Chilean ambassador dies in Caracas fire

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — A fire engulfed a 14-story downtown Caracas office building and 15 people died, including the Chilean ambassador and nine other embassy employees, police said.

Two of the embassy employees, unable to escape the smoke and flames from the fire Monday, jumped to their deaths from the top floor, state television said.

Police said a short circuit in the building's first-floor electrical plant caused the fire, and that they had 'in principle" ruled out the possibility of foul play.

They said it quickly spread to the top floor, where the Chilean government offices were located. Firemen continued to hose down the building this morning, and said an investigation would begin.

Pedro Torres Agudo, director of the technical and judicial police, said that in addition to Ambassador Carlos de Costa Nora, nine other Chilean diplomatic officials had died. Two of the victims were visitors to the Chilean mission and three other victims had not yet been identified, he said.

An undetermined number of people were treated for smoke inhalation at nearby hospitals and medical centers.

Firemen battled the blaze for almost four hours before bringing it under control Tuesday evening.

"Thank God we're alive," said Maria Luque, a receptionist who was on the 10th floor when the blaze broke out.

She and other employees ran to the roof, where they were rescued by a police helicopter. She told state television she saw many other people trapped inside the building, being overcome by flames and smoke.

Ignacio Concha Sepulveda, the Chilean Embassy's third secretary, managed to escape from a bathroom window in the embassy and pull himself up onto the roof.

The daily newspaper El Nacional reported firefighters had difficulty with low water pressure which did not allow the water from their hoses to reach the burning upper floors of the office building.

People who were in the building at the time of the fire reported a short electrical outage, after which the smoke and flames began to appear.

Some of those on the top floors, including the ambassador, were unable to escape. The state television station Venezolana de Television showed a photograph of the ambassador waving out of a window on the top floor after the fire began.

Two hotel fires investigated

Associated Press

A fire in a suburban Atlanta hotel forced the evacuation of about 300 people early today, and 120 guests had to flee a stylish Cincinnati hotel when fires apparently were set on two floors, officials said.

Three people were hospitalized in the two cities. One man was arrested in Cincinnati and charged with trespassing, police said.

A fire reported just after midnight at the six-story Harley Hotel, southwest of Atlanta in East Point, Ga., was brought under control in 90 minutes, said East Point Assistant Fire Chief Terry Ransome.

Fire officials said the blaze apparently started outside a laundry room, but the cause was under investigation.

The blaze was confined to the first floor. However, smoke damage to the rest of the building was heavy, Ransome said.

Fay Jester of State College, Pa., said she and her husband and two children were rescued by ladder from their second-floor balcony.

"My husband broke the window with a chair," she said. "Then I knew we were safe."

At Cincinnati's downtown Clarion Hotel, manager Bob Hope said one fire on the fifth floor appeared to have started in a tissue box, and a fire on the 18th floor started with a flammable substance placed on a seat and walls near the elevator lobby.

Guests were evacuated from all 21 floors of the hotel's south tower.

Police did not release the name of the man who was arrested about an hour after the fires broke out.

During the Clarion fires, firefighters were called to the Hyatt Regency across the street to put out a fire in a restroom. Fire officials said they did not believe the hotel fires were related.

Filipino funds may be 'missing;' Justices step down

By RICHARD PYLE

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The head of a commission charged with recovering any wealth illegally accumulated by deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos said today that up to $10 billion may be missing from the treasury and enterprises controlled by Marcos' associates and relatives.

Jovito R. Salonga, chairman of a Commission on Good Government established by new President Corazon Aquino, told a news conference that "maybe $5 billion to $10 billion" in assets was missing.

By comparison, the Philippine budget in 1985 was only about $3.3 billion. Salonga did not elaborate on what assets were missing or what was believed to have happened to them.

Also today, justices of the country's second-highest court, the Court of Appeals, submitted their resignations, and the official Philippine News Agency said at least five of the Supreme Court's 12 members also quit.

Mrs. Aquino urged the justices, all appointed by Marcos, to step down.

Justice Minister Neptali Gonzales said Court of Appeals Justice Ramon Gaviola met with Mrs. Aquino to submit 18 resignations and assured her all of the court's 38 justices would step down.

But presidential spokesman Rene Saguisag said no resignations have been received from the Supreme Court.

In setting up the Commission on Good Government, Mrs. Aquino charged it with recovering "all ill-gotten wealth" accumulated by Marcos and his friends and relatives, "including the takeover or sequestration of all business enteprises and entities owned or controlled by them during his administration...by taking undue advantage of their powers."

Marcos has been reported to own real estate worth millions of dollars in New York and Britain. When he fled to Hawaii last Wednesday, he brought 22 crates believed to contain cash and valuables, including more than $1.1 million worth of Philippine currency.

Attorneys for the Philippines' Central Bank said Monday they will receive an inventory of the crates' contents from the U.S. Customs Service. The bank has filed a suit in Honolulu charging that Marcos and his entourage of about 90 Filipinos took money illegally from the country when they fled in the face of a military rebellion.

Salonga also said documents found in Malacanang Palace after Marcos left confirm reports that he owned property in New York.

"Those documents link the (Marcos) cronies and business associates with the acquisition of property for and in the name of Mr. Marcos. Those documents will be in due time be produced in courts of justice, specifically before the New York court," Salonga said.

Lawyers for the Philippine government on Sunday obtained a court order in New York temporarily barring the sale or transfer of five properties allegedly owned or controlled by Marcos, including a Long Island estate.

Salonga said the government would seize the Manila Electric Co., which was taken over by relatives of Marcos' wife, Imelda, under a legal pretext during martial law in 1972.

He did not specify whether the company would be returned to its former owners.

Salonga said his commission is looking for evidence of "anything acquired from public funds...wealth that cannot be explained because it goes well beyond the income of the individual."

As president, Marcos' annual salary was about $5,000. In denying charges of corruption, he always said whatever wealth he had came from his lucrative law practice before becoming president.

Salonga said his investigation was likely to involve legal action in the United States, Latin America, Switzerland and Britain. "We understand there are deposits in Brazilian banks," he said.

Silver Haired Legislature candidates share varied concerns

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Concerns ranging from property tax exemptions to rural health care for the elderly were expressed Monday by candidates for the first senior citizens' legislature.

Eight candidates filed for four positions available in the Permian Basin for the Texas Silver Haired Legislature scheduled for Sept. 28 to Oct. 1 in Austin.

Texas is the 23rd state to create a legislative entity that will formulate five bills affecting the elderly. The bills will be recommended to the state legislature for adoption.

"It's been proven in other states and I think it can be proven here," said Forest Scott of Andrews who is running for a representative position in District 1.

Other state legislatures usually pass three out of five bills recommended by senior citizen groups, said Sue Craig, chairperson of the state Silver Haired Legislature steering committee.

"On the average their legislatures have passed three out of five and we expect no less from the Texas Legislature," Ms. Craig said.

Around the state 116 representatives who are 60 years or older will be elected May 30 by the same age group to attend the legislature in Austin.

Candidates must raise their own campaign and travel expenses. Private funds have been donated to send the representatives to a training session July 28-30 in Austin, Ms. Craig said.

Dr. David Norton and D.L. Willis are vying for the Midland legislative position in District 3.

Other Permian Basin candidates for District 1 include Dr. Wayne Bonner of Big Spring and Gervaise Carmichael of Seagraves. District 1 includes Andrews, Borden, Dawson, Gaines, Glasscock and Howard counties.

Henry Treadaway of Odessa is running uncontested in District 3.

District 4, consisting of Crane, Loving, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler counties, has two candidates. They are Harold Ward of Monahans and Carl Holm of Pecos.

Polling places have not been determined but will probably be at senior citizen and nutrition centers, said Bill Smith, assistant executive director with the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging.

For more information about the Silver Haired Legislature call the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging at 563-1061, extension 124.

Botha says state of emergency soon will be lifted

By ANDREW TORCHIA

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha announced today that the state of emergency imposed last July to quell anti-apartheid unrest in South Africa will be lifted, perhaps by Friday.

In a brief statement to a packed session of Parliament in the country's legislative capital, Botha claimed the racially motivated turmoil had subsided to "sporadic and isolated incidents."

Botha said conditions have "improved sufficiently to enable me to announce that a proclamation will be issued in the near future, most probably this coming Friday, which will lift the state of emergency in those magisterial districts where it still applies."

The state of emergency was imposed July 21, 1985, in 30 urban and rural districts and remains in force in 23. An end to the state of emergency has been a primary demand of anti-apartheid campaigners and Western governments.

The state of emergency empowers the police force and army to detain any person for up to 14 days without charge and enables the detention order to be repeated indefinitely.

It also gives security forces broad powers to use firearms in halting violence and enables them to seize property, seal off areas and ban media coverage.

Nearly 8,000 people have been held under the emergency powers. More than 1,100 blacks have died in race-related violence since South Africa's troubles erupted 18 months ago. Police say about two-thirds of the dead — almost all of them blacks — were killed by security forces and the rest were slain by black infighting.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes welcomed the lifting of the state of emergency as "one of the steps the South African government must take to create conditions...(for) meaningful reform and a reduction in violence."

Botha also announced an Aug. 1 target date for starting a United Nations-sponsored independence plan for South African-ruled South-West Africa, or Namibia, if Cuban troops withdraw from neighboring Angola by then. That South African condition, however, has long blocked the plan.

Marxist-led Angola, the base for South-West Africa People's Organization guerrillas, has rejected any linkage between the estimated 30,000 Cuban troops in Angola and Namibian independence.

South Africa took control of the former German colony during World War I, and has ignored calls for its independence.

Blast injures three at Johannesburg police station

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — An explosion in a toilet ripped through Johannesburg's main police station today, slightly injuring two policemen, police said.

South African Press Association, the national news agency, said the explosion was caused by a bomb. The news agency said three people were injured, including one policeman whose wounds were believed to be serious.

However, a statement issued from police headquarters in Pretoria said the cause of the blast was not yet known, and that two policemen suffered only minor cuts.

The explosion occurred just before noon in a toilet on the third floor of the John Vorster Square station next to the vehicle licensing section, the police statement said. The building is in the center of the city's commercial district.

The building is used for questioning security suspects and holding them indefinitely without trial. It is occasionally a target of anti-government demonstrations.

Reporters on the scene said they heard shouts of "Viva, Viva" and "Mandela is our leader" from detainees on the upper-floor security area. Manela refers to jailed black African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

Sale of Marcos' real estate blocked

NEW YORK (AP) — A judge has temporarily blocked the sale of $350 million worth of New York real estate allegedly owned or controlled by Ferdinand Marcos, lawyers for the newly installed Philippines government say.

A Long Island estate and one of Manhattan's tallest office buildings are among the five properties affected by the order issued Sunday night by Justice Elliott Wilk of the trial-level state Supreme Court.

His order specifically enjoined Ralph and Joseph Bernstein — businessmen who have been linked to Marcos — as well as Marcos, his wife, Imelda, and several of their associates, from transferring title to any of the properties.

The order was requested by the Center for Constitutional Rights, which said it had been retained by the Philippine Presidential Commission on Good Government in Manila to protect Philippine interests in Marcos assets around the United States.

In a statement, the Bernsteins said "Since we have done nothing wrong, and no laws have been broken, we look forward to an expedited resolution of this matter."

The Bernsteins said two weeks ago that they planned to buy three Manhattan buildings allegedly owned by Marcos for $250 million.

But they refused to identify the owners of the buildings, except to say they were foreigners and not the Marcoses.

"We have options in place which have been exercised," Joseph Bernstein told The Wall Street Journal. "It's pretty far along."

"It means that anything that hasn't been sold can't be sold," said David Lerner, a spokesman for the center, a non-profit organization that concentrates on human rights issues. "It's a significant step in the Philippine government's attempt to retrieve its property."

Lerner said it was not clear if the order might have come too late to halt the liquidation of some of the Marcos's assets.

The brief submitted to Wilk argued that in his 20 years in power Marcos purloined an amount that "may even equal or exceed" the Philippines' national debt of $300 billion.

Among those fighting to regain Filipino control of Marcos' assets is Phillipine Central Bank Governor Jose B. Fernandez.

Center lawyers argued that the New York properties are controlled by Marcos through other parties and were purchased with money illegally taken out of the Philippines.

"We're asking the courts in the United States to preserve these assets," said Michael Ratner, legal director of the center. "We want to have the facts (about their ownership) resolved in the Philippines, and we want to have the property be there in identifiable form when the case is resolved."

The five parcels involved are: the Crown Building at Fifth Avenue and 57th Street in Manhattan; Lindenmere, an estate on Long Island; Herald Center, a new shopping center in Herald Square; and buildings at 200 Madison Ave. and 40 Wall St. in Manhattan. The latter, 70 stories high, is one of Manhattan's tallest.

All the properties except 200 Madison were put up for sale last year after reports linked them to the Marcoses. Each is owned by overseas corporations that are not required to reveal the names of shareholders.

Wilk scheduled a hearing Wednesday for further arguments.

Lab not contacted on Palme death

By STEPHEN H. MILLER

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Local police hunting for the killer of Prime Minister Olof Palme failed to contact specialists at Sweden's national forensics laboratory to help identify one of the bullets fired by Palme's assassin, a laboratory specialist said today.

"Had they contacted us, we could have thrown light on the situation," said Aake Aabrink, chief of the arms department at the National Forensic Laboratories.

Palme, the 59-year-old head of Sweden's powerful Social Democratic party, was shot in the back with a .357 magnum revolver as he walked home Friday from a movie with his wife, Lisbet, in central Stockholm. Mrs. Palme, 55, was slightly wounded.

Ingvar Carlsson, who had been deputy premier and now is acting prime minister, was chosen unanimously on Monday as the Social Democrats' new leader. Palme had held the post since 1969.

Dagens Nyheter, a Stockholm daily, said today several mistakes have been made by both police and government security officials. In a lengthy editorial, the newspaper said security surrounding Palme should never have been so lax, and added that police should have acted quicker after the prime minister was gunned down.

Stockholm police said a bullet recovered from the slaying site Saturday did not match the 500 types they had on file, and that its unusual construction could make it harder to find Palme's killer.

But Aabrink said his laboratory, which is run by Sweden's National Police, had such bullets in its collection.

Stockholm police "are not obliged to call us," he told The Associated Press. "But if they had, we might have avoided the speculations about (the bullets)."

Aabrink runs the foremost forensics laboratory in Sweden. He told the Expressen newspaper, Stockholm's largest daily, that he first saw a picture and description of the bullet in the paper on Sunday.

"If we had had a chance to see (the bullet) on Saturday, we could have said what it was," he told the newspaper.

He identified the copper-jacketed bullet that killed Palme as a type manufactured by the U.S. Winchester firm, but said he could not further identify it without seeing it first hand.

Magnus Uvnaes, a gunstore manager in Stockholm, also said the bullet was manufactured by Winchester, and identified it as a metal-piercing projectile of a type that was discontinued five years ago.

Dagens Nyheter also said in its editorial, "Another question to ask is why all escape routes out of Stockholm were not blocked."

"Many drivers and pedestrians did not notice (an extra) number of police," it said.

Alerts at border points and the Stockholm airport continued, but security officials said someone who planned carefully might have gotten through because the controls were not airtight.

Police have said that the killer apparently had stalked Palme for some time, and that the attack was meticulously planned.

On Monday, they said the Holger Meins Commando terror group, a West German group, had repeated its claim of responsibility in the Palme killing bringing to three the number of reported claims of responsibility.

Two of them came from someone claiming to speak for the Holger Meins group, the third by a person claiming to be from a related West German group, the Red Army Faction.

Swedish police said Monday they had been told of a call to a news agency in London by someone claiming the Holger Meins Commando group had killed Palme, and later said they had learned of another call, also to a London news agency by someone purporting to be with the Holger Meins group.

The Swedish Foreign Ministry on Monday confirmed reports that a caller claiming to represent the Red Army Faction telephoned a Swedish diplomat in Bonn about three hours after the killing to claim credit. But West German officials questioned the authenticity of that call.

The Holger Meins group, an offshoot of the Red Army Faction, occupied West Germany's embassy in Stockholm in 1975, an action which ended in violence, and its supporters later blamed Palme's government for the subsequent death of one of the terrorists involved.

The leftist Red Army Faction, formerly known as the Baader-Meinhof Gang, has carried out assassinations, bomb attacks and robberies for nearly 15 years, but operates almost exclusively within West Germany.

Carlsson expected to follow footsteps

By GUNILLA FARINGER

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Acting Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson, for nearly 30 years an aide and friend of the assassinated Olof Palme, is known as a politician with a knack for compromise and a loyal worker in the Social Democratic Party.

Carlsson became head of Sweden's caretaker government on Saturday after Palme was fatally wounded. Carlsson was elected the leader of the Social Democratic party on Monday and is expected to be formally named prime minister by the Parliament on March 12.

Palme served as party chairman since 1969, and headed the Swedish government since the socialists returned to power in 1982.

Carlsson is a popular figure in Sweden's Social Democratic circles and he has promised to stick to Palme's policies.

Carlsson, 51, a cross-country skier who picks mushrooms in the summer, is the son of a working class family. Palme, though an ardent socialist, was born into an aristocratic Stockholm family.

A quiet man who lacks Palme's flamboyance, Carlsson has served the party in several posts. After he was named to head the party, Carlsson said, "The political course will remain, there will not be any changes."

He told a news conference that "there have not been any important decisions that Olof Palme and I did not reach in cooperation with one another."

Carlsson conceded he lacked Palme's extensive experience in international affairs, but said Sweden's role in the world would not change.

"Olof Palme's work will not disappear with Olof Palme," he said.

Carlsson was born in 1934 and graduated from Sweden's Lund University, where he studied political science, in 1958. He went on to study at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill.

Carlsson became a protege of Palme early in his political life, and the two men remained close associates for nearly three decades.

Carlsson's path to the top was rapid one. Between 1958 and 1960 he was assistant to Prime Minister Tage Erlander at the Cabinet Office.

In 1965 Carlsson became, at 31, the youngest member of the Riksdag, or Swedish parliament.

He entered the Cabinet for the first time in 1969 when he served as minister of education and cultural affairs. He was minister of housing in 1973 and minister for the environment in 1985.

Blond, bespectacled and lanky, Carlsson is considered a dry, polite speaker in public, but witty and humorous in private.

Swedish newspapers have emphasized the difference between Palme's aristocratic background and Carlsson's blue-collar origins. Carlsson was born in the southwestern Swedish village of Boraas and is the son of a warehouse worker. His mother was a cleaning woman.

He married his high school sweetheart, Ingrid, now 51, a school librarian. They have two daughters, Pia, 23 and Ingela, 21.

MARCOS

Meanwhile, hundreds of supporters of Vice Mayor Johnny Wilson of the Manila financial district of Makati demonstrated today against the Aquino government's appointment of Jejomar Binay as "officer in charge" following the death of Makati Mayor Nemesio Yabut.

The protest was one of several against Mrs. Aquino's moves to oust Marcos supporters from both local and national government.

Manila-area demonstrations Monday included 500 people in Quezon City demanding retention of Mayor Adelina Rodriguez and 1,000 in Caloocan in support of Mayor Macario Asiastio. There also were demonstrations in Malabon, Navotas, Valenzuela, Pasig, Muntinlupa, Las Pinas and San Juan. Several other protests were reported outside the Manila area.

Mrs. Aquino said in an interview with The Associated Press that some officials were being replaced because they had used terrorism to intimidate voters in the fraud-tainted Feb. 7 presidential election.

"In those areas where killings had indeed occurred and where the mayor or governor and his men were still terrorizing people, then it was urgently needed to make some changes," she said.

Aquilino Pimentel, the new minister of local government, told the AP fewer than 10 mayors had been fired, but that more dismissals were forthcoming.

Pimentel said he would prefer local officials be elected but "practical considerations" prevented that.

U.S. considers seeking Marcos reimbursement

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials say they are still considering whether family members and associates of former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos should be required to pay for the more than $12,000 in clothes and other items they "charged" at an Air Force exchange on the island of Guam.

The Air Force said Monday that the roughly 90 Filipinos traveling with Marcos last week as he fled his homeland were allowed to use the exchange at Andersen Air Base on Guam. The group later flew on to Hawaii.

The Air Force said the base exchange has not been paid for the purchases, but referred additional queries on the matter to the State Department. A spokesman there, Ken Bailes, said the question of payment for the purchases "is still being looked at."

Last week, the State Department said the federal government would absorb only the cost of transportation, lodging and security for the Marcos party. Despite that statement, Bailes indicated it was still unclear whether the Filipinos would be asked to pay for the exchange purchases.

"All I can say right now is that we're looking at the question," he said.

The Air Force stressed that final reports had yet to be "validated," but said the Marcos party purchased clothing and other goods worth $12,256.69 while spending the night on Guam.

Since arriving in Hawaii, Marcos and his entourage have been staying in quarters at Hickham Air Force Base. Members of the Marcos party were allowed to shop at the base commissary after hours, but officials have not said how the purchases were paid for.

"The group needed food and clothing, things like that," said Capt. Kevin Krejcarek, spokesman for the 15th Air Base Wing at Hickam.

"They were after personal basic necessities. They weren't allowed near the stereo and hi-fi department," he said. "As to how they paid for the merchandise, I don't know. That information has not been released yet."

Although there have been no reports that Marcos or his associates were carrying American currency with them when they fled Manila, Marcos was allowed to take several crates with him when he resigned his office, some of which are said to hold large amounts of Philippine currency.

The Central Bank of the Philippines is seeking an injunction to recover the pesos Marcos took with him and may also try to seize the other assets, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said Monday.

The group reportedly also brought jewels valued at $1 million and documents with them, which the Customs Service has impounded.

U.S. considers unmannned space missions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is debating whether to resurrect unmanned, throwaway rockets as a temporary replacement for the grounded shuttle fleet in delivering military and commercial satellites into space.

Acting NASA Administrator William Graham announced Monday he has ordered investigation of the possibility as part of a search for "alternative approaches," based on the premise that the Jan. 28 Challenger explosion could ground the three remaining orbiters for up to 18 months.

The announcement said unmanned rockets — used infrequently in recent years as shuttle flights multiplied — could deliver national security, scientific and commercial equipment, and communications satellites, into space. Graham did not say what he meant by national security items, but that apparently was a reference to surveillance satellites.

In addition to NASA's own efforts, one source, who asked not to be identified by name, said an interagency group is considering the same approach and is expected to forward its recommendation to President Reagan shortly.

That group — comprising officials from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Pentagon and White House Office of Management and Budget — also is expected to recommend construction of an orbiter to replace the destroyed Challenger, Graham told Congress last week.

He estimated that construction of a replacement shuttle could take 3½ years.

Challenger blew up 73 seconds into its flight on Jan. 28, killing its seven-member crew in the nation's worst space disaster.

In another development, administration officials, speaking on condition they not be identified, said former NASA Administrator James Fletcher remains the most likely choice to become the next full-time head of the space agency. He would replace James Beggs, who resigned last week, several weeks after his indictment on charges unrelated to his government tenure.

Meanwhile, a presidential commission continued its probe into the cause of the Challenger disaster, and is expected to hold a public hearing Friday at Cape Canaveral, Fla.

The commission has split into several working groups, with contingents dispatched to Cape Canaveral, the Johnson Space Center in Houston and the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala.

