Preventable death

Government takes state by state look at smoking

By A.J. Hostetler
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Nevada leads the nation in the rate of smoking-related deaths, while the Mormon Church's prohibition against using tobacco keeps Utah relatively smoke-free. Overall, smoking-related deaths are declining.

These were some of the conclusions of the government's first state-by-state look in five years at cigarette smoking, the single most preventable cause of premature death in the United States.

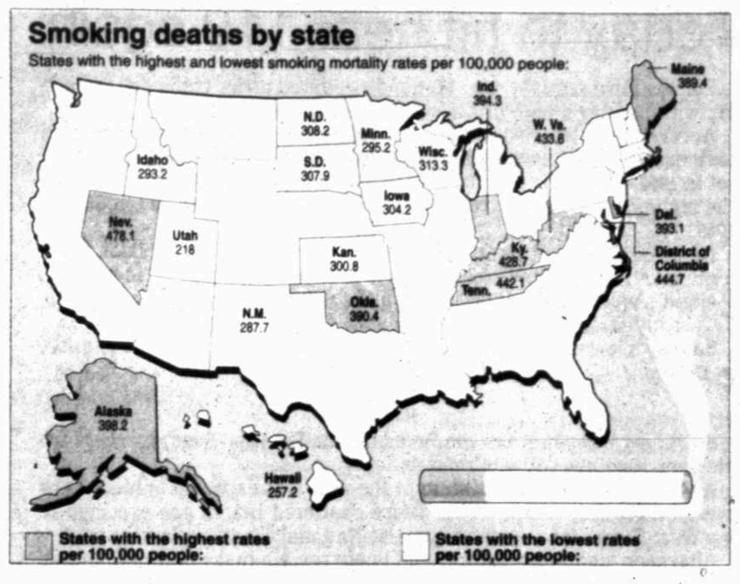

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention analyzed deaths in 1990, and found that 20 percent, or 415,226, were caused by smoking. A 1988 estimate found that 434,000 people died from smoking-related causes.

Improvements in the emergency care of heart attacks and strokes and better treatment for cardiovascular diseases offset a slight increase in lung cancer deaths, said Mike Siegel, an epidemiologist with the CDC's Office on Smoking and Health.

"Only a small percentage could be due to a drop in the smoking rate," Siegel said.

The CDC looked at each state's deaths from cancer, cardiovascular and respiratory conditions, infant diseases and burn deaths caused by smoking. The agency then analyzed the numbers using formulas based on the prevalence or percentage of adults who smoke, and

Commission: Mosque killer worked alone

■ Panel finds Jewish settler acted alone when he killed at least 29 Muslims.

Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Rejecting Palestinian claims of a conspiracy, an Israeli commission found Sunday that a Jewish settler acted alone when he killed at least 29 Muslims in a Hebron mosque.

The five-member panel then cleared the government and army command of any responsibility for the Feb. 25 blood bath, prompting charges by Palestinians and liberal Israelis that the six-week investigation was a whitewash.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin pledged to carry out the commission's recommendations, including improvement of security at the Tomb of the Patriarchs, which is sacred to Muslims and Jews.

Jews will be barred from carrying weapons at the site in the West Bank town, and Jewish and Muslim worshipers will be separated to prevent friction.

But Rabin said there were no guarantees that security forces could stop another massacre by a "Jewish madman who decides to open fire in one of a thousand mosques where prayers are held in the West Bank."

The commission appeared to accept the argument of army chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Ehud Barak, who testified the massacre "hit us like lightning from a clear blue sky."

In its 338-page report, the panel said the army could not have predicted an attack by a Jewish extremist on Palestinians because intelligence reports focused on possible violence by Muslim militants against Jewish settlers.

8 years after girl's murder, mother waits for accused killer's trial, justice

WACO (AP) — In the eight years since her 10-year-old daughter was found dead after she wandered away from school, Denice Logan has sought closure.

She visited Cheryl's grave every day for two years. Daily, she drives by the field where the girl was found. She sees Cheryl's friends graduating from high school and preparing for college.

And she and her husband, Leonard, wait for justice.

Ricky Kevin Smith, 29, was indicted on a charge of murder last week in Cheryl's death. His trial is scheduled Aug. 8.

"Hurt, pain and anger. That's how I feel. You want to take care of it yourself sometimes. That thought does cross your mind," Mrs. Logan said.

Smith and Clinnie Childress were arrested a few months after the girl's body was found Nov. 7, 1986.

Celebrity involvement puts social, health issues in spotlight

By Ken Guggenheim
Associated Press

BOSTON — For gambling, it was Pete Rose. For breast cancer, Betty Ford. For AIDS, Rock Hudson, Arthur Ashe and Magic Johnson.

Nothing casts attention on a health or social problem like a celebrity's involvement. Now, with O.J. Simpson's arrest on charges he murdered his wife and a male companion, domestic violence becomes the issue.

But if experience is any guide, the attention will be short-lived. The challenge, leaders of women's groups say, is to take the burst of publicity over the battering of women and make a lasting impact through legislation and increased public awareness.

"We may never have this opportunity again," said Rita Smith, coordinator of the Denver-based National Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

There's nothing new about a social problem being identified with a celebrity. Amyotrophic lateral sclerosis was discovered in 1859, but few heard of it until it destroyed New York Yankees first baseman Lou Gehrig, who died in 1941. The disease took his name.

"It's the only disease in the world that is named after the patient instead of the doctor," said Richard Drasen, vice president of the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Association in Woodland Hills, Calif.

More recent examples abound.

Betty Ford, the former first lady, not only drew attention to breast cancer, but also to alcoholism when she revealed her own drinking problems.

Baseball player Pete Rose was the man "who put compulsive gambling on the map," said Arnold

WEATHER WATCH

Today to hit near 110 again

For the third straight day, Midland sweltered under triple-digit weather, with Sunday's high of 112 setting several records.

According to forecasters at the National Weather Service, Sunday's temperature not only was the record high for that date — which was 105 set in 1990 — but was also the record high for the month of June and tied the highest reading ever recorded in Midland, which was set on July 2, 1989.

No break in the hot weather is in store for today, as sunny skies and a high near 110 are predicted. The winds should be south at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 70s.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high near 106.

Sunday's low was 77, compared to the record low for that date of 61 set in 1968.

STATE

Scorching temperatures continued across Texas on Sunday, where triple-digit readings set new records.

A strong high pressure system to the west was expected to move very slowly eastward, which means more shattered marks are expected in far West Texas for several days, the National Weather Service said.

Afternoon high temperatures will likely remain in the 108 to 112 degree range today.

Amarillo reached the century mark again Sunday, the eighth time this month and year. Since 1892, when record-keeping began for Amarillo, the most days the temperature has risen to 100 degrees or higher in any June was 12 in both 1953 and 1990.

At the Midland International Airport, the mercury soared to 111 degrees at 3 p.m. Sunday. The all-time high at the airport is 112 degrees, a mark set on July 2, 1989.

Midland's record high for June 26 — 105 degrees set in 1990 — was exceeded when the temperature reached 110 degrees.

Record-breaking heat remained the story in Lubbock, where readings at Lubbock International Airport reached 108 Sunday, breaking the old mark of 105 degrees set in 1990.

North of a low-pressure trough extending across the Panhandle, temperatures were in the middle 90s and to the south, triple-digit heat was recorded at all locations except Marfa where the mercury reached 99.

The West Texas forecast for today calls for sunny and hot with lows in the 60s north to the upper 70s south.

In North Texas on Sunday, it was another blistering hot day with clear skies over most of the area except the northeast where a few token clouds were noted.

Temperatures over the Dallas-Fort Worth area were at or near the century mark at 4 p.m. A heat advisory is in effect for the western half of North Texas through Tuesday.

Strong southwesterly winds were gusting at 20 to 30 mph over western areas on Sunday, while southwesterly winds averaged 15 mph in the east.

Today should be mostly sunny and hot with highs in the middle 90s east to near 104 west. Lows should be in the 70s.

In South Texas on Sunday, temperatures ranged from the 80s at the coast to 104 at Del Rio. From the Rio Grande plains to the Del Rio area and western Hill country, temperatures were near or topped the century mark. A few isolated thunderstorms were reported in southeast Texas.

Another hot day lies ahead today with highs near 90 to 106 over inland parts of South Texas.

NATION

A heat wave with temperatures above 100 baked the Southwest on Sunday, while thunderstorms battered parts of the Midwest and Southeast.

A reading of 111 at Midland, broke the old record for the day of 105 set in 1990. Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz., had readings of 112 and 111, respectively.

And the heat wave in the Southwest is likely to last a few more days, according to the National Severe Storms Forecast Center.

The heat also hit Denver, where a 101-degree reading broke a 14-year-old record for the day of 97.

Elsewhere, a storm system pushed eastward out of the Midwest, bringing thunderstorms to the Southeast, and a low-pressure system moved through the northern Rockies.

A severe thunderstorm watch was issued for Sunday evening for part of southern Kentucky and much of Tennessee.

Thunderstorms in the Midwest produced high wind and heavy rain. More than one inch fell at Columbia, Mo.; Indianapolis; Evansville and South Bend, Ind., and Belleville, Ill.

On Sunday morning, high wind ripped a roof off a house in Aubrey, Ark., and overturned small planes at a airfield in Arlington, Tenn.

The low for the day was 31 at Lakeview, Ore. Temperatures in the 40s were recorded in higher elevations across the northern Rockies.

der charge in February 1987; the same grand jury cleared Childress, who had an alibi.

Smith remained jailed about nine months, until prosecutors dismissed the charge to reopen the investigation. Smith pleaded guilty in January 1992 to killing Cheryl in exchange for a life prison term.

A year later, Waco's 10th Court of Appeals reversed the conviction, saying Smith's confession should not have been allowed against him.

Now, Mrs. Logan must watch prosecutors try again to prove that Smith sexually assaulted her daughter, then strangled and suffocated her.

For reasons still unknown, Cheryl left school after telling her fifth-grade teacher on the morning of Nov. 3, 1986, that she was feeling sick and needed to go to the bathroom. She never returned.

A massive search ensued. Cheryl's body was found in a field near her home.

Waco police detective Bill Sanders said the case still affects him.

"This is just one of those cases where you have a child who has been murdered, and you just have to keep working at it, no matter how many times you have to try it or go back into the courthouse," he said. "It is just one of those you can't give up on because it is a child, and it is so undeserved."

Mrs. Logan hasn't decided if she will attend Smith's trial. But she hopes he is convicted and gets a life prison term.

"I'm just praying that if he did it, that he will get his just," she said. "Knowing that he won't be out on the streets will help a little bit."

MOSQUE: Panel finds gunman acted alone

(From 1A)

of the Patriarchs," the report said.

The commission said the mosque gunman, Baruch Goldstein, could perhaps have been stopped had the full guard detail shown up at the tomb on the morning of the massacre. Five out of 10 guards were absent, including three who overslept. The panel left it up to the army to file disciplinary charges.

Goldstein, a physician who immigrated from New York, walked into the tomb dressed in his army reserve uniform and opened fire with a Galil assault rifle on rows of worshipers. He was bludgeoned to death by worshipers.

"The massacre ... was a base and murderous act in which innocent people bending in prayer to their maker were killed," said the report. "The massacre was one of the harshest expressions of the Jewish-Arab conflict."

The report said 29 Palestinians were killed and 125 wounded. Independent checks with hospitals and family members indicated 30 had died, but there was confusion over names from the beginning.

The commission determined that Goldstein was the lone shooter. It discounted testimony by Muslim worshipers that shots were fired from more than one weapon and statements by two army guards that suggested another man carried the weapon into the tomb.

"We were not presented with credible proof that he was helped while carrying out the killing ... nor was it proven to us that he had secret partners," said the commission, which was headed by Supreme Court Chief Justice Meir Shamgar.

In Hebron, Mayor Mustafa Natche said the report did not address the basic problems that allowed Goldstein to operate freely, namely the presence of 415 Israeli settlers among 80,000 Palestinians in Hebron.

"The climate of threats and violence is what allowed Goldstein to do what he did," said Natche. "The settlers take the law into their own hands. The army did not stop the settler lawlessness."

Liberal legislator Dedi Zucker said the report "looks to me like an attempt to wash our hands." Goldstein, he said, "knew that this was a land without law where there was a clear preference for settlers for many years."

Saeb Erakat, a member of the Palestinian National Authority, the self-rule government for the Gaza Strip and Jericho, said: "The reason for the massacre is still there. I think the settlers will continue to be a time bomb."

Settler leaders praised the report for determining that Goldstein acted alone, but criticized the recommendation that Jews no longer be allowed to enter the tomb armed, saying they needed to carry weapons for self-defense.

The commission cited some lapses in law enforcement, including police refusal to investigate settler vigilantes unless a Palestinian victim files a complaint. Most Palestinians are intimidated by the settlers or believe their complaint will lead to nothing.

INVOLVE: Celebrities shed light on issues

(From 1A)

Wexler, executive director of the New Jersey Council of Compulsive Gambling.

Most recently, the deaths of Richard Nixon and Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis made people think about living wills and dying at home.

"Celebrities to us are kind of in our broad circle of friends,' said Charlie Leerhsen, a senior editor at People magazine. "In a sense these people are very far remote from us, but in a sense we know them."

"I think that celebrities fill a certain void of leadership in our society," said Lynora Williams, spokeswoman for the AIDS Action Council in Washington. "People, like it or not, look to them as sort of pillars that can guide them in their lives. In a very indirect sense, people measure their own strengths and weaknesses against those of celebrities."

More than most diseases, public perceptions of AIDS have been shaped by celebrities. News coverage surged with the deaths of Hudson and Ashe, and with Johnson's revelation that he has the virus that causes the disease.

The publicity has mixed effects, Williams said. To the extent it educates the public and defeats myths about AIDS, it helps. But it is often inadequate to influence people to change how they live.

"The sort of one-shot deal that comes with a celebrity revelation just isn't enough over time to create the kind of impact that we really need," she said.

When singer Karen Carpenter died in 1983 from eating disorders, attention was focused on anorexia and bulimia. But 11 years later, the impact of her death on the problem is hard to detect.

"I don't see her passing away with this disorder has caused any more concern or awareness of the problem," said Dawn Ries, administrator of the National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders in Highland Park, Ill.

TOBACCO: Study shows decline in smoking deaths on risks of health problems among current and ex-smokers, compared to nonsmokers.

It estimated that in each state males had about twice as many deaths attributable to smoking as females.

Smoking took its heaviest toll in Nevada, where 24 percent of all deaths in 1990 were blamed on tobacco use. The CDC linked 2,234 Nevada deaths to smoking, for a smoking-related death rate of 478.1 per 100,000 people.

Nevada's rates may be attributable in part to its large number of retirees; 80 percent of its residents were born elsewhere, said Willie Edwards, the Nevada Health Department's first tobacco education and information officer.

Despite Nevada's "live and let live" attitude, the state is responding to anti-smoking pressures from tourists, who want their casinos and restaurants smoke-free, Edwards said.

Pressure of another kind led to the nation's lowest smoking-related death rate next door in Utah. Just 1,228 people died from smoking in 1990, 13.4 percent of the state's total, for a mortality rate of 218 per 100,000 people.

Mormons account for 70 percent of Utah's population, giving them a huge influence on smoking prevention, according to John Brockert, the state's director of vital statistics.

Still, health officials are concerned.

"We think it could be better and we have programs trying to convince people not to start," Brockert said.

The CDC also tallied up the years of potential life lost in each state, by comparing average life expectancies for each smoking victim to the person's age at death.

As the most populous state, California led the nation on this scale. With 42,574 premature deaths, the CDC figured smoking robbed the state of 498,297 years of potential life.

Alaska, one of the least populated states, had the lowest number, 6,720 years from 402 deaths.

Bizarre scandal rocks Philippine movie awards

By Eileen Guerrero
Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — "I didn't expect this," gushed Ruffa Gutierrez as she was named Best Actress in the Philippine equivalent of the Oscars. The judges didn't expect it either. They thought they named someone else.

Now the country's film industry is in an uproar and the scandal is the talk of the town. Mayor Alfredo Lim is threatening to throw Miss Gutierrez in jail and city fathers want to deport Viveka Babajee, who represented the Indian Ocean island nation Mauritius in last month's Miss Universe pageant.

It all started last Wednesday, when the Manila Film Festival honored the best in Philippine cinema at its televised annual awards ceremony.

As the drums rolled, actress Gretchen Barretto shouted "and the best actress for 1994 is ..." She paused for Miss Babajee to read the winner. "Ruffa Gutierrez," Miss Babajee blurted out.

Miss Barretto's face froze. Her chin dropped. She glanced toward the judges with a look of shock.

Next came Best Actor — Gaby Concepcion, who co-starred with Miss Gutierrez in a film version of the Lorena Bobbitt spouse-castration case. Miss Gutierrez was one of two presenters of his award.

Something was clearly amiss. When the hoopla subsided, a representative of the accounting firm that had counted the votes and certified the winners told Lim the winners should have been actor Edu Manzano and actress Aiko Melendez.

Lim then appeared on stage and announced that a "fraud has been perpetrated." But by then, live television coverage was over and the apparent winners had disappeared with their trophies. Even the cue card with the winners' names, signed by officials of the accounting firm, has disappeared.

Lim, a former Manila police chief known as the "Dirty Harry of the Philippines," has ordered a criminal fraud investigation and summoned all involved to a hearing in his office Monday.

"Ruffa Gutierrez is neck-deep in trouble," Lim told The Manila Standard. The Manila city council has asked that Miss Babajee be deported.

On Saturday, a local TV station aired a slow motion replay of the ceremony. As the crowd cheered Miss Gutierrez, Miss Babajee could be heard on the microphone urging "take it, take it" to Miss Gutierrez's brother, who then appeared to slip the cue card into his pocket.

Miss Barretto told reporters that the apparent hoax was masterminded by Concepcion's agent and by Miss Gutierrez's mother, who is Miss Babajee's agent.

Both agents deny the allegations. Miss Gutierrez's brother was unavailable for comment Sunday.

Miss Gutierrez also denied any wrongdoing. "Can't you leave me alone on my ... birthday?!" she shrieked at reporters.

It is not the first time Miss Gutierrez and her mother have been at the center of controversy. Last year, Sen. Ernesto Maceda accused her and others of involvement in a high-class call-girl ring. She denied the charge.

Prosecution condemns, contributes to O.J. media hype

LOS ANGELES (AP) — District Attorney Gil Garcetti was hopping mad. A plague of pretrial publicity had descended upon the O.J. Simpson case, he complained, contending even Simpson's constitutional rights to a fair trial were at stake.

What Garcetti didn't say was that much of the publicity in the sensational double-murder case has been generated by him or his deputies.

Garcetti himself has appeared on several national television programs, including "Nightline" and "This Week With David Brinkley."

Faced with charging a popular celebrity with a heinous crime, Garcetti has gone to great lengths to plant a seed of doubt in the minds of the public — and, thus, potential jurors.

Among Garcetti's comments:

— Simpson has shown a "consciousness of guilt" and may "sometime down the road ... say, 'OK, I did it.'"

— People like Simpson are "superficially well-known."

— A judge "kissed ... off" a 1989 domestic violence case against Simpson.

The two courtroom prosecutors also have gotten into the act, declaring at a news conference that Simpson is the "sole murderer" responsible for a "brutal" crime.

With so much news flowing from the district attorney's office, Garcetti's critics snicker at his complaints of pretrial publicity.

"He's thinking more with his ego than his brains," said Harland Braun, a criminal defense lawyer who once worked with Garcetti in the district attorney's office. "You can't make political hay out of this tragedy, it's going to boomerang. It's a sad, sad case. People don't like to see you gloating on television about it."

Simpson's lawyer, Robert Shapiro, even filed a formal objection to the prosecution's orations.

But Charles Weisselberg, a professor at the University of Southern California Law Center, said Garcetti may not have been as irresponsible as his critics suggest.

