Freeze proponents full of optimism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional supporters of a nuclear weapons freeze resolution say House passage of the measure is inevitable despite Republican tactics which blocked a final vote after 12 hours of floor debate.

Freeze proponents also sought to play down conflicting views which emerged during Wednesday's debate over what specific weapons would be affected if a freeze with the Soviets was negotiated.

Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., a leading freeze advocate on Capitol Hill, asserted that GOP "dilatory tactics were successful in postponing the inevitable. But next week the people of this country will be heard."

The House's Democratic leadership had forecast easy passage of the resolution — calling for a "mutual and verifiable" freeze to be followed by nuclear arms reductions — after a single day of floor action.

However, Republicans voted solidly against a motion to limit debate so that the measure could be put to a vote by midnight. They were joined by more than 40 Democrats to prevent the Democratic majority from forcing an early decision on the measure.

The action put the resolution off until Monday at the earliest because the House plans to do no legislative business on Thursday, which is St. Patrick's Day, and will not be in session on Friday.

If passed, the resolution likely would face a much more uncertain future in the Senate. And even if both houses approved the initiative, it would not be binding on President Reagan.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said "it's still a tough fight," and that if the administration does not succeed in killing the resolution in the House it will take its battle to the Senate.

Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said it was "by no means certain" that the freeze would be the first order of business when the House returns next week. He said a decision would be made "after we have had a chance to regroup."

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., estimated that the measure had enough support to pass by 60 to 100 votes.

"The only possible way" to change the outcome, he said, "would be to adjourn and have the president get on the phone" in a lobbying effort against the measure.

Before quitting for the night, the House rejected, 226-195, an amendment spearheaded by Rep. Samuel S. Stratton, D-N.Y., to permit "modernization and deployment" of whatever weapons were needed to maintain the credibility of the U.S. nuclear deterrent.

Rep. Clement J. Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, charged that Stratton's amendment would destroy the effect of the freeze.

The House also turned back, 215-209, an amendment by Rep. Mark D. Siljander, R-Mich., allowing U.S. negotiators at talks in Geneva to have the option of seeking either arms reductions or a freeze.

House Republican Leader Robert Michel of Illinois, speaking out bluntly against the freeze proposal, contended that it was the product of a "well-planned, well-financed movement toward unilateral disarmament."

"I am convinced that the freeze would leave us in a position of strategic vulnerability that could lead to war," he said.

State of the industry

Texas Railroad Commissioners Jim Nugent, left, and Buddy Temple listen to chairman Mack Wallace, center, as he reports on the oil and gas industry at the commission's annual "State of the Industry" meeting in Midland. The commission set the allowable oil production for April at 100 percent, with 2,459,380 barrels of oil and 18,089,172 thousand cubic feet of gas daily.

Italian troops in Lebanon involved in gunfighting

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Italian troops of the multinational peacekeeping force exchanged gunfire with unidentified attackers today in two incidents that left one Italian soldier and two Lebanese wounded.

The shootouts came one day after five U.S. Marines were injured in a grenade attack and eight Italians suffered wounds in a gunfight, sharpening fears of a terrorist campaign to drive the Italians, Americans and the rest of a four-nation peacekeeping force out of Lebanon before a negotiated withdrawal of foreign troops takes place.

The statement by the Italians said the first shooting today involved an Italian patrol jeep and a mini-bus that sped toward the jeep as assailants inside opened fire, wounding one Italian.

It said the incident happened on a road that links the airport highway with the Chatilla refugee camp where hundreds of Palestinians were massacred by rightist Christian militiamen in September.

Twenty minutes later an unidentified assailant with a machine gun shot at an Italian logistics position, and the Italians returned the fire, the statement said. No casualties were reported in that shootout.

The Italian statement followed a report on state radio that Italian troops fired at a car on the airport highway before dawn, wounding two Lebanese motorists.

"The driver of the car was wounded along with another motorist in a second car," state radio quoted an unidentified Lebanese police spokesman as saying. "The two wounded drivers were taken to hospital by intervening Lebanese security forces."

Meanwhile in Washington, an American general has accused Israeli soldiers of deliberately threatening and insulting U.S. Marines in Lebanon and asked the United States to prevent further confrontations, the Pentagon said today.

Also in Washington, President Reagan said Wednesday he would press for the withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces from Lebanon, and an administration official said chances have improved on breaking the 10-week diplomatic impasse on reaching a pullout agreement.

The U.S. official, who declined to be identified, called the grenade attack on the American soldiers "an isolated incident."

The Pentagon said Gen. Robert Barrow, the commandant of the Marine Corps, had written to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger demanding "firm and strong action" to stop deliberate harassment of U.S. peacekeeping troops by Israelis.

Barrow said these confrontations between the Israelis and U.S. Marines have included "life-threatening situations, replete with verbal degradation of the officers, their uniform and country.

Outlook mixed for oil industry

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Decontrol of natural gas, less government regulation and a domestic economic recovery in 1983 will inject new blood into the oil and gas industry, speakers from major oil companies said today at an energy powwow in Midland.

"Given reasonable regulatory and taxation policies, the petroleum industry has the strength to overcome the present difficulties it faces," James W. Kinnear, president of Texaco U.S.A., told the Texas Railroad Commission.

Kinnear and top executives from 18 other oil companies and seven industry organizations spoke at the Commission's annual "State of the Industry" meeting, held for the first time in Midland.

They called for decontrol of the natural gas industry, which RRC Chairman Mack Wallace said is being smothered by bad laws and good intentions on the part of the federal government.

Not all Irish eyes smiling about New York parade

NEW YORK (AP) — Thousands of marchers decked out in green paraded up Fifth Avenue today under gray skies for a St. Patrick's Day celebration that became controversial when an Irish Republican Army supporter was named grand marshal.

The Fighting 69th Regiment, the state National Guard unit which traditionally leads the parade, began marching at noon, trailed by bagpipers.

Scattered applause greeted Grand Marshal Michael Flannery, an IRA fighter in his youth, as he took his spot at the front of the parade.

However, Cardinal Terence Cooke and other members of the clergy did not take their traditional posts on the steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral as the parade headed up the avenue.

According to a statement from Cooke's office, the cardinal had told Flannery that he would review a portion of the march after Flannery had passed the cathedral.

Spectators who lined the avenue with its traditional green stripe for the 221st annual tribute to Ireland's patron saint saw fewer marchers this year than in past years. Bands from 23 high schools and the 26th U.S. Army Band boycotted the event, as did key Irish-American politicians and the Irish government.

Flannery was unruffled by the controversy, declaring to his supporters, "It's a day of peace and justice."

"We are honoring a saint. That's our primary reason here," he said.

The parade began after Cooke met privately with Flannery and offered a Mass at the cathedral.

"We pray for all the people of Ireland, especially those who are suffering from injustice and violence," Cooke said. "We remember those who every day are denied basic human rights and equal opportunity."

The crowded cathedral was silent after the remarks, but Flannery's applause rang out loudly.

Earlier, politicians and local officials gathered at an Irish restaurant for the traditional St. Patrick's Day breakfast of sausage, eggs and soda bread.

Parade officials said today's event would be held "with dignity and pride" despite the boycott.

"We're not going to let them hijack the parade," said Mayor Edward Koch.

Gov. Mario Cuomo said he would "never miss" an opportunity to celebrate the "magnificent culture" of the Irish.

The 23 bands, Irish government, 26th U.S. Army band and such politicians as Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan and former Gov. Hugh Carey planned to boycott the parade.

However, parade organizers said they expected a larger than usual crowd of 160,000 people, as opposed to the usual 120,000.

Cooke, archbishop of New York, earlier cited as "a new danger" statements that the event had turned into a "pro-IRA parade."

Moynihan, Carey and other members of the Friends of Ireland, a political caucus, released a St. Patrick's Day statement which termed 1982 "a year of disappointment and concern for all of us who hope for peace in Northern Ireland."

To be Irish is wonderful — at least today

EDITOR'S NOTE: This year New York's annual salute to St. Patrick has been overshadowed by dispute over the naming of an Irish Republican Army sympathizer as grand marshal. But the parade has stood for many things over the years. In 1967 the late Hal Boyle, Pulitzer Prize-winning war correspondent and columnist, wrote this account of what the day meant to him.

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) — What is it to be Irish?

On 364 days of the year being Irish isn't visibly different from being Scotch, French, Italian, Jewish, Serbian, Dutch, or — yes — even English.

The Irishman pays his bills, complains against his taxes, does his work, and listens to his wife like the man of any other race.

But on this one day of the year — Holy St. Patrick's Day — the Irishman becomes an Irishman.

And on this day you have to be Irish to know what it is to be Irish.

The outer signs, of course, can be seen by all. The Irishman overnight grows a foot taller and stalks the earth a giant. All traffic lights turn green before him, and if they don't he sees red.

But this air of majesty is only token evidence of interior change. The men of other races who envy the Irishman his bearing on St. Patrick's Day would envy him far more if they could look inside the Irishman's soul.

What is it to be Irish?

How can you put the wonder of it into words? If a psychiatrist stretched himself out on his own warm couch after his last customer had gone home, and he dreamed of the man he himself would most like to be — well, he might be perfect, but he's still only half an Irishman on St. Patrick's Day.

What is it to be Irish?

It is to have an angel in your mouth, turning your prose to poetry. It is to have the gift of tongues, to know the language of all living things. Does an Irishman pause and turn an ear to a tree? It is because on this day he wants to hear what one sleepy bud says to another as it opens its pale green hands to the warm sun of spring.

What is it to be Irish?

Oh, on this day it is music. Not just the cornet in the parading high school band, but the deep, deep music of living, the low sad rhythms of eternity. The Irishman hears the high song of the turning spheres, the dim lullaby of the worm in its cocoon. All the world is in tune, and he is in step with that tune, the tune that only he can hear.

What is it to be Irish?

It is to live the whole history of his race between a dawn and a dawn — the long wrongs, the bird-swift joys, the endless hurt of his ancestors since the morning of time in a forgotten forest, the knock-at-his-heart that is part of his religion.

What is it to be Irish?

It isn't only the realization that he is descended from kings. It is the realization that he is a king himself, an empire on two feet striding in power, a strolling continent of awe.

What is it to be Irish?

Why, on St. Patrick's Day, to be Irish is to know more glory, adventure, magic, victory, exultation, gratitude and gladness than any ordinary man can experience in a lifetime.

What is it to be Irish?

It is to walk in complete mystic understanding with God for 24 wonderful hours.

Rescue plan facing Senate changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is giving a $165 billion Social Security rescue plan its last major congressional test as legislators line up with amendments ranging from a payroll tax rollback to a retirement age of 68.

The Senate began preliminary work on the legislation Wednesday and was resuming debate today.

The House approved its version of the bailout plan last week on a 282-148 vote.

But the House, which has stricter rules than the Senate for considering legislation, was able to insulate the measure from amendments.

Members of the Senate, however, have indicated they will try to attach more than two dozen amendments to the version of the bill drafted last week by the Senate Finance Committee.

The Senate was voting today on amendments by Sen. Steven D. Symms, R-Idaho, to gradually raise the retirement age from 65 to 68, and by Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., to provide "disability-retirement" benefits in the next century for workers 62 or older whose health prevents them from working but who do not meet the stringent requirements of the regular disability program.

Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., said he would seek to block the package's increases in the payroll tax.

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., the top Democrat on the Finance Committee, attacked the package for setting "a dangerous precedent" by relying too much on general revenues to shore up the Social Security system.

Nonetheless, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Finance Committee, predicted Wednesday the Senate would pass the bill "by a substantial vote," and that Congress will "have this on the president's desk sometime late next week."

Generally, the Senate package parallels the House version. It keeps virtually intact recommendations of the National Commission on Social Security Reform to curb benefits, increase payroll taxes, tax a portion of the benefits going to more affluent retirees and make Social Security coverage mandatory for new federal employees.

The Senate Finance Committee version of the bill calls for raising the retirement age to 66 by 2015 and phasing in a 5 percent benefit cut for new retirees in the next century.

Excommunicated members suing their church sect

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — As they enter their 60s, Helen and Michael Zebroski have no children to dote upon. Decades ago, they decided not to have any — the Jehovah's Witnesses told them it was dangerous in these troubled times.

The Zebroskis also face the possibility that most of their close relatives won't talk to them for the rest of their lives — the couple was excommunicated a decade ago for criticizing the Witnesses, and their families risk expulsion by associating with them.

The Zebroskis' story is not atypical of people thrown out of the Witnesses, but their response is. They sued the Witnesses for $900,000, charging defamation and loss of business. In a telephone interview, Mrs. Zebroski said she and her husband hoped the suit would force a public hearing of the charges against them and "the right to associate with our relatives." The suit, filed in 1979, was dismissed last year, but the Zebroskis are appealing.

Their troubles with the group began more than 10 years ago after they had been faithful Witnesses for decades, Mrs. Zebroski, 59, said. She and her husband, now 61, became alarmed at the way their congregation was being run. The leaders were deviating from Witness doctrine, Mrs. Zebroski said. One of them, she asserted, was interfering so much in his daughter-in-law's life that the woman attempted suicide several times.

The Zebroskis' complaints got them expelled in 1972. Appeals to regional headquarters in Toronto and international headquarters in Brooklyn, N.Y., were futile, she said.

Witness rules generally forbid anyone from associating with a disfellowshipped person, even a son or daughter.

Mrs. Zebroski recalled how she had wanted to have her elderly mother, a Witness, come stay with her.

Statistics show cancer causes

PALM COAST, Fla. (AP) — If U.S. statistics are correct, almost 95 percent of all cancers are caused by chemicals in the environment, a University of Florida researcher says.

"Five percent are caused by physical means such as radiation, and less than 1 percent are caused by external viruses," said Per-Olov Lowdin, who is working on a National Foundation for Cancer Research grant to investigate the origins of cancer.

Under the foundation grant, Lowdin will coordinate a worldwide exchange of cancer information. The National Foundation for Cancer is a center for gathering and analyzing conclusions from cancer data generated by experimental groups around the world.

"It is an enormous task to find and evaluate this information," says Lowdin, founder and head of the University of Florida's Quantum Theory Project and director of the International Quantum Theory Symposium here for the past 23 years.

The symposium was organized by Lowdin to "stimulate creative new lines of research." Quantum biology was the topic covered in the third part of the symposium, held this week, and cancer research was a major subject.

According to Lowdin, chemicals can promote cancer by damaging the proteins sheltering the genes, causing a "misreading" of the genetic code. Apparent mutations such as tumors, cancers and the familiar signs of aging are the result.

Lowdin's particular interest lies in specific genes that govern the development of an embryo. These genes are active only in the early stages of embryo development, but nevertheless are present in every cell of an adult organism. Normally, they are inactive in the adult, kept dormant and stable by their protein shield, Lowdin says.

Cancers could begin when the proteins covering these genes in the adult are damaged by chemicals, Lowdin says. They could then become free to revert to rapid growth as in a developing embryo, or cancer. This can happen in any part of the body, but particularly in the breasts and uterus.

Lowdin says even partial damage to proteins covering the active genes in a developing embryo can result in an adult organism that will have less resistance to chemical carcinogens in the environment.

Computers used to help with cows' feeding

HASTINGS, Mich. (AP) — Dairy farmers Dan and Mary Javor are using technology to learn whether their cows are off their feed.

Each of the 70 Holsteins at the Javors' farm wears a nylon strap around its neck which carries a small transmitter to communicate with the farm computer.

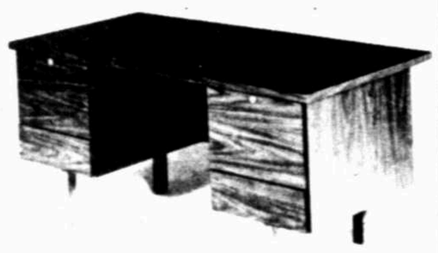

The transmitter indicates which cows step up to the feeder, and the computer decides whether to give the animals any food. It keeps track of how much each animal has eaten and makes sure each eats no more than about one pound of feed per hour.

Every 24 hours, the computer prints a list of cows that have not eaten their daily ration. That gives the Javors early warning when an animal is sick or ready to breed.

"It has helped us avoid overfeeding," said Javor, 35. "We have less fat cows, less stomach problems."

Javor said he expects the $25,000 system to pay for itself in five years through lower feed costs and better herd health.

Lesotho tries to improve transportation

GOD HELP ME PASS, Lesotho (AP) — In remote mountain meadows, Lesotho is trying to overhaul the national mode of transportation — the horse.

Aid workers from Ireland have brought in foreign bloodlines to improve the stock of 100,000 horses that is the main means of movement in Lesotho. The country has only 3,500 cars and 1.5 miles of railroad.

"Local breeding and nutrition are so bad that, without help, they'd have nothing left to ride in 10 to 15 years," said project manager Jim Whelan.

Lesotho, with 1.3 million people and territory the size of Maryland, is surrounded by South Africa, which has 2.5 million cars and 14,300 miles of railroad.

Lesotho worries about the drought that killed an estimated 10 percent of its horses within a year.

"This is one of the last few countries where the horse is important," Whelan said in an interview. "There are only one or two roads that cars can use."

Lesotho's alternative to the superhighway is the mountain trail, and it has plenty. It is the only country in which no point is lower than 3,300 feet above sea level, guidebooks say.

The Lesotho horse is hardy and surefooted, although, strictly speaking, it's a pony. Most stand less than 14 hands, 2 inches (58 inches), at the withers, or shoulders — the height below which breeders classify equines as ponies.

Over the years, Whelan said, the Basotho pony — taking its name from the tribal name of the Lesotho people — has been diminishing in quality and numbers.

The decline started 80 years ago, when both sides in the Boer War raided tribal herds. As grass gradually vanished in overgrazed and eroded valleys, Basotho peasants turned to cornstalks to feed horses during winters — a diet Whelan called grossly inadequate.

When the first of three Irish workers arrived in 1978, Lesotho was depending significantly on purchases from South Africa to replenish its horse stock.

The Irish imported two of their own Connemara stallions and one Arab stallion, a great-grandson of the famed Nazeer, given by President Anwar Sadat of Egypt a month before his assassination. The imports joined one Basotho stallion and 100 local mares on a stud farm at Thaba Tseka, deep in the central mountains.

The first ponies from the stud farm are being broken this year. Anticipating a surge in local horse trading, the Irish established a national marketing center 30 miles from Maseru, the capital, here at God Help Me Pass, where the paved road ends and alfalfa (lucerne) grass grows as a potential answer to dietary needs.

A horse is a major investment. A stallion costs about 500 maloti ($450), six times a laborer's monthly minimum pay, and a riding horse costs 300 maloti ($270).

The project has cost little more than $1 million so far, said Whelan, 31, a farmer's son from Tullow who has worked horses in California and Arabia. "But we are talking about a 20- to 40-year program, if we do it all."

"People have to be educated away from counting their wealth in livestock" so they will reduce herds and allow better grazing, he said.

Another problem is the Basotho custom of sending horses to run free in the mountains during summer when high pastures are green. Wild stallions mate with mares and ruin efforts to keep bloodlines pure.

"If we don't castrate those wild stallions, we will fail," Whelan said.

Basotho pony bloodlines are so poor, he said, that only about 500 mares, about one in 80, are worthy of breeding.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts rain for the area stretching from the lower peninsula of Michigan through the Carolinas and Georgia for Friday. Rain is also predicted for much of California and snow is forecast for portions of Wyoming, Montana and Idaho.

Weather should become warmer

After Wednesday's bitter cold and biting winds, balmier weather is ahead, according to the National Weather Service forecast.

The NWS is calling for clear skies tonight with a low in the upper 30s and winds southeasterly at 5-10 mph. Friday should be partly cloudy with a high in the low 70s and southerly winds at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's chilly high of 55 fell far short of the record 86 set in 1966. The overnight low of 31 came nearer the record low 26 for the date set in 1970.

With no rainfall in the forecast, monthly and yearly rainfall amounts should hold steady at .07 of an inch and 1.47 inches, respectively.

The sun sets tonight at 6:58 p.m. and rises Friday at 6:56 a.m.

Montana quake reported

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A minor earthquake rattled western Montana early today, the U.S. Geological Survey reported.

The tremor, centered about 90 miles northeast of Missoula, was felt over a wide area, including Missoula, Kalispell, Helena and Butte, said Don Finley, spokesman for the USGS National Earthquake Information Center here.

He said scientists at the center reported that the quake registered 4.0 on the Richter scale. It occurred at 12:26 a.m. MST, Finley said.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 4 on the Richter scale can cause minor damage in the local area, 5 moderate damage, 6 severe damage.

Search for EPA head continuing

'Extremely unlikely' Hernandez will get job

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is moving rapidly to find a new head for the Environmental Protection Agency, whose acting director ran into controversy just a week after he took over, a Reagan administration official says.

John Hernandez

The official said it was "extremely unlikely" that acting director John W. Hernandez Jr. would get the job permanently following revelations about his record at the troubled agency.

"There is a sense we need to move on an expedited basis and as rapidly as we can," the White House official said Wednesday night, speaking on condition that he not be further identified.

The official said President Reagan's senior advisers have narrowed the list of potential administrators to approximately six names.

HERNANDEZ BECAME the center of new controversy Wednesday when he told a congressional panel that he showed a 1981 EPA draft report on dioxin to the Dow Chemical Co., the manufacturer of the toxic chemical.

But Hernandez, who was then deputy EPA administrator, denied ordering changes in the final version that deleted critical references to Dow.

Hernandez said the Chicago EPA office deleted the critical references to Dow. But EPA spokeswoman Kathy Brown in Chicago said the changes were ordered by Hernandez' subordinates in Washington.

Hernandez was named by Reagan to replace Anne McGill Burford on March 9. But since then, White House and EPA officials said he has had no contact or direct instructions from the president.

Mrs. Burford resigned under pressure from Congress, where six panels are investigating the agency, looking into allegations of political manipulation, perjury, conflict of interest and "sweetheart" deals with industry.

ACCORDING TO the White House official, the list of potential nominees to take over the agency permanently includes: William D. Ruckelshaus, the first administrator of the agency when it began operation in the Nixon administration and now a Weyerhaeuser Co. official; Christopher DeMuth, a budget office executive responsible for the administration's regulatory reform program; Henry Diamond, a Washington lawyer who was an aide to former New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller; and James Buckley, the former Republican senator from New York who has worked for the Reagan State Department.

In addition, said the official, "There are a couple of others" on the list. But one of those mentioned in the past week as a possible nominee, John Quarles, a former EPA official, has been ruled out, the White House source said. Hernandez has also said he would like the EPA job permanently.

While the White House source discussed the urgency attached to the search, he said there was "no guarantee" that it would be resolved this week. He said he did not think the list of nominees had been discussed with the president.

Since assuming the No. 1 spot at EPA, Hernandez has dealt with the White House through Craig Fuller, assistant to the president for Cabinet affairs, according to Peter Rousel, a deputy White House press secretary.

Hernandez' executive assistant, Helen Cameron, said "there has been no direct contact between the president and Dr. Hernandez. I think we've been in a holding pattern here."

REAGAN'S CHIEF spokesman, Larry Speakes, said the president had full confidence in Hernandez.

At the House Public Works subcommittee hearing Wednesday, House members quizzed Hernandez about the 1981 dioxin study which said in a draft that Dow's plant in Midland, Mich., "has been the primary contributor to contamination of the Tittabawassee and Saginaw Rivers and Lake Huron."

The draft also said consumption of fish from those waterways "should be prohibited" because of the contamination.

Those sections were deleted from the final report. On Tuesday Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., said he had evidence that Hernandez ordered the changes after showing the preliminary report to Dow.

Hernandez accused of blocking cleanup

WASHINGTON (AP) — A plan to clean up lead-contaminated soil near smelters in two neighborhoods here was personally blocked by acting Environmental Protection Agency director John Hernandez Jr., Rep. Elliot Levitas says.

Levitas, D-Ga. and chairman of one of six House subcommittees investigating the agency, said Hernandez acted 18 months ago to kill an agreement between Dallas EPA officials and three companies operating smelters in the neighborhoods.

"What I'm suggesting is that where there are inexcusably high levels of lead in the environment, why not go forward and clean it up?" Levitas asked Hernandez during a six-hour hearing Wednesday in his subcommittee. "Why use the children as scientific test animals?"

Hernandez countered that initial data about high lead levels in the soil did not prove the existance of a health hazard, and more tests were needed to dtermine whether the lead had accumulated in the bodies of children living in the area.

"The characterization of using children as guinea pigs is unfair," Hernandez responded, arguing that his agency would have been accused of making "a sweetheart deal" with the smelting companies if it had settled the case without conducting more studies.

"We felt the best process was to find out scientific information on the lead exposure," he said. "I believe in a deliberate study mode. If we went out and started moving bulldozers around, we'd have ended up with a greater hysteria without any clear-cut notion of what had to be done."

Levitas, chairman of the House public works and transportation subcommittee, strongly criticized the EPA's handling of the case, charging that more than 100 employees in the plants, as well as at least four children in the neighborhood, had become ill from lead exposure.

A memo to Hernandez in April 1982, obtained by the Dallas Times Herald, noted that if the affected city neighborhoods were placed on the Superfund list that would have made them eligible for immediate cleanup using federal funds, it would have an effect on a pending suit filed against EPA.

Tests conducted by the city and federal government during a two-year period beginning in early 1981 showed that potentially harmful amounts of lead were present in the southside and eastside neighborhoods.

Oil industry executives want gas decontrol

"It is a national disgrace that the price and use of this fuel continue to be manipulated by Congress," Wallace said in opening remarks.

