Sands Near Death

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Appeals for Northern Ireland's Roman Catholics to abstain from violence when Bobby Sands dies appeared to be making headway today as the IRA hunger striker lay in a coma on the 65th day of his fast.

Official sources said the 27-year-old convicted terrorist had been unconscious since early Sunday. His family, a priest and a team of medical specialists were with him in the hospital wing of the Maze Prison southwest of Belfast.

A prison source said Sands was skeletal, weighing less than 85 pounds and barely alive. He weighed 155 on March 1 when he began his fast demanding that imprisoned members of the Irish Republican Army be treated as political prisoners and not as common criminals.

Three other IRA men were also fasting in the Maze, and one of them, 25-year-old Francis Hughes, was reported close to death after 50 days without food. The other two, Raymond McCreesh and Patsy O'Hara, were in the 44th day of their hunger strike, but their lives were not considered in danger yet.

Haig To Assure Allies

ROME (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was expected to tell the other foreign ministers of the NATO allies today that the Reagan administration is going to be firm with the Soviet Union but is willing to negotiate limits on the deployment of nuclear arms in Europe.

Haig was to outline the new U.S. government's policy at a closed-door meeting of the North Atlantic Council, the highest policy-making body of the 15-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Senator Due Probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate ethics committee plans to meet early this week to map its next step in the investigation of New Jersey Democrat Harrison A. Williams Jr., the first incumbent U.S. senator convicted of a crime in 75 years.

Williams, found guilty Friday by a federal jury in Brooklyn, N.Y., of nine counts of bribery and conspiracy in the FBI's Abscam probe, says he plans to appeal and will not resign the seat he has held for 22 years.

To Tighten FOI Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General William French Smith today tightened the policy on release of government documents to citizens under the Freedom of Information Act.

In a memorandum to the heads of all federal departments and agencies, the attorney general rescinded a policy established by the Carter administration's first attorney general, Griffin Bell.

The Bell policy, which was issued May 5, 1977, told federal agencies they should not use technical exemptions provided by the act for withholding requested documents and should make them available unless disclosure would be "demonstrably harmful" to the government.

Discuss Peacekeeping

WASHINGTON (AP) — Military officers from the United States, Israel and Egypt are meeting in Washington this week to discuss details of establishing a multinational peacekeeping force for the Sinai outside United Nations auspices.

The meetings through Wednesday were begun after the United States concluded the United Nations would be unable to create the force, called for under the Camp David peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, Anita Stockman, a State Department spokeswoman, said Sunday night.

She said Soviet opposition to U.N. sponsorship of the peacekeeping force requires the United States to take the lead in creating it.

Texas Illegal Aliens...

Court Will Decide Education Issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today agreed to decide whether states must provide free public education to illegal alien children.

The justices will hear an appeal by Texas authorities aimed at reinstating an invalidated state law that allowed such children to attend public schools only if tuitions were paid.

The court's eventual decision, not expected until sometime next year, likely will establish whether or not illegal aliens in the United States are entitled to equal protection of the laws.

The issue is an especially important political one for those states bordering Mexico.

U.S. District Judge Wayne Justice last year struck down the Tyler Independent School District's charging of a $1,000 tuition for illegal alien children who attended its schools.

In a separate case from Brownsville, U.S. District Judge Woodrow Seals struck down the 1975 Texas law barring free edducation to illegal aliens, ruling that it violated the equal-protection rights of illegal alien children.

The Constitution's 14th Amendment declares: "No state shall ... deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

In upholding Judge Justice's ruling last Oct. 20, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said, "We conclude that all aliens — even those illegally within the territorial boundaries of the United States — are entitled to the equal protection of the laws."

It added: "When national immigration laws are not or cannot be enforced, it is the states, most particularly the border states, that bear the heaviest burden. This court can readily understand the problems faced by a state such as Texas.

"However, this court cannot suspend the operation of the Constitution to aid a state to solve its political and social problems."

Texas authorities estimate that some 120,000 illegal alien children reside in the state.

In seeking Supreme Court review, Texas Attorney General Mark White argued that illegal aliens should not be protected by the 14th Amendment.

He said that because states are preempted by federal immigration laws to deport illegal aliens, such persons are not "within the jurisdiction of a state." Therefore, White contended, they are not entitled to constitutionally guaranteed equal protection.

Before reaching its decision in the Tyler case last October, the 5th Circuit court had postponed the effect of Seals' ruling in the Brownsville case. But Justice Lewis F. Powell last Sept. 4 lifted the postponement — thus temporarily requiring Texas to provide illegal alien children with free public schooling.

In other action today, the Supreme Court:

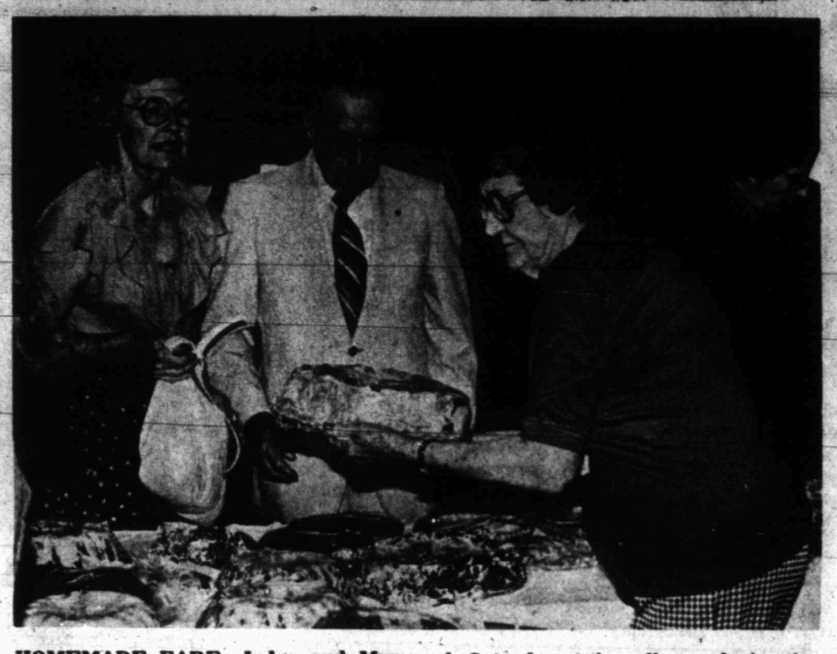

—Ruled that a person convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison cannot be subjected to a possible death penalty if he wins a new trial. The high court voted 5 to 4 to overturn a lower court ruling in a case originating in Missouri.

—Ruled that employers cannot collect damages from individual union members who stage wildcat strikes. The vote on the ruling was 7 to 2.

—Refused to hear a former Brooklyn College professor's claim that he was denied tenure because of several encounters he had with CIA officials. The high court let stand a federal appeals court ruling that overturned a $580,000 award won by the professor.

—Agreed to decide whether federal officials can be sued for not cutting off aid to police departments charged with discriminating against blacks and women.

—Refused to block a plan that would increase charges for the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s biggest customers by $120 million a year. The court refused to review a Federal Communications Commission decision to allow AT&T to discontinue a discount telephone service known as Telpak.

Bush Says Democrats Oppose Voter Mandate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush said today the congressional Democratic leadership was trying to "thwart the mandate of the people" by opposing President Reagan's economic package.

In remarks prepared for delivery to the annual meeting of The Associated Press, held in conjunction with the American Newspaper Publishers Association convention in Chicago, the vice president said the president's opponents are suffering "a kind of political amnesia as to the meaning of last November's vote."

He criticized House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill, D-Mass., for having said that Americans oppose Reagan's proposed budget cuts.

