Reagan holds back, breaks little ground

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Feature Service

CANCUN, Mexico — Despite broad hints to the contrary, President Reagan broke little new ground in his pivital speech Thursday to the unprecendented summit of leaders from 22 rich and poor nations gathered here.

Reagan also jolted his colleagues by showing up late for the initial session, causing consternation and later, apparently, indignation among them.

Virtually the entire delegation of prime ministers, presidents and chancellors have gone on record favoring a dramatic new approach to dealing with the escalating crisis faced by more than 100 of the poorest countries, ranging from acute hunger to devastingly high foreign debts incurred as they attempted to break out of poverty.

Only Reagan was the holdout from an explicit commitment to new "global negotiations" in the United Nations, although Britain and Germany have only recently muscled their reservations about how this would be handled and what restrictions might be placed on the richer countries.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig had insisted before leaving Washington on Monday that Reagan was agreed in principle to studying such global negotiations, dating from last summer's Ottawa Summit of the seven industrialized nations. In the last two days, however, Haig strongly hinted that Reagan would go beyond the Ottawa declaration and there was growing optimism in other delegations including the Mexican and French that this would happen.

Instead, Reagan said only that he was "prepared to conduct a more formal dialogue — bilaterally, with regional groups, in the United Nations and in specialized international agencies."

And then he spelled out four complicated steps that he called "essential understandings" before any global negotiations could begin, which would guarantee the delay of the negotiations for years, according to critics .

Reagan's speech was focussed largely on the value of trade and he said "as the world's largest single market, we can be a powerful conductor for economic progress and well being. We come to Cancun offering our hand in friendship as your partner in prosperity."

The initial reaction from others here was less than effusive, with Canadian, British, Mexican and French officials who had sat in on the meetings describing them as generally positive and generally a step forward.

U.S. task forces offered

CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — President Reagan, in a new initiative aimed at easing chronic food shortages in poor countries, is offering to send U.S. agricultural task forces to any country willing to receive them.

Reagan's offer to help countries improve their food production, made during Thursday's opening session of the 22-nation North-South summit, accompanied his conditional approval of negotiations aimed at narrowing the gap between the world's richest and poorest nations.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told reporters late Thursday that there are 400 million people in the world — almost 10 percent of the global population — who are "at or near the starvation level." Other experts say the figure is much higher.

The task force concept, he said, is designed to educate farmers in low-income countries and would be carried out by volunteers from farm companies and agricultural colleges as well as farmers themselves.

White House chief of staff James A. Baker III, who also briefed reporters, said today's final session of the summit would be devoted to such issues as trade, finance and investment. He said Reagan planned to offer additional new initiatives in these areas.

During Thursday's session, Reagan essentially restated policies toward Third World countries that he and other administration officials had been outlining for the past month.

Global economic problems will not be resolved by "flashy new gimmicks" but rather by emphasis on "substantive fundamentals with a track record of success," Reagan said.

The key ingredients to prosperity, he noted, are "political freedom and economic opportunity."

For the first time since his arrival in this resort, Ragan indicated that his administration might take part in global negotiations. But he said the talks must be based on "four essential understandings."

"If these understandings are accepted, then the U.S. would be willing to engage in a new preparatory process to see what may be achieved," Reagan said, suggesting that representatives of the 22 nations confer informally in the future about the procress.

Sweden's undersecretary for economic affairs, Hans Blix, called the Reagan statement "a flickering green light."

France's minister for development and cooperation, Jean-Pierre Cot, called it "positive because it gives leeway to other world leaders to pursue the issue."

AWACS deal not on agenda

CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., saying the AWACS sale has been discussed to "the limits of toleration," is playing down chances of a dramatic move by President Reagan and Saudi Arabia's Prince Fahd to salvage the embattled arms deal.

The president and the prince, the effective ruler in Saudi Arabia, planned to meet for a late lunch today in a session that could be crucial to the fate of the sale.

Haig told reporters Thursday at the 22-nation international summit in this Yucatan Peninsula resort that the AWACS package wasn't on the agenda for the Reagan-Fahd meeting and "it's certainly not our position to take it up."

"The question has been broached to the limits of toleration on both sides," Haig said. "I think it's now our role to get on with these very unusual conditions already arrived at, which are a substantial imposition on Saudi Arabian sovereignty and patience."

He said the focus of today's meeting was the issues of international development that are the topic of the Cancun conference.

Nevertheless, White House spokesman David R. Gergen said "it's reasonable to expect it (the AWACS deal) might come up" and opponents and uncommitted senators in Washington watched anxiously for developments.

The United States has been consulting with the Saudis for some time in an effort to reach an agreement that would satisfy concerns that the AWACS planes could be used against Israel or could be compromised if the Saudi monarchy is overthrown.

In the Senate, where the latest Associated Press count showed a 53-37 lineup against the sale with the decisive vote set for Wednesday, opponents are seeking assurances that the United States will retain partial control of the five Airborne Warning and Control System planes. F-15 jet weaponry also is included in the $8.5 billion package, the largest U.S. arms sale ever.

Effort to decertify PATCO averted by court

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Federal Labor Relations Authority's 2-1 decision to decertify the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization Thursday was quickly blocked hours later by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

According to The Associated Press, the three-member FLRA declared PATCO forfeited its right to exist by "willingly and intentionally" calling an illegal strike last August. Federal workers are not allowed to strike.

But AP further stated that the decision was temporarily blocked by the court "until it can get a response from the government" which is set for Monday.

Barry Vaughn, president of Midland's PATCO Local 428, said this morning that the actual "appeal process will not begin until sometime next week."

Through information sources, Vaughn said that one of the two FLRA members who voted to decertify remarked in a footnote that PATCO could represent controllers in the future if they meet certification requirements.

"We must get a 51 percent vote by PATCO, but I don't feel this will be any problem," Vaughn said.

Bill Hill, Federal Aviation Administration contol tower chief at the Midland airport, said this morning thatnothing has changed and he would not have any comment until the the government responded.

On Monday, Midland's PATCO members picketed the Midland Regional Airport to make the public aware of this up-coming decision. At that time, Vaughn said if the FLRA ordered decertification, PATCO would immediately appeal.

The Reagan administration, which fired 11,500 controllers after they struck Aug. 3 in a contract dispute with the Federal Aviation Administration, claimed victory.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis called the decision "sound and responsible" and said it "allows us to focus full attention on rebuilding the system and accommodating the needs of those controllers who stayed on the job."

At no time in U.S. labor history — since President Grover Cleveland sent federal troops to Chicago and busted the American Railway Union in the 1894 Pullman strike — had any administration acted so forcefully against a labor union.

Despite recent speculation that the administration might ease its no-amnesty position after the decertification ruling, Lewis and presidential counselor Edwin Meese III vowed that none of the striking controllers would be rehired.

Government witness bolsters case for voluntary segregation

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Odessa's case for voluntary segregation was bolstered in federal court here Thursday by Ector County Independent School District's attorney Jack Tidwell who equated low academic test scores with poorness rather than race.

"The low socio-economic child generally does poor on tests?" Tidwell asked segregation expert Dr. Gordon Foster, a government witness in the civil rights suit against the Ector County ISD.

"I would agree," replied Tidwell, a University of Miami education professor whom the government had called to bolster its case of willful segregation against the Odessa school system.

"That has nothing to do with what race you are, does it?" asked the attorney, who said under-achievers often are from the lower class and score low on scholastic examinations.

Tidwell's apparent point was that test scores by students at the predominantly black-Hispanic Ector High School reflect the socio-economic conditions in their backgrounds rather than the quality of instruction or race of the students there.

"That (under-achieving) doesn't make any difference whether you are black, white or brown," Tidwell concluded.

U.S. District Judge Fred Shannon, who is hearing the court case in the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system, intervened at that juncture as if he were trying the case from either side.

"What do you see as the cause (of low test scores), doctor?" asked Shannon.

"I think it is one of the causes but not the sole cause," the educator said.

Judge Shannon, who presides in San Antonio, was called in to try the case as judge and jury, since Midland-Odessa Division's resident judge, Lucius D. Bunton, excused himself from the case. Bunton is a former member of the Ector County ISD, the defendant in the case.

Odessa public schools, which enroll about 25,000 students, include three high schools: the predominantly minority (black and Mexican-American) Ector; the predominantly Anglo Permian; and the predominantly Mexican-American and white Odessa.

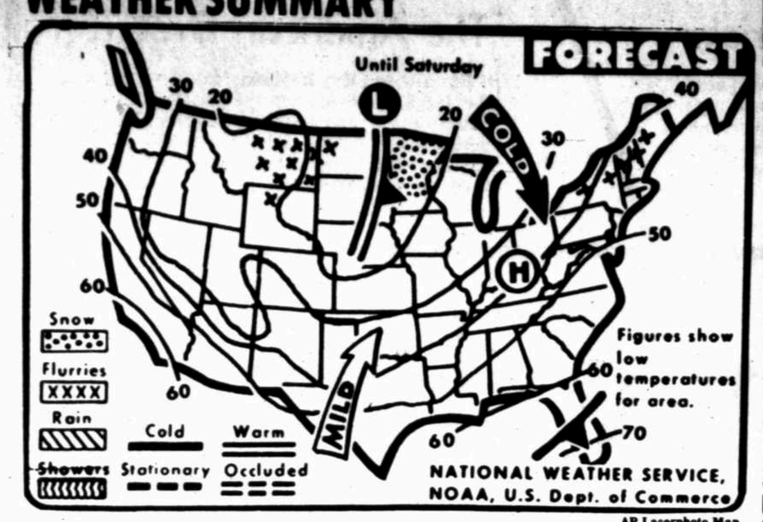

Evidence in the case, which began Monday, indicates that Odessa school officials condoned a "freedom of choice" policy by which students of whatever racial or ethnic origin may attend the schools of their choice as along as they provide their own transportation to those schools.

Unlike Midland, which in years past came under federal government assault and was forced to bus students to obtain a racially-balanced school system, Odessa has limited busing, which has nothing to do with a racial-ethnic consciousness.

Area can expect reprieve from cold

The hint of a winter just around the corner continued to greet Permian Basin residents Thursday and early today, though a reprieve is expected over the weekend.

Thursday's high reached only 53 degrees, light years below the record for the date of 89 set in 1961. The low meanwhile dipped down to 44, nippy but no threat to the all-time record of 33 established in 1936.

Cold temperatures tonight should evolve into warmer conditions under sunny skies Saturday, say National Weather Service forecasters. The Saturday high should reach the mid-60s as winds will continue to be brisk at 10-15 mph.

Despite overcast conditions Thursday, no official precipitation was recorded by the NWS, leaving the month's total at 5.53 inches and the 1981 amount at 17.55 inches.

Two Odessa men arrested in drug bust

ODESSA — Two Odessa men were arrested in a major marijuana bust here late Thursday afternoon.

According to the Department of Public Safety's narcotics division in Midland, which coordinated the seizure of 118 pounds of grass worth $53,000 in street value, the men were arrested as they attempted to deliver the pot to undercover DPS agents at the Ramada Inn on Second Street about 4 p.m.

The marijuana was in bags and bales, according to a DPS spokesman, who said one of the bales weighed about 30 pounds. Officers had been working the case about a month and said they were offered the grass for $455 a pound.

The suspects were being held in the Ector County jail this morning. They were expected to be brought before Justice of the Peace Charles Gee for arraignment later today.

In addition to the Midland DPS, agents from the Del Rio DPS, the Ector County Sheriff's Department and the Andrews County Sheriff's Department were involved in the case.

Retired policeman's car burglarized

In burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, a retired police officer reported his car was broken into and $1,334 worth of cash and guns was taken.

Lomax Martin of Abilene said the items disappeared while the vehicle was parked at a Midland business establishment last month.

And an employee of the Howard-McCarroll Lumber Co., 3105 Bankhead Highway, said assorted tools valued at $2,130 were taken in a burglary of the establishment Thursday.

Toxic leakage forces evacuation

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Leakage of a toxic chemical from a truck on the city's east side was halted four hours after its discovery forced the evacuation of nearby homes and businesses, officials said.

Police said about 5 to 10 gallons of methyl chloride leaked Thursday from a valve on a 2,500-pound container which firefighters sealed by inserting an air bag between the wall of the truck and the faulty container.

The truck pulled off the road after its driver noticed the leak, and several nearby residents and employees of businesses within a half mile of the vehicle were evacuated, officials said.

Methyl chloride, colorless and odorless, becomes liquid when compressed. It can damage the central nervous system if inhaled and burn skin on contact, firefighters said.

The driver of the truck was not injured, but three firefighters and one police officer were treated at a local hospital for eye irritation.

Odessa man injured

Eddie Lee Lundberg, 34, of Odessa was listed in critical condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital with massive head injuries suffered when his southbound 1979 Buick left Loop 250 at an apparent high rate of speed, according to the Department of Public Safety, and overturned about a half-mile south of Andrews Highway just before midnight Thursday.

Judge rejects Daniel mistrial motions

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — A state district judge swept aside motions seeking an abrupt end to the Vickie Daniel murder trial and gave defense attorneys, stung by the surprise testimony of the defendant's daughter, a long weekend to regroup.

Judge Leonard Giblin rejected motions for a mistrial and an instructed verdict of aquittal Thursday and recessed the trial until Monday.

Defense attorneys asked for a mistrial because of testimony by the stepdaughter of slain former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel Jr.

Kimberly Moore, 13, stunned the courtroom with a series of new revelations and then said she first related her revised story when submitting to a lie detector test.

The mere mention of a polygraph examination can, in certain cases, be sufficient grounds for mistrial under Texas criminal law.

But Judge Giblin ruled in effect that the disclosure did not prejudice the jury to the extent that the stoic defendant could not receive a fair trial.

Mrs. Daniel, 34, is accused of the Jan. 19 shooting death of her wealthy and widely known husband, the son of former Texas Gov. Price Daniel Sr.

Young Daniel, 39, his main artery severed by a single .22-caliber bullet, bled to death on the floor of his fashionable Liberty home.

The defense concedes Mrs. Daniel fired the fatal bullet, but contends she did so accidentally.

Lead defense lawyer Jack Zimmermann also argued Thursday that the state failed to prove its murder case and asked for an instructed verdict of acquittal.

Giblin denied the motion without comment.

"At least he seemed to ponder the mistrial motion," Zimmermann quipped later.

The judge also ruled on a series of lesser motions and, at Zimmermann's request, recessed the proceedings until Monday to permit the defense to prepare its case.

The state rested late Wednesday after Kimberly, a surprise prosecution witness, provided the court her altered version of what occurred the cold, rainy night of Jan. 19.

She said her mother and Daniel argued bitterly and clashed physically and that on two separate occasions that evening she, Kimberly, "shoved Price off my mama."

But for the first time, Kimberly, crying and speaking softly, said she saw her mother with a rifle and heard her twice threaten Daniel a short time before the shooting.

The brown-haired teen-ager said her mother first threatened to shoot Daniel if he did not drop a sack which, the defense says, may have contained marijuana.

"If you don't believe I'll shoot, I will," Kimberly quoted her mother as saying.

The child said she did not see or hear shots fired, but when the ambulance arrived that night, "I knew my mama had shot Price."

Asked by chief prosecutor Carroll Wilborn why she did not tell "the truth" earlier, Kimberly said: "I was scared to."

Under cross-examination, Zimmermann asked when it was that she first related the revised version to anyone.

"I believe it was when I went to take a lie detector test," she replied.

Zimmermann asked one additional question, got an answer, and then approached the bench and moved for a mistrial.

Debating the merits of that motion Thursday, Wilborn said he advised Zimmermann in "no uncertain terms" that Kimberly had taken a polygraph test.

He said he did so just before Zimmermann began his cross-examination and that the defense lawyer could have avoided mention of the lie detector test.

FLRA effort to decertify PATCO averted by court

Lewis ... age and benefits package ... the one tentatively agreed to ... by the union but over which ... ted by the rank-and-file, would be sent to Congress early next week for the controllers who continue to work.

PATCO President Robert E. Poli said, "I don't have to tell you I'm disappointed." But he declared: "We are still PATCO. We are still proud. And we are still the professional air traffic controllers who make this system work."

He said the union was correct when it went on strike and is correct now.

"If there was any mistake made, it was my naivete in believing Ronald Reagan," whom PATCO had endorsed in the 1980 presidential election.

In their request that the ruling be blocked, PATCO attorneys Russ Bailey and Neal Goldfarb said the decision would bring irreparable harm to the union because dues checkoff would be stopped Friday for 2,000 members who continue to work. He said these employees would be denied collective bargaining representation.

Reaction from Capitol Hill was restrained.

"It was unfortunate that the FLRA did not reach a solution that would have left room for a just resolution of the dispute," said Rep. William Ford, D-Mich., chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, who had been exhorting the administration to find an out-of-court settlement.

"We have a combination of federal laws that provide no meaningful remedy for this kind of impasse," Ford said.

Edward Derwinski, ranking Republican on the committee, said, "The decision vindicates the government's position. ... Now that the legal maneuvering is over, it will be necessary for Congress to cooperate with the administration in maintaining a safe air traffic system that is fully implemented and staffed."

Federal employees are barred from striking, and the Federal Labor Relations Authority, created by Congress in 1978, found that the only proper remedy for the PATCO walkout was to put the union out of business.

Chairman Ronald W. Haughton dissented from the ruling, saying he preferred to give the union one last chance to end the illegal walkout.

Even he, however, said he would agree with dissolving the union unless it ended the strike within five days and told the authority it would abide by the law's no-strike provision.

Board members Henry B. Frazier and Leon B. Applewhaite concluded that immediate revocation of the union's status was appropriate.

The administration had moved to revoke the union's bargaining rights shortly after about the controllers walked off their jobs, and then ignored a 48-hour ultimatum from Reagan to return to work or be fired.

A small number of controllers returned to work, but about 11,500 others have received dismissal notices and, according to government officials, will not be rehired.

PATCO had been conditionally stripped of its bargaining rights in 1970 following a sickout by air controllers but was reinstated six months later after convincing the Labor Department that it no longer was violating government standards.

Harrelson faces prison term of 20 years

By ANDREW M. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Charles V. Harrelson, a convicted hired killer federal agents say is a prime suspect in the assassination of a federal judge, faces a maximum prison term of 20 years in prison on his conviction in an unrelated gun possession case.

Jurors said they had "no difficulties" in reaching a guilty verdict or assessing the most severe punishment allowed by law Thursday. They found him guilty after an hour and 13 minutes of deliberations and took only 15 minutes more to decide punishment — 20 years and a $10,000 fine.

A defense lawyer said he was "severely disappointed" by the verdict, and prosecutors said they were not through with Harrelson, who still faces several charges.

"I'm going to try the bond-jumping case next and ask the judge to stack the time," said Assistant District Attorney Ted Wilson, referring to a method of sentencing in which additional prison terms are served consecutively.

The bond-jumping case is based on Harrelson's failure to show up for his original July 7, 1980, trial date on the gun possession charges.

During the punishment phase of the four-day trial that ended Thursday, prosecutor Bill Eggleston told the jury Harrelson was "a man who sat on that witness stand and lied to you with the cool, cold demeanor of a man who has killed."

Harrelson, 43, who was convicted of the 1968 execution-style murder-for-hire of a grain dealer near McAllen, was charged with illegal possession of guns by a felon after his arrest here Feb. 1, 1980.

He denied any knowledge of the five guns police said they found in his car, testifying that he had never seen them until after he had been forced out of his car and handcuffed on the day of his arrest.

Officers said they found two .357 Magnum pistols, a .38-caliber Colt revolver, a 12-gauge pump shotgun and a .300 Magnum Weatherby rifle in his car.

"The one thing we didn't find out in this trial, and I guess we'll never know, is where he was going when he was arrested," said Wilson.

Defense attorney Don Ervin suggested in closing arguments that his client was framed so federal authorities could hold him while they investigated the May 29, 1979, shooting death of U.S. District Judge John Wood of San Antonio. No charges have been filed in Wood's killing.

Although he never specifically mentioned the Wood case, Ervin said, "The federal government wants this man in jail and they will do anything to get him there."

Wilson scoffed at the notion, saying Harrelson's arrest did not have the earmark of a frame.

"If the government was going to frame him, you'd probably have him coming out of his car with a gun in his hand," Wilson said.

Ervin said he was "severely disappointed" by the verdict. Normally the charge carries a 10-year prison sentence.

Government witness bolsters Odessa's segregation stance educational system stems from the historic 1954 case of Brown vs. Board of Education of Topeka. In its ruling, the court held that compulsory segregation of the races was unconstitutional and inherently unequal.

In trying to make a case of intentional segregation against the Odessa school system, U.S. Department of Justice attorney Joseph Rich noted that there was "a rather drastic drop in the Anglo population at Ector" in the mid- to late 1960s, when the black Blackshear Junior-Senior High School was closed and students there were transferred to Ector High School.

Rich asked Dr. Foster if that drop in the white enrollment at Ector "indicates that there might be a problem."

"Yes," said the educator.

However, the judge again brought himself more vocally into the case to clarify issues. He took notice of an overall drop in enrollment in the late 1960s at the three high schools.

"If there was a flight from Ector High, where did it go?" the judge pointedly asked, but got no clear-cut answer.

Evidence indicated that enrollment at Ector in the mid-1960s was about 1,400; Permian, 2,200, and Odessa, 1,900. Today, Permian and Odessa each have enrollments in the neighborhood of 2,000 students. Ector, however, has about 700 — half of its 1960s enrollment.

The judge called a recess Thursday afternoon after Tidwell suggested that the court "shut down for repairs" and after his opposition, Rich, momentarily faltered in questioning the educator on the alleged white flight from the black Ector school.

"That's as good a stopping point as any," the judge said.

Sun Air Inc.'s service cancelled

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Aeronautics Commission Thursday canceled Sun Air Inc.'s conditional certificate to provide air carrier service to several Texas cities, including Midland.

Harry Rodgers, director of TAC's Air Carrier Administration Division, said Sun Air had been unable to obtain equity capital and Federal Aviation Administration airworthiness certification.

