Soviets warn of war in Chad

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — U.S. advisers are teaching government soldiers how to destroy attacking Libyan jets with heat-seeking Redeye missiles, but the Soviet Union is warning Washington not to become embroiled in the Chad war.

The three advisers from Fort Bliss, Texas, and 30 shoulder-fired missiles arrived Wednesday to help President Hissene Habre's men in the fight with Libyan-backed rebels.

At the same time, two U.S. radar spy planes flew to Egypt ahead of schedule to monitor the Libyan air force's role in the desert war, Pentagon sources said. The planes will join annual U.S.-Egyptian maneuvers later this week.

Habre claims the Libyans have been bombing the region around the northern oasis town of Faya-Largeau since his forces retook it from former President Goukouni Oueddei's insurgents last week. Libya denies the charge.

The Chadian government does not have an air force and pleaded for anti-aircraft weapons to shoot down the attack planes. U.S. officials in Washington said the advisers would return home in a few days after showing Habre's men how to shoot the shoulder-fired Redeyes, which track their targets with heat sensors.

The Soviet Union plunged into the propaganda exchange after the U.S. announcement, demanding the United States stop supporting Habre and claiming U.S. actions in Chad are "threatening peace and international security."

France also has sent missiles to help Habre, but refused his pleas for warplanes and troops to battle the insurgents. Chad, a destitute, landlocked former French colony, has been wracked by civil war for 18 years.

Officials and witnesses claim hundreds have been killed and wounded by the Faya-Largeau bombings, but reporters have been unable to verify the casualty accounts because Habre's government has banned them from the front.

Pentagon sources said the Navy carrier Eisenhower remained deployed in the Mediterranean near the Gulf of Sidra despite Libyan warnings that its air force would sink the warship if it entered the 300-mile-wide body of water surrounded by Libya on three sides. Libya claims it owns the gulf.

A State Department official in Washington, who asked not to be identified by name, said that if Libyan planes attack the Eisenhower, "it is fair to assume that U.S. military forces are always empowered to act in self-defense."

The American military moves reflect the Reagan administration's assertion that radical Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy wants to topple Habre, re-install Goukouni and expand Libya's influence in Africa. The United States has commited $10 million in military aid to Habre.

Khadafy has denied his forces are helping Goukouni. He claims the United States is intervening in the conflict to threaten Libya's security.

Parents say son is safe

DENVER (AP) — The parents of a relief worker who was held for several weeks by rebels in Chad say their son is "in good health and spirits and eager to catch up on the work" he missed during his captivity.

David and Elizabeth Frohardt of Colorado Springs said they received a call Wednesday from their 31-year-old son, Mark, who said he was safe in Chad's capital of N'Djamena.

On June 24, just hours after arriving in the war-torn central African country, Frohardt was taken captive by rebel forces and accused of being a spy for the Central Intelligence Agency. However, the rebels allowed him to continue with his medical relief work.

"We're greatly relieved that this ordeal has come to a happy ending," an enthusiastic Frohardt said Wednesday. "We'd been waiting for these calls for five weeks."

The State Department and the younger Frohardt's Paris-based employer, Doctors Without Borders, had relayed news of his release Tuesday, but his parents did not speak to him until Wednesday.

Frohardt had been on a mission in the Saharan oasis of Faya-Largeau when the town was captured by rebel forces supported by Libya and led by ex-president Goukouni Oueddei. Frohardt's family, the Central Intelligence Agency and the French medical agency all denied he was a spy.

Hondo: Hell on wheels

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
Associated Press Writer

HONDO, Texas — Police Chief Jerry Smith likes to watch the cars whizzing through Hondo on U.S. Highway 90 — whizzing, that is, until drivers spot a brightly colored sign by the roadside.

"THIS IS GOD'S COUNTRY," the sign proclaims in bold block letters. "PLEASE DON'T DRIVE THROUGH IT LIKE HELL."

"You can just sit there and watch people slow up or slam on their brakes," Smith said. "Especially if they haven't been through the area before. I guess you could say it's a tourist attraction."

The Lions Club printed up 100,000 postcards showing the eye-catching sign in 1968 and the local Chamber of Commerce already has gone through several more printings.

"People write to ask for them and local people come in to get a handful of them when they're going on vacation," said Lillian Porter, manager of the chamber. "We've even had some of the cards put up in places in Europe."

The first weather-beaten sign was erected at the westbound entrance to Hondo in the 1930s as a Lions Club project, but members of a local church weren't too thrilled about the use of the word "hell," Ms. Porter said.

"The sign was either covered up or taken down for several years," she said. "Then they put up a new sign and added the word 'please,' which seemed to make it all right.

"I don't see how anyone could be offended now, or at least they don't complain," she said. "We get enough requests for postcards."

Quarterly deposits increase at five Midland banks

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Deposits at a majority of Midland's nine banks showed a decidedly upward trend for the last three quarters in a row, while they stabilized or fell at four of the banks.

Deposit totals rose at five banks in the second quarter ended June 30 and fell at three others compared to results at the end of the first quarter 1983.

The ninth bank, First National, has yet to release its deposit totals to the public. It is expected to do so next week.

Midland will have a 10th commercial bank later this year. During the quarter, a group of Midland businessmen headed by Marshall Surratt and Kenneth Peeler obtained a charter from the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency to open Community National Bank. The new bank will be located on the block bounded by Florida, Terrell, California and Mineola streets in south Midland.

Deposit and loan totals at First National Bank have not yet been released to the media. The bank is expected to report a significant loss in income when it makes public its quarterly statement of condition early next week.

According to federal law, banks are to make available to the public a statement of their financial condition within a certain time limit. Because the quarter ended June 30, the final reporting day is August 10, according to the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

"Our plan is to announce results of our second quarter the week of August 8," bank spokesman Guy McCrary said. "It would be premature, and out of context, to discuss specific numbers until we can give a complete report."

In a letter mailed to certain customers July 25, senior chairman of the board Jno. P. Butler said the bank would report a sizable loss. The letter asked customers to remain loyal to the bank while it handles the problem.

At First City National Bank, deposits grew to $403,986,000 compared to $383.3 million reported at the same time last year, and compared to $396.4 million reported in the first quarter 1983.

Net loans were $279,153,000 in the quarter, down from $286,562,000 in the same quarter a year earlier and also less than $282,432,000 reported in the previous quarter 1983.

Texas American Bank Midland reported deposits of $139,594,000 for the second quarter, down from $147.2 million in the similar period a year ago and also down from $145,302,000 in the previous quarter.

Net loans totaled $90,431,000 compared to $93 million in the same quarter in 1982 and $88,780,336 in the first quarter 1983.

Deposits at Western State Bank rose to $57,047,000 in the quarter, compared to $45.16 million reported a year earlier. They were up by $10 million from the $47 million reported in the first quarter 1983.

Veliotes may become ambassador to Egypt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Assistant Secretary of State Nicholas A. Veliotes, who has been instrumental in the Reagan administration's Mideast peace efforts, will be named U.S. ambassador to Egypt, an administration source says.

Veliotes, who has headed the State Department's bureau of Near Eastern and South Asian affairs since the administration took office 2½ years ago, will be replaced by Ambassador Richard Murphy, a career diplomat who has been serving as the U.S. envoy to Saudi Arabia, the well-placed source said.

The change, to be announced soon, is the second shake-up in the administration's Middle East team in two weeks.

Special U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib and his deputy, Ambassador Morris Draper, were replaced after Syrian President Hafez al-Assad stymied their efforts to achieve the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon by refusing to see them.

"This has been a grueling, time-consuming job and there are certainly no policy implications whatsoever," the source said of Veliotes' departure.

There has been speculation Veliotes soon would leave his post in the final move in a clean sweep of the key architects and executors of U.S. Middle East policy.

Death of patient investigated

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital officials are investigating the circumstances surrounding the death of a patient who was hospitalized Monday on a court order issued by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry.

"We routinely investigate the death of any patient who dies in the hospital," MMH Public Relations Director Arlene Strickland said this morning.

The patient, 37-year-old George John Byrne Jr., of Rt. 7, Midland, died shortly before 6:30 p.m. Tuesday. He had been ordered removed from the county jail and taken to the hospital for observation after jail officials said he began acting strangely Monday afternoon.

According to Ms. Strickland, Byrne was "alert but unresponsive" and apparently was being fed a semi-liquid diet with a spoon when he began suffering "respiratory distress."

An autopsy performed by Dr. Martha Madsen disclosed Byrne died of "aspiration by vomitus," according to Judge Sprayberry, who has tentatively ruled that he choked accidentally.

"Dr. Madsen said the vomitus was a combination of thin fluids and appeared to contain bile and a semi-liquid type food," Sprayberry said this morning. "We're not sure at this point if death occurred during or after the feeding, or if he was being attended at the time."

Ms. Strickland said intravenous feeding was not employed because Byrne's doctor had not issued orders for it. "A nurse cannot institute IVs without a doctor's order.

"He (Byrne) was alert but would respond only by eye movement. He was either unwilling or unable to feed himself, but was capable of being fed by spoon. To the best of our knowledge he began having respiratory distress while being fed by an orderly. But it could be that the orderly had left the room."

Byrne was arrested by the Department of Public Safety after one of their troopers saw him lying along the curb on the Rankin Highway a half-mile south of Interstate-20 about 6 p.m. last Thursday.

DPS Capt. Tony White said Byrne appeared to have suffered some sort of seizure but refused medical treatment at the scene.

He was charged with misdemeanor assault after he allegedly attacked a trooper who had placed him in his patrol car and was going to take him home.

Byrne reportedly suffered from epilepsy and was "kind of like a vegetable" when he was taken from the county jail to the hospital about 6 p.m. Monday, according to a sheriff's deputy.

Dr. Madsen could not be reached for comment and Sprayberry said he has not received a request for a formal inquiry into the death.

Graveside services for Byrne were to be at 1:30 p.m today at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Captivity prepared laid-off employee to confront hijacker

HOUSTON (AP) — A laid-off Pan Am employee who foiled the skyjacking of the airline's Miami-to-Houston jetliner says the hours he spent as a hostage of the Sandanistas in Nicaragua prepared him for the experience.

Spicer Lung, 45, and his son, Spicer Lung Jr., 15, subdued an ex-convict from Cuba who tried to commandeer the Boeing 727 Tuesday night and force it to fly to Havana.

Lung, who said he was held hostage for 48 hours and beaten by the Sandanistas five years ago, said his captors taught him to be calm. He said he was arrested while working as airport manager for Pan Am in Managua because his captors thought he was a spy.

"Once you have lived in a situation where you have constant terrorist acts going on around you, you learn to make decisions fast," Lung said.

Lung was laid off on July 15 as the result of Pan Am budget cutbacks. He said he had been in Miami looking for work and was returning to his home in Houston when the attempted hijacking occured.

On Wednesday, Pan Am officials said Lung, who was laid off three weeks ago after 18 years of service, will be rehired for his heroics.

"Mr. Lung came through for Pan Am so Pan Am will come through for him," said Mike Clark, a Miami spokesman for the airline. "We will find him another position."

The Cuban, identified as Alfredo Ayala, 29, was charged Wednesday with attempted air piracy. U.S. Magistrate H. Lingo Platter set bond at $200,000 and appointed a defense attorney.

Speaking through an interpreter, Ayala told Platter that he had last worked in October, 1981 for a hotel in Miami. Since then, he said, he has been receiving food stamps. Ayala also said he served two years in a Cuban prison on a charge of violating a government regulation, but he said he was not a political prisoner.

An arraignment for Ayala was set for Friday before Platter.

Lung and his son were sitting in the front row of the first-class section of Pan Am's Flight 925 when a Spanish-speaking man holding a newspaper over his hand said he was taking the jetliner to Cuba.

"It looked like he had something under the paper," said Lung, and the former Pan Am catering manager said he assumed it was a weapon.

No weapon was found on Ayala or in the aircraft, according to FBI agents.

Lung said he told the man in Spanish that if he took over the plane, "it would be over my dead body."

Two of the plane's crew, steward Fernando Valencia and purser Jean Richie, tried to prevent the man from entering the cockpit, said Lung, but the man fought them off.

Lung leaped up and grabbed Ayala, pushing the man against a wall.

"After I had him under some control, I called my son to assist me," Lung said. "When I was tying his hands, another passenger came up to assist."

Alfredo Ayala, 29, is led out of the U.S. Courthouse in Houston after appearing before a federal magistrate. He is charged with attempted air piracy in connection wih an attempted hijacking Tuesday night aboard a Miami-to-Houston Pan Am flight. The hijacking was foiled by passengers who grabbed Ayala and tied him to a seat. A magistrate set bond for Ayala at $200,000 and scheduled an arraignment for Ayala on Friday.

The passenger, Ralph Symons, a Miami attorney, said "By the time I got out of the seat . . . Spicer had his arm behind his back, the kid had him by the throat and pushed him up against the wall and I grabbed him."

The suspect, said Symons, "lost all his desire by then. He wanted to go to the bathroom, but we said, 'No way, buddy.'"

Lung said he tied the man up with a seat belt and a necktie and then with some nylon fastener used to hold bundles of wire together. The man was placed in a first class seat and the flight continued on to Houston, landing safely. Ayala was taken into custody by FBI agents at the airport.

Witness says judge pulled gun on him

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — A state district judge was intoxicated on the night he allegedly pulled a pistol on a patron at a Houston restaurant, two Houston police officers have testified in the judge's reckless conduct trial.

Testifying in the trial of State District Judge Felix Salazar, Houston police officer W.J. Lockman said Wednesday he did not make note of Salazar's alleged intoxication on the police record.

Mansoor Ghiassi, the victim of the alleged incident, also testified Wednesday that Salazar held a pistol about a foot away from Ghiassi's face and tripped the safety lever.

"I was afraid for my life," Ghiassi said.

Ghiassi said the judge later told him he was going to have his son beat him up.

Salazar pleaded innocent on the opening day of the trial. The prosecution rested its case Wednesday, and the defense is expected to present its case today.

Ghiassi said he was at a Houston restaurant June 3 with a friend when Salazar, whom he said he had never met or talked to, started yelling obscenities at the two men.

The judge later left the restaurant and motioned Ghiassi to go outside, and shortly after Ghiassi complied, Salazar pulled out a pistol, Ghiassi said.

Police later confiscated from Salazar the pistol, another gun and two lock-bladed knives.

Salazar has said he did not take the pistol out of his jacket pocket. He also has said Ghiassi and his friend Rick Edwards, who also testified Wednesday, were talking about how the U.S. government should be overthrown.

Ghiassi, an Iranian native who has lived in Houston about six months, said he had never talked about overthrowing the government. He said discussing politics is against his religion, Bahai.

Both Ghiassi and Edwards testified they were discussing house repairs when Salazar began to shout at them.

Salazar called the men communists, Ghiassi said, and the judge used an expletive adjective.

"I lost everything (in Iran) and came to this country because of the persecution ... and he called me a communist," Ghiassi said. "This is not fair."

Edwards, a bank systems analyst in Houston, also testified that Salazar yelled obscenities at him "for no reason."

While the three were in the restaurant, Salazar "was calling me a goddamn communist and a scum. It sounded very much like basic training when the drilling sergeant is mad," Edwards said.

Edwards testified he never spoke or responded to the judge.

Salazar, 53, a former family court judge and assistant county attorney, won election to the 157th state district civil court in November.

Border policy to continue despite complaints from White

By T. LEE HUGHES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government will continue for the time being a program restricting the border points at which Mexicans can get cards allowing them to temporarily enter Texas, an immigration official says.

However, Duke Austin, a spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, described the program Wednesday as an "experimental" one and said it would be re-evaluated within 60 days.

Texas Gov. Mark White on Tuesday had criticized the program as "unfair," telling reporters it tended to divert Mexicans away from small Texas communities along the border.

White expressed his concerns Wednesday during separate meetings with State Department and immigration officials.

Austin said afterwards that White "did a fine job of articulating" Texas' concern, but that "we have not said we're going to discontinue our experimental program at this time.

"We will go ahead with it," said Austin. However, he said the program, launched on a test basis in mid-July, would be re-evaluated 60 days after that.

"We said we'd do this for 60 days, then we'll see," Austin said.

Under the program, Mexicans who want border crossing cards that allow them to enter southeast Texas for up to 72 hours must get the cards from State Department consular offices across the border from Brownsville and Laredo, Austin said.

Previously, they could get such cards at Immigration and Naturalization Service checkpoints all along the border, Austin said.

On Tuesday, both White and Austin had said a similar policy was in effect for Mexicans who wanted to enter southwest Texas, with Mexicans required to pick up their entry cards at the consular office across the border from El Paso.

Ex-controller freed

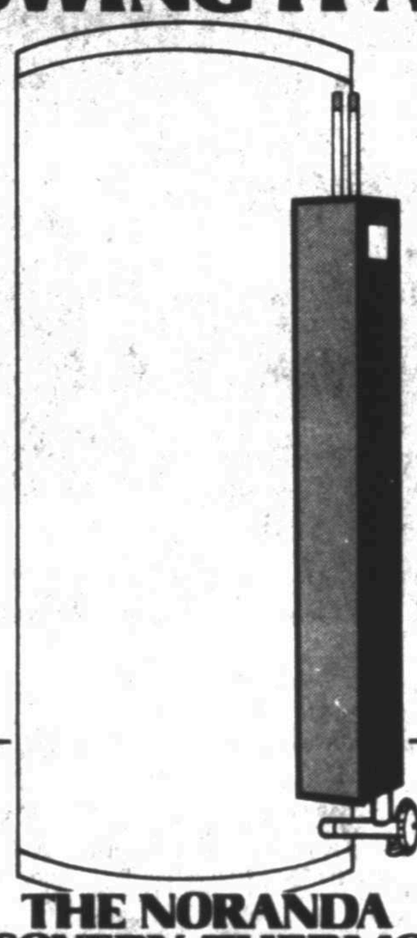

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Exactly two years after Ronald May and about 13,000 other air traffic controllers walked off their jobs, May was released from a federal prison where he served three months for his part in the nationwide strike.

President Reagan fired about 11,400 controllers after they refused orders to return to work in August 1981.

The government obtained felony indictments against 77 controllers after thousands participated in the nationwide walkout, according to the U.S. Air Traffic Controllers Organization, the successor to PATCO.

May, a former president of Local 402 of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Association and an air controller for 11 years, was the second ex-controller to finish serving a prison term for striking.

President Reagan laughs with Maxine Hayes, left, International President of the International Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and Polly Madenwald, president of the U.S. federation. Reagan had spoken to the 1,200 members of Wednesday in Washington.

Reagan in hot water with women

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is backing legislation to end discrimination against women in private pension funds as his first step in dealing with women's issues called to his attention by Republican congresswomen.

But even as the GOP congresswomen were talking with White House aides Wednesday about proposals to stop sex discrimination, Reagan himself was getting into more trouble with one women's group.

The president, trying to apologize for a scheduling foul-up that angered the International Association of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, made an off-the-cuff remark that was called degrading and offensive to women.

Reagan's latest misstep with women came as he gave a hastily arranged speech Wednesday to make amends to 1,200 women delegates to the international business and professional women's clubs convention in Washington. The delegates had been turned away Tuesday from the White House after a tour that had been scheduled more than a year before was canceled without notice.

He joked about the mix-up in his talk to the women business leaders from 56 countries, blaming it on bureaucracy.

Then, discussing "the recognition of women's place," he said: "I want you to know that I've always recognized it because I happen to be one who believes that if it wasn't for women, us men would still be walking around in skin suits and carrying clubs."

At a news conference immediately after Reagan departed, the newly installed president of U.S. National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs condemned the remarks.

"I thought it was very degrading; I thought it was inappropriate and I was offended," said Polly Madenwald, the Republican chief of the 150,000-member group.

"These things happen," Helen Povilaitis of Princeton, N.J., said. "That man can't know everything. I just love the president. I hope he will run again, he will have my vote." As for his remark, she said, "No offense to me."

The White House staff has been working hard this summer to deal with Reagan's problems with women,sometimes called the gender gap. Leading that effort has been a top-level working group, chaired by deputy chief of staff Michael Deaver.

Six GOP congresswomen who have been meeting with that group were told Wednesday by Deaver of their first major victory, administration agreement to back reforms in pension laws to benefit both working and non-working women.

Among the Reagan-backed changes proposed for the law covering private pensions are:

—Prohibiting pension credit or qualification penalities against employees who take maternity or paternity leave.

—Allowing a spouse to veto a worker's choice in pension benefits if the choice could deprive the spouse of money.

—Lowering the age that workers must be covered by pension plans to 21 from 25.

The congresswomen on Wednesday also discussed legislative proposals for broadening the tax credit system for child care and Individual Retirement Accounts for homemakers.

Tourists wonder if New Mexico safe

Eighteen cases of plague reported

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — With more cases of human plague reported here this year than in any state since 1925, would-be visitors are wondering: Is it safe to visit New Mexico?

The disease that wiped out a quarter of Europe's population in the Middle Ages has been contracted by at least 18 people in New Mexico since January, and one has died.

In addition, the 13-year-old daughter of a college president died Tuesday of plague in South Carolina, and officials believe she contracted the disease in New Mexico.

Many people considering visiting New Mexico or worried about the disease once known as the "Black Death" have been calling or writing state officials.

"WE DON'T keep a record of the calls, but it's fair to say we're getting more than we've ever gotten," said Dr. Jonathan Mann, an epidemiologist with the state Health and Environment Department.

"They're all very basically the same question," he said, "a variant of 'Is it safe to come to New Mexico?' and 'Is the plague a big danger?' "

New Mexico's roadside welcome centers are getting the same questions.

A visitor from France told a welcome center employee his friends had warned him that if he caught the plague he couldn't return to his homeland.

But Mann said the answer to all the questions is still the same:

"YES, IT'S safe and the risk is incredibly small."

Ever since the first case of human plague in the state was reported in 1949, New Mexico has led the nation in the number of cases. Officials speculate that the state's climate is good for fleas, which can act as carriers.

Mann said instances of people getting plague have been reported only in Western states. Other states with cases this year are Arizona with eight and Utah and Oregon with one each, according to the national Centers for Disease Control. Three of the Arizona cases and the Oregon case resulted in death.

A spokesman for Greenville Hospital System in Greenville, S.C., said bubonic plague, the most common form of the disease, had caused the death of Donna Delattre. Miss Delattre, the daughter of Edwin Delattre, president of St. John's College in Annapolis, Md., and Santa Fe, might have contracted the disease near her former home in New Mexico, officials said.

She was moving with her family from Santa Fe to Annapolis and became ill last Friday in South Carolina.

THE NUMBER of New Mexico cases reported this year is the highest in one state in a single year since California had 38 cases reported in 1925, officials said.

A 56-year-old New Mexico woman who caught bubonic plague in 1980 said she didn't "feel that bad" when she was sick and didn't doubt she would survive.

But "my family was pretty upset, and friends, especially back East, they were really shook up," said the woman, who asked to remain anonymous.

AP Laserphoto

The flea is the most common carrier of the plague, which to date, 18 New Mexicans have contracted. This is the highest number of cases reported in a single year since 1952, according to the New Mexico Health and Environment Department.

"They have a misconception of what New Mexico is anyway," she said. "Half those people don't think we're part of the United States. So when they heard I had the plague, well, you can imagine what they thought."

A prolonged winter has been blamed for some of the cases this year.

MOST PEOPLE who come down with human plague get it from the bites of fleas that have bitten plague-infected animals, such as rats, officials say.

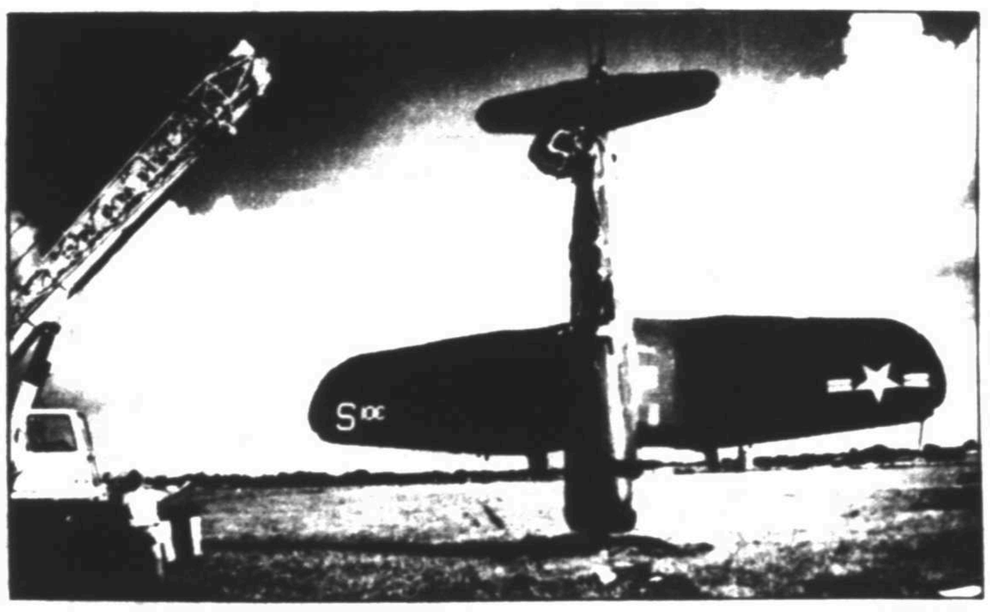

"The first half of the year, yes, we think the wet weather helped," Mann said. "But we're not sure how to explain the rest of the year. We don't know enough about the disease to explain why there have been so many cases."

Mann and tourist officials have predicted that tourism probably won't suffer. "We let (tourists) know what to do and what to avoid and then they're usually OK," Mann said.

Plague is only contagious if the bacteria that causes the disease go into the lungs. Then "if someone has it, you can get it if they cough on you," he said. "When it's spread from person to person, that's a public emergency."

About 25 percent of plague cases develop into the pneumonic form, but the last time the disease was known to have spread from one human to another was in 1924 in Los Angeles, Mann said. Most deaths from plague are caused by the pneumonic form.

BUBONIC PLAGUE, which includes all the cases in New Mexico this year, has symptoms that include high fever and a painful lump or swelling under the skin in the groin, underarm or neck, Mann said. Another form of plague, septicemic, is harder to diagnose because there are no swollen lymph glands, he said.

AT&T will give up its Bell logo

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is giving up the name Bell, a move which clears the way for a Jan. 1 breakup of the world's largest corporation.

The Bell name, logo and trademark will be affiliated instead with the 22 local companies which AT&T will give up next year.

Giving up the name was one of the conditions set down by U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene to strengthen the 22 local Bell System companies. They must rebuild many of their switches to provide AT&T's long-distance competitors, like MCI Communications, the same type of access to their customers now enjoyed by AT&T.

AT&T's decision to give up the name was announced Wednesday by its chairman, Charles L. Brown, who said the entire AT&T organization will use a new logo introduced on Jan. 1. That logo is a blue globe, crossed horizontally with white lines "symbolizing a world girdled by electronic communications."

To preserve its right to use the name, AT&T would have had to appeal the judge's ruling to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington.

Reagan files to be searched for Carter papers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional investigators are in California today beginning a search for Carter White House materials in the files of President Reagan's 1980 campaign.

Rep. Donald Albosta, D-Mich., the chairman of the House subcommittee conducting the probe, said Wednesday he did not know how long his aides would be at Stanford University's Hoover Institution where the files are stored.

He said the investigators are headed by Micah Green, staff director of Albosta's human resources subcommittee of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

The panel is trying to learn how the Reagan campaign obtained White House documents prepared for use by then-President Carter for his debate against Reagan in Cleveland in 1980.

Under an agreement worked out with trustees of the Reagan files, the investigators initially will have access to copies of any relevant documents pulled from the Hoover archives by the FBI.

Hoover officials announced last week that the FBI had completed its search of the campaign files on July 22, nine days after the search was begun by 10 agents as part of the Justice Department's probe of the briefing papers transfer.

In a related development Wednesday, the Senate Rules and Administration Committee considered a resolution requesting appointment of a special Judiciary Committee subcommittee to conduct its own investigation.

The Republican-controlled rules committee, lacking a quorum at its morning meeting, conducted a dayiong vote on the resolution introduced by Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.

The vote was 4-0 in favor of the resolution when the panel ended the meeting. At least seven members of the 12-senator committee must participate to make a vote official.

Screens to prevent 'writing'

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Wire screens soon will come between the sidewalk Juliets and their Romeos in the Bernalillo County Detention Center.

The windows of the jail are being covered with wire screens, which will block the hand signals that for years have flown between women standing on the sidewalks below the jail and the incarcerated men above, said detention center Director Michael Hanrahan.

"The wire mesh window covers make it impossible for anyone to see into the cells and dayrooms," Hanrahan said.

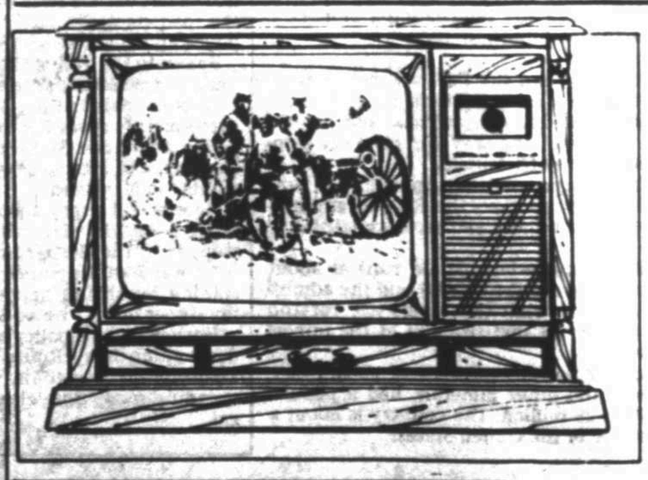

"Our residents will be able to look out, but persons on the sidewalk won't be able to see who is looking at them."

For years, women have assembled on the sidewalks outside the jail and have used their hands to write messages in the air — not an easy form of communication because each word has to be written in the wind, letter by letter, backward.