"It should be noted that this is the same speaker who, after the election, when it became clear that the president meant to carry out his mandate for economic reform, said that sometimes the people don't really know what's good for them.

"Well, perhaps it's that kind of attitude on the part of the established opposition leadership in Washington that's contributed so much to the public's cynicism and lack of confidence in our system in recent years," Bush said.

"I think the speaker was wrong over the weekend as he was when he expressed the view that the politicians know best what's good for the people. The American people do support the Reagan economic program, today as they did last November."

For his part, O'Neill, asked about Bush's comments, said: "He's doing a good job. He's a robot, right in line with the party."

O'Neill reminded reporters that during last year's presidential campaign, Bush referred to the proposed three-year tax cut Reagan was supporting as "voodoo economics."

The speaker said he reminded Bush of his statement last week when the two sat next to each other listening to Reagan's address to Congress.

Bush said Reagan's economic program was spelled out in such detail during the presidential campaign "that no one who followed last year's campaign can doubt that when the majority of the American people cast their ballots for Governor Reagan, they knew exactly what he stood for and what he proposed to do to save our country from economic disaster."

copper cent to exit

For the benefit of our gentle readers who do not know it, we begin this editorial with the revelation that the treasurer of the United States is a woman whose name is Angela Buchanan. Recently Treasurer Buchanan created a bit of news by announcing the government's intention to phase out the copper penny and replace it with a zinc one.

The one-cent piece will be disguised by a thin copper coating to look like its predecessor. But it will lack authority. It's a lightweight. The current penny is 20 percent heavier.

Treasurer Buchanan says this denigration of the once-proud penny is necessary because the cost of copper is rising to the point that one cent will not pay for the cost of the metal. Consequently, in 1974 and again last year when copper rose above $1.50 a pound, Americans began hoarding pennies or using them for other purposes and an acute shortage developed.

Here we have another example of the immutable laws of economics at work. It is not copper that has become more valuable. What has happened is that the inflation-afflicted U.S. currency has gone down in value. A penny that used to carry the mail, buy chewing gum, candy and even reading materials now can do little more than pay sales taxes and make change for 18-cent stamps.

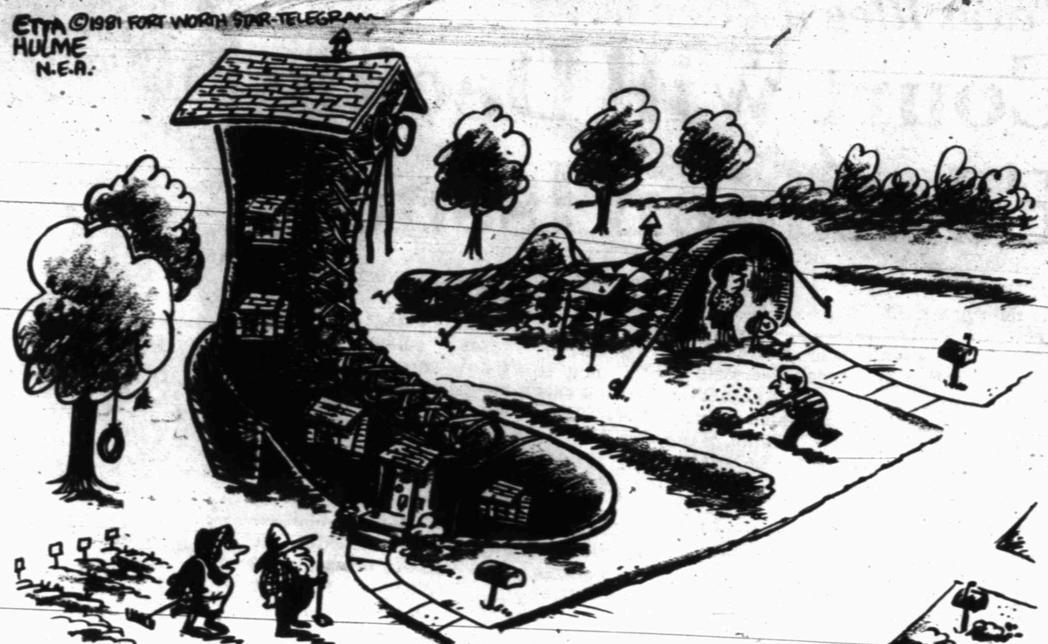

The transition of the penny from copper to zinc is still another contribution to our currency's debasement. Remember, no longer than even 20 years ago, silver dollars circulated freely in the West and paper currency was redeemable on demand in silver. Of course, silver dollars that now fetch $20 each and often much more long since went out of circulation as did the silver half-dollars, quarters and dimes.

This fall, when the new "zincs" begin to circulate, we will see a classic operation of Gresham's Law. The cheap zincs will drive out the coppers, wich will cease to be circulated because people will hang onto them for their extra value.

Economics law, which supercedes congressional laws, now decrees that the copper penny, the least of our monetary units, finally join its silver siblings in ersatz humility.

This ought to be an omen to those who oppose President Reagan's economic reforms. Because, if we don't straighten out our financial affairs and stop inflation, the government will be forced to circulate ever cheaper currency, nay even plastic coins.

Now, will you take a penny for your thoughts, or would you rather wait for one of the new "zincs?"

"It's tough on the kids — they'll never be able to afford our housing standard."

Atlanta Mayor Likes Politics

ATLANTA (AP) — Mayor Maynard Jackson, who cannot run for re-election in November because of a city rule, says he will remain in politics fighting for liberal causes in the South.

"When I got into politics I made a commitment that as long as I gived I was going to be in politics," the mayor said Friday.

"I may not hold office ... but I will stay in politics no matter what," he told the Southerners for Economic Justice.

The group, holding its fifth annual meeting, works to improve the status of Southern workers. Jackson, mayor for eight years, the maximum allowed, serves on the group's board of directors.

He said Southern liberals and blacks need a strong weapon to fight potent conservative political action groups.

It's a myth in this country that anyone can make garbage.

I'm not talking about the frozen-quick-serve-packaged-just-add-water-three-minutes-in-the-microwave garbage. I'm talking about your made from scratch-leftover garbage for which American women are famous.

Garbage, if it's made right, takes a full week. Most men don't understand the process. They think you can take a leftover straight from the table, scrape it right from the plate and dump it into the can.

That is not the way American garbage is made.

For the purpose of example, let us walk through a week in the life of two tablespoons of leftover peas and a piece of leftover pot roast the size of a coaster.

Day I: The leftover goes from the table to the refrigerator in an elaborate ritual of joy. In an eagerness to display her frugality, the woman transfers the peas and beef to a smaller dish with a haunting chant, "Don't touch this. I'm saving it for vegetable soup" Everyone believes her... or pretends they do.

Day II: The leftover enjoys a place of prominence in the refrigerator and is seen every time the door opens. A few times it is reexamined, but from the distance comes the familiar chant, "Don't touch it. I'm saving it for vegetable soup."

Day III: The leftover is moved to a less prominent shelf and is occasionally patted and reassured it will be the makings of vegetable soup.

Day IV: A traumatic time in the life of future garbage. It is either tossed prematurely or is shoved to rear of refrigerator on shelf next to a bowl containing three tablespoons of peach juice and a pit.

Day V: Traditionally on the fifth day, a leftover is opened, exposed to air and passed around to see if any can identify it. If it is recognizable, it is shoved in a dark corner and allowed to "ripen" for another day.

Day VI: This is a crucial day in which the peas and beef curdle, turn green, harden and grow fuzz.

