

Reagan to unveil $16 billion budget cuts tonight

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, trying to persuade Wall Street and pressure Congress about his economic program, will tell the American people tonight that his budget as will fail "on many things that we wish didn't have to be cut." Social Security, however, apparently won't be one of them.

The 8 p.m. (Midland time) speech, the president's fifth on national television, was intended to unveil a $16 billion package of 1982 budget cuts that was still being put together Wednesday night.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., telling reporters today that his mail shows support waning for Reagan's economic program, said the president should "go with trepidation and humility" in making the address.

White House aides were unusually tight-lipped about Reagan's proposals.

"They've really clamped the lid on all of us here," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes. "They want to give the president the opportunity to have something in his speech."

The secrecy prompted speculation at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue that Reagan would take a new tactic in his drive to hold down next year's federal deficit to $42.5 billion and balance the budget by 1984.

One White House official, who asked not to be identified, said Reagan might solve the deficit problem simply by setting a higher target. Another suggested possibility was revamping the Consumer Price Index, which many experts say overestimates inflation, to reduce automatic cost-of-living increases for Social Security and other federal benefit programs.

Congressional sources said Wednesday that Reagan had abandoned his plan to save $2.9 billion through a one-time, three-month delay in next July's cost-of-living raise for Social Security recipients. That idea had been rejected in advance anyway on Capitol Hill.

But without the delay, the White House official said, Reagan was having trouble finding $16 billion in cuts.

In a brief Rose Garden appearance before a group of senior citizens, the president said Wednesday that to restore the economy to sound health he must slash "many things that we wish didn't have to be cut."

Later, after an evening barbecue on the White House lawn, Reagan said he was still writing the speech but "it's pretty well wrapped up."

He summoned his Cabinet for a preview this afternoon.

On the eve of the speech, the changes in Reagan's program appeared, from the reports of congressional and administration sources, to be shaping up this way:

—Social Security cost-of-living increases will be granted on schedule next July, but raises in some other federal pensions and veterans' benefits are likely to be postponed.

—Planned increases in military spending will be trimmed no more than $2 billion next year, despite wide expectation that Congress will try to cut more.

—Suggestions that tax cuts already approved by Congress be deferred next year will be rejected.

The administration was also under pressure in Congress and from mayors and governors to keep the general revenue sharing program for cities and local governments. The president reportedly had planned to phase out the program over three years, and at least some cuts are likely.

Unemployment drops in Midland

Midland's unemployment rate plunged to 3.5 percent in August, the lowest rate in the state, according to figures released by the Texas Employment Commission office here.

This is 3 percent below July's record high unemployment figure locally of 6.5 percent and 1 percent below the 4.5 percent recorded in August 1980.

In comparison, the state unemployment rate was figured at 5.7 percent and the national rate at 7.2 percent in August, the TEC reported.

However, the number of persons in the labor force here has dropped from 55,730 in July to 53,150 last month. The latest number is 4.9 percent higher than the 50,690 recorded in August 1980.

According to the TEC, the August figures "reflect a good annual growth of 2,460 persons."

The number listed as unemployed dropped from 3,640 in July to 1,840 persons in August. It also was fewer than the 2,300 unemployed persons listed for the same time a year ago.

Total number of people working during August was 51,310, a 1.5 percent drop from the 52,000 in July. However, it's 6 percent higher than the 48,390 reported with jobs in August 1980.

According to the TEC, contract construction employment increased in August due to more office space being built, and that area posted the largest increase of any studied for employment trends.

Total wage and salary was estimated at 46,210, and represents a jump of 3,440 jobs, or 8 percent.

Manufacturing employment grew 1.3 percent, the TEC reported. Activity in area oil fields soared during the past year, creating a 17.7 percent rise in mining employment. The growing number of new businesses in the area produced a 7.9 percent gain in trade.

In addition, the financial area posted an 18.5 percent increase over the August level. To keep pace with the area's growth, an 11.5 percent expansion in services was noted. But, government posted an overall seasonal loss of 8.4 percent over a year ago.

The Midland TEC office is trying to place applicants in hard-to-fill jobs, such as geologist, mud logger, insurance sales representative, electronic repair service representative, laboratory receptionist, carpenter, plumber, are welder and secretary.

ing number of new teachers entering the field.

Mrs. O'Neal said that the critical shortage, which was predicted for 1984 but which has already hit many districts in the state, stems from three major causes. One of them is faced by everyone in any profession each day.

"ON BOTH THE state and local levels, teacher salaries are going to have to increase and increase significantly in the next two to three years," Mrs. O'Neal said. "The state of Texas must add education as a funding priority."

The low salaries with, in many cases, no fringe benefits, is an exceptional trait of the teaching profession. According to Mrs. O'Neal, teachers

Teacher shortage hits critical stage

The shortage of teachers in Texas is reaching a critical stage and one of the major causes is even more prevalent, and tempting, in Midland.

With some 19,000 experienced teachers in the state resigning last summer, Barbara O'Neal, president-elect of the Texas State Teachers Association (TSTA/NEA) and Brad Ritter, TSTA director of communications, are on a statewide publicity campaign to emphasize the problems confronting teachers and, in many cases, causing them to quit their profession.

The two met Wednesday with Alma Marshall, president of the local TSTA in Midland to discuss possible solutions to the increasing number of teachers who resign and the decreasing

Housing costs keep inflation in double digits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing costs in August posted their smallest gain in four months, the government reported today, and helped hold the nation's annual inflation rate to 10.6 percent. While less than July's sharp advance, last month's pace was still ahead of rates posted earlier this year.

August's overall advance meant the inflation rate stayed in double-digit territory for the second straight month, after falling below 10 percent for the four previous months.

Inflation was at an annual rate of 15.2 percent in July.

Transportation and food costs also rose at a slower pace last month to hold the seasonally adjusted inflation rate to 0.8 percent, which would equal 10.6 percent if that rate persisted for 12 straight months.

Jerry Jordan, a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, said today that August's decline in the CPI and declines in other economic indexes suggest "inflation is going to come in under 10 percent for the year 1981."

"We think we are on course and that inflation will decline further by 1 or 2 percentage points in 1982," Jordan told the congressional Joint Economic Committee.

The Reagan administration has predicted that inflation for all of 1981 will run at a 9.9 percent rate. For 1980, the inflation rate was 12.4 percent.

Jordan said the moderation in housing cost increases should continue, adding, "We expect interest rates to decline the rest of this year and all of next."

Last month's inflation rate was up 10.9 percent from August 1980. For the first eight months of this year, it was 9.6 percent on an annual basis.

The Labor Department, in today's Consumer Price Index report, said housing costs climbed 1.0 percent, less than the 1.6 percent rise in July, but they still accounted for more than half of the August change.

Nuclear talks set

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Pledging to "spare no effort" to reach agreement, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko announced today their two nations will begin talks aimed at controlling nuclear arms in Europe on Nov. 30 in Geneva.

"Both sides believe in the importance of these negotiations for enhancing stability and international security and pledge to spare no effort to reach an appropriate agreement," they said in a joint statement.

Gromyko and Haig met for more than four hours Wednesday — three hours alone and one hour with aides — at the U.S. Mission across from U.N. Headquarters to discuss the missile control talks and other U.S.-Soviet differences. The talks represented the first high-level, U.S.-Soviet contact since President Reagan took office eight months ago and were characterized by a U.S. spokesman as being "frank and business-like." A second meeting is set for Monday.

The joint statement issued here said the chief U.S. negotiator will be Paul H. Nitze, 74, who was a member of the Nixon administration team that negotiated the first Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT) between the United States and the Soviets in 1972. He is considered a hardliner in dealing with the Soviets on arms control and was a strong critic of the SALT II treaty concluded under the Carter administration but withdrawn from the ratification process after the Soviets sent troops into Afghanistan in December 1979.

Odessa man loses custody of sons, but gains visitation

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Floyd Baker, a 38-year-old Odessa man once accused of murdering his wife in Amarillo, lost custody of his two sons in an 11-1 civil jury verdict in Midland's 318th State District Court, but was awarded visitation rights.

"I think it's a fair verdict," said John Tull, Potter County prosecutor who had sought to forever sever the father from the children. "I never quibble with the jury's verdict."

The seven-man, five-woman jury deliberated about 3½ hours Wednesday evening in the Amarillo case before returning a verdict. In a civil child-custody case only a 10-2 decision is required for a jury ruling.

BY ITS VERDICT, the jury, whose foreman was 43-year-old petroleum engineer Autry C. Stephens, awarded custody of the Baker children, Monty, 8, and David, 6, to the Texas Department of Human Resources. According to trial testimony, the boys ultimately may be living with their maternal aunt and uncle in Houston.

Presiding Judge Jerry Shackelford of Amarillo's 320th State District Court will determine the extent of Baker's visitation rights. Amount of child support Baker will be ordered to pay will be determined in later hearings.

George Harwood, the attorney who had represented the children in the lawsuit and who had charged Baker with being irresponsible, pretentious and a "sick man...who'll make them (his sons) sick," also did not quibble with the jury's ruling.

"I think it was an appropriate decision," he said.

But Baker's defense attorney, Selden Hale, was not so easily placated. "It's not the whole ball game," he said in apparently referring to a possible appeal. "We're pleased, and Floyd (Baker) is pleased," he said.

Baker, however, as he was leaving the courtroom to return to Odessa with his 17-year-old artist son, Scott, declined to comment.

Hale, referring to his co-counsel, John Mann, said "In his words, it's a just verdict."

Earlier in the night as the jury was deliberating, Mann was resigned to the demise of the controversial Baker case, which had created so much public furor and adverse sentiment that the child-custody trial was transferred to Judge Barbara Culver's 318th District Court here.

"This will be the end of it," Mann surmised.

Efforts to select a fair and impartial jury in Amarillo were unsuccessful. The consensus, according to observers there, was that Baker had axed his 33-year-old wife, the former Linda Sue "Susie" Martindale of Sweetwater, dismembered her body and had cast her into the blizzard of Nov. 18.

AFTERWARD, BAKER had reported his wife, whom he had met in Big Spring State Hospital while he

Armenian commandos seize Turkish consul in Paris

PARIS (AP) — Armenian "suicide commandos" seized about 40 hostages in the Turkish consulate in Paris today and threatened to kill them all unless Armenian political prisoners and others were freed from Turkish jails and flown to France, authorities said.

The gunmen, armed with pistols and at least one hand grenade, said they would blow up the building if French forces tried to intervene and set a deadline of 11 p.m. — 5 p.m. EDT — for their demands to be met.

Turkey's ambassador in France, who was not in the consulate, denied his government held Armenian political prisoners and said there would be no negotiations with the terrorists.

The guerrillas said they were "suicide commandos" of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia. First reports said there were three terrorists, but informed sources later said there were four, and that one was wounded during the takeover.

A Turkish security guard also was reported wounded, and in the late afternoon three doctors were admitted to the building. Shortly afterward, police evacuated buildings facing the consulate on Boulevard Haussmann in Paris' fashionable 8th District.

They also succeeded in evacuating all the other occupants of the consulate, about 70 people. Some of them climbed down from the second and third floors on ladders put up by the police.

Police said when they first approached to ask if negotiations were possible, a hand grenade was waved at them behind a window.

Police also said initial reports that two French policemen were held were incorrect. They said two policemen tried to get into the offices immediately after the attack but were repulsed by a burst of gunfire.

Messages dropped by the guerrillas and a statement issued by their organization in Beirut said "all the hostages inside the consulate will be executed" unless the demands are met, and that the building "and all the people inside" will be blown up if French forces try to intervene.

The messages were signed by the "Suicide Commandos of Yeghia Kechichian," a cell of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia. Kechichian was presumed to be a member of the Secret Army slain on a mission.

A spokesman for the Turkish Embassy in Paris, who declined to be identified, quoted Ambassador Adnan Bulak as saying: "We will not negotiate with terrorists. That is Turkish government policy."

The spokesman said there were no Armenian political prisoners in Turkey, though there were "extreme right and extreme left-wing political prisoners."

Macedonian tombs found in Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A Greek archaeologist claims to have discovered two Macedonian tombs dating back 23 centuries not far from one believed to be that of King Phillip, father of Alexander the Great.

Prof. Manolis Andronikos of Salonica University, who made the new find in Vergina in northern Greece, uncovered the tomb thought to be Phillip's four years ago. It contained priceless gold relics. He has continued excavations in the area in the belief that it will prove to be the site of the ancient city of Aigai, capital of the Macedonian kings.

One of the two newly discovered tombs had been looted, he said. "We found the hole through which the robbers got in, but unfortunately it was too small for us to get in now," Andronikos said.

He added in a telephone interview that he believed the second tomb would also prove to have been looted. "I don't think we will find any more unlooted tombs. The 1977 find was the lucky exception," he said.

Andronikos estimates the tombs are from the beginning of the third century BC. He said that through the looters' hole in the first tomb he had been able to distinguish a fallen marble door and "something like a bed, also made of marble." He also said he had glimpsed some yellow paint on the lower wall of the chamber, and elsewhere some red paint.

Eight Macedonian tombs have already been discovered in the area of Vergina, the most famous of which was the one which Andronikos believes to be that of Phillip.

Findings from that tomb were displayed in the northern city of Salonica, before being taken on a tour of the United States this year. They include a solid gold casket weighing about 25 pounds, a gold laurel wreath and five carved ivory heads of royal personages.

Archaeological investigations in the Vergina area have been continuing on and off since 1936, but in 1861 French archaeologist Leon Heuzey had begun to investigate the area on orders from Napoleon III.

The Macedonians reached the peak of their power under Phillip and his son, Alexander. Phillip II united the scattered tribesmen of the northern Greece area into a ruthlessly efficient army which conquered the whole of Greece.

Andronikos, who this year has been excavating in the area since May, said that he may soon have to wrap up the dig for the winter. "But we will try to get as far as we can before the weather stops us," he said.

Older Americans RSVP with volunteer hours

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the generation that came of age in the '70s was the "me" generation, the generation now approaching age 70 might be called the "thee" generation.

By the thousands, older Americans are flocking to give of their time and talents as longer lifespans lead more and more people into the ranks of the retired.

Now a decade old, the Retired Senior Volunteer Program boasts more than 319,000 people, aged 60 and over, who each year donate more than 57 million hours of their time.

The organization will celebrate its 10th birthday Wednesday with a White House ceremony, part of planned activities for this week's annual RSVP convention here. About 60 senior volunteers are expected to attend.

For one elderly man or woman, the attraction to volunteer work is to try to share the joys of a long life, for another it's helping ease the pain of death. For thousands it's a rewarding chance to help both others and themselves.

"I enjoy everything about being an RSVP volunteer. Being needed is the big reward. And it helps keep me young at 81 years. It makes me feel like a useful citizen," said Lois Wayland of Omaha, Neb., who tutors disadvantaged youngsters.

Another volunteer is Mary Felek, 81, of New Haven, Conn., who remembers the despair of a relative who died of cancer in 1972.

Mrs. Felek explained that her sister-in-law "was very low and wanted to talk to somebody outside of the family. You see, at that time we didn't want to talk about dying."

A young Roman Catholic priest befriended the woman, who was Jewish. He would "come in and talk to her by the hour, and she got such ... like a catharsis," Mrs. Felek said.

Today Mrs. Felek volunteers her time at a local hospital coordinating visits to the sick by ministers, priests and rabbis. She lets them know when parishioners are ill and suggests when to visit them and their families.

When she heard about the hospital's program, in October 1972, "I thought to myself, I thought, 'Oh, this is just for me.' When I joined up I knew that was the job for me."

"To me it's a great joy. I tell you honestly, I go to work with the greatest of pleasure. I don't know what I would have done. God help us if that RSVP ever folds up, me and a million others."

RSVP volunteers around the country — lawyers, teachers, carpenters, doctors, bricklayers and so forth — receive no pay for their efforts, at least not in money.

But the federal government spends about $27.7 million a year to administer the program. That's about $87 a year per volunteer, or 48 cents per hour worked.

The Reagan administration has proposed a modest increase in next year's RSVP budget, to $28.7 million.

Dr. Harold Gunn, 61, a retired Detroit speech pathologist, said his interest in counseling troubled young men is sustained by the success stories.

He recalled one particular youth, a small boy who was picked on by his peers and had been shuffled between foster parents and grandparent most of his life. With Gunn's help and encouragement, he enrolled in a job training program, earned a high school equivalency diploma and now hopes to enter college.

"There may not be any money in volunteer service but this is a reward money can't buy," Gunn said.

Among the senior volunteers scheduled to attend the RSVP convention is 77-year-old Donald Mortlock of Laurel, Del.

Mortlock retired 11 years ago from a job as an insurance auditor in Buffalo, N.Y., and moved to Laurel, where he founded the 1,000-member Indian River Senior Center.

Mortlock said he started the center because he was just not inclined to spend the rest of his life in a rocking chair.

He kicked off operations in an Episcopal church with just 35 members.

"By the end of the year we had 120, by the end of '71 we had 250 and we kept picking up new members. It was much needed around here, apparently," he said.

"We grew to 500 by 1975 and we had to stop taking in members because we were crowding out the hall," he said.

A federal grant for a new civic center allowed the group to expand, and it now has 1,000 members.

"We had 250 out to a luncheon yesterday and we're worried now about crowding out our room again," said Mortlock.

The senior citizens center has a part-time secretary and a custodian but is otherwise operated by volunteer workers.

"We're all volunteers so we can't spend seven days a week there. We compromise and spend 6 1/2," he joked.

India's monsoon fails to yield bountiful harvest

The Washington Post

NEW DELHI — The monsoon rains hit Delhi on July 23, just as the weathermen predicted. They immediately cooled the air after three months of 115-degree heat, but created chaos in India's capital city by flooding key roadways and severely disrupting communications.

It became a parliamentary scandal as 40,000 of Delhi's quarter of a million phones were thrown out of commission by the rainstorms. It was so bad that four of six Telex machines reserved for Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's use stopped working.

But, more important, the onset of the rains gave India the hope of a bountiful harvest and economic prosperity for the coming year.

Now, 2 1/2 months later, that hope has not been fulfilled. Although the monsoon started on time and with a rush, agricultural experts report that it died out early and the rains of late August and early September that are vital for a successful harvest in October never came.

The monsoon rains, which generally end in northern India in mid-September, quit a month early this year. Agriculture Minister Rao Birendra Singh acknowledged the government's concern to Parliament last week, and said that extra water is being released for irrigation and power supplies are being increased for farmers so they can use pumps to water their fields.

Western agricultural experts here whose forecasts have been accurate in the past are predicting that India, which ended four years of self-sufficiency in grains when it purchased 1.5 million tons of wheat from the United States in July, is likely to be forced back into the international market as a result of a poor harvest caused by the early end to the monsoon.

One expert predicted India will have to purchase another 2.5 million to 3 million tons of wheat.

It is, however, a hard political decision for India to take as this country took great pride in its newly won ability to feed its 684 million people with home-grown grains. The original purchase drew a storm of protest from newspapers and politicians, including some members of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's ruling Congress-I Party.

The reality, though, is that India, like most of the countries of Asia and Africa, is subject to the vagaries of nature. Even with a vast increase in irrigation across the country and the use of fertilizer and miracle seeds, a good monsoon is needed for a bumper crop.

Furthermore, despite its boast of being the 10th largest industrial power in the world, its nuclear reactors and its fledgling space program, India remains essentially an agricultural society. Almost 80 percent of its people live in more than half a million villages, 200,000 of which have neither a water supply nor electricity.

To them, the seemingly capricious coming and going of the rains is all important for survival.

For India, this year's monsoon has been one of the most capricious of all. A large portion of the northern Indian state of Rajasthan, for example, suffered through its third year of drought in which farmers could not even get enough fodder to feed their cattle. Yet the capital city of Jaipur was hit by the worst flooding in its history when torrential rains fell in that area of the state.

DENVER CITY — Services for Iva J. Gist, 61, of Denver City, were to be today in the Church of Christ in Denver City with Tommy Allison, pastor of the Church of Christ, officiating and Skip Rogers assisting. Graveside services will be at 2 p.m. Friday in Burkhurst Cemetery at Burkhurst, directed by Singleton Funeral Home of Denver City.

Mrs. Gist died Tuesday in a Denver City hospital after a lengthy illness. She was born Oct. 9, 1919, in Swink, Okla. She married C.W. Gist on Sept. 21, 1940, in Walters, Okla. She had been a resident of Denver City since 1955 when she moved from Burkhurst.

She is survived by her husband, three sons, a sister and three grandchildren.

Welton Moore

Services for Welton Terry Moore, 45, of 1403 S. Terrell St., will be at 3 p.m. Saturday in Greater Ideal Baptist Church with the Rev. Rase Gowans officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery, directed by Jackson Funeral Home.

He died Monday in a Midland hospital after a short illness.

He was born in Jefferson and attended Central High School. He moved to Midland in 1956.

Survivors include his wife, Ruby Lee Hickey Moore; a daughter, Patricia Evette of Midland; his mother, Iola Moore of California; and a brother, James Carr of California.

Walter R. Leeper

Graveside services for Walter R. Leeper, 37, of 4201 Andrews Highway, will be at 4 p.m. Friday in Resthaven Memorial Park directed by Newline W. Ellis Funeral Home with Dr. Ray Riddle of the First Presbyterian Church officiating.

He died Wednesday in Post. A ruling on his death is being withheld pending an autopsy.

Leeper was born Feb. 10, 1944, in Midland. He grew up in Midland and was in the first graduating class of Lee High School in 1962. He was also a graduate of the University of Texas. He was employed as a geologist with Leeper Oil Company.

Survivors include his parents, Mr.

and Mrs. Alan B. Leeper of Midland; two brothers, David Leeper of Midland and Charles Leeper of Fort Worth; and a sister, Jean Hoelscher of South Fork, Colo.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Heart Association.

Carl G. Lewis

Services for Carl G. Lewis, 88, 308 S. Clay St., will be at 3 p.m. Friday at the Greater Ideal Baptist Church with the Rev. Rase Gowans officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery, directed by Thomas Funeral Home.

He died Sunday at his home.

Lewis was born March 10, 1893, in Courtney. He lived in Midland for the past 24 years and worked for Great Western Drilling Company for 35 years. He was a member of the Greater Ideal Baptist Church. Lewis and his wife, Hattie, had been married for 60 years.

Survivors include his wife; three sons, Jerry Lewis and Robert Michael Lewis, both of Midland, and Theodore E. Lewis of Lubbock; four daughters, Frances Glass of Los Angeles, Calif., Helen Blue of Midland, Ruby Fletcher of Mill Town, Conn., and Bobbie Morris of Odesa; 19 grandchildren, 29 great-grandchildren and six great-great-grandchildren.

Goldie L. Smith

Goldie L. Smith, 70, died at noon Wednesday at her residence, 3713 Gaston St.

Services will be at 1 p.m. Saturday in Newline W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Doug Parsons, pastor of Golf Course Road Church of Christ, officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Smith was born Jan. 19, 1911, in Clear Creek, Ind. She was reared in Indiana and was married there in 1929. She moved to Corpus Christi in 1942 and lived there until 1962 when she moved to Midland. She worked for Basin Supply until they went out of business in the early 1970s. She was a member of the Church of Christ.

Survivors include a son, Richard W. Jones of Midland; a daughter, Janet Sue Upson of Dallas; and four grandchildren.

Nick Lampson, chairman of the Texas State Board of Tax Assessor Examiners, talks about the board's role as a "grievance committee" to hear complaints.

Sanctions deal with unfair assessment

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A taxpayer with a complaint has a place to go for relief or, at least, for airing his grievances other than to a sympathetic friend or a stone-faced local bureaucrat.

He can try another channel. "The public has certain recourses," said Nick Lampson, chairman of the Texas State Board of Tax Assessor Examiners, should property assessments be "not fair, not equitable and not uniform."

"There are sanctions. There are penalties," Lampson said Wednesday afternoon in a statewide circuit to explain how taxpayers may register complaints against property appraisers and their lieutenants who do the leg work, tax assessors and collectors, tax appraisal boards, officials and other public servants.

"The people of our state are guaranteed that the values placed on their property are fair and equitable with values on their neighbor's property," said Lampson, who is the tax assessor collector for Jefferson County. That "guarantee" is "through the registration, education and certification of appraisers and assessors," he said.

Lampson, of Beaumont, suggested that appraisers and assessors who are derelict, negligent, incompetent or irresponsible in their duties could hurt themselves and liable the taxing entities they are pledged to serve.

"If they mess up," he said, "they can lose their license and could cause the (taxing) jurisdictions not to collect their taxes for a given year."

Lampson, who held a press conference in the office of Midland County Tax Assessor Collector Frances Shuffield, said that the board "has begun a vigorous effort to inform all the taxpayers of the state of the professionalism of those individuals involved in the newly-created appraisal districts."

In Midland County, that district currently is governed by a six-member lame-duck board which represents the county's six taxing entities: City of Midland, Midland County, Midland and Greenwood Independent School Districts, Midland College and Midland Memorial Hospital.

However, that board for the two-year period beginning in 1982 will be dominated by the Midland school district by virtue of a state law which permits the taxing entity with the biggest tax levying power to control the board. The board is to govern the work of Midland County Chief Appraiser Virgil Jones Jr. and his 25-member staff.

"Property tax administration in Texas is taking a turn from an old archaic system to a more modern, professional and responsible profession," Lampson said. "We on the Board of Tax Assessor Examiners intend to guarantee that the persons involved in valuing property will do so in a professional, responsible manner."

Heretofore, the many taxing bodies throughout the state "have been operating on tradition" rather than on fair market and equitable values, he said.

He noted that appraisers are obligated to set "fair cash values" on property, but that "the law does not take inflation into consideration." However, he noted an exception: agricultural land whereon (taxable values are based on the income or production rather than market values for urban development.

Lampson said that the board, which has a staff of workers to investigate complaints, "can act as a grievance committee for the taxpayers of the state."

"Any citizen may file a complaint against a property tax appraiser or assessor for conducting himself or herself in a manner that does not conform to the BTAE Code of Ethics or (to) the mandate of the Registration and Certification Act."

Complaints may be filed by writing to the Board of Tax Assessor Examiners, P.O. Box 13246, Austin, Texas 78711 or by telephoning the toll-free number 1-800-252-9304.

Among those on the board is Mrs. Shuffield, who was appointed this year by Gov. Bill Clements.

Lampson described Mrs. Shuffield as a long-time "leader in our profession."

"She has been instrumental in bringing property tax administration out of the dark ages and into the age of reasoned professionalism."

"The taxpayers of Midland County have been fortunate to have a person like Mrs. Shuffield assisting them," Lampson said. "Not all areas of the state have been so fortunate."

Robbery on the air

MIAMI (AP) — It wasn't the first time crime had touched the staff of WWSB, but it was probably the most dramatic.

Listeners to the Miami radio station talk show tuned in a live stick-up Tuesday night when program director Jerry Williams stepped outside and was greeted by three men with a gun.

The men forced Williams back into the offices of WWSB and took $200, a gold chain, a watch and ring from him.

Woman guilty in kidnapping

MOULTON, Ala. (AP) — A woman who said she tarred and feathered her ex-husband's fiancée out of a sense of community decency faces assault charges after being convicted of kidnapping in the case.

A jury in Lawrence County Circuit Court found Marita McElwey guilty of a kidnapping charge Wednesday.

The 54-year-old Vinemont, Ala., woman faces up to 20 years in prison and a fine of $10,000 on the kidnapping charge. A sentencing hearing was set for Oct. 26.

The defendant sat quietly as the verdict was read, but her 49-year-old sister, Robbie Jean McCormick, who also faces charges in the incident, began sobbing and screaming. "No, she didn't do it."

Mrs. McElwey and her sister still face third-degree assault charges in the tarring and feathering of Elizabeth Jamieson McElwey, who is now married to John McElwey, a doctor in Town Creek, Ala.

Mrs. McElwey has never denied making the attack in March, but she has denied doing anything wrong.

The defendant testified Tuesday that she tarred and feathered McElwey's fiancée because she believed that McElwey, who was divorced from her in 1975, was still her common-law husband.

When she found out that the two planned to marry, she recalled, "I knew I had to stop them because I couldn't let them do this to a nice community, to the people I knew, or to my family."

Texas Board on Aging meets Friday

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Board on Aging will meet at 10 a.m. Friday to consider 28 applications by regional agencies, including an application by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission for some $36 million in federal and state funds to support special services for older Texans.

The $36 million budget for regional aging programs is an estimate of the federal and matching state funds expected to be available for fiscal year 1982. The figure, which is based on Administration on Aging projections, will not be final until Congress takes final action to adopt a federal budget. The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission is seeking $701,570 to operate the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging.

The meeting will be in Room 255 of the Bevington A. Reed Building, 200 E. Riverside Drive in Austin.

Health facilities withdraw applications

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Two Midland health facilities have withdrawn applications to the Texas Health Facilities Commission because that panel's approval is no longer required for the proposed projects.

Hospice of Midland, Inc., and Midland Memorial Hospital withdrew their applications because laws recently passed by the Texas Legislature make their proposed projects exempt from THFC approval.

Hospice of Midland had filed for approval to establish a home health agency offering in-home nursing, social services, clergy-support services and other services to terminally ill patients.

Home health agencies were eliminated from coverage by THFC as of Sept. 1.

Midland Memorial Hospital had applied for permission to acquire a digital image processing system at a cost of $250,000.

As of Oct. 1, projects costing less than $400,000 will not require THFC approval, and a THFC spokesman said the commission could not have made a final decision on that application before that date.

Honduran group claims attack

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — A left-wing guerrilla group says the shooting of two American military advisers and a bomb explosion at the Honduran congress was the start of its "armed struggle against Yankee imperialism."

The Lorenzo Zelaya Popular Revolutionary Command said it was responsible for the attack Wednesday on a U.S. Embassy van in which Army Sgts. Robert L. Smith, 30, of Marshville, N.C., and Russell L. McFall, 34, were wounded.

Three other Americans in the vehicle escaped injury.

A communiqué from the guerrillas also assailed Honduras' military government, calling it a puppet of the United States.

It was the first attack on the U.S. training team of 21 men who began arriving in this Central American country two months ago. The Honduran police posted extra guards at their headquarters.

Embassy spokesman Robert Callahan said Smith was wounded in the kidney and was flown to a U.S. military hospital in Panama. He was reported in stable condition.

McFall, whose hometown was not available, was treated at a local hospital for an arm wound and released, the spokesman said.

Smith is a liaison officer between the training team and the Honduran government and McFall teaches air-to-ground communications, Embassy spokesman Robert Callahan said.

Callahan said a guerrilla with an automatic rifle fired eight bullets into the van in which Smith, McFall and three other American advisers were being driven to their headquarters.

The police said at least three men took part in the ambush and escaped in a taxi. They also fired at the nearby home of Col. Rolando Mejia Garriga, a former vice minister of communications, the police said.

The morning ambush coincided with a bomb explosion at the Legislative Palace that caused extensive damage but no casualties.

Police said an anonymous caller telephoned a warning to the palace a few minutes before the explosion. They said about a dozen guards and others in the building escaped before the bomb went off on the second floor.

New-style mortgages beneficial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adjustable rate mortgages, though failing to provide the certainty of a set monthly payment during the term of the loan, will ensure that mortgages remain available, federal regulators say.

Richard T. Pratt, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and Cantwell T. Muckenfuss III, an official of the Comptroller of the Currency's office, said Tuesday that the new-style mortgages can benefit consumers.

The two agencies have authorized savings and loan associations and national banks to issue adjustable rate mortgages, although consumer groups have said there are not enough safeguards to protect the homebuyer.

Pratt said the savings and loan industry is now "experiencing severe economic difficulties that threaten its viability."

The adjustable mortgage loan "will help to ensure that mortgage credit remains available when interest rates are increasing as well as when interest rates are decreasing," Pratt told a House Banking subcommittee.

"It is the borrower, after all, who is ultimately hurt by restrictions on mortgage loan instruments that discourage thrifts from placing the bulk of their funds in residential mortgages," Pratt testified.

At a subcommittee hearing July 28, consumer spokesmen said mortgage rates that increase with rises in interest rates could make it impossible for some homeowners to afford the payments.

A General Accounting Office report this summer criticized the new mortgages and urged consumer safeguards.

However, Muckenfuss stressed the plight of savings institutions in a time of high inflation and volatile interest rates. Many of the institutions are locked into 30-year fixed-rate mortgages "that do not provide enough revenue to pay interest on deposits, let alone cover operating expenses," he said.

The new regulations allow lenders to change interest rates up to 2 percent per year. Many lenders already have converted to the new loans.

Campaign to forgo pay raise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two congressional aides are asking their colleagues to forgo their 4.8 percent pay raises next month to show support for President Reagan's economic program, but the proposal isn't catching fire on Capitol Hill.

Only three of about 18,000 people on House and Senate staff payrolls, have pledged to turn down the pay raise, which becomes effective Oct. 1.

