Henley, Cuevas Win New Trials

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals today reversed the convictions of two men in two of the nation's more dramatic crimes — the Houston mass murders case and the Huntsville prison siege.

Reversed were the convictions of Elmer Wayne Henley, a high school dropout convicted in connection with the 1973 sex torture slayings of 27 youths, and Ignacio Cuevas, a convict found guilty of killing a hostage in a sensational Texas state prison escape attempt in 1974.

The appeals court reversed Henley's case for possible retrial in San Antonio, where the trial was moved from Houston.

A Bexar County jury convicted Henley, then 18, of six of the 27 slayings and then sentenced him to six consecutive 99-year sentences.

The court said Henley was denied due process when District Judge Preston H. Dial refused to allow him to present evidence on a motion to move the trial from San Antonio.

The court also reversed the death penalty conviction of Cuevas in the slaying of a woman hostage in the attempted escape from the Walls state prison unit at Huntsville on Aug. 3, 1974.

The high court returned the case for a new trial to Walker County, and Harris County, where the case was moved on a change of venue. The court cited the trial judge's refusal to grant a defense challenge to a prospective juror who had indicated he would vote to impose the death penalty in any case where the accused was convicted of capital murder.

Henley was arrested after he telephoned police in the Houston suburb of Pasadena and told them he had shot and killed Dean A. Corll, head of the homosexual torture ring.

Henley then led officers to 27 bodies buried at three sites in and around Houston. Many of the victims were from Henley's neighborhood.

The court opinion on his case stated:

"Therefore, we are constrained to hold under the cases cited and the facts of this case that the trial court's refusal to grant appellant a pretrial hearing to introduce evidence in support of his motion for change of venue precluded a determination, as contemplated by our law, of the community attitude toward appellant and constituted a deprivation of due process.

"In the event of a retrial, we must express our deep concern over appellant's contention that he was denied a fair trial when the trial court refused to sequester the jury and overruled his objection to placing newsmen within the bar," the court said.

Cuevas joined Fred Carrasco and Rudolpho Dominquez in the seizure of the top floor of the educational building of the Walls, taking a number of hostages, on July 24, 1974. They attempted to escape on Aug. 3, using hostages and a moveable shield. Gunfire erupted when guards and Texas Rangers sought to block the escape, and Carrasco, Dominquez and two hostages died.

Cuevas, the lone survivor of the three inmates, was tried in Houston on a change of venue from Huntsville.

Cuevas' lawyers had to use their last preemptory challenge to strike juror James Wharton from the jury panel. They said another juror then was seated who they would have struck had the judge allowed them an additional preemptory challenge.

Israelis Raid Arabs' Bases

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli warplanes attacked three Palestinian bases in southern Lebanon today in retaliation for terrorist operations in Israel, military officials announced. Unofficial reports in Lebanon said 27 persons were either killed or wounded.

Palestinian and Lebanese spokesmen also reported Israeli gunboats and guerrilla coastal positions exchanged fire as the planes struck near the biblical port city of Tyre, 50 miles south of Beirut and 20 miles north of the Israel-Lebanon border.

The guerrilla leadership in Beirut withheld public comment on casualties, but Palestinian sources said 27 dead and wounded had been counted one hour after the air strike.

An Israeli military spokesman said the raid lasted 15 minutes and between 10 and 20 guerrillas were at each base.

The Israeli announcement said the air force planes pounded bases at Dahar el Bourj, Kassamieh and Bourj es-Shimari operated by Al Fatah, military arm of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Dahar el Bourj, 25 miles north of the Israel-Lebanon border, was raided on June 9 this year in a similar retaliation.

The three sites were "training institutions and bases of departure for raids within Israel," the announcement said. It said the planes began the raid at about 4 p.m. (8 a.m. CST) and returned safely.

Palestinian guerrillas have carried out 14 attacks within Israel since the beginning of November, and four Israeli civilians have been killed and 67 wounded in the attacks, the statement said.

Last Sunday 22 persons were wounded when a bomb exploded on a Jerusalem bus. Six were slightly injured earlier today in a bomb blast outside a Jerusalem restaurant.

The military spokesman described the air raid as "in accordance with the Israeli defense forces' basic policy of attacking terrorist bases and bases for departure for terrorist attacks and sabotage in Israel."

Since Prime Minister Menachev Begin came to office 1½ years ago, Israel has followed a policy of sharp retaliations for terrorist operations in Israel. When 35 Israelis died in a terror raid on the Tel Aviv-Haifa coastal road last March, Israel mounted a massive invasion of southern Lebanon to sweep the area clear of guerrilla bases.

The army withdrew after three months and a United Nations force now is in southern Lebanon, though Israel complains that hundreds of Palestinian guerrillas have re-entered the border region and the U.N. force does little to block them.

Flood Rips Homes, Bridges At Ruidoso

A-J News Services

Flood waters started to recede across the Southwest today, after heavy rain and melting snow in the New Mexico mountains flooded Ruidoso and washed away numerous bridges and damaged some homes.

The number of homes damaged in the resort community had not been determined this morning, Police Sgt. Fred Sweeney said.

Eight bridges were washed out in the western half or Upper Canyon part of town, Sweeney said.

He added that none of the bridges on state highways leading into the Lincoln County town were flooded.

"The river is down quite a bit," he said of the Rio Ruidoso, which flows through the town. "Some of the bridges in town have been damaged. I don't know how many yet."

The policeman said Ruidoso police were up most of the night "trying to keep people off the city bridges that have been threatened."

There was some damage below the Upper Canyon area, he said.

A number of persons were evacuated from the flooded areas.

"We've had no injuries at all," said Dave Travis of the White Mountain Search and Rescue Club there, "but there are quite a few trailer houses damaged extensively and quite a few houses flooded."

In Arizona, rescue workers watched people and house trailers floating down the Gila River today in the wake of a flood that drove thousands from their homes and killed as many as eight persons.

Waters from the flash flood that crumbled dikes and cut highways were receding, but some communities remained under 5 feet of water.

Authorities said it was too early to estimate the extent of the damage, but some expect that it will exceed the $44 million in losses from similar flooding last March.

"It's terrible," said a sheriff's deputy handling emergency communications to the southeastern Arizona town of Duncan. "There is 5 feet of water in the main street."

A dike broke at midday Tuesday, sending the Gila River through Duncan and forcing many of its 1,000 residents to seek emergency shelter. The Red Cross cared for hundreds overnight at a high school.

"The whole town is flooded," said Red Cross coordinator Pat Schubert.

"We are seeing trailer houses and people floating down the river. Some trailers are sinking."

Conditions were relatively mild in West Texas, however. Lubbock's forecast for today called for strong winds but no rain or snow. West winds of 20 to 30 mph were expected today, shifting to the northwest at 10 to 15 mph tonight.

The high today should be near 50, the low tonight in the high 20s and the high Thursday near 60.

Lubbock's high temperature Tuesday afternoon was 74 and the low this morning was 42.

The low up to midnight Tuesday, 49, broke the 1926 high minimum record of 45.

Senators Slap Carter Action

WASHINGTON (UPI) — China would have accepted demands the United States continue to recognize Taiwan while establishing diplomatic relations with Peking "had we had the guts to hang in there," Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said today.

"It's a fait accompli," Hatch told a news conference sponsored by the American Security Council, but added: "We could have accomplished the same thing and still not abandoned Taiwan."

Stating he favored a two-China policy, Hatch said, "I think we could have had both, had we had the guts to hang in there."

Nationalist Chinese Ambassador James Shen, apparently under administration pressure, canceled plans to participate in the conference.

John Fisher, council president, said Shen had been stricken with "a diplomatic illness due to State Department pressure."

"This was something that originated at the State Department to the Republic of China on Taiwan and back to Washington," Fisher said.

Shen reportedly plans to leave for Taiwan New Years day, when Washington and Peking inaugurate full diplomatic relations.

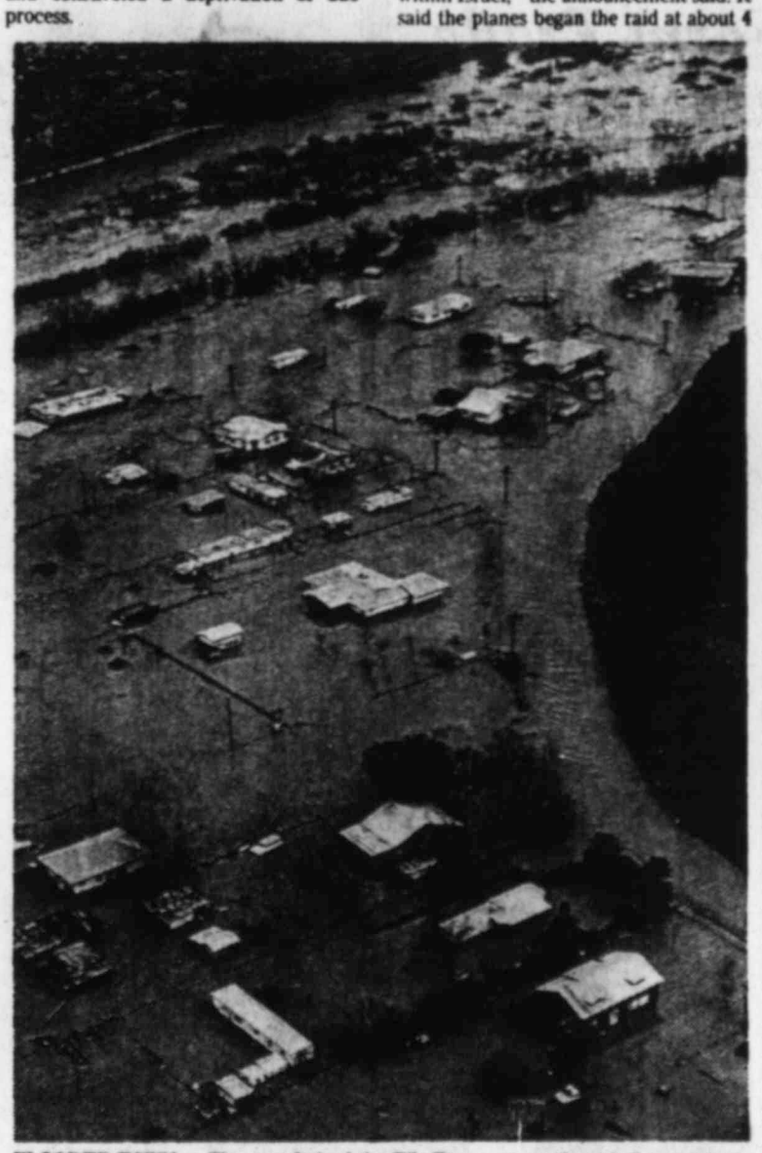

"I talked to him a while ago, and he was quite well," said Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., an opponent of the new U.S. policy. "I'm not certain of the source of his illness, but he was told not to be here."

Dole said President Carter's decision to break formal military and diplomatic ties with Taiwan and recognize Peking would have a negative effect on Senate consideration of any SALT agreement with the Soviet Union.

"If this is a courageous decision, who knows that he may have done on SALT," Dole said. "To have caved in on everything. Can that be courageous?"

Three Republican congressmen said Tuesday they would go to court to try and halt the abrogation of the U.S. defense treaty with Taiwan.

"Well, one of Santa's elves must have been here," Chief Goodfellow mused as he surveyed the five handmade, stuffed animals.

One of Santa's helpers left the stuffed animals, two mice, a duck, an elephant and a panda bear, at Chief Goodfellow's branch office at The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal Tuesday to be used for the Christmas packages of needy children in Lubbock.

"And I just want to thank you, whoever you are, wherever you are, for your thoughtfulness of those less fortunate than yourself," Chief Goodfellow said.

Ex-Prisoner Raps Communists

By BOB WILLIAMS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

John Noble has a deep affection for freedom. His was taken away for 16 years.

Noble was held prisoner by the Germans for 6½ years before and during World War II and by the Soviet Union for 9½ years after the war.

He was in Lubbock this week at the invitation of the Chinese Students Association at Tech to speak at their Sunday rally protesting President Carter's decision to sever ties with Taiwan in favor of Communist China.

"We are seeking closer and closer ties with the Communist world instead of breaking them," Noble said in an interview afterward. "Everyone would agree if in 1945 we had limited our support to the Communist world, the free world would not have the problems it has today. But we've given the Communists so much of our military and scientific knowledge that we have created a Frankenstein."

Noble, 56, said it was a mistake recognizing Russia "and to recognize China is a much worse one. Most people feel that China and Russia are at odds with each other. This is not true. The Russians are very good at playing chess, which is what they are playing with China. We say they are divided, but they know they are perfectly coordinated."

After hearing of President Carter's decision about Communist China Friday, Noble sent Carter a telegram. "Lord, give me the words to say," he said. In the telegram Noble said, "Your act of recognition of this handful of murderers . . . is a slap in the face to every American who respects the word of God and recognizes the inhumanity to man which communism has demonstrated. With your act you are stating to the world that America has no respect for human rights and is willing to bow to the lowest form of governmental tyranny this world has ever known."

Born in Detroit, Mich., Noble and his family in 1939 were on a business trip in Germany, where his father owned a camera factory. Fifteen-year-old Noble planned to study some of the factory procedures while his father transacted business, but the Germans placed his family under house arrest in Dresden, seizing the factory, and later placing Noble and his father in prison. Noble's mother and brother were eventually released, but Noble and his father re-

Florida Panel Seeks Alligator Hunters

MIAMI (UPI) — If you've always wanted to come to grips with nature, the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission may have just the job.

The commission wants to hire some alligator hunters.

"We're looking for people who've got the time and want to do something a little different," said Jim Sorrow, coordinator of the removal program in the commission's Everglades region.

"It's exciting work ... You've never had your adrenalin running like it will. You know that if you make a mistake, it could be a crucial one," he said.

The commission is responsible for catching nuisance alligators that wind up in back yards, swimming holes and drainage canals. Now they are advertising for alligator hunters to help catch the beasts alive. The alligators are taken to remote areas of the Everglades and released.

Sorrow said they have "gotten about 1,200 calls since May" from people who want the pesky alligators removed from their property or a nearby watering hole.

There are now about 50 gator hunters working in the state, but more are needed in Indian River, Martin, Palm Beach, Broward and Dade counties, where several hunters recently quit or were fired.

Although most of the gator hunters are commercial fishermen or fur trappers, Allen Woodward, the removal program's statewide coordinator, said there are some white-collar workers doing the job.

"We've got one fellow who's a life insurance salesman from Clearwater," Woodward said.

Old Toys Worth Lots Of Money

By SHARI LEWIS

Now they tell me! Now that my daughter is 16 and has given away all her childhood toys (except for Teddy, who will be with us forever, unless the dog chews him up) — now I've discovered that there is real money to be made from old toys; I've rushed to write this column for you, before you ditch that Cher doll or pitch out that Evel Knievel toy.

Joe Daole, who runs the Toy Museum of Atlanta, said that certain toys are really worth collecting:

1 — Toys that don't stay on the market for long (like the Captain Action Doll, valuable now although it was only made five or six years ago).

2 — Things made in only one part of the country (Seattle World Fair toys, made in the '60s, are now going for quite a bit!).

3 — Playthings relating to an event (like Evel Knievel jumping that canyon or the Bicentennial). The tin "Freedom Train," which sold for $2 in 1976, is worth $75-$100 today.

4 — Dolls of TV stars, like Cher and Farrah Fawcett Majors. (Shari Lewis dolls, made by Madame Alexander in 1963, are now selling for almost $300 each. Would you believe, I don't have one. Ugh!)

5 — Favors and prizes that come in cereal or candy boxes, like the teeny-tiny Cracker Jack toys.

Next week I'll share everything that Joe Daole told me about how to save old toys and make money from them. Daole has many of his own childhood playthings on exhibit at the Toy Museum of Atlanta, so he must have done something right, and he is going to help you to do it right, too!

Official Urges Increase In Overseas Farm Trade

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — The president and agriculture department should work harder to increase overseas sales of U.S. farm products so farmers can earn more, the president of the Chicago Board of Trade says.

"More than one-fourth of all farm products produced in this country go overseas," Robert Wilmouth said recently. "We'd like to see that be even larger."

More foreign markets could help boost sagging grain prices in this country brought about by large grain surpluses, Wilmouth said.

"I think that trading with the Soviet Union is extremely important to the agricultural segment of the economy of this country," he said. "I would look for more of it. That's the key thing as far as I'm concerned — more trade."

He said the Chinese, too, offer a good market for U.S. farm products, but not as large a market as some government officials have predicted.

"I don't think we can be as optimistic as some of the people have been. They see 800,000,000 people and they think; 'There's 800,000,000 pairs of shoes.'"

Wilmouth has been president of the Chicago Board of Trade since November 1977. He said its function often is misunderstood.

During a protest against high meat prices, a woman was asked why she was picketing at the Board of Trade.

"I'm picketing here because that's where they keep the cattle," Wilmouth quoted the woman as saying. "That's the degree of misunderstanding we have."

The Board of Trade does not deal in livestock. It is the place where traders buy and sell contracts for the future delivery of commodities, especially grain such as corn, soybeans and wheat.

WOMAN CANDIDATE

The first woman presidential candidate was Victoria Clafin Woodhull, who was nominated by the Equal Rights Party on May 10, 1872, in New York City with Frederick Douglass as her running mate.

Passman's Trial Scheduled

LAKE CHARLES, La. (AP) — Former Rep. Otto Passman will have to stand trial on charges of bribery and income tax, a federal judge has ruled.

PASSMAN

But the elderly and ill Louisiana Democrat did win his battle Tuesday to have the trial, scheduled to start March 5, held in his home town of Monroe.

Passman is accused of accepting more than $213,000 in bribes from South Korean businessman Tongsun Park and of failing to report $143,000 of that money on his income tax returns.

Passman served 30 years in Congress before losing a bid for re-election in 1976.

Passman's attorney, Camille Gravel, argued before U.S. District Court Judge Earl Veron that the federal government exceeded its authority in granting Park immunity from prosecution.

While rejecting the argument, Veron said Passman's poor health influenced his decision to schedule the trial for Monroe.

Actor's Jewelry Stolen

CALABASAS, Calif. (AP) — Dennis Weaver, television's "McCloud," might be wishing he were a real-life detective.

Then he could join sheriff's deputies investigating the theft of $20,000 in jewelry from his home here.

Weaver told authorities that when he and his wife returned from a weekend trip, they found their home had been entered, possibly through an unlocked door.

The missing jewelry included a turquoise necklace, valued at $5,000, a $3,000 jade ring with diamonds, a 10-diamond necklace valued at $2,000; a charm bracelet valued at $3,000 and a jewel case inscribed "This is Your Life."

Hefner Back In Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Hugh Hefner, king of the bunnies, has returned to the capital of his exotic empire for a "very real emotional nostalgia trip."

Hefner's return this week is timed to commemorate the 25th birthday of his creation, "Playboy" magazine.

"This is my first return home to Chicago in a couple of years and really the first time I've been back for any period of time in about five years and it's a very special trip," Hefner said Tuesday before the opening of a Playboy art exhibit in the elegant Chicago Public Library Cultural Center.

Columnist Ann Landers, talk show host Phil Donahue, author Studs Terkel and many other celebrities will join Hefner in other festivities this week.

When Hefner left here, his empire was on the brink of ruin. Playboy Inc.'s revenues plummeted from $11.3 million in 1974 to $1.2 million in 1975 before new executives were hired to "clean hutch."

Hamill Marries Dental Hygienist

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Not all trips to the dentist are painful.

Mark Hamill — who played Luke Skywalker in "Star Wars" — has married his dental hygienist.

The 26-year-old actor and Marylou York, 23, were married at a private civil ceremony Sunday, Hamill's agent said Tuesday.

"They had no time for a honeymoon," Nancy Hutson said, because Hamill is at work on the sequel to "Star Wars."

Timothy Leary Marries

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dr. Timothy Leary, the former Harvard University professor who became the drug guru of the '60s, is getting high on marriage.

Leary, perhaps best known for the phrase "Turn On, Tune In, Drop Out," was married Tuesday in a small private ceremony to Barbara Chase, 29, originally of New York City, a spokesman for the 58-year-old Leary said.

It was the fourth marriage for each.

The spokesman, Jay Levi, said the couple had been acquainted for about seven months.

Leary currently writes and lectures, Levi said.

Better Late Than Never

SEATTLE (AP) — It took 30 years, but Clark and Ellen Shipley are finally getting a sidewalk in front of their southwestern Seattle home.

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

The Shipleys paid $2,061 in assessments in 1948 as their share of a city improvement project to build sidewalks and streets in the neighborhood.

But a mudslide into nearby streets during sidewalk construction halted the project, and the plans apparently were lost in bureaucratic shuffling since then.

Fifteen years later, however, Mrs. Shipley saw city crews working in the neighborhood and she remembered the sidewalk that never was.

She called the city engineering office in June, and red-faced officials acknowledged they had forgotten the project.

"It just simply got lost in the shuffle," said Councilwoman Jeanette Williams.

On Monday, the City Council voted to authorize $1,300 to finish the work.

Coca-Cola Returns To China

ATLANTA (AP) — The "Real Thing" has breached the Great Wall. Beginning next month, Coca-Cola will be sold in cans and bottles in China.

Coca-Cola Board Chairman J. Paul Austin announced Tuesday his company has gained exclusive rights to bottle and distribute cola in mainland China.

Coke's announcement comes only a day after the Boeing Company said it signed a $156 million agreement with Peking for three 747s and Pan American World Airways sought petition to fly between San Francisco and Peking.

The move by the world's most popular soft drink shuts out Pepsico Inc., producer of Pepsi Cola and Coke's chief competitor. Pepsi is the only American cola sold in the Soviet Union.

Pepsico had no immediate reaction to the Coke deal.

Coke will carry a slogan in Chinese that can be literally translated as "Can Mouth, Can Happy." The characters can also represent "Tastes Good, Tastes Happy."

Coke said it will be the first American consumer product marketed on the mainland since the Communists assumed power in 1949.

The agreement represents a return to the mainland for Coke. It was sold in China from 1928 to 1949 and was distributed from bottling plants in Shanghai, Tsingtao, Tientsin and Canton.

Austin said the agreement with China's National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import-Export Corp. calls for the shipment of canned and bottled Coca-Cola to Shanghai, Peking and two other Chinese cities next month. Completion of a bottling plant in Shanghai is slated for the end of 1979, he added.

Austin said Coke's move was not directly linked to the normalization of relations between the United States and mainland China that President Carter announced last week.

"Traditionally, we carry on our own relations. We had no advice from anybody. We have been quietly negotiating with China for the better part of 10 years," he said.

He also said the agreement — signed two days before Carter's announcement — won't provide a profitable new market immediately.

It's more a "diplomatic and trade coup," said Stephanie Haggerty, an analyst for Robinson-Humphrey Co., a stock brokerage company. "Near term, I don't think this amounts to a hill of beans."

Some experts believe it could be 10 years before the company sees profits from the venture. But analyst Jeff Weingarten of Goldman, Sachs and Co. in New York said it could be extremely profitable over the long term.

Taiwan Officials Say U.S. Firms Backing Loser

TAIPEI, Taiwan (UPI) — A Taiwanese official said today American firms that rush into mainland China hoping to do land-office business are backing a loser.

Deputy Foreign Minister Fredrick Chien also spurned offers to sit down at the conference table and reach a negotiated settlement with Peking.

"The Communists right now are in a position of weakness," Chien told a news conference. "Their economy is in disarray and their modernization program is not going to get anywhere."

His remarks followed word that the Coca-Cola Co. of Atlanta will become the first American firm to enter the Chinese market in 30 years and will sell soft drinks in China by next month.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland, who visited China last month, said in Washington he hoped U.S. recognition of Peking would spur agricultural trade with the mainland. But Chien said such hopes are groundless.

Atomic Time Bomb-ers

A WARNING that U.S. citizens and businesses could be targeted for attack by Palestinian terrorists because of American involvement in Egyptian-Israeli peace negotiations has been sounded by The Heritage Foundation.

In a study by Samuel Francis, author of several studies on the organization and philosophy of terrorist groups, the non-partisan public policy research foundation also concludes that the Palestinian terrorists "very likely" will step up their attacks if and when a peace treaty is concluded.

"A closer rapprochement between at least some Palestinian groups and the Soviet Union" is suggested, too, by Francis.

"WHATEVER policies the Palestinian terrorists follow, recent internal splits among them due to differences in ideologies, strategies and personalities of the leaders will affect their capacity to mount effective campaigns of terror," the study concludes.

"These splits may in some ways weaken them," Francis says, "but in other ways may augment their capacities."

He believes that the terrorists will be unified under the control of Yasser Arafat, leader of the bloody Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Any Arab state that may sympathize with the eventual peace settlement with Israel is likely to experience an escalation of terrorism and subversion, Francis also predicts.

"EVEN IF ARAFAT does maintain control, he cannot totally abandon terrorist operations," the researcher says in warning that the situation would be worse without Arafat than with him.

Perhaps the Heritage Foundation study is most significant, however, for what it does not say than for what it does say: It offers no suggestion for how to deal with the continuing and potentially escalating wave of international terrorism.

Chillingly, Francis says that "the obtaining of a nuclear reactor by Libya from the Soviet Union also opens the possibility (of a nuclear attack on Israel) and suggests its future use in international terrorist operations."

With nuclear weapons in the hands of madmen, no part of the world is safe.

"WHY IS IT," My Neighbor Twice Removed was asked, "that a half-dozen or more police units rush to the scene of an armed robbery, with maybe two policemen investigating the crime and the rest just standing around?"

"Simple," he replied. "Did you ever hear of a store being robbed a second time while they were guarding it?"

NOTE TO CHAMBER of Commerce and City Hall: How about a coordinated campaign to improve the appearance of highways and major streets into Lubbock?

This thought hammered itself home to me again the other day while driving down Avenue H.

When the underpass at 3rd Street is completed and Avenue H and Texas are made into a one-way pair, more out-of-town visitors than ever will be driving that route.

Parts of it are a civic embarrassment.

There are places along Avenue H where the property owners have done a magnificent job in cleaning up old eyesores. If all of them were encouraged to do so as part of a comprehensive campaign, all would benefit.

The same can be said for many other approaches to and main routes through the city. The Chamber of Commerce is the logical one to take the leadership in coordinating volunteer effort, but it will require the close cooperation of the City to do the job right.

If we're going to have a community that will be attractive to visitors and a pleasure to live in, let's get with it.

PUNCHING AN old friend in the nose in order to get cozy with a new friend historically has been viewed as one of the most dishonorable acts a man could commit.

That is precisely what Jimmy Carter has done in breaking off this nation's historic ties with Taiwan and recognizing Communist China.

The most logical explanation for establishing diplomatic relations with Red China is that the U.S. should recognize the reality of its existence.

By the same reasoning, how can we deny the reality of Taiwan and its 70 million people?

CRITICS OF THE President—and they are many—disagree with the administration view that cuddling up with mainland China will strengthen the U.S. in dealing with the Soviet Union.

Indeed, not a few critics fear that his abrupt and unilateral action will sow the seeds of an inevitable World War III.

If they are right, and if American capital now is used to develop Red China's oil reserves, we may be providing them with the wherewithal to make war against us.

After Pearl Harbor, a worried Japanese commander said he feared the attack had succeeded mainly in awakening a sleeping giant.

There are those who fear that the U.S. now has awakened such a giant in China.

Holmes Alexander:

Lame Endure Pain For Fame

WASHINGTON—Both men were cripples, both insatiably ambitious to get up in the political world. One was a snarling misanthrope and the other a cultivated gentleman.

It would be hard to decide whether Thaddeus Stevens, a Republican Congressman from Lancaster of the Civil War Century, or Franklin Roosevelt, America's only uncrowned king, did more for the American underdog, by which we commonly mean the black and poor white trash.

Dr. Fawn Brodie who raised a storm of indignation when she documented Thomas Jefferson's lifelong affair with one of his female slaves, subtitles her biography of Thaddeus Stevens: Scourge of the South.

Like most fanatics, Stevens eagerly associated his ambitions to the will of God, and himself in the image of the vengeful Old Testament destroyers of wicked men and sinful cities.

AFTER THE WAR Between the States was over, and Lincoln had called for "malice toward none," Stevens let loose with this searing denunciation intended to put the curse on all white Americans who'd ever owned slaves, or tolerated the institution.

"If we have not yet been sufficiently scourged for our national sin, to teach us to do justice to all God's creatures, without distinction of race or creed, we must expect still more heavy vengeance of an offended Father."

Stevens had a mistaken identity complex, and he was in his own mind the "offended Father."

More than any other man, Thad Stevens was responsible for driving to enactment the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. No. 13 outlaws slavery and involuntary servitude, except as criminal punishment.

NO. 14 FORBIDS that "any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; not deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

But their principle sponsor and unrelenting promoter was not a kindly person toward his fellowman, nor a moral or honest character, but with a reputation of being ill-mannered, unscrupulous, even dishonest.

The motivating power that at once gave him a grudge against the world, and a kinship for other unfortunates was the clubfoot he was born with. Though he stood erect at six feet, had a caustic eloquence which commanded much more attention than his deformity, Stevens could not forget it or disguise it with a specially made boot.

Franklin D. Roosevelt was crippled with polio in the prime of a privileged life, and his many biographers find that his concern for the underprivileged began with his infirmity.

Roosevelt was too much the politician to offend the then-solid south of his own party, and he championed no Civil Rights legislation, though he created an atmosphere of benevolence which made the post war reforms possible, and he took the black vote away from the Northern Republicans who held it in the name of Lincoln.

Stevens would have liked to have been a Pennsylvania senator, but he had a limited following in his Congressional district and in the House where he took the lead in the abortive attempt to remove President Andrew Johnson, and he sought the readmission of every one-time slave state.

Both Stevens and Roosevelt were loved by the poor and often hated by property-owners, and both probably would have been less known to history, if known at all, but for their physical handicaps.

One of the factors we know least about is the power of pain in the individual leader, and how this pain translates into the emotion of love and hate in a country's history.

Sylvia Porter:

Are You In Debt Up To Here... Or Here?

(First of three columns)

ARE AMERICA'S consumers borrowing too much, saving too little? Are business leaders, economists and U.S. officials correct when they worry out loud that millions of you are not only up to your necks in debt, but also over your heads?

After an exhaustive survey of consumer credit experts all over the U.S., my associate Brooke Shearer and I have found fascinating evidence that, on the contrary, consumers actually may be in better shape than they have been in the past.

"Consumer borrowing and spending may begin to taper off," says Data Resources' Bill Springer, "but there's not likely to be a big drop off or a real sharp pullback."

"SOMEWHAT ALARMIST" is the way Bill Dunkelberg, an economist with the Credit Research Center of Purdue University, characterizes the widely publicized fears.

Much of the anxiety about consumer debt results from a frequently quoted Federal Reserve statistic that shows consumers are now devoting nearly 21 cents out of every after-tax dollar to repaying existing debts, an all-time high.

This is the debt repayment to income ratio. It measures millions of debts in various stages of repayment and compares them to the total disposable or after-tax income of the U.S. economy.

But while a useful indicator of the burden of consumer debt, this figure reveals nothing about how consumer debt is distributed throughout the population.

(1) FOR INSTANCE, IT doesn't tell us where the debt is located—on the backs of middle-upper income families who can handle the monthly repayments or on the shoulders of lower-income groups who cannot.

Some experts believe that increased borrowing by higher-income people may explain much of the recent rapid rise in debt.

(2) The latest repayment-to-income ratio of almost 21 percent includes mortgage debt as well as repayments on consumer loans.

Mortgage debt really belongs in a special category, for it represents more of an investment than, say, the debt you incur to buy a car or washing machine which depreciates in value.

(3) If mortgage repayments are excluded from the 21 percent figure, statisticians report that consumers are committed to repay 15.8 percent, or 15.8 cents out of every after-tax dollar, for old installment loans.

WHILE A BIT high by historical standards, this figure doesn't scream "trouble" for consumers. Debt repayment-to-income ratios always tend to rise during economic expansions, and the 1975-78 expansion has been no exception.

What's more, a repayment-to-income burden of 15.8 percent is not out of line. Between 1963 and now, this figure never has exceeded 16 percent and never fallen below 14 percent.

(4) The repayment-to-income ratio does not disclose anything about the relationship between other assets that consumers hold and their debt obligations.

It's comparatively commonplace for Americans to take on debts that bite into their incomes, while maintaining savings accounts and other assets they don't wish to disturb.

(5) And a clincher is the fact that consumers are holding more liquid assets relative to their debts than they did in the past, according to data compiled by the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research and contained in the Institute's August 1977 Survey of Consumer Finances.

"THE GENERAL MESSAGE from the data is that consumers are in no sense overburdened with debt relative to what was true in the 1960s," the Institute's director, F. Thomas Juster, told Shearer.

"In fact, there are elements of the consumer balance sheet now which suggest that consumers are in a stronger, not weaker, financial position compared to what normally would be true at the late stages of an economic expansion."

And the specific meaning of that general message to you, I submit, is that it lessens the danger that the next business downturn will be pushed into a severe slump by consumer bankruptcies.

James J. Kilpatrick:

Sawed-Off Rifle Is Fair Game

WASHINGTON—Little by little, the Supreme Court under Warren Burger is correcting the excesses of the Supreme Court under Earl Warren. We saw this two weeks ago in a case involving a pair of armed robbers.

Those of us who believe in handcuffing the crooks and not the cops can raise a cheer: For once, hurray for our side.

These were the facts: At about 8:30 p.m. on Feb. 4, 1975, two robbers burst into a Robert Hall clothing store in Bourbonnais, Ill., south of Chicago. One of them swung a sawed-off .30-.30 rifle.

They looted a cash register of $180, forced the employes to lie on the floor, and fled. Within an hour an alert police officer, clued to watch for a dark Plymouth Roadrunner, spotted such a car containing two male and two female passengers.

THE OFFICER stopped the car, ordered the occupants out, and searched the vehicle. Under the front seat he found a sawed-off .30-.30 rifle; in the glove compartment he found a box of .30-.30 shells.

He and other officers then arrested the two male suspects, Frank L. Rakas, 28, and Lonnie L. King, 30, alias Douglas Clontz.

The two were tried by a jury for armed robbery and found guilty. Rakas got 16 to 30 years, King 8 to 24 years. Both had long criminal records.

The rifle, of course, was a key piece of evidence for the prosecution. After the verdict, defense counsel appealed through the Illinois courts, contending that the defendants' Fourth Amendment rights had been violated.

It is the Fourth that protects the people from unreasonable searches of their persons, houses, papers and effects

ON THIS issue the case worked its way to the Supreme Court. On Dec. 5, speaking through Justice William Rehnquist, a majority of the Court struck a blow for common sense. The convictions were affirmed.

Rehnquist and his four brothers went straight to the language of the great amendment itself. Fourth Amendment rights belong to "the people," which is to say, the rights are personal.

Rakas and King were entitled to be protected against unreasonable searches of "their" property; the car belonged to King's former wife. Neither defendant claimed possession of the rifle and shells; thus, these were not "their" property either.

From this line of reasoning, it follows that neither Rakas nor King could have been aggrieved by an unlawful search and seizure of their property, because it was not their property that was searched and seized.

THEIR FOURTH Amendment rights were never infringed. Thus, the rifle and shells could be introduced in evidence against them.

By its holding in the Rakas-King case, the Court departed from two major decisions of the Warren era, Jones v. United States in 1960 and Alderman v. United States in 1969.

These are key links in a chain of cases that established the "exclusionary rule" and the "fruit of the poisoned tree." Somewhat oversimplified, the rule says that evidence that has been poisoned by unlawful seizure must be excluded on trial of a case.

One trouble with the exclusionary rule, said Rehnquist, is that "relevant and reliable evidence is kept from the trier of fact and the search for truth at trial is deflected."

EVERY TIME the exclusionary rule is applied, "it exacts a substantial social cost for the vindication of Fourth Amendment rights."

True, the Fourth Amendment does provide a degree of protection for persons who are legitimately on the premises of someone else, but the rubric of "legitimately on premises" is not to be taken with blind adherence. A sawed-off rifle in somebody else's car is fair game for the cops.

The four dissenters, led by Justice Byron White, moaned that the majority had "eviscerated" the prior law and had invited police "to engage in patently unreasonable searches every time an automobile contains more than one occupant."

I do not read the Rehnquist opinion that way. As mere passengers, Rakas and King had no Fourth Amendment rights in Mrs. Clontz's car. Convictions affirmed! In Earl Warren's time, it would have gone the other way.

The Brighter Side...

A young woman entered a knit shop and asked for instructions on knitting a sweater for her pet dog.

The clerk wanted to know "how big is the dog?"

The young lady didn't know "exactly."

"Why not bring him in, so I can measure him?" suggested the clerk.

"Oh, no, I couldn't do that," the young woman replied. "I want it to be a surprise Christmas gift."

Christmas trees are a lot like politicians. They all look straight until you put them on the stand.

TVA Customers Face Higher Electric Bills

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Dangerous air pollutants pouring from 10 southern power plants will be cut in half under a multi-billion dollar agreement by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The agreement by the nation's largest utility will mean higher electric bills for TVA's 2½ million customers in seven states — 4 percent higher next year and 9 percent by 1983.

The cleanup will require $1 billion in capital improvements and annual expenditures totaling about $447 million a year until the project's completion in 1983.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency described the settlement as "the largest ever made with a major source of pollution."

"In the past, TVA has kept its rates down but at the expense of people's health and the environment," said Dean Rivkin, an attorney for 10 environmental and health groups who were among those who fought for the cleanup. "This represents a new era in its policies."

The federal government estimates power plants run by TVA are responsible for 52 percent of the sulfur dioxide pollution in eight southern states, and 14 percent of the nation's sulfur dioxide pollution.

Plaintiffs in the suit said the agreement's terms should end TVA's reputation as the worst industrial polluter in the South and the worst sulfur dixoide polluter in the nation.

Sulfur dioxide and dust, which sometimes travel hundreds of miles, can cause emphysema, bronchitis, asthma and other lung diseases, the EPA says.

The cleanup agreement came in an out-of-court settlement Thursday of a 1977 suit filed by the EPA, Alabama, Kentucky and 10 environmental and health groups.

The measures, most of which are already under way, include erecting costly scrubbers at four power plants and the $7 billion purchase of higher quality coal completed last summer.

The TVA will be fined $35,000 daily if it fails to meet deadlines established in the agreement.

The settlement was approved Thursday by TVA Chairman S. David Freeman and Director Richard Freeman. The accord still must be approved by federal judges in Nashville and Birmingham, Ala.

Jim Darling, head of TVA's power planning staff, said the cleanup measures will cut annual sulfur dioxide emissions from power plants by 900,000 tons and flyash emissions by 85,000 tons. The EPA estimates TVA plants dumped 2.1 million tons of sulfur dioxide into the air in 1975.

The settlement was negotiated last March by David Freeman after TVA admitted it was liable for $260 million in fines for violating clean air laws at 10 of its 12 coal-burning plants in Tennessee, Alabama and Kentucky. The two other plants, the Bull Run and John Sevier operations in Tennessee, comply with air pollution standards.

The agreement came after a decade-long fight by the TVA which ended when the U.S. Supreme Court refused to review a lower court decision upholding air pollution standards.

The cleanup measures include installation of scrubbers at TVA's Cumberland and Johnsonville power plants in Tennessee, at the Widows Creek plant in Alabama and at the Paradise plant in Kentucky at a cost of almost $750 million.

The higher-quality, low- and medium-sulfur coal, and in some cases new coal washers and other equipment, will go the Allen, Gallatin, Kingston and Watts Bar plants in Tennessee, the Colbert plant in Alabama and the Shawnee plant in Kentucky.

The TVA was created as an independent authority by the federal government in the 1930s. It serves customers in Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, Mississippi, North Carolina and Georgia.

GAS RATE HIKE

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission authorized Lone Star Gas Co. on Monday to raise natural gas rates in outlying areas of Commerce and Lewisville. The rate for the Commerce area will be increased $3.57 per 8,000 cubic feet of gas. The Lewisville rate will go up $3.03 per 7,000 cubic feet of gas.

Weather Experiments Designed To Help Improve Forecasts

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Scientists around the world will use satellites, airplanes, balloons, ships and buoys in the most intense study of Earth's weather starting next month to try to find out how to improve forecasts.

"When the experiment ends next November 30, we will have the most complete record ever assembled of the world's weather," Richard A. Frank, administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, said at a briefing Thursday.

The payoff may take years to develop, but atmospheric scientists hope to learn more about the motions of the atmosphere to improve forecasting techniques and to determine the practical limits of weather forecasts.

"Stated simply, it may not be too much to say that the results of this experiment can ultimately affect nearly every person on earth," Frank said.

Dr. Verner E. Suomi of the University of Wisconsin, head of the U.S. committee that helped plan the project, said it is theoretically possible to have relatively accurate two-week forecasts and added, "My guess is we ought to do pretty well for out to 10 days."

The problem now is that only about 15 percent of Earth's weather, primarily in the northern hemisphere, is monitored regularly. The equatorial tropics that drive Earth's weather "machine" and the southern oceans are barely covered.

To get longer forecasts, more of the atmosphere and oceans need to be observed.

The Global Weather Experiment is designed to close those gaps for the better part of a year. Ten satellites from the United States, Soviet Union, Japan and the European Space Agency will play a key role in the expanded weather watch

Some 50 ships, mostly research vessels, will launch small balloons to make wind measurements around the globe and aircraft will fly wind measuring missions in widely separated parts of the world.

To gather wind measurements airplanes will miss, scientists will launch 300 special balloons from Canton Island in the Pacific and Ascension Island in the Atlantic to float around the world at least three times.

Three hundred instrumented buoys will be deployed in the globe's oceans to drift and make sea temperature and surface pressure measurements.

Blumenthal Eyes Inflation Hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inflation will be worse next year than the Carter administration had estimated previously, rising over 7 percent, Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal said today.

He said that estimate, up from an earlier 6.5 percent projection for 1979, is the result of the big increase in world prices and strong growth of the American economy in the final three months of the year.

Blumenthal said the economy will grow about 4.5 percent in the October-through-December period. The Commerce Department reported separately today that the economy had expanded by only 2.6 percent in the third quarter, much lower than estimated previously.

The Commerce Department had reported earlier that the economy grew at a 3.4 percent rate during the July-September period, but it said today that exports during the quarter were $1.4 billion less than its original estimate.

The significance of the change was not clear, since employment increased in the economy despite the slower economic growth. The economy had expanded at an 8.7 percent rate in the second quarter of the year after dropping at an 0.1 percent rate in the first three months.

"The fourth quarter will show great strength," Blumenthal told reporters at a briefing. "It indicates there is a lot of strength and resilience in the American economy." He indicated it could grow at a 5 percent rate during the October-December period.

He said the economy will slow down next year, to a 2 percent to 3 percent annual rate next year, as result of administration efforts to slow the economy to help dampen inflationary pressures.

