition. Identities of the victims were withheld pending notification of relatives.

Bidou said three ambulances were rushed to the large refinery in this industrial town about 35 miles northeast of San Francisco Monday afternoon.

He said details of the accident were "fairly sketchy" but added that "there was no explosion."

"They were overcome by something. We don't know what," Bidou said.

Los Angeles Police Seek Comedy Star

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police tried to arrest comedian Richard Pryor Monday in connection with a reported shooting incident at his home but could not find him, an investigator said.

Police investigators went to Pryor's Northridge home to deliver an arrest warrant — issued Monday — for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon. At first they were told the comedian was asleep, but then another man told them Pryor was not at home, investigator Lewis Bobbitt said.

Bobbitt said the investigators could have checked the house for Pryor but decided against it. Bobbitt said he hoped Pryor would turn himself in.

Await Word From Lawyer

But by Monday evening, Bobbitt said, "He's still not in custody and we're awaiting word from his lawyer."

Asked whether officers were pursuing Pryor or simply waiting for him to surrender, Bobbitt said, "We'll go after him tomorrow."

A complaint against Pryor was filed Sunday by two friends of his wife, Bobbitt said. The two friends were identified as Beverly Clayborn, 25, of Los Angeles and Edna Solomon, 37, of Washington state.

Bobbitt said that neighbors had heard shots Sunday morning and called police. "Witnesses revealed that the source of the shots was Pryor in a dispute with his wife and two female houseguests," Bobbitt said.

Chased By Car

"Witnesses said the three women were ejected from the house by force, chased around the yard in a car by Pryor and shot at when they escaped into the street," he continued. "Earlier, witnesses said, Pryor had rammed the victims' car with his Mercedes Benz five or six times."

Pryor has become a star in recent years with irreverent comedy routines, movies and a short-lived television series. The 36-year-old comedian married Deborah McGuire, 25, last September.

Downtown Fire Cause Still Undetermined

Fire department officials Monday still were investigating the cause of a three-alarm fire that kept firemen battling a downtown blaze for more than six hours Sunday.

A department spokesman said the blaze broke out about 7:45 p.m. Sunday in the 800-block of Broadway, and before firemen could contain it, flames spread to almost every business on that block.

Fire Chief Tom Foster said the blaze apparently began near a stairwell in the Commercial Hotel, a vacant rooming house on the block.

Within minutes after their arrival, firemen had that part of the fire contained and thought the fire would soon be out. Badly-burned support beams, however, gave way, causing the stairwell to plunge through the third story floor down to the second floor, and the flames were re-ignited.

The hotel, Huber's Pawn Shop and Chandler's Cafe suffered fire damage. Lubbock Sales and a barber shop in the block also suffered extensive smoke and water damage, Foster said.

About 30 firemen fought the blaze until nearly 1 a.m. Monday, and more units were called back to the scene about 8 a.m. when flames erupted from the smouldering ruins.

Injured DeBakey's Conditon 'Good'

HOUSTON (UPI) — Heart specialist Dr. Michael E. DeBakey, who suffered smoke inhalation and superficial burns in a New Year's Eve fire at his home, was listed in good condition at Methodist Hospital Monday night.

Officials at the hospital said the renowned 69-year-old surgeon was injured when he went back inside the three-story house to make sure no one else was inside after he, his wife and 10-month-old child had escaped unharmed.

"He's doing quite well," said Frank Weaver, director of public affairs at the hospital. "He was treated for superficial burns, which were really quite minor. Neither his eyes nor his hands were damaged."

The Saturday night blaze apparently began in the living room of the 12-room house after a fireplace ember set a rug on fire, and the blaze spread to a Christmas tree and the downstairs area of the home, officials said.

"The living room was totally destroyed and extensive damage was done to the lower part of the house," said Weaver.

Unlike John F. Kennedy, who suffered from a chronic back problem and hauled his own bed from country to country, Carter sleeps in whatever the host country offers.

And, unlike Lyndon B. Johnson, who carried with him his favorite cushioned chair, Carter sits in whatever seats are offered.

However, the Secret Service has taken special, bulletproof automobiles for Carter to use in each city he visits.

When Desai drove away from a private meeting with the president in a small, white, four-passenger car, Carter's gleaming, black, and very big limousine was waiting for the president nearby.

Carter, asked what he thought of the prime minister's car in comparison with his own, said, "I like it better."

Speaking of cars, when the shah of Iran met with Carter Sunday morning in Tehran, he drove a Rolls-Royce himself, with his wife at his side, to the palace where the session took place.

Although this is the dry season in New Delhi, and insects have not been a problem, a fly was buzzing around a table as Carter and Desai sat down to lunch.

So, a waiter deftly reached between them with a fly swatter and killed the fly with one shot. As he reached between the two leaders to lift it off the table, with photographers recording the scene, Carter said of the waiter, "He knows how to get on the evening news."

Body Of Coed Found In Car; Driver Held

ONEONTA, N.Y. (AP) — A four-week search for a missing colleged student ended when authorities stopped a car in which they found her frozen body, police said Monday.

Police charged the driver, a man previously convicted of rape and under indictment on other sex charges, with murder.

Rickey Allen Knapp, 26, who had worked summers as a tree surgeon, was arrested Sunday and charged with murdering Linda Velzy, 18.

State trooper Robert Dabreau of the Bureau of Criminal Investigation signed a deposition stating that Knapp killed Miss Velzy on Dec. 9 by striking her in the throat with his fist. Dabreau's desposition claimed that Knapp admitted the killing.

Attempted To Move Body

Police said Knapp was trying to move Miss Velzy's fully clothed body from the densely wooded Case Hill Road area of Franklin to the Winney Hill Road area of Oneonta, which had already been searched by authorities using bloodhounds.

State police Capt. Joseph Strojnowski said Miss Velzy, a freshman at Oneonta State College, was given a ride by Knapp Dec. 9 in downtown Oneonta where she was hitchhiking a ride for the mile back to campus.

Debreau's deposition stated that Knapp had served three years in Attica state prison on a rape conviction stemming from an incident in which he picked up a female hitchhiker.

Faced Other Charges

At the time of Miss Velzy's disappearance, Knapp was free on $5,000 bail after being indicted on charges of sodomy and unlawful imprisonment, Otsego County sheriff's deputies said.

Miss Velzy and Knapp had not known one another, according to Strojnowski, who said, "There was no evidence that she was held hostage."

Miss Velzy had been looking at an apartment she was considering renting in downtown Oneonta and decided to hitchhike a ride back to campus but was reported missing when she failed to keep a date that night with her boyfriend, authorities said.

Women's Lib Affords Lavish Living

(EDITOR'S NOTE — Financial results are coming in from the women's lib demand for equal pay for equal work, and women aren't the only ones benefiting. The biggest winners are professional couples. Their double incomes are creating a new kind of middle-class wealth.)

By DANIEL Q. HANEY

BOSTON (AP) — For many upward-bound middle-class Americans, Christine and Richard Lunt live a dream: At age 33 they have a $120,000 house in the suburbs, take winter trips to Florida and own an expensive foreign car.

Richard Lunt is an engineer for a consulting firm. His salary is good but not lavish.

A few years ago, many well-paying, men-dominated positions began opening to women. Now the financial result is becoming clear. It is creating a new kind of middle-class wealth in America.

'We'll have freedom, and you can only have that if you have enough money to back you...'

Women become professionals; professionals marry professionals; and between them, they join two medium salaries into a single fat one.

Though still small, this category is growing quickly. The federal Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that there were 686,000 professional couples in 1965. By last year, the number had grown to 1.2 million.

But two workers in the same family creates added expenses. Some couples with children say the first $15,000 earned goes to higher taxes, housekeepers and-or babysitters. But Christine Lunt wouldn't have it any other way.

"One of the most important things is the freedom from worry," she says. "We've never worried about whether we'll eat tomorrow. We've never worried about things that we can't afford. If we can't afford something, it's probably a luxury we don't need."

Her husband, Richard, adds, "It's not gross luxury, but we have enough money to do everything that we want to do."

The Lunts are typical of this new version of the good life. They are still young but well established in their careers. They have a big new house on a wooded lot in suburban Acton. They drive a Mercedes. They enjoy giving expensive presents to friends and relatives.

And though they don't boast, they're aware of the style that separates them from fellow workers who support families on one professional income.

"We have more disposable income for things like joining a tennis club," says Richard. "And I never mow the lawn. It's a decision we can make to hire somebody to do that."

Some of these couples already are thinking about building enough savings to slow down or even retire in middle age.

This is a goal of Lucille Zanghi, 28, a Boston stockbroker. She and her husband, a computer salesman, will make about $50,000 this year. And next year, with higher commissions, they expect to earn $80,000.

"One of the reasons why I think it's worth working very hard right now and making a lot of money," says Mrs. Zanghi, "is that we feel at some point in our lives ... maybe 20 years from now, we're going to be able to say To hell with it. Let's go to Martha's Vineyard and raise golden retrievers or live in Europe for a while.' We'll have freedom, and you can only have that if you have enough money to back you."

The Zanghis have no children, so their goals are a little different than those of Lita Nelsen, her husband and their two children. For Mrs. Nelsen, a chemical engineer in Bedford, Mass., the fun of two incomes is the little luxuries. She and her husband, an electrical engineer, have a combined income of more than $60,000 a year. She says she likes the idea of being able to serve wine to dinner guests withoug, becking her bank balance.

"It's very middle-class living, but the difference is the freedom to spend trivially," she says. "We can go out to dinner and not worry about it. If I want to buy expensive shoes, I just go out and do it. Those kinds of purchases are made much more casually, and that's probably what the money buys us more than anything else."

Patricia Light, a psychologist at Harvard Business School, says some members of this new middle class don't know the meaning of an important economic factor: "They can't believe there is something called disposable income."

She adds: "There are many young couples who will start out saving the entire second income until they get ready to buy a house."

One such couple is Amy Abrahams and her husband, two years out of dental school, who are building a house in suburban Sharon.

Mrs. Abrahams worked as an insurance actuary while her husband was in school. After he went into practice, they found it easy to save money.

"Since we were used to living on one income, that habit carried over," Mrs. Abrahams said. Though they now make about $40,000, "we've tended to live on my income and save the other portion."

Still other couples say that two good incomes allow them to take risks, such as starting new careers that can lead to even bigger salaries.

In Newburyport, Linda Miller and her husband, Bill, both architects, are restoring a 250-year-old house. Instead of toiling nights and weekends, Bill quit his job and works on the house full time. His wife's $15,000 salary pays the bills.

When the house is finished, Bill plans to start his own firm, while his wife keeps her job. Then, if the new business succeeds, she will join him.

"It's a very big gamble," Bill says. "The trick will be for me to go out and accumulate enough work to justify Linda leaving. She's giving me the freedom to take that chance."

His wife adds that she likes the security of being able to change jobs if she wants to.

'If I say I can't stand my job, I'm going to quit tomorrow, I can do it...'

"It's important for me not to feel trapped," she says. "Having two of us working gives us that flexibility. If I say, 'I can't stand my job. I'm going to quit tomorrow,' I can do it."

But some couples find themselves competing for wages.

"There are a lot of ways in which couples can compete with each other," psychologist Light says, "money, visibility, status, more hurdles passed faster. But somehow, the notion of the woman outearning the man is hard for many couples to handle psychologically, and it's not just the man.

"There are relationships in which a woman's sense of her own husband's competence is very much tied to his earning power. There are a lot of young men who are very happy and proud for their wives to be doing something significant. But they don't want her to outearn him."

Adoption Problems Group Founded

An organization interested in the problems of children who are awaiting adoption has been formed in Lubbock.