The commission is expected to report to Reagan on the cause of the accident by the end of June, but it will likely be many months more before the shuttle is deemed safe to fly again.

In the meantime, NASA has business lined up into the next decade from customers who want their hardware sent into orbit, and Graham's statement was an indication that the space agency is attempting to fill at least part of the need.

Only three commercial satellites were launched on throwaway rockets last year by the United States. But the European commercial launch agency Arianespace uses such rockets.

Clarification

In the Friday, Feb. 28, edition of the Reporter-Telegram, a story on Midland Memorial Hospital looking for new ways to raise revenues stated that MMH paid $1 million for West Texas Pathology Laboratory.

The hospital paid that amount for the building housing the lab, not the lab itself.

Astronauts favor development of launch escape system

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Four astronauts who hope to fly again on space shuttles would like to have a launch escape system to avoid a Challenger-like accident, but they believe such a system is not yet possible.

Henry Hartsfield, Joe Engle, Vance Brand and Gordon Fullerton, former shuttle commanders who on Monday broke a month-long silence, said launch escape systems have been studied on shuttles, but none were developed.

Early space flights had ejection seats that accommodated only two crewmembers.

"I think it would be desirable to have that capability," said Engle. "It's theoretically possible, but whether or not it would be practical is another thing."

"It would be great," added Fullerton. "But I'm enough of a realist to say that if I held out for that nobody would ever fly again with this present shuttle system."

Challenger exploded Jan. 28, 73 seconds after launch. The shuttle carried no launch escape system that could have permitted the crew to escape.

Brand said there are systems where crewmembers would be pulled from the cabin by small rockets and then parachuted to Earth.

"That level of a thing we might be able to implement in a reasonable time," he said. "If you go to something very exotic, like an escape capsule as we've had on some airplanes, I think you'd absolutely have to go to a new program and a new vehicle. It would take too long."

In any case, he said, "we're not going to get 100 percent safety."

Hartsfield said studies have been done on a launch escape system that would involve blowing out the top of the solid rockets to reduce the thrust to zero and slow the craft.

"We had some other studies that showed even if you did that, the orbiter would probably tear up," he said.

Hartsfield said studies were done on escape pods, where the whole cabin would be popped off and parachuted to Earth.

"To build a pod that could eject in that kind of dynamic pressure ... and to make it strong enough that it didn't tear up, and put a parachute on it, you ended up with a system so heavy that you couldn't carry any payload," he said.

None of the four astronauts said they knew before Challenger blew up that engineers were concerned about the safety of the solid rocket boosters used on the shuttle, but that they felt they should have been informed.

"I was angry about it," said Hartsfield. "Still am."

"Normally we are informed about such safety issues," Brand said. "It was an oversight that none of us know about this."

He said that pressure to fly could have played into the decision to launch Challenger, even though some engineers had misgivings.

"As long as I have been here we've had pressure from the schedule," he said. For the crew, he said, most ofthe pressure is to get trained in time for the mission and "we assume that the hardware is marching on down a schedule and when launch day comes it will be ready."

Hartsfield said he's never felt any pressure to launch and, in fact, was allowed to postpone his August 1984 mission by a day out of safety concerns.

All four said morale in the astronaut corps was high now, recovering from a period in which as Engle put it: "We went to far too many memorial services."

They said everyone wanted to fly, but not until the problem that destroyed Challenger is found and corrected. They said they would insist upon repair of a a seal design that is suspected of causing failure of a solid rocket booster. The seal should be redesigned even though it has not been proven that it was the primary cause of the Challenger accident, they said.

"Before I get on that sucker again," said Hartsfield, "I'd like to get the seal problem fixed."

But even with the rockets redesigned, said Hartsfield, "ascent is a risky business. It'll always be risky."

Relocating air bases would cost $8 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — With its leases on Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Naval Station in the Philippines up for renewal in 1991, the Pentagon estimates relocation of the huge complexes would cost around $8 billion and put American forces far from potential hot spots, congressional and Pentagon sources say.

A classified Pentagon report, which was to be submitted to Congress today, says that if those two bases are lost, the most stable potential spots to relocate would be Guam and Tinian islands, according to the sources, who spoke only on the condition they not be identified.

New Philippines President Corazon Aquino, who took over from Ferdinand Marcos last week, has said she is open to the possibility of allowing the bases — the largest outside the United States — to remain.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, while declining to discuss contents of the report, told reporters Sunday following a television taping that the United States is optimistic about the future of its bases after 1991.

"It's very important to the Philippines, it's very important for us, so we want to keep them there just as long as we can, and things look very favorable," he said.

WORLD

The report was ordered by Congress last fall at about the same time Pentagon requests for new construction at Clark and Subic were reduced. Lawmakers voting for the reduction said it made no sense to pour large amounts of money into the two bases if the United States might not have them after 1991.

The report, which will not be released publicly, also outlines ways to improve the security at Clark and Subic, which has been the subject of Capitol Hill criticism in recent months, the sources said.

At his last news conference, President Reagan said, "One cannot minimize the importance of those bases, not only to us, but the western world and certainly to the Philippines themselves."

The bases are the main U.S. outposts in the western Pacific and Indian Ocean area. They would be difficult to replace, partly because of their sheer size. Clark sits on 131,000 acres, while Subic is within a 36,000-acre district.

A key problem in moving the bases to Guam and Tinian would be the loss of a large, highly skilled work force.

About 17,000 Filipinos work at Clark and 28,000 are employed at Subic. Many of the local workers at the naval base are third generation and they are able to provide almost any repairs that can be done at a U.S. yard, meaning Navy ships don't have to be sent all the way back to the United States for work.

At Guam, the United States maintains Andersen Air Base, which dates back to World War II. Some of the missions from Clark could be shifted there, but the island is 1,500 miles east of the Philippines, and major and costly construction would be needed before the base could be the center of large operations, the sources said.

On Tinian, about 120 miles from Guam, the United States leases nearly 20,000 acres, but development there also would require costly construction.

Both Guam and Tinian are under the control of the United States.

"There are other places you could move the U.S. bases to, like Japan or Australia, but you have the same potential problem there as in the Philippines — you don't know if we'll be welcome down the road," explained one source.

While Mrs. Aquino has refused to say flatly that she will permit the U.S. bases to remain, American officials are hopeful an agreement can be worked out.

"I am now cautiously optimistic about the future of those bases," Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said last week. "We are in a lot better position than we were before Mrs. Aquino took over."

However, he added that "alternatives are certainly something we need to look closely at. There is a real danger that we could be essentially blackmailed when we maintain bases in foreign countries and that is something we want to avoid."

Aquino administration sets up makeshift offices

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — "As you can see, everthing is a mess," Sherry Marcaida tells a visitor to the temporary seat of the administration of President Corazon Aquino.

Until Mrs. Aquino moves her government to Malacanang Palace, abandoned by former President Ferdinand E. Marcos when he fled into exile, power in the Philippines is being exercised from the seven-story, cement Jose Cojuangco and Sons Building in Manila's financial district of Makati.

The building stands on a narrow street behind parking garages for more impressive structures on Makati's main boulevard, and has no formal entrance or landscaping.

Visitors enter through a back door where vendors hawking peanuts, cigarettes and ice cream mingle with curiosity seekers wanting to see the new 53-year-old president.

On a Saturday visit, Mrs. Marcaida pointed out the crowded corner occupied by the volunteer group christened "Cory's Crusaders," after Mrs. Aquino's nickname. The corner also includes a bust of the president's husband, former Sen. Benigno Aquino, who was assassinated in 1983 when he returned to the Philippines from self-imposed exile in the United States.

The only physical reminder of Marcos, who held power for 20 years, is a sign quoting him: "The real dissenter is he who does not passively acquiese to the existence of preventable evils, but struggles with all his might, intellectual, moral and physical to banish them."

Phones ring constantly, ashtrays overflow with cigarette butts and blackboards are scrawled with orders for the "food brigade."

The atmosphere is one of barely controlled confusion, and the answer to many questions is "I don't know."

"We are not organized. We are all housewives like her," said Ching Montinola, echoing the way Mrs. Aquino often described herself in her election campaign against Marcos.

Mrs. Montinola moved on to a single table with four mismatched chairs. "That's where the foreign correspondents work," she said, referring to the hundreds of journalists who came to Manila for the Feb. 7 election and stayed to cover the flight of Marcos.

President Aquino expects to work but not live in Malacanang Palace, the palatial home of her predecessor. "We have to clean and sanitize it," said Mrs. Montinola. "We don't know when she will officially move there."

Mexico seeks $6 billion to make foreign debt payments

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico will seek about $6 billion from international financial organizations to meet foreign debt payments this year, the same amount it expects to lose in 1986 because of falling oil prices, the Treasury Department said Monday.

At the same time, the government will try to offset falling oil earnings by promoting non-petroleum exports and seeking reductions in interest rates on Mexico's $96.4 billion foreign debt, the department said in a statement.

The announcements followed a trip to Washington last week by Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog to present Mexico's debt dilemma directly to creditors. No details of his meetings were released during the trip.

Silva Herzog and central bank chief Miguel Mancera also delivered personally the sentiments of President Miguel de la Madrid. The president said in speech Feb. 21 that creditors must be prepared to share with Mexico the hardships of paying off the developing world's second biggest foreign debt.

The $6 billion in new money, to be sought chiefly from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, is needed to meet payments this year of $10 billion in interest and $2.5 billion on the debt principal.

Officials hope any package negotiated with those organizations will lead to "a new package" of payment terms with other creditors, the department said.

A Mexican delegation is already in Washington for talks this week on getting new credits from the World Bank, which offers "more favorable conditions than can be obtained in the market," the department said.

Officials also hope to resume talks as soon as possible with the International Monetary Fund on more credits from that organization, the statement said.

Silva Herzog and Mancera talked in Washington with U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, IMF Director Jacque de Larosiere and World Bank President A.W. Clausen.

Northern Ireland strike ends after 24-hour violence

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Businesses and factories reopened today after a violent 24-hour strike, called to protest an agreement giving the Irish Republic a role in Northern Ireland, virtually paralyzed the province.

Police said 40 people, including 35 police, were injured Monday and about 40 people were arrested.

Protestant leaders called for a peaceful strike to protest the Nov. 15 British-Irish agreement that gives the predominantly Roman Catholic Irish Republic a formal consultative role in running this British province, where Protestants outnumber Catholics 3-2.

Violence broke out soon after the strike began at midnight Sunday, and toward the end of the 24-hour strike period, strikers clashed with mainly Protestant police force, burned cars and erected road blocks.

Masked men fired 32 shots at two police patrols in Belfast and officers replied with plastic bullets, but no one was hurt in the incident, police said.

In Belfast, British officials who announced the new casualty figures, three times higher than those reported late Monday, blamed the violence on James Molyneaux and the Rev. Ian Paisley, leaders of the two main Protestant parties.

"They let the genie out of the bottle and they must take the responsibility for it," said Nicholas Scott, deputy Northern Ireland secretary.

The strike closed most businesses and schools. Electricity cuts averaging four hours hit almost every area, a dozen towns were blockaded and transport was disrupted.

In Dublin today, Irish Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald criticized Protestant political leaders for being unable to control "new and unleashed forces."

"It was politically unwise of northern politicians to go along that path. It is not the constitutional path," FitzGerald said.

FitzGerald spoke to reporters before his Cabinet met to debate the protest.

Embarrassed by the violence, Molyneaux, who leads the Official Unionist Party, said he was "shocked and horrified." But hardliner Paisley, leader of the smaller Democratic Unionist Party, called the strike a great success.

Moderate Catholic leaders today renewed charges that police turned a blind eye to Protestant excesses, including failing to clear roadblocks so people could get to work.

Scott defended the police, saying officers were sometimes slow to react because they were outnumbered.

Sir John Hermon, chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the province's police force, said Monday that strike organizers were "grievously at fault" for not preventing intimidation and violence.

At a mock funeral for democracy Monday outside Belfast City Hall, Protestant leaders told a crowd of 5,000 that British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was killing democracy in the province.

Mrs. Thatcher repeatedly has said Britain will not cancel the accord which also provides for increased security cooperation with the Irish Republic to counter the mainly Catholic Irish Republican Army.

The IRA, outlawed on both sides of the border, is fighting to set up a united Ireland under a leftist administration.

The Anglo-Irish accord states that Ireland cannot be united without the agreement of the majority in Northern Ireland, and maintains the status of Northern Ireland as part of the United Kingdom.

Northern Ireland Secretary Tom King said the strike was a "pointless gesture" because it would not change British policy.

A satiric cartoon by a Soviet artist depicts the challenge between the old ways and new technology in the Soviet Union. The abacus is still widely used in Soviet stores, and the reluctance to incorporate technology is under attack by the new party leadership.

Soviets to trade abacus for computer

An Analysis

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soviet leaders have vowed during the Communist Party Congress to make their economy the world's most productive by the end of the century, but have provided few details about how they plan to make the leap from the abacus to the computer age.

Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov outlined Monday what he called a "grandiose" plan to vastly increase the grain harvest by 1990, and the goal of doubling factory output by the year 2000.

But some of the specific goals the Soviets are setting are identical to targets set in 1981 that have gone unmet. At the same time, the congress officially abandoned promises made 25 years ago under the leadership of Nikita S. Khrushchev.

The 1981 program said that in 10 years the Soviets would surpass the United States in per capita production. By 1981, the program promised a doubling of grain production and a five-fold increase in industrial output. It said automation would eliminate most manual labor and that computers would be in wide use.

However, at the party congress currently under way in Moscow, ranking members of the Soviet Communist Party beginning with General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev, have focused on the mistakes of the past. They repeatedly have criticized the "inertia" of the 1964-1982 era of Leonid I. Brezhnev.

They have denounced inefficiency in government ministries and party organizations, as well as reluctance by industry and agriculture officials to incorporate new techniques that could result in better performance.

But no one has spelled out precisely how the Soviet Union will make the swing from the abacus, still is widely used in Soviet stores, to the computer era.

Ryzhkov gave no figures for computer output, in which the Soviets have been plagued by difficulties such as producing floppy disks, but said computer production would double by 1990 and the output of industrial robots would triple.

More than 20 million workers will be freed from monotonous manual labor in the next 15 years, he said.

Ryzhkov said greater efficiency, mechanization, increased investment and better application of scientific discoveries would boost factory and farm production.

He produced a battery of isolated statistics that did not give a full picture of present production or its future expansion, and did not detail how or when Gorbachev's promised "radical reforms" would be implemented.

In keeping with the practice of the past five years, he did not reveal the size of the 1985 grain harvest, estimated in the West to have been about 190 million tons.

Ryzhkov called for an increase in grain production to at least 250 million tons a year by 1990. That is the same figure set for 1985 by the 1981 party gathering, the final one under Brezhnev.

In a speech to the congress Saturday, Oil Minister Vasily A. Dinkov said oil output should reach 625 to 640 million tons a year by 1990, mostly through technological improvements.

That, too, is the same goal set five years ago. However, output fell to 595 million tons last year, and the Soviet Union will have to increase production at least 5 percent to reach the old target.

Brezhnev was not mentioned by name, but Ryzhkov said "unfavorable tendencies" developed in the 1970s and "grew sharper in the early 1980s rather than relaxing."

In both Moscow and the provinces, "many leaders continued to act by outdated methods," Ryzhkov said. Discipline "deteriorated to an intolerable level" and downward revision of production targets became a common practice, he said.

Although Ryzhkov promised large increases in investment and a 30 percent boost in consumer goods production by 1990, he signaled that the Kremlin will not shortchange the military. The armed forces will have "everything they need to defend the motherland," he said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Scott's food from 1912 found near South Pole

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — New Zealand Antarctic researchers have found a food dump left by British explorer Capt. Robert Scott during his 1912 quest to be the first person to reach the South Pole, a government spokesman said today.

A field party found several boxes of food on Ross Island during the summer season just completed, said the spokesman for the Science Department's Antarctic division.

The cache included candles, tins of cocoa, egg powder, jam, sardines and matches. Some items were dated 1910.

They were never used by Scott, whose party died on its return journey from the pole in 1912. The expeditioners were narrowly beaten to the pole by Norwegian explorer Roald Amundsen.

The items are to displayed in a Christchurch museum, the spokesman said.

Paris bomb injures 11

PARIS (AP) — Eleven people were injured, two burned seriously, in a Monday night explosion at a working class bar frequented by Yugoslavs, officials said.

The explosion occured at 10:10 p.m. at the Admir bar near the Place de la Republique, fire and police officials said. Three people were hospitalized, two of them suffering burns, police said, and eight others were treated for minor injuries and released.

Police said an initial inquiry showed no trace of explosive and that the cause of the blast was undetermined.

The door of the bar was blasted out onto the sidewalk along with the front windows. There was no fire.

Kharg island bombed

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi warplanes bombed Iran's main oil terminal at Kharg island Monday, a day after Iranian helicopter gunships rocketed two ships in an escalating war on the oil-rich Persian Gulf's sealanes.

Iranian and Iraqi troops battled at the Iranian-held Iraqi peninsula of Faw in the south, and in northeastern heights along the 733-mile border. Iran claimed its forces captured strategic heights in the northeast and killed 500 Iraqis on Faw.

Independent confirmation of battle claims of the two neighbors, at war since September 1980, was not available.

But gulf-based marine salvage executives in Bahrain confirmed that five oil tankers and a cargo ship have been crippled in the gulf over the past week — four attacked by the Iraqis and two by the Iranians. Three crew members, a Turk and two Filipinos, have been killed in the attacks.

An Iraqi military spokesman said on Baghdad radio that attacking Iraqi jet fighters set ablaze the Kharg oil installations. Kharg, on the northeastern part of the gulf, accounts for 90 percent of Iranian oil exports, and has been badly battered in almost daily Iraqi air raids since August.

Pro-choice ads protested

ROME (NYT) — Vatican officials said Monday that antiabortion groups in the United States were urging the Holy See to take action against the signers of advertisements asserting the right of Roman Catholics to dissent on the issue of abortion.

The remarks by the officials came in response to questions concerning an advertisement in The New York Times on Sunday. The advertisement, which carried the names of more than 1,000 Catholics, asserted "the right to responsible dissent within the Church."

This hand is from the playoff to determine the winner of the Reisinger Board-a-Match Team championship at the recent Fall North American Championships. After six sessions, the U.S. team that only a few days earlier had won the World Team Championship was tied with that of Dr. George Rosenkranz of Mexico City, and a 12-deal playoff was scheduled.

Sitting South for the U.S. team was Peter Pender. His two diamond opening bid showed a weak two-bid in one of the major suits. North's two no trump asked for clarification, and the rest of the auction was natural.

West might have read his partner for a club void, but he elected to lead a low diamond. East won the king, and he could have insured the contract's defeat by returning a low diamond to his partner's queen. It would not have been difficult for West to work out what was going on.

Instead, East elected to cash the ace of diamonds and then shift to the queen of spades. Declarer won, and the fate of the contract now hinged on declarer bringing in the trump suit without loss. The percentage play is to take the finesse, but Pender unhesitatingly cashed the ace and king to pick up the queen. Why?

Declarer realized that, had East held the queen of trumps, he could be sure of scoring a trick with the lady by leading a third diamond and forcing declarer to ruff in dummy. Since he did not do that, declarer reasoned he did not have the queen, and so took the anti-percentage play for his contract.

The Rosenkranz team lost the board, but went on to win the playoff by a score of 7-5.

Film industry honors Tracy

NEW YORK (AP) — Friends who gathered to remember Spencer Tracy agreed wholeheartedly that he was born to act, but it was longtime companion and co-star Katharine Hepburn who knew "living wasn't easy" for Tracy and that each new role let him "be someone else."

More than 1,600 people paid up to $500 each Monday night, nearly 19 years after his death, to honor Tracy at Broadway's Majestic Theater in a benefit for the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, his alma mater.

"Living wasn't easy for you was it?" Miss Hepburn said, reading a letter she had written to him a year ago. "Walking didn't suit you. That was one of those things where you could think at the same time."

However, Tracy, with whom she starred in nine films, was the greatest actor, she said. "You couldn't enter your own life, but you could be someone else. You weren't you then. You were safe."

All of the other stars who gathered onstage agreed Tracy was born to act.

"He never assumed the role of an actor. He said words like he had written them or that he had just thought of them," Frank Sinatra said.

Robert Wagner, who served as master of ceremonies, referred to Tracy as "my old friend, my mentor and the man I thought of as a second father."

Director Stanley Kramer recalled Tracy as a tough guy who "had a facade — he didn't want to get into the sticky side of any relationship or talk."

"I loved him," concluded Kramer.

Tracy died in 1967, shortly after completing "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" with Miss Hepburn and Poitier, directed by Kramer. He won two Academy Awards for acting: "Captains Courageous" in 1937 and "Boys Town" in 1938.

Tracy began his career in 1930 and made 74 films. His movies with Miss Hepburn ranged from "Woman of the Year" in 1942 and "Adam's Rib" in 1949 to "Pat and Mike" in 1952 and "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" in 1967.

Although Tracy's late wife was mentioned, it was the Tracy-Hepburn team that got much of the attention during the benefit.

Miss Hepburn, 76, welcomed Tracy's daughter, Susie, to the stage and Miss Tracy accepted an award "for my father, my mother, for (my brother) John and for myself."

Miss Tracy's mother, Louise Treadwell Tracy, married the actor in 1923. Although they separated after about 10 years, they never divorced.

Superior Court Judge Murray G. Simon appointed accountant Anthony Crincoli to take charge of the singer and her affairs. Crincoli was described in court papers as a longtime family friend who has advised the singer professionally and personally.

Miss Francis was taken to the Miami Mental Health Center in January after a disturbance at the Grand Bay Hotel in Cocoanut Grove, Fla., authorities said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Dr. Seuss, whose Grinch and other characters are beloved by children, has turned his attention to a new group of readers — former children.

The result, published to coincide with the author's 82nd birthday Sunday, is "You're Only Old Once," the first adult book in almost 50 years by Theodore Seuss Geisel, whose pen name is Dr. Seuss.

But is it really an adult book?

The outgrowth of Geisel's trips to the hospital for heart problems and other ailments, "You're Only Old Once" tells the woeful tale of an elderly patient's trip to a typically Seuss-like hospital, the "Golden Years Clinic on Century Square for Spleen Readjustment and Muffler Repair."

The book adheres to the usual Dr. Seuss format, with whimsical illustrations.

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Actor Robert Wagner is planning to produce a film on the life of Samantha Smith, the 13-year-old who played one of his two daughters in ABC's "Lime Street" series before she died in a plane crash last summer.

"It's in the preliminary stages and nothing has been done as yet," Lucille Marcus of Rogers & Cowan, the firm that handles Wagner's publicity, said Monday.

She said Wagner intends to meet with Soviet officials to discuss plans for the two-hour movie, which will portray Samantha's 1983 tour of the Soviet Union as a young peace advocate and her emergence as an international celebrity.

