Basin not likely to be hit by storm

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Leah Atchley of Midland makes her way to work this morning despite rain showers. The forecast calls for more rain tonight, possibly turning to snow.

From Staff and Wire Reports

The precipitation hitting the Permian Basin since about midnight today will stay at least until Wednesday, but the area will not feel the wrath of the winter storm, National Weather Service officials said.

While winter storm warnings for the Texas Panhandle are in effect today and Wednesday, only rain and light snow are expected here, said John Frazer, an NWS meteorological technician.

Today's forecast calls for a 70 percent chance of showers with a high in the upper 50s and south winds from 15 to 25 mph and gusty, Frazer said.

A 50 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low near 30 was expected for tonight, with some snow possible by early morning, he said. The winds are expected to shift to the north from 10 to 20 mph.

The precipitation should end Wednesday, when the chance of moisture drops to 20 percent, but skies will remain cloudy, Frazer said.

The culprit of the inclement weather is a cold front with a low pressure center clashing with warm, moist air from the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific Ocean, he said.

"It's a very significant storm," Frazer said, adding that 0.26 inches had been unofficially recorded here from midnight to 10 a.m.

He said air currents are taking the snow more over the Panhandle than the Permian Basin.

This year's relatively mild winter for the area, caused by a drier weather cycle, has not been unusual, Frazier added.

Charlie Wright, Midland County Farmers Co-op manager, said rain is sorely needed because of dry conditions during the past six months.

"We're tickled to death with what we got, but there's not enough of it to do much good," Wright said. "It will sure help some, though."

He said farmers have been waiting for some moisture so they can plow their land without seeing the top soil blow away. They will likely hit the fields to plow within the next two days, he said.

Midland Police Department, Midland County Sheriff's Office and Texas Department of Public Safety officials said the foul weather has not caused any major traffic accidents in a 24-hour period ending this morning. Authorities reported only minor accidents.

STATE

As much as 6-12 inches of snow may fall across the Texas Panhandle as a winter storm moves through the area, the National Weather Service says.

A winter storm warning was issued for the Panhandle through tonight and a snow advisory was issued for the South Plains, where forecasters say as much as 3-5 inches of snow may fall.

Rain, ice pellets and sleet fell in the Panhandle early today as the storm approached. It was expected to turn to snow later in the day as the storm moves in West Texas from New Mexico.

Showers and thunderstorms were expected to be on the increase across the rest of West Texas. The showers and thunderstorms will be spreading into North Texas this evening. There is a slight chance of some freezing precipitation late tonight in western portions of North Texas.

Clouds will be increasing from the west across the state tonight.

There were two fronts located across the state. A cold front extended in to the Trans-Pecos from a low pressure center in the Big. Bend area. A warm front stretched from the Panhandle southeastward into Southeast Texas.

NATION

The winter storm that struck the Southwest over the holiday weekend moved eastward today with snow expected in southern Colorado, the mountains of Arizona and New Mexico and the Oklahoma-Texas panhandle. Strong northerly winds brought snow squalls to parts of the Great Lakes and ushered arctic air into the Northeast. Flurries and wind chills as cold as minus 60 were expected.

After several days of heavy rain that triggered severe flooding across the Southeast, showers abated along the rain-swollen Gulf Coast and the southern Atlantic Coast. But more rain was forecast today for the Florida peninsula, and for the Southeast later in the week.

Cheney in Japan for talks

Aquino willing to discuss bases

TOKYO (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney flew here today for talks aimed at boosting Japan's financial support for American forces stationed in Japan, as Philippines President Corazon Aquino signaled a new willingness to discuss differences over compensation for U.S. bases in her country.

"The Japanese are very understanding and are very willing to help us as much as they can," said a Pentagon official traveling with Cheney, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The official said that in his three days of talks, Cheney did not intend to deal in specific figures with the Japanese, who each year provide around $2.4 billion of the $7 billion it costs to base 50,000 U.S. troops here.

However, he said, "We're confident they understand our requirements ... we're hopeful that over the years, we'll see a sizeable increase in Japanese support for U.S. forces here."

Cheney, on a two-week tour that also took him to Hawaii, South Korea and Hong Kong, arrived in Tokyo from Clark Air Base in the Philippines, stopping briefly on the Japanese island of Okinawa to tour American bases.

Mrs. Aquino had snubbed Cheney during his two-day visit to the Philippines, but she sounded a more conciliatory note in a statement issued as the defense secretary ended his visit.

"I welcome the statement of support for this government and Philippine democracy made by Secretary Cheney on behalf of the United States," she said.

"I also welcome his reiteration that the United States will make its best efforts to meet its pledge for foreign assistance," she added, referring to the $96 million shortfall in the $481 million in aid the Bush administration promised for the use of six military bases.

Mrs. Aquino said the problem "appears to be with the U.S. Congress and its funding priorities. But we are as ready as the Americans to discuss these difficulties in sincerity and good faith."

Talks on the future of the bases, whose lease expires in September 1991, are expected to begin in April.

Columnist Manuel Martinez wrote in the independent newspaper The Manila Times today that Americans were exploiting the Philippines.

"When you think of your visit here, Mr. Cheney, remember you are coming to a country whom you massively looted and maimed and occupied," Martinez said. "And what do you do to the ordinary Filipino? You destabilize his democratic government. You bamboozle his lady president. You wring his neck with foreign debts."

On Monday, Cheney met with Philippine defense officials angry over what they believe is American failure to honor commitments made in 1988 to maintain the bases.

Cheney told them the United States will abandon its bases in the Philippines if it finds that keeping them is too expensive or that Americans are unwelcome.

The United States "will stay only as long as the Philippine people wish it to stay — and only if the terms negotiated are acceptable to both parties," Cheney told reporters after the meeting.

Mrs. Aquino was so upset over the cut in U.S. aid made by Congress that she announced before Cheney began his trip that she would not see him, leaving that task to her defense minister, Fidel Ramos.

Security was tight during the brief visit to Clark Air Base, where Cheney inspected U.S. military aircraft. Last September, communist rebels killed two American civilian employees of Camp O'Donnell, about 15 miles north of the base, on the day Vice President Dan Quayle arrived in Manila.

On Monday, about 300 leftists clashed with police during a demonstration at the base demanding that Clark and the five other U.S. bases be closed. Police also dispersed about 200 protesters in front of the U.S. Embassy in Manila.

"We recognize there is a shortfall of $96 million over what we had anticipated," Cheney said after meeting with Ramos. "I also pointed out that in East Asia, in this part of the world, the United States provided a little over $600 million.

Chevron announces restructuring that may effect Midland

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Chevron today announced a major nationwide restructuring that could impact operations in Midland. Neal Miller, public affairs manager for Chevron in Austin, said the restructuring could impact Midland positively or negatively, but it was too soon to say.

"We now have the basic concept and framework for the restructuring plan, but it will require the efforts of additional study teams to perfect it," said Miller. "We will know after additional studies what the impact will be on Midland." He said a study team had been working since August to determine the current framework.

Chevron employees in Midland were told at an 11 a.m. meeting today that approximately 800-1,000 Chevron employees or 10-12 percent of all the employees in exploration, land and production would be eliminated in a decentralization-restructuring plan which calls for the elimination of regional offices at San Ramon, Calif., Houston and New Orleans.

The restructuring also calls for the creation of seven, stand-lone business units that will consist of production units at Bakersfield, Denver, Midland, Houston and New Orleans. Exploration units at San Ramon and Houston will be consolidated to Houston. The plan calls for the Hobbs division to now report to Midland. Land will also be consolidated to Houston.

There are some geologists that work in Midland's West Texas and Central Divisions, but for the most part exploration efforts in the Permian Basin were consolidated to Houston in 1989.

Currently 775 employees report to Midland and with the addition of 235 employees in Hobbs the number will increase to 1,010. Futher discus-

Part of I-20 closed after truck accident

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

BIG SPRING — Three miles of Interstate 20 will remain closed for at least a week after a gasoline tanker truck plunged off one bridge and exploded, killing the driver and seriously damaging the east- and westbound overpasses.

Department of Public Safety officials said the driver Michael Roy Stovall, 37, of Big Spring had just filled the tanker with gasoline from the Fina Oil & Chemical Co. refinery east of town when he lost control of the 1988 Freightliner tractor as he apparently tried to avoid a car. The DPS investigation is continuing.

The rig ran along a guardrail in the westbound lane for about 300 feet before the rail collapsed and the truck went over the side, between the two overpass spans.

The eastbound bridge "was damaged to the point that it will have to be torn down and replaced," a process Texas Highway Department (THD) engineer Michael Chetty estimated this morning. He said it could take "several months, maybe as much as a year."

The less-severely damaged westbound bridge is "under observation" by TDH engineering experts from Austin this morning. A decision on whether the bridge is sound enough to withstand traffic could be made as early as late this afternoon, Chetty said.

Even if the bridge is determined traffic-worthy, it will be at least a

Greenspan predicts economy will undergo modest growth

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said today the economy has likely passed the danger point for an imminent recession and he predicted continued, although modest, economic growth for the rest of this year.

Greenspan said the central bank expects the economy to grow far more sluggishly this year than the Bush administration predicts. That scenario could dash the administration's hopes of making significant progress on reducing the federal budget deficit.

Greenspan commented in an annual appearance before Congress to reveal the bank's all-important monetary and economic growth targets for the new year.

The testimony bolstered the belief among many private economists that the Federal Reserve Board is not likely to move soon to push interest rates lower.

Greenspan emphasized a belief that the economy appears to be rebounding from an extremely sluggish October-December period while at the same time inflationary pressures remain at unacceptable levels.

The Fed chairman cited a string of recent economic reports showing a rebound in economic activity in January, ranging from rising auto sales to a big jump in housing construction.

"From these and similar data, one can infer the beginnings of a modest

In the Pacific Northwest, rain fell along the coast and snow was expected in higher elevations of the Cascade Mountains.

In the Southwest, New Mexico's mountains looked for 8 to 16 inches of fresh snowfall by late today. A winter storm watch was posted for the state's middle and upper Rio Grande Valley.

Colorado expected another 5 to 10 inches of snow in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains. Snow advisories were called for the San Juan Mountains and the Four Corners area.

The holiday weekend storm in the Southwest left Williams, Ariz., under 22 inches of snow and Flagstaff beneath 18 inches. The Grand Canyon's southern rim received 17 inches.

Snow fell today in the lower Great Lakes, northern New England and upstate New York.

Lows of about 15 below and wind chills as cold as minus 60 were expected tonight in northern Maine.

The temperature in Reno, Nev., fell Monday to a record low of 7 below, breaking the 87-year-mark by 14 degrees.

Other record lows for the date included 39 in Oakland, Calif., and 33 in San Jose, Calif.

Tucson, Ariz., received six-tenths of an inch of snow Monday for un unprecedented fifth measurable snowfall of the winter.

Modrow urges reunification talks

EAST BERLIN (AP) — Communist Premier Hans Modrow today urged East German and West German experts to start immediate talks on reunification under a formula negotiated with the World War II Allies last week.

Meanwhile, a joint commission led by Cabinet ministers of the two Germanys met today for the first time for talks on monetary and economic union between the two states, a major step on the road to unification.

Modrow, addressing the East German Parliament, said experts from the two German states should "begin preparing the '2-plus-4' conference as soon as possible."

At a meeting in Ottawa, Canada, the victorious World War II Allies — the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France — agreed with the two German states on a two-stage plan to achieve German unification.

In the first stage, experts from the two Germanys would discuss political, economic and legal steps to achieve unity. In the second stage, the two states would be joined by the four allies to discuss the international implications of unification. The formula became known as "2-plus-4."

Parallel to these talks, preparations should be made for the 35-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, Modrow said.

Modrow also said the German states should issue a joint statement guaranteeing Poland's western borders.

He again ruled out membership in NATO for a united Germany. The Soviet Union wants a united Germany to become neutral, while West Germany and its Western allies insist it should remain in the alliance.

Earlier in his address to Parliament, Modrow appealed to East Germans not to hoard food, following announcement that subsidies would be removed soon. He said he had heard of runs on grocery stores to stock up while prices remain low.

"I ask every citizen to show restraint and not to buy beyond normal needs," he said.

On Monday, representatives of 16 organizations, including the Communist-led government, the pro-democracy parties and labor unions, agreed to abolish state food subsidies before the March 18 free elections.

The subsidies are being lifted in part to stop a run by West Germans on cheaper food across the border, and to put prices in line with the cost of production.

Modrow did not specify which areas of East Germany were suffering from panic food-buying, and no unusual crowding was noticed at East Berlin stores.

Modrow also urged East Germans to keep their money in the banks. East Germans, worried about their savings becoming worthless under a monetary union with West Germany, have been withdrawing their funds from banks.

He repeated his rejection of a monetary union before the election and again urged the West German government to approve massive immediate aid for the struggling East German economy.

In Bonn, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl met with industrial leaders to discuss German economic cooperation. He said there would be no bailout unless East Germany adopts wide reforms to encourage private investment, including accepting the West German mark as the official currency.

Leaders in both states hope a monetary union would stem the daily exodus of 2,000 East Germans to their rich neighbor.

Walter Romberg, the minister without portfolio heading East Germany's side in the talks, said the panel would attempt to define exactly what a monetary and economic union is and what is needed to achieve it.

Romberg said East Germany will demand safeguards to protect his country's pensioners, unemployed and the savings of its citizens against losses in the event of monetary union.

Horst Koehler, the state secretary in the Bonn Finance Ministry leading the West German delegation said no target date for concluding the negotiations had been set.

East German Economics Minister Christa Luft said Monday she believed a monetary union was possible before the end of the year.

Kohl earlier this month offered a quick monetary union, believing it would give East Germans confidence in their future. But East Germans fear unemplyoment, as inefficient factories are forced to close under a more competitive, capitalist system.

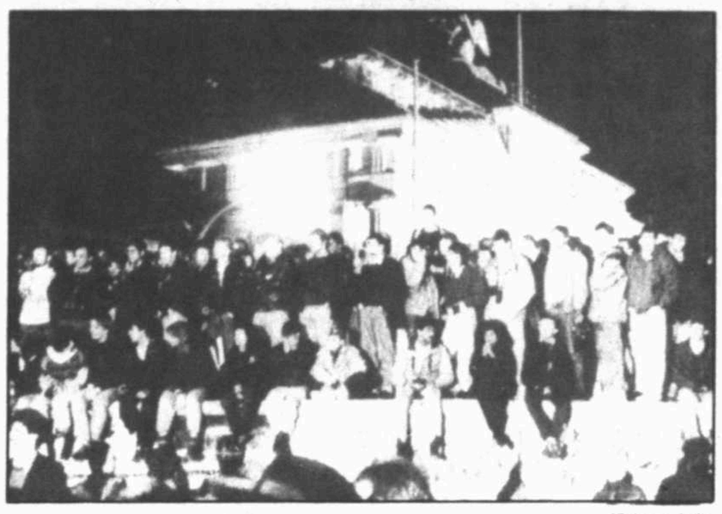

While talks on reunification opened, another piece of the Cold War headed into oblivion as East German border guards started dismantling the Berlin Wall between the Reichstag building and the Checkpoint Charlie border crossing.

Over the next month, the wall will be removed until the entire 1.2-mile stretch between the parliament building, or Reichstag, and Checkpoint Charlie is gone.

Since East Germany opened its borders on Nov. 9, numerous crossings have been opened in the wall. Thousands of souvenir hunters have chiseled away huge chunks of the concrete, leaving gaping holes.

Despite euphoria over removal of the hated wall, the two countries' moves toward unification is provoking unease. According to a survey commissioned by West Germany's ZDF television network, two-thirds of West Germans think the process is unfolding too fast.

The survey also revealed 71 percent of West Germans want Berlin to become the capital of reunited Germany, while 21 percent would like Bonn to remain the capital.

Nature's carcinogens more harmful than food additives, FDA believes

By DANIEL Q. HANEY

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Nature's own cancer-causing chemicals that are an unavoidable part of everything from pot roast to peanuts represent a greater health danger than pesticides and other pollutants, a health official warns.

A new estimate by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration concludes that more than 98 percent of the cancer risk in the diet results from ordinary foods — not from additives, poisons or other man-made contributions to the food chain.

"The risk is from natural carcinogens in the diet because they overwhelm all the others," said Dr. Robert J. Scheuplein, director of the Office of Toxicological Sciences at the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

This does not mean that all food is dangerous or even that people can do much about the hazard. Instead, Scheuplein's analysis was intended to focus attention away from what he sees as a largely bogus health issue — the hazards of chemical contamination.

Dr. Frank Young, a former FDA commissioner who now is deputy assistant secretary of health and human services, agreed.

"The headline should not be, 'All Foods Cause Cancer' or 'Drop Dead. Don't Eat,'" Young said. "The good news is, let us not as a nation focus just on the technological food additives. We ought to focus on the big issues as well."

Instead of worrying about the vanishingly small risk of Alar in apples or dioxin in milk Scheuplein said food scientists should be exploring ways to remove the important toxins in ordinary foods.

"Even a modestly effective attempt to lessen the dietary risk of natural carcinogens would probably be enormously more useful to human health than regulatory efforts devoted to eliminating traces of pesticide residues or other specific trace-level chemicals," Scheuplein said.

He presented his findings Monday at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Scheuplein based his conclusions on a statistical analysis of the quantity of cancer-causing toxins found in various parts of the diet.

He said that the risk of dying from cancer from dietary exposure to all kinds of carcinogens, or cancer-inducing substances, was 7.7 percent. The risk from traditional foods alone was 7.6 percent.

"Most of the risks are people's personal choices," Scheuplein said. "They are not imposed on people by corporations. Apparently that's a hard lesson. People want to blame somebody."

The clearest cancer-causing agent in ordinary food, he said, is fat, which has been linked with several kinds of tumors. However, most foods now eaten would not pass safety tests required for new food chemicals and additives.

FED

firming in economic activity," Greenspan told a House Banking subcommittee.

"While we cannot be certain that we are as yet out of the recessionary woods, such evidence warrants at least guarded optimism," he said. "... Available indicators of near-term economic performance suggest that the weakest point may have passed."

Greenspan's testimony served to reaffirm statements he made three weeks ago in another congressional appearance.

The Fed's economic forecast showed that the central bank is looking for the economy, as measured by the gross national product, to grow at an anemic rate of between 1.75 percent and 2 percent this year.

That is far below the administration's projection that the economy will grow by 2.6 percent this year, when measured from the fourth quarter of 1989.

The administration is pinning its hopes of cutting the federal budget deficit in half on a belief that economic growth will rebound significantly in 1990 from the depressed level in the fourth quarter, when the GNP rose at an annual rate of just 0.5 percent, its poorest showing in 3½ years.

But if as appears likely, the Fed pursues a tighter credit policy to dampen inflationary pressures, then interest rates will be higher than the administration is forecasting and growth will be slower — two developments that will add billions of dollars to the budget deficit.

The Fed's economic forecast for 1990 represented only a modest change from a preliminary estimate the central bank made last June when it forecast growth of 1.5 percent to 2 percent.

However, the Fed substantially lowered its inflation estimate to 4 percent to 4.5 percent for consumer prices, down from a June forecast of 4.5 percent to 5 percent, signaling perhaps a renewed emphasis on getting prices lower.

Greenspan said that while consumer prices for January, scheduled to be reported Wednesday, would show a sizable jump due to energy and food costs, a reversal of this temporary spurt "is apparently under way."

"The ultimate objective of economic policy is to foster the maximum sustainable rate of economic growth," Greenspan said, adding that "inflation insidiously undermines" business and consumer confidence in the economy's future course.

Greenspan's testimony tracked the expectations of many economists, who believe that the Fed is succeeding in attempts to engineer a "soft landing" for the economy in which growth slows enough to dampen inflation.

and about $500 million of that comes specifically to the Philippines."

An influential Filipino minority is pressuring Mrs. Aquino not to renew the agreement. In addition, leading Filipino congressmen have urged her to postpone those discussions until this year's cuts are restored.

There are about 18,000 U.S. military personnel in the Philippines, plus 20,000 dependents.

Ramos acknowledged that the Bush administration needs congressional approval for aid commitments but said he had told Cheney that "time is of the essence" in meeting current U.S. obligations. The secretary said Ramos had been "very direct and very forthright" in presenting his government's position.

Asked whether he could say that his government wanted the base to remain, Ramos declined to answer the question, saying the issue was under discussion in the Philippine Congress.

sions and a meeting in the next few days is expected to refine the impact of the consolidation into Midland.

Many of the employee cuts are expected to be in the middle and senior management areas. Chevron says it hopes many of those cuts will be voluntary.

Miller said the prime philosophy behind the cuts were financial. "We are cutting costs in an effort to provide our stockholders a 15 percent return on equity." In recent months Chevron has been rumored to be the target of a takeover attempt by Pennzoil. It had also been rumored that Chevron was a takeover target because it had not acted fast enough to consolidate its purchase of Gulf oil.

Another reason cited for a shrinking exploration effort was the closure of prime drilling areas to oil exploration. "If you don't have as many places to drill, you don't need as many people," said Miller.

Court refuses to kill suit against oil companies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today refused to kill a lawsuit in which California and the city of Long Beach are seeking at least $280 million from six major oil companies accused of price fixing.

The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that there is enough evidence against the companies to warrant a trial.

The state and city charged the companies in 1975 with conspiring to depress the price of crude oil the firms purchase from the Wilmington oil field, an area stretching 11 miles southeast from the Wilmington District of Los Angeles through Long Beach harbor. The area includes offshore, state-owned land.

The city owns the oil rights in the area.

Named as defendants in the suit are Chevron, Exxon, Mobil Oil, Shell Oil, Texaco and Union Oil of California. A seventh company, Atlantic Richfield, also was sued but reached a settlement agreement in 1984.

If the state and city win at trial, the $280 million figure could be tripled under antitrust law.

U.S. District Court Judge William P. Gray threw out the suit against the six companies. But it was reinstated last April by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Gray had ruled that federal price controls, rather than the alleged conspiracy, determined crude oil price levels for a period from April 1972 to October 1976.

The judge also said federal oil import rules barred the state and city from recovering any damages from the companies for the remaining period of the alleged conspiracy. Moreover, Gray said, there was insufficient evidence to prove a conspiracy.

But the appeals court said there are factual issues that should be decided by a jury.

week before the roadway can be opened, he said.

In that event, I-20 traffic from both directions will be routed over the single bridge, said Chetty, the THD resident engineer in Big Spring.

The fiery accident occurred at 5:15 p.m. Monday. Stovall was declared dead at the scene by Howard County Justice of the Peace Willie Grant at 6:15 p.m. and was transferred to Nalley-Pickle & Welch Funeral Home.

City of Big Spring and state officials closed both lanes of the highway between mile markers 178 and 181 and have detoured traffic around the Birdwell Street overpass.

DPS reported much of the 8,551 gallons of fuel, owned by Citgo/Southland Corp. burned. The manifest indicated that the cargo of the 1987 Trailmaster trailer was destined for "various Texas locations."

A containment dike was built and Texas Water Commission investigators from Odessa were called to the scene because of the threat of environmental contamination. TWC investigator Terry James was unavailable for comment this morning.

The tractor-trailer, owned by Chancellor Inc. of Boston, Md., according to a DPS spokesman, was under lease to Petroleum Chemical Transportation of Big Spring.

Big Spring Fire Marshal Burr Lea Settles told the Associated Press late Monday the eastbound bridge sustained so much damage that it may collapse.

"If it doesn't fall, I'll be surprised," he said. "The heat was so intense that it kind of cooked the water content in the concrete and (pieces) are popping off."

Chetty said this morning that the bridge was "hanging in there" but was beyond repair.

AIDS kills 33 Romanian babies, 20 others stricken

A baby infected with AIDS peers from a crib at Victor Babes Hospital in Bucharest. Outdated and sterile medical practices under the regime of executed dictator Nicolae Ceausescu have resulted in an epidemic of childhood AIDS in Romania.

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — A mysterious AIDS outbreak has killed 33 infants or toddlers since July and stricken 20 others in a country not prepared to prevent the spread of the fatal disease.

The victims are from 4 months to 3 years old and come from three areas: Bucharest in the south, southernmost Giurgiu and Constanta on the Black Sea Coast to the southeast, said Dr. Ludovic Paun of the Infectious Diseases Department at the Victor Babes Hospital here in the nation's capital.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome was first diagnosed in Romania in 1985, but it wasn't until July that it began showing up in young children, he said. "It was a big surprise for us, for everybody. It's incredible."

Since 1985, 69 people have been diagnosed with AIDS in Romania, and 45 have died. Fifty-three of the cases — and 33 of the deaths — were in children.

A total of 371 Romanians have been shown in initial tests to be carrying the AIDS virus, Paun said. Of those, 268 are children.

Victor Babes Hospital, which specializes in infectious diseases, is treating 65 patients with AIDS or AIDS-related infections in an isolated, three-story building at the edge of the 600-bed complex, Paun said.

The three adult AIDS patients have separate rooms, but the infants are crammed into wards crowded with white-painted iron cribs, separated into rooms for those with confirmed AIDS and those with related infections.

In one room — with the word "Confirmati," or confirmed, on the door — 10 infants stared out from cribs spread with blue, brown or plaid blankets. One about a year old had sunken cheeks and thin, white hair.

"We have to keep them together because we can only heat so many rooms and to have them in a controlled situation for the staff to handle," said Paun.

Authorities do not know how so many children became infected since a thorough epidemiological investigation has not been completed, Paun said. "All these children came from institutions, from orphanages or hospital units for" children who are undersized for their age.

"It might have been possible for the disease to spread through instruments that were not properly sterilized," he said. AIDS cases among Soviet children have in at least two instances been traced to infected needles; many East bloc nations do not have disposable syringes that are common in the West.

Authorities are now investigating individual orphanages and hospitals, said Dr. Dan Daiculescu, a colleague of Paun's. "What's important is how they contracted it. This is a tragic problem."

In only five cases did parents of the infected children have positive blood tests for AIDS, but not all parents were tested, Paun said. He added that since the children were at least several months old when first tested, doctors were uncertain how many of the victims might have been born with AIDS.

More than 15,000 blood tests conducted since 1985 do not indicate there is a "special community" of AIDS victims in Romania, the way that homosexuals and drug users are at greater risk in the West, Paun said.

Romanian doctors are only beginning to learn about AIDS, he said, and the public knows almost nothing of the disease that damages a body's immune system, since little was published during the rule of dictator Nicolae Ceausescu.

As part of Ceausescu's program to increase Romania's population from 23 million to 30 million by the turn of the century, condoms were only available on the black market at high prices until the dictator's downfall in December.

Daiculescu said a radio and TV campaign was needed to warn Romanians of the dangers of AIDS, but that no money was available for such a project.

Radio Free Europe has new goal

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — An original goal of Radio Free Europe, born in the Cold War to penetrate the Iron Curtain, was to close when Eastern Europe opened up and the news flowed freely. But the Western network is staying on the air with a new mission — to spread word on how democracy works.

"Yes, we are going to stay in business," said William W. Marsh, executive vice president of Radio Free Europe and its sister station Radio Liberty, which broadcasts into the Soviet Union. "Our job is not done."

Radio Free Europe, founded in 1949 and Radio Liberty, established two years later, are based in Munich but controlled by the Washington-based Bureau of International Broadcasting and funded by the U.S. Congress. It is popularly known as RFE-RL.

RFE-RL was distinct from the Voice of America, the British Broadcasting Corp. and other Western radios, because it was "a surrogate for free media that did not exist" in Eastern Europe, said Robert E. Gillette, the deputy director.

RFE broadcasts to Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Romania, as well as the Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia. Radio Liberty broadcasts to the Soviet Union in 12 languages.

Gillette and A. Ross Johnson, a director, say they believe RFE was a powerful catalyst in the revolutions that have swept Eastern Europe.

It not only broadcast international news but news from inside the countries to which it beamed its programs — people got news of home from abroad.

But now, after the revolutions, RFE-RL is hearing increasingly from people who ask for practical advice on democracy and the free-market economy, the radio's officials say.

Setting an example of Western journalistic ethics is another role RFE sees as vital in the establishment of democracy in Eastern Europe.

"It won't be a short or easy process to have a pluralistic media," Johnson said. "It is relatively easy to close down the censor's office and get the Communist Party out of the media, but it is not so easy to change a generation of habits."

"The best way to teach Western journalistic ethics is by example, but it will take some years," said Gillette, a former correspondent for The Los Angeles Times.

Havel wants friendship with U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Czechoslovakian President Vaclav Havel, the first of Eastern Europe's new reform leaders to visit the White House, said today he wants to lay the foundations for an "authentic friendship" between his country and the United States.

President Bush was welcoming the former dissident playwright, who spent five years in prison, for talks on the future of a democratic Europe and the reunification of Germany.

"Above all, I want to inform the Americans about what happened in our country, what are the international consquences of it, what is our foreign policy, what it will be," Havel said in discussing his visit on NBC-TV's "Today" show before seeing Bush. "And I want to lay foundations for a real, authentic friendship between our two nations."

"We are also interested in trade relations," he said.

After his television appearance, Havel went to Georgetown University, where he spent nearly an hour answering questions from students through an interpreter. He drew laughter at one point when he said, "There no longer are any dissidents (in Czechoslovakia). If there are, they are in government or other high positions."

Havel also said that his government is "facing a difficult task of changing" the economy and has removed all controls on freedom of speech.

And Havel said he has no fears about German reunification so long as the new country is a democracy. "I wouldn't be afraid of a democratic country if it had 100 million people, but I would be afraid of a totalitarian country with a million people," he said.

Havel's visit comes as relations are fast warming between Prague and Washington.

"Our relationship has been sort of frozen with the communist government," whose fall led to Havel's Dec. 29 installation as president, said a senior administration official who briefed White House reporters about the visit. "And we're now able to warm it up, I think, rather naturally and quickly."

Havel arrived in Washington on Monday evening after stops in Iceland and Canada in the week before his first trip to Moscow. His schedule called for a private visit with Bush in the Oval Office, then talks with top advisers and a private lunch hosted by the president.

Havel is not expected to seek an economic handout from Washington, but rather focus on Czechoslovakia's role in the future of Europe and international financial institutions, said the administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

NATION

Havel's country is on much firmer economic footing than its neighbors, Poland and Hungary.

"What they want is mainly language help," said Shirley Temple Black, the U.S. ambassador to Czechoslovakia, who accompanied Havel on the helicopter trip from Andrews Air Force Base to Washington. "They want to know about managing ... They didn't come for the money," she said.

After arriving, Havel spent about 15 minutes in a "very cordial" meeting at Blair House with Secretary of State James A. Baker III, said Havel's press secretary, Michael Zantovsky.

In Canada, the Czech Prime Minister, Marian Calfa, signed agreements with Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa for cooperation in hydroelectricity, pulp and paper and other areas.

"We are not going to the United States to beg for big economic aid or loans or something similar," Havel told The New York Times in an interview before he left Prague.