The Simpson case, according to Weisselberg, is unlike many others in that the public had a positive image of the accused before charges were filed.

"Usually, the first thing people ever hear about the person is the awful facts of the crime, and that by the time the defendant is linked to the crime, people have a low opinion of the defendant. This is usually something the defense has to deal with," he said. "Here, there's a role reversal."

Garcetti denies stepping over the line in the area of pretrial publicity in the Simpson case.

In fact, it was Garcetti who asked Superior Court Judge Cecil Mills to question grand jurors about their knowledge of dramatic 911 tapes in which Nicole Simpson is heard pleading for help and O.J. Simpson is heard shouting threatening obscenities during a 1993 dispute.

A Midland woman was in critical condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Sunday after a two-vehicle accident at Interstate 20 and Rankin Highway.

According to a report, a Ford LTD, driven by 42-year-old Betty Davis, was southbound on Rankin Highway at 12:20 p.m. when it collided with a Jeep Waggoneer, driven by 29-year-old Rusty Box, which was eastbound on Frontage Road of Interstate 20.

Ms. Davis was transported to the hospital, where she remained Sunday evening. Janetta Davis, a passenger in the Ford, received minor injuries.

Box received no injuries.

An investigation into the accident continues.

Former president: U.S. must keep strong foothold in foreign affairs

HOUSTON (AP) — The United States must keep a strong foothold in foreign affairs using the personal one-on-one approach if it is to maintain its status as a superpower, former President George Bush said Sunday.

"We still have an obligation to lead the world," Bush said. "What is needed is patience ... policy, you need personal diplomacy."

Without this "strength in leadership," Bush insisted that America would lose its grip as a sole superpower.

"We are the superpower and we must stay involved in the rest of the world," Bush said.

Speaking before about 1,000 members of the Texas Restaurant Association, Bush gave nostalgic impressions of world leaders and illustrative nuances of life as president emeritus.

The laundry list of pro-democracy leaders the former president admired included everyone from former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher ("She didn't flinch") and Pope John Paul ("an extraordinary human being") to Mexico President Carlos Salinas de Gortari ("a young and talented leader").

While reiterating a vow not to criticize his successor, Bush failed to refrain from a few quick jabs at the man chosen over him in 1992.

"I am not here to try to sell you on the Clinton health care plan," Bush said to roars of laughter. "That thing ought to be dead and buried and buried soon."

Although he took care to steer clear of President Clinton's current foreign policy struggles, Bush managed to sound off at some decisions.

Town's grammar teacher retires after 42 years

By Darlene McCormick
Waco Tribune-Herald

COOLIDGE — If Charles Osborne were your grammar teacher you would never make this mistake.

Osborne, 66, would tell you in a hurry that the sentence needs a comma.

That's because after 42 years at Coolidge Independent School District, time is short for the English teacher who specializes in grammar. Osborne, who has taught two generations of Coolidge students in this town of about 800, is pitching in the chalk on June 30.

Students, faculty and staff at Coolidge High School describe him as tough but kind, ornery but funny. He is a well-educated world traveler and an old-school teacher who expects results from his students. They deliver. Nothing less would do.

Even on the eve of his retirement, he was challenging students to succeed.

In Room 10, at around 9 a.m. on a Tuesday, Osborne gave his junior English class a five-sentence test.

"I still teach the rules," Osborne said. "Some of you really have improved since you were freshmen."

The room fell quiet. Students shuffled papers and fidgeted while searching for the appropriate punctuation for each sentence.

One young man turned his paper in and fell back into his seat in defeat.

"I'm going to fail anyway," he told Osborne.

"No, you've got a passing average," Osborne replied, encouraging the student to keep trying.

Before the hour is through, Osborne slipped in a freebie — a lesson on life.

"Even if you're writing a business letter, and you miss that decimal ... what's going to happen?" he asked. The writer could lose money, he told them.

"So, you have to be careful," he said. "In this world, you have to be careful."

The hour seemed to illustrate what people respect most about Osborne — his tough love and his true desire to pass on knowledge to another generation.

After the class was over, 17-year-old Emily Green said she cried when she found out in the eighth grade she would have to take his class. Now she considers him her favorite teacher.

Green said the most significant thing Osborne has taught her is to apply herself to her studies. She feels confident about passing college English.

"I've had some say he's a little harder than some college professors," she said.

For some students, such as 19-year-old Shannon Rash, Osborne is a hero. Among Osborne's many talents is play writing. He has written the senior play for 34 years. Rash was in this year's play — the last for Osborne.

"He's, just, like the greatest teacher we've ever had," Rash said. "He is our idol. I mean we want to be just like him."

Patricia Sykora said his knowledge about life — and his jokes — impress her.

"It's really neat to learn about his life," she said. "He's been on a lot of trips. We learn through him vicariously."

"All of our families have had him as a teacher," Green said.

"He says, 'Your mother sat there. Your father sat there,'" Sykora said.

True to his reputation, Osborne jokes away the compliments.

"Oh, they're easily fooled," he said. "These kids don't look up to much of anybody whether it be Jesus Christ or Genghis Khan."

Kids nowadays only idolize athletes, he said. The only reason they look up to him is because their parents did.

"Well, I taught most of their folks," he said.

But Osborne, a carpenter who also runs his own construction company, says it might also be because he "can do things." He won't try to explain something that he hasn't experienced for himself.

In a way, that is the key to his teaching success.

Teaching children about life, "that's the main thrust, dear," he said.

Osborne doesn't know exactly why he decided to become a teacher. All he knows is he likes to read, and he likes English.

"There's enough ignorance in the world as it is," Osborne said. "I like to learn."

After graduating from Coolidge High School, Osborne attended Westminster College in Tehuacana. He went on to get his bachelor's degree from Sam Houston State University in the early 1950s. He received a master of science degree in education at Baylor University in the 1960s.

As a child, he moved from town to town. As an adult, he vowed it would be different.

Coolidge was his home. Teaching there would be his life.

He has taught at Coolidge ISD longer than any other teacher in the school's history, said high school Principal Danny Baker.

Judge Roy Bean's legend lives on amid Langtry hills, canyons

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

LANGTRY — In barren lands west of Del Rio, amid cactus-covered hills and beyond the steep-sided Pecos River, you get the feeling you've ventured into the past.

Judge Roy Bean, the famous justice of the peace of the late 1800s, is alive and well — in spirit, at least — in the remote little town of Langtry on the Rio Grande.

Thousands of people each year stop in to see the Jersey Lilly, the old saloon where Bean meted out his unique brand of frontier justice dubbed the "Law West of the Pecos."

The Texas Department of Transportation has maintained Bean's saloon and billiard hall and operated a visitors center in Langtry since 1968 to help preserve the memory of the legendary judge.

Many tourists know of Judge Roy Bean but don't always have their facts straight, said Ginger Harrall, a travel counselor at the Langtry center.

"They have a big misconception because of the movies that he's a hanging judge," Ms. Harrall said. "He never hanged anybody."

The bearded Bean was best known for imposing fines, Ms. Harrall said.

Bean was appointed justice of the peace in 1882 to oversee an untamed territory near the Texas-Mexico border that was home to a growing number of railroad workers. Bean later was elected to the judge's post, serving until his death in 1903.

His saloon was his courtroom.

When a legal case came his way, the barkeep became judge, often disposing of cases rapidly with the help of a single law book.

Today, travelers can stroll around inside Bean's old barroom and pool hall, a mini-museum filled with historic photographs. The visitors center also houses Bean artifacts and displays about the town's past.

Bean's residence, which he called the "Opera House," remains standing, but isn't open to the public.

Bean gained a reputation even in his lifetime as a colorful character, but not just for the way he enforced the law.

In 1896, he defied U.S. and Mexican authorities' ban on prize fights and staged a boxing match on a sandbar in the middle of the Rio Grande between Bob Fitzsimmons of Australia and Peter Mahar of Ireland.

Fitzsimmons won with a knockout in less than two minutes.

Bean also was known for his devotion from afar for English actress Lillie Langtry. He named his bar for her, though a sign painter misspelled her name. Bean claimed he named the town for her, but railroad officials said they named it for a man named Langtry.

Miss Langtry eventually visited the town, but not until 1904 after the judge died.

These days Langtry is but a tourist stop on U.S. Highway 90, albeit one visited by an estimated 85,000 people a year.

"Big Bend is a big draw," said Ms. Harrall, referring to Big Bend National Park, about 150 miles further west.

Langtry's population is about two dozen and many of its old buildings are abandoned. But there are some businesses operating — like a barbecue and beer joint and a convenience store stocked with souvenirs boasting Bean's theme of "Law West of the Pecos."

No doubt the judge would be proud.

Besieged Rwandan leader talks tough, vows to keep fighting rebels

■ Interim prime minister says government forces are gaining strength; declaration to journalists indicates there will be more bloodletting.

Associated Press

GYSENYI, Rwanda — Rwanda's prime minister talked tough on Sunday, saying his besieged government forces were growing stronger despite an arms embargo. He vowed to keep up the fight against Tutsi-led rebels.

The declaration by interim Prime Minister Jean Kambannada indicated the bloodletting that has killed at least 200,000 people in the last 10 weeks may be far from over.

Most of the victims have been ethnic Tutsi civilians butchered by militias of the majority Hutu tribe, which controls the government and army.

The warlike posturing marked a change for Kambannada, a former bank director who became prime minister when his predecessor was assassinated by extremist army troops shortly after the civil war began.

Clad in new camouflage fatigues with a submachine gun beside him, Kambannada spoke to journalists in a hotel room near scenic Lake Kivu.

He said although the rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front has taken two-thirds of this central African country, the rebels are not as strong as they appear and the government is not ready to reach a peace settlement.

"We are not going to negotiate on our knees with the RPF," Kambannada said. "We could sign a treaty today if it was right. But we know the RPF isn't as strong as international opinion thinks it is."

Kambannada suggested the government was finding ways around the arms embargo imposed by the United Nations in May, and said it would spend every last dollar to purchase weapons. He did not say where the weapons were coming from, or how they were entering the country.

"If we could get more supplies, we could put the RPF to flight in a few days," he said.

The death of President Juvenal Habyrimana, a Hutu, in a suspicious plane crash on April 6 touched off a wave of massacres that killed mostly Tutsis and moderate Hutus.

The rapid rout of the government forces by Tutsi-led rebels has stalled around the capital, Kigali, which the rebels have besieged but failed to capture. But they sent Kambannada and his government into flight earlier by taking the provisional government headquarters of Gitarama.

Kambannada said government patrols are penetrating into Gitarama. His claim could not be independently confirmed, but military observers believe that the 20,000-30,000 rebels may be spread too thin to hold all the territory they have seized.

In the capital on Sunday, rebels fired shells into the heart of the government-controlled area and prevented the evacuation of seriously wounded patients from an overcrowded hospital.

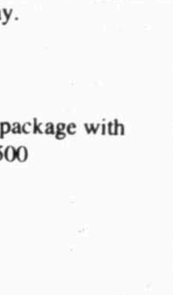

Shells fell within 50 yards of U.N. trucks loaded with 35 patients who were to be taken from the International Red Cross Hospital to King Faisal Hospital in rebel-held land.

The Rwandan Patriotic Front had agreed to the transfer of patients but was unable to contact its fighters to tell them to stop the bombardment, said U.N. military spokesman Maj. Jean-Guy Plante.

Frightened and weary, the 35 patients finally were unloaded and their stretchers placed on the floors of hospital corridors.

The hospital became even more crowded with the arrival of civilians and soldiers wounded by the pounding shells. Soldiers sped to the hospital in cars and trucks to deliver the wounded, witnesses said. No casualties figures were available.

German air quality shows improvement in 4-day slowdown

NECKARSULM, Germany (AP) — A four-day experiment to see if quieter lives reduced pollution in southern Germany ended Sunday with significant improvements in air quality.

Scientists said interim readings showed nitrogen oxides on Friday were 40 percent lower than Wednesday; hydrocarbons were down 36 percent. But ozone, the irritating gas that was the experiment's focus, appeared to rise.

"It shows that traffic restructuring and lower speed limits can accomplish a lot," said Peter-Michael Valet, head of pollution reduction in the Environment Ministry of Baden-Wuerttemberg state, the experiment's sponsor.

More than 150,000 people had agreed to reduce speed limits, cut industrial output and drive only vehicles with pollution-control devices, while scientists measured the impact on air pollution.

The experiment tested the strength of two opposing strains in German public opinion — high environmental consciousness versus freedom to use automobiles.

But the change also brought adverse effects.

Merchants said business declined up to 70 percent. Many customers stayed home rather than navigate the car-monitoring checkpoints — or because their cars didn't have catalytic converters.

And officials were unsure why peak ozone readings soared to 180 milligrams per cubic meter of air Friday, well above the 120 milligrams at which health can be affected.

Ozone, the chief ingredient in smog, is a form of oxygen produced when sunlight acts on pollutants from cars and industry. It irritates lungs and can make breathing difficult on hot and humid days, especially for older people and children.

Bicycles were everywhere in the experiment's 150-square-mile region, and hiking clubs set out on "Ozone Expeditions." The Market Square in Neckarsulm featured an exhibit on electric cars, concerts and children's art contests on environmental themes.

"This area has some of the worst air pollution in Germany," said Harald Boehringer, a city planner and passionate bicycle advocate.

Aircraft, tethered balloons and ground stations collected pollution data as traffic slowed in the cities. Speed limits on the autobahn, used normally by 80,000 vehicles a day, were halved from the usual 75 mph.

Report: Shelling in Yemen hits school, wounds 15

SAN'A, Yemen (AP) — Northern forces shelled residential neighborhoods in the southern city of Aden on Sunday, hitting a school and wounding 15 women and children, the Kuwait News Agency reported.

The bombardment ended a brief cease-fire declared Saturday night by northern forces. Five previous truces also have been violated within hours.

Artillery fire hit the school near the city's harbor, wounding women and children who sought shelter in the building from shelling in other neighborhoods, the Kuwaiti agency said. Kuwait, like other Gulf Arab states, is seen as a supporter of the secessionist south.

The agency, monitored in Bahrain, said northern shelling has killed hundreds of civilians in their homes, but it did not say over what period the deaths occurred.

War engulfed Yemen on May 4, shattering the 4-year-old union of North and South Yemen. The heaviest shelling of Aden has been concentrated in the past two weeks.

The Kuwaiti agency, which has a correspondent in the beleaguered southern capital, said northern artillery attacks cut off water to the city, heightening the danger that disease might spread.

An unidentified official in Aden told the agency the shelling hit three residential neighborhoods. The official called for international sanctions against the northern San'a government.

Earlier, southern vice president Abd al-Rahman al-Jifri rejected the north's cease-fire declaration as "a new lie."

In an interview with the Kuwaiti agency, he said the north was still ignoring a U.S. State Department appeal Saturday to halt attacks on the refugee-swollen port city of 350,000.

Amid the shelling, the British Broadcasting Corp. monitoring service reported it lost Aden Radio's signal at 6:30 a.m., indicating the southern-controlled station may have been hit.

Also Sunday, Yaseen Saeed N'oman, a top leader in the Socialist Party that dominates the south, called for a bigger role by neighboring Arab countries to stop the fighting.

Speaking during a visit to Abu Dhabi, he warned that the war could spread beyond Yemen's borders.

Ukrainians turn out in force for elections

KIEV, Ukraine (AP) — Ukrainians turned out strongly Sunday for presidential elections that pitted fears of economic disaster against fears of sacrificing the country's independence.

While incumbent Leonid Kravchuk called the election a referendum on Ukraine's independence, his top opponent Leonid Kuchma favored closer ties with Russia as a remedy for the country's economic woes.

Kravchuk and Kuchma, a former prime minister, are expected to emerge at the top of the seven-candidate field and go into a runoff. First results were expected Monday.

After casting his ballot, Kravchuk took a dig at Kuchma, telling state radio that "the main thing is that people should vote for an independent Ukraine."

"People must elect someone whom they believe will safeguard this course. The nation is voting today on our future independence," Kravchuk said.

Only one presidential hopeful campaigned on a platform of radical economic reform: Volodymyr Lanovoy, a former economics minister popular in Kiev. Parliament leader Oleksander Moroz was the only other candidate considered to have a reasonable chance of being one of the top two vote-getters.

Turnout was strong. About 70 percent of Ukraine's 38 million voters cast ballots, the electoral commission said after the polls closed at 8 p.m.

AP Laserphoto

Sergei Pashenko, 28, right, casts his ballot during the Ukranian presidential elections, Sunday, at a special center in Kiev for those who suffered after the Chernobyl disaster.

Kuchma, once the director of the world's largest missile factory, is pushing for close ties with Russia and concessions to Ukraine's sizable Russian minority. Kravchuk says such policies threaten the country's independence and could spark a civil war.

Elected in 1991 on a platform of guiding Ukraine to independence from the Soviet Union, Kravchuk has been on the defensive because of economic turmoil which forced him to bow to pressure for early elections.

Hyperinflation has slowed only recently and the average monthly wage is below $20 — about one-fifth that of neighboring Russia, which has won praise in the West for nearly taming its runaway inflation.

Challengers for the presidency targeted the economic depression as Kravchuk's electoral Achilles' heel. Ukrainian industry relies on raw materials and energy from Russia. Kuchma supporters say those factors make economic union with Russia sensible, even necessary.

Kuchma, who has vowed to make Ukraine a full member of the Russian-dominated Commonwealth of Independent States and to grant wide-ranging regional independence to Russian-speaking regions, is popular in the south.

But he is loathed in nationalist western Ukraine, where residents are suspicious that Kuchma's pro-Russian leanings may be a prelude for Ukraine's absorption into a political federation ruled from Moscow.

"God forbid that anyone would vote for Kuchma. He would turn Ukraine into five Crimeas," said Halyna Katyuzhensko, a collective farm worker in the village of Horanitchi near Kiev, the Ukrainian capital.

A powerful pro-Russia lobby in Crimea took Ukraine to the brink of civil war earlier this year in a push for independence from Kiev.

"It's not that Kravchuk is great — he isn't. But at least with him we do not have a war in Ukraine," said Roman Bagny, a builder in Lviv, the regional capital of western Ukraine.

Kravchuk, a former communist ideology chief, was lauded by Western countries for moving to dismantle Ukraine's huge nuclear arsenal inherited from the Soviet Union.

Some think Haitian military may be on verge of fall despite defiance of imposed sanctions

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (NYT) — Although Haiti's army has outwardly responded with nothing but defiance to international sanctions aimed at driving it from power, Haitians familiar with the military's workings say it now may be close to buckling.

In recent days, a ban on commercial air traffic has halted all but a handful of flights here, and Washington has frozen most financial transactions involving Haitians and U.S. banks. In response, Haitian soldiers have stepped up their urban patrols, built sandbag barricades in downtown streets and acted to sharply restrict the movements of foreign journalists.

But for all of the bluster emanating from Haiti's military leaders, who have refused to bow to foreign pressure to allow the return of the elected president, the Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haitians with long ties to the army describe a pattern of rising dissent within the officer corps.

The first sign came this month when the brother of the country's powerful military police chief, Lt. Col. Joseph Michel Francois, issued a call from the neighboring Dominican Republic, where he lives, urging the army commander, Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, to resign.

The next day, Francois, who is widely thought to have led the coup that toppled Aristide in September 1991, issued an ambiguous statement distancing himself from but not totally repudiating his brother's remarks.

Since then, Haitian businessmen with extensive army contacts say, Francois has been holding private meetings with key officers throughout the military in an effort to force Cedras to step aside to make way for a political settlement. With sanctions squeezing Haiti's leadership and the United States' keeping the option of armed intervention, diplomats say, Francois is eager to strike a deal that would preserve a role for himself in Haiti.

Last week, said the businessmen, whose account was largely confirmed by diplomats, Francois brought together nine army commanders.