She was returning home from filming a "Lime Street" episode last August when she, her father, Arthur Smith, and six others died in a Bar Harbor Airlines crash in Auburn.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

Wednesday, March 5, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: This is the start of a year of adjustments that will eventually produce great rewards. The combination of your exceptional intellect and creative ingenuity grants you the ability to excel at many endeavors. Keep a careful watch over financial investments. Love becomes a powerful force in the year ahead, giving greater meaning to all that you do. Your sensibility to the needs of others may result in your dreams coming true.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: "Hill Street Blues" regulars James B. Sikking and Michael Weaver, singer Andy Gibb, "My Fair Lady's" Rex Harrison, actress Samantha Eggar, actors Dean Stockwell and Paul Sand.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Devote extra time to creative endeavors. Those who earn a living by being artistic enjoy positive influences. Your work increases but so does your income. Spend the evening with family.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You should do well in stocks or real estate today. Listen to a "hot tip" from a financial expert. Do not commit yourself to an unpredictable romantic relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You will have more than your fair share of responsibility. Try to delegate more authority, freeing time for creative/artistic pursuits. Entertain at home; other social functions could prove costly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Put all your cards on the table; a relative may extend a short-term loan. Home improvements add to the value of real estate. Look for solutions to a teenager's problems.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Others are willing to back your pet projects if you agree to spell out every detail. Avoid tendency to procrastinate or make excuses. Spend some time with a loved one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accommodate others even if you must rearrange your schedule. Use influence sparingly; your reputation may be at stake. An older person suddenly becomes the center of your romantic attentions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Even though your versatility is put to the supreme test, you will pass with flying colors. Make good the commitments to small fry -- spend some extra time with them.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can meet with great success in business or romance, if you are willing to reconcile or compromise. Some new friends give you valuable new insight into an old problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An unexpected check arrives in time to avoid heavy interest charges or even embarrassment. Old friends and relatives will provide strong support when you most need it. Romance takes on a new glow!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take advantage of any assistance offered by a friend. Financial realities dictate certain decisions. Remember that peace of mind is far better than constant anxiety.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your keen ability to think clearly under fire wins the attention of superiors and helps you surpass the stiff competition. A new ally brings excitement into your life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try a new approach to financial problems. Advice from an expert will help you make a profit. Marital difficulties are eased after a candid talk with your mate.

You should be thrilled when your opponents pay you the compliment of recognizing your skill at the game. But you have a right to feel ambivalent about the matter when the gesture costs you points.

This hand is from the playoff to determine the winner of the Reisinger Board-a-Match Team championship at the recent Fall North American Championships. After six sessions, the U.S. team that only a few days earlier had won the World Team Championship was tied with that of Dr. George Rosenkranz of Mexico City, and a 12-deal playoff was scheduled.

Sitting South for the U.S. team was Peter Pender. His two diamond opening bid showed a weak two-bid in one of the major suits. North's two no trump asked for clarification, and the rest of the auction was natural.

West might have read his partner for a club void, but he elected to lead a low diamond. East won the king, and he could have insured the contract's defeat by returning a low diamond to his partner's queen. It would not have been difficult for West to work out what was going on.

Instead, East elected to cash the ace of diamonds and then shift to the queen of spades. Declarer won, and the fate of the contract now hinged on declarer bringing in the trump suit without loss. The percentage play is to take the finesse, but Pender unhesitatingly cashed the ace and king to pick up the queen. Why?

Declarer realized that, had East held the queen of trumps, he could be sure of scoring a trick with the lady by leading a third diamond and forcing declarer to ruff in dummy. Since he did not do that, declarer reasoned he did not have the queen, and so took the anti-percentage play for his contract.

The Rosenkranz team lost the board, but went on to win the playoff by a score of 7-5.

Film industry honors Tracy

NEW YORK (AP) — Friends who gathered to remember Spencer Tracy agreed wholeheartedly that he was born to act, but it was longtime companion and co-star Katharine Hepburn who knew "living wasn't easy" for Tracy and that each new role let him "be someone else."

More than 1,600 people paid up to $500 each Monday night, nearly 19 years after his death, to honor Tracy at Broadway's Majestic Theater in a benefit for the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, his alma mater.

"Living wasn't easy for you was it?" Miss Hepburn said, reading a letter she had written to him a year ago. "Walking didn't suit you. That was one of those things where you could think at the same time."

However, Tracy, with whom she starred in nine films, was the greatest actor, she said. "You couldn't enter your own life, but you could be someone else. You weren't you then. You were safe."

All of the other stars who gathered onstage agreed Tracy was born to act.

"He never assumed the role of an actor. He said words like he had written them or that he had just thought of them," Frank Sinatra said.

Robert Wagner, who served as master of ceremonies, referred to Tracy as "my old friend, my mentor and the man I thought of as a second father."

Director Stanley Kramer recalled Tracy as a tough guy who "had a facade — he didn't want to get into the sticky side of any relationship or talk."

"I loved him," concluded Kramer.

Tracy died in 1967, shortly after completing "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" with Miss Hepburn and Poitier, directed by Kramer. He won two Academy Awards for acting: "Captains Courageous" in 1937 and "Boys Town" in 1938.

Tracy began his career in 1930 and made 74 films. His movies with Miss Hepburn ranged from "Woman of the Year" in 1942 and "Adam's Rib" in 1949 to "Pat and Mike" in 1952 and "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" in 1967.

Although Tracy's late wife was mentioned, it was the Tracy-Hepburn team that got much of the attention during the benefit.

Miss Hepburn, 76, welcomed Tracy's daughter, Susie, to the stage and Miss Tracy accepted an award "for my father, my mother, for (my brother) John and for myself."

Miss Tracy's mother, Louise Treadwell Tracy, married the actor in 1923. Although they separated after about 10 years, they never divorced.

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A judge has appointed a legal guardian for singer Connie Francis, who is hospitalized in a psychiatric clinic for manic-depressive psychosis.

Superior Court Judge Murray G. Simon appointed accountant Anthony Crincoli to take charge of the singer and her affairs. Crincoli was described in court papers as a longtime family friend who has advised the singer professionally and personally.

Miss Francis was taken to the Miami Mental Health Center in January after a disturbance at the Grand Bay Hotel in Cocoanut Grove, Fla., authorities said.

Geisel

NEW YORK (AP) — Dr. Seuss, whose Grinch and other characters are beloved by children, has turned his attention to a new group of readers — former children.

The result, published to coincide with the author's 82nd birthday Sunday, is "You're Only Old Once," the first adult book in almost 50 years by Theodore Seuss Geisel, whose pen name is Dr. Seuss.

But is it really an adult book?

The outgrowth of Geisel's trips to the hospital for heart problems and other ailments, "You're Only Old Once" tells the woeful tale of an elderly patient's trip to a typically Seuss-like hospital, the "Golden Years Clinic on Century Square for Spleen Readjustment and Muffler Repair."

The book adheres to the usual Dr. Seuss format, with whimsical illustrations.

Wagner

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Actor Robert Wagner is planning to produce a film on the life of Samantha Smith, the 13-year-old who played one of his two daughters in ABC's "Lime Street" series before she died in a plane crash last summer.

"It's in the preliminary stages and nothing has been done as yet," Lucille Marom of Rogers & Cowan, the firm that handles Wagner's publicity, said Monday.

She said Wagner intends to meet with Soviet officials to discuss plans for the two-hour movie, which will portray Samantha's 1983 tour of the Soviet Union as a young peace advocate and her emergence as an international celebrity.

She was returning home from filming a "Lime Street" episode last August when she, her father, Arthur Smith, and six others died in a Bar Harbor Airlines crash in Auburn.

Hope

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — An internationally televised comedy program starring Bob Hope will go on as scheduled despite the assassination of Prime Minister Olof Palme, but a brief tribute to the slain leader will lead the show, organizers said.

The show, which will be broadcast March 19 in the United States, was taped in Stockholm because Hope is here for a stage show featuring Glen Campbell, Omar Sharif, Boy George and Culture Club, Norwegian actress Liv Ullman and tennis star Bjorn Borg. The show is a command performance before King Carl Gustaf and Queen Silvia.

Pepper

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — About 2,200 senior citizens turned out in this Gulf Coast retirement haven to applaud Claude Pepper, 85, dean of the U.S. House of Representatives and champion of the nation's elderly people.

To the cheers of the audience, Gov. Bob Graham proclaimed Monday "Claude Pepper Day" in honor of the veteran Democrat.

"I'm proud to say I'm of the older generation," said Pepper, who has served in the House since 1962. He was one of Florida's U.S. senators from 1936 to 1950.

Halleck

LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Charles A. Halleck, whose political career spanned 34 years in Congress, died Monday at the age of 85.

Halleck was first elected to Congress in 1935 and served 16 terms in the House of Representatives. Halleck was majority leader in 1946-1948 and 1952-54 and then served as minority leader until 1965. He retired in 1968.

Workfare's value

After a few early setbacks, state "workfare" programs, under which welfare recipients agree to work at public service tasks for some of their benefits, appear to be shaping up as a moderate success.

In fact a recent survey of 11 states where workfare has been instituted has convinced an agency called the Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation that the program, if expanded, could ultimately reduce the costs of welfare to the taxpayer and even chip away at the federal budget deficit.

That in itself is enough to make workfare a commendable program, but of even more importance is the apparent boost the program is giving to the morale of the people involved, according to the research group. While their living standards have not yet improved appreciably, the workfare participants are developing and honing skills and working habits which will prepare them for rejoining the regular labor force.

Researchers have also determined that individuals taking part in workfare are leaving the relief rolls for jobs in the private sector in greater numbers than the non-participating welfare recipients.

That's what any "welfare" system really should be attempting to do — turning unemployable individuals into people who can get jobs and become productive members of society, along with helping out in public while they're unemployed. Without such a program, many of the people who end up on welfare rolls will never be able to escape the cycle of poverty, which translates into a double tragedy: From one aspect, continued dependence on welfare, and from the other, a burden on hard-working taxpaying citizens.

Workfare obviously is providing those who have fallen on hard times with an incentive to pick themselves up and get started again. The program as well as the enrollees are entitled to a fighting chance.

Drainage data needed

Your editorial comment is correct, our City Council was wise in postponing a bond issue. Carroll Thomas suggested properly that all needs should be considered before a vote is presented to taxpayers.

It would be most helpful to the public to have an up-to-date presentation of drainage needs in our city, with maps from consulting drainage engineers showing present and future areas of runoff and current and potential flood areas. The engineers' recommendations for adequate flood channels and bridges would enable citizens to know what is best for our city. It would also be helpful to have the paving engineers' analysis of street paving processes, with suggestions on how to make the paving of major trafficways of greater strength and durability, to match the bond issues. Paving criteria used by the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation might be adapted for city use.

The recent studies toward an eventual master plan included detailed projections and analyses of housing and zoning. Inclusion of the consulting engineers' plans on flood control and drainage, criteria on types of pavings, and plans for parks, parkways, and trafficways would guide city leaders and citizens in determining the long-term financial needs for our city.

Band students ignored

In the "Local News" section of a recent Sunday paper, front page, complete with picture, was an article about four rock n' roll band members in "black leather pants and bizarre hairstyles" who were arrested for going 88 miles per hour through Midland.

The next day 800 area band students came to town. They wore suits and ties, high heels and dresses, were well-behaved, and played Beethoven, Hayden and Mozart. The event was U.I.L. Solo and Ensemble contest at Midland College and this newspaper ignored them.

We must encourage the good and positive in our young people today. A pat on the back for a job well-done is all they ask. Band students, you're the greatest.

Why not Tolentino?

Ferdinand Marcos was sworn in as President of the Republic of the Philippines. He resigned some 12 hours later. Mrs. Corazon Aquino, the defeated presidential candidate, proclaimed a "provisional government" with herself as president immediately thereafter, which the United States recognized. Why?

Why did not Arturo Tolentino, Marcos's running-mate and the duly elected vice president of the Philippines, accede to the vacated office of president, in accord with the Filipino Constitution (modeled on that of the U.S.)? This raises questions as to the legitimacy of the Aquino administration. It also makes one wonder why Secretary of State Shultz was in such a hurry to recognize such a seizure.

Whistle blower's efforts unheeded

WASHINGTON — As a retired Air Force officer, Myron M. Hnatio probably should have guessed what the outcome of his complaint to the government would be.

Jack Anderson

He asked the White House for an "independent inquiry" into the official harassment of his son, John, an Energy Department whistle blower. Instead, the White House turned the matter over to the same bureaucrats the younger Hnatio had exposed.

Not surprisingly, the reply the father got tended to gloss over the mistreatment his son had received from his bosses. Here's the story:

"I do not have faith that an explanation by officials of the Department of Energy would be fair and accurate," Myron Hnatio explained to President Reagan in his letter of Oct. 9, 1984. He, therefore, requested an independent inquiry into the harassment of his son, which we had reported in this column.

John Hnatio's offense was telling congressional investigators about security lapses at government nuclear weapons plants. Not only did his recommendations go unheeded, but Hnatio was slapped with an official reprimand and threatened with the loss of his security clearance, which would have cost him his job.

Belatedly, Hnatio received a grudging apology from the DOE for this response.

The bulk of the criticism, first from Hnatio and then from Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., was leveled against William Hoover, director of the Energy Department's Office of Military Applications; James W. Culpepper, former deputy assistant director for security affairs; and officials in the Office of Safeguards and Security.

Internal files of the White House Correspondence Unit, obtained by our associate Tony Capaccio, show that the elder Hnatio's letter to the president asking for an independent inquiry was sent to Hoover and company for action. In fact, the final version of the reply to Myron Hnatio, submitted to the White House for release, was signed by Hoover.

Hoover told us he bore "no malice aforethought toward John Hnatio." He said the letter to Hnatio's father was "coordinated by my staff," and added, "I didn't provide any facts." Hoover commented, "I would have been just as happy if someone else had responded to the White House, frankly."

The White House reply, dated Jan. 14, 1985, contained no outright lies, but it hardly gave a complete version of some events.

For example, the letter said Hnatio's reprimand was "for what was thought at the time to be a violation of DOE regulations and procedures regarding proper handling of classified material." It failed to note that the reprimanding official had testified: "Both my initial inquiries and discussions with Mr. Hnatio indicated to me that his actions had not resulted in the compromise of classified material."

The letter did note that "due to Mr. Hnatio's belief that the OSS (Office of Safeguards and Security) actions were excessive, a letter of apology was issued for any misunderstanding or unwarranted actions directed to him." It did not mention that the apology was issued under the pressure of Dingell's investigation and an inspector general's report criticizing the actions taken against Hnatio.

Nor did the letter to the father disclose that one of those who had "coordinated" the response had once referred to the inspector general's report as a "piece of (excrement)," and that this official and a colleague had argued against giving John Hnatio the apology.

Footnote: Dingell's investigators plan to review the circumstances surrounding the White House response. Because of an investigation into the harassment of John Hnatio, an Energy Department spokesperson declined comment.

BANKES' BLUES: Back in August 1982, top Mexican officials informed then-secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan that their country couldn't repay its loans from U.S. banks. New loans were hastily arranged so interest payments could be met, and what became known as the international debt crisis limped along from one year to the next. Now Mexico and other debtor nations are making rumbling noises that sound like threats of default or bankruptcy. To the bankers, it's like a replay of 1982, but they're reluctant to follow Treasury Secretary James Baker's plan to put on more Band-Aids in the form of new loans to debtor nations.

Now that she won will Aquino's army fight?

WASHINGTON — The Philippine army's refusal to fight for Ferdinand Marcos was the key factor in a bloodless transfer of power few believed possible, but it also raises concern among Pentagon experts whether its troops will prove any more intrepid in battling communist insurgents.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Credit for the peaceful transition should not be attributed to Marcos' humanitarian impulses, according to Pentagon sources. They say his orders to elite Ranger units to attack the military rebels at Camp Crame were refused, raising a question: Were the Rangers making a political statement against Marcos or were they revealing a lack of discipline?

That is one of many questions asked in Washington about Aquino's new regime. Did President Corazon Aquino mean it during her campaign when she repeatedly promised to "eventually" remove U.S. bases? In the words of one administration official, could "crony capitalism" be replaced by "crony socialism"? Who will emerge dominant in the new anti-Marcos coalition?

Even those Reagan officials who were most worried by the tilt against Marcos are overjoyed that he was forced out without civil war and with the army intact. But they also realize this: Though ridding his country of its authoritarian ruler was surely the beginning of solving Philippine problems, a solution requires much more.

There is no certainty Cory's army will be more effective than Marcos'. Analysts at the Pentagon see perhaps half of the New People's Army (NPA) guerrillas responding to Vice President-Prime Minister Salvador Laurel's amnesty offer. The remaining half are well-armed, hard-core Marxist-Leninists.

In trying to root them out, the new government must do far better than the Marcos army ever did. Visitors to the Philippines, including us, have been appalled at the indiscipline and disinclination of many units to fight the insurgents. What is suspected at the Pentagon is that the refusal of the Rangers to obey orders could have been more evidence of military disarray than rebellion against Marcos.

What's more, the problem of private armies in the interior persists. U.S. intelligence believes Evelio Javier, a former governor of Antique province and a strong Aquino backer, was murdered after the election by just such a gang, not on orders from Manila. During our travels on the island of Mindanao, we found not only the government losing the guerrilla war but also a total breakdown of law and order.

The political acrobatics of Juan Ponce Enrile in keeping the defense portfolio in the Marcos and Aquino Cabinets is no good omen for military reform. Until recently, Enrile was considered part of the problem: a Marcos crony who became a millionaire during long tenure at the Defense Ministry that saw declining military peformance. While Enrile's defection probably prevented civil war, it is no harbinger of change.

More is hoped for from Enrile's co-defector, Gen. Fidel Ramos. A man of rare integrity at senior levels in the Philippines, his failure to accomplish much during a stint as acting chief of staff under Marcos is excused by lack of support from the presidential palace. Over a McDonald's hamburger lunch at Philippine Constabulary headquarters in Quezon City (which one month later would raise the flag of rebellion against Marcos), Ramos told us what no other senior officer would: The people were sick and tired of corruption.

But corruption aside, the Philippine army desperately needs arms and equipment — which means more U.S. aid. During the campaign, candidate Aquino told us her country needed less military aid because NPA insurgents would embrace the new amnesty offer. Ramos and other officers will have to explain that reforming the military will be expensive.

Thus, hopes for a tougher military effort depend, like much else, on Aquino backing away from some campaign pledges — such as abandoning of U.S. bases when the present agreement ends in 1991. To this end, it is notable that her most anti-American supporters are not in her Cabinet.

The new finance minister, industrialist Jaime Ongpin, is viewed by senior American officials as the best hope for economic reform. Although conservative businessmen are suspicious of him, Ongpin personally is concerned that Aquino is to his left and wants to pull her into a free-market mold. He will have help here from the new trade minister, Jose Concepcion, another rich businessman who headed the citizens group (NAMFREL) that declared Aquino the winner.

The Aquino Cabinet is thankfully more conservative than seemed likely in a post-Marcos landscape happily free of the physical and emotional debris of civil war. But doubts must remain, especially whether Cory's army can fight as it will have to in the months and years ahead.

CHARLEY REESE

Small-town America needs energy, talent

SCRANTON, Pa. — You would enjoy this city. It's like being in a time warp — back to a time when going to town meant going to the central city where all the good stores and restaurants were.

Charley Reese

The surrounding mountains, whose seams of anthracite built Scranton and the fortunes of its founders, have in this waning century saved the city from the fate that has befallen many others: being "malled" to death. There isn't any large level plot of land on which to build a shopping mall or a sprawling subdivision, so Scranton remains a living city.

I was given a walking tour by two enthusiastic native sons: Lew Marcus, a reporter for the Scrantonian and Tribune, and Mike Washo, the city's expert on historical preservation and restoration.

It was eerie. It has been a long time since I've been on the night streets of an American city where the lighted windows of shops and restaurants smiled at you. In too many cities night finds deserted office buildings or barricaded windows and empty streets.

It is not just the mountains that have saved Scranton, which had its hard times ahead of other places. The hard-coal industry and the railroads it spawned had their heyday in the late 1800s and the early part of this century. By the 1930s, cheaper natural gas and oil already were killing the hard-coal business, though few recognized it because of the Depression and later the war.

By the 1950s, the mines were starting to shut down and by the 1960s Scranton youngsters were leaving for greener pastures.

Washo and Marcus, who also left, recalled that it was just the accepted thing when they were in high school that you would leave for college and probably not come back. Still, they came back. Marcus, who was working in Boston, turned down a job with the Boston Globe to come home to Scranton. Washo left a higher-paying job in Detroit.

Family, roots and a realization that there are more important things to do with one's life than to pursue a dollar are some of the reasons that brought them back. They obviously care a great deal about their city, and these two friends, each in his own way, work hard to contribute.

They had wanted to show me the Lackawanna and, boy, was it worth the walk. The Lackawanna Railroad's turn-of-the-century terminal has been restored to its full glory and is now a 151-room Hilton Hotel. For a railroad buff, it would be worth a flight to Scranton to spend a weekend there. Outside, a steam engine railroad attraction that will feature a 20-mile ride is being readied. It and the hotel are products of joint government and private efforts.

Another joint project that is flourishing is Scranton's ski resort built right inside the city limits. It will draw as many as 5,000 skiers a weekend.

Washo fears that federal budget cuts will eliminate some of the grant programs that helped Scranton resurrect the Lackawanna and build a ski resort. Part of the problem is political abuse. Urban Development Action Grants were designed to help rebuild old cities, such as Scranton, but politics made them available to new cities too. Tax-free industrial bonds were intended to help hard-pressed communities draw jobs, but have wound up financing developments in already booming areas.

Come what may, the people in Scranton no doubt will find solutions. They have diversified their economy. They have their problems, too, but they are tackling them head-on. The most encouraging sign is that young people such as Marcus and Washo are recognizing that the fast-lane life in the huge metropolitan meccas leaves much to be desired.

If the talent and brains stay or come home, the smaller U.S. cities will flourish again.

If you apply talent and energy to any problem, you will come up with a solution. Fortunately, in the Rustbucket as well as the Sun Belt, America's talent and human energy are not being depleted.

Reagan: Terrorists will grip Nicaragua unless Contras aided

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, battling long odds in his fight to resume military aid to anti-communist rebels in Nicaragua, is warning that failure to provide the financing could create a terrorist haven "two days' driving time" from the U.S. border.

One senior administration official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said White House strategists calculate they need to turn around about 40 votes in the House before the Easter recess if Reagan is to succeed in getting $100 million in arms and other assistance for the anti-Sandinista fighters known as Contras.

The administration picked up one new Senate supporter Monday but lost a key House moderate in the debate as Reagan kept the focus on Nicaragua by inviting Contra leaders and some of their private American backers to the White House.

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., announced he had changed his position and now supports military aid to the U.S.-backed guerrillas, but he suggested the money should not be spent for six months to allow time for the two sides to begin peace talks.

Sasser said Reagan probably has about a 50-50 chance of winning congressional approval of his aid plan.

However, Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla., a moderate on the House Intelligence Committee who supported non-lethal aid for the Contras last year, said he will oppose the administration's new request.

McCurdy said nearly all the swing votes in the House are prepared to vote against the proposal but predicted a compromise package probably will emerge from Congress after the current request is defeated.

Reagan, seeking to dramatize the threat he sees from the Sandinistas, said Monday if his request for $70 million in direct military assistance and $30 million in non-lethal aid dies in Congress, it could mean "consolidation of a privileged sanctuary for terrorists and subversives just two days' driving time from Harlingen, Texas."

"Those who would invite this strategic disaster by abandoning yet another fighting ally of this country in the field will be held fully accountable by history," he said.