"The free market carrot works better than the regulatory stick," said Allen E. Murray, president of Mobil Oil Corporation. He said deregulation of oil led to a banner year in 1982, when the number of oil and gas discoveries in Texas surpassed the landmark results of 1981.

"I think those results — so necessary to offset declining production in mature fields — add up to a common-sense lesson for other states — and for their representatives in Congress," he said.

With prices allowed to respond to a free market, coupled with conservation, recession and competition from other fuels, the industry has suffered, however, Murray said.

The retrenching taking place among all segments of the industry today is what can be expected, he added. "If the free-market approach is rejected in favor of bailouts for the inefficient, somebody will have to pay," Murray warned. "That somebody is the consumer."

The speakers agreed the key to recovery in the industry is a broad-based national recovery from the recession.

Texaco's Kinnear cited recent increases in several indicators — housing starts, automobile sales and industrial production among them — as signs of an improving economy. The company is now projecting a 2.5 percent increase in real gross national product (GNP) over 1982 figures, he said.

"The main factor depressing energy demand today is the recession," he said. "The degree to which the petroleum industry will participate in this upturn, however, still remains in question," as current uncertainty regarding world oil prices continues to pose trouble.

The speakers hailed the recent pricing and production agreement reached by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, but they expressed some doubts as to how well the deal will stick.

"OPEC has a paper agreement, and I emphasize 'paper,'" said J.K. Teel of Atlantic Richfield Company. He predicted prices for sweet and sour crude will align themselves with OPEC's new base price of $29 a barrel within the next three months. Domestic production will be fairly flat through 1983, he added.

"The United States must avoid the temptation to gloat over OPEC's first price reduction in history and recognize that this nation is at a critical junction in its drive toward energy independence," said C.S. Nicandros, a Conoco group executive vice president.

The Conoco executive said current industry inventory drawdown of five to six million barrels of crude oil a day can't continue much longer.

"If OPEC production continues at its extremely low level, we estimate that the generally perceived 90-day floor (lowest acceptable inventory level) for free-world stocks will be reached within one month." Too many people have held off buying crude for too long, Nicandros said, thus setting the stage for the return to a more balanced market.

Representative denies allegations that he used drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Ronald Dellums, denying that he or his aides ever bought or used drugs, is challenging the House ethics committee and the Justice Department to be specific about any such accusations.

"I am aware of these vague allegations that are directed at us," the California Democrat told a news conference Wednesday. "I flatly deny them."

Dellums made the assertions in the wake of media reports that Robert Yesh, until Wednesday a 13-year employee of the House doorkeeper's office, had told a federal grand jury that Dellums and some of his aides had bought and used cocaine and marijuana.

Dellums, 47, said he had hired Washington attorney Michael Tigar to meet today with House ethics and Justice officials involved in probes of possible drug use on Capitol Hill.

Tigar was to meet with Joseph Califano, the special counsel hired by the ethics committee. He also hoped to arrange a session with D. Lowell Jensen, head of Justice's criminal division.

Dellums said Tigar would be trying to learn "who said what, what were we supposed to have done and when we were supposed to have done it — to find out in very specific terms."

Dellums, a liberal, is a vocal advocate of the freeze, which is opposed by the Reagan administration.

Fewer want to teach

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fewer students want to become teachers and those who do show low academic ability, according to a new report which says there is a "serious crisis in teaching in the United States."

"Never before in U.S. history has the caliber of those entering the teaching profession been as low as it is today," said the report prepared by Feistritzer Associates.

Brzezinski book discusses Mondale negatively

WASHINGTON (AP) — As vice president, Walter F. Mondale arrived at the White House at "a civilized hour," took occasional naps and left for home while others were still hard at work, Zbigniew Brzezinski says in his White House memoirs.

He became irritated when challenged, hated to be interrupted and "underneath the genial demeanor there was also some inner tension and insecurity," Brzezinski says in "Power and Principle," an account of his four years as former President Jimmy Carter's national security adviser.

Mondale, a leading aspirant for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination, was in Europe on business. His deputy press secretary, John Bell, said Mondale would have no comment until he read the memoirs.

Brzezinski, whose working relationship with Mondale developed strains during their White House years, said Mondale was "put off" by passing critical comments in otherwise laudatory articles about him.

"I was also amused by the loving way he would comb his hair in front of the mirror in his office before proceeding to any meeting," Brzezinski wrote.

On the other hand, Brzezinski said, the vice president contributed to the strengthening of ties to China, tried to bring order to Carter's schedule and was particularly helpful to him politically.

"He was a vital political barometer for the president, and Carter respected his opinion on the domestic implication of foreign policy decisions," Brzezinski said.

Brzezinski also credited Mondale with a good sense of political timing. For instance, he said, Mondale initially was in the forefront of presidential advisers who wanted "to press Israel to accommodate," but later shifted.

"More sensitive to domestic political stimuli than Carter, Mondale realized that the period of maximum presidential leverage was the first or second year and that thereafter it would become politically too costly to alienate Israel's many supporters — both Jewish and non-Jewish — in the United States," Brzezinski wrote.

Carter rarely, if ever, thought of foreign policy in terms of domestic politics, while Mondale rarely, if ever, thought of it otherwise, Brzezinski said.

Medical sleuths probe suspicious infant deaths

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Federal and state medical sleuths have started an independent probe into "suspicious" infant deaths at a county-operated hospital to determine if one factor links all the deaths.

A Bexar County special grand jury is investigating a string of deaths at the pediatric intensive care unit of Medical Center Hospital from 1978 to early 1982.

The Center for Disease Control and state investigators became involved at the behest of District Attorney Sam Millsap.

"Our investigation may lead to one person, or it may lead to a bacteria or virus," the CDC's Greg Istre said Wednesday. "Or we may not come up with a definitive answer."

Istre began the federal investigation March 10 but he repeatedly refused Wednesday to disclose any particulars of his early findings, or what trends the CDC already might have detected.

He said only that he noted "an apparent increase" in the infant mortality rate, but would not elaborate.

He also conceded his medical investigative team "may not be able to get around" the fact that no autopsies were performed on the children.

"We may come up with no answers," said Istre, who works in the Oklahoma City office of the Atlanta-based federal health agency.

Millsap said Wednesday that the CDC's report will "provide a focus" for his investigation to "determine just exactly what the cause of these deaths was and, at some point, from our perspective as prosecutors, whether criminal charges should be filed."

The district attorney has refused to disclose how many deaths have been termed "suspicious."

Istre has scores of pediatric medical records to examine and plans to interview some hospital officials, who already have been "very cooperative," he said. He is being assisted by three representatives of the Texas Department of Health.

Officers indicted for embezzlement

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Four former officers — including the former owner and former president — have been indicted on charges they embezzled and misapplied more than $113,000 in Jefferson Savings and Loan Association funds.

Former owner Guillermo Hernandez Cartaya and former president James LeBlond were accused Tuesday in a 13-count indictment, officials said.

Two officers of the McAllen association, Jesse Rodriguez and Billy Myron Bannister, also were named in the indictment.

The indictment supersedes a similar indictment handed down Nov. 23, 1982. It drops one man, company officer Herbert Day Houston Jr., and adds Cartaya and Rodriguez.

Cartaya already had been indicted by a federal grand jury on a charge of stealing about $500,000 of savings and loan money.

Fugitive ex-justice apprehended

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Texas Supreme Court Justice Don Yarbrough, who fled the country after losing his appeal of a perjury conviction, was captured after he ventured away from his safe retreat on the Carribbean island of Grenada, officials say.

The fugitive ex-justice was arrested Wednesday on the independent island nation of St. Vincent 19 months after fleeing Texas to avoid a five-year prison term.

Acting on the fear that Yarbrough might post bond and flee, officials left Wednesday night to begin extradition proceedings.

Yarbrough was ordered to prison for a 1978 perjury conviction. He faces an additional charge of felony bond-jumping, authorities said.

"I'm enormously pleased. I'm delighted," said Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle, who announced the surprise arrest at a hastily called news conference Wednesday evening along with Gov. Mark White.

Yarbrough had fled Texas with his wife and two children to attend medical school in the Caribbean island of Grenada. He had successfully avoided arrest there because the United States has extradition problems with that island state.

But two weeks ago, Yarbrough left Grenada on a trip to the nearby island of St. Vincent, and U.S. authorities made their move.

Yarbrough was spotted by U.S. consular officials in Kingston, the capital of St. Vincent, and arrested by local authorities, said Gilbert Pena, head of the governor's Criminal Justice Division.

"A couple of weeks ago we heard there may be an opportunity to make the connection in St. Vincent, so we were in contact with the U.S. marshal's office and the U.S. attorney's office in St. Thomas (the nearest U.S. territory), who were assisting us in developing a plan to get him," said Pena.

After the arrest "the governor in St. Vincent decided to let the U.S. government have him — not on an extradition basis, but simply as a person who is almost deported, an undesirable person," Pena said.

He said federal marshals from the Virgin Islands flew to St. Vincent in the British West Indies on Wednesday and took custody of the Texas fugitive. They whisked him on a charter flight back to U.S. soil, where Pena said "I think he's in jail" on the island of St. Thomas.

Pena, Assistant District Attorney Bill Willms and Travis County Sheriff Doyne Bailey left Wednesday night on a private plane for St. Thomas, according to Ann Arnold, White's press secretary.

Member tired of finding goobers on his House desk

AUSTIN (AP) — East Texas Rep. Bill Haley says he's had enough of the salad dressing, bandages, goobers and goodies he finds on his House desk when he goes to work.

Haley asked his colleagues to ban groups from leaving freebies on House desks. Haley doesn't want to cut off the gift supply, he just wants the goodies delivered straight to House members' offices.

When he made his plea to the House on Wednesday, the Center legislator toted a collection of gifts passed out this session.

"Today we got some goobers in a little sack, which is fine. Everybody in each area gets to advertise. I thought about putting a chicken on everybody's desk from the poultry capital of the Southwest, but you dont want to mess with chickens," Haley said.

So far this year, House members have found assorted goodies on their desks. South Texas citrus growers left boxes of grapefruit. A Sherman business group left shopping bags stuffed with an assortment of products from bandages to jars of salad dressing. Texas shippers provided loaves of bread this week.

Wednesday's peanuts came from the Texas Peanut Producers Board in Gorman.

Library is open 24 hours

BLUE RIVER, Ore. (AP) — Frances O'Brien's library is probably the only one in the country that is open any time — day or night. There is no lock on the door and no need for a library card.

At 4 a.m., visitors can borrow a copy of Audubon magazine and read until the birds of the lush McKenzie River Valley awaken.

"People are shocked when I tell them I don't lock it," said the 81-year-old, white-haired library proprietor. "Maybe ours is a very trusting community."

The library is the offspring of Mrs. O'Brien's longtime love affair with books and learning. It began in the living room of her home more than half a century ago and now consists of nearly 21,000 donated books in a small building constructed in 1975 behind her house.

It is not tax-supported or publicly administered and relies solely on donated books and on money Mrs. O'Brien earns as a tax consultant.

Books have floated in from all parts of the country, and offers of collections have come from as far away as Japan.

Last year, some residents of Ohio read about the library and made up their minds their next vacation would be in Oregon.

"They arrived with three people in the car and two large boxes of books," Mrs. O'Brien recalled in a recent interview.

With the help of the Blue River Lions Club, the library in this small town of 300 families soon will turn another page in its history. Club members plan to construct an addition to the building to allow room for more books, including 2,000 that are still in boxes.

Mrs. O'Brien will put up the money — she won't say how much — for the addition; the Lions will provide the labor.

"I thought when I built this building, I had built for all times," Mrs. O'Brien said as she stood in the cramped library, which measures about 24 feet by 32 feet. "For the last year, it's been entirely too tight."

The special charm of the library lies in the rules that harken back to simpler times.

"We just don't have a problem with vandalism," Mrs. O'Brien said of her open-door policy.

But Mrs. O'Brien worries about the library's future.

"I've had offers for extensive private collections, provided I'll show that the library will go on when I'm gone, but so far I can't make those assurances," Mrs. O'Brien said. "I can't find anybody to devote the time it takes to work on it."

She said she has no desire to turn the facility over to the Lane County library system.

"I wouldn't let them run it," Mrs. O'Brien said. "I want it open all the time. I want it available day or night. Nobody agrees with me on that."

Balloon crosses ocean

OKEMAH, Okla. (AP) — It took four months for Derrick VanWinkle's note to cross the Atlantic Ocean, but the wait was worth it.

Derrick and his fellow sixth-graders attached cards saying "Oklahoma Hello" to helium balloons last November to celebrate the state's 75th anniversary. Derrick's balloon floated all the way to West Germany and landed in the hands of an American — from Okemah.

Sgt. Bobby Barr, an Army reservist, said he found the burst balloon in a tree while he was on Army maneuvers in February. The card had fallen to the ground. Barr is a 1975 graduate of Okemah High School.

Baseball teams hard hit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The real toll of last November's House elections is only now being realized: Both Democrats and Republicans will have a hard time fielding quality baseball teams this year.

Although the annual congressional baseball game is still several months off, coaches on both sides are struggling to put together new lineups in the wake of the national elections that thinned the top ranks of both teams.

"We're in bad shape this year," Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., coach of the GOP team, lamented. "I doubt that I could field a team of nine players. We took a beating in the November elections."

The GOP team lost three ace players: outfielder Pete McCloskey of California, who did not seek re-election; designated hitter Don Clausen of California and pitcher John LeBoutillier of New York, who were both defeated.

Democrats, who had a small team to begin with, also lost their star pitcher with the defeat of former Rep. Ron Mottl of Ohio — who had pitched the last eight contests, chalking up a 5-3 win record.

Both Conte, determined to make a comeback from last year' 7 to 3 loss to the Democrats, and Democratic coach Rep. Bill Chappell of Florida are scouring the ranks of freshmen for new talent.

So imagine Conte's glee when he spotted on the GOP roster the name of Florida's Connie Mack, the grandson of the Baseball Hall of Fame's Cornelius McGillicuddy, who as Connie Mack owned and managed the Philadelphia Athletics.

"I sought him out immediately and introduced myself as the manager of the Republian baseball team," said Conte. "And I asked him to come out for the team."

But, alas, there was no joy in Mudville. Mighty Conte had struck out. Conte said Mack told him: "I've never played baseball in my life."

Offices in the older Dirksen and Russell Senate office buildings have all been re-numbered to make them compatible with numbers in the new Hart Senate Office Building — and Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wisc., says he finds this all very perplexing.

The number of his Senate office used to be 5241 Dirksen, until he came to work one day and found it had been changed to "SD-531."

"I haven't moved my offices but the numbering system has changed," Proxmire complained.

Council wrangles over sign

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (AP) — A woman who greets arriving visitors may have a statuesque figure, but City Councilman Charles Smith wants her off the streets before she gives the city a bad name.

The woman in question — more accurately a bigger-than-life replica of a woman — stands atop Blondie's, a bar along Interstate 80.

"For so many people that's the first welcome to Council Bluffs," Smith said at a council meeting earlier this week. He directed City Attorney Terry Timmins to determine if the sign is legal.

Smith said he is worried about the woman's effect on Council Bluffs' reputation. City officials suspect the sign is the same one which once stood at a discount tire center.

"I didn't find it to be as offensive as where it is now," Smith said.

Cities can order billboards to be taken down but there could be a legal wrangle over compensation for the sign owner, Timmins said.

Singer Short's long on talent

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

He made his first professional appearance as a singer-pianist when he was 12. The debut earned him a title, "the miniature king of swing," he carried with him on the vaudeville circuits, where he performed on the same bill with such names as Fletcher Henderson, Bunny Berigan and The Three Stooges.

That was over 40 years ago, but Bobby Short remembers how he felt.

"It was exhilarating," Short said in a telephone interview prior to his Tuesday performance here at Theatre Midland. Tickets, priced at $32.50, may be purchased by calling Renwood Inc. at 697-7863. Seating is limited.

Bobby Short's telephone voice is huskily soft. The laugh comes easily and often. The interview was tucked into a brief time slot on a busy day for Short, but his manner was totally relaxed on the phone.

"I think that most children who perform get a very special kind of joy and thrill out of performing in front of other people. It is something that happens to some children. To others having to face an audience is pure death. I always enjoyed it." The next line just eased out of his mouth.

"I was always eager to show off my little talent, you see," Short said in a matter-of-fact tone.

Today that "little talent" has behind it successful recordings of the works of Cole Porter, George Gershwin, Noel Coward and Rogers and Hart; a 1956 New York City stage debut in the City Center revival of the Cole Porter musical "Kiss Me Kate," starring Kitty Carlisle and David Atkinson; the 1962 Broadway Sidney Kingsley drama "Nightlife"; and a co-starring role in the production which established him as a stand-up performer — Ben Bagley's off-Broadway production of "The Decline and Fall of the Entire World as Seen Through the Eyes of Cole Porter."

Since 1960 he has appeared in concert with, among others, the Boston Pops, the Dallas Symphony, the Sacramento Symphony, the Indianapolis Symphony and the Buffalo Philharmonic. He does regular gigs at the Fairmont Hotels in Dallas and San Francisco in addition to being performer-in-residence for eight months each year at New York City's Cafe Carlyle.

Some performers whose professional careers began when they were children feel they were robbed of a childhood, while others believe the experience was beneficial to their lives. For Short the experience was "a bit of both.

"I had a very happy childhood, but I was delighted to leave it behind. I think that the serious business of being grown-up is a very demanding thing these days and I was delighted to get into the swim at an early age."

For Short it is impossible to single out an individual evening as being the most outstanding in his career because he has "had many, many remarkable evenings or performances that are forever memorable." But a particular run?

When asked about "The Decline and Fall...," Short's immediate response was laughter. Then he said, "I remember that very sharply because it was my first experience being on a stage and not having a piano to sit down in front of. I stood up the entire time. It's a very interesting change for a pianist to stand up and use his hands."

Bobby Short

Short, who refers to himself as a "saloon pianist and singer," maintains a busy schedule. His Tuesday performance for Renwood Inc.'s Select Series falls between working trips to London and Los Angeles.

Short's London trip is work. He will be filming a BBC television show. "I'm doing a rather complicated show for them which also features three other Americans — Eartha Kitt, Ryan King and Frank Gorshen."

In Los Angeles Short will be putting together a one-man show which opens March 29 at the Westwood Playhouse. This show will mark a first for him.

"I'll be using for the first time on the stage an extra pianist," Short said. The revue will also include his regular side men, a bassist and drummer. In addition, it will feature "three young ladies."

The production, Short said, "will be a kind of vest-pocket revue which I can put in my vest pocket and take away to someplace else in the future."

Work is, and has always been, a vital factor in Short's life.

"I think it's a very important thing to figure out a way to enjoy life and to figure out a way to do what you have to do to make it possible. I'm lucky. I do what I like to do for a living and so the rest of the things just fall into place."

Short's reply to the question of what he does for recreation may best sum up his approach to living.

"My whole life is recreation, quite frankly. I like to feel that I eat well and travel nicely and live well generally. That for me is a feather in my cap."

Quartet performs tonight

The Harrington Quartet will perform today at 8 p.m. at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave.

The program will include the Quartet in D Major, K. 575 by Mozart; the String Quartet, Opus 3 by Berg; and the String Quartet in C Major, Opus 59 by Beethoven.

Founded jointly by the Amarillo Symphony Orchestra and West Texas State University with a grant from the Don and Sibyl Harrington Foundation, the Harrington Quartet made its debut in November 1981.

The public is invited to attend this Friends of Music presentation. A free-will donation will be taken.

Grant Speed's limited edition bronze, "Apache Wars," is among the works on exhibit and for sale at the annual Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library Contemporary Western Art by-invitation show and sale Saturday at Midland Center.

Art historian will speak on painters

"Re-emerging American Impresionist Painters of the Turn of the Century" will be the topic of discussion at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium, Haley Park at the corner of Indiana Avenue and K Street, Sunday at 7 p.m.

The free lecture will be given by Bill Vose, a fifth-generation family member of Boston's Vose Galleries.

Vose has specialized in the American impressionist group of artists, giving lectures on the subject throughout the country to such prestigious groups as the Antiques Monthly Annual Conference. He has written on the subject and published, "New England: Birthplace of American Impressionism." He received his bachelor of arts degree in American history from Hobart College in New York.

The public is invited to attend this lecture, which is sponsored by the Museum of the Southwest.

Symphony presents 'Glory of Venice'

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's eighth subscription concert of the season is scheduled for Saturday and Sunday.

Directed by Dr. Stanley Engebretson, "The Glory of Venice" will be presented by the chorale Saturday at 8 p.m. at First United Methodist Church in Odessa and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. at St. Ann's Catholic Church in Midland. The symphony's brass section will join the chorale in the performance.

"The Glory of Venice" opens with works by Croce, Gabrieli and Gallus. These pieces feature antiphonal writing — alternating choirs and brass ensembles in all corners of the sanctuary. The audience will literally be surrounded by sound.

Also to be performed are the "Marian Antiphons" by Anton Bruckner and two contemporary works, "Pueri Hebraeorum" by Randall Thompson and "To St. Cecilia" by Dello Joio.

Single admission tickets will be available at the door.

Library's art sale Saturday

Saturday is the day for the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library's annual Contemporary Western Art show and sale at Midland Center, 105 N. Main St.

Reservations for the by-invitation event may be made by calling the library at 682-5785. Cost is $75 for the cocktail reception, dinner and sale. Preview begins at 6 p.m., with many of the artists on hand for the affair.

A significant historian on Texas ranching history, J. Evetts Haley, established the library in 1976. As a young man in the 1920s, Haley interviewed the old-time cowboys who had tended cattle prior to the fenced-in range. The result of Haley's efforts was a wealth of primary resource material, as well as the nucleus of what is now the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library. Today the library has a research collection of approximately 15,000 volumes.

This year's show features over 125 works, ranging in price from $300 to $17,500. Works by the following artists are included in Saturday's exhibition: Paul Abram Jr., J. Chester Armstrong, Wayne Blaize, Dan Bodelson, James Boren, Nancy Boren, Harley Brown, George Carlson, Rebecca Clayton, Michael Coleman, Roger Cooks, Don Crowley, Juan Dell, Valoy Eaton, Fred Fellows, Glenna Goodacre, Veryl Goodnight, David Halback, Clark Hulings, G. Harvey, James Kramer, Ted Long, George Marks, Buck McCain, Gerry Metz, Vel Miller, William Moyers, Gary Niblett, Raymond Pease, Donald Putman, James Reynolds, Tom Ryan, Brad Schmidt, Grant Speed, Ron Stewart, Paul Strisik, Ray Swanson, Russ Vickers, Martin Weekly, William Whitaker, Fritz White and Wayne Wolfe.

In addition, Saturday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. the library will host an invitational reception for the artists and guests at the library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave. At that time a dedication will be held for the statue "Old Maude" by Veryl Goodnight. Miss Goodnight and Haley are to give a short speech for the dedication ceremony.

entertainment in brief

Spelling produces most for TV

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The most prolific television producer is Aaron Spelling, who between 1956 and 1981 produced 1,100 episodes totaling 1,457½ hours of air time.

Spelling's feat is recorded in the 1983 edition of "Guinness Book of World Records."

Theresa Saldana back to work

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A year after her near-fatal stabbing, Theresa Saldana will start a new movie in Mexico.

Miss Saldana will star opposite Charles Bronson in "The Evil That Men Do," a thriller about a political assassin who comes out of retirement to fight a fascist torturer.

The actress, delighted with her full recovery, said, "What a difference a year makes."

Miss Saldana, who was in "Raging Bull," was stabbed on March 15, 1982.

Nicholson plays ex-astronaut

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jack Nicholson plays a former astronaut in "Terms of Endearment," which also stars Debra Winger and Shirley MacLaine.

The bidding:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♡ | Pass | 2 ♡ | Pass |
| 4 ♡ | Pass | Pass | Pass |

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

Don't just consider the odds in one particular suit. We have stressed repeatedly that you must take the whole hand into consideration.

The vulnerability prevented East-West from entering the auction. At any other vulnerability they would have a good sacrifice at four spades if they could get there. Also observe North's raise to two hearts despite the fact that he had only three low trumps. He had a respectable responding hand and wanted to make the most encouraging response he could.

West got his side off to the most effective lead of a spade, attacking dummy's only entry. Declarer made the technically correct play of allowing the defenders to win the first trick, but was forced to win the continuation. He saw no problem, but when he led a trump to the king and West showed out, the contract was beyond redemption. Declarer had a loser in each suit and nowhere to put them.

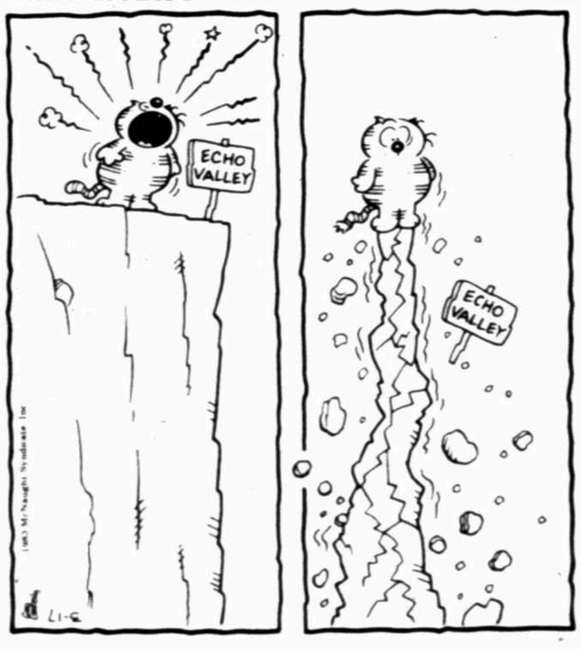

While declarer's play in the trump suit was correct considering that suit in isolation, it was a losing line with regard to the hand as a whole. The correct technique is to take a trump finesse at trick two, despite holding ten cards in the suit!

