Panel blames shuttle disaster on failed seal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The destruction of Challenger and the death of its seven crew members had a single cause — the failure of a seal in the space shuttle booster rocket, the Rogers Commission said today. Its report faulted NASA for operating a "silent safety" program that concealed well-documented problems with the seal from top launch managers.

The commission told President Reagan that lower level NASA officials were well aware of the flaw with the booster seal and had come to consider it "an acceptable flight risk."

"If the decision-makers had known all of the facts, it is highly unlikely that they would have decided to launch," the commission said.

In addition to demanding that NASA redesign the joint before restarting the shuttle program, the panel urged the space agency to review all items whose performance are critical to shuttle flights. The orbiter's tires, brakes and steering systems "do not have sufficient safety margin."

The report combined a millisecond-by-millisecond dissection of the accident with sweeping recommendations for improved management practices.

In its report to the president, just over four months after the Jan. 28 disaster, the commission said Challenger "struggled futilely against forces" triggered immediately after ignition when gas leaked past the seal.

The leak disappeared for about a minute, before a plume of flame burst out shortly after Challenger flew through wind shears and emerged from a period of maximum aerodynamic pressure. Thus began a fast sequence of events that led to a "massive, almost explosive burning" of the shuttle fuel.

The panel said the shuttle's crew "apparently had no indication of a problem before the rapid break-up" of the craft 73 seconds into flight. The report included several dramatic color photos of the shuttle falling in pieces toward the Atlantic.

The victims were Dick Scobee, spacecraft commander; Michael J. Smith, pilot; Judith Resnik, mission specialist; Ronald McNair, mission specialist; Ellison Onizuka, mission specialist; Gregory Jarvis, a Hughes Aircraft engineer; and Christa McAuliffe, the first teacher to fly aboard the shuttle. Their remains were later located on the ocean floor off Cape Canaveral.

"The failure was due to a faulty design unacceptably sensitive to a number of factors," the report concluded. Among those factors: the effects of cold temperatures on synthetic rubber O-rings designed to seal the joint to keep hot gases from escaping. Challenger was launched when the temperature was 38 degrees, 15 degrees colder than on any of the 24 earlier shuttle flights.

Calling the disaster "an accident rooted in history," the commission said the sequence of events "began with the faulty design," a situation worsened "as both NASA and contractor management first failed to recognize it as a problem, then failed to fix it and finally treated it as an acceptable flight risk."

The commission said the shuttle should not have been launched, and wouldn't have been if top launch managers had been aware of opposition from rocket engineers who feared the effects of cold temperatures.

"There were no alarms sounded in the cockpit," where the astronauts rode, or in Mission Control. "There was nothing that either the crew or the ground controllers could have done to avert the catastrophe," concluded the panel.

"We at NASA welcome the report," space agency administrator James C. Fletcher said in a prepared statement. He promised to study its recommendations carefully.

"Where managment is weak, we will strengthen it," Fletcher said. "Where engineering or design or process need improving, we will improve them. Where our internal communications are poor, we will see that they get better.'

Nothing expected from Hussein visit

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and King Hussein of Jordan sat down today for their first talk in more than a year, but U.S. officials said their brief White House meeting was not expected to provide a breakthrough in the stalled Middle East peace process.

Neither leader would answer reporters' questions as the two posed for pictures in the Oval Office at the start of the private session, which was expected to last less than an hour.

"Frankly, we don't have very high expectations," said one administration official who discussed preparations for today's meeting on condition he not be identified.

"The president asked him, as a longstanding, valued friend of the United States, to visit the White House while he was here," the source said. But he added, "We're not looking for any kind of a breakthrough."

Hussein is in the United States on a private visit to attend the prep school commencements of his twin daughters, Princess Zeim and Princess Aisha, who graduated over the weekend from separate New England boarding schools, and get a medical checkup at the Cleveland Clinic.

At Dana Hall School in Wellesley, where Princess Aisha was among the 85 graduates Sunday, Hussein declared, "The world has become one, and each of us, regardless of his passport, is a citizen of that world. The world's destiny has been joined. We will suffer or flourish together, of that I am certain."

Hussein's appearance came two days after a helicopter that was to carry part of his entourage crashed in Sutton, Mass., killing four crew members. Federal investigators have not ruled out sabatoge.

Hussein was scheduled to see President Reagan for about 30 minutes and was to meet later with Secretary of State George P. Shultz and some members of Congress.

The king announced in February he was abandoning a year-long effort to work with Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat toward making peace with Israel "because the PLO did not meet its commitments."

Money crunch may increase odds for gambling bills

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In what could be the toughest legislative session in Texas history, lawmakers next year will almost certainly vote on two radically different forms of gambling: a state lottery and pari-mutuel betting.

For many, it could come down to morals vs. money; revenue vs. right.

Neither idea is new. Early last session, the Texas House voted overwhelmingly to kill a bill that would have legalized betting on horse races. A similar Senate bill never even made it to the floor for debate.

Houston Rep. Ron Wilson's bill to create a state-run lottery died in committee in both 1983 and 1985. But a combination of dwindling revenues from an ailing oil and gas industry and the success of lotteries in several other states could help Wilson's chances in January.

Since the Texas Constitution explicitly prohibits lotteries, two-thirds of the Legislature must approve an amendment to strike that provision. If lawmakers approve such a change, a majority of Texans must then endorse the amendments at the polls before a lottery becomes official.

The Constitution does not contain a similar prohibition against pari-mutuel betting, but recent legislative efforts have required voter approval through a statewide referendum.

PROPONENTS OF both measures point to polls indicating ample public support for a state-run lottery and pari-mutuel wagering. Now, they say, it's a matter of convincing their colleagues to jump on the bandwagon.

"I think our chances (of approving a lottery) are real good," Wilson said. "When I first introduced it in 1983, it was kind of a new creature on the block: everybody thought it looked real cute, but it wasn't real practical."

Given the state's current money crunch, Wilson expects lawmakers to take the idea much more seriously. "I won't be all alone this time," he said. "I think it's an idea whose time has finally come."

Last week, Speaker Gib Lewis called House members to Austin for a rare interim meeting to discuss the budget crisis. State Comptroller Bob Bullock spelled out what representatives had heard many times before: the state's projected shortfall could rise to $2 billion by Aug. 31, 1987.

In response to Bullock's remarks, Lewis instructed the House Appropriations Committee to begin hearings on the budget in mid-July, six months ahead of schedule. House Ways and Means Committee chairman Stan Schlueter said he expects lawmakers will need two or three extra 30-day special sessions next summer to complete that task.

Jim Oliver, director of the Legislative Budget Board, had even more bad news: if lawmakers want to extend current spending levels through the 1988-89 biennium, they will have to find an extra $3.5 billion in revenues.

The Texas Constitution prohibits legislators from spending more money than the state collects from taxes, fees and other sources of revenue. That provision could be the impetus that sends legislators scrambling for more money, and as Wilson suggested last week, "anything other than a personal or corporate income tax looks good."

BUT SOME lawmakers simply oppose the idea of a lottery, whether or not the state's budgetary muscle needs a shot in the arm.

The 23 states with lotteries grossed almost $10 billion last year and netted state governments more than $4 billion, according to Bullock's office. Thirteen of those states dedicate lottery proceeds to specific programs, while nine states and the District of Columbia funnel profits to general revenue.

Nacogdoches Sen. Roy Blake, a conservative Democrat, said states that have approved lotteries "have found that it wasn't the bonanza that they thought it was going to be."

"I really don't think that's the way to finance state government," he added, "and I really don't think that's the way for people to get rich."

A lottery must spend money before it begins selling tickets. All state lotteries financed their initial operations by borrowing money from state government, and no state has lost money on those loans, the comptroller reported. In 1985, seed-money loans for lotteries ranged from $16.5 million in California to $1.8 million in Oregon.

Derailed railroad tank car continues to burn

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A blaze continued to rage today in one railroad tank car following a derailment and explosion at a flood-weakened bridge that injured five people and forced evacuations of as many as 2,000, said authorities.

Most residents within a two-mile radius of the Salado Creek bridge had returned to their homes after five tankers caught fire Sunday in the derailment of 32 cars from a Missouri Pacific freight train.

Railroad crews constructed dams on the muddy creekbed to contain any spills from the burning car, which contained the flammable gas butadiene, and the other tankers. But authorities decided to let the fire burn itself out.

"The decision to let it burn is the right decision," said Mayor Henry Cisneros, because pouring water on it would only flush chemicals into the creek.

San Antonio emergency workers prepared for recent crises — 2A

The car containing the chemical used to make synthetic rubber, plastics and other chemicals exploded in flames and the fire spread to four other cars on the 80-car train, authorities said.

One of the other tank cars also contains butadiene, while a third holds formaldehyde. Joe Candelario, the city's emergency management coordinator, said today the content of the other two cars was unknown, but all could be leaking chemicals.

He said a 2,500-foot radius around the tank cars remained off limits to crews and residents today.

"They are just going to let it die out because they don't want to put water on it," said a spokesman at the city emergency management office who declined to be identified. "It has died down quite a bit, though. I guess it is in the final stages."

The derailment occurred about 500 yards from a runway at the San Antonio International Airport, but did not interrupt flights, airport officials said. Pilots were warned to stay clear of smoke and fumes.

Officials said parts of the bridge and an undetermined number of cars on the 80-car Missouri Pacific freight train plunged to the creekbed.

The concrete bridge appeared to have collapsed as the train rumbled onto it just after 1 p.m., which triggered the explosion and fire, said Assistant City Manager Rolando Bono.

But Candelario said authorities are unsure whether the bridge collapsed or how the derailment began.

Acting City Manager Lou Fox said the bridge had been weakened by high waters from heavy rains that flooded San Antonio last week.

Cisneros said he hoped that thunderstorms Sunday would continue to stay away from the accident site and not start water flowing through the empty creekbed.

Cows sent to bank as payment for loan

TILLAMOOK, Ore. (AP) — A dairy farmer has answered a bank's demand for payment on his loans by dropping off 103 cows at the financial institution.

Neil Boge got a letter from U.S. National Bank of Oregon on May 31 demanding that he make good on promissary notes or deliver his collateral, so he decided to deliver the collateral — his cows.

The animals were in nine trucks driven by sympathizers.

"They're scared," Boge said. "They figure they're next."

When the Tillamook branch of the bank opened on Thursday, parts of Main Avenue and another street and the bank parking lot resembled a stockyard after the trucks arrived.

When Police Chief Roy White arrived and told Boge to move cows, the farmer replied, "They're not my cows, they're theirs," gesturing toward the bank.

Boge, 49, said he borrowed money from the bank three years ago for dairy cows and equipment. With payments and interest he said he paid more than $58,000 last year.

In December, Boge said, he took out two smaller, short-term loans and was late on two payments.

After he received his letter demanding the collateral or that other arrangements be made, Boge chose to deliver his collateral.

A state-run lottery in Texas would require about $4 million in seed money, according to estimates made during the 1985 legislative session.

Brownsville Sen. Hector Uribe carried a lottery bill in 1985 and intends to introduce a similar bill in the upcoming session. If the state needs more money, he contends, a majority of Texans would prefer a lottery over higher taxes.

"CALIFORNIA HAS had a tremendous experience," Uribe said, "and I think Texas can expect a similar experience. The sooner we do it, the better off our state treasury will be.

"Lottery is a game that people enjoy, like Monopoly," he added. "And if people want to participate in that kind of play, why shouldn't they be able to spend their hard-earned money on their particular form of play?"

Uribe says a provision earmarking lottery proceeds to specific programs would jeopardize the bill's chances of passing. In general, though, he says most residents approve of a lottery as a way to finance a portion of state government.

"I'd have to argue that the vast majority of Texans think it is not immoral for the state to conduct a lottery to provide basic services to its citizens."

Weston Ware, lobbyist for the Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission, said his organization will again fight to defeat a lottery and pari-mutuel betting. Any form of state-supported gambling is "nothing more than a scam, or a consumer swindle," Ware said.

"A lottery teaches people how to gamble, teaches people how to lose, teaches people to believe in luck as a way of resolving issues," he said, "and it's bad public policy for the state to be a partner in a business that does that."

The commission's objection to legalized gambling is not really a moral position, Ware said. "Even if the people who are robbed are willing victims, the state does not have any business making fools out of its own citizens."

WHILE WARE concedes that the state is in dire financial need for additional revenues, he contends that neither pari-mutuel betting nor a lottery are viable sources. "The state is going to have to look elsewhere," he said, "gambling schemes are not even a partial solution."

When asked if it came down to a choice between cuts in essential social services or a state-run lottery, Ware said, "To operate a scam is more objectionable to me than it is to say, 'We can't afford it, so churches and private organizations are going to have to fill the gap.'"

On the other end of the spectrum is Texas Horse Racing Association lobbyist Ricky Knox, who says that pari-mutuel wagering on horse races would open the door to a whole new industry in the state; an industry that is badly needed.

"I think it looks very good for 1987," Knox said, "and I think the financial aspect of the state is focusing more attention...on the economic benefit the state would derive from the horse racing industry."

Knox acknowleges it would take at least three or four years for that industry to get out of the gate, but once race tracks are built and the ponies start running "that unleashes the potential for it to grow into all aspects of the economy," including tourism, construction, advertising, insurance, transportation and real estate.

Senate Economic Development Chairman O.H. "Ike" Harris of Dallas, co-sponsor of a pari-mutuel wagering bill last session, said the current financial crisis will increase the odds of success this time around the track.

"It's the opinion of a lot of people," Harris said, "so I'm not going to discourage it, even if it's not true."

IN 1984, Americans bet more than $12 billion on horse races in 36 states that allow pari-mutuel wagering. State and local governments garnered $650.3 million from licenses, fees and their slice of the pari-mutuel pie. Bullock's office estimates that last session's pari-mutuel bill would have raised $98.2 million annually for the state after five years.

The Texas Department of Agriculture estimated that pari-mutuel betting on horse racing could create at least 9,000 new jobs and generate about $230 million in direct economic activity by the turn of the century.

The comptroller's office also reports that revenues from pari-mutuel betting may be paritially offset by increased law enforcement costs. Last session, the Texas Department of Safety estimated wagering on horse racing would increase the agency's budget by $1.7 million in the first year and $1.3 million each year thereafter.

Neither a lottery nor pari-mutuel wagering would be a panecea to the state's financial woes, Harris acknowledged. "They're just going to reduce the amount of the problem."

Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga of Corpus Christi, sponsor of last session's pari-mutuel bill in the House, said he plans to introduce a similar bill in January. Support for the measure "will come from a cross-section of the House membership," Berlanga says, "and I think you're going to find it will be very bi-partisan."

Berlanga disputes claims that pari-mutuel wagering will lead to an increase in illegal gambling.

"That's totally unfounded," he said. "I think our bill, along with assistance with DPS in drafting some of the enforcement aspects of it, was by far the toughest bill ever put together in this country."

Five tank cars exploded after a flood-weakened bridge collapsed just north of the San Antonio International Aiport Sunday afternoon. The 80-car derailment forced the evacuation of more than 1,000 people as the fire was left to burn itself out. One car was still burning this morning.

Officials: Emergency workers ready for crises

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Emergency workers who evacuated thousands of residents in this Central Texas city after a series of floods and a train derailment within a five-day span were prepared for the crises, officials said.

And residents of the Alamo City were not traumatized by the emergencies that struck in rapid succession, City Councilman Bob Thompson said Sunday.

"We've been sensitized to the potential of these kinds of things," he said as he stood a few hundred feet from a burning, derailed train.

One railroad tank car continued to burn today after the derailment and explosion at a flood-weakened bridge that injured five people and forced evacuations of as many as 2,000, authorities said.

Heavy thunderstorms dumped about 7 inches of rain on the city last Wednesday, closing streets and highways and forcing the evacuation of about 2,000 people living in a flood plain.

"We'll be more diligent in our analyses of disaster preparedness," Thompson said after the two events.

"It would be silly for us not to evaluate how we're functioning," he said. "Without an analysis, you can run on the assumption that everything is hunky dory."

But police spokesman Ricardo Valdes said the two emergencies were not a strain on manpower or the department in general.

Mary Sellers, spokeswoman for the local Red Cross, said workers are "used to handling floods, hurricanes.

"We've had a couple of days to gear up" for the derailment, she said. "We're pretty well equipped."

She said the Red Cross opened two shelters for evacuees Wednesday and two more Sunday.

Thompson said the derailment happened in the "best possible place" because few residents lived in the immediate area.

Mayor Henry Cisneros said he believes the city's emergency system "worked in the floods and the system worked here."

DERAIL

The accident did not threaten the city's drinking water supply, said Edwards Aquifer officials.

The derailment forced officials to close a nearby city park, where more than 200 people watched a soccer tournament, and to seal off the area near the burning wreckage.

Assistant City Manager Alex Briseno said a two-mile-radius evacuation area that affected from 1,700 to 2,000 people was diminished to a 2,500-foot radius late Sunday night.

Mary Jane Spivey, a spokeswoman at the city emergency management office, said that 31 people remained sheltered at Garner Middle School and 15 were staying at Madison High School.

Jesse Morris, 61, was treated at Northeast Baptist Hospital for second-degree burns over 15 percent of his body but was later released, said a hospital spokesman who would not give his name.

Bono said four other people suffered minor injuries such as bruises, dizziness or nausea.

"Fortunately, that area has a lot of open areas with pockets of residential areas," said Candelario. "But it is not heavily populated."

A railroad representative said said a consulting firm from Fort Worth had been brought in to evaluate the situation and said he didn't know what would happen if rain were to extinguish the fire.

"The wreck is not hazardous as long as it keeps burning," said Mark Davis, a spokesman for Union Pacific railroad.

"We are sort of grateful the creek is not flowing to any degree," said councilman Ed Harrington. "The fire is going strong and could burn for days. There is no evidence at all of it burning out."

HUSSEIN

"We are unable to continue to coordinate politically with the PLO leadership until such time as their word becomes their bond," Hussein told his countrymen in bitter disappointment at the end of his second intensive effort in three years to bring the PLO into the search for Middle East peace.

Reagan, whose only formal peace proposal was rejected outright by Israel when he announced it in September 1982 and who suffered a stinging setback after sending a peacekeeping force into Lebanon later the same year, is not expected to initiate another effort.

The United States has repeatedly expressed its willingness to be helpful but has said the initiative for progress must from the countries in the region.

Nor was there any indication the Reagan administration would use the occasion to renew its effort to sell advanced fighter planes, missiles and troop carriers to Jordan.

Facing overwhelming opposition in Congress and from the Israeli government, the administration pulled back the arms sale package in February before Congress could kill the deal. A much more modest package for Saudi Arabia squeezed by on Thursday when the Senate failed by one vote to override Reagan's veto after both House and Senate had voted by wide margins to disapprove the sale.

The Jordan deal "is still in a state of suspension," one official said. "We don't anticipate any quick movement," despite Reagan's limited victory on the Saudi sale.

Chancellor resigns after Waldheim's election

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, a Socialist, resigned and was replaced by a member of his Cabinet today, a day after conservative Kurt Waldheim scored a decisive victory in the presidential election.

Sinowatz, who headed the Socialist government for more than three years, will be succeeded as chancellor by Finance Minister Franz Vranitzky, 49. Sinowatz announced his resignation in a brief statement to reporters.

"I do not rule out other changes in the government," said Vranitzky, who spoke after Sinowatz stepped down.

Vranitzky said he will be sworn in as chancellor latertoday by outgoing President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger. Waldheim, who was elected to a six-year term, will be sworn into office July 8.

The chancellor holds a powerful office in Austria, while the president fulfills largely ceremonial functions.

Sinowatz' resignation came after a brief session by the Socialist Party leadership. The party has controlled the government for 16 years. Parliamentary elections are scheduled for the spring.

Waldheim, 67, was backed by the conservative People's Party. The former U.N. secretary-general collected 2,464,596 votes, or 53.9 percent of the ballots cast in Sunday's runoff, to 2,107,317 votes, or 46.1 percent, for Socialist candidate Kurt Steyrer.

Waldheim received widespread support from the environmentalist Greens and Socialists disenchanted with the work of the Vienna government and the party's involvement in a series of scandals.

Since early March, Waldheim's campaign had been dogged by charges from the New York-based World Jewish Congress that he was involved in war crimes in the Balkans, where he served during World War II as a lieutenant in the German army.

Waldheim repeatedly denied any wrongdoing, but he was forced to concede that he had kept silent for almost four decades on his whereabouts during three crucial wartime years.

Following his victory, Waldheim told a television audience, "The result showed that the Austrian people are not prepared to accept these accusations that have been made against me."

Asked to comment on the charges, Waldheim said, "I would like to say here with all certainty that this criticism did not come from governments, but exclusively from personal statements, from one minister or from the other in Israel."

As Austria's head of state, he will receive foreign guests and make state visits to other countries. But legislators in some countries, including the United States, Britain and Israel, have demanded he be banned because of his alleged activities in the German army.

Waldheim's victory was quickly followed by comment from abroad that many Austrians were bound to dislike: criticism from Israel and support from the Soviet Union.

In Tel Aviv, a government spokesman said, "Israel expresses its deep regret and disappointment at the election of Kurt Waldheim as president of Austria.

"The election did not come as a surprise, but until the last moment, we hoped that logic and reason would prevail, and that the election of a man like Waldheim would be prevented," the spokesman said.

Israel today recalled Ambassador Michael Elitzur from Vienna for consultations to protest Waldheim's victory.

SHUTTLE

sent its report to President Reagan at early afternoon. NASA Administrator Fletcher, who scheduled a news conference for later in the day, already has implemented some of the recommendations.

Rendering its verdict on the nation's worst space disaster after a 120-day probe, the commission demanded that NASA change the design on the solid rocket boosters. "No design options should be prematurely precluded because of schedule, cost or reliance on existing hardware," the commission said.

It added that NASA should give "full consideration" to conducting test firings on a redesigned rocket in a vertical configuration, a plan that some NASA officials have said previously could delay the return of the shuttle to space well beyond the July 1987 target date.

The commission report made these other recommendations:

• NASA should see to the formation of an independent committee to oversee the redesign effort on the booster rocket;

• NASA should overhaul its shuttle management system to give the program manager greater authority, and set up a shuttle safety panel including representatives from ther astronaut corps.

• Called on NASA to establish a flight schedule more "consistent with its resources."

• Conduct a comprehensive review of all items whose performance are deemed critical to shuttle flights. • Recommended that NASA "make all effort to provide a crew escape system" during the orbiter's gliding descent from orbit, as well as provide for greater emergency landing possibilities in the event that two or three of the shuttle's main engines fail during ascent.

Esquivel executed for shooting death of Houston naroctics officer

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted killer Rudy Esquivel, telling his friends to "Be Cool!" as they read him Bible passages, was executed early today for the shooting death eight years ago of a Houston narcotics officer.

"Give my love to everybody," he told four friends who witnessed the lethal injection administered by Texas prison officials. "Thank you for being my friends."

"We love you," Ester Gonzales, one of the witnesses, said.

"I love you," he replied, as another witness, Barbara Longoria, read from a Bible.

"I have fought the good fight," Mrs. Longoria read from the Book of Timothy, citing passages she had highlighted in her Bible with red and yellow markers.

She collapsed into the arms of her husband, Pilo, who told her, "It's OK. He's with the Lord.".

Esquivel took six deep breaths and appeared to be snoring. His eyes closed and there was no further movement. Death came at 12:21 a.m. CDT, prison officials said.

"I don't think I've ever seen an individual as calm and peaceful and cheerful when he was about to meet his Maker," Attorney General Jim Mattox, who also witnessed the execution, said.

Esquivel, a Hispanic, was the first minority prisoner to be executed since the Supreme Court ruled in a Kentucky case in April that jurors could not be improperly excluded merely on the basis of race.

Mattox, however, said there was no evidence to show any jurors in Esquivel's case were so excluded.

"Therefore, it did not apply," Mattox said.

The Supreme Court had cleared the way Sunday for Esquivel's lethal injection, voting 7-2 to deny his request for a stay. Esquivel, 50, whose criminal record dates back to 1953 when he received a 99-year term for participating in a gang rape, had three earlier death dates postponed.

Esquivel was on parole from the rape conviction on June 8, 1978, when authorities said he shot and killed Timothy Hearn, 28, a Houston police narcotics officer. He also had been paroled from California after serving time for assaulting a police officer and forgery.

A Houston jury, after a four-day trial, took an hour to convict him of Hearn's death.

"I think it's a travesty of justice to prolong an execution this long," Jim Moseley, who helped prosecute Esquivel, said. "It has been a long time."

Robert Hearn, the slain officer's father, said Esquivel's execution was justice being done.

"I think it's fitting and proper," he said Sunday.

Aggie wins UT rights to 'Eyes of Texas'

AUSTIN (AP) — An Aggie has figured out how the University of Texas can get the copyright to its own school song.

No joke.

For many years, there has been a dispute about who owns "The Eyes of Texas," the UT school song sung to the tune of "I've Been Working on the Railroad."

But now, Arthur Gurwitz of San Antonio, Texas A&M class of '48, has secured the rights for UT. A portion of the royalties will benefit a Longhorn Band scholarship in the name of Andrew Gurwitz, Arthur Gurwitz's late son and a 1979 UT graduate.

"Andrew was very gung-ho about the football team, the band and everything else about the university. I was thinking of some way of having a memorial fund established and I came up with this idea," the elder Gurwitz said.

Michael Patrick, UT executive vice president for asset management, talked with Gurwitz about the song last year.

"We were discussing the problems with the copyright informally and he told me he would look into it. That was the last I heard until he called me in October and said, 'I think I know how to do this,'" Patrick said.

Although a UT student wrote the words for "The Eyes of Texas" in 1903, the copyright for them was in dispute for years.

Wylbert Brown, a former Fort Worth fiddle player, first copyrighted the words in 1928. Gurwitz said he persuaded Brown to give up his copyright to the words in exchange for a share of the royalties during Brown's lifetime. Brown is in his 90s and lives in Oregon.

At 90, twins still together

By VALERIE CULP WILKERSON

Archie Fredregill, seated, and his twin sister Artie Henley, standing, have remained close for 90 years. Pictured with them is Fredregill's wife, Sallie Belle.

AP Laserphoto

LUFKIN (AP) — Growing up, Artie Henley says she and her twin brother, Archie Fredregill, were almost always together. "When one was there, we was both there."

At age 90, one is still found with the other. Both are residents of Community Healthcare Center of Cantex, 1712 N. Timberland, and Mrs. Henley passes the days sitting beside Fredregill's bed. The pair celebrated their 90th birthday in April.

Fredregill sat in a rocking chair beside his bed and nodded affectionately at Mrs. Henley sitting in a straight chair at the foot of his bed. "She sits right here might near all day when she ain't pacing up and down that hall."

