MISD will be decreasing its tax rate

GISD raises rate, Page 1C

While most area school districts, and other taxing entities, are raising taxes, the Midland Independent School District will be lowering its actual tax rate by one-half cent, the school board learned Tuesday. Trustees plan to approve the rate of 77 cents per $100 valuation and OK the district's budget at its next regular meeting Aug. 23.

Even though the total budget is a 10.4 percent increase over last year, the lower rate will come about because the district's tax base increased from $3.3 billion to $3.8 billion. The total budget for 1983-84 is $50.7 million, which represents a per-student cost of nearly $3,000. Because of the slumping economy, the district is expecting only 94 percent of assessed taxes to be collected, compared to 97 percent last year.

A special meeting was called for 8 a.m. Friday to announce the appointment of a principal to Lee Freshman High School. In other personnel matters, trustees reappointed four of last year's six administrative interns to fill the intern positions open at two junior high and two elementary schools. Two other schools which qualified for interns last year are anticipating lower enrollments this fall and will not require interns.

Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi said he felt a second year in the internship program was not redundant "because the program started six weeks late last year and because we feel these folks can still benefit from it." The other two interns will return to their positions as teachers.

A matching annuity program for employees was discussed, but no action taken. The idea was for the district to match an employee's contributions, up to 3 percent of his gross salary, into a tax-deductible annuity fund. However, the board wanted to be able to reduce the percentage it would match in years when the budget was too tight, as well as implement vesting limitations. Vesting means an employee would keep the money the district has put into his annuity fund when he leaves. Trustees felt employees shouldn't collect the entire amount the district paid unless they had been with the MISD for five years. MISD's attorney said unless the IRS ruled otherwise, the board could not have both options.

Trustees also heard favorable reports of the Title I program and the fourth-year summary of the five-year priority plan. Title I is designed to improve basic skills of low-acheiving students. It is a federally funded program for schools that have a higher percentage of low-income students than the district average.

Ten people die in car, truck wreck

COACHELLA, Calif. (AP) — A car being chased by the Border Patrol early today ran a stop sign at a desert intersection on a narrow highway and was struck by a tractor-trailer truck loaded with hay, killing 10 people in the car, police said.

An 11th person in the car was critically injured, but neither the driver of the hay truck nor the Border Patrol agents were hurt in the accident.

The wreck occurred about 2 a.m. on a stretch of the highway called "Blood Alley" because of its history of carnage, authorities said.

The collision, about three miles south of Coachella and 120 miles east of Los Angeles, brought to at least 56 the number of people who have died on Highway 86 in this Riverside County area since 1980, officials said.

California Highway Patrol officer Tom Granger said the victims were jammed in the 1974 Ford Galaxy and most were hidden from sight during the 30-mile chase, which began near Salton City.

"My understanding is that the Border Patrol observed only two people during the entire pursuit," Granger said. "It was only after they got to the scene that they found them — all packed into that car."

Some of the victims appeared to be 13 to 15 years old, Granger said.

"There were two or three in that range," he said.

The victims appeared to be Hispanic, possibly farmworkers, said highway patrol spokesman Jim Mousely.

In the front of the car was an almost empty half-pint bottle of brandy. On the back seat were a Spanish-language comic book and two rubber-soled sandals, he said.

Mousely initially said 11 were confirmed dead at the scene and a 12th died in route to a hospital, but Joette Wilson, an office assistant at the highway patrol office in Indio, later said 10 people died and an 11th was critically injured.

The impact of the crash crumpled the car, which came to rest alongside a plowed field in an agricultural area, and snapped out a windshield, which was wound into a roll.

Granger said two Border Patrol agents sitting in their car alongside Highway 86 near Salton City saw the car drive by and when they pulled pulled out to try to get the its license number, the car accelerated to about 100 mph.

Granger said he didn't know why the agents became suspicious or where the occupants lived.

W.W. "Bill" Freeman, president of the local Highway 86 Improvement Association, said the highway has been the scene of 300 to 400 accidents a year, including many fatalities, and it has been dubbed "Blood Alley" by local residents.

"It's rather ironic this happened because we had another accident 2½ months ago at that very same location with 43 farm laborers on a truck, but there were only slight injuries and no fatalities," said Freeman, a retired air traffic controller.

Skywalks proposed to handle pedestrian traffic

Suggestions for future downtown landscaping and office-parking space did not create any tremors in the City Council Chambers Tuesday, but recommendations for pedestrian-vehicle traffic shook city officials a bit.

Planning Commission members joined city councilmen Tuesday to review the final draft of a comprehensive plan for Midland's downtown area.

The plan — drafted by J.T. Dunkin & Associates Urban Landscape Architecture — recommended landscaping, office-parking space and pedestrian-vehicle traffic needed for the Tall City when it reaches a 200,000 population.

According to the plan, a myriad of skywalks between buildings would help the flow and separation of pedestrian and vehicle traffic.

But council and planning commission members agreed that Midland isn't quite ready to be compared with the northern twin cities, Minneapolis-St. Paul, where the skywalks are prevalent.

Dunkin concurred that this was an expensive endeavor, but could be funded primarily through private industries. Also, he admitted to the city fathers that it would discourage downtown dwellers from patronizing retail and food businesses.

The long-range plan called for 13.5 million square feet of office space to accomodate the future 200,000 population. In addition, 17,000 square feet of parking would be required. Dunkin said the parking spaces are determined on the amount of office space. Currently Midland has about 6.2 million square feet for office space.

An "urgent" recommendation by Dunkin circled around the city — the streets.

Dunkin outlined a plan to convert the main thoroughfares — Big Spring and Marienfeld streets and Wall and Missouri avenues to one-way roads.

While Big Spring Street would be northbound, Marienfeld would run southbound, from where the two streets intersect just south of Cuthbert Avenue. The streets would then continue south across the tracks.

The one-way street proposal for westbound Wall and eastbound Missouri would separate where the two avenues meet west of Texas American Bank.

U.S. relations with Guatemalan regime off to good start

By GEORGE GEDDA

Mejia Victores restores civil liberties, Page 15A

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. relations with Guatemala's new military government are off to a promising start, bolstered by personal assurances from chief of state Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores to the American ambassador that he plans a quick return to democratic rule.

The pledge appears to raise the possibility of a full restoration of U.S. economic and military aid, but officials say additional evidence of Mejia Victores' sincerity is needed before any such steps are contemplated.

The Reagan administration has been eager to forge closer ties to Guatemala, which is considered Central America's most strategic country because of its 500-mile border with Mexico. It also has the largest and most productive economy in Central America and the region's biggest population.

During the 17-month tenure of President Efrain Rios Montt, relations between the two countries improved considerably but, because of continuing reports of human rights abuses, administration requests for large-scale economic assistance died in Congress.

There was initial apprehension here on Monday when Mejia Victores, the defense minister and an outspoken anti-communist, replaced Rios Montt in a coup. Thus far, however, officials say Guatemala's new leader has been saying all the right things.

Less than 24 hours after taking power, Mejia Victores summoned U.S. Ambassador Frederic Chapin and informed him of plans to lift a state of alert, to eliminate special tribunals set up to try suspected subversives and to continue previous moves toward establishing constitutional rule.

The Reagan administration swiftly endorsed Mejia Victores' pledges, publicly hailing them as "positive steps which we fully support."

Rios Montt generally was regarded here as a substantial improvement over former President Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia, whom Rios Montt deposed in May 1982. Nonetheless, he was plagued by severe liabilities, both in his relationship with his fellow Army officers and with the U.S. Congress.

FNB suffers second-quarter loss of $109 million

First National Bank president Thomas Wageman fields questions during a press conference Tuesday. Looking on are FNB officers Stuart Williams and Michael Magill.

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

The First National Bank of Midland reported Tuesday a sizable loss for the second quarter, claiming that both the bank and the West Texas area it serves have been stretched taut by a recession in the oil and gas industry.

The bank suffered a net operating loss of $109.3 million for the first six months of 1983 due to problem loans and an increase in the provision set aside for loan losses.

New president and chief executive officer Thomas J. Wageman, on the job since August 1, blamed the loss on falling revenues in the energy industry — the bank's lifeline.

He announced the bank has retained The First Boston Corporation, an investment banking firm, in an advisory role.

The recession has placed many of First National's loan customers in a squeeze. In the past six months the bank's non-performing loans have more than doubled, rising from $150.4 million last December to $314 million as of June 30.

These loans include both non-accrual loans and renegotiated loans which have been restructured (primarily in the form of reduced interest rates) because of the weakened financial condition of the borrower.

"The significant decline in the energy industry has a compound effect on the bank," Wageman said at a press conference Tuesday. "Some customers who are experiencing difficulties cannot repay their loans, while at the same time, depressed market conditions cause collateral values to shrink.

"The bank and the community are married to one another. I think we got stretched and our clients also got stretched," Wageman said.

Wageman said First National's management has had to resort to some "strong medicine" in its effort to rebuild the bank. After thoroughly analyzing its loan portfolio during the quarter, the bank charged off $68.3 million in bad loans and reversed another $21 million in interest which accrued but had not been paid.

Loans are charged off when they are uncollectible because neither the value of the collateral backing them, nor the borrower's future cash flow, is likely to satisfy the debt, even if it were restructured.

In addition, First National hiked its loan loss reserve from $50 million at year-end to $85 million as of June 30.

Mine to shut down during strike

MORENCI, Ariz. (AP) — Wielding ax handles and baseball bats, striking copper workers blockaded the gates to a copper mine before the Phelps Dodge Corp. agreed to halt local operations "to avoid almost certain bloodshed."

The shutdown announcement came Tuesday about 30 minutes before a deadline the 1,000 strikers and supporters had set to physically halt production at the copper mines, mills and smelter in Morenci.

"It helped put the pin back in the grenade," said Roy Gann, president of the Boilermakers Local 506 in Morenci.

But Phelps Dodge senior vice president Arthur H. Kinneberg said company officials agreed to a 10-day shutdown "with a gun to its head and in order to avoid almost certain bloodshed."

"When reason returns, we shall reopen the mining operation — giving all who choose the right to return to work," Kinneberg said at a Phoenix news conference.

The company said its Ajo mine would stay open and made no mention of the other location that is continuing to operate despite the strike, at El Paso.

The 6-week-old strike by 13 unions over cost-of-living benefits in a new three-year contract turned increasingly bitter Friday after the company announced it would hire 1,500 new employees to replace 2,300 strikers. The company says 700 union workers have crossed picket lines.

Phelps Dodge officials and a committee representing the 13 striking unions will meet as soon as possible under a federal mediator, said Jerry Spreitzer, president of Machinists Local 1132.

Allan Schmidt, spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety, said the company was told Tuesday that "the union membership indicated they were going to shut down the (Morenci) plant, and the union leadership indicated it could do nothing to stop it."

He said authorities advised Phelps Dodge that "if that was the intent, and we believed it was, then there would be violence, bloodshed and probably somebody would die."

United Steelworkers Local 616 president Angel Rodriguez, telling a union group of the company's Morenci decision, said: "We'll do our darnedest to negotiate a contract within the next 10 days."

Members shouted back "Union! Union! Union!"

Armed and angry union strikers turn away from police barricades at the Phelps Dodge mine main entrance in Morenci, Ariz. The strikers intended to rush the gates, but union leaders urged them to put away their bats. Dodge officials agreed to close the mine and renew talks with striking unions.

The agreement, after two days of tension here and in Ajo, came during a meeting arranged after Gov. Bruce Babbitt asked both sides to "take one step back from the precipice of violence."

After the agreement, workers inside the plant left in a 150-vehicle caravan that took 10 minutes to clear a half-mile gauntlet of jeering strikers who spit on windshields and banged on passing cars.

In Ajo, officers blocked Arizona 85, the main highway, while about 200 strikers and supporters milled around the main gate to the mine. Asa Bushnell of the Pima County Sheriff's Department said many had baseball bats or sticks.

Earlier in the strike, Chandra Tallant, 3, was shot in the head as bullets were fired into her home in Ajo while her father was working in the mine. She remains hospitalized with a bullet in her brain. No one has been charged. Both management and union leaders have offered to cooperate in the investigation.

Many of the striking workers were angry Tuesday because they believed the Phelps Dodge Morenci plant would be shut down Monday, but it continued production overnight.

In a written statement, Phelps Dodge said: "The company agrees to remove all employees from the plant and mine (at Morenci) except for those necessary for the orderly shutdown of operations as soon as possible."

The statement said the company also would stop hiring at the plant.

AFL-CIO will try to deliver its candidate

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

BOSTON (AP) — Now that the AFL-CIO is firmly committed to a strong role in the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination contest, the labor group is flexing its political muscle to see if it can actually deliver for a candidate.

That question was on the minds of many of the union leaders who met Tuesday to approve the timing and procedures for a labor endorsement.

"I think the American labor movement can deliver," said Gerald F. McEntee, president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

McEntee is a strong supporter of Walter F. Mondale, who was seen as the big winner in the battle over whether the labor federation should make its endorsement decision in December or in October.

"We wanted the endorsement earlier rather than later," said Paul Jensen, a Mondale aide who lobbied members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Mondale got his way. The endorsement will be made at the AFL-CIO convention in October.

The big losers in the timing fight were Sens. Alan Cranston of California and John Glenn of Ohio, both of whom wanted the unions to hold off until December so they could build a stronger following.

If Mondale gets the federation's endorsement in October, what will he win?

The former vice president already has said he will not accept contributions from political action committees. That eliminates any direct financial aid from the unions.

But the thousands of volunteers the AFL-CIO can mobilize for a candidate, the telephone banks, the envelope stuffers and doorbell ringers, are worth a lot of money to any campaign.

And in a caucus state like Iowa, which leads off the delegate selection process next February, a strong organization, such as labor can provide, is worth more than money.

McEntee pointed out that at the height of the 1982 campaign, his union was making 1 million telephone calls a week urging people to support its candidates.

For Cranston and Glenn, the question is whether it still is possible to block a Mondale endorsement and, if not, whether they can effectively woo union support despite an AFL-CIO commitment to Mondale.

Cranston aides point out that 20 percent of the AFL-CIO's membership is in the senator's home state of California.

"We have been told by some California unions that no matter what happens they are with us," said Victor Kamber, a Cranston adviser.

Glenn aides describe a similar situation in Ohio, another strong union state.

FNB suffers $109 million second-quarter loss

Wageman said every effort will be made to recover what the bank is owed. "We are not simply walking away from these credits (charged-off loans). Many of the problem accounts are responsible business people who want to repay their debt as soon as they are able to do so."

He said collecting on the bad loans was a function of timing and economic conditions in West Texas. At the end of 1982, the bank had written off $16.6 million in bad loans and recovered $277,000. Banking sources say these type of loans can be recovered eventually, but that it is usually a long, drawn-out process.

Deposits at First National, still the largest bank in either Midland or Odessa, declined by $219 million to $965.8 million compared to $1.19 billion at the end of the first quarter. They were $1.47 billion in the same quarter a year ago.

In the past nine months, First National faced what chairman of the board Clarence Scharbauer Jr. called "stiff competition" from Midland's three new commercial banks and one new savings and loan. Deposits at those four institutions totaled $158 million at June 30.

Total loans at First National were $1.19 billion in the second quarter compared to $1.37 billion on March 31 and $1.25 billion at June 30, 1982.

Because it was strapped for capital during the second quarter, First National itself received loans from the Federal Reserve Bank in Dallas. The loan total ranged from a low of $240 million up to $500 million, finishing the quarter on June 30 at $390 million. The total loaned by the Fed is currently back up to $450 million, according to the bank. These loans are secured by the bank's $1.5 billion in assets.

Wageman said First National is the dominant bank in the region and to have avoided the effects of the economic downturn in West Texas, and the reduced revenues to the petroleum industry, would have been impossible.

"Weathering and rising above these conditions is one of the most challenging tasks this economy has ever had to face," Wageman said.

As the bank continues to closely monitor loans, more charge-offs may be necessary, he added. These, in turn, may lead to further operating losses in 1983, although not as deep as have been experienced so far, Wageman said.

The bank has retained an investment banking firm, The First Boston Corporation, to advise it on funding and capital matters, Wageman said. The bank's board of directors has already purchased $20 million in subordinated notes to bolster First National's capital position, he said.

In addition, the $50 million in letters of credit received by First National in connection with the sale of its building, has been funded by the issuing banks.

Work is also underway toward issuing a new stock offering, Wageman said, but the timing is still not set.

In response to a question, Wageman said there are no merger possibilities at this time.

First National's primary capital (shareholders' equity of $12.3 million plus the loan loss reserve) is $97.3 million, or 6.3 percent of total assets. The average ratio for a bank First National's size, nationwide, is 6.87 percent.

The bank's total capital (the sum of primary capital and subordinated debentures) is $129.3 million, or 8.4 percent of assets. The average nationally for a bank of First National's size is 7.36 percent.

MISD will be lowering tax rate by ½ cent

The five-year priority plan is required by the State Board of Education. Of the fourth-year summary, Duane Moore, assistant superintendent for instruction, commented, "Overall we accomplished each of the objectives, with a few exceptions."

One of the goals for the past year was to have more than 35 percent of MISD students in kindergarten through sixth grades score in the top 25 percent of the national norm in reading. In April, 31 percent were in the 75th national percentile. In grades seven through 12 32.4 percent of the students were reading in the 75th national percentile, although the goal was to shoot for 33 percent. All the objectives for mathematics were met.

Trustees voted to reimburse the City of Midland more than $10,000 for playground equipment installed at Parker Elementary. The school is working in conjunction with the city to construct playgrounds at the two new elementary schools, Parker and Santa Rita. As in the past, the two entities are working together to provide school playgrounds that are also used as neighborhood parks.

In other action trustees accepted the $528,000 addition of six classroom to Travis Elementary School. Aside from some finishing touches, the only complaint was that the sinks in the restrooms were too low. "They're about 15 inches from the floor," commented trustee Ann Page. The district will have to pay for having the sinks raised, said the board's advisor, James Mailey.

The board also approved plans to expand the band hall at Lee High School. It will advertise for bids, but the projected cost is $161,000.

The second reading of a revised leaves of absence policy was approved, and the measure will now go into effect. It creates provisions for pregnancy leave, which was formerly included under temporary disability and had to be verified by a physician as a disabling condition. It also allows for parental leave for new mothers and fathers.

He alienated the military establishment with his flamboyant advocacy of Protestant fundamentalism in a country where the overwhelming majority are Roman Catholics.

In Washington, many members of Congress refused to believe administration claims that there had been a marked easing of political repression under Rios Montt. Critics cited Guatemala's decision to ignore the pleas of Pope John Paul II last March and execute six prisoners while the Pope was visiting Central America.

Another sore point was the still unexplained disappearance earlier this year of four persons, including a Guatemalan employee of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Human Rights groups were uniformly critical of the Guatemalan army's pacification program. In March, Americas Watch, a New York-based group, said the principal feature of the program is the "virtually indiscriminate" murder of rural peasants living in areas believed sympathetic to leftist guerrillas battling the government.

The State Department claimed much of the information utilized by Americas Watch and other human rights groups was of doubtful authenticity. Following a meeting with Rios Montt last December in Costa Rica, President Reagan said human rights groups were giving the Guatemalan "a bum rap."

A month later, the administration approved a long-standing Guatemalan request for helicopter spare parts and other non-lethal equipment. But an administration request for $40 million in economic assistance died in the House Appropriations subcommittee chaired by Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md.

Long visited Central America earlier this year and Guatemalan newspapers said a meeting with Mejia Victores, then defense minister, turned into a shouting match.

Meanwhile, the Soviet government newspaper Izvestia said Tuesday the United States engineered Rios Montt's ouster because "he stopped satisfying his Washington benefactors."

As evidence of Washington's hand in the coup, Izvestia cited Mejia Victores' presence last Saturday aboard the U.S. aircraft carrier Ranger, now deployed in Central American waters. There, Izvestia said, Mejia Victores "received his instructions" for the coup.

The State Department responded that any suggestion the encounter aboard the Ranger was a "plotting session is just ridiculous."

Pedestrian skywalks proposed

Additionally, from Loop 250 to Front Street, A Street would be a six-lane divided thoroughfare. Dunkin encouraged city officials to think about an interchange at the intersection of Lamesa Road and Loop 250, diverting traffic that Big Spring Street cannot handle.

Heads nodded in agreement for plans to change the existing traffic light system. Midland's traffic lights are all tied together with underground cable. According to Dunkin, ground moisture poses cable problems, resulting in stops at every intersection. He proposed that the city adapt a time clock system for the traffic lights.

To avoid what Dunkin termed "corner clutter," the plan calls for standardizing the traffic lights, allowing space for a park bench, trash cans and street lights at the corners. Nobody disagreed that trees and shubbery would create a more pleasant atmosphere.

The city council and planning commission set a tentative 9 a.m. Monday meeting to discuss the plan further.

Equine collision begets lawsuit

WEST PLAINS, Mo. (AP) — A woman who says she was injured when a mule ran into her horse has filed a $200,500 lawsuit against the mule's owner.

Vicki L. Watkins said in the suit that she needed surgery after the Feb. 19 accident and she still undergoes physical therapy.

The suit said Miss Watkins suffered cuts, scrapes, bruises and an injured right knee, that her earning capacity has been diminished and she is unable to perform household chores.

U.S. Marine dies in airport shelling

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Twenty artillery shells slammed into Beirut international airport Wednesday, and authorities said at least one person was killed and seven wounded, including a U.S. Marine peacekeeper.

The airport was closed after the attack, the second in less than three weeks. It began about 7:15 a.m. and persisted for about a half hour, radio reports and witnesses said.

Police said the shellfire came from Aitat, a Druse-held town in the mountains overlooking the capital, and fell near Marine positions at the airport.

Police did not release the identity of the dead Marine. Another Marine was reportedly wounded in the shelling but he was not identified.

Beirut radio stations said the airport shelling was preceded by an artillery duel in the mountains between Christian and Druse militiamen.

"Twenty shells hit the airport area but how close to the Marines we can't say for the moment," said Maj. John Shotwell of New York, spokesman for the 1,200 man U.S. peacekeeping contingent deployed near the airport.

He said the shellfire appeared to come from the southeast where much of the sectarian fighting has taken place between Christian and Druse militiamen in Israeli-held territory.

Airport sources said the shells had fallen on the runways but that no planes were known to be damaged.

Lebanon's state radio said shells also were falling on the coastal neighborhood of Ouzai.

Indiscriminate rocket and shellfire rained down on the airport July 22, during President Amin Gemayel's visit to the United States. Leftist Druse leader Walid Jumblatt said his militiamen were responsible for that round of shelling, which killed one person and wounded 23.

Congress breaks record with enactment of 63 bills

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Congress broke last week for its five-week summer recess, it had passed more bills than any Congress since 1980 — even though it left a host of major legislation to await its return after Labor Day.

The first seven months of 1983 saw a total of 63 bills enacted, a major increase over the 26 measures that had been sent to the White House this time last year.

Congress is also ahead of last year's schedule in approving appropriations bills to fund the government. Of the 13 spending bills needed to finance government agencies and programs, three have already been signed by the president and one is awaiting his signature.

Last year at this time, not a single spending bill had been approved by either the House or the Senate.

Congressional leaders patted themselves on the back for their productivity and then used the remaining day before the recess to pass a few measures that were, well, of something less than national significance.

For instance, the Senate rushed to pass a bill sponsored by Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., to name the airport control tower in Chattanooga, Tenn., after Harry Porter, whom Baker described as "a fixture in the state...a longime resident and a friend of mine."

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said he was more than eager to accomodate his Republican counterpart.

"The majority leader knows of my fondness for him. He knows I would jump into the Potomac for him," Byrd said, announcing that there would be no Democratic opposition to the special high-priority treatment Baker's bill was receiving.

"I am speechless," Baker said. "I am not often speechless."

"I hope we can keep him that way,' ' Byrd responded.

And the Harry Porter Control Tower Act of 1983 joined the list of measures to win congressional approval.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., has come up with is own proposal for eliminating possible problems caused when the television networks broadcast early results in presidential elections from the East Coast while polls are still open in the West.

"Perhaps we should open the polls for 24 hours. Let's have one day for the presidential election; the same 24-hour period all over the United States," said the unsuccessful 1964 Republican presidential candidate in a letter to the editor that appeared last week in the Washington Post.

"Nobody can complain if the polls are open for 24 hours and the day is the same all over the United States. It's a least worth a try," Goldwater said.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., said he finds "astonishing" and "breath-taking" a recent Treasury Department study suggesting that government deficits might, under certain circumstances, increase economic growth rather than hurt the economy.

"It sent me into a reverie," Proxmire said in a news release. "It is as though Whistler's mother stood up, threw open that prim black dress and revealed a shocking-pink string bikini."

Proxmire said the study made him dream of "other miraculous conversions."

They included a vision of Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger "arising from his grindstone with a gleaming knife in his hand, which he used to slash the fat from the military budget."

He also said he had a vision of Budget Director David Stockman "sitting at a spinning wheel" and reweaving federal budget strategy and Interior Secretary James Watt joining a save-the-whales conservation group "in the bow of a small rubber raft, shaking his fist at a whaler."

"But that last one snapped me out of it. Some visions are beyond the pale, even in a reverie," Proxmire's press release concluded.

Couple treats animals

From Wire Reports

SEATTLE — In one large cage, a 4-month-old coyote lies listlessly. Infested with hookworms, the coyote must be fed intravenously.

Nearby, a 4-month-old barn owl flaps its wings and squawks as it awaits the time when it will be set free to forage for its own food.

In the trailer house "infirmary," a gray squirrel is being treated for an apparent abscess of the jaw.

It's not a zoo or a veterinary office but the Wild Animal Clinic, in the yard behind the home of Lorraine and Michael Durick.

The Duricks make a habit of returning a healed animal or bird to an area different from the one in which it was originally hurt.

The clinic receives as many as 50 calls a day. Some are reports of a wild animal the Duricks will pick up and treat, or some may be from people inquiring about an animal.

"For a month, we've had this squirrel, Bogey, who was mauled by a cat or a dog," Mrs. Durick said. "The woman, at whose house Bogey begged peanuts, called us when the squirrel was hurt and she's telephoned every day since to find out how Bogey is progressing."

Most animals and birds they are now treating were hit by cars and are orphaned, said Mrs. Durick, who is a registered nurse.

During the Wild Animal Clinic's five years of existence, the number of patients and the costs have more than doubled.

Private donations sustain the clinic, but even these aren't enough to keep up with the demands. (Contributions can be made to the Wild Animal Clinic, P.O. Box 24847, Seattle, Wash. 98124.)

Besides feeding the animals at a cost of $400 to $500 a month, the Duricks spend "hundreds of dollars more" on medicines. They'd like to buy equipment like a $300 dart gun to tranquilize animals, a $300 microscope and resuscitation and anesthetic machines.

Finally, they would like to purchase acreage behind their yard whichwould provide more room to house animals being treated. The cage room they now use for the wildlife is near the no-vacancy limit.

"I'm forced to put big raccoons in tiny cages," said Mrs. Durick, a registered nurse. "I've never had to do that before. And we only have a half-dozen raccoons now, but we'll have a bunch of them later."

'Technology could widen gap in society'

By KEN HERMAN

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The technology needed to drive the American economy into the next decade could leave a "chasm" that further polarizes the nation into racial and ethnic groups, according to San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros.

Cisneros on Tuesday told state lawmakers gathered here for the National Conference of State Legislatures convention that economic recovery won't help Americans — many of them black and Hispanic — who don't have the training needed for computer-age jobs.

"That kind of unemployment is likely to create chasms in our society 10 years from now that are deeper than the divisions that exist in our society today along racial and ethnic lines," Cisneros warned.

The national drive to place a new emphasis on math and science training must not leave blacks and Hispanics behind, he said. Such a failure would be devastating for groups such as the "meager black middle class that has been able to establish some foothold" in the economy, according to Cisneros.

The mayor spoke at the NCSL convention keynote session, titled "Educating for a Changing Economy." That new economy might have few jobs for the "technologically illiterate," said Cisneros.

In his welcoming remarks to the 3,700 lawmakers and legislative aides, Texas Gov. Mark White called for an end to state "provincialism," and said the states now are in an international battle.

"We no longer have the time to compete between the Sun Belt and the Snow Belt, east and west, north and south. We are in a major world competition," he said.

William Steinberger, Control Data Corp. vice president for vocational education services in St. Paul, Minn., said the prime opponent is Japan.

"We are really talking about a race to find qualified people who can advance the state of our industries faster than the Japanese. It's a race we used to win easily," Steinberger said.

Skills and knowledge needed for particular jobs have become "perishable commodities" that workers could have to renew twice a decade, he said. "When the steel mill shuts down, what's the value of the steelworker's skill?" he asked, calling for a "retooling of our education system."

Kennedy, Bush address Hispanic convention

By KRISTIN GAZLAY

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Vice President George Bush drew applause when he defended President Reagan's policies to a Hispanic group, but Sen. Edward Kennedy got loud whoops and hollers when he cited the current administration's "insensitivity and indifference."