Blumenthal made these other points during a wide-ranging interview:

—President Carter has not yet decided whether to change his mind about decontrolling the price of domestic oil in the wake of the OPEC price hike. "There has been no change in position at this point," Blumenthal said, adding that the matter is under study.

—The higher price of world oil will add about $3.5 billion to the nation's trade deficit in 1979, although it still should fall to about $28 billion from the projected $30 billion-plus deficit this year.

—Next year's international payments deficit, called the current count deficit, still should be about half of the estimated $17 billion deficit estimated for this year, or about $8.5 billion.

—He will go to mainland China in late February to explore trade and investment opportunities and also to negotiate a solution to U.S. claims against China for American property seized during the Communist revolution.

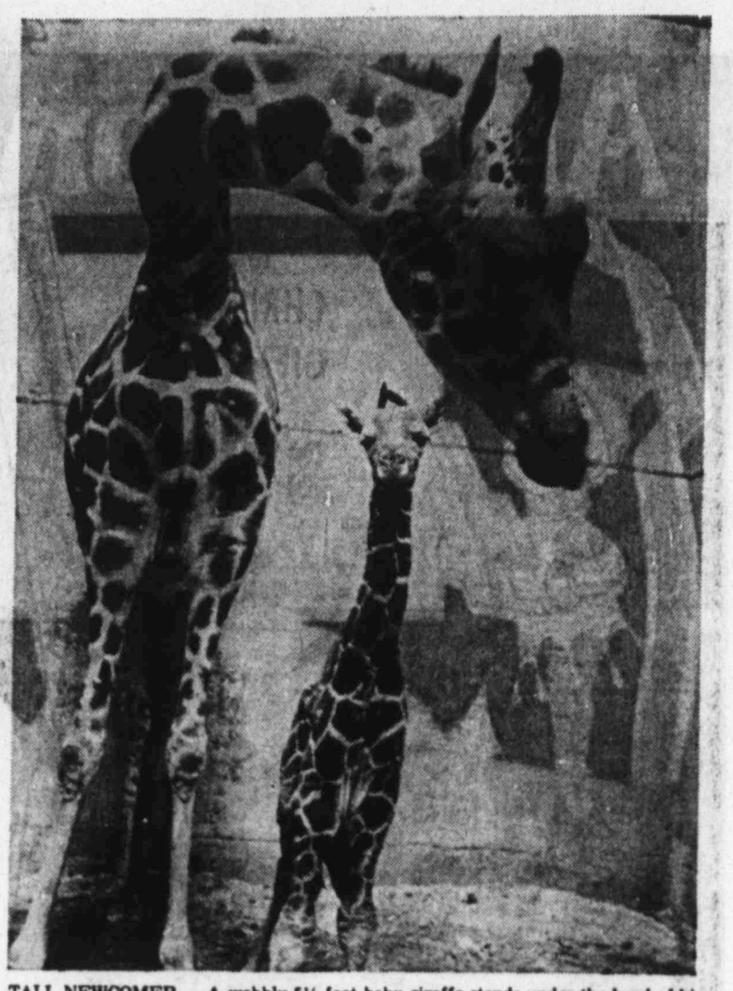

Blumenthal said that although inflation is likely to increase over 7 percent, the administration will hold to its 7 percent wage guideline for next year.

Federal Reserve Board Chairman G. William Miller said earlier this week that he expects the economy to rebound to at least 4 percent growth and possibly higher, which could make the government's job in controlling inflation more difficult.

In its revised report on the nation's Gross National Product, which measures the output of goods and services, the Commerce Department said inflation dipped to an annual rate of 6.9 percent during the third quarter, down from a 7.1 percent rate estimated previously.

Despite the changes in the third-quarter GNP and the economic outlook, it still appears that the economy will grow close to the administration's target of about 3.7 percent.

The Commerce Department also reported today that after-tax profits of the nation's corporations declined $1.3 billion in the third quarter to an annual rate of $119.2 billion.

Michigan Solon Wants Carter To 'Retire' Energy Director

DETROIT (UPI) — President Carter should retire James Schlesinger as Energy Department chief because he has failed to "deal with criminal conspiracies" of multinational oil companies, says Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich.

"He (Schlesinger) has failed to protect the country in the struggle for energy resources," Conyers said Tuesday, referring to the 14.5 percent oil price hike announced this week by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Conyers also accused Schlesinger of failing to develop such alternative sources of energy as nuclear power and solar energy, and opposing the creation of a central purchasing agency to buy all the oil for the United States.

He said Schlesinger's action as energy secretary has allowed OPEC and "the seven sisters," oil companies he identified as Shell, Exxon, Sunoco, Texaco, Gulf, Standard and British Petroleum to keep their prices high.

Conyers said Carter should create a central purchasing pool through which the federal government would buy all oil imported by the United States "and then sell it at equitable prices to everyone who wanted it.

"Right now, only the big multinationals can buy from the OPEC nations."

He said his subcommittee on crime of the House Judiciary Committee, which has been investigating white collar crime, would probe the possibility of criminal activities by oil companies.

Conyers said federal grand jury probes have found numerous instances where oil companies conspired to fix prices or make unlawful profits, but he said the Justice Department has been "soft" on prosecuting such cases.

"Our whole energy policy is a sham," he said. "It's the best way I know to see our cities crumble at a faster rate, increase unemployment and get us into a first-class depression in a few years."

Gulf Expects Delay In Gas Price Boost

NEW YORK (AP) — OPEC's decision to raise crude oil prices 14.5 percent will not register at American gas pumps for at least several weeks, experts say, and the initial increase will be only about a penny a gallon.

But the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' decision Sunday will lead to a total 1979 increase of at least 3 cents per gallon, experts believe. And possible lifting of federal restraints on gasoline and oil prices could raise a gallon's cost another three cents by the end of next year.

Gulf Oil Corp. said Tuesday it expects prices to start rising by late January, but some other companies say consumers won't pay more until late winter.

Gasoline prices now average about 69 cents a gallon in the United States but vary widely in different parts of the nation.

OPEC crude now sells for $12.70 a 42-gallon barrel. By October, the price will go to $14.54 a barrel, with one third of the 14.5 percent boost due Jan. 1.

OPEC produces about 37 percent of the oil consumed here, but since many other producers follow its lead, the increase will affect about 60 percent of U.S. crude consumption.

"By late January you'd expect that some amount of crude at the higher price will reach the U.S., be processed and make it down to the pump level at a higher price," said Gulf spokesman Kurt Vogley.

But Carl Meyerdirk, a spokesman for Standard Oil of Indiana — producer of Amoco gasoline — said, "It will take a while for the higher-priced oil to get worked into the supply. ... We don't anticipate any increases until the spring."

Amoco estimates its prices will rise about 3.5 cents a gallon by the end of 1979 because of OPEC's action.

Federal regulations permit the wholesale price to rise only as much as costs increase, said Meyerdirk. "We won't make any money off of this."

Spokesmen for Shell, Texaco and Mobil said company policy bars speculation on gasoline price changes.

The Department of Energy is considering a plan to lift all federal controls on gasoline prices. The department agrees with oil companies that current regulations are unworkable and discourage expansion of the industry.

Experts believe motorists could have to pay an additional 2.7 cents a gallon if federal regulations are altered, making the total price increase in 1979 more than 6 cents a gallon.

But many members of Congress and several public-interest groups oppose removal of such controls, claiming oil companies will take advantage of the changes.

Two Babies Abandoned

HOUSTON (UPI) — District court reporter Tom Brenan was walking by the Family Law Center courtroom Tuesday during a lunch break and saw two babies asleep on a bench beside a diaper bag.

Thinking it curious no adults were in sight, Brenan peered into the bag for some identification. Instead he found a hastily written note.

"I'm lonely 16. I did as much as I could do. But now I have no place to stay," the children's mother wrote.

"Antwan is 16 months and Shanika is 3 months. I am leaving them here cause I can no longer take care."

Child welfare spokesman Judy Hay said the children, who were well-dressed and in good health, would be placed in a foster home until an investigation was completed.

But she said infant abandonment normally increased at Christmas time because troubled parents' feelings of inadequacy increase. She said four other children had been found abandoned locally this month, 40 this year.

"The sad part about it is that we are able to locate less than half of the parents of abandoned children," Miss Hay said.

In this instance, however, child welfare authorities said they knew the family and once had custody of the older child.

Miss Hay said welfare authorities contacted relatives late Tuesday but were unable to determine the problems of the girl, whose name was withheld, or why she abandoned her children.

"When we last had contact with the girl, she was pregnant with her second child," Miss Hay said. "The girl was unmarried and living with an aunt at the time."

Students Aid Blood Drive

Cooperative Health Education students from Dunbar-Struggs High School recently walked a block apiece for the Diabetes Association fund drive and donated 83 pints of blood during a blood drive as part of their community activity efforts.

For the past several years CHE students have walked a block per student each year for every major community drive, donated to Community Chest and sponsored a blood drive for the students in their high school.

The group has won several awards from Texas Health Careers and the Texas Association of Health Occupation Students of America for their efforts.

This year they were commended statewide for their participation in the March of Dimes Spook House.

CHE students attend all regular classes and work about 20 hours a week under supervision in a health institution. They participate in community activities in their leisure time.

Gunmen Hijack Indian Plane

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Two armed hijackers commandeered an Indian domestic jetliner with 132 persons aboard today and forced it to land at Varanasi, 375 miles southeast of New Delhi, authorities reported. They said the hijackers demanded a meeting with a government official and a news conference.

The gunmen seized the Indian Airlines Boeing 737 shortly after it took off from Lucknow, capital of Uttar Pradesh state, for New Delhi, said airlines spokesman O.P. Garg. The flight originated in Calcutta.

Garg and said they apparently were Indian nationals.

The airline spokesman said the hijackers demanded a meeting with R.N. Yadav, chief minister of Uttar Pradesh, to be immediately followed by a news conference, but there was no immediate word on the reason for the hijacking or the news conference.

AUSTIN (AP) — State Democratic Chairman Billy Goldberg announced Monday the state party will hold a reception Jan. 9 honoring Democratic statewide elected officials and Democratic legislators. The State Democratic Executive Committee will meet Jan. 10, Goldberg said.

DPS Predicts Traffic Deaths

Department of Public Safety officials have predicted 78 persons will lose their lives in Texas traffic accidents during the holidays — 44 during the Christmas season and 35 during the New Year's period.

Every available trooper will be on duty through the holidays as part of the DPS's "Operation Motorcide," said Maj. C.W. Bell, DPS regional commander.

Drivers License, Motor Vehicle Inspection, and License and Weight Division employees will assist highway patrolmen in policing the holiday traffic, Bell said.

The Christmas period for Operation Motorcide will begin at 6 p.m. Friday and end at 11:59 p.m. the following Monday. The New Year's period will begin at 6 p.m. Dec. 28 and end at 11:59 p.m. Jan. 1.

DPS officials hope that traffic violations, and perhaps traffic deaths, will be curbed as a result of their efforts to control traffic, lower speeds and get the drinking driver off the roads.

Motorcyclist deaths on the highway have been increasing over the past few holiday periods, according to Bell. Motorcyclists are not wearing protective headgear and the loss of lives without helmets is overwhelming, he said.

Texas reached a record high of 3,698 traffic deaths in 1977, Bell said. The 1977 figure is a 14 percent increase over the 1976 figure.

Bell emphasized the 55 mph speed limit, saying it has been proved that any speed above 55 mph will take a large toll in lives. He added that the 55 mph is not only a safety factor but the law as well.

Husband Still Loves Wife After Shooting

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Harry Ray Miller says he still loves his wife, although she shot him when he mumbled another woman's name in his sleep.

Miller, 23, was shot by his wife Sunday while he was sleeping. She told police she fired the shot after he called her by another woman's name, "Christina."

Police Tuesday ordered the woman released. Despite a collapsed lung and a .32-caliber bullet still in his chest, Miller told police from his bed at a hospital intensive care unit that he will refuse to press charges against his wife because he still loves her.

Home Repair Insurance Popular

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Home repair insurance or warranty plans, some requiring no inspection of the plumbing, heating and other components covered, are spreading across the country.

One of the big benefits, already demonstrated, is the ability of the plans to promote real estate sales, since otherwise hesitant buyers are assured the cost of unexpected repair bills will be minimized.

Whether the plans can adequately protect existing homeowners on a continuing basis has yet to be demonstrated, however, since some are available for only a year and others have broad exclusion clauses.

The National Association of Realtors already has endorsed the plans of five warranty or insurance companies, and states that coverage is now available in all or parts of 36 states and the District of Columbia.

In addition, "three or four major companies are in the last stages of approval," said Ken Slack, chairman of the Realtors' home protection committee. He said they have "nationwide capability."

"Personally," said Slack, an Indianapolis real estate man, "I believe that down the road every mortgage lender will require first-year protection for the buyer."

The plans vary, but in most instances either buyer or seller pays the fee. Sometimes they share the cost. In some instances only an inspection is purchased; in others, a warranty or insurance, with or without inspection..

For example, Homestead Inspection Warranty Co., Camden, N.J., will inspect properties for $100 up, but one-year warranties cost at least an additional $100, depending on the property. It also offer a non-inspection warranty for $250, but fewer components are covered.

While some Realtors are happy about the plans, which provide them with a new marketing tool, others are less than pleased, feeling the plans advertise defects that could destroy a prospective sale.

Analysis

On the other hand, the existence of an inspection certificate, or a warranty or insurance policy, could help the Realtor avoid being caught in the middle, should a buyer subsequently claim he was misled.

Homestead's non-inspection plan requires the buyer (of the plan) to list the condition of the roofing surface, and the electrical, heating, air conditioning and plumbing systems.

Defective components aren't covered, and age limits are placed on others. A hot water heater over 10 years old, for example, might be excluded from the warranty. The warranty is renewable after one year.

Minnehoma Insurance Co., Tulsa, Okla., charges $225 a year for its non-inspection plan, plus $30 for central air conditioning, with a $25 deductible per component per occurrence. The plan isn't renewable.

Pacific-Cal West, Walnut Creek, Calif., which claims 2,000 offices throughout California, charges $210, plus $30 for central air. A $20 service charge is added for each occurrence. Protection is renewable.

So far, only two companies, Homestead and Certified Homes Corp., Columbia, Md., offer Realtor-approved plans that include an inspection of the property and the components to be covered. Each company's plan has a deductible of $100 per component and is renewable on inspection. Homestead's plan is for two years, Certified's for 12 to 18 months.

In most instances, the inspections certificates, warranties or insurance policies are arranged in cooperation with a Realtor or the local board of Realtors, although non-Realtor plans also exist.

The Realtors say the companies they endorse meet rigid financial and manpower standards, have the ability to adjust claims quickly, and can offer various options, such as coverage of appliances and septic tanks.

Parental Sex Talks Described As Myth

BOSTON (UPI) — The idea of a parent having a heart-to-heart discussion with a child about the "birds and the bees" is largely a myth and the majority of today's parents are confused and uncertain about sexual issues, a major new study on sexual attitudes reports.

"Parents keep telling themselves the golden moment will come when they will be able to explain sex to their children, but that golden moment hardly ever arrives. The idea of the father-son talk about the birds and the bees is a myth," said Elizabeth J. Roberts, director of the Project on Human Sexual Development. The Cambridge-based group released the results of the three-year study last week.

Parents from all walks of life in 1,400 Cleveland area households were interviewed for the study, primarily funded by The Cleveland Foundation and the Carnegie Corp. of New York.

"Ignorance of sexual attitudes had nothing to do with the education or financial standing of the parents," Miss Robert said. "The problem was across the board. The professor doesn't talk to his kids any more than the father who works on the assembly line."

The "unfortunate consequences," she said, are "rampant venereal disease," unwanted teen-age pregnancies and early marriages that end in divorce.

The study concluded parents' responses to questions about sex are usually "brief, simplistic and discourage further discussion" and that they are more tolerant of the erotic activities of sons than of daughters.

"Only about 8 percent of mothers and 2 percent of fathers have ever mentioned birth control to their pre-adolescent child," it said. In addition, very few had informed their children about venereal disease or discussed premarital intercourse.

"Most parents are uncertain about what their children already know, what they want them to know, and how to tell them. Parents experience conflict over how to find the balance between what they believe and what they want their children to believe," the report said.

It warned:

"If the naturally inquisitive young child is rebuked, ridiculed or ignored when asking direct questions ... the child may learn to stop asking questions of parents and rely heavily on peer information which is frequently inaccurate. Worse, the child may grow up unable to talk about sexual feelings and needs."

The report said children whose parents openly displayed affection for each other reflected the most healthy sexual attitudes.

"A child who does not see physical affection between his or her parents may come to believe that physical affection is altogether inappropriate for parents or is limited to the bedroom and connected exclusively with erotic activity," it said.

Ironically, the study also found that most parents who were reluctant to talk to their children also believed that parents are primarily responsible for the sex education of their child.

Eight out of 10 parents also supported sex education courses in public schools.

"It is clear the majority of Cleveland parents want some kind of assistance from the community in educating their child about sexuality," the report said.

U.S. Sweetener Industry Growing At Fast Pace

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — You probably thought your relationship with enzymes had ended several years ago when they were confused with posphates, causing consumers to be wary of them. If so, you are still confused.

The mixup is understandable though, because enzymes, while perhaps the hardest workers, dram for dram, in the entire universe, are invisible, except in their effect. And that is almost incalculable.

Yes, they've returned as igredients in detergents. And they help make your beer, your cheese and your corn sweeteners. Your medicines too. Soon they may help turn organic matter into fuel for your automobile.

Indeed, it is no exaggeration to say the possibilities appear endless. They might, some knowledgeable commentators say, help turn around the U.S. imbalance of payments and otherwise change world trade patterns.

In effect, they are tiny protein molecules that have a catalytic effect on chemical reactions. They make things happen. They turn things into other things quietly, efficiently, uncomplainingly.

That improvement in the U.S. foreign payments, for example, is conceivable because of this country's unmatched ability to produce huge corn crops, which enzymes can help turn into sugar-like sweeteners.

"We could become the world's greatest producer of natural sweeteners," says Professor E. Kendall Pye, biochemist at the University of Pennsylvania and renowned authority on industrial uses of enzymes.

The problem is that sugar is an important industry not only in the United States but is of huge importance to small-nation exporters to this country. The potential for trade disruption is enormous.

Still, the U.S. enzyme-aided sweetener industry is growing swiftly. Roger Phillips, head of Novo Laboratories, estimates that 3 billion pounds of high fructose corn syrup is now produced each year.

The fact that it costs considerably less to make the syrup than to produce sugar explains in part why the high fructose industry has grown swiftly and seems headed toward sales of $1 billion a year.

Novo Labs, whose Danish parent, Novo Industri, is the world's largest producer of commercial enzymes, estimates that enzyme sales worldwide will total $170 million this year. But the figure really tells little.

It's important, Novo points out, not to confuse the size of the enzyme business with the size of the production that result from it. Millions of dollars of enzymes help produce billions of dollars of products.

And that really doesn't tell the story either, because experiments now under way promise to make the ratio even more spectacular. The future, it is said, is even more impressive than the past or present.

One of the relatively new applications is in treating milk so that it can be assimilated by people of non-European origin, many of whom cannot otherwise tolerate the cow's product in their adult years.

In Europe, where they have an excess milk supply, the good work of enzymes might make possible a large export business to the African continent, benefitting both Europeans and Africans, says Pye.

In sheer potential, however, nothing approaches the mind-boggling possibilities of enzymes in making fuel. Solar, wind, water and fossil power get the publicity. Enzyme power develops quietly.

Ethanol, an alcohol that in combination with gasoline adds up to gasahol, comes to you courtesy of enzyme fermentation. Ethanol already is used in a small way in this country, and in a big way in Brazil.

Analysis

The product, it is claimed, upgrades gasoline's performance in automobiles while reducing pollutants. It might cost more, but prices might be reduced sharply if the industry reaches its full potential.

The origins of ethanol almost strain credulity. The town dump, where cellulose abounds, could become a producer if treated with enzymes. In fact, Gulf Oil Co. is already working on the challenge, says Pye.

Other researchers are more interested in the truly awesome potential of producing ethanol from almost any "biomass," or pile of manure or vegetable matter, be it corn, jungle growth or swift-growing trees.

Pye tells of experiments with poplar trees that can be grown on marginal lands, such as abandoned strip mines, and which can be cut — and recut after sprouting again — so as to produce a permanent supply.

Should ethanol catch on worldwide, says Phillips, it would mean a new order of magnitude for the enzyme industry.

"The posibilities could really dwarf current worldwide business," he said. "It would be a dimensional increase so vast as to change the nature of the business."

And yet there's another possible change that hasn't been mentioned. After all they have done for man, it has been asked, shouldn't enzymes replace Fido and his canine kin as man's best friend?

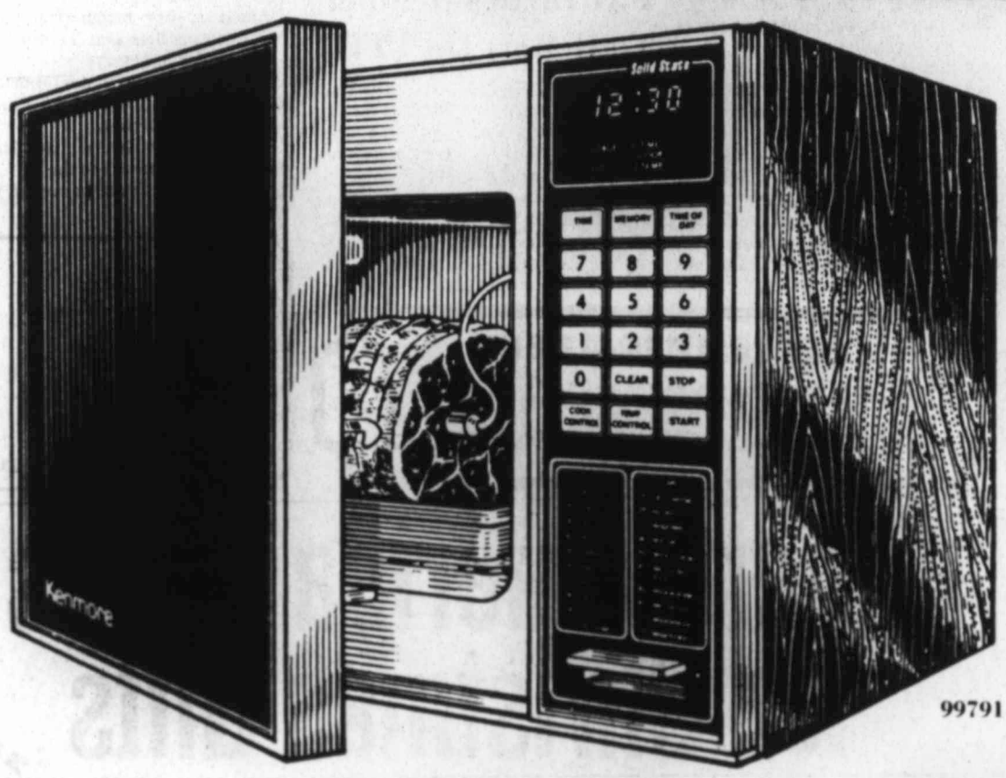

But, you say, a dog will lay down its life for its master. And so, you might assume, would an enzyme, if it ever had one to begin with. And that, for the moment, is the final revelation about enzymes.

Public Transport Favored In Russia

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department has released a study showing that in the Soviet Union, unlike the United States, most people rely on public transit to travel to and from cities.

While surveys show that 90 percent of U.S. urban trips are by car and 10 percent by public transit, just the opposite is true in Russia, the department study shows.

"In U.S. cities, where widely scattered residential neighborhoods predominate as population centers, and the street and highway system is well developed, the emphasis is on promoting carpooling, improving buses, and providing preferential treatment for public transportation," it said, adding:

"In the Soviet Union, where private automobile ownership is low, the major objective is to further develop and improve public transportation facilities already in use."

Policy Study Backs Solar Energy Use

By STAN BENJAMIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major policy study suggests that with a little more money and a lot more push the United States can double its expected use of solar energy over the next 20 years.

The study was sent to President Carter by Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger, who is said to favor setting a national goal of using solar energy to provide as much as 20 percent of the United States' total needs by the year 2000.

The policy review itself suggested a similar target, warning the president that a half-hearted goal might be worse than none at all.

The White House has not made public the "Domestic Policy Review of Solar Energy," which was ordered by Carter last May 3 when he joined in the nationwide "Sun Day" celebrations.

A copy was obtained by The Associated Press.

Solar energy in its many forms provided only about 5.4 percent of the nation's energy in 1977.

Representatives of the budding solar industry as well as some citizen groups, labor unions and others have said pollution-free sunlight, converted into heat or electricity, should play a much larger role.

Congress agreed, including tax credits and other incentives for solar development in the National Energy Act passed last October.

The policy review sent to Carter Dec. 4 estimates solar energy may provide some 8.6 percent of the total energy demand by the year 2000 as a result of the incentives already enacted and a possible rise in oil prices from today's $14.50-per-barrel to around $25.

The government could stick with its present solar programs, improving them a little here and there to increase solar energy slightly, the review said.

As a second option, it said Carter could adopt or propose new programs costing some $2.5 billion over a five-year period from 1980 to 1985 and expect the solar contribution to be about 10.4 percent of total needs by the turn or the century.

Thirdly, it said Carter could adopt the all-out approach solar advocates want and propose drastically increased tax incentives and other measures that could cost the nation some $113 billion over 20 years but push solar energy to as much as 25 percent of the nation's total energy consumption.

The costs to the federal treasury would be substantially offset by reducing the effect of other tax breaks that support production of the oil, natural gas, coal and nuclear electricity which would be replaced by solar energy.

The review did not estimate the size of those savings.

It suggested, however, that the best value might be gained by combining the low-cost "option two" measures with selected items from "option three."

That combination, it says, could support a national goal of having solar energy account for 20 percent of the total by the year 2000, which would "demonstrate a major federal commitment to solar development, provide strong stimulus to the solar industry and appeal to a broad spectrum of those concerned with solar energy."

For example, the review estimates that a combination approach could almost double the amount of solar energy that might be expected from using "option two" alone at roughly the same $2.5 billion price. At $125 million a year, that would be a relatively minor item in the federal budget.

But the greater effectiveness of the combination approach would be made possible only by incorporating items from "option three" that, while low in cost, would involve substantially more government intervention than would be used in the more politically acceptable "option two" alone.

Airports, Bus Stations Brace For Travel Crunch

A-J News Services

If you hoped to avoid the hordes in your holiday travel you're too late. The Christmas crunch began today at many cities.

The travel jam was evident first in airports and bus stations, which soon will be stuffed tighter than a rich kid's stocking, and by the end of the week it will have spread to the nation's highways making holiday trips the only thing that can rival Christmas shopping as a seasonal hassle.

"Traffic is running quite a bit heavier. I would say the real crush started today," said Gil Perlroth, a spokesman in New York for Eastern Airlines.

Reduced fares have resulted in the busiest year ever for airlines. Advanced bookings have been coming in for months and airlines have resorted to adding more flights to handle the crush.

In Lubbock, aviation director Marvin Coffee says air travel today is running somewhat lighter than expected, but should pick up sharply Thursday and Friday, and "peak out Sunday and Monday."

Anticipating congestion in the parking lot, airport officials have marked off extra parking spaces in a grassy area to take care of parking overflow. Coffee says officials have been careful to designate an area that won't get messy if the weather is wet, and hopes people will use it.

Randall Jones, regional sales manager for Braniff International Airlines, also indicated the Christmas travel rush will hit Lubbock Thursday.

"All flights Thursday, Friday and Sunday are completely full," said Jones, noting space is still available on an extra Saturday flight to Dallas-Fort Worth which has been added. There are still some openings on Monday flights also, he said.

Though reservations are generally not available over the weekend, Jones suggests hopeful travelers try flying standby. "Chances are good for standby," he said, "since space usually opens up right at departure time."

To avoid getting stuck in a line at the baggage counter, Jones also suggests travelers arrive at least 30 minutes before departure time, more if possible.

Bus traffic in Lubbock has "really picked up the last couple of days, according to Bob Greenhill, president of TNM &O Coaches, and "it's going to get busier, especially the package express."

Reservations are not a problem for bus passengers, however, since the coach line will "run doubles"—that is add extra buses—wherever necessary."

Greenhill does not anticipate long lines at the terminal, either, as "we'll have adequate staff to take care of everyone."

Going over the hill and through the woods to grandmother's house isn't what it used to be. In fact, it can be about as enjoyable as returning an oversized shirt the day after Christmas.

For instance, last year Sharon McCarty thought she had planned the ideal Christmas vacation: a little loafing, some skiing and then a traditional Christmas with her parents in Houston.

Last year she finished her semester exams at the University of Texas in mid-December and went to visit friends in Denver and ski at Vail. On Dec. 23, the day she was to go to Houston, she realized she had lost her airline ticket and coincidentally the airline had lost track of her reservation.

She spent Christmas Eve in the lobby of Stapleton Airport in Denver, sitting with her skis and a bag full of presents.

The lines at airport ticket counters will be lengthy but airlines have been doing everything they can to move the Christmas travelers.

"It's another one of those super times," said Art Jackson, regional public relations director for American Airlines in Chicago.

American's predicted passenger load — 80 percent of capacity and 490 flights added nationwide to handle it — is typical of the industry's expected crush.

Almost all other major carriers report advance bookings have increased from 10 to 20 percent and likewise are adding flights. Most refused to speculate on chances of standby travellers.

Besides long lines at ticket counters, there are more subtle indicators of the Christmas travel crunch. At Atlanta's Hartsfield International Airport, spokesman John Braden said his crews are stocking the restrooms with additional toilet paper and towels, which always seem to go quickly at this time of year.

"And we have done some things to facilitate the movement of passengers, but there will be long lines and traffic congestion," he said. "This should be just about the same as Thanksgiving providing the weather is good. That was the busiest weekend (140,000 passengers a day) we ever had."

Some of the privileged will be spending Christmas in the Carribean. British West India Airlines reports all 11 of its flights were booked solid and four more were added.

Airlines in Colorado are gearing for the annual crush of people wanting to spend Christmas on the slopes. Trailways Inc. Bus Service in Denver also is expanding its operation with a computerized reservation service to shuttle skiers to resorts.

The National Weather Service says travelers will not have to worry about major storms anywhere in the nation, but it has not yet issued a Christmas forecast.

Troops, Merchants Battling In Tehran

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Troops fired on striking bazaar merchants in Tehran today, killing at least three persons and injuring several others, witnesses reported.

A SAVAK secret policeman was attacked by the crowd and severely wounded, the witnesses said. But they could not immediately confirm reports that he died of injuries sustained as a result of the public beating.

Political sources said fears of large-scale defections and a breakdown of discipline within the armed forces were spurring the shah's efforts to establish a civilian cabinet and defuse Iran's civil crisis.

The troops opened fire today after several hundred merchants of the 100-year-old grand bazaar met to decide to continue a strike. The bazaar has been virutally shut down for several months, with only intermittent business carried on.

The merchants were joined by strikers from Iranian customs, who declared "solidarity with the bazaar" — seat of traditional opposition to Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi and unofficially the center of Iranian economic activity.

Earlier Tuesday, the bazaar merchants and strikers of a Tehran refinery had met and reached agreement on a similar "show of solidarity," political sources said.

The holy city of Qom, scene of intermittent army shooting at demonstrators last week, was also shut down today. Troops blocked roads and banned entry of outsiders, sources there said.

The relatively small-scale unrest continued today as the shah was reported seeking an early alternative to unpopular martial law amid fears that a continued military hardline role could spark large-scale breakdown in discipline within the armed forces.

The sources said the embattled shah had reacted "positively" to a plan replacing the 45-day-old military-dominated Cabinet with a group of seasoned politicians who could appease his opponents and restore calm.

The shah's efforts were reported gaining "a much too noticeable momentum" as a mass desertion by soldiers in Tabriz in western Iran Monday caused the Iranian army to send in fresh troops and tighten discipline.

A fresh paratroop unit used tear gas and fired shots into the air to disperse thousands of demonstrators, which included a group of 500 strifing doctors. There were no reports of deaths.

On the oil front, diplomats said 60 percent of Iran's 67,000 oil workers had reported back to work and that they expected the nation soon would reach its normal production of 5.9 million barrels daily.

Military commanders were reported worried over the Tabriz defections, involving fewer than 50 soldiers, which occurred after troops opened fire on demonstrators Monday. It was the only known incident of its kind, although there were reports that officers and soldiers on leave were not reporting back to duty.

The state-run radio also repeated warnings to or conscription to report by Thursday latest to escape punishment.

Political sources speculated the defections had resulted from a call by exiled religious leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to "leave your barracks, drop your guns."

The draftees shaken by the call and attracted to the opposition appeared to be devout Moslems who now were "torn between their faith and loyalty to the regime condemned by Khomeini," these sources said.

Most of Iran's 413,000 servicemen, including the 285,000-man army, are drawn from the provinces where Islamic fervor runs parallel to attempts to modernize the traditionbound rural society.

The shah, anxious to bolster his support in the military, met Sunday with Dr. Gholam Hossein Sadighi, imprisoned five times for his political opposition to the shah, to discuss a return to civilian rule, political sources said.

A spokesman at the Sadighi household confirmed the report and said Sadighi had won the shah's approval to a proposal that he form a government "made of people who have not served in any government for the past 25 years."

"It would be a government of new faces," said the spokesman. "But it would not be a coalition government."

The Sadighi plan would reduce the shah's role "through full implementation of the constitution," the spokesman said.

Haldeman Gets Out Of Prison

LOMPOC, Calif. (AP) — Former White House aide H.R. Haldeman walked out of prison shortly after dawn today, a parolee with a big smile but nothing to say about the Watergate scandal or his one-time boss, former President Richard Nixon.

"This is generally considered a special time of the year to rejoice," Haldeman said. "It sure is to me."

Haldeman, greeted by a group of shivering reporters and cameramen in the early dawn, left the federal correctional institution with his wife, Jo, at his side.

"I'm on my way home to rejoin my family and I wish you all a very Merry Chistmas. So long," Haldeman said as he rushed to his waiting car.

He was clad in blue jeans and a khaki jacket and carried all his belongings in a paper bag. He looked tan and fit and ignored a series of questions shouted by reporters.

His wife, who had driven here from Los Angeles, some 150 miles away, was asked how she felt about her husband's release. She smiled and said, "Great."

Haldeman took the driver's seat of the family car and sped out of the prison grounds.

The 52-year-old Haldeman, remembered as the crew-cut, tough-minded aide whose power was second only to Nixon's, was convicted of obstruction of justice and perjury.

When he sought release on parole last June, the first time he was eligible, he said his incarceration was a futile exercise that made him "useless to the world, a burden on society ... living a totally wasted life."

But the federal parole board extended his sentence for six months beyond the minimum without explanation.

Haldeman, who screened all of Nixon's callers and was said to be responsible for much of the isolation that surrounded Nixon in his final days in office, was one of three top Nixon aides convicted of Watergate crimes in a joint trial in Washington.

Co-defendant John Ehrlichman, Nixon's top domestic adviser, was released from a federal prison camp at Safford, Ariz., last April after serving 18 months.

Ex-Prisoner Of Soviets Blasts Carter's Policy

mained under house arrest until the Soviet Union moved into Germany in 1945.

Instead of freeing Noble and his father, the Soviets arrested them and imprisoned every American in the area, he said. They were taken to six prisons and seven different camps — including Dresden, Muehlberg, Buchenwald and Weimar — for five years. Then Noble was finally moved to Vorkuta, one of the dreaded Soviet Arctic slave camps.

"I think that unless you've lost your freedom, you don't really appreciate it. I stayed alive only by the grace of God," he said.

Working as a slave in the coal mines for 16 hours a day, Noble was fed very little. "In the morning I was given black bread, cabbage soup and cereal. The evening meal was cabbage soup, cereal and raw fish. I had to eat raw fish for three years. The meals were not enough in calories, but nutritionally it was better food than many of us eat today because there were no artifical preservatives and sugar. But I'm sure that's not what the Soviets had in mind." He weighed less than 100 pounds during his imprisonment.

Despite his many years of speaking to audiences about the slave camp experiences, Noble still feels somewhat uncomfortable talking about what he saw.

"I saw many horrors," he said. Once the Russians refused to feed 700 prisoners in a camp in Buchenwald for 15 days. Noble was one of only about 22 who survived. He said, "I was in solitary confinement and I came to the physical end of myself. And when you do that, you'll try to cling to almost anything. It was then that I prayed and asked God to close my eyes and keep them closed or take my life and make it whatever he wanted it to be."

He said he learned about Christianity from his fellow prisoners, and there were secret religious services held everyday in the Vorkuta slave camp by the prisoners.

"I made many friends. When you get to know people behind the Iron Curtain, you find they are the most kindhearted people on earth. They hate communism. It's safe to say that today in Russia, 90 percent of the people hate communism. I know that sounds unrealistic, but you have to understand the life they live, and their daily existence. The statement is true."

The Russians released Noble's father in 1952, but denied to U.S. authorities that Noble was alive or imprisoned in the Vorkuta slave camp. Then in 1954, Noble smuggled a postcard to distant relatives in West Germany. He signed it, "your noble nephew."

U.S. State Department officials were contacted by Noble's family, but were unsuccessful in obtaining his release until President Eisenhower stepped in. Eisenhower sent a letter to Russian officials in 1954 which prompted his release on Jan. 10, 1955. After coming through the Iron Curtain in Berlin, Noble was flown to Washington, D.C., and testified before several congressional committees.

He married in 1955, and is the father of five children. He has since founded the Faith and Freedom Forum in Muncy, Pa., and uses his experiences to evaluate current events. He has appeared on numerous television and radio shows, and is the author of "I Found God in Soviet Russia," and "I Was a Slave in Russia."

Noble said in one camp there were only 14 of an estimated 5,009 prisoners released. "We had contact with 33 of them six months ago. Those 33 Americans have survived as Soviet political prisoners since World War II."

He said they are held on Wrangel Island, an island off the northeastern coast of Siberia in the Arctic Ocean. But according to Noble, there is a terrible irony in the situation. "It was an American island used by the Soviets as a naval base. But on April 14, 1975, President Ford turned the island over to the Communists without the consent of Congress. When I confronted President Ford's press secretary about this a couple of years ago, I was told I was trying to be a troublemaker, and that I would get into all kinds of trouble about that."

Noble hopes he can initiate enough public concern about the Wrangel Island prisoners to force State Department officials to obtain their release.

"State Department officials tell me it would tear down our relationship with the Soviets if we tried to get those men back. They said even if I got 10 million signatures, the people in the State Department would not change their policies about it. In that case, I said, we need to change some of them."

The policy changes with the Soviet Union Noble advocates include stopping trade relations, obtaining satisfaction to all claims by the free world made against the Soviet Union, and forcing the Soviet Union to return all military and financial aid we've given them. Noble admits he is not too popular with the State Department.

He estimates that as many as 200 Americans still remain political prisoners in the Soviet Union.

"I think it's a big mistake going to the Olympics in Russia. Remember the holocaust started in 1936, just as the Olympics were held in Germany the same year. People all over the world are going to marvel at Moscow, which will be the showplace to the world in 1980. Yet no concern will be given to what's happening beyond the facade of the Olympics."

"The Communist world is still depending on us. I personally feel that the major solution to the problem in the U.S. is that the people must realize what our forefathers gave us. They gave us material, spiritual and physical freedoms. But they demanded personal responsibilities as well, which we have now lost," he said.

We must understand what made our nation great and understand the Constitution and the word of God, Noble said. "Eighty percent of what is happening in Washington today is not right," he added.

But all is not lost, according to Noble. "I know what I've said sounds so negative, but I don't mean to. I do believe we can pull our nation through. These times are like a yo-yo. They will have to get worse, and there is a danger that if we don't jerk our nation up, it will die. And the only one who can tell us if we're going to make it or not is our Lord in Heaven," he said.

Davis Trial Witness Denies Any 'Payoff'

HOUSTON (AP) — Convict Sal Florio left the witness stand today after denying he expected anything from the defense for his testimony in the murder conspiracy trial of millionaire defendant Cullen Davis.

"You do not expect to get anything from the defense ... for your testimony?" asked prosecutor Tolly Wilson.

"No sir," Florio replied.

The Dallas Times Herald reported in today's editions that an unidentified defense lawyer said the defense team unanimously agreed that Davis must take the stand in his own defense.

Davis has agreed with the decision, the attorney told the newspaper.

The newspaper reported Davis will testify at the end of the trial if defense lawyers are uncertain about their case.

Florio, 34, has testified that Wilson and two investigators wanted him to furnish testimony implicating Davis in a 1975 plot to kill his wife, Priscilla.

The witness, a convicted robber, said no such scheme existed.

Ray Blanton of Tennessee was accused of abdicating his constitutional responsibility by allowing an assistant to sign his name to papers releasing state prisoners. Big City Mayors Protest Proposed Budget Cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of big-city, Democratic mayors is protesting proposed budget cuts directly to President Carter out of fear federal economies could push some cities into sharp decline.

Carter also arranged to meet a bipartisan group of governors to discuss their views on budget cuts today immediately after his afternoon meeting with the mayors. The governors have taken a slightly less hostile attitude to reported cuts.

Follow-Up

A number of traditionally Democratic groups, including black leaders, have held similar protest meetings with Carter.

Meantime, a spokesman for the bipartisan U.S. Conference of Mayors said the group learned Tuesday that Carter's budget managers are proposing cuts that could risk eliminating one of the administration's most popular new urban programs, the Urban Development Action Grants.

Led by Boston Mayor Kevin White, the Democratic mayors have spurned White House requests to submit lists of proposed budget cuts.

Their opposition to the administration's contemplated cuts was expressed by John Gunther, executive director of the mayors conference. "These proposed cuts would come just as a number of cities across the country are pulling out of a sharp social and economic decline which has been occurring for the past two decades," Gunther said. "These kinds of proposed federal budget cuts could destabilize these cities and bump them into a new sharp decline."

Carter's advisers have recommended sharp reductions in a variety of domestic programs as part of his effort to fight inflation by trimming the 1980 federal deficit to $30 billion, compared to an estimated $40 billion this year.

As evidence of increasing economic distress among cities, the mayors noted that Cleveland has just defaulted on loans and is contemplating large layoffs; Newark, N.J., has laid off 1,700 employees; Pittsburgh and New Orleans are facing tax increases; and Atlanta is projecting a $4.5 million deficit.

The mayors are certain to protest a plan that could jeopardize Carter's $400-million-a-year action grant program, under which money is awarded at the discretion of Housing and Urban Development Secretary Patricia Harris for economic development projects.

The program is aimed at poorer areas of the nation, but 322 of the nation's 363 metropolitan areas are eligible. Still in its first year, the program has already resulted in grants to about 130 cities. The grants are designed to provide additional leverage to get a private economic development project moving.

The program would be suspended in 1980 if Carter accepts recommendations to seek only $3.75 billion for community development block grants and urban renewal. A 1977 law requires that those two programs receive at least $3.9 billion a year before any action grant money can be dispensed.