Old warrior Dole's first in 1996 race

Guess who's talking about running for the Republican presidential nomination in 1996? Bob Dole. Dole has come in for plenty of criticism here for sabotaging President Clinton's economic stimulus package and for his purblind opposition to campaign finance reform. Still, the Kansas senator is a serious public servant and a warrior. We welcome his interest.

To which we add this thought: Let the Republican games begin. If nothing else, Dole's decision to hire political strategists and start raising money should awaken his party and force other potential candidates to show their hands. Moreover, it might concentrate the attention of the White House on the fact that Clinton does not look exactly like a lock for re-election.

Dole is a maddening figure. Few people possess his energy, mordant humor, legislative skills, command of complex issues and gifts for political deal-making. Conversely, few share his talent for self-destruction, traceable mainly to a bad temper and a reflexive instinct for the jugular.

His campaigns for the nomination in 1980 and 1988 were essentially one-man shows, poorly organized. As Gerald Ford's running mate in 1976, he managed to blame the Democrats for all of America's 20th-century war casualties. Many people still attribute Ford's narrow loss to Dole's strident behavior.

Even his fellow Republicans find him abrasive. In 1971, Sen. William Saxbe of Ohio described Dole as a "hatchetman who couldn't sell beer on a troop ship." One suspects, however, that their distemper is also related to Dole's ideological unpredictability. Make no mistake: he is a partisan Republican and a mainstream conservative on issues like spending and defense. Still, despite a generalized hostility to costly programs, he has shown flashes of compassion for society's outcasts.

He has regularly supported increases in food stamps and child nutrition, for instance, and he worked hard for passage of the Americans With Disabilities Act. "I don't see too many people in wheelchairs showing up at our meetings," he once told his Republican colleagues. He can also claim substantial credit for saving the Social Security system from bankruptcy in the mid-1980s.

Dole won two Bronze Stars and permanently lost the use of his right arm during a firefight in World War II. He is one of the few remaining politicians from a Depression-era generation that produced the Mondales, the Humphreys, the Carters, the Nixons and the Reagans of this world.

Dole will be 71 next month and would be 73 on Inauguration Day. Too old? "You can be old at 50," Dole says. The younger contenders in his party — Jack Kemp, Phil Gramm and Dan Quayle, to name a few — would be foolish to take him lightly. This is a man who got so mad at his political consultant in 1980 that he sued him.

Clinton's welfare plan may lack substance

Whether the Clinton welfare plan works depends on what it was conceived to do.

If the presidential team devised it to "end welfare as we know it," as he promised two summers back, it may indeed be effective. The Clinton team, after all, is changing the rules of the welfare game, even if marginally.

[illegible] poverty, it may do exactly the opposite. Some critics believe it will leave more families deeper in poverty than they are now.

If the plan is meant to put more people back to work, then it will be successful only if it has the backing of a more vibrant economy with more jobs and a vastly improved educational system to train people for them. It's clear the Clinton plan can't do that in a vacuum. . . .

Altogether the plan is a neat piece of work designed to appeal to both conservatives (by limiting government's obligations to the chronically poor) and liberals (by giving poor Americans a hand up and out of poverty through gainful employment).

But it's based on three shaky assumptions:

- That all jobs pay enough to support a family;
- That the government can conjure up enough jobs to offer the millions of families now existing on welfare; and
- That all welfare recipients have the skills to qualify for, and keep, even menial jobs.

None of these assumptions is valid. . . .

President Clinton's yardstick for success is "ending welfare as we know it." That's vague enough to be politically useful. But it is hardly the systemic remedy that the nation needs for fundamental change.

Kerry to reveal TX-size S&L 'whitewash'

WASHINGTON — As Senate Republicans prepare to dive off the high-board into the scandals surrounding Whitewater and Madison Savings and Loan, one Democrat will make a splash this week with the release of information revealing a real Texas-size savings and loan "whitewash."

Anderson

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., will call it the "forgotten fifty": Among the 50 biggest savings and loan busts in Texas, taxpayer losses exceed $11.7 billion — or the combined 1992 earnings of 19 of the 30 highest rated companies on the Dow Jones industrial average. Yet the Resolution Trust Corp., which was created to help recoup taxpayer losses, will net only a nickel for every lost dollar.

"Whether it's a whitewash or neglect or stupidity, I don't have an answer," says Kerry, a bulldog investigator and member of the Senate Banking Committee. "People within RTC are absolutely flabbergasted by the lack of collection effort and subpoenas issued."

The paltry return can be traced to poor police work. The RTC issued a total of 27 subpoenas over a five-year period investigating the "forgotten fifty" — or less than one-fifth the number of subpoenas Whitewater Special Prosecutor Robert Fiske issued in just four months in connection with Madison Savings and Loan. Madison's losses, however, amount to less than one half of 1 percent of these 50 Texas thrifts.

"The scandal regarding the RTC's handling of cases in Texas is far worse than anything we have heard concerning Whitewater," says Kerry. "The problem developed in the Bush administration, but the Clinton administration has done far too little to change the direction of the problem."

Later this week Kerry is planning a major Senate floor speech in which he will charge that as of March 15, 1994, the RTC had recovered only $42,000 from the S&L insiders "who ran these 50 Texas savings and loans into the ground." Kerry calculates that amounts to about 30 minutes worth of interest on the taxpayer cost of financing these bail-outs over the next few decades.

Kerry plans to cite Gill Savings and Loan as a prime example. Gill was a high-flying Texas institution before it went belly-up at a cost to taxpayers of $1.4 billion. It is the 10th biggest S&L failure in the United States and the taxpayer bailout approaches the annual budget of the entire Federal Bureau of Investigation.

By comparison, Madison Savings was an Arkansas institution whose failure cost the American taxpayers $60 million. Madison's losses equal only about 4.2 percent of Gill's. Given the gap between Gill and Madison, it's hard to explain how 160 subpoenas could have been issued by Fiske in his probe of Madison, while not one single subpoena has been issued against any director or insider associated with Gill's collapse.

Since the RTC has been unresponsive to his queries, Kerry has cultivated a network of agency whistleblowers to fill in the blanks.

RTC whistleblowers slipped Kerry some additional information that Kerry believes makes the situation look "even more sinister." They told Kerry that documents advocating the leveling of a lawsuit in the Gill case were lost by the RTC's Washington staff and have not resurfaced. Since the RTC has refused to hand over the necessary documents, Kerry said it is difficult to assess the validity of these allegations.

Thoughts of winter hunt help beat the heat

One of my favorite hot weather pastimes is to think about hunting. Hunting is a cool weather sport where I live, a cold weather sport in the higher latitudes, so when the temperature and humidity are 95 and 98, truly, I think about hunting and I feel cooler.

Reese

Non-hunters have ridiculous ideas about hunting. They imagine hunters drive into the woods, stagger out of trucks with a beer in one hand and machine gun in the other and began to slaughter deer. Little do these city folk know that white-tailed deer, as a group, are the biggest customers of the Day Runner Corp. in the country.

Honest, all white-tailed deer keep calendars with meticulous notes about the dates of the hunting season, bag limits, any new rules and past histories of hunters who frequent their area.

If you're not a hunter, you probably don't believe that, but it's true. Some of the deer may have even graduated to portable computers by now, with electronic calendars and relational databases. They consult with each other and compare notes:

".30-30 Marlin guy with no scope. Going gray. Little thicker around the middle than in '93. Has trouble getting up early for morning hunt. Cheap tent. Snores like a chain saw. Usually lasts no more than one hour on the stand before he lights up a smoke. Gets distracted watching birds, armadillos and clouds. No sweat on this one."

I can't show you a copy of a deer's Day Runner, and it's illogical for you to expect that. Use your head like Sherlock Holmes. If I can't find the deer, then I can't find their calendars, right?

There is not a deer in America, unless it's old and senile, that cannot tell you to the hour and minute the start and finish of hunting season. Apparently they employ birds to spy on game commission meetings and sessions of the legislatures. Bet you didn't know that birds are an intelligence agency for the other animals. They are. No kidding.

A squirrel told me about the Day Runners. I was sitting in a stand one morning and I heard this "Psst. Hey, you." I turned around and this grey squirrel person was looking at me from the side of a pine tree.

"Time waste. Bucks gone," the little fellow said. Squirrels, by the way, talk fast and leave out a lot of words. "Saw them check Day Runners yesterday. Said goodbye. Back nine weeks."

I thanked the squirrel person and shifted into a more comfortable position and lit up. I hate skinning and butchering deer anyway. It's another thing you city folks don't understand. The fun is all in the process and the ritual, not in the shooting. I hunt with the same bullets every season.

And speaking of what city folks don't know, most of them think that deer ticks, which transmit Lyme disease, are just an accident of nature, but they are not. They are trained attack ticks, and when white-tailed deer get annoyed by you, they will sic these ticks on you.

Oh, you may not see the deer, but if it's annoyed by you it will silently stalk you all day, and when you go to sleep at night, the deer will order these ticks to crawl in your tent and bite you. Then you will come down with Lyme disease and your doctor will buy another condo in the Caribbean.

Deer in the deep woods are annoyed by — among others — ckpackers who wear foreign-made boots and bird watchers who use Japanese or Chinese binoculars. White-tailed and mule deer are pretty patriotic. Suburban deer hate people who slosh pesticides and herbicides on their lawns and gardens. In fact, it was because of them that deer started training these attack ticks. Take it from a real woodsman. Outdoors ain't Walt Disney World.

MIKE ROYKO

Is Simpson 'brutal, nightmarish murderer?'

There is only one issue that interests me in the O.J. Simpson case: Is he or is he not a brutal, nightmarish murderer?

Everything else, as far as I'm concerned, is a lot of silly babble.

Some examples:

We keep hearing [illegible] the "fall" an American hero."

Hero?

Royko

This is what I know about O.J. Simpson as a public person.

He was very good at running, especially clutching a football while being chased by 11 other football players.

He was paid handsomely for running with a football because at both the college and professional level the ability to run with a football is a form of entertainment that sells tickets and increases TV viewership.

But running well with a football for money, while an act of exceptional athletic ability, is not an act of heroism.

We recently observed the 50th anniversary of the D-Day landing in Europe. Many of the men who ran, crawled or died on those beaches were heroes. But most of the incredible boobs who stood along that L.A. freeway and cheered Simpson's mock getaway could not name one true hero.

Simpson also performed in movies, TV commercials and as a sports commentator. I can't think of anything heroic about any of these endeavors.

I've never been in a movie, but I've made several TV commercials. All you have to do is memorize your lines and do what the director says. If you do it [illegible], you reduce the cost of production. That might make you a hero to the dollar-conscious producer, but no one else.

So can we agree to drop the word "hero" in connection with Simpson? A celebrity, yes. A household name, a familiar face, a media creature, a former exceptional athlete, sure. But I've known true heroes — military and civilian — and few of them had big-time talent agents.

Then there is the question of "media overkill," which was being debated almost immediately by the very same networks that put camera crews outside of Simpson's home and sent helicopters up to track his fake suicide scare.

There was no media overkill.

Simpson is the most famous American to be accused of murder since Aaron Burr, the vice president of the United States, killed Alexander Hamilton, his political rival, in a pistol duel in 1804.

Burr beat the rap. But in those days, duels of honor were still widely condoned. Had Burr put on a ski mask and gloves and hacked Hamilton to death with a long knife, he might have been strung up.

Other killers became famous after the crime. A few were already locally known when accused. But never in our history has any accused fiend been as recognizable as Simpson before the crime.

So there has been no media overkill. Simpson is a public figure. When you live by the TV image, you run the risk of dying by the TV image.

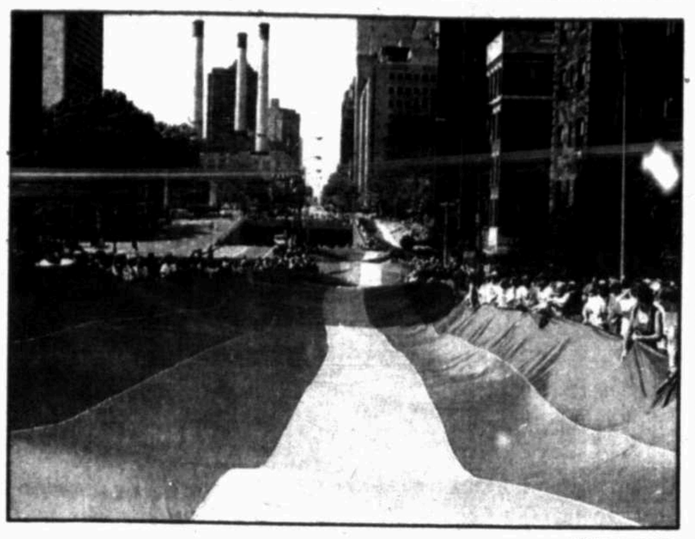

[illegible] Chicago Tribune, The New York Times and other respectable publications almost tippy-toed around the story in its opening days.

TV and radio talk shows? Sure, they wallowed in the story the moment Simpson became the prime suspect. But that's because the TV and radio audience salivates over the latest gore and grime. Don't blame the media. Blame your own insatiable appetite for the bizarre behavior of others. Nobody puts a gun to the heads of the millions of Americans who sit slack-jawed while catching their daily dose of weirdos on all the daily tell-all freako shows.

Finally, we have the argument that Simpson cannot get a fair trial because of all the media coverage; that out of the millions of people in L.A. County, there cannot be found a dozen individuals who will judge the evidence fairly.

If anything, Simpson will benefit from all the pretrial publicity. If he was an obscure accountant or shoe repairman accused of so grotesque a crime, his lawyers would already be trying to cut a plea-bargain deal.

A mile-long rainbow banner is carried past the United Nations secretariat building (second from left), Sunday, during a march to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the Stonewall riots.

Gay parade commemorates Stonewall riots' anniversary

NEW YORK (AP) — Unfurling a mile-long rainbow banner proclaiming their gay pride, tens of thousands of people marched Sunday in a peaceful tribute to the bar riot that ignited the gay rights movement 25 years ago.

They marched arm in arm, hand in hand, out and proud under a bright, sunny sky.

"It's amazing that in 25 years we've come so far, from when you couldn't get out of a gay bar to where you fill the streets proudly," said Jerry Clifford, who helped carry the giant nylon banner along what he called "a continuous path of freedom."

The parade, dubbed Stonewall 25, commemorated the fight with police at the Stonewall Inn in Greenwich Village that launched the gay liberation movement.

The parade ended at Central Park, where the crowd shared a minute of silence for AIDS victims, followed by a scream of rage.

Police Chief John Timoney called it "the busiest day in the Police Department's history," with thousands of extra officers called out for crowd and traffic.

Crowd estimates varied. Organizers said 1.1 million people, including spectators, attended the march and rally. City Hall estimated 150,000, while police said the total was closer to 110,000.

Marchers ranged from the city's Republican mayor, Rudolph Giuliani, to Annalife Mannix-Blackner, a lesbian mother from Key West, Fla., who came with her lover and their 7-month-old son.

Although the 25th anniversary was billed as a celebration of gay unity, it also illustrated divisions in the movement.

Most of the marchers headed up First Avenue past the United Nations toward the Central Park rally to protest gay-rights abuses around the world.

A smaller contingent focusing on the fight against AIDS started at Stonewall and marched up Fifth Avenue. They had no city permit, but police closed off Fifth Avenue to traffic and didn't interfere with the march.

The unsanctioned march was organized primarily by ACT UP, an AIDS protest group that prides itself on rebellious tactics. When it reached St. Patrick's Cathedral, some marchers shouted "Shame!" Others made obscene gestures or lay down in remembrance of AIDS victims.

The Fifth Avenue march was led by Sylvia Rivera, a transvestite who fought police at Stonewall. Rivera who had dropped out of sight in recent months and was feared dead.

"I'm here to see that we still have the guts to take Fifth Avenue," said Rivera.

Sentencing provision could delay passage of crime bill until August

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The anti-crime bill that President Clinton and Congress have been touting has snagged because of disagreement about a crucial provision, making compromise difficult and delay until August certain.

The provision, which amounts to five pages in 1,463 pages of anti-crime legislation, is called the racial justice act. It would allow death-row inmates to cite statistical trends, not just the facts in their own cases, to support the contention that they had been the victims of racial bias in sentencing.

The act was included in the House crime bill but was not considered by the Senate when it passed its own measure last year. Negotiators for both chambers are now in conference, trying to reconcile the different versions. In an election year when Americans say crime is their greatest concern, members of Congress are eager to produce a final bill.

Congressional leaders had initially predicted that a bill would be on the president's desk by Memorial Day, but that came and went without much action. The next deadline was the July 4 recess, which begins on Friday, but negotiators say they are still too far apart. The next target date is by the next [illegible] which begins in mid-August.

"This is not unexpected," said Rep. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y.,, who has shepherded most of the legislation through the House. "Since crime bills get to people's deepest values and concepts, there is always a lot of Sturm und Drang." He said that because support for the overall bill was so broad-based, he doubted that in the end any small group could hold it up.

The houses are largely in agreement that the sweeping $30-billion package would provide money for 100,000 additional police officers on the streets as well as the prison construction that the Republicans want and the prevention programs that the Democrats want, although the precise allocation of money remains in some dispute.

The racial justice act is strongly supported by members of the Black Congressional Caucus and various liberals. But it is opposed by many Republicans, especially in the Senate, where some members have threatened a filibuster if it is included in the final bill. Several Democrats, including such influential senators as Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, also oppose the measure.

A top Senate staff member said on Sunday that the president was prepared to step in and start calling those opposed to the provision to try to persuade them that the overall package was so good that it was not worth holding it up over a single provision.

But a White House official said Clinton was not ready yet to intervene. "We're not there yet," the official said. The president has yet to make clear how strongly he supports the provision and whether he would insist that the final crime bill contain some version of it.

In St. Louis on Friday, he told reporters that he had not taken a position on the provision. "Let's wait and see what the conference committee does," Clinton said. "They asked me to give them a few more days to work on it." He nonetheless expressed frustration that Congress hadn't sent him a crime bill yet, saying that as Congress has dallied, "too many children are dead."

Aristide opposes U.S. policy on boat people

■ Administration's efforts to discourage Haitians from fleeing causes strains in relationship with deposed president.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Clinton administration efforts to discourage Haitians from trying to flee the country by boat are encountering stiff resistance from deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, causing strains between the two camps.

U.S. officials are worried that a mass exodus of Haitians could overwhelm facilities the administration has set up on a ship docked off Jamaica where fleeing Haitians can make their claim for political asylum.

But Aristide opposes any effort to dissuade Haitians from leaving. He also opposes the U.S. policy of repatriating Haitians who do not qualify for refugee status.

"We cannot send them back to Haiti because it is a house on fire," Aristide told a gathering here Thursday night, alluding to reports of widespread repression by the Haitian military.

Since U.S. officials began processing Haitians at a U.S. Navy hospital ship docked off Kingston over a week ago, 194 have been interviewed and 52 asylum claims have been approved, a rate of almost 30 percent. Most of those whose claims were denied have been repatriated.

On a related issue, an Aristide aide, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, accused officials of the State and Defense departments Friday of trying to sabotage an agreement under which the Pentagon would beam messages from specially outfitted aircraft to Haiti's military and its citizens.

The messages from the so-called "radio station in the sky" would be aimed at laying the groundwork for Aristide's return to Haiti and at provoking opposition to the military-led regime.

The Pentagon wanted the messages to include an appeal to Haitians not to flee the country. Aristide objected and received assurances from senior administration officials that his wishes would be respected.

But several news accounts last week quoted U.S. officials as saying that Aristide had lost the argument. Aristide responded to the news stories by issuing an angry statement last week blasting U.S. policy toward boat migrants as a "cynical joke."

An Aristide aide, speaking on the condition of anonymity, on Friday said it is "not clear whether the White House has sufficient control over the government to be able to go forward with this program because there are a number of people in the Pentagon and the State Department who appear to be trying to torpedo it."

The New York Times reported in Friday's editions that the United States will disseminate its stay-at-home messages to Haitians with paid advertisements on Haitian radio. That option was described as the administration's fallback position since use of the airborne broadcasts was vetoed.

