Out of the shadows

His shadow captured in the spotlight, former President Gerald Ford gestures to emphasize a point during his talk Tuesday night to a dinner crowd in Midland Center. He focused on the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and problems in the Mideast. The $500-per-couple dinner was sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of Associated Builders and Contractors.

Ford focuses on Sadat's assassination

Still recovering from the 60-hour whirlwind trip to Egypt to attend Anwar Sadat's funeral, former President Gerald Ford focused the beginning of his talk Tuesday night on the Egyptian leader's assassination and future for the Middle East.

Ford was guest speaker for the $500-per-couple dinner in Midland Center sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Associated Builders and Contractors. Proceeds from that dinner will go to establish a training school for the building trades in this area.

Speaking hesitantly and without organization at first, Ford said his beginning remarks would be predicated by the trip he took less than two weeks ago with former presidents Jimmy Carter and Richard Nixon. The three represented the United States at Sadat's funeral in Cairo. During the second half of his speech, Ford concentrated on the economy with the familiar words rolling out in a systematic fashion.

Sadat, in Ford's view, "was a leader of great wisdom, courage and dedication. He will be badly missed as we try to find a solution to the controversial issues of the Middle East."

After reviewing the assassination, Ford said he is convinced that more than four persons were involved.

"MY SPECULATION is that there must be more to the assassination than four people dressed as the military. That assassination was so well-planned and so skillfully executed," he said. "I'm personally convinced that more than four persons were involved."

Contributing to the success of the killing was the inadequacy of Sadat's security people, Ford added. "The security people connected to Sadat weren't doing their job. Pictures show there was no reaction by them. Those involved in the so-called protection weren't in place to do their essential job."

Ford praised Sadat's widow, Jihan, calling her "one of the most outstanding women in the world today."

Mrs. Sadat told the three former U.S. presidents that her husband "died in the cause of peace," and Ford agreed with that assessment. He

Midland police officer suspended pending probe

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A three-year veteran of the city police force has been suspended without pay in the wake of an incident last week which sent a Midland youth to the hospital for emergency treatment of head injuries.

In a memo to City Personnel Director David Hunter Tuesday, Chief of Police Wayne Gideon said: "On Oct. 19, I received a complaint from a Mr. Walter Sowell, 116 South County Road, Midland, concerning an alleged civil rights violation involving Officer Terry Lowe.

"I have reviewed video film of the arrest-booking procedure and I am of the opinion Officer Terry Lowe is in violation of article 2-20 of the Midland Police Department rules and regulation 'use of force' and under the City of Midland Personnel Policies...specifically 'mistreatment of the public.'

"I have notified Officer Terry Lowe of his immediate suspension without pay pending the completion of an internal investigation of the matter."

Gideon said Tuesday afternoon two other officers involved in the alleged beating also were under investigation but had not been suspended "at this time." They are reportedly a sergeant and a booking desk officer.

Gideon declined to discuss the matter further, except to deny reports from police sources who say Lowe's suspension marks the first time in memory that an officer has been suspended without pay while an investigation was taking place.

"No, it has happened before," said Gideon. He did not elaborate.

Sowell, a 17-year-old furniture store employee who is 6 feet, 2 inches and weighs 130 pounds, was arrested at 1:30 a.m. Oct. 16 on charges of public intoxication, disorderly conduct and offensive language to a police officer. His mother, Dorthea Sowell, has been a cook at the city jail for about a year.

Sowell told The Reporter-Telegram he contacted the law firm of Odessa attorney Warren Burnett about handling the case, but would not say if they had agreed to take it.

Sowell also said he had never been arrested before and claims he was beaten at the booking desk and later in an isolation cell the night of his arrest.

He was treated for head injuries at Midland Memorial Hospital and received eight or nine stitches to close a scalp laceration, according to hospital records.

Lowe, 32, has worked for the department since Aug. 16, 1978. He was assigned a canine unit and worked the "hot hours" of police duty: 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. His monthly pay was $1,769.

He's a decorated Marine Corps Vietnam veteran and an underwater explosives expert who received Navy frogman training and went through Army Airborne School.

Lowe was hospitalized for stab wounds received in the line of duty the night of Aug. 5, 1979. No arrests were made in the case.

Lowe declined comment on his suspension, other than to say he has contacted the police union's attorney about the matter. The investigation is expected to be completed in a few days, according to Gideon.

'Freedom of choice' failed

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Odessa public school officials, in an allegedly token effort to desegregate schools, offered secondary students a "freedom of choice" to attend whatever other Odessa schools they wanted in 1955 following a U.S. Supreme Court order to desegregate schools.

But no students from the black and Mexican-American communities opted to switch from the "colored" school, Blackshear Junior-Senior high school, to the all-white Odessa High School in the 1955-56 school year, testified Edward Downing, director of special services for the Ector County Independent School District and former principal of Blackshear.

Likewise, no white students elected to transfer to Blackshear.

Downing was testifying in federal court in Midland on Tuesday in a 10-year-old case to determine if Odessa school officials intentionally sidestepped desegregation and maintained a dual system of education.

U.S. Department of Justice attorney Richard Epps asked Downing why no black students transferred to the Anglo school or why Anglo students did not transfer to the black school.

"I suppose they were happy in the schools they were attending," said Downing, a black educator who testified that "We were instructed to announce it (the freedom-of-choice plan) in classes and assemblies."

THE "HITCH" to the choice in 1955 and in subsequent years was that Odessa schools, unlike many across the nation, did not offer intra-city busing. School officials there practice the neighborhood concept of education, as did Midland until the late 1960s.

In the mid-1960s, school officials again passed the freedom-of-choice resolution, and relatively few black students elected to transfer to Anglo schools. Then, in 1965, about 30 Blackshear students "decided to transfer to Ector (High School), which was built about 1957, testified Howard Butler, former principal of Ector High School.

In the trial before U.S. District Judge Fred Shannon of San Antonio, the government is trying to show that Odessa school officials operated a systematic dual-education program for Anglos and non-Anglos and condoned "educational inequities."

ECISD's court thrust is to show otherwise — that it offered students the option of which schools to attend under the freedom-of-choice policy.

UW reaches 45.8 percent of 1982 goal

With the United Way of Midland's campaign for 1982 at its halfway mark, volunteers reported at noon today a total of $617,829.95, or 45.8 percent of this year's goal of $1.35 million.

At a report meeting today at the Yucca Theatre, Campaign Chairman George W. Bush noted that figure reached the objective of 45 percent for the first reporting period.

"I am very pleased with our first results," Bush noted, adding "the time has come to re-double our efforts if we are to reach 70 percent of goal just one week from now and complete our drive in three weeks."

More than $300,000 in additional contributions are needed by next week if the drive is to stay on schedule, Bush added.

According to United Way groupings of contributors by field of employment, major oil companies and their employees are nearest completing their objective, having reached 67.4 percent of their projected total. Chairman of the Major Oil Section is Dan Mendell.

Other sections leading in collections include Finance and Services, Marilyn Culp, chairman; Manufacturing, Jim Ingram, chairman; Intermediate Oil Companies, Will Green, chairman; and Professional, Jane Wolf, chairman.

Plans complete for reunion

Plans have been finalized for the staging of the 12th biennial reunion of Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers here Oct. 30, according to Chairman Jno. P. Butler.

He announced a change in location for one of the reunion's major events, stating that the evening reception for both men and women will be held in the Midland Hilton, rather than at the Petroleum Club, as previously announced. The function is scheduled from 6 to 9 p.m.

The men's luncheon, at which Gov. Bill Clements will be the featured speaker, also will be held at the Hilton.

A reception and luncheon for the women will be held at the Midland Country Club, with bus service from the hotel to be provided. Mrs. Clements will be the guest of honor.

Tours of Midland and vicinity and the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame will highlight the afternoon entertainment.

Butler said that advance registration indicates a record attendance at this year's celebration.

The event is sponsored by the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers Association, in cooperation with the Petroleum Committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

The registration desk will open at 9 a.m. on the day of the reunion at the Hilton, staffed by members of the Midland Desk and Derrick Club. A coffee and visitation period will begin at 9:30 a.m.

All men and women who were engaged in some phase of the oil business in the Permian Basin area of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico at least 30 years ago, prior to Oct. 30, 1981, qualify as Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers. Those persons who are eligible and who have not previously enrolled as pioneers are invited to do so at the Chamber of Commerce, Les Weatherall, membership chairman, said.

17-year-old suspect held following Tuesday night shooting incident

A 17-year-old suspect was in custody at the county jail this morning following a shooting early last night that left one man dead.

Ron Ferrenburg, no age or address immediately available, died in Midland Memorial Hospital shortly before midnight, according to a sheriff's department investigator who said the shooting took place about 6 p.m. in the yard of a residence on County Road 174, a quarter-mile east of CR 170 South.

Ferrenburg reportedly suffered a gunshot wound to the head. A .38-caliber revolver was taken into evidence. The suspect was expected to be formally charged with murder later today.

Rep. Bill Keese, D-Somerville, at a news conference Tuesday, says Citizens Against Water Taxes would reject the water fund constitutional amendment if they understood how it would affect their pocketbooks.

Amendment has about 50-50 chance

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A pollster for Citizens Against Water Taxes says a recent poll shows the water fund constitutional amendment has a slightly more than 50-50 chance of passing.

The organization said, however, Texans would defeat the proposal on the Nov. 3 ballot if they "understood how it would affect their pocketbooks."

Rep. Bill Keese, D-Somerville, and environmentalist Stuart Henry held a news conference Tuesday to discuss the results of a poll taken by Opinion Analysts Inc. between Sept. 21 and Oct. 1.

The poll showed 38 percent of the 806 persons polled favored the water proposal while 17 percent opposed it and 44 percent were undecided.

Pollster Jeffrey Smith said because the election will be a "low-interest, low-turnout election," the results could not be taken at face value.

"If the proposal shows a two-to-one favorable margin in the poll, it is probably at about a break-even position. Thus, our statewide results would indicate a slightly more than even chance of the amendment passing at this time," Smith said.

He said the poll had a sampling error of "about 4 percent."

Smith's report said the favorable reponse to the amendment dropped when those polled were asked if they would vote for it even if they learned it would allow the Legislature "to by-pass constitutional spending limits." He said 43 percent of those favoring the proposal said they would be less likely to vote for it if that were the case.

The proposal would dedicate half the state treasury surplus — defined as the difference between revenue collected in a biennium and the state spending limit — to a fund to finance water projects. The Legislature could spend the money on other things, however, by majority vote.

The spending limit says state expenditures may not rise faster than the growth rate of the Texas economy.

In an apparent reference to Speaker Bill Clayton, the architect of the Water Trust Fund proposal, Keese said, "Today, the same people who proposed that 'spending limit' are attempting to subvert and effectively repeal it with the Water Tax Amendment, which would automatically spend half of whatever might remain in the Treasury over and above the spending limit."

Austin Mayor Carole McClellan, general chairman of Water for Texas, which supports the amendment, said:

"Not satisfied with the results of their poll, however, the opposition has tried desperately to come up with a finding in keeping with its own views by injecting a misleading question based on the assertion that passage of the Water Trust Fund amendment would allow the Legislature to bypass constitutional spending limits. Such a question is shameless deception."

Henry said Citizens Against Water Taxes has only $10,000 in its campaign treasury and would fight the amendment mainly by sending caravans of speakers over the state.

Opponents of water trust fund amendment reveal results of poll

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Opponents of the proposed water trust fund amendment Tuesday released the results of a poll they contend show that Texas voters would reject the proposal "if they understood how it would affect their pocketbooks."

State Rep. Bill Keese, D-Somerville, said the poll shows that the proposed amendment, which will appear as Proposition 4 on the Nov. 3 general election ballot, has a "slightly more than even chance" of passing at this time.

"If the fiscal impact of the proposed 'water tax amendment' is even partly understood, however, the voters would overwhelmingly reject this proposal," Keese said.

The poll, commissioned by Citizens Against Water Taxes and conducted in late September by Opinion Analysts Inc. of Austin, shows 38 percent of the voters questioned favored the amendment, while 17 percent oppose it. A total of 44 percent of the 806 voters questioned were undecided.

However, when asked if they would favor the amendment if they learned that it would allow the Texas Legislature to "bypass constitutional spending limits," 48 percent said they would be less likely to vote for Proposition 4, while 23 percent said it would make no difference and 18 percent were unsure.

"Texas voters overwhelmingly said they didn't want to be lied to again," Keese said. "In 1979, Texas voters approved a constitutional amendment limiting the increase in state spending to the same rate as the growth of the Texas economy as a whole. Today, the same people who proposed that 'spending limit' are attempting to subvert and effectively repeal it with the 'water tax amendment,' which would automatically spend half of whatever tax revenue might remain in the treasury over and above the spending limit."

Keese said that, as a legislator, he resents statements by proponents of the amendment that the Legislature would "fritter away" those funds if not dedicated to the water plan.

"What we are talking about is taxes and spending," Keese said. "The adoption of Proposition 4 would probably necessitate the largest tax increase in Texas history.

"Texas has avoided new or increased state taxes for the past decade only because there have been surpluses in each budget period which have been used to keep up with inflation and unexpected emergencies," Keese said. "If those excess taxes are already spent, the Legislature will have no alternative but to impose new taxes — possibly a personal or corporate income tax — or drastically reduced needed services such as aid to public education and highway maintenance."

Austin attorney Stuart Henry, representing the Sierra Club, added that passage of the amendment is almost sure to result in increases in local property taxes and water bills in order to finance revenue bonds issued under the water plan.

Keese said groups opposing the proposition will be touring the state soon to "educate" the voters about the adverse impacts of Proposition 4. Henry added that Citizens Against Water Taxes so far has collected only $10,000 to support their efforts to defeat the measure.

"Obviously, the problem is overcoming the hundred of thousands of dollars that the lobbyists, bond lawyers, contractors and other special interest groups who stand to profit from the adoption of the 'water tax amendment' are willing to spend to mislead the voters," Keese said. "They can't win this election unless they buy it — and that's what they're trying to do."

Bentsen seeks Senate study of agricultural subsidization

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen has called for Senate hearings into what he said is unfair subsidization of agricultural products by European countries.

Europe's policy of subsidizing its surplus production for export purposes raised Europe's share of the world market from 6.2 percent in 1970 to 15.6 percent in 1980, Bentsen said Tuesday.

The Texas Democrat wrote Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on International Trade, to call hearings as soon as possible on the problem.

Bentsen is the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee.

"This policy is having disastrous effects upon U.S. agricultural exports to markets other than Europe. In a diverse range of products from poultry to barley and sugar, European market shares have shot up on the basis of subsidies," Bentsen said.

Bentsen said the European nations are supposed to be bound by an agreement not to grant export subsidies on agricultural products if it produces more than an equitable share of world export trade in the product.

Hearings should touch not only on that point, but on what remedies are available to U.S. exporters and whether those remedies are effective, he added.

The recent Multilateral Trade Negotiations were intended to abolish hidden practices that give one country trade advantages over another. Section 301 of the 1974 Trade Act provides for the filing of complaints if U.S. exporters feel their competitors in other countries are acting unfairly.

The complaints are filed through the president's special trade representative.

"I am concerned that Section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974 as amended is not being used appropriately," Bentsen wrote Danforth.

The problem should be addressed "before the Europeans make our access to markets virtually impossible through increased market share, long-term contracts, and sharply increased subsidies," Bentsen said.

Common Cause board opposes water trust fund

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Common Cause said Tuesday its state board has voted to oppose proposed amendments to create a so-called water trust fund and to establish a state finance management committee.

The board at its meeting this month voted to support only one of seven amendments on the Nov. 3 ballot, one that would grant an East Texas farmer and others in this situation clear title to their land.

The farmer in Leon County had bought the land and paid taxes on it for 50 years, but did not own it because of a 140-year-old defect in the original seller's title.

Texan expresses his interest in return to gold standard

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Texas congressman has made another pitch for the United States to solve many of its monetary problems by returning to the gold standard.

Rep. Ron Paul, R-Lake Jackson, testified Tuesday in a House subcommittee that he shares the concern with high interest rates, but said they are not the problem in themselves.

"I don't see high interest rates as the disease but as a symptom, a symptom of a very sick currency," Paul told the House Consumer Affairs Subcommittee.

Paul, ranking Republican on the subcommittee, is a member of the U.S. Commission on Gold Policy, which is studying the role of gold in domestic and international monetary affairs.

"You must get to the core of the problem by addressing monetary policy. When you have a sound currency, you don't have 20 percent interest rates. The problem is caused by the never-ending expansion of money and credit," Paul said. The cure is a return to the gold standard, he added.

Paul's comments came during hearings by the subcommittee on two bills designed to override interest rate ceilings imposed by states on consumer loans.

Two lawyers for the subcommittee testified Tuesday they made an undercover investigation of furniture stores and auto dealer showrooms in Texas and Arkansas to compare their prices.

Their investigation turned up no evidence, they said, to suggest that things are significantly worse for consumers in Arkansas, the state with the lowest usury ceiling in the nation.

State flood panel named

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) —A House committee to study new methods of controlling floods was named Tuesday by Speaker Bill Clayton.

Rep. Rodney Tow, D-Conroe, was appointed chairman of the committee, which also includes Reps. Gerald Geistweidt, R-Mason, vice chairman; Chip Staniswalis, R-Amarillo; Gerald Hill, D-Austin; and Joe Hanna, D-Breckenridge.

"Damaging flood water resulting in the loss of property and lives have ravaged many areas of our state," Clayton said in a statement. "Moreover, the high cost of flooding disasters has become a serious burden on individuals and local governments.

The committee will make recommendations to the 1983 Legislature.

Army private waives jury trial

By BEN DE FOREST
Associated Press Writer

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Against the advice of his defense attorney, a white Army private accused of the ".22-caliber" slayings of three blacks waived his right to be tried by a jury.

Joseph Christopher, 26, made the suprise motion Tuesday as jury selection began in Supreme Court.

Christopher has pleaded innocent to second-degree murder charges in the separate shootings of two black men and a black teen-ager in Erie County in September 1980.

Christopher has also been indicted for a murder in New York City and for a homicide in Niagra Falls.

The New York slaying was one of four in one day that police believe are related, but Christopher has not been charged in the other three. He also has not been charged in two other upstate New York slayings that police believe are related to the ".22-caliber" killings.

"I feel you're an educated man. You know the law, and you're the judge," Christopher told Judge William Flynn after the judge explained to him his rights to a jury trial.

"Your honor, I don't approve of this ... It is not consistent with my advice," defense attorney Mark Mahoney said.

And Chrfstopher balked for a moment after Flynn told him he would have to sign a waiver to a jury trial.

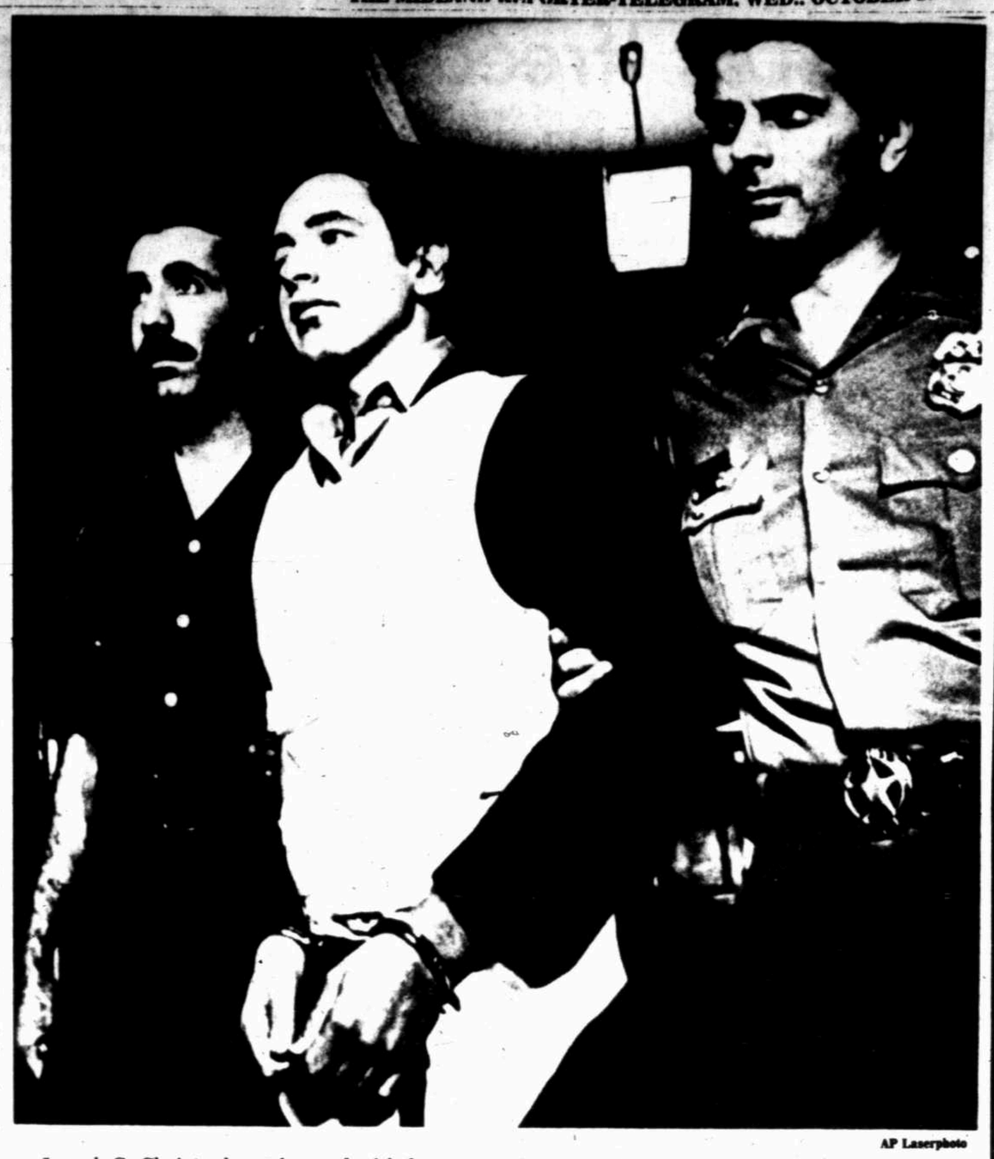

"I'm not signing nothing. Just put it on record I'm waiving a jury trial," Christopher said in a court that was cleared of spectators except for reporters and his mother, Therese.

But he signed the document after Flynn ordered jury selection to continue and seven prospective jurors had been dismissed.

Mahoney objected, asking Flynn for a further hearing.

"Am I on trial against an indictment or against my attorney?" Christopher asked.

No date was set for opening statements or the calling of first witness. The trial is expected to last three to four weeks.

Joseph G. Christopher, charged with four counts of second-degree murder in connection with the slaying of four black men last fall, is led to court in Buffalo, N.Y., by county sheriff's deputies to begin his trial.

More commissioners sentenced

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Two more former county commissioners have been sentenced to prison as the result of an investigation into allegations of bribery and kickbacks among county officials and equipment sales representatives in Texas and Oklahoma.

Former Titus County commissioners Carthel "Shorty" Reese and Alvin Parrish Jr. on Tuesday were sentenced to 18 months in prison and fined $2,500 by U.S. District Judge William Steger of Tyler.

Reese and Parrish also were ordered to serve three years probation after the end of their prison sentences. In addition, Parrish was ordered to repay $4,246.92 to Titus County, and Reese was ordered to make restitution of $1,246.20.

Chief prosecutor says media biased toward Vickie

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — Flashing traces of anger, the chief prosecutor in Vickie Daniel's murder trial says he wants only the truth in the slaying of former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel Jr.

"I'm not trying to hide anything," Liberty County District Attorney Carroll Wilborn told a cluster of newmen after Tuesday's testimony. "We're just trying to find out what happened."

Obviously upset by media coverage he considered biased toward the defendant, the normally affable Wilborn declared, "I can't help the fact that there were two witnesses to the killing and one of them is in the ground ... I'm just doing my job. I'm not going to walk in and dismiss the case.

"She admitted that she shot him. If she intentionally did the act that caused the death, then it's murder."

The state charges that Mrs. Daniel, 34, did knowingly and intentionally shoot her 39-year-old husband on Jan. 19. She never has denied firing the fatal shot, but said it was an accident.

Her murder trial is in its third week.

Not unlike the victim, Wilborn is a member of a wealthy and quite prominent Southeast Texas family.

He all but said he doesn't need the job of district attorney, which he doesn't. But supporters are quick to say Wilborn accepted the case because he's not one to sidestep responsibility.

"Are you gong to seek re-election?" he was asked by a reporter.

"Why?" he smiled, "Am I doing that bad?"

The problem to a large extent would appear that despite the power and prestige of the Daniel family, sympathy rides largely with the blond defendant.

"That's the risk I assumed when I took on this case," Wilborn said in a response to a question.

"It's been a difficult case for me ... but don't sell us short until you hear the whole case."

The district attorney's comments stemmed in part from the testimony of the state's 11th witness, an identification expert from the Harris County Sheriff's Department.

Sgt. J. D. Satcher told the jury he wanted to compare fingerprints removed from the death weapon with those of the victim but no prints were available before Daniel was buried.

Wilborn labeled the lack of prints an "investigative mess-up."

During Tuesday's testimony, the victim's younger brother — Houston Daniel — said he arrived at the home of Price and Vickie Daniel about 7:30 p.m. the night of the shooting, Jan. 19, and found medical technicians trying to restrain Mrs. Daniel.

However, Daniel said he did not know what transpired in the Daniel house that night.

"I have an opinion." he said.

"But you don't know?" asked defense lawyer Jack Zimmerman.

"No," Daniel replied.

Dr. Jerry Bunce, who treated Mrs. Daniel after the shooting, did not tell her Price was dead until the following day, he said.

"After I told her he was dead, she became hysterical again," he said.

Convicted murderer asks for death

BALTIMORE (AP) — A 27-year-old convicted murderer who says he wants to die in the electric chair told jurors that he gets "chills" when looking at the autopsy photos of his victim.

Martin F. Scott, found guilty of murder, robbery, assault and handgun charges in the the shooting death of Glenn Harrod, a 20-year-old student, took the witness stand Tuesday to explain why he should be given the death sentence instead of life imprisonment.

The sentencing hearing was scheduled to continue today. Mental health specialists were to testify for both the state and defense, and Scott's lawyer, Thomas J. Saunders, opposes his client's death penalty request.

"When I saw the autopsy photos, it sent chills through me," Scott said Tuesday. "I don't know why I killed Glenn."

Labor workers warned of layoffs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 3,500 Labor Department employees are on notice that they could lose their jobs because of agency budget cuts, sources say.

The sources, declining to be named publicly, stressed that the notices of a possible reduction in force were only preliminary and were necessitated by union contract provisions requiring 60-day notice of possible firings.

"Before an actual RIF (reduction in force) could take place, specific individuals would have to get specific notices," one source said.

He said all of those receiving the general notice of possible termination work for the Employment and Training Administration, which was most affected by the $7.8 billion in cuts announced early this year as part of the first wave of Reagan administration budget-slashing.

The notices of possible reduction in force were sent to some 3,500 ETA employees on Monday under terms of the agency's contract with Local 12 of the American Federation of Government Employees, said the sources, who declined to be identified publicly.

The "letters of intent," given to some 1,100 ETA employees working in Washington and about 2,400 others working in field offices around the country, do not mean that all of those people will be terminated, the sources said.

They said the letters merely represent the Labor Department's compliance with provisions in its union contract.

One source said that as many as 500 ETA employees could be terminated, "but that decisions on which employees will be affected have not been made."

"We don't really know how many will actually be affected because that depends on whether the further budget cuts are approved by Congress," he said.

Since President Reagan sought — and won from Congress — some $35 billion in department and agency budget reductions this summer, the president has ordered all agencies to slash their spending by another 12 percent in fiscal 1982, which began Oct. 1.

Labor Department officials had said earlier that as many as 2,500 of the agency's 20,000 employees here and around the country might lose their jobs. The agency's overall work force at the start of 1981 was 21,500.

The sources said the 1,500 terminations this year had been achieved through normal attrition.

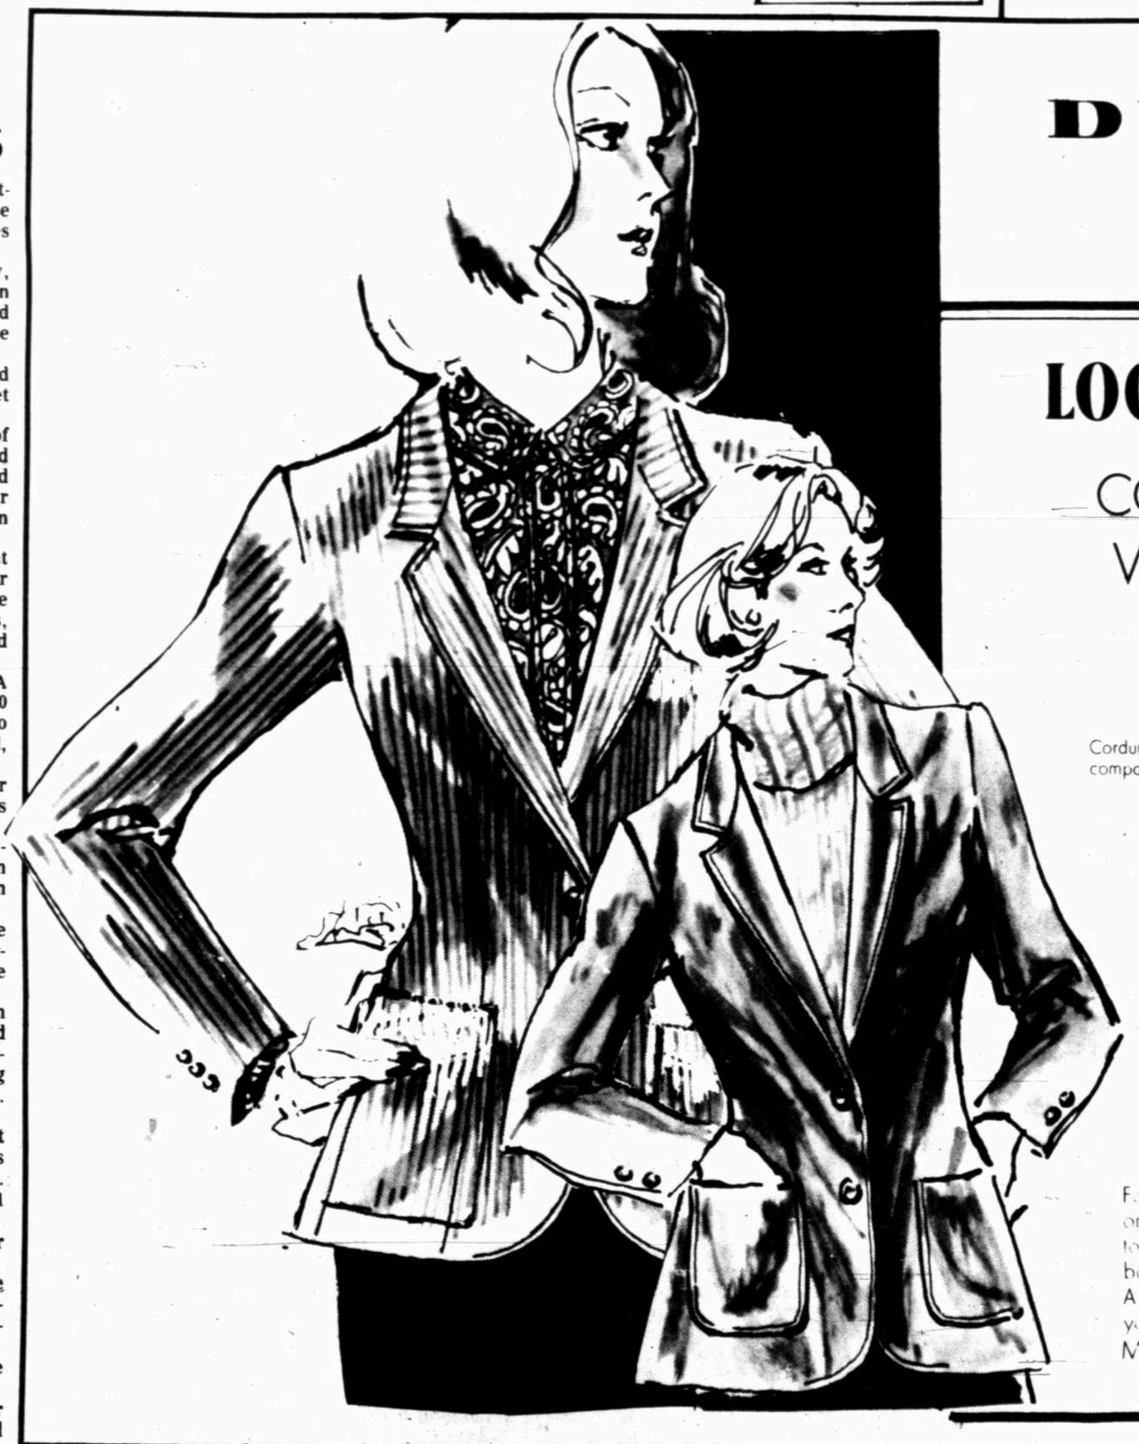

Most affected by fiscal 1982 budget cuts at the Labor Department was the federally subsidied public service jobs program funded under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act.

Some 310,000 CETA public service jobs were phased out at the end of fiscal 1981 on Sept. 30.

Agency officials have refused to say whether other CETA programs would be affected by the second wave of budget cuts.

ECISD's 'freedom of choice' failed

judge, Lucius D. Bunton, who voluntarily excused himself from the case, as he is a former ECISD trustee.

Butler said that the schools' policy allowed high school students to transfer from one school to another if their home school did not offer certain course offerings which the students desired.

"Courses are scheduled according to student demand," Butler said. But Ector, which was consolidated with Blackshear in the late 1960s, was "large enough" to offer a wide range of courses "if there was sufficient demand" for such elective courses as higher mathematics and chemistry.

"The per pupil cost makes it almost impossible to offer those courses" when only a few students request a specific course, Butler said.

The largely-black Ector High School in 1957, for example, offered vocational agriculture but dropped the program the next year due to waning interest. But, noted Butler, the Ector students could transfer to the old Odessa High School for a voc-ag course or to Permian High School for a course in electronics.

"The student furnished his own transportation," said Bulter.

In response to a 1970 order, some Odessa faculty members transferred from "black" to "white" schools so as to break up the racial-ethnic composition of teachers at any one school.

White or Hispanis teachers were transferred to the predominantly black Blackshear Junior High School "so that the faculty would not be predominantly black," said Bulter, who retired in 1974.