"We've had a lot of expression of interest," said Fran Westner, who organized the petition drive with Nancy Short. "We have people who say they want to come by and sign."

But then again, the ringing telephone has meant messages like:

"What's the matter with you people. Are you crazy?"

"Another suggested we might want to give them the 4.8 percent," Mrs. Westner said Tuesday.

One person started "questioning our IQ," she recalled, and another asked whether they had used government stationery to circulate their idea to all 535 House and Senate offices. They didn't, she said.

Mrs. Westner and Mrs. Short, both legislative assistants to Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., decided to try their idea late last week. They quickly won Hyde's endorsement.

They suggested that staff members reject the pay raise in a "congressional staff pledge of confidence."

Common sense rules

In a free society like the United States, presidential security never will be a simple matter. But spurred by the shooting earlier this year of President Ronald Reagan and three others, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee is looking into possible ways of better ensuring the president's protection.

Testimony from Charles M. Vance, a Secret Service agent from 1965 until 1979, indicated just how difficult it will be to make certain the president is safe. Vance, who is married to former President Gerald Ford's daughter, Susan, told the committee earlier this week that Secret Service agents sometimes are overruled by White House staff members because of publicity reasons.

He went on to propose that when "bona fide security objections" are raised by the Secret Service, political, personal and protocol arguments should take a back seat.

While history graphically tells us to be more attentive to the protectability of all the nation's top political leaders, Vance's recommendation is in conflict with our high-mobility, high-visibility society. We demand that our leaders be visible, take off their jackets and rub elbows with the common folk, put their lives in the limelight and, all too often it seems, in the crosshairs of an assassin's scope.

Still, Vance's recommendation should not be tossed aside without a thought. Perhaps it does contain wisdom that can be implemented, at least to a degree.

While keeping the president visible is essential from a political standpoint, obviously there are times when the Secret Service's better judgment should not be overlooked. Common sense should rule when protecting the life of the president is the bottom line.

Using Occam's razor

As every flimflam artist knows, confusion has its uses. For example, it is useful in the discussion of foreign affairs.

It is particularly useful in swaying public opinion to accept turns of events that favor alien cases contrary to national interests and freedom.

Contests for political power are taking place on every continent. The most crucial contests are between the forces of international totalitarianism and the champions of national independence and freedom.

A favorite device of the propagandists for totalitarian causes is confusion. A favorite means of spreading it is by overcomplicating analyses of situations. A relatively simple situation can be made to seem so complex as to defy understanding.

The great medieval philosopher William of Occam, author of many brilliant dissertations on power struggles of the 14th century, understood this clearly.

He developed the analytical tool known as "Occam's razor," the maxim that assumptions introduced to explain a thing must not be multiplied beyond necessity. Occam pared down the analysis to essentials.

He would have been at odds with today's complicators, who churn out complexities with glee, producing explanations that defy all understanding.

In a description of a power struggle between totalitarianism and freedom fighters, the fundamentals of the conflict are obscured needlessly.

A public bombarded with such confusion cannot form clear ideas of what is happening. In the confusion the totalitarians take over. By the time the fog is over, the totalitarians are in power.

The American public has been flimflammed this way time and time again. It is no wonder that shrewd Americans, when they are targets of a long-winded and complex spiel, like to ask: "What's the bottom line?"

The bottom line in a verbal haystack of totalitarian complexities dealing with foreign policies is: Let the totalitarians win.

Brainy Americans should find Occam's razor handy for dealing with the involved and serpentine complications that totalitarian "explanations" use to camouflage their propaganda in behalf of evil causes.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Judge barred evidence favorable to Williams

WASHINGTON — One of the jurors who convicted Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., at his ABSCAM trial last spring has stated that he would have voted for acquittal if he had seen a Justice Department document indicating that federal prosecutors knew they had no case against the senator after a 13-month effort to trap him. I first reported the existence of the document last month.

The juror, Salvatore Ottovino, told investigators hired by Williams' attorney, Robert J. Flynn Jr., that he was confident that some other members of the jury would have agreed with him. The result would have been — at the very least — a hung jury and a new trial, at which Williams would have offered the document as evidence of government misconduct.

Jack Anderson

But U.S. District Judge George Pratt suppressed the exculpatory evidence, and Williams was convicted. Now he faces expulsion from the Senate, a move recommended by the Ethics Committee, which went along obediently with the prosecution's wishes and refused to give Williams the full, fair hearing he requested.

In addition to Ottovino, the private investigators also interviewed the jury foreman, Ralph Monaco. He told them that if Judge Pratt had allowed the jury to consider possible entrapment of Williams by the FBI's undercover agents, there would have been a hung jury. But Pratt refused to let the jurors discuss charges of government misconduct raised by the senator's counsel at his trial.

The private probe was conducted by International Investigations Inc. of Springfield, Va., whose president, Richard Bast, has made something of a career of exposing FBI and judicial misbehavior. Monaco told the detectives that the jurors were troubled by the entrapment issue.

But Pratt, who is known as "the Marine" for his unbending, pro-government rulings from the bench, told the jury: "You are not to be concerned whether the prosecution, or the FBI agents, or Mr. (Mel) Weinberg (the convicted con man used by the FBI to snare targeted politicians for ABSCAM) acted legally or properly or improperly. Those are questions which must be decided by me at an appropriate time."

There is other evidence that raises questions about Pratt's fitness to preside at Williams' trial. My associate Indy Badhwar has learned that the judge had access to raw FBI files on the senator and studied them even before Williams was indicted. Pratt has acknowledged "the nights I spent in Brooklyn going through them with my law clerks."

Whether Pratt was bothered by the internal Justice Department document indicating there was no case against Williams is not clear. Yet he withheld the document from Williams and his attorney.

During the trial, Judge Pratt belittled the use of character witnesses in criminal trials. Yet he delayed the proceedings at one point to appear himself as a character witness at the trial of Nassau County, N.Y., Republican Party county chairman Joseph Margiotta, who was accused of mail fraud and extortion.

The judge descended to personal attacks on government prosecutors who had been disturbed by the FBI's excesses during the ABSCAM investigation. The prestigious New Jersey Law Journal called Pratt's ad hominem attacks on the attorneys an example of "non-judicial animus."

Pratt, who reportedly has his eye on a vacancy in the federal appeals court, resorted to near-hysterical hyperbole when describing the ABSCAM operation. "The cynicism and hypocrisy (sic) of corrupt public officials," he wrote, "probably pose a greater danger to this country than all the drug traffickers combined."

Footnote: Congress was the main target of the Executive Branch terrorism known as ABSCAM. Yet not a single member of Congress so far has had the courage to stand up and call for an investigation.

UNDER THE DOME: House Democrats who fought in vain to kill the so-called "indexing" clause in the Reagan tax bill have been informally approached by some Republicans in hopes of future cooperation on the matter. Democrats had argued that the clause, which indexes income taxes to inflation, is a surefire way to fuel inflation. The GOP dissidents, who caught heat from their inflation-plagued constituents during the summer recess, think maybe the escalator could be knocked out before the 1982 campaigns. It could be done, they believe, without unraveling the whole tax-cut package.

— Sen. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., was getting advice from some unusual sources on how to bully Judge Sandra Day O'Connor on the abortion issue. Two of the three aides buzzing around him as the TV cameras rolled were not from his own office staff, but from subcommittees the senator chairs. One, Karl Moor, was from the subcommittee on aging and the family, which at least has some relevance to the abortion issue; the other was Joel Lisker, counsel for Denton's terrorism subcommittee.

WATCH ON WASTE: President Carter's grain embargo may have "sent a message" to the Soviet Union, but the bill was sent to the American taxpayer. To help farmers weather the embargo, the Commodity Credit Corporation bought 4.1 million metric tons of corn and 4.2 million tons of wheat at a cost of $978 million. Agriculture Department sources say much of the grain was overpriced and of poor quality, and therefore hard to get rid of. Most of it is still sitting in private warehouses, and the storing and handling charges may go as high as $141 million by the end of the current fiscal year.

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

It's a fine mess the archbishop of Chicago seems to have gotten into. The Sun-Times charges that Cardinal Cody gave a friend of his a million dollars in misappropriated church funds. If proven guilty, the cardinal could be given 10 years — as an honorary official of the Teamsters.

The Sun-Times is taking a big chance in a heavily Catholic city like Chicago. If lightning strikes the building, we'll know that the late Mayor Richard Daley put in a good word for the Cardinal.

ART BUCHWALD Johnny can't eat lousy tofu!

"The class will please come to order. Today, children, we will talk about American agriculture. The United States produces more meat, grain, corn, dairy products, vegetables and fruit than any country on earth. Thanks to our farmers, food is one of our largest exports and we are able to feed people all over the world."

"Now, Johnny, can you name a meat that comes from an American farm?"

"Tofu."
"No, Johnny. Tofu is not a meat. It looks like meat, but it is made from soybean curd."

"Lady in the cafeteria said it was meat."

"I'm sure she didn't say it was meat. What she must have said was that you are now entitled under Department of Agriculture regulations to have a delicious tofu instead of a hamburger."

"It tasted lousy."

"Now, Johnny, you must understand tofu is an acquired taste. Does anyone know what an acquired taste is?"

"Something that tastes lousy?"
"Now, I'll have no more of that kind of talk in this sixth-grade class. An acquired taste is something you have to get used to. When I was a little girl I didn't like spinach. But as I grew up I acquired a taste for it, and now I eat it once a week."

"You ever acquire a taste for tofu?"

"We didn't have tofu when I was a little girl."

"You're lucky. It really tastes lousy."

"Now let's talk about other things farmers raise. Edna, name something a farmer produces."

"Milk."

"Very good. Milk and other dairy products are some of the most important foods for young growing bodies because they contain calcium which your bones need to make you strong. How many glasses of milk should a young person drink a day?"

"A half a cup."

"No, Johnny. A half a cup is certainly not enough milk for someone your age."

"Lady in the cafeteria said that's all I could have."

"She was just following federal regulations concerning school lunches."

"What's federal regulations?"

"Those are the rules the President and his advisers decide the people must live by. He had to cut down on your milk allowance to save money for the country."

"What does he do with all the milk we ain't allowed to drink?"

"It's made into butter and cheese and stored in warehouses all over America, until it gets rotten and then they throw it away."

"You got to be kidding."

"No, Johnny. That's the only way we can encourage farmers to produce milk. By buying up their surplus they're guaranteed a profit on their milk. Shall we move on to vegetables? What kind of vegetables do our American farmers raise?"

"I know the answer to that one. Catsup."

"Catsup is not a vegetable, Johnny."

"Lady in the cafeteria said it was a vegetable. She said I was entitled to two vegetables; potatoes and catsup."

"Well, it's true that the Department of Agriculture declared the other day that catsup was a vegetable, but farmers don't raise it. They raise tomatoes and afterwards they are squashed up and put into bottles as catsup. Then people like yourselves put the catsup on your hamburgers to make them taste better."

"Lady in the cafeteria wouldn't give me no hamburger."

"Well, then, you can put catsup on your tofu."

"I did, but it still tasted lousy."

"Johnny, you have disrupted this class enough today. You will stay after school and write 100 times on the blackboard, 'America produces more food than any country in the world today.'"

BIBLE VERSE

Let no man deceive you with empty words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the sons of disobedience. Eph. 5:6

GEORGE F. WILL

'Days of stone' may be at hand for Polish people

WASHINGTON — The Kremlin never speaks nicely, but it sometimes speaks precisely. For many months it has called Poland's Solidarity movement "anti-socialist and anti-Soviet." Solidarity is, in fact, both. So if Solidarity survives, no elite anywhere in Eastern Europe — in Europe to the Urals — is safe.

The suppression of Solidarity — which now means the Polish nation — has long seemed, to me, inevitable. If it comes soon, as Moscow's menacing words suggest, some Western observers may blame the "excesses" of the recent Solidarity congress. The congress called for free parliamentary elections and pledged encouragement for free trade unions throughout the Eastern Bloc, including the Soviet Union. But for many months the Polish Communist Party's "leading role" in Polish society, although formally acknowledged by Solidarity, has been a chimera. Solidarity has become what the Poles call a "parallel state."

More than a year ago the Polish government signed the Gdansk agreement with Solidarity, a social contract, a constitution asserting citizens' rights and limiting government power. A Polish cartoonist depicted the event as "the international agreement between the Polish government and the Polish people."

Since then the government has become a bit more like a domestic institution. The Economist of London says: "In the 14 months since the Gdansk uprising last July, a totalitarian state has been turned into one that is now more pluralistic than most countries in the world — run by a Communist Party whose leaders are at least as democratically chosen as those, say, in Britain's Labor Party." The comparison with the Labor Party is faint praise, but the fact that The Economist correctly notes is astonishing.

At the Communist Party congress in July, most of the 1,950 delegates were democratically elected by secret ballot from unlimited lists of candidates. More than 80 percent of those elected had never attended a congress, and 80 percent of the 140-man central committee did not get to attend as delegates. A recent opinion poll (polls are not a normal feature of Eastern Bloc life) rated the popularity of 10 Polish institutions. The Church was ranked first, the Communist Party 10th.

Poland is the South Carolina of the Soviet empire, an incubator of secessionist sentiment. Most great revolutions, from the American through the Russian and Chinese revolutions, were directed from the top by leaders improvising tactics, but with a clear sense of their destination. The Polish revolution — by some measures the most remarkable yet, whatever the future holds — has leaders. But they are riding a headstrong horse, and they are not sure the horse knows the way. Recently, for example, one of Solidarity's regional newspapers printed, and the state agency distributed (perhaps inadvertently), an appeal — printed in Russian — to Russian soldiers to rise against the Kremlin.

Twice — twice in five years — the Soviet Union surprised the Poles by participating in atrocities against Poland. In August 1939, the Soviet Union became Hitler's ally and the next month collaborated with him in carving up Poland. By 1944, the Soviet Union, at Hitler's initiative, had changed sides, and the Red Army was near Warsaw. The Warsaw uprising against the Nazi occupiers assumed that Russian help would soon arrive. Instead, the Russians waited at the outskirts of Warsaw content to allow their former allies, the Nazis, to serve their future needs by butchering Polish leadership elites that would have complicated Soviet occupation.

Perhaps Poland's economic calamity — a 15 percent decline in GNP last year; desperate food and other shortages — will cause the Soviet Union to choose to leave Poland alone. Perhaps Soviet leaders hope that Poland will be a sobering economic example to any Eastern European group that might be tempted to start down the path Poland has taken.

But it is more probable that the Warsaw government, directed by Moscow, will use the economic dislocations as an excuse for imposing mar-tal law. There will be disorder, followed by some sort of Soviet intervention. Then the workers will flood the coal mines and the economy will grind to a halt, with interesting consequences for the foreign banks (including American banks) that are owed Poland's $27 billion in hard-currency external debt.

Before 1918, a Polish patriotic song expressed the prayer that God would "restore" Poland's independence. Between 1918 and 1980 the song was sung as a prayer that God would "bless our independence." Now it is again sung, defiantly, as a prayer for God to "restore our independence." But as John Denver's ballad says, some days are diamonds, some days are stone. Poland has given the world some sparkling diamond days. The days of stone may be at hand.

Reagan is going in circles with budget cuts

By JAMES GERTZMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The more President Reagan says about his economic program, the more Social Security becomes central to his budget cuts. And the more that happens, the more trouble he seems to get into.

Tonight, he will try to make it all OK. The problem is this: How do you tell people you are going to delay the anticipated increases in their pensions — raises that were intended to help them cope with inflation? And once you tell them that, how do you make them like it?

When the president appears on television screens across the nation at 9 p.m. EDT tonight, he will need to do more than outline, once again, why he wants to cut back the planned increases in the coming federal budgets.

He must use the address to muster enough support that Congress, showing signs of balking at pension cuts, will once again return to his side with enough Democrats in the bunch to assure success.

Finally, after having no trouble winning significant majorities in the Democratic-controlled House in earlier battles, Reagan may have his work cut out for him.

A week ago, Reagan left no doubt that the cost-of-living increase scheduled to go into effect July 1 for Social Security recipients would be delayed. Alice Rivlin, chief of the Congressional Budget Office, said that by postponing the increase for three months, the government could save $2.9 billion in 1982.

But on Monday, Reagan was told by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., that Congress would not go along.

Approval of the Social Security changes would be "extremely difficult, extremely difficult," said Michael Johnson, an aide to Michel. The trouble, he said, would be "with people on our side of the aisle."

That message from Capitol Hill forced Reagan and his aides into a series of lengthy meetings as they tried to decide just what he would announce tonight.

Budget director David A. Stockman and his aides kept looking at Social Security. Over the long term, it appeared to be one program whose spending Reagan would have to trim to meet his pledge of balancing the federal budget in fiscal 1984. To balance the budget, Reagan has said he must cut anticipated spending increases by $75 billion in 1983 and 1984.

From the Capitol comes advice not to do it at the expense of Social Security. "We feel we have a good crack at making the budget cuts as long as Social Security isn't part of it," Johnson said.

From Wall Street, where Reagan found a few constituents last November, comes the advice to make the budget cuts — any way possible.

So the president is caught in the middle. Then there are the people who marched on the Washington Mall Saturday to protest the president's policies.

The marchers, representing unions, are a force that House candidates would be happy to have in their camps a year from November.

Reagan was given a sign Tuesday by Rep. John Rousslet, R-Calif., that was carried in the march: "We Still Like Reagan & Bush." But with the exception of the group that carried it and gave it to a member of Rousslet's staff, few if any in the crowd were heard to voice similar sentiments.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Sexuality index assesses cancer risk

Dear Dr. Solomon: I attended a lecture recently where a psychologist spoke about a "sexuality index," but I did not get his explanation. Would you explain it? — VI, Miami, FL

Dear VI: The sexuality index has been used to assess the risk of cervical cancer in women who use oral contraceptives. It includes the age at which she started having sexual relations, the age at which she had her first child, and the number of sexual partners she has had.

The issue here is whether oral contraceptives make it more likely that a woman will suffer from cervical cancer, or whether women who use the pill have a higher sexuality index, and it is this that accounts for the increased incidence of the disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been trying to become pregnant for the past six months, but with no luck. Is there any hope that I can still have a child, or does this mean that I am not fertile? — Mrs. A.L., Oakland, CA

Dear Mrs. L.: Since a woman cannot become pregnant by herself, there is always the possibility that her partner may be responsible. In any event, Dr. Charles B. Hammond, professor and chairman of obstetrics and gynecology at Uke University, defines infertility as one year of regular intercourse without conception occurring. After about one year, a workup to determine the cause would be advisable.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have one child from my first marriage, but have not been able to become pregnant since I married again. Isn't it rare for a man not to be able to become a father? — Mrs. M.T.H., Detroit

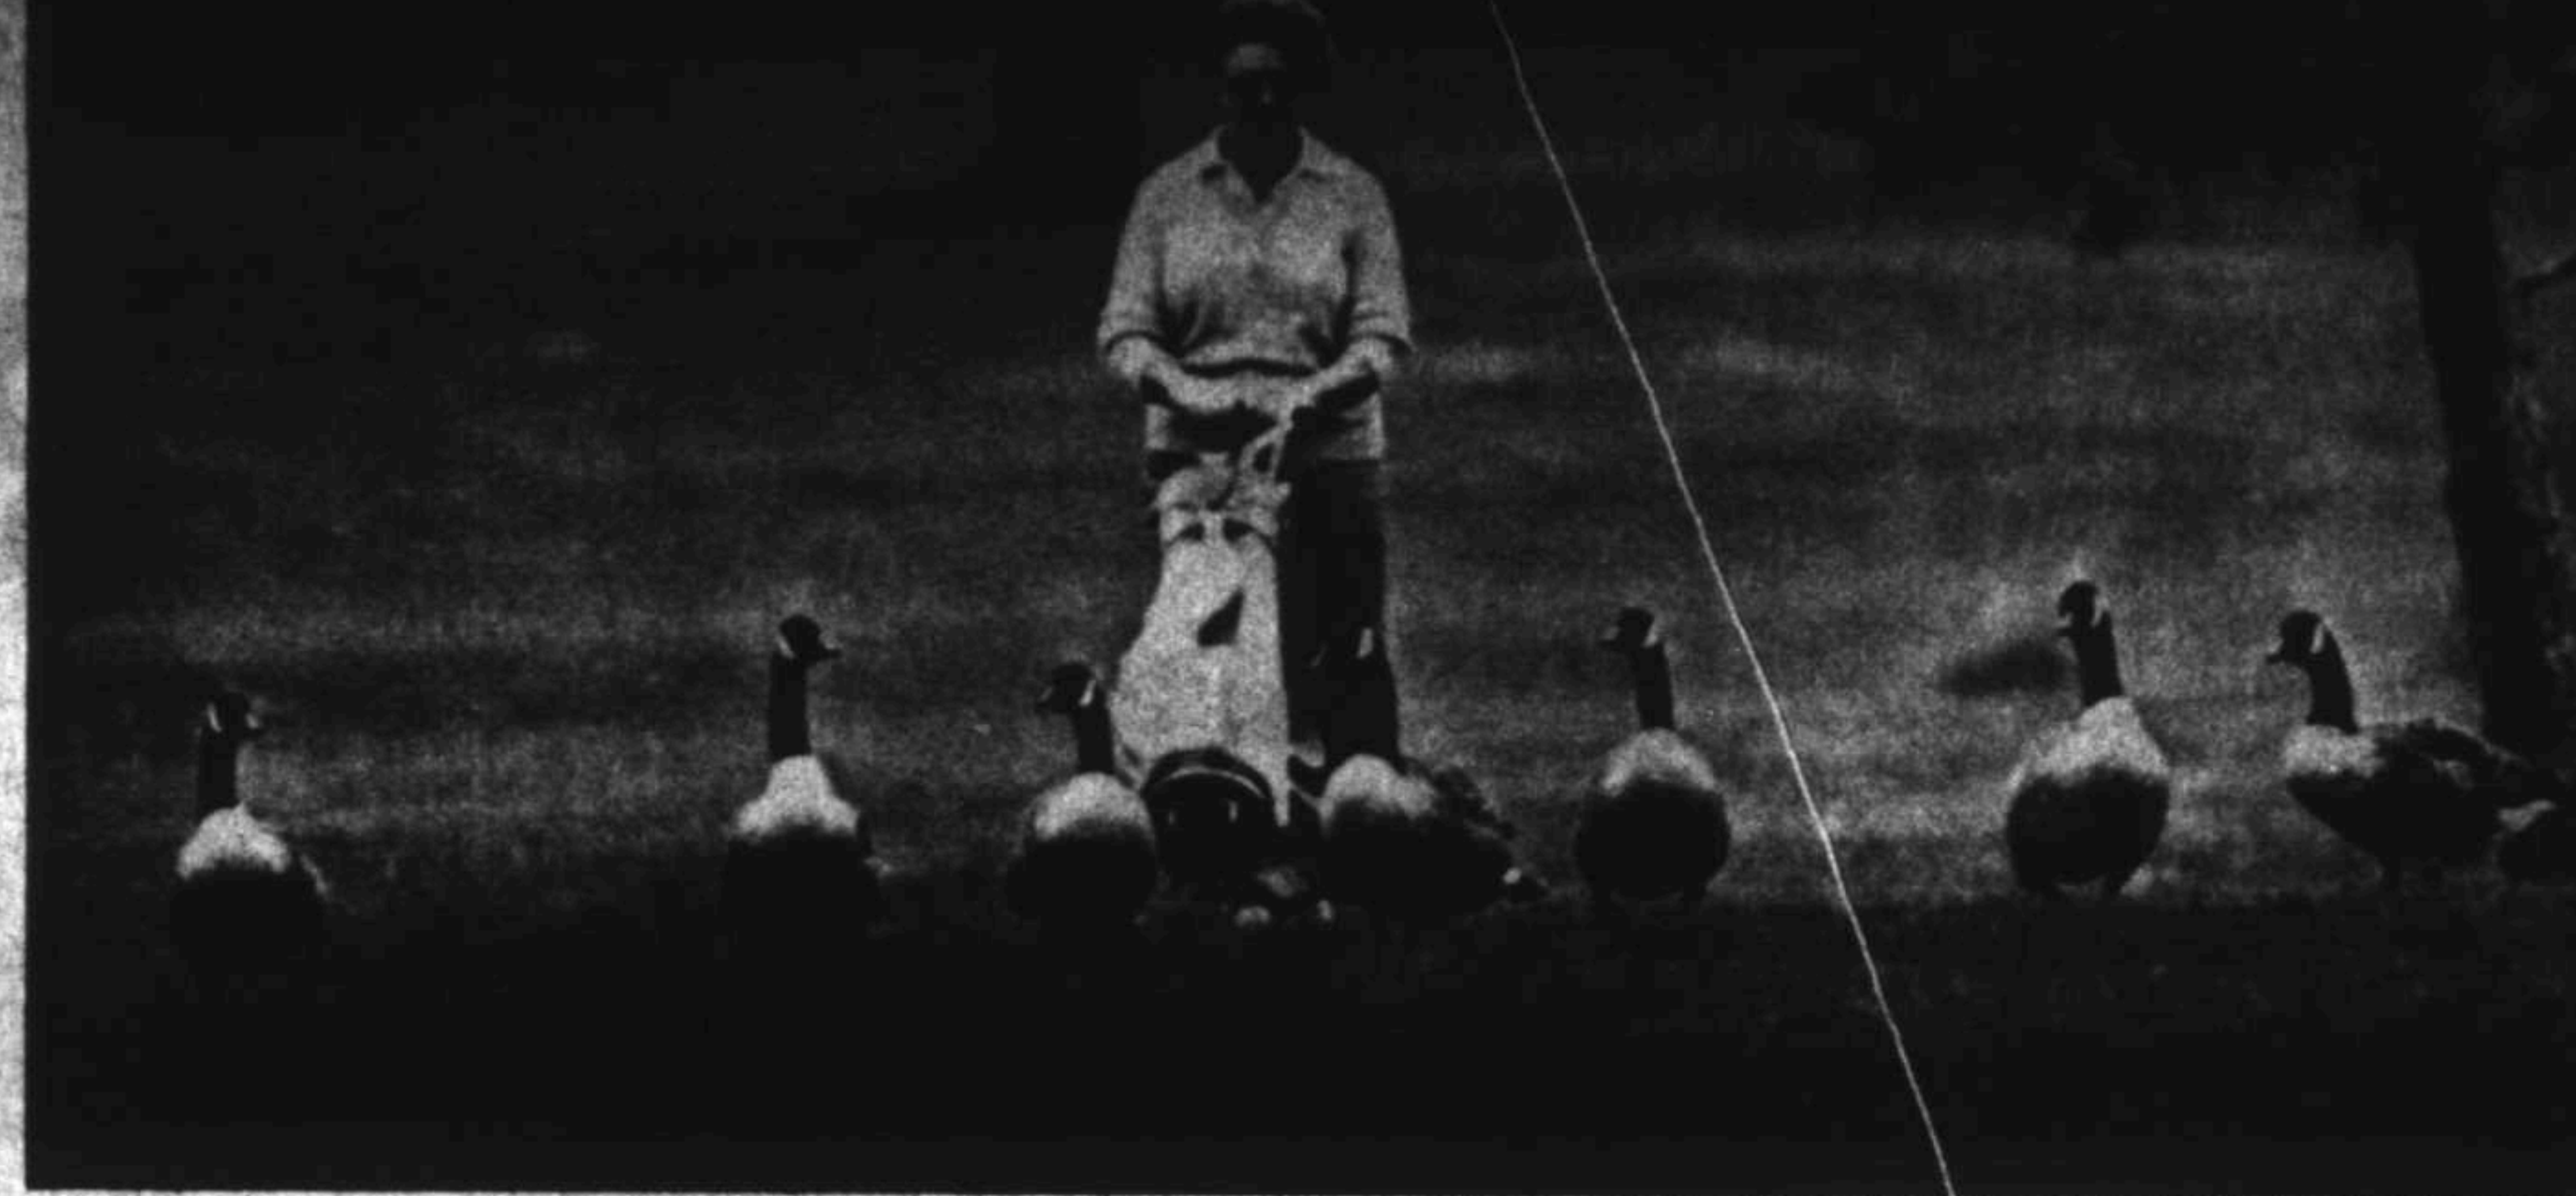

Dear Mrs. H.: Not really. Male factors are responsible for about 40 percent of infertility. If the man's sperm count is low, new diagnostic methods, drugs, and even surgery may help bring it to a working level.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that cigarette smoking is the main cause of lung cancer, but aren't there other causes besides smoking cigarettes? — Mr. S.R., Chicago

Dear Mrs. R.: Statistics show radioactivity in certain mines produces lung cancer; other occupational hazards include hot gases from tar, dusts from gas generators, exposure to asbestos, chromates, nickel. Studies on carcinogens in the environment are under way in the U.S. and worldwide. Workers exposed to carcinogens who also smoke have proved more vulnerable to lung cancer. The incidence of lung cancer among asbestos workers who smoke is far higher than the rate for those who don't smoke. The smoking factor is being studied closely as a co-carcinogen in ongoing studies by the American Cancer Society in cooperation with labor and industry.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What is arteriosclerosis? What is atherosclerosis? And what is the relationship between the two? — Sonny, Bradenton, FL

Dear Sonny: Arteriosclerosis simply means hardening of the arteries. Atherosclerosis is the most common form of arteriosclerosis. In atherosclerosis, a fatty material is deposited on the inner lining of the artery. This narrows the vessel and impedes the flow of blood.

There's no more room on the dial

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Applicants for regular TV station licenses in the nation's 100 largest metropolitan areas may soon find that there's no room on the dial.

The number of vacant UHF television channels allocated for commercial use in those markets shrank by more than 20 percent during the first half of 1981, the Federal Communications Commission says.

Last December, 67 of 338 UHF channels in those 100 cities were vacant. By June 30, the FCC said the number of UHF channels available in the largest cities had increased to 341, but the number that were vacant and unapplied for had declined to 55.

Since the VHF channels allocated for full-power operation in those top markets were snapped up long ago, the FCC report shows that regular over-the-air broadcasting in the country's most populated areas is approaching its limit.

VHF, or very high frequency, television stations utilize channels 2 to 13. For a variety of technical reasons, they have always been more attractive than UHF or ultra high frequency stations, which use channels 14 to 69. VHF reception usually is clearer on most TV sets, and such stations do not require as much power to send a strong signal.

Despite such "UHF handicaps" and a growing emphasis on cable television, the latest FCC report shows that UHF stations are being viewed as an attractive opportunity for entering broadcasting.

Diablo protesters 'reassess' position

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP) — With only a few hundred of 3,000 protesters remaining, organizers of a demonstration against the Diablo Canyon atomic power plant say they are "reassessing" their position.

But Mark Evanoff of the Abalone Alliance, a coalition of about 60 anti-nuclear groups, said opposition to the facility would continue even if the blockade is called off.

"We are currently reassessing what's going on to see how effective we have been and how effective a continued blockade would be," Evanoff said.

He said any final decision on whether to end the blockade would be made by leaders of "affinity groups" into which the protesters have been organized. But he said he expected the demonstration to continue "at least through this weekend."

The protesters consider the $2.3 billion plant a hazard because of its location near an offshore earthquake fault.

Three people were arrested in protests Wednesday as the total number of arrests on charges of trespassing and failure to disperse rose to 1,499, far more than the 1,414 arrests made during the Seabrook, N.H., anti-nuclear demonstrations in 1977.

San Luis Obispo County sheriff's officials, who Tuesday sent home 750 officers from other agencies, said the protest was near an end.

"It seems to be winding down," said sheriff's Lt. LaRue Jubelt. "They say they are going to continue, but they don't have many people left."

Hope to do skit 'in drag'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Bob Hope says he hopes it won't end his career, but he's doing a skit "in drag" with athletes Merlin Olsen and Bruce Jenner in a spoof of the Mandrell sisters to launch his 32nd TV season.

The show, which will be telecast Sunday on NBC, features Hope, former Los Angeles Rams football player Olsen and Olympic decathlon star Jenner in flaming red dresses, high silver heels and blonde wigs as the "Mandrake Sisters."

"The skit could be the end of my career," quipped Hope, 78, during a telephone interview from London. "But it really was a pretty dress."

The real Mandrell sisters, country and western singers Barbara, Louise and Irene, have their own NBC-TV series.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actress Beverly D'Angelo, who co-starred in such movies as "Coal Miner's Daughter" and "Hair," has been hospitalized for tests to determine if she has an ovarian cyst, a spokesman says.

Publicist Greg Taylor said Wednesday the tests will keep Ms. D'Angelo from attending today's Hollywood premiere of her new movie, "Paternity," in which she co-stars with Burt Reynolds.

NEW YORK (AP) — Today's world lacks elegance in clothing, food, women and especially music, 72-year-old jazz legend Benny Goodman says.

