Answer line...

Q. Colorado City is mostly made up of elderly, trying to live on a small fixed income. How come we have to be continually taxed to keep up museums, plant trees, a fire station that is bigger and more expensive than in large cities, etc? We need to help the needy. Mitchell County is among ten counties in the State that has starving people. What is going to happen when the elderly all die off?

A. Local officials dispute the claim that C-City is composed of mostly elderly people and that there are any starving people in the County. As the saying goes, "nothing is more sure than death and taxes." Taxes apply to everyone, only the elderly and handicapped get a few breaks. Living on a small fixed income is a problem throughout the country. Complete elimination of taxes wouldn't help all that much. Only God knows what would happen if all the elderly die off.

Local teacher wins career ladder ruling appeal

W.N. Kirby, Texas commissioner of education, has ruled that the Colorado Independent School District used criteria not in compliance with governing statutes and Texas Education Agency regulations when it dropped a Colorado City teacher from career ladder level two for the 1985-86 school year.

Linda Stewart, a first grade teacher at Kelley Elementary School, lost an appeal to the school district in August, 1986 in a hearing before the school board during which she argued that since she had been named to career ladder level two for the 1984-85 school year and since her evaluations had improved for the 1985-86 school year, her career ladder level two status should have been maintained.

Mrs. Stewart appealed the school board's decision to the Texas Education Agency which ruled in favor of Stewart a year ago, but the school district appealed that decision.

Mrs. Stewart had challenged the board's decision not to place her on the list of 37 teachers who each received $1,500 in funds provided by the state through House Bill 72.

Mrs. Stewart said Friday that "I am just really glad that the agency upheld by appeal. I am glad to be on step two. The money is nice

City proposes new $2,284,745 budget

Heritage

Marion Bassham waters one of the pear trees planted in the back yard of the Heritage House as the local historical home readies for another season starting Thursday through the Easter weekend. Work is underway on a memorial garden that is being constructed in the backyard of the house.

$60,785 increase includes 5% pay raises for employees

At a special workshop session last Tuesday night, the Colorado City Council gave tentative approval for a $2,284,745 City budget for 1988-89.

The new proposed budget reflects a 2.7% increase or $60,785 more than the current 1987-88 budget of $2,223,960. However, no tax or rate increases are proposed.

When presenting the tentative budget, City Manager Brenda Hammond, told the Council that the increase was mostly from a 5 percent across the board employee pay raise, the first in three years; and approximately $23,000 for new and increased capital expenditures.

She reported that the city revenues have increased due to (1) a better percent of collection of taxes; (2) increase in water use; (3) the City sales tax rebates have remained constant; and (4) new tax rebates are being received from the 1/2 per cent added sales tax which will be applied to property tax reductions. Also there has been a savings in the sanitary landfill operations; and now that the swimming pool has been completed and operated there is a sizeable lowering of the Park and Recreation grant payments.

Also the City will no longer pay the employees' share of the FICA (Social Security) withholdings, but this amount will be offset by an equal 7.51 percent increase in salary and wages.

IMPROVEMENTS

The Capital Improvements Committee has been working for several months formulating a five-year improvement plan.

Projects to be implemented during the coming year will include:

- $12,500 new expenditure for street improvements;
- $5,000 new expenditure for ball park construction and improvement in Ruddick Park;
- An increase of $1,000 to $2,000 for cemetery improvements;
- An increase of $1,000 to

Any addition contribution from the occupancy tax fund would be matched by the grant.

After all the requests had been submitted, Mayor Jim Baum appointed a committee composed of himself, Council members Dee

Mitchell County Hospital passes Medicare inspection

Mitchell County Hospital has been recertified for another year by Medicare following a two-day inspection of the facility this past week.

Administrator Ray Mason said the survey conducted on Monday and Tuesday was the most "thorough survey we've ever been through."

He said the six-man survey team was complimentary of the hospital facility and its staff.