Mrs. Henley has to get up and move frequently to lessen back discomfort, but her little walks almost always end up back in her brother's room. She said, "I'm in here most all the time. I sit in here at night until 8 or 9. Last night it was 10:30. We had a good time."

They pass the hours talking. More specifically, Fredregill said, "She does the talking. I just listen most of the time."

Their rooms are catercornered across the hall at the nursing home, by special arrangement. Fredregill said he and his wife of 66 years, Sallie Belle, entered Community Healthcare Center because his sister was there. "I told our kids if we had to come to a place, we would come to the place where she was. It would be company for both of us. Here's where we landed."

Mr. and Mrs. Fredregill share a room, but Mrs. Fredregill is ill and bedridden, and unable to participate in their conversation most of the time, her husband said. He frequently adjusts her blankets, although movement is difficult for him, and nursing home personnel say he can almost never be persuaded to leave his wife alone in the room even for a minute. Mrs. Fredregill is also a twin. Her twin brother died a few years ago, however.

Mrs. Henley and Fredregill were born April 28, 1896, in a house in a Centralia. "That's (a house) the only place they borned 'em then," Mrs. Henley said. There were five girls and three boys in their family.

She said, "From the time we can remember, we knew we were twins. We were the same as one. We all played, (the eight children in the family) but it seemed like we were closer.... We were crazy about each other."

Their father rented land in Trinity County for the family to farm. When they weren't hoeing cotton or corn, they spent their time playing games such as Hide and Seek, Ring Around the Roses, Hopscotch, Club Fist, Tremble Toe, and racing and jumping rope.

Mrs. Henley was 16 when she married. Her husband died in 1931. Fredregill had to prompt her on her wedding date — Dec. 12, 1912. They were married in her home. She remembers wearing a tea-length white lace dress for the ceremony. "My shoes were awful pretty too, for them days. They'd be crazy this day and time. They had black patent leather bottoms with a cloth top and they buttoned on the outside."

After the ceremony and a big dinner, Mrs. Henley climbed into a wagon with her new in-laws and headed to Lufkin to begin married life. The newlyweds lived with his parents until the birth of their first son. Mrs. Henley said she was given chloroform to ease the pain of delivery and spent nine days in bed afterwards.

Two weeks after the baby was born, her husband loaded up his wife and baby to take them to stay with her family for a few months, who were then living in Apple Springs. Fredregill, who was still living at home, remembers being excited at seeing his new nephew. "We thought it was the greatest thing in the world," he said.

They made the journey over a dirt road just wide enough for one wagon — that later became State 94.

Western-style wedding held on wagon train

ABILENE (AP) — The assistant wagonmaster of the Sesquicentennial Wagon Train said he couldn't wait six months for the end of his ride to wed the love of his life.

So Michael Lowrie and Shawna Hicks became husband and wife Sunday in front of a large crowd at a special ceremony in the Boeshart Arena at Taylor County Expo Center.

The wedding, held in the spirit of the "great western heritage," featured horse-drawn carriages, a circuit-riding preacher and trail riders.

The couple, with the help of local businesses and Catclaw Jaycees, was provided a western wedding.

The groom, a professional roper, participated in the wagon train from the beginning in January. Lowrie formerly performed with the Buffalo Bill Wild West Show and has traveled around the world.

Ms. Hicks joined the trail riders at the end of the school year after finishing her stint as a history teacher and girls' basketball coach in Rockport.

ASU students assaulted

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Two masked men kidnapped and sexually assaulted five Angelo State University students at gunpoint in a secluded area near Lake Nasworthy, authorities said.

The students, three women and two men, were systematically assaulted for three hours Sunday near the location of a similar, unsolved crime that occured nearly three years ago, sheriff's deputies said.

They said an attempted robbery was reported in the area Thursday night.

"It appears that it was very well organized," said Lt. Bill McCloud of the Tom Green County Sheriff's Office. "I don't think they were in mind as particular victims. It would have been anyone who was out there.... No one was within five miles to hear them."

Veteran newsman dies

ABILENE (AP) — Ralph T. "Lash" Lashbrook, a veteran newsman who worked at newspapers in Austin, Brownwood and Abilene, died Sunday after a two-month struggle against liver cancer. He was 58.

A native of Detroit, Lashbrook joined the Abilene Reporter-News in August 1961 and had become the paper's oil-energy editor.

His oil and gas reporting twice earned him awards from the West Central Texas Oil and Gas Association. He was presented another plaque and named an honorary member of the West Central Texas Chapter of the International Association of Drilling Contractors May 28.

Pan Am flight returns

HOUSTON (AP) — Problems with one of three engines on a Pan American World Airways plane enroute to Miami forced pilots to return the jet to Hobby Airport, officials said.

Flight 156, a Boeing 727-200, with 144 passengers and a crew of six, notified the Hobby tower at 9:16 a.m. CDT Saturday that the engine had experienced problems and was shut down, said James A. Arey, a Pan Am spokesman.

The flight had taken off from Hobby about an hour before.

No injuries were reported during the incident.

Girls burned by water

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — Water spewed from a stalled car's radiator and burned two girls, authorities said.

Police said Leslie Dyer, 5, and Wendy Lowe, 6, were burned by water from a the car's radiator at 3:30 p.m. Sunday.

Stephenville policeman Tim Merrick said he stopped on Farm-to-Market Road 988 to help with the stalled car driven by the girls' babysitter. The children were burned just as the policeman arrived.

Merrick took the burned girls to Stephenville General Hospital, where they were treated before being taken by ambulance to Cooke Children's Hospital in Fort Worth.

Prison guard stabbed

TENNESSEE COLONY (AP) — A 27-year-old Texas Department of Corrections guard remains in stable condition after being stabbed with a 28-inch rod by an inmate, a prison spokesman said.

Roger White, who has been a prison guard for a year, was listed in stable condition at the Anderson County Memorial Hospital after being stabbed in the abdomen about 2 a.m. Sunday, TDC spokesman Charles Brown said.

White was giving the inmate a roll of toilet paper in the administrative segregation section at the Coffield Unit near Tennessee Colony when he pushed the rod through a security screen, Brown said.

The 31-year-old inmate is serving a 10-year sentence for a Harris County conviction of criminal mischief and possession of a controlled substance, Brown said.

Gun sales increasing

DALLAS (AP) — When these guys mention "rock 'n roll," they're talking not about bee-bopping but the thrill they get from firing automatic weapons.

And threatened by a new federal law that could soon create a shortage of those weapons, Texas gun enthusiasts are flocking in growing numbers get what they can from gun dealers who report their sales are soaring.

The law adopted last month prohibits the production of legally manufactured or converted machine guns in the United States for private use.

Swaggart holds rally

DALLAS (AP) — Evangelist Donny Swaggart urged thousands of Christians gathered for LIFE-AID, or "Judgment in the Gate," to become aggressive in witnessing their faith to non-believers.

Swaggart and other speakers at the eight-hour rally and concert Saturday at North Lake Park told an estimated 20,000 people to get organized and get involved before what he called the evils of pornography, secular humanism and permissiveness prevail.

Officer shoots attacker

FORT WORTH (AP) — A man was so upset that a fast-food restaurant ran out of hamburger buns that he snatched a policeman's nightstick and beat the officer with it before being shot to death, officials say.

Arthur Oldner, 31, an off-duty Johnson County deputy sheriff, shot and killed Lawrence E. Timmons after their scuffle early Saturday, said Fort Worth police spokesman Doug Clarke.

9 out of 10 folks who drop in here dropped out of school.

It's startling. But true.

And at Southwestern Bell Telephone, we believe it's a statistic we can't afford to ignore.

That's why, since 1979, we've been supporting a special program created to keep kids in school and off the streets.

It's called Communities in Schools, and it was started by Texas' first lady, Linda Gale White.

Communities in Schools arranges for free one-on-one counseling to help potential dropouts work out their personal problems, raise their grades, and above all, raise their self-confidence.

So far the program has been so successful, it's expanded from Houston to Dallas, San Antonio, El Paso and Austin.

At Southwestern Bell Telephone, we're proud to support this special program, as part of our overall effort to contribute to Texas communities.

Because we believe the place to get an education is in school.

Not in prison.

We're here to help.

Plan would insulate poorest

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON — A tax-overhaul plan that appears headed for easy approval in the Senate would permanently insulate the nation's poorest working families from the federal income tax.

A couple with two children and income just at the poverty line — $12,368 — would owe 11 percent of their earnings in federal income and Social Security taxes under present law. But under the bill, their taxes would drop to 2.2 percent of income and be protected in the future against inflation-caused "bracket creep."

Increases in the standard deduction, the personal exemption and the earned-income tax credit "would make tax reform — either the Senate Finance Committee version or the House version — the most important advance in federal policy for low- and moderate-income Americans in nearly a decade," says the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities.

The enthusiasm of the center, a research organization that tracks federal issues affecting lower-income people, is tempered by another part of the Senate bill. Provisions changing the tax incentives for building low-income housing "could aggravate shortages...and result in increases in rents for low-income families and individuals," the center said.

The tax bill, warmly endorsed by President Reagan and by Senate leaders of both parties, is likely to tie up the Senate for the rest of the month, even though key backers are predicting it will pass unanimously. Several amendments will be considered, starting today, including one or more that would preserve fully deductible Individual Retirement Accounts for all workers who can afford them.

Another amendment, by Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, seeks to tilt more of the benefits to middle-income people by creating a third tax rate of 33 percent for the wealthiest Americans. The bill would have only two brackets — 15 percent for about 80 percent of taxpayers and a 27 percent maximum.

On Sunday, Sen. Bob Packwood, the chief architect of the measure, said he would resist moves to make the very wealthy pay more.

"The absolute glue that holds this bill together is the rates.... I will not consider raising the rates," said Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Appearing on CBS' "Face The Nation," Packwood dismissed suggestions that the wealthy would be getting an enormous tax cut at the expense of the middle class.

"Everybody, on average, will get a tax cut. Now everybody isn't average ...but the overwhelming number of middle income people will get tax cuts," Packwood said.

But Mitchell, appearing on the same program, said, "The Finance Committee bill would benefit the very poor by taking them off the tax rolls and the very wealthy by giving them enormous tax cuts and the middle class gets very little."

Some of the 50,000 Southern Baptists gathering in Atlanta for their denomination's 1986 convention line up at the World Congress Center to register. Thousands had arrived an hour before Sunday's opening.

Sunday sermons set stage for vote by Southern Baptist Convention

NATION

By ROBERT FURLOW

ATLANTA (AP) — The Rev. Adrian Rogers, running for president of the Southern Baptist Convention, told delegates he rejects the "monkey mythology" of evolution and "wouldn't give half a hallelujah" for the heavenly chances of anyone doubting the virgin birth.

Rogers, supported by the denomination's strict-fundamentalist wing in Tuesday's election, blasted religious liberalism and praised "the conservative gospel" in a Sunday night sermon to thousands of pastors and other delegates at the Georgia World Congress Center.

His rival, the Rev. W. Winfred Moore, supported by moderates, got much less exposure, preaching on evangelism at a church in Chamblee, outside Atlanta, as allies arranged for his remarks to be taped and shown on local television.

The denomination's convention officially begins Tuesday, hours before about 50,000 delegates vote in the presidential election that is the centerpiece of a continuing factional struggle.

Also Sunday at the convention center, a group of laymen, while declaring they wanted to avoid politics, distributed results of an opinion poll indicating most members of the 14.5-million-member denomination generally favor the moderates' views.

The poll, conducted for the laymen by the Louisville, Ky., research firm, Wilkerson and Associates, found 81 percent of respondents agreeing with a statement that "not all Baptists have to think and act the same way." Seventy-five percent found convincing the idea that "Baptists should have the individual freedom to interpret the Bible for themselves and be tolerant of differing interpretations."

Rogers, however, took a sharply different view in his sermon on the biblical story that Jesus was born of a virgin.

He said a survey showing that many seminary students didn't accept that story literally was "the legacy of modern liberalism."

"If you don't believe that as literal truth, you have some real problems," he told his audience of several thousand. "I wouldn't give you half a hallelujah for your hope of heaven."

At another point, Rogers, 54, pastor of Bellevue Baptist Church in Memphis, Tenn., said, "I reject with all the unction, function and emotion of my soul that monkey mythology that tells us that man evolved."

Moore, 66, pastor of First Baptist Church of Amarillo, Texas, says he, too, believes the Bible is the inspired word of God. However, he has been pushed for the denomination's presidency by the moderate wing at least partly because of his tolerance of a variety of views on biblical interpretation.

Southern Baptists, the nation's largest Protestant denomination, traditionally have valued the freedom of individual churches highly, but the denomination's seminaries and mission agencies are more susceptible to national control. The moderates fear a purge of non-fundamentalists from those schools and agencies if the fundamentalists can consolidate their official power even slightly further after winning seven presidential elections in a row, starting with a one-year term by Rogers in 1979.

Moore, currently first vice president of Southern Baptist Convention, made no mention of the controversy in his sermon Sunday.

Publicity makes raising funds hard for LaRouche organization

BALTIMORE (AP) — The glare of press scrutiny and a federal investigation have made it difficult for organizations tied to extremist Lyndon H. LaRouche to raise money, an official of one of those groups says.

As a result, LaRouche's Caucus Distributors Inc. has asked its supporters to forgive loans to the group "or at a minimum, extend the terms of the loan."

That plea was included in a "Dear Supporter" letter dated May 20 and sighed by Caucus Distributors President J. Philip Rubinstein.

The letter was introduced into evidence Friday in a Maryland state securities hearing in which the LaRouche group is fighting an order that it cease soliciting people to buy promissory notes.

The letter was received on Thursday by a 79-year-old Cockeysville, Md., woman, Grace Lindeman, who is trying to recover $100,000 she gave Caucus fundraisers in exchange for two promissory notes. She said the group has ignored her requests for repayment.

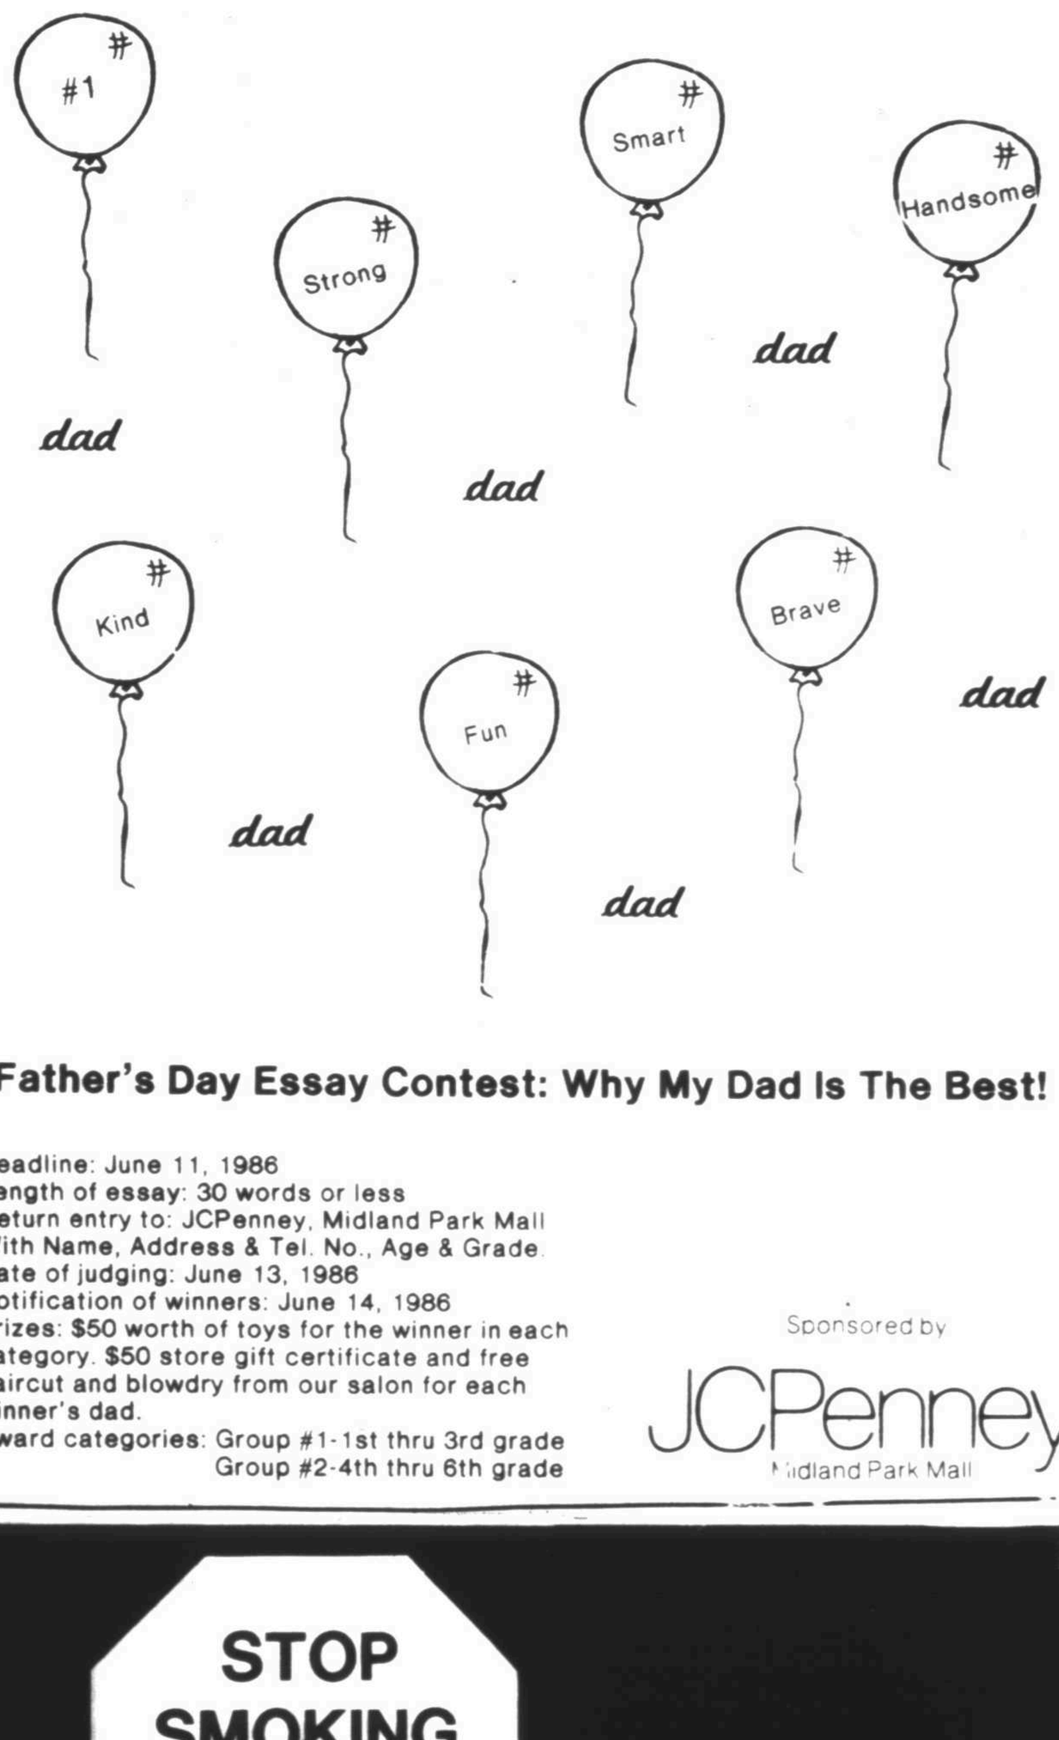

Sarah McCafferty, assistant state attorney general, said it appeared from reading the letter that it was sent to many financial supporters of LaRouche and not to Mrs. Lindeman alone.

The letter suggests that the difficulty in raising money from new contributors and heavy legal expenses have hampered Caucus' ability to repay old loans.

"I read it to say they can't repay because their fundraising has been hurt by all the publicity," Ms. McCafferty said.

In the letter, Rubinstein said LaRouche had been subjected to "financial warfare" through a federal grand jury investigation into allegations of credit-card fraud and by press stories.

Avoid 'nightmare'

Parents once lived in dread of their children coming down with diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus. Those latter-day scourges claimed many young lives.

Modern medicine developed a vaccine — DTP — that protects children from these infections. But modern law has developed a disease — million-dollar damage judgments — that threatens to stop production of the serum, leaving millions of children vulnerable to deadly bacteria.

DTP is not a perfect vaccine. One in 6,000 children has a severe reaction. Each year, a few perfectly healthy children go to the pediatrician for their shot and have a seizure. Some have died. That's a high price to pay for modern medical protection, particularly for the families involved. But think of the thousands of children who live because the vaccine is available.

Shocked by the fact that the vaccine can harm or kill, juries have awarded million-dollar damage judgments to the parents. The money comes from the drug companies. Once, several companies produced DTP vaccine. Now, only two make it. This year insurance companies refused to insure the nation's largest DTP producer. The company responded by taking on the risk itself — and tripling the price. The new cost is $171 per vial — $120 for product liability and $51 for vaccine.

Yet the company faces 100 more suits, dating back to the 1960s, which, if damage awards mount up, could halt production, at any cost. Juries are well meaning, of course. But juries — and the rest of us — seem to have forgotten about the infections themselves. Grandparents and doctors who have seen children suffering the infections don't forget.

Diphtheria begins with a high fever. The child has difficulty swallowing. The throat blocks up. The child may choke to death. Or toxins from bacteria may stop the heart. Death can occur 72 hours after the first symptoms.

Whooping cough usually attacks children from three months to a year old. The baby begins coughing and can't stop. The cough builds into a "whooping" crescendo. The baby turns blue and goes into convulsions.

Tetanus was the horror of all farm families. The child cuts himself on infected barbed wire. A fever begins. Muscles cramp up all over the body. The jaw locks shut. The child drowns in his own secretions.

Antibiotics can kill these bacteria. But drugs cannot remove the toxins, which permanently damage the lungs and heart.

Private pediatricians, who still have access to the DTP vaccine, fear that the higher cost will make it inaccessible to poor children.

Congress and the American people must be prepared to back up DTP producers with co-insurance, if necessary, or to set reasonable limits on damage awards for suits involving vital vaccines. Research funds must be provided to make the DTP vaccine even less dangerous.

If DTP vaccines go off the market, parents will again awake to the nightmare of whooping cough. And babies will strangle to death in their cribs.

Politics trips search

What is society to do with radioactive wastes that will remain dangerous for 10,000 years? Nuclear power plants were built on the premise that safe storage of their waste would be no problem. Thirty years later the government is still groping for an acceptable site. Beating yet another retreat, the Department of Energy has now postponed its search for a permanent storage site in the eastern United States.

Ten thousand years is longer than any civilization has lasted. But two years, not 10,000, is the horizon that daunts Washington. Local protests, combined with technical misjudgments, have sunk the chances of one favored disposal site after another. Hoping to end this string of reverses, Congress in 1982 devised an elaborate process designed to win states' confidence by selecting one site in the East and one in the West.

The Department of Energy has selected candidate sites for a Western depository but was surprised by the intense opposition stirred by its search for sites in the East. It now says a single site, in the West, will suffice because spent nuclear fuel is piling up more slowly than expected.

But Congress decreed two sites, intending the burden to be spread. One favored Western site — Hanford, Wash. — is near the Columbia River and may be perturbed by earthquakes. A continued search for a site in the East would be prudent lest all Western sites prove flawed. No wonder the department's decision looks like yet another triumph of politics over geology. There seems an obvious advantage in postponing the search for a site in New Hampshire's granite until after the 1988 primaries. But postponement risks undermining public faith in a fair selection procedure.

Are there no other places to dispose of highly radioactive wastes? They could be rocketed into the sun — but all NASA's rockets have failed. They could be left to melt through the Antarctic ice caps by their own heat — but their capsules might disintegrate on hitting bedrock. They could be buried undersea in the plains of sediment that cover the oceanic plates — but there might be accidents in transit.

That leaves disposal on land. Either the wastes will have to be buried deep in rocks free of underground water, fissures, earthquakes and minerals coveted by future generations. Or they could be moved to a single temporary storage site above ground until a permanent repository can be found. Fearing that any temporary site would become permanent, however, Congress insisted that a permanent disposal site be found first.

The Department of Energy, daunted by the politics of the East and the geology of the West, seems too ready to abandon the careful plan of the 1982 law. The message from Congress now must be: We meant what we said.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On June 9, 1954, during the Senate Army-McCarthy hearings, Army counsel Joseph N. Welch assailed Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy for attacking a member of Welch's law firm, Frederick G. Fisher. Said Welch: "Have you no sense of decency, sir? At long last, have you left no sense of decency?"

On this date:

In A.D. 68, the Roman Emperor Nero committed suicide.

In 1860, the first dime novel — titled "Malaeska: The Indian Wife of the White Hunter" — was published.

In 1870, author Charles Dickens died.

In 1940, Norway surrendered to the Nazis during World War II.

In 1953, about 100 people died when a tornado struck Worcester, Mass. Tornadoes the day before in Michigan and Ohio claimed more than 110 lives.

In 1969, the U.S. Senate confirmed Warren Burger to be the new chief justice of the United States, succeeding Earl Warren.

In 1973, Secretariat became horse racing's first Triple Crown winner in 25 years by winning the Belmont Stakes in New York.

Ten years ago: James A. Farley, a major Democratic Party figure during the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, died in New York.

Five years ago: Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin strongly defended his country's attack on an Iraqi nuclear reactor two days earlier, saying, "There won't be another holocaust. Never again."

Amnesty International's successes few

WASHINGTON — In 1961, British lawyer Peter Benenson was shocked to hear of two students in Portugal who had been arrested for drinking a toast to liberty at a local bar. Benenson decided the world needed a special organization to investigate and publicize governments' violations of human rights — and Amnesty International was born.

Jack Anderson

"We are ambivalent about the 25th anniversary," was the wry comment of one Amnesty International official. As she explained to our associate Lucette Lagnado, the fact that the organization still exists is hardly cause for celebration; it means that governments are still killing, torturing and harassing their citizens for the mere act of opposing or criticizing the regime in power.

Have conditions gotten any better in the quarter century that Amnesty has been stubbornly calling the world's attention to state-sponsored abuses? "The only difference between now and 1961," the Amnesty official said, "is that a person need no longer feel that nothing can be done."

For while Amnesty International hasn't turned back any holocausts, it has had more modest successes, obtaining the release of victims on an individual basis. While they pursue the individual cases with persistence and some success, the "Big Picture" is constantly changing through forces over which they have no control. "It is always dynamic," one AI veteran explained. "Some countries go up, then they come down. They have a sharp incidence of torture and abuse, then there is a relaxation, and then it gets bad again."