Sun Air had been authorized to provide service to Midland, El Paso, Lubbock, Abilene, Amarillo, San Antonio, Beaumont, Austin, Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Dallas-Fort Worth, Harlingen, Houston, Laredo, McAllen, San Angelo and Wichita Falls.

The company closed down its operations in September.

Sun Air President H.H. Farr blamed a lawsuit filed against the company by a former executive as one reason for the company's problems. Rodgers said Sun officials felt the lawsuit, which was filed for breach of contract and fraud, frightened away potential sources of capital and discouraged Emerald Airlines from pursuing a possible merger.

The conditional operating certificate had been in effect since July 7.

The TAC also affirmed a staff action canceling the operating certificate of Permian Airways, Inc.

Permian had served Amarillo, Lubbock, Midland-Odessa, San Angelo and San Antonio.

California pot crop is big money-maker

By Ivan Sharpe
Hearst Feature Service

In the remote hills and deserts of California, the unfertilized buds of thousands of marijuana plants are beginning to swell and exude potent resin that sparkles like tiny diamonds.

This is harvest time for the 1981 marijuana crop, possibly the state's top cash crop. The stakes are high. The next few weeks could make or break underground millionaires -- or decide whether a family goes hungry this winter.

Officials are reluctant to estimate the size of this year's crop. "It is a very large crop, but whether it's worth $1 billion or $5 billion I don't think anyone knows," says Steve Helsley, chief of the state's Bureau of Narcotic Enforcement.

But a clue can be found in the number of plants seized in law enforcement raids. Last year 43 of the state's 58 counties reported seizures of 156,784 plants from 680 pot farms worth a conservative $300 million in street value. The figures have doubled each year for the past three years.

Narcotics chiefs in the major pot-growing counties estimate they are only snatching between 2 and 10 percent of the crop.

"We know we are only scratching the surface," says Humboldt County Sheriff's Capt. James Sintic. It's like trying to sweep back the ocean with a broom," said Monterey County Sheriff's Sgt. Mike Cuffney.

Forty raids so far this year in Monterey County have netted 14,325 plants, including an 8,000-plant seizure worth $16 million from a remote canyon 12 miles south of Carmel on Aug. 19.

If 90 percent of the state's marijuana crop is unseized, and this year's plant seizures are expected to double to $600,000 worth, that would put the total crop value at $5.4 billion, not including the marijuana expected to be confiscated this year.

This would put marijuana well ahead of the state's leading farm product, milk, which officials estimate has a retail value of $3.6 billion.

No official interviewed expressed surprise that the 1981 state marijuana crop might total several billion dollars.

Marijuana cultivation in California has achieved a measure of sophistication and dramatic growth that amazes state and federal officials.

From a few remote plantations in the extreme northern counties in the 1970s, commercial pot growing is now thriving illegally in all areas of the state despite increasing law enforcement efforts, aided by squadrons of aerial spotters, to wipe it out.

This year the state is operating two airplanes, while the federal Drug Enforcement Administration is operating three. The planes are loaned to California counties, some of which also rent planes or use volunteer squadrons.

In the hippie days of the 1960s, the best grass came from South America or Hawaii and went by such colorful names as Acapulco Gold, Panama Red or Maui Wowie.

Today, according to the glossy drug lovers' magazine, High Times, California can boast of producing the best marijuana in the world. "California is basically supplying connoisseur-grade pot," agreed state narcotics chief Helsley.

While normal marijuana sells for between $125 and $450 a pound, highly prized California "sinse" goes on the streets for between $2,000 and $3,000 a pound. And High Times expert Bud Bogart, who has extensive contacts with growers, estimates that 75 percent of it is going out of state, primarily to New York.

What has changed the picture in California is sinsemilla (a Spanish word meaning "without seeds"), first produced by excited backwoods botanists in 1976.

They discovered that a female marijuana plant uses 40 percent of its energy in producing seeds. By removing the pollen-producing male plants, the female plant grows larger and produces high amounts of sticky resin in an efort to have some male pollen stick to it.

The resin contains heavy amounts of the psychoactive or mind-altering chemical tetrahydrocannabinol. Normal marijuana contains about 1 percent THC. Sinsemilla THC content is as high as 7.96 percent. When properly cultivated, sinsemilla is from 50 to 150 percent more potent than regular marijuana.

As the profit soars, growers are becoming more adept at concealing their plots from aerial surveillance.

State narcotics agent Chuck Jones, in charge of the five-member Placer County narcotics task force, said growers are experimenting with tying down the tops of plants to reduce their height and the possibility of them being spotted from the air.

Plots are getting smaller, he says. One plot was planted directly under oak trees, making it almost invisible from above. And he said growers seem to be favoring fewer plants with higher yields.

Pot farmers range from former hippies who fled to the woods, to urban sophisticates who return to the cities in the winter or vacation in Mexico and the Caribbean, to former street peddlers, to parolees with long criminal records, to middle-aged couples and wealthy farmers.

"We're seeing even prominent citizens growing pot," said Cuffney of Monterey County.

Humboldt's Capt. Sintic says, "It's affecting every aspect of life in the county. It doesn't surprise me any-more who is involved."

"It's just like Prohibition—everybody's ignoring the law," said Madera County Undersheriff Jim Haney, who sees farmers planting marijuana in their cotton and corn crops.

A locally well-known farmer in Kings County planted 25 rows of marijuana in the middle of his 40-acre field of corn.

"It's very lucrative," said Fresno County Sheriff's Lt. Jim Daily. "A guy can become a millionaire in a summer if he can get away with it."

Pot farms are now flourishing almost everywhere in California, state officials ruefully concede.

Santa Barbara County deputies Aug. 26 seized more than 1,000 plants valued at $2 million from a sophisticated 2-year-old farm less than 10 miles from President Reagan's Western White House.

In its first year of using airplane spotters, San Bernardino County has grabbed 5,000 plants from desert farms around Victorville.

"We could fly two planes every day of the week and, if we had the manpower, we could increase our seizures by 1,000 percent," Detective Hal Bacon said.

By contrast, neighboring Riverside County has seen its marijuana haul drop since it began concentrated aerial searches in 1979. "I think we scared them away," Lt. Bill Reynolds said.

Republicans have same objective

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate Republicans say they will seek spending cuts and tax increases totaling $115 billion over three years but will follow different paths to find them. They concede, however, that it may not be enough to meet President Reagan's goal of a balanced budget in 1984.

Following days of meetings among GOP leaders on Capitol Hill, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee and House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois announced Thursday that they have agreed to a "tentative plan" as an alternative to Reagan's latest budget package.

But details were scarce pending the Republican leaders' meeting with the president at the White House, probably early next week.

Baker said the package hasn't been described to Reagan yet, and Michel said the Republicans themselves have agreed to only "general parameters."

The Republican leaders said Congress, like the administration, is considering excise taxes on alcohol and tobacco and is likely to reduce 1982 defense spending, now targeted at $188 billion, by more than the $2 billion that Reagan insists is the maximum.

In addition, Baker indicated that Reagan will get less than the $16 billion in spending cuts and higher taxes he wanted for 1982, meaning the bulk of the $115 billion savings will have to come in 1983 or 1984.

"There's not that much you can do in 1982," he said.

Reagan's proposals aimed at balancing the budget in 1984 included a combination of spending cuts and higher taxes totaling $114.8 billion over three years.

Congressional Republicans share that goal, Baker said, but it "may not be enough" to balance the budget.

"Things are going to have to improve and we're working on it," he said.

Baker said he was adamant against any changes in the three-year tax cut bill that Congress approved earlier this year.

But other than that, he said, "nothing has been ruled out."

While Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, has expressed interest in holding hearings in December on revenue-raising measures, there is little sentiment in the Democratic-controlled House to move ahead on measures to increase taxes, especially with the economy in recession.

Moreoever, sources in both the House and the Senate said the Republican leaders agreed that each house will have to use different strategies to get the budget cuts, tax increases and reductions in government benefit programs.

Asked what, if anything, the meetings between Republican leaders produced, Michel replied: "A lot better understanding and agreement between our two houses of what is and what is not possible."

A top Republican aide who asked not to be identified said the agreement amounted to "a general consensus on what the Senate's going to do and what the House is going to do."

The Senate may have an easier time, with Republicans in the majority. In the House, where Democrats control, the GOP aide said "there is no way ... that we can talk specific figures" before meeting with Reagan and Budget Committee Chairman James R. Jones, D-Okla.

Senate trying to repeal foreign aid curbs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Heeding President Reagan's request for a freer hand in foreign policy, the Senate is calling for repeal of a ban on U.S. military aid to Chile and other legislative curbs on foreign aid.

The $5.8 billion foreign aid bill approved 40-33 by the Senate on Thursday also would drop a prohibition on aid to anti-communist forces in Angola, permit resumption of U.S. arms sales to Argentina and impose an automatic aid cutoff on any Third World country which explodes a nuclear bomb.

The fiscal 1982 authorization bill, adopted after 36 hours of floor debate spread over six days, also includes language to re-establish the Peace Corps as an independent agency.

But the House has not yet passed its version of the foreign aid bill, and any differences between that legislation and the Senate measure will have to be worked out by congressional negotiators.

By a 57-30 vote, the Senate rejected a motion to table Sen. Jesse Helms' call for an outright repeal of the ban on aid to Chile. Helms, a North Carolina Republican, said the aid ban had not helped victims of human rights abuses in Chile and was more severe than restrictions applying to communist countries, such as China.

The Senate then approved, 86-0, a compromise measure, introduced by Sen. Charles H. Percy, D-Ill., stipulating that aid could resume with an official finding by Reagan that Chile's right-wing government had made "significant progress" in complying with international standards of human rights.

The wording of the amendment was almost identical to language inserted into the bill by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to repeal a ban on military sales to Argentina.

Percy, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, noted that the human rights situation in Chile had been improving, with no "disappearances" of political dissidents reported since October 1977.

But Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said a repeal would be "a clear and unmistakable message to governments and political leaders throughout the world that the United States no longer places major importance on the protection of basic human rights."

The Reagan administration chalked up another victory in the foreign aid bill when the Senate voted on Sept. 30 to repeal the ban on U.S. aid to anti-communist forces fighting against Angola's Marxist regime.

The ban had been imposed in 1976 after a congressional uproar over CIA covert assistance to the Angolan guerrillas.

The administration was dealt a surprise setback, however, when the Senate approved by a 51-45 vote an amendment sponsored by Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, to automatically cut off all U.S. aid to Pakistan or India if either explodes a nuclear device.

A substitute amendment offered by Helms and adopted by voice vote broadened the automatic cutoff to cover all non-nuclear weapons countries. That appeared to encompass not just Third World nations but also Israel, South Africa and Taiwan, although congressional sources said a contingency clause could permit the president to waive the suspension if there is a compelling foreign policy need.

Despite continuing concern over Pakistan's nuclear program, the administration has proposed a six-year, $3.2 billion military and economic aid program for Pakistan. All U.S. aid had been cut off in 1979 after Congress mandated that recipient countries put their nuclear facilities under strict nonproliferation safeguards.

Part-time enrollment up at MC

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Even though the enrollment figure for full-time students at Midland College is down by 88 students, the number of part-time students is up by 173.

The report came at the regular meeting of the MC Board of Trustees Thursday.

"It (the total enrollment figure) is about the same as last year," Dr. Jess H. Parrish, president of the college, said. "It's a good growth with a slight increase."

Parrish said the number of students is "pretty good," considering that most of the students taking classes are also holding down jobs.

But, according to James Bramlett, director of the Department of Community Services, the number of students enrolled in non-credit courses is higher than ever before.

During the first year of operation in 1973 the enrollment figure stood at 1,472 students, Bramlett said. There were 8,297 students enrolled in classes last year.

The largest enrollment figure until this September was recorded in September 1981. "We're up 1,719 students this year from last year," Bramlett said.

In other action taken by the board, trustees approved a low bid on an energy management program. According to Bob Phillips, vice president in charge of physical affairs, the Honeywell Delta 200 computer system would continue on a system already installed at the college. It would reduce the demand on the electric meter and can be programmed to turn on and off instantly and for shorter intervals instead of manually, Phillips said.

"Around $13,000 per year would be saved," Phillips said. "We should take the low bid and use the existing system that we have."

The board approved a proposal for a dental insurance coverage which would give employees a broader choice in seeking coverage for their spouses, children and themselves.

"With an increase in appropriations from the state, we felt we could put this project into effect," Phillips noted. The new policy would allow $7 per employee in dental coverage.

Board members also approved two resignations that were approved by Parrish on behalf of the board and the hiring of a new teacher.

French unions plan strikes next week

PARIS (AP) — Socialist President Francois Mitterrand's government faces mounting labor trouble as workers plan a series of strikes next week to press demands for fewer hours and more benefits.

Thousands of workers staged walkouts and other job actions across the country Thursday while thousands more prepared to strike state utilities, banks and the national health insurance service.

At Orly airport, strikes by mechanics and hangar employees caused a seven-hour delay Thursday in the departure of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa. The head of Poland's independent labor federation visited France for a week at the invitation of unions.

At the state-owned Renault auto plant, thousands of workers laid down their tools to demonstrate in the streets around the factory in Billancourt, outside Paris.

Growth hormone key to pygmies' shortness

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Ever since Europeans first discovered them in the African jungle, doctors have puzzled over why pygmies are so short. Now they have found the answer in the little people's blood.

The discovery, they say, may provide clues to why people are short.

The doctors say pygmies stop growing because of a hormonal imbalance. Their bodies produce only small amounts of an obscure substance called insulin-like growth factor I, or IGF-I.

They believe this is why the 150,000 pygmies who inhabit the tropical rain forests range in height from four feet to four feet eight inches.

Dr. Thomas J. Merimee, who made the discovery, said he has since found an identical defect in two short Americans.

"I think it is extremely clear that the defect is simply not going to be localized to one ethnic group," he said. "The real question is how common it is."

Merimee, a researcher at the University of Florida in Gainesville, reported on his findings in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

His research team conducted blood tests on 11 pygmies from the Central African Republic and compared the results with blood from 31 normal-sized people.

While the pygmies have the usual amounts of another body chemical called human growth hormone, their blood carries only a third as much IGF-I as the ordinary-sized people, Merimee said.

He theorized that IGF-I is the principal regulator of growth, although he said its exact function still is unknown.

Now that scientists are aware of the importance of IGF-I, Merimee said, it may be possible to regulate its production in the body.

"What excites me the most is the possibility of turning IGF-I on," he said. "There ought to be a way to do that."

He said it may be possible to manufacture IGF-I in the laboratory and administer it to people who cannot produce enough on their own, he said.

Merimee noted that obscure disorders often appear in highly inbred groups of people.

Radiation may ease arthritis pain

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — An experimental radiation treatment for rheumatoid arthritis works so well that patients who once could not walk have returned to relatively normal lives, doctors say.

Doctors tested the treatment on people whose crippling disease could not be eased by any of the usual kinds of arthritis medicine.

However, they cautioned that the radiation still must be tested on more people before it is used routinely to stop rheumatoid arthritis, which affects 7 million Americans.

"The question is what proportion of patients with rheumatoid arthritis would this therapy be useful for," said Dr. Samuel Strober, one of the researchers. "Is it 10 percent or 50 percent? I'm optimistic that there is certainly a proportion of the most severely affected group that could be helped by this."

The doctors directed the radiation at the patients' lymph systems. This changed the balance in their immune systems and stopped their bodies from inflicting crippling damage to their joints.

In many patients, the disease can be controlled with other kinds of therapy, such as exercise, aspirin, gold salts and steroids.

Strober directed research on the radiation therapy at Stanford Medical School. The results of his work and a similar study conducted at Harvard Medical School were published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

The two studies are considered preliminary because they involved small numbers of patients and did not include control groups who received alternative treatments.

Radiation of the lymph system has been routinely used for 20 years to treat Hodgkin's disease, a cancer of the lymph nodes.

The Stanford doctors had the most success. They gave radiation to 11 patients with stubborn cases of rheumatoid arthritis. Nine showed substantial improvement within a month.

The nine suffered 82 percent less morning stiffness, 74 percent less joint tenderness and 70 percent less joint swelling. The improvement lasted through a follow-up period of up to two years.

Before radiation, Strober said, most could not even get out of a chair without help.

"Certainly this has increased their ability to get out, walk ... do housework ... and go to the bathroom without assistance," he said. "One or two actually look like they are functioning normally. The majority still have some degree of disability."

Side effects of the radiation, including nausea, fatigue and loss of appetite, lasted about a month after the five-week treatment period.

Three of the patients suffered flareups, but they were treated with temporary increases in steroid drugs.

In the Harvard study, eight of 10 patients showed "considerable clinical improvement." However, it did not last, and the disease came back after about a year.

Casket renting plan controversial

By LARRY D. HATFIELD
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO -- It's not a new idea, but it's a controversy that doesn't seem to want to stay buried.

It has been dug up anew because Chapel of the Chimes, a mortuary, has once again started advertising its "Renta-casket" wherein you can impress your mourning friends with your expensive tastes and still be buried in a pine box.

It is either "tacky" and "the supermarket, pick-it-off-the-shelf" approach to burying, as one of the Chimes' competitors put it, or a "needed service to the bereaved," as Chimes general manager Oliver Lindquist insists.

Chimes is advertising that survivors have a low-cost alternative to the usual and expensive American way of burial.

"The deceased is placed in a plain wood receptacle which is concealed or 'hidden' by the casket shell for the viewing and funeral service," the ads say.

"At the conclusion of the funeral service, the casket shell is removed, and final disposition of cremation or burial takes place with the use of the insert receptacle only -- thereby eliminating the cost of an expensive casket."

The rent-a-casket concept was pioneered in the '30s, but it was Lindquist's Chapel of the Chimes that brought it its first full-scale media exposure two years ago.

One mortician, who asked not to be identified, said, "I'm sure that any criticism will be viewed from the perspective of the profit motive but you must understand, some of us just believe it's tacky. To die is one of the two or three major events in a person's life. It almost seems a disservice to, well, downplay it by putting on a false front."

Lindquist doesn't mind the criticism at all. In fact, he challenges his competitors to come up with better ideas. "They think we're downgrading the business," he said of his detractors. "We don't. We're here to serve the people the way they want to be served. Like everything else in America, I think people should have a free choice."

He adds: "This is not to replace the casket as such. It's to offer an alternative to people who want a traditional service they're proud of but who don't have the money or want to save it."

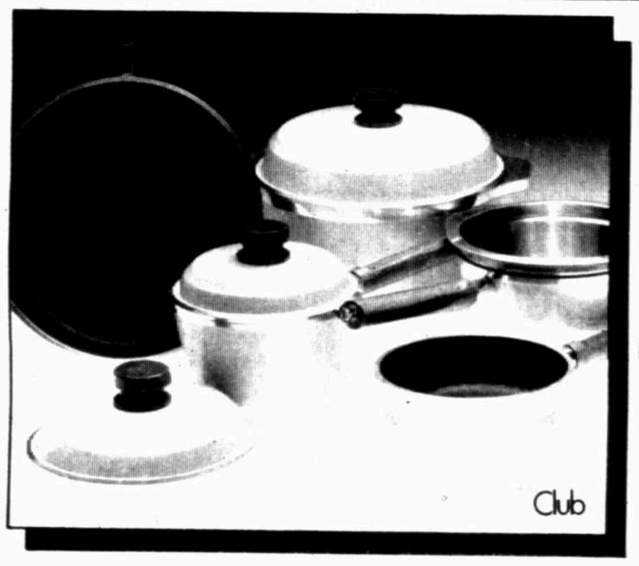

The rent-a-casket costs $397 "and you have your own casket, your own mattress, your own pillow."

He claims that he can offer a casket and services for even less than funeral societies like the famed Neptune Society can. "I tell people to compare and they don't believe me," he said. "But I can prove it."

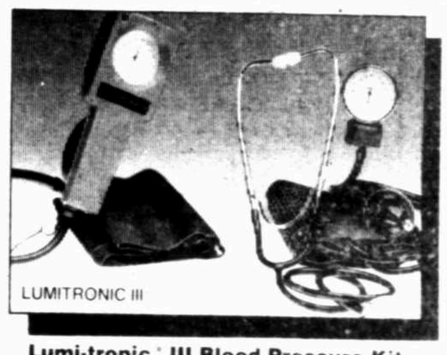

The high cost of dying is of major concern to most American families.

Democrats seek to veto B-1 and MX proposals

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic critics of President Reagan's plans to resurrect the B-1 bomber and deploy the MX missile are seeking a one-house veto of the proposals.

The Democrats suffered a setback Thursday when a House-Senate conference committee voted to require a veto by both houses to block the administration's plan. But Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., said he would seek reconsideration of the action.

"In effect, this is a sign-off on the B-1," Levin said. "The House is in favor of the B-1. So even if the Senate voted 100-1 against it, it would have no effect."

Levin said the House would be "probably more willing" to veto the administration's proposal on the MX.

The conference voted to require that both the House and Senate approve resolutions of disapproval by Nov. 18 to prevent the administration from going ahead.

The formula is a compromise between measures approved earlier by the two houses.

Earlier Thursday, Levin and Democratic Sens. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Sam Nunn of Georgia and Howard Cannon of Nevada agreed to push for the one-house veto. Levin said they were attracting support from other Democratic members of the Armed Services Committee.

The conference committee is pushing to complete work early next month on a compromise $136.4 billion Defense Department authorization bill.

Authorization bills were passed by the Senate in May and the House in July before Reagan decided to build 100 B-1 bombers and put MX missiles into Titan missile silos.

While awaiting the president's plan, the Senate voted to permit Congress to disapprove his proposal with a vote of both houses within 60 days.

The House bill required the administration to hold off on its MX proposal for 60 days after submitting it and give Congress comparative information on different basing methods.

The conferees accepted the Senate version but shortened the time period so congressional appropriations committees would have a clear signal on whether to appropriate the money.

They also voted to authorize spending $25 million on research and development on a previous proposal, abandoned by the Reagan administration, to shuttle MX missiles among shelters in the Western desert to conceal their locations.

The conferees also are considering approximately $6.2 billion in military spending cuts recently announced by the administration.