At that time, the ECISD was in "search for minority teachers, particularly Mexican-Americans to put in schools where the Anglo students were in the majority.

BLACK, WHITE, or Hispanic teachers who requested a transfer usually were granted their preference "if the two principals concurred" in the transfer request and "everything else being equal," Butler said under questioning by Justice Department attorney Laverne Younger.

Under questioning by Norma Solis, attorney for the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Eduational Fund (MALDEF) in San Antonio, Butler said that "All other things being equal, teacher preference was given consideration" in transfer requests.

But under the order to place white teachers in black classrooms and black teachers in white classroom, some Anglo teachers were "reluctant to transfer to black schools," said Butler, who was director of personnel for the school system.

"Yes, we had a lot of resistance from the Anglo teachers," said Bulter, "but we had as much or more from the black teachers who would be transferred.

"We had one (teacher) who refused (to transfer) and he resigned," Butler said. But he did not say if the teacher was black or white.

After the all-black Blackshear ceased being a high school in the late 1960s, some "students were a little bit upset about it," said Downing.

"I think there were some (black) parents who felt that the school should be kept open."

"(Likewise), I think there was some opposition" to the Blackshear closing among the Anglos, he said.

In the 1960s, the racial-ethnic composition of Blackshear was 43 percent Hispanic, 2 percent Anglo and 55 percent black.

Gail Smith, director of secondary education for the ECISD, testified that some 3,000 students were in the school system in the mid-1940s, when the city's population was about 20,000. Today, enrollment exceeds 25,000 students, and the city's population exceeds 100,000.

Today, Ector High School is viewed as largely black, while Odessa High School is heavy in Anglo and Hispanic students, and Permian High School is predominantly white in enrollment.

Testimony in the case, which is expected to last two weeks, continued today in federal court in the George Mahon Federal Building in downtown Midland.

Mengden brings Senate campaign to Midland

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Walter Mengden believes he is the only person qualified for the job of U.S. senator from Texas.

While he considers his major opponent to be Democratic incumbent Lloyd Bentsen, Mengden pointed out Tuesday that he doesn't believe fellow Republican opponent Jim Collins could do the job as adequately as he.

Mengden, who put up his bid for the Senate race in the Republican primary Monday, brought his newborn campaign to Midland Regional Airport while on his way to El Paso.

Mengden has been a state senator from Houston since 1972 and has been dubbed "Mad Dog."

Criticizing Bentsen for not voting the conservative views of the majority of Texans, Mengden concentrated his answers to the media's questions by repeating the often-heard GOP cry for less federal government in private lives, with the exception of the abortion issue. In that case, he called for strict government control.

HE FOCUSED UPON the current selection of federal judges, including those for the U.S. Supreme Court and the appellate courts, saying they should be "more responsive to the people."

"We need to take politics out of appointments," he said. Instead, he called for a method in which people in the nine judicial districts in the country would come up with a list from which the president could choose. This process would apply to the Supreme Court and appellate judges. Other federal judges would be subject to the whims of the people on election day.

While in the State Legislature, Mengden has pushed to get the state Equal Rights Amendment repealed, and he said that he is in favor "of nullification of the federal ERA amendment.

"There are a number of very serious questions in it," he said. When queried as to what questions he was referring to, Mengden replied, "Well, you've heard of Phyllis Schlafly, haven't you? Those are the questions."

When pressed further, he referred to the anti-ERA movement's contention that high school boys and girls will have to shower together if the federal ERA becomes law. "Something like that should be decided on the school board level. Some (questions) are real; some are imagined."

He contended that these questions would have to be answered by a group of nine people on the Supreme Court who were not elected by the people. Instead, Mengden said he would prefer to see the issues decided by the state.

REFERRING TO HIS "Mad Dog" nickname, Mengden said he gives a Mad Dog speech to the State Legislature each session in which he accuses "Democrats of spending way beyond their bounds."

Continuing on his economic spiel, Mengden criticized Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, for jacking up the interest rates.

"He is a believer in socialism," Mengden charged. "He believes he can bring the economy of the country down. He is a (former President) Carter Democrat. That man needs to resign from office."

Turning to the abortion issue, Mengden said that "before conception any woman can do what she wants." But once she becomes pregnant, the fetus should be protected by a Human Life bill, which he supports. Under that law, a woman couldn't have an abortion for any reason.

He disagreed with opponent Jim Collins' negative vote on the sale of AWACS to Saudi Arabia. Although Mengden described he and Collins as conservatives, he added that they are 180 degrees apart on issues.

THERE ARE TWO ways to approach legislation, Mengden explained. One is to "sit there and not vote. The opposition finally will wash over you." The other way is take action.

Asked about how much money he had to spend on the campaign, Mengden replied sharply, "Enough."

With the question clarified to mean how much he intended to spend and not how much money he had in his personal bank account, the senate-hopeful said, "I've got enough to run a successful campaign, which is about $4 million."

At that point, he announced he had to leave immediately for El Paso.

"There are a number of very serious questions in it (ERA movement). You've heard of Phyllis Schlafly, haven't you?"
-Walter Mengden

Showers, cold weather on way

A cold front coming down from the north is expected to have Midlanders bundling up and grabbing their umbrellas possibly tonight through Thursday, according to the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Airport.

It should be cloudy tonight and turning cooler through Thursday with possible showers and thunderstorms. The expected high in the upper 70s today should dip to a low in the upper 40s tonight with a 50 percent chance for precipitation.

Thursday's high is predicted to be in the upper 50s throughout the day with a 20 percent chance of rain.

Southwest winds will become northeasterly at 10-15 mph by late this afternoon through Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 82 fell short of the 91-degree record set in 1979 and the overnight low of 59 was well above the 38-degree record for the day set in 1976.

Reagan reaffirms promise to stand behind labor act

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ten days after the AFL-CIO led a protest against his policies, President Reagan quietly reaffirmed his promise not to ask Congress to repeal organized labor's cherished Davis-Bacon Act.

In a letter to Robert Georgine, president of the AFL-CIO's Building and Construction Trades Department, Reagan said he wanted "to assure you and your general presidents that I will continue to support my campaign pledge not to seek repeal of the act."

The letter, released by the White House, gives organized labor powerful ammunition in its battle to save the Davis-Act Act from assault by congressional conservatives.

Robert A. Bonitati, White House labor liaison, was to reiterate the administration's position today in an appearance before a convention of building trades unions in Atlantic City, N.J.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Bonitati said Reagan's commitment is deeper than a mere assertion that he will not ask Congress to repeal the law.

"The position of the administration is that we do not support repeal of the act, nor do we support piece-meal repeal of the act," he said.

The Davis-Bacon Act is a Depression-era law which requires that companies holding federal construction contracts pay their employees the "prevailing wage" in the community where the work is being done. The measure, approved in 1931, was designed to prevent importation of cheap labor.

The Reagan letter, which was in response to an inquiry by Georgine's building trades department, was dated Sept. 29, a week and a half after the AFL-CIO led more than a quarter-million people in a protest march and demonstration here against the president's social policies.

A major test of labor's lobbying clout could come later this month, when a Senate committee considers a rider to an appropropriations bill that would exempt military construction from Davis-Bacon requirements.

The administration, in an apparent effort to head off congressional moves toward repeal of the law, proposed in August a significant tightening of wage-setting rules under the 50-year-old act.

Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan said at the time that the changes could result in a savings of as much as $120 million in fiscal 1982 alone.

Critics say the Davis-Bacon Act has been greatly expanded over the years and now goes far beyond protecting workers against subpar wages.

Reagan wants to ease IRS business deductions

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration wants to ease Internal Revenue Service regulations that sharply limit the ability of taxpayers to claim business-related deductions for the use of their homes.

The major question now is whether the administration's changes will go far enough to suit Congress. Some lawmakers want to wipe out the IRS rulings entirely.

Under the administration's proposals:

—A person could take a limited deduction for the cost of maintaining an office for a secondary business in his or her home. But that portion of the home would have to be used exclusively and regularly as the principal place of the second business.

—Deductions would be allowed for maintenance and depreciation of a home rented to a relative — even if the deductions exceed the rent on the property. The owner could count the excess deductions as a loss to offset taxes on other income. The rent would have to be more than a token sum.

—Rules for personal use of vacation homes purchased to rent to others would be relaxed. The owner and his family could spend a weekend at their beach cottage and the tax deduction would not be jeopardized if the principal purpose of the visit was for maintenance of the cottage,

THE CHANGES ARE designed to clear up confusion that has resulted from the 1976 Tax Reform Act, IRS interpretations of the law and conflicting court decisions.

There appears to be little opposition to the administration's proposals, which were outlined to the House Ways and Means Committee earlier in the week by John E. Chapoton, assistant secretary of the treasury.

However, Tom Field, a liberal tax analyst, said Congress should remember that the 1976 law was passed because there had been abuses. He conceded, however, "It may well be that the cure for the abuses was overly stringent."

The most bitter criticism has centered on the tax treatment of a house or apartment that is rented to a close relative — which opponents have dubbed the "family rental tax."

Before the 1976 law, a doctor could buy a condominium, pay $2,500 a year in property taxes, interest and depreciation costs on it, rent it to a relative for $1 and claim a business loss of $2,499, which he could use to reduce the taxes on his medical fees. The 1976 law said deductions in a transaction with a relative cannot exceed the total rent.

Thus, owners can get a greater tax advantage by renting to a stranger than to their own mothers. On the other hand, Chapoton said, "It seems that one should not be able to generate losses from depreciation deductions simply by renting the...(home) within one's family if, in reality, the family is a single economic unit."

ON BALANCE, CHAPOTON said, the administration will assume that family members "are truly dealing at arm's length" in such cases and will ask Congress to change the law accordingly.

He cautioned, however, that IRS will look closely to determine if such rents are on fair market terms, and to see if the owner of the property is giving gifts to the renter that offset the rent.

The issue of a deduction for keeping an office in one's home has been especially muddled. Before 1976, a taxpayer often could claim he did occasional work in one room of the house and take a deduction for the share of home costs.

The 1976 law ended that practice and allowed the deduction only when a portion of the home is used exclusively on a regular basis as the taxpayer's principal place of business — not a sideline. The administration's proposal — which can be implemented without a congressional vote — would permit a limited deduction if a section of the home is used regularly and for no purpose other than as the principal location of a second business.

Agent says friend driving Harrelson's car

HOUSTON (AP) — A friend was driving convicted hit man Charles Harrelson's car at the time a search warrant was issued that led to Harrelson's arrest on illegal gun possession charges, a federal agent has testified.

Harrelson has been pegged as a prime suspect in the assassination of U.S. District Judge John Wood and is on trial for an unrelated charge of possession of firearms by an ex-convict.

The testimony of federal agent George M. Taylor came Tuesday as Harrelson's attorneys continued to try to cast doubts on the legality of the warrant. The guns were found during a search of his car after police stopped him in Houston Feb. 1, 1980.

Taylor, a special agent with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said he knew Harrelson was in Dallas when Harrelson's Lincoln Continental was placed under surveillance in Houstton late in January 1980.

HARRELSON, WHO SERVED time in prison for a 1968 murder-for-hire killing in McAllen and was released on parole in 1976, is accused of having a shotgun, a rifle and three revolvers in the car.

Under questioning from defense attorney Bob Tarrant, Taylor said Harrelson's friend, Hampton Robinson III, told him he had driven the car while Harrelson was in Dallas.

Robinson, who has testified before the federal grand jury in San Antonio investigating the Wood assassination, is himself scheduled to be tried for murder Oct. 26 in the May 12 killing of a lifelong friend, William S. Green, 36.

Assistant District Attorney Ted Wilson said the serial number of one of the revolvers was listed in the search warrant.

Correction

It was mistakenly reported Tuesday that the Desert Inn Liquor Store, 3416 Thomason Drive, was held up Monday night.

In fact, a Mesquite man said he was held up outside a grocery store and a phone at the liquor store apprently was used to notify police.

The victim told officers his wallet containing $75 in cash was taken by a man armed with a large caliber British handgun.

Officials hit campaign trail

WASHINGTON (AP) — With his economic program reaching its most controversial point, and a major poll showing his popularity slipping, President Reagan is sending top administration officials to Virginia and New Jersey to campaign in gubernatorial races that could become referenda on Reaganomics.

The president himself plans a brief stop in New Jersey this evening on behalf of Thomas H. Kean, who is seeking to end eight years of Democratic residence in the governor's mansion.

He is expected to squeeze in a visit to Virginia the week before the Nov. 3 election to campaign for J. Marshall Coleman, the state's Republican attorney general who is running for governor.

Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan, a Republican who grew up in the rough-and-tumble world of the Democratic-controlled Hudson County, N.J., has virtually camped out in his home state. Vice President George Bush also has gone to bat for Kean.

Carl Golden, a spokesman for Kean, is satisfied that the administration is paying "a lot of attention" to the New Jersey race and did not quarrel with the view that the vote could reflect the public's view of Reagan's economic program — rather than its views of Kean or his Democratic opponent, Rep. James J. Florio.

A late September poll taken by Rutgers University's Eagleton Institute of Politics showed Florio with a lead of six percentage points.

But neither Kean's nor Florio's campaign has caught fire, and the picture there is clouded by Florio's ability to attract Republican votes in South Jersey, and pollsters' findings that more New Jersey voters identify themselves as Republicans than are actually registered as members of the GOP.

Hinkley received death threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr., who is accused of shooting President Reagan on March 30, has been the target of a threat and has written of possible suicide, a prison official says.

Capt. Paul Hungerford, chief correctional supervisor at the U.S. prison at Butner, N.C., testified Tuesday that he found it necessary to search Hinckley's cell several times each day.

During the second day of a hearing in U.S. District Court, Hungerford called Hinckley a "suicide threat, a threat to my staff, to the security of the institution. There was a threat to him from outside."

He did not elaborate on the outside threat.

In one of the searches of Hinckley's cell on July 23, Butner guards found and read a 3½-page handwritten document that defense lawyers said was protected from disclosure by attorney-client privilege.

Hinckley's lawyers asked for the hearing to argue that the seizure violated Hinckley's constitutional rights and cannot be used by the prosecution at Hinckley's trial, scheduled for Nov. 30.

Washington's WDVM-TV, meanwhile, reported Tuesday that Hinckley wrote he had been part of a conspiracy and would be willing to make a deal with prosecutors to disclose details.

The station also said Hinckley attempted to send letters to what appeared to be fictitious co-conspirators but that they were intercepted and read by prison officials.

The FBI has said its official investigation of the shooting disclosed no conspiracy.

For now, the document's contents remain private under orders of U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker. Parker took the argument under advisement after taking statements from several Butner correctional officers privately in his chambers.

The next pretrial hearing for Hinckley is scheduled Monday.

Lewis' drug problem called worse than Presley's

By JERRY GRAY
Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Rock 'n' roller Jerry Lee Lewis had a more severe drug problem than Elvis Presley, and in 1976 told of a 20-year history of drug use, a mental-health specialist testified in the trial of a physician who treated both singers.

At one point Lewis pulled a pistol and walked out of a hospital where he was being treated for drug-related ailments, Dr. David Knott testified Tuesday.

Knott said Dr. George Nichopoulos was "tremendously frustrated" by his failure to wean Lewis and Presley from drugs. Knott was a prosecution witness but made those remarks in response to cross-examination from defense attorney James Neal.

Nichopoulos, a 53-year-old internist, is accused in a 14-count indictment of over-prescribing stimulants, barbiturates and painkillers to himself, the two singers and other patients. Nichopoulos is not accused of involvement in Presley's death.

The trial before Judge Bernie Weinman enters its third week today.

Knott, a counselor in a drug and alcohol program at Memphis Mental Health Institute, testified that Nichopoulos asked his help in trying to wean his two most famous patients from drugs. He said each success was followed by a relapse.

"If a patient does not intend to achieve a drug-free state, a doctor can't achieve a drug-free state for him?" Neal asked.

"That's correct," Knott replied.

BUT UNDER questioning from prosecutor Jewett Miller, Knott said Nichopoulos, against his advice, would resume prescribing amphetamines for the singers each time.

"One does not treat stimulant abuse with more stimulants," Knott said.

Knott said that when he first treated Lewis in February 1976, Lewis spoke of a 20-year history of drug use. Knott said Lewis' family had a history of psychiatric problems and Lewis' own difficulties were worsened by marital problems and the deaths of two sons.

Under Miller's questioning, Knott said Lewis was hospitalized for drug-caused psychiatric and physical problems five times in two years.

Knott read from a nurse's report from St. Joseph Hospital East, where Lewis was staying in February 1976. The report described Lewis "waving pistol about and talking bad language. Patient walked out of hospital carrying pistol."

Lewis' manager, Robert Porter, said in Nashville that the singer wished people wouldn't dredge up his past.

"He's made no bones that he's had problems. He's just glad to be alive," Porter said.

Lewis, who has not been subpoenaed as a witness, is recuperating from a perforated stomach.

Knott treated Presley for a drug problem in October 1973 at Baptist Hospital in Memphis.

TESTIMONY MONDAY revealed publicly for the first time that medical examiners found 12 drugs, including toxic levels of the sedative methaqualone, in the blood and tissues of Presley, who died Aug. 16, 1977. The complete autopsy report has not been disclosed at the request of Presley's family.

Two instant replays enough to convict man of rape

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — It took jurors one hour — and two instant replays of an explicit videotape — to return a rape of a child conviction against the man who appeared in the tape with his young daughter and her friend.

Challenged on Tuesday by a defense attorney who said, "I defy you to find sexual intercourse in that film," the seven-woman, five-man jury asked for a second and third look at portions of the tape.

After the third look the jury convicted Stanley Weldon Williams, a 31-year-old "mail-order minister," of raping a 10-year-old girl who testified Tuesday. The punishment phase of the trial was set for today.

The tape was found by police in Williams' Austin home in June. The case came to their attention after another friend of Williams' 8-year-old daughter said she did not like to go to the Williams' house because he showed "nasty movies."

Investigators, who expected to find professionally made pornographic films at the house, were surprised when they found the videotape showing Williams, his daughter and her friend.

"This was the jackpot," prosecutor Brook Busbee said of the videotape. "The rest was pornography. Sick, but just misdemeanor stuff."

Williams, who has worked as an electronic parts salesman, sat motionless during four showings of the tape, once when the jurors were out of the courtroom. He alternately stared at the floor and held his head in his hands. From where he sat he could hear the tape but not see it.

The jurors were equally motionless. State District Judge Mace Thurman took only quick glances at the 19-inch color television on which the tape was shown.

"I hope you will be reasonable and not overly shocked by what you see," prosecutor Curt Beckcom told the jury.

Later, outside the courtroom, he said, "I'm sure most of then had never seen that kind of thing before." He said "three or four of the women looked like they were sick."

During their deliberations the jurors showed they were willing to closely scrutinize the tape to rule on a key issue. Defense lawyer Hugh Lowe, who objected to the showing of the tape, argued that no rape took place.

Lowe conceded there was "rubbing," but he said there was no "penetration."

"There is no question that sexual conduct occurred," he told jurors. However, he asked them to convict Williams of a lesser offense.

Thurman turned down the jurors request to view the tape privately and "freeze' some portions to get a better look. They were allowed to look at the tape as often as they wanted in the courtroom.

The trial included a brief appearance by the 10-year-old girl who appeared in the film. The blonde girl seemed calm and composed as she answered questions from Ms. Busbee.

Beckcom said the girl was "enticed" into the situation by Williams' daughter.

He said Williams received his clergyman's credentials through the mail.

"I'm going to have to ask you some silly questions for the record," Ms. Busbee said before asking the girl if she was married, female and under 17.

Beckcom said the girl had cried Monday, but had been helped by workers from a local rape crisis center. The girl was not in the courtroom when the tape was shown.

The testimony also included a short appearance by Deborah Orr, Williams' ex-wife. Williams has remarried.

Ms. Orr viewed a 10-second portion of the tape to identify the room where the tape was made.

Auction to be held in Houston

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A letter from General William B. Travis at the Alamo and a ride in a Confederate Air Force B-29 are among the items that will be auctioned Nov. 6-7 at the "Texana Auction of the Decade" in Houston.

The event will benefit the endowment fund of the Texas State Historical Association.

Dr. L. Tuffly Ellis director of the association, said more than 200 items will be auctioned, including a John J. Audubon lithograph (1846), two pre-Civil War maps and an 1869 pamphlet of the Constitution of the State of West Texas.

Reagan an issue in gubernatorial race

By GEORGE W. WILBUR
Associated Press Writer

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Virginia's 1981 race for governor pits the conservative son-in-law of one of the nation's most liberal Democratic presidents against a fellow lawyer who champions Reagan Republicanism. On the line is Reagan's prestige.

Opponents in what could be a $5 million campaign are Democratic Lt. Gov. Charles S. Robb and Republican Attorney General Marshall Coleman. Incumbent Gov. John N. Dalton, a Republican, cannot under law seek a second term.

Robb, 42, is the millionaire son-in-law of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson. He is Virginia's only Democratic statewide officeholder.

Coleman, 39, is a former member of the House of Delegates and the state Senate, over which Robb now presides.

Independent polls consistently have shown Robb with a 5 percent to 12 percent lead, but with many voters still undecided.

Both candidates are handsome, articulate graduates of the University of Virginia Law School. Both served as Marine combat officers in Vietnam. Both claim to be conservatives — in the conservative home state of Moral Majority founder the Rev. Jerry Falwell.

But Coleman insists that Robb is a liberal legatee of his father-in-law's "Great Societ a conservative. And he skips no opportunity to make the charge.

Pointing to Robb's less than wholehearted support for the Reagan tax cut, Coleman said, "I don't see why he should be surprised when people conclude that his Great Society instincts are alive and well."

When Robb criticized his plan for a uniform sentencing program to get tough with crime, Coleman replied the attack was "a throwback to the Great Society days when rehabilitation seemed more important than putting criminals in jail."

When Robb said some federal budget cuts might fall too heavily on the poor, Coleman said, "this obviously reflects Great Society thinking."

And when Robb proposed investing up to 20 percent of state pension funds in home mortages to give a boost to the state's lagging housing industry, Coleman called it "vintage Great Society social engineering."

The lieutenant governor called it "just good business to safely earn a higher rate of return on the state's investments."

Robb, who met and married Lynda Bird Johnson while stationed at the White House, has described Coleman's efforts to link him to the Johnson administration as "ridiculous."

"I spent the entire 1960s as a Marine, not as an architect of the Great Society," he says. "Lyndon Johnson and Ronald Reagan are not running for governor of Virginia."

Robb allied himself with the moderate-conservative wing of the Virginia Democratic Party in factional disputes that arose in the mid-1970s.

After winning the lieutenant governor post in 1977, he named a committee that concluded the party — which 20 years earlier had dominated Old Dominion politics — had lost touch with the voters.

The last time Virginia voted for a Democratic governor, president or U.S. senator was in 1965. In 1976, it was the only Southern state to spurn Jimmy Carter. And it voted overwhelmingly for Reagan last year.

Robb was elected lieutenant governor in 1977 largely on the strength of his name identification and a weak Republican opponent.

In accepting the party's nomination, Robb sounded a conservative theme, speaking of achieving goals "not through directives from Washington, not through regulations, not by bloating the payroll."

In more than 30 position papers, he has hewed carefully to conservative principles. For instance, he urged that Virginia abandon its tradition of twice-a-year automobile inspections in favor of annual inspections.

He has risked alienating labor by opposing public employee unions and supporting Virginia's right-to-work law, which precludes union membership as a job requirement.

Blacks have been made unhappy by his view that states able to demonstrate a commitment to racial equality should be able to get out from under the federal Voting Rights Act.

Coleman has insisted Virginia needs another Republican governor to enhance political harmony between the statehouse and the White House, telling voters "Virginia has much to gain from the Reagan administration."

The president is scheduled to make a campaign appearance in Virginia Beach later this month on Coleman's behalf. Nancy Reagan, Vice President George Bush and a host of cabinet officials and federal agency heads already have been in the state.

"This demonstrates the depth of commitment by the Reagan administration to my candidacy," Coleman said.

Coleman alludes frequently to the fact that Robb is not a native Virginian — he was born in Arizona. His campaign commercials suggest that Robb "bought" his way into public office with "Texas money."

Lady Bird Johnson, the late president's widow, and other family members have appeared for Robb. Mrs. Johnson has donated nearly $22,000 to his campaign.

Robb seldom mentions Coleman by name. He prefers to stress his detailed social and economic proposals and leave the name-calling to surrogates.

Arizona's 'firing squad' hard at work

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Show Tom Rogers and Gordon Price a lazy or bumbling state employee, and they say they'll show the employee the door, just as they did for more than 1,000 workers last year alone.

"We're destroying Arizona's reputation as the last bastion of the lame, lazy and incompetent," said Rogers, an assistant state attorney general. He and Price, a state employee relations analyst, are the cutting edge of the state's effort to rid the state payroll of goof-offs.

Sometimes, they say, all they have to do is appear at a state agency, and workers start resigning on the spot.

"It does happen," said Price, whose license plate bears the slogan "I FIRE."

"I guess it's the old psychology working. It just seems if you walk into an area, if an employee has done something wrong, he just knows that's why you're there."

About 1,000 of Arizona's 18,000 employees were fired, demoted or suspended last year.

"I defy private industry to match that record," he said.

One in 10 of the disciplined employees has appealed to the state Personnel Board, and the state has won 90 percent of the appeals, Rogers said.

But the state employees' union says Rogers and Price aren't telling the whole story.

"What they didn't say is that there were many times when they had no case and these were settled without going to appeal," said Luis Arellano, executive director of the Arizona Public Employees Association.

Rogers and Price try to make sure that correct procedure is followed for employee discipline. Their main weapon is a half-inch-thick book of laws, rules and sample form letters that is distributed to supervisors.

One form letter tells supervisors how to handle employees who have abused sick-time.

"Dear Mrs. Fancy," the form letter says, "It was of deep concern to me that I observed you yesterday at the China Doll Restaurant ...

"This concern is manifested by your call to me on the same day indicating that you were so incapacitated due to your illness and you would not be able to return to work for approximately one week."

The letter demands a doctor's statement. The worker can be fired if the statement isn't produced, the manual says.

"We help an agency to do it right," Rogers said.

Rogers said he's had requests for copies of the manual from the U.S. Department of Labor and from private companies.

Arellano said employees get no overtime pay, so they fall back on unused sick time to get compensation for overtime.

Many private employers are afraid to fire workers because of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

"I tell them Gordon fires without regard to race, color, creed or whether the gender is male or female," Rogers said.

Arellano said Rogers misrepresents the team's success rate and the circumstances of many of the cases.

Some workers not represented by APEA "just walk away from a complain because it costs them $1,500 for an attorney to represent them," Arellano said. The APEA represents about 10,000 workers.

Rogers and Price say they don't exclude management from their efforts.

"Part of the Tom Rogers theory of victory is to fire the weak supervisor who lets things happen," Rogers said.

Philanthropic groups leave mark on economy

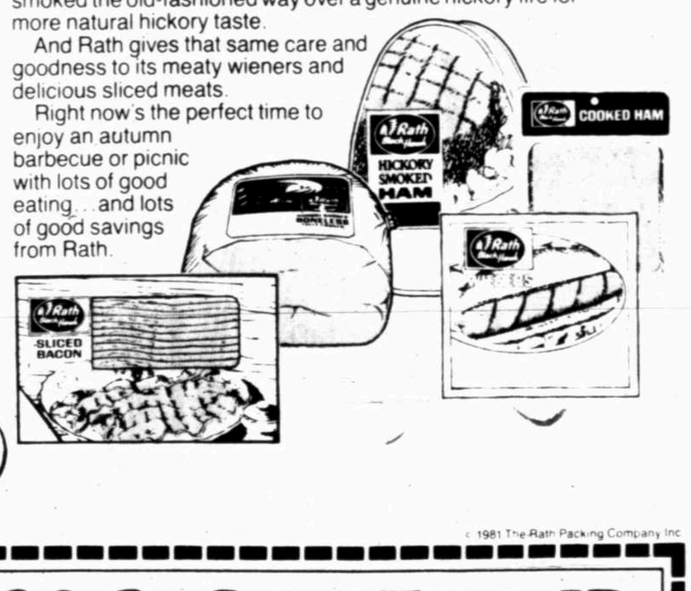

NEW YORK (AP) — Philanthropic organizations leave a huge mark on the U.S. economy, according to a Yale University study which estimates that such groups had a combined budget of $129 billion in 1980.

Midland Youth Center is in danger of becoming extinct

By Deborah Mashburn, Dara Perry and Jennifer Ramsey

Congratulations to the Bulldogs, who gave over 100 percent in games against Permian, Big Spring and Abilene. The Bulldogs' record now stands at 2—4 at midseason. Midland's mighty Bullpups have been working with an outstanding defense and an improving offense to have a 2 and 3 season.

Grab your coats and blankets and come to Midland Memorial Stadium tomorrow at 7 p.m. to cheer the Pups on to victory!

Come by bus or car to San Angelo Friday night when the Bulldogs meet the Bobcats. We need all the Bulldog fans to join the Band and Packbackers for a night of excitement.

Bruce Wilson was chosen Junior Lion for Oct. 21. He is currently student body vice president and has held other student council offices. Tricia Murphey and Richard Magness are the Junior Rotarians for this week.

The Midland Youth Center is in danger of becoming a thing of the past after 26 years of serving MHS students. Open campus has resulted in half the number of students as last year patronizing the Center at lunchtime. The lunch income is the most important revenue the center has.

"The students are not using the center at lunch or at any other time the center is open, except at school-sponsored dances, said Marvin Rasco, YC director. He commented that attendance can be improved by allowing all students to attend the dances, not just the Youth Center members. This will be in effect at the next "after-game dance." Any student who is not a member of the Youth Center will be charged $3.00 to attend the dance.

There will be a meeting at 7:15 a.m., Tuesday, Oct. 27 for all Junior Council and 100 Club members. This is a very important meeting as plans for the Halloween Carnival and Dance need to be finalized.

Any clubs that have not contacted Rasco or the Youth Center for a booth at the Halloween Carnival need to do so immediately in order to get set up in time for the Carnival.

All MHS students plan to "Trick or Treat" next week at the Youth Center's Halloween Carnival.

Art association sponsors pumpkin carving contest

ODESSA — The annual Pumpkin Carving Contest, sponsored by The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Art Association, will be Oct. 27 in the UTPB Student Lounge.

Carving of the pumpkins, which will be donated by Gibson's Discount Center, will begin at noon with the judging of the funniest, scariest and most original to follow at 3 p.m.

Planters, a facial from Elegante, aerobic classes from Heartbeat Aerobics and miscellaneous prizes from Strike It Rich will be awarded.

Olive drab army fatigues will soon be obsolete

By JAMES O. WELCH
Hearst Feature Service

The olive drab, spit and shine U.S. Army is about to be a thing of the past.

Beginning Nov. 1, at a cost of nearly $95 million, the Army will begin supplying 2 million sets of camouflage fatigues to its full-time soldiers, making the current olive drab fashion obsolete.

The Army Reserve and National Guard will be issued new camouflage fatigues over the next two years. Dress uniforms will remain the same.

According to Army spokesmen in Washington, D.C. and the Natick, Mass., experimental labs, the new uniform will last twice as long as the present garb, will be less visible in battle situations and will have "infrared deflecting dies" to help avoid enemy detection by electronic means.

The new "camouflage battle-dress uniform," or "cammies," as soldiers call them, consist of brown, tan and green patterns much different than the former all-green fatigue uniform.

And starch in the Army fatigue is going the same way as kitchen patrol, or KP, now performed by civilians.

"These are wash and wear, no starch," said Major James Weiskopf.

Almost all the Army's armaments, including artillery guns as well as most of its vehicles, have already received camouflage paint.

"Everything we do here is designed for the survivability of the soldier on the battlefield," said a Natick labs spokesman.

The Army will require that everyone have four complete sets of the fatigues, which cost $37.75 each, by Oct. 1, 1984.

Soldiers will be required to pay for their own new fatigues from a $14 monthly uniform care allowance. New recruits will be issued the new clothing.

The Army, says Weiskopf, is allowing the soldiers to spread the cost of the uniforms over a six-month period.

The old uniforms will be given to the Air Force, which still wears all-green fatigues

Murdered wife called authorities

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — A woman whose charred body was found in a suburb of Albuquerque, N.M., telephoned authorities the day before she disappeared to say she was afraid for her life, according to police officials in New Mexico.

The husband, Marion Albert Pruett, is jailed here awaiting an extradition hearing Oct. 26. He is wanted in seven states — including New Mexico — on charges ranging from bank robbery to the murder of his wife.

Pruett, 32, was arrested Saturday during a routine traffic investigation near Stratford in the Texas Panhandle, said officers with the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Tax topics subject of workshop

ODESSA — The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 and other topics will be discussed in a small business tax workshop scheduled at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin in cooperation with the Internal Revenue Service from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Oct. 23.

The workshop will cover business organizations, business income tax returns, recordkeeping, profit or loss from a business or profession, the employer's quarterly income tax return and the employer's annual federal unemployment tax return.

"We will look at the tax advantages of sole proprietorships, partnerships and corporations and at the basics of preparing business tax returns," Dr. Patricia Williams, instructor of accountancy and information systems and coordinator of the workshop, said. "We will examine how to withhold and make deposits of federal taxes and study how the IRS works in the areas of service, tax examinations, appeal rights, and the penalties a business may incur.

"We will also discuss what is needed to keep good records and how these can benefit the company."

Cost of the workshop, which includes lunch and materials, is $30. For more information, call the UTPB College of Management at 367-2162.

Ford speaks at builders' event

An unidentified Secret Service agent scans last night's crowd at Midland Center, where former President Gerald Ford addressed a "Salute To Productivity" fund-raising dinner. About 30 law enforcement officers, including the Secret Service, were assigned to protect Ford during his Midland visit.

pointed out that Sadat "was the only Arab leader who ever recovered land for Arabs without war in the past 30 years. Other leaders lost territory in war."

Sadat's hand-picked successor, Hosni Mubarak, is a solid person "but doesn't have the charisma of Sadat. Giving him time, he will be a very fine leader of the Egyptian people."

Mubarak is committed to seeing the successful conclusion of the Camp David Peace Agreement, which was negotiated between Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin during President Jimmy Carter's term.

TWO POINTS that should be carried out by April 1982 call for total withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Sinai and some autonomy set up in the Gaza Strip.

Ford said he talked with Begin while in Cairo and advised him to support Mubarak by removing Israeli troops from the Sinai before the deadline. "It would be a move of good will and would enhance his reputation," Ford added.