Carter's budget staff has proposed that an amendment be sought to continue action grants at $400 million a year despite the lower community development financing. But discussion with congressional sources has led some in the administration to conclude that such an amendment would fail because of the resistance of prosperous Sun Belt areas, which are eligible for community development money but not for action grants.

Prior to meeting the mayors, Carter scheduled a session with Harris for her department's final appeal of HUD's 1980 budget. She is appealing a number of cuts, including one which HUD argues would trim subsidized housing from 330,000 units this year to 227,000 in 1980.

Among other cuts protested by the Conference of Mayors is a plan to eliminate 358,000 federally supported public service jobs by the end of 1980. Some cities depend on this money to pay up to one-third of their work forces.

The Conference of Mayors has charged that these and other cuts amount to abandonment of major portions of the national urban policy Carter announced last March.

They have cited proposed cuts in Health, Education and Welfare programs, mass transit operating subsides, waste water treatment programs and a new urban parks program.

By contrast, the governors have indicated a willingness to go along with some cuts if the administration will couple them with proposals to trim federal red tape. Most state governments are in better fiscal health than the nation's big cities.

Accompanying White are Mayors Maynard Jackson of Atlanta; Coleman Young of Detroit; Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind.; Henry Maier of Milwaukee.

Blanton Will Defend Conduct

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Gov. Ray Blanton, his administration reeling from a parole-selling scandal, is awaiting a court ruling that could strip him of his power to parole prisoners.

Chancellor Robert Brandt said he would rule today on a request for an injunction seeking to bar the Democratic governor from releasing any more prisoners before his term expires Jan. 20.

One of those who asked for the injunction, John Hooker Jr., a one-time Democratic gubernatorial candidate, suggested on Tuesday that Blanton resign from office. But Blanton responded by declaring that he plans to vigorously defend himself against all charges of political and personal misconduct.

Blanton, who is scheduled to appear Friday before a federal grand jury here, said he hired James Neal of Nashville, a former special Watergate prosecutor, to represent him.

The parole-selling scandal broke into the open Friday with the arrest of three state officials. The FBI arrested Blanton's legal counsel, T. Edward Sisk, 38; his extradition assistant, Charles Benson, 33, and Highway Patrol Lt. Charles Frederick Taylor, 40, on charges of extortion and conspiracy to sell pardons, commutations and paroles on documents purportedly signed by Blanton.

Sisk and Benson are free on $50,000 bond each. Taylor is in federal custody in Memphis in lieu of $100,000 bond.

In Chancery Court on Tuesday, Blanton was accused of abdicating his responsibility by allowing an assistant, appointments secretary Kenneth Lavender, to sign the governor's name to documents releasing prisoners.

Lavender is quoted in an FBI affidavit as saying he routinely signed pardons and other papers presented by Sisk.

Hooker, who joined county prosecutor Tom Shriver in asking Brandt to enjoin the governor from issuing any more pardons, said in an emotional court speech:

"I don't believe Ray Blanton ever even saw one pardon in the four years he was governor. Please, in the name of God and the citizens of this state, stop it, this moment."

Hooker, who said he was acting in the public interest, made clear that his primary interest is blocking the release of Roger Humphreys, 33, a convicted double-murderer who is the son of a Blanton political ally.

Tennessee Attorney General William Leech asked that the request for an injunction be denied, saying that Hooker's "vague and conclusionary allegations" did not prove that Blanton had abdicated his responsibilities.

Blanton's statement, released Tuesday by his press office, said: "It appears that in recent publicity my conduct has been called to question both as governor and as a citizen. I propose to defend vigorously my activities in both capacities."

Meanwhile, a second grand jury convened in Memphis and began taking testimony Tuesday on the scandal.

Cleveland Banks Express Hope About Proposal To Rescue City

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Mayor Dennis Kucinich's compromise plan for saving the city from possible bankruptcy and massive city worker layoffs today was received with guarded optimism in the banking community.

Kucinich and Council President George Forbes agreed late Tuesday to put the question of selling the city's debt-ridden Municipal Light Plant and a .5 percent increase in the city income tax on the ballot in a special election.

"I believe that in this way we can break the deadlock that is strangling our city," the mayor said.

Frederick Cox, vice chairman of Cleveland Trust, said his bank hopes "that what emerges is something that all parties can support."

Ted Jones, a vice president of National City Bank, said his bank "needs a draft of the formal program before we can give an inkling as to our thoughts on rolling over the city's notes."

Forbes, who exercises near-absolute control over the City Council, said the council would proceed "forthwith" to put the issue on the ballot, along with Kucinich's proposal to hike the city income tax from 1 to 1.5 percent.

Once the council approves the compromise, Kucinich said he would go to the banks that are holding the city's $15.5 million in short-term notes that are past due and ask that they be refinanced.

Council demands the mayor sell the city light system and Kucinich's vehement refusal to do so had become the main sticking point in efforts to lift Cleveland out of default on the bank notes that were due last Friday.

After announcing the compromise plan, the mayor made a mysterious trip to New York City Tuesday afternoon, refusing to disclose who he met or what he discussed. A check of airline records showed the mayor and his aides could not have spent more than 3½ hours on the ground in New York.

At LaGuardia Airport in New York, Kucinich was heard telling a cab driver, "Take me to Wall Street."

At an airport news conference on arrival in Cleveland, Kucinich quipped, "Santa Claus isn't in New York City. I went to New York to try to find ways to help this city out of its dilemma. I don't want to get into any more than that."

He also disclosed he would be making a repeat trip to New York and a trip to Washington shortly and said, "It's quite possible we will have something to announce in the next few days."

The mayor's compromise offer came shortly after leaders of the city's 10,000 unionized city workers said they had no immediate intention of calling a general strike to protest Kucinich's plans for the layoff of 2,000 city workers, including about half the city's police and firemen.

Once the council votes to call a special election on the measures, a referendum could be held in 60 days.

Kucinich had proposed the income tax increase but the council had rejected it, insisting the mayor sell the light system to Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co.

Kucinich agreed to let voters decide whether the city should sell the light system, but he said he would work for the amendment's defeat.

"I'm confident the people of Cleveland will vote against CEI," he said. "I'm still unalterably opposed to the sale and I'll call on the people to vote against it."

The mayor, who once said large-scale layoffs would be the only way to avoid bankruptcy for Cleveland, got more good news Tuesday, when banks officials said they would not take any immediate court action to collect the money owed them.

Forbes had announced earlier the six banks had agreed not to seek payment of the loans for several weeks and that local businesses had agreed to make advance payment on their taxes to help the city.

Cleveland Trust Co. — the city's largest bank — which holds $5 million of the notes, said Tuesday it had "no intention in the foreseeable future" of taking any action to "aggravate the situation any further."

Jurors Hear Report On Death Of Baby

DIMMITT (AP) — Castro County grand jurors heard testimony into the night Tuesday as they investigated the death earlier this month of an infant not admitted to a hospital.

The halls outside the second floor grand jury room were crowded with witnesses summoned by District Attorney Jimmy Davis as the session continued until 11:30 p.m. The grand jury will return to hear more testimony Dec. 27.

Eleven-month-old Isidro Aguinagas Jr. died on Dec. 8 while his parents were returning to Plains Memorial Hospital in Dimmitt from Swisher County Memorial Hospital.

Davis said the criminal statute that may apply is a misdemeanor offense for failure to provide emergency medical assistance.

Aguinagas first took his son, seriously ill with a respiratory infection and a high fever, to Plains Memorial, but could not be admitted until he paid a deposit of $400 or $450, he told a police interpreter.

The couple drove the infant 30 miles to another hospital at Tulia. Aguinagas said the infant was treated there but not admitted because they are not residents of Swisher County. The child died as the family returned to Dimmitt.

Plains administrator Jack Newsom termed the incident a "misunderstanding" and said the Aguinagas probably misconstrued the policy because they do not speak English. But, he added, hospital rules have been changed to prevent a reoccurence.

"The parents assumed that since they didn't have the $450, the hospital refused to admit the child," a police spokesman said.

Newsom said the parents "were told the baby could be admitted, but they didn't speak English and I think that was the cause of the whole problem.

"We have instructed out hospital personnel that cases involving children be processed directly to the nurses station prior to any mention of any financial requirements," Newson said.

Dr. B.D. Murphy, who orginally ordered the child admitted to the Dimmitt hospital, said, "the baby might have died even with the intensive treatment, but the family should have been ushered in quickly and admitted."

Death Recommended By Grijalva Jury

A-J News Services

FORT WORTH — Jurors recommended the death penalty today for a New Mexico man convicted of the grisly 1977 slaying of an Amarillo pizza restaurant manager during a $400 robbery.

The recommendation came during the second day of deliberations in the penalty phase of the trial moved here on a change of venue following a mistrial in Amarillo.

The jury began the punishment phase of the trial Tuesday, but after 10 unsuccessful hours, adjourned.

Grijalva, of Gallup, N.M., was convicted Monday of capital murder in the stabbing of Mary Jeanette Powers, 30, during a robbery of an Amarillo Pizza Hut Jan. 11, 1977. Evidence in the five-day trial showed the woman also had had her head smashed with a heavy rolling pin.

The jury, which took five weeks to select, spent slightly more than two hours considering evidence in the trial before returning the verdict.

The key witness against Grijalva was his former wife and accomplice in the crime, Kathy Jo Sutton, who divorced him, pleaded guilty and then traded her testimony for 10 years probation.

During her testimony, Miss Sutton testified Grijalva herded the restaurant employees into a food storage locker, failing to notice Miss Powers sleeping in one of the booths.

She testified he then broke open the cash register, awakening Miss Powers, who attempted to report the robbery.

Miss Sutton said she watched as Grijalva, holding a long butcher knife, took Miss Powers to a back area of the restaurant where she was stabbed. Miss Sutton said he then took a 16-pound rolling pin that he had to wield with both hands and crashed it down on her head repeatedly.

The couple then escaped to New Mexico, where Miss Sutton said she left her husband, called her mother in Amarillo and then surrendered to police.

Miss Sutton testified she and Grijalva had been separated at the time of the robbery-murder but that Grijalva had traveled to see her in an attempt to reconcile the marriage.

She conceded she was the one who recommended the two steal some money so Grijalva would have enough to buy a bus ticket home. She said, however, Grijalva recommended they rob the Pizza Hut because Miss Sutton had worked there and knew the layout.

Lawyers Pick Panel To Hear Rape Trial

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — A jury of eight women and four men will decide whether a man is guilty of raping his wife in a test of a new Oregon law that recognizes neither marriage nor cohabitation as a defense against rape.

Both defense and prosecution attorneys say they believe it is the first time a man has been charged with raping his wife while they were living together.

The panel, which hears opening arguments today, was selected Tuesday after 11 prospective jurors were excused, including one woman who said she would be upset over discussion of sexual conduct and a man who doubted he could be impartial.

John Rideout, 21, has pleaded innocent to a charge of raping his wife, Greta, 23, at their Salem apartment Oct. 10. He is free on $5,000 bail.

Mrs. Rideout has since filed for divorce and is seeking a restraining order against Rideout. The couple lived together for about four years and have a 2½-year-old daughter, Jennie.

Before jury selection, Judge Richard Barber denied a prosecution motion to bar Rideout from claiming that marital privilege is a defense against rape under common law. District Attorney Gary Gortmaker had argued that the newly revised Oregon rape statute prohibited any common law defense.

The new law has been supported strongly by women's groups.

Jones' Body Cremated

DOVER, Del. (AP) — The body of the Rev. Jim Jones, who died of a bullet wound while many of his 900 Peoples Temple followers were poisoned in a mass suicide-murder rite in Guyana, has been cremated in New Jersey.

The ashes of the family members will be scattered over the Atlantic Ocean as soon as the remains of Jones' wife and a grandchild are cremated, according to Mrs. William Torbert of the Torbert Funeral Chapel here.

Jones' body was transferred to New Jersey Tuesday after it was released from Dover Air Force base, Mrs. Torbert said. The bodies of several Jones' children have already been transported to an undisclosed crematory.

In all, 913 bodies were transported from the cult's settlement at Jonestown to the air force base for fingerprinting, identification and embalming.

Town Uses Good Taste On Decorations

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — This little town of Bethlehem prides itself on being a holiday mecca for tourists with good taste.

No plastic Santas and gaudy trimmings here. Instead, the lampposts, trees — even the intersections — glow softly with 80,000 twinkling white lights.

And in every multi-pane window in every home are simple, white electric candles, a tradition started by the Moravian Church to welcome the birth of Jesus.

"The white lights are in such good taste," said Mary Isabel Baker, a volunteer tour guide with the church, whose missionaries settled and named Bethlehem on Christmas Eve 1741.

"I mean how many towns do you go to at Christmas with good taste?"

Residents of this self-proclaimed "Christmas City U.S.A" are fond of saying they can always spot a newcomer.

"They might put up a reindeer or colored lights. But soon they get the message," said Mary Louise Ramonat, president of Historic Bethlehem Inc., one of the town's four civic preservation groups.

But Christmas wasn't always white and twinkly in this city of 75,000, some 55 miles north of Philadelphia on the Lehigh river.

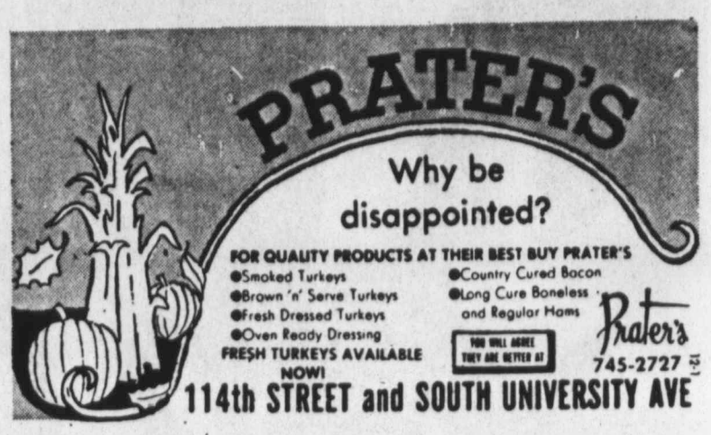

Until the mid-1950s, Bethlehem criss crossed the entire city with mult-colored lights.

The complaints — and the cost of replacing the bulbs — grew. So city fathers opted for the low-wattage little white lights which "don't cost more than a couple of thousand dollars a year in electricity," said Bethlehem's chief electrician Maurice McNeely.

Bethlehem's high-class, low-key approach to the holiday seems to be paying off.

Sign Code Ruled Legal

By FRANK PATRICK
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Judge J.Q. Warnick Jr. Tuesday ruled that the City of Lubbock has not exercised selective prosecution of its sign ordinance, and ordered a case involving the controversial ordinance to proceed.

The defendant in the pending misdemeanor case had contended criminal prosecution of the ordinance should be thrown out because of inequitable enforcement.

Warnick, county court-at-law No. 2 judge, set a Jan. 8 trial date.

The defense during a pretrial hearing had asserted that the city had entered into an agreement with a local pharmacy, L &H Drugs, Inc., and with an individual who reportedly leases portable signs that no citations would be issued against them.

Defense attorney Bill Wischkaemper, representing defendant Mark Corley, argued the reported agreements denied his client equal protection of the laws in violation of the U.S. Constitution.

Attorneys representing the city had expressed surprise, indicating they thought state district court injunctions in civil cases had barred citations in connection with the two instances cited by Wischkaemper.

Evidence introduced by the defense indicated there was no restraining order, injunction or other legal impediment in the two instances.

The order issued by Warnick tongue-lashed the city, but indicated the instances referred to by the defense were not enough by themselves to make a selective prosecution claim valid.

"There is no doubt that the defendant in this case has shown the reprehensible practice of exemptions from prosecution for which no valid legal reason existed with regard to the portable sign ordinance," the order reads in part.

"That is not enough to support the discriminatory prosecution defense," it continues. "He must also show that his selection for prosecution was invidious or in bad faith. There is no such showing."

Earlier in the order, Warnick indicated he was relying primarily on a 1974 U.S. appeals court case for precedent in his decision.

Warnick said that, according to the appeals court decision, the defense in order to support a selective prosecution claim must prove:

—That others similarly situated have not generally been prosecuted because of alleged similar conduct, and that the defendant has thus been singled out for prosecution;

—or that the prosecution is invidious, or in bad faith, because it is based upon considerations such as race, religion or the desire to prevent the defendant's exercise of Constitutional rights.

Warnick indicated that neither criterion had been met.

The order noted that the ordinance prohibits all portable signs and that no discretion is given to enforcement personnel.

Warnick's order said there had been no testimony in the current case that the individual in the sign leasing business has ever violated the ordinance.

AVOIDS PRISON — Don Gray of Harlingen, background, heads into the Cameron County Probation Department Tuesday after being given five years probation for his part in the misuse of federal manpower funds in South Texas. Gray is business manager of the Harlinger-based Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 823. Don Gray's brother Clarence, not shown, received a similar sentence. The brothers were also ordered to pay about $60,000 in restitutions. Also shown here is Brownsville lawyer Tony Martinez who defended the men. (AP Laserphoto)

Brothers Get Probation

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Two Harlingen brothers who have admitted they used a phony invoice scheme to bilk a South Texas school district will not have to go to prison.

A state judge here Tuesday "reluctantly" approved a plea bargain that includes five years probation for Don and Clarence Gray. The Grays had pleaded guilty to state charges stemming from investigations of federal manpower funds in the Rio Grande Valley.

Don Gray, 45, and Clarence Gray, 37, had previously pleaded guilty to federal charges and were given similar probated federal sentences.

Judge Harry Lewis of Brownsville, after lengthy negotiations Tuesday with state and defense lawyers, also ordered a total of $60,211.73 in restitutions. U.S. District Judge Finis Cowan of Houston had also ordered restitutons plus fines for the Grays.

Sources in the Cameron County courthouse had recently reported that Lewis was considering sending the Grays to prison. Attorneys for the Grays filed a motion in federal court asking that Cowan bar Lewis from ordering prison terms.

A hearing on that motion, scheduled for today, was cancelled after Tuesday's sentencing here.

Lewis told the Grays he was not inclined to agree to the plea bargain but the judge added that he trusted assistant Cameron County District Attorney Joe Hendley's judgment. Hendley recommended the probated sentence.

Lewis said, "Sometimes it is very hard for me to feel compassion for people who are intelligent and well-schooled, people like yourselves. I just feel it's very difficult for me to follow the recommendation of the district attorney because of the number of violations involved. You people are intelligent enough to avoid the sort of things you got involved in."

Gas Increase Figures Questioned By Panel

By PAULA TILKER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Consultants studying Pioneer Natural Gas Company's request for domestic rate increases in 63 West Texas cities believe less than half the amount is needed, the cities' representatives learned Tuesday.

After hearing that, the 11-man steering committee representing cities in the West Texas Distribution System instructed the consultants to continue their studies and to consider recommending a revision in the company's 100 percent fuel cost adjustment provision.

Committee Chairman Fred Poe of Midland told the group that the consultants' tentative finding "verifies, in their opinion, that Pioneer needs less than half the rate increase recommended by Zinder and Associates study."

Using that study, Pioneer last summer applied for a rate increase it estimates will average 26 percent overall. It requested the increase to offset increasing deficiencies in annual revenues.

Poe said, however, the consultants are "apprehensive" about revealing an exact figure publicly because it could "hurt negotiations" with the gas company to adjust the increase requested.

"We've got to leave some negotiating room with the consultants and for them to reach an agreement with Pioneer," he explained.

The consultants will review Pioneer data further before opening negotiations with the gas company. Their conclusions will be presented to the steering committee, which will recommend adopting or rejecting the agreement. That in turn will be forwarded to the councils of the 63 cities affected, who will adopt or turn down the committee's recommendations.

Final disposition of the rate case is expected by mid-February. Pioneer can appeal each city's decision to the Texas Railroad Commission.

Poe told the committee Tuesday he believes Pioneer "is going to do something (negotiate a new rate request) with us by the middle of January." If the company doesn't, he added, the committee will meet again to plot new strategy.

The suggestion that Pioneer's option to pass on the entire fuel cost adjustment to customers be reviewed was made initially by the consultants, Poe said.

Consultant Bill McMorries, an engineer from Amarillo, said his colleagues have discussed the "reasonableness" of the 100 percent pass-through and suggested it may "need to go" to perhaps 88 percent to 95 percent.

When asked whether Pioneer buys gas from its subsidiaries and passes the cost on to customers, McMorries replied that 10 to 12 percent of the gas per month is from subsidiaries. But, he added, the consultants have found "no discrepancies" in costs.

In fact, he said, Pioneer "usually is paying less to subsidiaries than regularly."

Poe added, "I think it's one place we can be fairly sure Pioneer shot straight with us."

Although the consultants did not specify areas in which they disagree with Pioneer on cost figures, they did, in reply to questions, highlight rate of returns and overhead costs as possible differences.

Consultant Wayne Brown, a certified public accountant from Pampa, explained the group believes the overhead allocation to gas subsidiaries is "too heavy."

Although Pioneer justifies the overhead costs with time studies, "it still looks like it's heavily weighted," he said.

Dr. Jerry Miller, economic consultant from West Texas State University, also said the group believes there is too high an equity for the natural gas subsidy, which results in too high a rate of return because the subsidiaries generate a large share of income for the entire Pioneer Corporation.

Pioneer Gas Company's stated cost of service, including such items as advertising and contributions, also drew disagreement from the consultants.

The fourth consultant, Bob McGinnis, an Austin attorney, said the group does not "feel the rates asked are good enough" although it believes some rate increase would be justified.

Zoning Variance Sought

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Zoning Board of Adjustment will be asked Thursday to grant a variance on the setback requirements for a townhouse at 8633 Knoxville Drive, after rejecting virtually the same request last month.

The townhouse, which is about two-thirds complete, is located about six feet from a curving alley, and about 14 feet short of the setback requirement placed on the townhouse construction by the Lubbock City Council.

The ZBA turned down builder J.D. Chandler's request for a variance last month when those who own homes adjacent to the townhouse protested the variance request.

Part of Chandler's original request, for a variance of the 50-foot setback for the two-story portion of the townhouse, was settled last week when the city council instructed Chandler to redesign his floor plan so no windows would be needed on the side or rear of the second story.

If the ZBA rejects Chandler's request a

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

I'm one of those women who believe that life will continue even if I don't know that quarterback Charlie Fuggs needs 14 passes to move ahead of the legendary Orlow Spitt who threw 6,442 completions for a combined yardage of 36,033 yards, 1,500 of them while wearing SuppHose.

Maybe it's not a complete, full life, but I'm willing to make sacrifices. My husband is not.

He believes there has not been a prophet like Curt Gowdy since Moses and that when Curt announces someone has broken Johnny Unitas's record of 26 passes in a sudden-death playoff, there will be a flash of lightning and rain for 40 days and nights.

"Who cares?" I shouted back at the set.

"Shhh," he said motioning for silence.

"They could make up those statistics and..."

"Will you knock it off," said my husband. "Now I'll never know who holds the record for fumbles in the NFL during a nationally-televised game which was attended by a vice president."

"If you're so impressed by statistics," I said hysterically. "I'll give you some statistics. Did you know:

"The record for rushing is held by your son who has been the first one to answer the phone on the first ring for the last five years?

"Did you know that I lead the Domestic League in toilet tissue spindle changing? I have single-handedly changed the spindle 6,340 times and lead by 60 rolls the closest contender, Brenda Claptree, who signed on with the Hiltons?

"Are you remotely interested that a little known draft choice, who as a kid used to hang around the kitchen a lot and dream, now picks up 184 pairs of socks a day in her son's bedroom?

"Maybe you'd be interested in how many incomplete sentences I toss out a day that no one listens to or answers? Or how many times I've intercepted the car keys so we can use our own car once in awhile?

"You want color? I'll give you color. We have two brothers playing on the same team for dishes. I think if you'll check the record book you will find we have not had that kind of a relationship between siblings since Cain and Abel were a duo back in Genesis."

I looked at my husband. He hadn't heard a word I said. Oh well, I just witnessed another record for a shut-out...eight months and four days.

STUFFED EGGPLANT

1 large eggplant, cut into halves lengthwise
Salt
¼ cup oil
1 large onion, chopped
1 green pepper, seeded and chopped
1 clove garlic, chopped
1½ lbs. ground lamb
¼ lb. mushrooms, trimmed and chopped
½ cup sliced pitted black olives
½ cup Italian-flavor bread crumbs
1 cup (½ pt.) plain yogurt
1/3 cup chopped parsley
¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese

With a sharp knife, scoop out eggplant, leaving a shell ½-inch thick. Chop removed eggplant and place in bowl; sprinkle with salt and let stand at room temperature for 1 hour. In a 12-inch skillet, heat oil; add onion, pepper and garlic and saute 5 minutes. Drain chopped eggplant and add it to skillet. In a 9-inch skillet, cook lamb until brown and crumbly. Drain fat and stir lamb into eggplant mixture. Stir in mushrooms and olives and cook over low heat for another 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add crumbs, yogurt and parsley. Stir until well blended, and season to taste with salt and pepper. Spoon mixture into eggplant shells. Clean skillet and place stuffed eggplant halves in it; add enough hot water to the skillet to measure ½ inch. Simmer gently for 10 minutes. Sprinkle eggplant with Parmesan cheese, place skillet under broiler and broil until cheese is golden brown. Remove from broiler, cut each half into two or three portions, and place on heated serving dish.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR READERS: You say the holidays are at hand, and you are still looking for last-minute gifts for Christmas or Hanukkah for the "problem people" on your gift list? Here are some tips:

If you're wondering what to give Aunt Bessie or Grandpa, who don't get out much, let me tell you what NOT to give them:

No dusting powder, after-shave or cologne. (They probably have several unopened boxes gathering dust on their closet shelves.)

Grandpa doesn't need another necktie, and Grandma doesn't really want any more brooches, necklaces or bracelets.

With the price of groceries so high, folks who live alone on a fixed income probably would be delighted to receive a basket of goodies. Include small cans of salmon, chicken, ham, tuna, vegetables, fruit, instant coffee, tea bags, crackers, cookies and instant soup mix.

Another thoughtful gift is lined stationery with envelopes and a generous supply of postage stamps. (Enclose some felt-tip pens, too.)

Shut-ins would appreciate a box of greeting cards for all occasions so they too can send birthday, anniversary, graduation, get-well and condolence cards to others. (Be a sport! Stamp some envelopes.)

Don't give anyone a gift of clothing unless you're absolutely sure the size is right. That goes for the color and style, too.

If you're tempted to pass along a scarf, purse, wallet or some useless little doodad you received for Christmas three years ago, please don't. It's a pretty fair bet the recipient will find it just as useless as you did. (Besides, YOU might get it back the year after next.)

If someone on your gift list is living on a pension, a check for any amount would be much more appreciated than a frivolous little trinket. Or give someone who's counting his pennies a year's subscription to a newspaper or magazine you know he'll enjoy.

Don't give a pet to anyone unless you're absolutely sure it's wanted and will be properly cared for. If you want to delight a friend whose dog or cat is considered a member of the family, include a tin of cat or dog food for the pet.

Don't give gifts of wine or liquor unless you're sure the recipients imbibe. Candy, nuts and fruitcake make wonderful gifts for those who aren't counting their calories, but please have compassion for those who are, and lead them not into temptation.

Resist giving toddlers stuffed animals and dolls that are bigger than they are. Parents will thank you for not sending their children horns, drums, sirens or whistles. If you give a child a game or book, be sure it's in the appropriate age range.

Instead of giving someone a gift with permission to "take it back and exchange it if it's not what you want," why not save yourself (and them) much time and effort by giving them a gift certificate in the first place.

ABBY

P.S.: To be alone at Christmas is sad beyond measure. If you know someone who faces that bleak prospect, give him or her the greatest gift of all: an invitation to spend the holiday with you and your family.

Etiquette Expert Gives Seasonal Tips

NEW YORK (Special) — "Christmas gifts and letters should be acknowledged within 10 to 14 days," says Phyllis Nolan, an expert on seasonal etiquette.

"This means that your response arrives while the act of giving or writing is still fresh in the sender's mind," she says.

She advises being prepared with a collection of notes and cards that have a space for a short message. Three types of responses may be made easily and quickly:

— Most simple is a short personal line added to the bottom of a seasonal card. One-line notations on cards should be followed up after the Christmas season with a longer, newsy letter.

— Another form of response is the short note. Select a seasonal note or one that can be used throughout the year. Most card shops and stationery departments, for example, carry a variety of notes in Christmas and New Year designs, pastoral winter scenes or graphics.

— Finally, for the writer who enjoys sending and receiving holiday letters, your own poem may be appropriate. Nolan suggests "The Night Before Christmas," as perfect for parody.

"It is important to put every thank you note and every letter in your own words," Nolan says. "It's not vital that you use complete sentences or perfect punctuation, but rather that you write as you would speak — with affection and concern."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♡.

Careful defense by East earned its just reward on this hand from the North American Fall Bridge Championships, held in Denver, Nov. 17-26, under the aegis of the American Contract Bridge League.

After South opened the bidding with one spade, North had the perfect hand for a leap to game — not much in defense; insufficient strength for a jump raise of opener's suit; and a highly distributional hand. Note that, as the cards lie, East-West can make five diamonds. But West did not have enough to enter the bidding at the two-level vulnerable, and the vulnerability also precluded East from looking for a possible minor-suit sacrifice.

West led his singleton heart, and East won the ace. The automatic defense is to return a heart, giving partner a ruff. After that, however, the defenders will be able to get the ace of clubs — if they take it at once — but no more. Declarer will eventually be able to discard clubs on dummy's hearts after drawing trumps.

Before leading to the second trick, East gave the hand careful thought. It was reasonable to assume that declarer had at least one of the minor-suit aces. If he held the ace of clubs, the defenders were helpless since the heart suit was already set up for discards. However, if declarer held the ace of diamonds and West the ace of clubs, the contract could be defeated providing declarer held at least two clubs.

Once he had worked this out, East's defense became obvious. After winning the ace of hearts, he shifted to the queen of clubs!

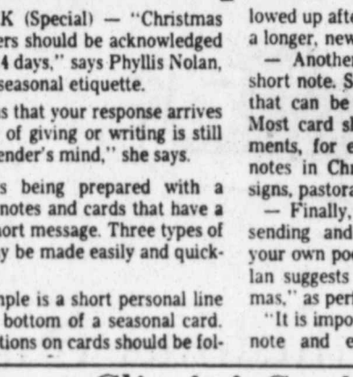

Declarer had no counter. No matter what he did, the defenders had to come to four tricks. If he covered, West would capture the king with the ace, return a club to his partner's jack and secure a heart ruff for the fourth trick. If he played low, East would shift to a heart to give his partner a ruff, and West would then cash the ace of clubs for the setting trick.

VEGETABLE ACCENT

Stir-fry vegetables take on new interest with new interest with the addition of canned pineapple chunks. A squeeze of fresh lemon and light sprinkling of dill accents the flavor.

Researchers Discover Protein In Breast Milk

By PAMELA REEVES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Researchers at Harvard Medical School have discovered a protein in breast milk that may be a lifesaver for premature babies and could also prove useful to older people suffering flu and other gastrointestinal problems.

Dr. Michael Klagsbrun, a biochemist, and Dr. David Tapper, a pediatric surgeon, found that the substance is present in a woman's milk for six months after she gives birth and is strongest in the earliest weeks.

So far, they know only that the protein makes cells grow. The next step is to prove what they suspect — that it specifically works on the gastrointestinal tract.

The finding was reported in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences and its implications could be important for infants — especially those who are sick and premature — and ultimately for the general population.

Tapper, working with Klagsbrun at the Harvard Medical School and Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston, said researchers eventually might be able to extract the protein and turn it into a useful medicine.

The most obvious benefit, however, would be for infants.

Tapper said very premature babies and other infants with problems sometimes develop a disease — necrotizing enterocolitis — that severely inflames the intestinal tract and is highly lethal to them.

The problem does not develop in breast-fed babies.

"It may turn out that this (protein in breast milk) stabilizes the intestinal tract and makes the cells heal faster or grow better, so that when these children are severely ill and their own reparative mechanisms are severely damaged, the breast milk may help them heal faster," Tapper said.

If the protein is shown to affect the gastrointestinal tract and if it can be isolated, Tapper said, doctors might eventually be able to use it as a medicine for older children and adults suffering from flu virus and other stomach and intestinal problems.

"Nobody really knows what causes the disease either in babies or older persons," he said. "But in a baby, it can be life threatening because they often have severe bleeding and they're so much smaller and more fragile."

Tapper said although he considers breast milk to be "a neonatal drug store" full of useful things, he does not usually take a stance on breastfeeding with his patients.

But he said, "I wonder if women who have infants that are very premature and very sick ought to consider breastfeeding for a week or two — just for the time that the infant is most seriously ill."

He said cows have the same protein in their milk as women do just after giving birth, but it is gone a month later and is not present in store-bought formulas or milk.

Dairy farmers, he said, have long known that calves will die if they are given milk from a cow that has not recently given birth. So colostrum — the earlies milk a mother secretes — is routinely frozen and kept on hand for calves whose mothers die after giving birth.

"We're just kind of recognizing what dairy farmers have known for a long time," Tapper said. "They're probably laughing at us, wondering why we're spending all this money."

Many Questions Unanswerable, Boston Newspaper Discovers

BOSTON (UPI) — Even editors who run "action lines" don't have all the answers.

The Boston Globe, which carries a daily "Ask the Globe" column designed to answer readers' questions, polled other newspapers across the nation and came up with these Top 10 Unanswerable Questions:

1. I am 9 years old and have a cat that eats regularly and needs to go on a diet. He also eats mice when he is out. How many calories are in a mouse?

2. There's an old saying that when someone is born, someone dies. I was born at 8 p.m. on March 31, 1966. Please find out who died when I was born.

3. I am writing to complain about our kitchen sink. It's bolted to the wall too well. We will be moving soon and we decided to take it with us. We have the same problem with the bathroom sink. Can't you tell us how to get them out?

4. I am looking for a word that will describe a person or a system that is used in such a way that it is like throwing sand in someone's eyes so that the person who is the target will not see things as they are — so that the target can be used by a person or a system for that person's or system's advantage.

5. I am a 19-year-old housewife and am being hit very hard by the energy crisis. My question is, If Thomas Alva Edison discovered electricity through lightning, why do we need coal? And why isn't lightning striking more than ever now?

6. A summons for jury duty was recently addressed by the sheriff's department to my late father, who has been dead four years. I called to inform the sheriff's department the reason my father would not be available. A deputy responded that that was too bad, but he would still have to show up as instructed because he can be excused only by the presiding judge. I asked what is going to happen when he did not show up and the deputy told me that the sheriff's department "would come after him." I gave up. What should I do?

7. Can you tell me the name of the doctor who did Phyllis Diller's facelift? We're going to be in Los Angeles for a vacation next week and I thought my wife might stop by and get her face done over.

8. How can I get some pants back that were lost in the dry cleaners? They will pay me for them, but I had much rather have the pants. The cleaner knows who has the pants and called the office of the man who has them, but was told that he was a busy businessman and did not want to be bothered.

9. Would you be able to find out why, at the calling of the number O-66 at Bingo games, lots of players ring bells, blow whistles, yell "Quack, Quack" or blow Bronx cheers? Lots of Bingo fans await your answer.

10. I mailed a letter containing a check last November 15 at the main Post Office. It was delivered to an address three blocks away two months later. Since all this occurred right here in town, is there any truth to the rumor that the last increase we had in first class postage was to help defray the cost of storage?

Oil Increase Shocks Mart

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street analysts say the larger-than-expected increase in the price of crude oil has compounded investors' uneasiness about the economy and inflation.

"I think people are a little shocked," said analyst Charles Jensen at MKI Securities. "The stock market doesn't like surprises like this."

Word of the weekend increase by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries sent the stock market tumbling Monday in its biggest fall since the so-called October Massacre seven weeks ago.

Twelve New York Stock Exchange issues fell for each one that advanced, and the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 17.84 to a five-week low of 787.51, registering its largest loss since it took a 19.40-point drop on Oct. 31.

Big losers included oil issues and several industry groups which could be especially hurt by the rise in oil costs — airlines, aircraft manufacturers and a wide variety of leisure-travel companies whose business is geared to auto travel.

DR. LAMB

Fasting Dangerous

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I need to lose about 40 pounds but I have symptoms of hypoglycemia. I need a suitable diet. Fasting is the nicest way for me to lose. A year ago I went on the predigested protein diet and did will before a boat trip. Of course, I gained some back. I am 55 and since the predigested protein scare, I feel uneasy about going on it again. They say the products weren't full protein. Can you fill me in on this?

DEAR READER — The protein diet that you are talking about used a lot of gelation as the basic protein. Gelatin can come from the juices from boiled meats of all kinds. It can also come from the feet, hide and other parts of an animal if they are boiled and the gelatin protein removed.

Gelatin is not a complete protein. A good quality complete protein contains adequate amounts of all the essential amino acids. These are the amino acids in protein that your own body can't manufacture. There are only eight of these for adults and 10 for growing children. The other amino acids that make up the various proteins can be manufactured by your body from still other amino acids.

Since the gelatin is deficient in the essential amino acids, it limits your body's ability to form new protein to replace vital hormones or even the protein that needs to be replaced in muscles. That's why a person on an incomplete protein diet without all the essential amino acids will eventually develop poor health secondary to bad nutrition.

Some investigators think that if you use complete protein you can go on a very low calorie diet. Frankly, I think that's wrong. We've known for several decades that diets severely restricted in calories result in poor health.

They can cause your hair to fall out. They can cause personality changes, loss in sex drive, slow healing of any wounds or cuts that might occur and an overall change in normal body functions.

The only safe way to diet is to follow a normal, balanced diet with an adequate amount of all the vitamins, minerals and protein that your body needs. To give you such a diet I am sending you The Health Letter number 4-7, Weight Losing Diet. It will provide about 1200 to 1300 calories

You shouldn't stay even on this restriction too long. After four to six weeks of such a diet, a person should go back to a maintenance diet to stablilize before they go back to dieting again. Other readers who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y., 10019.

I'm just not going to recommend fasting for you because it's not really something you ought to be doing on your own. It's dangerous. Anyone who wants to use fasting to lose weight should do it under medical supervision.

A person who really has hypoglycemia (and I am not sure that you do) can follow a diet relatively low in carbohydrates. Most weight control diets don't contain much concentrated sweet or concentrated starch anyway. You can divide your diet into small portions that can be taken at more frequent intervals throughout the waking hours.

Coffee is a no-no for anyone who really has symptoms of hypoglycemia. The caffeine in the coffee may cause nervousness, sweating and contributes to symptoms of hypoglycemia.

Guard Scuffles With Intruder

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Griffin Bell was conducting a meeting in his office, unaware of the ruckus outside where a security guard was scuffling with an intruder.

Justice Department spokesman Terry Adamson said both men fell to the floor and that the unidentified intruder, shouting about a matter pending before the department's civil rights division, was escorted outside the building Monday.

Ford Considers Diesel Engines

DEARBORN, Mich. (UPI) — Ford Motor Co. may soon join other U.S. automakers in a dash to diesel engines as a means of boosting fuel economy in cars.

Chairman Henry Ford II, in an impromptu news conference last week inside the company's Dearborn assembly plant, said the firm is moving ahead with a diesel development program but has a long way to go to match programs of other U.S. automakers.

"We are doing more and more work with diesels, but we are naturally behind because this has not been our bag," Ford said. "We have a lot of catching up to do."

In a related move, Ford accepted Transportation Secretary Brock Adams' invitation to a summit meeting in Washington early next year to discuss plans to "re-invent the automobile" and double its fuel efficiency by the 1990s.

Ford invited Adams, in a letter, to visit the company's research laboratories to "see first hand what Ford Motor Co. is doing" to design more fuel-efficient cars.

Officials in Washington said Adams will accept the invitation.

Ford had been steering clear of a major diesel program, concentrating instead on development of a highly efficient "programmed combustion" — or PROCO — gasoline engine to improve the fuel economy of future cars.

A Ford spokesman said the PROCO engine still is the company's best hope, but that work is moving ahead on the diesel as a backup if problems arise and the PROCO must be scuttled.

The spokesman said either the PROCO or the diesel could be in production by the early 1980s. He said it was "not entirely an either-or proposition," however, and that some diesels could be used in the company's small cars within a few years.

General Motors already is producing diesel-powered passenger cars and has announced plans to expand use of the engines unless government anti-pollution standards prevent it.

Chrysler reportedly is mapping plans to import diesel engines from Japan for use in its subcompacts in the early 1980s.

Some 20,000 icebergs are created in the Northern Hemisphere each year, with 90 percent of them coming from glaciers on the west coast of Greenland.

Magi Likely Saw Saturn, Jupiter In Conjunction

By ELDON BARRETT

BELLEVUE, Wash. (UPI) — Modern "wise men" equipped with electronic computers can turn back the astral clock to explain that manifestation known as the "Star of Bethlehem."

Their calculations disclose that what the Magi probably saw when Christ was born was the conjunction of the planets Saturn and Jupiter in the year 7 B.C. Archaeological evidence also points to that year as the most likely time of the Nativity.

"Conjunction" is the astronomical term used when planets are so close to each other they appear to be a single, brilliant celestial body. Such clusterings take place about every 800 years, according to Jim Rostirolla, planetarium director at Bellevue Community College.

Rostirolla can turn back time in the college planetarium to demonstrate how Saturn and Jupiter came into conjunction three times in the year 7 B.C. In the modern prosaic dating system, these conjunctions occurred on May 29, Oct. 5 and Dec. 1 in the morning sky.

With the help of an organization known as Friends of the Planetarium, the college has been celebrating the Christmas season since 1975 by using its stellar time machine to show what was happening in the heavens during that monumentus time in history. Rostirolla is able to compress about 2,000 years of astronomical action into a 40-minute program.

Astrology, the forerunner of modern astronomy, was on a par with reading sheep livers as the leading method of divination in the entire Roman Empire. In fact, the Babylonians said the planets were "sheep which are far away."

Nothing of importance was undertaken without consulting the gods of divination and the only ones privy to those deities were the priests, who also in most cases were astrologers. In Babylonia and Persia, they were called "magu," which became "magoi" in Greek and "Magi" in Latin. "Wise men" is a direct translation.

It is not hard to imagine the excitement a threefold conjunction would have precipitated among them. It would have been only natural for a delegation of those priests to be dispatched on an investigative expedition.

The 7 B.C. conjunction occured in the constellation of Pisces. Ancient Chaldean tradition held that Pisces, "the fishes," was the sign of the West, and, consequently, that of the Hebrews. In the Jewish tradition, Pisces also was the sign of Israel and, most importantly, of the Messiah who had been promised to the Jews.

Furthermore, Jupiter always was considered to be royal and lucky, while Saturn was held by the Jews to be Israel's protector. The Romans equated Saturn with the god of the Jews and Babylonian astrologers reckoned the ringed planet of Saturn to be the special "star" of Palestine.

