Challenger's flight recorders recovered

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Rough seas kept most of Challenger's recovery fleet in port today, after sources said divers had recovered all four flight recorders and some of the space shuttle's five computers.

The instruments, although submerged in salt water for six weeks, may tell investigators about the moments before and after Challenger exploded 73 seconds into its flight Jan. 28, killing the crew of seven.

Sources close to the investigation, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the recorders and computers were brought ashore Wednesday night along with more remains of the crew, parts of the flight deck, two unused space suits and other debris.

The recovery ship USS Preserver put back to sea early today but was forced back as winds gusting to 40 mph whipped up 10-foot swells and thunderstorms moved in on the area 20 to 40 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral.

"The winds are too high to allow us to operate side scan sonar and the seas are too high to put divers or submersibles in the water safely," said Navy spokeswoman Lt. Cmdr. Deborah Burnette.

In addition to the flight computers, the recovered monitors include the shuttle's two operational recorders, a payload recorder and a modular auxiliary data system recorder. They could provide information on such things as temperatures, accelerations and structural stresses.

They were being kept in cool water until they could be cleaned and dried under controlled temperatures and humidity at a NASA tape-recorder facility.

The computers, which were in complete control of the spacecraft during liftoff, may provide data on how the shuttle reacted during the thousandth of a second after the explosion occurred.

The Navy was hoping for better weather later today, so the ships could return to station.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration would like the Preserver's divers to get back to work as soon as possible so they can finish recovering the remains of the seven astronauts and cabin equipment.

Another priority for recovery is a 400- to 500-pound chunk which some officials say could be the segment of the right booster rocket believed responsible for the explosion. The piece was located 32 miles northeast of here Wednesday by a four-man submarine, the Johnson Sea-Link 2.

Still and television photos were taken of the booster part and were being examined by experts to determine if it is the suspect part. If it is, recovery could be difficult because of the 650-foot water depth and strong currents.

Launch photographs show a puff of black smoke spewing from near a joint between the lower two segments of the right booster and a plume of flame shooting from the same area 15 seconds before the explosion.

Trees honor astronauts

By JULIE HILLRICHS

About 680 Rusk Elementary School students on Thursday remembered the seven astronauts killed aboard the space shuttle Challenger as they planted seven fruitless mulberry trees in their honor during ceremonies held in the school playground.

"We are here this morning to remember our seven astronauts of the space shuttle Challenger," principal William Sherman told students in kindergarten through fifth grades. "As you grow up you'll see these trees growing — a reminder of the price these seven courageous people paid to insure our freedom."

Killed in the Challenger explosion Jan. 28 were Dick Scobee, Mike Smith, Judy Resnik, Ellison Onizuka, Ron McNair, Gregory Jarvis and Christa McAuliffe, a Concord, N.H., teacher.

The somber event opened with a flag raising ceremony in the school courtyard. Girl Scout Troop 192 also led the gathering in the pledge of allegiance, followed by the national athem.

Immediately following, school children — accompanied by their teachers and parents — congregated to watch fellow classmates plant the seven trees in a row that stretched north to south along the length of the playground. A permanent stake with the words "Challenger Seven" inscribed on it was driven into the ground as a final tribute.

According to Sherman, the trees were purchased and donated to the school by the Rusk Elementary School Parent-Teacher Association.

As children looked on, they sang "God Bless the U.S.A" in honor of the American space program.

It was a touching moment for young and old alike. Many wept while others stood silently — their right hand placed over their heart.

And they sang in unison, "And I'll proudly stand up next to you and defend her to this day. For there ain't no doubt I love this land. God bless the U.S.A."

'Cheap oil could seem like fool's gold,' oilmen told

From Staff and Wire Reports

The president and chief executive officer of Halliburton Co. Thursday predicted that Saudi Arabia will regain dominance of world oil production within five years, and the oil and gas industry will rebound.

By 1990 or 1991, the Saudis should be in a position to increase prices unilaterally because only they will have the production to meet increasing oil demand, Thomas Cruikshank told a meeting of the Permian Basin Oil and Gas Recovery Conference on Thursday.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries moved the oil industry away from the workings of the open market, the head of the well service said, adding that the recent return to market forces is painful but temporary.

Cruikshank said oil's price decline was almost inevitable. Saudi Arabia, in its efforts to prop up prices, had cut back production "to the point where it was disappearing," he explained.

He predicted that when the Saudis regain control of the market, they will inflate prices more slowly than in the 1970s — a move that won't encourage other countries to take extreme conservation measures, develop synthetic fuels or otherwise lessen their dependence on oil.

"The key now is to hang in there and be a survivor," said Cruikshank.

Falling prices are resulting in closure of stripper wells and less oil exploration, and soon could bring reduced production of Alaska North Slope crude, Cruikshank said. Consumption of petroleum products is likely to increase, he added.

"The forces we're talking about are those of supply and demand," he said.

Problems other than the Saudi actions face the oil sector, he said.

Proposed tax changes would burden the industry with higher taxes and threaten "the survival of our industry," Cruikshank said.

Chevron's Chairman George Keller speaks to the Society of Petroleum Engineers meeting at the 14th Biennial Permain Basin Oil and Gas Recovery Conference.

Chevron chairman addresses Midland recovery conference

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Most of the nation may be cheering low gas prices, but if $15 per barrel rates continue, the industry and the nation will be hurt, said Chevron's Chairman George Keller.

"The cheap oil that is such good news today could seem like fool's gold 10 years from now," said Keller, the top man for Chevron.

Prolonged depressed oil prices will shut in vital wells that will be expensive to start up again when reserves are low, Keller said. At $15 per barrel, the United States starts losing reserves and some of those losses are permanent, he said.

Keller spoke at the 14th Biennial Permian Basin Oil and Gas Recovery Conference that begin Thursday and ends today at the Midland Center.

"Lower oil prices are a two-sided coin. In the media we mostly hear about the good news of lower gasoline prices and lower inflation. But when you look a little closer you can see that we're only looking at the silver lining on a pretty dark cloud," Keller said.

Along with hampering efforts to find and produce oil, the low prices are also forcing oil corporations to trim their budgets and staffs.

"In a positive sense our industry has been trimmed down to fit," Keller said.

Chevron has reduced its capital exploration budget by 30 percent from $6 billion to $3.5 billion dollars for 1986. The corporation will also be laying off between 10 to 15 percent of its employees, Keller said. However, Chevron has not shut in any wells.

"The whole history of the oil and gas business is to adapt to changing times," Keller said.

While the industry has come through past busts in oil prices, the crisis is different today, he said.

"The most frustrating thing about the current situation is our lack of influence. We're not used to that."

San Antonio's 'mail-order' coyote will be prepared to return to wild

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A young coyote that may have been a stowaway to Louisiana or could have been shipped illegally through the mail has a new temporary home in San Antonio.

The animal arrived here Thursday from New Orleans, where she was discovered cowering in the city's main post office last week.

The 6-month-old creature today was at Wildlife Rescue and Rehabilitation Inc., a facility that rehabilitates wild animals with the intention of returning them to the wild.

"Someone was shipping her through the Postal Service and she got out of her crate," Wildlife Rescue Director Lynn Cuny hypothesized. "We don't know anything about her history, but that's the only way she could have ended up in the federal building."

Postal authorities are not certain whether the coyote got loose in the post office by breaking out of a mail crate or by unwittingly hitchhiking aboard a Louisiana-bound mail truck.

Tarrant County indictment may be state's first seat belt-related case

FORT WORTH (AP) — In what may be the first such case since a mandatory seatbelt law became effective Sept. 1, a Tarrant County grand jury has indicted the mother of a young boy who was killed after a January traffic accident.

Maria J. Galindo, 20, of Fort Worth was charged with criminally negligent homicide, a misdemeanor, officials said.

Police said Mrs. Galindo's son, 4-year-old Randy Galindo Jr., was not wearing a seat belt in the pickup truck, as required by state law.

The indictment accused Mrs. Galindo of not securing her son with a seat belt. If convicted, she faces a maximum sentence of a year in jail and a $2,000 fine.

The law requires that children younger than 5 be restrained by a seat belt or a safety seat. Drivers assume responsibility for the children.

The boy died Jan. 9, three days after his mother lost control of the truck on a highway, police said.

Free press now emerging in Haiti

By ED McCULLOUGH

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Harassed almost into submission by ousted President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier, Haiti's radio stations and newspapers are now sputtering to life.

Radio Metropole, which abandoned local news in November 1980 the day two of its top editors were exiled and another prominent station was shut down completely, resumed coverage the morning Duvalier fled the country on Feb. 7.

Le Matin, a daily newspaper that not long ago was unabashedly pro-Duvalier, now is publishing stories about the large sums of money he is spending in exile in France. Coverage of current events in Port-au-Prince has been expanded, and no longer is Duvalier's name printed in capital letters, as was its previous practice.

Le Nouveau Monde, the paper that had been owned and operated by the government, was closed by the military-civilian council that replaced Duvalier.

"I can say anything I want. I have no restrictions," says Pierre Bayard, publisher of the Haiti Times, a bi-weekly, English-language newspaper oriented toward business and tourism.

"Before, I had to be extremely careful. I had to ... set a softer tone. We had to say as much as we knew was true, without offending; because if you offended you risked losing a voice in the community," Bayard said.

There are two television stations in Port-au-Prince, and other newspapers, both daily and weekly.

But most Haitians receive their news through the dozen radio stations, because television sets are too expensive for the impoverished populace and newspapers have little impact on a mainly illiterate people.

Perhaps the most influential radio station is Radio Soleil, the Catholic station that defied Duvalier by broadcasting news challenging his government's version of events.

Last July, one of the station's program directors was expelled from Haiti in retribution, station administrators say, for their coverage of the national referendum on Duvalier's president-for-life status, and of the formation of political parties.

"We never told people to boycott the referendum," says Monique Vincent, the assistant to the director of the station. "But we informed them what it meant. The people themselves decided whether they wanted to participate."

The government reported a turnout of nearly 100 percent. Radio Soleil reported that among other irregularities, only half of all eligible voters participated, and that those who did often voted more than once.

The station was shut down briefly in December, when opposition to Duvalier was reaching a critical stage, but was back in full swing in January. It was virtually the only station reporting independently about the turmoil that marked the end of the 28-year regime of the Duvalier family.

"If it was not for Radio Soleil, there would not have been a revolution," says the Haiti Times' Bayard. "They had the credibility of the people."

"If Radio Soleil said there was a demonstration of 30,000 people, and the government said it was just a few hundred, people believed Radio Soleil."

Several stations and newspapers now are making the same effort to gather and report news.

Radio Metropole on Feb. 25 broke the story that a hated police chief under Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier — the late father of the ousted president — was attempting to flee the country. The report spurred an estimated 5,000 Haitians to converge on the airport, and the official, Luc Desir, was arrested by the army.

"For the reporter to have the guts to go up there and shoot a picture of Col. Pierre on the plane, that showed tremendous initiative," said Chris Fitzgerald, deputy spokesman for the U.S. Embassy and a former reporter for the Centre Daily News in State College, Pa. "That showed a real news sense."

"It's a very difficult situation for the press right now — to inform without pushing people too far," says Richard Widmaier, program director and a reporter at Radio Metropole.

"People want to say what they could not talk about for 28 years — their salaries, the members of their families who have been hurt by the Tonton Macoutes (Duvalier's dreaded secret police)," Widmaier said. "The press has a role to orient people to what is possible."

Ms. Vincent at Radio Soleil says, "If people complain the government isn't keeping its promises, we will report on it. That is our responsibility."

Shuttle panel reports rapid progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top NASA official says "it's great news" that the president's shuttle commission expects to be able to explain within a month how and why a booster rocket seal caused the space shuttle Challenger to explode.

As commission members gathered in Washington for a closed-door progress review session today, the space agency official said the report of rapid progress by the panel was a surprise that would raise morale.

"It's great news because some people here were beginning to wonder whether it would be years, plural, before the shuttle flies again," said the official, who asked not to be named.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials have fretted publicly that it might be a year or more until another flight is attempted.

The commission believes it will be able to finally rule out all but the booster seal as the "probable cause" of the Jan. 28 disaster within a week or two, well ahead of the June 3 deadline for the panel's report, said one source close to the commission.

It also was learned that commission chairman William P. Rogers actually would like to finish earlier than the 120 days allotted by President Reagan.

"If we need more time, we will ask, but there is no evidence now that we will need it," the commission source said. The earlier the panel's report comes in, the sooner NASA can get going on the $350 million worth of fixes it estimates may be required.

An interagency task force has been studying what direction the space program should take and how much it will cost. The Congressional Budget Office said that restoring the program will cost $5 billion, including a new shuttle and expendable rockets to launch some satellites.

But the NASA source said "the interagency panel is stalled totally by people who have no interest in seeing NASA get anything."

The commission is bringing in an outside expert to supervise the booster seal tests, because panel members are skeptical of tests conducted by NASA and its rocket contractor, Morton Thiokol Inc., the source said.

The boosters have been the chief suspect all along in the explosion that claimed seven lives. But a NASA engineer testified only last Friday that tests might take three months to firmly establish them as the cause.

The night before the launch, officials from NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., resisted objections made by Thiokol about the effects of cold temperatures on the booster seals, which had dropped to 29 degrees Fahrenheit. These officials insisted last Friday that subsequent tests have shown the seals do not fail until the temperature reaches minus 10 degrees Fahrenheit.

Commission members challenged those findings on grounds that the Marshall tests did not duplicate the Jan. 28 launch conditions after overnight readings of 24 degrees.

"The only thing that Marshall test proved was that at some point there is a temperature dependence," the source said. The new tests are to determine at what temperature the seals begin to deteriorate and what the effect of prolonged cold would be.

There are 12 of the large, rubber-like O-ring seals on each shuttle. Even a 1 percent failure rate at a given temperature would mean one seal would fail for every nine launches at that temperature.

The commission has publicly ruled out the orbiter, its three main engines and the powerful rocket in the orbiter's cargo hold as possible causes of the accident. The source said it is also near eliminating a leak in the external tank and the possibility that the booster rocket case split somewhere other than at the seal.

In addition to measuring the effect of cold on the booster's seals, the tests are designed to see if ice in the joint could have damaged the seals, whether cold could have ruined the putty that protects them or if a test port was improperly closed, the source said.

The Wall Street Journal reported Thursday that recent tests showed cold might crack the putty, allowing flaming gas to burn the O-rings.

The commission also wants to know if the O-rings were defective as manufactured or damaged when installed.

Chairman Rogers had "a private, very candid" session with John Young, head of the astronaut office and the most veteran American space flier, two weeks before Young went public with charges that safety had been subordinated to meeting flight schedules.

One source said the commission does not plan to have Young or other astronauts testify.

In other developments Thursday, sources at Cape Canaveral, Fla., said divers have recovered from the Atlantic Ocean all four flight recorders and some of the five computers aboard the Challenger, and they may provide valuable data about the space disaster.

The instruments may be able to tell investigators about the moments before, and after, Challenger exploded 73 seconds into its flight.

The sources close to the investigation, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the recorders and computers were brought ashore Wednesday night along with more remains of the crew, parts of the flight deck, two unused space suits and other debris.

KELLER

When the United States was producing more oil than it could consume before the '70s, depressed oil prices could be handled domestically, Keller said.

The industry used to be able make investments to improve the quality of material or do something to influence the government. Now the industry is stuck out on the ocean in a power motorboat with no controls, Keller said.

Oil prices could go in two directions within the year. Either prices will continue at $15 per barrel or producers will agree to decrease production and demand will push prices up to $20 per barrel, he said.

"Everyone's self interest would be served by a little less production."

If prices continue to stay at $15 per barrel the industry will survive.

"Even at the break-even point there's a strong incentive to continue, because it cost something to shut in wells," he said.

Keller took the positive alternative of his two predictions saying oil prices will probably increase to $20 per barrel before the end of the year.

"I do think there will be a meaningful recovery in prices by the end of the year...I hope I'm not too optimistic."

OIL

And industries that consume a lot of oil and gas, such as the steel business, haven't benefited from the present national economic recovery, he said.

"Never have we been in the fourth year of what is highly touted as an economic recovery with such a dearth of projects to expand the basic industrial capacity of the country," Cruikshank said.

Part of the problem stems from America's trade difficulties, resulting from a strong dollar and unfair trading practices by this country's trading partners, he said.

But a falling dollar and an increasing willingness to put pressure on those partners to bring about fairer relationships could help basic industries, Cruikshank suggested.

Astronaut corps may face increased turnover

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA's astronaut corps may face increased resignations because of suspended missions and lose veteran pilots in a policy change that would limit the time military fliers can work for the agency.

Paul Weitz, deputy chief of the space corps, said there is deep distrust, anger and disappointment among some astronauts about the Jan. 28 explosion of Challenger that claimed seven lives, including five astronauts. Some blame NASA engineers, whom they perceive as failing to prevent the accident, he said.

"A lot of people say 'I don't trust those bastards any more,' " said Weitz.

"What they are really saying is we've got a system that if it functions properly will do the right thing and it didn't do that. To me, it's more disappointment than anything else," he said.

He said some in the corps, dismayed at the prospect of waiting many months before space shuttles fly again, are thinking about career changes.

"They keep hearing words like two years (before shuttle flights resume)," he said. "I would expect they would be ripe to take advantage of what they perceive as opportunities.

"I think the potential is there for folks to find this an appropriate time to leave and go on to other things."

Veteran astronaut Don Lind announced his resignation this week, but NASA said he was accepting a position at Utah State University that was under negotiation prior to the Challenger explosion.

There currently are 95 astronauts, and a group of 10 to 12 are expected to be named this summer. National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials said they hope to stabilize the space corps at 100 to 105.

Weitz said a proposed change in Department of Defense policy for military pilots assigned to NASA may create still more difficulties for the corps. The space agency and Pentagon are negotiating on limiting to five or six years the amount of time military pilots can spend at NASA.

Military pilots now form the backbone of the shuttle pilot squad, and if their time with NASA is limited it will create a vacuum of experience, said Weitz. "There'll be a loss of continuity in the corporate knowledge among our pilots. I think it potentially is a problem."

Technically, military pilots are assigned to NASA for only five years, but this policy has been ignored in the past and most military astronauts spend a decade or more at NASA. Space agency officials said earlier this week that the Defense Department now wants the limitation to be enforced.

Spring planting season upon us

By HOLDEN LEWIS

Texas' spring planting season is here and the weather is cooperating with farmers, but some cotton farmers say the federal government is not.

In the next 90 days, most of the state is expected to record normal temperatures and rains, except for the southeastern section, which should get above-normal precipitation, said Dr. Michael Flynn, meteorologist with the Southwest Agricultural Weather Service.

The unseasonably warm weather earlier this year accounted for the early budding of citrus, peaches and apples and allowed for early planting of corn and sorghum.

Even with the good forecast, cotton continues to be a problematic crop for High Plains farmers, who are awaiting guidelines from the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"The big concern for growers right now are details of the farm program, which will have an impact on acreage," said James Supak, a cotton specialist at the Texas A&M extension service in Lubbock.

"They're sitting on pins and needles, grumpy as heck...waiting for somebody in Washington to make up their minds," he said.

Each year, farmers who accept loans from the government must set aside portions of their land to rest the soil. Usually, a quarter of the 4.5 million acres of cotton fields in the High Plains is set aside.

Supak said that sometimes up to 40 percent of the land is taken out of production.

Supak said cotton is planted from February to May and is picked in October to November. Cotton is fragile at some stages of its growth, and the impact of raindrops and hail during heavy thunderstorms can destroy crops if the thunderstorms hit at the wrong time.

Vegetable farmers also are waiting for the USDA to decide what to do about idle cotton farmland, said Dr. Roland Roberts, extension service vegetable specialist in Lubbock.

Roberts said cotton farmers might be allowed to plant vegetables on that idle land. He said that, if cotton farmers are allowed to plant vegetables, chiefly onions, they probably will not plant much because onions are expensive to plant.

Rio Grande Valley citrus farmers, say weather experts, do not have to worry about late freezes. They still are trying to recover from a freeze in December 1983 that killed about 70 percent of the crop and caused $100 million in damage.

Farmers harvest oranges and grapefruits from October to April, but the warm weather has pushed the season ahead about two weeks.

"We're starting to smell citrus and orange blossoms around the Valley, which is encouraging," said Dr. Julian Sauls of the Texas A&M Extension Service in Weslaco.

This season, the grapefruit crop produced about 4 percent of the pre-freeze level of 12 million boxes.

Orange production was 8 percent of the pre-freeze level of 6 million boxes.

He said the figures of 4 and 8 percent are somewhat misleading, because 30,000 acres were in production this season, compared with 70,000 acres before the freeze.

Spacecraft blinded by comet dust

WORLD

DARMSTADT, West Germany (AP) — The European spacecraft Giotto today beamed back the closest pictures ever taken of Halley's comet showing an egg-shaped iceberg surrounded by dust and gas, but the probe was blinded seconds before making its nearest pass.

"The signal was lost due to heavy impact of dust. But we consider the mission a complete success," said European Space Agency director general Reimar Lust.

Giotto had been traveling at 50 times the speed of a bullet, or 155,000 miles per hour, when it hit a "wall of dust the size of grains of sand," said Peter Wenzel, head of the agency's solar and atmospheric division.

After a 25-minute blackout, the probe began transmitting data again, but there were no more pictures, he said.

The craft's monitors had told mission controllers dust particles were bombarding it 120 times a second two minutes before the signal was lost, Wenzel said.

Until then, the craft was transmitting pictures every four seconds and had beamed back more than 3,000 before blacking out. Giotto's signal was lost when it was 415 miles from Halley's nucleus, at 1:10 a.m. (7:10 EST), said Roger Bonnet, the space agency's director of scientific programs.

Despite a loss of data, scientists believe that two seconds later Giotto passed the comet at a distance of 335 miles.

The craft's last photographs were flashed on West German television and showed an egg-shaped comet with a bright white center, surrounded by green, violet and red circles representing different layers of dust and ions.

As the signal died, the photos suddenly flickered, then blacked out, but Bonnet said it did not affect 10 experiments the craft was performing on the dust layers surrounding the comet's nucleus.

WORLD in brief

Palme suspect arrested

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Police announced their first arrest in the murder of Prime Minister Olof Palme, and a neo-Nazi group claimed responsibility for the socialist leader's assassination in a letter made public by a news agency Friday.

The group, calling itself the European National Socialist Union, sent a letter to the Swedish news agency TT that said, "We are behind the killing of Palme. German traitor Willy Brandt will be next."

Brandt, 72, a close friend of Palme, is a Social Democrat and a former West German chancellor. TT, quoting a source in the Swedish security police, said neither Swedish authorities nor West German police had any information on the group.

"It might be a newly founded international organization, set up by a former West German Nazi officer," TT quoted the source as saying.

The news agency said the letter, mailed in Sweden, said "the ENU sentenced Olof Palme to death at its annual conference at Berchtesgaden last September." It said ENU leaders from 13 European countries and the United States attended the meeting.

Pro-Cuban leader killed

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Police said they killed the head of a pro-Cuban guerrilla faction in a Bogota shootout, and army units were reported to be mopping up resistance today after bloody clashes with the same guerrilla group near Cali.

The National Police chief, Gen. Guillermo Gonzalez, said Alvaro Fayad Delgado, leader of the April 19 Movement, commonly known as M-19, was killed Thursday night after police surrounded a Bogota apartment building to capture him.

Fayad resisted arrest and died in the ensuing shootout with police, Gonzalez said in an interview with the Todelar radio network. He said a woman, whom he did not identify, also was killed in the fight.

Fayad was the leader of an estimated 3,000 fighters of M-19, which he helped found in 1970. The leftist group takes its name from a presidential election it claims was fradulent, and Fayad was its third leader to be killed.

He had been in hiding since being released from prison in 1982 along with dozens of other rebels given amnesty by President Belisario Betancur.

'Emergency' declared

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — The president imposed a nationwide state of emergency early today after the fired air force chief called on Ecuadorans to rally around an air base he has seized and threatened a mass march on the government palace.

Air force Gen. Frank Vargas, dismissed for insubordination by President Leon Febres Cordero two weeks ago, took over the Mariscal Sucre air base in Quito on Thursday, claiming the government had broken an agreement that had led to his surrender at the Manta air base on Tuesday.

Vargas had been in military custody at the Quito base, but was freed by other officers.

Twice Thursday night, Vargas went out into the street in front of the base to address hundreds of supporters who had assembled there. He told them he was ready to march on the government palace and urged them to form barricades to protect the base against any attack.

Another Begin on scene

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Thin, intense and a fiery orator, Benjamin Zeev Begin bears an uncanny resemblence to his father, the now reclusive former Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

But the 42-year-old political novice steers away from leaning on the family name, saying he will not accept the role of "crown prince."

"Benny" Begin, a government geologist and father of six, put up a game fight before losing a key post to former Defense Minister Ariel Sharon during this week's convention of the right-wing Herut Party, which the elder Begin helped found.

However, he garnered 44 percent of the 2,000 votes cast, and political observers agreed that Begin's defeat did not signal an end to his political career.

Hannan Kristal, a political scientist and newspaper columnist, said Begin "leapt into the water but didn't win the race first time round. He will try again."

Kristal, speaking in an interview, predicted Begin would run for one of the top seven Herut parliament seats in elections scheduled for 1988.

Soviet flight going well

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soyuz T-15 spacecraft carrying two veteran cosmonauts to a Saturday docking with the Soviet's newest space station is functioning smoothly, Soviet news media reported today.

Radio Moscow, in a brief report during its hourly English-language broadcast, said cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovev are feeling fine and performing tasks to prepare for the linkup.

The time of Saturday's rendezvous had not yet been disclosed.

Kizim and Solovev blasted off Thursday from the Baikanur Cosmodrome in Soviet central Asia. The liftoff was broadcast on national television, a departure from the secrecy usually surrounding manned Soviet space missions.

It was the first spaceship to be launched since the U.S. space shuttle Challenger exploded on liftoff Jan. 28, killing all seven astronauts aboard.

Mediator believes French hostage has died

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — A mediator indicated that two days of secret talks in Beirut led him to believe a Frenchmen held captive there has died, and a British television network said today it received film of three other hostages.

Visnews, the British television network, said that a statement accompanying the black-and-white video tape of the three hostages warned France that time was running out to accept the captors' demands and free the hostages. The film was not immediately broadcast.

Razah Raad, a Lebanese-born French heart specialist, arrived in Damascus on Thursday after negotiating for the release of the Frenchmen in secret meetings with their Shiite Moslem abductors.

Raad, 43, said he will leave for France today to brief the government on the outcome of his mission.

In an interview published today in Beirut's independent an-Nahar newspaper Raad was quoted as saying he would return to Beirut after France's National Assembly elections Sunday in which he is a candidate.

"A deal on releasing Marcel Carton, Marcel Fontaine and Jean-Paul Kauffmann will be wrapped up after the French elections. I shall return to Beirut after Sunday, March 16, to resume my mission," Raad was quoted as saying.

"I am optimistic. We have made long strides on the course of freeing the hostages," Raad was quoted as saying.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, a Shiite group believed to have ties to Iran, said last week that it killed hostage 37-year-old French researcher Michel Seurat, and on Monday it released photographs that it said proved its claim.

London-based Visnews Ltd. said its Beirut bureau had received a tape purportedly showing the other three hostages — diplomats Fontaine and Carton, and journalist Kauffmann.

The hostages spoke in French, sending messages to their families and appealing to the French government to secure their release, said Visnews. It said it was distributing the film and an accompanying statement to its subscribers.

Islamic Jihad says it is not holding a four-man French television crew that disappeared in a Shiite section of Beirut last Saturday.

Raad said in Damascus: "I discussed the fate of the first four held by Islamic Jihad. The other four (newsmen) are not with Islamic Jihad."

Earlier Thursday Raad had been quoted by an-Nahar as saying he was making progress in his negotiations for the release of the hostages. When pressed about the fate of Seurat, Raad said: "My optimism concerns the three remaining ones only."

He said nothing about whether Seurat might have died of natural causes, or whether he was slain. There has been no direct, independent confirmation that Seurat is dead.

Visnews said the tape was accompanied by an Arabic written statement that said if the company broadcasts the tape, "we hold the French government responsible for any delay in answering our conditions and this will be the last chance."

Raad, the only man with whom the pro-Iranian kidnappers say they will negotiate, began his latest independent mission Sunday. He has been to Lebanon several times before, trying to win the release of the four.

He left Beirut unexpectedly for Damascus on Thursday after reporting "tangible progress" in 48 hours of secret bargaining.

The reported progress in Raad's mission came after Iraq announced it pardoned two dissidents France extradited to Baghdad last month.

Islamic Jihad claimed it killed Seurat, a researcher for the French Center for Studies and Research of the Contemporary Middle East, in retaliation for the expulsion of the Iraqi dissidents.

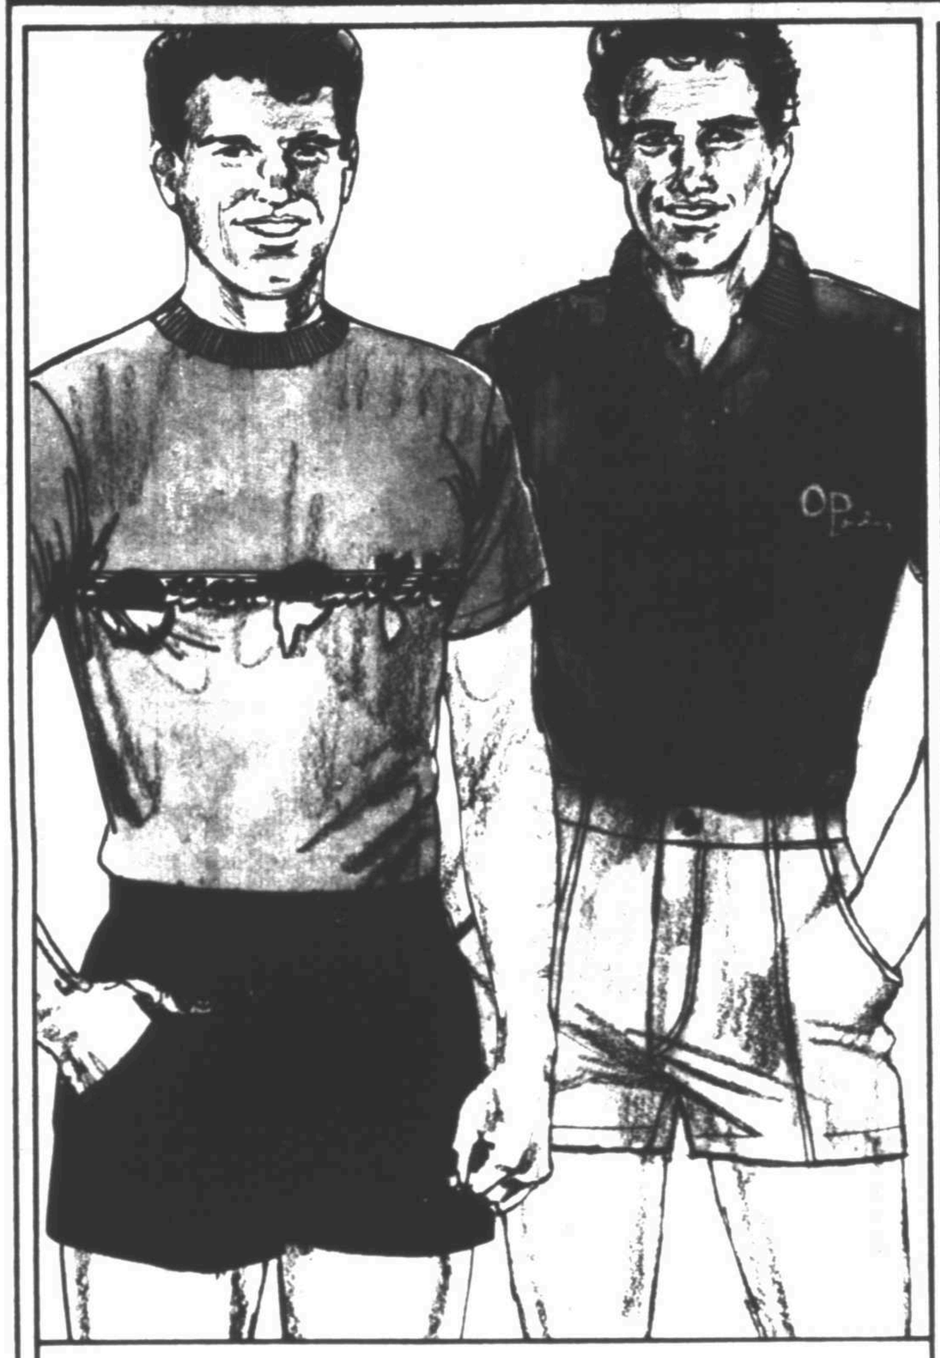

Islamic Jihad also demanded the release of five Arabs imprisoned in Paris for a 1980 assassination attempt on former Iranian Prime Minister Shahpour Bakhtiar, and a halt to French weapons sales to Iraq.

France has shipped an estimated $4 billion of arms to Iraq since Iran and Iraq began fighting a border war in September 1980.

Islamic Jihad claims to have kidnapped six Americans missing in Lebanon.

'Miracle' of desert causes foundation's coffers to overflow

VALLECITO, Argentina (AP) — Water and shade now abound where a parched Deolinda Correa collapsed under a boiling sun and passed on into popular immortality.