A major problem facing the United States in the Middle East is Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, who Ford described as a "bully, a cancer, a menace that free nations must handle. As long as he is active, he is a roadblock to peace."

Ford repeated his support for President Reagan's plan to sell AWACS to Saudi Arabia, theorizing that the sale would boost support from that country. "We need the assistance of Saudi Arabia to keep the peace process going. We can get that commitment if we sell AWACS to Saudi Arabia," Ford said to a round of applause.

He refuted arguments against the sale, saying that AWACS wouldn't be delivered for five years. And if the Arabians don't operate according to the contract, they still won't get the planes containing the "sophisticated military hardware. We (United States) hold all the chips.

"I CAN ASSURE you if the sale is turned down, it will have a serious and dire effect in the Middle East and on our friendship with Saudi Arabia," he warned.

During a news conference upon his arrival at Chaparral Aviation, Ford stood firm on an earlier statement that the Palestinian Liberation Organization, PLO, should be involved in negotiations involving Israel and Egypt if two conditions are met. Under those circumstances, the PLO would recognize Israel and adhere to Resolution 242.

The 38th president turned to the country's economy, calling 1980 "a bad year."

Reagan took over the reins of this country during a time when the economy was in worse shape than 1933-34, the year that Franklin Roosevelt began his presidency and his program to bring the country out of the Great Depression. According to Ford, Roosevelt was faced primarily with the single problem of unemployment; Reagan has tangled with a multitude of problems.

During the remainder of the speech, Ford explained why he supported Reagan's economic package of tax and budget cuts, referring occasionally back to his administration and the reductions in inflation and interest rates.

To a round of applause, he rebuked the program's critics, saying that "in almost every case, the agencies, the departments, the commissions are getting more money this year than last year. They're just not getting as much as they thought they would get."

AS FORD WARMED UP to an often-given speech, the political rhetoric rolled out.

"During my administration, I worked closely with Arthur Burns (chairman of the Federal Reserve Board) and our monetary policies produced results."

When Ford took office, he said, the inflation rate was 12 percent; when he left 30 months later, it had dropped to 4.8 percent. The prime interest rate had been 12 percent when he became president; when he left office it was 6.25 percent.

To produce positive results, the Fed and the president must work together, he said in apparent reference to recent diverging policies of Reagan and Fed Chairman Paul Volcker.

In a departure from the usual round of after-dinner speakers, Ford asked that the spotlights on him be turned off while he answered questions from the audience.

Appearing pale and tired, Ford explained that the quick trip to Egypt for the Sadat funeral had left him "a little battered and bruised, both physically and mentally.

"Life in the public arena is not always as easy as it appears," he added.

Local officers join Ford security effort

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Some 30 law enforcement officers — including city, county, state police and the Secret Service — guarded former President Gerald Ford during his Midland visit Tuesday night.

While the possibility of something happening seemed remote, no one was taking any chances. "Anytime you have a dignitary exposed to the public, you have to be extremely alert," said Capt. Billy Ray, head of the police department's detective division. "You're more cautious than usual."

Dark-suited Secret Service agents with hidden radios were placed strategically about Midland Center as Ford addressed the sellout crowd. Local uniformed and plainclothes officers stood at the rear of the center or chatted in small groups outside. So many squad cars ringed the center that someone remarked, "it looks like the police station has moved here."

Commenting earlier on the security arrangements, a deputy said: "If an organization is willing to sacrifice a man, all they'd have to do is pay the $500, go in and do it."

In Secret Service parlance, guards are trained to study the crowd and ignore "the principle."

"The biggest thing they stress is to watch (people) and not look at Ford," said Ray. "We look for someone who seems out of place or looks highly agitated.

"If they (the Secret Service) feel a life is in danger, they can do anything, as far as removing a person from the premises. Anyone who looks suspicious will be approached and questioned. We take the responsibility very seriously."

As an added precaution, the Secret Service checked the facilities at Midland Memorial Hospital prior to Ford's arrival and hospital personnel alerted the emergency room just in case the staff there wasn't aware he was coming to town.

During his address, Ford recounted Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's assassination and said: "From the pictures I've seen, his security people didn't do their job."

No "incidents" occurred during Ford's stay, but one obviously relieved city detective remarked after it was over: "I'll tell you what, I'm ready to go to the house."

Agencies can't hire strikers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, trying to keep "anyone from slipping through the cracks," is telling departments and agencies the striking air traffic controllers cannot be hired for other positions in the federal government, sources say.

The administration sources, declining to be identified, said the Office of Personnel Management is stating in a directive that any application for employment by striking air traffic controllers must be sent to the Office of Personnel Management for review.

One source said the agency will review such applicants' "suitability" for government work and will declare ineligible anyone who joined in the Aug. 3 controllers walkout in a contract dispute with the Federal Aviation Administration.

The administration fired more than 11,500 of the controllers for violating their no-strike oath as federal employees and has curtailed commercial and private flight operations while it trains newly hired replacements.

President Reagan, Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis and FAA administrator J. Lynn Helms have insisted there will be no general amnesty for controllers once the Federal Labor Relations Authority decides whether to strip the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization of its right to represent federal workers.

The personnel directive, which is to be sent to departments and agencies by the end of this week, is aimed at "keeping anyone from slipping through the cracks," one source said.

In another development, however, Defense Department lawyers have decided the fired controllers could wind up back on a federal payroll by joining the military.

Wall of fame

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — To help production people feel a part of Pixley Richards, a plastics components company, the management displays identification cards and color photos of all employees on a highly visible wall.

"This helps new people learn the names of their co-workers on a shift and helps older employees acknowledge new people on other shifts," said Peter Richards, president.

Tax-Free Savings Interest From Midland National
The All-Savers Certificate

We now offer you our Tax-Free Interest Savings Plan that enables you to earn up to $1,000 (individual return) or $2,000 (joint return) of tax-free interest.

Our one-year savings certificate will pay interest equal to 70% of the average investment yield of the most recently auctioned 52-week Treasury Bill. And, the interest rate applicable at the time you open your account is guaranteed for one full year.

Certificates purchased after October 5, 1981, will earn 12.14%. To equal this 12.14% tax-free rate, you would have to earn 17% if you're in the 30% tax bracket, 20% in the 40% tax bracket, and 22% in the 50% tax bracket, filed jointly.

To open your account, all that's required is a minimum deposit of $500 for a one-year period. However, you'll probably want to invest more in order to take advantage of this great tax savings.

Prior to maturity, your existing Money Market Certificates can be converted to an All-Savers Certificate without an early penalty for withdrawal. Just call our professionals for further details (685-5111).

Our new Tax-Free Interest Savings Plan is just one of the many services available to you at Midland National, where you'll find professionals dedicated to serving your banking needs.

Programs reward milk waste, lawyers claim

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — School lunch programs appear to reward the waste of milk, lawyers for several Mission school employees have tried to emphasize at the start of a federal court trial.

The six employees are charged with conspiring to file phony milk invoices which resulted in the Mission Consolidated Independent School District being overreimbursed by the federal government for nearly $500,000 over a five-year period.

On the first day of the trial Tuesday, defense lawyer Frank Maloney of Austin introduced as evidence several letters from the Texas Department of Health.

Health department officials at one time told school districts they could not re-cycle unopened half-pint cartons of milk. Health officials in later letters reversed their position.

"Rather than throw away the milk, they chose to recycle it," Hector Villarreal of Edinburg, another defense lawyer, said in opening arguments.

THE TRIAL before U.S. District Judge James DeAnda is expected to last two weeks. The judge told lawyers not to discuss the case with the news media. He fined Villarreal $500 Tuesday for referring in opening arguments to a technical line of evidence the judge earlier had ruled off-limits during the trial.

The school employees were named this summer in two counts of indictments, along with several employees of the Golden Jersey Creamery of Edinburg.

The dairy and four of its employees have pleaded guilty to charges of conspiring to file fake milk delivery invoices. They are expected to testify in the trial.

Under federal school lunch rules, a half-pint of milk must be placed on each child's tray, testified Paul Joseph Schmitz, school lunch program supervisor for the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Dallas.

If the milk is not on the child's tray, the entire meal is ineligible for federal school lunch program reimbursement, Schmitz said.

U.S. Assistant Attorney Eddie Medrano said in opening remarks that the Mission school system did not serve tne required half-pint with each meal but continued to claim reimbursements for the undelivered milk.

IN QUESTIONING Schmitz and another witness, Maloney indicated the defense will try to show that the Mission schools were trying not to waste 50 to 80 gallons of milk left by children daily. The district would supplement meals with ice cream, Maloney said.

According to the 45 counts of indictments, school employees would calculate how many pints of milk they needed to claim to receive a certain amount of federal reimbursement.

Secretaries in the food services division then would call the dairy, whose employees would fill out fake invoices for school officials to sign, the indictments charge.

Those on trial are Robert Harold Wicks, assistant school superintendent; Michael Jon McCarthy, food services director; Jane Alice Cook, former food services secretary; Doylene Thompson, food services secretary; Edelmiro Garcia, former disrtrict truck driver; and Gerardo Cortez, head cook supervisor.

Church in El Paso bomb target

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — All of the 40 to 50 bomb threats received at the Pro Cathedral Church of St. Clement and its school have proved false, but church officials say they must respond to them as if their lives depended on it.

An anonymous male caller has been plaguing the El Paso church and school with the threats for the past two years.

The caller usually telephones the church or police, says a bomb is at the school or church and then hangs up, said Rev. Ronald Thomson, head rector of the church.

Several calls resulted in parishioners' being evacuated from church services that were continued in an outside garden.

At times, a church bishop and other clergy have been forced to have counseling sessions or interviews outside while firefighters searched buildings for a bomb.

Gloria Yanez, a second-grade teacher at the school, said once this year the 480 students at the school were evacuated three times in one week.

"With three fire drills in one week, you suddenly find out you're behind one whole lesson," she said. "It's more of an annoyance than anything."

Thomson said the threats have not prompted any parents to pull their children out of the school or to leave the church membership.

The minister said he doesn't know why the caller chose St. Clement as his target.

"Maybe he's trying to strike back at God or something. We won't really find out until he is caught," he said.

Mrs. Yanez said the children respond well to the drills.

"It's rather routine," she said. "We don't talk about it as a bomb scare but as a fire drill. But the kids are aware of what's happening."

El Paso Fire Chief M.L. Coleman said the threats can't be ignored.

The Great Rinaldi: Magic is dreams in action

By ELIZABETH MEHREN
Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — Just around the corner from Fatima, the life-sized mummy, directly beneath the huge and ancient magic trunk, and directly opposite the framed programs of Blackstone and Houdini, the poster next to Charles Reynolds' piano asks the question — the question that might better be a metaphor for Reynolds' entire existence.

"Doug Henning," reads the poster, dominated by a giant Henning head hovering Oz-like over the message, "Illusion or Reality?"

That, as the poet would say, is the question.

It is, certainly the question that lures large audiences to the ultra-theatrical magic shows Henning and Reynolds produce; the question they grapple with as Henning walks through walls, saws assistants in half, produces Bengal tigers out of the thinnest of air; the question they debate, many of them, when they endeavor to repeat (or at the least, analyze) those same phenomena.

Grumbles Reynolds, indignant at the notion that the process of the magic tricks he and Henning have created might be half as intriguing as the tricks themselves: "That misses the point. Treating magic as a puzzle, trying to figure it out; is the wrong way to approach magic. Really, the puzzle is the least of it."

What it is about — which is to say, the illusion and the reality — is what has preoccupied Reynolds for a large portion of his 49 years. "All kids love magic," said Reynolds, a nominal grown-up who assumed his alter ego of The Great Rinaldi at approximately the age of 6. "But most kids grow out of it." Reynolds smiled. "Only the particularly crazed ones stay with it." Reynolds considers himself within the latter category. —

Reynolds was a normal 6-year-old living in Toledo, Ohio, when he got his first Gilbert Mist-o-Magic set. By grade school, The Great Rinaldi was earning his spending money by making goldfish disappear. Even in college, when other kids at the University of Michigan were scooping ice cream or pumping gas, Rinaldi-Reynolds was dishing up rabbits. Along the way, Reynolds abandoned the engineering his parents thought would be sensible to study and pursued instead a passionate interest in drama and the evolving field of TV. In his spare time at Michigan, he picked up a minor in Chinese literature.

Moving to New York, working in TV and photography, Reynolds found himself, at one point, "sort of out of a job." Once again, The Great Rinaldi metamorphosed to save the day. By the mid-'50s, Reynolds had installed himself as a picture editor at Popular Photography Magazine.

Working on a story on — what else? — magic for Time Magazine while moonlighting, Reynolds met Henning, the then-25-year-old rising star of American magicians. Within a year, the two were collaborating on Henning's first televised magic extravaganza.

Fifty-five million people saw that first Henning special on NBC, more people than saw Houdini in his lifetime.

Something magic passed into the Reynolds-Henning chemistry when the two conspired to create and enhance the illusions that cause Henning's audiences to gasp and marvel.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Denying that one has an alcohol problem is a foolish whim

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

QUESTION: How can you convince someone that she has a serious drinking habit? She says that she is not hurting herself or anyone else, but everytime she drinks she doesn't know when to stop. She also drinks more often. She holds a good job, so her drinking hasn't seemed to hurt her in that area. Maybe I'm making to much of this, but I worry about her.

ANSWER: Alcohol abuse problems vary in their severity. The disease of alcoholism is progressive, however; and from your description of your friend, it would seem that she is headed for trouble.

Convincing someone that he or she has a drinking problem is a most difficult task. Most early-stage alcoholics vigorously deny that they have drinking problems. They cite all sorts of excuses and rationalizations to avoid this admission. They generally are fooling only themselves, as their friends and relatives are generally able to see how alcohol is controlling them.

There are some family counseling approaches, which when guided by a trained therapist, use certain confrontive techniques to force the problem drinker to face the effects which his drinking has on himself and on others. These counseling approaches are not always successful, and in such cases the problem-drinker will continue as he has in the past.

Since treatment begun early is better than treatment begun late, concerned family or friends would do well to seek professional advice on how they may best help the person with a problem such as this. Professional help is available through the MHMR Center, as well as other sources.

QUESTION: Can I find out if my son is cooperating in his treatment for mental problems? I don't know if he is going to his therapy sessions or not, and he promised that he would.

ANSWER: If your son is a minor, seventeen years of age or younger, you may simply request this information from his therapist. If is 18 or older, he must give his therapist written consent before the therapist may legally share this information with you. Without such written consent, the therapist is subject to legal problems and possibly civil damages if he communicates such information to you. This may seem extreme to you, but issues of patient confidentiality are highly important and vital if mental health treatment is to be successful.

Moshe Dayan's death

Moshe Dayan was the embodiment of the Israeli fighting spirit and during his lifetime brought victory and greatness to Israel. But Dayan was more than an Israeli military leader. He was a statesman.

No one can deny that Dayan was a warrior. He commanded the Israeli forces that won the Arab-Israeli war of 1956 and directed the Israeli victory in the famous Six-Day War against Egypt, Jordan and Syria in June 1967.

Dayan may have been a feared and respected warrior, but he also was a statesman of amazing ability, having negotiated a peace with Egypt while serving as Israel's Foreign Minister.

Dayan's black eye patch became something of a symbol of Israeli fighting spirit in the period of uneasy peace following the Six-Day War. Actually, his eye was lost in 1941 in Syria when a bullet shattered binoculars Dayan was holding and forced glass deep into his left eye.

It is ironic that death claimed both Dayan and his Egyptian foe, Anwar Sadat within a week. Their lives contained many parallels, both serving superbly on the battlefield and yet striving for peace when circumstances permitted. Both were statesmen in their respective nations, loved to an extent and feared to an extent. They earned the respect they received.

Although his health had failed him in later years, Dayan maintained an active role in Israel's affairs, having quit Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Likud government in 1979 for fundamental differences over the future of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Moshe Dayan's efforts made him worthy of the respect he received. He was a strong leader in a nation situated in a corner of the world that necessitates strong leaders.

Moshe Dayan's death represents more than just a loss to Israel. It represents a loss to the Middle East and the entire world.

Two lessons from Egypt

The swearing in of a new president of Egypt just eight days after the assassination of Anwar Sadat teaches the world two lessons.

— One is the importance of moving as speedily as possible to fill the shoes of a fallen national leader, the better to fill political vacuums and start on the road back to stability.

— The other is the value of a head of state's thinking ahead to the possibiity of an emergency and training one or more candidates for the succession.

Although the Middle East will not recover from its shock for some time, that shock will be lessened by the presence of a president who can make decisions. Other nations are less likely to play mischievous games with Egypt now that they know they will have to deal with President Hosni Mubarak.

As for the new chief's training and competence, there is comfort in the thought he was hand-picked by Sadat, just as Sadat was hand-picked by his predecessor, President Gamal Abdel Nasser.

That is not exactly the way we would want to do things in the United States. Many of our allies would not wish to copy a system under which there is such firm control over who follows whom in the top job. But Egypt has its own problems to solve, and is solving them in its own way.

The positive side of the Mubarak selection and election is that his competence was spotted in time for his talents to be trained. Sadat made him chief of staff of the air force, and he did so well he was promoted to air force commander three years later.

Other aspects of his training were not neglected. Sadat tried to keep his vice president informed on administrative aspects of the government, on its economics and international affairs.

Despite chaotic and disorderly conditions in Egypt in recent days, Cairo has given us a couple of lessons in orderly government that bode well for the future. All who hope for peace in the Middle East trust that Sadat's choice of Mubarak was as felicitous as Nasser's choice of Sadat, and wish the new president well.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Congressman opposed useless drug cutback

WASHINGTON — Medicare and Medicaid recipients generally had little to cheer about in the Reagan administration's austerity budget.

Jack Anderson

But one legitimate cut in federal spending involved government subsidies for drugs whose effectiveness is questioned by medical experts. Cutting these dubious medications off the Medicare-Medicaid list could save between $40 million and $50 million a year, according to General Accounting Office estimates.

This might be good news for the taxpayers, but it was definitely bad news for the pharmaceutical companies that manufacture the questionable drugs. Their lobbyists set to work to reverse the ban on government payments for "products that lack substantial evidence of effectiveness," as an internal government document describes the drugs.

The drug industry found an eager champion of their cause in freshman Rep. Thomas Bliley Jr., R-Va. He maneuvered an amendment through the House that, in effect, would kill the "no reimbursement" provision.

What makes Bliley's recruitment by the drug moguls intersting is the Sept. 1 list of products that were to be cut off the government's reimbursement list. They include such best-selling drugs as Butazolidin Alka, manufactured by Geigy Pharmaceuticals; Combid, made by Smith, Kline & French; Librax, made by Roche Products Inc.; Equagesic, made by Wyeth Laboratories; Synalgoa DC, made by Ives Laboratories Inc., and Vasodilan, made by Mead Johnson.

The list also includes Donnatal Extentabs, a medication used in the treatment of spastic colons and peptic ulcers. It is made by the A.H. Robins Co., which has its headquarters in Bliley's congressional district.

According to federal election records, the chairman of the board, E. Claiborne Robins, Sr., donated $1,780.28 to Bliley's election campaign last year. Bliley's staff insisted to my associate Tony Capaccio that the congressman did not consult Robins while the amendment was being drafted. But his staff talked to the Robins lobbyists.

The congressman's staff also consulted lobbyists for the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, the National Association of Chain Drug Stores and the American Medical Association — which makes big bucks from drug industry advertisements in its weekly journal.

Interestingly, Bliley got nearly $15,000 in campaign funds last year from doctors and political-action committees representing various drug companies and medical groups.

In his remarks on the House floor in support of his amendment, Bliley singled out Donnatal Extentabs as an example of a drug that was being unfairly treated by the Food and Drug Administration.

The congressman's "main objection to the proposal" to cut the questionable drugs off Uncle Sam's subsidy list, according to a Bliley spokesman, was that the cutoff was put into the budget package without his knowledge — a curious assertion considering the confusion that surrounded the last-minute drafting of the budget legislation.

Bliley feels that the abrupt end to the drug subsidy violates the "due process rights of manufacturers" waiting to have their side of the story told to the FDA. He also feels that "most of the drugs (on the list) are effective," his spokesman said. This puts the freshman congressman in direct opposition to the GAO, two former surgeon generals, two former FDA commissioners and two former Cabinet members.

THANK YOU, TASS — A man is known by the company he keeps and the enemies he makes. Though I like to keep my company a private matter, I've always been proud when my enemies make their vituperation public.

That's why I was relieved recently when the congenital liars in the Kremlin put me back on their hit list, after a couple of unsettling episodes when they praised me extensively for a story on CIA skulduggery. It's comforting to know I'm no longer in the Kremlin's good graces.

The Soviets' reversion to form was touched off by my revelation that the Russians had stored deadly T-2 poison gas in Cuba for possible use against the United States. The story inspired Vladimir Goncharov, one of the most notorious hacks in the Soviet news agency, Tass, to typical heights of hysteria.

The Kremlin lackey now accuses me of being a "tout of CIA misinformation" and "phony data," of "outrageously foolish invention" and "yellow sensation." I am, he writes, "really a record holder when it comes to 'sensations!'"

I'm truly grateful to Goncharov for this attack. Not only does it replenish my self-esteem, it spreads my report to millions of Soviet and other foreign readers, who have long since learned that outraged Soviet denials are affirmation of accuracy. Without the shrill attack, these readers might never have known about the Kremlin's sinister machinations.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Oct. 21, the 294th day of 1981. There are 71 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 21, 1969, Willy Brandt became the first socialist chancellor in West Germany's 20-year history.

On this date:

In 1805, England's Lord Nelson defeated the Franco-Spanish fleet at Trafalgar but was mortally wounded.

In 1945, women were allowed to vote for the first time in France.

In 1972, North Vietnamese Premier Phan Van Dong said his government was ready to accept a ceasefire as the first step toward settlement of the Vietnam War.

And in 1979, the government of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin was rocked by the resignation of Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan.

Ten years ago: The Nobel Prize for literature was awarded to Chilean poet and Communist leader Pablo Neruda.

Five years ago: China announced that the Communist Central Committee had shattered a power play by the "Gang of Four," which included the widow of Mao Tse-tung.

One year ago: Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan accused President Carter of "negotiating in the press" for the release of the American hostages in Iran.

Today's birthday: Former New York Yankees pitcher Whitey Ford is 53.

Thought for today: "We must not promise what we ought not, lest we be called upon to perform what we cannot." — Abraham Lincoln (1809-65).

ART BUCHWALD

Sears deal put new light on retailing

I went to see my broker, Durgin, Burgin & Black the other day. I had to wade through TV sets, refrigerators, automobile parts, tool chests and children's clothes.

Art Buchwald

"What's going on?" I asked Durgin.

"Sears-Roebuck is buying Dean Witter and going into the brokerage business. So we've decided to go into consumer retailing. No one wants to stay in his own racket any more," he said angrily.

"Do you have the floor space?" I asked him.

"We're taking over two more floors for our toy department and women's accessories. We are trying to get all the brokers in town to do the same thing. If Sears wants to play dirty pool, they've taken on the wrong people."

"I wish you luck. Listen, I was thinking about buying 100 shares of Xerox. What do you think?"

"How about four radial automobile tires? They're guaranteed for 10 years."

"Durgin, I know you're mad at Sears, but I really didn't come in here to buy tires."

"Forgive me, I've just lost my cool. You say Xerox."

"I was thinking of Xerox or maybe RCA. That stock, according to Forbes, is underpriced."

"I like RCA. Let me show you one of their 25-inch television sets. We're having a Founder's Day special on them this week. Sears can't match them for price."

"I don't want a television set. I want to buy stocks."

"Right you are. Let me get RCA up on the screen. Hey, look at this. You can get an electric chain saw and a pair of gloves for $89.95. It's going to be a cold winter, and you're really going to need a saw if you've got a fireplace."

"Durgin, I'm worried about Wall Street. Joseph Granville is a menace. He writes one letter and my entire stock portfolio goes out the window. How do I hedge against another Granville panic?"

"You can hide in a freezer. Let me show you this latest GE model."

"I can't buy stock and also buy freezers," I said.

"We'll let you have the freezer on our lay-away plan. Once your stocks go up, we'll transfer the dividends to your freezer account. We're the only ones offering this. Sears-Roebuck isn't set up to do the paperwork."

"You're really out to get them, aren't you?"

"Why shouldn't we? They want to muscle into everything. First, it was insurance, then real estate, and now they want to sell stocks in their stores. I used to push Sears-Roebuck stocks, but now when I get an order I recommend tax-free bonds instead. If Sears-Roebuck gets lucky, everyone will go in the brokerage business. You'll be able to go into Woolworth's and get all the IBM stock you want."

"But there are still going to be some of us who will just want to deal with a stockbroker who will devote all his time to financial business."

"You say that now. But I can just see you going into Sears for a mattress, and picking up a futures' contract in pork bellies, which they'll probably have a sale on to get you in the store."

"Can we get back to my portfolio? What are you people recommending in money funds?"

"We have a wide selection. But if I were you, I'd take advantage of our Thanksgiving Day sale on video games. They're a lot more fun and unlike money funds your whole family can enjoy them."

"I'll be back, Durgin."

"You don't have to come in. Here's our new Christmas Retailer's Catalogue. You can order anything you want on the phone. And our deliveries are faster than Sears."

BIBLE VERSE

For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them. Eph. 2:10

A CHANGING WORLD

Despite saber-rattling, Soviets fear war with United States

MOSCOW — Anti-American bombast notwithstanding, there is an ever-constant, continuing and genuine fear among Soviets at all levels of a war with the United States.

John Pinkerman

This is so, and most any visitor to this vast nation can detect it, despite a superiority in conventional forces (4.4 million vs. 2 million Americans), massive production of the new T-72 main battle tank with a 125mm gun that is the world's largest high-velocity weapon and despite all the missiles that have resulted from a budget that has amassed a mighty military force while imposing Third World living conditions on most of its 265 million inhabitants.

The most constant refrain one hears traveling in this exciting city and from Leningrad on the Baltic Sea all the way to the plush resort city of Yalta on the Black Sea is that World War II cost the Soviets 20 million deaths (official figures indicate 7.5 million soldiers and 11 million civilians), and there is the gnawing fear that another major war would be even more costly. In Leningrad, for instance, Russians talk of the 890-day siege from August, 1941, to January, 1944, when the Nazis were held off — but at a terrifying cost, including over a million city dwellers who simply starved to death.

Soviet propagandists even use the "20 million dead" line in their lame excuses regarding the invasion of Afghanistan in December, 1979. This became abundantly clear at a briefing I participated in during a two-week news-hunting visit recently.

A low-level bureaucrat who naturally was peddling the Soviet "peace" line, insisting that the Soviets had moved into Kabul reluctantly, said, "We still have strong memories of the 20 million we lost in World War II and we did not want to send Soviet kids to be killed in Afghanistan." Speaking excellent English based on 12 years residence in the United States, he said, "We treasure our kids' lives."

However, treasuring the lives of its young did not halt that experience in aggression, an act the Kremlin was convinced it could get away with — vs. an overt straight-on attack on the United States. And, it showed that while fearing a major war, Leonid Brezhenev and his cohorts may continue proxy wars like Korea, Vietnam and Angola with plenty of excuses to justify such actions.

The excuse in Afghanistan? The briefing officer's explanation might be called funny if it were not so blatantly false.

"We were asked nine times to go into Afghanistan to save the country," he said, "but each time we refused pointing out that the struggle was an internal one. However, when America, Pakistan and China went in with weapons and advisers we felt we had to come to the aid of a country that had been the first one to recognize our revolution (the Bolshevik takeover of power in 1918).

"We had to protect Afghanistan from the outside and we had to protect our own borders, our long border with China and our border with Afghanistan. We were far more jusified in doing this than the United States is in meddling with El Salvador, which poses no threat whatsoever to America."

This articulate spokesman for the Red line pleaded that capitalistic nations were a constant threat to Soviet interests via Afghanistan, but then he flip-flopped and insisted his nation was ready and eager to get out of the little nation it has failed to overpower in nearly two years of fighting.

"We are ready to leave when the time is right," he said. But, he would not acknowledge that the "right" time to cease this aggression is now.

There are other expressions across this nation of the compelling fear of another major war. A visit to one of many unknown soldier tombs and eternal flames throughout the Soviet Union is a sobering experience, even for a visitor with some distrust of the Red regime. Citizens of Russia, the Ukraine or any of the other 15 so-called "republics" view these testimonials in a mood of sadness, and tears are common.

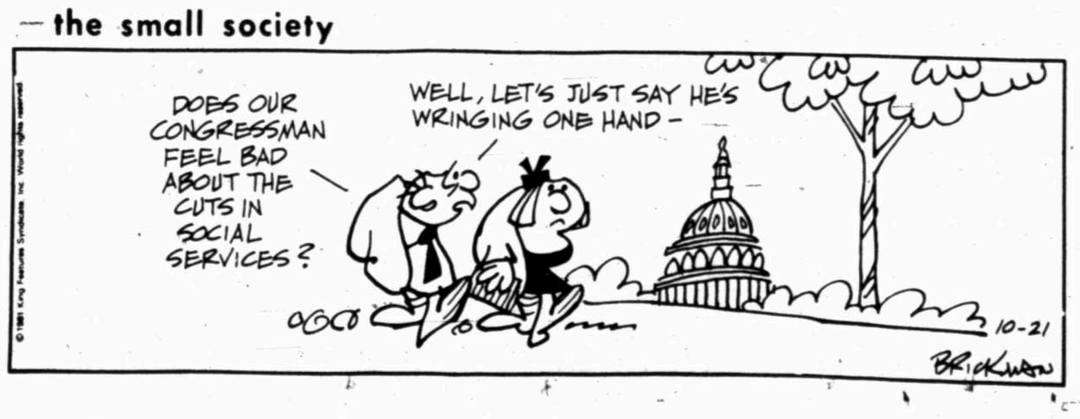

Peace slogans are everywhere, even in English in Yalta. While they bespeak propaganda perhaps more than sincerity when they say "USSR, Bulwark of World Peace" and even more flamboyant creeds dedicated to peace, they create among both ordinary people and Communist Party members and officials, a hope for no repetititon of World War II losses, still much a part of the daily scene in many Soviet cities.

The Reagan administration, of course, may have a major part in the stepping-up of peace talk at home. There are clear signs that the Soviet leadership, faced with a stern warning from President Reagan that it must cut its arms spending or face a new arms race, is rethinking its attitude.

As a bad food situation here gets worse, that rethinking process will continue. But, the way to an uneasy peace for at least the immediate future still appears to be the number of World War II widows seen on the streets of Moscow and other big cities — and this translates into those 20 million World War II deaths that one hears so much about.

City firemen work to extinguish a blaze that gutted a mobile home in the 2500 block of South Terrell Street Tuesday night and left its occupant, Larry Randolph, no age available, in critical condition with second and third degree burns. Randolph was transferred to the burn unit at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston after emergency treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital. The blaze broke out shortly after 11 p.m. Tuesday. Five fire units responded to the call. Cause of the fire was not immediately determined.

Reagan keeps open mind as he flies to summit

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — President Reagan, expecting opposition to his free-market prescriptions for the Third World, is keeping an open mind as he flies to this island resort for an unprecedented 22-nation economic summit, U.S. officials say.

Reagan's emphasis on the role of private enterprise in improving living conditions and domestic economics in developing countries puts him at odds with many of the leaders attending the conference.

Reagan himself acknowledged last week that he will be entering a "hostile atmosphere" among some "who simply want a policy of take away from the haves and deliver to the have nots."

But Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who also is attending the summit, said Reagan is coming here "very sensitive to the problems of the developing world, problems which also cause great problems in the developed world, the rising cost of energy, the tendency toward the declining economic growth rates, protectionism...unemployment and other economic dislocations."

"The president goes with an open mind," Haig said Tuesday in Washington. "He wants to listen and he wants to learn and he hopes his own view will be accepted with an equally open frame of mind."

Delegates to the North-South summit, representing capitalist, socialist and Marxist nations, have been arriving here since Monday.

After a late-morning arrival, Reagan planned to join his colleagues at a buffet dinner this evening hosted by Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo. During the day, he planned private meetings with Lopez Portillo, Premier Zhao Ziyang of China, Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, President Shehu Shagari of Nigeria and President Luis Herrera Campins of Venezuela.

While downgrading the role of foreign assistance, Reagan has said the key to global prosperity rests on a combination of fiscal discipline, free enterprise and expanded trade.

But in the two days of meetings scheduled to begin Thursday, most leaders are expected to contend that Reagan's formulas are irrelevant to Third World needs.

They are prepared to argue that nothing short of the creation of new global financial and economic institutions — giving political power to poor countries — will enable them to raise their living standards.

Over the past month, Reagan and his top aides have served notice in a series of speeches that they will oppose any proposals for a fundamental restructuring of the international economic system.

"The challenge is to create new wealth, rather than redistribute current wealth," said Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, who is accompanying the president and Haig.

From a security standpoint, Cancun is an ideal location for a summit because its only direct links to the Mexican mainland are two bridges, one at each end of the sickle-shaped island.

Nonetheless, gunboats patrolled the offshore area while marine guards walked the white sand beaches, with the heaviest concentrations near the site of the summit.

The U.S. delegation will be joined by the leaders of seven other industrialized countries and fourteen developing nations.

Breshnev denies claim

By DAVE MINTHORN
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — President Leonid I. Brezhnev, denying President Reagan's claim that the Soviets believe they could win a nuclear war, says that only someone bent on "suicide" would instigate such an attack.

The Soviet leader urged Reagan on Tuesday to "make a clear and unambiguous statement rejecting the very idea of nuclear war attack as a criminal one."

Countering Reagan's assertion that the Soviets believe a nuclear war "is possible and they believe it is winnable," Brezhnev said the Kremlin is working to eliminate "the very danger of its outbreak."

"Among ourselves we are saying...that it is a dangerous madness to try to defeat each other in the arms race and to count on victory in a nuclear war," he said in an interview with the Communist Party daily Pravda, distributed by the official Soviet news agency Tass.

"Only he who has decided to commit suicide can start a nuclear war in the hope of emerging a victor from it," Brezhnev declared.

Responding to a question of whether a nuclear exchange could be limited or would simply escalate, Reagan told visiting newspaper editors in Washington on Friday: "I don't honestly know....There never has been a weapon that someone hasn't come up with a defense. But it could...and the only defense would be, 'Well, you shoot yours and we'll shoot ours.

"And if you still had that kind of a stalemate, I could see where you could have the exchange of tactical weapons against troops in the field without it bringing either one of the major powers to pushing the button."

Brezhnev said he is "leaving to Mr. Reagan's conscience" the claim he "supposedly knows" what Soviet leaders think about nuclear warfare.