"We are going to learn from a democratic system like the one we enjoyed for only so brief a period, only 20 years and lost. We can learn from American democracy. We can learn from a highly industrialized country, a highly developed education system and universities — from many spheres that can serve as examples to us."

On Wednesday, Havel speaks before a joint session of Congress before heading to New York for business, political and cultural meetings.

In New York, he also will be feted by a rock concert in his honor before heading home Thursday night.

Havel was elected by the Czechoslovakian Parliament a few weeks after a peaceful revolution ousted the hardline government of Communist Party chief Milos Jakes.

The country's first parliamentary elections in more than four decades are planned for June 8.

Havel, 53, who has said he is more interested in being a writer than president, is popular among his countrymen and has not announced whether he will seek election in June.

Havel's government has insisted the Soviet Union withdraw its 73,500 troops as quickly as possible and favors eventual dissolution of the Warsaw Pact. Some Czechoslovakian officials also have urged that NATO be phased out, something the Bush administration strongly opposes.

Czechoslovakia, bordering on both East and West Germany, also is "very interested in all the outcome of the German reunification process," said the U.S. official who briefed reporters.

"They favor a Europe that is democratic and in which Germany plays a role, but not necessarily a dominant role," the official said.

Havel's government also has said it plans to stop exporting arms to Nicaragua or other countries engaged in hostilities.

Barry asks media to respect privacy at treatment center

WASHINGTON (AP) — A spokeswoman for Mayor Marion Barry Jr. says journalists' harassment of him is getting so bad that one television reporter tried to sneak into the center where Barry is being treated for alcohol abuse.

In a statement issued in Washington by his press secretary, Barry asked Monday for "some consideration" from reporters and camera crews have who camped outside the Hanley-Hazelden Center in West Palm Beach, Fla., where the mayor enrolled last month following his arrest on a drug charge.

Barry, according to aides, is scheduled to leave the clinic on Wednesday. He may go to the Betty Ford clinic in Rancho Mirage, Calif., although he still faces arraignment in Washington on an eight-count indictment on perjury and drug charges.

In the statement issued Monday, Barry said, "I am asking the media to be considerate. ... Members of the media who are camped outside the treatment center should cease their ... behavior that is disruptive to all who are here seeking to heal themselves."

The mayor's press secretary, Lurma Rackley said the mayor had complained of "cameras positioned on top of trucks to shoot over into the center's courtyard at the patients and that camera operators and reporters are standing near the entrance of the center unnerving patients and their relatives who come and go."

Rackley said a reporter from WRC-TV in Washington tried to enter the rehabilitation center over the weekend to check on Barry's treatment.

WRC-TV news director Bret Marcus denied the allegation.

"Our policy is not to interfere with the treatment or well-being of Mayor Barry or any other patient at the Hanley-Hazelden Clinic or any other similar facility," Marcus said.

For District Judge
Pol. Adv. paid by the Committee to Elect Nick Taylor Judge.
1101 Petroleum Bldg. Midland, Tx. 79701

February 16, 1990

Dear Citizens of Midland County:

I want to take this opportunity to tell you about myself and why I am running for the position of 238th District Court Judge. This office is being vacated by the retirement of Judge Vann Culp, who has done an outstanding job.

After graduation from Harvard, I became an infantry officer and paratrooper in the U.S. Army Reserve. I then completed law school at Georgetown University. I had an interest in oil and gas law and taxation. This interest brought me to Texas where I worked as a roughneck and lead tong man for a West Texas drilling company prior to attending SMU for advanced legal studies of oil and gas law and taxation which I completed with honors. I have always believed that practical experience is just as important as academics.

I have been fortunate to have a successful law practice for 26 years. About 16 years ago I was recruited by Tom Sealy, Boyd Laughlin, James L. Pardue and William F. Pennebaker to move to Midland and head up the Corporate department of the Stubbeman, MacRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder law firm. My wife, Trinka, and I chose Midland as our permanent home. We have spent 16 of the happiest years of our lives in Midland. We have increasingly given of our time to community services.

In the 1980's I became concerned with the efforts of special interest groups to control the Texas judiciary. Our courts received adverse publicity on a national level and the public began to lose its respect for the judiciary. I also realized that few successful attorneys were willing to leave private practice and serve the community.

I have a strong conviction that the Court should be for all people. The primary function of the Court is to know and apply the law with integrity and fairness.

I have been concerned for the past few years with the rising crime rate in Midland, most of which is linked with the drug problem. Many of us have been victims of crime, including my family. I have volunteered my time to help solve this problem and I agreed to serve as President of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission after my appointment by the Midland City Council.

I have always believed that public service is the highest honor. This was instilled in me by my family. My father worked for the U.S. Government for 32 years concluding with his service as an Economic advisor in the executive office of President Eisenhower. My father's example was to forego all personal benefit in favor of public service.

I am offering my candidacy for District Judge because I want to serve this community with integrity and fairness. This community has given much to my family. It is time for me to step forward and make a contribution.

Please consider my candidacy in casting your ballot on March 13th.

Sincerely yours,

Nick Taylor

USDA reports some farmers receive too much drought aid

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — At least 80 farming operations were paid more than the limit of $100,000 set by Congress under 1988 drought aid legislation, according to Agriculture Department records.

The payment list of top recipients under the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 was compiled by the department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS).

Congress provided $3.9 billion in aid, mostly to help with crop losses suffered in the 1988 drought. As of Dec. 31, payments of more than $3.88 billion had been made to 805,152 recipients.

Agency officials said the list of top payments was sent to the Office of Management and Budget, which has been reviewing large payments to farmers under various commodity and emergency programs. A copy was made available to The Associated Press.

"We're asking for our money back, if we've overpaid anybody," said Daniel F. Shaw, ASCS deputy administrator for state and county operations. "The computers are set to flag anybody that goes over the $100,000 limit, even by a dollar."

Agency rules are flexible when it comes to some kinds of farm operations, however, including joint ventures and family partnerships.

Shaw was asked about the biggest payment on the 1988 list, $380,092 to the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Minnesota.

"They're a joint venture, so they didn't go over the $100,000 limit," he said. "That's for an Indian tribe, and an Indian tribe is a joint venture, so every Indian in that tribe is entitled to the $100,000 limit. It's almost impossible for an Indian tribe to violate."

Another leeway is provided in a family partnership; which "could be made up of four people in a family," Shaw said. "Each one is eligible for $100,000."

But the ASCS computer operation in Kansas City, Mo., tracks other possible violations, including identical or similar addresses, particularly if used by different individuals.

"Single names bother me," Shaw said. "They should come up flagged, and we'll be asking for our money back if there's a violation."

If all other conditions are met properly, the agency is likely to ask only for the amount in excess of the $100,000 limit. In some cases, however, the farmer might have to return the entire amount.

Not all blame can be put on the farmer if a payment is out of line. Agency officials admit mistakes are made in administering the program and some overpayments can be the result of USDA errors. But that's one reason for checking out the payments.

The agency stepped up its review of drought payments after a series of Associated Press stories in December showed widespread misapplication of funds in the $3.9 billion 1988 relief program.

Last month the ASCS said it was checking specific misdeeds spotted by the AP in its seven-month study of drought payments in 22 counties in eight states.

The issue of large subsidies to farmers under the USDA's annual commodity programs and the drought payments is part of a developing controversy in Congress over federal crop insurance and disaster payments.

Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter says it's too expensive to have both and Congress will have to choose between an overhaul of federal crop insurance or abandoning it in favor of permanent disaster aid.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, who defends the drought aid program because of its emergency nature, said last week that the Bush administration is "forcing our hand" into enacting reforms.

About half of the top 80 payment recipients exceeded the $100,000 limit by less than $100 each, according to the list provided to the AP. Overall, the 80 recipients were concentrated in Montana, 15; Michigan, 9; South Dakota, 9; Illinois, 8; Texas, 6; and Wisconsin, 6.

In addition to those getting more than $100,000 in payments, the list included more than 600 others who received exactly $100,000 under the 1988 drought program.

Prosecutors preparing evidence to show Hazelwood drunk, reckless

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Prosecutors in Joseph Hazelwood's criminal trial were preparing a final barrage of evidence this week aimed at proving the Exxon Valdez skipper was drunk and reckless the night the tanker went aground.

After two weeks of testimony from 23 witnesses, assistant district attorneys Brent Cole and Mary Ann Henry plan to conclude their case by early next week.

They hope to show jurors that Hazelwood's alleged drinking and his behavior in the hours preceding and following the accident were reckless.

The trial is scheduled to resume today.

On Friday, Coast Guard Investigator Mark Delozier told of boarding the grounded tanker in the early morning hours of March 24 and confronting Hazelwood, who smelled of liquor. He said the smell was "very intense and very obvious."

Delozier also testified that in the captain's quarters he found two empty cans of a low-alcohol beer. He said there were more cans of the beer in a refrigerator.

The defense may cite the presence of the beer to explain why Hazelwood tested positive on a blood-alcohol test administered 10½ hours after the Exxon Valdez grounding and some 15 hours after he was seen at a bar in Valdez. The blood test showed Hazelwood had a blood alcohol level of .061, under the limit for driving in Alaska but above the federal limit for operating a commercial vessel.

The 43-year-old skipper is charged with second degree criminal mischief, a felony, and three misdemeanors, reckless endangerment, operating a vessel while intoxicated and negligent discharge of oil. If convicted, his maximum penalties could be 7¼ years in prison plus $61,000 in fines.

Testimony has been inconclusive on how many drinks (Joseph) Hazelwood had during an afternoon in the town of Valdez before the ship sailed.

The Exxon Valdez, a 987-foot tanker, ran aground on jagged Bligh Reef, gashing holes in its oil tanks and spilling almost 11 million gallons of oil into the clear waters of Prince William Sound.

The spill was the nation's largest, killing countless birds, fish and wildlife and blackening hundreds of miles of rocky shore.

Delozier's testimony focused on the much-debated question of whether Hazelwood was drunk at the time of the accident. Testimony has been inconclusive on how many drinks Hazelwood had during an afternoon in the town of Valdez before the ship sailed.

Secrets hinder predictions of global warming

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Efforts to predict the effects of global warming are being hurt by lack of access to 40 years of secret Soviet and U.S. military data on the north polar ice cap, scientists said.

Submarine sonar measurements of the thickness of the ice cap are crucial to understanding ocean currents underneath the ice cap, said Michael Schlesinger of Oregon State University.

Those currents must be understood if researchers are to predict accurately the rate of warming of the earth's climate as carbon dioxide is released into the atmosphere, Schlesinger said Monday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"What I want is, month by month, the thickness of sea ice — which you can only get by submarine," Schlesinger said.

Soviet military planners have the same data on the north polar ice cap that American military officials have, Schlesinger said. But his Soviet colleagues have told him they cannot get the secret data.

Satellite measurements of the monthly changes in the size of the ice cap are available, but the satellites cannot be used to measure the ice's thickness, he said.

Schlesinger is one of a small number of researchers developing computer programs to simulate the effect of global warming and predict its future consequences.

Such models need data on ocean currents to make accurate predictions, he said. There are five such models in the United States, and the same number in the Soviet Union.

"All the models have run with some assumption of this missing term under the ice," he said.

Syukuro Manabe, another developer of such models, said the ocean can absorb a lot of the heat produced as increasing amounts of carbon dioxide in the air trap more and more of the sun's heat.

Researchers said they do not yet know exactly how much heat the oceans can absorb.

The amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is expected to double by the first half of the next century, but the associated warming will probably lag by several decades because at first the heat will be lost into the oceans, said Manabe, a researcher at a National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration laboratory at Princeton University in New Jersey.

The eventual temperature rise is expected to be an average of two degrees to four degrees around the world, the researchers said.

Manabe hopes the abatement of the Cold War will help global-warming researchers.

NATION IN BRIEF

Weather could delay shuttle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Because of an advancing cold front, there is a 70 percent chance that NASA won't be able to launch space shuttle Atlantis on a secret military mission early Thursday, forecasters said today.

They said the front likely will move into the launch area from the west and north on Wednesday and linger awhile with winds, clouds and thunderstorms.

On Monday, the weather forecast had been 60 percent favorable but dropped overnight as the weather system advanced.

While there was concern about the weather, the clandestine countdown which began Sunday continued smoothly.

"It's right on time" space agency spokesman Karl Kristofferson said today.

Because the mission is secret NASA was not providing precise countdown information and would say only that liftoff will occur between midnight and 4 a.m. Thursday.

This is the sixth flight in 34 missions dedicated solely to a national security payload. Officials say the secrecy makes it more difficult for Soviet reconnaissance satellites and a spy ship off Cape Canaveral to track the shuttle and learn its mission.

The sources said the astronauts are to deploy a 37,300-pound satellite to snap high-resolution reconnaissance photos and to listen in on military and diplomatic communications around the world.

They said the shuttle will be launched into a high-inclination orbit that will fly over most of the Soviet Union.

Officials eyeing lava flow

KALAPANA, Hawaii (AP) — Civil defense officials have an around-the-clock watch on a lava flow from the Kilauea Volcano that is threatening to overrun a 125-home residential area.

Another lava flow from the volcano already has destroyed one home and threatened four others.

Residents of the Kalapana subdivision met with Hawaii County officials Monday to discuss evacuation procedures as lava came within three-quarters of a mile of the development, said Bruce Butts, assistant administrator of Hawaii Island Civil Defense.

Meanwhile, a separate flow from the volcano that toppled an abandoned home Saturday went around a second home Monday but continued to pose a threat to the four remaining homes in the isolated Royal Gardens subdivision, said Butts.

Kilauea has claimed 75 homes in Royal Gardens and the neighboring communities of Kalapana and Kapa'ahu since the eruption began Jan. 3, 1983.

Jack Minassian, fire management officer at Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, said Monday the flow forced the evacuation of two residents by helicopter on Sunday.

Royal Gardens was composed of 1,500 one-acre lots sold in the 1970s. About 60 homes were built. More than half of the homes have been destroyed.

Kilauea has caused more than $20 million in damage since the eruption began. It has engulfed 2½ miles of roads, two miles of water lines and two miles of utility lines.

Last of barges cut apart

BROWNSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Salvage crews have cut apart the last of 34 barges lodged at a dam since a New Year's Day accident that halted Monongahela River traffic.

The towing companies that owned the wayward vessels moved the last barges from the Maxwell Dam 30 miles south of Pittsburgh on Sunday. Many of them were cut apart and scrapped because of damage, Army Corps of Engineers spokesman John Reed said.

Three other barges sank and will not be recovered, Reed said.

A 24-mile stretch of the river was closed for 17 days about a week after 62 barges broke loose during high water and crashed downstream. Thirty-four of the barges ended up behind the Maxwell Dam.

One barge leaked 10,000 gallons of gasoline into the river.

Panel studying amphibians

IRVINE, Calif. (NYT) — A panel of experts met here to assess an alarming number of reports that amphibians are rapidly disappearing from many ponds, rivers, mountains and rain forests around the world.

Many species of frogs, toads and salamanders are "crashing throughout North, Central and South America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia," David Wake, a biology professor at the University of California at Berkeley who is the panel's chairman, said on Monday.

The scientists emphasize that the evidence is by no means clear-cut. Some species of amphibians seem to be thriving in some parts of the world. To sort through the conflicting evidence, the National Research Council's biology board has convened the two-day meeting of 20 experts here. Participants plan to issue recommendations Tuesday on what should be done.

Fur's still flyin' for Aspen fashion

Are the '80s really over? Let's count the ways. If last week is any indication, an end-of-the-'80s avalanche has begun:

■ The Donald Trumps, unofficial couple of the decade, said they are splitting up. Speaking of his soon-to-be ex-wife, Donald has told friends, according to the Associated Press, that "the bottom line is I don't want to create another Leona Helmsley."

■ Perrier, the '80s drink of choice for health-conscious yuppies, was pulled from the world's shelves after discovery of benzene contamination. (Will tap water with a twist make a comeback?)

■ Heavyweight boxing champ Mike Tyson, the decade's Mr. Invincible, was defeated, although he was the last to know. Tyson fell victim to the right jab of journeyman challenger Buster Douglas — and to his own '80s-style excess.

■ The junk-bond empire of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. fell apart faster than you could say Michael Milken. Just last week, the high-riding investment house scurried down the shaky ladder of unimaginable earnings and into the protective embrace of bankruptcy court.

■ Ronald Reagan at last agreed to talk about Iran-Contra — to a judge. He will testify by videotape, of course.

Those who would mourn the passing of a decade of glitz and greed have one last redoubt. It's still the '80s in Aspen, that trendy Colorado ski resort where the fur, as they say, is flyin'.

Animal-rights activists wanted Aspen designated the nation's first "furrier-free zone." Sellers and wearers of animal pelts would have been declared personae non gratae. Voters trounced the measure by a 2-to-1 margin.

In Aspen, at least, it's still safe to walk the streets snugly wrapped in '80s wealth. People may stare. But as Zsa Zsa, an astute reader of the common man's soul, once observed: "They are only jealous, daaalink."

Lighting dark cells

No government admits to torture sinners joined in the unanimous General Assembly vote in 1984 that approved a United Nations convention against this ugly practice.

Already ratified by 41 countries, the treaty is now before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Should the U.S. join in what may seem a ritual avowal of virtue? Would doing so have practical value? The answer is doubly yes.

The new convention is among a number of U.N. instruments that seek to fix civilizing standards protecting individuals from arbitrary arrest and persecution.

Human rights covenants enable victims to appeal to international opinion and to organizations that take up their cause.

And the potential benefit of these treaties has been amplified by a welcome Soviet decision to submit disputes on key treaties to the World Court.

The torture treaty makes cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of any person a criminal offense. It provides for compensation of victims and mandates the punishment and extradition of torturers. Its purposes and procedures are endorsed by legal and human rights groups.

Creditably, the Bush administration has scrapped some disabling reservations proposed in the Reagan years, and favors ratification with only a few important changes.

One concerns treaty language that the administration fears could be stretched to cover capital punishment, giving other governments a reason to resist the extradition of those who might face a death sentence.

The Supreme Court has expressly ruled that the Constitution does not forbid capital punishment, even of minors. So the administration would narrow the treaty's prohibitions to only what the Constitution now forbids.

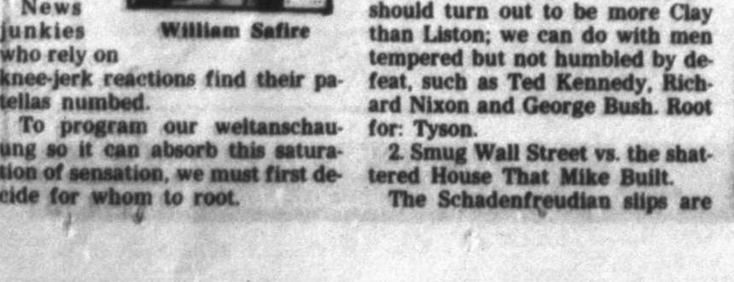

This touches an old, raw nerve in the Senate, which for decades held up approval of the Genocide Convention, on the exaggerated suspicion that it might somehow collide with the U.S. Constitution.

By all means let the Senate give careful examination to this argument, as well as the administration's other suggestions.

What would be intolerable is endless debate that stalls ratification — especially now, as the human rights cause reverberates throughout the world.

Israel miffed by human rights report

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James Baker had hardly unpacked his desk blotter last year when he found himself under attack from Capitol Hill and the Israeli government. The 1989 State Department report on human rights around the world had criticized Israel for abuse of Palestinians. Israel and its friends in Congress weren't pleased.

Jack Anderson

And Baker was furious. He issued the word to his troops: "No more surprises."

The underlings at the State Department took him seriously. That is why the 1990 human rights report scheduled for release Wednesday, Feb. 21, treats Israel with kid gloves.

The preparation of that report has caused a battle royale inside the State Department for the past four months. The career foreign service officer who compiled the facts on Israel has had to defend every punctuation mark. He may have ruined his career by refusing to tone down his reports on human rights abuses by the Israelis.

No other section of the worldwide human rights report, including criticism of ally Great Britain for its actions in Northern Ireland, has received so much point-by-point attention or dispute, according to our sources.

The man who took it upon himself to make sure Baker got no surprises was Richard Schifter, assistant secretary of state for human rights and humanitarian affairs. Schifter and his aides demonstrated from the outset that they intended to diffuse the Israeli section.

That hasn't been an easy task. Philip Wilcox, the U.S. consul general in Jerusalem, submitted dozens of well-researched, classified reports on the human rights situation in Israel and the occupied territories. Our sources tell us his reports detail a pattern of violations that have intensified since last year's report.

Schifter and his aides questioned everything in Wilcox's reports and spared no effort to protect Israel's image. "It was all bureaucratic foot-dragging to wear down those in the Near East Division and get them to back off the solid Israeli stuff," one high-level State Department official told us. Wilcox, a highly respected career foreign service officer, refused to back down.

When Schifter couldn't shake the facts, he tried another tack — contrasting Israel's record to that of its Arab neighbors, including some of the most ruthless despots in the world. But the Israelis didn't like that either. They prefer to be ranked in a league with their peers — other democratic nations — except in that company, their human rights record doesn't look very good.

Schifter compromised by watering down the Israeli violations and including comparable criticism of abuses by the Palestinians. A spokesman for Schifter denied that Israel had been given preferential treatment

Now no one is happy with the report.

If Baker had his way, he would put off mention of the entire Middle East until a better time. Criticism of either side threatens to damage the delicate prospects for peace, which Baker is trying gingerly to advance.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Americans are fond of blaming Colombia for U.S. drug problems. Colombians are equally eager to accuse the United States of using the drug war to play the imperialist. But at least the two nations can agree on the most important thing — there would be no supply if there was no demand. A Washington Post-ABC survey of Colombians and Americans found that both countries place the blame on the insatiable American appetite for drugs. That agreement should be the starting point for a solution.

Nicaraguan election obvious farce

I guess they aren't making book on the Nicaraguan election in Las Vegas but if they were and you wanted me to take the opposition, you'd have to give me a spread of 50,000 votes.

Charley Reese

This Nicaraguan election (Feb. 25) has been farce since its inception. When Costa Rica's President Oscar Arias proposed it, as part of his peace plan, I figured that since he isn't stupid, he must have an ulterior motive — namely, to play the old game of appeasing the thugs with the nasty tempers and lots of guns.

Arias' plan, as you recall, stipulated that the Nicaraguan democrats would be disarmed — but not the communist Sandinistas — and in exchange for the opposition surrendering, the Sandinistas would agree to hold a free election.

I know there are a lot of suckers in the world who still believe in Easter Bunnies, Santa Claus, and communists who will hold free elections and gracefully relinquish power they took at gunpoint.

But if you had any doubt at all that the elections would be a farce, you only have to look at who is saying the election process is proceeding just wonderfully: Jimmy Carter and Robert Pastor, the director of Latin American programs at the Carter Presidential Center.

Having those two guys be the monitors of fairness in a Nicaraguan election is like resurrecting Stalin to oversee land reform in the Ukraine. There would be no election scheduled because there would be no communist government in Nicaragua but for Carter and Pastor. And several thousands of people now dead would be alive.

I will quote from Jeane J. Kirkpatrick in an article she wrote analyzing the Carter administration policy in Latin America.

"What did the Carter administration do in Nicaragua? It brought down the Somoza regime. The Carter administration did not lose Nicaragua in the sense in which it was once charged Harry Truman had lost China, or Eisenhower Cuba, by failing to prevent a given outcome. In the case of Nicaragua, the State Department acted repeatedly and at critical junctures to weaken the government of Anastasio Somoza and to strengthen his opponents."

Those opponents, by the way, were not the great masses of the Nicaraguan people. They were Cuba-backed communists temporarily allied with traditional opponents and a few disaffected Somoza supporters.

Carter's policy, which was largely crafted by Pastor and others from the Linowitz Commission and the Institute for Policy Studies, a radical think tank, cleverly used the guise of human rights which were defined in such a way that no government in Latin America could meet them. This gave the leftist Carterites the freedom to choose arbitrarily — to praise Panama's dictator and to overthrow Nicaragua's government and to destabilize El Salvador and Guatemala.

The Carterites publicly called for Somoza's resignation, ignored Cuba's role, openly negotiated with the opposition, and imposed an arms and oil embargo so that once more an American ally ran out of fuel and ammunition while fighting Soviet-backed forces.

The blood of many people are on the hands of Carter and now he and Pastor are down there to insure the red regime they put into power stays in power and becomes legitimized by a phony election.

It never seems to occur to America's liberals, ever blind in their left eye, that it would be exceedingly difficult to have a fair election when 250,000 of the Sandinistas' opponents have been forced out of the country.

So the tragedy of American leftists undercutting those opposed to communism continues. The American left betrayed Somoza. Now it betrays the contras. It hopes to betray the people of El Salvador and hand them over to the communists. Pretty soon there won't be anybody left to betray but the American people.

Perhaps, if you are going to invest in U.S. bonds, you ought to buy the ones which mature early.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

'News junkies' may need this handy-dandy scorecard

WASHINGTON — Tyson flattened. Drexel Burnham disappears. De Klerk springs Mandela. Trump bounces Czech wife. Gorby caves on fearful symmetry.

William Safire

Faced with this rush of headlines, ABC Radio News declared overload and led with the Oscar nominations.

News junkies who rely on knee-jerk reactions find their patellas numbed.

To program our weltanschauung so it can absorb this saturation of sensation, we must first decide for whom to root.

As the stories develop, this mindset will enable us to hiss our designated villains and side with our heroes, thereby minimizing cognitive dissonance.

1. Tyson vs. Douglas.

The first reaction is to hail the victorious older underdog, Buster Douglas, who knocked out the swaggering champ. But the rematch will test the mettle of the ex-champ in making a comeback.

Mike Tyson, of the long fur coat and glitzy life style, deserved comeuppance.

At first a sore loser, he has cast aside petulance.

If he does make it back, he should turn out to be more Clay than Liston; we can do with men tempered but not humbled by defeat, such as Ted Kennedy, Richard Nixon and George Bush. Root for: Tyson.

2. Smug Wall Street vs. the shattered House That Mike Built.

The Schadenfreudian slips are showing throughout the securities industry: Establishment types, sucked into the vortex of leveraged takeover by the originality of Michael Milken, can hardly conceal their glee at the demise of Drexel Burnham, which ignobly ran out on him to save its skin but lost anyway.

Now the Feds will try to add insider trading to injury. Milken, his back to the wall, wants to fight the all-out government campaign against him against all friendly advice to cop a plea.

On the basis of contrarianism and the unpredictability of juries, root for: Milken.

3. De Klerk vs. Mandela.

Here's Nelson Mandela being lionized and all but canonized after 27 years of suffering in jail, but falling short of the eloquence of non-violent Martin Luther King Jr.; and here's Frederik de Klerk, dragging his countrymen into the path of righteousness at great personal and political peril, getting the "but what have you done for me lately" treatment in the U.S.

Mandela needs to be talked out of outmoded, stultifying socialism while de Klerk should be encouraged to fold blacks into a democratic, free-market society that needs them.

Root for: both, and not one over the other, because if one wins, both lose.

4. Gorbachev vs. the radicals vs. the nomenklatura.

In this three-way struggle, the old apparat is the loser: not even changing its name will save the party.

But apparatchiks evidently can restrain Gorby from turning to capitalism and salvation; instead, he is making himself the new Napoleon.

The radicals, without Sakharov, seem stuck with the populist Yeltsin, but the reformist to watch is Yuri Afanasyev, who wants free markets and free people.

Gorby stays in the saddle miraculously, but his economic horse goes nowhere, and it's distasteful to cheer his grab for one-man power.

But the swinging Yeltsin is a transition to trouble, and the rigid Ryzhkov and Ligachev would preside over the sure ruin of Russia.

Root for Afanasyev, the radical long shot.

5. The local leaders of the intifada vs. the Tunis-based leaders of the PLO.

Likudniks in Israel see Faisal Husseini as a local PLO front, and he is regularly arrested and harassed. But this Palestinian promptly condemned the slaughter of Israeli tourists in Egypt, while Yasir Arafat's deputy, Salah Khalaf, boasted of "similar operations" to come, in effect condoning the murders until Egyptian pressure forced a grudging disavowal.

Root for: Husseini and the intifada against the Tunis terrorcrats.

6. Donald vs. Ivana.

In what was dubbed "the Trump scuttle," the New York Daily News gossip columnist Liz Smith revealed the nation's most celebrated deal artist is working a leveraged throwout of his wife, who betrayed his trust by turning 40.

The issue is not the validity of a pre-nuptial contract (a deal's a deal) but the talent of the battle's publicity titans.

Howard Rubenstein, maker of mayors and touter of tycoons, is Donald's media handler, pitted against John Scanlon, who turned Frank Lorenzo into a lovable pussycat and is now brushing the media's teeth with Ivana.

Root for: Liz Smith.

In a worldwind of headlines, only a consistent worldview will bring peace of mind. Tolerance, dignity, civility.

Root for: "Driving Miss Daisy."

7 people feared lost in frozen lake

MAMMOTH LAKES, Calif. (AP) — One after another, four rescuers plunged into the frigid waters of a mountain lake as they tried to save three youths who fell through thin ice during a holiday outing. All seven are presumed dead.

"It was horrifying," said Pierre LaBossiere, a reporter who watched three of the rescuers go into the icy waters of Convict Lake on Monday, never to reappear.

The hole they fell through froze over within hours, said Mono County Sheriff-Coroner Martin Strelneck.

Divers planned to try to recover bodies today from the lake in the eastern Sierra Nevada, about 250 miles north of Los Angeles.

The boys — all 13- to 16-year-olds from a nearby camp for youthful offenders — were on an outing when they apparently fell through thin ice around noon, Strelneck said.

Two Camp O'Neal counselors fell into the lake as they tried to save the youths, Strelneck said. A U.S. Forest Service worker and a volunteer firefighter followed them into the frigid water. None were immediately identified.

A fourth teen-ager who fell through clambered back onto the ice and walked to safety, LaBossiere said.

The 15-year-old youth, who was not identified, was treated for hypothermia at Centinela Mammoth Hospital and released, said a hospital official who declined to give her name.

A paramedic was hospitalized overnight for observation, she said.

The youths were playing on the ice about 200 yards from shore when the surface gave way, Strelneck said.

Arriving soon after the boys fell through the snow-covered lake surface, LaBossiere said he saw one youth bobbing on the surface in an ice hole.

"Two rescue people were kneeling on the ice," said LaBossiere, a reporter for the Mono County Review Herald. "About 20 minutes later, one guy went into the ice."

As he and dozens of others on shore watched helplessly, two other adult rescuers plunged into the lake in failed attempts to reach the teen-ager still floundering in the icy water.

"It was horrible," he said. "They were trying to figure out any way to get across the ice. It was such an incredibly long distance. They couldn't just stick a rope out there."

Forest Service spokeswoman Margaret Gorski said the accident happened in the center of the lake, which is a mile long and and an eighth- to a quarter-mile wide.

About 70 would-be rescuers used rubber boats and ropes to try to reach the youths, but to no avail.