Goodman says he "can't imagine someone 40 years from now reminiscing fondly about having heard Blondie, or even the Rolling Stones, or — what was the name of that group the other day? — Clash."

"I always wanted to do things with style," Goodman added. "Don't care if it was clothes or eating or women."

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — As Chubby Checker sees it, he's almost like an institution.

The singer, who twisted to fame more than two decades ago only to see his career suddenly drop off sharply, puts himself on the same plane as Elvis Presley and the Beatles.

"You know, I would say that of all the entertainers in the music industry who've come and gone during the last 25 years, only the effects of Elvis, the Beatles and Chubby Checker remain," he told the Akron Beacon Journal. "That means I'm the only original you can see now. I'm a living art form."

"You see, when you've got lemons, you make lemonade. When you're John Wayne you make Westerns. And when you're Chubby Checker ... you twist."

Reagan treats Texans to California barbecue

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, against a backdrop of country music and an old-fashioned barbecue, told members of the Texas and California congressional delegations "everything will be all right as long as we get together and talk together instead of about each other."

In addition to the congressional delegations from California and Texas, numerous Republican congressmen and "boll weevil" Democrats from other states also were among the invited guests, who crowded around round tables at a reception Wednesday night on the White House lawn.

Entertainment was provided by the Statler Brothers, a country music group.

The quartet took the stage after 450 pounds of boneless strip sirloin, catered by 10 Californians, was served to a throng of about 450 people in a tent on the south lawn.

President Reagan shook hands with each of the singers and their band before turning to the crowd to exclaim, "They're darned good at that, for Easterners!"

In contrast to the congressmen, Reagan came without a tie, preferring a bright red turtle-neck sweater underneath his jacket. His wife, Nancy, wore a black skirt, white blouse and black velvet jacket.

"I thought I was finally coming to something where I could leave off my neck tie, and when I got here everybody else looked like lawyers who just left their office," Reagan said.

The reception began at 6 p.m. in the White House, and the group moved onto the south lawn an hour later. With everybody else already seated, Vice President George Bush entered to a standing ovation at 7:15. He sat at a table that included Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas; Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; and Rep. Jim Collins, R-Texas.

B.A. Bentsen, wife of the Texas senator, sat next to the president. Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, sat at the same table, next to Nancy Reagan.

The meal was catered by 10 people from Los Olivos, Calif., 22 miles north of Santa Barbara in Santa Ynez Valley, Calif. Sheila Tate, Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, said they came to Washington at their own expense "to treat Texans to California barbecue."

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, was one of six members of the Texas delegation who did not attend. Of the five Texas congressmen not spotted, three are Republicans — Jack Fields, Ron Paul and Bill Archer. The only Democratic congressmen from Texas not seen were Henry B. Gonzalez and Mickey Leland.

Details on defense cuts sketchy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, outlining cuts to achieve President Reagan's proposed $13 billion reduction in defense spending, is providing few details about how they will affect military personnel or the areas that depend on military programs.

After listing some budget cuts for the Army, for instance, Weinberger said Wednesday that others would include "reducing a variety of other air defense, missile, combat vehicle, aviation, combat support and intelligence programs."

Weinberger, testifying before the House Budget Committee, promised to provide "details to Congress early in October as soon as they are worked out." Spokesmen for the Army, Navy and Air Force also did not have specific implications of the cutbacks.

As outlined by Weinberger or in added information from service spokesmen, major points of the cost-cutting program are:

—Putting the 7th Infantry Division at Fort Ord, Calif., on "cadre" status in fiscal 1983, meaning its force would be cut from 15,000 to 5,000. The fort near Monterey, Calif., has a work force of about 20,000.

Convict writes literary hit

By DAVID McCORMICK
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jack Henry Abbott, the convict and author who vanished from New York after a fatal stabbing, thought police were kidding when they told him after his capture that his book was a literary hit.

"He said he didn't even know it had become a best-seller," detective Bob Bazet said after Abbott was apprehended Wednesday night by shotgun-carrying deputies at an oilfield labor camp in Morgan City. "When he heard that, he really picked up."

Abbott, who has spent nearly all of his adulthood behind bars, is wanted for questioning by New York City police in connection with the stabbing, and federal authorities had been seeking him as a fugitive.

Abbott's letters about prison life to author Norman Mailer were collected in a book titled "In the Belly of the Beast," published in June with Mailer's help. Abbott's agent, Russell Galen of the Scott Meredith agency, said Wednesday that the book has earned $100,000 in royalties.

Although Abbott said he was unaware of his literary success, he disappeared some time after many published reviews lavished praise on his work — including a cover story in The New York Times Book Review. He was also the subject of a feature article in People magazine.

Abbott, 37, was sent to reform school at age 12 and since then has been free from prison for a total of less than 12 months. Six weeks before the stabbing, Abbott was moved from a Utah prison to a Manhattan halfway house where he had been sent to complete a 14-year sentence for killing a fellow prison inmate.

Police said Abbott was having breakfast with two women at a Manhattan restaurant July 18 when he became involved in a dispute with 22-year-old Richard Adan, a waiter and aspiring playwright. Abbott and Adan stepped outside, and Adan was found dead on the sidewalk. Abbott disappeared.

Morgan City police detective Steve Clarke said a U.S. marshal in New Orleans recently notified his department that Abbott was thought to be working as a roustabout in the area. He said Abbott was located in Morgan City after five days of searching, and arrested as he was loading pipe.

"The arrest was without incident," Clarke said. Abbott was later taken to New Orleans.

Bazet said Abbott told authorities "he had been down in Mexico" and hadn't heard anything about the success of his book.

Paul Black, owner of Ramos Oil Co., said Abbott has been working under the alias of Jack Eastman since Sept. 14.

"But he was using the same Social Security number he had used in New Orleans two weeks ago," Black said. "I believe that is how they located him."

Wearing manacles and a chain around his waist, Abbott smiled at photographers as he was hurried into an Orleans Parish jail Wednesday night for booking.

basically, Father Hibbs' concern will be to elaborate on the general topic of spiritual growth by inviting participants to explore the rich but often hidden area of contemplative prayer. YOUR BIRTHDAY TO-DAY: Sports columnist "Red" Smith and TV news star Barbara Walters celebrate this birthday with you. Your talent for making new friends will both widen your social horizons and advance your business prospects in the year ahead. Devote more time to planning for the future. Your financial affairs should show marked improvement after the start of 1982. Good luck plays an important role in many areas of your life. Although some personal relationships may end abruptly, romance will be happy and rewarding. Your intellectual interests bring you into contact with individuals who share your concerns. You win new admirers!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A friend passes on confidential information that helps you deal with a sensitive business situation. A joint trust produces more interest than you anticipated.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your relationships with your business associates are much better now. Resist an urge to try to balance the budget by gambling. Give romance a chance to develop naturally.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A very busy day lies ahead! You could experience a letdown in the morning, but the afternoon brings a wonderful recovery. Spend a quiet evening with one who really cares.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Higher-ups applaud your efforts now. Go ahead and ask for special favors. Productivity is apt to be up. Word memos, letters very carefully.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An excellent day for traveling or negotiating contracts, agreements. Read fine print with special care and consult lawyers if necessary. Original ideas impress influential people.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Obtain professional advice before taking on additional responsibilities. Creative work will catch the eye of prominent people. Romance should work out well if you make the first move.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Profits can be made through distant contacts, but there will be a price to pay. Get promises in writing, and avoid making impulsive decisions. Devote more time to family.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A very fine day for entertaining. Postpone becoming involved in a real estate venture until more information is available. Take everything you hear with a grain of salt.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can accomplish more at home than at place of employment today. Confide in mate or partner. Loved one's extravagance will have to be curbed. Be firm.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take your time today. Enthusiasm is important, but you should not get carried away. The financial picture may not be as rosy as you have painted it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Thoughts of romance may interfere with your ability to concentrate on work today. If you want to succeed, you will have to be business-like.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You will probably have a number of visitors today. A compliment could make you blush with pride. Reserve time for romance; it is highly favorable now!

the trumps. Another diamond ruff was followed by a club to the ace, felling the king. A club to the queen put declarer in his hand to lead a club toward the ten.

West rose with the jack of clubs and, since a diamond lead would give declarer a ruff-and-sluff and a trump would be into declarer's tenace, he exited with his last club. Declarer now conceded his heart loser and East was on lead with both declarer and West down to nothing but three trumps each.

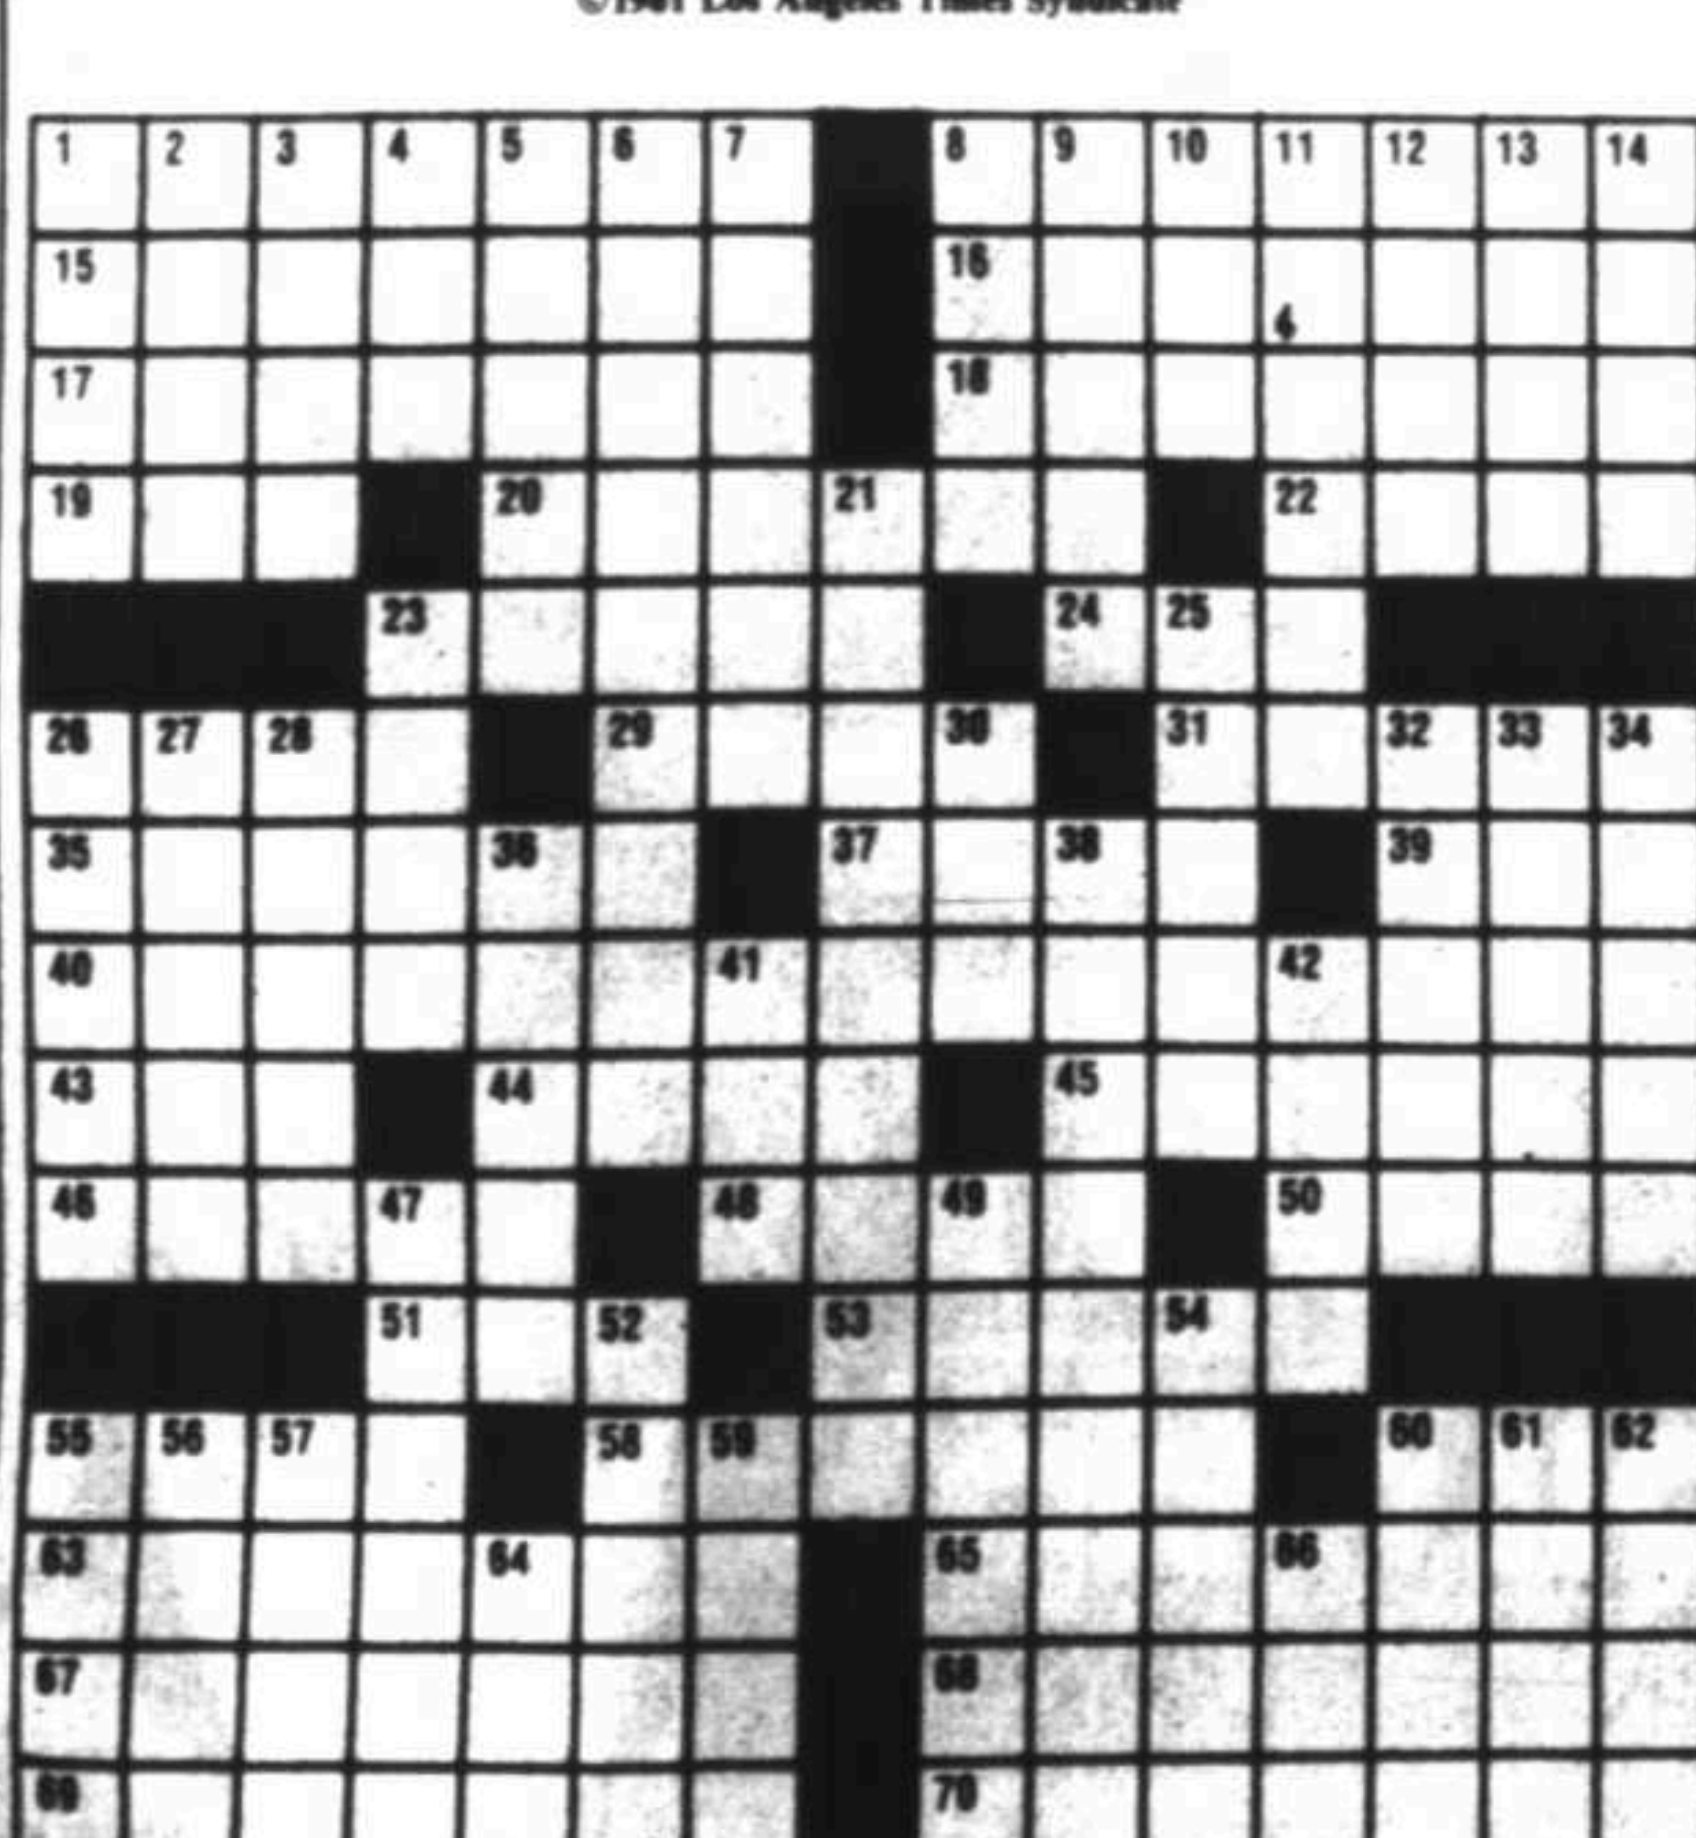

No matter what East did, declarer was bound to take two of the last three tricks for his contract. Whatever red card East returned, declarer would ruff low. West could overruff, but then he would be forced to concede the last two tricks by leading into declarer's ace-jack tenace.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A horse broker and his associate have been released on bond after allegedly using extortion to obtain breeding rights shares to Special Effort, the first horse to win the triple crown of quarter horse racing, the FBI says.

FBI agents said they arrested Calvin Don Tyner, 38, and Howard David Smith, 25, both of Oklahoma City, without incident Wednesday at Tyner's office. They were charged with conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce by threats and extortion, said C. Edwin Enright, special agent in charge of the Oklahoma City FBI.

The arrests were made on warrants issued on a complaint filed Wednesday by an FBI agent.

The complaint alleges Tyner and Smith used threats and extortion against two former employees of Tyner in an effort to obtain shares of the breeding rights to Special Effort, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Don Urschel of Canadian, Texas.

The horse won the All-American Futurity on Labor Day weekend after earlier winning the Kansas Futurity and the Rainbow Futurity at Ruidoso, N.M.

The complaint alleges the men attempted to obtain the shares at far below the current market value, which skyrocketed after Special Effort's most recent win.

The horse was syndicated prior to the All-American Futurity in a $15 million package of 150 shares costing $100,000 each.

According to the FBI, Tyner, who acted as broker for the Urschels in selling shares of the horse, allegedly made the threats to Oklahoma City tax attorney Vernon Hyde and accountant Michael Blackburn beginning on Sept. 17.

Hyde reportedly told the FBI that Tyner came to his home on Sept. 17, after the attorney quit Tyner's employ, and threatened that he would get back Hyde's share in the horse "either the easy way or another way," officials said.

Hyde also alleged Tyner told him that if he complied with Tyner's demand, the broker would "call off the goons," officials said.

Federal authorities said Blackburn alleged to the FBI that on Sept. 19, Tyner and four men, including Smith, came to Blackburn's home, locked his doors, unplugged his telephones, turned up the television volume, and "cornered him in the dining room."

He claimed to the FBI that a large man, identified as Lucky Delay of Dallas, flexed his forearm and told Blackburn that "if that didn't do the job, he could handle it with his index finger," officials said.

According to FBI reports, Delay pointed his index finger at Blackburn "as if he were pulling the trigger on a gun" and stated he was a good shot. Tyner then allegedly demanded back the shares Blackburn owned in the horse.

Blackburn then allegedly signed a receipt indicating he had received $500 in cash and a check for $5,500 in return for his share certificate, and Tyner allegedly gave Blackburn that amount of money, officials said. FBI officials said that Delay, also identified as the "Big Guy," and another man, James Earl, are still being sought by investigators.

The federal complaint also indicated that FBI agents made tape recordings of Tyner's telephone conversations.

BRANIFF STRIKES BACK AGAINST THE HIGH COST OF FLYING!

ALL SEATS DISCOUNTED, EVERY EXPRESS FLIGHT, NO RESTRICTIONS.

DALLAS-FORT WORTH — In an aggressive attack against the high cost of flying, Braniff has reduced fares 20% to 25% or more with no restrictions on its new all-one-class Express Flights.

These low fares apply to every seat on every Express Flight to every Braniff city in mainland U.S.

FREE TRIP PROGRAM ESCALATED WITH DOUBLE BONUS POINTS.

Braniff has announced the escalation of the Travel Bonus Bonanza Program.

From October 1 through November 15, 1981, flyers will receive double bonus points on every flight. These points enable Braniff passengers to earn free trips, discounted trips and other prizes.

For reservations or more information, call your travel agent, corporate travel office or Braniff in Midland or Odessa at 563-3885. All other Texas cities call toll free (800) 492-4300.

Franklin given life sentence

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Avowed racist Joseph Paul Franklin, who briefly escaped hours before a jury sentenced him to life in prison, is asking the trial judge to overturn his conviction for murdering two young blacks.

Moments after the jury was dismissed, 3rd District Judge Jay E. Banks said he received a handwritten note from Franklin asking him "to declare the conviction illegal and void."

Banks said he would rule on the motion Monday, when he is to formalize Franklin's sentence. Franklin, acting as his own attorney, told the judge, "thank you."

Franklin, 31, of Mobile, Ala., was found guilty Saturday of first-degree murder in the Aug. 20, 1980, sniper slayings of Ted Fields, 20, and David Martin, 18. The two were shot while jogging with two white women near Salt Lake City's Liberty Park.

After deliberating less than 2 1/2 hours Wednesday afternoon, the all-white jury said it could not unanimously agree to sentence Franklin to die before a firing squad. The verdict effectively imposes a life term, Utah law regarding such imprisonment or death for first-degree murder convictions.

Franklin showed no outward emotion as the decision was read, except to mouth the words "thank you" to the jurors. David Yocom, a Salt Lake City lawyer assisting Franklin later said his client "was very happy, obviously," but had said nothing specific about the decision.

Yocom said he was "very grateful" the jury did not decide on death and said the conviction would be appealed.

Deputy Salt Lake County Attorney Robert Stott said he was disappointed with the decision. "We obviously argued vigorously for the death penalty," Stott said.

The jury began deliberations in the trial's penalty phase at 3:20 p.m., less than an hour after Franklin was captured after a brief escape.

Jury foreman James McCloy said jurors did not know of the escape until after their decision was read. He declined to comment further on the deliberations.

Infections common in nursing homes

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Infected bedsores, diarrhea and lung ailments are common in nursing-home patients, and among the causes are too much staff turnover and too little hygiene training, a published report says.

Researchers who surveyed nursing home patients at seven Salt Lake City facilities found 16 percent suffer some kind of infection, although infected bedsores are by far the most common.

Nursing homes take care of about 5 percent of all Americans over age 65, and the researchers urged guidelines be established to prevent these outbreaks of infection.

Researchers from the University of Utah College of Medicine surveyed seven "skilled-care" nursing homes in Salt Lake City that housed 532 elderly patients, and they reported their findings in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Although they looked at homes in only one city, they said they doubted what they saw "represents a unique or unusual experience."

They found 6 percent of the patients had infected bedsores, 3 percent had conjunctivitis, 3 percent had urinary tract infections, 2 percent had lower respiratory tract infections, and 1 percent had diarrhea. Other studies have shown a similar prevalence of urinary and lower respiratory tract infections in hospitals. But the rates for skin infections, conjunctivitis and diarrhea were higher in the nursing homes.

The director of the study, Dr. Richard A. Garibaldi, said that despite the problems, nursing home administrators were conscientious and concerned about infection.

"We were not looking at dens of primitive care where people were treated inhumanely," he said. "At least superficially, the general level of care seemed to be reasonably good. I think it's much more subtle than obvious how diseases are transmitted."

Among the problems they found in the nursing homes:

—Turnover in the non-professional staffs was almost 100 percent during the three months before the survey, and 30 percent of the nurses also left. This "helps create an atmosphere of disorganization and confusion about infection-control issues."

—Non-professional aides have much of the direct contact with patients, such as shaving them and helping them out of bed.

—Only one home required its workers to get flu shots.

St. Ann's Family Fair to open 33rd season

Event will feature games, arts and crafts

Construction of booths and rides is quickly reaching a finale in preparation for the 33rd annual St. Ann's Fair to be held from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday on the grounds of the St. Ann's School, 2000 W. Texas.

Since 1951, the fair has faithfully returned each year while attracting increasing crowds from all over West Texas.

This year's event will feature more than 65 booths of arts and crafts and sewing displays submitted by local artists for sale. In addition, there will be carnival rides and food and drink stands. Despite a few years respite, the pony rides have returned and will be offered from 12 to 5 p.m.

Ken Kure, general chairman for the fair, said one of this year's special attractions will be a Parisian sidewalk cafe — "Incredible Edibles" — which will offer danish pastries and coffee in the morning, gourmet salads in the early afternoon and various crepes and desserts in the evening. From 4 to 9 p.m., attendants will have the opportunity to participate in a homemade spaghetti, meatball and baked lasagna dinner.

There will also be a game spin for stuffed animals, in which Kure guarantees all participants will walk away with a prize.

The St. Ann's Family Fair which started out as a modest ice cream social has expanded to the extent that more than 10,000 people attended the affair last year. Organizers expect the crowds to reach more than 15,000 this year.

The purpose of the fair is to raise funds for maintenance of the St. Ann's Catholic School and Church. Monies are also used to offset needs for increasing tuition costs. Supporters expect this year's revenues to exceed $100,000 compared with $75,000 last year.

Mary Saidana, chairman for sewing booths appearing at Saturday's fair, presents a crocheted pillow and blanket which is an example of one of the many pieces of handiwork to be displayed in various booths throughout the fairgrounds.

Fran Brezina, arts and crafts chairman for upcoming St. Ann's Fair, and son, Ben, display a few pieces of local workmanship that will appear for sale at the day long event. The fair will specialize in over 65 booths of games, arts and crafts and sewing artifacts. In addition, a Parisian sidewalk cafe will be open throughout the day which will feature pastries, gourmet salads and various desserts and crepes. Attendance is expected to exceed 15,000 Saturday for the 33rd annual fundraising event.

School phobia can be problem for youngsters

NEW YORK (AP) — Back-to-school blues are normal for children from age 6 to 18, but if avoidance and hesitation continue beyond the first few autumn weeks parents should take note, says a psychiatrist who has done extensive research on the causes and treatment of "school phobia."

It is a syndrome that can be so traumatic that some children will accept any reprimand or punishment rather than attend class, explains Dr. Rachel Gittleman of the New York State Psychiatric Institute.

"The term 'school phobia' is misleading," she points out, "because we have found through clinical study that these kids are not afraid of teachers, blackboards or the school building itself. They suffer from extreme separation anxiety; they're terribly frightened to leave home."

Ms. Gittleman said this separation anxiety could be so severe as to cause physical symptoms, such as dizziness, nausea and migraine headaches.

"Parents must listen and watch children closely," she said. "Kids are not always able to express emotions directly. If children become physically ill at the thought of attending school, they obviously are suffering." Some children, she adds, may threaten to hurt themselves, or even kill themselves.

Working with school-phobic children at the non-profit Psychiatric Institute, Ms. Gittleman and colleagues found that separation anxiety could have physical, rather than emotional, roots. Children at the Psychiatric Institute's Child and Adolescent Depression Clinic were treated with psychotherapy, which was successful in many instances.

In the cases where psychotherapy failed, however, the researchers found that 60 percent of these children were able to resume normal school careers after biochemical separation anxiety was treated with medication. The medication successfully alleviated the physical symptoms that motivated the fear of school.

"Separation anxiety can be a biochemical reaction," Ms. Gittleman said. "Overprotective or fearful parents may cause a child's separation anxiety. But in many instances, the parents are not to blame. Moving to a new neighborhood, death of a relative, or divorce also can stimulate separation anxiety."

Emphasizing the fact that parents are often not the problem is the statistic that the average age of school-phobic children is 11; children may have attended — and often have enjoyed — school for five or six years before the onset of severe anxiety.

Early warning signs of separation anxiety may be a child's reluctance to visit friends or play outside alone, according to Dr. Leonard Reich, a child psychologist who has treated more than 50 school-phobic children for the Mental Health Service of the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York.

"Children may believe mistakenly that parents need their protection," he says. "School phobia often is not an evasive maneuver. Instead, it can stem from a child's misdirected feeling that his or her presence at home is necessary for parents' emotional support or physical well-being."

Firmness and insistence that children attend school, for example, treating an absence as if it were breaking the law, may help minor school phobias, he notes. But Ms. Gittleman warns that a child seized with panic at the thought of the classroom will most likely "break the law" and accept any punishment rather than leave home.

Parents should seek psychiatric counseling in severe cases, and work closely with the doctor during treatment, she advises.

"In many cases," Ms. Gittleman said, "school phobias will attend school if they are allowed to call home once or twice during the day. Gradually, they will get over the need for constant reassurance."

"Parents should request medical testing and treatment by the psychiatrist, if necessary, if counseling fails," she adds.

House of delegates will elect new area officers and a state officer. Running for area two parliamentarian is Susan Hansen, vice president of the Tall City chapter in Midland.

A new feature of this year's meeting will be chapter displays of talents and hobbies. Presentation of awards will take place at the noon luncheon.

Members will break into afternoon groups for workshops on various subjects such as "Buying Generic Drugs" presented by Hazel Wallace of Dallas, consumer affairs officer with the Food and Drug Administration;

"Poisonous House and Yard Plants" by Charlie Green, county extension agent in agriculture from Midland; and "Financial Planning" by Kathy Atkins from the Women's Department of Commercial Bank and Trust in Midland.

A newly-elected president will receive the gavel from Linda Cranfill, outgoing president from the Tall City Chapter here, to climax Saturday's afternoon session. Other officers include Jimmy Gaye Ash of O'Donnell, vice president; Susan D'Brian of Lamesa, secretary-treasurer; Janette Brown of Ackerly, reporter-historian; Martha Holt of Loop, parliamentarian; and Becky Seago of Lamesa, state officer; Gay Nell McGinnis, TEA homemaking consultant of Big Spring, is area advisor.

Tall City Chapter will be host chapter. The Midland County chapter is assisting with talent and craft displays. Hostesses at the general session will be chapter presidents in the area.

Barbara Waddoups is president of the Tall City Chapter and Phyllis Vinson is president of the Midland County Chapter.

Young Homemakers of Texas is an educational organization sponsored by the Homemaking Education division of the Texas Education Agency for the purpose of improving the home and community. Local chapters are sponsored by the local high school homemaking department.

DEAR ABBY

Love triangle has an acute problem

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm in love. And it's the most exciting thing that has ever happened to me. I'm 22 and "G" is 24. He's also the boyfriend of one of my girlfriends, which complicates matters. They've been very tight for several years, but he told me he has no plans to marry her, although they're living together temporarily.

There has always been a very strong attraction between "G" and me, but I never dreamed anything like this could happen. Well, the other night, the very first time we were alone together, we lost all control and made love. I don't regret it, but I'm all confused. I know it happened incredibly fast, but Abby, I've never been in love like this before. "G" says he thinks he loves me, too, but it's too soon to make a commitment.

To make matter worse, "G" and his "girlfriend" are going on a 10-day vacation together. (It was planned a long time ago.) He promised to call me every chance he gets while he's away, and said we will work something out when he gets back. He says he doesn't want to lose me, but he's a very caring person and doesn't want to hurt her.

I suppose there is nothing I can do except wait and see what happens, but in the meantime, I would appreciate an objective opinion and any useful advice. — MESSED UP IN W. VA.

DEAR MESSED UP: My objective opinion is that you should cool it. If and when "G" is free from his present commitment, you can pick up where you left off.

DEAR ABBY: A new family moved into our neighborhood. Their children are about the ages of our children, so the youngsters quickly struck up a friendship. Soon we mothers were visiting in each other's homes for coffee. So far so good!