"No matter what method of unleashing nuclear war he chooses, he will not attain his aims," Brezhnev said. "Retribution will ensue ineluctably."

"For if there is no first nuclear strike then, consequently, there will be no second or third nuclear strikes," he said. "Thereby all talk about the possibility or impossibility of victory in nuclear war will become pointless — the question of nuclear war as such will be removed from the agenda of the day."

'Home on the Range' composer buried in hometown of Ballinger

BALLINGER, Texas (AP) — Composer David Guion, who helped make the cowboy ballad "Home on the Range" a national favorite, was returned to this West Texas town for burial today.

Guion, a Ballinger native, died Saturday in Dallas. He was 88.

He wrote several original compositions but was best-known for his adaptation of traditional American folks songs, most notably "Home on the Range," which is now the state song of Kansas. It originally was written in the mid-19th century by Brewster Higley.

"There was an old cowboy lament that just traveled around from ranch to ranch, from state to state," Guion once said of the piece. "It was about a cowboy that loved his place on the range. When I was about 15, I changed the words around and set it to music."

Years later, Guion said, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's told him "Home on the Range" was his favorite tune.

Guion also wrote the music for the plays "Green Grow the Lilacs" and "Green Pastures" and the movie "Grand Hotel" and is credited with the writing the popular arrangement of "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot."

Guion attended Fort Worth Polytechnic College and the Royal Conservatory in Vienna. Before the age of 20, he was director of music at Daniel Baker College in Brownwood.

Later, Guion taught in Dallas at Southern Methodist University, Fairmount Conservatory and the Southwestern School of Fine Arts.

He is survived by a brother, Wade Guion of Wimberly.

Five short courses scheduled at MC

Of the five short courses scheduled to begin at Midland College the week of Oct. 26, four are continuations of courses offered earlier this semester.

Jody Hawkins will teach Cake Decorating II at 7-9 p.m. each Monday for six weeks. The fee is $15 and the course is limited to 25 students who completed her beginning course. Methods for making intricate flowers, garlands and roping for special occasion cakes and how to set up wedding cakes will be demonstrated.

Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (CPR) will be taught by Paula Ketchum at 7-10 p.m. on Oct. 27, Oct. 29 and Nov. 3. This three-evening course will cover the basic life support procedure for a victim whose heart and lungs have ceased to function effectively. The course is approved by the American Heart Association and is limited to 16 students. Fee is $10.

Betty Brannen will continue her instruction in self-hypnosis for students who successfully completed her beginning classes. Self-Hypnosis II will meet at 7-10 p.m. on Tuesdays for six weeks and the fee is $24. Advanced methods for increasing confidence and abilities will be taught.

Classes in Christmas Decorating II will meet at 7-9 p.m. on Thursdays for five weeks. The class, taught by Betty Ambrose, will cover new subject matter as well as projects undertaken in the beginning course. Fee is $13.

Jay Grizzle will instruct a one-evening Microwave Cooking II class for those who completed the first course or who have some knowledge of the appliance. Three full meals and party snacks will be prepared during the class which will meet at 7-10 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 29. The class is limited to 35 students and the fee is $6.

Pre-registration for each course may be completed now in room 156 of the Midland College Administration Building from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays, including the lunch hour. For more information, call 684-7851, extension 147 or 216.

Ocean vents could predict volcanic action

By PATRICIa WOLF
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Marine biologists believe four Los Angeles area scuba divers have made an extraordinary ocean find off the coast of Palos Verdes — hydrothermal vents close to shore.

The vents, warm, often bubbly seepages of hydrogen sulfide — readily identifiable by its rotten egg odor — might be used one day to predict volcanic action and earthquakes.

"It is quite a rare find," said Horst Felbeck, a marine biologist at Scripps Institute of Oceanography in La Jolla and an expert on the vents. Marine biologists have studied hydrothermal vents, but only at depths of 8,000 feet, said Felbeck.

Water in excess of 300 degrees Fahrenheit has spewed up from sand and between rocks off Baja California and the Galapagos Islands. Expeditions to the islands, 600 miles west of Ecuador, have turned up unique life forms, such as giant crabs and 8-foot worms, and a complete ecosystem reliant on hydrogen sulfide rather than light as the basis for synthesis (in chemistry, the formation of a complex compound by the combining of two or more simpler compounds or elements).

Such an ecosystem, chemosynthetic instead of photosynthetic, appears to exist at White Point Shore on the Palos Verdes coast, although the spews average only about 80 degrees.

Marine biologist Jeff Stein, one of the four divers who discovered the White Point vents and is now studying them, said more common life forms, such as abalone and limpids, cluster around the Southern California vents. But these ocean creatures also seem to be part of the chemosynthetic ecosystem.

Stein, who uses a steel cage to study animal and plant life in the area, said the abalone and limpids feed off a wavy white filament-type substance and not their usual food source.

El Pasoans pulling for park honoring Gen. Omar Bradley

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A group of El Pasoans are urging federal officials to create a park along the Rio Grande that would be named for the late General of the Army Omar N. Bradley.

A nine-member delegation of citizens, including former Mayor Don Henderson and beer distributor Richard Azar, went to Washington on Monday to seek support from Secretary of Interior James Watt, congressmen and the staffs of Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger.

The group was to be accompanied on its Washington rounds by Kitty Bradley, widow of the late general, who spent his last years in El Paso.

El Pasoans have been discussing a river park since 1925 when the first master plan for the city suggested it. Since then, every new city plan has called for development of the area between the river levee and the Rio Grande.

There have been attempts by the city to develop the 11-mile strip of land, but they have fallen through.

"We think we have a lot of good selling points," said Suzie Gardy, community affairs director for Azar's company and a member of the delegation.

First, she said, no land would have to be bought since the 598 acres proposed for the park already belongs to the federal government. The group already has acquired the support of International Boundary and Water Commissioner Joseph Friedkin, who says the park wouldn't interfere with flood control.

Secondly, there is the plan to name the park after Bradley.

"That's why we're going to Weinberger's staff and Haig first," Ms. Gardy said. "We want their support before we go to Watt because he'll be the toughest.

"We think he'll accept it because he's committed to acquiring no new land and to parks that are more accessible to people," she said.

Finally, the group plans to raise as much as $4 million to match federal money and to create a maintenance fund for the park.

Some are 'accident-prone'

NEW YORK (AP) — Accidents to children cause more deaths each year than the five most fatal childhood diseases combined but 90 percent of all these accidents are fully preventable, says Dr. Bernard Raxlen, a psychiatrist and director of the Graduate Center for Family Clinical Studies in Bridgeport, Conn.

"Accidents are not merely 'freak occurrences.' They don't 'just happen' or have anything to do with 'bad luck,'" says Raxlen. "Actually, there is no such thing as an accident — something that happens for no reason at all."

Children are most apt to have accidents when they are tired, hungry or frustrated, he notes.

"From the child's point of view it is an accident," he explains, "but if you go over the circumstances with the advantage of hindsight, if you dissect it, you find that it could have been avoided.

"Perhaps toys are always left on stairs, and one day a child falls. That is called an 'accident,' but it could have been prevented."

Raxlen supervised the "Child Proofing" booklet for the new Child Safety Kit produced for the makers of Q-tips cotton swabs in cooperation with the Child Safety Institute.

Raxlen believes there are certain types of parents and children who seem to be more accident-prone than others. From his clinical experience, he has found that five types of families seem to have more than the normal amount of childhood accidents.

"One group is the home where both parents work and are out of the house a great deal," he explains. "The care of children is often left to an older sibling who can be more easily distracted from watching the child, or not as cautious as an adult would naturally be."

Another type is the home where the parents are in constant conflict. The child is part of a triangle and feels pressure.

"If, for example, the child has a condition like diabetes or asthma," says Raxlen, "he or she will forget to take medicine, or go off a diet. This is quite unconscious on the child's part, but the result is that a family crisis occurs and the parents unite to cope with it. Therefore, the dissension is temporarily gone.

"This is equally true for accidents. When a child hurts himself, the parents stop their own fighting and unite to help their child. The child actually, though unconsciously of course, has an accident in order to reunite his parents and to lessen his fear that one or both of his parents will go away and leave him."

Other accident-prone families are those where there is a high alcohol intake, and homes where parents are chronically depressed.

"This depression also affects the child, and he is more accident-prone," says Raxlen. "The child will often forget things, be fatigued, distracted and withdrawn. All these conditions can cause accidents, obviously. A child who is distracted, for example, will not watch where he is going as carefully as he should; he will not notice dangers that an average child would see, and he will get into an accident."

A fifth type of accident-prone family is the hyperkinetic group. They are always rushing around; they find it hard to sit still or to slow down.

A short drink

NEW YORK (AP) — Some bar manuals say the Bloody Mary was conceived as a short drink, four or five ounces, shaken with chopped ice, then strained off. Lemon was the only juice added.

Bloody Mary experts warn against leaving ice in tomato juice because the ice will melt and cause the juice to separate. Without ice, the drink should not be too large so it can remain cold.

Cookbook edition scheduled

Don't delay in submitting your entries for The Midland Reporter-Telegram's annual recipe contest and cookbook section, "Recipes '81."

This year's edition will be published as a tabloid supplement to the newspaper Sunday, Nov. 8. It will features scores of recipes submitted by readers.

Odds of not being audited better than ever this year

Chances are better than ever that you won't be audited this year, according to Family Circle magazine's money management editor, Barbara Gilder Quint.

She notes in a recent issue that in 1981, estimates are that only 19 out of every 1,000 returns — or 1.9 percent — will be audited. Back in 1976, the Federal Government audited 24 out of every 1,000 income tax returns — or 2.4 percent.

Audit risk varies with your income, says Ms. Quint. Higher wage earners are more likely to get audited than those with lower incomes. In the magazine, she gives a table that pinpoints the chances of being audited for various income ranges.

Suggestions for first-time renters

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. I am moving into an unfurnished apartment and will be faced with buying furniture for the first time. As a 25-year-old with my first job I am carefully planning my budget because I have a limited amount of money. However, I do have a good job and the need to furnish an attractive apartment. What I DO buy I want to be good investments for the future when I am able to perhaps buy a condominium of my own and later my own house. What do you think are the best buys in furniture when you are planning for the future? What should I buy now, what later? My apartment now is quite spacious but I suppose later I will be more limited in space because the condos I've seen within the financial range of young people are pretty small. — E.C.M.

A. Probably the most important and most flexible pieces of furniture you could buy today are modular seating and lounging sets. You might well consider a U-shaped design with four corner units and perhaps five armless seats. Add a couple of ottomans for additional lounging. This gives you a giant amount of seating in the least amount of space. And the flexibility is such that you can break up the arrangement into smaller units and use the armless pieces individually as chairs. These pieces can function in almost any room in the house. Because of their small size, they are easy to transport in elevators, a consideration if moving is a possibility.

Augment your upholstered pieces wth some inexpensive chairs for dining — perhaps basket chairs and a second-hand table. Add a dining set when you are a bit more settled.

Invest now in a good double bed or a pair of twins. Don't worry yet about a headboard and expensive chests. Consider a handsome armoire or bookcase for your apartment bedroom now if you have lots of room. Utilize the piece later in another room as your space enlarges or contracts. The armoire or bookcase might be a reproduction or an old piece you might pick up in a second-hand shop. Refinish the inside to coordinate with your bedroom's colors (either with wallpaper or paint or fabric).

Add end tables for the living room and night stands in the bedroom when you can. Purchase good accessories, including mirrors, lamps and art objects as you can afford them. These move from home to home but always give the feeling of your personal space. Later you may wish to buy additinal bedroom fruniture as well as the dining room pieces.

Q. I'm moving into a new condominium wth beige carpeting and ivory-colored walls. I'm going to reupholster my sofa and create new pillows for two wicker chairs. Also, I want to buy a new cocktail table. I have two hand-me-down end tables in rattan which I'm going to strip down and leave natural. What colors would you suggest to give a quiet yet warm and inviting look? Are there some additional acessories I might add to enhance the room? — W.B.

A. If you wish to stay with a natural background, you might like a warm, rust fabric on your upholstered pieces. This might be plain or have a small geometric design in beige or off-white. Use this on both your sofa and chair cushions. An oak and oak-and-glass coffee table would be an excellent choice with the oak in a natural honey tone. Accessorize with baskets and interesting woven pieces and add drama to the beige carpeting with a beige and cream and black or navy patterned Oriental carpet.

Q. I have a small guest room with a sleeper sofa in bright blue sailcloth fabric. The walls are white and the two windows have white louvered shutters. I have existing off-white carpeting. The room is just fine so far but it lacks some warmth and personality. What small things might I do to enliven the room? — N.H.

A. Probably all you need to do is accessorize. Add a colorful and whimsical touch at the windows by hanging a brass bar above the louvers and tie red and white bandanas to it, letting the bandanas fall in triangles from the bar. Make some pillows using the bandana fabric. Maybe even a bright red coat of lacquer on a secondhand chest or table would add personality. You can make lampshades from the fabric by gluing it to a white paper shade. Add a magazine rack, some interesting wall decorations and you should have a very personable room.

Ex-butler recalls work days

DINUBA, Calif. (AP) — Like many little boys, Hugh Bennett imitated his movie hero.

But Bennett didn't dream of becoming a rugged, romantic figure like Humphrey Bogart or Clark Gable.

He wanted to become a butler like Arthur Treacher.

"I remember Arthur Treacher in the movies, the suave, debonair English butler," Bennett said in an interview. "I was told that when I was 12 years old, I used to hold a tray in my hand and play like I was a butler."

The years passed, and Bennett grew up to be a management official with a concrete-pipe firm.

But at the age of 42, he decided to fulfill his lifelong dream. Bennett contacted a vocational consulting firm in San Francisco, told them "I want to be a butler for millionaires" and won a trial position with Mrs. J. D. Zellerbach of Crown-Zellerbach paper company.

"The first evening, I prepared the table, impeccably, I thought," Bennett recalled. "But she tapped on the table, 'Bennett,' she said, pointing to the salt shaker. The monogrammed Z on the salt shaker was turned 90 degrees off. It was not facing her, and of course it was not proper."

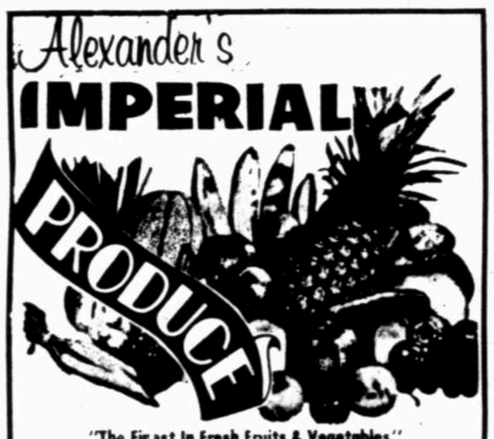

Despite that shaky start, Bennett spent five years on the Zellerbach estate before becoming head butler for Jack Warner of Warner Bros. Pictures. There, he supervised a staff of 19 in a Beverly Hills mansion that "was so large that I got lost twice in the first week that I was there."

But Bennett missed his girlfriend, Ruth, who worked at the Zellerbach estate, so he left Warner after four months.

After a stint as confidant for an oil distributor, he spent 2½ years as butler to Spreckels sugar heir John Rosekrans in San Francisco. He served art connoisseurs from France, dukes and lords from England and the sister of the king of Spain.

Even though Bennett found being a butler "quite an enthusiastic experience," he left domestic service in 1976.

"Ruth and I wanted to be married and have a home of our own in lieu of serving other people," he said.

Winners of the Area three district 44 fall contest of Toastmasters were Henry Williams, left, member of the Pop-Up Toastmasters who won first in the evaluation category; and Terry Smith, Tall Town chapter member, who won in the humorous speech category. Scene was the Kimber-Lea clubhouse.

Speechmakers take honors

Henry Williams and Terry Smith walked away with top honors at the area three district 44 fall contest of Toastmasters held at Kimber-Lea clubhouse in Midland.

Williams, who is a member of the Pop-Ups chapter and competed in the evaluation contest, is a member of the Tall Town Chapter. Other competitors in this category were Butch Barrie, Wallstreet chapter; David Porter, Pop-Ups; and Ted Jones. Permian.

In humorous speeches, Williams won with a speech titled "Someone's Trying To Kill Me!"

Other competitors in this category was Jerry Gahr, Permian chapter member; and Ab Ellis, Wallstreet.

Other participants in the contest were Scott Long, toastmaster; Dennis A. Schmitt, who presented a target speech; Russ Holmberg, chief judge; Jim Humphrey, John D'Hooge, Jack Moore and Ted Jones, judges; and Dave Eccleston, time keeper.

Named as officers for the different chapters are, from Pop-Up, Jon D'Hooge, president; Scott Long, vice president; Dave Eccleston, vice president; Ray White, secretary; Henry Williams, treasurer; Don Duke and Jim Sporer, sergeant at arms; and Ray White, bulletin editor.

From Wallstreet, they are Butch Barrie, president; Russ Holmberg, vice president; Dennis Schmitt, vice president; Bill Keaton, secretary/treasurer; and Tom Steffens, sergeant at arms.

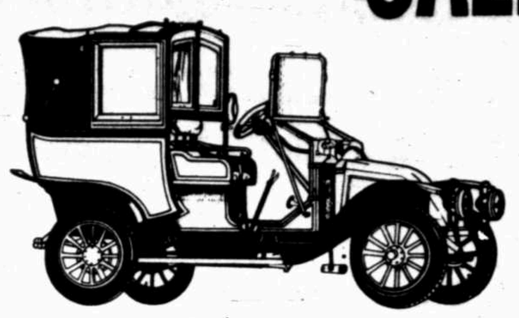

From Permian chapter are Ab Ellis, president; Ted Jones, vice president; Jack Moore, vice president; Dale Stice, secretary/treasurer; Richard Williams, sergeant at arms; and Rene Wojcik, bulletin.

From Tall Town chapter are Don Eckerty, president; Terry Smith, vice president; Jim Humphrey, vice president; Paul Zecchi, treasurer; Smokie Durossette, secretary; and Andy Pauley, sergeant at arms.

Dennis A. Schmitt, area governor, was in charge of the business session.

It was announced that the fall district conference will be Nov. 14 at the Midland Hilton.

DEAR ABBY

Woman cries her way through veil of tears

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of brides who come down the aisle crying at their own wedding? Or doesn't it ever happen?

I am a 20-year-old college girl and I'll probably be getting married within the next two years. I cry "at the drop of a hat," as my parents say.

I cry at sad movies and I cry when I hear a nostalgic song. I even cried when I found a picture of my boyfriend's old girlfriend in his Bible. My boyfriend's sister had a pet raccoon that I saw maybe twice. The thing got hit in the jaw by a car and died. As they were looking it over and talking about skinning it to save the hide, I started to cry like a baby. Anything can set me off.

I am so afraid I will cry rivers at my own wedding. What do you make of this? — CRYBABY

DEAR CRYBABY: So you cry easily. It's no crime to give in to your emotions — such sensitivity these days is refreshing. You have a fortune in liquid assets. Don't knock it.

DEAR ABBY: I have searched for help for years with no success. I am a "pederast." (I like young boys.) I cannot tell you how difficult it is for me to even write those words. For people who read about child molestation, every individual who has sex with a child ranks among the most evil deviates of our society. Perhaps the act is, but often it is performed by an otherwise responsible, well-adjusted man. I consider myself such a man. Nothing could be further from my mind than wanting to hurt a child. In fact, my greatest joy is working with children, and my success in dealing with them has been remarkable.

My point in writing is to try to locate someone who is doing research in this area. I know I could make an important contribution toward a serious study.

I will freely work with any qualified group or individual. I have been to therapists, but they know less than I about this compulsion I have.

I have the problem under control, but the desire still rages within me, and I would like to eliminate it if possible. I know there must be thousands of men like me who are active and would like to overcome this urge, but there is simply nowhere to go for help.

There are many good men in prison who could also contribute to society if this problem could be solved. Please answer me in a "confidential." I cannot take any chances of being identified. There are many of us who desperately need your help. — JEKYLL AND HYDE

DEAR JEKYLL: I am publishing your letter, and if I hear from any qualified researchers who want to work with you I will let you know. Please send me your name and address. You can trust me.

DEAR ABBY: I didn't marry until I was 38. The two hardest aspects of being married were asking for money and getting used to smoke in the bedroom. (I have never smoked, but I never complained about his smoking because I knew he smoked when I married him.) Now after 20 years of marriage, he has taken up cigar smoking, knowing that I detest cigars and the odor nauseates me.

How can I convince him that he is being inconsiderate in addition to contaminating my air? — CHOKING IN CHICAGO

DEAR CHOKING: He knows he's being inconsiderate — the problem is, he doesn't care. I can't make him "care," but I can assure you that most people get about as much consideration as they demand.

(Problems? Write to Abby, 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Peanuts popular

TIFTON, Ga. (AP) — Americans consume 1¼ tons of peanuts every year, or about nine pounds per person, according to the Peanut Advisory Board. Nearly half are used in peanut butter, with the rest divided between confectionery and candy products and salted nuts.

AT WIT'S END

Truth in medicine

By ERMA BOMBECK

You have to understand, I was born in an era where the human body was not real. Oh, sure, everyone had one, but if you asked anyone to describe an organ like the heart, they'd draw a picture of a valentine with an arrow through it.

I loved being naive. The stork stories were such fun. When my babies were born I was given a sedative which knocked me out until the kids were entering first grade. I had no reason to believe a giant bird did not make the delivery.

Today, through the miracle of curiosity and malpractice suits, we are in an era where we are forced to know everything there is to know about the human body. Sometimes, I think it's more than we can handle.

Like the man in Arizona who wrote that his wife was going into the hospital for some "simple repair" work. He said she was in great spirits. She hadn't thought about a new will, burial arrangements, putting things in storage, calling everyone she knew for a last goodbye, or even having a quick affair with her hairdresser.

Then the hospital sent her a release form to sign and return to the office. The words leaped out at her from the page: POSSIBILITY THIS OPERATION WILL NOT HELP . . . POSSIBLE TO HAVE WORSE PAIN THAN YOU HAVE NOW . . . COMPLICATED BY BLEEDING AND INFECTION . . . DAMAGE TO STRUCTURE . . . WEAKNESS . . . PAIN . . . NUMBNESS IN LEGS, THIGHS AND FEET . . . NERVE DAMAGE.

The only possibility they didn't mention was the cardiac arrest when she read the release form.

His wife fell apart and it was all he could do to get her to go through with it.

The human body is tough. It's the mind that's very fragile and given a choice I'd opt for a doctor who lies between his teeth.

I once had a pediatrician who could give a common cold a future you didn't want to hear about. I needed a man who would tell me there was nothing wrong with my child that a laxative wouldn't fix . . . that his measles probably weren't the kind that spread to the entire family just before Christmas . . . or that we didn't have to talk orthodontics until my husband's raise came through.

I just don't want to see this truth-in-surgery get out of hand. Can you imagine the panic if every mother-to-be was given a list of the hazards and side-effects of prolonged child-raising?

Cover-up change for men noted

NEW YORK (AP) — The profile of the balding American male opting for hair replacement has changed radically, according to a study by a hair-replacement firm.

In 1971 more than 70 percent of the company's customers were in occupations and professions that put them in the public spotlight — actors, television newscasters, political figures, athletes and corporate executives. Their average age was 35.

But today the men range in age from 21 to 52, with an average age of 29, says Sy Sperling, president of the Hair Club for Men. Fewer than 40 percent could be considered "public" personalities, he notes.

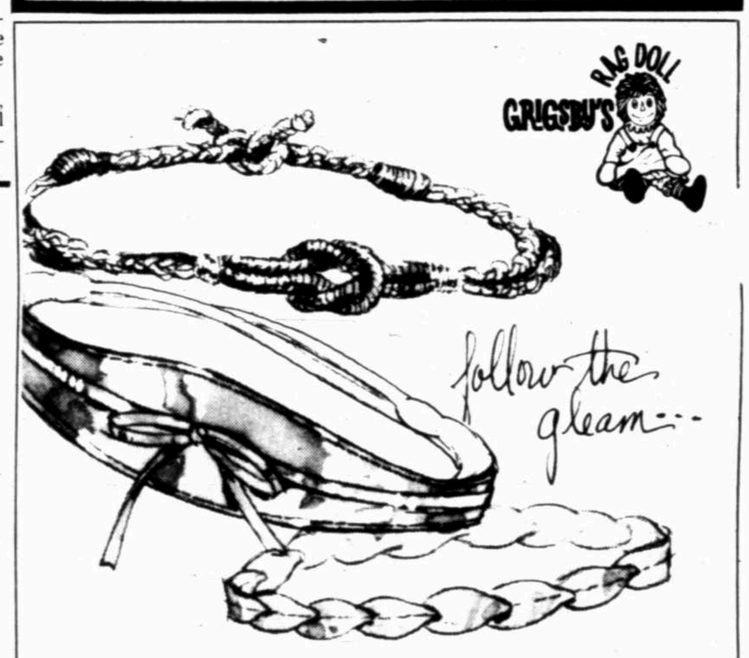

Arthritis a problem

ATLANTA (AP) — Although arthritis rarely kills, it is a mistake to think it cannot, says Dr. Frederic C. McDuffie, the Arthritis Foundation's senior vice president for medical affairs.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Vital Statistics, about 2,000 deaths are attributed to arthritis each year, he notes.

"This represents a proportionally small number of people when compared with the 31 million Americans who have reported they have one of the more than 100 forms of arthritis," McDuffie says, "but it does illustrate how serious arthritis potentially can be.

"Fatal complications such as damage to nerves and organs can develop in some forms of arthritis," he explains.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Retard frustrating ice build-up

DEAR HELOISE:

How do you keep ice from sticking to the metal of a refrigerator-freezer that isn't frost-free?

I have to hit it with a heavy object to get most of the ice off. Frustrated is a nice way of suggesting how I feel.

Help! — Mollie B.

Oh, dear! Don't hammer away at that ice. You can really damage the freezer compartment.

Once you've freed the ice from the freezer (using a pan of hot water or a blow hair dryer, cautiously), try coating the metal with a thin layer of vegetable spray or cooking oil.

Next time the freezer needs defrosting, the ice should come off with a flick of the wrist, so to speak. — Heloise

LETTER OF WARNING

Dear Heloise: Kids will be kids so, once again, caution your readers to keep prescription drugs and other medications, including aspirin and vitamins, well out of their reach.

Be sure containers have safety tops and never describe medicines as candy! Call them what they are — medicine!

Read the label on the bottle of medicine each time you use it to avoid giving the wrong one or too much of the right one.

Children are tempted to imitate, so don't take medication in their presence, and always store it in the original containers.

If you must keep medications in your purse, keep it out of a child's reach.

Kids are too precious to assume they're safe! — Cautious

SINK DRAIN CLEANER

Dear Heloise: Do you have trouble getting out bits and pieces of food and small objects that drop into and accumulate in the drain of your kitchen sink?

Keep a pair of old tweezers handy and you can easily fish out any unwanted items. — Louise Wilcox

FROM CRIB TO BED

Dear Heloise: We converted our 2-year-old son's crib into a youth bed.

We removed the sliding side rail and in its place used three 1x4 boards with holes drilled in the sides to allow them to slide over the rods.

We spray-painted the ends and covered the boards in a colorful quilted fabric.

Total cost: less than $10. — Joanne Mushala

FALL CLEANING

Dear Heloise: Whenever spring or fall housecleaning time comes around, I always set a target finish date by planning a social event at our house on my sheduled completion date.

That way, the cleaning gets done and it's always more fun to entertain when you know your house is clean from top to bottom. — Mrs. Karlotta Comerford

+ + +

Anything that motivates us is worth the planning. Just don't get yourself into a bind by underestimating the cleaning time. — Heloise

SINGLE IN A DOUBLE

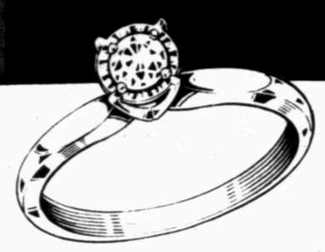

Dear Heloise: Living alone and sleeping in a double bed, I alternate sides of the bed to sleep on.

This not only doubles the time of use between changing sheets, but helps to distribute the wear on my mattress. — Irene Savage

Stumped? Baffled? At wits' end about how to solve a housecleaning problem? Write Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, Tx. 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she'll solve problems of general interest in her column.

Reading boost

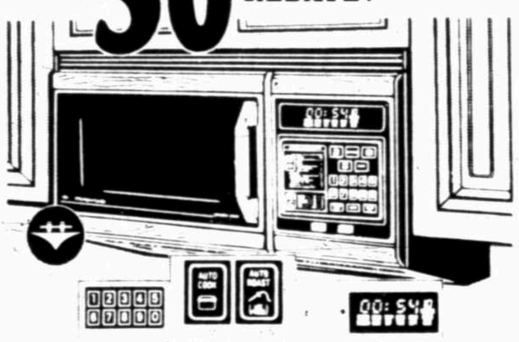

JACKSON, Miss (AP) — Youngsters with learning problems in rural Mississippi areas are discovering that reading can be fun — thanks to a project that combines watching an educational TV program with activities that reinforce the show's curriculum.

More than 1,000 children are enrolled as members of the Power Station, a club that gives its members a boost in schoolwork through Saturday sessions. The meetings include viewing "The Electric Company," a TV series aimed at improving reading and language skills, followed by connected projects chosen by the group.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Watch out for salt on sodium-restricted diets

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been told by my doctor that I should cut down on salt, but that I don't have to cut it out completely. In addition to avoiding salt, what other things do I have to be careful about? — Gus, Rye, N.Y.

Dear Gus: Since it is the sodium in salt that is the culprit and should be restricted, make it a habit to check the ingredients in the foods you buy. Some of the additives you should try to avoid are sodium benzoate, sodium alginate, and monosodium glutamate. Sodium may also be found in medicines such as antacids and laxatives.

Of course, many foods and water contain small amounts of sodium, but most of the sodium people consume comes from the salt they add to their foods.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I weigh about 40 pounds more than I should, and I'm ashamed to say I don't seem to have the will power to do anything about it. Do you think I might be more successful in losing weight if I were to try behavior modification methods? — Grace, Ft. Worth, Texas

Dear Grace: While I can't predict success or failure in an individual case, I can tell you that at least one study has shown that a behavioral approach to weight control is more effective with people who are moderately overweight than with those who are severely obese.

Dr. John P. Foreyt, of the Baylor College of Medicine, has reported on a study of almost 600 patients who met for eight weeks in one-hour classes. In addition, they were taught the importance of a calorie-controlled, low cholesterol, modified-fat diet. Only seven of 336 patients who wanted to lose more than 33 pounds were able to do so.

Dear Dr. Solomon: In following my doctor's instructions, I have given up adding salt to my food at the table. Since the box indicates that the salt is iodized, I guess I'm also giving up iodine. What is the purpose of iodine, and how do I make up for it? — Casey Muskegon, Mich.

Dear Casey: Iodine is needed for normal nutrition. It is ued by the thyroid gland to make thyroid hormone, and the gland will enlarge (a condition called goiter) if the diet lacks sufficient iodine.

If the lack of iodine persists, a person will feel physically and mentally run down. In a pregnant woman, a lack of iodine may lead to the mental and physical retardation of the unborn child.

While it was once feared that Americans were not getting enough iodine in their diets, recent studies indicate that this is not the case. For example, a review by the Food and Drug Administration revealed that in 1978, a 2,850-calorie diet for an adult provided more than four times the Recommended Daily Allowance of iodine. Therefore, unless you have a particular health problem, chances are you are getting all the iodine you need, even without salt.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Proxmire tries to keep price supports high

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even the most vigilant of congressional sentinels against government extravagance can — and often do — change roles when the spending at issue is crucial to the people back home.

That is understandable. The voters expect the people they elect to represent their interests.

In the case of Democratic Sen. William Proxmire, back home is Wisconsin — dairy country. Proxmire is the senator who bestows a sardonic "Golden Fleece Award" every month to call attention to wasteful federal spending. He also is the senator who talked all night against an increase in the federal debt ceiling that pushed the limit past $1 trillion.

And he is the senator who, until Monday, used every parliamentary tactic it took to block action on a bill to roll back an unintended increase in dairy price supports.

The increase went into effect Oct. 1, the start of the government's new bookkeeping year. So for 19 days, the support level was $13.49 per hundred pounds, up from $13.10.

The exact cost of that temporary increase won't be known until all the bills come in at the end of the month. The Agriculture Department's own estimates varied widely, from $200,000 to $400,000 a day.

Proxmire dropped his campaign on Monday and agreed to a compromise. So the bonus was temporary, but nonetheless costly.

He argued that the higher levels were essential lest thousands of dairy farmers go out of business. But the cut was inevitable sooner or later, and he settled for an agreement that could bring an increase in support levels on Oct. 1, 1982. The alternative was to risk approval of a formula that would freeze support levels for the next three years.

The controversy dates to April 1, when, as part of President Reagan's budget-cutting drive, the dairy industry was denied an increase in price supports that would have cost about $147 million. Until then, support levels had been automatically adjusted every six months. Congress approved that cost-cutting measure.

But it was temporary, on the premise that before the Oct. 1 increase came due, Congress would have passed an overall farm bill including a revised dairy price-support program. The farm bill hasn't passed yet.

As a result, the old system was resurrected when the new fiscal year began, and the administration had no choice but to raise price supports. Proxmire and dairy state Democrats in the House succeeded in blocking stopgap legislation that would have prevented the increase. It finally passed the House, but Proxmire invoked his right to block Senate consideration on an emergency basis, and had threatened to filibuster if necessary.

He already had shown he could do it. He staged a 16½-hour overnight speech in the Senate against the trillion-dollar debt limit.

The administration contends lower support levels are the only way to curb production that outruns demand.

Reagan has stake in New Jersey governor's race

By JIM MANION
Associated Press Writer

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — An eavesdropper on the New Jersey race for governor might get a sense of deja vu. The Republican wants to cut taxes and talks of supply-side economics. His opponent says the issues are "mean-spirited" budget cuts and "voodoo economics."

But this campaign is not Ronald Reagan vs. George Bush—author of the "voodoo" charge—in a Republican primary, or Reagan and a converted Bush against Jimmy Carter in the 1980 presidential election.

The contest is between the scion of a wealthy New Jersey family of GOP officeholders and the four-term congressman son of a Brooklyn ship painter.

Yet as their rhetoric suggests, Reagan has a stake in the outcome.

On Nov. 3, voters will choose between Democrat James J. Florio, 44, of Runnemede, and Thomas H. Kean, 46, of Livingston, to replace Gov. Brendan T. Byrne, who by law cannot seek a third term.