As the cards lie, the finesse wins and the contract is home. But what if East follows with a low heart and West captures the jack with the queen?

The contract is still secure. Suppose West shifts to a diamond—the best defense. Declarer wins, draws the outstanding trump and leads a club. West grabs the ace and perseveres with diamonds. Declarer wins, then crosses to dummy by overtaking the four of trumps with the five. He discards his diamond loser on a high club and all is well.

Reporting elections

Since 1916, the reporting of election results in Texas has been coordinated by Texas Election Central, a cooperative effort by the state's major news organizations. All in all, the system has been effective, although at times it has been slow.

Currently, there's a bill before the Legislature that would relieve news organizations of the coordination role and bring the election reporting function into the realm of the secretary of state's office. House Bill 1121, sponsored by State Reps. Stan Schlueter of Killeen and El Franco Lee of Houston and in the Senate by Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown of Lake Jackson, has merit and should be approved.

House Speaker Gib Lewis noted recently that the idea was tested last November during the general election and was hailed statewide "as an unqualified success." In election reporting, the cutting edge is tabulating results as quickly as possible and getting those results to voters and the rest of the citizenry in the quickest possible time. That was the result in November.

One concern, of course, is whether the people of Texas can rest assured the election results they are receiving are accurate, unbiased and free of tampering. House Bill 1121 embraces that consideration by requiring the secretary of state to appoint an advisory task force in each off-numbered year comprised of at least 20 members of various news organizations statewide. The advisory committee would monitor the Secretary of State Election Central's operation both before and after each election and will make recommendations for improving the system.

The only other consideration of consequence is cost of the electon reporting system to taxpayers of the state and in that regard the system proposed by House Bill 1121 should prove cost-effective. The secretary of state now is charged with the responsibility of tabulating election results. That responsibility won't change.

Any additional expense to that office will be created by the role of providing election results to news media personnel. Cost of performing that function will be borne by news organizations which will contract for computer display terminals and lines from the secretary of state's office. As Speaker Lewis notes, the only charge to the news media will be "the cost of the program to the state or, put another way, taxpayer's dollars."

The state's taxpayers will not be saddled with additional expense under the new system. The election reporting system can be streamlined and the results speeded throughout the state and nation. Why wasn't such a bill approved years ago?

Banks hurting selves

The banking industry has been going out of its way to give substance to every left-wing caricature of bankers put in print since the days of William Jennings Bryan. Here is old moneybags jingling his way through the halls of Congress, not giving a hoot for the jobless or homeless, but simply intent upon preserving his God-given right to do business in the way he sees fit.

The banks' latest gambit — holding urgently needed money for unemployment benefits and emergency relief hostage to the repeal of withholding on interest and dividends — earned them a well-deserved rebuke from President Reagan. Noting that the banks' campaign has greatly distorted the withholding issue, the president suggested that "the banking industry would do a lot better to think about lowering interest rates."

We can think of other more substantial matters for the banks to pursue as well. The banks do not have a large stake in the withholding measure, but they have a very large stake in the expansion of International Monetary Fund quotas. This measure has been in trouble, because it has been widely — but incorrectly — perceived as a bail-out for the banks. If the banks really want to do some useful lobbying, this should be their target.

What can be motivating this misdirected campaign? If you press the bankers on the subject, you'll get a lot of grossly inflated estimates of overhead costs. How can it be that the banks — which can provide 24-hour automated teller service, give you an instant reading on, or switch money between, any of your several accounts and provide a daily statement of transactions arrayed in several dimensions — can't deduct 10 percent from your accumulated interest when they send the IRS the already-required notice of that interest? If it's so hard, why aren't the brokers complaining?

It is true that the banks have sown terror and confusion in the minds of many of their depositors. But that's their own fault, and they had best set about trying to reeducate their customers to the fact that withholding will impose no new tax or serious inconvenience on anyone.

About the only useful thing that has come out of this debate is the drawing of attention to the fact that the banks hardly pay any taxes at all. That piece of information will surely be useful to the people who make tax policy, but you may wonder whether the banks' stockholders feel that their interests have been well served by its prominent disclosure.

Nor can those stockholders be pleased that the banks have now managed to unite against themselves a coalition of right and left prominently led by President Reagan and Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole. Is there no one in the industry with enough wit to see what the banks are doing to themselves?

— The Washington Post

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Ex-presidents' expenses rising

WASHINGTON — Much has been written about the "imperial presidency" — the sometimes-royal splendor in which our chief executives, their families and their huge staffs are pampered at the taxpayers' expense.

Jack Anderson

But few Americans realize the staggering costs of what might be called the "imperial ex-presidency" — the pensions, expenses, Secret Service protection and office-library upkeep for our former presidents. The situation becomes absurd when you realize that the three current living ex-presidents are all either millionaires or close to it, thanks largely to the opportunities that arose directly from their years in the White House.

The estimated cost of the imperial ex-presidency this year alone is $27 million. Three years ago, the bill was $18 million. And in 1955, when the single ex-president was Harry S. Truman, a man of devoutly democratic tastes, the cost was only $64,000.

In a perverse sort of way, it was the spectacle of Truman, carrying his own luggage into his home in Independence, Mo., and answering his own correspondence after he left office, that inspired Congress to provide staff and stationery expenses for former presidents.

Since that well-intended decision to help a man of modest means cope with the burdens of former high office, the legislated expense accounts for former presidents have ballooned.

Ironically, the growth of ex-presidents' expenses came at a time when any former president — even one who was forced out of office in disgrace — was guaranteed at least a comfortable income from books, lecture fees, directorships and other sinecures available precisely because he had once held the highest office in the land.

No one wants to see our ex-presidents face financial hardship — like Thomas Jefferson or U.S. Grant, for example — but former presidents have been soaking the taxpayers for staff and expenses used for political purposes and to generate income. A former president's staff allowance now starts at $150,000 a year and decreases to an eventual $96,000.

Oddly enough, it is the ex-president who has been out of office the longest — Richard Nixon — whose staff charges the taxpayers most in one area: travel expenses. Travel vouchers obtained by my associate Vicki Warren show that Nixon's staff ran up travel bills of more than $20,000 last year.

Gerald Ford's staff travel expenses were less than half that of Nixon's last year; Jimmy Carter's staff travel cost only $7,000.

Bob Barrett, who runs Ford's office, supports the idea of curbing ex-presidents' expenses. He said Ford scrupulously separates official, personal and political expenses. Barrett thinks it would be a good move to have former presidents give Congress a public accounting each year on how the taxpayers' money is being spent.

IRISH STEW: Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., is an erudite and combative public figure in the best tradition of Irish-American politicians. Now he has put his political career in jeopardy by refusing to march in that annual outpouring of Irish enthusiasm, the St. Patrick's Day parade.

Moynihan's decision to boycott the parade, because Grand Marshal Michael Flannery is an unapologetic supporter of the outlaw Irish Republican Army, has outraged many of the senator's constituents. To unrelenting Irish-Americans who want the British out of Northern Ireland at whatever cost, Moynihan is now right up there with Oliver Cromwell in the pantheon of deep-dyed villains, traitors and spalpeens.

Yet Moynihan, as vice chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, has inside information on the IRA and its links to some of the worst international terrorists: Libyan dictator Muammar Qaddafi, the Italian Red Brigades, West Germany's Baader-Meinhof gang and extremist elements of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Unpublished studies done for th senator document the IRA's ties t terrorists. One such study notes, for example, that "the IRA has received increased financing and arms, including M-16 rifles, through their associations with other guerrilla groups" such as the Red Brigades, Baader-Meinhof and the PLO. The IRA has also received arms from Czechoslovakia.

PERMANENT RERUN: New episodes of "M-A-S-H" can no longer be seen, but incurable addicts of the long-running TV series will be able to get their "M-A-S-H" fix at the Smithsonian Institution when they visit Washington. Artifacts from the Hollywood set will be given to three different divisions of the National Museum of American History: Medical Science, Military History and Community Life.

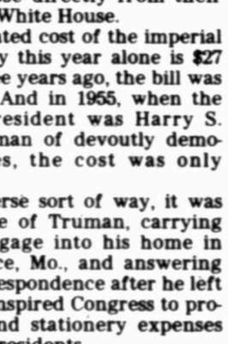

Negotiations with 20th Century-Fox have been going on for weeks. My sources say Medical Science will get the operating-room props, which are authentic Korean War vintage; Military History will get the tents — and Community Life, presumably, will get "The Swamp," including Hawkeye's still.

Segregation's web tangles more

WASHINGTON — Such is the tangled web we have woven in race policy, the Supreme Court is now being urged, in the name of civil rights, to uphold a lower court decree establishing a new form of segregation. Unless the Court overturns the decree concerning Boston's police department, judges may establish job entitlements for government-approved minorities, and may disregard state laws when fine-tuning those entitlements.

George F. Will

In 1970 blacks and Hispanics comprised 16.3 percent of Boston's population, but only 2.3 percent of police officers. After several years of litigation a court ordered Boston to give priority to hiring blacks and Hispanics until their percentage in the department approximated their percentage in the population. There was no judicial finding of purposeful discrimination, only a finding that minorities were denied "equal protection" of the law because they were adversely affected by hiring criteria that were not sufficiently job-related.

Since the court-ordered reverse discrimination in hiring began in 1973, 46 percent of the persons hired by the police department have been minorities. By July 1981, they comprised 11.7 percent of the force. But by then they comprised 30 percent of Boston's population. Then another complication emerged: Voters passed a tax-reduction initiative, which resulted in the need to reduce the police force. Massachusetts law establishes a seniority system, requiring police officers to be laid off on a last-hired, first-fired basis. That would have reduced the minority component of the force to 6.2 percent. So a court declared the state law inoperative and imposed segregated seniority lists.

On the basis of those lists, layoffs were to be conducted so as to keep the July 1981 level (11.7 percent) of minorities. Some white officers with 11 years service were fired while minority officers with only two years service — who had not suffered discrimination — were retained.

The Anti-Defamation League, a Jewish organization long identified with civil-rights causes, has filed a brief urging the Supreme Court to overturn the lower court's action because (among other reasons) that court exceeded its remedial powers when it tried to "correct" a social development unrelated to discrimination.

The brief notes that in a 1971 school case the Court held that there is "no substantive constitutional right (to a) particular degree of racial balance or mixing" after a constitutional violation has been remedied. In a 1976 school case the Court held that a federal court has no power to mandate a correction of a racial "imbalance" that occurred in a school as a result of population changes subsequent to desegregation measures and unrelated to discrimination. Yet in the current case, the lower court's decree implies a judicial power to create for government-approved minorities a perpetual right to a proportionate share of certain jobs. Furthermore, it implies a virtually uncircumscribed judicial power to command this result, regardless of the reasons why the result requires a command.

The League's brief notes that in 1977 the Court limited "retroactive seniority" to identifiable victims of discrimination. The brief argues that the lower court's creation of a racially segregated seniority system in Boston is an abuse of the judiciary's equity power.

The Weber case (1979) concerned a privately negotiated agreement that prevented white employees from applying for half the openings in a company's advancement training program. In upholding the agreement the Court stressed that the plan did not require the discharge of white workers, and that the injury to white employee's expectations was counterbalanced by injury done to blacks by intentional discrimination.

A 1980 case concerned the power of Congress to foreclose white contractors from bidding on 10 percent of some new federal contracts. In upholding Congress's action the Court stressed the marginal nature of the unfairness and the fact that the measure was temporary. In Boston the lower court's various remedial efforts have been under way for nearly a decade and the logic of the decree at issue is that the court's supervision of the police department's personnel policies can be perpetual.

Those who hope the lower court's extraordinary action will be upheld (the NAACP, for example) favor inflicting injury on a class of persons who are guilty of no unlawful behavior, who have benefited from no unlawful behavior and whose injury derives solely from their skin pigmentation (white).

Those who want racial proportionality — the perpetual parceling out of benefits on the basis of pigmentation or origin — to be public policy, should urge legislatures to try to make it so. Then courts could try to square this divisive emphasis on immutable characteristics with this premise of our political order: rights inhere in individuals, not groups.

"How do you know what he likes?"

"He used to do it all the time to the people in his care. He wouldn't have done it if he didn't believe a bright light was good for someone who needed sleep."

"Are you a doctor?" the man at the embassy asked.

"Not exactly. But when someone like Klaus Barbie gets sick, I like to be of help. Have the French doctors hit his kidneys with a night stick?"

"I'm sure they haven't."

"They might try it. Klaus always said hitting a person in the kidneys was a good way to make him forget his hernia problems."

"I don't think the doctors are about to hit Barbie in the kidneys with a night stick."

"I guess not. Maybe the cure is an old wives' tale or maybe Barbie made it up during World War II. What else is wrong with him?"

"He's also supposed to have a heart condition."

Member of family's depression involves all

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a depression, started taking medication, but I am afraid that it is wrecking our family. Any advice? — Mrs. H.R., Birmingham

Neil Solomon

Dear Mrs. R.: In a sense, depression is a family affair. Someone who loves and cares for you and everyone who depends on you is affected. Some depressed people, aware of the effects on their families, carry around an extra burden of guilt. They feel responsible for hurting those people who love them. You should know that families do survive the illness of one of their members, an things do get back to normal.

Different families react differently. Some become very concerned and keep wanting to help. The fact that they can't make you feel better becomes frustrating. They may keep making suggestions and pressing you to do things that you really don't feel up to. This may make you angry at times, and make you feel that they don't understand you at all. In other cases, the family appears very indifferent. Everybody goes about his or her own business and appears to have little sympathy for your suffering. Frequently, this is a result of their feelings of frustration at not being able to help. Husbands or wives often find it hard to understand their mates' loss of sexual desire. They may take it personally and feel responsible for not being desireable enough. This sometimes leads to bitter confrontations and sometimes to cold indifference.

It's all really a matter of not understanding the illness. Children may be terribly confused about why their parent doesn't feel like doing things anymore, perhaps spends a lot of time in bed, possibly seems to ignore them. They may become rather sullen and quiet or overly noisy and abrasive. Now since you have started taking medicine to fight the depression, you can tell your family that in about three weeks you're going to start feeling much better. This will be a great relief to them, and you may be surprised to discover how much it really does mean to them.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You recently had an item in your column about what would happen if a woman became pregnant even though she was using an intrauterine device. But what would happen if a woman became pregnant while using a contraceptive foam? Couldn't something like this do some damage to the baby? — Cindy, Columbia, South Carolina.

Dear Cindy: The results of a study by researchers at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development suggest that the use of spermicides is not associated with congenital malformations in the infant should the woman become pregnant.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I read with a great deal of interest your item on the interaction between drugs and food. Can you tell me some of the foods that contain tyramine? I believe you said it may have some effect on people taking medication for emotional problems. — Arthur, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

Dear Arthur: Some tyramine-containing foods include cheese, pickled herring, salted and dried fish, liver, meat extracts, red wines, beer, avocados and bananas. However, you should be aware that there are individual differences in the susceptibility of patients to tyramine-containing foods.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is in her seventies, is overweight, and has diabetes. She has been overweight as long as I can remember, and that's a very long time. She has a new doctor who has told her to lose weight, but I don't see how she can. Is this so important for a woman my mother's age? — Rhoda, Lexington, Ky.

Dear Rhoda: Dr. Harold Rifkin, of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York, says that achieving an ideal weight is a realistic goal for elderly people with diabetes. This does not mean a precipitous weight loss; even the loss of a pound a week will add up over a period of time.

Your mother should know that weight loss is a realistic goal and that it is closely associated with control of the diabetes. She should be encouraged to follow her physician's suggestions for achieving it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a friend who calls herself a chocoholic. She says she lives on chocolate cake and milkshakes, and to tell the truth, that's all I see her eat when we're out together. But she keeps her weight down by hardly eating anything else, and she also smokes a lot which may keep her weight down. The point I'm making is that I weigh more than she does, but I have a balanced diet. So how can you compare what two people weigh and say that one is overweight and the other isn't? — Janet, Dayton, Ohio

Dear Janet: A person's overall weight is only one indication of obesity, and not always a reliable one. I commented some time ago that many professional football players weigh close to 300 pounds, yet they would not be considered obese because much of the weight is muscle, not fat.

Obesity in an individual is better determined by the amount of body fat. As you describe yourself and your friend, I would have to assume that a larger proportion of her weight is made up of fat than is yours. This is something I am very careful to determine with my own patients.

Reporting elections

Since 1916, the reporting of election results in Texas has been coordinated by Texas Election Central, a cooperative effort by the state's major news organizations. All in all, the system has been effective, although at times it has been slow.

Currently, there's a bill before the Legislature that would relieve news organizations of the coordination role and bring the election reporting function into the realm of the secretary of state's office. House Bill 1121, sponsored by State Reps. Stan Schlueter of Killeen and El Franco Lee of Houston and in the Senate by Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown of Lake Jackson, has merit and should be approved.

House Speaker Gib Lewis noted recently that the idea was tested last November during the general election and was hailed statewide "as an unqualified success." In election reporting, the cutting edge is tabulating results as quickly as possible and getting those results to voters and the rest of the citizenry in the quickest possible time. That was the result in November.

One concern, of course, is whether the people of Texas can rest assured the election results they are receiving are accurate, unbiased and free of tampering. House Bill 1121 embraces that consideration by requiring the secretary of state to appoint an advisory task force in each off-numbered year comprised of at least 20 members of various news organizations statewide. The advisory committee would monitor the Secretary of State Election Central's operation both before and after each election and will make recommendations for improving the system.

The only other consideration of consequence is cost of the electon reporting system to taxpayers of the state and in that regard the system proposed by House Bill 1121 should prove cost-effective. The secretary of state now is charged with the responsibility of tabulating election results. That responsibility won't change.

Any additional expense to that office will be created by the role of providing election results to news media personnel. Cost of performing that function will be borne by news organizations which will contract for computer display terminals and lines from the secretary of state's office. As Speaker Lewis notes, the only charge to the news media will be "the cost of the program to the state or, put another way, taxpayer's dollars."

The state's taxpayers will not be saddled with additional expense under the new system. The election reporting system can be streamlined and the results speeded throughout the state and nation. Why wasn't such a bill approved years ago?

Banks hurting selves

The banking industry has been going out of its way to give substance to every left-wing caricature of bankers put in print since the days of William Jennings Bryan. Here is old moneybags jingling his way through the halls of Congress, not giving a hoot for the jobless or homeless, but simply intent upon preserving his God-given right to do business in the way he sees fit.

The banks' latest gambit — holding urgently needed money for unemployment benefits and emergency relief hostage to the repeal of withholding on interest and dividends — earned them a well-deserved rebuke from President Reagan. Noting that the banks' campaign has greatly distorted the withholding issue, the president suggested that "the banking industry would do a lot better to think about lowering interest rates."

We can think of other more substantial matters for the banks to pursue as well. The banks do not have a large stake in the withholding measure, but they have a very large stake in the expansion of International Monetary Fund quotas. This measure has been in trouble, because it has been widely — but incorrectly — perceived as a bail-out for the banks. If the banks really want to do some useful lobbying, this should be their target.

What can be motivating this misdirected campaign? If you press the bankers on the subject, you'll get a lot of grossly inflated estimates of overhead costs. How can it be that the banks — which can provide 24-hour automated teller service, give you an instant reading on, or switch money between, any of your several accounts and provide a daily statement of transactions arrayed in several dimensions — can't deduct 10 percent from your accumulated interest when they send the IRS the already-required notice of that interest? If it's so hard, why aren't the brokers complaining?

It is true that the banks have sown terror and confusion in the minds of many of their depositors. But that's their own fault, and they had best set about trying to reeducate their customers to the fact that withholding will impose no new tax or serious inconvenience on anyone.

About the only useful thing that has come out of this debate is the drawing of attention to the fact that the banks hardly pay any taxes at all. That piece of information will surely be useful to the people who make tax policy, but you may wonder whether the banks' stockholders feel that their interests have been well served by its prominent disclosure.

Nor can those stockholders be pleased that the banks have now managed to unite against themselves a coalition of right and left prominently led by President Reagan and Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole. Is there no one in the industry with enough wit to see what the banks are doing to themselves?

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Ex-presidents' expenses rising

WASHINGTON — Much has been written about the "imperial presidency" — the sometimes-royal splendor in which our chief executives, their families and their huge staffs are pampered at the taxpayers' expense.

Jack Anderson

But few Americans realize the staggering costs of what might be called the "imperial ex-presidency" — the pensions, expenses, Secret Service protection and office-library upkeep for our former presidents. The situation becomes absurd when you realize that the three current living ex-presidents are all either millionaires or close to it, thanks largely to the opportunities that arose directly from their years in the White House.

The estimated cost of the imperial ex-presidency this year alone is $27 million. Three years ago, the bill was $18 million. And in 1955, when the single ex-president was Harry S. Truman, a man of devoutly democratic tastes, the cost was only $64,000.

In a perverse sort of way, it was the spectacle of Truman, carrying his own luggage into his home in Independence, Mo., and answering his own correspondence after he left office, that inspired Congress to provide staff and stationery expenses for former presidents.

Since that well-intended decision to help a man of modest means cope with the burdens of former high office, the legislated expense accounts for former presidents have ballooned.

Ironically, the growth of ex-presidents' expenses came at a time when any former president — even one who was forced out of office in disgrace — was guaranteed at least a comfortable income from books, lecture fees, directorships and other sinecures available precisely because he had once held the highest office in the land.

No one wants to see our ex-presidents face financial hardship — like Thomas Jefferson or U.S. Grant, for example — but former presidents have been soaking the taxpayers for staff and expenses used for political purposes and to generate income. A former president's staff allowance now starts at $150,000 a year and decreases to an eventual $96,000.

Oddly enough, it is the ex-president who has been out of office the longest — Richard Nixon — whose staff charges the taxpayers most in one area: travel expenses. Travel vouchers obtained by my associate Vicki Warren show that Nixon's staff ran up travel bills of more than $20,000 last year.

Gerald Ford's staff travel expenses were less than half that of Nixon's last year; Jimmy Carter's staff travel cost only $7,000.

Bob Barrett, who runs Ford's office, supports the idea of curbing ex-presidents' expenses. He said Ford scrupulously separates official, personal and political expenses. Barrett thinks it would be a good move to have former presidents give Congress a public accounting each year on how the taxpayers' money is being spent.

IRISH STEW: Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., is an erudite and combative public figure in the best tradition of Irish-American politicians. Now he has put his political career in jeopardy by refusing to march in that annual outpouring of Irish enthusiasm, the St. Patrick's Day parade.

Moynihan's decision to boycott the parade, because Grand Marshal Michael Flannery is an unapologetic supporter of the outlaw Irish Republican Army, has outraged many of the senator's constituents. To unrelenting Irish-Americans who want the British out of Northern Ireland at whatever cost, Moynihan is now right up there with Oliver Cromwell in the pantheon of deep-dyed villains, traitors and spalpeens.

Yet Moynihan, as vice chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, has inside information on the IRA and its links to some of the worst international terrorists: Libyan dictator Muammar Qaddafi, the Italian Red Brigades, West Germany's Baader-Meinhof gang and extremist elements of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Unpublished studies done for the senator document the IRA's ties to terrorists. One such study notes, for example, that "the IRA has received increased financing and arms, including M-16 rifles, through their associations with other guerrilla groups" such as the Red Brigades, Baader-Meinhof and the PLO. The IRA has also received arms from Czechoslovakia.

PERMANENT RERUN: New episodes of "M-A-S-H" can no longer be seen, but incurable addicts of the long-running TV series will be able to get their "M-A-S-H" fix at the Smithsonian Institution when they visit Washington. Artifacts from the Hollywood set will be given to three different divisions of the National Museum of American History: Medical Science, Military History and Community Life.

Negotiations with 20th Century-Fox have been going on for weeks. My sources say Medical Science will get the operating-room props, which are authentic Korean War vintage; Military History will get the tents — and Community Life, presumably, will get "The Swamp," including Hawkeye's still.

GEORGE F. WILL

Segregation's web tangles more

WASHINGTON — Such is the tangled web we have woven in race policy, the Supreme Court is now being urged, in the name of civil rights, to uphold a lower court decree establishing a new form of segregation. Unless the Court overturns the decree concerning Boston's police department, judges may establish job entitlements for government-approved minorities, and may disregard state laws when fine-tuning those entitlements.

George F. Will

In 1970 blacks and Hispanics comprised 16.3 percent of Boston's population, but only 2.3 percent of police officers. After several years of litigation a court ordered Boston to give priority to hiring blacks and Hispanics until their percentage in the department approximated their percentage in the population. There was no judicial finding of purposeful discrimination, only a finding that minorities were denied "equal protection" of the law because they were adversely affected by hiring criteria that were not sufficiently job-related.

Since the court-ordered reverse discrimination in hiring began in 1973, 46 percent of the persons hired by the police department have been minorities. By July 1981, they comprised 11.7 percent of the force. But by then they comprised 30 percent of Boston's population. Then another complication emerged: Voters passed a tax-reduction initiative, which resulted in the need to reduce the police force. Massachusetts law establishes a seniority system, requiring police officers to be laid off on a last-hired, first-fired basis. That would have reduced the minority component of the force to 6.2 percent. So a court declared the state law inoperative and imposed segregated seniority lists.

On the basis of those lists, layoffs were to be conducted so as to keep the July 1981 level (11.7 percent) of minorities. Some white officers with 11 years service were fired while minority officers with only two years service — who had not suffered discrimination — were retained.