Day VII: Exicited cries resound through the kitchen as the children dance around the refrigerator chanting, "Is it garbage yet?" Mother removes the leftovers, folds back the foil and pronounces the peas and beef dead! In no other country in the world do women prepare their garbage for burial like they do here. First, they wrap it in in newspaper, then put it in a brown bag, then a plastic one and finally put it to rest in the garbage can in the garage.

A time-honored tradition of American women who for years have vowed, "I will bury no garbage before its time."

ASK DR. BLAKER

Karen Blaker Ph.D.

A clash of style

By Karen Blaker, Ph.D.

DEAR DR. BLAKER — My friend and I run a social club for singles in a small Midwestern city. We have worked together for 10 years and have found that, while we are very different people, we do complement each other. I handle the business decisions and he takes care of the people-related matter.

Our problem started last month when I saw a great business opportunity about to slip through our fingers and grabbed it without consulting him.

Since then he has not been talking to me. When I ask him what's wrong, he says I am too pushy.

I can't work like this and I don't know what to do to make peace.

DEAR READER — If your priority is keeping the partnership (and the friendship) alive, you should apologize for your hasty action. He might be understanding; after all, he is the expert on human relations. You should acknowledge that, although it might have been a sound business decision, it was not in the best interests of the social club because it caused a rift between you and him.

If he continues to balk, you might then ask him if there is anything you can do to make things better. Be prepared to forgo that controversial business venture if you must. It's hardly worth pursuing in view of this crisis on the home ground.

Although your differences in style get you into trouble with each other from time to time, it sounds like the complementary nature of the relationship far outweighs the drawbacks.

DEAR DR. BLAKER — Every time I turn around, there seems to be another study that links a common food substance with cancer. I just read in the paper that now I cannot even drink my coffee in peace — if I have more than two cups, I'm likely to get pancreatic cancer. When I shop in the market, I get anxious when I see nitrites advertised on the meat packages and saccharin listed on the diet drink bottles.

How can we possibly eliminate from our lives all these substances that we have been warned against? It is frightening.

DEAR READER — And confusing. What makes the situation even worse, is the controversy that often follows such warnings of danger: Within a few weeks of the initial announcement, new voices question the reliability of the study upon which the warning was based.

Then the warnings are sometimes withdrawn but, whether or not that occurs, people are left confused and anxious.

Subsequent studies on saccharin and nitrites, for example, have yielded conflicting results. Yet they remain feared and controversial food substances.

The American Council on Science and Health has investigated the problem and has recommended that independent researchers replicate the findings of these studies before they are made public. I agree.

Speaking of ultra-high finance, how are your SDRs doing lately?

Don't bother searching for an answer, or even raising a follow-up question. Even should you happen to know what an SDR is, there's no chance that any are included in your investment portfolio.

SDR is short for Special Drawing Right, rational man's latest attempt to create a medium of exchange better than gold. It came into being back in the 1960s when it had become all too obvious that the U.S. dollar, which had served as an international currency throughout the post-war era, was in trouble.

Forget that at the time U.S. citizens were legally barred from dealing in gold. That was a domestic matter. In international transactions, their dollar was in effect a promise of gold — the ounces from its hoard that the U.S. Treasury was prepared to deliver to governments and other official agencies upon demand and at a fixed price of $35 per.

The problem was proliferation. There were too many dollars in foreign hands, exceeding the practical capability of the Treasury to deliver on its promise of redemption. And continuing U.S. balance of payment deficits kept adding to the accumulations. Something more broadly based than the dollar and yet, it was argued, more flexible than gold itself was needed to assist the dollar in underwriting the world's trade and increasingly complex and interdependent financial relationships.

Presto! The Special Drawing Right, created by the International Monetary Fund. The SDR does not exist in the form of coins or bank notes. Its primary role is in bookkeeping to denominate reserve assets and to settle accounts among international authorities.

So much for the background. How has the SDR been doing?

Not so hot. In large part because it has never been able to assert its independence of the dollar.

Initially, the SDR used a fixed dollar relationship as a convenient link to gold. But when the U.S. government severed the gold-dollar tie in 1971 — revoking the promise to buy and sell gold at a fixed price that it was no longer capable of honoring — the SDR was also set adrift. In 1979, the fixed parity link among the dollar, gold and the SDR was severed.

Since then, the SDR has been refined in terms of a "basket" of currencies — a weighted national economies theoretically giving the SDR greater stability than any single currency since exchange-rate fluctuations are diffused and tend to cancel out.

The basket, which started out with 16 currencies, currently contains five, of which the dominant unit is — you guessed it — the dollar. With the dollar still enjoying ill health, this naturaly dampens enthusiasm for the SDR. Central banks are not rushing to stock up. No way to make it more attractive has yet been found because for all its wheezing and lurching, the United States remains the world's dominant economy and the dollar the foremost currency.

The story of the SDR, considerably abridged here, is contained in a recently issued report on gold. The "Gold Investment Handbook" is published by the International Gold Corp., marketing arm of the Chamber of Mines of South Africa, which, as the world's leading producer of the metal, naturaly has a special interest in the subject of gold's durability as a standard of value.

It is a point that the history of the SDR certainly supports. The purpose of the artificial money was both constructive and rational. In effect, it is based on the economic productivity that, rather than an inert metal, is the real basis of the wealth of nations.

But as a standard of value the SDR has remained exactly that — artificial. And that is because economic man is not yet up to the disciplined direction of his economic activities. Meanwhile, SDRs remain a convenient bookkeeping device, but reserve assets and large-scale international transactions in the supposedly post-gold standard world are increasingly valued in terms of gold.

The experience is, at the least, humbling for rational man.

Floraboard May Be Used By Floral Industry Soon

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

An old concept is being focused in a new direction to bring more and better cut flowers, foliage and flowering plants to the public.

If approved by Congress and the industry, Floraboard will be born to promote use of fresh flowers and plants. The industry-financed concept already is in use by egg, wheat, wool, cotton and potato interests.

The Floraboard idea had been kicked around for a few years before it crystalized early in 1980, according to Walter L. Preston of Palmetto, Fla., chairman of the Floraboard task force. He envisions an annual budget of $8 million to $10 million.

In seeking a Floral Research and Consumer Information Act, the producer-sponsors hold that it is "in the public interest to have an adequate, steady supply of fresh flowers and plants available to the American consumer. A continuing supply of quality and affordable flowers and plants is an important element of the quality of life."

They also believe "maintenance and expansion of existing markets and development of new ones and uses are vital to the welfare of flower and plant producers, brokers, wholesalers and retailers."

The Act would permit an assessment on producers at the point of first sale, and would spell out amounts and authority. A governing board would include members from each commodity group — cut flowers, foliage plants and flowering plants. Producers whose total sales do not exceed $100,000 in a 12-month period would be exempt from the legislation.

Any legislative order would require approval by industry voters.

Preston, president of Manatee Fruit Co., believes coordinated research would produce good results. He also says education on producer, wholesale and retail levels is needed to help consumers get better plants.

Floraboard would promote year-round use of fresh flowers and plants, educating the public "to the many everyday occasions to which flowers can add so much." It would allow the businesses to pool their resources "to let the American public know that flowers aren't just for special occasions."

The proposal, backers contend, would establish both an industry-run committee and a fair system of assessing growers. In the case of imported products, the assessment would be paid at the point of first U.S. sale, so that the levy would apply equally to both foreign and domestic products.

Preston emphasized that Floraboard would not eliminate the Society of American Florists Endowment (SAFE), which sponsors industry improvement projects. The $129,748 endowments for 1981 include $40,000 to fight the serious leaf-miner attack on chrysanthemums.