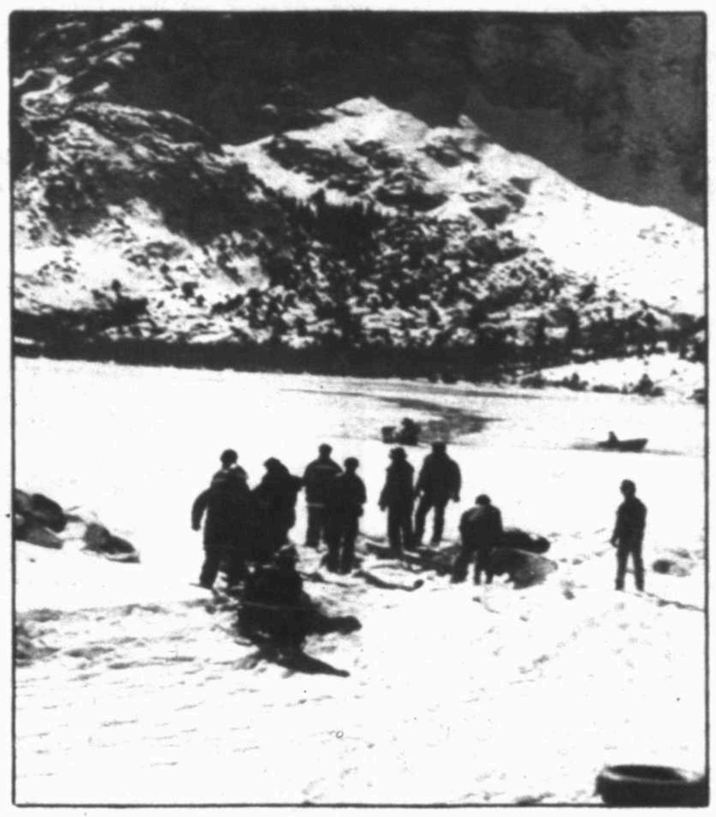

The firefighter who fell in was a member of the volunteer Long Valley Fire Department, and "it was a heroic effort on his part," Strelneck said.

"The input I got on the man was he was one of these men who go gung-ho," Strelneck said.

The state-run probation camps are for young people convicted of relatively minor offenses.

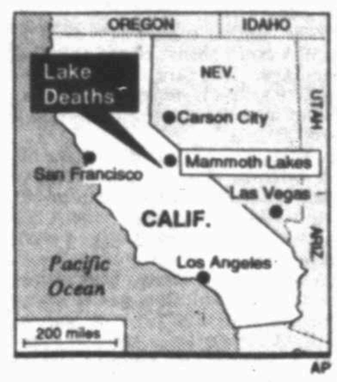

Convict Lake, just south of the Mammoth ski resort, got its name from a shootout between a posse and convicts in the late 1800s.

People ski and skate on the lake in winter, LaBossiere said. The area received heavy snow in a weekend storm, but the weather at time of the accident was clear and sunny.

Rescuers make their way to icy Convict Lake Monday near Mammoth Lakes, Calif. Three young people from a probation camp who plunged into the lake and the four adults who tried to save them were presumed dead after the lake froze over them, officials said.

Brother of mayor, police officer charged with drug possession

By LARRY ROSENTHAL

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — This is a story of three brothers. The oldest is mayor of New Haven. The youngest rose to the rank of a police detective. The middle one descended into the world of drug addiction and has been charged with being a pusher.

On Feb. 6, the 37th day of Mayor John Daniels' first term of office in this southern Connecticut city of 127,000, and 10 days before Detective Melvin Daniels was to put in for retirement, the lives of the three brothers were changed forever.

Robert Daniels, 48, surrendered to Melvin to answer cocaine possession and trafficking charges, and the mayor was put on the spot to explain how brothers could be so different.

Few suggest that John Daniels, 53, New Haven's first black mayor, will lose his position as a role model for this city's black youth or see his anti-drug message undermined.

As Melvin Daniels, the youngest of the brothers at age 45, put it: "You can't be held responsible for an almost 50-year-old man."

WELI radio host Steve Kalb said that when he wondered out loud whether the mayor should have kept closer tabs on his brother, listeners turned on him and expressed sorrow over the turn of events.

A former city alderman, state senator and businessman, the soft-spoken, nattily dressed John Daniels established an unblemished record of public service as he kept his sights on the mayor's office for more than 20 years.

But while John's fortunes were rising, Robert's were falling.

The mayor said Robert's problems began in the late 1970s, when he got laid off from his blue-collar job and got mixed up with the wrong crowd. His family's efforts to help met with little success. A stay in a residential treatment program had no lasting effect.

When Robert Daniels was arraigned this month, he listed no assets, and was granted a court-appointed attorney.

"Some people just take a lot longer than others to hit bottom," said Melvin.

Robert, who was using the alias of Dan Daniels, allegedly sold cocaine to an undercover officer on two occasions. A warrant was issued for his arrest following a raid on his apartment that netted $7,500 worth of cocaine. When Robert gave himself up to his brother four days after the raid, it was his first arrest.

According to a court source, he entered a 28-day drug treatment program at Connecticut Valley Hospital in Middletown three days after his arrest. No trial date has been set.

The brothers have gotten together only occasionally for holidays and family birthdays, although Robert did stop by for John's victory party Nov. 7.

Melvin, who has spent the last five years on the front lines of New Haven's escalating drug war, is trying to forget the day he faced off against his brother in that battle.

"Let me put it simply for you," he said. "It's part of the territory of being a police officer. Even though it hurts sometimes, you do what you got to do," he said.

Robert, who has two daughters but is separated from his wife, was always "a very lovable and happy-go-lucky guy," said Melvin.

In the black community, sympathy was expressed for Robert's family.

"I have compassion and support for his family because I know what it feels like," said Lisa Sullivan, a Yale graduate student and political activist who advises the NAACP Youth Council. "I have cousins and uncles in my family who sell drugs and are addicted to drugs. The black community is in crisis."

The mayor told a news conference on Feb. 7 that "if the fact that the mayor's brother can fall prey to the lure of drugs will help the rest of the community realize that it can happen in any family, to any one, then something good has come of Robert's tragedy."

Census Bureau promises it can keep secret

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau, the same agency which churns out a seemingly endless supply of details about Americans in general, will reveal nothing about individuals.

Urging people to answer the census, Bureau Director Barbara E. Bryant stresses their responses are "completely confidential."

"The answers are not shared with any other government agency or individual. They are combined into statistics, with individual information kept private until the year 2062," she says.

Confidentiality was not always the rule. Two centuries ago copies of the census lists were posted in public places so people could point out omissions and errors.

But today individual privacy is both policy and law. And the Census Bureau has compiled an enviable record of protecting information.

For example, even during the hysteria following the bombing of Pearl Harbor in 1941, the bureau refused to release the names and addresses of Japanese-Americans living on the West Coast.

It also turned down the attorney general's demand for information about individuals suspected of being communists during a Red Scare in 1947.

And in 1980 the bureau refused to comply with a federal court order demanding addresses for certain city officials.

In turning down the court, bureau officials said even releasing information on the number of people living in various apartments could harm individuals by revealing the presence of squatters, welfare fathers, illegal aliens and others.

Confidentiality is especially stressed in promotion efforts directed at the Hispanic community, where many people may be in the country illegally, and those who are legal often distrust government officials.

The law requires the bureau to count all the people in the nation, not just citizens. So it makes a special effort to reach those who are reluctant to be included.

Hence the emphasis that information given the census is not passed on to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, or the Internal Revenue Service, or the Selective Service, or anyone else.

Names and addresses of individuals are collected to make sure no one is missed or counted twice. But they are not recorded in the giant computers which compile and sort the census information, officials say.

Those machines merely digest the information about people living on particular blocks or census tracts across the nation, and provide that information for a variety of uses.

In cases where even releasing those statistics would reveal something about an individual, the numbers are kept private.

Prisoner recasts IRA's purpose

NEW YORK (AP) — Joseph Doherty, who has fought British rule in Northern Ireland with rocks, rifles and machine guns, has a new weapon of choice clipped to the breast pocket of his orange prison overalls.

"I've come to believe that the pen is mightier than the sword," he said in an interview at the federal jail where he's spent 6½ years.

"That's my message when I do an interview or answer a letter. I don't say, 'Up the IRA!' or 'Send more arms.' I don't mention the IRA. I stress what you can do politically to change things."

Doherty, who pronounces his name DOCK-erty, has ample time to reflect on the advantages of the ballot box to the bomb. He has been at the Metropolitan Correctional Center in Manhattan longer than any inmate in its history, longer even than most of its guards. He has done his time under three wardens and four captains.

Doherty's path to the MCC began a decade ago with a gunfight in Belfast between his IRA unit and British troops. Doherty was captured and convicted of murdering a British officer. Facing two life terms, he escaped from jail and fled to New York City, where he was arrested by the FBI in 1983.

The British demanded his extradition, but a federal judge accepted Doherty's argument that the killing was not a common crime but a political act, part of the IRA's campaign to drive the British from Northern Ireland's six counties and reunite the province with the Irish Republic. Doherty could not be extradited.

Doherty's case has since bounced from court to court; the British have not been able to get him back, but he has not been able to go free, despite more than a half-dozen court rulings in his favor. His case has become a metaphor for his homeland's intractable troubles.

To Irish nationalists and human rights activists, Doherty is "a symbol of the battle against tyranny," according to Paul O'Dwyer, former New York City Council president and an activist for the Irish cause. Doherty's prison visitors have included Cardinal John J. O'Connor, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and 10 congressmen. In his victory speech, Mayor David Dinkins demanded "Justice for Joe Doherty!"

More than 100 members of Congress have signed resolutions supporting his requests for bail and asylum, and similar measures have passed several dozen state, county and local legislatures.

But Doherty's musings about the limits of armed rebellion have upset some Irish nationalists.

Late last year the New York Daily News quoted him as saying that the IRA's armed rebellion "can't go on," that its "strategy hasn't worked," and that it should consider a unilateral cease-fire.

"I see another soldier shot dead by the IRA and I think, I read this five years ago, 10 years ago, 20 years ago," he said. "If we carry this war on another 20 years, it'll be such a waste of life."

In an interview two days after his 35th birthday last month, Doherty smiled ruefully and shifted in his chair when he was asked about the reaction to his relatively dovish comments.

"A lot of people have said to me, 'You're in prison, Joe, you're away from the situation.'"

One of his critics is Michael Flannery, an elderly IRA veteran and its best-known American supporter. He said Doherty's emphasis on political rather than military tactics shows "he doesn't know Irish history."

Politics and diplomacy have failed the Irish in the past, Flannery said, because they lend legitimacy to British-created institutions yet do not strike at the source of British power.

Doherty said some of his remarks have been taken out of context; he still supports the IRA and does not regret having fought the British.

But he also said that since his imprisonment his views have changed. He described himself as part of a generation that is determined to end the war that flared 20 years ago when British soldiers, sent to protect Northern Ireland's Catholic minority from Protestant attacks, clashed with a revived IRA.

"My generation is taking over now, and we're more flexible, more willing to compromise, less nationalistic," he said.

One summer Doherty was visited by an 11-year-old nephew who was about to return to Belfast. Doherty said that when he asked the boy what he was going to do when he returned home, he replied, "I'm going to join the IRA and shoot British soldiers."

"I don't want little Sean to be sitting at the kitchen table, stripping a Thompson machine gun like I was," Doherty said. "I don't want this to get passed to another generation."

Doherty repeatedly expressed optimism, rare in discussions of Northern Ireland, that political and diplomatic initiatives could soon bring peace.

"Look at Eastern Europe. The world's changing so fast," he said, snapping his fingers. "This puts a lot of pressure on the British. They'll soon be the only nation in Europe with troops on the street."

He said the consolidation of the European Economic Community in 1992 will make the border between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic seem all the more absurd and offer the British a convenient excuse to go home.

The IRA should consider a cease-fire, he suggested, and measure the British response.

Lawsuit claims agency abetted addiction

An interesting footnote to the recent lawsuit between Beach Boy Brian Wilson and Irving Music is that court papers charge the William Morris Talent Agency with giving LSD, marijuana, alcohol and other mind-altering drugs to Brian as his mental state deteriorated.

Wilson brought the lawsuit against Irving Publishers to retrieve song royalties he maintains his father sold illegally.

NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

As an independent business woman, I want a Judge who has broad legal experience both in and out of the courtroom.

Nick's background in business and civil law is second to none. He will reduce the backlog of civil cases and save the courts and the litigants time and money.

The Midland City Council appointed Nick to head the Midland Crime Prevention Commission. While serving on that board, Nick worked out a plan to reduce crime. Our police tell us that 90% of crime in Midland is drug related. Nick plans to test probated criminals for drug use. If they stop using drugs, they stop robbing our homes. It's that simple.

Nick knows the law, but he also knows crime. He has the leadership that will make a great judge for Midland.

City considers hiking insurance premiums

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

A hike in insurance premiums is needed to compensate for a leap last year in health claims within the city of Midland ranks, which have already been plagued by morale problems, officials said Monday.

Medical payments for the self-insured city averaged about $70,000 a month prior to August 1989, Assistant Deputy City Manager Keith Stretcher said. Since then, claims have average more than $200,000 during five of the last six months.

The claims among the city's approximately 800 employees hit an all-time high in January, when they totaled about $300,000, Stretcher said.

Meanwhile, premium revenues for the city have averaged only $160,000 for the past six months, he said. The city has had to use about half of its $951,000 health and dental insurance surplus fund to keep up with the rising number of claims.

A number of major surgeries and illnesses combined with an estimated 20 percent rise in medical costs last year caused the drastic jump in city insurance payments, Stretcher said.

"When you're self-insured, you only have a certain amount of income," he said. "The fund was doing very well until August."

But because claims have continued to exceed revenues, city administrators must look at either raising premiums, reducing benefits or a little of both, he said.

"There's been no definite recommendation," Stretcher said. "We're still working on it."

The issue is scheduled to go before the Midland City Council at its meeting next Tuesday.

Councilman Jose Cuevas said the likely option will be hiking premiums and raising deductibles.

Stretcher pointed out that a recent survey conducted by the city showed premiums for employees of other Permian Basin governmental entities are much higher overall than those of the city.

A city of Midland employee pays 30 percent of the total premium, while the city pays the rest.

A city employee who is single, has no children and makes less than $2,000 a month pays a $28 premium, while those in this group who make more than $2,000 pay $32.

Employees who make less than $2,000 and have one or more dependent pay $72, while those who make more than $2,000 pay $76.

"For family coverage, when you look at what others are charging, we are much cheaper," Stretcher said.

In the cities of Abilene, Lubbock and Odessa, premiums for employees with dependents range from $90 to $170, the survey showed. Dependent premiums for Midland County, Midland College and Midland Independent School District employees range from $95 to $235.

Cuevas said that, despite the differences between the city of Midland's premiums and those of other governmental entities, an insurance hike for city employees could worsen an already unstable morale situation.

However, he said the city has no other choice but to raise premiums in the face of skyrocketing claim payments.

"I don't think there's any way to address it," Cuevas said. "You give them (employees) a little money and take some away."

City officials have been confronting morale problems in recent months by going from department to department and fielding suggestions on how to improve working conditions.

Administrators still are studying a refined list of those recommendations.

GOP hopeful visits Odessa school

Magnet schools 'great model for rest of the state'

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — GOP gubernatorial hopeful Tom Luce pointed to Ector County magnet schools Monday as examples of excellence in education.

"I think it's a great model for the rest of the state," Luce said during a visit to John Ireland Elementary Magnet School in Odessa. "This type of program helps broaden the educational experience of all children."

Magnet schools were conceived as a way to draw non-minority students to minority schools by offering special after-school activities.

Ector County Independent School District magnet classes include foreign languages, fine arts, computers, science and music.

Luce, who also paid campaign visits to Dallas and Allamoore schools Monday, said the state should encourage innovations like magnet schools by giving local districts more autonomy.

Luce said the current school finance system should be "scrapped" in favor of "block-grant funding."

Under this system, Luce said, the state would give lump-sum payments to school districts to use as they see fit.

"We need to deliver a sum of money to local school districts with no strings attached," Luce said.

But Kelly Fero, spokesman for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Jim Mattox, said autonomy should be reserved for successful districts.

"The school districts that have a proven scholastic record ..should have the right to exercise autonomy," Fero said. "(Mattox) would reward school districts with a proven track record, and those schools that aren't so successful would be held accountable."

"We need to deliver a sum of money to local school districts with no strings attached."
— GOP gubernatorial candidate Tom Luce

Lawmakers will address the school finance issue in a special session scheduled to begin Feb. 27.

Luce, who is trailing in GOP polls behind Clayton Williams and Kent Hance, said education should be the state's No. 1 priority. He said all the candidates recognize the importance of education, but only he "can provide the leadership."

A poll released this week by the Jack Rains campaign shows Luce in fourth place among Texans familiar with this month's Republican debate.

Several newspapers, meanwhile, have endorsed the Luce campaign.

The Dallas Morning News, Austin American-Statesman, San Antonio Light and San Antonio Express-News all endorsed Luce, a Dallas attorney and the last of four candidates to enter the March 13 primary race.

Celebrating Black History

Q. What is the most vivid memory you have of Midland?

Marshall

A. "This was my first teaching job. This was the first time I had a room that was going to be mine" at Carver Junior-Senior High School in September 1958.

"I felt responsible for all those lives." Just 22 or 23 years old, "I felt like a real adult for the first time."

"I had four classes of seventh-graders and one class of eighth-graders" for social studies. "There was one kid in one of my classes who looked almost as old as I was."

Students from those classes "are 43 or 44 years old now."

"There were 12 or 15 new teachers that came to Carver that year. We tried to add to the spirit, to inspire it. We tried to get the kids loyal and involved in Carver High School."

Housing for blacks was scarce and many of the teachers rented rooms from families.

"There weren't a lot of apartments open to blacks. It was hard to find a place to live. I lived with my aunt and uncle for the first three or four years until several of us got an apartment together.

"I came from a town (Wichita Falls) with public transportation. But in Midland there was no public transportation, everyone had some kind of car. I came out here with an old car. In Wichita Falls, I either walked to school or took a bus."

-- Alma Marshall, coordinator of auxiliary and classified personnel for MISD

Ms. Marshall, a native of Wichita Falls, has lived in Midland since 1958. She taught social studies under the direction of James Bradford at Carver Junior-Senior High School before it closed in 1968, and has taught at Goddard Junior High and Lee Freshman schools. Ms. Marshall has a bachelor's degree from Prairie View A&M and a master's from Midwestern University in Wichita Falls.

It's A Fact:

Midland's first black church, Mount Rose Baptist Church, was organized in the early 1920s by Fred and Mary Bass. It was in the Basses' home; Sunday School and church services were held in the front room until a white rancher gave them a house to hold services in. The congregation sang without musical accompaniment until acquiring a piano in 1933.

In recognition of Black History Month, the Reporter-Telegram will feature brief recollections of local black citizens each Tuesday this month.

Lack of income tax should be marketed, Democrat's White says

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Former Gov. Mark White, rapping his Democratic gubernatorial opponents today, said he's got the jump on Attorney General Jim Mattox and State Treasurer Ann Richards on who opposes a state income tax — and why.

White

"The others candidates for governor have said that they are opposed to the income tax. I am too, but the difference is that I know why," White said.

White, Ms. Richards' and Mattox's opponent in the March 13 primary, referred to his plan to market Texas as a "no income tax state" to attract industry.

"What you do with the income tax is you advertise it," White said. "If we put the marketing plan together, we can attract attention from not just the United States, but throughout the world."

The former governor, who is hoping for a political comeback with a Democratic primary victory, said he's confident that the cities of Houston and Dallas will recover from the collapse of the oil industry, but he worries about the rest of the state.

"We don't want a tale of two cities," he said. "I think we're entitled to a state that's going to be prosperous — not just in two cities — but across the length and breath of Texas."

Speaking to reporters at a Midland International Airport news conference, White said he is convinced that Texas faces a choice between funding new prisons with a state income tax or using money that's already available to bolster law enforcement.

"I think the question of crime in our state is one of extreme importance and, yet, we have seen the same old songs being sung by the candidates for this office," he said.

Neighborhood protection, said White, is the cheapest way to achieve true law and order status in Texas.

"The fact of the matter is that we've forgotten to provide protection in neighborhoods and in our communities across Texas," White said. "There are simply not enough police officers to give any kind of deterrence to the criminal element."

In other remarks, White pointed to education as another top issue in the upcoming election, and he touted his role in passage of the 1984 school reforms that included teacher testing and the no-pass, no-play athletics rules.

White is promising additional education reforms in Texas, if elected, and wants to make the schools "a place where kids have opportunities to learn first-class education."

Candidates filing for local city, school, college, hospital races

From Staff Reports

Candidate filing began this week for the May 5 election of Midland City Council, Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees, Midland Junior College District Board of Trustees, Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees and Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors.

In the City Council elections, Mayor Carroll Thomas has said he will run for a third term of office, while District 4 Councilman Robert Rendall has announced he will give up his seat on the six-member council. Thomas Johnston has filed for Rendall's seat. District 3 Councilman Bob Monaghan has filed for re-election.

The deadline for filing in the citywide elections is March 21.

Two school board seats are up

Absentee voting begins Wednesday

From Staff Reports

Midland County residents can get a head start casting their ballots in the March 13 primary election with the beginning of absentee voting at 8 a.m. Wednesday.

Absentee balloting will continue through March 9, at the Midland County Election Administrator's Office, 709 W. Washington Ave.

Hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

In addition, Elections Administrator Bettye Calvert announced this morning that extended absentee hours were set for 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, March 3, and from 1-5 p.m. on Sunday, March 4.

Ms. Calvert said registered voters who want to cast absentee ballots do not have to have an excuse for taking advantage of early voting in the Democratic or Republican primaries.

Registered voters who plan to be out of town on election day may vote absentee by mail if they submit a written request that the ballot be mailed to their temporary residence.

The last day the Election Office can accept an absentee ballot request is March 6.

Voters who are ill, 65 years or older, or disabled also may vote absentee by mail provided both the application and the ballot are handled by mail.

DEATHS

George Elwood Hisey

Services for George Elwood Hisey, 69, of Midland, are scheduled for 11 a.m. Thursday at the First Baptist Church with Dr. Jim Denison officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Hisey

He died Sunday at a local hospital.

He was born Sept. 2, 1920, in Harrisonburg, Va., where he grew up and attended high school. He graduated from Strayers College in Washington, D.C., with a degree in accounting in 1941, and joined the Army Air Corps in 1942. He served as a lieutenant bombardier/navigator and was awarded two Air Medals and the Distinguished Flying Cross.

He was discharged from the service in 1946 and remained in the reserves until 1955. On Sept. 22, 1945, he married Marjorie Harwell at the First Baptist Church of Midland.

He went to work in the accounting department of Superior Oil Co. in 1946, and later worked for the Griffith Accounting Firm. In 1947, he joined Union Oil. After 10 years in the accounting department, he transferred to the land department. He retired in 1982 as head of the Lease Processing Central Division.

He was a member of Asbury United Methodist Church and Union Oil Retiree Club.

Services for J.C. "Bert" McFarland of Midland are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Monday evening at a local hospital.

Brave dog shot while defending owner

HOUSTON (AP) — A 2½-year-old Golden Retriever is being credited with saving the lives of its owner and a neighbor by taking a bullet to the shoulder during a would-be robbery.

"There's no question she saved our lives," Chris Dittmar said Monday of his dog, Chelsea, a normally docile pet who courageously intervened when two gunmen appeared outside his house.

"She just leaped between our feet and went after both guys holding guns," Dittmar said. "They lowered the gun from our heads and aimed for her instead. I saw her get hit in the shoulder — I could see her take the slug."

"She is normally this wonderful, sweet dog but when it counted, she leaped for the throat and took a bullet in the process," co-owner Kathy Page said.

Dittmar was standing near his house chatting with neighbors Bill and Jeannie Ridlehuber last Thursday night when four young men began walking up and down driveways. Dittmar told Mrs. Ridlehuber to call the police. The next thing he knew, two of the men pulled pistols on him and Bill Ridlehuber.

"They had two guns pointed toward our heads and they told us to step out into the street," Dittmar said. "And at that moment Chelsea sensed something wasn't right. She could smell our fear."

That's when the 60-pound dog sprang into action.

After firing at the dog, the gunmen fired three more shots at Dittmar and Ridlehuber, who ran into a garage and shut the door.

Dittmar grabbed a shotgun from his house and went out in search of Chelsea, who had disappeared.

"I called her name and she came limping out of the shadows," he said. "She was scared but she came to me. She just put her head on my knee and I looked at her and she had blood coming out of her shoulder and I cradled her underneath the shotgun and took her home."

An emergency run to an animal clinic revealed the .38-caliber slug had traveled beneath the dog's skin and had lodged along the chest wall, missing bones and internal organs. Veterinarians will remove the bullet later this week.

Chelsea, meanwhile, was treated to a juicy steak bought by neighbors, a bouquet of flowers and three new rawhide bones to chew on.

"There's no question she saved our lives," Dittmar said. "We had no opportunity to defend ourselves — it was four against two and they had guns."

Woman channels anger into 'Voice' for others

By GREG FIEG PIZANO

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — When hearing-impaired Paula Bartone discovered a portable amplifier that would help overcome her inability to use the telephone, she was more than thrilled.

She was angry.

Ms. Bartone said she could hardly believe that she finally had found a device on the open market that could enable her to escape one of the most aggravating handicaps of the first 25 years of her life.

The discovery was only by chance. "Why hadn't she known before?," she asked herself.

Today she is publisher, editor and founder of The Voice, a slick, full-color, 30,000-circulation national magazine based in Corpus Christi and published nine times a year in devotion to the problems of 20 million deaf or hearing-impaired Americans.

She started the magazine immediately after learning about the phone amplifier.

She did it because she wanted to make sure that deaf and hearing-impaired people could avail themselves of a forum that would keep them informed of advances, breakthroughs and equipment to make their lives easier and more productive.

"The amplifier had been available at least a year or two, and other devices had already been available for a long time. I was angry because I'd been forced to be dependent, and I'm not dependent by nature."

— Voice publisher Paula Bartone

"The amplifier had been available at least a year or two, and other devices had already been available for a long time," she said. "I was angry because I'd been forced to be dependent, and I'm not dependent by nature."

In order to embark on her new career, she quit her job as a school teacher, borrowed $6,000 from her father and it's been up hill and down hill ever since. The first three years were very difficult, she said.

Ms. Bartone has had to force herself to work 70-hour weeks for months on end — serving as publisher, editor, advertising salesperson, circulation director and janitor.

"It was crazy, but I didn't know any better than to do this," said Ms. Bartone, 39.

Despite many problems — including a near collapse of the enterprise three years ago when she ran out of money — it's been getting a little easier lately.

The magazine began to break even two years ago, she said.

"I put my heart and soul and every penny I could get my hands on into this for five years," she said. "The problem was, I just didn't know how to go out of business."

She said she's still $30,000 in debt, but she's making progress in paying it off.

She's buoyed by a new expansion project and promotion, including a national circulation drive, an advertising push, broadened coverage, more pages and additional staff and features, including the addition of national sports columnist Barry Strassler.

A colleague, Steve Coleman, has taken over the advertising program so she can devote time to editorial content.

Entertainment reading in recent editions has included biographies about inventor Thomas Edison, 19th century German composer Ludwig von Beethoven and 19th century Spanish artist Francisco Goya, all of whom suffered from chronic hearing loss.

Ms. Bartone also established a toll-free magazine telephone number (800-327-7347) in which Voice advisory board members answer hearing-related health questions.

"In today's information age, without knowledge and access to the constantly emerging technology available, a large number of people with hearing loss will be left in isolation," Ms. Bartone said.

"We offer an opportunity for deaf and hard-of-hearing people to learn about the many options open to them."

The subscription rate for nine issues is $14, payable to Voice International Publications Inc., Box 2663, Corpus Christi, Texas 78403-2663.

Pipe breaks, sending gas into creek

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A pipe apparently broken by construction crews poured about 1,500 gallons of gasoline across a bus parking lot and into a creek, but workers averted what officials said could have been a major spill.

Firefighters and environmental workers were called to a VIA Metropolitan Transit Authority parking lot about 8 p.m. Monday to contain the gasoline, which spilled into San Pedro Creek.

The creek empties into the San Antonio River.

Authorities said there was no threat of drinking water contamination.

"This is no big threat to the community. There are no evacuations," said Assistant Fire Chief Curtis Franz.

An official with the Texas Fish and Wildlife Department also was called to the spill site late Monday.

Anti-abortionists deny stinking up clinics

HOUSTON (AP) — Family planning administrators believe anti-abortion groups are using stink bombs to disrupt clinic services, but at least on pro-life group has denied the claims.

Planned Parenthood spokeswoman Susan Nenney said clinic employees smelled a foul odor at the facility Monday morning. Later in the day, they complained of headaches and scratchy throats.

Administrators said they believe the stink bomb was set off between Friday evening and early Sunday. Similar incidents have occurred three other times each at two area clinics since last June.

Ms. Nenney blamed the stink bomb tactic on "a radical element" of anti-abortion groups. She said she believes some type of hose was forced between the front doors to allow the smoke to enter the lobby. It also left a green residue.

"This is a part of their new bag of tricks," she said. "It's part of a pattern and I didn't know — until it happened to us — how much it was happening around the city."

The action did not deter patients from keeping appointments, she said.

Judy Vatterott of Life Advocates said she knows of no one in the anti-abortion movement here responsible for the tactic.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Help meet our community's needs — become a volunteer. Here are just a few of the opportunities currently available through the Volunteer Center.

■ Sharing this knowledge may well save a life. Volunteers fluent in in Spanish are needed to teach either basic first aid or CPR. Both training and instruction material will be provided. Scheduling is flexible. Do help get this vital information out to our Hispanic community.

■ Enjoy volunteering in an office environment? Volunteers are needed to assist with data entry and filing for local law enforcement and personnel departments. A four-hour commitment once a week is requested. This is an 8-to-5 weekday opportunity.

■ Role model positive parenting techniques as a parent partner. Friendly advocates make a weekly home visit to teach families communication skills, child development, and discipline techniques. Training and curriculum are provided and the scheduling is flexible. currently several families who have requested this service are awaiting volunteers.

■ Your voice is in demand. An agency that produces quality recordings for the blind/visually impaired needs volunteers to narrate material. If you prefer to work more behind the scene, volunteers are also needed to operate the recording equipment and to review recorded material. Training is provided and a commitment of two hours a week between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. is desired.

■ Upcoming trainings: evening training for a literacy program is scheduled for Feb. 27 and March 1. Volunteer hospice trainin will be offered during March. This training is open to both volunteers and interested individuals.

■ Have a question or problem? Call Information and Referral Midland, 697-HELP.

For more information on how you can volunteer, call the Volunteer Center 697-8781.