Then after one of her visits, I noticed that two towels and matching washcloths were missing from my bathroom. They were not misplaced — they are gone! Of course I didn't see her take them, but I strongly suspect she did. My questions:

1) Should my children continue to play with her children? Why or why not?

2) How can I get my towels and washcloths back in a face-saving manner for all concerned? I do not want to confront her. Please don't mention my name or town. Sign me... "M"

DEAR "M": I see no reason why your children shouldn't continue to play with her children. It's unfair to punish innocent children for the alleged "sins" of a parent.

There is no way you can get your towels and washcloths back without a confrontation. My advice is to forget it. But watch her carefully in the future.

Aaron Estes chapter of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas met in the home of Stella Maye Lanham.

Mrs. F.H. McGuigan, incoming president, introduced the following officers: Mrs. Bruce Pearson, vice president; Mrs. Robert Knott, treasurer; Miss Lanham, secretary; Mrs. Solon Crain, registrar; Mrs. Max Perry, historian and Mrs. John Cross, chaplain.

Mrs. McGuigan announced that the District I meeting will be hosted by the Tunas Creek chapter of Fort Stockton on Oct. 31. Mrs. John P. McKinley will present the program. Other chapters in the district are Paso del Norte, El Paso, Ft. Concho, San Angelo, Presidents of Texas, Odessa and Hally Bryan Perry, Alpine.

It was announced that micro-films of Texas census records have been placed in the genealogical section of the Midland County Library by the chapter in memory of Warren Faller, Dr. Solon Crain, Walter T. Linam and Elizabeth Rachal, making these records available for the first time in the county library.

Chapter elected to cooperate with the Midland County Historical Society in its Oral History program and to send copies of the interviews to the DRT Library in San Antonio.

Next meeting of the chapter will be a field trip to Cedar Lake in Gaines County on Oct. 27. Mrs. Crain will present the program on "Quannah Parker."

If you plan to vote in the November elections and have not yet registered to vote, then time is running out. Oct. 2 is the last day a person may register and still be eligible to vote in the November elections, according to Sylvia Drew, public relations chairman for the Midland League of Women Voters. Mrs. Drew said that, for the convenience of those not yet registered, the League will be registering persons to vote on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Midland Park Mall.

sioner DeWayne Davis and Mrs. Clarence Kerth, Col. Theunis Dey Chapter regent. Davis, the keynote speaker, addressed the group on "Development of American Constitutionalism and Citizen Responsibility."

Midland chapters of DAR hold annual Constitution Day program

The Midland chapters of the DAR held their annual Constitution Day program and luncheon at the Midland Women's Club. The event was co-sponsored by the Lt. Wm. Brewer and the Col. Theunis Dey chapters.

Guest speaker for the occasion was DeWayne Davis, county commissioner, Precinct 3, and former government teacher for Midland and Odessa schools. Davis addressed the group on the development of American constitutionalism and citizen responsibility. He also outlined ways to maintain and preserve the constitution.

Davis was introduced by Mrs. R.B. Hamm, Constitution Week Chairman, Col. Theunis Dey Chapter, DAR.

Other organizations supporting the program were the Alexander Daughters Chapter, Daughters of 1812, Joseph Black Society, Children of the American Revolution, Midland Colony, Magna Charta Dames, Norman's Pride Chapter, Daughters of American Colonists and Permian Chapter #18, Sons of the American Revolution.

The call to order was issued by Mrs. Gordon Walker, regent, Lt. Wm. Brewer Chapter, DAR, with the Ritual conducted by Mrs. Clarence Kerth, regent, Col. Theunis Dey Chapter, DAR.

The pledge of allegiance was led by Mrs. Lynn Durham, Col. Theunis Dey Chapter, DAR and Mrs. Kingdon Hughes of Norman's Pride Chapter, Daughters of American Colonies, led the American's Creed. The national anthem was led by Mrs. James Dodson. Invocation was given by Lee B. Park, present of the Permian Chapter #18, Sons of the American Revolution.

Also on the program was a report on national defense presented by Mrs. John Fitzgerald, national defense chairman, Lt. Wm. Brewer Chapter, DAR. She spoke on the present status of the Merchant Marines.

Guests who attended from other DAR chapters in Big Spring, Bracketville and Odessa were introduced.

Hostesses were Mrs. Wm. B. Neely Jr., Mrs. E.J. Owen, Mrs. C.E. Prichard and Mrs. Clark Wilkinson.

2 quadruplets aborted to save other fetuses

PARIS (AP) — A team of French doctors has aborted two fetuses in a woman carrying quadruplets to keep her from having a miscarriage, according to the current issue of a French medical publication.

The publication, Panorama du Medecin, said two of the four fetuses of the 31-year-old woman were aborted Sept. 16 by Dr. Alain-Joel Aknin, a gynecologist-obstetrician, assisted by Dr. Roger Alamiowitch.

This was the first such reported operation in a woman carrying quadruplets.

In June, doctors at New York's Mount Sinai School of Medicine reported the successful abortion of an abnormal twin fetus in a woman who later gave birth to a normal baby boy. A similar operation had previously been performed by Swedish doctors.

Aknin qualified the operation a success, adding, however, that the final judgment cannot be made until the remaining two fetuses are born next March or April.

The woman, who was not identified, was in her 11th week of pregnancy when the abortion was performed. Aknin said she had been undergoing treatment for sterility and became pregnant in October 1980, but had a miscarriage and lost the twin fetuses she was carrying.

After further treatment, she became pregnant again this summer. An examination using ultrasound echography revealed she was carrying quadruplets.

Aknin said the woman was in danger of having another miscarriage. That, coupled with hypertension problems, led her doctor to recommend the abortion. After two weeks of reflection, the woman and her husband agreed.

"I used the (suction method), whereas in previous partial abortions it was necessary to open the abdomen of the mother," Aknin said. He said the operation was carried out under total anesthesia with continuous ultra-sound monitoring.

AT WIT'S END

The yellow brick road of parenthood

By ERMA BOMBECK

All the child psychology books I've ever read take you down the yellow brick road past puberty, serious petting, into mature relationships and leave you...

But parenting isn't like that. There are 30 million parents out there with kids between the ages of 18-55 who drift in and out of their lives like a revolving door.

The empty nest syndrome is overrated. I have heard of some parents who moved during the night to another city (and left no forwarding address). Others have installed pay showers. Still another parent I know waited until her son got up one night to use the bathroom, then painted his room pink and rented it to a pocket computer salesman.

No parent likes to change locks, but the situation is definitely getting out of hand. Children simply aren't leaving the home after school anymore as they did in the '60s. When they do, they multiply and come back tenfold.

So how do you displace an aging teenager? It isn't easy. When our son's bedroom began to take on the appeal of a roadside zoo (complete with sawdust on the floor), we took action.

First, we set the table for two. This made him aware that he was not expected for dinner.

Second, we intercepted his mail, wrote "No such person at this address" and had it returned to the post office for forwarding.

We posted signs in the hallway reading "OCCUPANCY BY MORE THAN TWO IN THIS HOUSE IS A FIRE HAZARD."

We were considering telling him he would have to share his room with the family pet (and buying a wolf) when we came up with a daring but cruel idea. We stopped stocking the refrigerator.

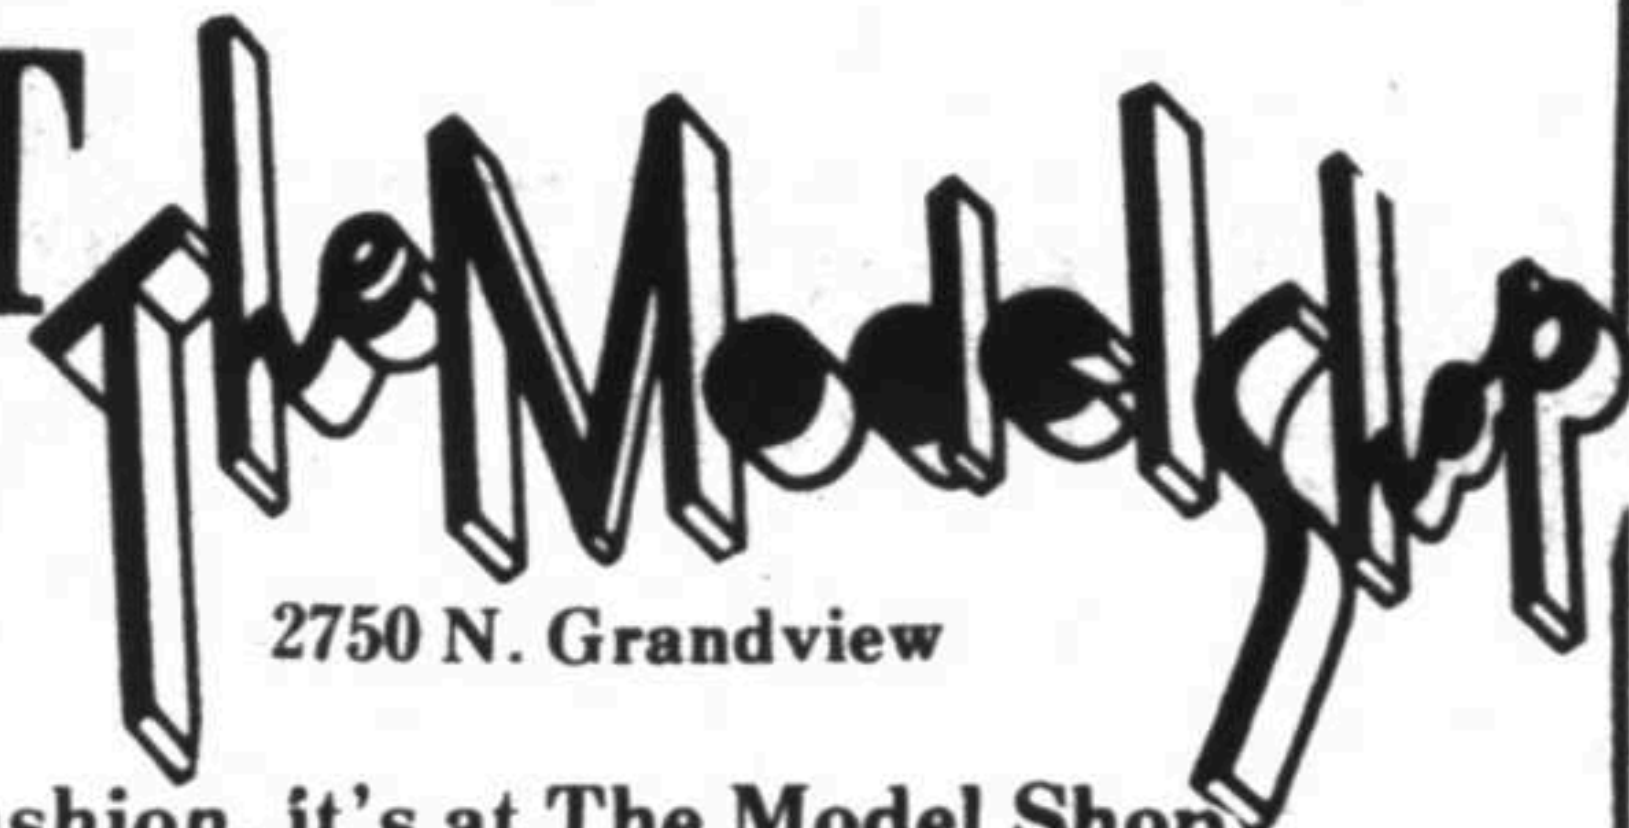

I'll never forget the look of fear in that child's eyes standing in front of the refrigerator door (the hairs in his nose becoming frosted) saying, "Is that all there is?" If I live to be a hundred.

We never saw him again.

You hear a lot of dialogue on the death of the American family. Families aren't dying. They're merging into big conglomerates. Daughters and sons who are between roommates (legal and lethal), drift in and approach the desk like they're in a hotel asking, "Is my old room still available?" Cribs and strollers appear with babies. Cars and special menus are requested.

I rechecked my child psychology book the other day for the answer and wondered, "Is there life after the index?"

Lamb authority shares his favorite recipes

By MARJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

With polyester and cotton enticing consumers away from wool, coyotes decimating the flocks, a shortage of herdsmen and grazing land and a general unwillingness on the part of the public to eat lamb, the sheep business — to hear sheepmen tell it — can seem pretty bleak.

Shear frustration, so to speak. A look at consumption figures tells the story. There are about 13 million sheep in the United States, said Richard D. Biglin, executive director of the American Sheep Producers Council, Inc. (ASPC), of Denver. "Over the past about 40 years, it's been a downslide," he said. "In the 1940s there were about 52 million sheep in the United States."

Sheep producers, packers, wholesalers, retailers and food writers were guests of Biglin and his ASPC staff in Durango, Colo., recently to talk about the beleaguered industry.

The problem isn't just one of numbers, Biglin said. Americans just don't eat much lamb, consuming about four pounds per capita last year. Compare that with more than 100 pounds of beef. In 1981 the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated the lamb crop at 8.8 million — an increase of 8.8 percent that the sheepmen find heartening. Bill Brosco-vak, director of special promotions for the ASPC, specializes in lamb cookery. Some of his favorite recipes follow.

SHEPHERD'S BEANS

One-half lb. bacon, diced
1 medium onion, coarsely chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
1 can (1 lb.) stewed tomatoes
1 can (1 lb.) lima or butter beans
1 can (1 lb.) green or wax beans
1 can (14 oz.) chili beans
2 cups beef bouillon
2 tbsps. dark molasses
Salt, pepper to taste
2 to 4 dashes of liquid smoke flavor (optional)

Fry the bacon until rendered but not too crisp. Pour off and discard half the drippings and use the remainder to saute the onion and garlic. In a large kettle, mix the tomatoes and undrained beans. Add the remaining ingredients and bring the mixture to a boil. Reduce the heat and simmer the beans, stirring them occasionally, for two hours, or until the stock is reduced to the desired thickness. Makes about 10 servings.

LAMB RIB RACKS EN BROCHETTE

1 cup oil
One-half cup cider vinegar
One-fourth cup water
One-fourth cup sugar
1 tsp. soy sauce
2 pieces (1-inch EACH) ginger root, shredded
1 clove garlic, crushed
3 slices fresh pineapple
1 large green pepper
6 lamb rib chops (each 3 bones thick)
1 can (5 oz.) water chestnuts, drained
Maraschino cherries (optional)

Combine the oil, vinegar, water, sugar, soy, ginger and garlic. Cut each pineapple slice into four wedges. Cut the pepper into 12 pieces. Combine them with the lamb, water chestnuts and cherries and pour the marinade over all. Marinate the ingredients several hours, turning them all. Marinate the ingredients several hours, turning them occasionally. Cook the lamb on a spit for 30 minutes, or until it reaches the desired doneness, basting it frequently. Skewer the pineapple, pepper, water chestnuts (using a twisting motion to avoid splitting them) and cherries and grill them about 10 minutes, or until done, brushing them frequently with the marinade. Makes six servings.

CURRIED HAWAIIAN LAMB SPARERIBS

3 lbs. lamb spareribs (cut from the breast)
1 tsp. curry powder
Salt, pepper to taste
One-third cup finely chopped celery
One-fourth cup chopped parsley
1 tsp. grated lemon zest (colored part of peel)
1 cup orange juice
1 orange, sliced
1 lemon, sliced
1 pineapple, pared, cored and sliced (or 1-lb. 4 oz.-can of slices, drained)

Place the ribs on a rack in a shallow roasting pan and bake them at 325 degrees for about one and one-half hours. Drain off the drippings. Combine the curry powder, salt and pepper, celery, parsley, lemon zest and orange juice, blending them well. Pour the mixture over the ribs and top with the fruit slices. Bake them 45 minutes, or until completely tender, basting the ribs frequently with the drippings. Makes four servings.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Use an old sheet to make a fitted mattress pad

DEAR HELOISE:

I've been tempted to write several times before but never did. However, the problem of my non-fitted mattress pad made me decide I really should share my solution.

Take a worn, fitted bottom sheet and put it on the mattress. Place the mattress pad on top, stretch it taut and pin all the way around. Stitch sheet and pad together on the machine.

Turn it over and remove the worn part of the sheet. If it is ragged, turn under the raw edges of the sheet and stitch again.

If the sheet isn't worn through, then do not bother to remove it as it will reinforce your pad if left on.

After you get all your mattress pads "anchored" and you still have worn, fitted bottom sheets left, give them a new lease on life by buying unbleached muslin in the correct width, shrink it and sew it onto them according to the pad instructions.

Clip away the old sheet and stitch under the raw edges. The muslin will soon bleach white and it wears like iron. — Mrs. J.L. Frazier

Good hint! In my estimation a mattress pad that bunches and crawls all over the bed and never stays put is one of life's most vexing little miseries.

Your solution sure takes care of that problem without spending an extra cent.

Since saving our hard-earned money is the name of our game, a great big hug for your help. — Heloise

PICKER-UPPER

Dear Heloise: Being confined to a wheel chair, I dropped many articles on the floor and was unable to bend down to retrieve them.

So, I bought long-handled barbecue tongs and attached a small magnet to them. Worked great, as I could even pick up a pin or needle. — Armata Myers

MONEY SAVER

Dear Heloise: Baby oil is used for many things other than for baby, such as removing paint from hands, etc. Mineral oil works the same and costs even less. Just read the list of ingredients on each one sometime.

Unless you buy baby oil strictly for the fragrance, you can save a lot of money. — Alice Neack

CLOTHESPIN CARRIER

Dear Heloise: I got tired of having to replace my cloth clothespin bag, so I bought a large plastic hanging flower pot with a wire hook.

It has holes at the bottom so no dirt or water can accumulate should I forget and leave it outside during a shower. And, when it gets dirty, it's easy to wash.

I've used mine for two years and I love it. — V. Fahlsing

CANDLE STORAGE

Dear Heloise: To keep that just-bought fragrance in your votive candles when storing them, place them in a closed jar.

It helps to protect them from getting chipped. If you don't want the fragrance of each to mingle, store each kind in a separate jar. — Helen Cole

BRA CARE

Dear Heloise: If you have a problem with bra hooks catching on other clothes when washing and drying them, just hook the fasteners together as you would when wearing the bra.

No more snarls. — Lula

You should do this as a matter of course anyway. The hooks won't get bent or catch on the dryer. — Heloise

PRESSING DUTIES

Dear Heloise: Use old diapers for pressing cloths. I find myself buying new ones and distributing them to family and friends for this purpose.

I even keep my son, who's away at college, supplied. (He does his own ironing.) — Angie Anton

NO 'LEMON' IDEA

Dear Heloise: While eating at a posh restaurant, the lemon, when served, was cut and put into squares of nylon net and fastened with a twist-tie.

No seeds or squirts! What next for nylon net? — Mildred Dodson

With the popularity of tailgating parties on the increase, sports fans will love this exciting new recipe that's perfect for the occasion, "Tailgater's Chili." This all-in-one baked main dish combines a flavorful chili base easily seasoned with onion soup mix and topped with a cheesy corn bread mixture. Carefully wrapped with aluminum foil and newspaper, the casserole will keep warm for several hours.

Please your sports fans this fall with this tasty and easy chili dish

Tailgating parties are becoming more and more popular with the sports-minded crowd. No matter what the food, whether franks and burgers or gourmet fare, tailgating is a great way to get into the spirit of the game. Here is an exciting new recipe that's just right for the occasion, "Tailgater's Chili." It's an easy, all-in-one main dish that's sure to win points with both the cook and the fans.

About 2½ hours before leaving for the game, start assembling the casserole. Combine cubed chuck steak, kidney beans and, if your crowd likes things spicy, chopped green chilies, with a mixture of onion soup mix, chili powder, tomato sauce and beer. Onion soup mix adds most of the seasoning necessary, as well as delicious onion pieces, conveniently in one envelope; the chili powder provides that south-of-the-border touch. The mixture gets popped in the oven and baked about an hour and a half, so there's plenty of time to get yourself ready.

When the beef is tender, a cheesy corn bread topping is spooned onto the hot chili mixture. The casserole is then returned to the oven and continues baking until the corn bread is golden.

To transport the meal to the game, insulate the casserole by carefully wrapping it in aluminum foil and several thicknesses of newspaper. Wrapped like this, "Tailgater's Chili" should keep warm several hours.

Whether you're rooting for the winning or losing team, "Tailgater's Chili" is sure to score big.

TAILGATER'S CHILI

- 2 pounds boneless chuck steak, cut into ½-inch cubes
- 1 can (20 ounces) kidney beans
- 3 tbsp. chopped green chilies (optional)
- 1 envelope onion soup mix
- 1 can (8 ounces) tomato sauce
- 1 cup beer
- 1½ tbsp. chili powder
- 1 package (7 or 10 ounces) corn bread mix
- 1 cup shredded cheddar cheese (about 4 ounces)

Preheat oven to 350 F.

In 3-quart casserole, combine beef, beans and chilies; stir in onion soup mix blended with tomato sauce, beer and chili powder. Bake covered 1½ hours or until beef is tender.

Prepare corn bread mix according to package directions; stir in cheese. Spoon evenly onto hot chili and continue baking uncovered, 25 minutes or until golden.

Tightly wrap hot covered casserole in foil and 4 to 5 thicknesses of newspaper; secure with tape. Makes about 8 servings.

Fall is the season to make pretzels

By PHYLIS C. HUGHMAN
The Washington Post

Seasons are measured by more than fading blossoms and red-gold leaves. Parents of young children welcome spring by the packing away of snowsuits, summer by cups of fruit juice turning to ice pops in the freezer. And fall, though a relief from heat and calamine lotion, means the closing of the swimming pools. Endless hours of activity canceled. Children at home, in the house, with nothing to do.

Cooking is, if not the easy solution to directing toddler energy that a wading pool can be, at least a two-birds-with-one-stone kind of activity. Even small children can beat and mix and knead and toss. A salad gets made. The egg whites get whipped. Sandwiches are slathered and their halves matched up. Children, one discovers, can actually accomplish something.

Couple that with the need for snacks and the ever-yawning snack bin, and the answer comes to pretzels.

Not empty-calorie, store-bought pretzels, but cheese-dough pretzels, made at home by the smallest of children. This recipe originally came from a nursery school, carefully preserved through playtime and carpool by a small boy who knew a good thing when he tasted it. It has spread farther than a chain letter, saved more rainy mornings than an umbrella and fed as many mommies and daddies as toddlers.

It is meant to be made by children, not just for children. Once the dough is mixed, it can be shaped any way a child can devise, though obviously it will taste better formed into ropes and twisted rather than baked in a blob. So show the children how to break off small pieces, roll them between their hands and the table into long ropes, and form designs: their initials, hearts, animals, even proper pretzels. But reassure them — as you can be reassured yourself — that whatever shapes they devise will taste just fine.

FREE-FORM PRETZELS

- 1 package dry yeast
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- 1 1/2 cups warm water (115 degrees)
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 4 to 5 cups flour
- 4 cups sharp cheddar cheese, grated

DEAR E.B.: We developed this recipe just for you, and we all loved it.

PINA COLADA CHEESECAKE

- 2 cups graham cracker crumbs
- 1/2 cup toasted shredded coconut, chopped fine
- 3 tbsp. sugar
- 1/2 cup butter or margarine, melted
- 1 (16-ounce) can crushed pineapple in heavy syrup
- 5 (8-ounce) packages cream cheese
- 1 1/2 cups sugar
- 1/2 cup cornstarch
- 5 eggs
- 2 egg yolks
- Grated peel of 1 lemon
- 1/2 cup canned cream of coconut
- 1/2 cup dark rum
- Pineapple Topping
- 1/2 cup coarsely chopped pecans
- 1/2 cup toasted shredded coconut

Combine graham cracker crumbs, finely chopped coconut, and sugar. Stir in butter until all ingredients are moistened. Press crumbs on bottom and halfway up sides of 10-inch spring form pan. Set aside.

For filling, drain pineapple, reserving juice. Set aside. Beat cream cheese and sugar in mixing bowl until light and fluffy, about 10 minutes. Beat in cornstarch. Beat in eggs and egg yolks, one at a time, until well blended. Beat in lemon peel, cream of coconut and rum. Stir in 1/2 the drained pineapple. Reserve remaining pineapple and liquid for topping. Pour into prepared crust.

Place in pan of hot water and bake at 350 degrees 1 hour 15 minutes. Cool to room temperature. Spread Pineapple Topping over top of cheesecake. Sprinkle over nuts then coconut. Chill until serving time.

Pineapple Topping

- Reserved crushed pineapple and liquid
- 1 tbsp. arrowroot
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 1/4 cup dark rum

Blend together reserved pineapple juice and arrowroot in medium saucepan until smooth. Stir in reserved crushed pineapple, sugar and rum. Heat to boiling, stirring occasionally. Boil and stir until clear and thickened. Let cool to warm.

ungreased pans, leaving room between them for expansion. Brush each with beaten egg and sprinkle very lightly with coarse salt. Bake at 425 degrees for 15 to 18 minutes, or until golden brown. The number of pretzels made depends on each child's creative mode.

Two fine steaks that taste better than they look

By MERLE ELLIS

There is one cut of meat I have seen turning black in meat cases all over this country. It often goes unnoticed or unwanted or both for one reason, I am sure: people don't know what it is or what to do with it. Often they don't even see it. It's the Skirt Steak.

It's not a common cut of meat. There are only two "skirts" on a carcass of beef and, therefore, usually only two or three packages in the meat case at any one time, not enough in most markets to make a big display.

The Skirt Steak is the diaphragm muscle of the beef animal. It is the muscle that controls the flow of air into and out of the lungs. That's probably more than you wanted to know about a Skirt Steak, but that's what it is. What you should know is that the skirt is one of the most flavorful cuts on a carcass of beef. It has a rich, beefy flavor not found in many cuts these days and it is, or can be — if treated right — a very tender morsel.

When it comes off the carcass from the inside of the short plate, it is, to say the least, an ugly thing. It's about two feet long, three inches wide, 1/4-inch thick and covered on both sides with a thick membrane. In that form it's impossible to tell what a marvelous cut of meat it can be. Even trimmed of its membrane, folded in thirds and wrapped in plastic (turning dark in the meat case as I often see it), it remains a strange-looking piece of meat; more closely resembling a flattened snake than a good steak. But take one home; spread it out on your cutting board and pound it gently with a wooden mallet or the bottom of a heavy frying pan to even out the thicker parts. Then roll it up.

Start at the thick end and roll it up jellyroll fashion. Fasten the roll with two or three wooden skewers, then cut between the skewers to make two or three beautiful Skirt Steaks. They're perfect for broiling or grilling and full of good, rich, beefy flavor, second only in my mind to the flavor of a Butcher Steak.

Ah! The Butcher Steak. Now there's a flavorful piece of meat but, unfortunately, one that few of us have tasted. It's also called the Hanging Tender. It hangs on the inside of the left hindquarter of the beef animal just below the tenderloin. It's only on the left side, so there is but one per animal, which makes it even more scarce than a Skirt Steak. Over the years the Hanging Tender has come to be known as the Butcher Steak. Since there are too few of them to make a display in the meat case, the butcher traditionally took them home. This one still does.

The Butcher Steak is closely related to the Skirt Steak. It is, in fact, the "pillar of the diaphragm": the muscle to which the two diaphragm muscles (Skirt Steaks) are attached. Any market that has Skirt Steaks in the meat case also may have a Butcher Steak or two in the back room. Ring the bell and ask. The butcher may share one with you.

It's time to freeze vegetables to use this winter

By JEAN BLEVINS
Hearst Feature Service

Now is the time, while produce is plentiful and prices are low, to freeze vegetables for winter use. The time you invest in preparing the veggies for the freezer will pay you good wages for the next eight to 10 months — that's how long frozen vegetables can be kept without losing quality.

You don't need a lot of complicated equipment to freeze vegetables, either. The main thing is a freezer. But if you've never made the small investment required to buy a freezer, this would be good time to do so. Your freezer should keep foods at 0 degree. If the thermometer tells you the temperature in your freezer is higher than that, you can't expect the foods to last as long. It may mean the freezer needs servicing, or simply a new gasket around the door. But you don't want your freezer-stocking efforts to be less than productive because of overlooking one little detail.

Aside from your freezer, what you will need to freeze vegetables is a large kettle for blanching. Blanching just means boiling the vegetables for a very short time. As explained by Charlotte Erickson in "The Freezer Cookbook," (Contemporary Books Inc., $8.95), "Blanching vegetables before freezing kills the enzymes that cause loss of flavor and color. If the vegetables are not blanched or aren't blanched sufficiently, enzymes continue to be active, even in the freezer. Your vegetables may discolor, toughen or develop off-flavors, which will cause them to be unappetizing."

When you have blanched the vegetables, you will need to cool them quickly by plunging them into cold water. For this, you'll need either another large water container or the kitchen sink filled with water. Leave them in the cold bath for as long as they blanch. If you're doing several batches of vegetables, the cold water will soon become warm, and need to be replaced with fresh, cold water.

As to the vegetables themselves, Erickson says, "Only the highest grade of produce should be used for freezing, and all vegetables should be processed as quickly after harvest as possible. Take corn as an example: one day can make an amazing difference in quality. The best way to freeze corn is to pick it and freeze it the same morning."

It's important to wash vegetables thoroughly before freezing. Then, after they're frozen and blanched, they're ready to be put in containers. Freezer bags are easy to use, especially if you get the kind that seal just by pushing the edges together. If you prefer to stack your frozen produce neatly in the freezer, however, you will prefer rigid plastic containers with tight lids. Bags of frozen vegetables are impossible to stack, if this makes any difference to you.

One more point — labeling. It is amazing how everything looks like everything else once it gets into the freezer and a few weeks or months pass by. You will save yourself a lot of puzzlement later if you do something as simple now as sticking a strip of masking tape on each freezer container and labeling it. Be sure to include the date as well as the name of the contents. That way you will know when that particular container of food is reaching its eight-to-10-month lifespan, and use it while it is still at its best.

Unlike fruits, vegetables don't need to be frozen in syrups. That means they're remarkably easy to freeze. The only aspect of vegetable freezing that is the least bit tricky is knowing how long to blanch what. Everything is different. For handy reference, here is a list of blanching times for many favorite vegetables (from "Better Homes and Gardens New Cook Book," Meredith Corp. $15.95):

ASPARAGUS

Submerge one pound asparagus in one gallon boiling water. Cover and boil two minutes for small spears, three minutes for medium spears and four minutes for large spears.

BEANS, GREEN OR WAX

Cut beans into two to four-inch pieces. Submerge one pound beans in one gallon boiling water. Cover, boil three minutes.

BEANS, LIMA OR BUTTER

Submerge one pound beans in one gallon boiling water. Cover and boil two minutes for small beans and four minutes for large beans.

BEEFS

Thoroughly scrub beets but do not peel. Sort according to size. Trim off tops, leaving 1/2-inch stems. Cook until tender in boiling water to cover (small beets, 25 to 30 minutes; medium beets, 35 to 50 minutes.) Drain and cool. Slip off skins. Cube or slice.

BROCCOLI

Submerge one pound broccoli in one gallon boiling water. Cover and boil for three minutes.

CARROTS

Submerge one pound carrots in one gallon boiling water; cover and boil five minutes for tiny whole carrots, and two minutes for sliced carrots or carrots cut into strips.

CAULIFLOWER

CORN

To blanch ears of corn, place about six at a time in a large amount of boiling water in a large kettle. Cover and boil four minutes.

For cream-style corn, cut off kernel tips, scrape cob with dull edge of knife and pack into containers.

For corn on the cob, wrap each drained ear of corn individually in flexible wrapping material such as freezer paper or heavy-duty foil. Mold to shape of ear of corn, removing as much air as possible. Bundle four to six ears together in large plastic freezer bag. Store in freezer no longer than four to six months.

For whole kernel corn, after blanching ears of corn, cut kernels at two-thirds depth. Do not scrape cob.

PEAS

Submerge one pound shelled peas in one gallon boiling water. Cover and boil two minutes.

PEPPERS (SWEET)

No blanching needed! Cut in strips, halves or chop.

TOMATOES

Wash, peel and core tomatoes. In large kettle, bring tomatoes slowly to boiling, stirring constantly. Cover; simmer 10 minutes, or until tender. Set kettle into ice water; cool. Add one teaspoon salt per quart (packed) or 1/2 teaspoon per pint.

TURNIPS AND RUTABAGAS

Wash, peel and slice or cube. Submerge one pound of turnips or rutabagas in one gallon boiling water. Cover, boil two minutes.

WINTER SQUASH

Wash, halve and remove seeds. Cook before freezing. For squash, bake halves or serving-size pieces, cut-side down, in baking pan, covered with foil in a 350 degree oven for 30 minutes. Turn cut-side up and bake, covered, until tender (20 to 30 minutes for acorn, butternut or Hubbard squash; 45 to 50 minutes for Hubbard, banana or spaghetti squash. Remove pulp from rind and mash or press through a sieve or food mill.