Barbara Johnson, spokeswoman for the Lubbock Council on Adoptable Children, said tbat they are a group of individuals interested especially in easing the situation for the older and special child awaiting adoption.

"We're just trying to help the social workers," she added.

The group's first meeting is slated Jan. 16 at 7:30 p.m. at the Smithlawn Church of Christ. They will continue to meet on the third Monday of each month at the church.

Persons desiring more information about the volunteer group may call Johnson at 792-9902.

Rightwing Extremists Disrupt Settlement Attempt In Cyprus

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The sudden re-emergence of rightwing extremists with bombings and the kidnapping of the Cypiot president's son has thrown new complications onto the path of those seeking a settlement on Cyprus, a nation divided between its Greek and Turkish communities.

Even before the kidnapping on Dec. 14, prospects of a settlement were almost non-existent, with the peace talks between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots bogged down since April.

The renewal of activity by the rightwing Eoka-B guerrillas — dedicated to enosis, or union with Greece — is bound to make the Turkish side more reluctant than ever to make any of the concessions demanded by the Greek side for a compromise.

Eoka-B became active early in December by setting off four dynamite blasts at widely scattered British military installations on this island in the eastern Mediterranean.

Abduct President's Son

Then came the abduction of the son of Spyros Kyprianou, the Greek Cypriot president, threatening to execute him unless 25 jailed Eoka-B members were released and granted amnesty.

Kyprianou secured his son's release Dec. 18 by promising not to prosecute the kidnappers.

Eoka-B had been dormant since July 1974 when it temporarily overthrew the then-president, the late Archbishop Makarios, in a coup staged jointly with the military junta governing Greece at the time.

It was this seizure of power that provoked the Turkish invasion and continuing occupation of 35 percent of the territory of the island.

Claim Invasion Necessary

Turkey claimed the invasion was necessary to protect the 120,000 Turkish Cypriots — 18 percent of the population — who then lived scattered throughout the island. The ultimate result of the invasion, however, was the de facto partition of the island and the complete separation of the two communities.

During the invasion, 200,000 Greek Cypriots either fled or were forced by Turkish troops to abandon their homes in the north, leaving only 1,800 mainly elder kinsmen behind.

At the same time, 40,000 Turkish Cypriots living in the southern, Greek-Cypriot controlled region, moved north, where the whole Turkish minority now is congregated.

The Turkish-Cypriot state subsequently set up its own federated state in the region occupied by mainland Turks though this is not recognized by any foreign state except Turkey.

In a recently enacted law the federated state designated the abandoned Greek-Cypriot properties as "properties abandoned by foreigners not living in the Turkish federated state of Cyprus."

Distribute Title Deeds

It also started distributing ownership title deeds of these Greek-Cypriot properties to Turkish Cypriots and an estimated 30,000 mainland Turkish settlers, brought to the island in what the Cyprus central government charged was an attempt "to change the demographic structure" of Cyprus.

The basic cause of the deadlock in the intercommunal peace talks has been the refusal of the Turkish side to allow any of the Greek-Cypriot refugees to return to their homes, despite a series of United Nations General Assembly resolutions calling for their "urgent" return.

The Turkish argument is that past events have proved that the two communities cannot live together in peace.

The return of the refugees, it is maintained, would once again allow the Eoka-B to attack the Turkish minority, an argument likely to be repeated even more strongly with the underground's revival.

The two sides engaged in frequent bouts of intercommunal fighting in 1963-74, despite the presence of a U.N. peacekeeping force, accusing each other of atrocities.

Army Found Guilty

The Human Rights Commission of the Council of Europe, an organization seeking greater European unity, is reported to have found the Turkish army guilty of violations of human rights in Cyprus, ranging from mass executions, rapes, the forcible expulsion of the population, seizure of prle expulsion of the population, seizure of property and looting.

The commission's report was compiled following a formal complaint by the Cyprus government. It has not yet been published, but copies of the bulky document have been leaked to the press.

Consideration of the report by the foreign ministers' committee of the Council of Europe in 1978 could lead to Turkey's expulsion from the council.

The Cyprus government hopes such a possibility may increase international pressure on Turkey to make the necessary concessions for a Cyprus settlement, in return for a withdrawal of the Cyprus complaint.

Turkey Rejects Procedure

Turkey rejects the procedure adopted in investigating the Cyprus complaint, charging that the Human Rights Commission has failed to investigate charges of Greek Cypriot atrocities against the Turkish Cypriots.

Turkey also is under pressure from the United States to make concessions on Cyprus, but so far to no avail. The pressure has taken the form of a cutoff of the massive military aid provided to Turkey as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, ostensibly because it used U.S. weaponry to attack Cyprus in 1974.

Instead of making concessions, however, the Turkish side has dug in its heels and the intercommunal peace talks collapsed in an absolute deadlock last April. The Turkish-Cypriot leader, Raouf Denktash, frequently has charged that there can be no progress until the Greek side abandons what he calls its "propaganda war" against Turkey.

The basic problem dividing the two sides, apart from the Greek-Cypriot demand for the return of the refugees is the future structure of a Cyprus federated state and the extent of terriory to be retained by each community.

Central Government Urged

The Greek-Cypriot side proposed that the Turkish Cypriots keep 22 percent, instead of the 40 percent they now hold. It also insists on a strong central government to link the two-zone federation.

The Turkish side has so far refused to make any proposals on the territorial issue. It also rejects the central government demand, insisting on the establishment of what would in effect amount to two separate states, linked only through a ceremonial common president.

With presidential elections due in February the Greek Cypriot political leadership is unlikely to soften its demands for the right of the refugees to return.

Despite all the problems since 1974, the Greek Cypriots have recovered from the partition of the country, which deprived them of 70 percent of its productive capacity.

The refugees together with the rest of the Greek-Cypriot population have surpassed island-wide, pre-1974 production levels in their sector.

Inflation Remains Low

Unemployment is almost nonexistent. Inflation has remained among the lowest in the West and the economic boom is such that the government is considering importing foreign labor.

The boom in the Greek sector contrasts starkly with the Turkish-occupied region: tourist centers remain empty, factories are idle, farms are unproductive, and unemployment is up.

Turkish-Cypriot income is barely half that of Greek Cypriots.

"If the two sides found a way to settle their differences the whole island could boom once again, but it is hard to see any change in the present impasse in the forseeable future," said a Western diplomat who asked not to be named.

Soviet Apartment Construction Leaves Something To Be Desired

By EMIL SVEILIS

LENINGRAD, U.S.S.R. (UPI) — Ingosstrakh, the one and only insurunce company for foreigners in the Soviet Union, says I live in a five-year-old apartment building which has already partially collapsed.

The way I found out my building was not holding its own was when I filed an insurance claim on my home insurance policy issued by Ingosstrakh.

My genuine immitation Italian antique rococo mirror lay smashed on the floor because a piece of concrete wall had crumbled where it had hung.

The insurance agent shook his head in sympathy and promised to get in touch. A few days luter he sadly informed me his company was not about to pay the claim.

He told me to read the fine print under exclusions. Sure enough, the policy excluded "damage arising from the total collapse or the partial collapse of the building."

"You mean...?" I asked.

"That's the word from Moscow," he said.

"Just because my mirror fell off the wall, are you saying the building has partially collapsed?"

"That's it. We won't pay."

The building I live in is exclusively for foreign diplomats, businessmen and high placed Soviets. But in this allegedly superior apartment building pieces of substandard concrete walls often pop out, producing indentations that look as if someone fired a gun into them.

In the Soviet Union, one gets used to windows that don't close properly, doors that don't latch, handles that come off, locks that don't work, floorboards you can see through and radiators that don't produce heat.

Soviets publicly acknowledge the problem of new apartment house construction. The houses are built so shoddily that even before anyone moves in, major repairs have to be done by the housing authority.

The main effort is for quantity, not quality. Statistics show 1.6 million apartments here. Figures are not available for the number shared by more than one family but officials say every Leningrader should have his own apartment by 1990.

Even after new construction or remodeling, tenants are known to spend hard-earned rubles to have moonlighting carpenters, plumbers and electricians make their apartments "liveable."

A Soviet friend proudly told me he had been granted a new apartment. Several days later he grimly reported the kitchen sink was falling off the wall, the floors were warped and the toilet was not connected.

He contacted his neighborhood complaint bureau which told him there was a two month backlog for repairs. He privately lined up a carpenter and a plumber.

"I ended up paying 300 rubles ($403.00) to get the work done," he said. "No wonder it takes so long to get anything done officially. Everyone is working on the black (moonlighting), even during working hours."

An American diplomat living in our building complained he had mushrooms growing on the bathroom floor. The bathroom floors are tiles, supposedly set in cement. But instead of cement, wet sand was poured on top and the excess swept away. With moisture, the sand gets wet. Fungus grows.

My family moved into a never before occupied apartment in the fall of 1976. Since 1972, when it was built, two windows had stood wide open. In rain, sleet and snow, part of the floor had buckled. The paint was peeling from the nearest wall.

The floors, a beautiful herringbone parquet, had never been sanded or lacquered.

"Of course we'll do a remont (repair)," said the man from the Soviet agency which runs the building. "But to get the floors lacqured will cost $1,500." That was after our furniture was moved in and meant moving it out again. I had my company ship 20 liters of lacquer and did the floors myself.

Only one of the 10 doors closes properly. All windows have to be sealed with imported heavy-duty wide-band masking tape in winter. That, and three spuce heaters, keeps the temperature just above 63 degrees.

The sealing of the windows also is protection against diesel fumes from a lot just outside where 150 city buses run their engines all night in the sub-zero weather.

Program Aids Inmates With Legal Questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — A five-year-old program that provides legal aid to prison inmates in six states has cut sharply into a court case backlog and has reduced the influence of "jailhouse lawyers," the government said Monday.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration said more than 90 percent of inmate legal questions have been settled through consultation and negotiation in the six states without requiring court appearances.

In the period surveyed, from July 1, 1974, to Sept. 30, 1975, the LEAA said the following number of inmate grievances were settled without going to court: in Georgia, 97.9 percent or 5,924 cases; Kansas, 92.1 percent or 2,816 cases; Vermont, 81.9 percent or 1,422 cases; Florida, 99.7 percent or 541 cases; South Carolina, 94.9 percent or 1,109 cases. Minnesota also is in the program but LEAA said no figures were available for the number of cases there.

Jerry R. Shelor, vice president of Studies in Justice, of Washington, which started the program with an LEAA grant, said the legal service has reduced the power of inmate "writ writers" or "jailhouse lawyers."

"Inmates wanting legal advice may get it and walk away without owing a return favor to the institution or another inmate," he said. "Additionally, the inmate is usually better satisfied when he receives an answer from someone with legal training and experience."

Law school students participate in the program under supervision by attorneys.

The program was begun in 1972 and the LEAA has provided over $2 million in funds. The six states now are spending $753,000 for the legal services.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By SAM SHULSKY

Q. I was widowed a year ago and left with large amounts of low-priced stocks. None shows a profit. To add to my troubles I have since bought some real estate stock which has gone down. I had been told that this stock's gain would more than make up the loss on the issues I had inherited. I know that selling stock before six months means higher taxes. My intentions were to sell all the issues and reinvest in bonds and savings accounts.

A. I can't even help you arrive at how much money you have to reinvest because I can't find the first four stocks. Your late husband evidently liked to take wild chances (which may have been perfectly proper for him to do). But these stocksd are not for you and the unsuitability of the additional one you were sold, I should think, is sufficient reason to take action against the broker and his company.