Simpson won't plead insanity, has alibi, lawyer says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — O.J. Simpson will not plead insanity to charges he murdered his ex-wife and her friend, and has an alibi for the night they were stabbed to death, his lawyer said Sunday.

F. Lee Bailey, who recently joined Simpson's high-powered defense team, also said prosecutors are pinning much of their case on the results of DNA tests from blood samples. The tests could either help clear Simpson or link him to the slayings.

"If the DNA comes back and is not a match then the police had better get busy opening the investigation they may have prematurely closed," Bailey said on CNN's "Late Edition."

Simpson has been charged with murder in the June 12 slayings of Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman. He has pleaded innocent. His lawyers have said Simpson was at home when the two were killed outside Ms. Simpson's home.

Meanwhile, a coroner's report obtained Sunday said Ms. Simpson, 35, was found lying in a fetal position wearing a black dress and no shoes when her body was discovered. Goldman, 25, was dressed in blue jeans and a light-colored cotton sweater. Both had been stabbed and slashed repeatedly.

Alan Dershowitz, another famed lawyer who has signed on to defend Simpson, said before joining the legal team that Simpson's likely defense would be insanity. But Bailey said Simpson will not plead he was insane.

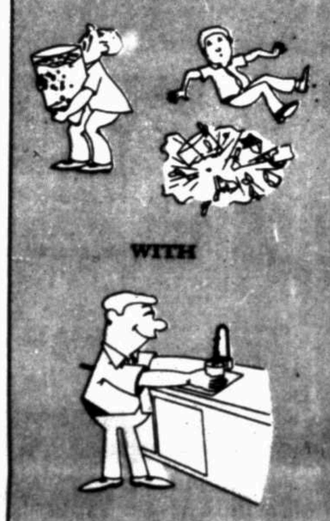

"He got sucked in ... that all the evidence that the DA leaked and you people published was true," Bailey said of Dershowitz on the CBS news program "Face The Nation." "He is outraged to now find out that it is now admitted that it doesn't exist."

Bailey also criticized the release of 911 tapes from October 1993 on which a sobbing Ms. Simpson pleaded for help from police after Simpson broke into her house. He said Simpson would have trouble getting a fair trial.

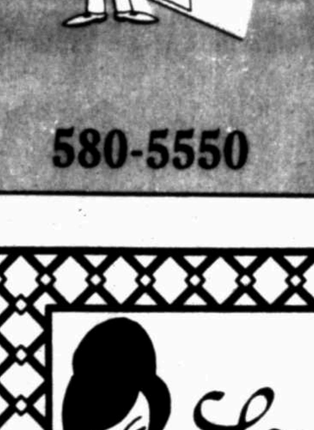

Police and prosecutors blamed each other for the tapes' release Wednesday. Police say Deputy District Attorney David Conn authorized the release, but prosecutors say police never mentioned the tapes in a discussion about a media request for the information.

The release prompted a judge two days later to end a grand jury investigation of Simpson amid complaints that jurors had seen the relentless news coverage.

Integration of women on Navy warships works well, Perry says

■ Defense secretary says program on one of largest combat ships will be used as model for others.

Associated Press

ON BOARD THE USS DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER — The integration of women on one of the Navy's largest warships is working so well it will be a model for putting women on nearly all combat ships, Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday.

"It's past the experiment stage. It's working and it's working well," Perry said after spending the night on this nuclear-powered behemoth, the nation's first combat ship to have women assigned full-time to its crew.

There are about 100 women on the Norfolk, Va.-based aircraft carrier, with 500 scheduled to join before it begins a six-month deployment in the Mideast in October.

The women will include combat jet pilots, cooks, bomb handlers and military police, ranging in age from late teens to mid-30s.

The ship — a floating airport with a 6,000-person crew — was conducting training exercises off the coast of Puerto Rico in preparation for its mission when it hosted Perry.

"I commend each of you for your maturity, your competence, and your can-do attitude in tackling this truly historic first," Perry told 2,000 assembled officers, sailors and Marines in the ship's hangar bay. "You have set high standards for all of those who follow you."

During several hours of briefings with crew members, Perry said, he'd "seen no evidence of any problem that can't be ironed out."

Perry said the ship has successfully built separate quarters for men and women, but a problem still exists with putting women on submarines, given their limited space.

"But there's no reason why it can't be done, and indeed it will be done, on board all the other surface ships of the Navy," Perry said.

Seven more combat ships are to take on female crew members this year. Women already serve on more than 60 non-combat ships.

Capt. Mark Gemill, the ship's soft-spoken, 6-foot-2 commander, said he dislikes the term 'experiment" regarding female crew members.

"The Navy doesn't need experiments with women at sea. We know how to do it and we know how to handle the issues," he said, noting that women have served on non-combat ships since 1978.

Gemill captained a supply ship, with women on its crew, that sailed to the Persian Gulf twice during the war against Iraq.

Even the most emotionally charged issues, including sexual relations and sex harassment, don't rattle him.

"Sexual activity (among crew members) is not helpful for good order and discipline. ... That doesn't mean people can't be friends. ... Some intensely emotional relations will develop. Is that bad? I don't think so, but there may be a boundary where it might be bad for good order and discipline. And we do have good common sense," the captain said.

Pregnancies have been no more of a problem than people who leave work with broken arms, he said.

The process is working, he said, because women are being brought on board as jobs open up, and men aren't being pushed off to make room for them.

Another help is that the crew worked more than a year on a wide-ranging plan that devised training to help deal with the deployment of women.

Yet such a revolution still has its uncertain moments, particularly in light of the Navy's searing experience with the Tailhook sex abuse scandal and many male service members' uncertainty about how to act around women in their once-sacrosanct workplaces.

Machinist mate Anthony Hall said the integration has caused little commotion, except that some ship areas are now off-limits to men and the numerous training courses.

"Overkill, I'd say, because it just amounts to common sense — don't look down on people, treat them well, and you're OK," Hall said.

Wildfires damage over 6,000 acres in S. California

Associated Press

Fire crews battled fatigue and 100-degree temperatures Sunday as they fought wildfires that charred more than 6,000 acres of Southern California brush and timber, and destroyed 10 homes.

A 2,000-acre fire burning out of control in the San Bernardino and Angeles national forests moved to within one mile of Wrightwood, a community of 3,200 about 60 miles east of Los Angeles.

Southwesterly winds kept flames away, but the fires forced the evacuation of about 80 rural homes in the area, said U.S. Forest Service spokesman Vance Persing.

The fire started Saturday near a Boy Scout camp in San Bernardino County and spread west and north into the Angeles National Forest, destroying 10 homes and 50 automobiles. Damage was estimated at $2 million.

More than 730 firefighters aided by water-dropping helicopters and airplanes dropping retardant battled the blaze Sunday in temperatures as high as 102. By early evening, it was it was 50 percent contained.

"The heat really takes a lot out of them," said Forest Service spokesman Paul Johnson. "They really start to tire after two days on the fire lines."

Saturday's gusty winds turned erratic Sunday, helping fire crews work around the blaze.

"The winds are really squirrely," Persing said. "At times they're calm and at other times they really kick up."

Some residents of the area voluntarily evacuated their homes, taking horses and livestock with them.

A 2,500-acre fire in the Soledad Canyon area of the Angeles National Forest in Los Angeles County also burned out of control Sunday. No structures were threatened.

More than 480 firefighters fought the blaze, and one succumbed to heat exhaustion. The cause was under investigation.

A third blaze charred 1,000 acres south of Anza in Riverside County.

Moderate quake hits San Francisco bay area; no injuries occur

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A moderate earthquake shook sleepers awake, rattled supermarket shelves and broke windows early Sunday in the east San Francisco Bay area.

No injuries were reported, although the quake was felt as far north as the Napa Valley and as far south as San Jose.

"It was a really solid quake, a series of jolts," said Mark Towns, a manager at a 24-hour Lucky's supermarket in El Cerrito.

"It just rocked the whole building. We had damage to 50 percent of the aisles," he said. "It looked like the floors buckled."

Staff and customers temporarily evacuated the store.

Storefront windows broke at a Berkeley Safeway, and San Jose police reported the shock rocked the third floor of their earthquake-reinforced headquarters.

The quake, which struck along the Hayward Fault at 1:42 a.m., registered at magnitude 4.2, according to Lu Page, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Geological Survey in Menlo Park. It was centered about three miles north of Berkeley.

The quake was preceded by two smaller foreshocks of magnitude 3.2 and 2.3, Page said.

Page described the quake as a "fairly shallow" slippage on the fault. The epicenter was located 3.67 miles underground, she said.

The series of quakes Sunday followed an earlier temblor in the same area two days before.

Rio Vista Equine products, which manufactures shampoo and other products for horses, says 80 percent of its business comes from customers with two legs, not four. The company, founded by Jheri Redding — who also created Nexxus, Jhirmack and other human hair care products — said equine care products became popular with women after several female horse owners used them on their animals and liked the results, then tried it on themselves and began telling friends. It's not just hair care products — Rio Vista Hoof Fix is a big seller with women with nail problems.

Bird-shot

Rolls-Royce, the jet engine maker, says its new engines that will power the Boeing 777 have passed two important tests designed to simulate what's known as a bird strike — the encounter between the engine and a flock of birds during flight. The test determines whether the engine — and ultimately the plane — can survive bird ingestion, a potentially disastrous problem in aviation. During the test, humanely killed birds are shot from a cannon into the engine. The results left Rolls-Royce crowing, so to speak.

One guard even showed him the the elevator, saying, "Right this way, Mr. Duke."

Thanks, I'll stay

Top executives who undertake extensive job hunts are the least likely to find job satisfaction, says a survey by Cornell University and Paul Ray Berndtson, an executive search firm. The survey questioned more than 1,200 senior managers, and found that executives who spend a lot of time looking for new jobs do tend to land new positions, but they often don't find a better job or satisfaction in their work. The survey also found many executives decide in the end to stay put — 74 percent of the lookers remained with their current employers.

Fireworks sales skyrocket

■ The fireworks industry has seen interest rise since the American Bicentennial.

By Vivian Marino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Booming business and skyrocketing sales can best describe — you guessed it — the state of the fireworks industry.

Many of the fireworks exhibitors that enliven the nation's skies with an explosion of sound and color report steady sales gains over the past two decades. Even purveyors of common fireworks say business has been brisk.

The American Pyrotechnics Association estimates industrywide sales — which include everything from 15-cent smoke bombs to slick aerial displays — have more than tripled from 1980 to 1993, from about $75 million to around $250 million.

The amount of fireworks set off each year has doubled, to around 80 million pounds in 1993, the trade group said.

"There's been a real surge in interest ever since the '76 bicentennial celebration," said John Conkling, executive director of the APA. "Before then ... some thought it was not too cool to celebrate the Fourth of July."

This summer, millions of Americans will jam parks and ball fields across the country to "ooh" and "aah" at thousands of fireworks displays. Countless more will attempt a noisy show of their own, legal or otherwise.

Zambelli Internationale Fireworks, among the largest of the handful of family-run companies that dominate the industry, says about a third of its business comes around Independence Day. This year, the company has been commissioned to do 1,300 holiday displays, including programs in Detroit, Pittsburgh, Miami Beach, Fla., and Louisville, Ky. Zambelli also was asked to represent the United States in D-Day celebrations.

Another large exhibitor, Fireworks By Grucci Inc., expects to do nearly half its business around the upcoming holiday weekend, putting on roughly 90 displays in places like Philadelphia, Boston, Omaha, Neb., and Pearl Harbor.

Industry experts say more local governments and businesses are budgeting for fireworks, and many more are organizing public displays beyond July 4.

"I'd say the industry is going to grow even more," said George "Boom Boom" Zambelli Sr., who heads Zambelli Internationale. "There's no form of entertainment that will draw more people than fireworks.

"If you have fireworks in conjunction with a concert or a ball game, it will have greater appeal."

Fireworks shows cost anywhere from $8,000 for a 15-minute, manually fired display to nearly $1 million for a 30-minute electronically fired, musically choreographed extravaganza. The average cost per town runs $17,000, the average show, 20 minutes.

"In the late '60s and early '70s, the budgets were so small. They have not been greatly enhanced, but they are bigger and that has helped (the industry) mature," said Philip Butler, a Grucci spokesman.

Today's fireworks displays have come a long way since the Chinese packed saltpeter, sulfur and charcoal into bamboo tubes 2,000 years ago. Italian explorer Marco Polo discovered them in China and introduced them to the Western world in the 1300s.

China remains the world's largest fireworks exporter, producing nearly half the display fireworks and three-quarters of the street fireworks sold in the United States. Many larger ex-

Nonprofit beneficiary

Q: If a nonprofit organization is the beneficiary of an individual retirement account or a Keogh account, must the organization pay taxes on the proceeds?
— C. Richard Becker, New York, N.Y.

A: When a tax-exempt organization is the beneficiary of an IRA, the distribution is taxable in the same manner as if it had been made to the deceased owner.

But when a tax-exempt organization receives a Keogh account, some portions may not be taxable, depending on several factors, including the participant's nondeductible contributions.

"A nonprofit beneficiary of a Keogh account may be able to use special tax treatments for lump-sum distributions, such as five-year or 10-year averaging and capital gain treatment," said Ronald Noll, head of a Malvern, Pa., accounting firm bearing his name. "And if the distribution is due to the employee's death, the nonprofit organization may be able to treat the payment as a lump-sum distribution, whether or not he or she had five years of participation in the plan."

Medigap abroad

Q: What are the economics of a medigap policy when retiring to a foreign country?
— Anna-Liisa Rintala, New York, N.Y.

A: The purpoqe of a medigap policy, private insurance that supplements Medicare, is to pay costs not covered by the federal Medicare program. Medicare generally does not cover health services outside the United States, the primary exception being when a hospital in Canada or Mexico is more accessible than an American hospital.

"Most medigap plans provide some coverage for people who are out of the country on a temporary basis," said Rebecca Moore of the American Association of Retired Persons. "Medigap plans do not offer coverage for people who are living out of the country permanently."

IRA into fixed annuity

Q: Can I transfer an individual retirement account to a fixed annuity so I will not be required to pay taxes until the money is withdrawn?
— Doris Brown, New York, N.Y.

A: Yes, you can. One of the categories of tax-deferred accounts established by the law creating individual retirement acc/unts is an individual retirement annuity.

But many financial adviqers say you s(ould not switch your IRA into an annuity, because it represents an unnecessary duplication of the tax deferral. Money invested in an IRA grows on a tax-deferred basis, as does money invested in an annuity, explained Avery E. Neumark, a partner of Weber Lipshie & Co., a New York accounting firm. Other types of investments probably make more sense.

"If you wish to roll your account over," Neumark said, "you must do so within 60 days of the distribution from the original plan. And only one such rollover may be made in any one-year period."

Keep a wary eye when new mutual funds debut

■ Investors are cautioned to approach new mutual funds with great care, no matter who is involved.

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In contrast to the dramatic entrances sometimes enjoyed by new issues in the stock market, most new mutual funds make their debuts quietly.

Even the most ambitious stock funds arrive on the scene lacking a key attribute for star status — a performance record.

And since funds' values are determined by the worth of their portfolios, rather than open bidding by buyers and sellers, they can't soar in their first hours of availability the way a hot new stock issue can.

All in all, the standard advice from the experts is to approach new funds with great care, even if the manager is famed as a stock-picking genius.

The annals of the industry are filled with tales of star managers who flopped when they started new funds specifically designed to showcase their talents.

Furthermore, marketers of new funds are most likely to focus on what's hot at any given time. So the risk is high of buying into some investment specialty or strategy at the very moment that it is topping out.

In a study of the performance of hundreds of new funds over the past two decades, investment adviser Sheldon Jacobs found that slightly more than half posted first-year results that were below the average of their class.

"The odds of winning with a new fund are not too good," he concludes in his Handbook for No-Load Fund Investors.

"While some new funds are immediate winners, can you reasonably expect to select those heroes beforehand? Without performance records to analyze, it's a most difficult task."

But with all those caveats, spotting and tracking new stock funds can still be an intriguing venture for active fund investors.

For the sake of illustration, consider the example of the Newcomer Fund, an aggressive stock fund just added to the Hypothetical Group.

Hypothetical is a long-established family that has been poking along lately with only average performance results, and the powers-that-be in its management company badly want a winner to get their name on the quarterly and annual lists of the best-performing funds.

The older funds in the family aren't promising candidates to achieve this mission, if only because of their size.

But the Newcomer Fund is small, highly maneuverable and unencumbered with old losers in its portfolio. So if the analysts in the Hypothetical research department can come up with, say, one or two really good ideas a month, why not focus their efforts on getting Newcomer off to a good start?

In addition, Hypothetical's extensive trading on behalf of its whole family entitles it to a moderate-sized allotment of stock from each hot new issue that comes along.

If the shares of these new issues are parceled to all of Hypothetical's stock funds, the impact on the bigger funds' performance will be so small that nobody will ever notice it. But if the whole allotment is steered each time into Newcomer's account, it can help the baby fund take some big steps toward success.

'While some new funds are immediate winners, can you reasonably expect to select those heroes beforehand? Without performance records to analyze, it's a most difficult task.'

Sheldon Jacobs,
Investment advisor

While you won't find many people in the fund business admitting to doing this themselves, few dispute that it happens in places. It's the sort of thing that regulators are seeking to cover better as they modernize the rules to keep pace with the fund industry's explosive growth.

In the meantime, trying to cash in on any new fund's presumably favored status is still a high-risk undertaking. If a few new issues that are force-fed to the Newcomer Fund should happen to do badly, the results could be quite painful.

But even conservative investors who would never take a flyer on a fund like this might still pay heed. Perhaps a year or two from now they will be looking at the Newcomer Fund, attracted by its imposing early performance record.

Then they can pause to consider whether the fund has been nurtured in a hothouse environment that won't exist for it in future years.

Portfolios sometimes need second opinions

N.Y. Times News Service

A second opinion on an investment portfolio can accomplish as much as a second opinion on medical care, providing peace of mind and increasing the chance any flaws will be detected.

Many of the concerns are the same, too. Like a quack doctor, the new adviser could tell an investor what he wants to hear just to win a client and could argue for overnight changes that are ill-advised.

Even if sound recommendations are made, tax liabilities and sales commissions may argue against an immediate about-face in investing strategy. The job then is to find a reliable professional and to avoid hasty actions.

Asking an investment adviser for a portfolio review is not an unusual request. "It happens all the time," said Neal Solomon, a financial planner in Gloversville, N.Y.

Sometimes, people merely want a stamp of approval on a portfolio. But usually, there's an underlying reason for a review. The investor may have reason to doubt his current adviser or strategy, his personal assets may have changed radically or he may be taking over a relative's assets.

J/hn Peck, a computer consultant in the Albany, N.Y., area, said after spending 15 years with one broker, he just wanted "someone else with a fresh outlook."

When an adviser reviews a portfolio and recommends changes, the investor needs to consider how extensive they are. If the existing long-term strategy is sound, it is often better to make changes gradually, said Gideon Rothschild, a lawyer and certified financial planner in Manhattan.

That's because liquidating investments may lead to taxable gains, while buying and selling instruments may run up sales charges.

Moreover, the investor needs to be comfortable with the new adviser. "Even if it all sounds great financially," said Eric Kobren, president of Insight Management of Wellesley, Mass., "it's going to be wrong if it doesn't feel right for you."

The most objective person for a review is clearly a fee-based financial adviser who charges by the hour, rather than someone who will make money only if investments are bought and sold.

Stockbrokers often do a review for free in the hope of winning a new customer — and they may come up with intriguing suggestions — but they have good reason to encourage changes.

A financial adviser can look over a portfolio in a couple of hours to see if the investor's main objectives or needs are being addressed, Solomon said. A more in-depth analysis, evaluating each mutual fund or security, will require far more research. Expect to pay about $100 an hour to an adviser who works for a fee.