Woman sentenced in donation scheme

DALLAS (AP) — A former employee of Dallas County Mental Health-Mental Retardation was sentenced to five years' probation Monday for tricking a lawyers' group out of thousands of dollars she said would be used to buy Christmas toys for retarded children, authorities said.

Irma Robles Alonzo, 39, pleaded guilty to two counts of felony theft.

She was ordered to spend three days in jail and pay the Dallas County Criminal Bar Association $8,000 in restitution as part of a plea agreement. She also was fined $500 and ordered to complete 500 hours of community service.

Dallas skinheads to stand trial for racist attacks

DALLAS (AP) — A trial prosecutors are touting as a major assault against white supremacist groups gets under way today in Dallas when five so-called "skinheads" go on trial for allegedly vandalizing synagogues and terrorizing blacks and Hispanics.

The "skinheads" are accused of conspiring to violate the rights of blacks, Jews and Hispanics here. They were indicted last September for incidents in the fall and summer of 1988.

"Skinhead" members are characterized by shaved heads. They espouse a white supremacist philosophy of intolerance of minority groups.

The group first appeared in Dallas about two years ago when Sean Christian Tarrant, one of the defendants, formed a spinoff group called the Confederate Hammerskins, officials have said.

The indictment names Tarrant, Jon Lance Jordan, Michael Lewis Lawrence, Chrisopher Barry Greer and Daniel Alvis Wood. It accuses them of conspiring to vandalize a Jewish temple and the Jewish Community Center in Dallas in October 1988.

It also accuses Greer, Tarrant and Jordan of violence against blacks and Hispanics at Robert E. Lee Park in August of 1988. The men allegedly intimidated several Hispanics into leaving the park and also assaulted two black men.

The park attacks occurred because the skinhead group believed the park was a symbol of white supremacy that should not have been frequented by non-whites, Barry Kowalski, an attorney with the Justice Department Civil Rights Division, said after the indictments were handed up.

Each of the federal charges carries a maximum fine of 10 years imprisonment and a $250,000 fine.

Federal prosecutors refused to discuss the case before trial.

"Tracking down and prosecuting those who commit violent acts motivated by racial or religious hatred are major priorities of the Department of Justice," U.S. Attorney General Richard Thornburg said last fall. "Those who think they might get away with cruel and cowardly acts designed to strike fear in the hearts of vulnerable groups or individuals in this country can think again."

Eleven other Hammerskins associates previously have been charged in the grand jury investigation. Three of those five adults and four of six juveniles pleaded guilty.

Wood, who was arrested in the vandalism on a temple, was sentenced to 10 years in prison by a state judge after admitting he sprayed swastikas and anti-Semitic slogans. He also was fined $5,000.

The trial begins against the backdrop of racial incidents throughout Texas, from the dismissal of three law enforcement officers because of ties with the Ku Klux Klan to racist prank newspaper ads.

Earlier this month, in nearby Fort Worth, Tarrant County Sheriff Don Carpenter dismissed reserve deputy Timothy Hall, and fired jailer David White and dispatcher Kay Moore after an internal affairs investigation revealed their ties to the Klan.

The Tarrant County Klan investigation led to Carswell Air Force base, where Hall, an Air Force sergeant, and four other security officers have been suspended for their alleged Klan involvement.

Hall, White and Ms. Moore are believed to be the first Texas law enforcement officials to lose their positions because of their involvement with the Klan.

The Klan activity came to light after Hall was spotted at a Klan rally in Malone, a town about 70 miles south of Fort Worth, when undercover deputies recognized Hall, the sheriff's office said.

It was in Malone last October that three white men, including Malone's mayor, were cleared by a grand jury after chasing a black burglary suspect and suffocated him.

Stormie undergoes second liver transplant

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A team of surgeons worked today to replace the diseased liver of 12-year-old Stormie Jones, who became the world's first recipient of a heart-liver transplant six years ago.

Lead surgeon Andreas Tzakis and six other doctors started the operation at 3:15 a.m. EST today, hospital officials said. Transplant pioneer Dr. Thomas Starzl was present for part of the procedure, expected to last at least 12 hours.

"There's no word from the operating room. That's a good sign," Children's Hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon said at 9 a.m. EST.

She said doctors planned to discuss Stormie's condition following the operation.

Stormie and her mother, Lois Purcell, flew to Pittsburgh from their home in the Dallas suburb of White Settlement, Texas, on Monday, arriving at Children's Hospital at about 7 p.m.

As she was wheeled from her plane to a waiting ambulance, Stormie joked, "I feel like I'm in a straitjacket" because of the stretcher's confining straps.

Doctors were optimistic because a donor liver was found only a week after Stormie's name was placed on the nationwide transplant list. The success rate of a second liver transplant is estimated at 65 percent to 70 percent, hospital officials said.

Hepatitis damaged Stormie's first transplanted liver and the organ no longer functions normally, McMahon said.

Hepatitis, which is caused by a viral infection, inflames the liver.

"She was last hospitalized here in January," McMahon said. "The doctors suspected a virus or hepatitis at that time. They feel at this time their only option is another liver transplant."

Stormie's first transplant on Valentine's Day 1984 took 16 hours and was headed by Starzl, who replaced the girl's heart and liver with those of a 4-year-old girl who had died in a New York car accident.

Before that operation, Stormie suffered two heart attacks and underwent two triple coronary bypass operations.

She suffered from a rare congenital disease which increased to 10 times normal the level of cholesterol in her blood. The imbalance was caused by a faulty liver.

Pittsburgh surgeons followed Stormie's 1984 operation with two more attempts at heart-liver transplants, but both patients died within a few days of surgery.

Those were the only attempts in America at replacing a heart and liver in the same operation until last Dec. 3, when Pittsburgh surgeons performed the world's first heart-liver-kidney transplant. The patient, Cindy Martin, 26, remains in critical condition in the intensive care unit at Presbyterian-University Hospital.

She is receiving FK-506, an experimental Japanese drug, and has experienced no organ rejection.

Stormie had no serious complications until October 1988, when Children's Hospital doctors removed a bile duct obstruction.

Candidates already throwing money around

AUSTIN (AP) — The job pays $93,432 a year, but seven candidates for governor already have spent more than $20 million trying to land it, and analysts say the final tab could hit $50 million.

The bulk of the money is going for production and broadcast of television commercials, exposure that's mandatory for reaching the state's 17 million residents.

Texas is so large that to blanket it, a candidate must purchase air time on more than 70 stations in 21 TV markets, including outlets in Arkansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma.

"Campaign costs are going up because of television and postage. The television advertising is so expensive and the markets are so numerous, it costs a ton to run for office," said George Christian, political consultant and former press secretary to President Lyndon Johnson.

"It's unfortunate," he said. "But it's a fact of life in Texas."

Four Republicans and three Democrats are vying for nominations in the March 13 primaries to succeed retiring Gov. Bill Clements, the state's only Republican governor in 100 years.

Top spender is the man who according to polls is the leader in the Republican primary field: millionaire oilman Clayton Williams. He has spent $6.4 million — more than $4 million of it from his personal bank account — and first aired television commercials in August.

State Treasurer Ann Richards, who leaped to national attention by keynoting the 1988 Democratic convention, leads in Democratic race polls but lags in fund-raising at $2.1 million.

The Democratic financial lead goes to Attorney General Jim Mattox, who raised more than $4 million and spent $3.7 million, including almost $2 million on television ads in the past month alone.

Former Gov. Mark White raised $3 million since joining the Democratic race in November.

According to campaign finance reports filed by all candidates, spending on the race totaled $20.1 million by Feb. 12. And that was with a month left until the primary and two months until the expected runoff elections.

Analysts in both parties have said that by November, the race will easily eclipse the state record $33.5 million spent in 1986, when Clements ousted White.

Williams defends his spending as proof of his independence from special interests.

"Clayton is not beholden to anybody. Some people consider that an asset, to be able to contribute to your own campaign," said Williams aide Scott Bohnenkamp.

Williams' GOP opponents accuse him of trying to buy the Republican nomination.

Referring to Williams' cowboy image and two admitted fistfights since he turned 50, a spokeswoman for GOP hopeful Tom Luce retorted, "I don't know how tough Clayton is, but he has a black belt in spending."

Asked about soaring campaign costs, Mark Sanders, press secretary to Republican candidate Kent Hance, said, "Television advertising. It's just that simple." Hance, a former "Boll Weevil" Democratic congressman who changed parties in 1985, has raised $2.2 million. Recent polls put him second in the GOP race.

Candidates say collecting money takes more work than it used to since the state's oil and real estate busts.

"I don't believe they're stealing any, but they do have to beg and borrow," Christian said.

"It's really hurtful to campaigns because it means they have to be devoted primarily to raising money to get their message out on TV. It's not just the candidate. Everybody is hustling for money and, they're hustling against great competition right now — there are legislative races, local races," he said.

Mattox was criticized for raising money from law firms while serving as attorney general. But his strategy of banking money early has let him outspend the other Democrats as election day nears.

UNT bans panty raids in future despite politeness

DENTON (AP) — University of North Texas officials say they'll tolerate no more planned panty raids, even though students recently staged a very polite one, asking for permission before grabbing any underwear.

"It just doesn't look good," said Betsy McGuire, the UNT director of housing. "I know it's a tradition in some schools, but at the University of North Texas I would prefer more wholesome traditions be developed."

The Feb. 5 panty raid in which students swiped more than 200 pairs of panties was the first at the university in 20 years, according to Mark Fincher, program director for West Hall.

McGuire conceded that the raid went off without any hitches after students meticulously planned the event. The coordinators of the raid went so far as to write a rule book for participants, with the first rule stating: "All raidings should be done with consideration."

Organizers distributed fliers to female campus residents, advising them to prepare for the raid.

Police following leads in bowling-alley killings

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — Las Cruces police are still pursuing numerous leads in the search for two gunmen who shot seven people, four of them children, during a robbery at a bowling alley earlier this month.

Four people, including three children, died in the massacre Feb. 10. The three survivors remain hospitalized.

"We're still following hundreds of leads," Las Cruces Police Capt. Fred Rubio said Monday.

Rubio also said three men being held in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, apparently had no involvement in the shootings.

Rubio said survivors of the shooting spree viewed an El Paso television station's videotape of the three men in custody and indicated they were not the assailants.

Rubio said the three men were arrested in Mexico and were being held on firearms charges. They allegedly were driving a car that had been reported stolen in Los Lunas, N.M., last Wednesday.

Rubio said Las Cruces police went to Ciudad Juarez Monday to question the three men.

"We wanted to make 100 percent sure," said Rubio.

Investigators are working with composite drawings of the two gunmen in an effort to get a break in the case. The two men being sought are described as Hispanics, one in his late 20s or early 30s with kinky hair and a mustache. The second man is believed to be about 50 years old and heavyset.

Police said the two gunmen walked into the Las Cruces Bowl the morning of Feb. 10, herded seven people into an office, forced them to lie down and shot them in the back of the head.

Bowling alley employee Steve Teran, 26, his daughter Valerie Teran, 2, and stepdaughter Paula Holguin, 6, were killed. Amy Houser, 13, also was slain.

State continues plans to import South African steel

AUSTIN (AP) — The state is sticking by its plan to import $91.2 million worth of steel from South Africa despite sanctions against that government for its policy of apartheid.

Four employees of the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation are in Johannesburg this week to make sure the steel is made to specification for the Houston bridge project, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

The steel will be sent to Cape Town for final fabrication, then shipped to Houston.

Federal officials say the steel is not covered by a law outlawing import of most South African steel.

In all, 8.8 million pounds of steel will be processed in South Africa for the bridge being built where Texas Highway 146 crosses the Houston Ship Channel at San Jacinto and Black Duck bays.

Using South African products is "condoning slavery, essentially," said Gary Bledsoe, president of the Austin chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. "You can put a different name to apartheid if you want, but to my mind it's slavery."

Under the 1986 Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act, it is illegal to import steel into the United States from South Africa. But the U.S. Customs Service says rules it promulgated that same year don't cover the kind of steel to be used in the Houston bridge.

Critics of apartheid have been unsuccessful in fighting the Customs Service rules.

Wall's crumbling enables sisters to visit after 42 years

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Roman Catholic nun will not have to celebrate her birthday alone for the first time in 42 years thanks to the changing political climate of East Germany that allowed her sister to come to Texas for a visit.

Sister Mary Elfonsis will be able to celebrate her 60th birthday today with her sister, Waltraud Dittemer, who flew in from East Berlin this week to share in the festivities.

"It's been a very long time," Sister Elfonsis said Monday in the visiting room at the Blessed Sacrament Chapel. "We've been waiting the past 40 years."

The two chatted about the old days and changes that have taken place since they've been apart. They had a lot to talk about.

The faces of both cities, East and West Berlin, have been rebuilt during the years since World War II.

Sister Elfonsis turned to a page in a book about Berlin that showed a large outdoor clock, located in Alexander Platz in East Berlin, that displays the time of different cities of the world.

Ms. Dittemer said when she walks by the clock she always looks to see what time it is in Texas.

"We have some good things too," she said.

The sisters and their family lived in Germany through World War II. Sister Elfonsis was evacuated to Bavaria, with about 200 other girls, to finish school. The rest of the family, including Dittemer, was moved to east Prussia as the Allied forces closed in.

After the war, the family moved back to Berlin and Sister Elfonsis joined them.

Sister Elfonsis began preparations to become a nun in 1946. She was accepted in 1948, she said, the same year the Mother Superior of the convent in West Berlin was transferred to America.

"She took me along with her," Sister Elfonsis said.

That was the last time she saw her family.

"When you enter, you give yourself up, more or less," she said. "You make your vows and go wherever you are sent."

Ms. Dittemer had applied last June for her trip to the United States, hoping that it would coincide with her sister's birthday. But the application was bogged down in a seemingly endless bureaucratic tangle, a process common under the old regime, she said.

All that changed last November when the Berlin Wall came down and East Germans got their first real taste of freedom since the 1940s.

Although travel restrictions eased, Ms. Dittemer said, many couldn't leave because they didn't have enough money to get where they wanted to go.

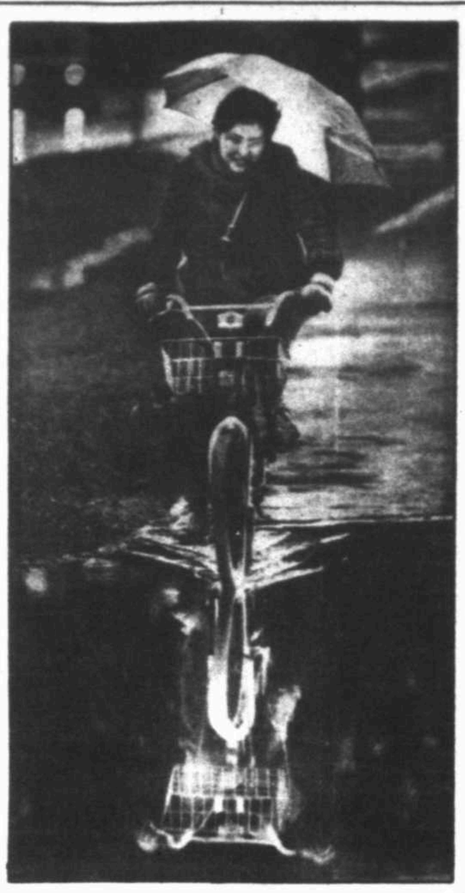

"There was freedom, but there was no money," she said.

Ms. Dittemer worked out the details of her finances and her passport and visas by the end of January, just in time to lay in place her final plans for the trip.

"We were all praying for it here," said Sister Elfonsis.

Ms. Dittemer has fond memories of the fall of the Berlin Wall.

"It was glorious; it was wonderful," she said. "It is something that you just cannot describe or comprehend."

Anti-discrimination bill for disabled needed, Texans say

AUSTIN (AP) — It's neither right nor economically sensible to allow businesses to discriminate against people with disabilities, say advocates of an anti-discrimination measure pending in Congress.

"It's time for the Americans with Disabilities Act to move us closer to the society Washington and Lincoln envisioned," said Dolores Gonzalez of the Austin Human Rights Commission at a news conference Monday, Presidents' Day.

Dorsey Barger, whose Austin restaurant has a wheelchair ramp and restrooms accessible to wheelchairs, added, "Being inaccessible says to 10 to 15 percent of the population, 'You can't come in here.' That's not good business."

The Americans With Disabilities Act would protect people with disabilities from discrimination in employment, transportation, public accommodations, state and local government activities and telecommunications. It has passed the Senate and is pending in the House, where advocates say they fear a move to weaken its provisions.

Opposition to the measure has come from businesses that are concerned about its cost, said Ms. Barger and Jim Comstock-Galagan, an attorney who represents disabled people.

But they said modifications to accommodate the disabled can be relatively inexpensive and can pay off in increased business. In addition, businesses with fewer than 25 employees would not be covered under the bill's employment section for two years, and those with fewer than 15 would remain exempt.

Most provisions of the measure would go into effect two years after enactment. However, new bus and rail vehicles purchased or leased by publicly funded systems would have to be accessible effective 30 days after passage.

"No American with a disability should ever be relegated to second-class citizenship," said Diana Cox, who said she has been diagnosed as a manic-depressive and works with others who use mental health services.

Jim Caldwell, who works for IBM in Austin, said, "The Americans with Disabilities Act is not a give-away program. It is not even a social program.

"It is a simple attempt to change the physical environment so that a group of people who have been excluded up to now because of that environment can compete on a more even field," said Caldwell, who earned his doctorate in business at the University of Texas after an accident left him blind and in a wheelchair.

Consumer group seeks stronger 'lemon law'

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans whose new cars turn out to be duds should pressure lawmakers to make the state "lemon law" work better for consumers, says the state director of the Ralph Nader-founded group Public Citizen.

"We would urge consumers who have purchased lemons in the past to contact their legislators and tell them about the problems they've had, and why they would want to make some changes in this law," said Tom Smith after the Sunset Advisory Commission adopted legislative recommendations to strengthen the lemon law Monday.

The recommendations would represent "significant gains," Smith said. But he added that he would like some of the proposals — which address such items as how quickly a lemon law complaint is processed — to go further.

The sunset panel, which periodically reviews state agencies, examined the lemon law as part of a look at the Texas Motor Vehicle Commission. The law allows consumers to receive a refund or replacement for new vehicles with problems that defy reasonable attempts at repair.

Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, an Austin Democrat and sunset chairman, said the recommendations are for the 1991 regular legislative session and subject to change.

Among the sunset recommendations:

- A consumer should be required to make only two repair attempts — rather than the current four — if the vehicle's problem is a serious safety hazard.
- Incidental costs — such as towing, and lodging — should be reimbursed up to $200 by the manufacturer. Public Citizen and the sunset staff had proposed reimbursement without a monetary limit.
- A decal should be affixed to a vehicle that has been declared a lemon, so the next retail purchaser knows its history. Public Citizen and the sunset staff had suggested that the vehicle's title also be marked.
- A consumer should be required to prove either that a problem hurts the vehicle's value or its use. Currently, a consumer must prove both, said sunset Director Bill Wells, who noted, "If you have a car whose paint peels off but it runs like a jewel, you can use it very well, but its value is diminished."

STATE IN BRIEF

Settlement reached in building's collapse

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A $33.1 million out-of-court lawsuit settlement will be shared by the families of most of those who died or were injured in the 1988 collapse of a Brownsville department store, attorneys said.

The three-story downtown store came crashing down the afternoon of July 7, 1988, during a torrential thunderstorm in the border city, killing 14 and injuring several dozen others.

Many of those injured or killed were from Matamoros, Mexico, just across the Rio Grande from downtown Brownsville.

McAllen attorney John Lewis, who represented a group of plaintiffs suing for families of four of the dead and four of the injured, said a committee of plaintiffs' lawyers arrived at the agreement Monday with the last of nine defendants.

The litigation was still in the discovery phase in which investigators review evidence and witnesses give depositions, Lewis said.

"You've got rubble lying there and crippled people scattered all over the block, and it takes a while to sort it out," Lewis said Monday.

Monday's finalized settlement was for families of 13 who died and 32 injured, said McAllen attorney Mark Cantu, who also represented some of the plaintiffs. Others injured have reached independent settlements, Cantu said. The family of one of the dead did not sue, he added.

Defendants included Amigo Stores Inc., Brownsville's Public Utilities Board, the city of Brownsville, and several construction companies and materials suppliers.

Train's wreckage cleared

EMHOUSE (AP) — Crews hoped to clear the last scattered wreckage of freight train derailment today, but say a tanker flaming since Saturday would have to be extinguished before three displaced families would be allowed back into their homes.

Firefighters are allowing the tanker, filled with liquid propane, to burn itself out, fearing that dousing "hot spots" could cause an explosion like the one that occurred just before 8:30 a.m. Saturday, when 24 cars of the 44-car train derailed.

The fire has kept environmental crews from cleaning up a chemical spill. A car of sodium chlorate powder, used in making explosives and cosmetics, spilled near the propane tanker and has been covered with tarp to prevent it feeding the fire and getting wet. A violent reaction occurs with either fire or water.

"The tanker should stop burning Tuesday," said Corsicana Fire Chief Troy England.

Emhouse is about 40 miles south of Dallas.

Pro-choice stand criticized

DALLAS (AP) — The president of the State Bar of Texas says the American Bar Association's pro-choice resolution is discriminatory and he plans to fight it.

Darrell E. Jordan wrote a letter last week to ABA president Stanley Chauvin, protesting an ABA House of Delegates' resolution supporting the principle of a woman's constitutional right to have an abortion.

Jordan has said he will seek the resolution be rescinded during the annual convention of the ABA in Chicago in August.

Some ABA members have resigned since the resolution was approved Feb. 13 in Los Angeles.

Olympic coach tells former pupil Nadia Comaneci to straighten up

HOUSTON (AP) — Olympic coach Bela Karolyi says if he could talk to his famous former pupil Nadia Comaneci, he would advise her to ditch the married man she has been with since defecting from Romania.

"I am very concerned about Nadia, and for the millions of young children who still idolize her," Karolyi said. "That means a monument is going to be ruined."

"I was so very proud of her, and now I am very hurt about what is happening to her," he said Monday.

Comaneci, most remembered from the perfect scores she earned as a teen-ager at the 1976 Montreal Olympics, defected from Romania last November. But she generated controversy when it was learned that a married man with four children left his family to be with her and manage her career.

"I'm hurt to hear about her attitude on her arrival to the U.S.," Karolyi said. "This country gave her an unbelievable honor to grant her asylum. This certainly didn't turn out to my expectations."

Karolyi, who defected from Romania in 1981 and now lives in Houston where he operates a gymnastics facility that has produced several top female gymnasts, said he tried several times to get in touch with Comaneci shortly after she defected, but that she repeatedly snubbed him.

"I wanted to tell her that the American society is different from Romanian society," Karolyi said.

Happy Days/Daylight Donuts: Eat healthy with Fat Finder

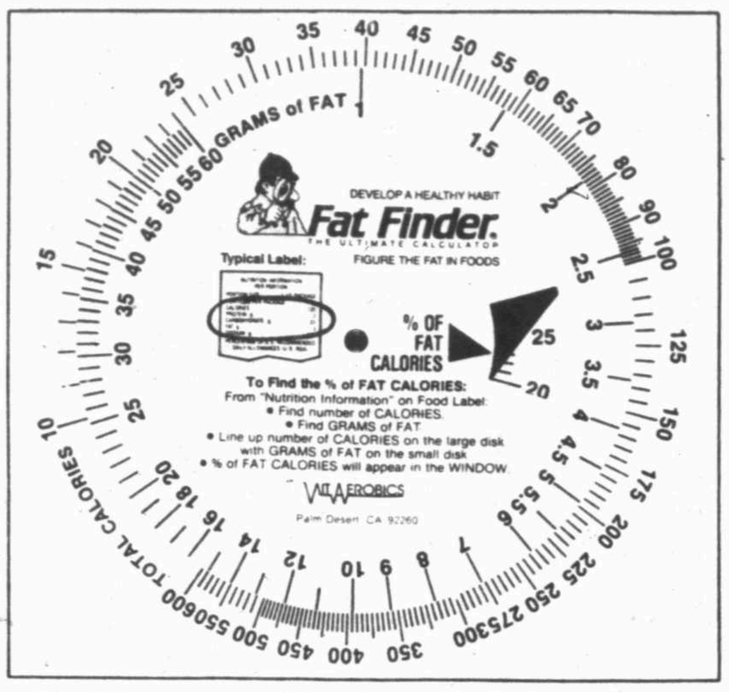

Figure the percentage of fat calories in foods when you are at the grocery store with this handy Fat Finder®. These easy-to-use counters are available at Happy Days Donuts, 315 N. Midland Drive and Daylight Donuts inside the Kent Kwik at 2910 N. Big Spring.

Develop a healthy habit and figure the percentage of fat calories in your food with the Fat Finder®, available from your Malsovit bread baker, Happy Days and Daylight Donuts.

Nutritionists and the American Heart Association recommend that fat not exceed 30 percent of the total calories you consume. Health, wellness and fitness professionals have observed improved cardiovascular function in those keeping their total fat consumption below 30 percent.

With that in mind, take the handy, easy-to-use wheel to the grocery store. Look up the information on package labels and quickly figure how much fat content your food contains.

It's just that simple.

The Fat Finder® costs $3.95 and is available at Happy Days Donuts, 315 N. Midland Drive and Daylight Donuts inside the Kent Kwik at 2910 N. Big Spring.

You can take the Fat Finder® and also apply the information at home to fat statistics in everyday low-calorie frozen foods. The information is in "The Dutch Diet," by Dr. J. T. Cooper, a book outlining the benefits of Malsovit bread. The book is sold exclusively at Happy Days and Daylight Donuts, and a new shipment has just been received.

If you haven't heard about "The Dutch Diet" or Malsovit bread from the scores of satisfied Midlanders who believe in healthy diets, consider the following information.

Malsovit bread offers a sound philosophy: "Eat yourself thin!"

Malsovit is baked fresh daily, and is available exclusively at Happy Days Donuts and Daylight Donuts.

The Malsovit philosophy is based on keeping your metabolism "revved up" while at the same time reducing your caloric intake.

Receiving the caloric intake from nutritional calories in combination with adequate amounts of dietary fiber and complete protein will cause the body to draw its additional energy from converted fat tissue.

This will allow you to "eat yourself thin" while maintaining balanced nutrition and a continuous feeling of fullness. This applies also to those who have no weight to lose. Malsovit is still a sensible (nutritionally sound) addition to their daily food intake.

In order to perform the regular bodily functions as well as for growth and development, the body needs a certain amount of daily energy. The term used to describe the energy value of the food we eat is called "calorie."

There are two kinds of calories, "empty" calories and "nutritional" calories. Empty calories are calories with little or no nutritional value, such as processed sugar and refined flour.

This is where many people go astray. Simply reducing the amount of calories consumed to obtain weight loss without recognizing the difference in calories may actually result in weight gain.

The human body needs the right amount of energy, whether on a diet or not. For many people, losing weight is indeed a nightmare, followed by the "after-the-diet-weight-gain." Their problem may well be in their metabolism — the body's "operating speed" which determines the rate at which calories are burned up.

As soon as a lesser amount of calories is consumed (as in low calorie dieting) the body will respond by slowing down the metabolic rate. This in turn will slow down the fat conversion as well as other bodily functions (i.e. the digestive process).

The Malsovit philosophy says that counting calories is a waste of time. Keep these points in mind as you change your eating habits:

- Don't count calories, eat good ones.
- One gram of fat equals nine "bad" calories.
- One gram of protein equals four "good" calories.
- One gram of complex carbohydrates equals four "good" calories.

The Malsovit Diet Plan is easy — it is based on consuming seven slices of Malsovit per day along with a wide variety of other foods. There is no time wasted on extensive food preparation or making separate meals for the dieter.

The cost of the bread or the handy wafers for those "on the go" is 3.25 per loaf or box.

The plan is designed for people to lose an average of two to six pounds per week. At this rate of weight loss, the body is allowed to respond comfortably to the "changing circumstances."

According to the new book, The Dutch Diet, Malsovit works because it is a complete protein product — a combination of grain and legume proteins in the flour.

Cooper writes, "There are no required medications, no powders to mix up, no starving or eating of unhealthy combinations of food, no ketosis, and no magic herbal combinations. In short, the entire program is common sense at its best, and it works!"

Daylight Donuts is the area distributor for the book, which is priced at $8.95.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Know your worth and go for the gold! The sky is the limit where your career and finances are concerned. Expand your circle of business and social connections. Romance could lead to a late summer wedding. September brings a crowning professional triumph. Your peers show new respect. Complete an unfinished project by November and the winter holidays will be deliriously happy. Good friends will be there when you need them most.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: poet W.H. Auden, actress Tyne Daly, author Erma Bombeck, infielder Alan Trammell.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work pressures lessen. You are able to accomplish more than you did yesterday. Exercise patience when dealing with a parent-child relationship. Set a good example by curbing your temper.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Economic factors influence your personal plans today. You feel pressed to make a major concession to your mate or partner. Both of you will compromise if you are truly lucky in love.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Determination and a willingness to try new things mark you as someone bound to succeed. You find most everyone receptive to your ideas. With careful handling, a flickering romance could flare up again.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take advantage of any opportunity to better your financial status. Do not treat family members' cares lightly. Show that you are truly concerned about their welfare. Your creative talents find new outlets.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are not the only person with strong feelings and desires. Neglect those close to you and you might lose them. Friends and relatives call and visit. Romance is happier the second time around.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can carry out your plans now without making too large a dent in your budget. Take advantage of a special financial opportunity. Move forward with confidence where romance is concerned.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Look forward to accomplishing a lot at work today. Pay special attention to a newcomer's needs and you will make a good friend. Your instincts are excellent. Trust your intuition in a romantic situation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Plan ahead and success will come more easily. An old strategy needs revising. Welcome new responsibilities. Social events are more satisfying than routine romance. Keep entertainment costs down.

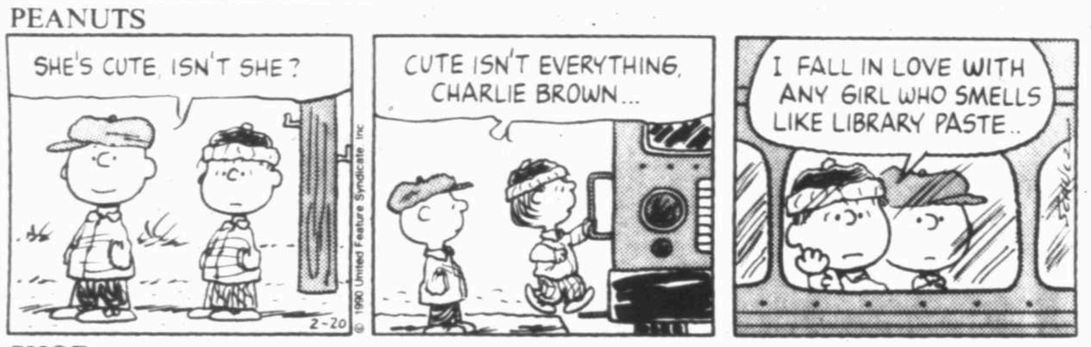

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put your thoughts on paper before presenting them to an authority figure. Double-check all facts and figures. The chances for career advancement are splendid. Play a waiting game.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Spiritual growth is accented. Follow your own brand of practical wisdom when putting your personal affairs in order. You will profit by investing in commercial real estate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your financial situation shows improvement, thanks to both good luck and hard work. Your ambitions take a new turn. You could learn a lot from teaching. Avoid fretting if your evening plans fall through.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Get busy and make some positive changes in your life. Keep your ears and eyes open and your career could get a shot in the arm. Emotions you thought long-forgotten are reawakened.