Other 1981 projects, most assigned to universities, include: renewal of new flower hybrid creation; control of postharvest life of flowering pot plants; greenhouse crops and energy conservation; poinsettia growth; greenhouse floral-crop pesticide application; water stress and ornamental-plant quality.

The endowment also supports professional training programs for students.

The Boy Scouts supervised the parking of cars in a most polite manner. An interesting program was enjoyed by a large crowd. A drill team, made up of members of the fourth grade, entered the community center, each carrying a U.S. flag, and sang "This Is My Country", which was well received by everyone. Daniel Ramey, designer of the Community Flag which was hung beneath the U.S. flag, explained each item that was made on it. Mark Kuss and James Henderson rendered a song in German and Ernie Salgado and Michael Salgado sang in Spanish.

Joe Ramey gave the introduction and welcomed the judges, commissioners and all attending. Billy Haynes talked on community improvement, Jerry Church talked on community services and Foster Watson spoke on long range goals and objectives. The Association has at the present time specific goals which it is striving to obtain.

These goals are a long-range water development, air conditioning in the school auditorium, an emergency alarm system, planting bluebonnets in the community, erecting Purple Martin houses for insect control, installing a railroad crossing signal and conducting a computor search of federal assistance. Others were to spray tree trunks for bores and beauty, replace faulty fire hydrants and erect rural road signs.

Many attractive booths were on display. Upon entering the door, many items made by the Migrant Youth were on display. Some were serving trays, a Purple Martin bird house, butterfly plaques made out of feathers, wall hangings and an Indian plaque made of clothes pins. One booth was made up of entirely home-grown potted plants in full bloom and lovely cut flowers. Alan: "When you can afford to overtake your partner's high card, you should learn to do so, provided that you know exactly what your next play should be."

Oswald: "Fifty years ago we named a play after a certain player who liked to overtake a high card led by his partners so that he could lead to the next trick. Then he would lead the wrong card back."

Alan: "East signalled come-on with his seven of spades. Unfortunately, West had nothing to come on with. Declarer ducked and had time to set up the clubs and make his contract with an overtrick."

Oswald: "Our old-time expert would have covered his partner's queen of spades with his king. So would any expert worth the name. He would know exactly how to proceed. It wouldn't matter what declarer did. He would not have time to set up clubs and would have been set at least one trick."

Alan: "Note that East could use his king at trick one and still be sure to be able to set up his spades in time."

Metabolism of bulls and men

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I don't agree with you about vitamin E. I have read that if cows don't have enough vitamin E in their diet that they will have heart failure. And I know it is used to increase the potency of bulls. In view of that I don't see how you can say it is not necessary for people to take vitamin E. I have also heard that it is good in preventing aging. Besides that, there is no harm in taking extra vitamin E.

DEAR READER — The point is I know the difference between cows, bulls and people. So do most responsible investigators.

It is quite true that cows require vitamin E and a deficiency can lead to heart failure. There has never been a documented case of heart failure in humans because of vitamin E deficiency. You see, our metabolic system is different from a cow's or a bull's.

Many people do not realize that much of nutrition is based on pure science, not opinions. The biochemistry of metabolism is well established. You can write the chemical formulas for each step of the chemical actions that involve processing your food and providing energy for your body. Biochemistry is the basis for many of the statements of competent nutritionists, such as the fact that selenium can be used in place of vitamin E for metabolism in man.

Vitamin E was first discovered as essential to improve the fertility of rats. There is no evidence that it improves the fertility of man. It is sold, though, by some unscrupulous people under the guise of improving one's sex life.

The real history of vitamin E is discussed in The Health Letter number 4-12, Vitamin E: Myth or Miracle, which I am sending you. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

There is no solid evidence that taking additional vitamin E besides what you should get in your diet will prevent aging. And there are some studies that suggest that an excess intake of vitamin E can be harmful. I don't think the risk is great but you should be aware that some serious scientists don't think that popping large amounts of vitamin E is entirely harmless.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Recently a relative had chest pains and the doctor called it "walking pneumonia." A few days later he had swollen feet and swelling to the middle of the waistline. Does walking pneumonia produce these symptoms or was the chest pain from heart failure? Should a specialist be consulted?

DEAR READER — Walking pneumonia is not a real medical term. It means different things to different people. Your question, though, is very astute. Early in heart failure the accumulation of fluid in the lungs may cause a cough or breathlessness. The cough with noises in the lungs can be confused with pneumonia.

As the right side of the heart fails, the legs and abdomen may swell. Heart failure with fluid in the lungs may not cause pain unless there is an associated complication.

Blood clots to the lungs can cause chest pain and breathing problems. The overload on the right heart can cause failure later.

A consultation with a heart specialist would certainly help if there is any question about the diagnosis.

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's per capita income flowed steadily to the Sun Belt in the last decade, but income rose faster in every state than the 93.4 percent national increase in inflation, according to a new Commerce Department study.

The report issued this weekend offered fresh evidence of soaring economic development in Southern and Western states which have lured people and business from the Northeast with good climates, space to expand and relatively low-cost labor.

Nevertheless, a frigid but oil-rich state, Alaska, had the nation's highest per capita income with an average of $12,406 for each resident, dropping the 1970 leader, Connecticut, into second place.

A Sun Belt state, Mississipi, was No. 50 — unchanged since 1970 — with an average per capita income of $6,508.

The study was requested by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, in 1978 after New York City succeeded in getting federally guaranteed loans at a time when New York state had a $2 billion revenue surplus.

Bentsen said the continued flow of income to the Sun Belt means that other Northeastern and Midwestern cities will be looking for federal bailouts.

"You're going to see more of a conflict develop between the Sun Belt and the Snow Belt as you see that kind of approach, and the government ought to develop a consistent policy for it," added Bentsen, who said cities should look first to their states for aid.

The report said the nation's overall per capita income rose 143 percent to $9,458 during the decade. Every state showed income rising higher than the decade's 93.4 percent inflation increase as measured by the Commerce Department's personal consumer expenditure deflator.

The study also said the gap has narrowed between the richest and poorest regions, with 1970's below-average states increasing per capita income about 153 percent by 1980, while states which were above average in 1970 showed a 10-year increase of about 138 percent.

Most of the highest-ranking states still are in the highly developed Northeastern and West Coast parts of the nation, while the lowest-ranking generally are in the Southeast and Rocky Mountain regions.

But the trend during the 1970s was in the opposite direction.

IRS Takes Hard Look At Trade Group

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Trade Exchange makes a business out of bartering, but it never bargained for a fight with the Internal Revenue Service.

The 4-year-old organization acts as a broker for swaps, helping its 1,700 members — individuals and some 720 companies who pay $200 for membership and $100 yearly — save cash by trading up to 10,000 goods and services among them at cost.

Trades range from clothes to cats, industrial equipment to surgery.

But as its business grows, the Pittsburgh Trade Exchange has become embroiled in efforts to convince the IRS that barter transactions are not necessarily tax-law infractions.

It is one of several bartering clubs trading legal actions with the IRS, according to the Washington-based International Association of Trade Exchanges.

"The IRS selected the barter exchanges as its primary target" in a crackdown on what has been called the nation's "underground" economy of transactions that are conducted without paying taxes, charged Joe Weiss, an association spokesman.

The federal agency has said an estimated $75 billion to $100 billion worth of business went unreported in 1976 alone and millions of Americans were illegally escaping taxes.

"The IRS made a misguided conclusion that barter exchanges were part and parcel of the underground or subterranean economy where everything is unrecorded," Weiss said.

"This is...a misplaced notion because our people love publicity. We're in the phone book for goodness sake, so they didn't have to go very far underground to find us," he said.