A dozen water-filled tank trucks arrive daily at the spot, to irrigate 5,300 trees spread over a man-made oasis, fringed by two restaurants, a gasoline station, souvenir stands, a campground and — soon — a 30-room hotel.

The cult of "La Difunta Correa," now in its 151st year, is big business in this desolate stretch of desert near northern Argentina's Andean foothills.

Despite occasional financial scandal and the Catholic Church's disapproval, hundreds of thousands of pilgrims come each year to give thanks — and lots of money — for services supposedly rendered by the dead woman's spirit.

According to legend, Deolinda Correa lived with her husband and infant son on the San Juan River in the early 1800s, when generals with their private armies fought for control of the new Republic of Argentina.

The husband was carried off in 1835 as a conscript by one such band, and the woman set off on foot after him.

She got as far as a rocky hilltop and died of thirst. But when mule-drivers found her body, the baby was still alive, nursing at her breast.

The story spread, and believers in the "miracle" began bringing bottles of water to her grave. The Difunta Correa — "The Deceased Correa" — was invoked as a nurturer of small children, a friend of brides and guardian of young mothers.

Now an average of 100 automobiles and a dozen tour buses arrive each day, mostly from San Juan city, 40 miles away. During Holy Week, which begins March 23, as many as 50,000 people are expected.

They still bring jugs of water. But that is just the start.

A stone mausoleum that shelters her remains in a brightly painted plaster sarcophagus is packed with every imaginable kind of offering: flowers, children's toys, braids of hair, souvenir ashtrays, photographs. Eleven replica chambers have been built to handle the overflow.

Not on display are the more valuable donations, which include jewelry, fur coats and cold cash — which averages $250,000 a year. This is quickly carried off to bank vaults, where a recent audit found 240 pounds of gold alone.

"They even donate motorcycles, cars and pickup trucks," said Maximo Diaz, administrator of the Vallecito Cemetery Foundation, which operates the site.

Most offerings are in payment for favors supposedly granted — the curing of a sick child, for example, or the finding of a job, house or spouse.

Diaz said the foundation sells off valuables to pay for operating expenses, including a 41-member staff. This displeases some pilgrims.

"Some people come back and complain, asking, 'Why was my donation carried off?' " he said. "I take out the books and show them how it was registered, put up for bid and sold, all legal."

In one large room, about 600 white wedding dresses with matching shoes attract as many as 10 brides-to-be each day.

Teacher 'test'

Teachers have been up in arms, in a manner of speaking, throughout Texas in recent weeks because of changes wrought in their profession that they apparently believe impugn their professional credibility and unfairly threaten their continued employment.

One of the major irritants has been the establishment of a required teacher competency test. Many teachers recently have voiced the opinion that their profession was being belittled and unfairly "recertified" whereas other professionals are not subjected to the same rigors.

While most teachers probably were miffed because of the requirement to take the test, which was administered Monday, few probably reacted as forcefully as a Greenwood speech and drama instructor who merely signed his name and walked out of the testing center, later explaining that almost daily he teaches his students to stand up for what they believe. "I could not in good conscience take the test," noted Mark Eells.

The original purpose from which sprung the much maligned no pass-no play rule and the teacher competency testing was a desire to improve the quality of education throughout the state. It was obvious from college entrance exam test scores and from the quality of students exiting high school in the state a couple of years ago that something had to be done. One way was to make students accountable for their performance and to verify that teachers were capable of instructing their classes.

The purpose was not to degrade teachers or to remove all the incentive for students to succeed and to become better than they had been before.

Maybe the people of Texas became a bit overzealous in their desire to remedy the deteriorating state of education overnight. That won't happen, of course. Education never happens in a rush. It happens slowly, through the compassion of individuals with the patience and the skill to impart knowledge to others.

The worst possible result would be the loss of competent, qualified and dedicated teachers who simply assumed from all the negative feedback of the people of the state that they should try another profession. That would undercut the very purpose of the drive to improve the quality of education in Texas because without teachers, learning doesn't take place.

The teachers in our society are special people. It's time to say to them: "Thanks for all your hard work. Keep it up. Our youngsters are depending on you."

Article didn't explain

After working for several months to get a write-up in the paper regarding our organization's purposes — the mission was finally accomplished. I refer to the Sunday, March 9, 1986, Local Section, article entitled "American Legion's Purposes Explained."

1. The lead sentence probably did more harm to the organization than can be imagined.

2. I am NOT the President of Post 19 but President of Unit 19.

3. We do NOT play poker with Vets at the Veteran's Administration in Big Spring — but we DO go once a month to the VA Medical Center in Big Spring to entertain the hospitalized veterans with a bingo party and take refreshments.

4. If I see "Old Glory" flying in the wrong position, I do NOT call up the "culprits." I merely cited an instance to the reporter of another group that has done this in the past.

5. In reference to the title of the article — nothing was really explained as to the purposes of the American Legion and its Auxiliary.

The American Legion is a veterans' organization made up of men and women who have served their country during war time. Their main function is to aid the veteran and his family.

Americanism does play an important part in our many programs. When called upon the Auxiliary has spoken to students on Americanism and flag etiquette. Flags have been presented (both outdoor and classroom size) to schools, nursing homes, court rooms, and the list goes on. Flags are placed on every veteran's grave on Memorial Day at sunrise and taken up after the memorial service.

Both the post and unit have taken an active interest in the community. We have supported the Battered Women's Center, MARC, CP Center, Hospice, High Sky Girl's Ranch, Christmas in April, Dress a Live Doll, and again the list goes on.

With the new bingo laws, monies raised from playing bingo must be used for charitable organizations and spent within the State of Texas. Our post puts out an estimated $40,000 per year from bingo proceeds, most of which is spent locally.

Both the post and the unit send students from each high school to Boys and Girls State. American Legion School Awards are presented each year. Oratorical contests are sponsored by the American Legion.

Poppies are pinned once a year, by the auxiliary, to remind us of the veteran and what he has done for our country. Proceeds are used to keep our programs going.

Membership dues are the main source of revenue. Although you might not want to attend meetings, it's the dues that keep us going. A portion of the local dues goes to department and a part goes to national. These monies in turn are used at the state VA medical centers and other VA programs.

The above mentioned programs are only a few of the many programs in the American Legion and Auxiliary. All veterans are invited to join — become active — and become involved.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1743, the first town meeting in America was held, at Faneuil Hall in Boston.

In 1879, physicist Albert Einstein was born in Ulm, Germany.

In 1883, Karl Marx died.

In 1923, President Warren G. Harding became the first chief executive to file an income tax report.

In 1951, during the Korean War, United Nations forces recaptured Seoul from the Communists.

In 1964, a jury in Dallas convicted Jack Ruby of murdering Lee Harvey Oswald, the accused assassin of President John F. Kennedy.

One year ago: In Geneva, U.S. and Soviet negotiators laid down their opening positions in their talks aimed at the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons on Earth as well as the avoidance of an arms race in space.

Thought for today: "It may be those that do most, dream most." — Stephen Leacock, Canadian educator (1869-1944).

Solon seeks to ban plastic pistols

WASHINGTON — We stirred up a tempest of alarm, denial and malicious innuendo when we reported recently that Libyan dictator Moammar Khadafy, the terrorists' friend, was dickering to buy a quantity of Austrian-made, semi-plastic pistols that are difficult or impossible for airport security measures to detect.

Jack Anderson

The pistol is the Glock 17, invented by an Austrian, Gaston Glock, and manufactured at a plant outside Vienna. Our intelligence sources told us Khadafy was trying to buy 100 to 300 of the handguns.

We also reported that a Pentagon security expert had succeeded twice in carrying a dismantled Glock 17 through the human and mechanical weapons detectors at Washington's National Airport.

After our January report, Glock and the Austrian government began issuing refutations in press releases and telegrams to major publications. Their concern was presumably heightened by the fact that Glock is attempting to market the pistol in the United States.

One Pentagon spokesman had the nerve to tell a journalist that he doubted the existence of the "Pentagon security expert" we said had tested the Glock 17 against airport security. For the record: The man who conducted the unofficial test is the Pentagon's top expert on counter-terrorism, Noel Koch, the principal deputy assistant defense secretary.

Glock told anyone who would listen that tests under the supervision of unnamed "official security specialists" showed clearly that "both scanners and detectors can identify the Glock 17," which has a mass that is 83 percent steel and only 17 percent plastic.

The point, of course, is that the metal parts, which are detectable, don't look like gun parts, while the plastic parts, which do look like a gun, escape detection. Koch proved this twice with a dismantled Glock 17.

In fact, Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., settled the matter beyond any nitpicking. One of his aides hand-carried the most recognizable part of a Glock 17 — its plastic, pistol-shaped frame — through a Capitol Hill metal detector without having it spotted. The rest of the pistol's parts, mostly metal, were in his briefcase and went through the scanner without being identified.

Meanwhile, both the Federal Aviation Administration and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms suddenly decided the problem of plastic handguns deserved attention. The aviation agency has since learned of a U.S.-made, all-plastic pistol, which is not yet on the market but which would be undetectable by a metal-scanning device.

Biaggi has introduced a bill, H.R. 4223, that would require federal security testing of all non-metal firearms, whether imported or made in the United States. If a weapon failed to be detected by standard scanning equipment, it would be outlawed, with a few minor exceptions.

How serious is the problem of a gun that can beat the airport security machines? Some FAA figures should make clear that it's deadly serious. Since mandatory screening procedures went into effect at U.S. airports in 1973, more than 33,000 firearms have been detected and almost 14,000 related arrests have been made. Officials estimate that at least 113 hijackings have been prevented.

Footnote: Glock told us he has never sold his pistols to Libya, and has no ongoing negotiations to do so. But other sources told us that, without Glock's knowledge, Khadafy was trying to buy the guns through intermediaries in Austria. It would be interesting to know if the salesmen have told Khadafy about Glock's claim that the pistol is easily detectable by airport security scanners.

UNDER THE DOME: Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., has been in the news more than most members of Congress lately because of his investigation into the Marcos millions. With un-Brooklynesque modesty, he has said he expects to sink back into obscurity — but we can't help wondering. The Democrats badly need someone to run against Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., in the fall. Beyond that, Solarz may have bigger things on his mind. Among the books he recently checked out of the Library of Congress were collections of speeches by Franklin D. Roosevelt and Adlai Stevenson — and several volumes by and about Winston Churchill.

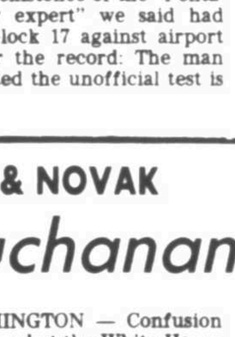

Jack Anderson is a syndicated columnist who along with Joseph Spear and Dale Van Atta writes this column for United Feature Syndicate.

EVANS & NOVAK

Buchanan line straight, narrow

WASHINGTON — Confusion reigned at the White House Monday after senior aides watching the morning television news saw President Reagan, in a hit-and-run interview taped while leaving his helicopter the previous day, suggest a deviation from Patrick J. Buchanan's hard line on Nicaragua.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The President seemed to be saying he was willing to compromise on aid to the contras — a shock to senior staffers, including national security adviser John Poindexter. But Reagan soon reassured aides that this was merely a communications failure. He had meant to say, the president explained, that he was willing to "talk" to his congressional adversaries — but not compromise.

That suggests how difficult the Buchanan line is to hold and how contrary it is to the way business usually is done in Washington. Instead of commencing the salami-slicing customary for controversial proposals, the president is insisting that minimum standards must be met to keep anti-communist guerrillas in the field.

The future of both Central America and the Reagan Doctrine's effort to roll back the boundaries of communism are at stake. The challenge for the Reagan administration is to disprove the thesis of Jean-Francois Revel's "How Democracies Perish" that lack of will ushers in communist dictatorships. To do so, a sixth-year, supposedly lame-duck presidency will have to pursue a two-fisted no-compromise line.

That line was proposed by Buchanan just over a year ago when he left journalism to become White House communications director: If the Democratic-controlled House refused to aid the contras, let them suffer the political consequences of "losing" Central America — amid sharp reminders from Republicans over who is responsible.

Non-ideological aides brought in by Donald T. Regan as chief of staff to begin the second term flinched at Buchanan's proposal. Instead, they continued what had been going on the previous four years during which the president had only fitfully directed public attention to the communist drive for Central America.

The underlying reason for such inattention by the old anti-communist in the Oval Office was polls showing the American people know little about Central America and care less. That led to first-term advice, passively accepted by Reagan, not to risk undermining his popularity by pressing the issue.

Buchanan, with a year's West Wing experience behind him, has succeeded in getting the hard line in place. But the year's delay has brought deterioration. The 1986 compromise "non-lethal" aid package has left the contras helpless against the heavily-reinforced Sandinista army. The Managua regime's population relocation is depriving the contras of their support base. They are losing the war and losing it badly.

In the face of a massive disinformation campaign alleging contra human rights abuses, Buchanan struck with his Washington Post article asking Democrats "who's side are you on" in Central America. Cries of McCarthyism by Democratic leaders betray how deep the sword struck. For the first time, the attention of the political community — if not the nation — was aroused.

The difficulty will be in hewing to Buchanan's tactics if, as seems most likely, the House rejects the package. A compromise of putting military aid in escrow for 120 days, dependent on a series of intricate conditions, would signal nervous Latin American leaders that Washington is still not serious. Yet the rejection of such a deal would require toughness contrary to normal domestic politics.

It is uncongenial for many Republicans. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum's attack on Buchanan reflects widespread feeling in the party, particularly among professional politicians, that this way leads to defeat. Although there is a facade of unanimity in the White House, senior aides have expressed to us the belief that Buchanan's is a no-win policy.

Even Ronald Reagan, while sharing Buchanan's anti-communism, is more prone to conciliation than confrontation. Aides think that explains his self-described misstatement to the TV reporters outside his helicopter Sunday. It also suggests difficulty by the president in suggesting that congressional rejection of contra aid means Democratic adherence to a Brezhnev Doctrine for Latin America — a virtual guarantee for the survival of a Marxist state once it has been put in place.

A test for Reagan will come after March 19 if the aid package is indeed defeated. But will the president then really engage the attention of American voters on what has happened, holding accountable those responsible? Or will he do what comes far more naturally — accede to a watered-down formula that dooms the contras and entrenches the Marxists? More than the fate of Pat Buchanan's line is at stake in the answer.

CHARLEY REESE

Conformity not always appealing

Rambling around the country for a month, as I've just finished doing, will show you just how much our regional differences have been eradicated by conformity.

Charley Reese

Franchised sleeperies and eateries are pretty much indistinguishable from one state to the next, from one region to the next. Except for the weather outside, you can't tell from the room decor or the menu if you are in the Deep South or the Great White North. As the writer Gertrude Stein would have put it, a Holiday Inn is a Holiday Inn is a Holiday Inn.

I am not entirely put out by this. Conformity that provides clean beds and edible food is no vice and local color that means lumpy beds and indigestion is no virtue. I have been in joints where local color means watching a fly valiantly trying to escape from the dressing on your salad. I have slept in thin-walled places where you learned more about the people in the next room than you really wanted to know.

Still, it can be aggravating. Driving back from the Rust Belt recently, I pushed on to South Carolina because I had a yearning for some Southern barbecue. I stopped at Rock Hill, S.C. In days gone by, it would be inconceivable for a Southern town the size of Rock Hill not to have a barbecue restaurant. No more. All the standard franchised eateries were there, often stacked side by side, and offering exactly the same food I could have bought in the places I had left or in the places I was going to.

Television is the same everywhere, too. The national commercials and programs are obviously the same. What's interesting is the remarkable conformity in local programming. The local news shows are pretty much the same standardized format with either one anchor, a weatherman, and sports guy or two anchors plus weather and sports. The sets are similar. The jingles are similar. The promotional introductions are similar. No doubt the stations use the same consultants.

Even local commercials are the same. Apparently bad taste is as widely and as evenly spread as franchised eateries and jingles. It does simplify decision-making. If you think television isn't worth watching at home, you can be sure it won't be worth watching away from home either. Ditto for the radio stations. Disc jockeys who sound remarkably alike play the same records from one state to the next.

The up side is that transportation and communications technology are turning us into one nation in a way we never were before. The down side is we seem to be standardizing the worst, instead of the best, aspects of our formerly diverse culture.

In the case of television, what is being transmitted is mainly the cultural values and opinions of Los Angeles and New York, which is where most national television programming originates. There is a relatively small number of people involved in an industry that has a nationwide audience. Whatever the "in" topics are with them show up in all the programming.

That may account for the feeling that grew on me that much of our national communications has become irrelevant. The America reflected from the video screen in both the entertainment and commercial segments seems to have little connection with the country the rest of us are living in. To be in areas of high unemployment and closed factories and to watch the endless images of affluence in living color gives you an odd feeling, almost as if you were watching a science fiction film in technicolor while living in a black and white world.

Before you start thinking to yourself that there is strength in unity, remember that unity and conformity are not the same thing. Remember, too, there is strength in diversity.

In fact, the whole utilitarian justification for individual liberty rests on the premise that there is strength in diversity — that many different minds, free to pursue their own solutions, are better than one mind telling everybody else what to think.

Besides, I like barbecue better than fried fish or hamburgers.

Philippine poor tour palace

By ALEX GAW

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino today welcomed hundreds of Manila slumdwellers to the presidential palace, telling them that a look at the opulence inside would help them understand the revolt that sent Ferdinand E. Marcos into exile.

The poor of the Philippine capital fought for a chance to go through the palace on the second day after Mrs. Aquino fulfilled a campaign promise and opened it to the public.

Meanwhile, the Philippines Daily Inquirer newspaper said the government had frozen the bank accounts of another 18 Marcos associates, bringing to 51 the number of such accounts frozen this week.

An official of the Commission on Good Government set up by Mrs. Aquino after Marcos fled to Hawaii Feb. 26 has said Thursday that 33 accounts had been frozen and that the list was expected to grow. The commission is seeking to recover $5 billion to $10 billion Marcos allegedly plundered during his 20 years in office.

Mrs. Aquino opened Malacanang palace to the public on Thursday, and today welcomed a group of about 400 visitors who were among the 20 busloads brought in.

"I think you will understand (when you see the palace) why our country went the way it did," Mrs. Aquino said in Tagalog.

At another area of the palace, an irate mob of 700 stormed towards iron gates, shouting invectives at 10 security guards trying to maintain order and prevent people from scaling the gates. Women and children emerged dishevelled and in tears.

"Yesterday was bad, but it was nothing like this," said a stunned woman volunteer guide after comforting three hysterical American children who lost their mother in the confusion. Foreign tourists also were being allowed into the palace.

Inside the palace a group of elderly women viewing Imelda Marcos' huge collection of ballroom gowns and 6,000 shoes.

"This, this is why we're scratching for a living," one woman, pointing to Mrs. Marcos' fur coats.

Manila residents gather at the gate of Malacanang Palace in an effort to gain entry during formal opening of the facility to public viewing.

Flora Agoncillo, 52, walking in her crutches into Mrs. Marcos' huge bedroom, said she did not take any work as a laundrywoman for the day just to see the palace.

"I'm astounded. They were luxuriating while all of us were suffering," she said.

The chief U.S. foreign aid administrator commended Filipinos at the dedication of a $1.2 million science building at Ateneo de Manila University.

" 'People Power' may be the example for other peoples needing and wanting a change of government," said Agency for International Development Administrator M. Peter McPherson.

McPherson, reviewing U.S. AID programs to the Philippines with other U.S. officials, said the building funded with an aid grant "reaffirms the U.S. government's steadfast commitment to support private institutions."

Officials in the United States announced Thursday that two federal grand juries are examining whether Marcos and other members of his government illegally pocketed millions of dollars.

A federal law enforcement source said a grand jury in Pittsburgh is investigating whether Marcos got most of $80 million that may have been paid to one of his close associates by Westinghouse Electric Corp. That probe involves the company's successful attempt to win a $600 million contract to build the first nuclear reactor in the Philippines.

Gen. Fabian C. Ver, former chief of the Philippines armed forces was served with a subpoena in an investigation by a federal grand jury in Alexandria, Va., of possible kickbacks involving more than $100 million in U.S. military aid.

Teacher 'test'

Teachers have been up in arms, in a manner of speaking, throughout Texas in recent weeks because of changes wrought in their profession that they apparently believe impugn their professional credibility and unfairly threaten their continued employment.

One of the major irritants has been the establishment of a required teacher competency test. Many teachers recently have voiced the opinion that their profession was being belittled and unfairly "recertified" whereas other professionals are not subjected to the same rigors.

While most teachers probably were miffed because of the requirement to take the test, which was administered Monday, few probably reacted as forcefully as a Greenwood speech and drama instructor who merely signed his name and walked out of the testing center, later explaining that almost daily he teaches his students to stand up for what they believe. "I could not in good conscience take the test," noted Mark Eells.

The original purpose from which sprung the much maligned no pass-no play rule and the teacher competency testing was a desire to improve the quality of education throughout the state. It was obvious from college entrance exam test scores and from the quality of students exiting high school in the state a couple of years ago that something had to be done. One way was to make students accountable for their performance and to verify that teachers were capable of instructing their classes.

The purpose was not to degrade teachers or to remove all the incentive for students to succeed and to become better than they had been before.

Maybe the people of Texas became a bit overzealous in their desire to remedy the deteriorating state of education overnight. That won't happen, of course. Education never happens in a rush. It happens slowly, through the compassion of individuals with the patience and the skill to impart knowledge to others.

The worst possible result would be the loss of competent, qualified and dedicated teachers who simply assumed from all the negative feedback of the people of the state that they should try another profession. That would undercut the very purpose of the drive to improve the quality of education in Texas because without teachers, learning doesn't take place.

The teachers in our society are special people. It's time to say to them: "Thanks for all your hard work. Keep it up. Our youngsters are depending on you."

Article didn't explain

After working for several months to get a write-up in the paper regarding our organization's purposes — the mission was finally accomplished. I refer to the Sunday, March 9, 1986, Local Section, article entitled "American Legion's Purposes Explained."

1. The lead sentence probably did more harm to the organization than can be imagined.

2. I am NOT the President of Post 19 but President of Unit 19.

3. We do NOT play poker with Vets at the Veteran's Administration in Big Spring — but we DO go once a month to the VA Medical Center in Big Spring to entertain the hospitalized veterans with a bingo party and take refreshments.

4. If I see "Old Glory" flying in the wrong position, I do NOT call up the "culprits." I merely cited an instance to the reporter of another group that has done this in the past.

5. In reference to the title of the article — nothing was really explained as to the purposes of the American Legion and its Auxiliary.

The American Legion is a veterans' organization made up of men and women who have served their country during war time. Their main function is to aid the veteran and his family.

Americanism does play an important part in our many programs. When called upon the Auxiliary has spoken to students on Americanism and flag etiquette. Flags have been presented (both outdoor and classroom size) to schools, nursing homes, court rooms, and the list goes on. Flags are placed on every veteran's grave on Memorial Day at sunrise and taken up after the memorial service.

Both the post and unit have taken an active interest in the community. We have supported the Battered Women's Center, MARC, CP Center, Hospice, High Sky Girl's Ranch, Christmas in April, Dress a Live Doll, and again the list goes on.

With the new bingo laws, monies raised from playing bingo must be used for charitable organizations and spent within the State of Texas. Our post puts out an estimated $40,000 per year from bingo proceeds, most of which is spent locally.

Both the post and the unit send students from each high school to Boys and Girls State. American Legion School Awards are presented each year. Oratorical contests are sponsored by the American Legion.

Poppies are pinned once a year, by the auxiliary, to remind us of the veteran and what he has done for our country. Proceeds are used to keep our programs going.

Membership dues are the main source of revenue. Although you might not want to attend meetings, it's the dues that keep us going. A portion of the local dues goes to department and a part goes to national. These monies in turn are used at the state VA medical centers and other VA programs.

The above mentioned programs are only a few of the many programs in the American Legion and Auxiliary. All veterans are invited to join — become active — and become involved.

Joni Porter, President
American Legion Auxiliary
Woods W. Lynch Unit 19

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1743, the first town meeting in America was held, at Faneuil Hall in Boston.

In 1879, physicist Albert Einstein was born in Ulm, Germany.

In 1883, Karl Marx died.

In 1923, President Warren G. Harding became the first chief executive to file an income tax report.

In 1951, during the Korean War, United Nations forces recaptured Seoul from the Communists.

In 1964, a jury in Dallas convicted Jack Ruby of murdering Lee Harvey Oswald, the accused assassin of President John F. Kennedy.

One year ago: In Geneva, U.S. and Soviet negotiators laid down their opening positions in their talks aimed at the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons on Earth as well as the avoidance of an arms race in space.

Thought for today: "It may be those that do most, dream most." — Stephen Leacock, Canadian educator (1869-1944).

Solon seeks to ban plastic pistols

WASHINGTON — We stirred up a tempest of alarm, denial and malicious innuendo when we reported recently that Libyan dictator Moammar Khadafy, the terrorists' friend, was dickering to buy a quantity of Austrian-made, semi-plastic pistols that are difficult or impossible for airport security measures to detect.

Jack Anderson

The pistol is the Glock 17, invented by an Austrian, Gaston Glock, and manufactured at a plant outside Vienna. Our intelligence sources told us Khadafy was trying to buy 100 to 300 of the handguns.

We also reported that a Pentagon security expert had succeeded twice in carrying a dismantled Glock 17 through the human and mechanical weapons detectors at Washington's National Airport.

After our January report, Glock and the Austrian government began issuing refutations in press releases and telegrams to major publications. Their concern was presumably heightened by the fact that Glock is attempting to market the pistol in the United States.

One Pentagon spokesman had the nerve to tell a journalist that he doubted the existence of the "Pentagon security expert" we said had tested the Glock 17 against airport security. For the record: The man who conducted the unofficial test is the Pentagon's top expert on counter-terrorism, Noel Koch, the principal deputy assistant defense secretary.

Glock told anyone who would listen that tests under the supervision of unnamed "official security specialists" showed clearly that "both scanners and detectors can identify the Glock 17," which has a mass that is 83 percent steel and only 17 percent plastic.

The point, of course, is that the metal parts, which are detectable, don't look like gun parts, while the plastic parts, which do look like a gun, escape detection. Koch proved this twice with a dismantled Glock 17.

In fact, Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., settled the matter beyond any nitpicking. One of his aides hand-carried the most recognizable part of a Glock 17 — its plastic, pistol-shaped frame — through a Capitol Hill metal detector without having it spotted. The rest of the pistol's parts, mostly metal, were in his briefcase and went through the scanner without being identified.

Meanwhile, both the Federal Aviation Administration and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms suddenly decided the problem of plastic handguns deserved attention. The aviation agency has since learned of a U.S.-made, all-plastic pistol, which is not yet on the market but which would be undetectable by a metal-scanning device.

Biaggi has introduced a bill, H.R. 4223, that would require federal security testing of all non-metal firearms, whether imported or made in the United States. If a weapon failed to be detected by standard scanning equipment, it would be outlawed, with a few minor exceptions.

How serious is the problem of a gun that can beat the airport security machines? Some FAA figures should make clear that it's deadly serious. Since mandatory screening procedures went into effect at U.S. airports in 1973, more than 33,000 firearms have been detected and almost 14,000 related arrests have been made. Officials estimate that at least 113 hijackings have been prevented.

Footnote: Glock told us he has never sold his pistols to Libya, and has no ongoing negotiations to do so. But other sources told us that, without Glock's knowledge, Khadafy was trying to buy the guns through intermediaries in Austria. It would be interesting to know if the salesmen have told Khadafy about Glock's claim that the pistol is easily detectable by airport security scanners.

UNDER THE DOME: Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., has been in the news more than most members of Congress lately because of his investigation into the Marcos millions. With un-Brooklynesque modesty, he has said he expects to sink back into obscurity — but we can't help wondering. The Democrats badly need someone to run against Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., in the fall. Beyond that, Solarz may have bigger things on his mind. Among the books he recently checked out of the Library of Congress were collections of speeches by Franklin D. Roosevelt and Adlai Stevenson — and several volumes by and about Winston Churchill.

Buchanan line straight, narrow

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The President seemed to be saying he was willing to compromise on aid to the contras — a shock to senior staffers, including national security adviser John Poindexter. But Reagan soon reassured aides that this was merely a communications failure. He had meant to say, the president explained, that he was willing to "talk" to his congressional adversaries — but not compromise.

That suggests how difficult the Buchanan line is to hold and how contrary it is to the way business usually is done in Washington. The local news shows are pretty much the same standardized format with either one anchor, a weatherman, and sports guy or two anchors plus weather and sports. The sets are similar. The jingles are similar. The promotional introductions are similar. No doubt the stations use the same consultants.

Even local commercials are the same. Apparently bad taste is as widely and as evenly spread as franchised eateries and jingles. It does simplify decision-making. If you think television isn't worth watching at home, you can be sure it won't be worth watching away from home either. Ditto for the radio stations. Disc jockeys who sound remarkably alike play the same records from one state to the next.

The up side is that transportation and communications technology are turning us into one nation in a way we never were before. The down side is we seem to be standardizing the worst, instead of the best, aspects of our formerly diverse culture.

In the case of television, what is being transmitted is mainly the cultural values and opinions of Los Angeles and New York, which is where most national television programming originates. There is a relatively small number of people involved in an industry that has a nationwide audience. Whatever the "in" topics are with them show up in all the programming.

That may account for the feeling that grew on me that much of our national communications has become irrelevant. The America reflected from the video screen in both the entertainment and commercial segments seems to have little connection with the country the rest of us are living in. To be in areas of high unemployment and closed factories and to watch the endless images of affluence in living color gives you an odd feeling, almost as if you were watching a science fiction film in technicolor while living in a black and white world.

Before you start thinking to yourself that there is strength in unity, remember that unity and conformity are not the same thing. Remember, too, there is strength in diversity.

In fact, the whole utilitarian justification for individual liberty rests on the premise that there is strength in diversity — that many different minds, free to pursue their own solutions, are better than one mind telling everybody else what to think.

Besides, I like barbecue better than fried fish or hamburgers.

Philippine poor tour palace

By ALEX GAW

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino today welcomed hundreds of Manila slumdwellers to the presidential palace, telling them that a look at the opulence inside would help them understand the revolt that sent Ferdinand E. Marcos into exile.

The poor of the Philippine capital fought for a chance to go through the palace on the second day after Mrs. Aquino fulfilled a campaign promise and opened it to the public.

Meanwhile, the Philippines Daily Inquirer newspaper said the government had frozen the bank accounts of another 18 Marcos associates, bringing to 51 the number of such accounts frozen this week.

An official of the Commission on Good Government set up by Mrs. Aquino after Marcos fled to Hawaii Feb. 26 has said Thursday that 33 accounts had been frozen and that the list was expected to grow. The commission is seeking to recover $5 billion to $10 billion Marcos allegedly plundered during his 20 years in office.

Mrs. Aquino opened Malacanang palace to the public on Thursday, and today welcomed a group of about 400 visitors who were among the 20 busloads brought in.

"I think you will understand (when you see the palace) why our country went the way it did," Mrs. Aquino said in Tagalog.

At another area of the palace, an irate mob of 700 stormed towards iron gates, shouting invectives at 10 security guards trying to maintain order and prevent people from scaling the gates. Women and children emerged dishevelled and in tears.

"Yesterday was bad, but it was nothing like this," said a stunned woman volunteer guide after comforting three hysterical American children who lost their mother in the confusion. Foreign tourists also were being allowed into the palace.

Inside the palace a group of elderly women viewing Imelda Marcos' huge collection of ballroom gowns and 6,000 shoes.

"This, this is why we're scratching for a living," one woman, pointing to Mrs. Marcos' fur coats.

Manila residents gather at the gate of Malacanang Palace in an effort to gain entry during formal opening of the facility to public viewing.

Flora Agoncillo, 52, walking in her crutches into Mrs. Marcos' huge bedroom, said she did not take any work as a laundrywoman for the day just to see the palace.

"I'm astounded. They were luxuriating while all of us were suffering," she said.

The chief U.S. foreign aid administrator commended Filipinos at the dedication of a $1.2 million science building at Ateneo de Manila University.

" 'People Power' may be the example for other peoples needing and wanting a change of government," said Agency for International Development Administrator M. Peter McPherson.

McPherson, reviewing U.S. AID programs to the Philippines with other U.S. officials, said the building funded with an aid grant "reaffirms the U.S. government's steadfast commitment to support private institutions."

Officials in the United States announced Thursday that two federal grand juries are examining whether Marcos and other members of his government illegally pocketed millions of dollars.

A federal law enforcement source said a grand jury in Pittsburgh is investigating whether Marcos got most of $80 million that may have been paid to one of his close associates by Westinghouse Electric Corp. That probe involves the company's successful attempt to win a $600 million contract to build the first nuclear reactor in the Philippines.

Gen. Fabian C. Ver, former chief of the Philippines armed forces was served with a subpoena in an investigation by a federal grand jury in Alexandria, Va., of possible kickbacks involving more than $100 million in U.S. military aid.

Thunderstorms are possible

The possibility of thunderstorms for tonight and partly cloudy skies on Saturday are being forecast by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

There is a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms for the Midland-Odessa area for tonight with a low in the upper 30s and winds from the west at five to 15 mph. Saturday's high is expected to be in the middle 60s with winds continuing from the west at 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high was 27 degrees below the record high of 88 set in 1971. This morning's low of 38 was 14 degrees above the record low set for this date set in 1954.