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., chairman of an Armed Forces subcommittee on preparedness, rejected on Thursday a Democratic request for hearings on the proposed cuts.

Dayan will asks that no monuments be erected

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Moshe Dayan, the patch-eyed ex-general and statesman synonymous with Israel's growth as a nation in war and peace, asked that no monuments be erected in his honor, according to his will, published today in an Israeli newspaper.

"I ask my friends not to initiate any action to perpetuate my memory," says the will published in the daily Yedioth Ahronoth.

Dayan died one week ago of a heart attack at age 66.

The will also asked that there be no eulogies or gun salutes at his funeral and that no monument or institution be named after him.

Indeed, his simple military funeral last Sunday was held without eulogies or salvoes. In the five days since he was buried thousands of sightseers and mourners have visited the grave in the cemetery of Nahalal, the Galilee village of his boyhood.

The published portion of the will does not divulge Dayan's assets or give the distribution of his personal belongings, which include money from book royalties and a vast personal collection of archeological treasures.

Oilman Getty's godchild dies

LONDON (AP) — Jessica Kitson, 34-year-old goddaughter of the late J. Paul Getty, was found dead at her backstreet London home, but no suspicious circumstances surrounded the death of the socialite-turned-barmaid, Scotland Yard said.

Scotland Yard gave no cause of death, saying an inquest probably would be held.

A spokesman said a friend found the body of the former fashion model Monday night, but news of the death was not made public until Thursday.

The friend, Rex Potter, found Miss Kitson's 3-year-old son, Wolf, asleep on a sofa in the backstreet row house where mother and child lived in West London's seedy Shepherd's Bush district, the spokesman added.

One British press report said Miss Kitson had fought a losing battle against drug addiction. Another said she was recently in the care of a privately-run West London refuge for battered women.

Miss Kitson was the daughter of Penelope Kitson, an interior decorating adviser who became a close friend of the American oil tycoon.

Getty, one of the richest men in the world, left Mrs. Kitson $848,890 in oil shares and $14,480 a year for life when he died in 1976 at age 83.

Jessica Kitson was launched into high society in 1964 at a glittering party attended by millionaires and aristocrats at Getty's mansion 30 miles southwest of London. She later dropped out of the whirl of London's high society and ended up working in a bar.

Press reports said Mrs. Kitson returned to Britain from abroad Wednesday upon learning of her daughter's death.

Miss Kitson's landowner father, army Maj. Robert Kitson, lives in the country hamlet of Morval in western England. Her younger sister is married to a British aristocrat, the Earl of Mount Charles.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Falling asleep easily

Dear Dr. Solomon: I just can't get to sleep at night. What can I do about it? — Mr. H.A., Phoenix, Ariz.

Dear Mr. H.A.: "Getting to sleep may be an interlude so brief that one is almost unaware of any measurable time between being awake and asleep. Or, it may seem to be a frustrating and seemingly endless period of trying to fall asleep."

In one study, according to The Better Sleep Council, Inc., "persons described as poor sleepers reported an average of 59 minutes to get to sleep, but later laboratory measurement indicated an average of only 15 minutes.

Here are some ways for coaxing sleep when the sandman seems reluctant to visit. Not all these methods are appropriate for everyone. Experiment by trying them one at a time.

1 — NEED TO SLEEP. Don't go to bed unless you need to sleep. You can't "catch up" on previously lost sleep by going to bed early. And you shouldn't go to bed because of boredom or to escape an unpleasant situation. Try to go to bed and get up at the same time every day. But don't go to bed because you think you should and try to get more sleep than you need to feel refreshed in the morning.

2. — DON'T FRET. You've been lying in bed for 10 minutes and sleep is nowhere near. Don't stay there. Get up and do something. Read, sew, balance your checkbook. Preferably in a room other than the bedroom. But always keep sleep in mind and be ready to return to bed.

3 — UNWIND. As the evening unfolds, so should you. If you have challenging, exacting work to complete, get it out of the way before you try to sleep. Don't read a gripping mystery just before bedtime. Follow a bedtime ritual such as always brushing your teeth, then opening the window or putting a glass of water on the table. Read a book you've never been able to finish though you've often tried. Your mind will go into neutral as you complete your tasks.

4 — TOAST YOURSELF. A single glass of wine, beer or spirits has long been the basis of the traditional "nightcap." One drink will often be the perfect relaxant for some people. Stop there, however, Too much alcohol can damage your sleep.

5 — SANDMAN'S SNACK. You're hungry and can't get to sleep. Bite into some L-tryptophan. It's an amino acid that triggers one's sleep chemistry. A gram in tablet form has cut falling asleep time from 20 to 10 minutes in research tests. Foods with a high concentration of this substance include: Milk, eggs, tunafish, cottage cheese, soy beans, cashews, chicken and turkey.

6 — YOGA. Physical routines of Yoga performed during the day can carry over their positive effect at bedtime. There are also special exercises recommended for insomnia. They are gentle, conserve energy and aim to loosen tense muscles. Do them in pajamas, beside your bed.

7 — COUNT SHEEP. Slow down your mental processes to help you become relaxed. A repetitive, boring routine is ideal. And counting sheep has always worked because it's just that. You can't get too interested or excited by it.

8 — BREATHE. Deep breathing can bring on drowsiness. The idea is to accumulate carbon dioxide in the body, which exudes a tranquilizing effect. Take very slow, deep breaths in a series of three, exhaling fully after each. At the end of the third exhalation, hold your breath as long as possible. Then repeat the series. After five to eight series, you'll want to breathe normally. By then, you should be relaxed and ready to sleep. Or be asleep already.

9 — BEDCHECK. Make sure you feel comfortable in your bed. It should be firm enough to support your shoulders and lower back. And large enough fo you to stretch out and change positions easily. You should be able to turn over without being restricted or feeling a swaying movement.

10 — EXERCISE. Regular exercise tends to be an effective aid for sleeping, partly due to the release of mental tensions. Any exercise can be effective as long as it doesn't bring one to overexertion and fatigue. It's best not to have any moderately heavy exercise later than mid-afternoon.

11 — STAYAWAYS. Anything that is stimulating will work against sleep. Stay away from coffee, tea and cola. Avoid late snacking of the kinds of foods that will make your digestive system work overtime. And stay away from stimulating tasks, exciting novels and the late-late shows.

12 — DAYDREAM. Lie back and visualize something pleasant. Something you've enjoyed. Somthing you're looking forward to experiencing. Or something that you'd like to have happen. Your mind will be pulled away from the mundane, the unpleasant, the ordinary. This will relax and soothe.

13 — PROBLEM SOLVE. You have a jumble of problems to solve. They swirl about your consciousness, overwhelming and enormous and they simply won't go away. Settle back and select one of them. Concentrate on it. carefully breaking it down into all of its parts. Examine each facet. Don't allow yourself to think of any of the others. Stick to the one you've chosen. Repeat all the information you have, if necessary. It's like selecting a single balloon from a bunch, with the others drifting away into the clouds.

Speed trap city doesn't want reputation

MELISSA, Texas (AP) — This community of 578 persons has a four-man, full-time police force that plies State Highway 75 north of Dallas for speeders, nearly clearing its yearly budget for fines in two months.

But city officials insist they don't want to get a bad reputation. They just want to enforce the law.

"We'd like to pull out of Highway 75 completely," said City Council member Mike Bell. "We don't want to get a bad reputation. But right now they've got to come up with some tourist tickets to pay for themselves."

Citizens band radios often crackle along the 2.8-mile strip of state highway annexed by the Melissa City Council in February, warning truckers and motorists of patrols.

More than 60 percent of the fines collected by the city between Feb. 1 and Aug. 31 for violations of Melissa law have come from citations, primarily speeding tickets, written against drivers on Highway 75.

The 1980-81 city budget's fine category of $19,000 was almost matched during July and August when police filed complaints totaling $16,000 against Highway 75 drivers.

"It's pretty well known in the are as being highly patrolled," said Howard Neel of Garland, who drives an 18-wheeler for Safeway. "They don't go past the law, but they enforce it."

U.S. has more internal terrorism than thought

Brian Jenkins, 39, is the director of the Rand Corp.'s program on political violence. Before joining Rand in 1968, Jenkins, a former Green Beret, served in the Dominican Republic and later in Vietnam. He also serves as consultant to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. Jenkins was interviewed by Hearst Feature Service writer Alice Short.

Question: Why does the United States seem to be immune from acts of terrorism within the country?

Jenkins: The perception that the United States has been immune from terrorist activities is not entirely correct. In fact, there is a fair amount of political violence within the United States.

We've had, in the past decade, approximately 600 incidents of terrorist violence, for the most part bombings, but also a few politically motivated murders, hijackings and things of that sort.

The perception that we have had little is owing to the fact that first, terrorism and violence have been directed against property, not people. So it's been less lethal than terrorism elsewhere.

Second, there have been relatively few terrorist spectaculars in the United States.

Third, the volume of ordinary crime in the United States tends to overwhelm that small amount which is politically motivated.

The primary terrorist problem for the United States right now is terrorism directed against American officials and other citizens abroad. U.S. citizens or facilities figure in better than a third of all of the international terrorism that takes place abroad.

Q: Is there a scenario that you can foresee leading to a rapid growth of terrorism in the United States?

A: There are several things that come to mind. It could be the nuclear power issue. American involvement, military involvement abroad, could create the conditions that led to the kind of violence we saw during the Vietnam War.

I'm not talking about the large anti-war protest movement, but on the fringes of the protest movement there were the small fringe groups like the Weather Underground, the World Liberation Front and those sorts that emerge from the broader protest movements.

Q: Why did a group like the Weather Underground fail?

A: The system worked, in the sense that it has this enormous co-optive capacity.

The nature of American terrorism has been that it is a single generation phenomenon. Kids went underground in 1970 or 1969 and the only thing that happened in the intervening 10 years is they got 10 years older. They were able to recruit no second generation of followers because they had no reservoir of support; that's why they failed.

Q: Do you think that the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Iran has changed Americans' ideas about terrorism?

A: I think it did change American attitudes. It elevated the issue of terrorism. It became something that affected us.

Q: Do you think that the government is better prepared to deal with terrorism?

A: The new administration has elevated the issue of terrorism to one of paramount importance by their public statements and various pronouncements on the issue.

Invariably, the measures that government can take are pedestrian measures. I mean, terrorists seize embassies, that's dramatic.

In the following fiscal year the government allocates more money for security at embassies abroad. I mean, it's a logical step, it's a necessary step, but in terms of the inherent drama it's prosaic. So, yes, the steps have been made to the extent that they can be made. The rest has been for the most part symbolic.

2Q: Can the United States draw on any of the Israeli anti-terrorist strategies?

A: The strategy that may be appropriate for one nation to use in dealing with a terrorist struggle is not going to be necessarily an appropriate strategy for another nation.

Israel (is) a nation virtually in a state of war with both conventional forces as well as terrorists that are on the borders. It has developed a strategy it considers necessary to cope with that problem.

We don't have a major domestic problem with terrorism and neither are we surrounded by hostile terrorists on our borders.

If we're talking about a major hostage incident abroad, the opportunities for the use of force by the United States are extraordinarily limited.

A California roof rat is wired with a radio transmitter. The Orange County Vector Control district, which is responsible for pest conrol, this week started a project of trapping and wiring the rats in order to more effectively track the pests. Vector biologists hope the transmitters will make the job of trapping the rats easier so they may be controlled.

First electric tunes played for Chinese

PEKING (AP) — French composer Jean-Michel Jarre sent waves of futuristic electronic music washing over an audience of 20,000 Chinese, but they seemed uncertain about what to make of it.

There was applause for the special effects with laser beams and other lighting that accompanied the music at Wednesday night's performance. At one point, lasers wrote the Chinese characters for "China," "Peking" and "Jarre."

But the reaction was tentative to the music of Jarre's electronic synthesizer, a device that allows him to create his own sounds, and a brief performance on a brand new "laser harp."

With the harp, Jarre, 32, played mystical sounding music by passing his hands along "strings" of laser beams. He looked like someone saying incantations as machine-made mist rose in front of him.

Partly because some of the electronic pieces lacked clear endings, there was only a smattering of applause, sometimes before the real ending. And shortly before 10 p.m., many of the listeners filed out quietly to catch buses.

"Unfortunately, we began late," Jarre said after the 2-hour, 45-minute concert. "They had to catch the last bus home."

He said he was expecting the lack of reaction, because Chinese usually don't applaud enthusiastically at concerts and plays, but "it was a wonderful experience for me. I hope it has been for the Chinese audience."

Jarre, who performed for 1 million people in Paris' Place De La Concorde in 1979, says his work is "on the frontiers of rock music and electronic music."

In their first exposure to a live concert of electronic music, the Chinese seemed "a little surprised but rather positive, I think," he said.

His music has been played on the radio for the last year, ever since the Chinese decided to invite him to perform.

"Though the music was totally unfamiliar to the Chinese, they displayed great curiosity, and marveled at Jarre's imaginative power as he played," China's official Xinhua news agency said.

"Maybe it's hard for people to accept," said a Chinese student in the audience, who added, "Once is enough."

David Dean, with his hand on a Bible held by his wife Kathie, is sworn in Thursday as Texas secretary of state by Chief Justice Joe R. Greenhill, Texas Supreme Court. Watching the Senate Chamber ceremony is Gov. Bill Clements.

Dean pledges to protect voters

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — David Dean, the chief legal aide for two governors, is the new secretary of state, and he pledges to use that office to protect the voting rights of all Texans.

Dean told Gov. Bill Clements, who appointed him as Texas' chief election officer, "You have been more generous with me than I could ever possibly deserve."

Dean, 33, said he joined the governor "in not only favoring the extension of the (federal) Voting Rights Act but in strict enforcement of Texas election laws."

"I assure you the voting rights of all Texans will be protected," he said.

He added, "There is no room for partisanship in the secretary of state's office."

Dean addressed some 300 friends, including Clements, after he was sworn in Thursday in the Senate chamber.

Among the spectators were former Gov. Preston Smith, Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown, Col. Jim Adams, director of the Department of Public Safety and several state legislators and appeals court judges.

Clements chose Dean as secretary of state on Oct. 15 to replace George Strake of Houston, who resigned to seek the GOP nomination for lieutenant governor.

Dean formerly served as general counsel for Democratic Gov. Dolph Briscoe but switched to Clements' campaign after Briscoe was defeated by former Attorney General John Hill in the 1978 Democratic primary. In announcing his appointment, Clements said the selection indicated Dean had made the final switch from the Democratic to Republican Party.

"You're in," said Chief Justice Joe Greenhill of the Texas Supreme Court after the oath.

"I'm somewhat surprised at the attendance today considering the rain — and the appointee," quipped Clements, then added, "I had no idea you'd have this kind of turnout."

Clements said the ceremony was on the anniversary of Sam Houston's swearing-in as president of the Republic of Texas in 1836 — "You're joining good company, David."

The governor said he "could not have asked for a better performance" from Dean as general counsel and director of the Governor's Criminal Justice Division.

Former Midlander named assistant city manager

RICHARDSON — Former Midlander Bill Keffler has been named assistant city manager of Richardson.

Keffler is a 1971 graduate of Lee High School and was president of the junior and senior high classes. He also was a planning assistant for the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission and a legislative assistant for Congressman Richard C. White. He was named administrative assistant for the City of Richardson in May 1977 and was made assistant to the city manager March 16, 1979.

The announcement was made by Richardson City Manager Bob Hughey. Keffler assumes the No. 2 position in the city administration, replacing Ted Willis, who accepted the position of city manager in Grand Prairie.

"Keffler has been an integral part of the management team for the last several years and, with his knowledge of the community, dedication and knowledge of the organization and the city's budgetary process, we could not be more pleased to extend to him the opportunity to grow in this organization," Hughey said.

Bill Keffler

A Notre Dame graduate, he holds a 1975 bachelor's degree in government and urban studies and a 1977 master's of public administration from Texas Tech University. He also has worked for two years as a teaching assistant and part-time instructor in the Department of Political Science while attending graduate school at Tech.

Former prison hospital administrator files suit

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Rosemary Sebastian says she was demoted from her administrator's post at the state prison hospital because she tried to hire women in an attempt to upgrade the health care at the oft-criticized facility.

Mrs. Sebastian's sex discrimination suit against the Texas Department of Corrections said she was demoted and replaced by a less qualified male.

In a complaint to the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Mrs. Sebastian said she was "harassed, penalized and thwarted in the exercise of my managerial functions because of my efforts to recruit and hire women."

The suit, filed in Houston federal court, also complains women employees do not get the same benefits — including free or low-cost haircuts, meals and cleaning — as male employees at the prisons.

Mrs. Sebastian was administrator of medical support services at the Huntsville Unit Hospital until Sept. 1, when she was demoted. She was told of the demotion a month after she received a favorable evaluation from Dr. Ralph Gray, TDC assistant director for health services.

The suit alleged that TDC officials wanted her demoted and replaced by a man because she "is a female and because her efforts to hire employees on a nondiscriminatory basis at TDC will necessarily result in the hiring of females."

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice, in a decision ordering sweeping changes in TDC, said there are not enough qualified medical workers in the prison hospital. Mrs. Sebastian said TDC officials opposed her efforts to hire qualified health care professionals, including registered nurses, if they are women.

"An overwhelming percentage of certain types of credentialed medical personnel, such as registered nurses, is female," the suit said. "TDC officials, especially some unit wardens, have long resisted the employment of females within any of the prison units housing male prisoners."

TDC spokesman Richard Hartley said Thursday he could not comment on the suit. But Hartley acknowledged the prison system has policies restricting contact between female employees and male inmates.

The policy is meant "to alleviate possible hostage situations," Hartley said. Two female employees were killed during a bloody escape attempt in the early 1970s.

Mrs. Sebastian went to work at TDC in April 1980. Three months later she was promoted to administrator. On June 26 she got the favorable evaluation from Gray. However, on July 27 Gray told her she would be demoted three pay grades on Sept. 1 — a salary cut of about $11,000, about one-third of her pay.

TDC officials eventually reduced the pay cut because state law prohibits decreases of more than one pay grade at a time.

Mrs. Sebastian said Thursday her salary, without the demotion, would have been $27,840, instead of the $24,408 she is making in a newly created position.

The suit said Mrs. Sebastian was replaced by Richard Bader, who holds no college degrees. Mrs. Sebastian, 37, is a graduate of the University of Texas and the Baylor College of Medicine's physicians' assitant program. She also has a certificate in health care administration from Trinity Univrsity and is working toward a master's degree in health administration.

Mrs. Sebastian's suit claims TDC officials "retaliated" against her for filing a complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Members of The Thouvenel String Quartet of Midland, from left, Eugene Purdue, Teresa Fream, Jeff Levenson and Sally Chisholm, talk about their 1980-81 four-concert series at New York City's Carnegie Hall. The Thouvenel's five-concert Midland season opens Saturday with an 8 p.m. performance of works by Haydn, Kodaly and Brahms at the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College.

Midland's Thouvenel String Quartet had good year at Carnegie Hall

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

For the composer, it was a reunion. For the musicians, it was an opportunity to play his works before a live audience — one that could instantly hear the music.

Ernest Krenek, Viennese-born composer, whose first U.S. experience came in 1939 after he had lost everything to the Nazis, had returned to New York for the June 1981 Carnegie Hall world debut of his "Quartet No. 8," composed for The Thouvenel String Quartet of Midland under a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

In 1939 he had received a warm response from the New York musical community. At that time, he was known for his "Quartet No. 1," written when he was 21, and his jazz opera "Johnnie Speilt Auf," written when he was 26. The opera had brought him overnight success in Europe and made him quite a wealthy man before the Nazis stripped him of his money.

Although the Thouvenel String Quartet had performed three previous Carnegie Hall concerts featuring Krenek's works during the 1980-81 season and were to perform the last the next day, this pre-premiere performance was special.

THE RECITAL took place in a private home. The audience included composers, publishers, record company executives, and Krenek sitting in the first row.

"When we walked out to play," violinist Eugene Purdue said during a recent interview with quartet members, "with Krenek and Elliot Carter sharing the score just three feet away from us, well, it was the high point of the year for me."

"It's easy for them to hear the music," cellist Jeff Levenson said of the audience. "When it falls on ears that understand it, it helps us."

For all the members of the Quartet, last year was a very good year. Each remembers how he felt during the first New York City Carnegie Hall concert.

"The first one was hard for everybody," violist Sally Chisholm said. "You don't know what the audience expects; you don't know what the reviewers expect; and you don't know what you are. For me, it was like going through a barrier. No longer was I just somebody from Oklahoma. It caused me to have a difference in attitude about myself."

"I WAS AWARE of the dust in the air," violinist Teresa Fream said. "All my senses were heightened to the degree that I was aware of everything around me."

The audience for the first concert contained mainly press members and composers. Since Krenek's works have been performed in Europe much more than the U.S., "the composers are familiar with his text and writing but not with how his music sounds," Ms. Chisholm explained.

"The composers were reading the score while we played. Elliot Carter was playing the music (on an imaginary level) as he heard it being performed."

"It was the most anticipation I've ever felt from an audience," Ms. Chisholm said. "They all wanted us to do well and sometimes excitment is stronger than all your fears."

"I felt so strongly about the music and I felt so prepared," Ms. Fream said, "that I was excited, but not scared. The last concert was the same way."

The second and third concerts were quite different from the first and the last.

OF NO. 2, Ms. Chisholm said, "There were 25 concerts the same night. There were people there who had never been to a quartet concert." The third concert was held on a night when "there were almost no concerts and people wanted an evening of chamber music."

This was the crowd which was the most familiar to them. As Purdue said, "The audience was composed of regular concert goers."

Perhaps Levenson best summed up what each member of the Quartet learned from the four-concert experience in New York City when he said, "It just becomes another space you play in because people are the same everywhere. If you play from the heart, it doesn't matter where you play."

All were grateful to Sam Woodward, general manager of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, because "he wrote the grant that commissioned the 8th quartet." Those who are familiar with grant writing know it is a lengthy process and Woodward "did it on his own free of charge." Krenek's "Quartet No. 8" was "a result of the grant" and the world premiere performance was a result of a second grant written by Woodward.