Both men traveled here Tuesday to address the National Hispanic Voter Registration campaign, a door-to-door drive aimed at signing up 1 million Hispanic voters by the 1984 presidential election.

Kennedy, D-Mass., called the current administration "the most anti-Hispanic ... in recent history" and urged the group to deliver the votes to the Democrats to end Reagan's "consistent pattern of insensitivity and indifference."

"I am less concerned about whether the president eats Mexican food and more concerned about the Mexican-American families who don't have enough food to eat," Kennedy said.

The voter drive is billed as nonpartisan, but Kennedy's 30-minute speech constantly was interrupted by applause and cries of "Viva!"

Bush received a standing ovation before his remarks from a luncheon crowd composed primarily of Democrats with a number of specially invited Republicans.

Much of the discussion at the two-day convention involved marked criticism of the Reagan administration's policies toward minorities.

Kennedy blasted Reagan for building up the nation's defense system at the expense of social programs.

"The cost of one MX missile equals the entire federal budget for bilingual teaching for two years," Kennedy said. "I reject their policy of tax cuts for the privileged, budget cuts for the poor and social security cuts for the elderly."

Because of Reaganomics, Kennedy said, 12.3 percent of the nation's Hispanic workers are unemployed and 30 percent of the Hispanic families live below the poverty level.

Bush earlier had pointed out Reagan's signing of an extension to the Voting Rights Act, the administration's "firm commitment" to bilingual education and heavy assistance to minority businesses in the way of loans.

"This president and this vice president are not writing off any Americans," he said. "We should never forget that economic recovery is the best jobs program we've got."

Bush later told reporters he could not predict whether adding 1 million Hispanic voters to the 3.4 million already registered would hurt a Reagan candidacy.

Leaders of the registration drive have said the added voters could "swing" election results in Texas, California, New York and New Mexico.

Officials 'horrified' by lack of drought relief

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Failure of the Reagan administration to agree to drought relief for West Texas farmers and stockmen is horrifying members of Congress and state officials.

Outright rejection by the Department of Agriculture of pleas for livestock feed is particularly embarrassing to Rep. Tom Loeffler, R., Hunt, who as principal deputy whip of the Republican party in the House of Repesentatives has worked hard to pass White House bills.

Loeffler appealed personally and by telephone to Agriculture Secretary John Block for feed for farmers and other emergency drought aid. He also requested tax relief from Treasury Secretary Donald Regan for livestock men who must liquidate their herd, which raises their incomes levels – and their taxes.

LOEFFLER asked the Small Business Administration for disaster loans for non-farm or ranch small business men hurt by the drought. He has not even had a formal reply.

Democratic Gov. Mark White asked the Reagan administration to declare West Texas eligible for livestock feed in June, but Block refused.

On Wednesday, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower has called a press conference. Hightower is expected to blast the federal officials for their alleged insensitivity in sending no aid and in still maintaining they need more evidence of drought. Hightower has brought along containers of West Texas dust to Washington "to prove to people how dry it is out there."

HE HAD AN advance man here Tuesday preparing for the event. This time, Hightower obtained a prestigious room in the Capitol building, instead of going to the State of Texas office. Hightower has been seeking a separate office from the state set-up in Washington but was not able to arrange for it.

To find out why Block has rejected requests, reporters were referred to the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, and the Farmers Home Administration in the department.

Jerry Newcomb, director, Emergency Operations and Livestock Programs, said the request for emergency livestock feed was rejected "because we terminated that program in April, 1982."

Asked what farmers could do in present crisis, Newcomb replied: "They can start grazing their cattle on their conservation acreage," referring to land set aside from commodity production.

Burnett denies part in murders

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Capital murder defendant Linda May Burnett stoically looked ahead or at her attorney while an investigator narrated a series of color slides showing the removal of five bodies from a mass grave.

An investigator with the Jefferson County district attorney's office in Beaumont testified Tuesday that it appeared the victims were alive when placed in the grave, before being shot.

One juror wept as the slides were shown.

Ms. Burnett, in a statement read Tuesday at the trial, admitted accompanying Joe Dugas to the home of a Southeast Texas family. But arresting officers said she denied on July 10, 1978 that she had participated in the slayings 10 days earlier.

State District Judge Larry Gist agreed to admit the statement into evidence over the objections of defense attorney Charles Carver.

Ms. Burnett, of Nederland, is being tried in connection with the slaying of Martha Phillips. The case was moved here from Beaumont on a change of venue.

Ms. Burnett and Dugas were convicted for the July 1978 murder of Jason Phillips, 3, the son of Elmer and Martha Phillips of Woodward, Okla., who were visiting Elmer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bishop Phillips, at Winnie, Texas, a community 25 miles southwest of Beaumont.

Both were sentenced to death, but Dugas was shot to death two months ago during an apparent escape attempt. An appeals court overturned Ms. Burnett's conviction because a tape-recorded conversation between her and a hypnotist was used against her.

Calise Blanchard, the district attorney's investigator, testified that Dugas led officers on July 9, 1978 to the gravesite in a wooded area near Fannett, about 10 miles from the Phillips residence.

Blanchard also said it appeared the victims "were placed in that grave alive and were shot when they were in the grave."

The five people had been killed eight days before the gravesite was found, Blanchard said.

During the excavation of the grave, "the stink of decomposing bodies was almost unbearable. ... Officers were crying and throwing up," Blanchard said. Masking tape had been wrapped around the faces of the victims, the investigator testified.

Ms. Burnett said in the statement read Tuesday that Dugas asked her to drive to a beach on the night of July 1, 1978 and suggested they leave his car at a nightclub so "no one would know we were out together."

She said she agreed, but added that once the couple left the nightclub in her car, Dugas began driving "the wrong way."

"I asked him what he was doing," Ms. Burnett said. "He told me he was going out to see Mary's people" in the Bishop Phillips family.

Police chief has been suspended after charges

FORT WORTH (AP) — Richland Hills Police Chief A.D. "Doug" Davis, who was indicted by a grand jury on charges he abused a handcuffed 19-year-old prisoner, has been suspended without pay, city officials said.

City Administrator Dennis Woodard said Tuesday the suspension was effective immediately and that an acting chief would be appointed soon.

A Tarrant County grand jury indicted Davis after hearing three hours of testimony Monday morning from the teen-ager, Leonard Skubic. Davis and three police officers who were present when Skubic was arrested March 11. The panel waited until 10 a.m. Tuesday to announce the indictment.

In addition to a felony indictment on a charge of violating the civil rights of a prisoner, misdemeanor indictments were returned alleging official misconduct and official oppression, Assistant District Attorney Steve Chaney said.

The indictments allege that Davis pulled a public intoxication suspect by the hair "and threw him into a police vehicle with more force than was reasonably necessary, each of those acts causing bodily injury," Chaney said.

"I think it would be fair to say that from the facts that the grand jury found that this man was not beaten severely, but our definition is any bodily injury. The injuries were not lasting, but they should not have occurred," he added.

The indictments also allege that Davis struck Skubic in the face with his hand, Chaney said.

It was his recommendation to the grand jurors, Chaney said, "that if they chose to indict him, that they indict him on all of the charges. That's pretty much what I always advise a grand jury."

Davis was not jailed on the charges because grand jurors decided to allow him to post a $1,000 personal bond, Chaney said.

Two former members of the Richland Hills police department, who earlier had corroborated Skubic's story, testified before the grand jury on Monday. A third officer, still on the force, backed up Davis' denial that such a beating occurred, officials said.

The two — John Smedley and Stephen Ziegler — were fired by Davis after they spoke to the news media about the incident when Skubic aired his complaint.

Bellville hoping for gas 'boom'

BELLVILLE (AP) — An oil company is offering to lease many parcels of land here, including downtown lots, after concluding there could be a fairly large pocket of natural gas directly beneath this city of 3,000.

Officials of American Trading and Production Corp., a Houston branch of a Baltimore oil and gas exploration company, want to acquire leases on properties including the county courthouse, the county fairgrounds and the old county jail.

Company officials have discussed the proposed leases recently with the Austin County Commissioners Court and the Bellville City Council.

The offer to lease the land on which the buildings sit has touched off considerable talk here, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

"This is very much of a wildcat play," said Steve King, an American Trading and Production official.

"We don't know much what to expect," King said. "So far, we've been working on the city proper to get as much as we can. We're some distance away from sinking a well. It's not like we're going to poke a hole in the ground in the next couple of months."

The company, which so far has no competition for the Bellville leases, concluded after a year-long regional study of six South Central Texas counties that it will find natural gas here.

King said said whatever drilling might be done will be slant, directional work that will not damage homes, businesses and prominent city buildings.

Although some Bellville property owners have suspected for years there was some valuable petroleum beneath the ground, a city bank official said he thinks the recent push to acquire leases marks the first time a company has contacted city property owners about leasing their land.

One area where drills have been placed in unusual spots is Bryan, where 75 or more operational oil and gas wells have been drilled in recent years on country club golf courses, beside hospitals and in city parks and residEntial neighborhoods.

'Judges violated legal conduct'

ODESSA (AP) — An Odessa attorney who became the target of a State Bar of Texas investigation after he refused to defend a murder defendant claims that three district judges violated legal conduct rules by revealing that they had filed a grievance against him.

The bar's grievance committee began investigating attorney John Green after he refused, for moral reasons, to defend a man accused of murdering a woman and two teen-age boys.

The defendant, Kenneth Venne, 29, is accused of killing his mother-in-law, Ruby Kay Fieseler, 50, and her sons Paul, 17, and Keith, 13 in July.

District judges R.L. McKim, Gene Ater and Joe Connally had sent a letter to the grievance committee requesting that Green's comments about the case be examined.

Green claimed the judges violated codes of legal ethics by making their action public. The investigation, he said, is "a further attempt to discredit me through the use of publicity for doing what I believe is right."

Ex-prosecutor's father says taped voice not his son's

ATLANTA (AP) — The father of former federal prosecutor Frank Robin, who is on trial charged with bribery and obstruction of justice, testified that a taped voice of a man offering to disclose information about a secret investigation was not that of his son.

Frank Robin Sr. testified Tuesday after listening to a taped telephone conversation in which a man identifying himself as Charles India offered to divulge secret information about the drug case.

Prosecutors contend Robin Jr., a former federal prosecutor from Houston, used the name Charles India as a code name in attempting to sell confidential information about the case.

The jury prepared to resume deliberations today in the U.S. District Court trial.

Robin, 30, was charged in a two-count indictment of compromising grand jury investigations in Houston and Atlanta by trying to sell "confidential and sensitive information" to the targets of the probes.

He was fired Oct. 15 as a prosecutor in the U.S. attorney's office in Houston. The defendant did not testify on his own behalf.

"Is that voice your son's voice?" asked defense attorney Eugene Medori of Decatur.

"It is not," said the elder Robin.

Nine earlier defense witnesses, including Robin's wife, said they could not identify Robin's voice on the tape. Last week, nearly a dozen government witnesses testified that they believed the voice was Robin's.

Auto repairman charged for putting parts in highway

TRENT, Texas (AP) — A automotive repair shop located just off Interstate 20 in this West Texas community got a run of business lately when several vehicles drove onto old car and truck parts that were lying on the highway.

But it was more than just blind luck for Wesley Beard, the owner of Beard's Auto & Truck Repairs, according to Texas Rangers and investigators for the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Beard was arrested this week and charged with four counts of felony criminal mischief, authorities said. He was released Monday on $3,500 bond set by Justice of the Peace Clarence Collins.

Authorities charge that Beard was responsible for putting the car and truck parts on the highway. Beard allegedly dumped the large, heavy parts onto the eastbound lane of I-20 shortly before 10:30 p.m. on July 28, investigators said.

Within minutes, the drivers of four automobiles that suffered damage from the debris nursed their crippled vehicles to the nearest exit and into Beard's shop, investigators said.

Investigators said they have learned of a number of other similar incidents in the same area over a period of about three months.

Several other motorists also hit the parts — including a motor head, transmission parts and gears — but left after discovering their cars were not disabled. Other vehicles blew out tires and suffered undercarriage damage, according to investigators.

A DPS officer said Tuesday that investigators believe the same heavy car parts were used time after time to waylay motorists.

Union, management still far apart on issues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Union and company officials are meeting informally but say they are still far apart on issues that led to a strike by some 675,000 workers against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

"We're still talking and I'm cheered by that," Charles Dynes, a spokesman for AT&T, told a reporter late Monday.

But Glenn E. Watts, president of the Communications Workers of America, said, following an informal meeting of several hours, "We feel there is no reason to be optimistic about an early resolution of the strike. The two sides are too far apart."

At the White House, spokesman Larry Speakes said the Reagan administration is monitoring the strike through the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

In Boston, the executive council of the AFL-CIO passed a resolution supporting the strike.

AT&T officials said delays for directory assistance and repairs were the only problems with overall telephone service.

About 6,000 customers lost out-of-town service in Saugerties, N.Y., for six hours Tuesday when a phone cable was cut with an ax, phone company officials said. Other cable cuttings affected fewer people in Dallas, suburban Philadelphia, Falmouth, Mass., and Southfield, Mich.

Vandalism since the walkout began early Sunday has prompted New Jersey Bell to offer a $5,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for cutting cables and burning terminal boxes at 10 locations.

An 18-inch section of cable that serves state police, Fort Dix, N.J., and 300 homes in Hightstown was snipped from a carrier system in West Windsor Township, company officials said. Some service was restored to government agencies and two major businesses Tuesday and full service was expected to resume today.

There was no evidence that any destruction of Bell System equipment was related to the strike, AT&T officials said.

Monday's labor-management meetings were limited. Dynes said union president Watts and Rex Reed, vice president of AT&T for labor relations, talked over breakfast. Other small groups of negotiators — experts in particular areas — also met, he said, and there were numerous telephone conversations.

But there was no formal meeting of the two sides' negotiating teams, he said.

As to service to telephone customers, Dynes said, "By and large, service is pretty good, which is to be expected. People working the switchboards have had another day of experience — on-the-job training — and they should get better as they go along. There is a continual improvement for a few days because they're getting more comfortable in their jobs, and I think they can last quite a while."

Union officials have predicted the company would run into trouble as the supervisory personnel filling in for the striking workers begin to wear out from long hours, and as computer breakdowns occur.

Most direct-dial calls are routed by automatic equipment. Some delays were reported in getting directory assistance and repairs.

The strike began early Sunday when negotiators for the CWA and two smaller unions, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Telecommunications International Union, walked out of talks on a new three-year contract. It is the largest labor pact up for bargaining this year.

In addition to wages, job security and retraining programs, a major issue is working conditions, said Rozanne Weissman, director of public affairs for the CWA. She said these include monitoring of operators and setting an average time limit of 30 seconds for dealing with a customer seeking assistance.

Gas from ruptured tanker blankets rural community

WINDSOR, N.C. (AP) — A 20,000-gallon propane tank was ruptured Tuesday night, apparently by high winds, and 500 people were evacuated as fumes spread throughout this rural community, authorities said.

"If we get a spark it may go," said William Copeland, a dispatcher with the Bertie County Sheriff's Department. He said fumes from the tank at the Thrifty Gas Co., a wholesale distributor, had "blanketed" the town.

No injuries were reported and no fires broke out, Copeland said.

He said a small tornado struck the area and ruptured the tank, although the National Weather Service said no tornado was sighted.

"We were in touch with the sheriff's department when the storm went through," a spokesman for the weather service said. "There was a lot of gusty wind, lightning and hail, but nothing we could spot as a tornado."

A shelter was set up at the town's National Guard armory for the residents, who were expected to return to their homes Wednesday morning, Copeland said.

Farmers can graze stock on PIK land

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Agriculture Department, in another sign of the toll being taken by the drought in the farm belt, announced Tuesday that it will allow farmers in the driest areas to graze their livestock on land idled for conservation purposes under the payment-in-kind (PIK) program.

The decision, tacitly acknowledging that the ominous weather and the PIK crop-reduction plan together are squeezing livestock producers, means farmers will now be able to use some of the land they took out of production in return for payments of surplus federal grain.

The decision came after several weeks of pressure by Midwestern governors, agriculture departments, legislators and farm groups, who contended that intense heat and minimal rainfall had created a crisis in the livestock industry.

But the Agriculture Department's action will be of no help to drought-blitzed cattle and sheep ranchers in a 30-county area of West Texas, which has had no appreciable rain for 18 months and where ranchers are culling and disbanding herds to avoid total disaster.

Most of that area, described by one official as "dead from the heat," is not in the PIK program, so there is no additional grazing land available to ranchers. Texas officials have lobbied Agriculture Secretary John R. Block to provide federally owned grain on an emergency basis to ranchers.

Block refused one request last month. One emergency grain-supply program that could have provided help was ended by Block last year for budgetary reasons. Under another program, however, the Texans are seeking a quantity of USDA corn, stored in West Texas, as quick feed for 1.8 million cattle, sheep and Angora goats.

The drought has decimated pastures in many parts of the country. And, in combination with the PIK program, it has cut sharply into the likely corn harvest, threatened soybeans and driven up prices for both crops, which are important ingredients in livestock feed.

Because of the heat and dryness, livestock producers and dairymen around the country are taking action to cut back herds — moves that will put more beef, pork and lamb on the market soon, but could reduce supplies and raise prices in the future. And in other instances, because of arid pastures, farmers already are using hay set aside for next winter.

"We're approaching a disaster situation...I see us coming out of this year with the worst per-acre crop production in the last couple of decades in Illinois," said Larry Werries, the state director of agriculture. "USDA has taken a legitimate, justified action, although there has been some concern that they were changing the rules of PIK in the middle of the game."

Richard E. Lyng, deputy secretary of agriculture, said Tuesday that the grazing provisions will be approved on a county-by-county basis. Farmers may graze only their own livestock on their own land, planted with cover crops of clover, alfalfa and other grasses, but must continue to protect it from weeds and erosion.

One conservation expert, R. Neil Sampson of the National Association of Conservation Districts, said the decision "doesn't undermine the conservation idea of PIK a whole lot. If it's controlled grazing, it is not likely to have much adverse effect."

Tommy Beall, a market analyst for the National Cattlemen's Association in Denver, said the industry is "in a very critical situation right now. Even without the bad weather, we were faced with growing meat supplies and, at best, a stable price situation. But now with the higher feed costs and the continuing liquidation of herds because of the weather, that means higher supplies of beef and pork. The price and profit situation for producers is bleak."

Beall noted that the summer heat has had another impact: "It has affected demand for our products. It has been hot in the major consuming areas — all of the Northeast is abnormally hot and humid. People just don't eat as much meat."

And down in Georgia, Frank Owsley, an extension service swine scientist, added a grace note. The heat has cooled the ardor of both boars and sows, which means less money for the farmer and less pork for the consumer.

"Hogs are a lot like us when it comes to the weather," said Owsley. "When it's hot, they try to hold strenuous activities to a minimum.

Group: Watt 'doesn't believe in wilderness'

WASHINGTON (AP) — An environmentalist group says decisions by Interior Secretary James Watt to release more than 1 million acres of protected Western land for development show "he doesn't believe in wilderness."

The Wilderness Society accused Watt on Tuesday of illegally removing land in 10 Western states from consideration for possible inclusion in the federal wilderness system.

"James Watt basically doesn't believe in wilderness," said William Turnage, the society's executive director. "He basically believes that land and animals and resources are to be used...James Watt is a last throwback to the robber baron tradition."

At issue is 24 million acres of land that Congress ordered protected against development until the government decides whether to permanently designate the areas as wilderness.

In December Watt eliminated 804,000 acres from consideration, saying the land had been improperly included in the study. A state-by-state review resulted in the deletion of another 735,000 acres from the program.

Only 1.2 million of the 1.5 million acres dropped from possible wilderness status will be open for development because the department is considering lesser protection for 321,000 acres.

Along with five other environmental groups and the state of California, the Wilderness Society is suing the Interior Department to overturn Watts' decisions. The lawsuit is scheduled to be heard in September in federal court in Sacramento.

Asked about the Wildnerness Society's charges he acted illegally, Watt defended the wilderness review process.

"We are doing what the law requires us to do or Congress would have undone it," he said.

The Interior Department said land was deleted from the program because tracts did not meet the legal definition of wilderness. These tracts were either too small or contained underground mineral rights owned by private companies.

The society said such pristine country deleted from the study includes the Aubrey Peak in Arizona, acreage in the Santa Rosa Mountains in California, the Sleeping Giant region along the Missouri River in Montana, the El Malpais in New Mexico and the Encampment River in Wyoming, the society said.

State highway washed out three years after hurricane disaster

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

HIGH ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Curious motorists approach the scarred sign, scratch their heads or shrug their shoulders. Some huddle in their cars and pore over road maps.

"ROAD CLOSED. RISING WATER & DEBRIS."

"I'm disappointed," says Ed Altman, a shrimper from Seadrift, Texas, heading for Louisiana. "I've got to be in Sabine by 6 p.m.

"I'm going to take a chance and drive it."

He's not alone.

Many drivers ignore the sign and dodge the potholes and huge chunks of broken asphalt, engage in a game of "chicken" with speeding 18-wheeler trucks, and tightrope the single-lane remnants of Texas Highway 87, which runs along the beach between High Island and Sabine, 33 miles away.

Those who abide by the Texas Department of Highways advice and follow a detour north double their travel time between Sabine, just south of Port Arthur on the Texas-Louisiana border, and High Island, 30 miles east of Galveston.

It's three years this week that Hurricane Allen, 1980's "hurricane of the century," churned up the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and slammed into the Texas coast. While the bulk of the estimated $72.5 million damage occurred more to the south in the Corpus Christi and Brownsville areas, among its northern victims was Highway 87.

Allen, however, merely was continuing the work of his earlier hurricane sisters.

"Every major hurricane has eroded 70-100 yards of the original road," Highway Department Assistant District Engineer Dick Cardwell says. "This has been a continuing process over 40-50 years."

When the new road is built, it will be the third or fourth version of Texas 87, he says.

Bob Fish, who runs an airboat ride service through the marshes north of the road, isn't going to wait. "We were going great guns," he says, wistfully recalling the days before Allen when several thousand cars a day, mainly summer tourist traffic, used the road. Fish even bought three new boats at $15,000 apiece. Then the road was washed out and now Fish has his business — which has experienced a 50 percent drop since the road went out — up for sale.

"I've heard a hundred stories about them rebuilding the road," he says. "A pipeline was holding it up. Something else was holding it up. You hear one thing one day and another thing the next."

"It's really a bad mess," adds Sidney Jennings, who works at a grocery store-service station at Sabine Pass. "It's hard to get from here to Galveston."

Cardwell sympathizes but says the project — rebuilding 7.8 miles at an expected cost of $2 million — has been bogged down in paperwork because the new road crosses into the McFaddin Marsh National Wildlife Refuge.

"Any time you have to cover wetlands, there's a great deal of documentation," he says. "We have just recently received a permit to build."

Work has been proceeding on moving oil and gas pipelines and now the state is trying to arrange utility rights-of-way, he says.

"We believe by early next year, we should be letting a contract," Cardwell says.

Construction is expected to take about a year, he said.

The closed road truly is an adventure. For miles, the vast unbroken flat marshland on one side resembles a huge pool table. On the other, the waves of the Gulf of Mexico lick at a beach littered with an unbelievable assortment of flotsam amid thousands of seashells and chunks of driftwood.

Some stretches resemble a garbage dump. Among the signs of humanity in an otherwise beautifully desolate area is a burned out hulk of a car, the remains of what once was a pickup truck, old furniture, several hot water heaters, countless rusty buckets and cans and bottles by the thousands.

The road itself, once a two-lane thoroughfare, narrows to less than 10 feet in spots, with the crumbled remains of the highway falling a couple of feet to the Gulf sand like a giant broken jigsaw puzzle.

AIDS may hurt blood supply

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Fear of AIDS has led to a heated clash this summer between voluntary blood collection agencies and some hospitals and doctors — a battle that threatens to disrupt the nation's blood supply.

The controversy centers around increased use of "directed donations" that allow patients to select blood donors for transfusions from among family members, friends, co-workers or private blood donor clubs rather than from the community blood bank as a means of reducing the risk of contracting AIDS.

The three largest blood-banking agencies – the American Red Cross, the American Association of Blood Banks and the Council of Community Blood Centers – warn that the trend could "segregate" the nation's blood supply and lead to shortages if not reversed soon. They claim that directed donations will increase costs and waste blood without providing any additional protection for patients.

However, Dr. George Smith, director of clinical laboratories and blood banking for University of California-Los Angeles Medical Center, believes the attempt to stop directed donations is unrealistic, given the current climate of fear about acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), an incurable new disease that causes the body's immune system to collapse. "I live in the real world," Smith said. "Obviously, there's more anxiety about blood transfusions. Requests for the directed donor program have grown considerably."

The charged atmosphere surrounding the spread of AIDS – the number of cases has doubled in the last six months, with almost 2,000 reported nationwide by the Centers for Disease Control as of Aug. 1 – has caused an unwarranted panic about blood donations, according to health care officials.

Epidemiologists believe AIDS is transmitted through the "exchange of bodily fluids" such as semen, fecal matter and blood. In most instances, AIDS has been spread through sexual contact between gay males or the use of dirty needles by intravenous drug users.

At least 15 cases, however, have been linked to blood transfusions, and the CDC is investigating about 20 more, including three infants in Los Angeles who died after receiving transfusions soon after birth.

Though no risk of contracting the disease has been associated with donating blood, blood banks in many cities report donations running between 10 percent and 20 percent below last year because of the AIDS scare.

Another impact of the AIDS scare has been to increase interest in autologous and directed donation transfusions. Autologous donations involve patients undergoing elective surgery who chose to donate blood in the months preceding their operations for use in transfusions. The Red Cross, as well as most hospitals, offers autologous transfusions as an option for elective surgery patients.

Dr. Steven Kleinman, director of blood services for the American Red Cross in Los Angeles and Orange counties, noted that autologous transfusions have some of the same drawbacks as directed donations, namely higher storage costs and a potential reduction in the overall blood supply. But Kleinman says autologous transfusions, unlike directed donations, offer patients the best protection against blood-borne infections.

UCLA's Smith, on the other hand, talked openly of how the directed donations were in response to demands from physicians and patients. "I believe we have a responsibility to work with people, not feeding their anxiety but cooperating with them. We give people options with which they can be comfortable," he said.

Unlike the blood-banking establishment, Smith believes directed donations will actually help replenish the blood supply by bringing in donors who "ordinarily wouldn't give blood, a new population of donor. It's one less unit we have to get out of the general pool."

A wounded civilian stands in front of a garrison damaged in last year's civil strife in N'Djamena, Chad, Tuesday. Nigerian incumbent trails challenger

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — With several of his strongholds yet to report results, incumbent President Shehu Shagari trailed his main challenger by about one million votes today as counting of election returns continued for a fourth full day.

Results from 11 of Nigeria's 19 states showed Chief Obafemi Awolowo, 74, with 7.11 million votes to Shagari's 6.09 million.

Awolowo, runner-up in the presidential election four years ago, and Shagari, a reserved, soft-spoken Moslem, led the four other candidates by wide margins. The balloting Saturday was the first national election conducted by civilians in Nigeria in 19 years.

Most of the states in which Awolowo is strongest had reported by late Tuesday, prompting speculation that Shagari could overcome the deficit when returns from the north are in.

Shagari, 58, is from Sokoto state and is also expected to amass considerable popular support in two other northern states, Kano and Kaduna.

In third place with 1.69 million votes was Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe, a prominent 78-year-old politician who has vowed to reject the final result because, he charged, the election was not "free and fair."

Azikiwe contends as many as one million voters in Anambra state in the south, one of his strongholds, were effectively blocked from voting.

To win outright, a candidate must gain a popular vote plurality and also win at least 25 percent of the votes in two-thirds of the states.

Of the first 11 states to report, Shagari had met the 25 percent requirement in eight states and Awolowo in seven.

A run-off election is scheduled Aug. 16 should no candidate fulfill both tests.

Western observers expressed surprise Tuesday at the size of the popular vote, which — with eight states yet to report — was 1.5 million votes short of the total of 16.8 million ballots cast in 1979.

The 1979 elections marked the end to 13 years of military rule in Nigeria, Africa's most populous country with a population officially estimated at between 80 million and 100 million.

It is the world's fourth largest democracy after India, the United States and Japan.

"There is no question that there has been a much more intensive turn-out this year," one Western analyst said, suggesting that Nigerians may be shedding whatever reservations they have had about participatory government.

As widely expected, Awolowo won overwhelmingly in the southwest where his Yoruba tribe is dominant.

Egyptians sensitive about joint maneuvers

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Joint U.S.-Egyptian maneuvers designed to train American soldiers to fight a Middle East war officially opened today, but there are signs of growing Egyptian sensitivity about its role in the operation.

The exercise, code-named "Bright Star," will involve some 5,500 troops of the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force, organized to protect U.S. interests in the Middle East, and an equal number of Egyptians. The maneuvers, which run until Sept. 10, also involve smaller operations in Sudan, Oman and Somalia, with a total of about 7,000 U.S. troops in the four countries.

Although the operation formally began today, officials indicated the first field maneuvers would not start until next week.