The Anti-Defamation League, a Jewish organization long identified with civil-rights causes, has filed a brief urging the Supreme Court to overturn the lower court's action because (among other reasons) that court exceeded its remedial powers when it tried to "correct" a social development unrelated to discrimination.

The brief notes that in a 1971 school case the Court held that there is "no substantive constitutional right (to a) particular degree of racial balance or mixing" after a constitutional violation has been remedied. In a 1976 school case the Court held that a federal court has no power to mandate a correction of a racial "imbalance" that occurred in a school as a result of population changes subsequent to desegregation measures and unrelated to discrimination. Yet in the current case, the lower court's decree implies a judicial power to create for government-approved minorities a perpetual right to a proportionate share of certain jobs. Furthermore, it implies a virtually uncircumscribed judicial power to command this result, regardless of the reasons why the result requires a command.

The League's brief notes that in 1977 the Court limited "retroactive seniority" to identifiable victims of discrimination. The brief argues that the lower court's creation of a racially segregated seniority system in Boston is an abuse of the judiciary's equity power.

The Weber case (1979) concerned a privately negotiated agreement that prevented white employees from applying for half the openings in a company's advancement training program. In upholding the agreement the Court stressed that the plan did not require the discharge of white workers, and that the injury to white employee's expectations was counterbalanced by injury done to blacks by intentional discrimination.

A 1980 case concerned the power of Congress to foreclose white contractors from bidding on 10 percent of some new federal contracts. In upholding Congress's action the Court stressed the marginal nature of the unfairness and the fact that the measure was temporary. In Boston the lower court's various remedial efforts have been under way for nearly a decade and the logic of the decree at issue is that the court's supervision of the police department's personnel policies can be perpetual.

Neil Solomon

Dear Mrs. R.: In a sense, depression is a family affair. Someone who loves and cares for you and everyone who depends on you is affected. Some depressed people, aware of the effects on their families, carry around an extra burden of guilt. They feel responsible for hurting those people who love them. You should know that families do survive the illness of one of their members, an things do get back to normal.

Different families react differently. Some become very concerned and keep wanting to help. The fact that they can't make you feel better becomes frustrating. They may keep making suggestions and pressing you to do things that you really don't feel up to. This may make you angry at times, and make you feel that they don't understand you at all. In other cases, the family appears very indifferent. Everybody goes about his or her own business and appears to have little sympathy for your suffering. Frequently, this is a result of their feelings of frustration at not being able to help. Husbands or wives often find it hard to understand their mates' loss of sexual desire. They may take it personally and feel responsible for not being desireable enough. This sometimes leads to bitter confrontations and sometimes to cold indifference.

It's all really a matter of not understanding the illness. Children may be terribly confused about why their parent doesn't feel like doing things anymore, perhaps spends a lot of time in bed, possibly seems to ignore them. They may become rather sullen and quiet or overly noisy and abrasive. Now since you have started taking medicine to fight the depression, you can tell your family that in about three weeks you're going to start feeling much better. This will be a great relief to them, and you may be surprised to discover how much it really does mean to them.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You recently had an item in your column about what would happen if a woman became pregnant even though she was using an intrauterine device. But what would happen if a woman became pregnant while using a contraceptive foam? Couldn't something like this do some damage to the baby? — Cindy, Columbia, South Carolina.

Dear Cindy: The results of a study by researchers at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development suggest that the use of spermicides is not associated with congenital malformations in the infant should the woman become pregnant.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I read with a great deal of interest your item on the interaction between drugs and food. Can you tell me some of the foods that contain tyramine? I believe you said it may have some effect on people taking medication for emotional problems. — Arthur, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

Dear Arthur: Some tyramine-containing foods include cheese, pickled herring, salted and dried fish, liver, meat extracts, red wines, beer, avocados and bananas. However, you should be aware that there are individual differences in the susceptibility of patients to tyramine-containing foods.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is in her seventies, is overweight, and has diabetes. She has been overweight as long as I can remember, and that's a very long time. She has a new doctor who has told her to lose weight, but I don't see how she can. Is this so important for a woman my mother's age? — Rhoda, Lexington, Ky.

Dear Rhoda: Dr. Harold Rifkin, of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York, says that achieving an ideal weight is a realistic goal for elderly people with diabetes. This does not mean a precipitous weight loss; even the loss of a pound a week will add up over a period of time.

Your mother should know that weight loss is a realistic goal and that it is closely associated with control of the diabetes. She should be encouraged to follow her physician's suggestions for achieving it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a friend who calls herself a chocoholic. She says she lives on chocolate cake and milkshakes, and to tell the truth, that's all I see her eat when we're out together. But she keeps her weight down by hardly eating anything else, and she also smokes a lot which may keep her weight down. The point I'm making is that I weigh more than she does, but I have a balanced diet. So how can you compare what two people weigh and say that one is overweight and the other isn't? — Janet, Dayton, Ohio

Dear Janet: A person's overall weight is only one indication of obesity, and not always a reliable one. I commented some time ago that many professional football players weigh close to 300 pounds, yet they would not be considered obese because much of the weight is muscle, not fat.

Obesity in an individual is better determined by the amount of body fat. As you describe yourself and your friend, I would have to assume that a larger proportion of her weight is made up of fat than is yours. This is something I am very careful to determine with my own patients.

Byrne write-in campaign receives mixed reviews

CHICAGO (AP) — Mayor Jane Byrne's decision to defy her own party and mount a write-in campaign for re-election drew cheers from dozens of City Hall supporters, but angered Democratic officials.

Jane Byrne

"It's been said, 'It isn't over till it's over,'" Mrs. Byrne said Wednesday at a city hall news conference where she announced her write-in candidacy. "Well, I'm here to tell you that it isn't over yet."

Mrs. Byrne, who lost the Democratic nomination in the Feb. 22 primary election to U.S. Rep. Harold Washington, said three weeks ago that she would support him against Republican Bernard Epton.

"She still does not realize that she's finished," said Washington, who hopes to become the city's first black mayor. "She would still rather destroy Chicago and the Democratic Party...than abide by the will of the people as expressed on primary day."

Asked how he believed members of the community would respond, the two-term congressman said: "You have to be thunderstruck...I think there's a shock all over this city."

Epton said Byrne's announcement "certainly doesn't help me. I'm not thrilled."

Saying her experience makes her the best candidate, Mrs. Byrne charged that neither Epton nor Washington had offered any effective new programs for the city. "I've seen nothing but divisiveness," she said.

Some powerful city Democrats have been reluctant to support Washington, and a few have openly endorsed Epton.

Mrs. Byrne's announcement drew protest from Democrats around the city, the state and the nation, along with pledges of support for Washington.

Democratic National Committee Chairman Charles Manatt said Washington's "well-deserved victory in the Democratic primary should not and cannot be denied by this mischievous and hopeless write-in effort."

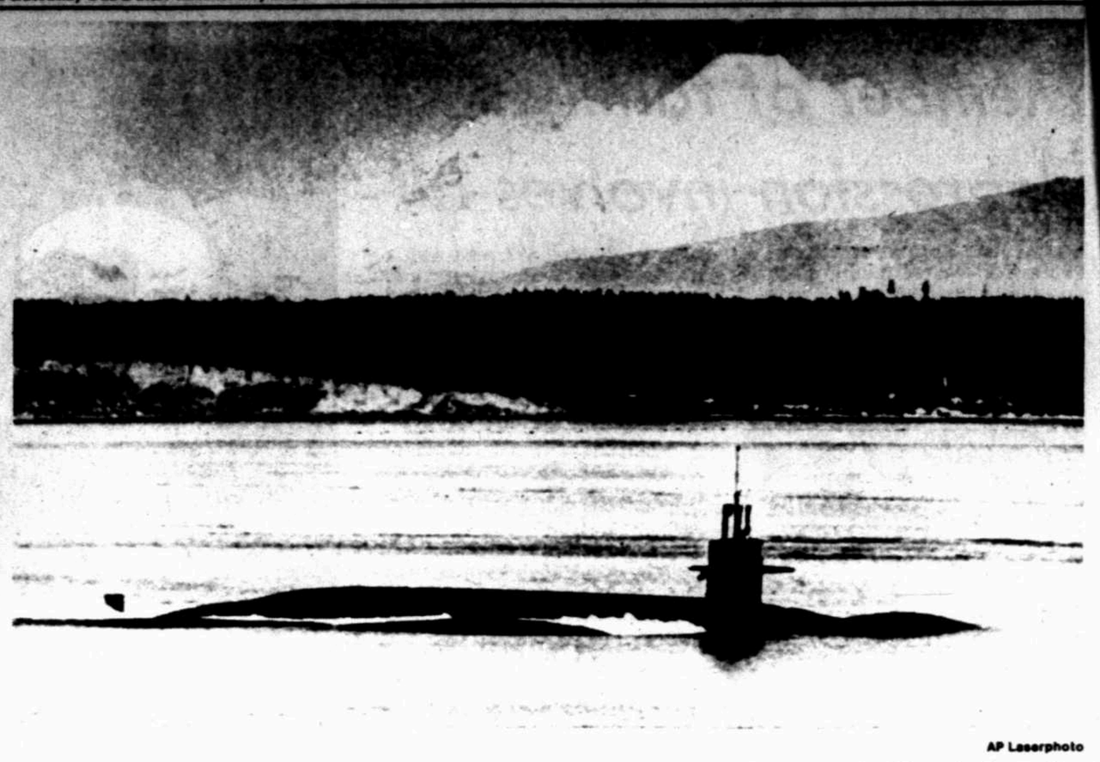

H. Washington

Washington said Mrs. Byrne's move was "clearly an act of political desperation" and one more sign of the "instability that has marked that administration."

He said he hoped Mrs. Byrne "will reconsider what she's done and bow out gracefully."

Cook County State's Attorney Richard M. Daley, who finished third behind Mrs. Byrne and Washington in the Democratic primary, said "the obvious strategy behind a write-in campaign is an appeal to racial divisiveness."

She characterized the new three-way race as a "runoff," noting that many major cities require primary victors to win more than 50 percent of the vote. Washington won 36.5 percent, or 424,146 of the primary votes. Mrs. Byrne placed second with 33.4 percent.

Navy jet gets wet in San Diego Bay

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A 10-ton Navy jet being carried over San Diego Bay fell from underneath a helicopter and plunged 300 feet into the main channel near a submarine base at Ballast Point, authorities said.

No one was injured when the jet broke free from a sling and fell at about 1 p.m. Wednesday, said Navy spokesman Ken Mitchell.

The accident occurred within 200 yards of the Navy's largest submarine support facility in the Pacific.

Navy divers using a mobile crane later recovered the jet, placed it on a barge and returned it to North Island Naval Station, Mitchell said.

Tip tax foes want repeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Critics of a new law designed to catch waiters who don't pay taxes on their tips are taking a tip from the banking industry.

The bankers and their customers generated millions of letters to Congress demanding repeal of a law requiring that 10 percent of interest and dividends be withheld for tax purposes. Despite stiff opposition from President Reagan and leaders of Congress, the bankers have a good chance of winning.

Paul Gann, an author of the Proposition 13 tax-cutting initiative in California, and several members of the House announced a drive Wednesday to get seven million Americans to sign petitions calling for repeal of the new tips provision.

The new law "is repressive on the wrong people — the hardest-working and lowest-paid people in the United States," Gann told a news conference. He said some restaurant operators and many waiters had asked him to lead the campaign.

"It imposes an onerous tax burden on little people," said Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill.

Rep. Jerry Lewis, R-Calif., chief sponsor of the repeal bill, added that the crackdown on tips will hurt "people who are working to support their families when they could choose to go on the social welfare rolls."

Long-shot Frogs down Tulsa; UTEP loses

AP Laserphoto

Texas Christian University foward Doug Arnold (33) goes up for a rebound against Tulsa's Herbert Johnson during first half action of their NIT matchup in Tulsa, Wednesday night.

Texas' schools split in NIT openers

By The Associated Press

Texas Christian basketball coach Jim Killingsworth said it wasn't exactly the way he planned it, but he won't complain about Doug Arnold's game-winning jump shot from deep in the corner.

Arnold fired in an 18-foot line drive with five seconds left to give the Horned Frogs a 64-62 win over Tulsa in the first round of the National Invitation Tournament Wednesday night.

"The shot at the end of the game that I really wanted was a dunk," Killingsworth said.

Arnold, a 6-foot-9 senior forward, finished with 20 points and 17 of his team's 34 rebounds to lead the 22-10 Frogs into the second round of the tourney against an opponent yet to be named.

"That isn't a bad day's work," Killingsworth noted.

Arnold collected 14 points and 13 rebounds as the Frogs took a 31-27 halftime lead, leaving much of the second-half heroics to teammate Darrell Browder.

Browder had all 12 of his team's points in a four-minute stretch shortly after Tulsa took its first lead of the game at 42-41 with 12:19 left.

The lead changed hands six times and was tied eight times after that.

Browder hit six of eight field goal attempts after intermission to help Texas Christian connect on 64 percent of its second half shots.

The 6-foot-1 senior guard tallied 18 points.

"That percentage is really unbelievable," said Tulsa coach Nolan Richardson, whose Hurricane ends the year at 19-12. "Browder is the one that beat us.

"I thought we played well. We played excellent defense. Breaks is the name of the game and they just got a big one in the end with Arnold's jumper," Richardson said. "I am pleased with everything except that we lost."

Tulsa managed a desperation shot that was off target as the buzzer sounded.

Nick Cucinella and Dennis Nutt had 10 points apiece for the "killer" Frogs.

After being an embarrassed first-round loser in the last three NCAA basketball tournaments when DePaul was ranked among the nation's elite, Blue Demon coach Ray Meyer finally avoided the opening-round jinx. Freshman Tony Jackson scored 20 points and keyed a second-half surge that carried the Blue Demons to a 76-73 victory over Minnesota.

So it wasn't the coveted NCAAs. At least Meyer gets into the second round.

"Tomorrow morning, I don't have to read in the paper that we lost in the first round," the veteran coach said after the game.

At Baton Rouge, La., reserve Acie Sanders scored eight points in overtime, including two insurance free throws with 11 seconds remaining, as New Orleans shocked LSU. UNO, 23-6, never led until Sanders' tip-in gave the Privateers an 86-84 lead after 20 seconds of overtime.

Sanders made a three-point play with 1:09 left in the extra period, then added his two free throws for a 97-94 lead with 11 seconds remaining. Oscar Taylor, who led the Privateers with 22 points, added two free throws with nine seconds left.

Smith said he put Sanders into the game mostly because he plays good defense.

"He's a kid who plays his role. He was a starter for us the first two years, but now comes off the bench and does what we ask him to do. Tonight, that was scoring at a crucial time," Smith said.

Smith also made a crucial decision concerning Claude Butler, who was yanked from the game late in the first half with no points and six turnovers. LSU was leading 51-38 at the intermission and, said Smith: "My assistants didn't want him to start the second half. I disagreed and said, 'If he doesn't do well, we'll take him out'. Thank goodness we went with him."

Butler scored 13 of his 15 points in first 10 minutes of the second half as UNO tied the game at 63-all.

At Corvallis, Ore., Charlie Sitton scored 19 of his 21 points in the second half as Oregon State roared from behind to down Idaho 77-59.Steve Woodside and Danny Evans added 18 points apiece for the Beavers, who trailed 35-32 at halftime.

At Fresno, Calif., Desi Barmore had a perfect night with 5-for-5 from the field and 10-for-10 from the free throw line to lead Fresno State over Texas-El Paso.The 6-7 Barmore scored 10 of his season-high 20 points in the final five minutes as he paced a 16-4 burst after the game was tied 54-54.

At Columbia, S.C., Jimmy Foster scored a career-high 31 points and Kenny Holmes added 24 to lead South Carolina to a 100-90 victory over Old Dominion.Holmes scored 12 points in a second-half surge that helped the Gamecocks open a 67-49 lead.

At New Rochelle, N.Y., Steve Burtt scored 24 of his 33 points in the second half, breaking the single-season Iona College scoring record and rallying the Gaels over St. Bonaventure. Iona overcame a 42-38 halftime deficit as Burtt, a 6-3 junior guard, brought his season total to 696 points, surpassing Jeff Ruland's 685 in 1979-80.

Alston, baseball's nice guy, makes Hall of Fame

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The soda fountains of south Florida are going to take an awful kicking around now. There won't be a plate of fudge uneaten from Indian River to Okeechobee County. They'll be celebrating in Darrtown, Ohio, all hours of the night. Probably, clear up to 9 o'clock.

Walter Emmons Alston made the Hall of Fame! How nice! A little "Turkey in the Straw," Professor! It's a great victory for apple pie, ice cream soda, biscuits and honey and whole milk. Harvest moons, pinchback suits, church socials and calico dresses and surreys with a fringe on top. Mid-America, State Fair country. Darrtown, the place where time forgot, where the trains only stopped when they hit a cow, where they didn't have a bank but they had a hollow tree, where they didn't have an airport but they had a birdbath, where the 11 o'clock news is the barber.

THEY DON'T have a golf course but you can sign up for the horseshoe pit. Main Street is the plowed field that doesn't have any corn on it and the peak traffic hours are milking time. Herb Shriner's kind of town.

I think of all this every time I think of Walter Alston, American Homespun, Baseball's Grant Wood type. Walt Alston came from a long line of people who made America great, who won our wars, grew our crops, cut our wilderness, built our cities, hewed our character. Jacques Barzun said that whoever wished to know America must first know baseball. It's altogether fitting Walt Alston and baseball should be intertwined. It's a marriage made in Valley Forge or the Declaration of Independence. They're as made for each other as cider and doughnuts. As American as pumpkin pie with whipped cream.

Walter Alston was one of the most unafraid men I have ever known. Almost everyone has the smell of fear, the hint of panic, the look of swallowed hysteria at some time or another. Alston's throat was always flat. He was a man you'd most like to be next to in a lifeboat. Or a foxhole. Alston made mistakes but they were never motivated by fear of failure. Alston never cut his losses. Or alibied his defeats. Walter Alston was so honest, it was embarrassing. No one ever caught him doing anything demeaning.

He could never understand the artificial life. One of the vivid memories early on I have of Walter Alston is sitting in the team bus while two savants sat and discussed their evening out the night before in some Manhattan watering place. Alston appeared puzzled. "What is it you do exactly in a night club?" he wanted to know. When it turned out all they did was sit and drink, Alston was horrified. The thought of grown men sitting in an upholstered cellar and burning up $20 dollar and idle chatter when they could be home playing snooker or drinking milk and playing cards was incomprehensible to him.

I ALWAYS thought his quiet confidence had as much to do with the Dodgers' success as Maury Wills' steals, Sandy Koufax' strikeouts, Don Drysdale's shutouts. Walt Alston never did anything for show. If he fought with umpires it was not for the cameras, it was for his players. The balk rule made him see red. He had the fastest team in the big leagues and when one of them got thrown out, he took it as proof positive there was cheating afoot.

The team never got rattled because he never did. He treated victory and defeat with the same easy grace and country manners. When his team blew the 1962 pennant in a playoff, the players sat in a locked dressing room passing a bottle of remorse around and cursing. Alston went on camera and over to the victors' locker room bearing congratulations. He never got angry when he lost, only surprised.

He always seemed oddly like a preacher running a wild animal act. Walt Alston used every four-letter word any ballplayer ever used but you noticed a peculiar thing: he almost always used them only in uniform or within earshot of home plate.

You never discussed Great Books with Walt Alston. You discussed the balk, the infield fly rule, the joys of possum hunting and the sophisticated charms of beautiful downtown cosmopolitan Darrtown after dark. Walt Alston would rather play pool with his father or hearts with his grandson than post-office with Elizabeth Taylor. The glitter of Hollywod eluded him. It's doubtful if Walt Alston spent an hour total on the Sunset Strip in his two decades in L.A. The manager of the Dodgers is a social catch in some circles. Walt Alston's nightlife centered around the hotel coffee shop where he could usually be found loading up on coffee and a Danish and chewing two toothpicks.

HE WAS a good manager because he was a good man, a walking advertisement for the Good Book, an Old Testament model. Players black and white knew him for a man of probity and character. Fairness was taken for granted in Walt Alston. He figured anyone who made it to the big leagues was a big leaguer. It was not necessarily so, but players played better for Walt Alston.

He belongs in the Hall of Fame if anyone does. So, if you'll lift your glass, here's a toast to Walter Emmons Alston (in chocolate milk and a Girl Scout cookie): here's to a man who made his profession's Hall of Fame not because he could hit or throw a curveball better than anyone else, but because he excelled in the far more difficult area of human endeavor: he was a Man with a capital M and he made all those around him the better for it.

Chicago telecast Midland reruns

If you were watching Chicago-based WGN Sunday afternoon, it was almost like watching a rerun of a game at Cubs Stadium last summer.

The Chicago Cubs were playing the American League champion Milwaukee Brewers at Mesa's HoHo-Kams ball park, but the cast read more like the "Midland Cubs."

MEL HALL roved in center field while Bill Hayes was behind the plate, coming up with a major league catch of a foul pop up against the screen behind the plate to bale lefthander Craig Lefferts, another ex-Midland Cub, out of a squeamish situation.

But that was just the beginning. Fritz Connally was at third and the broadcast crew had some extremely complimentary things to say about Dave Owens at short and Carmello Martinez at first base. Another Andre Thornton is the way they termed Carmello. Joe Carter played, although it was confessed he might be a year away from the majors.

Mike Diaz, who caught here last year, didn't get in, but he has seen a lot of late inning action in exhibitions.

Lefferts is in an enviable position. It's all up to him. He's a lefthander and Chicago is so desperate for a lefthanded starter that they traded away Randy Martz, their winningest pitcher of a year ago and another former Midland Cub, for Steve Trout of the White Sox. Lefferts had a good first outing, but was shakey Sunday, but one thing is assured, he'll get a full look.

JUST THREE years ago, Lefferts pitched in the championship game as the University of Arizona won the College World Series. Don Hyman, a 1982 M-Cub, was his catcher. Craig was a 13-game winner with Midland in 1981, but spent most of last season languishing on the trainer's table, tormented by arm trouble. He finally came out of it in mid-season and his finish was encouraging enough to offer Dallas Green, Lee Elia and company hope that "he just might surprise us this spring."

While Carter, college baseball's Player of the Year at Wichita State in 1981, is ajudged a year away, Hall, "still a baby", has a chance to make it. His fielding skills have always been major league. His ability to reach the curve ball is really the only question. In fact, that's the area Carter, recruited by the University of Oklahoma as a football prospect, must master in Des Moines this summer to make the big jump.

Owens, after two tentative seasons with Midland, came into his own last year as both a hitter and fielder and apparently his work in Arizona this spring has resulted in rave notices. When Dave originally came out of UT-Arlington, they described him as the "next Don Kessinger." He seems about to live up to that promise. At worst, Owen should spend a season ripening in Des Moines. He would be better off there than sitting in the dugout, watching Larry Bowa play.

This is the weekend the Midland Cub Booster group is in Mesa for their annual Cactus League fling...Manager Tom Harmon is working out his early issue of Midland Cubs and exhibition play begins over the weekend...

NCAA's 'no gimmick' tourney gets under way

By The Associated Press

Turn off the shot clocks and erase the three-point line. The March Madness which the NCAA Basketball Tournament has become doesn't need gimmicks.

When the first round gets under way tonight, 36 of the 48 teams will have to adapt to new rules — no shot clock, no three-point basket — which actually are old rules. And until their teams take the court, coaches will have to wonder whether their charges can make the transition without undue confusion.

"We were working on a couple of things today in connection with the shot clock," said Boston College Coach Gary Williams, whose 11th-ranked Eagles are seeded fourth in the West Regional. They play Sunday in Corvallis, Ore., against the winner of Friday night's clash between 19th-ranked Oklahoma State and Ivy League champion Princeton, which ousted North Carolina A&T 53-41 in one of four preliminary-round games.

"One was getting across the idea that a team could get a lead and then hold the ball on you," Williams said. "It's something we didn't worry about during the year when we had a shot clock (in the Big East Conference). It's something new that you have to consider. We have a couple of days to work on it."

The East Regional gets under way tonight in Greensboro, N.C., where LaSalle, a 70-58 winner over Boston University in the preliminary round, meets Virginia Commonwealth and James Madison faces West Virginia. Friday night in Hartford, Conn., Rutgers tackles Southwestern Louisiana and Morehead State plays Syracuse.

In the Mideast tonight, Purdue faces Robert Morris — the Colonials won their preliminary-round game from Georgia Southern 64-54 — and Illinois State goes against Ohio University at Tampa. Friday night, the scene shifts to Evansville, Ind., where Marquette tangles with Tennessee and Alabama-Birmingham meets Oklahoma.

The Midwest opens tonight at Houston where 15th-ranked Tennessee-Chattanooga faces Maryland and Alabama plays Lamar. Friday night, the action is in Louisville where 20th-ranked Georgetown plays Alcorn State, an 81-75 preliminary-round winner over Xavier of Ohio, and Iowa meets Utah State.

In the West, tonight's doubleheader at Boise, Idaho, sends Washington State against Weber State and Illinois against Utah. Friday night in Corvallis, it's 16th-ranked North Carolina State vs. Pepperdine in addition to Oklahoma State-Princeton.

Weisman trades in jeans for tie

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Mike Weisman

When Mike Weisman learned three weeks ago that he would be NBC Sports' new executive producer, it triggered a major change in his life.

"I had to go buy a tie," he said.

Weisman is a jeans-and-shirtsleeves kind of guy, not the typical three-piece suit type you expect to find in a network's executive suite. That's because three-piece suits aren't terribly comfortable when you're climbing around the cramped quarters of a television production truck.