"Overall, they complimented us for the work we've done and are doing to keep up with the new rules and regulations," he said.

About 40 minor deficiencies were cited by the survey team. A list of the deficiencies and plan of correction will be presented to the hospital board when it meets in regular session Tuesday night.

Mason said that one of the survey members commented that in the three years he has been conducting surveys, Mitchell County Hospital was the first in which he hasn't written deficiency in sanitation in the dietary department.

Mason said that under new rules, the 40 or so deficiencies is not bad. Many of the hospitals in the last six to eight months have been been placed under 23 or 90-day compliance status because of deficiencies.

Interviews set for four more supt. applicants

The Colorado City school trustees will interview four more superintendent applicants April 8-10 after the board failed to reach agreements with two applicants who were offered the job.

The board met in executive session Thursday at 5 p.m. to discuss superintendent applicants. Following the meeting, board vice president Dwayne Harris said the two applicants offered the job both turned it down, causing the board to schedule more interviews.

Charlie Uselton resigned the job effective the last of February to accept a similar position in Gainesville. Asst. Supt. Don Nimmo is acting as interim superintendent.

FROM THE SCRIPTURES— "This is the fate of men eager for ill-gotten gain: it robs those who get it of their lives". Proverbs 1:19

You're the clerk in a store. A customer comes in and buys a $6.00 item. You ring it up on the cash register. Then he says "Oh, and I need another item," goes and gets a $1.00 item. You ring up $7 plus tax, that's $7.56 right? He gives you a $50 bill and you return $42.44, 2 twenties, 2 ones and 44 cents in coins. Then he says "I'd like to have the $50 bill back, I'll give you 2 twenties and ten ones," as he lays the money on the counter. You go back into the register and throw out the $50 bill. Then he says "would you mind giving me a $100 bill for two fifties?" As he adds another $50. You don't have a $100 bill, so he asks for 5 twenties. You don't have 5 twenties, but you give him 3 twenties and four tens. He picks up the assortment of bills and departs. By now throughly confused, you check the register. You don't have a $50 bill and become suspicious and call the customer back into the store complaining that the exchange didn't come out right."

Gene Dow

Now it's you turn. How much money does the customer owe the clerk?

Well, the clerk figured she was short the $42.44 in change she had given him for the $50, so she said out of the $100 "you owe me $57.56". The man apologetically returned the $57.56 and left...for good.

At the end of the day, she was $42.44 short. This is called a "fast change" or "quick change" artist. And the incident actually happened at a local store.

THE LONE WOLF SAYS, "Following the least line of resistance is what makes rivers and men crooked."

There's another little game going around. It's called the "Airplane Game". You buy a seat on the airplane, then pass it along to another person. If he doesn't buy a seat the plane "crashes." If he buys a seat you move up a seat. As it progresses, once you've reached the pilot's seat you get the total fare paid by all the passengers. That, my friends, is called an "Endless Chain" scheme, which County Attoreny Clay Strange says he will crack down on. It is a Class B misdemeanor, pushishable by six months in jail and up to $1,000 fine by participants.

And another illegal lottery is what has been billed as the "Meadow Muffin Match Up." Coppell High School P-T-S is sponsoring a contest in which about 2,000 people have already bought $5 tickets for a chance to win $1,500 on April 20, when a cow is allowed on the High School's football field. The field will be divided into squares and the owner of the first square on which the cow makes a fecal deposit will receive the prize money. The money's going for a good cause, but the Dallas County Assistant District Attorney says it's gambling. No one is likely to complain and the officials may let the chips fall where they may.

DID YOU KNOW? The current population estimate for Mitchell County is 9,026.

Three more candidates file

Three more persons filed their candidacy this week, as the deadline passed for two of the three elections to be held May 7.

Earl Plagens is the fifth candidate in the race for three positions on the Colorado City Council. Others are Bob Reily, Howard Nelson, Bill Glass and incumbent Rex Thackerson.