One recent victory was especially gratifying to us. It concerned Lu Hsiu-Lien, a Taiwanese feminist and Harvard Law School graduate whom we wrote about three years ago. She was jailed after speaking at a human rights rally in 1979, and though seriously ill, she was held in deplorable conditions.

Our report prompted the Taiwanese government to improve the conditions of Lu's incarceration, we were told. But it was Amnesty International's patient prodding and years of appeals to the regime that finally secured her release a few weeks ago.

Unfortunately, there are many more cases that AI has been working on for years without success. The organization's admirable refusal to give up the fight is about all the victims have going for them; eventually, perhaps, it will be enough. Here are some of AI's toughest clients:

— In the Soviet Union, Tatyana Semyonova Osipova, a 37-year-old computer specialist, is in a labor camp for engaging in "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" and "malicious disobedience." Her crime was that in 1977 she joined the Helsinki Monitoring Group, formed to check on Soviet compliance with the Helsinki Accords. She helped to document Soviet violations and was arrested in 1980. Sentence: five years in prison plus five years' internal exile. But she joined in protests and hunger strikes in the camp, and had several years added to her sentence.

— In South Africa, Thozamile Gqweta, 34-year-old president of the South African Allied Workers' Union, was arrested in February 1985 and has been held since then on charges of high treason. In 1981, two of his relatives died in a suspicious home fire. A week later, police opened fire at their funeral and Gqweta's fiancee was killed.

— In Vietnam, Nguyen Chi Thien, 53, is indeed a hard case. He has spent 23 years in prison because he refuses to stop writing poetry. He was first arrested in 1958 when he tried to establish a literary magazine in Hanoi. He was sentenced to two years at hard labor for "trying to discredit the regime by romantic poetry." He has been in and out of jail ever since. After one 13-year stretch in a "re-education camp," he was pardoned in 1978, only to be re-arrested the next year for slipping a manuscript to a foreign diplomat.

UNDER THE DOME: Knowing the parliamentary rules and using them can be a crucial edge on Capitol Hill: The law on foreign arms sales gives the House or Senate only 30 days to object, or a proposed arms sale goes through. But a Senate rule forbids voting on a matter until at least two days after a report on it is issued. The 30-day period to object to arms sales to Peking ran out on May 8. But the Foreign Relations Committee staff didn't file its report on the issue until May 9. This meant that conservative opponents in the Senate had no chance to vote — or even discuss the sale. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., wants the Senate rule changed.

Mississippi GOP mixed on Robertson visit

JACKSON, Miss. — Pat Robertson made his uneasy rendezvous with the Republican Party when he told a GOP reception here "it is no coincidence" that Ronald Reagan's election in 1980 followed half a million Christians praying in Washington to "please heal our land."

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

A speaker imputing divine origin to a partisan political win was unusual fare for traditional Republicans attending the fund-raiser. But they were in a distinct minority. The majority at the reception and the party rally that followed were fundamentalist Christians, new to Republican politics but eager to hear the television evangelist-turned-potential-presidential-candidate — particularly after his strong Michigan showing.

Whether these newcomers stay under the Republican tent after Robertson predictably falls short of the nomination is no more certain than whether he will tailor his sermon-like speech to secular politics. Robertson's Mississippi visit, one of his first to a party function, exposed problems of acculturation.

Robertson's presence was billed as an add-on to the Jackson stop of his Heads Up campaign against illiteracy. In fact, Robertson's staff asked to address a party function. With Jeane Kirkpatrick declining an invitation and Mississippi oilmen and plantation owners short of cash, state GOP leaders jumped at the famous name.

The $100 reception ticket (compared to $1,000 for ex-governor Reagan here in 1975) was feared too high, based on how party stalwarts reacted. Clay County GOP Chairman Gains Hawkins was alone in deriding Robertson out loud as "an electronic, evangelistic freak who takes money under false pretenses from the old, the sick and the gullible." But many Republican faithful grumbled privately that their party had no business inviting a preacher.

Complainers were replaced by evangelical newcomers. Ex-state chairman Clarke Reed, a major figure in Mississippi politics for 20 years, did not recognize 75 percent of the more than 200 faces at the reception. This stranger factor jumped to 90 percent for 800-plus paying $10 to attend the rally.

Robertson held more than evangelicals spellbound at the rally but did not secularize his speech. America is good, he said, "because we believe the Bible is the word of God." But "we are seeing a record decline in moral values." He complained of Indiana's Republican Gov. Robert D. Orr asking why he discussed homosexuality instead of budget deficits.

His answer: AIDS. "We are going to see the equivalent (in AIDS deaths) of a 747 loaded with passengers crashing every single day of the year" by 1990, with 46 million cases projected by 1995. "Now why would a governor ... say that isn't a problem?" asked Robertson, who then cited teenage pregnancy, illegitimacy, divorce, venereal disease and child abandonment. "How can we say we are good?" he asked. "... We can't ignore (these problems) and just talk about budgets."

Republicans grown accustomed to President Reagan's "morning in America" rhetoric may have trouble with Robertson's analogy between refurbishing the Statue of Liberty and restoring America's moral values. He said "it's going to take some work" to rehabilitate a country with "a little corrosion around the edges" and "a little paint chipping off."

It did not relieve apprehensions of such traditional Republicans as Jim Forbus, a Starkville, Miss., insurance agent and member of the State Republican Executive Committee. He is concerned about what politics may do to Robertson's ministry but more so about what Robertson may do to the Republican Party.

Like nearly all the state party brass, Forbus inclines to George Bush for president (partly because the vice president visits Mississippi so often). Sen. Robert J. Dole was impressive on a recent visit, but we could find no supporters. Rep. Jack Kemp has ignored the state and appears on Mississippi's radar only because the influential Rep. Trent Lott backs him.

But Robertson has a personal following to challenge Bush. Mac Robinson, who runs Jackson's McDonald's franchises, seldom responded to past Republican money appeals. This time he bought his own $100 ticket and sold several more. He fears "the judgment of God against America" and thinks Robertson may be needed to avert it. Jim Herring, who ran for governor as a Democrat and may try again as a Republican, told us Robertson's visit generated unusual excitement in his hometown of Canton.

Robertson himself is excited over Michigan. He called it "a tremendous victory for people who care about traditional moral values." When a reporter asked about "dabbling" around in presidential politics, he responded: "I don't think beating a sitting vice president in your first test is dabbling." Neither do Republicans who saw him here, whether they love him or fear him.

CHARLEY REESE

Reagan should cast aside arms control myth

President Reagan's decision to scrap two Poseidon submarines in order to stay within the limits of the SALT II treaty is an example of playing domestic politics with the nation's security.

Charley Reese

In case President Reagan has forgotten his own campaign speeches, the treaty is fatally flawed. It is so flawed that not even a Democrat-controlled Senate would ratify it.

The fatal flaw is that while we provide an accurate count of our strategic weapons, the treaty relies only on the word of the Soviet Union and the holes in the ground visible from our satellites for their count. We, in fact, do not know what size their strategic arsenal is or even its components nor do we have any way of finding out. The treaty, by the way, limits launchers, not missiles.

Reagan would be wise to re-read a history of World War II. He would find, for example, that when the German army arrived in the Moscow suburbs, they suddenly discovered that the Russians not only had divisions of troops, of which they had been unaware, but also a new T-34 tank which the Germans did not know even existed. Whatever flaws the Soviet regime has, maintaining secrecy is not one of them. There are many cities in the Soviet Union in which no Westerner has set foot for more than 40 years. There are many cities in the Soviet Union in which no non-resident Soviet citizen can go or has gone for decades.

For five years now, Reagan, who reversed himself upon taking office, has been saying, "Well, gosh, if you fellows over there don't stop violating this treaty, we're not going to abide by it either." Now, like the child reluctant to call his opponent's hand, Reagan is saying, "This time I mean it. If by October or November, you don't stop violating the treaty, we're not going to live by it either."

In fairness to the president, his actions are based in part on the enormous, politically-potent but superstitious belief in arms control. Probably not since the church put the squeeze on Galileo has there been a false belief so firmly entrenched in the public mind.

Arms control is an idea which survives in the face of evidence that it has never worked and never will work. The modern version of the myth was created in the early 1960s by technocrats, among which was Robert McNamara, then secretary of defense. McNamara is an example of a modern phenomenon — the intelligent, well-educated idiot. Most of the unmanageable bureaucracy in the Defense Department was his creation. The concept of Mutual Assured Destruction was his — as was the bungling of the Vietnam War.

McNamara, who arrogantly and foolishly asserted that the Soviets had given up trying to match our nuclear might, reasoned, with his accountant's mind, that it would be cheaper to negotiate arms reductions than to maintain our strategic edge. He did not, and still does not, realize that the world is not run by accountants. McNamara is one of those men who cannot understand why the world does not recognize his genius. He will go to his grave secure in the knowledge that every human on earth who disagreed with him was wrong.

The superstitious faith in arms control, however, acts as a deterrent to our own decision-makers — which is exactly why the Soviet Union goes to such trouble to feed the myth. In the long run, the blind faith in arms control may prove as fatal to us as the blind faith in the Maginot Line proved to the French.

There is no better reality-tester than war. That's when the superstitions, the wrong ideas, the false beliefs, the incorrect assessments are all incinerated by the fire of truth. The single greatest imperative of a nation is, in matters of national security, to determine as accurately as humanly possible the truth before the war occurs. This requires the most rigorous integrity and the most rigorous adherence to the rules of sound thinking. Politics, greed, fear and wishful thinking have no place in the process.

If Reagan were a great president, instead of a merely good one, he would confront the arms control myth head-on and not risk the nation by compromising with it.

Aquino says she will not run if commission calls for new elections

WORLD

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino will not be a candidate for the Philippines' highest office again if the commission she appointed to write a new constitution calls for new presidential elections, a news magazine said.

Mrs. Aquino, who took power Feb. 25 during a civilian-military revolt against Ferdinand E. Marcos, was asked by Manila's Sunday Inquirer magazine whether she would run in a new presidential election. It quoted her as replying, "I won't be a part of that any more. I think I'm just meant for snap elections."

Also Sunday, thousands of Filipinos who still back Marcos battled police with bottles, rocks and slingshots. The police, who prevented the protesters from marching to the presidential palace, used tear gas and fired their rifles in the air.

Police and hospital officials said 21 people, including seven police officers and two infants, were hurt in the altercation.

About 20,000 Marcos supporters earlier demanded Mrs. Aquino's resignation in a rally at Manila's Rizal Park.

Mrs. Aquino also was quoted by the magazine as saying some of her five children hoped the constitutional commission would call a new presidential election "so I can get out of here quickly."

The 48-member commission was chosen two weeks by Mrs. Aquino, who ordered it to draw up a new constitution for the Philippines. She pledged not to interfere with its work.

Some members of the constitutional commission propose that all offices, including the presidency, should be up for election after the new constitution is ratified in a plebiscite.

Others say Mrs. Aquino and Vice President Salvador Laurel really won their Feb. 7 election contest against Marcos and his running mate, Arturo Tolentino. They propose to keep Mrs. Aquino and Laurel in office for a full six-year term.

In that case, only the legislature and local government posts would be up for election.

Mrs. Aquino now governs under a temporary revolutionary constitution that gives her all executive and legislative powers, but also guarantees human rights.

Police battle protesters at nuclear plant

BROKDORF, West Germany (AP) — Hundreds of people were injured in battles between police and protesters at two weekend demonstrations against nuclear power, West German authorities said.

Scores of people fought police in the streets of Hamburg on Sunday after attending a protest at a new nuclear power plant site in Brokdorf, 39 miles to the north, police said.

About 200 young people broke store windows, erected barricades in the street and threw stones at police, the spokesman said. Several officers were injured, but there was no exact count available.

Police arrested most of the group after battling them for several hours, Hamburg police said.

In Wackersdorf, about 50 protesters returned to the construction site of a nuclear waste reprocessing plant Sunday and attacked the fence surrounding it, Bavarian police said. Police forced them away with water cannon.

A day earlier police fired water cannon and tear gas at demonstrators who attacked the Brokdorf and Wakersdorf sites with rocks, Molotov cocktails, flares and steel pellets.

Sixty police and more than 100 demonstrators were injured Saturday at Brokdorf, and 11 policemen still were hospitalized Sunday, police spokesman Peter Cluver said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Ortega: Government will help free German hostages

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega said government troops will move to free eight West Germans being held by Nicaraguan Contra rebels if the captives are not released by late today.

"We have the ability to take a military action at any moment to free the captives," he said Sunday. "But at the request of the German government we have given a time limit of 6 p.m. (8 p.m. EDT) in order that the mercenary forces free the captives. If not, we must take military action," he said.

Rebels of the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force seized the Germans, civilian volunteers working on housing projects, during a May 17 attack on a village 75 miles south of the capital of Managua.

West Germany has appealed to the United States to put pressure on the Contras to free the captives, who are being held in southern Nicaragua.

In Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Frank Arana, a spokesman for the rebels, said the Germans "will be delivered in Managua when the Sandinista government gives the security guarantees that have been requested."

Fighting occurs at camp

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Fierce fighting involving thousands of residents broke out today on the edges of the Crossroads black squatter camp that was ravaged by violence last month, relief workers and news reports said.

Police fired buckshot and tear gas to disperse roving gangs of fighters, the South African Press Association said. The agency reported as many as 8,000 people rampaging in neighborhoods on the fringes of Crossroads, 12 miles east of Cape Town.

Five workers from an ambulance service near the shanty settlement were briefly trapped inside a clinic as conservative black vigilantes battled young black militants, said Malcolm Jones, director of St. John's Ambulance Service.

Before police could arrive, the five escaped along with refugees left homeless in last month's fighting, Jones said.

The vigilantes then set fire to the building, he said, adding that a second clinic next door and tents housing refugees were under siege as well.

Gorbachev in Hungary

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev met Sunday with Janos Kadar, Hungary's veteran Communist Party chief, at the beginning of a state visit that will include a Warsaw Pact summit conference.

The official MTI news agency said the Gorbachev-Kadar said the substance of the talks was not made public, but it was understood they dealt mainly with Hungary's economic reform measures.

In brief responses to questions shouted by reporters after his low-key arrival, Gorbachev said he and Kadar would have "a broad and deep exchange of views" on bilateral and international issues.

Thunderstorms in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for partly cloudy skies on Tuesday with a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms. The high is predicted to be near 90.

Tonight, under mostly cloudy skies, there is a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms. The low will be be near 70 with southerly winds at 10-15 mph. Southlerly winds will increase on Tuesday to 10-20 mph.

Sunday's high was 16 degrees below the record high of 104 set for the date in 1964. This morning's low of 67 was 12 degrees above the record low set for this date in 1955.

STATE

Widespread thunderstorms prompted flash flood watches today for the southeastern part of North Texas and a large part of Southeast Texas and authorities said the rains had produced some street flooding.

The storms developed in very moist and unstable air that prevailed over southern and eastern parts of the Lone Star State.

Officials said 3.37 inches of rain fell in Nacogdoches in East Texas between 3 a.m. and 5 a.m. and city streets were reported flooded.

Skies were overcast in the Panhandle and East and South Texas. The National Weather Service said humidity levels were high almost statewide. Skies were generally fair in Central and West Texas.

Winds were generally from the south at about 10 mph statewide.

The weather service posted a flash flood watch for part of North Texas generally south of a line from Jefferson in Marion County to Centerville in Leon County. A flash flood watch was also effective for Southeast texas generally east of a Victoria to College Station line.

NWS officials said a few heavy thunderstorms developed this morning in the Eagle Lake and El Campo areas.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled across the South, West and the nation's midsection today, raising fears of flooding in sections of Texas and Louisiana and knocking out power to thousands in Tennessee.

Thunderstorms and showers stretched from southeastern North Carolina across South Carolina; from northern Alabama across the lower Mississippi Valley and the upper Texas Coast; across south central Texas; and from north central Kentucky across east central Missouri.

Showers and thundershowers also ranged across parts of New Mexico, Texas, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana and Utah.

Boston aborts Rockets for 16th title

By SAM GOLDAPER
N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — With Larry Bird at his best and with their capacity home-court crowd in a game-long frenzy, the Boston Celtics won their 16th National Basketball Association championship Sunday.

Bird was everywhere in the 114-97 rout of the Houston Rockets that gave the Celtics the four-of-seven-game series, four games to two. In playing all but two minutes, Bird was the pulse of the offense and was in the middle of the double- and triple-teaming defense that slowed the young Rockets, upset their rhythm and forced them into 11 first-quarter turnovers. In the final quarter, he even did the work of the officials, pulling down the tangled net before going to the free-throw line.

Named the most valuable player of the NBA finals, Bird finished with 29 points, 11 rebounds, 12 assists and 3 steals.

"Once the lights go out and play starts, the crowd has more effect on Larry than anyone I've ever seen," said Bill Fitch, the Rockets' coach, who coached Bird in his rookie season with the Celtics. "I've never seen him more intense than he was today. He and the Celtics played today as though they didn't want to take any prisoners."

AS THE Celtics were coasting to their 41st consecutive home-court victory this season, the crowd of 14,890, the 270th consecutive sellout at Boston Garden, made the 7-foot-4-inch Ralph Sampson their chief target.

"I guess it was a payback for his actions in Houston the other night," said the Celtics' Dennis Johnson, alluding to the punches Sampson threw at Jerry Sichting last Thursday night. "We listened to all the talk. We know how to respond to talk." The fight resulted in Sampson being ejected from Thursday's game, and the Rockets were inspired to win and force the series back to Boston.

During the warm-up drills Sunday and for the 38 minutes he played, Sampson was jeered by the crowd every time he touched the ball.

"I wouldn't describe Ralph's play today as being one of this better games," said Fitch of Sampson's 8 points and 10 rebounds. "I don't think he was affected by the controversy, but he is the only one to answer that."

Sampson quickly dismissed the harassment by the crowd and chose to talk about the Celtics' defense and the Rockets' future.

"Ability wins and they had the best team," said Sampson. "But I don't remember the last time I was hounded by a team more than I was today. Every time I touched the ball, there were two and three guys around me. And that went for Akeem, too."

THE SWARMING Celtic defense limited Akeem Olajuwon, the Rockets' center, to 19 points, the fewest he had in the series.

"Nothing that happened out there today was by accident," said K.C. Jones, the Celtics' coach. "Our defensive intensity was phenomenal. We contested every pass and every dribble. They were under constant pressure every time they touched the ball. We didn't do that in the other five games."

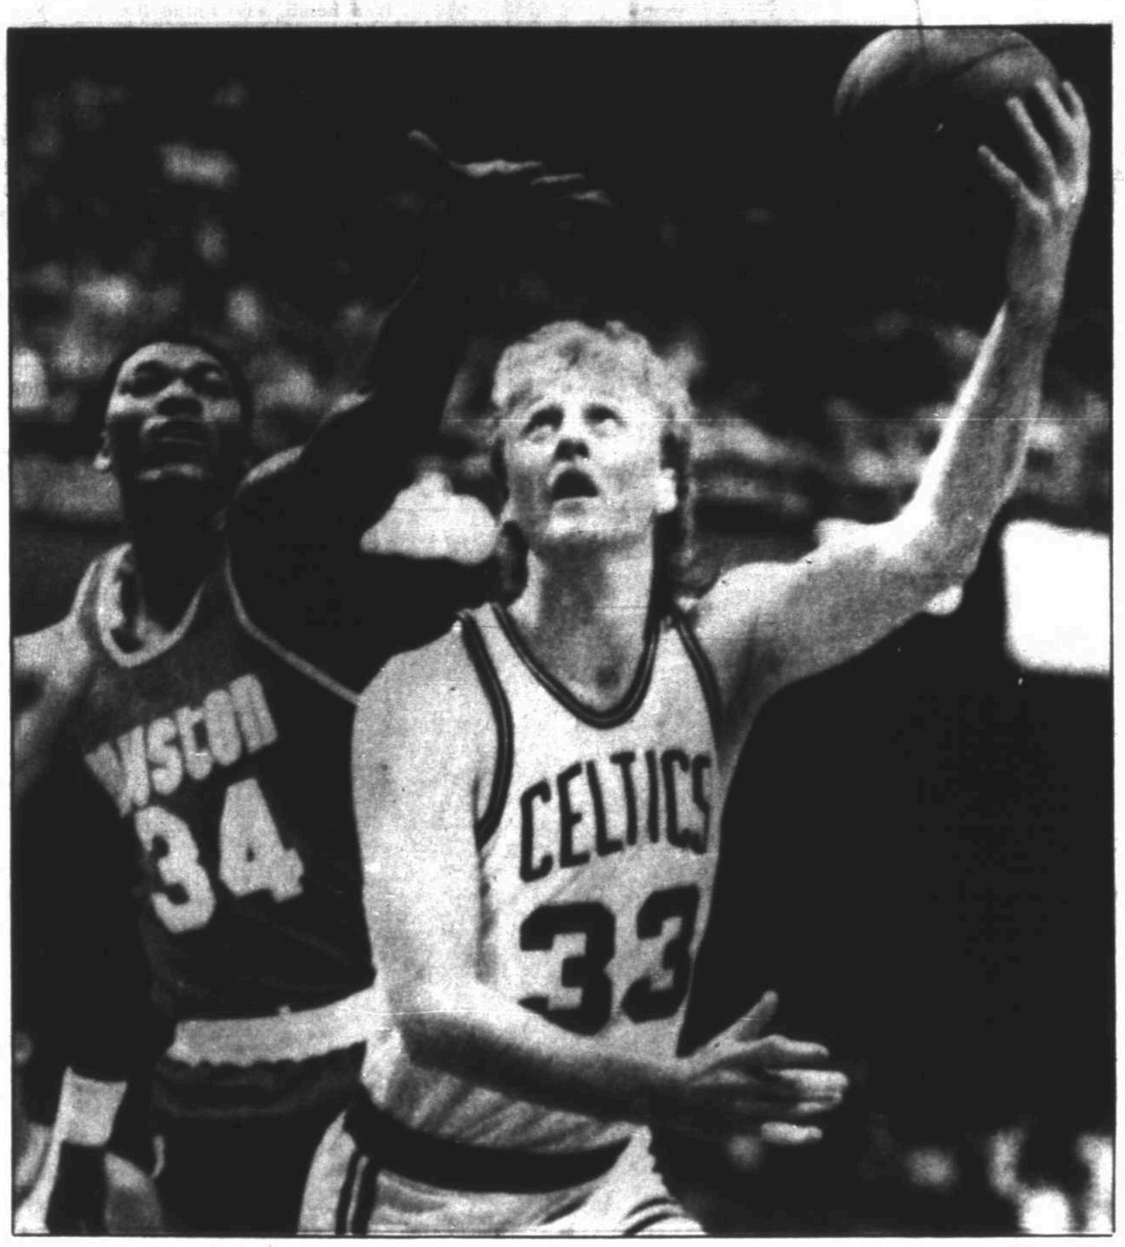

Sampson, who missed his first seven shots, did not get his first basket until 2 minutes 6 remained in the first half. He made 4 of 12 shots for the game and Olajuwon, who was averaging 20 field-goal attempts coming into the game, took 14 and made only 6.

With the exception a four-minute first-period comeback attempt, the Rockets never presented the Celtics with a serious challenge all afternoon.

Kevin McHale, who like Bird had 29 points, gave the Celtics a 4-0 advantage on a tip-in and a running bank shot. With the Rockets unable to handle the pressure defense, which produced five early steals, the Celtics expanded the lead to 20-9. The Rockets responded with a 12-2 spurt that threw a momentary scare into the Celtics. The Celtics, however, maintained their poise and led by 29-23 at the end of the quarter and then pulled away in the second period.

WITH BOSTON ahead by 55-38 at halftime, Dave Cowens, who played 10 seasons for the Celtics, noted: "The style of play is completely different. Their rebounding is relentless. They are dominating the boards and when a team is able to do that, they can do so many other things too help themselves."

Rod Thorn, the league's vice president of operations, said that he would announce Monday the amount of the fine against Sampson for the punches he threw in last Thursday's game. Thorn said Sampson there would be no suspension carrying over into the start of next season. ... With 2:20 left and Boston ahead by 106-84, Scott Wedman, who suffered two broken ribs in the last game of the four-game playoff of the Milwaukee Bucks, substituted for Bird. ... The Celtics were 15-3 in the playoffs and the Rockets were 13-7. ... The Celtics will share $505,000 in playoff money and the Rockets, $345,000.

FSU expels '85 champs

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The highlight of Doug Little's baseball career may allow his Florida State teammates to enjoy the highlight of theirs tonight in the College World Series.

Little, who struggled most of this season, was the winning pitcher Sunday as the top-ranked Seminoles beat rival Miami 4-3 to advance to the championship game of the Series.

Florida State, 61-12, will play No. 5 Arizona, 48-19, for the title at 7:10 p.m. CDT.

Little allowed five hits and two earned runs before issuing his first walk to start the ninth inning. Reliever Richie Lewis came on to earn the save.

"It's been a frustrating year," Little said. "I was a starter for three years, but this year everything went haywire. First I got the flu, then I changed my delivery, and I never caught up. But this is the highlight of my career."

The senior right-hander, who said he didn't expect to start a game in the College World Series, improved his record to 9-4.

"He pitched the game of his life tonight," Coach Mike Martin said. "That's what college athletics is all about."

All the scoring was done in the first four innings. No Miami player reached second base thereafter.

"The problem with Doug Little this year has been concentration, and I really grooved tonight," Little said.

Pimental finds a home

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The move by the Midland Angels to make Rafael Pimentel part of the starting pitching rotation is beginning to pay big dividends.

Pimentel pitched a nifty complete game, four-hitter at Angels Stadium Sunday night to pace the Angels to an 8-2 win over the San Antonio Dodgers, giving Midland a 2-1 lead in the six-game homestand with the Dodgers.

Pimentel is now 4-2 on the season and has won his last three starts, compiling a neat 1.69 ERA over that three-game span that started May 27 against Arkansas.

"It's no matter to me if I start or relieve," said Pimentel. "I feel better starting because I pitch every five days. I just do my job, but I would like more complete games like today."

It was a masterful performance against a team that has been hitting the ball well recently and it was welcomed by Angel manager Joe Maddon.

"Rafael pitched a wonderful game against a good hitting team and it's great to get the complete game every once in a while to give the bullpen a deserved rest," said Maddon. "This has to be a great thing for his confidence."

PIMENTEL retired 12 of the last 14 batters he faced, getting stronger as the quick 2 hour, 26 minute game progressed.

"I was using a fastball, slider and palm ball, but it was the fastball that was the best pitch," noted Pimentel.

Maddon added, "He did walk four batters, but he was staying ahead of the batters for the most part. His fastball has a riding effect and the San Antonio hitters were going for the high ones. That shows he had some movement."