The quartet is sponsored by the Midland Symphony & Chorale Association. As a representative of the Midland Symphony Association, Woodward was present at the preview performance as well as the premiere. The Thouvenel members said his presence was a great help to them.

INCLUDED IN THE quartet's future plans are Saturday's 8 p.m. season opener of the five-concert Midland season at the Allison

Nancy charms at Alfred E. Smith memorial dinner

NEW YORK (AP) — Nancy Reagan has laid to rest any rumors that might have arisen up after Washington gift shops started selling postcards showing the first lady dressed as a queen.

"I never wear a crown," Mrs. Reagan joked Thursday at a dinner in New York City. "It messes up my hair."

During brief remarks at the annual Alfred E. Smith memorial dinner honoring the late New York governor, Mrs. Reagan said she wanted to tell the 1,000 guests about some of her activities, such as fighting drug abuse and supporting the Girl Scouts.

"And then, of course, the Nancy Reagan home for wayward china," she quipped.

Referring to criticism of the $209,000 set of state china purchased through private donations, Mrs. Reagan said she was just glad to be able to "make as much money as I did for the White House."

"Ronnie thinks I did such a good job he wants me to help with the deficit."

HERMITAGE, Pa. (AP) — The highest-ranking diplomat among the Americans held hostage in Iran came here to pray at a bronze memorial to the eight servicemen who died in an aborted attempt to rescue him and the other captives.

Bruce Laingen, former charge d'affaires of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, paid his first visit Thursday to the cemetery that helped the nation keep its 444-day vigil for the hostages.

After laying a wreath at the memorial in Hillcrest Memorial Park, Laingen was asked about the effect on him of the ordeal, which ended last January.

"We'll always be different because of it," he said. "We'll never forget."

Laingen, who was in the area to speak at Penn State University's Shenango Valley branch campus, said he had wanted to visit Hillcrest Memorial Park, where a flag had been raised each day of the hostage crisis. Sixty-one flags remain, one for each of the 53 hostages and the eight servicemen.

•

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Actor James Stewart says he plans to turn out for the 93rd annual Tournament of Roses Parade on New Year's Day. In fact, he's going to lead it.

The 73-year-old actor was named Thursday to be grand marshal of the parade.

"I'm honored to have been chosen," he said, adding that his wife and possibly his daughter's family would join him in the ride along the parade route lined by an expected 1.5 million spectators.

Stewart joins a long list of celebrities who have served as grand marshal of the parade, including Walt Disney, John Wayne, Frank Sinatra, Bob Hope, Lorne Greene, Shirley Temple and Mary Pickford.

Stewart's acting career spans five decades and includes 78 westerns, dramas and comedies.

Make-up artist believes his craft is a creation

By KARREN MILLS
Associated Press Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Leopold Allen is an artist. His work has been seen all over the country. But Allen's art work disappears about as fast as he can create it.

Allen does the makeup for the principal dancers with American Ballet Theater, which performed recently at the University of Minnesota's Northrop Auditorium.

He also is in charge of wigs and shoes for the 90-member company.

Allen, who has been with ABT for four years, said he was trained first in fashion design and illustration, then switched to makeup.

"I am an artist, and for me makeup is always a creation," Allen said as he combed out the wig to be worn by the character von Rothbart in a performance of "Swan Lake."

"My one regret is that makeup is never, never saved. It's always washed off or sweated off. I hate to see them take a shower," Allen said.

He said he doesn't feel quite the same about the shoes, even though they may be highly sought after by ballet fans.

The slippers are individually made for each dancer. Most of the shoes are made in Europe at a cost of $31 a pair for the female dancers and about $21 for the male dancers. The women's pointe slippers are more expensive because they have a hard box in the toe.

The ABT dancers go through about $500,000 worth of slippers in a year, Allen said.

For a four-week national tour that began here, ABT carried four huge wooden crates filled with slippers — 50 pair for each woman dancer and 25 pair for each man.

"A pair of women's shoes lasts approximately one performance, but sometimes only one act," Allen said.

Wigs for the principal dancers, which cost $1,000 to $1,500 each, last much longer.

Fine Arts Building at Midland College; two New York concerts at the Abraham Goodman House this spring; a four-concert performance at the Vienna Festival in Austria this June; ten children's concerts for the Midland schools; performances throughout the state as a result of a Texas Arts Commission grant; an NEA Consortium grant which covers premiering a new work by Mel Powell plus several performances of the works of Elliot Carter and Milton Babbitt; and making several recordings on a major label.

This year promises to be even busier for the quartet which has been largely responsible for putting Midland on the map in the classical music world.

Roadblock to peace

While in Midland to address an audience at the Permian Basin Chapter of Associated Builders and Contractors' "Salute to productivity" banquet, former President Gerald Ford recognized the reality from which the United States can find no escape in the Middle East: The radicality of that region's national leaders.

President Ford's choice of Libyan dictator Moammar Khadafy as an example could not have been more appropriate. Khadafy truly is the embodiment of what the United States must be willing to overcome to bring about not a peace in the Middle East, but a lasting peace.

The former president surely was being kind to refer only to Khadafy as a "bully, a cancer, a menace that free nations must handle." Khadafy is an international terrorist of the Fidel Castro ilk and for the last few years has been as much a thorn in the United States' side.

There is little doubt, as President Ford noted, that in the next few years Khadafy's trouble-making will be all too apparent in the Middle East. In fact, it's probably safe to speculate that Libya, under his radical rule, likely will be the reason for failure of the Camp David peace process, if that process, in fact, does fail eventually.

The recent assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat has given the free world ample reason to scrutinize events in the Middle East. Khadafy's leadership of Libya adds to the cause for alarm because he represents a realistic threat to peace.

Hosni Mubarak, Sadat's hand-picked successor, appears the logical choice to lead Egypt in these days of uncertainty. But only time will tell how strong a leader he will be for the Egyptian people and whether he will pursue peace in that region with the passion of the fallen Egyptian leader.

The task of those attempting to weave a lasting peace for the people of the Middle East has never been simple, aggravated by hostility and religious differences dating back thousands of years. The peace process faces a continual uphill battle against foes who would destroy it.

And at the top of that list is Moammar Khadafy — "a bully, a cancer, a roadblock to peace."

Ambassadorial choices

The question has been debated for decades. Should the ranks of United States Ambassadors to foreign capitals be weighted on the side of career diplomats from the State Department, or "amateurs" from the private world?

The answer is, or should be, that the nation is best served by a balance. Each type has a contribution to make. Each has its place. It is up to the president to select candidates suitable for the right spots at the right time.

The question surfaced again this month when the Foreign Service Association took stock of how the Reagan ambassadorial balance was shaping up. It found that of 81 Reagan appointees, a total of 36 posts, or 44 percent, were not from the ranks of the Foreign Service.

Predictably, the association found fault with this equation. Appointments of amateurs, it complained, "Inevitably ... lower the respect of foreign countries for the United States and make a mockery of the careful selection and long and varied experience that professional career officers bring to senior assignments within the service."

The association admitted there were exceptions, but even so the above is an exaggeration. A long and illustrious list of non-professionals has increased "respect of foreign countries for the United States" by service in our embassies in London, Paris, Rome, Tokyo, Buenos Aires, New Delhi, Moscow, and other capitals.

We could not do without these "amateurs." Neither could we do without the career foreign servants, whose scholarship, training and superb diplomatic talents also have kept us on a high plane of global respect. The debate will not end. But as it goes on, let us remind ourselves occasionally that two types of ambassadorial heads, the professional and the amateur, are better than one.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Oct. 23, the 296th day of 1981. There are 69 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 23, 1917, U.S. troops saw their first action in World War I, near Luneville, France.

On this date:

In 1942, the British Eighth Army attacked Axis forces to begin the Battle of El Alamein in Egypt during World War II.

In 1954, Britain, France, the United States and the Soviet Union agreed to end their occupation of Germany.

In 1966, President Lyndon Johnson and the heads of six Pacific nations began a conference in the Philippines on the Vietnam War.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

American-Soviet confrontation risked war

WASHINGTON — Locked in secret Pentagon files are the startling details of a Soviet-American facedown over Iran in August 1980 — a confrontation so fraught with risk that it produced rumblings of nuclear reprisals.

Jack Anderson

The Soviets began building up their forces along the Iranian border in 1980. According to Soviet intelligence cables intercepted by the National Security Agency, the Kremlin anticipated a U.S. military move against Iran in October 1980.

The intercepted cables indicated that as early as July the Soviets had detected preparations by the United States for military action in Iran. The cables alerted Soviet outposts that then-President Jimmy Carter was planning an "October coup" in Iran and warned that the Soviet Union would have to meet force with force.

As a show of strength, the Kremlin bolstered its military forces on the Iranian border and put them through some ominous exercises. These were described by our Joint Chiefs of Staff in a top-secret report:

"In August 1980, an unusually long and complex General Staff controlled post exercise featuring a mock national Soviet invasion of Iran was held in the transborder area. A complex, theater-level command, control, and communications system was deployed and tested; contingency plans were developed, evaluated and updated; and high-level commanders and staffs rehearsed roles in an invasion scenario."

Evidently, this was intended as a warning to Carter to abandon his "October coup" — a term that kept recurring in the Soviet cables to describe the expected U.S. action in Iran.

Carter had taken the precaution of asking the Defense Intelligence Agency to "study and report on possible Soviet military reactions to various scenarios in which the United States forces have invaded Iran." The DIA concluded that the Soviets would intervene.

The DIA warning and the menacing Soviet maneuvers apparently persuaded Carter to give up the idea of a military operation against Iran. He called upon the Joint Chiefs, however, to prepare various military options in case the Soviets carried out their own invasion of Iran.

One ominous proposal, called the "limited strategic option," would have authorized the commander of the Rapid Deployment Force to use 19 nuclear bombs delivered by B-52 bombers against invading Russians. But the idea of limited nuclear warfare confined to Iran, critics warned, was a dream that could turn into a nightmare.

Even as the Soviet juggernaut was staging its mock invasion of Iran, I reported on Aug. 18, 1980, that Carter was preparing to attack Iran. "The ostensible purpose," I wrote, "is to rescue the hostages, but the operation would also exact military retribution."

The question of publishing this classified material was the thornier because it dealt with military operations still in preparation. But I hoped to restrain Carter, whose course, I warned, "would risk war with the Soviet Union." A Soviet-American confrontation over Iran, I warned, "could become the opening skirmish of World War III."

My associate Dale Van Atta learned that the National Security Agency had picked up intercepts that dealt with a massive Soviet build-up on the Iranian border. I reported on Sept. 22 that Russia had "at least 23 divisions in position to move into Iran ... What has alarmed U.S. analysts more than the quantity of the Soviet buildup near Iran is the quality of the forces arrayed there."

The White House denied my reports; CIA spokesmen accused me of printing stories that were too authentic. But the important thing was that the incendiary action was canceled, a dangerous confrontation was avoided and the American hostages eventually were returned.

Footnote: My report in August 1980 that President Jimmy Carter was preparing for military action in Iran brought emphatic, angry denials from the White House. The secret documents, quoted above, should settle who was telling the truth.

After the hostages were safely home, veteran investigative reporter Richard T. Sale spent several weeks checking back into the story. Let me add his conclusion: "Even as Anderson wrote, secret military rehearsals for the second mission had been taking place in the deserts of Utah, California, Texas and New Mexico, while other units practiced in places like Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Benning, Ga., and the Special Operations Wing at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

"Sources claim that U.S. forces were already in position in Egypt and Israel, and the countries from which the second mission was to have been staged."

COSTLY SECOND THOUGHTS: Each day's Congressional Record has a section devoted to "extension of remarks" the members failed to get into the actual floor session for one reason or another. It costs the taxpayers nearly $500 a page for such pearls as these:

— Freshmen Republican Reps. Daniel Coats of Indiana and William Hendon of North Carolina confessed they had missed the previous day's session, but just wanted their colleagues to know they would have voted to approve the previous day's journal if they'd had the chance.

— Rep. Hamilton Fish Jr., R-N.Y., inserted a speech his father and predecessor in office, Hamilton Fish Sr., had made to the Conservative Party of Putnam County, N.Y., in which he "declared war on any Republicans, Democrats or Conservatives who are soft on defense and soft on Communism."

— Rep. Thomas Luken, D-Ohio, complained that his hometown baseball team, the Cincinnati Reds, should by rights be playing the St. Louis Cardinals for the National League pennant because the two teams' won-lost record over the entire season was better than the teams that actually made the playoffs.

●

WATCH ON WASTE: Production of the B-52 bomber ended in November 1962, but the contractor, Boeing, is still storing thousands of tools used on the B-52 assembly lines — and billing the government for storage fees. Most of the 7,195 tools are obsolete and should have been disposed of. Instead, the taxpayers shell out more than $77,000 a year in storage charges.

INSIDE REPORT:

Chuck Robb's 'Democratic Reaganism' galling president

RICHMOND, Va. — The Democratic resurgence in Virginia, where Republicans have not lost the governorship since 1965, casts a shadow over Republican strategy to Reaganize the land of Dixie with the ideological force of the Reagan Revolution.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The reverse may be happening here in a new twist to the old adage: If you can't whip 'em, join 'em. Grabbing at the heart and soul of Reagan's philosophy — stripped down federal bureaucracy, lowered taxes and strong defense — Chuck Robb, the Democratic nominee for governor, is converting Reaganism into the cutting edge of his own otherwise bland campaign.

For the progenitor of Reaganism, Ronald Reagan himself, the prospect of Robb beating Attorney General Marshall Coleman, a moderate Republican by Virginia standards, has unfortunate implications. Reagan desperately wants the state's senior senator, Harry F. Byrd Jr., to finish his long journey out of the Democratic Party in time to run as a Republican in his bid for re-election next year. Byrd, now an independent, would be more likely to run as a Democrat than a Republican if Robb is elected governor on Nov. 3 with four years to rebuild and consolidate his party.

For the president, the pain of watching the state just across the Potomac River elect a Democratic governor during the first year of his presidency would be especially galling. With the single exception of Byrd, not since 1965 has Virginia elected either a non-Republican governor or a U.S. senator, a 16-year record that no other state can beat. The triumphs of Reaganism nationally should have reenforced Reagan's party in the only Southern state carried by Gerald Ford in 1976.

His wife Nancy substituted for the president at a fund-raising party here for Coleman last month, but the president has promised to campaign himself for the Republican nominee in the heavily-populated Tidewater next week. Coleman's political operatives expect no miracle from Reagan's visit but hope it will spark a little electricity in a campaign now celebrated as one of the most boring in the colorful political history of this state.

One reason for the boredom is the phlegmatic Chuck Robb, who married the elder daughter of former President Lyndon Johnson. Ex-Marine Robb is the first conservative to be tapped by his party for governor since Mills Godwin, now a Republican, won in 1965. But strenuous Republican efforts to tie him to Lyndon Johnson's Great Society seem unavailing.

Polls taken by Richard Wirthlin, Coleman's chief researcher and long-time Reagan political adviser, show a percipitous decline in voters' positive perceptions of Robb — up to 50 percent — when they are reminded that the Great Society introduced the era of big government that Reagan is now trying to dismantle, with strong backing in Virginia. The Coleman campaign saturated central and southside Virginia with radio ads for three days last week contrasting Johnson's and Reagan's concepts of the proper role of the federal government. Robb was portrayed as political leader only by right of marriage.

Robb's answer — "I didn't marry Lyndon Johnson, I married his daughter" — makes the Great Society an unlikely Tar Baby for immobilizing Robb.

But far more difficult for Coleman is the shrewd way that Robb has accepted Reaganism, strongly backed by old-line establishment Democrats, without — so far — stampeding liberals in his own party. He has managed to do this while keeping public distance between himself and the liberal constituencies of his party that swung the last two governor nominations to the liberal populist, Henry Howell. Robb enters the last two weeks of the campaign unencumbered by endorsements from the AFL-CIO and with liberal forces of Howell keeping tight-lipped silence. The nervous black community, a key element in Howell's two races, is on the sidelines.

If Robb holds his lead and wins, the lesson is clear: Despite its unmatched record here, the Republican Party of Ronald Reagan will know that the Democrats can turn politics upside down when they market a candidate peddling Democratic Reaganism, however pallid.

CHARLEY REESE

Vietnam intertwined many lives

Jim Rice, a 21-year-old Marine from Newton, Mass., never knew Huong Thi Thanh Le, a Vietnamese girl who just graduated from Forest High School in Ocala, but their lives are intertwined.

Charley Reese

Rice was killed Feb. 7, 1968, near Gio Linh, in the Quang Tri Province, Republic of South Vietnam. One of Jim's fellow Marines told his family how it happened:

"Jim was an outstanding Marine through the firefight and was killed as it diminished. There were only four Marines left not wounded as we pulled back and set up a perimeter around our wounded. Jim was shot in the left side of his head by a sniper after we had pulled back into this defense. Directly prior to this Jim had helped me pull back two seriously wounded Marines and had constantly bandaged and aided the wounded before this. Your son, Jim, was a damn good Marine and couldn't have been a better companion to serve in anyplace or under any conditions with."

This young American wrote a lot of letters to Jim's family and occasionally would send them poems. In one, he wrote: "Why us? Freedom rings far away. Freedom lives, freedom is us — we are here...Let go, give up? Never. Freedom is ours, Share it? Hell yes. For freedom we work, live and die."

In one of his last letters, Rice wrote his family:

"18 days to go (note he died only a few days before his tour was finished) — God willing. One year ago today I arrived in this green land — I have learned an awful lot. I have matured under fire and I cannot wait to get back into college. Yes, I definitely will take on any college professor who starts lecturing about the waste and our wrongness being here in Vietnam. Folks in the United States take so much for granted. Over here in battle we do not live a day at a time — many times we live an hour at a time...I love you one and all and appreciate getting ready to pack up for my trip...so don't worry if you do not hear from me. Johnny, I am looking forward to celebrate your 9th birthday...you have been a great brother..study hard."

Jim Rice is at rest now under the sod of his native Massachusetts. I think he would have been pleased, though, to hear the Valedictorian address of Huong Thi Le. She told her classmates:

"Whenever people have been oppressed, this country has stood ready to help. Americans have died all around the world to defend the freedom of others. I owe my very presence on this stage tonight to you and this wonderful nation. The United States sacrificed to help keep my country free. When we could no longer prevail against our enemies you accepted over 100,000 of us to your shores, gave us freedom, gave us a new start, and gave us a new nation...what you have done is no small thing...I shall do my very best to be worthy of the love and many kindnesses you have shown us.

"My friends, hold fast to what you have. I have come to appreciate the United States as the greatest nation on earth. She is worthy of your fullest loyalty and greatest sacrifice. Treasure her. Love her. Defend her. There are some things worth dying for. The feedom you have here is one of those things.

"Thank you for standing as a nation of freedom in a world of oppression. Thank you, God, for giving me the opportunity to live in a free country which you have so richly blessed. I love you all...may God richly bless you for being the warm, kind and generous people you are."

RRC postpones field rules hearing

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Railroad Commission has postponed a hearing on an application by Phillips Petroleum Co. to amend the special field rules for the Panhandle Field, which includes areas of Potter, Moore, Hutchinson, Carson, Gray and Wheeler counties.

The hearing was scheduled for Tuesday, but the commission granted a delay at the request of the Panhandle Independent Producers Group, which opposes the application.

The producers also asked for a pre-hearing conference, and it was set for Nov. 10. The commission said a date for a hearing on the Phillips application will be scheduled at that time.

Almost another Three Mile Island

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Two key valves that malfunctioned Sept. 3 at the San Onofre nuclear power plant could have caused a Three Mile Island-style accident had coolant been lost, according to a Nuclear Regulatory Commission spokesman.

The valves, part of the emergency core cooling system to prevent a meltdown, failed to open after an electrical failure, Southern California Edison and NRC spokesmen told The San Diego Union Thursday.

No emergency occurred.

Money men say Alaska pipeline project awesome

WASHINGTON (AP) — Banking experts say there's no guarantee that U.S. concessions will attract enough money to complete the $35 billion Alaska natural gas pipeline, a projected considered awesome by world financiers.

The banking officials offered the assessment as both houses of Congress continued hearings on a Reagan administration financing package intended to raise private money for the 4,800-mile pipeline.

"The size and complexity of this financing are viewed with a good degree of awe by the lenders," said Stanley Lewand, vice president of Chase Manhattan Bank.

"We cannot say at this juncture ... that approval of the waiver requests will ensure that the financing will be accomplished," he said. "We would hope that this Congress will ... be willing to hear and react to future needs should the global financial community find the (proposal) ... not sufficient."

Lewand's assessment was shared by vice presidents of Citibank, Morgan Guarantee Trust and Bank of America in testimony Thursday before subcommittees of the House Interior and Energy committees.

The two House panels and the Senate Energy Committee were continuing hearings today on the financing package. Congress must approve the package by Dec. 18 or it dies automatically.

While not promising financing, the banking leaders told Congress that approval of the package is essential if the United States even hopes to build the pipeline.

"I cannot emphasize enough that without approval of these waivers, private financing of the project is not possible," said H. Anton Tucher, vice president of Bank of America.

"On the other hand, I cannot tell you that approval of the waivers will assure private financing. What the waivers will accomplish is to provide a framework within which negotiations can continue."

The package waives some federal laws and could force gas consumers in the lower 48 states to begin paying for the pipeline before it is completed.

That provision was attacked in the Senate hearing by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, as "unfair, inequitable and unjust." Metzenbaum said it breaks faith with earlier promises that consumers would not have to subsidize the pipeline.

But the ranking Democrat on the panel, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said the drawbacks of the package do not override the need for the United States to develop its domestic energy supplies.

"Either we pass this waiver package and get on with the job of financing and building the project, or we abandon our hopes to develop our natural gas energy resources in Alaska and northern Canada," said Jackson. "The choice is that simple."

The waiver package also was strongly supported by the Reagan administration and Alaska Gov. Jay Hammond.

Energy Secretary James Edwards said during his second day of testimony that approval of the financing package was essential to complete the pipeline and increase domestic supplies of energy.

Acting Assistant Secretary of State Ernest B. Johnston Jr. stressed the importance of the package on U.S.-Canadian relations.