A poll by the Eagleton Institute of Politics gave Florio an 8 point lead, with many voters undecided, and listed the economy as the top issue. Both candidates have accepted public financing, limiting campaign expenditures to just over $2 million each.

The race, Reagan said in a campaign appearance on Kean's behalf, is a "clear-cut choice between those who think government spending and taxes are the solution to our problems and those, like (Kean), who understand that government spending and overtaxation are the problems."

The president, who carried New Jersey by 400,000 votes, is campaigning not only for a fellow Republican, but also for budget cuts he is trying to sell Congress. GOP victories in New Jersey and the Virginia gubernatorial races would help his program. Defeats would be embarrassing.

The Republicans are spending $1.7 million in a media campaign to urge 3.6 million registered voters — 60 percent Democrats — to "Vote Republican For a Change." A Democrat has been governor 24 of the last 28 years.

Their candidate, a relaxed campaigner, has drawn predictable support from the white-collar community, where his business tax cuts would be welcome. He also is targeting blue-collar voters, who were heavy Reagan supporters, by telling them tax cuts for business will mean jobs.

Kean comes from a family that made millions with its own utility company. His father, Robert W. Kean, was a congressman for 20 years. His grandfather, Hamilton Fish Kean, and his great uncle, John Kean, were U.S. senators.

Florio dropped out of high school to join the Navy, where he earned his high school equivalency diploma and became a boxing star. He attended college on the GI bill and began his political career as a state legislator from Camden after graduating from law school.

He has made much of his ethnic heritage, delivering a standard pitch about learning the value of hard work and discipline from his immigrant grandfather. About 40 percent of New Jersey's 7.5 million residents are Italian-American. Florio is the first from that community to gain the Democratic nomination for governor.

Florio, a busy campaigner, enjoys support in South Jersey, his longtime political base, and in traditionally Democratic urban areas of North Jersey.

Much of Kean's advertising portrays a Florio administration as "four more years of Brendan Byrne," who has been criticized through his two terms for using his office to travel around the world.

The effect of the GOP attack is difficult to assess. Byrne got low marks in popularity polls but can point to major accomplishments, including casino gambling and a state income tax.

Metals' prices won't rise soon

By ROBERT RENO
(c) 1981, Newsday

The days of $850-an-ounce gold and $50-an-ounce silver, so recently with us, are increasingly a retreating vision these days.

Since the lustrous metals have for centuries been the fearful man's haven in times of war, pestilence and inflation, this has to be a good sign to almost everybody except some western silver miners, gold exporters such as the Republic of South Africa, the Soviet Union and some stubborn investors who are still betting that some misfortune will come along to send gold back toward the $1,000 range.

Silver, which stood close to $50 in January 1980, is now trading at just under $9.50 an ounce, having sunk as low as $8.29 this summer. Gold, which peakedat $850 in 1980, was trading in the neighborhood of $444, having recovered somewhat from a summer low of $391.

Ronald A. Krieger of Chase Manhattan Bank says that the long-term outlook for gold is now favorable but clouded.

"Gold prices appear to have firmed in recent weeks after dipping below $400 an ounce in August, and traders are hopeful that the long bear market has finally run its course," he says.

"Appearances, however, can be deceiving; and a further price plunge cannot be ruled out."

As for silver, it may also have seen its worst days; but it won't be seeing $50 an ounce again any time soon.

Just Thursday the government offered 1.25 million ounces from its 139-million ounce stockpile in a sealed-bid auction that drew such chintzy offers that most of the bids were rejected.

Two bids for a total of only 160,000 ounces were accepted but at a price 25 cents less than what silver was selling for in New York markets on the same day. Some of the bids were for as little as $1.80 a ounce.

Several factors continue to mitigate against a significant takeoff in precious-metal prices:

— The demand for gold jewelry has fallen. Consolidated Gold Fields Ldt. estimates that world demand for gewelry reached only 120 metric tons in 1980, down from 737 tons in 1979 and 1,000 tons in 1978.

— Industrial and dental use of gold and silver is expected to diminish as users develop new technologies for substitution of other metals. American dentists, for instance, used 430,000 ounces of gold in 1980 compared with 611,000 ounces in 1979. Industrial use fell to 1 million ounces, down from 1.402 million in 1980.

— Repeated crop failures in the Soviet Union can be expected to increase pressure for foreign sale of Soviet gold to finance grain imports.

— The price of gold is showing itself to be increasingly immune to upward pressure from international political events. The election of a Socialist government in France did not ignite an explosion in the world price of gold, despite the long and well known predilection of Frenchmen for gold hoarding in times of threat to the established order.

— The persistence of high interest rates in the United States should continue to discourage gold investments. Since gold does not earn interest, it tends to lose attractiveness as the rates on interest-bearing instruments rise.

Preservation dome to be built over Pompeii

Ching-Ching, London Zoo's Giant panda, chews unconcernedly on a meal of mashed potatoes, honey and minced meat, unaware that Britain is waiting to find out if she is pregnant. Other Giant pandas around the world, inseminated at the same time as Ching-Ching, have produced cubs. Her keepers feel she has about 10 days before they conclude she isn't pregnant.

POMPEII, Italy (AP) — Italy launched an international "Project Pompeii" today to build a giant umbrella or dome over the 2,000-year-old ruins and save one of the world's most popular tourist sites from the ravages of nature and mankind.

Announcement of the $100 million plan coincided with the retrieval in West Germany of six marble and bronze statuettes stolen three years ago from the often plundered city.

Trying to drum up interest — and funds — for the project, Culture and Environment Minister Vincenzo Scotti is setting out today on a week-long trip to inaugurate major exhibits from the ancient Roman city in Washington, in Lille, France, and in Mexico City.

"We have already lost a lot (from decay of the ruins). Humanity has lost a lot which will never be recovered," Scotti told an auditorium packed with archaeologists, local officials and members of the European Parliament.

In the year A.D. 79, a blanket of volcanic ash and cinders from nearby Mount Vesuvius buried one of the Roman empire's most bustling cities and its 20,000 inhabitants.

In 1748, archaeologists unearthed the city and Germany's classic writer Johann Wolfgang von Goethe declared prophetically: "Of all the world's catastrophes, none has provoked so much joy to successive generations."

But since then, the brilliant reds and blues of frescoes preserved for centuries under the airtight seal have faded in the exposure to the sun and rain. Plants and trees pressing up among the houses have widened cracks in the walls.

Thieves also have plundered the city in nighttime incursions.

In 1978, a gang made off with six statuettes of cherubs and ducks from the archaeological museum. The statuettes had originally been in the House of Vetti, the most popular building of the 635,000-square-yard city.

Col. Pio Alferano, of the Culture Ministry's investigative paramilitary police section, tracked down the thieves in Munich, Cologne and Frankfurt and recovered the works. They had been cracked into pieces for easier smuggling out of the country.

The coup de grace in Pompeii's slow decay came last November, when a devastating southern Italian earthquake opened cracks in more than 100 buildings and forced officials to cordon off a large area from tourists.

The dead city's average 1.5 million visitors a year — surpassed only by the Louvre in Paris as the world's most visited monument — dropped 35 percent.

An emergency plan launched last February catalogued the 3,000 buildings of Pompeii and stored 170,000 files in a computer with the help of soldiers and Treasury employees.

A second phase is scheduled to start in 1982, when reinforced steel rods will be driven into walls as supports and earth tremor detectors will be installed.

Scotti said in an interview that the last phase, to be overseen by an international scientific committee, would be to mount a protective roof over large parts of the city.

Talk about specter of nuclear war stirs jitters in Europe

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Growing talk within the Reagan administration about the specter of nuclear war is stirring jitters in Europe, an angry retort from Moscow and charges of irresponsibility at home.

Reagan said during a weekend interview that a limited exchange of nuclear weapons would not necessarily escalate into world war.

Then, on Monday, the top military officer of the National Security Council, Major Gen. Robert L. Schweitzer, claimed the Soviets have nuclear superiority and "are going to strike."

Reagan said he did not agree with the general, who was promptly relieved of his NSC duties for not clearing the speech in advance.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said he was "appalled" by Schweitzer's speech and added: "Such war talk bears the danger of becoming a self-fulfilling propheey when mouthed carelessly by top presidential assistants."

In his interview, Reagan was asked if there could be a limited nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union.

"I don't honestly know," Reagan replied, and then went on to say: "I could see where you could have an exchange of tactical weapons against troops in the field without it bringing either one of the major powers into pushing the button."

He said U.S. nuclear strategy must be based, in part, on the notion that the Soviets believe "a nuclear war is possible and they believe it is winnable."

Reagan's remarks got little immediate attention in this country but were the lead story on British Broadcasting Corp. newscasts Tuesday.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev demanded that Reagan make a public statement declaring the idea of a nuclear attack as "criminal."

In an interview distributed by the Soviet news agency Tass, Brezhnev said, "Only he who has decided to commit suicide can start a nuclear war in the hope of emerging a victor from it."

Reagan's statement raised eyebrows among the United States' European allies and forced Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger to defend U.S. nuclear strategy to NATO defense ministers meeting in Scotland.

Schweitzer spoke to the Association of the United States Army.

"The Soviets are on the move; they are going to strike," he said, adding that there was "a drift toward war" and that the United States "is in the greatest danger that the republic has ever faced since its founding days."

Schweitzer was fired early Tuesday — and reassigned to the Army — for ignoring a rule that requires NSC staff members to clear their public remarks with national security adviser Richard V. Allen.

Schweitzer had told his audience that his superiors at the White House knew, in general, what he intended to say and "they just said they hoped I wouldn't get them in trouble."

White House spokesman David Gergen said the speech was "more pessimistic in tone and substance" than Reagan's own beliefs. Reagan himself said the purpose of his defense buildup is "so there can't be a drift toward war."

Schweitzer wasn't the first NSC staffer to get into trouble for talking about war and the Soviet Union. In March, Richard E. Pipes, who is in charge of Soviet affairs, told a reporter that war with Russia was inevitable if the Soviets did not abandon communism.

Although Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. expressed outrage about the remarks, Pipes remains in his post at the NSC.

Acting Dutch Defense Minister Hans van Mierlo said he had asked Weinberger to explain Reagan's remarks to newspaper editors, telling reporters, "I have the impression that President Reagan probably in a somewhat unfortunate manner discussed the sensitive subject of a nuclear war restricted to Europe." He said Reagan has an "extremely direct way of speaking" that may have been misinterpreted.

Weinberger attempted to reassure the Europeans but acknowledged that there were circumstances in which a nuclear strike in Europe might not draw retaliation from the American nuclear arsenal.

"What the president was being asked was, if one of these went off, would that automatically trigger the deployment of the intercontinental missiles from both sides, and he said he didn't think so," Weinberger said.

"The only point here is what happens if one of the nuclear battlefield weapons goes off. Does that automatically start the launching of ballistic missiles? The answer to that is, it is unlikely the going off or release of one of these battlefield weapons automatically triggers anything."

A spokesman for West German Defense Minister Hans Apel said Apel was satisfied that Reagan's remarks did not constitute a change in U.S. policy.

Bomb blast kills two, injures 99 in Antwerp diamond district

ANTWERP, Belgium (AP) — A previously unheard of group claimed responsibility for an explosion that killed two people and injured 99 others near a diamond district synagogue.

No motive was given for the fourth deadly attack against European Jews in 15 months.

A booby-trapped yellow van blew up Tuesday on a narrow street in the heart of the largely Jewish district, damaging many buildings and shattering windows several hundred yards away.

Many of the injured were hit by flying glass, bricks and steel, witnesses said. The two Belgian women killed were identified as Anna Paenen, 63, and Simonne van den Bussche, 43.

An anonymous caller who told the Belgian news agency Belga he represented "Direct Action Group, Section Belgium," claimed responsibility. According to Belga, the caller said the blast was not a racist act but did not elaborate.

"We don't know this group but we'll investigate this," a police spokesman said. An anarchist group called "Direct Action" surfaced in France in 1979 but was believed to have dissolved after French police arrested 19 members in September 1980.

In Paris, former members of "Direct Action" denied any role in the Antwerp blast, calling the telephone claim "idiotic."

The Israeli Embassy in Brussels blamed the Palestine Liberation Organization but the PLO office in the Belgian capital denied the accusation.

The van exploded in front of the Antwerp Diamond Club across from a synagogue on Hoveniersstraat, an S-shaped street guarded at both ends by police to prevent diamond robberies and bolster security in the wake of recent attacks on European Jews. The blast occurred a half-hour before services were to begin at the synagogue.

"It was a nightmare," said a construction worker who witnessed the explosion. "There was no van anymore, only its axles. Another van parked on the other side of the street was on its roof, burning. The whole street was in shambles, covered with debris. Then we realized there were many victims.

"In the heap of steel, brick and glass pieces, we found people...bleeding and moaning.

"We tried to help them, comfort them, while comrades called for the police and ambulances. Meanwhile, many people employed by diamond firms located in the street were rushing out, some of them bleeding from glass cuts...I saw three women staggering, covered with blood, one of them disfigured."

An elderly Jewish man, sitting on a doorstep with his head in his hands, told a Belgian reporter: "It was like World War II. I hoped I would not see that again." Antwerp was heavily damaged by German V-1 and V-2 bombs during the war.

In July 1980, two Arabs lobbed grenades into a group of Jewish children about to leave Antwerp for a vacation camp, killing one and injuring 20. A year ago, four people were killed in a synagogue bombing in Paris and just seven weeks ago, a grenade and submachine gun attack blamed on Arabs killed two people and wounded 20 in a Vienna synagogue.

Two die in shootout with West German police

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Police fought a 15-minute gunbattle late Tuesday in a southern section of Munich with five suspected right-wing extremists, killing two and wounding a third, officers said.

One policeman was also seriously wounded in the shootout, which officers said erupted when they stopped a car for a check of identification papers. The surviving suspects were in police custody.

A spokesman for the Munich police refused to release further details pending a press conference scheduled for Wednesday afternoon. He also declined to say what made police suspect the five were "right-wing extremists."

But well-placed sources said plainclothed officers had been following the five by car at the request of the Federal Criminal Office, which coordinates investigations into terrorist and political extremist groups.

When the car carrying the five reached the city's Perlacher Forest district, police waved for the auto to stop for a check of identification papers, the sources added.

Suddenly, they said, the five opened fire and hurled a grenade at the officers, setting off the gunbattle.

West German officials have been warning for years that while public attention was directed against left-wing terrorists such as the Red Army Faction, the number of right-wing extremist groups was growing.

Rightists were believed to have been behind the September 1980 explosion at Munich's Oktoberfest which killed more than a dozen persons.

Moon returns to U.S. to face charges of income tax evasion

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Unification Church founder Rev. Sun Myung Moon is returning to the United States today to deal with "biased and unfounded" charges of income tax evasion, a spokesman said.

The spokesman, who refused to be identified, said the 61-year-old evangelist had indicated earlier that he would not return to New York to face the federal court indictment handed down Thursday.

Moon, who maintains a residence in Irvington, N.Y., arrived in his native Korea last week.

Moon was charged with filing false personal tax returns for 1973, 1974 and 1975, and with failing to report about $112,000 in interest earned on $1.6 million in bank deposits during that same period.

He also was charged with failing to report $70,000 worth of stock he and his wife received in a trade for merchandise in 1973.

Unification Church officials in New York denied the charges and accused the U.S. government of a "fundamental attack on all religions in America."

A 39-year-old Moon aide, Takeru Kamiyama of Tarrytown, N.Y., was charged with perjury, obstructing the investigation and conspiracy, aiding in the filing of Moon's allegedly false returns for 1974 and 1975.

If convicted, Moon and his aide each face up to five years in prison on the charge of conspiring to cheat the government of income taxes, and three years on each tax count.

Both were to be arraigned Thursday in U.S. District Court in New York City.

Mose Durst, president of the Unification Church in the United States, called the indictments "the attempted assassination of Rev. Moon and the 3 million members of the Unification Church."

He said the money came from church funds from Korea and Japan and acknowledged a technical legal error in placing bank accounts and stock in the names of Moon and his wife. Durst said there was no intent to violate the law, however.

"Not one penny of the money was used for Rev. Moon's personal purpose," Durst said.

The Unification Church has been a subject of controversy in the United States, where critics claim it is a cult which brainwashes young converts and uses its tax exempt status to buy property and operate profitable businesses.

The Moon indictment was brought up Tuesday by lawmakers in South Korea's National Assembly, who questioned Foreign Minister Lho Shin-Yong about the case.

"Moon's case is not one for the government to meddle in," the foreign minister said.

Moon was not available for comment on the tax case. He has business interests in Korea and still maintains a home here, but Moon and his immediate family have lived mostly in the United States for several years.

Moon founded the church in 1954 and came to the United States in the early 1970s. His theology combines elements of Oriental ancestor worship.

Report given on new school

A report on the present campaign to raise over $1.3 million to be used to construct a multi-purpose complex for Midland Christian School was given at a meeting of the Midland Vision for the 80s Executive Committee Tuesday night.

The complex will include classrooms, library, labs for science, home economics and art, offices and a gymnasium.

Don Evans, president of Tom Brown, Inc., spoke to the committee and the 70 guests gathered at Ranchland Hills Country Club on "A Community Commitment to Education." A multimedia presentation covering the history and highlighting the future of the school was shown by Winston Bell, director of development.

"I really believe that Midland Christian School meets a great need in our community and serves a lot of families. I am very pleasd to be associated with the school and to have been asked to serve as chairman of this capital campaign," Joe G. Roper, vice chairman of the Board of Directors of Tom Brown, Inc., said.

Windell Thomason, independent oil operator, is honorary chairman of the campaign. Division chairmen are Jerry Carter, CPA; Francis McDonald, vice president of MGF Drilling, Co.; Randy Prude, general partner of Miranda Energy; and Dwayne Casbeer, real estate developer.

Completion of the first phase of the building program was marked recently at a ribbon-cutting ceremony by Mayor Thane Akins. Phase II, a regulation size gymnasium with dressing rooms for men and women, is scheduled to be completed in January 1982. The new 37,000 square-foot addition will more than double the size of the existing facilities.

The executive committee is seeking to raise a minimum of $600,000 in the Midland City Campaign. The board determined that the major needs of the school included the new facility, renovation of the existing plant, annual operations and academic program enrichment. Over $300,000 has already been raised through gifts and pledges from the Faculty-Staff and the Trustees-Former Trustees of the school. Additional funds will be sought from corporations and select foundations.

Midland Christian School is presently observing its 25th year of operation. It has grown from an enrollment of 30 in 1957 to almost 500 in 1981. The first senior class of 12 students was graduated last spring. The school is fully accredited by the Texas Education Agency and is a non-denominational school.

UTPB offers course on adjusting to divorce

ODESSA — "Divorce Adjustment: Coping with a New Lifestyle" will be the topic of an eight-week continuing education class offered at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin beginning Thursday.

Peggy O'Neil, coordinator of the course, said learning to cope with new situations, stages of divorce recovery and ways of dealing with the "single-again" life will be discussed.

Guest speakers also will deal with stress, anger, practical adjustment, legal aspects, coping with rental adjustment, personal development and social aspects of the divorce.

O'Neil noted that those who go through a divorce should have some recourse to take or some place to go for help.

"As a daughter of an alcoholic and Al-Anon parents whose life work is counseling with people problems, my recourse when faced with divorce was to seek help with those who had been through a similar experience," she said.

Divided Republicans trying to salvage budget

BY CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faced with a spiraling federal deficit, divided congressional Republicans are struggling to salvage President Reagan's promise of a balanced budget by 1984, a goal that administration officials now concede may be impossible to meet.

New projections circulated by Senate Republicans show a deficit of $90 billion in 1984 — $31.2 billion more than the administration has calculated — without either new spending cuts or tax increases.

Sources on Capitol Hill said House Republican leaders balked at both those solutions during a rancorous meeting Tuesday, even as Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan confirmed that the administration also is considering higher cigarette and alcohol excise taxes to try to close the budget gap.

"Some (House) members see the handwriting on the wall and are trying to protect their turf," said one source, who asked not to be identified.

Senate and House GOP leaders were expected to meet again today, and Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., said, "We continue to look for a package."

The Senate Republican plan outlined Tuesday calls for $14.7 billion in tax increases and extra spending cuts for fiscal 1982 — $1.3 billion less than Reagan proposed last month — and more than $73 billion over three years to balance the budget by 1984.

The plan would delay until next year work on specific tax increases and cuts in government benefit programs other than Social Security.

But House Republicans said that might be difficult.

House GOP leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois said members are "more inclined to vote for tax reductions than tax increases" in an election year. And Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., architect of the individual tax cut pushed through Congress last summer, said, "You don't raise taxes in a recession."

Without further economies, the Senate GOP budget projections forecast deficits of $66 billion next Sept. 30 and $81 billion in fiscal 1983. The administration's estimates are $59.1 billion and $62.9 billion, respectively, without enactment of Reagan's most recent austerity plan.

Senate aides said the estimates are based on most of the administration's assumptions of how the economy will perform, but use slightly more pessimistic estimates of interest rates. Administration and congressional sources said privately that White House budget director David A. Stockman is operating under similar projections.

In testimony before the Senate Budget Committee on Tuesday, Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel said enacting all aspects of Reagan's economic program and balancing the budget in 1984 would be "perfection."

"We're unlikely to be able to achieve any of these objectives in toto," he said.

Lawrence Kudlow, assistant budget director for economic policy, told the same panel that Congress should consider several possible tax increases, including boosts in excise taxes and a value added tax, but he did not personally support any of them.

Regan, meanwhile, told a group of business executives Tuesday that his department is "looking at all types of things," including excise tax increases and a narrowing of business tax loopholes.

Three die in Brink's robbery

NANUET, N.Y. (AP) — Robbers shot a Brink's truck guard to death and stole $1.6 million in a brazen mid-afternoon ambush, then opened fire with automatic weapons at a roadblock and killed two police officers, authorities said.

Four suspects — two men and two women — were arrested and all the stolen money was recovered, but police searched the area today for two to four other suspects.

A third police officer, two other Brink's guards and a suspect were injured.

The armored truck was picking up the day's receipts at the Nanuet National Bank, at a shopping mall in Nanuet, at around 4 p.m. Tuesday when at least four bandits opened fire "without warning" on the three guards, Rockland County District Attorney Kenneth Gribetz said early today at a news conference.

A 49-year-old guard, Peter Paige of East Brunswick, N.J., was killed.

"It happened very fast," said Jack Horan, a security guard at the bank. "They left and the shooting started. People started shouting and we saw the van leaving."

The robbers fled in a red van and drove about five blocks before splitting up and getting into a rental van and a yellow foreign car, Gribetz said. Police believe at least two other suspects were waiting in the parked vehicles.

The getaway cars were spotted about five miles away at a roadblock at an entrance to the New York State Thruway, and four police officers from the town of Nyack, 25 miles north of New York City, stopped the van to question the driver.

A man and a woman were sitting in the front seat and the officers, including Waverly Brown, 45, of Spring Valley, ordered them out. Sgt. Edward O'Grady, 32, of Pearl River walked around the side.

State high court asked to intervene in rape cases

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Supreme Court is expected to decide by Thursday whether to intervene in the case of five admitted rapists originally given suspended sentences and $5-a-week fines and later handed tougher sentences by the same judge.

Justice Neil Lynch of the state's high court heard arguments on the matter Tuesday, and said he would decide within two days whether to take up the case. The five defendants, one from Quincy and the rest from Holbrook, remained free.

The defendants pleaded guilty Oct. 5 before Superior Court Judge Herbert Abrams to charges that they raped a 38-year-old woman in January 1980 in a wooded section of Holbrook. Prosecutors said the woman was left naked in the secluded area.

Lawyers for the five men contended that the woman was a willing participant and offered to have sex with the men for $200.

The suspended sentences and the fines provoked a public outcry. Gov. Edward J. King called for judicial review of the sentences and the state Executive Council called on the Commission on Judicial Conduct to investigate.

On Oct. 9, Abrams reversed himself and gave the young men three-to-five year jail terms at Walpole State Prison, unless they wished to withdraw their guilty pleas and stand trial on rape charges.

He said the suspensions "may have been illegal" because Massachusetts law doesn't allow suspended sentences for crimes that carry a maximum penalty of life in prison.

Lawyers for the five defendants argued Tuesday that Abrams acted illegally in reversing his original sentences. One defense attorney said Abrams placed the defendants in "double jeopardy" by twice sentencing them for the same crime.

Defense attorney William Pritchard said Abrams may have reversed his original decision because of public pressure.

Defense attorneys also emphasized that the defendants had signed a probation agreement, and had started paying their $5 weekly fines. The men were to pay the weekly fine until each paid $500.

Charles Hely, assistant Norfolk County district attorney, disputed the defense claim that the judge did not have the power to change the sentence.

He said two U.S. Supreme Court decisions last year "laid to rest the theory advanced today that you have some finality in the sentence originally imposed ... The law as it stands today is that illegal sentences may always be corrected, even if the defendant has begun to serve it."

The five defendants are Alexander Aldoupolis, 21, of Quincy, Robert Tarr, 21, Mark Savoy, 21, John Strickland, 21, and Richard Dovel, 20, all of Holbrook.

Yankee thunder, defense put Dodgers in hole

NEW YORK (AP) — Home run thunder and defensive brilliance, a familiar recipe they've used before, have given the New York Yankees the jump on the Los Angeles Dodgers in baseball's 78th World Series.

The thunder belonged to Bob Watson and the defense was provided by infielders Graig Nettles and Willie Randolph. Together, they proved too much for the Dodgers to cope with in the opening game of the battle for baseball's world championship.

WATSON BECAME the 17th player in history to hit a homer in his first Series at-bat, drilling a three-run shot in the first inning, Nettles turned in two outstanding plays at third base and Randolph had a couple at second, shortcircuiting the Los Angeles attack in New York's 5-3 victory Tuesday night.

And some less than glowing play by the Dodgers made the National League champions look shoddy by comparison.

Bob Lemon, the philosophical man who manages the Yankees, remembers how Nettles' glove torpedoed the Dodgers in 1978, the last time these two teams met in the fall classic.

"You'd think," he noted, "they'd learn not to hit the ball down there."

They keep trying him, though.

Nettles set the defensive tone for the game with a diving stop on leadoff batter Davey Lopes' shot down the third base line in the first inning. Right away, Yankee pitcher Ron Guidry knew it would be a good night.

"If the ball's got to be hit somewhere," Guidry said, "I'd rather it be hit to him."

THE NEXT time the Dodgers came to the plate, they were three runs behind, thanks to Watson. With one out in the bottom of the first, Jerry Mumphrey singled. After Dave Winfield struck out, Lou Piniella hit a ground rule double to right. That brought up Watson, who suspected that with first base open, Dodger Manager Tommy Lasorda might not let left-hander Jerry Reuss pitch to him. Especially with Nettles, a left-handed batter, on deck.

"In that situation, in the first inning, I'm not going to put him on to get to a left-handed hitter like Nettles, who may hit the ball out with that short porch," said Lasorda.

So, Watson hit one out instead.

"My knees were shaking and there were butterflies like I dreamed there would be," said Watson as he stepped to the plate for his first World Series swing after 17 years as a professional baseball player. "I can attest I was nervous."

The count went to 1-2 and then Watson drilled a shot to the opposite field, dropping it over the fence about 375 feet from home plate.

"It was a fastball away and he just hit it to the best part of the park," said Reuss.

That, said Watson, was intentional.

"I noticed in batting practice that the ball wasn't carrying to left center," he said. "I decided I would look for a pitch to hit the other way."

ARMED WITH the quick lead, Guidry had an easier task. "Anytime you get a couple of runs in the first inning, you don't have to be so fine," Guidry said. "You can just make them hit the ball. I don't like to nip and tuck when I've got a lead like that."

The Yankees got Guidry another run in the third when Mumphrey singled, stole second and scored on Piniella's second hit. That finished Reuss, with Bobby Castillo taking over. In the fourth, New York made it 5-0, courtesy of Castillo, who walked four batters, the last three of them consecutively with two out.

Now the Dodgers were faced with a major job of playing catch-up baseball. The glovework of Nettles and Randolph did not make the task any easier.

In the fifth, Randolph made a tough short-hop stop on Rick Monday and threw him out. It saved a run because the next batter, Steve Yeager, reached Guidry for a home run.

"I got a good jump on it," said Randolph. "The timing was right and I had the good hands to make that play. The ball was knuckling and sinking but with my good range, I could stand up and make that play. I've made that play before."

In the seventh, with the score still 5-1, Ron Cey opened with a shot into the left field corner. He tried to stretch the hit into a double and Winfield cut him down. Lasorda wasn't thrilled with that development.

"You can't get thrown out with nobody out when you're down 5-1," the Dodger manager said.

THAT WOULD be the last chance Los Angeles would get at Guidry. When he came into the dugout after the inning, Lemon was waiting.

"He said, 'Good job. Take a shower,' " Guidry said. "I didn't get a chance to say anything. You don't argue with the manager."

It was a familiar pattern. With flame-throwing Ron Davis and Rich Gossage waiting in the bullpen, complete games are rare for the Yankees.

"I have no qualms about being a seven-inning pitcher," said Guidry. "With Davis and Gossage out there — two guys who can throw harder than you — you let them carry you through."

Davis got the call but had trouble with his control and walked the first two Dodgers in the eighth. Gossage came in and set the stage for the play of the game.

After pinch hitter Jay Johnstone singled for one run, Dusty Baker delivered a sacrifice fly, making it 5-3. That brought up Steve Garvey, who smashed a 3-1 pitch on a line toward the left field corner. Nettles made a corkscrew, back-handed grab that bordered on the miraculous. The rally was over.

"A play like that takes the steam out of them," said Nettles. "You can sense the letdown on the other team's bench. To hit the ball so hard and get nothing out of it."

Garvey was hardly surprised at the play.

"I just hit it as hard as I could," he said. "I thought if I hit it with a little less velocity, it would have gone by him. He's been making that kind of play for years, so there really isn't much I can do about it."

NETTLES WAS not guarding the line on Garvey and that made the stab even harder.

"I was playing the situation," the veteran third baseman said. "Goose was behind on the count and I wasn't really protecting the line. Garvey can pull anybody."

Nettles' play was all the help Gossage needed. He retired the next four batters easily to wrap up the first-game victory.

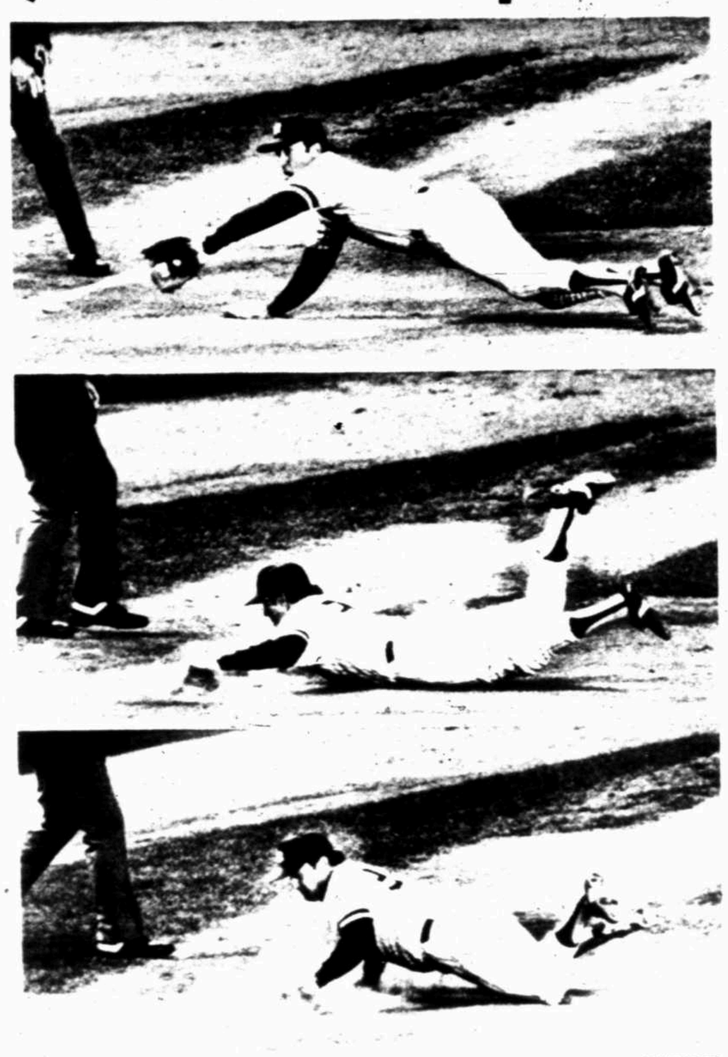

Afterward, Lasorda was still marveling over the Yankee defense.

"Between Randolph and Nettles, they made six great plays out there," he said. "That guy (Nettles) is amazing. Does he do that all the time? I get sick to my stomach seeing him make those plays all the time. He must go to bed hoping and praying he can kill us with his glove."

The Dodgers are down, but this team has been playing comeback throughout the post season. They lost the first two games to Houston before sweeping three straight to win the NL West Division playoff. Then had to win two straight in Montreal to take the league title. So Lasorda viewed Tuesday night's game as little more than a momentary setback.

"HECK, WE were down 0-2 in a five-game series and now we're only down one game in the best of seven," he said. "All it means is that we lost the first game."

The Dodgers will try to get even tonight with Burt Hooton, most valuable player in the League Championship Series, pitching against Tommy John for the Yankees. Nettles and his glove will again be at third base for New York. Lemon has a simple suggestion for how Los Angeles might deal with Nettles.

Hey Ray, is it still a race?

Dear Coach Ray Overton
Abilene Cooper High School

Ray, we've known you for quite some time now, but we never knew you had a dishonest streak in you, but after what your team did to the Midland Lee Rebels last Friday night at Memorial Stadium, we have some grave questions concerning your program at Abilene Cooper.

After all, you said you were bringing a team to town with a 3-1-1 record and you were supposed to be licking wounds from a 7-7 tie with Odessa High. That record is the biggest sham in the state of Texas. Your Cougars should be in the NFL, not District 5-5A. Hey coach, this is high school football. How dare you bring those grown men to play our kids.

LEE IS a good football team as far as high school teams go, but what you put on the field Friday couldn't have lost one game and tied another if it was playing against the Philadelphia Eagles every week. Why don't you take your Cougars and go find your own Super Bowl game? We have enough troubles in 5-5A without you running in a bunch of ringers.

We don't know who that was playing fullback for you, but it couldn't be Allan Gunter. Before the game Friday, we were wondering why he turned around when someone called for O.J. And whoever he was, you had the nerve to list him as a sophomore. In all honesty, you aren't going to really play him for two more years — are you?