Herod, who was not a Jew but an Idumaean and a puppet of Rome, was worried because a messianic movement spreading among his subjects threatened his position.

He directed the Magi to Bethlehem after his advisers pointed out that the prophet Micah had alluded to that village as the birthplace of the Messiah. Herod also ordered them to report back when they found the child, saying he would worship this new King of the Jews.

The wise men left the country by another route after presenting their frankincense, gold and myrrh. Joseph and Mary escaped with Jesus into Egypt when Herod ordered the slaughter of the new-born children.

Herod died in 4 B.C. So, if the Gospel of St. Matthew is correct, Christ was born before then.

In 1920, archaeologists unearthed tablets revealing that Herod, in 8 B.C., ordered a census for tax collection purposes. Those things usually took a year or two to accomplish and it is likely that Joseph and Mary didn't make the 70-mile trip from Nazareth to Bethlehem to be counted among the descendents of the House of David until 7 B.C.

The Gospel according to Luke says shepherds were guarding their flocks by night when Jesus was born. The Talmud says flocks in those days were turned out to pasture in March and brought in about Nov. 1.

Thus, the evidence suggests that Christ was born near the end of May or in early October of the year 7 B.C., fulfilling an ancient Biblical prophecy and confirmed by three scientists on an international expedition.

As for Dec. 25, the earliest document designating that as Christmas is one dated A.D. 354. About 200 years later, Emperor Justinian recognized Dec. 25 as an official holiday in honor of the Nativity.

BUS CONTRACT

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston bus drivers Monday approved overwhelmingly a new 18-month contract with the Metropolitan Transit Authority that included a 7 percent wage boost in 1979 and the same hike in 1980. The agreement also would permit union drivers to strike if future contract negotiations were stalled and arbitration failed. The pay for drivers will increase to $7.62 an hour Jan. 1 and to $8.15 in 1980.

RECOVERS FROM RARE DISEASE — Mary Pack, 10, was a happy girl as she decorated a Christmas box with paper loops at her home in Victorville, Calif., recently. Mary contracted amoebic meningo encephalitis last June while swimming in Deep Creek Hot Springs in the San Bernardino National Forest. The extremely uncommon disease is so deadly that only three people in the world are known to have survived it. Mary spent a month in the hospital, recuperated during the summer and returned to school in September. (AP Laserphoto)

Ochsner Holds Party, Reunion

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Grasping a half-eaten Christmas cookie in one hand, 2½-year-old Brian Bowen chased a kid nearly twice his size through a throng of toddlers and socked him in the gut to get his balloon back.

For someone who by most odds should not be alive, Ardie Brian Bowen II throws a great left hook.

The blond, blue-eyed youngster stopped breathing shortly after his birth. During the first two months of life he was attached to a respirator and his weight dropped to 3 pounds, 10 ounces

Brian was born with a staph infection complicated by pneumonia, underdeveloped lungs, a leaky heart valve and kidney failure.

"It was unbelievable how sick he was," ssaid Dr. Jay Goldsmith of Ochsner Foundation Hospital. "That child died several times and it's great to see him so healthy."

On the day Brian was born, Goldsmith opened a specialized ward for the intensive care of newborns who, without constant treatment, probably would die or suffer severe brain damage.

Goldsmith carried Brian across the Mississippi River to the new center on the Bicentennial Fourth of July. Two months later — after heart surgery, kidney failure and weeks on a respirator — Brian went home.

Brian, who will be three next summer, is the oldest survivor of the Ochsner Neonatal Intensive Care Unit. He and 200 other babies and their parents returned to Ochsner recently for a Christmas party reunion with their doctors and nurses.

Goldsmith greeted his "graduates" by first name, posed for family pictures, kissed their mothers and greeted the fathers with handshakes and back slaps.

"During the crisis time, we go through a lot together," he said. "We hold hands and we cry. It's not for the faint of heart."

The pain of losing one out of six babies admittedly puts a tremendous psychological strain on 5he doctors and nurses who care for them. Goldsmith said he threw the Christmas party largely for the benefit of his staff.

"They really give their hearts to the babies and then they leave," the doctor said. "I ask the parents to come back and visit and send us pictures.

"Their work is very intensive and the turnover is high. They don't just work eight hours and pick up a paycheck. They see a lot of death."

Babies as small as two pounds, with miniature oxygen and intravenous tubes in their noses and arms, sleep in incubators and specially heated open cribs with Winnie-the-Pooh name tags taped above them.

Two of the nurses sewed Christmas stocking caps and tiny red jackets for the babies and several cribs held teddy bears and stuffed animals.

"We try to create a homey atmosphere with toys in the crib for those who are with us for a long while," said Joanne Hall, a pediatric nurse in the unit.

"You can't help getting attached, but I try to develop a detached attachment. I had one that I let myself get too attached to and he died. It was hard."

Miss Hall was training to be a member of Ochsner's special transport team — a group of nurses and doctors on call 24 hours a day to pick up critical babies anywhere in Louisiana, Mississippi and East Texas and bring them to the neonatal clinic.

Miss Hall said the transport team begins work immediately stabilizing the tiny newborns, getting them on a respirator and keeping them warm.

"We always make sure the mothers and fathers see the babies and touch them before we take them," she said. "And here we encourage them to visit and to touch them. We want the bonding process to start."

Despite a booklet the staff shows to parents describing the treatment and including pictures of premature babies, "the pictures don't prepare them to see their own child that way," she said.

At the Christmas party, a woman showed off her healthy, chubby infant to Miss Hall and reminded the nurse how she burst into tears when she first saw the scrawny newborn attached to a myriad of tubes and toy-like hypodermic needles.

"The party is good for them to see the healthy ones," Miss Hall said. "And it's encouraging for us. It does us good — makes us feel that it's all worth it."

The Ochsner clinic, the best-equipped and staffed neonatal center in the state, expands in January to provide every doctor in Louisiana, Mississippi and East Texas a "baby hotline" — a constantly updated report on the nearest available crib and equipment in neonatal centers operating in several Louisiana cities.

Youngster Survives Dip In Toxic Swimming Hole

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A few new warning signs are posted at Deep Creek Hot Springs, but hikers still stop for swims. Last summer, 10-year-old Mary Pack took just such a dip — and almost died of a rare disease so deadly that only three people in the world are now known to have survived.

A powerful microorganism in the water found its way into Mary's body last June as she swam in the tepid water. A few minutes later, Mary was unconscious.

"This little girl was very fortunate," said Dr. James Seidel of Harbor General Hospital in Los Angeles. "Usually, within three days you're dead."

Mary was taken to nearby San Bernardino County Hospital where a pathologist spotted a strange speck in the girl's spinal fluid. The startled physician diagnosed it as amoebic meningo encephalitis — a disease that has been reported only 100 times in history. At that time, all but two of those cases had proven fatal.

The doctor ordered the child airlifted 80 miles to Harbor General where a team of specialists won the battle to save her. Today, Mary's mother finds it hard to believe her daughter was so close to death.

"It's like she's never been sick," said Margaret Pack, 29. "She looks very healthy. She's gained her weight back; she got pretty skinny there for awhile. Even Dr. Seidel can't believe how she's come out of it with no problem."

Mary stayed in the hospital for one month. She spent the rest of the summer recuperating, and in September, she returned to school. Mrs. Pack says Mary is now doing better in school than ever before.

But Mrs. Pack is still concerned — because nothing has been done about the toxic swimming hole.

"The people don't seem to pay attention to us," said Richard Mefford, the Forest Service's area manager. He says hikers ignore the warning signs he's posted and swim anyway despite the fact the lethal organism may still be lurking beneath the surface.

Mrs. Pack thinks the rangers should do more than post signs: "They should either get it closed down or cleaned up."

Protests Scheduled During Carter Stay

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Two demonstrations — one by Georgia farmers and the other by Taiwanese protesting the United States' new China policy — will greet President Carter here when he returns home for a Christmas holiday, says Plains Police Chief Billy McClung.

The Georgia chapter of the American Agricultural movement plans a parade of about 1,000 tractors through downtown Plains on Friday, the day Carter is scheduled to arrive, McClung said.

Boy Beats Survival Chances

MOORESTOWN, N.J. (AP) — Doctors didn't give John Lennox much chance to survive when he was struck by a truck 3½ years ago. Last rites were administered time and time again.

But 10-year-old John beat the medical odds and has again learned how to walk and communicate.

The boy's family agreed this week to an out-of-court settlement for $1 million from Public Service Electric & Gas Co., but John still has "a lot of angry feelings," his mother, Jeannette Lennox, said Wednesday.

John remembers nothing of that day in June 1975 — he was 6 at the time — when the PSE&G truck struck him as he played near his home here. But he remembers what it was like to ride a bicycle and play football, which he can't do any more, Mrs. Lennox said.

John, who suffered brain damage in the accident, walks with a limp and can barely use his right hand.

"Originally they said there was no way he would live," Mrs. Lennox said. "He had the last rites several times."

He has defied the doctors' prognoses, however, and he now looks forward to becoming a policeman, "getting married and having boys," she said.

"He's very loving and very gentle," Mrs. Lennox said. His first words, when he learned how to speak again, were to his younger sister, Jeanine. "He said, 'I love you,'" Mrs. Lennox recalled.

She said the monetary settlement, agreed on earlier this week by attorneys for the family and PSE&G, would be set aside to pay John's medical bills and other expenses.

"We try to explain to him that if he needs a special car or a special house when he gets married, he'll have the money for it," Mrs. Lennox said.

Company spokesman Art Lenehan said the court still has to give the settlement final approval.

Scientist At Texas A&M Comes To Egg's Defense

COLLEGE STATION (UPI) — The most satisfying of Texas breakfasts is steak and eggs, of course, and now there is evidence it won't kill you.

Dr. Raymond Reiser, Texas A&M University biochemist, is the man whose questioning spirit and backup research suggested beef and eggs will not trigger a coronary.

Sometime ago, Reiser read an American Heart Association recommendation that Americans eliminate eggs from their diets to guard against a buildup of cholesterol. And then the Senate Select Committee on Dietary Goals for the United States recommended the substitution of fish and poultry for red meat.

"I felt that the recommendations were made on inconclusive research," Reiser said. "The research with eggs was conducted some 25 to 30 years ago, with individuals known to be high in cholesterol. Sure, when eggs were withdrawn from the diets of such persons their level of cholesterol dropped."

He said the AHA then assumed everyone who eats eggs is a high coronary heart disease risk.

"We don't believe that was right," he said. "So, we asked for volunteers from among A&M's faculty, ranging in age from 31 to 61. This is considered the "risk age" and also the period of man's most highly productive years. This is the age period in which heart attacks take their heaviest toll, and the group in which ae are most interested."

Thirty A&M professors volunteered, and soon were eating like West Texas ranchers.

The men ate four diets, each daily for six weeks, which included red meat and no visible eggs (eggs cooked in other foods were not counted), red meat and three eggs, poultry and fish and no eggs, and poultry and fish and three eggs.

"Across the board as a group," Reiser said, "there were no ill effects to these participants. And there was no effect on their blood cholesterol as a group, or in their high density lipoproteins, from eating the different diets.

"Statistically as a group, not only was there no significant buildup of cholesterol, but most of the participants recorded a slightly lower serum cholesterol content when on the red meat diets than when eating fish and poultry."

Dr. Barbara O'Brien, a co-scientist in the study, said participants were screened with personal interviews and rigid physical examinations, including blood tests for cholesterool and other chemicals.

"Their lifestyles were not interrupted, with exception of eggs and type of meat in their diets," she said. "The participants had normal levels, 240 milligrams or below, of cholesterol. Tests were made every six weeks, at the end of each diet period."

She said one participant, who entered the tests with 227 milligrams of cholesterol — considered a low concentration for him — experienced an increase of 294. That was after he returned from a trip to Europe when he was on the three-egg diet.

Dr. W.F. Krueger, head of the A&M Department of Poultry Sciences who has had a triple coronary heart bypass, participated as an extra, and said he had no problem with the diets.

"I wanted to see for myself about eggs," he said.

Reiser said the group on the high egg diet requested another six weeks on it, just to see what would happen.

"No buildup of cholesterol was detected," he said.

Reiser said the AHA and Senate committee recommendations resulted in economic damage to the agriculture and food processing industries. Another spinoff, she said, was the difficulty in obtaining a balanced diet with elimination of eggs, red meat and dairy products.

"The fact is," he said, "that lean meat contains more cholesterol than does fat meat. So, fish and poultry, being lean meat, contains as much cholesterol as does red meat."

Reiser said about 10 percent of the population has a cholesterol problem. He said that as with the one person in the test who experienced an increased in cholesterol, the one out of 10 people should modify their diets.

Traveling On Small Bus Line Offers Unusual Experiences

By SOLL SUSSMAN

FORT WORTH to WACO (AP) — The trip begins and ends at metropolitan bus stations, but in between the stations, if they exist at all, are no bigger than their neighboring City Cafes.

And when the bus pulls in for a stop at Whitney, the 100-mile trip from Fort Worth to Waco becomes, for a moment, a questionable proposition.

Stranded in Whitney — population 1,-271 — where the bus station is a gas station and the only sign giving a clue to its twin identity is half-h dden behind a dusty pole.

The bus belongs to one of the smaller companies that fill in the Texas route map where the big boys of bus companies don't always go. It's slightly shabby and has a wheeze that pretends to heat or cool.

After stopping to pick up two passengers, it declines to start on the trip again.

"Should never have stopped the damned thing," says one of the bus' original riders, an elderly man who had fallen fast asleep before the bus hit the Fort Worth city limits.

"He got up off the clutch too fast," offers a younger rider who had proved his age by waiting to fall asleep until after the bus had passed the Fort Worth city limits.

The driver manages to get the aging bus under way for the last downhill roll to Waco, putting an end to the "leave the driving to us" grumbles that are beginning to surface.

The sleep-inducing monotony begins again.

Despite some efforts to give it a sleeker image, bus travel may be the last form of mass transportation where cardboard-box luggage has not gone out of style.

It's functional, unpretentious travel, and it's easy to imagine all the cars that would not be on the road if every seat were full.

A quick sight survey of the nearly empty bus shows many riders who are senior citizens or members of minority groups.

In the Waco bus station, two students from tiny Paul Quinn College are bound for a weekend in Houston. They would rather be traveling by car, they say emphatically.

"I just happened to get caught without a car," says one middle-aged woman in the waiting room. "It's the first time I've been on a bus in years. ... Actually, we do more flying now than we do any other kind of transportation."

Christmas Sign Draws Critics

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — Even the lighted sign on the Milwaukee City Hall has critics.

Al Haugen, state director of the American Atheists of Wisconsin, protested that the words "Keep Christ in Christmas" were a violation of state law because they support a religious view.

"Why should my tax money be used to support Christ?" he said.

Bert Mulroy, an aide to Mayor Henry Maier, said the sign had been used for 15 years without protest. He said he didn't feel it conflicted with state law.

But then he added the sign was scheduled to be changed anyway. The new one will say, "Please Pay Your Taxes by Check or Mail."

National Guard Tries To Recruit Tot

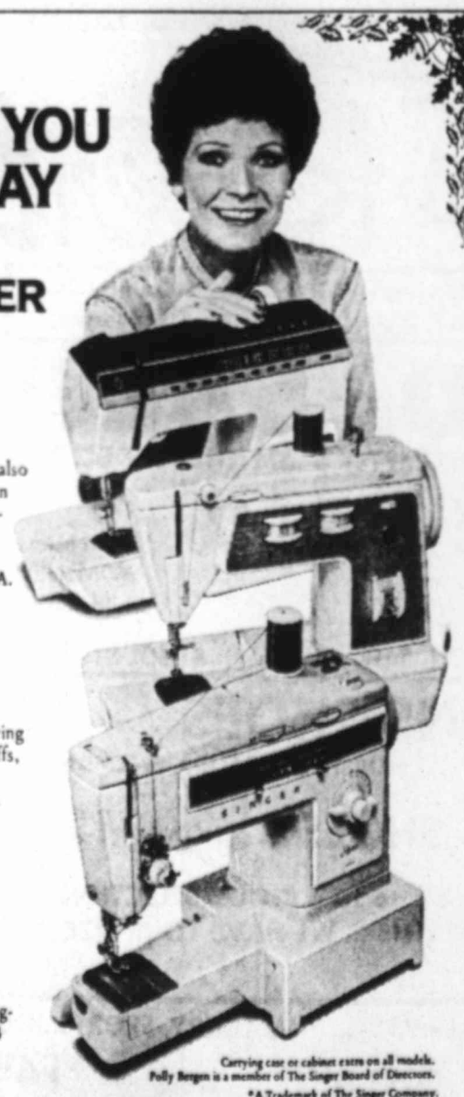

OKMULGEE, Okla. (AP) — If the National Guard recruits Jay Scott Calhoun Haynes, as it seems to be trying, it may have to start serving milk and cookies at bedtime. And maybe provide a tricycle.

Young Haynes is 2½ years old.

Still, he received a letter from the Guard that said his request has "been referred to a recruiter near your home and shortly you should be contacted with further details about joining the Army National Guard."

Anti-Terrorist Effort Underway In England

LONDON (UPI) — Police ringed a southern English town in the hunt for Irish Republican Army bombers today and Scotland Yard flooded central London with 2,000 officers in its biggest ever anti-terrorist operation to protect a half million Christmas shoppers.

Calling it "Operation Santa," Scotland Yard said the security sweep in London was three times bigger than its previous major anti-terror drive when it mobilized 700 men in "Operation Combo" in late 1975 to counter the IRA's last bombing offensive in the city center.

Police sealed off the town of Farnham, about 40 miles south of London in the search for two men in a white Opel Kadett car, the automobile connected with the bombings earlier this week in London.

A detective on car patrol early today spotted the vehicle and trailed it into a dead-end street.

But the wanted men made their escape when one of them opened fire at the policeman with a sawed-off shotgun. In the time it took the officer to duck and avoid the shot, the driver swerved the car round and sped away.

The car was one of four hired last week with a stolen driving license. Two of the others contained the bombs that blasted London early Monday and another bomb was defused in the third.

The gunman in the car was wearing a grey military-style jersey, indicating the party might have been planning another bomb attack on the military complex of Aldershot a few miles away, a favorite IRA target in the past.

Police said extra patrols, including dogs, motorcycles and some armed officers were quickly drafted in for an "in-depth seal-off" of Farnham but there has been no sign of the car.

The biggest security sweep in the capital in nearly a decade of sporadic IRA bomb attacks was ordered after the IRA early Sunday unleashed a pre-Christmas campaign on the British mainland.

The campaign hit five provincial cities with blasts that caused mainly property damage. Two car bomb explosions followed in London 24 hours later. There were no deaths or serious injuries.

Scotland Yard Tuesday canceled all leave for the city's 22,000 police officers and sent 2,000 on 12-hour shifts into the streets, department stores, theaters, hotels and restaurants of the West End, the capital's major shopping, tourist and entertainment center.

Special police guards and plainclothes men were assigned to subway stations and 140 private subway guards were ordered to ride the trains.

The massive security was centered on the Oxford Street and Mayfair areas, one of Europe's most popular shopping meccas with an estimated 500,000 persons using it daily.

Italian Terrorists Attack 20 Cities

ROME (UPI) — Terrorists firebombed a business association outside Naples and torched a car in Milan today, raising to 20 the number of cities struck by violence since Friday in the most serious wave of terror since the abduction-killing of former Premier Aldo Moro last spring.

The terrorists' attacks had been centered on northern Italian cities until the strikes in Naples Tuesday and today.

Terrorists have now staged attacks in 20 Italian cities since Friday, killing three men, injuring seven others, and exploding dozens of large and small bombs.

Tuesday night, gunmen injured a customs officer during a raid on a small airport in Naples. The airport mainly services private planes.

Police said gunmen burst into a hangar and shot customs officer Walter Cainero, 28, twice in the chest. He was reported in serious condition in a Naples hospital.

They said attackers hurled firebombs at the doors of the business association building in San Giorgio a Cremano, a suburb of Naples, damaging offices and causing panic among citizens.

Police in Milan said several men doused the car of Fiat automobile company executive Luigi Fugazza with gasoline and set it afire.

None of Italy's 150 estimated terrorist groups immediately claimed responsibility for the actions.

Attacks in northern Italy Tuesday damaged buildings in eight cities near Venice, wounding a bomb squad expert who tried in vain to defuse one of the devices.

The newest wave of violence began Friday when Red Brigades urban guerrillas killed two Carabinieri special police recruits in Turin.

Other terrorist groups claimed responsibility for the death of a financier and the wounding of two other policemen, a magistrate and a bank president in five cities.

The Red Brigades abducted Moro March 16, killing his five bodyguards. The Christian Democratic party president was found shot to death in Rome May 9.

Supporters Of Indira Gandhi Protest Opposition's Action

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Thousands of Indira Gandhi's supporters today went on a nationwide rampage of violence and protest against her imprisonment and expulsion from Parliament. Ten thousand were reported arrested, most volunteering for it, and four persons were reported killed.

The former Indian leader's supporters went on strike, burned Prime Minister Morarji Desai in effigy, attacked post offices and train stations, set fire to buses and trains, and battled with police.

Three persons were killed in the southern city of Bangalore when police opened fire to disperse stone-throwing mobs, the United News of India agency reported. It said a pro-Gandhi demonstrator was fatally stabbed in a clash with government supporters near Cannonore on the southeastern coast.

In Bombay a mob poured gasoline over a police officer and set his clothes ablaze. He was hospitalized and reported in satisfactory condition. In New Delhi, police fired warning shots and lobbed tear-gas canisters to disperse protesters.

Most of those arrested had simply lined up voluntarily and cheerfully boarded police vans after violating bans on street marches — a civil disobedience tactic used successfully in India's struggle for independence from Britain. The UNI agency, quoting reports from state capitals, said a total of 10,000 had been arrested.

Demonstrations erupted immediately after the lower house voted Tuesday to take away Mrs. Gandhi's seat for trying in 1975, while she was prime minister, to block a parliamentary investigation of her son Sanjay's business activities. By a vote of 279-138, the house found her guilty of breach of privilege and contempt of Parliament.

"Long live Indira Gandhi!" supporters shouted as she emerged from the Parliament building four hours after the vote. She was taken to a freshly whitewashed, heated room, complete with television, in Tihar Jail 10 miles away.

Crowds of her supporters gathered outside the jail today. Her daughterin-law brought a home-cooked lunch to the 61-year-old former prime minister.

Her jail stay may last only a few days. She was ordered held until the end of the current parliamentary session, scheduled for Friday. But Desai's majority in Parliament could prolong the session.

Mobs stoned and burned city buses in Bangalore, near the south Indian district that elected Mrs. Gandhi to Parliament last month, and police arrested at least 200 persons.

Bangalore was crippled today by a transit strike by pro-Gandhi workers. The final day of the West Indies-India cricket test match, India's top sporting event, was postponed there following a night of violence.

Protest strikes were reported in Bombay, Nagpur, Hyderabad, Secunderabad and other cities. Gandhi suporters burned three buses in Bombay and two rail cars in Hyderabad.

Effigies of Desai were burned in Calcutta and Madura.

About 2,500 para-military border guards were brought into this capitalcity and ordered to stand by to help if major violence erupts here.

Members of Mrs. Gandhi's party forced the upper house of Parliament to adjourn by shouting anti-government slogans and then refused to leave the chamber. They said they would sit-in until ousted.

Mrs. Gandhi, who spent eight months in prison during the Indian independence struggle and a night in detention last year, said she had packed her bags for her jail stay and put in some books before she went to the session of the house.

"I have peace in myself," she said. "I have no difficulty spending time anywhere."

Seven of her supporters in Parliament were on a hunger strike in the building, vowing to fast until she is freed.

Mrs. Gandhi said she would run again for the vacated seat. Supporters predicted she would win by more than the 55,000-vote margin she rolled up last month in the first milestone of her political comeback.

"She will come back with thunder," said the floor leader of her Indira Congress Party, C. M. Stephen. "History will bear witness to this."

Mrs. Gandhi, who was prime minister for 11 years until her defeat in the March 1977 general election, and two aides were charged by the Committee on Parliamentary Privileges with harassing four government officials who were investigating a company run by her son Sanjay. She told the house that it was "amply clear" from the debate that the committee's findings against her were "not based on the facts of the case, but on past grievances" of Desai and other members of his Janata Party whom she imprisoned during the 1975-77 national emergency she proclaimed.

The two aides, her secretary R.K. Dhawan and Devendra Sen, a former head of India's Central Bureau of Intelligence, were arrested today and taken to Tihar jail.

Public Inquiry Ordered In Power Outage

PARIS (UPI) — France's national power company found itself in the center of a major controversy today over a dramatic U.S.-style power blackout that the company bragged could never happen in France.

Opposition groups and trade unions accused the government of being responsible for the giant power failure Tuesday and Industry Ministry Andre Giraud ordered a full public inquiry.

Power supply to some areas was restored to normal only today. The distribution system threatened to overload again Tuesday night and Electricite de France cut back supply to some railroad lines and industries by 25 to 50 percent to avoid a new breakdown.

Labor officials and news media tartly remarked that when the northeastern United States experienced a huge blackout in 1965 and when New York City was plunged into darkness in 1977, power company officials boasted this could not happen in France.

France, unlike the United States, has no private power companies but only one powerful national group, which is France's largest single business company with an annual investment of $5 billion.

Trade unions accused the government and the power company of having brought on the blackout by holding back on the construction and maintenance of oil and coal-burning power plants and giving priority to the construction of nuclear facilities.

Negotiations Aimed At Ending Stalemate

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — A U.S.-led mediation team is drafting a last-ditch compromise to prevent the collapse of talks between President Anastasio Somoza's government and its opponents — a situation that could lead to new civil war, sources said today.

The latest negotiations are aimed at setting up an internationally-supervised plebiscite Feb. 18 to determine if Somoza should leave office or serve out his term until 1981.

Sources said the mediators hope to have the new proposal ready today when the talks are scheduled to resume at the American Embassy residence.

The talks hit a serious snag Monday when government negotiators insisted that the opposition join forces with the government if Somoza wins the referendum.

The opposition rejected the condition and said it would never collaborate with the regime for fear of discrediting itself with the people.

The negotiations were still deadlocked Tuesday, and the situation degenerated into a bitter public dispute when both sides accused each other of being responsible for the impasse.

The mediators, including senior diplomats from the United States, Guatemala and the Dominican Republic, adjourned and quickly set out to draft a new compromise formula, diplomatic sources said.

The sources declined to discuss details of the new formula.

The 2½-month-old mediation effort has come close to collapse several times, but most observers agree that if the negotiations break down now, the threat of renewed civil strife would be greatly enhanced.

The opposition has demanded that besides resigning, Somoza leave the country with his son and half-brother, who hold important military posts. The government says it would never agree to banish the Somoza family, which has ruled Nicaragua for four decades.

National Guard soldiers reportedly fired shots into the air Tuesday night to disperse a demonstration by 300 university students and professors in Managua protesting a recent government decision to withdraw funds from the national university.

The report said a radio reporter and a professor were arrested.

Desegration Snags Federal Aid

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Due to federal red tape, many low-income minority children who need extra help in school won't get it because, under court-ordered integration, they now attend schools in too affluent areas.

Lubbock Independent School District administrators said Tuesday they regret the situation but that it could have been worse.

The problem concerns the federal Title I program, which provides Lubbock about $1.7 million a year to hire extra teachers at elementary schools enrolling a higher-than-average percentage of low-income pupils.

Last spring school officials noted that six of the predominantly minority Title I campuses would be sending half their students crosstown to predominantly white non-Title I schools under the integration plan that went into effect this fall.

Dr. E.C. Leslie, the school district's assistant superintendent for administration, said the district had hoped the government would allow Title I monies and personnel to "follow the child" as he or she is assigned from a school in a low-income area to a school in a higher-income area.

After months of working on proposals to reconcile the Title I program with the integration plan, it now is evident that such a "follow-the-child" approach will not be permitted, Leslie said.

As an alternative, the district last week submitted to the government a proposal to designate five more Title I campuses. Leslie said addition of the schools would address some but not all of the problems created by the integration plan.

Despite the expansion, he said, three westside schools that for integration reasons are receiving pupils from eastside Title I areas will continue to be without Title I services.

"This is the best we can do, given the regulations," Leslie said. "We still think we ought to be able to provide Title I services at whatever schools are serving Title I students. We regret that the regulations don't allow that."

Leslie Cross, the school district's assistant director of special projects, last week went to Austin to submit the proposed amendment of the Title I program to the Texas Education Agency, which administers the federally funded programs.

The government has given the district informal approval, Dr. Leslie said. Cross said formal, written approval is expected next month.

The district intends to implement the revised Title I program Jan. 22, the start of the second semester of the 1978-79 school year.

The 18 schools currently designated as Title I are Arnett, Bean, Bozeman, Dupre, Guadalupe, Harwell, Hunt, Iles, Jackson, Mahon, Martin, McWhorter, Parkway, Posey, Tubbs, Wheatley, Wolfarth and Wright elementaries.

Under the integration plan, Guadalupe is sending half its minority students to Stewart Elementary; Iles to Wheelock; Mahon to Hardwick; Martin to Maedgen; Posey to Stubbs; and Wheatley to Overton.

The district had wanted to be able to set up Title I programs at the receiving schools of Stewart, Wheelock, Hardwick, Maedgen, Stubbs and Overton. But such will not necessarily be the case, Cross said.

"A campus must qualify (for Title I) on the basis of its percentage of low-income students," Cross said.

At some schools — Overton, Stubbs and Wheelock elementaries — the influx of low-income students under the integration plan is great enough to meet the qualifying percentage.

But at the larger receiving schools — Hardwick, Maedgen and Stewart — the percentage of low-income children still is too low to qualify.

Thus, Leslie explained, the district will be able to expand its Title I program only to the receiving schools of Overton, Stubbs and Wheelock.

In addition, Brown and Hodges elementaries — neither of which is a "receiving" school under the integration plan — are expected to be designated as Title I schools, Leslie said.

At the secondary level, instead of Title I, there is the State Compensatory Education program. The district is proposing that the SCE teachers previously designated for the recently closed Struggs Junior High be reallocated to Atkins Junior High, which is receiving Struggs-area seventh-graders; and Hutchinson Junior High, which is getting Struggs-area eighth-graders.

Once a school is designated as Title I, any student regardless of income is eligible for the special academic services available.

This fall, for example, students from Title I areas who have been assigned to a Title I school for integration reasons have been allowed to participate in the Title I program. Like the students living in the school's attendance zone, they must demonstrate a need for extra academic help.

With the expansion, Title I plans to add three reading teachers, three math teachers, one counselor and one librarian. As a result, the program here will employ 49 reading teachers, 31 math teachers, five counselors, six librarians and numerous support staff.

HEW Head Decides To Allow Name

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top federal bureaucrat has decided it's all right to call the all-girl drill team at Boise, Idaho's Capital High School the "Golden Girls." Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. came up with that decision Tuesday after learning that a regional HEW official had said the "Golden Girls" name could not be used because it discriminated against males.

Although the drill team remained all female, some of the school cheerleaders started calling the group the "Golden Girls and Guys" in jest. "No wonder federal bureaucrats have such a bad reputation," said Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho.

Tech Professors Rap Carter

By JOHNNY HOLMES
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Two Texas Tech University authorities in Chinese affairs Tuesday criticized President Carter's recent move to normalize diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China, predicting that Taiwan eventually will be dropped from U.S. diplomatic and trade plans.

Dr. Key Ray Chong, associate professor of history, said he expects "the U.S. will drop Taiwan real quick. Once the momentum with China is built, the U.S. will move quickly away from Taiwan, even though many businesses have pledged to stay and help."

Both Chong and Dr. Helen Purkitt, an assistant professor of political science, agree with Carter's intention to establish ties with Red China, but strongly question the manner in which the president handled the announced split with Taiwan, an ally since Chiang Kai-shek fled the Chinese mainland for the island of Formosa in 1949.

Dr. Purkitt felt the move "shows a continual error of American foreign policy, especially in Asia," but felt it was "an important symbolic action, symbolizing a new flexibility in American foreign policy."

Expounding on her theory, she explained that "when President Nixon began working with China in 1971, he turned his back on the Japanese, and now Carter has done the same with Taiwan."

"What really worries me," she said, "is that the U.S. gap of understanding is no smaller now than it was during the Vietnam conflict. I'm not saying there is an Oriental mentality or anything like that, but I don't think many of our diplomats understand the Oriental culture, and that's very important to better our relationships, not only with the Chinese but all over the Orient."

Ruth Schiermeyer, chairman of the Lubbock County Republican party, offered a personal opinion, explaining that the local party had not discussed the Democratic president's move.

"I personally feel China is a country, and not recognizing it for 30 years didn't make it go away," she said. "My problem is in accepting that Carter turned his back on a longtime ally."

The GOP leader suggested that Carter's recognition of Red China was politically motivated.

"Politically speaking, I'm not sure that this wasn't done at this particular time to draw attention away from the failure to achieve a Mideast peace treaty by the deadline. The timing was just too good. Otherwise, it was an immature and distracting move," she said.

Dr. Purkitt, Chong and Mrs. Schiermeyer agreed that while the normalization of relations between America and Red China was inevitable, the part involving Taiwan could have been handled with more finesse.

The seemingly sudden action "has caused some uncertainty, both politically and economically," said Dr. Purkitt, "and I think it could have been avoided. It's caused some very unnecessary reactions. The change could have been much more gradual."

Taiwanese students across the country spent much of last weekend showing their resentment of America's latest shift in foreign policy. In Lubbock Sunday, the Chinese Students Association of Texas Tech voiced its disapproval with a protest demonstration in front of the Federal Building.

But neither Dr. Purkitt nor Chong expect the demonstrations to continue.

"This is just a guess," said Dr. Purkitt, "but I don't think there will be too many in the next few weeks. The students appear to be taking a wait-and-see attitude. I'm not really sure what will happen when the Red Chinese come here to open their embassies (the U. S. and China are expected to begin trading ambassadors in March). It depends on whether we abandon Taiwan completely or try to work with them."

"The students have to show their dissatisfaction with the way their homeland is being treated," said Chong, "but they probably won't keep it up like the Iranians."

Dr. Purkitt compared the China situation to America's recent Vietnam conflict, saying that "there was a real negative reaction among students after the initial cease-fire in Vietnam, but nothing really happened until after the actual fall of the government. I think the real demonstrations could come after Taiwan is abandoned economically, whenever that happens."

Mrs. Schiermeyer, a host parent of a Taiwanese girl for two years, said she felt the Taiwanese students in America were "feeling pretty insecure right now, not knowing exactly what their role is going to be."

Dr. Purkitt and Chong agree that the American involvement with Red China is another in a long line of foreign policy moves that may have begun with good intentions but was bungled in the process.

Said Dr. Purkitt, "Style is the essence of international politics and the key to how we conduct our foreign affairs, especially in a part of the world where style and protocol are very important."

Summing up his feelings about the matter, Chong said, "American foreign policy is dictated by public opinion and is therefore very erratic. This situation seems to mirror the way America has handled Korea, Vietnam and now China. And it could happen to Korea again."

Board Of Adjustment To Hear Requests

second time, he may be forced to remove a section of the townhouse garage to comply with the setback requirements.

Chandler will be represented at the 8:15 a.m. meeting in city council chambers by attorney Elroy Simnacher.

Also on Thursday's agenda are the first requests for special exceptions to permit self-service gasoline pumps in a local retail (C-2) zoning district since the council amended the zoning ordinance to permit the gas sales in C-2 zones.

Ken Flagg, representing Sonny Arnold, will request such a special exception to gas pumps at a convenience store to be located at 6201 34th St.

C. Clayton Yeager, representing Furr's, Inc., will ask for ZBA approval for gas pumps at a convenience store to be built north of 74th Street and west of Quaker Avenue.

R.D. Burchell, representing Southland Corporation, will request a special exception and a variance in the setback requirements for gas pumps at a convenience store at 2334 Broadway.

Also on the agenda is the request of Juan Mendoza, representing Mendoza's Furniture and Upholstery, for a special exception to expand the upholstery shop which is a legal non-conforming use.

However, Mendoza cleared the lot where the shop was located before seeking the special exception, and so is not considered an expansion of an existing use by city staff members.

C. Clayton Yeager, representing Furr's, Inc., also will ask board members to vary the required setbacks on property south of 71st Street and west of Quaker Avenue.

When approving a zone change for the property, the city council tied construction to a site plan which stipulated any buildings would be setback 100 feet from 74th Street.

Yeager will ask the ZBA to reduce that setback.

E. Reuel Nash, representing Lester Shaver and Ron Betenbough, will request a variance in the requirement that townhouses be constructed from street to street.

Nash wants permission to build townhouses three at a time beginning at the southwest corner of 66th Street and Salem Avene.

Other ZBA requests include:

—Joyce Raines Lansford for a special exception to allow an attorney's office in a residence at 3405 19th St.

—Roger Loter, for La Fonda del Sol Restaurant, for a special exception to allow a dance floor in a restaurant at 50th Street and Salem Avenue.

—American Sign Indicator Corporation for West Texas Savings and Loan for a variance in the setback and size requirements for a sign at 3400 50th St.

—Chester A. Green, for Plains Cooperative Oil Mill, Inc., for a special exception to permit the construction of a water treatment facility east of Elm Avenue and north of the Fort Worth and Denver Railroad near 29th Street.

—Chester T. Dean for a special exception to add a garage to a legal non-conforming use at 6310 24th St.

Pump Manufacturer Expects Change In U.S. Service Stations

By LEROY ADAMS

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (UPI) — The way America fills its gas tank is changing and so is the service station pump.

"Before long, many service stations will become just gasoline pumping depots," said J.J. Guidrey, president and chairman of Tokheim Corp., one of the nation's largest pump manufacturers.

"There won't be as many. Places that have mechanics or other auto services won't have gas."

One indication of the trend is the "computerized" pump that shows gallons and price on digital displays — the electronic numbers found on calculators and watches. They are now found in stations from coast-to-coast, Guidrey said, although more are concentrated in the western states.

The new pumps can be programmed to dispense gas and even collect money — as coin-operated vendors or minicomputers which accept a credit card and print out a receipt. Guidrey said the devices are almost tamper-proof.

"One attendant can supervise more than a dozen pumps from a control booth and never have to get out to wipe a window or take out an oil dipstick."

C News
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal
Wednesday, Dec. 20, 1978

Guidrey's Fort Wayne-based corporation got into the pumping business at the turn of the century with the development of the automobile. The company turned to the latest electronic developments when changes in the availability and marketing of petroleum products created a need for new methods for handling gasoline and oil.

When the price of gasoline hits $1, Guidry believes, the U.S. motorist will finally be forced by necessity to conserve.

Guidry said the company's primary business line likely will continue to be fuel pumps although there is room to move into such areas as meters for oil tankers or pipelines. He would like to see American gasoline sold by the liter — the metric equivalent of a quart.

"We think the better solution to this dilemma would be to change to the metric system which is so common in the rest of the world. However, the Federal Energy Agency, for psychological reasons, might insist that the unit of measurement remain in gallons since $1 a gallon sounds a lot higher than its equivalent of 26 cents a liter."

Guidry said the company also is involved in development of intake fuel pumps for passenger cars.

Perilous Year Faces Mideast

By GREGORY JENSEN
United Press International Writer

In the Middle East there is no major war. Neither is there peace.

Any notion that a formal peace treaty between Israel and Egypt removes this powderkeg area from the list of the world's trouble spots is simply wishful thinking.

Analysis

Epochal changes may follow that treaty. But while Camp David and its outcome monopolized so much attention in 1978, momentous developments were taking place which make 1979 a year of peril.

Danger lurks almost everywhere in a region which, producing 55 percent of the non-communist world's oil, could hardly be more important.

The Shah's Iran may be disintegrating. Pro-Russian coups have succeeded in Afghanistan and South Yemen. A Cuban army is entrenched in Ethiopia. Arab nations, rich and poor, are rethinking their pro-western attitudes. Turkey suddenly has a potentially neutralist prime minister.

Nor is that all of the catalogue of woe.

The area's United Press International correspondents add that devastated Lebanon hardly exists as a nation any longer, that the Palestinian problem at the root of Arab-Israeli tensions rankles untouched, that Soviet influence now extends as well to Syria and Libya, that counties with enormously high incomes can hardly remain friendly forever with next-door neighbors who are abysmally poor.

The lands at the eastern end of the Mediterranean always have been turbulent. Still, the legacy which 1978 left to 1979 is uniformly forbidding:

—Iran, at this time last year the region's budding superpower, now trembles close to disaster. Riots, massive violence, enormous opposition to the Shah and his pro-western regime threaten at the very least to drive Iran toward neutrality and reverse its liberalizing trends.

—Israel, with Egyptian peace at last in sight, wonders now how to pay the massive bill. With inflation at 53 percent and rising, with taxes already fearsome, it can hardly shoulder the burden itself. Already it is begging $3 billion from the United States to help military and civilian relocation. Potential enemies like Syria and even Jordan remain, as does the Palestinian issue.

—Egypt may face sanctions from Arab neighbors opposed to its separate Israeli peace. If they come, says UPI correspondent Maurice Guindi, Egypt "can be expected to hit back hard." It could, for instance, pull back its more than 500,000 white-collar professionals now serving, and badly needed by, other Arab countries.

— In Lebanon "nearly everybody, Christian and Moslem, is fed up with fighting, with fear, with the terror that have become a part of daily life," says UPI correspondent David Pearce. "But the tragedy is that after four years of turbulence and slaughter there is still no genuine move toward national reconciliation."

Self-destruction has bled Lebanon white. The economy is a shambles. Unemployment is high, inflation is high, the outlook for firm government and political stability — let alone an end to the bloodshed — is grim.

—Turkey, a NATO partner and once a staunch Western ally, is shakey politically, desperately troubled economically and, noted one observer, "has been sidling up to Russia of late." Cyprus and the resulting feud with Greece remain an open wound.

— Afghanistan, hardly a worry for the West a year ago, is now communist in all but name. "Thundering government rhetoric echoes the Moscow line and makes the nation sound like another Soviet Socialist republic," says UPI correspondent John Needham.