The analysis should weigh performance against industry averages, not expectations or promises.

"If the market went up 4 percent last year and you had a 5 percent return, that's okay," Rothschild said. "But if you're consistently falling below market averages, that is cause for concern."

A checkup is valid only if an investor has been with an adviser for 3 to 5 years, the professionals said. One or two years of underperformance may merely reflect normal fluctuations in the marketplace.

Finally, a review provides an opportunity to reassess financial needs, which may have changed markedly over the years.

"Perhaps you were left in a mutual fund generating fast growth," said Bob Klosterman, president of R.J. Klosterman & Co., a financial planning firm in Minneapolis, "7hen what you really need right now are more cash dividends."

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Regulators discourage private sales of stock

By Bill Doyle

Q: I own a bit more than 1,000 shares of stock in a rather well-known company, of which I would like to sell about half. I prefer not to use a broker, though. My brother is interested in 100 shares, but that still leaves 400 to sell.

Doyle

I plan on charging the share price that is in the newspaper on the day of the sale. Am I permitted to advertise in the classified section of the paper to sell the 400 shares, or is only word of mouth allowed?

A: You could get in trouble doing it either way, if some broker blows the whistle and accuses you of making a "distribution" of the 400 shares.

By advertising, you would be on record as offering the shares for sale to all comers. That's a no-no, unless you are a licensed securities broker.

It stands to reason that you will have a better chance of avoiding problems with federal and state securities regulators by not advertising and not drawing attention to your sale.

Even then, you could face regulators' wrath, if an accusation of distributing the shares holds up. You are between the proverbial "rock and the hard place."

The fastest and easiest way out of your dilemma would be to sell through a brokerage firm. If you are concerned about commission charges, phone a number of brokerages and ask about their charges. Place your sell order with the lowest-cost firm.

Q: My husband and I were recently told by our lawyer that all our stocks should be in both our names in order to avoid probate when one of us dies.

How should the new ownership registration read? Should there be an "and" or an "or" between our names? And should the registration read "joint tenants with right of survivorship"?

A: For joint ownership, the word "and" should appear between the two names. That means you two are equal owners of the stock. Both of you must sign in order to sell. Also, when one of you leaves this vale of tears, the surviving joint owner becomes the sole owner.

The joint-ownership form of registration of securities and other assets works great in the vast majority of family situations. But there are cases in which it is better to register stock in individual ownership.

Q: You say to send stock certificates by registered mail, insured for 4 percent of market value. That is affirmed by stock transfer agents. But the U.S. Postal Service will not comply. PS Form 3806, enclosed, states the customer must declare full value of the insured certificates.

That form also clearly states that insurance is limited to $25,000. If, in settling an estate, an executor needs to mail certificates with market values of hundreds of thousands of dollars, he is in a Catch 22 situation.

Having faced this problem several times in the past months, I am confused as to the best way to transfer securities worth large sums.

What would you do in such a situation?

A: Exactly what was recommended in the previous column.

By insuring that piece of registered mail for 4 percent of the market value of the stock certificates in the envelope, you know you will have the money to pay for the surety bond you would need to purchase to get a replacement certificate on the off chance yours is lost in the mails.

You're not insuring the shares of stock represented by the certificate you put in the mail. You're insuring against the loss of a piece of paper.

ROCKET: Fireworks become more dazzling

(From 1B)

hibitors, though, still produce some of their own. (Fireworks manufacturing in this country dates back to before the Revolutionary War, when gunpowder was packed in rockets and firecracker-type devices.)

While the principle remains the same, technological advances have made fireworks displays faster-paced and more brilliant, often punctuated with musical accompaniments and dazzling grand finales.

"This reflects society," Conkling said. "We were a slower-paced nation 30 years ago (and) ... displays used to last more than an hour then.

"Today, we're competing with MTV and rock videos. Attention spans are shorter. You try to keep fireworks up to date with the rest of the entertainment industry."

Nearly all the biggest displays are shot electronically, as opposed to manually, and some shows are choreographed with the help of a computer.

Grucci, for instance, has developed a software program that coordinates music and fireworks. "The computer tells when it's time to be fired," Butler said.

More technological advances are expected. At the APA's annual meeting last fall, Walt Disney Imagineering dazzled some in the industry by presenting its own innovation — an air-powered, multi-barreled, computer-controlled and chip-activated firing system.

Smoking out the facts on fireworks

Associated Press

Some fireworks facts:

HOW THEY WORK:

The basic ingredient in fireworks is old-fashioned gunpowder. The black powder, as it's known, is what lifts a rocket shell into the air. The loud "boom" comes from flash powder.

Visual effects occur when certain chemicals are burned. Strontium salts, for instance, produce a red-colored light, copper oxide creates blue, barium nitrate gives off green and charcoal or iron radiate orange.

Chemical powders are compressed into small pellets called "stars," each of which leaves a trail of color upon explosion. A typical shell can have several hundred stars.

The design seen in the sky depends largely on the shape of the shell. Oriental shells are round, limited to one color and one explosion, or break. Italian shells are a cylinder shape, often with several breaks and colors.

WHERE THEY COME FROM:

The Chinese invented fireworks about 2,000 years ago and continue to dominate the world market.

China produces about 75 percent of the consumer fireworks used in the United States.

WHO REGULATES THEM:

Several government agencies regulate fireworks, among them the Department of Transportation, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Consumer Product Safety Commission, and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

Some fireworks like cherry bombs and M-80s are banned by the federal government. Several states prohibit all types of street fireworks, such as firecrackers, Roman candles, skyrockets, revolving wheels, cylindrical fountains and sparklers.

Family blames voodoo man for gouging of woman's eyes

DALLAS (AP) — The father of a woman whose eyes were allegedly gouged out by her sisters says he regrets bringing his children to a "voodoo man" who made the women believe they were under satanic attack.

"I should have gone to Jesus Christ instead," said Chester Crawford.

Crawford's daughters, Doretha Crawford, 34, and Beverly Johnson, 35, have been charged with blinding their sister, Myra Obasi, 30.

Ms. Obasi's relatives, friends and pastor say only a supernatural voodoo can explain the act.

"What happened that day in Dallas is totally beyond understanding," said the Rev. Norah Banks Jr. of Pilgrim's Rest Baptist Church in the women's hometown of Arcadia, La. "It is the work of Satan."

The family points to a "voodoo man" named Benny, while a Dallas prosecutor says witnesses' "fear of voodoo" is interfering with his investigation.

Although Ms. Obasi has asked that her sisters not be prosecuted, Dallas Assistant District Attorney George West said no decision has been made about whether to proceed to trial.

The sisters are accused of beating Ms. Obasi with their fists, then gouging out her eyes with their fingers during a prayer session March 18 at a church-home in south Dallas.

"We are confident in our position that my clients will be vindicated when the full facts are disclosed to a jury," said Lela Washington, the women's lawyer.

The sisters could not be reached for comment by The Associated Press.

Crawford says his daughters' bizarre story began when he suggested that Ms. Johnson, suffering from headaches, visit a man named Benny, described by Arcadians as a "voodoo" or "hoodoo" man.

Benny told them the cause of the Crawfords' problems was a demonic attack. He even described the attackers, the Rev. Banks said.

Frightened, the Crawfords contacted the Arcadia police, who reported increasing patrols near the house but say they saw nothing unusual.

After the family awoke to reportedly find "BLOOD ROOM" traced into the morning dew on a car, the three sisters fled with their five children.

"They believed and trusted their dad," Letricia Paul, the sisters' childhood friend, was quoted as saying in Sunday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

As Ms. Obasi neared Dallas, she began driving crazily, seemingly trying to steer in front of huge trucks, speeding along the edge of the road and threatening to drive off of bridges. Her sisters told friends they grappled with her and the steering wheel, pummeled her and prompted a visible demon to emerge.

By the time they calmed Ms. Obasi and the car had stopped, they were in Waxahachie and were spotted by police.

"There was some kind of demonic person that was the reason they had left Louisiana," Waxahachie police Chief Allwin Barrow said. "They felt he had put a curse on the car and that's why it quit."

Police said the women then hitchhiked into south Dallas.

The sisters wandered into a neighborhood, asking strangers to pray with them, according to residents in the neighborhood. After several hours, the sisters were directed to the church-home of Mattye Bradfield.

Ms. Paul said she was told Ms. Obasi began speaking in other voices.

Shortly thereafter, Ms. Obasi was blinded.

Defense cross-examines Koslow's boyfriend

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — The defense in the capital murder trial of Kristi Koslow portrayed the teen-ager's boyfriend as a liar Sunday and implied that his testimony was influenced by a plea bargain agreement.

Brian Salter, under contentious cross-examination, admitted lying on several occasions, but it was not always clear to whom he was untruthful.

"How can you tell which is true and which is not true?" Miss Koslow's attorney, Tim Evans, demanded at one point as Salter fielded questions about conflicting statements he gave authorities.

Salter, 22, a co-conspirator in the case, was the final witness in an extended week of testimony in the trial.

The state alleges Miss Koslow hired Salter and a friend to kill her parents and that she intended to finance the plan with a multimillion-dollar inheritance.

Jack Koslow, 51, survived the March 1992 assault but his wife, Caren, the defendant's stepmother, did not. The 40-year-old oil heiress died in a blood-drenched bedroom at the couple's elegant Rivercrest home.

Evans spent nearly four hours questioning Salter, who earlier told the jury it was at Miss Koslow's insistence that he and a friend, Jeff Dillingham, attacked the Koslows.

"Get this done or forget it," he quoted her as saying.

Salter, speaking in monotone, said he cut the Koslows' throats after Dillingham beat them with a metal bar.

During Sunday's cross examination, Salter admitted he entered into his plea bargain with the prosecution only after a Wichita Falls jury convicted Dillingham and condemned him to die by injection.

Salter pleaded guilty in exchange for a life prison sentence and an agreement to testify against his former fiancee.

"If you don't live up to your agreement, the whole thing is null and void, isn't it?" Evans asked.

"Yes, sir," the witness replied.

Evans sought to show that it was Salter and Dillingham, not Miss Koslow, who set the deadly murder-for-hire scheme in motion.

"Kristi Koslow didn't even know you'd gone over there and tried to kill Jack Koslow, and did kill Caren Koslow, did she?" he asked.

"Yes, she did," Salter replied.

"When you called her and told her you'd done it, she said, 'Did what?' didn't she?"

"No, sir," he responded.

A source of serious contention was a statement Salter gave prosecutors at the time of the plea bargain agreement.

In the sworn 23-page document, Salter recalled talking with Dillingham about killing the Koslows and told his friend: "I knew Kristi didn't like them, but I didn't think Kristi wanted them killed."

He told Evans that was a lie.

Report: State agencies' executives receive raises

AUSTIN (AP) — The executive directors of 13 state agencies received pay raises this year totaling $91,292, despite a freeze on raises for state employees and calls from lawmakers for fiscal restraint, according to a published report.

The raises were granted by the Legislative Budget Board, which is led by Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and House Speaker Pete Laney, both Democrats.

Twelve of the raises were approved in March, the same month Bullock urged the agencies to be fiscally responsible at a public board meeting, the Austin American-Statesman reported in Sunday's editions.

The directors' salaries are set by the Legislature in the appropriations bill. However, the budget board relied on an exemption that allows pay increases with the governor's recommendation, the newspaper said.

The raises — which averaged about $7,000 per executive director — drew harsh criticisms from Republicans, who say Democrats have been running a costly state government.

"These increases are out of line," said George W. Bush, who is challenging Democratic Gov. Ann Richards in the November election.

"I am a fiscal conservative," he said in a statement. "We must make state government accountable and responsible."

Richards' spokesman, Bill Cryer, defended the increases, adding that several other raises were rejected.

"The governor has to approve them, and the LBB has to approve them — either one or the other can refuse to approve them," Cryer said.

Meanwhile, the head of a state employees group said rank-and-file employees should be seeing raises, as well.

"What's good for the goose is good for the gander and that's all there is to it," said Lane Zivley, executive director of the Texas Public Employees Association.

"None of the leadership is taking care of state employees, like they said they would when they ran for office," said Zivley, who added that worker morale is "the worst it's ever been in the history of state government."

The two-year budget approved by the Legislature in 1993 included a suspension of pay raises for rank-and-file state employees.

The executive directors' increases ranged from $1,818 to $25,580.

School districts get tough with 'zero tolerance' for offenders

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Weary of violence and disruptive behavior in the classroom, several school districts have adopted policies to expel all offenders, regardless of their disciplinary or academic histories.

Proponents of the "zero tolerance" initiative say it has reduced the number of incidents involving disruptive behavior. Drugs, weapons and verbal or physical abuse also have decreased, they say.

"All I've got to go by is what the teachers are telling me about how much better it is on the campuses," said Steve Blackmon, director of pupil services for Judson Independent School District. "The discipline problems are fewer and less severe."

The Judson, San Antonio and Southside districts have implemented zero tolerance policies.

In the Southside district, 15 people were expelled this year, more than triple the number of students removed from the district's campuses during the previous four years.

The Judson district supplemented its zero tolerance code with a police department. Officers issue citations for disorderly conduct. Municipal judges handling the cases often give stiff sentences, including fines and community service, Blackmon said.

Proponents of the tough policies say such rigidity is necessary to ensure students know the consequences of their actions and to allow administrators to dispense discipline without fear of retaliation.

"There are certain violations that are nonnegotiable, whether you're an honor student or straight-D student," said Shelly Potter, president of the San Antonio Federation of Teachers.

But critics say the policies leave little room for leniency.

"There will be some cases that don't quite fit," said J.B. Richeson, president of the San Antonio Teachers Council and a 25-year teaching veteran. "If you have no judgment built into your system, you're going to have injustice."

Critics point to a case at Alamo Heights High School, where in April one of the school's top students was cited for alleged possession of drug paraphernalia.

The Alamo Heights district does not have a formal zero tolerance policy, but officials said they exercise a "get-tough attitude" that has resulted in expulsion for every drug possession case during the past seven years.

Republicans head to trial in dispute over Texas congressional districts

HOUSTON (AP) — Democrats say the current alignment for the state's 30 congressional districts are just fine. Republicans heartily disagree and head to court Monday to seek to have the lines redrawn.

"It is our contention the districts were done solely by race, and we find that immoral and not within our understanding of what a colorblind Constitution is all about," said Edward Blum, one of six Republicans comprising Coalition for a Color Blind Texas. The group filed the redistricting lawsuit Jan. 26.

"The minority districts are so bizarre and unwieldy that they separate neighbor from neighbor, they bust up subdivisions and cities and counties in order to create districts for a racial outcome," Blum was quoted as saying in Sunday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

Blum said his group was encouraged to file the lawsuit following last year's U.S. Supreme Court ruling that white voters may challenge the constitutionality of voting districts in which minorities are in the majority.

In that decision, a group of white voters from North Carolina challenged a state reapportionment plan that created two majority black congressional districts.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote that district maps deserve court attention when they're "so bizarre" that they appear "unexplainable on grounds other than race." She said such maps "bear an uncomfortable resemblance to apartheid."

Since that ruling, similar lawsuits have been filed in Georgia, Florida and Louisiana.

Nationally, Republicans hope to change enough districts to shift the balance of power in Congress, where Democrats hold a majority.

In Texas, Democrats have 21 seats to nine for the Republicans.

"If this Texas suit is successful, it will undoubtedly inspire other lawsuits in other states and send even more Republicans to the U.S. House," Texas GOP congressmen wrote in a letter seeking contributions for the lawsuit.

State Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle said the GOP suit — which goes before a panel of three Republican judges — has a good shot this week, although he's hopeful the Supreme Court will preserve the current districts.

"The seniority that some of our congressmen have achieved is important to protect Texas projects," Slagle said.

Houston lawyer and Democratic activist David Jones, who has intervened in the case as a defendant in conjunction with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, says the districts are needed to "keep hope alive."

The new lines were drawn in 1991. States are required to redraw political boundaries after each U.S. census.

DEAR ABBY

'Secondhand Smoker' is full of hot air, readers say

DEAR ABBY: This is my first letter to you, but your reply to "Secondhand Smoker" really had smoke coming out of my ears!

Van Buren

In his letter, "Secondhand Smoker" stated that he had quit chain-smoking two years before he met his wife. Obviously, she must have been smoking at the time. If her smoking was so offensive to him, why did he marry her? If he didn't tell her before their wedding that he didn't want smoking in their home, he has no right to change the rules now. After all, he accepted her for better or worse, knowing that she was a smoker.

The only real option he has now is to live with it, or leave. And if he chooses to leave, then she should sue him for everything he has for breach of contract! Sign me ... SMOKERS HAVE RIGHTS, TOO, VIRGINIA CITY, NEV.

DEAR SMOKERS, ETC.: Meet Leland Moody, who backs you up all the way:

DEAR ABBY: Like you, I have no affection for secondhand smoke. Also, like you, I have no affection for hysterical or deliberate falsehoods, such as the EPA's report that secondhand tobacco smoke is a Class A carcinogen.

In a recent column, Robert Scheer (L.A. Times) describes in chilling detail how the EPA concocted its conclusion.

I'm sure you do not want to be a party to this deception, especially since so many people seek your advice on such matters. The truth is, secondhand smoke may be a public nuisance, but it is hardly a deadly killer.

Quoting Scheer, "One can make the case for smoke-free public spaces on the basis of civility alone, without piling on the false guilt about killing people with secondhand smoke."

My point is that each individual must deal with this annoyance on his own terms, but not on the basis that secondhand smoke is a lethal threat. To do otherwise is to be at least ignorant of the facts, if not deliberately dishonest. — LELAND MOODY, A NON-SMOKER IN NIPOMO, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: About that man who complained because his wife was a chain-smoker, my question: Did he know while dating his wife 16 years ago that she was a smoker? If so, why did he marry her if smoke bothered him?

He reminds me of the man who built his house beside the railroad tracks, then complained because the train went by and blew its whistle; or the man who built his house next to the city dump, then groused about the stink. — M.P. IN VIRGINIA

DEAR ABBY: My sister is getting married in August. As maid of honor, I'm hosting a shower for her.

I had planned on asking each person who will be invited to bring a dish of her choice (or even something specific) and making the shower "potluck." But my mother doesn't like the idea. She says it would be in poor taste.

What do you think? — CINDY IN WEST ALLIS, WIS.

DEAR CINDY: Local customs may vary, but I'll cast my vote with your mother. If your budget is tight, give the shower in the mid-afternoon — and serve tea, sandwiches, an assortment of cookies and cake. Perhaps your mother would assist you in some of the preparations. A shower requires guests to bring a gift for the bride (or couple), but to ask guests to provide refreshments is too much!

Holt trims a section of leather to be used on the top of the boot. Holt hand makes each part of the boot from scratch.

Stanton man makes artform of bootmaking

STANTON — Mitch Holt, though he's still pulled to fast horses and ornery bulls, has put aside the racetrack and the rodeo arena to take up indoor shop work: boot-making and saddle work.

But he occasionally cowboys.

"Every now and then, I still day work a little bit (at round-up time) just to get out of here," said Holt, Stanton's maker of boots and saddles. "I'm really so far behind, I really don't need to be getting out of here, but it's good for your mind to get away (from work)."

Holt hand-makes work boots and dress boots for a lot of folk: ranchers, ranch hands, town folk and even city slicker-types who want to dress the part of the cowboy.

That "Western stuff," if it's footwear, could be as ordinary as calf, steer, mule, or bull hide or as exotic as ostrich, kangaroo, elephant or anteater skin.

And the per-pair price is certainly more personalized than those factory-made, store-bought boots.

"They start at $430 on calf plus tax, title, and license," Holt said of his fare. "When I build a pair of calf-skin boots, before I ever start cutting on them or anything, I've got $125 or $130 in just materials."

And depending on the cost of the leather, Holt's custom-made cowboy boots could cost up to $1,550 for a pair of all-ostrich boots or $1,400 for anteater boots and $2,000 for a pair of alligator footwear. If a pair of boots, from bottom to top, is all alligator and not just the lower section or "foot" of the boot, the cost could be $3,500.