And that Mike Stills. If he is enrolled at Cooper High School, then who is that Lambert fellow playing for the Pittsburgh Steelers. No high school athlete can stand Calvin Riggs on his head like that guy you played Friday.

Coach, it's just that we are having a hard time grasping how you can put a team on the field that can score 23 points against a defense that had given up only 14 points in five previous games. Lee was game enough, but when your offensive line moved, the earth shook.

TERRY WILLIAMSON

OF COURSE, you're going to tell us that these were the same kids who lost to Forth Worth Eastern Hills and tied Odessa High. Well, if it's games your playing with us, we aren't buying it. Did you just want to keep things interesting for the rest of us? With that team you have, anything short of a state championship is an unrealistic goal.

Did you just want to see Lee and Odessa Permian have a little hope before lowering the boom? That was real nice of you coach. We got to have the makings of a district race before you tossed away the keys to your hippo cages.

We really thought this was going to be a race before you unleashed the "real" Cooper. We understand that you play Permian this Friday. It looks like the outcome of the district race rests on the outcome in that contest. But not even Mojo magic can work against your troops. Is the race really over? Or are you planning some more games with us this year?

We know Permian doesn't stand a chance against your outfit if you really want to win the game, but we mere mortals are just foolish enough to listen for the score. Anyway, what else is left to do at this point in time?

RAY, WHERE did you say that the state championship game was going to be played this year?

Still, we have an answer for your Cooper Cougars. Next year, when your 205-pound fullback is a junior and your 220-pound wingback is a senior, the second place team in our district will also get to go to the playoffs. After all, there has to be some kind of new rule to keep alive the meaning of competition in high school football and your Cougars are playing in the wrong league.

Yours truly,
5-5A Executive Committee

Warrior pair earns honors

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

Tuloso-Midway's Glenn Skourppa and Kevin Alexander were junior high students trying to outgrow clumsiness and squeaky voices the last time highly ranked Gregory-Portland lost a regular season football game.

But the pair was all grown up last Friday night as high school seniors when they led the Warriors to a surprising 16-14 upset of the No. 2 state ranked Wildcats, who lost for the first time in 33 regular season games dating back to 1978. It was G-P's first district loss in five years.

Skourppa, a 6-foot 175-pound linebacker-offensive tackle, and Alexander, a 6-3, 195-pound quarterback-linebacker figured heavily in ending G-P's streak and earned mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll for their efforts.

Skourppa contributed 17 tackles, 10 of them unassisted, while Alexander rushed 99 yards on 17 carries on offense and added 11 tackles from his linebacking position.

"This is Kevin's first year at quarterback and he's starting to come around," said Tuloso-Midway Coach Don Schmidt. "He made two or three great runs to keep our drives going at critical times. Glenn is just a super quick athlete. He had 24 tackles in our previous game against Rockport."

The victory also marks a historical note for Schmidt, who coached Beeville to a 6-0 victory over G-P when the Wildcats last lost a district game in 1976.

Wayne Perkins of San Antonio St. Gerard's romped for five touchdowns on runs of 19, 45, 59, 89 and 43 yards and finished with 275 rushing yards on 19 carries in a 34-18 victory over Houston St. Pius.

Houston Washington's Richard Peavy caugvht four passes, three going for touchdowns, and returned an interception 53 yards for another touchdown in a 43-7 victory over Houston Sam Houston.

Huntsville's Benny Bryant snagged 12 passes for4 176 yards and one touchdown and quarterback David Reynolds completed 24 of 31 passes for 358 yards in a 24-7 victory over Navasota.

In other outstanding individual performances:

--Newton's Anthony Byerly ballooned his state-leading rushing figures to 1,531 for the season with 184 yards on 18 carries and three touchdowns in a 42-0 shutout of Hemphill.

--Junior halfback Tony Hernandez bulled 202 yards on 18 carries and scored touchdowns on runs of nine, 15, 20 and 70 yards to lead Carrizo Springs to a 62-0 rout of San Antonio Southside.

--Deweyville running backs Mark Burks rushed 200 yards on 20 carries and and Mark Richards gained 148 yards on eight carries in a 61-0 rout of Evadale.

--Cameron's Oscar Riggins also netted 202 yards on 29 carries and scored on runs of 24, nine and 13 yards in a 42-18 victory over Madisonville. Riggins also completed a 33-yard option pass and caught two passes for 29 yards.

--Paddy Doyle, a receiver for top ranked Port Arthur Jefferson caught five passes for 138 yards and three touchdowns in a 48-0 victory over Beaumont Charlton Pollard. Jeff quarterback Clifford Landry went to Doyle when Pollard threw up a double-teamming defense on split end Shay Walker, the team's leading receiver.

--Tailback Wayne High and kicker Raymond Martinez combined scoring efforts to help keep Hereford undefeated with a 9-6 victory over Plainview. High rushed 170 yards on 24 carries and scored on a 69-yard touchdown run. Martinez kicked a game-winning 32-yard field goal with 3:22 left in the game.

--Houston Furr linebacker Alvin Hall recovered three fumbles and intercepted two passes to set up a pair of touchdowns in a 39-0 victory over C.E. King.

Punishment drills halted by college

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Athletes at Virginia Tech University will never again undergo punishment drills as the result of a settlement reached with the mother of a football player who died after such a drill.

Delores Vorhies of Rockaway Township said Tuesday she "reluctantly" signed the out-of-court settlement recently, ending a four-year battle with the university and its athletic association.

Mrs. Vorhies receives an undisclosed amount of cash from the athletic association and a written promise that the college will never gain use the drills, according to the settlement.

She claims a punishment drill killed her son, Robert Vorhies, 18, on Nov. 21, 1977.

Britton fires medal 79

Susan Britton is still the golfer to beat in the Women's City Golf championship. Going for her 10th Midland Women's City Golf championship and eighth in a row, Mrs. Britton demonstrated that she still retained the old golfing magic by shooting a 79 to take medal honors Tuesday in the first round of the 1981 tournament at Hogan Park.

Michelle Wilks finished four strokes off the pace with an 83 in a first round of play that also served as a qualifying round. Players will be flighted today, according to Tuesday's scores.

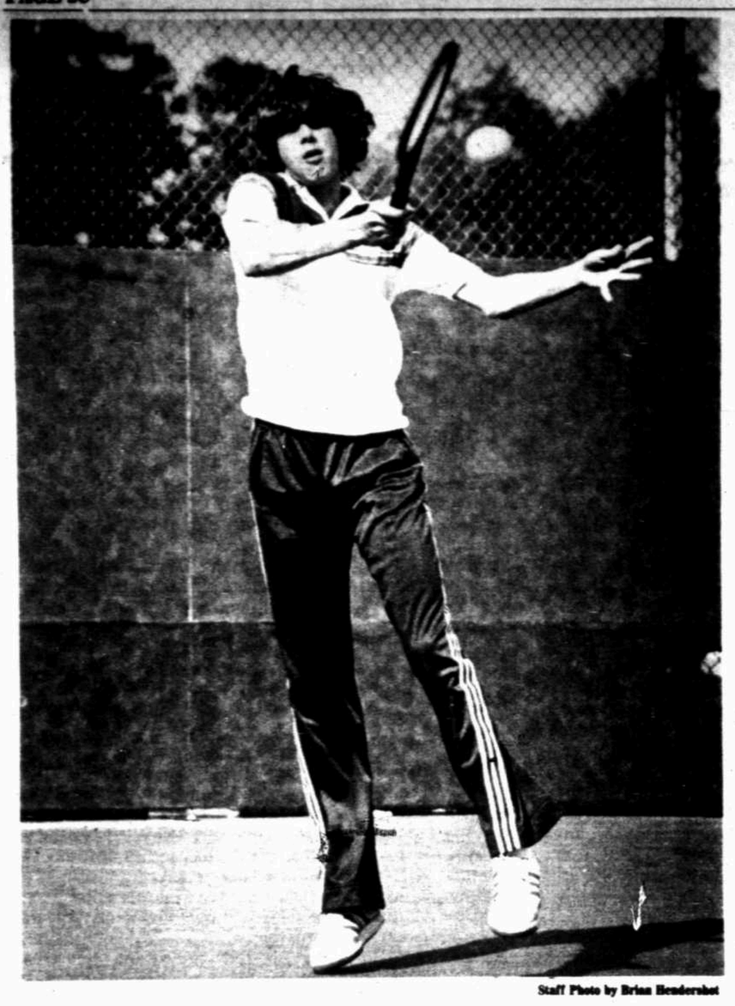

The medal play tournament continues today with the first foursome teeing off at 8:30 a.m. and the last group teeing off at 9:54 a.m.

The tournament will conclude Thursday with an awards luncheon to follow at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Low putts for the first day went to Shirley Mays, who took 27 on a round of 106. Sue Campbell had 28 putts with a round of 95.

Following the leaders in the first round were Nina Colter and Jane W. Thomas, who carded 85's while Margaret Vann had an 86, Jennie Gooch shot an 88 and Charlott Marburger had an 89.

Tuesday's scores and putts: Susan Britton 79-34; Michelle Wilks 83-33; Nina Colter 85-31; Jane W. Thomas 85-37; Margaret Vann 86-33; Jennie Gooch 88-32; Charlott Marburger 89-32; Jo Dickson 90-31; Betty Clarke 90-31; Ella Heath 90-30; dede Plank 91-31; Sylvia Roberts 91-34; Sylvia Lauer 92-34; Mary Robinson 94-31; Sandy Wilkerson 94-29; Jean Elkins 94-36; Betty Howell 95-31; helen Brant 95-34; Sue Campbell 95-28; Charleen Roseberry 97-36; Jayne Thomas 97; Clara Boyd 98-34; Marge Tope 98-31; Jean Train 98-34; Edie Stahl 99; Naomi Colson 102-37; Dorothy Melzer 102-34; Alice Sivaslian 103-29; Charistie Culbertson 103-36; Jean Allen 104-35; Martah Floyd 106-34; Shirley Mays 106-27; Lois Guthrie 107-35; Evelyn Milby 107-30; Meria Ketner 108034; Ruthe Owens 108-38; Pat Daughery 111-34; Phyllis Maxwell 111-38; Nancy Milner 111-33; Maymie Callaway 113; Margaret Stricker 113-35; Nancy Tschirgi 114-34; Florence Malley 114-32; Jean Connor 114-35; Nell Kimball 115-34; Caroline LeVine 117-36; Maurine Phillips 120-35; Ginny Piette 122-34; Jo Ladaga 122-34; Nancy Cox 248-49.

Midland Lee's Mike McFadden returns a forehand shot to Midland High's Duncan Fraser Tuesday at Midland High courts. McFadden posted a 6-3, 6-4 victory over Fraser, but MHS won the dual meet 9-4.

MHS defeats Rebel netters

Midland High defeated Midland Lee, 9-4, in a dual tennis match at Midland High Tuesday in the first meeting of the year between the two teams.

MHS won all four matches in the girls competition and took five of nine matches in the boys competition. Lee did win two of three doubles matches in the boys division.

Tuesday's results of the Lee-Midland High dual tennis meet with Midland High players listed first in each match.

Boys Singles: Duncan Fraser lost to Mike McFadden, 6-3, 6-4; Peter Leede def. Doug Scott, 7-5, 6-0; Miles Boldrick def. Richard Banks, 6-4, 6-3; Watson LaForce def. Mark Miller, 6-4, 6-1; Clyde Pine lost to Cody Farris, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3; Tommy Hill def. Bryan Thomas, 6-2, 6-2.

Boys Doubles: Fraser-Boldrick lost to McFadden-Banks, 6-2, 6-3; Leede-LaForce lost to Scott-Miller, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2; Pine-Hill def. Farris-Thomas, 7-6, 6-1.

Girls Singles: Caroline Kirwan def. Karen Mann, 6-2, 6-2; Kathy Boles def. Drenda Kaiser, 6-3, 6-2; Julie Crain def. Tammy Martin, 6-1, 6-2.

Girls Doubles: Kirwan-Boles def. Mann-Kaiser, 7-6, 6-2.

San Angelo nips Bulldogs

SAN ANGELO — The San Angelo Bobcats moved closer to the District 5-5A volleyball crown here Tuesday with a 15-6, 15-13 win over Midland High's girls.

San Angelo, who won the first half race, is now 4-0 in the second half while Midland High fell to 2-2 in district play and 14-11 for the year.

Midland led by a 13-5 count in the second set, but could not score another point as the Bobcats rallied for the victory in straight sets.

San Angelo also captured the junior varsity game with a 3-15, 15-6, 15-7 win over the Bullpups.

Midland High will host Odessa High at the Midland High gym Thursday with the varsity game at 7 p.m. and the junior varsity contest at 6 p.m.

Detroit injuries mount after win

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Detroit cornerback James Hunter may miss the rest of the season because of a broken arm suffered in the Lions' 48-17 triumph over Chicago, a Lions spokesman said.

Defensive end Bubba Baker may also miss some games because of an injury in the National Football League game Monday night, while Detroit Coach Monte Clark is awaiting word on the extent of a knee injury to offensive tackle Chris Dieterich.

Hunter underwent surgery at Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit Tuesday to have a pin and plate inserted in his broken left forearm, a team spokesman said. The injury came when Hunter made an open field tackle on Chicago running back Walter Payton, and the spokesman said it could cause him to miss the remaining nine games.

Baker is expected to miss two or three games after suffering an "astro-toe," an injury the Lions say is caused by sudden or forced stops on artificial playing surfaces.

Dietrich injured his left knee in the second half of Monday night's game, but the club will not know how serious the problem is until after receiving results of an arthroscopic examination today, the spokesman said.

Rebels upset Lady Steers

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

With their hopes for a District 5-5A volleyball crown hanging by a fragile thread, the Midland Lee Rebels rallied to upset Big Spring, 15-10, 15-11, Tuesday night on the Rebs court to stay alive in the loop race.

Big Spring entered the contest tied with San Angelo with a 3-0 district mark while the Rebels were one step back at 2-1. The win by the Rebs (18-10, 3-1) keeps the Lee and the Lady Steers (18-7, 3-1) in the race but both need San Angelo to lose two league matches.

In the first set, the Rebels quickly found themselves down 5-0 as Lisa Majors and Elise Wheat served rockets at the Lee defense.

LEE RALLIED behind the serving of Lesa Burnett, Felicia Farias and the net play of Suzanna McGaha to pull within two, 6-4.

Both teams sensed the need for a victory and both pulled out all the stops. Long vollies and excellent defense on both sides of the net kept the game tight until Burnett stepped to the line for her second turn at serving. She produced four cannon shots that gave the Rebels their first lead of the evening, 9-6.

McGaha then broke the Lady Steers' serve with a solid smash down the middle of their defense. Lee took advantage of the break to run off three point to take a 12-7 lead.

Big Spring wouldn't fold and came storming back behind the serving of Paula Spears and the net work of Tracy Williams and Wheat. The Steers cut the margin to 12-9 before Pam Landers found a hole in Big Spring's defense and alertly dropped a return in.

Farias served two winners to leave the Rebs just one point shy of the victory. However, Big Spring wasn't about to give up without a struggle and fought off three game points before Farias smashed a return on Debra Quintela's serve for the winner.

IN THE second set, both teams fought on equal terms through the first seven points. With Big Spring up 4-3, Lee suddenly went sour. The Rebels started standing around on defense, lost any trace of teamwork and looked like a team that was beaten.

The Lady Steers took advantage of the situation to run off five straight points to take a 9-3 lead.

At that point Lee coach Janice Baulich lost her temper and called a time out. During the timeout, Baulich did a lot of talking and gesturing but it did some good as her team came out and played excellent ball over the last part of the contest.

With McGaha appearing to be everywhere on the floor — making blocks, smashing returns, running down saves, picking the ball off the floor and just making life miserable for Big Spring — Lee slowly crept back to trail by two, 10-8.

BIG SPRING managed one more point before Burnett stepped to the line. With her booming serves on target, she ran off seven straight points to give the Rebels the badly needed victory.

Big Spring mentor Patty Purser said, "No. 88's (Burnett) serves were awesome — we just couldn't control them. Lee played very well tonight. Like I said before I think Lee is the most improved team in district."

Purser added, "Janis Phillips is a key to our backline and she played in her first game in over two weeks tonight. She has been out with a sprainked ankle and the layoff hurt her. I had to take her out in the second game because she just couldn't move very well. I'm not using this as an excuse, Lee played well and I don't want to take any thing away from them."

WINNING COACH Baulich said, "The last part of the second set was perhaps the best we have played all year. After I lost my temper they seemed to start playing more as a team and having some fun." She added, "For us to play well, we have to be relaxed and have fun. After I got upset, the girls seemed to settle down and went to playing like they can."

Bualich lauded the play of her team, "We played very well. McGaha was everywhere on the net and Landers did a great job of picking up the ball and finding holes in the Big Spring defense while Burnett was super at serving."

Lee made it a complete sweep as the junior varsity struggled by Big Spring 15-12, 11-15, 15-12.

Akers says Sims special

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Coach Fred Akers of Texas says the fact that defensive tackle Kenneth Sims has been mentioned for the Heisman Trophy — an award that usually goes to a back — "indicates the caliber of player he is."

"Kenneth Sims is a very special talent," says Akers. "And we have had a few on our teams here at Texas. Tommy Nobis was special, Scott Appleton was special, Earl Campbell was special, and Kenneth Sims is special."

Even though Arkansas overwhelmed Texas 42-11 on Saturday, Sims had 19 tackles — 17 unassisted. Six of the tackles were behind the line of scrimmage, and Sims also caused a fumble and pressured the passer six times.

In five games this year, Sims, a 6-foot-6, 270-pound senior, leads the Longhorn team with 66 tackles, seven more than middle linebacker Doug Shankle.

He is generally considered a first-round, perhaps No. 1, pro draft choice.

Texas coaches credit Sims' mother, Doris Sims of Kosse, population 471, with making him what he is — a student who makes better than average grades, gives pep talks to the tennis team, speaks with ease to congressmen and children, and probably is the best defensive football player ever at Texas.

"The debt I owe my mama can never be repaid," says Sims, third son and seventh of eight children.

Do Mets have Bambi or Beast?

NEW YORK (AP) — Is George Bamberger a soft-spoken sort inclined to be a cheerleader on the bench, as he says he is? Or is he a strict disciplinarian who lets you know who's boss, as described by his new boss, Frank Cashen?

The truth probably lies somewhere between these two extremes. And it will be up to the New York Mets' players whether they are managed by Bambi or the Beast.

"They probably will find they are playing for the easiest individual they ever met," Bamberger said Tuesday at a news conference to announce his appointment as the Mets' ninth manager. "As long as they don't take kindness for weakness, they will be all right."

THAT FINAL sentence may have been a subtle warning for the Mets, who have been known to play far below expectations in recent summers, and it was quickly underscored by Cashen, the National League club's executive vice-president and general manager.

"Bambi says he's an easy-going guy, but you'll be surprised. He can be a disciplinarian, too," Cashen said.

Bamberger brings a winning record as major-league coach and manager to the job left vacant when Joe Torre was fired on the final day of the regular season.

After a one-year stint as a pitcher for the New York Giants (0-0 record,) Bamberger joined the Baltimore Orioles as a minor-league pitching coach and joined the parent club in the same position in 1968.

While in charge of the Orioles' staff, he produced 18 20game winners as the Orioles won the American League pennant in 1969, '70 and '71, when the Birds had a major-league-record four pitchers with 20 or more wins.

He left Baltimore in 1977 to manage the Milwaukee Brewers, and guided them to their first winning seasons ever in 1978 and '79. The following spring, he suffered a minor heart attack and underwent heart bypass surgery, returning to the bench in June. But he retired in September of that year, and since then has been a scout and minor-league administrator for the Brewers.

IT WOULD have been a lifetime proposition, but the 56-year-old New York native could not resist the lure of his hometown.

Wildcats near record

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — Coach Dennis Green is well aware his Northwestern Wildcats are getting dangerously close to the major college football record of 28 straight defeats. But he isn't concerned.

"There's nothing we can do about it, because we haven't played a good football game yet," said the rookie head coach.

"It's too bad streaks like that don't end when a season ends. I didn't think about the team having lost 20 straight when I took the job and I didn't think we'd be 0-6 now, either," said Green.

"To win, we have to play and we haven't done that yet," said Green. "Nobody is going to give you anything. We have intercepted only three passes and recovered two fumbles in six games. The other teams are fighting to better their records, move up in the rankings and gain bowl bids."

"It's possible this year that a Big Ten team can go to the Rose Bowl with a 6-2 record and teams with 7-4 records will get bids to other bowls," said Green.

The Wildcats play at Michigan this Saturday and then go to Wisconsin before returning home for a date with Michigan State. After that they go to Ohio State, then end the season against Illinois.

Reminded that Michigan will be especially irritated and fired up following last Saturday's 9-7 loss to Iowa, Green said "Michigan is always irritated. After Bo (Schembechler) lost the opener I don't think he has smiled since.

Prep powers suffer defeats

By The Associated Press

The upper positions in The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll were dangerous locations last week with four teams with No. 5 or higher rankings suffering from defeats.

The No. 1-ranked teams in each division escaped unscathed however, leaving Port Arthur Jefferson in 5A, Huntsville in 4A, Refugio in 3A, Forney in 2A and Motley County in A as the leaders.

HIGH-SCORING Brazoswood, ranked-No. 3 in 5A last week, was shocked by Fort Bend Dulles 3-2 in an upset that moved Dulles into the No. 9 spot this week and eliminated Brazoswood from the Top 10.

Tuloso-Midway registered the big upset in Class 4A by upending No. 2-rated Gregory-Portland 16-14. The loss dropped G-P to No. 9 this week.

Caldwell, ranked No. 5 in 3A last week, fell from the top 10 after a 37-6 loss to Rosebud-Lott and making way for the appearance of Wylie as the No. 10-ranked team.

Eastland took a big fall in 2A, dropping from the No.2 ranking out of the top 10 after a 32-7 loss to DeLeon. Tenth rated Winona was Eastland's numerical replacement.

RUNGE, RANKED ninth in A last week, fell from the rankings after its second loss of the season, a 19-18 decision to Navarro.

Other teams receiving voter consideration included: 5A, Lewisville, 29 points, Brazoswood, 19, Angleton 12, Sherman 10; 4A, Fort Worth Brewer 18 including one first place vote, Gonzales and Beeville 13 each; 3A, Cameron 21, Barbers Hill 20, Manor 16 including one first place vote, Sweeney 13, Gilmer 11; 2A, Eastland 14, Plains 10; A, Rankin 10, Riesel 8.

Pennsylvania becomes No. 1

By The Associated Press

Penn State and Pitt may be battling for the national championship when they play Nov. 28. For now, though, the two teams are harmoniously trumpeting the quality of Eastern football.

"It's great that two Eastern teams and two Pennsylvania teams will be ranked No. 1 and 2. I think that speaks well for the kind of football we are playing in the East," said Coach Joe Paterno on Penn State's rise to the top in the latest Associated Press poll.

"It means something special for the state of Pennsylvania and Eastern football. It means that somebody is doing something good," noted Pitt Coach Jackie Sherrill.

Despite the provincial pride, neither coach made much of a fuss after Penn State was named No. 1 and Pitt No. 2, the first time in 36 years that two Eastern schools held the top two spots.

"It really doesn't make any difference to us. Our players know that nothing counts until the end of the season," said Sherrill.

"I have no concern which team will be ranked No. 1 at this stage. I'm just pleased that two Eastern teams are playing so well. I'm pleased regardless of which team is No. 1," said Paterno.

"They are definitely two of the outstanding teams in the country," said Syracuse Coach Dick MacPherson, whose team was whipped 41-16 by Penn State last Saturday and now must play Pitt. "The only way they're going to settle one or two is on the field in November."

Penn State, the fifth different team to top the poll this year, last occupied the No.1 spot three years ago before Alabama shattered Paterno's dream of a national championship with a 14-7 win in the Sugar Bowl on Jan. 1, 1979.

And fullback Mike Meade, a member of that 1978 team, has learned to put the early polls into perspective.

"They're more or less status things. They don't mean very much," said the senior from Dover, Del.

And Chet Parlavecchio, Penn State's co-captain, gave a similar response.

"To be honest, the ranking is unimportant. It's nice, it's an honor, but I wouldn't have cared if Pitt were No. 1. And I'm not being a diplomat. No. 2 isn't exactly garbage," he said.

Sherrill said the ratings were just a prelude to future showdowns for his players.

"They've jockeyed up and down in the polls. It's not a big thing to them. We're not a new kid on the block. We've been in that position," the Pitt coach said.

But he personally rates his Panthers ahead of Penn State, even though he listed the Lions as the best team in the land a week ago.

"We played a good football team. Florida State is a good football team," he said.

Pitt beat Florida State 42-14.

High flying Iowa gets nod for Big Ten crown

CHICAGO (AP) — Coaches throughout the Big Ten are tabbing sixth-ranked Iowa the new favorite in the race for the championship and Rose Bowl bid — except for Hawkeye Coach Hayden Fry.

Fry told Chicago football writers in a telephone interview Tuesday, "If such good teams as Notre Dame, Southern Cal, Texas and Michigan can have their bubbles burst, it can also happen to Iowa. It's just a matter of time."

But Muddy Waters of Michigan State, Dennis Green of Northwestern, Jim Young of Purdue and Joe Salem of Minnesota think otherwise and appear to be jumping on the Hawkeye bandwagon.

"Iowa has to be the favorite," said Waters, whose Spartans last week knocked Wisconsin out of first place, where the Hawkeyes are firmly entrenched with a 3-0 mark and 5-1 overall. "I remember how they played against us last year when they were healthy," Waters recalled of a 41-0 drubbing Michigan State suffered at East Lansing.

"Iowa is out in front now and can stay there," said Green, whose team is winless and was humiliated by the Hawkeyes 64-0. "What impresses me most is their maturity. They are physical and strong. They have played against people like Nebraska, UCLA and Michigan and haven't faltered.

"Hayden has Iowa's pulse read pretty good," said Green. "They're not looking ahead to the Rose Bowl, that's not important now. They go out and beat the top people. They think like that and play like that and if they keep it up, they'll be hard to handle."

Young admitted that the way the Big Ten race is going two losses doesn't necessarily eliminate a team from championship consideration. "But Iowa is in an excellent position and the fact that they play one less conference game than most of the others appears to be in their favor. They're a fine football team."

Salem, who takes his Gophers to Iowa City Saturday to play in a game which will be televised to half the country, said "Iowa is solid. They have one of the best defenses in the country. They have tremendous team speed and physical strength. They don't give up any long runs or long passes.

"Even if you stop them on three plays and force them to punt, (Reggie) Roby punts it 20 miles and you're back on your own 20-yard line," said Salem."

Landry says Pokes 'in position' for run

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Coach Tom Landry sometimes talks about the National Football League season like it was a horse race.

Landry doesn't go to Oaklawn Park or Louisiana Downs, but he can pretty well handicap his Cowboys.

He's talking about "jockeying for position" now to make a second-half stretch run against the Eagles, who are a furlong ahead in the National Conference Eastern Division.

"The (29-17) victory over the Rams was important because it got us into position to make a run for it," said Landry.

The Cowboys historically start out strong, drop back during the middle of the season and charge to the wire.

Dallas is 5-2 with Sunday's game against Miami in Texas Stadium closing out the first half of the season. The Cowboys are a game behind Philadelphia.

The Cowboys won their first four games then dropped two in a row. Landry was worried the Eagles would get too far ahead to catch.

"The Eagles finally found out that you don't play 16 good games in a row in this league," he said. "We just need to stay close until we can make our move."

The longer the season goes, the more Landry has a tendency to return to things that have worked well for him. Landry has decided to all but junk his sideline signal system to quarterback Danny White.

The Cowboys used the tight end shuttle for the most part Sunday against Los Angeles.

Asked if was afraid somebody was stealing Dallas' signals, Landry said "Anybody could break the code if they took the time to do it ... We will not completely junk the hand signals ... but we will continue now to operate with the tight end shuttle."

Landry said he did not think any team had intercepted Dallas' hand signals, which are relayed from Landry to assistant John Mackovic to White.

"I wish I could use it (the signal system) as an excuse for the way we had been playing," said Landry.

Landry had good news for the Cowboys Tuesday, saying wide receiver Drew Pearson, who was hospitalized Monday night because of blurred vision, was improving rapidly.

Pearson was accidentally poked in the right eye during the Ram game.

"We hope Drew will be ready to play but Butch Johnson could open in his position," Landry said.

He also said Mike Hegman, who has been out with a broken arm, may start at strongside linebacker in place of Guy Brown.

Ralston out at Toronto

TORONTO (AP) — John Ralston, an assistant coach with the Toronto Argonauts, said Tuesday he will not return to the Canadian Football League team next season because he is committed to be a head coach in the new United States Football League.

"I'm not at liberty to discuss this, because it's still in its formative stages," Ralston said after confirming his plans to leave Toronto. "I'd love to talk about it further but I just can't.

"I've been sworn to secrecy. So the less said about it the better."

Ralston, 54, is a former head coach of Denver Broncos of the National Football League. He joined the Argos late last month.

Bob Watson watches the ball sail out of Yankee Stadium Tuesday night as his blast gave New York a 3-0 lead over the Los Angeles Dodgers in the first inning of the first game of the World Series. New York won the game, 5-3.

ABC telecast is unusually reserved

An AP Sports Analysis
By MIKE HARRIS
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — It could have been the unusually long playoffs leading to the World Series, or perhaps the mood of cool professionalism prevailing among the New York Yankees and Los Angeles Dodgers, or even the cool fall weather, but the ABC telecast of the opening game Tuesday night was unusually reserved.

As the New Yorkers went about the business of dispatching the Dodgers 5-3 before a highly partisan crowd in Yankee Stadium, the trio of Keith Jackson, Howard Cosell and Jim Palmer remained generally businesslike in their approach to baseball's fall classic.

Beginning with the pregame show, during which Cosell did a position-by-position comparison of the teams and Palmer discussed the starting pitchers, the broadcast was unusually understated and reserved for such a showcase event.

The production, using the graphics, split screen, overlays, pretaped interviews and an array of camera angles that we've come to expect in network sports broadcasts, was all there and done well.

When the first batter of the game was robbed of a hit by diving Yankees third baseman Graig Nettles, who then scrambled to his feet and threw out the runner by an eyelash, there were no less than three different views of the play.

And, after New York first baseman Bob Watson swatted a three-run home run in the first inning, the closeup on the face of Dodger pitcher Jerry Reuss was a portrait that reflected frustration, anger and renewed determination.

Jackson, acknowledged as one of the best play-by-play men in the business, seemed to set the mood for his far more verbal cohorts in the booth. He called the balls and strikes, commented on possible trades, reflected on past occurances and generally deported himself with his usual restraint and professionalism.

But his appreciation of the fine baseball being played on the field was evident throughout the game. When Yankee left-hander Ron Guidry had sailed through the Dodger pitchers for six innings, Jackson said, "Note the economy of Guidry's pitches."

Later, after Nettles took the steam out of a Los Angeles rally with a spectacular diving, sprawling catch, a momentarily excited Jackson hollered, "I've never seen such a burglar!"

Cosell, thankfully not the roaring know-it-all of the early years of Monday Night Football and verbal sparring sessions with Muhammad Ali, remained low key nearly all the way, despite the fact that he is a native New Yorker and a very vocal fan and critic of all the professional teams from the "Big Apple."

When a bottle bounced onto the field dangerously near Los Angeles outfielder Dusty Baker, Cosell, instead of the expected sermon on the worsening behavior of fans in American stadia, tersely commented: "No sense talking any more about sickos like that; arrest, prosecution, period!"

A noted worshipper of the ability of "Mr. October," Reggie Jackson of the Yankees, Cosell managed to get through the night without eulogizing his favorite power-hitting outfielder, although there were moments of his usual pomposity interspersed through the evening.

And Palmer, a longtime start pitcher in the American League for the Baltimore Orioles, was not the typical jock color commentator. He came through as a polished speaker, whose comments were usually right to the point and often interesting, at least to the casual fans who make up such a big portion of the huge viewing audience for the World Series.

And he displayed a quick, if corny, sense of humor often lacking in jocks-turned-announcers.

Jackson played the straight man when he asked Palmer, "How do you pitch to (Dave) Winfield, Jim?" Palmer quickly replied, "Very carefully, Keith." The veteran pitcher followed, however, by describing Winfield's ability and how he and other pitchers try to neutralize the power of the rangy Yankee outfielder.

Later, noting this World Series is being played without the American League designated hitter rule, Palmer said, "The designated hitter is the main difference between the American League and the National League. It's been a long time since I faced just eight hitters and a pitcher in a game ... That can mean a lot more innings for a pitcher, and maybe a lot more wins."

Except for the exciting play of Nettles and a two-run Dodger burst in the eighth, it was not a particularly compelling game. The Yankees dominated from practically the first pitch, but the three men in the television booth seemed to enjoy the spectacle and ambiance of the World Series. Thus, the ABC telecast was solidly professional and, happily, often interesting.

Hobbs' Smith may be best NM runner ever

By The Associated Press

Timmy Smith answered the telephone with an aura of anticipation that surrounds those who know their star is on the rise.

"Timmy Smith here," said the talent-loaded Hobbs High School senior, expecting another recruit to his growing list of admirers, and settling for a sports writer who wanted to know what made Smith the most exciting high school football player in the state this season.

Smith, a 6-foot, 185-pound bundle of speed and power, is being touted as possibly the best running back ever to play on a New Mexico high school football field.

"He has the size and speed and all the credentials to play major college football," said Carlsbad Coach David Church.

Through the first seven games of the season, Smith has rolled up statistics that are nothing short of sensational.

He has run for 1,375 yards and 22 touchdowns, is averaging close to 10 yards every time he carries the ball and has run for more than 200 yards four times this season.

Against a good Lubbock Monterey team last month, Smith sped his way to a 312-yard, five-touchdown day. He came back with a 213-yard, three-touchdown effort against Amarillo Palo Duro. Last week, in a 33-19 Hobbs win over then unbeaten Roswell, Smith went 88 yards on the opening play from scrimmage and finished with 250 yards and four more TDs.

The only time Smith has been slowed down this season was in the season opener at Artesia, where he was limited to 65 yards on a rain-soaked field, but still scored both Hobbs touchdowns. Hobbs lost that game 15-14, but with Smith at full throttle ever since, the Eagles have run off six straight wins and are in the thick of the District 4AAAA title race.