An IRS spokeswoman in Pittsburgh, conceding that there has always been such backyard bartering as "I'll babysit your kids today if you'll babysit tomorrow," explained that because bargaining has become organized, "that might warrant some examination."

The IRS has issued a summons for all records pertaining to Pittsburgh Exchange members' trades. The Exchange filed suit in an attempt to block the summons, but was unsuccessful.

Texas House Okays Controversial Drug

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The House voted 112-13 on Friday to allow physicians to prescribe and administer dimethyl sulfoxide (DMSO) to their patients.

The bill next goes to the Senate.

DMSO is a controversial substance whose fans claim value in the treatment of arthritis and cancer but whose detractors say is good for little but animals and cleaning carburetors.

The bill would make it a crime, punishable by up to 180 days in jail and a $1,000 fine, to advertise DMSO as a cure for any disease.

Physicians would have to inform patients in writing when prescribing DMSO that the drug has not been approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for human use. A doctor would have to tell the patient of alternative methods of treatment and their potential for cure.

Rep. Gene Green, D-Houston, the sponsor, said the intent was not to limit sale of DMSO by existing outlets "but to allow physicians to prescribe sterile, hydrogen-free DMSO."

Bill Requires Inspections Of Carnival Rides

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Amusement rides at fairs, carnivals and the state's super-playgrounds such as Six Flags Over Texas would have to be inspected annually by a new state agency under a bill passed Friday by the House.

The measure, sent to the Senate 109-17, creates a six-member Amusement Ride Safety Board.

The agency would check each ride every year. Ride owners would have to carry at least $500,000 in liability insurance.

House Approves Grass Carp In Lake Conroe

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A bill allowing the introduction of grass carp, a Chinese fish, into Lake Conroe in an attempt to control hydrilla gained House passage Friday.

The measure went to the Senate.

Rep. Rodney Tow, D-Conroe, said in preliminary debate on Thursday that two people have drowned because they became entangled in hyrdrilla, which he said has choked 40 percent of the lake.

Bass fishermen's organizations have fought the bill because they fear grass carp would destroy vegetation that serves as habitat for bass.

Tow said the fish will not reproduce either in Lake Conroe or the San Jacinto River, which flows into the lake.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Both juvenile and adult probation would be administered by a single state agency under a bill approved Friday by the House. The bill went to he Senate on a 117-1 vote.

Heavy Rains, Twisters Hit Southeast Texas

By The Associated Press

A slow moving system of thunderstorms dumped nearly nine inches of rain over parts of Southeast Texas, spawning several twisters and leaving one dead, another reported missing and at least eight persons injured.

On a widely scattered basis, rain entered some homes and buildings as streets and roads in the coastal plains as bayous in the Houston area left their banks in Sunday's deluge.

More heavy rain had been anticipated today but the flood warnings were lifted as the major portion of a massive low pressure system in the Gulf of Mexico remained offshore.

Harris County flood control officials in Houston said most streams were receding and the general area would be in good shape barring additional downpours.

The body of Jessie Peak, 18-months, was recovered Sunday from a tributary of Brays Bayou on Houston's south side Sunday. Police said the youngster apparently climbed out of a window to play and fell into the swollen stream.

An unidentified man also was reported missing in White Oak Bayou to the north but the body had not been recovered.

Twisters touched down Sunday afternoon near Alvin in Brazoria County, leaving eight persons with minor injuries, and in the Friendswood area of Galveston County.

Police said a frame house and two mobile homes were destroyed in Alvin and several homes damaged in the Friendswood area.

In Houston, the Sunday storm first struck the southwest area and then moved to the southeast and northeast. Patients had to be evacuated from the first floors of two hospitals and a number of families left their homes in the Sagemont-Scarsdale subdivisions, which drew heavy damage in a similar 1979 storm that dumped up to 20 inches of rain.

About four inches of water entered the Bellaire General Hospital in southwest Houston, forcing the transfer of about 40 patients, many of them in tractions, to upper floors. A similar situation to the northeast later forced the transfer of 27 patients to a second floor of Northshore Medical Plaza Hospital.

In Sagemont-Scarsdale, about 40 persons spent the night in a church but police said most streets in the area were passable as today's early morning traffic rush got under way.

Light rain was falling at dawn over much of Southeast Texas but, with the flash flood warning lifted, said there was still danger of river flooding.

13 Killed In Patrol Ambush

ZAMBOANGA CITY, Philippines (AP) — Thirteen members of a government patrol died when the communist guerrillas they were pursuing in the southern Philippines sprang an ambush, police said today. Three people were wounded.

Col. Jose Halcon Siad, provincial constabulary commander, said the ambush took place Saturday morning in a remote area near Dumingag, 475 miles southeast of Manila.

He said the patrol was looking for a band of New People's Army guerrillas suspected of killing a Dumingag town council member the day before.

Former Hostage Awarded Medal

ATLANTA (AP) — Col. Charles Scott, one of the Americans formerly held hostage in Iran, was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, the Army's highest peacetime award, as he retired from the military after a 31-year career.

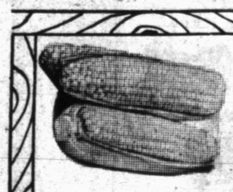

Gen. Robert M. Shoemaker, commander of the U.S. Army Forces Command, presented Scott with the meritorious service medal at formal ceremonies Friday. Scott was held hostage in Iran with 51 other Americans for 444 days.

Scott, 49, enlisted in the Army in 1949. He said he plans to lecture on Iran and write a book about his experiences.

25,000 Protest Against El Salvador Activity

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American left, marching by the tens of thousands against U.S. involvement in El Salvador and cuts in domestic social programs, has shown it can still rally its troops in the big battalions characteristic of the anti-Vietnam protests of 1960's.

Demonstrators marched in May sunshine Sunday from near the Lincoln Memorial, past the State Department to the main parking lot of the Pentagon for a rally intended to signal resistence to Reagan administration policies at home and abroad.

In marked contrast to many of the Vietnam War protests, Sunday's was peaceful and orderly.

The crowd represented labor, religious, anti-draft and anti-war groups, as well as homosexual, black, Indian and Hispanic rights organizations.

Both the U.S. Park Service police and the Federal Protective Service, responsible for protecting government buildings, estimated the crowd at 25,000. Rally organizer Larry Holmes put it at 100,000, and Bill Masters, press aide for the sponsoring People's Anti-War Mobilization — PAM — said: "Next time we'll set up turnstiles."

One of the 26 speakers, former Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., told the crowd: "The same gang of crazies in the Pentagon and at the White House that brought us the war in Vietnam are now trying to get us into a war in El Salvador.

"The main threat to our security comes from the violence ... of the Pentagon, the Reagan government and their collaborators in Congress and co-conspirators in the Moral Majority," she said.

Rally organizers were delighted at the end of the day.

"It proves there's a real movement," Masters said. "It's a major step forward and the opening of resistance to the Reagan administration at home and abroad."

Smaller marches were held in Seattle, San Francisco and Kansas City.

There was only one arrest at the Pentagon, a man who allegedly splashed a red substance on the building's columns. He was given a citation, similar to a traffic ticket, for defacing government property and let go. His name was not released.

The inevitable comparison was with the October 1967 march on the Pentagon against the Vietnam War, one of the first large anti-war protests at a time when the number of U.S. troops in Vietnam was approaching half a million, draft calls were escalating and scores of American soldiers were being killed weekly.

Dear Abby

Happy Celibates Want To Stay That Way

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Recently you wrote, "No healthy normal man (or woman) is supposed to be 'happy' in abstinence" (from an active sex life).