As for capital gains taxes: I'm afraid you have none to worry about. (Besides, the holding period for long-term — reduced rate — taxes on gains has now been extended to one year.) But forget all the tax items, anyway, you can take your losses any time, which you should do as soon as possible and then reinvest whatever money you can salvage in an insured savings account. And stay away from that broker.

Q. We are in our 70s with paid-up life insurance with a cash value of $10,000. We've been told to cash it in and put the proceeds into a common stock mutual fund.

A. That would be one answer — assuming you are in the position to take the risk of equity ownership. Otherwise, I'd favor putting the money into 5-year Treasury bonds where there would be less market risk.

Q. We're in our 80s, have just sold our home and are worried about inflation. Would $20,000 in gold coins be a hedge against inflation? If so, how is it transported, stored?

A. Gold is considered the classic hedge against inflation and can be defended as such — If you pick your spots. If you bought it at the start of 1975 and still hold it, it hasn't been a hedge against the virulent inflation we've experienced since then. In fact, it would still show you a loss. If you bought it a year ago, you would have a profit.

It would have to be transported, insured, and kept safely in vaults. There would be no current income. Frankly, in your case, I should think the $1,700 a year income this money could provide from good bonds would do as well for you in offsetting inflation, which is now officially reckoned at less than an 8½ percent annual rate.

• • •

Q. Aren't we senior citizens being taxed twice on our securities? We paid taxes on our earnings when we were working and now we pay again on the income from money we've already paid taxes on.

A. Yep. Not only senior citizens but junior citizens as well. And not only on securities income, but income from any investment source. and not only on income, but on outgo. (You pay a sales tax on a pair of shoes you buy worth interest — taxed — from money which was taxed when you first earned it.)

The adage that there is nothing certain in life but death and taxes is not merely a "wisecrack."

• • •

Q. I'm interest in some tax-exempt investment but have been discouraged by a 4 percent buying commission required of investors in a tax-exempt fund. Aren't there no-load funds available?

A. There are no-load mutual funds which invest in tax-exempt bonds. The 4 percent commission you mention applies to some of the unit trusts which hold tax-exempt bonds. There are two different metholds of investing in municipal bond funds.

The first, the mutual, is a managedd fund (issues are bought and sold) and regardless of whether or not it charges a buying fee does charged a management fee which runs ½ to 1 percent a year.

The unit trust, which holds a fixed portfolio of municipal bonds, generally charges a buying commission, but no management fee thereafter.

It's up to you to decides which fund you want to buy.

Americans Reject Free Health Care Paid For Out Of Taxes

By LOUIS HARRIS

While most Americans would like to keep the nation's health system without major change, a significant minority would prefer to see a comprehensive national health insurance program passed by Congress. Americans reject creation of a national health service, under which everyone would receive free health care, paid for out of taxes.

For a number of years, Sen. Edward Kennedy has been developing legislation to produce a comprehensive national health insurance program, with the support of organized labor and other powerful groups. The American Medical Association, private drug companies and industry groups have gone on record opposing the Kennedy health plan.

The Harris Survey also shows considerable support for moves that would fill three gaps which people feel exist in the currentd health system:

—A requirement that all employers provide health insurance to all their employees.

—Government-provided health insurance for those who are unemployed.

—Current coverage in the private sector extended to take care of heavy expenses that might arise from a long and serous illness.

Recently, the Harris Survey questioned a cross section of 1,536 adults on five alternative approaches to the health care issue. The results show moderate but not decisive backing for the various proposals that have received the most organized support, although a nationalized health plan would meet with clear-cut opposition.

—By 39-32 percent, a plurality is positive on "the present system, which consists of Medicare and Medicaid, as well as coverage bought from private insurance companies by individuals, unions and the companies people work for." An additional 23 percent feel the current system is "adequate." This would indicate that 62 percent of Americans find the ongoing health care system acceptable, but with only 39 percent expressing real enthusiasm for it.

—By a narrow 37-36 percent, a plurality of the public rejects the idea of keeping "the present system with two changes: a law requiring employers to provide health insurance to all their employees, and the government to provide insurance to everyone who is not employed." However, another 17 percent would find such an amended health system "adequate," meaning that a majority of 54 percent would not be unhappy if the current system were kept but were reinforced by compulsory coverage of all employed people by their employers and by government coverage for the unemployed.

—By a close 39-34 percent, a plurality gives high changes: employers providing health insurance to all employees, with coverage extended to take care of catastrophic illness, and government-provided insurance for the unemployed." An additional 16 percent would find such an amended system "adequate." Thus, 55 percent of the public could live with this alternative.

—By 42-39 percent, a plurality would opt for a national health insuranced program "covering all medical and hospital expenses paid for by federal taxes; under such a program, the government would control hospital costs, physicians' fees and other charges." Another 9 percent would find such a comprehensive health insuranced plan "adequate." Therefore, a majority of 50 percent would find such a plan acceptable.

—By 49-31 percent, however, a clear plurality of the public would reject "a national health service under which everyone would get free health care paid for out of taxes; in such an arrangement, doctors would work for salaries paid for by the government, and hospitals would be managed by the government." An additional 8 percent would find such a nationalized health plan "adequate," adding up to only 39 percent who feel such a scheme would be acceptable.

It is apparent from these results that there is no clear-cut mandate for any one particular national health system, including either the current system or a comprehensive health insurance program. But public opinion could be tipped either toward major change in the system or toward the status quo depending on the outcome of a nationa debate that would ensue if President Carter were to press the issue for resolution or if Congress were to report out and vote on the Kennedy bill.

Water Called Key To Better Coffee

LOMBARD, Ill. (AP) — "If water doesn't taste good as it flows from the tap, it won't taste good in your coffee," says Richard E. Weickart, technical director of the Water Quality Association. "Over 98 percent of brewed coffee is water, so the kind of water you use in making it is of critical importance."

Noting that the quality of drinking water is increasingly coming under question, Weickart said, "A home water filter, using activated carbon, can remove unwanted tastes and odors as well as many unwanted chemicals. Without these impurities, coffee's flavor can shine through."

STOOD STILL — The Leaning Tower in Pisa, Italy, is viewed by tourists, attracted by its architecture and incline of 17 feet off the perpendicular. Leaning Tower Tilt Holds Fast In '77

PISA, Italy (AP) — The Leaning Tower of Pisa, which leans 17 feet off the perpendicular, stood still in 1977, Italian scientists reported.

It was the first time since sophisticated devices to measure the movement of the 804-year-old tower were installed in 1913 that the lean didn't increase. But the government is going ahead with a project to strengthen its base in an effort to prevent any possibility of the tower toppling.

Professor Giuseppe Toniolo, in charge of monuments on Pisa's Square of Miracles, announced that the inclination of the 179-foot-high landmark is exactly the same as it was on Dec. 31, 1976.

Another tower watcher, Professor Livio Trevisan of Pisa University, said Monday that undoubtedly the tower was subject to some slight movement from vibrations during the past year.

But he noted that the rate of tip had been slowing, averaging half a millimeter, or just over nine-hundredths of an inch, each year from 1974 through 1976 and said the halt was not unexpected. It tipped more than twice that in some previous years.

The most likely explanation for the halt, experts said, was stabilization in the water level in the stratum 200-300 feet below the tower. In the past the level has been subject to sharp changes, usually in the summer, when it has dropped as much as 10 feet.

Scientists are hesitant to make predictions about the tower, which began to lean almost as soon as it went up in the 12th century because the subsoil shifted.

"There's always the possibility of an earthquake," said Trevisan.

The government ran a save-the-tower contest a few years ago, attracting 3,000 entries including such schemes as freezing the surrounding ground and erecting a supporting statue. But none was considered feasible.

Rejected out of hand are any proposals to straighten the tower, which attracts 100,000 tourists each year.

Scientists To Check Sunflower 'Wiggle'

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Scientists are planning to send 20 sunflower plants on a space shot in an attempt to solve the mystery of why they wiggle.

As plants grow, their tips weave back and forth as if struggling to stay on a straight line. Scientists call it nutation.

"The tip of the elongating shoot moves in a helix," explained Dr. Allan H. Brown, a plant pathologist at the University of Pennsylvania. Besides being a very tiny motion, it happens slowly — one complete cycle takes 100 minutes.

Charles Darwin, developer of the theory of evolution, noticed the wiggle when he studied plants 100 years ago. He concluded it was innate behavior. Others have tried to explain it as a response to the earth's gravity, but the question has not been resolved.

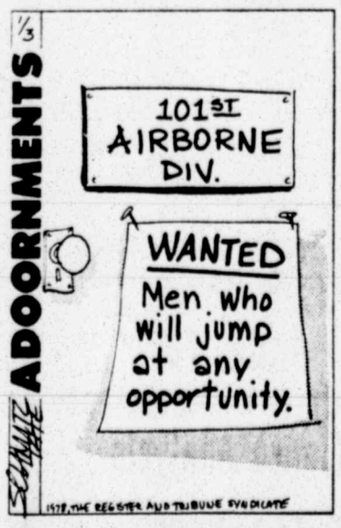

Now Brown hopes to find the answer by turning off gravity for his 20 sunflower shoots when he sends them on the 1980 U.S.-European Spacelab mission and monitors their growth with time-lapse photography.

Spacelab is the next generation of manned space vehicle, using a shuttle craft that can go into orbit and return to earth over and over again. A seven-passenger craft is expected to carry 60 to 80 experiments.

"If the motion is a response to gravity we should notice something else in a gravity-free environment," Brown said in a interview. "We might see a random motion or a wobble or less of the motion we see under normal gravity. But if the motion continues in a weightless situation, then Darwin was right, and nutation is an innate characteristic of plants."

Meanwhile, Brown and his associates have been trying the opposite experiment, artificially increasing gravity on growing plants. Using specially designed centrifuges, he found plants made the same spiraling motion at up to 16 G's — 16 times the force of gravity.

"Plants are more resistant than animals," he said.

Hints from Heloisė

Dear Heloise:
I had always had difficulty handling adhesive-backed paper until I caught on to laying it out flat, peeling off the protective paper to expose the sticky side, then laying the items to be laminated face down on the sticky paper.

Apply a bit of pressure and trim the adhesive-backed paper from the edges by cutting around the items.

I can do several yards — the entire length of my kitchen counter — of posters, cards and other teaching aids in a very short time this way with never a wrinkle or bubble.

This is the discovery of the century.

Next time you want to use the adhesive-backed paper to laminate something why not try "Teach's" easy method and save your precious energy for other tasks. — Heloise

Dear Heloise:
The twist ties that are used on storage bags and garbage bags come in many beautiful colors.

I use them for book markers in my cook books, magazines, etc. — Jewell Lyons

Dear Heloise:
We always have a lot of hard Christmas candy left over so I started putting it into plastic bags according to the kinds I had.

Then I put the bag into a covered candy dish. When we want candy now we select the kind, hit the bag lightly on the counter top and the pieces separate easily.

No sticky hunks stuck to the dish and no broken dishes. No wasted candy either! — Shirley Kiger

Dear Heloise:
Since Christmas wasn't Christmas without fruitcake, I bought my supplies after the holidays at a reduced price, bake, then freeze the fruitcake.

The following November I thaw them and wrap them in cheesecloth soaked in brandy. They are perfect by Christmas for a fraction of the cost. — Margaret O'Neill

If you don't have the time to bake or just aren't much of a baker, buy the ready-made fruitcakes when they are on sale and freeze them until next Christmas. They keep perfectly. — Heloise

Dear Heloise:
Keep the address stickers off letters and cards from relatives and friends.

Paste or tape them in your address book. Saves time and space. — Mrs. Ida C. Tedlock

Dear Heloise:
This is a practice I use to avoid misdated checks.