Hanrahan said the mesh also will end another inmate sport known as "night fishing" — the inmate practice of letting out a fishing line to the ground, where an accomplice ties on contraband to be hauled back into the cell.

Man held after hostages' release

CHICAGO (AP) — A "very articulate" man who talked of poverty, unemployment and a rift in city government during an eight-hour siege in a judge's chambers was in custody today after releasing his three lawyer hostages unharmed, the FBI says.

The drama began Wednesday when the three women lawyers were taken captive at the Dirksen Federal Building downtown. It ended shortly after 11 p.m. when the last hostage was released and FBI agents stormed the courtroom office where the incident occurred.

Keith Garth, 23, of East St. Louis, Ill., was unarmed, but throughout the ordeal he clutched an attache case and threatened that "if he unzipped the case, it would kill them all," said Edward Hegarty, special agent in charge of the Chicago FBI office.

However, Hegarty said a bomb squad had examined the case and found no explosive device, and no one was injured.

The hostages were identified as Pamela McKenna, Carole Doyle and Diane McArthur, all "about 30" years old, according to the FBI.

The three were held in the chambers of U.S. District Court Judge John A. Nordberg. Authorities said Ms. McKenna and Ms. Doyle are law clerks for Nordberg, and Ms. McArthur, an attorney with a private firm, was in the building visiting them.

Ms. McKenna was first to be released at about 5:30 p.m., followed by Ms. Doyle about 9:30 p.m. Ms. McArthur was released after negotiators persuaded Garth to exchange her for an FBI agent, Hegarty said.

Hegarty said at a news conference that Garth, who is black, "continuously made references to the unemployment situation in the Chicago area," especially with respect to minorities.

"He also expressed concern with the poverty on the West Side of Chicago," Hegarty said.

"In addition, he expressed dissatisfaction with the inability of Mayor (Harold) Washington to effect a reasonable liaison with the City Council, especially with Alderman (Edward) Vrdolyak," Hegarty told reporters.

"He was very articulate," the FBI agent said.

Washington, elected April 12 as Chicago's first black mayor, has been locked in battle with Vrdolyak's majority bloc of 29 aldermen — 28 whites and one Hispanic — for control of the city government.

FBI spokesman Anthony DeLorenzo had said earlier that Garth may have been a former government employee. He said Nordberg told them that Garth had filed a lawsuit against a unit of federal government, "possibly because he was fired from that governmental body."

Nordberg said Garth had been in his chambers in May to file a suit on his own behalf, got some help from the clerks and left. He returned two or three weeks later, but the judge was not there and Garth left, Nordberg said.

DeLorenzo said Garth walked into Nordberg's chambers about 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, passed a secretary and went into an office where two of the hostages work.

Throughout the incident, Garth communicated with negotiators by telephone from the chambers. At one point Nordberg offered to substitute himself as a hostage, but was turned down by the FBI.

U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb said Garth would be charged with "engaging in an act of misconduct in a federal courtroom," a federal crime which carries a sentence of six months to life in prison upon conviction.

Webb said he planned to meet with Cook County officials today to discuss charging Garth with other crimes, including kidnapping.

Arab efforts may alter diplomacy

By STEVEN K. HINDY
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt — Egypt has hardened conditions for returning an ambassador to Israel because it fears improved ties with the Jewish state might hamper its efforts to mend relations with Syria and other Arab nations, according to diplomatic and Egyptian sources.

Egypt's first ambassador to Israel, Saad Murtada, was withdrawn last September to protest Israel's invasion of Lebanon and the massacre of Palestinians in Beirut.

The move climaxed a steady decline in Egyptian-Israeli relations that left the two nations in what is called here "a cold peace" — with trade and normalization almost at a standstill and bitter rhetoric from both sides.

Initially, Egypt said Murtada would not return until Israel withdrew its estimated 28,000 troops from Lebanon, but the condition was later softened to the demand that there be "an agreed timetable" for withdrawal.

Egypt's second change of heart became apparent through two contradictory statements issued by the Foreign Ministry in the past two months.

On June 20, Foreign Ministry spokesman Raouf Ghoneim told The Associated Press that Murtada would be returning by the end of the month because the May 17 Israel-Lebanon withdrawal agreement had met Egypt's demand for a timetable.

Diplomatic sources said Murtada was recalled from vacation in Europe and told to prepare to move back to Israel.

Israeli officials said the commitment to return Murtada by the end of June had been made by President Hosni Mubarak through either U.S. Ambassador Alfred Atherton or Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

"This is the first time in the history of Egyptian-Israeli relations that a presidential promise has been broken," said one Israeli official. This claim could not be independently confirmed.

June passed without the return of Murtada. Then on July 18, Butros Ghali, minister of state for foreign affiars, told the AP there would be no Egyptian ambassador in Israel until it withdrew from Lebanon and began contributing to "a new political atmosphere" in the region.

Ghali said Ghoneim's statement was "a mistake" and he denied "an agreed timetable" had ever been a condition, even though Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly had been quoted as saying this more than once.

Diplomats saw the flip-flop as resulting from the ascendance of the "hawks" in the Foreign Ministry — Ghali and presidential advisor Osama El-Baz — over the "doves" led by Aly.

Diplomatic and Egyptian sources said the rationale for the change was that Egypt is nursing new contacts with Syria and hopes to improve ties with Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Iraq and the Palestinians.

As Egypt's position was changing, Iraqi Foreign Minister Tarek Aziz arrived in Cairo on July 3 in the first official visit by a top Iraqi official since that country led the Arab boycott of Egypt to protest its peace treaty with Israel in 1979.

Despite Mubarak's expressions of good will to the Arabs and his halting of media campaigns against them, visits by Arab officials to Cairo have been few and far between. Egyptian officials say privately the main opponents to rapprochement are Syria and Saudi Arabia.

Shortly after Aziz's visit, Mubarak met with editors of the state-controlled press and told them not to attack Syria in their editorials and news columns.

Taking the lead from Mubarak, the editors earlier this year had criticized Syria for refusing to withdraw its troops from Lebanon. In recent weeks, there have been many commentaries in the Egyptian press empathizing with Syria's hope of regaining control of the Israeli-annexed Golan Heights, captured during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

In a speech July 23, Mubarak referred to the need to "liberate" Lebanon, the West Bank and the "Syrian Heights" — a switch from a few months ago when he was privately saying Syria and Israel wanted to divide Lebanon.

There have been reports that one of Syrian President Hafez Assad's key demands is that the United States work for the return of the Golan in exchange for Syria's withdrawal from Lebanon.

No one expects the new contacts with Syria to lead to a prompt restoration of relations between the two countries — who have been feuding since the failure of their unity efforts in the 1950s.

Deposits increase at five banks

Net loans were $44,296,000 compared to $35,559,408 at the same time last year and $35,707,614 in the first quarter 1983.

Officers at Metro Bank announced financial results July 24 before declaring the bank insolvent July 29. The bank was sold and has since re-opened under the name Mid-Cities National Bank. Metro Bank's deposits totaled $30,913,000 compared to $26.6 million in the same quarter a year ago and $33 million in the first quarter 1983. Net loans were $26,740,000 compared to 21.9 million at the same time in 1982 and compared to $26.9 million in the first quarter 1983.

Deposits at RepublicBank Midland rose to $46,373,000 in the quarter compared to $35.5 million at the same time last year and $44 million in the first quarter of this year. Net loans totaled $12,259,000 compared to $9,035,000 in the same quarter a year ago and $10.6 million in this first quarter 1983.

Midland American Bank reported deposits totaling $3,727,000. The bank opened for business in July 1982. Deposits in the first quarter 1983 were $3,770,728.

Net loans in the quarter were $3,301,000, up from $2,451,787 reported in the first quarter 1983.

At Security National Bank, total deposits were $9,756,000, an increase of almost $2 million from the first quarter 1983. Net loans were $7,631,000 for the period, versus $5,165,679 in the first quarter 1983. The bank opened for business in the third quarter 1982.

Officers at ClayDesta National Bank said deposits rose to $44,729,000 compared to $30.9 million in the first quarter 1983. Net loans were $22,814,000 in the quarter compared to $14,403,666 in the first quarter 1983. The bank opened for business in October 1982.

Sign stops speeders in tracks

Identical green-and-white wooden warning signs now mark both highway entrances to this Southwest Texas town of 6,000 — in conspicuous view of motorists driving the 40 miles east to San Antonio or continuing west to Uvalde and Del Rio.

The late W.N. Saathoff, a one-time Lions Club president, proposed the slogan to halt the speeders zooming through town in the roadsters that followed on the heels of Henry Ford's Model-T.

"This was about the time the Model-T went out of existence," Saathoff recalled in the 1950s. "Motorists were going too fast. Hence, the warning. It is still a warning to travelers."

Members of the Hondo Police Department sometimes hand out postcards of the strongly worded signs in lieu of speeding tickets, Smith said.

"Everybody has a bad day occasionally," the chief said. "Sometimes, the officer will just write a warning and give them the postcard instead of a ticket."

Tourists can pick up free postcards at a host of places around town. The souvenir cards were a big hit at the 1968 Hemisfair held in San Antonio, and a postcard dealer in Lund, Sweden, purchased some years ago to sell to card collectors all over the world.

Smith concedes the markers' popularity might have helped spread the word about Hondo, but doesn't think the signs are responsible for any marked reduction in the number of speeders.

The signs do, however, pointedly remind motorists on the four-lane highway that the speed limit suddenly has dropped from 55 mph to 40 mph.

"(The sign) has, from years past, caused some people to slow down," Smith said. "It gets the message across. That sign means what it says."

Presidents of U.S., Zaire discuss roles in Chad

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire is meeting with President Reagan after being commended for his nation's "courageous role" in sending more than 1,500 troops to help Chad resist a Libyan-supported revolt.

Mobutu, 52, Zaire's president since 1965, said Tuesday that the military situation in Chad is worsening because of Libyan bombing raids on the city of Faya-Largeau in north central Chad. He spoke after meeting with Vice President George Bush and Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Faya-Largeau has been under attack by Libyan aircraft since it was re-occupied by Chadian forces over the weekend.

A senior U.S. official, who briefed reporters on the Mobutu visit on the condition he not be identified by name, said that Zaire, the former Belgian Congo, sent forces to Chad out of its own national interests, and was not asked to do so by the United States.

He said the United States welcomed "Zaire's courageous role," in sending the troops to aid in the suppression of a Libyan-backed revolt.

Those troops have taken up non-combat garrison duty in Ndjamena, the Chadian capital, freeing Chad's forces for duty in the north.

The U.S. official said the United States is supplying them with "minimal" equipment but is not providing arms or paying transport or other costs.

He said there are no plans to ask Mobutu to do more, adding that the "theoretical possibility" Zaire might send additional troops is limited by logistical realities.

The situation in Chad was expected to dominate Mobutu's conversation with Reagan. But Bush highlighted the other probable themes of the talks, praising Zaire for taking "difficult steps" to bring its debt-ridden economy under control.

In taking those steps Zaire has set an example for other countries, Bush said.

The senior U.S. official noted that Mobutu's government accumulated a $5 billion debt to Western governments and banks — including $800 million due the United States — during a time when Zaire's copper resources were getting $2 a pound on world markets.

Copper has since plummeted to 60 cents a pound, leaving Zaire with a payments problem and a badly troubled economy, said the official.

The official said that in the past year the Mobutu government has been striving to control the country's budget, improve public administration, liberalize the economy and has opened intensive talks with the International Monetary Fund on further stabilizing steps.

"We hope Zaire and the IMF will reach early agreement which will lay the basis for consideration of debt rescheduling by official and private creditors, and open the way for renewed economic growth," the official said.

The official expressed disappointment that Congress has not approved the Reagan administration's request for increased security assistance to Zaire.

That military and economic aid runs at about $30 million a year and the official said the administration believes "that the levels are far too low for a country of that size and of the importance of Zaire."

Zaire, with important reserves of cobalt, copper, uranium and other minerals, had a population in 1979 of 28 million. The country is about a quarter the size of the United States.

Relief doesn't come cheap

WASHINGTON (AP) — How do you spell relief? Ed Roos of Arlington, Va., discovered it is sometimes very difficult.

Roos, a 30-year-old chauffeur, was driving home from Ocean City, Md., on Memorial Day when he stopped on Route 50 to use a gasoline station restroom.

To Roos' chagrin, he was denied bathroom privileges because he was not a paying customer. He made four more stops, but was turned away at each of them.

After being refused at an Exxon station in Trappe, Md., Roos walked behind the building managed by Tommy Horner to relieve himself. The door of the house 50 yards away quickly sprang open and out dashed two teen-agers, one with a camera and the other with pencil and paper.

The teen-agers, who were Horner's brother and sister, caused Roos to flee. Five miles down the road, he was arrested by the Maryland state police and charged with indecent exposure.

Taken to the Talbot County District Court, he joined three others arrested on similar charges. Roos was unable to pay $35 of a $350 bond, and subsequently spent the next 20 hours in jail.

The court last week said Roos will have a clean record after one year if he stays out of trouble in Maryland.

Roos is still angry about the $800 he spent in legal fees. He also said he thinks he was trapped by the Horner family in Trappe.

"It was like they were sitting at the window waiting for this to happen. I didn't even have my zipper down," he said.

Horner said his policy of restroom use is standard along busy Route 50. He said he tried keeping the restroom open and wound up spending more time cleaning it than pumping gas.

Craft lacked 'comfortability,' researcher says

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Viewers just didn't feel "comfortable" watching Christine Craft on television, an audience researcher testified in the anchorwoman's sex discrimination suit, adding that audience response to her was the worst he'd ever seen.

Consultant Steve Meacham, testifying Wednesday in Ms. Craft's $1.2 million federal suit, said the results of viewer surveys showed that Ms. Craft, at that time co-anchor at KMBC-TV, lagged by large margins behind her prime competitor, KCTV anchorwoman Anne Peterson.

Viewers also rated Ms. Craft's performance the lowest among 15 newscasters in Kansas City, he said.

"Christine Craft, especially when compared with Anne Peterson, had some real problems in Kansas City," he said. "The intensity of the reaction to Ms. Craft on the negative side ... was the most intense I had ever seen. She was clearly not doing what we hoped she would do, which was make the Channel 9 newscast a more comfortable newscast to watch."

Meacham said he had worked on 200 similar research projects.

Defense attorneys hammered away at the validity of Meacham's surveys, claiming comments he had made in small "focus groups" of viewers had biased the results.

Under cross-examination, Meacham acknowledged that he had called anchorwomen "broads" during one session. Earlier, the jury heard tapes of sessions in which Meachem urged respondents to spend "30 seconds destroying Cristine Craft" and asked if she was a "mutt."

Ms. Craft's suit, against Metromedia Inc., the former owner of KMBC-TV, claims that her removal from the anchor desk was discrimination based on sex, that she received less pay than her male co-anchor for the same job and that the station misrepresented the anchor job.

Metromedia has based its defense largely on the validity of viewer surveys performed by Meacham and his former employer, Media Associates Inc., now known as Audience Research and Development. Meacham has started his own consulting business in San Francisco.

Meacham testified in the U.S. District Court trial that the focus groups were held in May 1981 to discover attitudes that could be further probed in a phone survey. Four groups of about a dozen people each were interviewed, he said.

The follow-up telephone survey of 400 viewers in July 1981 yielded final results that were devastating to Ms. Craft, Meacham testified.

The survey showed that viewers rated Miss Peterson much higher than Ms. Craft in physical appearance, adherence to the image of an anchorwoman, "comfortability," dress, job enjoyment, ability to get along with her news team and friendliness, he said.

Bodies found in Ohio River

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Police say they have no evidence of foul play in the deaths of an unidentified man and woman whose bodies, clad in work clothes and hard hats with lamps attached, were found within 24 hours of each other in a stretch of the Ohio River.

The body of the woman, bearing tattoos of a swastika, bull's eye and triangle, was pulled from the river Wednesday morning, a few hundred yards from where the man's body was found Tuesday afternoon.

Police said they had no reports from barge and towing companies of anyone missing.

Moonlighting hurts judge

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — A circuit court judge who was suspended without pay for two months after moonlighting as a construction worker said he needed the extra income because of financial problems.

The Illinois Courts Commission, in ordering the suspension Wednesday, said Associate Circuit Court Judge Thomas M. Daley of Belleville also violated court rules by failing to report $3,359 income from the outside job in 1979. The panel said evidence showed that Daley failed to make child support and maintenance payments to his former wife.

Daley denied shirking court duties or intentionally misreporting his income, and said he misunderstood an agreement about payments to his ex-wife.

Teen-ager may be charged

MIAMI (AP) — A 16-year-old boy may become the eighth defendant in the kidnapping of a former Salvadoran ambassador's wife who was rescued by the FBI six days after her abduction, a prosecutor says.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Frederick Mann also said at a U.S. District Court hearing Wednesday that four defendants will plead guilty to the July 8 abduction in Miami of Cielia Quinonez Meza, wife of Roberto Quinonez Mesa. She was rescued in Washington on July 14.

Three other suspects have pleaded innocent. Mann said the Justice Department has issued authorization to seek prosecution of the teen-ager.

Rapist, wife get 40 years

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. (AP) — A judge said he was tempted to give life prison terms to an Army sergeant and his wife who were convicted in the rape of the couple's 15-year-old niece.

State judge Fred W. Bateman on Wednesday sentenced Raymond Lee Sutton, 44, and Virginia Sutton, 43, to 40 years each. The niece lived with them from July 1982 until February.

Sutton was convicted of rape, while his wife was found guilty of being an accessory and abetting her husband. They were also convicted of taking indecent liberties with the girl.

Nursing home fined $190,000

CHICAGO (AP) — A $190,000 fine against a nursing home where four ailing people died during a heat wave is the highest ever levied here against such a facility, according to the Board of Health.

Officials of the Center for Human Development, where the deaths occurred between late July 22 and early July 23 when air conditioning broke down, have 10 days to appeal the fine imposed Wednesday by acting Health Commissioner Bernard Turnock.

Cook County Medical Examiner Robert Stein has labeled the deaths "homicides" because, he said, the four were sick but would have lived except for the heat, which reached 105 degrees in the home.

Juveniles need punishment, report says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The nation's juvenile justice system, based on a century-old tradition of rehabilitation, needs a dose of old-fashioned punishment for repeat offenders, says a principal author of a new report from a major research institute.

"Punishment is appropriate for anybody who's been involved in the system a couple of times," Rand Corp. researcher Peter W. Greenwood said Wednesday following release of the report which urged an overhaul of California's juvenile justice system.

"If you let him go on probation without doing anything, the message is he can get away with it (criminal behavior)," said Greenwood, a senior criminal justice researcher and one of four authors of the report from the Santa Monica, Calif., think tank.

Punishment could mean community service or restitution as well as incarceration, he said.

Traditionally, most offenders are sent back to their parents' custody for the first, second and even third offenses unless these are unusually serious, the report says.

The $300,000 study, commissioned by the California State Assembly, calls for recognizing punishment as a necessary sentencing option and developing sentencing guidelines for specific crimes.

"The reforms could be applied nationwide," said Greenwood, who said the researchers studied juvenile justice systems throughout the United States as well as in California — the nation's most populous state — and found them to be based on the same premise of rehabilitation.

The report cites a lack of evidence that rehabilitative approaches have been effective since the juvenile court system was established nationwide in the early 1900s.

"If anything works it's the skills of a particular individual," rather than a specific program or approach, Greenwood said.

The report suggests the state legislature "recognize punishment, along with treatment and incapacitation, as an appropriate juvenile justice system objective."

"Punishment is appropriate for anybody who's been involved in the system a couple of times. If you let him go on probation without doing anything, the message is he can get away with it (criminal behavior)."

— Peter Greenwood,
Criminal justice researcher

The study also recommended that sentencing guidelines be developed to set up specific punishments for crimes committed by minors such as those for adult offenders, Greenwood said. One state, Washington, has adopted such guidelines, he said.

The juvenile justice system must "continually balance the competing aims of salvaging delinquent minors and protecting the public," the report says. But when punishment such as long-term incarceration is meted out, it should be reserved for repeat offenders and those committing heinous crimes, the report says.

Greenwood noted that despite a public perception that the number of juvenile crimes are increasing, the rate of such crimes in California has leveled off and even dropped slightly in the last few years. The drop could be due in part, but not totally, to a decrease in the 16- and 17-year-old population, he said.

Whether the criminal justice system has contributed to that decline cannot be proven, he said.

Condors to be tested for gender

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Veterinarians extracted blood samples Wednesday from Sespe and Almiyi to determine the genders of the third and fourth California condors hatched in captivity, officials at the San Diego Wild Animal Park said.

The blood chromosome tests, similar to those used to settle human paternity suits, will take three days to complete.

Sespe and Almiyi hatched within two days of each other last May after their eggs were snatched from the wild and incubated in a laboratory at the San Diego Zoo.

Both of the rare birds are doing well and are housed in a large flight cage at the park known as the "condorminium."

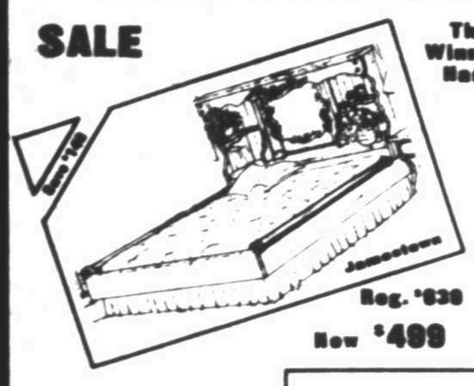

The same tests were conducted last June at the park on Sisquoc and Tecuya, the first and second California condors hatched in captivity. It was determined that Sisquoc, hatched March 20, was a male, and Tecuya, hatched April 5, a female. Of the seven California condors in captivity, Tecuya is the only known female.

Three other California condors are in captivity at the Los Angeles zoo.

Federal and state wildlife officials, in cooperation with the San Diego and Los Angeles zoos, hope to create to captive breeding flock that would replenish the condor's dwindling population in the wild.

Man held after hostages' release

CHICAGO (AP) — A "very articulate" man who talked of poverty, unemployment and a rift in city government during an eight-hour siege in a judge's chambers was in custody today after releasing his three lawyer hostages unharmed, the FBI says.

The drama began Wednesday when the three women lawyers were taken captive at the Dirksen Federal Building downtown. It ended shortly after 11 p.m. when the last hostage was released and FBI agents stormed the courtroom office where the incident occurred.

Keith Garth, 23, of East St. Louis, Ill., was unarmed, but throughout the ordeal he clutched an attache case and threatened that "if he unzipped the case, it would kill them all," said Edward Hegarty, special agent in charge of the Chicago FBI office.

However, Hegarty said a bomb squad had examined the case and found no explosive device, and no one was injured.

The hostages were identified as Pamela McKenna, Carole Doyle and Diane McArthur, all "about 30" years old, according to the FBI.

The three were held in the chambers of U.S. District Court Judge John A. Nordberg. Authorities said Ms. McKenna and Ms. Doyle are law clerks for Nordberg, and Ms. McArthur, an attorney with a private firm, was in the building visiting them.

Ms. McKenna was first to be released at about 5:30 p.m., followed by Ms. Doyle about 9:30 p.m. Ms. McArthur was released after negotiators persuaded Garth to exchange her for an FBI agent, Hegarty said.

Hegarty said at a news conference that Garth, who is black, "continuously made references to the unemployment situation in the Chicago area," especially with respect to minorities.

"He also expressed concern with the poverty on the West Side of Chicago," Hegarty said.

"In addition, he expressed dissatisfaction with the inability of Mayor (Harold) Washington to effect a reasonable liaison with the City Council, especially with Alderman (Edward) Vrdolyak," Hegarty told reporters.

"He was very articulate," the FBI agent said.

Washington, elected April 12 as Chicago's first black mayor, has been locked in battle with Vrdolyak's majority bloc of 29 aldermen — 28 whites and one Hispanic — for control of the city government.

FBI spokesman Anthony DeLorenzo had said earlier that Garth may have been a former government employee. He said Nordberg told them that Garth had filed a lawsuit against a unit of federal government, "possibly because he was fired from that governmental body."

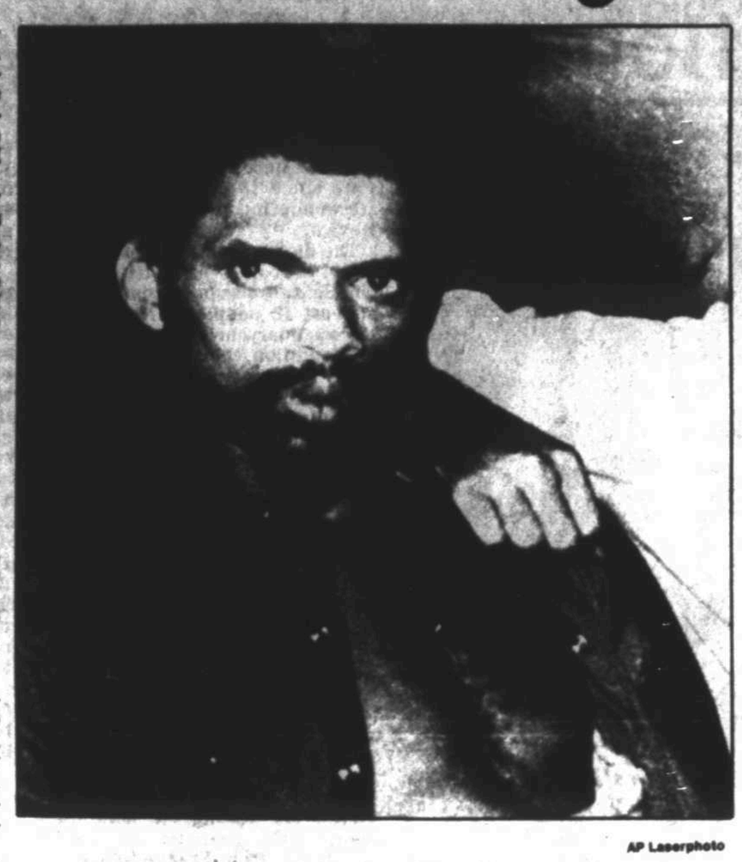

Nordberg said Garth had been in his chambers in May to file a suit on his own behalf, got some help from the clerks and left. He returned two or three weeks later, but the judge was not there and Garth left, Nordberg said.

DeLorenzo said Garth walked into Nordberg's chambers about 2:30 p.m. Wednesday, passed a secretary and went into an office where two of the hostages work.

Throughout the incident, Garth communicated with negotiators by telephone from the chambers. At one point Nordberg offered to substitute himself as a hostage, but was turned down by the FBI.

U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb said Garth would be charged with "engaging in an act of misconduct in a federal courtroom," a federal crime which carries a sentence of six months to life in prison upon conviction.

Webb said he planned to meet with Cook County officials today to discuss charging Garth with other crimes, including kidnapping.

Arab efforts may alter diplomacy

By STEVEN K. HINDY
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt — Egypt has hardened conditions for returning an ambassador to Israel because it fears improved ties with the Jewish state might hamper its efforts to mend relations with Syria and other Arab nations, according to diplomatic and Egyptian sources.

Egypt's first ambassador to Israel, Saad Murtada, was withdrawn last September to protest Israel's invasion of Lebanon and the massacre of Palestinians in Beirut.

The move climaxed a steady decline in Egyptian-Israeli relations that left the two nations in what is called here "a cold peace" — with trade and normalization almost at a standstill and bitter rhetoric from both sides.

Initially, Egypt said Murtada would not return until Israel withdrew its estimated 28,000 troops from Lebanon, but the condition was later softened to the demand that there be "an agreed timetable" for withdrawal.

Egypt's second change of heart became apparent through two contradictory statements issued by the Foreign Ministry in the past two months.

On June 20, Foreign Ministry spokesman Raouf Ghoneim told The Associated Press that Murtada would be returning by the end of the month because the May 17 Israel-Lebanon withdrawal agreement had met Egypt's demand for a timetable.

Diplomatic sources said Murtada was recalled from vacation in Europe and told to prepare to move back to Israel.

Israeli officials said the commitment to return Murtada by the end of June had been made by President Hosni Mubarak through either U.S. Ambassador Alfred Atherton or Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

"This is the first time in the history of Egyptian-Israeli relations that a presidential promise has been broken," said one Israeli official. This claim could not be independently confirmed.

June passed without the return of Murtada. Then on July 18, Butros Ghali, minister of state for foreign affiars, told the AP there would be no Egyptian ambassador in Israel until it withdrew from Lebanon and began contributing to "a new political atmosphere" in the region.

Ghali said Ghoneim's statement was "a mistake" and he denied "an agreed timetable" had ever been a condition, even though Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly had been quoted as saying this more than once.

Diplomats saw the flip-flop as resulting from the ascendance of the "hawks" in the Foreign Ministry — Ghali and presidential advisor Osama El-Baz — over the "doves" led by Aly.

Diplomatic and Egyptian sources said the rationale for the change was that Egypt is nursing new contacts with Syria and hopes to improve ties with Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Iraq and the Palestinians.

As Egypt's position was changing, Iraqi Foreign Minister Tarek Aziz arrived in Cairo on July 3 in the first official visit by a top Iraqi official since that country led the Arab boycott of Egypt to protest its peace treaty with Israel in 1979.

Despite Mubarak's expressions of good will to the Arabs and his halting of media campaigns against them, visits by Arab officials to Cairo have been few and far between. Egyptian officials say privately the main opponents to rapprochement are Syria and Saudi Arabia.

Shortly after Aziz's visit, Mubarak met with editors of the state-controlled press and told them not to attack Syria in their editorials and news columns.

Taking the lead from Mubarak, the editors earlier this year had criticized Syria for refusing to withdraw its troops from Lebanon. In recent weeks, there have been many commentaries in the Egyptian press empathizing with Syria's hope of regaining control of the Israeli-annexed Golan Heights, captured during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

In a speech July 23, Mubarak referred to the need to "liberate" Lebanon, the West Bank and the "Syrian Heights" — a switch from a few months ago when he was privately saying Syria and Israel wanted to divide Lebanon.