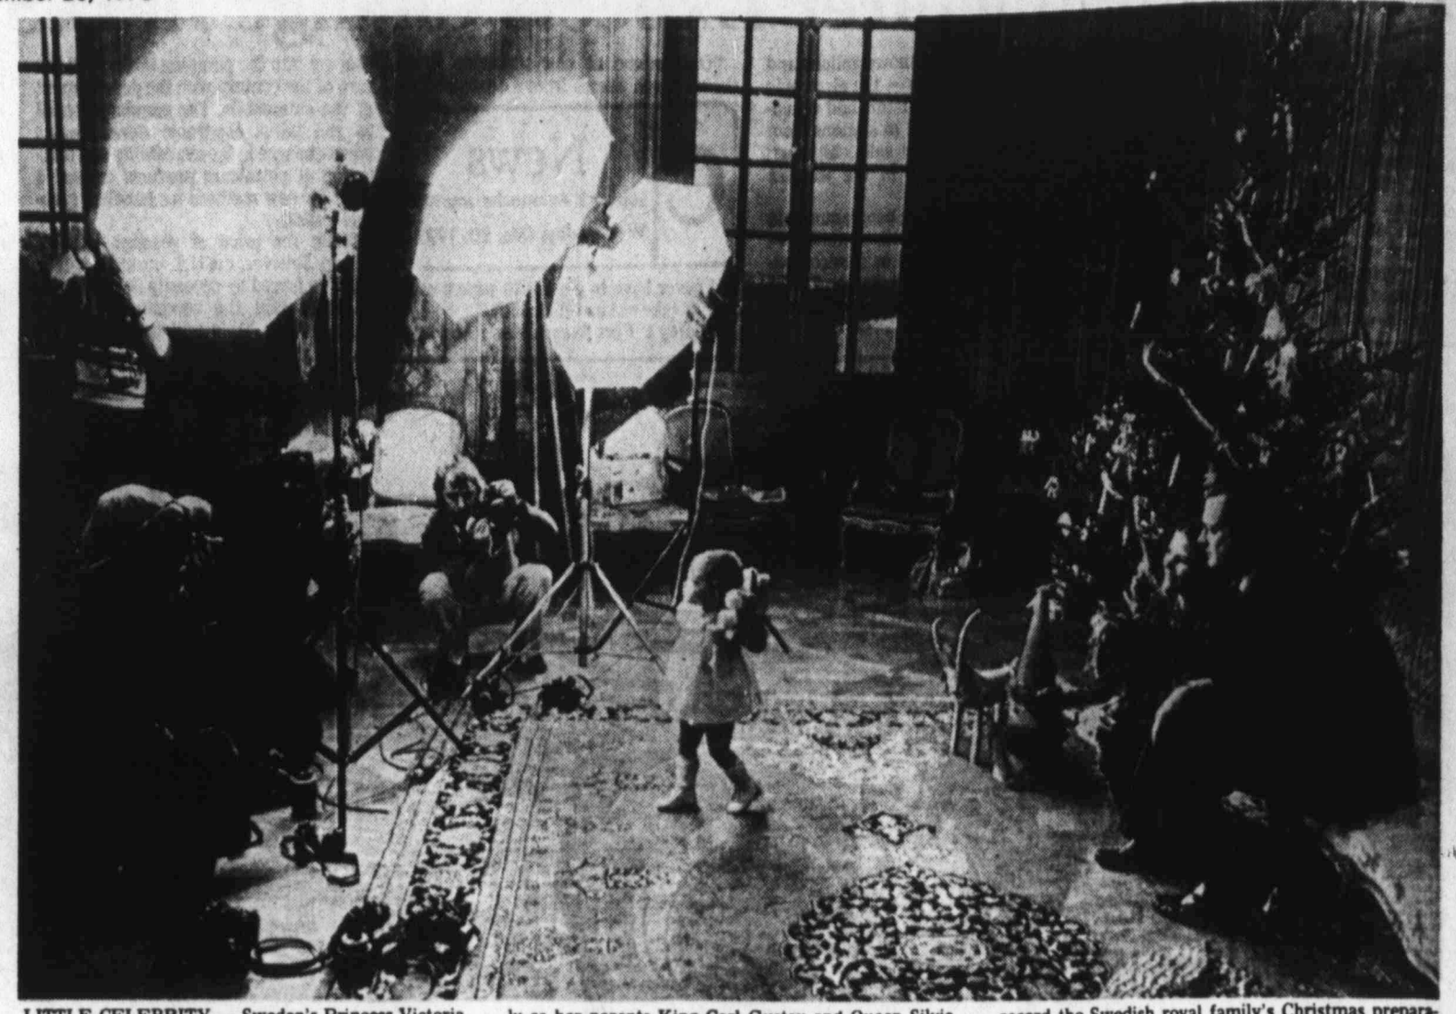

Elsewhere, too, the Soviet Union nibbles greedily at the area's edges. The Soviets have a new toehold in South Yemen, and used it as a staging post during Ethiopia's Cuban-powered Ogaden war. Soviet influence in Ethiopia remains strong. Egyptians see similar but better hidden Soviet moves in Libya, in Syria, even in Iran.

"We should be aware of the dangers surrounding us, (of) Soviet infiltration of the areas around us," said Egyptian Defense Minister Lt. Gen. Kamal Hassan Ali recently. He said Egypt's armed forces had to be prepared for "movement in all directions and action in all directions."

None of this escapes the Middle East's richest, and perhaps in consequence least troubled, nations.

Saudi Arabia's vast oil output gives it a potential stranglehold of the West, but it has looked westward for its future. Kuwait in income per head is the richest nation on earth and has no wish to risk this by eastern flirtation.

Yet these and other pro-American Arabs see the West as powerless to help its friend the Shah.

Peking Prepares For Flood Of Tourists

TOKYO (AP) — More than 500,000 foreigners have visited China this year, and Peking is mounting an effort to build hotels, improve transportation and train workers to serve an expected flood of tourists and business travelers, the official Hsinhua news agency reported recently.

But Lu Shu-Chang, diector of China's Travel and Tourism Bureau, conceded to the news agency that the country's tourist industry "is still in the early stages.

"There are a lot of difference between our development and the tourist industry in the rest of the world," he said.

Hsinhua said China in 1978 has attracted about 100,000 foreign tourists and 30,000 other foreign "guests," double last year's tally and "equivalent to the total for the past 14 years."

The figures "did not include 400,000 overseas Chinese, compatriots from Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan, and foreigners of Chinese origin who came back to visit their relatives," the news agency said.

Lu said "in developing the tourist industry, China is putting emphasis on facilities." Foreign businesses "are discussing ways of providing funds to build a number of hotels," he said.

Two Western companies, Pan American World Airways' Intercontinental Hotels and Hyatt International, already have announced multimillion-dollar China hotel projects. A third, the privately-held Amherst Group of Companies, has proposed building six hotels in China and Tibet in a deal that could be worth $135 million.

Intercontinental has said it plans to build five or six 1,000-room hotels at an estimated cost of $500 million, while Hyatt has announced an $800 million project calling for construction of 10,000 hotel rooms.

Lu said 100 cities and spots of historic interest have been opened to tourists recently, and added new hotels already are being built in more than 30 cities, including Peking, Shanghai and Canton.

"Efforts have been made to improve transport services," Lu said, with special inter-city trains now in service. Trains are running between Peking and the Great Wall, and new buses and air-conditioned cars have been made available to tourists, he said.

"Customs formalities have been simplified," Lu said, and schools have been opened "to train more people for the tourist trade."

He also said "hunting, camel riding, skiing and mountaineering will be included in future tourists' schedules."

Lu said China has signed tourism agreements with Romania and Mexico, and has sent missions to the United States and Britain, as well as to North Korea, Romania, Burma, and Thailand to learn about the tourist industry.

Patricia Harris Makes Many Changes At HUD

By DAVID E. ANDERSON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — From the beginning of her tenure as head of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, fiery and feisty Patricia Roberts Harris has been regarded as the most likely first casualty of Carter's Cabinet.

But Mrs. Harris, who nettled the powerful Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., at her confirmation hearings and has gone on quietly and sometimes noisily to play political hardball within the administration.

Analysis

Mrs. Harris was what Washington calls a "twofer" when she was nominated — both a woman and a black.

Her nomination to an agency that most officials saw as badly demoralized and grossly mismanaged, was denounced by mayors, urban leaders and others concerned with the problems of the cities.

Slowly, however, both through outspoken advocacy of HUD and her mastery of the complex web of housing legislation, Mrs. Harris has gained a constituency both in Congress and in the private sector.

Her primary task has been reorganization of the department, rocked by bribery scandals in the early 1960s, suspension of the low-income housing programs under former President Nixon and a regional organizational system that sometimes took as long as two years to approve a program.

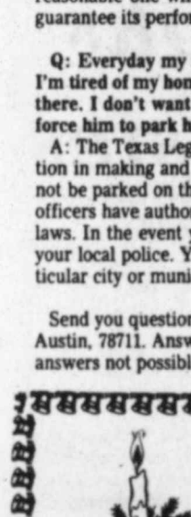

Among her earliest victories in the bureaucratic jungles was on a proposal to "cash out" $3 billion in HUD housing subsidies in favor of direct money grants from the Health, Education and Welfare Department.

The struggle was bitter, but Mrs. Harris was able to forge a successful alliance that ranged from builders to antipoverty groups to mayors — groups often at odds with each other in the debate over HUD policies — to turn back the proposal, at least for the time being.

Mrs. Harris' most public role has been as the director of the effort to forge a Carter administration "national urban policy."

The $8.3 billion dollar plan aimed at rebuilding America's decaying urban centers, announced in March of this year, was a delicate balance of proposals designed as much to give a piece of the action — including a piece of the fiscal pie — to every agency and constituency possible.

The urban policy, dubbed "A New Partnership to Conserve America's Communities," wound up with a mixed scorecard on Capitol Hill.

You and the Law

Presented by the State Bar of Texas

Q: If a emergency vehicle approaches a railroad crossing that is blocked by a slow-moving freight train, must the vehicle wait until the train passes or is there a law requiring the train to be broken to allow the emergency vehicle to proceed?

A: There is no statutory law in this state requiring trains to yield right-of-way to emergency vehicles. Ordinary vehicles and street cars are required to yield, but due to the impracticality and sometimes impossibility of trains to stop or decouple, neither state or local authorities have required them to do so.

There may be a common law duty of care on the part of the train engineers depending upon the particular circumstances. It would depend largely on whether the engineer had knowledge of the emergency vehicle and whether opportunity and practicality could enable him to stop or decouple.

Q: Recently I sold a TV set I had at a garage sale. It was operating perfectly when I sold it. Three days later the person who bought it from me brought it back claiming it wouldn't work and wanted his money back. Am I obligated to take the set back and return his money?

A: No, assuming that he can prove no fraud or misrepresentation on your part. If you did not expressly warrant or guarantee the performance of the set, no warranty will be implied. Because the set was used and the purchaser had reasons to know that it was used, he assumes the risk.

However, if you warranted the TV's performance, you will be liable until the warranty term specified had expired. If no specific time period was specified, a reasonable one will be implied. Warranting a product simply means that you guarantee its performance for a period of time.

Q: Everyday my neighbor parks one of his several cars in front of my house. I'm tired of my home being used as a parking lot. Besides, there is a bicycle lane there. I don't want to anger my neighbor, but isn't there some legal way I can force him to park his cars elsewhere?

A: The Texas Legislature has traditionally allowed municipalities wide discretion in making and enforcing parking regulations, but has said that cars should not be parked on the roadside and if practical to park off the road. Local police officers have authority to remove any vehicles violating either the state or local laws. In the event your neighbor is in violation of the above, you should notify your local police. You also should check into the local ordinances for your particular city or municipality. They may or may not cover this problem.

Send you question to "You and the Law," State Bar of Texas, P.O. Box 12487, Austin, 78711. Answers may appear in columns in hypothetical terms; personal answers not possible.

Veterinarian, Technicians Make Carriage For Two-Legged Dog

NEW YORK (UPI) — Christmas came early for "Emerald" — a two-legged dog abandoned at the nation's largest animal shelter, Dr. Charles W. Schaubhut reported this week.

The female canine with no front legs was given her name by workers at the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Then they puzzled over how to help the 16-pound bundle of pluck navigate better.

"Emerald" had hardened, thick skin over her breastbone. The callous was formed as she slid from here to there, humping up her middle and pushing with the rear legs.

She also sometimes stood on the rear legs and leaped, kangaroo fashion.

"Emerald apparently lost the legs in an accident and her owner kept her in," Schaubhut, Director of Inpatient Care, said.

"We figure she's three and the accident happened when she was about a year old.

"She was well cared for, and has lots of spirit. One theory is that she was an elderly person's pet and perhaps a nursing home wouldn't let her stay when the owner became ill. But we really don't know."

A newspaper story and television appeal failed to locate anyone who knew anything about Emerald. Happily, however, it led to a new home in a Manhattan apartment — to which the dog will be released in time for Christmas.

The veterinarian and surgical technicians, Louis McCoy and Jennifer Hattan, talked about Emerald's Christmas present while buckling her into the "carriage."

It doesn't look like anything you'd recognize since there's never been one before.

"The problem was one that hadn't been solved," Schaubhut said.

"We searched reports on rehabilitation techniques for disabled dogs and could find nothing for this particular handicap."

They tried shortening and building up a skateboard first, but that didn't work.

The third try produced the "carriage for Emerald" — basically a platform of redpainted wooden blocks. Attached to the underside are two small casters and two large ones. These enable the mostly black, short-haired dog to twirl or go in reverse or forward as fast or slow as her back legs go.

To the topside of the platform is fixed a lambswool-lined leather jacket that buckles across the back. "Emerald's legless front nestles there comfortably. And a leash can be attached.

Emerald showed visitors how well it works, first twirling and then scooting up and down the corridor.

She ran the fastest — and backwards — when her bright black eyes spotted a German Shepherd sauntering toward her at the other end of the narrow hall.

"It makes you feel good doing something like this," said McCoy — credited with the basic design for Emerald's contraption and maker of carriages for dogs with paralyzed back legs.

"We really didn't think we could."

APPEAL DENIED

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission denied Monday an appeal by Southern Union Gas Co. for interim rate relief for service to Rollingwood, Sunset Valley and West Lake Hills, cities on the fringe of Austin. A commission examiner noted that Southern Union had received a $701,485-a-year rate increase in November.

HY GARDENER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

Q: What was pitcher Sparky Lyle's reaction when he learned he was finally being traded by the Yankees to the Texas Rangers? — Oscar L., Knoxville, Tenn.

A: Sparky (who wanted to be traded because he didn't like owner George Steinbrenner) announced he's written his autobiography. And he's calling it "The Bronx Zoo!" (the borough in which Yankee Stadium is located).

Q: Does the new Polish Pope have a sense of humor? — Vladimir Z., Milwaukee.

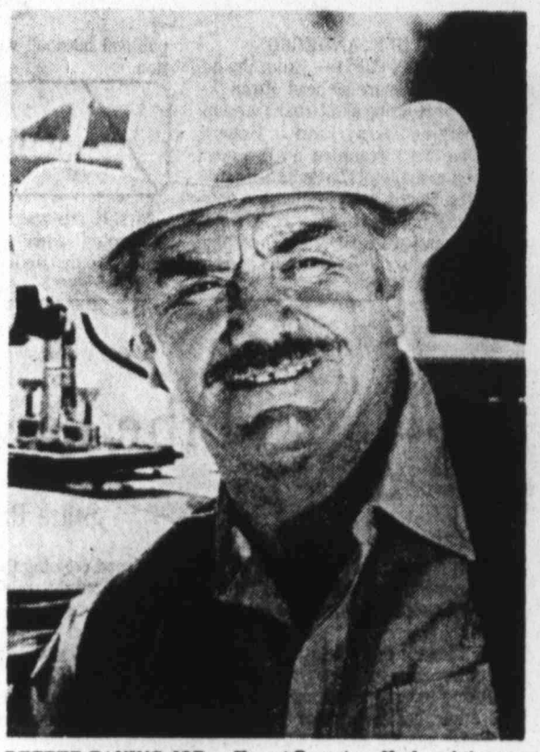

A: The Pontiff's first meeting with the press following his coronation is an example of his sense of humor. He cited Cardinal Mercier — who once said if St. Paul returned, he would become a newspaperman. "And I tell you that if St. Paul were alive today," Pope John Paul II observed, "he would go to Paolo Grassi, (head of the Italian Broadcasting Corp.) and ask him for more program time on TV."

Q: About the comment, "he drinks like a fish" — I wonder do fish really drink? — Elizabeth Trotter, Atlantic City, N.J.

A: No. They can't. Their gullets are so tightly constricted that little if any water trickles into their stomachs. The little water they need is primarily supplied by the moisture content in their food.

Q: I've enjoyed Ernest Borgnine's acting since his Oscar-winning performance in "Marty." And our kids enjoyed him in the TV series, "McHale's Navy." Was he ever really in the Navy? — Mrs. Walter McNulty, Lawrence, Mass.

A: Yes. Borgnine did a 10-year hitch as a gunner's mate. But he found the pay much better playing Lt. Commander McHale on TV than doing a job as a gob for Uncle Sam. About his true-to-life and very believable characterization in "Marty" (where he played a gentle but fat and lonely Bronx butcher), Ernie once told us: "I'm no playboy. But I'm not a slob either. Marty was just a role."

BETTER PAYING JOB — Ernest Borgnine: He found the pay in "McHale's Navy" a lot better than in Uncle Sam's Navy.

Q: What were the real first names of Groucho, Chico and Harpo Marx? — The Little Sisters, Long Island City, N.Y.

Q: I heard that a magazine came out a few months ago with a list of "110 Celebrities Who Most Love Themselves." Who made the Top? — Johnny C., Pittsburgh, Pa.

A: According to Forum Magazine, Muhammad Ali was No. 1 on the list. "Nobody speaks with more self-confidence and assurance than Ali," the voters decided. Howard Cosell was second, followed by Sylvester Stallone, Henry Kissinger, Barbra Streisand and Reggie Jackson.

Julia Grice Fills Books With Women's Fantasies

By HARRY ATKINS

DETROIT (AP) — When the great suburban dream becomes the dull reality of diapers and car pooling, millions of American women turn to those paperback romances for escape.

Julia Grice was different; she began writing them.

It was slow going at first — starting with light-paying confessions and "how to" pieces for obscure magazines.

But today, she has two novels in print, a third which will be published next spring and yet another coming in a year or so.

You can laugh at the paperback market if you like, but remember this: in 1976, U.S. softcover publishers issued more than 150 historicals. They sold 40 million copies — about two a second.

"My stuff isn't literature, we all know that," Mrs. Grice said recently. "It is escapist reading — reading to give people pleasure."

In most so-called histo-romances, a young and innocent heroine from a romantic, bygone era is gently raped and otherwise defiled while traveling to exotic places by steamboat, sailing vessel or covered wagon. They all have happy endings, however, as a soft-hearted Clint Eastwood-type rescues the sweet young thing.

In Mrs. Grice's latest epic, "Emerald Fire," raven-haired Emerald Regan is wrenched from enslavement on a Louisiana plantation and into a red-hot romance on the California Trail in 1847.

"A lot of women read four to six of these a week," Mrs. Grice said. "They're hooked on them, just like the soaps."

Mrs. Grice said her success comes in part from first-hand knowledge of her audience. "Cripe, I lived out there in suburbia. They were my neighbors," the 38-year-old writer said.

The past tense is no slip of the tongue. With her publishing success has come financial independence, and early this year she left her lawyer husband and their split-level home in suburban Rochester. She lives with her two sons, aged 12 and 9, in an Ann Arbor townhouse.

"After I left him I started to almost unravel myself, and I realized that one of the reasons I was able to write this kind of thing was that I was just starved for romance in my own marriage," Mrs. Grice said. "I was true-blue as a housewife, just like the women that are reading my books — most of them.

"I wasn't slipping around or anything. And I realized that was one of the reasons I left him," she continued. "I realized that I wanted to have a more satisfying relationship — and I didn't want to be slipping around."

Now that she's on her own, she has become highly organized and business-like about her work — complete with daily page quotas and advance preparation for novels that may be years off.

JULIA GRICE

"What I try to do is go to the library and find some of the writers that have been well-loved in the past," she said. "About a year ago I started to reread Pearl S. Buck.

"When I read, I try to ask myself, 'What makes this book so good?' and, if I'm losing interest, I try to figure out why."

But while she's writing for a mass market, Mrs. Grice does not consider her novels trashy. "If I do have a sex scene, I want it to grow out of the material. I want it to fit," she said.

"I've learned there are two kinds of fantasies that women have," Mrs. Grice said. "One is sex fantasies where the fantasy goes all the way through intercourse, and the other is what I call 'romantic fantasy.'

"I've met a lot of women who have told me they have these romantic fantasies — and I had a lot of them, too, when I was married. They're the kind where a woman would meet someone and he would fall in love with her. And she would go over these details and embellish them.

"And it would stop at the point where they go into the bedroom, because that wasn't the purpose of the fantasy," she said.

Strike Permission Given To Clerks

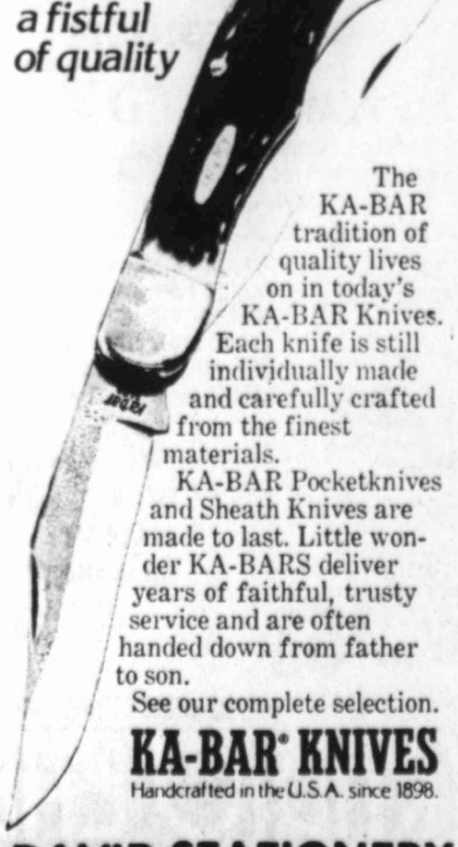

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal agency has given a railroad clerks' union permission to call a national strike Jan. 18 because of a breakdown in contract talks being held since the same union halted most rail freight traffic in a strike last September.

However, President Carter can order the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks to stay on the job for a new 60-day "cooling off" period. The National Mediation Board agreed Monday to let the union strike in 30 days if a national contract settlement is not reached with the industry.

GHOST OF CHRISTMAS PRESENT — Tiny Tim rides on shoulder of Bob Cratchit in this display based on the traditional view of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol." But the Ghost of Christmas Present would today find London much altered from that of Dickens' time. Today, the Cratchits have taken over. (AP Laserphoto)

London Holiday Scene Changed

By RICHARD BLYSTONE

LONDON (AP) — Bah Humbug yourself, Scrooge. The Cratchits have taken over.

Tiny Tim's got a free crutch from the National Health Service. There are preservatives in the plum pudding and televised holiday soccer matches in the living rooms of the poor.

Oh, it's a long way from perfect in the British welfare state. But the Ghost of Christmas Present today conducts a much altered London tour from the one he gave Charles Dickens's "covetous old sinner" Scrooge in the "Christmas Carol" of 1843.

No snow for one thing — or barely enough to frost a miser's heart. Dickens describes Bob Cratchit sledding through the banking district. This decade's usual allotment is a half-inch gray gruel, and so far this winter the London skies seem to be flakeless.

And the cold that gnawed poor Cratchit, crouched over his candle and his single coal? Well, the London Weather Center explains that the story was written at the end of a 300-year "Little Ice Age." The average December day these days gets up to 46 degrees Fahrenheit.

Anyhow there's a law now that says Scrooge or anyone else who runs an office has to keep a minimum 60.8 degrees Fahreneheit — cold for Americans but not so bad for the English who begin to stifle when the mercury passes 65.

Besides the climate shift, central heating and the automobile have done much to warm the capital's heart, say the weathermen.

A fund-raising van dragging a Christmas tree on a cart and filling the air with recorded song has taken the place of pink-cheeked carolers jumping up and down and beating their hands to keep warm.

Laser light beams, as palpable as red and green candy sticks, sweep over shoppers heads in teeming Oxford Street, visible for miles. Fog, the "palpable brown air" that Dickens described, has been mostly blown away by the Clean Air Act.

Since the act came into force in 1956, London's fogs have abated to a fifth of their former frequency, about a dozen a year. And they're not as unhealthy.

Dr. David Ball, air pollution scientist for the Greater London Council, says a reconstruction based on coal trade records, puts soot levels for Scrooge's London of 100 micrograms per cubic meter, compared to about 40 today, and sulfur dioxide at 160 micrograms compared to about 100 today.

"If I was Bob Cratchit I'd have old Scrooge in front of an industrial tribunal so fast it'd make your head swim," says one white-collar union member about the skinflint's personnel practices.

Indeed, Scrooge's counting house would be moaning like other small firms today about government red tape. And Scrooge, who fired Cratchit with no good reason, would be told to reinstate him with back pay.

The Scrooge of 135 years ago paid Bob 15 shillings (equivalent in today's buying power to about $26) a week and grudgingly granted him a single holiday — Christmas — calling it "a poor excuse for picking a man's pocket every 25th of December."

Kathie Dixon, researcher for the Association of Professional, Executive and Clerical Staff, figures her union would get Cratchit an average of $136 a week, with eight paid holidays and as many as six weeks vacation a year. "Most of our members have a 37-hour week and some have 35," she adds.

And if Cratchit 1978 were as poorly paid as his 19th-century ancestor, he would be eligible for an income supplement of $29 a week from the government, plus $30 family allowance for his five at-home children and $20 mobility allowance to help Tiny Tim get around.

He'd get free dentistry, eyeglasses, drugs, vitamins and milk. And his local government would probably pay all his rent and all but about 24 cents of his local taxes.

If the Cratchits still lived in the Camden Town section of North London they'd be paper-rich, with trendy young couples moving in on all sides, driving up property prices by redoing old houses.

Tiny Tim probably would be cured of his crippling illness, but if he didn't, there would be free medical care, braces and crutches. But with the logjam in the bureaucracy-plagued National Health Service, chances are 50-50 he'd wait more than a year for orthopedic surgery.

With all that, the social evils that spurred Dickens have not vanished. Every winter, pensioners die from cold. The Salvation Army still puts up 2,000 transients a night — although now it has to charge $1.50 for bed and breakfast from those who can pay.

The big event of the old Cratchits' Christmas was the plum pudding, labored and worried over for hours, with "a smell like an eating-house and a pastrycook's next door to each other, with a laundress's next to that."

Today's Christmas pudding, a confection of currants, raisins, suet, sugar, apples, breadcrumbs, flour, fruit peel, eggs, treacle, nuts and spices, is probably from a store and costs $2 a pound.

But it's served, as ever, with generous measures of brandy and good cheer.

Strike Halts Production Of Star-Studded Ads

NEW YORK (AP) — Will Bill Cosby run out of reasons for saluting moms? Will Catherine Deneuve need a new supply of perfume? Will the film in James Garner's camera be exhausted?

The production of new celebrity commercials has been halted until a strike between actors and advertisers is settled. Existing spots could be aired over and over and over again.

Seventy thousand members of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists and the Screen Actor's Guild went on strike early Tuesday. They are disputing new commercial fees and revisions of various conditions with the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers.

Most advertisers have a backlog of commercials that can be aired indefinitely in case the strike is prolonged. But some spots could become outdated and others can legally be shown only so long.

Most of the striking actors depend on the commercials for their bread and butter. But for the celebrity endorser, whose fees sometime exceed $500,000, the commercials are the icing on the cake.

John Wayne reportedly received $425,000 for scaring away headaches with Datril. Candice Bergen's deal with Cie perfume could bring her about $2 million during five years. Robert Blake was paid a rumored $400,000 for an STP commercial.

Carol Burnett was offered and turned down a $1 million Jello contract. Elizabeth Taylor was offered $750,000 for a Lincoln-Mercury ad that never materialized.

But there are thousands of other faces in television ads who go unrecognized by name. For these scale actors, the unions are seeking a 26 percent fee increase that would mean a $275 minimum per commercial for on-camera performances and $206 for voice-only spots. The agencies have offered a 10 percent increase.

"The strike has more of an effect on the scale actor than the celebrity," said Lloyd Kolmer, president of Kolmer Enterprises, which locates big-name celebrities for advertising endorsements. "If the big stars walk out, they are supporting the scale actors."

Kolmer said negotiations for celebrity talent will probably continue while the strike is on. Deals will be made, but the actual spots will not be shot unless the celebrity is willing to work on a closed set or out of the country.

Spirit Prevails Despite Thefts

MARTINEZ, Calif. (UPI) — Claudine Faria has shown that adversity cannot dampen her Christmas spirit.

Five years ago she strung light bulbs on the Christmas tree which grows in front of her home. They were stolen.

One day this week she woke before dawn and heard someone trying to saw down the tree. She called a neighbor and they approached the thief who fled in a van.

A young woman was arrested in a van a short time later and confessed trying to steal the tree. She told officers she wanted it for a poor friend.

Mrs. Faria said: "I couldn't believe it. People just don't do things like that. First they took the bulbs. Now they want the whole tree."

However, the spirit of the season prevailed — she refused to press charges against the woman.

Woman Has 21-Year-Old Son Jailed For Holiday Season

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An Indianapolis woman had her Christmas wish granted. Her 21-year-old son will spend the holidays in jail.

The woman, who said she "could not tolerate the kind of life my son is putting me through," had her son arrested in October after he admitted stealing $1,800 worth of stereo equipment from home.

She asked Municipal Court Judge Frank Huse to sentence her son for Christmas "and even more."

Huse, who asked that the mother and son remain anonymous, said he agonized over the decision.

"He's not all that bad," Huse said. "And I was thinking of placing him on probation, but I learned through records he violated his probation after getting a suspended sentence on a driving charge."

The 180-day sentence handed down Tuesday will run concurrently with another 180-day sentence for the probation violation, Huse said. The man will receive credit for 68 days already served in the Marion County Jail, the judge added.

The mother told Huse earlier that she just wants her son to grow up right and hoped her action would help. The man is the seventh of eight children.

The case attracted nationwide attention after an earlier Associated Press story. Huse said his mail came from many in favor of a stiff sentence, but others were dismayed by the mother's action.

An Indianapolis woman wrote that she wished her mother had taken the same action against her brother, "because within a month of every time he was released from prison, he was committing the same crime."

A prison inmate in Raleigh, N.C., wrote that the mother "has no idea what her son is being subjected to."

"It's a terrible thing to submit a young man to such a punishment," the inmate wrote.

A Sacramento mother of five wrote that she felt "a deep concern for this young man, who is just starting his life. I do hope, Judge Huse, that you will see he gets some help."

A former police officer from Arroyo Grande, Calif., wrote, "My hat is off to the woman who sent her son to jail. At his age, he needs a shock of some sort. As a former policeman, I've seen many a case when overprotection by parents ruins a juvenile's life."

The mother stood behind her son in the courtroom, but did not speak to him or Huse. After the sentencing, the young man turned, looked at his mother, smiled briefly and walked away.

Letter-Writing Santa Answers Every Child

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — As a business, Joseph Ryan's letter-from-Santa Claus venture is a flop. As a gesture of love, it's ITT, General Motors and Exxon all rolled into one.

Ryan, a 34-year-old electrician, had hoped to make a small profit by charging $2.50 for each handwritten Santa letter. The fee includes a two-page letter on special stationary with a North Pole postmark, plus the child's letter returned separately to parents as a keepsake.

So far, he has received 50 or 60 letters with checks enclosed, but his profits are being eaten up by all the letters that include no money.

Ryan refuses to disappoint a single child so he answers those letters, too, at his own expense.

"We saw it in our older children," he said. "They took (letters from Santa) back to their room and you could hear them screaming and talking about it. That kind of excitement you don't even get with a $100 present.

"I've always believed you've got to be able to dream. If it gets snuffed out too quickly, you become a practical person too soon."

Three years ago, Ryan came to Santa's rescue when his two daughters, Shelby, now 8, and Tonya, now 7, began to have the usual childhood doubts.

Late that Christmas Eve, he crept onto his porch, dressed in appropriate attire, and jingled bells at the window of his daughters' room. Then he opened the window, crawled through and chatted with them.

"I told them I was going downstairs to drop off the presents. Then I went outside their window again, jingled the bells and went off into the woods while the kids watched at the window."

That restored belief, although Ryan knows the day of reckoning is not far off.

But the letter-writing project reflects Ryan's desire for "a kind of slow transition" for his daughters.

That way, Ryan figures, "they'll have that feeling of wanting to give, that they can be a Santa Claus. ... Then they'll realize that 'Santa' is really another name for love."

Bank Robber Flees In Wheelchair

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man in a wheelchair, packing a .45-caliber automatic, robbed a Crocker National Bank of $8,005, police say.

The man, wearing an arm sling and neck brace, was pushed into the bank by a companion Monday afternoon. He pulled a gun from the sling and ordered two tellers to "put it all" inside plastic bags, officials said Tuesday.

After collecting their loot, the two men abandoned the wheelchair and fled from the bank in a stolen car. Police recovered the car, the arm sling and brace, but the robbers escaped.

British Troops Patrol Airport

LONDON (AP) — Troops armed with automatic rifles and backed by tanks patrolled London's Heathrow airport Tuesday and guarded parking lots as part of Britain's all-out campaign to stop a new wave of bombings by the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

Police leave was canceled, and all officers were working a 12-hour day, after nine bombs blew up in London and five other cities Sunday and Monday, injuring 14, none seriously.

THE CAPITOL

Writer Gives Solons Tips On Speeches

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — A glamorous politician — a senator, maybe even a president — strides to the podium in a small-town gymnasium and waits for the cheering to stop.

"I want you to know how pleased I am to be in Midville," says Glamorous Politician. "Now, how many of you think the Hedgehogs are going to win their 10th straight on Saturday?"

The crowd goes wild. Everyone in town is rooting for the local high school team to win its 10th straight.

"What a guy!" the folks are thinking. "This Glamorous Politician must be some kind of regular guy if he roots for the Hedgehogs."

What the audience really has heard is the work of a good speechwriter.

Paul Theis spent many years as a good speechwriter for Republican members of Congress and for President Gerald R. Ford. Theis recently wrote a quick guide for Capitol Hill speechwriters.

Among the points to keep in mind:

—"Is the local football or baseball team on an extended winning streak? Properly worked into the speech, local references show that the senator or representative has taken the time to find out something about the audience, and few things are more flattering, or warm up an audience faster."

—"Don't try to cover more than two or three main points in the speech."

—"One caution, when quoting someone else, it's best to quote a higher authority than the member of Congress, unless there's a specific reason to do otherwise."

—"Properly used, humor is perhaps the best weapon there is to soften up an audience, especially is the humor shows the audience that the speaker did his homework. In using humor, keep these points in mind: unless your boss is a good storyteller, skip the long involved jokes. Use short, punchy one-liners. If possible, make the speaker the butt of the jokes. Never use cruel or unkind humor against anyone. Avoid the use of stories about race or religion."

Poking Fun At Weather

The Democrats recently held a convention in Memphis. Before choosing the Tennessee city, they looked at a number of possibilities, including Honolulu and Seattle.

The day most delegates arrived in Memphis the temperature was 75. But then clouds rolled in and it turned sharply colder.

By the next morning it was cold and a steady rain was falling.

Said a delegate from Seattle to the Western Caucus: "Let me remind you that the reason we are not in Seattle is that we wanted to avoid the cold rain in the Northwest."

Ambitious Stevens

On the Republican side, Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska says his ambition is to become Senate majority leader and he hopes to accomplish it by 1983.

Stevens now is assistant minority leader. To realize his ambition will require a lot of Republican victories in Senate races in 1980 and 1982, since the 1978 election left the Democrats with a 59 to 41 majority.

It also would require that the man ahead of Stevens, Minority Leader Howard H. Baker of Tennessee, realize his ambition, which is to be elected president in 1980.

Is Stevens supporting Baker for the GOP nomination? He has only one commitment:

"I'm an A.B.C. man."

What's that?

"Anybody But Carter."

Divorce Kit Sales Validated By Court

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The sale of "do-it-yourself divorce kits" by non-lawyers in Missouri has been validated by the state Supreme Court, but the court ruled that the non-lawyers cannot give legal advice.

Monday's ruling permits William Thompson and his Portland, Ore., Divorce Services Inc. to resume sale of his $55 kit in Missouri as he has in other states. The quarter-inch thick kit contains forms to take a divorce before the court, statements on Missouri law, information on the legalities of divorce, outlines of court testimony and information on procedures.

Research Programs Cut Down Area Maize Pests

By ROBERT L. HANEY
Texas Agricultural Experiment Station

Vast fields of important single-plant crops in Texas, such as grain sorghum, offer ideal conditions for the buildup of incredible numbers of destructive insects.

To counter this threat, phenomenal research progress within the past decade has provided the basis for development of successful sorghum pest management programs.

Called integrated pest management (IPM), these strategies have incorporated selected chemical, cultural, and natural methods of pest control.

IPM is based on identification and control of the "key" pests, which in Texas are the greenbug and the sorghum midge.

The first outbreak of the greenbug in sorghum occurred in 1968 in almost all sorghum production areas of the United States. IPM of this pest was designed to make maximum use of all control technology.

Dosage rate manipulation of several approved insecticides achieved the desired ecological selectivity. Extremely low doses of insecticide (less than 1/10 pound of active ingredient per acre) achieved greenbug control, yet spared most of the naturally occurring beneficial species.

If properly timed, based on established economic thresholds, only one insecticide application is needed, and resurgence of the greenbug is prevented by parasites and predators.

In spite of this knowledge, high rates of persistant systemic insecticides were relied on by producers to control the pest. These treatments were highly effective, Teetes says, but broadly toxic and disruptive of the ecology. In a 4-year period insecticide resistance developed in some areas and now hampers the use of selective insecticide rates.

Increasing insecticide resistance called for new control methods. One of the more significant control tactics is the use of resistant varieties or, in the case of sorghum, resistant hybrids.

Teetes stresses that plant resistance is but one of the available control tactics. However, it has a number of advantages: it's economical; it's specific for the problem; it leaves no harmful residue in food or the environment; it is not harmful to pollinating or other beneficial insects; it does not (or only minimally) disturb nature's balance between destructive insects and their natural enemies; and, it's compatible with biological, chemical, cultural, and other control methods.

The fact that plant resistance is compatible with other control tactics is the main reason it's so important to interated pest management.

For example, plant resistance to insect damage may alter the effectiveness of insecticides or permit reducing or even omitting treatments, suppress numbers so they never reach an economically damaging level or be tolerant of the insect attack and still be able to bear profitable yields. Plant resistance may also slow the rate of increase of the pest and permit a buildup of natural biological control agents or, influence pest density, thereby providing a food supply reservoir for beneficial organisms useful later in the growing season in the same or neighboring crops.

An example is the beneficials which develop to abundant numbers in sorghum and later move to cotton.

Soon after 1968, Station scientists found sources of greenbug resistance in a number of sorghums, which were released to commercial seed companies. This resistance has meant direct savings of $20 million to $54 million a year to producers and, indirectly, to the public.

So the initial problem with greenbugs was eased on High and Rolling Plains; the greenbug-resistant sorghum hybrids outyielded susceptible hybrids by 900 pounds to the acre where greenbugs were a production factor.

But Texas' problems with the greenbug were by no means over. The greenbug resistance that solved Plains producers' problems was not in hybrids best adapted for Central and South Texas.

The complicating issues were adaptability and the fact that the greenbug-resistant hybrids were susceptible to downy mildew and head smut. Consequently, recent research efforts hav concentrated on developing sorghum parental lines resistant to downy mildew, head smut, and greenbugs and adapted to South and Central Txas. Such parental lines are being developed and released by Experiment Station sorghum breeders, Drs. Jerry W. Johnson and Fred R. Miller.

The combination of greenbug resistance from a female parent and downy mildew resistance and adaptability from a male parent produces an acceptable hybrid for Central and South Texas.

Adapted greenbug-resistant, downy-mildew, and head-smut resistant sorghum hybrids will be available commercially in 1979, and additional improved hybrids will be available in the future.

One of the factors that makes possible the rapid development of greenbug-resistant sorghums is that the resistant character is dominant and simply inherited. This allows flexibility in its use for combining the greenbug-resistance factor with other desirable characteristics in hybrid combinations.

Hydrasieve Conserves Pesticides

COLLEGE STATION (Special) — Cattle feedlot managers can save money and reduce the amount of disposable pesticide by using a Hydrasieve in the dipping system.

"The Hydrasieve is a static screen that removes coarse solids from the cattle dip solution," explains Dr. John M. Sweeten, agricultural engineer in waste management with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. "This allows the solution to be used for longer periods of time before accumulation of solids forces replacement of the insecticide solution."

An extension result demonstration using a Hydrasieve was conducted last summer at Cactus Feeders, Inc. near Dumas. It was the first such study with the pesticide prolate.

During the field study, an average of 9,600 head were dipped in three complete vat cycles. Before Hydrasieve installation, an average of only 4,750 head could be dipped before vat recharging was necessary, notes Sweeten. At present prices, it takes about $1,200 worth of pesticide to recharge a 5,000-gallon cattle dipping vat. Vat replenishment should be about the same with or without the Hydrasieve.

"Results showed that use of the Hydrasieve will save 13 cents per head dipped at a projected use level of 8,000 head," says the Texas A&M University System engineer.

"Assuming that 7,500 head per month are dipped, the Hydrasieve and pumping system should be paid for in eight months," believes Sweeten. "Afterwards, the 13 cents per head saving is extra profit to feedlot owners.

"The other benefit of the Hydrasieve is a 50 percent reduction in the amount of insecticide solution to be disposed of by evaporation and ultimately, land disposal of residue," explains Sweeten. "This 50 percent reduction figure is corroborated both by Hydrasieve tests with prolate and by earlier experiments with coumaphos cattle dip."

Extension agricultural engineers at Texas A&M University have developed a blueprint on how to install a Hydrasieve and pump assembly adjacent to a cattle dipping vat. Copies of the plan are available at county Extension offices in Texas.

Scabies Outbreaks Decrease In U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Outbreaks of a skin disease called scabies, which is caused by tiny mites, continue to be reported but are not so frequent as they were a year ago, says the Agriculture Department.

Last month 12 outbreaks were reported in six states: California, Colorado, Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Texas, the department said Tuesday.

Those were down from 13 outbreaks in October and from 31 in November of last year, officials said.

In the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, scabies was reported in 313 outbreaks, compared to 136 in 1976-77.

Teetes emphasizes this point because it explains one of the problems in developing midge resistance, which is not dominantly inherited. Resistance to the midge is recessively inherited, and both parents must have it.

Preliminary research on midge resistance indicates that antibiosis (bad effect on the insect when it eats the plant) is the major resistance factor, but levels of non-preference (insect prefers other sorghums) are also present.

"We have been evaluating experimental hybrids for 2 years and are confident we're making progress," Teetes says. "As a point of comparison based on my observations, under unnaturally high midge density, the best midge-resistant sorghum hybrids set about 50 percent seed when susceptible hybrids set none.

"During 1979, we will start a large-scale hybrid evaluation program, and by 1980 we should have a good idea what the best hybrids are for future development of midge resistance," Teetes concluded.

Herber Named County Agent

FLOYDADA (Special) — Stephen R. Herber has been named county extension agent for Floyd County effective Feb. 16. Herber, who is presently Crosby County agent, will succeed Doyle G. Warren, who transferred to Hildalgo County on Dec. 1.