I hope you will rethink you position. You have been, over the years, a great friend of hetero-, homo-, and even bisexuals. How about a good word for those of us who are genuinely asexual? We are truly a forgotten minority.

I, for one, am quite happy without sex. Personally, I am repelled by sex, although I am heartily in favor of a happy, normal sex life for those who favor it. I do not want to be thought of as "unhealthy" or "abnormal." I am living in the way that is right for me. Unfortunately, because I am not married and do not have a lover, many people assume that I am a lesbian, which I definitely am not.

Some of history's most creative people have been celibate by choice. Please think about it, Abby, and give us a break.

AGE 42 AND STILL A VIRGIN

DEAR 42: To each his (or her) own. Meet another happy celibate:

DEAR ABBY: I must object to your comment to NO ACTION IN WASHINGTON STATE. You said: "No healthy normal man (or woman) is supposed to be 'happy' in abstinence."

I consider myself a happy, normal, healthy male, and abstinence is my choice. As a matter of fact, like thousands of others who have taken the vow of celibacy, I feel that for me, celibacy is an important part of my life. Sign me,

HAPPILY CELIBATE IN N.Y.

DEAR CELIBATE: NO ACTION complained that his wife had been depriving him of marital relations for 15 years. (He was 56.)

I agree, one who takes the vow of celibacy can indeed be happy, normal and healthy. But a man (or woman) who takes the marriage vows, then decides to become celibate, does his wife (or husband) a terrible disservice.

DEAR ABBY: We are a couple in our late 20s (call us George and Georgette) who have been married for six years. We both work, have no children and are very happy with our lives.

We need an outside opinion. We recently had a portrait painted of Georgette in which she is wearing only the bottoms of her French-cut bikini. It is a tasteful, accurate and beautiful painting. We are planning to hang it in our home but are concerned that some of our friends may be ill at ease knowing the model was Georgette. But we do want to share it with others.

What do you think?

GEORGE AND GEORGETTE

DEAR G. AND G.: When in doubt — don't!

DEAR ABBY: I am the wife of an airline pilot, and I used to worry myself half sick wondering what my captain might be doing with some cute young airline hostess, until one night a highly respected, much-admired professional man knocked on my door while my pilot was gone. He certainly had some swinging plans for us. And to think for years I had envied this man's wife because she had an 8-to-5 husband!

That's all there is to my story, Abby. But the point is this: Occupation doesn't determine fidelity — or the lack of it — in a marriage. I know airline captains' wives who have more going for them while their husbands are away than their husbands have.

FEET ON THE GROUND

CONFIDENTIAL TO R. IN K.C.: It's not always better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all. It all depends on what you have lost.

Snyder Comes UP Short As...

Estacado Wins Region Track

Glenn Parham, Snyder's lone contender in the Region I Boys Track and Field Meet at Odessa, will have to wait another year before making the state meet in Austin. The all-around athlete, only a sophomore, was unable to qualify in either of his two events - the high jump or the 300 meters.

"He just had a bad day," said Tiger track coach Winfred Shipp. "It was just one of those things. He didn't clear the opening height in the high jump (6-0) and didn't run well in the hurdles. He was real tight, didn't have any spring in his legs.

"But he has two more years to go, that's the good thing. He's been here now (to regionals) and maybe next year he can settle down and have a better day."

The high jump was out of Parham's league at 6-8¼ for first and second places, while the top two times in the 300 were also faster than the youngster has made the distance in this year.

Lewis Johnson of Lubbock Estacado eclipsed the distance in 38.66 to win by over a half-second in front of Fort Stockton's Robbie Roberson at 39.35. Parham's best had been a 39.7 which won first place in the District 2-AAAA meet a week ago. He ran a 40.4 here.

Ironically, Roberson was second to Parham in that meet.

His best of 6-4 in the high jump fell back in the pack at region also. The 1980 high jump field proved to be one of the strongest overall in the past five years. Ernie Mendez of Canyon won with a leap of 6-8¾. Danny Langley of Monahans - who finished second to Parham in the district meet - also soared 6-8½ for second at region.

As expected, Andrew's Van Pearcy qualified in three events, the long jump, 400 meters and 1600 meter relay. He was also the favorite in the 200, but was scratched from that to run on the sprint relay, which did not qualify.

Pearcy took first in the long jump with a leap of 24-9. He was upset in the 400 meters where Mineral Wells' Emanuel Hicks blazed to a 47.12 finish. Pearcy's time was 47.15. He also ran the anchor leg on Andrews' 1600 relay team, bringing the Mustangs from third to second place in the final yards for a 3:17.41 time. Lubbock Estacado, the regional champion, won the relay in 3:17.32.

Ector's Tony Gamble also cleaned up in the distance events, as expected. Gamble won the 1600 meters in 4:26.83 over Andrews' Kirk Pearcy, 4:27.82. He also won the 800 meters in 1:55.38, edging teammate Greg Lyons, 1:58.78.

Estacado finished with 76 points overall, while Andrews placed second with 70.

CATCHING THE TIGERS -- Tiger baseball fans come alive again this week as the Tigers trek to Odessa Tuesday for a 4 p.m. game with Odessa Ector. Snyder, the round-one District 2-4A champion, is 16-7-1 on the season and 6-0 in overall loop play; 1-0 in round two. Above, catcher Neil Evans awaits a throw in, hoping to catch an opposing runner coming home. (SDN Staff Photo)

Pleasant Colony Wins 107th Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - There in the Kentucky Derby winner's circle with the roses were "The Fat Man" and "Legs."

And that's just where trainer John Campo, known in the world of backstretch as The Fat Man, had continuously told people he and Pleasant Colony would be.

They are a winning team - the 5-foot-7 Campo and skinny-looking colt, of whom Campo says, "There's no body to this horse. He's all legs."

They joined forces when owner Thomas Mellon Evans switched the colt to the 43-year-old Campo from trainer P. O'Donnell Lee, who handled Pleasant Colony in Florida. In his first start under Campo, Pleasant Colony won the 1⅛-mile Wood Memorial April 18 at Aqueduct.

Saturday, Pleasant Colony, Campo and jockey Jorge Velasquez became the heroes of the 107th Derby - a Derby in which the jockey on the third-place finisher misjudged the finish line; a Derby in which most of the top contenders finished far back and a couple of mutuel-field horses had a field day; a Derby which was a court case as well as a horse race.

Pleasant Colony's victory before the second largest Derby crowd of 139,195 was worth a winning mutuel payoff of $9 and a Derby record winner's share of $317,200 from a record purse of $404,700.

Velasquez had Pleasant Colony 16th after the first half mile which Top Avenger carved out in 45.1 5, fastest first half in Derby history, after the fastest Derby first quarter of 21.45.

Eliminate 76ers, 91-90

Celtics Make Comeback

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Celtics staggered on the brink of elimination for three games. But it was the Philadelphia 76ers who took the fatal plunge.

"Some team had to fall and I'm just happy it wasn't us," Boston forward Cedric Maxwell said.

Boston, very often down but never out in its Eastern Conference championship series, mustered a comeback for the fifth straight game Sunday to edge the 76ers, 91-90, in the seventh and deciding contest.

The Celtics host the first two games of the National Basketball Association title series Tuesday and Thursday against Houston, who they beat in four straight games in last year's playoffs.

"People said we couldn't do it and counted us out but none of the players counted us out," said Boston rookie Kevin McHale. "We may back ourselves into a corner but we come out fighting."

"We led the whole game, then we had a letdown," said Philadelphia guard Maurice Cheeks. "We couldn't seem to build on our lead when we had the chances and they were always able to come back."