STATE

A round of thunderstorms that rumbled through North and East Texas moved into Arkansas and Louisiana before dawn today, leaving behind fair to partly cloudy skies.

Patcy fog covered the southern coastal plains, while a few low clouds lingered over East Texas. Mostly fair skies were the rule across the rest of Texas.

Variable winds at around 10 mph were the rule over most of Texas.

Pre-dawn temperatures were in the 30s over the Panhandle and South Plains and in the 40s and 50s over the remainder of the state. A few readings in the 60s were noted in far South Texas.

Readings at 4 a.m. ranged from 31 at Amarillo to 65 at Brownsville and McAllen.

The forecast calls for scattered showers and thunderstorms over most of the state through early Saturday. Most of the shower activity was expected to develop during the evening hours, the National Weather Service said.

Along the coast, southerly and southeasterly winds were expected to shift to northwesterly at 15 to 20 knots Saturday morning. Some thunderstorms were forecast for tonight and Saturday.

NATION

Heavy thunderstorms rumbled across the South amid tornado watches and fears of flash flooding while snow and freezing drizzle hampered travel in the Midwest today and a Western storm spread snow and rain.

A low pressure system over Louisiana was moving toward northern Florida and southeastern Georgia. A tornado watch was in effect this morning and conditions were ripe for severe thunderstorms, the National Weather Service said.

Flash flood watches were issued in the western Florida Panhandle, much of southern Alabama and Georgia, western North Carolina and Virginia and the mountains of Virginia and western Maryland.

A low pressure system over Iowa spread snow and freezing drizzle into central Minnesota.

Underdog Tech strings Hoyas out for last minute comeback

Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio — Some people figured Georgetown would have a cakewalk when it faced Texas Tech in the first round of the NCAA Midwest Regional at the University of Dayton.

But that thought never crossed the mind of Georgetown Coach John Thompson.

Thompson had good reason to worry after his team escaped from a seven-point, second-half deficit, outscoring Texas Tech 9-2 over the last 2:08 to take a 70-64 victory.

It took four points from senior guard Michael Jackson in the last minute to clinch the victory.

"Coaches don't see it as an unbalanced game. You're afraid of everybody," Thompson said.

"Texas Tech played a really good game against us ... I am always nervous. This towel is not a symbol of good luck. I perspire an awful lot," Thompson said of his customary white towel that is draped over his shoulder throughout the game.

"We were very disappointed to say the least that we weren't able to go ahead and win the game. But at the same time, I am proud of the way this team came from behind from a losing record a month or two ago," Texas Tech Coach Gerald Myers said.

The Hoyas, 24-7, will meet Michigan State, a 72-70 winner over Washington, in the second round on Saturday.

Texas Tech, champions of the Southwest Conference tournament, bowed out at 17-14, but not until after pushing the Georgetown to the edge of elimination.

The Hoyas, who have been to the Final Four three of the last four years, trailed 51-44 with 12:02 remaining in the game after holding an 11-point lead in the first half. But Georgetown fought back to trail 62-61 with 4:12 remaining.

A three-point play by center Ralph Dalton at the 2:08 mark gave the Hoyas the lead for good.

After the Red Raiders' Tobin Doda missed on a drive, Jackson hit a 22-foot jumper as the 45-second shot clock was running down to put Georgetown up, 66-62. Two free throws by Jackson, who scored 12 points, and two more by David Wingate sealed the victory.

Substitute guard Wendell Owens, who came into the game averaging 4.9 points per game, led Texas Tech with 22 points, while Tony Benford added 17.

MIDWEST

Michigan St. 72, Washington 70

Guard Scott Skiles scored 31 points, including a pair of free throws with two seconds remaining, to lead Michigan State from a 10-point halftime deficit to a victory over Washington in the first round.

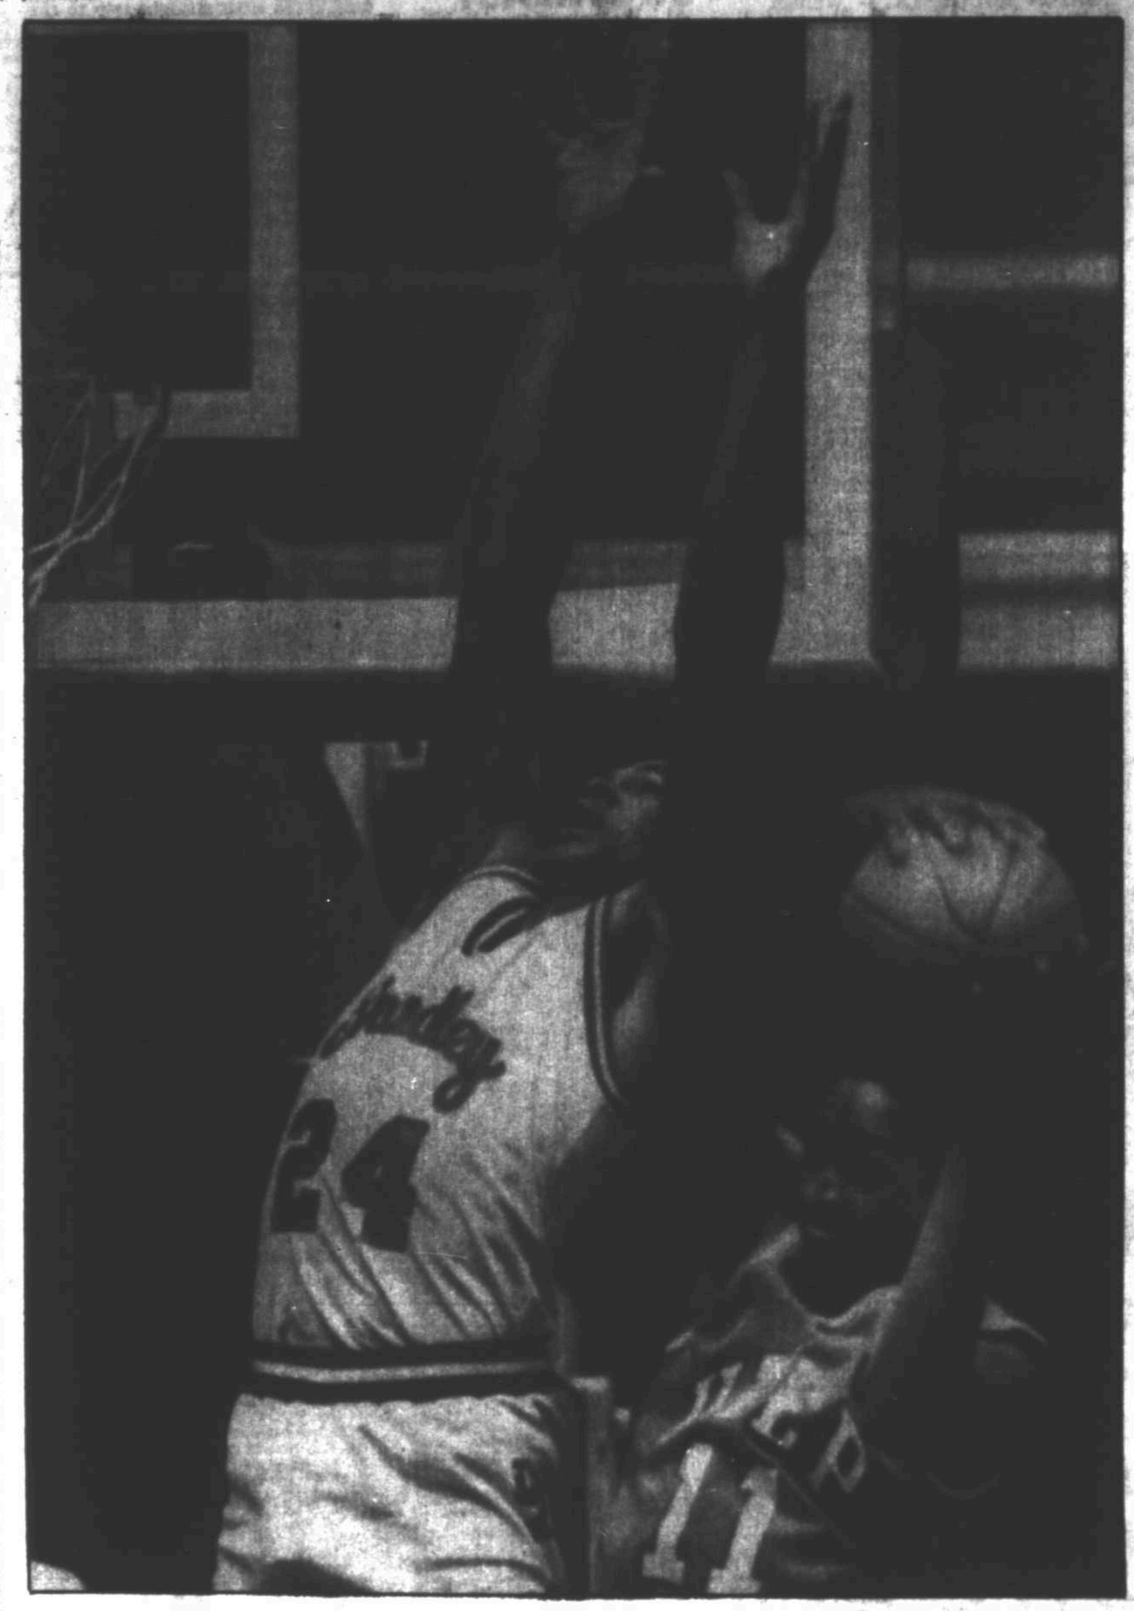

Michigan State, 22-7 on the year, advanced to a second-round matchup Saturday against Georgetown.

Skiles, the nation's second-leading scorer, scored 19 of his points in the second half, including eight during a 13-0 Spartans run covering a 3:33 span that turned a 42-32 disadvantage into a 45-42 lead.

But a six-point streak by Washington in the game's last three minutes brought the Huskies even 70-70 with 29 seconds left.

Michigan State then worked the ball until Skiles drew a foul on Greg Hill with two seconds remaining. He hit both free throws.

Sooners rally past Northeastern

Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — David Johnson scored 24 points and Darryl Kennedy added 21 Thursday night as No. 15 Oklahoma rallied from a first-half deficit and then fought off Northeastern for an 80-74 triumph in the first round of the NCAA East Regional basketball tournament at Greensboro.

The Sooners overcame a 35-point performance by Reggie Lewis, including 25 in the second half, to raise their record to 26-8.

Oklahoma led 48-43 after Anthony Bowie's 17-foot jumper from the right side with 12:50 remaining. The Huskies got within one on two occasions, but Bowie canned two free throws and Kennedy tossed in a basket and two free throws to give the Sooners their biggest lead at 62-56 with 7:32 left.

Lewis retaliated, scoring Northeastern's next 14 points. Included in the string was a three-point play that tied the score at 64 with 5:44 left. Johnson broke the tie with a basket at 5:33 and the score was never tied again.

Northeastern led 25-18 on a John Williams basket 5:06 before halftime. But a 14-6 run capped by Bowie's set shot from the hash mark at the buzzer gave Oklahoma a 32-31 halftime lead.

DePaul 72, Virginia 68

Lemone Lampley scored 15 points and three teammates added 12 points apiece as DePaul staved off a comeback by Virginia for a victory in the first round.

In raising their record to 17-12, the Blue Demons set up a meeting with Oklahoma in a second-round game at Greensboro Saturday afternoon.

It was 10 years ago on the same date in Greensboro that DePaul downed Virginia 69-60 in a first-round NCAA tournament contest.

DePaul led by as much as eight points twice in the first half, and took a 34-28 halftime lead. But successive three-point plays by Olden Polynice and Andrew Kennedy brought the Cavaliers within 40-38 with 15:48 left to play.

The Blue Demons never led by more than four points in the next five minutes, and two straight baskets by Tom Calloway tied the score at 49 with 8:32 left.

Marty Embry came back with a follow shot in the lane and a baseline jumper from the left side to break the tie and give DePaul the lead for good.

Virginia's last shot at victory came when Tom Sheehey scored on a baseline drive with 5:14 remaining and added two free throws at the 4:54 mark to bring the Cavaliers within 57-55. But the Blue Demons scored five straight points to stop the rally.

Virginia, 19-11, was the first Atlantic Coast Conference team to be ousted from the tournament. The ACC sent six teams into NCAA tournament action.

Duke 85, Mississippi Valley St. 78

Johnny Dawkins scored 27 points, 20 in the second half, to guide top-seeded Duke over upset-minded Mississippi Valley State in the first round.

The Blue Devils raised their record to 33-3, best ever for an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball team, but not before the Delta Devils took seven-point leads on two occasions. The last time was a 44-37 edge on two baskets at the start of the second half by Mack Ferguson. Duke will play Old Dominion in the second round Saturday.

'Little General' ousts UTEP

Associated Press

Jim Les, Bradley's "Little General," has given Coach Dick Versace what he doesn't normally get during a basketball season — a victory against a national power.

Les scored a team-high 22 points and dished out 10 assists Thursday to lead the 14th-ranked Braves to an 83-65 victory against 20th-ranked Texas-El Paso.

The Braves moved to 32-2 and advanced into Saturday's second round, where they will face No. 7 Louisville, 27-7. Texas-El Paso finished the year at 27-6.

"We were delighted to play somebody in the top 20," Versace said. "We want to play 'TV teams,' but they don't want to play us. I've worked eight years to get them in the Top 20."

Louisville, one of the "TV teams" Versace referred to, whipped Drexel 93-73 in an earlier first-round game.

WEST

Louisville and Bradley last met in 1976.

"There is no coach in the country who has the luxury that I do in having a player like Jim Les," said Versace, whose club moved to 32-2.

Les said he was pressured so much on the perimeter that he was able to feed the ball inside. And when the Miner defense sagged inside, Les and guard Hersey Hawkins hit from outside.

"We executed like we knew we could, and that was the ballgame," Les said.

Bradley led just 39-37 at halftime, but the Miners got into foul trouble and the Braves soon had a 10-point lead, 51-41 just four minutes into the second half.

Miners Coach Don Haskins said he felt the game slipped away late in the first half when seniors Dave Feitl and Juden Smith collected three fouls.

"Then we played too cautious in the first five minutes of the second half," Haskins said. "We were playing man-to-man (defense) and they ended up on the free throw line at the other end of the floor."

North Carolina 84, Utah 72

Brad Daugherty scored 27 points while Kenny Smith scored 16 and Steve Hale had 14 as No. 8 North Carolina advanced to the second round of the NCAA tournament with a win over Utah.

The Tar Heels, 27-5, scored four straight baskets late in the second half to break away from a 61-61 tie. The Utes of the Western Athletic Conference led 58-57 with 11:20 left in the game before North Carolina took control.

Struggling AHS just what 'Dogs waiting for?

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

A few weeks ago, Saturday's Midland High-Abilene High match up might have been described as an irresistible force going up against a very moveable object.

But when the Bulldogs knock up against the Eagles in Saturday's District 4-5A game at Angels Stadium, it may not be that simple.

Sure the Eagles, 0-1, 3-5 overall, are allowing almost 11 runs per game. Sure their best pitcher Michael Keets is out indefinitely with a bum arm. Sure young sophomore Jeff Reese, 1-1, is battling some inexperience every time he steps on the mound.

But then the Bulldogs, touted to have one of the most potent offensive attacks in the district this season, have been in a little bit of a hitting slump. Struggling AHS may be just what the doctor ordered for the Bulldogs.

"We've got to develop some offense, because if a team doesn't help us, give us some walks or kick it around a little bit, we're not much of a threat right now," Whalen said.

The MHS-AHS game highlights the second stop in district play this weekend with Midland Lee traveling to face Abilene Cooper, Odessa High at San Angelo and Big Spring at Odessa Permian rounding out the schedule. MHS, Permian, San Angelo and defending champion Cooper are all 1-0 winning Tuesday's openers.

DESPITE HITTING .300 as a team, 30 points below Lee's team average, MHS, 1-0, 5-5, is just beginning to do some of the things that coach Tim Whalen expected of them this season. After some early season pitching and fielding problems, the 'Dogs have played well in the past week.

Finding the good news in Cowtown

And the good news is that next year Midland College won't have to "play-in" to the national junior college tournament against a Texas opponent.

...Unless San Jacinto wins the national tournament and the NJCAA decides to change the rules again...and some think SJ winning nationals at Hutchinson, Kan., is a possibility.

Among those who think it is a more like a probability are the Midland College Chaparrals and those who sat in on Wednesday night's 107-92 loss to the Ravens in Fort Worth.

The defeat is the lone stain on what goes down as the best record in Chaparral annals, 33-1, the significance of which may take a while to fully register.

After all, that lone loss prevented MC from going to nationals, the goal of any junior college team east of California at the start of every season.

Didn't get to the nationals? I prefer the way MC guard Ricky Grace put it, " We made the Final 24. Tonight was the opening game of the tournament and we lost. It's just too bad we had to play San Jacinto so early."

SAN JACINTO left no doubts, but if there was a key to this one it was at the free throw line. With SJ's height edge over the Chaps, it looked like a good tradeoff to keep those big guys under control....foul 'em and make 'em convert at the free throw line.

Who would have thought they would convert 31 of 35?

When SJ Coach Ron Arrow was asked if his team usually shot like that from the line, he didn't answer until he went over to the floor and rapped his knuckles a few times. "Always," he said.

It was the 14 of 16 in the first half that gave SJ a seven point lead and changed the game's strategy and enabled, as Arrow put it, "Our changing defenses to handle their changing defenses and control the tempo of the game."...

SAN JACINTO will be shooting for an NJCAA basketball championship to go with the NJCAA baseball title it won at Grand Junction, Colo., last spring. The year before the Ravens were runnersup....

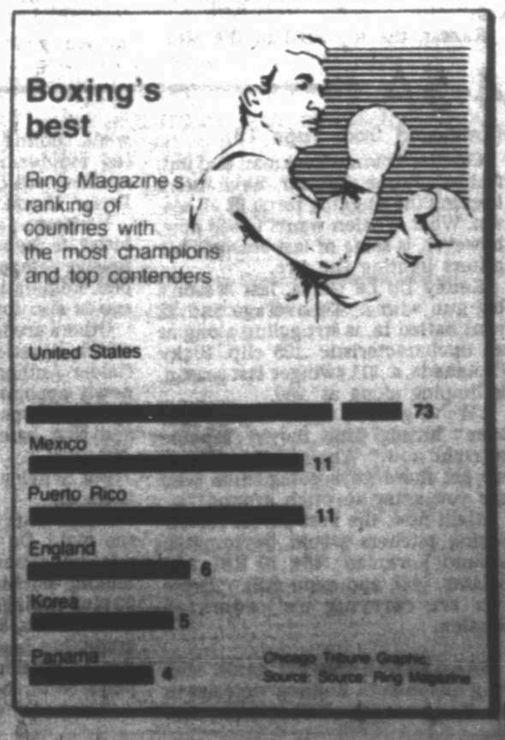

Coach Arrow was disappointed that more fans didn't show up for the Juco state championship game. "Midland brought a good group and we had a good following, but it's unfortunate Fort Worth fans didn't turn out. They would have seen junior college basketball at its best."

One reason may have been the time, 8:45 p.m. In Fort Worth, after fighting the traffic to get home from work, eating and relaxing a few minutes, it's 7:20 or 8 before the big city resident is ready to embark on an evening out.

It isn't like Midland where home, a shower, and supper are just 10 to 15 minutes from the office. Let's count our blessings rather than revile the folks in Cowtown....

Best effort of the night...no doubt, after eye-scanning the arena intermittently for more than a half, KCRS' Ed Clements was finally found up near the ceiling at one end of the arena, peering out of a closet, a telephone to his ear, trying to see over a bunch of arm waving kids so he could do his standup play-by-play of the game....

Bedford proves valuable as decoy; LSU prevails

Associated Press

BATON ROUGE, La. — William Bedford was almost as valuable playing the decoy as he was as a scorer in Memphis State's victory over Ball State, said teammate Vincent Askew.

Twelfth-ranked Memphis State overcame a cold-shooting first half Thursday night to roll to a 95-83 victory over Ball State.

Bedford, a 7-foot center, had 16 points, most of them on seven-foot turnaround jump shots over two defenders. He also had four blocked shots, all in the first half of the first-round game of the Southeast Regional.

Askew had 23 points, most of them from long range.

After Bedford burned them a couple of times, Ball State started double-teaming Bedford, and that opened things up for the rest of the team, Askew said.

"It made it easier," he said.

Forward Baskerville Holmes had 14 points and led the aggressive defense that shut down Ball State's inside scoring game and limited Dan Palombizio to 17 points. Palombizio averaged over 20 points a game for Ball State, which ended its season 21-10.

"We didn't start out great on offense, so we started putting pressure on the ball," Holmes said. "That started to cause of a lot of turnovers, and the next thing we knew we were up 12 points, then 18, and from then on it was a runaway."

"The defense was the difference in the ballgame," agreed Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk.

Ball State Coach Al Brown said he was proud of the way his team played in the first half, "but it's a 40-minute game."

Palombizio said fatigue was a factor. "In the second half, we started getting tired, because they're just so much bigger than us," he said.

Askew's 23 points led the scoring for Memphis State, now 28-5 and bidding for a fifth straight trip to the round of 16.

Memphis State meets LSU in a Saturday game that will decide one of the berths in the Southeast Regional finals at Atlanta.

Memphis State shot only 33 percent from the field through the first 20 minutes, but Ball State couldn't take advantage, hitting only a modestly better 37 percent from the field.

With Holmes and Bedford leading the surge, Memphis State outscored Ball State 23-8 over the first eight minutes of the second half, and the game was never in doubt after that.

LSU 94, Purdue 87, 2OT

Anthony Wilson scored 11 points in the second overtime period to lift Louisiana State to a victory over Purdue in the opening round.

The Tigers went into the second period of extended play tied 73-73. Wilson scored two quick baskets and seven free throws in the last 16 seconds to finish the 2¼-hour marathon.

The game went into the first overtime period 69-69 after Purdue's Troy Lewis missed from 22 feet with four seconds remaining. The second extended period was forced when LSU guard Derrick Taylor stole a last-second pass and hurled it astray from midcourt.

Wilson scored a total of 25 points, eight in a five-minute span late in regulation time.

The lead changed hands nine times in regulation play, with the Tigers leading 39-35 at halftime on their homecourt.

The Boilermakers' starting center, Melvin McCants, was sidelined with a leg injury with 3:52 remaining in the first period.

LSU is now 23-11. Purdue ended its season at 22-10, having finished fourth in the Big Ten.

LSU advances to Saturday's second-round game, hosting No. Memphis State.

Georgia Tech 68, Marist 53

Long-range gunner Mark Price led a 12-0 scoring surge over a four-minute span of the second half to lead sixth-ranked Georgia Tech to a victory over unexpectedly tough Marist in the opening round.

During the first six minutes of the second half, Marist erased a five-point halftime deficit to hold a 38-37 lead over Tech, the top seed in the Southeast Regionals.

Tech's John Salley tied it at 40-all on a three-point play, then Price went to work from the 20-foot range, and Marist went cold. It was 52-40 before Marist, making its first NCAA tournament appearance, could score again.

Price finished with 20 points, getting eight of Georgia Tech's first 14 points. Salley had 13 for Tech, now 26-6 overall, and Tom Hammonds and Duane Ferrell had 10 apiece.

Marist's Rik Smits, a 7-foot-3 sophomore, led all scorers with 22 points before fouling out with 7:39 left.

Drafton Davis added 12 points for Marist, which finished its season 19-12.

Villanova 71, Virginia Tech 62

Harold Jensen scored 20 points as defending national champion Villanova held off a late Virginia Tech surge for a victory in the first round.

Jenson and Kenny Wilson led early scoring spurts of 8-2 and 14-2 as Villanova took a 27-10 lead 11 minutes into the game. Leading 34-22 at intermission, the Wildcats gained a 19-point advantage before Bobby Beecher led a 10-2 spurt that brought Tech to 50-39.

The Hokies came within eight points several times late in the half, but could get no closer.

Villanova came back from a 6-6 record early in the season and stands now at 23-13 in its seventh straight NCAA tournament appearance. Virginia Tech ended its season at 22-9, finishing third in the Metro Conference.

Villanova advances to the tournament's second round Saturday against Georgia Tech.

North Carolina, which finished third in the Atlantic Coast Conference but was seeded third in the West, led by as much as 15 late in the game.

The Tar Heels advanced to Saturday's second round against Alabama-Birmingham.

The Utes, playing before a partisan crowd of 11,531, 61 short of capacity at the Dee Events Center on the Weber State campus, kept the game close. North Carolina led by only one point at the half, 39-38.

Ala.-Birmingham 66, Missouri 64

Alabama-Birmingham guard Steven Mitchell scored 21 points and forward Jerome Mincy added 14 as the Blazers held off the Missouri Tigers in a seesaw first-round game.

Alabama-Birmingham moved to 25-10 and a spot against the winner of the nightcap between Utah and North Carolina. Missouri ended the season at 21-14.

Missouri played for a tie with six seconds left, but Mincy knocked the ball downcourt as Strong tried to pass the ball inside.

The Blazers held a slim lead through most of the second half before Chievous scored inside and Bingenheimer converted a three-point play to give Missouri a 62-60 lead with 4:48 left to play.

Blazer swingman Michael Charles tied it with a lay-up, then Mitchell and Mincy hit a free throw each to give Alabama-Birmingham the lead for good, 64-62, with 3:25 left.

Louisville 93, Drexel 73

Senior forward Billy Thompson scored a game-high 24 points and snared 10 rebounds as seventh-ranked Louisville pulled away in the second half for a victory over the Drexel Dragons in the first round.

Second-seeded Louisville, now 27-7, advances to Saturday's second-round game against Bradley.

Drexel, the East Coast Athletic Conference champion, ended the season at 19-12.

Thompson hit eight of Louisville's first 12 points of the second half as the Cardinals built their 48-42 halftime lead to a 60-49 advantage with 14:50 left to play. Thompson scored on three inside shots and a 15-foot jumper.

Rookie Kurt Stillwell makes good at filling in for elder Concepcion

Associated Press

Will the Dave Concepcion-Kurt Stillwell battle turn out to be another case of Wally Pipp and Lou Gehrig?

It was more than 60 years ago that Pipp, the New York Yankees' first baseman, missed a game with a headache. Gehrig took over and didn't sit down until he had played an astonishing 2,130 consecutive games.

Concepcion, Cincinnati's 37-year-old shortstop, missed Thursday's exhibition game with stomach problems and the 20-year-old Stillwell, who may win the job anyway, made the most of his last-minute opportunity. He had four hits, made some dazzling fielding plays and scored the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning as the Reds nipped the Houston Astros 9-8.

"Some day I have to go, but not this year. It's not my time," Concepcion said. "He might be ready this year, but it's not my time to retire."

Royals 7, Phillies 5

Kansas City designated hitter Hal McRae played his first game with his son, Brian, in the lineup. The Royals got a grand slam homer from Steve Balboni and won on Joe Citari's two-out, two-run single in the seventh inning.

White Sox 3, Mets 2

Harold Baines doubled home a first-inning run against Dwight Gooden as Chicago ended the Mets' three-game winning streak.

Yankees 14, Expos 3

Gary Roenicke drove in three runs, two with the Yankees' first spring homer, and rookie Derwin McNealy had two hits in a seven-run eighth inning.

Cardinals 17, Twins 9

Vic Rodriguez, a non-roster player, drove in five runs for St. Louis with two homers and a single. Rodriguez, a second baseman, hit a solo homer in the second inning and a three-run shot in the seventh.

Brewers 9, Padres 2

Ernest Riles drove in three runs and Jim Adduci hit a solo home run to lead Milwaukee.

The Astros' Terry Puhl holds his ankle after twisting it scrambling back to first base in an exhibition game against the Reds.

Giants 16, Cubs 8

Rookie Will Clark celebrated his 22nd birthday with three hits, including a two-run homer, as San Francisco remained the only undefeated team in spring training.

Dodgers 10, Rangers 9

Steve Sax hit a two-run single and Mariano Duncan added an RBI triple in a six-run sixth inning. Sax had two hits and three RBIs and Dave Anderson added three hits, including a two-run inside-the-park homer.

Angels 10, A's 1

Bobby Grich hit a grand slam homer, tripled and singled to highlight a 16-hit attack. Winning pitcher Mike Witt held the A's to four hits in four innings.

Tigers 9, Red Sox 8

Larry Herndon's bases-loaded single in the 10th inning drove in the winning run. Kirk Gibson and Nelson Simmons homered for the Tigers, who tied the game with three runs in the eighth inning.

Longhorns join TCU as sole SWC teams left in action

Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Forward Raynard Davis came up with a crucial offensive rebound with 54 seconds left and then hit a pair of free throws that secured Texas' 69-66 victory over New Mexico in a first round NIT basketball game Thursday night.

Texas, making its first appearance in the NIT since it won the tournament in 1980, is now 19-11. New Meixco finished the season at 17-14.

It was Davis' offensive rebound and two free throws with 12 seconds left that finally settled the game that saw 13 ties and six lead changes.

With Texas nursing a 64-63 lead, forward Patrick Fairs missed on an off-balance 18-footer but Davis got the rebound and worked the clock down to 18 seconds before Fairs connected on an outside jumper.

Senior center John Brownlee, the Southwest Conference Player-of-The-Year this past season, led the Longhorns with 17 points. Forwards Davis and Fairs to chip in 16 apiece.

In other first round NIT games, Georgia beat UT-Chattanooga, 95-81, Cal-Irvine beat UCLA, 80-74, Clemson eliminated Middle Tennessee State, 90-81, Marquette swamped Drake, 79-59, Florida beat Southern Mississippi, 81-71, and Louisiana Tech beat Northern Arizona, 67-61.

NIT

Brigham Young 67, SMU 63

PROVO, Utah — Although guard Bob Cochran didn't see a great deal of playing time this season, he was there when it counted most for Brigham Young.

"Cochran has had a lot of practice playing defense all year, but while he hasn't had the playing time, he shut down (Kevin) Lewis effecitvely at the end of the game," BYU Ladell Andersen said.

Cochran had a key rebound basket over Lewis and was fouled by Lewis with a minute left in the game. He missed the free throw, but BYU junior center Tom Gneiting, who scored 20 points, grabbed the rebound, was fouled and sank two free throws to give BYU a 65-63 lead with 50 seconds left.

The Mustangs, led by Lewis' game-high 27 points, had a chance at overtime when SMU guard Scott Johnson missed a field goal with five seconds left and Lewis rebounded. But Lewis' turnaround jumper inside the key missed and the rebound was pulled down by BYU's Jeff Chatman, who was fouled and sank two free throws to end the game.

Wyoming 79, Texas A&M 70

LARAMIE, Wyo. — Texas A&M, which felt it deserved an NCAA bid after winning the regular-season Southwest Conference basketball championship, lost its first-round game in the National Invitation Tournament.

The Aggies went on the road and were beatenby Wyoming, which got 23 points apiece from Fennis Dembo and Les Bolden.

The Cowboys ran off a 10-0 spurt midway in the second half. The run, which included a layup and a 15-foot shot by Dembo, gave Wyoming a 63-53 lead with 5:16 remaining. Wyoming then sank 11 free throws in the closing minutes to seal the victory.

George Mason 65, Lamar 63

George Mason's Ricky Wilson hit a desperation 50-foot shot with two seconds left. Lamar led 36-29 at intermission and by as many as nine points in the second half but Wilson scored 15 second-half points to lead the Patriots' comeback, including a pair of free throws to tie the score with 41 seconds left.

MIDWEST

Kansas 71, N.C. A&T 46

Second-ranked Kansas had four players in double figures and was never threatened in coasting over North Carolina A&T.

Danny Manning scored 15 points, Calvin Thompson 14, Greg Dreiling 12 and Archie Marshall 10 at the University of Dayton Arena as the Jayhawks ran their record to 32-3 on the year.

Kansas, the top seed in the Midwest Regional, will meet Temple in the second round Saturday at 2:30 p.m. North Carolina A&T, which closed its season at 19-8, was led by Claude Williams' 13 points.

Temple 61, Jacksonville 50 OT

Sophomore center Tim Perry, who missed a chance to win in regulation, scored six points in overtime to lead the Temple Owls over Jacksonville in a first-round game.

Perry, who hit just one of seven free throws in the second half, missed the front end of a bonus situation with three seconds remaining that would have given Temple the victory.

But in overtime, the 6-foot-9 center scored the Owls' first six points for a 49-45 lead that Temple, 25-5, never relinquished.

With the score tied at 43 after regulation, Perry had a tip-in at the 4:12 mark to give his team a 45-43 lead. After Otis Smith, who scored 11 points for Jacksonville, hit a pair of free throws to tie the game for the ninth time, Perry hit a 10-foot baseline jumper.

Catcher Tommy Yorkman and outfielder Jaime Salazar have been keeping the slugging torch lit all season. What Whalen wants to see now, however, is some of last season's big hitters lighting the fire.

Kenny De La Garza, last season's big gun with a .438 average and 32 runs batted in, is struggling along at an uncharacteristic .185 clip. Ricky Castaneda, a .311 swinger last season, is limping along at .250.

"We've got two or three guys that aren't hitting what they're capable of right now," Whalen said. "When we get those guys going, then who are you going to pitch around?"

Right now, the best advice for opposing pitchers would be to pitch around Yorkman, .484, 10 RBI, and Salazar, .447 and nine RBI. "Those two are carrying us," admitted Whalen.