Herber, a native of Texline, received a bachelor's degree in agricultural business and economics from West Texas State University in 1974. He completed his master's degree in agricultural education at Texas Tech University last August.

Herber joined the Extension Service in 1974 as assistant county agent in Floyd County. He was named county agent for Crosby County on Jan. 1, 1977.

During his tenure in Crosby County, Herber was named by the Jaycees in 1977 as an Outstanding Young Man of America. He is a member of the Texas County Agricultural Agents Association, the National Association of County Agricultural Agents and the Crosby County Chamber of Commerce.

Herber is married to the former Sue Jan Robertson.

U.S. Storage Of Grain Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers have stored about 22 percent more grain under the government's three-year reserve program than administration planners originally set as a minimum goal.

The Agriculture Department said Tuesday that as of Dec. 15 about 1.22 billion bushels of feed grain and wheat were stored in the program. Initially, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland set one billion bushels as the minimum target.

Additional corn for the reserve was cut off Nov. 30 because it appeared earlier the goal would be reached. However, reports from county and state offices continue to be tabulated, meaning that the USDA issues revised figures each week on how much grain is stored.

Under the program, farmers can store the grain for as long as three years or until prices go up enough to trigger release of the grain for sale.

Ray Fitzgerald, administrator of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said that as of mid-month the reserve included about 658 million bushels of corn, 407.8 million bushels of wheat, 36.8 million bushels of barley, 40.9 million bushels of oats and 75.6 million bushels of sorghum.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Soybean futures prices managed a modest gain on the Chicago Board of Trade Tuesday while grain futures prices drifted slightly lower.

All commodity prices were slightly lower throughout most of the session until late heavy commercial buying turned soybeans around to the upside.

The weekly Agriculture Department export inspection figures released after the close of the previous session were slightly supportive of corn and soybean prices but mildly bearish on wheat.

At the close soybeans were unchanged to 4½ cents a bushel higher with January contracts quoted at $7.02½; wheat was ¾ to 2¼ cents lower, December $3.73; corn was ¼ to ¾ cent lower, December $2.19¾ and oats were 1¾ to 3 cents lower, December $1.28¼.

Couple Offers Tape Reward

LITTLETON, Colo. (UPI) — Burglars during the past year have taken bicycles, jewel cases and antique guns from Larry and Debbie Fail, but they are most concerned with a reel of video tape.

The tape was made of their wedding in Denver last June 9.

Whoever broke into their house between Dec. 12 and Dec. 16 also took their video recorder-player. The recorder-player is worth much more than the tape, but the couple is offering a $200 reward for the wedding video.

Larry Fail said he is also offering a $1,000 reward for the return of items taken in this month's burglaries and two previous burglaries this year.

The couple has lost jewel cases, bicycles, guns, antique guns and other items, but the Fails are mainly concerned with the wedding tapes.

"After all, you only get married once," said Mrs. Fail.

Louisiana Pay Calls Increase Five Cents

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Louisiana's traditional 5-cent pay phone fee — last in the nation — has been eliminated as part of a $4.4 million rate increase granted South Central Bell Telephone Co. by the Louisiana Public Service Commission.

Calls in Louisiana will be going to a dime. The company had asked to increase the toll to 25 cents. The 5-cent call was instituted in the 1920s so rural and low-income persons who didn't have telephones in their homes could make calls.

Civil Rights Suit Filed By Inmate

SAN ANGELO (UPI) — A man serving 15 years in prison for attempted aggravated assault has filed a $500,000 federal civil rights suit against Reagan County claiming conditions at the county jail were inadequate.

Joshua Van Buren Coefield, formerly of Big Lake, now is serving time on the assault conviction in the Texas Department of Corrections' Tennessee Colony. He was jailed in the Reagan County facility from late 1977 to early 1978 and alleges in the suit, filed tuesday, that the jail lacks proper drinking facilities, serves inadequate meals, lacks exercise and medical facilities and has an inadequate number of guards.

Defendants in the suit are Reagan County Sheriff James L. Proffitt and county commissioners, Lester Ralliff, Robert Ferguson, Raphell Dusing and Wayne Dolan.

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecast for Thursday predicts an area of flurries in parts of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming and Utah. Areas of snow, rain or flurries are predicted for parts of states in the northeastern portion of the nation. (AP Laserphoto Map)

Lubbock Man Arrested In Shooting Incident

A 25-year-old Lubbock man was arrested about 1:30 a.m. today on suspicion of attempted murder after he allegedly shot at a Tech coed's car and forced it off the road at 19th Street and Avenue X.

A policeman said he watched as the suspect, traveling on a high-powered motorcycle, appeared to shoot at the car, forcing it off the road where it struck a stop sign and a fire plug.

The driver of the car, a 19-year-old Tech freshman from Dallas, was not injured, reports show.

Police say a gun was not found on the suspect, but a holstered knife was found inside the man's boot.

In a reported theft, Rick Michael Cade, manager of Mama's Pizza at 1309 University Ave., said that for the past several days his daily receipts have been coming up short, and that Wednesday the missing funds totaled more than $500. No arrests had been made this morning in connection with the report.

A 72-year-old man was taken to the county jail about 3:30 p.m. Tuesday after he allegedly attempted to shoplift $7.51 in groceries from a supermarket at 30th Street and Avenue H.

Reports show a store employee watched the elderly man put the items in his coat pockets. He was arrested when he walked out of the store.

Police this morning were seeking three suspects who forced their way into a 71-year-old man's car and ordered him to drive to East Lubbock before striking him on the head and taking $11 cash and six gasoline credit cards.

Theron E. Milam said he was getting into his car on the parking lot of South Plains Mall, 6002 Slide Road, about 12:15 p.m. when the trio also got into his car.

He said the black man who got into the front seat held his right hand in his jacket pocket and pointed it at Milam, telling him to drive or he would get hurt.

Milam told officers he followed the apparently armed man's instructions to the Coronado Apartments, East 26th Street and Quirt Avenue, where the man told Milam to stop the car.

After parking the vehicle, Milam said, the two suspects in the back seat grabbed him from behind, hit him over the head with an unknown object and held him while the man in the front seat took the cash and cards from Milam's pocket.

He said the trio then jumped out of the car and fled on foot behind the buildings.

The owner of an engineering company told police Tuesday that burglars made off with $8,800 worth of electrical and mechanical tools from his North Avenue H firm early Tuesday.

Howard E. Stuller said the lower portion of a metal sliding door at Stuller Engineering and Marketing Co., 502 N. Ave. H, had been pried and the door then pushed open to make way for a vehicle onto which the tools were loaded.

Carol Whitson also reported a substantial loss of household furnishings to police Tuesday. She told officers that $2,663 worth of property, including a dishwasher, water heater and four toilets, were taken from the 3111 78th St. residence.

Barbara J. Castleberry said that $450 cash was taken from her club at 501 Amarillo Road early Tuesday. She told officers the burglars pried the front door of her office to get to the cash, $350 of which was stored in a bank bag and the remaining $100 being taken from a vending machine.

Frank L. Ortega said the padlock was pried from the door of his 312 E. 34th St., No 26, apartment and a $227 television, $38 roaster oven and $13 clock were stolen from the residence.

Hilda J. Ponce said that while she was running errands Tuesday morning, her purse was stolen from the cab of the pickup truck she was driving. She said the handbag contained $130 cash and credit cards.

Congress Urged By Lawyers To Shield Against Searches

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is being urged by news media lawyers to shield all citizens not suspected of crimes, rather than just writers, from unannounced searches by police.

If only reporters and scholars are protected, "many courts will look with a jaundiced eye at what will appear to be special treatment for those who make a living by writing," a Senate panel was told Tuesday.

Edward O. DeLaney of Indianapolis, counsel for Investigating Reporters and Editors Inc., added, however, that the organization's members "would not reject the benefits of a bill designed only to benefit the press or other writers."

Delaney said the organization he represents is made up of more than 500 editors and reporters with a special interest in investigative reporting. He said its purpose is to educate journalists and others on the subject.

Delaney testified before the Senate subcommittee on the Constitution, which is considering a Carter administration proposal to bar most unannounced searches of newsrooms.

The Carter proposal stops short of barring similar searches in other offices or in homes.

Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., chairman of the subcommittee, and other senators have introduced legislation along the same lines but applying to all persons not suspected of a crime instead of just to writers.

The proposals are in response to a Supreme Court decision May 31 upholding a surprise search of the office of the Stanford University student newspaper by police armed with a warrant. The police were looking for photographs of a demonstration in which nine policemen had been injured.

Jerome B. Falk Jr., who was the lawyer for the Stanford Daily, told the subcommittee the decision had "awesomely sweeping" impact not only on the freedom of the press but on the privacy rights of other sectors of society.

Falk said the impact was particularly severe in regard to places such as lawyers' or doctors' offices, where information relating to numerous persons is kept.

Philip Heymann, assistant attorney general in charge of criminal prosecutions, said the Justice Department was still looking at the possibility of extending coverage to doctors and lawyers, but had found "unexpected difficulties" in doing so.

The department contends the constitutional power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce gives it the authority to legislate in regard to newsroom searches by state and local police.

But Heymann said it is "at least highly uncertain" whether Congress has the power to regulate other searches by local and state authorities. Bayh and others have maintained that it does.

Bayh suggested that limiting the legislation to newsrooms and doctors' and lawyers' offices might be a possible middle ground. A subcommittee source said a compromise along these lines was expected to be explored with the administration.

Honest Teen-Ager Gets $100 Reward

By ESTHER LONGORIA
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Winona Flynn can tell you that honesty is the best policy, and she's got $100 to prove it.

Miss Flynn, 15, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Flynn of Route 10, Lubbock, received a $100 bill Tuesday night for returning a wallet which contained more than $600.

The Atkins Junior High ninth-grader had been walking along the mall area of the Briercroft Shopping Center Tuesday afternoon when she spotted a black billfold lying on a patio chair.

"I immediately opened it, and there were credit cards galore. I started crying, too, because it upset me that someone had lost so many credit cards," Miss Flynn said. "I then closed it and took it to my mom."

When Mrs. Flynn began rummaging through the billfold for the owner's identification, she realized that there was more than valuable credit cards in it — there also was $660 in cash.

"We found the owner's business card in it and decided we had to get his wallet back to him somehow," the teen-ager said.

The Flynns began calling Harold Giese, manager of a gift shop in the shopping center, and finally reached him at 4:30 p.m.

Giese was thrilled that his wallet had been found. "If you ever heard of a prayer answered, this was it. It was quite a sensation," Giese said.

"I normally don't carry this much money," he said, adding that he accidentally had left the wallet lying on a table while talking to a salesman.

The businessman told the teen-ager that he wanted to reward her for her honesty and handed her a $100 bill.

"I was stunned and told him I couldn't take that kind of money," Miss Flynn said, "but he insisted."

"She deserved the $100. She didn't have to do it and I appreciated it," Giese said.

Now that the teenager is $100 richer, what does she plan to do with the money?

"I'll be buying some Christmas presents for my family," Miss Flynn said with a laugh.

Lines Severed In East Texas

ATHENS (AP) — A spokesman for striking East Texas telephone workers says there was no connection between the strike and the severing of three Gulf States-United Telephone Co. cables.

Service to about 250 customers in Anderson County was interrupted for 12 hours until 1:30 p.m. Monday. The utility posted a $2,500 reward claiming the cables were probably cut with a hacksaw.

James Sanson, of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers local 1506, charged Tuesday night the phone company dramatized the cable problem.

"It's nothing unusual for a cable to get cut," he said. "I've seen pedestals (residential connections for underground cables) get shot, but these things never make the newspapers.

"It's unfortunate from the union's point of view."

Sanson said more than 400 union members all over East Texas walked out Monday morning after contract negotiations broke down last Thursday.

Jim Batten, the company's public relations director, said 344 of the 600 employees represented by the union went on strike, but said "a small percentage" returned to work Tuesday.

Company officials refused to define "a small percentage."

Renewal Agency Awaits Civic Center Motel Plans

By RHONA SCHWARTZ
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A Henderson developer has a month to tell Urban Renewal Agency commissioners whether he will build a Holiday Inn on a five-acre tract of land near the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

The agency's board of commissioners Tuesday said Billy Roy Wilder, who stands to lose $13,000 in forfeiture money if the deal is not finalized, must tell the board by Feb. 22 whether he will purchase the land at Ninth Street and Avenue Q.

Certified public accountants authorized by the Holiday Inn organization already have done survey work on the site and sent a report to the hotel's home office in Memphis two weeks ago, according to board member Robert Stack, deputy director of urban renewal. The board expects to have a definite answer on the sale by Feb. 16, the date of the next regular board meeting.

During its regular monthly meeting, the board also signed a contract with J.V. Roberts of Plainview for property directly west of the IBM building, part of the redevelopment project of the area destroyed by the 1970 tornado.

Roberts plans to build an office building here with a branch of the federal General Services Administration as the principal tenant. The transaction, however, is contingent upon GSA's inspection of the site, Stack said.

The building also would house another 7,000-8,000 square feet for other tenants, but no construction plans yet have been drawn. The land bid is for between $150,000 and $200,000, Stack said.

MERRY CHRISTMAS — Season's Greetings — MERRY CHRISTMAS

EXPENSIVE SANDWICH STOP — Curious Staten Island youngsters peer into windows of a delicatessen where earlier five bandits waylaid a team of Wells Fargo guards and stole at least $1 million in cash from their armored truck. Police said the Wells Fargo truck had made pick-ups at several banks on Staten Island — a borough of New York City — and was heading for the Federal Reserve Bank in Manhattan when the guards stopped at the delicatessen. (AP Laserphoto)

Bandits Take $1 Million From Wells Fargo Truck

NEW YORK (AP) — A $1 million heist staged at a Staten Island delicatessen may well be Wells Fargo's greatest loss in a holdup. It was certainly its most expensive lunch tab.

It was the second million-dollar-plus theft here in eight days. On Dec. 11, at least five men raided a Lufthansa German Airlines hangar at Kennedy Airport and escaped with more than $5 million in cash and $860,000 in jewelry. Police report no trace of those bandits.

William Cole, senior vice-president of the Wells Fargo Armed Service Corp., put the amount stolen Tuesday "in excess of $1 million." He added, "This may be the largest loss the armored division has ever suffered."

The FBI announced it was entering the investigation because of the likelihood the stolen money was insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Three Wells Fargo guards had spent Tuesday morning making cash pickups at local banks. Before taking the money to the Federal Reserve Bank in Manhattan, they made their usual lunchtime stop at the Food and Things deli along the waterfront near the Verrazano Narrows Bridge. It was about 12:30 p.m.

Guards Richard Henrich, 54, and Fred Caputo, 33, left Thaddeus Gregorek minding the truck and went into the deli to order lunch. That's when four bandits invaded the store.

Linda Duchi remembered chatting with one of the Wells Fargo men. "All of a sudden, this guy grabbed me from behind and he pushed me," she said. "He pushed me to my knees and handcuffed me."

She quoted another gunman as saying, "If you guys want to have a merry Christmas, you'll stay down — and don't look."

The bandits disarmed the guards, then handcuffed them along with employees and customers.

A police department spokesman, who asked not to be named, said initial reports from witnesses indicated five thieves — the four in the deli and one outside — had been involved but that detectives later were looking for seven holdup men.

He said he did not know what led investigators to think there might have been more than five.

The two guards, four employees and five other customers were forced to go to a back room and a bathroom and kneel down. They were warned that if they made any noise "we're going to kill you."

The bandits, unlike the Lufthansa robbery gang, wore no masks, but one was disguised with a false beard. The bearded one took the truck keys and walked out to the truck, surprising Gregorek.

Gregorek was also handcuffed and his eyes were taped. One or two gunmen drove the truck a short distance away and then helped the others load money bags into a blue and white late-model Cadillac.

One of the deli employees, Scott Elliott, said he triggered a silent alarm by snatching all the $10 bills out of the cash register just before he kneeled down.

However, he said, it was 10 to 15 minutes before police arrived.

Consumer, Labor Groups Encouraged By Meeting

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer and labor groups say they believe they are making progress in their effort to persuade administration inflation fighters to launch a direct attack on the costs of such major items as food, energy and health care.

Representatives of 45 groups came away from a White House meeting Tuesday saying they were encouraged, although they still could not predict whether the administration will take their advice.

The coalition asked for direct government action to restrict price increases for food, energy, housing and health care, four areas that they said are beyond the reach of traditionel anti-inflation approaches.

Gar Alperovitz, an economist with the Exploratory Project for Economic Alternatives, said inflation in the four areas is running at 11.6 percent, while the rest of the economy is at 6.1 percent.

"Neither budget-cutting nor regulation cutbacks can explain the differences of five points in the necessities of life," he said.

Alperovitz said Carter told the group he "welcomed our support" and "he said he was establishing some working groups in this area."

"I think it's fair to say this group will strongly support concrete measures to control sectoral inflation," he said.

Tom Hayden, the former anti-war activist who now represents the California Campaign for Economic Democracy, said Carter's chief inflation strategist, Alfred Kahn, revealed there will be "an increased commitment in subsidies to solar energy."

Large Auction Houses Embroiled In Feud

By MARIA PALLAIS

NEW YORK (AP) — Two of New York's biggest auction houses are embroiled in an Old World feud, fought with high prices, dazzling art, and new marketing devices.

There is much at stake in this "gentlemen's war," when the gavel bangs down in the New York salesrooms of "modern" Sotheby Parke Bernet or "conservative" Christie's.

The two houses have met before on European battlefields. Now the American art market has become worth $150 million a year in sales — and millions in profits. There is so much activity in auction houses that the New York Times has a special "auction room" reporter.

Both houses trade on the glamor of the art world, using every means to compete. They advertise sales as if they were Broadway openings, print glossy catalogues that are available for $5 or $10, stage previews and cocktail parties at which prospective buyers can meet the auctioneers in one of the 11 galleries at Sotheby Parke Bernet's Madison Avenue offices, or at Christie's smaller Park Avenue ones.

Earlier this year, at Christie's, a Gutenberg Bible fetched $2.2 million, a world record auction price for a book. Last season, Sotheby Parke Bernet got $2,735,000 for a collection of impressionist and contemporary art assembled by Californian Sydney Brody.

For decades, New York has been the center of the art market. Today, with the dollar losing some of its might as an international currency, art dealers from abroad jostle with each other in New York, then do very well with their merchandise back home.

"Since the devaluation of the dollar, Japanese and German dealers come to all auctions in New York and later sell the pieces for a higher price abroad," said Gray Boone, editor of The Gray Letter, an art-trade publication. "That is pushing the American market."

Sotheby Parke Bernet has been in New York since 1964, when the prestigious art auction house Sotheby's of London paid $1.5 million for Parke Bernet, an American firm that was barely surviving. It was one of Sotheby's riskiest buys, but it paid off.

Sotheby Parke Bernet's size has increased tenfold, and figures provided by the company show sales this last season (1977-1978) in North America at $112 million. Worldwide sales increased 47 percent, to $302 million, in the same season.

With a reputation for recognizing quality art and with its staff of highly trained British art experts, Sotheby Park Bernet Inc. established itsef as the leader.

Meanwhile, its aristocratic rival in London, Christie's, had been keeping a small office in New York since the late 1950s. It wasn't until the spring of 1977 that it opened a salesroom in New York.

The newcomer is doing well. Its first season's sales here were $33 million, and it expects to make $1 million profit this year. But Sotheby Parke Bernet remains the leader, in profits and crowds — about 300,000 people are said to attend its galleries every year.

Christie's tries to capitalize on its smaller size. In a sales pitch similar to one it uses in Europe, it claims it can give more personalized attention to the cultivated seller and buyer.

Christie's traditionally has catered to the British aristocracy, which is believed to own some of the most valuable works of art in the world. Still, some argue that its elitist attitude may have caused it to lose major sales from "nouveau riche" collectors.

Sotheby's of London and its American subsidiary, on the other hand, have always adopted a more daring approach to the auction business.

With Peter Wilson as its chairman, Sotheby's launched a cigarette brand of its own — an idea that died quickly — and has set up salesrooms in such places as Monaco and Hong Kong. Years ago, it began selling such "collectibles" as dolls, antique dresses, toys and photos — a market that is among the fastest growing in the American art world. Today, even Christie's sells collectibles.

Sotheby's also has pioneered the sale of art nouveau pieces, which combine decorative and artistic values.

In 1968, Sotheby Parke Bernet opened "PB 84" in Manhattan to cater to budget-minded decorators. Now David Bathurst, president of Christie's in New York, says a new salesroom, Christie's East, will open this spring to auction less expensive objects.

Christie's has found other ways to make its presence felt.

Until this year, Sotheby Parke Bernet didn't charge a fee to the buyer of a work of art; it would only charge the seller a commission of between 12.5 percent and 20 percent, maintaining that American dealers and collectors "weren't ready" for the buyer's commission.

But when it opened in Manhattan, Christie's followed the European custom and charged 10 percent to the seller and 10 percent to the buyer. Just last month, Sotheby Park Bernet reversed itself and its executives announced they would begin charging a buyer's commission and would reduce the seller's commission to 10 percent.

Sotheby Park Bernet president John Marion said the decision was made in the face of New York's increasing cost of living. The company, he said, wanted "to further benefit sellers and potential sellers, and to encourage the flow of art property to the American market."

But Christie's could not help crowing about it — in a statement that let slip the true intensity of the competition between the two firms.

"We can only assume," Christie's said, "that it is Christie's success in New York that has led our competition to reverse their widely publicized notion that the buyer's premium we introduced would be as popular in America as the Stamp Act and to adopt the practice they characterized only 18 months ago as un-American."

Nippon Steel, China Agree

TOKYO (AP) — Nippon Steel Corp., the world's largest steel producer, and China have agreed on the terms of payment for equipment to be used in modern steelworks near Shanghai, it was reported Tuesday.

Japan's Kyodo News Service said China will pay half of about 400 billion yen in the Japanese currency and the other half in dollars.

A Nippon Steel spokesman declined to confirm the report, however, saying only that an official announcement may be made at the ground-breaking ceremonies Saturday at the Paoshan steelworks. Nippon Steel Chairman Yoshihiro Inayama is among industry officials scheduled to attend the ceremonies.

Nippon Steel, which had agreed earlier in the year with the China National Technical Import Corp. to aid in the construction of the integrated steelworks, is to provide China with 16 of the 25 packages of equipment.

How China is to pay for the japanese equipment has been a major stumbling block in the transactions. Nippon Steel had originally proposed that china pay for the equipment all in yen out of fear that it might suffer losses as a result of the dollar's depreciation. China wanted to pay in dollars.

Kyodo said the two side reached a compromise, agreeing that exchange risks should be shared equally by pricing half of the total value of the equipment in yen and the balance in dollars.

Programs Ease Retirement Pain

By EDWARD CRAIG

NEW YORK (UPI) — Lots of workers dread retirement because they haven't the faintest idea of what to do with themselves when the time comes.

And, as a general rule, the corporate front office doesn't concern itself.

Among the firms which don't feel this way are Pitney Bowes, of Stamford, Conn., and International Business Machines Corp., both producers of business equipment.

Each has programs designed to prepare employees for the time when their everyday working life ends.

Pitney Bowes has been somewhat of a pioneer in looking out for employees. It was among the first to install a profit-sharing program for personnel and its life insurance program was inaugurated in 1928. A noncontributory pension plan was introduced 30 years ago.

IBM also has been a leader in employee benefit programs. Its first was a life insurance and survivors income plan, inaugurated in 1934, and over the years it has made additions, including one providing special care for mentally, emotionally or physically handicapped children of employees and another reimbursing them for expenses incurred in adopting children.

The pre-retirement programs of both companies have the same thrust: picking up the tab for expenses spent educating employees for another activity or simply personal fulfillment.

At Pitney Bowes it's available to employees over 50 and their spouses; IBM's starts at 52 for employees with the company 15 years at age 55. The plans are in addition to regular tuition refund programs at both firms for employees who take educational courses designed to make them more fit for their jobs.

On the retirement preparation program, IBM pays the full tuition costs up to $500 a year and a maximum of $2,500 for each employee. The courses can be taken even through the first two years of retirement.

Pitney Bowes pays up to $300 a year in educational expenses. In addition the company is experimenting with training sessions to familiarize 60-plus employees with the problems of retirement and how to solve them. The sessions cover health, finances, employment in retirement and the legal problems in making a will and selling a house.

Shortly before the passage earlier this year of federal legislation raising the retirement age to 70, Pitney Bowes announced it no longer would have a mandatory age limit for employees, permitting them to work as long as they want.

"The correct criterion for employment is ability, not age," according to William Redgate, director of the company's employee relations unit.

"If an employee does satisfactory work, he or she doesn't become less satisfactory just because of a birthday. No one gets pushed out who still wants to and can contribute to the company."

"But when retirement does come, Pitney Bowes people will be as ready as we can make them."

One such employee is Joseph Geruso Jr., who has worked 18 years in the firm's technical and graphic arts section.

Art always has been one of his major interests, and within the past year he began taking regular instruction from a professional, with a view to working at art on a full-time basis after he retires.

He has been a faithful contributor to sidewalk art shows over the years and has sold much of his output at handsome fees. But he insists he gets more pleasure out of giving away his work than in offering it with a price tag.

"One of my best friends," he says, "has enough Gerusos to cover all the walls of his home."

Study Shows Whales Like To Sing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Humpback whales are both song stylists and compulsive composers who constantly change their tunes. And when not serenading, they fish — using air bubble "nets" to collect their catch.

"We are aware of no other animal besides man in which this strange and complicated behavior occurs and we have no idea of the reason behind it," Dr. Roger Payne said.

Payne and another marine biologist, Dr. Sylvia A. Earle, told a briefing at the National Geographic Society that new studies show the humpbacks are the only whales known to produce underwater "songs" — long, complex sequences of repeated phrases.

"We are beginning to have less and less hope that another species of major whales will be found to have songs, even though others make monotonous sounds," Payne said.

Payne said the songs seem to be more than just a method of communication, even though preliminary data suggest that only males sing and mostly at night during the winter mating season.

The January issue of National Geographic magazine contains companion articles on humpbacks by the two scientists, whose work is partially supported by the society, and a special phonograph recording of whale songs.

Mrs. Earle studied the summering of humpbacks in Alaskan waters and confirmed the observations of Charles and Virginia Jurasz that the whales blow circles of bubbles to trap the small sealife that makes up their meals.

"For the most part humpbacks feed by lunging forward and straining the minute zooplankton through sieve-like baleen plates attached to their upper jaws," she said.

But when the food is scattered, she continued, a whale dives beneath its prey and swims in an upward spiral, releasing streams of bubbles through its blowhole.

As the circular wall of bubbles rises, krill and other fish concentrate in the center and the whale surfaces in the middle of the circle to gulp them down.

Mrs. Earle said she and her colleagues sampled the contents of bubbling rings to confirm that they teamed with fish. But the experience sometimes was unnerving, knowing that tons of whale was rushing up to the same spot.

"It was occasionally disconcerting to be sitting in our small boat and seeing bubbles come up all around us," she said. "But the whales knew where we were and we were in no trouble. They are very gentle and don't bother people."

Payne said there are about 6,000 humpbacks left in the world after whaling depleted them from an estimated 80,000. Humpbacks weigh about a ton per foot of length and most adults measure 30 to 40 feet in length, although they can grow to up to 60 feet.

Consumer Advocate For Portuguese Not Discouraged

By ANDREW TORCHIA

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — By almost any measure, Mario Beja Santos is a failure in his one-man crusade to better the lot of the Portuguese consumer.

In four years of public appearances and product-testing, Beja Santos has caused no defective cars to be recalled and no dangerous drugs to be taken off the market. He has filed no consumer court actions and no one has sued him. He has brought about no consumer-rights legislation.

Manufacturers have reacted to his prodding with a big yawn. Few recognize him in the street. Nobody threatens him with bodily harm.

"I have changed nothing," he said in an interview. "Really, I am not very important."

The target of all this indifference says he's not discouraged and not even surprised, given the state of Portuguese consumer affairs. There is no Food and Drug Administration, no consumer protection agencies, no truth-in-advertising law, few rules about dating food products, and only limited government inspection of restaurants and bakeries.

Retailers offer only a six-month warranty on household appliances and, says Beja Santos, it's usually worthless.

"The consumer pays for everything if the machine fails — parts, labor and transport. The seller guarantees only to make his repair facilities available," Beja Santos adds.

"The concept of consumer rights is just not recognized, not even by consumers. Housewives are more preoccupied with price than with quality. Mostly, they don't know when they're being cheated. They don't know how to protest.

Successful or not, Beja Santos, a 33-year-old government information officer by day, is at night and on weekends Portugal's consumer advocate.

And his relative anonymity may be ending, thanks to a new, twice-a-month television program in which he lists brand-name products that he says have failed laboratory tests.

The series, unprecedented in Portugal, has housewives talking. "Thousands of them have written letters, they love it," Beja Santos says. Businessmen are beginning to mutter.

The local Lintas advertising office is taping the shows, Managing Director Jimmy Williamson says, and for a fee will replay them for manufacturers "who want to form an opinion and possibly take action" on the way their products have been mentioned. Two such private viewings have been arranged so far.

Beja Santos' taste for consumer problems dates back to his university economics classes. He emerged as a price control officer in the first provisional government following the 1974 revolution, began writing consumer columns on the side and later moved into radio and television.

Beja Santos now spends about four hours a day on his crusade, apart from his public relations work in the Ministry of Commerce. He says the job and his help by are entirely separate.

The commerce minister earlier this year ordered an inquiry into whether Beja Santos' off-duty consumer watchdog activities conflicted with his functions in a ministry that deals largely with businessmen.

"The judge is still collecting statements. My conscience is clear," Beja Santos said.

"I belong to no party. I get money from no one, except payments for appearing on TV and writing newspaper stories. I am completely independent and autonomous. People know there is no corruption on my part. I am not looking for personal publicity."

Relaxed and casual, Beja Santos does not appear as if a little pressure would bother him. In the informal, post-revolutionary style, he wears a floppy, gray sweater and jeans to work. His hair curls over his collar and he grins easily.

In his TV series, he has asserted that enzymes in a leading detergent can cause skin rash, that a well-known U.S.-made talcum powder contains dangerous amounts of antiseptic, that some Portuguese wine lacks alcohol, that bacteria in local yogurt can bring on diarrhea and that some local soft-drink makers break the law by using saccharine.

"I tell the TV what products should be tested for the next show. The TV pays for the tests in an independent laboratory and I report the results to the public," Beja Santos said.

Some of it has stung. One advertiser objected to Beja Santos' "slapstick comedy" approach. Another called him irresponsible. A third predicted, "Mario won't last long because he hasn't built up an authoritative TV personality."

Jimmy Williamson said, "We have to accept this. It had to come to Portugal, just like democracy. It's only fair that the consumer has a voice.

"But I question whether Beja Santos is doing it the right way, whether he, himself, recognizes how much opinion he can sway with these programs."

Confusion Caused By Pact

Analysis

By BROOKS JACKSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Administration spokesmen are insisting simultaneously that the U.S.-Taiwan defense treaty will be in effect for a year after diplomatic relations are ended on Jan. 1, and that it is impossible for a defense treaty to exist without diplomatic relations.

This raises a question about whether the United States will be legally bound to defend Taiwan during 1979.

Presidential press secretary Jody Powell said Monday that Carter feels legally bound by the treaty through Jan. 1, 1980, but that there is disagreement among scholars of international law about the legal status of the treaty once the U.S. embassy in Taipei shuts down.

The question is probably academic.

Administration officials say mainland China doesn't have the amphibious forces necessary to invade Taiwan, U.S. arms will continue to flow to Taiwan and the United States is on record as being opposed to any warlike actions by Peking against Taiwan.

But the administration does appear to be contradicting itself in defending the way in which it went about dealing with Peking.

Spokesmen say the U.S.-Taiwan mutual defense treaty will remain in effect for a year after the United States withdraws diplomatic recognition from its old ally on New Year's Day.

They point to this as evidence President Carter isn't the sort who goes about tearing up treaties and summarily abandoning friends.

Carter himself stressed to reporters Friday night, after his address to the nation, that the treaty is being cancelled under one of its own provisions giving either party the right to end it on 12 months notice.

He said he had to argue long and hard before the Peking government went along with exchanging ambassadors while a U.S.-Taiwan treaty is still in effect.

But Powell said Monday, "It is not possible under international law to have a defense treaty as such with a country with which one does not have diplomatic relations."

Powell was striving to make the point that ending the treaty should not come as a shock to anyone, particularly not to those members of Congress who complain that they weren't adequately consulted about the China negotiations.

"An end to that treaty was really never at issue from the time the Shanghai Communique was issued in 1972," Powell said. That communique, the result of Richard Nixon's breakthrough trip to China, took notice of Peking's claim to be the rightful government of all China, including Taiwan.

Nixon never promised to withdraw diplomatic recognition of Taiwan or to cancel the treaty, but Powell seems to argue that Carter's actions flow logically from Nixon's.

Whether that is so or not, it does seem to flow logically from Powell's words that the U.S.-Taiwan treaty will be cast in legal limbo on New Year's Day, when the U.S. withdraws its embassy from Taipei.

Teen-Ager Charged In Double Murder

MISSION (AP) — A 19-year-old Mission teen-ager has been charged with capital murder in the Saturday night shooting death of his father and a policeman.

Joel Lopez was wounded in shooting that erupted at a restaurant. Killed were his father, Jose Cruz Lopez, 56, and officer Fulgencio Velasco, 26.

Velasco and a partner answered a disturbance call at the restaurant, Maj. Robert Garza of the Mission Police Department said. Garza said Velasco was shot as he tried to arrest Joel's brother, Hector.

The suspect was shot in the shoulder and leg. A spokesman for Justice of the Peace Matias Morin of Edinburg said misdemeanor charges were filed against Hector Lopez

Admiration For Scrooge Grows

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
Associated Press Writer

HARDSCRIBBLE HOUSE, Conn. — "At this rolling time of the year," as Jacob Marley called the Christmas season, I realize I have at last grown weary of Bob Cratchit's cringing and whining.

After all, at today's prices, what has he got to complain about?

Mulligan's Stew

Living there in Camden Town and eating high on the goose, which this year according to my friendly neighborhood poulterer goes for $1.39 a pound, what right has he to applaud nephew Fred's put-down of Ebenezer Scrooge's frugal ways? No wonder he is in danger of losing his situation. Has he ever had to meet the payroll at Scrooge & Marley? What does he care about the bottom line as long as he gets his 15 shillings a week?

I confess to a lifelong addiction to Charles Dickens. I reread "A Christmas Carol" every year as soon as the snow flies, and every Christmas Eve sit before the fire and listen to Lionel Barrymore's splendidly splenetic Scrooge on the hi-fi. As the years go by and the economic realities become more immutable, my admiration grows for old Scrooge, that "squeezing, wrenching, grasping, clutching, covetous old sinner."

They just don't make villains like that anymore. In a world gone bland and banal, full of bleating Bob Cratchit's, Ebenezer stands out as a crusty uncompromising curmudgeon, a rare breed these days — "secret and self-contained and solitary as any oyster."

My friend Jay Sharbutt, who also labors at one of the high stools in the AP column quilting workhouse, West Coast division, is convinced Dickens had his best novel going, better even than "David Copperfield," until he blew it in Stave Four, the last chapter, by having Scrooge turn all soft and marshmallowy, simpering like an idiot to the street urchin below his window and sending that prize turkey to his malingering clerk.

Jay spent a Christmas with us when we lived in London, and we went off to visit surviving Dickens landmarks in the old city. Over a mulled ale in the George and Vulture, where the Dickens family still gathers for Christmas breakfast, we agreed that the unrepentant, not-yet-born again Scrooge was the master's greatest creation.

Old Ebenezer was at his harrumping best when turning away the goody-goody fund raisers with sarcastic questions about whether the prisons, the union work houses and the treadmills still provided the services that he, as a taxpayer, was forced to subsidize under the Poor Laws. He was sure ahead of his time in proclaiming a taxpayer revolt.

But then it all fell apart as Tiny Tim and the three ghosts buried this last of the rugged individualists under a marzipan mountain of social significance. Instead of shouting "humbug" to the world of fools around him, he was reduced to bellowing "Hello" and "Merry Christmas" to strangers in the street and playing ridiculous party games like old Fezziwig, who on the evidence of the novel was even more of a sweatshop employer than Scrooge.

After all it was past seven o'clock before lovable old Fezziwig let young Scrooge and Dick Wilkins put up the shutters and commence the office Christmas party, while Cratchit was allowed to go home at least an hour earlier. Young Scrooge and Dick slept "under a counter in the backshop."

Cratchit, for all his whining, went home to a four-room row house with a fire place that you couldn't touch in London today for under $600 a month. He worked and lived in a secure neighborhood too. Didn't he go down the slide at the end of Corn Hill at least 20 times after work without any fear of getting mugged?

Scrooge should have realized that Cratchit's cries of poverty were shear humbug as soon as the Ghost of Christmas present permitted him to peek in on Tiny Tim and the others around that groaning board in Camden Town.

Voting Change Helped New U.S. Senator

By LEE BYRD

WASHINGTON (AP) — William S. Cohen steps into the Senate next month after demonstrating some of the neatest Republican footwork since song-and-dance man George Murphy.

Cohen, 38, first broke onto the political stage in 1972 by introducing Maine to the long walk, hoofing from one town to the next in a 600-mile trek that won him a House seat then being vacated by Democrat William D. Hathaway.

This year, Cohen's technique was far less sole-shuffling but just as effective. By moving briskly to his right, the formerly moderate-to-liberal Cohen knocked Hathaway out of the Senate.

Casting himself as "the common sense" candidate, Cohen attacked Hathaway and President Carter on the Panama Canal treaties, strategic arms negotiations with the Soviet Union, neutron bomb weaponry, as well as government spending and other issues dear to conservatives.

At the same time, Cohen's 1978 voting record in the House earned him a 67 percent or "acceptable" rating by the American Conservative Union, compared with only a 36 percent mark in 1977 and 33 percent a year earlier.

He believes Congress as a whole will be more conservative next year. "I expect that if Carter is serious about cutting back spending and reducing the size of government, he will find this to be a very sympathetic Congress," he says.

But on other matters, such as a prospective SALT II treaty, the president could be in for trouble, he says. "I think we ought to get a lot tougher with the Soviets," and the Senate is not likely to approve any pact that would give the Soviet Union an edge, Cohen adds.

Cohen already has been mentioned in print as a possible vice presidential contender in 1980, speculation which he finds "flattering but not realistic."

Analysis

Cohen, raised to be Jewish but now a member of the Unitarian-Universalist church, was born in Bangor, the son of a baker who still runs a shop there. He excelled at basketball in high school and Bowdoin College, where he majored in Latin before moving onto Boston University Law School.

Cohen has a boyish look and a reputation for intelligence, grace and hard work. Detracting somewhat from that polished image is a penchant for loud, polyester jackets.

He met his wife, Diane, when he was a Bowdoin freshman. They have two sons, Kevin and Christopher.

Cohen describes himself as a quiet man, a loner, but he has been no stranger to Washington's social circuit, especially since his first big surge of notoriety while serving on the House impeachment panel prior to Richard M. Nixon's resignation from the White House.

Cohen openly anguished over the impending impeachment vote, calling it "the most difficult decision of my life." He then cast his lot against Nixon, but his fears of a political backlash at home proved unfounded as he won re-election in 1974 with 71 percent of the vote. Against Hathaway, he tallied 57 percent.

The new senator writes and reads poetry, and though he once said his poems were part of his private life, he had several of them published during his 1978 campaign.

Toilet Seat Law To Change

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — In Connecticut, it's illegal to sit on a toilet seat that isn't horseshoe-shaped. You can be fined up to $100.

It's been that way since 1939 when the state decided all toilet seats — in the home and on the road — should have an opening in the front.

That was the year World War II broke out. It also was a time when many people still believed you could catch venereal disease from toilet seats.

Consequently, Connecticut passed a regulation outlawing one-piece, oval toilet seats and imposed a maximum $100 fine on violators. It is believed to be the only restriction of its kind in the country.

But it appears likely the state will join the rest of the nation next week by repealing the regulation.

The rule on open-front seats has no been a big problem in service stations, office buildings or other public places. But it has been for homeowners, especially in towns where regulation-conscious building inspectors go by the book, because most toilet seats made for the home are oval.

"The problem was one of economics," said David Wiggin, head of the Public Health Department's health environmental services division. "In public toilets, you either use black or white seats. That's it.

"But in homes, you get different colors, shapes, designs. To make open-front toilet seats in 10 shades of yellow didn't seem to make sense because you couldn't sell them in any other state."

That was the argument the manufacturers gave when they approached the health agency last summer. Wiggin said the department wholeheartedly agreed and dropped the rule in September, since there was "no public health justification for open toilet seats."

The Legislative Regulations Review Committee, which must still approve the change, is expected officially to repeal subsection (w) of section 19-13B45 of the state's health regulations Tuesday.

UTC Wins Merger Battle

NEW YORK (AP) — United Technologies Corp. says it is ready to pay for the shares tendered to the firm in its attempt to take over Carrier Corp., the nation's leading air-conditioning equipment manufacturer, following the removal of the latest legal barrier in the merger battle.

A three-judge federal appeals court this week refused a request from the Carrier and the Justice Department for a preliminary injunction that would block the takover pending a full trial.

United Technologies, a Hartford, Conn.-based aerospace conglomerate, said it would begin immediately to pay $476 million for the 17 million Carrier shares — about 49 percent of the company's stock — it has accepted under its $28-a-share tender offer to Carrier's shareholders.

Carrier's stock ended trading on the New York Stock Exchange Monday at $22 a share, down 75 cents.

Carrier, based in Syracuse, N.Y., declined comment on the ruling or on United Technologies' announcement. It has joined with the Justice Department in objecting to United Technologies' bid on the grounds that a takeover would reduce competition in the air conditioning industry.

The appeals court said its decision was not intended as a comment on the merits of the antitrust suit.

Virgin Mary Disturbed By Mysterious Visitation

(EDITOR'S NOTE — The Annunciation of Mary is one of the dramatic moments that led up to the first Christmas nearly 2,000 years ago. This third installment of a five-part Christmas series, "A Special Love Story," draws from non-canonical documents highly regarded by the early church for an account of how that event may have occurred.)

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
Associated Press Writer

A shaft of sunlight poured down from the high window. Mary sang softly to herself as she moved the shuttle to and fro, filling the weft of the true purple. Her heart was high. Her work was good.

She tilted her head from side to side with the cadence of her singing. How nimbly raced her fingers, how richly sparkled the velvet. It grew with each crossing of the yarn, as if it, too, had life and promise.

A trace of a smile curved her lips. O Lord, thou art ever bountiful. Like unto this fabric, she, too, advanced toward completion. Soon Joseph would return, and together they would plan for the day of wedding.

The memory of his fond leavetaking brought color to her cheeks.

"I go away to build my buildings," he had said, "and I will come again unto thee." He looked down on her warmly, his bronzed brow knit with protective concern. "The Lord shall watch over thee."