Boston is only the fourth team of the 69 who have trailed NBA playoff series three games to one to come back and win. In the previous two games, the Celtics rallied from halftime deficits of 10 and 9 points to win by 2.

They trailed 53-48 after two periods Sunday and 87-80 when Julius Erving, who led the 76ers with 23 points, capped a 12-1 Philadelphia run with a fallaway jumper with 6:25 left in the game. After that, the 76ers made just one field goal, committed five turnovers, four of them steals, and had two shots blocked.

"We played good defense going down the stretch," said Boston playmaker Nate Archibald. "We didn't hit that many shots. The defense did the job for us."

Boston's shooting was horrendous. Its 38.2 percent field goal shooting was lower than its worst regular season showing and topped only its 37.8 mark in the second game against the 76ers.

Larry Bird, who led Boston with 23 points and 11 rebounds, got a defensive rebound and hit a fastbreak bank shot with 1:03 to go to put Boston on top 91-89. With 29 seconds left, Cheeks was fouled by Gerald Henderson. He missed the first shot and made the second.

Walks Aid Astros In Victory Over Pirates

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Don Sutton, in his 15th big league season, said it was the first time he'd ever drawn three walks as a batter in one game.

"And if I play 15 more years I probably won't have three more either," Sutton said Sunday after he coaxed the three passes off pitching rival Jim Bibby to help the Houston Astros to a 3-1 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

One walk came with the bases full and forced in a run. Another kept an inning alive and led to a Houston score. The third only added to Bibby's dismay.

"I wasn't trying to walk him," lamented the Pirate pitcher. "Three times. That's the bad part."

Sutton, a .144 lifetime hitter, is 0-9 at bat this season. "Even my best bolt might go to deep short," he said.

After Jose Cruz led off the Houston second with a single and a steal, Bibby walked Art Howe and Kiko Garcia to load the bases with two out.

Then he walked Sutton on a full-count pitch, forcing in Cruz to give Houston a 1-0 lead.

Omar Moreno doubled home a Pirate run in the third, but Houston moved ahead 2-1 in the fourth as Bibby walked Sutton again.

After Howe singled and was forced at second by Alan Ashby, Sutton drew a two-out walk on just five pitches and Terry Puhl singled to score Ashby.

With Enrique Romo pitching in the eighth, Howe tripled and scored on a single by Garcia to widen the Houston lead to 3-1.

Sutton, who allowed five hits over seven innings before leaving for a pinch hitter, climbed to 2-3 with his second straight win.

"He's with a new ball club - but he's the same pitcher, one of the best that's ever pitched in the game of baseball," Pirate Manager Chuck Tanner said of the former Dodger.

The Pirates threatened against a trio of Houston relievers in the final two innings but stranded four runners.

Rangers Eruption Pops Kansas City Royals, 9-8

ARLINGTON (AP) - Even after the Kansas City Royals erupted for seven runs in the sixth inning, then added an insurance run in the seventh for an 8-3 lead, Texas Ranger Bump Wills was confident his team would win the game.

"It's just like in pro basketball, if you've been following the Boston-Philadelphia series," said Wills, referring to the National Basketball Association playoffs.

"The Celtics came back from 20 points down to win one because they knew they were going to. I felt we were going to come back."

The Rangers did, indeed, come back to win the game 9-8 on Pat Putnam's 10th-inning Sunday night solo home run, giving Texas a split of the four-game Kansas City series.

But it was Wills who had tied the game, capping a three-run Ranger uprising with a run-scoring single in the eighth inning.

"I felt confident," said Wills. "I was glad it was me at the plate."

Texas' eighth-inning runs came when John Grubb opened with a walk, then moved to third when Jim Sundberg reached on an error.

Third baseman Bill Stein, playing for the injured Buddy Bell, then cracked his third hit of the night, a single to left that scored Grubb. Putnam doubled in Sundberg, then scored the tying run on Wills' single up the middle that skipped off the glove of Kansas City shortstop U.L. Washington.

That set the stage for Putnam's dramatic game-winner, which came on a 3-2 pitch from Royal reliever Juan Berenguer, 0-2.

"I was looking for a fast ball. He is a fast ball pitcher all the way," Putnam said. "The pitch was a good one. It was just above the knees and on the inside corner."

Putnam crashed the homer, his second of the year, into a 20 mph wind, but there was little doubt it was hit hard enough to decide the game.

"The only question was whether it was fair or foul," agreed Kansas City's Cesar Geronimo, who had thumped his own two-run homer in the seventh. "Another two feet and it's a foul ball."

Texas starter Ferguson Jenkins had a 3-run cushion until things went sour in the big Royals' seventh.

Tiger Pair State Bound

ODESSA -- Snyder's boys doubles crew of Jimmy Fowler and Jon Smith fell to a top seeded Brownwood team in finals action of the Region I, Class 4A Tennis Tournament here Saturday, but the Tiger pair have still earned a berth to state competition.

Fowler and Smith won their first two matches, 6-2 and 6-4 over a team from Borger, and 6-4, 2-6 and 7-5 over a team from Wichita Falls Hirschi.

Those wins put them in Saturday's semi-finals and earned them an automatic slot into the May 15-16 State Tournament in Austin.

Brownwood's favored team of Paul Pearce and Steve Lyle took the regional championship by stopping the Snyder duo 6-2 and 6-3.

Richard Holliday and Greg Downins of Andrews downed Kerry Keener and Scott Chapman of Hirschi 6-3, 4-6 and 8-6 for third place in Class 4A.

Snyder's boys singles entry, Neal Paige, had fallen in the first round on Friday, making the Smith-Fowler duo SHS's only state tennis representatives this year.

Delightful Sundeck

HOME DESIGN LIBRARY
by Larry Farnsworth

This two storied house is an especially attractive one with charming dignity and pleasant lines, enhanced considerably by the "wrap around" sun deck which graces its upper floor.

Note how the simple entry area at the foot of the stairs channels traffic efficiently along only the side of the dining room and kitchen dining area to the rear hall so that the basic function of these rooms is not disturbed.

Note too the separate living room with its nice big window, and the pleasantly separate formality of the dining room.

The large country style kitchen uses an L-shaped work area to provide plenty of counter surface and cabinet space and also allows lots of open floor space for informal dining and other desired pursuits. A door to the carport and its handy utility room conveniently places laundry facilities just a few steps away.

Next to the kitchen is a downstairs bath and beyond it a comfortably designed family room with a sliding door to the rear of the property.

The second floor contains two more back to back baths and four lovely bedrooms as well as additional storage space. Note the good closets in the bedrooms too, and the master bedroom's dressing room with its extra closet and built-in dressing table. This luxurious room also has sliding doors to the huge sundeck and a pleasant view of its front extension through a nice big window.

Note too how the stair well area on both floors has been utilized efficiently to provide a quantity of good storage closets.

Consider once again the exterior of this charming house. Note the arch like effect which gains distinction from being repeated three times . . . at the front entrance and window and at the carpot entrance.

For a truly beautiful house designed to make living truly beautiful too, this plan is a good one to select.

Book Draws On Legend Of Cruelty In Bedford

CHANEYSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Stand on the hill where rough-hewn stones mark their graves.

You can almost hear the sounds the 13 runaway slaves might have made, their feet stumbling and lungs struggling, as they fled before their pursuers 122 years ago.

Then, the awful moment of truth — no escape save one. A spritual sums it up: "And before I'll be a slave, I'll lie buried in my grave, and go home to my Lord, and be free."

One by one, author David Bradley believes, the 13 slew themselves.

In a novel that pulls no punches about the cruelties suffered by such runaways and their descendants in his nearby hometown of Bedford, Bradley has brought the 13 slaves back to life.