It was in that nuts and bolts setting that Weisman developed into one of his craft's brightest producing talents. He demonstrated early on a grasp for the special qualities that television brings to sports coverage.

"You know producing is more than just cueing commercials and knowing when to go to replays," he said. "Some people think that's all there is to it. But if you stop there, you don't have much of a show."

Weisman, working under Don Ohlmeyer, used innovative, eye-catching techniques that added a special touch to NBC's telecasts. So, we had football coaches wearing microphones on the sidelines and baseball players reading the lineups before the start of a game.

Weisman's Orange Bowl telecasts always included new wrinkles. Last New Year's night, he came up with not only the routine replays, but preplays that predicted the action before it took place.

"It was an attempt to do something a little different," said Weisman. "Sometimes it worked. Sometimes it didn't. Sometimes, we were isolated on a guy who wasn't involved in the play. But even then, you could show a receiver running his routes, thowing a fake. And that's still part of the play. That added something for the viewers. At least it showed we were trying."

Sometimes, the event needs very little embellishment. There was, for example, Weisman's first World Series assignment in 1977, when the New York Yankees beat the Los Angeles Dodgers. In the second game of that Series, Dodgers' pitcher Bob Welch struck out Yankees' slugger Reggie Jackson to end the contest with the tying and lead runs on base.

"That was great theater, great drama," said Weisman. "You didn't need to do much more than show it to the people. And later in the Series, when they faced each other again, Reggie hit one out. That was terrific television."

Weisman now oversees all of NBC's sports coverage, from boxing to basketball, football to tennis. But he gets a little glint in his eye when he talks about baseball. His network is clearly committed to the sport, adding Vince Scully to its primary broadcast team and signing a $500 million-plus deal to cover its share of baseball for the next six years.

"The Super Bowl is great, but the World Series, that's the best for me," he said. "It's a continuing story that can go on for seven games."

And Weisman loves a good story. That's why he is intrigued by Larry Holmes' March 27 heavyweight title defense against Lucien Rodriguez at Scranton, Pa. It's a return to his roots for Holmes, who made his professional debut in Scranton, far away from the glitter of Las Vegas. NBC is doing the fight and Weisman sees it as a chance to show another side of the champion.

For baseball, Weisman would like to see matter-of-fact announcements like the Veteran's Committee vote on the Hall of Fame fancied up with a television announcement, much the way CBS covered the NCAA basketball tournament draw.

"It's a big thing. Why shouldn't it get big treatment?" he reasoned.

And don't be surprised if when it is done, the guy in the truck turns out to be the boss. Weisman always preferred jeans, anyway.

NBA talks continue as strike deadline nears

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Basketball Association and its players union met for five hours Wednesday as talks continued in an effort to reach agreement on a new contract before a strike deadline of April 2.

Neither side had any comment on the talks, which were held in an undisclosed location. They agreed to resume negotiations next Monday.

"After the next meeting, we should be able to better describe what's happening," said Charles Grantham, executive vice president of the NBA players Association.

The players have said they will strike April 2 if no collective bargaining agreement is reached. Wednesday's negoations were the first since last Tuesday, after which NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien met with the league's Board of Governors.

O'Brien said after that meeting that the board had reconfirmed its policy of insisting on a contract that will address the league's financial problems. The league has said two-thirds of the league's 23 teams have financial problems and five could fold in the event of a strike; Larry Fleisher, executive director of the players association, acknowledges that 10 teams have financial difficulties.

Longhorns back on top

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The pitching-powerful Texas Longhorns have moved back atop the latest rankings of the newspaper Collegiate Baseball.

Texas, ranked No. 1 in the first regular-season poll a month ago, climbed back from sixth place in winning 13 of its last 14 games to replace Arizona State, which fell all the way to 15th.

Wichita State stayed in second, while the University of Miami, the preseason top pick, jumped from seventh to third.

The Hurricanes bumped Hawaii, which fell to ninth.

Houston, with a still-perfect 18-0 record, soared from 18th to fourth as Oklahoma State dropped to 19th, and Stanford took over fifth place from California State-Fullerton, which plummeted to 12th. The Cardinals were ranked 13th previously.

Others in the Top 20 are Michigan, UCLA, North Carolina, San Diego State, Texas A&M and Pepperdine.

Wright rallies Rangers; Cubs lose

By The Associated Press

Exhibition Baseball

Ben Oglivie, who already has dealt plenty of misery to American League pitchers as part of the stable of Milwaukee sluggers, is threatening to torment the opposition even more.

"Benji's always in shape. He's one of those guys you never worry about," says Milwaukee Manager Harvey Kuenn. "But he looks stronger this year. He did some work with weights during the winter and I think it helped him. When you look at him, you don't realize how strong he is because he's not really a big guy. But he's really powerful in the shoulders."

Oglivie, who is 6-foot-2 and weighs 170 pounds, drove in 102 runs and hit 34 homers in 1982. On Wednesday, he singled to drive in one of three Milwaukee runs in the first inning and added a two-run homer in the fifth, giving him four homers and 10 runs batted in as the Brewers improved their spring record to 8-1 with a 9-7 victory over the California Angels.

The Brewers, who have won six straight games, had 16 hits to 17 for California, which got a two-run homer from Fred Lynn and four hits from Daryl Sconiers.

Elsewhere in major league exhibitions, George Wright's three-run homer with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning capped a five-run rally that carried the Texas Rangers to a 10-7 victory over the Houston Astros. Wright's home run came after Larry Parrish tied the game with an RBI single.

Ninth-inning lightning also struck for Pittsburgh as Dick Davis, Dale Berra and Jose Ortiz belted homers to lead the Pirates past the Atlanta Braves 4-2.

Tom Veryzer, Darryl Strawberry and Brian Giles homered for the New York Mets in an 11-6 victory over Boston, offsetting homers by Dwight Evans, Gene Gentile and Tony Armas for the Red Sox. The Mets had seven runs in the last two innings.

Rick Leach tripled in two runs as the Detroit Tigers scored five times — all after two outs — in the first inning against Los Angeles starter Bob Welch to whip the Dodgers 7-2. John Wockenfuss homered for Detroit and Candy Maldonado clubbed a two-run homer for the Dodgers.

Minnesota got a pair of doubles from both Gary Gaetti and Randy Bush and scored eight runs for the fifth consecutive game to beat the Philadelphia Phillies 8-5. The Twins had 17 hits, including a homer by Tom Brunansky, while Tony Perez and Bill Robinson homered for the Phillies.

Richie Zisk drove in five runs with a double and two singles as the Seattle Mariners trounced the Cleveland Indians 10-5.

San Diego pitcher Dave Dravecky drilled a three-run homer, starting the Padres on their way to a 9-4 rout of the Chicago Cubs. Dravecky, who added a single in a four-run fourth, homered off Chicago starter Paul Moskau.

doubled in a pair of first-inning runs as the Baltimore Orioles downed Montreal 3-1 in a game called after eight innings because of rain. Expos pitcher Steve Rogers retired the last 13 batters he faced after giving up the two runs.

The St. Louis Cardinals raked Cincinnati starter Mario Soto for six hits and four runs in the first inning, and then scored twice in the seventh to top the Reds 9-7. Keith Hernandez had a double and two singles to pace the Cardinals' 13-hit attack.

In a "B" game between the two teams, Joaquin Andujar pitched five shutout innings as the Cardinals blanked the Reds 1-0. George Hendrick sacrificed home the game's only run.

Jesse Barfield doubled in a third-inning run and scored on Willie Upshaw's sacrifice fly, pacing the Toronto Blue Jays to a 3-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox. Toronto nicked Chicago starter Floyd Bannister for all three runs.

A night game between the Kansas City Royals and New York Yankees was rained out.

Senate committee hears CFL player

WASHINGTON (AP) — Willie Young, a 27-year-old former Army sergeant with five children, decided he could better support his family as a professional football player than as a student at the University of Illinois.

Unfortunately, the 6-foot-7, 280-pounder soon learned he couldn't do it in the United States.

Young signed a contract with the Chicago Blitz of the United States Football League but, according to his attorney, Robert I. Auler, the pact was nullified by the league because his class had not graduated, a rule also in effect in the National Football League. So, he went to Canada and now plays for the Winnepeg Blue Bombers.

"We do not quarrel with the principle of protecting the colleges from raiding pros," said Auler in testimony prepared for the Senate Judiciary Committee. "In fact you should make it an offense for professional agents to contact normal undergraduates and encourage them prematurely to forfeit their future amateurism by hiring those agents and thus turning pro."

However, he suggested that the protection given to the colleges should be ended at some fixed age, such as 23 or 24, so an older student such as his client could elect to become a professional.

Unlike Young, Herschel Walker, the Heisman Trophy winner, left Georgia with another year to play. He signed a three-year, multi-million dollar contract with the New Jersey Generals of the USFL which said it made the exception for the Bulldogs' star under threat of a lawsuit.

As a result of the action, Joe Paterno of national champion Penn State and Bo Schembechler of Michigan, representing the nation's college coaches organization; President John Toner of the National Collegiate Athletic Association and representatives of the National Football League and National Basketball Association players associations will be among witnesses today to testify on legislation aimed at correcting the problem.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., introduced a bill to grant an antitrust exemption allowing pro leagues to adopt rules against the signing of underclassmen without the threat of being sued by the player such as Spencer Haywood successfully did against the NBA in 1971.

Specter said longstanding professional football rules governing recruiting, which he said were shattered in the Walker case, could be restored by the legislation.

Without it, he said, other college football stars will be targeted for such recruitment and many would forsake their pursuit of an education for the lure of immediate big money.

"Certainly, there is a substantial interest in a policy to encourage student-athletes to finish college," said Specter when he introduced his bill last month. "There are many examples of collegiate athletes, lured by the big bucks of professional athletics to leave school, who later sustain injuries and spend the rest of their lives regretting their decision to enter professional athletics early.

"Congress should give careful consideration to this bill to preserve the current arrangements regarding recruitment of college football players which has worked reasonably well over the many years," said Specter. "The absence of any successful legal challenge to the existing rule is significant evidence of its value."

Eight 'Dogs' compete in state swim meet

Eight Midland High Bulldogs will be in Austin this weekend for the State High School Swim Meet at The University of Texas at Austin Swim Center.

The Tall City's best shot at a state titlist may well be Andrew Jordan. Jordan, a sophomore, will be competing in the 100 backstroke, 50 freestyle and will be a member of the 200 medley relay team.

"Jordan's times are good for both the 50 free and 200 back," Midland High swim coach Jesse Marsh said. "I think he has a good chance to make the finals along with Mike Seay and Suzi Simpson."

Simpson will be competing in the 200 free and 100 butterfly and will also be on the 400 free relay team.

Seay, who will join Jordan on the boys relay team, will be swimming the 100 fly. Also on the relay squad are Pat Rhamey and Steve Davis.

The girls relay team consists of Rachael Fink, Debbie Fleeger and Michelle Craig and Simpson.

All the swimmmers qualified for the state meet by finishing among the top two in regionals, except for Jordan. Jordan's finished third in the 50 free but his time was good enough to get him one of the wild card slots.

"I think the kids will go faster in Austin," Marsh said. "They'll have to."

One of the reasons Marsh anticipates faster times is the pool. "The swim center is fantastic," he said. "It's a very fast pool, maybe the fastest in the world."

Preliminaries will be held Friday at 5 p.m. with the finals beginning Saturday at 1 p.m.

Kotar fighting back against brain tumor

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Former New York Giants running back Doug Kotar, who suffers from an inoperable malignant brain tumor, slowly is battling back to health, according to his wife.

"He's doing better. He's happier now," Donna Kotar said after visiting her hospitalized husband Tuesday.

"He's gaining weight, his hair is growing, his beard is in, and his color is better," said Mrs. Kotar, 29, who spends at least five hours at the Pittsburgh hospital every day.

The couple's children, 10-year-old Doug Jr. and 7-year-old Christie, visit their father every weekend.

"He sees them for a couple hours, depending on how he is and how good they are. He likes that most," said Mrs. Kotar, who prefers that the hospital not be identified.

Kotar, 31, a University of Kentucky standout, joined the Pittsburgh Steelers as a free agent in 1974. He was traded to the Giants four days later and went on to become the team's fourth all-time leading rusher, with 3,380 yards.

Kotar retired from the Giants last July, however, because a separated shoulder he suffered the previous season hadn't healed. The next month, he sought medical treatment for headaches which began after he was kicked in the head in a swimming pool.

Physicians discovered the tumor, the size of a golf ball, and Kotar underwent eight hours of surgery at a New Jersey hospital in late August. Doctors decided against removing the cancerous tumor from the center of his brain, however, fearing it could endanger his life. His left side was left partially paralyzed.

Kotar was transferred to Pittsburgh in mid-October to be closer to his Canonsburg home. His right lung collapsed soon afterward, forcing a tracheotomy to be performed, and a water sac in his head was drained.

Physicians moved Kotar from the hospital's intensive care unit into his own room late last year.

Gare ignores death threat, gets two goals

By The Associated Press

Danny Gare ignored a death threat and kept his team in the playoff race. Referee Wally Harris ignored the pleas of the Vancouver Canucks, and their playoff hopes were jolted.

Gare scored twice in the final 2:12, including the game-winner with 30 seconds remaining Wednesday night to lift the Detroit Red Wings to a 4-3 National Hockey League victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs.

"I don't want to dwell on it too much," Gare said of a telephone call from Las Vegas, Nev., to a Toronto television station. "The RCMP (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) told me there was a call and if I played there could be a problem.

Black Hawks 4, Blues 1

Chicago won its 43rd game, the most by a Black Hawks team since 1972-73, as Al Secord scored his 49th goal of the year to ignite a three-goal explosion in a two-minute span of the first period. Secord scored at 7:32 with a 10-footer past Rick Heinz in the St. Louis net. Just 1:19 later, Tim Higgins' 15-foot shot made it 2-0, and 41 seconds later, Tom Lysiak put in a 30-footer.

Sabres 5, Flames 3

Ric Seiling scored two goals and Dale McCourt set up three for Buffalo, while Lanny McDonald collected his 60th goal of the season for the Flames. McDonald is only the seventh NHL player ever to score 60 in one season.

NHL Roundup

North Stars 3, Penguins 2

Rookie Brian Bellows scored twice on power plays, winning the game at 13:57 of the final period when he deflected home a shot by Craig Hartsburg. Minnesota's Dino Ciccarelli was stopped by Pittsburgh goalie Denis Herron on a second-period penalty shot.

Capitals 5, Whalers 4

Milan Novy deflected in Rod Langway's shot 1:55 into the third period — just 66 seconds after Mark Johnson had tied it for the Whalers — to boost Washington into a second-place tie with the Islanders in the Patrick Division.

Oilers 4, Canucks 3

After Thomas Gradin's three goals gave the Canucks a 3-2 edge, Wayne Gretzky tied it, then Coffey scored his disputed goal and Gary Lupul's shot at the buzzer was disallowed.

Rangers 2, Islanders 1

In a fast-paced game featuring the kind of skating, hitting and goaltending usually reserved for the playoffs, the Rangers outdueled their local rivals as Reijo Ruotsalainen scored on a 15-foot wrist shot with 3:59 remaining.

Mary tabbed best amateur athlete

Mary Decker Tabb, 24, poses with the latest of her many honors, the Jesse Owens International Amatuer Athlete Award.

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Distance running star Mary Decker Tabb added to her huge cache of trophies Wednesday, winning the coveted Jesse Owens International Award, designating her as the world's premier amateur athlete.

The first woman so honored, she previously had captured the Sullivan Award, as the United States' top amateur athlete for 1982, and the Babe Didrikson Zaharias Trophy as The Associated Press' Female Athlete of the Year.

"This makes me extremely happy and proud because I feel I have done it for women everywhere," the 5-foot-6, 107-pound Tabb said, as she held aloft the huge trophy named for the great athlete who won four gold medals in the 1936 Olympic Games.

"With all these accomplishments, I won't be happy until I win an Olympic gold medal in Los Angeles in 1984," Tabb said.

Announcement of the award was made at a midtown hotel at noon followed by an evening dinner attended by William Simon, president of the U.S. Olympic Committee, track and field personalities and former Olympic athletes.

Herb Douglas, a bronze medalist in the long jump in the 1948 Games in London and originator of the Owens Award, officiated at the noon ceremony. Present were Owens' widow, Ruth; Dr. LeRoy Walker, 1976 U.S. Olympic track and field coach; diving gold medalist Pat McCormick, and Marty Glickman, sportscaster who was on the 1936 team with Owens.

Previous winners were Eric Heiden, speed skater in the 1980 Winter Games, and Sebastian Coe, Britain's distance running star.

"This award truly marks Mary as the best athlete in the world, man or woman," Walker said. "She is phenomenal."

Tabb scored 131 points in the worldwide balloting, edging British decathlon ace Daley Thompson, 118 points, and sprinter-long jumper Carl Lewis, 94 points.

Tabb, 24, who contends she has lost four years of her racing career with injuries, had an extraordinary series of accomplishments last year, setting numerous world records.

Indoors, she set the world best for the women's mile three times and marks for 2,000 and 3,000 meters. She already held world indoor best for 1,000 yards and 1,500 meters.

Outdoors, she set world records in the 5,000 and 10,000 meters, and American records for the mile and 3,000 meters.

Area gymnast qualify for state

Three members of the West Texas Gymnast team from the Midland School of Gymnastics have qualified for the United States Gymnastics Federation Texas State Championships.

Erin Allen, Jennifer Piette and JoAnna Riley qualified for the state meet in the Class-II semi-finals competition held in Dallas, March 11-13.

Piette scored 63.90 for fourth in the all-around and finished fourth in beam.

Allen was fourth in the all-around with a 63.

Riley took third in the floor exercise and scored 60 in the all-around.

The state competition will be held March 26-27.

Dickerson upsets top-seeded Lendl

MUNICH, West Germany — Top-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia suffered a crushing defeat by American Mark Dickson, who surprised him 6-1, 6-2 Wednesday night in the $300,000 World Championship Tennis tournament.

The 23-year-old Czech was hindered by a shockingly weak serve and committed several double-faults before 2,500 spectators in Munich's Rudi Sedlmayer Hall.

Unnerved as Dickson returned almost every ball, Lendl succumbed in one hour, 40 minutes.

Dickson, 23, ranks 31st in the world. He meets Peter Elter of West Germany in Thursday's second round.

Lendl was top-seeded in the indoor tournament after American John McEnroe bowed out with a shoulder injury.

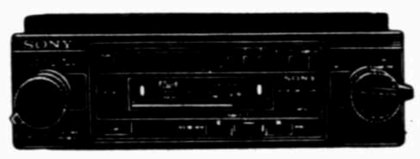

In other action Wednesday night, Wojtek Fibak of Poland advanced to the third round by whipping Australian Paul McNamee 7-5, 6-0 and Bill Scanlon of the United States ousted Australian John Alexander 6-2, 7-5.

In the opening doubles round, Kevin Curren of South Africa and American Steve Denton beat Americans Tracy Delatte and Johan Kriek 6-4, 2-6, 6-2.

Another American pair, Peter Rennert and Brian Teacher, triumphed 6-1, 6-3 over West Germans Elter and Hans-Joerg Schwaier. Americans Mike Bauer and Drew Gitlin defeated Chip Hooper of the United States and South Africa's Derek Tarr 6-2, 7-6.

Tisdale first freshman to make AP All-American list

NEW YORK (AP) — Wayman Tisdale, Oklahoma's record-breaking 18-year-old, has done something even Virginia's Ralph Sampson never accomplished by becoming the first freshman ever named to the first team of The Associated Press' All-American basketball squad.

The 6-foot-9, 240-pound Tisdale joined seniors Sampson and Dale Ellis of Tennessee and sophomores Patrick Ewing of Georgetown and Michael Jordan of North Carolina on the first team.

It marked the third straight year that Sampson was named to the first team. He was an honorable mention choice as a freshman.

"Wow, I can't hardly believe that," Tisdale said after being informed of his selection. He averaged 25.1 points and 10.6 rebounds in leading Oklahoma to a 23-8 record and a berth in the NCAA playoffs.

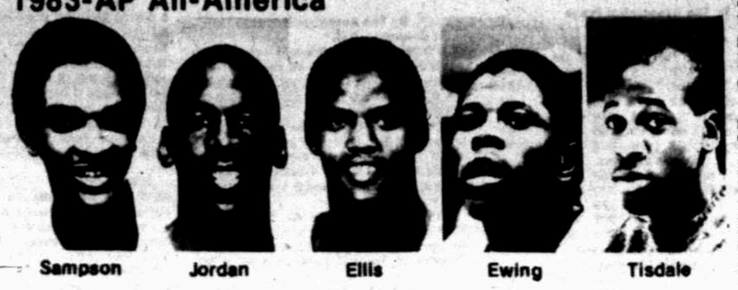

The Tulsa, Okla., native led the Big Eight Conference in scoring and rebounding and was named the league's Player of the Year. He broke every freshman scoring record and eclipsed the Sooners' single-season scoring record with 779 points while hitting 58.2 percent from the field.

He also blocked 76 shots.

Sampson, 7-4, averaged 19.1 points and 11.7 rebounds and blocked 91 shots in leading the Cavaliers to a 27-4 record and a share of the Atlantic Coast Conference's regular-season title with North Carolina. He made 59.3 percent of his field goal attempts.

In his career, Sampson has scored 2,171 points, the third-highest in Virginia history, and grabbed 1,477 rebounds and blocked 249 shots — both Virginia records. Virginia, also headed to NCAA playoffs, has won 110 and lost 22 during the Sampson era.

1983-AP All-America

Sampson Jordan Ellis Ewing Tisdale

Sampson, the ACC's Player of the Year, is the only repeater from last year's first team. He was the AP's Player of the Year the past two seasons.

"The year will be complete with the national championship," said Sampson, who spurned pro opportunities after his first three college seasons. Despite his effort, the Cavaliers have failed to win the NCAA crown during his reign.

Ellis, a 6-7 second-team choice last season, plays the low post in the Tennessee offense and averaged 23.0 points this season on 60.2 shooting from the field and 6.7 rebounds. He was the Southeastern Conference's Player of the Year, is the 10th highest scorer in SEC history and the third-highest in Tennesee's history with 2,032 points and a 59.1 shooting percentage.

Ewing, a 7-footer who was the leader of the young Georgetown team, averaged 17.4 points with a 56.8 field goal percentage and 10.2 rebounds. He also had 104 blocked shots.

His intimidating style earned him the Big East Conference's Defensive Player of the Year honor.

Jordan, a 6-5 swingman who averaged 20.1 points on 54.1 percent field goal shooting and made 77 steals, specializes in late-game heroics. Coach Dean Smith calls him "Old Reliable." His goal gave the Tar Heels last year's NCAA title over Georgetown and he came through in the clutch to pull out the second game with Virginia this season.

The second team included sophomore Keith Lee of Memphis State, a second-team choice last season, and juniors Clyde Drexler of Houston and Derek Harper of Illinois. Seniors Steve Stipanovich of Missouri and Darrell Walker of Arkansas complete the second team.

A mature Austin returns to tennis

By ALAN GREENBERG
(c) 1983, Los Angeles Times

Tracy Austin

LOS ANGELES — Time marches on. No more pinafores and pigtails. No more braids and braces. Just long, flowing hair, bright blue eyes and delicate, slender hands and wrists with beautifully manicured fingernails that look as if they should be wrapped around some man's tuxedoed neck in one of those slick magazine ads — not some sweaty old tennis racket.

In Tracy Austin's case, the man is Matt Anger, a blue-eyed blond sophomore tennis player at USC. They met in 1981 at Wimbledon, where Anger won the junior title. They're constant companions when she's not touring.

And, just last Tuesday, Tracy, the youngest of George and Jeanne Austin's five children, moved out of their home in Rolling Hills Estates and into her own two-bedroom condo. Tracy's growing up, all right.

It hasn't been hard to keep track of Tracy Austin, who had her first tennis lesson — from Vic Braden — at 2 and was on the cover of World Tennis magazine at 4. Ever since she came to the U.S. Open and the women's tour at the precocious age of 14, the media have followed her rather uneventful (off the court, at least) adolescence so diligently that many people came to feel she was growing up before their eyes, like a TV sitcom character. People are forever telling her, "I've been watching you grow up. I feel like I really know you."

Tracy doesn't crave such attention, but she appreciates it and is comfortable with it.

"I think it's kind of neat," she said. "I like meeting people. When I was in school, people wouldn't even know me and they'd say, 'She's so stuck up.' I'm not. Even though I went through so much, I tried to be normal. I'm very likable, I think. Just give me a chance."

Sometimes, maybe, people didn't want to. She was always the youngest of wunderkinds, and always beating nearly everybody's brains out. She was also aloof from the older touring pros. She was always accompanied by her mother and often by Sara Kleppinger, a lawyer from Donald Dell's Washington firm, who handles Tracy's day-to-day affairs. She rarely practiced with other players and stopped playing doubles because it often kept her up too late.

"People say I had a one-track mind," Tracy said. "I agree. But that's what got me there (to the top)."

She became the youngest player — 16 years 8 months 28 days — to win the U.S. Open. She became rich and famous, but she never really captured the public's fancy. She just didn't seem human enough.

That perception began to change Jan. 12, 1981, when she injured her back playing in Washington. She didn't return to the tour for four months. And her longtime coach, Robert Lansdorp, practically her second father, sued Tracy Austin Enterprises for breach of contract. Lansdorp has been quoted as saying his fight was with Dell's firm over side money, not with his pupil.

"It was outrageous," she said. "We had been so close. It was like a divorce."