SALAZAR BANGED game winning hits in both Bulldog victories in the Tournament of Champions last week, coming through with run scoring singles in the eighth inning against both Lubbock Monterey and Dallas Thomas Jefferson.

Yorkman, as the team's leadoff hitter, is the squad leader in five offensive categories, runs, doubles, triples, homers and RBIs. His .484 average is also tops among regulars.

Others are helping out with hits in clutch situations, though. Like outfielder Anthony Deande with a .370, newly appointed right fielder David Malone is enoying a .316 spree and and first baseman Matt Sears is at .306.

But Whalen expects more out of them all.

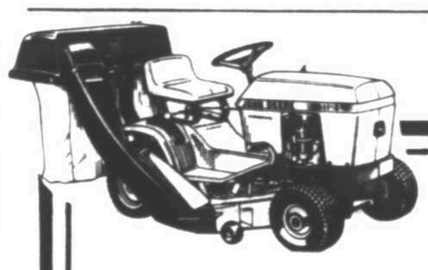

While they've been struggling at the plate, De La Garza and Castaneda have been stalwarts on the mound, pitching all but 1 ⅓ of the 60-plus innings of play this season. De La Garza, 3-2, 2.68 earned run average, has been the more effective. But as Whalen has said, "the team plays better behind Kenny."

Castaneda, who will draw Saturday's starting assignment against AHS, is 2-2 with a 5.32 ERA, but has thrown the ball well lately.

"I'm pleased with what Ricky's done on the mound," Whalen said. "He's been a hard luck pitcher because we don't play behind him. He's keeping his curve down and he moves his fastball around. If we start to play well behind him, he'll get some confidence and we'll really do some damage."

LEE COACH Ernie Johnson is unsettled on his starting pitcher in Saturday's contest. The Rebels, 0-1, 7-5, will go with either Michael Brown, Durian Jenkins or David Barrow on the hill against Cooper. Terry Baxter, who opened against San Angelo on Tuesday, is also a possibility.

The Rebels are fighting an early season injury bug that has sidelined ace pitcher George Matta, third baseman Jay McCarty and outfielder-/pitcher Barrow for varying lengths of time so far this season.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Saturday, March 15, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Important decisions made during the coming months will have positive influences on your life. Trust your intuition. Love and harmony should dominate your personal life. Take time to work at making relationships deeper and more meaningful. You have been taking someone extremely important in your life for granted. Mend your ways or you could lose something very special. Children will need extra time and attention as they go through a difficult growing period.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Actors Judd Hirsch and MacDonald Carey, former president Andrew Jackson, philanthropist Marjorie Merriweather Post, baseball's Mickey Hatcher and Harold Baines, movie tough guy Laurence Tierney.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): When dealing in love or money keep all your options open. Any commitments should not be taken lightly. An element of luck affects romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your keen intuition helps you address new issues setting the stage for a raise or promotion. Better use of computers or modern technological aids are the key to future success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An unfavorable atmosphere may be created if you are overly aggressive this morning. Avoid gossip or speculation at all cost. An older member of the opposite sex is a source of great pleasure.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take time today to write important, personal letters. A shopping spree proves very successful. You can save time and money by making a list first. Entertain a few friends at home tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Control your temper to avoid antagonizing others even if it means going off by yourself. A traveling companion who shares mutual interests makes a day trip exciting.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Completing chores early in the day lets you spend the afternoon enjoying a hobby. Friendships may not live up to expectations. But your mate makes this a special day.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Business profits show signs of increasing. You are ahead of the competition when it comes to sales. A candid talk with your mate leads to blissful romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Making concessions may mean greater peace of mind where money is concerned. A romantic interlude helps brighten your day. Try to overcome fears concerning a member of the opposite sex; they are unfounded.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends share their good news with you. Recognition is finally yours for something you began long ago. A romantic gesture keeps your spirits soaring for the rest of the day.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Overtime today could be the answer to paying extra bills. Seek family members' co-operation in curtailing excess spending. Children need your attention today; give it lovingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are able to solve the problems which may have slowed your progress in the past. Financial help arrives in time to avoid late charges. Do not contradict yourself with loved ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A telephone call may give you the answers to a financial problem. When it comes to socializing or romance be more selective. Diplomacy pays off in a social situation.

This is an age of communication—and the lack of it. High-speed computers rush messages from one part of the world to another in seconds, yet children and parents, husbands and wives, often find they are unable to communicate. And at the bridge table, keeping open lines of communication can be the key to a successful defense.

South wasted no time in getting to the best contract. When his partner showed a minimum opening bid with no particular spade fit, South gave up all thoughts of slam and settled for the spade game.

West led the eight of clubs, and a thoughtless East would hand declarer his contract at trick one. He would rise with the ace of clubs and return the suit to declarer's king. After drawing two rounds of trumps, declarer would lead a low heart, intending to play the ten from dummy. When it turns out that West has the ace of hearts and is out of clubs, the defenders can get no more than their two aces and a trump trick.

East should realize that his partner must have at least two clubs. If he had a singleton, South would have five clubs headed by the king, and he would certainly have bid them at his second turn. And unless West was leading the top of a five-card suit, declarer could not have a singleton club.

Therefore, East should have played the ten of clubs to the first trick, and declarer is helpless as long as the defenders do not err. The best South can do is win the king and try to sneak an entry to dummy with a heart. West can defeat the contract by rising with the ace of hearts and returning a club, allowing the defenders to collect two club tricks to go with the ace of hearts and the trump trick to come.

Lounge gets 'Wonder'-ful surprise

Wonder

WEST ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — Grammy Award-winner Stevie Wonder thrilled some cocktail lounge patrons this week with an unexpected concert.

Wonder, accompanied by his wife and brother, dined on stuffed capon, champagne and orange juice at The Manor in West Orange before the three went into the restaurant's lounge on Tuesday night.

When the house band launched into a tribute to the songwriter, Wonder took to the stage and sang a few hits to a cheering crowd.

Manor Assistant Manager Richard Driscoll said he was pretty sure the singer was indeed Wonder.

"Well, it looked like Stevie Wonder, talked like Stevie Wonder and sang like Stevie Wonder," he said.

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Millions of fathers have played catch with their sons, but the Kansas City Royals' Hal McRae has become the first to play in a major league game with his.

The 39-year-old designated hitter batted third for the American League team in a 7-5 exhibition victory Thursday over the Philadelphia Phillies. Batting second was 18-year-old shortstop Brian McRae.

"I was less nervous than I thought I'd be," said Brian, who went 1-for-3 with a double and a run scored. "My knees were shaking a little bit, but I wasn't real tense or anything."

The elder McRae, who went 0-for-2 with two runs scored, said his son's presence in the lineup didn't make him feel old. "What makes me feel old is when I can't turn on a fastball and you get your pitch."

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Actor Michael Keaton has returned home for the premiere of "Gung Ho," a motion picture that used depressed western Pennsylvania mill towns as a backdrop for a comedy.

Keaton, who grew up in suburban Coraopolis, confessed to nervousness about appearing before hometown fans for Thursday night's premier.

"The pressure's on," he said.

The Paramount Pictures Corp. film, directed by Ron Howard and opening nationally today, is set in the fictional town of Hadleyville, Pa. The town's auto plant has closed, and a roguish character played by the 33-year-old Keaton persuades a Japanese automaker to take over the plant.

The comedy comes from the clash of egos, traditions and Eastern and Western cultures.

Williams

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The nation's best country music nightclub, radio station and disc jockey were announced Thursday by the Academy of Country Music, which will hold its annual awards ceremonies next month.

The nightclub Billy Bob's in Fort Worth was voted the best country party spot, the second time in four years it has won the award, academy executive director Bill Boyd said.

Radio station WAMZ in Louisville, Ky., won as the best listening station and disc jockey Eddie Edwards of WSIX in Nashville, Tenn., was picked as the favorite on-air personality, Boyd said. They were both first-time winners.

Nominees for the the academy's "Hat" trophies in major categories were announced earlier this month. The awards will be presented April 14 during nationally broadcast ceremonies on NBC-TV from Knott's Berry Farm in Buena Park.

Hank Williams Jr. and the band Alabama lead contenders with four nominations apiece, including coveted entertainer and album of the year nods.

Lee Greenwood, Ricky Skaggs and George Strait were also nominated in the entertainer of the year category for the 21st annual presentations of the "Hat" trophies, which are shaped like a Stetson.

Mac Davis, Reba McEntire and John Schneider will host the show.

The final five nominees were voted by the 2,800 members of the academy, which include artist and industry representatives. Final ballots were mailed Wednesday, Boyd said.

Franklin

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An 11-hour concert publicizing the dangers of drug abuse will be broadcast in at least 40 countries and feature more than 40 pop and rock acts, including James Brown and Aretha Franklin, organizers say.

"The Concert That Counts" is set for April 26 at the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum, Global Media Ltd. announced Thursday.

"The Concert that Counts is a global awareness musical event, focusing on pro-achievement and drug awareness," promoter Tony Verna said. "It is not a telethon. There will be no solicitation of funds. Any profit will go to a special foundation to distribute the funds."

Among the others slated to perform are Mr. Mister, John Denver, Vince Neil of Motley Crue, Jon Bon Jovi, and Toto.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Jack Nicholson, Whoopi Goldberg and William Hurt were among 100 Oscar nominees to attend a Motion Picture Academy luncheon, the best turnout for the event in five years, academy officials said.

The 70 other nominees did not show up for Thursday's Motion Picture Academy Nominating Luncheon.

After soup was served, the nominees present stepped up on a platform inside the Beverly Hilton's International Ballroom for a formal portrait with their nomination certificate.

The event had a down-home atmosphere compared to the glittery formality of the awards themselves, which take place on March 24.

Kite battles wind for 68; two behind Bob Tway

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — While some of golf's finest players were struggling, scrambling and swearing through howling, gusty winds, Tom Kite was right at home.

"Players who grow up in Texas and California grow up with the wind, they seem to know how to handle it," Kite observed.

"I wish the wind would blow every day. I enjoy it. It keeps you on your toes, helps you concentrate," the Texas native said.

He failed, however, to mention Oklahoma. The wind blows there, too.

And shortly after Kite had finished with a 68, an Oklahoma native proved the best of the bunch at handling the wind in the first round of the $500,000 Hertz Bay Hill Classic.

Bob Tway, born in Oklahoma City and now a resident of Edmond, Okla., was the only man in the elite, invitational field of 114 able to get around Arnold Palmer's wind-raked Bay Hill Club without a bogey.

The 26-year-old Tway, a tour sophomore who scored his first victory last month in San Diego, shot a 5-under-par 66 and stepped two shots in front of the pack — Kite, Ray Floyd, Dan Pohl and Dan Forsman, all tied at three under par.

At 70 were Ben Crenshaw, Roger Maltbie, Scott Simpson and Corey Pavin.

Kite's enthusiasm for the windy conditions was not shared in all quarters, however.

The gusty blasts took one of Andy Bean's shots into the water on the 18th and set up a triple bogey-7. Bean, a winner last week in Miami, had a 74. Tom Watson wasn't quite so fortunate. He had two 7s on the front and took 75. And the tournament host, the fabled Palmer, required 78 strokes.

Tway, however, made the most of the wind.

"I was fortunate enough to get off to a good start on the early, downwind holes," said Tway, who birdied three of the first four holes.

Then, he said, "coming down the last few holes I made some good saves to maintain a good round.

"I putted extremely well today, and that's what you have to do in a wind like this," Tway said.

O'Grady faces harsh penalties

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Mac O'Grady, facing the most severe penalties imposed on a PGA Tour player in 12 years, predicted he will be suspended by Commissioner Deane Beman.

"It's inevitable," the controversial O'Grady said Thursday after he had been handed a notice of a proposed major disciplinary action.

"I'd like the federal courts to decide this," O'Grady said.

O'Grady, 34, who has been extremely critical of Beman and his adminstration of the tour, faces a possible total of 12 weeks suspension, $12,000 in fines and a year's probation under three separate, pending disciplinary actions.

It is, potentially, the most severe penalty he has imposed in 12 years as commissioner of the pro golf tour, Beman said.

Wes Matthews of San Antonio leaps for a loose ball while Larry Bird and Dennis Johnson of Boston look on.

Bird's sharpshooting drawing rave reviews

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

With Larry Bird shooting the lights out, Jeff Lamp was left in the dark. "I just can't cover him out there, coach," Lamp told San Antonio Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons, who was screaming at him from the bench.

The screaming didn't get much results, as Bird scored 33 points — missing only two shots all night — to lead the Boston Celtics to a 135-119 NBA victory over the Spurs Thursday night.

Bird made a club-record four three-point goals in his near-perfect performance which included eight field goals and five free throws.

"Bird can do everything on the floor," San Antonio's Mike Mitchell said. "He has range past the three-point line and that makes it tough to guard him. They are definitely the best team we've played all year."

With Bird having a hot hand, the Celtics were in control virtually from start to finish.

San Antonio, which has lost 10 of its last 11 games, was led by Mitchell's 30 points.

Bulls 112, Nuggets 102

Orlando Woolridge came off the bench to score 11 consecutive fourth-quarter points, leading Chicago over Denver. The Bulls held Alex English, the NBA's leading scorer, to only 18 points, including just two in the final quarter when he sat out the final 10 minutes.

The Bulls' Sidney Green led all scorers with 28 points while Woolridge added 23 — 19 in the second half.

The victory moved the Bulls within two games of the Cleveland Cavaliers and the last Eastern Division playoff berth.

Rockets 128, Trail Blazers 118

Playing without starting point guard John Lucas and center Akeem Olajuwon, Houston relied on center Ralph Sampson's 32 points and 17 rebounds to beat Portland.

Lucas did not dress after skipping team practice on Wednesday. In his absence, Allen Leavell scored 22 points and rookie Steve Harris scored 13 points.

Rockets General Manager Ray Patterson said Lucas told team officials he missed the practice because of "family problems. It was a routine missed practice, which results in a fine. That's it. I'm satisfied with his story."

Olajuwon has been out with a knee injury.

Lakers 105, Sonics 92

Earvin "Magic" Johnson scored 27 points and handed out 14 assists as Los Angeles won its seventh straight game.

Early in the fourth quarter, Maurice Lucas of the Lakers fell on top of Tom Chambers under the Laker basket and a scuffle ensued. Lucas landed at least one solid punch to Chambers' head before the two were separated. Both were ejected from the game.

The Lakers, who led 49-40 at halftime, opened a 68-53 lead on a slam dunk by guard Byron Scott with 5:39 left in the quarter. The Lakers opened a 76-57 lead before quarter's end and Seattle never got within nine points.

Chuck Tanner trying to forget nightmarish 1985

FURMAN BISHER
Cox News Service

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Chuck Tanner sat across the desk speaking on drugs, baseball players and cocaine and the white cloud that hung over Pittsburgh last season. The Pirates finished last in the East but first in black headlines while a court tried the suppliers and convicted them. A parade of big-league players dressed in their anniversary best marched in to testify with immunity.

It sickened the man who managed the Pirates, and now the Atlanta Braves, and he will be a long time forgetting life in last place and the curse of it all.

"Everywhere we went camera crews met us, crowded around our bus, asking players questions," Tanner said. "I said, 'Hey, they're just having the trial in Pittsburgh. The Pirates aren't on trial.' "

A rage seethed within him. The Pirates were on top of the world in '79; now they were at the bottom of the ashpile.

"It cost a pennant the year we lost by three games. I didn't know what was going on. If I ever saw Curtis Strong, I never knew who he was. The other one, Shelby Grier, used to fly with Dave Parker. Parker introduced him as some rich friend who was in oil in Oklahoma," Tanner said.

"Last year our players weren't talking baseball. They were talking trial. What's new, what's going on at the courthouse, who testified today. Their minds weren't on baseball."

Most of the exposed Pirates were gone last year. Dale Berra and Rod Scurry were traded to the Yankees, but Berra is a case that hangs heavy in Tanner's mind because of the family, his friend Yogi, for Tanner has sons in baseball, too.

"You know they say that when players are on it — I wouldn't know cocaine from flour — they'll be late to the park, won't want to play and are always aching or hurt. Dale was always on time, always ready to play, and played with a bad hand and an ankle swollen this big. None of the traces were there.

"I went out on the limb for him. I said, 'Berra's my shortstop.' He'd make an error, I'd say, 'Everybody makes errors.' He'd screw up, I'd say, 'Everybody screws up.' I stood behind him, and all the time he was on the stuff, and I couldn't tell a thing.

"I said to him, 'Dale, don't ever do those things, it would kill your mother and your father.'

"He'd say, 'Oh no, I'd never do anything like that.' Lying to me. That's another thing they do. Lying comes easy.

"When Rod Scurry came in, he sat in my office crying, telling me how terrible it had been. I asked him where he had got it. It was waiter in a place we all went to in Bradenton. Always greet you. Shake your hand. 'Glad to have you again, Mr. Tanner.' Everybody liked him. Now I know why. He was their source.

"He was delivering it in the bread basket. They'd slip money in the basket, he'd take it back to the kitchen and bring the bread back with the cocaine in it. The miserable %$(X&..."

So you ask Chuck Tanner what he thinks of Commissioner Peter Ueberroth's ruling, and this is what you get. Then he said, "I think it was the course to take, giving them a chance rather than bringing the house down on them. Then if there is a next time — out! It's a warning to everybody.

"Of all those guys, Parker, Cabell, Berra, Holland, Hernandez and the rest, I have the least respect for Keith Hernandez. I asked Whitey Herzog once how he could trade all those guys with the problem instead of exposing them. He said if he'd exposed them he couldn't have got anything for them, and I guess he's right."

Cream of Hollywood snubbed by Oscar

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Steven Spielberg is in pretty good company when it comes to being ignored by Hollywood. His movie, "The Color Purple," has 11 Academy Award nominations but none for him as director.

George Cukor may well be the most-overlooked director in Oscar history. In 1937, he went unmentioned for "Camille," which received 10 nominations, including one for its star, Greta Garbo.

Cecil B. DeMille also seemed unloved by the Academy even though he was the industry's best-known director. His last and biggest spectacle, "The Ten Commandments," was nominated as best picture in 1956, but he was snubbed as director. Many sniffed at his corny dramatics and his penchant for bathtub scenes. Others were put off by his extreme right-wing politics.

With Spielberg, though, observers have speculated that the 230 members of the directors branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences — those who nominate the best directors — may be mostly older filmmakers who resent an upstart whose movies have earned billions.

The pro-Spielberg faction argues that the director was the creative force behind "The Color Purple," and made thousands of decisions that contributed to the movie's nomination as best picture.

OTHERS, THOUGH, disagree.

"I wasn't impressed with what Spielberg did with what I considered a gritty, outspoken book (by Alice Walker)," observed a veteran director who spoke only on the condition that he would not be identified. "He 'prettied up' the impoverished South with those fancy shots of blooming fields, and he failed to deal with the novel's lesbian theme."

Said another director, who also asked that his name not be used: "The picture lacked a consistency of tone. Spielberg seemed to be afraid to let the drama speak for itself, so he threw in some cutesy bits to warm the audience's heart. His staging of the 'hallelujah scene' was an embarrassment."

The movie details the life of Celie, a child bride who suffers the abuse of a brutal husband and her evolution into a strong, centered woman.

Spielberg, who was nominated for "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" in 1977, "Raiders of the Lost Ark" in 1981 and "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial" in 1982, has remained silent.

Despite the Oscar snub, Spielberg was nominated for, and won, the Directors Guild award for "The Color Purple." However, the DGA consists of 7,500 members, many from television and other fields. And many are assistant directors, production managers and other non-directors. Some have worked on Spielberg projects, including his "Amazing Stories" TV series.

THE ACADEMY'S statistician, Bob Werden, said directors of best-picture nominees have gone unnominated 146 times.

In 1942, "The Pride of the Yankees," the Lou Gehrig biography, was nominated 11 times but not for director Sam Wood.

Despite a series of distinguished films, Cukor wasn't nominated until "Philadelphia Story" in 1940, and he had to wait until "My Fair Lady" in 1964 before he finally took home an Oscar.

He made polite, even cerebral films that contrasted with those of his more flamboyant colleagues and it is generally believed this was the reason for his lack of Academy recognition.

And how could the Academy fail to reward master filmmaker Alfred Hitchcock? It happened each of the five times he was nominated: "Rebecca," 1940; "Lifeboat," 1944; "Spellbound," 1945; "Rear Window," 1954; "Psycho," 1960.

The Academy's Board of Governors made some amends by giving the thrill maker the Thalberg Award for consistently high quality of production, but his particular genius was in his role as director.

ACADEMY SNUBS have not been limited to directors. Many of the industry's leading actors also have been ignored, including Greta Garbo, Cary Grant and Charlie Chaplin.

Though Garbo, Grant and Chaplin were ignored for individual performances, the Academy gave each honorary awards after their careers had ended.

As Stanley Kowalski in "A Streetcar Named Desire," Marlon Brando created a classic role that influenced a whole generation of actors. But while Vivien Leigh, Karl Malden and Kim Hunter won Oscars for their roles in the film, Brando did not. He lost to Humphrey Bogart and "The African Queen." Brando finally won the prize with "On the Waterfront" in 1954.

For more than a quarter-century, Paul Newman has been considered one of the screen's premiere actors.

Chauffeurs, clothiers big winners at Oscars

By JEFF WILSON
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Behind the celebrities at the Academy Awards are platoons of chauffeurs, clothiers, bodyguards and others ready to cater to every ego and whim on the movie colony's night of nights.

After all, somebody has to guide Oscar guests through the ins and outs of the season. This year, for instance, white limousines are in, black is out. Winged collars and cummerbunds are in, tuxedo vests are out. Black-gloved chauffeurs wearing hats are in, so are Lincolns. But Cadillacs are out.

In or out, though, Oscar winners won't be the only ones to prosper from the Academy Awards: There's money to be made on everything from gowns to food.

Private jets are always hot. Leo Thorsness of Executive Aviation Services rents Learjets at $1,150 an hour for a minimum of two hours.

Regent Air's posh 727 jetliners for 16, featuring leather swivel chairs, a hairdresser and personal computers, also have booked celebrities bound for the March 24 awards show. One-way coast-to-coast passage is $1,650 per person.

The Tuxedo Center furnishes about 85 percent of the tuxedos seen at the awards ceremony at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion, from reporters to backstage technicians and superstars. The average cost is $50.

General Manager Jeff Rizzotti, who fits about 40 percent of the celebrities, including Richard Dreyfuss, says one of the interesting problems is accommodating approximately 50 security people.

"We give them an extra size to compensate for the gun bulge," he said.

Fashion designers in Hollywood are busy with Oscar night orders, including Ellene Warren, known for the flamboyant gowns worn by such stars as Cher, and Nolan Miller of "Dynasty" fame. Miller said some stars are paying as much as $15,000 for an Oscar dress.

Miller, the movie academy's costume designer for the Oscars, is also dressing 10 stars, including Esther Williams and Anne Miller, for a special mid-show salute to MGM stars.

"The problem with gowns is it is a one-shot deal for them, so there is a tremendous expense. It can't be worn again," Miller said. "They are literally one-shot dresses, usually given to charity afterward. And no one rents gowns."

Oscar night also is a field day for the paparazzi, who will be staking out entrances to the Music Center and parties afterwards. A snapshot of Robert Redford is the most sought-after picture this year, and it could bring up to $6,000.

"Robert Redford is the elusive figure here," said photographer Phil Ramey. "Redford at a private party with his latest flame would be a good picture. But it is difficult to come up with anything exclusive."

Parties are important. Agent Irving "Swifty" Lazar will once again throw a private bash at trendy Spago on Sunset Boulevard; it's considered the premier party by many. However, the official Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences party is at the Beverly Hilton.

John Fisher, maitre d' at the hotel's Conrad International Ballroom, rides herd on about 130 tables for 1,400 people attending the party. He watches the show on a television monitor so he knows when the ceremonies are over and who will be ordering the Dom Perignon.

For $350 each, guests will sit at tables with hot pink patent leather table cloths, black napkins and special neon floral arrangments.

Their menu will include salmon fume salad, cheese tortellini alfredo, rack of lamb, fresh baby carrots and mushroom cap florentine. For dessert there's a creation called "The Winner Is...," consisting of a meringue basket filled with lemon mousse and topped with a white chocolate envelope.

Getting there can be half the fun.

One movie studio executive is paying $5,000 a day to arrive in a 50-foot black limousine with a hot tub. Ultra-Limo owner Craig Kavanaugh won't say who it is.

"We also have a new 35-foot Lincoln (at $1,200 for eight hours) going to the awards," he said. "It is black with a bed in the rear featuring mirrors and disco lighting. It seats 15 and has three televisions, a VCR and a fold-out couch."

Carlos Romeo, manager of Carey Limousine service, needs more than 100 cars for the Oscars. Limousines, bargain-priced at $25 an hour with an eight-hour minimum Oscar night, are brought in from as far away as San Francisco.

Robbi Sinclair, whose Williams Motor Works builds limousines for as much as $48,000 each for local livery services, said the trend in cars is toward light colors.

A setting of far eastern serenity and beauty coupled with traditional oriental hospitality makes the Mandarin Buffet King one of Midland's most unique dining experiences.
Mandarin Buffet King serves a variety of delectable dishes including lamb, rabbit, chicken, beef, shrimp, fish, crab, lobster, scallops, frog legs, oysters, pork and sharks fin soup.
For the uninitiated, the art of Mandarin cooking highlights the painstaking combination of ingredients at just the right time to assure that each flavor retains its originality. Quality spices are blended with meat or seafood to create a masterpiece in dining. For discriminating tastes, the Sizzling Seafood Gold Bar, cooked at tableside with generous portions of juicy scallops, lobster, crab and succulent shrimp, sauteed with mushrooms and vegtables in a delicious sauce. It all served in a hot plate for a sizzling, steaming display that appeals to both the palate and fancy.
Another favorite is the flaming mu-gu platter, a mouthcatering assortment of appetizers including barbecue spare ribs, beef teriyaki, wonton, egg roll, Cantonese fried shrimp, brought to your table with a small hibachi. A Chinese delicacy served at the empress banquet is Shark's fin soup, made with the finest special mushroom and available now at Mandarin Buffet King.
Mongolian Barbecue is also a favorite, where the diners can choose from the selection of meat, vegetables and sauce and have their meal cooked before their eyes.
A selection of American hamburgers, T-bone steak, ribeye, fried jumbo shrimp and chicken fried steak is also available. And with each meal at the Mandarin Buffet King guests are served with heaping baskets of hot homemade cinnamon rolls. For a surprisingly different dining experience in a setting reminiscent of far away places, visit the Mandarin Buffet King in LaVillita Plaza.

Test your 'reel' knowledge of Oscars

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — When Henry Fonda and Katharine Hepburn won Oscars in 1981 for their performances in "On Golden Pond," they created a rare coincidence in Academy Award history.

Fonda, 76, and Miss Hepburn, 74, became the oldest performers to win as best actor and actress in the same year.

However, they were not the oldest performers ever to win Oscars. Melvyn Douglas captured that honor at 79 as supporting actor in "Being There" (1979).

Welcome to the Oscar Trivia Game.

Questions:

1. What performer has received the most nominations?
2. Who was the youngest performer to win an Oscar?
3. Who is the only blind person to receive an Oscar?
4. What nonperfomrer has received the most nominations?
5. What film won the most Oscars?
6. What performer won for playing the opposite sex?
7. Which actor was posthumously awarded an Oscar?
8. Name the actors who have tied for awards.
9. Which of the Barrymores never received a nomination — Ethel, John or Lionel?
10. Which actors have the all-time losing records?
11. What was the first movie in color to win as best picture?
12. For what two films were the entire casts nominated?
13. Who was the first black actor to win an Oscar?
14. Which two actors have won awards for playing the same role?
15. Of the four stars in "Gone With the Wind," who wasn't nominated?
16. Name the winners who have refused their Oscars.
17. Of the 15 Oscars presented in the first ceremonies, only one went to a woman. Who was she?
18. What actor was nominated in two categories for the same role?
19. Who was the first performer of Asian descent to win an Oscar?
20. What father-son team won Oscars in the same year?

Answers:

1. Katherine Hepburn with 12. She has won four times, also a record.
2. Tatum O'Neal, 10, supporting actress in "Paper Moon," 1973.
3. Stevie Wonder, best original song, "I Just Called to Say I Love You" for "The Woman in Red," 1984.
4. Alfred Newman with 45 nominations for music scores.
5. "Ben-Hur," 11 in 1959.
6. Linda Hunt, who played the male photographer in "The Year of Living Dangerously," 1983.
7. Peter Finch, "Network," 1976.
8. Fredric March, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and Wallace Beery, "The Champ," 1932; Katharine Hepburn, "The Lion in Winter," and Barbra Streisand, "Funny Girl," 1968.
9. John. Lionel won as best actor for "A Free Soul" in 1930, Ethel as supporting actress for "None But the Lonely Heart" in 1944.
10. Peter O'Toole, Richard Burton and Geraldine Page each lost on seven nominations.
11. "Gone With the Wind," 1939.
12. Laurence Olivier and Michael Caine, "Sleuth," 1972; James Whitmore in "Give 'em Hell, Harry," 1975.
13. Hattie McDaniel, "Gone With the Wind," 1939.
14. Marlon Brando as the older Vito Corleone in "The Godfather," 1972; Robert DeNiro, Vito Corleone as a young man, "The Godfather II," 1974.
15. Leslie Howard.
16. Dudley Nichols, 1935; George C. Scott, 1971; Marlon Brando, 1972. Nichols refused his Oscar for writing "The Informer" on grounds that the Academy was being used by the studios to defeat organizing of unions. He later accepted the award. Scott for his leading role in "Patton" because he deplored the Oscars as a "meat parade." And Brando for his lead in "The Godfather" as a protest against the treatment of American Indians in Hollywood films.
17. Janet Gaynor, best actress for three films: "Seventh Heaven," "Street Angel" and "Sunrise," 1927-28.
18. Barry Fitzgerald, "Going My Way," 1944. He lost to Bing Crosby as best actor and won as supporting actor.
19. Miyoshi Umeki, supporting actress for "Sayonara," 1957.
20. Walter Huston, supporting actor, and John Huston, director-writer of "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," 1948.

Dollar lower

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar staged a broad retreat in early trading on foreign exchange markets today. Gold bullion prices drifted lower in trendless trading.

After rising generally Thursday, the dollar fell sharply in the Far East early today, plunging to a new seven-year low against the Japanese yen. The dollar closed at 177.70 yen in Tokyo, down from 180.30 yen. Later, in London, the dollar slipped further, to 176.45 yen.

A dealer in Frankfurt, West Germany, said technical factors, coupled with declining U.S. interest rates in the wake of a renewed drop in oil prices Thursday, broke the dollar's week-long recovery and sent the currency lower in the Far East.

The dealer said the dollar was also under pressure from expectations that economic data to be released later in the day would indicate continued slack growth in the U.S. economy.

The British pound rose to $1.4675 from $1.46.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Thursday:

—2.265 West German marks, down from 2.2945

—1.89575 Swiss francs, down from 1.93375

—6.94625 French francs, down from 7.0575

—2.5555 Dutch guilders, down from 2.589

—1,539.50 Italian lire, down from 1,563.50

—1.3955 Canadian dollars, down from 1.39625

London's five main bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price of $347.60 a troy ounce, down from $349.50 late Thursday.

Gold was bid at $347.40 in Zurich, also down from $349.50.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold closed at a bid of $347.29, down from $348.69.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at $5.69 an ounce, down from $5.75.

Texas could get $382 million from offshore oil agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration agreed with members of Congress Thursday on a split of long-disputed offshore oil revenues that would mean $382 million for Texas by April 15.

The compromise would free $1.4 billion for seven coastal states and about $4.6 billion in revenues accumulated over the past seven years to apply against this year's budget deficit.

More than $7 billion has accumulated in escrow accounts since 1978, when Congress required a "fair and equitable" distribution of revenue from federal tracts that border state waters.

Texas' share under the compromise would be $382 million compared with the $424 million the state would have gotten under the House-passed version of the deficit reduction bill that includes the provision.

The state also would get an additional $134 million over the next 15 years to settle a dispute over how much money should have been put into escrow.

The administration had offered 27 percent of up-front bonuses and annual rentals, but balked at yielding a fixed percentage of production royalties, which account for the lion's share of the revenues from a tract because they can run for decades.

States insisted on a flat 27 percent of all royalties, and wrote that figure into a deficit reduction bill. Administration officials had said the bill might be vetoed because of the inclusion of royalties.

Rep. Henson Moore, R-La., met Thursday morning with Republican Senate leaders, Budget Director William Miller and Interior Secretary Donald Hodel, then in the afternoon with Reagan, Miller and Hodel to nail down the compromise, said his aide Cal Odom.

The compromise on offshore revenues did not necessarily mean passage of the bill, because disputes remained on other provisions.

The agreement on offshore revenues requires the federal government to pay these sums before April 15: Louisiana, $672 million; Texas, $382 million; California, $336 million; Alabama, $66 million; Alaska, $51 million; Mississippi, $14 million and Florida, $30,000.

To settle state claims that certain revenue that should have been put in escrow had been left out, the agreement requires these payments without interest over the next 15 years out of future revenue, starting sometime between Oct. 1 and April 15, 1987: Louisiana, $84 million; Texas, $134 million; California, $269 million; Alabama, $7 million; Alaska, $134 million; Mississippi, $2 million and Florida, nothing.