There have been reports that one of Syrian President Hafez Assad's key demands is that the United States work for the return of the Golan in exchange for Syria's withdrawal from Lebanon.

No one expects the new contacts with Syria to lead to a prompt restoration of relations between the two countries — who have been feuding since the failure of their unity efforts in the 1950s.

Deposits increase at five banks

Net loans were $44,296,000 compared to $35,559,408 at the same time last year and $35,707,614 in the first quarter 1983.

Officers at Metro Bank announced financial results July 24 before declaring the bank insolvent July 29. The bank was sold and has since re-opened under the name Mid-Cities National Bank. Metro Bank's deposits totaled $30,913,000 compared to $26.6 million in the same quarter a year ago and $33 million in the first quarter 1983. Net loans were $26,740,000 compared to 21.9 million at the same time in 1982 and compared to $26.9 million in the first quarter 1983.

Deposits at RepublicBank Midland rose to $46,373,000 in the quarter compared to $35.5 million at the same time last year and $44 million in the first quarter of this year. Net loans totaled $12,259,000 compared to $9,035,000 in the same quarter a year ago and $10.6 million in this first quarter 1983.

Midland American Bank reported deposits totaling $3,727,000. The bank opened for business in July 1982. Deposits in the first quarter 1983 were $3,770,728.

Net loans in the quarter were $3,301,000, up from $2,451,787 reported in the first quarter 1983.

At Security National Bank, total deposits were $9,756,000, an increase of almost $2 million from the first quarter 1983. Net loans were $7,631,000 for the period, versus $5,165,679 in the first quarter 1983. The bank opened for business in the third quarter 1982.

Officers at ClayDesta National Bank said deposits rose to $44,729,000 compared to $30.9 million in the first quarter 1983. Net loans were $22,814,000 in the quarter compared to $14,403,666 in the first quarter 1983. The bank opened for business in October 1982.

Presidents of U.S., Zaire discuss roles in Chad

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire is meeting with President Reagan after being commended for his nation's "courageous role" in sending more than 1,500 troops to help Chad resist a Libyan-supported revolt.

Mobutu, 52, Zaire's president since 1965, said Tuesday that the military situation in Chad is worsening because of Libyan bombing raids on the city of Faya-Largeau in north central Chad. He spoke after meeting with Vice President George Bush and Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Faya-Largeau has been under attack by Libyan aircraft since it was re-occupied by Chadian forces over the weekend.

A senior U.S. official, who briefed reporters on the Mobutu visit on the condition he not be identified by name, said that Zaire, the former Belgian Congo, sent forces to Chad out of its own national interests, and was not asked to do so by the United States.

He said the United States welcomed "Zaire's courageous role," in sending the troops to aid in the suppression of a Libyan-backed revolt.

Those troops have taken up non-combat garrison duty in Ndjamena, the Chadian capital, freeing Chad's forces for duty in the north.

The U.S. official said the United States is supplying them with "minimal" equipment but is not providing arms or paying transport or other costs.

He said there are no plans to ask Mobutu to do more, adding that the "theoretical possibility" Zaire might send additional troops is limited by logistical realities.

The situation in Chad was expected to dominate Mobutu's conversation with Reagan. But Bush highlighted the other probable themes of the talks, praising Zaire for taking "difficult steps" to bring its debt-ridden economy under control.

In taking those steps Zaire has set an example for other countries, Bush said.

The senior U.S. official noted that Mobutu's government accumulated a $5 billion debt to Western governments and banks — including $800 million due the United States — during a time when Zaire's copper resources were getting $2 a pound on world markets.

Copper has since plummeted to 60 cents a pound, leaving Zaire with a payments problem and a badly troubled economy, said the official.

The official said that in the past year the Mobutu government has been striving to control the country's budget, improve public administration, liberalize the economy and has opened intensive talks with the International Monetary Fund on further stabilizing steps.

"We hope Zaire and the IMF will reach early agreement which will lay the basis for consideration of debt rescheduling by official and private creditors, and open the way for renewed economic growth," the official said.

The official expressed disappointment that Congress has not approved the Reagan administration's request for increased security assistance to Zaire.

That military and economic aid runs at about $30 million a year and the official said the administration believes "that the levels are far too low for a country of that size and of the importance of Zaire."

Zaire, with important reserves of cobalt, copper, uranium and other minerals, had a population in 1979 of 28 million. The country is about a quarter the size of the United States.

Relief doesn't come cheap

WASHINGTON (AP) — How do you spell relief? Ed Roos of Arlington, Va., discovered it is sometimes very difficult.

Roos, a 30-year-old chauffeur, was driving home from Ocean City, Md., on Memorial Day when he stopped on Route 50 to use a gasoline station restroom.

To Roos' chagrin, he was denied bathroom privileges because he was not a paying customer. He made four more stops, but was turned away at each of them.

After being refused at an Exxon station in Trappe, Md., Roos walked behind the building managed by Tommy Horner to relieve himself. The door of the house 50 yards away quickly sprang open and out dashed two teen-agers, one with a camera and the other with pencil and paper.

The teen-agers, who were Horner's brother and sister, caused Roos to flee. Five miles down the road, he was arrested by the Maryland state police and charged with indecent exposure.

Taken to the Talbot County District Court, he joined three others arrested on similar charges. Roos was unable to pay $35 of a $350 bond, and subsequently spent the next 20 hours in jail.

The court last week said Roos will have a clean record after one year if he stays out of trouble in Maryland.

Roos is still angry about the $800 he spent in legal fees. He also said he thinks he was trapped by the Horner family in Trappe.

"It was like they were sitting at the window waiting for this to happen. I didn't even have my zipper down," he said.

Horner said his policy of restroom use is standard along busy Route 50. He said he tried keeping the restroom open and wound up spending more time cleaning it than pumping gas.

Sign stops speeders in tracks

Identical green-and-white wooden warning signs now mark both highway entrances to this Southwest Texas town of 6,000 — in conspicuous view of motorists driving the 40 miles east to San Antonio or continuing west to Uvalde and Del Rio.

The late W.N. Saathoff, a one-time Lions Club president, proposed the slogan to halt the speeders zooming through town in the roadsters that followed on the heels of Henry Ford's Model-T.

"This was about the time the Model-T went out of existence," Saathoff recalled in the 1950s. "Motorists were going too fast. Hence, the warning. It is still a warning to travelers."

Members of the Hondo Police Department sometimes hand out postcards of the strongly worded signs in lieu of speeding tickets, Smith said.

"Everybody has a bad day occasionally," the chief said. "Sometimes, the officer will just write a warning and give them the postcard instead of a ticket."

Tourists can pick up free postcards at a host of places around town. The souvenir cards were a big hit at the 1968 Hemisfair held in San Antonio, and a postcard dealer in Lund, Sweden, purchased some years ago to sell to card collectors all over the world.

Smith concedes the markers' popularity might have helped spread the word about Hondo, but doesn't think the signs are responsible for any marked reduction in the number of speeders.

The signs do, however, pointedly remind motorists on the four-lane highway that the speed limit suddenly has dropped from 55 mph to 40 mph.

"(The sign) has, from years past, caused some people to slow down," Smith said. "It gets the message across. That sign means what it says."

Craft lacked 'comfortability,' researcher says

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Viewers just didn't feel "comfortable" watching Christine Craft on television, an audience researcher testified in the anchorwoman's sex discrimination suit, adding that audience response to her was the worst he'd ever seen.

Consultant Steve Meacham, testifying Wednesday in Ms. Craft's $1.2 million federal suit, said the results of viewer surveys showed that Ms. Craft, at that time co-anchor at KMBC-TV, lagged by large margins behind her prime competitor, KCTV anchorwoman Anne Peterson.

Viewers also rated Ms. Craft's performance the lowest among 15 newscasters in Kansas City, he said.

"Christine Craft, especially when compared with Anne Peterson, had some real problems in Kansas City," he said. "The intensity of the reaction to Ms. Craft on the negative side ... was the most intense I had ever seen. She was clearly not doing what we hoped she would do, which was make the Channel 9 newscast a more comfortable newscast to watch."

Meacham said he had worked on 200 similar research projects.

Defense attorneys hammered away at the validity of Meacham's surveys, claiming comments he had made in small "focus groups" of viewers had biased the results.

Under cross-examination, Meacham acknowledged that he had called anchorwomen "broads" during one session. Earlier, the jury heard tapes of sessions in which Meachem urged respondents to spend "30 seconds destroying Cristine Craft" and asked if she was a "mutt."

Ms. Craft's suit, against Metromedia Inc., the former owner of KMBC-TV, claims that her removal from the anchor desk was discrimination based on sex, that she received less pay than her male co-anchor for the same job and that the station misrepresented the anchor job.

Metromedia has based its defense largely on the validity of viewer surveys performed by Meacham and his former employer, Media Associates Inc., now known as Audience Research and Development. Meacham has started his own consulting business in San Francisco.

Meacham testified in the U.S. District Court trial that the focus groups were held in May 1981 to discover attitudes that could be further probed in a phone survey. Four groups of about a dozen people each were interviewed, he said.

The follow-up telephone survey of 400 viewers in July 1981 yielded final results that were devastating to Ms. Craft, Meacham testified.

The survey showed that viewers rated Miss Peterson much higher than Ms. Craft in physical appearance, adherence to the image of an anchorwoman, "comfortability," dress, job enjoyment, ability to get along with her news team and friendliness, he said.

Bodies found in Ohio River

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Police say they have no evidence of foul play in the deaths of an unidentified man and woman whose bodies, clad in work clothes and hard hats with lamps attached, were found within 24 hours of each other in a stretch of the Ohio River.

The body of the woman, bearing tattoos of a swastika, bull's eye and triangle, was pulled from the river Wednesday morning, a few hundred yards from where the man's body was found Tuesday afternoon.

Police said they had no reports from barge and towing companies of anyone missing.

Moonlighting hurts judge

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — A circuit court judge who was suspended without pay for two months after moonlighting as a construction worker said he needed the extra income because of financial problems.

The Illinois Courts Commission, in ordering the suspension Wednesday, said Associate Circuit Court Judge Thomas M. Daley of Belleville also violated court rules by failing to report $3,350 income from the outside job in 1979. The panel said evidence showed that Daley failed to make child support and maintenance payments to his former wife.

Daley denied shirking court duties or intentionally misreporting his income, and said he misunderstood an agreement about payments to his ex-wife.

Teen-ager may be charged

MIAMI (AP) — A 16-year-old boy may become the eighth defendant in the kidnapping of a former Salvadoran ambassador's wife who was rescued by the FBI six days after her abduction, a prosecutor says.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Frederick Mann also said at a U.S. District Court hearing Wednesday that four defendants will plead guilty to the July 8 abduction in Miami of Cleila Quinonez Meza, wife of Roberto Quinonez Mesa. She was rescued in Washington on July 14.

Three other suspects have pleaded innocent. Mann said the Justice Department has issued authorization to seek prosecution of the teen-ager.

Rapist, wife get 40 years

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. (AP) — A judge said he was tempted to give life prison terms to an Army sergeant and his wife who were convicted in the rape of the couple's 15-year-old niece.

State Judge Fred W. Bateman on Wednesday sentenced Raymond Lee Sutton, 44, and Virginia Sutton, 43, to 40 years each. The niece lived with them from July 1982 until February.

Sutton was convicted of rape, while his wife was found guilty of being an accessory and abetting her husband. They were also convicted of taking indecent liberties with the girl.

Nursing home fined $190,000

CHICAGO (AP) — A $190,000 fine against a nursing home where four ailing people died during a heat wave is the highest ever levied here against such a facility, according to the Board of Health.

Officials of the Center for Human Development, where the deaths occurred between late July 22 and early July 23 when air conditioning broke down, have 10 days to appeal the fine imposed Wednesday by acting Health Commissioner Bernard Turnock.

Cook County Medical Examiner Robert Stein has labeled the deaths "homicides" because, he said, the four were sick but would have lived except for the heat, which reached 105 degrees in the home.

Condors to be tested for gender

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Veterinarians extracted blood samples Wednesday from Sespe and Almiyi to determine the genders of the third and fourth California condors hatched in captivity, officials at the San Diego Wild Animal Park said.

The blood chromosome tests, similar to those used to settle human paternity suits, will take three days to complete.

Sespe and Almiyi hatched within two days of each other last May after their eggs were snatched from the wild and incubated in a laboratory at the San Diego Zoo.

Both of the rare birds are doing well and are housed in a large flight cage at the park known as the "condorminium."

The same tests were conducted last June at the park on Sisquoc and Tecuya, the first and second California condors hatched in captivity. It was determined that Sisquoc, hatched March 30, was a male, and Tecuya, hatched April 5, a female. Of the seven California condors in captivity, Tecuya is the only known female.

Three other California condors are in captivity at the Los Angeles zoo.

Federal and state wildlife officials, in cooperation with the San Diego and Los Angeles zoos, hope to create to captive breeding flock that would replenish the condor's dwindling population in the wild.

Juveniles need punishment, report says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The nation's juvenile justice system, based on a century-old tradition of rehabilitation, needs a dose of old-fashioned punishment for repeat offenders, says a principal author of a new report from a major research institute.

"Punishment is appropriate for anybody who's been involved in the system a couple of times," Rand Corp. researcher Peter W. Greenwood said Wednesday following release of the report which urged an overhaul of California's juvenile justice system.

"If you let him go on probation without doing anything, the message is he can get away with it (criminal behavior)," said Greenwood, a senior criminal justice researcher and one of four authors of the report from the Santa Monica, Calif., think tank.

Punishment could mean community service or restitution as well as incarceration, he said.

Traditionally, most offenders are sent back to their parents' custody for the first, second and even third offenses unless these are unusually serious, the report says.

The $300,000 study, commissioned by the California State Assembly, calls for recognizing punishment as a necessary sentencing option and developing sentencing guidelines for specific crimes.

"The reforms could be applied nationwide," said Greenwood, who said the researchers studied juvenile justice systems throughout the United States as well as in California — the nation's most populous state — and found them to be based on the same premise of rehabilitation.

The report cites a lack of evidence that rehabilitative approaches have been effective since the juvenile court system was established nationwide in the early 1900s.

"If anything works it's the skills of a particular individual," rather than a specific program or approach, Greenwood said.

The report suggests the state legislature "recognize punishment, along with treatment and incapacitation, as an appropriate juvenile justice system objective."

"Punishment is appropriate for anybody who's been involved in the system a couple of times. If you let him go on probation without doing anything, the message is he can get away with it (criminal behavior)."

— Peter Greenwood,
Criminal justice researcher

The study also recommended that sentencing guidelines be developed to set up specific punishments for crimes committed by minors such as those for adult offenders, Greenwood said. One state, Washington, has adopted such guidelines, he said.

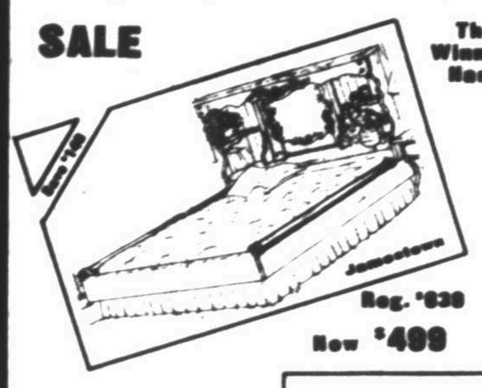

The juvenile justice system must "continually balance the competing aims of salvaging delinquent minors and protecting the public," the report says. But when punishment such as long-term incarceration is meted out, it should be reserved for repeat offenders and those committing heinous crimes, the report says.

Greenwood noted that despite a public perception that the number of juvenile crimes are increasing, the rate of such crimes in California has leveled off and even dropped slightly in the last few years. The drop could be due in part, but not totally, to a decrease in the 16- and 17-year-old population, he said.

Whether the criminal justice system has contributed to that decline cannot be proven, he said.

Lufthansa flies to rescue of Germans tracing roots

Copley News Service

To commemorate the 300th anniversary of German immigration and to help Americans of German ancestry trace their roots, Lufthansa German Airlines has published a booklet called The German-American Connection.

It covers the history of Germans in this country and provides guidance on genealogical research.

The best way to start the process is to diagram the family tree, trying to establish the points of origin of your progenitors. A major source of information is likely to be the family Bible record of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths and burials.

Other sources suggested in the Lufthansa booklet are diaries, letters, photographs, tombstones, military records and even uniform buttons and medals which can lead to useful official lists. Baggage tags on old trunks may tell the year the family moved from one place to another. Naturalization certificates often give the date of entry into the United States and sometimes the name of the ship on which an immigrant arrived.

Filed in the National Archives in Washington, D.C. (and available through its branches and local libraries), are passenger manifests of vessels that arrived in the United States from 1820 on; federal census records dating from 1850; military records going back to the Revolutionary War; and land deeds resulting from the Homestead Act of 1862. Church books may yield statistics on parishioners. Birth, marriage and death records can be found in city halls, county courthouses and state capitals.

Germany, until the late 19th century, was a collection of semi-independent principalities so archive availability varies widely there. Civil registration was introduced at different years in different places starting in 1798; for earlier dates, church registers are the primary source and they begin in some areas as early as 1530. Some towns have centuries-old birth certificates, marriage certificates, deeds, mortgages and printed weekly announcements of births, marriages and burials. German archives and genealogical societies are listed by region in the Lufthansa booklet.

The first Germans to emigrate to the New World were weavers, tailors, carpenters and a shoemaker, led by a 30-year-old lawyer and attracted by William Penn's promise to provide in Pennsylvania a haven from religious persecution. A year after their arrival, the settlers had harvested flax, built looms, set up spinning wheels and held a sale in Philadelphia.

The German-American Connection explains how surnames can be clues to early family history, describes museums in Germany and offers tips for traveling in the country. For a copy, write to Lufthansa German Airlines, Department UX 12, 1640 Hempstead Turnpike, East Meadow, N.Y. 11554.

Mother's smoking may harm brain of fetus

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any proof that if a pregnant woman smokes it will harm the baby? I think that a theory is one thing and proof is another and that the two should not be mixed together. — Mrs. L.R., Chicago

Dear Mrs. R.: There is proof and there is proof. Some people still deny that cigarette smoking is associated with the development of lung cancer, but fortunately I believe their number is diminishing. I also am under the impression that some people still believe that the world is flat.

As for the effect of maternal smoking on a baby, Dr. Neil C. Boland, of Emory University School of Medicine in Atlanta, has reported that nicotine collects in the fetal brain. This helps explain the association between maternal smoking and intellectual impairment in the child.

In a study of 175 women who were undergoing abortions, the investigators found nicotine in the livers of all of the smokers' fetuses past the 16th or 17th week of gestation. Among the second trimester fetuses, the levels were 10 times higher in the brain than in the liver.

I know of women who smoked and who have brilliant children. But playing Russian roulette with the well-being of a child does not seem very wise.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Someone who works in the same plant that I do just had an operation to remove a part of his esophagus. From what I remember of my high school biology, the esophagus leads to the stomach. How is someone supposed to be able to eat if he doesn't have an esophagus? — Roy, New York City

Dear Roy: It is now possible for a person to have a portion of the esophagus removed and reconstructed at the same time. The procedure involves using a six-to-eight-inch piece of the patient's small intestine of the appropriate diameter to take the place of the esophagus.

Dr. Boyce Cole, a surgeon at the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, North Carolina, says the new procedure facilitates patient rehabilitation. He cites the case of an 88-year-old patient who was discharged from the hospital nine days after the operation and began eating normally at home.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any particular time that the menopause can be said to have taken place? I have not had a period for six months and I have stopped using any form of contraception. — Mrs. L.J., Portsmouth, Va.

Dear Mrs. J.: The menopause can't be said to have occurred until at least one year after your last menstrual period. Women who want to avoid becoming pregnant should continue to use contraception until after the menopause.

For Dave, Richmond, Virginia: In view of the high doses of aspirin you are taking, I would strongly advise against the use of alcoholic beverages. The combination may very well lead to stomach irritation.

Mighty midges cover town 'like freshly mowed grass'

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore. (AP) — Tiny lime-colored bugs have moved into this south-central Oregon town in swarms so thick they cover tennis courts "like freshly mowed grass" and residents can do little but wait it out, a pest control officer says.

The onslaught of the small flies, known as midges, is a familiar summer sight to people living near the banks of Klamath Lake where the bugs concentrate.

But Mike Morstad, manager of the Klamath Vector Control District, said the latest assault has been more intense than usual.

"They come out in hordes — oodles of them. We have about 13 different species and there may be more. We have emergences every summer. We're getting it late this year, I think, because of the late spring and sudden heat wave," he said.

Klamath Falls attorney Neil Buchanan and his family live in a house near the lake.

"They are a nuisance," he said. "They make it through screens, so in the morning there is a pile of them between the drapes and the window.

"If you go waterskiing on the lake, you get them in your hair, eyes, mouth and up your nose," he said.

Joan Riker, a visitor to the Buchanan home, said the bugs are so thick that "when you get out of your car, you just about choke. Imagine a real heavy swarm of mosquitoes and triple it."

The bugs, which Morstad counts in the "millions or billions," vary in size from small enough to fit through a screen to the size of a mosquito, Morstad said. They don't bite or sting.

Cranston may have set date for his own Waterloo

Hearst News Service

A confident Alan Cranston may have set the scene for his own political Waterloo earlier this week when he predicted that by April 3 he and Ohio Sen. John Glenn will be the leading Democratic presidential contenders.

"I think the race will be between Glenn and myself for the nomination after April 3," said the California senator, predicting that by then current front-runner Walter Mondale will have dropped to third place.

Cranston took a risk by setting April 3, the expected date of the New York primary, as a campaign benchmark. If he hasn't knocked Mondale to third place and elevated himself by then, it likely will be used as proof his campaign is off-course.

Cranston's prediction came as he completed a two-day California fund-raising tour. His fund-raisers said they could not say yet how much he collected.

"I think the race will be between Glenn and myself for the nomination after April 3."

— Sen. Alan Cranston

Although conceding he will not have as much money as Mondale by Jan. 1 when federal matching funds are delivered to the campaigns, Cranston said, "We will have the money we need to be competitive."

Recent Federal Election Commission figures showed Mondale has raised $5.6 million for his presidential bid, compared to Cranston's $1.5 million.

Cranston also shrugged off Mondale's ability to raise more money than him in his home state by saying: "Everybody comes to California to raise money. It's a natural source of funding here. Walter Mondale, after all, was vice president for four years; he has many friends here."

Cranston's vision of a face-off between himself and Glenn by April 3 hinges on Glenn making strong showings in Southern-state primaries while Cranston matches or betters Mondale in the early primaries and caucuses such as Iowa, New Hampshire and Washington.

About 30 contests will have been waged by the April 3 New York vote. The New York primary, with 285 delegates at stake, had been set for May 22, but Cranston said it is being moved to the earlier date.

Cranston is focusing on raising money for the rest of the year, but will fight Mondale on two fronts. First, both Cranston and Mondale are waging an expensive war to win Maine's Oct. 1 straw poll.

Judge dismisses charges

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — A federal judge earlier this week dismissed racketeering charges against entertainer Johnny Carson's personal lawyer, Henry "Bombastic" Bushkin, and Carson himself in connection with a lawsuit brought by two of their former partners in the now-defunct Commercial Bank of California.

However, U.S. District Judge Laughlin Waters refused to grant a summary judgment dismissing the suit, and also refused to dismiss allegations of federal securities laws violations. He agreed to allow former bank officers Arnold Kopelson and Michael Miller 20 days in which to come up with more specific information about the racketeering charges, leaving open the possibility they could be reintroduced.

In a suit filed in March, Kopelson and Miller alleged that Bushkin had violated federal statutes by engaging in a "pattern of racketeering activity" in connection with the bank, and brought "a potential customer to the bank in order to effectuate a 'loan shark operation' and to engage in unlawful kickback activities."

The customer, who was not identified in the complaint, is Jack Catain, currently facing federal counterfeiting charges, and he has been identified as having links to organized crime by various law enforcement agencies.

Court documents have alleged that Catain used CBC, which is now in receivership, to make deposits and transfers in violation of federal laws against money laundering. The documents also have charged that a company partly owned by the DeLorean Motor Co.

THE BETTER HALF

"Face it, Stanley. In the great symphony of life, you're Muzak!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, August 5, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Happy Birthday to you, astronaut Neil Armstrong, actor-director John Huston, Detroit Tigers pitcher Dave Rozema, football's Roman Gabriel, Loni Anderson and Atlanta Braves pitcher Rich Mahler! The whole world looks brighter to you once you conquer a fear. Take an unpopular but morally correct stand and you will eventually enjoy greater respect and financial security. New doors swing open. Do not hold back. Romance has a positive effect on your fortunes. An emotional response to a family problem will only make things worse. Be realistic. You cannot expect a child to learn how to handle responsibility if you never give him any.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look for ways to supplement your income. Investments in real estate or stocks and bonds are favored. Technological advances can mean larger gains in business or education.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Steer clear of a friend or relative's financial schemes. An interesting social function later today offers you new business or romantic options. Take calculated risks.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Certain restrictions are lifted. Your intelligence and personal magnetism make you a winner! Marital harmony and family unity should be uppermost in your thoughts today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work hard this morning so that you can make a quick get-away this afternoon. Money could be the crux of a personal problem. A college-bound teenager finds a temporary job.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take a long-range view of your goals. Petty people can impede work progress. Avoid them. A friend urges you to invest in a get-rich-quick scheme. Tone down your criticism.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): News travels fast. Secret affairs and in-depth investigations are productive but require special discretion. Seek advice from someone older and more experienced.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone may try to pull the wool over your eyes. Keep a tight rein on your purse strings. Efforts to improve real estate will increase its resale value. Stick to your priorities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Employment affairs may not run smoothly. Complicated business matters require your prompt attention. You make points with higher-ups. Spend the evening with a good friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not attempt to do business with influential people today. Continue to stick to your budget. You need to allow plenty of time to get to and from appointments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Beware of expending valuable energy on people who waste your time. Guard your professional contacts. Someone you meet for the first time seems like an old friend. Romance is on your mind.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Study spending patterns to get a better idea of where your money is going. A budget revision is necessary but will require family members' cooperation. Romance take a turn for the better!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New romantic attractions are featured. Take your pick! A class reunion puts you in touch with an old friend who can help your career. Follow up—you have nothing to lose.

Actress resigned to loss

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The shock of her sister's death, Lana Wood recalls, didn't really hit her until six months after Natalie Wood's drowning off Catalina Island in November 1981.

"At first, I had my daughter and my mother to console, and that was a full-time job," Miss Wood says. "I had to do the everyday things of keeping a family going. Then, after six months, I fell apart.

"I was terrified. I thought I was having a total breakdown. I went to the doctor and he said, 'It's all right; you're giving in to your grief at last.'

"Now I am able to live with Natalie's death. I have decided that this is the norm, this is what I must face. It is a different kind of everyday life, but I must accept it. My life is functioning again."

After 2½ years of working as a film executive, she is appearing as Fran Burke in CBS's daytime TV soap opera, "Capitol."

"Two men broke into my house and tried to steal my money and rape me and my daughter," she said about her role. "My daughter is going blind, and meanwhile I'm trying to find out who her father is. The man who fathered her gave me a phony name and left."

Miss Wood is delighted with "Capitol." Until the soap came along, she seemed only to play "bad girls."

Growing up as "Natalie Wood's younger sister" wasn't easy. While the angelic Natalie was starring in important movies, Lana seemed typed as the delinquent in lesser films.

"I decided to quit one week after the screening of my last film, 'Dark Eyes,'" she said. "I liked myself in it, but the picture was horrendous. I decided I had to make a change.

"I made some phone calls, and I told people what I knew: I knew television, I knew motion pictures, music and literature. 'Then you want to be in production,' they told me."

She was hired by producer Ron Samuels at Universal studio and helped develop two movies-of-the-week and two specials. Next, she moved to Jay Bernstein's company and produced "Murder Me, Murder You" starring Stacy Keach.

She was preparing to join production boss Frank Price at Columbia Pictures when she was cast in "Capitol."

Miss Wood is 37 "and not uptight about it. I have a wonderful daughter, Evan, who is 9. For four years I've had a good relationship with an actor, Alan Feinstein, who babysits, cooks, takes care of the cats and talks to me. After so much turmoil, I feel very good about my life."

She is writing a book about her relationship with her late sister.

DON'T TAKE A LOSING FINESSE

Neither vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

It takes a beginner quite a while to master the finesse. It takes even experienced players much longer to learn when not to finesse.

South was perhaps a whisker short of an opening bid in terms of point count. But his three quick tricks and possession of the master suit more than made up for that deficiency.

West led the top of his heart sequence. Declarer won and took advantage of being in dummy to try the spade finesse. West won and shifted to a club, and declarer began to realize his predicament.

He cashed the ace of hearts, ruffed a heart and drew trumps, then tried the diamond finesse. East won the king of diamonds and cashed two club tricks — down one.

Given normal breaks, declarer did not need the trump finesse — he could afford to lose a trump trick. Declarer should win the opening lead on the table, cash the ace of hearts and ruff a heart. Next, he draws two rounds of trumps. When both defenders follow and the queen does not drop, declarer leaves the lady outstanding and turns his attention to more important matters.

Declarer takes the diamond finesse, and he does not care much whether it wins or loses. No matter what, the contract is assured. As the cards lie, declarer will even make an overtrick, for West must follow to four rounds of diamonds. By the time he ruffs a diamond, declarer will have gotten rid of all his club losers.

Reagan country

If President Ronald Reagan has been withholding his decision on whether to seek another term because of uncertainty on how Texas would vote, he should find encouragement in the results of a survey by a noted pollster.

Arthur J. Finkelstein and Associates found the president maintains a substantial lead over his likely Democratic challengers.

Finkelstein is no newcomer to Texas political forecasting either. In fact, he accurately projected the results of last year's contest between then-Gov. Bill Clements and Atty. Gen. Mark White, and the re-election bid U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. And that was no insignificant feat.

Now, in his latest Texas poll, commissioned by a newly-formed political action committee called CAT/PAC (Conservatives Acting for Texas/A Political Action Committee), Finkelstein has found:

— Six out of 10 voters are favorable to Reagan, outnumbering those unfavorable to him by a two-to-one margin. The figures were 61.1 percent favorable and 29.3 percent unfavorable.