Smith, who has set school records for most yards in a single game and most touchdowns in a season, this week against Carlsbad could break the Eagles' single season rushing record of 1,408 yards, set by Latrail Jones in 1974.

And he is rapidly closing ground on the Hobbs career rushing mark of 2,798 held by Roy Gomez, who played for three seasons. In less than two years, Smith has run for 2,289 yards.

His notoriety has spread far beyond the oil field country of Lea County.

Among the spectators at Lubbock last month were a pair of recruiters from Notre Dame and several representing Southwest Conference schools like Texas A&M and Texas Tech.

Smith also is drawing attention from Arizona State, Arizona, UCLA, Southern Cal and New Mexico.

Oilers' wounded pride goes against Steelers

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Wounded pride will add a dimension to Monday night's meeting between Houston and the Pittsburgh Steelers, says Oilers Coach Ed Biles.

"I don't think either team's feeling real good right now. Both are probably embarrassed by what happened to them and I think that makes for a good football game Monday night," Biles said Tuesday via telephone from Houston.

The Oilers lost 38-10 Sunday to the New England Patriots, a team that had won only one other game this season. In Cincinnati, the Steelers' offense sputtered and the Bengals romped to a 34-7 win.

Nevertheless, both the Steelers and the Oilers are 4-3 and just a game behind the Bengals in the Central Division of the American Conference.

Biles was the Oilers' defensive coordinator until Bum Phillips was fired as coach after last year's 11-5 season. Biles said he doesn't feel pressured to improve upon last year's record.

"I knew the problems that existed here when I got the job. Nobody promised me a rose garden when I took this. I do not feel any pressure in this situation," he said.

"We're trying to diversify a little bit," Biles said.

George Bamberger holds up Mets jersey after being named manager of the New York club.

Goldsberry heads Cub farm system

The New York Mets new manager George Bamberger warned against expecting too much, too soon. "I don't know the Mets' exact record last season, but you must get to .500 first. Then you go from there. We are going to have to be fundamental-wise, and win the one-run games." The Mets have not had a winning record since 1976. They were 41-62 in 1981, fourth-worst in the National League, bad enough to get Joe Torre fired from the job he had held since May 31, 1977...

Gordon Goldsberry, a roving scout for the Phillies, will head the Chicago Cubs minor league and scouting departments, Dallas Green, Cubs GM said, noting , "The scouting department and the minor league department have been like separate houses, and it's time to get these two houses back together. It is my opinion that Gordy is the man to do it." Goldsberry, 54, was a scout with several clubs including the Cubs from 1967 through 1969. He also scouted for the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Milwaukee Brewers. He was a major leaguer for four years, as a first baseman and outfielder with the Chicago White Sox and the old St. Louis Browns...

Philadelphia first baseman Pete Rose was voted Athlete of the Decade by a panel of 300 sports writers and broadcasters. O.J. Simpson, who set a single season NFL rushing record in 1973, and Lakers's center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar followed Rose in the voting for the American Cancer Society sponsored award for 1971-1981...

Right wing Rick Middleton, who scored five goals and had two assists for Boston's Bruins last week, was named NHL player of the week...

Moore finds himself in can't win position

Texas Tech's football fortunes have been in a tailspin ever since that Cinderella season of 1978, the year Rex Dockery took over as coach for Steve Sloan and freshman quarterback Ron Reeves came off the bench in the Arizona game to ignite what proved to be a memorable season.

The record was 7-4, but even the most optimistic Raider booster envisioned something more along the lines of 4-7 that year, which opened with a 17-9 loss to Southern Cal in Los Angeles.

Dockery never repeated that success. In 1979 he was 3-6-2 and last year 5-6. At the season's end, the likeable red head from Tennessee, perhaps feeling the alumni pressure, accepted the Memphis State job. It was a chance to go home, but more pointedly, it was chance to escape what was becoming an untenable situation.

JUST HOW untenable is being demonstrated this year as successor Jerry Moore suffers through a 1-5 start. With Washington, Texas, Houston and SMU still left, there's no relief in sight.

Injuries have decimated the Raider ranks, a toll that ordinarily would have been cushioned by bench depth, but that's a luxury Tech, after several seasons of defections for a variety of reasons, no longer has.

TED BATTLES

BATTLE SCENE

One gets an idea of what Moore has to contend with when it is discovered that he is playing the 1981 schedule with considerably less than a full deck.

OF THE 77 players recruited the last three years, 26 are no longer playing the game, at least, at Tech. Prior to last week's game, seven more were out with injuries, making a toll of 33 out of 77 players.

The guy who probably would be pinch hitting for Reeves Saturday against Rice, Mark James, was in the process of being named Lone Star Conference Player of the Week after producing 283 yards offensively for Texas A&I. He left Tech last winter after two years on the bench.

Mike Funderburg, whose defensive play for Abilene Christian against Angelo State last week earned him LSC defensive honors, was another who signed with Tech, but decided to go elsewhere.

IT'S NOT surprising, then, that Tech is 1-5. What is surprising is that Tech, with a little luck, could be 5-1. The games with Baylor, Texas A&M, Arkansas, and Rice hung in doubt deep into the final half and eventually were lost because of a mistakes on a few key plays.

Typical was Saturday night in Lubbock. Tech was trailing Rice 28-23, when defensive back Tate Randle seperated tight end Robert Hubble from the ball after a pass reception with the kind of tackle that turns games around. Greg Miller recovered and Tech was in business at the Owl 18 early in the fourth quarter, plenty of time to pull it out.

Victory, at last. But a careless pitchout wound up in a 27-yard loss and then offensive pass interference cost Tech another 15, making it third and 52 and it was all over.

The one loss the Raiders can't be forgiven for is the Colorado defeat...geez, nobody loses to Colorado, it was the first game of the season and the Raiders were still healthy. But that happened so long ago, it's just one of a string of losses now.

Jeff Goff jumps on Longhorns to earn SWC honors

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — When Texas quarterback Rick McIvor cocked his arm from the Arkansas 7, a fan might have been fooled by the position of Arkansas linebacker Jeff Goff.

Goff was in the end zone, in front of Texas running back John Walker.

"People say, 'The receiver had him beat, he had him beat,'" said UA defensive coordinator Don Lindsey. "Down on the goal, he's supposed to run with the guy, trying to get between his man and the quarterback.

"It's like trying to front a man in basketball. The only way they get the ball to him is to lob a pass. He was right where we wanted him to be."

When McIvor threw, Goff climbed on Walker and broke up the pass. That was on third down and Texas had to settle for a field goal that left Arkansas ahead 18-3.

In the first quarter, Goff recovered a fumble at Texas 5 and one play later Gary Anderson scored to put Arkansas on top 15-0. Goff also intercepted a pass at the Texas 40 and seven plays later Darryl Bowles went 19 yards to make it 39-3.

For his performance in the Razorbacks' 42-11 victory over top-ranked Texas, Goff was named The Associated Press Defensive Player of the Week in the Southwest Conference. Marty Jimmerson, who kicked his fourth field goal with 22 seconds left to give Baylor a 19-17 victory over Texas A&M, is the Offensive Player of the Week.

Surprisingly, Goff said the practice atmosphere was relaxed.

"I was expecting to go out and hit and hit, but instead it was relaxed and the coaches just wanted us to get our assignments down," Goff said. "There was a lot more mental work than there had been in other weeks."

Goff was an end most of last year but was moved to linebacker when Lindsey arrived at Arkansas this year with a multiple defensive scheme. "We ask him to do a lot of things," Lindsey said.

For instance, against Texas he sometimes lined up 10-12 yards off the ball, in the middle of the defense. "We had done it this year with a fifth defensive back but we wanted to do it without sending in a guy where they would know," Lindsey said.

Texas wound up with 20 first downs, but when Arkansas led 39-3, the Longhorns had only four first downs.

"I felt we were coming together after the Ole Miss game," Lindsey said. "Then, against TCU, we didn't play well. During that 99-yard drive, we got mesmerized for some reason. We didn't loaf. We kind of got scared for a lack of words."

The Razorbacks lost to TCU 28-24, blowing an 11-point lead.

"We'll find out this week," Lindsey said. "The test of anybody is to put something together back to back. Not in my wildest dreams do I think we can do to Houston what we did to Texas. We're back to option football instead of power football. Houston is so much more explosive."

Former First Lady Betty Ford dances with Bob Hope on a taping of "Bob Hope Presents a Celebration With Stars of Comedy and Music at the Dedication of the Gerald R. Ford Presidential Museum" to air Thursday.

Bob Hope, Betty Ford do dance routine on TV special

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Betty Ford at first thought the idea of her doing a soft-shoe routine on TV was a joke — hardly surprising, since the suggestion came from comedian Bob Hope.

But he was serious, and the former first lady rose to the occasion: After a few rehearsals, she and Hope did the dance perfectly the first time the cameras were rolling. The NBC special, taped a few weeks ago at the Gerald R. Ford Presidential Museum at Grand Rapids, Mich., will be shown Thursday night.

"I had never dreamed of doing anything like that," Mrs. Ford said in a telephone interview from her Palm Springs home.

Mrs. Ford, who had a brief dance career in her youth, said Hope suggested the dance as a surprise for her husband, former President Gerald R. Ford, as part of the recent dedication of Ford Museum.

"Bob Hope said, 'Since this is honoring your husband, why don't we surprise him and do a little soft shoe?'" Mrs. Ford recalled. "I went along with the joke, I thought, not taking it too seriously. And the next thing I knew it was written into the script as an actual fact. I was surprised that he was really serious about it."

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was "Helen Hayes Day" in Washington, and the honored guest at the unveiling of a portrait of the actress, which will hang in the National Theater's Helen Hayes Lobby, was as sprightly as ever at the age of 81.

Miss Hayes, who was born in Washington and made her first stage appearance here in a comedy 75 years ago, was honored Tuesday by the National Theater, where she saw her first play — and fell in love with the theater — at the age of 5.

"I was sitting up in that balcony with my mother," Miss Hayes said, squinting and pointing upward from the floodlit stage.

"It was 'The Merry Widow,' and when the curtain fell and my mother got up to go, I sprawled across my seat and said, 'I don't want to leave this theater, I won't go.' I thought that if I stayed it would start over.

"You know, I never left the theater after that."

The portrait by Furman Finck will hang permanently in the National, the oldest legitimate theater in continual operation in the country.

Mayor Marion Barry proclaimed Tuesday for the actress, who is honorary chairman of the National's board, and Miss Hayes had tea with Nancy Reagan at the White House before the ceremony.

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Jody Powell was back on the firing line again, trying to answer questions put to him by interviewers and defending Jimmy Carter's record.

But this time the former presidential news secretary's interviewers were high school students.

Powell, who is writing a book on the relationship between the press and the White House, came to Greensboro Tuesday as a guest of the public schools and spoke to students about former President Carter, who is writing his memoirs, and Rosalyn Carter, who is writing hers.

Powell said history will be kind to Carter because he made decisions he believed to be right, even when he knew they would hurt him politically.

Powell said he is no longer Carter's official spokesman to the news media, but he still sees the former president frequently and "lends a hand in appropriate circumstances."

Interviewed by students in a television studio, Powell praised the Reagan administration's handling of the news media.

"They've done a very good job in keeping (reporters) focused on what they want them focused on and keeping them away from the things they don't want them focused on," he said.

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Despite cuts in the space agency's budget, space exploration continues to exert a certain pull on people, astronaut Donald "Deke" Slayton says.

"I think the magic is still there," Slayton said. "People I talk to are always interested in the space program."

Students ignore ban on coed use of bathrooms

By JOE QUINLIN
Associated Press Writer

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Students who held a 4½-hour sit-in at the University of Massachusetts' administration building say they will ignore a ban on coed use of dormitory bathrooms.

"We will take a stand that we as students will not enforce this (ban)," Kevin Mangan of Somerville, a student government co-president, said Tuesday.

Mangan, with the help of attorneys, negotiated an agreement with university officials that excused the protesters from suspension.

About 300 students took part in the sit-in at first, but only 70 were left by the time a 6 p.m. deadline to leave the building arrived. The deadline had been pushed back during negotiations, and all the students were gone by 7:35 p.m.

University officials said after the demonstration that men and women still cannot legitimately share dormitory bathrooms, the major student demand.

And Housing Director Joseph Zannini, whose office imposed the prohibition last spring, said his employees would enforce the rules.

"Coed bathrooms cannot be a feature of our living environment," Dennis Madson, a vice chancellor, told a student meeting prior to the sit-in. Officials said no one has been disciplined for violating the ban.

For the past decade, the administration has looked the other way as students of both sexes used the same facilities in the coed dorms, many of which have only one washroom per floor.

But this fall, after declaring "A Year Toward Civility" aimed at cleaning up the 25,000-student university's image, Chancellor Henry Koffler ordered the enforcement of rules against bathroom sharing.

Tuesday's demonstration was the second in a week in response to his order.

In response to other student demands, the administrators pledged to give students a role in forming campus policy and prosecute assailants of blacks, homosexuals and other minority groups on campus. Scattered incidents of such assaults have been reported over the past year.

"I can honestly say that something was accomplished here," said Dean of Students William Field. "A lot of students talked about these issues with administrators for the first time. And a lot of them were finally given some of the harsh realities."

The protest began about 3 p.m. as students roamed the third-floor halls outside the executive offices. They gained access to several offices later in the afternoon, but failed to get into Koffler's office. Some students tried unsuccessfully to kick down a locked door leading into the office of Koffler's staff.

Number of foreign students in U.S. expected to reach 1 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of foreign students on American campuses is expected to triple to 1 million by 1990, and some U.S. colleges are ill-equipped to handle them, an American Council of Education panel says.

The panel said many colleges "underestimate the costs of educating foreign students." But they urged states not to charge foreign students more to attend public colleges than out-of-state American students pay.

The ACE Committee on Foreign Students and Institutional Policy said, "Foreign students are all too often an unrealized, under-utilized and unintegrated resource for relieving the startling lack of knowledge among American undergraduates about international matters."

The committee, chaired by American University President Richard Berendzen, was formed a year ago to study the status of foreign students in this country.

In a draft report released Tuesday, the panel said foreign students have been the subject of controversy in part due to "Iranian student agitations and the U.S. government response, concerns about foreign researchers and national security (and) the bill-paying practices of some groups of foreign students," including Nigerians.

"But the principal reasons the foreign student is now being both criticized and courted as never before are rooted in the current crises of American higher education itself — its financial distress and prspects of enrollment contraction after decades of expansion," the panel said.

It said in some instances "American institutions have misrepresented themselves and compromised their admissions practices in order to attract foreign students."

The panel said the number of foreign students "has exhibited a Malthusian growth" from about 25,000 at the end of World War II to 312,000 in the last academic year. It predicted their ranks will grow to a half-million by 1985 and a million or more by 1990, when they may fill one in every 10 seats in U.S. college classrooms. Currently, foreign students are only 2.5 percent of the college population.

The panel said foreign students' complaints "vary from the normal discontents of all students...about housing, food and courses of study to their particular problems of summer employment and course suitability, to the more disturbing, though infrequent, allegations of misleading advertising and use of foreign bounty-hunters by American institutions.

"Most often...their complaint is of loneliness, lack of institutional interest and insensitivity," an indication that U.S. colleges "have become less attentive, less imaginative and less organized in their capacity to respond to their needs," the panel concluded.

It said the foreign student population "overwhelmingly is drawn from the Third World." Only 20 percent come from industrialized nations. Some 100,000, or 35 percent, come from Organization of Petroleum Exportion Countries.

Polish team leads bridge tournament

PORT CHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — As the second day of qualifying play in the World Contract Bridge Team Championships began here today, Poland was in the lead with Britain and Argentina in pursuit.

The United States began poorly Tuesday in its bid to retain the Bermuda Bowl title, which it won two years ago in Rio de Janeiro.

The Polish team, which was impressive in winning the European title three months ago, had a bye round and then won convincingly against Argentina 17-3. Britain began by beating Indonesia 17-3, but lost narrowly against the United states 9-11.

The Americans lost 6-14 to Pakistan, which collected six points out of a possible 20 against Indonesia. Argentina won its first match 19-1 against Australia, who had the bye at night.

The standings going into the third round were: Poland, 29 victory points out of a possible 40; Britain, 26; Argentina, 22; Pakistan, 20; Indonesia and the United States, 17; Australia, 13.

Another eight days of qualifying play remain, after which the four top-ranked teams will continue to semifinals and finals.

In the women's series, the Americans took the lead in an attempt to retain the Venice Trophy title. They won narrowly against Brazil 11-9, and then blitzed Venezuela 20-minus one. Two matches in the series, Australia-Venezuela and Britain-Brazil, were 10-10 ties. Britain and Australia each had a bye round.

LHS Homecoming begins Thursday

Lee High School Homecoming festivities will begin with a parade at 6 p.m. Thursday. A bonfire will immediately follow the parade, which has a theme of "The Movies."

The parade will begin in the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center parking lot at Midland College and will continue down Wadley to Midkiff, left on Midkiff to Neely and right on Neely, ending behind the Lee High School Vocational Agricultural Building where the bonfire will take place.

The Lee High Rebels will play the Big Spring Steers at 8 p.m. Friday at Memorial Stadium. During the halftime activities the five duchesses will be presented and one of them will be named homecoming queen.

Senior girls who are duchesses are Melanie Finley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Finley; Cathy Olsen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Olsen; Ilisa Ollison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Lee Johnson; Crystal Pleasant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Pleasant; and Sharon Quintela, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Domingo Quintela.

The Football Sweetheart, Katherine Kenney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G.L. Kenney, and the Band Sweetheart, Julie Gallagher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Gallagher, also will be recognized.

The homecoming dance will be at 9:30 p.m. Saturday in the Lee Youth Center. Admission is $5 per couple and the band is "Fantasy Star."

Future of video cassette recorder is bright despite ruling

NEW YORK (AP) — The future of video cassette recorders remains bright despite a court ruling that using the machines to tape copyrighted TV programs is illegal, industry officials and analysts assert.

Sony Corp., maker of the Betamax recorder and one of the defendants in the case that spurred the ruling, is "not changing anything" because of the ruling, said William Baker, a vice president of the Japanese company's U.S. unit, Sony Corp. of America.

Baker called the court's action "just one step of what's been a long legal case and which no doubt will continue for several years."

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco on Monday overturned a lower court and ruled that makers, distributors and users of the recorders, or VCRs, were breaking the law if the machines were used to tape over-the-air broadcasts of copyrighted programs — even if only for home use.

More than 3 million homes in the United States are estimated to have VCRs.

MCA Inc. and Walt Disney Productions, two entertainment concerns that produce TV programs, filed suit against the use of VCRs in 1976. They said the copyright violations could affect their future earnings.

Sony's U.S. unit, its advertising agency, four retailers who sell the Betamax and a person who taped a network TV program also were defendants in the case.

The court said the corporate defendants were liable for damages, but sent the case back to U.S. District Judge Warren Ferguson in Los Angeles to consider how damages might be awarded — a task it conceded would be "exceedingly complex."

A court injunction against the making or selling of VCRs has been suggested, but the appeals court said that might "result in great public injury." Instead, it suggested a set of royalties might be levied.

But industry spokesmen and analysts said Tuesday the case is far from decided, and is almost certain to end up at the U.S. Supreme Court. In Tokyo, Sony Managing Director Naozo Mabuchi called the ruling "anachronistic," and said the company would appeal.

Joseph J. Schumm Jr., secretary and corporate counsel of Associated Dry Goods Corp., one of the retailing defendants, said the recent ruling's effect on VCR sales would be "none whatsoever. The customers want it and we're going to sell it to them."

Some industry analysts were more emphatic in saying the ruling, while a surprise, still left the issue undecided.

"I strongly believe this is a totally unenforceable decision," said James Reidy, an analyst with the New York investment firm of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "I can't imagine what Ferguson is going to do with the decision."

Industry observers noted if the VCR case was upheld, it might throw into doubt the legality of other forms of copying, such as audio recording and photocopying.

"We're trying to solve a problem judicially which really has to be solved legislatively," Reidy said.

Federal legislation was introduced Tuesday to amend the Copyright Act of 1976 to allow the continued sale and use of home video recorders as long as they are not used commercially.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Stan Parris, R-Va., said the appeals court ruling was "the latest example of idiocy in the federal judiciary" and that his bill was aimed at halting the "unnecessary and unwarranted intrusion by the federal courts into the private lives of 3 million Americans."

The closest Congress ever came to granting a copyright exception for in-home taping was in 1971 when it passed the Sound Recording Act. House leaders said before passing the law that private audio taping was acceptable, but it was never explicitly stated in the law. Nevertheless, the makers of video recorders proceeded on the premise the same congressional "intention" for audio applied to them.

White House looks to leader of opposition Democrats for decision in AWACS deal

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House, stalled in its drive to save the sale of AWACS radar planes to Saudi Arabia, is looking to the leader of opposition Democrats in the Senate for a decision that could boost or cripple the deal.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd's decision, expected to be announced today, could influence the votes of other Democrats.

Only five of the 47 Senate Democrats have said they will vote for the $8.5 billion Saudi arms package, according to the latest Associated Press count. The Senate lineup stood Tuesday at 52-37 against the sale.

With the vote just a week away, President Reagan continued his lobbying efforts without success, and White House spokesman David Gergen acknowledged that "each new vote is harder to get."

But Gergen said Reagan remains "cautiously optimistic" that the Senate will approve the sale of five Airborne Warning and Control System planes and weaponry for F-15 jets.

After his meeting with Reagan, Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., told reporters that the president is "still very concerned that it's too close to be comfortable."

Although Wallop and Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., reaffirmed their support for the sale, Sens. Roger W. Jepson, R-Iowa, Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, and Alan Dixon, D-Ill., said they remained opposed. Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., said he still was undecided.

Although careful to stop short of revealing his position, Byrd dropped a strong hint Tuesday that he might vote for the sale.

The West Virginia senator said the AWACS sale is not a partisan issue — just as he said Senate Republican leader Howard H. Baker Jr.'s vote for former President Carter's Panama Canal treaty was not partisan.

Asked if that meant he owed a political debt to Baker, Byrd said, "I owe a debt to the country."

Byrd has said there are risks either way on the AWACS issue — that a veto of the sale would jeopardize U.S.-Saudi relations, but that approval would risk compromise of secret AWACS technology.

"I don't think the sale should have gotten this far," he said. "But it did get this far and now we've got to make a decision."

The House rejected the sale 301-111, but it will go through unless the Senate also vetoes it.

Byrd and Baker tentatively scheduled the Senate vote for 5 p.m. next Wednesday.

A Senate leadership source who asked not to be identified said consideration is being given to Reagan visiting the Capitol the day before the vote to appeal to Republican senators for support.

In addition to five AWACS planes, the sale includes 1,177 Sidewinder missiles, fuel pods and flying tankers to increase the firepower and range of 62 Saudi F-15 jet fighters.

The equipment is intended for use in defending Saudi oil fields, but opponents say it also could be used against Israel and could fall into unfriendly hands if the Saudi monarchy is overthrown.

A Senate source said a draft of the letter that Reagan has promised to deliver to the Senate states that the Saudis have agreed to conditions outlined by the administration.

Riot challenges government threat to union

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A riot in Katowice and fresh strike alerts nationwide are challenging the government's latest threat that the Solidarity union must stop striking or face martial law.

Tuesday's violence in Katowice 160 miles south of Warsaw, where mobs stoned a police station and flipped a squad car, was among the worst outbreaks the strike-scarred nation has seen in 14 months of confrontation between Solidarity and the Communist government, but no injuries were reported.

The riot was prompted by the authorities' seizure of three Solidarity unionists who distributed underground pamphlets.

It came as 12,000 textile workers in Zyradow west of Warsaw ignored demands to end a week-long sit-in and telegrammed Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski instead to plead for more food. In southwest Zielona Gora province, 180,000 workers vowed to strike over a management dispute.

Strike alerts were declared elsewhere by locals of the independent union, rejecting government threats to stop all labor protests or face martial law.

Solidarity officials in Katowice said several thousand people gathered when plainclothes police arrested three union members distributing pamphlets and posters from a van outside a theatre.

The Katowice prosecutor was quoted by Warsaw television as saying the posters had "an anti-state and anti-Soviet character. Simultaneously, aggressive incitements were made by loudspeakers and passersby began to gather around the van."

Twenty vans of riot police arrived to disperse the crowd, who smashed windows of a nearby police station, overturned a squad car and allowed two of those detained to escape, Warsaw Television said. A later broadcast said the third detainee was released hours later after talks at police headquarters with Solidarity representatives.

Contents of the pamphlets and posters were not disclosed. But Katowice, a steel and coal city, has been a center for Solidarity publications that criticize the government and the Soviet Union, Poland's chief ally. Authorities closed a union printshop in August for publishing anti-Soviet cartoons.

Jaruzelski, who became Communist Party chief Sunday, told the 9.5 million-member union to stop all strikes. He replaced Stanislaw Kania, who was widely criticized by Soviet and Polish party officials for failing to stop Solidarity's drive for power.

The Polish party's 200-member Central Committee that elected Jaruzelski backed his warning with a resolution to impose martial law to protect vital industries.

Solidarity responded that unjust strikes would end but some protests were inevitable. Union leader Lech Walesa said "small strikes might continue."

The Zyradow strikers, mostly women, told Jaruzelski there was no food in the city. They said their plea came from "women who are toiling so hard, both party members and non-party people, mothers of small children."

"We are holding out our hands to you," they said, "begging you to send out anyone who will ... sign a document that guarantees the improvement of the life of our community because plants of importance to the national economy are at a standstill."

Poland has been racked by strikes for economic reforms and more food since Solidarity was formed in August 1980. It is the first union in the Soviet bloc free of government control.

The government says half Poland's provinces are plagued by strikes and strike threats due to food shortages. Officials say the country owes $27 billion to Western bankers and has no money to buy more food.

Solidarity won the rights to strike and Saturdays off and has rejected government demands to renegotiate those agreements. Officials say production has dropped 12 percent over last year because of strikes and the five-day workweek.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, October 22, 1981

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Talented and beautiful actress/model Catherine Deneuve shares this birthday with you, as does film star Joan Fontaine. Slow down a little in the months ahead and you will have a highly productive and profitable year. Family and domestic matters enjoy some very favorable influences. Expect romance to continue to play a major role in the decisions you make. A positive frame of mind helps you over any rough spots where career or business is concerned. Making money is very much in your thoughts between now and the end of November. Many short trips are indicated, but travel to faraway places loses its appeal.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cultural events hold special appeal today. Be sure you can afford them! Member of opposite sex is determined to change your mind about a sensitive subject. Keep your guard up.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A desire to meet new people is an excellent sign. Financial pressures lessen. An adventurous mood could get you into trouble unless you keep your wits about you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Faith and courage are the key to success as the week winds down. You are now capable of making certain dreams come true. Take loved ones into your confidence.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Forge ahead with your plans, but seek influential person's approval before instigating major changes. Keep in touch with overseas contacts to boost profits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An excellent day for real estate transactions. Those in sales can expect a nice bonus. Good news arrives regarding loved one living abroad.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Artistic, creative ventures are favored. Follow up leads provided earlier in the week. Unexpected developments are possible. If you have the storage space, buy in quantity to save money.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Show your originality! Influential person will be greatly impressed. Make amends to someone you may have slighted in the past. Many good things are coming your way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Use your common sense to make a good impression. A direct approach works best if seeking a solution to a difficult personal problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make the most of your involvement in community activity. Minor disruptions could throw your schedule off, but the cooperation of others will help you catch up later on.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Patience and hard work are your strongest allies now. Regardless of how you feel about someone, try to work with him or her in a positive fashion. Results are what count!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Sudden decisions are likely to backfire. Find out what is really going on before making a choice. The financial outlook improves. Romance could blind you to loved one's faults.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Initiative pays off at the cash register! Some top-secret data is made available to you. Use this information with discretion. Avoid diplomatic blunder at home.

Many hands hinge on control of the trump suit. When this hand was played in a recent North American Championship, one declarer failed to realize just how important trump control can be.

The final contract at both tables of a team match was four spades. The bidding sequences were identical, and the final contract was excellent. But for a 4-1 trump split, both declarers would have coasted home.

At the table we watched, West's queen of hearts won the first trick and he continued with the jack. Declarer again played low from dummy and ruffed in his hand. He cashed the ace and king of spades, and was disappointed when East discarded a diamond on the second round. Now he went after the clubs, but it was too late.

Declarer took dummy's two master clubs and then tried to get back to his hand by leading a diamond to the queen. West won the ace and returned a trump, and declarer had no way of coming to ten tricks – in fact, he made only eight.

At the other table, declarer was a little more careful. When he saw East's jack of spades drop on the first round of trumps, he realized that there was a strong possibility that the suit was going to break badly. Therefore, he abandoned trumps for the moment and immediately went after clubs. After cashing dummy's two honors, declarer got back to his hand with a trump. When East showed out, declarer's foresight was rewarded.

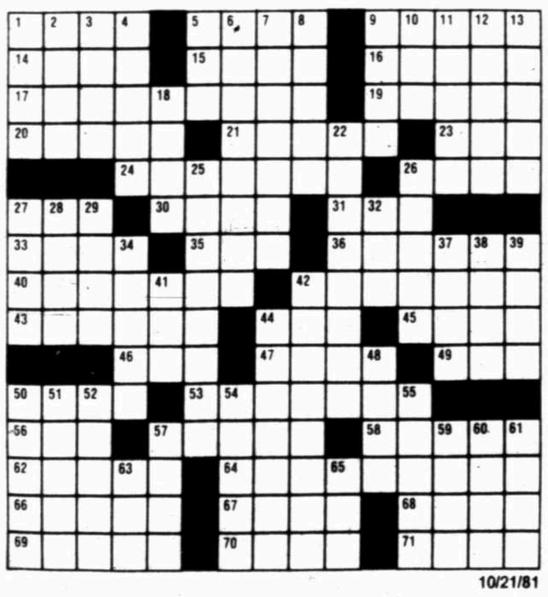

Declarer simply ran the clubs. West could ruff whenever he wished, but declarer would then overruff in dummy, get back to his hand by drawing the last trump with his honor, and continue to run clubs. One way or another, declarer would score ten tricks in the black suits for his contract.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Patent process sometimes makes getting patents hard

By Los Angeles Times

In 1962, Wayne Knitting Mills of Chattanooga, Tenn., accused Russell Hosiery Mills of Star, N.C., of violating its patent on the shoetop-high footsock, a new hosiery item being snapped up by the thousands of American women.

Fifteen years later, after appearing before 17 different federal judges, Wayne Knitting finally won its suit.

But what a Pyrrhic victory it proved to be.

Only two years remained on the patent's life before the footsock invention would become public domain. And the final damages awarded to Wayne Knitting did not even cover half its legal fees, which exceeded $500,000.

"It was a very disillusioning experience. We put a couple of North Carolina patent attorney's kids through college," said Wayne Knitting Vice President Jack L. May.

The Wayne Knitting case is not an aberration in the Byzantine world of U.S. patent law. For decades, inventors have struggled to fend off patent infringement, often only to be hamstrung by technicalities and the disarray of the patent system itself.

But now, there are portents of a vastly more favorable climate for patent holders, offering the promise that inventors will find it easier to escape protracted and costly disputes over "intellectual property."

Many of the traditional approaches to patent law practice are being revolutionized, thanks to profound — if little noticed — changes mandated by Congress, the Supreme Court and the Justice Department in recent months.

Other proposals are still being debated, such as one to create a single tribunal to handle patent cases on a nationwide basis, a step some hope would eliminate the present great disparity between court findings around the country.

The recent changes are also creating new incentives to reward innovation and creativity — at a time when American inventors have been losing ground to foreign scientists at an alarming rate.

"For decades, the judiciary and the other branches (of government) have been hostile to the patent system," said attorney Irving S. Shapiro, one of the nation's most respected business leaders and former chairman of Du Pont.

"But the good news is that we have begun recognizing that the pendulum had gone too far," Shapiro said. "Now there's a greater recognition that you can't have reserch and development wthout a healthy respect for the patent system. Without that, we'd be killing the goose that lays the golden eggs."

The first patents were issued in 15th Century Italy, and the practice soon spread across Europe. In the United States, "the patent system has been with us since the country was started," said James W. Geriak, a Los Angeles patent lawyer.

The framers of the Constitution believed that if inventors were able to prevent others from appropriating their intellectual property, the number of inventions would greatly increase. Their vision, of course, has been affirmed by a long list of inventors whose genius must be familiar to all school children. Alexander Graham Bell, Thomas A. Edison, Eli Whitney, Samuel F.B. Morse, Edwin Land, to name but a ew.

To date, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office has issued 4.25 million natents.

A patent secures for its holder the right to prevent others from making, using or selling his or her invention in this country.

In order to obtain a patent, an invention must be a process, a machine, a variety of plant, a product or a design that is different from what already is known. Patents are not issued for methods of doing business, newly discovered laws of nature or purely mental processes.

Most patents are granted for 17 years. An invention, after its expiration, becomes public property and is available for use by anyone.

About 3.25 million U.S. patents are now in the public domain.

Typically, when a person has conceived an invention, he or she goes to a patent attorney with a record of the invention, describing what it is and how it works, perhaps accompanied by sketches, drawings or photographs.

The attorney, or a patent researcher, then sets out to ascertain if the invention can be patented, or whether similar inventions already have been patented.

This sometimes tedious quest leads to any one of 37 libraries operated by the Patent and Trademark Office, a divsion of the Commerce Department.

To make matters worse, betwen 7 percent and 25 percent of all patents ever issued are missing from patent office files, especially patents in rapidly developing fields.

The main branch of the Patent and Trademark library has the most complete files, with some 500 different subject matter headings and more than 100,000 subcategories. But those records are on paper, and thus are not immune from sloppiness by searchers.

"We rely on patent attorneys to help police the files," said Isaac Fleischmann, a patent office spokesman. He said there also is "a constant inventory going on year-in, year-out" to improve the integrity of the records.

The integrity of such patent searches is vital to the validity of a patent, if challenged. And until Congress produced a remedy that took effect July 1, courts have been quick to invalidate a patent if its holder had overlooked a pertinent prior patent or invention and thus did not present that information to patent examiners.

The patent office relies on an inventor's legal representative to perform searches because it is facing a backlog of 200,000 patent applications that grows by the day, and so it does not allow its examiners to conduct their own searches when considering an application.

In an age when communications advances stir the imagination, the patent office is lagging far behind. Its 900 examiners, for instance, must file their formal opinions on the question of paentability in longhand.

It is not surprising, then, that "the average time it takes to get a patent will continue to increase by about two months each year until it reaches three years in 1988," Commissioner Gerald J. Mossinghoff of the Patent and Trademark Office said in $n interview.