Rogene Spruell was the sixth candidate to file for two positions on the CISD Board of Trustees. Others seeking the two seats on the Board are Anita Biggers, Jesse Munoz, Sara Ortiz and incumbents Kathy Bassham and Billy Bruce Bridgford.

The filing deadline for the City and School elections has passed.

A. K. McCarley, Jr. incumbent on the Mitchell County Hospital Board of Directors has filed for re-election, along with Connie Penland. Three places on the Board are to be filled. Two others persons have picked up petition forms by they have not been returned as yet.

Deadline for filing and presenting petitions for the Hospital Board is April 12.

Shooting, child molestation theft investigated by police

Another shooting, a theft and a possible child molestation incident were investigated by Colorado City Police last week, Police Chief Bobby Sparks reported.

At 4:22 p.m. last Sunday, Mar. 20, City Police were notified of a shooting at a local residence at Austin and College Streets.

Upon their arrival at the scene, the victim, Robert Harrell of Snyder, had already been transported to the Hospital emergency room by private vehicle. He was treated for gunshot wounds in the upper back and neck from a .410-gauge shotgun, which was recovered at the residence.

After investigation, a 23-year-old local woman, Janet Renee Miles, was arrested and charged with attempted murder. Chief Sparks said that she has refused to give a statement or any comment whatsoever about the incident. She was released from jail under $5,000 bond.

Also Sunday, Police received a report that a 10-year-old girl had been sexually molested. The Police, accompanied by Tracy Nobles of the County Child Welfare Department went to a local residence to talk with the small girl.

After the investigation, the Police arrested Ysabel Arellano, 63, at his residence at 245 W. Riverside St. Tuesday about 8:30 p.m. and charged the suspect with indecency with a child.

On Monday, an employee of Fullers Foods, "flagged" down a passing City Patrolman and reported that two young boys had just run off with two cases of beer from the store.

Officers found the youths, 18 and 13 years of age, hiding under a van in the parking lot of First Christian Church. The cases of beer which had been thrown in a nearby trashcan were recovered. They were taken into custody and charged with theft.

Changes are hard to get used to - whether it be a new preacher or a stop sign where there wasn't one before.

Change has never been too traumatic an experience for me. Growing up in the oil fields of Texas, change was something my family had to get used to when you worked for a company that transferred employees from one oil field to another at the drop of a hat.

But, sometimes, change didn't come easy.

For instance, my older brother fought change as hard as he could - to no avail.

"But we don't want to move there," he would say upon learning of an impending move. "No one wants to live there."

I, being the perfect child that I was, never complained about having to move - not even when we were transferred to Silver, the small Coke County town that had three churches, a school, a service station, post office, cafe and grocery store. We were already accustomed to West Texas, having lived in Snyder during my first and second grades.

But when we learned of the Silver transfer, I don't know who fought it more, my mother or my brother.

I can still remember my mother telling my dad in the car somewhere between Colorado City and Silver - "Currie, I can't believe you're moving us to this god-forsakened place."

My dad, faced with either being transferred or being without a job, looked straight ahead as he turned off onto the road leading to Silver that hot summer afternoon.

What I saw wasn't so bad. There were two big camps of company houses. There was a nice brick school building with a football field and a big playground. There was even a baseball field.

We went into the cafe, which also housed the post office, and ordered hamburgers. My dad explained that we wouldn't be living in one of the main camps in town, but rather we would be out of town on a oil lease. My mother had an even more disheartened look on her face.

We left the cafe and started driving down one dusty caliche road after another. Finally, we spotted two company houses separated by a small overhead water tank.

"This is it," my dad said as he turned the car through the cattleguard and into driveway of one of the houses.

My mother, born and reared in East Texas where there are trees and where the grass remains green evem in the summer, wouldn't get out of the car. "Currie, I can't believe you're moving us to this god-forsakened place," she said from the front seat as she surveyed the surroundings - two houses perched on top of a hill with only a few mesquite trees to break the sun-parched view.