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

We have only one thing to say to those of our readers who like to bid 'em up. You had better be sure of card-play technique, or have a fat wallet!

North's hand, with its ruffing value and plethora of prime cards, was worth considerably more than its face value of 21 points in high cards. To describe this high-quality heart raise, North started by cue-bidding the suit in which he had the strongest holding. South's jump to five hearts showed a good hand, but no ace. Therefore, North's grand slam try of six clubs not only confirmed the king of that suit but both missing aces as well—no sane person would look for a grand slam knowing an ace was missing. With four sure tricks in the club suit South elected to contract for the grand slam.

The opening lead of the jack of spades dispelled any hope declarer might of had of a successful spade finesse. However, declarer was quick to spot that, because of the high hearts in dummy, he could claim his grand slam as long as trumps were 3-2. It required a dummy reversal and some careful handling.

Declarer won the ace of spades and ruffed a spade in hand high. The ace and king of clubs and ace of diamonds provided three more entries for spade ruffs, all with high trumps. A trump to dummy allowed declarer to draw three rounds, discarding two diamonds from hand. Two winning clubs in the closed hand brought declarer's total to 13—one spade, one diamond, four clubs, three trumps and four spade ruffs!

Barbara Bush feels dog Millie 'jealous' of her visiting son

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — Barbara Bush said the listlessness of her dog Millie is due more to jealousy than illness.

"George is convinced she's sick, but it really is because she's jealous of her son," a big, bounding dog who belongs to one of Bush's sons and frequently visits the White House, Mrs. Bush said Monday during a visit to the village center 1½ miles from the Bush family compound.

"It's more in the mind than the body," she said as local children petted the dog.

Bush

Later, Mrs. Bush chatted with reporters aboard Air Force One on the trip back to Washington.

On the president's suggestion the day before that he might invite Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to their Maine home, Mrs. Bush said that Bush had not told her about it.

But, she added, 'You know me. Anybody he asks — I'll be nice to."

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Britain's Prince Charles got a look at the space shuttle launch site, and made an animal conservation film during a three-hour visit Monday to the Kennedy Space Center.

Charles

Space center Director Forrest McCartney and his wife, Ruth, escorted Charles on a tour of the shuttle launch control center and an assembly building. The group also saw from a distance the launch pad where the shuttle Atlantis is being readied for liftoff Thursday.

Filming took place at a national wildlife refuge which is part of the 88,000 acres that comprise the space center and which is home to eagles and hundreds of other bird species, alligators, wild pigs, deer and other wildlife.

The British Broadcasting Corp. made the film as part of a documentary.

During the three days preceding his visit to the cape, the heir to the British throne was in Vero Beach Fla., where he participated in two polo matches to benefit a wildlife protection organization.

Charles and his party planned to spend the night in Vero Beach, then fly to Charleston, S.C., for a conference on international business beginning Tuesday. He is scheduled to travel to Washington later this week to meet with President Bush and British Embassy officials.

TOKYO (AP) — Voters just couldn't say no to Shintaro Ishihara, whose nationalist views expressed in the book "The Japan That Can Say No" have created a stir in the United States.

The flamboyant and outspoken Ishihara, 57, was elected for the seventh time to represent his metropolitan Tokyo district in the lower house of Parliament. He was backed by the governing Liberal Democratic Party.

Ishihara's 32-year-old son, Nobuteru, also won a lower house seat in Sunday's elections.

The Ishiharas are the first father-and-son team to win seats in the powerful chamber in the same election, Japan's Kyodo News Service reported.

In the book he co-authored with Akio Morita, chairman of Sony Corp., the elder Ishihara wrote that Japan has been too passive in its relations with the United States and argued that Tokyo must stand up and say no to unrealistic U.S. demands on military and trade issues.

The book, a best seller in Japan, also accuses Americans of racial arrogance, which Ishihara says has created an inferiority complex among the Japanese, making them too willing to give in to Washington.

MAMOU, La. (AP) — Jamie Berzas, a Grammy nominee for best traditional folk recording, also is a full-time mechanic in the heart of central Louisiana's Cajun prairie land.

Jamie Berzas and Cajun Tradition, a band formed 11 years ago, were nominated for their 1988 release, A La Veille Facon (In the Old Fashioned Way).

Berzas said the nomination holds special significance for part-time musicians.

"It probably means a once-in-a-lifetime shot at it. It will probably be one of the biggest events in our lives," said Berzas, the lead singer and accordion player.

Berzas works 10-hour days at Berzas' Auto Service in the shadow of the water tower in Mamou, a town of 3,000.

Madeline Berzas, Jamie's wife and the band's drummer, and Mark Young, the lead guitarist and the band's co-founder, also work at the repair shop.

The community of Mamou has rallied with bake sales and benefits for its honorees to help them pay for the trip to Los Angeles on Tuesday. The Grammys will be awarded Wednesday.

Davis

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. is putting up a tough fight in his battle with a recurrence of throat cancer, his publicist said today, but she could not confirm a report that he also fought pneumonia.

The Daily News in New York, quoting an unidentified source, reported today that the 64-year-old Davis developed pneumonia as a complication to his cancer treatment at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

The News said doctors were able to clear up the pneumonia infection last week.

Davis' publicist, Susan Reynolds, said she could not confirm the report, and hospital spokesman Ron Wise said he also had no information about it.

The versatile singer-dancer, whose career has stretched from poverty to the Las Vegas stage and motion pictures, was diagnosed as having throat cancer in September and re-entered the hospital a month ago after suffering a recurrence.

"He has been receiving treatment. He's able to walk around and is in touch with friends and family," Reynolds said.

Davis has been inundated with letters and flowers from fans around the globe — including a letter from Norway addressed simply, "Sammy Davis Jr., USA," Ms. Reynolds said.

DETROIT (AP) — Painter Norman Rockwell's only known nude portrait has been bought for $50,000 by an Oakland County man.

Tom Sullivan said he will meet with the portrait owner, who also is the subject of "The Manapessa," also called "Portrait of Miss Jackie Wells."

Ms. Wells, a former art model, is now a 61-year-old secretary in Detroit who posed for Rockwell in August 1958 while a student at Wayne State University.

Politburo told 'no plush palaces'

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev's new perestroika-without-perks policy is opening up a harsh new world for Politburo members, who now will have to do without their plush country homes, or dachas.

The government has decided that the country's current and former leaders — except Gorbachev and Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov — are no longer entitled to privileges such as the dachas, and they've been ordered to move out.

Valery A. Sidorov, an aide to the chairman of the Soviet legislature's Commission on Privileges, told The Associated Press Monday that the dachas have become a "mass insult" and their occupants will just have to get used to a "normal lifestyle."

Where once the Soviet high and mighty played and sipped vodka, children will roam. Sidorov said the country homes are being turned over to the Soviet Health Ministry for use as rest homes and kindergartens.

As if losing the dachas wasn't enough of a blow, retired members of the Communist Party's long-ruling Politburo will also have to do without the three household workers and black Volga cars the government has been providing them virtually free of charge, Sidorov said.

They also will lose the right to order food from special government stocks.

The changes are part of a general attack on the perks of the Soviet elite that, under public pressure, Gorbachev reluctantly agreed to endorse only last year.

In a country where shortages of housing, food and consumer goods are a major source of discontent, the network of special stores, private airports, sleek black limousines, fancy homes and high-quality medical care for the government and party elite have generated massive public fury.

Maverick Communist Boris N. Yeltsin built an entire parliamentary election campaign on the issue last year, and became wildly popular because of it.

More radical anti-perks movements have swept through Eastern European countries like East Germany and Bulgaria, where ousted Communist leaders face prosecution for abuses of power that included extravagent living.

In the Soviet Union, regional Communist bosses have recently lost jobs after being caught amassing luxury goods not available to the masses.

Most of the Soviet leadership's dachas — some are believed to feature tennis courts and private swimming pools and fountains — are on the outskirts of Moscow and shrouded in secrecy.

They are surrounded by fences and guards and traffic police stop anyone venturing close to the secluded "dacha rows."

In a reflection of the secrecy, Sidorov said in a telephone interview he did not know how many dachas are affected, and he declined to provide a complete list of who would have to move out.

He said, however, that his boss, privileges commission chairman Yevgeny M. Primakov, and Politburo member Alexander N. Yakovlev are the only people on the current 19-person Politburo who do not have government dachas.

Primakov's record, however, is not untarnished. A newspaper reported Saturday that a special plane arranged for him at one of Moscow's VIPs-only airports held up dozens of other flights at other airports so the sky could be kept clear for security.

Several former Politburo members — many of them in their 90s — are believed to live in fancy dachas, including holdovers from the Leonid I. Brezhnev era such as Geidar Aliev, Boris Ponomarev and Peter Shelest.

Sidorov said many of the former Politburo members, especially Ponomarev, are not giving up their perks without a fight. He said Ponomarev had sent a protest letter to the Commission on Privileges.

No deadline for the evictions was set, Sidorov said.

Former residents of the dachas will be offered comparatively meager luxuries in return for moving out. They will be allowed to rent — at their own expense — country homes run by government agencies for a few days a month as well as a government car from a fleet for up to 20 hours a month, Sidorov said.

If they want their own dachas, he said, they will have to build them themselves.

Crackdown on protests urged; Lithuanians press independence

MOSCOW (AP) — The Supreme Soviet legislature today urged a crackdown on illegal demonstrations planned for Sunday and said authorities should exercise tight control over permitted rallies, the official Tass news agency reported.

The legislators said they feared extremists and criminals will exploit the demonstrations to destabilize the Soviet Union's political situation.

The rallies are being organized by political groups in Moscow, Leningrad and other major cities "to express their attitude to changes taking place in the country," Tass said.

The resolution, introduced by Deputy Nikolai Pivovarov, urged authorities to curb unsanctioned rallies and force legal demonstrations to be held in specifically assigned places.

On Monday, Lithuania's Communist Party urged the Kremlin to begin talks on granting independence to the republic, Tass reported.

The committee adopted a statement saying it "views as its chief objective the restoration of an independent Lithuanian state and the ensuring of its international recognition," the official news agency said.

The Lithuanian Communist Party declared itself independent from the Soviet party on Dec. 20, creating the first major crack in the monolithic party that has ruled the Soviet Union since the 1917 Bolshevik revolution.

The Lithuanian statement said restoration of a Lithuanian state must be achieved through "parliamentary constitutional means," Tass said.

"Official negotiations between the Soviet Union and Lithuania should begin soon with the aim of establishing stable international relations and economic cooperation between the U.S.S.R. and Lithuania," the news agency quoted the statement as saying.

Lithuania, a Baltic republic with a population of 3.4 million, was forcibly annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940 along with the other Baltic republics of Latvia and Estonia.

Romanian leadership reacting to protests

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Interim President Ion Iliescu said Monday the army and police should have more power to curb protests because violent anti-government demonstrations could lead to anarchy and a new dictatorship.

More than 300 people staged a rally Monday evening, but this one was well away from government headquarters — Sunday's target — after 12 armored personnel carriers and hundreds of soldiers blocked access.

One soldier, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said that unlike Sunday, when the army was "caught unprepared by the angry demonstrators," soldiers now had "very specific orders to let no one near the building."

About 5,000 miners rallied on Monday in support of the government, angrily demanding an end to protests that culminated Sunday when about 500 people ransacked government headquarters, smashing windows and doors with rocks and iron carpet rods.

Some miners attacked bystanders with sticks. At least four onlookers were injured, including a gray-haired man rescued from the miners.

Iliescu said the 21-member Executive Bureau of the ruling Provisional Council of National Unity decided to propose a law "increasing the power of those organizations that must maintain law and order and defend institutions and citizens against violent acts."

He warned that violence unleashed by political passions could throw the country into the kind of anarchy that has torn Lebanon asunder.

"If the army and police don't have the legal ability to maintain order, people will feel it necessary to defend themselves — we could become like Lebanon, and anarchy could lead us to total chaos," he said in an address read on state television.

"We appeal for civic responsibility. Anarchy can only lead to a new dictatorship."

Iliescu, who did not outline the proposed powers sought for the army and police, spoke amid reports of pro-leadership demonstrations nationwide.

Strong earthquake rocks Tokyo's capital district

TOKYO (AP) — Buildings in downtown Tokyo swayed for more than a minute Tuesday as a strong earthquake rocked the capital area. There were no immediate reports of serious injuries or damage.

The earthquake struck at 3:53 p.m. and sent office workers leaping from their desks. Trains on two high-speed "bullet" train lines were briefly halted, the Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) reported.

The Central Meteorological Agency said the quake measured a preliminary 6.6 on the Richter scale and was centered off the Izu peninsula southwest of Tokyo, an area of high seismic activity. Its epicenter was 12 miles below the ocean bed, it said.

An earthquake registering 6 on the Richter scale can cause serious damage in populated areas. A quake measuring 7 is considered major and capable of widespread damage.

Japan is hit frequently by earthquakes, and many buildings in the Tokyo area are designed to withstand strong temblors.

The earthquake registered 4 on the Japanese scale of 7 in Tokyo, Yokohama and Tateyama, west of the capital, meteorological officials said.

A quake registering 4 on the Japanese scale is strong enough to topple such objects as vases. The Japanese scale measures ground motion at particular locations.

Two Nepalese soldiers killed, six others wounded by shell fire

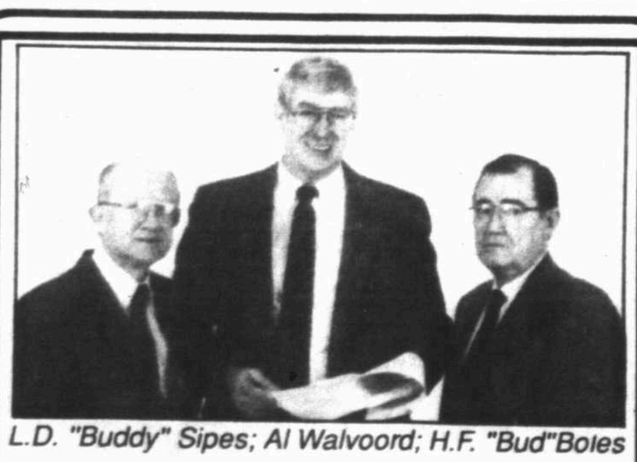

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Two Nepalese soldiers of the United Nations peacekeeping force were killed and six others wounded when a shell hit their position in south Lebanon, a U.N. spokesman said today.

The Nepalese position in the village of Byout Assiyad was hit directly by a 120mm mortar round at midday Monday, said Timur Goksel, spokesman for the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon.

"Fifteen other mortar rounds fired from an Israeli-controlled area inside the security zone fell near the position," Goksel said.

Israel carved out the "security zone" in June 1985 after it withdrew the bulk of its occupation army from Lebanon, ending a three-year invasion.

Among the victims was a warrant officer who arrived in Lebanon on Feb. 12, said Goksel, adding that the other fatality and the six casualties had been due to leave the country.

Midland College's Fred Campbell wrestles with Tony Martin of Odessa College for a rebound Monday night.

Wranglers wrest win from Chaps

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland College head basketball coach Reggie Franklin didn't hang his head after Monday night's 79-72 loss to Odessa College. He barely even cracked a frown for that matter.

It was pride that must've forced him to keep his head held relatively high, despite the fact that, with the loss, his Chaparrals had abandoned any hope of progressing to post-season tournament play.

Following the Chaps' loss to the visiting Wranglers, Franklin did concede that his 1989-90 MC team would be staying home when Region V tournament time comes, March 8-10, in Snyder.

"Now you can say it's over," Franklin begrudged. "It's over."

The Chaps fell to 6-7 in Western Junior College Athletic Conference play, 16-12 overall, with three games left.

Meanwhile, New Mexico Junior College defeated Clarendon College, 108-86, to virtually lock up the fourth and final spot in the tournament. Howard College and South Plains, winners along with OC and NMJC, are also virtual shoe-ins for the trip to Snyder.

Franklin said he was "frustrated, disappointed, lost" following Monday's downfall. Until Monday, the third-year MC head coach had never found himself without a chance at the regional tournament.

It is, as a matter of fact, the first time since the 1983-84 season and only the second time since 1978 that the Chaps will have failed to advance to regional play.

Unless a complete and total breakdown occurs, Midland should finish the conference season with a 9-7 record by virtue of an easy closing slate against conference doormats Clarendon (two games) and Frank Phillips.

Franklin said his team "shot ourselves" out of Monday night's game in the first half when the Chaps hit on just 11-of-31 attempts from the field for 35 percent.

Trailing 42-33 at the beginning of the second half, the Chaps did make an impressive run to draw to within three with 10 minutes remaining in the game.

The Chaps took their first lead of the contest, 56-55, with 8½ minutes left, following Kerwin Harris' two free throws.

From that point, the Chaps and Wranglers traded leads eight times until OC took a 65-64 advantage with 4:35 left. The Wranglers then went on a 14-8 run to close out the game at 79-72.

With just over a minute remaining, many of the estimated 1,800 fans began vacating Chap Center as OC jumped to a 10 point, 77-67, lead.

4-5A playoff puts 'Dogs' year on line

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

BIG SPRING — Matters could not be any simpler for Midland High and San Angelo as they meet in a District 4-5A boys basketball playoff at 7:30 tonight in the Big Spring High School gymnasium.

The winner walks away with a berth in the state Class 5A playoffs while the loser hangs up the gym shoes and puts the wraps on the 1989-90 season.

Despite losing to San Angelo twice in district play this season (87-78 Jan. 16 at the Chaparral Center and 78-69 Feb. 9 in San Angelo) MHS is tied with the Bobcats for the second 4-5A playoff seed with 9-3 loop records, two games behind district champion Abilene High.

And if all this sounds just a little bit familiar, it might be because these two teams battled under nearly the exact same circumstances a year ago. After finished the district slate deadlocked at 7-5 each and splitting wins last season, the Bulldogs squeaked past the 'Cats 72-71 in overtime to win the playoff spot behind — you guessed it — Abilene High.

MHS went on to fall to Amarillo Tascosa in bi-district last year, 79-69.

This season, while Abilene will face District 3-5A runner-up Amarillo High in bi-district action at 8 p.m. Friday at Levelland High School in Levelland, the Bulldog-San Angelo winner will play 3-5A champ Plainview either Thursday, Friday or Saturday.

However, for the 'Dogs to have a chance at Plainview, they must stop a recent trend that has not been pretty for MHS fans. The Bulldogs have lost two of their last three games, sandwiching an 83-62 win over Odessa High between losses to San Angelo Feb. 9 and Abilene last Friday.

As if that were not enough, MHS will be a facing a hot Bobcat team that scored 98 points in its regular season finale over Odessa Permian. The last time the 'Dogs and 'Cats went round and round, San Angelo had three players score in double figures and two more with nine points each.

Ty Brown, a 6-6 senior post, is second among 4-5A's scoring leaders and paced the Bobcats with 20 points in their win over MHS 11 days ago. Corey Grays, a 6-5 junior forward, added 18 points and guard Joe Lavender burned the 'Dogs for 17.

Not to be outdone, 6-0 Bulldog post Rodrick Hickey skinned the 'Cats for 24 points while Scott Melzer scored 17 and Keith Gilbreath 13 before fouling out.

Melzer leads the team in season scoring average with 16 points a game, and Hickey tosses in an average of 14.5. MHS' Michael Wright has also been averaging in double digits, with a 14.4-point-per-game showing.

Wright could also be the deciding factor in tonight's affair. He has scored 20 or more points in nine games this season, but has fallen off the pace of late. In MHS' last four outings Wright has for the most part been neutralized.

Contrasting his 21 points against OHS a week ago, Wright has scored four (Abilene Cooper), three (San Angelo) and three (Abilene High) points in the past fortnight.

4-5A GIRLS: The bi-district round and District 3-5A were not kind at all to the 4-5A girls this past weekend, with Amarillo Tascosa dropping 4-5A champion San Angelo 60-53, and sixth-ranked Lubbock Monterey downing Odessa Permian 61-47.

Arbitration eligibility stalls baseball talks

NEW YORK (AP) — Once again, baseball's labor impasse hinges on the issue of salary arbitration, specifically who is eligible.

That became even clearer on Monday when, after months of debate about revenue sharing and pay-for-performance formulas, owners dropped their last proposal — a 75 percent cap on salary increases won in arbitration.

So today, with the spring-training lockout in its sixth day, the sides will confront the same issue that prompted players to call a two-day strike in 1985.

"We're back to what we knew was a contentious area. We weren't able to finesse it, to skirt it another way," Chuck O'Connor, management's chief negotiator, said after a two-hour meeting.

Currently, players need three years in the major leagues to be eligible for arbitration. The union wants to make the system available after two years, as was the case before the agreement that ended the 1985 strike.

Head Hog expects tough game from Texas A&M

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson says fans at Wednesday's contest with Texas A&M should expect a very different game from Saturday's 77-46 Razorback victory over Southern Methodist.

"A&M won't just hold the ball like SMU," Richardson said Monday. "SMU played right into our hands with their style of play. You have to go after an attacking defense by attacking it offensively."

And the Aggies have the manpower to mount such an attack, the Razorback coach said, particularly in the person of guard Tony Milton, who scored 26 points in A&M's 79-73 loss to Texas on Sunday. Milton got 16 against Arkansas earlier this season.

"Milton can give you trouble because he can penetrate so well," Richardson said. "Penetrating guards give us the most trouble."

The game at Fayetteville matches a 21-4 Arkansas team that's ranked 13th in the nation and sits atop the Southwest Conference with a 12-2 league record. The Aggies are 12-14 overall, 5-7 in the SWC.

But Richardson warned that, despite Arkansas' 100-84 win over A&M on its home court Jan. 20, the Aggies can be dangerous.

SWC Basketball

This is the same A&M team that beat Connecticut," Richardson said, and Connecticut, ranked No. 6 in the nation, is now tied for the Big East lead.

The Aggies had a chance to beat Texas on Sunday, Richardson said, until David Harris fouled out.

According to Richardson, Arkansas will maintain its normal game plan.

"We'll just play our game plan and play 40 minutes of hell on defense," he said. "We'll probably start the same lineup" of Todd Day, Lee Mayberry, Oliver Miller, Mario Credit and either Arlyn Bowers or Lenzie Howell.

With 906 career points in two seasons, Day has scored more than any previous sophomore in Arkansas history, and leads the Razorbacks this season with a 19.2 per-game average.

Likely starters for Texas A&M are Milton, Freddie Ricks, David Harris, Darren Rhea and either Lynn Suber — who scored 26 points against Arkansas in January — Brooks Thompson or Ray Little.

Douglas settling into title

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Heavyweight champion James "Buster" Douglas is savoring the good life at a posh Strip resort and weighing offers to defend the title he won in a stunning upset of Mike Tyson.

He took time out from the VIP treatment Monday to reaffirm his proposal to meet challenger Evander Holyfield in September before giving Tyson a rematch in February 1991. He said he'd like to fight in Las Vegas, where he had his first major bout, but will talk with billionaire Donald Trump about an Atlantic City meeting.

Douglas and his manager, John Johnson, were flown to this gaming capital Sunday by Steve Wynn, who hopes to convince the champion to hold his next bout at Wynn's Mirage Hotel.

Douglas and Johnson met the media at the posh resort Monday, taking a shot at Tyson and promoter Don King, and challenging Holyfield to a multimillion-dollar bout.

Johnson said he and Douglas hold all the cards.

"What's going to happen in the heavyweight division is what we want done," Johnson said. As for Holyfield, "If you want the fight, let's get it done."

Holyfield had counted on a major payday in a summer meeting with Tyson in Atlantic City, but Douglas derailed those plans with a stunning 10th-round knockout of Tyson at Tokyo on Feb. 10.

Johnson and Douglas admitted to still smarting over their treatment by the WBA and WBC, the sanctioning organizations which initially refused to recognize the Columbus, Ohio fighter as the champion. Douglas said the federations "were pulled by strings."

Johnson and Douglas insisted that King would have no role in a rematch, despite King's contention that he has ties to the new champ.

"He's out. He wouldn't even recognize James Douglas. If he wants to sue sue," Johnson said. "No court in the land would say that Don King acted in James Douglas' best interest."

"We try to be forgiving, but we don't forget," Johnson said.

Douglas took some verbal jabs at Tyson, who complained he wasn't up for the fight and that it should have been his because of a long count accorded Douglas when he was knocked down by Tyson in the eighth round.

He called Tyson's complaints "bogus."

"If he's going to be a champ, be a champ in defeat as well," Douglas said. "He took off his trunks and put on a diaper. I beat him and I'll personally beat him up the next time."

Later Douglas was more charitable, calling Tyson "a true fighter" with a "championship heart."

Johnson said Douglas had been offered a record-breaking purse that would top $21 million. He declined to identify the bidder.

He praised the treatment by Wynn, saying "for the first time in our lives we're being treated great."

Johnson said Wynn had made "a very attractive offer," but declined to give numbers. He said he and

Missouri, Kansas play musical chairs

Associated Press

Missouri and Kansas continue to swap the No. 1 ranking in the nation and the No. 1 position in the Big Eight standings.

The Tigers returned to the top spot in The Associated Press college basketball poll on Monday following a week in which they again beat the Jayhawks and knocked them out of the No. 1 ranking.

Missouri, 24-2 overall and 10-1 in the Big Eight, was second in the nation last week. Then the Tigers beat Kansas and Oklahoma and garnered 61½ first-place votes and 1,596½ points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

The Jayhawks, with both losses this season coming against Missouri, ended their second two-week run as No. 1 with one-half vote for first place and 1,510½ points.

Missouri and Kansas both have games at Oklahoma this week. The Sooners, ranked 10th this week, have a 43-game homecourt winning streak.

Duke (22-4) beat Stetson, East Carolina and Wake Forest last week and moved from sixth to third with 1,384 points, one more than UNLV (22-4), which also jumped three spots. The Runnin' Rebels beat two ranked teams in their three victories last week — New Mexico State and Arizona.

Georgetown (20-3) received one first-place and fell two places to fifth after a loss to Providence. La Salle (22-1) received the other first-place vote and was 14th.

Connecticut (22-4) followed the Hoyas in sixth with 1,127 points and Michigan (19-5) was seventh with 1,088 points.

Georgia Tech (19-4) was eighth with 1,042 points, 19 more than Purdue (18-4) and 44 more than Oklahoma (19-4), which rounded out the Top Ten.

College Poll

The Top Ten teams are drawn from just five conferences. The Big Eight has the top two teams and Oklahoma, the Atlantic Coast Conference offers Duke and Georgia Tech, the Big East has Georgetown and Connecticut and the Big Ten has Michigan and Purdue. UNLV plays in the Big West.

Syracuse, fourth last week, tumbled to 11th after losses to Villanova and Notre Dame. The Orangemen were followed by Louisiana State, Arkansas, La Salle, Michigan State, Louisville, Oregon State, Minnesota, and Illinois and Xavier, Ohio, which tied for 19th.

Arizona was 21st, followed by Loyola Marymount, Clemson, New Mexico State and Indiana.

Clemson (20-5) makes its first appearance in the rankings since the final poll of the 1986-87 season. The Tigers increased their winning streak to five last week with victories over North Carolina State and Furman.

Indiana (16-6) returned to the rankings after a one-week absence with a 118-71 rout of Iowa.

UCLA (16-7), 23rd last week, dropped from the rankings after home losses to California and Stanford, the first victories for those schools at Pauley Pavilion in 25 seasons of trying. St. John's (20-7), 24th last week, also dropped out after being taken into overtime by Seton Hall and losing to Providence.

TOP 25 ROUNDUP

Boilermakers stifle Indiana

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Bob Knight is the kind of coach who appreciates good defense, eve it wrecks his team.

Knight's Indiana Hoosiers, toting a No. 25 national ranking and hopes of climbing back into the Big Ten title chase, faced 40 minutes of textbook defense Monday night, courtesy of No. 9 Purdue.

The Boilermakers won the game 72-49 to remain one game ahead of Michigan State in the Big Ten. Purdue is 19-4 and 11-2, Indiana 16-7 and 6-7.

"They played extremely well," Knight said. "Their defense dominated our offense the vast majority of the time."

Indiana was limited to 39 percent shooting in losing both ends of the series with Purdue for the first time in five seasons. It was Indiana's largest margin of defeat in the series since 1969.

In the other game Monday night involving a ranked team, No. 6 Connecticut needed an overtime to subdue Providence 75-72.

Purdue's Stephen Scheffler, who leads the nation with a 73 percent field-goal percentage, hit six of seven shots in scoring 18 points and also had eight rebounds and four assists, all in just 28 minutes.

"Scheffler is the most valuable player in the Big Ten," Knight said. "He moves, sets screens and takes good shots. It's hard to be excited about a guy who's beating your brains out, but he's really, really good."

"I think his concentration has been a lot better as far as playing when he's tired," Purdue coach Gene Keady said. "He had a lot of trouble with endurance in January.