The schedule calls for 3 percent of the amount annually for the first five years, 7 percent annually for the second five years and 10 percent annually for the final five years.

Royalties before last Oct. 1 are not covered by the agreement.

Prices fall 1.6 percent, largest drop recorded

WASHINGTON (AP) — Collapsing world oil prices helped push down wholesale prices in February by 1.6 percent, the largest monthly decline since the government began keeping track of the figures in 1947, the Labor Department reported today.

The drop in the Producer Price Index followed a 0.7 percent decline in January, after it had climbed sharply in the last three months of 1985.

The decline was largely due to plummeting prices for gasoline and other petroleum products. However, food prices also showed sharp declines.

Gasoline prices fell 11.1 percent, after a 5.7 percent decline in Janaury. Home heating oil dropped 26.2 percent, after falling 10.8 percent in January. These declines were also the largest recorded in the department's 39-year history of keeping track of producer prices.

February's decline, if continued for 12 straight months, would be equal to an annual compounded decrease of 17.1 percent, department analysts said.

Wholesale prices over the past 12 months have declined by 0.1 percent, the department said.

During January, food prices after seasonal adjustments declined 1.6 percent after moving down 0.4 percent in January. One of the biggest drops came in vegetable prices, which dropped 23.2 percent after a 9.7 percent drop in January.

Meanwhile, automobile prices, down at the beginning of the year because of cut-rate financing deals, began to edge up again, by 0.4 percent in February.

In all, the Producer Price Index for finished goods stood at 292.3 in February, meaning that goods that cost $10 in 1967 cost $29.30 last month.

Analysts fear increased reliance on foreign oil

By RICK GLADSTONE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Petroleum industry analysts are concerned that reductions in American oil drilling and exploration because of the drop in world oil prices will leave the country dependent on foreign suppliers.

The latest source of their concern came Thursday when Exxon Corp. and Chevron Corp. announced exploration-spending reductions totaling $3.6 billion. Other companies have announced similar cutbacks.

"We're setting up the next oil crisis, I think we clearly are," said Bruce Lazier, who follows domestic oil companies for Prescott, Ball & Turben Inc., a New York investment firm. "We will pay the piper down the road."

He and other analysts said they feared the strides made by the United States in reducing the use of foreign oil would be undermined by a dropoff in the search for domestic oil reserves.

New York-based Exxon, the world's largest oil company, said it would reduce its capital and exploration budget by 26 percent from $10.8 billion in 1985 to $8 billion this year.

San Francisco-based Chevron, the fourth largest U.S. oil company, announced it would spend about $3.5 billion this year, down from $4 billion in 1985.

Their announcements coincided with a fresh drop in the price of West Texas Intermediate, the main U.S. crude. Prices on the New York Mercantile Exchange fell from $14.01 per barrel on contracts for April delivery to $12.65, less than half of what it cost five months ago.

Many economists and the Reagan administration have welcomed the price decline because it curtails inflation and has helped lead to lower interest rates. But oil industry analysts call the resulting curtailment of exploration a shortsighted policy because the United States has known reserves that will last only into the early part of the next decade.

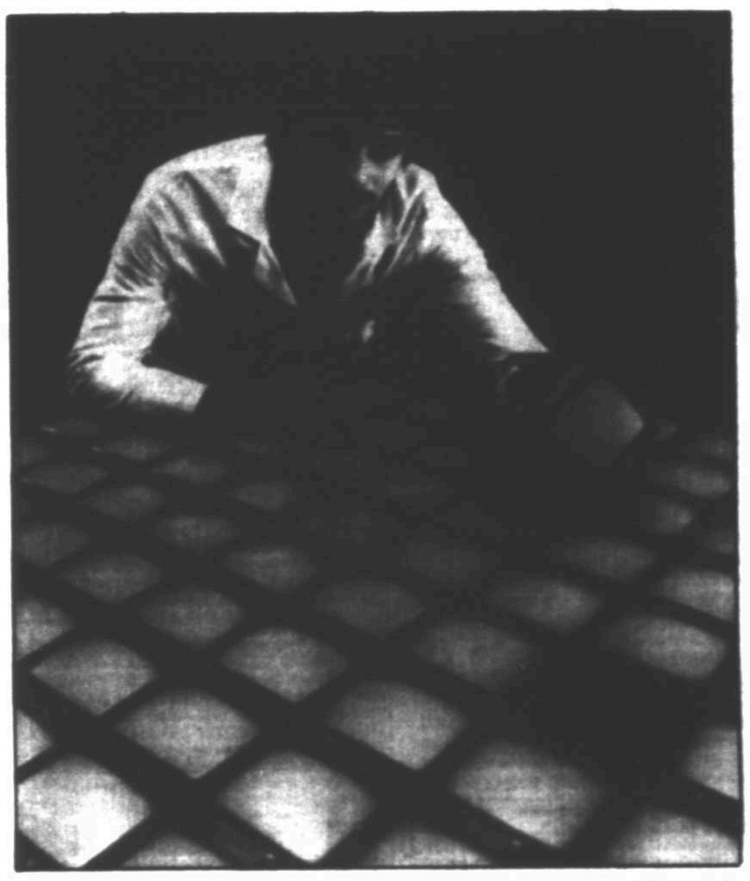

They said such drastic declines raise the prospect of a return to the oil crises of the 1970s, when Persian Gulf producers controlled prices.

"Every move we make to cut exploration puts us that much closer to the grasp of foreign producers," said Peter Beutel, assistant manager of Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc., a New York-based energy futures firm.

The United States used an average of 15.7 million barrels of oil daily in 1985, relying on imports to meet 32.1 percent of that demand, Department of Energy figures show. That is down from 45.4 percent in 1979.

But the cutback in U.S. exploration could reverse the trend, the analysts say, and might renew American dependence on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which holds much of the world's known oil reserves.

OPEC accounted for about two-thirds of U.S. oil imports during the 1970s, but its share dropped to 36.2 percent by last year as non-OPEC producers such as Mexico and Canada increased production.

Consumer debt jumps 22 percent during January

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans took on $6.9 billion more in consumer debt than they paid off in January, the biggest rise in debt in three months, the government said Thursday.

The Federal Reserve Board said the January debt increase was up 22 percent from the revised December gain of $5.6 billion. It marked the fastest growth in debt since an increase of $8.4 billion in October.

Growth in auto loans accounted for the big jump in debt accumulation in February. Auto loans rose by $3.1 billion compared to a December increase of $1.3 billion.

The pickup was in response to the resumption of low-interest rate financing offers that spurred auto sales in January, the report said. A separate report Thursday said auto sales fell 1.3 percent in February after automakers scaled back their financing incentives.

The January increase put total consumer debt at $548.7 billion at the end of January. This left the ratio of consumer debt to disposable personal income at 18.2 percent, only a little below the record highs last year that exceeded 19 percent.

Other details of the debt report:

—Cash loans from banks and other short- and medium-term personal debt rose by $2.1 billion in January following a December rise of $2.3 billion.

—The category including credit card debt rose by $1.8 billion, up only slightly from a December increase of $1.7 billion.

Reagan picks Conable for World Bank presidency

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Rep. Barber B. Conable Jr., a popular, moderate New York Republican who helped write many of the nation's basic tax laws over a 20-year congressional career, is headed for the presidency of the 149-nation World Bank.

Conable, 63, who retired from the House in 1985 and teaches government at the University of Rochester, was designated on Thursday by President Reagan to a four-year term as head of the international lending organization, a $175,000-a-year, tax-free job.

He will replace A.W. Clausen, whose term expires in July.

Although other nations in the bank must vote on the appointment, Conable's selection by the White House all but assures that he will get the job. All six past presidents of the 40-year-old bank have been American.

Initial reaction from other major members of the bank to the announcement was positive.

"It is gratifying that a man with such keen awareness of international issues should be appointed to this very important post at such a critical time," said Roy Denman, head of the European Economic Community delegation in Washington.

The bank makes $15 billion a year in loans to underdeveloped nations.

The mild-mannered Conable, who had been the senior Republican on the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, was popular with both Democrats and Republicans in Congress — which may have had a bearing on his selection.

The Reagan administration has been seeking congressional blessing for its plan to expand the role of the bank in helping to ease the debt crisis in Mexico and other economically troubled Latin American nations.

Conable's appointment ends a long talent search by White House officials. Clausen, who had fallen from the administration's good graces, announced last October he would retire when his term expired.

Late last year, Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker turned down the job. More recently, Labor Secretary William Brock, who administration sources said had been a top contender for the post, took himself out of the running.

Conable could not be reached for comment late Thursday. In an interview several weeks ago, the former lawmaker said he was honored — but surprised — that his name was being mentioned in speculation.

Barber B. Conable Jr.

Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., chairman of the House Ways and Means trade subcommittee, said in a House floor speech, "I can't think of anybody who is better qualified to attack this job." Gibbons claimed Conable was highly skilled "in the practical work of the world and politics."

And Rep. Jim Leach of Iowa, senior Republican on a House international finance subcommittee, said: "In raw intelligence, diligence and integrity, Barber Conable is the preeminent member of Congress in the last decade."

The White House announcement praised Clausen, saying he "will leave behind an institution with a more effective set of tools to cope with the challenges to development in the coming years."

Since he became president in 1981, it said, "the bank has conducted the most searching reform of its activities in its 40-year history."

Yield columns represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven days and 7-day compounded (effective) rates of return. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. (r) — restricted availability.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 384 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT (tm) of Holliston, Mass. 01746 increased $3.2 billion to $303.1 billion during the week ended March 11, 1986. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 7.08 percent from 7.11 percent. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield decreased to 7.10 percent from 7.11 percent. The taxable funds' average maturity lengthened by 2 days to 48 days.

William E. Donoghue says, "This week, the average maturity for all taxable money funds extended by three days to 48 days. This was the first lengthening of this magnitude since Aug. 20, 1985. Assets of all taxable funds rose to their highest level since June 26, 1985. Two-thirds of the nearly $3.2 billion inflow was accounted for by the institutions-only money funds. Such a large inflow is a typical pattern when short-term rates decline sharply. Meanwhile, total money fund industry assets, including both taxable and tax-free funds, have risen to a record $351.0 billion."

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Amoco tests 185 barrel producer

From Staff Reports

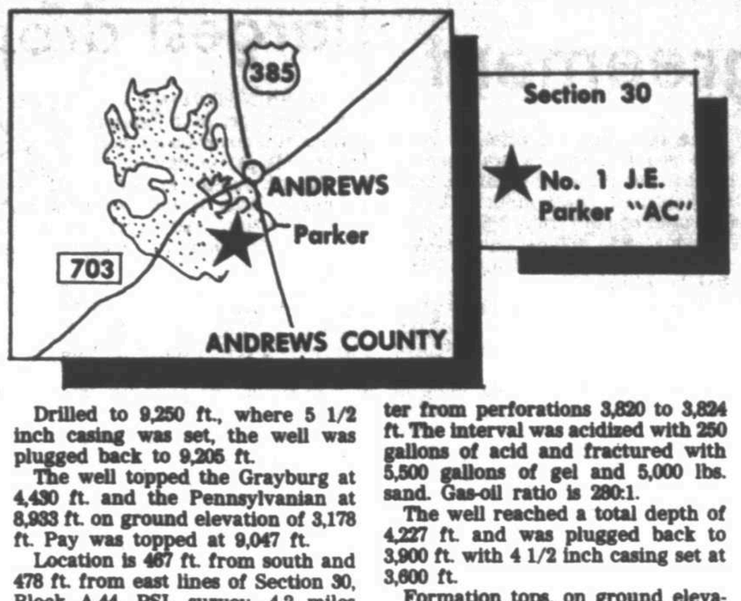

Amoco continues activity in Andrews County, completing a Pennsylvanian producer in the Parker field.

AMOCO PRODUCTION CO. potentialed the No. 1 J.E. Parker "AC" to flow 185 barrels of 39.6 gravity crude and 107 Mcfd on a 21/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 150 psi. Production is from perforations 9,047 to 9,070 ft., which had been acidized with 3,750 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 578:1.

Drilled to 9,300 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 9,240 ft.

The well topped the San Andres at 4,850 ft., Wolfcamp at 8,560, and the Pennsylvanian at 8,960 ft. Pay was topped at 9,092 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from south and west lines of Section 30, Block A-44, PSL survey, five miles northeast of Andrews.

Andrews field gains 135 barrel producer

A second Pennsylvanian producer was completed in the Parker field of Andrews County as TOM RASMUSSEN completed the No. 3A H.J. Halliday.

On potential test, the well pumped 135 barrels of 39 gravity crude, 103 Mcfd and 11 barrels of water. Production is from perforations 9,047 to 9,070 ft., which had been acidized with 3,750 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 763:1.

Drilled to 9,250 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 9,205 ft.

The well topped the Grayburg at 4,430 ft. and the Pennsylvanian at 8,933 ft. on ground elevation of 3,178 ft. Pay was topped at 9,047 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from south and 478 ft. from east lines of Section 30, Block A-44, PSL survey, 4.2 miles southwest of Andrews.

Runnels re-opener pumps 125 barrels

KAUFMAN EXPLORATION & DEVELOPMENT, INC., Indianapolis, Ind., re-opened Fry production in the Indiana field of Runnels County with completion of the No. 2 J. Howard.

The well tested to pump 125 barrels of 38.5 gravity crude and no water from perforations 3,820 to 3,824 ft. The interval was acidized with 250 gallons of acid and fractured with 5,500 gallons of gel and 5,000 lbs. sand. Gas-oil ratio is 280:1.

The well reached a total depth of 4,227 ft. and was plugged back to 3,900 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 3,600 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 1,948.3 ft., include the Palo Pinto at 3,390 ft., Fry at 3,820, Gray at 4,160, and the Gardener at 3,991 ft.

Location is 716.7 ft. from north and 523 ft. from east lines of Section 471, John J. Green survey, Abstract 209, 11 miles northeast of Winters.

Spraberry Trend area gains seven new wells

Two producers have completed a total of seven new producers in the Spraberry Trend Area of Martin County.

ATKINS PETROLEUM CO., Midland, completed five new producers, all in the Schenecker "24" lease, located in Section 24 of Block 38, T-1-N, T&P survey.

The No. 1 Schenecker "24" tested to pump 33 barrels of 39.5 gravity crude, 25 Mcfd and 100 barrels of water from perforations 7,706 to 9,494 ft.

Atkins finaled the No. 2 Schenecker "24" to pump 47 barrels of 39.5 gravity crude, 27 Mcfd and 166 barrels of water from perforations 7,676 to 9,336 ft.

On potential test, the No. 3 Schenecker "24" pumped 39 barrels of 39.5 gravity crude, 26 Mcfd and 101 barrels of water from perforations 7,662 to 9,317 ft.

The No. 4 Schenecker "24" pumped, on potential test, 41 barrels of 39.5 gravity crude, 30 Mcfd and 100 barrels of water from perforations 7,662 to 9,304 ft.

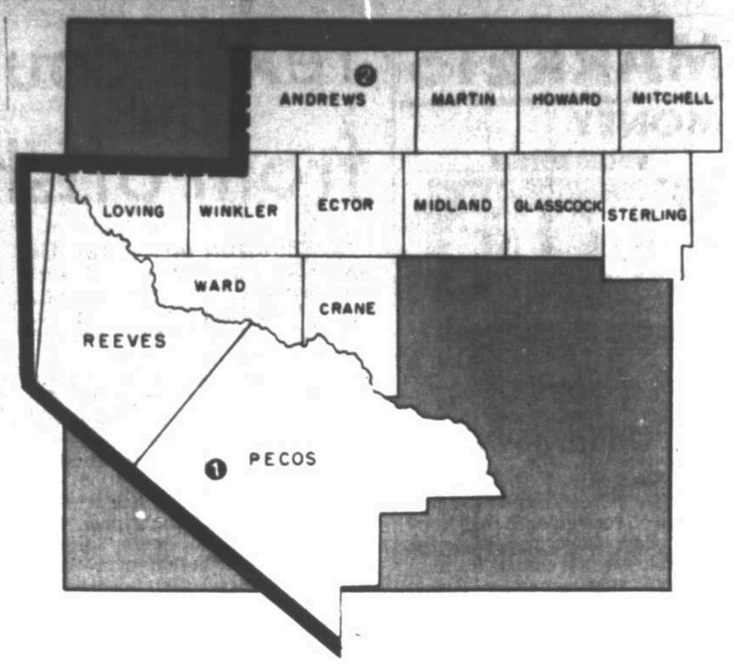

Atkins completed the No. 5 Schenecker "24" to pump 49 barrels of 39.5 gravity crude, 35 Mcfd and 89 barrels of water from perforations 7,663 to 9,314 ft.

A second producer, COSTEX RESOURCES, INC. completed, completed two wells in the field.

The No. 4 George W. Glass "21" to pump 60 barrels of 38.6 gravity crude, 67 Mcfd and 110 barrels of water from perforations 7,809 to 9,224 ft.

Costex also completed the No. 4 Nail "33" to pump 39 barrels of 38.4 gravity crude, 44 Mcfd and 115 barrels of water from perforations 7,816 to 9,098 ft.

Mitchell Energy reports earnings, cuts spending

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (SWN) Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. reported that net earnings for the year ended Jan. 31, 1986, amounted to $48,233,000, equal to $1.01 per share, up from last year's $35,684,000, or 74 cents per share. Revenues were $843,925,000, a decline from the prior year's $914,639,000.

Earnings in the fiscal 1986 fourth quarter totaled $13,266,000, or 28 cents per share. In the corresponding quarter a year ago–when writedowns of $26,460,000, or 55 cents per share, were taken– the company experienced a loss of $14,897,000, or 32 cents per share. Revenues in the fiscal 1986 quarter were $225,450,000, compared with $216,440,000.

The company also announced it plans to spend 25 percent less this year on capital additions than it did last year and said it is accelerating a program to reduce annual operating expenses by about $30 million over the two-year period ending Jan. 31, 1987.

George P. Mitchell, chairman and president, said the board of directors had approved both cost reduction plans "in light of the very difficult conditions in the energy and Houston real estate markets.

"We can change up or down as conditions warrant."

Chrysler chairman decries 'cheap gas' energy policy

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

HOUSTON (AP) — Gasoline prices should bottom out around 75 cents per gallon and eventually stabilize at about $1 per gallon, Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca predicted Thursday.

"I think a buck is where it's going to find itself," he said at a news conference. "You don't know what this does to our planning."

He noted that the designs for cars now rolling off assembly lines were made with $2-per-gallon gasoline in mind.

Iacocca, on the third stop of a 10-city tour to promote new Chrysler models, said he believed falling oil prices were the result of a deliberate effort by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. The attitude of the oil exporters toward the United States is "Let them suffer," he said.

"More important, (domestic oil) exploration and development goes to hell. In five years, they've got us again," he said. "Cheap gas is like a drug habit. And we're going to get hooked again. Make no mistake about it. Everybody's off on a binge again."

Iacocca acknowledged, however, that the lower gasoline prices mean more Americans are buying bigger cars with less fuel-efficent, larger engines. Those bigger cars, with higher profit margins, mean more money for the nation's automakers.

"We've made a bundle of money because of America's cheap gas policy," he said, adding that he has made clear to government officials in Washington his disgust over the lack of a national energy policy.

"I go to the bank with all these cheap gas profits and not have any guilty conscience," he said.

"We are making a helluva mistake by throwing out our energy policy," he said. "We are playing right into OPEC's hands. I keep screaming this in Washington. Our energy policy is stupid. We'll all become energy hostages again."

Iacocca complained that when his two larger domestic competitors, General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., could not meet government fleet mileage requirements, they lobbied for the requirements to be eased and "Washington went ahead and complied."

He said that in his most recent appearance in Houston three years ago, cheap imports were killing the automakers. Now, he said, cheap imports were killing the Texas oil industry.

Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca talked about oil and gasoline prices Thursday in the Oil Capitol, Houston,where cheap oil prices are hurting the local econony. Chrysler's top salesman is on a ten city tour promoting new model cars.

INFLATION

The February declines in energy prices left wholesale prices for most petroleum products at the levels that prevailed in 1979 and 1980, department analysts said.

Sharp decreases already have shown up at the gasoline pumps in many parts of the country and industry analysts are predicting even sharper decreases in the coming weeks.

Crude oil prices fell by a record 20.3 percent in February, equaling the total decline of the preceding four years.

However, not all energy categories showed large price declines. Natural gas prices edged up 0.1 percent in February after a 0.5 percent increase in January.

The Labor Department offered these other specifics on February wholesale price activity:

— Capital equipment declined 0.1 percent after showing no price changes in the preceding two months.

— Finished consumer goods other than foods and energy showed no change in February from January's figures, with advances in tobacco products, women's clothing, books and newspapers offset by declines in prices for trucks, household table utensils and sporting goods.

Last month's consumer price index — an indicator that lags behind the wholesale report — showed a modest 0.3 percent increase.

Milder-than-usual winter weather has helped to hold down prices of vegetables and meat, according to Donald Ratajczak, director of the Economic Forecasting Project at Georgia State University.

"No one knows for sure how far oil prices will fall before they begin firming," Ratajczak said. However, he added that, "fuel prices have already fallen so sharply that a decline in prices for all industrial commodities now appears likely."

The effect of the falling value of the U.S. dollar against major foreign currencies, making imports more expensive, is beginning to show up in government data as a slight offset to falling energy prices, said David Wyss, chief economist for Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass.

"Import prices are going up. Not a lot, but they're going up," Wyss said.

He said he anticipated oil prices would continue to slide for the next few months, then inch up again by next fall.

Judge delays All-American pipelineproject

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — U.S. District Judge James Nowlin Thursday put the brakes on construction of a pipeline that would transport crude oil across portions of the environmentally sensitive Edwards Aquifer.

Nowlin's order prohibits All American Pipeline Co. from continuing construction of the controversial project for at least 30 days.

The order is result of negotiations between Attorney General Jim Mattox, Hays and Travis counties, All American and the U.S. Bureau of Land Management, a division of the Department of the Interior.

Nowlin set an April 10 hearing date to consider an extension of his order, which expires April 12. Opponents to the pipeline are expected to argue that Nowlin's order should remain intact until the federal government assesses the environmental impact of the pipeline on the aquifer's northern recharge zone.

More than one million South and Central Texas residents rely on the aquifer for drinking water.

"What we're trying to do is make sure that if this pipeline is built, it is contructed in a way that guarantees the protection of the environment," Mattox said in a prepared statement following Nowlin's order. "We will be anxiously awaiting the federal government's assessment."

An array of county, local and state officials have vehemently opposed the pipeline, which All American has continued to construct without an operating permit from the Texas Railroad Commission.

At a meeting of the House Subcommittee on Oil Pipeline Leaks Thursday, All American spokesman John Roper said the company, a subsidiary of the Goodyear Co., will do all it can to prevent pollution of the aquifer.

"No oil would enter the Edwards Aquifer," Roper said.

It is still up in the air whether Texas or the federal government has jurisdiction over the pipeline. Federal officials have agreed to study the matter and determine whether an environmental impact statement is needed.

Enviromental Protection Agency spokesman Paul Seals told the House panel that the federal government requires an impact statement when pipelines only if they are of "major environmental significance."

Assistant Travis County Attorney Jim Collins said the state has given pipeline operators "the power of the king" by allowing them to condemn private property for their own use.

Collins said a company could crisscross the state with pipelines without acquiring an environmental impact statement.

"I submit to you that if that's the case, the citizens of Texas have very slight protection from a pipeline company that's acting like a renegade," he said.

Collins said a company could crisscross the state with pipelines without acquiring an environmental impact statement.

"I submit to you that if that's the case, the citizens of Texas have very slight protection from a pipeline company that's acting like a renegade," he said.

Exercise used to combat cocaine addiction

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

A cocaine addict's life is a pendulum of high highs and low lows, according to a local drug and alcohol abuse expert who is advocating a simple but effective alternative to the mood-swinging drug: exercise.

Dr. Joseph Wolpmann of Clearview believes the key to getting a cocaine addict back on track after quitting the drug may very well lie in stimulating the production of a natural biological secretion called endorphins, through a strenuous exercise regime.

"Endorphins are 'feel good' chemicals that are naturally produced in the body," said Wolpmann, medical director at the five-month-old facility. "They're the reason you wake up feeling good in the morning or why a runner experiences a runner's high. They're natural painkillers."

"The problem with cocaine abusers is the combination of the drug and the endorphins gives them a tremendous high," he said. "But cocaine eventually suppresses the production of the endorphins, which leaves the addict depressed after the drug wears off."

Wolpmann said the most common treatment for depression with cocaine addicts is tricylic, an anti-depressant which has certain drawbacks — for example, it takes several days before the effect is felt.

"That lag time has always been the biggest problem," he said.

A suggestion from an adult counselor on staff at Clearview, Barbara Reidy, however, has changed the way Clearview treats its cocaine patients.

"Barbara told me about another program she had seen where exercise was used to stimulate the production of endorphins," said Wolpmann. The director added that the field of chemical dependency, particularly of cocaine, is so new that there are very few precedents. "We decided to give it a try and it is working quite well."

Clearview has linked up with the local YMCA, said Wolpmann, to develop a program of assessment and exercise for both cocaine and alcohol abusers.

Dr. Joseph Wolpmann

"An evaluation is conducted to determine the physical needs of the patient," he said. "Tests for muscle mass, stress and heart rate are done before the exercise program is set up."

Another local expert on cocaine abuse agrees that exercise may be effective in dealing with addicts.

"All of the literature shows that exercise is good for any kind of addiction," said Bob Dixon, of New Horizons, a counseling program specializing in cocaine addiction. "Most programs that work with any kind of abuse try to find a substitute for the addiction."

Wolpmann said the programs vary for cocaine abusers and alcoholics, due to the nature of their addictions.

"Because cocaine is a stimulant, most addicts are in much better physical shape than alcoholics," he said. "Also a cocaine addict doesn't have the problems with detoxification that an alcoholic does. They won't die during detox, whereas an alcoholic could possibly die if the seizure is severe enough. The alcoholic has many more physical problems so their exercise program is less strenuous."

Wolpmann said a typical routine for alcoholics would be mild exercise three days a week, while the cocaine addict's program includes daily rigorous exercise.

The director added the exercise program has been a success.

"Right after the exercise, the depression began to subside. With the cocaine addicts, we noticed a difference within 24 hours," he said. "This probably means the body was already beginning to produce endorphins again."

Wolpmann said exercise is now mandatory for all patients.

"That's not all we do to help them though," he said. "We also teach them to achieve in their jobs, relationships and in other ways to calm their craving for artificial stimulants."

While exercise is proving to be an effective method of helping the cocaine addict deal with the absence of the drug, Clearview is still struggling with a larger problem — getting the addicts to admit they have a problem and seek treatment.

"There is a real difference between cocaine addicts and alcoholics and narcotics (opiates) abusers," said Wolpmann. "The cocaine abuser sort of sets himself apart from the others. The word on the street is that cocaine is not addictive."

"It's a real problem," Dixon said. "There's a great reluctance among cocaine addicts to do anything that could identify them as cocaine users. First of all, it's a highly illegal substance and also they may be in fear of their pusher. They're very reluctant to join any kind of group for cocaine addicts or to seek treatment."

While the problem is large — Wolpmann estimates 5,000 Americans are trying it for the first time each day — local attempts to organize recovering addicts and those seeking group support have been largely unsuccessful.

"There's a problem right now with trying to get a Cocaine Anonymous started in Midland," he said. "People are afraid to 'come out of the closet' and there has has been a low turnout."

Wolpmann added that Cocaine Anonymous tried to form a couple of years ago locally, but failed due to unattendance.

Currently the group is meeting at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays at Clearview, he said.

The chief problem preventing cocaine addicts from seeking treatment is the very nature of the drug itself.

"It's very difficult for cocaine addicts to go straight," said Wolpmann. "I don't think they ever forget how good they felt when they were high. When they get depressed after the drug wears off, their only alternative, unless they seek treatment, is to take more of the drug."

Former drug user finds herself on other side of telephone line

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Lynda Herbold is on the other end of the phone these days.

As Clearview's crisis intake worker, she is answering calls from drug and alcohol abusers and their families who are seeking help.

As former director of New Beginnings, an Odessa residence for chemically dependent women, and as a longtime member of the Odessa Council on Alcoholism, she has all the proper credentials to handle the crisis caller.

But Ms. Herbold will be depending on personal and long-struggled-for experience for the job as well. As a former drug user and alcoholic, she has learned the hard way what the substance abuser is going through.

"We average on our 800 line (1-800-595-LIFE) about 175 calls per week," said Cathy Clayton, Clearview's marketing director. "Before we hired Lynda, all the calls were handled by the nursing unit and there was no single person who dealt with the crisis caller."

Ms. Clayton added part of the reason Ms. Herbold was hired was because of her own personal experiences with substance abuse.

Lynda Herbold

For the 35-year-old counselor, the path leading her to Midland's only drug and alcohol abuse center began in the late 1960s in the Midwest.

"I was raised in Minnesota and had been through the drug scene during the hippie days and decided to leave that state just to get away from drugs," she said. "So I went to Alaska."

Her trip north, however, turned out to be more of the same.

"I went to Alaska in 1972 where I met Jack (her husband)," she said. "At the time I met him I was already an alcoholic. Jack was using cocaine pretty heavily and so I began to use it also. I really liked the combination of both of them."

Ms. Herbold said they were making $100,000 a year during the construction of the Alaska pipeline and were "spending $10,000 of it on cocaine."

She added that Jack also was buying and selling the drug at the time.

The situation changed, however, shortly after the couple moved to Odessa in May 1981.

"We didn't have connections here and Jack began to go through withdrawal," she said. "I didn't know what was wrong with him. I thought he was going crazy."

In July, after visits from police and the continued deterioration of their home life, Ms. Herbold said she and the children were kicked out of the house.

"It was terrible," she said. "I woke up in the Salvation Army with two kids and thought, 'I don't want to do this any more.' "

Some motorists try to fly into airport — with their cars

Signs fail to stop speeding drivers

Since he opened the airport in 1975, Vroman has seen the results of cars' running the stop sign and ramming straight ahead into the fence and onto the northeast corner of the airport at least 10 times.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The "dead-end" spot at Midkiff Road and Sky Ranch Airport is getting banged up again and again.

The black-on-yellow double-arrow sign was bent and almost uprooted by a car or truck whose driver apparently ignored or didn't see the stop sign at the T-intersection and plowed straight through the double-arrow sign, uprooted posts carrying strands of barbed wire, and knocked down a Sky Ranch commercial sign.

"That (the existing signs) doesn't stop them," said Harold Vroman, operator of the airport, which is southwest of Midland and seven miles south of Interstate Highway 20.

"What they need is more signs coming down the road. It may meet with state requirements, but it's not enough. They (motorists) are coming down the highway at 70 miles an hour." The speed limit there is 55 mph. "They don't have time to stop. What they need is a blinker. We've got electricity out there."

Since he opened the airport in 1975, Vroman has seen the results of cars' running the stop sign and ramming straight ahead into the fence and onto the northeast corner of the airport at least 10 times. "It's not the county's fault," he said of Midland County.

About two years ago, a man driving a sports car was killed at the T-intersection.

"He hit the pile of dirt, went 75 feet in the air, and hit the ground inverted," Vroman recalled.

Twice this month, cars have rammed into the dead-end spot at Sky Ranch.

"You see, they (the motorists) are likely drinking, and they don't want to be caught. So they drive off," he speculated.

And Midkiff Road (County Road 1210 South) is marked with signs. Two-tenths of a mile from the T-intersection is a sign warning of the coming-up stop sign. Next is the octagonal stop sign and then the double-arrow dead-end sign.

Still, motorists plow right on in at night.

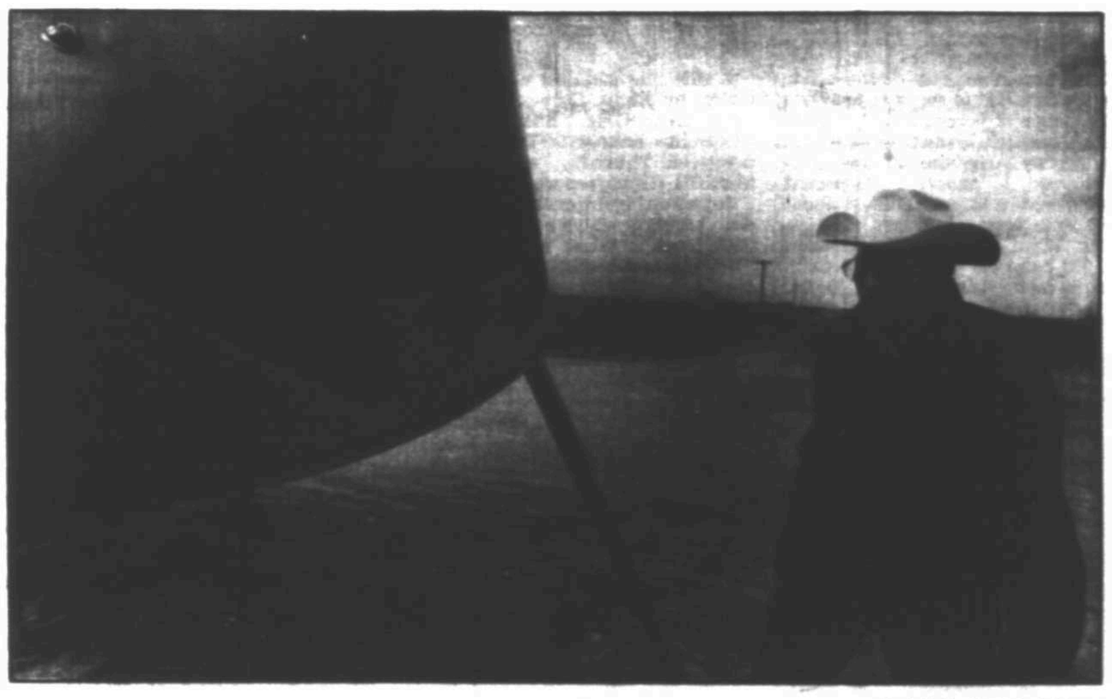

"Why don't you put a bull's-eye out there?" Sky Ranch pilot Paul Erdmann jokingly remarked to Vroman.