Needless to say, we did move to Silver and four years later we moved again, this time to Colorado City. By then my brother was already commuting to high school here daily from Silver and mother was ready to live in "town".

Of course, my brother pleaded not to move - some things never change.

Art Lawler

As a matter of family tradition, each generation of Lawler men have tried to lead healthier lifestyles than the generation that preceded them.

My great-grandfather, as an example, was a drunk who almost became a fish before he straightened up and gave his stomach and brain to sobriety.

My grandfather spent so much time bending over railroad tracks and driving stakes into the ground that he developed the look of a parenthesis. You'd have had to tie his hands and feet to the bed to keep him from bowing up. He took in a huge amount of calories each day, but he'd always burn them off swinging the sledge hammer. The veins in his hands protruded and his face was always hollow.

My dad, not wishing to go through life looking like an undernourished pretzel, stored his calories carefully by avoiding railroad tracks and sledge hammers. As a result, he developed a physique more reminiscent of Orson Welles.

Since reaching adulthood, I have tried to find the happy family compromise. I drink less, for instance than my great grandfather, but certainly more than my dad, who never touched the stuff. Like my dad, I try to avoid sledge hammers and railroad tracks at all cost.

At the same time, I have also tried to avoid his Orson Welles physique. This wasn't much of a problem back in high school when I was a 145-pound fullback for the Mangum Tigers.

Even after I began storing calories and their by-products there was little danger of inheriting the Orson Welles physique. Carrol O'Conner maybe, but not Orson Welles.

For one thing, I learned how to eat correctly. I usually didn't do it, but I knew how. To this day, if I want to eat the right foods and feel good and lose weight, all I've got to do is make up my mind and hop to it. I just haven't done much hopping lately.

Another advantage has been my knowledge of physical exercise. Most of my dad's calories were burned while standing behind a pulpit, and once fist-pounding became unfashionable, his waistline soared.

Ever since my twenties, I've known that to run off a meal of chicken-fried steak, mashed potatoes and cream gravy, sweet peas, corn-on-the-cob and custard pie for dessert, all a person had to do was go out and run 300 miles.

They didn't know that back in the old days.

Of course knowing and doing are two different things. In the old days, I'd be walking down the sidewalk and if the sun was at the right spot, I could see the shadow of Orson Welles trying to slide into my body.

I'd immediately start lifting weights or running and eating broiled meat with lettuce. Not so much, these days, though. When the sun hits me that way now, I just turn another direction and make my shadow look long and skinny.

I used to buy shirts and sweaters according to the measurements of my body. Now I buy the loose-fitting tank-type pullovers which work fine until a cold front blows through and the icy wind seeps into the open spot under my navel.

I still get urges to do physical exercise, but not so often. Last week I decided I needed to walk five miles in the crisp morning air. I felt fine until I got home and sat down. It was three hours before I could get up again.

Ater a while a person has to ask, what's the point? I'm never going to be known for my biceps, or my chest. I'm never going to feel as good as Richard Simmons, either.

My son will do better, and his son will probably have a TV exercise show. It just takes time for families to put it all together.

TEACHER

but being on step 2 is important to me."

During the original hearing before the local school board, former Supt. Charlie Uselton said that the state required a change in the method used to compute the evaluations the second year. The district received funds for 37 teachers to be rewarded with the $1,500 bonus and the 37 eligible teachers with the best scores were named to career ladder.

In his decision dated March 11, Kirby said that the school district's "stricter criteria are inconsistent with both the career ladder statute and agency regulation, and are hereby disapproved. Since the decision-making process that led to Petitioner's (Mrs. Stewart's) reassignment from level two was based on criteria inconsistent with law, Respondent's (school district's) action is accordingly held to have been arbitrary and capricious."

Kirby said that in selecting the 37 teachers who would be placed on career ladder level two for the 1985-86 school year, the school district "employed a selection process that made no distinction between teachers who were qualified for initial placement on level two and those teachers who, having already attained level, were qualified to remain there."