— Among Texans who call themselves "conservatives," Reagan's favorable rating is 72.6 percent. Among Texas "moderates," the president gets a 55.9 percent rating. "Independent" voters give Reagan a 67.8 percent favorable rating.

— In a Reagan-Walter Mondale contest, the president would get 51 percent of the vote, Mondale would get 37.9 percent and 10.7 percent of the voters are undecided.

— In a contest between Reagan and John Glenn, the president would get 49.4 percent of the Texas vote. Glenn would get 34.6 percent and 16 percent of the voters are undecided.

— With Alan Cranston as his challenger, Reagan would get a whopping 56.5 percent of the Texas vote. Cranston would get only 22.3 percent and 21.2 percent of the voters are undecided.

Finkelstein found the president receives intense support from conservatives, Republicans and Independents, and wins among ticket-splitters and voters of either sex. By geographical areas, Reagan's strongest leads are found in Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth, Austin, Waco and Temple.

Texas' population has been growing significantly over the past few years and its political clout has increased dramatically. In fact, a number of national political analysts have said whomever wins the 1984 presidential election will have to carry Texas.

The Texas political landscape looks favorable for a re-election bid, but so far Reagan hasn't announced he'll be a candidate, although he's acting more and more like one. What will it be, Mr. President?

Digging their graves

The uncovering in Western Europe of clear-cut evidence that Soviet Russia's sinister KGB has moved its agents into influential positions within the anti-nuclear and anti-missile deployment movements comes as no big surprise.

The story of communist penetration of so-called "peace" groups is a distressingly familiar one. Years after it was dissolved, it was disclosed in this country that an organization originally calling itself the American League Against War and Fascism (later renamed, more positively, as the American League for Peace and Democracy) was, in its final stages, no more than a communist front.

Although it functioned during the few years preceding World War II as a polite debating and lecture group, the league's official roster of well-meaning but fuzzy-headed liberals soon yielded leadership and program development to acknowledged Communists. The only reason the league never became a full-fledged subversive group was that once the war got underway, the Russians temporarily had to stop exporting revolution and concentrate on saving their own hides.

Today's infiltration by the Communists of the anti-nuclear and anti-missile groups, however, is decidedly more ominous.

The West German Interior Ministry has completed studies which prove conclusively that KGB agents already have moved into key positions within the anti-missile groups from which they can maneuver sentiments to the pro-Soviet and anti-American lines.

A preponderance of the Europeans marching under the anti-missile banners are sincerely dedicated to the ideal of disarmament — who, in his right mind, would want a nuclear war, anyway? — but they fail to see that a major share of the responsibility for any conflict rests behind the Iron Curtain.

And if they allow themselves to be manipulated by the Soviet agents in their organizations they will, in effect, be handed the shovels with which to dig the grave for their own freedom.

Profile in courage

Add to your profiles in courage list Rep. Dan Coats, R-Ind. He voted against designating Oct. 25 as National Mother-In-Law Day. Not content with that act of extreme bravery, Coats plunged into the lioness' den by saying "behind every successful man lies a surprised mother-in-law."

Jesting aside, Coats said he had nothing against his or anyone else's mother-in-law but had wearied of Congress taking valuable time to designate special days to commemorate a myriad of things, like Jogging Day, National Coin Week, Hawk Watching Day, etc.

"As a freshman congressman," he explained, "I've quickly fallen prey to the sage advice of many House veterans that 'nobody is against bald eagles,' or 'hold your nose and vote for National Chicken Soup Day because there are 150,000 mothers in the district who serve chicken noodle soup to their kids every time they get sick.'"

Coats says the "implied threat" is that if those mothers found out their congressman voted against the soup day, "they would rise en masse next election to throw the insensitive lout out of Congress."

So the representative did show courage, rare as it is in Congress these days, even on trivial issues. That's not to say that mothers-in-law are a trivial matter. Quite to the contrary. As Sir James George Frazer once said, "The awe and dread with which the untutored savage contemplates his mother-in-law are among the most familiar in anthropology."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

GAO report says fleet too costly

WASHINGTON — There's grim talk in Washington about a naval blockade of Nicaragua — the kind of discussion that hasn't been heard since the Cuban missile crisis 21 years ago.

Jack Anderson

The unpleasant truth, though, is that our Navy is smaller and more antiquated than it was in 1962. The communist bloc, in turn, has far more warships available for a confrontation at sea. There's serious doubt that the U.S. Navy can enforce the blockade or "quarantine," that President Reagan has brought up in the secrecy of his policy councils.

The Central American crisis should focus congressional attention on the size of the fleet the United States needs to handle its worldwide commitments — and the kind of ships the Navy should buy.

The chief antagonists are Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr., who wants a 600-ship fleet, and Richard DeLauer, undersecretary of defense for research and engineering, who thinks the proposed ships are not only too expensive but too vulnerable to enemy attack.

For budgetary reasons, the controversy must be decided soon — probably this summer, at the very time the Navy is engaged in its war games in the Caribbean.

At the heart of the debate is the DDG-51, a guided-missile destroyer that would be the mainstay of Lehman's fleet. The Navy secretary wants 60 of them. He claims they would protect our aircraft carriers in a conventional-weapons clash with the Soviets. DeLauer argues that the DDG-51, which is still on the drawing board, could not withstand a Soviet attack.

A secret report by the General Accounting Office, examined by my associates Donald Goldberg and Dale Van Atta, suggests that the price tag alone may doom Lehman's dream of a 600-ship fleet. The country simply can't afford it, and one reason is the skyrocketing cost of the DDG-51.

"In 1978," the report notes, "the Navy specified that the DDG-51 would be smaller, less capable but also less costly than the (Aegis cruiser), so that it could be bought in greater numbers." The Aegis is a $1.3 billion air-defense ship that critics say would be a sitting duck in a wartime engagement.

But as the admirals kept adding more and more features to the cheaper DDG-51, it grew bigger and more expensive. As of December 1981, the GAO reported, "the estimated cost had increased so that it was approximately that of the (Aegis)." Since then, the cost estimates have continued to climb, and the DDG-51 will now cost even more than the Aegis — from $1.4 billion to $1.6 billion a ship.

Dollars-and-cents considerations have also threatened to scuttle Lehman's 600-ship fleet. The Navy's 1984 shipbuilding budget calls for fewer ships than originally scheduled — and is nowhere near enough to reach the 600 figure.

This means one thing: With fewer replacements being built, more of the Navy's elderly rust buckets will be kept on the job long after they reach retirement age. This in turn means that the Navy will have to spend more money on maintenance and repairs for the old ships, which are far more costly to keep up. Obviously, the more that's spent on maintenance, the less there will be for new construction. So the Navy is steaming in a vicious circle.

LET'S BE FRANK: Those chicken franks you grill this summer may contain ground-up skin, bone marrow and bits of bone, but you'll have no way of knowing.

For nearly 20 years, the processed-poultry industry has been using machines to shred and grind up chicken carcasses. The resulting mash is called MDP, for mechanically deboned poultry, and it contains parts of the bird that hand-boned chicken doesn't.

A General Accounting Office auditor described MDP with brutal candor to my reporter Kathy McDonald: "Garbage, stuff that was thrown away before the industry had the technology to process it."

Unlike their competitors in the red-meat industry, poultry processors have been virtually unregulated by the federal government. The only requirement is a limit of 1 percent on the amount of bone residue in the processed product. The finished product can be partly or wholly MDP — without giving a clue on the label.

In May, a GAO report urged the Agriculture Department to issue regulations governing MDP products, and on July 19, Secretary John R. Block said the rules will be published this year.

But Donald Houston, administrator of the Food Safety and Inspection Service, said the mandatory public hearings and budgetary process will delay implementation of any new rules for about a year.

Why the concern? The GAO checked four poultry processing plants. Three of them made 100 percent MDP products. MDP is higher in fluoride and calcium than hand-deboned poultry, and is nearly twice as high in cholesterol.

An excess of fluoride can cause permanent mottling of infants' tooth enamel — and much processed poultry goes into baby foods. In fact, a 1979 Agriculture Department study recommended that mechanically separated mature hens with high fluoride content be prohibited for use in baby food. This has not been done.

The GAO reported that two of the three major baby food companies used mechanically separated fowl in their products. But because no identification is required, the Inspection Service said it didn't know how much was in a given product.

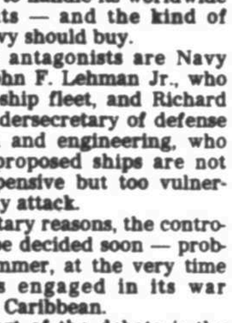

Interestingly, the poultry industry's red-meat competitors are strictly regulated, both in maximum fat and water content and in the percentage of MSM — mechanically separated meat — they can put in their products.

GEORGE F. WILL

Does Congress ever get better?

WASHINGTON — Earl Weaver, former manager of the Baltimore Orioles, used to charge at umpires shouting: "Are you gonna get any better, or is this it?" That is the question for Congress now that it has repealed withholding of taxes on interest and dividends.

George F. Will

Last August, Congress passed a revenue measure designed to raise $98.3 billion in the first three years. Withholding was a $10.5 billion part. But soon the ground began to tremble, as it had a generation earlier, when President Kennedy's withholding proposal triggered more mail than Congress had seen since Harry Truman fired Gen. MacArthur.

Because 22 million persons wrote to demand repeal in 1983, repeal is being called a victory for the little people.

Little banks, maybe. They would have found withholding a bit more burdensome than big banks would have. (Big banks never got steamed up, in part because they have bigger fish to fry, such as more money for the International Monetary Fund. That money may cushion big banks from some of the consequences of the big mistakes they have made in overseas lending.)

The sky is (figuratively speaking) dark with funds being transferred hither and yon by the marvels of electronic banking. Banks can shuffle your funds for you at 2 a.m. as you push buttons at a sidewalk machine. But banks said it would be an insupportable burden for them to do tax collection comparable to that done by every mom and pop store that collects sales taxes.

That was a task they preferred not to perform, so they incited panic in the populace. Some banks and politicians encouraged the belief that Congress had passed a new tax rather than just a method of improving collection of taxes owed.

Rep. Barber Conable (R-N.Y.) at first opposed passage of withholding, but came to oppose repeal. Why? "I made the mistake of reading my mail." It showed that lots of persons have what he calls the "E-bond syndrome" — they think taxes are not owed on interest until it is withdrawn from the bank.

Many other persons are not paying because evasion is a low-risk undertaking. So, one year after Congress enacted withholding, just seven senators and 18 representatives voted against repeal.

Every Tom, Dick and Harriet running for office promises to be "responsive." This is what results: Government turns to jelly when a clamor is generated.

Repeal of withholding has been the least dignified example of "responsiveness" since a day of fragrant memory in September, 1973. The American football fan bellowed "Jump!" and the government was already on the way up when it asked, plaintively, "How high?" The season was at hand and fans suddenly found unendurable the NFL policy of blacking out national telecasts in the city where the game was played. Congress cleared its majestic throat and decreed that any game sold out 72 hours before kickoff must be televised.

The government had not moved so fast since it passed the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution. Now repeal of withholding has become another memorable event in the history of popular government.

The president probably is itchy to veto something so he can stand like Horatio at the bridge, frustrating a spendthrift Congress. But life is (deep breath) unfair: The measure that most deserves a veto, and that the president vowed to veto, is repeal of withholding. Drats, he must be saying. Repeal of withholding increases the deficit, but not by increasing spending. Rather, it does so by decreasing revenues. So it is adored.

The president probably (this is written on Tuesday) will not veto it. He will say that the cosmetic measures to improve compliance are a serious compromise. And Congress has taken the precaution of attaching the repeal to another important measure, the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

The government loses about $8 billion annually on unreported interest and dividends. Withholding would have recovered up to $3 billion annually. The new compliance provisions will raise only $400-$600 million annually. The amount will depend on how many hundreds of millions of new dollars Congress gives the IRS to pay for additional audits and processing costs.

Withholding was repealed as the Reagan administration's revised economic projections showed growth sharply up but deficits barely down. The projections vindicate those who say we can not grow our way out from under three-digit deficits. Tax increases and spending cuts are necessary.

Bur repeal of withholding is the equivalent of this: Congress has voted an entitlement program costing billions annually (in uncollected taxes), and no one who benefits is entitled to the benefits.

ART BUCHWALD

Getting rid of a pain in the neck

It is regrettable that as the massage parlor industry grows by leaps and bounds there are fewer and fewer places that actually offer you a real massage — one that will alleviate pain and distress — when you really need it.

Art Buchwald

I discovered this last Sunday when I found myself with a pinched nerve and decided that I might get some relief from the strong hands of a tough masseur or masseuse who was willing to throw me across the room, if necessary, to get the crick out of my neck.

There are 10 pages devoted to massage parlors in the Washington Yellow Pages, but very few seem to have too many massage specialists on duty on Sunday afternoon.

The listings include "Aladdin's Chest," "Bunny's Topkopi," "Bobbie Jo's Flaming Den," "Tiffany's Velvet Touch," and "Sheik Abdullah's Harem." I finally called "Lolita's Geisha House" because my fingers got tired of walking across the Yellow Pages. Lolita's ad said they made house calls.

A man answered the phone.

"I have this crick in my neck," I said. "And I was wondering if you'd send over an expert masseur."

"Of course. Do you want a blonde or a brunette?"

"I don't care about the color of his hair. I want a guy with strong hands."

"Oh, you're one of them," he said.

"One of what?" I asked.

"Well, we usually send out masseuses for men and masseurs for women."

"Look, I'm not particular as long as the person knows what he or she is doing."

"They know what they're doing, all right," he assured me. "They wouldn't be working for Lolita's Geisha House if they didn't. We can fulfill any fantasy you have in mind."

"Well, I do have this fantasy," I said, "that someone will come over to my house and take his or her strong hands and wring them around my neck and get the crick out of it."

"I see. You're into sadomasochism," he said. "Would you like her to wear an all-leather outfit?"

"I don't care what she wears. As a matter of fact, I don't care if you send over a 300-pound gorilla as long as I can get some relief."

"We've never had anyone ask for a gorilla before. You do have some strange fantasies."

"Look, I really don't want a gorilla. What I had in mind was one of those large, heavily built Swedish or Finnish women, one who is stacked like a brick federal building and has steel arms and hands that can tear a Washington Redskin linebacker in half."

"What kind of a massage parlor do you think we're running? Our girls come from some of the best families in the country. Several are graduates of Vassar and Sweetbriar, and we have one who has a master's degree from the University of Tokyo.

"We have the most beautiful girls in the Washington area, and while we try to make all our clients happy there are limits to the services we will provide. Now if you really want a gorilla, you're going to have to give us a few days to find one and you'll have to pay for his trainer because we can't allow him to make house calls on his own."

"I need someone this afternoon. Don't you have a simple masseur or masseuse who just gets pleasure out of rubbing sore muscles and massaging bad backs and necks?"

"We might have," he said suspiciously. "But how do we know you're not from the vice squad?"

"I swear to you I'm not. I have an American Express credit card, a Master Charge and a Bank Americard. Would I be able to get credit from all three if I was a member of the vice squad?"

"All right," he said. "We'll send you over Annie."

"Is she strong?"

"Strong? She'll put three lashes across your back with a horsewhip and you'll forget your neck pain in a flash."

"Thanks, but no thanks. I'll call the YMCA."

"It's up to you, but I doubt if they'll have a gorilla working on Sunday."

Official defends U.S. aid to Chad

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senior State Department official, explaining emergency shipments of U.S. military aid to Chad, says that unless the Libyans are stopped there, much of North Africa will be threatened by the regime of Moammar Khadafy.

"We feel very strongly that there is a continent-wide pattern of Libyan destabilization, Libyan terrorist activities, Libyan aggression," the official, who would not be identified, said Wednesday. "We are in the middle of a small-scale, but very important conflict."

The Reagan administration has sent $10 million in arms and other emergency military aid to support Chadian government forces who are battling Libyan-supported rebels.

A total of 30 American anti-aircraft missiles have been sent to Chad, accompanied by three military technicians to train the Chadian army to use them against attacking Libyan aircraft.

In addition, it was learned late Wednesday that two highly sophisticated U.S. airborne surveillance planes have arrived in Egypt ahead of schedule, apparently to observe Libyan warplane activity.

Pentagon sources said the AWACS planes, whose advanced radar enables them to "see" more than 200 miles, had been expected later in the week for planned military exercises. The unidentified sources said the planes were sent to Egypt early because of concern about the Libyan-backed rebel attacks in Chad.

Also Wednesday, the Soviet Union demanded that the United States end its support of the government of President Hissene Habre against rebels led by former President Goukouni Oueddei, charging that U.S. actions are "threatening peace and international security."

But at the White House, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes reiterated the administration's position on the fighting in Chad, stating that it was "a potential destabilizing situation."

"We call on the Libyans to cease their involvement in the area," he said. "We condemn it in the strongest fashion."

The State Department senior official said Libyan aircraft have flown attacks on behalf of the rebels in the Faya-Largeau oasis area of northern Chad for the past several days. The Khadafy government has denied its aircraft are involved.

But the official accused Khadafy of engaging in "an elaborate campaign of financial, logistic and other kinds of Libyan support for rebels, who, in fact, have been created by Libya."

"If that kind of activity passes without response...it will feed upon itself and it will pose a threat to the stability and security...additional states," the official said.

"One could just look at the map and see Sudan, Tunisia, Egypt, Niger and the list goes on," he added. He said while the Libyan actions are chiefly a problem for African nations, a "response by the international community" is also needed.

Zaire, whose president, Mobutu Sese Seko, is visiting Washington, has dispatched 1,500-1,600 troops to assist the Chadian government, and France has joined the United States in providing military aid.

The official said there are reports the Libyans have used such weapons as cluster bombs, fragment bombs, and napalm. Other officials said the Libyan attacks have inflicted casualties on the Habre forces and the civilian population, while causing extensive destruction in the town of Faya-Largeau where the fighting is concentrated.

The senior official said there is evidence that Libyan ground forces are also in Chad, involved in logistics, communications and operation of heavy weapons.

John Hughes, the State Department spokesman, said the U.S. technicians would not play a combat role and would be quickly withdrawn. A Pentagon statement said the three-man Army team was from Fort Bliss.

"They would have a brief training role," Hughes said of the technicians. "They would not go outside the capital."

Pentagon sources said late Wednesday the aircraft carrier Coral Sea and its escorts would sail from somewhere in the central Mediterranean today for maneuvers off Nicaragua. Earlier, those same sources had said the carrier's departure would be delayed a few days because of the fighting in Chad.

A second carrier, the Eisenhower, also is in the region. Two Eisenhower-based jets intercepted Libyan aircraft over the Gulf of Sidra on Tuesday, but the Libyan MiGs flew off without incident.

Irish guerrillas kidnap informer's family

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The Irish National Liberation Army said today it is holding the wife, stepfather and sister of police informer Harry Kirkpatrick and will kill all three unless he retracts testimony against several people awaiting trial for terrorism.

In a message to news organizations, the INLA said it kidnapped Kirkpatrick's sister and his stepfather Richard Hill on Wednesday while they were on vacation in County Mayo in the west of the Irish Republic. The sister was not identified.

It claimed to be holding Kirkpatrick's wife, Elizabeth, who was said by police to have disppeared from her home several days ago and not been heard of since.

The INLA statement threatened all three "will be executed if Kirkpatrick does not withdraw his false evidence against those charged in his testimony. In the near future the INLA will give the deadline by which time Kirkpatrick must have withdrawn his evidence."

The INLA, a Marxist offshoot of the mainly Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army, is one of the most violent of Northern Ireland's guerrilla groups.

A Belfast police spokesman said Kirkpatrick had given police information about the INLA and made statements which had led to the arrest of people currently awaiting trial on terrorism charges.

Informers have become a vital weapon in the past year in the fight by security authorities to convict guerrillas on both sides of the province's sectarian divide.

The INLA statement came as Northern Ireland's longest trial, based on evidence supplied to police by Christopher Black, an IRA member turned informer, neared its end.

On Wednesday, the 119th day of the trial, three IRA gunmen, two of them guerrilla commanders, were convicted of killing a part-time sergeant of the Ulster Defense Regiment.

The verdicts brought to 34 the number of alleged IRA members found guilty of terrorist crimes. Altogether, 38 defendants in the trial faced 184 charges, including murders, bombings and membership in the outlawed IRA. All were named by Black as IRA members.

Murderer must pay compensation

BRADFORD, England (AP) — A registrar has ordered Peter Sutcliffe, the confessed mass murderer known as the Yorkshire Ripper, to pay a compensation claim won by the mother of one of his 13 victims.

The order, the first of its kind in British history according to legal experts, was seen as a first step toward declaring Sutcliffe bankrupt so Irene MacDonald, mother of 16-year-old Jayne MacDonald, can collect compensation from proceeds of the sale of Sutcliffe's house. The house is his only known asset and is valued at about $45,000.

Sutcliffe, a 35-year-old truck driver, pleaded guilty in 1981 to the brutal slayings of 13 young women and the attempted murder of seven others in a series of hammer, knife and screw driver attacks that terrorized northern England for five years. He is serving a life sentence at Parkhurst Prison on the Isle of Wight off England's southern coast.

Mexico plans new export laws

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico plans new export laws to prevent businessmen from diverting their profits and investing them outside the country, a government trade official says.

Macedonio Barrera Rios, of the Trade and Industrial Development Department, said the new regulations would halt attempts by businessmen to receive payment for their exports outside the country.

Under the planned measures, Mexican exporters would be required to register the value of their products as they leave the country, to be compared with the foreign client's receipt and payment for the goods.

Institute reports on nuclear tests

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — At least 25 underground nuclear tests have been conducted worldwide during the first six months of this year, the Swedish National Defense Research Institute reports.

The Soviet Union carried out 13 tests, the United States seven, France four and Britain one, the institute's seismologists said Wednesday. They said most of the Soviet tests took place in Kazakhstan, in west central Asia.

Between the end of World War II and the end of the 1960s, the United States was the most active country in nuclear testing, conducting 500 tests during the period while the Soviet Union performed 237, the institute said. The pattern changed in the 1970s, according to the institute, which said the United States set off 154 blasts during the decade and 55 more in the past three years while the Soviet Union detonated 192 in 1970-79 and 86 in 1980-82.

Armed men reportedly attack buses

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Fifty armed men attacked a crowded bus near Kampala, killing 14 people and wounding 18 others in a hail of bullets, according to state-owned Radio Uganda.

Munno, a generally reliable newspaper backed by the Roman Catholic Church, reported Wednesday at least 35 people were killed and 20 injured when the gunmen fired on two passenger buses in troubled Luwero District.

The gunmen were believed to be guerrillas opposed to the government of President Milton Obote, who came to power in December 1980 elections which the rebels say were rigged.

Peruvian guerrillas, police clash

AYACUCHO, Peru (AP) — A clash between leftist guerrillas and a police-military patrol in a remote Andean village in south central Peru left at least 35 guerrillas and two soldiers dead, police sources say.

Four other security troopers were injured in the clash, police said Wednesday.

The incident took place Tuesday night in the village of San Jose de Secce, in the Huanta province, 50 miles north of Ayacucho. The area had been labeled a "liberated zone" by the Maoist Shining Path guerrilla movement.

Sihanouk loyalist dies of malaria

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A key Cambodian guerrilla leader loyal to Prince Norodom Sihanouk has died of malaria, Thai military intelligence sources said today. Sihanouk is the leader of a Thai resistance government fighting Vietnamese forces in Cambodia.

The sources said Col. Nhem Sopon died Wednesday at a base about two miles inside Cambodia from the Thai frontier.

Nhem Sopon, a former paratrooper colonel under the U.S.-backed Lon Nol government, was largely responsible for forging a guerrilla resistance loyal to Sihanouk.

Baker optimistic that Castro has offered to help in region

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz is telling congressional leaders he intends to probe the sincerity of Cuban President Fidel Castro's expressed willingness to help defuse Central America's escalating tensions.

Castro told U.S. television interviewers last week he can go along with any regional agreement which bars arms shipments to Central American nations and requires the withdrawal of foreign military advisers from such nations as Nicaragua and El Salvador.

"Given the fact that Castro has been the principal exporter of trouble down there, these apparent conciliatory statements ought to be pursued...," Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., told reporters Wednesday as he and other congressional leaders emerged from a foreign policy briefing by Shultz.

Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said Shultz "gave every indication" the administration will pursue Castro's overture "to see if there is real sincerity and some realism in what we have heard."

Baker said "it is probably wise to take his (Castro's) comments seriously on the chance he has had "a change of heart."

Baker called the Castro gesture "remarkable," considering the Cuban leader's dispatch of 3,000 or more military advisers to the leftist government of Nicaragua and his alleged arms shipments to guerrillas battling the U.S.-backed government of El Salvador.

He said he saw "tentative progress" and cause for "preliminary and tentative optimism" in Castro's words, especially when they are coupled with the recent conciliatory statements by Nicaragua's Marxist leaders and the work of the so-called Contadora group of Latin American nations trying to form a regional settlement.

But House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. told reporters: "I don't feel any more optimistic. I don't see any change in our policy whatsoever."

Any regional agreement in Central America affecting arms shipments and advisers would touch on U.S. activities as well as Cuba's.

The United States has more than 50 military advisers in El Salvador, trains and helps arm the Salvadoran army and is heavily involved in promoting a democratic government in that country.

In other developments, Reagan and Shultz met with special U.S. envoy Richard Stone.

Diablos beat Midland, 9-4

EL PASO — El Paso pitcher Tim Crews used 11 strikeouts to overcome an eight-hit Midland attack Wednesday night, going the distance for a 9-4 Texas League victory over the Cubs.

Trailing 4-0 in the top of the fourth, Midland got on the scoreboard when Rick Baker led off with a walk and Tom Lombarski reached on a fielder's choice. Mike Anicich followed with a double that moved Lombarski to third and he scored on Trey Brooks ground out. Randy LaVigne singled to score Anicich.

In the ninth inning, down 9-2, Anicich picked up his 18th hom run of the year and, one out later, LaVigne doubled and scored on a Carlos Lezcano single.

Crews struck out the side in between the ninth inning hits. Over the final three innings, he struck out seven Cubs to preserve his victory to improve his record to 6-6 on the year.

Crews got home run help from teammates Stan Davis, a solo shot in the sixth inning, and Ernest Riles, another solo blast in the eighth.

El Paso opened the scoring in the second inning with three runs and added on run in each of the third, fifth, seventh and eighth innings while picking up two in the sixth.

Midland pitcher Darryl Banks fell to 10-9 with the loss.

Tonight the Cubs and Diablos play the third game of the series with Jim Wright, 5-2, scheduled to start for Midland against El Paso's Rene Quinones, 8-3.

With the loss, Midland has now lost 20 of the last 27 ball games to fall from a one-time West Division record of 9-4 to 16-24. El Paso, which started Midland's skids with a five-game winning streak, now leads the West with a 24-16 record.

Midland will wrap up the five-game set Saturday and will return to Cubs Stadium Sunday for the first half of a 10-game home stand, five against the Beaumont Golden Gators who won the first half title, and five against the Dodgers of San Antonio.

Midland Elcor pitcher John Denton comes to a halt safely at second base during Wednesday night's 6-4 loss to North Mesquite.

Stallions rally to beat Elcor, 6-4

John Denton loses no-hitter in seventh inning

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Too many walks, wild pitches and passed balls dropped Midland Elcor into the loser's bracket of the Texas Teenage Baseball Senior State Tournament Wednesday night at Cubs Stadium as North Mesquite posted a come-from-behind 6-4 victory.

Elcor pitcher John Denton had trouble with his control during his 6⅓ innings of mound time, trouble that gave North Mesquite nine free bases (10 total in the game) and the six runs. The Stallions needed the walks. Denton wasn't giving up many hits, pitching a no-hitter through six innings.

Control problems first became serious in the third inning when the Stallions tied the game at 3-3, using four walks, two stolen bases, a wild pitch, a passed ball, a sacrifice fly and a sacrifice bunt to bring home three runs.

In the top of the seventh Denton picked up his seventh strike out of the game before walking Philip Manicchia for the fourth time. Manicchia, for the third time, stole second base and went on to score when Joey Wallace collected North Mesquite's first hit of the game, a single up the middle.

Bill Hefner followed with an infield hit and both runners advanced on a passed ball charged to Elcor catcher Tim Davis. When Denton walked Steve Barker to load the bases, manager Bob Stevens went to his bullpen, calling on Kerry Robertson.

Robertson gave up the third hit of the game when Frank Darnell beat out a bunt that scored Wallace and Kevin Black followed with a bases-loaded walk for the Stallions' sixth and final run. Elcor shortstop Jose Carrasco moved to the mound to finish the game.

ELCOR PITCHERS weren't the only ones having trouble with walks. Carrasco led off the first inning with a full count free trip, stole second and, two outs later, Davis picked up a free ride. Leroy Rodriquez, who was picked up from the Odessa High team in the league, stroked a two-RBI double to right-center to give Elcor a 2-0 lead.

Barry Blackwell doubled in the third inning and scored on Bryan Willis' single to make it 3-3 and Carrasco, after beating out an infield hit in the fourth inning, scored on two North Mesquite throwing errors for a 4-3 lead.

Denton ended up taking the loss in the game while reliever Eric Stone claimed the win.

At the plate, Rodriquez had two doubles in three trips to lead Elcor.

Today, Elcor played Waco at 10 a.m. to determine who advances into the 5 p.m. championship game against North Mesquite. Should the winner of the Midland-Waco game defeat North Mesquite at 5, a second game is scheduled for 8 p.m.

IN OTHER tournament games Wednesday morning, Tyler eliminated Snyder, 6-5; Waco sent Brownwood packing 15-7 and Waco ousted Tyler in the late night game, 5-3.

Joey Swonke gave up 10 hits but stayed on the mound the whole way to pick up the victory, aided by two bottom of the seventh inning runs for the 6-5 win.