U.S. troops — including units from Fort Stewart, Ga., Fort Campbell, Ky., and Fort Bragg, N.C. — will spend their first days getting used to the climate while U.S. and Egyptian logistical officers handle a stream of American equipment arriving for the operation, officials said.

In Alexandria, Egyptian sources said the U.S. cargo ship Trans-Colorado was expected in the Mediterranean port Saturday with supplies for the maneuvers. The vessel would be the third cargo ship known to have docked there since Friday in connection with the exercise.

Sources also reported that the U.S. aircraft carrier Eisenhower, which has been operating off the Libyan coast, was expected in Alexandria on Thursday for a five-day visit. A U.S. Embassy spokesman said the carrier's presence was a routine port call unrelated to the exercise.

U.S. AWACS may be sent over Chad despite warnings

WASHINGTON (AP) — American AWACS surveillance planes and their fighter escorts, still on the ground in Sudan, may be sent over Chad despite possible encounters with Libyan warplanes.

Administration officials have said they do not intend to expose the $129 million AWACS planes and their crews to the risk of combat. But if the giant radar planes and their eight F-15 fighter escorts were to enter Chadian airspace, the possibility of engaging Libyan warplanes seems obvious.

Brig. Gen. Walter Cousland on Tuesday stressed that the AWACs are still at Khartoum and "haven't been given their mission yet."

He said any order regarding the AWACs would have to come down from President Reagan.

There are about 550 U.S. military personnel in Khartoum in connection with the deployment there of the AWACS, the F-15 fighters, two KC-10 tanker planes and an RC-135 "Big Ear" intelligence-gathering aircraft equipped to listen in on Libyan radio traffic.

Meanwhile, the White House issued a statement Tuesday rejecting Libya's claim that its air and ground forces are not involved in the fighting in Chad's civil war.

Libya acknowledges it sees the rebels as Chad's only legitimate government, while the United States is aiding the government of President Hissene Habre.

White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said "Libya would like to overturn that government and substitute its surrogate as the government of Chad. Were this to happen, if (Col. Moammar) Khadafy were able to set up an established government simply by using overwhelming military might to do so, this would have consequences beyond the borders of Chad."

The United States wants to maintain the balance of power in the region and to prevent activities which would encourage Khadafy to believe he has a free hand there.

U.S., Senegal want French air support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials are using a visit here by Senegal's President Abdou Diouf to push for French air support of embattled Chad.

Both Senegal and the United States regard France as the logical Western power to take the lead in Chad, where Libya is backing a revolt against Chadian President Hissene Habre, said a senior U.S. official who briefed reporters on the condition that he not be identified.

The 47-year-old Senegalese chief executive was to meet with President Reagan today in a visit intended to underline U.S. appreciation for what the official called "Senegal's very constructive role in this world."

Senegal fears the consequences if Libya's Col. Moammar Khadafy succeeds in his reach for power and influence in Africa.

"They'd like to see Khadafy stopped," the official said...He is regarded unambiguously as a threat..."They would not like Mr. Khadafy to own Chad, nor would anybody else in the neighborhood."

Both Senegal and Chad are former French colonies. A Senagalese battalion was sent to Chad for seven months last year as part of an international peacekeeping force. Senegal is not expected to repeat that move, reportedly because of disagreements with the Organization for African Unity on how to deal with the current situation in Chad.

The U.S. official said the Senegalese are gratified the United States has earmarked $35 million in military aid to Chad so far and made two AWACS electronic surveillance planes available to monitor Libyan air attacks on Chadian targets.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, August 11, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actress Arlene Dahl, talk show host Mike Douglas, "Roots" author Alex Haley, journalist Carl Rowan and former Chicago Cubs catcher Bob Sheffing celebrate birthdays today. Those born on this date are entering a period of financial gain and happy romance. A project started in the past could prove controversial. Be prepared to fend off any challenges with the facts. A familiar face makes romance amusing. Pace yourself in love as well as in business. A job offer may have too many strings attached to be worthwhile.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Being on top of things puts you in a happy mood. You get new opportunities to advance your goals. The future looks very bright. Strive to simplify your life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A minor mix-up or misguided choice could complicate your day. Avoid making new commitments. Innovative ideas will attract higher up's attention. Your diplomacy serves you well when dealing with conservative people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance is satisfying but not very exciting. Catch up on routine chores. Something you overhear today gives you a lot to speculate about. Lay the groundwork for future investments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You welcome a chance to work in a pressure-free atmosphere. Teamwork helps you finish routine jobs ahead of schedule. Satisfy your curiosity by poking around in a bookstore or library.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It should be easier to concentrate now. Distant affairs look promising. Have your passport handy. Someone you have long admired feels strongly about you. Take the first step!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Recycle an old idea to make new profits. A young person comes up with a winning scheme. Give credit where it is due. Relatives could figure in your evening plans.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A fine day for financial maneuvers. An unusual opportunity comes your way. Seize it! Family life is routine but unfulfilling. Romance offers new rewards if you are willing to compromise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Channel your energy and drive into creative projects. You must avoid going to extremes. Accept a last-minute invitation. A very good evening for social gatherings and cultural events.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The news regarding someone at a distance is heartening. Express your views on a collaborative venture. A small tip is worth further investigation. Friend's advice could help you reap a bonanza!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good period to increase or improve your skills. Take a class even if you must do it at your own expense. New career opportunities are waiting just around the corner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A stay-at-home vacation becomes more attractive when you hear from distant friends or relatives. Financial transactions conducted behind closed doors bring quick profits. The way is paved for real progress!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A pet project gets the green light from an important backer. Compromise and teamwork will solve any problems at work or home. Do not take risks where romance is concerned.

How long should films run?

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — How long should a movie be?

The question has been raised since the earliest years of cinema, when D.W. Griffith and Mack Sennett argued for films longer than one reel — about 10 minutes.

Filmmakers have long claimed that they need time to tell their stories, but theater owners have opted for the shorter product, wanting a faster audience turnover. The studios have nearly always sided with the theaters — until this summer.

With the cooperation of Warner Bros., the Judy Garland-James Mason "A Star Is Born" has been re-released in almost the version which director George Cukor intended — with 19 of the 27 minutes originally cut from the picture restored.

Before the 1954 release, Warners had made the cuts, including two Garland song numbers, in the belief that audiences wouldn't sit still for a three-hour musical.

Yet the reconstructed "A Star Is Born" has been shown to enthusiastic audiences at Radio City Music Hall in New York, the Motion Picture Academy's theater in Beverly Hills, in Washington, Oakland, Calif., Chicago and Dallas.

Mason and Garland daughters Liza Minnelli and Lorna Luft attended some of the screenings, which benefited the Academy's preservation fund. Now there is talk that Warners may release the film nationally.

The most famous instance of severe cutting in the silent era concerned "Greed." Erich Von Stroheim returned from Death Valley with a 42-reel movie, long enough to make four long features. He trimmed the film to 24 reels, but Louis B. Mayer insisted on 10 reels. The imperious Von Stroheim refused to tamper with his masterpiece, and Irving Thalberg supervised the cuts.

"Greed" was not a 1923 success, and historians have argued ever since that a classic had been butchered by the studio system.

After the success of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Walt Disney launched an ambitious program of cartoon features. His biggest gamble was "Fantasia," and it failed. The 1940 audiences weren't ready for an artistic flight of fancy geared to classical music.

Disney's distributor, RKO, insisted that he cut the two-hour "Fantasia." Strapped for cash, he acquiesced, but he said: "You can get anyone you want to edit it; I can't do it."

Not until years later did "Fantasia" vindicate itself, becoming the hardiest perennial of the Disney library.

Opening lead: Seven of ◇.

Good technique might consist of no more than taking your tricks in the right order. Consider this hand from a recent rubber bridge game.

As so often happens, South overbid and underplayed his hand. He was a trifle weak for a jump rebid at his second turn, and his decision to remove three no trump to four hearts was sheer folly — he had a balanced hand.

West led his top diamond. East won the ace and returned the suit. Declarer won and played four rounds of trumps, sluffing three black cards from dummy. West did not waste his chance — he won the fourth trump and shifted to a spade. Declarer could not untangle his diamond tricks and, though he led a club from the table to his king, he still ended up losing a trick in each suit.

It was suggested that declarer should draw only three rounds of trumps, cash the jack of diamonds and then cross to the table with the ace of spades to take a spade discard on the king of diamonds. But that is not quite good enough. West can foil declarer by ruffing the diamond and exiting with a spade. Declarer has no way to get to the board, and will end up losing two club tricks for down one.

The correct play is to combine these two lines. Win the second diamond, draw three rounds of trumps and cash the jack of diamonds. It does not help West to ruff, so he discards. But now declarer leads another trump. West wins and can do as he pleases, but declarer will end up in dummy with the ace of spades to take a spade discard on the king of diamonds and then lead a club to his hand for the contract.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Lifestyle in the 1980s was the topic of a recent edition of U.S. News & World Report and the magazine's information was far from dull.

What it found is that following the crowd is out; showing your individualism is in.

Said the magazine, "... Americans are once again doing their own thing. In the late '70s, people in droves were assiduously devoting themselves to the simple life, trying to prove that less is more. In 1981, with the advent of the Reagan administration, wealth was back in style. People who had it were flaunting it, following the latest high fashions and proving that more is more."

Now, however, "just about anything goes," the magazine noted. In fact, it quotes futurist Alvin Toffler as saying society — once based on mass production, education, communication, consumption and political movements — is becoming "demassified."

Toffler cites segmented markets in merchandising and distribution, smaller audiences for TV networks, diversity in family lifestyles, the decline of mass political parties and rise of special-interest groups as evidence that Americans are becoming more and more pronounced in their individualism.

"If there is an overriding concern, one that unites most Americans, it is fitness," observes the magazine.

Oh well, here come the jogging suits and there goes the company dress codes!

Heated momentum

Americans who are made uncomfortable by the heat during this mid-summer period can at least find a measure of comfort in the continuing recovery of the economy. Momentum has been mounting ever since the 18-month recession started to taper off last November, and the past few weeks have been no exception.

The unemployment rate, always the last facet of the economy to react to a resurgence, took a dramatic dip last month. The United States Labor Department has reported that it went down to 9.5 percent, the lowest figure in more than a year.

While it is not pleasant to think that nearly 11 million Americans are without jobs, at least we can rejoice that the trend has been in the right direction for months. The Labor Department tells us that the July dip from 10 percent to the 9.5 figure is the sharpest drop in a single month in 20 years.

An obvious reason for this brightening of the employment picture is that consumers are buying more goods, which means that factories have to hire more people to manufacture those goods.

The automobile business is a good example. Americans bought more cars in July than they have in months, so Detroit needed more help to man the assembly lines. Other examples include over-the-counter retail sales, the building of houses and the manufacturing and selling of household appliances.

Naturally President Reagan is pleased with this progress, and doesn't mind giving his administration much credit for it. But he also is a realist and said the other day that in America there are still "pockets of great and heavy unemployment." But the good news about this mid-summer economic momentum is that those pockets are steadily becoming less "great and heavy," a trend likely to continue.

Another View:

U.S. role in Chad

Suddenly the Reagan administration is deep into the crisis in Chad, where insurgents backed by Libya, a radical Soviet client state, are pressing the government hard. Three military advisers are on the ground, the fleet is being shown off Libya's Mediterranean coast, AWACS surveillance planes are on the scene and some millions of dollars are on the way in various forms of military aid. It adds up to a conspicuous investment of American power and prestige in a country in which the United States has no traditional interests to speak of and which, we expect, very few Americans could find on a map. The intervention comes at a moment of intense debate over the administration's policies in Central America. It cannot help the president's position in that debate. It is more likely to hurt it.

What is the United States doing in Chad? The basis of the administration's response is the menace it continues to perceive in Libya's Col. Khadafy, who has put his oil money at the service of an extravagant ambition and a radical ideology. We do not underestimate Col. Khadafy. He has posed, and still poses, real dangers across a wide swath of African and Middle Eastern states — for years he has made trouble for and in Chad. His machinations led him repeatedly to be rejected by his fellow Africans when it came Libya's turn to fill the presidency of the Organization of African Unity. The Soviets have loaded him up with billions of dollars in weapons, confident that he can do a great deal of harm.

To accept that Col. Khadafy is a menace, however, is not to agree that the United States should be leading the fight against him. Chad is not familiar, let alone vital, American turf. For the patronage that most of the small African states still seek from the West, Chad looks first to France, the former colonial master, as Secretary of State George Schultz underscored Sunday. The French do remain involved there. The trouble is that the Socialist government of Francois Mitterrand has not entirely shed the posture of opposition to "neo-colonialism" that it acquired in its long years in the political wilderness. As a result it has been slow to act on what many Africans accept as the traditional French responsibility in Chad. Sunday's statement by the French minister of defense was a case study in hestitation.

Libyan planes are reported to have been bombing targets in Chad, and Libyan troops have reportedly crossed the border. Chad cannot be faulted for seeking foreign help. But will the American response make it more or less likely for an active role to be taken by France and by those of Chad's neighbors with a more direct interest in the outcome?

Leaks killed Mideast withdrawal

WASHINGTON — Did a well-placed leak to the press help sink Philip Habib? The president's recently removed special envoy in the Middle East may think so. Here's the story:

Jack Anderson

For months, Habib had been trying without success to persuade Israel and Syria to pull their troops out of Lebanon. Neither side would agree to make the first move; indeed, there was serious doubt that Syrian President Hafez Assad would withdraw his troops under any circumstances.

In June, the administration was toying with a plan that Habib hoped would break the stalemate. Simply put, the idea was to pressure Israel into a unilateral withdrawal, counting on Assad to follow the Israeli example. But before the plan could be initiated, someone in Washington leaked it to the press. The reaction was swift and predictable: Israel and her friends in Congress denounced the idea. The Lebanese didn't think much of it, either.

A July 1 cable, classified "Secret — Alert," from Habib to Secretary of State George Shultz stated bluntly: "The leaks out of Washington have produced an immensely damaging setback to our efforts here." My associate Lucette Lagnado has seen a copy of the cable.

Habib reported on a meeting he had held that morning with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, Defense Minister Moshe Arens and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

"Begin, Shamir and Arens made it clear... that there was no point in pursuing our alternative ideas for bringing about total withdrawal of all foreign forces. (They) urged that we limit the heavy damage already caused all of us, by making clear we continue to support the concept of simultaneous... withdrawals."

Habib had this advice for Shultz: "Under present circumstances, we all believe there is no point in your visiting the area at this time." He added that Sam Lewis, the U.S. ambassador to Israel, "strongly concurs."

But Shultz disregarded Habib's advice, went to the Middle East anyway — and failed to get Syria to agree to a troop withdrawal. It was an embarrassing failure for the administration.

Oddly enough, Habib's cable made clear that he thought the plan to force a unilateral Israeli withdrawal was still valid in the long run. "There is obviously no present possibility of pursuing our approach," he told Shultz. "Nevertheless, we do not necessarily rule out a revival of this approach at a later stage, if we can recover from the damage done by this leak."

The Middle East Policy Survey, an investigative newsletter, reports that the administration revived the plan during a visit by Israel officials to Washington last month.

Habib informed Shultz that the Israelis would go ahead with a limited, partial withdrawal, and added: "Depending on the ensuing circumstances, including the reaction in Lebanon, we may be able to take our idea from the back burner and try again."

Habib, who reportedly was the author of the controversial plan and was certainly its strongest advocate, is no longer in a position to try again. It remains to be seen whether his successor, Robert C. McFarlane, will risk burning his fingers by taking the plan from the back burner. More likely, it'll wind up in the deep-freezer.

WATCH ON TAXES: An optimistic President Reagan, cheered by the rebounding economy, is more convinced than ever that new tax increases won't be needed. He believes the bloated federal deficit can be reduced through spending cuts.

— Democratic leaders have no intention of launching a drive for higher taxes on the eve of the 1984 election. If the president doesn't request a tax increase, the Democrats who run the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee certainly won't push one on him. But neither are the Democrats likely to

SORE LOSER: Color the Environmental Protection Agency green — with envy. A freshman congressman's success in speeding the cleanup of radioactive wastes in his district has left the agency sulking like a schoolchild.

The EPA had been trying for years to get Stepan Chemical Co. to clean up the wastes at its plant site in Maywood, N.J. Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., worked out a deal with the company: $2 million from the Energy Department, up to $3 million from the company.

Stepan had resisted the EPA's attempt to put the whole burden on the company, on grounds that the radioactive waste was generated before it bought the site — generated, in fact, when it was being run by the government during World War II.

An internal EPA report commented sourly that Torricelli's successful cleanup effort "essentially scuttled the agency's enforcement efforts to obtain voluntary cleanup."

Asked to explain exactly how the congressman had "scuttled" EPA's efforts, Gene Lucero, director of the waste programs enforcement office, would say only, "EPA had begun discussions with the company which were substantially changed."

"That sounds like a jealous agency to me," said Torricelli aide Michael Kempner.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Central America's fate teetering

WASHINGTON — Central America's fate seems more likely to be decided in the U.S. Congress than by the outcome of any battle between U.S. troops and Salvadoran guerrillas or Sandinista regulars.

William Giandoni

It is not that the Sandinistas would run from a fight, but rather that Congress wants to make sure the United States doesn't challenge them.

Cmdr. Tomas Borge, the only surviving founder of the Sandinista movement, says that the Nicaraguans "are combatively willing to go either to the negotiating table ... or to the trenches. We can handle rifles better than pens," he added, drawing applause from an audience in Managua.

President Reagan says that the United States wants "a lasting peace for Central America." In announcing deployment of 3,000 to 4,000 U.S. troops to Central America for training exercises and dispatch of naval vessels to maneuvers off the coast, Mr. Reagan said the United States is "not broadening a war but trying to limit it."

"We're not planning a war and we don't think that that's going to happen at all," the president told a July 26 news conference, without placating his critics in Congress who, after all, hold the purse strings.

That the situation in Central America is critical is a matter of bipartisan consensus.

"Cuban and Nicaraguan aid for insurgencies" adds up to "a clear picture of active promotion for 'revolution without frontiers' throughout Central America," the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, on which the Democrats hold a 9-to-5 edge, has declared publicly.

"The threat of communism is embodied in the efforts of Cuba, Nicaragua, and less openly, the Soviet Union itself," the committee, chaired by Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass., has reported.

"No member of the committee believes that ending support for the anti-Sandinista insurgency will by itself induce a corresponding end in Sandinista support for the Salvadoran insurgency," the Boland committee said.

"Sandinista support for the Salvadoran insurgents continues to be important for the continuation of that insurgency. To ignore this key link is to provide an important military edge to these insurgents. Ending the U.S. program supporting anti-Sandinista insurgency will not change this aspect of Sandinista policy," the committe said in a report dated May 13.

Yet Boland himself led the fight to cut off covert U.S. aid to the "contras," the Nicaraguan exiles who have been waging a guerrilla campaign against the avowedly Marxist Sandinistas.

When the Reagan administration sought to demonstrate its commitment to U.S. friends in Central America, which the committee had said should "be seen as strong and enduring," the protest on Capitol Hill was loud and prolonged.

Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the House Western Hemisphere Affairs subcommittee, for example, declared that "this deployment of U.S. forces into the area ... is not simply a routine exercise to give our troops practice. ... From the outset, the administration has been totally hostile" to the Nicaraguan Marxists.

He indicated that the Democrats intend to keep on trying to thwart what they perceive as the administration's inclination toward military involvement in Central America.

"Congress has the power," Barnes said. "Whether it has the will remains to be seen."

President Reagan says that his policy "is aimed at, first of all, bringing about peace in El Salvador ... and, in Nicaragua, hoping that we can persuade the Nicaraguan, the Sandinista government to return to the principles of the revolution."

Opinion in Latin America seems divided.

Mexico and Colombia, two of the four members of the Contadora Group that has been concerning itself with the problem since January, feel that the Central American crisis should be turned over to the United Nations.

The Central American countries that consider themselves threatened by the Nicaraguan Marxists, El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala, have been insisting that a regional solution, rather than recourse to the United Nations, should be sought.

President Reagan shares the view of the four target countries, that the Organization of American States is "the appropriate mechanism."

But many Congressmen want it known that they do not support any administration commitment to block further Marxist penetration of Central America.

ART BUCHWALD

Someone's trying to communicate

A recent nationwide survey has just revealed that there were 789,345,678 unreturned telephone calls made last year, an increase of 10 percent over the year before. Phone experts believe at the present rate that the figure of 1 billion could be reached by 1984.

Art Buchwald

Mark Stampel is the head of a nonprofit organization named "The Unreturned Telephone Call Institute," whose main function is to try to investigate all unreturned telephone calls, and to decide on the basis information whether there is life on earth.

He told me at the UTC Institute's plush estate in Middleburg, Va., the fact that someone does not return a telephone call doesn't mean that that person does not exist. "It only means that the person who made the call doesn't exist for the person who didn't call back."

It took me a few minutes to digest this.

Stampel tried to spell it out in layman's terms. "Let us assume Pleeder calls Arragant to get a job. Arragant's secretary says that Arragant is in a meeting and will get back to Pleeder as soon as possible.

"Arragant has no intention of calling back Pleeder. Pleeder waits by the phone — one hour, 24 hours, a week. No word from Arragant. He calls back again. This time Pleeder can't get through the switchboard to even speak to Arragant's secretary."

"Arragant's a cruel man," I said.

"Aha," said Stampel. "You would think so. But the reason Arragant has not called back Pleeder is that he is waiting for a call from Byer. Arragant is trying to sell Byer a shipload of railroad ties. Arragant keeps asking his secretary if Byer has called."

"Byer hasn't?" I said.

"Of course not. He doesn't want Arragant's railroad ties."

"Why doesn't he call and tell him so?"

"Because he doesn't want to tie up the phone, as he's waiting to hear from his girlfriend who hasn't returned his call for three days."

"Why?"

"Because Byer won't get a divorce from Mrs. Byer and the girlfriend has decided that she has had it with him."

"That's reasonable."

"The girlfriend, having made the decision to give up on Byer, calls Altman, whom she met at a party, and leaves word she's available for dinner. Now she's waiting by her phone for Altman to call back."

"Why doesn't Altman call her back?"

"He can't remember what the girl looked like and he's afraid to take a chance that she may be a dog."

"Altman sounds like a male chauvinist."

"He is, except that he's afraid of his mother. He's particularly frightened because she hasn't answered his call."

"Why not?" I wanted to know.

"Because Altman didn't call her the week before, and his mother is going to make him pay for it. Besides, she's waiting to hear from the Board of Health to complain because the furnace in her apartment house is on the fritz."

"And of course they don't call back."

"You have to be kidding. The heating inspector for the Board of Health is sitting by his phone waiting to hear from the mayor's deputy assistant as to whether he can hire more people to handle telephone complaints."

"The mayor's deputy doesn't call him back?"

"No, because he's waiting for a call from Washington, which will never come, telling him whether the city can have the funds it needs, not only for the health inspector, but also for Pleeder who still doesn't have a job because Arragant never answered his call."

"On the basis of what you just told me," I said to Stampel, "does your institute really believe there is life on earth?"

"Well, there's something out there," Stampel said. "And I have to believe they're trying to communicate with us, even if they refuse to do it by telephone."

Envoy shines in White House

By O.C. DOELLING

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Alexander M. Haig Jr. once disparagingly equated Jeane J. Kirkpatrick with a company commander, seven grades below his four-star rank in the field of American foreign policy.

In the year since Haig's eclipse as secretary of state, Mrs. Kirkpatrick's own star has risen at the White House, where she has become an influential voice in the formulation of administration policies toward Central America.

President Reagan recently appointed the outspoken U.N. ambassador as his representative on the bipartisan commission on Central America, which is headed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick scoffs at the notion that she has become the chief architect of Central American policies, saying that if there has been any shift in the decision-making process away from the State Department it has been toward President Reagan and not toward her.

It is, she told a reporter, "perfectly regular and normal" that "particularly salient or particularly delicate" issues be dealt with by the president. That is as true for the Lebanese crisis as it is for the conflicts in Central America, she said.

"My role is obviously just a function of my membership on the NSC (National Security Council)," she said when reached by phone recently at her office in Washington. Her position as chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations carries cabinet rank.

A senior State Department official in Washington gauged her contributions on Central American policy matters as major and indicated her influence on the issue had grown at the expense of that of Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who preferred a less rhetorical approach to the problem.

Asked to explain Mrs. Kirkpatrick's leading position, the official, who asked not to be identified, replied, "She knows the key players. She has a lot of experience in that area."

A former professor of government at Georgetown University, Mrs. Kirkpatrick is fluent in Spanish and has a long-standing interest in Latin American affairs. Her doctoral thesis dealt with the Peronist movement in Argentina.

Despite differences in approach, the senior State Department official said, there is little disagreement on basic policy objectives between Shultz and Mrs. Kirkpatrick. The two continue to communicate with each other, although not on a regular basis, he said.

There have been no reports of personality clashes.

In contrast, Mrs. Kirkpatrick's relations with Haig, Shultz's predecessor, were obviously strained, giving rise to recurrent speculation that the U.N. envoy was on her way out. One of the points of contention was U.S. policy toward Latin America.

During last year's Falkland Islands crisis, she was reported to have had a heated 45-minute telephone exchange with Haig over the American tilt toward Britain in its conflict with Argentina. She was said to have criticized him for having lost sight, in her view, of long-term U.S. interests in Latin America.

Another flap developed over a veto Mrs. Kirkpatrick cast in the U.N. Security Council against an Argentine-backed ceasefire resolution. Minutes later, new instructions were relayed from Haig, advising her to abstain. But it was too late and the veto stood.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick blamed the mixup on a communications snafu.

Department wants good relationship

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department has expressed hope that the United States will continue to have a cooperative relationship with Upper Volta following the installation of a new government during last week's coup.

U.S. officials are encouraged by a statement by Thomas Sankara, chairman of the National Revolutionary Council in Upper Volta, that the new government seeks good relations with all nations, department spokesman John Hughes said Monday. Sankara said Upper Volta will be non-aligned in its foreign affairs.

"We welcome this indication of a desire for good relations and intention to follow non-aligned foreign policy," Hughes said.

Guatemalan leader lifts state of alert

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — New chief of state Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores has moved quickly to restore civil liberties, expedite elections and remove other sources of dissatisfaction with the regime he overthrew.

On Tuesday, a day after Gen. Efrain Rios Montt was ousted in a coup, Guatemala's new military leader lifted the state of alert that his predecessor had imposed in July, suspending most civil freedoms.

Mejia Victores also said he would consider speeding up elections that Rios Montt had postponed until July 1, 1984.

There was a widespread belief in Guatemala that Rios Montt, a Protestant fundamentalist who came to power after a March 23, 1982 coup, was delaying elections because he wanted to remain president indefinitely.

Mejia Victores said at a news conference that the country is at peace. He denied reports of unusual troop movements in the capital, saying "if that was true we would still have problems, and we don't."

Earlier in the day, the commercial radio station Nuevo Mundo was jammed for a few seconds by a voice that said "a young officer is speaking to denounce the chief of government. He is responsible for massacres."

Mejia Victores attributed the incident to "subversives."

The general, who was Rios Montt's defense minister, promised an amnesty program for "anyone who thinks he is a subversive." He said the amnesty would carry no time limit, unlike Rios Montt's unpopular amnesty programs under which applicants had a two-month deadline to surrender.

Mejia Victores also said the so-called "beans and rifle" pacification program begun in the previous administration would continue.

Under the program, Rios Montt organized what he called civil defense units in the countryside to help the military fight leftist guerrillas and provide food for villagers fleeing political violence.

The human rights organization Amnesty International claimed that under the program more than 2,000 civilians were murdered in the past year. But the government claims the program has isolated and weakened the insurgents.

Mejia Victores is not expected to make significant changes in the military campaign against the guerrillas, who have been battling the country's succession of conservative governments sporadically for more than 20 years.

Leading political parties, who operated unofficially after Rios Montt suspended the constitution, met Tuesday but said they would not make any comment on the change in government until later.

But a member of the rightist National Liberation Movement said some party members are unhappy because Mejia Victores failed to make sweeping reforms immediately after taking power.

"It was a coup, there were dead, but there have been no substantial changes," said Oscar Grotewold, a movement leader. "There will have to be more substantial changes."

Mejia Victores said that at least two people were killed and 10 wounded in a brief firefight during the coup at the national palace, where troops loyal to Rios Montt were entrenched.

Pacifists plan week-long fast

TOKYO (AP) — A group of pacifists, including five Americans, began a planned week-long fast today at the Peace Memorial Park in Nagasaki in southern Japan, police said.

According to police, five American women and two Japanese men started the fast at mid-morning.

One of the hunger strikers was identified by Kyodo News Service as Martha Cain, a 29-year-old American who participated in the "Ban-the-Bomb '83 Peace March," a 94-day trek covering 614 miles from Tokyo to Nagasaki.

Participants in the march left Tokyo May 7 and joined 48,000 people who gathered at Hiroshima on Aug. 6 to commemorate the 151,000 victims of the atomic bombing of that city by the United States in World War II and to call for a halt to the arms race.