San Antonio's Chris Gwynn touched Pimentel for a leadoff homer in the second inning and that proved to be the only earned run off the Angel hurler. The Dodgers scored an unearned run in the fourth without a base hit as Gwynn produced a wicket shot through the legs of James Randall at first and Dan Cataline hit one through the legs of third baseman Billie Merrifield to plate Chris Chapman, who had led off the inning with a walk.

Mike Ramsey got a Texas League single in the fifth to go with an infield hit by Mike Devereaux, but the Dodgers couldn't score. Gwynn got a single to left in the ninth for the only other San Antonio safety, but was erased on a double play.

"PIMENTEL has been getting us into the sixth inning every time out," said Maddon. "When we first used him as a starter because of injuries to our pitching staff, he was running out of gas after about 100 pitches because he came out of spring training as a short reliever. But now he is stretched out and it's showing.

"He came out after six innings in Beaumont because of a blister, but got the win. We gave him an extra day of rest and that helped, too."

And things were clicking offensively as the Angels appear to be coming out of the hitting doldrums with a 13-hit attack.

"That's four good games in a row with the bat," noted Maddon. "Starting when we went east to Tulsa, we've been in a prolonged batting slump. I saw signs of us coming out of it the last two games in Beaumont and now we're hitting like we are capable. Kevin King, Mike Madril and James Randall had the big hits for us today."

Randall doubled in a run in the fifth and hit a three-run homer, his eighth of the year, in the seventh to bust the game wide open. King gave the Angels a 3-2 lead in the fourth with a two-run triple in the fourth. Raul Tovar had three hits and Madril had two hits, including a double that led to the Angels' first run in the third. Only Merrifield (0-for-3) and Jeff Schaefer (0-for-4) took the collar.

San Antonio used four pitchers with starter Jeff Edwards, 2-4, taking the loss after the lefty gave up eight hits and five runs in 4⅔ innings of work.

Rockets surprise, disappoint

The Houston Rockets not only will go down as a championship series surprise but as a disappointment as well.

Contradictory, perhaps, but true. By winning two games against the seasoned Celtics, the young and, as it turned out, woefully immature Rockets did better than most expected. In fact, they already came into the finals having accomplished more than was expected of them by beating the world champion Lakers.

Disappointment? After their inspired play while shorthanded at the Summit Thursday night, although the fear was for the worst Sunday in Boston, the hope was for another super human effort.

AS IT turned out, there was no hint of creatures from another planet in the Rockets play Sunday. They were dreadfully mortal, so mortal that they played like they were scared to death, not so much of the Celtics, but of the Boston Garden crowd.

For that matter, the Celtics played like a team that feared the same crowd, too.

Boston fans can be extremely volatile and after what happened in Houston Thursday, one had to wonder how the Beantown fans would react to a Houston team as aggressive as the one seen on TV the game before. A slugging match in which most of the combatants clearly demonstrated why they are basketball players and not boxers was followed by a loosely officiated game in which anything seemed to go. Anything resembling a repeat could have resulted in an ugly scene.

THE CELTICS took command early and by midway in the second period the only question was whether Larry Bird would have any competition for MVP. They played like a team that had been promised by Coach K.C. Jones that they could go to the locker room if they wrapped it up early. And if K.C. promised, he kept it.

The post-game scene of the Celtics being devoured by an out-of-control crowd the last time they clinched the NBA title in Boston two years ago may have been all the incentive needed.

THE CELTICS are champs, but Houston's Twin Towers demonstrated their immaturity by their tendency toward violence throughout the playoffs, both Ralph Sampson and Olajuwon drawing the thumb in games.

With this pair, the Rockets have an enviable future, but only if Sampson and Olajuwon grow up. Both are super star players and will be baited by players seeking to lure them into foul trouble or stir them into retaliatory fisticuffs.

You can be sure that now that Ralph and Akeem have demonstrated they can be provoked into thoughtless reaction, it will not go unnoticed around the rest of the league.

Rangers now are Texas' Valentines

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

ARLINGTON — It was appropriate that the Texas Rangers used a music group called "Dire Straits" in the background for their radio promotions this season.

The Rangers know all about dire straits. They've been in them since they came to Arlington 14 years ago.

They desperately needed to recapture enthusiasm for major league baseball in the area.

Years of mismanagement and shoddy baseball a slow pitch industrial league team would find unpalatable have permeated the Arlington Stadium grounds.

FANS CAME because they liked to hear the crack of white ash on horsehide not because the Rangers every gave any indication they could ever master the art of hitting a 90-mile-an-hour fastball.

Fans came because it was fun to pay two bucks for a terrace ticket, drink a beer, eat a hot dog, and yell at an umpire on a warm, spring day.

Rangers' fans were stirred to boo on occasion, but they almost did it with an apology on their lips.

Now, look what Bobby Valentine hath wrought.

He's put an energetic, youthful, and hustling product on the field that rates at the top of the league in defense. They actually catch and throw the ball without fans cowering in the first base seats.

THEY are hitting more home runs than any previous Rangers' team and the starting pitching has overcome some rookie miscues to rate respectability.

The bullpen still gives Valentine nightmares but he's so hyper he wouldn't be sleeping anyway, trying to figure out a way his youngsters can get the edge on the rest of the American League West.

Nobody in baseball works harder than the 36-year-old Valentine, and 38-year-old general manager Tom Grieve, the young leopards of the major leagues.

Valentine and Grieve committed to youth in spring training and that's the course they are on even if they stay in the pennant chase until the very end. Both just received contract extensions until the late 1980s and they aren't in for any quick fix.

The long-suffering Ranger fans love what they've seen so far. Despite terrible weather, the Rangers are averaging over 20,000 fans per home game and that was before school was out. The Rangers are averaging 5,300 fans more per home game this season than they did in 1985.

Traditionally, June and July have been the big attendance months for the Rangers.

Texas, of course, has never won a division pennant. It finished three games back behind Billy Martin once but that's been the closest it has come.

Most fans really don't expect the Rangers to be battling for a flag in late September this time around even though they were leading the American League West as June began.

Lendl wins French Open

By ROGER M. WILLIAMS
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — Somebody finally figured out how to beat Mikael Pernfors before he ran away with the French Open.

Appropriately, it was the world's No. 1 player, Ivan Lendl, who found the secret: Hit hard and deep and don't make errors. With it, Lendl won his second French singles title, 6-3, 6-2, 6-4.

The match was tougher and more exciting than the scores indicate. The unseeded Pernfors covered the court like a sprinter and never stopped fighting. His spectacular recoveries, tactical surprises and gutty third-set comeback kept the crowd of 16,500 almost wholly on his side.

Down, 3-0, in the third after losing nine straight games, Pernfors showed flashes of the brilliant shot-making that had carried him past four seeded opponents. He won four consecutive games and nearly a fifth before Lendl reasserted himself.

Even then it was no easy matter. Pernfors kept going for his shots and making a fair number of them.

Nervousness played no part. Lendl's relentless drive simply wore down Pernfors. For the first time in two weeks of long, grinding matches, the 22-year-old Swede got tired.

"He ran me more than anybody has," Pernfors said. "And I had to play my best tennis to win a point. He is just too good."

For Lendl, the victory seemed more bitter than sweet. Like Chris Evert Lloyd after she won the women's title Saturday, he noted sarcastically — and inaccurately — how the dopesters had written him off before the tournament.

He also made the crowd seem more of an opponent than Pernfors. "They were against me since the warmup," he said. "It made me want to fight until I died just so I can win. I told myself, 'I want to win so badly just so you're upset for hating me from the beginning.' "

Pernfors started the match with a backhand dropshot. That was pure Pernfors, inspired and daring, and it showed Lendl that he was in for a different sort of afternoon.

Unfortunately for Pernfors, for two and a half sets his execution did not match his imagination. He could not counter Lendl's ability to work up an opening with a series of rocketing shots to the corners, and he usually found himself on the losing end of long rallies. When he did take the offensive, he tended to go for too much, out of the understandable concern of hitting less than a very good shot.

Pernfors also found that he had underestimated Lendl's backhand. "I wanted to use my forehand a lot more than I did," he said. "But when I hit to his backhand, he kept returning deep topspin shots to mine."

Being unaccustomed to double faults actually produced the service breaks that cost Pernfors, a two-time national collegiate champion at Georgia, the first set. Pernfors broke to start the second, and in an effort to hold that edge, made one of the tactical changes that help distinguish his style.

In the fourth game, Pernfors came to net more than he had in the previous 12 put together. But Lendl held his own in those exchanges and then lifted his own play sufficiently to run off the nine consecutive games.

Singles hitter goes beserk

Associated Press

Baltimore's Lee Lacy had already hit three home runs in six innings, and knew that one more would tie the major-league record.

"Number four was in the back of my mind," Lacy said after driving in six runs and leading the Orioles to an 18-9 rout over the New York Yankees Sunday. "But I tried to stay within myself. I do hit to all fields and if I can get a pitch that I can drive, fine. But I'm not a power hitter."

As it turned out, Lacy, who entered the game with two homers this season, hit a two-run single in the seventh inning and then flied out in the eighth.

Lacy went 4-for-6 and scored four times, highlighting a 22-hit attack in the longest nine-inning American League game ever — 4 hours, 16 minutes.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Brewers 7, Red Sox 3

Tim Leary pitched eight shutout innings before needing relief help and Ben Oglivie drove in three runs, leading Milwaukee over Boston.

Blue Jays 4, Tigers 2

Jesse Barfield hit a two-run homer and Tony Fernandez's RBI grounder broke an eighth-inning tie to back the relief pitching of Mark Eichhorn as Toronto beat Detroit.

Indians 11, Angels 4

Brook Jacoby homered twice and drove in four runs, Mel Hall hit a two-run homer and Joe Carter tripled to extend his hitting streak to 21 games as Cleveland routed California.

Andre Thornton went 4-for-4 with a walk and drove in two runs, including an RBI single during a five-run first inning.

Twins 5, Royals 2

Mark Portugal and Frank Pastore combined on a five-hitter and Randy Bush drove in two runs to lead Minnesota over Kansas City.

White Sox 8, A's 5

Greg Walker drove in three runs with a double and a single and Bobby Bonilla hit a two-run double as Chicago completed a four-game sweep against Oakland. The A's have lost five straight games.

Rangers 5, Mariners 4

Pete Incaviglia's third hit of the game, a bases-loaded single in the bottom of the 10th inning, gave the Texas Rangers their seventh consecutive victory.

The victory, combined with Kansas City's 5-2 loss to Minnesota, extended Texas' lead in the American League West to three games over the Royals.

Mitch Williams, 5-0, pitched the 10th to hand Seattle its fifth straight loss.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Expos 12, Phillies 0

Floyd Youmans pitched a one-hitter — an infield single by Glenn Wilson in the fourth inning — and hit a two-run homer to lead Montreal over Philadelphia.

Mets 4, Pirates 3

Kevin Mitchell homered and drove in three runs and Sid Fernandez combined with two relievers on a four-hitter as New York beat Pittsburgh.

Cubs 14, Cardinals 2

Keith Moreland hit a three-run homer, capping a nine-run explosion in the sixth inning that carried Chicago over St. Louis.

Astros 3, Dodgers 2

Mike Scott and Dave Smith combined on a five-hitter and Billy Hatcher went 4-for-5 with a homer to lead Houston over Los Angeles.

Mark Bailey's RBI single in the sixth inning broke a 1-1 tie against Fernando Valenzuela, 8-4.

Padres 4, Braves 1

Mark Thurmond pitched a three-hitter and drove in all four San Diego runs with a single and a double as the Padres defeated Atlanta.

Reds 7-1, Giants 3-3

Dave Parker homered, doubled and drove in three runs and Pete Rose's two-run triple keyed a three-run ninth inning that helped Cincinnati beat San Francisco in the first game of their doubeheader.

The Giants won the nightcap as consecutive suicide-squeeze bunts by pinch-hitter Mike Woodard and Robby Thompson broke a 1-1 tie in the eighth inning.

Junior Miller rediscovered

By MARJORIE LEWIS

IRVING (AP) — Coming out of the University of Nebraska, tight end Junior Miller was ready for big-time success in the National Football League.

He had spent years gearing up for professional football and when the opportunity arrived, Miller left few doubting he belonged.

Taken by the Atlanta Falcons in the first round of the 1980 draft — the seventh player overall — Miller promptly made his way to the Pro Bowl.

His encore was much the same, and Miller again was a Pro Bowl player.

In two professional seasons, he was the epitome of an impact player — 78 catches for 972 yards and 12 touchdowns.

"I was ready for that kind of success," said Miller, a 6-4, 244 pounder who signed a multi-year contract with the Dallas Cowboys last Friday. "And I wanted it."

Then Miller virtually disappeared.

There were 20 catches in 1982, but only one touchdown. In 1983, there were 16 catches and no touchdowns.

And by 1984, the Falcons' highly touted tight end was playing for the New Orleans Saints.

"Our quarterback, Steve Bartkowski, was used to passing to wide receivers and running backs, so when I first came in, he was kind of forced to go to me. But after a while, he went back to it — throwing to wide receivers and running backs," Miller said.

"A new coach came in (Dan Henning) and I was moved to H-back (in 1983)," he said. "And I still wasn't getting the ball thrown to me there either."

Discouraged with the turn in his career, Miller said he wanted out of Atlanta.

His request was granted in 1984 when he was traded to New Orleans, but not until after he had participated in the Falcons' training camp and exhibition season.

"It took me about eight weeks to learn the (Saints) offense and by the eighth game, I started getting more playing time," Miller said. "Early, they just used me in short-yardage situations."

Miller finished the season with eight catches, 81 yards, one touchdown, an attitude problem and a beer belly.

"I was always confident in my abilities, but when I got to New Orleans, I started drinking a lot of beer," Miller said. "I started to have problems and my weight was up to 265.

"All the team did was drink beer," he said, "but I didn't have to. It was my fault, really."

Miller had played out his option with the Saints in 1984. Last year, the Saints backed out of a contract offer shortly before the season opener.

Once again, Miller and his agent were shopping for a team. Only this time, they had no success.

"Everyone was cutting down," said agent Al Vacanti. "People would say that because he wasn't at camp, he didn't have time to get into condition. Some thought that he was washed up, but it was just the timing. It was terrible."

Miller missed the 1985 season, something he, in retrospect, considers the best thing that ever happened to him.

"Because I accepted the Lord and this last year I did a lot of public speaking, giving my testimony. It made me see the direction I want to take," Miller said.

"Everyone has emptiness we want to try to fill, and I tried sports. I tried alcohol. But when I came to a dead end, I asked the Lord to come into my life and the fulfillment was there."

After a year of working out at the Lincoln, Neb., YMCA and with the University of Nebraska football team, after a stint as a construction worker and after a year of public speaking, Miller has gotten another chance to play football.

"He's got the potential to be a great tight end. It's just a matter of him getting into shape," said Cowboys quarterback Danny White after working out with Miller.

Said Cowboys passing coordinator Paul Hackett: "I don't see him now as being the featured guy in our attack, because we have Doug Cosbie for that, but the natural skills are still there."

"The Lord has blessed me with a team I've wanted to play for since I was growing up in Midland," Miller said. "My whole situation has been a blessing all the way around."

Boston goes all out for Celtics—again

BOSTON (AP) — City officials planned a parade to mark the Celtics' triumph as Bostonians basked today in the glory of the team's 16th National Basketball Association championship title.

Mayor Raymond L. Flynn ran up a banner on City Hall Sunday proclaiming Boston the sports capital of the world. The city planned "Celtics Pride Day," for Tuesday, when the team will be treated to a parade for whipping the Houston Rockets 114-97 at the Boston Garden Sunday to win the best-of-7 final series 4 games to 2.

Flynn said he didn't bother to wager on the championship playoff series with Houston Mayor Kathryn J. Whitmore.

"The mayor of Houston is a friend of mine," said Flynn, a former basketball star at Providence College. "I didn't want to take advantage of a sure thing."

Thousands of jubilant fans lucky enough to possess the hottest ticket in the country streamed out of the Garden after the game to join hundreds of others who had huddled around televisions outside to watch the contest.

Fans wearing the Celtics green screamed, danced and high-fived each other until they were sore outside the Garden in an extended celebration that has become as much of a tradition as the Celtics winning.

"This is where it's at," said a beer-chugging Peter Fontaine, 33, of Needham, raising his voice to a scream to be heard over the chanting throngs. "This is why we spent 1,100 bucks a year to watch these clowns."

Fans crowded around the white, blue and black CBS-TV van, where a dozen bare-chested men led the crowd in cheers. Police tried to clear the streets with horses and motorcycles, but with little success.

Little violence was evident.

Dollar rebounds

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rebounded in Europe early today in volatile trading. Gold bullion prices edged up.

A few hours after European markets opened, the dollar was being quoted at modestly higher levels against all major investment currencies.

Traders reported strong demand for the dollar, and one described the market as "very hectic and nervous." They attributed the demand partly to covering of short positions taken before the weekend. A short position occurs when a trader has sold borrowed dollars in the expectation of a decline in the currency before he must buy dollars to repay the debt.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Friday:

—2.231 West German marks, up from 2.2257

—1.8405 Swiss francs, up from 1.8387

—7.1055 French francs, up from 7.10

—2.5117 Dutch guilders, up from 2.51

—1,532.25 Italian lire, up from 1,526.50

—1.39505 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3937

The British pound fell to $1.5055 from $1.5065.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell for a fifth straight session, closing at 167.40 Japanese yen, down from 167.75 yen. Later, in London, the dollar edged back up to 167.80 yen.

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $341.85 a troy ounce, up from $341.50 late Friday.

In Zurich, the metal was bid at $341.80, up from $341.50.

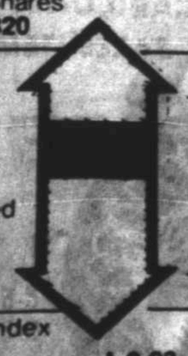

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold closed at a bid of $342.21, up from $341.88 Saturday.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $5.16 an ounce, unchanged from late Friday.

Senate considering legislation to help oil industry

Sen. Gramm's proposal should be aired in committee this summer

Hearst News Service

BEAUMONT — Texas Republican Sen. Phil Gramm is attempting to nudge through Senate committees a bill to erase the last smudges of oil and gas regulation while brightening the books of energy companies and their banks.

Gramm introduced the "Oil and Gas Deregulation and Incentive Act of 1986" in March to help states hard hit by falling oil prices. It includes some new proposals, but much of the bill is an amalgam of other pending or proposed legislation dealing with banking, energy and taxes.

The Finance Committee, to which Gramm's bill was referred, has asked for but has not yet received executive comment from the Reagan administration's Office of Management and Budget and the secretaries of Treasury and Energy. Hearings have not been scheduled, but the senator has a commitment that his bill will be aired in committee this summer.

Gramm's friendship with some oil producers in Texas and other oil states has been strained because of his refusal to support an oil import fee or tax that most, but not all, producers claim would boost prices to make domestic exploration and production at least marginally profitable.

Issues covered in Gramm's bill already have sparked skirmishes on both sides of the aisle in both houses of Congress. But Gramm hopes his broad-based legislation can avert the North-South bickering that has characterized debate over a proposed oil import fee.

"AS EARLY AS December when people began to feel the pinch across the board through Texas the senator began to feel this might not be a glitch in the futures market but rather a long-term trend," said Larry Neal, press secretary to Gramm. "The bottom line is that (if the bill is approved) a bank somewhere doesn't shut down and a debtor in the Oil Patch can hang on a little while longer than he might have."

The Gramm legislation would give breathing space to banks and debtors in Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and other energy-producing states. If, however, home-state banks fail to recoup financial strength, Gramm's bill would allow for out-of-state banks to step in and fill the capital breach.

Energy portions of Gramm's bill embrace President Reagan's war on remnants of former President Carter's energy policy, repealing both the 1978 regulation of natural gas prices and the 1978 ban on new gas-fired power plants.

The bill maintains tax write-offs of intangible drilling costs, percentage depletion of oil and gas reserves and the use of the alternative minimum tax by drillers. Those tax breaks were retained in the House-passed tax reform bill after extensive lobbying by oil state members and also are in the Senate tax reform measure which will be deabted on the floor next week. Windfall profits taxes on domestic production of crude oil would be stricken from the tax code by Gramm's bill, another policy change advocated by the administration and other members of Congress.

ALSO, TO benefit producers, Gramm's legislation asks for a sense-of-the-Congress resolution urging states to suspend certain conservation laws that require drillers to permanently plug wells they have temporarily capped.

On the banking side of domestic energy problems, the bill would write into law current federal regulatory lenience toward troubled-but-viable energy banks, and would permit interstate buy outs of those banks doomed to fail. With Reagan sponsoring natural gas deregulation, with federal banking regulators already applying most of the banking provisions, and Senate Finance Chairman Robert Packwood, R-Ore., retaining most drilling tax breaks in his version of tax overhaul, Gramm can claim broad support for his sweeping bill.

Energy Secretary John Herrington estimates natural gas deregulation would bring large supplies of low-cost natural gas onto the market. By eliminating distinctions between "old" and "new" gas and allowing utilities to build gas-fired plants again, Herrington has said the U.S. could cut oil imports by 6 percent, achieve annual savings of up to $5 billion on natural gas imports, and cut as much as $3.8 billion from the trade deficit.

THURSDAY, THE Federal Energy Regulatory Commission backed in principal the administration's call for full decontrol of natural gas.

No progress reported in phone talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Striking workers at American Telephone & Telegraph Co. planned rallies in several cities today as both sides reported little progress in discussions with a federal mediator, but called the talks a positive development in the nine-day walkout.

The Communications Workers of America held rallies in a number of cities Sunday and planned demonstrations in other cities today to press their demands, said Francine Zucker, a spokeswoman for the union.

Zucker said a sticking point in the negotiations has been a cost-of-living increase for the 155,000 workers. She said the clause has been in dispute in every contract the union has negotiated, "and we're not about to lose it in this one."

AT&T spokesman Herb Linnen said the company is unwilling to negotiate a cost-of-living increase in the proposed three-year contract.

"We have told the union since February that we could not negotiate a contract with a cost-of-living adjustment in it," he said, adding that the 8 percent wage increase proposal was made by the company without considering any adjustments for inflation.

Negotiators for the two sides met separately with Kay McMurray, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, on Sunday in an effort to end the strike.

"The fact this is happening is good, but we have nothing to report on the details," Zucker said. "We continue to talk ... It's moving forward."

Linnen said while "there is an exchange going on, I wouldn't want to characterize it as progress beyond that they are talking, which is better than not talking."

Linnen said AT&T was providing "good service" despite the strike, by hiring 3,000 temporary workers last week for operator-assisted calls and rehiring 200 retired management workers over the weekend.

Halliburton Services employee Wynona Crowson welcomes buyers to the company's 26th annual surplus equipment auction at Duncan, Ok., scheduled for June 13-14.

Halliburton sets annual surplus sale

DUNCAN, Okla. — Care to visit what may be the world's biggest garage sale, which draws prospective buyers from as far away as Europe and Latin America? The event is Halliburton Service's surplus equipment sale, now in its 26th year, set for June 13 and 14.

There are no slightly worn toys or chipped dishes among the wares on sale; the action is in large diesel engines, hundreds of cars, pickups and large trucks and tanks, and miscellaneous equipment.

Halliburton Services, an international technical oil field service organization based in Duncan, anticipates that this year's auction will be a multi-million dollar affair. This time, an estimated 1,500 serious buyers are expected; interpreting is provided for foreign visitors.

If the equipment could talk, much of it could tell interesting tales of being involved with wildcat wells in the Gulf of Mexico and helping drill five-mile deep holes in the Permian Basin.

The two-day, no minimum, no reservations auction, which is preceded by one day for inspection of the goods, has become a welcome boost for the economy of this southwestern Oklahoma community of 25,000 people.

The visitors jam Duncan's motels and restaurants and do a significant amount of retail shopping while waiting for the auctioneer's chant. Some of the buyers have to stay in Lawton and Ardmore, Okla., and Wichita Falls, Tex.

Analyst says gas prices continue rise

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices, fueled by an increase in consumption, rose for the sixth straight week but remained 24 cents a gallon cheaper than in January, an oil industry analyst says.

The overall, average price of gasoline nationwide jumped 1.54 cents a gallon to 97.08 cents in the two-week period ending Sunday, said Dan Lundberg, who surveys 17,000 gasoline stations in 50 states biweekly for his Lundberg Letter.

Lundberg said a decrease in consumption in the first four months of the year put the financial pinch on the wholesale and retail gasoline industry.

"Earlier this year consumption had fallen quite seriously, but then there was a turnaround in marketplace," Lundberg said. "Because of the drop in volume overall revenue was way down."

The average retail price for all grades of gasoline, including taxes, bottomed at 89.96 cents a gallon April 25, a decline of 31.49 cents since Jan. 1, he said. Since then, the average price per gallon has risen 7.12 cents.

In the current survey, self-serve leaded regular went for 84.75 cents a gallon, unleaded regular was 90.65 cents a gallon and unleaded premium cost $1.0407 a gallon.

Lundberg said the low price of gasoline and the fear of vacationing abroad because of terrorism have spurred auto travel and the overall consumption of gasoline.

He forecast an increase in gasoline prices of at least a few more cents by summer's end, even though a barrel of crude oil on the futures market dropped below $13 a barrel Friday.

"That news amounts to a possible harbinger to the resumption of collapsing crude oil prices," said Lundberg. "But gasoline has a life of its own, not directly responsive to the futures market."

Company tells how to start a business

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Peter Poremski squinted at the street outside his store, offering his philosophy of what it takes to be an independent businessman.

"You've got to have initiative and like a lot of freedom, the freedom to be wrong sometimes," he said.

Dispensing such advice comes naturally to the jovial Poremski. It's also his business.

Poremski owns a retail franchise of Entrepreneur Start-A-Business, a 5-year-old company that sells how-to manuals on small businesses both by mail and through franchise shops.

The company has manuals on 265 different businesses, ranging from flame-broiled chicken restaurants and water gondola rides to, until recently, adult bookstores and motels, said Kevin Harrington, a spokesman for the Los Angeles-based company.

The company has expanded its retail operation to 26 major cities in 17 states across the country this year, he said.

Changes in the way big businesses are run, economic shifts and the good old-fashioned entrepreneurial "fire in the belly" are prompting people to strike out on their own, said Poremski, 45.