"I use 40-penny nails in the shank," Holt said, to provide the boot with stability. "I forge 'em, hammer 'em down. Everything else is leather. It's the best I can get. I only use the very best I can get."

The steel shank at the arch between the insole and the outsole prevents the boots from tending to "twist up on you and run over," Holt said.

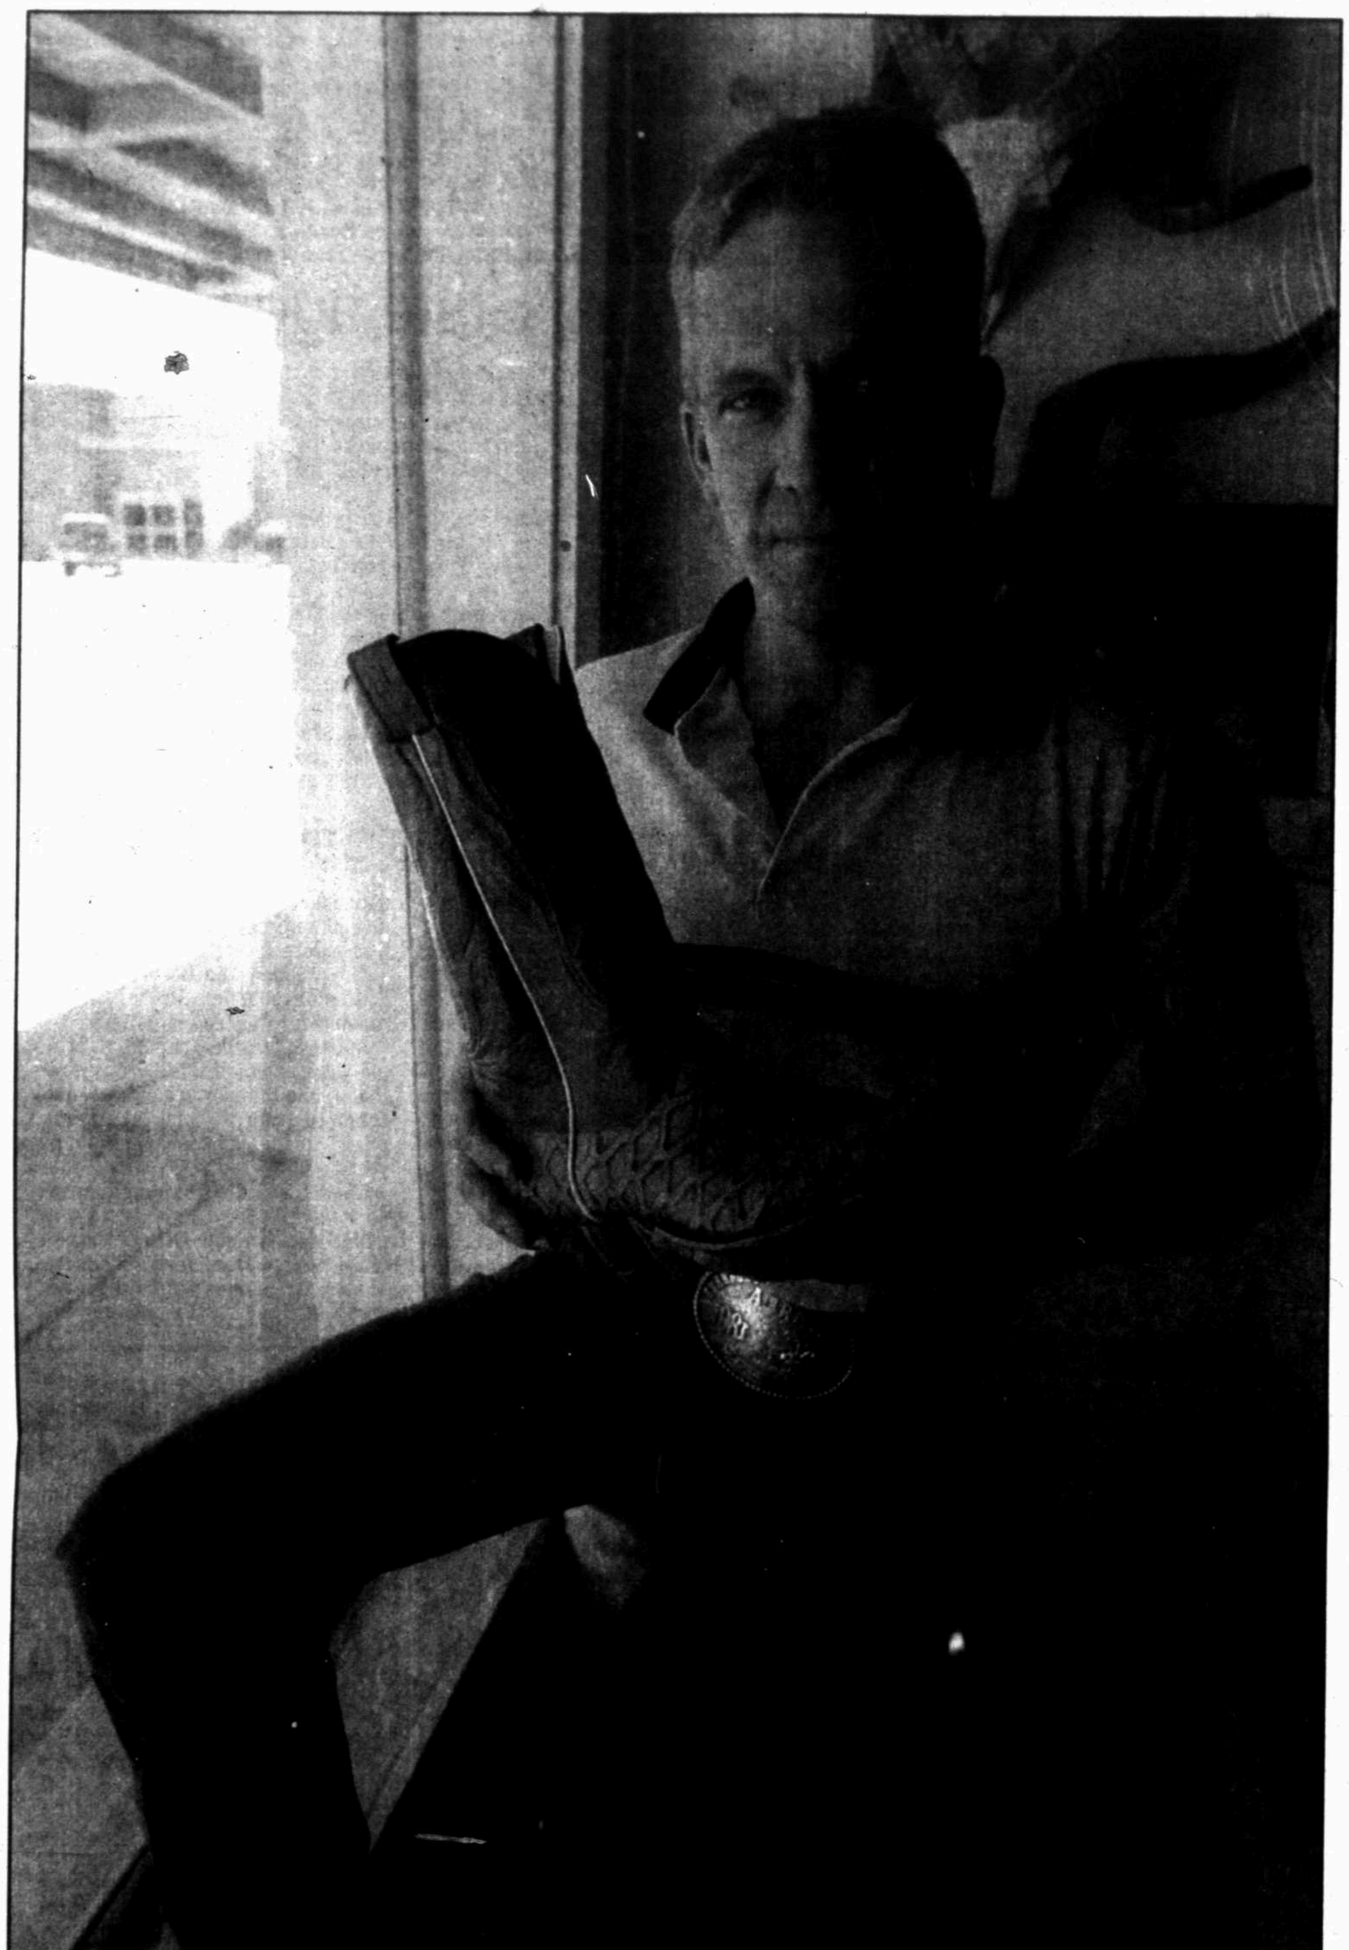

His boots are made for comfort, durability, walk-ability and for their good looks.

While Holt uses top-quality leather in his boots, many store-bought boots are made from "cheap leathers and a lot of plastic parts and all, and they throw them together in a hurry. And they're doing it in a factory; they're not making shop-made boots."

Before he delved into the art of boot-making and saddle-making about eight years ago, Holt, 31, had raced horse and rode rodeo bulls.

"I used to ride racehorses, too," Holt said, as he trimmed the "best" of leather in making yet another pair of customized "shop-made" boots. "That's good for bull riding. But I was just a little too big (at 5-foot-7) to jockey and too little to do some of the other things. Too big for some of them but just right for bull riding."

Boot-making is somewhat safer and he's done well by it.

Stanton bootmaker Mitch Holt shows off a boot he made that is hand-crafted out of anteater hide.

Travis Deibert and Gary Varnadore, both of Odessa, tied for second, three strokes behind Brooks. Varnadore turned in the best round of the day at 71, while Deibert shot even at 72.

'Magic' Lakers?

LOS ANGELES — Magic Johnson will become part-owner of the Los Angeles Lakers in a deal that could be finalized this week, according to a report published Sunday. Johnson's stake in the team would probably be less than 10 percent, but he apparently would have a front-office role, the Los Angeles Times reported. Lon Rosen, Johnson's agent, confirmed to The Associated Press that a deal was imminent but declined to name the team with which Johnson was negotiating.

The Lakers are the only team Johnson played for after he left Michigan State in 1979. Johnson led the Lakers to five NBA championships, then retired in 1992 after he was diagnosed with the AIDS virus. Johnson briefly returned to the team for the final 16 games of the 1993-94 season as interim head coach, and remains close to the team.

Hayes' cheek OK

DENVER — Colorado Rockies third baseman Charlie Hayes, whose left cheekbone was fractured when he was hit by a pitch Saturday, might return to the lineup as early as Thursday. A re-examination of Hayes' injury on Sunday showed that the cheekbone, although broken in three places, was not displaced. Hayes will be examined again by a specialist on Wednesday. If there are no complications and the swelling has subsided, he likely will be cleared to play. Hayes was struck in the fourth inning by a pitch from San Francisco starter Salomon Torres.

Angels return home with new faces, look

■ Newcomers Rob Katzaroff and Jim Walewander bring speed to Midland as Angels fight for the second half title.

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

During most of the first half of the Texas League season, the Midland Angels used the long ball of Luis Raven for their offensive punch. Raven, who was promoted to Triple-A Vancouver almost a month ago, still leads the league in home runs and runs batted in.

Despite Raven's herculean efforts, the Angels lost the first half marathon for the Western Division crown after El Paso jumped out of the gates quickly, winning 15 of its first 20 and 23 of 32. The Diablos took three of five over Midland the first week of the year at then-Angel Stadium and never relinquished first place after April 18.

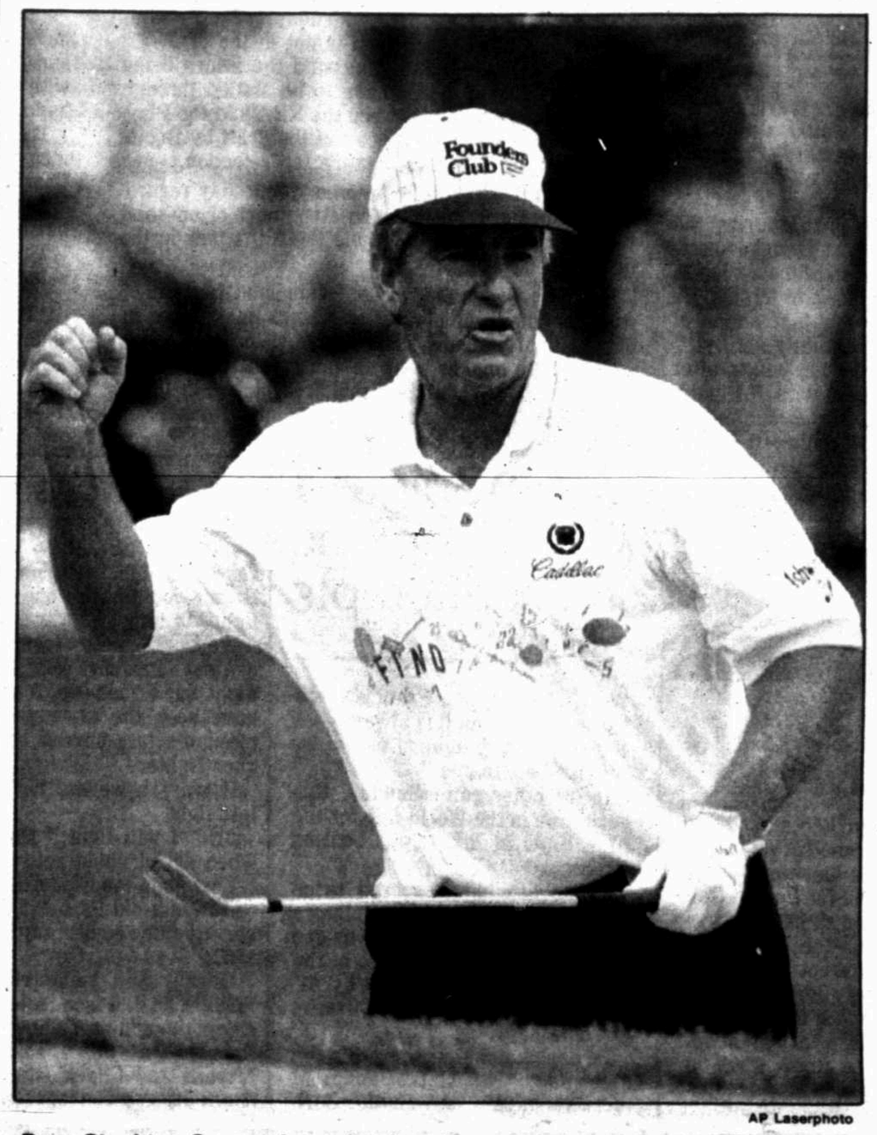

Midland has returned the favor by splitting the series with El Paso after Sunday night's 12-4 loss to the Diablos at Cohen Stadium, entering today's 7 p.m. home game with Wichita in first place.

The second half quick start is due in part to speedy newcomers Rob Katzaroff and Jim Walewander.

Katzaroff was promoted to Midland from Class A Lake Elsinore (Calif.) after outfielder Mark Sweeney was promoted to Vancouver. He has hit .370 with seven RBI and 10 runs scored in the 10 games prior to Sunday.

Dave Stockton Sr. watches a bunker shot role in for a birdie as he shot a 69 to win the Senior Players Championship with a four-day total of 271.

Father knows best; Jr. falls

■ Dave Stockton Sr. easily wins Senior Players Championship but PGA rookie son Dave Jr. finishes in four-way tie for third at Hartford.

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — It was strictly a family affair for Dave Stockton.

With his youngest son, Ronnie, carrying his bag, Stockton overwhelmed the rest of the field Sunday to win the Senior Players Championship. Then he hurried inside to see if his oldest son, PGA Tour rookie Dave Stockton Jr., would win the Greater Hartford Open.

A victory in Hartford would have made the Stocktons the only father-son duo to win PGA tournaments in the same week and the first to win the same tournament as senior won the GHO in 1974.

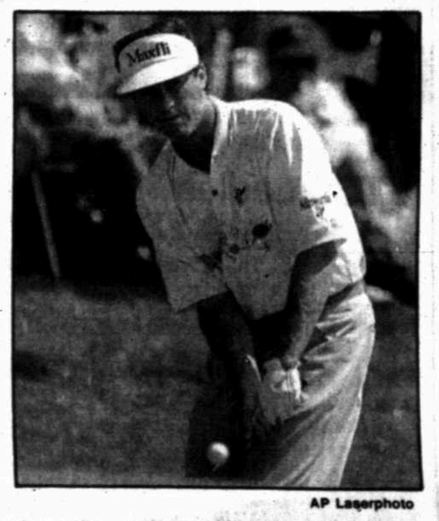

As it turned out, the younger Stockton finished in a four-way tie for third. His father couldn't have been prouder.

"I think it's awesome what he did," Stockton said. "It's just phenomenal. This is really going to help him. All he's needed was a good, high finish."

Stockton had such a large lead on all the challengers that he could easily afford to keep up with his son's progress. He repeatedly asked ABC-TV crew members for updates while working his way around the TPC of Michigan layout.

"I figured I had this tournament pretty much under control," Stockton said. "I figured it was OK to check on him a

U.S. loss postpones advancement

■ Romania wins World Cup Group A by defeating the Americans 1-0 but the U.S. still can advance.

Associated Press

The United States is in the second round of the World Cup — probably. The Americans will have to wait awhile to find out, perhaps until the end of the first round.

They made things difficult Sunday by losing 1-0 to Romania, which won Group A. Switzerland, despite falling 2-0 to Colombia, wound up second in the group with a better goal differential (plus-1 to 0) than the United States.

So now the waiting game begins, with a myriad of possibilities where the Americans don't move on. Suffice to say that unless four of five unusual scenarios occur in the other groups, the U.S. team will get to the second round for the first time in 64 years. But it might take until Thursday before it knows.

"We definitely wanted to get a point," said U.S. defender Alexi Lalas. "We have a very good chance of going to the second round."

If they advance, they will go to either Stanford, Calif., or Chicago. Chances are good they will play either Brazil or Germany, two of the favorites.

"We don't care who we play," Lalas added. "We'll still be in our country, the last time I checked."

Dan Petrescu scored in the 18th minute as the U.S. defense was caught overloaded to one side of the field and goalie Tony Meola left too much room between himself and the goalpost. The Americans pressed for the tying goal, but it never came, disappointing a flag-wave, U-S-A chanting crowd of 93,869 at the Rose Bowl.

"My frank opinion is both teams were fighting to win today," Romanian coach Anghel Iordanescu said. "The United States national team was and is a very difficult opponent, but we succeeded in imposing our will with our technical skills and our ball possession."

Colombia, a pretournament favorite, became the first team eliminated, despite beating the Swiss on goals by Herman Gaviria and Harold Lozano. After falling to the Romanians and Americans, the Colombians finally got their game together at Stanford Stadium.

But it didn't get them anywhere.

Team Penske sweeps again

■ IndyCar

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — It was another Penske sweep Sunday at Portland International Raceway with Al Unser Jr. leading 1-2-3 finish in the Budweiser-G.I. Joe's 200.

Unser fought off teammate Emerson Fittipaldi over the second half of the 102-lap event on the 1.95-mile, nine-turn road course to earn his fourth victory of the season. It gave Roger Penske's team a ninth consecutive win, including six in a row in the PPG IndyCar World Series and three straight on NASCAR's top stock car circuit.

Paul Tracy, the winner the previous week in Detroit, was a distant third.

Robby Gordon nipped defending series champion Nigel Mansell for fourth place in a great last-lap duel.

"It was an exciting day," said Unser, who earned a bonus of $150,000 from Marlboro for winning from the pole in the 32-car race.

Each of the Ilmor-powered Penske cars led on Sunday, with Unser in the top spot most of the way.