It was a tumultuous period, especially for one who had been leading a life so charmed, so ordered. In the fivst half of 1981, Tracy had her first major injury, split with her coach, met the love of her life and graduated from high school.

Of course, it didn't keep her from winning. She lost only five matches after Wimbledon and won her second U.S. Open. That stretch, she said, was the best she's ever played.

In January of '82 Tracy again injured her back. She consulted an orthopedic surgeon. The symptoms went away.

But instead of slowly working her way back into shape, she came back full bore in practice. She kept aggravating the injury, and finally had to do the unthinkable. Put down the racket and busy herself with other things.

But nobody could teach Tracy Austin — for whom it had all come so quickly, so easily, so gloriously — to wait.

"It was horrible," she said. "Just horrible."

But ultimately it was the touch of Dr. Leroy Perry, chiropractic's unofficial guru to many world-class athletes, who made Tracy whole again. After watching her walk and seeing films of her play, Perry concluded she had overdeveloped the muscles in the back of her legs, and as a result her sciatic nerve was being pinched.

He gave her exercises, and her old confidence returned. She was back practicing within a week.

"I just remember how wonderful it felt to be playing again," Tracy said. "It was a sunny day ... The time off from the injuries really helped me mature. I really realized how much I loved tennis. Everything had come pretty easily for me. Then, the balloon popped ... Coming back the second time, it's so much tougher to drive yourself ... I felt like I had all these setbacks piled like brick after brick, higher and higher."

There were other injuries in 1982. Hev shoulder. Her ankle. Even a scalding: A waiter spilled boiling water on her while she was dining in a restaurant. At least, a hospital was across the street.

"I'm feeling all eager again," Austin said. "The desire is there."

Tracy Austin doesn't make excuses.

She tries hard to be normal, but it's tough. Tough when you've won four Porsches, two BMWs, one Toyota Supra and one Peugot while still a teen-ager.

It's tough to be normal when you're 20 and can afford to buy anything, when you've already seen more of the world than most people will in 10 lifetimes. Tough when you're face is on TV and billboards. Tough when you've lived your entire life under a miscroscope just because you could hit a fuzzy yellow ball better than anybody.

But Tracy Austin is trying. She's becoming more outgoing, adult. She's just now learning — and caring — to talk half as well as she plays.

What she really wants is to win her first Wimbledon ("I'd give a million dollars"), be No. 1 again, and just have her life stay as sweet as it is right now.

This year, Tracy Austin is back into her sport's ring healthier and happier than ever. There's not necessarily any bittersweet struggle ahead, no gritty comeback. Just a desire to lift her tennis game and ranking back where she believes it belongs. From her record, who can doubt she'll succeed?

Wilson pleads guilty, gets fine, suspension

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oiler cornerback J.C. Wilson was assessed a two-year suspended sentence and fined $1,000 Wednesday after he pleaded guilty to charges of driving while intoxicated and driving with a suspended license.

Harris County Court at Law Judge Jimmie Duncan gave Wilson a three-day suspended jail sentence and $500 fine for driving with a suspended license.

Jerry Bonney, Wilson's attorney, said Wilson's license was suspended because he had not made full repayment of damages caused in an auto accident two years ago that was his fault.

The judge handed Wilson a one-year jail term and $500 fine on the DWI charge but probated the jail term over two years.

Wilson was arrested Jan. 12 along with teammate Greg Stemrick as the two players emerged from the Sportsman's lounge. Stemrick was charged with cocaine possession.

Knicks are convincing; Philly wins again

New Jersey Nets Albert King (55) and Darwin Cook (12) stand flat-footed as they watch Cleveland's World Free (21) put up a last-second shot. The off-balance attempt gave Free 23 points but the Cavaliers lost 96-90.

By The Associated Press

The New York Knicks are not only winning, they're doing it convincingly and against some of the best teams in the National Basketball Association.

In their last three triumphs on the road — against New Jersey, Boston and Milwaukee, who have three of the five best records in the league — the Knicks have built 20-point halftime leads.

Wednesday night's 105-93 victory over the Bucks in Milwaukee also gave New York a seven-game winning streak for the first time since Feburary 1981. All the victories have come against winning teams.

"We have been playing very well, obviously," Knicks Coach Hubie Brown said, "and it is because we have gotten strong performances by just about everybody. There is no one guy to key on."

Bernard King and Sly Williams scored 15 points each for the Knicks, while Trent Tucker and Bill Cartwright had 14 apiece.

"Hubie has a pretty deep team there," said Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson. "New York has been the hottest team in the league."

After leading by seven points going into the second period, the Knicks outscored the Bucks 39-26 in the second quarter to go up 64-44 at halftime.

The Knicks built their largest lead, 70-48, in the third period before Sidney Moncrief, who led the Bucks with 19 points, sparked a 10-0 comeback to make it 70-58 with 5:20 left in the period.

But Cartwright scored 10 points, including two consecutive dunks on assists from Williams, in the fourth quarter to keep New York's lead in double figures. Its average margin of victory during the seven-game winning streak has been 11 points.

"We knew they would make a run at us, but we never let them get within 10 in the fourth quarter, which I was really happy with," Brown said.

The Knicks, who were 14-26 and in last place in the Atlantic Division Jan. 22, are now 35-30 and would make the playoffs if they started today.

"Hubie just told us to be patient and that when we learned his system, we would start winning," Knicks guard Ernie Grunfeld said. "We knew it would take a while, and it did take the first half of the season."

76ers 105, Celtics 100

Andrew Toney scored 12 of his 33 points in the fourth quarter and Moses Malone added 28 points as Philadelphia beat Boston without injured Julius Erving and flu-plagued Maurice Cheeks.

Toney outdueled Boston's Larry Bird, who had 30 points, as the 76ers won their 23rd game at home, improved their record to 55-9 and took an 11-game lead over the Celtics in the Atlantic Division.

NBA Roundup

Lakers 104, Suns 95

Los Angeles won its fifth game in a row as Earvin "Magic" Johnson had 25 points, 11 rebounds and eight assists against Phoenix.

Dennis Johnson led the Suns with 23 points, while Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had only seven points with 3:45 left, finished with 12 to keep alive his streak of scoring in double figures in 437 consecutive regular-season games.

Nets 96, Cavaliers 90

Albert King and Michael Ray Richardson each scored 19 points and New Jersey held off a late Cleveland rally to win its fourth straight game.

The Nets led 83-71 with 7½ minutes left, but Phil Hubbard scored nine points during a 17-7 spurt in the next six minutes as the Cavaliers cut the deficit to two. But consecutive baskets by Darryl Dawkins and King made it 94-88 with 29 seconds left and New Jersey went on to beat Cleveland for the 13th straight time.

Hawks 94, Bullets 81

Atlanta never led in regulation time, but outscored Washington 14-1 in overtime to take a four-game lead over the Bullets in the race for the final Eastern Conference playoff spot.

Johnny Davis scored 10 of his 22 points in the extra period for the Hawks, who trailed 70-60 with 8:29 left in regulation. Greg Ballard had 26 points for Washington.

Sonics 110, Kings 102

Gus Williams scored 22 points and Jack Sikma added 21 points and 19 rebounds as Seattle won its fourth consecutive game and handed Kansas City its fourth loss in a row.

The Sonics broke away from a 36-36 tie with eight straight points in the second period and the Kings never got closer than five points the rest of the way.

Jazz 125, Pistons 115

Rookie Jerry Eaves scored 35 points and John Drew added 34 as Utah stormed past slumping Detroit.

The Jazz trailed 80-69 midway through the third quarter, then outscored the Pistons 56-35 the rest of the way. Eaves had 15 points in the period to spark the rally.

Terry Tyler led Detroit with 26 points, but Kelly Tripucka scored only eight, 19 under his average.

Bulls 113, Warriors 111

Reggie Theus scored 13 of his 32 points in the final period to pace Chicago over Golden State.

Theus broke the last tie of the game with 3:40 left with a jump shot that made it 105-103.

Thorpe's roaming spirit seeks rest

JIM THORPE, Pa. (AP) — The youngest son of the late Olympian Jim Thorpe wants his father's body returned to Oklahoma, but the town that buried him and bears his name wants just as badly to keep him.

"He's going to stay here, regardless of what they say," said Mayor Michael Hichok, who greeted Jack Thorpe, chief of the Sac and Fox Indians, at a graveside service Tuesday. "There's no way they can take him back."

Thorpe, 46, made his first visit to the 20-ton, brown granite mauseoleum that has been his father's tomb for the past 29 years. He laid a wreath and spread herbs at the site while saying a silent prayer, then told a crowd of 100 townspeople why his father's body should be returned to the tribal grounds where he was born.

"As a son, as the chief of an Indian tribe, I'd like to see my father laid to rest where he wanted to be," said Thorpe, chief of the 2,208-member tribe based near Shawnee, Okla.

"Until he is put away properly in the Indian manner, we believe his spirit will roam. We'd like to release his spirit and let him be at rest," he added, his voice shaking with emotion and his hands trembling.

"I appreciate all you have done. I don't what to hurt anyone's feelings," said Thorpe. "It's a great honor to have a town named after you. But Dad wanted to be buried in Oklahoma, and I just want to respect his wishes."

Jim Thorpe, a double gold medal winner in the 1912 Olympics, never set foot in this Carbon County town and his only connection to Pennsylvania was his college career at the Carlisle, Pa., Indian school.

He died March 28, 1953, ravaged by alcohol and dependent on charity to pay his medical bills. The governor of Oklahoma vetoed a $25,000 appropriation to have him buried in his native state.

But the communities of Mauch Chunk and East Mauch Chunk put up $10,000 for his tomb and agreed to unite under the name Jim Thorpe through a contract signed by his third wife, Patricia.

The town twice rejected attempts to change its name back.

"It's an emotional subject," said the young Thorpe, one of seven surviving children. "But it's not the bones or the body of a man that make a town. It's the people that make a town."

At the gravesite, Thorpe was given a T-shirt that said: "Where in the hell in Mauch Chunk? Jim Thorpe, Pa."

In a later appearance at Jim Thorpe Senior High School, Thorpe was given a cap, mug and a handbook. Students had voted 205-18 in favor of keeping his father's body, while only three said they had no opinion.

The medals Jim Thorpe had in 1912 were stripped when officials learned he had been paid $2 a game to play baseball while he was still in college. But the International Olympic Committee reversed the decision last October and Thorpe's name was cleared.

Managers spell relief with high paid killers

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Tall, short, plump, trim, good, mean. They fit no particular mold but are joined in one dedicated purpose.

Crush the rally. End the riot. Close the gates of mercy. Put the foe away while he's still wiggling. Make it quick.

They are baseball's eradication units. The short men among the game's burgeoning relief pitchers. Terrors of the bullpen. Baseball's killers.

"We've all got our peculiar weapons and personalities but we have one thing in common — we all have a killer instinct," says Bruce Sutter, star short reliever of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals.

"The sooner we get the job done, the better we are."

They are programmed to perform two innings or less, preferably less, and their success is measured by the least time they work. As a rule, the better ones either save or win half of their team's games. Sutter accounted for 45 of the team's 92 victories in 1982.

Also they have become among the highest paid.

Sutter's yearly salary, for instance, is $875,000. He was paid about $2,700 for every man he got out.

Rollie Fingers' is paid $800,000 a year by the Milwaukee Brewers. Although injured the latter part of last season, he set the lifetime record for major league saves with 301.

Among other high-paid short relievers are Tom Hume of the Cincinnati Reds, $800,000; Dan Quisenberry of Kansas City, $675,000; Joe Sambito of Houston, $599,999, and the New York Yankees' Goose Gossage, $458,000.

"They should be the highest paid," said Manager Sparky Anderson of the Detroit Tigers, who as the notorious "Captain Hook" of the champion Cincinnati Reds in the 1970s helped raise the dignity of the relief pitcher's craft.

"They are the No.1 men on any ball club," Anderson continued. "That was borne out in the 1982 World Series when the Cardinals had Sutter and the Brewers were unable to use Fingers.

"A Fingers, Sutter or Gossage is a club's most valuable asset. If we'd had a stopper of that calibre, I am confident we would have won the pennant easily."

As it was, Detroit finished fourth in American League East.

The relief pitcher has attained his celebrity only in recent years. Previously the bullpen was the final sanctuary of the aging and the ailing.

They were largely castoffs and has-beens struggling for a few more years in the game. They were nonenities. They were never asked for autographs. Their baseball cards withered away.

A good example is the case of right-hander Hoyt Wilhelm, who had a wicked knuckleball and an instinct for survival in the clutch.

Breaking in some 30 years ago, he became one of the first successful relief specialists. In his rookie year, used only in crucial situations, he appeared in 71 of the New York Giants' 154 games, won 15 of 18 decisions and saved an additional 11 games.

Wilhelm went on to become one of the game's best-known relievers. He posted records for games pitched (1,070), most games in relief (1,018) and most games won in relief (123).

He pitched until he was 48 years old, retiring in 1972 with 21 seasons under his belt and a 2.52 earned run average.

For years knowledgeable baseball men have been lobbying to have Wilhelm placed in baseball's Hall of Fame.Baseball writers, who form the electorate, have consistently failed to give him the necessary votes.

After all, Wilhelm was just a relief pitcher. You can say the phrase and shrug.

If Wilhelm were pitching today, he would be an easily recognized millionaire.

The transition has been slow but steady.

Johnny Murphy and Joe Page enjoyed brief periods of acclaim from New York Yankee fans in different eras but the next reliever to gain much recognition was Jim Konstanty of the Philadelphia Phillies. It was he who helped the Whiz Kids win the National League pennant in 1950. He was the first reliever to win the Most Valuable Player Award.

The Cy Young Award, started in 1956 as an exclusive pitching honor, didn't go to a reliever until 1974, when it was won by Mike Marshall of the Los Angeles Dodgers, with a record of 106 games, 208 innings, 15 wins and 21 saves.

Anderson used relief pitchers to advantage when he led the Reds to six divisional titles, four National League pennants and two World Series in the 1970s.

Sparky used his entire staff adroitly during this successful period, never hesitating to yank a starter or summon a reliever at the slightest sign of weakening.

"Clay Carroll was my bullpen ace for five years," Anderson said. "But others also came through, such as Rawley Eastwick, Pedro Borbon and Will McEnaney.

"I don't say pitchers are programmed to go just seven innings but there is a tendency to have the starter not pace himself and relieve him the moment you think he is tiring.

"The object is twofold: Never let a game get away from you and, secondly, have a strong pitcher throwing at all times."

Fingers, whose specialty is a sharp-dipping forkball, has won three Fireman of the Year Awards and doubled as American League MVP and Cy Young winner in 1981.

Sutter, Cy Young winner in 1979, throws a mesmerizing split-fingered fastball, which is as tantalizing as a spitter. He holds the National Lgague record for most lifetime saves, 194.

"Fingers and I are different," says Sutter. "Rollie is very serious and composed. I get pretty charged up out there. I never think of who's at bat — that's negative. I just try to mow down everybody who carries a bat to the plate.

"I seldom work more than two innings. I thing that a save shows I did my job, a win that I messed up somewhere and let the other team get even."

Gossage's forte is pure heat. He just rears back and lets the fastball fly. A 6-foot-3, 217-pounder, he set the record for most strikeouts by a reliever in a season, 151, while with Pittsburgh in 1977.

Every team in baseball is seeking to land a reliever of the Gossage-Fingers-Sutter ilk.

"Two of the best are Greg Minton of the Giants and Jeff Reardon on Montreal," says Anderson. "They're both going to be great."

Also among the best looking youngsters are Rick Camp, 29, of Atlanta and Neil Allen, 25 of the New York Mets.

"Goose has got the heat, Sutter the split-finger fastball and Fingers the forkball," says Allen. "I haven't got anything special so I have to depend on keeping batters guessing."

"Like everything else, the game has changed," said Sparky Anderson. "In the old days you could pace yourself, get behind and take a chance on catching up with the same pitcher.

"Now the pressure is so great, you can't give anybody an edge. You have to use the best you've got every minute."

Cities built by steel now rusting away

THE NEW ECONOMY

EDITOR'S NOTE — They dot the industrial Northeast and Midwest, the little towns of the 'Rust Bowl,' built around the roar of blast furnaces or assembly lines. But in an economy based more on technology and less on muscle and manufacturing, these towns are withering. AP Writer Jim McKay describes one such town and its efforts to reverse its declining fortunes.

By JIM McKAY

SHARON, Pa. (AP) — Built by steel after iron and coal were discovered crisscrossing the county in the 19th century, the cities and villages of the Shenango Valley are now pocked with boarded storefronts, rusting factories and soup kitchens for the jobless.

"The first reaction of anyone driving here is old industry. You see a lot of old buildings, vacant buildings, buildings being torn down. There's a sense of the old steel mill community lingering on," said Peter Loedding, a Chamber of Commerce executive.

"But across the street, you'll see a steel sculpture, rusting and free standing by the river, a symbol of our industrial base," he added. "Out of this rust bowl, we're growing into a new economy.

Sharon, population 18,000, is a traditional steel and heavy industry town and the valley's economic cornerstone, hugging the Ohio border about 80 miles northwest of Pittsburgh. About 18 miles to the west is Youngstown, Ohio, a bigger steel city with more famous, but similar troubles.

Unemployment in Mercer County reached 19.1 percent in December with 10,500 people in a work force of 55,200 idled. Last year, the Sharon metropolitan area, with about 65,000 residents, lost a greater percentage of its industrial jobs than any other city in the state, according to a study at the Pennsylvania State University.

RICHARD CHRISTY HAS lived all of his 44 years in the valley, working in the construction and steel industries. Now he sells hot clam chowder, frozen shrimp and fresh perch from a big mobile van.

"I worked for years in construction, concrete," the cigar-smoking Christy said as he ladled soup. "That got so bad I went in the mill. Then I got laid off. It's been more than a year now. For the most part, it's been very bad."

"The mill" is Sharon Steel Corp., the nation's 18th largest producer of steel. The company once employed 4,500 at its Victor Posner plant in next-door Farrell. Its blue-collar work force is now 3,000, a third of whom are laid off.

In January, the Westinghouse Electric Corp. closed its mile-long transformer plant, once the largest in the world, because of a lack of orders. In the 1950s, Westinghouse employed 10,000 people here. Now 1,200 have jobs.

Cooper-Jarrett Inc., a trucking concern, went bankrupt last year, and the Greenville Steel Car Co. stopped making railroad freight cars.

ACCORDING TO the Penn State study, in 1981 durable goods industries like steel provided 15,100 of the 46,800 industry jobs in the Sharon area, more than 32 percent. By December 1982, those industries accounted for just 9,700 of 40,300 non-farm jobs, or 24 percent. Second to Sharon's 8 percent drop in industry jobs was the 7.1 percent decrease registered in Johnstown, Pa., the city with the highest unemployment in the nation.

"The contraction in the durable goods industries has had a considerable impact on other sectors of the economy," Norma Gavin Pappas wrote in the PSU report, the Pennsylvania Business Survey.

Sharon seems at once both dismal and undaunted. On State Street, the windows and doors of the once-booming five-story Strouss Department Store are covered with plywood. Several years ago, the store moved to the Shenango Valley Mall four miles outside town.

Across the street are five acres of empty land where buildings put up in the late 1800s were razed years ago to make way for urban renewal.

After years of financial fits and starts, the downtown area is finally being revived by $40 million in urban projects, and businesses are bidding for the State Street space. Developers have an option to turn the boarded-up Strouss building into a factory outlet mall, and a small shopping plaza squats behind the empty lots.

AT SHARON STEEL, the company has proposed a $25 million spending program to diversify and to recondition an idle blast furnace.

"Sharon is on the way up," said Ray Butch, a 74-year-old Westinghouse retiree. "It was depressed before the redevelopment, a bunch of broken-down buildings."

"From an economic standpoint," Loedding said, "the area has been going through the same transition that the country is going through, and that is the change from heavy industrial employment to service-type employment."

Despite the decline in the number of industrial jobs, Loedding boasted that the area's total number of jobs had risen in 12 years, "in the neighborhood of about 42,000 to 55,000."

"We have 14 high technology industries in the area. In total all of those firms probably employ 1,200 or 1,500 people. But that is a base that is there and growing every year."

ONE OF THE FASTEST growing concerns is Star Computer, which assembles and sells small-business systems in the $30,000 to $100,000 range. The 8-year-old company employs about 60 people and had sales of about $2.5 million in 1982.

Sharon Steel's Victor Posner plant is trying to hold its own by making renovations and trying for a bigger share of the specialty steel market. However, the workforce which numbered 4,500 is down to 3,000 now.

Silicon built paradise

EDITOR'S NOTE — As the United State grows more reliant on the businesses of high technology, cities where such concerns have clustered ride a wave of relative prosperity, almost untouched by the recession.

AP Writer Loretta Noffsinger profiles Cupertino, Calif., a city built from orchards on the strength of the silicon slice.

By LORETTA NOFFSINGER

CUPERTINO, Calif. (AP) — A tiny slice of silicon has transformed this 11-square-mile former orchard into a worker's paradise where there are almost as many jobs as residents and an unemployment office is nowhere to be found.

The silicon slice, popularly known as a "chip," has helped 30,000 people find work in this community 45 miles south of San Francisco. The city's population is just 37,200.

"I think the area here is just a little bit insulated from the rest of the economy," said Robert Kiel, owner of Buster's Grill in Vallco Fashion Park, a shopping mall. "It's not recession-proof, but I think it's slower to reach us."

Cupertino's unemployment at the 1980 census was 2.4 percent — slightly more than half the 4.5 percent rate in Santa Clara County then. In January, the county jobless rate was up to 9.1 percent; the state's was 11.7 percent.

More recent jobless statistics were not available for Cupertino, but Ricka Pirani, a spokeswoman for state Employment Development Department, said, "I am sure it is still lower than the county as a whole, just because of the nature of the community."

BY MOST ACCOUNTS, jobs are plentiful because the chip, a tiny miracle that holds a computer's brains, has spawned one of the nation's fastest-growing and most competitive industries.

Cupertino is in the middle of the string of cities on the San Francisco peninsula that stretches south to San Jose — the famed Silicon Valley.

During morning and evening commuting hours, traffic is bumper to bumper on Stevens Creek Boulevard, Cupertino's major commercial thoroughfare where chipmakers and engineering concerns are the lifeblood.

Cupertino has no downtown, no "Main Street." Neighborhoods sprawl westward from the edges of the businesses along the boulevard, rising a few hundred feet over five miles into the gently rolling foothills of the Santa Cruz Mountains.

"At one time this was all farmland, trees and orchards," said Frank Mulkern, executive director of the local Chamber of Commerce.

WHEN ADJACENT cities filled up with industry, Cupertino's trees fell to the businesses of Silicon Valley. "I think the people who determined where they want to locate their firms looked here and said, 'This is great weather,'" Mulkern said.

The computer firm influx started in the mid-60s and by 1969 had gained momentum.

"I can't see any end to it," said Janie Sanders, 48, who builds and repairs electronic equipment at the Hewlett-Packard plant here.

There will always be jobs in the computer industry, she predicted: "Engineers are always redesigning things and they always need someone to build their little gadgets."

Those gadgets have included pocket calculators, electronic games, home computers, wristwatches and microprocessors.

THEY BROUGHT Cupertino-based Apple Computer Inc. $214.3 million in sales, a 60 percent increase, in the financial quarter that ended Dec. 31.

They provided the Palo Alto-based Hewlett-Packard, with 3,200 workers in Cupertino, with $1.06 billion in sales, an increase of 13 percent, in the final quarter.

The strong sales and keen competition within the industry mean that Silicon Valley workers are prized and pampered to try to diminish turnover.

Accountants hear Nugent

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

Jim Nugent, a Texas Railroad Commissioner, spoke to the Petroleum Accountants' Society of the Permian Basin Wednesday evening. He has been re-elected twice and is expected to serve on the Commission until 1988. "When the state runs into trouble, it turns to the Railroad Commission," Nugent said.

"Your Railroad Commission is one of the broadest-based, most recognized state agencies in the country," he said.

Nugent is confident the Railroad Commission will continue to retain its varied duties, despite Sunset Law maneuvering, and continue to serve the interests of the voters that put the three commissioners in office.

"The Railroad Commission is written into the (Texas) Constitution, and I don't think there are enough votes around to change it."

Before the turn of the century, railroads had a stranglehold on the Texas economy, Nugent said. "The railroads controlled everything.

"Then the trucking industry, across the country, became a battleground.

After that the "East Texas Oil Find" was made, Nugent said, — 10 cents was the barrel price for oil in that "acrimonious and wasteful" time.

The Texas Railroad Commission handled these three problems and many more during its 100 years, Nugent told the accountants. Created to regulate railroad transportation and policies, the Railroad Commission had to grow to control a variety of areas.

"When the Legislature has a really difficult problem, they just call the Railroad Commission. We regulate trucks, buses, exploration and production of oil and gas, pipelines, trains, surface mining, natural gas handling, lp gas, and the appeals of city gas utility rates.

"In Bryan, we just had to zero production at some wells until they could solve their flaring problems," he said. "It's funny how they all of a sudden got interested in how to solve those problems when they are shut down."

Gravel truckers had carried overweight loads at high speed for a long time — until the broad powers of the Railroad Commission canceled the license of four of the major gravel companies for violations.

"Every morning we just open the valve and the flow of problems starts," Nugent said. "We try to shut it off when we go home at night."

Nugent said he thinks 6-year terms for Railroad Commission members work well, because "I don't have to run for five years...I can make the unpopular decisions."

Nugent encouraged a barrage of legislators with letters supporting the Railroad Commission and its functions, as well as letters calling for equal natural gas buying terms for consumers in Texas to what pipelines in the Northeast pay. "Write and tell them we need to keep the status quo," he said.