He said if the package were rejected, "the Canadians would undoubtedly feel betrayed and the bilateral relationship would suffer." Canada already has invested billions of dollars in the project based on U.S. assurances of support.

Hammond said the pipeline "is critical, not only because it will unlock the reserves at Prudhoe Bay, but because it will spur exploration and development of Alaska's storehouse of oil and natural gas."

"Completion of a transportation system for natural gas would not only encourage, but in a basic sense permit, the development of these resources," he said.

However, Hammond also told the committee that Alaska has made no decision about using part of its vast oil revenues to finance part of the pipeline.

He said he has appointed a Cabinet-level committee to explore the pros and cons of Alaska participation.

Three oil companies' profits up; Texaco's down

The nation's major oil companies are generally showing moderate increases in third-quarter profits, helped by improved earnings from refining and marketing operations and one-time gains from reducing crude oil inventories.

However, one oil company, Texaco, posted a 7 percent decline in earnings, which it blamed on weak sales.

The gains "are satisfactory but not especially robust," said Eugene L. Nowak, an oil stock analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. in New York.

Earlier this year, major oil companies reported weak profits or even losses in refining and marketing. They were unable to pass on to consumers the price increases of last December by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Oil companies have been paring inventories of oil because of lower demand for petroleum products and because of high interest rates, which have doubled the cost of storing a barrel of oil to an estimated 75 cents a month.

Gulf Oil Corp. and three other big oil concerns on Thursday reported higher earnings for the quarter ended Sept. 30, and each cited better results from refining and marketing.

But Texaco Inc., which ranks as the third-largest U.S. oil company, blamed weaker demand for petroleum products for its decline in third-quarter earnings.

All of the companies said earnings on domestic oil production and exploration were higher than in last year's third quarter.

Gulf, the fifth-largest oil concern, posted a 30 percent gain on higher refining profits and a three-fold increase in production of North Sea oil.

Union Oil Co. of California said improved profits from its refining and marketing operations and higher U.S. crude oil and natural gas prices boosted overall earnings 58 percent. Union is ranked 16th largest in the United States.

Texaco said depressed markets for petroleum, especially outside the United States, offset the benefits of higher domestic oil prices. Texaco derives a majority of its profits from foreign operations while the other oil concerns reporting Thursday rely more on domestic operations for their earnings.

If not for a $183 million gain from reduced oil inventories, Texaco's profit drop would have been far sharper.

Getty Oil Co., based in Los Angeles, reported a 7 percent rise in third-quarter earnings, citing higher U.S. oil prices that increased its earnings from production.

Marathon Oil Co. reported a 92 percent jump in third-quarter profit, mainly on improved earnings from marketing and refining operations. The gain partly reflects Marathon's relatively weak 1980 third quarter.

Reductions in farm bill sought

'A lot of work' foreseen in conference

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is demanding that congressional negotiators sharply reduce a multi-billion-dollar farm bill passed by the House amid claims that it barely provides a "safety net for the farmers of America."

"We've got a lot of work to do in conference," Agriculture Secretary John R. Block said Thursday after the House approved the measure, 192-160, following fractious debate.

The four-year farm bill, which also would give investigators of food stamp fraud the right to carry guns and make arrests, exceeds the administration's spending guidelines by billions of dollars.

Block has warned that the measure could be the target of a presidential veto if it is not pared.

He used that veto threat just five weeks earlier to steer an administration-backed program through the Senate, which has traditionally been more generous than the House on farm programs.

"The Senate came out with a very balanced bill," Block said. "The House bill has excessive supports. (It) is extremely out of balance."

The Block-endorsed Senate bill, estimated by Agriculture Department analysts to cost some $10.8 billion over the next four years, has been labeled "The Farm Bankruptcy Act" by a number of farm organizations.

The House plan, despite higher dairy, grain and fiber supports costing an extra $6 billion to $7 billion over the four years, is not considered much better, even by those who drafted it.

"This bill does not do all I think should be done to give farmers a fair chance to pull out of the very serious economic squeeze they are facing today," said Agriculture Committee Chairman Kika de la Garza, D-Texas.

"This is no bill that is going to bail anyone out," he added. "It's a safety net for the farmers of America. ... We cannot balance the (federal) budget on the back of the American farmer."

The differences between the House and Senate versions are so great that the joint House-Senate conference committee will have substantial latitude in deciding the support level for most major commodities.

But even at the highest level — the House proposal in most cases — many farm organizations still say the supports will be inadequate.

Both bills, said Carl Schwensen of the National Association of Wheat Growers, "reflect the cheapest financial commitment the government can get away with."

Among the differences to be settled by the conference committee is the House plan to give food stamp fraud investigators limited police powers, which was approved Thursday by voice vote. The Senate version of the farm bill does not include such a provision.

"The fraud and abuse in this program is just outrageous," Rep. John Rousselot, R-Calif., said Thursday. "This is an attempt to try to put better discipline in the system to prevent this fraud and abuse."

But critics of the plan warned that an even more far-reaching result could be the threat to constitutional rights.

"Certainly people are concerned about the fraud and abuse in the food stamp program, but this is the wrong direction," argued House Judiciary Chairman Peter Rodino, D-N.J. "When you're beginning to intrude in areas that are so fundamental, so sensitive, you've got to stop and listen."

Debate over the farm bill caught rural members of Congress between a mandate to cut spending and producer demands for increased price supports to offset predictions that farm income will remain at severely depressed levels.

The new commodity program, to replace price support programs that expired last month, maintains farm prices through a complex system of government loans, direct payments and purchases.

Congress asked to avoid 1982 agriculture census

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is asking Congress to cancel the scheduled 1982 census of agriculture, an enumeration made by the federal government every five years.

If approved, the plan would mean no new census information on the nation's 2.4 million farms until 1987.

Arnold Bollenbacher, chief of the Census Bureau's agricultural division, said Thursday that the request was sent to Capitol Hill earlier this week.

Further, the package included a request to do away with the five-year census entirely and conduct it every 10 years, he said. The plan would require approval by Congress.

The census, conducted mostly by mail, would involve U.S. farming operations during calendar 1982.

Bollenbacher estimated that if the plan is approved, it might save around $50 million.

There are a number of economic censuses taken every five years and agriculture is one of them, he said. Although the proposal calls for "some minor cuts" in the others, agriculture is the only one that is being recommended for elimination.

Asked if there has been any reaction yet to the plan, Bollenbacher said he had heard of none, adding that it has been only a few days since the proposal was sent to Congress.

But he said that if past history is any guide, there will be considerable debate and objection. In 1973, for example, the Nixon administration tried to impound funds for the farm census. A storm of protest in Congress forced it to be carried out.

Bollenbacher said the agricultural and other economic sectors are examined every five years to document rapidly changing shifts in production, incomes, capital spending and other important facts.

"The changes occur rapidly enough that the 10-year benchmarks are not adequate for economic planning," he said.

Under the plan, the next agricultural census would be in 1987, which would "put it in phase" with the 1987 economic census, Bollenbacher said. "Then there would be a '92 economic census, without anything on the agricultural side."

The government began gathering agricultural census information every 10 years in 1840. Congress in 1915 authorized it as a five-year program, which started in 1925.

Trends such as growth in farm size, the changes in land ownership, corporate farming and many others are detailed in the five-year census reports. The information serves many users, including the food industry, machinery manufacturers and other sectors that depend on agriculture.

Soviet Union boosts its purchase of U.S. wheat

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union has bought an additional 200,000 metric tons of wheat for delivery in 1981-82, the sixth year of a long-term purchase agreement with the United States.

Agriculture Department officials said Thursday that the latest sales boosted to nearly 8.1 million tons the amount of grain bought for delivery during the sixth year. The agreement guarantees the Soviets can buy up to 8 million tons annually but must consult with U.S. officials if more than that is wanted.

The United States recently told the Soviets they could buy an additional 15 million tons of grain during the sixth year — making a total of 23 million tons in potential sales. The Soviets, however, have not indicated how much additional grain they might buy.

Sales so far include about 3.72 million tons of wheat and 4.34 million tons of corn.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat or soybeans, or 39.4 bushels of corn.

Earlier this week, the department said the Soviet Union bought 500,000 metric tons of U.S. soybeans for delivery in the coming year, the first purchase of the oilseeds in nearly two years.

Officials reported the soybean sales on Wednesday but so far have not indicated whether the Soviets are expected to remain in the soybean market.

According to the department's Foreign Agricultural Service, this marks the the first time the Soviets have bought U.S. soybeans since then-President Carter imposed a partial embargo on sales of farm commodities to the Soviet Union on Jan. 4, 1980.

At that time, 806,500 metric tons of soybeans already had been exported to the Soviet Union. The embargo prevented the delivery of an additional 710,300 tons.

The embargo, which President Reagan lifted last April, permitted the export of the 8 million metric tons of wheat and corn annually that had been guaranteed by the long-term agreement. Soybeans, however, were not part of the agreement.

Texas representative says state's fire ant problem at epidemic level

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Rep. Dan Kubiak said Thursday the "fire ant problem has passed the dangerous stage and is reaching epidemic levels." He said fire ants have killed livestock and seriously hurt many people — especially young children.

The ants' hard mounds also have damaged farm and yard equipment, said Kubiak, D-Rockdale.

"I believe the state must respond to this serious problem by aerial and ground spraying ...," said Kubiak.

He said he hoped State Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown could set up regional spraying that would be of "benefit to everyone."

Kubiak said in a statement he also had asked Rep. Leroy Wieting, D-Portland, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture and Livestock, to appoint a special committee to investigate fire ants.

Corn surplus at 1.03 billion bushels, somewhat higher than anticipated

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new report by the Agriculture Department shows the U.S. inventory of corn on Oct. 1 was 1.03 billion bushels, slightly more than had been estimated.

Previously, department officials estimated there would be 996 million bushels of "old-crop" corn left over when the new corn marketing year began Oct. 1.

CUMBERLAND, Md. (AP) — Ed Small claims it was his independent spirit that prompted him to quit his job as a government photographer and try his hand at blacksmithing.

That independent attitude was coupled with the pleasure of "making things from ideas that pop into your head, and trying to make them out of iron, and trying to reclaim some of the real old methods of the master craftsman," he said while puttering about his forge on the outskirts of this western Maryland city.

Like the blacksmith of yore, Small said he shoed an occasional horse. But mainly he uses his homemade forge to fashion Damascus blades and ornamental items, mostly colonial reproductions.

By doing so, he has become one of a growing legion of craftsmen who are reviving a 3,000-year-old art which until recently was on the wane.

"It (blacksmithing) is enjoying a renaissance," said Small. "There are probably somewhere in the neighborhood of 1,500 blacksmiths in the United States right now, where 20 years ago, there may have been 100."

He speculated that the desire for artistic expression has in part led to the resurgence of the art.

In addition, he said, "the counterculture is kind of reverting back to the land. It is a big movement and has been big for the past 15 years. If you go to the craft shows, you can see it."

Although Small did not serve an apprenticeship under a master blacksmith — he gleaned most of his knowledge from books and trial and error — he noted many blacksmiths were willing, even eager, to pass along what they know to others.

It has been five years since Small quit his job shooting pictures for the U.S. Department of Agriculture and took up smithing on a full-time basis. He said he finally felt he had finished his training period in March.

"I am not saying I'm a master," he stressed. That would come, he said, "when your peer group recognizes you as a master.

"Anything in this skill takes a long time to get proficient at," said Small.

Even knowing at what temperature to forge a certain metal or alloy takes practice. And some things take a certain instinct.

His coal-fired forge can heat iron up to 3,000 degrees, but he uses no thermometer to gauge the temperature.

"A blacksmith has to know his temperature by the color of the coals" in the forge, he said.

Most of Small's time is devoted to making Damascus blades, a pre-1700 sword-making process involving heat treatment and lamination of layer upon layer of iron and steel geared to strengthen the blade.

"I make them to use," said Small of the blades. "Generally, only a collector can afford them because they run $100 to $250 and on up to $1,000, depending on who makes the knife."

Small is so concerned by the individualism of the trade that he said he — and other smiths as well — disliked "The Village Blacksmith," the Henry Wadsworth Longfellow poem extolling the virtues of the smithy under that spreading chestnut tree.

"Everybody connotes blacksmiths with that (poem) and blacksmiths are such an individualistic group of people that they don't like really to be cliqued with one particular thing," he explained.

Group reaches inner-city kids

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — "Inner-city kids need motivation and self-confidence so they can compete and succeed in the job market — and one way to meet this need is to expand Junior Achievement," says David T. Kearns, past-president and member of the board of directors of JA.

Although there are 35,000 JA advisers who work with 300,000 boys and girls — setting up businesses and making and selling goods — their ranks need to grow to reach more kids, Kearns says.

"Inner-city youngsters are alienated from many aspects of life that most Americans take for granted," he explains. "They need our help and encouragement in entering the mainstream of our economic system."

Junior Achievement gives kids the philosophy, exposure and hands-on business experience they need, says Kearns, president of Xerox Corp.

Glass conference scheduled in US

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — An International Glass Conference will be held in the United States next June 7-12. It is sponsored jointly by the Corning Museum of Glass, the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Toledo Museum of Art.

Working sessions and related activities will be held in New York City and Toledo, as well as in Corning, according to Dwight P. Lanmon, director of the Corning Museum of Glass and conference coordinator. The gathering, he said, is exected to attract glass scholars, collectors and dealer interested in the historical, archeological, and artistic study of glass.

Mellon grants

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — The Worcester Art Museum says it has received a $125,000 grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

It says the grant will "provide assistance for exhibition research and for the preliminary editorial costs of catalogues and scholarly books..."

Another grant from the Mellon Foundation has gone to the Corning Museum of Glass in Corning, N.Y. The $150,000 grant will help fund expenses involved in planning exhibitions and to support the cost of preparing various publications.

DEAR ABBY

Husband's 'doubles' driving her crazy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you about a problem that may seem trivial to you, but it is threatening to destroy my marriage. My husband does everything in twos. If we go to a restaurant once, we have to go back there a second time even if we don't like the place!

We have two children and own two homes. My husband insists that we attend every movie, ballet, opera and concert twice! Now for the reason I am ready to lose my mind:

Four years ago we took an around-the-world tour. Now my husband wants to do it again! Abby, we can't afford it. This man is driving me crazy, and I have told him that unless he gets professional help I am going to leave him. Am I wrong? Or is he in need of help? He agreed to listen to you. If you print this, no names, please. He owns two businesses. — "J" IN CHICAGO

DEAR J.: Your "two-timer" husband has a compulsive neurosis. My psychiatric consultant says it is some kind of "ritual" he's obsessed with, and he should see a therapist who practices behavioral therapy. Consult your local mental health clinic or the American Psychiatric Association for recommendations. (P.S. Better get the names of two doctors.)

DEAR ABBY: Is it fitting and proper for a woman of 64 to caress, rub or stroke the arm of her 34-year-old son while in the company of other people at a gathering?

What possible reason would she have for doing this? I told her I thought it was in poor taste, then she said I had funny ideas. What do you think? — NEW YORKER

DEAR NEW YORKER: A mother (of any age) who rubs, strokes or caresses the arm of her son either alone or in the company of others probably does so unconsciously out of warm feelings and affection. I see nothing improper about it. And if you do, I too think you have "funny" ideas.

DEAR ABBY: The other evening at a large and rather formal dinner party, I was amazed (to say the least) when, just before dessert was served, the hostess passed out toothpicks to each guest. It seems her husband (a dentist) has strong feelings about oral hygiene.

Care to comment? — GERT IN E. GREENBUSH

DEAR GERT: I'm amazed that a dentist would pass out toothpicks in his home. Picking one's teeth is a dangerous practice. A trip to the washroom is in order. Brushing is fine, and flossing is even better. But toothpicks? No! And never at the table.

DEAR ABBY: In today's paper there was another story about a child who was lost in the mountains while camping with her family. Why does this tragedy have to occur year after year?

I would like to pass on a suggestion that we have used in years gone by because we, too, were a camping family.

Each of us was equipped with a police whistle, which we wore around our necks. If one of us lost his direction or became separated from the others, he could just give a long toot to let us know where to look for him. Children being children, there was a lot of miscellaneous tooting at first, but after the novelty wore off, our whistles became as important to our camping trips as sleeping bags.

Abby, please pass this on to your camping readers. — OLD TOOTER

DEAR TOOTER: Hear, hear, all campers! Carry whistles and be prepared to give a toot!

Early retirement: Are the benefits dwindling?

EDITOR'S NOTE: For 20 years, Americans have been urged to retire before age 65. But as AP Writer Nancy Shulins reports in the first of a three-part series, early retirement's golden years may be over.

By NANCY SHULINS
Associated Press Writer

Each weekday morning for most of his life, Chester Oldakowski beat the sun out of bed. He pulled on his work pants, grabbed his brown paper lunch bag, jumped in his car and headed for work.

Chet Oldakowski was an assembler at the American Meter plant in Erie, Pa. He took straight lengths of tubing and fed them through machines that spit out round tubes.

He labored in "the penthouse," a third-floor corner that was hot in summer and cold in winter. For 35 years — long enough to amass five weeks vacation and a bad back, he made 100 tubes a day. Five days a week. Forty-seven weeks a year.

No more.

Oldakowski, 63, called it quits in February, having punched his last time clock and assembled his last gas meter. He took his pension and his Social Security check and went home.

He's still rejoicing. "I'm doing fine, good, wonderful," he says.

"Enough is enough. After doing the same thing every day for 35 years, I just wanted to get out. Wouldn't you?"

The answer, for most Americans, is a resounding yes: The trickle of workers who began taking early retirement in the 1960s has swollen to a flood. They're collecting bigger benefits. They're healthier. They're living longer. And they have time to enjoy it.

Like Oldakowski, 70 percent of those receiving their first Social Security checks this year are under 65, and more than half are 62. Thirty years ago, half of all men 65 and over were working. Today, it's one in five.

"Those retirement parties, they used to be sad affairs. They're darn happy affairs now," Victor Zink, employee benefits director for General Motors Corp. in Detroit, said recently before his own retirement after 35 years of work.

But the party may be over.

Even as Americans have come to accept 62 and out — eagerly or otherwise — after being told for 20 years that they have a right to quit early, they're finding it's no longer a sure thing.

Signs are beginning to point to a reversal of the trend toward early retirement.

Social Security, the program that made retirement's golden age possible, is having trouble meeting its bills because of inflation, past promises and the growing ranks of retirees. And unless something is done, the problems will get worse when the baby boom generation retires.

The abundant labor supply provided by that boom isn't being replaced. Instead of pushing early retirement, business and industry are going to be urging workers to stay on.

President Reagan has proposed a bipartisan effort with Congress to figure out what to do about Social Security and retirement.

As the debate over Social Security points up, shortages of money and manpower mean Americans may not be able to afford to keep the promises made to millions of retirees today when the generation now entering the workforce is ready to quit.

A 65-year-old retiree who earned average wages and quits work this year after contributing $8,324 to the system will collect at least $120,870 if he or she lives 17 more years as expected.

Today, three workers pay for the benefits of one recipient. In 30 years, the ratio could be 2 to 1 — or worse.

Already, some industries are recalling retired workers to fill manpower shortages, which are likely to worsen given today's low birth rates.

Even if they could, a sizeable group of older Americans doesn't want to call it quits. They're pushing to change laws and retirement policies to end the subtle — and not-so-subtle — message that old folks are not wanted.

When Congress introduced early retirement in 1956 by making women eligible for reduced Social Security benefits at 62, many saw retirement as the first step down the road to an idle existence.

But the economy needed to make room in the labor force for the baby boom generation and record numbers of women who wanted to work. Three recessions since 1960 added to the pressure. So did automation, because many employers found it cheaper to train young workers than to retrain old ones.

All along, says James Schultz, professor of welfare economics at Brandeis University, "we were increasingly telling people that retirement is a reward for a long life of hard work — something they shouldn't be ashamed of."

In time, union contracts that sweetened pensions and politicians who increased Social Security benefits turned pressure for early retirement into practice. Older Americans responded with a fundamental change in the way they viewed their lives, their labors and their last years.

"We used to define ourselves by our work," says Herman Brotman, one of the authors of the Social Security Act of 1935 and now a consultant to the U.S. Labor Department.

"But work has lost a great deal of its appeal," he says, "Many jobs are repetitive and annoying, and we've been teaching people for some years how to use their leisure time — how to play games. Retirement and enjoyment of life becomes more important than staying on the job."

It is this new attitude that makes change so difficult. Born of economic necessity, early retirement has come to be regarded not as a blessing, but a birthright.

The system created since World War II also has helped lift the elderly out of the depths of poverty and given them growing economic clout.

In the process, it has spawned a formidable political bloc.

Eleanor Phelps keeps a trunkful of props for TV commercials that require her to portray old ladies as "little dumb fools."

Ms. Phelps, a New York actress who's "roughly the same vintage as Katharine Hepburn," says she generally is cast as "an ancient grandmother."

"Honey, 10 years ago, they had me with little knitted caps and shawls," she recalls.

But there was no need to dip into the trunk for one recent performance: a Vidal Sassoon shampoo ad depicting Ms. Phelps sudsing up in the shower, in a sensuous celebration of "silky, sexy" hair.

There isn't a shawl to be found anywhere.

"I got a call from a psychiatrist the other day," she reports. "He wanted to know whether this signaled a new trend, whether maybe they'd stopped showing us as half senile or something."

To understand what Social Security means to today's retirees, first look at what it has done for them. The emerging "mature market" on Madison Avenue is one sign of its success.

Social Security pumps $145 billion a year in benefits into the economy. In Florida, with the nation's highest concentration of old people, it's worth $8 billion a year — half as much as tourism, the No. 1 industry.

Overall, federal expenditures for the elderly account for more than 5 percent of the gross national product.

In 30 years, the average monthly Social Security retirement benefit has grown from about $40 to more than $429 a month for 62-year-old average wage-earners and $592.50 for 65-year-old average earners.

More significantly, the monthly check that represented 18 percent of the average wage in 1950 represents 55 percent today, although it will drop to 41 percent by 1984 due to a change in the formula.