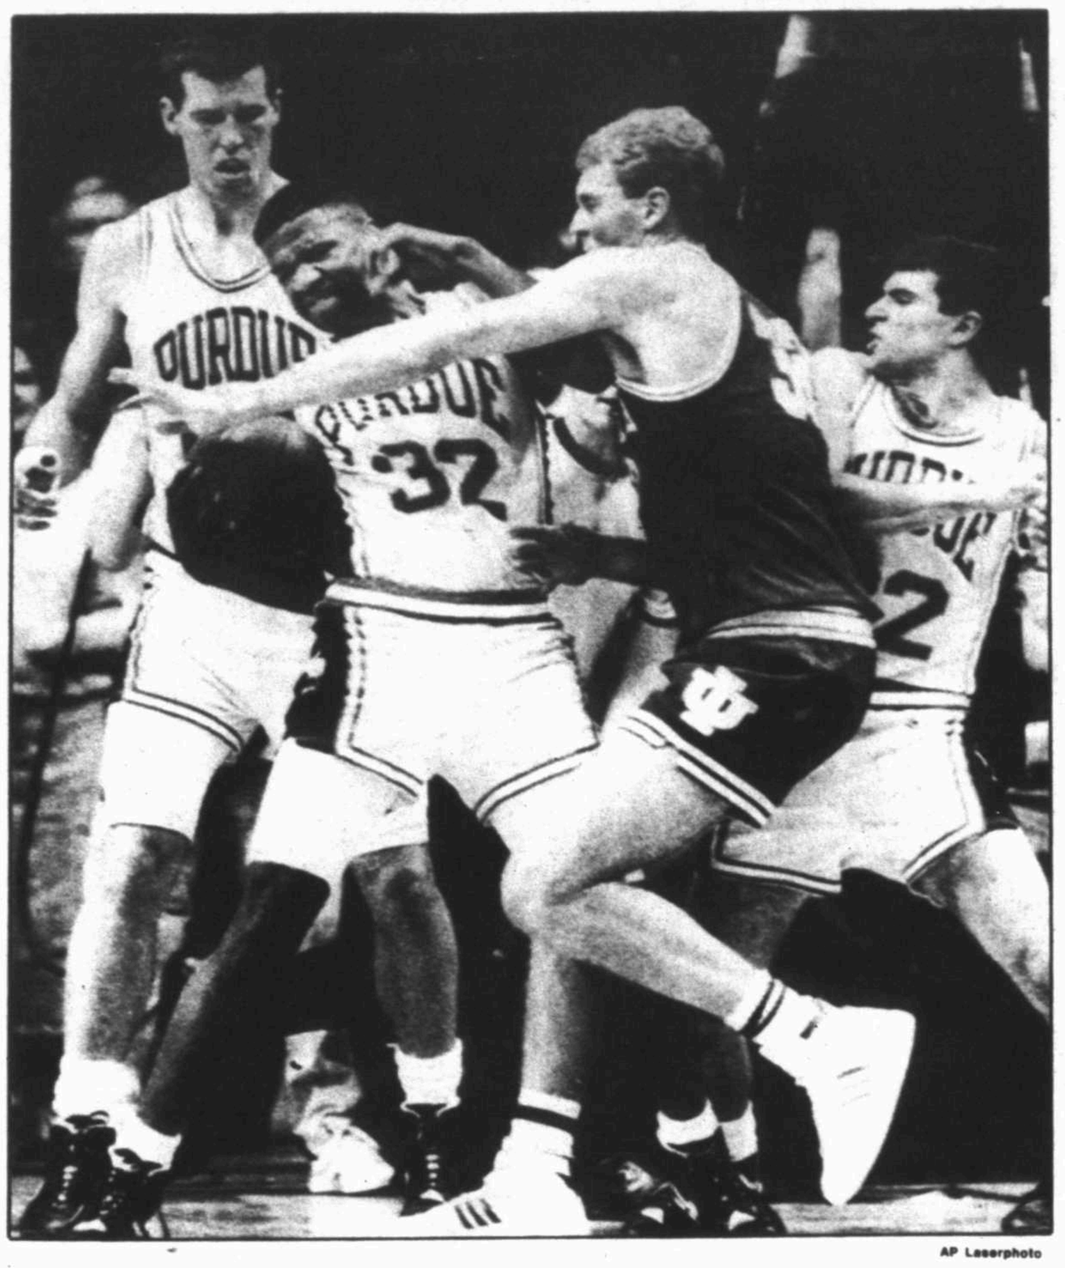

"He's kind of seeing the end of the season as a senior," Keady said, "and maybe as an underclassmen you can't see the light in the tunnel, but he knows it's there. I think our older guys have been through it.

"I think that was the biggest difference today. We had older kids and they had younger kids. It makes a lot of difference when you have seniors."

Scheffler did most of his damage in the second half when Purdue broke the game open after leading at halftime.

Keady said he reminded his team at the break that Indiana was capable of duplicating Purdue's feat in the first game, when the Boilermakers overcame a 16-point defeicit to beat Indiana 81-79 in overtime.

"We told them if we let them get it into single digits and they get their heads up, we'd be in trouble," Keady said. "We needed to dominate the first five minutes of the second half, and we did."

Purdue's Jimmy Oliver (32) battles Indiana's Eric Anderson for the ball Monday night.

No. 6 Connecticut 75, Providence 72

At Storrs, Conn., Nadav Henefeld, a former Israeli soldier, hit a 3-pointer with two seconds left in overtime to keep the Huskies (23-4, 10-3) at the top of the Big East standings. Providence (14-9, 7-7) "didn't lose," Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun said. "They got beat by a great player — Dove (Nadav)."

Henefeld, a 6-foot-7, 21-year-old freshman, made up for a bad shooting night by contributing four steals and a team-leading nine rebounds. He scored but 10 points, hitting only one of five 3-pointers before the game winner, and missing two free throws late in regulation.

"Knowing him, he wanted to make up for the missed foul shots," Calhoun said. "It wasn't shocking to me that he wanted the ball."

Eric Murdock, who forced the overtime with a jumper that tied it 63-63 with four seconds left, scored all nine of Providence's overtime points, including a 3-pointer with 50 seconds left to tie it 72-72.

With two seconds left on the 45-second clock, Tate George found Henefeld at the top of the key for an open jump shot that bounced off the rim, touched the backboard and dropped through.

The victory moved the Huskies ahead of Georgetown (9-3) for first place in the Big East and tied a school record for victories in a season. UConn won 23 games in 1953-54 and 1964-65.

Chris Smith led the Huskies with 17 points, including five in overtime.

Duncanville girls near consecutive win record

RICHARDSON (AP) — Duncanville's Pantherettes are only a game away from a girls' high school state record. Standing in the way is the last team to beat them three years ago.

Duncanville on Tuesday night goes for its 93rd consecutive victory, which would establish a girls' state record.

Waco Midway and Duncanville are tied at 92 for the current state record after Duncanville defeated Richardson Bernker 73-39 Thursday night.

Ironically, the Lady Pantherettes will be playing in the Richardson Bernker gymnasium again on Tuesday night, in a high school playoff game against North Mesquite, which in 1987 was the last team to beat Duncanville.

The national record for girls' consecutive victories is held by Baskin, La., at 218 consecutive victories between 1947 and 1953.

North Mesquite coach Donna Capps said that although her team has lost 10 games she feels the Pantherettes (32-0) can be taken.

"Everybody can have a cold night," she said. "Duncanville has talent, depth and my respect. But we'll play our best and see what happens."

Duncanville coach Sandra Meadows said the record "is special to me because it's so special to so many people in Duncanville."

Duncanville has won two consecutive Class 5A titles.

No brawl in third Atlanta-Gilmer game

LONGVIEW (AP) — Any fan can tell you there wasn't any fights this time. They saw it with their own eyes.

Fans and players alike apparently left their tempers at the door as the Gilmer and Atlanta high school basketball teams met for a third time. Atlanta won 86-73.

The first time the teams met, in Longview, the basketball game ended in a stands-clearing brawl. School officials ordered the stands stay empty for the second game, in Atlanta, and only players and coaches were allowed to attend. It was immediately dubbed by the local newspaper "the best game nobody saw."

But fans packed into Longview High School's Lobo Coliseum for Monday night's game. Longview is about 185 miles east of Dallas.

"It made a big difference (having our fans there)," said Atlanta coach Eddie Johnson after his team's first victory in three attempts against Gilmer.

"We responded well to the crowd. I told the kids after the emotional overtime loss in the lock-out game that something good is going to come out of this," he said.

Douglas planned to meet this week with officials at Caesars Palace and the Las Vegas Hilton, then go to Los Angeles on Wednesday for a TV appearance and meetings with filmmakers interested in the champion's life story.

"It will be beyond Rocky," Johnson said.

Johnson said he would meet with Trump within a week, although he and Douglas said they favored Las Vegas as a fight site.

"I fought my first major fight in Las Vegas," Douglas said. "I feel very comfortable here. Vegas is real; Atlantic City is just a carbon copy."

Wynn entered the battle to hold the next title fight over the weekend by flying to Columbus to meet with Douglas and Johnson. He flew them back to Las Vegas Sunday night aboard a private jet belonging to Golden Nugget Corp., the parent corporation for the Mirage and Wynn's Golden Nugget hotel.

This marks the second time Wynn has gone head-to-head with Trump over hosting a fight. Trump was thought to have had the Sugar Ray Leonard-Roberto Duran fight locked up for Atlantic City until Wynn flew to Baltimore and sold Leonard's camp on fighting in Las Vegas last Dec. 7.

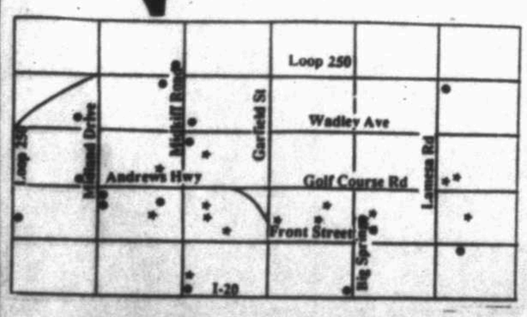

King said over the weekend he would go to court, if necessary, to enforce his contract with Douglas.

"I will be involved because I am his promoter," King said. "I'll be involved because I have a contractual commitment with him. But more than that, I have five years of service with him."

NBA ROUNDUP

Jazz, technicals down Sixers

Associated Press

The Philadelphia 76ers' killer road trip is taking a turn for the worse.

The 76ers, playing Portland, Utah, Golden State, the Los Angeles Lakers and Phoenix in a span of seven days, committed eight technical fouls Monday en route to a 115-102 loss to the Jazz.

"We were struggling a bit offensively, and when you add on the technicals, that was enough," said Charles Barkley, who had 28 points and 10 rebounds for the 76ers. "You have to get a few breaks to win on the road against a team as good as these guys."

"This is a tough road trip against the best teams in the West," said Coach Jim Lynam, who was ejected after being whistled for his second technical late in the game. "We've got to get ready for the next one."

Philadelphia is 1-1 on the road trip, after beating Portland 110-109 on Sunday.

"We had the same level of emotion as last night," said Rick Mahorn, who also had a technical foul. "We just couldn't get our shots to fall."

Karl Malone scored 34 points and John Stockton had 21 points and 14 assists for the Jazz, who won their 16th consecutive home game.

With Utah leading 76-72 going into the fourth quarter, Darrell Griffith hit a 3-pointer to start a 13-2 run that gave the Jazz an 89-74 advantage. The 76ers got no closer than 10 points after that.

Reserve center Eric Leckner had six points during the decisive run, and Thurl Bailey scored four on the way to a 21-point night.

"This was by far the best game we've played in a while," Malone said. "We played good, solid team defense against a good team."

The 76ers, who had won 15 of 17 games before Monday night, led 60-58 with 7:51 left in the third quarter. But Utah outscored the 76ers 18-12 to finish the period leading by four, and didn't trail in the fourth quarter.

Derek Smith, Barkley and Bob Thornton also had one technical apiece, as did Utah coach Jerry Sloan and Blue Edwards of the Jazz. The 76ers had two illegal defense technicals and Utah one.

Sloan said he was worried when Philadelphia jumped to a 14-6 lead.

"I thought we were a little soft defensively and they got off to a nice lead," Sloan said. "I thought we might be in trouble, but we were able to execute and things went well after that."

Pistons 94, Heat 85

Detroit won its 12th consecutive game, matching Philadelphia for the longest winning streak in the NBA this season, after holding Miami to 12 points in the second quarter.

Bulls 107, Rockets 102

Michael Jordan scored 30 points and Chicago survived a 27-4 Houston spurt in the second half.

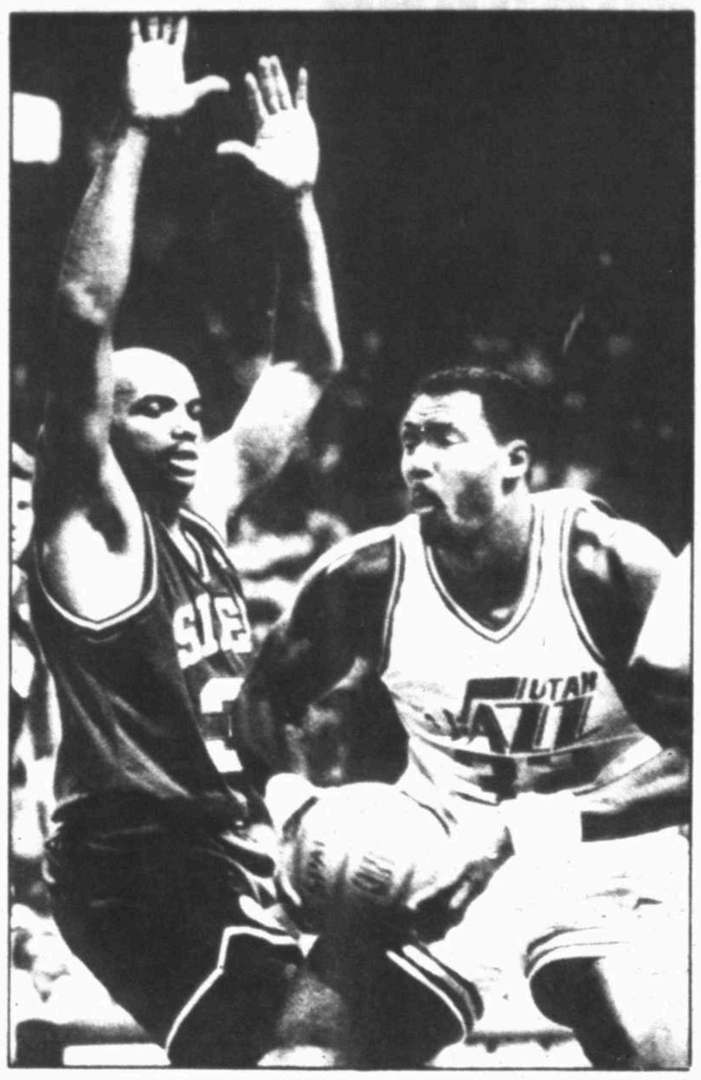

The Rockets had a chance to tie the score with a 3-point field goal with 14 seconds left, but Buck Johnson's shot went off the rim. Scottie Pippen then was fouled with eight seconds left and hit two free throws, ensuring the Bulls' third consecutive victory.

Akeem Oljauwon had 32 points, 17 rebounds and nine blocked shots, and Mitchell Wiggins scored 24 points for the Rockets, who trailed 51-31 in the first half and 60-44 early in the third quarter before coming back to take a 71-64 lead.

Nuggets 114, Warriors 109

Denver beat Golden State for the 14th consecutive time at McNichols Arena as 6-foot-3 guard Fat Lever had season highs of 29 points and 20 rebounds and Alex English scored 28 points.

The Warriors trailed 108-107 with 49 seconds to play after a three-point play by Mitch Richmond, who led Golden State with 24 points.

Mavericks 96, Cavaliers 87

Dallas won its fifth straight game, holding Cleveland's Mark Price without a 3-pointer for the first time in his last 35 games. Price's streak was the second-longest in NBA history, behind Michael Adams' 79. Price misfired on seven attempts Monday.

Kings 99, Clippers 97

Sacramento won for only the third time in 24 road games as Danny Ainge had 29 points and 13 assists at Los Angeles.

Antoine Carr hit a go-ahead layup before blocking a potential game-tying shot by Charles Smith as time ran out, preserving the win for the Kings.

Chap netters head for UTSA

From Staff Reports

Midland College sends its top-ranked tennis teams to San Antonio Friday and Saturday for the University of Texas-San Antonio Invitational, where the Chaparrals will be the only community college entered in either men's or women's competition.

"We're leaving four of our top people behind, since they played at the Rolex ITCA National Small College Indoor Tournaments in Minneapolis two weeks ago," said MC coach Joe Williams. "They need to catch up on their academics after being gone for a week, and it also allows a number of our other players to get some good tournament action."

MC is ranked first in both men's and women's community college polls conducted by Volvo ITCA. Last month at the ITCA National Community College Indoor Tournament at Corpus Christi, the Chaps captured all four individual tournament titles.

Then they took two women's titles at the Rolex Small College Indoor Championships. Sharla Barone, Janneke Garos, Amine Kadiri and Mohamed Ridaoui will remain behind this week.

This tournament will have six singles and three doubles flights. Competing in the men's divison will be UTSA, Southwest Texas State, Baylor, Pan American, Abilene Christian, Sam Houston State and MC. The women's tournament includes UTSA, SWTSU, Tulsa, Lamar, Pan American, ACU, Baylor, and MC.

The men's singles line-up for the Chaps probably will be in this order: Jesper Witt, Bernt Gade, Pepe Garcia, James Homan, Luke Morrow, and either Jarod White or Richard Patte. The doubles teams will be Witt-Gade, Garcia-Homan, and White-Patte.

MC will play only five women in singles. Allison Bradford will play number one, followed by Maria Vago, Missy O'Neill, Mara Lencina, and Maria Jimenez. Bradford and Vago will play number one doubles, with Lencina and Jimenez playing number two.

Spring conference action for Midland begins Feb. 28 when the men host Odessa College at 2 p.m. on the MC courts.

Midland Christian girls land in state tourney

From Staff Reports

Midland Christian's girls basketball earned a berth in the TAPS Class A state tournament this week by claiming two wins last weekend at the North Region II tournament in Dallas.

The Lady Mustangs defeated Dallas Lake Hills Academy in their first game, 42-21. Christy Boles led Midland Christian with 10 points in the game, which saw the Lady Mustangs on top 9-5 after one quarter and ahead 23-7 at half time.

Midland Christian scored 14 more points in the third quarter and held Lake Hill to six third-period points to effectively put the game away.

In it second win, Midland Christian topped Greenville Christian 52-30, with Boles again leading the team in scoring, this time with 19 points. Tracy Burgess chipped in 11 points for the Lady 'Stangs.

Midland Christian, 22-10 for the season, now heads into the TAPS final four tournament at Waco this weekend, where their first opponent was undetermined.

NOTES: Boles and Kim Jackson were both named to the Class A first team all-state squad, announced this week. Also, hauling in all-district honors for Midland Christian were Boles, Jackson and Jill Fuller on the first team, and Tracy Burgess and Jenette Morales on second team.

Molitor joins $3 million club

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Milwaukee Brewers infielder Paul Molitor became baseball's ninth player to receive an average annual salary of $3 million when he accepted a three-year, $9.1 million contract.

Molitor signed the contract Monday, agreeing not to pursue free agency. He is among players who, under arbitrator rulings in baseball's collusion cases, could have had a second-look opportunity to talk with other teams.

The cases involve free agents who accused owners of colluding to restrict their salary offers.

The Molitor contract "actually does a couple of things" for the Brewers, General Manager Harry Dalton said. "It takes him out of arbitration for a couple of years and he gives up his free-look chance, pending the collusion ruling."

A ruling on a third collusion case, this involving those eligible for free agency after the 1987 season, is expected within two months. Earlier rulings in favor of players dealt with free agents from 1985 and 1986.

"If we had signed him for one year and he was given a free look, he could be a free agent," Dalton said. "That was important to us. It keeps the continuity on the club."

Molitor's contract is baseball's seventh-highest in annual average value. It gives Molitor a $1 million signing bonus and annual base salaries of $2.1 million in 1990, $2.9 million in 1991 and $3.1 million in 1992. There are also bonus clauses.

Molitor will receive half of his signing bonus immediately and the other $500,000 on Feb. 15, 1991 at 10¼ percent interest.

Molitor, 33, had filed a salary arbitration request of $3.25 million and the Brewers countered with $2.6 million.

He batted .315 last season, when he had a base salary of $1.4 million that, with incentives, paid him $1.75 million.

The settlement with Molitor means Dalton still has yet to have a salary negotiation go to arbitration. Molitor's hearing had been scheduled today.

Dalton's streak appeared in jeopardy when 14 Brewers, the most of any team in the majors, became eligible for arbitration this year.

"I thought certainly two or three" would go to a hearing, Dalton said, adding he couldn't explain how he avoided it.

"There is nothing I can isolate. You'd have to ask the players. It's not something I'm trying to perpetuate. My job is to sign the best club that I can.

"It's a process that is necessary each year. We still have some others to sign, but those are players with less experience. We are glad the major people have been taken care of."

Robin Yount, who the club said agreed to terms on a three-year contract in December, is still working out details.

Yount filed for arbitration as a formality when details of his contract, reported to be worth $3.2 million per season, hadn't been completed by arbitration filing deadline.

Dalton has said Yount's contract does not have to be filed until April. Yount's contract is handled by team owner Bud Selig.

The Brewers still have 14 players unsigned.

They are pitchers Don August, Tony Fossas, Mark Knudson, Angel Miranda, Steve Monson, Jaime Navarro and Al Sadler, catcher Charlie O'Brien, infielders Billy Bates, George Canale, Gary Sheffield and Bill Spiers, and outfielders Darryl Hamilton and Greg Vaughn.

Also settling Monday was outfielder Jim Eisenreich of Kansas City, who agreed to a one-year contract for $475,000, a raise of $355,000.

Eisenreich, who led the Royals last season with a .293 average, 33 doubles and 27 stolen bases, had asked for $899,000 in arbitration and the Royals had offered $375,000.

Lonnie Smith, who lost his arbitration case with the Atlanta Braves on Saturday, agreed Monday to a two-year contract for $3.85 million in a deal that had been arranged in December, except for the salary total.

Smith was awarded $1.75 million by arbitrator Thomas Roberts instead of his request for $2 million. He will get a $583,333 signing bonus and $1,166,667 in 1990 — a total of $1.75 million.

Lemieux's physicians prescribe therapy, rest

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mario Lemieux's doctors, fearful that back surgery might threaten his career, have prescribed four to six weeks of treatment and therapy that may sideline the NHL's leading scorer for the rest of the season.

Dr. Charles Burke said the Penguins are running out of options in treating Lemieux's painful herniated disc, which recently cut short his record-threatening scoring streak at 46 games.

Because the problem is aggravated by an arthritis-like condition that could further injure Lemieux's back if the troublesome disk is removed, Burke said surgery "is our very last option."

"Realistically, even if he responds to the treatment, the best we can hope for is to get him back by the playoffs," Burke said Monday. "Obviously, if (the Penguins) are going to go anywhere, they need him."

The complications make Lemieux's injury different from that of Joe Montana, who recovered from disk surgery to quarterback the San Francisco 49ers to the last two Super Bowl championships.

"This isn't a simple disk herniation," Burke said. "(Lemieux) does have some problems in his bones ... that if his disk were taken out and his bones were destabilized by that procedure, then he could continue to suffer back pain.

"People who have had that type of condition — hockey players and other athletes — have had trouble returning to play."

Lemieux flew to Los Angeles with Burke last weekend to consult with spine specialist Dr. Robert Watkins and will remain there for four weeks of exercises and therapy.

An epidural cortisone injection was planned today to "calm down the irritation in the spine and to help him tolerate the exercises, which have worked with baseball players and golfers," Burke said.

"There are a lot of people walking around with herniated discs that have learned to live with it."

At best, Burke said Lemieux might play again in six weeks, following 10-14 days of additional rehabilitation after he returns to Pittsburgh.

"We have run out of conservative options," Burke said. If Lemieux doesn't respond, "then we'll have to take a chance and have surgery. ... There's a small chance that surgery could be career-threatening. That's why surgery, as far as we are concerned, is the last option."

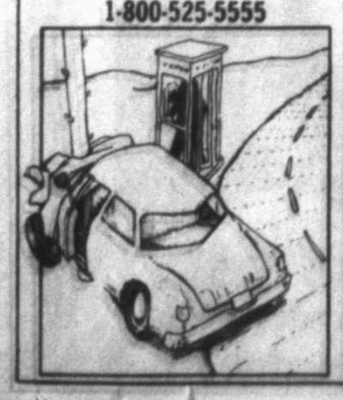

The Penguins, with a 27-28-5 record, are trying to make the playoffs for only the second time in eight years, and now must do so without the NHL's two-time scoring champion.

The Penguins are 5-1-1 in their last seven games, but are 0-1-1 without Lemieux, who leads the NHL with 121 points.

"Sometimes when you lose your franchise player, the other players pick up their play and pick up the slack," center Barry Pederson said. "We're going to have to play better defense, stay patient and stay confident."

"We've got to play better defense," forward Rob Brown said.

Higher interest may follow Drexel fall

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — While the credit market appears to have weathered the collapse of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. last week, the full fallout from the bankruptcy is likely to include higher interest rates.

One reason for the debt market's calm response to the liquidation of Drexel's holdings, ranging from Treasury issues to high-yield, high-risk "junk bonds," is that not all the paper was absorbed by investors after the firm's parent, the Drexel Burnham Lambert Group Inc., sought protection under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code on Tuesday.

Some government securities dealers noted on Friday that while the liquidation of Drexel's holdings was swift, much of it remained on the shelves of brokers and other intermediaries. That overhanging inventory will be one factor adding upward pressure on domestic interest rates.

Other pressure on interest rates will come from overseas, because the cost of credit in the United States is increasingly governed by foreign interest rates, which are rising.

"One of the hidden problems facing domestic borrowers is the concern that has gripped the European commercial paper market since the Drexel Burnham bankruptcy," said John M. Blin, the president of Advanced Portfolio Strategies, an investment manager for financial institutions.

"It was Drexel Burnham's need to cover some $30 million of maturing commercial paper on Feb. 12 that led to its bankruptcy filing the next day," he said. "How much more Drexel Burnham commercial paper is still uncovered we do not know."

"What is known is that the European commercial paper market has in recent years become an important source of credit for many domestic corporations, including Wall Street houses such as Drexel Burnham."

Commercial paper, sometimes termed capital notes, are unsecured IOUs, generally for 30 days. The paper is continuously rolled over so that, in effect, it becomes a much longer debt. Corporate borrowers favor such financing because it often does not show up in their statements as debt, as do most other borrowings.

Many Wall Street brokerages also prefer using the Eurocommercial paper market rather than borrowing from banks, which are increasingly expanding into all areas of the securities business.

Because of the collapse of Drexel, once considered a prime name in the Eurocommercial paper market, Blin said European lenders were wary about extending such credit and would undoubtedly make it more expensive for borrowers.

"All this comes at a time when domestic banks have become far more cautious in extending credit," Blin noted. "Many of these banks were still reeling from losses on foreign loans, when their real estate and other domestic loans began going bad."

David M. Jones, the chief economist at Aubrey G. Lanston Inc., a primary dealer in government securities, observed: "Foreign interest rates have become a major influence on the domestic cost of credit. We expect the Bank of Japan to raise its discount rate from its present level of 4.5 percent once their election results are in."

Credit unions blasted

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — The nation's credit unions may be making some of the same types of mistakes that led to the collapse of savings and loan associations, federal banking regulator L. William Seidman says.

Seidman

Credit unions "are growing very fast" and are increasing their investments in areas where they have little experience, Seidman told the American Bankers Association's National Conference for Community Bankers on Monday.

"They've got a lot of the symptoms that the S&Ls had," added Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Many critics of the thrift industry attribute the bulk of its problems to rapid growth and bad investments in projects outside the traditional bread-and-butter areas such as housing loans.

Many of those in attendance Monday were bankers from small community banks that compete with credit unions, and Seidman drew enthusiastic applause when he criticized credit unions for the way they evaluate their assets and deposit-insurance fund.

Credit unions have been claiming that their deposit-insurance fund, run by the National Credit Union Administration, is stronger than that of other institutions because credit unions keep 1 percent of the funds on deposit with the NCUA.

Seidman said the claim is deceptive, however, because the credit unions also book the money as assets.

Seidman also chairs the Resolution Trust Corp., the government's S&L bailout board, and he spent much of his speech defending its record against critics who say it is moving too slowly.

In addition to the more than 350 thrifts it has taken over in 37 states and the $11.4 billion advanced to institutions to stem bank runs or replace high-cost brokered deposits, the board has developed internal rules and listed about a tenth of is 300,000 properties, Seidman said.

The RTC's merger with the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. is "a marriage that is about the equal of Trump versus Trump," he said in a reference to the marital troubles of Donald and Ivana Trump.

The RTC is handling more than 40,000 lawsuits.

United Mine Workers Curtis Franks and Luther Chaffin cast ballots to accept new contract from Pittston Coal.

Miners vote to end coal strike

CASTLEWOOD, Va. (AP) — Appalachian miners apparently have voted to end a 10-month-old strike against the Pittston Coal Group that became a rallying point for the U.S. labor movement.

Pittston's 1,695 United Mine Workers members in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky, along with several hundred laid-off miners, voted Monday on a pact that would give them the job security and health and retirement benefits they sought while letting the company operate around the clock and on weekends.

UMW locals in Virginia, where about 1,200 of the company's union miners work, voted 2-1 in favor of ratification, according to unofficial returns cited by union officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At four locals in Logan County, W.Va., the combined, unofficial tally was 171-113 in favor of passage, said Danny Wells, executive board member of the UMW's District 17.

But the only local in Kentucky affected by the strike rejected the contract 96-93, according to unofficial results. Many members there had said they would reject the pact because of the pending suspension of 13 miners for alleged misconduct on the picket line.

UMW Vice President Cecil Roberts planned to announce the official results today at the union's southwest Virginia district office. UMW President Richard Trumka, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and U.S. Secretary of Labor Elizabeth Dole planned to make a simultaneous announcement at the AFL-CIO convention in Miami.

Mrs. Dole appointed the super mediator, former Labor Secretary William Usery, who helped forge the tentative settlement announced Jan. 1.

Rufus Hall, 56, said miners were concerned about the scheduling flexibility in the new pact, but about nine out of 10 members of his Virginia local voted for it.

"It's a pretty good package except for the swing shift," he said.

Candy war heats up

WACO, Texas (AP) — The next product in the candy marketing war between Hershey's and M&M/Mars, Peanut Butter Snickers, will be produced in Texas, but Texans with a hankering for them will be out of luck for the time being.

Snickers Bar is the nation's top selling candy bar. M&M/Mars hopes that brand loyalty will further increase its market share and melt the share held by Reese's Peanut Butter Cups.

The bars will be made in Waco and are scheduled hit the market in May, but they will be sold only on the East Coast at first. The market will gradually be expanded nationwide, a company official says.

Officials of Hershey's Food Corp., which owns Reese's Peanut Butter Cups, did not return calls to the Waco Tribune-Herald for comment Monday.

Stan Madden, a marketing professor at Baylor University, said the introduction of the new bar represents the next step in a marketing war between Hershey's and M&M/Mars.

Hershey's took a shot at the M&Ms candy market with its Reese's Pieces. With Peanut Butter Snickers Bars, M&M Mars is retaliating against Hershey's, Madden said.

"It's a time-honored strategy to clone off an existing product that will have immediate widespread acceptance," Madden said. "The most recent classic example would be the creation of Diet Coke."

"This has rarely been done in the candy industry, however," Madden added. M&M/Mars cloned Peanut M&Ms from plain M&Ms 30 to 35 years ago to form an entire new product line, Madden said.

The Waco plant will be the only M&M/Mars plant to initially make the bar, according to plant manager John Keating. The plant, which makes millions of Snickers Bars a week, will hire more people, but Keating declined to say how many.

"We are adding more people now, and we'll be hiring part-timers," he said. The candy plant presently employs between 850 to 900 people.

"We believe the time is right for Peanut Butter Snickers Bar," said Mary Ellen Dougherty, public affairs counsel at M&M/Mars headquarters in Hackettstown, N.J. "Our research of consumer taste patterns has consistently demonstrated the immense popularity of peanuts and peanut butter with the American public."