The president read his statement in the Cabinet Room as he was flanked by the leadership of the resistance forces, who call themselves the United Nicaraguan Opposition (UNO), and more than two dozen U.S. business supporters of the rebel cause.

President Reagan speaks to Contra leader Adolfo Calero in the Oval Office Monday. Reagan is requesting Congressional approval of $100 million for Nicaragua's anti-government rebels.

AP Laserphoto

The Contra representation included Adolfo Calero, head of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force; Arturo Cruz, a former Sandinista ambassador to Washington; and Alfonso Robelo, a member of the original Sandinista junta that took power in 1979.

Reagan said the Soviet Union has provided the Sandinistas with $500 million in assistance and that the rebel Contras need more than humanitarian aid to confront the helicopters and tanks now in the Sandinista arsenal.

Because of congressional opposition, the United States has not provided any military assistance to the Contras since the spring of 1984.

Reagan said that failure to support the Contras would mean they would share the same fate as the Hungarian "freedom fighters," who were overcome by a Soviet invasion 30 years ago.

The White House had announced plans to produce the Contra leaders for a news briefing after Reagan's meeting with them, but Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams took their place, saying the rebel leaders would return to the White House later in the week.

Bush is likely to make other appearances in support of the issue, as is Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who told the Veterans of Foreign Wars on Monday that the alternative to democratic rule in Nicaragua is a Latin America with "two, three, many Nicaraguas — a hemisphere of burning churches, suppressed newspapers and crushed opposition."

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes called the administration effort "a full-court press" that could be capped shortly before the vote by a presidential address to the nation from the Oval Office.

Soviet stand-in may have posed as defector Medvid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite Reagan administration denials, members of Congress have renewed calls to probe charges that the Soviets used a stand-in for failed defector Miroslav Medvid to tell U.S. authorities he wanted to return to the Soviet Union.

Medvid jumped into the Mississippi River from a Soviet grain freighter at dusk last Oct. 24, only to be sent back to the ship by agents of the U.S. Border Patrol early the following morning.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said officials who saw the sailor in the sick bay of the ship on Oct. 25, and questioned him on Oct. 28 and 29, positively identified him as Medvid through eye-witnesses, photographs and an identifying mark on his heel.

"Allegations that the Soviets pulled a switch and a substitute was interviewed are without foundation," Redman told reporters Monday in the wake of a New York Times story Sunday that discussed such a scenario.

"The articles reporting that have dealt with some sensational allegations and some unproved theories," the spokesman said. "They have ignored or misrepresented key facts which make it completely clear that no substitutions occurred."

An INS spokesman acknowledged that the Border Patrol agents who sent Medvid back to the ship after midnight on Oct. 25 had violated established guidelines, and have been demoted and disciplined. But he said INS agents positively identified Medvid the following day.

"I don't think there was any question in anyone's mind that they were interviewing the right guy. There had been a positive identification made of him," said the spokesman, Duke Austin.

Official denials of a switch did little to quiet congressional calls for a renewed investigation of the Medvid incident, which occurred the month before the meeting in Geneva between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

"It is clear...that the State Department did not take all necessary steps to ascertain Medvid's true wishes before allowing him to be returned to his ship" Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., said in a Senate speech.

Humphrey has said that three hearings on the case held by the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on immigration and refugee policy, headed by Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., were inadequate.

Last November, Humphrey introduced a resolution calling for creation of a special committee to investigate the case. Although 61 Senators have co-signed the proposal, it has not been voted on in the Republican-controlled chamber.

"An independent investigation is needed to determine whether there was any unethical or unlawful conduct on the part of any U.S. employee or official," Humphrey said. "The American people need to know who was involved with this case at all levels."

One congressional source, speaking on condition he not be identified, said there was suspicion that administration officials may have agreed to allow Medvid to sail away on the Soviet freighter to avoid a superpower dispute before the summit meeting in Geneva.

Church leaders call Contra aid push 'deception'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 200 religious leaders, including bishops of some of the nation's largest denominations, are accusing the Reagan administration of lying about Nicaragua to justify efforts to overthrow the Sandinista government.

"A scaffold of deception is being constructed around Nicaragua," Catholic, Protestant and Jewish leaders said in formally declaring they will fight President Reagan over new congressional aid for Nicaraguan rebels.

In a statement scheduled for delivery today and distributed to reporters Monday, they accused the administration of ignoring worthy Sandinista peace initiatives — seeming to prefer "the financing of terrorism to the pursuit of peace" — and of covering up reports of human rights atrocities by rebels backed by the U.S. government.

"We refuse to allow the deception to go unchallenged or to accept the senseless violence," the statement said. "Together we say, 'In the name of God, stop the lies, stop the killing.'"

Signers of the statement included 21 Roman Catholic, Methodist, Episcopal and Lutheran bishops, top officials of the United Church of Christ, the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), the Mennonite Church, the Unitarian Universalist Association, the National Council of Churches and more than a dozen Jewish rabbis.

Also today, as part of a national campaign called "Crosses of Sorrow and Hope," organizers said that in Washington and more than 75 other cities, crosses were being displayed bearing the names of Nicaraguan civilians they said had been killed by U.S.-backed rebels since last June.

Today's declaration came one day after Reagan, intensifying his own drive to win $100 million in U.S. aid for the rebels, said denying the aid could lead to establishment of Soviet military bases "on America's doorstep."

The religious leaders said it is preposterous to refer to CIA-backed rebels as "freedom fighters," as Reagan does, and that it is the United States, not the leftist Sandinista government, that is encouraging unrest and violence in the Central American nation.

In addition to denomination heads, signers of the statement included seven seminary presidents and representatives of 50 religious communities or orders, organizers said.

One signer, the Rev. Jim Wallis, editor of Sojourners Magazine, said in advance of the statement:

"Right now we are appealing to members of Congress to do what they know is right — to oppose administration plans to fund the Contras, to stop the war of terror being waged with U.S. tax dollars, to speak truth to the misinformation and outright falsehood being promoted by the Reagan administration."

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Glasscock, Upton, Reagan, Crane, Gaines, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin and Howard counties: Tonight: fair with lows upper 30s. Light southeast wind. Wednesday: sunny and warmer. Highs mid 70s. Wind south 10 to 15 mph.

Pleasant days due for Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cool nights and pleasant days are in the picture for the Midland-Odessa area. Fair skies will dominate the area both tonight and Wednesday according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Tonight the low is expected to reach into the upper 30s with light southeasterly winds. Wednesday winds will shift to the south and increase to 10-15 mph with a predicted high in the middle 70s.

This morning's low of 35 was 15 degrees warmer than the record low set for this date in 1965. Monday's high of 69 was 20 degrees cooler than the record high of 89 set in 1974.

STATE

A weak high-pressure mass centered over the western Hill Country brought some showers to South Texas today, and forecasters predicted more precipitation in the Rio Grande Valley later.

Low clouds lingered over South Texas while most of the state enjoyed fair skies and seasonably cool temperatures.

The National Weather Service said winds were 10 to 15 mph in southern sections of the state and a light west to northwest breeze filtered across East, North and West Texas.

A weak cold front shifted winds to the north at near 10 mph north of a line from Wichita Falls through Abilene to Midland.

Showers and thunderstorms that rumbled across the upper Gulf coast late Monday moved into the northwest Gulf. Another area of light rain and showers moved out of the middle Rio Grande plains.

The weather service said a few showers should develop in the lower valley. Elsewhere in the state, it will be fair to partly cloudy and quite mild. Afternoon highs in the 60s will predominate over the High plains, with 70s the rule elsewhere.

NATION

Rain drenched the western Gulf Coast today as scattered snow fell from the Great Lakes through the Ohio Valley and sections of the mid-Atlantic states.

Overnight, nearly 1¼ inches of rain fell in six hours at Beaumont and Port Arthur, Texas; nearly an inch at Lake Charles, La., and Houston; and two-thirds of an inch at Baton Rouge, La.

A travelers' advisory was issued for western Maryland, which the National Weather Service said could get 1 to 2 inches of snow.

Rain also was scattered over parts of the lower Rio Grande Valley and western Washington state.

Willis hires Lee's Browning

Rebel assistant takes first head coaching job

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee offensive line coach David Browning was named Monday as the athletic director and head football coach of Willis High School and will report to his new position March 17.

Browning, 38, replaces Jerry Malone, who was dismissed by the Willis school last month. It will be Browning's first head coaching job and ends an eight-year stint as a Lee assistant under three former Lee head coaches.

Willis, located eight miles north of Conroe, is one of the state's newest Class 4A schools, moving up from 3A under the recent realignment of the University Interscholastic League.

WILLIS WAS in the state 3A playoffs in 1985, but had a 4-7 record overall.

"I'm leaving Midland Lee with a lot of mixed emotions," Browning told the Reporter-Telegram Monday. "I had this year's seniors in my summer weight program when they were fourth graders. I'll miss all those kids."

Browning also said it would be tough to leave behind all the coaches he has worked with so long at Lee, but thought it was time to take a new challenge.

"The Lee coaching staff is the greatest bunch of guys that one could ever hope to work with. They know how to work hard and still have a good time while doing it. I'm sure the whole family will shed a tear or two when we hit the Midland city limits," said Browning.

The former Texas Tech standout said that he interviewed for the job at Willis last Thursday and made another trip to the school Sunday.

Dr. Jack Reaves, superintendent of schools in Willis, contacted Browning early Monday morning to give him the news. Browning will start with a base salary of $37,000 per year.

"I'm really excited about the possibilities," said Browning. "The school has got potential for a real good program. They've had good athletes in the past and have some now. They are down in their win-loss program, and naturally, will be at the bottom of the 4A enrollment ladder. But it's a growing area and presents a great challenge.

"Coaches are always looking to better themselves and if you want to advance in this profession, you have to think in terms of being a head coach. I don't regret waiting this long to take this step. I had college friends who became head coaches at the age of 27 and they're selling insurance now. I feel like the experience I've gained in a winning program will be to my advantage.

"I'VE COACHED baseball, track, golf and wrestling in addition to football and I think that helped in getting this job since the athletic director's position goes with it. I'm not a stranger to the other sports. I've had to be sort of a jack of all trades."

The loss of Browning is a blow to new Lee head coach Earl Miller, who was recently elevated to that position when Jack Tayrien left for Texas Tech last month. However, Miller is behind Browning's move.

"David is an excellent coach and it's like losing a part of your family," said Miller. "But being a head coach is something David has always had his sights on and I'm thrilled for him. I'll support him all I can.

"There is no question that we will miss him. David and Van Tom (Whatley, Lee offensive coordinator) have worked so close together over the years."

Miller hasn't made any moves to replace Browning, but said that the search would start quickly.

"When you have a winning system like we have, it's not hard to get a good coach. We want to get the best man we can find to replace David, but at the same time, we want to get a person that will fit in with our system — one who will agree with what we are trying to do. There are a lot of good coaches out there, but you have to be careful to get one who fits the system," said Miller.

Browning's wife Cheryl and eight-year-old son Eric, a third grader at Rusk, will remain in Midland until the end of the school year. "I guess I'll live in the field house until I can find a home," said Browning. "That's nothing new. I did the same thing when I came to Lee. AT&T and I are going to become good friends over the next couple of months."

Browning, who went into a rage if Whatley called more than six passes in a game, said that he will be taking Lee's wishbone offense with him to Willis, but joked, "One of the first things they asked me was, 'How much do you throw the ball?' I don't guess I'll ever get away from that question."

BROWNING PLAYED his high school football at Fort Worth Paschel and was a three-year starter at Texas Tech from 1969 to 1971. He was a captain of the Red Raiders in 1971, winning the Donny Anderson Award. He played in the Sun Bowl in 1970.

His first coaching job was as a graduate assistant at Tech in 1972 when his freshman team was 5-0. He coached Ecomet Burley on that squad and Burley went on to play in the Canadian Football League.

In 1973, Browning was offensive line coach under James Cox at Fort Worth Southwest and held the same position at Lubbock Coronado under Don King from 1975 to 1977.

Gil Bartosh, now athletic director in Midland, brought Browning to Lee in 1978 as offensive line coach, a position he has kept until now. Lee owns a 71-21-1 record over that span of time and three playoff trips, one to the state finals in 1983.

Hernandez to appeal drug ruling

Associated Press

Keith Hernandez of the New York Mets is the only major-leaguer who has said he plans to appeal a decision that imposed penalties against 11 players in lieu of suspension for drug use.

Dave Parker of the Cincinnati Reds said Monday he would pay 10 percent of his salary to drug rehabilitation programs, accept periodic drug testing and perform 100 hours of public service work. The penalty, in lieu of a one-year suspension, was handed down Friday by Commissioner Peter Ueberroth.

Hernandez announced last weekend that he would fight Ueberroth's decision.

"A grievance will be filed through the players association," Hernandez said. "When a decision is made by the arbitrator, I will make my decision on what I do."

PARKER, JEFF Leonard of the San Francisco Giants, Dale Berra of the New York Yankees and Enos Cabell of the Los Angeles Dodgers, have opted for compliance with Ueberroth's ruling.

Joaquin Andujar of the Oakland A's and Lonnie Smith of the Kansas City Royals have not said what they will do.

At the Reds' spring training camp in Tampa, Fla., Parker, wearing a handband that said, "Ueberroth," said he plans to play this year and would leave any challenges to the commissioner's decision to the Major League Players' Association.

Parker, who hit .312 last year with 34 homers and 125 runs batted in, testified in a federal drug trial in Pittsburgh last year that he used cocaine while with the Pirates. He said he stopped using the drug before signing with the Reds in December 1983.

At the New York Yankees' training camp in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., pitcher Al Holland said he would accept Ueberroth's penalties as an alternative to a 60-day suspension.

Holland was one of four players who faced a two-month suspension under the commissioner's action on drug involvement. Lee Lacy of Baltimore also agreed to donate five percent of his 1986 salary to a drug prevention facility or program, be tested at random for drugs for the remainder of his career and perform 50 hours of drug-related community service this year.

"I wanted to wait until I had all the ins and out of it," Holland said. "Now, I have a grasp of everything that happened. I feel part of it isn't fair, but you can't have your cake and eat it, too. The most important thing is we want to put it behind us. We were wrong."

Atlanta's Claudell Washington and Larry Sorensen of the Chicago Cubs, also facing possible two-month suspensions, have not announced their intentions. Cincinnati Reds

In another baseball development, Reds outfielder Eddie Milner suffered an injured left wrist in a minor two-car auto accident while en route to a team workout. After undergoing X-rays at a hospital and having the wrist wrapped in a plastic bandage, Milner participated in most of the daily workout, skipping batting practice.

Houston Astros

First baseman Glenn Davis, who set an Astros' rookie record with 20 homers in 100 games last year, signed a one-year contract with Houston, leaving the club with three unsigned players — catcher Mark Bailey, infielder Bert Pena and pitcher Julio Solano.

Spring Training

Rebels, Bulldogs hit road

Baseballers face Lubbock test

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland Lee coach Ernie Johnson and Midland High coach Tim Whalen aren't giving their troops much time to rest. It's been three days since the Pre-District tournament in Odessa and already both teams are heading for the diamond again.

Both teams are catching the same bus to Lubbock today for 5 p.m. doubleheaders. The Rebels are taking on traditional yearly rival Monterey at Lowery Field while the Bulldogs are facing Coronado at Lubbock Christian College.

The Rebels and Bulldogs are coming off a long weekend of play in the Pre-District tournament and both teams have two things in common: Their pitching staffs are wearing thin and they can hit the ball a country mile.

SINCE THE spring of 1962, the conclusion of the first year for Midland Lee as a high school, the Rebels and Plainsmen have met at least twice every year on the baseball field.

"We've never missed a year and often we've played each other in the playoffs," said Johnson. "We've played each other an awful lot of times and it hasn't just been home and home either."

Lee and Monterey, 5-0, usually schedule a doubleheader during pre-district play and continually bump into each other in Midland's Tournament of Champions. For the past three years, the Rebels have been eliminated from the best two-out-of-three bi-district playoffs by the Plainsmen.

In recent years, the Plainsmen have had Lee's number, not just in the playoffs and that's one reason why Johnson likes to play them. It gives his troops a tough early-season pair of games to prepare them for district play.

"We can go up there and get thrashed real good," said Johnson. "Maybe we can bounce back (from the loss to Cooper), but Monterey is hard to beat any time, especially in Lubbock. I'll be tickled to death to split with them."

Johnson wasn't sure who would start on the mound for the Rebels, but it's likely [illegible]ge Matta and Terry Baxter will see a good amount of time.

"Probably those two if their arms are all right," said Johnson. "They've got to learn to pitch pretty steady because after them I don't have much of anything. Durian Jenkins will probably go with us. He pitched five innings for the JV Saturday.

Through the first four games this season, the 4-1 Rebels were unbeaten, had a team ERA of 0.54 and were had allowed only five hits in 26 innings.

Then came the Pre-District tournament title game and defending champion Abilene Cooper. The Cougars jumped all over previously unbeaten and almost unhit Matta, tagging the right-handed senior for 10 runs (seven earned) from 12 hits in seven innings. The team ERA jumped to 1.91.

On the other side of the coin, the Rebels answered the Cougars almost hit-for-hit but failed to connect for the key hits that could have won the game.

Two-year starter Tuey Rankin is the team's leading hitter with a .444 average while Danny Jordan (.412), Raul Pena (.385) and Baxter (.357) follow at .300-or-better clicks. As a team, Lee has a .309 average.

THROUGH THREE games that have produced a disappointing 1-3 record, the MHS Bulldogs are letting it be known that they can hit the ball with the best of them.

As a unit, Whalen's 'Dogs are hitting a scorching .351 and have scored 30 runs.

Leading the hit parade is Anthony Deande (.556) followed by six other Bulldogs .300 or better: Kenny De La Garza (.500), Matt Sears (.455), Tommy Yorkman (.444), Jim Werner (.429), Ricky Castaneda (.364) and Jamie Salazar (.333).

The problems the Bulldogs have had early in the season come from the mound and on defense. So far, the starters in each of Midland High's games have been thumped with Castaneda owning the only victory and the best ERA at a dismal 5.04

As a team, the 'Dogs have an ERA of 7.31.

Of the 32 runs the Bulldog pitching staff has given up, 16 have been unearned, coming from 13 MHS errors.

Against Coronado, Whalen will "have to pitch all three of them (starters Castaneda, De La Garza and Salazar) and I may take a couple of sophomores with me.

"We're going to go up there and will still probably have a little jet lag from this weekend. We're sore and tired. We got thumped pretty good."

So did the Coronado Mustangs, 0-4, when they were in Midland to play Lee last week, losing 3-2 and 14-0.

"Well, right now, they're fighting attitude problems," said Whalen of Coronado. "They're not sure they can beat anybody. We may be looking at a little of that ourselves.

"A team like that, if you can get out on top of them early and keep them there, you can beat them. You let them out on top, and they start making the plays because they're tired of getting kicked around."

Illinois leaps into Top 20

Associated Press

After his Fighting Illini clawed back into the top 20 with victories away from home last week, Illinois Coach Lou Henson is convinced that anything can happen on the road.

Last year, Georgia Tech eliminated Illinois from regional competition in the NCAA tournament. Saturday, Illinois edged Georgia Tech 57-55 to climb to 18th in The Associated Press college basketball poll and probably assure a berth in this year's NCAA tournament.

DUKE REMAINED in first place with 62 first-place votes and 1,259 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. Kansas, 28-3, and champions of the Big Eight, received the other first-place vote and 1,195 points to hold onto second for the second straight week.

Illinois, tied with Purdue in fourth place in the Big Ten, was knocked out of the top 20 seven weeks ago.

"It's always nice to be ranked. We started out early in the year in the Top 20. And it's nice to be back there," said Henson. "I just hope we can stay there."

They'll have to stay hot on the road to do it, as they wind up the season with games at Iowa and Minnesota.

MICHIGAN, 25-4, moved to seventh from 10th with victories over Wisconsin and Northwestern, while co-Big Ten leader Indiana remained in 16th place and Michigan State held onto 17th.

Duke, 29-2, will be the top seed in this week's Atlantic Coast Conference tournament.

Duke held the top spot by winning the ACC regular-season title with an 82-74 victory over then-No. 3 North Carolina, which dropped one spot in the poll.

Kentucky, 26-3 and champions of the Southeastern Conference, jumped from fifth to third with 1,080 points, 35 more than the Tar Heels, 26-4, who held the No. 1 spot for 13 weeks before being dethroned by Duke in last week's balloting.

St. John's, 27-4, moved from eighth to fifth with 936 points, 12 more than Georgia Tech, 23-5, which finished between Duke and North Carolina in the ACC standings.

Syracuse, 23-4 and co-champions of the Big East with St. John's, fell two spots to eighth with 805 points after losing to the Redmen 88-79 in the showdown for the top spot in the conference.

Bradley, with 719 points, became just the second team this season — along with St. John's — to crack the Top Ten after being unranked in the preseason poll. The Braves, 30-1, jumped from 11th to ninth after finishing as regular-season champions of the Missouri Valley Conference.

The Top Ten was rounded out by Memphis State, 25-4, which fell three spots from last week's poll after falling to No. 11 Louisville 70-69 in the game that decided the Metro Conference regular-season title. The Cardinals, 24-7, finished with 604 points.

Fairfield gains NCAA tournament

Associated Press

After finishing last in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference last year, the Fairfield basketball team had nowhere to go but up.

That's exactly what they did, climbing from last to first in the short space of one season.

"It's just been a tremendous year," Coach Mitch Buonagura said after his Fairfield team defeated Holy Cross 67-64 Monday night to win the MAAC basketball tournament and advance to the NCAA playoffs. "When the season started, we never expected to go to the NCAAs."

The Stags started out the season with only two wins in five games, then won 21 of the last 24 en route to their first NCAA tournament berth.

For Monday night's game, Buonagura got some advice from an old friend — Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino. Buonagura, an associate coach under Massimino when the Wildcats won the NCAA championship last season, talked to his former boss before the game against Holy Cross.

"He told me to keep the kids relaxed and to have them play to win as opposed to playing not to lose," Buonagura said.

THE STAGS were one of four college basketball teams Monday night to earn berths in the NCAA tournament. St. Joseph's advanced with a 72-64 victory over West Virginia in the finals of the Atlantic 10 tournament, Drexel won the East Coast Conference playoffs by defeating Hofstra 80-76 and Arizona nailed down a berth by winning a Pacific-10 battle from UCLA, 88-76.

In other league playoffs, ninth-ranked Bradley beat West Texas State 61-55, Ilinois State held off Wichita State 78-70, Drake routed Creighton 82-56 and Tulsa stopped Indiana State 68-50 in the first round of the Missouri Valley Conference tournament.

In first-round play of the Ohio Valley Conference tournament, Tennessee Tech edged Youngstown State 71-68, Murray State turned back Austin Peay 78-66 and Middle Tennessee trimmed Eastern Kentucky 88-65.

Navy, the nation's No. 18 team, nipped North Carolina-Wilmington 62-60 and George Mason edged Richmond, also 62-60, in the semifinals of the Colonial Athletic Association playoffs.

McNeese State tripped Texas-Arlington 84-71 in a first-round game of the Southland Conference tourney.

IN OTHER action, No. 12 Notre Dame cruised past the University of New Orleans 75-67 and Oklahoma State upset No. 15 Oklahoma 87-84.