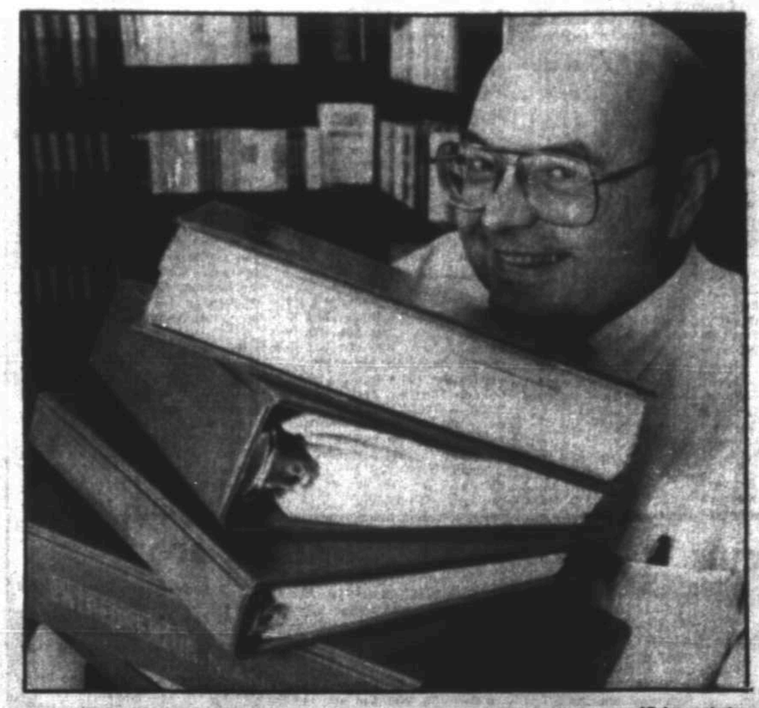

"There's a big move toward shrinking management, people are losing their manufacturing jobs, others haven't got promotions or have been told they'll get 3 percent raises for the next five years — those are people coming to us," he said.

"I'm one of the baby boomers that ran into a middle management dead end," said Poremski, who graduated with a master's degree in business administration from the University of Chicago in 1969 and worked for several companies before becoming his own boss.

The company's best-selling manual is for maid service, Poremski said.

"For that, some people think all you need is a scrub brush, a broom and two magnetic signs to advertise on the side of your car, but my manual tells the business part," he said.

The most recent U.S. Census Bureau statistics say 600,000 new businesses were formed and more than 30,000 failed in 1983. Poremski says his manuals help put new businesses on good footing.

Peter Poremski holds a few of the 265 how-to manuals for starting your own company.

The manuals provide step-by-step instructions, including market research, startup costs, potential profits, location, what facilities and inventory are needed and where they can be purchased for what price.

The guides range from $22.50 to $75 and contain from 60 to 200 pages. They explain what skills are needed among personnel and how to go about advertising, accounting, paying taxes and obtaining licences.

The manual for the flame-broiled chicken restaurant includes pictures of a kitchen and dining room, says startup costs will average about $35,000 and tells the fledgling businessman the average profit before taxes will be about $75,000 annually if the business succeeds, Poremski said.

The manual for water gondola rides projects net income of about $35,000 with a one-hour cruise run by 20 employees, charging about $40 per couple. Profits can double in fair weather climates, the manual says.

The company stopped printing start-up guides for adult book stores and motels earlier this year after a "negative response from the market," Harrington said. "In certain cases, it was not in good taste in the long-term."

Also on the book shelves at the shop is a three-volume "Entrepreneurs Institute," a $307 set that includes tips on financing a business and more detailed advice on bookkeeping, advertising, personnel and legal responsibilities.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Rosewood to invest in oil blending facility

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A Texas company has agreed to back Republic Resources Corp.'s $7 million investment in a planned facility to blend oil for major companies, it has been announced.

The joint venture between Republic, of Oklahoma City, and Rosewood Resources Inc. was formed to participate in the independent lubricant blending and packaging facility in Houston.

According to the agreement, Republic will assigned its one-third interest in the plant to the new partnership, called RepWood. Rosewood will provide $7 million for Republic's share in the facility.

The original partnership, called Lubripack, involved Republic, Texaco Inc. and GATX Corp. of Chicago.

"The RepWood venture is being formed to provide significant financial stability and flexibility to what was originally Republic's share of the Lubripac partnership," said James D. Lee, Republic president.

Lee said ground was broken on the Lubripac facility in Galena Park, Texas, last week, adding that the plant should be in operation by March 1987.

Lubripac will be a 75 million gallon-a-year plant to blend, package and store oil blended products. The plant will take raw petroleum materials and blend them to a customer's specifications.

Layoffs, pay cuts on Houston city agenda

HOUSTON (AP) — The city handed 770 of 21,000 its employees pink slips in an effort to save $12 million a year, but a number of political and administrative moves have city workers guessing whether they'll really lose their jobs by the end of the month.

The Houston City Council next week begins a debate over a plan to cut the pay of all city employees by 3 percent. Meanwhile, the administration reported more than 300 people could be recycled into other city jobs.

Those given dismissal letters Thursday were principally employed in the Solid Waste, Library, Park and Recreation, and Health and Human Services departments.

Mayor Kathy Whitmire has proposed the layoffs as well as new and increased fees and reduced city services in her $1.27 billion budget for the fiscal year that begins July 1.

The largest number of layoffs — 192 full-time and 16 part-time workers — were in the Health and Human Services Department. Most come from the weed-cutting, janitorial and grounds-keeping sections.

Turner cutting debt, holding on to film library

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In a move to reduce his company's huge debt, cable TV entrepreneur Ted Turner has agreed to sell all of MGM Entertainment Co. but its film library in deals worth $490 million.

The deals come only two and a half months after Atlanta-based Turner Broadcasting System bought MGM-UA Entertainment Co. for $1.5 billion in cash and notes, then immediately sold its United Artists subsidiary for $470 million cash to Las Vegas, Nev., financier Kirk Kerkorian.

Kerkorian, who was the majority shareholder in the old MGM-UA, also is the biggest purchaser in the agreements announced Friday.

European travel sees early signs of recovery

NEW YORK (AP) — Airlines and travel agents, hurt by a sharp decline in vacations to Europe due to American fear of terrorism, say they are starting to see a turnaround because of aggressive security precautions and giveaways.

But the industries say it's too early to tell whether they can salvage the summer.

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined broadly today, retreating from last week's record high in the Dow Jones industrial average.

Dow Jones's average of 30 blue chips fell 15.74 to 1,870.16 in the first hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 2 to 1 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Among actively traded blue chips, International Business Machines dropped 1⅛ to 148¾; Eastman Kodak ⅝ to 61½, and American Telephone & Telegraph ¼ to 24¾.

Saga Corp. rose 2 to 39⅝. Marriott Corp. said Saga, which had opposed a $34-a-share takeover bid from Marriott, agreed to a sweetened offer of $39.50.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks lost .95 to 140.03. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .58 at 279.96.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 6.46 to 1,885.90, topping the record closing high of 1,882.35 set on May 29.

But declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 4 on the NYSE. Big Board volume totaled 110.91 million shares, against 110.92 million in the previous session.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Research divisions of brokers sometimes issue warrant reports

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Can you tell me of any publication that gives complete information about warrants and units, including their expiration dates and exercise prices? I see them listed in newspaper stock tables but hesitate to buy them, as I don't know when they expire.

A. To the best of my knowledge, there is no publication devoted exclusively to the information you're looking for.

Doyle

The research departments of some brokerage firms occasionally put out reports on warrants and units, sometimes with extensive lists. You can contact a number of brokerages and ask what's available. Just be forewarned that many firms send their research reports only to established customers.

Detailed information about warrants and units is provided in the thick Standard & Poor's and Moody's manuals, which you'll find in some large public libraries. You'll have to look up each company with those securities and dig out the information.

Before you put any money on the line, you should do a hard study on each warrant and/or unit. More often than not, they are straight speculations — a polite word for gambling.

A warrant is a certificate giving you the right to purchase some other security — usually the common stock of the company that issued the warrant — at a specified "exercise" price.

This is where you have to do your homework. The provisions on warrants vary all over the lot. With some, the exercise price remains constant. With others, that price increases in steps at specified dates. Although some warrants are perpetual and remain effective forever, most expire after certain dates.

When a warrant expires, it becomes worthless. Warrants receive no dividends and have no vote in corporate affairs. Their chief appeal is that they trade at prices lower than their "underlying" stocks and they can move up — or down — by larger percentage amounts. A relatively small stake put into warrants can result in a big profit — or a total loss.

Units are best described as "packages" of securities. A company might issued a unit consisting of a warrant and a share of common stock, preferred stock, a bond or a debenture.

After the unit is sold, it might be traded in the marketplace as a unit. Or the unit might be separated into two parts, with the warrant and the other security each available alone.

All these details are set at the time each warrant or unit is issued. If you're bound and determined to take a flier, I urge you to get guidance from an experienced broker who specializes in warrants and units.

Q. Where can I get a complete list of all utility stocks, with information about the dividends they pay and the months those dividends are paid.

A. Virtually any big brokerage firm can provide a research report of that type. Some might not list each and every utility stock, but they'll give you a comprehensive run-down on most utility stocks. "Full service" brokerage firms, those which make recommendations to customers, also have "buy, sell and hold" lists.

Q. I'm 25 years old and am thinking of buying stock in a company that is expected to have massive growth in the years to come. However, the per share price is considerably high. Could this be a good investment? If so how do stockholders make money on such high prices?

A. Stockholders can come out ahead in one of two ways. If that stock's price goes higher, they can sell at a profit. If that "massive growth" takes place, the company's earnings should skyrocket and investors who keep their stock should receive higher dividends.

Note the two "ifs." Assuming both pan out, that stock most certainly should be a good investment. But you can never be certain "expected" massive growth will materialize. There's always some risk in any stocks.

The high per share price shouldn't deter you, if you're convinced of the company's prospects. One share of a $100 stock is often a better buy than 100 shares of a cat or dog stock trading at $1.

Inadvertent remarks can send Wall Street scurrying for cover

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — An inadvertent remark or a remark misinterpreted can shiver the timbers of Wall Street these days and throw confusion into what had been an orderly market.

Wall Street has the jitters. Like a sentry on night duty for the first time, the least little sound makes portfolio managers jump. In jumping, some of them pull the trigger, inviting the same exaggerated reaction from others.

In fact, cynics claim, the sound these days of a Federal Reserve officer or an important Congressman clearing his throat while speaking about taxes or monetary policy can be measured on Wall Street's quivering needle.

Paul Volcker learned that all over again last week when his remarks on Wednesday indicated to some Wall Streeters that monetary policy might stiffen, while his remarks on Thursday suggested that it wasn't necessarily so.

The stock market fell after his first speech, to the International Monetary Conference meeting in Boston. It rose after his second set of statements, these to the House subcommittee on Domestic Monetary Policy the next day.

In neither situation, Vocker indicated, was it his intent to telegraph a message to anyone. No matter, many millions of dollars changed hands in bursts of trading by portfolio managers looking from hell to heaven for omens.

At least three reasons for this state of mind and body can be selected as being significant.

First, Wall Streeters are nervous because some of their successful young practitioners have been charged with misuse of information for personal gain. That, and the knowledge among Wall Streeters that such misuse is not uncommon.

In fact, in a business where the pursuit of riches is the constant and sometimes only goal, information is money. And sometimes the pursuit of information-money takes Wall Streeters into some of the dark alleys of finance.

The most lucrative information of all is inside information — that is, good, factual material that has not yet been disclosed to the public but soon will be. It is, however, illegal to benefit from it.

The safest information — from a legal viewpoint — is research information obtained by hard work and long hours. This information is usually analytical rather than factual, and it isn't so easily redeemable for big, quick profits.

The lines get fuzzed, and temptation makes them more so. After a while it is sometimes difficult to tell what's legal and what isn't. And so there exists the threat that information used yesterday might mean legal charges tomorrow.

Jitters are also being caused by the unknowns about taxes and monetary policy, and until the tax debate is resolved and a bill passed the uncertainty will cling like a mist, clouding the portfolio manager's view of the future.

And they are being caused by the very height of the market, which makes the possibility of a fall a terrifying thing. It's one thing to hear the shout of "fire" when you're on the ground, another when you're up in the scaffolding.

In some ways the atmosphere on Wall Street is similar to that at the airport gates. In each place there are things you just don't talk about, even in jest, because you have no idea at all how others will take it.

Could stock market take drop of 100 points without chaos?

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Consider for a moment, if you will, the possibility of some future day when the stock market takes a drop of 100 points in the Dow Jones industrial average.

A nasty thought, you might well reply, and shame on anyone who even raises the subject in a family newspaper. Financial disasters shouldn't be spoken of lightly.

But some responsible analysts on Wall Street have mentioned just such a possibility lately. And what is even more noteworthy, they say the market and the investing public could stand a good chance of weathering the experience without much lasting damage.

A 100-point drop in the Dow would certainly be unprecedented. The largest point loss on record is 41.91 points, on April 30 of this year.

But if the decline occurred from, say, 1,850 to 1,750, it would represent a loss of "only" 5.4 percent. That would be nowhere close to the 12.9 percent and 11.7 percent drops that occurred on consecutive days in the Great Crash of October 1929.

In modern times, there have also been larger drops that occurred in the long-term context of bull markets — though there is no denying that they seemed plenty scary while they were happening.

On Sept. 26, 1955, the Dow fell 6.5 percent (31.89 points), and on May 28, 1962, it dropped 5.7 percent (34.95 points).

What skews the comparisons between then and now, of course, is the fact that the average is much higher today, thanks to its rise of some 1,100 points over the last four years.

In mid-March of this year, the Dow gained almost 93 points in a week. Three weeks later it fell 82.50, again in a calendar week. Over the last eight sessions of May, it ran up 118 points.

In that kind of environment, a single-day move up or down of 100 points looks a lot less implausible than it might have a few years ago.

There is another mathematical factor that increases the likelihood of such a development — the continuing shrinkage of the divisor used by Dow Jones to calculate its average.

If the Dow were a pure average, it would be calculated by adding up the prices of its 30 components and then dividing the sum by 30. But to maintain continuity, the divisor must be adjusted whenever changes occur such as a substitution of one company for another in the list, or simply a split of one of the component stocks.

Recently, the divisor passed a milestone of note when it dropped below one, to 0.953 and then 0.929. As Barron's magazine alertly observed, "the divisor for the DJIA became a multiplier."

Now that it is less than one, a move of one point up or down by an individual stock translates into a gain or loss of more than a point in the average. The lower the divisor goes, the greater the changes the average will show for identical movements in actual stock prices.

To produce a 100-point gain or drop in the Dow today, each of its components need only rise or fall a little more than three points.

If and when a 100-point day comes to Wall Street, it will surely create a great stir. Its psychological impact would be powerful. But in strictly statistical terms, it might not be as momentous an event as the emotions surrounding it would suggest.

Economy hurting shoe business

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP) — Lack of bank credit, high production costs and low sales are strangling shoe manufacturing industry and shoe-making may die off altogether in Mexico if nothing is done to save it, a business leader has warned.

Cesareo Escobedo, president of the Chamber of Shoe Manufacturing Industries, told a news conference Saturday that 31 small shoe-making plants have had to close down since the beginning of the year, laying off 2,500 skilled workers.

BILL

Policy letters already have been sent to federally-insured banks temporarily easing rules on capital required to back up loan risks and rules for renegotiating troubled energy and agricultural loans. The FDIC, Comptroller of the Currency and Federal Reserve Board all have backed those provisions and put them into their bank examiners' policy guides. "The regulators have done all these things, and that's water under the dam," reported FDIC congressional liaison Graham Northup.

Interstate banking changes may prove more controversial. Under current federal law, a bank can only reach across state lines to acquire other banks when those banks have already failed. The Gramm legislation would allow federal bank regulators to consider such interstate acquisitions before the target bank fails.

"The interstate provisions were more or less simultaneously developed by ourselves and some associate of Sen. Gramm's," Northup said. "We found ourselves essentially in agreement." He also expects support for the interstate banking change from Rep. Fernand St. Germain, the Rhode Island Democrat who chairs the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, and from Sen. Jake Garn, the Utah Republican who chairs the Senate Banking Committee.

GARN, AT THE request of the administration, earlier offered new legislation easing restrictions on interstate banking, similar to Gramm's, following closely the recommendations of federal banking regulators.

Marty Clayton, an aide to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, a member of the Finance Committee, said interstate banking legislation "is very much in limbo. There is no real hard proposal out there to look at. I don't think either one of those (interstate banking bills) is going to go exactly as written."

Rep. Steve Bartlett, a Dallas Republican and the only Texan on the House Banking Committee, said, "On balance, it's a good bill that would help preserve jobs in Texas. Personally, I don't like the idea of having a back door to interstate banking; I would rather do it out-front and rationally. I think we ought to limit intrastate acquisitions once (New York money center banks or other suitors) get in here."

Bartlett intends to limit the ability of out-of-state banks to expand once they get a foot in Texas banking's door, and he also wants to gird self-sufficient banks to compete with new peers from out-of-state.

Building permits show increase in May

From Staff Reports

The city of Midland issued a total of 98 permits valued at $3.6 million during the month of May. This is a 24 percent increase over the $2.8 million in permits issued during April, even though the city issued 178 permits last month.

Among the month's permits were 10 for new residences and two for new commercial structures, including a $1.8 million permit for Sam's Wholesale Club.

BROADcasting bread upon the waters

Danny Spinks of Kelview Heights Baptist Church runs an audio board to record a Sunday service. Video and cassette tapes are later sold to congregation members and stored in the church's library.

Many viewers seeking entertainment on Sunday mornings are frustrated as they switch from sermons to evangelical talks show back to sermons.

However, televised sermons and evangelical talk shows are serious business to the local churches that hire personnel and use funds to produce the programs.

Televised sermons have two purposes, says James Nance, minister of music at First Baptist Church, 2104 West Louisiana.

"The very first reason is so that church members who cannot attend in person can view the service.

"The more important reason is we believe that we have the solution and the answer to most of the world's problems and even specific problems through Jesus Christ," Nance said.

First Baptist spends about $40,000 per year to broadcast live sermons from 11 a.m. to noon Sundays on KMID-Channel 2, Nance said, because, "We believe we have good news that people are looking for."

However, Russ Ritchel, minister at First Presbyterian, says his church's radio service broadcast at 11 a.m. to noon on KCRS-AM550 is not intended to be "any kind of evangelistic thing." The radio services, broadcast since 1950, are mostly for the "shut-in folks," Ritchel said.

First Baptist ran a simulcast radio service that was canceled last year. "Why do both when everybody has a television?" Nance said. The church has been televising services since 1959.

But, Ritchel says radio is a better medium than television to transmit services.

"TV is geared to something other than worship services. It's so highly programmed and there is so much action in it that a church worship service cannot compete. Worship makes dull TV," Ritchel said.

Radio is also less expensive than television, with churches paying between $105 to $111 per hour compared to the about $400 per hour cost for TV time.

Ritchel says he prefers radio because television cameras can begin to dominate services.

"My experience is that TV cameras begin to dominate your worship services. They certainly take away a lot of your spontaneity and freedom," he said.

However, Nance says television is the medium many people are turning to for answers, whether it be the "Crosby Show" or a Sunday morning service.

"We feel that people who are walking around as questions marks are looking for exclamation marks...and we as churches feel like we have the answers to life's problems and the pursuit of happiness," Nance said.

In the 27-county viewing area of KMID, the First Baptist Church services were watched by 16,000 households in February out of a potential of 179,000 households, the station's ad department reported. Since only blocks of time, not individual shows, are surveyed at most radio stations, audience numbers were unavailable for the radio services.

Broadcasts on radio and television are just one facet of "outreach" programs and missionary causes, Nance said. The programs, he continued, are also a form of publicity for a church.

Some churches that do not choose to rent air time instead record their services, such as the Kelview Heights Baptist Church. Kelview records services to sell to congregation members and to store in the church's library.

Verbal battle shaping up between Barrera, Mattox

By MICHAEL HOLMES

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox and his Republican challenger, San Antonio Judge Roy Barrera Jr., weren't mincing words on the first day of their general election campaigns.

Barrera said voters need to bring integrity to the attorney general's office, and Mattox said Barrera doesn't know what he's talking about.

"The issues in the fall campaign are going to concern the record of Mr. Mattox, his weakness as a leader, the loss of confidence and respect in and for the office as a direct result of his conduct," Barrera said.

Mattox said his office has "broken virtually all performance records" and that Barrera wasn't qualified to replace him.

"If the Republicans had nominated Roy Barrera Sr., I would have been concerned about it. He's a very well-qualified lawyer ... But this is Junior they nominated. He's just not his daddy," Mattox said.

"Here's a man who wants to be the attorney general of Texas and they're still calling him 'Little Roy.' He's never had anything to do with consumer protection, environment, oil and gas, all the many kinds of cases we handle," he added.

Barrera easily defeated former Williamson County district attorney Ed Walsh in Saturday's runoff.

That victory makes him one of two candidates in a position to become the first Hispanic elected to statewide office. The second is Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez, an appointee of Gov. Mark White who won the Democratic nomination Saturday over former state Rep. Jay Gibson of Odessa.

Barrera received 102,352 votes, or 68.44 percent, to easily top Walsh's 47,184 votes, or 31.55 percent.

Walsh, who switched parties last year, was the prosecutor who sent confessed serial killer Henry Lee Lucas to death row.

Texas Republicans also settled three other runoffs.

— David Davidson, a former Gonzales preacher, will be the lieutenant governor nominee, having defeated Aaron Bullock of Kingwood. Davidson received 88,888 votes, or 69.6 percent, to Bullock's 38,842, or 30.4 percent.

Davidson faces a formidable task in challenging Democrat Bill Hobby, lieutenant governor since 1973, but said he is ready.

"I really think it's time. 1986 is a year of change, and I want to be there and be part of that change. I think in '86 the Republican Party will start becoming dominant in the state of Texas," Davidson said.

— M.D. Anderson Jr., a contractor and Seven Points dance hall operator, received 79,180 votes, or 63.1 percent, to become the GOP nominee for land commissioner.

He defeated Tyler high school teacher Grady Yarbrough, who got 46,310 votes, or 36.9 percent.

— State Rep. Milton Fox of Katy, a petroleum engineer, will be the GOP nominee for the railroad commission, which regulates the oil and gas industry.

Fox won 71,325 votes, or 56.01 percent, to defeat perennial candidate John Thomas Henderson, who got 56,016, or 43.98 percent.

Fox faces state Sen. John Sharp of Victoria, who won the Democratic nomination by breezing past Dallas oil and gas consultant P.S. "Sam" Ervin.

Sharp said he was pleased by the Republicans' choice.

"Milton Fox is the person I wanted to run against the whole time. Ed Emmett (defeated in the primary) had the ability to raise money and had party support. (Fox) has almost no support and a lackluster legislative career," Sharp said.

Fox was unphased by the criticism.

"I hope he sleeps on it," he said. "I think he'd be interested to see the Democratic officeholders who will be working to help me. Mr. Sharp and his well-paid professional staff can dream on as far as I'm concerned."

Sharp received 348,421 votes, or 79.8 percent, to overwhelm Ervin, who tallied 88,227, or 20.2 percent.

Seven persons win nominations in Permian Basin area runoffs

From Staff Reports

A total of seven persons won party nominations during runoffs in Saturday elections held in area counties.

In Andrews County, Democrat Calvin Shortes defeated Sandra Smylie for the Justice of the Peace, Precinct 4, Place 2, nomination, 570-403.

In the Crane County Judge race, Charles Blue won the party's nomination by defeating M.E. Stovall, 893-784.

Also in Crane County, Democrat Dan Blue won the County Commissioner, Precinct 4, nomination by defeating Howard Tarpley, 256-202.

In Dawson County, Democrat Glen R. White narrowly won the nomination for county judge, defeating Gerry Brown 898-808.

In Upton County, Jack Carr defeated E.T. Barrandey, 300-177, for the Democratic Party nomination for County Commissioner, Precinct 3. In the race for the party's nomination for County Commissioner, Precinct 4, Eugene Kelton defeated Willie M Martinez, 315-196.

Also, Darlene Hearon easily won the nomination for Justice of the Peace, Precinct 2, defeating Genevieve Titsworth, 901-102.

DEATHS

Mari L. Tidmore

Tidmore

Mari Lisabeth Tidmore, 87, of Midland died at her home Friday evening.

Services will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday at the First United Methodist Church with the Rev. J.B. Stewart officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Tidmore was born Sept. 10, 1898, at Mt. Pleasant, where she was reared. She married Dave Tidmore in 1915 in Mt. Pleasant. They moved to Albany and then to Midland in 1937.

She served as a volunteer for the Big Spring State Hospital and Meals on Wheels. She was an active member of the First United Methodist Church and a member of the Valley View Home Demonstration Club.

She was preceded in death by her husband in 1967.

Survivors include two sons, Max Tidmore of Lubbock and Jim Tidmore of Pipe Creek; four daughters, Mrs. W.G. ODESSA — Loy A. Walters, 69, of Odessa died Sunday in an Odessa hospital.

Services were to be at 2 p.m. today at Holy Redeemer Catholic Church in Odessa with Father Peter Volker officiating. Graveside services will be at 3 p.m. Tuesday at Mount Carmel Cemetery in El Paso.

He was born Sept. 26, 1916, in Trickham. He married Maria Orozco Oct. 3, 1942, in El Paso. He lived in Odessa for 29 years and was retired from Shell Oil Company after 17 years. He retired as a "No. 1 operator."

Walters was a World War II veteran and was a Baptist.

Survivors include his wife; three sons, Loy (Sonny) Walters Jr., and Martin Walters, both of Odessa, and Jerry Walters of Austin; two daughters, Myrtle Erwin of Midland and Patricia Walters of Odessa; one sister, Myrtle Callaway of Monahans; and five grandchildren.

Chester A. Churchill

SAN ANGELO — Chester Alton (Chet) Churchill, 82, of San Angelo died Sunday at a San Angelo hospital.

Services will be at 3 p.m. Tuesday in Johnson's Funeral Home Chapel in San Angelo with the Rev. James Andrews, associate pastor of First Baptist Church of San Angelo, officiating. Graveside services will be at 5 p.m. Tuesday at the Foster Cemetery in Sterling City.

Churchill, born May 5, 1904, in Boca, had been a resident of San Angelo for the past eight years. He was a former resident of Sterling City and a previous long-time resident of Midland. A retired real estate agent, he had, at one time, also been a professional musician. He played for 25 years with the Lion's Club Orchestra of Midland.

He married the former Audra Brewster on March 23, 1935, in Sweetwater. He was a member of the First Baptist Church of San Angelo.

Survivors include his wife and several nieces and nephews.

Chester V. Medders

WINK — Chester Virgil Medders, 58, of Wink died Friday at his home.

Graveside services will be at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Kermit Cemetery with the Rev. Bill Campbell officiating. Services are under the direction of Cooper Funeral Chapel of Wink.

Medders was born June 5, 1928. He was a retired toolpusher for Noble Drilling Co. He had been a resident of Winkler County for more than 20 years.

Survivors include four daughters, Sherry Hampton of Spring, Dora Smith of Enid, Okla., Deborah Lima and Mary Dawson, both of Midland; one brother, Lonnie Medders of Midland; and six grandchildren.