The Peanut Butter Snickers Bars will be the same size and price of regular Snickers Bars.

The package design is in its final stages, but has not received final approval, Keating said.

The Waco plant also makes four types of Skittles Bite-Sized Candy, Starburst Fruit Chews and Twix Cookie Bars.

"We develop a lot of new candies," Keating said. "Some we test-market and drop. This one we tested quite a while."

Oil prices continue weakening

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices have turned lower in post-holiday trading. The market was closed Monday for Presidents Day.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, March contracts for West Texas Intermediate were down 26 cents to $22.16 in mid-morning trading. The contract lost 42 cents Friday, closing the week at $22.42. April contracts lost 18 cents to close at $22.25.

Traders will be watching how the March contract, which expires at the end of trading today, will fare. Brokers suggest that its weakness or strength could influence the April contract for the next week or so.

Some oil analysts also say a number of March "turnarounds" planned by refiners could also send oil prices down in the weeks ahead.

Dollar lower in trendless trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was lower in early European trading today, and foreign currency dealers said they didn't expect much movement until the U.S. market reopens after Monday's Presidents Day holiday.

Gold prices rose.

"It's all very trendless right now," said a currency trader at a U.S. bank in Frankfurt. "No one has any really good idea of the direction."

In Tokyo, the dollar edged up 0.06 yen to a closing 144.58 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 145.10 yen.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound, and was quoted at $1.7089, compared with $1.7030 late Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $419.25 a troy ounce, up from $416.50 bid late Monday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $419.05.

In Zurich, the bid price was $419.00, up from $416.60 late Monday.

Bullion dealers said gold prices were pushed higher by a combination of continued dollar buying and an expected bout of buying by Japanese investors.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.26 to close at a bid $418.50.

Silver rose in London to a bid price of $5.35 a troy ounce, from Monday's 5.33.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Drexel's British units dismiss employees

LONDON (AP) — The fallout from the collapse of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. continued when three of the company's British units dismissed 210 employees as part of an "orderly wind-down" of operations.

The workers joined 5,300 Drexel employees fired in the United States on Friday after the investment firm's parent filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy court protection.

Also Monday, Drexel's arm in Singapore said it had liquidated all its positions on the Singapore International Monetary Exchange and was scheduled to shut down by the end of this week.

Economy as topsy-turvy as weather

WASHINGTON (AP) — The weather isn't the only thing behaving strangely this winter. The economy has been topsy-turvy as well.

In just two months, December and January, many economists went from predicting an impending economic downturn to believing that the longest peacetime expansion in history has found another of its nine lives.

The new general consensus of moderate economic growth this year is likely to be an important element in Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan's testimony today before Congress, when he reveals the Fed's policy targets for 1990. These targets will have a major influence on interest rates and economic growth.

Trial of former Guiness executives continues

LONDON (AP) — Former Guinness PLC Chairman Ernest Saunders received $5.1 million in company funds in a secret Swiss bank account while he led Guinness' bid for Distillers Co., a prosecutor charged at the trial of Saunders and three others on charges stemming from the 1986 takeover.

John Chadwick, a prosecutor from the Serious Fraud Office, told of the alleged payment as he concluded his opening statement Monday at the trial, which began last week.

The four defendants face a total of 35 charges involving theft, false accounting and conspiracy in connection with Guinness' acquisition of Distillers, a Scottish manufacturer of whisky and gin.

AT&T shows off new international standard

NEW YORK (AP) — AT&T demonstrated a digital telephone service to Japan and Great Britain based on an international standard, making it easier for companies to set up worldwide communications networks.

The service shown Monday can be dialed up like a regular phone call once a special digital line is installed to the customer. It is expected to be available to many other nations by the end of the year, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said.

Unlike conventional analog phone lines, digital lines enable the transmission of computer data and video conferences. They also provide distortion-free phone calls and far faster fax transmissions overseas.

U.S. holds own in superconductor race

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The United States is holding its own in the race against Japan to develop new superconductors, which could be in commercial use within five years, a panel of experts said.

Next year, the United States will for the first time launch simple superconducting devices into space to determine how well the devices survive.

Communications equipment using superconductors would be much lighter than conventional equipment and thus ideal for use in outer space, where the costs of launching climb enormously as weight increases, Edward Mead of Du Pont said Monday.

Abortion foes won't intimidate union

BAL HARBOUR, Fla. (AP) — Union leaders will not be intimidated by anti-abortion forces waging a letter-writing campaign aimed at keeping them neutral on the issue, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said.

Kirkland spoke to reporters Monday after the 14.1-million member federation of unions opened its annual winter meeting.

As expected, the Executive Council skipped voting on pro-choice resolutions and appointed a 14-member committee to determine whether the AFL-CIO should take a position on abortion, an issue the organization has sidestepped for more than a decade.

Apple expected to lay off 400 to 500

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Apple Computer Inc. is expected to lay off 400 to 500 employees this week as part of an effort to control expenses, industry executives said Monday. Apple's growth has slowed, partly because of an industry slump and partly because its product line lacks competitive inexpensive personal computers.

Apple's management has said there would be layoffs this quarter but has not yet specified the number of employees.

Don't mess with Texas agencies

AUSTIN (AP) — The advertising firm that warned litterbugs "Don't Mess With Texas" says it's going to try to clean up in Europe.

GSD&M, based in Austin, announced Monday it has become partners with London-based Gold Greenless Trott Group PLC, England's sixth-largest ad concern.

Under the agreement, GGT could pay $48.5 million over the next four years to GSD&M, said Roy Spence, GSD&M president.

GSD&M said the partnership fits the strategies of both businesses — GSD&M has been looking for an international partner and GGT has been shopping for regional agencies.

"Critical acclaim, not critical mass, is GGT's overriding philosophy. Ours too," said Steve Gurasich, GSD&M board chairman.

Spence and Gurasich said the partnership will provide GSD&M financial security "to be bold, young in spirit and to encourage and defend the entrepreneurial skills of the individual."

Spence said GSD&M's clients are going to need a company familiar with the international market because of potential business opportunities spawned by the political changes in Europe.

GSD&M — the third largest ad agency in Texas and 57th in the United States with billings of $150 million in 1989 and approximately 210 employees — has a client list that includes CompuAdd, Coors Brewing Co., Southwest Airlines and Walmart Stores.

Bass boys irk Florida tycoon

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Andrew Barnes, head of the St. Petersburg Times, bristles at a Texas tycoon's attempt to acquire a prominent newspaper that was set up to be forever independent.

"What you're seeing is people who think everything can be measured in dollars," says Barnes, 50, of a bid led by Fort Worth billionaire Robert M. Bass to acquire control of the Times Publishing Co., owner of the newspaper and the Congressional Quarterly.

A Bass-led partnership, which bought a minority stake in mid-1988, offered $270 million for a controlling share, a deal rejected Friday by trustees who control the company. The Bass investors also are suing for a bigger share of dividends they claim aren't fairly distributed.

What paved the way for a takeover fight was a feud that started long ago in the family of the late Times titan Nelson Poynter, who ran the newspaper for 30 of its 105 years.

Poynter engineered a unique way to keep a profitable daily newspaper in the hands of journalists, free from control of outsiders or even his family. He established a nonprofit journalism school, the Poynter Institute, which through a complex system is the major stockholder of the newspaper and receives 83 percent of the dividends.

In a special centennial issue in 1984 the Times said of its ownership: "As corny as it sounds, how one of ... America's largest daily newspapers became the property of a school is the story of one man's commitment to corporate excellence and local control.

"Nelson Poynter's gift — valued in the hundreds of millions of dollars — has been called both a noble gesture and a tax dodge."

Poynter carved family scars as he brought his dream to life. Ten years after his death in 1978, disgruntled heirs said they felt they weren't getting a fair share of the dividends.

Lockheed moves meeting over possible takeover try

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — In response to investor Harold C. Simmons' interest in possibly seeking control of Lockheed Corp., the suburban Calabasas-based aerospace company has announced that it plans to hold its annual meeting on March 29, several weeks earlier than usual.

"The actions that Simmons has taken have created an air of uncertainty among employees, shareholders and management," Lockheed spokesman Ron Meder said Monday. "Given that environment, we feel it's important to dispel that as soon as possible."

Texas billionaire Simmons has said he may seek control of Lockheed following the company's rebuff of his request for six seats on its board, according to a filing earlier this month with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

An investment group headed by Simmons boosted its stake in Lockheed to 18.94 percent from 17.9 percent in December.

Lockheed chairman Dan Tellep has said he rejected Simmons' requests for representation on the board and a lifting of provisions in the company's shareholder rights plan, which is aimed at averting a takeover.

Simmons also said in a filing that the SEC is investigating his acquisition of Lockheed stock.

Lockheed normally holds its annual meeting in early May. Under the company's bylaws, a shareholder has 10 days from the public announcement of the date of the annual meeting to submit nominations for the board.

Lockheed set the March 29 date late Friday, meaning Simmons has until Feb. 26 to submit any nominations for representation on the Lockheed board, Meder said.

Largent Parks, a Simmons spokesman, said the Texas investor was out of the country and unavailable for comment. "No one knows what he plans to do," he said.

Meder said the company has retained the services of Kekst and Co., a public relations company in New York.

"If Mr. Simmons intends to solicit proxies, there's going to be a need for consultants," Meder said. Kekst officials couldn't be reached for comment on Monday.

Lockheed also has consulted with investment bankers, Goldman Sachs & Co. In press reports there has been speculation that Goldman has devised steps to respond to the Simmons threat.

The company plans to send out a proxy stating its slate of nominations for its board and an agenda in two to three weeks, Meder said.

Lockheed's stock has been depressed, falling last week to its lowest level in 12 months. It closed on Friday at 35, down 3/8.

As Lockheed's stock falls, it increases Simmons' chances of being successful and winning support among shareholders if he should wage a proxy vote, said Jack Modzewlewski, an analyst with Paine Webber Inc.

He estimates that Simmons is out about $80 million on his investment in Lockheed based on its recent stock price.

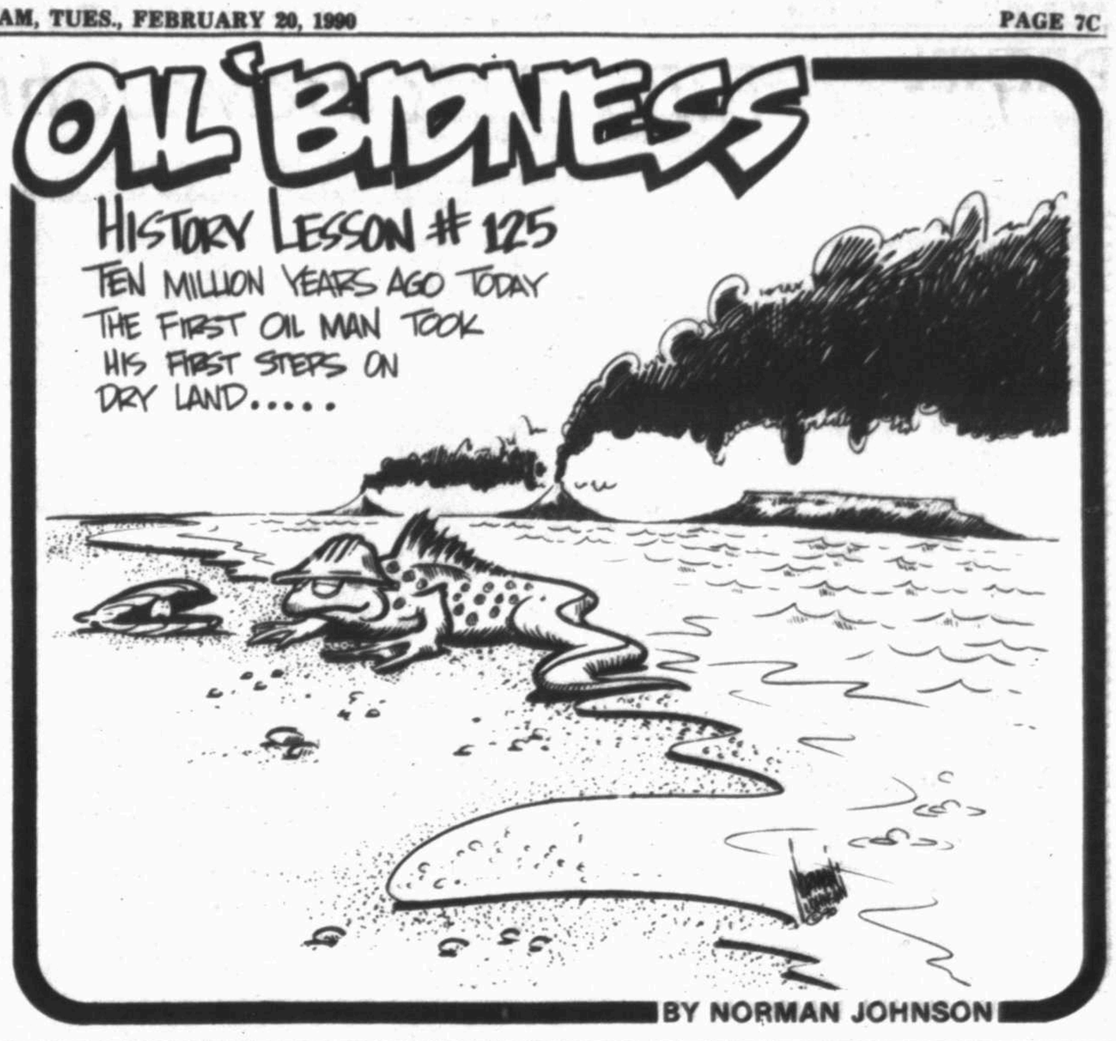

Pipelines plan more gas for Northeast

PITTSBURGH (SWN) — Units of Consolidated Natural Gas Co. (CNG), Transco Energy Co., and the Coastal Corp. have jointly asked the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to approve a series of major proposals to provide new domestic natural gas service to meet the increasing demands of gas markets in the northeastern United States.

Consolidated's CNG Transmission Corp. unit has filed for permission to provide an incremental 350 million cubic feet a day of long-term, firm transportation of gas on behalf of Transco's Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. and Coastal's ANR Pipeline Co., beginning Nov. 1, 1991.

CNG Transmission proposes to transport about 250 million cubic feet a day from Lebanon, Ohio, which is north of Cincinnati, to Leidy, Pennsylvania, in the north central part of that state.

Further, CNG Transmission seeks approval to transport 100 million cubic feet daily on behalf of ANR and its shippers from Lebanon to Leidy and to the Syracuse, New York area to serve incremental cogeneration markets. The primary term for the proposed services is 15 years. CNG Transmission will construct 105 miles of pipeline and add 92,360 horsepower (HP) of compression at a cost of approximately $200 million.

Bausch & Lomb expanding

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Bausch & Lomb Inc. plans to expand its operation here and hire 300 more workers by year's end because demand for the company's sunglasses has been so strong, a company official said.

Marsha Gardner, company human resources specialist in San Antonio, said hiring will begin the second half of the year.

The new jobs will coincide with the addition of 42,000 square feet to a company assembly plant and distribution warehouse.

"It's always been our thought to expand," Bausch & Lomb spokeswoman Barbara Kelley said in an interview from Rochester, N.Y. "We have been very happy with the work force and the reception in San Antonio."

The company currently employs 500 here. It opened its facility in San Antonio in 1988 with 300 workers.

System allows tax fax

By JOHN ARUNDEL
N.Y. Times News Service

Instatax Inc. of San Diego has developed a system that enables taxpayers to fax their prepared tax returns to the company, which then transmits the returns to the Internal Revenue Service.

The service costs $29.95 plus faxing and mailing costs. Generally, refunds on returns filed electronically are received within two weeks.

Taxpayers may send their returns to Instatax from any fax machine after picking up a free "Do-It-Yourself Instant Refund Package" at 7-Eleven stores or Revco drugstores.

Using the kit, filers fax their returns to Instatax.

Filers may also send it to Instatax from any Mailboxes Etc. office for a special facsimile price of $39.95. To find the nearest Mailboxes Etc. office, call 1-800-356-5324.

The form is processed by the company the same day and entered directly into the IRS computer system, bypassing the agency's data-entry system and thus avoiding delays.

Taxpayers then must mail to Instatax the page of their return with their signature on it, as well as IRS form No. 8453, the service's electronic filing form, also signed by the taxpayer. Instatax then signs the return as well.

Within seven days of faxing the return, Instatax sends filers a postcard acknowledging receipt of the 1040, 1040A or 1040EZ form.

By using the tax fax system, filers can shave at least a month off the usual six- to eight-week wait for a refund.

Filers who are due a refund can expect a check in the mail within 18 days; those who have the refund check deposited directly in their bank can expect the funds there within 12 days.

Mailboxes Etc. can also arrange loans in the amount of expected refunds that allow filers to obtain their money faster than if the return is mailed to the IRS. The loans of $300 to $3,000, which may be obtained within two to three days, are handled by Greenwood Trust Co.

TEXAS

Perhaps the company's most famous work was the "Don't Mess With Texas" anti-littering campaign for the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Highway officials have credited the campaign with greatly reducing roadside litter.

Under the agreement, GSD&M will retain its name and control of its own operations, as will GGT, said Spence and Gurasich. They said GGT's chief executive, Michael Greenlees, approached them about the transaction.

Combined, the GGT group has billings in excess of $350 million, said Spence and Gurasich.

GGT has been building a base in the United States through the purchase of regional companies, such as the Atlanta's Babbit & Reiman and Martin/Williams of Minneapolis, Spence and Gurasich said.

Some of GGT's clients include, Toshiba, Cadbury, Conoco and the London Daily Mirror.

"We decided, why don't we just bypass New York and Chicago and go international," Spence said.

AUSTIN (AP) — The advertising firm that warned litterbugs "Don't Mess With Texas" says it's going to try to clean up in Europe.

GSD&M, based in Austin, announced Monday it has become partners with London-based Gold Greenless Trott Group PLC, England's sixth-largest ad concern.

Under the agreement, GGT could pay $48.5 million over the next four years to GSD&M, said Roy Spence, GSD&M president.

GSD&M said the partnership fits the strategies of both businesses — GSD&M has been looking for an international partner and GGT has been shopping for regional agencies.

"Critical acclaim, not critical mass, is GGT's overriding philosophy. Ours too," said Steve Gurasich, GSD&M board chairman.

Spence and Gurasich said the partnership will provide GSD&M financial security "to be bold, young in spirit and to encourage and defend the entrepreneurial skills of the individual."

Spence said GSD&M's clients are going to need a company familiar with the international market because of potential business opportunities spawned by the political changes in Europe.

GSD&M — the third largest ad agency in Texas and 57th in the United States with billings of $150 million in 1989 and approximately 210 employees — has a client list that includes CompuAdd, Coors Brewing Co., Southwest Airlines and Walmart Stores.

Caspen Oil sells back interest in Yates Unit

DALLAS (SWN) — Caspen Oil, Inc., a Dallas-based oil and gas exploration, production and acquisition company, has reached an agreement with Yates Unit, Inc. (now called Sixx Holdings Inc.) for Yates Unit, Inc. to exercise its option to puchase Caspen's 30 percent interest in Yates for approximately $1,938,000, which, after adjustments, (including a payable to Yates Unit, Inc.), was a net payment of $1,246,000.

In connection with Yates Unit, Inc.'s purchase of Caspen's interest, Jack D. Knox, chairman and CEO of Yates Unit, Inc., has resigned as a director of Caspen Oil, Inc. and Caspen Oil Plc, and has also sold his shares in Caspen Oil, Inc. Sixx Holdings, Incorporated will begin trading on NASDAQ, under the symbol "SIXX," in early February. Sixx Holdings was created from certain spun out assets from Summit Energy, Inc., which changed its name to Caspen Oil, Inc. in 1988. Delo Caspary, chairman and CEO of Caspen Oil, Inc., has resigned from the board of Sixx Holdings, Inc., in connection with the transaction.

Prairie Producing completes offshore explorer

HOUSTON (SWN) — Prairie Producing Co. announced the successful completion of an exploratory well at Main Pass Block 49 in state waters of Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana.

The Prairie State Lease 13633 No. 1 well was completed in a Miocene sand and on test, flowed from perforations between 10,430 and 10,516 feet at a rate of 13.6 million cubic feet of gas per day and 336 barrels of 57.6 degrees API condensate per day on a 30/64 inch choke. Flowing tubing pressure was 2,849 psi. Absolute open flow was calculated at 155 million cubic feet of gas per day.

Quinoco tests Louisiana well for 15.1 Mmcfd

DENVER (SWN) — Quinoco Petroleum Inc. has completed production testing on the A.L. Boudreaux No. 1 Well in Scott Field, Lafayette Parish, La.

Initial test results indicated productive potential of 15.1 MMCFPD and 400 BCPD on a 18/64-inch choke, with a flowing tubing pressure of 9,080 psi from perforations in a portion of the Bol Mex 3 Formation.

Quinoco Petroleum Inc. operates the well on behalf of its affiliated limited partnerships Energy Development Partners Ltd., Quinoco Consolidated Partners L.P., and May Limited Partnerships 1983-1, 1983-2 and 1983-3, which collectively participated in the drilling and completion of the well with a 43.1752 percent working interest.

DREXEL

Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu was returned to power in Japan's national elections Sunday. The party has governed for 35 years.

The markets will be watching closely Tuesday, when Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, is scheduled to testify before the House Banking Committee about the Fed's projections for economic growth and the money supply.

While the testimony will be closely scrutinized, many economists, like Irwin L. Kellner, the chief economist at Manufacturers Hanover Trust Corp., contend the Fed "has lost most of its control over monetary policy, which is now increasingly governed by developments in foreign markets."

Greenspan will be facing many on the banking committee who agree with the Bush adminstration that the Fed is keeping interest rates too high and that this po'icy is keeping the economic from realizing its full potential.

"He will continue to justify the absence of easing and repeat his theme that the specter of a recession is receding and that the economic decline is bottoming out," said Philip Braverman, the chief economist at DKB Securities, the domestic arm of Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank Ltd. in Tokyo, the world's largest bank.

Jones of Aubrey G. Lanston said the Fed faced two vexing problems. "One, the economy is still strong enough to give the Fed concern about inflation," he explained. "Secondly, if the Fed eases credit, it could weaken the dollar and discourage foreign investors from dollar-denominated securities, including Treasury paper."

Further upward pressure on interest rates is expected in Europe, particularly in West Germany.

The rise in West German rates is fueled by fears there that moves toward monetary and political union with East Germany could cause a sharp rise in inflation.

Rising West German interest rates have already driven up the cost of credit in Britain and elsewhere in Europe.

Last week, Canada, the United States' largest trading partner, sharply raised its basic interest rates, and it may have to do so again.

Braverman of DKB Securities also noted that the Treasury's auctions of $18 billion in two- and five-year notes Wednesday and Thursday could keep interest rates from falling.

So could the working capital needs of Resolution Trust Corp., which is expected to announce its short-term cash needs.

The agency, which was created last August to sort out the debacles in the savings industry, is expected to tap the credit market for as much as $100 billion by selling short-term paper this year. Its two initial borrowings through selling long-term bonds proved costly.

Braverman expects Resolution Trust to borrow $11 billion in the balance of the quarter, initially through offerings of cash-management bills.

"Later on," he continued, "the Treasury will help the RTC by adding $1 billion or so each to their weekly auctions of three- and six-month bills."

How Johnson took over the controls

N.Y. Times News Service

After a secretive campaign to throw its leading competitor off track, Johnson Controls Inc. has introduced what it maintains is the next generation of computerized systems to control heating, security and other functions in buildings.

Honeywell Inc., Johnson Controls' chief rival in the building controls business, announced last summer that it planned to end its faltering diversification strategy and concentrate on controls.

Johnson, based in Milwaukee, and Honeywell, based in Minneapolis, each have about 30 percent of the market.

Johnson Controls' new system, introduced Monday at a trade show in Atlanta, required an investment of $20 million and three years of development. Johnson says the product employs the latest digital technology to make the system much easier to use.

But Honeywell officials said the new Johnson Controls system simply duplicated features offered by a Honeywell system introduced last year.

Johnson officials openly discussed the steps they took to try to throw Honeywell off course.

From the start, Johnson Controls' project was cloaked in secrecy.

A code name, Loba, after the 19th-century Russian mathematician Nikolai Lobachevski, was assigned to the project. In 1988, Johnson Controls began using focus groups of potential customers to work out bugs in the system. Gradually, word filtered out that Johnson was preparing a major product.

The Johnson officials said in a recent interview that Honeywell began to display a strong interest in the project and that they had heard from customers that Honeywell mistakenly believed the venture carried the code name Lobo.

The Johnson officials also said the customers had told them that Honeywell's salespeople had approached Johnson customers and asked them to pump Johnson for information about the product.

But Paul Towne, Honeywell's director of corporate ethics, said the company did not try to obtain information in an unethical manner.

"We actively instruct employees to treat competitive information as the property of others, not to be solicited by Honeywell employees," he said.

In any case, executives at Johnson Controls were worried.

John A. Bernaden, a Johnson Controls advertising executive, said that because of the growing customer interest, the company felt under pressure to move up the introduction date. Nevertheless, Johnson executives were adamant that there be sufficient time to debug the complex system.

So Bernaden devised a way to buy the needed time.

The company's engineers were ready to ship a relatively minor update of an existing building controls system. "It was really just a modification of our existing system," said Ronald J. Caffrey, vice president for marketing at the company's controls group.

But Johnson announced the modification in a splashy news release using helium balloons, calling it the Logical Option for Building Operation system, or Lobo.

"We made up a new product name with the same letters to confuse them," Caffrey said, acknowledging that the company had to be careful not to mislead customers.

Bernaden said he thought the subterfuge had been successful: the introduction of the much-anticipated Lobo system received thorough coverage in the trade press.

"After we came out with the Lobo smokescreen, there wasn't that pressure through Honeywell's various means to attempt to learn what we were doing," he said.

Martin A. McDevitt Jr., an analyst with Cleary Gull Reiland McDevitt & Colloply, an investment firm in Milwaukee, said the system unveiled last week was a significant development that relied on the latest technology to create a faster, more integrated system.

"With this new unit they are in a position to pick up some market share," he said.

Caffrey said the new system would allow Johnson Controls to expand into the market for smaller buildings and compete more effectively with Honeywell in Europe.

BASS

They sold their minority interest to Bass and now are part of his Poynter-Jamison Ventures Ltd. partnership.

In its suit, the Bass group values the company at $450 million and alleges management is cheating shareholders. Bass and his partners own 40 percent of the common stock but only receive 5.7 percent of the company's dividends.

Barnes, who won't disclose the company's worth, calls the suit "meritless and wrong" and vows to "respond as forcefully as we know how to do.

"They're accusing us of doing what we assert we do. They call it a breach of fiduciary trust. This is a fight about dividend flow and whether they get the 6 percent they bought or the 40 percent they'd like," Barnes said.

Both sides have been lining up high-powered attorneys for what could be a long and bitter fight.

Barnes believes an emphasis on profits would sacrifice journalistic excellence.

"Journalism is our strength. We also have excellent lawyers," he said. "I don't intend to lose."

The other side thinks economics and good journalism mix.

Bass, 41, a renowned takeover dabbler with artful acquisitions to his credit, wants the paper because it is widely respected and financially sound, says spokesman David Bonderman.

"Barnes acts like it's the Holy Grail; that nobody could have an interest in journalistic integrity if they had an economic stake," Bonderman said. "The only ones like that are the St. Pete Times and Pravda. And even Pravda seems to be learning its lesson."

Barnes doesn't take kindly to the Soviet Communist Party newspaper analogy.

"If they so value the journalistic aspect, how can they compare us to Pravda?" he asks.

"We're not talking about little old ladies," Barnes said. "We're talking about corporate raiders from Texas. I think there's an intimate relationship between good journalism and the dollars it costs to provide it ... You can't have it both ways."

The Bass group has said it will guarantee editorial integrity of the paper, and claims the buyout plan would strengthen the institute financially.

The newspaper Poynter envisioned wouldn't have to worry about debt, or ownership by investors or a large newspaper chain that could influence content. He centralized control of the newspaper in the hands of one person by arranging for the institute shares to be voted by the chief executive officer of the Times Publishing Co.

That power went first to Times editor Eugene Patterson, who picked Barnes as his successor when he retired in 1988. Barnes is chairman of the institute, board chairman and chief executive officer of both the Times Holding Co. and the Times Publishing Co. and editor, president and chief executive of the newspaper.

When Nelson Poynter took over the paper and its parent from his father Paul in 1947, the stock was allocated with the idea that Nelson would have voting control and his sister, Eleanor, would have a greater income flow, said Merritt Gardner, an attorney who represented her before her death in 1987.

It didn't work out that way.

Eventually, Nelson Poynter called in the redeemable, non-voting stock Eleanor held, leaving his sister with 40 percent — or 200 shares — of voting stock and only 6 percent of the dividends.

Poynter wound up with 60 percent of the voting stock — or 300 shares — and 3,000 shares of preferred stock he didn't redeem.

COAL

Under the tentative agreement, Pittston would continue to pay 100 percent of miners' health-care coverage, rather than forcing them to take on 20 percent of those costs. Pittston also would continue paying into an industry-wide pension fund from which it had withdrawn.

The company won the right to operate shifts around the clock and to suspend 13 strikers accused of illegal strike activity and force them to go to arbitration if they want to keep their jobs.

The strike drew widespread support from labor unions and religious leaders because of the use of peaceful civil disobedience — primarily mass sit-down demonstrations to block coal trucks — and because they believed Pittston was trying to break the union, a claim the company vigorously denied.

Last October, a delegation of international labor leaders, including representatives of Poland's Solidarity trade union, attended a rally of Pittston strikers in Russell County. Soviet coal miners also toured the coalfields.

Last summer, the walkout touched off wildcat sympathy strikes at other coal companies that had settled with the UMW. At their peak, those strikes affected tens of thousands of miners in much of the East and Midwest.

The Pittston strike's peaceful image was marred by sporadic violence aimed at company property, supervisors and replacement workers. Russell County Circuit Judge Donald McGlothlin cited the violence when he refused last week to drop $64 million in fines against the union for illegal strike activities.

Trumka said when the settlement was announced that the union would withhold a rank-and-file vote until all litigation related to the strike was dissolved. But he announced Thursday that the union was going ahead with the vote, and the miners received copies of the proposed contract Friday.

INVESTOR's GUIDE

Interest paid on CDs taxed as interest income

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I purchased a certificate of deposit on Sept. 26, 1989, at an annual rate of interest. In January, I received a notice from the bank stating the amount of taxable interest on the CD for 1989. I received none of that interest. I did not think I have to pay income tax on money I did not receive. The bank says I must pay tax because that interest accumulated in 1989. Is that true?

A. Yes, indeed. That interest was credited to your CD last year. You are required to report it as interest income on your 1989 income tax return and pay tax on it.