Nugent wants the status quo to stay, he said, for a simple reason — the Texas Railroad Commission is doing its jobs.

"The only question the (paid) investigators had was, 'Why is it called the Railroad Commission when that is not its main function now,'" Nugent said. "It regulates about a third of the oil and gas production in this country, and they want to know why it has a certain name?" he asked.

"How one feels about the Railroad Commission depends often on whether the Commission ruled in your favor last week," he added. "But I think it should be recreated and operated in the same way," in years to come.

Volkswagen chilled

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal investigation of a Volkswagen commercial two years ago has had the "chilling impact" of deterring the company from emphasizing safety in its advertisments, says a Volkswagen of America official.

The 30-second 1981 advertisement stressed the virtues of the Rabbit's passive restraint safety belt system. But the Federal Trade Commission's New York regional office feared that the ad might be misleading and launched an investigation.

States testing grounds for high technology

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — When the nation's governors met here recently they agreed that the absence of a national policy to stimulate technological innovation has forced their states to become testing grounds for new ideas.

Discussing the future of high tech, the governors said lack of "coherent" national policy was responsible for their submission of a vast array of proposals aimed at the creation of jobs in the high tech field as a means of diversifying their state's economic base.

Changes in the educational system, said Gov. James Hunt of North Carolina, will be of crucial importance if the nation is to regain its stature as a producer of innovative products for competition in the world marketplace.

Hunt said the states must pursue policies to strengthen science and math education, reverse declining student enrollment in math and science courses, and upgrade the quality of teachers who prepare students for jobs that will exist in the future.

Some experts claimed that the potential of high technology for job creation and economic stimulus is overrated. They argued that the number of new jobs that would be created and the desireability of those jobs has been exaggerrated.

Proponents of high technology countered that change is occuring so rapidly that accurate job projections are difficult to make.

Since the area is so unchartered, governors have appointed task forces to study ways of utilizing high technology to create jobs in California, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Maryland, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Virginia and Missouri.

In other states, units within the governor's office or within established state departments have taken the lead in state activities concering technological innovation.

Twenty-two states have organizations with close links to the government that advise state policy makers.

Most states offer programs to encourage economic development and expansion. In some cases, the effort to develop a technology-oriented economic base is part of the overall effort. Increasingly, however, states are gearing programs directly to high-technology industry.

A WORKING WOMAN'S GUIDE

"A Working Woman's Guide to Her Job Rights" is now available free of charge from the Women's Bureau, Department of Labor. The 54-page booklet, which contains general information about laws that protect workers in the job seeking process, while on the job, and after retirement, also explains what individuals should do if they think their rights have been violated. Bureau Director Lenora Cole Alexander says that though employment laws offer the same protections to both men and women, "we think that a guide specifically for women is still needed since many women are still unaware of their employment rights."

FEDERAL COST CONTROLS

A special presidential panel, which has been studying ways federal agencies do business, will make more than 3,000 recommendations on how to reduce waste, fraud and inefficiency which now cost the treasury about $60 billion a year.

The 158-member task force on Private Sector Survey on Cost Control in the Federal Government will make public only a partial list of these recommendations on April 5. A hearing on the proposals will be on April 15.

The panel, headed by industrialist J. Peter Grace, will make its remaining suggestions later in the year.

ENCOURAGE EXPORT COMPANIES

The Department of Commerce is now accepting recommendations from the public for changes in a package of regulations which it has forumlated in an effort to make it easier on American firms to apply for export trade certificates under the Export Trading Company Act of 1982.

The revised regulations will establish procedures and minimize red tape in applying for export trade certificates and permit participation in export trading companies by banking institutions. They will specify that applicants need supply only informtion relevant to export conduct that they want certified.

The department is sponsoring conferences to explain the new law in 20 cities across the country during March, April and May. Similar conferences in January and February drew 10,000 participants in 28 cities.

JAPANESE TRADE AGREEMENT

The Reagan administration has approved a package of recommendations that will lead to improved U.S. access to Japanese high technology markets. The document, endorsed by the Japanese cabinet, guarantees U.S. companies access to Japanese trade and investment opportunities and to government-supported research and development projects in high technology. It also commits the Japanese government to rectify the trade effects of their industry targeting practices.

As immediate steps, both governments will begin collecting monthly data on semiconductor trade to detect short term market changes and begin a joint effort to resolve longer range problems of the semiconductor industry. Plans for the work program include similar studies of computers, telecommunications and other high technology sectors.

COAL DEMAND TO GO UP

Increased world demand for steam coal and the ability of the U.S. and other coal exporting countries to meet this increased demand is the subject of a new analysis released by the Energy Information Administration. Steam coal is used primarily as a fuel for utility powerplants and industrial boilers.

Among the major findings of the "Prospects for Future World Coal Trade" is a contention that world steam coal trade will increase more than fivefold by th year 2000 and that U.S. will maintain its 1980 share of the world market of the future, approximately 25 to 30 percent of world exports. Australia and South Africa are the major competitors of the U.S. in the market, but Poland, Canada, China and Colombia will also be contenders.

NEW LENDING PROGRAM

The Small Business Administration (SBA) has started a new lending program that will trim paperwork and simplify and speed loan decisions. In an initial test of the "Preferred Lenders Program" (PLP), six banks in the New York area will handle all paperwork involved in small business loans guaranteed by SBA, and then service such loans. The banks involved are Chase Manhattan, Chemical Bank, Citibank, Peconic Bank on Long Island, National Community Bank in Rutherford, N.J., and First National State Bank of New Jersey.

Under normal SBA lending procedures, a loan applicant must submit applications through a private lender to the agency. Both parties review the applicant's qualifications. The new process will give PLP participants the authority to approve SBA-guaranteed loans without sending application packages to SBA. Furthermore, the PLP lenders will disburse the loan and service it.If the loan enters into default, PLP participants will liquidate business assets and collateral. Under normal procedures, SBA handles loan liquidations.

EXPORT CONTROL DUTIES

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, is pushing hard to pry out of a committee a bill which would transfer the export control responsibilities currently administered by the Commerce Department to a new federal agency to be called the Office of Strategic Trade. The measure would place the export control functions of the Export Administration Act under a new high level agency whose head would be a member of the National Security Council.

SPACE NUCLEAR POWER

A program to advance the technology required for space nuclear reactor power systems that could be used in future civil and military space missions has been established by three federal agencies: the Department of Energy's Office of Nuclear Energy, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. Known as "SP-100," the project will involve research in thermo-electric and other power conversion technologies, high temperature metals and materials, radiator structures for removing waste heat in space and high-temperature nuclear fuels. The potential payoff of such a program would be space nuclear energy systemd in the 100-kilowatt power range at lower weights, sizes an costs than even th emost advanced solar energy systems could provide.

ASK SAFETY COMMENT

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is asking the public for comments regarding how the quality of nuclear power plant construction can be improved. The agency is required to conduct a study of existing programs for improving quality assurance and control in the construction of commercial nuclear power plants, and to undertake a pilot program to review and evaluate alternative concepts.

COSTS OF FRACTURES

Fracturing of materials — such as metals, wood and glass — and efforts to prevent it cost U.S. industry about $119 billion a year, according to a Commerce Department study which claims the costs could be cut in half by using various prevention techniques and by current research. The study assessed the cost of fracture and its prevention for all types of materials, including metals and alloys, inorganic materials, such as concrete, ceramics and glass, organic materials and others. The study considered the costs of actual failures, pain, injury, death and medical treatment to victims, business delays or property damage, insurance administration, cargo losses. The tab for fracture and its prevention, expressed in 1982 dollars, amounts to about four percent of the gross national product.

AROUND AND ABOUT

The Export-Import Bank's Small Business Advisory Service has a toll-free "Hotline" (800-424-5201) to provide immediate advice to smaller exporters in answering questions about export financing...The first national conference to explore the growing problem of worker dislocation will be hosted by the National Alliance of Business and eleven other organizations in Pittsburgh...Women continue to join the ranks of scientists and engineers at an ever-increasing rate.

A U.S. Marine listens as a Lebanese police officers discuss Wednesday's attack on five of his comrades.

Marine commandant calls Israeli troops 'threatening'

DETROIT (AP) — The nation's top Marine, saying he can "no longer remain silent," has accused Israeli troops of repeatedly threatening U.S. peacekeeping patrols in Lebanon, a published report today said.

According to a copyright article, Marine Corps commandant Gen. Robert Barrow wrote a classified letter dated Monday to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger reporting three incidents this year in which shots were fired.

It was the first report of any gunfire by Israelis involving U.S. forces. On another occasion, Israelis threatened to kill an American captain, the article said.

The article, by Knight-Ridder Newspapers' Washington bureau, appeared in today's Detroit Free Press and other newspapers.

In Washington, Marine Corps and Defense Department officials who asked that their names not be used said they were not familiar with the letter or the reported incidents.

The incidents involved both Marine and Army officers "in life-threatening situations, replete with verbal degradation of the officers, their uniform and country," Barrow wrote, according to the published report.

In another incident, Israeli troops were said to have pointed American-made M-16 rifles at a Marine captain and "stated they would kill him if he took one step toward them," the report said. The captain rerouted his vehicle.

In a third incident, the article said, Maj. Herman Kafura of a United Nations observation team was "threatened with loaded and pointed weapons" and his "life was deliberately threatened."

Barrow was quoted as writing that he could "no longer remain silent on this continual problem of provocation," by Israeli troops.

"It is evident to me...that the incidents" between the Marines and the Israeli Defense Forces "are timed, orchestrated and executed for obtuse Israeli political purposes," Barrow wrote, the report said.

U.S. picks at withdrawal deadlock

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is optimistic that Israel will agree to the latest U.S. plan for breaking the deadlock over security in southern Lebanon, removing the last hurdle to an Israeli troop withdrawal agreement.

The key is a U.S. commitment to train and supply a strong Lebanese army to handle anti-terrorist security responsibilities along the border with Israel.

It includes an expanded U.S. military presence in Lebanon — in non-combat roles. U.S. officials hope the commitment to underwrite the Lebanese army will reassure Israel, which heretofore hasn't believed the Lebanese could do the job.

The strategy was put forward by Secretary of State George P. Shultz during 18 hours of meetings with the Lebanese and Israeli foreign ministers here this week.

Whether it is acceptable to Israel will probably be known at a meeting of the Israeli Cabinet on Sunday.

But U.S. officials took heart from a statement by Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir as he left Washington that "we are nearer to a solution."

A senior State Department official showed his optimism Wednesday when he said U.S. Mideast envoys Philip C. Habib and Morris Draper would be going back to the region this weekend "to wrap things up." The 10-week-old withdrawal negotiations involving Israel, Lebanon and the United States are to resume in Israel Monday.

But hard-liners in the Israeli Cabinet, led by former Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, still could upset the U.S. strategy. Sharon is among those pushing for Israeli-manned anti-terrorist posts in Lebanon following a withdrawal.

Special envoy and former Prime Minister Saeb Salam, left, and Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem address reporters after a Wednesday meeting with U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

An Analysis

A major incentive to Israel in agreeing to the latest plan is that it would improve badly frayed relations with Washington, which has been hinting that failure of Israel to withdraw could eventually lead to a cutback in the annual $2.5 billion in U.S. aid.

Israel also is paying a growing price in money and manpower the longer it stays in Lebanon.

The administration agrees with Israel's bottom-line demand in the negotiations that it must have security against the resumption of terrorist attacks across the border.

But Shultz took Lebanon's side in insisting that a solution must be found short of an Israeli military presence in Lebanon. That would infringe on Lebanese sovereignty and could lead Syria to rethink its commitment to withdraw its forces when the Israelis go. Palestinian forces are expected to leave with the Syrians.

While not all details are worked out, the Shultz plan would involve the United States in the following areas:

—The U.S. contribution to the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon would be increased above the current 1,200 — as would the contributions of other nations — and the force's area of operation would be expanded to assist the Lebanese army extend its control.

—U.S. officers would be assigned to a joint military committee to monitor compliance with the withdrawal agreement.

—There would be an extensive U.S. military training and supply program for the Lebanese army. Training is already under way, and the administration has asked Congress for $250 million in special military and other security-related assistance for Lebanon.

An existing U.N. peacekeeping force, in which the United States does not participate, would provide protection to Palestinians in the refugee camps in southern Lebanon.

The Israeli-backed Christian militia of former Lebanese Major Saad Haddad would play a key role in the southern security zone, while being at least technically integrated into the Lebanese army.

A State Department official stressed that Americans would continue to avoid combat-type roles, although the wounding of five Americans by grenade in Beirut Wednesday showed that incidents can occur despite precautions. He said Americans might not have to be assigned to he security zone.

"We probably would be reluctant to get people involved in those border regions," said the official, who insisted on anonymity. "We want to avoid involvement in actual peacekeeping activities."

Peacekeepers 'taunted but not threatened'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The U.S. Marine commander in Lebanon said today his men have been taunted by Israeli soldiers but he was unaware of any direct threats by the Israelis.

Col. James M. Mead told reporters he could not comment on a newspaper report that the commandant of the Marine Corps, Gen. Robert Barrow, had written a letter to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger saying U.S. Marines in Lebanon had been involved in "life-threatening situations" with Israeli soldiers.

The report appeared in today's Detroit Free Press and other newspapers in the Knight-Ridder chain. The report quoted Barrow as asking the United States to take "firm and strong action" to end confrontations between the Marines and Israelis.

Mead said, "I can only comment on things I have a personal knowledge of." He said there have been "confrontations" between U.S. Marine patrols and Israelis that "dealt with the freedom of movement of the Marine patrols."

He said these incidents occurred on the old Sidon road, a major Israeli supply route, "which the government of Lebanon has asked us to patrol. On several occasions the Israelis put up roadblocks."

Mead added that in some of those incidents "there was less than professional conduct by the Israelis — taunting, saying things Marines don't like to hear from another professional military organization."

The American commander declined to give any details but said he had no knowledge of any direct threats by Israelis to the Marines. He did not say when the taunting occurred but indicated there had been no problems in recent days.

American accusued of spying

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — An American who worked here as a waitress has been arrested and charged with espionage for collecting sensitive information on Swiss officials, authorities said today. She reportedly passed the details on to a Libyan diplomat posted in Bern.

Swiss officials identified the woman as Alexandrea Lincoln, 30, dubbed the "Mata Hari of Bern" in local newspapers today.

They said the Libyan was out of the country and would shortly be leaving his post at the embassy in Bern.

Britain facing 'oil pressure'

LONDON (AP) — Britain, which forced OPEC to cut prices for the first time, is facing pressure from major oil companies to undercut the cartel in what petroleum analysts call news signs a worldwide price war is inevitable.

The Daily Telegraph reported today that several oil companies were seeking a reduction of as much as $1 a barrel from the state-owned British National Oil Corp.'s proposed price of $30.50.

Oil companies say Britain's North Sea oil at $30.50 cannot compete against premium Nigerian oil of the same quality selling at $30 or against the $29 price set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries on Monday after a dozen days of wrangling in London by ministers from all 13 members.

Aboriginal rights studied

OTTAWA (AP) — For at least four years, Canadian Indians and Eskimos will be negotiating with the country's premiers and prime minister about native claims to land and self-government.

Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and nine of the 10 provincial leaders signed an accord Wednesday promising immediate amendments plus more summit-level conferences to spell out the special aboriginal rights already enshrined in the constitution but not defined.

Premier Rene Levesque of Quebec was the only holdout. Levesque said he sympathized with the natives but would not take a step that might legitimize a constitution still rejected by his separatist government.

Walesa feels rallies 'incited'

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa says he suspects government agents incited two large rallies in Gdansk this week to show police could quickly squelch stirrings of his outlawed Solidarity workers movement.

Walesa said Wednesday it was definitely not Solidarity leaders trying to revive the labor union who organized the protests which drew 1,500 demonstrators Sunday and Monday to the Baltic seaport where Solidarity was spawned in August 1980.

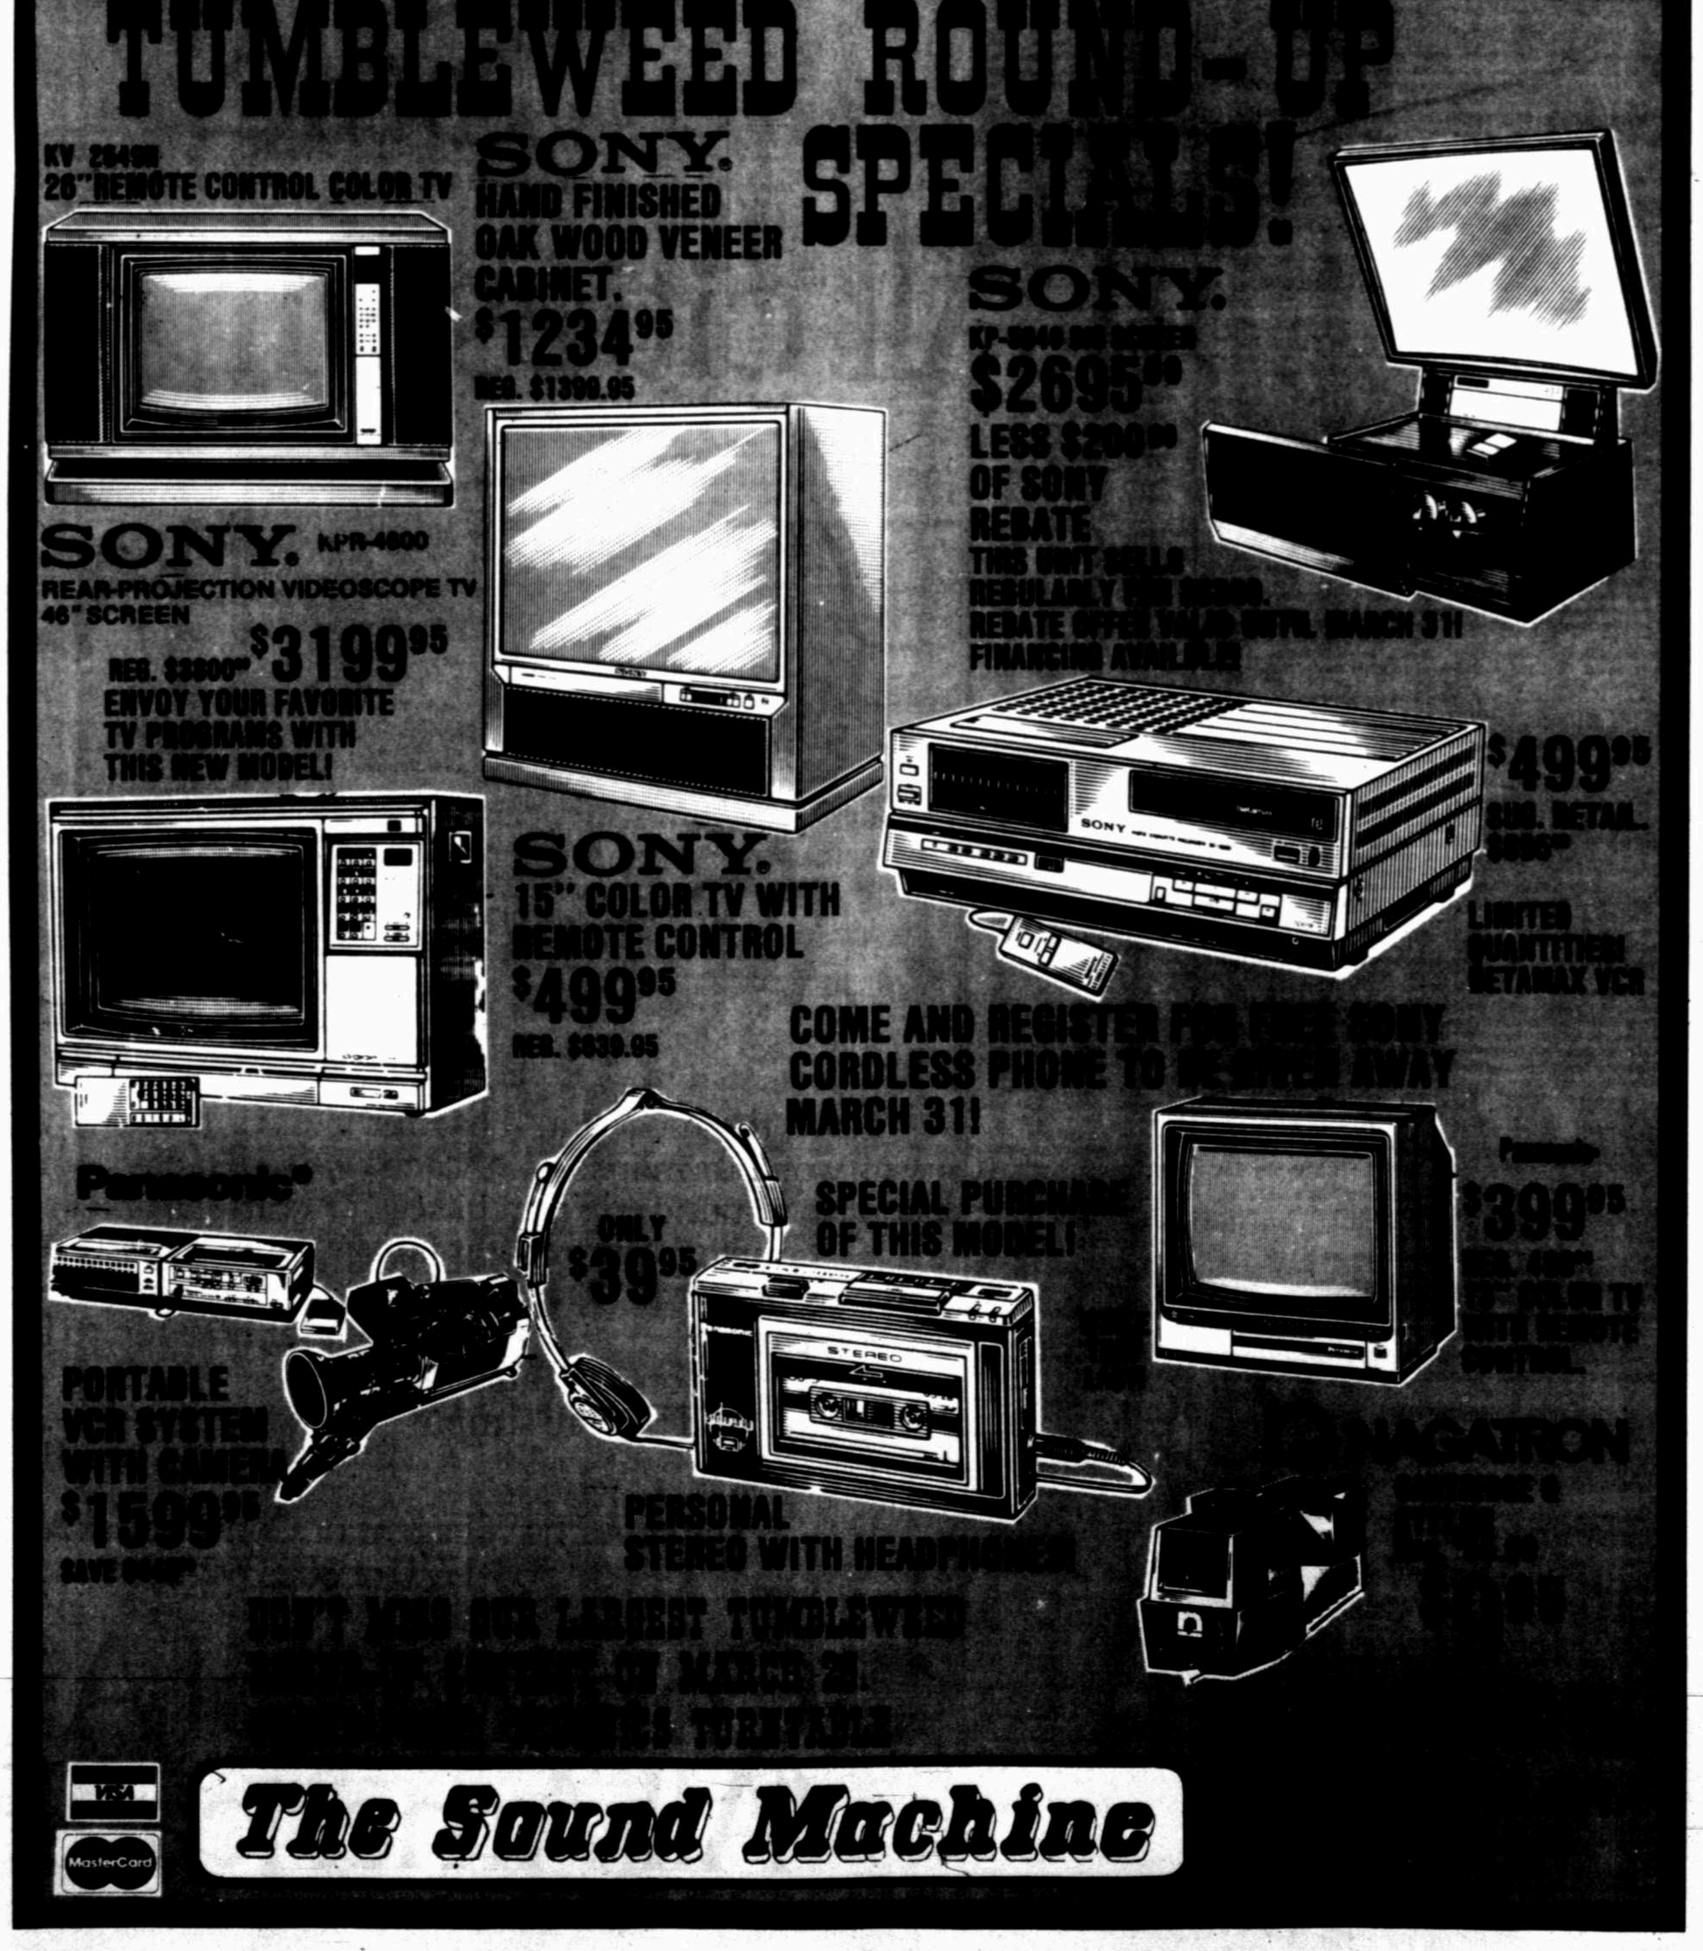

Soldiers and police brandishing rubber truncheons routed the rallies in Gdansk, as well as smaller protests in Warsaw, Wroclaw and Kalisz without violence.