W.H. 'Bill' Gilmore

Pallbearers were to be Billy Bradly, Cecil Williams, Willie Ross, Joe Betterton, Marty Holt, Don Wallace, Tony Wayne and Randy Norman.

Tyler Perry

Tyler Perry of Midland died at his home on Sunday.

Services are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

Ettlinger, UT professor emeritus, dies at 96

AUSTIN (AP) — Dr. Hyman Ettlinger, professor emeritus of mathematics at the University of Texas and a former coach and football referee, died Sunday at the age of 96.

A native of St. Louis, Ettlinger taught at UT from 1913 until his retirement in 1968. He had been chairman of the mathematics department for 25 years and was named professor emeritus in 1969.

Survivors include his wife.

Texas town reviving after six decades

NEVADA (AP) — Almost six decades after a tornado and the Depression sucked the life out of this once-thriving Texas cotton community, a move is afoot to resurrect the town government.

Twenty-six registered voters in this town of 250 people have petitioned for a new government. And this week, the Collin County Commissioners Court is expected to call an Aug. 9 election to set up the first government the community 30 miles northeast of Dallas has had in about 50 years.

Nevada began slipping into a deep coma on May 9, 1927, when a tornado whipped through the town killing 23 people, destroying development around the town square and leveling half the community's homes.

Another 60 people were injured in the disaster.

Six years later, the economic woes of the Depression forced the community's last bank to move to Farmersville. Businesses closed. Town leaders resigned. People moved away and the one-time boom town became just a farm-to-market junction on a rural road.

In the 1920's, 750 people lived in this town that had exploded to life at a railroad station in 1891 and grew rapidly around the cotton industry.

Today, that population has dwindled to 250, and the only structures are two gas station-markets, a post office, two churches and about 100 homes.

George Webb, a 66-year-old retired farmer who saw the last mayor step down, is one of 26 registered voters that signed a petition pushing for the election.

"We decided we want to control our destiny rather than have someone else in control," said Webb, a local church deacon, landowner and former school board member. "We'd at least like to have something to say about it, raise a fuss at least."

The town of Wylie, about five miles to the southwest, has pushed recently to annex land around Lake Lavon, just outside Nevada.

With no town council, Nevada can't do anything about the growth, but with a city government it could create a buffer and plan its own development. This spring, two town meetings have been held to discuss growth in and around the town.

The community does not have to re-incorporate because the vote to dis-incorporate in the 1930's didn't follow state voting regulations, officials said.

So the charter of incorporation stands, and the only task left for the town is to elect government officials.

Dallas hospital will continue abortions

DALLAS (AP) — Presbyterian Hospital officials say they will continue their policy of providing abortions despite protests from 2,000 demonstrators who formed a prayer chain around the hospital.

The Sunday demonstration by the Human Prayer Chain for Life was the latest protest of anti-abortionists against Presbyterian Hospital.

Distributor reports theft of beer; House fire, dog poisonings noted

From Staff Reports

About $222 worth of beer was taken from a distributor this weekend, according to reports from the sheriff's department.

Permian Distributing, West Highway 80, reported that 21 cases of beer were taken from an opened boxcar between 6 p.m. Saturday and 6:10 p.m. Sunday at the business located on #1 Coors Road.

In other law enforcement reports, a smoldering fire was reported by Paula Terrell, 1305 South Atlanta, at her home. According to fire department reports, the fire started after a candle next to a hole in the wall ignited a stud.

Police Roundup

Three Doberman pinscher dogs worth $600 were reported poisoned by a suspect driving through an alley and throwing poison-laced balls of meat into their pen, according to the Sheriff's Department. Debbie Fisher, Rt. 6, Box 400, Space #232, told sheriff's officers that she saw a man driving a brown and tan GMC truck in an alley behind the trailers between 1 p.m. to 5:15 p.m. Friday. The dogs were taken to a vet before the poison could take effect, according to reports.

Jury selection set to begin today in Odessa sexual assault case

From Staff Reports

Jury selection is scheduled to get under way in 244th District Court Tuesday morning for the trial of a 31-year-old man accused of kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault of a 13-year-old Odessa girl in July 1985.

William Mitchell Dyer is alleged to have kidnapped the girl in the early evening hours of July 13 as she waited for a ride in front of Water Wonderland, raping and sexually abusing her as he drove from Midland to Andrews County and back into Ector County. The girl was later released in Gardendale.

Based on a description of the man and the vehicle he was driving provided by the girl, the Ector and Midland county sheriff's offices initiated a search for the man.

Dyer was arrested nearly two weeks later after the girl saw the man in a local television station promotional ad that included employees of an oilfield service company located a short distance from Water Wonderland.

Dyer, who had been living at a Highway 80 mobile home park at the time of his arrest, reportedly has been living in Paris, Texas since he was freed on bond.

Widow believes two men killed husband

DENVER (AP) — The widow of a southwest Colorado man slain in a bizarre extortion plot says she believes at least two men were involved in the slaying, the Denver Post reported.

Tracy Dabney, the 19-year-old widow of Kenneth Ray Dabney, 19, said in a telephone interview with the newspaper that the FBI "hasn't closed the case and is looking for a second suspect."

Larry Ray Porter, 24, who once lived in Creede, is being held without bond in Austin, Texas, awaiting extradition to Colorado to face first degree murder and extortion charges in the death of Kenneth Dabney.

Mrs. Dabney said she doesn't believe Porter, who is smaller than her husband, "could have subdued Kenny by himself."

Mrs. Dabney said her husband was stabbed in the abdomen and chest, and that his throat had been cut. An autopsy showed that he bled to death.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday in Monte Vista.

Don't Blame Your Age For Poor Hearing.

Chicago, Ill.—A free offer of special interest to those who hear but do not understand words has been announced by Beltone. A non-operating model of the smallest hearing aid Beltone has ever developed will be given absolutely free to anyone requesting it.

It's yours for the asking, so send for it now. It is not a real hearing aid, but it will show you how tiny hearing help can be. The actual aid weighs less than an eighth of an ounce, and it fits completely into the ear canal.

These models are free, so we suggest you write for yours now. Again, there is no cost, and certainly no obligation. Although a hearing aid may not help everyone, more and more people with hearing losses are being helped. For your free sample write today to: Department 00000, Beltone Electronics Corporation, 4201 West Victoria Street, Chicago, IL 60646.

Amy Grant rocks out without losing Christian commitment

ENTERTAINMENT

By TODD EVERETT
Hearst News Service

In 1983, Amy Grant's sixth album, "Age to Age," became the first in the field of what's called "Contemporary Christian" music to sell more than a half million copies. In doing so, Grant quickly became pop music's token Christian.

Coverage in major magazines and newspapers came, as did guest stints on national television including talk shows and such variety programs as last year's Patti Labelle special. Grant now is one of the most popular performers in any field of music. Her most recent album, "Unguarded," has sold more than a million copies, only half of them through Christian bookstores.

Currently on a national tour that will run through August, Grant and her 10-piece band are attracting audiences that are more than just church youth groups arriving in chartered buses. Her appeal seems to be pretty universal, and it's easy to understand why. Her band's synthesizers are as loud as Toto's, and their guitars' volume right up there with Kenny Loggins. However deep her spiritual commitment may be, it doesn't stop her from rocking.

Ms. Grant is deeply committed; she and her band pray before each concert and hold Sunday church services in their hotel rooms. She was raised in the Church of Christ and is the daughter of educated, well-to-do parents; her father is a Nashville physician. That family background helps explain her role as a stereotype-buster.

"I think that when many people think of religion they think of the cultural experience: small towns in Texas, beehive hairdos and no makeup for the women and powder blue suits for the men. There were not a lot of religious trappings in (my parents') life, just the reality that what we believe in affects the way that we are. I think my parents sheltered me from the cultural experience, so that I wouldn't get turned off.

"I DIDN'T grow up going to Christian schools, or anything like that. My parents felt that their belief is life and death for them; that it's the marrow of their bones. And that it would be ridiculous of them to think that my three older sisters and I would have to learn religion at school. We'd learn it from them, because it was the passion of their lives.

"My parents never forced Christianity on me. And they were right. But when I went into high school, I talked to my mom and dad and told them, 'Hey, I want in my life what you guys have in yours.' "

At about the same time, Ms. Grant was learning to play acoustic guitar, and singing songs by John Denver, James Taylor and Carole King. Her move to religious music was, she says, so natural as to be almost accidental.

"I just wanted to round out my repertoire of experience. I had songs about falling in love that other people had written, but I also had this whole new experience of being a Christian: the whole spiritual realm, what it meant to my self-esteem, the vulnerability that it brought into my life. Nobody I had heard was writing songs about that."

A demonstration tape of songs that she had written was heard by "a friend who went to my church, who took it to an old college roommate of his who was looking for new acts for (the gospel-oriented label) Word Records. They called me and asked me to do a record."

SHE WAS 15 at the time, and the album — "Amy Grant" — became an immediate best-seller in its field, as did two subsequent studio albums and two culled from concert performances. Each was selling in the range of 200,000 copies, which is better than most pop albums released today.

"I was a little awkward with the situation for several years. I felt that I wasn't ready. I was still in school, studying English literature at Vanderbilt University, and psychologically was still very much of a schoolgirl. And then slowly, as I was nearing the end of my college years, I noticed that my audiences were getting bigger. At that point, I started thinking about making music my career. A few months before the end of my senior year, I released 'Age to Age,' and that was the first album that really catapulted in sales. It was right at the end of college and all of a sudden I was free to pursue music. The doors were truly open."

Surprisingly, given her celebrity, Ms. Grant hasn't been asked to take an official stand regarding labeling records for lyrical content.

"Nobody's talking about censorship, they're just talking about having songs with explicit lyrics identified on the cover. Personally, I don't see anything wrong with that: I think that when they're talking about explicit lyrics, they aren't talking about love songs, they're talking about things that 99 percent of the American people wouldn't like talked about to their 8-year-old kid."

As to her own current tastes, Ms. Grant says that she's been favorably impressed by concerts by Bruce Springsteen, Kenny Loggins, Tina Turner and Billy Joel.

Networks miffed over Liberty coverage

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — When the refurbished Statue of Liberty is unveiled July 3, she'll be pretty as a picture. But the latest battle among the networks involves who gets to take some of those pictures.

"We're celebrating a statue that personifies freedom, yet the freedom of the press is being abridged," said Jane Maxwell, CNN's director of special events. "All we want is access to the public officials who are at this event of national importance and national interest. We object to the news event being packaged, tied up in a ribbon and sold."

The dispute centers on what parts of Liberty Weekend, the 100th birthday celebration for the Statue of Liberty, are exclusive to ABC because of its $10 million payment to the organizers of the event and what parts are legitimate news that should be open to equal coverage opportunity for all.

Roone Arledge, president of ABC News, said the extravaganza is part spectacle and part genuine news. CBS, NBC and Cable News Network want more of the news than they're getting.

Lloyd Siegel, NBC News' executive producer of special broadcasts, said NBC only wants "access to public officials doing public acts...We're not trying to grab hold of the entertainment portions."

Last week, the Washington bureau chiefs of CBS, NBC and CNN sent a letter to White House spokesman Larry Speakes. One request was access to the July 3 opening ceremony remarks of Interior Secretary Donald Hodel and Lee Iacocca, chairman of the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation. Speakes said Thursday that "as much as possible should be open to all media."

In the July 3 prime-time ceremonies, Hodel and Iacocca will introduce President Reagan just before he speaks and unveils the renovated statue. ABC is sharing the feed of the president's speech and the unveiling with the other networks.

Jonas Halperin, director of news information for Liberty Weekend, said the remarks by Hodel and Iacocca were not news and thus restricted from TV, except for ABC.

"This has become such a brouhaha," said Halperin. "It's really semantics. What they're talking about is three or four minutes out of a 2½-hour opening ceremony."

Last year, David L. Wolper, chairman and executive producer of Liberty Weekend, invited bids from the three major networks. ABC outbid NBC, and CBS did not make a bid. For its $10 million rights fee and $4 million in production costs, ABC will have 17½ hours of coverage over five days beginning July 2.

Most of the events are pure entertainment, such as separate salutes from the Boston Pops, the New York Philharmonic and skaters Peggy Fleming, Dorothy Hamill and other sports stars. ABC's rival networks don't dispute ABC's exclusivity for these made-for-TV events, just the news stories.

"I think these are things that can be worked out," said NBC's Siegel. He noted that Wolper's organization relaxed restrictions on another weekend event — the induction of new citizens at Ellis Island being sworn in by Chief Justice Warren Burger.

Tuesday, June 10, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: It is time to rethink your priorities. A period of contemplation helps you find a way to make your personal life as successful as your professional career. You could decide to change schools or your occupation. Take the time to develop a meaningful relationship with a new romantic partner. A series of short-term liaisons cannot match the fulfillment a lasting alliance could bring. Be careful not to mistake glitter for real gold.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Judy Garland, Virginia's Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Sr., "Gone With the Wind's" Hattie McDaniel, Prince Philip, attorney F. Lee Bailey, quarterback Dan Fouts, author and artist Maurice Sendak.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Greater diplomacy will help you make new gains in business and romance. An older person is your strongest ally. Travel or messages from far-flung places are featured. Shoppers find great bargains.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your willingness to lend a helping hand brings both financial reward and personal fulfillment. A close relationship thrives with careful nurturing. Evening is a great time for a small get-together.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A period of reflection produces a good decision and inner peace. Your co-workers look to you for leadership. Do not let them down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Hard-to-find items become easier to purchase, and at attractive prices. A meddlesome individual could try to interfere in your domestic affairs. Stand firm; refuse to let outsiders disrupt family life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Phone calls and messages give new meaning to your efforts. Better financial planning will result in big savings. A courtship gets off to a flying start.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An overly aggressive approach could cause strife. Avoid individuals who like to gossip. Spend time with people who share your values. Your best rapport is with someone of your own sex.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Exercise more caution than usual in your financial and real estate dealings. Your timing could be off. Consult experts. A change in social plans is upsetting, but you could meet an attractive newcomer.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Business could slow down today. Use the lull to do some long-term planning. Mate or partner has some excellent suggestions to offer. Be open to new ideas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An excellent day for signing contracts and agreements. Legal matters are likely to be settled in your favor. You are practiced at getting your own way. Share the limelight with loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Curb your temper today. Taking a walk or breaking with your regular routine will put you in good humor. Come to terms with your weaknesses. Spend a quiet evening at home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A great day for making a fresh start! Replace bad habits with good ones. You get support for a pet project that was rejected earlier. Evening provides a happy romantic surprise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A special project receives new support today. Teamwork boosts profits. A flirtation could cause trouble unless you are more discreet. Protect your reputation. Do nothing to jeopardize an older person's trust in you.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K982 ♡9 ◇AQ85 ♣8762
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ◇	?

What action do you take?
A.—The adventurous among you who play negative doubles would probably wheel out your new weapon. However, we prefer to try to penalize the opponents. So, if we were using the negative double we would pass and hope that partner would reopen with a double. If we were not employing that convention, we would double for penalties—we have excellent prospects of developing four or five tricks in our own hand.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ65 ♡85 ◇AJ63 ♣952
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ◇	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Thus far, you have done little to tell partner how strong you are and what excellent support you have for his first-bid suit. Partner has bid his hand to show a 3-4-5-1 distribution, so we would jump to six diamonds. We would be very surprised if it depended on more than a finesse.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ72 ♡Q9842 ◇A ♣A107
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	1 ♠
Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You can make a good argument for a leap to four spades, but partner can have a pretty weak hand for his balancing bid in this position. You know he is short in hearts yet he did not have the strength for a takeout double. Under the circumstances, we would start with a cue-bid of two hearts and then raise spades at our next turn.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK98 ♡J73 ◇AJ5 ♣J105
The first three players all pass. What is your opening bid?
A.—Since partner could not open the bidding, we would give up all thoughts of game and concentrate on finding the best partial. Therefore, even if we were playing five-card majors we would open this hand with one spade, intending to pass any response by partner.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK ♡AJ65 ◇83 ♣KQJ65
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You must show your great strength, and ?clever? bidders might choose a false jump shift to two spades. However, to jump in a non-suit that is higher-ranking than the suit in which you want to play is fraught with danger. Our choice would be a leap to four hearts.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable. As South you hold:
♠7 ♡A1084 ◇KJ73 ♣K983
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Dble	3 ♠	?

What do you bid now?
A.—We feel your hand is too strong for a jump to four hearts. Our choice would be a cue-bid of three spades, which not only tells partner you are strong but conveys the information that you are prepared to play in at least two of the unbid suits.

American musicians to skip Soviet music festival because of accident

DETROIT (AP) — Two musicians invited to compete in this week's Tchaikovsky Festival in Moscow have decided to skip the prestigious competition because of fears about the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

Pianist Laura Kargul of Ann Arbor said she decided Saturday not to participate, four days after singer Edith Diggory of Detroit withdrew.

Ms. Kargul had planned to fly Sunday from Toronto to Moscow for the five-week international musical competition.

But she said during a telephone interview she changed her plans after receiving conflicting reports about radiation levels in Moscow, 500 miles from the Chernobyl nuclear plant, which caught fire April 26, sprewing radiation thousands of miles.

The accident has killed 26 people, two in the initial blast and 24 who succumbed to the effects of heavy radiation, said Dr. Robert Gale, a University of California at Los Angeles bone marrow specialist who has gone to the Soviet Union to treat victims of the accident. All who were seriously exposed were within about 20 miles of the plant, Gale said.

"I haven't received enough information to make a decision that it's safe to go," Ms. Kargul said. "Sources at the State Department are saying that it's not safe to go, although the official line is that it's safe."

Ms. Kargul, citing Dutch media reports that food being sold in Moscow is highly contaminated, said Soviet officials would not let her bring her own food and water into that country.

Ms. Kargul, who is single, and Mrs. Diggory, married and mother of a 2-year-old son, said they feared exposure to radiation would impair their ability to bear healthy children.

Both women are 30 years old and will not qualify for the 1990 quadrennial competition, which is limited to persons 32 and under.

Ms. Kargul, a suburban Detroit native who earned a doctorate in music from the University of Michigan, said she had trained more than a year for the competition and was invited to the event in mid-April.

Mrs. Diggory, a soprano, said she decided June 3 not to travel to the Soviet Union after talking to her doctor about potential long-term effects of radiation exposure. She said her doctor told not to go if she wanted to have more children.

"It appears that (radiation) is significantly more dangerous than I was previously led to believe," Mrs. Diggory said.

Joan Rivers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Fans of Joan Rivers stood in line for more than two hours to have copies of her autobiography "Enter Talking" signed by the barbed-witted star.

The book, No. 4 on The New York Times best-seller list, is dedicated to NBC Tonight Show host Johnny Carson who, she wrote, "made it all happen."

Published reports say the two haven't been on speaking terms since May 6, when she announced she'll be hostess of a live talk show, in competition with Carson, on the Fox Broadcasting Network.

She got a bit of stage fright before the Saturday book-signing session, held at the Doubleday Book Shop, wailing to a reporter, "Nobody will be there."

But fans turned out, lining up from the sidewalk, through the store and up a spiral staircase, atop which Rivers scribbled steadily and made small talk. About 350 people paid $17.95 a copy for the book.

Prince Philip

LONDON (AP) — Prince Philip, husband of Queen Elizabeth II, turns 65 Tuesday but has no intention of drawing his pension, Buckingham Palace said.

The prince has paid state social security contributions since retiring from the Royal Navy in 1953, but will not consider drawing his pension until he is at least 70, a palace official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Sunday.

Philip, who is the Duke of Edinburgh, is a vigorous, outspoken man who plays a prominent role in promoting British industry and high technology.

John Derek

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — John Derek, the actor-turned-producer who is married to actress Bo Derek, has left the hospital a week after suffering a mild heart attack.

Derek left Santa Barbara Cottage Hospital on Sunday, said a nursing supervisor, who refused to give her name.

Derek, 59, appeared in such films as "Knock on Any Door," "All the King's Men" and "Exodus." Among his productions was the movie "10," which starred his wife.

The Dereks live on a 32-acre ranch near Santa Barbara.

Nancy Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan went on stage for a quick dance with singer Paul Anka to the surprise of a benefit audience at historic Ford's Theater.

Anka, singing his theme song "Put Your Head on My Shoulder," took the first lady by the hand Sunday after stepping down from the stage and passing along the front row where she and President Reagan were seated.

It was the fifth time the Reagans have attended the annual black-tie gala held to raise money for the theater, where President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated in 1865. The theater is operated as a playhouse and museum.

Frankie Hewitt, executive producer of the Ford's Theater Society, said the event brought in more than $527,000.

NEW YORK (AP) — Three new members have been elected to fill vacancies in the Pulitzer Prize Board created by retirements.

The board voted on the appointments at its April 14 meeting, Columbia University President Michael I. Sovern said Sunday.

The new members, announced Sunday, are Meg Greenfield, editorial page editor of The Washington Post and a Pulitzer winner in 1978 for editorial writing; Robert C. Maynard, editor and publisher of The Tribune in Oakland, Calif., and Burl Osborne, president and editor of The Dallas Morning News.

The Pulitzer Prize Board consists of 15 elected members, three of whom need not be journalists — the president of Columbia; the dean of the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism; and the administrator of the Pulitzer Prizes, who is the secretary of the board.

Older workers thrive as workers in fast-food world

Copley News Service

Joyce Tomshack and Gini Von Willer have come to expect the question: Don't you mind working with all those kids?

The answer is: No, they don't mind; they even like it.

Tomshack and Von Willer are among a growing number of fast-food workers on the far side of 50. As the range of fast foods has broadened in the past few years from hamburgers and fries to salads, tacos, baked potatoes and soup, so has the age range of those dishing it out.

It has been happening gradually, and the ratio of old to young is still fairly low, but people in the fast-food business say that in years to come they will be getting away from perky teens in cute caps and hiring more people like Tomshack and Von Willer.

One reason older employees are appearing in fast-food chains is that there are fewer young people to draw upon, and many of them eschew jobs in food service and other entry-level slots.

But it's more than that. Older employees are willing to work part-time and more likely to stay in a job. They are not moving on to schools or starting professions or trying other parts of the country.

Naugles, which specializes in Mexican foods in its 233 restaurants, has been a leader in the movement, making an effort almost from its start 17 years ago to hire older people. Beginning around 1962, Naugles has had a specific program called "Higher and Hire" to recruit older people and the handicapped.

ANOTHER CHAIN that has begun to hire more older people is Carl's Jr.

Paul Mitchell, vice president of corporate affairs for Carl's Jr, said he doesn't know how many employees are currently over 50, but that changing demographics is only part of the reason for the company's move toward older employees.

"Older people are younger than they used to be," he said. "And we've been so pleased with the ones we have that we are making an effort to hire more. For example, we post ads in senior citizens centers."

Probably the oldest Carl's Jr. employee in San Diego is Bill Shoppelry, 72, who goes to work at 7 a.m. each weekday.

After retiring from a marketing career, Shoppelry moved to San Diego from Los Angeles to be near a brother. With no work, he was "exceedingly bored."

"I thought I would really like to have a paying job. I had tried to get one a few times, but I guess most places thought I was too old. They don't say, 'You're too old,' but it's a case of 'Don't call us, we'll call you,' and they never call."

Then he saw a help-wanted sign outside the Carl's Jr. restaurant. "I was hesitant — I didn't really want another rejection," he said. But he gave it a try.

CNS Graphic

That was in August; he was hired to work the breakfast shift — 7 to 11 a.m. — beginning in September, when youngsters would start returning to school. Later he expanded his hours to 2:30 each day five days a week — and he thrives on it.

"MY BROTHER, who's a lot younger than I am, was rather amused by it all, and wasn't sure I could overcome a 50-year gap, but I do calisthenics and walk a lot. In fact, I don't feel I'm the age I am — it's hard for me to believe it. I don't think I'm as fast as some of these kids — they can really tear around — but they don't make me feel slow."

Shoppelry, whose fellow workers' average age is around 20, suspects his best asset — and, perhaps, a factor in his hiring — is his ability to relate to the older retired people who come in, particularly at breakfast time.

"Older people will say, 'Gee, I wish I could work.' It's good for them to see me working. People who have accomplished a lot in their lives never want to give up."

One of Shoppelry's co-workers is 62-year-old Christine Covington, who makes potato salad and tends to customers and the salad bar. She comes to work at 10:30 a.m. and is there until afternoon, when the high-school students come in for after-school snacks.

The food game is nothing new for Covington, who began working as a waitress when she was 15 in Mobile, Ala., and has worked as a food service manager in hospitals, taught cooking in community colleges and to inmates in honor camps and put in three years as a restaurant owner.

After selling the restaurant and trying to stay home, she decided retirement was a bore and went to work for Carl's Jr.

Over at Naugles, Tomshack, 59, works the grill.

Tomshack had been jobless for a couple of years when she and her husband moved to San Diego, and she found it hard to get back into the work force. Naugles was her chance.

Although most of the employees in the shop are much younger, she said, "I just don't think of age, and so neither do they."

FOR VON MILLER, who went to work at Naugles as a cashier seven years ago when she was 57, it is a first job. She is a smiling, easygoing woman who spent her adult years keeping house and raising five children.

Many older, retired people prefer to work part time, which is a plus in the fast-food business. Von Willer, for example, works the busy 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. lunch shift.

Older workers start at minimum wage and get raises with job advances. Most, however, aren't bucking for management jobs. Tomshack, for example, turned down a job with more responsibility, preferring to stay as she is. For some, Social Security is a factor. Working full time would bring in enough to cut down their payments.

Retirement no longer men-only issue

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Retirement advice for women has come a long way since the time "when the central characters of all the retirement booklets were men and the women were pictured crocheting," said Henry M. Wallfesh, president of Retirement Advisors Inc. in Manhattan, one of the largest retirement planning companies.

"Up until the late 1960s, the whole field was very male oriented," he added. "But right now, the issue of women and retirement is the hottest topic in the field of older-worker relations."

Rapidly growing numbers of working women in an aging society are sparking a transformation of the retirement planning field, which those in the industry have estimated to be a $50-million-to-$75-million-a-year business.

"Increasingly planners are focusing on the specialized needs of women," said Helen Dennis, president of the International Society of Retirement Planners, the 11-year-old professional organization.

In a year, the group has doubled to to 600 members in 42 states, according to a past president, Clare B. Corbett of the Harvard University Center for Training and Development.

Two of the most important retirement issues for women are financial security during their longer life and preparing for the possibility of being alone, since 70 percent of women 75 and older are widowed.

"Planners are beginning to target these issues with women in midlife instead of waiting until their late 50's or 60's," said Mrs. Dennis of the Andrus Gerontology Center at the University of Southern California.

THOSE OFFERING retirement advice to women include the American Association of Retired Persons, corporate employee-assistance personnel, career counselors, educators and social workers.