When December ends, I enter the new year in he proper space for several dozen blank checks in advance.

Certainly avoids mistakes I had made in the past. — Anne Russell

Dear Heloise:
Instead of throwing away my lovely Christmas cards I cut them smaller, using as much of the picture as possible and then cut around the edges with my pinking shears.

These make nice name tags for gifts.

I package some of these tags for gifts to my friends or to sell at church bazaars.

Tune In Tomorrow

By JON-MICHAEL REED

NEW YORK — ABC-TV is hoping that the New Year will bring with it the title of daytime television ratings champ. CBS has perenially held the leading reins in the daytime race, but ABC is moving up fast. For several weeks in late 1977 ABC managed to surge past CBS's line-up in ratings shares. The number one prime-time network fully intends to maintain its dynamic daytime pace, but there are a few stumbling blocks.

"Ryan's Hope" and "All My Children" are solid winners for the network, even though "AMC" has dipped in ratings every now and then. The reason may be its hour length. All of the hour serials have experienced a drop in ratings as opposed to their previous half-hour version ratings. Most notable is NBC's one-time champ, "Days of Our Lives," which has perked up lately, even though it doesn't begin to approach the audience size it attracted in its half-hour years.

On January 16, the network's "One Life to Live" and "General Hospital" will expand from their present 45-minute versions to an hour's length each. "OLTL" has recently displayed revived strength after floundering for at least a year in the ratings. The show's vigorous new storylines have undoubtedly contributed to regaining strong audience approval, but whether the plots will continue to hold interest for five hours a week is a big gamble for such a freshly revived serial.

In addition to the new hour format, "General Hospital" must contend with a steadily declining audience and near panic as far as its storylines are concerned. Last month the show had its third headwriter changeover in one year. There is always a switch in story emphasis when new writers arrive, and there is usually a glut of character exits and new character entrances. Since the serial form depends on audience identification with established characters, such tinkering results in audience alienation. Unless the new writers can attract a fresh audience, there's nowhere for the show to go but down. And that's exactly where "GH" has plummeted in the last year or so. If anyone can save the 14-year-old warhorse it will be the recently reinstated headwriter, Douglas Marland, who shared a writing Emmy two years ago for "Another World" and who last contributed to scripting "The Doctors." Of course, that show had writing headaches, also, so Marland was replaced by Mel and Ethel Brez, who had never scripted a soap opera prior to several months of intensive "training nd development" in the form as a prelude to taking over as "The Doctors" headwriters.

Housecleaning on "GH" has already begun with the exits of Brett Halsey (as Adam Streeter) and Leslie Wood (as Edna Hadley). Additions and other deletions are forthcoming.

ABC's "The Edge of Night," a superior serial effort, also seems in trouble. It has already been canceled by dozens of local stations, and it faces stiff competition in most cities from NBC's newest serial effort, "For Richer, For Poorer."

Serial eyes will definitely be upon ABC's daytime line-up in the next few weeks. If the network can pull off a permanent daytime ratings coup, there will be much rejoicing for stockholders and much-deserved plaudits for Fred Silverman, ABC's Entertainment's president, who is personally devoting all-out efforts to accomplish a historical-for-daytime win for ABC.

The holidays were not kind to John Gabriel (Seneca Beaulac on "Ryan's Hope"). The actor caught a flu bug that infect his wife, Sandy (Edna Thornton on "All My Children" — and their children. While taping a segment of the serial, John collapsed in a faint and had to have stitches for his banged-up nose and forehead. The Gabriels recovered, however, and John jets to Charleston, S.C., on January 9 to host a March of Dimes telethon.

John's screen lover, Nancy Addison (Jill Coleridge), had a more pleasant holiday treat. She filmed a leading role in an upcoming feature period movie, "Private Eye," with James Coburn and Oscar-winner Beatrice Straight.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. GEORGE C. THOSTESON

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can you discuss what might be wrong with a six-year-old boy who is skinny and has a fruitish-smelling breath. He has not been checked yet. Could the breath be connected with the fact that he is so thin? He has not much of an appetite, but does have a thirst for water? — Mrs. L.H.

This lad should be tested for diabetes, especially if you have a history of it in your family. His leanness, the thirst, and acetone (fruity) breath can add up to this.

The breath odor may indicate ketones (KEE-tones) in his blood. They are forerunners of the acetone. It is difficult to explain in this space. I'd rather refer you to my booklet on the subject, for a fuller explanation. Briefly, there is inadequate utilization of the carbohydrates. As a result, the body falls back on other energy sources (as fats), which leads to the acetone symptoms.

Ordinarily, juvenile diabetes comes on rather suddenly with dramatic signs of acidosis (high acid content in the blood). Lethargy and coma often follow if not treated promptly. Have the little fellow examined promptly.

Another thought: if the boy is not diabetic, his diet may lack carbohydrate foods — a possible factor in the thinness. On the diabetic side of the coin, acetone in the blood can suppress the appetite.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I am a healthy woman of 67, but I do have a bowel problem. I use flax seed and unprocessed bran for bulk. My problem is that to start a movement I must strain so hard that I get hemorrhoids. I have tried using vaseline as a lubricant, but that doesn't help. I also take olive oil with a little lemon juice. Is that good for a problem like this? — F.D.

Three suggestions that might help:
1. Eat more fruit — raw or cooked
2. Insert a glycerine suppository to lubricate the anal canal.
3. Try on of the bulk-producing medicines (Metamucil or a preparation containing dioctysulfasuccinate).

Olive oil, with or without the lemon, has no effect. It is normally digested before it reaches the lower bowel. Besides, it might mean needless calories. If these measures don't help, see my booklet, "The Way to Stop Constipation," for further hints. Send 35 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to me, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611. Best to to find the answer to your constipaton before the hemorrhoids become chronic.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: In a TV talk show this celebrity mentioned a new type of surgery for the hard of hearing who were born with nerve damage. Our son was born with nerve damage. We have taken him to see an ear doctor, and he told us nothing could he done. Do you know anything about this surgery? — Mrs. J.H.

The obvious thing to do is to write to the network that carried the show and ask for the address of the celebrity who made the remark.

Then you should have the boy examined at a hearing department of a major medical center. There is one in your city, I know. There the degree of nerve damage can be assessed.

There are procedures, some new, that can be attempted if the nerve damage is not complete. I think, though, that the otologist you consulted would have mentioned it if he though it was feasible. The specialists at the center can advise you further. Hearing aids can be of some help, even for nerve deafness, no matter what the age.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can you get leukemia from cats? I have kept cats for the past 14 years. — Mrs. H.R.

Studies do show that certain youngsters with leukemia have had sick cats as pets. Ther is a form of lymphoma (leukemia) found in cats. It is though a cat can transmit the virus to humans.

Of course there is no problem if your cats are healthy and well-cared for. If you have a sick animal, it should be examined by a veterinarian. He can rule out the leukemia-type condition. No fear from healthy cats.

Never take a chance on diabetes! For a better understanding of this disease, write to Dr. Thosteson, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611, for a copy of his booklet, "Diabetes — The Sneaky Disease." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 35 cents.

Dr. Thosteson welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

Lake Superior Fish Studies May Help Food Supply

ITHACA, N.Y. (UPI) — Are you tired of the same old "meat and potatoes" routine? Then try a Sloppy Jonas. Or a mullet stroganoff.

Researchers at Cornell University's College of Agriculture and Life Sciences are experimenting with Lake Superior mullet and other fish in an effort to utilize more fully the world's food supply.

Mullet, dog fish, skate wing, sea robins, ocean pout, red hake, cod and other fish with equally bizarre names don't sound too appetizing, the scientists admit.

"Some of the fish don't have very appealing names," said Daniel Whitaker, a chief researcher in the college's department of agricultural economics. "But a lot of fish today is under-utilized. We fall short in using our food to the fullest."

In the last three years, agricultural sciences researchers at Cornell have concocted a wide variety of seafood dishes from fish generally considered too small or bony for eating.

"We take species of fish that fishermen would usually toss back into the lake," Whitaker said. "But those species can be better used."

The research has produced some high-quality, high-protein fish products, according to Whitaker.

The fish, deboned by a Midwestern supplier, was offered at 89 cents a pound. About 3,500 pounds were sold in Rochester alone during the 12-week period.

Whitaker said the response from consumers was "absolutely delightful — we had a hard time keeping up with the demand."

"The people were very enthusiastic," Whitaker said. "Housewives, especially, saw a new way to use fish."

But what about its taste?

The crispies, made with minced mullet — or cod if the mullet supply runs low — look like flattened marshmallows. They will be seasoned, dipped in batter, breaded and partially fried at Cornell's food science laboratory before distribution.

Whitaker said some commercial fish processors already are "intrigued" with the new products, but he said it was too early to tell if these offbeat fish products will ever become common items in supermarkets around the nation.

The game was match points and North responded one spade in the hope of getting to a major suit or notrump.

Nothing bad was likely to happen as a result of that bid, but East fired a three-club bid at South, who decided to pass rather than rebid at the three level.

Now North came up with a brilliant or maybe a not so brilliant bid. He called three hearts in the hope that his partner could bid three notrump, but South made his correct call of four hearts. He was old fashioned enough to think that four trumps to the king-queen was good support.

What was North to do? He could try five diamonds, but could visualize some more heart bidding by South. Finally, he figured a way to get out of his troubles. He bid a Blackwood four notrump. If South showed two aces he would hope to become dummy at six diamonds, but South held just one ace and bid five diamonds to show it.

A New York reader wants to know what we think of playing a jump response to show a bad hand such as bidding two spades with:

If you want to use preemptive jump responses you will get some good results, but will lose the strong jump response which is a most valuable bid.

RAISIN NUT SODA LOAF

1 cup unbleached all-purpose flour
1 cup finely milled whole wheat flour
1 tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. baking soda
½ tsp. cream of tartar
1¼ tsp. salt
1 tbsp. dark brown sugar
1 cup milk mixed with 1 tbsp. lemon juice
¾ cup golden raisins
¾ cup coarsely chopped walnuts

Stir together the flours, leavenings, salt and sugar. Add the milk-lemon-juice mixture and mix well. Work in the raisins and nuts. Turn into a buttered 8 by 4 by 3-inch loaf pan and smooth on top. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — about 1 hour. Loosen edges and turn out. A deliciously crusty loaf that may be sliced thick and spread with butter as soon as it is cool; it stores beautifully and then may be sliced thin.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I hope you won't think I'm crazy but I want to thank a lot of people and I don't know their names. Since everyone reads your column maybe they will recognize themselves

I want to thank all those nice folks who opened doors for me when my arms were full of groceries or packages or babies.

I want to thank the strangers on the street who smile at me and say, "Good morning," when I am too shy to smile and speak first.

I want to thank the lady who came up to me when the seat of my car was jammed too far back and asked me if she could help. I was in such a foul mood and the car seat was tuck and it was just one thing too many that day. That lady was so nice, my bad mood vanished and the rest of the day was wonderful.

So let this letter be one of thanks to all the good people in the world who go out of their way to do something helpful and kind for strangers, without expecting anything n return. This may sound ridiculous, but I want to say I love you. — A Canadian Reader

Dear Reader: Ridiculous? Not at all. Beautiful! Warm-hearted! Lovely! You've expressed the true spirit of generosity and caring. The world needs more of it. Thank you for reminding us all.

Dear Ann Landers: This is a plea to teachers everywhere. Please print it.

If you don't like children — get out of the teaching profession. Our children spend a great deal of their lives in school and you make them unhappy. You also give them a poor self-image and make them hate school.