Unser, who has 23 career victories, beat fellow front row starter Mansell to the first turn at the start and quickly moved away from the Ford Cosworth-powered Lola.

By the 10th lap, Unser was ahead by 6.6 seconds and built that margin to more than 11 seconds by lap 20.

■ Wimbledon Week One

WIMBLEDON, England — Pete Sampras knows what you're thinking.

After marching through Jared Palmer, Richey Reneberg and Chuck Adams — none ranked higher than No. 35 — in the first week at Wimbledon, he draws anonymous Daniel Vacek to start the fourth round Monday.

More easy pickings for the defending champion and No. 1 seed?

No way, Sampras said after completing a rain-delayed 6-1, 6-2, 6-4 victory over Adams on Saturday.

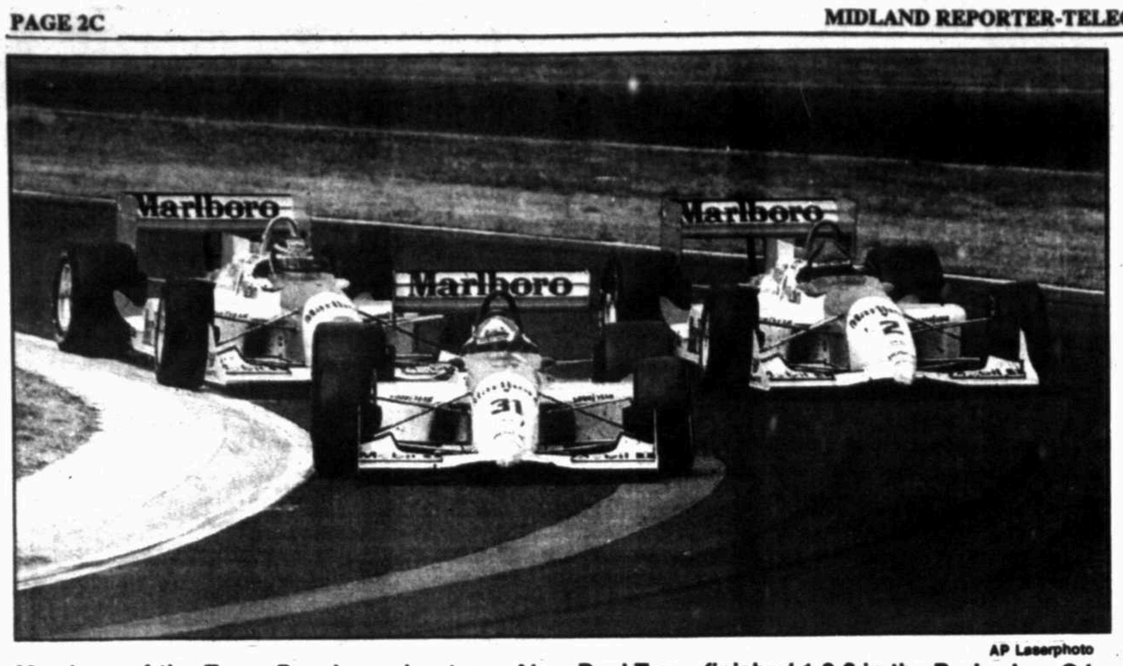

"You probably never heard of him but he's extremely dangerous," Sampras said of Vacek. "I've played him before. I'm playing a guy who hit 30 aces. A couple of swings of the bat and you could be out. I'm going to have to be ready."

Vacek, ranked No. 51, owns a heavyweight serve that has produced 63 aces in three matches here. Sampras, whose fastest measured serve in the first week reached 128 mph, has 61 aces so far.

What's interesting is that their ace production seems headed in opposite directions.

started from the second row, were pressuring Mansell, who has yet to win this season.

On lap 28, Fittipaldi ducked under Mansell in the chicane just past the finish line and took second. Tracy made a tougher pass at the same place the next time around, bumping past Mansell for third on the outside.

There were two incidents in that tight chicane. The first came on lap 15 when Michael Andretti tried to pass Jimmy Vasser on the inside and the two came together hard. Vasser's car wound up in a sand trap and Andretti's retired with a broken left front wheel.

On lap 57, in a virtual repeat, Scott Goodyear tried to pass rookie Bryan Herta. Herta wound up in the sand and Goodyear with the broken wheel.

That one necessitated the only full-course caution period of the race, giving Fittipaldi, who had been running nearly 10 seconds behind Unser, a chance.

Unser pitted on lap 69 and Fittipaldi on lap 70. When Fittipaldi came out he was just ahead of Unser, but Unser had warmer tires and was able to feint to the outside and pass Fittipaldi on the inside..

Fittipaldi, who won earlier this year at Phoenix, was able to stay close the rest of the way, but never got close enough to try a pass.

"I was slow at the start, but the last segment I was fast. Junior was just a little faster," Fittipaldi said. "But a 1-2-3 sweep is fantastic."

Mansell, who pitted during the caution period, had to make another stop for a splash of fuel on lap 95 and lost third place to Tracy. He also found himself just ahead of Gordon, who eventually got by.

Unser now has 105 points after seven of 16 races, with Fittipaldi the runnerup at 86. Gordon moved to third with 64, followed by Andretti with 59, Mansell with 56 and Tracy with 50.

The winner averaged 107.777 mph, a Portland race record. He broke the mark of 105.218 set by Andretti in 1992.

Robinson, others might protest NBA salary cap

■ Purdue's Glenn Robinson, the expected first pick in the NBA draft, may lead boycott of draft in protest, his agent says.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Glenn Robinson — expected to be the first pick in the NBA draft — may spoil the show as no-show Wednesday night.

The Milwaukee Bucks are expected to take the Purdue All-American as the No. 1 overall selection, but Robinson might not be at the Hoosier Dome, his agent, Charles Tucker, told The Indianapolis Star in a story published Sunday.

The boycott would protest both the legality of the draft and a possible rookie salary cap, Tucker said.

"I'm in the process of figuring out what I'm going to do and I'll figure that out by Monday," Tucker said. "Right now, Glenn Robinson is not in the draft."

Bucks spokesman Bill King said the issues being raised by Tucker would have to be settled through collective bargaining between the NBA and the Players Association, and a boycott of the draft by Robinson would not affect the team's top selection.

"The draft will still be held on Wednesday regardless of whether players are in attendance or not, and the Milwaukee Bucks still hold the No. 1 pick in the draft," King said.

Robinson, Jason Kidd of California and Grant Hill of Duke are the three players the Bucks interviewed in preparation for using the top pick, King said.

"The NBA makes a lot of money off the draft," Tucker said. "When the first three picks put those hats on their heads, that means a lot of money.

"It's like a classroom. I don't care how good the teacher is, if you haven't got any students, it's not going to continue."

Tucker said Kidd and Hill were thinking of going along with the protest, but Hill said last Thursday in Greensboro, N.C., that he's excited about the draft.

"I'm all about the draft," Hill said. "It's a dream of mine, and I'm all about going through the draft and participating in the draft and putting that hat on, hopefully. That's what I'm thinking about. I'm not thinking about boycott or strike or anything like that."

Tucker said Wednesday's draft is illegal because a six-year collective bargaining agreement between the players and the league expired Thursday. The NBA has filed a lawsuit to extend the previous agreement's terms until a new one can be reached, but Tucker said rookies are not covered by the old deal.

"The draft is illegal right now because they don't have an agreement," he said. "Officially (Robinson) can go anywhere he wants to go until they come up with a collective bargaining agreement. Anything can happen."

The Players Association is supporting the boycott idea because it would like the draft abolished, said Charles Grantham, executive director of the group.

The union has sued to abolish the draft twice before, but a settlement was reached each time.

The union's biggest concern, though, is a rookie salary cap, Grantham said.

"It's unfair. (NBA Commissioner) David Stern didn't have any salary cap put on his money," Grantham said. "He got a big bonus. So why should players have a salary cap put on them, especially rookies?"

Galvan is Texas MVP

1994 Midland Lee star David Galvan was named MVP for the Texas team in last week's Sunbelt Classic All-Star Series. Galvan, who played right field, was also named to the all-tournament team. He went 11-for-23 at the plate in five games to tie the tournament record for hits. The Texas team lost to Oklahoma Saturday 5-4 to finish sixth in the series, in which seven states were represented.

SAMPRAS: Tournament resumes

(From 1C)

Woodforde before turning heads with a 31-ace match against Yevgeny Kafelnikov. Sampras went from 25 against Palmer to 26 against Reneberg to just 10 against Adams.

After the traditional day off Sunday, Wimbledon has a full fourth-round schedule on Monday.

Nine-time champion Martina Navratilova, centerpiece of the women's draw after the elimination of No. 1 Steffi Graf, continues her farewell tournament, facing Helena Sukova. Other matches include Lindsay Davenport against Gabriela Sabatini; Lori McNeil, who eliminated Graf, facing Florencia Labat, and second-seeded Arantxia Sanchez Vicario against Zina Garrison Jackson.

On the men's side, the schedule includes Michael Chang against Sergei Bruguera in a battle of former and current French Open champs, three-time Wimbledon champ Boris Becker against Andrei Medvedev, and qualifier Bryan Shelton against Christian Bergstrom as well as Sampras-Vacek.

So far, Sampras has stayed well clear of trouble, embarked on a straight-sets cruise through a tournament that devoured many of its seeded players early.

"I've seen the upsets," he said. "I'm more concered about my match, who I'm playing. I can't worry about what everyone else is doing. I think I've been playing pretty well. Hopefully, I can maintain this level."

Even with top seeds like Michael Stich, Stefan Edberg and Jim Courier gone, Sampras knows there are still landmines waiting around this shrine of grass court tennis.

"There are still a lot of dangerous players out there," he said. "The game now is so deep, especially on grass. Anything can happen on grass.

"Once you're on top, there's always someone who wants to bring you down, so you just have to be careful. It's part of the game we play."

Right now, Sampras said, he is returning the ball extremely well and that's the key to success in grass court tennis.

"In order to play well here, you have to not only serve big but return huge," he said. "That's what made (Andre) Agassi a winner here a couple of years ago."

CUP: Bulgaria wins 1st game in six attempts

(From 1C)

World Cup," coach Francisco Maturana said. "But it is always good to get a victory against one of the world's best teams."

In the other game Sunday, Bulgaria won in the World Cup for the first time in six trips, beating Greece 4-0 at Chicago.

Hristo Stoitchkov scored twice on penalty kicks to pace Bulgaria to a 4-0 rout of Greece. It was one of the most lopsided games of the tournament, matched only by Argentina's 4-0 rout of the Greeks last Tuesday.

Iordan Letchkov scored on a give-and-go with Zlatko Iankov in the 66th minute and Daniel Borimirov added a last-minute goal on a rebound off a free kick.

Bulgaria, which first qualified for the World Cup in 1962 and even advanced to the second round in 1986 without a win, disappointed a mostly partisan Greek crowd of 63,160 at Soldier Field. The caliber of play, however, left much to be desired, with six yellow cards, many fouls and giveaways, mostly by the Greeks, who were the only European team to go unbeaten in qualifying.

Bulgaria finishes Thursday against Argentina, which already has advanced.

In other World Cup news:

—Cameroon goalkeeper Joseph-Antoine Bell, the leader of a players' rebellion that shook the team, quit the squad Sunday.

"I decided it might might give the team more peace if I don't play anymore," Bell said. "There are too many people who have nothing to do with the team around it."

Cameroon, whose players claim they have not been paid salaries or bonuses by the soccer federation, plays Russia on Tuesday.

Duran's loss last hurrah, not last fight

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Vinny Pazienza thought old lion Roberto Duran would have "one last good fight" in him.

Well, Duran's losing effort against Pazienza on Saturday night was a good one. It also could have been the 43-year-old Panamanian's last hurrah as a marquee fighter.

It was, however, not Duran's last fight.

"No, I will fight," Duran said when asked about retirement after his unanimous-decision loss to the 31-year-old Pazienza in the super middleweight match at the MGM Grand Garden.

Duran, and some ringsiders, thought he had won. A lot of ringsiders thought the fight was closer than judges Jerry Roth, Dave Moretti and Chuck Giampa saw it. Giampa scored it 117-113, while Roth and Moretti had it 117-112. They caused a stir when each called the fifth round 10-10 despite Duran scoring a clean knockdown.

The victory was the seventh straight for Pazienza since he broke his neck in a car crash Nov. 12, 1991. It should lead to a shot at a third title for Pazienza, a former IBF junior middleweight champion.

A match for Pazienza against James Toney, the IBF super middleweight champion; Roy Jones, the IBF middleweight champion, or Steve Little, the WBA super middleweight champion, would be an attractive one.

"I just hope Vinny will give me another shot," Duran said.

"Let's do it again," Pazienza said.

Talk is cheap — and Pazienza does not need another fight with Duran, a former world champion in four weight classes who has been fighting professionally since 1967.

Duran, meanwhile, seems destined for weekday cable television fights against undistinguished opponents for $50,000 a match.

Longhorn Adams arrested for assault

AUSTIN (AP) — All-Southwest Conference wide receiver Mike Adams of Texas was arrested on assualt charges early Saturday morning, his second altercation in the past two months that authorities have investigated.

According to a police report, Adams, 20, was arrested shortly before 3 a.m. Saturday in downtown Austin.

On April 30, Adams sustained a knife cut to his hand during a fight with former Texas basketball player Al Segova. No charges were filed.

On Saturday, Adams was charged with aggravated assault of a peace officer and assault with injury. He allegedly shoved an officer who was attempting to settle a dispute involving Adams and a woman he said was his girlfriend, according to the police report.

Adams was released from jail on bond Saturday afternoon and has refused to discuss the incident.

Texas linebacker Jonathan Hickerson, 21, was arrested on charges of trying to impede Adams' arrest. He also was released on bond. He has been suspended indefinitely from the team, according to Dave Saba, Texas associate sports information director.

Texas coach John Mackovic said Adams requested, and will take, a 60-day leave of absence from the football team.

Yankees hold on, nab Indians, 12-11

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

CLEVELAND — Jim Leyritz and Mike Stanley homered and Jim Abbott won for the first time in a month Sunday as the New York Yankees blew most of an eight-run lead before beating Cleveland 12-11.

The Yankees won their fifth straight overall and their eighth in a row against Cleveland dating to last season. It was the Indians' second consecutive loss at Jacobs Field following an 18-game home winning streak.

Cleveland trailed 12-4 before scoring seven runs in the eighth inning, including a two-run homer by Manny Ramirez and a three-run shot by Albert Belle.

Twins 11, Royals 4

MINNEAPOLIS — Kirby Puckett became Minnesota's career hits leader and drove in three runs, leading the Twins over Kansas City.

Puckett had three hits, giving him 2,088 in 11 seasons with the Twins. He moved Rod Carew, who had 2,085 hits in 12 seasons with Minnesota.

Brewers 5, Red Sox 4

MILWAUKEE — Dave Nilsson drove in three runs, including the go-ahead score in the eighth inning as the Milwaukee Brewers edged Boston.

Nilsson's two-out single off reliever Chris Howard drove in B.J. Surhoff.

Jamie Navarro (3-6) struck out the only batter he faced for the victory. Mike Fetters pitched the ninth for his seventh save.

Athletics 10, Tigers 5

OAKLAND, Calif. — Troy Neel hit a two-run single and Mike Bordick's two-run double highlighted Oakland's seven-run first inning.

The A's swept the three-game series and have won 10 of their last 12. Terry Steinbach went 3-for-4 with a homer and Ruben Sierra had three hits for Oakland.

Angels 4, Rangers 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Tim Salmon homered to lead off the eighth inning as the Angels handed Texas its 10th loss in 12 games.

Salmon hit a 1-2 pitch from John Dettmer (0-2) over the left-field fence for his 16th homer.

Texas, which dropped to 33-40 in the AL West, became the first team in major-league history to be seven games under .500 and in first place.

Mark Leiter (4-4) pitched one inning for the win after relieving starter Mark Langston, who struck out a season-high nine in seven innings.

White Sox 8, Mariners 7

SEATTLE — Reliever Jose DeLeon struck out Jay Buhner with the bases loaded to end the game as the White Sox held on for their sixth straight victory.

Tim Raines and Julio Franco hit RBI singles in the eighth inning for the White Sox, who trimmed Cleveland's lead in the AL Central to two games.

Orioles 7, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — Mike Mussina pitched a five-hitter for his 11th win and Brady Anderson homered twice to lift Baltimore to a victory over Toronto, the Blue Jays' eighth straight loss.

Mussina (11-4) pitched his third complete game to join New York's Jimmy Key as baseball's only 11-game winners. He struck out six and walked one in lowering his league-leading ERA to 2.67.

Daulton, Phillies stay Braves

Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

PHILADELPHIA — Darren Daulton went 3-for-3 with a three-run homer and scored four times Sunday as the Philadelphia Phillies held off the Atlanta Braves 9-8 Sunday.

The Braves rallied for three runs in the eighth. Ryan Klesko hit his second home run of the game and pinch-hitter David Justice hit a two-run homer.

Doug Jones then got four outs for his league-leading 19th save, extending his scoreless streak to 20⅓ innings.

Reliever Toby Borland (1-0) pitched three scoreless innings, allowing two hits and striking out three, to pick up his first major-league win.

Steve Avery (5-2) remained winless since May 20. He previous six starts resulted in no-decisions.

Marlins 6, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Mark Gardner came off the disabled list to pitch 7⅓ strong innings as the Marlins snapped a season-high six-game losing steak.

Gardner (2-2), who was placed on the 15-day disabled list on June 8 with a groin injury and was activated before the game, tied a club record with 10 strikeouts.

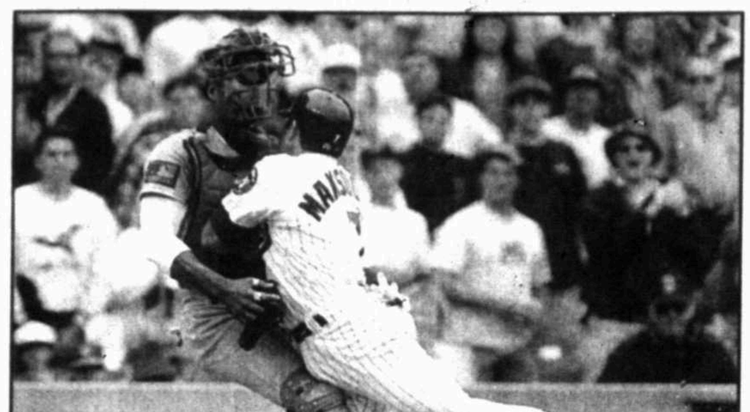

Robb Nen pitched the final 1⅓ innings for his sixth save.

Gary Sheffield hit his 14th home run and scored twice, and Chuck Carr doubled, hit an RBI single and scored a run for the Marlins.

Pedro Martinez (6-4), who was 5-0 with three no decisions in his previous eight starts, gave up three runs and five hits in seven innings.

Pirates 7, Mets 3

NEW YORK — Paul Wagner pitched eight shutout innings before tiring in the ninth, and Brian Hunter and Al Martin homered to lift the Pirates to their sixth straight win.

Chicago's Mike Maksudian is out at home as he collides with St. Louis catcher Terry McGriff in the Cardinals 3-1 win.

Wagner (5-5) carried a four-hit shutout into the ninth before the Mets got three straight singles to score their first run. Wagner was then lifted after giving up an RBI single to Rico Brogna. He allowed three runs and eight hits in 8 1-3 innings.

Hunter hit a two-run homer and Martin hit a solo shot as the Pirates collected 16 hits to win for the eighth time in nine games.

The Pirates roughed up Bobby Jones (7-7) for seven runs and nine hits in 4⅓ innings.

Cardinals 3, Cubs 1

CHICAGO — Rick Sutcliffe gave up four hits over six innings for his first win over Chicago in nearly 15 years.

Sutcliffe (4-3), who spent eight seasons with the Cubs, struck out two and walked none in his first game at Wrigley Field since Sept. 22, 1991.

Sutcliffe entered the game with a 1-3 career record in 10 games against the Cubs as a member of the Los Angeles Dodgers. His last win against Chicago was June 31, 1979, in a 6-4 Dodgers victory.

Rene Arocha pitched the ninth for his sixth save.

Steve Trachsel (6-5) gave up four hits over six innings in taking the loss.

Luis Alicea hit a two-run homer in the fourth to put St. Louis ahead 2-0.

Giants 8, Rockies 1

DENVER — Barry Bonds hit a pair of two-run homers and had five RBIs, and John Burkett pitched eight shutout innings to lead the San Francisco Giants past Colorado.

The Rockies set a major-league attendance record, drawing 217,009 for the three-game series — 105 more than Cleveland drew in the final series at their old stadium last year.

Bonds connected off Greg Harris (3-8) in the first and fifth innings for his 18th and 19th homers. He also singled home a run in the third, tying the Giants' season high for RBIs in a game set by Matt Williams on opening day.

Burkett (5-6) gave up five hits and allowed only three runners as far as second base. Rod Beck gave up a run in the ninth.

Dodgers 5, Astros 4

HOUSTON — Brett Butler homered for the second straight game and also singled twice, driving in two runs as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated Houston.

Butler hit a solo home run with two outs in the seventh inning, breaking a 4-4 tie. He has five homers, his most since hitting six in 1988 for San Francisco.

Butler connected against Doug Drabek (10-4), foiled in his bid to become the first 11-game winner in the NL.

Kevin Gross (7-4) went seven innings, allowing five hits and striking out five. Todd Worrell pitched two innings and got his sixth save in 11 chances.

Reds 12, Padres 4

CINCINNATI — Hal Morris had his third four-hit game of the season and drove in the go-ahead run in a five-run sixth inning as the Cincinnati Reds beat San Diego.

Consecutive singles by Thomas Howard, Barry Larkin and Morris gave the Reds a 5-4 lead in the sixth and Reggie Sanders singled in two more off Jeff Tabaka (1-1). Bret Boone doubled home a run, and another scored on left fielder Phil Plantier's throwing error.

John Roper (4-0) stayed around just long enough for the win. The Reds won for the seventh time in eight games.

Kevin Mitchell's two-run homer highlighted the Reds' three-run third. His 19th home run matched his total for all of 1993, when he played in just 93 games because of various injuries.

NEWCOMERS: Angels return home

(From 1C)

ter being released by the Florida Marlins. He has hit .333 (8-of-24) with five runs and four RBI in nine games.

Both have stolen three bases compared to just 56 stolen bases by the entire Angels through 64 games. And both have yet to commit an error.

"Robby is an outfielder with pretty good speed and he has been hitting the ball pretty good," said Midland manager Mario Mendoza from El Paso.

"Walewander is a utility player who can play anywhere with real good speed and can steal some bases. Now, I have some guys on the bench. I think it makes the team stronger, we don't have much power, but more of a running game.

"Winning three games (in El Paso) is a pretty good sign. It gives us confidence that we can play with El Paso."

For Katzaroff it is a return to the Texas League after playing in the San Francisco Giants organization at Shreveport last season.

"I feel like I'm doing alright. I kind of know what to expect after being in the Texas League last season," said the outfielder who batted .300 in 1993 at Shreveport. "I think I bring another fresh body and attitude to the team. I feel like I can pick up some of the guys that are a little bit down."

Katzaroff was released by San Francisco during spring training when he received a call by the Angels to play at Lake Elsinore, his fourth organization in his five year professional career.

Also joining the Angels is pitcher Julio Valera. Valera is on a medical rehabilitation stay at Midland and is expected to make two more starts before being called up to Vancouver. Valera pitched six innings allowing four runs in an 9-8 loss last Thursday against El Paso. He is scheduled to make a start against Wichita this week and another start at San Antonio before leaving the club.

Angels fall to Diablos; end trip at 8-4

Staff Report

EL PASO — Midland lost the last game of its series with El Paso here Sunday, 12-4. But the Angels got what they wanted from their road trip and six-game set with the Diablos.

The Angels, who play at Christensen Stadium in Midland tonight, split their series with El Paso and won eight of twelve games on the trip. Midland (3-3) begins a six-game series with first-place Wichita (4-2) at 7 p.m. today.

The Diablos sprinted to an 8-0 lead, handing Midland starter Korey Keling his fifth loss against seven wins. El Paso's Sid Roberson (8-6) gave up only one earned run in eight innings of work for the winners.

Leading 4-0 after three innings, the Diablos scored four runs in the fourth to put the game away. Shortstop Mark Loretta's two-run double to left center field was the innings' key hit.

Keling allowed seven runs in three-plus innings and Angel reliever Jerry Nielson gave up five runs, also in three-plus innings.

The Angels only dented the El Paso lead with an RBI single by Maquis Riley in the fifth and an RBI single by Tim Harkrider in the seventh. Midland got two runs in the eighth when Mike Wolff's triple scored a run and Jim Walewander's sacrifice fly scored Wolff.

The Angels start Kyle Sebach (1-1) tonight against Wichita's Bill Wengert (2-7).

Andrews wins third LPGA title

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — Donna Andrews overcame swirling wind and her own gremlins on Sunday to score a two-stroke victory over fast-closing Michelle Estill in the ShopRite LPGA Classic.

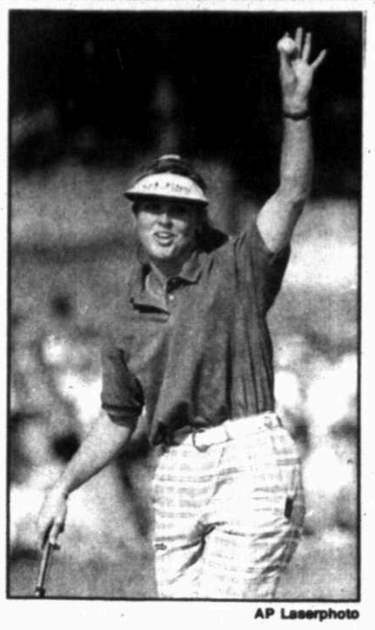

Andrews tried to give the tournament away down the stretch when she bogeyed No. 15, double bogeyed No. 16 and bogeyed No. 17. After losing four strokes to par in three holes, Andrews held on to complete a 3-over-par 74 and finish 54 holes at 6-under 207.

She was two strokes ahead of Estill and three clear of Dottie Mochrie, Barb Bunkowsky, Caroline Pierce and Kim Saiki.

Estill, seemingly out of contention after a 77 on Saturday, tied the under-par record for a tournament round with a 6-under 65 on Sunday over the 6,235-yard, par-71 Greate Bay Country Club course. Pamela Wright shot a 6-under 64 in 1990 when the tournament, then known as the Atlantic City Classic, was played at the par-70 Sands Country Club.

Mochrie had a shot at Andrews but bogeyed the last two holes to fall back into the four-way tie for third. Mochrie finished with a 73, Bunkowsky shot 74, and Pierce and Saiki each had 71s.

In overcoming her late stumbles, Andrews won for the third time this season, adding to earlier victories in the Dinah Shore and Ping-Welch's Championship. The ShopRite title was worth $75,000, increasing Andrews' earnings for the year to $341,278.

Frost, Norman rally to frustrate Stockton Jr.

■ Hartford

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — David Frost held off Greg Norman for a one-stroke victory in the Greater Hartford Open on Sunday and frustrated Dave Stockton Jr.'s bid to make history with his father.

Frost shot a final-round 69 to set a 72-hole record at 12-under-par 268, one shot better than Norman, who finished birdie-birdie for a 69.

Stockton, who entered the final round tied for the lead at 11 under, shot a 72 and finished in a four-way tie for third at 271.

Dave Stockton won the Senior Players Championship at Dearborn, Mich., earlier Sunday by six strokes. The Stocktons were trying to become the first father-son combination to win a PGA event on the same weekend and the first to win the same tournament. The elder Stockton won the GHO in 1974.

Frost made just two bogeys over his final 31 holes, but one was Sunday on 17. The four-shot lead he had held after 16 was down to one but he made it stand up when he two-putted for par on 18. The 268 was the lowest score in the three years since the course at the Tournament Players Club at River Highlands was renovated. Since 1991, the lowest score after 72 holes was defending champion Nick Price's 9-under 271 last year.

It is Frost's first victory on the PGA Tour this year and ninth of his career. He becomes the 24th different winner in 25 tournaments this year, with Price being the only golfer with two PGA titles this year.

Tied with Stockton for third were Corey Pavin, Steve Stricker and Dave Barr.

In the early going, it was mostly a three-way race involving Stockton, Frost and Norman. Stockton and Frost were neck-and-neck at 12-under until Stockton bogeyed No. 6 to fall a stroke back.

Stockton, paired with Frost for the second straight day, fell to 9-under with a double bogey at No. 7, a par-4, and could never recover.

About the same time, Norman, who started the day at 10-under and was playing a group ahead of Frost, began making a move. After parring his first six holes, he birded Nos. 7 and 8 to tie Frost for the lead.

Norman and Frost remained tied at 12-under until the 12th. Norman double bogeyed the par-4 hole and Frost made bogey after his shot from the sand caught the lip of the trap and left him in the rough.

little bit."

He had that figured right.

Stockton, who won the championship two years ago, clinched the 1994 title with a 4-under-par 68 in the final round. That gave him a 17-under 271 total and a six-stroke victory over the rest of the star-studded senior field.

It was the lowest competitive score ever on the Jack Nicklaus-designed course which opened in late 1990. Stockton set the mark of 11 under in 1992.

"My iron game was so good, I had a lot of short putts," Stockton said.

For the record, Jim Albus was second in the Seniors Players Championship at 11 under. Lee Trevino, Isao Aoki and Raymond Floyd all finished another stroke back.

But this day belonged to Stockton. He started the day at 13 under, five strokes ahead of his challengers. It was unlikely anyone could catch him.

"I don't know how realistic it was to think I could win the tournament when Dave had a five-shot lead," Albus said. "But the other thing is that Dave just didn't make a bogey. It's just not in his vocabulary, I guess."

Stockton sealed his title with two magnificent shots on Nos. 3 and 4, a 547-yard par-5, followed by a 210-yard par-3.

Stockton put his approach on 3 less than a foot from the pin and tapped in for birdie. Then he holed out from a greenside bunker on 4 for another birdie to go 15 under.

"To me, that was the turning point," Stockton said. "I got back the two strokes I lost when Jim birdied the first two holes. And even though he birdied No. 7 to pull within four, I was back in the game."

After missing makeable birdie putts on the two previous holes, Stockton removed his black and white baseball-style cap at No. 9 and drilled a 7-footer for another birdie. That enabled him to turn at 16 under.

Stockton's toughest moment came at No. 13, a 506-yard, par-5 with a slight dogleg to the left.

A hard rain was falling by the time Stockton reached the tee. The thick grass on the left side, at the knee of the dogleg, was where Tom Weiskopf had lost a ball during the third round.

"I'd like to hit a big drive there, but it's such a risk," Stockton said. "I steered it at times, but this is a course that demands that you do that."

Stockton, too, missed the fairway. But he drove into the right rough, which wasn't nearly as thick as that on the left.

"I was in the rough but, you know, if I hit it left there, I can make an 'X' and I'm out of it," Stockton said.

There would be no X's on this day.

Stockton punched a mid-iron safely onto the fairway, then used an 8-iron to flip the ball 22 feet from the pin. The curling putt slid into the cup for another birdie, putting Stockton 17 under.

Classic overkill, as it turned out.

Albus, who won the first championship after the tournament was moved from the Dearborn Country Club to the TPC in 1991, made an early bid to catch Stockton. Albus birdied three of the first five holes to get to 11 under, which left him only four strokes behind the leader at the time. He never got any closer.

Nicklaus, as only he can do, made a tremendous early charge, only to run out of steam.

MONDAY, JUNE 27, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR: People who are both influential and generous will seek your company. The stage is set for exciting romantic adventures! A business associate finally recognizes the advantages of cooperating with your plans. Forget old grievances. Continued good health depends on your handling stress wisely. Maintain close contact with family and friends living at a distance. A love relationship will deepen with the passage of time.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: author Helen Keller, "Captain Kangaroo" (Bob Keeshan), actress Julia Duffy, pool champ Willie Mosconi.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Careful attention to detail is essential today. Focus on what needs to be done in the short term. An unexpected encounter adds a fun note to an otherwise hectic day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Concentration may be difficult this morning. Avoid procrastinating; self-discipline is the answer, even if progress seems slow. Take care of any pressing bills or correspondence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your instincts may not be as sharp as usual. A telephone call from an old friend could energize you. You feel ready to tackle a long-postponed personal project.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It will not be easy to get what you want from others today. Resolve to handle your end of a bargain conscientiously. Spiritual studies give you a needed lift.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You could be a bit rigid in your attitudes and approaches. Do not let false pride stand in the way of positive interactions. Avoid giving potential allies the impression that you are snug or intolerant.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Positive changes and clever solutions are featured this week. Ask family members to help you reach an important goal. A close friend is willing to pull strings on your behalf.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not be so quick to sacrifice your own needs for your friends. Meeting a challenge head-on will hand you a big victory. Romantic fever climbs tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Ignore any doubters or skeptics. You are operating on solid ground despite what a critic may say. Be patient and answer a limited number of questions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be open-minded when introduced to new people or unusual ideas. Someone who shares your long-term goals could point out a valuable shortcut.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are full of bright ideas and eager for action! Stress originality when dealing with prominent people. Your charming personality makes you very convincing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your many obligations weigh heavily on your mind. Bend over backwards to accommodate a partner. Singles tend to feel lonely, but that will soon change.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Work hard to lay the groundwork for a business venture. Soft-pedal any differences of opinion with mate — you will gain nothing by bickering.

TODAY'S CHILDREN will be fascinated by the new and exotic but cherish the old and familiar. Their powers of observation are keen — and so are their memories. Strongly influenced by their parents, these youngsters are usually both affectionate and obedient.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠764 ♡KQ10953 ♢Q3 ♣A8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With 11 points in high cards, a key filler for partner's diamond suit and a fine six-card suit of your own, the hand is good enough to commit to game. Since partner must have at least two hearts for the no-trump rebid, jump to four hearts.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡AJ92 ♢84 ♣AK10765
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♢	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—You have a very good six-card club suit, but that does not mean you should rebid it immediately. If you have a 4-4 heart fit, that should be your best spot. You might lose your major-suit fit if you rebid any number of clubs, so bid one heart now.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A6 ♡72 ♢J98543 ♣AKQ
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♢	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♢	Pass	3 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Get out your bidding primer if you elected to bid three no trump or pass. Partner's hand is unbalanced, your strength is concentrated in quick tricks and you have at least an eight-card major-suit fit. Raise to four hearts.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK65 ♡KJ5 ♢A8 ♣KJ93
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♢	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Ideally, you would like to probe for a 4-4 spade fit. However, a one-spade rebid might be passed and a jump to two spades suggests an unbalanced hand, which could lead to the wrong contract. We would settle for the value bid of two no trump.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡KJ9542 ♢K987 ♣74
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner's no-trump opening guarantees at least an eight-card fit. Since your hand values to some 10 points, you want to be in game and there's just one place you would choose—four hearts. So why not bid it right away?

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South with 60 on score you hold:
♠Void ♡AK74 ♢KQJ106 ♣AQ62
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What do you bid now?

A.—A double is out of the question, since partner might try to insist on a spade contract. If you play strong jump overcalls, by all means jump to three diamonds. But most people play preemptive jumps these days, as do we, so we would settle for a two-diamond overcall. Don't worry about missing slam—partner must have a reasonable hand if you are to make 12 tricks.

McEntire sheds 20 pounds after embarrassing accident

RADNOR, Pa. — Reba McEntire says she has lost 20 pounds since an embarrassing accident while filming "The Gambler Returns" with Kenny Rogers three years ago.

"In one scene, I was supposed to hop on a horse from a wagon, and I was so heavy and uncoordinated, I fell off the horse," the country music superstar says in the July 2 issue of TV Guide magazine.

Reba McEntire stays away from fried foods to lose weight.

Her diet secret: to eat mostly fruit and stuff fried foods.

"My favorite meal was fried hamburger patties with flour-and-milk gravy and biscuits and tons of butter and honey," she says. "Breakfast was my most fattening meal because I had pancakes with peanut butter and syrup on them. And jelly on top of that."

McEntire says she enjoys her career success, but sometimes finds it disconcerting.

"It's been a while since I've been to Wal-Mart," she says. "The last time I went, me and my son, Shelby, just got bombarded. I must be a bigger twinkle than I think I am."

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The man who led Janet Jackson to new career heights led his fiancee of four years down the aisle in a star-studded wedding ceremony.

Grammy-winning songwriter-producer James "Jimmy Jam" Harris III married Lisa Padilla on Saturday at the Pickfair mansion before more than 300 friends, many from the recording industry.

In addition to Jackson, guests included Quincy Jones, Herb Alpert, Pia Zadora, Johnny Gill and Tia Carrere.

Harris and best man Terry Lewis, his partner in the Minneapolis-based Flyte Tyme Recording Studios, wore champagne-colored tuxedos, Panama hats and dark sunglasses.

The 25-year-old bride, a music video fashion designer, wore a champagne-colored satin gown with a 15-foot train.

NEW YORK — Mel Torme's warm, smooth delivery delighted a Carnegie Hall audience at the annual JVC Jazz Festival, where he has performed since 1972. He began with "Opus One," melted into the verse of "You Make Me Feel So Young," snapped his fingers for a quick tempo for "Three Little Words," with lots of scat-singing, then went to "Memories of You."

In "You Make Me Feel So Young," the 68-year-old Torme sang, "You know that age is just a number" then interjected "If I could really believe that."

NEW YORK — Jimmy Carter will join two other former presidents — John Quincy Adams and Abraham Lincoln — as a published poet.

Former President Jimmy Carter to be published poet.

Times Books announced Sunday that it intends to publish "Always a Reckoning," a book of poems by Carter in January.

Carter has written eight other books.

In his poems, Carter "shares his private memories" about childhood, family and politics, the publisher said in a statement.

"His poetry is born of an awareness, both political and sensual, that 'there is always a reckoning,' that everything in life must be in balance," Times Books said.

A sample:

"Some people never say, 'Let's go home'
Not having one, except a plastic sheet;
When cold, they try to find a warm air grate;
An empty doorway's better than the street
And two share one refrigerator crate."

NEW YORK — There was never a thought of a midlife career change for Billy Taylor, the jazz pianist and composer.

On Thursday, he will perform at a concert in Carnegie Hall called "Billy Taylor: My First 50 Years in Jazz."

"I will pay homage to artists I loved and respected in the past, but basically it will be a look at where I am today as opposed to a look backward," Taylor, 72, said the other day.

Most of the concert will be devoted to his own compositions.

"When I started out, my biggest plans were just to be the best piano player I could be," he recalled. But he has done much more. An author and teacher, he is artistic director for jazz at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and an arts correspondent on "CBS Sunday Morning."

"This is really nice," he said of the 50-year milestone. "Like Eubie Blake once said, 'If you hang around long enough, they get around to you.' "

TRANSPORTATION IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

The Texas Department of Transportation will conduct a public meeting July 12 in the Odessa District to discuss the 1995-1997 Transportation Improvement Program (TIP).

The 1995-1997 Transportation Improvement Program is a three-year plan developed by the Texas Department of Transportation for Andrews, Crane, Ector, Loving, Martin, Midland, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward, and Winkler counties.

The TIP includes the following:

- A priority list of projects and project segments that will be carried out within the 3-year period, and
- A financial plan that demonstrates how the TIP can be implemented, indicates resources from public and private (if any) sources that are reasonable expected to be made available to carry out the plan, and recommends any innovative techniques to finance needed projects and programs.

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
- ★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
- ★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
- ★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- ★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

A small deposit is required.