Tony George, the MAAC player of the year, scored 27 points to pace Fairfield. The Stags had to hold off a furious second-half rally by Holy Cross led by Jim McCaffrey, who scored 24 of his 25 points in the second half.

"I decided to take charge myself in the second half," George said. "I knew it was just a matter of time before McCaffery caught fire."

Maurice Martin scored 22 points and Rodney Blake added 17 as top-seeded St. Joseph's defeated West Virginia for the Atlantic 10 championship. Blake scored seven of his points in the final 4:41 when the Hawks broke a 59-59 tie, outscoring the Mountaineers 13-5 down the stretch.

"I've been coaching for 23 years and I told our team he (Martin) was going to play 40 minutes," West Virginia Coach Gale Catlett said of Martin, the Atlantic 10's player of the year. "He had to play that much for them to beat us."

Michael Anderson, the ECC's most valuable player, scored 21 points and had eight rebounds to lead Drexel over Hofstra. The game wasn't decided until Hofstra's Leroy Allen missed two crucial free throws in the last milnute.

Sean Elliott scored 28 points and Arizona used a strong finish to whip UCLA and clinch at least a tie for the Pacific-10 Conference championship. Washington still has a chance to tie Arizona for the Pac-10 title, but the Wildcats will receive the conference's automatic NCAA Tournament berth because they beat the Huskies twice in as many games between the teams this season.

THE VICTORY was the first for Arizona at Pauley Pavilion. The Wildcats had lost 11 straight games on the Bruins' home court.

"It's great that this is the first time that Arizona has beaten UCLA at Pauley," Arizona Coach Lute Olson said. "If we could play in one place other than Tucson to clinch the Pac-10 championship, it would be at Pauley."

Led by Mike Williams' 18 points and 10 rebounds, Bradley extended its winning streak to 21 games by beating a deliberate West Texas State team in the MVC playoffs.

Stephen Kite scored 29 points, including the clinching basket with a second left, sparking Tennessee Tech over Youngstown State in the Ohio Valley Conference playoffs. Kim Cooksey scored 25 points to lead Middle Tennessee over Eastern Kentucky. Don Mann scored 23 points and Jeff Martin 22 to power Murray State over Austin Peay.

David Robinson scored 14 of his 22 points in the second half to help Navy advance to the finals of the Colonial Athletic Association tournament. Rodney Rose scored 10 points down the stretch to lead George Mason to a 62-60 upset of second-seeded Richmond in the other semifinal game.

Jerome Batiste and Kenny Jimerson had 22 points apiece to lead McNeese State over Texas-Arlington in the Southland tournament.

Notre Dame piled up a 14-point first-half lead on the scoring of Ken Barlow and Donald Royal, then coasted past New Orleans. Terry Faggins scored 20 points and Melvin Gilliam contributed 17 to lead Oklahoma State's upset of Oklahoma.

Brownlee heads SWC list

DALLAS (AP) — Texas center John Brownlee, who transferred to the Longhorns after an unsuccessful stint at North Carolina, rebounded to win a unanimous spot on The Associated Press 1985-1986 All-Southwest Conference basketball team and earn Offensive Player of the Year honors.

Brownlee, a 6-10 senior from Fort Worth, shot 55 per cent from the field and averaged 16 points and almost nine rebounds per game for the Longhorns.

Other players on the mythical first team, selected by SWC coaches, included seniors Alvin Franklin of Houston, Don Marbury of Texas A&M, Kevin Lewis of Southern Methodist and junior Carl Lott of Texas Christian.

Marbury was the leading scorer with an average of 22.5 points per game with Franklin just behind at 21.1.

The second team includes Greg Anderson of Houston, Greg Hines of Rice, Jimmie Gilbert of Texas A&M, Tony Benford of Texas Tech, and a tie for the fifth spot between Karl Willock of Texas Tech and Carven Holcombe of TCU.

Anderson headed the second team with a 19.6 scoring average.

Willock was named the Defensive Player of the Year.

Lott headed up the All-Newcomer team which included Texas Tech's Sean Gay, TCU's Larry Richard, Texas' Patrick Fairs and John Sykes.

TCU's Jim Killingsworth was named the Coach of the Year by his peers. Killingsworth's team confounded the experts because of the play of two excellent junior college transfers, Lott and Richard, and the off-the-bench scoring of Jamie Dixon.

Raines seeks faster start

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — After finishing third in hitting in the National League last season and leading the team in most offensive departments, Tim Raines of Montreal Expos thinks he can do better.

But to do that, he says, he'll have to get off to a faster start — literally.

"This year I'm hoping to be more aggressive right away and run a lot more at the start of the season," said the All-Star outfielder. "I've always been able to finish strong but the idea is to be consistent and do it from the beginning to the end."

Raines, who was born 26 years ago in Sanford, Fla., doesn't have a ready explanation for his slow starts but allows that the weather might be a factor.

"Maybe it's the cold at the beginning of the year, but for some reason I always have trouble the first couple of months," said Raines. "What I'm trying to do now is get myself mentally prepared for the early months and try to get things going to carry me over the rest of the season."

Last season, Raines improved his average to .320, led the Expos in runs scored and triples and stole 70 bases, becoming the first major leaguer to steal that many in five consecutive seasons.

"He's definitely the catalyst," Expos Manager Buck Rodgers says about his leadoff hitter. "When he gets things going, things start to happen for us."

Raines' attempts to get mentally prepared for the season may not be an easy task, considering that he gets almost as much attention for events off the field as on.

For starters, the switch-hitting Raines has a difficult annual contract-signing ritual.

Last season, he underwent an arbitration hearing, winning a one-year contract of $1.2 million, the largest sum ever awarded up to that point.

This season Raines avoided the process and reached another one-year deal with the club for an estimated $1.5 million before spring training began. But that fell short of the three-year pact he was looking for.

Paul Molitor takes hard stand on drugs

CHANDLER, Ariz. (AP) — Milwaukee Brewers third baseman Paul Molitor, whose name was once linked with cocaine use, says "my stand against drugs is a very hard one right now."

Molitor said Monday he speaks to youth groups in the Milwaukee area about the perils of drug use and his message is almost as strong as that of baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth.

"I just try to let the kids know that this is not the way to go," he said at the Brewers' spring training headquarters. "It's personally harmful, it's illegal and it's the wrong road."

Molitor was one of the players whose names came up during the 1984 trial of Milwaukeean Tony Peters, who was convicted on drug charges. Last summer, Molitor admitted he had tried cocaine.

"If you asked me coming out of college (University of Minnesota) if I ever thought I would be tempted to do anything, I would say 'No way.' But somehow along the line, everybody falls a little short of the person they want to be," he said. "There's no question my stand against drugs is a very hard one right now."

Molitor said he agrees with the last week's ruling by Ueberroth to conditionally suspend 11 major leaguers for their drug use.

"I really feel that the commissioner, in his strong stand to make baseball a drug-free sport, felt that he had to take this opportunity to come out and make a statement," said Molitor. "I would like to see the players accept what the commissioner has handed down, ever though it's a little stern.

"It's something positive for the game," Molitor added. "I really feel the voluntary testing program is right around the corner so we can once and for all put to rest any questions the public might have about the public image of baseball."

Heavyweights explore 'World Series' format

NEW YORK (AP) — Boxing's convoluted heavyweight championship is on its way to being unified in a tournament that will take the fighters as far away as Perth, Australia.

A seven-fight "Heavyweight World Series" co-promoted by Don King and Butch Lewis will, by the summer of 1987, reduce the three champions to a single titleholder.

The series begins March 22 with Pinklon Thomas defending his World Boxing Council crown against Trevor Berbick at the Riviera Hotel in Las Vegas, Nev., and continues April 19 with Michael Spinks making the first defense of his International Boxing Federation title against ex-champ Larry Holmes at the Las Vegas Hilton.

World Boxing Association champion Tim Witherspoon gets into it facing a challenger in May or June, and the Holmes-Spinks IBF winner goes against another opponent in September. At the end of the year, the Thomas-Berbick winner defends the WBC crown against yet another challenger.

Then, in March or April of next year, there will be a WBA-WBC unification bout with the winner to fight the IBF champ in May or June of 1987 to produce a single division champion. One of the fights will be held in Perth, perhaps to coincide with the America's Cup yacht races scheduled for next January.

When the series concludes, it will be the first time the division is ruled by one man since Feb. 1978 when Leon Spinks won the crown from Muhammad Ali. It was Spinks' decision to give Ali a rematch that triggered the splitting of the crown. Ironically, Leon's brother, Michael, now has made a similiar decision, giving Holmes a chance to reclaim the title he held for 7½ years.

"He's aching," Michael Spinks said of Holmes, who he defeated for the IBF crown last September 21. "He wants it so bad. I can understand that. He misses it. He's hurt, but I'm gonna hurt him worse. I think he's making a foolish move (coming back). But he has to deal with what's burning inside of him."

There had been speculation that Spinks' first defense would come against Gerry Cooney. That match would have meant a guaranteed $5 million for the champion, according to Lewis. Instead, Spinks will take $3.5 million for fighting Holmes, who gets $1.5 million. The reason for accepting the lower purse, Lewis said, was to give Holmes the same chance Holmes had given Spinks.

Holmes, who is 36, had announced his retirement after losing for the first time in 49 professional fights. Why had he changed his mind?

"It can't be the money this time," Holmes said. "I'm not getting it. Mike is. It's to avenge the loss."

Holmes said he was surprised that Spinks had run so much in their first fight.

"If he don't fight, it's gonna be boring," he said. "He'll be running around the ring and I'll be in my corner watching."

Spinks said he had hoped Holmes would slug it out in their first fight, but he couldn't lure him into that kind of exchange.

"I kept dropping my hands, inviting him in," the champ said. "I wanted him to come and get me. He was afraid I had something waiting for him. He'll try to do more this time and that will be a mistake. I don't think it will be different. Maybe more intense for a while."

Then the champion dipped into a little pseudo-Ali rhyme, saying, "With the stuff I use, I can't lose."

Mississippi works on no pass, no play

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A state Board of Education advisory committee Monday released so-called "no pass-no play" proposals that include a recommendation that public school students should maintain a "C" average to be eligible for extracurricular activities.

Other recommendations by the panel that is studying higher academic standards included:

—Prohibiting the practice of holding back a student for one year, or "red-shirting," in grades 7 and 8.

—Those taking part in extracurricular activities would be required to be be full-time students.

—Students participating in extracurricular activities must pass 4½ units of course work toward high school graduation at the end of the ninth grade. That would increase to nine units at the end of the 10th grade; 13½ units at the end of the 11th grade.

Gene Triggs of Yazoo City, chairman of the committee, said the recommendations were only in the preliminary stage and could be revised.

The committee will make final recommendations to the Board of Education in April after conducting public hearings on the "no-pass, no-play" rules March 18. The hearings will be conducted simultaneously in Jackson, Hattiesburg and Grenada.

Triggs, an executive with Mississippi Chemical Corp., said the committee hoped to ultimately produce recommendations that will be "good for schools, good for students and good for Mississippi."

Jack Reed of Tupelo, state Board of Education chairman, said earlier he feared that making the standards too high might drive up the student dropout rate. Mississippi's student dropout rate of 37.6 percent is among the highest in the nation.

Currently, students in many of the 154 school districts in the state can flunk one or two subjects, but still be eligible to play sports or be in other activities.

The policies are expected to apply primarily to athletics and music activities, such as band. It's uncertain how other activities, such as the debate team, would be affected.

The U.S. Supreme Court last week let stand a highly publicized "no pass, no play" law in Texas, but attorneys for several student athletes are expected to seek new avenues of appeal.

A few school districts in Mississippi already have such rules, including Simpson County, Lamar County and the Jackson and Brookhaven public schools.

During a recent meeting, officials of the Simpson County Booster Club and state Sen. Alan Heflin of Forest told the advisory committee to move slowly with the guidelines to avoid problems with dropouts and lawsuits.

The purpose of the tougher standards is to "enhance education and not punish students," said Ann Denison of Biloxi, a member of the Parent-Teachers-Association and member of the advisory committee.

If adopted, the new guidelines would apply to students in grades 7-8 at the start of the 1986-87 year, and 1987-88 for students in grades 9-12.

The guidelines provide for an appeals process that is to be overseen by school principals.

The Mississippi American Federation of Teachers backed a bill in the Legislature this session to have a "no-pass,no-play" rule similar to Texas, but the bill died in committee.

The advisory committee defines extracurricular activities as "all activities which take place primarily outside the normal school day." Special education students would be exempt.

The Lamar County School Board, which had implemented and then delayed a "no pass,no play" policy during football season last fall, requires students pass each subject with at least a "D" average to join extracurricular activities.

Rangers sign four

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The Texas Rangers Monday signed four more players to one-year contracts for the 1986 season, a team spokesman said.

Ed Correa, Jose Guzman and Dwayne Henry — all rookie right-handed pitchers — and third baseman Steve Buechele agreed to undisclosed terms.

Correa, 19, acquired from the White Sox in November, had a combined 14-8 record with Glens Falls and Appleton and was 1-0 in five games with Chicago in 1985.

Guzman, 22, was 10-5 at Oklahoma City and 3-2 in five starts with Texas last season.

Henry, 24, finished 7-6 with nine saves at Tulsa and 2-2, with three saves, for the Rangers in 1985.

Buechele, also 24, was the American Association most valuable player, hitting .297 with nine home runs and 64 RBI at Oklahoma City. After joining Texas in July, he hit .219 with six homers and 21 RBI in 69 games.

BROWNING

Browning developed two All-State linemen at Lee in Coy Stewart, now with TCU, and Jake Young, who just recently singed with Nebraska. While at Southwest, Browning had another All-State lineman in Marshall Harris, who later played for the Cleveland Browns. In all, Browning has coached 26 All-District linemen, 15 of them at Lee since 1978.

"Cheryl and I had a hard time sleeping the night we found out I had the job," said Browning. "I tried hard to sleep, but every time I opened my eyes, Cheryl was there staring at me. We spent most of the night laughing."

Mavericks shade Phoenix in 2OT

Associated Press

The Dallas Mavericks had a great 1-2 punch to beat Phoenix in double overtime.

Mark Aguirre scored 42 points, giving him 82 in his last two games, and Rolando Blackman added six of his 32 points in the second overtime Monday night as the Mavericks edged the Suns 139-138. Blackman provided the winning points when he got behind the Phoenix defense for a dunk with eight seconds left.

Dollar falls

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar fell against most major currencies in early European trading today. Gold prices rose.

London's Financial Times said the currency remained depressed by a widespread belief that the Reagan administration wanted "a further orderly decline in the dollar's value." The business daily also cited Friday's announcement of a $16.46 billion U.S. trade deficit in January.

Before European markets opened, the dollar fell in Tokyo to close at 179.00 Japanese yen.

The British pound, which slumped more than 4 cents Monday because of falling prices for North Sea oil, recovered to $1.4475, more expensive than Monday's closing $1.4405.

Gold opened in London at a bid $337.80 a troy ounce, up from $336 late Monday. Later, the five leading bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $337.90.

In Zurich, gold opened at a bid $337.40, up from $336.50 Monday, and moved up to $337.80 at noon.

Gold had opened today in Hong Kong at $338.09, down from $339.52 at Monday's close, and finished the day at $337.06.

Gold prices had fallen Monday in New York to close at a bid $338.50, down from $339.50 late Friday.

Silver bullion was trading in London Tuesday at a bid $5.57 a troy ounce, up from $5.55 at Monday's close.

West Texas Intermediate falls to eight year low

NEW YORK (AP) — The speculative price of the major grade of U.S. crude oil has dropped toward $12 a barrel in a retreat that has yet to show signs of stalling.

Closer to the consumers' pocketbook, contract prices set by the nation's oil companies have fallen below $20 for the first time since 1979.

Some analysts said the slide is not over, and that crude could plunge as low as $8 a barrel, a level below the average cost of operating a well.

They said such a slump could persuade oil producers to cooperate to limit output, but that even if the slide is stopped, prices are not likely to bounce back sharply.

"I think it will crack $10 before it cracks $20," said William Randol, an oil analyst for the securities firm First Boston Corp. Randol said he expects oil prices to stabilize in the low to mid teens for two to three years.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, West Texas Intermediate crude for April delivery plunged as low as $12.15 a barrel Monday before recovering to close at $12.27. That was a drop of 99 cents from Friday's close and was down 61.3 percent from the November high of $31.70.

The last time West Texas Intermediate sold at such prices was in 1978.

The contract price big oil companies pay their suppliers fell Monday below $20 a barrel throughout the industry, a level last seen in 1979.

Chevron Corp. said it cut the price it will pay for West Texas Intermediate by $2 a barrel to $18. At the start of 1986, Chevron was paying $28 a barrel.

Sun Co. and Phillips Petroleum Co. dropped $1 a barrel to $16, and Diamond Shamrock Corp. lowered prices $1 to $15.50.

The latest cuts left the U.S. oil industry quoting contract prices ranging from $15 to $19.50 a barrel.

The drop in oil prices has improved the outlook for non-inflationary economic growth, contributing to a steep slide in interest rates in the United States and a record-shattering increase in stock prices.

At the gas pump, prices have not been falling as fast as in the markets for crude oil, in part because of the lag by oil companies in following the futures market. In addition, refiners who produce gasoline from crude oil have yet to use up supplies purchased when crude was more expensive.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Ahmed Zaki Yamani, has predicted crude prices could drop as low as $10 a barrel for popularly traded crudes before stabilizing.

Edward Dellamonte, an analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc., said $10 could be the bottom, but "if Mr. Yamani doesn't see cooperation around $10, it could be $8."

Skepticism continued about attempts by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to stabilize prices by gaining the cooperation of oil producers to reduce output.

OPEC has been asking non-members to cooperate, but continued to run into resistance from its own members as well as two major independent producers — Britain and Norway.

Paul Miotok at Salomon Brothers Inc. said oil was "getting down to the level where price is approaching the cost of production."

The cost of operating an average field is $10 a barrel, he said, "and you know you can't stay below that level for long."

Judges mull suits over revenues brought by Texas and Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Federal judges today were considering cases brought by Louisiana and Texas on what monies they are entitled to from offshore oil and gas production when state and federal boundaries overlap.

On Monday laywers for the two states and the federal government presented arguments before the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal.

Assistant Texas Attorney General Mary Keller told the three-judge panel that the state and federal governments should split all revenues from such lands 50-50, as a U.S. District Judge in Texas recently held.

The U.S. Department of the Interior is challenging that ruling, however, claiming that offshore statutes provide revenue sharing only to protect states from drainage.

The judges did not indicate when they would rule.

Drainage is the siphoning off of oil or gas from an entire pool, although production may only be occurring on the federal portion.

Louisiana argued over that offshore revenues Louisiana can claim a share of. Assistant Louisiana Attorney General Gary Keyser claimed the state is entitled to a share of all revenues collected, including income and other related taxes.

BankAmerica rejects financier's scheme

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The directors of BankAmerica have rejected former American Express President Sanford Weill's offer to raise $1 billion in capital for the loss-plagued Bank of America in exchange for the presidency of the nation's second-largest bank holding company.

Simultaneously, BankAmerica announced Monday a major reorganization of Bank of America, its San Francisco-based chief subsidiary which lost $337 million last year.

The moves appeared to be a vote of confidence for BankAmerica's president and chief executive, Samuel Armacost. BankAmerica said the directors unanimously agreed they were not interested in ousting him and having Weill take over.

"The board is not desirous of making a management change," Franklin Murphy, chairman of the board's executive committee, said in a letter to Weill, according to the announcement.

In addition, the company said Monday its investment bankers had advised that Weill's proposal to have brokerage firms raise the new capital by selling $1 billion worth of Bank of America stock may not be in the best interest of shareholders.

Mattox investigates gas prices

AUSTIN (AP) — The attorney general's department said Monday it is looking into possible antitrust violations in the sale of gasoline by major oil companies in Texas.

Ron Dusek, spokesman for Attorney General Jim Mattox, said the investigation began after his office received complaints from the Texas Service Station Association and the Lone Star Gas Station Association.

The complaints said there was a major price difference in gasoline sold in Oklahoma and in Texas. "Major oil companies are selling gas in Texas at higher prices than in Oklahoma," Dusek said.

Dusek said the associations also said gasoline was selling for more in major urban areas than in rural areas.

"There is sometime a difference of 15 and 20 cents," he said.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Tenngasco posted price reflects oil price drop

HOUSTON (SWN) Tenngasco Exchange Corp. has posted spot market natural gas prices of $1.92 per million BTU at Vinton, LA., and $1.79 per million BTU at Tivoli, Texas, for March 1986.

The March posted price decline at both posting locations reflects the continuing drop in crude oil prices, the company said. Normal seasonal declines and a surplus in the market were cited as additional factors affecting the price.

Tenngasco Exchange volumes are averaging 167 million cubic feet per day in February, with peak volumes of 190 million cubic feet per day.

The monthly posting is the price Tenngasco Exchange will pay for natural gas delivered at Vinton or Tivoli. These locations are used as geographic reference points for determining comparable prices at other locations.

Pengo division closes, terminates 300 jobs

FORT WORTH (SWN) — Pengo Industries, Inc. announced that it has closed its Well Workover Division effective February 28, 1986. This division operated in Texas and Colorado and employed approximately 300 people. This action resulted from the recent decline in the price of oil and its affect on the well workover markets. For fiscal year ending September, 1985, the Well Workover Division had an operating loss of approximately $2.5 million on revenues of $23 million.

As part of Pengo's previously announced proposed permanent debt restructure plan, the well workover division was slated for divestiture along with the Oil Tool and Wireline Products Manufacturing Divisions. Pengo will continue to seek a qualified purchaser for these three division and is being represented in this regard by Copeland, Wickersham, Wiley & Co. of Houston and New York.

Pengo stated that it had advised its secured lenders of this move and that the closing of this division will not impede the progress of the company's permanent debt restructure plans.

Pengo will continue to specialize in wireline logging and perforating, manufacturing and distribution of oil tool equipment, oilfield explosives and earth-boring augers.

MMH visitors' parking temporarily at First Baptist

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Visitors to Midland Memorial Hospital will have to make an unscheduled stop during the next two weeks — at the First Baptist Church, according to a spokesman.

"We're closing down the main visitor's parking lot beginning Friday," said Public Relations Director Cynthia Brust. "The lot will be closed for around two weeks but that is subject to weather conditions, of course."

According to Ms. Brust, visitors arriving at MMH between the hours of 8 a.m. and 9 p.m. will be able to park in the northwest corner parking lot of the First Baptist Church at Louisiana and Garfield. A shuttle service will be available during those hours to transport people between the hospital and the lot.

"There will be an on-going shuttle service and a security guard on duty at the hospital," she said. "When the visitors are ready to leave the hospital, the shuttle driver will be notified by radio to come and pick them up."

Additional parking will be available on the top level of the hospital's parking garage and in the area behind Allison Cancer Center on the west side of the hospital, she added.

Ms. Brust said the main visitor's parking area will be under construction during the next two weeks for renovation and the creation of a special doctor's parking area on the west side of the hospital.

The doctor's lot will be moved from its current location on the west side of the hospital and will include a locked-gate setup to prevent unauthorized use of the area. Physicians will be given a special card to allow them entrance.