Charles Bollinger, in for starter Paul Tate in the seventh, gave up both runs and took the loss. Snyder's Casey Peterson hit the game's only extra base hit, a double.

Waco, with the help of nine Brownwood errors, had an easy time after jumping out to a 10-2 lead in the top of the fifth. Five runs in the final two innings weren't even needed.

Paul Ross went the distance for Waco to get the win while starter Steve Smith suffered the loss.

Waco's Tim Spehr and Todd Haney had a double and triple respectively.

After winning their first two loser's bracket games, Waco and Tyler met in the night's finale and it was Waco that came out on top by the 5-3 count on the strength of five-hit pitching by Randy O'Rear who claimed the victory. Tyler's Brian Boatman, in for starter Lewis Rippy, suffered the loss.

Bucs enter new era; Williams holding out

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — While they once appeared inseparable, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Doug Williams remain at odds in a contract dispute that has forced the National Football League club into a new quarterback era.

Bucs fans, who have watched Williams start 58 consecutive regular-season games dating back to his rookie year in 1978, will get their first glimpse of the Williams-less Bucs this weekend when the squad meets New Orleans in its preseason opener at Tampa Stadium.

Coach John McKay hasn't named a starter for Saturday night's outing against the Saints, but it's likely to be either Jerry Golsteyn, Williams' backup of a year ago, or Jack Thompson, acquired in an off-season trade with the Cincinnati Bengals.

"It would be foolish to say that we would not want to sign Doug. We have been through a lot together," says McKay. "But both Thompson and Golsteyn have experience in the league and if that is to be our situation this year we are happy with it.

"The preseason games are important for them but I am confident both will do well," the coach adds. "From everything I've seen I don't think our quarterbacking will prevent us from being a winning team."

After months of negotiations, the Bucs and Williams remain about $700,000 apart. Neither side seems willing to give in to the other, although Williams and his agent, Jimmy Walsh, have chopped their original asking price by $275,000 per year.

The demand when talks opened was for $875,000 annually for five years. The Bucs, meanwhile, offered $1.2 million for three years or $2.3 million spread over five and have not budged from their initial offer.

Last weekend, Williams met with McKay for what was described as a friendly meeting, but one which didn't include conversation about his contract. The quarterback later confirmed reports that he is trying to sell his Tampa home and plans to move back to his hometown of Zachary, La.

Williams has acknowledged the Bucs offer represents a substantial raise over his base salary of $120,000 last season, but insists he was underpaid during the life of a five-year agreement he signed as a first-round draft choice out of Grambling in 1978.

He also acknowledges that the average working man probably can't understand why he finds the offer unacceptable, but says if a poll of his teammates were conducted, "I'll win it because they understand what's going on and what kind of money is being made."

Williams, who says he made $565,000 during his first contract, points to the $1 million contracts signed by San Diego's Dan Fouts and Denver rookie John Elway as evidence of how well a quarterback can be paid.

"They offered me $400,000 a year, but other quarterbacks have been making that two or three years and are now ready for other deals," Williams told the Tampa Tribune earlier this week. "I feel like my better years are going to be this year and the next two. I'm 27 and I feel like my biggest value to the team is right now, not four or five years from now.

"This is my biggest bargaining time," he says.

Astro's Ryan one-hits Padres, 1-0

By The Associated Press

Marvell Wynne laced a pair of extra-base hits and scored twice in the first two innings and the Pittsburgh Pirates went on to defeat the Philadelphia Phillies 7-2 Wednesday night on a combined eight-hitter by John Candelaria and two relievers.

Tony Pena had a two-run double during the Pirates' three-run first inning, and Bill Madlock also drove in two runs as the Pirates won for the 22nd time in 29 games since the All-Star break.

Candelaria, 11-6, worked the first five innings for his eighth consecutive victory before leaving with blisters on the index finger of his left hand. Manny Sarmiento and Kent Tekulve combined to yield five hits and a run over the final four innings, with Tekulve getting his 12th save.

Wynne's double off loser Marty Bystrom, 3-7, led to a 1-0 lead in the Pirate first and his triple triggered a three-run second that gave Pittsburgh all the runs it needed.

In other National League action, Rafael Ramirez' eighth-inning single snapped a tie and Jerry Royster followed with a solo home run to boost the Atlanta Braves to a 6-4 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Mookie Wilson raced all the way home from second base on George Foster's fielder's-choice grounder in the ninth inning to give the New York Mets a 2-1 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Chuck Rainey and three other Chicago pitchers combined for a shutout, and Thad Bosley and Jay Johnstone homered to pace the Cubs to a 4-0 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals.

In the American League, Rob Wilfong doubled on the first pitch thrown by reliever Ron Davis to score two runs and give the California Angels 7-5, 10-inning triumph over the Minnesota Twins.

Jim Clancy settled down after allowing a leadoff home run and scattered nine hits while Jesse Barfield hit a two-run homer and George Bell rapped a single, two doubles and a triple, leading the Toronto Blue Jays to a 6-2 victory over the New York Yankees.

Rich Dauer singled and doubled, driving in three runs, and Eddie Murray homered and doubled as Baltimore snapped Cleveland's four-game winning streak, 8-2.

Carl Yastrzemski's bases-loaded single produced three runs and Dwight Evans drove in the game-winning run in the 10th inning with his second double as Boston slapped Texas with its eighth consecutive loss, a 5-4 decision.

Larry Herndon drove in three runs with a homer and a double and Jack Morris posted his 10th complete game of the season to lift Detroit to a 6-3 victory over Chicago.

Willie Aikens sliced a two-run double and Don Slaught drove in two other runs, leading the Kansas City Royals to a 8-5 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

In late AL action on the West Coast, Tim Conroy's four-hit pitching and Mike Davis' three-run homer led the Oakland A's to a 6-1 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

In the NL, Nolan Ryan hurled a one-hitter for his first victory since July 13 and Dickie Thon tripled home a first-inning run as the Houston Astros blanked the San Diego Padres 1-0. Mike Marshall cracked two home runs, singled and drove in three runs to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 7-4 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Kuhn's retirement elicits varied responses

By The Associated Press

"I can tell you one thing, pardner. This is a bad day for baseball."

So said A.B. "Happy" Chandler Wednesday after learning that Bowie Kuhn had given up his fight to serve a third term as baseball commissioner.

"It never should have happened," said Chandler, the former Kentucky governor who served five years as commissioner before being fired in 1951. "He's a fine man, well educated and has done a good job in protecting the integrity of baseball.

"They are doing this to a man who just finished making new television contracts for them, to a man who has made baseball prosper."

But New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said: "What he did was in the best interests of baseball. He saw a solid block in front of him."

Edward Bennett Williams, president of the Baltimore Orioles, said Kuhn "acted out of a sense of selflessness," while John McHale, Montreal Expos president said, "He went out with class."

Eddie Einhorn, Chicago White Sox president, added, "There is a certain amount of relief because we don't want to have a protracted fight that doesn't have an end that's predictable."

(Kuhn's career highlights, pg.3B)

Chandler, named to the Hall of Fame last year, criticized the rule that requires the commissioner to have support from 75 percent of the owners.

"That's a bad rule," he said. "They ought to get rid of it. At least six owners are holding out against Kuhn."

Einhorn said of the 75 percent majority rule: "When you have a rule where technically four votes can block the will of 22, that's not a good scene."

Former Houston Astros General Manager Tal Smith, whose name has been mentioned as a successor to Kuhn, said:

"I think it's an unfortunate situation. I think it's very sad when a group of four or five owners out of 26 can prevail. I'm not certain what their motives are. In some cases, I think they just want to be power brokers and to take credit for being able to change things.

"Many of these owners are new to the game. Obviously, the dissidents include the owners of the New York Mets and the Houston Astros. And those ownerships are only 3 years old. They have overridden the wishes of those who have been in ownership roles for a long time."

Regarding Kuhn's opponents, Einhorn said: "I think some were personal things, and there might have been some things businesswise. I don't think it's any secret that some of the teams involved have interests other than baseball (alluding to Kuhn's pro-revenue sharing stance)."

Fishing guide solves 'hindrance'

Copley News Service

REDDING, Calif. — Darrell E. Burroughs, a pro basser and a fishing guide here, jokes about his "hindrance," as he calls it.

"I figure it gives me an edge," he said. "Low profile."

Burroughs, who fishes out of Central Valley, was born without feet, his legs ending just below the calf.

But his hindrance has not kept him from winning several bass boats in fishing contests or three big-fish cash awards in the past 10 months in Western bass tournaments.

He won at Shasta Lake in February, and already has accumulated $13,000 in cash and merchandise this season. He and Mike Martin of Redding captured the world team championship a couple years ago, receiving a fully rigged $14,000 bass boat for the effort.

HE TAKES folks fishing for $100 a day and furnishes all the equipment.

Burroughs never uses a wheelchair. He didn't like the artificial limbs he was fitted with, so he carved his own.

"I'm a little awkward, and it takes me longer, but I get there. I'm probably more conscious than other people of elevations, of heights, of cracks in the sidewalk."

He strolls without a suggestion of a limp down the street with his new, honey-haired wife, Connie. He climbs in and out of boats without apparent difficulty.

"I take off my legs in the boat when I'm moving, and I think it helps me in catching fish. You know, low profile. They don't see me."

Burroughs is not averse to a little humor at his expense.

"We were fishing in raw, cold weather, and Dee Thomas (a Fremont, Calif., pro) came over and looked me up and down. 'You have to be the toughest dude I've ever seen, fishing this tournament in tennis shoes.'

"Connie arrived about then and wanted to strip off my socks and shoes and dry 'em out," he said, grinning.

"I forget," Connie said. "I wanted his feet to be warm."

THE HUSKY, smiling Burroughs is 6 feet 2 in his artificial limbs, but he said he can be "5-8 or whatever you like. The shoe size is the same way."

He grew up with six normal brothers and sisters.

"My brothers always wanted me to go first down a path to the creek," he claimed. "'Go ahead, Darrell,' they'd say. 'If there's a snake along the way, he'll only strike your wooden legs.'"

Burroughs had a prosperous business carving artificial limbs, particularly cosmetic women's prostheses, but he suffered a heart attack and then sold the business and retired. A divorce followed. He and Connie were married in February.

Darrell said he has been fishing all of his 41 years, but has been after bass professionally only the past six.

"I saw one of those bass boats go by on the lake, and that front seat interested me, with my legs like they are," he said. "I wanted one of those, and that's how I got interested in bass fishing. I fished two weeks straight before I caught my first bass.

"I was more of a steelhead and salmon fisherman in the river or trout on the lakes."

He had a reputation as a brown trout catcher. He developed a system to figure out how deep schools of shad — hence, browns — were swimming.

"I'd watch those shad birds (grebes) feeding and count down the time it took them to dive and return to the surface with a shad. Subtract a two count for swallowing the fish, divide by two and I had the depth."

He baited sculpin and started catching browns to 12 pounds.

"I'd use a 9-foot fly pole and a spinning reel, a 6-0 hook with a double-slider bobber, and I was on the fish. I figured that out when I was 32."

Now Burroughs consciously hunts big bass.

"I limit myself to three hours in the morning to catch a limit," he said. "If I don't get it, I go for big fish.

"WHEN I go into a tournament, I generally have two or three patterns which might catch fish. I go for feeding fish against the bank, for suspended fish and for the resident fish in structure off the bank."

He said his cash-winning catches are generally suspended bass. He catches all of his big bass on "blades," as the pros call spinner baits. Darrell makes his own.

"My blades run heavier than the usual five-eighths-ounce ones you buy," he said. "I think its the longer wire and the special vibration which attracts the fish."

He fits his spinner baits with No. 7 Colorado and Indiana blades. He throws a 25-pound test line.

Outdoors

AUSTIN (AP) The Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission has voted to set up three dove-hunting zones, which does away with the two-zone alignment that has been used for more than 40 years.

Traditionally, the commission has established a north and south zone.

This hunting season for the first time, however, there will be Panhandle, Central and Rio Grande zones.

Hunting in the Panhandle Zone, which includes the Panhandle and much of North Texas north of Interstate 20 and Interstate 30, will be Sept. 1-Nov. 9. The bag limit is 12 doves a day, not to include more than two white-winged doves.

Hunting in the Central Zone, which includes the eastern third of the state, will be Sept. 1-Oct. 30 and Jan. 7-16. The bag limit is the same as in the Panhandle.

The Rio Grande zone includes most of South Texas through the southern Trans-Pecos and has three hunting seasons: Sept. 3-4 and Sept. 10-11; Sept. 17-Nov. 5; and Jan. 7-22.

On the first two weekends in September in the western portion of the zone only the bag limit will be 10 white wings and 12 mourning doves. In the remainder of the Rio Grande zone, the limit will be 12 mourning doves, plus two white wings.

In the Sept. 17 Rio grande season, the bag limit will be 12 doves, not to include more than two white wings.

Shooting hours vary. On the first two weekends in September in the Rio Grande zone, the hours are noon to sunset. Starting Sept. 17, the shooting hours will be 30 minutes prior to sunrise to sunset.

The sunrise-sunset hours also will be in effect in the Panhandle and Central zones.

Tom Brown Inc. down but not out

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Although financial results for fiscal 1983 were not good at Tom Brown Inc., compared to the unprecedented growth of the previous few years, shareholders were told to keep a long term perspective during the company's annual meeting Wednesday.

The company reported a $15.9 million loss on revenues that dipped by almost 50 percent from fiscal 1982.

"I think you'll see activity pick up, but it won't be a boom like in 1981," chairman Tom Brown told the group. "If so, we will have suffered for naught. This industry can be very solid based on economics in the U.S.A."

Company president Donald L. Evans said he saw the light at the end of the tunnel. Several indicators are starting to rise, according to the two men. These include lease activity (many three- or five-year leases signed during the boom will be expiring soon).

Brown said a recovery in "smokestack" America is the key to increased natural gas demand. The company has continued to drill and develop major gas plays in spite of reduced prices and takes from pipelines.

TOM BROWN INC. reported a net loss of $15.9 million or 41 cents per share on operating revenues of $112.8 million for the year ended March 31, 1983. A year earlier, the company enjoyed net income of $20.4 million on revenues of $216.8 million.

"There is no getting around it — the last 18 months have been very difficult for the company and for the oil industry," Evans said. "You can see our austerity program is firmly in place."

The company reduced its staff from 1,700 to 650 employees during the year.

Evans re-emphasized, however, his optimism for the company and industry over the long term, saying the current slowdown is only temporary. Company management continues to believe the industry will be slow for the next 12 to 18 months, but that it will rebound.

The future of Tom Brown and the oil industry "has never been brighter," Evans said; there has never been a better time to drill because costs are down. Both he and Brown said prices for tubular goods and oilfield services show signs of starting to rise again.

HE SAID ANY energy industry recovery will be based on increased efficiency and organization, projected gas shortages in the middle 1980s and reduced finding costs for oil and gas.

Evans urged shareholders to view the industry from a broader perspective. In 1955 the contract drilling segment of the company began at the height of a drilling boom, when 3,000 rigs were running. The count dropped to 800 over the next 10 to 15 years.

During that slow period, Tom Brown Inc. grew from one drilling rig to 12, and business increased likewise.

"We know how to handle these kinds of times," Evans said.

The company's three oilfield service subsidiaries experienced sharp sales reductions during the past year.

HARDEST HIT was Oncor Corporation, which manufactures and rents drilling tools. The Houston company saw its operating revenues drop from $100 million in fiscal 1982 to $35.6 million in fiscal 1983.

Oncor has had dramatic personnel cutbacks and worked to reduce its bank debt, inventories and accounts receivables. At the same time, it continued with research and development of two new products, one a downhole drill motor which will shortly be produced commercially.

Oncor President William Chunn told shareholders the year was very disappointing and that fiscal 1984 was expected to be flat as well.

"We are seeing modest improvements in orders and pricing integrity. Although the recovery is going to be agonizingly slow, we are confident we have hit bottom and we're going to dig our way up from here," he said.

Contract drilling revenues fell from $69 million to $31 million during the year and rig utilization dropped from around 94 percent to 45.9 percent. The company reduced its personnel dramatically and shut down its drilling division in the Williston Basin of the Rocky Mountains.

EVANS SAID he didn't foresee the Williston operation starting up again for the next 12 to 18 months. The company still maintains an active production department there, however.

Last September, Tom Brown restructured its drilling department to create TMBR Drilling Inc. In spite of falling revenues and rig utilization, the new company managed to keep up a positive cash flow in all four quarters of the year.

TMBR retired three rigs and stacked several more, and has focused once again on the Permian Basin so that it can concentrate activities closer to Midland, according to the annual report.

Of the common practice of low bidding for rig work, Evans said the company was not about to drill for nothing. "One thing we can still do is add and subtract," he said. "You don't recognize what a feat it was to generate positive cash flow in the quarters ended December, March and this June."

Evans said by the time the national rig count climbs back up to between 2,600 and 2,700, profit margins will be improved. At one time, the company had 32 rigs, but Evans said he doesn't think Tom Brown will ever again operate more than 20, possibly 25 at the maximum.

EVANS PREDICTED a "great last half of 1983 and an outstanding 1984, '85, and '86."

He said spot crude prices were rising slightly, inventories are being built up now in advance of the winter months, the domestic and world recessions are ending, and consumption is starting to rise again.

Gas reserves in the nation are the lowest they have been in many years, he said, with only an eight year reserve life. In 1982, 40 percent of the gas consumed came from wells drilled between 1979 and 1982. By projecting into the future, Evans said it was obvious the rig count must climb back to at least 3,000 "or we will work ourselves into the same trap we had in 1977 when we had to shut down schools and hospitals in the East.

"We certainly don't think it's going to stay tough forever," he said. "We are not the type of company to run for cover, but we look for a better way of doing it, to remain competitive...with an entrepreneurial spirit."

Coal plans challenged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pushing a possible new court fight over who controls the billions of tons of minerals owned by the government, a House committee is challenging the Reagan administration's plans to accelerate new coal mining in the West.

The House Interior Committee voted 27-14 along party lines Wednesday to forbid Interior Secretary James Watt from selling almost half a billion tons of government-owned coal reserves in Montana and North Dakota next month.

Interior Department officials had indicated that Watt would ignore the vote, contending that it was unconstitutional under a recent Supreme Court decision, and proceed with the Fort Union sale scheduled for Sept. 14.

Following the vote, however, Doug Baldwin, a spokesman for the department, conferred with Watt by telephone and indicated to reporters afterwards that a delay was not beyond the realm of possibilities.

BLM streamlines leasing regulations

SANTA FE — Oil and gas leasing procedures on the nation's public lands will be simplified and streamlined, following recent rule changes announced by the Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management, according to BLM Director Robert F. Burford.

The regulations spell out leasing procedures on 300 million acres managed by BLM, another 300 million acres managed by other Federal agencies, and approximately 65 million acres of state or privately-owned lands where mineral rights are reserved to the Federal government.

The new regulations make no changes in availability of wildlife refuge system lands in the lower 48 states for leasing, Burford said.

"Lands that were considered closed to leasing under the old regulations remain closed. Lands where we were bound to accept applications remain open to the filing of applicatons," he said.

On refuge lands subject to lease applicaton, no lease may be issued without a determination by the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service that leasing would be compatible with the purpose for which the refuge was established.

The regulations will also:

- Result in automated selection of a single applicant for lease award under the simultaneous oil and gas leasing system, rather than a first, second or third priority applicant as in the past, and will provide for a redrawing from among the original applicants if the single applicant is not awarded a lease;

— Provide that all filing fees, except for $75, will be returned to an applicant in the simultaneous oil and gas leasing system whenever an application covering several tracts cannot be processed by BLM computer because the application is improperly executed.

Additional provisions and details are contained in a Federal Register notice published on July 22, 1983.

States pick up slack, some industries complaining

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Responding to public concern over the dangers of hazardous materials, officials in many states and localities are imposing new restrictions on how, when and where these materials are transported. The result is a complex patchwork of diverse, often inconsistent regulations.

A hazardous material is defined as a "substance or material in a quantity and form which may pose an unreasonable risk to health and safety of the public." Estimates are that each year more than 4.5 billion tons of hazardous materials are transported and that each day, more than 2.5 million tons of such shipments move through the U.S. by truck, air, rail and pipeline. By the end of the decade, the total number of shipments is expected to double.

Historically, the federal government has pre-empted state and local governments from regulating interstate transportation. But when serious accidents occur, it is the state and local governments which have prime responsibility for emergency response.

For example, the Department of Transportation reported that in 1980 there were 16,000 reported incidents involving hazardous materials, approximately 14,000 of which occured on highways. The accidents resulted in 19 deaths and more than $10 million in property damages. However, in that same year, the federal government committed only 47 employees to highway accident investigation.

In light of the federal government's lack of involvement in this problem, the states have been picking up the slack.

Industries argue, however, that complying with these uncoordinated efforts adds to the cost of their products without increasing safety. The challenge to state, local and federal officials is to strike a balance between industry's concerns and the public's safety.

What is needed, claims a National Research Council (NRC) committee, is more active leadership from DOT and a "more rational risk management approach grounded in a written statement of the federal government's safety goals and overall regulatory role."

The subject came up at the meeting of the NRC's Steering Committee to Develop a National Strategy for the Transportation of Hazardous Materials and Hazardous Wastes in the 1980s, which heard testimony from experts that the safety record for transport of the approximately 2,400 different materials — ranging from gasoline to chlorine to explosives — is good compared to that of general transportation.

To insure safe transportation of the growing volume of hazardous goods in the future, the committee called for better coordination and definition of duties among the various agencies, simplification of regulations and more uniform enforcement and training.

Safety could be improved, the committee said, if regulations were easier to understand and if enforcement was more uniform.

A major way to reduce complexity while increasing flexibility, it said, would be to replace current regulations — requiring, for example, containers made of certain materials or sizes — with performance standards specifying factors such as strength, but leaving the method of compliance to the shipper.

The criss-crossing responsibilities of public agencies and private companies during a hazardous emergency, the panel warned, demand that "immediate attention" be given to planning, training and designation of control during emergencies.

Several separate events have taken place since the conference was held last month.

The Chemical Manufacturers Association has announced it will contract for a $1 million study by Universities Associated for Research and Education in Pathology, an independent consortium of 15 major universities, "to provide the scientific foundation needed to help the government develop sound public policy on health and hazardous waste."

A Heritage Foundation analyst called on Congress to immediately ban the landfilling of all hazardous waste in light of the alarming increase in groundwater contamination the country has experienced over the past several years. Paul Langerman said scientific evidence points to the fact that landfill is unsafe and will, almost without exception, leak and fail.

A diverse group from environmental organizations, industry and government published a new handbook, "Siting Hazardous Waste Management Facilities" to provide a factual basis for discussion "among people involved in setting up hazardous facilities."

"Dialogue should be based among other things on credible information about the environmental integrity of a site, the need for the facility, the performance characteristics of the facility, and the financial stability and competence of the operator," the Conservation Foundation, Chemical Manufacturers Association and the National Audubon Society booklet asserted.

The National Transportation Safety Board recently concluded two days of hearings addressing safety issues associated with the handling of hazardous materials in tank cars at railyards in population centers.

The board reviewed tank car safety standards, railyard handling of hazardous materials, and public emergency preparedness plans to evaluate measures that could lessen the likelihood of spills of explosives and flammable or toxic chemicals.

JOBS FOR MINORITY WOMEN

The Labor Department's Women's Bureau has launched a nine-month pilot project to improve the job hunting skills of middle-income minority women between 35 and 50 years of age. The program, called "Project Discovery," will assist women who are seeking to enter or re-enter the workplace because of divorce, separation, or widowhood; who have lost jobs recently, or who are trying to move out of unfulfilling or dead-end jobs.

The program will be carried out by Links Inc., a nonprofit national organization comprised chiefly of black women. A workshop will be designed to address the support service needs of the women. The sessions will focus on self-awareness, career exploration, transfer of job skills, resource awareness, networking, and exposure to the job marketplace. The workshop design will be pilot-tested in Baltimore.

SMALL BUSINESSES

More than 8,000 proposals from small businesses have been received in response to federal research and development contract bids in connection with the Small Business Innovation Research Program. The program directs 11 federal agencies with large research and development budgets to channel more research and development contracts to small hi-tech firms. The Department of Energy received 1,700 proposals; 4,000 firms responded to the Department of Defense solicitation. The Department of Transportation received over 350 proposals.

AROUND AND ABOUT

The Commerce Department holds that while sun-reflecting films on office building windows reduce the energy needed for cooling, these summertime savings are offset by increased heating energy demands since the films also deflect solar energy during the winter . . . The General Services Administration will begin phasing in this fall the use of charge cards.

$19,505,000 Drilling Fund Closes

Parker & Parsley Petroleum Company, Midland, Texas, has announced the closing of its 1983-A Development Drilling Program effective July 1, 1983. The funds available for partnership operations include $19,505,000 contributed by Parker & Parsley Limited Partners, plus $1,950,500 contributed by Parker & Parsley, the General Partner. Emphasis will be on development drilling prospects primarily in the Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeastern New Mexico.

OIL FACTS

1918

Colombia — Mike Benedum and Joe Trees, owners of the Tropical Oil Company, drill in the midst of a primeval jungle, and at 80 feet a 50 barrels a day flow starts. On April 20, 1918, the well comes in flowing 5,000 barrels a day from 2,260 feet. Before the year was over they have two more wells — both better than the first. Benedum and Trees then deal with Jersey leaders, and a Jersey affiliate takes over Tropical stock valued at $33 million.

Smiling Texan gets little to do from close-mouthed Hoosier

By SARAH MCCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Texas' big-smiling Governor Mark White came up against the close-mouthed Hoosier, Rep. Phil Sharp (D—Ind.) when the former checked up on the bill to deregulate natural gas Wednesday, and consequently the score was zero, according to observers of the conversation.

Enter, White, friendly, seeking to cut the ice by telling a few jokes he had heard at the governors' conference in Maine. The Hoosier who is chairman of the House subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels, which has just reporteod a bill pertaining to natural gas to the full House Committee on Energy and Commerce, was evidently not in a joking mood.

White said it would be helpful if a bill to regulate all phases of natural gas could emerge from Congress, and Sharp expressed the view that "that is just the problem," whatever that means. Anyway he did not seem to think it could or it should do all things deregulating to the gas industry.

The governor was left sort of like a boy standing on one foot, then the other by the former professor, Sharp.

The bill which came from Sharp's subcommittee is termed by the Texans who helped put it together a "compromise." The Sharp forces recalled the Governor never once mentioned the word "compromise" but was talking about full deregulation.

Sharp's staff correct people when they speak of the measure as a bill to "deregulate" gas. They point out that the form in which the bill emerged from the subcommittee is not a deregulating bill as it does not deregulate "old" gas.

The Governor expessed the view that if there were to be deregulation, the price of "old" gas might go higher in some areas. That could be the Midwest. The midwesterner indicated that might be "part of the problem".

Close associates of Sharp are betting now that there will no deregulation of gas in the final bill but that the deregulation deadlines now in the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 will be allowe' to remain and that the legislation which emerges from the Energy and Commerce committee may pertain only to contracts.

Six injured

WEATHERFORD, Texas (AP) — Natural gas leaking from a 120-foot drilling rig exploded while a crew was working, burning six men and causing an estimated $1.5 million in damages, fire officials said.

Capt. Bobby Johnston, of the Parker County Fire Department, said the explosion occurred at 11 a.m. Wednesday near this small community 30 miles east of Fort Worth.

"We were fortunate that all six men weren't killed instantly, although that may not be much comfort for the families of the men who are critical," said Rick Williamson, president of Williamson Drilling, which was drilling the hole for RAW Energy Corp.

Distilleries try to improve tequila's image

TEQUILA, Mexico (AP) — The folks who produce a potent drink from the succulent juice of a desert cactus are trying to do something about their image.

Tequila is suffering from an identity crisis.

"We have only ourselves to blame," said J. Ramon Yanez Mutio, director of the Tequila Industry Regional Chamber of Commerce. "We're almost ready to start an institutional campaign to dignify tequila."

Tequila producers say their mighty mash has been maligned by tales of lost souls who quaff the stuff straight with lemon and salt on the side — and wake up the next morning wishing they hadn't.

That image is too macho, they say, because tequila is a sophisticated beverage.

"We're not in that era of the macho Mexican anymore," said Roberto Rosales, production chief at the Cuervo distillery in this central Mexican town of 25,000. "We're almost on a level with a brandy."

Mexico consumes 6.3 million gallons annually, the United States 5 million gallons and the rest of the world 1.3 million gallons, Yanez Mutio said. He said growth that took off in the 1960s with the expansion of the U.S. export market is continuing, "but only a little."

Tequila distillers already have started individual campaigns to sell their product to a more sophisticated market.

An advertisement for Sauza's top-of-the-line Conmemorativo tequila shows a man in coat and tie savoring his drink in front of an ornately carved wooden bar well stocked with competitive imported whiskeys and liqueurs.

Competitor Jose Cuervo promotes a mixed drink called the "Vampire" with tequila, the popular "sangrita" chili-based accompaniment, orange juice, salt and lime.

Tequila, located 35 miles west of Guadalajara and 360 miles northwest of Mexico City, has the largest concentration of tequila distilleries anywhere. There are at least 13. But no one is certain if the town gave the name to the drink or if it was the other way around.

One legend has it that centuries ago Indians saw a lightning bolt strike a blue agave cactus, split it open and cook it to form a sugary liquid. They sampled the liquid and found it to be a tasty liquor.

Modern distilling methods were not learned until after the arrival of the Spanish colonizers in the 16th century.

A mural at the Sauza distillery, which along with Cuervo is a founder and a giant of the industry, shows the history of tequila starting with the lightning bolt. It ends with a scene of outdoor revelry that comes close to an orgy.

Diana Kennedy in her encyclopedic "The Cuisines of Mexico" writes that it generally is believed that tequila was not distilled until the middle of the 18th century.

Most regions of Mexico have their distinctive liquors. The best known other than tequila is mezcal from the southern state of Oaxaca, which comes with a worm at the bottom of the bottle. Tradition has it that by the time you finish the bottle you don't care if you eat the worm.