Some thoughts on California Chardonnays

Copley News Service

When reading a wine columnist, you ought to know what he likes, to see if it jibes with what you like. This column will explain what I prefer in Chardonnay.

In general, I feel that many expensive California Chardonnays are made in a ponderous style — heavily oaked, high in alcohol, harsh.

I prefer a leaner, more wiry wine with backbone and structure. Some winemakers still like them that way — lighter-styled, elegant wines. Stony Hill does, always has.

Below are some wellmade wines many people love. Most have scored well in major competitions. I like them, too, but I prefer a much lighter style.

1979 Freemark Abbey ($13.75): Full, rich, Montrachet-like aroma with an overlay of honey and peaches and lots of oak. 1979 Beringer "Gamble Vineyard" ($9): Intense fruitiness offset by oak. 1979 Chateau St. Jean "Hunter Farms" ($15): Slightly grassy, forward fruit aromas overpowered by high alcohol. 1979 Chalone Estate Bottled ($16): Huge gobs of toasty-oaky-vanilla dominates the fruit. 1979 Hacienda "Selected Reserve" ($15): Closed, a bit clumsy.

To my taste the following wines are more classical. They show more of the varietal character I expect and are not mucked up with excessive wood, alcohol or other obtrusive elements.

1979 Sterling ($12): I recommended this wine weeks ago. Another taste proved again it has the lean, refined feel of elegance. Nothing is overstated. 1979 Dry Creek ($9): A slightly grassy tone accentuates the fruit-wood complexity. 1979 Dehlinger ($8.50): Proper fruit-wood balance and a spicy underlay. 1979 Hacienda (regular) ($10): More my style than the Selected Reserve, clean and elegant. 1979 Chateau Montelena "Napa" ($15): recently recommended in this column, the wine recently was my favorite in a blind-tasting of 12 — fresh, clean, oak in balance, excellent acidity. 1979 Burgess ($11.50): Again a restrained hand: fruit, oak and other elements in good balance. 1980 Leeward "Ventana Vineyard" ($12.50): Huge scent of Chardonnay, full, rich flavors in the mouth, not overdone.

Premier wants change in Solidarity

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's premier and defense minister, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, told Solidarity today in an anti-Soviet policy and said the army will assist the police in a new, tougher bid to "dismantle" the threat to law and order in Poland.

"We expect an answer from the Solidarity leadership," Jaruzelski told parliament on the eve of the independent union's second congress meeting in Gdansk. "We await a change of this line which crowned the first party of the congress."

In an apparent response to repeated Soviet calls for a "rebuff" to the labor federation's alleged anti-Soviet campaign, Jaruzelski asked Poles to show understanding for new, tougher policies.

"Accordingly, I placed before the minister of the interior a task on this matter and his work within the indispensable and appropriate scope will be assisted by the forces and means of the armed forces assigned for this purpose," Jaruzelski said.

"An end must be put to the disregard for legal norms, to the deepening anarchist tendencies, to the hooligan unbridledness, to anti-Soviet and anti-state excesses," he said, drawing applause.

"How the fate of the people and the country will develop will depend on this," Jaruzelski said.

Man kills self and two children

CESENATICO, Italy (AP) — Michele de Maria bought ice cream for his 9-year-old son and 4-year-old daughter. Then he drowned himself and them by driving his car off a nearby dock into the sea.

"We realized he was going to plunge into the sea and waved at him, vainly trying to stop him," said Giorgio Campana, a doctor in this Adriatic resort south of Venice.

The car floated for some moments. Witnesses told police the children waved in panic and tried to open the window. The 31-year-old father looked frozen behind the wheel, one witness said.

De Maria's wife Donata, 27, left him a month ago and moved into her parents' house with her son Emanuele and daughter Romy, the children's grandfather said in a telephone interview.

Police said the couple had been arguing, and some friends claimed de Maria beat his wife.

The grandfather, Domenico Marino, said de Maria begged Donata to return and when she refused repeatedly threatened to kill the children.

Friends said de Maria couldn't stand the loneliness after his wife left and hoped the threats would make her come back. Police said he may have drowned himself and the children to punish her for leaving him.

Marino said his son-in-law, a metalworker who lived 18 miles away in the industrial town of Forlì, used to pay daily visits to the children. But he became increasingly aggressive after Donata filed suit for a legal separation and custody of the children, a preliminary to divorce, Marino said.

On Monday, de Maria drove to his in-laws' house, had an argument with his wife, forced the children into his car and sped away, police said.

Mrs. de Maria, frightened by her husband's threats before he fled with the children, called police to report they had been kidnapped by their father.

He was seen buying ice cream for the children. He made one call — police are investigating to whom — put Emanuele and Romy in the car and drove into the sea.

Firemen recovered the car and the three bodies after searching for several hours.

big foreign debt and reorganizing labor unions.

"The government feels like a man with a stone bound at his leg and who, though moving with effort, is constantly charged with being slow or inept," he said.

The 400-member Parliament is meeting to discuss worker self-management as a means of increasing production. The government has welcomed Solidarity's concession of earlier demands to give the union final say on hiring and firing workers.

Stanislaw Ciosek, the government official in charge of union affairs, called the amended plan drafted by Solidarity leaders a "step toward realism." Other officials said it indicated the start of "some bridge-building" that could stem the confrontation between the government and the independent labor movement.

A resolution drafted for submission to the Solidarity national congress when it resumes Saturday calls for the government to retain the exclusive right to name managers of state enterprises, but the workers would have a veto.

The union's earlier plan for worker participation to increase production called for it to hire and fire the managers.

The compromise was similar to the government's worker-management bill being debated by the Sejm, Poland's parliament. The Solidarity congress rejected the government plan earlier this month and called for a national referendum to choose between the union's plan and the government's.

The Soviet charge of agricultural sabotage was made in the weekly Economic Gazette. It said the union's activities "are clearly aimed at wresting the commanding heights of the Polish economy from the hands of the socialist state and leaving it without a material base and thus paving the way for counter-revolution to seize power and to restore capitalism to the country."

Tass, the Soviet news agency, complained that Poland's communist leaders were still failing to "rebuff" the anti-Soviet campaign it said Solidarity was waging.

"The situation in Poland remains tense following the counter-revolutionary actions by the extremist leadership of Solidarity," it said in a dispatch from Warsaw.

Workers at the giant Ursus tractor factory outside Warsaw, a Solidarity stronghold, denied Moscow's "counter-revolutionary" charges in a statement that said, "The counter-revolutionaries and anti-socialists are the rulers who have distorted history, destroyed culture and pushed the country to the brink of destitution."

'Ambushing' TV writer is reprimanded

NEW YORK (AP) — A writer responsible for "ambushing" a Texas high school football coach on the TV show "Good Morning America" last week violated normal procedures and has been reprimanded, the show's executive producer says.

George Merlis said Wednesday that the unidentified writer violated procedures by failing to inform Coach Gordon Wood of Brownwood, Texas, that a clip purporting to show him abusing his players would be shown during a panel discussion on which Wood was to participate Sept. 15.

The coach in the clip was not Wood, although host David Hartman said it was. Merlis has since apologized for the mistake.

"It was a crude attempt to ambush the gentleman, and he wasn't even the one in question," Merlis said.

After the show, network officials said Hartman had not viewed the clip before the live broadcast. Hartman apologized on the air when he recognized the error.

Merlis said this was the first time the writer, who prepared the information for Hartman, had made such a mistake. Merlis has had discussions with her about rectifying the situation. He said possible remedies discussed included resignation, having her perform a different level of writing for the show or her continuing in her normal capacity.

Merlis said he and the writer are continuing to discuss the situation, and the writer is working on the show, doing some interviews and getting paid.

Project Business supplements classes

Twenty-two American History classes at Midland Freshman High School will have their curriculum supplemented by Project Business, a division of Junior Achievement of Midland, Inc., this fall.

A volunteer business consultant will work with teachers one class period each week for 12 weeks. During the semester, the consultant will prepare and conduct in-class discussions and small group activities, organize a field trip to a local business and motivate students by relating their interests and abilities to business careers.

The business topics for this year include The Nature of Economics, Different Economic Systems, Principles of Supply and Demand, Competition, Consumerism, Money and Financial Institutions and Career Exploration.

Business consultants working with the program this fall are Pete Bauerlein of Midland National Bank, Louis Beecher of Mobil, Linda Benham of HBF Corporation, Harold Black of Halliburton Services, John Blackburn of Texas Instruments, Curtis Boyer of Main Hurdman, W.H. Bunker of Abbott Building Co., Mike Burton of First National Bank of Midland, Randy Isenberg of Airpark Lanes, Laura Kruse of Northern Natural Gas Co., Susan Laue of Arco Oil & Gas Co., Charles Lout of Compressor Systems, Inc., Don Murphy and Carole Myers of Texas Plastic Industries, Boyd Nelson of Conoco, Riley Pape of IBM Corporation, Tom Probasco of Frank See Chevrolet, Sara Robbins of Cities Service Co., Tom Spencer of Texas Electric Service Co., Robbie L. Stair of Gulf and David Weir of Commercial Bank & Trust Co.

Companies providing the $500 class sponsorship fees are Abbott Building Co.; Tom Brown, Inc.; Cities Service Co.; Citizen's Savings & Loan Assn.; Compressor Systems, Inc.; Conoco; Dow Chemical-Dowell Division; The Elcor Corporation; Exxon; First National Bank of Midland; Gulf; HBF Construction; HBF Corporation; Halliburton Services; IBM Corporation; Lone Star Abstract & Title Co.; Main Hurdman; Midland National Bank; Northern Natural Gas Co.; Parker Drilling; Texas Electric Service Co. and Texas Plastic Industries.

Karen J. Anderson, Project Business manager, is recruiting consultants and sponsorships for the next semester at this time. For more information about participating in the spring, call the Project Business office at 682-3089.

Hardening of arteries, cancer may be linked

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Hardening of the arteries and cancer could have common causes and future scientists may be able to develop vaccines against both if such a link is examined, a Houston cancer expert said Wednesday.

Laboratory evidence is beginning to mount that fatty deposits in arteries form from a single cell, just like cancer cells, said Dr. John Trentin, head of experimental biology at Baylor College of Medicine.

Trentin, the first scientist to successfully introduce cancer from a human virus into test animals, said findings also suggested a high incidence of arteriosclerosis in domestic animals who had developed tumors from natural viruses.

If this link holds up, it could lead to major scientific breakthroughs in understanding and treating the two ailments, Trentin told a group of graduate students and scientists at Texas A&M University.

New gene may produce hardier crops

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—The isolation of a gene that protects plants from drought and salt may speed the development of hardy strains of crops that thrive on inhospitable land and increase the world's food supply, scientists say.

Scientists at the University of California at Davis discovered the gene and used the tools of genetic engineering to transfer it to another organism. If the work continues as they hope, tough, new plants should be available for farmers within 10 years.

Dr. Raymond C. Valentine outlined the work

Wednesday in a speech at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

His team discovered a gene that keeps plants and bacteria from drying out when there is too little water or too much salt in the soil. So far, this gene has been implanted only into the genetic material of a form of bacteria. But plants will be the next step.

All plants and bacteria have such genes, although some are much more powerful than others. The goal will be to pair up valuable plants with potent genes.

The gene triggers the plant's production of proline, or what Valentine calls "water stress anti-freeze." This material keeps moisture from flowing out of the plant's cells through osmosis.

Proline is a building block for protein and is an essential element of plant life. However, it serves a dual role, and when conditions are dry or salty, it helps keep them from drying out.

"All microbes and plants have some form of this gene," Valentine said in an interview. "In some, it produces a weak response, while in others it is very efficient. We are trying to get plants with poor systems to have better systems."

The California scientists have discovered there are three different drought genes, and each produces a different level of response. So far, they have isolated the gene in E. coli, a common bacterium often used in genetic experiments, and transferred it to klebsiella, a bacterium that affects nitrogen-fixing in plants.

The E. coli gene produces the middle level of proline production. Valentine said plants may need more than one of these genes to thrive under different conditions.

Plants that can withstand drought would be valuable sources of food in arid parts of the world.

Valentine said the drought genes may also be useful in programming more efficient varieties of industrial bacteria, such as those used in fermentation.

He said other areas of genetic engineering may also allow scientists someday to create plants tolerant of freezing, heat and acid or alkaline soil.

Final arguments to begin in A&M murder trial

BRYAN, Texas (AP)—Final arguments from both sides were to begin today in the murder trial of a Texas A&M student accused of stabbing another student 24 times.

A medical examiner called by the defense Wednesday supported Joel Anciento Quintans' claim that he never held the knife that killed Frederick A. Youngberg IV. Both men were 19-year-old freshman biology majors at the time of the April 20 slaying.

Vincent DiMai, chief medical examiner for Bexar County, said the absence of wounds in Youngberg's right palm and wrist strongly support the likelihood that Youngberg, not his attacker, held the knife.

DiMai also contradicted statements from Arthur Copeland, a Dallas County medical examiner, who said rectal hemorrhaging in Young-berg's body could have been caused by a homosexual assault. The autopsy on Youngberg was performed in Dallas.

DiMai said he doubted the attack was sexually prompted.

"This is not the pattern you get in sexual killings," he said.

Williams says he has been made 'scapegoat'

ATLANTA (AP) — Wayne B. Williams insists he has been made a "scapegoat" by authorities, according to a jailhouse interview in US Magazine.

Williams, a 23-year-old free-lance cameraman, is charged with murder in the deaths of Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, and Nathaniel Carter, 27, two of 28 young blacks whose slayings over the past two years have been investigated by a special police task force. No trial date has been set.

The interview, conducted by Journalist Micki Siegel, appears in the Oct. 13 edition of the magazine. Advance copies of the New York-based publication arrived at Atlanta news media organizations Wednesday.

The jailhouse interview took place without the knowledge or approval of jail officials, said Fulton County Sheriff Leroy Strychcombe after being told about the article by Atlanta television station WSB-TV.

Strychcombe said he would meet with Superior Court Judge Clarence Cooper, who is presiding over Williams' case, today to discuss how the interview could have occurred without the sheriff's knowledge.

The only people who have been allowed to visit Williams since he was taken into custody last June were his parents, his attorneys and six persons named on a list by Williams' attorneys as being involved in preparation of his defense, Strychcombe told WSB-TV.

Mary Welton, Williams' attorney, said she knew about the article, but she refused to comment on whether she had authorized the interview or whether she was present when it occurred.

Cooper, who was given a copy of the article by WSB-TV, refused to comment Wednesday.

Last month, the judge ordered police, attorneys and potential witnesses to refrain from talking to reporters about the case, saying it was "the trial judge's responsibility to control prejudicial pretrial publicity and the defendant's right to a fair trial."

Ms. Welton said Wednesday that as far as she knew, Williams himself was not subject to the judge's gag order.

Senate moving towards blocking U.S. military aid to El Salvador

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Handing a temporary defeat to President Reagan and the president of El Salvador, the Senate is moving toward blocking U.S. military aid to El Salvador unless the Central American country protects human rights and meets other conditions.

But the conditions, included in an amendment approved late Wednesday, could be reversed as the Senate continues work on a $5.8 billion foreign aid bill.

By approving the amendment, 54-42, the Senate rejected a proposal by Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., to merely list the conditions as goals for the government of El Salvador. Reagan is against the conditions, Lugar said.

The conditions would halt U.S. military aid to El Salvador unless Reagan certified to Congress in writing that El Salvador is protecting human rights, moving to control its security forces, implementing economic reforms and is committed to free elections and willing to negotiate for peace.

The Senate action coincided with an allegation by the El Salvador Human Rights Commission that a squad of uniformed police with automatic weapons shot up a house outside the capital of San Salvador on Wednesday, killing a family of six. An army source said the allegation was being investigated.

El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte appealed to the Senate not to tie the conditions to military aid, calling such action "an unacceptable imposition on a government friendly to the United States."

Identifying U.S. agents could be federal crime

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Identifying U.S. intelligence agents would be a federal crime under a House-endorsed bill criticized as a "serious blow to civil liberties and a free press."

The legislation, approved 354-56 Wednesday and sent to the Senate, marks a major defeat for members of the House Intelligence Committee, the American Civil Liberties Union and news organizations, which say the proposal threatens the First Amendment.

By voting overwhelmingly for the legislation, the House soundly rejected its own Intelligence Committee's recommendation on what standards should be applied before a journalist or researcher could be prosecuted for revealing the name of a covert CIA or military agent.

"This is a serious blow to civil liberties and a free press," ACLU official Jerry Berman said in an interview after the vote.

Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass., the Intelligence Committee chairman, said the bill "gives me great trouble in its present form" and voted against it.

For three years, Congress has been wrestling with the problem of how to react to incidents in which intelligence agents have been assassinated or attacked following publication of their names.

The bill approved by the House on Wednesday permits prosecution of anyone who identifies an American undercover agent if there is "reason to believe such activities would impair or impede" U.S. intelligence operations.

That wording, pushed by conservative Rep. John Ashbrook, R-Ohio, is already included in a bill pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The version approved by Boland's Intelligence Committee would have required that a person have specific intent to disrupt U.S. spy operations before he or she could be prosecuted.

Ashbrook's proposal was approved 226-181 and will make it easier for federal prosecutors to obtain indictments against those who print the names of American agents overseas.

Demands for such legislation were first made in 1975, when Richard Welch, the CIA station chief in Athens, was fatally shot by terrorists after his name was published in Counterspy magazine.

In July 1980, the names of 15 Americans alleged to be CIA agents in Jamaica appeared in a publication called The Covert Action Information Bulletin. Within a few days, the homes of two people on the list were fired upon by unknown gunmen.

The legislation to be considered by the Senate committee starting Oct. 6:

—Sets a maximum prison term of 10 years and fines of $50,000 for people with daily access to classified information who disclose the names of agents to anyone not authorized to have the information.

—Establishes a prison term of up to five years and fines of $25,000 for people with limited access to classified information who make similar disclosures.

—Establishes a maximum three-year jail term and $15,000 in fines for journalists, researchers or others without formal access to classified information who expose covert agents and then "impair or impede" U.S. intelligence operations.

New radio station could bring Cuban retaliation against U.S.

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Reagan administration plan to beam anti-communist broadcasts into Cuba could trigger anti-Castro violence and retaliatory measures against the United States, a top Cuban diplomat says.

A White House announcement Wednesday said a new broadcast station will be set up along the lines of Radio Free Europe to "tell the truth to the Cuban people."

The Cuban diplomat, who asked not to be identified, called the American plan both "risky and dangerous." He suggested it could touch off a resumption of last year's "freedom flotilla" in which 125,000 Cubans, including some who were mentally ill or had criminal records, immigrated to the United States.

In announcing the new station, White House national security adviser Richard V. Allen said the Cuban media "have lied throughout two decades of the revolution, they lie today and will continue to lie to the Cuban people."

"The Cuban people have been controlled and manipulated by a totalitarian Marxist-Leninist dictatorship dedicated to promoting armed violence and undermining the interests of the free world," Allen said.

The Spanish-language programs will contain news, features and political commentary and information such as how many Cubans have been killed in Angola, officials said.

Previously, administration officials have said they don't have reliable statistics on the number of Cuban casualties in Angola.

The station will have an initial operating budget of $10 million and is expected to be on the air in January on a dawn-to-dusk basis. Although details have not been worked out, studios and transmission points are likely to be located in Florida.

"This administration has decided to break the Cuban government's control of information in Cuba," Allen said. "This radio service will tell the truth to the Cuban people about their government's domestic mismanagement and its promotion of subversion and international terrorism in this hemisphere and elsewhere."

The Cuban diplomat expressed fear that it could result in a deterioration of relations reminiscent of the early 1960s.

He said it could encourage Miami-based Cuban exiles to resurrect plots to oust the regime, to assassinate Cuban President Fidel Castro and to engage in economic sabotage.

Those activities, he said, "never solved anything."

U.S. officials, speaking privately, said the new station will be called "Radio Marti," after Jose Marti, the father of Cuban independence.

The White House announcement came just hours after two Cuban officials, appearing on videotape, told a seminar here on U.S.-Cuban relations that the Cuban economy has enjoyed a 4 percent average growth rate since 1976 and will become even stronger over the next five years.

The two Cubans had asked for permission to attend the Capitol Hill seminar, but the State Department denied them visas as a reflection of U.S. opposition to Cuban military involvement in Africa and elsewhere. Visa requests by two other Cubans also were turned down.

Westmoreland stresses importance of secrecy to nation's defense

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Gen. William C. Westmoreland stressed the importance of secret communications to the nation's defense as testimony began in the trial of a former Army warrant officer accused of selling military secrets to the Soviet Union.

"Communications are like the oil or lubricant in a machine," Westmoreland, the former Army chief of staff said in federal court Wednesday. "If you don't have communications, you don't have anything."

U.S. Attorney Gary Betz said in opening argument that evidence will prove Joseph G. Helmich Jr. met repeatedly with Soviet agents and was given some $131,000 for information about a top-secret coding and decoding device.

Helmich, 44, of Jacksonville Beach, was arrested July 15 and charged with four counts of espionage. He pleaded innocent and has been held at an undisclosed location under $400,000 bond.

Defense attorney Peter Dearing reserved his initial statement until the government concludes its case. The trial in the court of U.S. District Judge Susan Black was to resume today.

"CLINIQUE" MEANS EXCELLENCE

There are synonyms of course: quality, grace, taste. Women who possess these attributes understand that the Clinique cosmetics and fragrances help highlight these qualities. They understand the language of style and the meaning of quality.

We are currently looking for qualified people to help demonstrate and sell Clinique. You must be able to understand the Clinique customer, her point of view, and her sense of fashion.

Retail experience necessary, cosmetic knowledge preferred. If you feel you qualify, come in and talk to us. Attractive salary, benefits and liberal employee discount.

Trojan, Sooner winner could wind up No. 1

By MAL FLORENCE

(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — The power structure in college football has not changed much in the last 20 years. Teams like Oklahoma, USC, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Michigan and Alabama will usually be contending for the national championship.

However, excepting established rivalries like USC-Notre Dame and Ohio State-Michigan, the superpowers do not play each other regularly.

Therefore, the USC-Oklahoma game here Saturday is something special. The Trojans are expected to be ranked No. 1 in both wire-service polls, with the Sooners No. 2. The winner could wind up as the national champion.

USC has been deluged by requests for tickets, and although game will be televised, the crowd estimate is close to 90,000.

It's a showdown of collegiate heavyweights who have not met since 1973 — a 7-7 tie. And the game has some intriguing aspects. For example:

COACHES: Oklahoma's Barry Switzer and USC's John Robinson are the top winning college coaches among those who have coached five or more years.

Switzer's record is 84-9-2 (.895), Robinson's 52-8-2 (.855).

Systems: The Sooners are one of the few major teams still using the wishbone or triple option offense. There has been a trend away from the wishbone and toward the I formation, which was popularized by USC's John McKay in the '60s and is still being used by Robinson, with refinements.

Players: USC tailback Marcus Allen is the nation's leading rusher, averaging 242 yards after two games. He could help his Heisman Trophy prospects while appearing on national television. Oklahoma, oriented to the ground game, has its usual fine complement of runners, including fullback Stanley Wilson and halfback Buster Rhymes. Wilson, a junior, is a two-time former All-City Player of the Year. Rhymes, a sophomore, is a breakaway threat. He rushed for 659 yards last year, an Oklahoma freshman record, and averaged 7.7 yards a carry.

PRESTIGE: USC, Oklahoma and Alabama have each won five national championships since 1950. No other school has won more than three. Only USC (19) and Alabama (18) have won more bowl games than Oklahoma (15).

Ground Power: Oklahoma, idle last Saturday after an opening 37-20 win over Wyoming, leads the nation in rushing yardage at 453. USC, which has defeated Tennessee (43-7) and Indiana (21-0), is No. 2, averaging 396.

Recruiting: This game is important to Oklahoma because it is now recruiting nationally and making inroads in Southern California.

The Trojans and Sooners are similar in some respects. Both teams have veteran offensive lines, quality running backs and inexperienced quarterbacks and defensive backs.

Switzer's top blockers are guards Don Key (6-2, 246) and Terry Crouch (6-1, 275), both All-American prospects. Kelly Phelps has apparently won the starting quarterback job from Darrell Shepard, the replacement for graduated J.C. Watts. Phelps, a junior, backed up Watts in 1979 and was red-shirted last year. He was an Oklahoma City prep rival of Scott Tinsley, USC's reserve quarterback. Typically, by Oklahoma standards, Phelps and Shepard are regarded as fine runners but only average passers.

THE SOONERS seldom pass extensively unless they are behind late in a game. For example, Watts attempted only 78 passes last year. Stanford's John Elway might throw that many in two games.

Because Oklahoma does not pass much and does not engage too many pass-conscious teams in the Big 8, it would seem that USC would try to exploit the Sooner defense through the air. Stanford did it last year with a shocking 31-14 win at Norman.

The I formation has a better balance between the run and pass, but Oklahoma has been successful against I teams, particularly Nebraska, with eight wins in the last nine years.

The wishbone offense is a rarity in college football now. Al Carter, a columnist for the Oklahoma newspaper, said after a survey that only seven major schools still run primarily out of the wishbone — Oklahoma, Alabama, Auburn, Mississippi State, Wyoming, Air Force and East Carolina.

USC last met a wishbone team in 1978, when it upset Alabama 24-14 in Birmingham.

By the nature of the system, wishbone teams are usually fumble-prone early in the season. But Oklahoma fumbled only twice against Wyoming, losing one.

Feedback from a Monday column...

A reader called to find out where he can get his RPI T-shirt. No hockey puck requests, however.

Ed Heikkila gravely warns suspected disparaging remarks regarding Clemson's victory over defending national champion Georgia (appearing in this space) will be discussed at the Midland Chapter of the Clemson Tiger Marching and Chowder Society, the next time the two of them meet.

Anybody want to hear 20 choruses of Marching Through Georgia...I know 'em by heart...

IPTAY? It's the alumni organization that supports Clemson athletics, all of them, men's and women's, and stands for "I Pay Thirty A Year." It used to be "I Pay Ten A Year," but that's inflation for you.

Severest feed back of all came from someone we weren't even talking about, or at least directly. A reference to Baylor beating "Sewanee, Millsaps or some such," brought this indignant retort.

"Now you've done it; now you've SHO-NUFF DONE IT! To put the mighty (also trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient) Millsaps Majors in the 'some such' category is a sin agin Dixie.

May all your chitlins and grits turn to salt. The green and white (Baylor) Bears, yea, verily all SWC, SEC, etc., titans — are advised not to schedule a warm-up with the purple and white Methodist Hill Monsters (see attached), unless they don't mind being "Lamar'd."

Signed: Clyde C. Anthony, Jr., Millsaps '57 (naturally).

DO WHAT you want with the chitlins, Clyde, but, please, not the grits...

The "enclosed" is an article about Millsaps which, with no scholarships and only two coaches, plays just for fun, closing out a 9-0 season in 1980 with an 84-0 win over Landmark College of Florida after marching through "the likes" of Fisk, Sewanee, St. Leo and Maryville.

Claude Arnett, senior pre-med with a 3.6 average, one of the 1980 studs, said, "We have the ideal situation here...we're out there playing football because we want too. We don't do it for the money and the women and whatever else they get. We do it just because it's fun."

The Majors apparently aren't bad this year either, ranking in the NCAA Division III's top 10.

But honest, Clyde, we jog in Guilford shorts and an Elton sweatshirt. And how many West Texans do you know that have heard of Hot Coffee, Miss? So we can't be all bad. Forgiveness? By the way, where can we get a Millsaps T-shirt?

FOR THE fan who called and asked, no tight ends were picked as such on the 1982 All-America team, but the consensus All-America ends that year were Hal Bedsole, USC, and Pat Richter, Wisconsin. Conrad Hutchler, Missouri, and Dave Robinson, Penn State, were second string.

Ex-UA assistant reveals payoff

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — Former University of Arizona assistant football coach Bill Belknap says he once received $2,200 in booster club funds and used it to pay tuition and fees for football recruits ineligible for financial aid.

Belknap, now the University of Idaho athletic director, said he has been questioned by the university about some of his activities while at Arizona 10 years ago.

His comments were reported in Tuesday editions of the Lewiston Morning Tribune.

Charges were made in July at the trial of ex-Arizona head coach Tony Mason that a slush fund was made available to Arizona football coaches by the school's booster club. Mason was acquitted July 15 on 15 felony counts of theft, fraud, conspiracy and filing false documents.

Light, but choice prep grid slate on tap

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

Week four of the 1981 schoolboy football seasons finds several of the area schools taking a break from the girdiron warfares. Rankin and Greenwood in District 6-A and District 6-AAA Crane will be sitting on the sidelines this weekend.

Despite the light schedule, several dandy matchups dot the lineup for Friday. Stanton at Reagan County, Andrews at San Angelo Lakeview and McCamey at Seagraves highlight the area action. In other games, Lamesa hosts Fort Stockton while Midland Christian shoots for its third win of the year against Southland High School in Southland.

Stanton (2-1) at Reagan County (2-1) If coaching awards were handed out after the first three games, Reagan County's Richard Davis would have to be among the leaders for any awards for the magnificent job he has done with the Owls this year.

In ten games last year, the Owls scored 53 points, rushed for 1,060 yards and gave up 223 points on defense in racing to a 1-9 record.

Reagan County's lone victory of 1980 came against Crane, 13-7, in the season opener. After that the Owls ran off nine straight losses.

RC opened the new campaign with style by bumping Crane, 42-36, lost a heartbreaker to McCamey, 7-0, and then buried Iran last week, 39-8.

The Owls have already scored more points than they did last year and tailback Gregg Fisher has ran for 528 yards in three games — an average of 179 yards per game. If he keeps up his current pace, he will account for more yards than the Owls mustered as a team in 1980.

LIKE MOST coaches, Davis is modest about his team's success. "We just have more experience this year. Last year we were very young and inexperienced and had to take our lumps."

Davis added, "We also stressed a weight program during the off-season and most of our kids came back quicker and stronger. The work the kids did is most obvious in the offensive line. Right now, I would say that our offensive line is the best one I've ever had in my coaching career."

The Owls' offensive line will have to be at its best when they face the defensive-minded Stanton Buffalos Friday night in front of an Owl homecoming crowd.

In three games, the Buffs has allowed their opponents 20 points while scoring 41 points.

Buff mentor Steve Park is happy with his defense and is not upset with his offensive output. "We opened our season with state-ranked Tahoka, who has an outstanding defense, then we played a game in the rain. Those conditions don't make for high-scoring games," Park added. "We did get our offense running a little better against Crane (28 points)."

BOTH COACHES are expecting a low-scoring, tight ballgame. Davis commented, "It will take a good effort on our part. Stanton usually puts good defensive teams on the field. They have a real good junior varsity program and their kids move up knowing the system." He added, "It will be a hard game, just like the McCamey game, and the team that gets the breaks will win."

Park echoed Davis' words. "It will be a battle between two teams that have good defense, like to run the ball and don't throw to much." He added, "We are young but improving each week and that's what we want to do. We have made quite a few young, dumb mistakes but hopefully we won't have any Friday night."

son, quarterback Michael Ortiz and wingback Brad Armstrong. In their game against Iran, Armstrong rushed six times for 106 yards (one a 43-yard gallop). Davis says Armstrong's emergence as a runner "adds another dimension to our team."

Scott Britton, Joe Nichols and Danny Schwetner are the key interior linemen for the Owls while Burleson and Thomas Baker head a solid line-backing corp. In the secondary, Ortiz, Mitch Dorsey, Jack Blakely and Robby Clark spend their Friday evenings knocking down enemy passes and runners who venture into their area.

Tailback Kevin Newman has cracked out 293 yards to head Stanton's infantry attack. Ray Flores has added 124 yards with Tommy Esparza's 10 catches for 177 yards the key receiving threat. Quarterback Wally Hazelwood has put the ball in the air 31 times and completed 18 for 254 yards and two scores.

Stanton's defense is spearheaded by linemen Scott Church (who also doubles as punter and field goal kicker), Fabian Villa and George Lewis.

Andrews (3-0) at S.A. Lakeview (2-1) Lakeview's upset win over Fort Stockton in the District 2-AAAA opener adds a little spice to this rivalry.

The Associated Press rates Andrews No. 10 in the state while the Harris Rating System has the Ponies No. 3.

And the Mustang's statistics do little to refute the rankings. Andrews' 1,069 yards rushing leads the district by more than 200 yards and total offense by an average of 34 yards per contest. They lead the district in scoring by 22 points. Andrews averages 419.7 yards per game on offense.

Key to the Chiefs success will be their ability to stop Keith Brooks. Brooks enters the contest as the district's top rusher and scorer. He has tallied 11 touchdowns in three games and is averaging 8.8 yards per carry.

Ponies coach Bill Shipman expresses surprise over the Ponies' success. According to Shipman, Andrews

Rams'..er, ex-Rams' Fred Dryer just won't go away

Los Angeles Times

"Last night I saw upon the stair
"A little man who wasn't there
"He wasn't there again today
"Oh, how I wish he'd go away!"