As a result, while 33 percent of older Americans lived in poverty 30 years ago, the Congressional Budget Office estimates only 6 percent can be so classified now if government benefits are taken into account.

If federal aid is not counted, the percentage of older Americans living in poverty has actually increased, from 14 percent in 1978 to 15.7 percent in 1980, a sign of inflation's toll and of the growing reliance on Social Security to make up for it.

Mean household income still lags. In 1979, it was $11,144 — 57 percent of the national average. But researchers say the figure is low partly because elderly households are small — 1.75 people versus the average 2.75.

Per capita, the income of people over 65 averages $6,358, nearly as high as households headed by career-established people 35-44.

Older consumers also can afford to be freer with their money, says Fabian Linden of The Conference Board, a New York-based research organization.

"At that stage of life...you have paid off your mortgage and the kids have long since flown the coop. There are no tuition bills and you have an awful lot of obligations behind you," he says.

"If you take all of those things together, you're in pretty good shape."

Given Social Security's contribution to the well-being of America's older people, it's no wonder they're fighting to save it.

In 1980, Bob Duncan, an Oregon Democrat, set his sights on a sixth term in Congress as he entered a primary race against a man half his age who had never held elected office.

Few thought he could lose — including his opponent, Ron Wyden, who said Duncan "had a seat for life."

Duncan's corner was filled with Portland's Teamsters, machinists and municipal employees.

Wyden's was filled with old people.

As a co-founder of the Oregon chapter of the Gray Panthers and a former director of Oregon Legal Services for the Elderly, Wyden was well known to senior citizens.

His white-haired backers held coffees, canvassed neighborhoods and posted 2,800 lawn signs extolling Wyden's virtues.

The results: Wyden, 53,000 votes. Duncan, 35,000.

Says the freshman representative from Oregon: "There is no doubt in my mind that I am in Congress today as a reflection of the fact that senior citizens have big political biceps."

In 1976, Americans over 65 comprised 11 percent of the population but cast 17 percent of the votes in the presidential election. Sixty-two percent of the over-65 group voted. The average for all ages was 46 percent.

The elderly lobby is one of the nation's biggest, best-organized and most effective. The American Association of Retired Persons alone claims over 12 million members.

With the 4 million-member National Council of Senior Citizens and the 50,000-member Gray Panthers, these lobbyists have won many benefits for the elderly — discounts on bus fares, rebates for property taxes, improved medical care.

Man's last days of work; first day of retirement

By NANCY SHULINS
Associated Press Writer

One recent day, Victor Zink walked into his office at General Motors Corp. in Detroit and packed 35 of his 59 years into a pile of brown cardboard boxes.

It was all there: from the impersonal — books and papers; to the highly personal — the paperweight fashioned for him out of seashells by another retiree long ago, the photographs of events he'd forgotten and of people he'd known who are gone now.

"I knew it was all there somewhere, tucked away in the back of my mind," said Zink, who retired as director of employee benefits, a job that made him privy to the comings and goings of thousands of other employees.

The items packed into the boxes tell a lot about what happened to Victor Zink during those 35 years.

They were good years.

As he packed, he thought of the people — friends, really — who had shaped his days and whom he'd keep meaning to get together with but most likely would not see again.

He thought of the decisions that would be made without him, and the problems that would no longer be his to solve; of the capable people who would replace him, and how the office that had been his for so long would soon become somebody else's.

And he realized that in some ways, he really wouldn't be missed much.

Life would go on and would go on well at the office without Victor Zink.

The thought — the finality of it — made him sad. He knew it would, just as he knew he'd never made it all the way through his thank-you speech at the retirement party they gave him, succumbing to sentimentality when he reached the part where he said goodbye.

And yet, alongside the sadness, the apprehension about how he would fill all his time, there was something else: a tentative excitement, a gradual and growing realization.

"Retirement is really a beginning, I think," he said slowly. "There's a feeling of freedom. It's almost like going back to when you first went out into the world.

"It wasn't a black-and-white situation in those days, either, but you were young enough and adventurous enough to feel like you could do anything. In retirement, you're older, of course, but you have that same kind of freedom."

Zink will use his new freedom to try many things: writing and acting, public speaking and teaching. "If one thing doesn't work out, so be it," he said.

Then he remembered the retired executive who reluctantly left his job at GM some years ago. "He came back and said, 'Why didn't you tell me? There is so much to do I don't know how I ever had time to work.'

"But I couldn't have told him some of those things. You must find them out for yourself."

Those were the thoughts that went through his mind as he packed up the contents of the desk and the cabinets into those brown cardboard boxes, all 20 of them.

He thought of all they contained and all he'd accomplished; then he thought about all that remained still to do.

The sadness soon faded and the excitement won out — and for the first time in a long time, he felt really free.

"It's a wonderful feeling," he said, as he gently closed one door and opened another, heading off to find out some things for himself.

Has Social Security become Social Insecurity?

AP Laserphoto

Ida Fuller, a Ludlow, Vt. law clerk who in 1940 became the first to receive a Social Security check, is shown in 1950 holding a Social Security check for $41.30. Miss Fuller lived to be 100 having paid $22 in taxes into a system that returned more than $20,000 in benefits. But now, Social Security is having trouble meeting its bills.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Problems with Social Security spell insecurity for the 35 million Americans who depend on it. As AP Writer Nancy Shulins reports in the second of a three-part series, the problems are major and every American has a stake in what is done to resolve them.

By NANCY SHULINS
Associated Press Writer

Ida Fuller, a Ludlow, Vt., law clerk, was first.

When she received Social Security check No. 00-000-001 in 1940, workers and employers each paid 1 percent of the worker's pay into the trust fund, up to a maximum of $30 a year.

A photograph in the Social Security Administration office in Washington shows the bespectacled Miss Fuller beside her mailbox clutching that first check and wearing a contented half-smile.

Miss Fuller had reason to smile. She lived to be 100, having paid $22 in taxes into a system that gave her more than $20,000 in benefits.

The system that proved so generous to Ida Fuller has become the economic foundation of retirement in America. It is taken for granted by millions of retirees, and they depend on it.

Too much goes to too many who gave too little.

They say the system must be scaled back to ward off bankruptcy, and they talk in terms of numbers on a balance sheet.

But what really is being discussed is the way Americans will live their last years — much the same discussion as the one that led to the Social Security system.

When the retirement fund was established during the Depression, the idea was to put money into older people's pockets by partially replacing earnings lost to old age.

"We thought we were solving a serious problem...little by little we had created a modern world in which old people had no function," says Herman Brotman, one of the authors of the Social Security Act of 1935 and now a U.S. Labor Department consultant.

"Social Security was intended to be one leg of a three-legged stool: your own savings and investments, your employer's pension plan, and Social Security to round it out. It didn't work that way."

It didn't work that way because personal savings were lost to inflation, and pensions didn't grow as expected; today, only half the working public participates in pension plans.

It also didn't work that way because politicians were in charge.

"They promised more benefits than they could deliver at a time when the bill had not come in yet," says Alan Gustman, a Dartmouth College economics professor who has done extensive retirement research.

"Now the bill is coming in — and we have to live with those promises."

The Social Security Administration figures today's retirees will recover their lifetime contributions in just 12-19 months.

A 65-year-old who earned average wages and retires this year paid $8,324 in taxes. If that retiree lives 17 more years, as life expectancy tables indicate, he or she will get at least $120,870.

A 62-year-old who retires this year with reduced benefits and who lives the average 19 more years will collect $97,880.

As a result of past promises, today's employers and workers each pay a 6.65 percent Social Security tax, up to $1,975.05, with increases already slated for 1982, 1985, 1986 and 1990.

Congress began liberalizing Social Security even before Ida Fuller got that first check, adding children and widows to the rolls. More changes would follow — early retirement, benefits for college students, etc. — but the system could handle them because wages were growing faster than benefits.

Then in 1972 Congress — urged on by the retirees' lobby in an election year — agreed to tie benefits to the Consumer Price Index, beginning in 1975.

That spelled new prosperity for the elderly — and disaster for the system, says economist Colin Campbell, who directs the American Enterprise Institute's studies on Social Security.

"The system tried to do more than it could," Campbell says. Because prices have risen faster than wages several times since 1977, "the group that's done the best in our economy has been the retired people."

This year, Social Security will pay $145 billion to more than 35 million beneficiaries. But this year, the Social Security Administraton will collect only $140 billion in taxes.

Earlier this year, the Reagan administration urged cuts totaling $140 billion over the next five years to enable the system to meet its obligations, cover expected deficits, and preserve a two-month reserve.

It is the prospect of these snowballing deficits now — and warnings of a harsher crisis when the baby boom generation retires 30 years hence — that confront Congress and the president.

It is this prospect that prompted President Reagan, members of Congress and others to propose wholesale cuts in the program, by raising the retirement age, cutting benefits or penalizing early retirement.

And it is this prospect that threatens the gentlemen's agreement between generations that for 40 years has kept Social Security afloat.

Today, most people have little confidence that yesterday's promises will be kept. In an Associated Press-NBC News poll in May, 74 percent said they don't believe they will receive Social Security benefits when they retire.

At 43, William M. Agee is one of corporate America's youngest chief executives. He has warned that delays in correcting the problems of Social Security will only make things worse when the crisis arrives.

"At that point, young and old will be pitted against one another in a fearful battle to divide the remains of a shrinking economy...," the Bendix Corp. chairman told the President's Commission on Pension Policy.

"It is entirely possible that such a confrontation would tear the fabric of our society as it has not been torn since the Civil War. Instead of region against region, it would be generation against generation."

A new 'safe' sweetener

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Copley News Service

Every once in awhile, the American public gets some good news, or in this case "sweeteners." Yes sir, believe it or not, we have a brand-new, finally approved sweetener called aspartame, that could grace America's tables as early as 1982.

Its approval for use in carbonated beverages, table sweeteners, cold cereals, desserts, topping mixes, low calorie food and chewing gum has been held up since its discovery in 1966, in a seemingly endless series of research tests and studies. Scientist James M. Schlatter at the G.D. Searle and Co. research lab first noted the intense sweetening properties of two amino acids, aspartic acid and phenylalamine. Amino acids are the basic building block of protein, many of which are essential nutrients in human nutrition. Aspartame (APM) is the generic term for a compound of these two, naturally occurring, amino acids. Like all nutritive proteins and sugar, it provides 4 calories per gram. However, because it is about 200 times sweeter than sugar, only very small amounts are required to obtain the sweetness levels of sugar, hence the calories are considerably curtailed.

The taste and flavor characteristics of aspartame are similar to sugar. It has no synthetic flavor and no metallic or bitter aftertaste. I have tasted it and found it to be delightful. It is a white, odorless, crystalline powder with apparently none of the objectionable qualities of other sweeteners.

As of June 1981, 112 significant safety studies have been filed on it, so it appears to be free of carcinogenic (cancer-causing) properties.

Aspartame, upon digestion, will contribute its individual amino acids to normal metabloic assimilation, just like any protein substance. It blends well with many foods and seems to have the unique ability to enhance and intensify flavor perception, particularly in fruits and fruit-flavored products.

As Americans fussed and fumed over the demise of cyclamates a few years ago and worried about the dangers of saccharin and questionable additives, there seemed to be no safe way to satisfy our prodigious sweet tooth. Sugar, salt and fat bring on obesity, heart attacks, strokes and degenerative diseases, we are told, and we have the statistics to prove it, but can't we enjoy something without either fear or guilt?

Of the four basic tastes that we experience — salt, sugar, bitter and sweet — the most pleasing and satisfying by far is sweet. When it is withheld, for whatever reason, many people react strongly to being denied the pleasure or reward that is almost universally connnected to sweet tastes. Some my even view bitter and sour tastes as a form of punishment and associate sweets with sensations of pleasure.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Solving spray-can nozzle problems

DEAR HELOISE:

Is there anything you can do with a spray starch can after the little push nozzle breaks off or refuses to spray?

I have three almost full cans of starch and two cans of sizing and no way to use them. Can you help? — Nancy Diegirl

+ + +

Goodness, such bad luck! To say the least, those nozzles can be frustrating when they won't work properly, causing you to push harder, with the nozzle breaking off as a result.

Before discarding an empty spray container, it's a good idea to retrieve the nozzle and keep it handy for broken-nozzle emergencies. Some nozzles are interchangeable so, when you get a defective one or one that breaks off, you can try another.

If the nozzle doesn't spray properly and rinsing it out under hot water doesn't revive it, you might try turning the can upside down with the cap on for a few hours. This sometimes brings it back to life.

If all else fails, when you've purchased a container that just won't work under any circumstances, don't hesitate to return it to the store for a refund or exchange.

Hope this adds a little "pssfft" to your life! — Heloise

MOTHBALL ODOR

Dear Heloise: When I got my good wool blankets out of the moth balls, I washed them in cold, soapy water but the mothball smell remained.

I finally got the brilliant idea of adding a few drops of my perfume to the wash water, then I rinsed them again in cold water.

It may be necessary to add a few drops of perfume to the rinse water too.

After hanging them outside on the line to dry, I had fluffy, sweet smelling blankets. — Grace Hopkins

LEAVE NO LEAVES

Dear Heloise: On my way home from work one day, I noticed an elderly neighbor cleaning up her front lawn.

You know how plastic liners always slip down into the trash can if they aren't extra large? Well, this smart lady had clipped five or six spring-type clothespins around the top of the can, securing the plastic bag.

This sure is a timesaver when raking up leaves in the fall. — Ruth Hutchins

FANTASTIC FUNNEL

Dear Heloise: Since necessity IS the mother of invention, I made a small-mouthed funnel to fill baby food jars full of my newly made marmalade.

My regular canning funnel was so big it fit over the jar! So, I got an empty plastic gallon-size vinegar bottle and cut below the handle part and I had a perfect funnel!

Quart-size bottles that have a smaller neck and larger base make good funnels for this purpose too. — Mary Bertram

ALARM CLOCK TRICK

Dear Heloise: Have trouble hearing that old alarm clock in the morning?

Set it inside a metal bucket or pan and the sound will echo and wake you up for sure! — Doris B.

HONEY OF AN IDEA

Dear Heloise: Whenever a jar of honey turns to sugar, I place the jar in a pan of water and bring it to a slow boil. If you do this, be sure to remove the lid.

I let it boil until the honey turns to liquid once again. After it's cooled, it's as good as new. — Moncton

If you have a honey of a tip, send it to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, Tx. 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but, sure as bees buzz, she'll print the best tips received in her column.

Author studies kid's return to the 'nest'

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — The empty nest is experiencing a new phenomenon — the "home-ing pigeon."

"What parental prosperity could not reverse in the '60s and early '70s — grown children's flight from the family — the high cost of living turned around in the mid-'70s," says Phyllis Feuerstein, co-author of "The Not-So-Empty Nest."

"The birds who flew from the nest flocked home in droves large enough to be noticed," she said.

Ms. Feuerstein, a reporter for a suburban Chicago newspaper, defines "home-ing pigeon" as a grown child who resumes living with his or her parents after a separation.

She said the reasons might be economic. The child has lost an apartment, a job, a roommate or a spouse. Or the child decides to return home until he or she gets married or gets the first job after graduation from college. Or a child may decide to return home while going back to school for more education.

Ms. Feuerstein said emotional reasons might also be involved. A child, for example, who is unfulfilled or undecided may decide to return home for a time "to get his act together."

"First of all, the child may not have been ready to leave home in the first place," she said. "Eighteen is no magic number.

"Second of all, they're children of affluent or comfortable parents. They've gotten used to certain comforts, their own room, regular meals, pocket money, brand-name clothes. And they go out there to work and they find their salaries are not going to stretch."

In addition, she said, young people are postponing marriage, and they are less involved in fighting for social change than young people were during the 1960s and early 1970s.

"I'm not putting down (trying to save) the whales, I'm not putting down the environment, but it's not like stopping a war or racial inequality or women's lib," she said. "You need something to get you out of the house, whether it's a man, a cause or a career.

"I think, also, home is a pretty important place. If you have a broken marriage, you go back. If you can't buckle down and study, somehow that atmosphere at home is going to help you do so, because home is a pretty nice place."

Ms. Feuerstein and her co-author, Carol Roberts, conducted interviews in eight states with 250 families and 23 professionals involved with family counseling, the education of young people and financial management.

Ms. Feuerstein said that only four sets of parents had taken drastic measures to avoid housing a child. But, she said, only five families reported feeling completely content with the relationship resumed under one roof.

She said that when the children returned to the nest, they complained about a lack of neighborhood activities and a lack of privacy, while their parents complained about an increased noise level in the home and their children's slovenliness.

She said arrangements should be made regarding laundry, transportation, meals and expenses, and both parents and children should respect one another's values.

Ms. Feuerstein sees the not-so-empty nest as a current trend in American society because of tight economic conditions, but does not see a return to the day when several generations lived permanently under the same roof.

"I think one of the keystones in keeping the situation under control is that both parents and children should remember that the situation is temporary; that it should be as temporary as possible," she said. "The children should have the strength to go out there and get on with their lives so that their parents can get on with their lives."

Ms. Feuerstein, the mother of three children, had the experience of a child's returning to the nest for a time.

"The simplest way to deal with the situation is to refrain from making home too comfortable to leave," she said. "Eventually, the welcome mat will have to be waived to enable a grown child to get on with the business of developing into an adult. It makes sense for the parent to waive it before the rug gets pulled out from under both of them in the slippery course of living together."

("The Not-So-Empty Nest," is published by New Century Publishing.)

"We were absolutely delighted that in our second year the Detroit Festival has become established as one of the leading jazz festivals in the world," said Robert E. McCabe, president of Detroit Renaissance, the festival's principal sponsor.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Those born on this date are generous, multitalented and easily influenced. The coming months will bring you many new challenges, but you have the energy and know-how to turn them into triumphs. The financial outlook shows marked improvement. Secrecy will be difficult but absolutely essential in advancing your business plans. Choose your confidants with care! Favorable influences save you from making costly mistakes. Romance is sometimes overwhelming but always meaningful. A pleasant surprise could be part of the picture. Refuse to be rushed into making a commitment that you may not be ready for. Time is on your side.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Music plays a key role in making this a day of pleasure and adventure. Loved ones come up with valuable suggestions. Romantic partner may be painting you into a corner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A change of neighborhoods is worth considering now. Others may not always understand or appreciate your sense of humor. Watch what you say and the way you say it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Extra money could arrive, thanks to a friend. Others notice you are getting better organized. Try to break a habit that has been standing between you and happy romance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Romance is happy for almost everyone today! Take your time when making an important decision and seek the advice of trusted friends. Travel may not bring the results you expect.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get an early start today. Family members may be somewhat restless. Lay down the rules to rowdy offspring. If unattached, your romantic hopes are about to be fulfilled!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tend to those odd jobs or errands that you have been postponing. Problems involving those at a distance are easier to cope with now. Accept social invitations.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep to yourself as much as possible today. You need to recognize the difference between realistic goals and fanciful dreams. Disregard gambling tips.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day for projects requiring teamwork. Certain previously shelved plans can now be put into effect. Count on sharing expenses if going out with friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You find plenty to interest and entertain you this weekend. Set your sights on what you want and then go after it! A need for money lights a fire under a lazy teen-ager.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A close personal relationship can be enhanced this weekend. Romance is very much in your plan. Your popularity is on the rise with members of the opposite sex.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Although some people may become irritated, you need to act more aggressively now. You might have to lay down some spending rules for a rebellious family member. Be firm.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You cannot resolve a financial situation today, so try to relax and put it out of your mind. You enjoy spending a quiet day with special friends.

Opening Lead: Five of ♡.

"None but the brave deserve the fair," wrote the poet. South combined a knowledge of the odds with a good dash of courage to land his game on this deal.

South needed no more than a sign of life from his partner to decide that game at spades had to have a reasonable chance. Rather than reveal anything about his holding, he elected to bid what he hoped he could make.

This hand is from a world championship team match, and at both tables West found the inspired lead of the five of hearts. At each table, East made the expert play of the jack, and declarer won the queen.

At one table declarer crossed to dummy with the king of clubs and successfully finessed the jack of spades. But when the king did not fall under the ace, he eventually had to surrender a trump trick and two diamonds for down one.

The successful declarer decided that the trump finesse could wait a while. After winning the queen of hearts, he returned the nine, covered by the ten, king and ace. East shifted to a diamond, and the defenders took two tricks in that suit to complete their book. West continued with a third diamond. Declarer ruffed, and it seemed that he was about to meet the same fate as had his opponent at the other table.

However, declarer was aware that four missing cards are much more likely to be divided 3-1 than 2-2, so one spade finesse would probably not be enough. To take a second finesse though, he would need two entries to dummy, and only one was readily available.

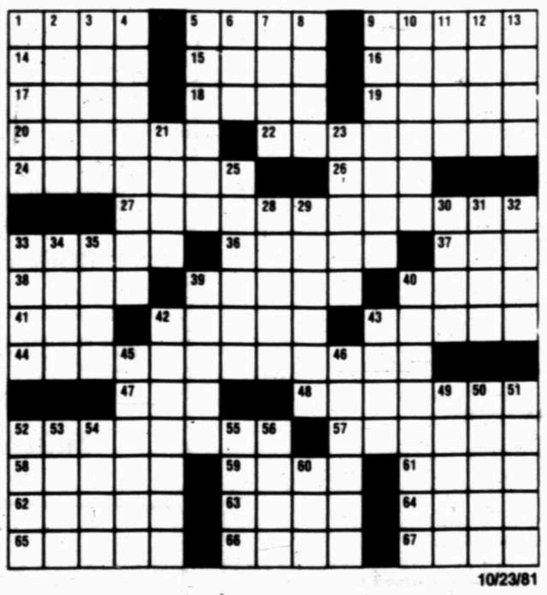

To create a second entry declarer led a low club and, when West played low, he boldly finessed the ten. Declarer knew that this was an unusual line which risked going down an extra trick—or even cause a makable contract to fail and cost his team the world championship. It was only fitting that the finesse should win and that declarer should need two trump finesses to land his contract—and his world championship.