By government regulation, tequila can be distilled only in the Jalisco region surrounding Tequila, from the blue agave cactus grown there.

The cactus has distinctive, spear-like leaves that jut up in the shape of a crown. Fields of it flank the roads leading to Tequila.

Rosales said the blue agave takes nine to 12 years to reach maturity. The cactus changes its character if grown elsewhere and cannot be used to make tequila, Rosales said.

The leaves are stripped from the cactus, leaving only its pineapple-like heart to start the distilling process. They are tossed into ovens and at Cuervo are cooked for 66 hours.

A sweet but slightly acrid smell from the fermentation process pervades the distilleries. Both Cuervo and Sauza date back to 1800, and despite expansions they have retained their colonial-style, white adobe walls in an effort to keep their historical flavor.

The softened cactus hearts are taken to mills and cut into pieces to make it easier for the juices to be extracted. The sugar and water mixture is homogenized and fermented in vats before it is distilled.

The storage area at Cuervo can hold 400,000 gallons of tequila and smells more like the final product. The warehouses are stocked with barrels as the alcohol ages to produce its variety of brands.

The white tequila stands for at least 15 days. "Especial" stands at least one year to become a darker liquid; "Centenario" for two years, and the "1800" brand is aged 2½ to three years.

Fireman thinks heart will run out of steam

Hearst Feature Service

STANFORD, Calif. — The Massachusetts fireman whose hometown raised $60,000 for a heart transplant four years ago has settled into an uneasy life 3,000 miles from home, with a mended heart instead of a new one.

Too sick to work, but too well to receive a donor heart, Fred Kelley often feels he is merely marking time. Sooner or later, he thinks, his own heart will run out of steam.

When Stanford University Hospital rejected him for a transplant in 1979, it was a shock to Kelley, 43, and to the town of Framingham, Mass., which had voted to tax its citizenry to help pay for the operation. Specialists at a Massachusetts hospital had concluded that Kelley's heart, damaged by two heart attacks attributed in part to the strain of firefighting, could not be repaired. They recommended him for a transplant at Stanford, and the fundraising began.

But after Kelley arrived at Stanford he was judged not near enough to death to justify the risky transplant. Because transplants are still quasi-experimental, Stanford requires that patients be so ill, with pain even while resting, that they are unlikely to live another six months.

Stanford surgeons performed a coronary bypass operation in 1980 that improved the blood flow to Kelley's damaged heart muscle. The success of the surgery supported the Stanford specialists' opinion that the operation could be done safely and leave Kelley with better odds for survival than a transplant.

"The surgeons did what Massachusetts General said they couldn't do," said Dr. Mark Periroth, the Stanford cardiologist who monitors Kelley's condition. While the former firefighter's future is uncertain, Periroth said, statistically people in his condition have about an 80 percent chance of living five years following surgery. A transplant recipient's chances of living that long are a bit less, about 64 percent.

Kelley said he is not sorry about being refused for the transplant — "No one wants one unless he really needs to have it" — but the possibility of his heart going sour hangs constantly over his head. Consequently, Kelley, his wife and one of his five children have elected to stay near Stanford, a continent away from where he grew up.

It is a difficult life. Living near the medical center on the advice of his physicians meant selling the family's ranch house in Framingham. His $1,000 monthly pension covers the San Francisco area's inflated rental costs, with only a few hundred dollars left for essentials.

The extraordinary tax voted by the citizens of Framingham, a town whose residents have been poked, surveyed and kept track of for decades in a long-term study of heart disease, came after a private insurer refused to cover Kelley's potential transplant. The bypass operation and subsequent medical bills have whittled the original $60,000 in Kelley's fund down to $20,000. At that rate, if he were to need a transplant in the future, Kelley would have to appeal again for money. Stanford requires that a transplant candidate be prepared to pay $125,000 at the outset, or have that much insurance coverage. The operation itself with follow-up medical care can cost more than $200,000.

"If the money ran out, I'd have to look towards the town again," said Kelley. "I'd have to hope they'd pay my medical bills."

Philosophical about his medical condition, Kelley is less sanguine about the policies of most major insurance companies that continue to classify heart transplant surgery as "experimental" 15 years after the operation was first performed.

"I understand the president of Blue Cross has written to President Reagan asking for guidance," Kelley said. "The government should have nothing to do with this. Transplants should be covered by insurance, just the way cancer is. Don't tell me about the risks and the expense. Look how much money they spend on chemotherapy for cancer patients who might not live more than six months. We take that chance because we don't want people to die."

As for Kelley's situation, aside from the publicity about his case "he's not different from thousands of people" with similar heart disease, said Periroth, his physician. "He can live a relatively comfortable but sedentary life, but I think he may have an extra psychological burden, having to justify to everyone the intial response (the fundraising effort) to his condition."

Mom grieves daughter's death

VERDUNVILLE, W.Va. (AP) — In this coal town where "everybody knows everybody," folks never expected the national tragedy of child killing to touch them — until one of their own was found abused and slain in a hollow near her home.

The discovery of 12-year-old Tanya Lynn Johnson's battered body July 23 shattered the calm of this community of 900 citizens about 90 miles southeast of Charleston, where parents had felt safe to let their children roam the surrounding hills to go berry-picking or catch lightning bugs.

"Not here!" said Pam Browning, the mother of an 11-year-old girl. "That's something you'd expect in the big cities, but not here in Verdunville. Why, everybody's related and everybody knows everybody else...

"Nobody's letting their kids get very far away from them right now. And the kids, they're scared, too. My little girl won't even walk up the hollow by herself since that happened."

Easter Johnson, Tanya's mother, spent 10 agonized days waiting for her daughter's body to be found.

"I don't think I ever got more than 15 minutes' sleep on any of those nights," Mrs. Johnson said, a photo of Tanya in her hand. "Night after night I kept lying there, waiting for her to walk through the door and tell me where she'd been."

She looked down at the photograph of the blonde, curly-haired girl wearing a cowboy hat.

On a wall calendar above Mrs. Johnson a circle has been drawn around a date: July 13.

"The evening of that day was the last time I ever saw her alive," the mother of nine said. "It was sometime after 7 o'clock — I know it wasn't 8 o'clock because she wanted to see the Elvis Presley movie that came on then — that she came in and said Cleve Hiram was across the road and had asked her go to berry-picking with him."

Mrs. Johnson said she was upset by the invitation, because it came from a man in his 20s.

"I told her to never go off with a man alone in the bushes," she said. "And she told me, 'Okay, mommy, I won't go.' "

The friendly fifth-grader did leave the tiny yard, however.

"My youngest daughter, Tammy, saw her crossing the railroad tracks and hollered at her," said Mrs. Johnson.

Tammy nodded and picked up the story.

"Yes, I hollered and she told me she was going over to play on the big rope swing across the creek. She told me to tell mommy where she was going and to yell for her when Elvis came on at 8 o'clock."

At the prescribed hour Tammy started calling for her sister. When there was no answer, her mother joined her at the front door but there was no reply except the echoes of their own voices.

"I never saw her again," said Mrs. Johnson. "It all seems like a nightmare and sometimes I think it's not real, but I know it is."

Ten days later, a member of a search party found the girl's body in a thicket less than a mile from home.

Authorities said Tanya, nude from the waist down when found, apparently had been sexually assaulted before she was killed.

"Tanya didn't fool with boys any, she was just a little girl," said her mother. "I think Cleve Hiram lured her up that hollow."

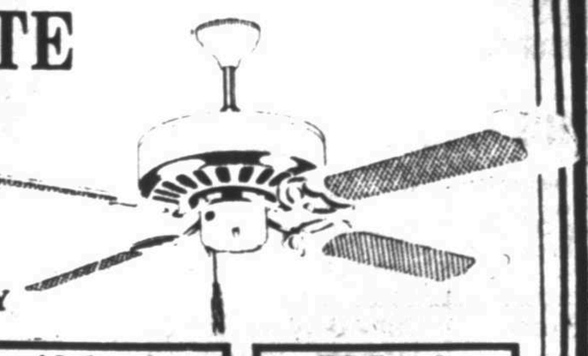

The next day, authorities charged Cleve Hiram Messer, a 26-year-old Mount Gay resident, with murder. But the arrest has done little to assuage the community's fear or the Johnson family's grief.

Mrs. Johnson says she has been haunted by visions of her daughter, calling vainly for help.

"Tanya had a lot of friends and, it seems to me, she was the most beautiful kid I had," the mother said. "I'll never get over it."

Children taken from House of Judah must adjust to new life away from 'law, order'

By FREDERICK STANDISH
Associated Press Writer

ALLEGAN, Mich. (AP) — Scattered in eight counties and separated from their parents, 66 children from the House of Judah are discovering new lives in foster homes a world away from the "law and order" punishment of their tightly knit sect.

"These are kids who have grown up in a world where the controls are not necessarily controls from within, but external controls," said Myrna McNitt, an assistant administrator for the Allegan County Probate and Juvenile Court. The court has temporary custody of the children while adults in the sect shuttle between courtrooms and their religious camp.

"If you're bad, you're going through a law-and-order, cause-and effect kind of punishment," she said in an interview.

The punishment, or "chastisement" as the sect calls it, may have contributed to the beating death of a 12-year-old boy last month at the 22-acre camp run by the "Black Hebrew Israelite Jews," authorities say.

The youngster's mother, Ethel Yarbough, 33, is charged with manslaughter and five of the sect's leaders are charged with one count each of child cruelty.

Within five days of the boy's death, 66 of his campmates and playmates, ranging in age from 4 months to 16 years, were taken away from their rural world of blue and white mobile homes and sent to foster homes in eight counties.

"We don't really know what the needs are of these kids," Ms. McNitt said, agreeing to speak only if specific cases were not discussed.

Doctors and psychiatrists have been checking the children and juvenile court officials are awaiting their findings. None of the children suffers from any serious medical problems.

For now, care of the children will fmllow established guidelines with some modifications, including adjustments for their religious beliefs and dietary practices, which ban pork and shellfish.

Ms. McNitt said foster parents usually can expect children to undergo "a grieving period" and feel anger after being separated from their families, friends and homes.

But she said the amount of "extreme external control" in these 66 cases is more than a foster parent normally would see.

"I would say probably the biggest test is them going to school," Ms. McNitt said. "That's where kids typically struggle — meeting new friends, being the new kid on the block, kids asking questions of why you're not living with your mother.

"It's a struggle for any foster child," she continued, "and it's going to be a struggle for these kids maybe even more because ... of not having the social experience.

"Their activities out in the community were group activities where everybody went together," Ms. McNitt added. The sect, born in Chicago, settled on the land it owns in this rural Michigan town in the late 1970s, so some of the children had lived restricted lives for a long time.

Some of the children were placed in foster homes with brothers or sisters, but no more than four of them were put in the same place.

Typically, 5 to 7 percent of foster children run away, but none of the children of the House of Judah has tried after nearly a month in foster care, Ms. McNitt said.

The children were kept from their parents for more than a week before supervised visits began, she said. During those visits, the parents, most often mothers, met with their children for a few hours somewhere away from the foster home and the sect's camp.

But seeing and talking with a parent can add to the problems.

"Every time the child has visitation, no matter how long in foster care, they have some kind of grief reaction," Ms. McNitt said.

Bartenders 'think ugly'

HOUSTON (AP) — Beauty contests are old-hat.

So the Houston chapter of the Multiple Schloerosis Society has equipped 160 bartenders across the city with "ugly kits" for its "Ugliest Bartender Contest," set to begin tomorrow(Tuesday) and last three weeks.

The kits include T-shirts, posters and buttons that sport the slogans "Let's Get Ugly" and "Think Ugly."

"Everybody has a beauty contest. This is a much more original and unusual idea," said Vicki Uchida, executive director of the MS Society's Houston chapter, one of about 100 that will host the contest this year.

"We once had an outstanding bartender contest," Ms. Uchida said, "and it just did not catch on."

Physical ugliness is not necessarily looked for in the contestants, Ms. Uchida said.

Economists smell trouble for U.S.economy

NEW YORK (AP) — By now you've heard: The economy is bouncing back, and quickly. But even as people's financial worries ease, warning signs are emerging.

The new fear is that the economic engine, after stalling through a 16-month recession, may "overheat" this year and send interest rates spurting upward.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain why some economists fear the economic recovery — which began slowly last December — may not be sustained:

Q. How much has the economy improved this year?

A. Measured by the gross national product, which is the government's main gauge of economic performance, the improvement has been dramatic. The GNP, which measures the value of all goods and services produced in the nation, expanded at a robust 8.7 percent annual rate in the April-June quarter. It had risen at a 2.6 percent rate in the year's first three months. On the other hand, interest rates fell in January and February but have risen in recent months.

Q. What's the worry about "overheating"?

A. Some economists say a too-rapid expansion of money to finance the economic recovery will open the door to a new surge of inflation. That, in turn, could throw the economy back into the same wage-price spiral that brought on the 1981-82 recession. This concern about inflation is linked to historical precedent: Price increases were moderate during the 1974-75 recession, only to soar later.

Q. Does that mean interest rates are headed higher?

A. No one knows for sure, but some prominent economists think higher interest rates are inevitable. Henry Kaufman, the chief economist at Salomon Brothers Inc. in New York, said recently that expectations of a strong economic recovery "will propel both short- and long-term interest rates irregularly higher." He also said he expected new inflationary pressures "in the next year or so."

Q. Will the economy return to recession soon?

A. Few economists, if any, believe the economy will stop growing this year, although there already are signs that the rate of growth is beginning to slow this summer. Some economists, however, have much less faith in the outlook for 1984.

Chemical weapons will be fought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Opponents of the Pentagon's plan to build deadly chemical weapons for the first time in 14 years are vowing anew to fight the issue on the floor when House and Senate negotiators bring forth a compromise defense bill.

The announcements by Reps. Clement J. Zablocki, D-Wis., and Ed Bethune, R-Ark., came after the conferees on Wednesday reaffirmed an earlier decision to include $130 million for the nerve gas program in the fiscal 1984 authorization bill.

With the measure still being fashioned behind closed doors, it appeared unlikely that either the House or the Senate would vote on it today before beginning a recess that extends to Sept. 12.

But just in case, Zablocki and Bethune said they would raise a parliamentary objection to considering it because the rules require that conference reports be filed three days before they are considered.

Nerve gas and the MX nuclear missile were the most controversial issues during the congressional floor debates that preceded passage of the separate versions of the defense bill last week.

The provision on nerve gas had been written into the original Senate bill but rejected by the House by a 14-vote margin. The House later decided by a 95-vote margin to delete the production funds, but a similar amendment failed, 50-49, after Vice President George Bush cast the tie-breaking ballot.

Given those votes, Zablocki said in a statement Wednesday, "it is simply unacceptable" that the conferees authorized a program "that does not have the support of a majority of either house of Congress."

Zablocki, who chairs the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said this will cause him to vote against a defense authorization bill for the first time in his 33 years in Congress.

'Queen Mum' celebrates birthday

LONDON (AP) — Britain's favorite grandmother, the Queen Mother Elizabeth, turned 83 today, as active and well-loved as she was as wife to King George VI nearly a half century ago.

The shy young woman who became a queen during one of the monarchy's darkest hours, later the brave wife whose courage helped Britain endure Nazi bombs, she is today an energetic octogenarian whose popularity has never waned.

"The queen may be admired, but her mother is simply adored," said the mass-circulation The News of the World in a birthday tribute. "She somehow always manages to pull off the difficult trick of looking queenly yet cuddly."

The "Queen Mum," as Britons call her, was spending most of her birthday with her family, Buckingham Palace said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Shelley Winters could lose her luxury two-bedroom apartment on Manhattan's Upper West Side in a court action launched by her landlord.

Winters

The modern high-rise, off Central Park West, was converted to co-operative ownership in 1980. But, according to court papers, Miss Winters still rents her apartment from its owner, Ralph McAfee.

In a complaint filed in Manhattan Supreme Court, the landlord contends Miss Winters, 60, has her primary residence in Beverly Hills and is registered to vote in Los Angeles County.

If the landlord wins the case he will not be required to offer the actress a new lease when her current one expires two years from now, and his lawyer says he does not plan to.

Miss Winters is currently appearing in the play "84 Charing Cross Road" at the Westport Country Playhouse in Connecticut. A secretary there said she could not be immediately reached for comment.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lillian Miller, better known to the audience of "The Merv Griffin Show" as Miss Miller, is recovering in a rehabilitation center after being attacked on a Hollywood street.

Miss Miller, 86, who has attended nearly every taping of the talk-variety show hosted by Merv Griffen, said she has been a recovering at the Bay Harbor Rehabilitation Center in Torrance from a fractured hip suffered when a man knocked her down at the corner of Hollywood and Vine on May 22.

"I'm stuck in this out-of-the-way place and I'm beside myself," she said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "None of my friends live here."

As she spoke, an arrangement of tiger lilies, roses and mums from Griffin was delivered to her room. She read the card: "We all miss you and hope you are doing well. Love, Merv."

Officer Sergio Diaz of the Los Angeles Police Department said Miss Miller was injured when a man bumped her five or six times with his hip. The man was held by witnesses until police arrived, but was later released, he said.

INDIAN SHORES, Fla. (AP) — Actor Burt Reynolds, whose plan to build a $10,000 heliport atop his Indian Shores condominium ran into opposition from neighbors, has the go-ahead for construction.

Reynolds

Several residents in the building overlooking the Gulf of Mexico said a heliport would be dangerous and noisy. Others said a chopper would chase tourists away.

Lawyers for the 47-year-old actor argued that the heliport wouldn't be used much, and would not be a hazard.

Permission for construction was granted by the Florida Department of Transportation on July 21.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Country and western singer Merle Haggard and his wife Leona, separated in June, have moved a step closer to divorce as their case was moved from Sacramento to Shasta County.

Haggard, 46, filed for divorce from his third wife in January 1981 after they had been married three years. Later they worked on staying together, but that was unsuccessful.

Under a temporary agreement reached in Sacramento Superior Court, Mrs. Haggard, also a singer-songwriter, will receive $25,000 per month, less her gross income. That support arrangement remains in effect pending a trial.

Cancer claims Carolyn Jones

Jones

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Carolyn Jones, who achieved fame as the weirdly beautiful Morticia on "The Addams Family" TV series, has died after spending her last months battling cancer at her Hollywood home.

Miss Jones, who died Wednesday, had been in and out of a coma for two or three weeks before her death, said her longtime friend and former publicist, Frank McFadden.

"She had been in the hospital but she came home about two months ago. She didn't want to stay in the hospital," McFadden said.

Born Carolyn Sue Jones in Amarillo, Texas, she went on to a career that spanned about 30 movies and an equal number of television appearances.

Various reference books disagreed on the year of her birth, making her either 50, 51 or 53 at the time of her death.

She began acting in Texas public schools and lied about her age to enter the Pasadena Playhouse when she was 15, three years under the minimum age of 18.

A talent scout saw her in a playhouse production and she was signed to appear as a playgirl in the William Holden film "The Turning Point," in 1952.

Among her stage appearances was one in "The Live Wire," directed by a young writer and later producer named Aaron Spelling, to whom she was married for 13 years.

Miss Jones won an Oscar nomination for the 1957 movie "The Bachelor Party," although she appeared on screen for only six minutes. She portrayed a lost and love-starved Greenwich Village beatnik.

Among her other films were "Desiree" with Marlon Brando, "Seven Year Itch," "The Tender Trap" with Frank Sinatra, "Marjorie Morningstar," "The Opposite Sex," "King Creole" with Elvis Presley, "Man in the Net," "Last Train From Gun Hill," "A Hole in the Head," "Career," "Ice Palace" with Richard Burton, "How the West Was Won" and "Heaven With a Gun" with Glenn Ford. Her last movie was "Good Luck Miss Wyckoff" in 1979.

Miss Jones perhaps was best known as the macabre Morticia in the 1960s TV series "The Addams Family."

The show, based on the Charles Addams cartoon characters, was set in a musty, decaying mansion filled with such curiosities as a disembodied hand the family affectionately referred to as "Thing."

Miss Jones was forced to drop out of her most recent series, "Capitol," after a year because of her lengthy illness.

Actor-director John Astin, who played Morticia's husband, Gomez, in "The Addams Family," remembered Miss Jones as "the consummate professional, not just a person of exceptional talent but someone with great wit and courage, a marvelous and indestructible sense of humor. We remained great friends."

"She was a marvelous person and a terrific actress," said ex-husband Spelling. "I hope she will always be remembered that way."

After her marriage to Spelling ended, Miss Jones married voice coach Herbert Greene. That marriage also ended in divorce, and two years ago, she wed actor Peter Bailey-Britton.

Miss Jones also is survived by a sister in Massachusetts. A memorial service was scheduled for Friday in Holywood, McFadden said.

Emmy nominations to be announced

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — Will NBC's "Hill Street Blues" extend its winning streak to three years? Can ABC's widely watched miniseries "The Winds of War" and "The Thorn Birds" rate as well with professional peers?

These and other questions were swirling throughout an anxious television industry as the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences prepared to announce nominees today for its 35th annual Emmy awards.

NBC was hoping the midmorning litany at the Pasadena Civic Auditorium would set the stage for another spectacular showing by the off-beat police drama "Hill Street Blues," which captured eight Emmys each in 1981 and 1982.

ABC had great expectations for its two blockbuster miniseries, "The Winds of War" and "The Thorn Birds," which both drew record-breaking audiences earlier this year.

And CBS was counting on "M-A-S-H," which attracted an army of viewers with its final show, to get equal recognition from the TV Academy.

A galaxy of TV stars was set to read off the long list of nominations in a wide range mf categories for prime-time programs telecast on ABC, CBS, NBC, PBS or syndicated between July 1, 1982, and June 30, 1983.

Among the categories were acting, writing, directing, best individual programs, and such crafts as sound, cinematography, electronic camera work and lighting.

The TV Academy does not judge programs made for pay television, which has its own industry association and awards system.

The actual presentation of Emmy awards will be Sept. 25 in ceremonies telecast by NBC from the Pasadena Civic Auditorium. It will be the seventh year the Emmys have been held at the stately facility about 10 miles north of downtown Los Angeles.

The technical and craft Emmys will be awarded at an earlier banquet and the highlights will be taped and shown during the telecast.

Eddie Murphy, irrepressible star of NBC's "Saturday Night Live," and Joan Rivers, recently named Johnny Carson's permanent guest host for NBC's "The Tonight Show," will be the hosts. Murphy also stars in the summer movie hits "48 HRS" and "Trading Places."

"They will be the pivotal base for our show theme of 'Fun and Comedy' and should assure one of the largest-ever Emmy viewing audiences," said Gary Smith, co-producer with Dwight Hemion for the third year.

Green returns to work after 20-month leave

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Booker T. "Billy" Green

Booker T. "Billy" Green is back at work.

Green, the 43-year-old suspended and then fired U.S. Postal Service supervisor, returned to work late last month after an absence of "20 months and 11 days."

"All of my employees were glad to see me back," Green said Wednesday. "Production is up."

Green was suspended without pay from his $27,000-a-year job in November 1981 after he was charged with murder in the Nov. 14, 1981, shooting death of Midland businessman R.J. Morris Sr., 50, following a dispute over a dice game in The Flats in Midland's southeast side.

In March 1982, he was tried for murder but was found guilty of the lesser offense of voluntary manslaughter, a crime of passion. The jury, however, could not agree on punishment, and the state judge declared a mistrial. In the subsequent trial, Green was acquitted. But before that trial had begun in July 1982, Postmaster David Holster approved the firing of Green, who then was still on suspension. The decision reportedly was made on the grounds that the USPS image would be damaged by its association with Green, that Green's employment would impede the efficiency of the USPS, that a conviction and prison sentence for Green was likely, and that possible on-the-job conflicts could be aroused between Morris's son, R.J. "Bubba" Morris Jr., a mail handler, and Green.

In June, the federal Merit Systems Protection Board, which heard Green's appeal last Nov. 30, reversed the USPS's firing of Green and ordered him reinstated on the job.

The USPS did not fight the ruling.

"We had the right to appeal it," Midland Postmaster Bill Williams said of the decision. "We didn't; it's too costly."

"We are not pleased with it," said Williams, who succeeded Holster, now retired. "We think it's wrong. We are not pleased...(but) We'll let bygones be bygones."

Williams, who said he was not familiar with the case against Green, said that Green is "just not the type of person we like to have around here." In theory, he said an individual's "personal life" should not affect his work or that of others. But "rightly or wrongly," the personal life of a postal worker may influence the public's image of the USPS.

"I don't feel like he represents the type of employees we have," the postmaster said.

Nevertheless, Williams said he would treat Green no differently than anyone else.

"As far as I'm concerned, he's starting out with a clean slate. I am not expecting any more or any less of him than I am of any other supervisor."

Green, a LSM (letter-sorting machine) supervisor, said he only wants to be treated fairly.

"That's all I want. I don't expect any more, no less. I never wanted anybody to give me nothing. He (Williams) treats me right; we'll get along fine."

Green, who supervises 31 employees, returned to work at a $29,392 salary and said he expects to get back pay. He had been doing backhoe work since his forced break with the USPS. He started working for the postal service in 1965.

Green said he rarely sees the postmaster and that he and Morris work different shifts.

Since November 1981, Green said his life has changed.

"I don't have any desire to go to those ugly places (bars, gambling houses) any more," he said. "I've changed my lifestyle. I go to church, sing in the choir, study the Bible."

Before his last trial, Green said the prosecution had offered him a three-month penitentiary sentence and a two-year probation if he were to plead guilty to voluntary manslaughter, which carries a two- to 20-year punishment range.

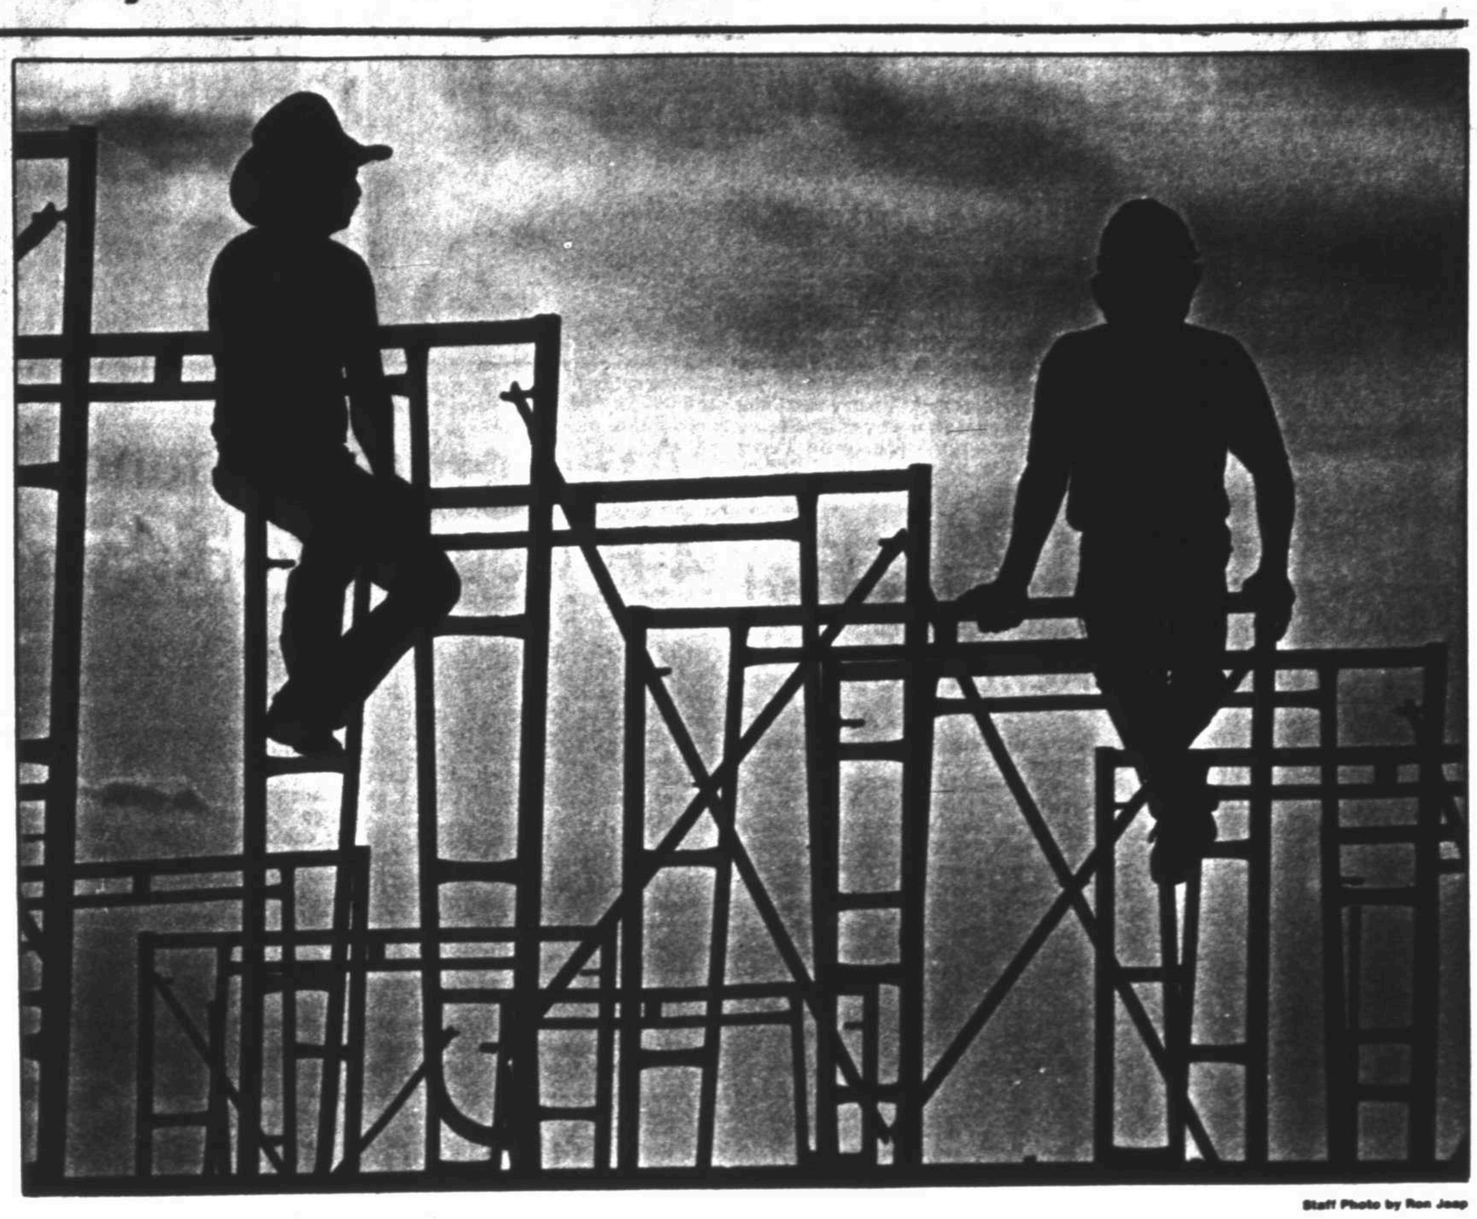

His youngest son, Marcus, now 9, had asked his father just to serve those 90 days and "come home to me," Green said.