All children are not A students. Those who are don't need your attention nearly as much as those who get Cs, Ds, and Fs. Instead of calling the poor students "lazy" or "stupid," try to find out why they don't understand. Don't just ignore them. Help them! That's what you're there for.

Instead of displaying the A students' papers, it would be a good idea to pin up a C student's effort and write across the top — "You are improving!" What a great incentive that would be.

A good teacher cares about all children — not just the stars. The truly bright ones will manage without your extra attention. It's the ones who have difficulty who need you. Please meet the real challenge of your profession or do something else. — Concerned Parent

Dear C.P.: Well said. Thank you for laying it on the line.

Dear Ann Landers: The girl our son married is not the one I would have picked for him but she is a pleasant person and I have accepted her.

For the first year of their marriage she called my husband and me "Mr. and Mrs." I asked her not to be so formal and suggested that she call us "Mother and Dad." Instead she calls us "Jane and Harold." This rankles me and I can't get used to it. Should I ask our son to talk to her? — Parsons, Kan.

Dear Kan.: No. Get used to it. You'd be happy to settle for "Jane and Harold" if you knew what some women call their in-laws.

Teaching your kids about the facts of life can be easy or awkward. Ann Landers' new booklet, "How, What, and When to Tell Your Child About Sex" can spell the difference. Send 50 cents in coin, along with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request, to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

Safety Decal Developed

By DAVID HAWLEY

MANKATO, Minn. (AP) — For Leona Schalow the day her husband died in a farm accident remains prism-clear, like a tragic drama performed in slow motion again and again.

"I drove into the yard just as he had stopped breathing," she remembers. "The kids had tried to revive him, but couldn't."

The accident that happened during the harvest season two years ago prompted Mrs. Schalow to design a safety decal that is being distributed throughout Minnesota, the Dakotas and Iowa by the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.

The red decal is heart-shaped, containing the message "Please Be Careful, We Love You." Below the message is written, in signature form, the words, "Your Family."

The death of Duane Schalow, 46, on Sept. 21, 1975, left his wife with five children. Two weeks later fire destroyed a barn on their rural Mankato farm.

Since then life for the Schalow family has been a struggle to stay together and keep the small, 160-acre farm going. "I'm a housekeeper, farm executive and mother," Mrs. Schalow said with a laugh. "I guess that's a full-time job."

Schalow was killed when he became entangled in a silage chopper. The machine severed his arm above the elbow and he died some 20 minutes later from loss of blood.

Mrs. Schalow, ironically, was attending a training session on rescue work at the time of the accident. A 13-year-old son and his 7-year-old brother had tried unsuccessfully to aid their father. Because of a non-working phone they had been unable to call for help.

War Launched On Disease

BUENOS AIRES, Argentine (UPI) — In the dead of night, a darkn thimble-sized bug drops from the thatched ceiling of an adobe hut.

Unnoticed, it crawls across a dirt floor to where a sleeper lies curled. The bug sinks its jaws into the warm flesh and sucks a stomach-full of blood.

Satisfied, the fat-bellied bug climbs back to the roof, leaving behind parasite-filled feces which have infected an estimated 10 million South Americans with Chagas disease.

In Argentina, the government has declared a state of emergency and is launching a five-year campaign to eradicate the disease.

"There are a lot of unanswered questions about this disease," Pedro Acha, an official of the Panamerican Health Organization, said recently.

What is known is that Chagas disease occurs primarily in rural areas where houses have adobe walls, dirt floors and roofs of palm leaves and branches — the nesting ground of the bug.

The disease is related through a similarity in parasites to the African sleeping sickness transmitted by the tsetse fly, Acha said.

But Chagas disease, while more widespread, is not as dramatic in its symptoms nor as well known as sleeping sickness. The Chagas parasite does not take its toll immediately.

The infected person may wake the morning after being bitten with a slight swelling around the area of the bite and a fever, or may feel as chipper as usual.

The initial symptoms normally disappear and in approximately 85 percent of the cases the disease does not cause any further harm, Acha said.

In the other cases, however, an unexplained loss of strength occurs over the years as the parasite attacks heart, nervous system or digestive system.

Chagas is one of the world's six major tropical diseases. In South America, only malaria is more widespread. Brazil has the most people infected by Chagas — an estimated 7 million.

In Argentina, malaria cases occur infrequently but 2.5 million of the nation's 23 million people are believed to be infected with Chagas.

"This disease in the long run has caused losses in the nation's social fabric, the shortening of the average life span and a reduction in output by the labor force," said Capt. Adolfo Julio Maillie, an Argentine health official.

Maillie said the vinchuca's dangerous nature derives from its habit of excreting immediately after sucking blood, thus infecting the wound.

The health campaign will aim at killing it with insecticides, destroying its nesting grounds and educating people of his dangers, Maillie said.

But Acha said the route Argentina is taking is not practical in most cases.

The cost of training spraying brigades and buying and maintaining equipment is often prohibitive, he said. The insecticides are not a permanent solution and were objected to when they were used to combat malaria because of the side-effects they have on the environment, he said.

The poor housing that is closely linked with the existence of the bug also would have to be replaced or made sanitary, Acha said.

To this end, the health organization is investigating the development of a plastic spray that would be used to seal the walls and roofs of houses.

The only real answer to the problem is discovering a cure and a vaccine, he said.

Babysitting Tips Available

WASHINGTON (AP) — Babysitting can be a fine way to earn extra money and it also provides a chance to learn about children, but sitters should know a few safety precautions.

Most basic is getting the name and telephone number of the family doctor, the poison control center, the hospital and where the parents can be reached. These numbers should be kept next to the telephone.

Toddlers must be kept from playing in potentially hazardous areas such as kitchen, bathroom, workshop and storage area.

And they should never be left alone in the bathtub or where they can reach medicines. If the phone rings, take the child with you.

In case of a fire, don't stop to put it out yourself or to call the fire department. Get the children and leave quickly. Take them to a neighbor and call the fire department from there. The commission reports that many unnecessary deaths and injuries happen because the victim waited too long to leave the house.

Details of these tips and many others are collected in a booklet the commission has put together. Called "Super Sitter," it can be obtained for 50 cents from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 012F, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

VA Office Offers Advice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are some questions frequently asked of the Veterans Administration along with their answers. Details can be obtained from any VA office, listed under U.S. Government in the telephone book.

— Who can obtain medical care at a VA hospital? First priority goes to veterans discharged under other than dishonorable conditions who need treatment for service-connected disabilities. Veterans needing medical attention for non service-connected disabilities may be treated if they certify their inability to pay for treatment elsewhere and if space is available.

— What happens to the pension if a veteran is sentenced to jail? He will continue to receive the pension for the first 60 days in jail. If he has a wife or child the benefits may be continued to them.

Maps Catalog Completed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has completed a new catalog of special purpose charts and bathymetric maps.

The catalog indexes the maps along with marine boundary maps and charts, storm evacuation maps, weather service charts, offshore mineral leasing area maps and geophysical maps.

The catalog, "Map and Chart Catalog 5" is available to the public without charge. Interested persons should write to the National Ocean Survey, Distribution Division (C44), Riverdale, Md., 20840.

New Year's Day No Holiday

DOUGLASVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Monday may have been the official New Year's Day holiday, but it was business almost as usual in Douglas County schools.

At the teachers' request, the school calendar was designed with the Christmas holiday vacation beginning Dec. 16, three school days earlier than most systems. So classes in this suburban Atlanta area resumed Monday; most other systems won't start again until Tuesday or Wednesday.

"We realized today is a national holiday, but this is the way our employees wanted it," said Superintendent Gene Sheets.

But student attendance was low, Sheets said, doubling the usual 12 percent absence rate for the day after a holiday. "I've checked with one or two schools, and we have about twice as many absent as is normal."

Law Makes Alfalfa Bust

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — It was a short-lived bust.

Police said three men were arrested Wednesday after they tried to sell an officer "marijuana."

Actress Weds In Nevada

The New Year's Eve wedding began a second marriage for Miss Valentine, 30, an Emmy Award winner for her role in the television series "Room 222." It is the first marriage for the 29-year-old Verna.

Female Cadet Seeks Recruits

Home in Greenwich for the holidays, Miss Muir and a recruiting officer from the academy at West Point, N.Y., have been visiting area high schools, trying to interest potential applicants.

"The first year is probably the hardest because that's the time you learn to adapt to military life," said Miss Muir, 20.

Miss Muir started training two summers ago with 119 other young women in the military academy's first coed class; 80 made it through the first year.

She is not sure what she will do in the Army after graduation, saying she is waiting to see what opportunities the Army offers its first women West Point graduates.

Company Donates Detectors

WESTON, Conn. (AP) — The Weston Fire Department was given 24 smoke detectors Monday by the manufacturer of a detector credited with saving five lives when it went off under a Christmas tree.

The detector had been given as a gift on Christmas Day by Billy Bulakites, a member of the Weston department. His parents unwrapped it, tested it and put it back under their tree.

When fire broke out at the Fairfield home at around 2:45 the next morning, the alarm sounded, awakening Bulakites' parents, a brother, a sister and a boarder. All escaped unharmed.

Because of the incident, the company donated two dozen detectors to the Fire Department, which has been selling smoke detectors as part of its fire education program and to raise money for a scholarship fund.

The department may donate the detectors to low-income elderly persons, said Stanley Renouf, chairman of the department's scholarship committee.

Indian Skeletons Discovered

HARRISON, Ohio (AP) — When workmen digging a basement for a new church found two skeletons, police at first feared foul play.

But the coroner's verdict is in, and while the cause of death remains unknown, that's understandable because the skeletons found in the shallow grave Oct. 27 date from the 1400s, according to Dr. Frank Cleveland, Hamilton County coroner.

They apparently are skeletons of Indians who lived in the area, the coroner said. University of Cincinnati anthropologist Anthony Perzigian said one was a male in his late 30s or early 40s. The other was a child of about 6.

"There was nothing to indicate the deaths of the two Indians were other than natural," Cleveland said. Both probably died about the same time because of illness, he added.

Cleveland plans to turn the skeletons over to the university for further study, and plans are underway to determine if more skeletons are buried in the area.

New Baby Second 'First-born'

Shaun Huber was born at 1:43 a.m. Sunday at Memorial Hospital.

His sister, Stephanie, was born Jan. 1, 1977.

The Hubers said they didn't plan to have their children on New Year's Day. In fact, each child was born about five days ahead of schedule.

Shaun weighed in at 7 pounds, 11 ounces, and was born with a shock of black hair.

da Vinci Drawings Displayed By British Royal Academy

LONDON (UPI) — Leonardo da Vinci, besides painting the Mona Lisa, did masterful things with the less enigmatic ordinary human body.

His famous anatomical drawings from Queen Elizabeth's collection at Windsor Castle are being exhibited in London for the first time.

For the showing in the private rooms of the Royal Academy, 50 of them have been sandwiched between two sheets of perspex so drawings on both sides of the page can be seen. They had been in bound notebooks.

"By the eventual application of his physical laws to human anatomy, Leonardo achieved a wholly unique penetration into the mechanical principles of physiology," Dr. Kenneth Keele wrote in the catalogue introduction.

"His contemporaries were quite unready for this. Indeed, descriptive anatomy itself did not come to the surface until 1543 —24 years after Leonardo's death. Thus, in anatomy, as in so many other aspects of his life's work, Leonardo was a man who awoke too early in the dawn of the scientific renaissance while others still slept."