Although he isn't all that little, John Frederick Dryer III, so far as the Rams are concerned, is the man who wasn't there — every day. For awhile, it seemed as if he'd be the modern version of Philip Nolan — the Man Without A Team.

The real Philip Nolan, you will recall, the "Man Without A Country," expressed the treasonous wish he'd never hear the name of his country again, and he got his wish. He sailed around the world, never permitted to land, read about, or hear about America again.

Freddy Dryer's crimes were less subversive than Lieutenant Nolan's. He didn't defect with Aaron Burr. In fact, Dryer played nine impeccable years with the Rams, once scored two safeties in a single game, once returned an enemy pass for a touchdown and once had 14 sacks in a year. He was as patriotic as a flag. He's 35 years old, but has the dietary habits of a grazing elk and the personal habits of a Benedictine monk. There's not an ounce of fat on him.

IN HIS private life, Freddy was always a bit of a Bolshevik except he was not a guy to buy the party line of anyone till he personally tested it. Freddy marched to his own flute. No one ever saw him down in the mouth. He started, played, and finished the game with a grin. He got to the quarterback the way a leopard would get to a zebra, not a buffalo to the water.

Freddy made $220,000 a year chasing quarterbacks. Those who know him best say the jewelers and the foreign car dealers got very little of it. A used van was all Freddy required for transportation.

In 1975, the year after he had the 14 sacks, Freddy found himself a free agent. "Me and John Riggins," he recalls. Adds Freddy: "I went to a couple other football teams and they made me good offers, a helluva lot more money than the Rams offered. But C.R. (for the late Carroll Rosenbloom, then owner of the Rams) couldn't stand to have someone walk out on him. It was like it was a personal rebuke and he said, 'What will it take?' And I said I was giving up a half a million dollars to stay with the Rams, so I wanted a no-cut, no-trade without my written permission contract and a guaranteed spot on the roster. C.R. understood what free agency was all about. He gave me those conditions.

"ON THE day after the Super Bowl last year, Coach Malavasi called me in and said 'I want you on my football team.' I thought 'That's good, because that's where I'm gonna be.'

"In May, Malavasi says, 'Well, we're gonna move Cody (Jones) to right end. But he has to beat you out for the position. We're not giving it to him.' I thought 'Great! Fair enough! Then I had as good a training camp as I ever had. Ask anybody. Ask Cody. Nobody beat me out.

"Well, 2 1/2 weeks ago, Malavasi just hands my job to Cody! Just hands it to him! He calls me in and says, 'Well, we're going with seven defensive linemen.' I said 'What does that make me 8th?' He says 'We're gonna put you on waivers.' So I sat back and let him try. I was having my fun by then, too.

"Then, (Don) Klosterman (the general manager) calls me in and says 'Well, you better get over here and sign these papers that will let us fire you.' I said 'I don't know what is wrong with you people, read your contract.' Then, Malavasi comes out and says his firing is final and Fred Dryer is too dumb to know when to retire.

"THAT THURSDAY was a night game with the Vikings and they sent me a letter saying, 'Don't come out, don't suit up, don't expect to play.' Then, I get this telegram from their attorney (Joe Cotchett) saying 'If you don't show up, you're in violation of your contract, we will conclude it was your side discretion to walk out on your teammates.' Talk about audibilizing on the line of scrimmage! They also said they wanted me to get back to practice or my contract was void. Yet, the coaches didn't want me at practice!"

The situation was so ridiculous, Freddy loved it. "I said 'Can't all you people do anything but stand around the piano at George's and sing?' I told them 'I'm living up to my contract. You guys not only hand my job away, but you bring an early end to my football career. You're costing me a great deal of money. You're chopping my livelihood. Who will want me after this? If you want to do this with a little taste and dignity, just give me an additional year's salary and I'll go."

The Rams were not in the market for that much taste and dignity. So they elected to ignore the little big man on the stair who wasn't there but who wouldn't go away either. So their investment shouldn't be a total waste, Freddy turned cheerleader on the sidelines. The cheers he led were mostly for himself. The fans hung signs "Malavasi Is All Wet, He Needs A Good Dryer!"

IN THE original "Man Without a Country," Philip Nolan spent his life on shipboard for 55 years forbidden to hear the name of his country, mentions of which would be clipped from newspapers or books before he read them. But, Freddy is free to read Sports Illustrated, The Times, or watch the NFL Today, so far as I know, and last week, they even let him get in a few plays. Still, even though he's not like Edward Everett Hale's tragi-hero and is not confined to a war ship in the Gulf of Aden or even Catalina, it's probably best that you not mention the Rams in his presence, anyway. You'd probably best clip any items about Malavasi, Georgia Frontiere or Klosterman. Freddy doesn't swear much. But, when he does, he can be very inventive.

Displeased Bear slaps some Alabama wrists

(Compiled from R-T wires)

Bear Bryant said in August he planned to "stop worrying and frowning and enjoy this season." It is disciplining more players than in any of his other 23 years as the Alabama coach. "It's a little unusual to have this many discipline problems during the season. Actually, it's not all that big a problem, and only a few people are involved. They are not guilty of any bad things, but it keeps us from having a football team."

Bryant has suspended four top players, runners Linnie Patrick, Earl Collins and Charley Williams and All-SEC linebacker Thomas Boyd. Last time Bryant suspended a star was in 1966 when quarterback Ken Stabler got in his doghouse. Another of his great quarterbacks, Joe Namath, missed two games at the end of the 1963 season for violating training rules.

Jack Nicklaus, who hasn't won in a year, will get his final chance in the Hall of Fame classic at Pinehurst, N.C. this week. "Actually, I've played pretty well at times this year," Nicklaus said, "Overall, I've played better this year than I did last. My money-winnings are up and I played about the same number of tournaments. I've played better on a weekly basis than I did last year. The difference is that I just didn't have a week this year like I had at the Open and PGA last year," two titles Jack won in 1980.

Nothridge, Calif., State; Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo; Cal Poly-Pomona; Santa Clara and Portland State have agreed to form and NCAA Division II football conference. All are currently grid independents. The new league said it had adopted academic standards in excess of those demanded by the NCAA.

New Orleans Saints Coach Bum Phillips was kept in the hospital for further testing after complaining of chills and fever of 105. "Nothing they've done so far has turned up anything," said Rusty Kasmiarsky, the Saints' PR director. "The only thing they found was a lot of 'ornery.' I'd hate to be the doctor trying to keep him quiet."

Bill Capece, who set a record of 104 points by a kicker for Florida State in 1980 and was cut by Houston, has been signed by Tampa Bay, after Gary Yepremian was placed on waivers. Larry Swider, a punter waived by St. Louis, also was signed by the Bucs. This marked the third time in three years Yepremian, 37, has been waived for a younger kicker, this time after "low and short" kickoffs in successive losses earned coach John McKay's displeasure.

Bjorn Borg, Sandy Mayer, Adriano Panatta, Corrado Barazzutti, Vijay Amritraj and Tomas Smid will compete in the City of Naples tennis tournament Oct. 16-18. A 50-year-old truck driver was charged with careless driving after an accident which resulted in the death of former world motorcycle champion Mike Hallwood at Portway, Eng. March 21. Grete Waitz, women's world marathon record holder, will run in the 12th New York City 26.2 mile Marathon Oct. 25.

Electrical Geophysics: Increase Your Drilling Success Ratio.

Extensive research has given Indesco a complete package of highly sophisticated electrical geophysical data acquisition tools and techniques for oil and gas exploration.

Originally proven in geothermal exploration, electrical studies work in poor or no-record seismic areas. Indesco's electrical methods are especially effective in volcanic areas and areas of low seismic energy and severe weathering. Total costs can range as low as one third the cost of seismic exploration. Other benefits include the absence of heavy equipment and shot holes, and smaller, efficient crews. Operating in profile using standard seismic cable and roll-along, Indesco obtains rapid field coverage. With specialized software for understandable analysis and expert interpretation, Indesco is the full service geophysical company with proven wildcat success.

Reggie happy, George angry over brushback pitch

AP Sports Writer

Two of his teammates carried Reggie Jackson from the field. He was clapping his hands together and laughing.

The reaction of New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner several hours later was much less joyful.

"From here on, any pitcher who throws at a Yankee batter will be served with a lawsuit within 24 hours or during his next visit to New York—be it for pleasure or for work," Steinbrenner warned.

Steinbrenner's statement was prompted by two brushback pitches and a fight between Jackson and Cleveland Indians pitcher John Denny over a brushback pitch Wednesday night.

After being knocked down and striking out in the second inning, Jackson postured angrily at Denny, and both benches spilled onto the field.

In the fourth inning, Jackson slugged a two-run homer off Denny, contributing to the Yankees' 6-1 rout of the Indians. After circling the bases, Jackson shouted and charged Denny, who had walked halfway from the mound to home plate.

JACKSON KNOCKED Denny to the ground, grabbing him around the neck, and the benches and the bullpen cleared once again. After Jackson was carried from the field by Bobby Brown and Oscar Gamble, both he and Denny were ejected.

In a slugfest of a different sort, the Oakland A's clobbered Toronto 6-0 behind the five-hit pitching of Rick Langford to move into first place in the AL West by two percentage points over Kansas City.

Benefitting from the Royals' 6-2 loss to Minnesota, Oakland became the only first-half winner in the major leagues to currently lead its division in the second-half of the strike-torn season.

Jackson said Denny acted as if he was daring him to act.

"That's the way I looked at it," Jackson said. "It looked like he was almost standing on the dirt near home plate. It looked like he wanted to slap me or something."

CLEVELAND Manager Dave Garcia spoke in behalf of Denny, who normally does not talk with reporters.

"I don't think that Denny tried to hit Jackson," he said. "I thought he was trying to move him away from the plate. I think it was unprofessional of Reggie and unprofessional of the umpire (home plate umpire Dale Ford) to warn my pitcher."

The Yankees already led 4-1 when Jackson hit his homer, only his 12th of the year. Yankees right-hander Rick Reuschel, 4-2, was the beneficiary of runs in the first two innings. The Yankees scored two more in the third on Brown's two-run single.

A's 6, Blue Jays 0
For the second straight night, Ex-Midland Cub Keith Drumright provided the lion's share of the Oakland offense. He drove in the winning run in Tuesday night's victory and had three RBI for Oakland Wednesday night as the A's completed a three-game sweep of Toronto.

Twins 4, Royals 2
Gary Ward had three hits and scored three runs, and Dave Engle added a solo homer in the first inning to help move the Twins within 2½ games of Oakland.

Ward also drove in a run with a triple in the fifth, scoring on Engle's sacrifice fly.

Pete Redfern, 7-8, and Doug Corbett combined on a seven-hitter with Corbett picking up save No. 15.

The Twins have won two of the first three games in this four-game set that will be completed today.

Orioles 1, Tigers 0
Dennis Martinez became the major league's first 14-game winner with a three-hitter, and Jim Dwyer's leadoff homer in the ninth powered Baltimore over the Tigers. The loss snapped a four-game Detroit winning streak and trimmed the Tigers lead in the AL East to a half game over Boston.

Martinez, who has lost four, won his ninth straight, walking seven and striking out six. Martinez has not lost at Memorial Stadium in Baltimore since Aug. 16, 1980.

Dwyer's homer, his fourth, made a loser of Dan Petry, 9-8, who went into

Gary Alenson slugged a grand slam homer, the second of his career, to key Boston's eight-run rally in the seventh inning.

With the bases loaded, Boston's Dave Stapleton walked to force in a run that made it 4-4, and Alenson's slam on a 3-2 delivery from Reggie Cleveland snapped the tie. After Dwight Evans, who homered in the first, singled in another run, Carl Yastrzemski completed the inning's scoring with a two-run single.

Mariners 2, Rangers 1
Seattle shortstop Paul Serna homered to start a two-run rally in the seventh inning and make amends for a fourth-inning error that allowed Texas' only run to score.

Glenn Abbott, 4-7, and Shane Rawley combined on a four-hitter for the Mariners as Rawley earned his seventh save.

After Serna's homer, Dave Henderson singled, raced to third on a single by Terry Bulling and scored as Julio Cruz grounded into a double play.

Angels 7, White Sox 3
Brian Downing slugged a three-run homer and Mike Witt pitched a seven-hitter as California downed Chicago.

Downing's third-inning homer, his ninth, was the first off White Sox starter Steve Trout in the second season, covering 72 innings.

Witt, 6-9, broke a personal three-game losing streak.

Matthews knocks Cards out of 1st

By WILLIAM K. BARNARD

AP Sports Writer

Gary Matthews, whose sixth homer this month helped knock the St. Louis Cardinals out of first place, doesn't relish having to take his hot bat to cold Montreal for the National League East playoffs.

"It's just so cold up there in Montreal," Matthews said after his two-run homer and RBI single paced the Philadelphia Phillies to a 9-4 triumph over the Cardinals Wednesday night. "It makes it a little bit harder to get up. I think really, within a short series, (the Expos) would have the advantage."

The Phillies, who are automatically in the division playoffs because they finished in first place in the East before the players' strike, will meet the second-half winner starting Oct. 6. Montreal now leads by one-half game.

After reflecting on the question of who the Phillies would rather play, Matthews said, "Actually who you play is not significant in that anybody represents a threat in a short series. It was proven last week when St. Louis lost three games in New York."

WHAT CONCERNS Matthews and Manager Dallas Green is how the Phillies, 4½ games out of first in the second half, are playing.

"We've just got to be more consistent," Matthews said. "We're not really playing the way we're capable of playing."

"We're going hard into the playoffs trying to prove that we can maintain some kind of consistency," said Green. "I keep telling them we can't turn our talent on and off like a light bulb."

"We'll be all right if we start hitting," said Cards Manager Whitey Herzog after Wednesday's loss to the Phillies, St. Louis' fifth in six games. "Tonight we got out of the game early."

"We've got 11 games to go. If we win seven, we'll be all right. If we don't, we won't."

DICKIE NOLES, 2-2, pitched six innings and allowed four hits for the victory. Left-hander Sparky Lyle worked the final three innings for his second save.

Philadelphia scored four runs in the fourth inning. Pete Rose's two-run single off John Martin, 6-5, preceded Matthews' two-run homer, only his eighth of the season despite his hot September.

Matthews also singled home a run in the fifth, Dick Davis belted his second homer in the sixth and Mike Schmidt hit a three-run double in the ninth for the Phillies, who had 13 hits.

Noles, who spent half the season in the minor leagues, pitched a one-hit shutout through five innings, but pinch-hitter Steve Braun and Garry Templeton both doubled home runs for St. Louis in the sixth.

Expos 3, Pirates 2
Jerry White hit a solo homer with one out in the ninth off Rick Rhoden to give Montreal the victory and a half-game lead in the East.

The Expos had tied the score 2-2 in the eighth on Larry Parrish's RBI single after the Pirates took a 2-1 lead in the sixth on Tim Lincecum's sacrifice fly.

Jason Thompson hit his 14th homer for Pittsburgh, his third in three games and fourth in five contests.

Braves 3, Astros 1

Atlanta has been shut out four times in the second half of the season when Rick Mahler was the starter, but against Houston the right-hander made sure it wouldn't happen again.

Besides pitching a three-hitter, Mahler, 6-6, hit a two-run double in the fourth inning. The Braves also scored in the second on Matt Snider's RBI single.

Reds 5, Padres 1

Cincinnati cut first-place Houston's margin to two games in the NL West by beating San Diego as George Foster and Junior Kennedy both drove in a pair of runs.

Foster keyed a three-run first inning for the Reds with a two-run double and Kennedy knocked him in with a single. Kennedy also got an RBI on a grounder in the fifth.

Frank Pastore, 4-7, allowed all six of San Diego's hits in 7 1/3 innings before Joe Price got the last five outs for his fourth save.

Cubs 2, Mets 1

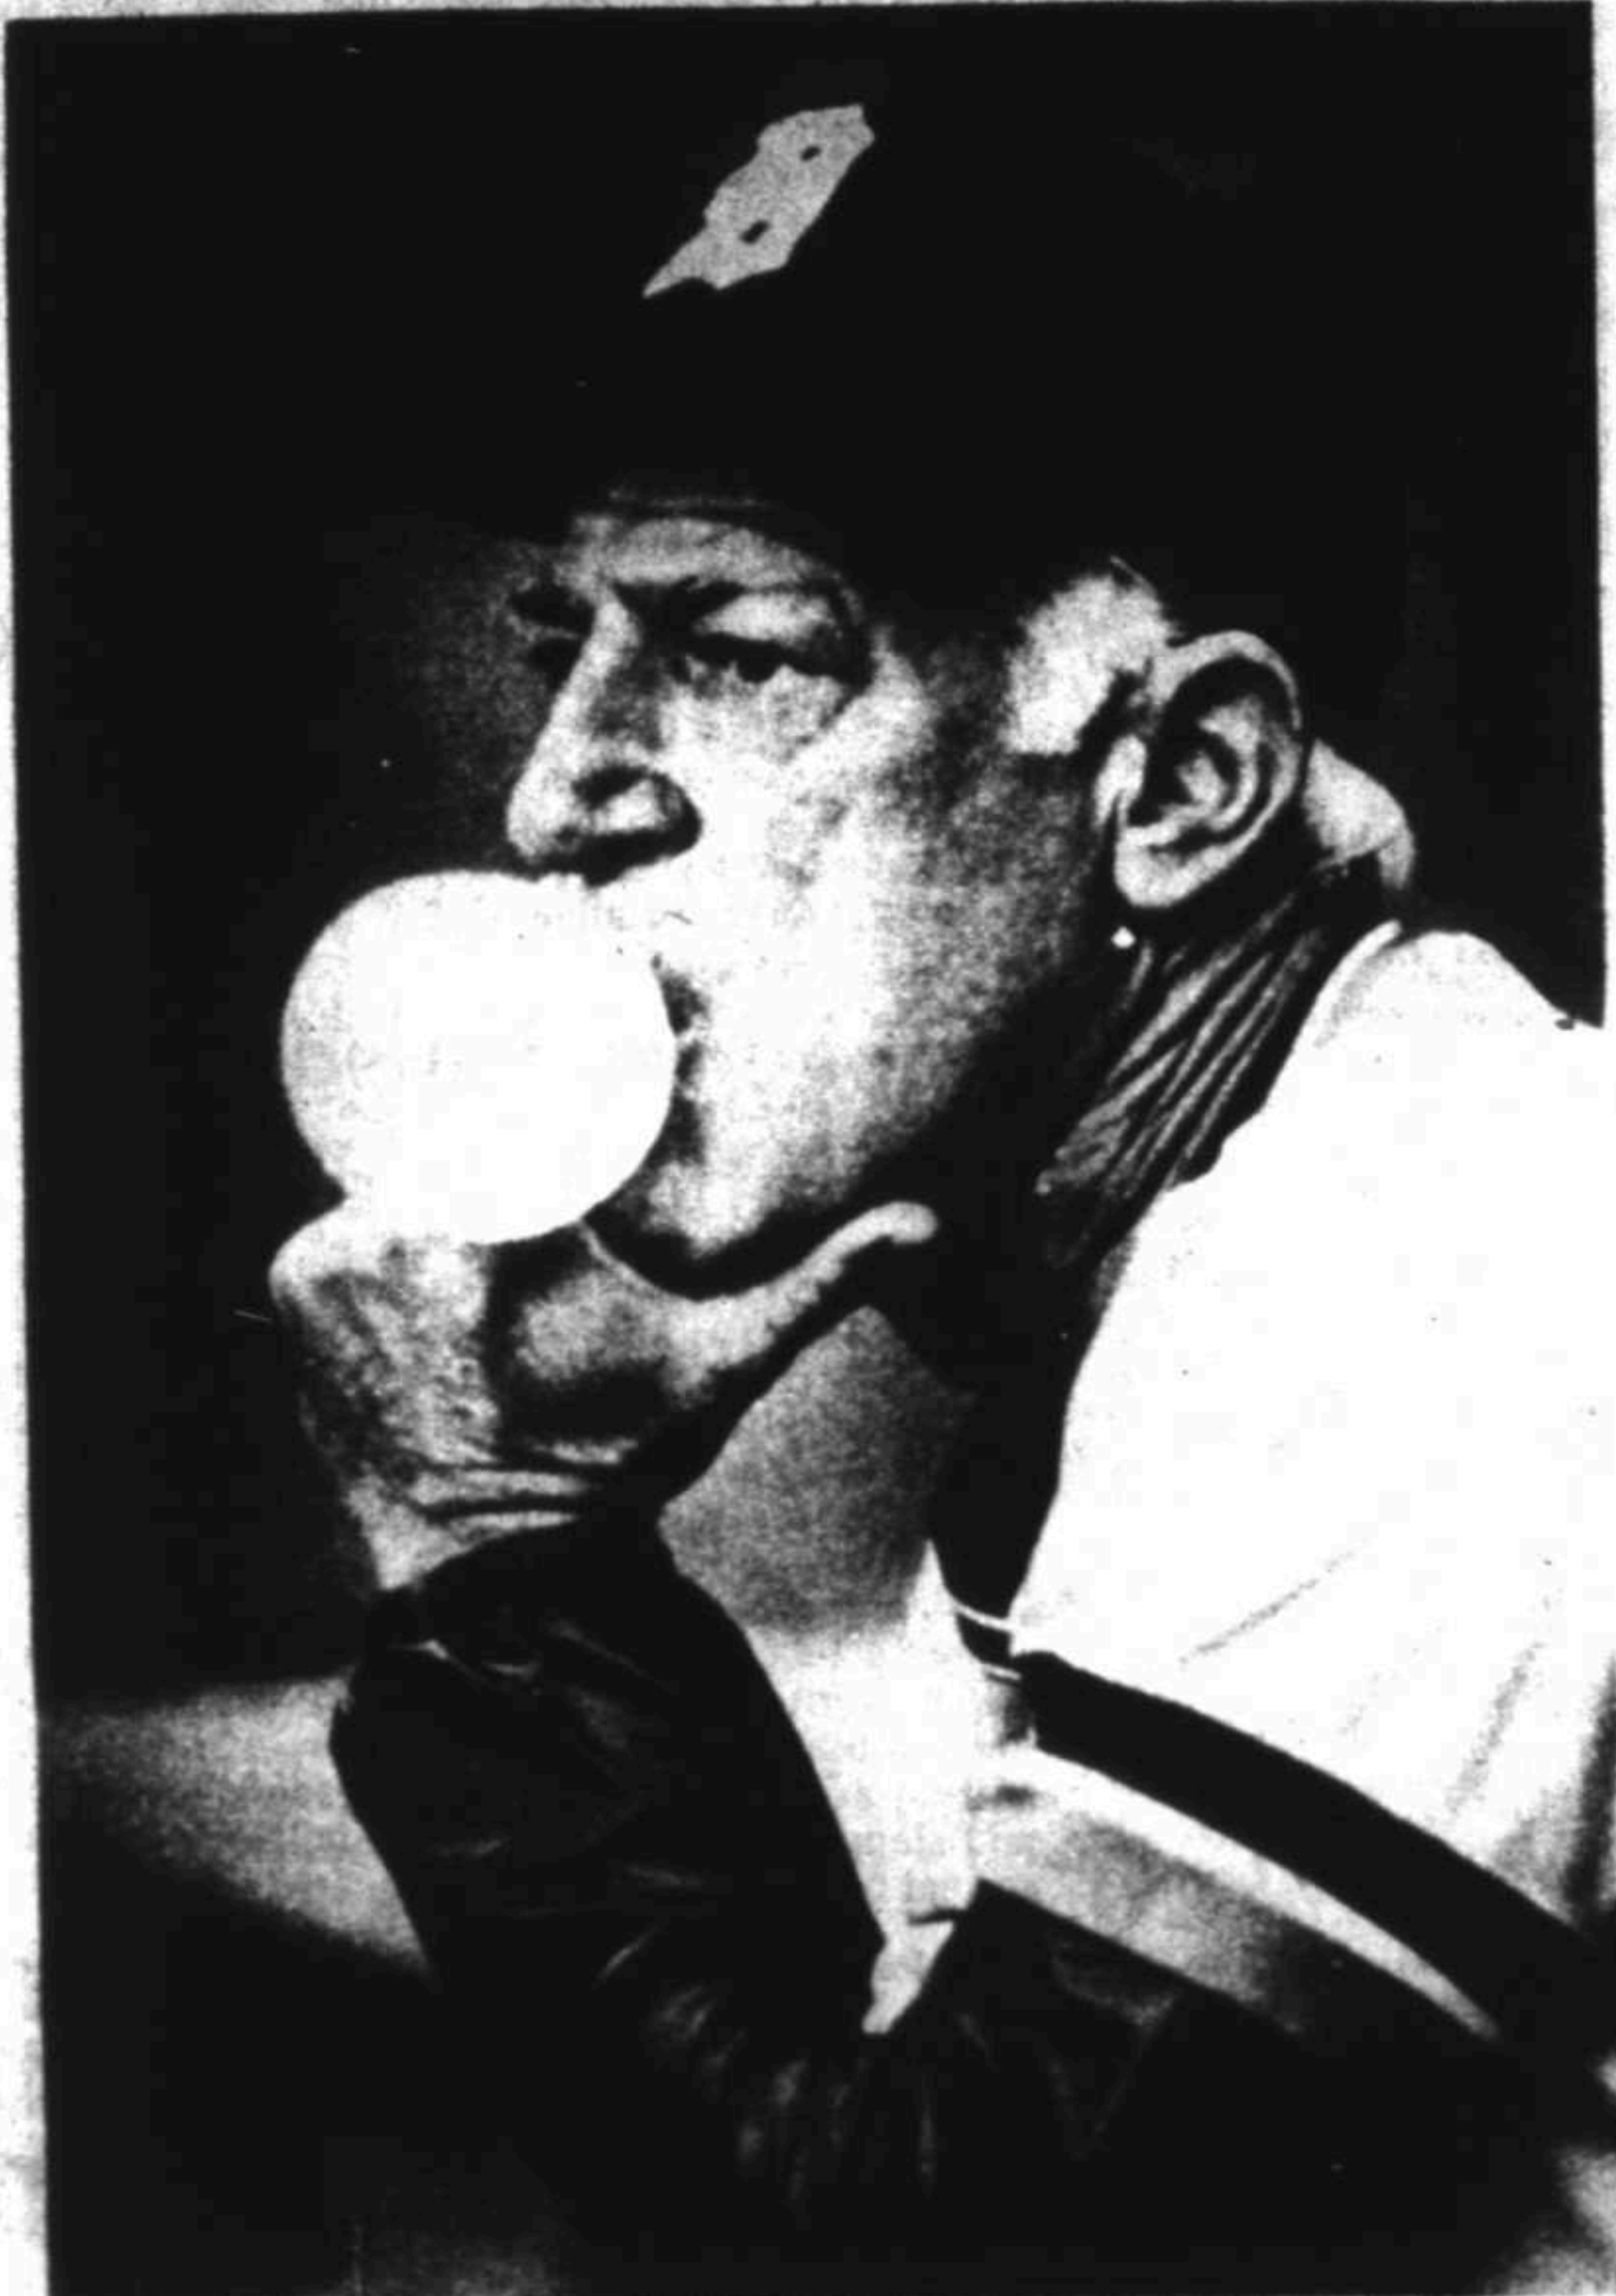

Ex-Midland Cub Mike Krukow, 8-9, pitched a two-hitter for eight innings and Dick Tidrow bailed him out of a ninth-inning jam to keep Chicago ahead of New York.

The Cubs scored both of their runs in the fourth inning off Ed Lynch, 4-4, when Ivan DeJesus tripled and scored with catcher John Stearns dropped a throw to the plate after a rundown. Steve Henderson hit a run-scoring single later in the inning.

Giants 4, Dodgers 4
Enos Cabell climaxed a four-run sixth inning for San Francisco with a two-run single and Joe Morgan hit a solo homer as Los Angeles lost its fifth in a row.

The Giants broke a 4-4 tie in the sixth as Milt May and Johnnie LeMaster singled in runs before Cabell's hit.

Gary Lavelle won his first game in seven decisions this year by getting the last two outs in the sixth after the Dodgers tied the score on Rick Monday's homer and a groundout.

Detroit Tigers manager Sparky Anderson shows the pressure of the American League pennant race as he plops his bubble gum. If Sparky doesn't seem worried, maybe it's because he's been here before.

Martin's boycott threat not getting much support

By TOM CANAVAN

Associated Press Writer

Billy Martin's threat to boycott baseball's playoffs because he and his Oakland coaches would not share in revenues from the divisional mini-series isn't drawing much support from fellow managers and coaches. But that doesn't mean they all disagree with the controversial A's skipper.

Martin made the threat Monday in Toronto when he learned that he and his coaches would not receive a players' share for the divisional playoffs even though they pay dues to the Players' Association.

Under terms of the agreement that settled baseball's 50-day strike, club officials and the players agreed that managers and coaches would not share in first-round playoff revenues because they had been paid during the strike.

The players share for the divisional playoffs is 60 percent of the gate receipts for the first three games of the five-game series.

"It wasn't our idea to strike; we didn't want to be penalized," said Martin. "If my coaches are not paid for the playoffs, then we will not participate."

None of the managers questioned Wednesday said he would boycott the playoffs, but some said Martin was right in voicing his dissent. Most also agreed that they didn't care whether they were paid, but added it was their coaches who deserved a player's share of the divisional playoff money.

"I give Billy credit for speaking about it," said Sparky Anderson, whose Detroit Tigers are clinging to first place in the American League East in the second season.

"He shows me something by speaking out on behalf of something that's not right."

New York Mets manager Joe Torre echoed Anderson's statement.

"I don't think it's right that the coaches shouldn't get a share," said Torre. "They're grossly underpaid."

Baltimore Orioles Manager Earl Weaver said he felt he didn't deserve a share.

A new look at miracles

About two thousand years ago, lepers, life-time cripples, and the insane were healed by Christ Jesus and many of his followers.

But somehow their accomplishments have not become a natural way of life for most people, who regard them as strictly a phenomena of the past.

The fact is, though, that instances of healing and regeneration through enlightened prayer are going on today. Every day.

You can hear some outstanding examples — and how they were brought about — in a talk by Ade P. Mondino, C.S., of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship.

Toxic pesticides worry officials

By JERRY LONGMAN
(c) 1981, Dallas Times Herald
ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Wildlife officials from 17 states, concerned that high levels of a toxic pesticide found in Montana ducks and geese could threaten hunting seasons across the West, Wednesday reviewed efforts to determine the breadth of the health risk.

Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico officials have begun testing waterfowl for traces of the pesticide endrin. A central information center will be set up by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Agency office in Denver to provide sampling information to states along the Central and Pacific migratory routes the birds follow.

Montana's hunting season for ducks and geese is scheduled to open Oct. 3. The state's fish and game commission will meet Sept. 25 to determine whether to cancel the season. By that time, officials said, tests should be completed on 50 or more waterfowl that have been killed and sent to state labs. Other states, including Texas, will monitor developments in Montana before deciding whether to cancel their seasons.

THE TEXAS duck hunting season — scheduled to open Oct. 27 in the western part of the state and Nov. 7 in the eastern section — might be delayed or canceled if biologists determine that the migrating ducks are so contaminated that they would cause illness if eaten.

Other states facing potential problems include the Dakotas, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Utah, Nevada, California, Idaho, Washington, Colorado, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming and New Mexico.

Texas pesticide experts said Wednesday that endrin, which was sprayed over 122,000 acres of winter wheat in Montana last fall, is an obsolete pesticide and not effective enough to justify the environmental harm it does.

"It's really not a popular pesticide.

Other products do a better job," said David Ivie, director of agriculture and environmental services at the Texas Department of Agriculture. "If applicators can find a safer product that does the job, they use it."

Tests on nine ducks in a section of Montana found high levels of endrin after heavy applications of the pesticide by Montana winter wheat farmers battling an infestation of army cutworms. Endrin, a chlorinated hydrocarbon, is similar to DDT but is considered 300 times more toxic to birds.

TUESDAY AND Wednesday, Montana wildlife experts met with officials from those states at the International Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies convention in Albuquerque.

In states that birds from Montana fly to and through, the upland bird season has been allowed to continue with a warning that hunters should thoroughly skin the birds, cut away the fat and eat no more than one bird every other day.

"We've met with all the states along the flyways," said Ron Marcoux, assistant director of Montana's Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks. Marcoux and officials from other states will work with the Environmental Protection Agency in coming weeks to determine what levels of consumption of endrin are tolerable and what percentage of the toxin the birds retain as they migrate southward. Officials have been testing in accordance with the livestock and poultry limit, 3 parts per million for meat sold in stores. Tests on the nine birds in Montana found levels of endrin between .68 and 1.2 parts per million of endrin.