Growing pumpkins is their business

By TOM MURPHY
Associated Press Writer

HALF MOON BAY, Calif. (AP) — Half Moon Bay is not the pumpkin capital of the world. It's not even the pumpkin capital of California. But in the past 11 years, it has moved to the fore of what might be called "pumpkin promotion."

Eleven years is the age of the annual pumpkin festival, a celebration heralded by the brilliant orange crazy quilt of pumpkin patches now spread over the hills around this quaint seaside village.

Thousands of pumpkin lovers will come to town this weekend for the Oct. 24-25 festival. They will jam local restaurants and hotels. They will bring grandparents and children and friends. Most importantly to farmers like Hank Pastorino, they will buy pumpkins.

At festival time, pumpkin men dart through the streets, jack o'lanterns dangle everywhere and a parade draws more spectators than an average day at Disneyland.

Charity groups hustle pumpkin bread, pumpkin ice cream, pumpkin crepes, pumpkin squares, pumpkin muffins and, of course, pumpkin pie. There are unconfirmed reports of pumpkin wine.

Stella Giusto at the Chamber of Commerce says the town swells from a normal population of about 7,000 to more than 100,000 people each day of the festival.

"Last year, they closed the highways," she said.

This year's pumpkin and squash weigh-in on Oct. 12, part of the festival buildup, was won by Howard Dill of Windsor, Nova Scotia, with a 377-pound Burgess Giant pumpkin and a 466-pound Atlantic Giant squash.

Just outside town, a sign declares that the Pastorinos are "The Pumpkin People." It's a bold claim in this San Francisco Peninsula community where growing pumpkins is a pleasant, but not always financially rewarding, way of life.

Hank Pastorino—standing in front of the family business, a white shed surrounded by white latticework, scarecrows, ornamental corn stalks, turtle squash, big orange signs and acres of plump pumpkins—takes the claim seriously.

"This valley is all my relatives," said Pastorino, who works 64 hours a week through pumpkin season. "My dad and I and my aunts and uncles all sit down and the family discusses what the things of the world cost and we decide what the high price should be and what the low price should be and what the Pastorino price should be.

"And that's the way it should be because we feel that if we're giving people what they enjoy, we'll make it on the volume. And certainly the last few years we've been getting a lot of people here."

During last year's festival, Pastorino hired 20 sales people to serve the hordes searching for just the right pumpkin. They weren't enough. He had to recruit eight friends—a doctor, a lawyer, several business people—to serve the crowd.

Most roadside produce vendors only dream of that kind of trade. But Pastorino says he couldn't exist on pumpkin sales alone. Most of his income comes from from wholesale flower sales.

"What's happening in Half Moon Bay now, and I guess it's happening around the world, is that it costs so much to do what you do, it gets really difficult (to make a profit)," he said.

"On our pumpkin farm, we grew about 25 percent fewer pumpkins this year, but we put out about the same money we spent in 1979 and 1980. I didn't want to do that, but two years ago we had a tremendous increase in costs."

Pastorino said his overhead has climbed 600 percent in six years.

"The thing is, if prices keep rising, the guys around here are going to have to raise their prices," he said, worrying about the impact of such a raise on the festival. "I know when I pay $3 for a watermelon ... I don't feel all that good about it."

Pastorino said that it isn't practical for Half Moon Bay farmers to ship pumpkins to canning plants 90 miles east of here, that large growers in the fertile San Joaquin Valley can better supply canning pumpkins.

"We're kind of like the small country-type farmers versus the large industrial-type complex farming in the valley," he said. "We're still more of a quaint, smaller, momma-poppa-type businessversus your big conglomerate."

Pastorino also says he's having too much fun growing pumpkins to want to ship them to a canner.

"We've got 3-year old children who come here and we have 83-year-old children who come here," he said. "Seeing them is really a reward in itself.

"There's something that I feel inside personally when the kids get out and yell and scream. It takes me back to my childhood when I was growing up. I get my childhood back every October."

"Is there a Conspiracy

. . . behind inflation, higher taxes, energy shortages, and land use regulations? Yes! Several major tax-exempt foundations are using their untaxed billions to promote total government behind a pretense of solving economic problems and improving our environment."

THE TAX-EXEMPT SCANDAL

William McIlhany is a graduate of Washington and Lee University. His writings have covered such diverse topics as the American Civil Liberties Union, the federal attack on retirement and now — America's leftist foundations. He interviewed top executives of the Rockefeller, Carnegie and Ford foundations and documents how they fostered an ever greater concentration of power in the hands of Washington bureaucrats and their insider friends. Government landgrabs, controls and higher taxes are major consequences of their proposals. Learn what you can do to stop it.

Violence brews in 5-5A at Abilene

Dodgers try to regroup in LA

BY MELVIN DURSLAG
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK -- Immersed in trouble you wouldn't call minor, but still insisting bravely they are a force conditioned to stress, the Los Angeles Dodgers return to the treasure house at Chavez Ravine to resume a World Series they hope shows more promise than it has the last two days.

Apart from the fact they left the South Bronx in reasonably good health, threatened only by a bottle that missed Dusty Baker when the thrower took a little too much off it, the Dodgers found little about the visit for which to be grateful.

To make a short story succinct, they are down two games to nil to the Yankees in the national test matches of baseball, and they must dredge from their sterling band the kind of resiliency that has kept them in the tournament up to this point.

With pardonable pride, they remind you that Houston had them 0-2 in the mini series before yielding three straight to Los Angeles wile and muscle.

NOR COULD Montreal, which had pushed the Dodgers to the ledge in the subsequent series, drive them over the side, even performing in the arctic purlieus of Quebec where the visitors' only knowledge of the language was potage du jour.

But whatever their heroics in the first two stages of the tournament, the Dodgers find, distressingly, that Houston and Montreal don't have livestock quite matching that of New York.

And a dark feeling is beginning to grow that Los Angeles, its pulse weakening, could soon be a case for paramedics.

A certain irony is attendant to the loss in the second game Wednesday to Tommy John, whose departure for New York in 1979 left manager Lasorda with a heaviness in his tender Italian heart.

VERDI WROTE operas involving lesser tragedies, which is to say, Lasorda wanted to lose John like he wanted to lose a veal scallopini.

It merely happened that the cerebral trust of the Dodgers guessed wrong on this antique, who, 36 at the time, wanted security with a long-term contract.

The sum he was asking was modest by going rates, but, tapping their skulls knowingly, the Dodgers said give him poison -- and they have suffered from their decision since.

I mean, the guy opens as a 21-game winner for the Yanks, then wins 22 in his second year.

And now, the top of the line on their starting staff, he winds up in a World Series against the club that invited him to get lost and he gives the Dodgers roughly what they proposed to give him.

Lee needs homecoming victory over Steers

Rebels bounce back from loss to Cooper

For the first three weeks of the District 5-5A season, Midland Lee was among the front runners and holding ground. Now, after a 23-7 loss to Abilene Cooper, the Rebels find themselves looking above them at league leaders Odessa Permian (3-0) and Cooper (2-0-1) while being tied for third with Abilene High (2-1).

Tonight the Rebels will have their chance to get back on the winning track, and that chance is a good one. Lee takes on the Big Spring Steers at 8 p.m. at Memorial Stadium, and they have two big advantages.

The first advantage is their opponent. The Steers are currently holding down the cellar of the conference with a 0-3 record and in the past few weeks have lost two of their most important players to injuries, Bobby Earl Williams at halfback and Gregg Scarbro at guard as well as kicking specialist.

"Our best guard and best back are out," said Big Spring coach Ralph Harris. And there are other bumps and bruises among the remaining players, but they come with the territory.

Lee's second advantage is Rebel Homecoming, and that gala affair tends to raise the spirits of the players, the student body and the fans which in turn causes an emotional game, one that the players really want to win. It takes away from the post-game activities if the cloud of defeat is hanging over head.

"We've got to guard against mind wandering," said Lee coach Spike Dykes about Homecoming. "With all the activities and fan fare, we have to do a good job in taking care of business. There is an extra amount of school spirit during Homecoming and that is certainly always good. I think we've got a big plus because we have big school support, fan support, band support and cheerleader support anyway. It's really a big plus. I know that support really means a lot to our players."

ACCORDING TO coach Dykes, the Rebels have had a good week of practice and are ready for the game. "Our kids have bounced back after losing to Cooper," he said. "They realize that game is history and all eyes are focused on Big Spring."

About his team's opponent, coach Dykes feels that the Steers are better than their 0-3 (2-4 overall) record indicates. He also feels that the loss of Williams, in some ways, can help a team play better.

"Big Spring has got a highly aggressive and competitive football team," he said. "They're extremely well coached. They are a very dangerous football team. They've played tough in all their games through the first half. They were only losing 7-6 to Permian at the half.

"Any time you lose a player like Bobby Earl, it's certainly going to hurt you. He was a tremendous ball player and it can't help but take away from a ball team. But, many times it causes other players to pick up some slack and you can end up with a better ball club team wise."

And what does coach Dykes feel it will take to beat Big Spring?

"We can't give up the big play," said Coach Dykes. "Last week we gave up a long touchdown run and you can't do that against Big Spring or they'll beat you. We just can't afford to make any errors. They've got a very well balanced offense. They throw the ball well, the quarterback (Tracy Spence) does a good job for them. He throws the ball well and has good receivers (halfback Richard Evans and split end Rod Harris). They execute the split-back veer as well as any team you'll see.

SPENCE DOES indeed do a good job. On the season he has completed 38-of-78 passes for 443 yards for the highest totals in both categories among 5-5A quarterbacks. His receivers are up there also. Harris is the league's best pass catcher with 10 for 187 yards while Evans has hauled in another seven for 88 yards.

For Midland Lee, quarterback Bart Ryan is seventh in the league with 15 completions in 36 attempts and five interceptions for 258 yards. Split receiver Kenneth Brown has been his favorite target with six catches for 111 yards.

While Big Spring seems to have the edge in the passing stats, Lee has the advantage in rushing and a big advantage on defense.

Lee fullback Calvin Riggs is fourth in the conference in rushing with 511 from 103 carries while teammate Troy Barber is ninth at 312 on 312 carries. Ryan is also high in the stats, 15th, with 202 yards on 62 tries.

The rushing stats for Big Spring are still being lead by Williams despite the injury that knocked him out of action three weeks ago. Before falling, he had 422 yards on 64 carries. With his departure, Halfback Richard Evans has taken over a lot of responsibility and has 255 yards on 68 carries.

Rookie pitchers face World Series spotlight

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — One of them is a bulbous, pimply-faced kid of 20 only a few months removed from the dusty fields and dingy huts of rural Navajoa, Sonora, Mexico.

The other is a tall, curly-haired youngster — only 22 and handsome enough to be in pictures — from San Jose, Calif., the prune capital of the world.

Thirty or 40 years from now baseball buffs may gather in little clusters and talk about that October day in 1981 when Fernando Valenzuela and Dave Righetti matched their rookie pitching skills in the third game of the World Series at Dodger Stadium.

IF THE predictions of the most knowledgeable men in the game prevail, it should prove a landmark in sports history.

People decades hencemay recall little of the game itself — third in the best-of-seven series with the Los Angeles Dodgers, down 0-2 in games and hanging by their fingernails, and the haughty New York Yankees, harboring visions of another dynasty.

All the talk could be about how two young pitchers — so contrasting in life and throwing styles yet so much alike in their deadly effectiveness — fared in one of baseball's most celebrated faceoffs.

Barring injury or some other unthinkable disaster, Valenzuela, the pudgy Mexican miracle worker of the Dodgers, and Righetti, the Yankees' California fireballer, should be the pitchers of the next generation.

They've already stolen the strike-plagued 1981 season.

"People keep asking me when Fernando's balloon is going to burst," says Tom Lasorda, manager of the Dodgers. "I tell them 'never.' This kid is no flash in the pan. He is genuine. I tell you, in all my years I've never seen anything like him."

Tom couldn't have forgotten Sandy Koufax.

THE SAME sort of awe is being engendered among Yankee watchers, drooling over the blinding speed and resourcefulness of young Righetti, who proved the team's best pitcher down the stretch.

"Dave matured overnight," says Clyde King, pitching professor and troubleshooter for the Yankee owner George Steinbrenner.

"Even at his early age he already has mastered four pitches — the fast ball, curve, slider and changeup. He not only has the arsensal, he's got the maturity and intelligence to go with it."

"He's a great talent."

King, former manager of the San Francisco Giants, said the Yankees were determined that Righetti not suffer the fate of Detroit's colorful Mark Fidrych, whose skill and wild mannerisms captivated the public in the mid-1970s only to have his career shortened by injury.

"Fidrych, on national TV, became an overnight national hero," said King. "But bam, bam, bam. He began trying too hard and soon he wasn't pitching any more.

"We are seeing to it that Righetti pitches well within himself."

Righetti's fast ball has been clocked at close to 100 mph. A classical pitcher, the 6-3, 190-pound former San Jose College athlete scored two of the Yankees' three victories over Milwaukee in the divisional series.

WHEN HE'S clicking with his fast ball, batters grab a lot of wind.

Valenzuela was brought to the Dodgers from the Texas League, where he struck out 162 batters last season. He was an immediate major league sensation.

A left-handed screwball artist, Valenzuela won his first eight starts this season, all complete games. He posted five shutouts and an earned run average of 0.50.

He had scoreless inning streaks of 36, 32.2 and 18 games in separate phenomenal stretches.

Teammates call him El Toro" ("The Bull"). Less kind writers have dubbed him "Tortilla Fats."

TV fans have been intrigued by his absolute immunity to pressure. He works at a slow, lazy gait, his brown eyes rolling into the back of his head on every pitch.

On the bench, cameras catch him popping bubble gum and swapping quips with his teammates, although he doesn't speak Eglish.

"There is something pixie-ish about him," says Al Campanis, Dodger vice president in charge of personnel. "Nothing bothers him. It's almost as if he puts himself into some kind of a shell.

Will Dallas be Miami's next victim?

By FRED GOODALL
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI (AP) — A baker's dozen is 13, and that's the number of consecutive victories the Miami Dolphins have during the last three years against teams from the National Football League's National Conference.

But if the AFC Dolphins are to make it 14, the victim will have to be the perennial NFC powerhouse Dallas Cowboys.

With a dangerous date against Dallas in Texas Stadium Sunday, Miami Coach Don Shula isn't in a frame of mind to discuss why the 5-1-1 Dolphins have handled NFC teams so well.

"I haven't spent any time thinking about it," he says, "and I don't intend to spend any time thinking about it."

Ask him about the 5-2 Cowboys, their organization and Coach Tom Landry, though, and Shula is more talkative.

He recalls a cold day in Detroit when the Cowboys rolled into town and absorbed their final licking during an 0-11-1 introduction to the NFL.

The year was 1960 — Dallas' first in the NFL and Shula's first as defensive coordinator with the Lions.

"I think they lost all their ball games that year," said Shula, who was quickly reminded that the Cowboys did manage a tie that season.

"To go from there to build the organization they've built..." Shula added, his voice trailing. "It's no accident that they are where they are or that they've accomplished what they have over a 21-year period. You have to admire the success they've had."

Shula-coached teams have met the Cowboys and Landry, the only coach Dallas has ever had, five times in the Miami mentor's 19 years as an NFL boss.

The Baltimore Colts were 1-1 against Dallas under Shula in the 1960s, and Miami is 2-1, including a 23-16 triumph in the last meeting between the two teams in 1978. The Cowboys' lone victory against the Dolphins came in Super VI in 1971.

"I've enjoyed our competition and have a great deal of respect for Tom (Landry) as a man and as a coach," said Shula, who will be looking for his 199th career victory. "I think he's been a real credit to the coaching profession."

Landry, with 206 career victories under his belt, is the winningest active coach in the NFL. But Shula, with a triumph Sunday, can equal Landry's 189 regular-season victories.

During Miami's 13-game winning streak over NFC opponents, the Dolphins have met every NFC team except Philadelphia, the last NFC team to beat them in 1978, Tama Bay and the New York Giants.

Bulldogs tame Odessa in V-Ball

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

Midland High and Odessa High, two District 5-5A volleyballs teams just playing out the season, fought a bitter fight Thursday night on the Bulldogs courts before MHS came away with a 15-13, 15-10 win. The victory gives the Purple Pack a 15-11 record, 3-2 in district while the Panthers' league mark tumbles to 2-3.

It wasn't a victory that came easy for Midland High. In sets that featured long vollies and good defensive plays on both sides of the net, the Bulldogs had to come from behind for the win.

Odessa had first serve in the first set and Valettria Jernigan took advantage as she whistled two quick winners by the befuddled Bulldog defense. By the time MHS got settled down the Purple Pack was trailing 4-1.

Penny Griffin gave the Bulldogs their first lead of the evening as she served five winners. Her serving was aided by two fine defensive plays by Missy Larrimore and a spike by Shelia Christian.

Larrimore served one point and Judy Gatlin added three more as the Bulldogs went up 10-4.

Odessa rallied behind the serving of Sissy Hinojos and Renee Pierce as the Panthers trimmed the lead to 12-9. Several defensive lapes by MHS allowed the Panthers to cut the lead to 13-12 before Holly Randell wrapped up the set with two booming serves.

In the second set the Bulldogs fell behind 5-0 as Odessa's Jernigan and Pierce served winners.

After a nice return by Jennifer Jackson broke Pierce's serve, the Bulldogs stayed their comeback. The comeback was aided by the Panthers inability to score off their next five serves. Up 5-4, Odessa had three straight serves catch the net while the MHS defense broke the other two serves.

While Odessa was having trouble serving, Midland High ran off five points to take a 9-4 advantage.

Odessa scored two point and the Bulldogs answered with four straight to take a 13-6 lead.

The Panthers finally managed four points while keeping the Bulldogs off the boards on three serves to trim the lead to 13-10. But with the game on the line, Gatlin laced two straight winners past the Panthers for the set and game.

In the junior varisty match Midland High rans its second-half record to 4-1 as they bombed the Panthers 15-4, 15-5.

Midland High's next game will be Tuesday when they host the Abilene Cooper Cougars and then close out the season Thursday at Lee against the Rebels.

Corrales in at Philadelphia?

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Former Texas Ranger Manager Pat Corrales reportedly is the leading candidate to succeed Dallas Green as field boss of the Philadelphia Phillies.

Corrales, a former No. 2 catcher for the Phillies, has been interviewed for the job, and the city's four daily newspapers have identified Corrales as the leading candidate.

Other possible choices are Houston Astros Manager Bill Virdon and Phillies coaches Bobby Wine, Billy DeMars, Ruben Amaro and Mike Ryan, according to Phillies General Manager Paul Owens.

Corrales, now an assistant to Texas General Manager Eddie Robinson, managed the Rangers to second place in the American League West two years ago.

He was Green's roommate in the Phillies farm system and is rumored to be the former manager's choice as his successor.

Rains interrupt Women's City Golf Championship

The rain interrupted Women's City Golf Championship tournament at Ranchland Hills Country Club has been postponed until Tuesday due to heavy rain on the course Wednesday and Thursday.

Only one round, which also served as the qualifying round, has been played and that was held last Tuesday. That round will still count and play will resume Tuesday.

In the first round, Susan Britton, who is seeking her 10th city title and eighth straight, shot a medal play round of 79. Michelle Wilks was four strokes off the pace with an 83.

Pairings and tee times for Tuesday's second round play are as follows:

8:30 a.m.: Dede Plank, Sylvia Roberts, Jo Dickson, Betty Clarke, 8:37: Sue Campbell, Betty Howell, Helen Brant, Joan Elkin, 8:44: Sandy Wilkerson, Mary Robinson, Ella Heath, Margaret Vann, 8:51: Sylvia Laufer, Susan Britton, Jennie Gooch, Nina Colter, 8:58: Charlotte Marburger, Jane W. 5-5A fans look to Abilene

All eyes in the kingdom of District 5-5A will be cast eastward tonight as Odessa Permian travels to Abilene Cooper in a battle that will determine sole possession of first place in the Little Southwest Conference.

Permian, undefeated in six outings, 3-0 in district and the defending state champion, will face its sternest test of the year when they take on the Cougars, who own a 2-0-1 league mark and are mere ½-game behind Permian in the standings.

Cooper is fresh off a 23-7 victory over league contender Midland Lee, who faces Big Spring in a Homecoming survival battle at Memorial Stadium tonight. The winner of the Cooper-Permian clash will take over the top spot in the league standings.

Lee is hoping that Permian can pull out a victory tonight because that would vault the Rebels right back in the thick of the race since they face Permian next week in Odessa.

Meanwhile, Abilene High, who is still in the thick of the race with a 2-1 record after defeating Midland High last week, will try to gain momentum when they travel to Odessa to face Odessa High, who owns an 0-2-1 loop mark.

Midland High treks to San Angelo in a game that features 1-2 district marks. MHS still has slim hopes for a title bid, but they need a lot of things to happen, including some victories of their own. The loser here will be eliminated from any chance at a title run this year.

Lee Rebels trim Permian

ODESSA — With only faint hopes of winning the 1981 District 5-5A volleyball title, the Midland Lee Rebels shook off a horrible opening set to come back and defeat Odessa Permian 2-15, 15-13, 15-12 here Thursday night.

The victory runs the Rebels' overall record to 19-10 and district mark to 4-1. Lee remains one game behind the undefeated San Angelo Bobcats. If Lee has any hope of winning the title, the Bobcats must lose their last two district contests.

Midland Lee has two games remaining. On Tuesday the Rebels travel to Abilene to take on the Abilene High Eagls and Thursday the Midland Lee Bulldogs come calling at the Lee gym in the regular season finale.

Lee's junior varsity picked up another district win as they stopped Mojo 15-9, 15-2.

JV postponed

Midland High's junior varsity football game with San Angelo Thursday night was postponed due to the weather.

Undefeated Flyers not playing well?

By The Associated Press

Even though they're undefeated in six games so far, the Philadelphia Flyers aren't playing well, according to right wing Reggie Leach.

"We have been strong in the first period," says Leach, "and when we score three or four goals, we just sit back and hang on. We have to start playing 60 minutes or we'll start losing some of these games."