U.S. MAP IS CONFUSING — Brian Wolfgang Skyum, 20, of Jylland, Denmark, puzzles over a map in San Diego. He is traveling around the world mainly on a fold-up bicycle and trailer rig. Skyum has toured Canada already. (AP Laserphoto)

The drawings exhibited include internal organs, early anatomical studies, the head and brain, the alimentary and reproductive systems, muscles and skeleton, the heart, comparative anatomy and human proportions.

Leonardo's studies of the human skeleton, made between 1509 and 1512, are a highlight of the exhibition and show both his extraordinary draftsmanship and his remarkable accuracy.

The earliest studies of the skeleton and other experimental dissections, which Leonardo did himself, date 1487 to 1489, and often are accompanied by his own records of his anatomical methods.

Only one percent of Leonardo's extant manuscripts concerned human anatomy. His dissections and the drawings he made from them were done between 1487 and 1493, when he concentrated on the brain and the skull, the sensory and nervous systems and the eye, and between 1505 and 1512.

In the latter period he turned his attention to the reproductive and digestive organs and did his celebrated drawing of the infant in the womb. He studied muscles, bone structure, the heart and the blood supply.

Leonardo did not conreive his anatomical drawings as finished works but as visual notes and records.

The drawings probably entered the British royal collection during the reign of Charles I. Leonardo left them to his favorite pupil, Francesco Melzi, who in turn left them to his son. In 1570 they were bought by a sculptor named Leoni and were taken to Spain. Lord Arundel acquired them in the early 1600s.

The exhibition, which appeared in Los Angeles and Washington last year, continues until Feb. 19.

Pilot Survives After Ditching Plane In Sea

KAILUA-KONA, Hawaii (AP) — The pilot of a light plane that ditched at sea New Year's Eve told rescuers he had to fight off sharks during the 15 hours before his rescue.

He managed to pulled his wife, Diane, out of the plane, but he was unable to hold on to her. Also missing and presumed drowned is James Stricter, a passenger who is believed to have gone down with the plane.

The Coast Guard called off its search for the two missing persons, but a Hawaii County fire department helicopter was continuing to look for them on Monday. Corbett is listed in guarded condition at Kona Hospital.

"He was amazingly coherent and lucid, considering what he had been through," said Carl Caldwell, a paramedic who spoke to Crobett after he was rescued by a fishing boat.

"He said he constantly felt sharks nipping at his feet. At one point, a shark actually tired to take a bite from his foot and he shook as vigorously as he could to make it let go," Caldwell said.

"Another time, a shark came up between his legs and turned him upside down under water. He said he made all the noise he could to scare the shark away," said Caldwell.

"There were deep scratch marks all over his feet that indicated animal bites," he said.

Television Sensitive To 'Star Wars' Success

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — "The Bionic Woman" undergoes a spacelift this month, and for the rest of the television season, exchanging her cloak and dagger adventures for the mysteries of space.

Lindsay Wagner, as Jaime Sommers, will challenge visitors from deep space along with flying saucers, mysterious prehistoric civilizations and unearthly messages from galactic voids.

If the new format of the popular NBC show appears to be cashing in on the movies' runaway success of "Star Wars" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," that is precisely the case.

First to admit it is the series' new executive producer, Lee Siegel, a 50ish, bearded man who is beating the opposition to the punch.

"Of course the box-office records of 'Star Wars' and 'Close Encounters' is a factor," he said. "The public has demonstrated enormous fascination with space stories."

Television is responding. At this moment ABC and Universal are preparing "Galactica." NBC and Universal are working on "Buck Rogers" from the old comic strip. Columbia and NBC have started on "Quark," an outer space comedy series starring Richard Benjamin.

Ray Bradbury is writing a two-hour special on "The Martian Chronicles." NBC has "Flash Gordon" in the hopper, another comic strip-based series.

"The Bionic Woman" has the advantage of already being on the air. Her first cosmic adventure beams Jan. 14, long before the opposition can get their acts together.

"Our first episode deals with the notion that 5,000 years ago creatures from space came to earth determined to people it with human beings," Siegel said.

"They arrive to find a variety of animals. With advanced technology they give the animals another layer of brain tissue which leads to the development of humans. Then they depart for their own planet.

"The pyramids in Egypt and Central America, the Easter Island carvings and Stonehenge are all a part of the work they leave behind. From the visitors' point of view their experiment with humans hasn't worked out.

"We're doing a two-part episode involving a man who comes to earth, which is destined to be destroyed. He takes Jaime Sommers aboard his space vehicle to bring her to his own planet. That segment is titled 'Star Man.'"

Siegel only grinned at the suggestion that "Star Man" had all the earmarks of a spinoff for yet another outer space series. But he didn't deny it.

Disease Traced To Musician

CHICAGO (UPI) — A disease affecting the connective tissue may have been partly responsible for the musical ablity of Nicolo Paganini, regarded by many musicians as the greatest violin virtuoso of all time, a doctor has reported.

Dr. Myron R. Schoenfeld, writing in the current Journal of the American Medical Association, said Paganini had Marfan's syndrome —which caused him to develop long fingers and hyperextensible joints.

The unusually long fingers and the laxness of his shoulder joint gave him dexterity in fingering end perfect pliancy for bowing the violin, Schoenfeld said.

Schoenfeld, of Scarsdale, N.Y., said the disease combined with Paganini's extraordinary musical talent and flair for showmanship and helped make him a world-renowned musician.

"There is good reason to believe that Paganini was afflicted with (or perhaps it would be more correct to say endowed with) Marfan's syndrome," Schoenfeld said.

People with Marfan's syndrome frequently have heart and eye afflictions and recurrent dislocations of joints, sprains, hernias and cysts.

Notre Dame Curious: Who's No. 1 Now?

DALLAS (AP) — Emotional Notre Dame cashed five turnovers into 31 points behind three touchdowns by Vagas Ferguson and two scores by unheralded reserve Terry Eurick, destroying No. 1-ranked Texas' dreams of an unbeaten season and a national title with a shocking 38-10 Cotton Bowl victory Monday.

Quarterback Joe Montana provided uncanny third-down mastery by converting 8 of 12 clutch situations into Irish first downs against a rugged Texas defense that had kept both Oklahoma and Arkansas from its goal line earlier this season.

The incredible rout by the touchdown-underdog, fifth-ranked Fighting Irish triggered a wild scramble for The Associated Press national championship, the winner of which will be announced Wednesday.

Ferguson caught a 17-yard touchdown pass from Montana, later bolted 3 yards to score and then capped the humiliation of the Longhorns with a 26-yard scoring run midway through the fourth period.

The Fighting Irish, who own the same 11-1 record as the Longhorns, had only to travel 32, 27, 35, 20 and 29 yards after the stumbling Texans coughed up three fumbles and two of their three interceptions.

But Notre Dame again took advantage of Longhorn charity as Jim Browner collected Johnny Ham Jones' fumble and Eurick ripped off his 6-yard run for a 10-3 Irish edge early in the second quarter.

Notre Dame quickly scored two more touchdowns as the Longhorns' offense came unraveled. Willie Fry pounced on a Randy McEachern fumble on the Texas 35 and Eurick followed guard Ted Horansky's block on a 10-yard touchdown journey as the score mounted to 17-3.

Linebacker Doug Backer got into the act, plucking off a wayward McEachern aerial and returning it to the Texas 20. Ferguson then made an acrobatic catch over linebacker Mark Martignoni for a 17-yard touchdown connection and the stunned record crowd of 76,701 watched silently as the scoreboard read: Notre Dame 24, Texas 3.

On the next play, interference was called on Jim Browner as he bumped the Longhorns' Ronnie Miksch. Time ran out on the play but the half can't end on a penalty and Texas got another chance. McEachern forced a pass between two Notre Dame defenders into the arms of Mike Lockett for a 13-yard touchdown.

Texas was a seven-point favorite over Notre Dame, which had lost 20-13 to Mississippi in the second game of the season. Montana said he didn't even think he would letter this year, then made his move to the top as the Irish field general.

Devine To Return, Feels ND No. 1

DALLAS (AP) — Emotion-charged Notre Dame accepted No. 1-ranked Texas' suicidal tendencies Monday in the 42nd annual Cotton Bowl and destroyed the bumbling Longhorns 38-10, laying claim to the national collegiate football title.

An elated Notre Dame Coach Dan Devine, who announced that he would come back as the Irish's coach next season, said: "I feel we should be No. 1. Will we? I don't know. I wouldn't care to guess."

"I think we beat the No. 1 team when they were healthy and at home, and at this point I don't believe anybody could beat our team."

He added, "We beat No. 1 . . . what does that make us?"

The fifth-ranked Irish turned five Texas turnovers into 31 points as Vagas Fergurson scored three touchdowns and reserve halfback Terry Eurick tallied twice in the astonishing rout.

Tight end Ken MacAfee caught some heat from the Texas players after he told Texas runningback Earl Campbell at the nationally televised Heisman Trophy presentation that Notre Dame should be No. 1 if it whipped the Longhorns. Monday, MacAfee said, "Of course, we feel we're No. 1 . . . we beat the No. 1 team decisively, by 28 points."

In the somber Texas dressing room, Coach Fred Akers was reassessing a statement he had made earlier in the week. He had said that Texas should be No. 1 even if it lost because the Longhorns would have an 11-1 record, equal to any team in the country.

"No. 1 — I don't know," said Akers, shaking his head.

Asked point-blank if he thought Texas still had a chance to be No. 1 in the final Associated Press poll, Akers said, "Sure, I do, at least the team that beat us was a good one . . . everybody can't say that."

Campbell, who set a Cotton Bowl record with 29 carries for 116 hard-earned yards, barely spoke to reporters in the dressing room. He said politely, "I could stand here all day and talk . . . that's just the way it goes."

Devine said he decided in the second half he would come back to Notre Dame next season.

"I told the players after the game I would see them at spring practice . . . I decided I wanted to coach, and as long as I coach, I want it to be at Notre Dam)," he said.

A blackboard in the back of the Notre dame dressing room summed up the mood of the Fighting Irish. It said: "It's never where you start . . . it's where you finish . . . No. 1 . . . and you finished on top."

"We earned it on the field," Coach Dan

Alabama Enjoys Feast Of 'Eyes

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jeff Rutledge fired two touchdown passes Monday and steered third-ranked Alabama to a 35-6 thrashing of No. 9 Ohio State in the 44th Sugar Bowl football game.

Rutledge, who completed 8 of 11 passes for 109 yards, hurled a 27-yard bomb to Bruce Bolton in the second quarter, came back with a 3-yarder to Rick Neal in the third period and passed for a 2-point conversion in a game that had been billed as the Bear Bryant-Woody Hayes show.

Alabama's offense, directed almost flawlessly by Rutledge, dominated the Buckeyes throughout the contest. Rutledge was named the game's most valuable player.

The Crimson Tide's scoring drives covered 76 yards twice and 67 yards before the second unit backfield took over in the final quarter and punched out a time-consuming 84-yard march just after Ohio State's only score.

The victory lifted Alabama, clinging to a faint hope of capturing a fourth national title, to an 11-1 record. The Buckeyes closed with a 9-3 mark.

Alabama's other scores came on a 1-yard plunge by Tony Nathan early in the second quarter and a pair of fourth-quarter TDs from 1-yard out by Major Ogilvie and from 5 yards by Johnny Davis.

It was the worst defeat for the Buckeyes since a 41-6 drubbing by Purdue in 1967.

Ohio State's defense had given up only two touchdowns in the air during 11 regular-season games and ranked among the nation's leaders with 22 interceptions.

Alabama punted only once, but its Wishbone attack struggled at times because of 10 fumbles, only two of which were lost.

Ohio State's hopes of getting back into the game after Alabama built a 13-0 lead shortly before halftime, faded when a fourth-and-three gamble failed at the Alabama 3 with only 30 seconds left in the half.