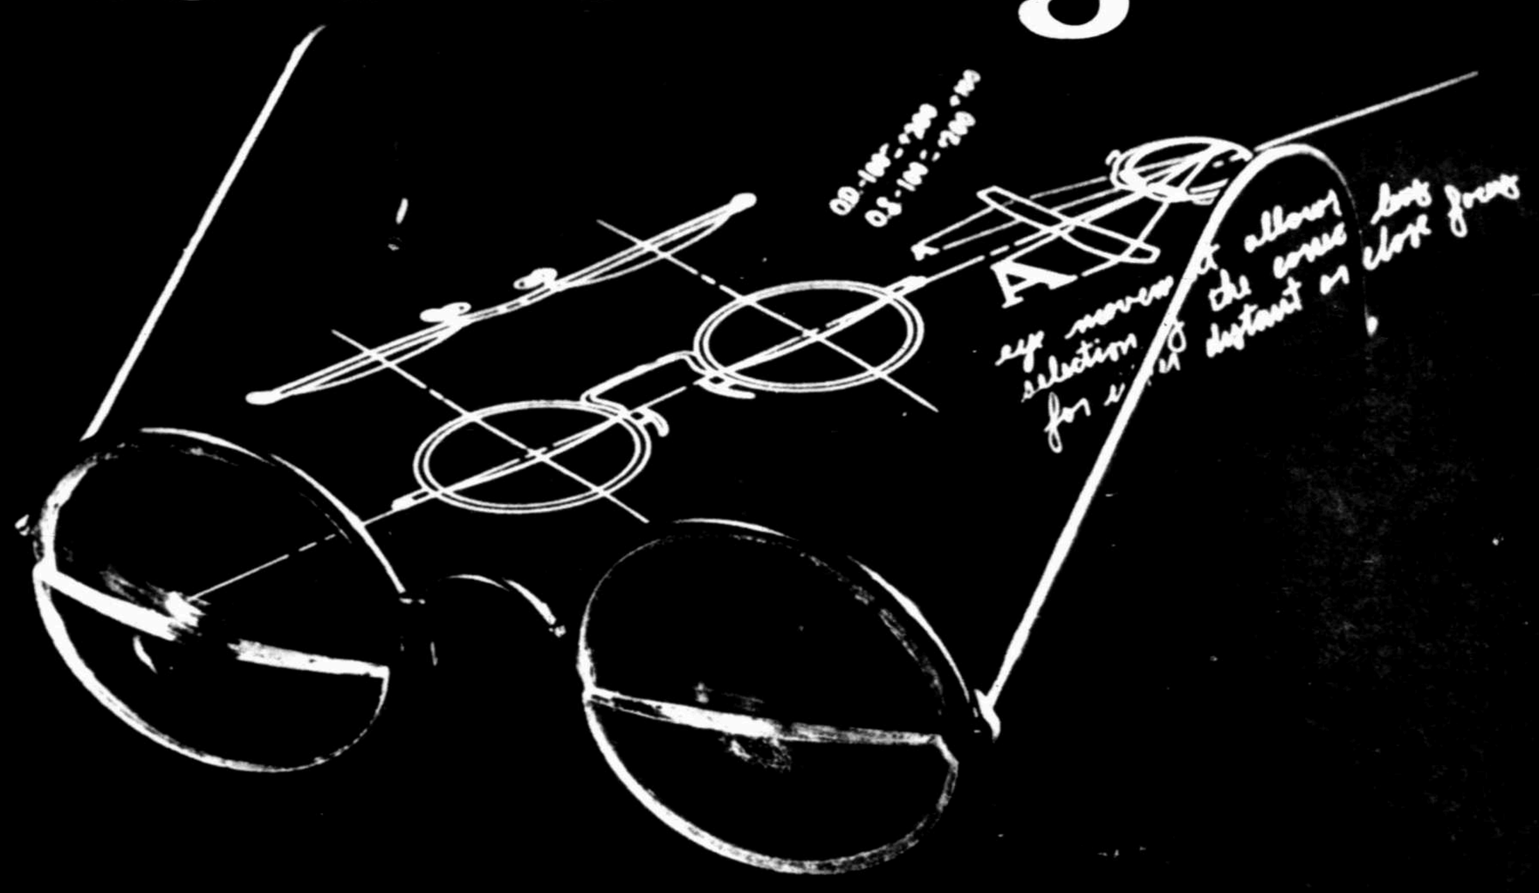

Mossinghoff's office issues about 60,000 patents a year, or 66 percent of all applications filed. But although less than 2 percent of all patents granted become embroiled in litigation, half of those that do end up in court are invalidated, according to Fleischmann.

One such invalidation nearly 20 years ago involved a device to help people start to water ski. Even though a U.S. district judge in Minnesota found that the stepladder-like device had met every test of patentability, he invalidated the patent because, he said, the gadget was "just too simple to be patented," recalled Douglas B. Henderson, a leading Washington patent attorney.

The ruling was the first time that simplicity constituted grounds for unpatentability, according to Henderson, who said he learned to water-ski with the help of that device.

Favorable developments in recent months point to a rosier future for the patent office, Mossinghoff said. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige has "shielded" the patent office from President Reagan's budget slashers so that at least 107 additional examiners now can be hired, Mossinghoff said. That is a radical change from the Carter administration, when the office was allowed to hire only one replacement for every two departed examiners.

"People should stick to one thing!"

Wrong.

Benjamin Franklin is remembered today for many achievements and ingenious inventions. The Franklin stove. Bifocal lenses. His signature on the Declaration of Independence.

Few recall that his lifelong trade was printing. Had he stuck to just one thing our nation would have lost a great scientist, inventor, and diplomat.

There are times in today's business world when it is right to declare independence. The reward is worth the risk. At Commercial Bank we understand people with good ideas. Talk to a Commercial Banker about your next venture.

Argentina nearing nuclear independence, official says

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE
Associated Press Writer

ZARATE, Argentina (AP) — By 1984, Argentina will produce everything it needs to keep its nuclear reactors going, according to one of its leading nuclear officials.

Horacio Rapoport, director of Latin America's only functioning nuclear-power plant, said recently this includes the production of heavy water, fuel elements made from Argentine uranium and the zircaloy tubes that surround the fuel.

Independence has from the beginning been the goal of Latin America's most advanced and most ambitious nuclear-power program, and it is imminent despite a three-year-old cutoff of cooperation from the United States.

THE SWISS ARE building a heavy water plant in southern Argentina, the Canadians are completing a second reactor that will go on line next year and the West Germans, who built the 340 megawatt Atucha I plant Rapoport heads, have begun construction of the 690 megawatt Atucha II.

At the same time, the National Atomic Energy Commission has turned out its first fuel elements and zircaloy tubes, although it will be two years before they are manufactured in commercial quantities.

The Atomic Energy Commission's chief, Adm. Carlos Castro Madero, has indicated Argentina also could make a nuclear bomb. Two nuclear studies institutes produce all the engineers and technicians the country needs.

Argentina refused to sign the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty, so the Carter administration barred the transfer of U.S. technology here under the U.S. Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act approved by Congress in 1978. But that has not significantly retarded the Argentine development program, which calls for six plants providing 20 percent of the nation's electricity by 1997. Argentina has been getting the material it needs from Europe, including five tons of heavy water from the Soviet Union last year.

Castro Madero said prospects for cooperation with Washington have improved since President Reagan took office, but he made it clear any concessions must come from the United States.

"I do not think the cooperation of the United States is so necessary that Argentina would be willing to change its policy," he said.

REAGAN HAS SAID the United States continues opposing nuclear proliferation but has also said, "I don't think our actions should hinder the development of nuclear capacity for peaceful uses."

Argentina insists on the purely peaceful intentions of its nuclear program, but maintains the non-proliferation pact is discriminatory and would infringe on its sovereignty. According to Castro Madero, the 111 signers that pledged not to develop nuclear arms have been "completely defrauded" by the current nuclear powers — the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China.

These powers, he contends, have failed to live up to their commitments to facilitate the transfer of technology and to actively pursue disarmament. He claims the U.S. decision to develop the neutron warhead is a "contradiction" of pact principles.

There is not enough weapons-grade uranium in Argentina to make a bomb. Small quantities of enriched uranium are used in three small experimental reactors, mainly for making medical radioisotopes. Castro Madero says his commission is "studying" how to reprocess spent natural uranium fuel into plutonium, which can be used to make a bomb. He says plutonium will have to be used as fuel when the uranium runs out.

JAMES DONNELLY, president of Atomic Energy of Canada, Ltd., says Argentina has everything necessary to make a bomb. Castro Madero has not stated that explicitly, but said in August, "Application of nuclear technology is a political decision. If the country were threatened by a nuclear attack from abroad, well, the decision is obvious."

Atucha I, on the Parana River 60 miles northwest of Buenos Aires, has been operating since 1974 and last year supplied 6 percent of the nation's electricity. Unlike the vast majority of nuclear power plants in other parts of the world, it uses natural uranium as fuel and heavy water as moderator and coolant.

What Argentina lacks is the technology to enrich its uranium reserves, a process closely guarded by the nuclear powers. The Argentine Atomic Energy Commission thought it would be easier to forge the heavy water link in the chain than ensure a constant supply of enriched uranium, and was proved correct when Sulzer Brothers of Switzerland agreed to provide the heavy water plant without demanding the "full-scope" safeguards insisted upon by the United States.

INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC Energy Agency representatives come from their headquarters in Vienna, Austria, every three months to inspect Atucha. Argentina accepts these kinds of conditions in exchange for technology, but rules out offering what Castro Madero terms "a blank check" to the agency to inspect any facility at any time. ear, and the two neighboring countries have signed an accord pledging to share technology.

Brady hopes to return home to stay

By VICTOR COHN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — James and Sarah Brady have an ambitious goal — getting him home to stay before Thanksgiving.

Brady, Ronald Reagan's presidential press secretary, has been a patient at George Washington University Hospital since he was shot in the head last March 30, when the president also was wounded. Brady, although not fully recovered is determined and in good spirit .

"In the last four weeks," his wife Sarah reported Monday, "he has made tremendous progress. Everything seems to be right on track at last."

"At last" covers a lot of ground: six hours of emergency surgery on March 30, three more operations, leakages of brain fluid through his sinus passages and nose, blood clots, pneumonia and an epilepsy-like seizure.

"Every time he was making progress, something would happen to put him down," said Sarah Brady.

But for more than a month now he has spent four hours each day at physical and occupational therapy. "Occupational" therapy is designed to reteach the patient the mechanics of daily life: walking, standing up, sitting down, dressing and bathing.

But the bullet that tore through much of his brain left a permanent legacy of disability.

His left hand and arm remain mainly paralyzed, though it is still possible some use will return. Movement in his left leg is impaired, though he can walk with some help — a short "elbow crutch" in his right hand and someone at his left side to steady him.

His walking is improving and he should be able to walk alone before much longer, his surgeon, Dr. Arthur Kobrine, reports.

What is really striking, said Sarah Brady, is that "each time he's come home, he's improved so markedly from one day to the next. It's been a big change in the last month or two."

This also applies to his brain functions.

"He is doing very well mentally," a pleased Kobrine said in a recent interview. "His intelligence, judgment, insight, wit and sense of humor all seem normal." He added, "There are a few problems" such as "occasional problems with recent memory" and "he kind of gets choked up emotionally sometimes .... You and I suppress this ... He has to relearn that."

But, Kobrine said, "All these things are improving. In the long run I don't expect any bad deficits, only things that are manageable. Because he's using so much energy to recover, for example, his brain sometimes has trouble storing new information. Once the brain is really recovered, I think it will do so pretty normally ... .

Danger of a nerve gas accident requires future caution

Hearst Feature Service

Nerve gasses are cousins of farm chemicals, of insecticides and other organophosphates used for pest control, but they are far more lethal. With innocent-sounding names like soman, sarin, GD and VX, they are among the most deadly compounds known to humanity, capable of killing in quantities as small as 1-50th of a drop.

Nerve gas inhibits a body enzyme known as cholinesterase, which acts as a circuit breaker for the nervous system.

When cholinesterase fails to work, the nerves go wild. Victims who experience mild doses of nerve gas suffer blurred vision, nausea, vomiting, headache, runny nose, profuse sweating, drooling and slowness of mental reactions, according to the U.S. Army handbook, "Treatment of chemical Agent Casualties," published in 1968.

THOSE WHO RECEIVE larger doses experience involuntary spasms. The heart becomes paralyzed and the lungs begin to fill. They literally are drowned by their own body fluids.

The American stockpile chiefly consists of two agents:

Agent GB, or sarin. It was developed prior to World War II by the German chemical cartel, I.G. Farben.

GB is considered to be both a respiratory and a contact agent. It kills if it is absorbed through the skin or, more effectively, if its mist, spread by various munitions, is breathed. It is a watery substance and quickly evaporates once it is applied to the battlefield.

Agent VX. Developed by the United States after World War II, VX works in much the same fashion as GB, but is considered about three times more effective as a respiratory agent and about 100 times as deadly when absorbed through the skin. In battlefield conditions, it is sprayed in a mist or splattered across the countryside by bombs, artillery shells, rockets or landmines. A gas mask and protective clothing will defend soldiers against even massive exposures.

Because VX evaporatres slowly -- about the same rate as motor oil -- the Army considers it more "persistent" than GB. Soldiers need not breathe VX to die; they need only to come in physical contact with it.

BECAUSE OF ITS "persistent" nature, the Army considers VX a weapon of potential tactical value because it could be used to deny large areas of land to enemy forces if it were sprayed days, or even weeks, in advance.

But studies have also shown that civilians who were 12 miles downwind from a chemical battlefield, for example, could be killed. Non-combatants twice as far away could be incapacitated by the gas.

Both GB and VX have leaked from munitions at the Oregon depot, although the Army says they have not escaped into the atmosphere. There have been no fatalities from such exposures, the Army says.

The new generation of gases now considered by the Reagan administration -- binary gases -- supposedly would beat the storage problem by stockpiling components in two separate components. But even the binary components are not benign. DF, a component of GB, is nearly as toxic as strychnine, while VX component QL causes nausea, breathing problems and skin rashes. Neither substance is likely to be welcomed in any state.

How deadly are these gases?

Scientists often rate the lethality of pesticides and war chemicals by measuring the amount it would take to kill 50 percent of the laboratory animals that received injections.

Agent GB will achieve this level with only 63 micrograms -- 63-millionths of a gram -- per kilogram of body weight, when injected in laboratory rats. That makes it 50 times as deadly as the highly poisonous insecticide parathion.

IN SHEEP, A LARGER and more biologically complex animal, only five to 10 micrograms of VX -- or a drop about 500 times smaller than a grain of salt -- per kilogram of body weight will kill half the animals, said Michael Callaham, a research associate in Massachusettes Institute of Technology's Program in Science and Technology for International Security.

In fact, about 6,000 sheep in Skull Valley, Utah, died in March, 1968, after VX was test sprayed at Dugway Proving Ground some 30 miles away, and drifted off the testing range. It was the kind of accident the Army said would never happen.

There is no known antidote for either gas, nor is there for the more deadly binary compounds currently under consideration by the Reagan administration.

The only known treatment is massive doses of pralidoxime chloride or atropine, which soldiers carry in automatic self-injecting syringes when working in toxic chemical areas or when training in what the Army calls "integrated battlefields" where conventional, chemical and nuclear weapons are expected to be used.

Even with atropine, a victim exposed to a potentially fatal level of nerve gas would have only seconds to administer the drug.

Interest rates, Canadian competition hurt lumber industry

By PATRICK CONNOLLY
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — That big galoot in the unemployment line, with the blue ox double-parked outside, is Paul Bunyan.

In the Pacific Northwest, where legendary logger giant Bunyan was said to roam, a depression in the lumber business has silenced many clattering mills and left thousands of people jobless.

The problem is nationwide, but it hits especially hard in the Northwest. In Oregon, the forest industry is the largest employer. It is the second largest, behind aerospace, in Washington state, which is estimating monthly losses at $45 million.

In the East, the hardest hit area is northern Maine, where dozens of small, family-run mills are threatened and the problem is compounded by cut-rate competition from Canada.

RECOVERY WILL DEPEND largely on when soaring interest rates, now in the 18-19 percent range, drop so people can again afford to build homes, the major market for timber.

As of the week ending Oct. 10, 51 percent of the 102,000 Western sawmill workers were either laid off or working shorter shifts, reported the Western Wood Products Association in Portland, which represents lumber manufacturers in 11 Western states and the Black Hills region of South Dakota.

Of 756 Western sawmills, 187 were closed and 252 were running at curtailed levels, association spokesman William Kirtland said, adding that he felt the figures would be similar in other U.S. logging regions.

But the figures don't include others affected — loggers, paper mill workers and workers in the particle board and plywood business. Kirtland said that for every sawmill job lost, 2.5 to 3 other workers are hurt, "from loggers in the woods to waitresses in the communities."

Industry experts say timber has a good year when about 1.75 million housing starts are reported nationally. But only 1.2 million housing starts are expected this year and 1.4 million in 1982, Kirtland said.

"Recovery will be slow," he said. "We've been depressed for about 18 months now. We're not in a recession but a depression. There are mills that have closed, never to reopen, and more will suffer the same fate."

THE WEYERHAUSER CO., one of the nation's biggest timber companies, cut shifts at many mills, operates some mills only three or four days a week and closed a mill in Bly, Ore., putting about 150 people out of work, said Tom Ambrose, a company spokesman.

Crown Zellerbach has closed several sawmills, including one in Omak, Wash., that employed 355 people.

The big wood industry companies in Maine's north woods, such as International Paper Co. and Great Northern Paper Co., are not suffering major layoffs because of their size and diversity, company spokesmen said. But the smaller, family-owned mills that employ up to 300 workers are laying off hundreds because they cannot sell their spruce, fir and cedar products.

Most frustrating to the owners is that the trouble comes from factors they cannot control. The biggest problem is the lack of housing construction, but another factor hurting Maine's mills lies just north of the border in Quebec and New Brunswick.

J. Paul Levesque, a life-long lumber man who owns a mill about 50 miles south of the New Brunswick border and who has had to lay off more than 100 workers — two-thirds of his work force — says the traditional Canadian competition is now a near-monopoly due to government subsidies.

Canada offers grants to cover start-up costs and low-interest loans and gives bonuses for expansions and exports, said James Barresi, executive director of the Northern Maine Regional Planning Council.

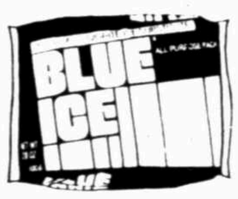

D. Ross Hodgins, an officer of a Big New Jersey lumber brokerage, said five years ago he bought half his lumber from Aroostook County mills and half from Canada. Now the Canadians get 90 percent of his business. He said Maine mills can't match Canadian prices.

DELAND LEBEL, A MILL operator in Van Buren, Maine, said Hodgins recently canceled an order for 50 truckloads of fencing and saved $66,000 by switching to a New Brunswick supplier.

Because lumber brokers pay with U.S. money worth about 17 percent more in Canada, Canadian mill owners can offer huge discounts from Maine prices and still earn a profit, Lebel said.

U.S. Customs import records show how Canadian mill owners have seized the advantage. From 1975 to 1979, the value of white cedar shingles imported through Maine jumped from $3.5 million to $6.8 million. Planed spruce lumber imports nearly tripled — from $19.4 million to $50.4 million.

Bone dust may cause growth

By LEW SCARR
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCICO — Orthopedic surgeons may want to be even more tidy than they already are in their surgical housekeeping if work being done at the University of Rochester proves true.

Orthopedists long have been puzzled about how abnormal bone growths form at the site of an operation in many patients.

Hip relacements, for example, have been called the most successful of all transplants, boasting a success rate of 95 per cent and higher. But, according to Dr. C. McCollister Evarts, chief of orthopedic surgery at the University of Rochester, N.Y., as many as 30 per cent of the persons receiving total hip replacements have complications caused by this abnormal bone growth, called heterotopic bone growth, after surgery.

And two to three per cent of them can have such a large mass of abnormal bone growth that it causes pain and decreased mobility in the new joint.

The process is marked by the formation and calcification of bone cells in muscle tissue. Now Evarts and his associates at the University of Rochester believe they may have found the cause and possible solution.

Laboratory experiments indicate that bone dust, tiny bits of bone that fall off during surgery, especially when a bone is sawed, can increase by 200 per cent the amount of abnormal bone growth.

The University of Rochester experiments suggest that bone dust left behind after surgery stimulates a protein which in turn causes the abnormal growth of bone.

Samples of bone dust taken from two hip replacement patients — one who suffered from heterotopic bone growth and one who didn't — significantly stimulated mature bone cells in culture, Dr. J. Edwaru Puzas, an associate of Evarts, told a press conference yesterday.

The dust from the patient who had heterotopic bone growth was 4.2 to 7.5 times more active in stimulating bone cell growth than the dust from the patient who had not had extra growth. This indicated, Puzas said, that some patients, for unknown reasons, are more likely to develop the problem.

Evarts said the solution to the problem may be to make sure that all of the bone dust is carefully removed from the surgical site. And, in fact, this is what is being done by Evarts and his surgical colleagues.

Rape center is national model

By MARYLOUISE OATES
Los Angeles Times

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Five years ago, the Sanoa Monica Rape Treatment Center was set up at one hospital by one social worker.

Now, more than 3,000 rape victims from all over Southern California have been helped by the center. It is now the national model for hospital-based, comprehensive treatment of rape victims.

The RTC sees comprehensive as being: the treatment of physical injury, emergency and follow-up counseling both of the victim and of the victim's family, counseling by a professional staff, complete "evidence collection" and legal advice.

In a time when tight money and a disparate view of involvement have combined to make it hard for the most established causes to raise money, the Santa Monica Rape Treatment Center has emerged from nowhere, with an activist and committed board and an ability to raise hundreds of thousands of dollars in just a few years.

What made the Santa Monica Rape Treatment Center happen, and how did it happen to happen so big and so important?

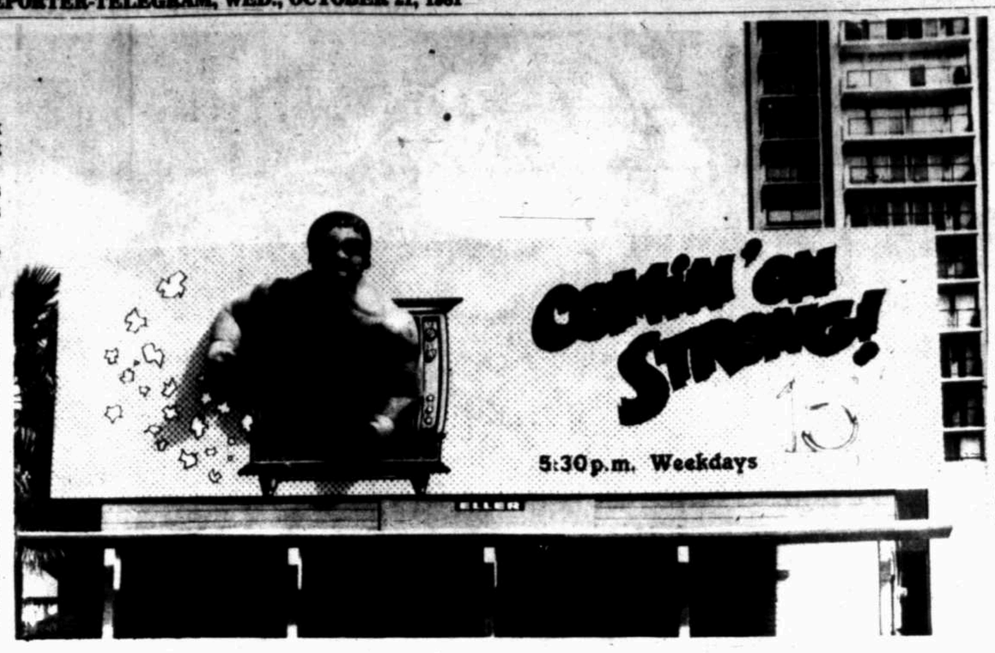

Gail Abarbanell is the founder, director and spark plug behind the Santa Monica Rape Treatment Center.

Abarbanell is small and well-dressed and looks exactly like the modish daughter of a Los Angeles middle-class family.

She does not look like the mover and shaker she is.

In 1974, she was the first social worker hired to staff the Social Services Center at Santa Monica Hospital. "I think they probably hired me as a social worker...not as a big department." The Rape Treatment Center, now a model for hospital-based, comprehensive treatment of rape victims, had a small start. At first, it was just Gail Abarbanell, putting herself on call.

Five years ago, Abarbanell came into contact with two rape victims who came to Santa Monica Hospital. One was a woman who had been coming in to see a family practitioner and who, for some six weeks, had been unable to stop crying. She finally told the doctor that she had been raped six weeks before, that she went to another hospital for medical care and that, Abarbanell recalled, "there was not even the acknowledgement that this woman had been a victim of this kind of trauma."

Motorists on a major Phoenix highway have been gawking at a three-dimensional billboard since a local television station rented it several weeks ago. The image of "The Hulk" in the TV screen stays inflated by a small fan.

Ten 'cats planned for outer Basin area

Permian Basin prospectors will be ferreting out wildcat pays around the eastern and northern fringes of the region, where ten exploratory projects have been planned.

BORDEN VENTURE

Natomas North American, Inc., Midland, will drill the No. 2 Clayton, a 9,000-foot wildcat, two miles southeast of Gail.

The stake is 1,980 feet from the south, and 660 feet from the east line of section 41, block 30, T-5-N, T&PRR survey.

It appears there are no wells of comparable depth nearby. The closest is Shell's No. 1 Long, which is 1 3/4 miles west. It was abandoned May 24, 1951 at 8,905 feet.

COTTLE WILDCAT

Jack F. Grimm, Abilene, will sink the wildcat No. 1 J.J. Gibson to 7,300 feet, three miles west of Chalk.

The location is 596 feet from the south, and 467 feet from the east line of H&GN survey 6, Abstract 353.

It appears the well will be drilled in a little explored area.

GAINES PROSPECTOR

TXO Production Corp., Midland, plans to drill the No. 1-K L.G. Hill, a 3,700-foot wildcat, 20 miles southwest of Seminole.

The project spots 467 feet from the north, and 1,980 feet from the east line of section 18, block A-12, PSL survey.

The drillsite is about 3/5 of a mile south of the Brumley (Seven Rivers) field, which produces at an average depth of 3,416 feet. The RRC currently lists five producers in the field.

SCHLEICHER PROSPECT

La Jet Inc., Abilene, has staked location for a 6,200-foot shallower pool wildcat test in Schleicher county, three miles north of Eldorado.

The venture is the No. 1 T.K. Jones, locted 765 feet from the north, and 1,848 feet from the east line of section 37, block LL, TCRR survey.

The site is one mile east of 6,800-foot Canyon gas production in the Eldorado field.

RUNNELS WILDCAT

Brushy Creek Drilling Co., San Angelo, will drill the No. 1 Chapman, et al, as a 4,500-foot wildcat in Runnels County, 1/2 mile north of Ballinger.

The wildcat is located 899 feet from the southwest, and 1,978 feet from the southeast line of the E.S. Mitchison survey, abstract 582.

It is one mile southwest of Palo Pinto production in the Ballinger (multipay) field.

FISHER VENTURES

Fairchild Petroleum Corp., Midland, has scheduled two 6,200-foot deeper pool wildcats in Fisher County.

The No. 1 J.P. Turner is located 5,182 feet from the north, and 523 feet from the west line of the Elijah Bell No. 328 survey.

It is one mile east of Sylvester, and 1,100 feet southwest of 5,375-foot Goen production in the Sylvester field.

The No. 1 Newman-Hill is located 1,715 feet from the north, and 1,740 feet from the east line of section 10, block 1, HT&B survey.

The site is two miles southeast of Longworth, and 6,600 feet northwest of 3,804-foot Swastika production in the La Paloma field.

NOLAN SEARCHER

Fairchild Petroleum Corp. has also staked a location for a 6,200-foot deeper pool wildcat in Nolan County, three miles southeast of Herndon.

The wildcat is the No. 1 McElmurray, located 1,820 feet from the north, and 2,020 feet from the west line of section 44, block 19, T&P, survey.

It is located 7,900 feet northeast of 5,239-foot Strawn production in the Chinquapin field.

CROCKETT WILDCAT

International Oil & Gas Corp., Midland, will drill the No. 2 B.K. League, a 16,000-foot wildcat to test the Ellenburger in Crockett County, 35 miles southwest of Ozona.

Location is 1,320 feet from the south and east lines of section 26, block Q3, TCRR survey.

It is 1 3/4 miles north of the Morrison (Wolfcamp) field.

TOM GREEN TEST

Slope Energy Inc., Spokane, Wash., has staked a 7,000-foot Ellenburger wildcat in Tom Green County, 6 miles south of Christoval.

The location is almost on the Schleicher County Line, 6,520 feet from the north, and 5,280 feet from the east line of the Tom Green CSL, No. 3 survey.

The site is 2,310 feet south of Pan American Petroleum Corp. No. 1 M.M. Williams, dry and abandoned March 5, 1963 at 6,601 feet.

PBGC offers classes for professionals

The Permian Basin Graduate Center is offering two additonal classes of interest to those in the petroleum industry. They will be taught at the Center, which is located at 105 W. Illinois.

"Oil & Gas Accounting - Level II" will be offered Thursday and Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Dr. Robert J. Koester will instruct.

The two-day course is an extension of the Level I course for those just entering the field or for anyone who desires a basic understanding of oil and gas company financial statements and accounting procedures.

Fee for the course is $260.

"Depositional Systems in Exploration for Sandstone Stratigraphic Traps" will be offered Monday, Oct. 26, from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Dr. William E. Galloway, research scientist, Bureau of Economic Geology, The University of Texas at Austin, will instruct.

The course reviews potential reservoir and bounding faces of fluvial, deltaic, interdeltaic coastal, shelf and slope systems. Emphasis is on reservoir geometry and dimensions, associations with surrounding faces that may serve as proximity indicators, and effects on syndepositional structural features.

The registration fee is $130.

RRC sets 100 percent allowable

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Railroad Commission on Tuesday routinely extended the 100 percent oil allowable through November and released a schedule showing four out-of-town meetings in 1982.

Commission Chairman Jim Nugent questioned spokesmen for companies that requested less crude oil for November than this month.

Nominations for oil in November totaled 2,468,121 barrels a day, a decrease of 41,211 barrels a day, but the spokesmen said the lower nominations did not indicate less demand.

They said the decreases merely reflected an attempt to bring nominations in line with purchases.

A spokesman for Shell said there had been a "rapid decline" in production from the Denver Unit in West Texas.

An Exxon spokesman said his company anticipated lower purchases in Southwest Texas, the Gulf Coast, and East and West Texas. Gulf said it expected less oil from Gulf Coast and West Texas leases.

As usual in setting the statewide production factor, the commission restricted the East Texas field allowable to 86 percent to avoid possible waste.

Nugent noted that crude and petroleum products imports into the United States totaled 5,319,000 barrels per day for the four weeks ending Oct. 2, down 946,000 barrels a day from the same period last year.

The commission's next statewide allowable hearing will be Nov. 19 in Corpus Christi.

In 1982 the commission will hold its "state of the industry" meeting in March in Dallas, will meet in Midland in April, Houston in September and San Antonio in October.

Here are the nominations by major crude oil purhcasers for November, in barrels per day, with any changes from October in parentheses:

Amoco 215,000
Arco 134,000
Chevron 40,654
Cities Service 80,000

AIRCRAFT OWNERSHIP

There are may advantages to aircraft ownership which have developed over the last few months. Now is the best time of the year to capitalize on these advantages. Consider the following:

TAX SAVINGS
Have you sheltered your taxable income for 1981? President Reagan's 1981 Economic Recovery Tax Act has provided for liberalized Investment Tax Credit treatment and 100% depreciation with the Accelerated Cost Recovery System. This new system enables taxpayer to recover the full cost of the asset over a 5 year period. Cash flow requirements of aircraft ownership will be reduced substantially by these two changes in tax laws.

LEASEBACKS
Leaseback arrangements are available (on a limited basis) to help aircraft owners more fully utilize their aircraft through Basin Aviation's Charter and Air Ambulance Service, leaseback arrangements help further eliminate cash flow requirements of aircraft ownership.

AIRLINE SCHEDULING AND CONVENIENCE
Airline delays and inconveniences due to the Controllers strike have been minimal to date but will intensify with the Holiday Season and winter weather months TO COME. Also, flights to areas hard to reach areas have been curtailed or totally eliminated.
Private owrtership can help eliminate these problems by allowing you to set your own schedule and your own destinations.

FINANCING
Cessna Finance Corp. has special below prime financing available through December 31st. Interest rates running from 12.5% to 16.0%. Annual Percentage Rate depending on term and amount of down payment.

Below is a listing of aircraft we have for sale.

Reader's Digest

MOST POPULAR FEATURES

"Life In These United States"

Here's how America sees itself through amused and loving eyes. Here's the funny side of life with our neighbors, our friends and our families told in our own words, reflecting the heart of a people who have the greatness to laugh at themselves when their slips are showing. An all-time Reader's Digest favorite.

"Drama In Real Life"

Escape from a flooding underground cavern, landing a super sonic jet while blinded, locked in hand-to-hand combat...with a maddened bear three times your size... these are but a few of the real-life adventures coming to take your breath away. You are there in drama more exciting than television because you see it in your mind's eye the way it really happened.

"Most Unforgettable Character"

Into each life comes someone who has left an indelible impression like a burning brand on the memory. Sometimes such people are famous, sometimes they just should be. Always their stories are absorbing, transferring that certain magnificent spark to those who are privileged to read about them.

"Humor In Uniform"

Catching our servicemen off guard is far from a serious matter when it comes to humor. This justly-popular Reader's Digest favorite shows there is nothing uniform about the fun and laughter of those who wear their country's olive, blue or gray. Even in civvies, their funny bones (and those of their wives and families) are never off duty as they relate their favorite anecdotes.

PLUS

"AMERICA INSIDE"

"There's got to be a better way..." that's what they're saying in communities all across the nation, and what's more they're finding it. Whether it be lightening the tax load, unsnarling traffic jams, saving energy or getting the kids to get better grades in school, here are the case histories of how it can be done. A mixture of elbow grease and good old American ingenuity, a do-it-yourself manual for spirited citizens who've had just about enough.

"THE ART OF LIVING"

The celebration of life on the pages of Reader's Digest is as much a part of its legend as its humor and its drama. There's always an inspiration, a guidepost, a consolation to be pondered and appreciated. Now, appearing weekly in this newspaper for our readers to enjoy.