"We heard from one of the federal people that birds slough it off pretty well by the time they get here if they are active during migration," said Harold Olson, director of New Mexico's Department of Game and Fish, which has shot six ducks for testing purposes.

After misapplications of endrin were discovered, Montana wildlife agents began testing deer and antelope. Only one deer was found with levels exceeding federal limits, Marcoux said.

NEXT THE testing was broadened to include the grouse and partridge, then ducks and geese. The first six geese sampled contained levels higher than the EPA allowable daily intake of .0002 milligrams per kilogram of body weight. The three ducks tested contained endrin amounts several hundred percent higher than acceptable levels, Marcoux said.

The Environmental Protection Agency has placed strict limitations on the use of endrin and other chlorinated hydrocarbons because of their tendency to accumulate in the soil and endanger wildlife.

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission has set 1981-82 waterfowl hunting seasons and bag limits with very few changes from the previous year's regulations.

An increased bag limit for dark geese in the eastern portion of the state was adopted with one change. Hunters will be allowed to take one Canada and one white-fronted goose, where last year they were limited to one Canada and one white-front. Possession limit for dark geese is twice the daily limit.

Hunters are reminded that a new $5 state waterfowl stamp, created by the 67th Texas Legislature, is required for all waterfowl hunting in Texas in addition to a valid hunting license. The stamps are available from department offices and at hunting license outlets. Federal law also requires hunters to purchase a federal migratory waterfowl stamp, available at most post offices.

ALL WATERFOWL regulations will be published in the department's migratory game bird regulations supplement, available at hunting license outlets by late September.

Duck bag limits are based on a 100-point system, with values assigned species and sexes of ducks. All point values for the 1981-82 seasons will be the same as in 1980-81, with the exception of placing black ducks on the 70-point list.

The duck and coot season for the eastern portion of the state will be Nov. 7 through Nov. 29 and Dec. 12 through Jan. 17, 1982. In the High Plains Mallard Management Unit this season will be Oct. 27 through Jan. 17, 1982. The unit is west of a line formed by U.S. Highway 277 from Del Rio to Abilene, State Highway 351 from Abilene to its junction with U.S. Highway 180 near Albany, then north on U.S. Highway 283 to Vernon and then on U.S. Highway 183 to the Texas-Oklahoma border.

DUCK POINT values are: Canvasbacks, 100; hen mallards, Mexican-like ducks, black ducks, mottled ducks, wood ducks, hooded mergansers and redheads, 70; all teal species, pintails, gadwalls, scaups, shovelers, wigeon and mergansers (except hooded), 10 points. All other species and sexes are 20 points state wide.

The daily bag limit is reached when the point value of any birds taken reaches or exceeds 100 points. The season is closed on masked ducks, black-bellied and fulvous tree ducks.

The goose season east of U.S. Highway 81 will be Nov. 7, 1981, through Jan. 17, 1982. Daily bag limits in that area will be five light (snow, blue, Ross) geese plus one Canada and one white-fronted goose. Possession limit is twice the daily limit.

West of Highway 81, the goose season will be Oct. 27, 1981 through Jan. 17, 1982. Daily bag limit will be five geese, possession limit is 20. The daily bag limit cannot include more than two dark (Canada and white-fronted) geese, and the possession limit may not include more than four dark geese.

SHOOTING hours for ducks and geese statewide are 30 minutes before sunrise to sunset, except during the Sept. 12-20 teal duck season, when the hours are sunrise to sunset.

The sandhill crane season also is basically unchanged from 1980-81. In Zone A (which includes roughly the Trans-Pecos, Permian Basin and Western Panhandle-South Plains) the season will be Oct. 31 through Jan. 31, 1982. Daily bag limit is three, possession limit is six in both zones.

The taking of sandhill or little brown cranes is illegal outside the two designated zones. A special permit, issued free upon written request to the department is required of all sandhill crane hunters.

OTHER SEASON and bag limits are: snipe, Nov. 1 — Feb. 14, 1982, bag limit eight, possession limit 16, shooting hours are one-half hour before sunrise to sunset; woodcock, Dec. 12 — Feb. 14, 1982, bag limit five, possession limit 10, shooting hours are one-half hour before sunrise to sunset.

Waterfowl hunters, those hunting ducks and/or geese, don't forget the two waterfowl stamps, state and federal, plus a valid Texas hunting license.

Ireland steals show in 'Manions' series

By HARRIET VAN HORNE
Newsday

To appreciate "The Manions of America," the first important mini-series of the new season, you must understand the ancient grievances of the Irish. You must know about the Great Famine of the 1840s, when the peasants ate tree bark and clay and every day saw another crude pine coffin carried to the churchyard.

In one decade the Great Famine sent a third of the Irish to their graves and 1 million more to a new life in America.

The Manions, who are the ragged, hungry O'Manions when our story begins, somehow made it to Philadelphia. But what a struggle! Rory, eldest son and our handsome hero, has shot a British soldier and accidentally caused Rory's twin brother's death. Rory also has lost his heart to Rachel Clement, daughter of the landlord who lives in a great Georgian house. The two families, gentry and peasant, are forever entwined as Rory's little sister, Deirdre, loses her heart to Rachel's soldier-brother, David.

IN PHILADELPHIA Rory rises from day laborer to munitions maker and Civil War hero. It's a densely plotted saga, and it will fill six hours of prime time starting Wednesday night on ABC and continuing through Friday.

In their migration from the old sod to the bricks of Philadelphia, the Manions and the Clements suffer every tragedy and indignity known to soap opera. There are miscarriages, factory explosions, loveless marriages, infidelity, long-absent lovers returned from the dead and a vital letter tossed willfully into the fire. Rory's little brother Sean, lost on the docks of Philadelphia as the family disembarks in 1847 or thereabouts, turns up 20 years later as a wandering Confederate soldier and Pony Express rider.

Coincidence isn't simply long-armed in "The Manions" — it's an octopus. At every turn there is a sense of heavy manipulation, as in bad 19th-century novels. Characters are matched and paired and their lives neatly squared. Loose ends are tied up in bow knots. At times it's all too pat, too predictable. Were it not for some sterling performances — notably by Pierce Brosnan and Kate Mulgrew — and superb cinematography — ah, the lush, green hills of Ireland — "The Manions" would go a very lame journey.

The soap-opera touches are, alas, inevitable. Agnes Nixon, who created the very fine series, "All My Children," is credited with conceiving "The Manions." As a concept, it certainly has appeal. It's the slow development of the story, heaping one incredible coincidence atop another, that dims our pleasure.

Rosemary Anne Sisson, whose credits include some episodes in "Upstairs, Downstairs," wrote the six-hour drama and the paperback novel of the same title. She is a clever, inventive writer, but she piles on her plot a bit thick. After the third or fourth incredible coincidence we begin to drift back to real life.

THE OPENING sequence Wednesday night is perhaps the weakest. The Irish brogue is so heavy at times that the characters might as well be speaking Swahili. And too much of the action has a "stagey" look. We must watch the burial service for a child, dead of the terrible hunger, as English huntsmen go thundering past in their red coats. It sets the tone, and the hunt is at once cruel and arrogant. It's the ragged little funeral that looks unreal, with the coffin lid askew and the mourners looking like summer-stock extras. The juxtaposition should shock us — but it's too neat.

There's infinite pathos — perhaps too much — in the scene that follows. In humble cottage Moira O'Manion — the family drops the "O" in America to raise their credit rating — is laboring to bring forth a son. A tipsy midwife, a sheepish husband and a passel of small, terrified children monitor the screams and the prayers. When the baby is finally born, the dying mother gasps, "You're the strong one, Rory, look after the baby. Call him Sean."

Well, it's not Rory who carelessly misplaces baby Sean on the Philadelphia wharf. It is beautiful Deirdre, who was delirious with "the fayer." When Sean is gathered to the family bosom once more — in the last chapter — he certainly looks familiar. And why not? He is played by the actor who was Rory's twin (the one impaled on a spike) back in Act One. Nicholas Hammond does nicely with both parts. But again, our belief has been assaulted.

On the positive side, much of "The Manions" rings as true as the ping of a spoon on Waterford glass. The love of Rachel and Rory is never in doubt. And the intimate scenes between them, while intense, are never vulgar. These are lovers we care about. It would seem, therefore, that scripter Sisson goes too far when she has Rory seducing the nubile daughter of his best friend. This sequence is embarrassing, and it greatly mars our perception of the adoring husband Rory has become.

ONE ALSO ACCEPTS, without reservation, Rory's fierce devotion to his homeland, as well as his passionate hatred of the British. Yes, he married a daughter of the gentry. But he's a rebel and a patriot to the end, sending guns to Ireland and forever talking of a "rising" that will unhorse the British.

Another plot strand has lovely Deirdre marrying Caleb, a rich, kind Philadelphia businessman. He clothes her in scarlet and other delights, besides teaching her to read. She still mourns David, Rachel's brother, reported killed in India. Rachel, in an action completely out of character, has destroyed the letter from an army chum saying that David is very much alive. Author Sisson gets out of this dilemma by killing off Caleb. Somehow, it doesn't wash. But Linda Purl and David Soul try hard. Soul looks exactly right as an 18th-century nabob. Simon MacCorkindale, on the other hand, looks utterly wrong as a British army officer. Too exotic.

If there's one figure to be outrageously praised in this enterprise, it is the cinematographer (Hector Figueroa for the opening hours, Lamar Boren for Part II, Frank Watts for the two-hour conclusion). All the filming was done in Ireland, including the Philadelphia sequences.

KNFM to switch to 'Easy Country'

Radio station KNFM, long the Permian Basin's sole source of jazz, classical music and the Big Band sound of the 30s and 40s, announced Wednesday it will soon switch to an "Easy Country" format.

"The Permian Basin is growing rapidly," said KNFM General Manager Doug Raab, "and music tastes have changed over the past few years. We have to change along with them. We are going to appeal to a much wider audience with our new Easy Country format."

KNFM was purchased by Citimedia Corp. of Austin earlier this year, and Raab said the station "will continue to provide the variety of information and entertainment programming currently broadcast. Wall Street Journal reports, live stock market reports, network and local news, pro football, American Country Countdown and old-time radio classics.

"The new format will allow us even greater flexibility in special programming. We will try to provide what most of the people want to hear."

Earlier, Raab said there are no plans to change the station's news format under News Director Jesse Grimes.

Hoggard receives college chair

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Dr. Lara G. Hoggard, former director of the Midland-Odesa Symphony Association, has been named the first recipient of the Fuller E. Callaway Chair at Columbus College.

Hoggard began his teaching responsibilities there this fall quarter. Prior to this time he has been with the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill. He has been the William Rand Kenan Jr. Professor of Music there since 1967.

Hoggard's primary responsibility at Columbus College will be teaching choral music at the graduate and undergraduate level and conducting with the college orchestra and choir on a full-time basis as a full professor.

Hoggard, who has been conductor for numerous orchestras and choral groups throughout the U.S. and Europe, helped establish the Midland-Odesa Symphony and Choral, and was director of both groups from 1962-67. He also founded the Midland-Odesa National Young Artist Competition in 1962.

New Barris show demeaning to women

HOLLYWOOD — Every big TV producer has a trademark. For Chuck Barris, it is providing an arena for people to demean themselves. Through such series as "The Dating Game," "The Newlywed Game," "The Gong Show," "The $1.98 Beauty Show" and "Three's a Crowd," Barris demonstrated during the 1960 and 1970s that just as there were people who would wear pink tights to a funeral, there were people who would do anything to get on TV.

They proved it by becoming contestants on Barris shows.

If his shows degraded the participants and brought out their worst, Barris could argue that at least they were bad. Very, very bad.

How else can you describe Bachelorettes One, Two and Three competing for a stud with enough medals around his neck to sink a whale?

Or a couple disclosing to a TV audience the time and place of their first... encounter?

It's one thing for a singer to perform on TV, a little tackier if he does it on "The Gong Show" in a nun's habit.

Well, that was Barris, until last year when he announced that he was withdrawing his shows from production because of a glutted syndication market. In other words, Barris was de-schlocking himself until the climate for schlock improved.

Apparently it has improved, for now Barris is back with a couple of game shows, one of which is a tawdry number called "Leave It to the Women." It's a throwback to "Leave It to the Girls," a series in the early days of TV in which a panel of females grilled a male guest.

In the Barris version, guests are not limited to men, and the only concession to the modern female is the change in the title to "Women" from "Girls."

The host of "Women" is Stephanie Edwards.

The four-woman panel alternates weekly: Phyllis Newman, June Lockhart and comedienne Sandy Sprung sat in last week, the premiere week, and the fourth panelist has changed each day.

It's amazing how some things manage to get on the air.

Robot entertains airport audience

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — He chatted with admirers, tipped the sky-cap and professed love to a ticket agent and a metal detector. Then with a blink of his lights, the most high-powered business traveler Newark International Airport ever had was on his plane to Miami.

The first person to cross his path was a stunned-looking ticket agent handling passengers for Eastern Airlines Flight 7.

With lights flashing from his head, Sico, a 6-foot-1 aluminum and fiberglass robot, booked two seats in first class, saying his companion would be along shortly.

Then, to the shock and delight of the passengers in the airport Monday, the robot said to a passing ticket agent:

"You are beautiful and I will never forget you. I mean that from the bottom of my main transistor."

As the onlookers hurried to take pictures, Sico told a man trying to change film rolls: "I know how difficult cameras are to handle. I used to take one. I think her name was Polaroid. Day was the best."

Off the robot rolled on its four wheels down the boarding ramp and into a waiting plane. Sico took a seat in row 1-A, and was followed shortly by the rest of the Miami-bound passengers, including Robert Doornick of New York, the man behind the machine.

Sico is one of four robots, worth an estimated $250,000 each, created by International Robotics Inc., a 5-year-old New York corporation. Doornick said his company is developing the robots for use in research laboratories. Among other things, the robots are designed to handle dangerous chemicals.

The company also hopes the robots may be useful in coaxing autistic children to communicate.

To get research

money, the corporation leases the robots for promotional campaigns. Sico was on his way to a performance before automotive executives at the Miami Convention Center. The airport performances also help publicize the machines.

The robots travel with controllers such as Doornick, whose clothing converts buttons for 30 commands, including walking, moving backward and arms and emitting appropriate laughs, noises and sentences.

Some of the speech is recorded, but Doornick can transmit sounds to a computer in the robot by speaking softly into a hidden microphone in his shirt cuff.

Pope's social outlook more liberal

BY BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent
Hearst Feature Service

ROME — Frequently criticized in the past for being too conservative in his social outlook, Pope John Paul II appears to be moving toward the left.

Vatican observers detect a change in the pontiff's views since the attempt to assassinate him last May, although they do not link one with the other. This month's 110-page encyclical on the condition of the world's working classes in seen as a watershed of his pontificate.

For the first time, his criticisms were directed more strongly against the wrongs of capitalism than against Marxism. A papal aide described the encyclical as a "ringing assertion of the rights of labor against the rights of property."

Experts claim that past criticism of the Polish-born pope's theological and social conservatism was exaggerated. Nevertheless, they agreed that the encyclical represents a swing of emphasis in papal policy, if not in his fundamental attitude.

The pontiff is determined to silence those critics who have accused him of paying too little attention to the social and economic problems of the bulk of humanity in his anxiety to restore the discipline of the Church, the Vatican insider said.

Informants here believe that he has now decided to revert, at least on social matters, to the "liberal" line of his predecessors, John XXIII and Paul VI. Until recently, John Paul was widely considered to represent a perceptible break with these recent popes.

On his foreign tours — most notably, his trip to Central America — and his interventions in Italian politics, the pope has most often expressed views favoring traditional values. While acknowledging the need for economic and social reform, especially in the Third World, he was quick to deplore radical solutions.

For instance, he roundly condemned the so-called "liberation" theology espoused by leftist-leaning priests in Latin America. But his latest encyclical's emphasis is almost wholly on the rights of the working class and the underprivileged. It endorses the idea of "socialized production" — that is, labor's right to a major role in management — and describes unemployment as the prime social evil of our time, taking precedence over all other issues.

The encyclical is actually the first in Vatican history specifically to approve of strikes as a legitimate and primary recourse of workers.

Some observers believe that John Paul has consciously decided to modify his image because he has become aware many Catholics and non-Catholics have begun to regard him as a "reactionary" pope. They said that, while the encyclical probably does not say anything he has not believed right along, it casts an altered light on his public persona which could turn out to be significant in the future.

His "leftward" move could help him in coping with what is known to be his single most preoccupying concern, the Polish crisis.

There is no doubt that his behind-the-scenes influence in that crisis, not only in trying to mediate between the contending factions in Poland itself but in working to prevent Soviet intervention, has been and remains far more important than has been seen from the outside.

Vatican onlookers explained that at least some of the pope's advisers feared his growing reputation as a conservative, no matter how unfair, might play into Moscow's hands.

"The pope's most powerful weapon in dealing with the communists over Poland is psychological and lies in the realm of world propaganda," an informant said. "In the present international climate, a 'liberal' pope has to be regarded as more powerfully armed for such a struggle than one whom much of the world is inclined to dismiss as a 'reactionary.'"

Observers here said that it was not a case of John Paul hypocritically professing a new set of beliefs, but of speaking out more about ideas which he previously tended to subordinate. However, they added, the result is likely to give the world a different impression of him than it has had.

U.N. taskmaster says assembly needs streamlining

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The year-long term of Baron Ruediger von Wehmar as president of the 154-nation General Assembly is over. And with it goes the taskmaster who often admonished delegates to start meetings on time and carry on disruptive conversations somewhere else.

But the West German diplomat got in one last lecture before yielding the president's chair Sept. 15.

The United Nations, he said, "is about to slowly suffocate from too many resolutions, too many meetings, too many subsidiary organs, far too much documentation...How can we attempt to manage crises in this world if we seem unable to manage our own affairs?"

His list of complaints included 168 hours of time lost due to late meeting starts, the squeezing of the equivalent of three years of meeting days into a single year, a profusion of documents that in two years could pave the way to the moon and the spending of funds on social functions that would be better used for "children suffering from hunger and disease."

Von Wehmar, who ranks himself among the United Nations' staunchest boosters, conceded he probably was "furnishing fresh ammunition to the cheap critics of our organization."

In an interview with The Associated Press, he maintained that "there's nothing wrong politically with the United Nations. Quite on the contrary. I would say the United Nations is making tremendous progress in tackling major problems, leaving aside the fact that a great number of them remain unsolved or deadlocked. The mere fact that the international community is addressing itself to problems here is, in my view, a good sign."

But, he added, "the machinery needs a tremendous amount of streamlining...of cutting the fat."

Von Wehmar, 58, speaks a colloquial, American-accented English perfected while a prisoner of war in Colorado and Virginia during World War II.

"I hope I at least started a discussion of where we can cut," Von Wehmar said at a temporary office in the West German mission where he had served for seven years as its chief U.N. delegate. A former journalist who was chief government spokesman under former Chancellor Willy Brandt, Von Wehmar has been named West Germany's new ambassador to Italy.

As he departs, the new 36th General Assembly is confronted with a record total of 134 items on its agenda.

"When you look at this agenda, we're carrying things over from year to year to year," Von Wehmar said.

"Instead of having some 20 different resolutions concerning southern Africa — apartheid and Namibia — (we should) group them, combine them."

He also suggests that addresses in the General Assembly could be drastically cut if speakers submitted large portions of their statements to the printed record "as one does in parliaments."

Von Wehmar also finds there is too much duplication of effort.

Although the General Assembly is planning a special session on disarmament in 1982, this year's agenda is studded with disarmament items, including separate discussions on establishing various zones of peace or nuclear-free zones.

There is a Geneva round of disarmament talks, a U.N. Committee on Disarmament and a Disarmament Commission. The issue is discussed as well by the General Assembly's political committee and planetary.

"We have a Food and Agriculture Organization. We have the World Food Council, the World Food Program (and) the Interim Fund for Agricultural Development — all dealing with agriculture and food," the diplomat noted.

Restraining order halts exhumation

FORT WORTH (AP)—The widow of accused presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald has vowed to continue her effort to exhume his body despite a second restraining order prohibiting her from disturbing the remains.

State District Judge James Wright granted the restraining order Wednesday on behalf of Oswald's brother, Robert Oswald, who is fighting the attempt by Marina Oswald Porter, to have the grave opened.

It was the second time Wright has ordered parties in the exhumation case not to disturb Oswald's guarded grave in the Rose Hill Memorial Park cemetery in east Fort Worth.

Wright granted Robert Oswald's request for a similar order when British author Michael Eddowes, with Mrs. Porter's permission, moved to have the grave opened last year. Eddowes believes a Soviet agent and Oswald look-alike is buried there.

But that ruling was reversed last week by the 2nd Texas Court of Appeals in Fort Worth.

The appeals court said the legal rights of Mrs. Porter and her two children came before that of the brother's.

"Judge Wright disregarded the higher court by disobeying its ruling," Mrs. Porter said. "There is more to this than meets the eye."

She did not elaborate, but said that her brother-in-law is "a desperate person, trying to grasp at every legal straw."

Mrs. Porter said she was not surprised by the ruling.

"I think that we have a very strong legal case and there is no doubt who is right and who is wrong," she said. Robert Oswald "is running out of legal ammunition, and we are still going strong."

She said she is prepared to continue the legal battle to show that her former husband is missing from his grave, and predicts it could be "years" before she is permitted to exhume the body.

"It just puts more oil on the fire," she said. "The fighting spirit is still there."

The earliest date for a hearing on Wright's temporary restraining order would be Oct. 5, provided all parties could meet at that time.

Mrs. Porter filed suit in August seeking court sanction of an exhumation, saying now she believes the grave to be empty.

Oswald, calling his brother's grave "a sacred site," once again went to court to block exhumation.

Columbia launch delayed by spill

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—The space shuttle Columbia may have to be hauled off its launch pad to repair damage caused by a spill of corrosive propellant, and that would delay its second launch by at least a month, space agency officials say.

Shuttle Operations Director George Page said Wednesday that a 4,000-pound thruster-control pod in the nose of the orbiter would have to be removed because it was contaminated by propellant spilled in an accident Tuesday.

The extent of damage will determine whether the pod can be removed and repaired at the launch site or whether the shuttle will have to be rolled back to the huge Vehicle Assembly Building, disassembled, then returned to its hangar for repairs.

A decision is expected by Friday, said Hugh Harris, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration spokesman at the Kennedy Space Center.

Page said moving the vehicle could push the next launch a month or more beyond the scheduled Oct. 9 date. The shuttle is intended to be used over and over again for trips into space.

Seepage of the corrosive fluid—an oxidizer called nitrogen tetroxide—into the forward reactor-control system was discovered Wednesday.

A technician was to enter the pod through a small opening, clean up as much fluid as possible and find out how much damage had been done.

The oxidizer also damaged or destrayed the adhesive under hundreds of heat-protection tiles on the Columbia's aluminum skin. Some 300 tiles had been removed by Wednesday night and Page said the count could go to 350 or more. He said the tiles themselves were not damaged.

The reactor-control pod contains a group of thrusters which control the pitch and roll of the spacecraft during orbit and atmospheric re-entry.

Harris said it would be difficult to remove the pod at the launch site because of the orbiter's vertical position. If damage is extensive, it also would be better to do the repair work with Columbia in its hangar in a horizontal position, he said.

Harris said that with the addition of water, the propellant turns into nitric acid, which is very corrosive to copper wires and other metals.

The spill took place at a servicing panel during a fueling operation of the reactor-control system.

The tiles protect the shuttle against the high temperatures of re-entry into the atmosphere. They are individually sized, fitted and bonded onto 75 percent of the orbiter's external surface.

silica kept the highly acidic oxidizer from eating away at the tiles.

Engineers also performed a visual inspection of the shuttle's large external tank, but it was not believed to have been affected by the spill.

Much of the other work at the launch complex was at a standstill after the spill.

The accident was caused by a faulty valve or a seal on the ground fueling system leading to the servicing panel, said Mark Hess, a spokesman for the space center.

Business satellite to be launched

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—A 9-foot-long business satellite, the second of three in a new system, is scheduled to be launched aboard a Delta rocket tonight from a site at the Cape Canaveral Air Force Station.

The rocket will place the satellite in orbit 22,240 miles above the equator, where it will provide 10 channels of 20 watts each via an antenna system.

Tonight's satellite launch is the second by Satellite Business Systems, a private company that offers business communications services to domestic companies.

The first SBS satellite was launched last Nov. 15 and began operations early this year. The third one will be launched aboard the space shuttle in the future.

SBS pays the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for the Delta rocket and launch expenses, a total of about $22 million.

Albert Smith of SBS said the cost of the mission was about $37 million, plus development costs for the satellite built by Hughes Aircraft Co. in California. The satellite, 7 feet in diameter, is insured against loss for $55 million.

Smith called the company's service a decentralized system permitting individual customers to manage their own networks for voice, digital data or video communications.

Smith said the company, which is owned jointly by IBM Corp., Consat General Corp. and Aetna Life Insurance Co., has 25 customers so far.

Texas students choosing easy, entertaining classes over basics

AUSTIN (AP)—Texas students—thinking they were born just to have a good time—are opting for easy and entertaining courses over math and science, says the state commissioner of higher education.

"Frankly, the evidence shows we are turning soft; students somehow get the idea from society that hard work is to be avoided, something that has no rewards and that we were put here to play," Ashworth told the Select Committee on Public Education on Wednesday.

His review of public education contrasted with Dr. Vic Arnold's upbeat predictions about the Texas economy, which he said serves as a "magnet" for attracting newcomers to the state.

Arnold, a University of Texas professor in charge of the Texas 2000 project, predicted that in the next 20 years the state's economy will grow by 17 percent to 20 percent above the national average.

He and Ashworth testified before the Select Committee on Public Education, which includes legislative leaders such as Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Bill Clayton and educators.

Ashworth said the Southern Regional Education Board released figures "that say something about what our priorities really are. In the entire South in one year recently (1978), our colleges graduated 445 math education majors; but that same year we graduated 7,502 coaches and PE (physical education) majors."

"We have simply got to find ways to get students to take more math and science, and more than the minimum amounts required by our high schools to graduate and by our colleges to get by," he said. "And we need to keep them going in tough subjects once they get to college."

"The colleges are alarmed about the inadequate preparation of many high school graduates upon admission to college. Yet the colleges have been lowering and easing their admission requirements, which, in turn, has said to the high schools that they are free to eliminate certain graduation requirements," Ashworth said.

Ashworth recommended tightening college admission requirements and requiring more tough courses in high school.

He added that the brightest students are avoiding teacher education, and the "result is that students with the lowest grade point averages" and scholastic aptitude test scores "are often the ones choosing teacher education as a career. Those least qualified may be teaching our next generation."

"If one were an alarmist, he might say... we are going from bad to worse."

Hobby, the committee chairman, said the issues raised by Ashworth "are much more fundamental than those raised (by the committee) so far."

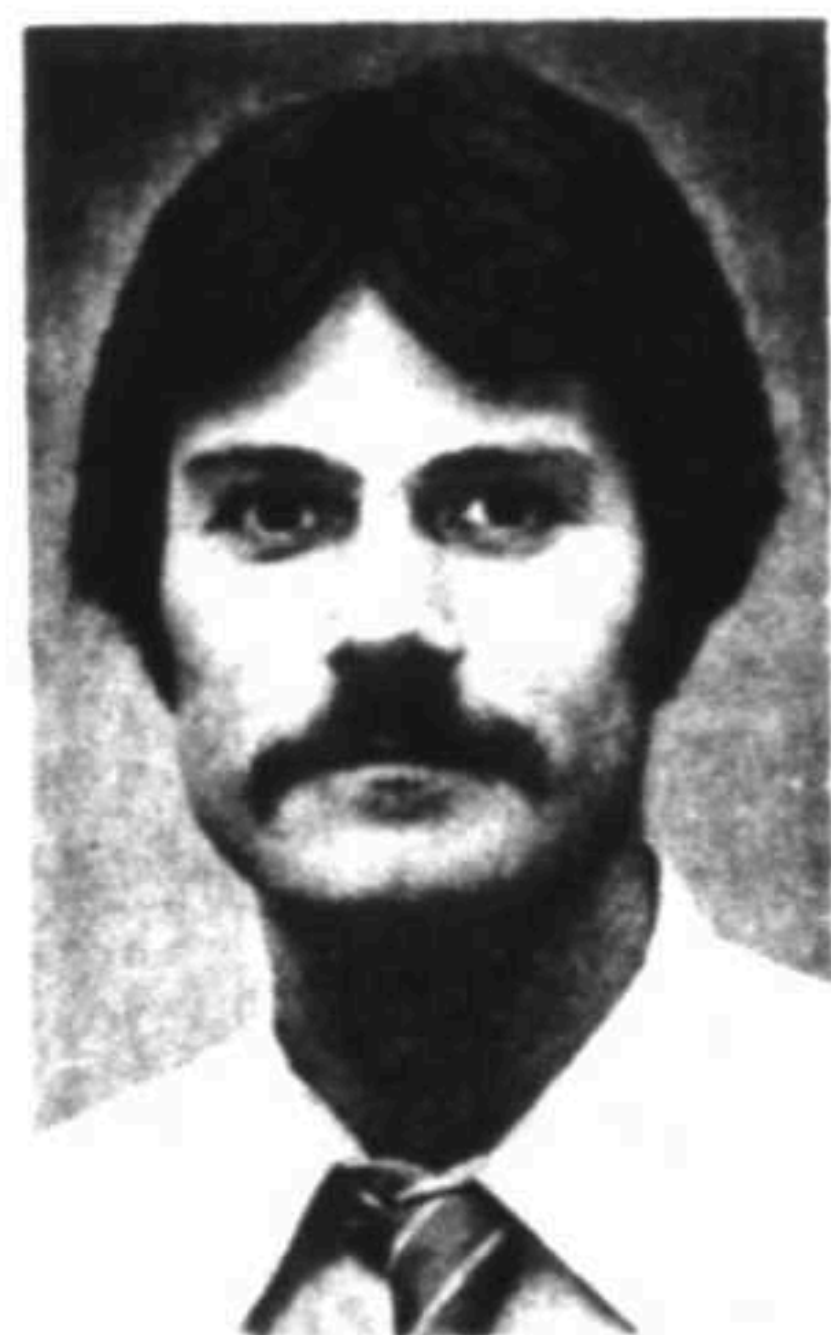

"The best pay we ever gave our teachers was when we held them in high esteem," said Ashworth. "As much as I think teachers' pay needs to be improved, I am quite certain the most effective" way to recruit and retain teachers "would be to get the teaching profession back into higher repute with the public."

"It's hard to develop self-esteem when you live in a mobile home five miles outside of town," said Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, D-Midland, chairman of the Senate Education Committee.

Hobby, a graduate of Rice University, said that students from private schools usually accomplish more academically than public school students but fewer private school teachers have the teaching certificate required to teach in public schools.

"Is there a message for us there?" asked Hobby, who paused, then broke the silence by adding, "I know there are no answers to that question."

MOVING UP

KEVIN CROSSON

The growth of Electronic Service Center has been phenomenal during the past few years, and expansion plans have just been put into effect. Mr. Milton B. Thornton has announced promotions within the corporation and names some additions to the staff.

Kevin Crosson has been named manager of the new Midland store in the La Villita shopping center at 3325 West Wadley. Kevin has many years of experience in the sales of electronic sound equipment and will be able to answer your stereo component questions.

Kevin and his wife of ten years, Beverly are originally from New York State. They moved to this area in 1978 and are enjoying the warmth of West Texas, both in the people and in the climate. Beverly is employed by the Midland school district where she works with special children.

Mr. Thornton encourages everyone to come by our new Midland store (opening soon) and meet Kevin Crosson.

Hospital uses TV spots to get patients

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES—Imagine a delectable lady lying in a hospital bed. There is a knock at the door and a tanned, muscular man enters the room. As he approaches her bed, a voice out of nowhere whispers, "Nice things happen in a private room. By calling Sunrise Hospital 72 hours in advance, you can reserve a private room."

Outrageous? No, advertising as usual at Sunrise, the acknowledged leader in hospital promotion.

In traditional grand style, the largest hospital in Las Vegas has been churning out 60-second television spots and devising controversial incentive plans to increase its patient load since 1976.

Sunrise even won Nevada's most coveted state advertising award, the Addy, in 1979.

SOME OF the unique plans the 661-bed facility has offered in recent years include 5.25 percent bill rebates to patients who checked into the hospital on weekends, when it is traditionally slow, and weekly drawings for a two-week all-expense-paid recuperative Mediterranean cruise for a lucky patient and a friend.

And then there's Sunrise's latest gimmicks — a revolving charge card, called the Courtesy Card, and valet parking for patients and guests.

"If we can get more utilization of services here by offering these things, then why not do it," said Roy Robbins, the hospital's associate executive director.