Gerald made a first down with an 8-yard scamper to the 30, but Alabama's defense stopped the Buckeyes on three straight plays, forcing a punt from the 39.

The Buckeyes took over at the Alabama 35 on the punt exchange, but failed on another fourth-and-three when Terry Jones nailed Gerald for a 5-yard loss.

Alabama turned matters over to reserves for all of the fourth quarter. That group put together the 84-yard scoring march, the longest of the game for Alabama, which ended on Ogilvie's 1-yard plunge.

After that, Alabama intercepted three Ohio State passes, but only one set up a touchdown, Murray Legg's 26-yard return to the Buckeyes' 24 that produced Davis' 5-yard scoring gallop.

Alabama opened the game with a 60-yard drive after stopping the Buckeyes on their first possession. Davis was the major figure in that march, hammering out 42 yards, but the Tide failed to score when Adkins stopped Rutledge for no gain on a fourth-and-goal at the 3.

The pregame publicity surrounding the contest was dominated by Bryant and Hayes, the legendary coaches of the respective teams, who ranked third and fourth all time among college football's winningest coaches.

The victory was the 273rd for Alabama's Bryant, who has vowed to continue coaching until he eclipses the record 314 posted by Amos Alonzo Stagg. Hayes has won 231.

Rutledge connected on two passes for 38 yards, one a 29-yarder to All-American Ozzie Newsome, setting up Alabama's first score, and he hit on three for 39 yards in the Tide's second touchdown march.

'Cats Again Unanimous Pick On AP Cage Poll

By The Associated Press

For the second straight week, Kentucky's unbeaten Wildcats are a unanimous choice as the nation's No.1 college basketball team in The Associated Press poll.

However, the Wildcats had to survive their toughest test of the season in retaining their unblemished record and their lofty position. Kentucky had to rally before subduing highly regarded Notre Dame 73-68 last Saturday in a nationally televised game for its eighth victory of the season.

Monday, the Wildcats received all 32 first-place votes and a total of 640 points in the nationwide balloting by a panel of sports writers and sports broadcasters.

After Kentucky overcame Notre Dame's 66-63 lead in the closing minutes, Wildcats Coach Joe Hall said, "It's been one of the few times we've been down like that, and I was glad to see we maintained our poise. Notre Dame was playing well and very alert, but to come back when we were down like we were was a great effort."

While Kentucky won its only game of the week, North Carolina won three times, raising its record to 10-1, and retained second place with 549 points. Arkansas, 10-0, winner of both its games last week, held third place with 491 points.

Marquette, the defending national champion, increased its record to 7-1 with two victories and advanced from fifth place to fourth, with 421 points.

Notre Dame, 7-2, after its loss to Kentucky, slipped from fourth to fifth, with 356 points.

Indiana State, 8-0, which won its only game, clung to sixth with 321 points, while perennnial powerhouse UCLA, 9-1, also winner of its only game, moved up from eighth to seventh with 308 points.

Syracuse, 10-1, a two-time winner last week, rose from 10th place to eighth with 205 points. Nevada-Las Vegas, 13-0 after two victories last week, held ninth with 198 points, and Louisville, 7-2 after splitting two games, dropped from seventh to 10th with 147 points.

Indiana headed the Second Ten, and was followed by Cincinnati, Virginia, Kansas, Maryland, Holy Cross, Providence, Michigan State, San Francisco and Georgetown, D.C.

Michigan State and Georgetown were the newcomers to the group this week, replacing Florida State and Detroit.

Tide Feels They Deserve Top Spot

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — "We have done everything we can do, now we just have to wait and see," Alabama defensive captain Mike Tucker said Monday after the Tide walloped Ohio State 35-6 in the Sugar Bowl.

He was talking about the team's hope of winding up with the unofficial but highly coveted national football championship — the final No. 1 ranking.

Alabama went into the Sugar ranked third nationally. But while the Tide was wrecking ninth ranked Ohio State, top-ranked Texas was taking a beating from fifth-ranked Notre Dame at the Cotton Bowl.

"I think our defense proved it out there today. We deserve No. 1," said young Alabama defensive tackle David Hannah.

Hannah was part of a defensive unit that Alabama Coach Bear Bryant assessed as "very ordinary" at the beginning of the season.

"He's right," said Hannah. "We were ordinary. We were young, inexperienced, we had a lot of young kids.

"But, no sir, we are not ordinary any more."

In contrast to the jubilation after regular season victories, the Alabama dressing room was quietly satisfied after the Sugar Bowl victory.

"We will do our whooping and hollering later," said big fullback Johnny Davis. "That whooping and hollering doesn't get you anywhere, anyway."

"I thiknk we played a super game and we were playing one of the great teams of the country. I don't know if we will get it, but I hope so," he said.

Hannah, who strained his left knee during the game, played against Ohio State All-America tackle Chris Ward.

He called Ward as good a tackle as any he had played all year, but wouldn't say he was the best. And Kelly Jones, who moved from nose guard to tackle when Hannah was hurt, said Ward tended to tip off what Ohio State planned to do.

"He is real great, probably the best I have ever played over," said Jones. "He is quick, big, and super on pass protection.

"But sometimes he would come out and line up flatfooted, with his weight baik, and I knew he was going to drop back for pass protection."

Alabama sophomore center Dwight Stephenson handled Ohio State's steller nose guard Aaron Brown rather roughly.

Ohio State cach Woody Hayes said Brown is the fastest and quickest defensive linemen he has ever coached and Stephenson said he wouldn't go that far.

"He's pretty good, he's quick and he does a lot of things," Stephenson said. "He is one of the best we have faced all year — ONE of the best. I won't say he is the best."

On several plays, it looked as though Stephenson drove Brown five yards off the line, clearing running room for Davis. But Stephenson declined to take the credit.

"Naw, I didn't drive him off the line, he lined up kind of far back sometimes," he said. "He is too good for anybody to drive him off the line that way."

Notre Dame

Devine said. "We played No. 1 and we beat them."

It was no secret what happened to Texas. The question was how and why. "Too many turnovers," Akers acknowledged.

Texas fumbled away the ball three times, the Irish defense intercepted three passcs and the Notre Dame offense cashed five of the turnovers for points.

"This was not like us," Akers said. "I am most disappointed in not showing them our best football game. We didn't appear to be nervous, but after a point you lose your confidence ...

Texas quarterback Randy McEachern, victimized for the three interceptions, said: "I don't know what happened. We just didn't play our best at all ... you can't compare teams when you play like that. Our fumbles and interceptions just killed us."

Tech Trainer Bissell Quits

Bob Bissell, Texas Tech trainer for the past eight years, resigned effective Jan. 1, The Avalanche-Journal has learned.

Between his college stints, Bissell, 34, served as a trainer with the New Orleans Saints. He also served as trainer for the Coaches All-America football game during its seven-year stay in the Hub City.

Montana, picking his targets carefully and testing Texas continually with the bomb, completed 10 of 25 passes for 111 yards. McEachern was intercepted three times by the Irish.

Arkansas 'Sales' Sooners Setback 31-6

MIAMI (AP) — They said it couldn't be done, that sixth-ranked Arkansas didn't belong on the same field with mighty Oklahoma. But no one ever heard Lou Holtz say it.

"We have a great football team and can play with anyone in the nation," the first-year Arkansas coach said Monday night following the Razorbacks' convincing 31-6 whipping of second-ranked Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl.

"In my mind, we are No. 1. There's no doubt about it," he said. "But I don't have a vote. Even the Knights of Columbus sent me a telegram telling us we should be No. 1. Bring on the winner of the Dallas-Denver game!"

Arkansas stunned the butter-fingered Sooners with 1-yard scoring runs by Roland Sales and Ron Calcagni in the opening period and it was all downhill from there.

Sales, a 192-pound sophomore who rushed for 399 yards during the regular season, set an Orange Bowl record with 205 yards on 23 carries, scoring twice. He also caught four passes for 52 yards.

His performance came as a surprise since the Razorbacks' rushing game was thought to have been crippled by the absence of running leader Ben Cowins and three other offensive stars.

"What can you say about Roland Sales?" asked Holtz. "I'm truly shocked by his performance."

So was Sales.

"I thought I probably had 100 yards, but I never thought of 200," he said. "The line blocked the best I've ever seen. They were just blowing the holes open for me."

Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer called it "a thorough whipping," and added, "They did something I did not think a team could do: take the football and move it the way they did."

With Sales, whose previous game rushing best was 71 yards, setting the Orange Bowl rushing record, the inspired Razorbacks — whopping 18-point underdogs — used a jet-quick defense to short-circuit the Oklahoma wishbone attack that led the nation in rushing.

The triumph gave Arkansas an 11-1 record in Coach Lou Holtz' first season and threw The Associated Press national championship poll up for grabs among Texas, Alabama, Notre Dame and Arkansas — all with identical records.

Oklahoma finished 10-2 but hardly looked the part of Big Eight champions. Ironically, both Arkansas and Oklahoma lost only to Texas during the regular season.

Arkansas' other scoring came on a 32-yard field goal by Steve Little and a 20-yard run by Barnabas White with 1:05 left in the game. Oklahoma, which has not been shut out in 131 games since 1966, scored on the first play of the final period when Dean Blevins tossed an 8-yard pass to Victor Hicks.

After Arkansas' fired-up defense became the first team all season to hold Oklahoma scoreless for a half, the Razorbacks' offense came out for the third quarter and rammed the ball down the Sooners' throats.

Oklahoma, fumble-prone all season when it lost 30 of 52 bobbles, coughed the ball up twice in the first 10½ minutes — once just four plays after Arkansas' only turnover of the first half.

The Sooners' Billy Sims fumbled a handoff on the game's third play and Jimmy Walker recovered at the Oklahoma 9-yard line.

On Oklahoma's third possession, Kenny King fumbled after a 12-yard gain and Dan Hampton of the Razorbacks recovered at the Arkansas 42.

Seven plays later, Arkansas had a 14-0 lead. Sales bolted 38 yards to the 3 and two plays later Calcagni sneaked across for the TD.

The Sooners drove from their 20 to the Arkansas 29 in the second quarter on their only sustained march of the first half. But successive 10-yard losses pushed them even out of field goal range.

Calcagni passed 12 yards to freshman Gary Stiggers and 14 to Sales and handed off to Stiggers for a 38-yard gain as the Razorbacks set up Little's field goal early in the third quarter.

That made it 17-0 and Arkansas was shortly back in business again.

Freshman Trent Bryant gained 15 yards, Sales picked up 12 and then scampered for 38 yards to the Oklahoma 4, breaking several tackles along the way.

His 205-yard performance broke the Orange Bowl record of 187 set by Larry Smith of Florida against Georgia Tech in 1967.

Oklahoma, which moved the ball well on occasion but hurt itself with fumbles and penalties, finally got untracked late in the third period.

What's New? Arkansas Stakes Claim On Title

MIAMI (AP) — Arkansas offensive line coach Larry Beightol raced up and down the sideline at the Orange Bowl, exhorting the Razorbacks: "Get those fingers up! Get those fingers up!"

He wanted Oklahoma and the Orange Bowl television audience to know that the Razorbacks believed they were No. 1 after beating Oklahoma 31-6 Monday night.

"We are No. 1 in my mind," Arkansas Coach Lou Holtz told a group of reporters gathered outside the Razorbacks' dressing room.

"We have a great football team. I knew we could play with anybody in America.

"We might have caught Oklahoma a little flat. I hope we didn't have anything to do with that."

The victory made the sixth-ranked Razorbacks 11-1, one of several teams which finished the season with only one loss.