Wallfesh said, "Financial planners are using the issue of retirement as an inducement to get women into the tent — to sell them something."

"Brokerage firms, banks and insurance companies, anyone in the financial services field is interested," said S. Randolph Gretz, vice president in charge of emerging investor products and services for Merrill Lynch Consumer Markets in Princeton, N.J. "Women are a very important market now, unto themselves, beyond the traditional stereotypes of the past."

Although these efforts are raising many women's awareness about retirement preparation, studies have shown that traditionally women have been less likely than men to plan to retire. "If they do plan to retire, they plan to retire late," said Dr. Robert C. Atchley, director of the Scripps Gerontology Center at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, who has studied thousands of women and men in retirement.

In Atchley's research, women who planned to retire before age 60 tended to have high social status, to be married and in good health. "Women who planned retirement at age 70 or later tended to, have low social status, to be unmarried and to have a less positive view of retirement," he said.

RESEARCH BY Atchley and many others has shown that most women, and most men, adjust positively to retirement.

"The truly problematical issues of retirement for many are not the business of living without a job or what to do with your time," Atchley said. "They are issues like how to feed yourself and how to pay the rent. If you can solve those problems, then the majority of people make a good adjustment in time."

Among both men and women, difficulty in adjusting to retirement has been linked to many factors, including health. Studies of retired women by Dr. Naomi Kroeger, a sociologist at the Brookdale Center on Aging of Hunter College, have shown that other factors included unexpected retirement, fear of retirement, lack of alternative interests and friends beyond the work place, trouble in relaxing, a nonsupportive spouse and high identification with work.

Kroeger's research subjects were retired women and men in merchandising, one of the few fields in which men and women have traditionally been employed at roughly parallel levels as everything from clerks to executives. Both women and men whose identities were strongly bound to work had difficulty adjusting to retirement, Kroeger found. But women who were completely invested in their work, and who had their best friends at work, often had more difficulty in maintaining these relationships once work no longer provided the social glue.

Among both men and women, the retirees who could easily transfer their relationships to an established set of companions in retirement expressed the most satisfaction with their life.

OTHER RESEARCH has suggested that the attitudes of women toward retirement change as the time in retirement increases. Recently retired women are healthier, more likely to be married, more likely to be in contact with a higher proportion of relatives and less likely to be living alone than were the longer-term retirees, according to studies of retired female schoolteachers by Dr. Debra L. Cherry, Dr. Steven H. Zarit and Dr. Iseli K. Krauss of UCLA.

Retirement preparation for women and men provides a psychological bridge to life in retirement. "I don't think anyone should go into retirement without getting as much advice as she can," said 59-year-old Pat Christy, who lives in Merrick, N.Y. and retired three years ago.

Thanks to her union, the New York State United Teachers, she took part in weekly retirement-planning sessions before she stopped teaching junior high school. Under state regulations, teachers can retire at age 55 if they have had their jobs 20 years.

"I tell friends that I think I was born to retire," Christy said.

Christy also helped start a union retirement chapter for teachers in her district. "It's a focus for social activity and also for information about financial opportunities," she said.

Retirement information for women is increasingly available also from women's professional organizations, women's business groups, community agencies, churches and synagogues.

A good starting place on retirement planning is a free brochure, "AARP's Guide to Planning Your Retirement." It is available from AARP's Worker Equity Department, 1909 K Street, NW, Wash., D.C., 20049.

Researchers report exercising brain key in keeping mental muscles young

Associated Press

The key to keeping your brain young is to flex your mental muscles and exercise them.

Researchers report learning increases the strength of nerve transmission and changes the physical properties of cerebral nerve endings. It also may prolong life — a study of subjects over a 12-year period correlated maintenance of mental vigor with capacity to survive.

Ongoing experiments show that people who continue to be intellectually active can improve on their IQ test scores beyond age 60, according to an article a recent issue of Harper's Bazaar, adapted from the book "Build Your Brain Power," by Dr. Arthur Winter and Ruth Winter, which offers simple routines to sharpen your ability to reason and remember.

■ Be flexible. One of the most important steps to better thinking is the ability to overcome fixed ideas and look for new points of view.

■ Maximize your strengths. Inventory what you do well — are you adept with people, a leader, good with numbers, details, etc.? Evaluate how you are using these abilities. If you have failed to capitalize on them, start doing so now, even if it means making a major career change.

■ Avoid procrastination. Letting postponement become a habit can affect intellectual performance. Don't just react to challenge — initiate and carry out ideas without being pressured.

■ Encourage creative problem-solving. We tend to believe, mistakenly, that creativity is like a high IQ — the property of a very few. But anyone can develop his or her creativity by becoming more alert, intuitive, open to suggestions and in tune with feelings.

■ Develop self-confidence. Either too much or too little self-esteem can make you appear smug or dull instead of in control, and unwilling or inept instead of able. To get others to see your real potential, learn to project the right balance.

■ Admit when you are wrong. Some people are afraid to admit failure and seek a scapegoat to blame for even the smallest mistake or problem. Others go to the opposite extreme and take all responsibility on themselves. By not facing up to the truth of the matter, you deny yourself the chance for personal growth.

■ Take risks. You don't get anywhere without being willing to put your neck on the line in some capacity, business or personal.

■ Look at the big picture. To make the best decision in any circumstance, you have to examine the problem properly. For instance, a person who is satisfied with her job unexpectedly receives an attractive job offer from a competing firm. More money may provide an incentive to switch jobs, but it should not be the only reason.

Write down the pluses and minuses of the new job. What will you have to do for the pay increase? Will you face a longer commute, have less chance of advancement, less job diversity?

Do the same for your present employer. Once you see the facts in black and white, it will be easier to make the smart choice.

■ Vary your thinking style. Some people solve problems by reacting impulsively and racing toward a quick solution. Others are more tortoise-like, reflecting on all sides before reaching a decision. Combining both styles will help you think more clearly when it matters most.

■ Unmask your motives. Motivation may be as important as intelligence in predicting how well someone will fare in life. Motivators include such external pressures as social approval, prestige and money, while internal motivators include self-satisfaction and self-sacrifice.

Listening improves memory

WORTHINGTON, Ohio (AP) — You start to pay for a tank of gas and realize your billfold with money and credit card is on the dresser at home, or you return from a hardware store with everything to build a doghouse except nails.

It's frustrating; you get mad and curse your bad memory, but one expert says there's no such thing, only an untrained mind.

A good memory, says Dr. J. Mark Dufner, requires hard work by people who like themselves, like other people and don't mind using a few mental crutches.

In fact, he told an audience of mostly professionals at a seminar here, the human mind is the greatest computer of all.

The first step he gives for remembering a new acquaintance is to break the habit of immediately thinking about a response to whatever the person might say.

"When you meet someone, shake their hand, hold it, observe that person, look for a 'see peg,'" he said. "Listen to the name ... turn the name into a picture with the powers of your imagination. A 'see peg' is something about a person that is striking, unusual, odd, pretty, ugly, different, unique."

He lists temporary "see pegs" as clothing or hair style, which might change before you see them again, and permanent "see pegs" as a Roman nose, thin lips, dimples, cleft chin or receding hairline, which are less likely to change.

"Then you have to listen," he added. "Humans are the only animals that can learn how to listen, but instead of listening, most people are thinking about what they want to say or do with this individual."

Dufner, founder and owner of Memory Master Institute Inc., Chicago, traces his memory techniques to Greek orators of 2,500 years ago who he said originated the system of mnemonics. The word with a silent "m" refers to the science of improving the memory.

Dufner says he has simplified mnemonics and refined it for modern times.

"We talk of concepts, ideas, theories and rules," he said, "but the mind thinks in pictures, so we have to change abstracts into pictures."

Dufner has developed his concepts into courses which he teaches to business groups nationwide. In eight years, his business has grown to three instructors like himself and eight sales representatives like Blaine Athorn of Columbus, who create interest among business people by demonstrating at sales meetings how a little concentration hones the memory.

"We start with the basic association chain," he said. "They quickly learn to remember 20 items on the grocery list, and not to worry about forgetting one.

"You have to care about people," he said during a half-hour pep talk preceding instruction in memory work. "All learning and knowledge is dependent on memory.

"If you don't care about people, mnemonics is of no use ... success does not come from skill but from attitude, from how you see life."

SAN DIEGO — "Ugh, no, I'm not going to make it," says the strained voice from the floor of the Jewish Community Center gym. "Ouch, it hurts."

The scene is the class "Senior Physical Fitness," and the gray-haired group is busy fighting the old notion of old age as flabby upper arms, a potbelly, poor posture and a shuffle.

Sweat streaming down wrinkled foreheads, they kick toward the ceiling, one-two, one-two. The age ranges from 60 to 95.

Exercise instructor Sam Cohen, 57, smiles as his students pant and groan.

"It's a hell of a thing to get us down here," says one 70-year-old class member. "But we wouldn't miss it for the world. When you get to be our age, you're facing the end. This is a way to push away the end."

They are among a growing segment of the older population that no longer believes getting old has to mean looking and feeling poorly. They have taken up regular exercise as a way to get through their golden years in golden shape.

"I'll tell you what I'd look like if I didn't exercise," said 60-year-old Elaine LaLanne, svelte wife of fitness guru Jack LaLanne and author of the book, "Fitness After Fifty."

"Like a dried-up old prune," she said. "A real fatty with a pear-shaped body. It happens."

ELDERLY EXERCISERS are backed up by scores of positive research studies. Universities such as Harvard, Stanford, Duke and Tufts, as well as institutions like the American Medical Association all have found that regular exercise not only helps a person look and feel better but live longer, too. They have dispelled the myth that exercise can be harmful to older muscles and bones.

"The elderly, the fastest-growing age group in the United States, should keep fit because it is good for the mind as well as the body," says a report from the Journal of the American Medical Association. "It is at least as important for the older person to engage in a suitable exercise program under medical supervision as it is for the younger, more vigorous individual."

The members of the Jewish Community Center's senior exercise class couldn't agree more. The class is offered five times a week, and numbers about 50 regulars. They do sit-ups, toe-touches, hopping, arm stretches, neck circles, leg lifts, jogging in place and more. They must consult a doctor before they sign up for the class.

Most attend religiously, and if they don't show up for a few sessions, Cohen phones them "and I give them hell."

Cohen, himself nearing senior citizen status, says plainly that he hates exercise. "But the results here are unbelievable. I'm talking mentally better and physically better. It's like group therapy. They're here in a group, suffering with their friends."

He has been a recreational leader and gym instructor all his adult life, and said he hopes to age gracefully thanks to exercise.

"When my father got old, I remember he started to shuffle," Cohen said. "You don't see that so much anymore."

AT THE Seven Oaks Community Center, the scene in the gym is much the same as at the Jewish Community Center.

Breathing hard and red in the face, members of the senior exercise group stretch their arms and legs from side to side.

"Out, relax, out, relax, really push it hard," commands no-nonsense instructor Caroline Wells, 87.

A 68-year-old brags of being the youngest in the class. Wells, a retired physical therapist, is the oldest.

"We hate coming here," says one man, "but we love the results."

"I'm invigorated," said Melba Wallack, a 69-year-old member of the class. "I think I'm stronger than I was before."

The Seven Oaks class has been meeting once a week for 15 years. There are about 25 regular participants, and Wells keeps tabs on the individual members of the group, urging them to exercise at their own pace.

She believes a good workout consists of stretching and working all muscles of the body.

Exercises include arm and leg lifts, leg lunges, twisting from side to side and a few minutes of walking or jogging.

"It's the type of thing people our age can take," said Walter Lantz, 82. "We really need the exercise."

Research shows that at about age 30, the functioning of most major organs begins to decline, and over the next four decades, the body's ability to work drops 30 percent. Muscle strength, muscle mass, joint flexibility, bone mass, maximal heart rate and cardiac output all decline to a similar extent.

A lot of this is due to the aging process, and not much can be done about that. But scientists now believe that some of the loss can be slowed or even partly reversed if older people become physically active.

STUDIES SHOW that older people who exercise can expect to increase their strength, endurance, balance, coordination and flexibility. Exercise also can lower blood pressure, improve cholesterol levels and enhance the body's ability to use carbohydrates.

"A lot of older people are not into jumping around for an hour; they need to start out slowly," said LaLanne. "If you've been sitting around for many years, you don't have the stamina."

If there is one main "do," it is to break into the program slowly.

If there is one main "don't," it is not to expect too much too soon.

"It may be awhile before you see results, but believe me, you will see them," said Cohen.

GENERALLY, THE best program combines an aerobic activity such as walking, swimming or jogging in place with calisthenic exercises that work all the joints and muscles in the body, the three said.

Of utmost importance, the older person needs to get moving and keep moving.

"You need to keep the major joints limber, and the major muscles active," said Wells. "As you get older, you tend to sit a lot — to move less. If you don't work at it, your hip joint stabilizes in a forward position, and when you're standing, you slump."

In her book LaLanne offers a systematic approach to getting fit, recommending that exercisers move gradually through three levels of movements. At each level, muscles from all parts of the body are worked.

LaLanne said that, if performed at a fast pace, her exercises can give an aerobic workout as well as a calisthenic workout. However, she advises participants to walk, swim, bicycle or get involved in some similar activity in addition to the exercises in the book.

She does the exercises from her book every day, plus runs 1 mile.

All three said that even people who haven't exercised in years can join in and see improvements.

"I've seen people 50, 60, 70, 80 years old get back in shape again," said LaLanne. "If they're 90 years old, they're not going to be Miss America, but they're going to be the sexiest 90-year-old around."

DEAR ABBY

Abused wife shares experience

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: In March I read a letter in your column from a parent whose daughter had actually been beaten to death by her boyfriend.

I am enclosing photos of myself following the brutal beating I received from my husband of 11½ years. It was the first time he had physically harmed me, although he had threatened me with a knife several times. These last five years I lived in terror of him, but didn't know how to get away without getting myself and my three children killed.

The assault occurred in a public place at 3:30 p.m. I asked him to meet me there because I was going to tell him I was leaving him, and I thought it would be safe. I was wrong. He nearly killed me. In addition to severe body pummeling, I suffered a broken nose, a blow-out fracture of my right cheek, severe eye damage, broken teeth, contusions and numerous hematomas on my head, which became swollen three times its normal size!

Your advice, to file charges and run as though your life depended on it, was good.

I ran to a shelter provided by the Women's Advocates — a rape crisis and intervention group. I also pressed charges. He was sentenced to an indefinite term not to exceed 10 years. He must serve 120 days at a correction facility, where he will be evaluated; then there's a possibility that he will be released.

He offered to give me everything I wanted in the divorce if I would drop the charges against him. I refused. I am glad I stood my ground because now it has been publicly validated that wife beating is unacceptable.

Abby, you have my permission to use my name and publish these pictures. Do whatever is necessary to let women everywhere know that they do not have to tolerate physical abuse! Urge them to contact the Women's Advocates or other local crisis intervention groups.

Don't back off, and above all, NEVER go back! — RAE BRENNAN, AMERICAN FALLS, IDAHO

DEAR RAE: I cannot publish your pictures, but I can tell you that I and my staff were horrified by them. The damage to your face and body defies description.

Thank you for sharing your story and reinforcing my advice to "run from an abusive mate as though your life depended on it — because it does."

Now, a word to all girls: Under no circumstances should you tolerate a rough shove, a punch, a slap, a twisted arm or any kind of physical abuse from a boyfriend. It's a clear signal that his uncontrolled anger could eventually escalate into more severe punishment.

Most women remain in abusive relationships because they are financially dependent. So, girls, complete your education — learn a trade or a profession so you can support yourselves and will never be forced to tolerate abuse because you can't afford to leave.

DEAR ABBY: I am a mature, intelligent, sensitive woman of 33. I am also a woman who has been approached often by total strangers who say, "My, but you have a pretty face." (I know I have a pretty face.)

The message is obvious. What they don't say is, "Too bad you're so fat — why don't you do something about it?"

Well, I know I am fat. And I have tried to "do something" about it all my life, and I am sick of it. I am not lazy. I am active, healthy and I eat nutritious food. I know I eat more sugar and fat than I can metabolize, but eating is one of the joys of living.

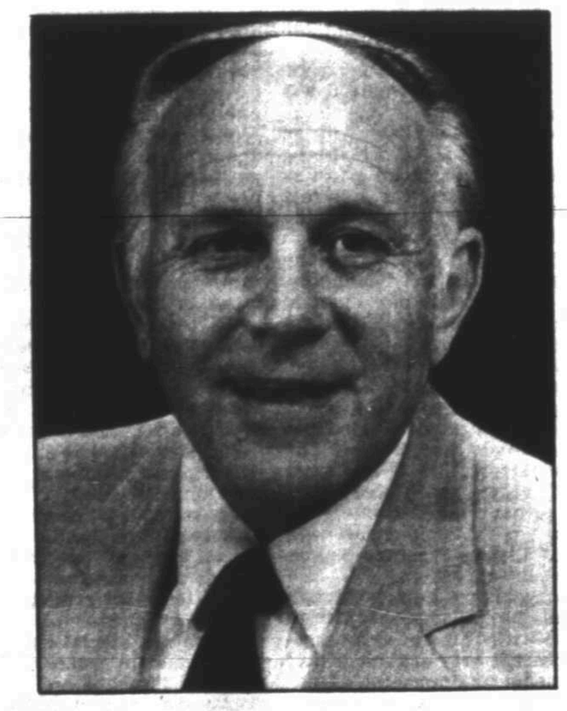

I am single by choice and by no means am I lonely or man-hungry. I'm satisfied with myself the way I am, and need to know what to say to strangers who walk up to me and tell me what a pretty face I have. — FAT AND SASSY

DEAR FAT: Say, "Thank you."

CAN YOU IDENTIFY CLASSIC T.V. THEME SONGS?

GAME RULES:

The Midland Reporter-Telegram, A.M. 1510 KMND Memory Music T.V. Game is based on skill in identifying (6) T.V. show theme songs each week. There will be 12 weekly games beginning Monday, April 7th and ending Friday, June 27th. There will be weekly 1st, 2nd, and 3rd place winners.

Two excerpts from each of the (6) T.V. show theme songs will be broadcast over A.M. 1510 KMND each week. Excerpts will be broadcast at least six times daily between 6:00 AM and 6:00 PM Monday through Friday. Each show's two excerpts will be broadcast at least twice during the week, with both excerpts from each theme (12 total) being broadcast at least once by 6:00 PM Thursday of each week.

Excerpts will be numbered one through six. The answer (the title of the show) must be printed or typed on the correspondingly numbered line on the official Midland Reporter-Telegram A.M. 1510 KMND Memory Music TV Game Entry Form. Each week's official entry form will be published Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Hand drawn facsimilies of the entire entry form will be acceptable. BUT MACHINE DUPLICATED COPIES ARE PROHIBITED.

CONTESTANTS MAY ENTER ONLY ONCE PER WEEK. The weekly game number must be marked on the lower left of the envelope on the address side. Envelopes must be postmarked by midnight Friday of each week. NO POSTAGE MACHINE CANCELLED ENVELOPES WILL BE ACCEPTED. ONLY ENVELOPES BEARING THE CORRECT POSTAGE AND CANCELLED BY THE U.S. POSTAL SERVICE OR ENTRIES HAND DELIVERED TO THE CONTEST ADDRESS BY 6:00 AM SATURDAY WILL BE ACCEPTED.

The weekly first prize will be awarded to the entrant with the most or all (6) TV shows correctly identified. In the case that more than one entrant has all the shows correctly identified a drawing will be held. 2nd and 3rd will be awarded to the two entrants with the most correct answers respectively. Again in the case more than one entrant having identified all (6) TV shows, a drawing will be held to determine 2nd and 3rd place winners.

The correct answer and the theme song itself along with the two excerpts will be played back twice on A.M. 1510 KMND Saturday morning between 6:00 A.M. and noon. Answers will also be published in Sunday's Midland Reporter Telegram. Weekly winners will be announced each Wednesday afternoon by A.M. 1510 KMND and in the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

It is not necessary to purchase the Midland Reporter-Telegram to play the game. Copies of the MRT are available for free examination at the Midland Reporter-Telegram, 201 East Illinois and the Midland County Public Library.

All winners must sign a release form acknowledging that both the Midland Reporter-Telegram and A.M. 1510 KMND shall have the right to publish, publicize and broadcast his/her name, picture, voice and the fact that he/she won a prize. If the winner is a minor, a parent or guardian must sign a minor's release form prior to the prize being awarded. Winners are responsible for all taxes incurred on prizes.

Judge's decisions will be final in any interpretation of the rules of this game. Employees of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Bakcor Broadcasting, Inc. and members of their immediate families are ineligible. The Grand Prize, a cruise on The Mississippi or Delta Queen Steamboat is worth up to $4,000. Does not include bar tab, shore tours or gift shop purchases. It may be used at your convenience based on a 30 day space available basis. It includes round trip airfare to New Orleans. Cruise must be taken by April 1, 1987. Grand prize may not be exchanged.

The winner of the cruise will be determined by a drawing at the end of all 12 weekly games. All weekly 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize winners will be entered in the drawing.

Liberty restored to former glory

By RICK HAMPSON

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1983, after almost a century of wind, rain and pollution, the Statue of Liberty had a broken nose, a cracked right eye, a split lip and stains on her gown. Her spike-crowned head tilted to the right, stabbing her sagging torch arm.

"I knew she was in trouble," quipped Bob Hope, "when I waved at her and she waved back."

By the turn of the century, engineers said, the statue would be near collapse.

Using tools as modern as the computer and as ancient as the hammer, a team of 200 American and French designers, painters, carpenters, ironworkers, masons and laborers spent three years restoring Liberty in time for her 100th birthday celebration starting July 3.

They fixed the symbolic broken chains at her feet, restored one of her lost curls and replaced all 1,800 bars in her corroded interior armature. They even had to remove the letters on her tablet — July IV MDCCLXXVI — while it was repaired.

The renovation was both public spectacle and private drama. Liberty Island became a construction site, and the statue was caged by the world's highest free-standing scaffolding. On July 4, 1984, as the nation watched on television, a crane operator carefully lowered the old torch to the ground.

Behind the scenes, the restorers wrestled with the complex issues and myriad details involved in a $70 million restoration of a 151-foot, 225-ton international symbol of freedom.

Computers produced three-dimensional, multi-colored structural drawings, and sophisticated instruments measured air currents outside the statue and carbon dioxide and moisture inside it. The statue was X-rayed for hidden cracks.

Repouse, an ancient technique of shaping copper by hand-hammering it, was used to create a new torch and flame. The latter, a replica of the 1886 original, was then covered, patch by patch, with gold leaf.

Unlike its predecessor, which had been fitted with windows and lit from within, the new flame will reflect light shone on it from the base of the torch and the base of the statue.

The statue's armature — the interior latticework that conforms to the undulations of the statue's shape, holding together the plates of its skin and linking them to the central superstructure — was badly rusted.

When its iron bars began to swell with rust, they popped the riveted brackets that held them to the skin. Workers removed each of the 1,800 old bars, no more than 12 in a day, and fashioned identical new ones out of stainless steel.

Original design flaws in the statue's interior support system and its subsequent deterioration had produced dozens of holes and cracks in the penny-thin copper skin. They were repaired with new copper that had been treated to give it the characteristic light green of aged copper.

Outside, workers found bird nests in the folds of Liberty's gown and graffiti that dated back to 1886. They included a B for Bartholdi on the first copper plate to be riveted and the inscription "Alone with God and the Statue, Christmas Eve" on the left big toe.

The crown's seven spikes were removed and cleaned, and the position of one adjusted so it would no longer scrape against the reinforced torch arm.

Although the surface of the statue was washed with water, it will never shine like a new penny. The green patina that forms when copper oxidizes protects it from further dissolution.

The statue's surface, however, also is marked by streaks and patches of black from an earlier and equally vital stage in the patinization process. Winds have apparently blown away the green patina, revealing the lower black layer.

Inside, a new double-decker hydraulic elevator will lift visitors from the ground level to the top of the statue's pedestal. From there, they can climb a new 171-step spiral staircase to a viewing platform inside the crown.

A new set of bronze doors were installed at the monument's entrance, featuring 10 bas-relief panels that depict the tasks and tools of the statue's construction and centennial restoration.

Statue of Liberty mystical madonna for new immigrants

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

To the immigrants who battled tough times and rough seas, the Statue of Liberty was a welcoming beacon, a mystical madonna who made the homeless newcomers weep, pray and dance for joy.

Swathed in a morning's mist, the mesmerizing lady of the harbor appeared off to the left of their ships, hailing their entry to the new world. For many, it was the first time they dared to hope.

"The people were screaming and some of them were crying and some of them were dancing. It was all kind of a joyous feeling of coming to the land of freedom and a land of love," recalled Clara Larsen of New York City who came from Russia in 1911 at age 13.

Seymour Rexsite of Manhattan, who was 8 when he came from Poland in the early 1920s, remembers his boat pulled into New York Harbor in a driving rainstorm.

"Everybody was on deck, no matter, they didn't mind the rain at all," he said. "Just to cheer that they came, they came to America."

Their experiences were repeated by many immigrants, who historians say went through a kind of rebirth as they shed their old lives in a new land. Many went through enormous hardships to get here as they fled religious persecution, oppression or poverty, seeking new opportunities and a better way of life.

The statue played an important role in that process, especially in the peak immigration periods early in this century.

> "I spent almost the whole night outside of the building praying to the Statue of Liberty, who I called my first girlfriend, and saying, you know, please reach us."
> — Barabara Barondess
> Russian immigrant

THERE ARE accounts from that period of time, from the 1920s and earlier, by immigrants who actually talk about seeing this tremendous lady off in the mist," said Virginia Yans-McLaughlin, a Rutgers University professor of history who specializes in immigration matters. "If you make that long journey to a new land to make your life again, it's a tremendous image. It's whimsical. It has a kind of fantasy element to it."

The immigrants often arrived ill, impoverished and homesick. Most had journeyed across the ocean confined for 12 days or more in the windowless steerage quarters below deck, sleeping on triple-tiered iron bunks with straw mattresses and no pillows. There was no privacy, no space; sanitary conditions were poor. They had to scrape together the $30 to $50 passage.

Their ships made their way through the Narrows, the waters between Brooklyn and Staten Island, then turned north past the statue, just a few hundred yards from Ellis Island. There they were examined, processed and sometimes detained in crude, crowded quarters.

The island could be a grim place. The statue, with her upheld torch, was uplifting, goddesslike.

Barbara Barondess, 79, of Manhattan remembers how as a Russian child of 14, she was held with her family on Ellis Island in 1921 for several days. It was like a jail with people of many languages huddled together in fear, she said. Her sister, she recalled, was sick with a "terrible fever."

"I spent almost the whole night outside of the building praying to the Statue of Liberty, who I called my first girlfriend, and saying, you know, please reach us," Miss Barondess said.