Drawing fiction from a local legend, he examines their flight and the unraveling of fate that brought them to be buried here, in a white family's mountainside graveyard high above Blue Gap Run.

Their story, passed down from generation to generation in this isolated southwestern Pennsylvania valley, now comes to a larger audience in "The Chaneysville Incident," Bradley's second novel, published April 8 by Harper & Row.

It is the story of a young, black college professor's search for self. In trying to understand why his father, an eccentric moonshiner, died, he discovers the death was linked to the deaths of the runaway slaves more than a century earlier.

The book has created a sensation in Bradley's hometown, population 3,200 and peacock-proud of its past. The novel is sold out at the Bedford bookstore, despite — or maybe because of — the jabs it takes at the community's history.

"It's caused talk, let's put it that way," said storeowner Doris Atkinson. "It did open my eyes a little bit."

A boyhood friend of Bradley's, Bill Clark, is now sports editor of the Bedford Gazette. Clark, who is white, said he felt the novel portrays prejudice in the town more starkly than he remembers.

"There's things in there I didn't know, growing up side-by-side with him," Clark said.

In the story, Bedford is referred to as "the Town," a site of political corruption, segregated eating places, barbers who won't cut the hair of blacks and a lynching.

The novel also says that it was at the colonnaded Bedford Springs Hotel, just outside town, that the Supreme Court justices holed up, with their magnesia water and black servants, before handing down the infamous Dred Scott decision.

That's the one that said, in effect: once a slave, always a slave. It held that a slave's residence in free territory did not make him or her free and denied citizenship rights to the descendants of slaves.

The book spans 250 years of history and local landmarks and institutions are recognizable in its pages, Bedford residents say. "I used the things that I knew," Bradley acknowledged.

He was not always kind. His treatment of the town combines nostalgia with anger.

The mixture also comes through in conversation. He speaks affectionately of the old people in town and their endless stories, but the voice grows taut when he recalls his years as one of a small knot of blacks in the local high school. 'Sheer, unadulterated terror," he said. "Somebody beat me up every day."

But overall, "they're very good people," he said. "One of the reasons that I didn't use the name of the town in the book was because what happened there could have happened anywhere."

Reconstructing the past is Bradley family tradition. The author's mother, Harriette Bradley, is a history buff. So was his father, the Rev. David Bradley, who died last year.

It was while helping prepare a history of Bedford County in 1969 that Mrs. Bradley heard the legend of the runaway slaves.

She traced the tale to the "south county," near Chaneysville, and finally found the unmarked stones in the graveyard of the Iames clan, one of the county's founding families.

"They put them in their family cemetery. They must have been some quite good people at that time," Mrs. Bradley said.

Bradley, by then studying creative writing at the University of Pennsylvania, was fascinated by the story. He promised himself to write about the slaves fleeing their masters and passing through here on the Underground Railroad.

Bradley's mother said she heard the slaves were killed by sympathetic whites at the slaves' request when they realized capture was imminent. But the author dismisses that part of the story, saying anyone who killed slaves was liable for their value and punishable under law.

He thinks suicide by the band was a more likely explanation, saying that slave suicides were common and widely documented.

Bad Times Really Good For Secondhand Stores

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Bad times are good times for secondhand clothing stores.

"Sales have been increasing steadily for the past two years," said Mollie Haines, who is in charge of public relations for the Washington, D.C., chapter of Goodwill Industries of America.

"Consumers have a need to stretch their buying dollars," Ms. Haines said, adding that the Goodwill Thrift Shops traditionally do well in times of rising prices and high unemployment.

Virginia Knauer, President Reagan's consumer adviser, agreed. "There are some excellent clothing buys" in thrift shops, she said. "I feel this is a shopping alternative — especially if you have a lot of growing children."

There are two basic types of thrift shops — the ones whose merchandise is donated, and the kind which accept goods on consignment, giving the original owner of the clothihg a share of the sales price. Many of the thrift shops are operated by charities like Goodwill, the Salvation Army, church groups and local hospitals.

The 167 local members of Goodwill Industries of America operate about 1,000 thrift shops across the country. Arlo Wagner, a spokesman for the organization, said 1980 sales were $143 million, up 14.4 percent from 1979.

By contrast, the Commerce Department said that retail sales of all kinds increased only 7 percent from 1979 to 1980. Major department store and discount chains generally reported sales increases of less than 10 percent for the fiscal year which ended Jan. 31, 1981.

There are eight Goodwill shops in the area around the nation's capital. They sell a wide range of products — someone once even donated a cemetery plot — but Ms. Haines said that when people think of thrift shops they usually think of clothing.

Inflation not only has boosted business for thrift shops, it also has brought a new type of customer. "At one time there was a type of snob appeal that was working to keep the middle class and upper middle class out of thrift shops," Ms. Haines said. "There was a negative stigma."

Today, she said, buying in a thrift shop is "the mark of the savvy shopper." Ms. Haines estimated that 40 percent of the customers at the Goodwill Thrift Shops might be able to afford the prices in conventional stores, but prefer the secondhand outlets "simply because they are good shoppers."

Mrs. Knauer said that hospital thrift shops often offer particularly attractive bargains. "That's where the doctor's wives drop off their used clothes," she said. "I think a lot of people think this (shopping in thrift outlets) is just for poverty-level families and don't go looking," Mrs. Knauer said. "The more publicity it's given, the more chic it will become."

Col. Raymond Howell of the Salvation Army, which operates about 760 thrift shops around the country, agreed with Ms. Haines of Goodwill that "sales are increasing generally." He said part of the increase is due to the fact that "we're charging more," reflecting the overall pattern of inflation, and part is due to an increased interest in used clothing.

Armored Car Builders Get Plenty Of Orders

CARROLLTON, Texas (AP) — Robert Soussi speaks five languages, often deals with large international companies and has thwarted more than one would-be assassin or kidnapper.

Soussi is the sales manager for Tetradyne Corp., an innocuously-named company that produces made-to-order armored vehicles in this town 18 miles north of Dallas.

And he says his company is well-versed in the ways terrorists, murderers and kidnappers operate.

"We have all the statistics," Soussi says. "For instance, we know that kidnappers, in countries where government officials are often kidnapped, allow themselves two and a half minutes to carry out the mission. Otherwise, they abort."

He says the plant receives orders daily from businesses and countries around the world, but that the 40 Tetradyne employees can only produce about four cars a month.

Many orders come from the Middle East and Central America, but the company also has requests from U.S. firms that deal in large amounts of money and oil companies with overseas operations.

Numbers — not names — identify work orders posted for welders and mechanics. It's a hush-hush kind of business and sometimes Tetradyne officials don't even know who is buying a bullet-proof car because arrangements are handled by a middle man.

"We don't ask too many questions," Soussi said. "But I need to know, if not which country, which area of the world is involved."

An armored vehicle isn't cheap, with costs ranging from $11,000 for the lowest level of basic protection in a van, to $40,000 for the top-level basic amoring of a luxury limousine.

In addition to armor plating and bullet-proof glass, Tetradyne installs a loud siren and loudspeaker complete with cassette that calls for help, outside speakers for communication with the attackers, a two-way radio, gunports and a grenade launching system.

Batteries are placed inside armored boxes and plastic rollers are put inside heavy-duty tires which, even filled with bullet holes, could take the car another 30 or 40 miles out of the danger zone.

"And when it comes out of here, it doesn't look as if it's been armored," Soussi says.

The canyon walls of the Yellowstone River, Wyoming, consist of 15 fossil forests, one buried atop another. The oldest forest flourished 19 million years ago.