Musing contentedly, she paused in her weaving. She leaned back her head, her eyes closed, her face upturned, caressed by the cascade of sun. At that moment, she started.

"Mary"

She sat up, sharply attentive. She had heard, but heard not. Here in her private chamber, alone with her thread and thoughts, she sensed some further presence, some calling round about, some unfallen footstep.

She quit the loom and hastened across the floor to the doorway. She pushed the portiere aside, listening. There was nothing except the smoke curling from the brazier, a cup left empty on the table.

She frowned, pressing her fingers to her temples. She must have dreamt it. O Lord, shield thy servant from vain imaginings. Assuredly, her idle reflections had brought that twinge of fantasy.

She sighed and strolled back to her yarn basket, running her fingers meditatively through the soft texture. It soothed and tingled the flesh like feather-down. A delicate gift for her Lord.

She was greatly honored that the priests had appointed her to weave the true purple for the Temple halls. Five other virgins of Nazareth — Rebekah, Zipporah, Susanna, Abigea and Cael — also spun and embroidered Temple draperies.

But they wrought the blue, the golden, the fine linen and silk, while to Mary had gone the distinction of fashioning the scarlet and true purple. She clasped her fingers under her chin. O Lord, pray that these hands ever please thee.

She noticed the slant of the sun, the ninth hour. Each day, she customarily prayed until the third hour in midmorning, then wove until the ninth in the afternoon. Thereafter she attended to the household of Joseph, the duties of grinding grain, cultivating the garden, kneading dough, baking, cleaning, washing linen for his children.

They were loving little taphs, Simon, James, Joses and the others. She drew on her veil, picked up the water jar, and perching it on her head, went out of the house and down the hill toward the well.

Plumes of smoke drifted from open doors of the limestone houses. Birds darted and trilled in the sunlight. A group of women washed and carded wool. In the distance, she could hear the clang of tools in metalshops, the lowing of kine.

She savored the peace and beauty of it all. How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts. The green valley stretched away below the fig orchard, and children shouted at play in the leafy arbors.

The day, its joy and peace, transported her, and she moved on, skipping gleefuly

Third In A Series

a step or two. Ach! She braced her water jar precariously, laughing.

And then it came again, that stabbing, unsubstantial thing.

"Hearken, Mary! Give heed!"

Her body stiffened, and her gaze cast about, but she saw no one. It was as if some spirit approached, some form she could not discern, some voice she could not comprehend. O Lord God, have mercy...

Something had bewitched her, some uncanny power. She walked on rapidly, her face white and strained. She would be done with girlish rhapsodizing. She must fetch her water and be on with her work.

Other women passed, turning to stare at her perplexedly, as she rushed on. O Lord God of Abraham, Father of us all, lend they help.

She lowered her jar, and with trembling fingers, fastened the rope to the handles. She let it down, her lips moving soundlessly. Lord God, scatter this darkness, vouchsafe thy refuge.

The jar filled slowly, exasperatingly slowly. She bit her lip, her eyes darting desperately about. She still was aware of some throbbing in the air, some rigorous, overwhelming constraint, lancing her to the very center of her being, a gathering force charging over her like a rush of wings. God, Lord God!

"Hail!"

The voice materialized out of nowhere, except now it seemed to take on image.

"Hail, thou that are highly favored!"

She dropped her jar, throwing her arm over her eyes against the light, and fled blindly back toward the house.

The presence, the inexorability of it, clung to her as she ran, stumbling, crying, racing in terror. In her chamber, she fell to her knees, covering her face, and again the visitation spoke.

"The Lord is with thee: Blessed art thou among women!"

She crumpled to the floor, shaking.

"O Lord," she cried, "bow to the prayers of thy slave."

Her voice was a frightened wail.

"Hear me and deliver my soul, you who are the God of my salvation."

Her face was smothered in her knees. Her shoulders heaved. "Fear not, Mary."

A silence and then again that commanding reassurance.

"Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God!"

Slowly, and at length, her body became less rigid, but sobs still rose from deep within her.

"Behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call him Jesus."

Slowly, she sat up, her face pleading, stricken.

"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Most High..."

She stared upward, her lips parted, tears dimming her vision. "And of His Kingdom there shall be no end."

She shook her head, bewildered, trembling, not intending to speak, yet speaking, her voice like a puzzled child's, simple, detached. "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?"

"... the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee."

Again, her voice seemed to rise by its own force, remote, yet inward, controlling, without question. "... Be it unto me according to thy word." She was pulled, hurled; she had flung herself into an unexplainable, deeply personal and profound unknown.

The full shock did not come to her until later. That night she cried and tossed on her couch until dawn, alternately ecstatic, incredulous and frightened. Shortly afterward, she packed a few belongings and fled Nazareth.

No one here, no relatives, nor friends, could hope to understand. And the thought of Joseph returning now filled her with panic.

She went to a mountain settlement where now dwelt the old priest, Zechariah, who had schooled her since childhood in the mysteries of God, and his wife, Elizabeth, who had comforted her through youth.

At the gate, the elder woman met her with a loving embrace.

"Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb."

Mary buried her face on her cousin's breast, and as the older woman stroked her hair, the fright subsided, and a pent-up joy burst in her.

She remained in that place three months, and held her head proudly.

But dread again came over her when she returned to Nazareth, and she hid herself in the house. When she faced Joseph, on his return, she had been with child for six months.

Various Tips To Aid Do-It-Yourselfers

By ANDY LANG
Associated Press Writer

Odds and ends of interest to do-it-yourselfers:

While wrought iron can be painted to match any color scheme, black is the overwhelming color preference for applications by home owners...Never discard the tags and labels that come with such things as appliances, rugs and clothing, since knowing the serial numbers of appliances can save time and trouble in replacing parts and servicing; knowing the fiber content of rugs helps in knowing how to remove spots, and knowing how to clean and wash clothing can prevent damage...Wide planks in floors are more susceptible to swelling and warping than standard strips...Clogged gas burners can sometimes be cleared with toothpicks.

Plywood and other materials that come in sheets are sold by the square footage, which is obtained by multiplying the width by the length, so that a sheet in the standard size of 4 feet by 8 feet is 32 square feet...Wood, chemically impregnated to resist decay and insect attack, is now being used for some construction foundation systems which have been approved by the Federal Housing Administration and the Farmers Home Administration for their mortgage insurance programs.

Amish Family To Reconsider

CENTRAL LAKE, Mich. (UPI) — An Amish-Mennonite man says he and his family will reconsider plans to abandon their northern lower Michigan home if village officials let them keep their outhouse.

The village council voted last week to force Stuart Banister to comply with a 1963 ordinance prohibiting outdoor privies within village limits.

After that decision, Banister, 24, said he, his wife, Joanna, and their three children — Sarah, 4, Joshua, 2, and Naomi, 3 months — would pack up and move back to Snyder County, Pa.

"The Bible tells us if we meet conflict in one city, then we should move to another," said Banister, who built his home by hand on property just a few feet inside village limits last spring.

"I have given my word about leaving if court action was threatened," he said. "We really do not want to move and we would stay if the council would see fit."

The Banisters have contacted a real estate agent and are prepared to leave town. But some area residents do not want to see them go, and have have offered to begin a petition drive to force the village council to relent.

"I admit I was legally in the wrong in putting up the outhouse," said Banister, who travels by horse-drawn cart and works for a nearby dairyman. "But my house is here and I feel I must live up to my religious principles."

Talmadge Denies Wrongdoings

ATLANTA (AP) — Sen. Herman Talmadge is considered a political institution in his home state of Georgia — immovable and unbeatable.

But 31 years ago, the powerful Democrat, now facing a Senate inquiry into alleged financial wrongdoing, literally had to lock an opponent out of Georgia's executive mansion to keep a tenuous hold on the governorship.

It took a Georgia Supreme Court decision to evict Talmadge. But two years later he could call the mansion his own, and in 1956 he was elected to the first of four terms in the U.S. Senate.

Talmadge, 65, is a candidate for re-election in 1980. He maintains that recent allegations about unreported contributions and padded expenses have not shaken his support back home.

He also insists the Senate investigation will exonerate him of any "intentional wrongdoing."

The Senate ethics committee voted Monday to expand its investigation into some of Talmadge's financial affairs. The committee will investigate:

—Talmadge's alleged misuse of campaign contributions, some of which, investigators charge, ended up in a secret bank account. Talmadge says $13,000 in expense money and $26,000 in campaign contributions were put in the account, without his approval or knowledge, by a former aide, Daniel Minchew.

—His alleged mishandling of Senate expenses, including funds collected for expenses allegedly never incurred. Talmadge later repaid $37,000 of the expense money, blaming the discrepancy on "clerical errors."

—His acceptance of free meals, lodging and small amounts of cash from friends to help defer his personal expenses in Georgia. Talmadge says he accepted the gifts but says he believes there was nothing illegal or unethical in his acceptance.

Talmadge could face Senate censure or even expulsion, but history indicates he won't go down without a fight.

In 1946, after the death of his father, Gov.-elect Gene Talmadge, Herman ran as a write-in candidate for governor and came out on top, with the help of a batch of disputed votes from his home county.

The matter went to the General Assembly, which declared Talmadge the winner, but outgoing Gov. Ellis Arnall refused to leave office until his lieutenant governor, M.E. Thompson, could be sworn in as acting governor pending a special election.

Talmadge ignored Arnall, set up state government in the executive suite lobby and eventually had Arnall evicted by the state patrol. Arnall retreated to an information booth in the Capitol lobby from which he tried to gain control of the state's military forces.

Talmadge outflanked Arnall by seizing the executive mansion and changing the locks.

The state Supreme Court finally voted 5-2 to make Thompson the governor, and Talmadge had to wait until 1948 to unseat him in a special election.

Talmadge "retired" in 1954 at age 41, but returned to win election to the U.S. Senate two years later.

In the Senate, Talmadge led the Southern forces opposed to civil rights legislation. Eventually, however, he joined forces with the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., in authoring legislation to give poor children — black and white — a government-supported, free lunch program.

Some of Talmadge's financial affairs came to light in court last year after his wife, Betty, sued for divorce. The information led to news stories critical of Talmadge, an Internal Revenue Service audit and a preliminary investigaton by the ethics committee.

The committee's decision to expand the investigation will mean that a Senate hearing, conducted under rules similar to those of a criminal court trial, will be held. The hearing is expected to begin in January.

A federal grand jury has also been looking into Talmadge's finances.

FCC Proposes Limiting Range Of Powerful Radio Stations

By United Press International

The Federal Communications Commission has decided to make room for up to 125 new AM radio stations by limiting the range of the "clear channel" stations — the big city beacons that brought the sounds of a more exciting way of life to small town America.

The FCC Tuesday approved the proposal to limit the protected rage of the country's 25 powerful clear channel stations to 750 miles. Under the plan the FCC will approve the new AM stations on the frequencies now held by the clear channel stations, some of which reach coast to coast.

The clear channel stations have been a favorite of insomniacs, truck drivers and teen-age couples in parked cars across the prairies, farm fields and forests of small-town America for decades.

There was no immediate response from the clear channel radio stations that will be affected.

But at a truck stop in Abilene, Marvin Eldon considered Tsesday night what life would be like without one of the truck driver's favorites, the midnight until morning "Bill Mack Open Road Show," broadcast by clear channel WBAP in Fort Worth.

"I know there's going to be a lot of truckers disappointed. It's like losing an old friend. I'm listening to it now," said Eldon.

"They play all that country music and that's what we like. I don't know what we'll do if we can't get another good station."

Eldon has no immediate cause for concern. The FCC said it should be another two or three years until the process of choosing the new stations is complete.

FCC Chairman Charles D. Ferris said that after a final period of comments from interested parties, those who want new AM stations will apply for them in particular areas.

"We're envisioning stations of comparable quality as those that are listened to now — in the 200 to 500 watt range," he said.

"You'll still be able to pick them (the clear channel stations) up, depending on the weather and the ionosphere," Ferris said. "But those are the stations that will be affected.

"It's the final action leading toward the breakdown of the so-called 'clear channel' radio stations in the country — those stations established to have little or no interference when there were few radio stations in the country.

"Now we will be able to allocate more stations and the estimate is 100 to 125 more AM stations in the country when final action is taken," he said.

Pieces Of Skylab Will Land Safely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Within a few months, the cry will go up: "The Skylab is falling!" And tons of debris from the doomed space station will rain upon the earth.

Some small metallic pieces will float down like autumn leaves. Other parts, perhaps weighing two tons or more, will plummet onto our planet at 200 feet per second.

Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration are making a major effort to assure the world there is little cause for alarm. They say the chances of injury or damage are slight.

"The odds of anyone being hit are less than that for meteorites," Robert Aller of NASA said Tuesday at a news conference. "In 200 years no one has been killed by a meteorite. And there have been reports of an injury only about once every 30 years."

Aller noted that although Skylab passes over most of the world's major cities, it spends 75 percent of its time over water and much of the rest over open land.

NASA associate administrator John Yardley said computer calculations estimate the 85-ton station will be tugged into the atmosphere, tumble and break apart between July and September next year. But he said the vehicle could plummet back to earth as early as May if extensive sunspot activity heats up and expands our atmosphere.

The agency had hoped to send a space shuttle crew up in 1980 to attach a rocket to Skylab, to either boost it to a higher orbit or to guide it to a controlled re-entry over a remote ocean area. But that plan was abandoned Monday because systems aboard the vehicle are failing, and because of the probability that it will re-enter before a shuttle could get there.

Yardley said that when the end comes for Skylab, it will scatter pieces over a track 4,000 miles long and 100 miles wide. An estimated 400 to 500 pieces, weighing up to 25 tons in all, are expected to survive searing re-entry heat and reach the Earth's surface.

They will weigh from a few ounces up to perhaps 5,000 pounds. But they will be so dispersed, Yardley said, that if the re-entry were centered on a city like Washington, only one or two pieces would land there.

Aller said the two largest pieces that might survive are an airlock protective shroud weighing about 5,000 pounds and a lead film vault weighing about 4,000 pounds. But he said these could break into smaller hunks.

In case there is a problem, Yardley said, NASA is considering contingency plans, including the possibility of standby medical teams on a moderate scale. He said a plan of this type was used when the 45-ton rocket stage that placed Skylab in orbit plunged back to Earth.

Yardley said that stage re-entered the atmosphere over the Atlantic Ocean and no one even noticed it.

Boren Plans Early Leave

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — In an effort to gain valuable seniority in the U.S. Senate, Sen.-elect David Boren will resign as governor six days early, on Jan. 2, one minute before midnight, state capitol sources said Tuesday night.

Boren reportedly based his decision to resign on the fact that seniority could be important to Oklahoma in terms of committee assignments.

Under Senate rules, seniority priority is given to former congressmen first and then former governors.

By resigning before Jan. 3, Boren should improve his seniority status from between 90th and 100th to 85th or 86th, sources said.

U.S. senators are to be sworn in Jan. 15. However, by resigning before Jan. 3, Boren's seniority status will be retroactive for five days, under Senate rules governing priority status given to former governors.

If Boren served out his full time as governor he would enjoy no greater status than any other newly-elected senator.

Arkansas Gov. David Pryor also is expected to resign early to improve his seniority position.

Boren's resignation will elevate Gov.-elect George Nigh, who currently is lieutentant governor, to the state's top office six days early.

Nigh was not scheduled to become governor until Jan. 8.

Actor Proud Of Indian Heritage

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Joseph Running Fox is a full blooded Sando Domingo Pueblo Indian with one fashionable boot in the white man's world and a moccasin in the tribal councils of the red man on the Pueblo reservation.

Joe, 23, will become a celebrity literally overnight Wednesday when he stars in the title role of "Ishi, The Last of His Tribe," a two-hour NBC-TV movie.

A handsome, thoughtful young man, Joe is a medical student at Brigham Young University and a tithing Mormon. He is proud of his heritage and anxious to see American Indians take their place in modern society.

He portrays Ishi from teenager to young adulthood in the true story of the last of a small band of the Yahi tribe fleeing from white prospectors in the gold rush country of California in the late 1800's and early 1900's.

Director Robert Ellis Miller, conducting a nationwide search for a young Indian to play Ishi, visited the campus of BYU. Joe took a couple of Indian pals to see the director and prepared to leave.

"Mr. Miller looked at me and said, 'You're the guy,'" Joe recalled. "I'd never done any acting. I've always wanted to be a doctor."

Joe was born on the Sando Domingo reservation. He says there are about 20,000 members of his tribe, most of whom live in New Mexico.

"It's the custom of many Indian families to take Mexican names," he said. "Our family name is Garcia, but I use my tribal name. When I was 13 I moved to Utah and lived in a lot of foster homes while I was getting my education.

"After I graduated from high school I went to old Mexico for two years on a church mission. I learned to speak Spanish. I also speak a little Sioux and, of course, Pueblo Indian.

"There is no written Pueblo language. But I learned the history, rites and ceremonies of our tribe from the elders. All of those tribal things are still practiced in secret and I'm very much a part of it all."

Joe has enormous tolerance for the way in which Indians historically have been portrayed in movies and TV. He laughs at the stereotyped painted savage on horseback raiding settlements with tomahawks and bows and arrows.

"When I was a kid I was always the cowboy when we played cowboys and Indians when I wanted to be the good guy," he said. "When I was feeling mean and wanted to play the bad guy, I played an Indian.

"I don't think of myself in terms of being an Indian. What I like about 'Ishi' is that it proves Indian and white man can communicate. The story demonstrates the cultures can merge.

"My heritage is important to me. My ancestors were proud people who farmed in the southwest and had a great culture of their own."

Joe is moderate about the plight of reservation Indians and those who have left the reservation to find their way in industrial cities.

"If an Indian wants to stay on the reservation and fight progess, I see nothing wrong with that," he said. "If they want to preserve their culture it is their right. If they want dirt roads instead of paved ones, that's fine.

"But if they want to make something of themselves in the white man's world, they have to leave the reservation and work at changing their ways. Nobody is going to give them anything. They shouldn't be given anything more than the rest of Americans.

"The more successful doctors, lawyers and actors they see in the white man's world, the more they'll be encouraged to do things on their own and for themselves.

"Indians aren't being deprived in the white man's society. There are a great many opportunities for us. If the Indians don't choose to take advantage of them, it is their right.

"I don't know if I'll return to the reservation once I become a doctor. I do know that doctors are badly needed. But I won't try to convert my friends in the tribe to do things my way.

"My grandfather once told me that hundreds of years ago all the Indian had was the horse. He didn't need the automobile. He said that progress only brings problems. He wanted to live and die as an Indian on the reservation.

"I guess they call me an 'apple' on the reservation — red on the outside and white on the inside. They've got me pegged. I get along in the white man's world but I also get along well on the reservation."

Joe is amused by the overplayed sensitivity to Indians by well-meaning whites. He laughed at Stanford University changing its symbol for its athletic teams from Stanford Indians to Stanford Cardinals.

"I thought it was great that the school called its teams Indians," he said. "The same for the Cleveland Indians. But if they want to change those names, that's okay too."

Center Releases Rabies Report

ATLANTA (AP) — Of the 3,182 cases of rabies reported in the United States last year, only one victim was human, the Center for Disease Control says. Of the rest, 2,736 were wild animals and 445 were domestic animals.

The center said this week that 51 percent of the cases involved skunks and that skunks, plus bats, raccoons, cattle, foxes, dogs and cats accounted for 97 percent. The number of cases was 36 more than the previous year, but about 7 percent below the annual average of the preceding five years, the CDC said.

Special Faces Tough Competition

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ishi was a Yahi Indian who managed to survive brutal attacks by white men, the total dissipation of his tribe, maddening isolation and painful assimilation into white culture. But tonight he'll probably be massacred by a trio of former models who jiggle when they walk.

"Ishi, The Last of His Tribe," tonight on NBC, is prime stuff, and true. Ishi was the last "wild Indian," a rare man from a timeless, primitive world who slipped through a crack in history and met the 20th century literally overnight.

Tonight's telling of Ishi's tale is gentle and realistic. It is drama without the gratuitous violence and lazy-think conflicts TV usually throws in for spice.

Good.

"Ishi" is scheduled against ABC's "Charlie's Angels" and a CBS Christmas drama.

Bad.

"It's against 'Charlie's Angels,'" grumbled one who is close to the "Ishi" movie. "It won't get the ratings."

True, probably. Such are the mysterious ways of television.

"Ishi" was adapted from Theodora Kroeber's book by Dalton Trumbo (it was the Oscar-winning screenwriter's last project) and his son, Christopher, who finished the script after his father's death.

When the movie opens, Ishi, half-starved and frightened, has taken refuge in a slaughterhouse outside a Northern California gold town. He is discovered and nearly killed by some local brutes, but a kindly sheriff rescues him and bids for Dr. Benjamin Fuller (Dennis Weaver), a Berkeley anthropologist.

Fuller wins Ishi's trust, and the two of them set out to chronicle the final days of the Yahi Tribe. The year was 1911.

Through flashbacks, we see the Yahis, already pushed to near extinction by gold hunters, dealt a final, fatal blow in a surprise attack that left only eight of the tribe alive. Those eight begin a futile struggle to keep their tribe alive, but circumstance and the white man work against their purpose.

Finally, we see Ishi's fateful and lonely realization that, "I am the last of my people," and the mad dash through the wilderness that led to that slaughterhouse and eventually, to Dr. Fuller and a new life.

Lots of pathos here. Ishi is not only a man who watched his race vanish before his eyes, but he is the victim of unfulfilled love. He and his lifelong love, Lushi, could not marry because they were cousins.

Ishi became a hero to the Indian community, and today there are some Indian religious who are Ishi devotees. When director Robert Miller showed the film to a Washington audience that included Capital hotshots and Indian leaders, he was timid.

"I didn't know if I could please the Indian people with this," he said. "But I got a standing ovation. The Indians were proud of it. I was very proud of myself and the picture."

College Enrollment Drops Slightly

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of freshmen entering the nation's 3,100 colleges this fall rose, but overall enrollment was down, reports the National Center for Education Statistics.

The 11,354,756 enrollment figure reported Monday by the federal agency is down 0.5 percent from last fall. Survey director Andrew Pepin said inflation and tighter student aid policies may have contributed to the 1978 decline. "Either students are dropping out of colleges at the higher levels, or they're stopping out," he said. "Stopping out," explained Pepin, refers to those who leave school temporarily.

Adventurers Begin 20,000-Mile Trek

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Twenty American adventurers in six jeeps have started a 20,000-mile trip from the tip of South America to Alaska. They plan to finish next April, duplicating a feat first done six years ago by a British army team from the opposite direction.

The roughest part of the trip is expected to be the Darien Swamp that covers half of Panama and has no roads. The expedition is carrying a special aluminum bridge for difficult passages.

The trip is called the Jeepers Jamboree Expedition of the Americas.

Thursday's Musical Movie Offers Lighthearted Entertainment

By JOAN HANAUER

NEW YORK (UPI) — O. Henry might not recognize "Gift of the Magi" as translated for television by Pat Boone's daughter Debby and Artur Rubinstein's son John, but the musical movie happens to be great fun to watch.

It really doesn't make much sense, as expounded on NBC Thursday at 7:30 p.m., Centrak time, but the spirit of lighthearted entertainment glosses over a lot of sins.

The show is carried by young Rubinstein, a regular on ABC's "Family," with a big assist from JoAnne Worley. They are aided and abetted by Peter Graves as O. Henry, and Biff McGuire, Alan Young and Peter Backus, among others.

The story begins on the SS Liverpool, in which Miss Boone plays Delia, an Italian immigrant girl just a day away from the U.S.A. (that's a song cue, as you might know from the rhyme). Fortunately, she makes no attempt to speak with an Italian accent, although at first her speech is curiously stilted in a manner meant to suggest the foreign born.

Rubinstein is a funny name for an actor playing an Irish immigrant, complete with brogue, but Rubinstein is the kind of actor who automatically, and apparently effortlessly, holds center stage.

The young couple are attracted, but lose contact for six months while she goes to work at her cousin's bakery and he rises rapidly in the law firm where his uncle, Alan Young, is treasured for his contacts in politics and police. Rubinstein becomes engaged to boss Backus' daughter, and his future is made, as he and uncle sing in a delightful duet about "You Owe it to the Irish — to Succeed."

Love conquers greed, however, and he jilts the boss's daughter to marry Delia, and sink into deep poverty.

All ends well in this bit of frothy Christmas spirit that in its hour-and-a-half production reminds us that brevity is the soul of wit.

Even briefer and more charmingly concise is "Amahl and the Night Visitor," the first television-ordered opera, written by Gian-Carlo Menotti for 1951 presentation and not performed since 1966. It goes on the air Sunday, 6 p.m., Central time, also on NBC, as a GE Theater production.

New York Metropolitan Opera soprana Teresa Stratas plays Amahl's mother and 14-year-old Robert Sapolsky plays the crippled shepherd boy, Amahl, with enormous clarity and beauty of voice.

The production is lavishly staged, with Jesus Lopez-Cobos conducting the Philharmonica Orrhestra of London in the tale of a poor family visited by the Three Kings on their way to Bethlehem bearing gifts for the infant Jesus — and receiving a gift of their own. Except for an irreverent moment or two when the viewer fully expects the three splendidly clad Magi to burst into "We Three Kings of Orient Are," the production is a delight.

Texas became a state in 1846 and seceded 15 years later with the rest of the South. It petitioned for readmission in 1866, promising an anti-slavery constitution.

Aggies Playing Only For Fame Tonight

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Jacob Green wants to stop Dexter Green, who in turn wants to avoid Jacob Green.

That, in a nutshell, sums up the battle between Texas A&M and Iowa State in the second Hall of Fame Bowl tonight at Legion Field.

Jacob Green is A&M's premier defensive end, a 6-2, 242-pound junior who is being touted as an Outland Trophy candidate next season. Dexter Green is Iowa State's elusive tailback who has contriuted mightily to the Cyclones' three straight 8-3 regular season records.

"Dexter Green looks on film like a great running back from the Big Eight Conference," Jacob said. "We're going to have to stop him and their running game. We'd like to make them pass.

"Their offensive line looks like Arkansas (which beat A&M 26-7). They don't really block you. They try to finesse you."

Block or finesse, Iowa State's line has sprung Green for 991 yards this year and 3,609 for his career. He is the top rusher and scorer in Iowa State history and stands fourth on the all-time Big Eight rushing list, trailing only Terry Miller, Joe Washington and Steve Owens.

Texas A&M (7-4) can counter with its own outstanding tailback, junior Curtis Dickey. Dickey rushed for 1,146 yards this year and had seven 100-yard games, including 230 against TCU.

The 6-1, 205-pound Dickey was a key weapon in an offense that produced a school record 4,296 total yards. Another major ingredient was sophomore quarterback Mike Mosley, who passed for 1,157 yards and set a school record by completing 57.6 percent of his throws.

The Aggies also have Tony Franklin, who has set 18 NCAA records as a placekicker.

"With Franklin, Texas A&M is a scoring threat every time it crosses the 50-yard line," Iowa State Coach Earle Bruce said.

Mosley became a passer after Coach Emory Bellard resigned and was replaced by Tom Wilson for the final five games. Wilson scrapped the wishbone offense the Aggies had been running and installed the "I," which allowed Mosley to throw more often.

"We've been inconsistent on offense all year and we're hopeful the preparation for the bowl game gave us time to put in some new ideas and fully recover from the transition period between coaches," Wilson said.

Iowa State landed in the Hall of Fame Bowl after reeling off four straight victories to close the regular season. The clincher was a 20-16 victory over Colorado, the first time the Cyclones had beaten the Buffaloes in 15 years.

"I feel that we played our best football of the season in the last three games," Bruce said. "I just hope we can take up from where we left off against Colorado and put forth an all-out effort."

Iowa State will be without 10 players who were declared scholastically ineligible, including three defensive starters — rover Tom Perticone, cornerback Jerry Washington and tackle Chris Boskey, a freshman who was voted the Big Eight's newcomer of the year. Also sidelined was No. 2 quarterback Terry Rubley, who was the starter at the beginning of the season.

Junior college transfer Walter Grant took over the quarterbacking chores at midyear and will start tonight. He passed for 877 yards and five touchdowns and is the team's No. 3 rusher with 237 yards.

Six 'Pokes Picked

NEW YORK (UPI) — Running back Walter Payton of Chicago was the leading vote-getter, but the Dallas Cowboys and Los Angeles Rams dominated the United Press International National Football Conference All Star team.

Payton, who was named on 49 of a possible 56 ballots, was one of the 12 players not from the Cowboys and Rams on the team, matching the number from those two teams. Dallas and Los Angeles finished the regular season tied for the best record in the NFC, 12-4, so their representation was not totally unexpected.

Named to the offensive squad from Dallas, which won its last six games, were running back Tony Dorsett, tight end Billy Joe DuPree and guard Herbert Scott. The Cowboy defensive players selected were tackle Randy White, strong safety Charlie Waters and free safety Cliff Harris.

Dallas enters the playoffs with a chance to become the first team to win a third Super Bowl.

The Rams, who led the NFL in defense en route to a sixth straight NFC West title, had four players on the defensive unit plus offensive guard Dennis Harrah and rookie kicker Frank Corral. The Ram defensive players selected were end Jack Youngblood, tackle Larrs Brooks, outside linebacker Jim Youngblood and cornerback Pat Thomas.

Philadelphia placed three players on the team — wide receiver Harold Carmichael, offensive tackle Stan Walters and middle linebacker Bill Bergey. St. Louis and Minnesota were represented by two each, offensive tackle Dan Dierdorf and center Tom Banks from the Cardinals and wide receiver Sammy White and outside linebacker Matt Blair from the Vikings.

Completing the squad, in addition to Payton, were quarterback Archie Manning of New Orleans, defensive end Lee Roy Selmon of Tampa Bay, cornerback Willie Buchanon of Green Bay and punter Tom Skladany of Detroit.

A panel of 56 football writers, four from each of the 14 NFC cities, comprised the UPI selection board. Behind Payton's total of 49 votes were Carmichael (47), Dierdorf (45) and White (41).

Dallas and Los Angeles also dominated the second team with four players each. Named from the Cowboys were wide receiver Drew Pearson, offensive tackle Pat Donovan, quarterback Roger Staubach and defensive end Ed Jones. Chosen from the Rams were offensive tackle Doug France, guard Tom Mack, cornerback Rod Perry and free safety Bill Simpson.

Other offensive players on the second team were wide receiver Ahmad Rashad of Minnesota, tight end Henry Childs of New Orleans, guard Revie Sorey of Chicago, center Jim Clack of New York and running backs Terdell Middleton of Green Bay and Wilbert Montgomery of Philadelphia.

Dockery Approves Fund For Morris

As Mrs. Mary Ann Morris maintains a vigil at Methodist Hospital, where her son, Michael, remains in critical condition, a fund has been established to help with expenses.

Morris, a walk-on wide receiver for Texas Tech, has been in a comatose state since Dec. 11 when he underwent a thyroid operation and sustained two cardiac arrests within a short time. Since the operation and the heart troubles, he has been unconscious.

Mrs. Morris has been in Lubbock since that time, as she and members of the family waited at the bedside. Expenses of their stay here — the family is from Dallas — as well as those from Morris' hospital care will have to be handled, commented Tech football coach Rex Dockery in praising creation of the fund.

Contacted in South Texas while on a recruiting trip, Dockery said, "This is a fine gesture on the part of West Texans. Mike made a definite contribution to our program last fall, although he was not on scholarship.

"I heartily endorse the fund, and hope that many supporters of Texas Tech will help this family in this time of illness."

The fund is being administered through Texas Commerce bank, reported Tech officials.

Persons wanting to contribute to the fund can send donations to the Mike Morris Medical Fund, Texas Commerce Bank, Box 841, Lubbock, 79408.

Morris has been listed in critical condition since the time of cardiac arrests.

Last month, Morris was called upon when injuries cut into Tech's receiver corps. He caught a 21-yard pass which set up the winning touchdown in Tech's 22-21 upset win over the University of Houston.

Tough Racket

Thoughts of a racketball bum...

FEELING MEAN TODAY. Where is he? Where's old Buster. It's 10 o'clock and he's not here yet. Always late. Typical. Typical. He's just putting off the inevitable. Probably overslept, but he'll still tell me car trouble. He always does. There he is. Look at those warmups. Bet they cost him nine bucks down at C.R. Anthony's.

"Hey, Buster. Car trouble, ugh? Oh, just got here myself. Good looking warmups. From a brother all right. In Germany. Had them tailor-made just for you. Nice, Buster, real nice."

When did Anthony's open a store in Hamburg? Doesn't matter. Remember what your old daddy used to tell you, "It's not the uniform that makes the player. It's the player that makes the uniform." These old gray, baggy things of mine will do unless the string breaks. Germany, big deal, , hah.

"Yeah, let's take a few warmups."

Look at him. Look at him Everything by the books. Knees slightly bent and the whole bit. I'll make him bend his knees in about 45 minutes when he starts begging for mercy. I just hope he revised his will before he left. Look at him over there, he really thinks he's something. It is going to be a royal pleasure to take him apart, bit by bit.

"Yeah, Buster, anytime you are. Closest to the line wins serve."

I know good old honest Buster just cheated me out of first serve. It must be true about what I've been hearing about him and the waitress. I'll have to stay on my toes, since I'm playing with a cheat. I've never lost a serve by eight feet before. He had to move his mark when I bent over to tie my shoelace. It doesn't matter, though. I'll just break his serve, a little faster than usual, and then hang this turkey up to cure.

"That's right Buster, 8-0."

I knew I shouldn't have brought this metal racket. What's today? Thursday. I always play better on Thursday's with a wooden racket.

There, I've got the serve. He thought he could cross me up with that old lob to the backwall. I was teaching that one when you were still nursing on your first racket, Buster. Look at him with his head down. He doesn't have any pride. Don't pity him, though. Finish him off.

"Yeah, Buster, your serve. Yeah, still 8-0."

They should clean this place every once in a while. I'll have to have a talk with the manager. That dirt keeps getting in my eyes. And those lights. Too many COWBOYS' NEXT FOE? — Minnesota back Chuck Foreman is despondent after losing a fumble in the game the Vikings lost to Oakland, ending the regular season. He and his team will face Atlanta this weekend for a shot at the Cowboys next week in the National Football League playoffs. (AP Laserphoto)

Landry Likes Pearson's Play

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboy Coach Tom Landry says veteran halfback Preston Pearson is not being phased out but respects his right to say so.

Pearson strongly criticized his lack of playing time after Sunday's 30-7 victory over the New York Jets. He suggested the Cowboys were trying to get rid of him.

Landry said Tuesday of Pearson's comments: "It's not true, but it's understandable."

Landry explained that he didn't want to risk injury to his 34-year-old veteran of four Super Bowls who is particularly adept at pass catching.

"Preston didn't work out for two weeks because of minor injuries," said Landry. "He's just too valuable to risk in a game that doesn't mean anything. He's a starter for me. He's a key player in our system."

Landry added "He believes he should start at tailback (ahead of Tony Dorsett) and I respect him for what he says and what he feels. He's not being phased out."

And speaking of playing time, Landry wishes his team was getting some this weekend.

"It wouldn't bother me to be playing this week," said Landry. "It's very difficult for us. We just work better under pressure.

"We'll work Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, take Saturday and Sunday off, then start work again Christmas morning. We need the work."

Landry said "You start a new season when you get into the playoffs. It's sudden death and the games are very unpredictable."

Landry said the only advantage to being off is "that you might catch 'em (your opponent) with injury problems...That would be the main advantage.

"But the big advantage in playing every week is that you get to keep a regimented schedule."

The Cowboys will play either Minnesota or Atlanta on Dec. 30th at 3 p.m. in Texas Stadium.

"Minnesota has a strong veteran team with a lot of playoff experience," said Landry. "I think they kind of resent the fact that nobody gives tem any credit and they've been to four Super Bowl games. They will play well."

He said "Atlanta is a blitzing, gambling, unpredictable team and you have to make the big plays against them."

If Atlanta beats Philadelphia in the joust of National Conference wild card teams Sunday, then Atlanta will come to Dallas. If Philadelphia wins, the Eagles will go to Los Angeles and the Vikings will come here.

Injured fullback Robert Newhouse will likely be healed enough to start.

Waters Wants To Face Minnesota

DALLAS (AP) — Charlie Waters has his favorite candidate for the Dallas Cowboys in the upcoming National Football League playoffs: Minnesota.

"I'd like to get one-on-one with Minnesota again and beat 'em...whip 'em," said the Cowboy strong safety.

The Cowboys lost 21-10 on a Thursday night in October to the Vikings as quarterback Fran Tarkenton had a field day against the Dallas defense.

Dallas will meet Minnesota again in the first round of the divisional playoffs IF Philadelphia defeats Atlanta in the battle of the National Conference wild cards Dec. 24. An Atlanta victory would send the Falcons to Texas Stadium to meet the Cowboys in the Dec. 30 NFC first round game.

"Anytime you go against Tarkenton you get the feeling that he might pull something out of the hat like he did the first time against us," said Waters. "They put in a new offense against us. But I sure think we can beat them now."

Asked if he "feared" Tarkenton, Waters said "there should be a certain amount of fear in any athlete. Minnesota is a legitimate fear. But even if we get Atlanta you have to always respect your opponent."

Waters said the Cowboys have had that "playoff feeling" the last six games.

But Waters added "there is nothing like the playoffs. Every play is recorded in history. Every play could mean the Super Bowl. But there is no way I can compare this team with the one that won the Super Bowl last year until the end of the season."

Waters said if the Cowboys played Atlanta the defending world champions would have a "big advantage in playoff experience. We know how to prepare for playoff games. You have to get serious. It is so important to your future. If you lose a playoff game, you have to reflect on that one game all season."

Waters warned "You don't want to get too uptight preparing for the playoffs."

He said he thought Denver in the last Super Bowl was the perfect example of a team getting too tight.

"They did things differently in the game than they had done all season," said Waters. "They tried to force passes and got turnovers."

Waters was named the Most Popular Cowboy Tuesday in balloting by a dairy, breaking quarterback Roger Staubach's four-year victory streak.

"We have so many big name stars it must have split the vote," Waters laughed.

Waters got an expense paid week vacation in either Acapulco, Hawaii or Aruba.

bright ones for a decent court, especially for us righthanders. They're starting to build these things just for lefties. Reverse discrimination is what it is, if you ask me. I'll ask for court 5 next time. That's a righthanded court.

"That's too bad, Buster. Cramps will get you every time. We can't stop, though, our time's about up."

Listen to that. Cramps. If he doesn't use one excuse, it's another. The only thing cramped is his playing style."Yeah, Buster, 16-5. Playing tough today, big guy."

I couldn't buy a decent shot from a discount house. Buster has no business even staying on the same court with me. You're an ace, ace. Remember I taught him everything he knows. How to step on someones foot and hit them in back of the neck when you can't reach a shot. Look at him smile. I hate you, Buster. And I hate the horse you rode here on. I've got the shot. What a beaut. The old double-clutch, fake to the right but come back to the left shot—with underspin. That's one I forgot to teach you Buster.

"Short? What do you mean short, Buster. Well, if that's what you think."

Not only am I playing with a homewrecker and a cheat, but also a complusive liar. Never in my three months of playing racketball, have I been cheated like that. If that's what you want, Buster, then that's what you'll get.

"Sorry, Buster, didn't mean to step on your hand. I'll watch it next time."

I should have stepped on your face. I've got the shot. Way to fire, Pierre. That should tie it up."

"What do you mean, it didn't hit the wall. Of course, it did."

Buster is a dead man. Buster is a dead man. Buster is a dead man.

"18-10? It can't be, Buster. Remember the last time I served I had 15. That's right, I'm sure. Buster, would I cheat you?"

Of course, I would. And your entire family out of the grocery money, if I had a chance. Stay with me legs, stay with me. When is this rally going to end? Here it comes, just like that autumn moon. He'll never get to that one. Never.

"Buster!!! You hit me, Buster. Right in the back of the head. What do you mean, play it again."

He did that on purpose. Hit me on purpose. He knew he could never get the ball back to the wall. Well, it's just the pupil teaching the master, remember that. If not on earth, Buster, you'll pay someday.

"That's it, Buster, 21-19. Great game. Yeah, same time next week. Say hello to Nirva and the kids.

"Hey, Buster, enjoyed it."

Bum: Week Makes Difference

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Coach Bum Phillips says a week will make a lot of difference in the performance of the Oilers when they travel to Miami Sunday to play the Dolphins in a first round National Football League playoff game.

An outstanding performance by San Diego combined with a flat showing by the Oilers resulted in a 45-24 Charger victory in the regular season finale Sunday.

But the Oilers, with a year-long reputation as a hot and cold team, will be ready for their first playoff berth in nine years, Phillips said.

"We'll bounce back," Phillips said. "There shouldn't have been a difference in these two games but there was. We wanted to win Sunday but because we were in the playoffs anyway, we didn't need to. I know people are gonna think grown men should be above that, but it's human nature. It happens to everybody."

Phillips, who has built the Oilers from one of the worst teams in the NFL to playoff status, says the Oilers haven't learned to be a good team all the time.

"We know how to come from behind, we know how to score points and we know how to stay in a game," Phillips said. "But we don't know how to get ourselves ready for a routine team the week after we've played a game we had to win."

Phillips could have pointed to several examples over the Oilers season, but the most glaring Oiler off-performance came Sunday against the Chargers.

"We had to beat New Orleans last week and we did," Phillips said. "That put us in the playoffs. We needed to win Sunday to guarantee the homefield advantage, but it just wasn't the same.

"A team like Pittsburgh is used to being good and it stays on top, play after play and week after week. We can't do that yet. We've got just enough young players they they all take turns messing up."

The Oilers go into the game with a 10-6 record for their first trip to the playoffs in nine seasons.

They'll be led by Earl Campbell, the first rookie to lead the National Football League in rushing since Jim Brown's 942 yards in 1957.

Campbell finished with 1,450 yards on 302 carries. He had 77 yards on 14 carries against San Diego and clinched the title Monday night when Miami's Delvin Williams gained six yards on five carries against New England.

Williams could have won the title with 199 yards rushing against the Patriots.

Ace Recorded

Ellis M. Mills aced the 15th hole at the Treasure Island golf course. He used a 9-iron in turning the feat on the 76-yard hole.

Rozelle Likes Domed Stadium For Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — An 80,000-seat, domed sports stadium similar to one in Pontiac, Mich., would be NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle's dream for Chicago. But he said Tuesday he isn't about to recommend such a complex to city officials pondering the matter.

Rozelle was guest speaker at a meeting of The Economic Club of Chicago, a prestige association that lists the who's who of Chicago business and industry among its membership.

Dimmitt Rolls Past Westerners

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

The last time the Lubbock High Westerners were able to win a basketball game, there were 20 days before Christmas. Oh, the good old days...

However, reminiscing was about as close as the Westerners came Tuesday night at the Lubbock gym to ending their losing streak.

The Dimmitt Bobcats sank the first three buckets to set the pace of the contest and then strolled to an easy 71-35 nondistrict victory.