MANY OF the immigrants from that period have told their stories to historians on tape. Some were interviewed for this article.

Susan Kalcik, an ethnic specialist at the Smithsonian Institution who took some of the oral histories, said many immigrants did not actually recall seeing the statue, but only later looked back on their experiences and remembered it.

"It's the scene moviemakers like to put in. It was afterwards they began to put all that together and have a sense that that was the turning point for them," she said. "People pointed it out to them and they remembered it."

But if some recollections are not precisely literal, most of the immigrants are emphatic about the exuberance they felt on arriving in the United States. Many saw the statue as a symbol of hope.

"We came to the promised land. You know what I mean, to the Statue of Liberty, to that beautiful, beautiful woman. And I think there is only one more beautiful woman, and that was my wife," said Sam Auspitz of Philadelphia, who came from Czechoslovakia in 1920 at age 14.

Jacob Auerbach, 82, of Long Beach, N.Y., who was 17 when he left his village in what was part of Poland after World War I, said most on his ship had already heard of the statue. But actually seeing it was another story.

"It was the symbol of America being an open country, open to all comers," he said. "Seeing that the statue was really there with its upraised arms and the light in her hand meant they really mean it, that it isn't just a fairy tale."

Some people, used to old-world customs and small towns, were confused and mystified when they first saw the towering lady.

ANNA SALVIA of Brooklyn thought the statue was a religious monument when she arrived from the Ukraine in 1923 at age 13.

"I started to bless myself. But then I discovered it was not a religious thing," she said. "She does look religious, you know, standing there and with that crown on her head."

Others were also confused by Liberty's tiara.

"We heard that in America there was no royalty. The leader of the country was chosen by the people, which I thought was great. And he didn't wear a crown, and neither did his wife. So picture my confusion when I saw the Statue of Liberty. Why the crown?" said Ann Vida of Riverside, Calif., who came from Hungary at age 10 in 1921.

Lucy Nigro, 92, of Brooklyn remembers coming from her small town in Italy when she was 13. It was her third try to get to America. The other times, she had been kept back by the authorities in Europe.

"My grandmother faced me to the light, and I said it was so beautiful because where I come from it's a small town and you don't see all this. I was fascinated. I said, 'I'm not going back,'" Mrs. Nigro said. "Thank God I came."

As children, many did not understand the statue's symbolism.

Sophia Kreitzberg of South Orange, N.J., who came from Russia in 1904 at age 5, remembers seeing the the statue by dawn's light as the crowd on the boat erupted in "screams and screeches."

"It was the most wonderful sight to see," she said, "whether you knew what it was or whether you didn't know what it was."

Rocco Morelli of Jersey City, N.J., recalls what his grandfather told him as a 12-year-old when they arrived from Italy in 1920:

"He said, 'Son, you see that? That's a lady. That represents liberta, liberty. You don't know what it is today, but with the passing of the years, you will realize what the statue means to you. I am quite sure you will thank God that you are in this country.'"

Light show will kick off celebration

By JUDIE GLAVE

NEW YORK (AP) — When President Reagan pushes a button to relight the Statue of Liberty on July 3, he'll be backed by 1,500 racks of lights, 600 strip lights, 15 arc lamps and 1.4 million kilowatts of power.

"It's much more involved than flipping a switch and then there's light," said Red McKinnon, a lighting expert with the Hollywood, Calif.-based Klages Group. "Everything is being meticulously planned, down to the tiniest detail."

The burst of lights will kick off the statue's 4-day centennial celebration.

When the president pushes the button, McKinnon said, a bright, blue-white laser light will shoot a mile across New York Harbor from Governor's Island to the base of the statue.

Until then, Lady Liberty will be in darkness.

As the laser plays across the base of the statue it will melt into a bright, red light "to get us off to a very strong, emotional beginning," said McKinnon.

A 300-member choir and 100-piece orchestra on Governor's Island will provide background music with a performance of "America the Beautiful."

The light will travel to the statue's pedestal, changing from solid red to a red-amber to bring out the texture of the brick.

In the next three to four seconds, the full statue will be revealed in a dim, steel-blue light.

McKinnon said viewers' eyes will automatically search for a brighter light, which will come when the colonnade and setback areas are highlighted in a deep blue.

"Now we start to reveal the statue from the base up, adding accents like white, narrow lights on her book, torch and crown," he continued.

There will be a fast sweep of the statue from her base to torch and suddenly the 151-foot monument will be awash in brilliant white light, said McKinnon.

> "If you tried to do it over 15 minutes, everyone would be sitting there saying, 'OK, let's get on with it.' So we decided to let it happen, just let it be revealed quickly; after all that's what everyone will be waiting for."
> — Red McKinnon
> lighting expert

"As David (Liberty Weekend producer David Wolper) says, the statue will visually jump out at that point," McKinnon said.

Seconds after the statue and her $66 million facelift are fully revealed, thousands of fireworks will begin soaring and crackling in the night air.

Though Wolper, McKinnon and others from the Klages Group have spent several months planning the relighting, the complete event won't last more than two minutes, McKinnon said.

"If you tried to do it over 15 minutes, everyone would be sitting there saying, 'OK, let's get on with it.' So we decided to let it happen, just let it be revealed quickly; after all that's what everyone will be waiting for."

The lighting crew will hold rehearsals about a week before the actual event, he said, but that will be done in the middle of the night.

Klages Group did the lighting for the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, the Live Aid concert and numerous Hollywood awards ceremonies.

Dreamers' divergent visions united in Liberty

By LARRY McSHANE

NEW YORK (AP) — They were three dreamers who collectively helped turn the vision of a Statue of Liberty into reality. But the dreams of Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, Edouard-Rene Lefebvre de Laboulaye and Joseph Pulitzer lay in different worlds until they meshed in New York Harbor.

Bartholdi dreamed of building a huge monument — at the Suez Canal.

Pulitzer dreamed of selling the most newspapers in New York City.

"What today's spectator sees in Liberty is scarcely what she meant to her makers and early public," wrote Marvin Trachtenberg, an art historian, in his re-released 1976 book on the monument, "The Statue of Liberty."

The statue was the brainchild of the French-American Union, a group that included no Americans and claimed as its members French activist intellectuals who sought to gain control of a government in upheaval. They looked to the United States as a model of democracy and also learned that by writing glowing accounts of America they could get around their government's censorship rules.

De Laboulaye was a leader of this group; the statue idea was his, a gift from the French on the 100th anniversary of U.S. independence that would link his political party with the United States and its expressed ideals of liberty and justice for all.

Although Bartholdi wrote in 1865 that de Laboulaye envisioned the project as "a common work of both nations," the Statue of Liberty remained a French effort until it was virtually completed.

Bartholdi was a sculptor with "a lust for the colossal," Trachtenberg wrote. The first Bartholdi effort to bring him attention was a 25-foot statue too large for display inside the exhibition hall at Salon, France.

He was a great admirer of the Egyptian pyramids and the Sphinx, and in 1869 proposed a monument at the Suez Canal nearly identical to the Statue of Liberty.

The Egyptian plan was rejected, but at a dinner party at de Laboulaye's home the schemes of the politicians and the sculptor meshed into the plan to build the "Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World" and Bartholdi visited the United States in 1871 to pitch the project.

On his trip, the sculptor met with President Ulysses S. Grant but received little support.

As Bartholdi progressed through six small clay studies, his design evolved. He used his wife as the model for Liberty's body and his mother as the model for the statue's face.

The frame around which the statue's copper shield was to be wrapped was designed by Gustave Eiffel, who would later build the tower bearing his name in Paris.

After de Laboulaye's group gained control of the French government in 1875, forming the Third Republic, the politician decided the time was right to announce plans for the statue. The announcement coincided with a constitutional assembly, helping de Labolaye's party solidify its position.

Appeals for funds were made in French newspapers, but the response was less than enthusiastic; one letter writer suggested the United States should be building the statue on the River Seine.

Work nevertheless went on: "The Statue of American Independence" received U.S. copyright No. 9939 in 1876, and more than $200,000 was raised in France.

U.S. fund-raising produced almost nothing at first; the press derided the project as "the French statue" and wondered why Americans were expected to pay for it. New York newspapers hinted at fraud.

But Bartholdi, who knew from his first trip that his dream belonged in New York Harbor, suggested that he might consider putting the statue in Philadelphia or Boston. With this, the attitude in New York shifted considerably and early in 1877 a committee was formed to receive the French gift.

Meanwhile, Liberty made her first appearance in America. A 13-foot model of the hand and torch were displayed at the Philadelphia centennial celebration in 1876 and then went on display in New York's Madison Square Garden.

Construction continued in France, but U.S. fund raising for the pedestal lagged.

In 1883, railroad baron Jay Gould sold his money-losing New York World to Pulitzer, a Hungarian-Jewish immigrant who had come to the United States in 1864, made his mark as a publisher in St. Louis and now was ready to take on the newspaper giants of New York.

He saw in the Statue of Liberty the chance to seize the public imagination, sell newspapers and at the same time blast the wealthy.

The drive moved slowly at first, raising only $135.75 in the first two months.

Pulitzer, who increased the World's circulation more than twentyfold in three years, kicked off his second fund-raising campaign in 1885 with an editorial: "Let us not wait for the millionaires to give this money. It is not a gift from the millionaires of France to the millionaires of America, but a gift of the whole people of France to the whole people of America."

Gould and William Henry Vanderbilt, two of New York's most prominent financiers, became, through the World, Pulitzer's favorite targets.

"Please take this from a little boy who wants to set Jay Gould a good example," read one letter published in the World — purportedly from a 10-year-old boy who contributed a dime.

The plan worked — the World raised $102,000 in five months — and the Statue of Liberty was dedicated atop its publicly financed pedestal Oct. 28, 1886.

Souvenir shop owner ready for statue's reopening

By BETHANY KANDEL

NEW YORK (AP) — When the Statue of Liberty reopens for business in July, so will James Hill.

Hill, who was born on Liberty Island and lived there for six years, runs its only food and souvenir shop, as his family has for almost 50 years.

He was delighted with the restoration of the colossal lady that stood in his childhood backyard, but the 2¼-year project almost put him out of business.

"We used to order a thousand dozen replicas of the statue at a time," said Hill, 61, who now lives on Long Island. But when scaffolding began to shroud Miss Liberty in January 1984, "two-thirds of our trade disappeared overnight. People thought the island was closed when only the statue was closed."

Indeed, visitors to the island could watch French craftsmen fashion the new copper torch with the same techniques their countrymen used to build the statue in the 1870s.

But attendance dropped and with it Hill's $1 million in annual sales.

When the island was finally closed to the public last fall to complete the statue's $70 million rehabilitation, he had to look elsewhere for income.

He started a mail order business for organizations that wanted to purchase memorabilia and raise funds for the statue's restoration. And he began to prepare for this summer's celebration by shopping around for new items to sell.

Hill was born in 1925 on what was then called Bedloe's Island. His father, stationed at an Army base there, started the souvenir stand after he left the service and eventually turned it over to his son.

The elder Hill died in 1943, and now grandson Brad, 30, has joined the business, which sells everything from mugs, jigsaw puzzles, paperweights and flags to $350 gold charms and $1,000 8-foot fiberglass statue replicas.

As the statue's 100th birthday nears, the trade in statue stuff has expanded.

Tiffany has caught the fever, selling sterling silver Liberty keyrings, moneyclips, spoons and watches, priced from $35 to $600. The elegant French Hermes shop has a $115 silk scarf. A gallery shop devoted entirely to the symbol of freedom has sprung up in West Greenwich Village and the Abraham & Straus department store in Brooklyn has a special statue shop.

Still, only Hill is located on the island itself, where 1.8 million people visit a year. He pays a fee plus a percentage of sales to the National Park Service and gets preference on renewing his 10-year lease.

With the centennial approaching, new items from tasteful to tacky arrive daily in Hill's Manhattan office.

"She is in the public domain so she's been everywhere but the centerfold of Playboy...so far," Hill said.

To keep up to date with the changes due to the restoration, Hill has had new photos of the statue taken for postcards. He's also commissioned a statue replica that contains granite dust collected during work on the pedestal.

Now he's waiting for the big event.

While others celebrate the birthday bash with fireworks, regattas and concerts on July 3 and 4, however, Hill will be preparing for July 5 when the island officially reopens to the public.

For him, that will be the real celebration.

Barring of Waldheim sought

By LEWIS COHEN

NEW YORK (AP) — Some Jewish leaders are calling on the United States to bar Kurt Waldheim, president-elect of Austria, from this country due to allegations that he participated in war crimes for the Nazis.

The Justice Department said Sunday that Waldheim's status as head of a foreign state would override any action against him under laws allowing the United States to deny visas to undesirable aliens.

Brooklyn District Attorney Elizabeth Holtzman, however, said Waldheim should be prevented from entering the United States.

"I hope the Justice Department acts promptly. This act would be more than symbolic — it would tell the world that the U.S. stands firmly against Nazi acts of persecution," she said.

Henry Siegman, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, doubted the feasibility of Holtzman's proposal.

"Given his diplomatic immunity, Waldheim can probably not be barred from this country. But we and the other democracies can make it clear to him and his countrymen who elected him that he is unwelcomed," Siegman said.

The former secretary-general of the United Nations scored a decisive victory in Sunday's presidential election against Socialist candidate Kurt Steyrer.

Since March, Waldheim's campaign had been dogged by charges from the New York-based World Jewish Congress that he failed to disclose his participation in war crimes in the Balkans, where he served during World War II as a lieutenant in the German army.

Elan Steinberg, a WJC spokesman, said, "We have presidents who are murderers. We have presidents who are torturers. We now have a president who is a Nazi."

Waldheim's election coincided with the 22nd annual Salute to Israel parade up Fifth Avenue. Among those in attendance was Yitzhak Modai, Israel's minister of justice, who questioned his government's ability to maintain normal relations with Austria with Waldheim as president.

"Morally, Israel will have it very difficult to maintain any relations with a country which has just put at its head a suspect of being a war criminal," Modai said. "This, in a democracy, is a dark day. That such a thing can happen now is an amazing phenomenon."

Mayor Edward I. Koch, who marched in parade, said Waldheim's election "should be perceived as one of the most disgusting acts of the 20th Century.

"They will go back to where they were 40 years ago when the war ended and they were then the No. 1 Nazi country because that's the birthplace of Nazism," he said. "They have tried the myth of saying they are a victim of the Nazis — (but it's) just the other way. It was in Austria, where Adolf Hitler was born, that Nazism was at its zenith."

NATION IN BRIEF

18 train cars derailed

MORGAN CITY, Utah (AP) — About 18 cars of a Union Pacific train derailed early Sunday and careened into a car dealership, but there were no injuries, authorities said.

Part of the 58-car train derailed about 1 a.m., crossed Commercial Street and stopped in the Heiner Ford car lot, said Morgan County Deputy Sheriff Harold Briskie, adding that nine new and used cars were damaged.

"I would not venture any guess on the amount of damage. Some of the cars were totaled," he said.

Tom LaHood, a Union Pacific spokesman in Omaha, Neb., said the mixed-freight train was en route from North Platte, Neb., to Los Angeles at the time of the derailment, which he said was caused by a burned out roller bearing on one of the cars.

Suspect seeks protection

NEW YORK (AP) — One of the men in custody in the razor slashing of a model's face said a group of inmates beat him and stole his watch and ring, so officials put him in protective custody in another jail, authorities said.

Steven Bowman, 27, was transferred to Riker's Island Sunday after he was mugged in the Manhattan House of Detention, according to James Whitford, a spokesman for the Department of Correction.

Bowman told authorities seven to nine men were involved in the incident. He was not seriously hurt and Whitford said it appeared to have nothing to do with Thursday's assault on model Maria Hanson.

Ms. Hanson, 24, was released in good condition Sunday afternoon from St. Vincent's Hospital, where a plastic surgeon used more than 100 stitches to close her wounds.

Scene 'agonized' Hudson

NEW YORK (AP) — Rock Hudson agonized over a scene calling for him to kiss Linda Evans on an episode of "Dynasty," but went through with it despite knowing that he had AIDS, according to an excerpt from his book printed in this week's People magazine.

"I've got to kiss Linda. What the hell am I going to do?" he reportedly asked his secretary, Mark Miller, after receiving the script a week before the kissing scene was shot.

"He was trapped," said Miller. "He couldn't ask them to change the script. He felt either you announce you have AIDS or kiss the lady."

According to the excerpt from "Rock Hudson, His Story," co-written with journalist Sara Davidson, "On the day the kiss with Linda Evans was shot, Rock used every gargle, mouthwash and spray he could get his hands on. He told Mark, 'the kiss is over with. Thank God.' He said it was one of the worst days in his life."

Hudson kept the news of his illness from Ms. Evans as well as from his lover, Marc Christian.

Tornado hits Denver

DENVER (AP) — A tornado swept through the southeast part of the city Sunday, damaging roofs and blowing out windows at a shopping center, office tower and apartment building, but authorities said there were no serious injuries.

"Shingles, everything was flying into the clouds," said eyewitness Karen Hagan, a waitress at a bar in the Market Place shopping center.

She said one man trying to cross a street when the twister hit was cut by flying shingles.

"The funnel cloud touched down over at the Fairway Apartments and bounced across Dartmouth and hit the Market Place shopping center and Market Tower office building," said Aurora Fire dispatcher Steve Setzer.

Jim Kaplan, a forecaster at the National Weather Service in Denver, said the indications were that "a tornado touched down along the Denver-Aurora border."

Rights reports planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department, contending that communist nations too often evade international scrutiny, is planning a series of reports to call attention to what U.S. officials say are human rights abuses that escape the world's attention.

Reports are planned on countries where the Western news media generally is not allowed, including Albania, North Korea, Cambodia and Vietnam, the officials said. There also will be reports on countries such as the Soviet Union, Poland and Ethiopia, where the Western press has access but where some rights abuses normally are not reported.

"There is a whole list of things we think deserve to be discussed," said a senior official, who spoke late last week on condition he not be identified. He said he expects the reports will be used as source material by scholars and others with a professional interest in the targeted countries.

Man held in shootings

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A 79-year-old man was arrested today after killing his daughter and son-in-law and wounding his wife and three grandchildren in a shooting spree during a dispute at dinner, authorities said.

The shootings occurred Sunday evening at the victims' house in northeast Delta Township just south of Lansing, said Eaton County sheriff's Sgt. Mike Boes.

Melville Nelson Henwood was apprehended this morning, Boes said.

Killed were his daughter, Elizabeth Flory, and her husband, John, both in their 40s, Boes said. Henwood's wife, Edna, and three of his grandchildren, Michael Flory, 10; Christy Flory, 12; and Gail Scott, 17, were wounded, Boes said.

Plant boosts security

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — Concern that terrorists might attack the Hanford nuclear reservation has prompted increased security at the weapons-grade plutonium plant, officials say.

In the past six years, the U.S. Energy Department's Hanford Patrol has grown from about 180 officers to more than 425, and is training with more sophisticated weapons, said Joe Sutey, director of site and laboratory management at the southeast Washington complex.

A local gun club was recently kicked off a reservation firing range it had used for 23 years in order to tighten security and make room for the patrol to train with machine guns and anti-tank weapons.

Vulnerabilty considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Financially troubled U.S. government employees with access to national security secrets could be vulnerable to hostile intelligence services, according to a published report.

The Washington Post, in its Sunday editions, reported that 56 employees, who worked in intelligence or national security jobs, have declared bankruptcy in Baltimore federal court over the past five years.

"They're sitting ducks for the KGB," one unnamed senior intelligence official told the newspaper, referring to the Soviet secret police and intelligence agency.

However, the Post said there are no indications that any of the government employees who filed for bankruptcy are engaged in espionage.

Arms shipments resume

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says intelligence sources have information indicating that the Soviet Union has resumed direct arms shipments to the Nicaragua government — news the administration is expected to use to reinforce its appeal for $100 million in aid to the Contra rebels.

"We will be saying some things about this in the course of the week," Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, said when asked about a published report Sunday in The New York Times.

One possible forum would be a speech President Reagan is scheduled to make tonight at the annual dinner sponsored by Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Fence climber arrested

WASHINGTON (AP) — A District of Columbia man was arrested late Sunday night after he tried to jump over the fence surrounding the White House, the Secret Service said today..

Curtis Best, 25, tried to vault over the gate on the northwest side of the executive mansion at about 11:30 p.m. EDT, said Judy Vezeris, a spokeswoman for the Secret Service.

Uniformed Secret Service officers captured Best without a struggle and charged him with unlawful entry, Vezeris said.

Best was not armed, she said.

Ricardo Montero Duque, 60, is greeted by friends, family and well-wishers.

Invasion prisoner released by Cuba

By SANDRA JARAMILLO

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP) — One of the last men imprisoned in Cuba for the CIA-sponsored Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961 said he was "in a cloud" as he embraced his parents and brothers following his release.

Ricardo Montero Duque, 60, was freed from the Combinado del Este prison outside Havana early Sunday and arrived five hours later in a privately chartered plane at Homestead Air Force Base south of Miami.

"I'm delighted to see my family," said Montero. "I had not seen them in so many years. I'm in a cloud."

He was greeted by his 80-year-old mother, Bernardina Duque de Montero, and his father, Ricardo Montero, both of Miami; and two brothers, Javier and Juvenal, also of Miami.

Montero's wife, Ester, was ill and unable to travel from her home in Union City, N.J., to greet her husband, but the two spoke by telephone.

"She has always been waiting for him," said Montero's mother. "They've lived like Romeo and Juliet."

Montero was freed with the help of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who on Wednesday sent an adviser to Havana to escort Montero from Cuba to the United States. Kennedy's brother John was president when the ill-fated invasion took place.

"Sometimes there aren't words to express how one feels," Montero said shortly after arriving. "I'm very grateful to the people and the government of the United States. I'm very happy to be here."

Montero was among 1,200 CIA-trained Cuban exiles taken prisoner when the 1,400-member rebel force failed in their invasion of the island in April 1961 in an attempt to overthrow Fidel Castro. Montero was sentenced to a 30-year term in September 1961.

All but nine of the prisoners were released within 22 months of the invasion in exchange for $53 million in food and medical supplies. Of the other eight, one died in prison, six were freed earlier and one remains imprisoned.

Montero said he did not know why Castro released him five years before his sentence was to be completed. He did not elaborate on how he was treated in prison, except to say conditions improved recently.

Cuban officials sent word days ago that they were prepared to free Montero, said Kennedy aides. Kennedy also wrote to Cuban officials last week requesting the release of the other Bay of Pigs prisoner, Ramon Conte Hernandez. Montero said he had seen him and he was all right.

Montero reportedly was not released earlier because he had been a major in the army of dictator Fulgencio Batista, whom Castro overthrew in 1959; had refused to sign a confession; and would not wear a prison uniform, the aides said.

Montero said although he would not take part in another invasion, "I will always maintain my combat against Communism and Castro."

After an emotional reunion with his family, he called Kennedy, who was vacationing at the family retreat in Hyannis Port, Mass., to thank him for his efforts.

"I want to welcome you to freedom," Kennedy told Montero, according to Kennedy spokesman Bob Mann."I greatly admire your personal courage."

Mann said the senator would continue trying to gain release of all remaining political prisoners in Cuba, estimated at 140.

Water pours through Great Salt Lake dike

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Water kept pouring today through a dike breached by the record-high Great Salt Lake, and authorities said ponds used by a chemical extraction plant were flooded.

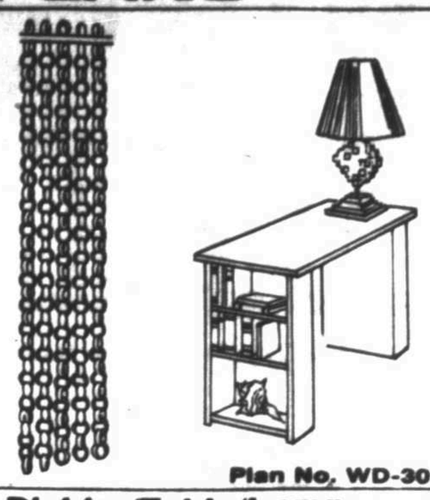

The inland sea, at its highest recorded level, burst the earthen AMAX Magnesium Corp. dike late Saturday and threatened to surge toward two interstates and Union Pacific Railroad tracks.

By late Sunday, the water was flowing over a secondary dike and moving toward one highway, Interstate 15, and the tracks.

However, Francine Giani, an aide to Gov. Norm Bangerter, said a dike protecting the highway and railroad appeared to be strong enough to hold back the floodwaters.

"The opinion of our experts is that they (I-15 and the tracks) will not be in any danger," Giani said.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

FORD TAURUS: New approach

by Tom Cooper

The new Ford Taurus reflects some major changes in Detroit's approach to the family sedan. The automaker clearly studied the features of the world's cars and chose the best for this auto. Ford says that they identified 400 of the best features then set objectives for the Taurus. The result is a car that is heavily influenced with a European flavor and one that is said to be the Ford in Ford Motor Co.'s future.

The new Taurus was 5 years in making and by the company's estimate cost $3-billion. Over 110,000 miles went into the development of this car, and Ford deliberately delayed the introduction several times to get the bugs out. Even some of Ford's most serious critics will say that it was time and money well spent.

The Taurus is more than just another car. It is one that may begin to make others in its class obsolete by comparison. Most noticeable about the outside appearance of this new Ford is the sleek, aerodynamic shape, which makes it one of the most aerodynamically efficient 6 passenger, sedans built in America. This is the result of intensive wind tunnel testing, the most ever for a Ford vehicle. Every detail has been considered to make sure this car rides and handles as smoothly and quietly as possibl, with the best possible fuel economy

The real beauty of Taurus lies in its functionality and not just in its impressive looks. Examples of this can be seen in such common features as the visors. The Tauras is equipped with a secondary driver's visor that allows you to cut off the sun from the front and the side at the same time. Even the comfort of the rear passengers has been considered with the addition of rear heating ducts. In all, the conveniences and comforts are too many to mention here.

It's comforting to know that after all this work Ford did not just slap in an old engine. The optional 3.0 liter V6 is acclaimed by the company as one of the simplest and most reliable engines in the industry with over 1,000,000 miles of combined prototype testing behind it. Also available is an equally impressive 2.5 liter 4 sylinder engine.

The new Taurus is available as a 4 door sedan or station wagon. It has the room, seating comfort, ride, and quietness of the better domestic cars. It also has the handling, engine response, fuel economy, and convenient controls of the better imports. And even some critics have said that it has a high leve of quality control.

Time will bear out the significance of the Taurus accomplishment, but one thing is certain, its is more than just another car. It is, in the words of the Ford Motor Company, "a philosophy that will make other cars in its class obsolete by comparison."

This feature appears each Monday in the Classified Section as a reader service of the Midland Reporter-Telegram