According to Harold Rubin, senior vice president at MMH, physicians were unhappy with the location of the current parking area.

"A lot of the doctors find the lot inconvenient especially when they have to get to the emergency room or the labor/delivery area," he said at February's monthly Board of Trustees meeting. "So we'll be moving that parking area and it will have 40 parking spots when completed."

Rubin added that following completion of the main lot renovations and construction of the doctor's area, work will begin to close off Ohio Street.

"It's going to be about a 12-week project," he said. "As soon as the visitor's lot is finished we'll go to Ohio."

Rubin said that an additional 92 parking spots would be constructed in the area between "N" Street and Garfield on Ohio.

According to Ms. Brust, a sign will be placed in the First Baptist parking lot to notify visitors and that a van is being supplied by Milco, an ambulance and limousine service.

Visitors who arrive before or after the shuttle hours should not have a problem finding a parking space in either the parking garage or Allison lot, said Ms. Brust.

Blacks air grievances on paper's coverage

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Approximately 20 Midland residents representing the black community met Monday with Midland Reporter-Telegram executives concerning recent coverage of an appearance here by Dr. Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The delegation, headed by James Fuller, president of the Midland chapter of the NAACP, protested coverage of Hooks' address including a statement which had quoted him as saying "We kill live niggers and worship dead ones." Hooks actually had said "We kill live leaders and worship dead ones."

In submitting their grievances in writing to Reporter-Telegram President and Publisher Charles A. Spence, local NAACP representatives criticized "the manner in which the Midland Reporter-Telegram reports the news, relative to the Black community...Specifically, the article that appeared in Saturday's edition about the speech of Dr. Benjamin Hooks was a poor example of competent journalism and absolutely offensive to Midland's Black community," said the statement which was signed by about 280 citizens.

It added, "Furthermore, to add insult to injury, the retraction that appeared in Sunday's edition falls short — very short — of being an acceptable, adequate gesture to the Midland community in general and the Black community in particular."

Mayoral candidate calls for budget freeze

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Mayoral candidate Carroll Thomas called for a freeze in the city budget, employees and taxes during a news conference this morning at City Hall.

The City Council won't begin work on the 1986-87 budget until July, but Thomas said it should take the "prudent approach to fiscally conservative management of city government."

Opposing Thomas in the April 5 municipal election are Councilman Steve Davidson and Barbara Harris. The incumbent mayor, G. Thane Akins, opted not to seek re-election.

"We need to freeze expenditures at the current level. In the last three years, during a contracting economy, the budgeted expenditures have increased 24 percent," Thomas said in a news release. Figures he acquired from the city's budgets showed for the fiscal year that ended in September 1983 the city was budgeted to spend $47,228,989. For the current fiscal year which ends in September this year the city is budgeted to spend $58,634,692, to reflect a net increase of $11,405,703.

"We need to freeze the number of employees at the currently authorized level," Thomas said.

Sheriff's officers apprehend would-be burglars

From Staff Reports

Two would-be burglars were apprehended in the act Monday by Midland sheriff's officers who were attempting to serve a civil warrant, according to Sheriff's Investigator Al Taylor.

A third man escaped into the brush near Crawford's Store in northwest Midland County, but was captured about two hours later by Department of Public Safety Highway Patrol officers after being flushed from the brush by two helicopters.

The three men, aged 26, 27 and 41, respectively, were expected to be charged today with attempted burglary.

Assisting the Sheriff's Office helicopter was a helicopter belonging to Midland oilman Clayton Williams Jr., whose pilot, Aubrey Price, is a reserve deputy.

Taylor and Sheriff's Deputy Jesse Priest had gone to the trailer of George DeRusha, located near county roads 60 and 1279, to serve a civil warrant. Finding nobody home, they went to the nearby Crawford's Store to wait. Returning to the trailer around 1 p.m., they found the burglars at work, Taylor said.

The 26-year-old was captured about two hours later near state highways 191 and 158, Taylor said.

In other reports, a 15-year-old rural Midland youth was taken into custody this morning after a passerby saw him acting suspiciously near the Country Store on South Midkiff Road just south of Interstate 20, according to Sheriff's Deputy Larry Gandy.

Stephen Meldrum was driving by the store about 6:45 this morning when he saw the youth crouching in front of the store, apparently picking up items which had been taken from the building.

After chasing the youth away, Meldrum reported the incident to sheriff's officers, who recognized the suspect from his description. They asked the youth's parents to bring him in, and Meldrum identified him, according to Gandy.

The incident may clear up several other burglaries, Gandy said.

Odessa ophthalmologists plan to open Midland clinic

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

A group of Odessa are eyeing the Midland market with plans to open a clinic in the near future, a spokesman announced Monday afternoon.

"We hope to open up in The Fountains (an office complex near Albertson's on Andrews Highway) by April 1," said Tom Nichols of Sheets-Tolia and Associates Eye Center.

"The Midland office will have everything the Odessa clinic has except a surgery unit," he said. "But surgery will be available through local hospitals and Eyes of Texas."

Eyes of Texas is an eye surgery unit specializing in laser surgery and operated by Drs. John H. Sheets and Nalin H. Tolia. The center is located in the same complex as Sheets, in East Odessa near Loop 338 and Interstate 20.

Nichols said the Midland clinic will include a complete optical shop, a skin care lab, modern and "state-of-the-art" equipment.

"This is not a satellite operation," he said. "It's a full-blown office, fully-staffed," he added.

Some of those staff members have already applied for hospital privileges at Midland Memorial Hospital, according to Dr. Ronald Boren, president of the MMH medical staff.

"We've had 13 to 15 physicians applying for privileges," he told Midland County Hospital District Board of Trustees at its February meeting. "And it's largely due to the Sheets Eye Clinic opening up here."

However, MMH spokesman Cynthia Brust said that only four to five of those applications were actually connected with Sheets.

While Midland already has several ophthalmologists in practice, Nichols believes the market exists here for the new clinic.

"We have a number of patients from the Midland area already who come over to Odessa," he said. "The reason we're coming to Midland is because the population supports it."

He indicated that a recent market survey he conducted proves the need.

"Most definitely," he said. "The number of patients we have from Midland warrants an office here. Our patient load in Midland is proportionate to other communities."

Nichols also said the new office is not being set up to decrease business for established ophthalmologists.

"We're not here to steal customers," he said. "This is not being done to take markets away from the Midland physicians."

"What people don't realize is that Sheets and Tolia's clinic has been an Odessa-Midland practice. Customers just had to drive to Odessa to get the eye care. Now they won't have to."

Reaction from Midland's ophthalmologists, has been mostly silent. Dr. Joseph Ruda would not comment on the new clinic.

Dr. T.J. Grosev of Eye Medical Clinic was leery of the new practice.

"It's going to affect the local ophthalmologist," he said Monday. "It may take six months to a year before they are firmly established, but they are probably getting referrals already. This will affect everyone in town."

Everyone has dreamhouse, even if only in their dreams

Dreamhouses. Everyone has a one, even if only in their dreams.

The dreamhouse gets its foundation in childhood. It is built on what a child observes in his own home, those of his friends and those "everything-in-its-place" homes seen nightly on the television screen.

For some, the dreamhouse they build never changes, their vision never wavers, even though they may never achieve it. For some the dreamhouse changes as priorities change and I loosely include myself in the second category. I have three dreamhouses and three corresponding versions of myself.

The first, and, incidentally, vaguest version, is me, the "Career Woman". This is laughable to anyone who knows me, but the dream and dreamhouse are in my mind just the same.

This house is a nice two-story brick with an entry hall (you know the kind — with a long table, silk flower arrangement and gilded mirror), a formal living room, a den (one that's only just slightly comfortable), a modern kitchen with all the latest conveniences, one dining area because we are always formal when we eat, and three bedrooms (one for the "master" and me, one for our "only" child — she, of course is an only because I am so busy being a professional — and one for the occasional guest).

This house is perfect and I would never hesitate to invite in the mayor, the minister or the stock broker (who is just stopping by to say a personal hello because I have been such a good client this year. This house reflects the would-be (not likely to be) professional in me.

In the second version I am the working-wife/mother. The dreamhouse that this "me" lives in is a less grand version of the first.

The formal living room is still there and so is the den, only the den is a great deal more comfortable than the first. The kitchen is more relaxed, too. There would be lots of space to make my "messes" and an area where we would eat breakfast and midnight snacks. There would be a more formal eating area for supper and company. There is one more bedroom in this second dreamhouse because of course in this dream I would have two children — a boy and a girl. In this house I would raise my family and from it I faithfully go to my daily job.

The third house is the only one that location makes a difference.

This dreamhouse would be just on the outside of town, but with plenty of neighbors. In this house I am the almost-extinct "Susie Homemaker." This house has no formal areas at all. There is one huge living room with overstuffed armchairs and couch with a colorful afghan on its back and a fireplace. The kitchen is totally country — a big stove to make stews that will look just like the ones in Betty Crocker's cookbook and taste even better, a double sink — there would be no dishwasher except me, of course — and a big table with six chairs. Everyone eats in the kitchen (in the pantry is an extra leaf for the table and in the sewing room are the two extra chairs for when the preacher comes to Sunday dinner). In this house are at least six bedrooms for my three children and all the company that is always dropping in because our house is always so welcoming and comfortable. Did I mention that this house also has window boxes? That's very important because in this dream I will always squeeze in some time to raise flowers for my kitchen table and to take to the shut-ins at the resthome. This house is one not unlike the family home of John-Boy Walton and I am not unlike Olivia.

It is sometimes difficult to put these dreams aside and focus on the REAL world in which I live. I hope my real home would include the best parts of all my dreamhouses. But that presents a challenge, you see, because combining all the best of my dreamhouses would mean combining all the best in me.

First Baptist to host relationship seminar

From Staff Reports

First Baptist Church of Midland is hosting a relationship seminar Friday and Saturday. The Rev. Gary Smalley, a well-known Christian counselor, author and lecturer, will be the featured speaker.

Alan Schroeder, publicity chairman for the seminar, says the real problem in relationships is "a lack of individual commitment to building loving and lasting relationships, which can only happen through Jesus Christ. He is the author of love and it is only through Him that we can successfully learn how to love one another.

"Smalley has dedicated his life to teaching and writing about the essential Biblical ways to forming Godly relationships," Schroeder says. "The seminar is not just for people having trouble, but anyone who wants to improve a relationship, be it with a spouse, their children, parents or employers."

The author of two best-selling books on marriage, "If Only He Knew," for men, and "For Better of Best," for women, Smalley is a graduate of the University of California at Long Beach with a degree in psychology. He received a master of divinity from Bethel Seminary in St. Paul, Minn.

As he began his career working with a variety of churches across the country, Smalley said he began to see a tremendous need for counseling and instruction among families.

"As I worked with families I began to discover how different men and women are — not only psychologically but also in their response to situations," Smalley says. "Women are more relationship minded. Men get satisfaction through conquering, getting ahead in a job, facing challenges. Women are more satisfied through personal relationships.

"No matter whether a woman has a full-time career or is at home, she still needs an intimate relationship with another human being, in most cases with her husband, while men get the majority of fulfillment through their vocation."

Smalley says women need to communicate and share their lives, inside or outside of the home with their husbands, while men, not having this intense need, often seem to shut out their wives.

"The one thing that takes place in families, companies and any relationship, that causes more disharmony, is the closing of a person's spirit through offensive behavior. The hurt person's spirit 'closes' and this affects his or her entire being.

"When the spirit closes," Smalley says, "distancing develops and there is no conversation. It's a complicated thing when a spouse closes the spirit of his or her mate. There is so much resistance to opening back up and couples don't realize there is hope. But, a woman's spirit can open in minutes, literally, if a man knows what to do."

Topics to be discussed include turning disagreement into harmony with out hurting each other; eliminating chief causes of rebellion in children; establishing and maintaining harmony; recognizing and applying a proven secret of becoming a close-knit family; discovering the primary reason wives resist husband's sexual advances; money; sex; and power issues.

The seminar will be held in two sessions. The first session is from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Friday. The second is from 8:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. March 8. Lunch will be provided. Child care for birth through 8 years will be provided by reservations made no later than Wednesday. The fee is $20 per person which includes materials.

Some scholarships will be provided on a first come first served basis. Register by calling First Baptist Church, 682-1646.

House lays off workers in wake of budget cuts

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Even if Texas Treasurer Ann Richards has to write hot checks, 20 House of Representatives employees won't have to worry about bouncing paychecks — they lost their jobs Monday.

Setting an example for other state agencies, the Texas House and Senate Monday slashed their operating budgets by $9.8 million for the 18 months remaining in the 1986-1987 fiscal period.

Twenty-six of the 31 senators met in a rare, between-sessions caucus to cut their budget and listen to presentations on the state's financial problems from Ms. Richards and top staff from Comptroller Bob Bullock's office. The Senate cut $2.9 million — 13 percent — from its $22 million two-year budget, but ordered no layoff of Senate employees.

The House Administration Committee unanimously approved a list of 20 budget cuts that could save the state almost $7 million over the next two years, laying off about 20 employees in the process.

Ms. Richards said that if oil prices continue to fall, she will reach a point where the Treasury does not have enough money to pay the state's daily bills. At that point, she warned, the state would have to make arrangements with banks to allow it to write "hot checks" until it has the cash to back them up.

"We hope, and I say hope, to be able to squeak through December 1986 if the price of oil stabilizes," she said.

The House and Senate cutbacks are a response to Gov. Mark White's order three weeks ago for all state agencies, colleges and universities to reduce their biennial budgets by 13 percent. White ordered the cuts to combat a projected $1.3 billion loss of state revenues triggered by plummeting oil and gas prices.

White said that goal could be achieved without laying off state employees, jeopardizing their yearly 3-percent cost-of-living pay raise or reducing services. Monday's House committee action violates all three of those promises.

That plan cuts 13 permanent House employees, deletes the 3-percent pay raise planned for next year and eliminates financing for the House Study Group — a bi-partisan coalition of nearly 100 House members which researches key state issues and most bills the Legislature considers. The study group employs seven workers.

House Speaker Gib Lewis recommended many of the cost-cutting measures in a letter to Administration Committee Chairman Mike Millsap last week. Millsap, a Democrat from Fort Worth, said the plan "involves strong measures to reduce spending" which other state agencies must follow or face a cut "in more basic services."

Other than the layoffs and Study Group cuts, the House austerity plan follows the Senate's version fairly closely. Both call for cuts in spending for members' staff, travel, postage, office supplies, printing and office remodeling. Both do away with the 3-percent pay raise for 1987.

Several senators clashed with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby over whether White should call a special legislative session to re-balance the budget. Retiring Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin, said White should call a session in June before oil prices drop so low as to reach "the great day of catastrophe."

"Whistling in the wind is what we're doing if we don't deal with this thing right now," Traeger said. He said a 7/8-percent increase in the 4¼-percent state sales tax would be "painless and fair."

Hobby lectured the Senate for about 10 minutes, particularly stressing that election-year politics play no part in White's opposition to calling a special session. "There is no particular need for a special session at this time," he said.

TSTA to appeal ruling on testing

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas State Teachers Association will appeal a judge's ruling that the new state reading-and-writing test for teachers and administators is constitutional, but the test will still go on.

District Judge Harley Clark Monday ruled that the state Legislature has the power to force teachers to take the Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers. More than 200,000 teachers and administrators will take the exam Monday. Those who fail have a second chance in June. Teachers and administrators must pass the test to keep their certificates.

The TSTA will appeal the case directly to the Texas Supreme Court, but Executive Director James Butler said he doesn't expect the appeal to stop next administration of the test. The appeal, he said, will try to stop the state from decertifying teachers who do not pass.

TSTA President Charles Beard of Beaumont said the the organization still feels that a single pencil-and-paper test will not weed out incompetent teachers, is unfair to those who are poor test-takers and is distracting teachers from their classroom duties.

"Clark's decision that the statewide literacy test is constitutional will allow the state to make or break the careers of professional educators on the basis of whether or not they pass a single test," Beard said. "This fact is more than a disappointment to educators and a severe blow to their already devastated morale."

TAB files suit against Air Control Board

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Association of Business filed suit Monday against the state Air Control Board challenging a state law allowing the board to impose fines without going through the courts.

Ronnie Volkening, TAB senior vice president, said the administrative penalty rule, enacted in January as a streamlining procedure, raises serious constitutional questions. By allowing certain agencies to hand out penalties without review from the courts, TAB officials said those agencies act in a judicial and executive role.

Kinnan Golemon, TAB attorney, said the suit could affect the penalty procedures for other agencies, including the Texas Water Commission, Railroad Commission and Department of Health, which all impose fines without court approval.

Attorney General Jim Mattox's office will represent the Air Control Board in court and will defend the administrative penalty rule, said Mattox spokesman Ron Dusek. The attorney general's office cannot comment specifically on the case until staff attorneys review the suit, he said.

Golemon acknowledged that before the new rule took effect in January, agencies found it difficult to prosecute water and air polluters and other violaters. But "that the old system wasn't aggressively pursued doesn't change the fact that we require a system of checks and balances," Golemon said.

Despite possible drawn-out court proceedings and lost fines — highlighted by the state's financial crunch — the administrative penalty rule violates the state constitution and is more important than raising state revenue, Golemon said.

TAB filed the suit in Travis County District Court and asks for a "purely legal" ruling on the consititutionality of the administrative penalty rule, TAB officials said.

The TAB serves as an umbrella group representing business interests.

The newspaper's response was that the misquote, while regrettable, was a legitimate error made without racial bias. Apologies were made to those attending and it was announced that plans had earlier been made to publish an editorial on the subject in today's edition.

According to Fuller, the newspaper's management had "waited too long" to make a public apology regarding the incident and he added "I'm sure that statement raised a significant number of eyebrows...It's taken too long to get to this point."

Spence affirmed the newspaper's commitment to fair and accurate reporting and acknowledged the Reporter-Telegram should have been more "aggressive" in its attempt to restore confidence in that commitment. But he pointed out the newspaper had been in communication with the Negro Business and Professional Women's Club of Midland in an attempt to resolve the matter. The NBPW Club had sponsored Hooks' appearance here.

In a statement following the meeting, Spence said "We are proud of the good relationship this newspaper has had with the black community and we believe our session Monday will lead to even better communication."

Fuller said he believed the session Monday was "productive," but added that "I'm not going to be overly optimistic until I see some substantive results in the manner in which the Reporter-Telegram reports the events of the minority community."

Specifically, he said the Midland Reporter-Telegram "should make a significant attempt to hire minority journalists" if it hopes to take seriously its commitment to fair and accurate reporting of the Midland community in general and the minority community in particular.

He said of the meeting's outcome that "the media has to become more sensitive in the manner in which they cover the minority community."

It was agreed that the newspaper's editorial comment on the incident, which had been planned for today, would be delayed until Sunday following a request by Fuller for publication on that date.

THOMAS

According to his figures, 67 employees have been added to the city payroll over the last three years. There were 887 in July 1983 and 954 in March of this year, and that reflects a 7.5 percent increase. For this current fiscal year, 16.5 additional employees were approved, he said.

Thomas noted, however, the police department is short five to six officers which were included in this year's budget and his proposal would allow those persons to be hired. By freezing the number of employees at the level approved in this year's budget Thomas said he wouldn't be trying to handicap any department. "We need to hire the five or six people they're budgeted for," he said.

The city tax rate, said Thomas, has increased 13 percent over the last three years. It went up 2 percent for 1983-84, 8 percent for 1984-85 and 3 percent for 1985-86.

"In the current economy, the city must tighten its belt and learn to live with the current tax revenue," he stated in the release.

When the council begins its budget sessions this summer, it "should not raise taxes and should not increase the budget. Let the staff juggle where it needs to juggle. Don't go in there open-ended. If you haven't set a lid on expenditures and employment, you'll end up adding" to the budget.

Thomas said this move would be an effort to avoid future layoffs. "The best thing we can do for our loyal trained employees is to get a handle on it now and avoid having to cut in the future," he said.

He said the economy has contracted in the past three years, or the time in which he hasn't been on the council. During that last spring he served as a councilman in 1983 Thomas said he recalled the council cutting $1 million from the budget. That was due to falling sales tax revenues. "I do not think the sales tax revenues have come back to that level," he said, adding the Texas Employment Commission has revised its recent figures downward.

In response, Davidson said he felt it was "a little misleading to be throwing around numbers in the aggregate. We have a freeze on hiring right now. It's important for the public to ask themselves what impact it means to them on the services it wants the city to provide." The three biggest departments in the city are police, fire and public works, he added.

"Our budget is under constant scrutiny," Davidson said.

Ms. Harris could not be reached for comment.

Candidate has new treasurer

From Staff Reports

Ray Unterbrink has succeeded Dean Rucker as campaign treasurer for Republican Party candidate Guy McCrary's bid for election as commissioner of Midland County Precinct 2.

McCrary, a 32-year-old Midland marketing consultant, is seeking to win the May 3 Republican Party primary election by outpolling C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, 62, who has been commissioner since 1983, and challenger Milton Rister, a Greenwood businessman.

Winner of that race will be opposed by Democratic Party candidate Don Boydstun, 39, in the Nov. 4 general election. Boydstun is unopposed in the primary election.

Unterbrink, executive director of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC), was named to the McCrary treasurer's post after Rucker resigned from the job so he could take over as chairman of the Midland County Republican Party. Party bylaws do not allow a party official to hold a position in a candidate's campaign, McCrary said. Rucker is a Midland lawyer.

Rucker replaced Kelly Fish, who resigned the party's chairmanship to run for a place — District 3 — on the Midland City Council.

McCrary is principal of Guy McCrary & Associates, marketing consultants, and is a leader in several community-service organizations, including the Midland Jaycees, Midland Centennial Plaza Association, and MARC. He was selected as a Midland Centennial Citizen in 1985.

Supreme Court refuses request

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Supreme Court candidate Charles Ben Howell asked the entire Supreme Court to disqualifiy themselves from hearing his case against Justice Jim Wallace and the court refused Monday.

Wallace, a Democrat, sued Republican Howell, charging that he illegally filed for two Supreme Court positions. Howell countersued and charged that Wallace is ineligible because he improperly filled out the filing application.

Howell wanted the whole court — all Democrats — to recuse themselves and White to appoint a bipartisan, all-women panel to hear the case. The court denied the motion.

Howell will present his case to the court Wednesday morning.

Two MIAs' relatives want more proof

HOUSTON (AP) — Relatives of two Texans, whose Air Force plane was shot down in a Laotian jungle 14 years ago, say they want more proof that bone fragments discovered last week belong to their missing loved ones.

Elizabeth Castillo, wife of crewman Lt. Col. Richard Castillo, said she wants substantive proof before she accepts her husband's death.

"If we had a complete accounting of the men, then we would be more willing to accept it," said Mrs. Castillo, who lives in Corpus Christi. "It's not that we have unrealistic hopes.

"I hope the government is a lot more careful in identifying the remains that they find and if they can't identify them to say that. We can deal with that."

Searchers last week discovered human bone fragments, an American serviceman's dog tags, personal effects and military equipment at the crash site of an AC-130 gunship that was shot down by missiles March 29, 1972.

Excavations of the site started Feb. 14 and ended Wednesday.

Three Texans were among the 14-member crew. The other Texans were Maj. Curtis Daniel Miller, co-pilot of the plane and the commander, Irving B. Ramsour of Mathis.