"That's what they've got out there," said Vroman.

Vroman said he had called Midland County Commissioner Scott Welch, who indicated the sign would be replaced. Further, Welch today said he likely would not install a blinking light at the T-intersection.

"They'll knock it down like they do the sign," he said. Instead, Welch said he would install "rumble bumps" on the road "to wake people up" and to alert motorists of the upcoming intersection.

"They'll put up another sign until somebody knocks it down again," said Vroman. "It's repetition."

Odessa cancels TML insurance coverage

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The City Council voted unanimously to cancel its liability-casualty insurance coverage with the Texas Municipal League.

The Odessa council's action followed the lead of some 60 other Texas cities that have opted to self-insure, some recently because of increasingly higher rates for decreasing coverage.

In voting to cancel the city's 1985-86 insurance with TML, council members approved a resolution allowing Self Insurance Resources Inc. of Richardson to begin a study to determine the city's risk exposure and funding under self-insurance and to establish accounting procedures. The company will also attempt to locate an insurance firm to provide excess risk coverage. Cost of the first two phases of the Self Insurance Resource proposal to the city will be a flat fee of $10,000 plus travel expenses not to exceed $800.

The company will also provide ongoing administration of the program at a monthly cost of $3,000. The city will contract with a local claims adjustment service to handle claims locally.

The council's action was prompted by notification from TML that premiums for the 1985-86 fiscal year, which began Oct. 1, would increase from $365,134 to $947,339, a rise of more than 132 percent.

Council members, anticipating an increase in insurance premium costs had budgeted $524,000 for the 1985-86 fiscal year. Now, part of those funds will be used to pay TML for coverage to date and the balance will be placed in a reserve fund to handle claims for the remainder of the year.

According to Jim Hall, administrative services director, after TML is paid off there will $250,000 to $300,000 of the budgeted insurance premium funds left for the reserve account.

Information presented to council members by Hall showed TML paid a total of $43,273 in the 1984-85 fiscal year. Through March 10, Hall said, a total of $7,762 had been paid in actual claims, with projected claims for the remainder of the year expected to total about $45,000.

In addition to increasing the city's premium rate for the current fiscal year, TML informed the city that coverage for general liability, law enforcement and automobile liability would be reduced to $3 million per occur-

Water snake last big hurdle to Stacy Dam

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

After spending more than eight years and $2.4 million on the Stacy Dam project, the Colorado River Municipal Water District finally outmanuevered a large group of downstream opponents and received a permit to build the reservoir.

But one last battle remains. On April 3, at a public hearing in the Runnels County Courthouse in Ballinger, the CRMWD will confront the Stacy project's last significant opponent: the Concho water snake.

"This is not a joke. It's horrible," said Owen Ivie, the water district's executive director, at a Thursday meeting of the Midland Chamber of Commerce's water needs assessment committee.

The snake is apparently a rare species, and the dam's construction may make it rarer still. If negotiations with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service fail to produce an agreement before April 3, the CRMWD will have to fight for its last permit, which is issued by the Army Corps of Engineers.

"We will be known as the Concho water snake's enemy nationwide," vowed Ivie.

Archaeological interests must also be satisfied that the 19,200-acre reservoir, to be located near Ballinger, won't permanently submerge valuable sites that have not yet been excavated. If these hurdles are cleared, construction could finally begin on a project which began in 1977.

"It's nearly impossible to build a surface-water system in Texas today," said Ivie, who blamed "politics, most of all" for the delays.

Stacy was opposed by many environmentalists, who were concerned about water levels in the coastal bays and estuaries, and by downstream water users such as the Lower Colorado River Authority, which won a favorable ruling from the Texas Supreme Court against the dam.

But then West Texas legislators and business groups threatened to withhold support of the state water plan unless Stacy was built.

"That got the governor's attention," Ivie said, and the permit was finally granted.

About 16.5 percent of the dam's $98 million cost will be paid by Midland, in exchange for about 16.5 percent of the water. The CRMWD, of which Big Spring, Odessa and Snyder are member cities, has struck similar deals with San Angelo and Abilene.

The cost of building a pipeline from the reservoir to Midland may be higher than originally expected, according to Dr. Herb Grubb, who also addressed the committee Thursday.

The state water plan approved by voters last November included bonds to help finance regional water systems, and Midland's pipeline probably qualifies as such, said Grubb, the director of planning for the Texas Water Development Board.

Public hearing on Stacy Dam set for April 3 in Ballinger

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — The Concho water snake and how construction of the Stacy Dam and Reservoir would impact the reptile will be the subject of a public hearing set for April 3 in Ballinger by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. The snake has been placed on the endangered species list.

The hearing is part of an effort by the Colorado River Municipal Water District to obtain from the U.S. Corps of Engineers a 404 (environmental) permit. Without that permit, CRMWD cannot begin construction on the $98 million project that was approved by Midland, San Angelo and Abilene voters in an August election. It also was the subject of a several-years-long battle between CRMWD and the Lower Colorado River Authority until a compromise was worked out in 1985 by the State Legislature.

Stacy Dam is planned as a water supply for the upper Colorado River and Permian Basin.

The hearing will start at 7 p.m. in the Runnels County district courtroom. It is open to the public and anyone may make statements concerning the claim the snake and its critical habitat are threatened by the Stacy project. Representatives from the Albuquerque, N.M., office of the Wildlife service are expected to conduct the hearings.

CRMWD General Manager O.H. Ivie said several individuals have indicated they plan to appear, including Congressman Charles Stenholm. If proceedings can't be completed in one evening, they will be continued the following day.

The Concho snake is a spotted brownish creature about 18 inches long. It has been found on the Colorado River from Robert Lee to Buchanan and on the Concho River from San Angelo to its confluence with the Colorado.

It is a subspecies of Nerodia harteri and differs from the Brazos water snake, once listed as threatened but later found to thrive in Possum Kingdom and Grandbury lakes, only in scale configuration and a somewhat more pinkish underbelly. Its habitat reportedly is in shallow riffles where it forages for minnows and propagates.

The USFWS claims that Stacy Dam would eliminate about 40 percent of the habitat and would displace or eliminate about 40 percent of the species.

The Corps has looked at several alternatives for the snake, including other possible sites, but none was feasible, according to a report from CRMWD.

DEATHS

John Pace Sr.

Pace

John Pace Sr., 82, of Midland, died Tuesday at a local hospital.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Hollowell United Methodist Church with the Rev. Hadley R. Edwards officiating. Burial will be at the Fairview Cemetery. Arrangements are being handled by Jackson Funeral Home.

Pace was born July 23, 1903, in Pelham. He married the former Beulah Jacobs. She preceded him in death in 1962. He was a Midland resident for 30 years and an active member of Hollowell United Methodist Church.

Survivors include four daughters, Addie Allen Johnson, Kitty Spears Joiner, Mozell Loftis Johnson and Faye Pace Wilson, all of Midland; one son, John Pace Jr. of Midland; two brothers, Bennie Pace of Dallas and Frank Pace of Red Valley, Calif.; one sister, Amanda Pruitt of Midland; four grandchildren; four great-grandchildren; and two great-great-grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland.

Myrtle Williams

Williams

Services for Myrtle Williams, 88, of Midland, will be at 11 a.m. Saturday at the Faith Temple Church of God in Christ.

The Rev. W.C. Kenan will officiate and burial will follow at the Fairview Cemetery.

Mrs. Williams died at her home Tuesday following a lengthy illness.

She was born Feb. 27, 1898, in Texas and lived most of her life in Mt. Pleasant and Mount Vernon. She moved to Midland in 1983 and was a member of the Faith Temple COGIC.

Survivors include two daughters, Lorene Dunlap of Mount Vernon and Albertha Davis of Midland; two sisters, Albertha Hatcher of Wolf City and Sallie Mack of Houston; 19 grandchildren, 24 great grandchildren and eight great-great grandchildren.

Jose M. Reyes

Services for Jose M. Reyes, 83, of Midland, will be at 3 p.m. Saturday in the Thomas Funeral Home Chapel.

Reyes died at his home on Thursday following a lengthy illness.

Burial at the Fairview Cemetery will follow the services.

Reyes was born Sept. 17, 1902, in Mexico and has been a Midland resident since 1960.

Suvivors include, his wife Anita; two sons, Jessie Reyes of Midland and Victor Reyes of Dallas; three daughters, Janita Rodriquez, Lenore Hernandez and Sylvia Galvan all of Midland; 14 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren.

Hazel V. Moore

Hazel V. Moore, 73, of Andrews, died at a Midland hospital on Wednesday evening.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield officiating. Burial will be at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Moore was born Aug. 18, 1912, in Oklahoma City, Okla. She spent her early life in Healdton, Okla. She moved to Texas in her late twenties. While living in Beaumont, she met and married Clinton B. Moore in 1964. They moved to California and later to the Dallas area. They came to Andrews in 1984.

Survivors include her husband; one son, Victor Luker of San Jose, Calif.; one daughter, Mrs. Minnie Elam of Modesto, Calif.; six sisters, Mrs. James G. House of Weatherford, Mrs. Warner McKinney of Andrews, Mrs. Burton Cain of Midland, Mrs. J.C. Overby, Mrs. Vyolet Mathis and Mrs. B.W. Vaughn, all of Odessa.

Donald S. Velliquette

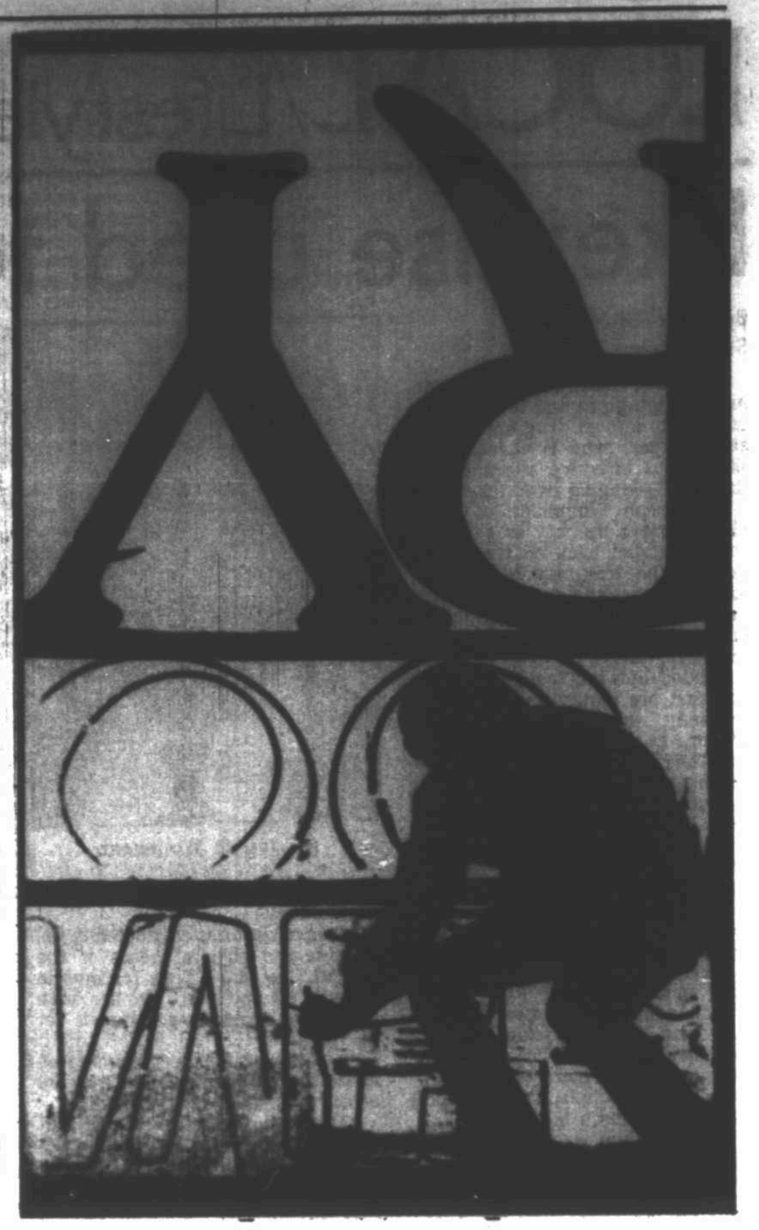

Col. Donald S. Velliquette, 81, of Midland, died Wednesday in a local hospital.

Memorial services were to be today at 11 a.m. at St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Velliquette was born Feb. 21, 1907, in Rockyridge, Ohio. He entered the Army Air Service in 1923 and retired in 1963 as a colonel. He was awarded the Victory Medal, the Air Force Commendation Ribbon, the American Defense Service Medal with one bronze star, the Asiatic Pacific Campaign Medal, the East Asian Middle East Medal, American Theatre Campaign Medal and three letters of recommendation from officials of the Venezuelan government. He was married to the former Augusta L. Gray of San Antonio. They moved to Midland in 1972.

Survivors include his wife; one son, Donald S. Velliquette Jr. of Midland; two daughters, Joycelyn Thiel and Charmaine Spruill, both of Midland; nine grandchildren; and 10 great-grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, 79702.

rence, Hall said. He noted the same coverage in the the 1983-84 fiscal year was $25 million and that this amount was reduced in 1984-85 to $10 million. The reduction to only $3 million would still leave the city exposed to any claim that might be in excess of that amount, said Hall.

Fiscal Services Director Frank Muser said he doesn't really believe the city will realize any great savings as a result of the self-insurance program, although it won't have to pay out the additional $323,339 that would have been required to continue insurance coverage with TML. Muser also noted that the city will also now retain interest earned on funds in the insurance reserve fund, which can be used to increase the fund balance.

Odessa's TML insurance coverage will officially end March 31.

STACY

But tax-simplification plans now being considered in Congress may eliminate the exemption for government bonds, which could increase the cost of the water plan — and projects like Midland's pipeline — by as much as 60 percent, Grubb said.

Texas is investing about $1 billion per year on capital investment in water projects, Grubb said.

"That has been financed in the past (largely) by bonds. Those have been tax-exempt in the past," he said.

Eliminating the tax-exempt status of these bonds would earn the federal government only about 20-25 percent of what it would cost the local governments which issue them, he said, would come at a time when the feds "are trying to shift responsibility for this kind of project back to local government."

The bonds to build the Stacy reservoir have already been sold, Ivie noted.

Ivie and Grubb agreed that Stacy is the last major surface-water project that will be built in West Texas.

"Without the Stacy project, our major cities in this area can calculate just how high we can go" before the area's population starts leveling off or even declining, Ivie said.

The reservoir is designed to hold about 554,000 acre-feet of water, with a daily yield of 100 million gallons. If the snake and archaeological-site issues are resolved, construction should begin in May 1987, and the dam should be completed by January 1990, Ivie said.

Ivie noted that farsighted civic leadership has enabled cities such as Midland to overcome the limitations of the area's arid climate.

"Some of these East Texas cities are paying more for water than the City of Midland is," he said.

Midland woman jailed

From Staff Reports

A 22-year-old Midland woman was being held in county jail this morning in lieu of bonds totaling $100,000 after being charged Thursday with possession of heroin and aggravated assault with a motor vehicle.

Toni Renee Ward was arrested Wednesday night after she slammed her car several times into a sheriff's investigator's car while trying to escape arrest, according to Sheriff's Sgt. Jim Newsom.

Sheriff's investigators acting on a tip that heroin might be found in Ms. Ward's car tried to stop her near the intersection of Terrell Street and Dakota Avenue about 10:50 p.m. Wednesday. After the car was finally stopped, 14 papers of suspected heroin with a street value of about $280 were seized, Newsom said.

Ms. Ward was being held on a $50,000 bond for aggravated assault with a motor vehicle and a $50,000 bond for possession of heroin. One of her passengers, 26-year-old Manuel G. Martinez, was also being held on a $50,000 bond for possession of heroin. A third passenger was charged with misdemeanor possession of marijuana, according to Newsom.

Bonds were set by Justice of the Peace Robert H. Pine.

In other reports, Felipe Gonzales, 503 S. Clark, reported the loss of $1,500 in currency in a Thursday burglary of his home, according to police reports.

A $495 television set was reported stolen by Elidia Duran Brito from her home on County Road 1223 south of County Road 116. The burglary occurred Thursday, according to Sheriff's Office reports.

John Fairlie of Odessa reported an auto burglary which occurred in the 2000 block of West Wadley. Taken Thursday was a $238 car-stereo system, according to police reports.

Gramm threatens to hold up Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm says he will "stop the flow of legislation in the United States Senate" if that's what it takes to force a vote on Sidney A. Fitzwater, the 32-year-old Dallas judge that Gramm has nominated to the federal bench.

"It's been a long, uphill struggle and I am not going to let the drive stall on the goal line," he said.

Fitzwater has been criticized for his participation in a 1982 pre-election incident in which signs warning that violating election laws could result in a prison sentence were posted in Dallas minority precincts. Fitzwater was and is a state district judge.

Texas veterans soon to qualify for home-improvement, repair loans

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas military veterans looking for money to make substantial repairs and improvements to older homes will find it after May 1 at the Texas Veterans Land Board.

Land Commissioner Garry Mauro announced Thursday the land board will loan eligible veterans up to $17,500 at 11.5 percent interest, with no down payments.

"This will create a bunch of new jobs and it won't cost Texas taxpayers a single penny," Mauro told a news conference.

Mauro said his office had received thousands of requests for help from veterans "who have been frozen out of limited conventional home improvement money by high interest rates" of 13 to 14 percent.

Loans of up to $20,000 will be available for two- to four-family residences, including duplexes, townhouses and condominium units.

'Voices of Appalachia' to sing

From Staff Reports

The "Voices of Appalachia", a 40-voice choir from Kentucky, will present a program at the Fannin Terrace Baptist Church, 2800 Mogford, Sunday at 7 p.m.

The choir members are students at Alice Lloyd College in Pippa Passes, Ky. The college is located in Appalachia.

"The college's graduates...are working hard to solve the many problems of the mountains...and at the same time to strengthen the Appalachian values and traditions that enrich the quality of life," said a spokesman for the college.

Richard Kennedy is the director of the Voices of Appalachia, whose music is the hymns and folksongs of southern Appalachia.

The concert is free and the public is invited.

CRISIS

That decision resulted in a 90-day stay with her sister in Mississippi during which she permanently swore off drugs and alcohol. She still recalls the date (July 17) and celebrates it as her "sobriety date."

The situation for her husband, however, worsened.

"He began to use alcohol to substitute for the cocaine and then he became an alcoholic," she said.

Jack, however, quit chemicals a few months later (December) and cherishes his own sobriety date.

Today, the couple is substance-free. Lynda jumped into volunteer work shortly after she quit alcohol and drugs. The volunteer work turned into full-time employment and eventually the directorship of New Beginnings (her idea) and now the Clearview position. Jack is employed in the construction industry.

Both Ms. Clayton and Ms. Herbold believe the personal experience will pay off when it comes to reaching the crisis caller.

"We know that a person in a crisis situation will only make one phone call," said Ms. Clayton. "It's important that we don't lose them."

"They'll change their minds quickly," said Ms. Herbold. "You only get one chance with them."

Ms. Herbold believes that the slump in the local economy will mean more and more people seeking treatment, particularly with cocaine abusers.

"Midland-Odessa is a prime area for cocaine addiction," she said. "With the money situation getting worse and people losing their jobs, they won't be able to afford the cocaine anymore. The money and job may be gone, but the addiction won't be."

State Treasury Department seeks owners of 'lost accounts'

ODESSA (AP) — The state Treasury Department advertised Sunday that it is searching for owners of forgotten money, complete with a list of names, but the state didn't have enough money to print the ads everywhere it wanted to.

One of the areas that missed the list was Midland-Odessa.

The list, published in 17 newspapers, contains the names of people with "lost accounts," said Treasurer Ann Richards. The money, which has been idle in banks, corporations and insurance companies, totals $117 million.

Bill Cryer, spokesman for the Treasury Department, said the state was limited by its $50,000 distribution budget.

The state now is receiving an average of 2,500 calls daily, said Cryer.

Cryer said there's no expiration date for claiming the funds and that people can receive the list by writing to Texas Treasury, Box 12608 Capitol Station, Austin, Texas 78711.

Highway closed for inspection

FORT WORTH (AP) — An elevated section of Interstate 30, near the site of a natural gas pipeline explosion, will be closed until Monday for a safety inspection, officials said.

Police who announced the closure Thursday said they were not aware of any structural problems in the overpass caused by the explosion, which followed a construction crew's severing of a 2-inch high-pressure gas line.

Milton Dietert of the highway department in Austin said the explosion "is not a normal damage-to-system situation."

He said there could be something that needs a thorough inspection, "because we wouldn't want there to be a secondary accident" from a structural failure.

Clean Midland opens campaign

From Staff Reports

Clean Midland Inc. is staging a city-wide spring cleanup campaign. This is everyone's chance to get rid of old furniture and appliances, bundled tree limbs, leaves and grass, lumber and other rubbish that's cluttering your garage, home or yard. No dirt, cars, trucks, or buildings will be hauled.

You may call in for pickup March 17-28. Then place your rubbish in your alleyway by Monday, April 21, to be picked up between that day and May 2.

City of Midland trucks will pick up items in the alleyway of any Midland resident.

Call 68C-LEAN to make reservations between March 17 and 28 or mail coupons that will appear in the newspaper on the next two Sundays to Clean Midland Inc., P.O. Box 1980, Midland, 79702.

Astronomers host sky viewing session

Eleven-year-old country singer banned from Christian school

TEXAS CITY (AP) — Songs of broken dreams and part-time lovers mean little to 11-year-old Debra Fowler, but her parents say they caught the attention of one preacher, who told them their daughter could not attend his private school if she continued to sing such lyrics.

"You say you love me. I know it isn't true. You only want me to share a bed with you," goes one of her songs.

Her parents said that Rev. Tom Campbell told them the girl could not sing the songs and attend Trinity Baptist Christian School in Texas City.

"He told us she could stay if she sang gospel music only," said Jo Ann Fowler, the girl's mother. "He said he preaches against some of the words used in country songs, and he couldn't accept her singing them in public."

Mrs. Fowler concedes that words in "Traveling Lover," a song the girl has been working on in recording sessions, are a little strong for an 11-year-old. But she added that "it's only a song, and this is the 1980s."

Miss Fowler began attending classes at Trinity Baptist last month. She has been working in recording sessions on two songs since last October.

Campbell also wanted to ban Miss Fowler's public singing appearances this summer, said Clarence Fowler, the girl's father and manager.

"Heck, she'll be singing in Memphis and Nashville come June," Fowler said.

Campbell would not comment to The Associated Press Thursday on the matter.

The Fowlers said they decided their daughter's country music career is more important than sixth-grade classes and gospel music at Campbell's school. So she began attending class this week at a school in nearby Santa Fe.

"If he is going to be so narrow-minded, we want nothing to do with his school. It's like he's living in the 1930s," Mrs. Fowler said.

Miss Fowler doesn't seem to be bothered by the controversy.

"When I was 10, I sat down in front of my parents and sang a song to them," she said. "When I finished, I asked them if I was good enough to make a record, and they said I was.

Conferees to discuss lack of nuclear war

AUSTIN (AP) — Soviet and U.S. experts will gather early next month at the University of Texas to discuss "what went right" in relations between the two nations since World War II, a professor said.

Why there has been no nuclear war during the past four decades will be the topic of discussion at the meeting April 3-4, said Elspeth Rostow, professor of American studies and government at the university.

"The absence of war is a considerable achievement given the level of pessimism that existed in the immediate post-war era regarding the inevitability of a nuclear exchange," she said Wednesday.

"There was an assumption that unless we were extraordinarily lucky we would have such a conflict in a very short time."

Her proposal for the April meeting was endorsed by both the Moscow-based Soviet Institute for the Study of the U.S.A. and Canada and by the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

The Soviets recently confirmed their participation and said their representatives would include Roald Sagdeyev, director of the Soviet Space Research Institute, whose Vega 1 and 2 satellites this month provided the most detailed glimpse to date of the core of Halley's comet.

Other Soviet participants include Andrei Kokoshin, deputy director of the U.S.A. and Canada institute.

U.S. participants include Helmut Sonnenfeldt, a former senior member of the National Security Council who served as an assistant to former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger; Gen. Brent Scowcroft, a former national security adviser; Bob Inman, former director of the National Security Agency and deputy director of the CIA; and university system Chancellor Hans Mark, former deputy director of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

STATE in brief

Son-in-law charged in county official's death

PLAINVIEW (AP) — The son-in-law of a Hale County commissioner was charged with murder in the official's fatal shooting, police said.

Don Terrell, 35, was charged in the death of Commissioner Ronald Eugene Morris, 54, who was found dead about 8 a.m. Thursday outside his county barn.

Terrell was arrested about 45 minutes after the shooting, at a garage door business he and Morris owned.

Terrell was being held late Thursday at the Hale County Jail in lieu of $150,000 bond, according to a Plainview police statement.

Connie Lara, a Plainview police dispatcher, said the shooting followed a family dispute, but she had no further information about it.

Morris served 10 years as a Hale County commissioner.

School to be dedicated

AUSTIN (AP) — San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros and former ambassador Bob Krueger will represent the state Saturday at Mexico City ceremonies at the site of an elementary school that will be built with money donated by Texans.

Cisneros and Krueger will be accompanied by six schoolchildren from Austin, Corpus Christi, El Paso, Dallas, Houston and San Antonio.

They head the state task force that has been raising money for Mexican earthquake relief efforts.

The task force, which was formed immediately after the devastating quakes rocked Mexico last year, has raised more than $445,000 — enough to build the school where 900 children will attend classes.

Police find man dead

ABILENE (AP) — A man despondent over marital problems shot one man before he killed himself late Wednesday, authorities said.

Sterling Roulain, 23, died of multiple head wounds, said Taylor County Justice of the Peace Clarence Collins, who ordered an autopsy.

Police said Roulain probably killed himself with a high-powered rifle 11 hours before they stormed his mobile home where he had barricaded himself.

"We had no idea that he was dead. We could not confirm to our satisfaction that he had taken his own life," Lt. James Berry said Thursday.

Police said the confrontation began after Roulain fired at least three rifle shots at three men who had gone to the mobile home park on a service call. One of the men was struck in the back by a bullet, but was treated and released from a local hospital, authorities said.

Endless 'going-out-of-business' sales may be illegal, officials say

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Going-out-of-business sales had better not be just gimmicks, or they might be illegal, several government officials said.

Fake final sales might violate the state's Deceptive Trade Practices Act, and the attorney general's office, the Dallas County district attorney's office and the Better Business Bureau are investigating some seemingly endless "final" sales, officials said.

Houston-based Sakowitz restocked merchandise at its Dallas store after advertising "the unthinkable" last fall — a final clearance sale before going out of business.

Heshman Imports ran a Jan. 9 advertisement in newspapers saying, "everything must go." Then, Feb. 4, the store advertised "scandalously low prices" at a "last day public auction."

That ad was followed by one Feb. 20 that offered a "final auction" of imported rugs.

The Deceptive Trade Practices Act, which went into effect in September, requires merchants to obtain a permit before holding a going-out-of-business sale and to end it within 120 days.

It bans stores from bringing in new merchandise after the sale begins or holding another door-closing sale within two years and requires that a "final" sale indeed be the last one.

The law was designed to prevent businesses from misleading customers and to insure that customers get real bargains from true, immediate going-out-of-business sales, officials said.

Investigators acknowledge that many businesses are unaware of the new regulations and that violations still are widespread.

Ron Berry, president of the Dallas Better Business Bureau, said he believes nine of 10 going-out-of-business sales are misleading or are held improperly.

"It's an outrageous situation," he said. "Obviously the public believes there are legitimate bargains to be had. If it's really going out of business, that's true.

"But the reason we pushed for this statute is because the real merchant gets lost in the sea of fake going-out-of-business sales," he added.

The attorney general's office and BBB are investigating complaints about improper sales and are planning to send businesses mail-outs about the law.

White clarifies remark about another test

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White has clarified a remark he made that angered some teachers by raising the possibility of another competency test, one based on their subject specialty.

"I may have inadvertently raised some concerns regarding future testing of teachers," White said Thursday, referring to comments he made Monday on the ABC-TV program "Nightline."

During that interview, the same day more than 200,000 teachers took a basic literacy test, White said, "There will be subject matter testing at a later date."

The comment brought criticism from some teachers, who are being required to pass this spring's literacy test to keep their jobs.

"The governor's call for subject area testing is harassment of Texas teachers," said Mike Morrow, executive director of the Association of Texas Professional Educators.

"If the governor believed this subject matter test was necessary, then why wasn't it included in the first examination? Texas can't afford either the waste of money or the toll the anxiety will take on our already beleaguered teacher corps," Morrow said.

Although the school reform law passed in 1984 called for subject specialty testing, the 1985 Legislature "specifically chose not to fund it," said Terri Anderson, spokeswoman for the Texas Education Agency.

No such additional exams presently are scheduled, she said.

Some members of the State Board of Education want to see what the competency test accomplishes and also wait on results of a statewide teacher appraisal system that takes effect next fall, Ms. Anderson said.

Those appraisals will put trained observers into the classrooms to evaluate teachers. Currently, there is no statewide appraisal. Some districts do it, some don't, she said.

White said he backs the TEA's policy.

"Although HB72 (the reform law) calls for subject matter tests, the (board of education) has indicated that they may ask the Legislature to reconsider this provision after they have had time to review the result of the basic skills test and the evaluation process," White said. "I support that plan."

NTSU offers guarantee on its teachers

DENTON (AP) — North Texas State University is offering a guarantee on its teachers: If school districts are not satisfied with its education school graduates, the districts can send the teachers back.

NTSU officials said Thursday that the school will re-train any incompetent teachers it graduates through a quality assurance program scheduled to start in May.

If the teacher needs remedial training, NTSU will review the teacher, figure out where his deficiencies lie and offer counseling or professional help to the teacher and his principal, said NTSU spokeswoman Charlotte Guest.

The program offers more courses at NTSU and individual help.

"Throughout our 96-year history we always have had a commitment to quality teacher preparation," said NTSU Chancellor Alfred Hurley. "If we did not have the utmost confidence in our teacher education program, which has the highest admission standards in the state, we could not offer this kind of assurance to school districts."

All NTSU education graduates receiving Texas teacher certification — about 400 a year — will be covered by the program, Guest said.

The school's guarantee that it produces competent teachers came three days after Texas teachers finished the first round of competency testing mandated by education reforms. State officials predict about 5 percent of the state's 200,000 teachers will fail the March 10 test and a second-chance test in June.

How to make a raised bed

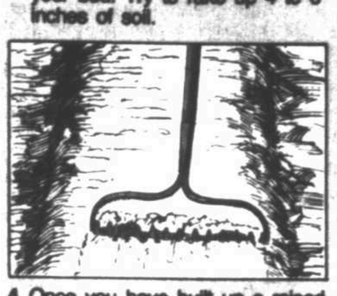

1. After working the soil by hand or with a tiller down to at least 6 inches in depth, use stakes and string to mark the dimensions of each bed. The string will mark the center of each walkway—space them about 3 feet apart.

2. Then, standing at one end of the garden, just behind the first length of string, begin raking up soil from the next walkway to build up your bed. Try to rake up 4 to 6 inches of soil.

3. Stay in the walkway and continue to bring up the soil the length of the row. Then repeat the process from the other side to complete the bed.

4. Once you have built up a raised row, smooth out the top of the bed with your rake until it is level.

5. After smoothing out the seedbed and tamping it down with a hoe, you're ready to plant.

Agriculture agency official will oversee FCA

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has chosen a senior Agriculture Department official, Frank W. Naylor Jr., to oversee the reorganized Farm Credit Administration.

Naylor and Marvin Duncan, senior deputy governor of the FCA, will be nominated to a new three-member board, Reagan announced Tuesday. The third member to be appointed by the president will be a Democrat, as required by law.

After Senate confirmation, Naylor, 47, will be designated chairman of the full-time board, whose members serve staggered terms. Naylor was named to a six-year term, Duncan to four years.

Naylor's salary as chairman will be about $73,000 a year, while board members will be paid about $69,000.

The board will oversee operations of the cooperatively owned Farm Credit System, a 37-bank network that is the nation's largest farm lender, holding roughly one-third of the $212 billion in U.S. farm debt.

With the farm economy ailing in recent years, some of the system's lending units — including those that serve production credit and federal land bank associations — have shown heavy losses. Overall, the system lost $2.69 billion in 1985, its first annual deficit since the Depression.

The emergency rescue package approved by Congress created a new Farm Credit System Capital Corp. to centralize and handle financial aid for the worst-off banks. It also reconstituted the FCA as a true "arm's-length" regulator, giving it beefed-up powers to halt shaky lending practices within the system.