The marchers arrived in Nagasaki Monday, a day before the city marked the 38th anniversary of its destruction in a second nuclear attack at the end of World War II. The march was sponsored by the 1983 World Conference Against Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs.

Kyodo News Service said Ms. Cain is planning to sit in front of the U.S. Naval base at Sasebo, 30 miles north of Nagasaki, for the duration of the fast.

Participants in the conference moved from Nagasaki to Sasebo today to protest the visit of the U.S. aircraft carrier Midway, a conventionally powered vessel which has been at the U.S. Naval base at Sasebo since Monday.

Rebel predicts another Stone meeting

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A spokesman for El Salvador's rebels predicts another meeting will be held soon with U.S. special envoy Richard Stone and says rebel leaders also may meet with Henry A. Kissinger, head of a commission studying U.S. policy in Central America.

The spokesman, Juan Jose Martel, said in an interview Tuesday that no date has been fixed yet for the next meeting with Stone "but it is possible in the next weeks."

He also mentioned a possible meeting with members of the "American commission." Asked whether that might include Kissinger, the former secretary of state named by President Reagan to head the special commission, Martel said: "It's possible."

Kissinger has said he does not want to become involved in day-to-day efforts to negotiate a solution to the 46-month-old Salvadoran civil war, but he has indicated a desire to meet with the major parties in the turmoil affecting the region.

Martel, a representative of El Salvador's Democratic Revolutionary Front at its Mexico City office, said the Reagan administration is trying to lure part of the Salvadoran opposition into elections in order to break the revolutionaries' unity.

The front, known by its Spanish initials as the FDR, is a coalition of dozens of left-of-center political parties, labor groups and other organizations seeking to topple the U.S.-supported conservative government in El Salvador.

It is allied with the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, a coalition of the five Salvadoran guerrilla groups.

"The strategy of the imperialists is to find the minimum way to interest the FDR and isolate the FMLN," Martel said, adding that the political and guerrilla groups are "committed to a joint effort to democratize our country."

Stone had his first meeting with a Salvadoran opposition leader, Ruben Zamora of the FDR, July 31 in Bogota, Colombia. They have not disclosed details of their discussion, but U.S. officials had said the only topic for talks with the Salvadoran opposition would be its possible participation in presidential elections planned for early next year in El Salvador.

The rebel coalition has refused to take part in elections because, it says, its candidates would be assassinated by Salvadoran security forces or rightist "death squads" blamed for the majority of the 43,000 civilian deaths in the war.

Martel said the death squads were a major item on the agenda of the Stone talks. "An atmosphere of freedom is necessary for elections. First of all, the death squads must be done away with," he said.

Martel, 28, was a prominent young member of his country's centrist Christian Democratic Party before fleeing three years ago and joining the opposition.

In El Salvador, a constituent assembly committee formally proposed Tuesday that presidential elections be held in the first third of 1984, most likely in February. The proposal must be approved by the full assembly.

The committee includes representatives of all the major political parties that participated in the March 1982 assembly elections. Elections for the next assembly would not be held until 1985, according to the committee's schedule.

The proposals must now be presented to the full assembly for approval.

President Alvaro Magana, who was appointed by the assembly after it was seated in April 1982, had hoped the presidential elections could be held this December as the Reagan administration had urged.

It became apparent last month, however, that the target could not be met. Magana told reporters the assembly would not finish its constitutional draft until October, four months behind schedule.

Sri Lankan government raises official death toll to 350

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — The government today raised the official death toll from recent nationwide ethnic rioting to 350 and denied a report by the World Council of Churches that 1,000 of the minority Tamils had died.

Government spokesman Douglas Liyanage said the new figure included 316 "innocent people," most of them Tamils killed by members of the Sinhalese majority during a weeklong rampage. The rest were mostly Sinhalese looters and arsonists, he said.

The violence was sparked by a Tamil terrorist attack July 23 on Sinhalese government soldiers in the northern city of Jaffna where the Tamils are concentrated.

The World Council of Churches office in Geneva recently telexed a message to a convention of Christians in Vancouver, British Columbia, claiming 1,000 Tamils were killed at the northest port city of Trincomalee.

Liyanage said the church organization was wrong and had been deceived by Sri Lankan Tamils.

Peru exhibits leftist guerrillas

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Police put 27 alleged leftist guerrillas on display and said they were captured by undercover officers who infiltrated a committee of the Maoist Shining Path movement.

Civil Guard Col. Samuel Carrasco told a news conference Tuesday that the men belonged to Shining Path's "political and military directing committee for the central region" of Peru's highlands.

Carrasco said the "committee," operating in the Andean departments of Pasco, Junin and Huanuco, was responsible for several killings, robberies and sabotage attacks since December 1981.

Nurse gives birth in jetliner

URNE, Australia (AP) — A 35-year-old nurse who refused cancer treatment because it would have meant losing her unborn child gave birth to a premature boy in a jetliner as it landed at Melbourne airport, doctors said.

Sheryl Skirton was told by doctors in Britain last month that she had terminal liver cancer and her life could be prolonged if she had an abortion and underwent chemotherapy.

She and her son, who weighed about 2½ pounds and was 10 weeks premature, were taken by ambulance to the Royal Women's Hospital in Melbourne after the British Airways jetliner landed Tuesday.

Mexico shuts uranium mine

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government has indefinitely suspended operations of the state-run URAMEX uranium mining and processing company, where a work stoppage by 2,100 employees seeking wage increases is in its 10th week.

The company said the shutdown was prompted by a low demand for nuclear fuel during the nation's severe recession, but striking workers said the company wanted to avoid negotiating a new wage agreement.

Company attorney Raul Anaya Tovar said in a prepared statement, "The country does not have an urgent need for uranium, and URAMEX is unable to develop its programs and projects in an immediate way which would not be overly difficult for the nation."

Former Cleveland Mayor Dennis Kucinich waves to well-wishers inside the Polish Falcon Hall in Cleveland Tuesday after winning a special election for a city council seat. Kucinich, who served as mayor from 1977 to 1979, beat lawyer Edward Rybka in the race.

Boy-wonder Kucinich wins in Cleveland

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dennis J. Kucinich, the former boy-wonder mayor who presided over some of Cleveland's darkest fiscal days, will return to City Hall as a councilman after an election win "over great odds."

Kucinich, 36, and his wife, Sandy, drew loud cheers Tuesday night at the Polish Falcon Hall in the city's ethnic Eastern European Ward 12 after his triumph in the runoff election.

"This is a momentous occasion, a victory over great odds," Kucinich said. "You, the people, prevailed over intimidation and threats. You demonstrated that you can overcome all obstacles."

Kucinich, a Democrat, served as mayor from 1977 through 1979. He refused to sell the city's municipal electric power plant to pay huge sums owed to six banks and the city defaulted in December 1978.

Cleveland has made a steady fiscal recovery since, but was only able to again successfully sell its municipal bonds this summer.

The Cuyahoga County Board of Elections reported that 62 percent of the nearly 12,000 registered voters in the ward turned out in the non-partisan special runoff election. Kucinich had 4,118 votes, 56 percent, to 3,209 votes, 44 percent, for opponent Edward Rybka, a 28-year-old lawyer.

"I'm disappointed," Rybka said. "But he's the former mayor and he had national media attention. He and his team had experience on their side, and that put them one up on me and my team."

Rybka, a Democrat, had the public support of Cleveland's Republican mayor, George V. Voinovich, who defeated Kucinich in a 1979 mayoral election. Rybka also had the backing of Council President George L. Forbes, the city's most powerful Democrat, and the endorsement of The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer.

Forbes made no public comment on the Kucinich victory, but Voinovich said, "I'm disappointed, yes. But I will work with him."

"I haven't alienated anyone in this campaign," Kucinich said after his victory. "I hope they can take any anger out of their hearts, because I have no enemies in my heart. I'm offering peace, and I'm very sincere and willing to let bygones be bygones."

'Sex-tapes' lawyer will skip appearance before grand jury

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The man who claimed the purported Vicki Morgan sex tapes were stolen will probably not appear before a grand jury, his lawyer says, because he has "no new information" to supply.

The panel met Tuesday to investigate whether Robert K. Steinberg filed a false police report June 12 when he said the tapes he earlier claimed to possess had been stolen.

Steinberg was invited before the grand jury, but his lawyer, Leonard Levine, said it would not be "in his best interest."

Prosecutors sought the tapes while probing Miss Morgan's bludgeoning death in which her roommate, Marvin Pancoast, has been charged.

The tapes purportedly showed government officials, Miss Morgan and late millionaire Alfred Bloomingdale in sex acts.

Beware strange plants in fields

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Officials trying to combat the growth of a potent strain of domestic marijuana are warning farmers to look out for strange plants in cornfields.

"It is often possible for a farmer not even to be aware that marijuana is being grown on his land," said Tom Ruxlow, director of the Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation on Tuesday.

To help locate pot plots, Iowa State Patrol pilots are being trained to spot marijuana from the air. Ruxlow added: "We're growing the best marijuana in the world. A full-grown plant can net someone as much as $1,500 or $2,000."

Robber booked in murder probe

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 23-year-old alleged accomplice in a Hollywood liquor-store robbery has been booked for investigation of murder after police shot and killed four other holdup suspects.

Two passers-by were wounded by gunfire Tuesday as two men were killed running from the store and the two others were fatally shot outside a parking garage, said police Lt. Charles Higbie.

Rafael A. Rivera, 23, of Los Angeles, was arrested without incident in a car in an alley behind the store and was booked for investigation of murder, Higbie said. He was charged under a state law saying anyone involved in a felony may face murder charges if someone is killed during the commission of the crime, Higbie said.

Judge holds up execution

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — A federal judge has held up Thursday's scheduled execution of convicted murderer Alvin Moore Jr., agreeing to consider whether a trial lawyer did his utmost to persuade the jury not to impose the death penalty.

U.S. District Judge Tom Stagg issued a stay Tuesday, but set no date for a hearing on the claim by Moore's new attorney, Wellborn Jack Jr.

Jack's move to federal court came after state District Court in Bossier City and the Louisiana Supreme Court in New Orleans refused to halt the execution. Moore was scheduled to die in the electric chair at Angola Prison early Thursday.

Governor: Protect Everglades

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Gov. Bob Graham has announced a multimillion-dollar effort to save Florida's fragile Everglades by restoring a more natural flow of water in the "River of Grass."

"We must stop draining and diking (the Everglades) and start protecting and preserving them," Graham said Tuesday without estimating the cost. "Whatever the price, the price of inaction is higher still," Graham said.

The Florida Audubon Society praised Graham's plan, but environmentalists suggested some agriculture interests — which benefited when 1,500 miles of canals and drainage ditches were dug following flooding in a 1947 hurricane — would oppose efforts to restore a more natural flow.

Smoking determines life expectancies

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Women can expect to live more than seven years longer than men, and the "overwhelming" reason is a higher incidence of smoking among men, a new study says.

The life expectancies of men who smoked fewer than 20 packs of cigarettes in their lives are statistically equal to those of women if all deaths attributable to accidents, homicides and suicides are removed, according to the study by Dr. Gus H. Miller of Edinboro, Pa., and Dr. Dean R. Gerstein of Washington, D.C.

The study of more than 8,300 people in Erie County, Pa., including interviews with the relatives of 4,394 people who died between 1972 and 1974, shows statistically that men who never smoked and were not killed by violence could expect to live as long as women.

"The resulting life expectancy figures for non-smoking men and women of parallel age were virtually identical. Thus, differential rates of cigarette smoking are apparently the overwhelming cause for the male-female longevity difference," the study concluded.

"Actuarial tables should be divided by smoking behavior to reflect this finding," the study added.

The study, released Tuesday, will be published later this month in "Public Health Reports," a U.S. Department of Health and Human Services bi-monthly periodical.

American women today can expect to live to be 77.9 years old, 7.6 years longer than men, according to National Center for Health statistics for 1981, the latest available.

The study also warns that a rising incidence of smoking among teen-age girls means women may lose their statistical advantage.

Citing a 1981 Surgeon General's report that teen-age girls have surpassed teen-age boys in percentage of smokers, it warns of the ominous consequences to women's longevity as a group.

Malibu residents experience January nightmare once again

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

MALIBU, Calif. — For the residents of that affluent enclave of $1 million-plus beachfront homes known as the Malibu Colony, it was last winter's storm nightmare all over again.

Last Jan. 27, a violent high tide and surf savagely pounded and damaged several homes in the colony, a collection of 90 or so spacious, well-furnished dwellings populated by many of the entertainment industry's biggest names.

On Monday night, and again to a lesser extent on Tuesday, the sea cut loose on the colony's south-facing private beach and homes — with one significant difference.

This time, some residents said, it was worse.

"This is the worst I've seen," said television writer and producer Ivan Goff, balancing himself on the white retaining wall of his battered patio.

As the waves pounded at his feet Tuesday morning, Goff, an eight-year colony resident, surveyed the damage and declared, "Here we've got surf bigger than any surf I've seen living in Malibu...It was awesome."

Twelve-foot-plus waves riding a seven-foot tide Monday night shattered beachfront windows, virtually destroyed patios, tore up swimming pools and rocketed torrents of water through some of the homes right out the front door onto Malibu Colony Drive, the community's main street.

Entire ocean-facing decks were seen riding gargantuan waves like some out-of-control surfer.

As in January, damage appeared to be extensive.

Unlike the January storm, which concentrated its fury on the colony's eastern homes, this storm pounded the beach enclave's belly.

But there was no pattern. Some homes got it much worse than others.

Entertainer Barbra Streisand's house was hard hit with living room windows smashed and carpeting ruined in her white-beamed living room. Shredded white lace curtains hung limply over boarded-up windows.

"She was supposed to spend some time here this week," Viviano Lozoya, foreman of her nearby Malibu ranch, said Tuesday. "We just got done cleaning up yesterday."

Singer Linda Ronstadt's house survived the storm in good shape but a few doors away her producer, Peter Asher, found his deck smashed and television doctor William Rader's home was hard hit.

Film producer Jerry Perenchio's home was among the most heavily damaged. Graphically illustrating the force of the waves was a pile of wooden debris that had shot through his living room, an open brick patio and out the front door, where someone had neatly piled the jagged boards across the street.

Nearby, Nancy Jacoby, 37, an executive television producer, was standing on a wooden retaining wall in front of a smashed picture window of the home her family has rented for six months.

"There was a roar...a shattering of glass everywhere," she said. "The surf reached in excess of 20 feet. There were flying boards...glass everywhere."

Endorsement from labor would mobilize workers

Hearst Washington Bureau

BOSTON — The main benefit a democratic presidential contender such as former vice president Walter Mondale would receive from an organized labor endorsement in October would be the tens of thousands of volunteers working in a unified, structured pattern across the country.

This will mean more in 1984 than in probably any other recent presidential election.

The Mondale spokesman here, Paul Jensen, estimated that labor's endorsement would mean the equal of $8 million to $15 million in the 20 states where labor is strongest.

The very existance of a national structure of volunteers and sophisticated election workers is something that no other single organization provides candidates in either party, with the possible exception of the business network which in recent years has combined behind republican candidates.

But the business clout is measured in money while the AFL-CIO impact will be measured in grass-roots workers doing the nitty-gritty organizational jobs ranging from collecting the millions of signatures in each state required to qualify a candidate for the ballot to voter registration and telephone banks.

Machinist's president William Winpisinger said they would put "thousands upon thousands of volunteers to work all over the country."

Teachers' president Al Shanker said the "tremendous manpower is the largest pool of volunteers in the country."

Government employees' vice president Barbara Hutchinson said the vioeo-taped interviews with Mondale used to solicit opinions in the decision-making process now would be the core of the union's campaign to educate their members.

AFL-CIO president, Lane Kirkland, in announcing yesterday that the executive council had voted to move up its endorsement of a democratic contender by two months to early October, downplayed the widely assumed premise that this was to benefit Mondale.

Top campaign aides to Mondale's closest competitor, Ohio Senator John Glenn, inexplicably mounted a late show of strength here which Mondale aides said with some glee only enhanced the value of the labor endorsement.

Glenn has more than just the endorsement to lose. Despite more than a year of promising to show his ability to organize a key state, Glenn's campaign apparatus still is considered spotty and in some places downright fragile.

Glenn associate Robert Keese conceded that the structure of the AFL-CIO network would be the core asset to any candidate. He recalled working New York State for Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., in 1976 and spending $150,000 on the process of getting qualified voters to sign petitions to put Jackson on the ballot.

Price tag for military maneuvers thought to be in billions of dollars

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The United States is showing its military strength around the world this year by engaging in 90 maneuvers with foreign countries, and the price tag is expected to be in the billions of dollars.

The maneuvers involve the use of submarines, airplanes, helicopters, aircraft carriers, armored vehicles and amphibious landing equipment.

The total number of military personnel assigned to these operations could not be supplied by the Department of Defense without considerable research, said a spokesman, but on 15 major maneuvers, approximately 271,361 men and women in uniform have been employed at some time since January 1.

Cost of the operations was not revealed — it would take a team of inspectors months to figure surface and hidden costs — but it is expected to cost billions.

For Bright Star maneuvers in Egypt in 1983 from Aug. 10 to Sept.10, involving 5,500 people with airborne and air assault divisions, the cost will be between $45 million and $55 million.

Cubs win on ninth inning miracle binge

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

For the second night in a row the Midland Cubs pulled a ninth inning rabbit out of their caps to the amazement of the Cubs Stadium faithful.

This time it was a four-run rally, capped by Randy LaVigne's bases-loaded game-winning single, stroked solidly into right center, that gave the Cubs a 5-4 win. And in this case, the Cubs could have gotten more if they had been needed.

No one was out when LaVigne delivered his hit off Bob Patterson, an eight-win, eight-save relief pitcher, and everybody stopped running when Tom Lombarski crossed the plate with the winning run.

Rick Baker tripled home two runs and Tom Lombarski singled in the tying run in supplying the other key hits in the winning surge.

MIDLAND had won Monday's game, 2-1, on Trey Brooks' two-run homer in the ninth, but entering the ninth Tuesday their hopes looked dim.

Walter Vanderbush, who was 4-1 against Midland for the season, was reaching for No. 5 with a five-hitter and already had parried the Cubs' best shots with a wicked slider that always seemed to produce the big strikeout when it was needed the most.

"We had plenty of opportunities earlier, but couldn't get to him," said Manager Tom Harmon. "And lately we have had a tendency to die when we've muffed these chances."

In the fifth, trailing 3-0, Vanderbush walked Don Hyman, gave up a seeing eye single to A.J. Hill and then Bill Hatcher doubled in the run. That put runners on second and third with none out. Baker walked and now the bases were loaded. Vanderbush fanned Lombarski, Jim Anicich and Brooks to quell the threat.

In the seventh, Hatcher and Baker singled with one out, but Lombarski rapped into a quick double play that ended another threat.

THE LOSS, which loomed just around the corner seemed a shame, since Doug Welenc, pressed into a starting role when Jim Wright's arm did not respond to treatment, pitched well. His one bad inning was the fourth when an infield hit, a walk and triple by James Steels and infield out gave Beaumont a 3-0 lead.

Steve Johnson's solo homer in the seventh gave Beaumont a 4-1 lead and prompted Harmon to lift Welenc, who has toiled primarily in relief lately, after 6⅓ innings.

Jim Gerlach checked the Gators through the eighth and Bill Johnson came on in the ninth to get the Gators out and pick up the win as well when Midland rallied.

Hill started it by outlegging a grounder to second for a hit. Marty Kain, a 12-save pitcher, relieved Vanderbush and walked Hatcher before the two-run triple to Baker into right center.

Lombarski then singled up the middle and, after a walk to Anicich, in came Patterson. Brooks beat out a bunt toward second and LaVigne then hit Patterson's first pitch for the game-winner.

The win was Midland's second in a row and gives the Cubs a 10-8 edge in the season's series against Beaumont, which won the first half Texas League West pennant.

Outlaw Williams shuns Tampa Bay

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Quarterback Doug Williams has given the fledgling Oklahoma Outlaws a burst of national attention and a boost to their recruitment drive.

The former Tampa Bay Buccaneer has become the most celebrated United States Football League signee since Heisman Trophy-winner Herschel Walker joined the New Jersey Generals last winter.

Williams has become the first established National Football League quarterback to sign up with the year-old USFL.

"I look at myself as being as important to this league as Herschel Walker was," Williams said Tuesday after announcing he had joined the Outlaws.

"I'm glad to be one of the first starting quarterbacks to leave the NFL for the USFL. I hope a lot of others come with me," said the 28 year-old Grambling graduate.

Williams' signing ended the Outlaws' search for a veteran NFL quarterback. Earlier they had attempted to sign Miami Dolphins veteran Don Strock, who reportedly was offered a multiyear contract of between $1.3 and $1.5 million.

Terms of Williams' five-year contract with the Outlaws were not released. But Williams' agent, Jimmy Walsh, said he will receive more than the $400,000 the Bucs offered him after his contract expired at the end of last season.

"We feel we have acquired the best quarterback in professional football and one of the best athletes in professional football," said Bill Tatham Jr., president and co-owner of the Outlaws.

"What he lacked from being the No. 1 quarterback in the league was coaching, and that is what we're going to offer him," Tatham said.

Said Outlaws' General Manager Sid Gillman: "He's as good as he looks. He's big, strong and mobile. He has a great arm and is smart. He has everything you want in a quarterback."

Williams said he was pleased to be coming to Oklahoma, which he said is known for football.

"I've spent five great years in Tampa," said the 6-foot-4, 220 pounder. "The Bucs put me in the position to make a deal with the Oklahoma Outlaws. Something I've wanted to do all along was to be an Outlaw."

When confirmation that Williams had signed to play in the USFL reached the Buccaneers training camp, former teammates said the quarterback will be missed as a person and leader.

"I figured something was going to happen because nothing was happening here," said veteran offensive lineman Steve Wilson. "I hate to see him go, but that's the way it is in professional football."

Williams' original five-year contract with the Bucs expired after the strike-shortened 1982 season and the former Grambling star opened talks for a new contract by asking $875,000 annually for five years.

He later lowered his demand to $600,000 per season, but the Bucs didn't budge from their original offer of $1.2 million for three years or $2.3 million spread over five seasons.

"Doug has made his decision and based on the contact we've had with him, it (signing with USFL) does not come as a surprise," said Tampa Bay Coach John McKay. "We appreciate the five years of hard work he gave us and wish him health and happiness in the future.

"We have confidence that the quarterbacks we now have can continue to provide the caliber of play necessary to win in this league," McKay added.

Jack Thompson, acquired in an off-season trade with Cincinnati while talks with Williams lingered, is locked into a battle for the starting job with Jerry Golsteyn, the club's No. 2 signal-caller in 1982.

"The fans are really behind now. Last season they didn't think we were for real. In September, all they were concerned about was the Clemson-Georgia (football) game. It's a lot different for us now," said Braves Manager Joe Torre after learning of complete sellouts for the upcoming series with the Dodgers in Atlanta.

Did You Know?...

On May 4, 1983, Johnny Bench of the Cincinnati Reds made his 2,000th career base hit and three days later Steve Garvey of the San Diego Padres did the same thing.

Moses wins, but wants better race

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Edwin Moses has dominated the 400-meter intermediate hurdles race like no runner in history. Yet he thinks his best is still ahead.

"I can run a better race," Moses said Tuesday after winning in 47.50 seconds at the World Track and Field Championships and raising his winning streak in finals to 81.

"I was hoping to break the world record, but I couldn't do it running three rounds (the heats Sunday, the semifinals Monday and the final)," added the world record holder who owns the six fastest times in history and won the 1976 Olympic gold medal.

IN ADDITION to the three gruelling races, Moses was hampered in the final by a loose shoelace. Moses realized at the eighth hurdle that a knot had opened and he had to be careful about tripping.

"It came loose, that's all I know," he said. "I didn't have time to worry about it. I just continued to run. There was nothing I could do at that point.

"I couldn't stop to tie it. I thought about it only for a second. I was just hoping it wouldn't untie completely."

That second perhaps cost him a shot at the world record of 47.13 he set July 3, 1980 at Milan, Italy.

As for the streak, Moses said it does not completely consume his thinking.

"I don't feel any pressure from the streak," he said. "It makes no difference."

However, Moses has said his goal is to reach 100 victories in the 1984 Olympic Games at Los Angeles.

"The pressure is not necessarily to win, but not to lose," he said. "The other guys know it takes only one time to break it. My goal is to win 100 in a row.

"The Olympics is where the big thrust is," continued Moses, who burst out of relative obscurity in the 1976 Summer Games at Montreal by capturing the gold medal and breaking the world record with a clocking of 47.64. "I'm setting up my program so every race is a move toward the Olympics."

MOSES HAS lost only once since the 1976 Games — to Harald Schmid of West Germany on Aug. 26, 1977.

Tuesday, he beat Schmid convincingly.

Schmid finished second in 48.61, with Alexandr Kharlov of the Soviet Union third in 49.03.

"I am not satisfied with my result," Schmid said. "I made a mistake. I lost my rhythm between the seventh and eighth hurdles. I changed my steps (in between the hurdles) from 13 to 14. Then, I couldn't keep up with him.

"He's the best, though."

Moses was one of six world champions crowned Tuesday.

Two of the gold medals went to Soviet athletes — Sergey Litvinov in the hammer throw and Tamara Bykova in the women's high jump.

World record holder Litvinov hurled the hammer 82.68 meters (271 feet, 3 inches), while Bykova cleared 2.01 meters (6-7) in the high jump.

The other gold medalists were Italy's Alberto Cova in the men's 10,000 meters (28:01.04), West Germany's Willie Wuelbeck in the men's 800 (1:43.65), East Germany's Ramona Neubert in the heptathlon (6,714 points) and Czechoslovakia's Jarmila Kratochvilova in the women's 800 (1:54.68).

Litvinov had a remarkable series in the hammer, with five of his six throws surpassing 80 meters (262-5). Poland's Zozislaw Kwasmy was second at 81.54 (267-6) and two-time Olympic champion Yuriy Syedikh of the Soviet Union took third at 80.94 (265-7).

Bykova, who owns the world indoor best in the women's high jump at 2.03 meters (6-8), missed three times at that height, which would have surpassed the world outdoor mark of 2.02 (6-7½) held by West German Ulrike Meyfarth.

MEYFARTH, THE 1976 Olympic champion, had to settle for second at 1.99 (6-6¾), ahead of Louise Ritter and Coleen Sommer, both of the United States. The Americans each cleared 1.95 (6-4¾), but Ritter got the bronze because she made it on her second try and Sommer on her third attempt.

Cova, the 1982 European champion in the 10,000, won an exciting duel in which 13 of the 17 starters still were tightly bunched with only 800 meters remaining. He won with a blistering finishing kick down the middle of the track.

East Germans Werner Schildhauer and Hansjorg Kunze finished second and third, respectively, in 28:01.18 and 28:01.26.

Wuelbeck displayed a powerful kick in winning the men's 800. He made his move heading into the final straightaway en route to producing the fastest time in the world this year.

"It was the best run of my life," he said.

Rob Druppers of The Netherlands won the silver in 1:44.20, and Joaquim Cruz of Brazil was timed in 1:44.27 for the bronze.

The race lost some of its lustre because of the absence of Britain's Sebastian Coe, the world record holder, and Cuba's Alberto Juantorena, the former world record holder and 1976 Olympic champion. Coe is sidelined with a glandular ailment and Juantorena suffered torn ligaments and a broken bone in his right foot during an opening round heat.

Midland's darling legend already has critics

The tiny 5-foot-6 slam-dunking hardwood angel Anthony "Spud" Webb, the darling of Midland College basketball, leaves Midland Aug. 12 to seek fame.

He did nothing while here except put Midland on the basketball map and make the Chaparrals an "event." And there was that little matter of leaving in his tracks a national basketball championship.

REGARDLESS of what happens hence, Spud Webb has left marks in Midland that will never be forgotten. We will be telling our grandchildren that we saw this impish little kid play. We will say, "He looked like he was in the sixth grade, but he could jam it 'in your face' and was even called for goal-tending."

The stories about Webb will only grow in Midland legend as time escapes reality and rests in some forgotten part of the brain. After all, Anthony "Spud" Webb is the stuff legends are made of. All he needs now is for time to set his place in history, proving that all Texas tales are not of the "Tall" variety.

But that's the way the story will go in Midland, Texas, for years and years to come — maybe eons. But how will the story be told in North Carolina?

North Carolina State is the next stop for Spud. It's a stop where they know about winning national championships — thanks to a guy named Guy Lewis.

SOME ARE saying that this is a fatal stop for for the "Short Texas Legend." The question is — Can Spud Webb really play basketball in the talent-rich Atlantic Coast Conference?

Our little darling already has his critics in the ACC. Just look at a few samples coming out of the ACC press.

"The ACC is a land of giants who eat Spudnuts for breakfast."

"And now they (NC State) are trying to tell us that they couldn't recruit (New York's) Kenny Hutchinson, but they have an answer in a 5-6 kid who played in a state where the ball isn't even round to the average citizen."

"The ACC doesn't need promotional gimmicks. A Spud Webb should play baseball for Bill Veeck."

"No one in the SWC wanted him (Webb), but what do they know that we don't?"