"I think they think they are being good to the families because we have waited so long. But we don't want them to throw a few fragments in a case and say 'this is your son or this is your husband,' " Mrs. Castillo said.

Miller's mother, Nell Johnston of Huntsville, said she does not believe identifications can be made from bone fragments.

"If they can come up with a whole body or a skull and some teeth, that's a different story, if they can prove to me that they have my son's body," Mrs. Johnston said.

"I'm not expecting them to find my son's body there. I think he got out of that plane alive," she said.

Mrs. Johnston said she would not accept the bone fragments as those of her son unless a private pathologist confirms the government's findings.

"I've waited too long to be satisfied with only a handful of bone fragments," she said. "I've got to do this for his father, for the whole family."

Paul Miller, the missing co-pilot's father, was among 51 people with missing relatives who went to Laos in October 1973 after being promised that the names of Americans would be released.

When they arrived, the Laotian government told them it had no list of names and it had no men in captivity.

Hance ads disparage but don't name foes

DALLAS (AP) — GOP gubernatorial candidate Kent Hance has begun his first wave of television commercials, which disparage but do not name his Republican foes.

The two 30-second spots identify one opponent for the GOP nomination as a 68-year-old who had a chance but failed to defeat Democratic Gov. Mark White and the other as having no experience in state government.

The spots mention by name neither former Gov. Bill Clements, whom White defeated in 1982, nor U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler, who is making his first bid for state office.

"It's not name-calling. It's just laying out the facts," said Jim Francis, one of Hance's advisers. "We're talking about qualifications and winnability."

The three candidates for the GOP nomination earlier agreed to abide by the Republicans' so-called "11th Commandment" against criticizing one another in the race.

They have toyed with breaking the commandment from time to time.

Loeffler told a fund-raising audience Sunday that he learned to ride a horse "different from some folks in this race who you know ride sidesaddle — first one side and then the other."

Later, Loeffler denied singling out Hance, who switched from the Democratic Party last year.

"That sidesaddle is for anyone who will go from one side to the other," Loeffler said.

The Hance spots will run for two weeks in the Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston and Austin media markets, said campaign coordinator Byron Nelson, who declined to say how much the ads cost.

Clements and Loeffler have had ads running on television for several weeks, and they don't mention their GOP opposition at all.

A Clements aide said the Hance ads' intent was to "provoke some kind of responses from Gov. Clements."

"Gov. Clements got into this race because he felt he was the only candidate who could beat Mark White, and all the polls show that is the fact," said Clements press spokesman Reggie Bashur.

John Weaver, deputy campaign manager for Loeffler, said the Loeffler camp would have no comment about the Hance commercials.

Candidate: Mattox should reveal role in land deal

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Republican Attorney General candidate Ed Walsh Monday called on Attorney General Jim Mattox to reveal his involvement in the controversial I-30 land-flip deals.

Walsh, former Williamson County district attorney, said Mattox has become rich while in office and should clear up his dealings with flamboyant Dallas developer D.L. "Danny" Faulkner, now under federal investigation.

Walsh said courts have convicted nearly 50 people for their part in the Interstate 30 transactions, which caused a Dallas-area savings and loan to go under.

"The I-30 mess is filled with contradictions and cover-ups and Jim Mattox is right in the middle of them," Walsh said.

Mattox received two $100,00 checks from Faulkner in 1982. A copyright newspaper report last month showed Faulkner, in a sworn deposition, said he could not remember the Democratic attorney general doing anything to earn the money.

Ron Dusek, a Mattox spokesmen, said the attorney general already has answered questions about the I-30 deals. Mattox said last month that his real estate firm earned money from the Faulkner project, but denied doing anything illegal and said the federal government is not investigating him.

Walsh said the I-30 scandal "has caused over $350 million in bad loans which will ultimately come out of the pockets of U.S. taxpayers. Why has the man who calls himself the 'people's lawyer' and who boasts of being a champion for the Texas consumer done nothing to investigate these crimes?"

Dusek said the attorney general's office does not investigate cases unless asked by local prosecuters. Mattox has the right to make money from real estate deals, Dusek said, and the attorney general reported all income from the I-30 transactions.

Bush attends Dallas Baptist fundraiser

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush laments that by the time the Texas Sesquicentennial ends, he'll have just learned how to pronounce it.

But he certainly got lengthy schooling in the term and what it means to Texans during a four-day sweep of the Lone Star State that included stops at the Alamo, Dallas, Lubbock and Houston and wraps up today in Corpus Christi.

"This trip has been fantastic," Bush told some of the 1,400 people who gathered at a Dallas Baptist University fund-raising dinner Monday night. "The only bad news is that once it (the Sesquicentennial) is gone, I'll just have learned how to pronounce it."

After the $100-per-person dinner that raised $130,000 for DBU scholarships, Bush said Texas has grown so much in the last 40 years because of "fundamental values" like the ones taught at DBU.

He called the school an education pace-setter that "teaches the fundamental core of values and how the American free enterprise system really works."

He said he learned values such as honesty and integrity in his years in Texas, and that "they go a long way in explaining why Texas has grown so much over the last 40 years."

He added that "Texas was not only founded by built by heroes. The power of their love and values built great cities like Dallas."

Earlier Monday, Bush told guests at a GOP fundraising luncheon that Republican control of the White House and Senate is not enough and the party must gain strength in the House.

"We do have a big job," Bush told 400 supporters of Rep. Dick Armey, R-Denton, at a lunch at an Arlington hotel. "That is to win the House, or at least to pick up a working coalition."

Bush spoke at the $100-a-plate lunch in support of Armey, a freshman Republican who, as a college economics professor, beat incumbent Democrat Tom Vandergriff in one of the closest congressional elections of 1984.

Bush blasted the national Democratic leadership for opposing "almost every principle that the American people sent the president and me to Washington to fight for."

"The liberal, national Democratic leadership says, 'If it moves, tax it. If it still moves, regulate it. If it stops moving, subsidize it,' " Bush told the crowd to loud applause.

STATE in brief

Bomb explodes in locker

FORT WORTH (AP) — A high school principal says a bomb made of chemicals poured into a bottle exploded in a second-floor locker, but no one was injured.

A fire department spokesman said an investigation into Monday's explosion at Southwest High School is expected by the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms this week.

"I'm shocked and amazed that the kids would do something of that nature and not understand the consequences," said Glenn Mandeville, school principal. "A bomb is a felony ...It's a federal offense."

Mandeville said five students were allegedly involved in the bombing. Fort Worth arson investigators and school officials apprehended three of the five students after the explosion, two 16-year-olds and one 17 years old.

Teen shoots classroom floor

DALLAS (AP) — An elementary school principal says a 13-year-old student pulled out a .32-caliber pistol during a class, showed it to other pupils and then fired it into the floor.

No one was injured in the shooting Monday at Mount Auburn Elementary School, said Principal Arturo Cantu.

The fourth-grade student "was sorry" after the incident, Cantu said. "He was crying. He knew he was in real trouble," the principal said.

He said there was only one bullet in the gun and the boy had no other ammunition.

Cantu said the boy apparently did not threaten any of the other students with the gun before firing it.

Decomposed body found

DALLAS (AP) — Authorities say they requested dental records to determine if a decomposed body found in the Trinity River is that of a 13-year-old boy missing since Feb. 4.

Police said two men discovered the body about 10 a.m. Monday. The cause of death has not yet been determined.

Officers said a woman whose son apparently ran away from home believes the body is that of her son and will provide dental records for comparisons.

Police said the body had been in the river about three or four days.

Refuges to treat birds

HARLINGEN (AP) — Texas is for the birds — at least for a broadwing hawk and turkey vulture that will be flown from the University of Minnesota Raptor Research Center.

The two rehabilitated birds, part of a group that usually would migrate through the Lower Rio Grande Valley in the fall, will be treated in time to migrate back to the North in this spring.

The hawk will be treated at Bird Rescue Inc. and the turkey vulture at the Santa Anna National Wildlife Refuge.

Betty's Boutique offers preteen, junior, missy, missy petite fashions

Betty's Boutique, located in San Miguel Square, is the perfect place to shop for preteen, junior and missy sporty fashions and accessories. Spring fashions are arriving daily and by fall, owner Betty Smith, says she will also have a complete missy petite department.

Betty explains that her shop has been in San Miguel Square, ever since the shopping center opened about seven and a half years ago. Since then, many Midlanders have been consistently shopping at Betty's Boutique.

It's no wonder that customers go back to Betty's time and time again. Shopping for clothes should be fun and Betty's Boutique makes it fun.

You can expect friendly, personal service every time you enter the store, which is open Monday-Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

And, there's no hassle finding the right size at Betty's. This store caters to the young working women of Midland, as well as sporty high school students. Betty knows these people often have a difficult time finding the styles they want in the sizes they need. That's why she keeps the store well stocked in a wide range of sizes, including a lot of small sizes even in junior ones, threes and fives.

New spring styles are still arriving. Everything from jeans to Easter suits are in stock. In fact, Betty is having a pre-Easter suit sale, so suits from 4 to 14 are 25 percent off. "I carry a lot of dressy things for Easter," Betty says.

And, by no means is the store short on jeans. Lee, Zena and Bacardi jeans fill the racks. The Bacardi jeans, which have relly unusual pockets and a good fit, are some of Betty's favorite ones.

Hang Ten and Pandora Waterville are also two of Betty's Boutiques most popular summer lines.

This year, Betty says, bright colors and "big" shirts with coordinating tank tops are going to be the "in" thing. "There's also a lot of Hawaiian-type prints."

Mickey Mouse jeans and night shirts, as well as a variety of clothing styles featuring Mickey Mouse, are also available at Betty's.

And, all the real summery cotton shirts of bright colors and the new spring sweaters are just waiting for you at Betty's Boutique.

Betty announces that she has also expanded her accessory lines. More and more scarves, belts, handbags and jewelry will be seen at this friendly store. Even the popular Dhurrie bags are in stock.

Visa, MasterCard and American Express are all accepted, and Betty does have a layaway plan.

Go by Betty's Boutique in San Miguel Square, and you'll see how a friendly atmosphere and a good selection can make shopping for your summer wardrobe a fun experience.

Betty Smith, owner of Betty's Boutique which is located in San Miguel Square, says brightly colored "big" shirts with coordinating tank tops are going to be popular this year. Browse through Betty's sporty preteen, junior and missy styles this week.

Olsten celebrates 35 years of winning, growth

Amy Stewart just returned from a national sales seminar where Olsten, one of the nation's top three temporary help companies, celebrated 35 years of winning.

The company's 35-years of winning growth is nothing less than phenomenal. It started as one office in Manhattan and now includes 325 offices nationwide. Olsten Corporation has been touted as one of the nation's fastest-growing businesses in 1985. Its stock rocketed 150 percent and 30 new offices were opened.

Amy Stewart, owner of Olsten of Midland, recently returned from Olsten's national sales seminar and celebration of 35 years of winning. Count on the winning team, and the next time you need temporaries call 683-5677.

Ms. Stewart says Olsten has grown this quickly by initiating a strong licensing campaign, which combines the strengths of a major corporation and the personal service of local owners and staff. Operating as one of Olsten's many new licensees, Olsten of Midland is owned by Ms. Stewart and has been serving Midland for 1½ years.

Olsten is good business and their services are good for your business.

In these hard times, what every company strives for is to run a lean operation. As a result, more and more companies are turning to the temporary help industry for supplemental staffing.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics predicts that the temporary service industry, which now employs 5 million people annually, will be among the fastest growing industries of this decade, according to Ms. Stewart.

Why are hiring policies shifting to temporary workers? As a result of income uncertainties, many businesses find it necessary to cut back on full-time help, either through release or attrition — but then find themselves short-handed when there's a rush job or a big order. Temporaries eliminate last-minute panic when deadlines loom on the horizon, but that's not the main economic argument for utilizing temporary help.

Approximately seventy-five percent of all business expenses are related to personnel — that's salary, fringe benefits, absenteeism, recruitment costs and turnover. White collar salaries and company benefits (both mandatory and discretionary) have skyrocketed over the past two decades. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce recently released figures showing that a salary of $200.00 per week actually has hidden costs of $93.50. The cost of keeping a large complement of employees on staff becomes astronomical when you consider tax deductions, worker's compensation, unemployment claims, overtime, severance pay and expense accounts. Fringe benefits alone can add an additional 38 to 45 percent on to every permanent employee's salary, not to mention the cost of the paperwork involved in keeping employee records.

"Today, nine out of ten businesses depend upon supplemental staffing. And that's not just small companies either," notes Ms. Stewart. Nearly all of the Fortune 500 companies use temporary services. Temporaries today are skilled — and screened — office workers.

Whatever your reasons for using temporary help, selecting the right service means the difference between a job done and a job well done!

Olsten of Midland can provided qualified, tested temporaries to fill just about any need. Whatever skills you need in a temporary count on Olsten to provide the best. Call Olsten's professional staff at 683-5677 or go by their office at 104 Wall Towers West.

Herb your camera's ready at Foto-Makers

Herb your camera's ready at Foto-Makers in the Imperial Shopping Center!

That's right. Foto-Makers has a camera selection that will please anyone. Nikon, Canon, Olympus, Yashica or Kodak are all waiting for Herb and his friends at Midland's premier camera shop.

Foto-Makers can even repair Herb's old camera that his grandmother gave him for graduation back in ...., well, he won't say when that was and his grandmother doesn't remember.

Herb's grandmother knows that Foto-Makers stands for quality. That's why she always takes her film to the experts that give her 37 percent larger than standard prints. Just the other day she took some old pictures from fishing trips to Foto-Makers for quality copy work. Foto-Makers did a great job but her catch still didn't look any bigger - a fish is a fish is a fish and a little fish is just a little fish.

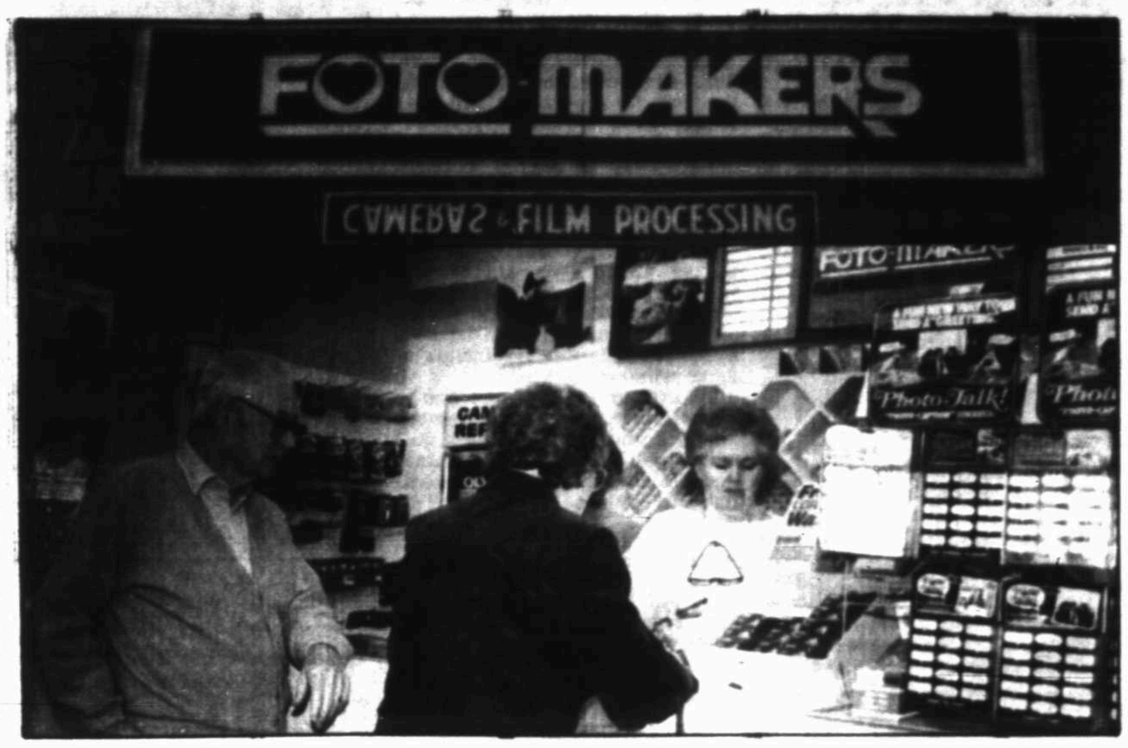
Even so, Grandma's constantly telling her favorite grandson, "If you're gonna do something Herb, sonny, it's worth doing it right. Take that film to Foto-Makers."

Herb's heard that so many times that he dreams about Foto-Makers —— ahhh, such sweet dreams.

Kodak Color Watch for quality, Kodak paper for a good look and an in by 10 out by 4 schedule —— all the things good dreams and Foto-Makers are made of.

Herb especially likes to have his favorite shots made into 8x10's at Foto-Makers, where all the work is done on site and two day service is a standard.

Herb knows what he's doing when it comes to pictures. You, too, can have the best at Foto-Makers in the Imperial Shopping Center.



Herb's camera and prints are ready at Foto-Makers in Imperial Shopping Center and so are yours!

Tim Weiland of Reflections Glass Repair announces that the Kier System, with a patented chemical guarangeed not to discolor, is now available in the Permian Basin.

Reflections Glass Repair offers superior Kier system

Once it sets up and hardens, the machine is removed and the crack is capped to assure that the mark virtually disappears. The repair is always clear.

The Kier System uses a special, patented chemical which has been government tested and the work is guaranteed against discoloration. To insure the best results possible, the Kier System has two types of chemical — one designed for use in cold weather and one for warm weather.

Your windshield will not be removed and the average repair takes 15 to 20 minutes.

Because you can expect a savings of approximately 80 percent when you have Reflections repair your glass instead of replacing it, most insurance companies will waive the deductible, Weiland says.

Reflections Glass Repair operates from a mobile unit so you don't have to wait or do without your car. Just call 563-8318 anytime and Reflections Glass Repair will come to your home or office.

Weiland uses a compressor to pump a chemical into the break.

Reflections Glass Repair offers the amazing, nationally-known Kier System which can repair your windshield, save you hundreds of dollars and increase the resale value of your automobile.

Tim Weiland of Reflections Glass Repair is excited to be able to offer this top quality glass repair system to a seven county area surrounding Midland (includes Odessa, Andrews, Seminole, Stanton and Monahans). Last November Weiland went to the Kier factory to become a certified factory-trained technician. Already Weiland says, he has seen a tremendous response in the Midland area.

Because of Kier System's superior chemicals, Reflections Glass Repair has a number of large accounts including rental car agencies.

Weiland points out that the system can repair the "bullseye," "half-moon," "daisy" and "star" cracks that most frequently occur in windshields. If left unrepaired these cracks can grow larger in size and ultimately necessitate expensive windshield replacement. However, after Reflections has repaired the crack, chances are you won't even be able to locate where the repair was made.

In fact, Weiland says, "We can make the repair look cosmetically better than anyone else can."

It's time to have Bill's Fencecraft repair fences, install storm windows

"Now is the time to repair your fence," says Bill Rodriguez, owner of Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft. It's also a good time for all kinds of home improvements such as storm windows and painting. Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft can help you with all of this.

It won't be long until another West Texas spring starts bringing in strong winds. If you have a weak fence, you can save money by having it reinforced before the wind puts it to the test. If you wait until the fence has been blown down, the expense of repairing or replacing the fence will be much greater.

Bill's company is ready to repair block and brick walls, as well as wood fences and gates before the spring winds blow in. With 27 years experience in all types of fencing, Bill feels confident that his company can take care of your fence.

For wooden fences that have become weak, Bill says they can install steel posts for support and add another 15-20 years life to the fence.

For new wood fences, Bill's Fencecraft offers both cedar and white wood, but Bill explains they always use the more durable cedar posts. Such fences, he says, should last 15 to 20 years.

If the posts rot out earlier than that, Bill says, standing water may be causing the problem. For this reason he suggests building a curb to facilitate drainage, or using steel posts.

Bill can build all types of fences - wood, block, brick with wrought iron, masonry, even fences for dog runs.

Bill's Fencecraft specializes in gate repair and installation. In fact, he offers a durable wood gate with a steel frame. The steel protects the gate from much unnecessary wear and tear.

If you'd like to see some of the quality work of Bill's Fencecraft, take a look at the fence along Loop 250, just South of the Saddle Club addition. Bill is particularly proud of is that recent job.

He is also in the process of installing a quality wood fence at 3301 Travis, just across from Wells Boot City.

Bill says they have also installed storm windows and painted the house on Travis.

Bill is pleased to be offering storm windows and doors, now. He is carrying storm windows, made by a 25-year-old company — All-Weather Products, Inc. He has a wide variety of windows, including single glass, double glass, sun glass, gray and bronze tint glass and other shades. With the wide variety they have, Bill's Fencecraft should have one that will fit your needs and your budget.

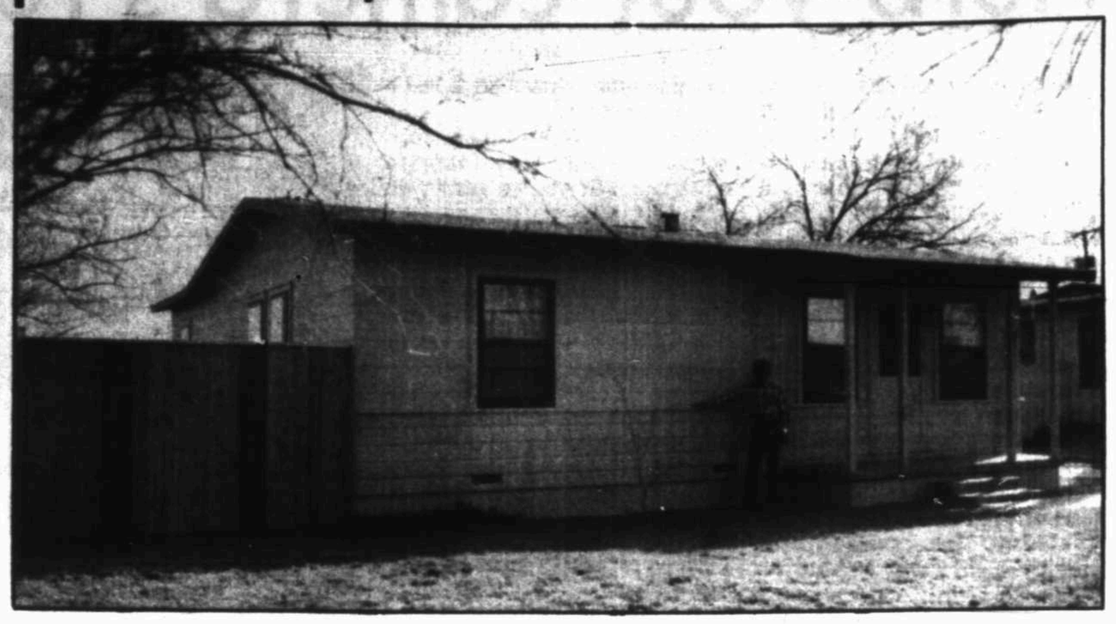
Because storm windows provide not only energy savings, but also protection from much of the dust, now is a perfect time to have these installed.

Fencecraft's full line of services includes just about any kind of work you may need around the house — sprinkler system installation and repair, interior and exterior painting, stucco work, fences, installation of storm windows and more.