Naylor, who was born in Mulvane, Kan., has served almost five years as undersecretary of agriculture for small community and rural development, which includes supervision of the Farmers Home Administration, the Rural Electrification Administration and the Federal Crop Insurance Corp.

Before joining USDA, Naylor worked since 1976 as senior vice president of the 11th Farm Credit District in Sacramento, Calif., in the system he will oversee as FCA chairman.

Naylor first came to the capital in 1969 as deputy administrator of the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. He moved to the Veterans Administration in 1972 as executive assistant to the administrator.

Duncan, 50, was vice president and economist for the Federal Reserve Bank in Kansas City, Mo., from 1975 until he joined FCA last year. He was born in Devil's Lake, N.D.

In a related development this week, the FCA issued formal regulations setting up the organization and operations of the newly chartered Farm Credit System Capital Corp., effective immediately.

The law gives the corporation the power to acquire, hold, restructure, collect and otherwise administer non-performing assets and acquired property. Its purpose is to carry out a program of financial and technical assistance to Farm Credit System institutions and their borrowers.

"If a borrower whose non-performing loan has been acquired by the corporation cannot reasonably be expected to meet loan servicing charges...the loan will be liquidated."

Program could put farmers in hog heaven

By HARRY JUPITER
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISO — A publisher is marketing a computer program designed by Iowa swine researchers that is intended to make hogs pig out, weigh more and, consequently, earn more for farmers.

James Capparell, head of ANTIC Publishing Inc. here, says the new program, called "Babble 123," will sell for $19.95.

If it achieves the results Iowa hog ranchers are looking for, Babble 123 will have pork brokers babbling numbers and ANTIC bringing home the bacon.

Capparell, 39, a native of Rochester, N.Y., started ANTIC just four years ago. He said his company employs 45 people and rang up gross sales of $4 million last year.

If the big test near Fairfield, Iowa, is successful, ANTIC will be a farmhold word.

Iowa has 3 million residents and, at any particular moment, 7 million hogs. The state produces 22 million hogs a year, but more than two-thirds are slaughtered.

It may not be kosher, but it's reality in the hog world.

Babble 123 is a program that creates all kinds of messages, including poems and letters — even love letters.

It's the love letters that are expected to give Iowa swine a cuddly feeling of well-being that should lead to increased grossing out and dynamic poundage. A happy hog eats more, the theory goes.

The program will be combined with an expensive voice synthesizer to see how pigs respond to Valentine-like talk.

"Basically, it's simply artificial personality," said the modest Capparell. The idea, he said, came from Fairfield Software, an Iowa computer company.

Marc Halberstadt, 39, spokesman for Fairfield Software, said the program "has many applications and one of them, we hope, will determine whether playing love poetry to hogs increases their happiness. A happy hog will be a better hog."

The first big test began March 5 at the Doug Johnson hog farm. Johnson has 700 hogs, but only 100 will be used in the test that might revolutionize the pig world. A panel of swine-research specialists will monitor the hogs at Johnson's spread and evaluate their reaction to the project.

Dave Reiff, a feed dealer who is a member of the porker panel, said, "We're looking for increased efficiency and performance of the whole hog herd through the use of the Babble program.

Neida Palmer, 53, a Fairfield nurse and sociologist, is another member of the unusual panel.

"Happy hogs eat more, are easier to deal with, even look better."

Don't be a sap and leave tree selection to chance

The winter season is waning rapidly, but there's still time to select and plant shade and ornamental trees for the home landscape.

Select the best tree to fit your particular landscape needs and situations. Understand the tree's characteristics, growing habits and requirements and its good and bad qualities before making a final decision. Choose a tree which offers the best characteristics to fit your landscape needs and one having the most desirable features.

Study your landscape carefully to best determine its need. Determine where the tree is needed and for what purposes. Note how much growing room is available as well as existing conditions, such as walks, drives, overhead lines, water lines, drainage and the overall effect the tree will have on existing plantings.

Other than for shade, trees may be selected for screening, as garden accents, wind protection, for visual scale or balance, for children's play or simply to provide a pleasing environment for the home.

When selecting the best tree for the landscape, choose a tree which will tolerate local weather conditions and which is adaptable to local soils. Observe native trees in the area since these are more adaptable. Know the tree's growth requirements, possible insect infestation and diseases, feeding requirements and whether or not it prefers companion trees or space all to itself.

A choice must also be made between evergreen or deciduous trees. A deciduous tree will provide shade in the summer and sun in the winter. Evergreens, on the other hand, usually provide dense shade year-round and do not offer seasonal change, such as fall color, new leaf buds in spring or bare branches in winter.

For screening, perhaps an evergreen choice is best since it will provide a permanent year-round screen.

There is also a choice of large or small trees. Small trees usually grow fast to provide quick shade and offer a greater choice of seasonal bloom, fall leaf color and landscape interest. They also demand less growing room and may be planted in groups or masses.

Large trees, with time, provide more shade, but also demand a greater growth space. Perhaps the best solution would be a combination of large and small trees — small trees for quick shade and seasonal interest, while larger trees are slowly maturing to size.

Small tree selections include mimosa, redbud, dogwood, hollies, yaupon, crape myrtle, Japanese magnolia, cherry laurel, Chinese tallow, sassafras, loquat, crabapple, pear and river birch.

Commonly planted large trees include red maple, catalpa, pecan, hickory, sweetgum, pine, magnolia, sycamore, oak, elm, tulip tree, deodara cedar and blackgum.

A tree choice is a personal one made to fit your landscape needs. All trees have good and bad qualities; yet they all provide a natural beauty unmatched by any creation of man.

Common weeds sow seeds of destruction in lawns

Crabgrass and dandelions, two common weeds, appear in early spring and can ruin your lawn. But, with a little know-how and proper care, you can stop these common weeds and enjoy a beautiful lawn all summer long.

Crabgrass is an annual, bunch-type grassy weed. It sprouts in early spring and is killed by the first frost of fall. Crabgrass is a very vigorous plant. And, if crabgrass was in your lawn last year, you can be sure it will be back this year. Thousands of seeds are left behind each fall when crabgrass dies.

Fortunately, crabgrass is an annual plant — dying completely each fall. And that makes early spring the best time for control with a pre-emergence herbicide.

A pre-emergence herbicide kills crabgrass seeds before they have a chance to sprout. Apply the herbicide about two weeks before the crabgrass first appears. This prevents crabgrass from sprouting — eliminating the chance that it will overtake your lawn later in the season.

After crabgrass has begun to grow, post-emergence herbicides must be used to control crabgrass. A well-stocked nursery, garden center or hardware store should carry pre- and post-emergence herbicides for crabgrass control.

Dandelions pose a different problem to the homeowner. Dandelions are broadleaf perennials and do not die from year to year. They only seem to die because they become dormant. Most live through the harshest of winters, popping back up with the first warm spell of spring.

Because dandelions develop deep tap roots — it is virtually impossible to get rid of them by pulling or digging. Even if you cut a root below the ground leaves, you still probably won't eliminate the weed.

A spring application of herbicide is one of the best ways to fight dandelions. They are easy to spot and spray right on target.

The best sprayer for treatment of lawns is the compressed air sprayer. Look for one with an adjustable nozzle, spray extension and positive on-off valve. These features will help you control the spray and put it right on target.

Herbicides should be applied according to the manufacturer's directions. Always read and follow carefully all label instructions. To spray lawn weeds, set the nozzle on your compression sprayer to deliver a coarse spray and apply at low pressure to avoid drift.

After application, thoroughly rinse your sprayer with water at least two or three times. Fill with water again, pressurize sprayer and spray so nozzle and hose are rinsed.

Because of the nature of herbicides, it is recommended that you keep one sprayer for herbicides and another for insecticides and fungicides. Most vegetable and ornamental plants are broad-leaved and may be killed as readily as weeds. Weed-killer is difficult to always clean completely from your sprayer, so it is best to keep one sprayer for weeds and another for insects and fungus control.

Aptonyms: Name game names professional game

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Cardinal Sin has been the archbishop of Manila for 12 years.

Patience Scales has been a piano teacher in San Francisco for 30 years.

Ivan Doctor of Ferndale, Mich., is an optometrist. He said he's been an I. Doctor all his life.

These people's names elicit double takes and disbelief. But they are real and, curiously, common enough to have a name of their own. According to the American Name Society, they are called aptonyms; that is, surnames which — to the amusement of their owners and amazement of others — have turned out to be incredibly apt.

A brief search for Southern California aptonyms produced Tommy Trotter, the new director of racing at Hollywood Park, Carolyn and Frank Vineyard, operators of the Southern California marketing office for Chateau St. Jean and Jordan wines, and Richard Moneymaker, a bankruptcy trustee with the federal court in Los Angeles.

Not to mention Richard Slaughter, supervising deputy coroner in Orange County; Sgt. Mike Vice, a former narcotics investigator with the Fullerton Police Department; Judge James Judge in Orange County's superior court, and Meredith Jury, a Riverside trial lawyer.

Jury, who acquired her surname through marriage, said she might have changed it when she divorced. Instead, she asked her husband if she could keep his name. "It was too good to give up."

JACK SWALLOWS has been hearing puns about his name for 16 years, ever since he and his wife, Ann, moved to San Juan Capistrano. A private pilot, Swallows said: "I do fly away from time to time. But I always come back."

Swallows, who said many people call him Sparrow by mistake, now knows to expect calls from radio announcers every March and October (when the swallows supposedly arrive and leave Mission San Juan Capistrano). They usually ask whether his bags are packed and if he's leaving town that day, he said.

The phenomenon also has been noted in fiction. Major Major, a character in Joseph Heller's novel "Catch 22," was named by his father, who "had waited 14 years for just such an opportunity." In the military, the character is promoted through the ranks — thus becoming Maj. Major Major.

No one knows how many aptonyms there are. In any case, there are more than anyone would suspect — particularly among doctors, said Leonard Ashley, vice president of the American Name Society and professor of English at Brooklyn College in the City University of New York. At last count there were at least 13 doctors named Doctor in the United States, including a Westport, Conn., couple named Dr. Daniel and Dr. Judith Doctor, according to John Train, author of "Remarkable Names of Real People," "Even More Remarkable Names" and "Most Remarkable Names." Train, a New York writer who has collected unusual names since 1949, said he has verified five doctors named Bonebreak, one Bonecutter, 18 Butchers and 184 Paines or Paynes.

APTONYMS ABOUND among dentists with real names such as Chew, Root, Gargle and Filler. William Toothaker, a Pomona, Calif., dentist, said he went to dental school at Marquette University in Milwaukee, Wis., with Blayne A. Gumm, a retired Westminster dentist, and Luther Paine.

Toothaker said he would not be surprised if his name played a subliminal role in his choice of work. From grade school on, he said, people told him, "Gee, you ought to be a dentist." Another Toothaker teaches in the department of orthodontics at the University of Indiana, he said. Toothaker is an English name, which his family has traced as far back as Roger Toothaker, who immigrated from England in the 1600s. Beyond that, Toothaker figures the name came from someone in feudal times who had bad teeth.

In fact, names that today coincidentally befit a person's hometown or occupation have traveled full circle since 12th century England and France, when names were deliberately descriptive. For four or five centuries before that, most people had been baptized with a single Christian saint's name such as John or Mary, Ashley said. Surnames were introduced to distinguish one John from another, he said. "People could be named for their occupation, John the Baker, or for their look, John Russell (red hair), or where they lived, John Atwater."

These surnames were passed on to children. After a few generations, they no longer fit and someone named John Tall could actually be a short person. In the Victorian era, names that originally were obscenely or insultingly fitting were dropped, Ashley said.

NOW, ASHLEY SAID, no one notices such names as Taylor, Judge, Friendly or Strange unless they actually fit. Or unless they are aptly inappropriate, such as Purvis Short, a 6-foot, 7-inch forward for the Golden State Warriors, or William Lawless, president of Western State University College of Law in Fullerton.

Some may wonder whether a name is a self-fulfilling prophecy, subconsciously propelling a person toward a certain occupation, as may have happened to Dr. Toothaker.

Hank Davis, a psychologist at the University of Guelph in Ontario, Canada, has observed an unusually high number of people who study animals have animal names themselves. "The Imperial Animal," for instance, was written by anthropology professors Lionel Tiger and Robin Fox. "The Complete Book of Dogs" was written by A.J. and H.A. Barker.

In addition, Maynard Hogberg has been a pig expert at Michigan State University for 10 years. Recently, David F. Oyster wrote and produced a National Geographic television special about crabs.

Perhaps no one ever will know exactly why.

Stamp shows scheduled

From Staff Reports

Stamps — if you can lick them, you can join them at two regional stamp shows scheduled this month.

The Concho Valley Stamp Club of San Angelo will host the CONCHOPEX '86 Stamp Exhibit and Bourse 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday and 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Sunday at the Sheraton of San Angelo, 441 Rio Concho Dr.

The show is celebrating the Texas Sesquicentennial and the arrival of the Sesquicentennial Wagon Train in San Angelo. A special show cover postmark — a covered wagon design — will be used to cancel the Texas Sesquicentennial Commemorative postage stamp.

Stamp dealers will be buying, selling and trading materials at the CONCHOPEX '86 show.

A week later and a couple of hundred miles to the north, the South Plains Stamp Club and High Plains Regional Philatelic Association will jointly sponsor the SOPLEX-HIPLEX '86 show in the Banquet Hall of the Lubbock Civic Center 10 a.m.-6 p.m. March 22 and 10 a.m.-4 p.m. March 23.

More than 1,000 page of stamp exhibits will be shown at the show and dealers will be selling a variety of stamps and other philatelic items.

Both stamp shows will be open to the public free of charge.

Calligraphy program planned

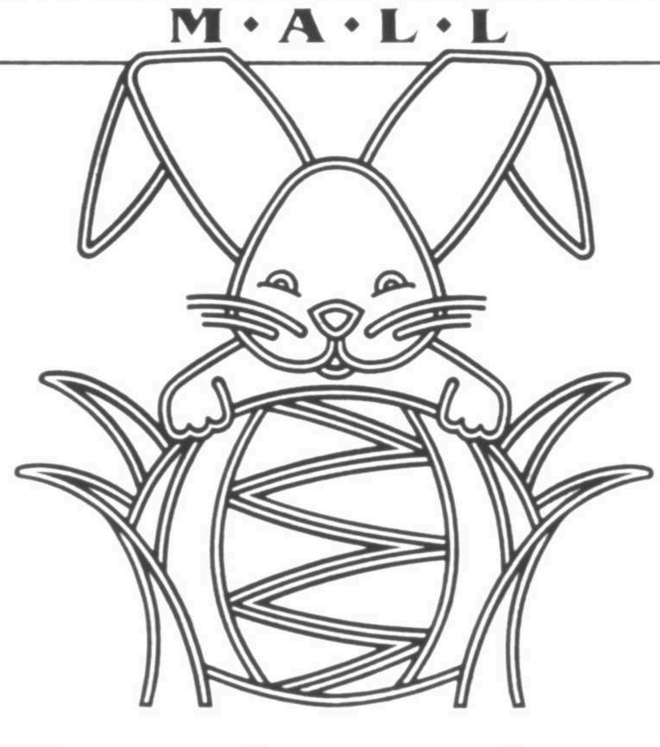

The Midland Calligraphy Guild will present a program on "Celtic Alphabetic Styles" 7 p.m. Monday at the Midland Palette Club, 907 W. Wadley Ave.

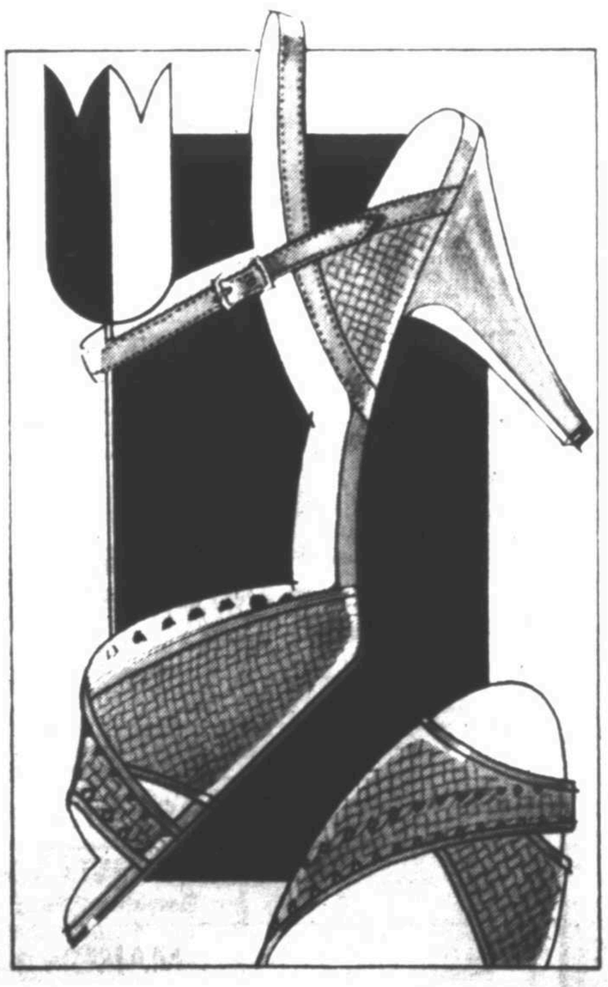

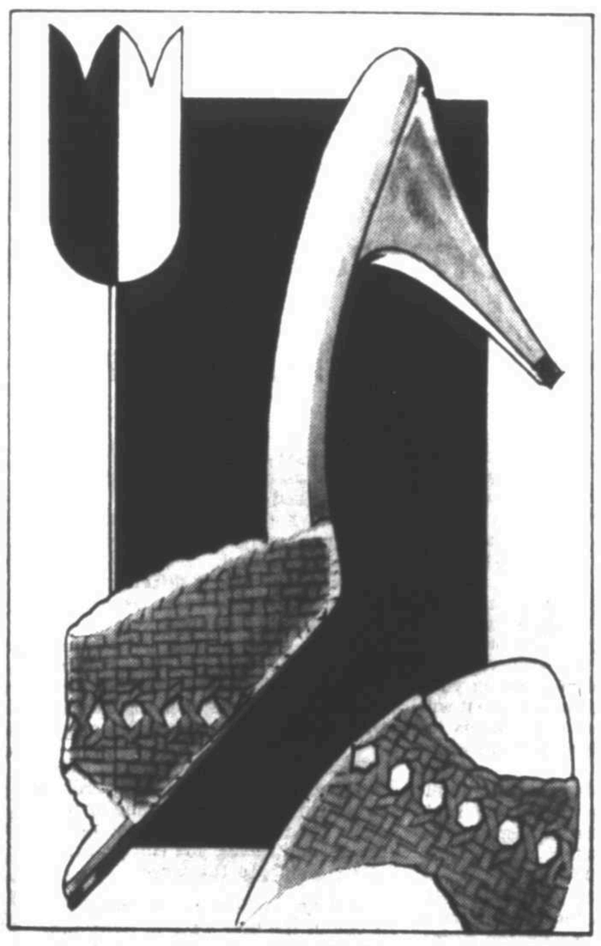

Laird Considine, long-time local calligraphy teacher, will present historical and technical aspects of the Celtic alphabets, which are best known from the medieval Book of Kells.

In addition to the lecture, some of the techniques used with these alphabets will be demonstrated and time will be set aside for those attending to practice them.

The public is invited to attend as guests. For more information on calligraphy lessons or guild membership call 685-1969.

Jewels given to daughters stay in family

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Distressed," whose son and daughter-in-law, after a three-year marriage, are working out a "friendly divorce." Meanwhile, the daughter-in-law has not returned the diamond engagement ring — a family heirloom.

With approximately half the marriages ending in divorce, may I suggest we revive the old tradition of handing down significant pieces of jewelry to daughters only. This will ensure that heirloom pieces remain in the family.

My husband and I have one daughter and two sons. All heirloom jewelry will be given to our daughter. When our sons marry, their wives will be given new pieces, equal in value to the heirloom pieces.

This may be no consolation to "Distressed," but it may help other families with sentimental heirlooms to keep them in the family. — FIFTH GENERATION NEW ORLEANS

DEAR FIFTH: Heirloom jewelry should be given to whomever the giver wishes to give it, and the recipient should be free to give it to whomever he or she wishes to have it. Not all heirs have the same sentimental feelings about grandmother's pearls when they come with strings attached.

A son is as much entitled to grandfather's watch as his sister, and he'd find it more useful. And if there are no daughters in the family, then what?

DEAR ABBY: What would you give a man who has everything? — FREDA

DEAR FREDA: An audit.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle a family dispute. Our daughter, a professional woman of 30, shares our house. It works out well, as she helps my wife around the house some, but mainly we each have our own quarters.

She pays room and board of $75 a week, which includes everything — laundry and ironing done, etc. She makes over $20,000 a year. She has an MG car (paid for), and has about $15,000 in funds. She recently was laid off work and has run out of unemployment compensation. She feels we should not charge her any money at this time. We feel that if she were living in an apartment building, she would pay much more. She could use some of her savings. We do not need the money, but she needs to know responsibility. Maybe we should cut it in half?

The atmosphere here has grown very chilly — and I am not talking about the climate. What should we do? Thanks. — OLD-FASHIONED DAD

DEAR DAD: If she were my daughter, I'd say she has already learned responsibility and doesn't need the lesson. But she's yours, not mine, so compromise, and cut the cost in half.

DEAR ABBY: Please print this letter to let the public know that they should never, never watch a person welding metal. I never realized the danger to your eyes. I was looking out my kitchen window at a worker about 30 feet away, for just a short time, and I burned my eyes badly.

It didn't start to hurt until three or four hours later. At first I thought I had something in my eye. During the night it got progressively worse — itching, pain, swelling of the eyelids and watering. I could not see clearly; everything was fuzzy. When I finally fell asleep, my eyelids got stuck together, and three times I had to get up and wash them and put eye drops in to be able to open them again.

I still wasn't sure what had caused all this until I called the welder to ask if that could be the problem. He said it was.

Please get the message out to help people. I'd hate to see a child or elderly person do damage to his eyes by watching a welder for a longer period of time than I did. Thank you. — CONNIE IN HAVERHILL, MASS.

Comet Halley hotline returns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Comet Halley is wending its way back from behind the sun, and that means it's time for the U.S. Naval Observatory's Halley Hotline to return to life.

The recorded hotline, offering information on the activities of the famous comet and advice on seeing it, will resume operations March 6, according to Observatory spokeswoman Gail Cleere.

The hotline number is 1-900-410-8765 and there is a charge of 50 cents for the first minute and 35 cents for each additional minute of listening.

Resumption of the service coincided with the first spacecraft approach to the comet, the Soviet Vega I.

And that is just the first of a swarm of of Earth-launched craft closing in on Halley to give humans their first close-up experience of this apparition, which appears every three-quarters of a century.

Other craft include Japan's Suisei, Soviet Vega II, Japan's Sakigake and, closest of all on the 12th, the European Space Agency's Giotto.

Comet Halley should be showing a tail as it returns from behind the sun and will be visible low on the southeastern horizon early in the morning, to careful watchers in dark areas.

Divorce: Get ready before getting out

Hearst News Service

There's sound advice in the old adage, "Marry in haste; repent at leisure," says a legal consumer educator, especially if the "repentance" includes the possibility of a divorce.

"When a marriage seems to be in very bad shape, some people just want to get out as quickly as possible," says Mary Coughlan, a legal consumer educator for Cornell Cooperative Extension and a member of the Department of Consumer Economics and Housing at Cornell University. But before packing an overnight bag and splitting, Coughlan says spouses should take some precautions that could protect them later from economic disaster.

"A 'take everything you want but just leave me alone' attitude is a dangerous one for any spouse to adopt," Coughlan says. "It may suit the emotion of the moment, but lead to real economic hardships later when trying to establish rights and assets during a divorce."

She advises spouses who are contemplating divorce to take the following precautions before actually physically leaving the marital home:

- Make an inventory of all property in the house. Some items could be missing later when you go back to claim them. The inventory also will assist your divorce lawyer in drawing up an equitable settlement.
- Bring with you copies of all pertinent financial records: tax returns, bank account statements, insurance documents, deeds, etc. You don't need the originals; copies will do. It is not uncommon during a particularly vicious divorce for spouses to destroy such records. Re-gathering such documents can be costly and time-consuming.
- Keep a diary of any facts that you think would be pertinent to the divorce proceedings. Date the entries and list names of witnesses, if there are any.
- Consider revising your will immediately, just in case anything should happen to you before the divorce is finalized. This is especially important if there are children to protect and provide for.

"Taking such precautions before leaving will be worth your while in the long-run," Coughlan says. "If you just walk out, you are jeopardizing your financial security and perhaps making the eventual divorce even more complicated than it need be."

In addition to protecting assets such as jointly owned property and bank accounts, spouses should keep in mind that pension funds, in many instances, are also considered negotiable assets during divorce cases.

Finally, says Coughlan, when the groundwork has been laid, find a good lawyer — before leaving home.

AT WIT'S END

Share feelings

BY ERMA BOMBECK

"Every couple of years or so a "dearest" book appears on the best-seller list from a less-than-happy child who figures the world will be richer if they share their misery.

The volley of words take dead aim against a parent who has attained some stature in the entertainment industry: Joan Crawford. (Fire one!) Bing Crosby. (Fire two!) Bette Davis. (Fire three!)

My mother did not raise a fool. I saw the handwriting on the wall 20 years ago and started to chronicle my own side of the story in this column. But there is another way parents can get in a word before their kids spit it all out on "Good Morning America."

Children have always been desperately hungry for feelings. How did you feel the first time you saw them? What did they sleep in? Where did you take them? Did you make mistakes? Did they say anything funny to make you laugh? Was there any drama in their lives when you worried about them? How little were they?

I know all about the "baby books." With the first one, there are three volumes showing the kid frothing bubbles at the mouth. With the second child, there is a picture every birthday for six years.

With the third one, there is one picture taken at the hospital with his eyes closed, a Rod McKuen poem and a recipe for baklava which you misfiled.

What I'm suggesting is you write your own book before they get a crack at it.

Write the pride you're feeling on a program while you're sitting there waiting for the curtain to go up on your child playing a bad tooth in a health pageant. How you made the costume and left the Velcro "cavity" at home on the kitchen table and how Daddy forgot to get flash bulbs for the camera and that's why the pictures look like a Steven Spielberg film.

Write the anger you're feeling as you sit there waiting for him to come home at 2 in the morning. Write why you feel the anger. How you've heard every siren in town since 11 p.m. and how you care and worry about him and always will.

Put down the terror you feel when one is sick and how Grandma used to thump you on the foot when you were sound asleep and say, "The baby's crying. I'll get her."

Have your co-author (husband) also contribute to the manuscript. His clumsiness at first. His apprehension. How his life changed and how he never thought he could feel this way over something with plumbing that couldn't be fixed by running hot water.

Grandparents should be an important chapter in this volume. Encourage them to hand down their stories of their past and how grandchildren gave them a second chance at immortality.

I worry about how passive we have become. We don't really talk anymore. We observe. We listen. We take notes. We switch channels. We wait for responses from silent computers who don't know us and don't care to.

Think about it. How can you build a future on silence? Kids need a firm foundation of history, humor, happenings and feelings. You can give new meaning to Baby Dearest. I bet after reading it, not one of your kids will even think about topping it.

Erma Bombeck is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Arthritis treatment tested

HOUSTON (AP) — A drug used to help some adults with severe rheumatoid arthritis is being tested in children suffering from the same affliction, Baylor College of Medicine doctors say.

The drug Methotrexate will be tested in about 90 children at 12 U.S. medical centers, according to Dr. Earl Brewer, clinical professor of pediatrics at Baylor and Dr. Edward Giannini, research assistant professor of pediatrics. Both doctors are supervising the three-year study.

Methotrexate is widely used to suppress the immune system of cancer patients. Studies have proved that the drug given orally in low doses helps adults with severe rheumatoid arthritis, an affliction believed related to a malfunction of the body's immune system.

Juvenile rheumatoid arthritis occurs in patients under age 16. It causes painful inflammation in the joints that limits mobility and sometimes inhibits bone growth.

"Many children with JRA find no relief from standard arthritis treatments, such as aspirin and other anti-inflammatory products," Giannini said. "Methotrexate may offer these children a new alternative."

Methotrexate was developed in the 1940s to treat several types of cancer. It also has been used since the early 1970s to treat severe psoriasis.

The study being conducted by Baylor will examine the effects of low doses of Methotrexate on systemic JRA, which spreads from the joints to the liver, heart and lungs; and polyarticular JRA, which occurs in multiple joints in the hands and legs.

Deaf woman teaches on deafness

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Elizabeth Beldon, who has been deaf since birth, wants to close the gap between deaf and hearing people.

"There's a cultural difference, and many of the hearing (people) take things for granted," she said with the aid of a sign-language interpreter.

She said some people believe deaf people should automatically understand the culture of those who can hear.

"They (hearing people) don't realize that signing is our native language. They think it's English, but it's not," said Mrs. Beldon.

Mrs. Beldon is a faculty member in the public services department of the University of Akron. She is a 1984 graduate of the university and is now working on a master's degree in family development and counseling so she can help the deaf.

She said it's difficult for the deaf to express their feelings to a hearing person through an interpreter. The costs of a counselor and an interpreter, and the interpreter's presence during a counseling session, make many deaf people reluctant to seek professional counseling.

"It's important for me to show other deaf people that some of us are college educated," she said. "I want to be a good role model."

Mrs. Beldon received the 1986 Canton Quota Club Deaf Woman of the Year Award for her work with hearing-impaired people and her accomplishments at the university.

"My goal is to work fully with deaf people because I have a very deep commitment," she said.

About 10 percent of working mothers care for their children themselves at their place of work. In addition, many mothers make part-time arrangements with more than one care-giver to cover their child's care throughout the day — such as nursery school in the morning, a neighbor's home in the afternoon.

uries seek source of Marcos' millions

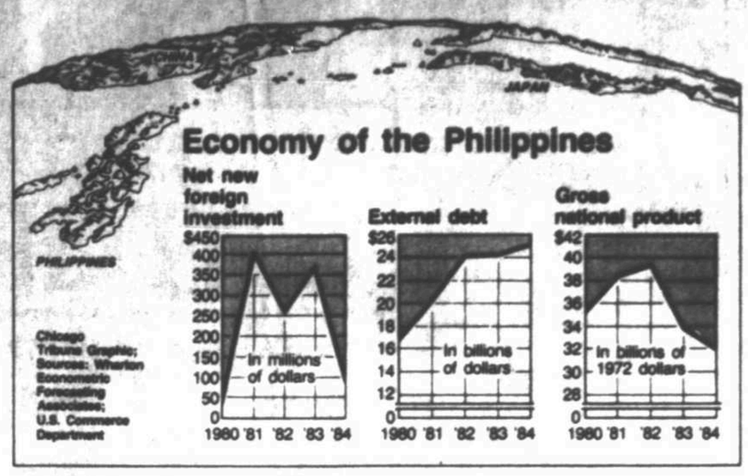

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two federal grand juries are examining whether former leaders of the Philippines government illegally pocketed millions of dollars, including whether deposed President Ferdinand Marcos indirectly received tens of millions of dollars from the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

On Thursday, a federal law enforcement source confirmed that a grand jury in Pittsburgh is investigating whether Marcos got most of $80 million that may have been paid to one of his close associates by Westinghouse.

That probe involves the company's successful attempt to win a $600 million contract to build the first nuclear reactor in the Philippines.

Meanwhile, Gen. Fabian C. Ver, former chief of the Philippines armed forces, was served with a subpoena in an investigation by a federal grand jury in Alexandria, Va., of possible kickbacks involving more than $100 million in U.S. military aid.

Robert Sims, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, said the subpoena was served on Ver at Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii, where Marcos and his family and associates have lived since fleeing their homeland.

The Virginia probe involves contracts awarded to American companies that retained Filipino agents close to the Marcos government to perform a variety of services. The grand jury is trying to determine whether any of the money paid to the agents was shared with Philippines officials, including Ver.

In the Pittsburgh investigation, Westinghouse has denied any wrongdoing, reiterating comments it made a decade ago when an earlier probe was closed for lack of evidence.

In the first investigation, company officials told the Justice Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission that Westinghouse paid a standard business commission to Herminio T. Disini.

Disini at the time was a businessman and Marcos associate. Westinghouse wanted his help in obtaining the contract for the nuclear reactor project.

Officials in the Justice Department and the SEC were pursuing allegations that the Marcos government got a substantial fee to give the contract to Westinghouse instead of General Electric Co.

Last Friday, the New York Times quoted unidentified Filipino lawyers, bankers and government officials as saying that $80 million went to Disini and that the bulk of that later was turned over to Marcos.

Marcos signed a letter of intent in 1974 that Westinghouse would build the power plant. The $600 million price tag has since ballooned to $2.1 billion and construction continues.

Senate asks Reagan to support tax hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — After rejecting President Reagan's budget, congressional budget writers are seeking the president's response to a Senate proposal for a $16 billion tax increase to help meet next year's required deficit target.

"We need to know immediately will the president support those kind of revenue figures," said Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee. "That's the key question."

He spoke Thursday evening after the Democratic-led House overwhelmingly rejected the proposed fiscal 1987 budget that Reagan submitted to Congress Feb. 5.

Also on Thursday, Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., unveiled a spending plan that would sharply pare the president's military spending request, virtually freeze domestic spending and call for unspecified tax increases.