Spud is in for a tough time when he heads east. There are those who would like to hang him at the airport. And there are those who can't wait until he arrives. Spud falls among the latter.

"I saw some film on the ACC and I didn't see one guy with an 'S' on his chest. There ain't no Superman," Webb said recently.

"I understand what I'm in for from the press, but I can put all that stuff behind me. I just need to play basketball and do the things I can do."

OF COURSE, Wolfpack fans are expecting to see the dunk — and quick. That's how they expect him to make his living, but Spud sees his role differently.

"I know the fans like to see me dunk the ball and I understand that. But I would like to be known more for my all-around game than just the dunk. A great assist can pick up a team just as much as the dunk can. About the only time I use the dunk is to pick the team up. I very seldom do it to just do it.

"I consider myself a team player and I can get the ball to the right spot and I can cause turnovers. The dunk is unusual for someone my size, but it's not my whole game."

Spud is quick to point out that he has no fear of playing in the ACC.

"I think I've proven I can play with the best players and you don't even have to count the ones I played against at Midland College. When I'm home in Dallas, I play with some of the best at the Highland Hill Recreation Center.

"THAT'S WHERE a lot of the Dallas Mavericks and SMU players workout. Shannon Lilly, who was the Division III scoring champion at Bishop last year, also plays there."

And we all remember Webb's performance against Miami Dade North's 6-11 Yvon Joseph in that national championship game.

Joseph now plays for the ACC's Georgia Tech. Remember the championship game? Joseph 13 points. Webb 36. It was in that contest that Webb claimed Hutchinson, Kan., lore for performing a sky-scraper layup over the outstretched arms of Joseph. The crowd went crazy.

Some ACC crowds are going to go crazy too. Midland's darling is on the way.

Patriots lure John Hannah back

By The Associated Press

John Hannah could stand only three months away from professional football before the competitive juices started flowing again.

The New England Patriots announced that the six-time All-Pro offensive guard will return to the team's training camp Thursday at Bryant College in Smithfield, R.I. Hannah was the Patriots' No. 1 draft pick in 1973.

"He's coming back to play for the Patriots," said Patrick Sullivan, New England's general manager. "He's a football player. He's competitive."

Hannah, 6-foot-3 and 282 pounds, has two years remaining on his contract and will play under those terms, Sullivan said.

Elsewhere around the National Football League, Los Angeles Rams' wide receiver Drew Hill was released from a hospital and will be recuperating from herniated disc at home for the next week.

The Rams and tight end Mike Barber are at a stalemate in negotiations. The two sides are reportedly about $15,000 apart, with the Rams offering $192,000.

Defensive tackle Gary Johnson, a four-time Pro Bowl selection, and the San Diego Charges also are at an impasse in contract talks. Johnson has asked that his contract be restructed.

But Chargers' owner Gene Klein says he considers Johnson retired from the game. Johnson has sent the NFL league office a letter of resignation, but the letter can be withdrawn at his request.

NFL Roundup

Nose tackle Fred Smerlas ended his holdout with the Buffalo Bills after the team reworked the final two years of his contract. The Buffalo News quoted a source close to the negotiations as saying that Smerlas will immediately receive $110,000 he was supposed to draw over a four-year period following retirement and will give him a base salary of $205,000 in 1983 and $225,000 in 1984.

Green Bay defensive end Ezra Johnson was carried from the field after he fell down in pain during a drill. Packers' officials would not make a statement on the extent of the injury until after an examination by the team physician.

New Orleans Saints' officials said nose tackle Tony Elliott was missing Tuesday from the team's camp in Vero Beach, Fla. "I think we'll just wait for him to show up again," said team spokesman Rusty Kazmiersky. "If he's in trouble, we hope he calls us."

David Thompson deals with cocaine problem

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — David Thompson, who was released from a suburban Denver drug treatment center last month, says he feels "good about himself" now and is looking forward to playing in the National Basketball Association next season.

"I've been real pleased with my progress so far," Thompson said in a telephone interview with the Tacoma News Tribune. "For the first time in a long time, I really like where I am right now.

"I feel good about myself. Right now, half the problem is over. I've had the treatment and it's worked, but from here on out, the rest of the rehabilitation is a one-day-at-a-time thing I'll have to deal with."

Thompson was admitted to the Washington House in Denver May 4 after telling Seattle SuperSonics' head Coach Lenny Wilkens of his cocaine dependency — with three games left in the regular season.

At the end of the season, Thompson became a free agent.

On Thursday at his first public appearance since leaving the treatment center, Thompson broke the ring finger of his right hand at a benefit slam dunk session in Denver.

"I don't think it's anything serious that will keep me out for a long time," Thompson said.

Thompson, acquired by Seattle from Denver in a trade for Bill Hanzlik, said he has had talks with the Sonics about next season but those discussions haven't yet centered around money.

"Lenny came to see me in the treatment center and said he'd be interested in me if I was able to straighten things out, and I think I've done that," Thompson said.

Dallas Cowboys' head coach Tom Landry surveys his two quarterbacks, Danny White and Gary Hogeboom, trying to decide who will start Monday against the Los Angeles Rams.

Hogeboom may get start

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry says he will decide sometime today whether to give quarterback Gary Hogeboom the first start of his Cowboys career in next Monday night's preseason game against the Los Angeles Rams.

"There is a very good possiblity Hogeboom will start. But don't read anything into it," Landry said Monday. "I just want to look at how some players react to starting rather than coming in the second half."

But the coach said a decision to start Hogeboom over Danny White has nothing to do with the Cowboys' quarterback controversy.

"We can do these things early because we have to settle down in the Pittsburgh (third pre-season) game," Landry said. "I will make the decision Wednesday."

Since taking over as the Cowboys' No. 1 quarterback in 1980 after Roger Staubach's retirement, White has started 61 of 62 games, including preseason, regular season and the playoffs.

White missed a 1981 start in Baltimore because of a shoulder and rib injury. Team officials said this was the first year that White has faced a serious challenge to his starting job.

Oilers waive Vernon Perry

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Vernon Perry, a four-year Houston Oilers veteran who has been placed on waivers, says he will try to play for another National Football League team.

If he is not claimed by an NFL team, Perry will become a free agent and probably will "try with the Gamblers," Houston's United States Football League franchise, he said.

"I was kind of talking to them for a while," the 29-year-old strong safety said Monday.

"I've done a lot of thinking," Perry said, "and I know I can still play. I feel like I can go anywhere and play. I just need a shot to prove myself. Since I wasn't getting that chance here, I just felt like it was time for me to get out of here."

Oilers Coach Ed Biles said Perry was waived Monday because he was rated behind veteran Carter Hartwig and rookie Keith Bostic.

Perry is due to go on trial next month on a cocaine possession charge and three misdemeanor charges alleging violation of state liquor laws and resisting arrest. He was arrested during the off-season in a highly publicized incident at his nightclub in Jackson, Miss., his hometown.

Biles said Perry's arrest "had absolutely nothing to do" with the decision to put him on waivers.

"We'll only keep three safeties, and Vernon wasn't rated at the top of the group," Biles said. "There's an awful lot of competition among the defensive backs, and the coaches felt like the others were doing better.

"By waiving Vernon now, he'll have a better chance to catch on with another team than if we'd have waited until the final roster cutdown," Biles said.

Mike Renfro contracts hepatitis

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Houston Oilers' receiver Mike Renfro, who has contracted a mild case of infectious hepatitis, will be isolated for a few days and is expected to miss the team's exhibition game against Tampa Bay Saturday, officials said.

The team's daily routine at training camp was interrupted Tuesday when players, coaches, club personnel and members of the media were innoculated with shots of gamma globulin after Renfro came down with the illness.

"I bet my teammates are kind mad at me right now," Renfro said. "I hear those shots are pretty painful."

Doctors said Renfro was not sick enough to go to a hospital. Instead, he was taken to a motel, where he will be isolated for a few days.

Dr. Ross Carmichael said Refro has Type A hepatitis.

"If you've got to have it, that's the kind to have," said trainer Jerry Meins. "It's the kind of hepatitis that gets better with rest."

Hepatitis is an inflammation of the liver that carries flu-like symptoms.

Cardinals lose Herr

ST. LOUIS (AP) — St. Louis Cardinals second baseman Tommy Herr, one of the National League's top hitters this year, will probably be lost to the team for the rest of the season because of new problems with his battered knees.

Herr, whose .323 batting average was third highest in the National League on Tuesday, will go to a Lansing, Mich., hospital next week to undergo another arthroscopic examination and possibly surgery, a team spokesman said.

Al Holland's streak ends

By The Associated Press

The Pittsburgh Pirates and Philadelphia Phillies engaged in a little streak-breaking, much to the grief of Al Holland, who had not lost a game in relief since Sept. 17, 1981.

The Pirates had lost five games in a row to fall out of first place in the National League East, while Philadelphia moved into the division lead with five consecutive triumphs. Holland, meanwhile, had won 12 games in a row dating back to April 27, 1982, when he lost a game as a starter.

That all changed Tuesday night as Dave Parker smashed a two-run homer off Holland in the eighth inning to give Pittsburgh a 3-1 victory over the Phillies.

"He (Holland) came in with his best stuff. I just hit it out of the park," Parker said. "He's a power pitcher. It dictated he go with his fastball. Every pitch was a fastball."

"It was 1-on-1 tonight," said Holland, who had pitched in 96 games in relief without a loss. "They got me tonight. Tomorrow is another day."

Parker and Holland said they are good friends off the field.

"Al and I are good friends," Parker said. "It's ironic that I should end his streak."

"Me and Dave go back a long way," said Holland, now 6-1 this season. "I've got him out and he's got some hits off me. He got a big one tonight off my best pitch, the fastball down the middle of the plate."

Before Parker's homer, his seventh of the season, Jason Thompson had doubled off the right field fence.

"I threw into spots they weren't supposed to go," Holland said. "They hit one off the wall and one out of the park."

The Pirates took a 1-0 lead off Phillies starter John Denny with an unearned run in the third.

Johnny Ray singled with one out, advanced to third on a single by Bill Madlock and scored when second baseman Joe Morgan booted Thompson's grounder.

The Phillies tied the score in the sixth on an infield single by Denny and Greg Gross' triple.

Reliever Kent Tekulve won his sixth game in eight decisions with 2 2-3 innings of one-hit relief.

The loss cut Philadelphia's division lead to one game over Montreal and 1½ over Pittsburgh.

Braves 7, Giants 2

In Atlanta, Bob Watson followed a second-inning home run by Bob Horner with one of his own and added a run-scoring single to help the Braves beat San Francisco.

Phil Niekro, 8-6, allowed four hits in seven innings to win his sixth consecutive decision and the 265th game of his career.

The consecutive homers by Horner and Watson tied the score 2-2 after a two-run shot by Darrell Evans gave the Giants a 2-0 edge in the first.

Watson, filling in for the injured Chris Chambliss, singled in a run in the fourth to break the tie.

Expos 7, Mets 3

At Montreal, Al Oliver had three hits and scored after each one, including the game-winner on a sixth-inning single by Warren Cromartie, as the Expos beat New York and ended the Mets' four-game winning streak.

With the score tied 3-3, a double by Oliver led off the sixth against Mets starter Ed Lynch, 7-7, and Cromartie broke the deadlock with his single. Earlier, Oliver singled twice and scored on a double and a groundout by Gary Carter.

Charlie Lea, 9-8, scattered 11 hits for the victory.

Reds 5, Dodgers 4

At Cincinnati, Paul Householder singled in the winning run in the bottom of the ninth after Los Angeles tied the score with two runs in the top of the inning.

Johnny Bench had given the Reds a 4-2 lead in the bottom of the eighth with a two-out, two-run double, but Mario Soto, who extended his NL lead with his 13th complete game, couldn't hold on in the ninth.

Steve Sax, who had homered for the Dodgers' second run, singled to make it 4-3, stole second and scored on a single by Bill Russell. But Soto, 13-9, benefitted from Householder's game-winning hit off reliever Steve Howe, 4-6.

Padres 3, Astros 2

At Houston, San Diego had only four hits, but the Padres beat the Astros behind pitcher Tim Lollar and timely hitting by Tony Gwynn.

Houston's Joe Niekro, 9-10, had a one-hitter and a 2-1 lead through five innings, but with two outs in the sixth, Bobby Brown tripled to left-center field and scored on George Bjorkman's passed ball as Alan Wiggins walked. Then Wiggins stole second and scored on Gwynn's single for the winning run.

Lollar, 5-10, had not won a game since July 13, but he struck out six and walked two while allowing five hits in 6 2-3 innings.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 3

At Chicago, Ron Cey drove in two runs with a double and a single as the Cubs handed St. Louis its eighth straight loss.

Cey doubled to key Chicago's three-run first inning and also singled to drive in another run in the second off Bob Forsch, 7-10, who gave up

Futurity trials set at Ruidoso

RUIDOSO DOWNS (AP) — The first set of trials that will eventually determine the field for the 25th running of the All-American Futurity — the $2.5 million race for quarter horses — are being run this week at Ruidoso Downs.

A total of 298 horses, all of them 2-year-olds, remain eligible for the rich futurity which guarantees the winner $1 million. The All-American, which had its birth at this south-central New Mexico track in the late 1950s, is run annually on Labor Day.

It will take three days of trials this week to trim the field of contenders to 99 semifinalists. Those 99 will then compete in time trials on Thursday, Aug. 25, to determine the 10-horse field for the futurity, which is run over a distance of 440 yards.

Eleven trial races were scheduled today, with another 11 races Thursday and 11 more on Friday. The top three horses from each trial will advance to the Aug. 25 time trials.

Horses favored to advance through at least the initial set of trials include the filly Meganette, winner of last month's $668,800 Rainbow Futurity. The Rainbow, along with the Kansas and All-American futurities, comprise the quarter horse industry's version of the Triple Crown.

Meganette has earned $273,696 this season, most of it coming from her victory in the Rainbow Futurity on July 24. The filly is owned by the San Jose Cattle Company of Pleasanton, Texas. Meganette will run in Thursday's set of trials.

Two other strong fillies, Easily A Twelve and Racy N Lacy, were entered in today's trials. Both scored their biggest wins to date in the spring at Sunland Park.

Easily A Twelve won the West Texas Futurity at Sunland, then finished second in the K

Pine Tar Bat II, the next episode

NEW YORK (AP) — The celebrated pine-tar bat incident continues to create controversy as most Yankee and Royal players say they don't want to resume the game on what had been scheduled as a day off.

American League President Lee MacPhail told the teams Tuesday that they should finish their suspended game Aug. 18 because if it "was played after the season ended, there is a good chance that following the conclusion of this game there could be a tie in one of the divisions for first place."

In a straw vote Tuesday night, the Kansas City Royals voted eight in favor and 10 against finishing the game Aug. 18. "That leaves us seven players I haven't asked yet," said Royals' player representative Dan Quisenberry, "but those eight who voted for are definitely in favor of going to New York that day."

And Don Baylor, the Yankees' alternate player representative, after an unofficial vote by his teammates Tuesday night, said, "Most of the players are not looking forward to playing next Thursday."

The Yankees announced Tuesday night the Aug. 18 game would resume at 2 p.m., EST, and that there would be a $2.50 admission charge. They also said other entertainment would be provided, but did not say what it would be.

The July 24 game became a suspended one rather than a 4-3 Yankee victory when MacPhail overruled the decision by the umpires to disallow a two-run homer by George Brett with two outs in the top of the ninth because he hit it with a bat containing too much pine tar.

MacPhail had originally ruled that the game would be finished on Oct. 3, the conlucsion of the season, and only if it had any bearing on the division races.

But after reconsidering, the AL president said in a statement, "The potential complications of postponing the conclusion of the game until after the season are too serious to risk."

He went on to say, "This could necessitate an arduous trip for one (or both) team to play a game for the division championship followed, possibly, by another arduous trip to open the league championship series with an afternoon game.

"This would not seem fair to a team so affected. Furthermore, any cancellation for weather during this period could seriously disrupt the postseason schedule, possibly including the World Series."

Whether the players have any say in determining the makeup date appeared to be a matter of interpretation.

The basic agreement between the Major League Players Association and the league says "No club shall be scheduled or rescheduled, if practicable, to play more than 20 consecutive days without an open day ..."

The Yankees, by playing on Aug. 18, will not have an off day between July 28 and Aug. 28. The Royals were scheduled to play every day from Aug. 2 to Sept. 7.

Owls better stop opening kickoff

SWC Preview

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice University won four football games in 1981, a big year for the downtrodden Owls, and Coach Ray Alborn had high hopes of bigger successes in 1982.

But a 95-yard kickoff return for a touchdown against the Owls on the first play of the season set the tone for the entire year.

The rest of the season was a series of nightmares that Alborn has recorded to memory.

"In the SMU game, we were fourth and a foot," Alborn said. "We gave the ball to the tailback and he turned around and flipped back to the quarterback.

"We've got Melvin Robinson dragging across. If we throw and catch the ball, we may get a touch but we're at least first and 10 inside their 15. There wasn't an SMU guy around him, they all jumped on the fake.

"Unfortunately it was a bad call cause we didn't complete the pass."

And so it went. A bad call here, a missed assignment there, until the season was a disaster.

Alborn's plan this season is to eliminate those mistakes and rely more heavily on the I formation, a scheme that already was in the game plan last year.

"I think it (I formation) will give us a better opportunity to better utilize our running backs," Alborn said. "We've got several backs who ran out of the I in high school."

The Owls will be counting on Kevin Trigg, Charles Hester, Antonio Brinkley and DeWayne Burnett will see plenty of action in the Owl backfield along with Doug Johnson at quarterback.

Tougher mental discipline will also be necessary, Alborn said, and underscored that need by relating another nightmare.

"We made so many little mistakes," he said. "Against LSU, we're first and 10 on the 12-yard line. It's a nothing-nothing ball game and our center pops the ball up before the quarterback is ready and we lose seven yards. You just can't do that."

To make the I formation tick, Alborn will depend on a revamped offensive line.

"We are starting over from scratch but we've got some athletes that can play," Alborn said.

Alborn will place two junior college transfers in the starting offensive line, including Scott McLaughlin at left guard and Bruse Loyd at left tackle. Returning starter Eddie Gentry will be at center while Archie Harris will man the other tackle and Rick Christon will be the other guard.

The defense will revolve around end Everett Todd and nose guard Joel Rios, who was one of 15 surgical casualties last season.

Rice opens its season Sept. 1 against crosstown rival Houston in Rice Stadium and plays its schedule without an open date.

Harry Mangurian sells Boston Celtics for $15 million

BOSTON (AP) — Three businessmen have bought the Boston Celtics from Harry Mangurian in a deal that still needs the approval of the National Basketball Association.

"I don't see any problem with that at all," said Mangurian Tuesday night after signing the agreement with Donald F. Gaston, Alan Cohen and Paul DuPee.

"We signed it tonight (Tuesday) at six o'clock," Mangurian said in a telephone interview from his home in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. "For all intents and purposes, they are the new owners of the Celtics."

He predicted they would have league approval in two or three weeks.

Mangurain declined to reveal the purchase price but said the reported estimate of $15 million could be used.

Cohen is an executive of the NBA's New Jersey Nets and formerly was chief executive officer of Madison Square Garden Corp., a subsidiary of Gulf & Western, which owns the New York Knicks of the NBA.

Mangurian said Cohen will divest himself of his interests in the Nets.

Mangurian said then he wanted to sell the Celtics because of a poor relationship with the owners of the Boston Garden, and when asked Tuesday night replied: "I just got fed up with dealing with the Boston Garden."

Midland Eastern defeats Waco, 2-1

WACO, Texas (AP) — Midland Eastern knocked off Waco Northwestern, 2-1, here Tuesday night in the first round of the Texas State Little League baseball tournament.

Pete Reyes went the distance, giving up only a fourth inning run while tossing a three-hitter, striking out eight and walking no one.

Eastern scored single runs in the first and second innings off Waco to take the victory. Terry Riley, who opened the game with a single, scored on a single by Joe Herrera in the first and Riley knocked in Reyes, who had walked, with what proved to be the winning run with a single in the second. Riley had two singles in the game. The only other hit by Eastern came from Dewayne Roberts.

Eastern will now face Snyder at 8 p.m. today in the second round of the tournament.

Joe Felan struck out nine and gave up only two hits — both in the final inning — to lead Snyder to a 4-1 victory over San Antonio McAllister Park Tuesday night in another first round game of the tournament.

Snyder broke the game open in the fourth inning with three unearned runs off San Antonio's Greg Phillips, who also struck out nine and surrendered just three hits.

In other first-round games Tuesday, Orange Wesco nipped North Garland 3-2 and Austin Balcones edged Houston North Shore 4-2.

In consolation quarterfinals, Laredo American belted Childress 6-1 and Weatherford slipped by Corpus Christi Padre 6-5 in seven innings.

Can Mel Hall become NL's rookie of year?

CHICAGO (AP) — Is it premature to mention Mel Hall and National League Rookie of the Year in the same breath?

"He'd certainly have to have a great couple of closing months to be considered," said his manager, Chicago Cubs skipper Lee Elia. "He's got a lot of raw talent, but he obviously needs work in some areas.

"With hard work and a lot of dedication, he could turn out to be something special," continued Elia. "But Rookie of the Year? I'd hold off on that one for the time being."

Yet Hall, a former Midland Cub, has clawed his way into the fast company of such first-year notables as pitcher Craig McMurtry of Atlanta, outfielders Darryl Strawberry of the New York Mets and Gary Redus of the Cincinnati Reds, and first baseman Greg Brock of the Los Angeles Dodgers — even if he lacks the newspaper clippings his competitors have generated.

"I think I'm going to be a .300 hitter, but I don't really spend much time comparing my numbers against anybody else's," said the soft-spoken Hall, one month shy of his 23rd birthday. "Rookie of the Year is a personal thing and baseball is a team game.

"I can't say I'm disappointed with the progress I'm making and I'm improving in a lot of areas — learning to run the bases, play situation baseball, play better defense," he continued. "But there is a lot left to learn."

However, Hall failed to show up Tuesday for the opener of a three-game series against the St. Louis Cardinals.

Hughes wants to stay on

By GARDNER SELBY
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Lubbock native J. David Hughes has a simple wish for when his term as a federal energy commissioner ends in October. He wants to stay on.

Huges, nominated to the five-member Federal Energy Regulatory Commission by President Carter in June, 1980, says no one should overstay their welcome in government service. But in his case, "About the time you learn what this office is all about, it's time to leave," he said.

FERC rules allow a commissioner to remain in office for one year after the three-year term ends, also giving the president that time to nominate a replacement.

"Generally these offices are to be passed around," Hughes said one day this week. "But I'd like to stay another six months to a year."

FERC, an independent commission within the Department of Energy, governs interstate natural gas transportation and sales. Often, the Texas Railroad Commission appears before the governing board to transact business.

Immediately ahead, Hughes sees FERC considering some kind of production enhancement rules that would allow producers to charge higher prices for "old gas" — gas found before 1978 — if they can also show that the higher prices will result in increased drilling and, in the long run, lower prices overall.

FERC also plans to continue study of "open carriage" proposals aimed at allowing vast gas shipments to pass through pipelines without heavy pipeline-owner tariffs.

"We've got to do everything we can to encourage exploration and development," Hughes said. Despite depressed gas demand, he said, "The (1975) shortage has not been solved at all. We've (just) got an excess of deliverability."

Hughes takes a grim view of the immediate future of natural gas prices, saying he has yet to see firm indications of an economic recovery spreading to West Texas producers and pipeline operators.

"Some people are hoping for a cold winter," he said, "saying that will increase (gas) demand ... I think it will take more than one cold winter. I don't like to dwell on these kind of doomsday tactics myself. I'd like to see it (higher gas prices) done in the economy itself.

"I still have great uncertainty about how our economy can do much until we get these (federal budget) deficits down," Hughes said. "It's a frustrating and baffling thing to observe."

Hughes rose to his post after serving under two Texas attorneys general, John Hill and Mark White. In 1979, under White, Hughes was appointed chief of the AG's energy division, a plum that apparently propelled him into the national regulatory spotlight.

The 48-year-old University of Texas graduate makes no bones about his hopes of one day serving in Congress, but says he will not run from Lubbock unless current Rep. Kent Hance, a Democrat first elected in 1978, decides to step down.

Hance is reportedly interested in challenging Republican Texas Sen. John Tower next year, a move that would require his resignation from Congress. In July, Hance held a "speculation" fund-raising breakfast in Washington for lobby and political friends.

But come September, Hughes said, he will be focusing on gas production measures prepared by the FERC staff to encourage exploration and development.

While Midland-area producers are probably looking more to Congress and its emerging deregulation legislation for assistance, they can also expect the commission to look out for ways of cutting red tape, primarily through a tentatively approved blanket certificate program that would cut out the need for public convenience and other permits in interstate pipeline deals, Hughes said.

Bank scheme condemned

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — In a highly unusual alliance, independent bankers, state regulators, a consumers' advocate group and the powerful American Bankers Association have joined forces to condemn a Denver-based group's attempt to establish a system of 31 financial institutions in 25 states.

The institutions would have some, but not all, functions of traditional banks.

One critic blasted the proposal by Dimension Financial Systems Inc. as a "gross distortion of fact and magnification of myths ... (an) upscale Volkswagen disguised as a Mercedes-Benz, but the Volkswagen has no engine and the driver has no heart."

Further, charged Patrick J. Shanahan, president of the Rhode Island Bankers Association, Dimension has "a hidden agenda ... a J.P. Morgan syndrome to turn back the clock."

The occasion was the opening session Monday of five days of hearings on the Dimension proposal, conducted by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

AT ISSUE ARE applications by Dimension to establish banks in selected high-income areas throughout the United States — and to compete with existing banks. Opponents claim Dimension is trying to squeeze through loopholes in various banking laws, and to create a national branch-banking operation.

The applications have stirred bitter controversy since they were filed last February by an organizing group led by Daniel Carroll, formerly an executive with Booz, Allen & Hamilton in Chicago, and a Hutchinson, Kan., oil family: Ronald L. Shaffer, his brother John, and father Fred.

The hearings continue on Thursday and Friday in Denver.

But the opponents got in some early licks Monday. The testimony ranged from aggressive to acrimonious, with Shanahan and eight other representatives of national trade groups and New England regional organizations and banks making presentations.

The comptroller came in for nearly as much criticism as the applicants, as participants argued that the hearings should be held in every state where an application is pending. They also charged that the comptroller should not be holding the hearings in the first place because the Federal Reserve Board has authority over bank holding companies.

BUT DIMENSION contends that it is not a bank holding company because the proposed banks would not engage in commercial lending business. The Independent Bankers Association of America, which has a lawsuit pending in district court in Chicago against the comptroller, boycotted the hearings. Those who are attending, however, give quite a broad picture of the opposition.

Among them is the 13,000-member American Bankers Association, which had not publicly opposed the Dimension applications until the hearings.

L.A. Johns, chairman of the ABA Community Bankers Council, challenged the applications on grounds they "flirt with violations (of the Bank Holding Company Act, the Douglas Amendment and the McFadden Act) without clearly trespassing any of them" and because Dimension admittedly aims at serving an upscale market. He questioned Dimension's ability to manage its proposed banks to be "repsonsive to the changing fashions and financial tastes of such different upper-income locations as Newport, R.I., a yachting community; the Kentucky horse-raising families, and the Las Vegas entertainment scene."

Among other criticism Monday:

—Johns, who also is president of Isabella Bank & Trust of Mount Pleasant, Mich., said: "I believe they are a group of sharp, sophisticated entrepreneurs who have seen a marketplace opportunity to take advantage of some loopholes in existing laws to build a nationwide banking system. Their intent appears to me to be: to fill this marketplace niche with a series of banks that may be sold to others at a profit or converted to full-service commercial banks upon the advent of interstate banking...."

JOHNS ALSO SAID Dimension has "failed to identify an unmet need and its only justification is to meet the convenience and needs of its investors."

—DeWitt Jones of the Massachusetts Urban Reinvestment Advisory Group charged that the proposed banks would be parasitic and ignore local needs.

—Sidney A. Bailey, state banking commissioner for Virginia and chairman of the board and president of the Conference of State Bank Supervisors, said the Dimension proposal "would seriously undermine the dual banking system," under which states control their own banking structure. Consolidation of services at the parent location in Denver "suggests that Dimension banks will have little if any independence ... a breach of the policy and intent of Congress" to prohibit interstate branch banking, he said.

W1 seminar Tuesday

A seminar on recent changes in applications for Texas drilling permits will be held in Midland on August 16.

The Texas Legislature passed a bill recently requiring the Texas Railroad Commission to charge $100 for each new or materially amended drilling permit issued. There are also some procedural changes in the W—1 Forms. The new law goes into effect September 1, 1983.

These changes will be covered at the seminar scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m., Tuesday, at the Midland Civic Center in downtown Midland. The session will be sponsored by the Permian Basin Petroleum Association and conducted by the Oil And Gas Division of Texas Railroad Commission.

Bill Gallagher, drilling supervisor, and Susan Cory, general counsel, both of the RRC's Oil and Gas Division, will be present to discuss the changes.