Doyle

That notice you received, no doubt, was a Form 1099-INT. "INT" stands for interest. Like every payer of interest or dividends, the bank was required to sent a Form 1099 to you and to the Internal Revenue Service, which feeds that information into its computers. If you fail to list the interest on your 1989 federal income tax return, the revenooers will send you a dunning notice.

As a general rule, interest on bank accounts, including CDs and other "time deposits," is taxable for the year in which it is credited.

There is an exception, if the CD has a maturity of no more than one year and you cannot withdraw the interest without losing a large part of it through an early withdrawal penalty. In that case, you report the interest as income on the tax return you file for the year in which the CD matures.

Even with a CD having a maturing of one year or less, however, arrangements to defer tax on the interest until the year the CD comes due must be made at the time the CD is purchased. Many banks will do that. Some won't.

Q. You wrote, "The requirement that federally insured banks and savings and loan associations levy penalties on early withdrawals from CDs went by the boards with CDs issued on and after April 1, 1986," and you went on to say each bank and S&L can "charge whatever CD early withdrawal penalties it chooses."

I question the accuracy of your first statement. Federal regulations state the minimum withdrawal penalty is (the loss of) seven days' simple interest on amounts withdrawn within six days after deposit or six days after a partial withdrawal.

Correct?

A. OK; you got me. Federally mandated early withdrawal penalties still apply in the two instances you cite — and for which you sent along a copy of the regulations.

However, while not making excuses, I must point out those two instances should be considered rare. It would be most unusual for a depositor to pull money out of a CD within six days after obtaining the CD or within six days after a previous withdrawal from the CD.

Q. I am a single person with more than $100,000 in a savings account. Because the limit of federal deposit insurance is $100,000, I plan to move the excess to a savings account at another bank. As each account reaches $100,000, I will start new accounts at different banks. If I win a state lottery, I'll probably run out of banks.

I don't know much about financial matters. You are my last hope. Is there a better way to solve the above problem?

A. If you call that a "problem," you don't understand the meaning of the word. With more than $100,000 on deposit, you're in far better financial shape than most folks.

Assuming your wealth does continue to increase, there are many places you can put your money. Sock a major part of it away in U.S. Treasury securities, which are counted the world's safest. If you prefer banks, switch part of your hoard to CDs. It's foolish to keep so much money in low-interest savings accounts.

Your "hope" about the lottery more fittingly should be called a "dream." Although varying from state to state, the odds against you are stratospheric. I have yet to hear from a reader who hit it big on any state lottery. Nonetheless, I can't fault lottery players for trying their luck.

America's cosmetic cover-up exposed

Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

If you think you're living life in the fast lane, try getting behind the cosmetics counter.

Talk about a rocket-ship pace!

It seems like every time you put on fresh lipstick some company is pushing a new product to make you look Prettier! Younger! More Natural!

And you have to appreciate the irony of the last claim. Really. "Natural" we all get for free every morning, then most of us spend the rest of the day attempting to cover it up.

Some of the products actually do live up to their promises. More often than not, however, we buy all these pretty little bottles and cylinders, and, after a few days, they wind up with all the other dinosaurs at the bottom of our own personal junkyards, otherwise known as the bathroom cosmetics drawer.

These "burials" in no way stop the flood of new-product news releases and testers, though. They come in daily by the mounds. Sifting through, here is the news we thought you would want to know about:

Bill Blass recently made a personal appearance at Robinson's, Beverly Hills, to reintroduce his signature fragrance. The scent hasn't changed, but it has been repackaged.

Blass, who is 67 years old (but barely looks 50), acknowledges that even with all the clothes a designer can put forth, a good fragrance probably will keep his name around a lot longer.

IT'S TRUE. Fragrances such as Norell, Chanel and Christian Dior prove his point.

Blass doesn't believe that women wear one designer's clothes anymore, and he thinks the same is true of fragrances — that women wear several, depending on mood and event.

This reasoning could be a factor in the launch of Blass' second fragrance, coming to a cosmetics counter near you in 1990.

It has happened to most women at least once:

You just have finished applying all your eye makeup, ending with the mascara. And then you sneeze. Suddenly you look like Marcel Marceau.

Simple repair is out of the question, yet you know that if you wipe off all the makeup on that eye and start fresh, you'll still look unbalanced all day.

It's the worst.

Until now.

Clinique has come out with a waxy pencil called the Clean-Up Stick for Eyes that "erases" (actually it's more accurate to say it "soaks up") the mistake. It fixes lipstick boo-boos, too. Cost is $9.50.

From the Oh-Maybelline-Why-Can't-You-Be-True? Department:

In 1920, Maybelline brought out the now-familiar little red box with cake mascara and the little brush inside. Then, last year, this staple suddenly was discontinued.

Oh, the whining that followed.

Well, the little red box is back, so all its regulars can breathe a sigh of relief.

With the reintroduction, Maybelline also suggests that the product can be used to tame unruly brows. Cost is $3.65.

LOSE THOSE little lines, commands skin-care doyenne Adrien Arpel.

She is ready to help you do it, too, with her new product, "Line Shed Wrinkle Peeling Gel."

Line Shed is applied to a wrinkled area with a teeny spatula, then is allowed to dry. Once dry, you zip it off just like a bandage. Off come the dead skin cells that make your wrinkles look worse than they really are.

Arpel suggests using the product twice a week and, of course, before special occasions.

Cost is $35 for 24 treatments.

Oh, the confusion over on Rodeo Drive.

Remember a long time ago when Fred Hayman had a store called "Giorgio"? Then he and company introduced the fragrance Giorgio, and the world went nuts. Then he and company sold the fragrance along with the name.

OK, here is the scorecard as of today:

Hayman has a new fragrance out called "273," which stands for his store's address on Rodeo Drive.

Farther up the street, however, the familiar yellow-and-white awnings are out at the new Giorgio boutique at 327 North Rodeo Drive, which Hayman has nothing to do with.

IN ADDITION to stocking the signature fragrance and the second scent, Red, (and all the goodies to go with them) this Giorgio offers all kinds of clothing — from vests to gloves to sweaters — by California designers.

The new boutique is done around an Italian-garden theme, and it should be a good place to shop.

MR. and MISS CONGENIAL

Michelle Sanchez, daughter of Nick and Sylvia Sanchez, is a varsity cheerleader, football secretary, baseball scorekeeper, student council representative and member of Janee's teen board. She received the Optimist Youth Appreciation Award and is a volunteer for the Boys and Girls Clubs. She plans to major in business in college.

B.J. Parrish, son of Bill and Shirley Parrish, is a two-year member of varsity football and baseball teams, participates in Young Life, FCA, Bio-Med and NYI, a church group at First Church of the Nazarene. He plans to attend Angelo State University.

MR. and MISS TALENTED

Kimber Wilson, daughter of Freddie and Patricia Wilson, is a varsity cheerleader and was named a Universal Cheerleading All-Star. She is a member of National Honor Society, Bio-Med, Senior Girls and student council president cabinet. She is a member of Pappagallo and Bride's Shop teen boards, and received the Optimist Youth Appreciation Award. She is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students and plans to attend Texas Tech University.

Robert McGuire, son of Allen and Denna McGuire, is a member of National Honor Society, Spanish Club, Young Life, Teen Court and Lee's cross-country. He serves in two offices in band, was named to first chair region band and first chair region orchestra for three years, and recieved All-State band honors. He is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students, and plans to attend the University of Texas at Austin.

MR. and MISS COURTEOUS

Stacy Weaver, daughter of Otis and Margaret Parsley, is a member of FCA, Senior Girls, Business Professionals of America and student council president's cabinet. She has been student athletic trainer for three years and was named 1989 Football and FCA sweethearts. She is a member of Janee's teen board and plans to attend college.

Ty Chambers, son of Tommy and Leonore Chambers, has been on the varsity football and baseball teams for two years. He is a member of National Honor Society, FCA, First Baptist Church and Young Life. He earned two academic letters and is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students. He earned honorable mention All-District honors in football. He plans to study business at Texas A&M University.

Becca Ainsworth, daughter of Ron and Pat Ainsworth, was a trainbearer. She is treasurer for student council, a member of National Honor Society, Senior Girls and is a National Merit semi-finalist. She plans to attend Texas Tech University. Also serving as a trainbearer was Gaylynn Osburg, daughter of Karyl Osburg. She serves on student council presidents council, and is a member of Senior Girls and Young Life. She plans to attend Texas Tech University.

Crownbearers were Adrian White, daughter of Ronda White and granddaughter of Ron and Pat Ainsworth, and Jeff Hughes, son of Jody and Marybeth Hughes.

Red evolves into fashion's hottest new neutral color

By MARYLIN JOHNSON
N.Y. Times News Service

Church cardinals wear it. So does Riding Hood. And on Valentine's Day, lovers everywhere don the hue.

Vibrant and strong, red is fashion's newest neutral. "It can be mixed with anything," said Kaye Davis, fashion director of the Atlanta Market Center. "Traditionally, red brightened up navy, black, beige, white and gray. Now, designers are mixing it with everything — purple, pink, yellow, even orange.

"Brights are a strong trend for spring and summer, and red will continue to be an important force."

Psychologically, red is an emotional color, according to Dr. Perry Buffington, author of "Your Behavior is Showing."

"We associate red with intense human emotion, such as love, hate, anger. The color pulls emotion both from the observer and the wearer," Buffington said.

"If you wear red when you are feeling good, watch the number of compliments increase. Put a splash of red somewhere in an outfit, and a person's eye will automatically go to that area."

However, he cautions not to wear red when you are feeling vulnerable. "If you are depressed, you will get more depressed," he said. So, what should you wear? "A softer shade of red, such as pink."

There are a variety of reds on the market, ranging from true, fire-engine red to a deep ruby. In the book, "Color Me Beautiful," author Carol Jackson identifies four categories for women — based on skin tone and hair color — and the reds they should wear:

■ Winter: You have taupe-beige skin ranging from light to dark, rosy or just plain beige. A Winter may also have milky white skin. Most olive-skinned people, blacks and Orientals fall into this category.

Hair shades range from light brown to dark charcoal. Blue-black hair is typical of Winter, as is salt-and-pepper. Your best reds: true red, blue-red and bright burgundy.

■ Summer: You have visible pink in your skin. Summers are very fair and look pale without blusher. Blond hair shades range from towhead to ash blonde to dark ash. Brunet Summers range from light to dark brown. Your best reds: blue-red, watermelon red, and maroon.

■ Autumn: There are three varieties: the fair person with ivory or creamy peach skin; the true redhead, fair to dark, often with freckles; and the golden-beige brunette whose skin ranges from medium to deep copper.

Autumns include redheads, brunettes and blondes whose hair has darkened as they have matured. Your best reds: orange-red and dark tomato red.

■ Spring: A Spring's skin is either creamy ivory, peachy pink or peach-beige. A Spring's hair is golden blonde, strawberry, taffy-red or golden brown. Your best reds: orange-red and clear bright red.

DEAR ABBY

Stepgrandmothers known by many names

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You need some education regarding the politics of remarried families.

The terms "grandmother" and "grandfather" are titles of honor. In the remarried family, the "new wife" and the "new husband" are just that — they do not have any claim to grandparenting because they are not biologically connected to the grandchild. "Grandmother" and "Grandfather" are titles that belong only to the parents of the biological parents. They are not only titles of honor, but of respect for the historical and biological ties that have come down through the generations. They cannot be broken by divorce and remarriage. Biological ties remain from generation to generation.

Van Buren

In a world where divorce and remarriage leave children wondering who they really belong to, and where adults change spouses with frequency, let's keep the place of grandparenting as an anchor for all concerned. The "new wife" and "new husband" would be wise to realize all this and back off — and quietly ask their grandchildren to call them by their first names. — NANCY THOMPSON CLOSE, ATLANTA

DEAR NANCY: You are, of course, entitled to your opinion — as is Kay Crenshaw. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: You had a letter in your column in The Dallas Morning News that I must comment on because the subject is very close to my heart: What should grandchildren call their stepgrandmother?

As a stepgrandmother, my advice is to let the grandchildren call you whatever they choose. When I remarried, we had five teen-agers between us. After his two sons married and had children, they called me by my first name — Kay — because that is what their parents called me.

When I read the letter in the column concerning what grandchildren should call a stepgrandparent, two thoughts came to mind proving that what they call her really doesn't matter. First, my stepgrandson is the only left-handed person in that family. I am also left-handed; therefore, he tells people that he "takes after" Kay. Quite a compliment, because he's not concerned with whether I am his biological grandmother or his grandmother by marriage.

Second, two years in a row, one of my little granddaughters has crawled across her "real" (biological) grandmother and grandfather (my husband) to hop up in my lap to rest and be cuddled in my arms.

So good luck to that stepgrandmother who doesn't know what her husband's grandchildren should call her. May her children be as great a blessing to a second marriage as mine are to me. — KAY CRENSHAW, DALLAS

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the stepmother who was about to become a stepgrandmother — this is the way our family solved the problem 20 years ago. Before the birth of our sons, my wise stepmother came to us and requested that the children call her "Nana." We then had Grandma Jones, Grandma Smith and Nana. She's still Nana. — NO PROBLEM IN HARTFORD

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago there was a letter in your column about a virgin who got pregnant through her jeans.

My friends say it's impossible, but I'm sure I read it correctly. Is there some way you could verify this or reprint the letter? This means a lot to me, as several of my teen-age friends are sexually active, and I want them to be safe. — SAFE SEX IN ROCHESTER, N.Y.

DEAR SAFE SEX: The safest sex is abstinence — no sex at all. But here's the letter:

DEAR ABBY: I am a 19-year-old college student, and even though I've dated quite a bit, I'm rather naive about sex. I am still a virgin and hope to remain one until I marry. Don't get me wrong, I'm no "Goody Two Shoes," but I don't want to risk an unwanted pregnancy.

I'm dating a guy right now who has been around. He knows how I feel about sex before marriage, so he's never pressured me to go all the way, but I've come closer with him than I have with any other guy. I'm ashamed to tell you how far we've gone, but I'm still a virgin (I think).

A long time ago you explained how a virgin could get pregnant. I'm sorry I didn't save it, but I never dreamed I'd need it.

Well, last night I was with this guy and things really got out of hand. Everything happened so fast. Please run that piece again about how a virgin can get pregnant. I'm worried. — B., ST. PAUL

DEAR B.: The piece is from my booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Many junior and senior high school teachers wrote to say that they had read it aloud to their students.

HOW TO GET PREGNANT

One of the questions I have been asked often by teens is: "How far can I go without getting pregnant?"

That is not a dumb question. It's a very intelligent one. A lot of kids get aroused by just lying close to each other while kissing. Then they just naturally proceed to the next step, which is petting.

Sometimes they remove some of their clothing because it's "in the way," or they burrow underneath it to explore each other's bodies with their hands. This is known as heavy petting, or "doing everything else but."

The technical (and legal) definition of sexual intercourse is "penetration." (The male's sex organ must penetrate the female's.) However, as impossible as it may sound, in the medical literature can be found cases where there has been no penetration — the girl remained a virgin, but after engaging in heavy petting, she found herself pregnant.

How can that be? Simple.

The boy and girl were lying very close to each other (unclothed), doing "everything but," when a small amount of sperm leaked out ... near (not inside, but very close to) the girl's vagina. The sperm got into the moisture around the vagina and found its way up into it, and fertilized the egg!

The facts about drugs, AIDS and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Early Grammys skirted rock 'n' roll

In late 1950s, academy honors hugged middle of the road

NEW YORK (AP) — Roll over Chuck Berry and tell Bob Dylan the news. At the first Grammys banquet in 1959, rock 'n' roll was out in the streets.

In the beginning were Perry Como, Henry Mancini and Louis Prima. Rock 'n' roll was well established by the late 1950s, but the first winner for record of the year was Domenico Modugno for "Volare" while album of the year honors went to Mancini for the "Music From Peter Gunn."

Twenty-eight trophys were handed out that first Grammy ceremony in Los Angeles, which was not televised. This year, 77 Grammys will be given out during the awards broadcast from the Shrine Auditorium on Wednesday.

At the first show, Como won for best vocal performance by a male. Prima and Keely Smith were cited for best performance by a vocal group or chorus. So what happened to Elvis Presley, Little Richard and Buddy Holly?

"It baffles me as to exactly how so many important artists were not part of the process," said Michael Greene, president of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences, which conceived the Grammys shortly after forming in 1957.

"You look at the people who began the academy. It was started by the Nat 'King' Coles, the big band people, the jazz people. It has a way of kind of perpetuating itself."

Though started because many artists and technicians in the recording business were seeing their efforts go largely unrecognized, for years the Grammy Awards seemed like one long bloopers record for rock 'n' roll fans.

Though Presley never won a Grammy for rock, he received the Bing Crosby Award for "members of the recording industry who, during their lifetimes, have made creative contributions of outstanding artistic or scientific significance" in 1971. Presley did win three times for gospel albums, and twice — in 1967 and 1974 — for the same record, "How Great Thou Art."

Winners for record of the year include Percy Faith, Tony Bennett and Herb Alpert. Robert Goulet, the Starland Vocal Band and the Swingle Singers have all been cited as best new artist.

The album of the year in 1960 was Bob Newhart's "Button Down Mind." Two of rock's greatest singles, the Rolling Stones' "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction" and Bob Dylan's "Like a Rolling Stone" came out in 1965, but the best contemporary single Grammy went to Roger Miller's "King of the Road."

From 1966 to 1978, there was no category for best rock 'n' roll record. In 1975, writer Pete Hamill earned a Grammy for best album notes for Dylan's "Blood on the Tracks," though what he wrote was deleted after the first pressing.

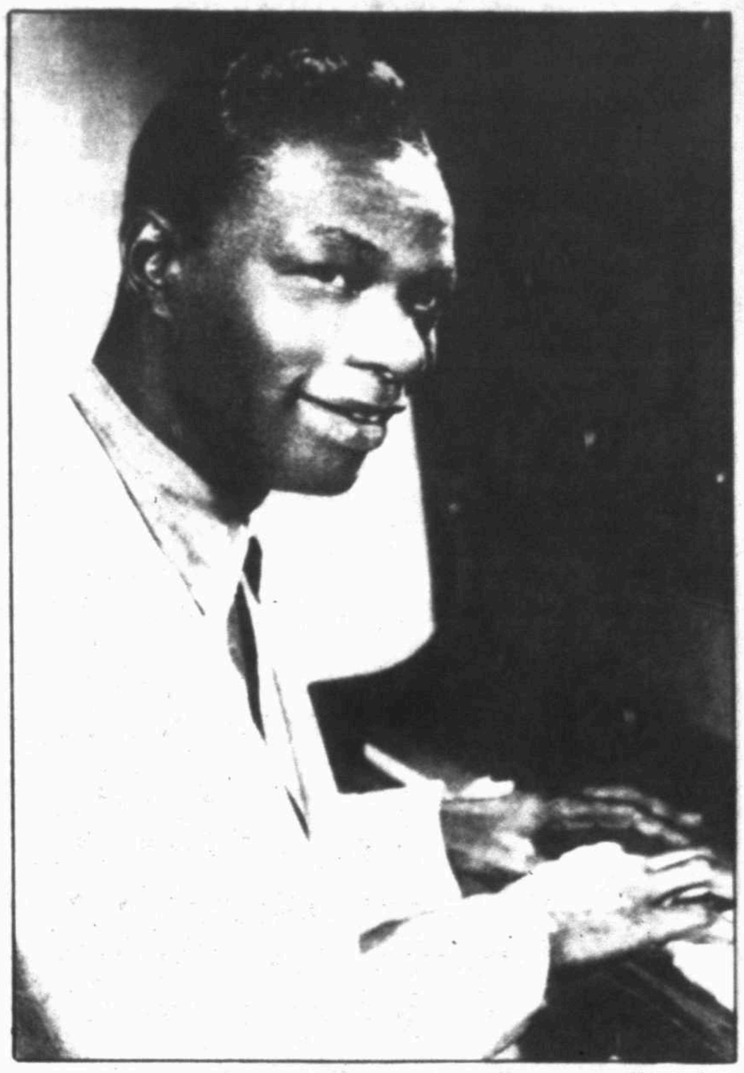

The same year, Bruce Springsteen released "Born to Run," but the winner for record of the year was the Captain & Tenille's "Love Will Keep Us Together."

Greene is a former musician and Grammy basher who decided the only way to beat the system was to join it. He worked his way through the academy in the early 1980s and after being elected president in 1985, gently nudged the Grammys away from Tin Pan Alley.

Categories for hard rock-metal, contemporary blues, new age and rap have been added. The Rolling Stones, Fats Domino and Paul McCartney received Lifetime Achievement Awards. But what about all those Perry Como fans? Were they ready to step aside for Public Enemy and Living Colour?

"When I became chairman we had around 5,000 members," Greene said. "We now are up to 8,000. Those additional 3,000 are as a result of membership outreach programs to communities we had not addressed before: rap, metal, new age, Hispanic.

"I refer it to as the graying of the academy membership. We had to come up with a formula which wouldn't disenfranchise the older membership. I think you can ask anyone; it's not a problem anymore. Those people who really had a problem, they had a choice to get with the program or step aside."

Something about this interview fell short

Connie Chung, CBS television newswoman, interviewed Donald Trump for her Saturday news series. Alas, she wryly told a New York advertising industry lunch this week, their chat was two weeks ago, before Trump and his wife split. Poking fun at herself, Chung said she now realized "why he answered some questions the way he did. I said, 'Is your wife, Ivana, your best friend?' And he said, 'I wouldn't call it my 'best' friend.'"

Later in the interview, Chung said, "I said, 'What are you missing in life?' And he said, 'Excitement.'"

Burgess's banned film finds home on stage

LONDON (AP) — Eighteen years after it was made, "A Clockwork Orange" still cannot be seen on British screens. But it is about to find a new home on stage.

Set in the next century and featuring music by members of the U2 rock band, the Royal Shakespeare Company's version extensively reworks a script by Anthony Burgess, author of the 1962 novel.

"A Clockwork Orange" remains best-known for Stanley Kubrick's controversial 1971 film, starring Malcolm McDowell as the marauding Alex, a 15-year-old Briton drunk on the joys of violence.

The film was nominated for several top Academy Awards but was also denounced for supposedly extending the frontiers of screen violence. In 1972, Kubrick withdrew it from British circulation because he was receiving death threats.

Written in "nadsat," an Anglo-Russian slang invented by Burgess, the novel and film were about Alex's love of violence and Beethoven, and the doctors who destroy both passions by meddling with his brain.

Burgess wrote the stage script simply to deter others from doing it, but lately he has taken to deriding his most famous novel.

"It's a terrible book in some ways. I'm not prepared to defend it," Burgess told the Independent newspaper.

But the play's director, Ron Daniels, disagrees. He calls the novel "a brilliant piece of work," and he believes the stage show will be "complex and interesting and vivid and at times funny."

"A Clockwork Orange: 2004," as the play-with-music is now called, opened Feb. 6 at the RSC's Barbican Theater in London, running in repertory through March 13.

"It's very much a morality play for the '90s," Daniels said during a rare afternoon off from rehearsals, as many of his cast are appearing in his concurrent RSC "Hamlet."

"Nowadays, after pictures of Vietnam, after punk, after video nasties, after all those appalling images of violence, the way I hope we will assess the novella will be not so much as a play about violence, but as a play about right and wrong," he said.

Alex, leader of the so-called "droogs" who get their kicks beating and raping others, is "the malefactor as hero, a modern-day Richard III," Daniels said.

"It's amazing how attractive the character is," Daniels said. "He's someone free from all sense of guilt. ... He says, 'I'm celebrating myself.'"

The stage version restores the original ending of Burgess' novel which was excised in both the American edition of the novel and in Kubrick's film.

"What happens is Alex goes back into the wide world; now he's 18, but he's no longer enjoying the ultraviolence, no longer enjoying the gang society," Daniels said.

"He's becoming a much more stable citizen, but at the same time we miss his creative energy. He's the brightest and the best."

Burgess' script includes musical numbers to Beethoven melodies. Phil Daniels, a 31-year-old Londoner and no relation of the director, plays Alex. The show features some Beethoven, while adding a contemporary sound provided by Bono and The Edge, two members of U2.

While "A Clockwork Orange" is not, Daniels emphasizes, a musical, its choreography by Arlene Phillips ("Starlight Express") involves knives and chains, not high-stepping chorus lines.

"The fact is we have a boy who is enjoying evil," he said.

To those who wonder whether it's a suitable project for the Royal Shakespeare Company, Daniels replies: "This is precisely the sort of front-line theater the RSC needs to be doing."

Caterpillars' coca appetite could be useful

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration is considering the use of millions of caterpillars that feed on coca plants to destroy cocaine at its source in Peru and Bolivia, an official of the United States Department of Agriculture said on Monday.

Waldemar Klassen, associate deputy administrator for the Agricultural Research Service, said the research to breed the inch-long malumbia caterpillar was part of an expanded project to develop new biological and chemical agents to use against sources of drugs.

The Bush administration is asking Congress expand the financing for the research in the 1991 fiscal year to $6.5 million from $1.5 million.

The project was first reported in Tuesday's issue of The Washington Post.

Klassen, who oversees the program, said the Bush administration had consulted the two Andean governments about using such a tactic.

"The sense I have, is that there isn't any discord over the malumbia," he said.

But some scientists are concerned that biological weapons might harm the balance among living things.

Walt Gentner, a retired Department of Agriculture plant physiologist, warned that coca plants only represent four of 150 genuses of the erythroxylum species and that the malumbia could attack all of them.

Klassen minimized the environmental impact, saying that the malumbia, which is related to the gypsy moth, was indigenous to the Andes.

The malumbia would be bred artificially for the program, Klassen said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Priest freed as rebels hit Colombian posts

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Guerrillas dynamited a power station and attacked police posts in Cartagena, and police seized 10 shoulder-fired missiles from drug traffickers four days after President Bush's visit, authorities said.

Also Monday night, leftist guerrillas freed an American priest who was kidnapped on Thursday to protest Bush's visit to the the Caribbean port city that day for an anti-drug summit with three Andean presidents.

Francis Amico Ferrari, 43, of Rochester, N.Y., said in a radio interview that he was released unharmed in Cali, the western city where he was kidnapped near his parish.

Two other Americans remained in captivity: 65-year-old James Donnelly of Detroit and 40-year-old David Kent of Indianapolis. They were kidnapped by guerrillas one week ago in the northwest city of Medellin.

Cuba would rather eat grass

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Cubans would rather eat grass than McDonald's hamburgers to preserve the purity of their Communist revolution, a Cuban diplomat was quoted as saying today.

"We don't have McDonald's in Cuba, but nobody's starving," Ambassador Elises Estrada Lescaille said in today's editions of the daily newspaper Horizons. "We'll eat grass, if necessary, to defend our revolution."

Lescaille appeared to be referring to the recent opening of a McDonald's restaurant in Moscow. The hamburger chain's Big Macs and fries were well-received by Muscovites.

Relations between Cuba and the Soviet Union have grown strained in recent months as President Fidel Castro insists on retaining the hardline communism rejected by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Nine killed in Contra clash

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government says nine people were killed in clashes with Contra rebels over the past week, but international observers are noting a lull in political violence as general elections near.

The foreigners say they expect Sunday's potentially pivotal balloting to be peaceful, free and fair.

"Over the last two weeks we had been rather worried about possible violence," Iqbal Riza of Pakistan, local head of the United Nations mission to observe the elections, said Monday.

"Over the last few days the tone has been lowered," he said, "and we are noticing a willingness by each party to avoid violence."

Tension had shot up over the past two weeks as the leftist Sandinistas and their majn challenger, the U.S.-backed United National Opposition coalition, exchanged threats of violence.

Talks planned in Zaire

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk will meet with at least five black African leaders this weekend in Zaire in what may be a major breakthrough in African politics, officials said today.

In an effort to ease friction with black states, de Klerk will meet Saturday in Zaire with the leaders of that country, Rwanda, Burundi, Chad and the African Central Republic to discuss regional issues and political developments in South Africa, said the officials.

Togo and Gabon may also be represented at the one-day meeting, which would be the first multination conference between South Africa's white-minority government and black African states, said the officials, who declined to be identified. South African presidents have had meetings with single black heads-of-state in the past.

The meeting could clear the way for South Africa to start establishing political and economic ties with black Africa after years of being isolated because of its apartheid policies, the officials said. South Africa wants to expand economic ties to help stimulate its own economy, they said.

Kaifu debates new Cabinet

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu, bolstered by what he called a vote of confidence in parliamentary elections, today discussed with other governing party leaders a new lineup for the Cabinet.

Members of the conservative Liberal Democratic Party's powerful executive and general councils tendered their resignations at meetings this morning, clearing the way for Kaifu and party powerbrokers to begin negotiations for the top Cabinet and party posts.

Party leaders also discussed strategies for battling the opposition over taxes and the budget when Parliament convenes later this month.

CALLING ME HOME
Calling me home, calling me home,
it's Jesus he's calling me home
Yes lord I'm listening to you,
Yes lord I know what to do,
Because Jesus your calling me home
Although we are feeling
our sorrow and grief,
Trust in the lord and you'll find relief
Thank you Oh Lord for calling on me.
Thank you lord for setting
my soul free.
Calling me home, calling me home,
it's Jesus he's calling me home
Yes lord I'm listening to you,
yes lord I know what to do,
Because Jesus your calling me home
He will always be in our hearts and in our thoughts.

SR-1 Qualifies for GI/FHA financing or VA will repair to qualifying condition. VA will also repair defects in the plumbing, heating and electrical systems if reported to the VA Management Broker within 30 days of loan closing.
SR-2 No repairs by VA. Strictly "AS IS." NOT ELIGIBLE FOR GI/FHA FINANCING.
SR-3 VA will make no repairs to swimming pool/hot tub or related equipment.
SR-4 Foundation settlement - no warranty from VA on foundation.
SR-5 Flood insurance required.
SR-6 Water serviced by well. VA does not warrant water or well equipment.
SR-7 Sewer service - septic tank. VA does not warrant system.
SR-8 Liquefied petroleum gas service. VA does not warrant system.
SR-9 Property is condemned and does not meet city code. Property must be repaired to code or demolished.
SR-10 Maintenance assessment to be paid to homeowners' association, not included in mortgage payments. (Information in listing)

SR-14 On term sales only, for owner occupied properties, seller will contribute 5% down payment on behalf of buyer if offer is submitted at or above listed term price.
SR-15 _____ believed inoperable and VA will not repair.
B A $500 bonus will be paid to broker by VA at closing.

WE NEED YOUR HELP: VA welcomes comments concerning the condition of our properties. Any improprieties should be reported to the VA Regional Office at 817-757-6869.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers when requested on the Cash Sale Addendum to Offer to Purchase. However, the combined loan discount points, buyers' closing costs to be paid by VA and the discount for cash may not exceed 10 percent of the term list price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 9.5 percent (APR 9.6 percent).

Purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-6705B, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale. Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter #17-88 dated May 25, 1988, outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:
