Local SSC panel delays its decision

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Civic leaders representing the four cities of the Garden City SSC Commission will use an additional week to determine the degree of community support for independently submitting a site proposal for the multibillion dollar project.

The commission's board of directors met in executive session for two and one-half hours Monday before announcing their decision to meet again June 8 in San Angelo to make a final decision on the fate of the Garden City site for the superconducting super collider.

"The thrust of the commission appears to be to move ahead if we can swing it in terms of funding support," said project manager Thane Akins. Akins added that while additional investment in the proposal could range anywhere "from $100,000 to a half million dollars, $150,000 to $200,000 is probably a more realistic figure."

"There was no consensus reached by the group and the decision to consider what action to take for another week was an appropriate one," board member and Midland Chamber of Commerce president Wayne Merritt said this morning.

The commission wants to gauge community support for independently submitting a site proposal.

"The decision to put out a considerable amount of additional money to take such a risk is difficult and must be made from a practical standpoint," Merritt added.

Additional third-party engineering reports received by the commission at Monday's meeting confirm the group's belief in the technical superiority of the site, Akins said.

In addition to gauging public sentiment regarding the SSC, commission members will use the week to determine what impact nominating the Garden City site could have on the political climate. There is the possibility of political backlash from offering an independent site, Akins said.

"We must consider that the odds are long — if not prohibitive — in submitting an independent site," said Merritt. However, it is up to the public to "lean back and assess" the merits of continuing the fight.

Odessa Mayor Don Carter commented after the board meeting that citizens' input is needed to determine popular support in making the decision to "proceed or fold our tent at this point and look for another outlet for the four-city cooperation we have built."

Akins speculated that the financial potential of the going directly to local citizens is "untapped because previous fund-raising efforts have not gone out for the broad-base appeal."

Merritt said he expects the Chamber of Commerce executive committee to take a position on the issue prior to Monday's meeting in San Angelo, but declined to speculate on what action that might be. "The issue is too important to this area for me to unduly influence public opinion at this point."

Asked if Garden City supporters are being "bad losers" in not dropping their fight to have the local site considered by the Department of Energy, Akins said, "No. If we had been beaten by a superior site, we would have walked away.

"But it is still the prevalent feeling on the board that we have a special site which the DOE should evaluate."

Legislature ends session only to open a new one

Lawmakers back at work on tort reform

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Capitol still reeked of stale beer and shrimp shells this morning as lawmakers stumbled back for a hastily called special session to consider civil justice reforms.

Tort reform advocates and lobbyists convinced Gov. Bill Clements to add a few more days to the legislative session to consider civil justice changes today.

The regular 140-day session ended Monday, but so-called tort reform died in the closing hour of the session when Sen. Craig Washington, a Houston Democrat, talked the House-Senate compromise bill to death in a filibuster.

Rep. Mike Toomey, the lead House tort reformer and a key adviser to the governor, joined with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis shortly after the session ended at midnight and convinced the Republican governor to keep the Legislature in Austin to finish its work on tort reform.

AUSTIN — The 70th Texas Legislature stumbled to a close at midnight Monday, placing all hopes for solving the state's 17-month-old fiscal fiasco into a special session to begin three weeks later.

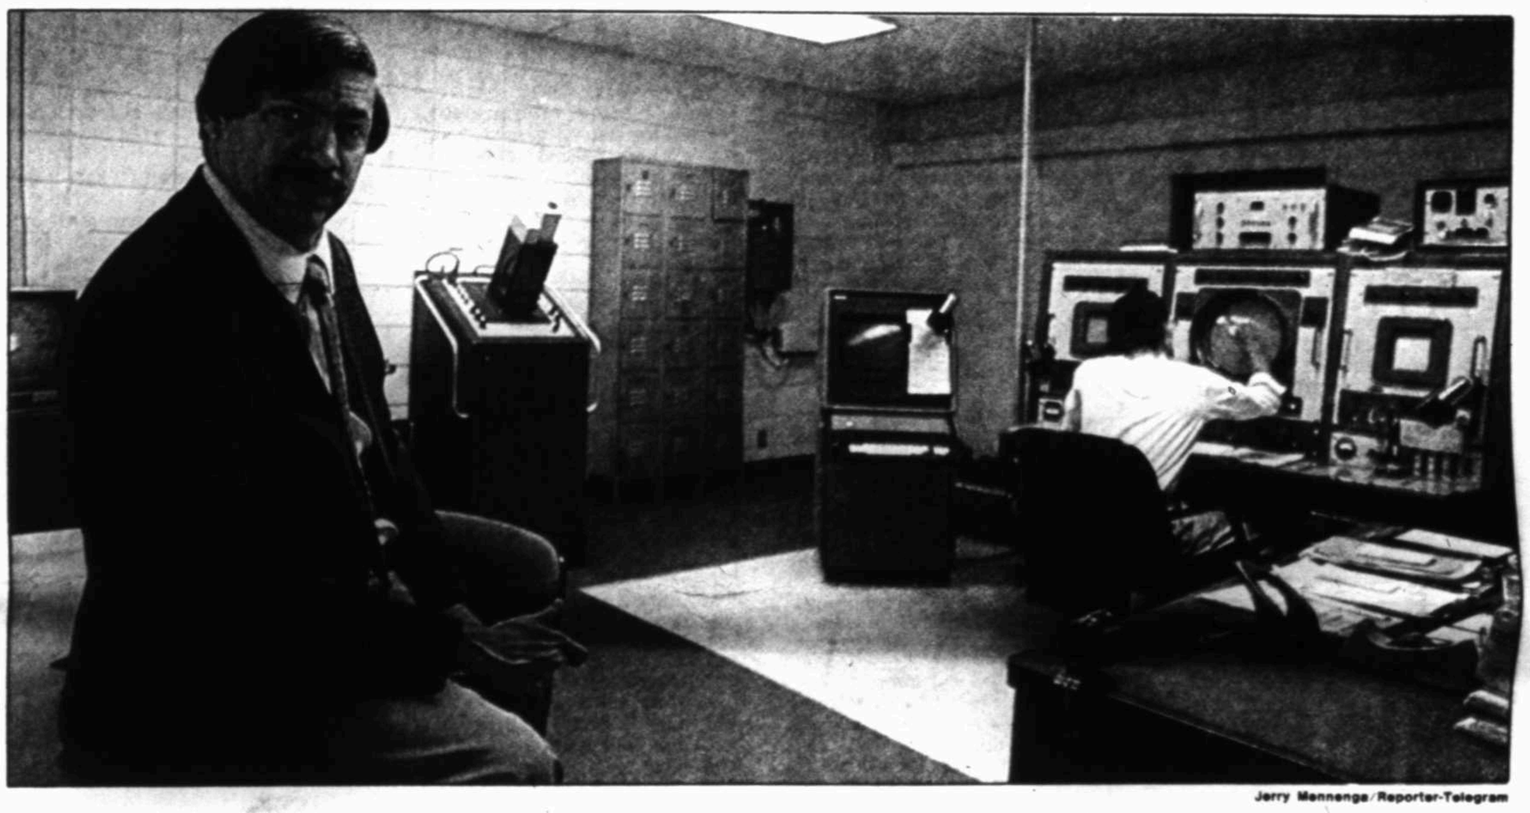

"I'll be seeing you, in all the old familiar places," Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, the House's self-proclaimed "fat lady," sang as the session came to a close, while the Senate filibustered the tort reform bill to death.

Although lawmakers returned this morning for what is expected to be a short special session on tort reform, Gov. Bill Clements said he still intends the Legislature to return June 22 to deal with the budget.

Despite spending 140 days trying to attack a projected $5.8 billion shortfall in the 1988-1989 budget, lawmakers approved neither a spending plan nor the taxes to support it. They adjourned the regular session without a general appropriations bill for the first time since 1961, when lawmakers returned in special session to institute the first Texas sales tax.

With Clements vetoing the only major tax bill passed (the motor fuels tax bill), and with Comptroller Bob Bullock hinting that he will once again slash his estimate of available revenues, the state finds itself perilously close to a "doomsday" cash-flow crisis when fiscal 1988 begins Sept. 1.

Wet weather from unusual front

By JAMILAH OWENS
Staff Writer

Over the past 17 days Midland and the surrounding West Texas area have been drenched by a tremendous amount of rainfall, humidity and, in general, bad weather. But, according to John Wright, meteorologist in charge at the National Weather Service, "this particular (weather) situation is gone. It moved out (Sunday) but...I'm not saying that it couldn't redevelop."

"The weather that the Midland area has been experiencing was caused by unstable atmospheric pressures combined with a flux of air, humidity and heat," said a Weather Service spokesperson.

"The atmosphere was like a war zone with two opposing forces and neither one of them wanted to give. So, everyday we stayed right in the middle of it," said Wright.

While Wright acknowledged weather systems of this type are typical for May, it is surprising the storm situation persisted so long. And instead of getting the rain a little at a time, it fell day after day.

In the midst of the wet weather, much of Midland and the surrounding area remains unaffected.

Cotton, one of Texas' chief crops and part of the Midland area economy, has been only slightly affected by the rain. According to the manager of Midland's Farmer's Co-op Gin, Charlie Wright, the farmers are "not complaining about the rain" although it has damaged a small percentage of the crop with some farmers losing a "couple of plantings" (having to replant a crop several times).

Volcker will step down; Greenspan to take post

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — President Reagan announced today that Paul A. Volcker will step down as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in August and that economist Alan Greenspan will be nominated for the post.

The announcement momentarily stunned financial markets, but they recovered quickly.

Volcker, appearing with Reagan and Greenspan at a White House briefing, said he was relinquishing the post voluntarily after eight years. "I had no feeling I was being pushed," he said.

Accepting the resignation, Reagan said, "I accept Mr. Volcker's decision with great reluctance and regret."

Reagan said.

The nomination of Greenspan,s chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers from under President Ford and now a New York economic consultant, came on the eve of Reagan's departure for next week's seven-nation economic summit in Venice.

Analysts had suggested that Reagan wanted to make the announcement in advance of the summit, so that the post would not become a summit issue.

"Filling Paul Volcker's shoes will be a major challenge," said Greenspan, 61.

Volcker, 59, the cigar-smoking, six-foot-seven Fed chairman who had won wide respect from leaders around the world, told reporters, "I think the time has now come to return to private life."

He said the decision to step down had been taking shape in his mind for some time.

Volcker, who is credited by many economists with playing a key role in forumlating policies that helped bring inflation down from its double-digit levels of the early 1980s to its current levels of less than 3-percent, voiced "happiness and delight" with the selection of Greenspan as his successor.

U.S. financial markets were initially jolted by the bombshell announcement because of the widely held belief that the administration would ask Volcker to serve a third, four-year term.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average dropped 24 points in the minutes after Reagan's announcement that Volcker was stepping down, but quickly recovered that loss and was up around 4 points an hour later.

"The immediate reaction is clearly negative," said Hugh A. Johnson, senior vice president at First Albany Corp., an investment firm in Albany, N.Y. "The system really gets shaken when they do something like this."

But other analysts were amazed that the surprise announcement was not causing more turmoil in the markets. The dollar stabilized soon after the news was announced as did bond prices, indicating to some observors at least cautious approval of the decision.

Lacy Hunt, chief economist of Caroll McEntee & McGinley Inc., a major New York dealer of government securities, said Greenspan will face "a challenging assignment with regard to both stabilizing the dollar and containing the inflationary upsurge now underway."

He called Greenspan "a first-rate economist," but he also said Greenspan "is not the choice of the financial markets either at home or abroad because he obviously doesn't have the experience or stature of Volcker."

Greenspan, asked repeatedly about his stance on inflation and the dollar and the effect of his appointment on the value of the dollar, told reporters:

Abrams believed North's assertion he wasn't soliciting aid

Iran-Contra Affair

WASHINGTON (AP) — Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams testified today that, at the urging of Secretary of State George Shultz, he made a note to "monitor Ollie" to determine whether White House aide Oliver L. North was soliciting military aid for Nicaraguan rebels.

But Abrams told the joint House-Senate hearings on the Iran-Contra affair that he was convinced at the time — based partly on North's personal assurances — that North was not soliciting arms for the Contras.

Under questioning at the congressional Iran-Contra hearings, Abrams recalled that Shultz made the point at a meeting on Sept. 4, 1985, that "we don't want to be in the dark" about North's activities on behalf of the Contra rebels. Abrams, 38, head the State Department's Latin American division.

At the time, Congress had prohibited all direct or indirect U.S. military aid to the Contras.

On Shultz's instructions, Abrams said, he made a note to "monitor Ollie," and added that "monitoring Ollie is not an activity you do in one morning — it's a behavior pattern."

At a news conference today, Shultz said he had "complete confidence" in Abrams. "He's a person of tremendous energy and integrity, and I am sure he will emerge in that light," Shultz said.

Abrams said that he had assurances from North that he was not making any illegal solicitations for Contra arms aid and had checked his activities with the White House counsel. Abrams also that noted national security adviser Robert McFarlane's similar assurances to Congress.

He said he thought North was simply keeping track of the efforts of various private Americans to aid the rebels.

Abrams also testified that "at no time whatsoever" did he instruct Lewis Tambs, former U.S. ambassador in Costa Rica, to help establish a "southern front" of armed resistance in Nicaragua.

Tambs testified last week that he received such instructions from North shortly before he assumed his diplomatic post in Costa Rica in July 1985.

Abrams contradicted Tambs' testimony that instructions to open a southern military front for the Contras came from a three-member, inter-agency group in Washington chaired by Abrams. Tambs said the group, known as the Restricted Inter-agency Group, also included North and the chief of the CIA's Central American Task Force, Alan Fiers.

Abrams said Tambs' job was to remain in contact with significant elements of the Nicaraguan rebels who were in Costa Rica, but not to get involved in guerrilla operations within neighboring Nicaragua.

On another point of controversy surrounding his previous testimony, Abrams said today that it was in August or September 1985 that he first learned of the construction of a secret airstrip in northern Costa Rica using funds provided by "private benefactors."

He said he could not remember whether he learned about the airstrip from North or the CIA, and testified that he did not know whether the CIA station chief if Costa Rica was involved in the project.

One in 30 men already face AIDS

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

WASHINGTON — One in 30 of all young and middle-aged men in the United States is already infected with the AIDS virus, a top AIDS expert estimated today.

Dr. James Curran, director of the AIDS program at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, said a major program is beginning an accurate assessment of how many Americans carry the lethal virus.

However, he said he accepts an estimate released a year ago by the Public Health Service that perhaps 1.5 million people in the United States are infected. Curran said this would mean that one in 30 men between the ages of 20 and 50 are already infected.

"That's a lot of men, and one in 30 is a very high number," he said.

House wants details of Persian Gulf plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan would have to provide Congress with new details about U.S. plans in the Persian Gulf under terms of a bill which House Speaker Jim Wright says is likely to be approved by the House.

The Democratic-controlled chamber was to consider the measure, which has bipartisan support, today.

Meanwhile, President Reagan said Monday he will bring up the question of allied help in protecting oil tankers in the gulf when he meets with other Western leaders at next week's summit in Venice.

In a speech spelling out his goals for the meeting, Reagan said, "We will be discussing the common security interests shared by Western democracies in the Persian Gulf."

He noted the deaths aboard the USS Stark when it was hit by an Iraqi missile and said the sailors died "while guarding a chokepoint of freedom, deterring aggression and reaffirming America's willingness to protect its vital interests. Yet, the American people are aware that it is not our interests alone that are being protected."

Wright, D-Texas, said of the Persian Gulf legislation, "I think it will pass and pass by a substantial bipartisan vote." In an interview, he noted that the measure is backed by leaders of both parties. It is co-sponsored by Wright and Republican leader Bob Michel, R-Ill.

If it passes the House, the bill will goes to the Senate, also controlled by Democrfats, where a vote is likely later in the week. Passage in that chamber is also expected since Senate Democratic and Republican leaders back the bill.

Reagan's aides have said he will sign the bill, which was worked out to satisfy congressional complaints last week that Reagan had not adequately consulted with Capitol Hill about his plans for the gulf.

Legislators were worried about Reagan's plan to put U.S. flags and captains on Kuwaiti tankers, bringing the ships under the protection of the United States. Iraq and Iran have been fighting a long, bloody war. Kuwait is a strong ally of Iraq.

The congressional fears rose in the wake of the May 17 Iraqi missile attack on the Navy frigate Stark, which killed 37 American seamen.

"This is not putting the House on record for or against the president's policy," said Wright. "It puts the Congress on record as needing more information. I want to see what the report says before I can say how I feel."

In other developments Monday regarding U.S. policy in the Persian Gulf:

— Former President Jimmy Carter said the administration moves are a clear signal that America is siding with Iraq and they raise the chance of drawing the United States into the war.

"After our ridiculous sale of arms to Iran and the worldwide uproar because of that embarrassing mistake, I think we have tended to shift now toward Iraq," Carter said in an interview in a Washington hotel. "Kuwait is aligned with Iraq. We are making Kuwaiti ships part of the American merchant fleet, and I think this is a clear signal to the combatants that we have chosen sides."

— The son of the late Shah of Iran warned that if the United States is drawn into the Iran-Iraq conflict, it would inspire Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, adding to the "fanatic's war dance and liturgy." Reza Pahlavi, 26, at a luncheon meeting in Washington, asked the United States and the Soviet Union both to apply pressure on Iran to end the conflict.

— Sens. John Glenn and John Warner arrived in Kuwait on Monday from Saudi Arabia, where they were reportedly told that the kingdom would prefer to see the Persian Gulf free of superpower military intervention. Glenn, D-Ohio, and Warner, R-Va., are on a tour exploring U.S.-Arab action to protect gulf shipping.

— U.S, Navy officials said they sent a guided-missile cruiser to escort a repair ship into the Persian Gulf to work on the Stark because 250 officers and sailors on the roughly 1,300-member crew are women. "It was a precaution and that's why we did it, because of the female complement," one official said Monday, requesting anonymity. The destroyer tender Acadia was escorted to Bahrain by the cruiser Fox, now the largest U.S. warship in the gulf.

The House bill on the Persian Gulf would require the White House to send Congress a report within seven days after Reagan signs the law.

The report, which would include both classified and unclassified portions, would require an assessment of the military threat to U.S. forces and details of the administration's effort to enlist U.S. allies in the effort to protect gulf shipping.

It would also provide details about the "rules of engagement," the military term covering situations under which the Navy ships could use their weapons. The Stark didn't fire back when it was attacked.

The report is similar to information requested by the Senate 10 days ago when it gave 91-5 approval to another proposal. But that vote attached the report requirement to an unrelated appropriations bill and the bill is unlikely to become law for some time.

The U.S. protection is expected to be extended later this month, Wright noted.

Tender's female crew ratio credited for larger escort

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON — Navy officials say they sent a larger ship than usual to escort a tender into the Persian Gulf to work on the USS Stark because nearly one-fifth of the repair ship's 1,300-member crew is female.

The guided-missile cruiser Fox was temporarily detailed away from a battle group supporting the aircraft carrier Constellation in the Indian Ocean to escort the tender. Ordinarily, one of the smaller frigates or destroyers already in the gulf would have been used.

"It was a precaution and that's why we did it, because of the female complement," one official said Monday, requesting anonymity.

"There would normally be some kind of escort because the tender is unarmed. But we didn't want to take any chances."

The officials agreed to discuss the matter after the destroyer tender USS Acadia, which carries about 240 female officers and sailors among its crew, arrived safely in Bahrain to begin repairs on the Stark. A May 17 Iraqi missile attack killed 37 sailors aboard the Stark and damaged it badly.

The Navy declined comment when asked about the propriety of sending female sailors into the troubled gulf region. But a ranking officer who requested anonymity denied the service was ignoring prohibitions against women serving in combat-related jobs.

"This is not a combat zone and the Acadia is not a combat ship," said the official. "And she is not going to be steaming around the gulf. She is going to be tied up in port in Bahrain working on the Stark."

"You can't have it both ways," another official added. "If women are going to be allowed to go to sea on support ships, then they have to be available to go wherever that ship is needed. And the Acadia is needed in Bahrain."

The tender is expected to remain in Bahrain for at least six weeks repairing the Stark so that it can sail home.

Questions about the composition of the Acadia's crew arose with the revelation that a cruiser had accompanied the ship through the lower gulf to Manama, Bahrain, where the Stark has been tied up since shortly after it was attacked.

The use of such a large warship to escort a tender was unexpected, since smaller frigates and destroyers are already in the gulf.

The Pentagon officials said Monday the Navy had originally planned to send the Fox back through the Strait of Hormuz today to the northern Arabian Sea to await the arrival of the Constellation.

For the time being, then, the Fox is the largest warship among the U.S. vessels in the gulf. A so-called Belknap-class cruiser, it is more than twice as heavy as the Stark, a guided-missile frigate.

In related developments, the sources said Monday the Constellation and the remainder of its battle group would depart the island of Diego Garcia in mid-week to sail for the northern Arabian Sea.

The carrier will not move into the Persian Gulf itself, but it will take up station not far away and maintain its jet fighters in a high state of readiness to support operations in the gulf, the sources said.

SESSION

Blaming fingers, which had pointed in all directions for the past month, suddenly withdrew Monday.

After meeting with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby for the first time since May 20, Republican Clements relaxed what had been a constant barrage of criticism toward Democrat Hobby.

"I don't think at this point that it would be constructive to get too harsh about the budget and so forth," Clements said. "We're going to have a special session. And hopefully we'll solve the budget in the special session."

House Speaker Gib Lewis blamed only the magnitude of the problem.

"I would argue with you that this session has been a failure," Lewis said. "I don't think in the 20-some-odd years since that period of time we've ever been confronted with a $5 billion deficit or with a differential as far as the numbers concerned as we are this session."

Hobby said taxpayers should not be angry over the inaction. "It's a very difficult situation with the economy in transition, and the experience we're having has not been different from that of other states that have had the same problems," he said.

Tax plans for the special session focused on extending — for at least two more years — the "temporary" sales and gasoline tax increases lawmakers passed last summer, on asking the voters to approve a special sales tax for prisons and on a state-run lottery. "I think all the pieces are there if we can just get our heads together and all start talking about the same thing," Clements said.

The governor said he would like to see lawmakers write a two-year appropriations bill that spends about $27 billion in state funds. That figure is $1.2 billion above his original plan, about $1 billion less than the House's spending bill and $1.8 billion below the Senate version.

Both Clements and Lewis ruled out any attempts at broader tax reform during the special session. Senators, who tried to retain leverage for tax reform by blocking attempts to make the 5.25-percent sales tax rate permanent, said they would give in on that issue but not on spending.

"We're not going to cut the funding for public education and higher education and social programs to the governor's level, we're not going to do that," said Sen. Bob Glasgow, chairman of the Senate's Tax Policy Subcommittee. "An inequitable tax is probably better than no public schools."

Both the House and Senate passed a bill permanently boosting the state gasoline tax from 10 to 15 cents a gallon. Clements, however, vetoed that because lawmakers didn't send him a bill that permanently sets the sales tax at 5.25 percent.

The House and Senate could not agree on the sales tax measure, and it died in the closing hours.

"I met with the governor and he said, 'If you don't make those taxes permanent, I'm going to veto the gasoline tax,' " Glasgow said. "My response was, 'Governor, make my day.' "

Together the two bills would have brought in $2.9 billion for the 1988-1989 budget cycle.

Bullock said Monday evening he has to wait for the Legislature to finish its business and Clements to decide whether to sign or veto several bills before he can issue an official revenue estimate for the special session. Hobby said last week he expects Bullock to chop at least a half billion dollars from what lawmakers will have to spend.

"It's a reduction, but I'd hate to say what," Bullock said.

Treasurer Ann Richards must borrow about $1 billion in short-term loans by late summer to keep the state solvent through the end of the calendar year when tax collections should pick up. "They have got to get a balanced budget and whatever it takes to pay for it by the first part of August," Ms. Richards said, explaining that she needs about three weeks to complete the loan transactions.

"The reason that I don't want to say this day or that day is that we are going to do everything in the world we can to avoid issuing warrants that we don't have the money to pay for," she said. "I mean, we will stand on our heads."

Once into the special session, lawmakers will need two-thirds support in both chambers for a tax bill to bring it into effect before the Sept. 1 start of the tax year. "It's going to be difficult to do," Speaker Lewis admitted.

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, said the prospect of Treasury checks bouncing will pressure all sides into acting. "The theory that the Senate seems to have is that we point our finger at the governor and everybody will believe it's the governor's fault," Schlueter said.

"I don't think in that situation the public's going to look at anybody but everybody."

When the final bell rang, lawmakers had passed two minor tax bills — ironically, decreasing state revenue. While a 3-percent bingo tax should bring in about $12.3 million, repeal of the sales tax on newspaper subscriptions will cost the state nearly $33 billion.

TORT

Tort reform proponents — a powerful coalition of business, professional and governmental groups — saw their program fall apart when Washington filibustered Monday night. Clements had said tort reform would be on the agenda of the already-announced June 22 special session that will deal primarily on the budget crisis. But after meeting with pro-tort reform groups early Tuesday morning, Clements decided to keep lawmakers in town.

The every-two-year session ended in 1987 as it did in 1985, when then-Gov. Mark White called lawmakers back into special session when conservative House members killed an indigent health care plan — now in law — in the final minutes of the regular session.

"After much deliberations, and with the solid recommendations of the lieutenant governor and the speaker, we will meet again in the morning at 11 O'-Clock to consider tort reform," Clements announced at 1:15 a.m. this morning.

"I expect this to be done in a very timely fashion," the governor said. Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said the Senate and House could address civil justice changes within two-to-three days.

The Texas Civil Justice League, the tort reform lobby, pressed the state's top leadership for a quick special session of their package. After hearing the news that Clements wanted lawmakers back immediately, tort reform lobbyists cheered and thanked Lewis.

Tort reform advocates say the Texas court system favors injured people and awards them too much money, in turn increasing liabilty insurance premiums. Opponents, which include the Texas Trial Lawyers Association and consumer groups, call tort reform a ploy by big-money corporations to reduce their responsibility. They deny that higher insurance rates are caused by the court system.

Tort reform seemed dead until Hobby brought a House-Senate conference committee back to the negotiating table Monday evening. The committee ironed out differences and voted out a compromise bill. The House overwhelmingly approved the bill, but Washington's filibuster kept the Senate from voting on the measure.

"If things go the way I'd like for them to go, we should be out no later than Wednesday," Lewis said.

HEARING

He acknowledged raising the airstrip in a fall 1985 meeting with the CIA station chief and two other agency officials in Costa Rica and that the station chief was so surprised "I thought he was going to have a cardiac." But Abrams attributed the official's shock to his desire not to inform the other two officials about the airfield.

The station chief had told the hearings last week that he was surprised Abrams even knew about the project.

Abrams said he never asked Tambs to consult the Costa Rican government about the airstrip because Abrams did not want to be accused of violating the congressional aid ban by "facilitating" an arrangement between Costa Rica and "private benefactors" who were financing construction of the airfield.

Abrams also said he never reported learning of the airstrip to Shultz. Asked why not, he replied that it was "not important," because the private benefactors were "doing all sorts of things" in the region.

But Abrams testified later that he ordered Tambs in September 1986 to pressure Costa Rican President Oscar Arias to cancel a planned news conference that would have disclosed the existence of the airstrip by threatened to called off Arias' scheduled visit to the United States.

Abrams said the issue was not U.S. involvement in the airstrip project but rather the sensitivity of Costa Rica's involvement in the Nicaraguan resistance.

Discussing Tambs' testimony last week about the inter-agency group known as the RIG, Abrams said, "He doesn't know what he's talking about, and he never attended a RIG meeting."

Tambs told the hearings that Abrams took a close interest in efforts to supply assistance to the Contras. Tambs said this interest included construction of a secret airstrip in northern Costa Rica and the opening up of a "southern front" of Nicaraguan rebels seeking the overthrow of the leftist Sandinista government in Managua.

As the hearings entered their fifth week, Abrams testified, under oath but without immunity, that the RIG's primary purpose was to share information and opinions. He said the group had about 15 members from various government agencies.

Abrams said he had five to seven meetings with North and Fiers in order to minimize conflicts between them over how to deal with the Contras. He said they were the two officials with the greatest knowledge of the Contra leaders "there was a certain degree of rivalry" between the two.

Tambs testified that he followed instructions from Abrams and North at a time in 1985 and 1986 when Congress had banned all U.S. military aid to the Nicaraguan insurgents. He said he was told to facilitate the opening of a southern front for the Contras.

Abrams said today he was aware of the ban, set forth in the Boland Amendment, and assumed that the aid ban applied to all U.S. government agencies.

POST

"I have to go for Senate confirmation and I intend to withhold substantive comment until that time."

Greenspan was asked how long it took him to accept the position, offered the day before. "Milliseconds," he said.

"The economy at the moment looks reasonably strong" and is likely to remain so for the "indefinite future," Greenspan said.

Asked about the chances of a U.S recession, Greenspan said:

"At the moment, I must say to you, I don't see any evidence of that."

WEATHER

It is safe to say that "one half of the crop is up and coming," said Wright. "With only two weeks left in the cotton crop planting season, sunshine would be welcome."

Mary Stillwell, store manager at Wolfe Nursery, said the "rainfall was much needed. The overflow of rain water will leach the salts in the soil, so that a nicer foliage will result this year."

Asked how the weather affected the streets, Jack Burns, assistant street superintendent, commented that the "drainage system did what it was supposed to do." However, he added, "The rain increased the number of potholes and other street deterioration. Also, the rain delayed a sealcoat project and the maintenance of unpaved alleys."

Overall, rain like that the Permian Basin has experienced during the past few weeks is not likely to return in the immediate future, but as a NWS spokesman said Monday afternoon, the "weather can be very unpredictable."

By 1991, he said AIDS will be second only to accidents as a cause of premature death among American men. Currently, the disease ranks eighth.

Meanwhile, new research from around the world shows AIDS is spreading steadily among heterosexuals, and one study suggests that the ability of AIDS victims to infect others climbs dramatically as their disease gets worse.

Among the findings reported at the Third International Conference on AIDS was one by Belgian scientists concerning a 48-year-old engineer who gave AIDS to 10 women before dying of the disease himself in July 1986.

"The reality that heterosexual contact is an efficient mode of transmission (of AIDS) is established," said Dr. Robert Redfield of the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington. "It is the major mode of transmission in the world and it will become the major mode in this country."

AIDS testing of military men and women has found, furthermore, that half of those with AIDS infections are single and half are married.

"This is no longer a disease of singles," he said. "It's a disease of the American family."

Redfield reported Monday that the ability to transmit the virus is lower in the earliest stages of the disease, but climbs sharply as the disease progresses.

He studied couples in which one partner was infected with the AIDS virus and the other was not. In 19 couples in which one partner had a mild, pre-AIDS illness, three uninfected partners, or 16 percent of the total, became infected through heterosexual contact.

In 25 couples in which one partner had advanced AIDS, however, 14 uninfected partners, or 56 percent, became infected, Redfield said.

Another study by Margaret Fischl of the University of Miami found that the disease was spread through vaginal intercourse in 81 percent of couples in which one partner had advanced AIDS, Redfield said.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which damages the body's ability to ward off disease, had struck 35,990 Americans as of May 25, killing 20,798 of them, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Only 4 percent of those AIDS victims acquired the disease through heterosexual contact. But Redfield pointed out that 26.5 percent of the AIDS victims are heterosexuals who may have contracted AIDS through shared hypodermic needles or blood transfusions but are now capable of passing it on heterosexually.

The case of the Belgian engineer was reported by Nathan Clumeck and colleagues at the St. Pierre University Hospital in Brussels. The engineer, who traveled regularly between Belgium and Central Africa, had had heterosexual contact with Belgians and with Africans, the researchers said.

Peter Piot of the Institute of Tropical Medicine in Antwerp, Belgium, said heterosexual contact was the source of spread for one-third of 80 cases of AIDS studied in Belgium.

Other studies reporting heterosexual spread of AIDS included one by the U.S. Navy in which eight of 28 Navy and Marine Corps personnel with AIDS infections passed the infection to their spouses, an infection rate of 29 percent.

A Swiss group reported that 11 of 165 cases of AIDS in Switzerland are believed to have occurred through heterosexual contact.

A British study found that among 30 hemophiliacs with AIDS infections, only one passed it on to a sexual partner. Redfield said that occurred probably because the hemophiliacs did not have advanced AIDS infections and thus were less able to transmit the disease.

A New York study of 65 heterosexuals coming to a clinic for treatment of other sexually transmitted diseases found that none was infected with AIDS, even though 10 had had heterosexual contact with intravenous drug abusers, who are at high risk of AIDS, and the other 55 had an average of 15 different sexual partners since 1978.

Piot said the study did not mean heterosexuals were not at risk of AIDS. "The chance you'd find AIDS in 65 people is not very high," he said.

In other developments at the AIDS conference:

— A French study of AIDS victims found that many keep heir disease secret, because "refusing help and support and continuing a normal life symbolizes hope." But the stress of silent suffering led to anxiety, insomnia, depression and membry problems, the researchers said.

Corrections

In Monday's edition, the Reporter-Telegram incorrectly reported that a Midland couple was traveling in a 1981 Pontiac and a Big Spring man was driving a 1981 Buick when their cars collided Sunday at the intersection of State Highway 158 and County Road 1213.

According to Texas Department of Public Safety reports, Glen and Anne Lawson were traveling east in a 1981 Buick when their car collided with a with a 1981 Pontiac driven by Gonzalo Sauceda of Big Spring.

The "City Sidewalks" column in Sunday's editin erroneously reported that city administrators wrote off more than $600 in uncollectable water bills during the past four years.

In fact, the number written off was more than $600,000.

29 monks, four others killed in Tamil ambush

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Tamil separatist guerrillas ambushed a bus in eastern Sri Lanka and fatally shot 33 people, including 29 saffron-robed Buddhist monks, the government said today.

More than 50 assailants dressed in military uniforms and armed with automatic weapons stopped the bus near a village about 125 miles east of Colombo on Monday night, a military official said. The attackers ordered the monks and four others out of the bus and shot them to death, he said.

At least 11 other bus passengers were wounded, the official said, speaking on condition he not be identified. He did not say if they were monks or lay people.

He said the monks were returning from an ordination ceremony in a nearby village. A government statement said the bus was traveling to the Buddhist city of Kandy.

Arantalawa, the village where the ambush took place, was raided Feb. 7 by Tamil guerrillas who killed 28 Sinhalese civilians.

Last month, a similar bus ambush killed 127 people and a car bombing at a crowded bus station left as many as 180 people dead. The government blamed those two attacks on Tamil rebels.

Monday's attack came as the Sri Lankan army was battling Tamil militants in the far northern Jaffna Peninsula in its most successful drive to destroy guerrilla bases there and end the 4-year-old civil war.

Tamils, who are mostly Hindus, make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's population of 16 million. They allege discrimination by the Sinhalese Buddhists, who make up 75 percent and control the government and army. Most Tamils seek some degree of autonomy for the northern and eastern provinces, but the militants demand an independent homeland.

The massacre of the monks was announced today as Sri Lanka's Cabinet met in emergency session to discuss a diplomatic crisis with India.

India Monday delivered a statement to Sri Lankan Foreign Minister Shahul Hameed charging that "hundreds" of Tamil civilians were dying in the military raids in Jaffna, and others were "suffering extreme hardship" because of the government's fuel blockade of the peninsula.

It said India's Red Cross would begin sending food and medicine by boat Wednesday to the city of Jaffna, just off India's southern coast.

India's government radio announced today that the goods were already being loaded on boats.

The Sri Lankan government said today that it "strongly objects to any unilateral action by the government of India and any such action will be considered a violation of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Sri Lanka."

About 60 million Tamils live in southern India, and India serves as exile headquarters for the major Tamil rebel groups.

A senior Sri Lankan official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said India's announcement had caused relations to plunge to their lowest level since the two countries became independent from Britain 40 years ago.

Official's death unifies warring factions

Hoss

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Christians joined Moslems in a nationwide strike today to protest the assassination of Prime Minister Rashid Karami, who was killed when a bomb exploded inside his military helicopter.

Schools, shops, cafes, banks, the airport and other businesses were closed in Beirut's Moslem and Christian sectors in a rare display of unity for a nation deeply divided by a 12-year-long civil war.

The strike also was general in other cities, including Karami's hometown of Tripoli in northern Lebanon, where his body lay in state awaiting a state funeral Wednesday, two days after his death.

Army Commander Gen. Micel Aoun placed the military on maximum alert and army spokesmen said all leaves were canceled. There were fears the assassination would trigger an upsurge of sectarian fighting.

However, the army's abilities to maintain order are limited, as much of Lebanon is controlled by rival militias or foreign forces, predominantly Syrian. Israel and Iran also have forces in parts of Lebanon.

President Amin Gemayel named Salim Hoss, 59, the education and social affairs minister, to temporarily fill Karami's post, which has lost much of its power because of the war. Hoss, like Karami, is a Sunni Moslem, in keeping with an unwritten national agreement that reserves the presidency for a Christian and the prime minister's post for a Sunni.

Karami, 65, was killed Monday morning when a bomb hidden in an attache case on his lap blew up as he flew in a helicopter from Tripoli to Beirut. Four others suffered minor injuries, including Interior Minister Abdullah Rassi.

Senior army officers said the explosion ripped through the helicopter's left side about 10 minutes after it left Kubbeh army base in Tripoli for Beirut. Coroner Joseph Soto said Karami's heart and kidneys were destroyed, and his ribs were "smashed and shredded."

Mourners carry the coffin of Lebanese Prime Minister Rashid Karami on their shoulders in his hometown of Tripoli, Lebanon, Monday, just a few hours after he was killed by a bomb planted in an army helicopter.

The army officers said the explosives were placed in the prime minister's attache case and that it was lying in his lap. A military explosives expert, Warrant Officer Youssef Bitar, said the bomb weighed 10½ ounces.

An army command spokesman today reaffirmed Bitar's statement and denied local newspaper reports that a six-pound bomb had gone off behind Karami's seat. No official report has been issued.

Weeping supporters Monday afternoon removed Karami's coffin from an ambulance in Tripoli, hoisted it on their shoulders and led a procession through the streets to his home near the Mediterranean sea, about three miles away.

"Allah akbar, Allah akbar!" — "God is great" — some chanted.

Karami is to be buried near his father, Abdul-Hamid Karami, Lebanon's prime minister in 1945.

Gemayel, a Maronite Catholic, declared a week of mourning, and somber music was broadcast on radios.

A 10-time prime minister, Karami was a staunch backer of Syria, and asked Damascus this year to send troops to Moslem west Beirut to quell factional fighting. Since about 7,500 Syrian troops moved in on Feb. 22, more than 120 dynamite attacks have been staged in west Beirut in apparent protest.

It still was not clear today who killed the prime minister. A man identifying himself as Capt. Hammoud told a Western news agency the bombing was carried out by the Lebanese Secret Army, a previously unknown group.

The caller, speaking in Arabic, said: "We are not going to spare any Lebanese politician who betrays his country and people." But police dismissed the call as a hoax.

Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon, denounced the bombing as a "major tragedy and an odious crime," and ordered three days of mourning.

The assassination of Karami, Lebanon's longest-serving prime minister, further dimmed prospects for ending the civil war, which has claimed 125,000 lives and ravaged the economy of the former hub of Middle East commerce.

Karami was prime minister when civil war broke out between Moslems and Christians in 1975.

When he took office most recently in 1984 he formed a half-Christian, half-Moslem Cabinet, including leaders of the major warring militias, in an effort to end the civil war and promote unity. But the Cabinet was too divided to take action.

Only last month Karami sought to resign from his post, citing the Cabinet's failure to resolve Lebanon's economic crisis. But he failed to submit his resignation to Gemayel, as required by the constitution.

Despite recent feuds with the prime minister, Gemayel eulogized him as "a rare, historic statesman who tirelessly strove for Lebanon's salvation."

Lebanese Forces, the right-wing Christian militia that bitterly opposed Karami for his pro-Syrian leanings, also denounced the assassination.

Moslems make up about 55 percent of Lebanon's 4 million people, and have been fighting for an equal share of power with the nation's Christians.

Fijians shoot out tires of jeep carrying envoys

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — Fijian soldiers today shot out the tires of a jeep in which two British diplomats were traveling after the envoys refused to let them search the vehicle, the Australian Associated Press reported.

No one was hurt, the news agency said.

It said the shooting occurred when British Consul Jim Liddell and assistant defense adviser Lt. Col. Mike Busby tried to drive away from the dock area of Suva harbor after visiting a ship.

Britain's deputy high commissioner, Rod Pullen, said High Commissioner Roger Baritrop had made a strong verbal protest to Fiji's Foreign Affairs Department, and that a strong-worded written protest would follow.

AAP said that as Liddell and Busby drove up to a military checkpoint at the exit from the docks, they were stopped by soldiers with rifles who demanded to search the car.

The diplomats refused, saying the vehicle was immune from search under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, AAP quoted Pullen as saying.

The diplomats asked the sergeant in charge of the soldiers to contact his superior and the British High Commission, but he refused to do so, Pullen was quoted as saying.

After a 40-minute argument, Liddell started to move the vehicle, but stopped when asked to do so, the news agency quoted Pullen as saying. Two soldiers then fired their rifles at one rear and one front tire.

More than an hour later, Pullen negotiated the release of the diplomats and the jeep, which was towed away to have its tires repaired, AAP said.

Pullen was quoted as saying that Liddle and Busby at all times obeyed the soldiers' instructions. He said the vehicle was not searched.

It was the first confirmed shooting by soldiers since a military coup on May 14 that overthrew the elected government of Prime Minister Timoci Bavadra.

Ex-Beatle makes party honoring 'Sgt. Pepper'

LONDON (AP) — Paul McCartney, the only former Beatle to attend a 20th anniversary party for the influential "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" album, said time hasn't diminished its catchiness or relevance.

McCartney, the gifted composer who turns 45 on June 18, bounded up the steps into the Abbey Road Studios in west London Monday for a party in the building where the songs for the album were performed in flower-power 1967.

"It still sounds fresh," he said, listening once again to the Beatles' record that sold 30 million copies.

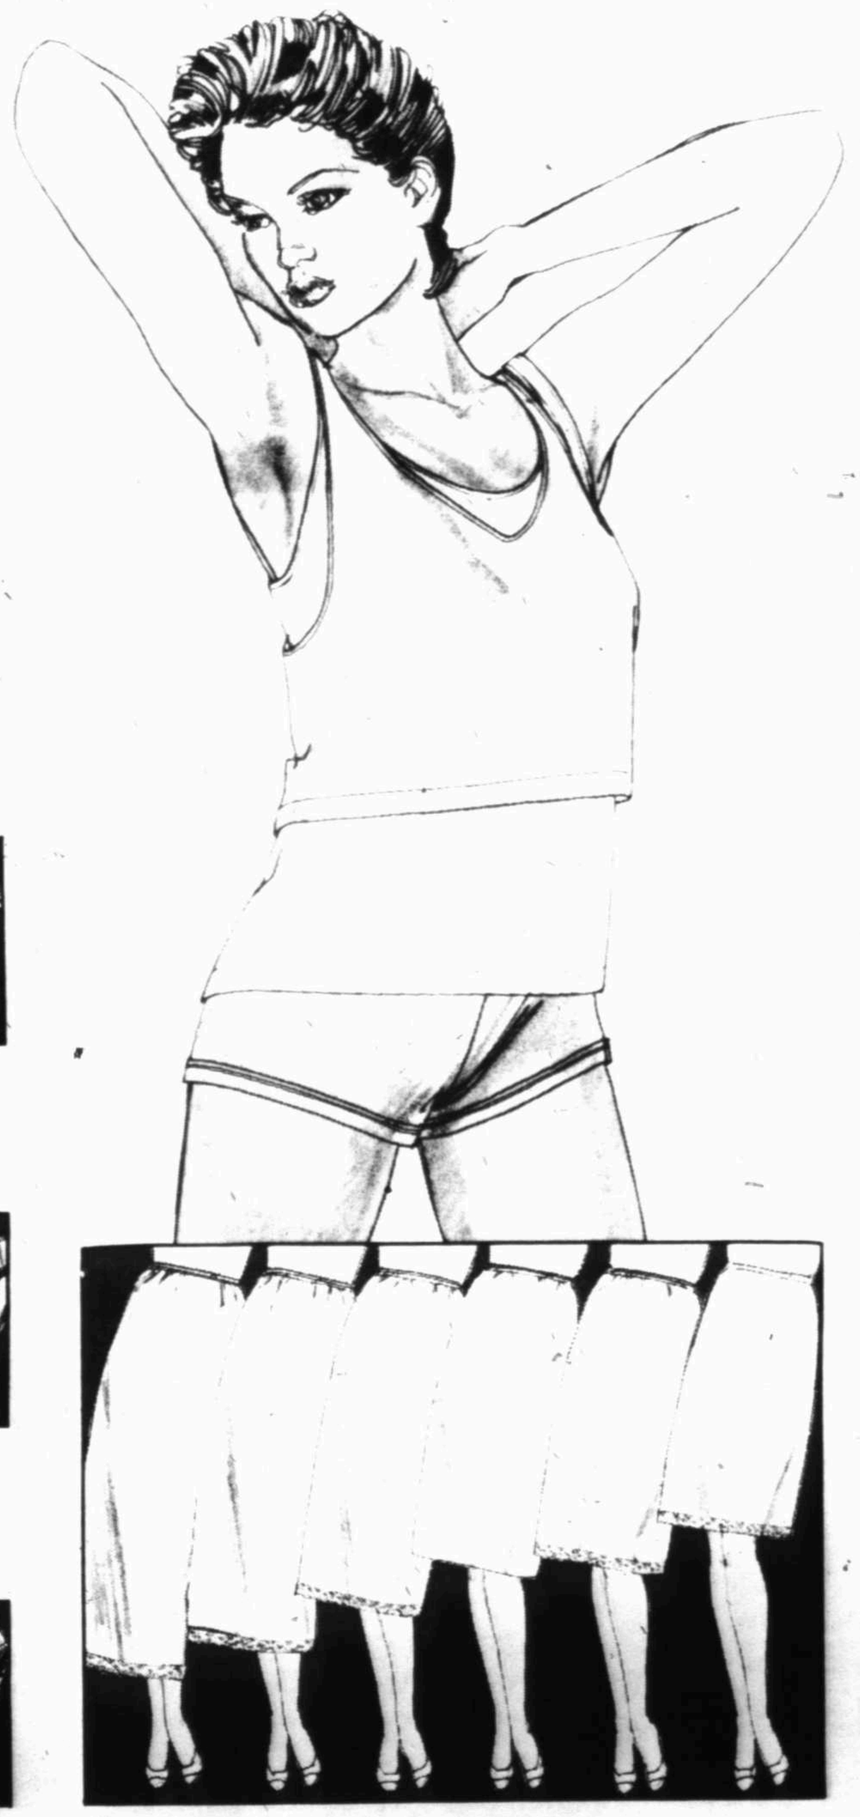

"Was it really 20 years ago that we made the record?" he said.

"Not an awful lot has changed" since then, he said. "The issues are the same. Then we wanted the end of apartheid in South Africa. We wanted peace on earth, love and understanding between everyone around the world."

"We have learned that change comes slowly. But we have to keep our faith, keep pushing and hope we have better news to report 20 years from today."

The Beatles, whose first hit came in 1962 with "Love Me Do," issued "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" on June 1, 1967. Its hits included the title song, "A Day in the Life," "Lovely Rita" and "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds."

Appearance of opposition papers changing Chilean press

AP Laserphoto

A man reads the headlines of La Epoca and Fortin Mapocho, prominently displayed at a Santiago, Chile, newsstand. The two papers are the first opposition dailies authorized by Augosto Pinochet's 13-year-old military regime. Their appearance has prompted other newspapers to give more attention to Pinochet's opponents.

By EDUARDO GALLARDO

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The appearance of the first two opposition newspapers authorized by the 13-year-old military regime has reshaped the local news media's notion of what is fit to print.

The new publications are prompting the generally official press to give more attention to President Augusto Pinochet's opponents.

The daily newspapers, La Epoca and Fortin Mapocho, "represent a very important advance toward press freedom," said Genaro Arriagada, a political scientist and expert in media affairs who heads Chile's largest radio station, Radio Cooperativa.

"These papers not only are providing a wider news coverage themselves, but have also forced other papers to do so," Arriagada added in an interview.

La Epoca, which calls itself independent, started publishing March 11, after winning a court battle to end a two-year delay by the government to grant authorization. The paper's ownership includes prominent members of the centrist Christian Democratic Party, the largest in the opposition.

Fortin Mapocho, a more combative, leftist publication, hit the streets on April 14, after being published for several years as weekly.

They are the first opposition dailies to receive government authorization to publish since Pinochet, an army general, seized power in September 1973, and shut down all leftist newspapers. Those allowed to continue generally followed a pro-government line, and are known to receive suggestions from officials of the regime on how to handle politically sensitive stories.

Spokesmen for both La Epoca and Fortin Mapocho say that, so far, they have had no problems with the government.

But Felipe Pozo, managing editor of Fortin Mapocho, said in an interview, "We do not feel we have a guarantee that nothing will happen in the future.

"We do not feel protected under a restrictive legislation the government can use against us anytime it wants."

The right-wing government has emergency powers that allow it to censor the press and even shut down publications. It has temporarily closed down several dissident magazines that have published since the early 1980s.

La Epoca sells around 65,000 copies a day, according to Executive Editor Milio Filippi. That is about half the circulation of major traditional papers. Pozo would not give a figure for Fortin Mapocho's circulation, saying "we have technical problems and we have been unable to reach a stable circulation."

Both Filippi and Pozo say their papers still have a long way to go to become influential. But, they add, their printing of news often ignored in the past, especially related to opposition political activity, is prompting others to follow suit.

"So far, our main impact has been to force other papers to substantially widen their own news coverage to include many things they were simply ignoring," Pozo said. "For years, those papers had a non-competitive market. This has changed and they are changing, too."

Filippi said, "The appearance of La Epoca has produced a general opening in Chilean journalism. We now see stories that were unthinkable to print until recently.

"Several politicians have told me that reporters for other papers are now running after them for interviews."

Others agree. The editor for a major newspaper, speaking only on condition that neither he nor his paper be identified, said, "The new papers had a strong effect on the general picture of the Chilean press. There has been an opening that included all media. Our own coverage is now more ample, especially in politics. We have not checked with the government. We just assumed no one can prohibit us from printing what others are allowed to print."

When a prominent leftist politician, Clodomiro Almeyda, challenged a government ban on his return and came back from exile in April, La Epoca carried a full page interview with him. Other papers promptly followed suit.

When La Epoca reported the discovery in northern Chile of a mass grave suspected to hold the bodies of political prisoners executed in 1973, the other newspapers quickly gave ample coverage to the story.

Both Filippi and Pozo say they are optimistic about the future of their papers, although they admit the lack of advertising is a problem.

Pozo believes political considerations are one reason behind the advertisers' reluctance to buy space his paper.

"There is a real fear among many potential advertisers. Some have been threatened," Pozo said. "Besides, there is a total blockade of government advertising for us."

Filippi said he doesn't think politics are an important factor in the lack of advertising for La Epoca.

Duarte offers amnesty to prisoners, rebels

SENSUNTEPEQUE, El Salvador (AP) — President Jose Napoleon Duarte Monday offered amnesty to political prisoners and leftist guerrillas who join the democratic process.

Duarte, in a speech marking the start of his fourth year in office, said he viewed with hope a recent proposal by the guerrillas. They suggested that both sides make concessions to reduce the effects of the war on the civilian population and that peace talks, broken off after two meetings in 1984, be resumed.

But the president then added "I will not tire of insisting that they (the rebels) join the democratic process and abandon weapons and violence as a method of political action." He gave no details of the amnesty plan.

Human rights groups say that more than 1,000 political prisoners now are being held in Salvadoran jails.

Rebels fighting the government in El Salvador's 7½-year-old civil war have previously refused to field candidates for elections.

Duarte offered to let 98 injured guerrillas held by the army leave the country for medical treatment in exchange for the release of two mayors and seven other prisoners held by the rebels.

El Salvador has about 700 political prisoners, according to human rights organizations.

In 1983, 540 political prisoners and 224 guerrillas accepted a two-month amnesty offer. Since then all releases have been through exchanges.

There was no immediate response from the various rebel groups that form the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front to the latest amnesty offer.

The front Sunday announced a ban on all of the nation's roads — the fifth one this year — and threatened to attack any travelers ignoring the ban.

Duarte traveled to Sensuntepeque, about 50 miles northeast of San Salvador, in a caravan that included about 200 cars carrying legislators, Cabinet ministers and some foreign diplomats. The convoy was guarded by five tanks and six other armored vehicles, military helicopters and soldiers stationed along the route.

Duarte, a 61-year-old Christian Democrat, said "critical poverty is the principal problem of the country" and his plans to improve living conditions include agrarian reform.

He did not elaborate on other parts of the plan but said he hoped the Reagan administration will speed up delivery of economic aid approved by the U.S. Congress.

Duarte said his centrist government "has maintained relative stability" during his three years in office and the new measures will "assure that our economy does not depend on a single product: Coffee."

Most legislators from the opposition rightist parties boycotted the speech, which Duarte delivered from a platform in front of a new health center that he inaugurated.

Duarte has succeeded in curbing the kidnappings and torture by security forces, and the right-wing death squads that operated freely in the early 1980s have become virtually inactive.

However, according to the human rights office of the Salvadoran Roman Catholic Church, 1,900 politically motivated killings occurred in 1985; 90 percent of these were committed by the military, the office has claimed.

The rebels announced the travel ban on their clandestine Radio Venceremos and said it was called to show "our repudiation of the three years of the Duarte government."

Guerrillas enforce the ban by shooting at vehicles or setting up checkpoints and setting afire some of the cars, trucks and buses that are stopped.

Bus dispatchers in the provinces said the rebel threat had shut down 95 percent of the traffic in the western, northern and eastern parts of the country where the guerrillas are most active.

For the first time, the rebels included city streets in the ban, and many people in San Salvador waited in vain for public transportation. Some private schools suspended classes because of the travel ban.

At least five city buses were damaged in San Salvador, apparently by the rebels, according to police.

The rebels did not say how long the ban would last, but the previous ones this year have ranged from two days to up to a week.

Officials at the state electrical company said guerrilla attacks on the nation's power grid left about 60 percent of the capital without electricity and also caused blackouts in western and northern provinces.

The civil war has claimed at least 63,000 lives, according to human rights groups, with most of the victims civilians.

Contra leaders hinder their own rights group

New York Times News Service

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — A sharp dispute has broken out between Nicaraguan rebel military commanders and their own human rights organization.

The commanders have charged that the human rights monitors, most of whom are civilians, have "interfered with the military chain of command" in pursuing reports of abuses, according to two senior rebel officials.

Two weeks ago the commanders barred the monitors from entering rebel border camps, according to the officials. The monitors have replied by charging that the military commanders hamper their investigations.

The dispute is politically charged because the U.S. Congress appears unlikely to renew financing of the rebels, who are known as Contras, if they repeat past human rights abuses or prove unable either to maintain a working rights office or to punish offenders.

Both sides in the dispute met this week to try to resolve their differences, but there appears to be little trust between them.

Rebel civilian officials say the military commanders consider the human rights officials to be a threat to their power and also fear that they may uncover evidence of abuses the rebels have denied committing.

"It's very uncomfortable right now," a senior rebel official said.

Charges of human rights abuses by the Contras were so frequent in past years that Congress appropriated $3 million to set up a special rebel human rights office last year and to give human rights training to rebel combatants.

But according to senior rebel officials and diplomats, Contra military commanders have blocked rights monitors from visiting prisoners in rebel jails.

The commanders have also complained that the human rights officials have unnecessarily dug into the past in investigating charges that rebel interrogators raped female prisoners four years ago and, more recently, beat other prisoners. There is a separate case in which a rebel unit is believed to have killed civilians in the town of Cuapa in Nicaragua two years ago.

The human rights officials have also found that a rebel unit kidnapped four teen-age girls in Nicaragua last month and took them to a rebel camp. Two of the girls had relatives among the Contras who took them into their care. According to two rebel officials, the other two girls were assigned to live with male Contra combatants, a situation that has led to women being raped in the past.

The two women were released, the rebel officials said, when a human rights official demanded they be allowed to return to Nicaragua.

There are other reliable indications of rebel kidnappings in the last month.

"It's about the dumbest thing they can do," said a diplomat who monitors the rebels. "They have been told repeatedly to treat civilians with respect and not to kidnap people."

Another point of tension between the human rights office and Contra commanders has been the handling of shooting incidents involving senior rebel commanders.

In one incident, a commander who shot and killed a rebel soldier in a drunken fight last December was at first sentenced to a year of detention. But the human rights office pressed for a tougher sentence and the commander, Encarnacion Baldivia Chavarria, received a three-year term.

Rebel military commanders then let Baldivia leave detention and spend most of April in the Honduran town of Danli, where he lived with friends, according to several rebel officials.

Another delicate case now facing the rebels is the investigation into the killing by rebels in April of Benjamin E. Linder, an American volunteer working on a Sandinista economic development project in northern Nicaragua. Rebel commanders have so far not permitted their human rights office to investigate the case thoroughly, according to rebel officials.

Amnesty appeals to states to spare inmates' lives

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International appealed today to the governors of Texas and Louisiana to spare the lives of 12 prisoners scheduled to die this month.

The London-based human rights organization, which opposes capital punishment, also called on the legislatures of the two states to investigate whether racial discrimination influences their use of the death penalty.

The Nobel Peace Prize-winning group said that at least four prisoners have been executed in Georgia, Mississippi and Texas since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in April that Georgia's death penalty laws did not violate constitutional guarantees of racial equality.

Six prisoners are scheduled to be electrocuted in Louisiana during the period of June 7-18 and six others are due to die by lethal injection in Texas during June 5 through June 30, Amnesty said in a news release.

Scheduled for execution in Louisiana are Benjamin Berry, June 7; Alvin Moore, June 9; Jimmy Glass, June 12; Jimmy Wingo, June 16; Leslie Lowenfield, June 17; and Herbert Welcome; June 18.

The Louisiana Supreme Court denied a stay for Berry on Friday. Atty says he would apply for a re-hearing today and has made an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The status of the other Louisiana prisoners and the crimes for which they were convicted were not immediately available.

The Texas Department of Corrections said seven executions are scheduled in that state June 5-30. They are:

— Emilie Pierre Duhamel, 40, scheduled to die June 5, convicted in the 1984 rape-strangulation of a 9-year-old girl.

— Clarence Jordan, 30, scheduled to die June 9, convicted in the 1977 shooting of a food market clerk.

— Raymond Landry, 37, scheduled to die June 23, convicted in the 1982 shooting death of a restaurant operator.

— Elliot Rod Johnson, 28, scheduled to die June 24, convicted in the 1982 shooting death of 67-year-old jewelry store clerk.

— Stephen A. McCoy, 37, scheduled to die June 25, convicted in the 1981 rape-strangulation of an 18-year-old girl.

— Edward A. Ellis, 33, scheduled to die June 30, convicted in the 1983 death of a 74-year-old woman.

— Roger Leroy Degarmo Jr. scheduled to die June 30, convicted of abducting and slaying a 20-year-old woman.

Amnesty said the U.S. Supreme Court accepted evidence that there was significant racial bias in death sentencing in Georgia, but said the evidence wasn't sufficient.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Jewish children killed in gas chambers, woman says

LYON, France (AP) — Some children rounded up at a Jewish foster home east of Lyon were sent straight to the gas chambers upon arrival at the Auschwitz death camp, a witness said today at the trial of former Lyon Gestapo chief Klaus Barbie.

The 73-year-old Barbie is on trial on charges of crimes against humanity. He is accused of deporting hundreds of Jews and French Resistance members to Nazi death camps, including 44 Jewish children seized in a raid April 6, 1944, at a foster home in Izieu.

Edith Klebinder, an Austrian-born Jew who had immigrated to France, told the court she was deported from France on the same rail convoy as many of the Izieu children, arriving at Auschwitz in German-occupied Poland on April 15, 1944.

Mrs. Klebinder, 73, said she was used by the German guards as an interpreter while children and adults from her train were being separated into groups — most adults told to walk to the camp, while children and pregnant women were put on trucks.

" 'Get on the trucks, you'll arrive faster.' It was a phrase they used frequently," Mrs. Klebinder recalled, in a voice shaken by sobs.

She said she thought giving the children and pregnant women rides on the trucks was an act of humanity — until she noticed a few days later there were no children in the camp and questioned a German guard.

"You didn't see the chimney smoking? Now you'll understand," was the guard's reply, Mrs. Klebinder said, gripping the bars of the witness stand.

"Indeed we understood."

Suspected Nazi held

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Police said today they have arrested Martin Bartesch, a Chicago janitor who came to Austria after U.S. officials charged him with being a former SS Nazi death camp guard.

A police official said Bartesch was arrested Monday near the town of Weyregg in Upper Austria province and sent to a prison in Wels. Austrian authorities have said the 60-year-old former U.S. resident may be expelled.

Bartesch was mentioned in a log of prisoner killings maintained by the operators of the former Mauthausen concentration camp, according to Neal Sher, head of the U.S. Office of Special Investigations, the Justice Department's Nazi-hunting unit.

Cigarette shipment probed

TOKYO (AP) - R.J. Reynolds shipped 160 million cigarettes with herbicide levels above U.S. legal limits to Japan, but most are being held in a warehouse pending an investigation, a company spokesman said today.

Akio Tabata, spokesman for the R.J. Reynolds subsidiary that handles sales in Japan, said none of those Winston Lights cigarettes was sold.

"Although we used 108 cases (of 10,000 cigarettes each) for sampling and internal checks, the bulk is being kept in a bonded warehouse," Tabata, public affairs director of R.J. Reynolds-M.C. Tobacco Co. Ltd., said in an interview.

"We are waiting for the U.S. government to direct us as to where to ship the cigarettes," he said, adding that the "amount (of herbicide in the tobacco) we're discussing is nothing to the health."

Britain sends Iran warning

LONDON (AP) — Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe Monday said Iranian charges against a British diplomat in Tehran were trumped up, and he warned that Britain will not wait indefinitely for an apology.

Amid speculation Britain may expel Iranian diplomats or even sever relations, Howe said charges against diplomat Edward Chaplin were a reprisal for the arrest of an Iranian vice consul in Britain on shoplifting and other criminal charges.

Lack of defenses against terrorism may have let plane slip through

MOSCOW (AP) — A Western military attache said today that the Soviets' lack of experience in fighting terrorism may have made it possible for a teen-age pilot with no thought of malice to slip through air defenses and land in Red Square.

The attache, who demanded anonymity, said it may have been difficult for Soviet defenses that are geared to stop jets and missiles to react to a small, slow-moving private plane. But he said countries more accustomed to terrorism realize small planes can be dangerous.

Terrorism has been virtually nonexistent in the Soviet Union.

The West German pilot, 19-year-old Mathias Rust, remained in jail today while Soviet authorities investigated his flight. A West German Embassy spokesman reported no developments in the case.

Kremlin officials have given no indication of whether they plan to file charges against Rust, who was taken into custody after landing his rented single-engine Cessna 172b outside St. Basil's cathedral in Red Square. He flew to Moscow from Finland on Thursday, an unauthorized flight that crossed about 420 miles of Soviet territory without interruption.

Rust could be given up to 10 years in jail and a fine of about $1,500 for violating Soviet air space, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said Monday.

In Bonn, the West German Foreign Ministry asked the Soviet Union to be lenient with Rust but condemned his flight as "foolish."

West German consular officials visited Rust in jail for the first time Monday and said he appeared to be reacting calmly to his detention.

The spokesman said Rust had not yet been visited by a lawyer.

History makes way for parking

PARIS (AP) — Archaeologists abandoned a year-long dig in the heart of Paris Monday, and workers building a five-story underground parking garage took over the site.

The archaeological excavation yielded thousands of artifacts dating back to the third century.

The excavation site, a stone's throw from Notre Dame Cathedral, beside the Paris flower market, was on the Ile de la Cite. The small island in the Seine River was the first part of Paris to be settled, the archaeologists said.

The roar of the bulldozer and the shouts of construction workers Monday nearly drowned out the sound of archaeologist Antonio Muñoz La-Casta gently scraping the dirt from a carved stone surface with a delicate metal tool.

"See there," he said, pointing. "That was a woman's face." Around him, teams of construction workers were scurrying to load chunks of stone and bags of shards into plastic cartons.

The construction workers and archaeologists had worked side by side for several months.

The archaeologists will continue surveying and photographing the site until the end of June.

Reagan to tell allies of their 'obligation'

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, prodding reluctant European allies for military help in the tense Persian Gulf, says free nations "should not cower" or be expected to stand alone.

Outlining his goals for the seven-nation summit to be held June 8-10 in Venice, Italy, Reagan made clear Monday he will tell other leaders they have an obligation to help the United States defend merchant ships from becoming targets in the Iran-Iraq war.

"The American people are aware that it is not our interests alone that are being protected," Reagan said in a speech in the East Room of the White House. "The dependence of our allies on the flow of oil from that area is no secret."

Despite pleas from Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, NATO allies have refused to join U.S. warships in protecting oil tankers in the gulf. Officially, the State Department says consultations with allies have been inconclusive.

Reagan said the subject will be discussed again when he confers in Venice with the leaders of Britain, West Germany, France, Italy, Japan and Canada.

"The future belongs to the brave," Reagan said. "Free men should not cower before such challenges and they should not expect to stand alone."

Noting that 37 American sailors were killed in an Iraqi missile attack on the frigate USS Stark on May 17, Reagan said, "They died while guarding a chokepoint of freedom, deterring aggression and reaffirming America's willingness to protect its vital interests."

The president's speech came two days before he flies to Venice in preparation for the summit. Originally, he was to have made a state visit to Italy, but that was scrapped because of the collapse of the Italian government.

Aside from a day trip to Rome on Saturday to meet with Pope John Paul II, the president has no major activities scheduled before the summit, giving him plenty of time to rest and adjust to the six-hour time change between Washington and Venice.

One potential summit problem was eased by the conditional acceptance by West Germany on Monday of a U.S.-backed Soviet proposal to eliminate medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

The Bonn government said it would insist the Soviets withdraw their demand for the dismantling of 72 U.S.-made Pershing 1-A shorter-range missiles that are intended for West Germany's defense.

Referring to the Soviet disarmament offer, Reagan said, "We may be on the edge of an historic reduction of the number of nuclear weapons threatening mankind."

Reagan's speech celebrated the 40th anniversary of the Marshall Plan, which was the foundation of the rebuilding of Europe after World War II.

"Today we have known 40 or more years of peace, and one-time enemies are the closest of friends and allies as a result of the Marshall Plan," Reagan said.

However, he said the allies "face challenges comparable to those that confronted struggling democracies four decades ago.

"We sought to achieve prosperity; now we seek to preserve it and ensure that our standard of living continues to improve," Reagan said.

He openly acknowledged there is "recognizable friction among the great democracies about trade and economic policy."

Without identifying any country by name, Reagan said, "Some countries, which have taken full advantage of America's past openness, must realize that times have changed.

"Today, any country selling heavily in the United States, whose markets are not substantially open to American goods risks a backlash from the American people.

"No country that closes its own markets or unfairly subsidizes its exports can expect the markets of its trading partners to remain open," Reagan said. "This point will be driven home in Venice."

All of the nations at the summit are guilty of some of the trade sins Reagan mentioned, but Japan — in particular — usually gets special criticism for its huge trade surplus and barriers to goods from other countries.

Reagan said Japan, along with trade-rich West Germany, should take steps to stimulate their own economies, arguing that "growth-oriented domestic policies" such as tax cuts, lower interest rates and more public spending "are needed to bolster the world trading system upon which they depend."

Reagan's 'problems' may shade summit

By BARRY SCHWEID

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan goes to the Venice summit on the wings of Air Force One but through the storm clouds of the Iran-Contra affair.

Have the secret U.S. arms sales to Iran and diversion of profits to Nicaraguan rebels weakened Reagan's credibility with the leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan and West Germany?

Probably not very much, interviews with foreign policy experts suggested, even though Reagan's approval of the arms deals flatly contradicted Operation Staunch, the U.S. campaign to rally other countries in an arms boycott of Iran.

Reagan also had to backtrack from his initial explanation that the deal with Tehran had very little to do with efforts to gain the release of American hostages in Lebanon.

And two friendly countries, Brunei and Saudi Arabia, which had hoped to keep their own contributions to the Contras through the White House a private matter, found themselves exposed at congressional hearings.

But Robert E. Hunter, director of European Studies at the Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies, does not think the disclosures will hurt Reagan in Venice.

"They're big boys and girls," Hunter said. "It's been in the air for months anyway. People in the particular (summit) countries tend to discount the kind of chicanery we worry about, if it is chicanery."

The Watergate scandal forced the resignation of President Richard M. Nixon in 1974, and Hunter said "the French have never forgiven us for throwing him over. They have never understood it."

Hunter, a former National Security Council staffer in the Carter administration, thought Reagan "has been more affected by being a lame duck" than by the Iranian weapons and Contra aid disclosures — but not fatally.

"He has no political future," Hunter said, "but he is president of the United States, and he has a major role in determining the economic policies of the government."

Although Reagan has tempered his trade policy in the past year "as he goes into the summit he still has the high ground," Hunter said. "My judgment is the leaders are going to look to him as a leader they can deal with, and on the issues they care about, here is a man who still has a lot of clout in the United States."

Edward Hudgins of the Heritage Foundation is an analyst who thinks the disclosures "unfortunately will hurt his credibility."

But Hudgins, who specializes in economics, said part of the reason is that "since late last year he has been straying from strict Reaganomics."

Trying to appease Congress and to head off protectionist measures, Hudgins said, the United States has erected more trade barriers in the last five years than the six other countries attending the Venice meeting.

"If he didn't do anything illegal, at the very least he mishandled the situation," Hudgins said. "And if they look at his trade policy they have to see it as reactionary."

The Europeans are always ready to see the bad side," Hudgins said. "They see Reagan as a lame duck."

Helmut Sonnenfeldt of the Brookings Institution said Reagan is not going into the summit with as strong a political position as in the past.

He attributed this to the burgeoning Iran-Contra affair and the fact that Reagan has less than two years left in the White House.

But, Sonnenfeldt said, arms dealers in almost all the summit countries were selling weapons to Iran despite Operation Staunch. And many of the leaders have severe political problems of their own.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government is divided over a Soviet proposal to remove hundreds of medium and shorter-range nuclear ground missiles from Europe.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has called elections for June. The host, Italian Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani, heads a caretaker cabinet and also faces elections right after the summit ends.

Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone has recorded the lowest popularity ratings in more than four years in office. French President Francois Mitterrand must share power in an uneasy arrangement with Prime Minister Jacques Chirac.

"They've all got a barrel-full of problems," Sonnenfeldt said, "but the president is the most important figure so his problems weigh more."

The Brookings guest scholar said it is hard to measure how much of an impact Reagan's problems will have on the economics deliberations.

"I imagine it will have an impact," Sonnenfeldt said. "It turns out not to be the best time for most participants."

Raymond R. Garthoff of Brookings said the disclosures and possible illegalities are unlikely to have any direct or strong impact on the allies.

Fire leaves trail of rubble

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — John and Claire Sussenberger held each other as they stared at the ashes of their $500,000 home, razed by a fire residents and officials doubted would happen, in a coastal forest they didn't expect to burn.

"It's so devastating. Thirty-three years, and now it's all rubble," said Mrs. Sussenberger, whose home was one of 37 damaged or destroyed by a fire that roared across 140 acres of some of the nation's most prime real estate, forcing more than 200 people to flee and causing an estimated $16 million in damage.

"We'll have to start all over again," said her husband.

Their neighbor, Alan Turpen, poked through the remains of his house. "This is sort of non-belief. You never think it'll happen to you," he said.

The residents were among the owners of 31 expensive homes in the exclusive Del Monte forest, surrounding the famed Pebble Beach Golf Course near Monterey, who returned to the smoldering wreckage of their homes Monday night, a day after fleeing the wall of wind-driven flames.

Six other homes were damaged, and nine people, including eight firefighters, suffered minor injuries. The fire was declared fully contained at 6 p.m. Monday but was still only 75 percent controlled today.

Like residents, firefighters were surprised by the blaze.

"This is the last place we expected to see burn. It's foggy, cold and wet," said Tom Bales, a California Department of Forestry engineer.

Officials attributed the swift spread of the fire mostly to winds and the unusually dry conditions they fear will feed fires throughout California this summer. But they also blamed some homeowners' loose compliance with regulations requiring clearance of wild vegetation for 30 feet around structures and common use of wood shingle roofs that easily burn.

The blaze, which investigators said was sparked by a campfire left smoldering by partying youths, also destroyed a house trailer, four outbuildings, and 11 vehicles, and damaged three vehicles.

Total damage was estimated at $16 million, according to state officials. California law says the responsible youths, or their parents if the youths are minors, could be liable for the property damage and cost of fighting the blaze if they are identified and convicted.

Gov. George Deukmejian, meanwhile, proclaimed a state of emergency in Monterey County, clearing the way for low-interest government loans that can be used to rebuild homes.

A tired force of 300 firefighters carved a line around the blaze throughout the day Monday, declaring it contained just two hours before they allowed residents to return.

As the flames threatened, some residents fled while others stayed as long as they could to hose down the roofs of their houses.

"We're safe," said Dr. Jim Halpern, whose house was leveled by the fire, "but we lost a home, lots of photographs and a lifetime of memories."

Some of the firefighters from local stations recalled they had jokingly referred to the area as the "asbestos forest" because of the low number of fires. The region's last major fire occurred about 30 years ago, forestry officials said.

"This is what you'd expect to see in Southern California. It wasn't supposed to happen here," said Bales.

King holiday-related boycott hurting state convention revenue

By BURT GOODMAN

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — A convention boycott against Arizona to protest Gov. Evan Mecham's cancellation of a holiday honoring the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. apparently isn't changing his mind, but it's having a big impact on others.

"I don't know if Mecham was right or wrong. All I know is this thing is taking money out of a lot of pockets, including mine," taxi driver Joe Morales said last week as he waited for business at a downtown cab stand. "It always gets slow in the summertime, but it never dies. This year it's just dead."

Thirty groups have canceled conventions in Phoenix over the issue, including education, health, media and religious organizations, the city's convention and visitors bureau says. Entertainers such as the Doobie Brothers and Stevie Wonder also have participated in the boycott.

The bureau estimated that the boycott cost $8.1 million in lost convention business through last week, at $609 per convention-goer, and projected that the year's loss could pass $18 million.

"It's not just one hotel that's being hurt," said Steve Sokal, general manager of the Hyatt Regency Hotel. "It's local restaurants, dry cleaners, airlines, the gift shop in the lobby. Everybody is feeling the impact."

In 1986, conventioneers spent $297 million in the Phoenix area, the bureau estimated. The $8.1 million loss for this year is approximately 2.7 percent of that total, with seven months of the year remaining.

But the actual impact on the local economy is greater, officials said, because the loss estimate doesn't count business activity supported indirectly by conventions, and because it counts only groups that cancel conventions, not those that decide to go elsewhere.

"We can't possibly determine the actual loss involved, because we don't know how many groups have decided not to even consider us," said Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard.

Conventions and meetings also have been canceled in Tucson, Mesa, Scottsdale, Tempe and Sedona.

On Monday, Mecham spokesman Ron Bellus said the governor doesn't dispute the convention bureau's loss estimates but does question the significance on Arizona's overall convention and tourism industry.

"He did what he had to do legally as he saw it," Bellus said. "There's nothing more he can do. He's left it with the Legislature, where it belongs."

The boycott was spurred by Mecham's decision, days after he took office in January, to rescind an executive order issued last year by his Democratic predecessor, Bruce Babbitt, that created a holiday for state executive-branch workers in honor of the slain civil rights leader.

Mecham, a Republican, argued that Babbitt's action was illegal because only the Legislature could declare a state holiday. Mecham denied he had any racist motive, as some critics charge.

During the legislative session that ended in May, the House approved a King holiday bill, but it was defeated in committee in the Senate. Both houses are controlled by Republicans.

"I don't believe Governor Mecham and a few senators who are against the bill speak for the majority of Arizonans," said the Rev. Warren H. Stewart, a Baptist minister in Phoenix and a boycott supporter. "I think the majority are justice-loving, peace-seeking people who see the significance of the changes Martin Luther King Jr. brought about in our nation."

Mecham has contended that some groups will come to Arizona because of his stand, and said Saturday that those who have canceled performances and conventions are "black entertainers (and) a few people from the liberal fringe."

Wonder, who is black, announced he would boycott the state, and a May reunion concert of the rock band Doobie Brothers was moved elsewhere because of the issue. Other acts, such as the Irish rock group U2 and folk singers Peter, Paul and Mary, criticized Mecham but performed scheduled concerts.

Officials said they hadn't heard of any jobs lost because of the boycott, but they didn't rule out that prospect.

"If business drops by 5 percent, the payroll and other expenses are going to have to be cut by 5 percent," said Robert A. Rauch, president of the Valley Innkeeper Association and manager of a hotel in Mesa.

The competitive nature of the convention industry makes the losses frustrating to those who work to persuade groups to pick Arizona for their meetings.

"There's much more competition for the convention dollar than every before," said Lloyd Axelrod, the convention bureau's vice president for public relations. "It can take years to sell a group on having a convention in your area."

PTL subject of inquiry

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department's preliminary inquiry into the PTL television ministry formerly run by evangelist Jim Bakker will focus on taxes and possible fraud, officials say.

The department announced the inquiry on Monday, saying the attention of "all appropriate federal agencies has been engaged."

The inquiry could lead to a criminal investigation of Bakker's former empire, said two federal law enforcement sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Terry Eastland, a department spokesman, said the government "has taken the appropriate organizational steps to examine matters involving PTL and to do so without delay."

Florida hears Cuban radio

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet radio broadcasts from Cuba are clearly audible in southern Florida but they don't pack much of a punch beyond that, according to the Federal Communications Commission.

Richard Smith, chief of the FCC's field operations, said Monday that during test monitoring, the Soviet broadcasts were "barely receivable" in other parts of the South.

Sixteen U.S. radio stations broadcasting on the same frequency as the Soviets — 1040 kilohertz on the AM band — went off the air briefly Sunday to help the FCC monitor the Soviet signal and determine the strength of the transmitter in Cuba.

The Soviets, who already broadcast extensively on short wave, have said they will transmit programming on the AM dial every Sunday and every other Saturday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Honda reaches settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eight-five Honda of America Manufacturing Inc. employees will share in a $457,111 back-wage settlement in an age discrimination case, officials say.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission announcing the settlement Monday. It said the money will go to workers age 40 and over who were turned down for jobs at Honda in 1984 and 1985 but who subsequently were hired by the company.

Agency officials said the investigation centered on hiring practices at Honda's auto and motorcyle plant near Marysville, Ohio, and at an engine manufacturing plant near Anna, Ohio.

EEOC Chairman Clarence Thomas called the settlement "a signficant step" in allowing equal access to the job market.

Al Kinzer, a vice president at Honda, said the agreement "simply underscores our long-standing commitment" to encouraging people to apply for work with the company regardless of age.

Meese questioned about ex-White House aide

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal grand jury investigating Attorney General Edwin Meese III's ties to Wedtech Corp. also is questioning him about former White House aide Lyn Nofziger's work for a Virginia defense contractor.

Meese declined to comment Monday following a two-hour appearance before the grand jury, his second round of testimony since March.

Much of the questioning of the attorney general centered around government contracts involving Fairchild Industries Inc., a Chantilly, Va., defense contractor, said a source close to the investigation, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The attorney general answered all questions, said one of his attorneys, Nathan Lewin.

With the help of Nofziger, a former White House political director, Fairchild successfully persuaded the Air Force to extend contracts for the A-10 aircraft.

Independent counsel James McKay is investigating whether Nofziger broke conflict-of-interest laws with his lobbying activities on behalf of Wedtech and Fairchild shortly after he left the White House in 1982.

The Wall Street Journal has reported McKay is interested in memos Meese wrote senior Defense Department officials or others in the Reagan administration supporting Fairchild's position.

On May 11, McKay, who was appointed Feb. 2 to investigate the lobbying of Nofziger in the Wedtech matter, began investigating Meese's efforts to help Wedtech get an Army contract, along with his financial relationship with two company consultants.

Meese acknowledged last month that in 1982 when he was presidential counselor he directed a review of an Army decision to deny Wedtech a contract to build small generating engines.

Peach tree pesticide forces evacuation

ATWATER, Calif. (AP) — A cloud of pesticide drifted over a square mile near a fruit company, forcing more than 60 people from their homes and sending 30 to the hospital, officials said.

A worker was spraying Guthion on peach trees owned by the J.R. Wood Fruit Co. on Monday night when neighbors called police, authorities said. Officers then went through the area with loudspeakers, telling residents to evacuate.

Thirty people complaining of nausea, blurred vision, headaches and breathing difficulties were treated and released at Bloss Memorial Hospital, said supervisor Elaine Cortez.

Webster bringing change to agency

With all the concern being expressed in recent weeks about the Reagan appointees who have experienced difficulties in their posts, the appointment of William H. Webster to head the Central Intelligence Agency promises a change for the better.

In fact, the Central Intelligence Agency may have emerged from a period of turbulence and be off to a fresh start under Webster's guidance.

The CIA's general mission and long-range course for the future were charted by a few well-chosen words spoken by both President Reagan and his appointee who was enthusiastically confirmed by the Senate. Speaking at the outdoor swearing-in ceremony at the agency's headquarters in Langley, Va., the President said the nation's political leaders owe it to the American people to see that the intelligence service "is staffed by honorable men and women who work within the framework of our laws and shared values." That takes on particular importance during this period when the administration is scarred by reports of appointees who have participated in and instigated activities that are questionable from a moral or legal standpoint.

Webster, who headed the Federal Bureau of Investigation for nearly a decade, certainly qualifies as one of the "honorable men" of whom Reagan spoke. He promised that the nation's intelligence agents would "carry out their assignments throughout the world with fidelity to the Constitution and to the laws of our beloved country." We honestly hope Webster follows through on that charge.

The importance of having intelligence and law-enforcement agents who understand and abide by the laws of this land cannot be overemphasized. For how can Americans stress their belief in a country of laws if the individuals charged with enforcing the laws merely pay them lip service and operate as though the rules of conduct are intended for everyone but them?

The CIA's "assignments" in the next few years will be basic to the peace and security of the United States. Three of the most challenging are combatting drug traffic which has grown to awesome proportions, keeping an eye on subversion by the Soviet Union in Central America and elsewhere, and reducing incidents of international terrorism.

Reagan put the CIA's mission in perspective by saying that in all of these areas it plays a "vital role."

The spirit of the swearing-in ceremony should give Americans confidence that the Central Intelligence Agency will serve the country well under the direction of Webster. It's a change that's sorely needed to recapture the former greatness of the agency and to bring back respect to those in government service.

Government still willing to 'buy Japan'

WASHINGTON — "Made in Japan" continues to fascinate the federal government's computer buyers, no matter what President Reagan may do or say about unfair Japanese trade practices. And some government procurement officials seem willing to overlook just about anything in their zeal to buy Japanese products.

Jack Anderson

Consider this: One day after Hitachi's American distributor, ViON, agreed to plead guilty to 50 counts of fraud on an Army computer contract, the U.S. Customs Service awarded the distributor a $19 million contract for a Hitachi computer system.

As we have already reported, the Agriculture Department notified an American computer manufacturer on April 17 that it had lost out on a $48 million contract to the Hitachi distributor. As it happens, that was the very day the president announced tariffs on certain Japanese products as punishment for their manufacturers' violations of trade agreements between the United States and Japan.

The particular Hitachi computers the two agencies want aren't on the punitive tariff list. But the giant Japanese firm was one of several that had been dumping computer chips on the U.S. market, which was the reason for the tariff.

The Army's fraud case against ViON wasn't exactly a secret. After a two-year investigation, the company agreed to plead guilty to fraud on April 7. The next day, Customs awarded ViON the $19 million contract. The day after that, the company's formal guilty plea was entered.

The Agriculture and Customs computer contracts have been held up because of protests filed by IBM and StorageTek. The U.S. manufacturers both claim their bids on the Agriculture Department contract were several million dollars lower than ViON's. Only IBM has protested the Customs contract, contending that, while its bid was higher, its computer system is superior to the Hitachi system ViON offered.

The American companies' appeal is under consideration by the General Services Administration. A decision is expected this month.

The Army's fraud case against ViON came after investigators determined that the company had not provided the computer equipment it had agreed to, and which the Army had paid for, according to Lt. Col. Dave Burpee. ViON pleaded guilty to 50 counts of fraud and was fined $579,407.

As part of the settlement, Burpee said, ViON is required to inform the Army of any subsequent contracts it obtains from federal agencies. He said Agriculture and Customs were notified of ViON's guilty plea "so they can monitor their contracts more closely."

When our reporter Karen Talley inquired about the company's guilty plea, the Customs Service chief counsel, Mike Schmitz, admitted he knew about it, and added: "But they weren't debarred." That means ViON was not legally prohibited from obtaining future federal contracts — including the one it was awarded the day after it agreed to plead guilty in the Army case.

Agriculture and Customs purchasing officers say the Hitachi computers offered by ViON are best suited to their needs. IBM and StorageTek dispute this claim.

CASHLESS FUTURE?: Federal Reserve Board economists have looked into their crystal balls and seen a brave new world where paper money will be an endangered species, used only for small purchases and lighting bankers' cigars. Your paycheck will be deposited and drawn against electronically; loans will be approved (or rejected) by computers; and your funds will draw interest immediately. There will be no such thing as "idle cash" within 10 years, the Fed's seers predict. One drawback to this instantaneous banking, of course, is elimination of the 30-day "float" currently enjoyed by millions of credit-card addicts.

UNDER THE DOME: Sens. William Proxmire, D-Wis., and Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, have asked the Justice Department for its voluminous files on the investigation of General Dynamics' submarine-building Electric Boat Division. The department has said it doesn't have enough evidence for a successful prosecution. But the senators don't want Justice destroying the evidence it does have. They point out that a congressional investigation of the Newport News Shipyard was thwarted when Justice dropped its case — and destroyed the investigative files a few days later. Proxmire and Grassley don't want a repeat of this performance.

Another View:

Fight protectionism

Poisonous protectionism is spreading in Congress. Practically speaking, the foreign trade bill that the Senate Finance Committee has concocted is hardly distinguishable from the House version. Both ought to provoke urgent opposition. The longer this false flower lives, the more it threatens to intoxicate politicians and public.

Only in one substantial respect does the Senate committee bill improve on the one just passed by the House. It omits the harsh posturing of the amendment sponsored by Rep. Richard Gephardt in a misguided attempt to redress the trade deficit. Senate supporters never brought it to a vote in the Finance Committee. They feared defeat and preferred to take it to the full Senate, the same tactic Gephardt used in the House.

Whether or not this particular amendment survives, other pernicious Senate amendments are in the works. The protectionists' strategy is clear and powerful: Blame foreigners for a trade problem they didn't create ... Tighten the screws to keep out their products ... Ignore the fact that curbing trade will hurt American consumers.

The Finance Committee has fertilized the protectionist weed with three particularly objectionable contributions:

— The Senate bill would put authority in the wrong hands. Effectively, the proposal would let the government's International Trade Commission decide what tariffs or quotas to impose when an industry is injured by imports, even if foreign competition is fair and square. The president has final say now, as he should. He is best placed to assess the impact of such steps on diplomacy and the economy.

The Gephardt plan, which amends the section of the law dealing with unfair competition, also strips presidential authority. It virtually orders the president to impose stiff import curbs against countries with allegedly unfair practices and large surpluses in trade with the United States.

— A provision on oil imports would give the president too much authority. If he foresees that dependence on foreign oil will exceed 50 percent, he would be required to raise taxes on imports or lower them for domestic producers. Congress would effectively abdicate its responsibility for tax law.

— The bill has a foolish mechanism for helping displaced workers. The assistance program would be worthy, but it would be paid for with a highly questionable tax on almost all imports, thereby inviting retaliation against American exports.

On the positive side, the committee bill would give the administration six-year authority — the House gives five years — to negotiate with other countries for mutual reduction of trade barriers. That's the right path to healthy growth.

The committee bill will shape the final Senate package, but a half-dozen other committees, and individual senators, are offering amendments. Come summer, a conference committee will meld the Senate and House bills. The Reagan administration justifiably loathes both. With luck, leadership and effective lobbying, it might induce the conferees to compromise and knock out the worst. But to wait that long is chancy strategy. The time for every conscientious senator to fight is now.

JAMES RESTON

Europeans grasping for 'more perfect union'

PARIS — The paradox of Europe these days is that it invented science and is spending twice as much on research and development as Japan, but it is still lagging behind in the high technology race to the future.

James Reston

No doubt its leaders have made progress toward economic integration, but they would rather be separate than successful. The European parliament is little more than a symbol, national self-interest still dominates the European Economic Community, and a quarter of a century after the Treaty of Rome, Jean Monnet's dream of a United States of Europe is seldom mentioned.

This is not because Western Europe does not have the human and high-tech resources to compete with the United States, Japan and the Soviet Union, but because it is not thinking on the scale of the world let alone the Continent, and it is exporting its brains and its inventions.

It is intellectually aware of the new world economy. It writes better monographs on the subject than anybody else, but its practical efforts are fragmented and duplicated, often without any link-up with industry.

In short, the critical gap is not abroad but at home. Its politicians are not keeping up with its scientists. The sum of its parts is far greater than its total performance, and despite considerable success in important sectors such as nuclear energy, biotechnology, computers, aerospace and some aspects of information technology, most observers here concede that it is lagging behind its major industrial competitors.

Monnet foresaw this before he died eight years ago at the age of 90. "Many persons believe," he said, "that in view of Europe's greater prosperity today, limited cooperation between the European nations is enough. I think this shows a profound misunderstanding.

"Our own rate of progress should not blind us to the fact that the rate of progress in the United States and in the Soviet Union is still far greater. The reason is not that they are more inventive or hardworking than Europeans. It is that, despite the differences of their regimes, they are both developing their economies on a continental scale."

Another French critic of this haphazard European groping, Paul Valery, suggested that there would never be a European League of Nations until it developed a league of minds. No doubt this is extremely difficult in a continent with so many different languages, histories and popular assumptions that their own national way is best, but the problem remains.

It is perhaps illustrated best by the unemployment rates. In 1975, Europe had 8 million registered unemployed. Last year, it was more than 19 million, 44 percent of them between the ages of 15 and 24.

This may give the false impression that "Euro-pessimism" is rampant. The problem is that Europe is not keeping pace with the leaders, as it could if its many strengths — human, cultural and economic — were unified. Many of its inventions are being developed more efficiently by its competitors. Many of its best minds are leaving for the greater freedoms and opportunities in the United States.

In a way, Western Europe, with its remarkable resources, is a crippled genius, divided by history, satisfied by its success and suffering not from poverty but from a poverty of desire. "Eureka!" it cries, "I have lost it."

The question is whether, in the coming century, it really wants to regain a paramount position in the world, or whether it will become economically what it is geographically, a small peninsula on the tip of the Euroasian land mass, dependent, comfortable and complacent.

Monnet would probably say this is too harsh. "You have to be patient," he was always saying. "You have to mend before you can construct."

He saw history as a series of ever expanding units — from the village to the region, from the region to the nation-state and from the nation-state to the integration of continents — a long slow progress often achieved by disasters.

Thus, the independence of America through war, the abolition of slavery in America through civil strife, the rejuvenaton of the American economy through the Depression, and the reconciliation of France and Germany after two terrible world wars.

It all recalls to an American visitor in Europe the fierce divisions and squabbles between the independent American states in the 18th century. But 200 years ago this summer, at the constitutional convention in Philadelphia, they formed "a more perfect union." Monnet, if he were still around, would probably predict that one day in the next century, the divided Europeans might do the same.

CHARLEY REESE

Playing with words can't stop war machines

I was watching a congressional debate on C-Span recently and was once again reminded of the importance of general semantics.

Charley Reese

General semantics is a study of words and thinking, the main point of which is the necessity of remembering that words are merely symbols for reality, not the reality itself. The word, "rock," can't hurt you; the real thing can fracture your skull.

Too often both journalists and politicians, because we make a living playing word games, lose sight of the fact that words and reality are two different things. Lawyers are particularly susceptible because the law itself is a word-game. Lawyers play logic games based on precise definitions and can literally argue endlessly over these definitions.

In a courtroom that's okay, for I don't know how you could construct a legal system not based on words. Where we frequently get into trouble is carrying over the mentality of the courtroom into everyday life.

I remember vividly, during the SALT II debate, how the attention was focused on words, not reality, and how people came to think of the words as the things.

For example, during that debate, the State Department had traveling teams with big charts which showed precisely how many warheads we had and how many warheads the Soviet Union had.

How, I asked one of these experts, do we know how many warheads the Soviet Union has? Well, after much stammering he said the Soviets told us. In other words, we didn't then and we don't now know how many warheads the Soviet Union has. According to this guy, we know only what the Soviets told us.

According to Dr. Edward Teller, however, the State Department man was incorrect. According to Dr. Teller the Soviets have never said how many warheads they have. Early in the SALT negotiations, the American team told the Soviets that we estimated they had such and such a number. The Soviets neither confirmed nor denied it, so the Americans assumed it was correct. To this day, however, because of Soviet secrecy and the inadequacies of our intelligence, we do not know how many warheads or even how many missiles the Soviets actually possess.

The Soviets have a high-ranking officer in charge of the Office of Strategic Deception and he and his command work full time making sure we find out as little as possible about Soviet strategic weapons and their deployment.

The point is that there is nothing wrong with using an assumption as a working hypothesis — so long as you don't forget that it is an assumption. Too often in political debates, assumptions and guesses somehow become "facts."

Another example is the attempt to explain away Soviet violations of the ABM treaty by arguing that what the Soviets have done is not necessarily inconsistent with the wording of the treaty. This is the typical lawyer's approach.

The survival problem is the bloody radar station at Krasnoyarsk — the building and the electronics inside it, not whether words some lawyers wrote nearly two decades ago can be interpreted in a way that doesn't forbid the construction. Our proper concern is whether the Soviets are constructing a nationwide ABM system, not whether they are violating the treaty. If someone pulls a gun on you, do you worry if they have a proper permit? Do you cite the state statutes and city ordinances they will violate by shooting you?

This illustrates the great limitation of treaties and the danger of thinking like lawyers outside the courtroom. Within a nation, if one party violates a contract, the other party can go to court and seek a remedy. But in the international arena, if one sovereign nation violates a treaty, there is no remedy, except war.

For that reason treaties work when they are executed by friendly nations to spell out what they all genuinely want to do anyway. They do not work, however, as a device to stop aggression. Lawyers can deal with the words "tanks and missiles" but they are no good at stopping the real things.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 2, the 153rd day of 1987. There are 212 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 2, 1953, the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II took place in Westminster Abbey, four months after Elizabeth had ascended the British throne upon the death of her father, King George the Sixth.

On this date:

In 1851, Maine became the first state to enact a law prohibiting alcohol.

In 1883, the first non-league baseball game to be played under electric lights took place, in Fort Wayne, Ind.

In 1886, President Grover Cleveland married Frances Folsom in a White House ceremony. Cleveland is the only president to have gotten married in the executive mansion while in office.

In 1924, Congress granted citizenship to all American Indians.

Carters share 'life after White House'

By W. DALE NELSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than six years after the highly public ordeal that lost them the White House, Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter say they have carved out a private life they hope can help others cope with troubles.

The former president and first lady gave a glimpse of their trials and triumphs since leaving 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue in an interview in Washington as they made promotional rounds for their new book, "Everything to Gain."

"We decided to write about losing the election and how we dealt with that crisis, because so many people have crises in their lives and this was a crisis that was very public and was very well known," Mrs. Carter said.

"We came through that although it was very difficult — it was very difficult for me, I think difficult for Jimmy — but even if it's difficult for you to have something happen in your life that's unpleasant you can come through it, and we somehow thought if we told our story, that might be helpful to others facing a crisis of some kind in their lives," she said.

When the Carters went home, they found they not only were out of a job, had been rejected by the voters and were in Plains, Ga., instead of Washington, but their peanut warehousing business had run aground financially while they were away.

"We didn't know what we were going to do," Mrs. Carter said. "We got home and we were deeply in debt. We had our last child leaving home fairly soon. We were together in the house all the time, which retired people are. We had the same kind of situations."

Now, however, the former president has just finished his fifth year of teaching at Emory University and the two of them have written a total of five books since leaving the White House. Carter is working on a sixth, about his life as an outdoorsman.

They sold the peanut warehouse, although they still keep their land and timber holdings.

Their daughter, Amy, is a student at Brown University and was recently acquitted of charges arising out of demonstrations against the CIA. The Carters say they are proud of her, but glad she didn't have to go to jail.

Former President Jimmy Carter, being interviewed Monday in a Washington hotel room, with the White House seen through a window in back, said the Reagan administration's decision to fly the American flag on Kuwaiti tankers could draw the U.S. into a Persian Gulf War.

In addition, both travel widely, organize conferences at the Carter Center set up in connection with Carter's presidential library, and help a volunteer organization called Habitat for Humanity that builds homes for poor people.

"We have got a very challenging and exciting life carved out for ourselves," the former president said.

Would he ever run for president again?

"In the first place, I don't think I could get elected," Carter said. Besides, he added, "I think the Democrats have some fine prospective candidates to put forward."

Outside of supporting whomever the party chooses, Carter said he expects a "minimal" role in the Democratic convention that will be held in Atlanta and in the ensuing campaign.

On other topics, Carter said:

— The Reagan administration has given a clear signal it is siding with Iraq in the Persian Gulf war, and the United States is in danger of being drawn into the conflict.

"After our ridiculous sale of arms to Iran and the worldwide uproar because of that embarrassing mistake, I think we have tended to shift now toward Iraq. Kuwait is aligned with Iraq. We are making Kuwaiti ships part of the American merchant fleet, and I think this is a clear signal to the combatants that we have chosen sides."

— AIDS will "develop into a plague of unprecedented proportions" and should be dealt with by experimental mandatory testing.

"I think that some kind of testing ought to be required.

Incinerator preferred method of waste disposal, poll shows

By LAWRENCE KILMAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite a dispute that led a garbage barge on a weeks-long cruise in search of a dump, 70 percent of Americans believe trash disposal in their communities is fine, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

The nationwide telephone poll of 1,304 adult Americans also found that 55 percent favor incinerating trash and only 33 percent favor burying it.

Despite the high percentage of people who said their towns had adequate disposal provisions, garbage is becoming a costly and messy issue in many states, as environmental factors, politics and limited space make landfills harder to find.

The odyssey of the scow carrying 31,000 tons of commercial garbage has been a highly publicized example of the problem. The barge, which left Islip on Long Island in March, was afloat for two months. Its load was rejected by North Carolina, Alabama, Mississipi, Louisiana, Texas and Florida, as well as Mexico, Belize and the Bahamas.

The Coast Guard gave permission Monday for the barge to use a federal anchorage here, but where the garbage will be disposed of remains unresolved.

In the poll, conducted after the barge was underway but before its dilemma received much attention, seven in 10 respondents said they thought garbage disposal in their community was adequate. Nineteen percent said it was inadequate; the rest were unsure.

Pollution and possible health hazards were cited most often by those who thought disposal was inadequate. Many also cited a lack of landfill space.

Americans generate 220 million tons of garbage each year. About 95 percent is buried in landfills, according to the National Solid Wastes Management Association.

Incinerators that use garbage as fuel to create electricity or steam are seen as a solution by some people, but there are drawbacks: the plants are expensive, air pollution can be a problem, neighborhoods oppose them and the ash still has to be buried.

Recycling also is being promoted to ease the problem, and half the poll respondents said they recycled household trash such as bottles, cans and paper. One-quarter of those said they recycled bottles, 44 percent said they recycled cans and 30 percent said they recycled paper.

One-quarter of the respondents lived in states that had "bottle bills" where deposits are required on disposable cans and bottles to encourage their return. Of those, three-quarters said they routinely returned cans and bottles, and half said they would not recycle cans and bottles if it wasn't for the deposit law.

Respondents in the poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,304 adults across the country April 1-10. As with all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,300 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of chance variations in the sample. That is, if one could have questioned all Americans with telephones, there is only one chance in 20 that the findings would vary from the results of polls such as this one by more than 3 percentage points.

Of course, the results could differ from other polls for several reasons.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Saturday, June 2, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The day dawned cloudy with rain toward evening and so cool that brewer Thomas Morris thought "there must be frost. Fire seems necessary."

Jonathon Penrose, vice president of the Pennsylvania Society for Promoting the Abolition of Slavery, signed the Society's engrossed petition asking the Constitutional Convention to consider stopping the slave trade. The petition was not sent.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Again, only three states were represented in the Congress, so it could not meet.

CONVENTION TODAY

William Samuel Johnson, of Connecticut, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer, of Maryland, and John Lansing Jr., of New York, took their seats.

Resolved into a committee of the whole, the delegates debated on the executive. James Wilson (Pa.) moved to divide the states into districts, and have the people (that is, adult, white males) in each district elect electors who in turn would elect the president. Elbridge Gerry (Mass.), like Wilson, opposed election by the national legislature but thought Wilson's plan too much of an innovation. Hugh Williamson (N.C.) couldn't see why selecting electors to choose the executive was an advantage over having the state legislatures choose him. Wilson's motion lost, 8 states to 2 (Pa. and Md.). The committee then agreed to have the executive chosen by the national legislature for a term of seven years, and went on to discuss executive pay, removal from office, eligibility from a second term, and whether the executive should be one man or a committee.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson made some visits in the morning, then took his seat in the Convention. He dined at Dennison's (the sign of St. George at Second and Arch streets) and in the evening took lodgings at City Tavern. Dennison's bill and his other daily expenses came to 15 shillings Pennsylvania lawful money.

George Washington "dined at the City Tavern with the Club and spent the evening at my own quarters."

LOOKING BACK
A Key Decision: A Salaried President

Today's Convention activities exemplified how the Convention made decisions, frequently without much debate, that have had profound consequences.

As an example, on this day the Convention discarded, without a discussion or vote, Franklin's motion that the executive (president of the United States) serve without pay.

This was not a hare-brained scheme proposed by a senile old revolutionary. Every delegate present this day, even James Wilson, would agree that the political elite — those qualified by education, experience, and success should fill the key offices of government. This elite should be able to afford such service — in fact, every delegate present was serving without salary.

Earlier, Washington had served as commander in chief for over eight years without a salary; Sherman had served in Congress for six years without salary (and was nearly broke as a consequence).

If Franklin's motion had been adopted, would Washington have been willing to serve a second term? Could Jefferson or Madison, or Polk, or Lincoln, or Truman have afforded to be president? If not, would their political party, or their friends, or others who would like to be their friends, provide money to make up for the lack of a salary? Has the cost of a modern presidential campaign ruled out more potential candidates than making a president serve for free would?

Capitol's rotunda to be restored

WASHINGTON (AP) — The majestic fresco of George Washington painted at the apex of the ceiling of the Capitol's famous Rotunda is about to get a scrubbing that should leave it several shades brighter than it is now.

But Bernard Rabin, the 70-year-old art restorer who has been chosen for the $500,000 job, says he hopes that no controversy, similar to the one that has enveloped similar work at the Vatican's Sistine Chapel, will erupt.

"That's always a problem," Rabin said Monday by telephone from his office in Princeton, N.J. "I've cleaned many a painting and people say, 'Is this my painting?' Of course, I hope there's no controversy."

Rabin said he will be advised by a couple from Rome — Paul and Laura Mora — who he says "wrote the textbook on restoration," and who developed a special cleaning agent used to restore the fresco Michelangelo painted on the Sistine Chapel's ceiling in the 16th century.

Rabin says the cleaner he will use in the Capitol will be similar to the one used at the Vatican.

Restorers of the chapel's ceiling have been scored repeatedly by art critics who say the brighter, more vivid colors now visibly mar what had been a work of dark, somber hues.

"It will appear brighter," Rabin said of the colors that will adorn the top of the Capitol dome once the work is complete. He added that he also will attempt to remove lines in the fresco that in some places give it the appearance of a jig-saw puzzle.

A fresco is a painting made on a wall as the plaster is drying. Rabin said he believes the lines resulted when the plaster dried unevenly during its application by Italian artist Constantino Brumidi, who created the fresco. Prior restoration attempts compounded the problem, he said.

Rabin contends that art historians who have criticized the Sistine Chapel restoration are off base.

"The truth is it is closer now to what Michelangelo intended," he said.

The cleansing of the Capitol's 122-year-old fresco, "Apotheosis of Washington," is scheduled to begin by the end of this month.

TORNADO or THUNDERSTORM

WATCH
(Conditions are right for a tornado or severe thunderstorm to form.)

WARNING
(A tornado or severe thunderstorm already is in existence.)

In North Texas, mostly cloudy with scattered thunderstorms through tonight. Scattered thunderstorms continuing over the east on Wednesday with widely scattered thunderstorms elsewhere. Highs 80s. Lows 60s.

In South Texas, mostly cloudy through Wednesday with scattered thunderstorms, most numerous and heavy South Central Texas, Hill Country and adjacent areas of Edwards Plateau. Highs 80s except near 90 inland south. Lows in the mid 60s Hill Country to the upper 70s coast.

In West Texas, partly cloudy with widely scattered to scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms through Wednesday. A few possibly severe this evening. Highs Wednesday mostly in the 80s, except mid 90s Big Bend and far west. Lows tonight 50s mountains, far west and Panhandle to mid 60s south.

Thunderstorms still in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

A chance of thunderstorms, some possibly severe, remains in the forecast for the Permian Basin through mid-week, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, with a few possibly severe. The low will be in the mid 60s, with southeast winds 5-10 mph.

Wednesday will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, with a high expected in the upper 80s. Winds will be from the east 5-15 mph.

Monday's high of 86 was only 15 degrees cooler than the record high of 101 set in 1958. This morning's low of 62 was 14 degrees warmer than the record low of 48, which was set in 1970.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms developed over the Texas Hill Country early today and spread southward across South Texas.

A flash flood watch was in effect today for South Central Texas, the Hill Country and adjacent areas of the Edwards Plateau. Forecasts called for the possiblity of showers and thunderstorms statewide.

The showers and thunderstorms were being triggered by an upper level low pressure system moving over moist, unstable air spreading northward over the state from the Gulf of Mexico.

Another weather system produced little activity, forecasters said. It was a cold front that moved into the Panhandle during the night and was moving slowly southward. Forecasters said they didn't expect much activity out of the weak cold front.

Forecasts called for partly cloudy skies in West Texas and mostly cloudy skies in North Texas through Wednesday.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms soaked the Midwest and southern Texas today, while sweltering residents of the Northeast looked westward for relief from a heat wave that entered its fifth day.

Temperatures in much of the East were expected to hit the 90s again after hitting record highs Monday.

Newark, N.J., tied its mark for the date of 94 degrees, as did Baltimore, where it was 93 degrees, and Portland, Maine, 87. The 84-degree reading in Marquette, Mich., surpassed the 1963 mark by 2 degrees.

Heavy rains continued to plague southern Texas, where a flash flood watch remained in effect today, while rain fell in the western Great Lakes to the central Plains and lower Missouri Valley.

Local health officials oppose AIDS tests

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

At a recent policy-making meeting in Houston, the Texas Medical Association approved a recommendation in opposition to the one that garnered the nation's top two officials jeers and boos earlier this week.

Crowds on Sunday evening and Monday morning at Washington D.C. meetings of the Third International Conference on AIDS taunted and hissed President Reagan's and Vice President Bush's call for mandatory testing of AIDS in certain non-high risk categories.

According to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, high risk groups — accounting for 91 percent of the some 36,000 cases of AIDS in America — involve homosexual and bisexual males and intravenous drug abusers.

TMA officials voted in May to oppose the routine AIDS testing of general populations at this time, including pre-marital screening, but the president and vice president said federal, state and local prisoners, aliens seeking permanent residence and couples wanting to get married should be tested for AIDS.

Bush stressed the need for confidentiality of the test results.

However, local medical and health authorities agree with the TMA ideology for four reasons.

They said AIDS testing of the general population would not be cost effective; garner a high number of false positive results; result in negative repercussions from foreign countries; and take a serious psychological toll on those who wrongly test postive.

"They (Reagan and Bush) are saying what they think most people want to hear," said Texas Department of Health Disease Intervention Specialist Tommy Langham.

Also of concern to health officials, such as the chairman of the TMA's Sexually Transmitted Disease Committee, is that routine or mandatory testing would tend to run underground the "very individuals we would want to get tested.

"It's important to get the high risk population tested," said that committee's chairman, Dr. Al Randall.

Testing of general populations would not be cost effective, Langham explained, because the testing would run the state about $8 a person.

"If they decide to provide the test for free, the cost efficiency of such a program would be ridiculous and swamp health departments," Langham said.

Because of sparse funding from a state-administered federal grant, TDH offices like Langham's only can afford to offer the free test to high risk group members, he said.

The state of Texas has allocated no funding for AIDS education or testing, Langham said.

The test to determine the presence of the AIDS antibody in the blood is about 98 percent sensitive and specific, Langham said, meaning that the test is almost always accurate.

The remaining 2 percent would most likely consist of a greater number of false positives than of false negatives, he said.

The disease specialist was concerned that those within the general population who receive false positive results might suffer severe psychological trauma.

Langham pointed out that suicide is not unheard of among those who receive positive test results.

Of other repercussions, Langham said a couple paying about $60 to $80 per blood test could end marriage plans because of a false positive result.

Since August 1984, Texas has required no blood tests for couples prior to marriage, Langham said.

Aliens seeking permanent residence in America — about 3,000,000 people because of recent immigration reforms — are tested for sexually transmitted diseases such as gonorrhea and syphilis, but not for AIDS.

"I think it's because it's a new disease, and concern from the State Department may be because they fear retribution from other countries," Randall said.

There is a chance that if the U.S. routinely tests those applying for an extended stay or residence in this country, other countries could slap an AIDS test on any American who wished to vacation or apply for an extended stay in another country, Langham explained.

"I can sort of understand testing people from Central Africa and Haiti, and I can even understand testing people who are applying for American citizenship, but I can't go for testing people who are just traveling out of the country," said the disease intervention specialist.

Also paramount in the minds of health officials is the lack of confidentiality that possibly could accompany the routine testing.

AIDS is not covered by the Venereal Disease Control Act — which calls for anonymous testing — and instead falls under the Communicable Disease Act, which carries no anonymity clause, Langham said.

Coupled with AIDS in that latter act are diseases such as rubella and diptheria.

Unlike Texas, cases of AIDS in Colorado are reported directly to the state's health department and therefore the results are not anonymous, Langham said.

In Texas however, a person who tests positively for the AIDS antibody is known only by an assigned number and his test results and number — but not his name — go directly to the CDC in Atlanta, Langham said.

But if testing is opened up to a level similar to that of Colorado's, those who are most likely at highest risk will be the ones who stay farthest away from the testing centers, the disease specialist predicted.

"From the way people are talking, the next thing they'll do is make a list and round them up," Langham said.

"They (high risk groups) are afraid if they go get tested and test positively, their employer could find out and they could lose their jobs," Randall added. "Out of fear they would run off."

U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop has instead called for monies to be concentrated not in the areas of random and meaningless testing, but instead on education.

Millie Howard, who has taught English in Midland public schools for 25 years, has been named Outstanding Teacher of the Year by the Midland Kiwanis Club.

Jerry Mennenga/ Reporter-Telegram

MISD English teacher honored by Kiwanis Club

From Staff Reports

Twenty-five years have past since Millie Howard took a job teaching English in Midland public schools.

Now after a quarter of a century, her students and colleagues thought it fitting to reward the Midland High School teacher for her years of untiring service.

The Midland Kiwanis Club agreed, naming her its Outstanding Teacher of the Year.

Mrs. Howard joined the Midland Independent School District team in 1962 to help graduate the first class of seniors at Lee High School who had failed one semester of English. She moved on to MHS some years later.

That first year was a challenge, Mrs. Howard recalled. But she added that she's been hooked on teaching ever since.

It isn't only Mrs. Howard's years of service to the district as a teacher that should be heralded by faculty, students and parents, said MHS Principal Jimmie Kelly.

Mrs. Howard also deserves recognition for her dedication to various activities outside the classroom, including her being named Favorite Teacher by MHS student organizations and Outstading Teacher by MHS faculty, he said.

Mrs. Howard is a former drill team, pep squad and cheerleading advisor, class sponsor, debate and extemporaneous speaking coach, and has directed and produced class plays.

In addition, she is active in numerous civic organizations, serving on the board of directors of Midland Community Concerts and Midland Council on Alcoholism. She was secretary of the Midland Heart Association, organized the first All-City Mothers March, taught Sunday School, held various Parent-Teacher Association offices and is a PTA Life Member.

She is active in Midland Community Theatre, Midland-Odessa Symphony, Ballet Midland, Friends of the Library, Museum of the Southwest and the Midland Arts Association.

Mrs. Howard summed up her feelings about her classroom career in a letter written recently to Principal Kelly.

"Every student is special," she said. "I firmly believe that no student comes to me by accident."

A sign hanging on her classroom wall takes that philosophy one step further.

The sign reads, "Many have been my students. All have been my teachers."

Various relief programs available

Spokesman says 100 percent of tornado victims will be helped

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Survivors of the Saragosa tornado disaster may feel like they're in the middle of a "beneficial ping-pong game" between government and privately offered relief programs, a spokesman for the government assistance office said today.

But applying for government help is more like "one-stop shopping" when the victims enter the temporary governmental assistance office in Balmorhea, the spokesman, Win Henderson, said.

The governmental center had processed 93 "households" for a myriad of special disaster help by 6 p.m. Monday, Henderson said.

"In this disaster, I can make the statement that we will be 100 percent successful in reaching everybody affected by the tornado," he said of the estimated 350 residents who lived in the Saragosa community.

That success rate translates into help for about 110 households by the time the Balmorhea office closes Wednesday, he said.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency will continue to maintain a Pecos field office after the Balmorhea office closes, he said.

The agency also is cross-checking the names of eight victims that currently remain hospitalized — seven in Odessa and one in Fort Stockton — to make sure their families have been included in the government assistance programs, he said.

Henderson's reference to ping-pong came was explanation of the kind of assistance offered by both the governement and private agencies.

Private agencies were instrumental in instituting assistance just after the disaster, while the combination of state and federal aid offered by Henderson's office is more of an intermediate nature, he said.

Of the 93 households that applied for governmental assistance by 6 p.m. Monday, 67 were referred to programs that offer temporary housing assistance, he said.

That program helps the victims pay for temporary housing on a month-to-month basis while their homes are being rebuilt, he said.

He added that the governmental assistance by law cannot duplicate other assistance efforts offered by agencies like the American Red Cross or the Salvation Army.

While the residents must handle the housing costs themselves "up front," they are reimbursed by the government after the fact, he said.

"The landlord knows they will be paid back, so they (the victims) are given credit," he said.

Within the hierarchy of government programs that are available to the victims, they must next apply for small business disaster loans, he said.

For most, that application is merely "a formality," he added. Four Saragosa victims so far have become eligible for the loans, he said.

After being turned down for that program, residents were passed on to a program that offers grants to individual families for immediate necessities, he said.

Up to $5,000 is available to the 74 households that so far have applied for that kind of assistance, Henderson said, cautioning that the money is doled out based on need and not all families will receive the entire $5,000 figure.

Among necessities residents may buy under the program are clothing, bedding and furniture, he said.

While the program also makes allowances for transportation, that necessity has been handled for the most part by the donations of 60 used cars by many area dealerships, including three in Midland.

Cars from Rogers Ford Sales, Jack Sherman Chevrolet and Berg Motor Co. were among those donated to the victims, a press release from the Texas Automobile Dealers Association said.

Henderson said that food assistance for the victims will come from the Texas Department of Human Services' food stamps program.

Among other programs for which the victims may be eligible is up to a year of unemployment assistance, if they were injured, lost job necessities like tools, or a breadwinner was killed in the disaster, he said.

A mobile home program whereby victims may be eligible to buy federally owned mobile homes for a nominal price also is available to those who qualify, he said.

Other programs administered by the disaster center include those for special veterans' benefits, Social Security benefits and Internal Revenue Service refunds, he said.

Ditchdigger rolls off assembly line

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The first trencher manufactured in Odessa by one of the city's newest industries rolled off the line Monday, destined for use by an Austin-based general utility contractor.

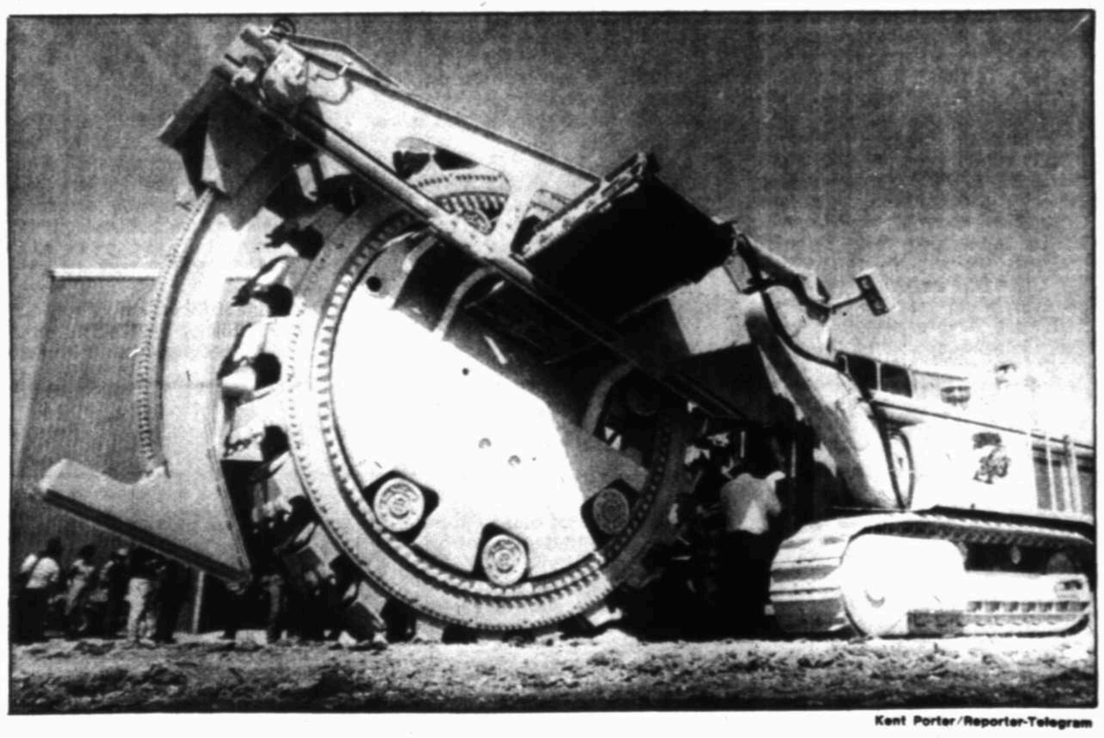

The huge, nearly 73-ton ditchdigger, is the first of four to be constructed at the facility jointly shared by Capitol Trencher Corp. and Perry Gas Processors at 2501 E. Pearl, according to spokesman Don Barlow.

Capitol Trencher, a subsidiary of Capital Enterprises Inc. of Odessa, acquired Perry Gas Processors last December to utilize the company's manufacturing, engineering and management capabilities to manufacture heavy trenching equipment.

Barlow said cost of the first trencher is between $450,000 and $500,000. The Model 960 that rolled off the line Monday features a 375 horsepower Caterpillar 3406 diesel engine and, depending on job requirements, can dig a nine-foot-deep trench 28 to 48 inches wide, he said. The 960 model is the second largest ditching machine built by Capitol Trencher.

The trenching equipment manufactured by Capitol is sold and used worldwide to dig trenches for many types of pipelines, including sewer, oil, gas, water, fiber optic, telephone and storm drains.

The second trenching machine, which Capitol employees began building April 9, is scheduled for completion around July 15. Typical manufacturing time from date of order to delivery for the Model 960 is appoximately 60 days, according to Barlow. Two smaller machines also are in varying stages of the manufacturing process.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

This huge, 73-ton trencher is the first ditchdigger to roll off the line at Capital Trencher Corp. in Odessa. At a cost of between $450,000 and $500,000, the trencher features a 375 horsepower Caterpillar 3406 diesel engine and can dig a nine-foot-deep trench between 28 and 48 inches wide, depending on the machinery's configuration.

In addition to production of Capitol's trenching machines, Perry Gas Processors continues to manufacture gas processing equipment.

Jim Flowers, Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce executive vice president, attending Monday's rollout ceremony termed the Capitol-Perry shared facility concept "a real example of diversification."

Capitol presently has a work force of 20 employees. The company also operates a plant in California.

Monday's rollout ceremony also included a barbeque lunch cooked by company employees. Barlow said it was Capitol's way of showing its appreciation for support received from the community since the decision was made to locate in Odessa.

TAMMI JACOBS

Mistake met with understanding rather than condemnation

I made a mistake the other day, one in a long line of mistakes. This particular mistake, however, affected a whole family. The way the family treated my mistake was an inspiration.

Jacobs

One of the services a newspaper provides its community is the publication of obituaries. The responsibility of writing these at our paper falls to me on weekday mornings.

Recently, a family brought obituary information early on a Monday morning. Through a series of avoidable incidents, the article was not published until two days later, the day of the funeral service.

On the day of publication a friend of the family called and asked what the problem had been in placing the obituary. Having admitted my error to the editor, I braced myself to return the woman's call and apologize.

Obituaries, engagement and wedding announcements, even garage sale ads mean a great deal to those involved. When, in print, a mistake is made involving folks' personal situations, the people get upset, even angry, and rightly so. Most are quite vocal in making clear exactly how much your error has cost them mentally, emotionally or financially.

So, the events of the few moments after first lifting the telephone receiver to try to make amends really stunned me.

The friend was nice, said she was concerned. The woman accepted my apology and requested that I call the wife of the deceased since she too wondered about the delayed article.

Once again preparing for a deserved tongue-lashing, I dialed the number of the widow. Answering the phone, she sounded like a very sweet lady. I thought, "Just wait until she finds out who I am!"

If possible, the woman was even sweeter. She said, "Oh, my dear! Thank you so much for calling!"

On hearing my acceptance of blame and apology, she said, "Well, of course, we all make mistakes. Don't worry yourself. I understand."

This most gracious woman then requested that I call her sister-in-law to explain the circumstances, since she was the one who actually brought in the information for the obituary.

Having twice placed calls, expecting to be chewed out and been graciously pardoned, the third number was dialed. This will be the one, I thought as the phone rang on the other end.

Disbelief filled me as the third person in less than five minutes forgave instead of condemned. The sister-in-law was every bit as nice and understanding as the widow.

She also said, "Thank you for letting us hear from you. It's all right. We understand, mistakes happen. I was just concerned about our friend who wrote the story for us." She thanked me again before she hung up.

Here were three women who had every opportunity to complain, belittle, and condemn. They did not!

Instead, each was grateful to be acknowledged and informed; each was forgiving and understanding; and, finally, each was concerned about someone else.

A lot of folks tend to blow up at perceived injustices smaller than this actual offense.

Wouldn't we all be better off to surprise with and be surprised by forgiving, understanding responses to those who offend and are offended by us!

Really, the best example was set a couple thousand years ago.

From Staff and Wire Reports

A chance of thunderstorms, some possibly severe, remains in the forecast for the Permian Basin through mid-week, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, with a few possibly severe. The low will be in the mid 60s, with southeast winds 5-10 mph.

Wednesday will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, with a high expected in the upper 80s. Winds will be from the east 5-15 mph.

Monday's high of 86 was only 15 degrees cooler than the record high of 101 set in 1958. This morning's low of 62 was 14 degrees warmer than the record low of 48, which was set in 1970.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms developed over the Texas Hill Country early today and spread southward across South Texas.

A flash flood watch was in effect today for South Central Texas, the Hill Country and adjacent areas of the Edwards Plateau. Forecasts called for the possiblity of showers and thunderstorms statewide.

The showers and thunderstorms were being triggered by an upper level low pressure system moving over moist, unstable air spreading northward over the state from the Gulf of Mexico.

Another weather system produced little activity, forecasters said. It was a cold front that moved into the Panhandle during the night and was moving slowly southward. Forecasters said they didn't expect much activity out of the weak cold front.

Forecasts called for partly cloudy skies in West Texas and mostly cloudy skies in North Texas through Wednesday.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms soaked the Midwest and southern Texas today, while sweltering residents of the Northeast looked westward for relief from a heat wave that entered its fifth day.

Temperatures in much of the East were expected to hit the 90s again after hitting record highs Monday.

Newark, N.J., tied its mark for the date of 94 degrees, as did Baltimore, where it was 93 degrees, and Portland, Maine, 87. The 84-degree reading in Marquette, Mich., surpassed the 1963 mark by 2 degrees.

Heavy rains continued to plague southern Texas, where a flash flood watch remained in effect today, while rain fell in the western Great Lakes to the central Plains and lower Missouri Valley.

Local health officials oppose AIDS tests

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

At a recent policy-making meeting in Houston, the Texas Medical Association approved a recommendation in opposition to the one that garnered the nation's top two officials jeers and boos earlier this week.

Crowds on Sunday evening and Monday morning at Washington D.C. meetings of the Third International Conference on AIDS taunted and hissed President Reagan's and Vice President Bush's call for mandatory testing of AIDS in certain non-high risk categories.

According to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, high risk groups — accounting for 91 percent of the some 36,000 cases of AIDS in America — involve homosexual and bisexual males and intravenous drug abusers.

TMA officials voted in May to oppose the routine AIDS testing of general populations at this time, including pre-marital screening, but the president and vice president said federal, state and local prisoners, aliens seeking permanent residence and couples wanting to get married should be tested for AIDS.

Bush stressed the need for confidentiality of the test results.

However, local medical and health authorities agree with the TMA ideology for four reasons.

They said AIDS testing of the general population would not be cost effective; garner a high number of false positive results; result in negative repercussions from foreign countries; and take a serious psychological toll on those who wrongly test postive.

"They (Reagan and Bush) are saying what they think most people want to hear," said Texas Department of Health Disease Intervention Specialist Tommy Langham.

Also of concern to health officials, such as the chairman of the TMA's Sexually Transmitted Disease Committee, is that routine or mandatory testing would tend to run underground the "very individuals we would want to get tested.

"It's important to get the high risk population tested," said that committee's chairman, Dr. Al Randall.

Testing of general populations would not be cost effective, Langham explained, because the testing would run the state about $8 a person.

"If they decide to provide the test for free, the cost efficiency of such a program would be ridiculous and swamp health departments," Langham said.

Because of sparse funding from a state-administered federal grant, TDH offices like Langham's only can afford to offer the free test to high risk group members, he said.

The state of Texas has allocated no funding for AIDS education or testing, Langham said.

The test to determine the presence of the AIDS antibody in the blood is about 98 percent sensitive and specific, Langham said, meaning that the test is almost always accurate.

The remaining 2 percent would most likely consist of a greater number of false positives than of false negatives, he said.

The disease specialist was concerned that those within the general population who receive false positive results might suffer severe psychological trauma.

Langham pointed out that suicide is not unheard of among those who receive positive test results.

Of other repercussions, Langham said a couple paying about $60 to $80 per blood test could end marriage plans because of a false positive result.

Since August 1984, Texas has required no blood tests for couples prior to marriage, Langham said.

Aliens seeking permanent residence in America — about 3,000,000 people because of recent immigration reforms — are tested for sexually transmitted diseases such as gonorrhea and syphilis, but not for AIDS.

"I think it's because it's a new disease, and concern from the State Department may be because they fear retribution from other countries," Randall said.

There is a chance that if the U.S. routinely tests those applying for an extended stay or residence in this country, other countries could slap an AIDS test on any American who wished to vacation or apply for an extended stay in another country, Langham explained.

"I can sort of understand testing people from Central Africa and Haiti, and I can even understand testing people who are applying for American citizenship, but I can't go for testing people who are just traveling out of the country," said the disease intervention specialist.

Also paramount in the minds of health officials is the lack of confidentiality that possibly could accompany the routine testing.

AIDS is not covered by the Venereal Disease Control Act — which calls for anonymous testing — and instead falls under the Communicable Disease Act, which carries no anonymity clause, Langham said.

Coupled with AIDS in that latter act are diseases such as rubella and diptheria.

Unlike Texas, cases of AIDS in Colorado are reported directly to the state's health department and therefore the results are not anonymous, Langham said.

In Texas however, a person who tests positively for the AIDS antibody is known only by an assigned number and his test results and number — but not his name — go directly to the CDC in Atlanta, Langham said.

But if testing is opened up to a level similar to that of Colorado's, those who are most likely at highest risk will be the ones who stay farthest away from the testing centers, the disease specialist predicted.

"From the way people are talking, the next thing they'll do is make a list and round them up," Langham said.

"They (high risk groups) are afraid if they go get tested and test positively, their employer could find out and they could lose their jobs," Randall added. "Out of fear they would run off."

U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop has instead called for monies to be concentrated not in the areas of random and meaningless testing, but instead on education.

Millie Howard, who has taught English in Midland public schools for 25 years, has been named Outstanding Teacher of the Year by the Midland Kiwanis Club.

MISD English teacher honored by Kiwanis Club

From Staff Reports

Twenty-five years have past since Millie Howard took a job teaching English in Midland public schools.

Now after a quarter of a century, her students and colleagues thought it fitting to reward the Midland High School teacher for her years of untiring service.

The Midland Kiwanis Club agreed, naming her its Outstanding Teacher of the Year.

Mrs. Howard joined the Midland Independent School District team in 1962 to help graduate the first class of seniors at Lee High School who had failed one semester of English. She moved on to MHS some years later.

That first year was a challenge, Mrs. Howard recalled. But she added that she's been hooked on teaching ever since.

It isn't only Mrs. Howard's years of service to the district as a teacher that should be heralded by faculty, students and parents, said MHS Principal Jimmie Kelly.

Mrs. Howard also deserves recognition for her dedication to various activities outside the classroom, including her being named Favorite Teacher by MHS student organizations and Outstading Teacher by MHS faculty, he said.

Mrs. Howard is a former drill team, pep squad and cheerleading advisor, class sponsor, debate and extemporaneous speaking coach, and has directed and produced class plays.

In addition, she is active in numerous civic organizations, serving on the board of directors of Midland Community Concerts and Midland Council on Alcoholism. She was secretary of the Midland Heart Association, organized the first All-City Mothers March, taught Sunday School, held various Parent-Teacher Association offices and is a PTA Life Member.

She is active in Midland Community Theatre, Midland-Odessa Symphony, Ballet Midland, Friends of the Library, Museum of the Southwest and the Midland Arts Association.

Mrs. Howard summed up her feelings about her classroom career in a letter written recently to Principal Kelly.

"Every student is special," she said. "I firmly believe that no student comes to me by accident."

A sign hanging on her classroom wall takes that philosophy one step further.

The sign reads, "Many have been my students. All have been my teachers."

Various relief programs available

Spokesman says 100 percent of tornado victims will be helped

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Survivors of the Saragosa tornado disaster may feel like they're in the middle of a "beneficial ping-pong game" between government and privately offered relief programs, a spokesman for the government assistance office said today.

But applying for government help is more like "one-stop shopping" when the victims enter the temporary governmental assistance office in Balmorhea, the spokesman, Win Henderson, said.

The governmental center had processed 93 "households" for a myriad of special disaster help by 6 p.m. Monday, Henderson said.

"In this disaster, I can make the statement that we will be 100 percent successful in reaching everybody affected by the tornado," he said of the estimated 350 residents who lived in the Saragosa community.

That success rate translates into help for about 110 households by the time the Balmorhea office closes Wednesday, he said.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency will continue to maintain a Pecos field office after the Balmorhea office closes, he said.

The agency also is cross-checking the names of eight victims that currently remain hospitalized — seven in Odessa and one in Fort Stockton — to make sure their families have been included in the government assistance programs, he said.

Henderson's reference to ping-pong came was explanation of the kind of assistance offered by both the governement and private agencies.

Private agencies were instrumental in instituting assistance just after the disaster, while the combination of state and federal aid offered by Henderson's office is more of an intermediate nature, he said.

Of the 93 households that applied for governmental assistance by 6 p.m. Monday, 67 were referred to programs that offer temporary housing assistance, he said.

That program helps the victims pay for temporary housing on a month-to-month basis while their homes are being rebuilt, he said.

He added that the governmental assistance by law cannot duplicate other assistance efforts offered by agencies like the American Red Cross or the Salvation Army.

While the residents must handle the housing costs themselves "up front," they are reimbursed by the government after the fact, he said.

"The landlord knows they will be paid back, so they (the victims) are given credit," he said.

Within the hierarchy of government programs that are available to the victims, they must next apply for small business disaster loans, he said.

For most, that application is merely "a formality," he added. Four Saragosa victims so far have become eligible for the loans, he said.

After being turned down for that program, residents were passed on to a program that offers grants to individual families for immediate necessities, he said.

Up to $5,000 is available to the 74 households that so far have applied for that kind of assistance, Henderson said, cautioning that the money is doled out based on need and not all families will receive the entire $5,000 figure.

Among necessities residents may buy under the program are clothing, bedding and furniture, he said.

While the program also makes allowances for transportation, that necessity has been handled for the most part by the donations of 60 used cars by many area dealerships, including three in Midland.

Cars from Rogers Ford Sales, Jack Sherman Chevrolet and Berg Motor Co. were among those donated to the victims, a press release from the Texas Automobile Dealers Association said.

Henderson said that food assistance for the victims will come from the Texas Department of Human Services' food stamps program.

Among other programs for which the victims may be eligible is up to a year of unemployment assistance, if they were injured, lost job necessities like tools, or a breadwinner was killed in the disaster, he said.

A mobile home program whereby victims may be eligible to buy federally owned mobile homes for a nominal price also is available to those who qualify, he said.

Other programs administered by the disaster center include those for special veterans' benefits, Social Security benefits and Internal Revenue Service refunds, he said.

Ditchdigger rolls off assembly line

ODESSA — The first trencher manufactured in Odessa by one of the city's newest industries rolled off the line Monday, destined for use by an Austin-based general utility contractor.

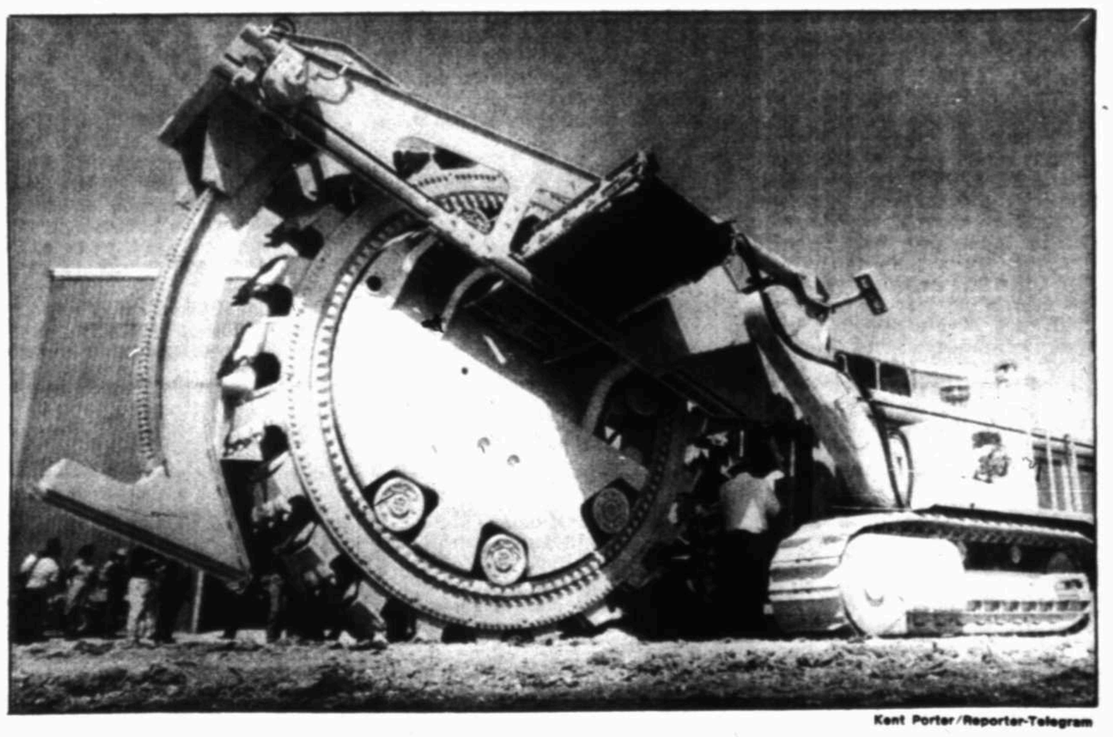

The huge, nearly 73-ton ditchdigger, is the first of four to be constructed at the facility jointly shared by Capitol Trencher Corp. and Perry Gas Processors at 2501 E. Pearl, according to spokesman Don Barlow.

Capitol Trencher, a subsidiary of Capital Enterprises Inc. of Odessa, acquired Perry Gas Processors last December to utilize the company's manufacturing, engineering and management capabilities to manufacture heavy trenching equipment.

Barlow said cost of the first trencher is between $450,000 and $500,000. The Model 960 that rolled off the line Monday features a 375 horsepower Caterpillar 3406 diesel engine and, depending on job requirements, can dig a nine-foot-deep trench 28 to 48 inches wide, he said. The 960 model is the second largest ditching machine built by Capitol Trencher.

The trenching equipment manufactured by Capitol is sold and used worldwide to dig trenches for many types of pipelines, including sewer, oil, gas, water, fiber optic, telephone and storm drains.

The second trenching machine, which Capitol employees began building April 9, is scheduled for completion around July 15. Typical manufacturing time from date of order to delivery for the Model 960 is appoximately 60 days, according to Barlow. Two smaller machines also are in varying stages of the manufacturing process.

In addition to production of Capitol's trenching machines, Perry Gas Processors continues to manufacture gas processing equipment.

Jim Flowers, Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce executive vice president, attending Monday's rollout ceremony termed the Capitol-Perry shared facility concept "a real example of diversification."

Capitol presently has a work force of 20 employees. The company also operates a plant in California.

Monday's rollout ceremony also included a barbeque lunch cooked by company employees. Barlow said it was Capitol's way of showing its appreciation for support received from the community since the decision was made to locate in Odessa.

Mistake met with understanding rather than condemnation

Jacobs

I made a mistake the other day, one in a long line of mistakes. This particular mistake, however, affected a whole family. The way the family treated my mistake was an inspiration.

One of the services a newspaper provides its community is the publication of obituaries. The responsibility of writing these at our paper falls to me on weekday mornings.

Recently, a family brought obituary information early on a Monday morning. Through a series of avoidable incidents, the article was not published until two days later, the day of the funeral service.

On the day of publication a friend of the family called and asked what the problem had been in placing the obituary. Having admitted my error to the editor, I braced myself to return the woman's call and apologize.

Obituaries, engagement and wedding announcements, even garage sale ads mean a great deal to those involved. When, in print, a mistake is made involving folks' personal situations, the people get upset, even angry, and rightly so. Most are quite vocal in making clear exactly how much your error has cost them mentally, emotionally or financially.

So, the events of the few moments after first lifting the telephone receiver to try to make amends really stunned me.

The friend was nice, said she was concerned. The woman accepted my apology and requested that I call the wife of the deceased since she too wondered about the delayed article.

Once again preparing for a deserved tongue-lashing, I dialed the number of the widow. Answering the phone, she sounded like a very sweet lady. I thought, "Just wait until she finds out who I am!"

If possible, the woman was even sweeter. She said, "Oh, my dear! Thank you so much for calling!"

On hearing my acceptance of blame and apology, she said, "Well, of course, we all make mistakes. Don't worry yourself. I understand."

This most gracious woman then requested that I call her sister-in-law to explain the circumstances, since she was the one who actually brought in the information for the obituary.

Having twice placed calls, expecting to be chewed out and been graciously pardoned, the third number was dialed. This will be the one, I thought as the phone rang on the other end.

Disbelief filled me as the third person in less than five minutes forgave instead of condemned. The sister-in-law was every bit as nice and understanding as the widow.

She also said, "Thank you for letting us hear from you. It's all right. We understand, mistakes happen. I was just concerned about our friend who wrote the story for us." She thanked me again before she hung up.

Here were three women who had every opportunity to complain, belittle, and condemn. They did not!

Instead, each was grateful to be acknowledged and informed; each was forgiving and understanding; and, finally, each was concerned about someone else.

A lot of folks tend to blow up at perceived injustices smaller than this actual offense.

Wouldn't we all be better off to surprise with and be surprised by forgiving, understanding responses to those who offend and are offended by us!

Really, the best example was set a couple thousand years ago.

Rockin' in Dallas

Wichita River expected to recede for mechanized falls' inauguration

Associated Press

Swollen creeks postponed the start of filling what will be one of Texas' largest lakes, but floods likely will have receeded later this week in time for Wichita Falls to get back its namesake, officials said.

Construction of a coffer dam to begin impounding water at Richland-Chambers Reservoir, a 44,000-acre lake in Navarro and Freestone counties, has been delayed because the creeks that will feed it are too full, said Mike Williams, project supervisor for Tarrant County Water Control and Improvement District No. 1.

And although the bottom of a manmade waterfall was under water from a flooded river Monday, Wichita Falls officials are counting on the waters receding by Friday. That's when they will inaugurate the mechanized falls at the beginning of a three-day community celebration.

Willard Scott, weatherman on NBC-TV's "Today" show, was scheduled to broadcast from the site of the falls this morning.

The Tarrant County water district, which is building the lake about 50 miles southeast of Dallas as a raw water supply for customers in the Fort Worth area, originally planned to close the reservor's nine-mile long earthen dam last summer. Problems with land and mineral acquisition in the lake bed delayed it for a year.

Richland and Chambers creeks are full to their banks after heavy rains on their watersheds over the past week, while the area where the coffer dam will be built either is soaked or under water, Williams said Monday.

"It's like trying to stop up a garden hose with bubblegum," he said, noting that the start of dam closure will be delayed for a week or two.

The coffer dam will impound water up to 50 feet below the main dam's top, which is at 315 feet above mean sea level, while workers fill in a cut where the creeks have been flowing while construction was completed, Williams said.

The lake, a multimillion-dollar project located a few miles southeast of Corsicana, will be kept at the lower level for 18 months to two years as engineers check the dam, construction continues on railroad relocation, and the capping of oil wells in the lake bed is completed, water district officials said.

With an average depth of more than 20 feet at maximum pool, the lake is expected to be a major recreational area with a number of resort developments and marinas.

In Wichita Falls, more than 100 homes along the Wichita River were flooded Monday after intense rainfall over a small tributary creek west of the city caused delayed and unexpected flooding over the weekend, city officials said.

Roby Christie, head of a private group promoting Wichita Falls parks development, said the dedication of the falls project — complete with a visit by the mayor of Niagara Falls, N.Y. — will take place as scheduled Friday afternoon.

"The river level is falling," Christie said Monday, noting that the Wichita was at its highest level in 50 years. "It has affected the falls, but it won't delay it."

Doctor says Priscilla Davis 'still suffers'

By MIKE COCHRAN

FORT WORTH (AP) — Priscilla Davis still suffers from emotional disorders linked to the slaying of her 12-year-old daughter in a shooting spree at the Cullen Davis mansion in 1976, an Austin psychiatrist testified today.

Mrs. Davis, 45, contends in a wrongful death suit it was Davis, her ex-husband, who killed two people and wounded her and a mansion visitor in the bloody nighttime attack.

Dr. Richard Coons identified the disorders as "post traumatic stress syndrome" and "depression" and said they induce feelings of fear, anxiety and grief.

"It's horrible living in fear," the psychiatrist quoted her as saying. "People ask me if I'm afraid of Cullen. I don't even want to think about it because it will drive me crazy."

Reading from notes taken during an examination of Mrs. Davis last March, Coons recounted her version of the events of Aug. 2-3 in which she repeatedly identified Davis as the bewigged gunman dressed in black.

The psychiatrist testified that Mrs. Davis should undergo expensive therapy treatment for years.

In earlier testimony, several people said they were told the gunman was Davis immediately after the shooting spree.

Seven plaintiffs' witnesses testified Monday during the third day of testimony in a multimillion-dollar civil suit in which Davis, 53, is accused of killing his stepdaughter, Andrea Wilborn.

An Amarillo jury acquitted Davis of the child's death in 1977. But the criminal verdict has no bearing on the current civil suits.

The defendant's ex-wife Priscilla contends in her suit that Davis killed her daughter and then ambushed her and her live-in boyfriend, Stan Farr, in the August 1976 attack.

Farr, 30, died at the scene. Though severely wounded, Mrs. Davis ran from the mansion and sought help at the home of neighbors Clifford and Catherine Jones.

Mrs. Jones, now a widow, testified Monday she was awakened by her barking dog in the early morning hours of Aug. 3 and saw someone moving through the courtyard toward her front door.

"I'm Priscilla Davis and I live in the big house up on the hill," she quoted Mrs. Davis as saying.

After Mrs. Davis told her that "Cullen's up at the house killing everybody," Mrs. Jones said Priscilla asked her to call police and "tell them to hurry. It's bad."

The witness described Mrs. Davis as "excited...but not hysterical."

John Smedley, 40, a former security patrolman, told the jury how Beverly Bass, then 18, whistled him down after the shootings and begged him to help her and her boyfriend, Bubba Gavrel, then 22.

"My boyfriend has been shot and I think he's dying," he quoted her as saying. There was this exchange:

"I saw him do it," said Miss Bass, who was not harmed in the shooting.

"You saw who do it?"

"Cullen. Cullen did it."

Smedley said Miss Bass told him also how she eluded the gunman in a chase across the darkened estate and how she flagged down a passing motorist who telephoned police.

Gavrel, who married Miss Bass last year, remains crippled with a bullet lodged near his spine. He settled his own personal injury suit with Davis last year for what was reported to be a million dollars in land, cash and deferred payments.

Smedley, Mrs. Jones, two police officers and three ambulance drivers were the seven witnesses permitted by the court to testify to the events immediately following the 12:40 a.m. shootings.

Fort Worth Police Lt. Gordon Box led off by recounting how he arrived at the Davis estate within minutes of the rampage and found a "very excited, possibly angry" young woman, Miss Bass.

"I asked her if she knew who had done the shooting," Box said.

"Yes, it was Cullen," he quoted her as saying.

Box said there was this exchange:

"Cullen who?"

"Cullen Davis."

"Are you sure?"

Box said Miss Bass was "very adamant that it was Cullen Davis. She said she'd known him a long time."

Box told the jury Monday he entered the mansion after talking with Miss Bass and found Gavrel critically wounded and Farr dead on the kitchen floor.

Box said he ordered the mansion surrounded and searched because "we didn't know whether or not Mr. Davis might still be on the premises."

He said blood smears on a wall and light switch led officers down a flight of stairs to the basement, where they found Andrea's lifeless body on the floor of a utility room.

Minister says bishop admitted he was 'gay'

HOUSTON (AP) — A retired United Methodist Church bishop who died last month of AIDS was a homosexual, a minister and a gay rights activist have told the Houston Chronicle.

A United Methodist Church minister, who serves outside of Texas, was quoted in the newspaper Sunday as saying that the late Rev. Finis A. Crutchfield, 70, had discussed his homosexual relationships with him.

The minister, who requested anonymity, said in a prepared statement that from mid-1984 through 1985, he had "candid conversations (with Crutchfield) about his same-sex sexual experiences and about his ministry with gay persons."

"I can state categorically that Bishop Crutchfield was sexually active with men over a period of many years, continuing at least into 1984," the minister said. He said he first talked with Crutchfield about it at a conference in Baltimore in 1984.

Houston gay rights activist Ray Hill also said the retired bishop told him in the late 1970s that he engaged in homosexual conduct.

Crutchfield's son, the Rev. Charles Crutchfield, pastor of the First United Methodist Church of Odessa, said Monday he stands by his previous statement that his father was not a homosexual.

"That's really all I have to say about that," he told the Associated Press.

No one from the church has publicly confirmed Crutchfield was a homosexual.

Crutchfield's family released a statement after his death saying he had died of AIDS but had not contracted the disease through homosexual or extramarital sexual activity, drug use or blood transfusions, the most common recognized means of getting acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The statement said Crutchfield had ministered to AIDS patients, which some gay leaders had protested as misleading the public into believing AIDS can be contracted casually.

Hill said he had been an acquaintance of Crutchfield's since the late 1970s and had seen him at some Houston gay bars and gay festivals.

"We talked about some of his homosexual activities...He was active in the gay community as a gay person," Hill said. "I knew him in that context."

The unidentified minister told the Chronicle: "Bishop Crutchfield spent all of his life denying that he had same-sex sexual experiences to nearly everyone except his partners. He was sufficiently active that rumors of this contact followed him for much of his ministry. He and those close to him denied the rumors as motivated by persons who were out to get him.

"It is not surprising, therefore, that up to the end, he denied his same-sex experiences to his family and to his doctor."

The minister said Crutchfield feared he would be rejected by the church, which teaches that homosexual activity is not acceptable, according to the Bible. Moreover, the denomination's highest governing body, the General Conference, ruled in 1984 that "a self-avowed practicing homosexual shall not be ordained or appointed" as a minister.

Session ends with legislators not passing several bills

AP Laserphoto

Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis, right, and Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga, watch the final moments of the regular session of the 70th Texas Legislature Monday night in Austin.

By MICHAEL HOLMES

AUSTIN (AP) — When it ended, the 70th Legislature couldn't, wouldn't and didn't do quite a lot — including pass the one bill that must be enacted to keep government's doors open.

The budget issue dominated the session from its opening gavel on Jan. 13 until final adjournment Monday night.

But despite all the attention and hundreds of hours of work, the House, Senate and governor failed to agree on a 1988-89 spending blueprint.

So lawmakers will return to Austin for a special session on June 22 to try, try again to write a budget for the fiscal year beginning Sept. 1.

Gov. Bill Clements proposed spending a total of $36.9 billion, which would have required $2.9 billion in new taxes. After campaigning on a "no-new-taxes" theme, he agreed to the extra $2.9 billion, but not a penny more.

His threat to veto higher taxes helped stop the budget process in its tracks as the House and Senate approved bigger spending bills but not enough taxes to pay for them.

While tax-and-spend issues topped the Legislature's list of failures, several other big issues fell by the wayside as well. Among them:

Lottery

When the session convened, many lawmakers said the financial crunch meant Texas finally might join the more than two dozen states that run lottery games. Texas needed money, and opinion polls showed 70 percent of the public in favor.

A proposed constitutional amendment to create a lottery couldn't find a winning number in the House.

Appointed Judges

Chief Justice John L. Hill of the Texas Supreme Court came to lawmakers early in the session with a plan he said would improve the quality of justice. Hill urged passage of legislation to have state judges appointed to the bench rather than elected.

Lawmakers decided that idea was out of order, and the bill never got out of committee.

Texaco-Pennzoil

In a high-profile assault that saw dozens of lobbyists signing on with the two principals, a bill was introduced to help Texaco Inc. with its legal dilemma.

Under state law, Texaco was required to post an $11 billion bond to appeal the loss of its legal battle with Pennzoil. Texaco backed a bill that would have put a $1 billion lid on such bonds, but the bill ran out of gas. Instead, lawmakers passed a resolution to study the question.

Handguns

National Rifle Association members and others urged lawmakers to pass a law to enable Texans to be licensed to carry handguns. Lawmakers shot that plan down.

Budget Authority

The governor lost, too.

Clements had demanded "budget execution authority" — legislative talk for increased power for a governor to control state agency spending. He didn't get it but has the last laugh: He says he will place the item on the special session agenda.

No-Pass, No-Play

Coaches across Texas said more leniency was a good idea, and the Senate approved a bill that would allow the Texas Education Agency to experiment with an easier no-pass, no-play rule.

Under current law, students are barred from participating in extracurricular activities for six weeks if they fail any subject. The bill would have allowed a pilot program for a three-week suspension instead at some schools.

But the House Education Committee flunked the idea, and the Senate-passed bill never got that panel's approval.

Motorcycle Helmets

With nearly two dozen motorcycle riders looking on from the spectator gallery, House rules killed off a bill that would have required them to wear helmets when riding.

Lawmakers OK compromise AT&T bill

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House and Senate Monday approved a compromise bill that would deregulate certain services of AT&T Communications only after state regulators determine adequate competition exists in the long-distance industry.

One state senator hailed the bill as having undergone a "metamorphosis...from an ugly moth to a beautiful butterfly," and consumer advocates praised the numerous safeguards in the measure.

"What was once an assault on consumers of long-distance service in Texas is now a bill that actually provides stronger consumer protections than existing law," said Carol Barger, director of Consumers Union, in a letter to Sen. Hugh Parmer.

Parmer, D-Fort Worth, fought the original bill sought by AT&T, which would have allowed the long-distance giant to freely set its long-distance rates beginning in 1989.

But the compromise bill, worked out after days of negotiations, would require the Public Utility Commission to conduct a hearing before 1989 on the extent of competition in the telecommunications industry. The commission would then base the level of deregulation of individual AT&T services, such as business phones or WATS service, on the results of that study.

If the PUC determines that AT&T still dominates certain areas of the market, those services would remain regulated. AT&T is the only one of about 165 long-distance companies in Texas that is regulated.

"We are giving them the opportunity to prove in an evidentiary hearing at the PUC their contention that they will be deregulated in some service areas, but no deregulation occurs until after they have had that full hearing and the PUC has made the determination, based on the evidence, that they are not a monopoly in some areas of service," Parmer said.

AT&T, which has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on lobbying power, was forced into negotiations after Parmer and other senators threatened to filibuster any bill that would allow deregulation based on "political power or legislative fiat" instead of factual information. The compromise bill emerged from a House-Senate negotiations committee only hours before the end of the regular legislative session.

The bill contains a provision that calls for a cost study of the long-distance industry to prevent AT&T from charging customers of its monopoly services higher prices to subsidize its competitive services. Consumer groups, Parmer said, have been fighting for such a study since 1983.

The bill also requires re-regulation if monopoly pricing is discovered, and provides the PUC with specific criteria when investigating a utility's dominance.

AT&T spokesman Tom Jones said the compromise was a step in the right direction for the company.

"The bill has a lot more consumer kinds of protections arguably than from where we started from," Jones said. "But the biggest thing is that we are on track now and there is no question of what the Legislature intends and that is to move the long-distance business from a regulated utility kind of industry to a competitive industry."

The compromise contains a PUC-approved plan that gives AT&T some flexibility in setting its long-distance rates without approval from the state regulators. The two-year plan would allow AT&T to raise or lower its residential and commercial rates by a total of $32 million a year.

Education reforms largely unchanged

AUSTIN (AP) — The 1984 education reforms emereged from this year's Legislature largely unscathed, but questions still loom about education funding.

Opponents of the landmark reforms charged into the Capitol this year ready to soften the legislation. But with the exception of a bill that would repeal teacher subject matter testing, the package withstood the "fine tuning" attempts.

"Nobody could really agree on what fine tuning was. There seemed to be a disposition on the side of a lot of House members that (the reforms were) just beginning to work," said Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, chairman of the House Higher Education Committee.

Senators tried to ease the no pass, no play rule that suspends students from extra-curricular activities for six weeks if they fail any course. Their plan would have set up a pilot program to experiment with a three-week suspension period.

But the measure never received House consideration.

Another major fight was waged over financing both public schools and state colleges and universities.

To Ms. Delco, reluctance to make severe cuts meant lawmakers appreciated the importance of education.

"When it came right down to voting, the irreconcilable difference was that we could not say in all good conscience that we ought to take the amount out of education that it would take to balance the budget," Ms. Delco said.

"This is one session where we still are living under the cloud of the efforts to take money out. But we're also looking at the successes that have come out of both these houses and now are sitting on the governor's desk," she said.

Ms. Delco counted among the victories a bill that would abolish undergraduate education degrees for prospective teachers.

Sen. Carl Parker, who carried that teacher education bill in the Senate, said it was a "step forward in the quality we will see in people that are chosing teaching as a career."

If the bill gets the governor's OK, prospective teachers would have to possess a bachlor's degree in an academic subject major rather than education.

But Parker, D-Port Arthur, said legislators let teachers down when they failed to pass a bill to add more funding to the "career ladder" system the state uses to reward top teachers.

House rejects premarital AIDS testing plan

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Despite charges by Rep. Jim McWilliams that the House was worrying more about protecting AIDS victims than with protecting the public from the disease, the lawmakers Monday scrapped a plan mandating AIDS tests for marriage licenses.

After originally voting for AIDS tests for people wanting to get married and for in-coming Texas Department of Corrections inmates, the House went along with the Senate version that deleted the mandatory tests.

McWilliams, D-Hallsville, said Gov. Bill Clements will place the AIDS-testing issue on the agenda for the June 22 special session.

On Sunday, President Reagan called on states to institute premarital testing for AIDS.

To further confuse matters, the House's electronic voting board froze up late Monday, forcing tedious roll-calls of the 150 representatives.

In other last-day-of-the-session action:

— The House agreed to Senate changes and sent to the voters a $500 million bond package to finance construction of new prisons, mental hospitals and youth detention centers.

Neither the House nor Senate budget contained money for new prisons. The bond package would allow the Texas Department of Corrections to build new units to keep up with the growing inmate population.

— The House went along with Senate changes in a major part of Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's "Build Texas" bond program. The proposed constitutional amendment would issue $400 million in bonds to local governments for public works projects such as jails and sewer systems.

The bonds, which require voter approval in November, are designed to provide local governments with needed projects while creating thousands of construction jobs.

— The Senate and House agreed to the so-called dram shop law that could make bar owners partially liable for the damages their drunken patrons cause. A compromise between the two chambers deleted a provision that would have placed similar liabilities on private party-givers.

The last bartender to serve a patron who subsequently caused damage because of his or her drunkeness would be partially liable if plaintiffs can prove that it was "clearly apparent" that the patron was "obviously intoxicated to the extent that he poses a clear danger to the public and himself."

— The Senate approved a compromise bill that would require school districts to provide seat belts in all school buses purchased after Jan. 1, 1988, but the proposal died in the House late Monday.

— A compromise measure that would prohibit students from smoking in public schools gained approval in both chambers.

'Baby chase' likely to end in Texas

Lone Star state leads in number babies up for adoption

FORT WORTH (AP) — The demand for adoptive children has led to what one expert calls "a real baby chase," and for many anxious couples that chase ends in Texas.

The third most populous state leads the nation in the number of children put up for adoption, according to the National Committee for Adoption.

Texas had 12,176 adoptions, or 8.5 percent out of the U.S. total of 141,861 in 1982, the latest year figures were available.

"It's a real baby chase out there," said Jeff Rosenberg, public policy director with the Washington-based panel, which works to simplify the adoption process.

Texas holds the No. 1 position mainly because the state has an abundance of adoption agencies and imposes little regulation on private adoptions, said Susan Klickman, adoption program specialist with the Texas Department of Human Services in Austin.

Of an estimated 2,500 public and private adoption agencies nationwide, Texas has 113 licensed agencies. The lax regulation makes possible a "gray market" in which violations occur but cannot be proved, she said.

For example, biological mothers may place their babies directly with new parents with minimal regulation, Ms. Klickman said.

"We know that women get cars to give up their babies, or shopping sprees or college scholarships," Rosenberg said. "There are a lot of lawyers out there doing private adoptions. Some of them make a very good living."

Attorneys in Texas are allowed to handle legal paperwork, but cannot arrange adoptions by putting mothers and adoptive parents together. State law also allows only licensed adoption agencies to arrange adoptions.

Last year, a Dallas lawyer was convicted of buying a child in a private adoption case. The mother testified that the lawyer paid her more than $2,000 for rent, groceries, maternity clothes and taxi fares during her pregnancy in 1984. State law restricts payments to mothers in adoption cases to necessary medical or legal expenses.

Bill and Joyce Smith and their 3-year-old son Matthew look over the newest addition of the family, who was adopted from the Edna Gladney Center in Fort Worth. The center is the nation's largest private maternity home and adoption agency.

A New York woman testified that she and her husband paid Robert I. Kingsley $14,000 for adopting the child, in a proceeding they originally believed to be legal.

Kingsley, 61, was sentenced to seven years in prison and fined $5,000, but remains free while the case is appealed.

In separate cases, Kingsley later pleaded guilty to two additional counts of the third-degree felony of purchasing a child, was placed on 10 years' probation, fined $1,000 and ordered to pay one couple $37,500 in restitution.

Like many adoption professionals, Bob Barker, director of Houston's DePelchin Children's Center, said Texas laws need to be tightened.

"It's fairly easy for someone to act as a go-between," said Barker, whose agency places about 125 children annually. "It's a misdemeanor to act as a go-between, but it's a crime that is seldom reported."

According to the Committee for Adoption, 2 million American couples are seeking children to adopt at any given time, while only 250,000 babies are born out of wedlock annually.

The decreasing social stigma for unmarried women to keep their babies and easy access to abortion contribute to the baby shortage, Ms. Klickman said.

Because of the many couples seeking children, single people almost never make it onto waiting lists, she said.

After a placement, the parents must care for a child six months before the adoption may be finalized. Total costs for adoptive parents average $10,000 to $11,000, according to the committee.

"One of the problems in other states is that services are not readily available," Rosenberg said. Women are much more likely to consider placing babies for adoption when places exist that offer prenatal residential care, Rosenberg said.

At the Edna Gladney Center in Fort Worth, the largest private maternity home and adoption agency in the United States, 4,000 or more couples inquire about adoptions each year, said Eleanor Tuck, the executive director. The center, featuring a school and on-campus hospital, takes in about 300 unwed, pregnant women per year, most of them teen-agers. About 80 percent of the mothers give up their children for adoption, Mrs. Tuck said.

"Parents often have to wait two or three years to be studied, then a year or two more for a placement," she said.

People hoping to adopt are considered for factors including marital stability, financial health, maturity, expectations of child rearing and experience with children.

The federal government only recently renewed its interest in adoption. The adoption committee's ability to compile information was hampered by the fact that the federal government in 1975 ceased collecting information on adoptions, Rosenberg said.

Late in 1986, the government funded the National Adoption Information Clearinghouse, to be part of the Department of Health and Human Services. The legislation calls for the establishment of a national foster care and adoption data reporting system by October 1991.

Jury selection begins in trial of officer accused of killing fellow patrolman

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Attorneys have begun the tedious task of questioning potential jurors in the high-profile murder trial of a policeman accused of killing a fellow officer suspected of vigilante activities.

Sixty people were summoned for jury duty on Monday and almost all said they had heard about patrolman Farrell Tucker killing fellow officer Stephen R. Smith last Aug. 18.

Smith, 31, was suspected of vigilante activities and allegedly planned to kill three top law enforcement officials he blamed for ruining his career.

Tucker, 36, maintains he shot Smith in self-defense.

Defense attorneys and prosecutors will interview the potential jurors individually and hope to assemble a 12-member panel to begin hearing the case Thursday.

Although the case has generated local and national publicity, Tucker is confident he can receive a fair trial in San Antonio, said his attorney, Terry McDonald.

"This particular case is not complicated. This case does not involve mercy killing. This case does not involve insanity," McDonald told the prospective jurors.

"This case has been very simple. Did Farrell Tucker set out on Aug. 18, 1986, to take the life of Stephen Smith or did he...act in self-defense?" McDonald said.

McDonald and Sid Harle, the state's special prosecutor, are hoping to finish individual interviews and to select 12 jurors by Wednesday.

"I'm ready to get this over with," Harle said before the start of jury selection.

McDonald said Tucker will have final say on jury selection.

"He's the one on trial. When I try a case I give my client my opinion as to the jurors I think that we should select," McDonald said. "But the bottom line is that he's going to take the pen and draw a line through the names of the people he doesn't want on the jury," McDonald said.

McDonald declined to say whether Tucker would testify.

The jurors spent most of Monday morning answering in writing questions about their knowledge and opinions on the case.

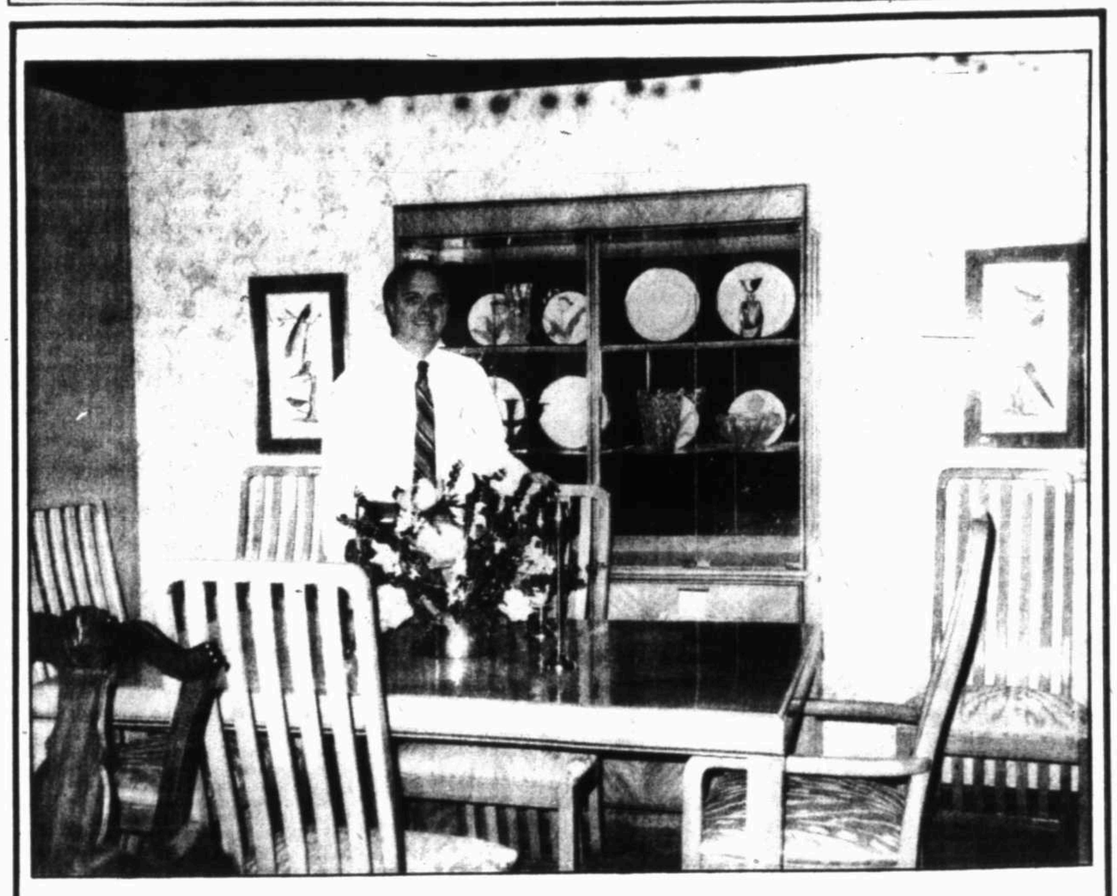

"I think we'll get more candid responses having them write it, rather than having them stand up in front of a judge and make a statement," McDonald said.

Tucker has been on suspension since his indictment last October.

The shooting incident led to the dismissal of two police chiefs and sparked a federal investigation and an $8 million lawsuit by 11 families who claimed they were victims of Smith's vigilante activities.

Keith Burt, Dimension Cable marketing manager, invites you to tune into Dimension Cable's premium channels for exciting June programming.

June is very special at Dimension Cable

It's June, and Dimension Cable is gearing up for a hot, exciting summer starting with exclusive movie premieres, live sporting events and special Disney Channel weekend family entertainment.

Keith Burt, marketing manager, explained about the advantages of subscribing to Dimension Cable's premium channel services.

"June promises to be a very exciting programming month at Dimension Cable," he said. We have many exclusive, first run movies, classic movies and specials, and our viewers do not have to suffer through commercials."

Some of the premiere films scheduled for June on HBO, Showtime, Cinemax and The Movie Channel include action movies, such as "Raw Deal" and "The Manhattan Project."

"Raw Deal" stars Arnold Schwarzenegger as a former FBI agent persuaded by an old bureau friend to take on a special, unofficial assignment. The task is to infiltrate and destroy a Chicago crime syndicate and to identify its government informant. "It's typical, gripping action from Arnold Schwarzenegger, along the lines of "The Terminator," Burt said.

The big title for the month, Burt said, is the premiere of Rodney Dangerfield's "Back To School," scheduled for most of the premium channels. The Oscar-winning performance of William Hurt can be enjoyed this month also, as "Kiss of the Spider Woman" premieres. An interesting plot involving a high school science student on the run from the FBI is the focus of "The Manhattan Project," starring John Lithgow.

An exclusive Showtime feature in June will be "Invaders from Mars." This stunning film centers around a young boy who becomes the sole witness to a Martian invasion of his small town. "Space Camp," on HBO and Cinemax, is "out of this world" action and thrilling special effects about a space adventure which turns into disaster.

In addition to special movie presentations in June, family entertainment takes on a new dimension with exclusive Family Nights on the Disney Channel. Each Friday in June beginning at 5 p.m., The Disney Channel will broadcast family favorites, such as "Mousterpiece Theater," "Zorro," and "Disney Channel Discovery." Scheduled Friday night family movies include the Disney Channel premiere film, "Not Quite Human," "Sixteen Days of Glory Part Two," and "Johnny Tremain," a movie about the early days of the American Revolution.

Movies to be shown throughout the month on the Disney Channel include "The Love Bug," "Oklahoma!" "Jack and the Beanstalk," and the continuing original miniseries "Anne of Avonlea."

Music lovers will be treated to great entertainment in June. HBO will air the "Cyndi Lauper in Paris," special, while "Paul Simon's Graceland: The African Concert," is scheduled for Showtime. Documentary lovers will enjoy "Women In Rock," Showtime's musical look at the work of such artists as Tina Turner, Grace Slick, Aretha Franklin, Janis Joplin and Bette Midler.

Other scheduled documentaries for June include the continuing HBO series, "America Undercover." Some episodes of interest this month are "Nightmare of Cocaine," and "Down and Out in America."

Comedy enthusiasts will surely enjoy the humor of Alan King and Jonathan Winters, on HBO and Showtime, respectively. Every Friday night on Showtime is "Comedy Night," starting off with "Brothers," and "Hard Knocks." Coming later this year, Burt said, is "The All New Adventures of Garry Shandling."

Some great original programming scheduled for June on Dimension Cable's premium channels include "Uncle Tom's Cabin," exclusively on Showtime, starring Edward Woodward, of "The Equalizer," and Phylicia Rashad, of "The Cosby Show." Also, HBO will present "The Glory Years," a five part comedy adventure about a 20 year high school reunion. Premium channel subscribers will also enjoy classic movies in June, including "Cat Ballou" and all-time favorites like "Stripes," starring Bill Murray.

Sports fans will enjoy the HBO exclusive coverage of "Wimbeldon '87," nine days of the world's greatest tennis. Another Dimension Cable premium channel, Home Sports Entertainment, presents live coverage of the Houston Astros and the Texas Rangers baseball games. In addition to live coverage, games are replayed at 10:30 that same evening. Expect to see such exciting matchups as the Astros vs. the Padres, Dodgers and the Giants, and the Rangers vs. the California Angels, Oakland and Seattle. Burt suggested that subscribers watch their statements for more great information about the HSE network.

All in all, its shaping up to be quite a summer for Dimension Cable premium channel viewers. Dimension Cable offers great entertainment value, so call 694-7721 and make an appointment to expand your cable universe!

All Seasons Chimney Service cleans up

All Seasons Chimney Service provides dust-free chimney cleaning along with chimney cap installation. For appointments or free estimates, call 697-7585.

SOOT! If you burned a cord of wood or more this past season, creosote (soot), is lining your fireplace. Creosote accumulation is the major concern for having your fireplace cleaned. Creosote is the by-product form the un-burned gases in wood smoke. Left unattended, it will not only become a fire hazard this fall, but will create foul odors along with mildew this summer.

All Seasons Chimney Service commented on what homeowners do this time of year to their fireplaces. "They usually do nothing," explained Ernest Meyer, owner. "Many have used their fireplaces for the last time and are not concerned with maintaining it until this fall. Preventive care should occur during all seasons and not just in the fall or early winter."

Meyer explained further why chimney care should occur now. "After a winter of heavy use, creosote has formed on the lining of your flue, left unattended this spring and summer. It creates a bad odor. That musty odor is compounded due to many fireplaces not having chimney caps. An open chimney allows rain on the smoke shelf, and when mixed with creosote, creates a strong, unpleasant odor."

"We have a very effective deodorizer which is designed especially for fireplaces. The deodorant neutralizes the acid smell, and not just covers it."

Meyer continued, "That mixture of creosote and ash along with water forms a very corrosive acid base that will rust out the damper, form cracks in your firebrick, and permanently damage your flue. Seldom have we seen an uncapped chimney for more than five years that hasn't suffered some sort of water damage."

All Seasons Chimney Service has several types of caps to choose from. Their flue caps fit standard masonry fireplaces, providing a heavy duty spark arrestor and rain deterrent. "Many homes in Midland have wood shingles, making them a fire hazard to roof fires," Meyer said. "These caps will keep birds from building nests in your fireplace this spring and summer. Nests left in your fireplace become a potential fire hazard this fall."

Their custom caps (see photo), cover the entire chimney top, protecting the top layer of mortar of your chimney from cracking, while providing an attractive piece of fireplace hardware."

The experts at All Season Chimney Service use the "August West Soot Sweeper", a completely portable, large capacity, vacuum machine designed specifically for chimney cleaning. The "Soot Sweeper" controls the soot and dust from entering your home while brushing is occurring.

All Seasons Chimney Service is offering the following services:

- CHIMNEY CLEANING - -Includes chimney cleaning, ash removal, deodorizing and a 20 step structural and safety inspection
- CHIMNEY CAPS - - Free estimates available at the homeowner's request
- REPAIRS - - Free estimates on fireplace repairs.

In addition to these services, All Seasons Chimney Service offers brick and masonry work, damper installations and adjustments, flue extensions and a variety of fireplace accessories.

Midland Angel infielder Rick Adams (10) leaps over San Antonio base runner Homar Rojas to complete a double play and get an unexpected ride during Texas League action at Angels Stadium Monday night. The Angels ran their winning streak to five.

Midland pitching staff on target

Angels own longest winning streak of season

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

A little confidence can go a long way, and right now, the Midland Angels pitching staff is brimming with confidence.

The swaggering Angels' staff coaxed another win, 6-2, over San Antonio Monday night at Angel Stadium, posting their fifth win in a row, the longest winning streak of the season. And it's all a result of confidence in the pitching staff.

Manager Max Oliveras and pitching coach Chuck Hernandez are hoping that confidence carries Midland right into the thick of the Texas League's Western Division first half pennant chase. Midland pulled within 2½ games of league-leading Wichita with the win.

Barry Dacus, making just his second start of the season, went six innings and scattered nine hits in allowing the anemic hitting Dodgers one run to even his record at 3-3. Vance Lovelace continued his bullpen turnaround with three solid innings for his second save.

And unlike the first five weeks of the season, this latest surge is a direct result of the pitching staff and its new found ability to pitch in cozy Angel Stadium. Since returning home Saturday, the Angels have allowed just five earned runs in sweeping the first three games of a six-game set with the Dodgers.

"It all started when we pitched five strong games versus Arkansas before the road trip," Hernandez said. "We began to find out that it was possible to pitch in this park and win."

SINCE THE Travelers came to town in mid-May, Midland has posted a 2.93 ERA but just a 10-8 record. The Angels formerly robust hitting stats have dipped recently, but a pair of homers Monday provided all the offense they would need against the slumping Dodgers, who have now lost seven in a row.

Brian Brady's three-run blast keyed a four-run first inning. Ty Van Burkleo added a solo shot in the third for a 5-0 lead and made life easier for Dacus. Dacus, 3-3, made the start to rest David Martinez' sore shoulder and gave Oliveras just what he asked for.

"I'm probably the only one in the bullpen who has gone five innings at a stretch, so I was the logical choice to start," Dacus said. "I've now done it all in pro ball — short relief, long relief and start. The more versatile you are, the better chance you have of helping a club."

Dacus has shown that versatility, fulfilling all three roles so far in Midland. Dacus was a starter at Cal-Santa Barbara where he attended college, but always seemed to come up with one bad inning an outing.

He almost fell victim to that syndrome against the Dodgers in the fourth when he allowed three straight hits.

"You have to kick yourself in the behind to straighten yourself out when those innings get started," Dacus said.

Whatever he did, worked as a pair of fielder's choices and a lineout ended threat.

DACUS LOWERED his ERA to 3.23, third best on the team to Lovelace's 3.16 and Vinicio Cedeno's 2.83. Lovelace and Cedeno were two of just four pitchers on the staff that had any Texas League experience, and neither was successful last season, combining for a 3-8 record and 8.26 ERA.

After a rocky start this year, each has become a reliable weapon out of the bullpen, combining for 11 saves and a 2.98 ERA.

"It's so good to see guys like those two have success at this level after struggling so bad last year," Oliveras said. "Chuck has got to get a lot of credit for helping them, but they've worked at making themselves better."

"You have to remember that this is a staff that didn't have much AA experience. And even the four that did, had no success. So in their mind, they weren't sure if they could pitch here," Hernandez said. "But now everybody is starting to get their confidence and they're finding out they can pitch here."

As long as that confidence keeps flowing, the Angels will make a run at their first half-season title since coming to Midland in 1985.

ANGEL NOTES: Former Angels pitching prospect D.W. Smith has worked out for the team the past couple days and is on the verge of being resigned and sent to Midland. The addition of Smith would bring Midland back to 10 pitchers... It is rumored that Ty Van Burkleo could be heading for Japan. Van Burkleo is hitting .328 with 12 homers and 33 RBI...

Phil Venturino, 5-2, 7.31, will take the hill for Midland tonight against Bob Hamilton, 4-4, 5.27, of San Antonio...

Niekros finally best brother act

CLEVELAND (AP) — Phil Niekro was representing the Cleveland Indians and, more importantly, the Niekro family when he took the mound against the Detroit Tigers.

"Joe and I have been getting guidance from our family all along the way. They had a lot to do with kicking us in the tail when we were down," Niekro said after he beat the Tigers 9-6 Monday night, giving him and brother Joe a major-league record with a combined 530 victories.

They had shared the mark at 529 with Gaylord and Jim Perry since May 23, when Joe pitched the New York Yankees to a 3-0 victory over California. Phil and Joe each failed in their first attempt to break the tie.

BUT THE Indians, behind homers from Tony Bernazard and Brook Jacoby, posted Phil to a 7-1 lead Monday, and the Cleveland bullpen made it stand up after Niekro let the Tigers back within a run at 7-6 in the sixth inning.

"I just got off the phone with him," Joe said in New York after the Yankees lost to California. "He said it wasn't pretty, but he'll take it. He said we did it together, and I said, 'You're right.'"

Phil Niekro, 3-5, set the record despite allowing six runs, five of them earned, on nine hits in 5⅔ innings. He had lost 1-0 to Boston's Roger Clemens on Wednesday in his first shot at the record.

"They even out," the 48-year-old Niekro said. "I'm just happy to win it. The bullpen came through for me. I'll take a 1-0 win or a 9-6 win."

The victory was his 314th, tying him with Gaylord Perry for 11th place on the career list. Joe Niekro, 42, has won 216, one more than Jim Perry.

Phil and Joe each made curtain calls. Joe acknowledged the crowd's cheers in New York when Phil's victory was posted on the scoreboard there, and Phil hugged his mother on the field to a standing ovation from the 6,509 fans in Cleveland.

Indians' Phil Niekro
...winning for brother Joe

"If I keep winning and Joe keeps winning, we'll tack a lot of numbers on and it'll be hard for any two brothers to come along and win more than that," Niekro said.

Niekro's father was unable to make the three-hour trip from Lansing, Ohio, where the Niekros grew up, because of poor health.

Phil and Joe had attended the other's first attempt at breaking the record, but Joe had to work out in New York on Monday and could not make it to Cleveland.

"Joe was pitching with me and my father was out there pitching with me, and I know my mother was thinking of all the times Joe and I were out in the backyard playing catch with our dad, learning the knuckleball," Niekro said.

Lakers favored as NBA championship arrives

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, who have breezed through 11 victories in 12 playoff games, are the clear favorites in tonight's opener of the NBA championship series against the struggling Boston Celtics.

The Lakers, however, say they are not about to forget that the Celtics are the team that is trying to become the first NBA team since 1969 to successfully defend the title.

"The people who are giving Boston no chance are crazy," NBA Most Valuable Player Magic Johnson said Monday. "It doesn't make sense to write them off when they're trying to repeat."

While the Lakers rolled to postseason series victories over Denver, Golden State and Seattle, the Celtics needed seven games to eliminate both Milwaukee and Detroit in the Eastern Conference playoffs.

With starters Robert Parish, Danny Ainge and Kevin McHale hobbled by injuries and backup center Bill Walton hardly playing at all, the oddsmakers believe the Lakers could literally run away with the championship series.

"From what I read, the Celtics don't have a chance to win," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "If we make the assumption that they are too tired and injured, we're going to get kicked."

Riley said he became convinced the Celtics are not an exhausted team when they got five consecutive offensive rebounds on one possesion late in Game 7 against Detroit Saturday.

"Which was the freshest team when it came time to get those offensive rebounds?" Riley asked rhetorically.

Los Angeles hasn't played since completing a four-game sweep of the SuperSonics on May 25 in the Western Conference finals.

Riley said that only tonight's game will tell if the layoff was beneficial or harmful.

The Celtics arrived in Los Angeles Monday and had a late afternoon workout.

Mets may ask Tom Seaver back

NEW YORK (AP) — Neither side would come out and say it, but the New York Mets are talking to Tom Seaver.

"Obviously ... there's some substance to it. But we have no comment," Seaver's agent Matt Merola said.

Seaver hasn't pitched since last August.

Scharbauer family eyes Belmont

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Dorothy and Clarence Scharbauer Jr., and daughter Pamela are as ready as they're going to be for what could be the biggest week of their lives.

Midland's first family of horse racing is on the threshold of accomplishing what no one in the sport of kings has for almost 10 years — the winning of the Triple Crown.

The three-year-old colt Alysheba has already tucked away the first two jewels of the coveted Triple Crown for co-owners Dorothy and Pam by winning the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness Stakes. The third is within reach Saturday with the running of the Belmont Stakes in New York.

"It's unlike anything we've ever been through," Scharbauer said in a recent interview. "All I can say, is it's like on TV when they say if you don't have an oil well get one. If you haven't won the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness, win the Kentucky Derby and Preakness. It's been just a tremendous experience."

BUT DESPITE the innumerable requests for time from press, friends and acquaintances from all over the country, it is nothing like what the Scharbauers can expect should Alysheba claim the Triple Crown. Affirmed was the last Triple Crown winner in 1978.

Scharbauer, who made good use of the line, "I'm just the chore boy around here," on ABC-TV after winning the Derby, is actually responsible for much more. Though both Clarence Jr. and Dorothy have been horse people their whole lives, it's Clarence's input that Dorothy and Pam trust when Alysheba's future is at stake.

And, it is Clarence who is in contact with trainer Jack Van Berg and jockey Chris McCarron on a daily basis in New York, where Alysheba is in training for Saturday's run.

But it was Dorothy and Pam's money that paid the $500,000 for the yearling at Keeneland's summer sale in 1985 in hopes of fulfilling a lifelong dream.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Dorothy and Clarence Scharbauer Jr.
...shooting for racing history

That dream came true on May 2, when Alysheba stormed from the pack and avoided a near-tragic fall to edge Bet Twice in the Kentucky Derby. Just as the dream came true for her father, the late Fred Turner, and Tomy Lee in 1959.

"It was a different kind of thrill watching Alysheba win the Derby," Mrs. Scharbauer said. "I guess they're about the same, but I still can't believe that we won it this year."

Pam, 30, no longer lives in Midland, and keeps an eye on her interest in Alysheba from Missoula, Mont., where she is building a sports medicine and health fitness facility.

Despite breath-taking wins in both Triple Crown races in May and being favored to win the Belmont, Alysheba has his detractors.

Indeed, there are a mountain of obstacles that stand in the way of Alysheba's quest for history's 12th Triple Crown.

- The colt, as the rest of the field, is untested in the 1½ mile distance.
- Alysheba will not run on Lasix, a medication to treat internal bleeding in horses.
- 23 times a horse has won the first two legs of the Triple Crown and 12 times that horse has failed to win the Belmont, including Spectacular Bid in 1979 and Pleasant Colony in 1981.
- And, the aura of trainer Woody Stephens who has won the last five Belmont Stakes and will enter Gone West, a horse that has run neither the Derby or Preakness.

BUT THE Scharbauers have a history of making mole hills out of such mountains, and Alysheba has already proven he has inherited those bloodlines. And Clarence Jr., the unofficial spokesman of the Scharbauer clan, brushes away almost every obstacle.

"None of these colts have run that distance, but as the trainer Jack Van Berg said, 'He'll run from here to California.' He's bred to run the distance.

"Lasix was just a precautionary measure given after he had throat surgery in March. Jack doesn't think that will be any factor at all.

"This horse is a true champion. Jack is as confident before this race as he was before the Kentucky Derby."

As for Stephens, Scharbauer can only shake his head and praise, "Mr. Stephens always fields some fine horses."

Confident but not cocky, the Scharbauers and Alysheba march toward the Belmont, and history.

Youngsters climb in French Open

PARIS (AP) — Steffi Graf and Gabriela Sabatini, semifinal opponents in the French Open, talk of the value of experience.

Neither has yet celebrated her 18th birthday.

Graf and Sabatini, combined age 34, both won quarterfinals in straight sets Monday as the Grand Slam tournament entered its second week.

Graf, the second seed from West Germany, beat sixth-seeded Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria, 6-4, 6-1.

Sabatini, the seventh seed from Argentina, overcame a shaky start to defeat 15-year-old Aranxa Sanchez of Spain, 6-4, 6-0.

In the "senior division" of the women's draw, defending champion Chris Evert used hard groundstrokes and Raffaella Reggi's errors to beat the Italian 6-2, 6-2 today to advance to the women's semifinals for the ninth year in a row.

In the next round Evert, seeking the tournament title for the eighth time, will meet the winner of today's match between top-seeded American Martina Navratilova and Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany.

In the men' draw, the quarterfinal matchups were completed.

Top-seeded Ivan Lendl was overwhelming as he beat Joakim Nystrom of Sweden, 2-6, 6-1, 7-5, 6-0, 6-2 in the completion of a match suspended in the fourth set Sunday because of darkness.

In the men's quarterfinals scheduled for today, Lendl was to face Andres Gomez of Ecuador, who won in five sets on Sunday, and two Czechoslovaks, No. 5 Miloslav Mecir was to meet unseeded Karel Novacek.

Second-seeded Boris Becker of West Germany, seeking his first title on clay, rallied to defeat American Jimmy Arias 5-7, 6-3, 6-2, 6-0 on Monday.

Next, Becker plays eighth-seeded Jimmy Connors, the oldest survivor at 34 and the lone American man left from the 29 who started the tournament a week ago.

Connors reached his seventh French Open quarterfinal with a 4-6, 7-5, 6-0, 6-3 victory over West Germany's unseeded Ricki Osterthun on Monday.

Fourth-seeded Mats Wilander of Sweden, bidding for his third French Open crown, beat Tarik Benhabiles of France, 5-7, 6-1, 6-3, 6-3.

In the quarterfinals, Wilander meets another French player — perhaps the French player — on Center Court.

Yannick Noah, the sixth seed, held off two set points in the fourth set to beat Sweden's 11th-seeded Kent Carlsson 7-6, 6-3, 6-7, 7-5.

Graf's victory was her 37th in a row and her string of six tournament championships coming into Paris has made her a favorite to dethrone Evert.

Graf came here last spring with a 23-match winning streak and was beaten in the quarterfinals by Hana Mandlikova.

That was last year, Graf said. This year, she has age on her side.

"I was very young last year, only 16," she said. "I am still young now. I didn't have enough experience last year.

"I am playing better now. My serve and backhand has improved."

Graf showed an uncharacteristic temper in arguing a couple of line calls in her victory over Maleeva.

"That ball was so far out!" she screamed on one point at the baseline.

When the same line judge was very slow with an "out" signal on another long shot by Maleeva that gave Graf a break for 2-1 in the second set, the West German passed the umpire's chair on the changeover and implored: "Please change her. Please!"

But Graf was very true to form in her play. She never trailed, breaking Maleeva for a 5-4 edge in the first set and dominating the second after the Bulgarian held the first game at love.

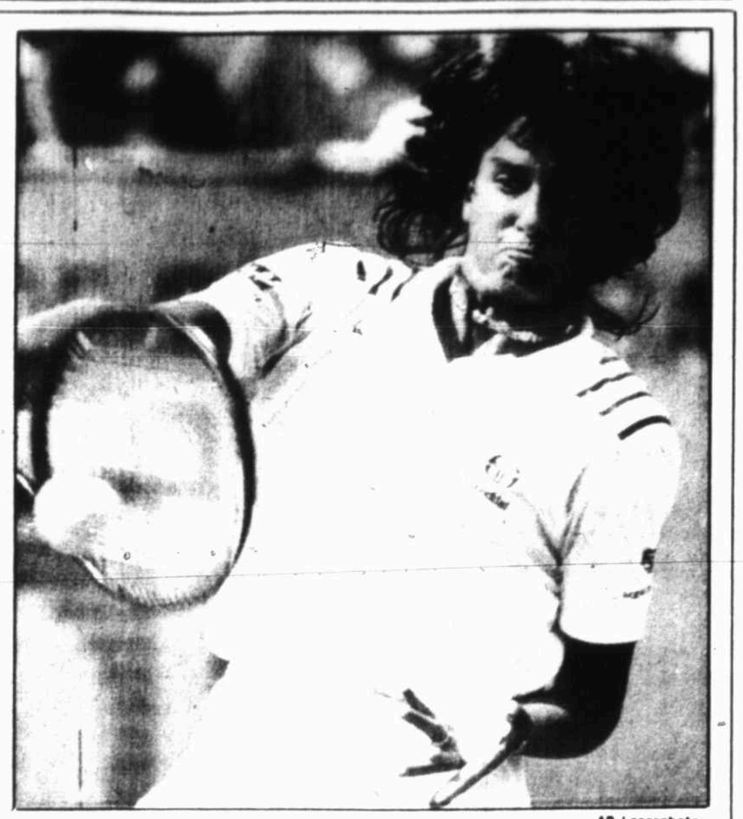

Sabatini dropped the first three games to Sanchez, then steadied to lose just one game the rest of the way.

"I was a little nervous at the beginning," Sabatini said. "I didn't concentrate enough. I didn't move very well. ... I knew I was going to win. I tried to fight in the first set. In the second set I played much better."

Sabatini, like Graf, is looking for her first Grand Slam title. Like Graf, she has played very well recently, bating Navratilova in the semifinals of the Italian Open last month.

And unlike Graf, she has been to the semifinals at Roland Garros before.

Two years ago, she became the youngest French Open semifinalist, losing to Evert.

McDowell's slam defeats Chisox in 12

Associated Press

The harder the Chicago White Sox try to protect a lead, the faster they seem to lose.

Oddibe McDowell's grand slam in the bottom of the 12th inning Monday night rallied the Texas Rangers over the White Sox 11-9, marking the second straight game Chicago's bullpen had blown a big lead.

On Sunday, the White Sox led Boston 9-1 in the second inning before the Red Sox struck for a 10-9 victory. Against Texas, the White Sox took a 7-2 margin into the ninth before the Rangers came back against starter Richard Dotson and four relievers to tie the game.

Even after Ivan Calderon hit a two-run homer in the top of the 12th, Chicago's fifth home run of the night, the White Sox collapsed.

"I gave every one of our relievers a chance to save the game," Chicago Manager Jim Fregosi said. "But they couldn't get it done."

McDowell hit his first career slam after the Rangers loaded the bases with one out against Joel Davis, 1-5. Ruben Sierra led off with a double and Pete O'Brien and Larry Parrish drew one-out walks.

"Davis was struggling with his control," McDowell said. "He had already walked two guys and threw two bad pitches to me. I figured he'd come in with something I could hit."

The Rangers rallied in the ninth when doubles by Sierra and O'Brien and a two-run homer by Parrish made it 7-5 with one out to knock out Dotson. Relievers Ray Searage and Neil Allen each walked the only batters they faced before Joel McKeon got the second out.

But Jerry Browne hit an RBI single against McKeon and reliever Jim Winn yielded a game-tying single to Scott Fletcher.

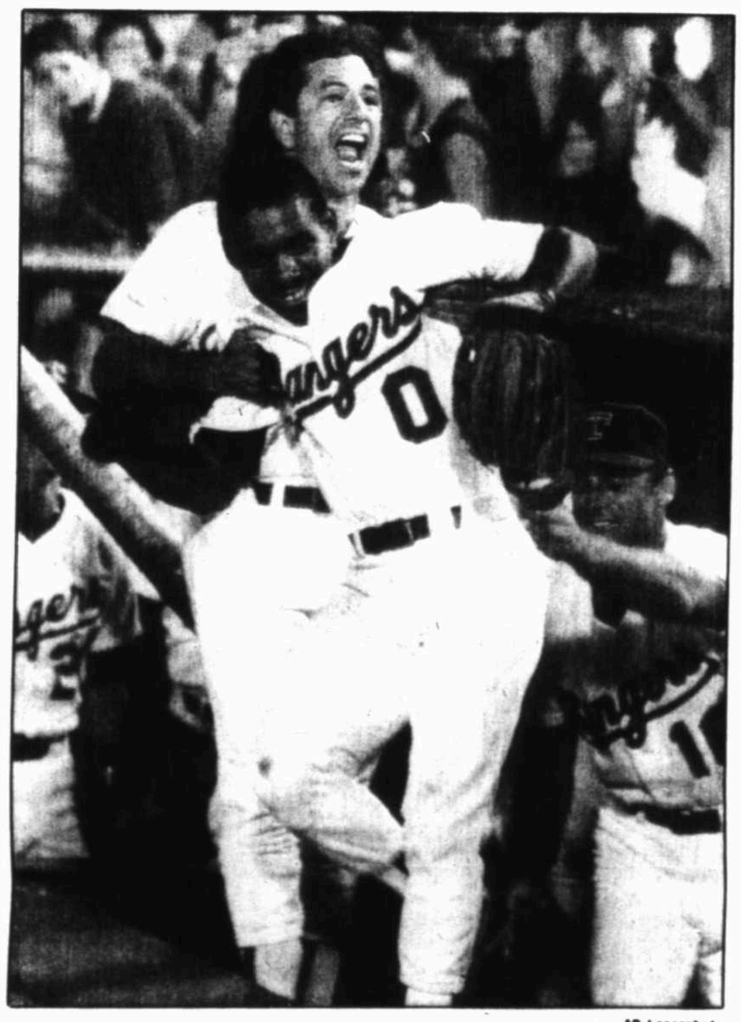

Calderon, who hit a pair of three-run homers Sunday in the loss to Boston, put Chicago ahead again in the 12th against Dale Mohorcic, 5-2.

Greg Walker hit two solo homers and Harold Baines and Jerry Royster also connected for the White Sox.

Angels 9, Yankees 2

Doug DeCinces homered for the third straight game and Mike Witt pitched a five-hitter and struck out 11 as California ended its nine-game losing streak by beating New York.

DeCinces, batting just .169 in his past 22 games, broke a 1-1 tie in the fifth inning at Yankee Stadium with his sixth home run. Devon White hit a sacrifice fly later in the inning against Charles Hudson, 6-2.

AL Roundup

Twins 9, Red Sox 5

Tom Brunansky hit two home runs and Dan Gladden and Gary Gaetti also homered as Minnesota beat Boston's Roger Clemens for the first time in nine career decisions.

Gladden's solo homer snapped a 3-3 tie in the seventh and sparked a six-run outburst. Gaetti's two-run homer knocked out Clemens, 4-5, and Brunansky capped the uprising with a two-run homer off Wes Gardner. Brunansky hit a solo home run in the fourth.

Athletics 9, Orioles 6

Mike Davis and Tony Phillips drove in three runs each as Oakland rapped 18 hits and withstood Baltimore's continuing home run binge.

Phillips' RBI grounder broke a 6-6 tie in the eighth against Ken Dixon, 3-4. Luis Polonia, who extended his hitting streak to 17 games, along with Phillips, Davis and Carney Lansford had three hits apiece.

The host Orioles, who set a major-league record with 58 home runs in May, started June with three more. Terry Kennedy hit a three-run shot and Mike Young and Larry Sheets also homered.

Mariners 2, Blue Jays 0

Scott Bankhead and Bill Wilkinson teamed on a four-hitter that led Seattle over Toronto.

The visiting Mariners won their fourth straight game and ended the Blue Jays' three-game winning streak.

Bankhead, 6-3, gave up four hits in seven innings. Wilkinson finished with hitless relief for his second save.

Brewers 3, Royals 2

Bill Wegman pitched 7⅓ strong innings and Dale Sveum hit a solo home run as Milwaukee beat visiting Kansas City.

Wegman, 4-5, gave up seven hits before Dan Plesac relieved for his 12th save. The victory was the third straight for the host Brewers.

Dodgers bitten by Leach

Associated Press

Terry Leach has a habit of giving the New York Mets great relief when he starts.

Leach had appeared in 18 games as a reliever this season, pitching a total of 30⅓ innings. Before Monday night, he had made six starts and relieved 82 times as a major leaguer.

On Monday night, he limited Los Angeles to four hits and one unearned run in six innings as the Mets defeated the Dodgers 5-2 for their sixth victory in seven games on the West Coast.

Since 1981, Leach has had five stints with the Mets in between trips to the minor leagues. He made his first start for the Mets in 1982 and pitched a one-hitter in beating Philadelphia 1-0 in 10 innings. He is the only Met ever to pitch an extra-inning one-hit game.

Following his victory over the Dodgers, Leach has a record of 5-1 and one no-decision as a starting pitcher.

"It was a gutty performance by Leach," New York Manager Davey Johnson said. "If we can get a couple more well-pitched games, we'll be in business."

Starting pitchers Bob Ojeda and Rick Aguilera are on the disabled list for the Mets and New York ace Dwight Gooden spent the first two months of the season in drug rehabilatation and training in the minor leagues.

Gooden's scheduled return Friday against Pittsburgh, means Leach, 4-0, will probably go back to the bullpen.

"He's really more useful coming out of the bullpen because I can use him time and time again," Johnson said. "I'm not saying it's cut in stone. It depends what happens."

But for one night, Leach looked like an All-Star in the eyes of Dodgers Manager Tommy Lasorda.

"He looked like Walter Johnson for six innings," Lasorda said of Leach, who was dressed and gone from the Mets' dressing room by the time the game ended.

Astros 6, Cubs 5 (10)

Jose Cruz homered with one out in the top of the 10th inning to lift the Astros over the Cubs at Wrigley Field.

National League

"I never thought it would be out of here, I don't know how that ball got out," Cruz said. "The wind just took it out of here. It was a lucky home run on a bad pitch that was low and away."

Andre Dawson tied the game, 5-5, with a grand slam in the eighth inning. It was his 16th homer of the season and second grand slam of the year. Dawson also homered in the first inning.

With the tying run on second base in the bottom of the 10th, Houston reliever Dave Smith struck out Dawson and retired Jody Davis on a foul pop to end the game. In 19 innings this season, Smith has allowed six hits and no runs, striking out 25.

Giants 9, Phillies 2

Atlee Hammaker and two relievers combined on a three-hitter and Chris Speier hit two of San Francisco's five home runs in beating Philadelphia at Candlestick Park.

Hammaker, who missed all of 1986 after shoulder surgery, pitched a two-hitter over seven innings, striking out six.

Bob Brenly, Chili Davis and Candy Maldonado also homered for the Giants, who scored all their runs via homers.

The victory lifted the Giants into a first-place tie with Cincinnati in the NL West.

Cardinals 8, Reds 6

Tommy Herr scored the tying run in the ninth inning and then hit a two-run double in the top of the 10th to lift St. Louis over host Cincinnati.

Trailing 6-5, St. Louis tied the game when Herr singled to open the ninth, moved to third on a sacrifice by Jose Oquendo and a groundout by Tony Pena and scored when shortstop Barry Larkin couldn't field Curt Ford's grounder allowing Herr to score.

Rain stops College World Series play

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Louisiana State Coach Skip Bertman says his Tigers will have to regroup when they resume a College World Series game against Oklahoma State.

But that line should be coming from Cowboy Coach Gary Ward, whose third-ranked Oklahoma State team trails No. 7 LSU 6-2 in a game suspended by rain Monday night. Play resumes this afternoon.

A severe thunderstorm delayed the game for 90 minutes with LSU leading 2-0 after two innings, then forced NCAA officials to suspend play again in the fourth.

Completion of the game will precede the other winners bracket semifinal between No. 1 Texas and No. 2 Stanford.

The rain also put a temporary halt to the NCAA record 57-game hitting streak of Oklahoma State's Robin Ventura. He grounded into a double play his first time up and walked in the third inning of Monday night's game.

After Craig Faulkner singled in a run in the first and Rob Hartwig singled one home in the second for LSU, rain halted play the first time.

Rain again stopped play with two Oklahoma State runners on and two out in the top of the fourth.

NBA

"If we play great, people will say we're well-rested. If we play lousy, they'll say we're rusty," Riley said.

"But all the talk about the Celtics' fatigue and our layoff is meaningless. It's time for both of us to go for it."

Larry Bird, who played all but 84 seconds and averaged 36 points in the last three games of the Detroit series, said the Celtics will be rested for tonight's game.

"We're coming off a tough series, but we've had a little time to rest up, and we're ready to go," Bird said.

Bird was beseiged by questions about Boston's underdog role.

When the three-time MVP was asked if he was afraid it could be a short series, he said, "No, I doubt if we can sweep them."

Riley and Johnson said that neutralizing Boston's front line of Bird, Parish and McHale is the key for Los Angeles.

"Those three guys can kill you," Johnson said. "It's a must that we rebound well."

"Larry, Robert and Kevin need special attention," Riley said.

Referring to the stress fracture in McHale's foot and Parish's ankle problems, Riley added, "The ball isn't getting in to Kevin as much as it did in the regular season. I don't know if that's because of the injury or the double-teaming.

"You see Robert wincing and limping when he falls, but you don't know how much the pain is affecting his game."

Riley said the Lakers will have to rebound well in order to run against the Celtics.

"I'm happy with our defensive rebounding in the playoffs," Riley said.

"Seattle is one of the best offensive rebounding teams in the league, and we swept them. We'll see how we do against Boston."

Bird said the Celtics will have to constantly be aware of the Lakers' running game.

"Pounding the offensive boards may be the one way to slow them down," Bird said. "You have to rebound, go down and score and then hustle back on defense. We want to do that, but we don't know if we can."

Bird said he was happy to be playing the Lakers in the finals because there would be no disgrace in losing to them after they won 65 games in the regular season.

"I enjoy playing the Lakers because if we lose, I don't feel as bad," he said. "If we lost to Milwaukee and Detroit, I would've really felt bad."

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Results are what count in the workplace and your accomplishments could amaze even you in the year ahead. Many situations begin to turn around in your favor. The social picture brightens. A friend or family member will come to mean a lot to you again. Old ties help you develop new business and financial resources. Keep your emotions under tighter control. Romantic partner detests scenes. Resist the urge to issue an ultimatum.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Confederacy's Jefferson Davis, poet Allen Ginsberg, auto racing's Barney Oldfield, golf's Hale S. Irwin, actresses Paulette Goddard and Colleen Dewhurst, basketball coach Billy Cunningham, actor Tony Curtis.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your intuition is correct. Rely on a hunch and you will be able to move a project along ahead of schedule. Saving company money could put extra cash in your pocket. A bonus beckons.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣

Prepare for the worst. Then you will be pleasantly surprised if nothing bad happens, but ready to take advantage of any extra chance that might develop.

Suppose that you are sitting South. After North raises your suit, your hand improves considerably, and it is just about worth a jump to game rather than a game try.

When you get your first glance of dummy after the opening club lead, you like your contract. If spades break evenly, you are laydown, so this is a good vulnerable game. However, you should prepare for the eventuality that you might have a trump loser. In that case you must find a way to avoid losing that trick and three tricks in diamonds.

If East has three spades to the queen, there is little you can do about it. But if West has trump length, you might be able to circumvent his holding. The key move is to ruff a club after winning the ace at trick one.

When you next cash the ace-king of trumps and learn the bad news, all is not lost. Cash the ace-king of hearts and lead a heart. If West ruffs, you discard a diamond loser, so suppose he discards a club. Ruff the heart and ruff a club in hand, then lead your last heart. Again West cannot afford to ruff, and if he discards a club he sets up the last club in dummy for a diamond discard. So he must let go of a diamond. That allows you to ruff the heart on the table and the last club in hand for 10 tricks.

You have telescoped four losers into three. East's third diamond winner and West's high trump both take the last trick and you have collected two spade tricks, two hearts, one club and five ruffs.

Johnny Carson down to three nights a week as host of 'Tonight Show'

Carson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Johnny Carson will take it easier in his 26th year as host of "The Tonight Show."

Carson, 61, will do the show three nights a week, turning over Monday nights to comedian Jay Leno and Tuesday nights to "Best of Carson" reruns. Leno and comedian Garry Shandling also will be the exclusive guest hosts when Carson is on vacation, NBC announced Monday.

The guest-host plan, devised with Carson's cooperation, "will add a regularity and a familiarity to the broadcasts since what's-her-name left," NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff quipped, in a speech at a meeting of network affiliates.

He was referring to Joan Rivers, who left her spot as Carson's "permanent guest host" last year for her own show on Fox network. She recently split up with the network, however, when "The Late Show" failed to build ratings.

Leno and Shandling have been guest hosts on "The Tonight Show." Leno is also a frequent guest on "Late Night with David Letterman" and has had his own comedy special on NBC. Shandling has a satirical sitcom on Showtime, "It's Garry Shandling's Show."

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Snow White turns 50 this week, but Walt Disney's most famous cartoon heroine doesn't look a day older than when she made her film debut in 1937.

Ninety-three women who have portrayed the princess in the movie or at Disney theme parks will mark Friday's golden anniversary of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

Heading the list of 69 former Snow Whites gathering at Disneyland will be Joanne Killingsworth, who played the part in the California park's opening day parade in 1955.

Also scheduled to attend was dancer Marge Champion, the model for the movie role for Walt Disney's animators, and Adriana Cassellotti, Snow White's voice in the movie.

Twenty-four others will help celebrate at Florida's Walt Disney World, Disney officials said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Gary Morris, who has tested his talents in classical opera and on prime-time television, says he expects no problems playing the lead role in the rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar."

"I don't have any trouble with that at all," Morris said Sunday. The Tennessee Repertory Theater production opens in May 1988 and is the final event of the theater's season.

Morris performed with Linda Ronstadt in a 1984 off-Broadway production of "La Boheme" and had a recurring role in the television show "The Colbys," in which he played a blind songwriter.

Morris has recorded four albums and numerous singles, including "Why, Lady Why," "Dreams Die Hard" and his latest hit, "Plain Brown Wrapper."

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Adam Horowitz of the New York rock group Beastie Boys was freed on $16,200 bail on a charge resulting from a melee that cut short a Liverpool concert.

Horowitz, 20, was charged with hitting a fan with a beer can Saturday night at the Royal Court Theater, during the group's final concert of a British tour. The 20-year-old woman was struck in the face, causing bruises and cuts, a prosecutor said.

Horowitz sat quietly through the 15-minute hearing Monday in Magistrates Court. The case was adjourned until July 21.

NEW YORK (AP) — They were literally made for each other, a match made in comic-book heaven. The Amazing Spider-Man will tie the knot, so to speak, with Mary Jane Watson on Friday night.

At Shea Stadium, before a Pirates-Mets game, two models dressed as the sticky-fingered superhero and his fictional fiancee will be married in a mock ceremony officiated by Stan Lee, publisher of Marvel Comics and creator of Spider-Man.

"He's been pacing the ceiling for weeks," said Tara Shannon, who will play Ms. Watson, who is an actress, model and computer businesswoman in the popular comic book.

A special wedding issue of the comic book goes on sale June 9, and Friday's home-plate ceremony is a promotional stunt.

Ms. Watson's form-fitting gown of lace, satin and tulle was designed by the late Willi Smith, his last project before he died earlier this year. Her wedding ring will feature a black widow spider setting.

Spider-Man — whose alter-ego is Peter Parker, a photographer for the mythical Daily Bugle in Manhattan — will wear a black tail coat also designed by Smith.

In attendance at Friday's ceremony will be the Incredible Hulk, Captain America, Ice-Man, Fire-Star, Green Goblin and Dr. Doom, along with a crowd of about 45,000.

Barrow

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — Prime Minister Errol Barrow, a veteran politician who guided Barbados to independence from Britain and sought to increase Caribbean unity, died at his home. He was 67.

The cause of his death Monday was not immediately released.

Governor General Sir Hugh Springer immediately swore in Deputy Prime Minister Erskine Sandiford as Barrow's successor.

Sandiford, the minister of education and leader of the House of Assembly, said Monday night in a brief speech on national television that he would carry out Barrow's programs.

"I feel a deep sense of loss which I'm sure you the people of Barbados share with me," he said.

Funeral arrangements were not announced.

It was the second time in two years that Barbados' prime minister has died in office. On March 14, 1985, 53-year-old Tom Adams suffered a fatal heart attack.

Although relatives said Barrow long had been in poor health, he dismissed questions about his age and health when re-elected in May 1986, saying, "I'm fit, of sound mind, and nine years younger than Mr. Reagan."

NORTH ADAMS, Mass. (AP) — Economists predicted Monday that an enormous contemporary art museum planned for part of an empty factory complex could bring this depressed city $21 million every year.

The study by Yale University and Williams College economists also predicted the city would receive $470,000 a year in taxes from the project, named the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art, and from businesses in the complex.

Dollar lower

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all major foreign currencies except the Canadian dollar in quiet European trading early today. Gold prices were higher in Europe.

European money traders said the dollar will likely remain at current levels until after next week's meeting of the seven Western industrial countries in Venice, Italy.

The dollar has gained ground against the yen in Tokyo for nine consecutive trading days, reaching its highest level since early April.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.6377, more expensive than $1.6270 Monday.

GOLD

Bullion dealers said gold prices were buoyed in active trading by the dollar's weakness.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $445.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $443.20. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $449.30.

In Zurich, the bid price was $449.75, up from $444.50 late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $2.82 to close at a bid $448.33, compared with Saturday's $451.15. The Hong Kong gold market was closed Monday for a public holiday.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.60 a troy ounce, up from Monday's $7.35.

U.S.-Japan trade sanctions reviewed

By PETER T. KILBORN
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The president's top economic policy team met Monday to examine reports that could persuade the president to remove or relax the trade sanctions that he imposed on imports of $300 million in Japanese goods, officials disclosed Monday. "We may have something to say in the next day or two," an American trade official said.

The sanctions, enacted in retribution for purported violations of a semiconductor trade agreement that the countries signed last year, are a source of bitterness in Japan and have complicated efforts by the two countries to cooperate on other economic issues.

Some members of the Administration have raised the possibility that the President could lift the sanctions to clear the air before the seven-nation economic summit conference that he and Japan's prime minister, Yasuhiro Nakasone, will attend in Venice next week.

But they also say the sanctions have relieved some of the pressure in Congress to enact tough, anti-Japanese trade legislation and that ending the sanctions soon could prove counterproductive.

To press the Japanese view, Makoto Kuroda, a deputy minister of Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry, was here last Thursday and Friday seeing American trade officials and has extended his stay for more talks this week.

So far he has met with Michael B. Smith, a deputy trade representative; S. Bruce Smart Jr., undersecretary of commerce for international trade, and Douglas W. McMinn, assistant secretary of state for economic affairs.

Monday's White House meeting of Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III's Economic Policy Council did not consider an actual decision, officials said. Instead it reviewed data on trade in semiconductors — the tiny chips used in computers and many other products — to see if the purported violations have ended as the Japanese negotiators maintain.

Building firm despite interest rise

By JAMES M. KENNEDY
AP Business Writer

Construction spending steadied in April despite recent increases in interest rates, according to two reports.

The Commerce Department said Monday spending moved up 0.4 percent during the month. Increases in shopping center and factory construction helped offset slowdowns in government and residential projects, the report said.

The department said private and public construction was being built at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $384.1 billion in April, following a revised 1.1 percent March decline.

In a separate survey, a construction information group said contracting for new building projects in April was little changed after a strong showing in March.

The F.W. Dodge division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co. said April contracting slipped just 1 percent to a total of $247.6 billion on an annual basis.

"It's too soon to be looking for a reaction to the recent (rise in) interest rates, since most of the financing for April's construction starts had already been committed," said George A. Christie, vice president and chief economist for F.W. Dodge.

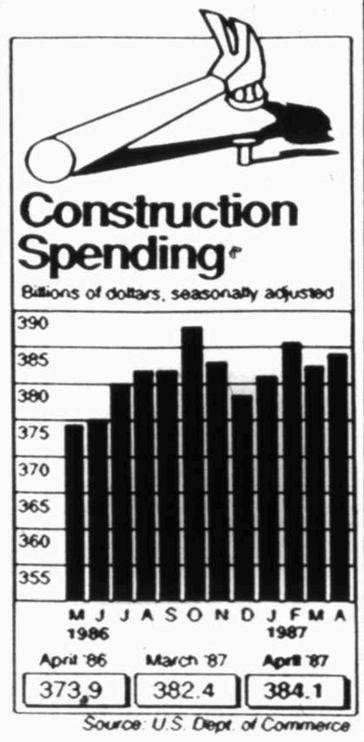

Mortgage rates nationwide rose at least 1 percentage point during April.

Cynthia Latta, an economist with Data Resources Inc. of Lexington, Mass., said she expected residential and non-residential construction to decline for most of the year.

"We don't see any pickup in building activity even in 1988 in the non-residential area because there is a lot of overbuilding," she said.

For April, residential construction dipped 1 percent to an annual rate of $184.2 billion, according to the Commerce Department report.

Non-residential construction rose 1 percent to an annual rate of $88 billion in April. The strength came from a big jump in building of shopping centers and similar commercial projects and a slight rise in construction of industrial factories.

MBCE encourages youth employment

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

"The city's private sector should be encouraged to become responsive to the employment needs of our youth," said Robbyne Hocker Fuller, president of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, at its monthly meeting on Monday.

MBCE, in response to the need for employable youth, is sponsoring a free seminar Saturday at Midland Center, Room 1. The seminar will aid participants in acquiring or improving job search and interviewing skills. Said Fuller: "We will have sessions on resume preparation, the interview process, communication, post-interview procedures, job protocol, appearance, scholarships and advancement."

The seminar is open to the public and registration forms can be obtained by calling Fuller at 682-2284 or Rhiny Williams at 686-7671. Registration can also be completed at the door, beginning at 9:30 a.m., with the seminar scheduled to run from 10:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m.

Michael Hudspeth, summer counselor for the Job Traning Partnership Act (JTPA) program in Midland told the chamber that their association with the JTPA program was "significant."

"We will place 140 youth from Midland, Martin and Upton counties in jobs this summer. These are kids who want to work but may not have the opportunity if it were not for programs like this," Hudspeth observed.

JTPA's summer project will include six programs:

- Entrepreneur program — a program designed to give insights into jobs in business-related fields. Participants will have two hours of computer training, two hours in business courses and then work four hours in a business setting;
- Youth Placing Youth — five of the top applicants will be chosen to participate in this program which teaches them job development skills and gives them hands on experience while actually matching and placing other youths in appropriate positions;

Preservationists want Joske name kept

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The historic downtown Joske's store will close its doors this month and reopen next spring after a major renovation for its conversion to Dillard's, but San Antonio preservationists want the Joske's name to remain.

Company officials decided Monday to close the store, which opened at Alamo Plaza and Commerce Street in 1888, said Charles Franzke, chairman of Dillard Department Store Inc.'s San Antonio division.

Because of the building's historic significance, the San Antonio Conservation Society has written a letter to Dillard officials and is circulating petitions in a push to keep the Joske's name on the downtown store. The society is suggesting the store be called "Dillard's at Joske's."

Bill Warner, Dillard vice president of sales and promotions, said store officials are planning to meet with the society to discuss the issue.

"We're hoping we can sit down and work something out," Warner said.

The space in the 550,000-square-foot downtown store not used by Dillard will be converted to other retail uses by the Edward J. DeBartolo Corp., one of the developers of the $200 million Rivercenter Mall, Franzke said.

While the design still is in the planning stages, Dillard will keep the part of the building that faces Alamo Plaza, Franzke said.

Dillard's bought the Joske chain of department stores and is incorporating the properties in the Little Rock, Ark.-based retailer.

Dillard merger takes effect

DALLAS (AP) — Arkansas-based Dillard Department Stores Inc. formally assumed operation of Texas' 26 Joske's stores on Monday, said Alex Dillard.

Dillard's announced April 13 it would buy the 26 Joske's stores in Texas and one in Phoenix, Ariz., from Allied Stores Corp. for $255 million.

Dillard officials said Joske's was closed Sunday to change to Dillard's equipment. Starting Monday, Joske's charge cards were accepted at Dillard's stores and Dillard's cards may be used at Joske's stores.

Computer Associates-Uccel merger will create biggest software firm

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Computer Associates International Inc. would become the world's largest independent software company through a purchase of rival Uccel Corp. in a stock swap valued at nearly $800 million.

The agreement, announced Monday, unites the two biggest makers of systems software for International Business Machines Corp. mainframe computers.

It is the biggest conquest yet for Charles Wang, a 42-year-old native of China who founded Computer Associates 11 years ago and has built it through a mixture of internal growth and aggressive acquisitions.

Wang said he plans to make more acquisitions and remains confident the company can increase its earnings and revenue at a rate of 30 percent to 35 percent a year, somewhat slower than the growth rate to date.

"It is a deal in which winners emerge from the start," Wang told reporters and securities analysts. He said he does not expect any challenge on antitrust grounds.

Wang, Computer Associates' chairman and chief executive, is not related to An Wang, founder and chairman of Wang Laboratories Inc., the computer manufacturer.

Systems software is growing rapidly in popularity because it helps customers get more use out of their existing computers and makes it easier to develop new applications, such as programs for banking or accounting.

Garden City, N.Y.-based Computer Associates ranked second and Uccel eighth in terms of revenue in calendar year 1986, according to Dataquest Inc., a market researcher. Lotus Development Corp. was first last year and Microsoft Corp. third.

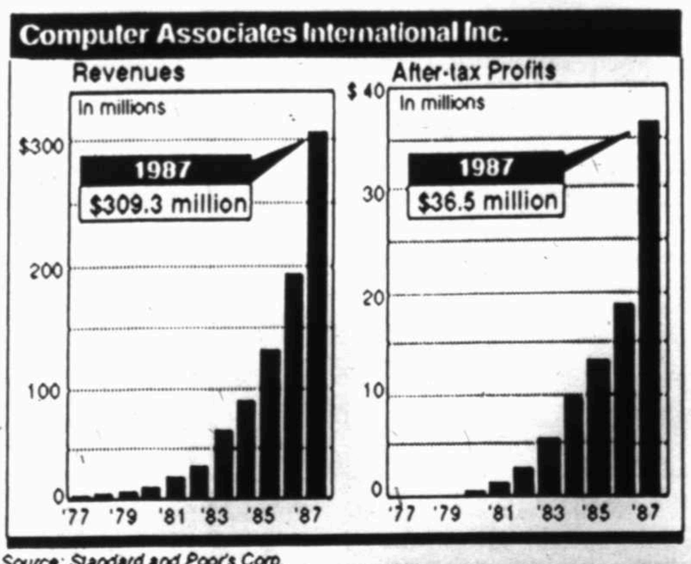

The companies' combined revenue of $407 million in 1986 would have been the most among independent software companies, although it was dwarfed by IBM's $5.5 billion in software revenue last year.

In the deal, scheduled for completion Aug. 15, Uccel shareholders are to receive 1.69 shares of Computer Associates common stock for each of the approximately 17 million Uccel shares outstanding. That amounts to about $47.50 per Uccel share, based on closing prices Friday on the New York Stock Exchange.

Uccel's stock jumped to $43.50 a share in consolidated New York Stock Exchange trading Monday from $32 a share Friday.

Computer Associates stock slipped to $27.12½ a share from $28 on the NYSE, lowering the current value of the deal to about $779 million.

Dallas-based Uccel is 58 percent owned by Swiss investor Walter Haefner through Careal Holding AG of Zurich. Haefner, who has indicated his support for the merger, would become a roughly 25 percent shareholder in Computer Associates.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Maxwell takes HBJ to court over 'poison pill'

LONDON (AP) — Publisher Robert Maxwell has sued Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc. to halt a $3 billion recapitalization plan aimed at blocking Maxwell's attempt to take over the publisher.

Maxwell told a news conference Monday he was seeking U.S. government permission to continue increasing his stake in Harcourt, which amounts to less than 2 percent of the company's 39.4 million common shares outstanding.

Maxwell said he had sufficient resources to launch a new offer for Harcourt if his suit was successful, but he said he would drop his bid if the suit failed.

Humana buys major Medicare-certified HMO

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Humana Inc. has paid $40 million to purchase most of the assets of insolvent International Medical Centers Inc., the nation's largest Medicare-certified health maintenance organization.

Wayne T. Smith, executive vice president for Humana, said Monday the ownership change would not interrupt service and Humana automatically would assume the contracts of IMC's 170,000 commercial and Medicare subscribers.

HCA restructuring will trim management jobs

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Hospital Corporation of America's $1.9 billion restructuring plan, which involves selling 104 hospitals to a spinoff company, will mean layoffs in management and non-patient areas, according to an executive of the new company.

Charles N. Martin, the current executive vice president of HCA who will serve as president and chief operating officer of the new company, said he does not know how many employees will be reassigned from HCA to the new firm or how many will be laid off, but the staff cuts are expected in non-patient areas such as billing, collecting and housekeeping.

Meese mum after visiting federal grand jury

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III has been questioned by a federal grand jury investigating his involvement with Wedtech Corp., a defense contractor that is the focus of influence-peddling probes.

Meese declined to comment Monday following his two-hour appearance behind closed doors at the U.S. Courthouse.

Much of the questioning of the attorney general centered around government contracts involving Fairchild Industries Inc., a Chantilly, Va.-defense contractor, said a source close to the investigation.

Computerland goes private

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Capping a year of speculation and rumors, the Computerland Corp., the world's largest personal computer retailer, said on Monday that an investment group led by E.M. Warburg, Pincus & Co. had agreed to acquire the company.

Terms of the transaction were not disclosed, but sources estimated the price at $200 million to $250 million.

The sale to the financial services and investment banking firm, based in New York, raises the possibility of a subsequent public offering or sale to a third party. The firm declined comment today on its intentions.

The transaction effectively ends Computerland's connection with William H. Millard, who founded the chain in 1976 but has since lost almost all control. His fall began with a March 1985 court decision awarding a 20 percent stake in Computerland and $141 million in damages to a group of outside investors called Micro-Vest because Millard had failed to repay a nine-year-old $250,000 note that was convertible into stock.

The management of Computerland, which is based in Hayward, Calif., had agreed to take the company public within two years of a Dec. 12, 1985, settlement in a dispute over the chain's ownership.

Ken Waters, Computerland's president and chief operating officer, said Warburg had no immediate plans for a public offering. He said all current shareholders had agreed to sell, so the settlement terms become moot. Both Millard and Micro-Vest may retain small minority interests in Computerland but will have no management role or control, he said.

The dispute between Millard and Micro-Vests's investors will continue but will no longer involve the company, a decision both parties approved as part of the sale agreement, Waters said. "They will go on and fight, but there are no clouds over Computerland's future," he said. However, 20 percent of Computerland's stock remains in a trust pending settlement of the dispute. Neither Millard nor representatives of Micro-Vest could be reached for comment.

Millard and his daughter, Barbara, who had been president, relinquished operating control of Computerland in September 1985 to quell a franchisees' revolt, and later relinquised their board seats as part of the December 1985 settlement. They have since moved to the island of Saipan in the Marianas, about 200 miles northwest of Guam.

"The ultimate disposition of Computerland is no clearer, but it may be closer," said Paul A.D. Evans, an analyst with S.G. Warburg & Co. in San Francisco, which is unrelated to E.M. Warburg.

"It is an interesting deal because it gets Millard out of the picture, which makes the future easier to resolve," he said. "One person who rightly or wrongly has become a controversial figure is now out, which may make it easier to handle the transaction on its business merits." The transaction is expected to close within 90 days.

Evans said an offering of Computerland later this year could be attractive because of the strong sales growth among most microcomputer manufacturers. But he added that Computerland suffered in comparison with some retailers because its largely franchised operation lacked a national sales and service force, and because it had primarily emphasized the home and single-user market rather than the business segment, which is growing the fastest.

Computerland reported annual network retail sales of $1.45 billion in 1986 for its 800 franchised and company-owned stores, but the privately held company does not release profit results. Computerland primarily derives its revenues from an average 5.6 percent royalty charged on franchisees' sales. An affiliated company sells private-label computers and peripherals, which accounted for revenues more than $35 million in 1986.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

New law complicates reporting on three-party loans

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. On Dec. 30, 1985, I borrowed money through my home equity credit line at the bank. I immediately loaned that money to my son. Each month, the bank sends me a statement showing the payment due. My son then pays me that amount and I pay the bank with my own check.

At the end of 1986, we calculated the year's interest. On my 1986 income tax return, I reported that total interest both as income and as an expense. On his return, my son reported that interest as an expense. Now, we wonder. Did we handle this properly?

A. Yes. That was the correct way to report that interest — for 1986. You're really taking about two loans — one to you from the bank, the other to your son from you.

The interest included in the money your son paid you increased your income. You were required to report that income on your return. The interest you paid the bank was an expense, which you properly took as a deduction on your return. This resulted in a tax "wash" for you, because the deduction offset the income.

Your son was entitled to the deduction he took for the interest he paid to you. That reduced his tax bill.

Now, steel yourself for complications resulting from the new federal tax law. For 1987 and future years, the story is quite different.

You will still be required to report the interest income you collect from your son. And you will be able to take a deduction for all the interest paid on that home equity loan — unless the total amount you have borrowed exceeds the price you paid for the house, plus the cost of additions and improvements.

Your son will be able to take the full interest deduction only if he used the loan he obtained from you for "housing related" purposes — buying, building, adding to or improving his home.

If that loan was for some other purpose, your son's interest deduction will gradually be phased out. Under the new rules, he'll be able to deduct 65 percent of that interest this year, 40 percent in 1988, 20 percent in 1989, 10 percent in 1990 and have no deduction after that.

Q. We put $4,542.57 in a certificate of deposit at an interest rate of 8.75 percent. The interest is supposed to be compounded daily. Statements are sent to us quarterly. When our statement arrived for a 91-day quarter, we received $100.46 interest.

My argument with the savings and loan association is that this is little more than simple interest. My figures were: $4,542.57 times 8.75 percent divided by 365 days in a year times 91 days equals $99.19. Daily compounding should result in substantially higher interest.

Is the interest we received compounded daily or is it basically simple interest?

A. Your arithmetic, to the second decimal place, is perfect. If that S&L calculates simple interest the same way you do, you received only $1.27 more than simple interest for the quarter. You're right about compound interest being substantially higher.

However, there is no way for me to know exactly how that S&L does its calculations. Different banks and S&Ls have a wide variety of ways to compute interest. Some of the methods are downright misleading.

Ask the S&L for the "annual percentage yield" on your CD. That's the actual number of dollars per $100 your money will earn over a year's time.

In any account with compound interest, the annual percentage yield always is higher than the stated interest rate. The more frequent the compounding, the higher the annual percentage yield.

Q. My wife and I have a joint checking account. If one of us dies before the other, as it's realistic to expect, will the other be able to write checks?

A. Most banks and S&Ls allow the survivor of a joint checking account to write checks on up to half the balance in the account.

YOUTH

■ Christmas in April — a program designed to teach basic carpentry and construction skills;

■ G.E.D. program — a program conducted at the Alternative School, designed for school dropouts. Participants can go to school for four hours each day and work for four hours, but receive pay for a full eight-hour day;

■ Survival Skills — teaches basic parenting, banking, budgeting, goal setting and living skills to youth who are parents. Program participants will take courses for four hours each day and work for four hours;

■ Summer School — allows youth who are failing classes or need to pick up extra credit to catch up during the summer months. Four hours of classes are followed by four hours of work.

Hudspeth says the programs were designed to meet the needs of the community, and notes that response from employers has been very good. "The students will earn minimum wage and JTPA pays half of those wages, so it's a good deal for employers. Also, employers can take advantage of a tax credit at the end of the year for participating in the program."

He says JTPA has received more than 300 applications from youth seeking summer employment but acknowledges that the program was only budgeted to accommodate 140 workers.

Hudspeth says it is a viable program where youths are placed in jobs where they have some aptitude and can learn a skill they can use later in life. "We actually have had several employers call and request the youth they had last summer to work again this summer."

TRADE

On April 17 President Reagan imposed 100 percent tariffs on imports of certain Japanese television sets, motorized hand tools and computers. The administration charged Japan with two violations of the semiconductor agreement.

Japan was said to have done little to give American semiconductor companies access to the domestic Japanese market. Also, Japanese industry was said to have been underpricing semiconductors that it sold in third markets — outside the United States and Japan — hurting American competitors.

A Japanese official here said new trade figures show substantial improvements in both areas, but American officials declined to say whether they considered it satisfactory. "We've got the data," the Japanese official said. "It's up to the U.S. government to decide if the data warrant lifting the sanctions."

Fall, winter collections previewed

By BETHANY KANDEL
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Designers Mary Jane Marcasiano and Mrs. H. Winter offer simple separates for fall and winter '87, Ellen Tracy's collection is rich in autumn colors and Betsey Johnson continues her frivolous fun.

The following is a look at these designers' fall and winter collections previewed in New York.

ELLEN TRACY

Ellen Tracy's fall collection contains a varied palette of fall colors — from the warmth of hazel, spruce, saffron and cashew to the sophistication of graphite, olivewood and raisin.

Linda Allard, who designed the collection for Ellen Tracy, also offers a variety of looks in skirts from pencil slim to full, fluid mid-calf and even a "divided" skirt with skirting and pants in one.

Fabrics come in feathery light silk patterned with antique map, tapestry, paisley and florals. Matching scarves come in check over plaid or houndstooth gabardine.

One great look matches a buttery hazel brown hip-length leather jacket with a full circle skirt in a map-inspired pattern in spruce, saffron and cashew.

For a comfortable alternative to the classic suit, Ms. Allard pairs a blackberry turtleneck and graphite jersey knee-skimming skirt with a coordinated houndstooth patterned mohair sweater.

A sleek above-the-knee skirt in olivewood lambsuede is worn with a matching flyaway coat for a classic ensemble. A flowing saffron lambsuede shirtdress with five-button sleeves had women in the showroom drooling over its casual elegance.

MARY JANE MARCASIANO

Mary Jane Marcasiano's fall line is filled with simple, comfortable separates with "a few fun things running through it," the designer explained at her recent show.

The colors evoke a fall beach scene, with sunset pink cashmere, sand-colored mohair, driftwood gray and charcoal merino wool.

A set of poorboy knits combines cropped, waist-hugging sweaters and vests with micro-minis and cigarette-slim pants.

New stretch materials inspired Ms. Marcasiano to bring elements of horseback riding wear into street wear.

One outfit matches a black silk and wool jacquard blouse and ascot with a rust, charcoal and gray alpaca tweed and check vest. These are worn with stretch riding pants in a rust-colored twill.

She has fun with the classic schoolgirl look by pairing a sparkling black mohair cardigan with a fuchsia cropped sweater and a black wool voile pleated skirt. A green mohair sweater and scarf are worn with a black and silver plaid wool skirt.

She offers big hooded black shearling coats that swallow up the wearer in warmth and coziness for the cool days of fall, and continues the metallic look in a shimmering black chenille turtleneck tunic and cropped sweater with frog closings.

MRS. H. WINTER

Mrs. H. Winter's fall collection of coats and separates has a timeless simplicity.

Dresses and tunic-skirt combos are both short and flirty and long and straight. Coats come in black, maroon, coral and forest green melton and boucle. A gray plaid blanket coat with huge, deep pockets looks good enough to curl up under.

No buttons are to be seen anywhere on a Mrs. Winter outer garment — you're just supposed to drape them around you and hold tight.

All her clothing carries her signature overstitching detail work that makes for an interesting look. This season, she adds a profile design — inspired by designer Elsa Schiaparelli — that's found on fronts, backs and off-center throughout the collection.

One such melton coat in carmel and black has a longer front than back, where the profile is stitched.

A solid green dress has long, pointy collars, cuffs and waistband all in black. Minis have Mrs. Winter's traditional overcast edging that gives them a rippling effect.

For a dressy change of pace, rose and green lame show up in long empire dresses; velvet and jersey tops and bottoms are mixed and matched and a quilted and polka-dotted coat and jacket come in striking black.

BETSEY JOHNSON

As the rest of Seventh Avenue abandons the crinolines of spring for sleek fall silhouettes, Betsey Johnson flounces into the new season with lots of lacey and frilly petticoats.

Many dresses are drop waisted and have tight-fitting bodices with tutu-like skirts supported with black net crinolines. Lace pantaloons over leggings add a touch of whimsy.

Her colors are earthy — in shades of green, purple and gold — and appear in variations of stripes, dots and floral design. Johnson also uses plaid and denim.

This design by Mrs. H. Winter, with its black melton "brief" jacket over a forest green section skirt and hip-hugging tunic with Winter's traditional overstitching detail work, is a study in timeless simplicity.

Riding in limousine fulfills everyone's favorite fantasy

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

There's something significant about the fact that there are more ads for limousines listed in the Yellow Pages than there are for plumbers, but I'm not sure what it is.

It might mean we're becoming more interested in flash and dash than in bubble and trouble. Maybe it's an attitude of, "If it doesn't show, don't fix it." And then again, superficial trappings could be winning the war against reality. Live it up today, for tomorrow it could be a "Dallas" dream.

Limousines used to be reserved for the ruling class or, on special occasions, for the working class. Tinted windows shielded the rich, the famous, the soon-to-be-wed or the soon-to-be-buried. Today, limousines are like taxicabs with the door handles still intact. There is no town too small anymore for a limousine. They transport kids to the prom, birthday celebrants, sightseers, couples observing a special anniversary, travelers en route to the airport and pampered women to the hairdresser.

As well as I can remember, the trend got a real shot in the arm back at the inaugural of President Reagan in 1981. I was in Washington at the time when a limo driver said, "Thank God, we've got a President who believes in limos. We've gone through four years with a leader who took cabs and carried his own garment bag. Trust me, limos are on the move again."

The man was an oracle.

Before limousines "went public," I used to be so impressed with people who rode in them. A successful writer friend of mine never drove herself anywhere. She had her own limo. One night she picked me up at a hotel for dinner. As I climbed into her car, she was nestled in a corner of a stretch limo wrapped in a fur coat. I felt like Melanie Hamilton taking Belle Watling's tainted money in "Gone With the Wind." My mouth hung open as I touched the velour, the built-in bar and the fresh flowers. All I could utter was, "Have you lived here long?"

Later, everyone rode in limos. Morris the Cat had one to ride around in to make his appointments. Game-show contestants rode in them. Even Robin Leach rode in them. I was met by a limo once in a town no bigger than my coffee table. The driver apologized for being late as the services for his last "client" lasted longer than he had anticipated. He presented me with a carnation from the "grief blanket."

I do know they change your entire personality. I never climb into one that I don't become a woman of mystery. My status is elevated to new heights, and I lapse into blessing people on the curb waiting for the traffic light to change. I fight the urge to buy a wolfhound with a jeweled choker.

Limos have become everyone's fantasy. It's only a matter of time before Lt. Col. Oliver North turns in his station wagon for one. He's only human.

Heel heights change with 'look'

Hearst News Service

When Catherine de Medici married the future King Henry II in Italy, she commissioned an artist to create shoes with high heels so she would look taller for her wedding.

Since that time, the ultra-high heel has been touted for making the leg look better and has been cursed for the discomfort it can cause. Now, you can take your choice. There are elegant, feminine flats, or racy high-heels available to mix-and-match with your favorite outfits.

For your career, you can set your pace in seamless pumps. The newest styles are in colors that include soft pastels or primary brights, as well as nautical blues and whites. Pump styles range from the usual oval to styles that are low-cut over the toe or at the arch. The most versatile styles are in kidskin and go easily from board room to dance floor. But the most fashionable looks are alligator, crocodile and lizard.

For a dressier look, pumps sport mesh inserts or cutouts in abstract designs. The 1- to 1½-inch heel can complement both the short or long styles. But, the higher the heel the dressier the image with either skirt length.

Classic style survives century

Copley News Service

The tuxedo is now more than a century old, having been "born" at the first Autumn Ball in October 1886, when young Griswold Lorillard, son of Pierre V., wore the tailless dress coat to this grand ball of the elite social resort area of Tuxedo Park, 40 miles northwest of New York City.

Griswold (nicknamed "Grizzy") shocked everyone but his father (some say Dad designed it) with his scarlet, satin-lapeled affair, which was tailored, if not tailed, along the lines of hunters' pink coats.

DEAR ABBY

Woman finds 'single' lover leads double life

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 26-year-old woman who recently fell in love with a 25-year-old guy. We met at work and discovered a strong mutual attraction on both our parts. Abby, I was never so happy in my life when he told me he loved me and wanted me to be his wife. After spending almost every night together for three months, I get a phone call from his wife who is pregnant and has a 3-year-old daughter by this man.

I don't have to tell you that I was in shock. Now the question, Abby: How does a single girl know for sure if a man is lying or telling the truth when he says he is not married? — USED IN AUSTIN

DEAR USED: A single man will introduce you to some of his friends and relatives. A married man will not. A single man will probably invite you to see his house or apartment. A married man will not. A single man will give you his home telephone number and address. A married man will not.

There's a lesson to be learned here: Don't be so quick to give your love to a stranger. Too fast doesn't last.

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago I bought my mother a beautiful jewelry box. Yesterday I visited my niece to see her new bedroom set when lo and behold, what do you think I saw on her dressing table? My jewelry box! I asked "Betsy" where she got it and she said it was a birthday present from Grandma (my mother)! When I asked Mother where the jewelry box I had given her was, she lied and said it was in her closet. I asked her how it could be in her closet when I saw it on Betsy's dresser. Then she admitted that Betsy had admired it, so she gave it to her.

When Mother saw how hurt I was, all she said was, "I'm sorry. I didn't think you'd mind."

I haven't spoken to my mother since. I'm through giving her gifts; she'll be lucky to get a card from me in the future.

Am I wrong to feel this way? — HURTING IN BROOKLYN

DEAR HURTING: I can understand your feelings, but please let go of your resentment. Once a gift is given, it's the property of the recipient to do with what he/she pleases. No gift is worth a family rift. Forgive — and try to forget.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter you printed from "Desperate in Maryland." Like him, I had a well-paying job, a secure future as an inventory control specialist for a major utility, and no previous history of drug abuse. And, like him, I developed a love/hate affair with cocaine. My $32,000-a-year job wasn't sufficient to pay for my escalating habit (in 1978, when I was all of 22). I turned to dealing, and still couldn't keep up with the ever increasing amount of cocaine I was using.

I knew I had a problem, but, like "Desperate in Maryland," I didn't know how to deal with it. A year in prison didn't help me. A broken marriage didn't help me. Finally, a heart attack at the ripe old age of 24 made me realize that if I didn't stop, I was going to DIE.

An understanding doctor put me in touch with Cocaine Anonymous and helped me get into a treatment program. That was seven years ago, Abby, and I'm now leading a normal, happy life. To "Desperate in Maryland": If you really want out of the trap you're in, help is as close as your nearest phone book. You can call either the Cocaine Hotline, or the nearest group of Cocaine Anonymous or Alcoholics Anonymous (many AA members are also Cocaine Anonymous members). Hang in there, "Desperate," help is out there, if you want it. — GRATEFUL AND STRAIGHT

(For Abby's booklet, "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Bow ties back in style in time for Father's Day giving

Copley News Service

Surveys show that at least 50 percent of American men wear some sort of tie every day. And thus, the No. 1 gift item to purchase for a man is the tie.

If you're in the habit of giving your dad ties for Father's Day, why not make them bow ties this year? They're back in style, possibly because of the new conservatism in dress that they imply.

The bow tie didn't have a high degree of visibility until the 1930s, when it emerged in the Depression. It achieved wide acceptance that lasted into World War II.

Vehicles of parking violators to be towed

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A municipal court judge has ordered the vehicles of 12 of the city's top 20 parking violators impounded.

One of the vehicles was spotted in violation of another parking law, he said, adding that he believed the car was towed.

Anyone with parking tickets outstanding three months is subject to having his car towed, officials said, but the city is concentrating efforts on the most "flagrant offenders."

Impounding orders were signed Friday when the offenders failed to pay their outstanding fines after receiving notification by certified letter, and vehicle descriptions were turned over to parking enforcement attendants in the Public Works Department, officials said. Once the vehicles are located, they are to be held in the city pound until their owners settle their delinquent citations.

The City Council May 7 passed an ordinance giving municipal court officials the power to tow the vehicles of delinquent parking violators.

Body identified as Texan

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The body of a woman found imbedded in concrete in a steel drum has been tentatively identified as a topless dancer from Texas, and a Texas man is a suspect in her death, Indianapolis police said Monday.

Terry Leigh Martinez, 26, was identified when Houston police matched the body's fingerprints with hers.

The body was found April 29 in a rental unit at an Eastside self-storage warehouse. Authorities said she died of a cocaine overdose.

Family members had last seen her three days earlier, said Sgt. Fred W. Carroll, a homicide detective with the Houston Police Department.

Police and her family have been unable to find a link between the victim, who was a waitress and dancer at a Houston lounge, and Indianapolis, Carroll said.

Indianapolis police have identified, but not charged, a Houston man as a suspect, although they have been unable to determine whether Ms. Martinez accidentally overdosed or was forced to take the drug.

Blake chosen senate officer

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate selected Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches, as its assistant presiding officer for the interim between the end of the regular session Monday and the start of the special session June 22.

If tradition holds, Blake, chairman of the Senate Administration Committee, will be re-elected Senate pro tempore for the 30-day special session, which should give him an opportunity to serve as governor-for-a-day.

Blake, 59, was chosen Monday on the basis of seniority as a result of being elected to the Senate in 1978. He was a House member in 1973-78.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, described Blake as "one of the finest legislators we've ever had."

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, said he was first introduced to Blake this way: "This is a great guy — and I found he was."

Blake's 15-county East Texas district "is one of the most beautiful districts of Texas," said Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena.

Court officials named

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The 24,000 active child support cases in Bexar County will be handled more quickly with to the appointment of three full-time court masters, officials said.

Judge Joe E. Kelly, presiding judge of the fourth administrative judicial region, Monday appointed Barbara H. Fritz of Victoria and Edith K. Smith and Howard G. Baldwin, both of San Antonio, as masters.

"The appointment of court masters will speed up the handling of child support cases and will free up the district courts to hear other civil and criminal cases," said Kelly, who lives in Victoria.

The new masters, who will make recommendations to district judges in the cases, will replace attorney John Specia, who until this week had been handling the chore on a part-time basis.

Marilyn Jones, with the local office of attorney general's child support section, said there are 24,000 active child support cases in Bexar County and of those 3,200 are paying.

Cisneros home burglarized

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros' home was broken into by burglars who took equipment and tools belonging to workers who are remodeling the structure, police said Monday.

The mayor and his family have been staying in a house they have rented while their home is undergoing $60,000 worth of renovations.

Cisneros is having a 1,400-square-foot, two-story addition built on the home, which will almost double the size of the dwelling, the contractor said.

Part of the addition is for a nursery for the Cisneroses' third child, expected later this month.

Contractors told police Monday that a burglar alarm is being installed in the home, but it was not operational when burglars struck during the weekend.

A contractor reported the missing equipment, valued at $1,575, to police early Monday.

Woman becomes Rotarian

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A mother of two was has joined a Corpus Christi Rotary club.

A spokesman in the Rotary International office in Evanston, Ill., said there are no records of another female Rotary member in Texas.

"I was kind of scared at first," said Joni Becker, inducted Monday into the Sunrise Rotary Club at its Monday breakfast meeting.

"But all of the men seemed friendly, and they gave me a very warm welcome. I look forward to being in Rotary," said Mrs. Becker, owner of a local diet center.

Other women have been proposed as members in South Texas and Houston Rotary clubs, said Harold Schockley, a Texas Rotary official, who noted that there are some female Rotarians in California.

Angry man rams restaurant

DALLAS (AP) — A man who apparently became angry because the food he ordered from a fast food restaurant wasn't delivered to him fast enough rammed his automobile into a railing at the restaurant, police said.

Officers said David Luxton, 29, of Dallas was arrested on a criminal mischief charge after he rammed his car into the railing at a McDonald's Restaurant Sunday.

Witnesses told police the man had ordered food in the drive-through section of the restaurant and became angry when he had to wait a while for it.

The man was being held in the Lew Sterrett Justice Center Monday in lieu of $425 bond.

Secord to address lawyers

AUSTIN (AP) — Retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord, who was the first witness in Congress' Iran-Contra hearings, will speak to members of the State Bar of Texas next week.

Secord is scheduled to speak June 12 at the group's convention in Corpus Christi, the State Bar announced Monday.

Also scheduled to speak to the individual rights section of the group is Mariano Barahona of the Nicaraguan Supreme Court.

Texas man electrocuted

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) — A Texas man who was electrocuted as he helped load pipe onto a truck at the closed Bunker Hill smelter apparently tried to jump off the truck to avoid falling power lines, Kellogg police said.

Student suspended after he hired stripper

HOUSTON (AP) — The valedictorian of Kingwood High School won't be addressing his classmates during commencement exercises today after he was suspended for hiring a stripper to entertain a teacher, a school spokeswoman says.

"I don't want to be represented as someone who's bitter about this," said Mike Woosley, 18. "But I think their (school officials) actions are a little bit ludicrous."

"I think it's purely political," Woosley said. "I've been a sparkplug all year. I don't fit the mold of conservative Kingwood. I think they didn't trust me to speak at the graduation."

Woosley also was stripped of his valedictorian title, Humble Independent School District spokeswoman Karen Collier said Monday.

The student was suspended for six days because he violated the rules, Ms. Collier said. He will not be able to take his final examinations as scheduled or attend commencement exercises, she said.

The high-ranking student was supposed to address his senior class of 640 during commencement exercises at 8 p.m. tonight.

Fellow students think the suspension is too harsh and have vowed to boycott the ceremonies. A petition to allow Woosley to participate in graduation ceremonies was started at a student party Saturday, said student Jill White.

A sign in a school hallway reads "We won't walk without Woosley," student Gina Parker said.

"He's got the greatest sense of humor and is an all-American kind of guy," Miss White said of Woosley. "I think it's pretty stupid for him to get suspended. Every year the seniors play a practical joke."

Miss Parker said Woosley was suspended because his name was on the money order used to pay for the stripper, "but everyone brought money to help pay for it."

Woosley was suspended last Thursday for hiring the stripper as a treat for John Doolittle, his physics teacher.

The female stripper, dressed as a police officer, interrogated Doolittle about some unpaid parking tickets before she started to take her clothes off. The stripper was stopped by a school administrator.

Ms. Collier said school principal Andrew Wells with the support of the school board suspended the student. She said school administrators do not believe the penalty was too harsh.

"The parents of this young man are backing our action," she said.

Teacher Treena Propes also agrees with the principal's actions.

"You've got to follow the rules and if you break them, you have to pay the price," she said.

Woosley and his parents could not be reached for comment by telephone late Monday.

The school principal was not home Monday evening and did not return telephone calls to The Associated Press.

Other students also disagree with the suspension.

"They should not let him walk just because of a practical joke," Lance Permenter said. "It was just a joke."

Said Darren McLennan, "I can understand their (school officials') point of view also, but I think they're going a little extreme. He worked so hard to be valedictorian and now they won't even let him walk."

Lawyer says he arranged for DWI case dismissals

AUSTIN (AP) — A Waco lawyer told jurors in the federal bribery trial of McLennan County District Attorney Vic Feazell how he arranged for the dismissals of drunken driving cases through a friend of Feazell's.

Dick Clark's voice quavered as he testified Monday that he asked former district attorney Don Hall, then a Waco attorney and former law partner of Feazell's, for help in at least three cases involving people arrested for drunken driving for the first time.

"I knew Mr. Hall was an ex-law partner of Mr. Feazell. He supported (Feazell) in his campaign," Clark said. "I knew he'd be able to check the file to see if there were any errors in the case for possible leniency from Mr. Feazell."

Hall served as McLennan County district attorney during the '60s. He and Feazell were partners in a law firm before Feazell was elected district attorney.

Feazell is charged with accepting bribes from attorneys in exchange for dismissals of their clients' cases or for reduced sentences.

The trial entered its second week with testimony from Clark and five of his clients whose drunken driving cases were dismissed.

In a 1983 case, Clark said he charged a young man who had been arrested for drunken driving a $3,000 cash fee. On Hall's instructions, Clark said he put $1,500 of the money in his safety deposit box until Hall "could determine whether he would be successful or not."

"Several weeks later Mr. Hall indicated to me that the charges were dismissed or reduced. The driving while intoxicated was no longer pending," Clark said, adding he then paid Hall the $1,500 intervention fee.

Clark testified he did the same in at least two other cases, adjusting the fee in one case to $2,500.

A San Antonio dental assistant told jurors she paid Clark $3,000 in installments to represent her in a 1984 drunken driving arrest.

Linda Smith said when she asked Clark what she could expect he said "he thought he could get it taken care of."

Social stigma leads AIDS victims to suffer in silence

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The doctor delivers the news: the patient has tested postive for the AIDS virus. And for many of those people, trapped in an emotionally draining Catch-22, the rest is silence.

"The vast majority of patients have to face the situation in absolute solitude," Michael Pollak of the Universite Paris said in an address Monday to the International Conference on AIDS. "Anticipating adverse affects or even open discrimination in their social and work life, almost all sero-positive patients keep silent about their diagnosis."

The researcher, whose study fielded responses from 103 patients with positive diagnoses in the spring of 1986, described the phenomenon as a "double-bind situation," a classic Catch-22.

"Refusing help and support and continuing a normal life symbolizes hope. This quest of hope reinforces silence. This attitude of silence, then, hinders mobilizing support when it becomes absolutely necessary," Pollak said.

"Breaking this silence and counteracting this patient's tendency to self-isolation is very difficult, as this phenomenon is deeply rooted in general societal attitudes toward sickness," he added. "HIV patients continue to be perceived almost exclusively as a risk to others. Very seldom are they approached with comprehnsion and compassion."

In the French study, most of the patients stopped sexual activity for at least three months to nine months. One-third of them had not had sex since their diagnosis, and one-third had broken up with their lovers. Only half had told their partners about their condition, preferring separation to an open explanation, Pollak said.

"Clearly, the diagnosis is perceived as a social stigma that can be escaped only through silence and self-isolation," he said.

Prolonged hospitalization prompts some to confide in a friend or relative, but 30 percent remained silent even during those critical times, the study showed. The stress of silent suffering leads to anxiety, insomnia, depression and memory problems, but despite that, more than 80 percent refused offers of counseling.

In most cases, Pollak said, the patients were afraid of basing relationships on their illness and afraid that constant contact with other patients in support groups would continually remind them of their own mortality.

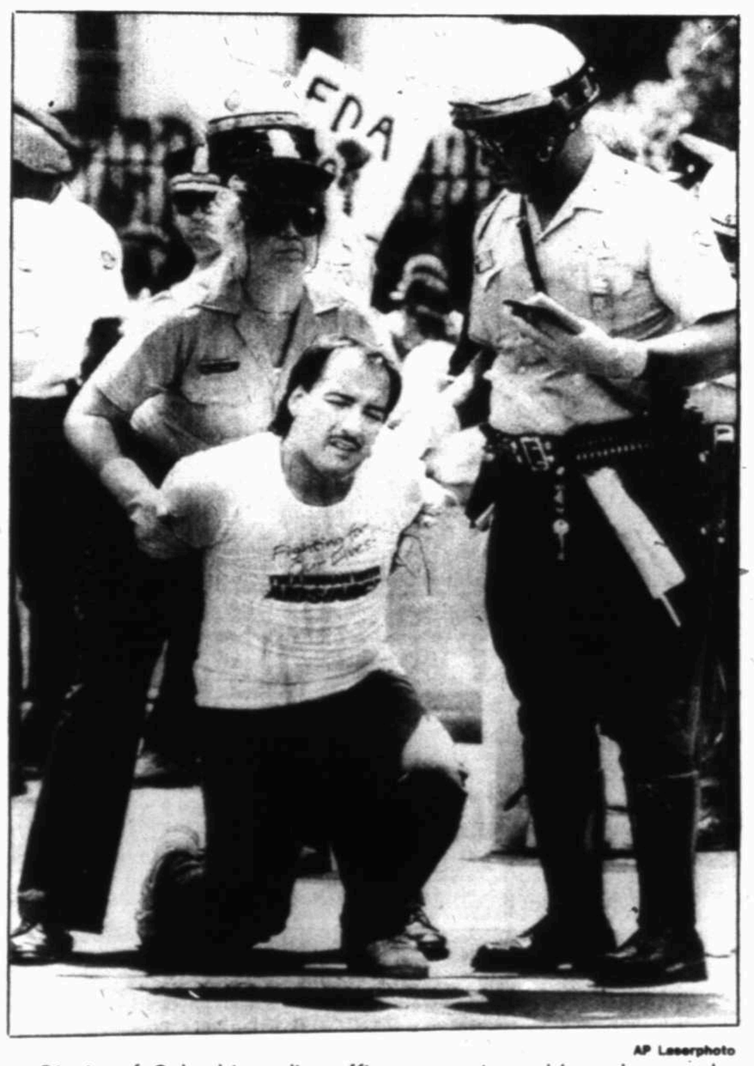

"That may be true in Paris," said George Simmons of San Francisco's Shanti Project, a support group for people with AIDS and their friends and families, "but in San Francisco, I think the majority of men and women with AIDS come and seek out organizations like Shanti because they know they will get support. If you have AIDS in the United States, or in San Francisco, anyway, you don't have to be alone. That's our message: that there are people who care."

Simmon did agree that people with AIDS experience some degree of isolation, particularly if they live outside major cities with extensive support networks.

"It's hard for people to admit to themselves they have AIDS. It's a tremendous stress on them to go tell their friends and family that there's a chance they won't be alive in two weeks," he said. "There's a tremendous stigma attached to AIDS."

Change in society's attitude toward people with AIDS must start with the government, Simmons said, a message echoed by protesters on the street outside the conference hotel. More than 100 people staged a noisy but peaceful march, many wearing T-shirts that declared SILENCE DEATH above a pink triangle, the symbol that marked homosexuals in Nazi Germany.

"It's the administration that's silent," said Frank O'Dowd, media director of Act...Up, a New York group that helped organize Monday's demonstration. "We have a president who has hardly addressed AIDS in his entire time in office."

District of Columbia police officers, wearing rubber gloves, take into custody a gay rights activist during Monday's AIDS meeting.

Demonstrators to increase pressure on White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gay rights activists arrested during a demonstration in front of the White House are vowing to increase pressure on the Reagan administration to alter and increase its battle against AIDS.

Protesters want more from Congress, oppose mandatory testing, criticize the administration for acting too slowly and don't like the fact that police who broke up the demonstration Monday wore long rubber gloves.

"I am here today and you are here today because what Congress has done thus far is not enough," said Dan Bradley, who was among 64 people arrested by police. "What the president has done is not enough."

Bradley, a former head of the Legal Services Corp. during the Carter administration and a board member of the Human Rights Campaign Fund, said he was diagnosed as having AIDS about a year ago.

"Today we are revitalizing and renewing our efforts," Bradley, 47, told an estimated 325 people during a rally at Lafayette Park.

Bradley said he has been trying unsuccessfully to meet with the president.

"It is my life and I am not going to live much longer. But for the days and hours I live, he is going to hear from me," Bradley said as he gestured toward the executive mansion.

"We will fill the jails if we need to," he said.

Demonstrators chanted, "Hear our cries, save our lives." They called for a national AIDS policy to prohibit discrimination against sufferers of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, intensified drug testing, research and treatment efforts and a national education program.

District of Columbia police said those arrested were charged with blocking the street, and all were later released after paying a $50 fine for the misdemeanor offense.

Police wearing bright yellow gloves began making arrests after protesters on the White House sidewalk went over a low concrete barrier into Pennsylvania Avenue and sat down or stood blocking traffic.

Last week, police said they would routinely make gloves available to all officers to guard against exposure to the AIDS virus.

"As you know, when searching persons you may run across body fluids, syringes, so we try to give officers some reasonable protection," said Issac Fulwood, assistant police chief.

"I think people are upset that the police were wearing gloves because it promotes an irrational fear of how the disease is transmitted," said Dennis Lonergan, a spokesman for the Human Rights Campaign Fund, a political action and education committee for the gay community.

Service limits availability of AIDS pamphlet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal health officials are limiting members of Congress to 1,000 copies of a pamphlet on AIDS education, even though one congressman managed to get more than a quarter of a million copies for his constituents.

Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., obtained 268,000 copies of the 36-page booklet from the U.S. Public Health Service last month and sent them to every household in his district, which includes Cape Cod, Boston suburbs and parts of southeastern Massachusetts.

Studds urged his colleagues to do the same, but other lawmakers now are being told they cannot have more than 1,000 copies per office.

"If (every) congressmen wrote and requested (thousands of copies of the report each), it would be really impossible to supply them," Ellen Casselberry, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Public Health Service, said Monday. "It's just impossible to do that."

Ms. Casselberry said the policy limiting copies to 1,000 was established before Studds' request. She and other agency officials said they did not know why the Massachusetts congressman was allowed to receive so many.

The booklet describes the AIDS virus, symptoms of the disease, how it is and is not transmitted and how people can protect themselves against it.

"It's really quite remarkable, having given us 268,000 copies, to tell every other member of Congress they can have no more than 1,000," Studds said in an interview.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., said in a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen that the limit was "outrageous." She asked for 220,000 copies of the report for her district.

Studds, who used the free mailing privileges provided members of Congress to send the reports, said dozens of other members indicated they too were interested in sending the pamphlets to constituents.

Ten House members have requested copies for mass mailings since Studds sent out the reports, said a Public Health Service official who asked not to be identified.

"The real thrust of this was not to purloin the nation's supply of these pamphlets and put them in southeastern Massachusetts. The thrust was to compel the administration to do its job," said Studds.

The eight-term congressman said he hoped with enough pressure from Congress, the Reagan administration would agree to distribute the pamphlets. Studds said not mailing the booklets is "somewhere between unconscionable and criminally negligent."

Ms. Casselberry said the administration is considering a proposal to mail an AIDS pamphlet to all Americans, but she said a smaller booklet would have to be prepared because mailing the surgeon general's 36-page report would be too expensive.

Vice President George Bush referred to mass mailings of AIDS information in a speech Monday at an international AIDS conference.

"I recognize some of the countries represented here have already successfully completed nationwide mailings. I hope we can learn from your experience and find creative ways to distribute some of the very good material that has been developed," Bush said.

The Public Health Service has distributed 785,000 copies of the report since it was printed Oct. 22, 1986, Ms. Casselberry said. In addition, the government has sent 300 sets of negatives of the report to organizations around the country for their own reproductions.

Agency officials said there were about 40,000 remaining, but that a new order of 1 million was coming in soon. Private printers under government contract produce the booklets. One official said 500,000 pamphlets cost about $69,000.

Treatment includes bone marrow transplants

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — Government researchers say they have begun a new AIDS treatment trial involving antiviral drugs and bone marrow transplants to restore immune systems damaged by the disease.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said Monday that his research group has performed marrow transplants between 10 sets of identical twins since January. One member of each pair of twins has AIDS, which destroys the body's immune system, and the other is a healthy marrow donor.

Marrow is the source of numerous blood cells, including the immune cells attacked by the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome. The aim of the marrow transplant therapy is to suppress the virus with drugs while rebuilding the patient's immune system with new cells.

"At this point, you can't say anything about the results — it's just too early," Fauci said in an interview.

In 1985, the researchers tried similar therapy with three sets of identical twins and two of the three AIDS patients died. The surviving patient since has had a second marrow transplant and is stable with his disease 22 months after treatment, Fauci said.

In the previous test, scientists used a highly toxic drug called suramin. They hope for better results in the new trial by using AZT, an antiviral with fewer side effects, Fauci said.

By suppressing the virus with AZT, doctors hope to prevent its spread to the new blood cells that result from the marrow transplant. Fauci said researchers hope this will give the immune system time to rebuild itself.

Earlier attempts to use marrow transplants without antiviral drugs failed because unsuppressed AIDS virus quickly spread to the new blood cells, according to Fauci.

Along with the marrow cells injected into the bones of the recipient, doctors also infuse the patient with purified lymphocytes, infection-fighting white blood cells.

Even if the treatment proves successful, doctors say, it may not be widely used. Marrow transplants require tissue-matched donors and recipients in order to minimize rejection, and the procedure costs more than $50,000.

Social stigma leads AIDS victims to suffer in silence

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The doctor delivers the news: the patient has tested postive for the AIDS virus. And for many of those people, trapped in an emotionally draining Catch-22, the rest is silence.

"The vast majority of patients have to face the situation in absolute solitude," Michael Pollak of the Universite Paris said in an address Monday to the International Conference on AIDS. "Anticipating adverse affects or even open discrimination in their social and work life, almost all sero-positive patients keep silent about their diagnosis."

The researcher, whose study fielded responses from 103 patients with positive diagnoses in the spring of 1986, described the phenomenon as a "double-bind situation," a classic Catch-22.

"Refusing help and support and continuing a normal life symbolizes hope. This quest of hope reinforces silence. This attitude of silence, then, hinders mobilizing support when it becomes absolutely necessary," Pollak said.

"Breaking this silence and counteracting this patient's tendency to self-isolation is very difficult, as this phenomenon is deeply rooted in general societal attitudes toward sickness," he added. "HIV patients continue to be perceived almost exclusively as a risk to others. Very seldom are they approached with comprehnsion and compassion."

In the French study, most of the patients stopped sexual activity for at least three months to nine months. One-third of them had not had sex since their diagnosis, and one-third had broken up with their lovers. Only half had told their partners about their condition, preferring separation to an open explanation, Pollak said.

"Clearly, the diagnosis is perceived as a social stigma that can be escaped only through silence and self-isolation," he said.

Prolonged hospitalization prompts some to confide in a friend or relative, but 30 percent remained silent even during those critical times, the study showed. The stress of silent suffering leads to anxiety, insomnia, depression and memory problems, but despite that, more than 80 percent refused offers of counseling.

In most cases, Pollak said, the patients were afraid of basing relationships on their illness and afraid that constant contact with other patients in support groups would continually remind them of their own mortality.

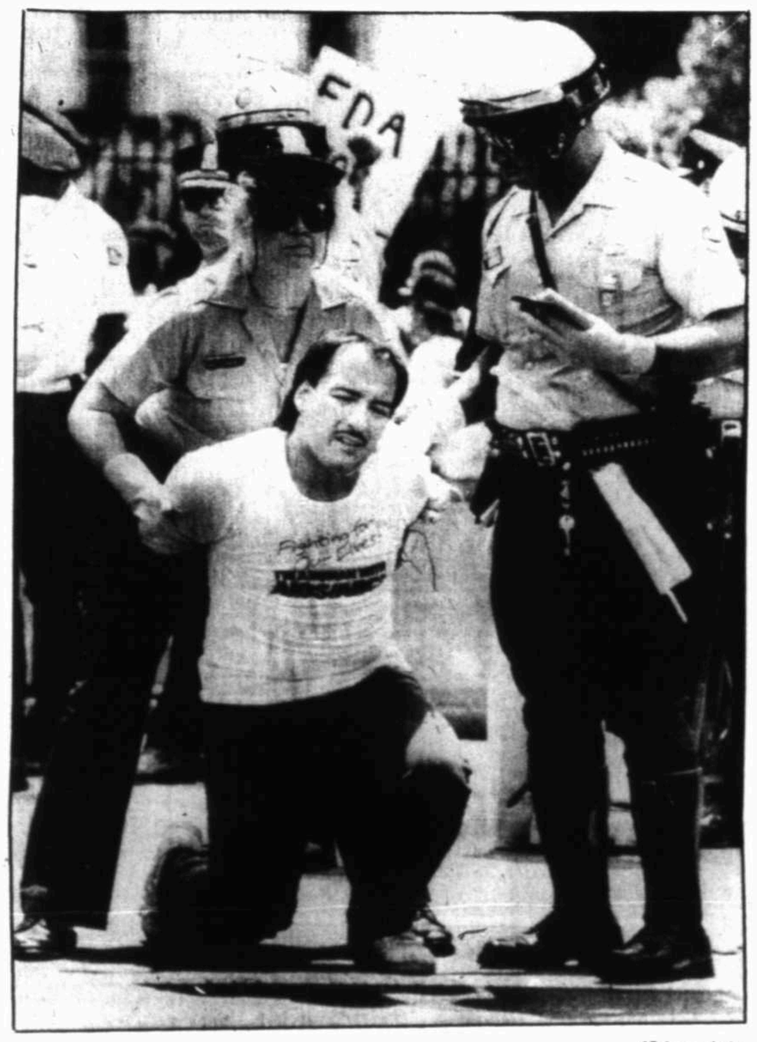

"That may be true in Paris," said George Simmons of San Francisco's Shanti Project, a support group for people with AIDS and their friends and families, "but in San Francisco, I think the majority of men and women with AIDS come and seek out organizations like Shanti because they know they will get support. If you have AIDS in the United States, or in San Francisco, anyway, you don't have to be alone. That's our message: that there are people who care."

Simmon did agree that people with AIDS experience some degree of isolation, particularly if they live outside major cities with extensive support networks.

"It's hard for people to admit to themselves they have AIDS. It's a tremendous stress on them to go tell their friends and family that there's a chance they won't be alive in two weeks," he said. "There's a tremendous stigma attached to AIDS."

Change in society's attitude toward people with AIDS must start with the government, Simmons said, a message echoed by protesters on the street outside the conference hotel. More than 100 people staged a noisy but peaceful march, many wearing T-shirts that declared SILENCE DEATH above a pink triangle, the symbol that marked homosexuals in Nazi Germany.

"It's the administration that's silent," said Frank O'Dowd, media director of Act...Up, a New York group that helped organize Monday's demonstration. "We have a president who has hardly addressed AIDS in his entire time in office."

District of Columbia police officers, wearing rubber gloves, take into custody a gay rights activist during Monday's AIDS meeting.

Demonstrators to increase pressure on White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gay rights activists arrested during a demonstration in front of the White House are vowing to increase pressure on the Reagan administration to alter and increase its battle against AIDS.

Protesters want more from Congress, oppose mandatory testing, criticize the administration for acting too slowly and don't like the fact that police who broke up the demonstration Monday wore long rubber gloves.

"I am here today and you are here today because what Congress has done thus far is not enough," said Dan Bradley, who was among 64 people arrested by police. "What the president has done is not enough."

Bradley, a former head of the Legal Services Corp. during the Carter administration and a board member of the Human Rights Campaign Fund, said he was diagnosed as having AIDS about a year ago.

"Today we are revitalizing and renewing our efforts," Bradley, 47, told an estimated 325 people during a rally at Lafayette Park.

Bradley said he has been trying unsuccessfully to meet with the president.

"It is my life and I am not going to live much longer. But for the days and hours I live, he is going to hear from me," Bradley said as he gestured toward the executive mansion.

"We will fill the jails if we need to," he said.

Demonstrators chanted, "Hear our cries, save our lives." They called for a national AIDS policy to prohibit discrimination against sufferers of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, intensified drug testing, research and treatment efforts and a national education program.

District of Columbia police said those arrested were charged with blocking the street, and all were later released after paying a $50 fine for the misdemeanor offense.

Police wearing bright yellow gloves began making arrests after protesters on the White House sidewalk went over a low concrete barrier into Pennsylvania Avenue and sat down or stood blocking traffic.

Last week, police said they would routinely make gloves available to all officers to guard against exposure to the AIDS virus.

"As you know, when searching persons you may run across body fluids, syringes, so we try to give officers some reasonable protection," said Issac Fulwood, assistant police chief.

"I think people are upset that the police were wearing gloves because it promotes an irrational fear of how the disease is transmitted," said Dennis Lonergan, a spokesman for the Human Rights Campaign Fund, a political action and education committee for the gay community.

Service limits availability of AIDS pamphlet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal health officials are limiting members of Congress to 1,000 copies of a pamphlet on AIDS education, even though one congressman managed to get more than a quarter of a million copies for his constituents.

Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., obtained 268,000 copies of the 36-page booklet from the U.S. Public Health Service last month and sent them to every household in his district, which includes Cape Cod, Boston suburbs and parts of southeastern Massachusetts.

Studds urged his colleagues to do the same, but other lawmakers now are being told they cannot have more than 1,000 copies per office.

"If (every) congressmen wrote and requested (thousands of copies of the report each), it would be really impossible to supply them," Ellen Casselberry, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Public Health Service, said Monday. "It's just impossible to do that."

Ms. Casselberry said the policy limiting copies to 1,000 was established before Studds' request. She and other agency officials said they did not know why the Massachusetts congressman was allowed to receive so many.

The booklet describes the AIDS virus, symptoms of the disease, how it is and is not transmitted and how people can protect themselves against it.

"It's really quite remarkable, having given us 268,000 copies, to tell every other member of Congress they can have no more than 1,000," Studds said in an interview.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., said in a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen that the limit was "outrageous." She asked for 220,000 copies of the report for her district.

Studds, who used the free mailing privileges provided members of Congress to send the reports, said dozens of other members indicated they too were interested in sending the pamphlets to constituents.

Ten House members have requested copies for mass mailings since Studds sent out the reports, said a Public Health Service official who asked not to be identified.

"The real thrust of this was not to purloin the nation's supply of these pamphlets and put them in southeastern Massachusetts. The thrust was to compel the administration to do its job," said Studds.

The eight-term congressman said he hoped with enough pressure from Congress, the Reagan administration would agree to distribute the pamphlets. Studds said not mailing the booklets is "somewhere between unconscionable and criminally negligent."

Ms. Casselberry said the administration is considering a proposal to mail an AIDS pamphlet to all Americans, but she said a smaller booklet would have to be prepared because mailing the surgeon general's 36-page report would be too expensive.

Vice President George Bush referred to mass mailings of AIDS information in a speech Monday at an international AIDS conference.

"I recognize some of the countries represented here have already successfully completed nationwide mailings. I hope we can learn from your experience and find creative ways to distribute some of the very good material that has been developed," Bush said.

The Public Health Service has distributed 785,000 copies of the report since it was printed Oct. 22, 1986, Ms. Casselberry said. In addition, the government has sent 300 sets of negatives of the report to organizations around the country for their own reproductions.

Agency officials said there were about 40,000 remaining, but that a new order of 1 million was coming in soon. Private printers under government contract produce the booklets. One official said 500,000 pamphlets cost about $69,000.

Treatment includes bone marrow transplants

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — Government researchers say they have begun a new AIDS treatment trial involving antiviral drugs and bone marrow transplants to restore immune systems damaged by the disease.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said Monday that his research group has performed marrow transplants between 10 sets of identical twins since January. One member of each pair of twins has AIDS, which destroys the body's immune system, and the other is a healthy marrow donor.

Marrow is the source of numerous blood cells, including the immune cells attacked by the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome. The aim of the marrow transplant therapy is to suppress the virus with drugs while rebuilding the patient's immune system with new cells.

"At this point, you can't say anything about the results — it's just too early," Fauci said in an interview.

In 1985, the researchers tried similar therapy with three sets of identical twins and two of the three AIDS patients died. The surviving patient since has had a second marrow transplant and is stable with his disease 22 months after treatment, Fauci said.

In the previous test, scientists used a highly toxic drug called suramin. They hope for better results in the new trial by using AZT, an antiviral with fewer side effects, Fauci said.

By suppressing the virus with AZT, doctors hope to prevent its spread to the new blood cells that result from the marrow transplant. Fauci said researchers hope this will give the immune system time to rebuild itself.

Earlier attempts to use marrow transplants without antiviral drugs failed because unsuppressed AIDS virus quickly spread to the new blood cells, according to Fauci.

Along with the marrow cells injected into the bones of the recipient, doctors also infuse the patient with purified lymphocytes, infection-fighting white blood cells.

Even if the treatment proves successful, doctors say, it may not be widely used. Marrow transplants require tissue-matched donors and recipients in order to minimize rejection, and the procedure costs more than $50,000.