For reservations contact PBPA at (915) 684—6345 or write P.O. Box 132, Midland, TX. 79702.

Clear air helps optimist see ahead

By ARELO SEDERBERG

The air is clear in the Rocky Mountain town of Missoula, Montana, and so Larry Williams believes he can think better there than in the midst of the sludge on Wall Street.

Williams, a 40-year-old millionaire who made it big in commodities, is a long-term optimist and a short-term realist. He sees a coming boom in American business, vibrant prosperity, yet now is advising caution for stock buyers. He see a big stall ahead in the markets — a short-term minibear that may have already started. But that's good, not bad. It will create another buying opportunity.

"I've had my clients out of the market since June 21," he says, smiling. His clients may not be smiling too widely, since there have been some gains since then; yet not even Joe Kennedy or Bernard Baruch claimed to-the-minute timing in investments.

"We see a correction of perhaps 200 points for the market, but October or November will produce a nice buying opportunity. It will be the Return of the Jedi and Darth Vader will meet his demise."

Williams says most things with a smile. He is almost serenely confident that he is right about good times ahead. Inflation is on the run, real growth is returning to the American economy. Perhaps it's the air in Missoula.

Williams is one of those market letter writers, Professional Timing Service, and in 1974 he published "How I Made a Million Dollars Trading Commodities Last Year." His overall philosophy is summed up in last year's "How to Prosper in the Coming Good Years," a direct challenge to Howard Ruff's 1978 book, "How To Prosper During the Coming Bad Years." Ruff saw runaway inflation; his views earned him, perhaps without justice, the title of a leading doomsdayer. The public apparently likes to be scared; Ruff's book sold over a million copies and Williams managed barely 60,000.

But if Williams is optimistic for the longterm, do remember that he sees immediate trouble ahead. Interest rates are the key, and Williams sees them rising. That will draw money out of the market. Williams has been warning about higher rates as far back as March.

Of course, many an astute analyst of this bull market has suffered a cut or two by forecasting a market correction. Many have wriggled out of it by saying — well, we've already had a correction on a "rotating" basis. First one industry has been hit, then another, but not everything. Therefore, we've had a correction but hardly noticed it.

Williams doesn't buy that. "No way," he says. "We haven't seen a substantial amount of correction and by that I mean 15 percent or 20 percent." If so, the Dow average would fall to about 1,075 and some of the stocks that have risen the fastest and sharpest may correct the most.

If Williams is correct, you should be out of the market now and into short-term interest bearing accounts. You should be out for at least two months. Williams expects interest rates to begin to crack in October, when the mini-bear market (within an overall bull market) will be showing signs of bottoming out.

This above all, he warns: Don't let minor rallies within the mini-bear sucker you back in the market. The signs of trouble, Williams believes, indicate something beyond a mere technical correction. They are supply-demand factors from the big amount of new stock financing, diminishing daily new highs, short selling by exchange members and the small amount of odd lot short selling.

In other words, professionals are going short, the little guy is going long. And the little guy is always wrong.

A new drilling-time record was set in the Blue Creek field in Kanawha County, W. Va., with the completion of a well to a depth of 1,640 feet in 17 days. Previous fastest time for comparable depth was 20 1/2 days.

Texaco cuts work force

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Texaco Oil Co. announced Tuesday it will begin reducing its work force at a refinery here by about 400 workers in a phased lay-off that will start Aug. 19.

Company spokesman Charles Rentz said about 50 workers will be in the first round of layoffs and they will receive notices at the end of the work day Aug. 19.

Groups of workers will continue to be laid off over a 2-to-2½-month period, he said, until the goal of slightly more than 400 workers is achieved.

The layoff is in connection with the phase-out of greasemaking, packaging and shipping and lube oil blending operations at the Port Arthur refinery. That phase out was announced last December. Rentz

Dollar up

LONDON (AP) — The dollar resumed its record-breaking march on foreign exchange markets today after a one-day pause. Gold bullion prices declined.

The dollar gained on all major world currencies, soaring to all-time highs in France and Italy and hitting its highest level in more than nine years in West Germany.

Profit-taking, which slowed the dollar's rise Tuesday, was overshadowed in morning dealings by forecasts of higher American interest rates, traders said.

Appeals court throws out FERC pricing rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court, in a ruling that may mean a $900 million refund for natural gas suppliers and consumers, threw out a government pricing regulation on Tuesday.

The ruling by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here was a defeat for natural gas producers and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Rachelle Patterson, a spokeswoman for FERC, said the agency has not decided whether it will appeal the ruling.

She said the commission estimates that if the ruling stands it would mean producers will have to refund about $900 million to natural gas pipeline companies. The savings may then be passed on to consumers, she added.

The three-judge appeals court panel threw out a rule, adopted by FERC under the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act, which set up a new approach for measuring the energy content of natural gas.

The new formula required that energy content be measured under so-called "dry" conditions at which gas is delivered for sale, instead of "wet" conditions in which the gas is saturated with water vapor.

The new rule has meant the wellhead price of natural gas is higher than under the old system.

The appeals court judges said "we find the commission's dry rule to be inconsistent with the (1978 act's) language, structure and legislative history. Although one of the purposes of the act was to increase the financial incentives for producing various types of new gas, Congress did not intend for the commission to raise the effective wellhead price of gas as much as possible."

Dope growers watched from on high

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — Marijuana growers in the Oregon woods are being watched this summer from high and from low.

As the feathery plants grow tall, cameras will be clicking in high altitude U-2 spy planes. On the ground, authorities are enlisting the aid of hikers to help spot the hidden fields where the illicit drug is grown.

But officials say some Oregon pot growers are responding by moving their crops indoors to avoid detection.

Douglas County Sheriff Norm Neal said three recent raids on rented homes in that southwestern Oregon county turned up rooms full of plants flourishing under lights.

"Indoor operations are even more difficult to discover, and present a growing direction for illicit drug cultivators," Attorney General Dave Frohnmayer said in a recent letter to a congressional committee studying marijuana trafficking in the United States.

Marijuana growing, Frohnmayer concluded, "is at a critical stage in this state."

Cultivation of marijuana has become big business in Oregon. Law enforcement authorities acknowledge that the 50,000 plants seized last year account for no more than 10 percent of what was raised.

THE NATIONAL Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, or NORML, estimates the value of the state's 1982 marijuana crop at $500 million, making Oregon one of five states where pot is the most valuable agricultural commodity.

The 1983 marijuana season is just beginning here. So far, only a few thousand plants have been seized, said Major Doyle Watson, who heads the Oregon State Police criminal division.

But police agencies are gearing up to beat growers to a crop at least as large as last year's.

"My perception is that we've had a vigorous enforcement program in Josephine County for several years," said county Undersheriff Jim Carlton. "In spite of that, we still seem to find about the same number of gardens, the same number of plants."

As the marijuana industry has burgeoned, pot farmers have become more sophisticated, both in the art of gardening and the craft of staying one step ahead of the sheriff.

At least 80 percent of the marijuana grown commercially in Oregon is sinsemilla, a potent and high-priced hybrid that gets its name from the Spanish for "without seeds," according to David Hoover, a spokesman for the federal Drug Enforcement Administration in Washington.

OVER THE YEARS, many marijuana growers have shifted their farms from backyards to remote public lands, gradually improving fertilization and irrigation techniques to maximize production in the smallest possible areas.

After drug enforcement agents started using planes to look for illegal cultivation, growers began dividing their marijuana farms into smaller plots that are harder to detect from the air, Watson said. Others have moved their plants into greenhouses, garages and houses, where a chance sighting is unlikely and the growing season is year-round.

But if the growers have become trickier in their efforts to hide their produce, police agencies have countered with a few innovations of their own.

Although DEA officials refuse to confirm the reports, county sheriffs and state police say Oregon is participating with the federal agency in an experimental surveillance program using U-2 spy planes.

Carlton said Josephine County officials expect to receive detailed aerial photographs later this summer taken from the high-altitude planes and "interpreted by photo-analysis technicians at the federal level."

POSITIVE THINKING

Human beings respond to ultimate gift of love

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Human beings always know when you love them — and they respond with love. That is the ultimate basis of friendship. That is what binds people together and holds them together. One of the most beloved entertainers this country ever had, Will Rogers, used to say he never met a man he didn't like, which guaranteed him endless friends, because no one could be found who didn't like Will Rogers.

I once knew a quiet and likable man named Charlie who ran a grocery store in a small town. Charlie ran a chain grocery store for about 20 years and then the company withdrew from the town. Charlie spoke to me and asked, "Do you think I could run a store on my own? I don't have much capital, but the company said I could have the equipment and they would give me an inventory to start with."

"Sure you can," I said. I knew that Charlie loved people and that people loved him. So he took the store and the day after it opened I went in and Charlie and I went into one of the back rooms and sat there among the cracker barrels and cartons and Charlie said, "I want to dedicate this store." So he and I had a prayer of dedication.

Later, I used to watch him wait on people. One afternoon a woman came in looking tired and worn. Charlie said to her, "Mary, I'm glad you bought some of that cheese. That is a great New York state cheese and I know what a good cook you are. Your husband and children are going to have a wonderful supper tonight. Macaroni and cheese cooked by skillful and loving hands...and you can't beat that!" The woman stood up straighter and a wonderful smile came over her face. She picked up her groceries and went out, strengthened by the knowledge that the man who had sold them to her was interested in her as a person.

A year or two later, one of those big, modern supermarkets opened up only a short distance from Charlie's little store. He asked me, "Do you think I can survive the competition from this big, new supermarket?"

I said, "Just go on loving people, Charlie. You'll do all right."

Well, he did. And when Charlie died a few years later, his was one of the biggest funerals that village ever saw. It seemed as though the whole town turned out to pay tribute to a quiet grocer who loved his fellow human beings.

Never forget it: The way to friendship and the way to happiness is to love your fellow men.

Bulging campaign treasuries fail to scare off political opponents

BY EVANS WITT

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — If campaign treasuries bulging early in an election scare off potential competitors, a lot of incumbent senators won't have any opposition in the 1984 elections.

But that piece of conventional political wisdom seems destined to go the way of many other such "truisms," as the soaring costs of campaigns and the explosion of PAC money reshape the nature and timing of election efforts.

It may only be the summer of 1983 — 15 months before the 1984 general election — but campaign fund-raising is going full blast.

Already, 31 incumbent senators have raised more than $10 million for their 1984 re-election campaigns. They have stashed $9.6 million in bank accounts across the country, ready to pour it out to beat back opponents' efforts to unseat them.

The political action committees are a major source for this early surge of money. More than $2.4 million has poured from the PACs into the Senate campaign treasuries by midyear — up 62 percent from the same period in 1981.

At least 11 incumbents have already collected more than $100,000 from PACs. Only three had done so in 1981, Federal Election Commission reports say.

This all suggests that the 1984 Senate campaigns will top the $114 million spent in 1981-82 — the current record — including $21.7 million in PAC money.

Big campaign war chests don't seem to have done much good at scaring off opponents this year.

John Tower has one of the biggest, sitting on a $1.6 million bankroll to start his effort to keep the Texas seat in Republican hands.

But Bob Krueger, the former congressman who almost knocked off Tower in 1978, is back again. He's got almost $200,000 in the bank. And state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, who wants the Democratic nomination just like Krueger, already has a bankroll of $400,000, much of it left over from his previous campaigns.

And that doesn't even count Rep. Kent Hance or former Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe, who are thinking about making a bid.

Jesse Helms has already raised $1.7 million — and spent $1.5 million of that. But, as certain as anything can ever be in politics, North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt will challenge the Republican incumbent in what promises to be one of the most expensive and most heated Senate campaigns ever.

And Chuck Percy has $609,861 in the bank, including the proceeds from a dinner featuring Ronald Reagan. But Rep. Tom Corcoran is trying to take the GOP nomination in Illinois away from him, while Rep. Paul Simon, former Percy opponent Alex Seith and state controller Roland Burris are off and running on the Democratic side.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Number of meals tied to obesity

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've noticed that in your books you always recommend regular meals, rather than skipping breakfast, and so on. But I've never understood what difference it makes if you eat the same amount of food, but spread out over the entire day, or if you eat it all at one or two meals during the day. — Pete, The Bronx, New York City

Dear Pete: People who eat only once or twice a day often tend to be more obese than those who eat smaller meals more often. Why this is so is not completely understood.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm trying to watch my weight and I usually do a pretty good job. But when I go out with my friends on Saturday night, we usually wind up in a hamburger place and I order a hamburger, French fries and a milk shake like everyone else. Can you tell me how many calories all this amounts to? — Cynthia, Morristown, N.J.

Dear Cynthia: Your Saturday night snack provides about 1,000 calories. A hamburger is about 280, French fries, about 200; and a chocolate shake, close to 450.

Dear Dr. Solomon: As soon as I started to eat fish to keep my cholesterol low, I hear that it may cause cataracts. What the heck is going on? — Stan, New York City

Dear Stan: I can understand the confusion you must experience when you read or hear what appears to be conflicting views on the same subject. The fact is that a New Jersey optometrist did a report that mercury in seafood may cause cataracts; however, the evidence is far from sufficient for anyone to conclude that fish should be eliminated from the diet. My advice, in the modern vernacular, is to play it cool.

Ben C. Lane, the optometrist, says that 17 patients of his who had cataracts were found to have eaten salt-water fish and shellfish more often than did 11 control subjects. However, Dr. Abraham Spector, professor of biochemical ophthalmology at the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, believes that the findings are only preliminary and that any advice to refrain from eating seafood on the basis of these findings would be premature.

A study that compares the incidence of cataracts in populations that consume a great deal of seafood with populations that do not, might throw some light on the subject. Meanwhile, I am not advising my patients to avoid seafood in favor of a diet high in red meats.

For Melissa, Bakersfield, Calif.: Adding fiber to your diet is not as complicated as you make it out to be. A salad or sandwich of lettuce and tomatoes will do the trick, as will eating whole raw fruit instead of drinking fruit juices.

Breads and cereals contain fiber in varying degrees. For example, whole grain cereals, such as oatmeal and rolled wheat, are good sources of fiber and contain much more than do ready-to-eat cereals. Similarly, whole wheat bread has more fiber than white bread.

Schizophrenia divides cities of New York, Washington

By DON BAUDER
Copley News Service

When Mother Earth is given a psychiatric examination, she will be diagnosed as schizophrenic because of two cities: New York and Washington, D.C.

Once again, we have seen how Wall Street and Capitol Hill run on two separate tracks. Indeed, one should be renamed Manic City and the other Depressive Junction. It's a Tail of Two Cities — one city is Tails and the other Heads.

As the news came in that July's retail sales were robust, and July's unemployment was down, and June's construction spending and factory orders were very strong, Washington rejoiced. The recovery is powerful, exulted politicians. Chairman of the Council of Econmic Advisers Martin Feldstein said the "spectacular" statistics suggest that the third quarter is off to a merry start.

But Wall Street was bawling copiously. Interest rates were rising. Stocks and bonds plummeted. Lachrymosa.

But remember last August? It was the reverse. The recession was fumbling along the bottom and the politicians were disconsolate — and Wall Street was staging a joyous up-orgy.

It's a question of timing. Washington has been rejoicing over statistics covering June and July — months that are already past. Wall Street is sorrowfully looking ahead to future months, when interest rates would likely be higher, partly because of the economic spurt of early summer.

"The vigor showing up in recent statistics is a result of easier monetary policy earlier," explained Joseph McAlinden, president of Wall Street's Argus Research, in an interview. And the Fed's excessively easy stance last winter is not only the reason for the upticky June and July statistics: It's also the reason that the Fed is tightening perceptibly now, said McAlinden.

And it's the Fed's current tightening that's spreading melancholia on Wall Street. However, McAlinden isn't rushing to his shrink: The Fed's tightening now is both moderate and temporary. The slower economic growth that will result later will only be temporary and "won't be a reversal of the recovery."

"We can't see interest rates rising in the election year," he said. Thus, interest rates will only go a little higher now, then will fall and test the previous lows next year. Short Treasury bill rates will get below 7.5 percent and some long rates might dip below 10, he said.

Man, son fined for oil scheme

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston man and his son each were fined $20,000 after they pleaded guilty to federal charges stemming from a 1979 oil reselling investigation.

The men, Thomas M. Hajecate, 37, and his father, Thomas H. Hajecate, 59, pleaded guilty Tuesday to two counts of making false entries in Department of Energy documents.

The two had been indicted in 1979 on charges of selling "old" oil at "new" oil prices through the Houston-based Uni Oil Co., a firm now defunct.

U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling twice dismissed the indictments and was twice reversed by the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Hajecates entered their guilty plea to the reduced charges after the government agreed in a plea bargain to dismiss the 1979 indictment, as well as counts in a 1981 indictment that charged them with conspiring to launder $1.5 million in oil profits through foreign banks.

Texaco to lay off workers

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — Texaco Oil Co. will begin reducing its work force at a refinery here by about 400 workers in a phased lay-off that will start Aug. 19, officials said.

Company spokesman Charles Rentz said Tuesday about 50 workers will be in the first round of layoffs and they will receive notices at the end of the work day Aug. 19.

Groups of workers will continue to be laid off over a 2-to-2½-month period, he said, until the goal of slightly more than 400 workers is achieved.

The layoff is in connection with the phase-out of greasemaking, packaging and shipping and lube oil blending operations at the Port Arthur refinery, announced last December.

Rentz said the operations would be transferred to plants in North Carolina and California to put the products "closer to the markets where they are sold."

Officials of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers union said Tuesday that the layoff could affect workers who were hired by Texaco as early as 1972.

Number of oil rigs increases

HOUSTON (AP) — The number of oil rigs working in the United States last week increased by 26 over the previous week, the fourth straight gain, the Hughes Tool Co. said.

The company, which keeps a count of rigs in operation, said a total of 2,140 were in use during the week ended on Monday. This compares to 2,656 rigs that were drilling last year at this time.

Texas was the leading gainer, with an increase of 20 for a total of 716 last week. Rigs working in Oklahoma increased by nine, to a total of 281, and Louisiana added 11, up to 264. For the first time in almost a year, the total rigs working in Wyoming passed 100, up nine to 103.

Canada had 223 rigs working, up 14 for the week.

Offshore rigs declined slightly, according to Offshore Intelex. Worldwide, there were 532 of the 718 offshore rigs working, a use rate of 74.1 percent, compared to 74.2 percent the previous week.

In the Gulf of Mexico, 123 rigs of a fleet of 209 were working, for a use rate of 58.9 percent, a decline from the previous week's 59 percent.

Vandalism interrupts phone service for Texas customers

By The Associated Press

Vandalism to telephone equipment caused temporary interruption to service to several hundred customers in Dallas, Houston and Lubbock, but Southwestern Bell officials refused to blame the damage on striking members of the Communications Workers of America.

Southwestern Bell has offered rewards of $5,000 for information leading to the arrest and indictment of those responsible for the vandalism reported since Sunday.

"We're not pointing the finger at anybody and saying anybody's responsible," Phil Bode, a Bell spokesman in Lubbock said Tuesday, referring to damage to four connector boxes in Lubbock. "We have no proof whatever who's doing this. We just want it stopped."

About 125 Lubbock customers lost service when wires were pulled out and cut in cross-connect boxes at four addresses, Bode said. The damage was discovered after opening hours Tuesday, and repair was completed and service restored by late afternoon, company officials said.

Vandals have cut two telephone cables and destroyed a connector box in Dallas and severed one cable in Houston. As in Lubbock, Southwestern Bell officials said the vandalism may be unrelated to the strike.

Jim Lydon, a Bell spokesman in Dallas, said company officials had just about ruled out one of the acts of vandalism as strike-connected, and were unsure of the other two.

"We don't know who was responsible for the other two, and since we don't, we are assuming they are not strike-related," Lydon said.

Lydon said the Dallas cables were apparently cut with an axe or saw in separate incidents Monday.

A telephone connector box serving an Oak Cliff apartment complex was destroyed Sunday. Company officials said the box was later restored to service.

Landry cleared in inmate shooting

LIVINGSTON (AP) — A Jefferson County district attorney's investigator has been cleared in the shooting death of a Death Row prisoner during an escape attempt here.

A Polk County grand jury on Tuesday decided not to indict investigator Russ Landry in the June 20 death of Joe Dugas, 37, of Port Arthur.

Livingston County District Attorney Joe Price said the grand jury heard testimony from Landry, investigator Pat Hayes — who was with Landry at the time of the incident — and the Livingston police officers who investigated the case.

Dugas had been sentenced to die in the 1978 murder of Jason Phillips, 2, of Woodward, Okla. The bodies of the boy, his parents and his father's parents were found in a shallow grave near Winnie.

Dugas had been in Beaumont talking with prosecutors who were preparing for the trial of his co-defendant, Linda May Burnett.

Ms. Burnett also was sentenced to die in the death of the boy, but her conviction was overturned.

She now is on trial in San Antonio, charged with capital murder in the death of Martha Phillips, Jason's mother.

Man faces possible life sentence in bank heist

DALLAS (AP) — A Fort Worth man faced a possible life sentence following his guilty plea to the extortion of $450,000 from a Dallas bank and the abduction of the bank president's family.

Alexander Davis pleaded guilty Tuesday to an aggravated robbery charge. A state district court jury was ordered to return today to debate punishment.

Joe Goyne, president of the Grand Avenue Bank, testified Tuesday that a masked gunman who entered his home May 2 told him he would kill his wife and one of her two daughters and then kill himself if the bank tried to thwart his attempt to extort the money.

Goyne told the jury that the gunman told him he would spare one of the daughters "to always remind you that you screwed up."

The gunman held the family at gunpoint until morning, and after Goyne obeyed his order to get about $450,000 in cash from the bank, the gunman drove away with Goyne's wife, Jo, and her two daughrters, ages 7 and 10, Goyne testified.

Pennies from heaven

Digging a little deeper is John Zalesny, left, whose year-and-a-half interest in metal detectors pushed him into patrolling the grounds of St. Lukes United Methodist Church at 2800 W. Kansas. Above right, Zalesny scratches the surface for a supply of hidden treasures. Uncovered in less than an hour were a 1943 quarter and a 1942 mercury dime, both solid silver, as well as an assortment of pennies, a nickel, a rusted key, nails, sterling ring and a copper chain.

Fees for papers increasing

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Fees collected by the constable's office in serving civil papers will be on the upswing next year.

The Midland County Commissioners' Court has granted Constable Tom McGinnis's request that fees for serving small claims and justice court civil papers be increased from $10 to $20 per citation. Fees for serving civil papers out of county and state district court already were pegged at $20 each.

"It takes just as much time," McGinnis said of serving papers from the small claims and justice courts.

"Let's hang it there," County Judge Bill Ahders proposed. "I'm sure it's legal."

Most any fee would be legal, County Attorney J. Scott Henderson suggested, "as long as you don't make a profit."

Under recent revised state law, jurisdiction of the justice of the peace and small claims courts over civil monetary disputes is being hiked from $500 to $1,000, McGinnis noted. The revised law goes into effect Sept. 1. The new $1,000 limit will increase the business of the justice courts, he noted.

Justice wants offices split for efficiency

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

While the workload in the two Midland County justice courts is building up, Justice of the Peace Bob Pine says the two offices ought to be separated for efficiency's sake.

His counterpart, Charlie Sprayberry, wants more help.

Sprayberry got his wish.

Pine is waiting.

Bob Pine

"I think it would be nice to separate the two offices," said Pine. "Of course, I'd like to stay where I am; I've been there longer."

Pine, justice of the peace since 1964, and Sprayberry, who was elected to office in 1980, have separate but adjoining offices in the basement of the Midland County courthouse.

A vacant room, adjoining the law library and down the hallway from the JP offices, may be available. The Midland County Commissioners' Court has reserved that room as a "news media room" in an apparent gesture of good will and as mutual convenience. But the room has rarely, if ever, been used by newsmen, who were to outfit the cubicle with telephones and furniture.

"He (Sprayberry) can take care of his business," Pine allowed, "and I can take care of my business."

Greenwood district proposes tax rate hike

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Just hours after the Midland school board gleefully announced it plans to lower its tax rate for 1983, Greenwood school trustees reluctantly proposed a tax rate nearly double that of the MISD.

The Greenwood district is proposing to raise the tax rate from $1.30 per $100 valuation to $1.50. Although the 1983-84 budget accepted at Tuesday's meeting is only $100,000 above last year's, the increase is needed because bond money and surplus funds from 1981-82 subsidized approximately $1 million of last year's expenditures.

The school district's effective tax rate, computed by the county tax appraisal district, is $1.21 this year. Since the board plans to go over that rate by more than 8 percent, public meetings must be called and taxpayers have the option of requesting a rollback election to defeat the proposal.

Although the proposed $1.50 valuation is a 24 percent increase over last year, it is still much lower than taxes in past years, Superintendent James Warlick said. The tax rate in 1976-77 was $2.22, an amount that has been reduced each year until 1982.

The total budget for Greenwood schools in 1983-84 is $4.3 million. Even though in an earlier meeting trustees cut $31,000 from the proposed budget, President Patsy Herrington commented, "It's too much."

Nearly $1.4 million will be spent on teachers' salaries.

The tax base of the Greenwood district is more than $204 million. After subtracting an anticipated 5 percent for uncollected taxes, that means approximately $2.9 million in local revenues will be raised. The state is expected to add another $1.1 million to that.

After publishing notice of the proposed tax rate, the board will hold public meetings Aug. 22 and Aug. 30 at 7 p.m. The next regular meeting was changed to Aug. 18.

This year good for real estate, says Loeffler

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

U.S. Representative for the 21st District, Tom Loeffler, told Midland Realtors Tuesday that he is proud they weathered the recession without asking Congress for a bail-out.

Builders nationwide asked the body for $6 billion last year, and Loeffler said it was $6 billion that didn't need to be added to the Federal deficit. It was not approved.

This year, the news is good for real estate and for two other key U.S. industries, steel and automaking, Loeffler said at the Midland Board of Realtors' luncheon. The economic tone is upbeat, he added. Unemployment is coming down, productivity of factories has risen from 65 to 75 percent, and labor bargainers are "being reasonable" by "not pricing themselves out of the (job) market."

But Loeffler warned that Congress must stick to the bipartisan economic map made by the conservatives, or things like the half-percent rise in the prime rate, back up to 11 percent, will continue and the recovery will die.

Loeffler took much of his time to argue for covert aid — instead of going through Congressional approvals — when U.S. allies are in danger. He said aid to Nicaraguan freedom fighters has been highly successful in its goal of keeping Soviet arms from entering El Salvador and helping what he termed "communist insurgents."

Loeffler agrees with President Reagan that "We need to move now to prevent a crisis" in Central America. "One of the most severe ramifications of the tumbling of dominoes in Central America," he said, might be refugees from Central America flocking to the United States to avoid a violent communistic regime in their own land.

The unraveling events south of the U.S. border could provide serious ramifications, said Loeffler. He believes in continuing to apply covert aid, and go on with military exercises in the Honduras.

One misconception is that the 4,000 to 5,000 troops and the Carribean and Pacific warships currently gathering in Honduras are under orders of war. "The Hondurans asked us to do it," Loeffler said of the demonstration. "There is only a very, very remote possibility of someone attacking us."

Loeffler is a member of prestigious budget and appropriations committees in Congress. Realtors in this area said they appreciate his help controlling the U.S. budget deficit, and in trying to retain the 10 percent tax cut Democrats tried to eliminate in recent sessions. The tax cut stayed in place.

On the local drought and problems experienced by West Texas farmers, the representative said he would seek any kind of aid possible. He talked with Agriculture secretary John Block last week to seek reconsideration of disaster relief for this area.

Small Business Administration loans, disaster tax-foregiveness for emergency sale of livestock, and other options may be possible, Loeffler said. "For 18 months our rainfall has been extremely short and people are in dire straits."

Rep. Tom Loeffler

In the energy arena, Loeffler said he hopes to avert Congress from hitting up the oil and gas industry to balance budgets.

Reagan has proposed the first "true deregulation" of natural gas, Loeffler said. This bill, in the House compromise version, is very good for gas producers and consumers alike, if it doesn't get "trashed up" in the regular sessions of Congress, the representative said.

This compromise bill escalates decontrol of new gas and completely removes controls on gas discovered after the bill's effective date. Old gas would stay intact, and existing contracts would be protected, Loeffler said.

The only alternative to true deregulation is continuing the Natural Gas Policy Act, Loeffler said.

Midland real estate business doing better now than in past

Realtors operating in Midland are doing much better business than just a few months ago. Patsy Bohannan, a director of the Midland Board of Realtors, said at their monthly luncheon, "My business has never been better. And you can print that."

Ms. Bohannan said the recent increases in home loan rates, which have brought the average rate up to 14.1 percent in six weeks, "Have not affected (the local market). The real estate business has seen a turnaround — It looks like it is really picking up."

She said the last month of summer is an unnatural time for activity to be brisk. "We will be selling a lot of properties (through the end of '83)," she noted, "and the indications are this kind of market will continue."

Realtors sold 149 homes here in June, about 50 percent more than they sold in May. In July, a brisk market saw 118 homes sold — 30 new, 84 existing, and 4 lots.