Domenici has said taxes will be the "glue" that holds a budget together this year. Democrats have indicated they favor turning to taxes as a way to meet the required $144 billion deficit for next year.

Last week, the Senate Budget Committee rejected the president's budget by a bipartisan 16-6 vote.

House Democrats also have said they will not support tax increases unless there is a signal from the White House that Reagan would go along.

Reagan, however, repeatedly has said he will veto any general tax increase.

Domenici's plan would:

— Provide for about $289 billion in military spending authority, enough to accommodate an inflation rate of about 3.4 percent. In 1988 and 1989, his plan contemplates military spending growth of 1 percent above inflation. Reagan had requested about an 8 percent increase above inflation in military spending.

— Call for $70.3 billion in tax increases over the next three years with $16.2 billion of that coming in the first year. Domenici assumes some revenue increases proposed by the president, such as keeping the federal tax on cigarettes at 16 cents a pack and imposing some user fees, but he does not specify how the rest of the money should be raised.

— Impose a virtual freeze on most domestic spending. However, it would leave intact Social Security cost-of-living increases as well as similar increases for federal military and civilian pension programs. There also would be room for increases in such items as the hiring of air traffic controllers and Internal Revenue Service enforcement personnel.

— Reject the president's ambitious plan for selling federal assets and turning various government functions over to private operators.

Catholic leaders key to Philippine revolution

WASHINGTON (AP) — The outspoken archbishop of Manila, Cardinal Jaime Sin, could face problems with the Vatican because of his major role in turning the predominantly Catholic Philippines populace against former President Ferdinand Marcos, some American experts say.

Robert E. White, former U.S. ambassador to Paraguay and El Salvador, both predominantly Catholic countries, said the Filipino cardinal has "created a tremendous problem for Rome — a successful revolution."

White, who was in Manila earlier this month, said at a public forum on the Philippines Thursday that Filipino nuns and priests are so close to the people today that "You can't go to a political rally without being at a Mass, and you can't go to Mass without being at a political rally."

"Cardinal Sin and the bishops are going to maintain the loyalty (of the people), they're going to respond" to popular desire for reforms, he predicted.

Prof. David J. Steinberg, longtime Philippines specialist and president of Long Island University, said, "The church came together in a way it hasn't for ages...it moved well beyond the pope and well beyond anything it dreamed it would do."

He added, "I don't know where you have in the history of European politics a church policy which has been ahead of temporal authority the way Cardinal Sin was. Cardinal Sin is in a situation where he is making church policy...he has broken into the new turf of liberation theology."

However, Prof. Gareth Porter of American University said there is "a problem of reconciliation in the church" because "the bishops are going to have to come to terms with the more radical priests who have taken up the cause of the poor."

Several members of Congress joined scholars at the forum.

Tied to scandal, borough leader commits suicide

NEW YORK (AP) — Donald Manes, who survived a suicide attempt then resigned as Queens borough president when he was linked to the city's largest corruption scandal in 15 years, ended his life with a knife wound to the heart.

Manes, 52, died Thursday night, little more than an hour after an ambulance was called to his home, where he was found lying on the kitchen floor with a stab wound to the chest, said Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward.

He had been the highest elected official of the borough of Queens.

Thursday night, Manes and his wife, Marlene, had dinner at his sister's house, Ward said at a news conference. Mrs. Manes described her husband as "despondent all night," Ward said.

After they returned to their Queens home about 9:15 p.m., Manes was in the kitchen, talking to his psychiatrist on the telephone, when his 25-year-old daughter, Lauren, saw him reach into a kitchen drawer "in an erratic manner," Ward said.

Lauren Manes went to get her mother, and when they returned they found Manes on the floor, with a knife in his chest, Ward said. The telephone receiver dangled off the hook nearby.

The commissioner said that shortly after a call to 911 from the Manes home was received at 9:53 p.m., two police officers responded.

Manes stabbed himself with an eight-inch knife, said Deputy Commissioner Alice T. McGillion. The knife was removed by Mrs. Manes, Ward said.

When emergency personnel arrived at the house, said Lou Cafiero, spokesman for the Emergency Medical Service, they found Manes "in traumatic arrest — he had no vital signs."

He was taken to Booth Memorial Medical Center, where doctors tried unsuccessfully to resuscitate him. Dr. James Turner, the hospital's assistant director of surgery, said Manes had suffered two wounds to his heart.

He was pronounced dead at 11 p.m., Miss McGillion said.

Mayor Edward I. Koch, a close friend and political ally of Manes who later called the borough president a crook, said in a statement Thursday night, "This is an enormous tragedy and under these circumstances, and after death, we should also remember the good things Donald Manes did."

The New York City native was first elected to the City Council in 1965 at age 31. He became the youngest borough president in Queens history in 1971, and consolidated his power in 1974 by becoming Queens Democratic Party chairman.

Known as "The King of Queens," Manes seemingly was at the height of his power when, on Jan. 10, police stopped his car, which was weaving on a highway in Queens, and found him bleeding profusely from wounds in his wrist and ankle.

At first Manes told police he had been kidnapped and attacked. On Jan. 21 he admitted that his wounds had been self-inflicted.

Shortly after Manes' first suicide attempt, longtime friend Geoffrey G. Lindenauer, deputy director of the city's Parking Violations Bureau, was charged with taking a $5,000 bribe from the president of a company hired by the bureau to collect overdue parking fines.

Within a week, the head of another collection company doing business with the bureau, Michael Dowd, told authorities he paid bribes to Mr. Lindenauer on instructions from Manes.

Military may advise Contras

Aid proposal would fund weapons training

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional approval of military aid for Nicaraguan rebels would likely lead to weapons training for the guerrillas by U.S. military advisers, Pentagon sources say.

The advisers would be prohibited from operating alongside the guerrillas during military forays inside Nicaragua, the sources stressed.

Approval of President Reagan's aid package in congressional votes as early as next week could also lead to the sharing of U.S.-gathered intelligence information with the Contra rebels, they added.

The statements by the sources, who agreed to discuss the matter Thursday only if not identified, provided a clear indication the administration envisions more than just the transfer of guns and ammunition to the Contras.

The sources discussed the use of military advisers Thursday in the context of weapons training and not schooling in tactics. Although the officials declined to discuss what type of weapons might be provided that would require training, one source hinted that one example was ground-to-air missiles for use against Soviet helicopters.

President Reagan has been strenuously lobbying Congress to approve an aid package worth $100 million, of which $70 million could entail military assistance. But administration officials have repeatedly refused to discuss exactly what type of aid or weaponry is being considered.

The Defense Department and Central Intelligence Agency are banned from providing any intelligence information, military training or lethal equipment to the Contra guerrillas under a law that authorized $27 million in humanitarian assistance last year.

One Defense Department source said Thursday it was "almost a foregone conclusion that if the president gets what he wants from Congress, there will be some training by our advisers."

A second high-ranking official at the Pentagon refused to be so categorical, but agreed the Defense Department was prepared to offer such training.

"The fact is, we have no request for training assistance," this source said. "But if the president were authorized the unrestricted funding, we can see a situation where the Contras would receive weaponry and might need a limited amount of training on how to use the equipment."

The sources stressed, however, that U.S. troops or military advisers would not be allowed to operate alongside the Contra guerrillas inside Nicaragua, as U.S. advisers did with South Vietnamese units during the initial stages of the Vietnam War.

"It is absolutely ridiculous to think we have anything in mind other than a very limited number of (U.S.) people at some location outside Nicaragua that is safe at which we can show them how to use the equipment," added one.

"But as for a request for training, conceptually, that is something that we would want to do."

The United States at one time was providing covert training and military equipment to the Contras through the CIA. Military assistance was barred by Congress in 1984 and last year only the humanitarian aid package was authorized.

House members fly to Nicaragua on 'trip of hope' before vote on aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nine Republican Congressmen left today on a hastily arranged trip to Nicaragua in the latest surprising development of the battle over President Reagan's request for U.S. military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Two Democratic Congressmen, Reps. Nick Mavroulas of Massachusttes and Maryland Lloyd of Tennessee, left Thursday night on a similar mission.

As the group departed at 7:45 a.m. from Andrews Air Force Base outside of Washington, Rep. Bob Walker, R-Pa., called the trip "a learning experience. I've never been to Nicaragua, never had a chance to talk to the Nicaraguan leadership. It can't hurt to learn."

The Republican group also included Dave Monson of Utah; Paul Henry of Michigan; Jim Kolbe of Arizona; Guy Molinari of New York; Bob Dornan of California; Barbara Vucanovich of Nevada; Thomas DeLay of Texas, and David Dreir of California.

Meanwhile, Pentagon sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said that if Congress approves Reagan's request, the Defense Department is prepared to have U.S. military advisers train the Contra rebels, who oppose the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. Such training is now banned.

Reagan wants to provide the Contras with $30 million in non-lethal aid such as medicine and clothing and $70 million that could be for military aid. Congress last year banned military aid but approved $27 million in non-lethal help that will run out March 31.

Reagan has been lobbying lawmakers all week at the White House and plans to take his case to the public Sunday night in a nationally televised speech.

Dornan said he and his colleagues were going on what he called "a trip of hope, a last-minute trip to get a breakthrough" which he said could either lead to peace or to strong U.S. support for the rebels.

DeLay told reporters at the airport, "At least we're talking to our opposition, unlike the Sandinista government of Nicaragua."

The Democratic-controlled House is now scheduled to vote March 20 on the package, and both Democrats and Republicans say Reagan is facing an uphill fight. The Republican-run Senate will vote later.

Kolbe said he is undecided on how to vote in the House next Wednesday. "I felt this was a useful way of gathering information. I won't become an expert in 36 hours, but I will gain information. I think it's a useful trip."

Molinari voiced similar sentiments, "I think this will be a learning experience."

Planning for the two-day trip began Wednesday, Dornan said. It will include a visit to the capital city of Managua and then a flight tomorrow to neighboring El Salvador, where the U.S.-backed government is fighting guerrillas the Reagan administration says are supplied by the leftist Sandinistas.

The legislators, accompanied by State Department officials, will meet with Salvadoran President Napolean Duarte and will also meet with government and Roman Catholic church leaders in both countries.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan had not requested the trip.

"We just got a request for a plane," said Speakes. "They said they wanted to go and we said okay."

Mrs. Vucanovich, in a telephone interview, said: "I am a supporter of the president's program. But I have had a lot of people come to see me from Nevada and call me and they say they feel a lot of us were simply voting with the president without knowing the situation down there. We're going down to see for ourselves, to meet with people on both sides."

The House vote had originally been scheduled March 19, but has been moved back a day at Michel's request, said the congressional sources. The House will begin formal consideration of the aid package Wednesday, but there are 10 hours of debate scheduled before the vote.

In lobbying for the aid package, Reagan and top administration officials have refused to spell out exactly how the $70 million will be spent.

But the Pentagon sources said that in addition to U.S. military trainers, the administration might also share U.S.-gathered intelligence with the rebels about the location of Nicaraguan forces.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said he was fighting Contra aid because "I still have a terrible feeling that the policies of the president are ultimately going to bring us into that war. That's what I'm fighting for, to keep our boys out of there."

The New York Times reported that Reagan plans to send to Congress today a policy statement saying that his administration will oppose "tyranny in whatever form," including dictatorships of the anti-Communist right as well as the pro-Soviet left.

In today's editions, the newspaper quoted Reagan administration officials as saying the statement will lay out a regional security strategy, and that a section supporting human rights is intended to gain congressional support for covert military aid to the Contras and other anti-Soviet "freedom fighters."

U.S. rifles used in Vietnam among display of weapons taken from El Salvador rebels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tourists visiting the Capitol this spring may get a peek at a cache of M-16 rifles, military paraphernalia and coded documents unveiled by President Reagan as part of his lobbying campaign for $100 million in aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

"I'd put it in Statuary Hall if I could," said Col. Lawrence Tracy, an Army officer who built the display reviewed Thursday by Reagan in the State Department lobby.

The exhibit, which officials said contained weapons captured from rebels battling the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador, include U.S.-made M-16 rifles that were first sent to Vietnam in 1968. A brochure touting the display explains how the weapons were part of "thousands that fell into the hands of the North Vietnamese Army."

The display says the weapons were shipped from Vietnam to Cuba and Nicaragua and on to the guerrillas seeking to topple the Salvadoran government.

The president's visit to the exhibit was another element in Reagan's two-week, high-profile push for the package to aid Nicaraguan Contra rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista goverment.

Reagan praised the display and invited members of Congress to view it before they cast their vote next week on his plan, saying it might be a decisive element in their thinking.

The president said the weapons "demonstrate the magnitude of a sophisticated communist effort to undermine democracy in this hemisphere and to deceive us in the process."

Use of M-16s by Central American guerrillas was first revealed several years ago, and one M-16 used in the display was captured in El Salvador in 1984.

Although Reagan said the display will be on Capitol Hill next week, Tracy said its final placement still has not been decided. He hopes it will be put in a room open to the public, such as the Capitol's Hall of Statues, which is a magnet for visitors.

Tracy said several members of the House and Senate are attempting to arrange to have the display brought to Capitol Hill.

"It is absolutely vital that the public have in-depth knowledge about decisions that are being made that will affect them," said Tracy, an Army officer assigned to the State Department's office of public diplomacy for Latin America and the Caribbean.

The office was set up several years ago to build public support for administration policies in the hemisphere, particularly in Central America.

Tracy said it took several weeks to put together the display, which also features items such as a Czechoslovakian anti-personnel land mine, a mortar sight manufactured in North Vietnam, coded notebooks and medical supplies said to have been funneled to leftist rebels throughout Central America by the Soviet Union and its allies.

Above the display hang colorful photos and maps, one carrying the legend, "The Odyssey of an AR-15/M-16 Rifle," and showing lines drawn from the United States to Vietnam and back to Central America.

Napoleon Romero, a former major in El Salvador's largest guerrilla factions, guided Reagan past the weapons. He spoke in Spanish and pointed at weapons as he described them to the president, and his comments were relayed in English by a translator. The president showed a keen interest in the items.

At one point, Reagan picked up what was described as a sight for a mortar launch and rolled it around in his hands, but said nothing.

Tracy said a six-minute video tape of testimony from opponents to the leftist movements in Central America will be played on a video screen that is part of the exhibit.

The screen was covered for Reagan's visit because three men were present to offer statements on alleged torture, oppression and Cuban and Soviet involvement in Central America.

Catholic colleges protest Vatican rule would jeopardize school's future in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — Heads of U.S. Catholic colleges and universities are protesting a Vatican proposal to ensure the schools' "Catholic character" as being contrary to academic freedom and other American values.

Imposition of the proposals would force some of the nation's 235 Catholic institutions of higher education to close and "jeopardize continuance of the rest," according to a joint statement to the Vatican obtained by The Associated Press.

Such measures also could drive theologians from Catholic institutions and cost the schools federal and state student aid and even accreditation needed to grant recognized academic credits or degrees, the educators warned.

At issue is the "external ecclesiastical control" proposed last year by the Vatican's Congregation for Catholic Education in an effort to ensure the schools' "Catholic character."

The "norms" proposed would require teachers to have "doctrinal integrity and uprightness of life" or be dismissed. Local bishops would be given power over hiring or firing teachers of theology and related disciplines.

The Vatican office, headed by an American, Cardinal William Baum, had requested reactions from bishops and educators around the world.

A compendium of responses from presidents of 110 U.S. Catholic institutions, sent to the Vatican by the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities of Washington, D.C., called the proposals unworkable in America.

Sister Alice Gallin, the association's executive director, also sent the organization's reaction, saying the proposals "would be disastrous for colleges and universities of our country."

"The very life of our colleges and universities...is one of academic freedom and self-regulation by the academic community," she wrote.

"ANY ATTEMPT TO subvert this independence would result in the diminishment of their influence on the total higher education community and, ultimately, in their being excluded from the community of teachers and scholars," she wrote.

Brother Patrick Ellis, head of La Salle College in Philadelphia and president of the association, voiced optimism that the American objections would bring major revisions in the document, or dropping of it.

The way it now reads, Ellis said, it "looked as if the boom was being lowered." Its empowering of an "authority off campus" would be a "freedom-denying thing" for independent, Catholic institutions, he said.

Sister Gallin said nearly all the U.S. Catholic higher educational schools, mostly founded by religious orders, have never been under control of outside bishops.

One exception is the Catholic University in Washington, D.C., a pontifical institution under control of the bishops. There, a moral theologian, the Rev. Charles E. Curran, has come under a Vatican ultimatum to retract his views supporting birth control or lose his status as a Catholic theologian.

"Our institutions are committed to an ecumenical spirit...They have found that many of our Christian (non-Catholic) sisters and brothers have a profound prayer life, a deep knowledge of scripture and a commitment to the gospel as strong as our best Catholics do."

— Joint response from presidents of U.S. Catholic institutions

The school presidents, in their joint response, said U.S. Catholic colleges generally are state-chartered and run by independent boards of trustees.

"That means that the university must protect academic freedom and judicial due process for faculty, have non-discriminatory policies toward students and faculty and recognize the legal autonomy...of boards of trustees," they wrote.

"A college or university cannot relinquish such basic characteristics without losing its status in American civil and constitutional law."

THE VATICAN PROPOSALS could have cost the schools federal and state grants totaling $500 million, and "few, if any...could long survive under such circumstances," the statement said.

The criticisms said the proposals saw the university as "a kind of seminary" of indoctrination instead of a place "where truth is sought through rigorous study" and "where the frontiers of knowledge are expanded."

The presidents also said they unanimously rejected "the way that persons of other faiths are dealt with" in the Vatican document.

Declaring they "find it embarrassing" for the document to call for such educational purposes as offering non-Catholics "the message of salvation," the presidents said, "Our institutions are committed to an ecumenical spirit...

"They have found that many of our Christian (non-Catholic) sisters and brothers have a profound prayer life, a deep knowledge of scripture and a commitment to the gospel as strong as our best Catholics do."

Considering the large numbers of non-Catholics in Catholic institutions, the presidents said, theology courses are not "taught in a proselytizing way," and if they were, "academic credit could not be given...

"Our universities respect religious pluralism and seek to explore the meaning of religious experience for a total society and within diverse cultural groups; this seems to be overlooked in the document," they wrote.

The criterion for accepting faculty is "their commitment to the goals of the university, not their personal membership in a church," they wrote.

Philadelphia rebuilding near completion

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Some of the 250 people burned out of their homes in the fatal MOVE confrontation should be moving back within weeks to the neighborhood that for 10 months has served as a glaring reminder of the problems bedeviling Mayor W. Wilson Goode.

The 61 sleek homes going up in west Philadelphia are making a modern, 3½-block patch in an area of decades-old rowhouses.

The 2½-story brick and cedar townhouses normally sell for between $20,000 and $30,000. The homes the city is building cost $135,000 each, and real estate brokers, city officials and residents are wondering what they will come to mean for the troubled neighborhood.

"We're still on standby," said Clifford Bond, noting the uncertainty over taxes he and other displaced residents will face when they return.

The area was destroyed last May 13 when police dropped a bomb on the headquarters of the radical group, setting off a conflagration that also killed 11 people in the fortified home.

Goode immediately pledged to have the houses rebuilt by Christmas. And while city officials expect some people to begin moving back by the end of March, they now steer clear of a target date for completion of all 61 homes.

The project's general contractor, G&V Construction Co., of Norfolk, Va., has said much of the work could be done by April 15. Seven homes are finished and 15 more should be done before April, said city Housing Office spokeswoman Barbara Farley.

The reconstruction itself has been plagued by residents' complaints about the homes' design, demands for a 10-year warranty and a dispute over cost overruns that led to the firing last month of Ernest Edwards as the project's developer.

Displaced homeowners will get title to the homes free and clear, except for liens and mortgages that existed on their previous property, said city Housing Director Julia O. Robinson. Eighteen families were tenants, and if they decide to continue to rent they would be assured of the previous rents until Nov. 30 under a plan the city has proposed.

Residents will be allowed to sell their new houses for what they can get, and real estate spokesmen say the demand in the area is good.

"The supply is extremely limited. It always has been. It's even worse now," said Reginald Downs. "A lot of people are holding onto their homes anticipating the new homes will increase their market value.

"People are trying to get in for that same reason. They were small, starter-size homes. That's what people were looking for. I could sell around 30 of 'em if I had 'em right now."

At least one resident, Earl Watkins, figures he and his wife, Pearl, will sell and put the money toward another house. He said he hopes to get $45,000 for the house, which will replace his home of 20 years on Osage Avenue, across the street from the building where MOVE members taunted and threatened neighbors and city officials through a loudspeaker.

The bombing followed a police attempt to evict the group. A special investigating commission appointed by Goode accused him of "grossly negligent" conduct in the matter, and the mayor, who had pledged last week to seek re-election, now is fighting for his political life.

Eugene Davey, the city's real property assessment administrator, said residents of the neighborhood generally took care of their property.

Assessments in the area have risen at about 5 percent every two years, compared with 10 percent annually in places such as downtown, he said.

One benefit for the displaced residents will be a three-year tax abatement available to anyone for a newly built home. With the abatement, only the land is taxed for three years before all of the property is taxable.

Packwood plan shrinks proposed tax cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tax-overhaul plan introduced by the Senate Finance Committee chairman would provide a smaller tax cut for individuals than recommended by President Reagan, but a bigger share of the relief would go to people making less than $75,000 a year.

The income-tax reductions promised in the plan, outlined Thursday by Chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., would be watered down by other parts of the bill raising federal taxes on alcoholic beverages, tobacco and motor fuel.

The individual cuts could be lessened again by another provision taking away the deduction allowed corporations for the excise taxes and import tariffs they pay.

"If you believe businesses are not going to eat all those taxes," Packwood said, the higher taxes would mean higher consumer prices. But he questioned whether all the tax would be passed on to consumers.

Raising consumer excise taxes and denying corporations a deduction for the excises and tariffs they pay would produce about $75 billion over the next five years — a major revenue-raiser in Packwood's plan. He hopes to use that money to pay for rate reductions and higher personal exemptions for most individuals.

The bill, on which the committee will begin work next week, would reduce tax rates for most individuals and corporations, boost the personal exemption to $2,000 for all but the wealthiest people and significantly raise the standard deduction.

It would also severely restrict the deduction for consumer and investment interest, limit the deduction for some state and local taxes, and repeal the special deduction allowed two-earner couples.

As a result, individual income taxes would drop by an average of 8.4 percent, compared with a 9.8 percent cut in the bill that Reagan proposed last May and a 9.1 percent reduction in the measure that passed the House in December.

But while the president's plan would have given a 13.6 percent average cut to those with incomes above $200,000 a year, Packwood's bill would give them a 5.9 percent reduction. The House voted a 6 percent cut for that group.

People earning between $30,000 and $40,000 would receive an average 9.3 percent reduction under either the House or Senate plans while Reagan's bill would have given them 6.3 percent.

Each bill would remove more than six million of the working poor from the income-tax rolls.

Most changes would take effect next Jan. 1. Packwood hopes to have the bill ready for Reagan to sign into law by Aug. 15.

Packwood's bill would mean significant changes for businesses. It would reduce the top corporate tax rate to 35 percent from 50 percent; repeal the investment tax credit as of March 1, 1986; and scale back the depreciation system to a lesser extent than would the House plan.

It would also give many strapped businesses a quick cash infusion by allowing those which, because of losses have been unable to use their investment credits, to sell them back to the government for 70 cents on the dollar.

According to Packwood's estimates, the bill would cut individual income taxes by $184 billion over the next five years. Corporate income taxes would be raised by $110 billion; disallowing a deduction for excise taxes and tariffs paid by business would raise another $62 billion; the higher consumer taxes on alcohol, tobacco and fuels would bring in $13 billion.

Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., a member of Packwood's committee endorsed the bill as "the basis for constructive work by the committee." But he cautioned that ending deductibility of excise taxes "should receive careful attention because of the possibility that it would be unduly burdensome for certain sectors, such as trucking."

Comparison examines Packwood, House tax plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is how some major provisions of a tax-overhaul plan proposed Thursday by Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Finance Committee, compare with those in a bill passed by the House:

RATES: Packwood would compress the present 15 taxable brackets for single people, 14 for couples filing a joint return, into three and change the present rates, ranging from 11 percent to 50 percent, to 15 percent, 25 percent and 35 percent. The House plan adds a 38-percent rate for upper-income people.

EXEMPTIONS: Packwood would raise the personal exemption, now $1,080 for 1986, to $2,000 for taxpayers with incomes up to $100,000 a year; the exemption would decrease as income exceeds that level and reach zero at $200,000. But the higher exemption would be limited further for those whose incomes are high enough to put them in the 35-percent bracket. House voted $2,000 for all who do not itemize deductions and $1,500 for those who do.

ITEMIZED DEDUCTIONS: Packwood would allow most itemized deductions to be fully deductible only by lower- and middle-income taxpayers. No such restriction in the House bill.

STANDARD DEDUCTIONS: Packwood would substantially raise these deductions, now $2,480 for single people and $3,670 for joint returns, to still-unspecified levels. The House would raise to $2,950 and $4,400.

TWO-EARNER COUPLES: Special deduction of up to $3,000 would be repealed in both bills.

INTEREST: Packwood would limit consumer and investment interest deductions to $2,000 for a couple ($1,000 for a single person) plus the mortgage interest on two homes. Upper-income taxpayers would face additional limits on non-mortgage interest. The House bill would have a sharply higher limit: $20,000 ($10,000 for a single person) plus mortgages on two homes plus an amount equal to investment income for the year.

STATE AND LOCAL TAXES: Packwood would end deduction of sales and personal-property taxes; allow full deduction of real-property taxes and limit the deduction of income taxes by upper-income people. House would retain full deduction of all state and local taxes.

FRINGE BENEFITS: Both bills would keep the full tax exemption for employer-paid health insurance, the first $50,000 of group life insurance and $5,000 for death benefits.

EARNED-INCOME CREDIT: Both bills would raise this benefit for working families with children, to a maximum $700; families earning up to $16,000 could get some benefit.

CONTRIBUTIONS: Packwood would allow non-itemizers to deduct all charitable contributions. The House would allow deduction of all above $100 a year.

CHILD CARE: Both bills would retain the present child-care credit of up to $1,440 a year.

CAPITAL GAINS: Packwood would retain present 20-percent maximum rate; House would raise to 22 percent.

INCOME AVERAGING: Both bills would repeal.

RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS: Both bills would retain present limits on contributions to tax-deferred Individual Retirement Account at a maximum of $2,000 per worker and $2,250 to a couple in which one employee does not work outside the home.

PROFIT SHARING: Packwood would limit to $7,000 a year the portion of wages a worker may choose not to receive directly but to have the employer set aside in a tax-deferred pension plan known as 401(k). Each dollar above $5,000 put into a 401(k) each year would reduce by $1 the amount eligible for an IRA. The House plan is similar but the IRA offset would be for each dollar put into a 401(k).

LIFE INSURANCE: Both would retain tax-free treatment of the increase in value of ordinary life insurance.

MINIMUM TAX: Both bills would toughen this special levy on high-income investors and corporations that use so many deductions and credits that they pay little or no tax.

MEALS AND ENTERTAINMENT: Both would limit deductions for business-related meals and entertainment, including sports tickets, to 80 percent of the cost; they are now fully deductible.

DIVIDENDS: Both would repeal the $100-per-person ($200-per-couple) exclusion for dividends received.

INVESTMENT CREDIT: Both bills would repeal.

DEPRECIATION: Both would reduce tax benefits for depreciation, under which businesses and investors recover money spent for plant and equipment. Packwood's plan would be more generous than the House version.

CORPORATE RATES: Both bills would cut sharply; Packwood would have a top 35 percent rate (now 46 percent); the House, 36 percent.

TAX SHELTERS: Both would make it tougher to shield wages and fees from taxes by using big deductions from investments built around limited partnerships.

OIL AND GAS: Packwood would retain present benefits for this industry; the House would reduce them by $4 billion over five years.

TIMBER: The House would virtually eliminate special provisions for this industry; Packwood would keep them all.

BONDS: Both would curtail use of tax-exempt bonds; the House plan would allow fewer issues than would Packwood.

NATION IN BRIEF

'Open adoption' legal

BOSTON (AP) — Erin, a 2-year-old girl afflicted with Down's Syndrome will have an extra set of parents to raise her because of an unusual adoption agreement between two Cape Cod couples.

A judge was to sign papers today making the "open adoption" legal. The agreement says the biological and adoptive parents will work out details of such things as visits, finances and telephone calls.

"It's just going to be common sense between two mothers," Erin's natural mother, who asked not to be identified, said in an interview in today's Boston Globe. "We'll have a hand in it, just not an everyday hand."

Erin's biological parents placed her for adoption a year ago. The Barnstable County Department of Social Services chose Carol and Doug McGarvey, who have five other children, including an adopted 5-year-old who suffers from neurological problems.

"The agreement means we will have an extended family for Erin," said Mrs. McGarvey, 35.

The biological mother, 33, initiated the agreement so she could maintain ties with Erin.

The mother, whose second child died of meningitis when he was 7 weeks old, said dealing with Erin's needs were difficult. The woman's brother committed suicide and her husband is away six of every eight days. She is alone a lot and is receiving counseling.

Elderly rider pulls gun

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — An elderly woman who said she was tired of being victimized by crime pulled a pistol and shot a man after he shoved her during a dispute on a subway, authorities say.

"I've been robbed so many times. I've been knocked out, my house was broken into," Georgia Haugabrooks, 66, said after the incident Wednesday.

"The reason I shot him was, I wanted the cops to get him. They never did catch the ones who did all those other things," she said.

Ms. Haugabrooks was shoved by Eugene Parker, 52, as she tried to get onto a subway train, police said. She drew an unlicensed .32-caliber revolver from her pocket and chased Parker to the stairs and shot him in the back and shoulder.

News outrages Brown

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Reporters are paying too much attention to the role of Brown University students in an alleged prostitution ring and that is reflecting badly on the Ivy League school, officials complained.

"We...have been the butt of a lot of very bad jokes and unwarranted conclusions about the morals of our student body," Robert Reichley, vice president for university relations, said Thursday.

"The media has jumped to unwarranted conclusions that Brown is the center of the focus of this investigation, when it is becoming clearer by the hour that this is an ever-expanding, ever-widening investigation," he said.

University officials initiated the investigation after a Brown student told an administrator in September that she was being coerced into prostitution.

Two Brown seniors were arrested last week on prostitution charges, and Providence police said Wednesday that photos of eight other former or current Brown students were among pictures of 46 women seized from a house near campus that has become the investigation's focal point.

SHELBY'S CORNER

Carroll Shelby created the Shelby Cobras that became sports car legends. Before that he was named U.S. "Sports Car Driver Of The Year" three times. Today, he specializes in hot chili, Texas style and hot cars as director of the Chrysler Shelby California Development Center. He welcomes your questions about cars and performance.

MORE TIRE, LESS HYDROPLANING? CERAMIC TURBOCHARGERS? BEST TURBO FUEL?

Q. My tire dealer says a 60 series tire won't hydroplane as much as a 50 series tire. Is he right?

–Stuart O., King of Prussia, PA

A. All things being equal, he'd probably be right. But things seldom are, Stuart. Hydroplaning occurs on a wet road when water fills the treads of your car's tires and they skim on the water instead of riding on the road. This makes it difficult to steer or stop your car.

The size of the tire and the tread design are two factors effecting hydroplaning. When you go from a 50 to 60 series tire in the same width and wheel size you increase the height of the sidewall as measured from the bead to the tire's diameter and means a longer portion of it will be in contact with the road at all times. This decreases the likelihood that all of the tread will be filled with water before some is sluiced to the side and spun off. The tread design plays a major roll in how much water a tire picks up and in the sluicing process. So, if you had the same tread design on the 60 as on the 50 series tire and the wheel size was the same, the 60 would be less inclined to hydroplane. But, there is no guarantee that the tread design won't change when the series changes - even within the same tire company.

In general, a narrower tread design is better because the water has less tread to get caught in before it is sluiced to the shoulders and spun off. And remember, if you go to a larger tire, be sure it fits in your wheel wells.

Q. I've heard rumors that some car companies are starting to use turbochargers made of ceramics. Is this a fact and won't they break easily?

–Tom K., Rochester, MI

A. It's a fact that Nissan, for one, is using ceramic turbine wheels on ts turbochargers. Nobody's using an entire turbocharger made of ceramics, however. There is lots of interest in the potentials of ceramics for automotive applications. In fact, the Norton Co., and TRW have just formed Norton/TRW Ceramics to develop some of these possibilities and deal with the durability question you raise, as well as others.

In the turbine application the theory is that ceramics are lighter than the metal they replace and that means less inertia. So it should start spinning quicker and thereby raise the boost level faster and reduce turbo lag.

Q. My turbo fanatic pal insists that his Daytona Turbo Z gets better performance by using high octane fuel as opposed to 87 octane gasoline. Is this true?

–Dan G., Long Beach CA

A. That's definitely right, Don, particularly on a hot day or when he's running the engine hard. To get top results with a turbocharger, the engine is programmed to get the most out of the best fuel available and make safe use of low octanes. That's because a turbocharger packs a lot more fuel-air mixture into the combustion chamber and that raises the heat and pressure. Low octane fuel can be pre-ignited or detonated by heat and pressure and that can cause engine damage. To protect against this, the engine is equipped with a detonation sensor. At the first indication of pre-ignition the sensor automaticaly retards the spark to prevent detonation. The penalty for this, however, is loss of performance. The fuel is not ignited at the proper time so all the power is not released.