Sunrise, rocked last year by the Death Angel scandal in which an intensive-care-unit nurse was implicated, then cleared of the mysterious death of six patients, has been running 30- and 60-second television ads highlighting the hospital's trained staff and unique facilities.

"We show an actual open-heart surgery taking place," said Robbins, "so people know they don't have to go out of town to get that."

Sunrise is owned by Humana, a Louisville, Ky., corporation that owns 90 hospitals nationwide.

Humana hospitals' executives frankly admit the chain is the leader in hospital advertising.

"We've investigated areas of marketing that other hospitals have never thought of," said Keith Tintle, administrator of the 141-bed La Mirada, Calif., Community Hospital.

THE HUMANA hospitals in Los Angeles don't go in for the Las Vegas-style flash. But by Southern California standards, some hospital executives consider the Humana incentive programs a bit racy. For example:

Baldwin Park Community Hospital, 20 miles east of here, not only has a Hospitality Service, but it offers to pay up to $300 of a patient's insurance deductible. It's called the Family Courtesy Plan.

At La Mirada Community Hospital, Medicare patients are sometimes given a free ride. The hospital will pick up the $300 deductible the elderly patients are required to pay for hospital stays during a 60- to 90-day period every three years.

As inflation, and the spiraling cost of labor, modern technology and maintaining excess beds drive up hospital costs, acute-care facilities nationwide are developing innovative ways of luring patients.

"A lot of hospitals have traditionally not been held accountable for being financially sound," said Tintle. "As the dollar tightens up and the government refuses to provide a cushion, they (administrators) open up their minds."

TO BRING potential patients to the hospital, many executives have created educational programs and devised incentives, ranging from luxury suites to free Mediterranean cruises to paying insurance deductibles.

But getting the message to the public remains the most difficult obstacle for the institutions to conquer. To promote their new services, hospital executives have turned to a medium many still find distasteful — advertising.

The advertising can take many forms: a mention in the Yellow Pages, a blue-and-white hospital sign on a highway, a bus placard, a mass mailing, a full-page newspaper ad, or a 60-second television spot.

Traditionally, physicians, not ads, have guided patients to the hospital. Even now, only a doctor can admit a patient. Predictably, many physicians are unhappy with the recent trend in hospital advertising.

"It's against sound social policy for hospitals to advertise directly to the patient," said Dr. Milton Roemer, professor of health sciences at the UCLA School of Medicine. "The patient is not qualified to make that decision."

IN THIS age of consumerism, some patients also insist on comparison shopping. "About 30 to 35 percent of the patients request to go to a certain hospital," said Barbara Bellman, director of public relations at 195-bed Century City Hospital here. "People don't have unbridled trust any more (in doctors)."

Hospital executives point to economic reality — rapidly rising expenses — to justify their advertising.

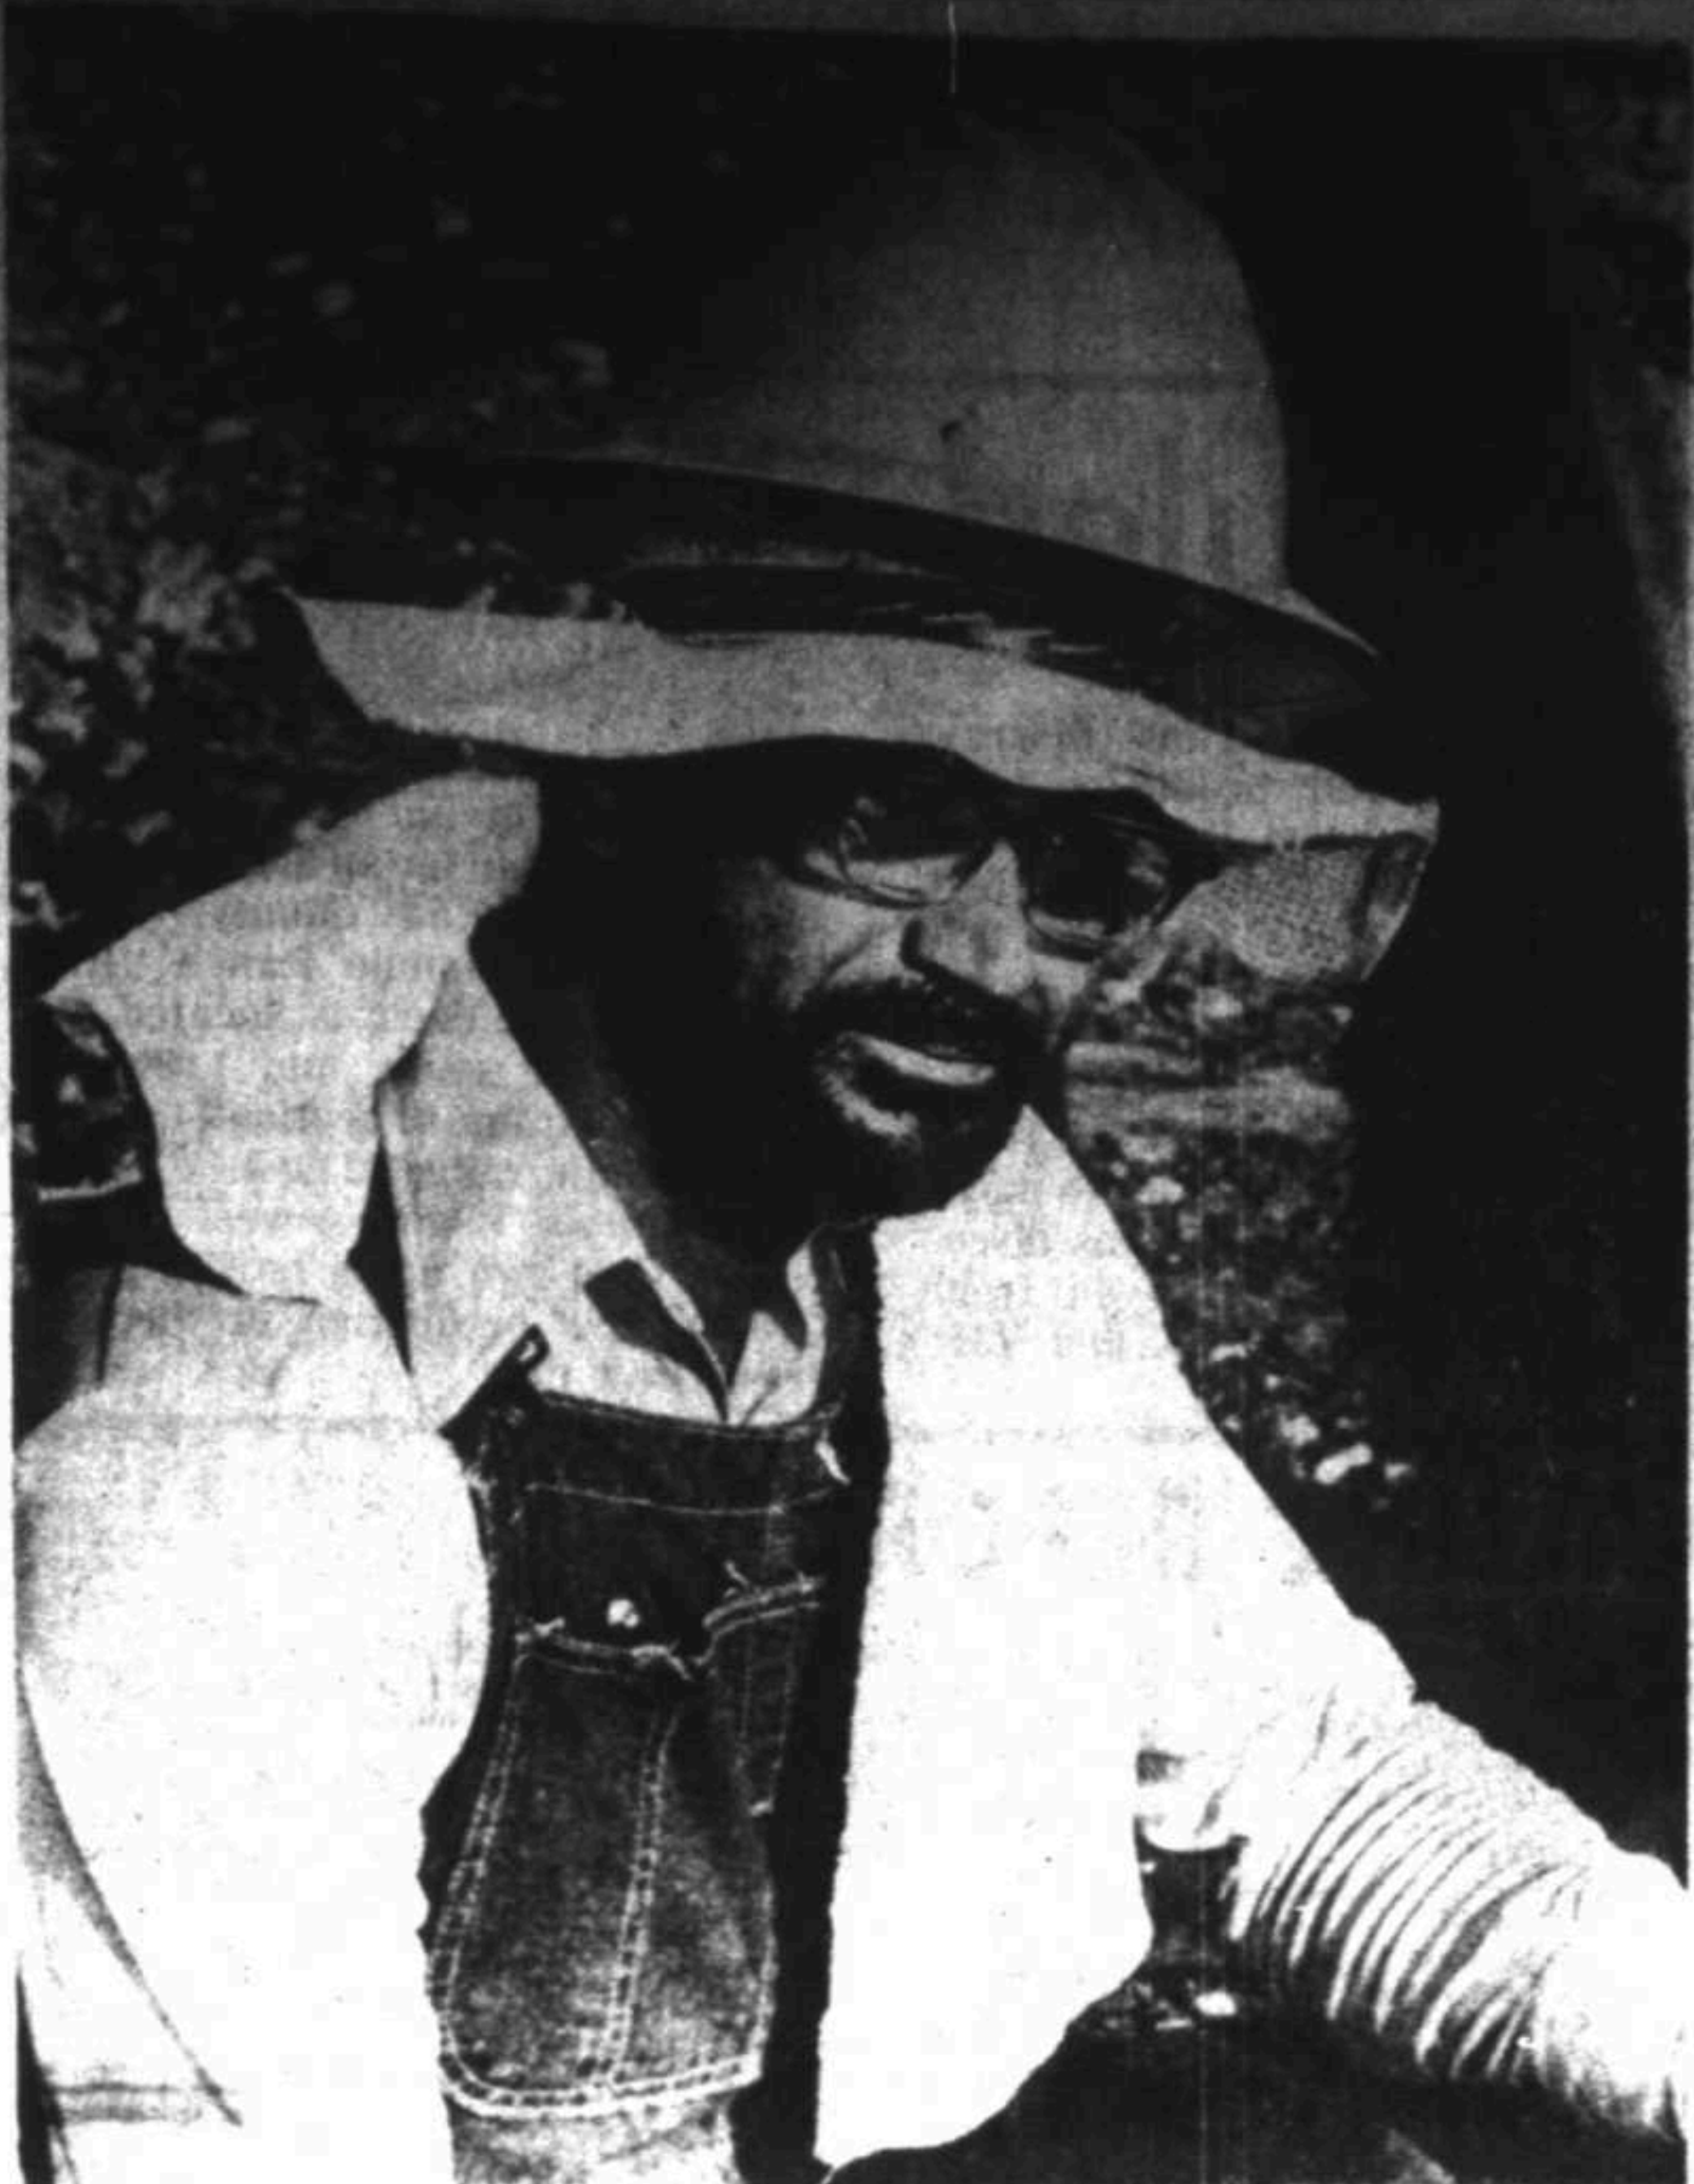

For those hospitals that now believe their high patient caseloads don't warrant advertising, Robin Scott MacStravic, editor of the quarterly Journal Health Care Planning and Marketing and an associate professor of health services administration at the University of Washington, Seattle, has an ominous warning.

"For years Hershey Co. was number one in the candy industry and had a policy not to advertise," he said. "They began losing the market share to Nestle's, which was advertising. If there's competition, only advertising can reverse a downward trend. Hershey began advertising and regained its market share."

Unlike the American Medical Association code that once prohibited physicians from advertising, the main hospital trade group, the American Hospital Association, has never advocated a ban on ads. In fact the Chicago-based AHA drew up two pages of suggested advertising guidelines in 1977, responding to the desire by some members to advertise, AHA spokeswoman Lath. — Carnett said.

THE MOST aggressive advertisers are the hospitals owned by proprietary chains, hospital executives agree.

Patients at facilities that advertise will end up paying for all the advertising in the form of higher costs, said MacStravic, but how much more is difficult to determine. Hospital executives who advertise are reluctant to give dollar figures, but all said their advertising budgets are less than 1 percent of their total operating costs.

Landfill declared problem

EGG HARBOR TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Price's Pit landfill, which has threatened Atlantic City's water supplies for a decade, has been declared the most serious environmental problem in the nation.

The charge was made in a suit filed by the federal government. Atlantic City officials are now scrambling to save the 12 fresh-water wells that provide more than half of the daily summertime water needs for 40,000 residents and millions of gambling tourists at the Boardwalk's new casino hotels.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency says industrial wastes dumped and forgotten in 1971 and 1972 are oozing into the great Cohansey aquifer of the Pine Barrens, one of the East's purest and most plentiful ground water supplies.

First Assistant U.S. Attorney Charles J. Walsh said, "The situation is alarming. The government has designated this case the most severe environmental problem in the country."

Agent Orange exposures disclosed

WASHINGTON (AP) — American troops may have been exposed to Agent Orange in Vietnam when their own planes dumped the toxic spray near U.S. military bases instead of the jungle, the government says.

"When I got this job in July, I didn't think anyone quite foresaw that we would be dumping this stuff on our own people (in Vietnam)," Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker said Wednesday in making the disclosure.

Last summer, President Reagan directed Schweiker to intensify the investigation into whether the health of servicemen was damaged by exposure to the defoliant.

Previously, the government knew of only 1,200 men — Air Force crews who ran the spraying missions — who were directly exposed to the spray.

But Schweiker said a new search of Pentagon records showed 90 instances when airplanes dumped their chemical cargoes in emergencies, including 41 times "directly over or near U.S. air bases and other military installations."

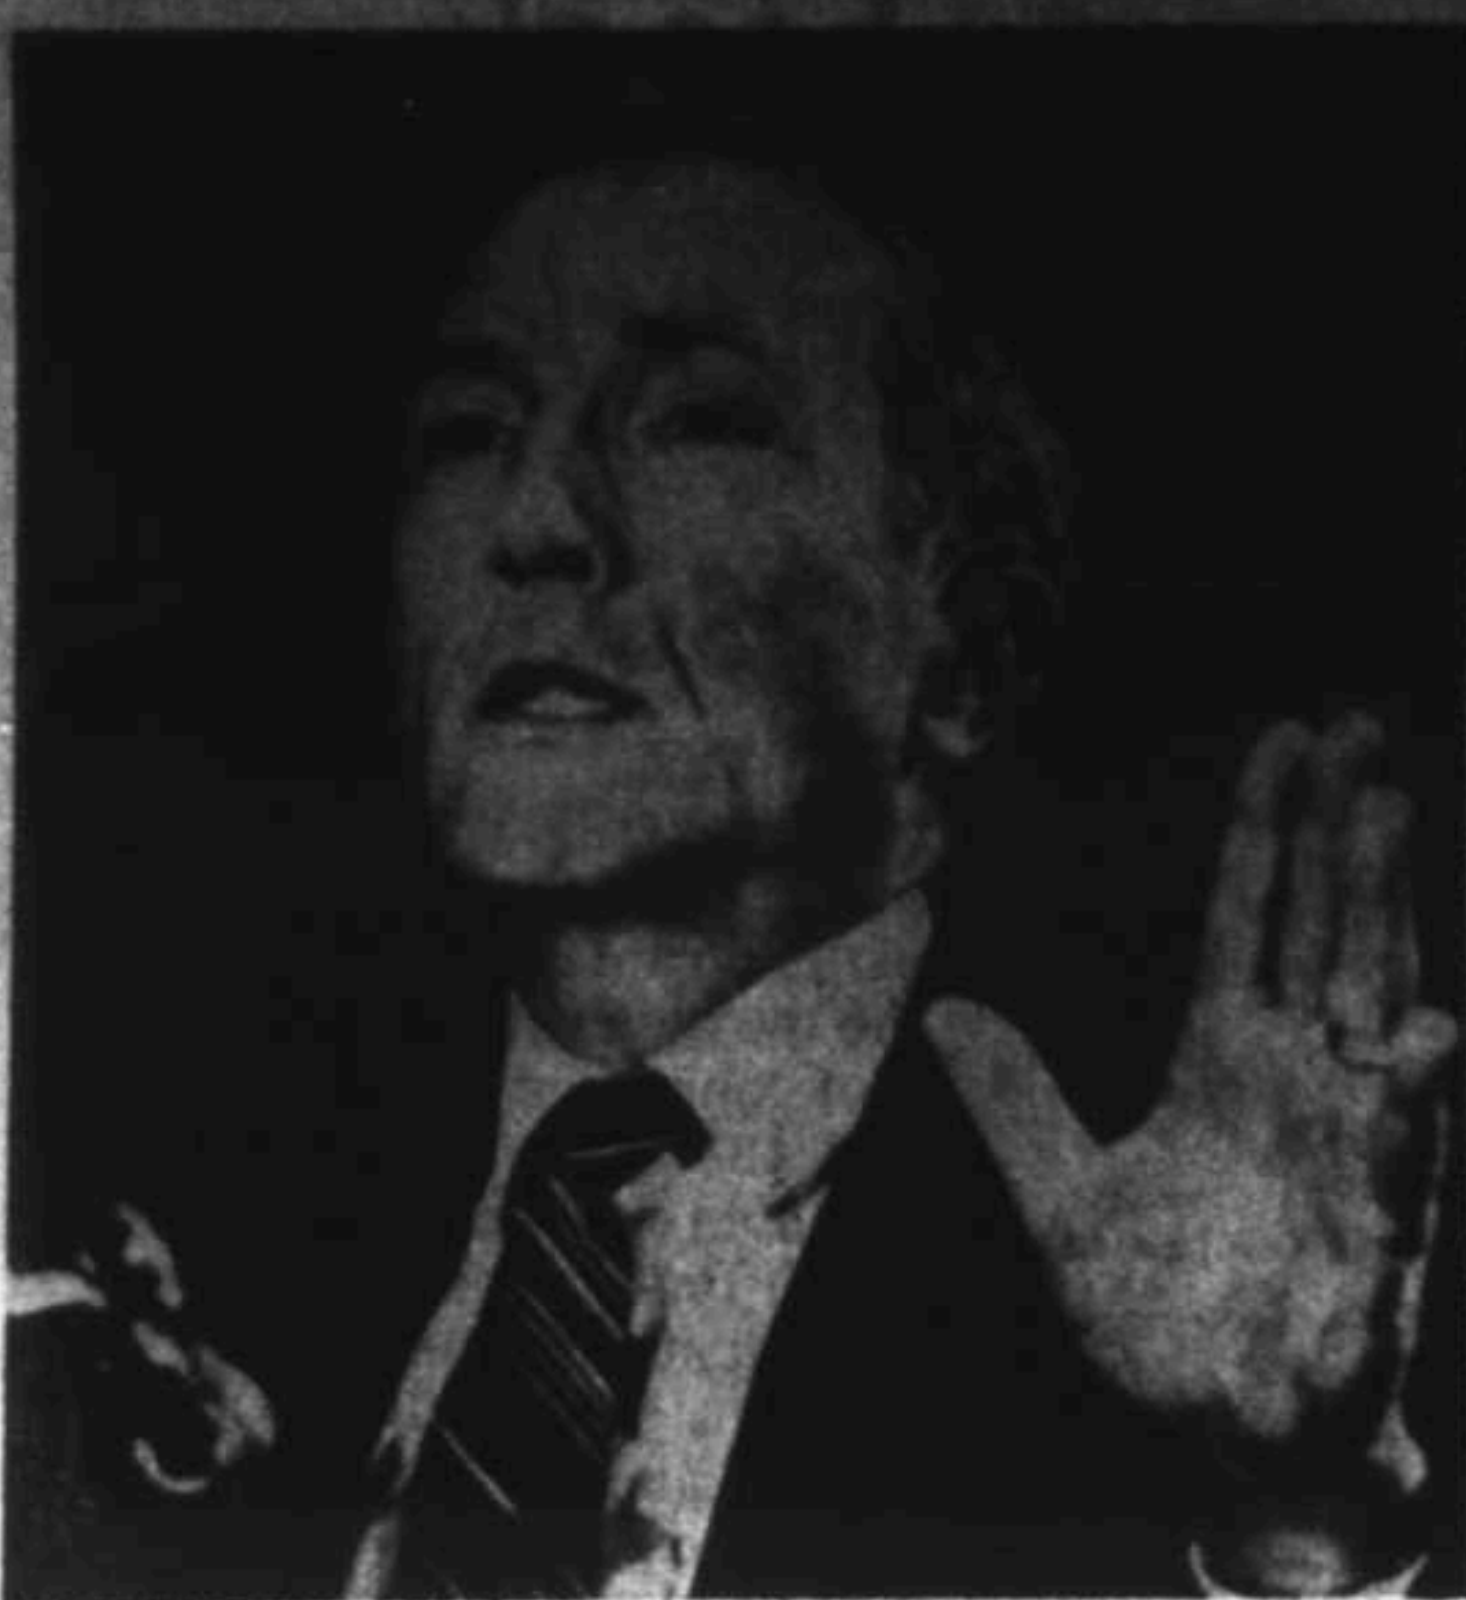

As a result, he told a news conference, the number coming into contact with Agent Orange "was substantially larger than anybody expected." He said, however, he could not estimate how many men may have been exposed.

The head of an organization of Vietnam veterans who claim their health was damaged by Agent Orange said his group had known for years that the herbicide was dropped directly on American soldiers.

In an interview Wednesday night with radio station WLIR in Garden City, N.Y., Frank McCarthy, president of Agent Orange Victims International, said, "We have over 57 members of our organization who were in operation Ranch Hand," the code name for the defoliation operation. "They have pictures and they've told us...that they had to do that (dump their cargo) on many occasions."

During the Vietnam War, U.S. planes dropped 12 million gallons of the chemical to destroy crops and jungle hiding places and clear base camps, landing zones, waterways and communications lines. The spraying stopped when the number of birth defects increased among Vietnamese women.

Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker announces that the administration's Agent Orange Working Group has received significant new data on the dumping of the herbicide that would help determine possible long-term effects on Vietnam veterans.

The VA says it has no evidence that the herbicide causes any problems other than chloracne, a severe skin rash, but some veterans blame the herbicide for a vast array of diseases — including cancer, birth defects in their children, miscarriages by their wives, impotency, respiratory problems and liver, skin, nerve and emotional disorders.

Schweiker said the new information came to light because the Reagan administration intensified efforts to examine the Pentagon's records.

"We didn't feel a high enough inquiry was made (previously)," he said.

He said it was not difficult to believe that crews on spraying missions would dump the herbicide near large groups of American troops because those missions had to end under emergency conditions — when the planes had been hit by communist fire or their engines had failed.

Schweiker said he was making the disclosure because he felt a responsibility "to really level with the American people with what really happened."

He added that "we'd be glad to hear" from veterans fearful that they were exposed. But later, a department spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said veterans should write instead to the VA, which is compiling a registry of veterans who suspect exposure.

Nixon OK'd 'thugs' to assault protesters

NEW YORK (AP) — A 1971 White House tape recording reveals then-President Nixon was so angry over an anti-war demonstration that he endorsed a suggestion to use Teamsters union "thugs" to assault protesters. The New York Times reported today.

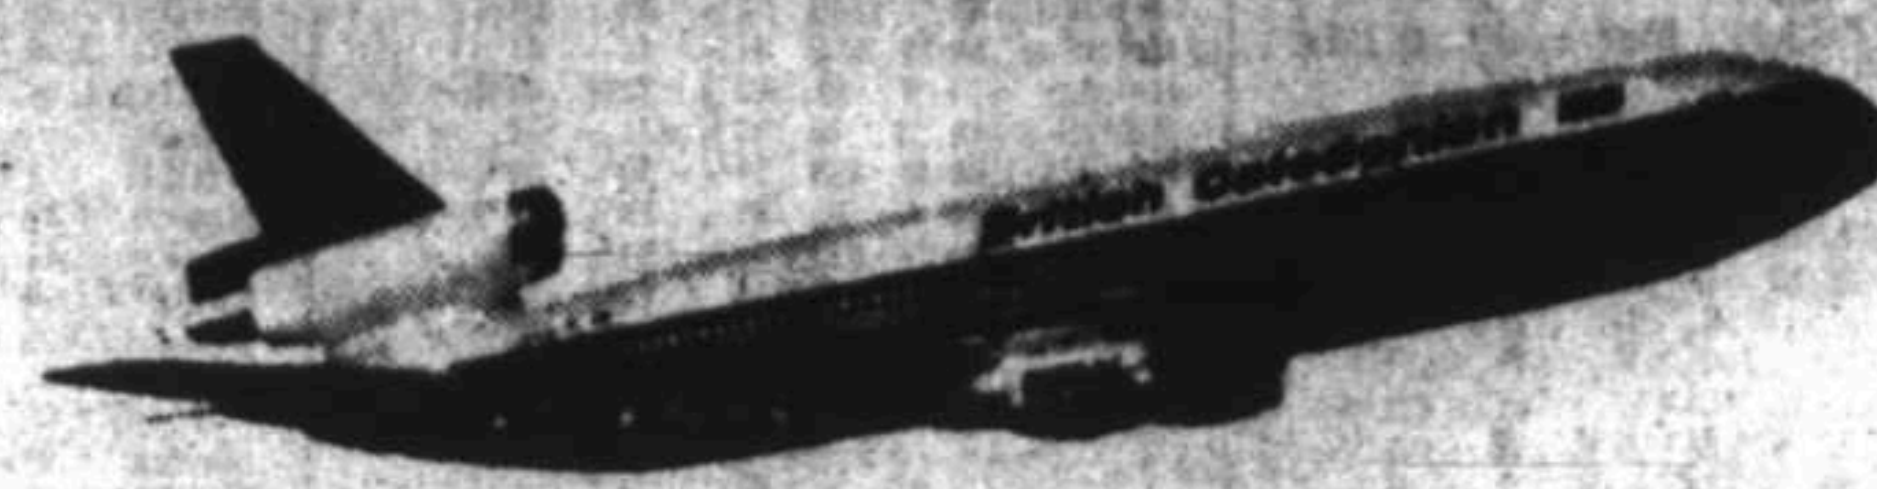

The newly disclosed tape, the Times said in a report from its Washington bureau, is of a discussion between Nixon and his chief of staff, H.R. Haldeman, on May 5, 1971, during a three-day Vietnam war protest in Washington.

A transcript of the tape obtained by the Times shows Haldeman raised the idea of hiring Teamsters to "really hurt 'em. You know...smash some noses."

The 26-page transcript was among more than 750 pages of transcripts prepared by the National Archives in response to a subpoena filed in 1979 by lawyers for 1,200 protesters arrested that day. Despite seven years of litigation, none of the recordings or transcripts have been made public by the government. Federal courts have ruled that arrests made then were unconstitutional.

Airlines stressing productivity in financially-threatening year

NEW YORK (AP) — Many of the nation's heavily unionized airlines are looking to their workers as a last resort in a year that began poorly and threatens to get financially worse.

The airlines, whose books show 1980 as their worst year ever, were restructuring operations and negotiating more flexible contracts with unions while trying to keep up with the fuel bill.

But on Aug. 3, confusion and dislocation began with the onset of the strike by the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization.

Many of the airlines want to sideline first-generation jets they bought when fuel represented 10 percent of their operating cost; now it's approaching 40 percent, the price of jet fuel having risen from about 10 cents a gallon to more than $1 in the last 10 years.

International aviation pioneer Pan American World Airways, which has lost more money in the first half of this year than in all of 1980, and is so cash-starved it has sold buildings, aircraft and a money-making hotel chain, has now won widespread union agreement to a 10 percent pay cut and a freeze at those levels through 1982.

Even before the strike, Trans World Airways President Ed Meyer was seeking the same concessions from his employees so a return to profitability could permit it to trade up to a fuel-efficient fleet.

Eastern Airlines is asking its unions to continue turning back 3.5 percent of their pay, another attempt to restore profitability and sustain a fleet modernization program. Eastern's Variable Earnings Program, begun in 1977, will return a bonus if the airline makes a profit. Otherwise, the cash goes toward Eastern's losses.

American Airlines is negotiating new work rules with its unions in hopes of more flexible job assignments so workers are not sharply limited by contract to specific tasks.

United Airlines, with 17 unions, has no plans to ask for a pay cut, said spokesman Chuck Novak, but it is trying to negotiate more productivity.

Industry figures show trunk airlines laid off 15,000 workers as a result of slow business from last year's recession and an additional 11,000 as a result of the air controllers' strike.

But meanwhile, the industry's leading money makers last year are not asking any pay cuts from their workers and already have built in flexibility because they are largely non-union shops.

"We're asking nothing of that type of relief from Delta (Air Lines) people," says Bill Berry, spokesman for the carrier that last year earned $164 million.

At USAir, where 700 people were laid off when the controllers' strike began, most are back at work, and "basically we've not had any problem," says Nancy Vaughan, speaking for the airline. USAir earned $91.4 million in 1980.

Months ago, Eastern Chairman Frank Borman, in the company paper, appealed for an across-the-board 10 percent productivity increase.

"I am aware that many Eastern employees are tired of comparisons with Delta," he wrote. "I'm tired of it too. But only a fool ignores his competition."

Air Force to modify bombers

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Beginning next Tuesday the Air Force's fleet of 95 B-52H bombers will be modified in a four-year program at Kelly Air Force Base, base officials report.

The planes' bomb-navigational systems will be replaced with more sophisticated digital components, making the craft electronically compatible with the installed short-range attack missile system, said Leo Bendele, chief of the Kelly Aircraft Scheduling and Pre-Planning section.

"Aircraft will be modified at the rate of two per month. It will take four years to accomplish the entire fleet," he said.

"Our workload and work force will remain relatively stable," Bendele said.