Holtz was asked if the victory vindicated his decision to suspend three players — running backs Ben Cowins and Micheal Forrest and flanker Donny Bobo — from the bowl game because of an incident in the athletic dormitory allegedly involving a coed.

"No sir," he said. "I did what I was paid to do. What I did was in the best interest of the University of Arkansas."

He said the one-game suspension was unfortunate but said the media had not written enough about the players that were going to face Oklahoma.

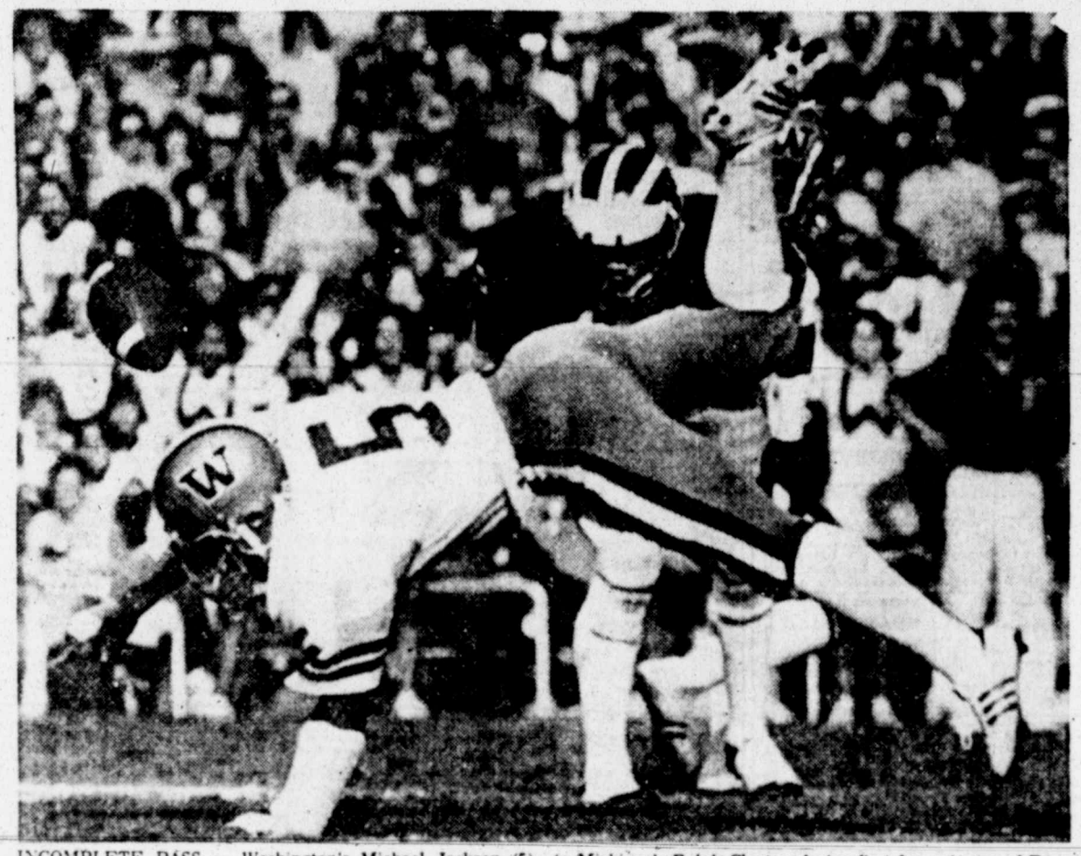

Fullback Roland Sales took up the slack created by the absence of Cowins, who gained more than 1,100 yards in each of the past two years, rushing for an Orange Bowl record 205 yards on 22 carries.

"I was truly shocked by the consistency of his performance," Holtz said. "But I just can't start picking out individuals. To call this a coaching victory would be a mistake. It was a victory by a great group of young men."

"I had a lot of faith in our offensive line," Sales said. "They just blocked their hearts out."

He was asked about the suspension of the three players. "We just blocked it out of our minds," he said.

"The press made a big deal of it, but it just brought us closer together," said defensive tackle Dan Hampton.

ROSE FINISH WILD

Huskies Hold Off Wolverines 27-20

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Washington quarterback Warren Moon ran for two touchdowns and passed for a third and the Huskies held off Michigan's final-quarter rally to beat the Wolverines 27-20 Monday in the Rose Bowl.

"I think we finally won the respect we deserve," said the senior quarterback from Los Angeles, who scored on runs of 2 and 1 yards and passed 28 yards to Spider Gaines for another TD.

"Some people didn't even think we belonged in the Rose Bowl," Moon said. "They thought we would come down here and just lie down. We never lost faith in ourselves."

But as the Wolverines rallied, Moon said: "All I could think of out there at the last were the games we lost to Syracuse and Minnesota. I was thinking, 'Oh, no!'"

Gaines, who caught four passes for 122 yards, said: "Our coaches called a beautiful game and had a beautiful game plan. We knew the Wolverines weren't too good against the pass, so we came out and ran a lot of play-action passes and mixed our offense up."

In addition to his pass catching, Gaines ran 31 yards for an apparent touchdown on a reverse, but a clipping penalty nullified that.

"We just went back into the huddle and said, 'Let's do it again,'" Gaines said. "We never lost our composure."

Coach Don James, a former Michigan assistant in his third year at Washington, commented: "It was not a perfect game for us, but I do think we played as well as we could. I knew we would have to take chances to win."

Then he admitted, "I really thought before the game that Michigan was a better team than we were, but I have a lot more respect for my team right now."

Losing Coach Bo Schembechler said: "Our offense just didn't move in the first half and I'm disappointed that our defense didn't play well in the first half. If we'd have kept playing the game, it would have been all right. But it only goes 60 minutes.

Schembechler said that had his team scored in the final seconds it definitely would have tried to make a two-point conversion and pull out a victory.

Beleaguered most of the day by the hard-charging Washington defenders, Michigan quarterback Rick Leach finally hooked up on a 76-yard touchdown pass play to Curt Stephenson in the third quarter.

Russell Davis powered 2 yards for the second Michigan score early in the last quarter and freshman tailback Stanley Edwards took a 32-yard pass from Leach for the Wolverines' third touchdown with just 3:44 left in the game.

Michigan saw its chance for victory literally slip from its fingertips twice in the final 95 seconds. Surging from the Washington 19, Leach found Ralph Clayton in the end zone but the pass just grazed off the receiver's fingertips and dropped incomplete to the Rose Bowl turf.

Then, with just over a minute remaining and a Michigan first down at the Washington 8, Leach's pass for Stanley Edwards bounced off the receiver's hands, grazed his helmet and was picked out of midair by Huskies linebacker Michael Jackson — giving Washington the ball at its 3-yard line and a mammoth feeling of relief.

Again Michigan got the ball after Washington was unable to make a first down. The Huskies punted from their own end zone but Washington's Nesby Glasgow intercepted a Leach pass on the very next play at the Huskies 7. Washington then ran out the clock.

Washington carried the banner of the Pac-8 successfully once again and although just 7-4 in the regular season and ranked No. 13 in the nation, the Huskies made it nine victories in the last 11 Rose Bowl games for the Pac-8.

Huskies Never Lost Faith After Setbacks

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Sure, Warren Moon admitted, the Washington Huskies lost a few ball games this season.

"But we never lost faith in ourselves. People have got to know that," Washington's senior quarterback said Monday after leading the underdog Huskies to a thrilling 27-20 triumph over the Michigan Wolverines in the Rose Bowl.

Playing before a crowd of 105,312 in his home town, the 6-foot-2, 195-pound quarterback ran for two touchdowns in the first half and passed 28 yards to split end Spider Gaines in the third period for Washington's final touchdown that staked the Huskies to a 24-0 lead.

"When we were 1-3, our fans had lost faith in us, the Pac-8 conference and the whole country had lost faith in us," said Moon, who was voted the game's Most Valuable Player.

"But today we proved to ourselves and to everybody in the nation that we can play competitive football with anybody."

Despite Washington's seemingly insurmountable third-period lead, Michigan — behind the passing of junior quarterback Rick Leach — gave the Huskies and Coach Don James the scare of their lives by pulling within 27-20 and charging deep into Washington territory as the seconds ticked away.

Michigan had the ball first-and-goal on the Washington 8 with 1:21 to play when Leach passed for freshman tailback Stanley Edwards but saw it glance off the receiver and into the hands of Washington linebacker Michael Jackson.

"It was just one of those weird plays that happens in a game," Jackson said. "The ball hit him in the hands, then his helmet, slid down his back and I grabbed it. I don't think he saw it."

The Huskies were forced to punt with 1:02 remaining and Michigan took over on the Washington 48. Leach threw incomplete on first down and then lofted a deep pass for Ralph Clayton with 32 seconds remaining that was picked off by cornerback Nesby Glasgow at the 7 to kill the Wolverines' desperate comeback bid.

"He had been overthrowing his receivers all day," Galsgow said of Leach. "I was going only for the ball. That's how I played it: deep and outside. It was like he was throwing to me."

"I didn't think the 17 points would hold up," said James, referring to the Huskies' 17-0 halftime lead. "I said coming in that we'd need 3½ touchdowns to win, and I wasn't too far off. They (the Wolverines) got pretty close in the end."

Estacado Opens District Action

Estacado may currently have the city's best won-loss record, but that won't mean a thing when the Matadors travel to Brownfield tonight for an 8 p.m. cage game with the Cubs. The matchup will be the District 3-AAA opener for both teams.

"We're anxious to start district," said Estacado coach J.J. Wood. "We've had a successful seasons so far and we just want to continue it."

Also in district action tonight will be the Dunbar Panthers, the defending loop champion. The Joe McWilliams-coached team will journey to Sweetwater for an 8 p.m. game.

The Panthers are currently leading the pack with a 1-0 loop mark after defeating San Angelo Lake View two weeks ago. The game is Sweetwater's opener.

In other boy's high school action, Pampa travels to Monterey, Coronado visits Amarillo High, Lubbock High hosts Palo Duro, Lubbock Christian High goes to Meadow and Christ the King entertains O'Donnell. All seven games are slated for 8 p.m. starts

City girl's play sees, Coronado at Canyon for a 6:30 p.m. game, Dimmitt at Dunbar, Lubbock High visiting Post, Levelland hosting Monterey, LCHS journeying to Meadow and O'Donnell at CTK.

Starting times for the fem contests are Dimmitt-Dunbar and Lubbock High-Post 8 p.m.; Monterey-Levelland 7:30 p.m.; LCHS-Meadow and CTK-O'Donnell 6:30 p.m.

According to Wood, the Matadors are currently riding an emotional high after whipping surprising Iowa Park 70-60 for third place at the Caprock ABC tournament last week.

"That was a big win for us, all right," said Wood. "It was important for us to play a good game against them and we did."

Prior to the victory over Iowa Park, the Matadors had been edged by Class AA power Dimmitt during the seconds round of the tournament. The loss was only the second this season suffered by the Matadors, who are off to the best start in the school's history after winning 14 games so far.

Wood said he does not know exactly what to expect from the Cubs.

"I know they have a good shooter and they will probably play a pretty wide open offense, that's about it," he said.

Although he hates to admitt it, Wood feels the Matadors are looking past the Cubs and toward their Friday night opponent, cross-town and district-rival Dunbar.

"Oh, I guess Dunbar's in the back of our mind," Wood said. "It would be hard not to think about them. But right now we have to play Brownfield. And we have to win."

During the Mats' last outing, Freddie Ivory held the hot hand, hitting 19 points. He will be joined in the starting lineup by Willie Powell, Alvin Harris, Dewey Turner and Mike Chatham.