"The Man — God — told me to go ahead with that trial," Green said. "I knew I was innocent in the eyes of God."

After Green's acquittal, Morris's widow, Dr. Ruby Morris, expressed outrage over the jury's verdict. She said her husband's death was a "cold-blooded and deliberate assassination...in a cowardly fashion" because of jealousy and envy.

"May God have mercy on him and all those other 'Christians' who felt he should be rewarded for violating one of God's commandments," she said.

"If this is justice, I don't want any part of it. This is white man's justice for black people, and the black race, as usual, is the loser."

City, county recommended for state funding

AUSTIN — A gubernatorial advisory committee on criminal justice has recommended the City of Midland, the county, school district and the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission receive more than $135,000 in state funding to continue operation of a rape crisis center and other projects.

The matching grants are in the fifth and final year.

The city will receive $12,161 to help fund a rape crisis center. According to Nan Gordon, director of the Midland Rape Crisis Center, the funds will be used for the center's operations and personnel. The project, to be funded from Oct. 1 to Sept. 30, 1984, requires a $46,425 matching grant from the city.

Ms. Gordon said she is already looking for alternative funding for 1985.

"We're in our fifth year," she said. "The grant was 100 percent the first year and decreased by 20 percent each year following. We've already applied for another grant from the Texas Department of Health and we'll look toward the community much more than we did in the past."

Other projects recommended are:

— $20,000 to Midland County to help fund a mini-computer and software for an automated data processing system. The county is required to match the grant with $20,000 to fund the project from Oct. 1 to Sept. 30, 1984.

Koch president must 'show cause' for actions

U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton has ordered Paul A. Olson, president of Midland's Koch Oil Co. of Texas Inc., to "show cause" why he should not be compelled to produce company records and to testify before the U.S. Department of Energy.

The government says Olson failed to respond to a DOE subpoena served him in August 1982.

He is to appear before Bunton at noon Wednesday in the courtroom of the George Mahon Federal Building.

Court records indicate that Olson was to testify in the Dallas DOE office last Sept. 17 but did not show up. James F. Murphy, manager of the DOE's Crude Reseller Program, has been conducting an audit of the compliance of Koch with the DOE's Mandatory Price and Allocation Regulations "with regard to purchases and sale of crude oil."

The audit of Koch, also known as Clayco Inc., apparently falls under provisions of the Economic Stabilization Act of 1970. The subpoena was issued by Gerald E. Bunger, a supervisory auditor of DOE.

Charles "Bro" Seltzer, president of Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin board of directors, discusses educational services offered by the organization.

Few ministers turnout for informal meeting

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A luncheon meeting at Planned Parenthood Wednesday drew a disappointing turnout from Midland ministers although the organization already has assisted one local church with a sex education program.

Only two ministers appeared for the second annual informal meeting, despite the turnout of a dozen clergymen at a similar meeting in Odessa Tuesday.

According to Midlander Charles "Bro" Seltzer, president of Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin Board of Directors, the purpose of the get-together is to provide information about the organization and the services it provides.

"We do believe every child should be a wanted child," Seltzer said. "We do not take any (religious) position whatsoever. We kind of stand in the position of a counselor or a friend."

Seltzer told the group, which included Planned Parenthood administrators, staff and board members, the organization is reaching out into other areas of community interest.

"Educational programs are the root of what we're trying to do," he said.

Planned Parenthood is available for religious leaders needing facts or figures about sex; at the same time, the organization uses local clergymen when a client requests moral guidance, Seltzer said.

A list of clergymen is available at Planned Parenthood for clients requesting spiritual or religious counseling.

"If (clients) need other input from other areas, such as religion we make that available for them.

"Whether a girl comes in to get birth control or whatever and finds out she is pregnant, she is faced with a difficult problem," Seltzer said, adding "the religious community has a definite input and definite guidance in helping.

"But also, if you feel you are incapable of counseling someone, come on over."

Man may be on his way to extinction

If the dodo had its way, this flightless, tufted-tailed fat bird still would be waddling about and looking for its wing extenders and a diet plan.

Dinosaurs would be feuding among themselves instead of filling up fuel tanks and crankcases.

And the coyote would be howling at your backdoor.

But the big-as-a-turkey and almost as smart dodo and its kin, the solitaire, died out. They were tasty to seamen's palates. They were not very elusive.

A shift in the earth's topography, the rise of mountain ranges in the Cretaceous period, and a change in climate did in the dinosaurs and untold other creatures. That's why there are no dinosaur rodeoes, steak or boots.

Gunpowder and pellets shot the passenger pigeon out of the skies and trees. The bird is extinct.

The coyote?

This coy creature is still around due to its man-like attributes: It's cunning and sly.

But the durable coyote is a bit smarter than civilized man, which is sometimes the coyote's friend but mostly its enemy. The coyote has outwitted every effort of man to make it as common as the dodo, the dinosaur and the passenger pigeon. The coyote simply won't die out. You see, at each sunrise and each sunset, coyotes recites their No. 1 Commandment: self-preservation. They act accordingly.

Man doesn't.

Man works at making himself extinct and so far has been unsuccessful. But given enough time, mankind, who has devised obvious ways, such as weapons of war, to make himself scarce, may succeed.

Meanwhile, he is taking the roundabout way to extinction but won't acknowledge it. He's abusing himself and the fair earth that gives him sustenance through the grace of God.

He pooh-poohs his blessings.

He fouls the air. Who now is crying against air pollution?

He soils the earth and takes away from the fertile soil without rebuilding it. Voices of conservation pale alongside those of avarice.

He dirties the water, dumps it, and expects more manna from the sky, plains and the aquifers. He is disappointed daily.

He abuses his body and mind. He wonders why he is diseased and warped.

What's sad is that man can do something about righting the wrong that he's done to the air, water, earth and to himself. Does he?

Man does as little as possible.

When the air gets so foul that he can't breathe without coughing, choking and spitting, he'll wonder what happened to the foresight of those before him. He'll think they were the real dodoes.

When the once fertile soil turns to desert, he'll ponder over why ranchers overgrazed, why farmers worked the soil to death, why lumbermen chopped down the trees, and why his forefathers preferred asphalt and concrete over grass, gardens, and wilderness.

He'll wonder why city and governmental planners and the people didn't take care of water, which is something they have some control over. Why did they misuse it and discard it instead of recycling it when they knew the availability of this natural resource was getting critical.

"It wasn't cost effective to recycle water," he'll read in history books and will be dumbfounded by their blindness.

Man is not too keen on long-range self-preservation.

Indeed, the coyote someday may be howling at your backdoor, but there may be no one to listen.

Two persons remain jailed on drug, theft charges

Two persons remained jailed this morning under bonds totaling $55,000 following their arrest by city detectives and narcotics agents earlier this week on drug and possession of stolen property charges.

Being held on $50,000 bond set by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry was 39-year-old Ramiro Aceves of 407 S. Tyler. Held under $5,000 bond was Aceves' pregnant, common-law wife, 22-year-old Andrea Cortez.

The couple was arrested at the Tyler Street address about 7:30 a.m. Tuesday after narcotics agents executed a search warrant based on a tip that drugs were in the residence.

Confiscated were 3½ pounds of marijuana, four "hits" of LSD in tablet form and a number of guns and tools believed stolen in at least two local burglaries in the past two months, according to police.

One of the burglaries occurred at Carver Center, which is being remodeled after sustaining extensive damage in a fire last year.

No value was placed on the drugs, but police said the tools —including welding equipment — were worth $4,500.

Area officers attend 4-H Council workshop

Kay Harkey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Terry Harkey of Monahans, and Rodney Adcock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jay Adcock of Odessa, are among 26 district 4-H officers who are attending a Texas 4-H Council workshop being held this week at the Texas Power and Light Youth Center at Trinidad.

They will be taught leadership skills, public speaking skills and techniques in working with committees to prepare them for leadership roles in conducting statewide 4-H activities.

Miss Harkey, 16, is involved in the Ward County 4-H program serving as president of the Senior Club, Queen of the Horse Club, Senior All-Around Winner of the county horse show, county food show winner, district horse judging team, state method demonstration, state public speaking, chairman of the Ward County 4-H Council, co-chairman of District 6, and named Gold Star Girl of Ward County in 1982.

Adcock, 18, is a graduate of Odessa High School. He served as president of the Ector County Horse Club, treasurer of the council and currently co-chairman of District 6. He has earned several honors in 4-H and AQHA horse shows and competes on the district and state horse judging team from Ector County. He was named in Who's Who Among High School Students and received the Fighting Heart award in football. Adcock was also named Gold Star Boy in Ector County in 1982.

Sellmeyer named officer for journalism association

Ralph Sellmeyer, a journalism professor at Midland College, has been named executive secretary-treasurer for the Community College Journalism Association. MC also becomes the headquarters for the CCJA.

The CCJA, which is affiliated with 15 other national press organizations, serves approximately 400 community colleges in the nation which offer journalism courses.

Sellmeyer came to MC in 1981 to chair the journalism department. He received his B.J. degree from the University of Missouri, Columbia, and his M.A. from the University of Missouri, Kansas City.

He has extensive experience as a newspaper reporter and editor and magazine editor and publisher. He has served as president of the Texas Public Relations Association, the Texas Journalism Educators Association and the Society of Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

Son of Curtis Mathes sues over fire death

DALLAS (AP) — The 29-year-old son of the late Curtis Mathes Jr. has filed a $6 million lawsuit against Air Canada and McDonnell-Douglas Corp. in connection with a June 2 fire aboard the airline's Flight 797.

Mathes, 54, and 22 other passengers died after the plane caught fire on its way from the Dallas-Fort Worth airport to Toronto. Mathes was chairman of the board of Curtes Mathes Co., a television manufacturer which was based in the Dallas suburb of Irving.

The suit, filed Wednesday in federal court in Dallas, alleged that Mathes' son, Curtis M. Mathes of Dallas, "has been deprived of the support and services of his father," the Dallas Morning News reported.

Air Canada was negligent in operating the plane, papers in the suit charged. The tragedy occurred after a fire broke out in the lavatory.

Denis Chagnon, spokesman for Air Canada in Montreal, told the News that the company has a policy of declining to comment on lawsuits.

Two other suits were filed previously in Dallas in connection with the fire on the Air Canada flight.

Publicity moves baby deaths trial

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
Associated Press Writer

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — The trial of a nurse charged with murdering a 15-month-old girl with injections of a powerful drug has been moved about 100 miles away because of intense publicity.

State District Judge Murray Jordan granted the defense's change of venue motion Wednesday and set an Oct. 17 trial date in Georgetown for nurse Genene Jones.

Ms. Jones, 33, is charged with injecting seven Kerrville area children with a paralyzing muscle relaxant in August and September of 1982.

Her trial should last several weeks because Kerr County District Attorney Ron Sutton says he plans to call about 70 witnesses.

The nurse first will be tried for the Sept. 17 death of Chelsea Ann McClellan, who died after treatment in the Kerrville clinic where Ms. Jones was employed.

Jordan denied Wednesday the defense's request for psychiatric examinations of Petti McClellan, Chelsea's mother, and Gwen Granter, a former receptionist at the clinic.

Defense attorney William Chenault said Mrs. McClellan's "rage, hatred and bitterness" might have altered her "to the point where truth becomes irrevelant."

Both women are expected to testify for the prosecution in Ms. Jones' trial.

Jordan agreed to order a psychiatric evaluation of Ms. Jones' former live-in babysitter, Kathy Ferguson, but only if she is called by Sutton to testify.

Ms. Ferguson has been in the San Antonio State Hospital, a mental institution, for the past month.

A Bexar County grand jury is investigating a string of suspicious infant deaths at the pediatric intensive care unit of Medical Center Hospital from 1978 to early 1982.

Ms. Jones worked at the hospital during the period being investigated, but has denied any wrongdoing.

Chenault and Ms. Jones' other court-appointed attorney, Joe Grady Tuck, introduced into evidence stacks of newspaper clippings and television footage to show the nurse could not receive a fair trial in Kerrville or anywhere in the vicinity of San Antonio, about 55 miles away.

Two local attorneys were called to testify about the "widespread prejudice" against the nurse.

"I don't think there are 32 people (in Kerrville) who don't think she's guilty," said James L. Elliott, a criminal attorney.

Police search for reported rape, kidnapping suspect

ODESSA — Odessa police are searching for a man in connection with a reported kidnapping and rape early today.

According to reports, a woman in her 20s was abducted from an east-side 7-11 convenience store at gunpoint about 2:30 a.m. She called police from a payphone on the west side of the city shortly after 4 a.m. and said she had been raped and released.

Officers are searching for a slender, blond white male in his early 20s, about 5 feet 11 inches tall. He was reportedly wearing a blue shirt, blue jeans and boots and driving an older model blue-gray Cadillac DeVille.

Post office parking to close Friday afternoon, weekend

The customer parking area at the Main Post Office, 100 E. Wall Avenue, will be closed Friday afternoon through the weekend.

According to Postmaster Bill Williams, the lot will be closed from 5:15 p.m. Friday through 7 a.m. Monday for repaving work.

Customers may park directly across the Federal Building, the corner of Baird Street and East Wall Avenue, during the repairs.

The postal service apologizes for the inconvenience and it is hoped, according to Williams, that when completed the customer parking area will better serve the needs of the public.

Fire damages laundry room

The city fire marshal's office is investigating a blaze that heavily damaged the laundry room of a Wall Avenue motel Wednesday night and forced the evacuation of several guests.

The blaze broke out at the Holiday Inn, 3904 W. Wall, about 8 p.m. and took 400 gallons of water to extinguish. One wing of the motel was evacuated, according to fire officials, but no injuries were reported.

Firefighters remained on the scene more than an hour.

In another fire Wednesday, several boxes of insulation valued at $2,000 were destroyed in a fire that broke out in the basement of Chaparral National Bank shortly before 5 p.m. Six fire department units responded to the call, but the blaze was out when they arrived. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Funding recommended

The proposed system will be a central records keeping division for all criminal, personnel, training and administrative records.

— $18,098 to the Midland Independent School District to help fund "alternative education services" in a separate classroom for students who would otherwise be suspended or expelled from school. The project, to be funded from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 1984, would require a $70,392 match from the school district.

— $23,273 to the PBRPC to help fund a qualified criminal justice planning staff to provide "local input into Texas' criminal justice planning process," according to the division.

Pam Hammit, a PBRPC administrative assistant said this is an ongoing project the will require a $29,347, matching grant from the commission. The project is to be funded from Oct. 1 to Sept. 30, 1984.

— $61,057 to the PBRPC to help fund a regional police training academy located at Midland Regional Air Terminal. The project is to be funded from June 1, 1984 to May 31, 1985 and requires a $4,500 match from the commission. This program has been funded for the last 11 years.

The final decision on the grants will be made Aug. 15 by the executive funding committee of the Criminal Justice Division, of which Gov. Mark White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Comptroller Bob Bullock are members.

The grants are expected to be approved, according to Ron Champion, assistant director of the division.

Ministers fail to make meeting

According to Tamra Oatman, Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin executive director, a woman active in the Permian Basin Planned Parenthood designed a sex education course for one local church and the Texas Youth Council.

With facts and figures on sex provided by Planned Parenthood, ministers "can then put their own religious doctrine" into the course, Seltzer said. "We're not here to be judgmental. If church people want to incorporate our program, they are certainly free to do that. But they can also put into their program what religious beliefs they feel are appropriate."

According to one minister: "What we're trying to do here is a little networking. We're just getting in touch with each other in Midland-Odessa. They want to stave off any misconceptions and this works both ways."

The Midland clinic, at 307 E. Texas, is one of eight Planned Parenthood clinics spreading through a 17-county region. When the local clinic became self-sustaining last December, fees were lowered because paperwork required by the government for federal funding was eliminated. Private donations, however, are needed to expand the educational services into the community, Seltzer said.

NEW TAX CHANGES TAUGHT BY BLOCK

H & R Block is offering a Basic Income Tax Course and an Advanced Income Tax Course starting September 1, 1983. There are morning and evening classes available in the Odessa area including Odessa, Big Spring, Midland and Monahans.

There are numerous tax changes for 1982 and 1983 which will be taught in the approximately three month course for a total of seventy-five hours by experienced H & R Block personnel. These courses are programmed to teach students increasingly complex tax problems.

Members of household can help working mothers

Hearst Feature Service

You've just had a hard day at work. Now, you've got to prepare supper, wash the dishes, do the laundry and iron before you go to sleep. With a little luck, you can be in bed by 11.

Sounds familiar? That little scenario is played out by wives across the country every day. But it doesn't have to happen.

There are ways for women to get more help around the house. What it takes, say the experts, is strategy.

Of course, flexible work hours for one or both parents also are helpful, as is living close to work and having a willing partner.

"You really do have to have a cooperative husband," says Deborah Johnson, an assistant professor of philosophy at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., as well as wife and mother. "There's just no doubt about it."

Three experts were asked — Catherine Berheide, a sociologist at Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs, N.Y.; Jeanne Bodin, co-author of "Mothers Who Work: Strategies For Coping," and Johnson — for their suggestions and tactics. Here's what they said:

— Develop a "psychology of sharing." Stress that it's "our" house, "our" family, "our" responsibility. "Everybody has to pitch in and do what he or she can do," says Bodin.

— Establish priorities. Work and family are high priorities. Clean floors and community work aren't. "It's understanding what's important to you and what isn't," explains Bodin. "And then letting go of what isn't."

— Coordinate calendars. Make sure important events are scheduled in advance. Children who want a parent to attend a school play or soccer game can write it on the family calendar well ahead of time. Some families meet weekly to plan menus, iron out schedules and decide who does what chore. And some plan monthly outings as a way to get the family together at one time to enjoy each other's company.

– Simplify. Get rid of unessential activities or chores. Fix the house so that it's easy to clean. For some, this may mean living in the city instead of suburbia so children don't need parental chauffeurs.

– Learn to say "No." If making chocolate chip cookies for the nursery school means staying up till 2 a.m., don't do it. "If you can't do it and it's going to make you crazy, learn to say, "No," advises Bodin. "Understand that you can't do everything. You can't be Supermom."

— Pay children to do chores. This can be either in money or in points for a treat. It'll give them something to do until you come home from work, teach them responsibility, keep them out of trouble and get the work done.

— Use spare time for yourself. Some women use their lunch hour to exercise or take dance or piano lessons.

Young women not affected by movement, still feel guilt

Hearst Feature Service

While the number of women in the workforce has increased dramatically over the past 20 years, men haven't entered kitchens, nurseries and laundryrooms in the same numbers, according to Jeanne Bodin, co-author with Bonnie Mitelman of "Mothers Who Work: Strategies for Coping."

In the first nationwide survey of working mothers, Bodin and Mitelman found that although 63 percent of the mothers of schoolage children have jobs outside the home, they're still feeling a lot of anxiety because of it.

"We thought younger women (under 35) would be able to balance their families and careers with a lot less stress and guilt than older women because both men and women in the younger group would have been socialized to believe it's okay for women to work outside the home," says Mitelman. "The women's movement hasn't really affected the younger group all that much. They might be doing things with their lives, they might have made the decision to work earlier than older women had, but they were still worried that they did."

They are also, according to Mitelman and Bodin's survey, still doing the bulk of the housework and childcare:

— 95 percent take care of household management;

— 90 percent prepare meals;

— 70 percent do housecleaning;

— 81 percent are in charge of financial management;

— 93 percent do the marketing and shopping;

— 78 percent do the laundry;

— 70 percent have primary childcare responsibility;

— 97 percent resolve family problems;

— 34 percent arrange lessons and special activities for the children and the family as a whole.

"The majority of women still felt they were the pivotal person in the house, even though they were married, even though they were working full-time, even though in some instances they were making more money than their husbands," says Bodin. "In reality, they had two full-time jobs."

More than a third of the 450 women surveyed said their husbands help around the house. Most, however, said they'd like more help.

In addition, about 75 percent felt their work outside the home has a positive effect on their emotions, sense of control over their lives, relationships with their husbands or partners, and their children's emotional development.

"Even though there's a certain amount of resentment and there's a lot of stress, they liked their dual roles," Bodin says. "They weren't furious all the time. Even though they wanted more help, they were coping."

The best copers, says Bodin, were those who had the most support at home. The amount of money they made was unimportant – they still felt the same amount of anxiety, ambivalence and guilt.

"A vice president of a bank was as concerned about the children as a secretary would have been," explains Bodin. "It seems that men go to work and assume their wives are going to take care of the family, and then they can give all their attention and energy to their work. And women don't do that — at least so far."

According to Catherine Berheide, assistant professor of sociology at Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., women have an easier time with outside work than men do with household chores. While a paying job is seen as a positive step up, she says, mopping the floor and scrubbing the toilet aren't.

"Housework is devalued; it has no status in our society," she explains.

AT WIT'S END

Expression codes broken daily

By ERMA BOMBECK

Every week or so a learned grammarian will publicly denounce Americans for not saying what they really mean.

They put the English language out on a slab and dissect it, cutting away the redundancy, isolating the slang and draining it of its color.

Personally, I think Americans do a fantastic job of communicating with one another. It has taken years of experience, but we've managed somehow to break the code in nearly every area of expression that exists today.

When a politician says, "I will run only if it is the mandate of the people," don't you think we know he has a mandate in his hip pocket if only it's his mother who once said, "Why don't you take a walk?"

Why, every mother in the world has figured out that when she asks what her child is doing behind a locked door and he says, "Nothing," she (a) calls the police, (b) calls the plumber, or (c) slides a blank check under the door.

We learned how to interpret "doctor talk" years ago. If we hadn't, most of us would have died. "If you're too sick to come to the office, I'll slip you in the back door and see you" defies translation.

My son had a teacher once who said he was "stagnating in a lock-up system, had challenged group management techniques by his declining attention span and had not reached his cognitive limits." Holy Edwin Newman, I didn't need a brick wall to fall on me to know that he was going to mark time in the fourth grade for another year.

We have learned that every time someone prefaces a joke with, "This isn't dirty. It's just cute," it's dirty. That every time someone in television says, "Trust me," don't. That everyone who says, "I don't want to hurt you," does.

Admittedly, we've done strange things to the English language. We've bent it, mutilated it, married it to strange foreign words, abbreviated it and taken nouns, added "ized" and sent them out as verbs to do battle another day.

As for communication, consider these quotes from actual letters received by the welfare department from applicants for relief checks:

"I am forwarding my marriage certificate and three children, one of which was a mistake."

"I want money as quickly as I can get it. I have been in bed with the doctor for two weeks and he hasn't done me any good. If things don't improve, I will have to send for another doctor."

"In accordance with your instructions, I have given birth to twins, in the enclosed envelope."

Any clarification needed, Mr. Safire?

Tiles can be placed on laminate

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q: Our kitchen counters are covered with a plastic laiminate that has lasted well over the years, but it has lost its color in several places. We know we can install new plastic laminate, but have decided we want something different. Is it possible to install ceramic tile over the old plastic without removing it, which I understand can be quite a job?

A: Yes. Ceramic tile will go on right over the plastic laminate, but there are a number of essential steps that must be taken. The first is to roughen the laminate with coarse sandpaper. The second is to place the ceramic tiles exactly as they will look when the job is completed, but do not use any adhesive. Once you know how many tiles you will need and how they will be arranged, you will know whether any tiles must be cut.

Sometimes you can minimize the cutting procedure — and, if you are lucky, eliminate it entirely — by rearranging the tiles. Incidentally, your tile dealer will lend or rent you a cutting tool. Use an epoxy adhesive and "butter" the backs of the tiles with it. Be sure you have special tiles that are used at the front of the countertop and at the top edge of the backsplash.

Adhesive also is spread on the countertop surface, using a notched trowel. Set the tiles with a slight twisting motion and quickly remove any excess adhesive. The tiles must set from 16 to 24 hours without grouting.

After that period of time, spread the grout into the joints with a grout float. Remove the excess grout from the surface of the tiles with a wet sponge about 15 to 20 minutes after the grout has been spread. Wait about three or four days, then caulk around the corners and the backsplash area. When the caulk has dried, apply two coats of grout sealer. If necessary, buff the tiles with a clean towel a day or two later to bring out the luster.

DEAR ABBY

Mom may have stolen sex books for reason

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Gemini," the 50-year-old married woman who was furious with her mother for removing the sex books from her (Gemini's) library when she (Mother) was visiting.

You should have advised Gemini to write her mother (preferably on an open postcard) something like this:

"I was so glad to discover that you borrowed our books on sex. We hope they help you with any problems you are seeking to solve. Keep them as long as you need them, but please return them eventually."

I'll bet two bits Mother has already read them cover to cover. – E. NAYLOR, PORTLAND, ORE.

DEAR READERS: If you don't have a bladder control problem, you're lucky. But if you are among the estimated 10 million Americans and Canadians who are incontinent to an annoying degree — or know someone who is — read on:

When you sneeze, cough or laugh, do you feel a wetness on your clothing?

When you come home, do you find that you can't get your key in the door fast enough to make it to the bathroom in time?

What can a man wear after a prostate operation for the days (or weeks) he has a little "dribbling"?

These are the kinds of questions and concerns that have brought a few men and women together to form a self-help group for people with urinary or bladder control problems. They named their new organization HIP – Help for Incontinent People.

For a copy of the organization's helpful newsletter, send a long, stamped (20 cents), self-addressed envelope to: HIP, Box 544, Union, S.C. 29379. The newsletters are published four times a year. They are free, but because this is a non-profit group, contributions are welcome. I have seen the newsletter, and I assure you it is well worth sending for.

DEAR ABBY: For four years now I've been desperately trying to please my husband. I've had long hair, short hair, blond hair, dark hair, lost weight, gained weight – you name it. He's never satisfied.

It's not just my personal appearance. I always seem to have the wrong dinner ready, the wrong clothes picked out for him, etc.

I'm basically an insecure person and, needless to say, I don't need this kind of pressure. I've talked to him about it, and he says, "Oh, don't worry about it. I love you."

My question is, how can he possibly "love" someone who apparently doesn't make him happy? And why did he marry me? – ERROR

DEAR ERROR: These are questions you should ask your husband. My question to you is: Why are you putting up with someone who apparently isn't making YOU happy? Complaining to me will not improve your marriage. Counseling — for both of you — might. And a course in self-assertiveness might build your self-esteem and give you the security and confidence you need to demand respect and appreciation.

Please take these suggestions seriously and let me hear from you again.

DEAR ABBY: A girlfriend of mine is planning a big church wedding, and she's asked if my 4-year-old son would be the ring bearer. My answer was yes.

My question: Who pays for my son's tuxedo? Nothing was said about it. Answer soon, as this is very important. – TIGHT BUDGET

DEAR TIGHT: The attendants are expected to pay for their own wedding attire unless the bride's family is very well-to-do and offers to pick up the tab.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

All's still safe inside the can

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Cans of creamed corn, fruit cocktail and green peas that had been stored in a consumer's basement for 40 years were tested recently by Del Monte, and it said the old foods were nutritionally comparable with cans fresh off the supermarket shelf.

Despite what it terms "remarkable nutritional stability," the company does not recommend storing canned goods for 40 years.

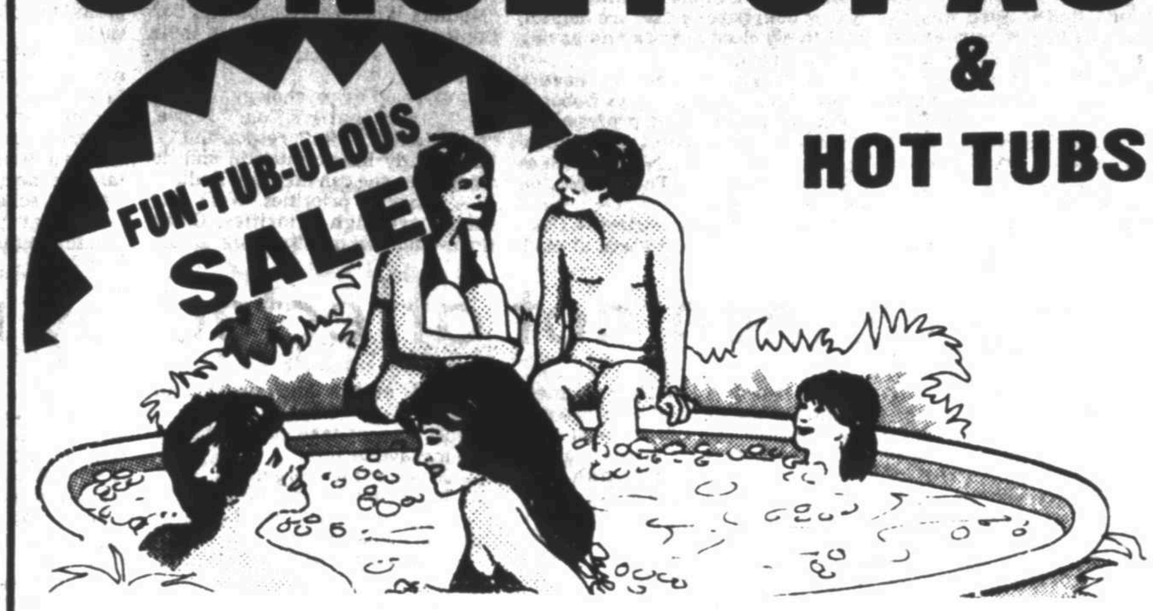

Generally, the older food had slightly higher levels of niacin and Vitamin C and slightly lower levels of Vitamin A, riboflavin and thiamine, it said.