Rising interest rates could make a difference in the future of the industry. If interest continues to rise, Ms. Bohannan said, so will house payments. This deters some people from entering the house-buying market.

Plans approved for park concert

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

After previously putting a cork on a temporary beer license for a downtown concert, Midland's city fathers reluctantly toasted similar plans Tuesday.

In a 3-2 vote, the Midland City Council approved a local restaurant owner's plan to provide beer at a concert, after he changed the location.

Other action included aprroving plans for two separate charity benefits. A local radio station, KNFM/KMND requested temporary closing of the downtown area this month to raise money for Muscular Dystrophy, and the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens asked for a temporary beer license at the Polo Grounds for a benefit in September.

In July, David Cruickshank, representing Leo's Oyster Bar, tried to sell the city council on a plan to close off a downtown parking lot on a Saturday afternoon for a jazz concert. The council rejected the request.

But Cruickshank returned to the chambers Tuesday with an alternative location — Cole Park.

Although Cruickshank assured the council that "It won't be rock n' roll, and I'll provide security," Councilman Steve Davidson was leary.

"I can't help remember hearing things on the media about what happened in California," he said, referring to a summer rock festival that attracted 1,000s of people and disruption.

"I'm not saying there would be (trouble)," Davidson added. "But with the hot weather and the crowd..."

Cruickshank told the council that his progressive jazz and blues concert would be on a much smaller scale than the California festival.

"I don't expect more than a 1,000 people," he said. "I'm asking for the opportunity to give Midland something they've never had — a good time with good music. I'll have officers at the entrance of the park to check ID's."

"This is something I'm not sure about," Davidson said. "If it blows out the chimney, that's it."

"One chance," Cruickshank said. "If I blow it, I blow it."

As the converstation continued, the atmosphere became light. Cruickshank said he intended to bring in Bugs Henderson and his blues band from Austin. He asked the council if they who Bugs Henderson was. The city fathers laughed.

Cruickshank pursued his request, offering the councilmen tickets to the concert. In jest, Councilman Tom Sloan said that offer might even change Mayor G. Thane Akins' mind.

Akins, who always votes no on any alcohol-related request, laughed and said "I might have to waive my decision."

The council took a vote and decided 3-2 in favor of the Aug. 27 concert in Cole Park. Cruickshank said there will be a entrance charge for the 4 to 9 p.m. event. Beer and food will be provided, along with local and Austin entertainment.

Justice wants offices split; Justice wants help

"Have you visited with Charlie about this," Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig asked Pine about the justices's separating their offices.

Pine shook his head. "No, I haven't...I think it would be of benefit to all of us to move."

Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis proposed a solution: "How about moving one of you out in the county?"

To effect the separation, County Judge Bill Ahders had suggested that one justice remain in the courthouse and that the other be relocated to quarters within the proposed jail-sheriff's office complex east of town and near the Midland County Exhibit Building.

Pine and Sprayberry appeared Monday before the commissioners but at different times. Pine expressly asked for separate offices; Sprayberry sought more help.

Pine said his office does "two-thirds of the volume of business" generated by the two courts.

Sprayberry

"Who does the most marriages?" County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry asked Pine.

"I don't know," said the senior justice. "He (Sprayberry) does take more time to marry...He sets a fee, and I don't. I don't want to spend a half day doing it either."

When Sprayberry took office in January 1981, he had one clerk. Pine had two.

Later, another clerk was put on the JP staffs and was shared by both justices. That agreement netted Pine 2⅓ clerks and Sprayberry 1⅓.

But the justices agree not to share the clerk under a proposal made by Sprayberry.

"There'll be no sharing?" asked Craig.

"Right," Pine affirmed.

Sprayberry initiated the proposal for separate help for the justices; the commissioners were agreeable to the suggestion.

"Need some help," Sprayberry had said. "The workload has increased, and it will increase even more."

Sprayberry proposed that Wanda Niblett, a part-time summer worker under the federal Comprehensive Training Employment Act, be hired on a full-time basis after her CETA job runs out.

"I think she enjoys her work," Sprayberry said, "but I don't think she enjoys it enough to do it for free."

Sprayberry explained his needs.

"I have 1⅓ (clerks), and Judge Pine has 2⅓. What I need is two, and he needs three for a net increase of one person."

The commissioners agreed to hire Miss Niblett full-time

"He (Pine) is overworked at this point," Sprayberry allowed.

Clerks working for Pine are Jerry Bowers and Judy Massingill, who have worked for the justice for several years. Anita Valles, who had been working mornings for Sprayberry and afternoons for Pine, will be working full-time for Pine.

Lynda Flow, Sprayberry's clerk for the past 2⅓ years, will be joined on a full-time basis by Miss Niblett.

Funds allotted services for children, women

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Region 12 Women, Infants and Children Program, which includes Midland County, will receive $370,550 in funds for health services to women and children under the Federal Emergency Jobs bill, Gov. Mark White reports.

White's office announced some $11 million is being distributed to entities throughout Texas for such programs.

The Region 12 program includes Andrews, Borden, Crane, Ector, Glasscock, Howard, Loving, Martin, Midland, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler counties.

Fees increase

County court-at-law handles civil disputes involving sums up to $5,000. A bill which would have increased that court's jurisdiction up to $50,000 in disputes was vetoed by Gov. Mark White. Jurisdiction of Midland's three state district courts begins around $5,000 and continues into the millions of dollars.

Last year, the constable's office collected $42,491.59 in fees in serving small claims, justice, county and state district courts. Of that sum, $13,522.33 reflects small claims and justice court fees and includes $185.65 in fees on criminal fines imposed by Peace Justice Charles Sprayberry and $11.68 in fees on criminal fines imposed by Peace Justice Bob Pine.

Here's a breakdown of other service fees:

—Sprayberry's office: $1,110, small claims; $3,845, justice court.

—Pine's office: $2,030, small claims; $6,340, civil.

Traffic safety day to be held at YMCA

The Alamo YMCA will sponsor a traffic safety day for children ages 2 to 5 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Friday.

To be held in the gym, the program will include safety tips and short lectures every 30 minutes.

Any child between 2 and 5 is invited to attend and may bring his or her favorite rideable toy.

Program helps young patients with surgery

By MAX RIZLEY JR.

TEXAS CITY, Texas (AP) — Having an operation is a traumatic experience even for an adult. But for a child, the strange people in green masks, the cold, cruel-looking stainless steel implements and the sinister mystery of the whole experience can be terrifying.

But at Memorial Hospital of Galveston County, some talented nurses and a buck-toothed bunny named Wabbit are helping put those fears to rest.

Wabbit lives in Wabbit's World, the Memorial Hospital surgery suite. He has lived there since February 1982, said head nurse Joan Beauboeuf, after she and Odessa Anderson, operating room supervisor, brought him home as an idea from a nursing workshop.

They raised him to Wabbithood with the help of Mary Gillespie, nursing director, and now, accompanied by pediatric nurse Laverne Long or one of his other nurse friends, Wabbit visits children in the pediatric ward to tell them what to expect in surgery.

Wabbit, a fuzzy white hand puppet, goes to children the night before their operations and explains what will happpen the next day. He talks about the people in green suits and masks, the shiny lights and tools, and the black rubber mask they will breathe into.

He leaves them with souvenirs of his visit — a Wabbit's World button, a balloon and a coloring book.

But it doesn't stop there.

The next day, when a nurse's aide comes to take the child to surgery, she is pulling a shiny red wagon instead of a hospital cart, and the child rides to surgery in it. Wabbit sometimes rides along, or comes out of the operating room to greet the child in the surgery waiting area.

Once in the operating room, the anesthetic mask is sprayed with root beer, strawberry or another delicious scent, which the child smells as he drifts off to sleep.

"We have really seen an effect," Ms. Beauboeuf said. "We rarely bring kids back crying any more ... They're in the wagon, hugging that rabbit."

Wabbit sometimes leaves his hospital home to visit schools, where youngsters are given a more "general" version of his one-on-one talk to patients, Ms. Beauboeuf said.

"This way, we hope to catch kids who may come in as emergencies," she explained.

Wabbit is accompanied on most of his rounds by Ms. Long, who works the evening shift, resulting in a small measure of fame for her, Ms. Anderson said.

"Kids have seen her in the grocery line, and said: 'There's the rabbit lady," she explained.

Having an operation will never be as much fun as a trip to Disneyland. But with a friend like Wabbit waiting, as he says in his coloring book, "by the clock, so I can see you as you come through the big doors that lead to surgery," it isn't quite as scary.

Texas transportation troubles growing

By JAY JORDEN

DALLAS (AP) — Texans, involved in a love affair with their automobiles in a state that leads the nation in road and street mileage, have stubbornly opposed mass transit, despite more vehicles congesting their wide-open spaces.

The concept of mass transit failed earlier this year in Houston, but it gets another chance Saturday when residents in Dallas and 20 suburbs vote on a plan proponents say would lighten the load on crowded freeways, make Dallas a world-class city and aid its economic growth.

Voters will decide whether the Dallas Area Rapid Transit will spend $8.75 billion — raised through a 1 percent sales tax — to double bus service and build 160 miles of rail lines in the next 27 years.

Experts say it is hard to predict whether gas-hungry Texans will change their tune this time, but all agree that mass transit is badly needed in the major urban centers of the Lone Star State — and soon.

"For a city to maintain a high quality of life and a high level of growth, it has to have a high level of mobility," said Dennis Christiansen, a program manager with the Texas Transportation Institute at Texas A&M University.

"Historically, we have provided for this in Dallas and Houston with city street and freeway systems," he said. "But in the last 10 years two things have happened: the rate of new freeway construction has slowed considerably, and with the move to the Sunbelt, traffic has increased dramatically."

He said traffic per lane per day on Texas highways has more than doubled since the 1970s, making driving a nightmare across the state.

"What we are saying is that a system that provided for the 1970s no longer does today," he said. "To provide a high quality of life and encourage more economic development, you need techniques to maintain mobility that we didn't need 10 years ago, and mass transit is that technique."

Lucas' hearing set

MONTAGUE, Texas (AP) — A district attorney says he will not object to a defense lawyer's request today that Henry Lee Lucas, charged in the slayings of five women in Texas, be moved to another jail.

The pretrial hearing was set for 9:30 a.m. in a Montague County court, said District Clerk Starr Johnson.

He said State District Judge Frank J. Douthitt would hear several pretrial motions filed by Lucas' lawyer, Don Maxfield of Wichita Falls, including one to have Lucas moved to Clay County Jail at Henrietta.

Maxfield has said that the Henrietta jail is closer to Wichita Falls, and would facilitate meetings with his client.

District Attorney Jack McGaughey has said he would not object to the request.

CEO's condititon listed as excellent

DALLAS (AP) — The president and chief executive officer of Baylor University came through triple coronarny bypass surgery at a Dallas hospital in excellent condition, his surgeon said.

Herbert H. Reynolds, 53, was stable Tuesday after the three-hour operation, Dr. A. Carl Henry said. Reynolds is expected to remain hospitalized for about 10 days, he said.

FNB sues for $4 million

Midland's First National Bank, which last September loaned Beal Operating Co. of Coleman $4 million, has filed suit in Midland state district court for that amount after the borrowers defaulted on payment.

Defendants in the litigation are Lou Beal of Coleman and Merle Rodgers of Beal Operating Co. and Pearson Webb of Humble.

Name of Beal Operating Co. was changed to Barco Industries Inc. in February, according to the lawsuit's petition.

Since the loan was taken out last Sept. 22, interest through June 3 accured to more than $196,000. Per-day interest is $1,260.27, says the petition. Interest rate was affixed at prime plus 1 percent.

The promissory note was partially secured by a deed of trust on "certain land" and improvements in Harris, Runnels and Coleman counties.

Police use vacuum after cocaine bust

DALLAS (AP) — Law officers had some cleaning up to do following a half-mile chase with a man suspected of possessing cocaine.

Instead of the usual paperwork, however, the task involved the use of a vacuum.

The vacuum, borrowed from a nearby resident, was used to sweep the street, where the man dumped a powdery white substance at the end of the chase, authorities said.

The man was arrested at the end of the chase, police said.

Copley News Service

Move over prosciutto, pate and precious pommes souffles, the era of modern American cooking is here. Call it a revolution, an evolution, a rebirth or a public relations coup.

American cooking demands the freshest local and seasonal ingredients. Greens and vegetables straight from the garden. Fish from neighborhood ponds. Cheese from local cows and goats.

In short, American cooking is honest and easy, comforting, pure and unpretentious.

The new breed of American chefs, though usually not formally trained, is armed with a formidable battery of European and Oriental techniques and skills.

Julia Child, the celebrated television chef who taught most Americans the basics of boeuf bourguignonne and Tarte Tatin, now stands firmly and enthusiastically behind the rebirth of American culinary traditions. Though she laughingly calls American Cuisine "a buzz word dreamed up by food writers so they'd have something to write about," she is proud of America's many and varied contributions to international cuisine.

Child is also one of the moving forces behind the American Institute of Wine and Food, a new nonproft organization "dedicated to the scholarly study, appreciation and preservation of the fine art of gastronomy."

California Cioppino, a translation of the famous delicious Italian dish, features unusual Shitake mushrooms and California white wine to vegetables and seafood.

CALIFORNIA CIOPPINO

Broth:
3 onions, finely diced
4 tbsps. olive oil
4 cloves garlic, peeled, smashed and chopped
½ lb. fresh Shitake mushrooms, sliced
3 green bell peppers, sliced
3 red bell peppers, sliced
8 tomatoes, peeled, seeded and chopped
3 qts. fish stock
1 bottle dry California white wine
1 large can tomato paste
1 bunch parsley
Several sprigs fresh thyme
4 bay leaves
3 tbsps. fresh basil, chopped
1½ tbsps. fresh oregano, chopped
Salt and pepper
Chopped parsley
Juice of 1 or 2 lemons
Seafood: 2 lbs. fresh sea bass, snapper, or halibut fillet, cut into serving size pieces
16 large shrimp, peeled and deveined
1 lb. scallops (preferably fresh)
3 dozen clams or mussels or a combination of both

Method: Add olive oil to pot large enough to accommodate the finishd cioppino and put on a medium heat.

When heated, add onions and garlic, stirring frequently so that onions and garlic do not burn. When they are transiucent, add bell peppers and cook several minutes, stirring occasionally. Next add sliced Shitake mushrooms and, after several minutes, add the tomatoes and white wine. Continue stirring occasionally.

Add fish stock, tomato paste, salt and pepper to taste and all the herbs except for the chopped parsley. Bring to a boil and then reduce heat to a simmer, stirring occasionally for at least one hour. Correct seasonings and add lemon juice to taste.

To cook seafood: When ready to serve, bring broth to a boil and reduce heat until it just simmers. Add cleaned shellfish and portioned fish fillet, adding the thickest pieces first, after 5 minutes, add shrimp and scallops and cook another five minutes or until fish falls apart easily and shellfish have opened. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve in bowls with plenty of sourdough bread.

Pasta re-discovered in different shapes, recipes

Pasta is being re-discovered at a rapid rate and used for everything from soups to salads with added American innovation. In this "Cartwheel Pasta Salad" it is the addition of crunchy toasted almonds.

Americans are rediscovering pasta with an exuberance. Books on pasta, pasta machines and pasta in the supermarket in all shapes and sizes and flavors are showing up everywhere.

People have always loved pasta. From macaroni and cheese as children to lasagna and spaghetti as adults, they enjoy pasta for the homey way it satisfies. Now, shapes, sauces and toppings, long known to good Italian cooks are being tried and enjoyed as well. So too, in true American fashion, we're adding our own innovative ways to use it.

Here is one such way. It's a blend of good basic Italian flavors — roasted red peppers, olives, ham and parmesan cheese, with the added crunch and flair of toasted whole natural almonds. And it's a salad, deliciously dressed with olive oil, garlic and basil. An updated version of macaroni salad we all had as children.

To really get the full flavor, hot pasta and crisply cooked green beans are marinated in the dressing. You'll be surprised how the flavors mellow and blend as they cool. Other vegetables are tossed in and lightly toasted almonds added to give crunch, special flavor and good nutrition just before serving.

Almonds are easy to toast. Simply spread on an ungreased baking pan. Place in a 350 degree oven for 5 to 10 minutes until light golden brown. Stir once or twice to assure even browning.

CARTWHEEL PASTA SALAD

2 cups cartwheel pasta (or small shells, corkscrew pasta or elbow macaroni) boiling salted water
1 cup sliced fresh green beans
⅓ cup olive oil
3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
2 cloves garlic, crushed
1 teaspoon sweet basil
fresh ground black pepper
½ cup grated parmesan or romano cheese
2 cups sliced cooked ham
½ cup halved, pitted ripe olives
1 jar roasted, sweet red peppers, chopped (7 oz.)
½ cup chopped green onions
½ cup toasted almonds

Cook pasta in boiling water until just tender, approximately 10 minutes. Cook green beans in lightly salted water until crisp tender. Meanwhile, blend olive oil, vinegar, garlic, sweet basil, pepper and parmesan in a large bowl. Drain pasta and beans. Toss both immediately with cheese mixture. Allow to cool to room temperature. Add ham, olives, roasted peppers, onions and almonds. Toss lightly to coat with dressing. Serve at one, or if refrigerated, allow to return to room temperature before serving. Pass additional parmesan if desired. Makes four servings.

Stuffed seashells only 325 calories

The filling is creamy and rich-tasting in Almond Stuffed Seashells. They are enough to make you think you are indulging in calories galore. But, this light-meal salad weighs in at only 325 calories per serving.

ALMOND STUFFED SEASHELLS

¼ cup lemon juice
¼ cup parsley sprigs
1 clove garlic
2 tablespoons dried basil
2 dozen cooked jumbo pasta shells
1 cup each ricotta and low fat cottage cheese
½ cup sliced green onions
2 teaspoons grated lemon peel
1 cup toasted chopped almonds lettuce leaves
chopped parsley
cherry tomatoes

In blender or food processor blend oil, lemon juice, parsley sprigs, garlic and basil. Pour over pasta shells, tossing gently to coat; set aside. In mixing bowl or food processor blend cheeses, onions and peel.

Stir in ¾ cup of almonds. Stuff shells with cheese mixture, allowing about 2 tablespoons filling per shell. Serve on lettuce-lined plate, sprinkled with remaining almonds. Garnish with parsley and cherry tomatoes.

Marinated pasta shells hold a tasty almond surprise in this mini-meal salad.

Interesting foods that require little cooking are a must in summer menu planning. Chilled Pasta with Fresh Vegetables Vinaigrette is an idea for hot summer days. See recipe, left.

Pears and dates pair up in pie

4 fresh Bartlett pears
¾ cup fresh dates
1 tablespoon lemon juice
⅔ cup sugar
½ teaspoon nutmeg
¼ teaspoon salt
unbaked pastry for double-crust 9-inch pie
1 tablespoon butter or margarine

Pare, core and dice pears to make 1 quart. Chop dates and combine with pears. Add lemon juice. Blend sugar, flour, nutmeg and salt; mix lightly with fruits. Turn into pastry-lined pie pan. Dot with butter. Cover with remaining pastry and seal edges. Bake in 375 degree oven 45 to 50 minutes or until pears can be pierced easily with a fork. cool before cutting. Makes 1 9-inch pie.

Pears don't ripen right on tree

Bartlett pears are harvested while the skin is still green and the flesh firm because, unlike other fruits, pears don't ripen properly on the tree. Green skinned pears will ripen to eating perfection by putting them in a loosely closed paper bag or ripening bowl.

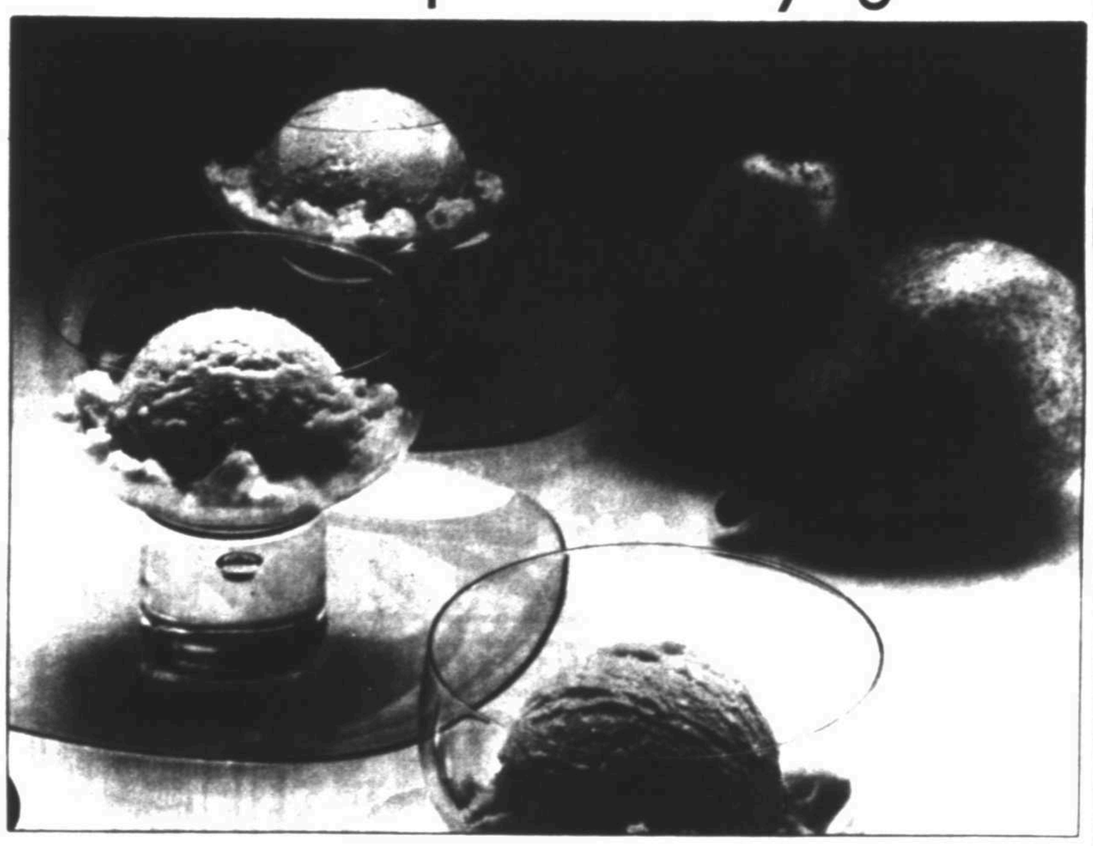
Keep them together because Barletts give off gases which aid each other in ripening. Store ripe pears in the refrigerator and serve chilled.

A particularly delicate fruit, the pear was found growing wild in England by a schoolmaster named Stair. In the late 1790s John Carter of Boston planted Stair's pairs on an estate in colonial Massachusetts.

Sherbet combines fresh pears and yogurt

Homemade frozen desserts are the ultimate summer treat in many fortunate households across the land. No longer the exclusive province of those willing to turn a crank for hours on end, delectable frozen concoctions of every description can now be made in handy little machines that require nothing more than an electrical outlet, ordinary ice cubes and common table salt.

Pear Yogurt Sherbet combines the best of three worlds — fruit ice, frozen yogurt and a scrumptuous sherbet, all blended into one cool, delicious creation. The recipe makes one quart, only half the quantity that most home ice cream machines are designed to handle so plan to double it.



A frozen dessert to delight is Pear Yogurt Sherbet. It combines fruit ice, frozen yogurt and a delectable sherbet.

PEAR YOGURT SHERBET

4 to 5 fresh pears
1 cup yogurt
1 cup whipping cream
⅓ cup honey
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 egg whites

Peel, core and puree pears in blender jar to make 2 cups. In medium bowl, stir together pear puree, yogurt, whipping cream, honey, cinnamon and lemon juice. Whip egg whites until frothy. Stir into pear mixture. Freeze according to manufacturer's instructions. Makes 1 quart.

BETTER BUSINESS

Library place to look for roots

By LINDA TRUITT

America has been been constantly on the move since its beginning. Our country consists of people who came from other countries looking for a better way of life. Unfortunately, in the process knowledge of our ancestors has been lost.

There are several companies who are willing to take advantage of your desire to know more about your family background. Their usual approach is to send you a letter suggesting that your surname has been extensively researched and is very rare. It will also suggest that the book they want to sell you contains an explanation of your family background.

Actually, the book will only contain a list of names and addresses of many others in the United States having your surname. Other chapters will be devoted to general subjects such as history of family names and crests, how to research a family history and genealogical charts for you to fill in.

One well-known company, Beatrice Bayley Inc., located in Pennsylvania, uses postcards to entice people to buy its book for $27.85. Regardless of the name on the postcard, it is explained that Ms. Bayley personally spent thousands of dollars and months of work to research through 70 million families to find almost every family wearing your name in these United States.

Also, regardless of your name, the postcard explains that your name is very rare, and research has shown there is only about one family with your name for every quarter million Americans.

Although the postcard might lead you to believe otherwise, the book will be personalized only to the extent of being titled with your family's surname and having a list of names and addresses, obtained by the company from various sources, of many others in the United States having the same family name.

One family said this about the book, "Our family is grossly disappointed, humiliated, insulted; in short we feel we've been had." Another purchaser of the book made this comment, "I received this book and it was so general I considered it a complete rip-off." Still another person noticed that not one of her immediate family was listed in the book — parents, grandparents or great-grandparents.

Numa Ltd., which does business as Sharon L. Taylor, is another company offering ancestry books. In similar fashion to Beatrice Bayley, the books published by this company contain no specific information pertaining to the purchaser's own family ancestry or lineage. The book costs approximately $25.

The International Genealogy Consumer Report advises caution when considering buying books from either of these two companies.

If you are interested in knowing more about your family background probably the best place to start is the Midland County Library. They have an extensive genealogical section with librarians who can assist you in your research.

Amber Raisin Cheese Melt with Tortilla Cigarillos makes a terrific party dish.

Raisins in cheese dip

Amber Raisin Cheese Melt is a spicy version of cheese fondue. A sumptuous blend of cheeses, melted and spiked with beer and green chilies, it has the unique flavor of golden raisins.

Golden raisins are especially good in this recipe because of the flavor and texture contrast with mild cheese and zesty seasonings.

AMBER RAISIN CHEESE MELT WITH TORTILLA CIGARILLOS

3 cloves garlic, minced
1½ tablespoons vegetable oil
1 cup finely chopped tomatoes
1 can (4 ounces) diced green chilies
¾ cup golden raisins
½ cup beer
4 cups assorted shredded cheeses (Monterey Jack, cheddar, Swiss,)
2 tablespoons cornstarch
liquid hot pepper sauce, to taste

In saucepan saute onions and garlic in oil. Stir in tomatoes, chiles, raisins and beer. Toss cheese with cornstarch to coat. Gradually stir cheese into tomato-chile mixture; cook and stir over low heat until cheese has melted and mixture is well blended. Season with hot pepper sauce. Serve warm in a chafing dish or over a candle flame as dip for tortilla cigarillos.

TORTILLA CIGARILLOS

Warm flour or corn tortillas to soften slightly. Halve and roll up lengthwiseto form cigarillos. Secure with wooden picks. Deep fry in 375 degree oil 1 to 3 minutes until golden brown, drain.

Sales popular among shoppers

By Sharon A. Hillis

Shoppers want better merchandise at affordable prices, and they're finding it at sales. A recent Gallup apparel merchandising study found that three out of ten consumers, regardless of their income, are buying more goods on sale.

This time of the year, great clothing bargains can be found at "midsummer madness" sales. Many high-class shopping districts and malls now have summer "garage sales" or "street sales" in which merchants mark down almost everything to clear their racks and shelves for fall merchandise.

But long-range planning is still the key to smart buying. If you wait until you need to buy a particular item, chances are that it won't be on sale. So plan your buying around sales cycles when prices are low, not at the times when demand is great.

If you want to get the most for your clothing dollar this summer, try some shopping strategy. Start by planning to buy at the end of the summer season or during the major markdown period after the Fourth of July.

Good bets for summer sales are summer sportswear, bathing suits, lightweight dresses and blazers in seersucker or linen-looks, canvas shoes and handbags, sandals and straw handbags.

Look for seconds or irregulars at reduced prices. These clothes have flaws which may or may not be seen but will not affect wearability. Check ccarefully to make sure that the flaw is not noticeable. The discount outlet stores are a good place to find irregulars in good-quality "brand name" clothing.

Before shopping at discount stores, compare prices at regular retail stores. The sale price for a high-quality garment at a retail store may be the same as the discount store price for a lesser-quality item. Discount stores often add new merchandise twice weekly, so keep checking back for sale items.

Remember the expense and trouble involved if you have to alter a bargain item before it is wearable.

Raisins add flavor

Raisins add a special touch to many dishes. Here are some ideas from the California Raisin Advisory Board on ways to liven up your cooking with raisins

Complement the tangy flavor of marinated bean salads with the addition of raisins.

Add spirited touch to fruit salads with raisins that have been plumped in brandy, rum, wine or fruit juice.

Add a ray of sunshine to cold pasta or rice salads for portable picnics.