It was another one of those typical "hang-on" games Thursday night. The Flyers scored three goals in the first 10 minutes of play, then managed to hold off the Quebec Nordiques 3-2 in a National Hockey League that improved their record to 5-0-1.

"Tonight, Quebec played well enough to win in the second and third periods," said Leach, who scored the Flyers' eventual winning goal.

Despite the loss, Quebec Coach Michel Bergeron supported Leach's contention that the Flyers are not playing aggressively.

"The Flyers did not come out and hit us and that was a bit of a surprise," he said. "We were tired after the game in Washington (the previous night) and had no life. It was our third game in four nights, but it was still a good game for us."

Elsewhere in the NHL, it was St. Louis 5, Minnesota 5; Detroit 2, Boston 2 and Pittsburgh 3, Calgary 3.

Brian Propp and Mel Bridgman scored the Flyers' first two goals before Leach came through with his game-winner at 10:12 of the initial period. The goal was Leach's eighth of the season, tying him for the NHL lead, and his fourth game winner in the Flyers' five victories.

"Reggie realizes his responsibilities," said Flyers Coach Pat Quinn. "He's paid primarily to be a scorer. Right now, he's free-wheeling, things are going in, and he's one of the chief reasons why we're undefeated."

Marian Stastny scored both Quebec goals. His first tally came in the second period on a power play set up from a pass in front of the net by his brother, Peter. The second score came at 4:07 of the third period.

Blues 5, North Stars 5

Third-period goals by Perry Turnbull and Bernie Federko lifted St. Louis to a tie with Minnesota.

Minnesota had taken a 5-3 lead at 8:42 of the final period on Tom Younghans' shorthanded goal. But Turnbull scored off a faceoff from the slot at 13:13 to trim the gap to a single goal and Federko got his sixth goal of the season on a rebound at 15:03 for the equalizer.

Dino Ciccarelli scored three times for Minnesota and rookie Jim Nill had a pair of goals for St. Louis.

"We hated to let them off the hook," said Minnesota Coach Glen Sonmor, whose team led 4-3 after two periods and 5-3 in the final period.

Red Wings 2, Bruins 2

Mark Kirton and John Ogrodnick scored in a 6½-minute span in the second period as Detroit rallied to gain a tie with Boston. The deadlock snapped a five-game winning streak for the Bruins, now 5-1-2.

Rebs host Big Spring

Defensively, Lee and Big Spring are on opposite ends of the scale. The Rebels are second in the 5-5A allowing only 1,067 yards this season, 904 rushing and 163 passing. Big Spring is last in the league allowing 1,714 yards, 1,376 rushing and 338 passing.

"We're just the hicks from the sticks andy they're the big city slicks. We're going to see if we can't latch onto them a little," said coach Harris. "It's a big ball game for them because Permian and Cooper play the same night. They need Permian to win to still have an opportunity to catch Cooper.

"We're looking forward to it," continued Harris. "We have a lot of respect for Lee. Just like everyone else we've played, I hope the kids can latch on and play hard. We haven't played well on the road but we haven't played any tough teams except Permian.

"We're going to have to play well because Lee is capable of humiliating if we don't play hard. They have good size, good speed and are well coached."

EVEN IF the Rebels win the rest of the games on their schedule this season, they must still rely on one of four teams in the district to beat Abilene Cooper. The Cougars play Odessa Permian tonight in Abilene and if Permian wins the game, then Lee can regain the top by beating the Panthers next week. But, if Cooper wins, then Lee would have to have help from two other teams before the Rebels could be back in the race. Unless Cooper loses a game, Lee is not in control of its own destiny.

Eyes of 5-5A focus on Abilene

The rest of District 5-5A, while endeavoring to pay studious attention to the business at hand, will be holding its collective breath while waiting for word from Abilene late tonight where Cooper's Cougars will be challenging the defending state champion Odessa Permian Panthers.

Lee can ill afford to speculate on the game, lest the season go down the drain, but the Rebels, sacked and pillaged by the Cougars a week ago, must pull for Permian, as hard as that may be to accept in the light of tradition.

With Lee, Odessa and San Angelo behind, the Cougars face a homestretch of Midland, Big Spring and Abilene and Ray Overton's bunch would be home free by sweeping the final three games.

ON THE other hand, if the Rebels are to be masters of their own destiny, a win by Permian is vital, since Lee still has the Panthers, as well as Abilene and Midland, left after Big Spring tonight.

Witnesses to the Memorial Stadium bloodletting a week ago concede Permian little chance of beating Cooper, and if the Cougars play like that again tonight, they are probably right. Happily for the rest of the league, Cooper plays like that only when the occasion moves them, as evidenced by the loss to Eastern Hills and the tie with Odessa.

Still, this has always been a significant matchup with state championship overtones over the years.

Since 1965, the winner of the game has gone on to win or share the district title 14 times. Five times, the winner has reached the state finals.

ODESSA PERMIAN has won eight of the last nine, dropping a 14-3 decision to Cooper's district champions in 1979 and beating Cooper 9-7 in 1971, a year the two teams shared first place.

Permian has won district in 1980, 1978, 1977, 1973, 1972, 1971, 1970, 1968 and 1965 after beating Cooper.

The Cougars have won district in 1979, 1969, 1967 and 1966. Permian reached the state finals in 1980, 1972, 1968, 1966 and 1965. Cooper reached the state finals in 1966, the year time ran out on Jack Mildren as Cooper, trailing 20-19, perched on Austin Reagan's goal line, and in 1969, no one beat the Cougars, but Cooper was eliminated by Wichita Falls in a 0-0 quarterfinal game decided by first downs.

JERRY ZACHERY, the former Midland High star, is headed for the Texas Tech JV-Freshman season rushing record and is way ahead of the pace set by Rufus Meyers, who set the record in 1971. Chances are he'll never make it, however.

With the Red Raiders hurting for running backs, chances are Jerry will be pressed into service one of these Saturdays.

In fact, it was suspected he might be at I-back against Rice last Saturday. Instead, the extent of his efforts was a kickoff return for 14 yards as Robert Lewis, filling in for the injured Anthony Hutchison, managed to survive the entire game.

Zachery has gained 330 yards in 53 carries, an average of better than 6.0 yards per carry, and with two games left, probably would eclipse Meyers' 540 yards, if he gets to play in those games.

Others he would pass along the way would be Jimmy Williams (509), Billy Taylor (504), James Mosley (438) and Joe Barnes (384), a little bit like opening a scrap book of Who's Who in Tech Football over the last 10 years.

It's official, Elia to manage Cubs

Lee Elia, who stamped himself as a "fringe ballplayer who kept wanting to better himself," was named Chicago Cubs manager, succeeding Joe Amalfitano. Hand picked by GM Dallas Green, Elia will emphasize speed, pitching and defense in an effort to end slugfests opposing teams like to engage in at Wrigly Field. "I don't want teams to come to Wrigley Field thinking they're going to let it fly. We want to change that... if discipline is needed, it will be applied. I like to have a respectful rapport between managers and players."

Elia will retain coach Billy Williams, but added John Vukovich, 34, Phillie infielder; Billy Connors, 39, Kansas City pitching coach the last two years; and Gordon MacKenzie, 44, third base coach for the Royals to his staff...

minor league coach and manager. Elia said the Cubs would have to return to baseball fundamentals and "cultivate ourselves down under with player development... The game today is speed and power. Speed can do a lot of things. From what I've seen while standing at third base, I think they need to tighten up their defense, primarily in the outfield, and their pitching."...

San Diego is offering Gene Richards, a two-time .300 hitter, to the Yankees for former Midland Cub pitcher Ron Davis. Richards would be a replacement for one of the Yankees' aging outfielders—Reggie Jackson, 35, Lou Piniella, 38, or Bobby Murcer, 35, which could give New York an all-former Padre outfield of Richards, Jery Mumphrey and Dave Winfield. Davis, 26, had one of top strikeouts-per-inning ratios in the major leagues in 1981. Since joining the Yankees in 1978, he struck out 191 in 144 innings. He has a 2.94 earned run average during that time, with 22 saves and a 27-10 record...

Eamonn Darcy posted a 68 to lead the CBA Westlakes Classic at Adelaide, Aus., while Graham Marsh, Bob Shearer and Vaughan Somers were tied for second at 70...

Dodger pitcher Burt Hooton, 1961 quarterback Mike Cotten, former sprinter Charlie Thomas, former Texas Tech coach J T King, baseball-basketball star of the 1949-51 ear Frank Womack and pre WWI coach David Allerdice will be inducted into the Texas Longhorn Hall of Honor...

Cincinnati promoted switching-hitting outfielder Ron Little, 1.62, 59 rbi, from Tampa, Florida State...

CBS will televise three 15-round lightweight fights matching Sean O'Grady-Andy Ganigan Oct. 31, Claude Noel-Gonzala Montellano Nov. 14 and Alexis Arguello-Roberto Elizondo Nov. 21...

Braves to hire fired Mets' pilot

ATLANTA (AP) — Joe Torre, recently fired as manager of the New York Mets, will be hired as manager of the Atlanta Braves Friday, it was learned today by The Associated Press.

There has been speculation for several days that Torre, 41, was the choice of club owner Ted Turner.

Harwell is talk of Disney World

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Two golfing pairs were tied for the lead going into the second round of the National Team Championship, but "birdie machine" Barry Harwell was the talk of the $400,000 Disney World Tournament.

Harwell, who finished in a tie for second last year in this best-score event for 126 two-man teams, "carried" his partner, Lyn Lott, in posting a 12-under par 60 in Thursday's first round. The Harwell-Lott combo was tied with Vance Heafner and Mike Holland entering today's action.

"Barry shot 61 on his own ball," said Lott after the round over the 6,642-yard Lake Buena Vista course. "He was one shot away from the individual course record. That was a phenomenal round of golf."

Harwell, in his second year on the pro tour with only $6,439 in official money winnings this year, banged in nine birdies and an eagle. Lott contributed a birdie.

But Heafner and Holland, also tour sophomores, played a solid round over a tougher course, the 7,170-yard Magnolia. The 72-hole event is played over three courses. Harwell and Lott switched to the Magnolia today while Heafner and Holland played the 6,923-yard Palm course.

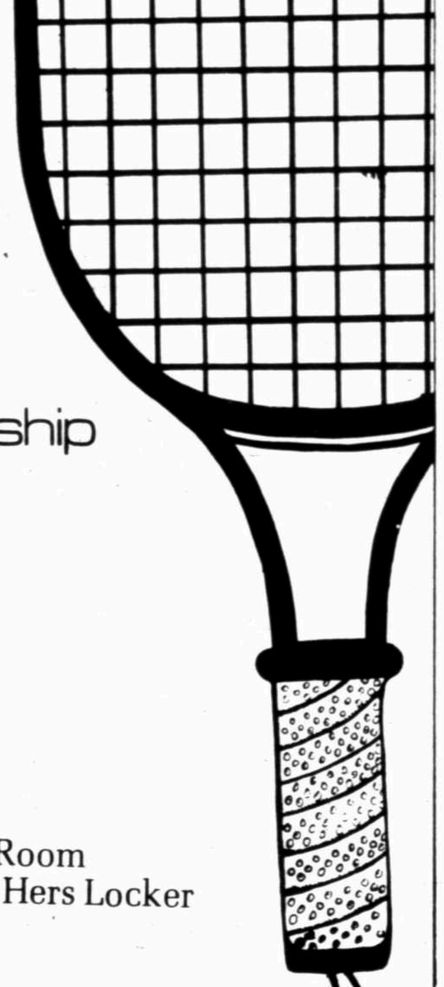

Charlie Gibson and Lon Nielsen were alone in second place going into the second round after shooting a 61 on the Buena Vista course.

Four teams were at 10 under 62, including brothers Danny and David Edwards, who won this event last year.

The stocky, red-faced Harwell teamed with Mike Harmon last year in tying for second with Gibby Gilbert-Grier Jones at 255. The Edwards brothers took the title with a 35-under 253 total.

This is the entrance to the building on Manhattan's upper West Sidenear Columbia University where Rita Jensen, a reporter with the Advocate of Stamford, Conn., says she lived with radical fugitive Katherine Boudin. Boudin, 38, was charged with second-degree murder for the deaths of a security guard and two police officers in the Brinks armored car hold-up in Nanuet, N.Y. on Tuesday.

Former secretary says employees taught her how to fill out phony milk invoices

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A former Mission school employee said she learned how to fill out phony milk delivery invoices and federal reimbursement forms from two one-time colleagues on trial for conspiracy and fraud.

Margarita Moreno, a fomer Mission Consolidated Independent School District secretary, testified that defendants Doylene Thompson and Jane Alice Cook told her how to fill out forms that would allow the district to improperly receive federal repayment for school lunches.

"We needed false invoices to prove we had purchased half-pints in order to claim them on reimbursement reports," Miss Moreno testified Thursday in a federal court trial.

Four other present or former Mission school workers are on trial. They were named in two sets of indictments returned this summer. Miss Moreno was named unindicted co-conspirator in the case.

The indictments accuse Mission school employees and workers at the Golden Jersey Creamery in Edinburg of filing false milk delivery reports, when in fact no half-pints of milk had been delivered.

Each meal under the federal school lunch program must contain a half-pint serving of milk to qualify for reimbursement. Prosecutors allege the district would improperly substitute ice cream, cottage cheese and other dairy products for the milk.

Miss Moreno said she would compute how many half-pints of milk needed to be improperly recorded in fake invoices to qualify for a set amount of reimbursement. She said she would call the dairy, where a secretary would make out the fake invoice.

The school district would pay for the false invoices and the payments were credited to a "special account" from which school purchases of ice cream would be deducted, according to the witness.

A former dairy bookkeeper who has pleaded guilty in the case testified earlier that she was told to fill out the false delivery slips as part of her job.

"I knew it was illegal. I was told if I didn't want to do it I should look for another job," said Irma Cortez, who left her Golden Jersey job three weeks ago. She was fined and received a probated sentence after pleading guilty to one count of conspiracy.

One of her superiors, Duane Leroy Towne, also pleaded guilty and testified Thursday he sometimes personally delivered the fake tickets to the Mission central cafeteria.

Towne said he told Assistant Superintendent Robert Harold Wicks, a trial co-defendant, in April 1980 that the practice of allowing the school district to substitute other dairy purchases for half-pints of milk needed to stop.

"I told him we were going to cut off this deal or whatever you want to call it," Towne said.

Defense lawyers have tried to establish in cross-examination that no one personally profited from the scheme and that the whole problem arose because children were not drinking the half-pints of milk. Rather than waste the milk, the defense claims, school officials tried to substitute other dairy products on meals.

Others on trial are Nia Baca, food services director; Edelmire Garcia, former [illegible]; and Gerardo Cortez, head cook supervisor.

Man who attempted hijack seized in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — A man who attempted to hijack an American Airlines DC-10 jumbo jet flying from San Juan, Puerto Rico, to New York City early today was seized shortly after the airplane landed here, the FBI said.

The man had passed a note to a flight attendant about 90 minutes after takeoff, saying he had an explosive device and two accomplices among the passengers, according to FBI spokesman Joseph Valiquette.

The man had demanded the plane be flown to Quebec, Canada.

The pilot told him the jet would be unable to make it without a refueling stop in New York City and convinced him the plane should land at Kennedy International Airport, Valiquette said.

Shortly before the jet landed, the man told the pilot that he was willing to surrender, the FBI spokesman added.

The jet, American flight 676 scheduled to arrive at Kennedy at 3:08 a.m. EDT today, landed about 2:45 a.m.

About 20 minutes later, the man was seized by an FBI agent who entered the aircraft and the 98 passengers and 11 crew members left the jet, Valiquette said.

Cartoon tattoos laced with LSD

BELLEVUE, Wash. (AP) — Police are warning parents about a bizarre prank in which some paper-transfer "tattoos" depicting cartoon characters have been laced with LSD.

The play tattoos are transferred to the skin by applying moisture, usually by licking them. The LSD can be absorbed through the skin if the transfer is applied, as well as if it is licked or chewed, said Bellevue Detective Bob Littlejohn.

The transfers are apparently aimed at children and depict cartoon figures, such as Mickey Mouse, Spider-Man and Captain America, police said.

Bellevue police have alerted parents and school officials to the likelihood the LSD has joined the suburban drug traffic, and cautioned that it could be handed out as a Halloween "treat" to unsuspecting children.

"Our biggest problem until this (the transfers) was the general increase in blotter acid, which is blotter paper with a drop of LSD on it," he said. "Normally, they'll identify it some way. We've seen what's called dragon acid, which is blotter paper with a little rubber stamp of a dragon on it, and a drop of acid. It's sold for $2.

Links discovered between radicals, murderous attack on Brink's truck

NEW YORK (AP) — A list of cops targeted for death and the floorplan of a courthouse were found along with weapons and bloody clothing as authorities raided homes and uncovered new links between radicals and a murderous attack on a Brink's truck.

A third of the four suspects arrested was identified by authorities as a member of the radical Weather Underground and police said they believed the Underground had forged a terrorist alliance with the militant Black Liberation Army.

Authorities also said they were looking into the gang's possible involvement with other crimes, including the bombing last month of the Schenectady, N.Y., office of a rugby club during a tour by the Springboks, a South African rugby team, and the 1979 prison escape of Joanne Chesimard, a convicted killer who is a leader of the Black Liberation Army.

Police gave up a search for up to eight escaped members of the gang that attacked the armored car on Tuesday, believing there was little hope they would be found in the woods and small towns around Nanuet, 25 miles north of New York City, where the ambush occurred. The gang briefly made off with the $1.6 million in the truck, but it was quickly recovered.

The four suspects were scheduled to be arraigned today in suburban Rockland County, where they were being held under tight security. Three of them, Katherine Boudin, 38, Judith Clark, 31, and David Joseph Gilbert, 37, have been identified by authorities as members of the Weather Underground. Gilbert was the last to be identified.

Police and federal agents continued to run through their files and investigators searched homes in the New York City area. Authorities said they had discovered bloody clothing, weapons, ammunition, walkie-talkies and literature on radical causes.

A getaway car that eluded police after the ambush was found in Pelham, N.Y., and officials said it was registered to Marilyn Jean Buck, 34, a fugitive who was sentenced in 1973 to 10 years in jail as a gun-runner for the BLA. Miss Buck, who was being sought as an accomplice in the killings of the guard and the two officers, is listed in New York City police files as a member of the Weather Underground, according to the New York Times.

The owner of another getaway car, Eve Rosahn of New York, was arraigned Thursday on riot and assault charges stemming from a protest at Kennedy International Airport last month against the Springboks. She was held on $10,000 bail.

At a suspected gang hideout in the New York City borough of the Bronx, 50 police officers and FBI agents found floor plans for police stations and lists naming specific police officers as targets for assassination, The New York Times reported today.

Similar floor plans were found Wednesday in an apartment bomb factory in East Orange, N.J., that police had raided after tracing the license plate of the one getaway car that escaped from the Brink's truck attack. The car was registered to an alias of Miss Buck, and the East Orange and Bronx apartments were rented in the same name, authorities said.

Agents also found automatic handguns, shotgun shells, several walkie-talkies and current newspapers in the Bronx apartment, indicating that someone had been in there recently, FBI spokesman Don Whitehead said.

The Daily News reported police turned up floor plans for a criminal courthouse in Queens.

The New York Times reported a raid in the suburb of Mount Vernon turned up bloodied clothing that may have been left by people involved in the Brink's holdup.

Searches also were conducted at Miss Boudin's apartment in Manhattan and at an apartment inside a Lower Manhattan hotel, but they revealed little useful information, investigators said.

Col. Clinton L. Pagano, superintendent of the New Jersey State Police, said evidence found during the search of the East Orange apartment "indicated that the persons who occupied the apartment were involved with the Black Liberation Army and the Weather Underground."

Based in part on evidence found in the apartment, investigators believe "that these two groups have merged into a single group," Pagano said.

Rita Jensen, a reporter for The Stamford (Conn.) Advocate, said in an article in the newspaper Thursday that she realized from news photographs this week that she had been living for several years with Miss Boudin, whom she knew under the name "Lynn Adams." Miss Boudin had been a federal fugitive ever since she fled from a Manhattan townhouse that exploded in 1970, killing three people. Authorities said the building was being used as a Weather Underground bomb factory.

She had also been receiving $355 a month in welfare benefits, according to a city government source, who asked to remain anonymous.

The holdup occurred Tuesday. The truck was ambushed, a guard was killed, $1.6 million was stolen and the robbers split up three ways.

One getaway car, a yellow Honda registered to Miss Rosahn, crashed in Nyack, leading to the arrests of Miss Clark and the two male suspects. Another getaway car, a white Oldsmobile registered to what investigators said was Miss Buck's alias, Nina Lewis, got away.

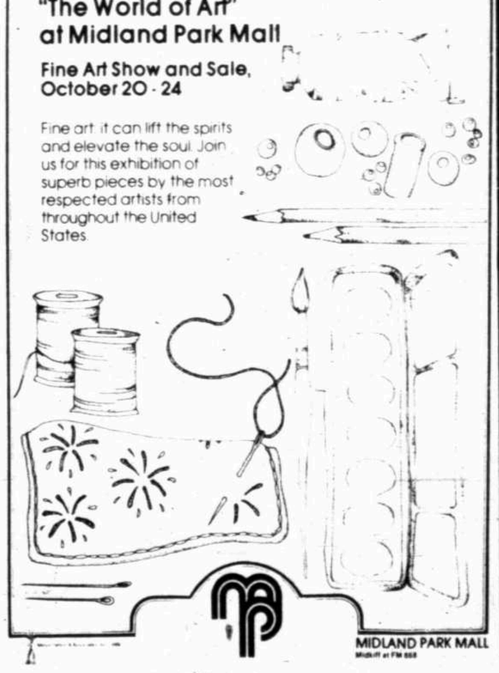

Two Nyack policemen were killed when the third getaway car, a rental van, was halted at a roadblock in Nyack. Most of those in the van fled in the confusion, but Miss Boudin was seized.

The two men who were arrested after the holdup were positively identified Thursday by Clarkstown Police Chief Robert Schnakenberg as Gilbert, of Cambridge, Mass., and Samuel Brown, 41, address unknown.