Once male dominated Ivy-league colleges gain women

NEW YORK (AP) — The Class of 1987, the history-making first coeducational class at Columbia College, will be 44 percent female, reports Admissions Director James T. McMenamin. This is more than twice the percentage of women enrolled in the first year of coeducation at other formerly all-male Ivy League colleges.

Of the 5,700 applications from prospective freshmen, 2,100 were from women.

Spaciousness, a floating feeling, is given by placing this modular seating unit a foot from the wall. The parchment white fabric on the sofa, resembling kid, is Naugahyde.

Naugahyde nice off-white cloth

Copley News Service

Q. I have moved into a new condominium with off-white carpeting and off-white walls throughout.

My living room is small but I want to make it seem as large as possible. I very much like the white background and am even planning to buy off-white furniture to create a monochromatic look because I think that will help enlarge the room.

What other suggestions do you have? — M.B.

A. Your idea to buy off-white furniture is great but be careful what kind of fabric you buy. The heavily woven cottons are elegant in the store but many of them are not very functional.

If you choose a white cotton be certain your fabric has been treated with some soil repellent. Or choose a man-made fabric in off-white. One of the most serviceable is Naugahyde in the most soft and supple styles — some almost approximating fine kid. That way you can have your white and enjoy it, too.

There are always possibilities of extending walls with mirrors — either a large framed mirror or a wall sheathed in mirror.

Another interesting and effective way to give a floating feeling (and hence spaciousness) is with a modular seating unit placed about 12 inches away from the walls. With light spots at the floor throwing light upward, the effect is elegant especially when a console table or tall lacy palms are placed in the space between.

Q. I have a rather old-fashioned hooked rug for my living room in rose, gray, rusty brown, black and pale orchid.

I have always had traditional furnishing but now I want to buy some new furniture in a contemporary style. However, I'm very attached to my rug and want to keep it.

What colors would be nice for the walls and for upholstered furniture? — R.D.

A. You actually have many possibilities for your room.

You could create a room with gray walls, pale rose ones or, if you feel especially bold, a rusty terra cotta color to blend with your rug. Then for a change, a medium orchid would be handsome on a modern sofa and a deep purple for a chair or pair of chairs.

Q. I have gone to live with my daughter and son-in-law and have a large bedroom suite that once belonged to my grandson who now has his own home.

My problem is that he had the windows covered in the thin horizontal venetian blinds in a beige color with walls painted a deep brown. The look was very handsome for a masculine room. But, I would like a change.

What would be a good solution for the windows? Please give us some ideas for creating a pretty room. — R.N.

A. You can easily soften venetian blinds with a fabric lambrequin — maybe a handsome floral chintz in a bouffant style or even a solid polished cotton.

Doctor now practices law

Hearst Feature Service

Roberta Ritter, a doctor who became a lawyer, is the new president of the 5,100-member California Trial Lawyers Association and the first woman to head the group, which has only a 10 percent female membership.

But those aren't the only unusual things about Ritter, who now concentrates on the law — particularly medical malpractice. She also is in partnership with her brother, Minton M. Ritter, who has the same double profession.

"I think we are the only brother-sister doctor-lawyer team in the country — the Donnie and Marie Osmond Show of our fields," she says.

Ritter remembers the case of a woman who dutifully had an annual Pap smear — the check for cancer of the cervix. Although the woman had complained for years of irregular bleeding and pain, her doctor kept telling her everything was fine. The woman finally changed doctors, and cancer was discovered. While she was being treated, she also sued.

"My brother handled that case, and it changed hospital policy. The clinic had been so busy the smears were not being taken from the proper spots. Now they are. We know this is causing lives to be saved. The woman did die, but she lived long enough to see justice done.

"How could that woman have protected herself? She could have demanded an explanation for her pains, and she could have obtained a second opinion much earlier. She was an unassuming potential victim — we all are. We have to learn to do more for ourselves. By the Board of Medical Examiners' own statistics, 10 percent of all doctors are incompetent. The first step for the individual is to find a good doctor, so you'll never need a good lawyer. And you have to start looking before you get sick."

Ritter recommends checking into the education of the doctor, his or her certification as a specialist, his or her continuing education, hospital accreditation and teaching staff experience. "You can even go to the courthouse and see if he has ever been sued.

"The important thing is — never be afraid to ask questions. There is no such thing as a dumb question when you are trying to lean about your health. The uninformed person can be prey when he is sick and a doctor is spouting four-syllable words and prescribing five-syllable medicines."

Ritter, whose office is in Los Angeles, says that most medical malpractice cases develop out of emergency room care "when the patient deals with doctors he doesn't know." The second most common cause is unnecessary surgery.

But most malpractice cases, Ritter says, never get to a law office, "because the patient never knows what happened. You must be reasonably alert. A red flag should go up, for example, if a nurse says, 'I think another doctor should take care of your baby.' "

Ritter earned her M.D. at Pennsylvania Medical School in 1968 and then interned in obstetrics and gynecology in a Miami hospital, where she observed a doctor overmedicating women in labor with a drug she believed would cause brain damage to the babies. When she complained to the hospital authorities, she was told the doctor was "a high producer" and that she could shut up or get out.

"I wanted to fight that kind of thing. I finished my internship and then applied for law school." First she tried Harvard. "I was told, 'Wow, you're a doctor and a woman. If you were only black, we'd take you.' I then earned my law degree at the University of Miami."

She appreciates the struggle women have had to enter both disciplines. "Remember, the first American woman doctor, who began to practice in 1850, had to train in Paris. And it was not until 1972 that the last law school, Washington and Lee, dropped its no-woman rule. The last medical school to ban women was Jefferson in Philadelphia, which ended the discrimination in 1963."

Ritter practiced medicine both in Florida and California before deciding to give more time to law. "I consider myself as a trial lawyer who is still practicing medicine, building a bridge between medicine and law. Malpractice law is preventive or protective medicine." Her brother, she said, "went into law because the insurance premiums got too high."

They formed Ritter & Ritter, Inc., in 1974, the same year she helped organize a community group called Consumers for Medical Accountability.

Stuffed frogs to join bears

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — This will be "the year of the teddy bear," predicts the president of a company that makes stuffed toys, but, adds Harold Nizamian, "coming out of nowhere this Christmas is the frog."

Frogs are "in" and Nizamian, who heads R. Dakin here, says big sales are expected in this type of stuffed toy — frogs in jumping, crawling and sitting positions.

Not only are frogs in traditional green getting a big play from retailers, he says, but also buyers are ordering them in pink, cerise, magenta, blue and coral.

Orders for all types of teddy bears, from classic designs to jazzed-up versions in outlandish costumes have flooded plush toy manufacturers, Nizamian reports.

In addition, he says, "fantasy" forms will be extremely popular this Christmas, with such mythical animals as unicorns, dragons and griffins in demand. "Almost lifelike reproductions of animals in plush will be comparatively weak," he says. "Americans want imagination in their stuffed toys."

Cheese amounts reduced

The U. S. Department of Agriculture will be giving away less cheese due to a drop in commercial sales.

In ordering a 52 percent cutback in the cheese giveaway program that was started about a year ago, Secretary of Agriculture John Block cited two reasons.

Needy people who qualify for free cheese normally buy their own, and some people who are not so needy receive free cheese rather than buy it.

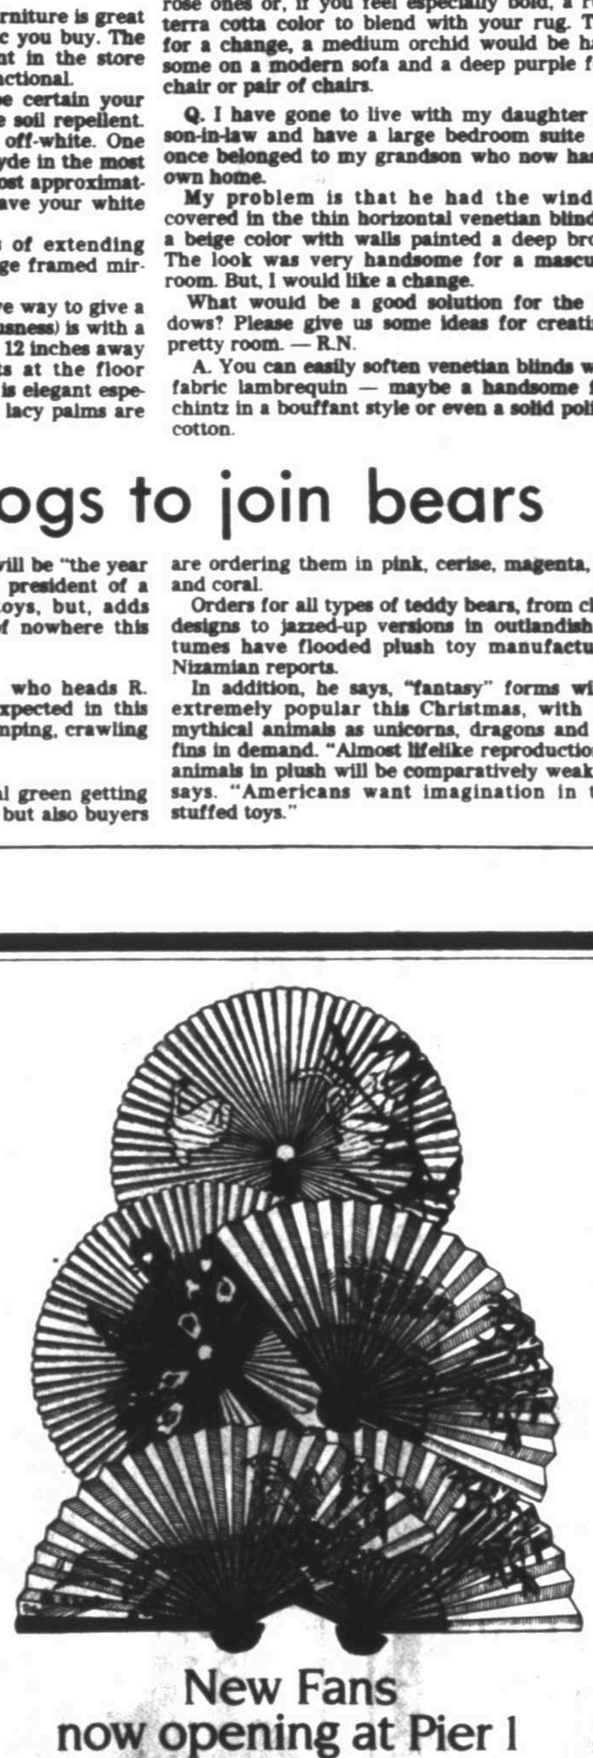

"Evidence that the cheese giveaway program was hurting cheese sales started showing up during the last quarter of 1982," said Dr. Bud Schwart, dairy marketing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension service, Texas A & M University System.

Sales were down 8 percent from the previous year during that quarter, he said. In February commercial sales were down 29 percent from February 1982, he said.

The cheese giveaway program was started in early 1982 as a means of reducing government stocks of dairy products purchased under thedairy program. More than 50 million pounds of cheese had been given away each month before the cutback.

Q. This chair is solid walnut with a caned seat in perfect condition.

Can you tell me when it was made and what it might be worth?

A. This is a Victorian side chair and was usually used in the parlor.

It was made in the late 19th century and would sell in the $125 to $175 range.

Q. My grandparents gave us this clock when we were married.

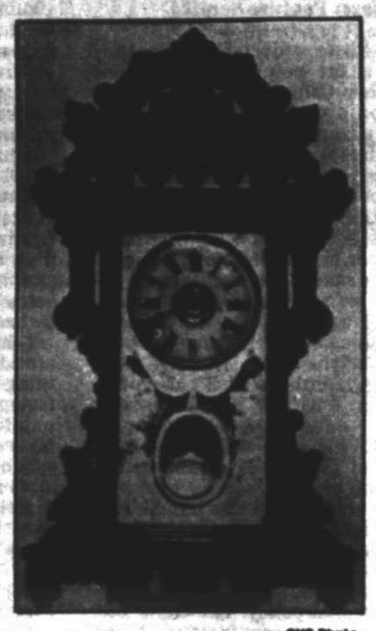

I would appreciate it if you would provide some information about it.

Inside the clock there is a paper label which reads, "E.N. Welch Mfg. Co., Forestville, Conn."

A. Your clock was made in the late 19th century and should be worth about $275 to $325 in good condition.

Elisha N. Welch started making clocks about 1850 in Bristol, Conn. In 1864 he founded the E.N. Welch Mfg. Co. by merging with several other clock manufacturers.

The chair's value is $125-$175 and the clock is worth $275-$325.

In 1903 his original clock manufacturing company became the Sessions Clock Co.

Q. The enclosed mark is on the bottom of a platter and 12 matching plates, all decorated with fish.

What can you tell me about the maker, vintage and value of this set?

A. This is a porcelain fish set (for serving fish dinners) made by Carl Thieme of Potschappell, Germany.

It was made in the late 19th century and should sell for about $275 to $325.

Rental homes more popular

Copley News Service

Investing in single family homes, for use as rental units, is becoming more popular as the real estate market recovers from an acute three-year case of doldrums.

This is often a "starter property" for a person or family wanting to build a personal portfolio of real estate investments. A single family home can be a very good beginning investment — or a disappointing ending to a great plan.

One key to success in purchasing homes for rental use is to acquire properties in areas where rents are high in relation to the purchase price. It's better to buy a home at a price that is eight times the gross annual rent that can be generated from the property than one priced at 22 times gross rent.

That "gross rent multiplier (GRM)" is often used by investors in evaluating the potential value of properties being considered for purchase. It is certainly not a precise measurement of the property's investment worth, but it is a significant "rule-of-thumb" indication.

To determine the GRM of a property, simply multiply the existing (or estimated) monthly rent by 12 to arrive at the gross annual rent. Then divide that figure into the sales price.

When considering the GRM, you should keep in mind that maintenance costs and real estate taxes vary considerably from area to area. For example, in the Northeast, property taxes generally run 3 to 4 percent of the property's value, while in California it's 1 percent.

However, the gross rent multiplier is a viable yardstick for measuring an investment potential — particularly comparing one property with another or one geographic area with another.

And those average GRM figures really vary from one area to another, signifying the wide range of investment potentials in different communities.

For example, the average GRM in the Forest Hills section of Queens in New York City is 8.4, according to a recent survey of average local prices, rents and GRMs. Whereas, in an expensive suburb of San Francisco the GRM in 27.7.

Usually, the lower home prices offer the best potential investment value — and lower GRM.

Used car can be extra back-to-school cost

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Tuition and board money are not the only expenses parents must face when their youngsters go back to college this fall. The "second-hand car" is often an additional one, an expert in the automotive field points out.

"Consumers, however, can make sure they are getting their money's worth by taking an hour to check a car over before buying it," says Dave Bowman, Technical Communications Manager for FramAutolite, an automotive parts manufacturer here.

"First, look for a car that was well-maintained by its previous owner — even if its price tag is a bit higher," says Bowman. "You can do this by asking for and examining the car's maintenance records.

"After you've found a well-maintained car," Bowman adds, "the vehicle should pass a visual test, a road test and a mechanic's examination."

The visual check includes looking at the exterior, the interior and under the hood:

— Check exterior for signs of an accident cover-up, such as a new paint job covering rough body marks or rippling metal.

— Check under the car for these problems: A worn exhaust system; leaky or rusty shock absorbers; rust around the fender wells and the bottom door edge. Look inside the door jambs for undercoating, which helps prevent rust damage.

— In the car's interior, look for signs of wear on the seats, wheel, armrests and floor pedals. This can be a better indication of the car's mileage than the odometer.

— Under the hood, check the air filter, fluid levels, and make sure belts and hoses are not frayed, worn, cracked or spongy. If these appear in good condition, it is a sign the car has been maintained properly.

— Check for other signs of neglect such as corrosion in and around the battery, and muddy or rusty coolant in the radiator.

Take a 30-minute test-drive, Bowman suggests, and do the following:

— Move the car a few feet and look for puddles where it was parked. Black fluid indicates an oil leak; pink or brown fluid a transmission leak; greenish or yellow fluid a radiator leak.

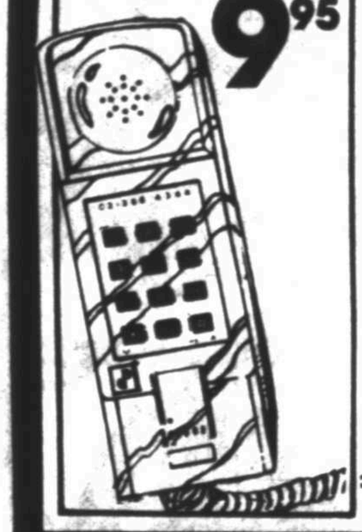

— Drive the car from low to high speed and make sure the steering remains smooth. If you notice heavy vibration, the suspension components may be worn or the tires are out of balance. Check tires for uneven wear.

— Making sure no cars are behind you, test the brakes. First, brake hard at 45 mph. Repeat twice. The car should stop in a straight line and not pull to one side or the other. The front-end should not vibrate or shake, and there should be no squealing or grinding sounds when the brakes are applied.

Blood-stained scene described to Burnett jury

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Prosecution witness George Phillips told jurors in Linda May Burnett's capital murder trial that he found an empty, blood-stained house when he came home for a family reunion in 1978.

Mrs. Burnett is standing trial for the second time in connection with the deaths of Phillips' parents, his brother, and his brother's wife and 3-year-old son.

Phillips also testified Wednesday that his mother had once filed assault charges against Ovide Joe Dugas, who was convicted of capital murder in the killing of the child.

Dugas was killed two months ago during an escape attempt while being transferred from a court hearing in Beaumont back to Death Row in Huntsville.

Mrs. Burnett's conviction in the slaying of 3-year-old Jason Phillips was thrown out by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals which ruled a tape recording of a session she had with a hypnotist should not have been played for jurors.

She is now being tried for the death of Jason's mother, Martha Phillips, the wife of Elmer Phillips.

The bodies of the five were found in a mass grave. Investigators said they had been shot, execution style.

Linda Burnett

Admitted into evidence Wednesday were photos of blood-stained rooms and the actual aluminum screen door from the Phillips house. The door had been cut and showed signs of forced entry.

The trial, before State District Judge Larry Gist, was moved to San Antonio on a change of venue from Beaumont.

Gist said he had decided against sequestering the jury. Over the objections of defense attorneys, Gist also said he would allow testimony about all five victims, even though Mrs. Burnett is being tried in only one of the deaths.

George Phillips said that Elmer Phillips and his family had come down from Woodward, Okla., to visit him and his parents, Bishop and Esther Phillips, at their home near Winnie, 25 miles southwest of Beaumont in Southeast Texas.

He testified that before he left, his brother and family had been there for "a little family reunion" but when he returned about 12:30 a.m. on July 3 he found all five missing. He said he found bloodstains on the floor "by my mother's and father's bed" and some smeared on the door-facing going into the kitchen.

Coffee was burning dry in a coffee pot, and a skillet with chicken in it was still turned on, he said.

About $1,200 that his mother had been saving to buy a pickup truck for his father was still in her purse, and his father's billfold was still in the house, Phillips testified.

Under questioning by District Attorney James McGrath of Beaumont, Phillips testified his parents would never have willingly gone off and left the money there.

In later testimony, Wade Broussard, of Fannett, a former Jefferson County sheriff's deputy, described his July 6, 1978 discovery of a burned out car which turned out to belong to Elmer Phillips.

Broussard said after the car was traced to Elmer Phillips, police began searching for the family. Another investigators, Robert Ogden, testified that after questioning Dugas on July 9, 1978, the mass grave was found.

Prosecutors said Mrs. Burnett and Dugas abducted the five family members, made them stand in a shallow pre-dug grave not far away, and then shot each in the back of the head.

Mrs. Burnett was willing to go along with Dugas because the two were having an affair, prosecutors said.

George Phillips testified later Wednesday that his mother had once filed assault charges against Dugas, who was at one time married to George's sister, Mary.

Sprinklers may do more damage than fires

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The $4 million restoration of the fire-damaged east wing of the Texas Capitol will include several fire safety measures, but there will be no sprinkler system.

Joe Lackey, an Austin architect working on the project, said Wednesday that the historical value of the Capitol makes sprinklers impractical.

"I personally would think a sprinkler system in a historical building like this would do almost as much damage as a fire itself," Lackey said during a tour of the area damaged in the Feb. 6 fire.

However, Lackey said the project would feature fire-retardant materials, a smoke detection system, and an air conditioning system designed to vent smoke.

The $4 million will pay for repairs that are "very close to a pure restoration" of the 19th century building, according to to Stan Graves of the Texas Historical Commission.

Some of the money will be used to make repairs and renovations in portions of the Senate side of the building not damaged in the blaze that killed one person.

Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches and chairman of the Senate Administration Committee, said it is "more economical" to make other needed repairs while the restoration project is underway.

Among the changes will be a $100,000 renovation in the men's Senate rest room. Blake said senators want a private portion in which they'll be protected from lobbyists.

"They'd just as soon not be lobbied in there," he said.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said the project would not interfere with a special session of the Legislature expected to be called later this year or early in 1984. A contract will be awarded next month, and the work should be done in a year, he said.

Officials clash with White

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — State Department officials clashed with Texas Gov. Mark White Wednesday over whether a pilot project affecting border crossings causes too much inconvenience for Mexican nationals and the border cities.

Bearing complaints from Rio Grande Valley officials, White conferred with Ambassador Diego Asencio, assistant secretary for consular affairs, and Immigration and Naturalization Service Commissioner Alan Nelson to discuss the program, implemented during July between Brownsville and Del Rio.

Under the new system, persons who wish to cross the border for shopping or other activities can no longer obtain 72-hour passes at U.S. border crossing stations, but must instead obtain stamps on their passports from consulates in Mexico, necessitating trips of up to 177 miles out of the way, White said.

Murderer killed in prison

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A convicted murderer was fatally stabbed 16 times with a serving fork during an argument with a Death Row inmate at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis Unit, prison officials said.

The dead man was identified as Johnny Edward Swift, 42. He was serving a 101-year sentence for a McLennan County murder conviction.

Walker County Sheriff Department Chief Deputy Ted Pearch said Swift was visiting another inmate in the recreation room on Death Row Tuesday night when a third inmate entered the room and began arguing with Swift. There was a struggle and Swift was stabbed 16 times in the neck and chest with a 14-inch sharpened serving fork, Pearch said.

LBJ observances scheduled

STONEWALL, Texas (AP) — The 75th anniversary of the birth of former President Lyndon B. Johnson will be marked Aug. 27 with two events at the LBJ Historical State Park and the LBJ Ranch in Stonewall.

A general observance in the LBJ State Historical Park is scheduled from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. with the public invited to enjoy music, cold watermelons, cookies and lemonade, according to Donald Schuch, park superintendent.

Starting at 6 p.m., there will be an invitation-only gathering of LBJ family friends, staff members and associates during Johnson's presidency at the LBJ Ranch, with Lady Bird Johnson as the hostess.

Man wanted for questioning

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The FBI says it wants to question a 44-year-old Montreal man in connection with the attempted murder of Assistant U.S. Attorney James Kerr.

FBI special agent Pat Cowley said Wednesday that Peter White, who was arrested about a week ago on fugitive warrant from Massachusetts, is wanted for questioning in connection with the Kerr case, which remains unsolved.

Kerr escaped injury when a hail of bullets shattered the windshield of his car in San Antonio on Nov. 21, 1978.

'Hill Street' lawyer loses her cool

ENTERTAINMENT

By TIMOTHY HARPER

NEW YORK (AP) — Tonight is the night Joyce Davenport, the public defender on "Hill Street Blues," acts less like a lawyer. This might make her seem more like a human being to many viewers, but it hurts her credibility with lawyers in the audience.

In tonight's rerun episode on NBC, "Some Like It Hot-Wired," originally broadcast in March 1982, the sophisticated Ms. Davenport loses her cool and just a bit of her superwoman veneer.

Played by Veronica Hamel, Ms. Davenport, in tonight's episode, apparently is making one of her first court appearances since the brutal murder of a close friend, also a woman public defender.

She appears at a preliminary hearing with a client accused of burglary. And without apparent provocation, she does what no lawyer ever is supposed to do — she criticizes her client. No, she is not just critical; she verbally rips the guy limb from limb.

She calls him a "lying little scum," and tells the judge that if she saw her client on the street, she would cross to the other side and get her can of Mace ready to use on him.

"You're an advocate, Ms. Davenport," the judge reminds her. He is well played by Allan Rich, who offers the painstaking face of a man who has enough problems and doesn't need another one.

The judge warns Ms. Davenport she is "extremely close to contempt" as she harangues against a system in which her role is to return "career criminals" to the street.

Ms. Davenport then stalks out of the courtroom intending to resign as a public defender.

This may be appealing to viewers who want her to loosen up a bit and act more like a regular person, but it is sacrilege to criminal defense lawyers.

Michael Marrinan, a public defender in San Diego, says, "I find it difficult to conceive of any lawyer, no matter how good or bad, saying or doing anything like that in open court. It's a bit far-fetched."

If he did that in real life, Marrinan says, he might be found in contempt of court by the judge, censured or suspended by the bar association ethics committee and probably fired from his job as a public defender.

Defense attorneys may talk about their clients in less than kind terms outside court, but during working hours, the credo must be maintained: every client is innocent until proven guilty, and every person deserves the best defense available.

'Eye on Hollywood' opens tonight

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC's new summertime show, "Eye on Hollywood," makes its debut tonight, and chances are Hollywood will have its eye on the program, too.

The half-hour, weekly video magazine, which will spotlight show-biz glamor and the Southern California lifestyle, is, in fact, a retread. It's patterned after a highly successful magazine show on the local ABC station called "Eye on L.A."

While no trend-setter, "Eye on Hollywood" is expected to attract some degree of industry interest, partly because of the relatively low cost of producing the half-hour show.

"Whether 'Eye on Hollywood' is successful or not, there's going to be a continuing search to make shows at an economic price," says Craig Haffner, co-producer and head of programming for KABC, the local ABC-owned station from which the network purchased the show.

"A ballpark figure is that we can deliver a show for half the cost of a situation comedy," Haffner says. A half-hour sitcom costs the network roughly $450,000-$600,000.

"The coming of cable has brought a demand for more product," he says. "I think network television is in the same position now that network radio was in when television came along. It's suffering from escalating costs. It's still big, but not as big as it once was. So the networks are now looking for ways to produce programs at a cost they can afford."

"Eye on Hollywood" is made up of a mixture of segments from the local show and of new clips shot for the network version.

The premiere show takes a look at hopefuls trying to make it in Hollywood, does a retrospective on Rod Serling's "Twilight Zone," visits the penquins at San Diego's Sea World, and does a fast look at the denizens of Venice Beach.

The show is the first regular network exposure for Tawny Schneider, a former Miss America who has been a contributing hostess to "Eye on L.A." for the past four years. She shares duties on the network show with Chuck Henry and Johnny Mountain, also from "Eye on L.A."

Miss Schneider met her new husband, John Schneider of "The Dukes of Hazzard," while working on the local magazine show.

"Actually, the first time I met him was at the Academy Awards in 1982, when I was hosting the pre-Oscar show," she recalls. "I didn't like him. I had a terrible first impression. Then 'Eye on L.A.' sent me to interview him. I tried to get out of it. That was last Oct. 8, and we started dating after that."

Lamesa Rodeo Association holds Western Art Exhibit, Sale today

LAMESA — The Lamesa Rodeo Association is having a Western Art Exhibit and Sale featuring 10 West Texas artists to benefit West Texas Boys Ranch of San Angelo today from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. in First National Bank of Lamesa.

Works by the following artists will be for sale: Garland Weeks, San Angelo; Jodie Boren, Abilene; Ben Miller, Fluvanna; Terrell O'Brien, Lamesa; Charles Sawyer, Blackwell; Dr. Robert Taylor, Snyder; Gary Ward, Canyon; Jim Ward, Canyon; Justin Wells, Amarillo; and Paul Wylie, Lubbock.

The rodeo will be held at 8 p.m. today through Saturday. It begins today with an "Old Time" rodeo parade and barbeque at 5 p.m. at the rodeo grounds in Lamesa. There will be a nightly dance.

For more information on the rodeo call 1-806-872-3175. For more information on the art show and sale call La Frae Sharp at 1-806-497-6796.

Travolta trained vigorously

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — John Travolta figured he'd have to do some running, push-ups and sit-ups to get in shape for the dancing in his new movie, "Staying Alive."

Wrong, says Dan Isaacson, who spent 18 weeks working with the bulky, round-shouldered Travolta by means of an arduous — and sometimes tortuous — daily workout.

Isaacson designed Travolta's training program with the help of director Sylvester Stallone.

"John has always been known for his great legs and his lower torso," said Isaacson. "And he has a long muscle structure, which gives him a lot of grace. But we needed to do a lot of work on his upper body in order to project a great presence onstage."

Travolta went through a rigorous daily program of exercise and diet that took off 20 pounds and brought him down to a svelte 168 pounds.

That was in addition to three hours of intensive jazz-dance training under the tutelage of Sharee Lane.

Stallone etched his name in wet concrete near Mann's (formerly Grauman's) Chinese Theater the other day.

He spelled it "Sylvester Slallone."

His square is not far from the one where Barbara Stanwyck wrote her last name as "Sanwyck."

Nearby is also the square where Charlton Heston left the "t" out of his name on the first try and had to squeeze it in. And Heston was the man who brought down the stone tablets in "The Ten Commandments."