Toss raisins and toasted nuts into a bowlful of greens dressed with a light vinaigrette.

Cole Slaw Deluxe from Eichelbaum's cafe in San Francisco, Calif. gets a flavor and nutrition boost from raisins.

Raisins jazz up cole slaw

Familiar cole slaw takes on a sophisticated new flavor at Eichelbaum's Cafe in San Francisco.

It's the addition of a few choice ingredients such as raisins, tart apples and green onions that make the important taste difference.

Eichelbaum's Cafe began as a catering company, but now offers the same high quality dishes for take-out. That's great news for busy gourmets who crowd the tiny store, some pausing to enjoy a meal at one of the cafe's linen-covered tables. But eating out or buying take-out meals on a regular basis is often hard on the budget. The perfect compromise? Make a deli salad at home.

STANLEY EICHELBAUM'S COLE SLAW DELUXE

1 cup cored and diced tart apples
2 teaspoons lemon juice
3 cups finely shredded red and green cabbage
¾ cup raisins
½ cup thinly sliced celery
½ cup sliced red onion
1 medium carrot, peeled and shredded
2 green onions with tops, sliced
¼ cup coarsely chopped walnuts
dill dressing (recipe follows)

In large bowl toss apples with lemon juice. Add remaining ingredients. Toss to blend thoroughly and chill. Makes 6 servings (1½ quarts).

DILL DRESSING

In small bowl whisk together ½ cup sour cream, ½ cup mayonnaise, 2½ tablespoons red wine vinegar, 1½ tablespoons sugar, 2 teaspoons dill weed, ½ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper.

Raisins go in salads

Here are two summer salad recipes suggested by the California Raisin Advisory Board which are brightened by raisins.

SOUTH OF THE BORDER BOWL

1 pound ground beef
1 package taco seasoning mix
1 cup raisins
1 head iceberg lettuce
1 cup cooked kidney beans
1 tomato, diced
½ cup shredded cheddar cheese
corn chips

Prepare beef with seasoning mix according to package directions. Stir ½ cup of raisins into meat mixture; cool. Line serving bowl with lettuce leaves. Tear remaining lettuce into bite-size pieces; place ½ of the lettuce, beans, final ½ of lettuce, then tomato, cheese and remaining ½ cup raisins. Sprinkle with corn chips as desired around outer edge of salad. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

SULTAN'S SALAD

4 cups water
1 cup red wine vinegar
8 whole cloves
4 cloves garlic
1½ pounds carrots, scraped and sliced
¾ cup golden raisins
salt and pepper to taste
dressing (recipe follows)

In a saucepan combine water, vinegar, cloves and garlic. Bring to boil; add carrots. Reduce heat; simmer until carrots are tender (about 20 minutes). Remove from heat; drain carrots, cloves and garlic. Reserve ¾ cup liquid for dressing. In large bowl combine carrots, cloves, garlic and raisins. Season with salt and pepper; toss with dressing. Let stand overnight to allow flavors to blend. Makes 8 servings.

DRESSING

Combine ¾ cup cooled liquid, 5 tablespoons olive oil and ½ teaspoon crushed cumin seeds. Mix thoroughly.

Woman worried sick about AIDS

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I live in Miami, and I'm worried sick about this new AIDS epidemic that is being spread by gays and Haitians. My hairdresser is a homosexual. Could I catch AIDS from him? I'm not saying he has it, but could he be a carrier without knowing it?

My landlady told me that her daughter is a nurse, and she has refused nursing duty with AIDS patients because AIDS is so contagious.

Please tell me and the rest of your readers how we can protect ourselves against this terrible disease. I understand there is no cure for it. — MRS. F.N.M. IN MIAMI, FLA.

DEAR MRS. F.N.M.: All available medical evidence indicates that AIDS is transmitted sexually, or through the exchange of "bodily liquids" — blood or semen. There is NO danger of "catching" AIDS through casual contact with homosexuals or Haitians.

There is no evidence that AIDS is caught from "carriers." Cases of AIDS have been reported among heterosexuals, women and infants. However, in almost all cases, the victims either had intimate sexual relations with, or were the offspring of, AIDS patients.

And it is true that to date there is no known cure for AIDS.

The above information has been confirmed by The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga.

DEAR ABBY: For years you have used a term in your column that has bothered me.

Re the widow who found a key to a "safety-deposit box": "Safety" is a noun. "Safe" is an adjective.

Nouns do not modify nouns. Adjectives do. Therefore, there are no "safety-deposit boxes," only "safe-deposit boxes." — AN OLD RETIRED BANKER IN DALLAS

DEAR BANKER: Far be it from me to argue with an old retired banker in Dallas, but give me a break. My Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary says: "safe-deposit box: a box (as in the vault of a bank) for safe storage of valuables — called also safety-deposit box."

DEAR ABBY: A dear friend of mine committed adultery. Her husband suspected, but said nothing. Then a "Good Samaritan" filled him in on all the facts. Now the husband feels compelled to divorce his wife for the sake of his pride because his whole family knows about it.

If you were counseling them, what would your advice be? They have been happily married for 12 years. — HURTING FOR MY FRIEND

Vodka misunderstood

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

About three decades ago, vodka was a fairly obscure liquor in most parts of the United States, known mainly as a popular drink in Russia and Poland.

Today, though this versatile spirit is widely consumed by Americans, it is also the subject of some misconceptions.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms defines vodka as a spirit "without distinctive character, aroma, taste or color." This is basically correct, but experts note that it is oversimplifying the description.

"There are as many perceptibly different kinds of vodka as there are methods of production," claims Dr. G. Joseph Servadio, chairman of the Vodka Information Bureau in New York City. I think that's going pretty far, but he doees have a point.

One way of determining differences is the raw material from which vodka is made. In Czarist Russia, for example, the vodka sold to the peasants was said to derive from grain alcohol.

During World War II, when both Russia and Poland were suffering from severe food shortages, they proved the versatility of vodka by making it from wood pulp. I imagine that had a unique bouquet.

In the United States, the better vodkas derive from grain, as in the Czar's court. Some producers here go a step farther and filter it through charcoal to obtain maximum smoothness.

Because of the neutral taste, vodka can blend with almost any potable liquid. In fact, I've often wondered why most bartenders stick to three vodka drinks, the Martini, Bloody Mary and Screwdriver.

This has apparently also occurred to the Vodka Information Bureau, which recently came out with a list of recipes with a wine, vermouth, or aperitif base. This was followed up with a tasting — using a leading American vodka — at a university club in Manhattan, which was a big success.

The unusual thing about these recipes is the modest half ounce, or "splash," of vodka each calls for, instead of the ounce and a half or more used in most drinks.

"In essence," says Servadio, "we have taken the idea of the dry martini and reversed the proportions of wine to spirit."

Here are a couple of the recipes.

SUNSPLASH

3 ounces dry red wine
Half ounce vodka
2 dashes orange Curacao

Stir over ice in large wine goblet, strain and serve in stem glasses.

MOSCOW MIMOSA

3 ounces champagne
3 ounces orange juice
Half ounce vodka

Gently stir chilled ingredients and serve in iced stem glass.

Minty freshness goes with microwave's fastness

Copley News Service

Mint has a cool, clean flavor which is popular with almost everyone. The following recipes combine the magic of microwave with the MMMMMMM! of mint.

ORANGE CHICKEN A LA MINT

2 chicken breasts, cut in half
One-third cup frozen orange juice concentrate, thawed
1 tbsp. chopped fresh mint leaves
¼ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
Dash garlic salt
⅓ cup drained mandarin orange sections

Arrange chicken pieces, skin side up, in an 8x8x2-inch glass baking dish. Pour orange juice concentrate evenly over chicken, and sprinkle with mint leaves, salt and pepper. Top with a light sprinkling of garlic salt. Cover with waxed paper and microwave for 16 minutes, turning dish and rearranging chicken every 4 minutes. Add mandarin orange sections and microwave 2 minutes longer. Serve over white rice.

Lime cookies terrific

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

When a new recipe for Fresh Lime Sugar Cookies was tried in my test kitchen, I had an impulse to set up a sign in front of my house that read "LIMEADE AND COOKIE STAND — COME ONE, COME ALL."

Yes, these cookies are so good (and so delcious with frosty limeade) that I wanted all my neighbors to have a chance to taste them.

The cookies are made by a method that was in fashion when manual iceboxes were still used and the iceman came to juggle blocks of ice into them. The dough was formed into rolls, placed in the icebox to chill, then baked — in other words, they were "icebox cookies." When electric refrigeration came on the scene, sweets of this sort were called refrigerator cookies. I still like the old-fashioned name.

One note about cutting them. Cooks have usually been directed to use a serrated knife and a sawing motion to slice the cookie rolls. Although I, too, have given this direction many times, I am honest enough to say it didn't always work.

Recently a friend of mine, Carl Sontheimer, who — though he introduced the food processor to America — is a wizard with a knife, showed me the value of using a long sharp straight-bladed knife and cutting directly down. No sawing motion.

FRESH LIME SUGAR COOKIES

½ cup butter, at room temperature or cut into thin pats
½ cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
4½ teaspoons fresh lime juice
1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons sugar mixed with 2 teaspoons grated lime rind

In a medium bowl with an electric beater, cream butter and sugar; beat in salt and lime juice. Add flour; with a wooden spoon stir until blended. Chill, covered tightly, until firm enough to handle.

Shape into two 4-inch long rolls; wrap in saran; chill until firm enough to slice. Remove one roll from refrigerator; cut crosswise into thin (about ⅛-inch) slices; with a wide metal spatula place about an inch apart on ungreased cookie sheets. Sprinkle with sugar and lime-rind mixture. Repeat with second roll.

Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until bottoms of cookies are golden — 6 to 8 minutes. With a wide metal spatula remove to a wire rack to cool completely.

Makes about 5 dozen.

Oklahoma group pushing for end to strict prohibition

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — They call it buying liquor by the wink.

If you want to buy a drink in Oklahoma, the law says you have to be a member of a private club and the drink has to be poured from your own bottle.

The law is not strictly enforced everywhere.

Bars advertise their cocktails and prices in newspapers, and some establishments ask patrons to become members at no cost, with the only requirement being that they not work for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

"I think the people are just tired of the hypocrisy and embarrassment that we are the only state left with strict prohibition," said Mike Williams. "They want it to be part of the 20th century."

Williams is a spokesman for a group that is pushing to change the law and end Oklahoma's singular status. The group hopes to put the issue to a vote in late fall or early next year.

"OUR POLLING shows the vast majority of Oklahomans support liquor by the drink," Williams said.

Liquor by the drink is prohibited or limited to private clubs in one or more counties in 14 states, but only in Oklahoma is it prohibited statewide, according to the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States, an industry trade group in Washington, D.C.

Williams' group has launched an initiative petition drive calling for a vote on changing the state constitution to permit liquor by the drink. The change would allow each county to vote on adopting the liberalized drinking code. The group needs 133,000 signatures.

Opponents of the ban say it's archaic and can't be enforced.

Supporters — primarily the state's substantial number of Baptists and Methodists — say it prevents more widespread drinking and the problems associated with it. They say drinking is morally wrong and predict a battle over loosening the laws.

"I just hope that Oklahomans have stayed close enough to the soil to be the kind of strong stock that has a good, strong moral base," said Joe L. Ingram, executive secretary-treasurer of the Baptist General Convention of Oklahoma.

WILLIAMS SAID his group wants to "end the hypocrisy of parents telling their children it's all right to violate laws you don't agree with."

Unless you drink at home or want beer containing 3.2 percent alcohol, the only legal way to be served a drink is to join a drinking club and supply your own bottles. But because of an understaffed liquor enforcement agency and officials who often look the other way, that's not usually the way it's done.

"In Oklahoma City the newspaper ads show lists of cocktails available and their prices," said Rep. Joan Hastings, R-Tulsa. "Throughout the state, citizens can walk into so-called private clubs and order whatever intoxicating drinks they wish and rarely be ID'd or checked for membership."

Some bars are more cautious but no more legal. Many place club members' names on liquor bottles and then sell drinks to anyone.

Oklahoma voters approved the sale of liquor by the bottle in 1959, ending a prohibition on drinking that had been placed in the state constitution upon statehood in 1907.

But voters turned down ballot questions in 1972 and 1976 to permit the sale of mixed drinks and "strong" beer in bars and restaurants.

THIS TIME supporters of the change say they won't lose.

Williams said his group's polls show 60 percent of the residents are in favor of liberalizing the laws, up some 15 percent from polls taken before the 1972 vote.

Ingram predicts both sides will launch large campaigns.

"We'll have a battle and see what the people will decide," Ingram said.

Allied with the Baptists on the "dry" side are the Methodists and Sooner Alcohol-Narcotics Education (SANE), a group funded primarily by Baptists. Taken together, the two denominations count about a third of Oklahoma's residents as members.

Ingram said "one word" tells what motivates supporters of liberalized drinking laws — "money."

"AS BAPTISTS, we've always been opposed to legalized alcohol," he said. "There would be, if we had liquor by the drink, more places serving than we have now. We simply would have more people drinking than we have now."

Supporting liquor by the drink are the Tulsa and Oklahoma City chambers of commerce, whose officials believe it would bolster the convention and tourism business.

Williams said his group plans to stress that liquor license and tax revenues currently are being lost through the proliferation of illegal watering holes.

"There's no question we have liquor by the drink in Oklahoma," he said. "What we're not getting is the tax revenue and convention business we should be getting."

AP Laserphoto

Bob Gent, a volunteer for Oklahomans for Responsible Liquor Control, asks Eileen Vail to sign a liquor-by-the-drink petition. The petition seeks a ballot question on legalizing the sale of drinks in bars and restaurants. Oklahoma is the only state in which this is not permitted in some form.

Hawaiians want to challenge Georgia onion

WAILUKU, Hawaii (AP) — The Maui County Council isn't just sitting back and shedding tears over Georgia's claim to have "the sweetest onion on earth."

Instead, it's calling for a contest on the steps of the Capitol in Washington to prove its claim that the Kula from the land of Hula is the nation's top onion.

Council member Charles Ota, representing the Kula district on the island of Maui, says he wants senators from Georgia and Hawaii to crunch into both kinds of onions to determine which is sweeter.

A recent Time magazine article "erroneously describes Vidalia onions, also known as 'Yumions,' as the world's sweetest onion," said Ota's resolution adopted by the council last week.

"Even Jody Powell, former presidential press secretary who claims that Vidalia 'Yumions' will not make 'your nose run, your heart burn, or your sweetheart gag,' would change his views if he tasted the truest sweet onion, the Kula onion," the resolution says.

Local experts say "the sucrose content in every Kula onion is so high that some authorities are looking at onion production to compete against the beet-sugar industry," it said.

Selleck's son will not be charged

HONOLULU (AP) — No charges will be filed against the 15-year-old stepson of actor Tom Selleck, who was driving when a jeep plunged three stories, injuring father and son, police say.

Because the accident occurred entirely on private property, no charges can be brought under state law, even though the younger Selleck did not have a driver's permit or license, said police Maj. Paul White.

Selleck, who was in the passenger seat of the jeep when the accident occurred Sunday, told police he was teaching his stepson Kevin to drive when the youth lost control of the vehicle.

The jeep crashed through a barrier at the third floor of a parking garage at the Outrigger Canoe Club in Honolulu and dropped about 30 feet.

Selleck and his stepson were treated for minor injuries at a local hospital and released.

The actor, star of the "Magnum, P.I." TV series, which resumed filming in Honolulu on Monday, has made no public statements about the accident.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Clarence Williams III, who played the Afro-haired undercover policeman Linc Hayes on TV's "Mod Squad," is accused of hitting a man in the head with a sugar dispenser.

C. Williams III

Authorities say the incident occurred Saturday night outside the Fatburger fast-food stand on Santa Monica Boulevard in West Hollywood.

Williams was free Tuesday on $2,000 bail for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon, said Sheriff's spokesman Bob Stoneman. The victim of the alleged assault suffered only a minor scalp wound, police said.

"Mod Squad" ran on ABC from 1968 to 1973.

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Singer Alan Osmond and his wife, Suzanne, now have a half-dozen sons, and Osmond helped deliver the latest arrival.

Alan Osmond

Emerging from the delivery room with Jonathan Pinegar Osmond in his arms, Osmond said, "This makes six straight hits in a row. Now that's what I call record success and to be able to personally bring him into the world was the greatest single thrill of my life. Every father should have this experience."

All six of the couple's children are boys.

The 7-pound, 13-ounce baby was born at Monday evening at Utah Valley Hospital in Provo, according to a statement issues Tuesday by Osmond Studios.

The proud father had just returned from a six-week concert tour.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Paul Newman, 58, narrates an anti-nuclear television special that sponsors say will be shown in 30 cities by the end of the month.

Paul Newman

The half-hour program, "War Without Winners," was filmed by cinematographer Haskell Wexler, whose other credits include the movies "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" and "Coming Home."

Viewers are asked to call a toll-free number to pledge donations.

Arthur Kanegis, spokesman for the Center for Defense Information, a Washington anti-nuclear "think-tank," said Tuesday that the money will be used to pay for the television time and present testimony to Congress about nuclear issues.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rolla N. Harger, 93, a biochemist who invented the first widely used breath test to measure drunkenness in humans, died Monday.

The Drunkometer, which Harger invented in 1931, contained a balloon into which people exhaled. Alcohol measurements were taken from the filled balloon. Harger had been a professor emeritus of biochemistry and toxicology at Indiana University since 1960 and a consultant on toxicology to the IU School of Medicine since 1963.

Natalie has fresh outlook on life

LOS ANGELES (AP) — To the rest of the world Natalie Cole seemed to have it all: a successful singing career, three Grammys, a star on Hollywood Boulevard, a beautiful home and the heritage of an internationally famous father, the late Nat King Cole.

But she also had a drug problem, a broken marriage and throat polyps that put her in fear of losing her voice — the downside of Natalie Cole's life that was unknown to the public.

Now, with new management, a new album, a new record label, control of her financial affairs and a fresh outlook on life, she's ready to talk. Tall, slim and elegant as ever, she speaks grimly but frankly about a troubled period that she says is well behind her.

"I felt at that point I had lost the respect of a lot of people that I depended on, and that I respected. And I was feeling a little lost within myself, and the drugs came very easily," she said earlier this week during an interview at the sprawling Benedict Canyon home she shares with her 5-year-old son, Robbie.

"IT WASN'T even to get high," she added. "It was just to have something to do by myself. I got to the point where I did it by myself. I didn't even want people around. And I knew then that I definitely had a problem."

Rumors began circulating last year about Miss Cole's difficulites after she gave her mother control of her financial affairs in a court-sanctioned conservatorship.

She also quietly checked into a rehabilitation center for three weeks, learning to overcome her cocaine dependency, and underwent surgery to remove the throat polyps.

The conservatorship, which she did not fight, gave her time to put her life back together, she said.

"I was a very tired lady," she said. "I've been working for 10 years now with very little vacation." Three weeks later, she went to a rehabilitation center in Capistrano.

"GOING TO THE center was one of the best things that ever happened to me," she said. "It was lovely. The people there were wonderful — they called me Miss Sunshine.

"One of the first things I learned was I had to start giving more time to myself, and not let people take my time, which I was doing a lot of. That's just my nature."

She also learned to plan her time, because "the busier I am — the busier anyone is — the less time they have to do the nonsense."

After her stint at the center she had the throat polyps removed.

"I was scared I couldn't sing again before the operation, but afterwards my doctor assured me everything looked fine."

Judging from "Too Much Mister," an up-tempo single that is already on the Billboard charts, the Cole voice has emerged with all the energy and excitement of her first years in the business, when hits like "This Will Be" and "Sophisticated Lady" earned her the best new artist Grammy in 1975 and back-to-back best female rhythm & blues Grammys in 1975 and 1976.

THE NEW LP, "I'm Ready," was started before she took off two months to cope with personal problems and was almost a year in the making. It also marks her first collaboration in three years with her ex-husband, producer Marvin Yancy.

The two had separated — twice — and Miss Cole filed for divorce before last summer. She says working together "was no problem at all. Once we get to the studio we become very professional and we never got to the point of where we had a bitterness toward each other, so we're still very good friends."

At the end of this month, Miss Cole begins a concert tour. She also talks of the possibility of acting, in films or a television series.

Natalie Cole

She's redecorating her home "so things look different to me and I feel different about them." Although final court papers dissolving the conservatorship have yet to be signed, Miss Cole says she has regained control of her finances.

She dates several men, but, "I'm not committing myself to anyone, nor do I intend to anytime soon. I have a lot to do."

Jennings to anchor ABC's network news

'World News Tonight' will be revamped

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time in nearly a decade the three TV networks will compete for the evening news audience with anchormen working solo — Dan Rather at CBS, Tom Brokaw at NBC and Peter Jennings at ABC.

ABC News announced Tuesday that Jennings, 45, will succeed the late Frank Reynolds as sole anchorman for a remodeled "World News Tonight." Reynolds, who died July 20, Jennings, and Max Robinson in Chicago had anchored the ABC program jointly since its introduction in July 1978.

NBC surprised the industry last month with word that Roger Mudd would be dumped as co-anchor of the network's "Nightly News."Brokaw, NBC said, will handle that job himself starting Sept. 5.

There was speculation at the time that ABC would abandon the three-anchor format in selecting a successor to Reynolds, and NBC's decision to revise the "Nightly News" approach was seen by some as an effort to get the jump on a rival.

CBS' "Evening News" has been broadcast by a single anchorman since Douglas Edwards introduced the program in 1948.

Peter Jennings

For a short period in 1975, anchormen working alone handled the network evening newscasts: Walter Cronkite at CBS, John Chancellor at NBC and Harry Reasoner at ABC.

CBS has been dominant in the dinnertime-news field in recent years, with a brief slump early in 1981, shortly after Dan Rather succeeded Cronkite. In recent months CBS has enjoyed a healthy lead over both NBC and ABC, with a quarter of the audience to about 20 percent for each of the others.

Jennings, a correspondent with 20 years' experience, much of it overseas, also was named senior editor of "World News Tonight," and the shift that left Robinson's future in doubt. The Chicago-based newsman reportedly is discussing another assignment with ABC News, presumably as a senior correspondent.

"It's exciting, and a challenge," Jennings said from Washington. "There is a lot of growth that I would like to see, and some things that I would like to do, though judiciously and cautiously."

The London-based, foreign news anchor for the ABC program since its premiere, Jennings said maintaining a focus on world news and broadening domestic coverage would be among his priorities.

"One of the things I'm absolutely determined to do," he said, "is take the show on the road. While I was in London, if the big story was Poland, I'd do the show from there."

Reynolds became ill in early April, and Jennings came to Washington on July 1 to sit in for his colleague. Reynolds' death July 20, which reportedly caught his ABC News colleagues by surprise, was attributed to viral hepatitis.

Ratings for "World News Tonight" dipped in the weeks after Reynolds left the program, but stabilized when Jennings took over from David Brinkley.

The transition to Jennings had been anticipated since shortly after Reynolds' death. It was delayed, reportedly while network executives, and Jennings, decided where to locate the lone anchor — New York or Washington.

Though Jennings was said to favor Washington, ABC News' statement announcing Reynolds' successor said the program would be broadcast from New York starting next month.

It will be the second time Jennings has anchored ABC's early-evening newscast by himself. He also anchored from 1965 to 1967.

Ken O'Farrell, wine specialist at one of San Francisco's largest discount liquor stores, checks cases of domestic wines. This year's expected huge harvest, coupled with a record crop last year, created a surplus that is driving down the prices of California wines.

Wine industry is hung over

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Still weeks away from the 1983 grape harvest, California's $5 billion wine industry is hung over from a surplus of wine in storage, a sharp drop in expected sales and prices, and a flood of European competition.

"We're being clobbered," said Phil Hiaring Jr., executive editor and publisher of Wines & Vines, an industry publication.

Hiaring says "10 percent of the American people drink 80 percent of the wine" sold in the United States. About 70 percent of the wine consumed in the United States comes from California.

Other wine authorities, including veteran wine business analyst and consultant Lou Gomberg, say only "4 to 5 percent" of Americans drink wine regularly.

"SOMETHING," DECLARED Gomberg, "has to be done about that."

The troubles developed as growers, vintners, distributors and retail outlets began facing the fact that California has almost 554 million gallons of wine in storage — about 90 million gallons more than was being stored at the same time last year.

Vintners concede that if this year's grape crop comes close to 1982's huge harvest, there won't be enough room to store the 1983 vintage. Current indications are that the crop will be at least 10 percent under last year's.

Europe's major wine producers — Italy, France, Spain and Portugal — also have a storage problem. Wineries in those countries are reported to have some 400 million gallons in storage this year over what was being held last year, although the total figure was not available.

And much of that wine is heading to the United States, in what some industry sources call a "Eurowine offensive."

ACCORDING TO THE industry-supported Wine Institute, California's 1982 grape crop was an enormous 5.9 million tons — 49.2 percent over the previous year. That record crop came as California wine shipments climbed only one-tenth of 1 percent over 1981 shipments.

Ed Everett, publisher of "The Wine Trade" newsletter, said the result will be grapes hitting the ground rather than the crusher, and "a depression" in prices offered for grapes and charged for bottled wine.

Prices for wines rated from jug to good or very good quality are dropping, although the cost of the finest wines is not expected to decline.

In June, premium wine producer Robert Mondavi dropped the price of his $11 fume blanc at the winery to between $5 and $6. The retail price at discount stores dropped to the $4 range, said Gomberg.

And recently, some jug wines bearing the Carlo Rossi label fell to near 1939 prices in some stores, with eight liters of jug wine going for $7, a cut of more than 50 percent, Gomberg added.

BUT WITH A strong dollar, prices have also fallen for foreign wines, making them cheaper here and American wines expensive in other countries.

In June, Clare L. Berryhill, director of the California Department of Food and Agriculture predicted that Italy and France would gain a larger share of the American wine market if the dollar remained strong.

Industry statistics indicate California's share of the total U.S. wine market after World War II was 90.6 percent. Last year, the figure was 68.2 percent. And between 1970 and 1981, wine imports to America rose from 10 percent to 22.6 percent.

Last week in the House of Representatives, two California congressmen introduced a bill which threatens restrictions on wine imports. The measure, sponsored by Reps. Tony Coelho, a Democrat, and William M. Thomas, a Republican, would give countries that export wine to the United States 180 days from the enactment of the proposed law to make their own import rules conform to those in this country.

If they didn't, the president would be required to limit imports just as drastically as other countries limit theirs.

GOMBERG CONCEDES a serious oversupply of domestic California wine, but shrugs at the fuss.

The surplus, he said in a recent interview, "has been experienced by the industry in this country for over 200 years, and in all the wine countries of the world throughout history.

"It goes on periodically, unpredictably. Nature makes it unpredictable over and beyond the power of human beings. Nature chose in 1982 to produce a gigantic grape crop in California...by far never anything like it."

Gomberg said during the nearly five decades he has been close to the industry "there have been 10 periods of excess grape production from time to time, leading to excess production of wine, leading to sharp reductions in grape prices, leading to reduction in wine prices. This is normal for this industry. It's normal for agriculture."

Pamper jealous dog, veterinarian advises

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Don't let jealous dogs lie, an animal behavior expert advises. Pamper them, praise them, shower them with attention and if that fails, psyche them out.

A new love or a new baby in the family can make dogs feel left out and many pet owners mishandle the situation, says Dr. John Stump, a professor in Purdue University's School of Veterinary Medicine.

"When someone new, especially a baby, arrives on the family scene, the dog finds itself giving up center stage to a new 'pet,'" Stump said. "The dog begins viewing the intruder as an adversary, and its anxiety may escalate into snarling and even more aggressive displays."

When a dog seems put out by a new arrival, don't put the animal out, Stump said. "This makes the animal all the more anxious and insecure."

Try to understand your dog's psyche, he said.

"People will often sense that the dog's hostility stems from jealousy, so they'll give it more attention, but only when the baby is not around. This only reinforces the idea that the baby is, in fact, a real threat to the dog's social interaction with the rest of the family."

Instead, the dog should be pampered when the "rival" is around.

"Lavish attention on the dog, yes, but only when the baby is present, and essentially ignore the dog when the baby is not present," Stump said. That way, the dog learns that when it comes near the new arrival, it will also get its share of attention."

"When someone new, especially a baby, arrives on the family scene, the dog finds itself giving up center stage to a new 'pet.'"
— Dr. John Stump

The same approach also works when a dog is jealous of a new boyfriend or girlfriend, the expert says.

The dog's owners and the guest can stage a scenario in which the owners withdraw from the animal on a day they know the guest will appear, then have the guest as the focus of attention for the dog.

"You can bias the system a little bit by having the guest give the dog a food treat," said Stump. "The dog will have a hard time being resentful or upset when it's eating something it likes, so that just manipulates the situation a little more and probably speeds up the dog's acceptance of the 'intruder.'"

Stump said a dog's jealousy could have serious consequences if it goes uncorrected.

"There could come a time when the baby starts crawling or playing near the dog, and perhaps moves toward it and is bitten because nothing has happened to change the dog's view of the child as an adversary."