In fact, half of the first quarter had elapsed before Lubbock High could get on the scoreboard. Forward Jeff Manley broke the ice for Lubbock High to narrow the deficit to 6-2.

But that was about as close as the Westerners were going to come to getting back in the game. The Bobcats 10-6 the rest of the period, and Dimmitt had a 15-8 advantage.

Postman Mark Summers topped the Dimmitt scoring attack with 20 points.

The 6-5 Bobcat senior put two of his total in from under the basket the first time down court as Dimmitt was off and running again.

"There were times that we played well," said Lubbock High coach Craig Wells. "But we can only play well for two or three minutes at a time. We're not consistent for an entire quarter."

The Westerners proved Wells' point by bothering the Bobcats with a halfcourt trap. But the Bobcats were equally as effective in keeping Lubbock High off the scoreboard.

Then Dimmitt was able to break the trap and get the ball inside.

Summers seemed to break the Westerners defensive spirit by connecting on a bucket in the lane. Lubbock High then became over aggressive and quickly wound up putting Dimmitt in the bonus situation.

Postman Randy Roberts and quard Jack Stewart both connected on both ends of one-and-one situations as the Bobcats built a 31-14 lead. Dimmitt ended up taking a 35-16 advantage to the halftime dressing room.

"There was really nothing we stressed at the half," said Dimmitt Coach Ken Cleveland. "We just wanted our players to keep hustling."

And hustle they did.

Dimmitt substituted freely and the constant supply of fresh players kept the pace active.

"We like to think we can substitute if it's allowed," laughed the Bobcat coach. "We have several people on the bench that has helped our team even in the close games."

Though the pace of the third quarter was active, both teams constantly missed scoring opportunities. And when when Westerner forward Danny Andrews sank a basket from the left corner the two teams ended the period shooting dead even. The two teams put 12 points each in the hoop.

Besides Summers, other Bobcats in double figures included Vincente Salinas with 13 and Roberts had 10.

Guard Bobby Turner and forward Pete Richarte both topped the Westerner scoring effort with six points each.

In the fourth quarter, the Bobcats picked up where they had left off—scoring.

When guard John Merritt sank both ends of a one-and-one, Dimmitt had a 54-28 lead with 6:23 left to play.

The Bobcats increased their lead to 30-points, but the Westerners were able to trade baskets the rest of the way.

The win raises Dimmitt's record to 9-2, while the loss drops Lubbock High to 2-11.

Monterey Wins 11th Despite Turnovers

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

It may be a time of goodwill and giving. That's fine, said Monterey coach Joe Michalka. He just wishes the Plainsmen wouldn't carry the idea onto the basketball court.

"We just played very poorly," said Michalka. "Our ball handing is terrible. How many times did we turn it over?'

The answer is 21.

"We really played bad." he continued.

There was one consolation for Michalka—his team still managed to defeat Estacado 66-58. But it didn't come easy.

For a time, though, it appeared the Plainsmen were ready to play the part of Scrooge before the estimated crowd of 200 or so.

Monterey, which upped its season record to 11-3, held a 12-point lead — 37-25 —at the end of the second quarter. It was about that time most felt the game was on ice. But Estacado had other plans.

With 1:01 left in the third period, the Matadors somehow had cut that comfy 12-point MHS margin to only one, 43-42, after John Jones hit the back side of a two-point free throw attempt. Jones had canned both ends only 10 seconds prior to that to cut Monterey's lead to two points.

But as time was running out, Monterey's Craig Ehlo bucketed a 16-foot jumper to give the Plainsmen a three-point advantage. And that was as close as Estacado would ever come again.

"Hey," said Estacado coach J.J. Wood, now 5-8 on the year. "I was really proud of the way we played. If we could have played the second half like we did the first, we might have won.

"But we just weren't aggressive enought, I thought. There were times we just stood around. I think that goes back to most of our players just coming out off football. They just aren't as quick as they will be in a few more weeks."

Despite outhitting Monterey 23-21 from the field, Estacado trailed in the free-throw department 26-12.

"Anytime you play Monterey you know they're going to hit the free throws," continued Woods. "They really hurt us from the line."

Frank Malone was the most productive Plainsmen, hitting all six of his free throws. Ehlo, who had 16 points for the night, hit eight of his nine chairty tosses.

In all, Monterey canned 26-37 tosses.

"I guess we did hit pretty well from the line," said Michalka.

He continued: "I don't think we were physically tired. (The Plainsmen had played the night before). At least, we shouldn't be. This is getting to be the time of year that you just have to gut it up a little more. We were probably just a little mentally tired.

"This was a good game for us to win and not play well."

Using the outside shooting of Winston Gipson, EHS' leader with 20 points, Estacado outscored Monterey 17-8 in the third period. However, in the deciding final stanza, Estacado hit a cold streak and Monterey took advantage of it, outhitting the Matadors 21-16.

Estacado held the lead only three times, with the last coming at the 2:59 mark in the first period when the Mats were on top 10-8 after Mike Chatham hit a 10-foot jump shot from the right side of the key.

Wild World Of Coaching Pro Football

Pat War Continues

DENVER (AP) — Like the prettiest girl at the prom, Chuck Fairbanks has become the object of everyone's affection — the University of Colorado, which seeks to make him its new head coach, and the New England Patriots, who want Fairbanks to stay and honor his contract.

According to comments from both sides, the tug-of-war doesn't seem likely to end soon.

"Chuck Fairbanks is going to be our coach," Colorado athletic director Eddie Crowder said emphatically at a Tuesday press conference. "He is our coach. He wants to coach here, we want him here, and he will coach here in 1979."

Crowder said he was convinced that Fairbanks, a longtime friend, would honor a verbal commitment to take the job.

But New England officials weren't giving in so easily.

Fairbanks, after acknowledging to team owner William H. Sullivan Jr. that he was leaving to accept the Colorado job, was suspended without pay and evicted from the team's clubhouse prior to the Patriots' 23-3 National Football League loss to Miami on Monday night. Sullivan, saying he felt betrayed, denied Fairbanks' request to coach the team that night. Assistants Hank Bullough and Ron Erhardt were temporarily placed in charge of the team.

But on Tuesday team vice president Chuck Sullivan, a lawyer and son of the Patriots' owner, said the NFL team wants Fairbanks on the sidelines for the upcoming playoffs and for the remaining four years of his contract.

The New York Daily News quoted Sullivan as saying Tuesday night that the club hasn't given up hope that Fairbanks will stay. Sullivan said he was basing his 11th-hour pitch on the belief that "he hasn't finally accepted the Colorado offer."

Sullivan suggested that Fairbanks tell Colorado he is turning down the job, "but if they want to offer it again after the Super Bowl we'll fight it out."

Sullivan added that if Fairbanks doesn't veto the Colorado offer, at least for the time being, the Patriots will take legal action. "We will sue Colorado for substantial damages for inducing a breach of contract if he leaves without our consent," Sullivan said.

It was unclear if the Patriots really wanted, or expected, Fairbanks to return to the club or if the team was maneuvering for position in case of a lawsuit from Fairbanks.

Fairbanks, believed to be in New York, has been unavailable for comment.

In Denver, meanwhile, Crowder seemed undeterred by the reports that the Patriots sought to hang on to their 45-year-old coach, who went to New England in 1973 and soon turned a hapless outfit into a playoff contender.

"All I know is that I talked with Chuck this morning, and he said he'd take the job," Crowder said Tuesday afternoon. "We've been close friends for 20 years. Neither of us felt there was any need to finalize our agreement in writing."

"I think you have to understand that this is a family-type relationship," Crowder continued. "There's a lot of trust between us. We agreed we had a deal. I said 'come.' He said he'd be here. Whenever he can resolve his problems in New England he'll be here. In the meantime, he'll assemble a staff and they can begin working here."

Earlier in the day, Crowder announced that Fairbanks would be assisted by Jerry Pettibone and Gene Hochevar, two men who coached under Fairbanks at Oklahoma and who now are in private business in Oklahoma City. Pettibone was the Sooners' recruiting coordinator, an area that has been a weakness at Colorado.

Crowder, in outlining the contract package to be offered to Fairbanks, said he believed the former Oklahoma coach was coming to Colorado because "first of all, he has a great desire to return to coaching college football, and secondly, he has interest in bringing his family to a western area where he can be involved in a great program and where he'll find a challenge. He loves Colorado.

"I think he has found pro football very satisfying, but also whimsical — on the basis of one call you can be eliminated from being a championship team."

LHS Cagers Destroyed By Dimmitt

Lori Dyer knocked in 18 points, only to barely edge out other cagers in double figures, as the Dimmitt High girls team delivered a 103-29 shellacking to the Lubbock High Westerners.

DHS came out of the blocks blazing as they jumped to a 25 point lead in the first period, and they never let the sure kill escape their grasp after inflicting that first deadly 31-6 wound.

Mary Jones was the lead scorer for the Westerners with a tally of 16, but she was the only one to hit consistantly against the Bobcats. The loss gave LHS a 1-13 ledger for the season while the Bobcats took the opposite extreme with a 13-1 mark for the season.

Borger Girls Topple Coronado

The Coronado girls basketball team went to a 9-4 ledger for the season after outlasting the Borger girls team 59-45 Tuesday night.

After falling behind in the first period, the Mustangs came back in the final minutes of the second quarter with scoring help coming from Vanessa (who had a net of 14 for the night) and went on top of BHS by a margin of four points.

The Borger Bulldogs would never regain the lead as CHS outmustered their efforts on the boards to end the clash with a 14-point advantage.

Brenda Coffen accumulated a tally of 15 points for Borger to earn the rights to the high point berth.

Who'll Head Giants?

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — George Allen wants the Giants, but the Giants don't want George Allen. The Giants want Joe Paterno, but it looks like Joe Paterno doesn't want the Giants.

After Monday's house cleaning that left the New York Giants without a coach and general manager, an impressive list began lining up to fill the jobs created by Coach John McVay's firing and Director of Operations Andy Robustelli's resignation.

Allen, late of the Washington Redskins and Los Angeles Rams, expressed immediate interest in filling both jobs. But Allen can forget it. There's no way way Wellington Mara would hire him.

Allen has long been one of Mara's least favorite people. The Redskins ran up the score on the Giants quite a few times, Allen has often had a shaky relationship with the media, qualities hardly endearing to the image-conscious Mara family.

Despite his open campaigning for the job, Allen doesn't have a shot for the same reasons Carroll Rosenbloom was willing to swallow the coach's huge contract with the Los Angeles Rams. Allen wants full and complete control, which is not an easy thing for any NFL owner to give.

Sources on the team chuckle when Allen's name is mentioned. "That's nice," was the reaction of one Giant official when he was told of Allen's interest. Another said it was absurd that Allen would be offered the job.

But Paterno is a different story. Although Mara indicated he would rather hire two men for the two jobs, he would make an exception for Paterno.

Aides Want Security

WASHINGTON (AP) — When a head coach in the National Football League is fired, his staff usually gets the axe along with him. The assistants now are thinking about job security.

There soon may be formed the NFL Coaches Association, a union of assistants who will seek a minimum wage and a better pension plan in addition to job security.

However, the majority of the 210 assistant coaches who worked in the NFL this season first must indicate they want to form a union.

Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said Tuesday his organization wrote all NFL assistants last week to find out if there is enough interest in forming a union.

He said he already has received some signed cards and many telephone inquiries, adding that at least 100 coaches would have to indicate their interest in order to make more formal plans.

Two years ago, according to the NFL Management Council, bargaining arm of the league's owners, a similiar organizational move failed when fewer than 30 percent of the coaches approved a petition for a union election.

"We consider coaches to be supervisory employees and not entitled to a bargaining unit," said Rusty Martin, a spokesman for the Management Council.

Garvey said the NFLPA took its action because it was approached by assistants who wanted the union's help.

"Just look at the situation they are in," said Garvey.

Is Cheating Way Of Life In Basketball?

By FRED ROTHENBERG
Associated Press Sports Writer

Reggie Carter knows he must go through life wearing a scarlet letter. It's a big "C" and it stands for cheater.

"When you're hit with something like this, it just depresses you. People remember the bad things and they won't let you forget. It slows you up, and you just can't shake it."

Carter, a very gifted backcourtman, was a highly recruited senior at Long Island's Lutheran High School three years ago. Hawaii, very far away from his native New York, won the recruiting battle.

But in the end, Carter lost the war.

Like several of his teammates and many other college players across the country, Carter accepted free plane rides to and from his new school, a car and money for an apartment — all in violation of NCAA regulations. But he was caught.

Carter pleads guilty with an explanation.

"I was recruited by Rick Pitino and I figured he knew when he said everything was legit," said Carter. "Then when I got there I found an entirely different situation."

Carter said Pitino told him that the air fare from the islands and back would come from money he made working at a job in Hawaii. "But the job never came," said Carter, now playing at St. John's after sitting out one year as a transfer and 14 additional games as his NCAA punishment. "I worked one day tarring a roof, but that was just a manufactured job."

Pitino, now head coach at Boston University, was a graduate assistant when he recruited Carter. "I had no idea Hawaii cheated. Otherwise I wouldn't have been there," he said. "I never promised Reggie Carter any more than room, books and tuition.

"I got him a job in New York tarring a roof, but he left because he said it was too hot. He called (head coach) Bruce O'Neill, and that's the last thing I heard about the job."

Carter said Pitino told him that his room in Hawaii would be in the dorms. But Carter said there were no dorms available when he got there, so he had to live in an apartment. The NCAA Manual states that if an athlete lives in non-institutional housing, he cannot receive more than the school's official room and board allowance, which was $250.

The apartment he found, Carter said, cost $350 a month. Even though Carter had a roommate, he said the $250 would not stretch to meet his food, clothing and entertainment costs. He said that's how the illegal payments started.

O'Neill, who said he quit the coaching job at Hawaii before he could be fired, said dorm space was limited because in-state students had priority. He admitted the payments to Carter and others.

"We weren't trying to be bandits," O'Neill said. "We just wanted the kids to be able to live, not get rich like they do at some schools. We tried to be as clean as possible, but Hawaii's a very expensive place to live."

Pitino said his recruiting job kept him away from Hawaii most of the year. He said he was furious when he found out, three months after school started, that Carter was off-campus. That's when Pitino said he investigated and found out about the illegalities at Hawaii.

"My agreement with O'Neill was for Reggie to be on campus," Pitino said. "I was concerned about his academics. It was not Reggie Carter's fault. He would never have gone to Hawaii if he knew anything illegal was going on."

O'Neill agrees with Pitino that Carter was never involved in anything illegal before he came to Hawaii. "Most kids go into this with their hands out, but I think Reggie is a fine kid. He has a lot of integrity."

However, he calls Pitino's lack of knowledge about practices at the school "a bunch of crap."

"Rick's trying to protect himself now. He knew every step of the way what went on here," said O'Neill, now a salesman for an Hawaiian TV station and owner of a T-shirt company.

Since Carter lived so far away from campus, he needed a car. He said he turned his season tickets, which he could sell at face value, over to O'Neill, and then he got his car.

The illegal payments were going on before Carter arrived but, he said, the players he talked to didn't give him the straight facts.

"The team had five players from the New York area, and if it was like this, I thought one of the guys would tell me," Carter said.

Pitino, who was in his second year at Hawaii when Carter was a freshman there, said he was also kept in the dark by O'Neill. "I was just out of college. This was my first coaching job, and nobody I talked to had heard anything bad about Bruce O'Neill. As soon as I found out about the illegal things, I told O'Neill I was leaving.

"I assumed everything was legit, but I must take the blame for not knowing enough myself. I must live with that. Before Reggie came to Hawaii, he was definitely not a cheater."

Two More Guilty?

By FRED ROTHENBERG

Oral Roberts and Larry Gillman are men of vision, but the NCAA may have caught them cheating on their eye charts.

Gillman parlayed a reputation as a master recruiter into the head coaching job at East Carolina last year. On his way to East Carolina he passed through Houston and recruited Otis Birdsong, stopped at San Francisco and recruited Winford Boynes, moved on to Minnesota and recruited Ray Williams.

At East Carolina, Gillman aggressively recruited some standout players like Oliver Mack and Al Tyson.

The NCAA was investigating East Carolina's basketball program last month for possible recruiting violations.

Oral Roberts, the evangelist, wants a winning basketball team very badly at the school bearing his name. Lake Kelly, the second-year coach, is going about it his way. For various reasons, eight players transferred out after last year's 13-14 season.

The NCAA was investigating Oral Roberts' basketball program last month for possible recruiting violations.

Sources close to the East Carolina program say Tyson, a local high school senior last year, was hidden out in a motel by members of the basketball staff for the two days before national letter of intent signing day. It was learned that a coach from the University of Mississippi, for one, was unable to locate Tyson when he came to Greenville, N.C. on a recruiting mission.

The sources also said that Tyson took part in illegal workouts, supervised by the Carolina staff, while he was still in high school. He also received a pair of sneakers from the coaching staff, also illegal according to NCAA rules.

East Carolina athletic officials declined comment on the charges.

Lionel Worrell was graduated earlier this year from Oral Roberts. He said he wanted high school kids to know what really happened in college basketball.

Worrell, who is changing his name to Lionel Salaam, said coaches promised air fare to the players, and that the school did sometimes pay for the plane travel of several players. Other times, air fare was made by working, sometimes at no-show jobs.

For work, the players came to Bill Roberts, nephew of the university president. Bill Roberts was executive vice president for construction, and he doled out the campus jobs at $7.50 an hour.

The NCAA Manual allows athletes to take jobs provided by the university, but they must show up for the work and compensation must be by the going rate.

"You don't work the 40 hours all the time and you don't work hard all the time, either," said Worrell. "We were also getting paid more than the local laborers."

Worrell said players could receive promised cars by putting in for weekend overtime pay, even though they didn't show up for work.

Oral Roberts athletic officials had no comment on the matter.

"Oral Roberts is supposed to be a religious school," Worrell said. "It's not supposed to be like the other places."

Borger Nips Pony Cagers

BORGER (Special) John Smith hit a 3-point play with four seconds remaining to lift Borger to a 47-46 victory over Coronado here Tuesday night in a game as close as the final count.

And to carry the similarities even further, the two squads are both 8-6 after the game.

Neither team could pull away, as CHS held a 5-point lead in the first half, Borger a 6-point lead in the last half.

Down the stretch, Coronado was in front, but Borger fired, Smith got the rebound and was fouled as he went up for the shot with four seconds.

His goal tied it at 56, and his free shot shoved the Bulldogs in front.

Coronado then tried to get off a shot, but the Bulldogs intercpeted the inbounds pass.

Lubbock Man Wins Tourney

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (Special) — Andy White, a Lubbock karate instructor, won first place in the Black Belt Heavyweight division of the New Mexico International Martial Arts Association tournament held here over the weekend.

Koreans Tie In Competitions

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Political foes South and North Korea battled to a scoreless tie in soccer today and shared the final gold medal in the Asian Games, competition enlivened by China's emergence as a major threat to Japan's dominance in Asian sports.

Japan's 25 gold medals in 29 swimming races provided the winning margin for its overall total of 70 golds, 60 bronzes and 47 bronzes, short of its 75-49-51 four years ago.

China beat the Japanese at track and field and gymnastics, dominated table tennis and even prevented Japan's favored men's volleyball team from winning a gold in Asia's version of the Olympics.

Spinks Sues Promoter For Libel

DETROIT (AP) — An attorney for Leon Spinks has filed a libel suit against Robert Arum, accusing the New York boxing promoter of telling reporters that Spinks drank every night and probably was on drugs before he lost to Muhammad Ali.

The lawsuit filed in Wayne County Circuit Court by Detroit attorney Ed Bell also names as co-defendants The Detroit News and Time Inc.

"After the fight in New Orleans (in September), Arum told a group of reporters that Leon had been drunk every night before the fight, that he was probably on drugs and that he would never fight again," Bell said Tuesday. "Those comments were uncalled for and served to damage Leon's reputation and professional status as a prizefighter."

Bell said he contacted Arum in the past month demanding a retraction. "Arum responded by sending a letter to all the newspapers and magazines categorically denying that he ever made the comments," Bell said.

Oriole Sale In Future?

BALTIMORE (AP) — Former U.S. Treasury Secretary William E. Simon says by the first of the year he hopes to own a baseball team — specifically the Baltimore Orioles.

After numerous talks with Oriole board chairman Jerold C. Hoffberger, Simon said Tuesday, "We've talked long enough, now let's get down to nut-cracking time.

"We're going to get together after Christmas, and I expect to get things resolved. I don't like to beat around the bush, and neither does Jerry," the 51-year-old Simon said. "That's not the way I do business.

"It has reached the point where that (meeting) will be it, one way or another," he added.

Simon said he doesn't have a contract to purchase the Baltimore team yet, "but I hope to have one after our meeting."

Cowboy Cheerleaders File Suit

DALLAS (UPI) — The Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders Inc. say a poster entitled "The Ex-Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders" depicting five young women in replicas of official Cowboy cheerleader uniforms but with untied halter tops, falsely represents the real cheerleaders.

The cheerleaders organization, a subsidiary of the Cowboys football club, has filed suit in federal court against the distributors of the topless imitation, charging the "exes" poster will blot its image. The organization is seeking to halt sales of the poster which has gained increasing notoriety since its recent publication in "Playboy" magazine.

Both posters depict five young women with somewhat sultry expressions wearing the traditional scanty Cowboy cheerleader uniforms. But the real cheerleaders' midriff tops are tied shut and the former cheerleaders' are flung open.

The real cheerleaders charge in their suit the distributors of the more revealing poster have violated copyright laws and laws against false representation and they seek at least $20,000 in damages, plus legal fees, from the defendants.

The suit also asks that the court seize all undistributed copies of the "exes" poster and asks that the distributors of the poster be enjoined from producing or selling any more copies.

Named as defendants in the suit are Scoreboard Posters Inc., Texas Cowgirls Inc. and Arny Freytag, identified as the maker and distributor of the imitation posters.

King Due Back In Lineup

RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Star forward Bernard King, arrested earlier in the week on three counts, is expected to be in the starting lineup tonight when the New Jersey Nets face the Houston Rockets in Piscataway.

King was arrested early Monday for allegedly driving while intoxicated, driving without a license and possession of a small amount of cocaine. He was ordered to appear in Brooklyn Criminal Court Jan. 9 to answer the charges.

New Jersey General Manager Charlie Theokas said Tuesday the National Basketball Association team will wait for the court's ruling before taking any action on its own.

"We will review the situation on the ninth. It's in the hands of the courts at this point," Theokas said. "The league is monitoring the situation. Right now, we just want to get Bernard back playing. We've got seven games between now and then."

According to Lt. William Wern of the New York City Police Department, King was "asleep at the wheel" of his 1979 Corvette at 5:15 a.m. on a Brooklyn street. Wern said the car was in a "traffic lane," with the motor running.

King called the Nets' office Monday morning, informing trainer Fritz Massman he would not be coming to practice. Nets officials were unable to reach King until Tuesday morning, when he met with Theokas, Coach Kevin Loughery and owner Joseph Taub.

Fort Hayes Fires Football Coach

HAYS, Kan. (AP) — Bill Giles, football coach at Fort Hays State University for the past seven seasons, has been been dismissed by Athletic Director Phil Wilson.

Wilson declined comment on the firing, but Giles confirmed the action in a conversation with KAYS-TV.

"The only thing I can say is that I was fired by Mr. Phil Wilson, the athletic director," the 46-year-old coach said Tuesday night, adding that Wilson indicated his overall coaching record was a factor in the dimissal.

Wilson said only that he would have an announcement on the situation later in the week.

Giles has compiled a 24-44-3 record since taking the Fort Hays helm in1972, and was 6-5-1 this past season. The Tigers finished third in the Central States Intercollegiate Conference with a 4-2-1 mark.

Fort Hays' best season under Giles was 1976, when the Tigers were 5-4 overall and 5-1 in league play to tie for the conference title.

Earl Remains 'The Pearl'

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

He came to New York on Nov. 10, 1971, in a trade that sent Dave Stallworth and Mike Riordan to Baltimore. He helped the Knicks to a championship in 1973, and when the club fell on hard times the past few years, his magic show made watching basketball at Madison Square Garden an enjoyable experience.

Earl Monroe played his 500th game in a Knicks uniform Tuesday night, scoring 18 points in a reserve role as New York clobbered Indiana 130-102.

After the game he reflected on his years with the Knicks.

"Certainly, winning the 1973 title is my No. 1 memory," said the Pearl, now 34. "Bill Bradley, Walt Frazier, Dave DeBusschere, Willis Reed — playing with them was most exhilirating."

Elsewhere in the National Basketball Association, the San Antonio Spurs beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 103-96, the Milwaukee Bucks whipped the Seattle SuperSonics 128-99, the Chicago Bulls defeated the Atlanta Hawks 101-95 and the Philadelphia 76ers topped the San Diego Clippers 124-113.

It hasn't all been fun and games for Monroe. The years have taken their toll, especially on his legs, which twice have needed surgery.

"They are still not fine and dandy, but you learn to cope," he said. "When you play a long time, it's a matter of learning what you can expect from your body."

Another adjustment came this fall, when the Knicks demanded Monroe take a sizeable pay cut. He ended up missing 15 games before the contract dispute was settled.

"I've learned more here than just playing the game," he said. "I've learned how to cope with the treatment."

And then there has been the Knicks' mediocrity, a combined record of 161-167 the past four years.

"Losing eats me up," he said. "It makes me toss and turn — I actually lose sleep. I haven't slept too well the last few years."

Monroe would have slept like a baby last night, but he had to catch a flight to Atlanta for the Knicks' game against the Hawks tonight.

New York was never in trouble against Indiana, racing to a 30-18 lead on a Monroe jumper late in the first quarter. It was 59-48 at halftime, 92-76 after three periods and 110-82 after five minutes of the fourth quarter. The 130 points were a season high for the Knicks.

"We're just playing terrible ball," said Pacers Coach Bobby Leonard.

Spurs 113, Cavaliers 106

San Antonio won its fourth in a row and climbed into first place in the Central Division as James Silas scored 28 points and George Gervin got 23.

The lead changed hands 19 times in the second half before Mike Gale put the Spurs ahead to stay 89-88 with 11:22 to go. Coby Dietrick capped a three-basket spurt that opened a 107-98 lead for the Spurs with 3:16 to play and the Cavaliers didn't get close again.

Bucks 128, Sonics 99

Milwaukee, led by Marques Johnson's 25 points, raced to a 71-50 halftime lead and easily handed Seattle its third loss in a row.

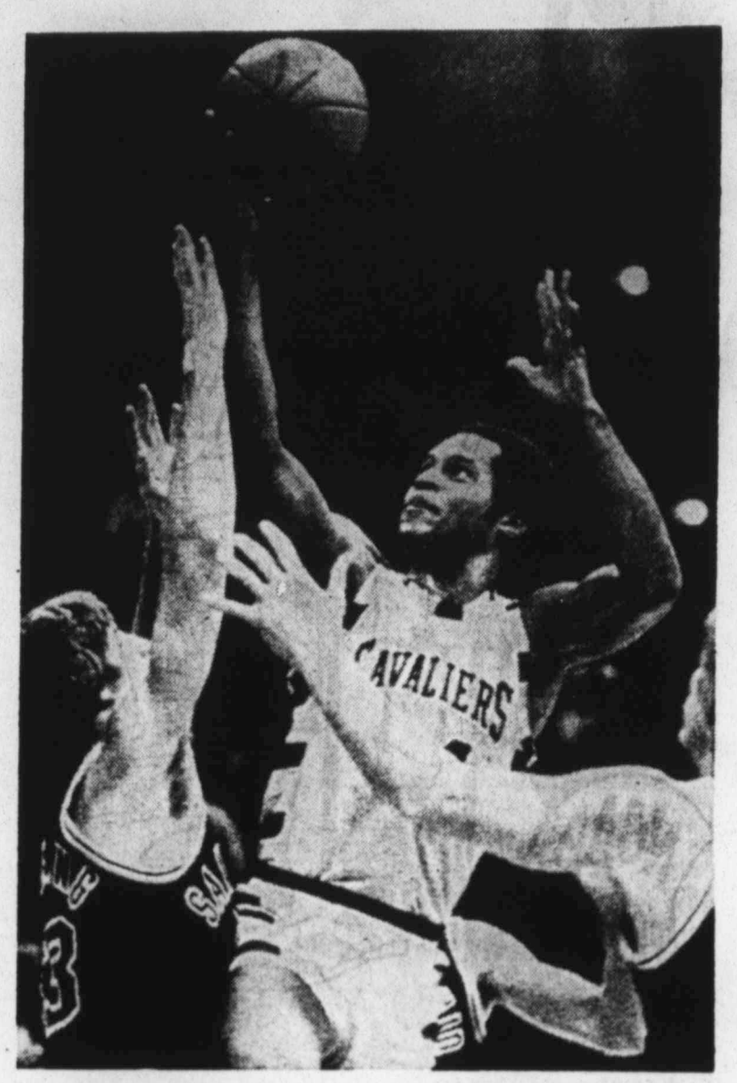

The Sonics were without Gus Williams, Lonnie Shelton and Tom LaGarde, all sidelined because of injury. Rookie center Lar Hansen, signed Friday to a 10-day contract because of the injury to LaGarde, scored 19 points for Seattle.

Bulls 101, Hawks 95

Chicago, playing at home, outscored Atlanta 35-17 from the free throw line to post their eighth victory in the last 10 games. Artis Gilmore and Mickey Johnson scored 25 points each for the Bulls.

76ers 124, Clippers 113

Philadelphia won its fourth in a row, building a 16-point lead in the second period and easily defeating the Clippers before a crowd of 13,822 in San Diego, the largest since the club moved from Buffalo this summer. Doug Collins scored 25 points and Julius Erving added 21 for Philadelphia, while ex-Sixer Lloyd Free had 35 for San Diego

The All-Pro, All-Conference and All-Everything Else awards are being tendered these days — but there's always room for more.

Therefore, to honor those in and out of the National Football League whose feats might otherwise go unrecognized (and perhaps they'd prefer it that way), The Associated Press hereby tenders the following:

The Lou Holtz (There's a Big Difference Between Leaving When You're 11-4 Instead of 3-10) Award: To Chuck Fairbanks, who taught the New England Patriots how to play the game right — but didn't take his own advice.

The Norris Weese (Who Does He Think He Is, Sending In A Play Like That?) Award: To New York Giants quarterback Joe Pisarcik, who thought for a moment about ignoring the messenger, decided against it and lit a fuse that blew up in his team's face.

The Joe Pisarcik (Who ... etc.) Award: To Denver Broncos quarterback Norris Weese, who ... etc.

The Leo Durocher (You Know What He Used To Say) Award: To former New York Giants Coach John McVay, whose players couldn't have had more love and respect for him — and who might have finished better than last if they'd had more talent, too.

The Horatio Nelson (Battle of Trafalgar) Award: To the Washington Redskinettes, soundly defeated in the NFL's greatest navel battle.

The Gen. George Patton (Battle of the Bulge) Award: To the Los Angeles Rams' Embraceable Ewes, who staged a cover-up every bit as obvious as Washington's — but somewhat further north.

The Monty Hall (I Can't Give It Away Fast Enough) Award: To Ken Stabler, who, for virtually every touchdown tossed, gave away two interceptions.

The Primo Carnera (Sting Like A Butterfly, Float Like A Bee) Award: To Joe Thomas, who took a poke at San Francisco sports writer Frank Blackman and did about as much damage in the disco as his 49ers did on the field.

The See No Evil, Hear No Evil, Speak No Evil (But Everyone Will Find Out About It, Anyway) Award: To Bart Starr, who tried to stonewall the press even more than Duane Thomas used to.

The Harry Houdini (Believe In Magic) Award: To quarterback Steve Bartkowski and the Atlanta Falcons, who staged one death-defying escape after another and wound up alive and well and in the playoffs.

The Santa Claus (Christmas Comes But Twice A Year) Award: To the Philadelphia Eagles, who got the gift they really wanted one month early, thanks to the Giants, and used it as a ticket into the playoffs.

The Foster Brooks (Stumbling And Bumbling) Award: To the Minnesota Vikings, who staggered to a division title nobody seemed to want.

George Orwell (Big Brother Is Watching You) Award: To Jerry Markbreit, Don Wedge and the rest of the officials whose calls, correct or otherwise, were magnified far out of proportion by TV's instant replays.

The Lizzie Borden (Watch Me Wield This Axe On That TV) Award: To millions of viewers with bloodshot eyes who, after six hours of Sunday afternoon football, got to sit through three hours of Sunday night football, too.

Rose's Salary Paid In Full

By MILTON RICHMAN
UPI Sports Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — Pete Rose already has paid back his first year's salary to the Phillies, who keep looking smarter and smarter all the time. Along with the $600,000 they'll receive next season in additional television revenue as a direct result of signing Rose, the Phils also have sold $300,000 worth of new season tickets since taking on the hustling 37year-old switch-hitter.

That's $900,000 right there, more than covering Rose's salary for next year. His four-year contract generally has been reported as $3.2 million but actually it's a bit over $3.3 million, that little extra carrying charge being tied in with Rose's ego.

Hearing that David Thompson of the Denver Nuggets was generally regarded the highest paid athlete at $800,000 a year, Rose decided he wanted the distinction of being the highest paid even if it had to be for only a very brief period. When Jim Rice, looking for a $5.3 million multi-year contract from the Red Sox, ran into Rose on an airplane a couple of weeks ago, they talked about the kind of money they were shooting for.

"I'm gonna take your crown away from you," Rice said to Rose, laughing over how he figured to pass him in salary before long. "I don't care if you do," Rose answered. "I would just like to have worn the crown at least once." and now he can say he did, but both Rice and Rose in all likelihood will run no better than second and third to Dave Parker when the National League's MVP ultimately signs with the Pirates....

How come the NHL hasn't thought of hiring the recently retired Bobby Orr as a goodwill ambassador to represent the league at any number of various functions? Tony Dorsett refused to go along with all those who felt Tom Landry was exposing him to unnecessary injury by having him run the ball 29 times during last Sunday's onesided 30-7 victory over the Jets. Dean Chance, the American League's 1964 Cy Young Award winner, bounced this one off me the other day asking me whether I could answer it. I couldn't, but maybe you can. Who was the pitcher who threw a no-hitter in a game where none of the hitters he faced lost even a single point on their batting averages? Give up? The answer is Bob Feller, who pitched the no-hitter in question against the White Sox — on opening day of 1940....

Why Is This Team Losing?

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Three times during his "State of the Chiefs" address to local media Tuesday, Lamar Hunt remarked what a good job Walter Payton did returning kicks for Kansas City this season.

Walter Payton, of course, is the great running back for the Chicago Bears. Eddie Payton, his brother, plays for the Chiefs.

But a slip of the tongue — or two or three — is undertandable when a man is trying to convince a room full of skeptics that his team, which has lost 24 games in two seasons, is getting better.

"I'm disappointed in our record," Hunt said. "I'm not disappointed in the way we played."

After limping home with a 2-12 mark last year, worst in their history, the Chiefs changed coaches, offensive alignments, defensive alignments and a hefty part of their starting personnel.

Aided also by an easier schedule, they finished 4-12 in the 16-game season.

Nevertheless, as Hunt and Coach Marv Levy pointed out, there is statistical evidence that suggests progress.

The Chiefs went into the record book as the worst defense in National Football League history last year but this season, with rookies Art Still and Sylvester Hicks at end and Gary Spani at linebacker, went from 28th to 20th in total defense.

"In rushing defense," Hunt said, "we improved from 28th to 18th. We needed to improve our defense and we did, but we've got to improve it quite a bit more."

The Chiefs' proudest statistics were in rushing offense. With the run-oriented Wing-T formation Levy installed — partly with an eye toward keeping the young defense off the field as much as possible — the Chiefs ranked second in the league in rushing. Hunt was quick to note that playoff-bound New England and Dallas were first and third.

"Teams that run the ball well and play good defense win," Hunt said. "Despite our record, we were never blown out of a game. We were never dominated. We had a chance to win every game going into the fourth quarter, although our chances in a couple of those games were remote.

"I think we bottomed out a year ago."

Hunt said the Chiefs' "greatest deficiency this year was our failure to put the ball in the end zone when we had the opportunity."

Conflicting Forces Hit Stock Mart

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was little changed today in the midst of conflicting forces in the economic news.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials eased .26 to 789.59 in the first two hours.

Gainers and losers were almost evenly balanced in the over-all tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The market got a lift Tuesday from International Business Machines' announcement of a planned 4-for-1 stock split and a dividend increase.

The split was expected to encourage a broader market for the shares of IBM, which ranks among the most prominent blue-chip names in the NYSE list.

But analysts said traders were still hesitant following the oil-exporting countries' decision over the weekend to raise prices by 14.5 percent in a series of steps through next Oct. 1.

IBM shares, which jumped 12¾ points Tuesday, slipped back ⅜ to 282½ in early activity today.

Public Service Electric & Gas led the active list, off ¼ at 20½ in trading marked by a 193,600-share block at 20¼.

The NYSE's composite common-stock index was off .02 at 52.56. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .50 at 146.88.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 10.80 million shares as of noontime, down from 12.10 million at the same point Tuesday.

Church Plotted Texas Move

DALLAS (AP) — A New York City-based church plotted its expansion to Texas as though it were the National Football League selecting a new site for a team.

"The old style of church growth no longer works," said the Rev. Peter Paulsen, in charge of what the Reformed Church in America calls the Dallas Project.

"You no longer can come into a community and put up a cinder-block building on a back street. We're in a new age," he said as he prepared for initial services at three locations Sunday.

Backed by census charts, computer analyses, telephone surveys and media campaigns, the church picked this city on the plains as the initial target in a development program.

The preparation began two years ago, when the church voted to start a $5 million development programa. Dallas was chosen over Houston, San Diego, Atlanta, Cincinnati and Portland, Ore., as the keystone for the plan.

"God is an orderly God. And if you prepare yourself well, then God intervenes, which is the nature of a miracle," said Paulsen.

"We did a standard survey of the communities," Paulsen said. "We were looking at the climate for growth, the size of parochial school attendance, occupation and income figures and size of families. In short, we were looking for the Reformed Church type — a well-paid, well-educated family."

The computers said North Dallas and its affluent northern suburbs fit the bill.

"We found that there are few churches in Dallas for people with a serious biblical commitment who didn't want to get locked into a right-wing lifestyle," Paulsen said. "We're very serious about this experiment. It gives us some sleepless nights and, sometime, some occasion for some great parties."

Once they decided on Dallas, church officials moved into high gear:

—They gleaned information from the chamber of commerce, the North Central Texas Council of Governments and newspaper marketing research.

—They consulted with leaders of other denominations in Dallas.

—They studied commuting patterns to and from shopping malls.

—They brought in volunteers from established congregations to conduct a telephone survey, placing 4,500 calls.

—Theybought newspaper and radio spots, telling consumers, "If you have a hangup about church, don't hang up on us."

—They chose their Dallas ministerial staff partially on the basis of clergy surveys that showed ministers in their 30s to be "hungriest for success." The winners were the Revs. John Buteyn Jr., 34; Richard Koerselman, 35; and Frederick Kruithof, 38.

Church leaders have no pretensions about their approach.

Much of the research was directed by the Rev. Douglas Walrath, who calls himself a "social ecologist."

"In a sense, you could locate a K-Mart the same way we are locating out churches," Walrath said.

Nor is the Reformed Church effort going unnoticed by others.

Dr. Arie Brouwer, chief executive of the Reformed Church, said other churches are scouting his game plan.

"I know that the Presbyterians and the United Church of Christ are watching the Dallas Project carefully," Brouwer said. The United Church of Christ, with 1.8 million members, recently began a five-year development program that seeks to open at least 25 new congregations a year, half of them in the Sun Belt.

The Reformed Church in America and its 230,000 members trace their roots to the 16th century. Its reputation is that of a staunchly traditional church.

It has conducted a continuous ministry in the United States since 1628, when Dutch seamen and church members landed at Manhattan and called it New Amsterdam.

Paulsen said his church can learn a lot from businessmen.

"But the difference is we didn't come here to sell people anything," he said. "We're here to offer them something eternal and divine."

City Officials Halt Disco Licenses

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — The possibility that discotheques are hazardous to health has caused the government to hold off issuing licenses to 20 establishments in the southern city of Puerto Alegre pending a medical investigation.

Antonio Gabriel de Mora Coelho, director of the department of amusements in the city of one million, said 12 doctors are looking into whether the establishments cause eye, ear and emotional damage to patrons. If they do, he said, light and noise limits likely would be set.

The popularity of discotheques in Brazil has skyrocketed since the release of the movie, "Saturday Night Fever."

Dominica Admitted To United Nations

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. General Assembly admitted the Caribbean island of Dominica to the United Nations as its 151st member. The island gained full independence from Britain Nov. 3.

Dominica, with 75,000 people, is the second-least populated U.N. member behind Seychelles, which has 60,000.

The admission of Dominica on Monday brought to 100 the number of states admitted after the organzation was founded in 1945 with 51 members.

San Antonio Dogs Live Nice Life

By GREG THOMPSON

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Evelyn Schneider is making sure Christmas 1978 is going to the dogs — by giving her prize-winning canines a new $30,000 house, complete with central heat and air conditioning, an aquarium and piped-in music.

That's right, we said a $30,000 dog house. And, yes, it'll have central heat and air conditioning, an aquarium and piped-in music, not to mention a bird cage, a window for each kennel and a nursery — with pink and blue wallpaper, of course.

"This is their Christmas present," said Mrs. Schneider. "After this, their little presents will be limited this year. We'll only hang dog biscuits and chewies on their tree."

As you have no doubt gathered by now, Mrs. Schneider's 40 dogs are somewhat special.

She raises and trains expensive Shetland sheepdogs, whippets and golden retrievers, which have already won enough ribbons and trophies to stock the dog house's trophy room. One of her "shelties" is worth $6,000 and sheltie pups bring $300.

And there's a reason Mrs. Schneider's dog house is more plush than many people houses.

"We want them to think of it as home, to feel like they are in a home," said Mrs. Schneider, a retired veterinary technician who has raised show dogs for 20 years. "A kennel-raised dog is very ignorant. They're not socialized. We want our dogs to get used to radios, fish tanks, refrigerators and other human things.

"That way, when they go to a home, they will be comfortable and reach their full potential as show dogs."

Mrs. Schneider and her husband, Ralph, are certainly sparing nothing in their quest to make their dogs feel at home.

In addition to the central heating and air conditioning system and intercom, the 80-foot backyard house has a mirrored training area and a grooming area — with wallpaper in a dog and cat motif. Each of the 10 caged dog runs has a window.

The nursery has a special room for the expectant mothers and there's a furnished office-lounge for nervous human visitors to wait out the births.

"It'll be fixed where a person could stay here several days if the dogs are sick or need attention," she said.

Are Ralph and Evelyn Schneider crazy?

"I guess it would seem a little crazy to some," she shrugged. "But I can name a hundred people who would do this if they could. It's our hobby. The dogs are like our children. I don't ever remember existing without dogs. They're like eating and drinking to me."