Bill explains that they are glad to give job references and always work off a contract, so you know just where you stand. Each contract specifies a time for completion and warranty included.

Bill can help many of his customers get financing for their home improvement projects.

For your home improvements, call Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft at 697-4712 or go by their office at Loop 250 and Fencecraft.



Bill Rodriguez, owner of Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft, points out that his company not only builds fences, but also installs storm windows and does quality painting, like they did at this house at 3301 Travis.

Make your voice heard through Shoppers' Hotline

Midland is a special community. O.K., you already knew that. But, did you know that your opinions will have a direct impact on the future of the American marketplace?

You now have a "hotline" into the headquarters of major manufacturers. Your community is one of many in the nation where the new Shoppers' Hotline consumer program has been established. Shoppers' Hotline is a unique consumer panel that provides an important link between the shopper and the manufacturer.

Shoppers' Hotline consumer panel is made up of local residents like you. Your household is now speaking for thousands of other homes just like yours. Your preferences will help determine which products should be offered to the entire country and which products should be removed from store shelves.

Cooperating in the Shoppers' Hotline program is very easy. Each participant receives an I.D. card which is shown at the checkout lanes of your local participating supermarkets and drug stores. With the aid of UPC codes and computerized scanning systems, Shoppers' Hotline keeps a record of your purchases at no inconvenience to you. You are never bothered about what you purchased or why, nor is your name divulged to manufacturers. Your purchase information is used for statistical purposes only.

It's that simple! Thus, every time you show your Hotline card, you're telling the manufacturer through actual sales what products you like and dislike. Nothing speaks to a manufacturer like actual sales results.

In addition, as a Shoppers' Hotline member, you have the opportunity to participate in marketing research studies. A representative of Shoppers' Hotline will call you about once a month to set up an appointment in the convenience of your home. You will then be shown concepts for new products and asked to evaluate them. Additionally, you may actually be given a sample of a test product and asked to use it. Later, a representative will telephone you to ask your opinion of the product. It's that easy!

By participating you'll receive cash gifts!

All Shoppers' Hotline members are eligible for monthly cash gifts.

If you show your Hotline card weekly at participating supermarkets, you'll receive a check in the mail for up to two dollars every month. You could easily receive up to twenty-four dollars a year as thanks for your participation in Shoppers' Hotline.

But that's not all! Shoppers' Hotline members are eligible for monthly prizes. Every time you show your card, you receive a chance in a monthly prize drawing. Shoppers' Hotline gives away hundreds of prizes every month, including dream vacations, color TVs, microwave ovens and cash.

Consumers need to speak up about what they like and don't like. You count! Tell manufacturers, through your actions, which products have a future throughout the country. There is no better way to make your voice heard than through active participation in Shoppers' Hotline.

To find out how you can become a Shoppers' Hotline member, call 683-9156 or complete and mail the coupon in the Shoppers' Hotline ad on today's Business/Industry pages.

Woman who refused FarmAid says farm sale 'like death of loved one'

DODGEVILLE, Wis. (AP) — A woman who rejected $2,000 in contributions after her plight was detailed to millions viewing the FarmAid telecast says seeing the family farm go on the auction block is "like the death of a loved one."

Sue Massey of Hollandale commented on the eve of today's scheduled auction at the Iowa County Courthouse.

Mrs. Massey, whose letter was read to a national television audience during the September FarmAid concert, said she would mourn the loss of the farm that had been in her husband's family more than 80 years.

"It's going to be like a death of a loved one," Mrs. Massey said Monday. "I'm expecting tomorrow to be a real hard day, but I'm expecting that on the day after it will hurt a little less."

During the concert, a member of the band Alabama read Mrs. Massey's letter about her family's struggle while photos of the Massey family were flashed on a giant video screen behind the band.

She said the family received about 150 letters after the telecast, many of them filled with encouraging words from other families who had lost their farms and some containing money.

Mrs. Massey said she and her husband, Kenneth, sent back the roughly $2,000 they had received and asked the donors to give the money to FarmAid instead.

"We thought in some way we'd be contacted, but we've never heard a thing from them," Mrs. Massey said of FarmAid.

A man who answered a toll-free FarmAid telephone number Monday said he could take a pledge, but didn't have a telephone number for contacting FarmAid officials.

Mrs. Massey said she and her husband decided it would be best to bring their five children, ages 18 months to 10 years, to the auction.

"Someone said send them to school like it's any other day, but it's not like any other day," she said. "We need to go so we can relate to something emotionally as being the end."

The auction of the Masseys' 325-acre farm was needed to pay debts accrued by Bett-Or Eggs Inc., a corporation owned by the family. The corporation owes more than $65,000 to feed suppliers and has defaulted on a real estate loan.

Mrs. Massey said the troubles began in 1976, when the family had to buy $19,000 worth of chicken feed after a summer drought.

FmHA to resume farm foreclosures for first time since '84 court order

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — The Farmers Home Administration may start action against thousands of delinquent borrowers nationwide as long as the agency, a lender of last resort for farmers, protects their rights to appeal, a federal judge has ruled.

The decision Monday by U.S. District Judge Bruce Van Sickle clears the way for the agency to begin foreclosures for the first time since he ordered the FmHA to overhaul its repayment and foreclosure policies in 1984.

Late last year, the FmHA announced it was preparing to resume action against 65,000 delinquent borrowers and warned those who had not made a payment in at least three years that they were in danger of foreclosure.

The Agriculture Department agency began writing to deliquent borrowers last week. Most will get a friendly reminder to contact local officials about their overdue loans, FmHA Administrator Vance L. Clark said then, but tougher letters warning of "intent to take adverse action" were going to about 40 percent.

Clark said about 27,000 borrowers are three years or more behind in payments, including 3,000 who may have fraudulently dodged their debts.

"I don't expect a lot of great, terrible things to be happening across the nation because of those mailings," Clark said. "There will be foreclosures, sure, and I think we have to prepare for some of those, but it's not the end of the world."

The FmHA has about $28.3 billion in loans outstanding, or more than 13 percent of the nation's total farm debt of $212 billion. There are approximately 270,000 farm borrowers, including the 65,303 delinquents, officials said.

Van Sickle's 50-page ruling Monday came in a class-action suit in which a group of farmers challenged the rules under which the agency proposed to begin taking action against delinquents.

Attorneys for the farmers argued that vagueness in the rules would give the agency the power to "starve out" some borrowers by refusing to return to them money for living and operating expenses.

FmHA borrowers are required to hand over to the agency the money they get from the sale of crops.

Drug tests of federal workers called 'witch hunt' that violates constitution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Charging "witch hunt" and illegal searches, a civil liberties group and a labor union said a presidential panel's proposal for drug testing in government work places would violate the constitutional rights of federal workers.

The President's Commission on Organized Crime issued a report Monday saying the U.S. drug problem has become a threat to national security and justifies drastic measures such as drug testing on the job.

"Forcing someone to submit to drug testing is the equivalent to illegal search and seizure," said Kenneth Blaylock, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, the largest federal workers' union with 210,000 members.

"Drugs have no place at the federal work site or any other work site. We'll support any reasonable plan to eliminate drug abuse or to rehabilitate employees suspected of having a problem," Blaylock said, but, "We oppose the witch hunt approach."

In a report to President Reagan, the commission called drug trafficking and abuse "the most serious organized crime problems in America today." It said the president should direct all federal agencies to formulate "immediately clear policy statements, with implementing guidelines, including suitable drug testing programs."

The recommendation "puts millions of government employees in the position of proving that they are not drug abusers," protested Allan Adler, legislative counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union.

There are some 2.7 million civilian federal employees and 1.7 million in the military.

The study also said government contracts should not be awarded to companies that fail to implement "suitable drug testing." The federal government does business with about 15,000 companies employing 23 million workers.

"I think drug testing is an appropriate response by employers" who are contracting with the federal government, said Mark A. de Bernardo, manager of labor law at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Drug and alcohol abuse nationally costs industry $60 billion a year in lost productivity, increased absenteeism, higher accident rates and medical claims and theft, he said.

"Within the framework of what is feasible and legally permissible, employers not only have right to do drug testing, they may also have the responsibility," de Bernardo added.

Adler noted that law enforcement agencies are unable to stop the flow of drugs into the United States and that anti-drug education programs are unable to change the habits of the American public.

"It's difficult to understand why they think this is going to affect organized crime by invading the privacy of millions of people," Adler said.

The report, however, said the public and private sectors "must all recognize that we are in a national emergency."

NATION IN BRIEF

Billig gets four years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Convicted Navy heart surgeon Donal M. Billig, sentenced to four years in prison and ordered dismissed from the service for the deaths of three patients at Bethesda Naval Hospital, could be out on parole after serving 16 months.

A jury of nine Navy officers deliberated 90 minutes Monday before sentencig him to four years in prison, ordering him dismissed and requiring him to forfeit future pay. The dismissal does not take effect until appeals are completed.

Billig, 55, the former chief of heart surgery at Bethesda, where President Reagan was treated for cancer, will serve his term at the U.S. Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where the Navy imprisons officers. He was taken into custody by the Naval Investigative Service immediately after sentencing.

"I didn't think confinement was going to serve any useful purpose, and it's still not in my view," said defense attorney Lt. Cmdr. Stephen Baker.

Tax amnesty proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate budget writers, beginning their struggle to piece together a fiscal 1987 spending plan, are expressing interest in a tax amnesty proposal as a way to raise revenues without violating President Reagan's prohibition on a general tax increase.

The idea could raise as much as an additional $25 billion for the government, according to a document prepared by Senate Budget Committee aides.

"People want revenues but don't want any new taxes, so amnesty is gaining strength," said Senate budget panel Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M. taxes?' "

The Budget Committee is set to begin work Wednesday on drafting a budget outline for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 that meets the deficit targets of a new balanced budget law and still satisfies the often differing concerns of Congress and the White House.

The committee's package contains a section outlining various revenue options, including tax amnesty.

"Based on experience in various states, revenue estimates for tax amnesty and the accompanying increase in enforcement range from $7 billion to $25 billion," the committee document says.

Army to cut moving bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trying to plug overpayments that are expected to rise beyond $4.5 million, the Army says it is revising its system for paying private firms that arrange international shipments of military household goods.

Col. George Kaine, spokesman for the Military Traffic Management Command, said Monday the Army is establishing a stringent ceiling on its payments to the firms.

The service also is eliminating a quirk in the rate structure for international shipments to the Washington, D.C., area. Kaine said confusion about the Washington rates led military shipping clerks to choose high-cost companies.

'Stalker' hearing open

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Ramirez, who is accused of 14 murders and scores of other felonies in the "Night Stalker" attacks, lost a second bid Monday to keep the public out of his preliminary hearing.

Shortly before testimony began, Superior Court Judge Aurelio Munoz refused to overturn a decision by Municipal Court Judge James F. Nelson to keep the hearing open

Ramirez, 25, is charged in Los Angeles with 14 murders and 54 other counts of rape, assault and other felonies. At an earlier hearing, he shouted, "Hail Satan!" as he was led from court and displayed a pentagram, an inverted star often used to symbolize the devil, on the palm of his hand.

Wigs move from fashion taboo to trend

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Situation No. 1: For the August wedding of Madonna and actor Sean Penn, Cher wears a purple wig.

Situation No. 2: For a summer refresher, both Bloomingdale's and Macy's set up wig displays on the first floor of their New York stores. Lunch-hour shoppers go wild.

Situation No. 3: For his fashion show held two weeks ago in Milan, Gianni Versace puts wigs on his models because he is "bored with women looking like boys."

The situation is clear: wigs are back.

Thanks to Music Television, technology and a "fake is fine" attitude, wigs and hair extenders of all types and colors are moving from the taboo to the trendy. They have taken up where colored hair sprays left off by giving women and men a no-strands-attached way of going wild with their hair.

Forget "wiglets" and "falls" and all those bubblelike creations that were better fit for Barbie than human beings. Today's wigs are nothing like those.

"This trend has nothing to do with going backward. It is not a resurrection whatsoever," said Jerome Alexander, who was a wig "pioneer" in the early 1960s. "This is a whole new dimension. Wigs are now fashion accessories — they fit a mood. It's like a woman saying, 'Today, I'm going to wear jeans.' Or, 'Today, I'm going to wear my Feraud dress.'"

THERE IS even a new wig vocabulary now, said Alexander, who visited Denver recently to teach makeup techniques.

"I don't want to call them wiglets or hairpieces anymore. That's old," he said. "Now, they're Flairs, or hair additions."

Alexander's Flairs, for instance, are brightly colored strands of hair that fasten to a person's own hair with combs. They are similar to Hair Sparks from Look of Love International, which are 6-inch strands that stick to the scalp with reusable, double-sided tape. There also are "switches" — ponytails and braids — in all colors, from natural to frankly fake. And all kinds of colorful hair extensions.

Glemby, for example, recently introduced Frosted Flakes, hair additions in several colors. At under $10, the Frosted Flakes have found a market with teenagers, particularly cheerleaders and pep club members who want to show loyalty to a school team.

"Here in New York, people wear this kind of thing all over the place — it doesn't have to be an occasion," said Tom Raccis, vice president of sales and marketing for Glemby. "But these Frosted Flakes are even doing great in Omaha because the schools have picked up on it. Kids will come in to a store and say, 'I need this for cheerleading,' and they'll put one in for a pep rally and then take it out and use it again."

THERE'S ANOTHER benefit, too: "Nobody objects to these," Raccis said. "If you showed parents a can of colored spray and one of the Frosted Flakes and asked them, 'Which would you buy?' — every parent would go with the Frosted Flakes."

Hair extensions also are being used for more realistic reasons.

At Salon Salon in New York, for example, stylist Timothy Downs uses natural-looking extensions to add bangs to hairstyles. And for women who are growing in last year's short haircut, Downs might add a curly addition to one side of the head and slick the other side back.

Stylists can show women how to French-braid a switch of hair into their own, giving them an instant, long-hair look.

If a wig or hair extension is just for fun, it can be a do-it-yourself project. But if a person is serious about the idea — adding bangs, for instance — the wig or addition should be styled by a professional, experts said. One of the reasons the wig business died in the 1970s, Alexander maintains, is that women could not figure out what to do with their cash-and-carry hair.

"The wig business will never come back unless everybody understands that women cannot do their own hair," Alexander said. "It requires technical skill. In order for the hairpiece business to come back, it has to come back as a whole new concept, a whole new point of view, and it must come back through the professional hairdresser."

Visually, the comeback of wigs is startling. There they are on the pages of Vogue, Elle and Harper's Bazaar. Economically, though, the comeback is steady but slow — exactly the same way a fashion trend filters from the top down to the masses.

AT THE height of wig-mania nearly 20 years ago, approximately 20 million wigs per year were being imported to the United States. In 1980, only 8 million wigs were imported, according to Ed Oberhaus of Kanekalon, the company that makes Kanekalon, a synthetic fiber that is used in approximately 75 percent of all wigs.

"In the last few years there has been an increase," Oberhaus said, and for the first eight months of 1985, there was an 18 percent increase in imports from last year.

"In 1986, we may be edging toward 9 million," predicted Oberhaus, who cites a new fashion outlook for the resurgence.

"Women are now accepting a decidedly fake look — it's happening in wigs, in makeup and in fake furs," he said. "Instead of looking perfectly natural, women realize that they can be fashionable with an obviously fake hairpiece. It took off with the younger women, who were ready to accept a new trend."

Wigs and hair additions are, Oberhaus said, "a non-permanent way to change yourself. It's as easy as makeup, which isn't a tattoo job, after all."

He added that today's synthetic wigs are "head and shoulders above what they used to be. Today, with Kanekalon — which is a man-made, synthetic, modacrylic fiber — we have synthetic wigs that look and feel like real hair, with one difference: The wigs have memory."

In other words, once a wig is curled, you can brush it out straighter, but it will always revert to a curl.

"There's a new generation of wigs, and a new generation that's buying them," Oberhaus said.

"Years ago, if somebody walked in with purple hair, you'd say, 'Look at that freak,'" Alexander said. "Today, she's sitting right next to the preppy. No one is sitting in judgment. It's OK to be whatever you want to be."

Hairdressers offer body-hugging hair styles for spring

By JUDIE GLAVE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Hair stylists are taking their cues these days from Seventh Avenue, offering sleek, chic short hairdos that hug the head the way designer clothes hug the body.

Though cut close, the styles have motion and fullness because they are bobbed, razored bluntly at the ends and sheared inches short of the nape.

Hair maven Vidal Sassoon calls his newest look "Halley's Comet," in honor of Edmund Halley's famous discovery.

The comet cut, so-called because of its orb shape and emphasis on the hair's natural shine, comes in three styles:

A bowl cut with short, even bangs; a bowl with long bangs; and "the baby bob," an updated version of the '20s coif complete with Betty Boop side-fringes that are razor cut instead of curled.

The baby bob is nice for those who may want to grow the hair long again because it will need no major re-cutting or styling work.

"It is a short, layered look that as the hair grows maintains the same styling only longer. In other words you can grow right from the baby bob into an adolescent bob," quipped Sassoon.

Likewise, members of Intercoiffure America-Canada who include salon owners, beauty school operators and hair care manufacturers, believe the bobbed and fringed cuts are hot news for spring.

"Fashion dictates what we're going to do," said Don Shaw, fashion director of the group, and since the look is reminiscent of the '60s with shorter skirts and more emphasis on make up, so are hairdos.

"The look was blunt and heavy in the '60s but we're thinning it out to make hair versatile," Shaw said.

"We've quit using brushes," said Shaw. "Everything is blown dry and finished with the fingers these days. It gives a more dramatic look and that's the key to the look for spring."

Sleek, chic short hairdos will be the trend for spring hairdos.

Actor makes stubble chic

Hearst News Service

Don Johnson, star of the Miami Vice TV series, made stubble chic. Now, San Francisco entrepreneur Robert Warner and the Wahl Clipper Corp. want to turn it into a growth business.

Their angle is an electric razor called Miami DeVice that leaves a stubble from ⅛-inch to ⅝-inch long.

To perfect the look, Warner took a Wahl beard trimmer, similar to a hair clipper, and altered it slightly so that it gives a closer trim but not a smooth one. The Miami DeVice ensures an even stubble, Warner said, not the "erratic look" that comes from shaving and letting the beard grow out.

He copyrighted the name Miami DeVice and then called Sterling, Ill.-based Wahl with the idea.

He was directed to B.J. Cornstubble, Wahl's marketing director. "I didn't believe the guy's name was Cornstubble," Warner said. "I had to go see him myself."

Warner flew to Sterling and sold Cornstubble on the Miami DeVice. After several meetings, the company and Warner agreed on a royalty fee, but product distribution is being held up by other details of the licensing agreement.

If negotiations go well, Cornstubble said, Miami DeVice could be in stores in 1½ months with a suggested retail price of $29.95.

But Cornstubble said he has no idea how many Miami DeVices the company might sell.

"If it's something that catches on and lasts for five years, sales could be enormous. But if Miami Vice goes off the air, the fad could die pretty quickly."

DEAR ABBY

Male rape victims need help too

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Please publish some information about adult male rape.

My 18-year-old son (I'll call him Randy) was beaten and gang-raped. Going to the police was awful for him.

They were not prepared to cope with a male rape victim.

The criminals who raped Randy are in custody, but they were not charged with rape — only assault and battery, even though the officers know they raped my son.

Randy is a fine young man who never associated with people of questionable character.

He had never seen these men before; they just forced him off the street and did this terrible thing to him.

He was so upset he wasn't able to tell me about it; the chaplain at the hospital where he was treated told me.

Almost every city has a rape crisis facility where female rape victims can go for counseling, but there's no help in our town for male rape victims.

Please print this. The public needs to know. — CONCERNED MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Because rape is as much a violation for a male as a female, male victims should be as entitled to care, treatment and counseling as female victims.

Unfortunately, because male rape victims are more reluctant to report the crime, the general public is not aware of their numbers.

Some, but not nearly enough, rape crisis centers are equipped to handle male victims.

This is a plea to male rape victims: Report the crime.

It is also a plea to rape crisis centers to provide services for males as well as females.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the letter from the man who had gotten bald: It's not always vanity or the desire to look younger that makes a man buy a hairpiece.

My husband is a minister who became bald. He's out in the cold without a hat, at funerals, visiting, etc.

After preaching, his head is wet from perspiration.

He'd get colds, sinus headaches and earaches, all because his bald head was exposed to the cold.

He bought a hairpiece to keep his head warm, and he hasn't had a cold, a sinus headache or earache since.

The hairpiece is the same color as his own hair used to be and it looks nice.

People compliment him on his new look, and he loves it.

He's not trying to fool anybody.

Once when it was hot outside, he took it off. — HIS WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Now that's a hair-raising story.

DEAR ABBY: The reason many older women are no longer interested in marrying is as follows: When eligible men in their early 60s and 70s are out there playing the field, having a great time, they rarely think of marrying and sharing those good years with a wife.

As soon as the doctor gives them the news that they have a serious health problem, such as an enlarged prostate or a heart condition, they start shopping for a wife.

They aren't even subtle.

I've had men suddenly ask me what my blood pressure is, if I have any health problems and what my approximate income is.

Once they are assured of my health and finances, they ask if I have ever thought of getting married.

Some actually admit that they need someone to take care of them.

I tell them to check into a retirement home, as that is what I plan to do when I need care.

When they could travel, dance and enjoy life, they weren't willing to share those years with a wife.

Now they're looking for an unpaid nurse. — NO WAY, JOSE

Turner completes plans for MGM/UA takeover

ATLANTA (AP) — Ted Turner has wrapped up the paperwork on his takeover of MGM/UA Entertainment Co., but said he has dropped plans to sell an interest in his Cable News Network to help raise the $550 million he needs to finance the deal.

With Turner casting the vote for his 81 percent share, stockholders of Turner Broadcasting System Inc. approved the merger plans Monday.

Later, MGM/UA shareholders approved the takeover during a meeting at the company's Culver City, Calif., headquarters. The outcome of the vote was no surprise, for Turner held a proxy from owner Kirk Kerkorian to vote the 50.1 percent majority holding in the company.

Turner said "we've got to sell something" to help raise the $550 million cash needed in the cash-and-stock deal with an estimated total value of $1.25 billion.

However, Turner rejected an NBC offer for half of CNN because NBC wanted editorial control, and he said talks with publishing and broadcasting magnate Rupert Murdoch "just didn't work out."

"We're not talking to anybody about that right now," he said. "In fact, we no longer have any plans for selling an interest in CNN."

To raise some of the money, Turner plans to use high-yield bonds, sometimes known as "junk" bonds. He was to conduct meetings in London today to sell the bonds.

Turner told TBS stockholders the deal will give his cable "SuperStation" WTBS a gold mine of 3,000 motion pictures, including the worldwide rights to "Casablanca," "The Wizard of Oz," and, after a CBS contract expires in 12 years, "Gone With The Wind."

"It was what we really wanted," Turner said. "Classic motion pictures make up the bulk of WTBS' programming. I believe this really strengthens us dramatically."

Turner said the deal would enable TBS to launch a cable TV entertainment network or a classic movie channel.

The merger calls for TBS to give MGM/UA stockholders $20 cash plus one share of new TBS preferred stock for each share of MGM/UA.