Interim Supt. Don Nimmo said Friday that he has received Kirby's decision and statement of the case and is "in the process of trying to interpret it." He said he will present the item to the school board on April 11.

Kirby ordered that Mrs. Stewart's appeal be remanded to the school district and that the district "is to determine whether Petitioner would have been entitled to be maintained career ladder level two for the 1985-86 school year in the absence of Respondent's stricter performance criteria for that year."

Sam R. Baldwin Jr. of Houston, Mrs. Stewart's attorney hired by the Texas State Teachers Association, said that the commissioner's decision has decided that for the purposes of the career ladder, there is a difference between placement and maintenance. He said the decision should help teachers across the state.

Baldwin said the school district still has the option to appeal the decision to federal district court.

Early Childhood screening tests set

Early Childhood screening tests for 3, 4 and 5-year-old children will be conducted the first two weeks in June.

Early Childhood screening is one of many free services offered to children, ages 3-21 by the West Central Texas Education Cooperative, a special education cooperative program made up nine different school districts - Sweetwater, Roscoe, Blackwell, Highland, Loraine, Colorado City, Westbrook, Ira and Hermleigh.

Early Childhood screening includes developmental pre-school tests, vision, speech and hearing tests to be given by the supportive staff and speech pathologists of West Central Texas Education Cooperative and consultants from Region XIV Education Service Center. They will be looking for children with possible difficulties in the areas of speech, language development, hearing, vision, delayed learning or learning disabilities, physical and/or mental development.

In addition to early childhood screening, other services offered through the special education departments include evaluations and placement in classes for the student who is physically handicapped, auditorially handicapped, visually handicapped, deaf-blind, mentally retarded, autistic, multiple handicapped or pregnant. These classes are offered in a variety of educational settings and teaching arrangements.

If your child or you know of a child who may be in need of these special education services, call the school principal or the special education offices in Sweetwater at 235-8621 or Colorado City at 728-3330.

Q. What is the best way to get rid of Crabgrass?

Velma Bender
Colorado City

A. In Common Bermuda Lawns, use ferti-lome Weed and Feed Special in Spring before crabgrass germinates and fertilome Winterizer & Weed Preventer in fall. In St. Augustine lawns, use fertilome St. Augustine Weed & Feed in spring and fall. Once you have killed weeds in your lawn, this preventive program will keep them from coming back. Repeat program each year even though you had no weeds last year. New seeds may be brought in by wind, birds, or animals.

Rotarians hear hospital update

Mitchell County Hospital is one of only three in the West Texas area that has been in total compliance with Medicare regulations, administrator Ray Mason told the Colorado City Rotary Club Wednesday.

Mason, guest speaker, said the annual survey for Medicare was completed Tuesday and that no departments were found out of compliance.

"In the last eight months in the West Texas area, there have been only three hospitals without any problems," he said. The other two hospitals are located in Lamesa and Coleman.

He said that new rules and regulations governing hospitals have forced many rural hospitals to close but that the administration, staff and board of directors of Mitchell County Hospital are determined to see the facility remain open and a vital part of the community.

Mitchell County Hospital is having to market its services, said Mason, explaining that new programs such as home health care, swing bed and senior citizen discounts are offered to induce citizens not to leave town for medical care and to draw out of county patients to Colorado City.

"Competition among hospitals is tough," he said, adding that one of the biggest problems facing every small hospital is a lack of doctors.

Attracting registered nurses is another problem of the rural hospital because of the low pay compared to larger facilities.

He said government regulations combined with stress and strain of the job as well as peer review is "running people out of the health care field."

Mason, administrator for the past three and a half years, said "I'm proud of our hospital and I like to brag about it."

He invited the Rotarians and their guests to visit the hospital and see for themselves the facility and the services it offers.

Guests at Wednesday's meeting included Tandy Curlee and Wayne Shawn of Colorado City, Joe Sentell of Snyder and Jim Neighbors and Bob Arhelger of Big Spring.