Priests ousted from Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Fifty police forced two Irish priests accused of running a "politically active" soup kitchen onto a flight to Argentina three days before a government deadline requiring the pair to leave Chile.

Monsignor Juan de Castro, the vicar general of Santiago, said the Roman Catholic Church "energetically protested" the Chilean government's action Wednesday.

A third priest ordered to leave the country by Saturday, Brian MacMahon of Australia, was not arrested, de Castro said. The government did not explain why it forced the Irish priests to leave before the deadline.

Personal property may escape taxation

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

That taxes may go up is dreaded but not surprising news.

However, that personal property, just added to the Midland tax rolls this year, may be taken off the tax rolls may be the real news.

Neither is a certainty. But the drift of Wednesday's Midland County Tax Appraisal Board was that both may happen.

One depends on what the Texas Legislature, pressured by citizen-lobbyists, will do.

The other depends on the county-wide valuation of property. If valuations — due to the downturn in the economy — drop, then the tax rate will increase to maintain the flow of revenue to the six taxing entities in the county.

"There's one bill to abolish all personal taxes," noted Joe Nuessle, board secretary, "and another to take boats and RVs (recreational vehicles) off, and we'll still have airplanes on the rolls, I guess."

Senate Bill 328 would exempt "personally owned aircraft not used for the production of income" from taxation and, if passed, would take effect Jan. 1, 1984.

EARLIER THIS year, Midland County Chief Appraiser Roland Wilkinson added 520 personally-owned aircraft appraised at $60 million to the tax rolls. Revenue from those aircraft could amount to almost $1 million. Countywide, about $50 million is collected in taxes to operate the schools, city, county, hospital and college.

House Bill 538, known as the Peveto bill, would exempt recreational vehicles "not used from production of income except for casual renting" from ad valorem taxes.

Nuessle said he has "mixed emotions about this business. You can argue either way." He did.

"It's a difficult, tedious, almost impossible job to do," he said of the appaiser having to locate and then place a value on boats, RVs and aircraft, which have so many variables due to, for example, the avionics — navigation gear — on aircraft. "They're changing hands, depreciating...From the tax collector's view, it's a nightmare."

Nuessle then rhetorically argued the other way.

"PEOPLE HAVE lots of money tied up in them. Look at the money that's tied up in airplanes. If you've got to raise revenue, that means you'll put the burden on businesses and homeowners" should personal property be exempted to taxation.

Nuessle suggested the board "ought to take some kind of position action" on the pending legislation.

Board President Gil Tompson noted it's "very difficult to be equitable" about the taxation on personal property.

"There are so many people who slip through the crack, and there are others who pay their dues," Tompson said.

Nuessle said the electronic gear on some airplanes is worth more than the aircraft. Unless an appraiser can "get inside the airplane to see what equipment is in it," he has a real problem in judging the value.

"I would be in favor of getting airplanes off the rolls," said Nuessle, who added, "...unless I was a homeowner and had to take the burden of (paying) taxes."

PROPERTY, including businesses' office equipment, vehicles and airplanes, used for profit is on the tax rolls and subject to taxation. And whether or not a private citizen is using a vehicle or airplane for business purposes can be discerned by examining his income tax return, noted Jimmie D. Oglesby, attorney for the appraisal district.

"All you've got to do is to look at the income-tax return. If he's depreciating it, you've got him. If he's not, that's good enough."

Wilkinson, who said he was following the law in adding RVs, boats and airplanes to the tax rolls, said he would continue to do so "as long as it is the law."

"My personal stance is the same as Mr. Tompson's. I hope they (Texas Legislators) do something with that (the exemptions). It's very difficult to administer."

Blast debris

A burned-out transformer is all that's left of a utility pole that was reduced to ashes by an explosion and fire west of Odessa Tuesday night. Five people were killed in the blast which occurred when a two-man crew digging fence post holes struck a natural gas pipeline.

Officials identify explosion's victims

From Staff and Wire Reports

ODESSA — Officials here have identified the bodies of a mother, her three young children and a workman who were found after a Tuesday night natural gas explosion destroyed two trailer homes about 10 miles west of Odessa.

Investigators found the five bodies after the blaze was put out Wednesday morning, 12 hours after the accident, according to Ector County Sheriff's Deputy Bailey Roberts.

The bodies were identified as Maria Guiterrez, 41; her three children, Celeste, 7, Christiana, 9, and Elizabeth, 13; and Manuel Chavez, age unknown, of Odessa, who had been drilling at the time of the blast.

Five other people were injured, one critically.

Santiago Guiterrez, the 42-year-old husband of Maria Guiterrez, was hospitalized in Lubbock in extremely critical condition this morning with second- and third-degree burns over 90 percent of his body. "He's not doing too well," Beecher Stotts, nursing supervisor at Lubbock General Hospital said this morning. "It just doesn't look too good at this point."

Gloria Pena, 39, was also hospitalized in Lubbock and was listed in serious condition with second- and third-degree burns.

Her husband, 44-year-old Alvaro, and his son, 10-year-old George, were listed in stable condition in Odessa Medical Center Hospital this morning, said a hospital spokeswoman. A second son, Alvaro Jr., 13, was treated for burns and released.

Workmen drilling fence post holes accidentally punctured an eight-inch pipeline, sparking the fire, authorities said.

Chief Raymond Lewis will be leaving his familiar surroundings at the Midland Fire Department in May when he retires after 34 years with the city.

Fire chief recalls moments of fear

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Raymond Lewis was standing on the third floor fire escape on the north end of a burning church building and felt fear.

Only the week before he had read where some firemen standing in almost the same spot were killed when a burning wall collapsed on them. That story flashed before him while he fought the blaze in the First Baptist Church Sunday School building that Sunday afternoon. He didn't think about it for long, though, and soon he was out of the situation. The blaze was over; the building gone.

That was April 12, 1953. Lewis was a rookie; he had been with the Midland Fire Department about six months, signing on in Oct. 17, 1952.

On May 15, Lewis will be leaving his post as fire chief after working for the city of Midland almost 34 years with 30 of it in the fire department. He started as a high school dropout and eventually received an associate degree in fire technology. About 5½ years ago, he was named chief to replace retiring Melvin Little.

That First Baptist Church fire was only one of two situations where he felt true fear. The second blazed up at the end of his career — the plane crash and Warwick Apartment fire in September 1982.

His silver hair contrasting with the dark gray walls of his office in the Central Fire Station, Lewis looked back Wednesday on his years with the city and the reasons for his retirement at age 53.

Raised on a farm at Sweetwater, Lewis at 17 married his sweetheart, Doris, who was 16. He had dropped out of high school while a sophomore and was trying to earn a living. Lewis got a job with Midland's street department; his wife eventually was hired as City Hall's telephone operator.

"I was operating a road grader and it seemed like a dull future," he recalled. His wife heard about an opening in the fire department and Lewis applied. He got the job.

Other than those two fires, "I never had any fears. Oh, some certain fires will make you have different feelings. You'd be crazy not to have some fear."

His fear at the Warwick fire came not from the blaze but from "not knowing if you had people in the building that was burning. We didn't even know where the plane was at first. We thought it was in the top of the building."

His years in the fire department have been a learning experience. He jokes that "ever since I quit high school I've been going to school." Lewis earned his high school diploma in the 1960s and he started in 1971 to Midland College for a degree in fire technology.

And if he's not learning, he's teaching. With photos of fires hanging on a wall behind his desk, Lewis explains they were taken at a Texas A&M fire school where he was a trainer. "I'm really an outside person. If I ever go back into it (firefighting), I would like to go back as a trainer.

"I enjoy taking young men and teaching them what I know. I like to work outside with the men."

Whether or not he teaches, Lewis is planning to spend much of his retirement outside and on the road.

His retirement wasn't a sudden thing, although it took the Midland City Council by surprise on Tuesday when they heard of it. Lewis said his wife retired last year, they bought a home at Lake Brownwood and in January decided he, too, would leave the job for an easier life.

"It's something we wanted to do while we were still young enough to enjoy it and while we were in good health."

As fire chief, Lewis traveled on city business and picked up some ideas as to where he wants to return. Seattle, Wash., is one place; Las Vegas, Nev., is another.

The couple also has been eyeing a 30-day tour to Australia, New Zealand and the Fiji Islands. "My wife and I have always wanted to go there. That probably will be one of our priorities," he said.

With two houses paid for and travel plans taking the Lewises all over the country for the next several years, the fire chief laughs, "Our only obligations are food, taxes and insurance. We don't have cemetery plots. I don't know if we'll have time to die."

Childproof cap might have kept children from being poisoned

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

The last time Roy Gossett saw his grandchildren was a week ago at his Sweetwater home. He remembers cradling his granddaughter and playing with his grandson.

On Tuesday, Gossett raced to Odessa after 9-month-old Sharon Klein and 2-year-old David Klein had apparently swallowed some pills.

Sharon died about 5 p.m. Tuesday at Women and Children's Hospital.

David is in the intensive care unit at Lubbock General Hospital.

Gossett's eyes welled with tears and his voice cracked Wednesday as he told the Midland Reporter-Telegram the events that led to his granddaughter's death.

"My daughter (Donna Klein of Stanton) brought the children to Midland Tuesday to visit their grandmother," Gossett said, referring to his ex-wife.

"I don't know the whole story. My youngest daughter, Angela, called me. She was also at her mother's apartment."

Apparently, David wandered into his grandmother's bedroom, opened a bureau drawer and took out a prescription bottle, Gossett said.

"All the medication in the drawer had childproof caps — except for this one," Gossett said, shaking his head from side to side.

"The nine-month-old was a healthy little thing. She ate like a hog. Knowing her, she probably gulped them down. I'm sure he (David) was sharing them with his little sister."

According to Arlene Strickland, Midland Memorial Hospital's public relations director, the children were brought into the MMH emergency room at 9:41 a.m. Tuesday "about 45 minutes after they apparenty swallowed an unknown quantity of Norpramin, an anti-depressant."

Ms. Strickland said David was airlifted to Lubbock, while Sharon was transferred to Odessa. She said a spokesman for Lubbock General Hospital reported Wednesday afternoon that "David's condition is improving and he is expected to be moved out of ICU by Thursday."

When Gossett's daughter notified him about the accidental poisoning, he drove directly to Midland.

"By the time I got to Midland, Sharon was in Odessa," Gossett said. "I drove so fast. I think it was about 3 p.m. when I got to Women and Children's. Sharon was dead at 5:20 p.m. (Tuesday).

"I'm trying to make the funeral arrangements," he said, rubbing his face. "I hurt. For a while we didn't know if were getting ready to have a double funeral."

Gossett sat back in his chair and took a deep breath.

"When my oldest boy was young, he got into some cough medicine," Gossett continued, recalling a similar incident when his children were young.

"It was on the third shelf of the kitchen cabinent, but he dragged the chair into the kitchen and climbed up and got into it. We had to have his stomach pumped."

Gossett sat quietly for a few moments and then said, "that one little bottle. If it had been childproof a 2-year-old might not have been able to open it," he said, referring to his grandson.

Because of the high medical costs incurred in the attempt to save Sharon's life and in keeping David alive, Gossett said he has made arrangements for a trust fund with a Midland bank.

"David is in intensive care," he said. "If you know what the intensive care costs are, you understand why I'm doing this."

Gossett said anyone who would like to make a donation may contact Jane McNew at First City National Bank of Midland regarding the "Klein Children Fund."

Donations also may be sent to "Steven Klein's Children Fund" P.O. Box 10, Stanton, 79782.

County commissioners to discuss predicament of public library

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

What to do about the predicament of the Midland County Public Library will be aired in the Midland County Courthouse at 10 a.m. Friday, when the Midland County commissioners are to meet with library-concerned citizens.

The present 1957-built library has outgrown its stacks. And prospects of a new, five-story library rising in its stead seem in limbo.

"We're hoping for a miracle," said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis, the Commissioners' Court liaison to the library.

In August 1981, when Midland's oil economy was prosperous, The First National Bank of Midland had agreed to aid the county in building a new library which aesthetically would be a part of the bank's envisioned Eagle Plaza. But the building, which would be four or five times larger than the present two-tier library, and land below it would belong to the county.

That plaza, near the bank's 24-story downtown building, was to incorporate a 40-story tower — and possibly a second — within a "Super Block."

Land has been cleared for the projects.

"The cost of the approximately 28,000 square feet of land under the new library structure and the first $5.5 million of the construction costs will be borne by The First National Bank of Midland or its assigns," Charles D. Fraser, bank president, announced 1½ years ago.

Since then, the bank has said the project is still viable, but bank officials have not responded to queries by the Midland Reporter-Telegram and the Commissioners' Court about the status of the bank's role in the library.

Projected cost of the multi-story library has increased to more than $8 million.

The bank's "will-be-borne" commitment of August 1981 apparently was alluding to the bank's helping the county secure revenue-bond financing. And once built, the library would be partially leased to the bank. Thereby, the county would be generating revenue to pay off the bonds.

But a lull has quieted the library project. The county commissioners and bank officials have not held any negotiations on the project.

Last month, County Judge Bill Ahders wrote Fraser a letter in which the judge requested a meeting with him or his representatives to discuss status of the project. That meeting never transpired.

For the Friday meeting, Davis has invited representatives of the bank's Eagle Plaza, Friends of the Library, Library Advisory Board, County Museum and historical commission and committee, the county's bond counsel, and any others to attend and submit proposals.

The session would be moved to the Midland County Courtroom if the Commissioners' Courtroom is too small for the gathering.

"I would like to think we'll have a good turnout," Davis said.

The commissioners will begin Friday's session at 9 a.m. but will conduct other business before addressing the library issue.

"We're open to suggestions," Davis said Tuesday. "We've tried (to follow through with the project), and we're sure they (bank officials) have tried, too. We've tried to keep the channels open."

Police sergeant denies beatings

DALLAS (AP) — A New Orleans police sergeant who denied that he or any of his officers beat residents of a predominately black neighborhood during an investigation into a fellow officer's slaying faced cross-examination today by prosecutors.

Sgt. John E. McKenzie, one of seven officers charged with violating the civil rights of several residents of the Algiers area, took the stand in his own defense Wednesday.

Government lawyers rested their case Wednesday morning. The federal court trial was recessed until this morning when McKenzie, the second defense witness, faced cross-examination by prosecutor Michael Johnson.

"Are you aware of or did you commit any misconduct whatsoever by any officer under your command?" defense lawyer Ralph Capitelli asked McKenzie Wednesday.

"No sir, not in this incident or in any other investigation," McKenzie replied.

McKenzie said his officers had sucessfully talked an alleged brutality victim, Robert Davis, into talking to them about the murder of white patrolman Gregory Neupert.

The officers, defendants Stephen Farrar and Dale Bonura, "had gained his confidence and assured him we would do all we could do to protect him," McKenzie testified.

But the officers said a black detective, Oris Buckner, began "hollering in his face" and told him that he would "kick his rear end all the way across the street," McKenzie testified.

Buckner was granted immunity from prosecution. He claimed to have participated in at least one of the beatings.

Davis and four other residents of the New Orleans neighborhood have testified that the patrolmen beat and threatened them while investigating Neupert's murder.

Buckner, who said he was not trusted because he had not beaten anyone, "is a liar," McKenzie said.

The trial was moved to Dallas because of extensive news coverage in Louisiana.

On trial with McKenzie are Farrar, 31; Bonura, 34; Officer Steven Reboul, 29, Officer Richard LeBlanc, 32; Detective Ronald Brink, 37; and Detective Thomas R. Woodall, 32.

Defense attorney Walter Rothschild, who did not give his opening statement until Wednesday, told the jury that "everyone of the witnesses for the prosecution had an interest in the outcome of this case, either financial or given immunity.

"The (defense) witnesses you will hear have no interests in the case," Rothschild said.

Capt. Gene Kloss with the Sheriff's Department said this morning that the pipeline was marked by signs, but the signs had been removed.

Reports that the pipeline is owned by Mid-America Petroleum are false, according to Bill Carter, vice president of accounting for Mid-America's Midland office. "We don't own it," Carter said Wednesday.

Pena said his family was in the kitchen when the explosion occurred. They rushed to a bedroom and jumped out of a window just before the fire swept through the home, he said.

Witnesses said flames roared through some nearby trailer homes.

"That is as close to hell as you're ever going to get," said a neighbor, Nancy Turner.

Another witness, Linda Wilhelm, said the flames, estimated to have reached 600 feet,illuminated the inside of her trailer home, which was parked half a mile from the blaze.

"I've never heard anything like it," she said. "I had the blinds pulled all the way, and the whole house was lit up."

Senate votes to transfer control to state commission

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate has voted to strip certain Texas counties of their veto power over game and fish regulations and to put all 254 counties under the control of the state Parks and Wildlife Commission.

A final vote is needed, however, to send the proposed Wildlife Conservation Act of 1983 to the House.

Numerous landowners have testified against the proposal, including Central Texans who lease their land to deer hunters and East Texans who like to hunt deer with dogs.

Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Mesquite, said Wednesday opponents had argued that his bill "would take away local control, where in truth and reality it will bring us into the 20th century."

Lyon's proposal would replace a 1967 law regulating hunting and fishing, a law which has many exemptions.

Personal property may be deleted from tax rolls

"I'm going on record to support that bill," he said. "It's a Catch-22 situation. As long as it's in the law..., I'm bound by law. But that doesn't mean I can't use my personal influence to lobby for the exemptions."

Wilkinson noted that the appraisal board is a "good board. They've got me towing the line. It's a very fiscally responsible board."

THE CHIEF appraiser said he is offering owners of private aircraft "every opportunity" to contest his appraised valuations on the aircraft.

What ultimately may lead to a hike in the tax rate may be launched in April when Pritchard & Abbott, valuation engineers, are to begin a re-appraisal of the minerals and oil-related property, including drilling rigs and pipe, throughout the county. Later, in the fall of the year, Wilkinson's staff is to start a re-appraisal of other property, including houses, buildings, apartments and other real estate.

Wilkinson anticipates a lowering of property values.

"I think you may see the (tax) rates go higher," said Wilkinson.

Were evaluations to increase, then the tax rates would "go down," he observed but didn't suggest that would happen this year. Rather, he predicted the opposite.

Currently, the combined tax rate, excluding Greenwood Independent School District, is $1.56 per $100 valuation. That is the tax rate applicable to city dwellers, and revenue thereby collected goes to the city of Midland, Midland Independent School District, Midland College, Midland County Hospital District and Midland County. The Greenwood ISD tax rate is $1.30.

"The critical factor is always the tax rate," he said. "It's not the valuations."

Midland woman seeks donations of wire for birds' cages at clinic

A Midland woman is seeking donations of cage wire for the Eos Bird Rehabilitation clinic on West Golf Course Road.

The non-profit clinic, operated by federally licensed bird rehabilitator Midge Erskine, needs about 3,100 square feet of special chicken-wire type screening called "hardware cloth" for new aviaries to house rare and protected species of diseased, injured and poisoned birds brought to the clinic for treatment.

Mary Menefee, who is seeking the donations, said the government mandates the type of wire used in the keeping of the birds. More information can be obtained by calling her at 687-2442.

Two hurt in car-train wreck

ODESSA — An Odessa man and his son were injured in a car-train wreck here early Wednesday night.

In critical condition at Medical Center Hospital this morning was 31-year-old Ponciano Torres Jr. He suffered multiple fractures in the accident, according to police, who said it occurred at the Pool Road and Industrial Avenue crossing about 8 p.m.

In stable condition with undisclosed injuries was Torres' son, 12-year-old Ponciano Torres III.

Police said the older Torres was the driver of a westbound 1979 Buick that struck the engine of a northbound train which was in the crossing at the time. The crossing is equipped with signs but no lights.

Bill to aid farmers left pending by committee

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation requiring the state to match federal funds paid toward the premium farmers have to pay if they want crop insurance was left pending Wednesday by the Senate Natural Resources Committee.

"This would encourage farmers to get some protection on their crops," said Amarillo Sen. Bill Sarpalius, sponsor of the bill, who told the committee that premiums farmers who participate in the program pay would be cut nearly in half.

Federal funds currently pay for 30 percent of the program's cost, but Sarpalius' SB 608 would require the state to match the amount paid by the federal government to the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation in Washington, D.C. The corporation, an agency set up under the U.S. Department of Agriculture, insures farmers' crops against losses caused by bad weather, disease and insects.

"It's up to the individual farmer to decide if he wants to take advantage of this program," Sarpualius noted, adding he believes more farmers would insure themselves if the legislation is approved.

About 10 percent of eligible Texas farmers bought crop insurance through the program in 1981, said Merritt Sprague, manager of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. "This bill would substantially increase participation," he said, noting the national rate of participation is double the statewide rate.

"If the state involves itself in this subsidy, our corporation is prepared to minimize the administrative expenses," Sprague testified. "We don't expect to make money (on the program), but we expect to break even."

Walter Cox, a farmer from Abernathy who grows wheat, cotton and soybeans, among other crops, said he "would not be here today if not for federal crop insurance." He said he has had "several" losses due to hail storms.

C.L. Edwards, an officer in the Texas Wheat Producers Association, also testified in support of the measure. Edwards raises wheat, milo and cattle on 1,800 cares near the Panhandle.

Other groups appearing in support of SB 608 were the Texas Citrus Mutual group of McAllen, the Southwestern Crop Association of Big Spring, Producers Lloyds Insurance Company of Amarillo, the Federal Land Bank of Texas and the Texas Farmers Union.

"I think it's a good program," said Ray Prewett, executive vice president of Texas Citrus Mutual. "It's a good investment of state dollars."

Mike Moeller, president of the Texas Farmers Union, said the state is "number one in terms of natural disaster" and "needs to play a primary role in the direction of the program." Such a role should be a financial one, he said.

No one appeared to testify against the legislation.

Moss Creek Reservoir ready for Midland's anglers

HOWARD COUNTY — Spring: it's a Huck Finn season ideal for tossing a hook into the water and reclining on the bank.

Midlanders lured by that hope of relaxation and sport can find fulfillment at Moss Creek Reservoir, whose cedar-strewn bluffs and rippling waters lie an hour's drive east of the Tall City. Always a pleasant escape for water-hungry West Texans, the lake now holds the promise of stringers filled to the gills.

"The lake's full and the fish are just beginning to bite now," said lake ranger Jim Byers. "They're catching crappie, channel cat and walleye, and the lake temperature is 51 degrees. When it gets up there around 60 we'll catch some bass."

Texas Wildlife Department conducted a shocking test on the bass population in October and determined it to be average for a lake of Moss Creek's size, he noted.

Best baits this time of year for crappie, said the ranger, are small minnows; for walleye, orange or crawfish-colored crank baits, large minnows and yellow and white jigs; and for channel cat, chicken livers, minnows and stink baits.

"We're beginning to have quite a few fishermen," said Byers. "I look forward to seeing those Midland people and Odessa too, and we'll have a bunch of 'em."

The swimming area will open in May.

Open for day use at 50 cents per person from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. as well as for camping, the lake can be reached by taking the Moss Lake Road exit off IS-20 at the 4.5 mile mark east of Big Spring and following the blacktop highway 5 miles south. Boats and motors of all sizes are permitted, though a "no wake" rule is enforced. Visitors who camp at shelters or primitive sites must furnish their own firewood.

Fishing supplies, bait and groceries are available at a store near the lake entrance.

Police search for robbers

ODESSA — Police here are searching for two men who reportedly held up the Tradeway Grocery at 1503 West County Road early this morning.

A clerk told officers one of two Hispanics who came into the store about 4 a.m. pulled a knife and forced her to turn over a money bag that was kept under the counter.

They then fled on foot with an undisclosed amount of cash. One of the men was further described as being 35 to 40 years old with curly brown hair and armed with a white-handled paring knife.

The other was in his late teens or early 20s and wore a blue stocking cap and blue jacket. Both were clean-shaven and stood about 5 feet, 5 inches tall.

education in brief

Midland College offers courses in driving, painting, cooking

Defensive Driving, Watercolor, Typing Brush Up, Microwave Candies and Desserts and Microwave Cooking II will be offered by the MC Department of Community Services beginning the week of March 21.

Defensive Driving will meet from 6:30 to 10:30 p.m. March 21-22. Fee for the classes is $18.

Judy Morrison-Griffin will teach Watercolor techniques from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Mondays for six weeks. The class will cover use of transparent water colors, composition and perspective. Students are requested to bring paper, brushes, color and water container to the first class meeting. Class size is limited to 16 students and the fee is $23.

Typing Brush Up, taught by Maxine Jarnagin, will meet from 5:30 to 7 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays for six weeks. Included will be familiarization with electric machines, keyboards, machine parts, typing techniques and tabulations. A prior typing course is required. Students may purchase books and supplies at the MC Bookstore. The class is limited to 25 students and the fee is $29.

Rita Nell Diffie will teach Microwave Candies and Desserts from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. March 23. Students will divide into groups to make peanut brittle, fudge, buttermilk pralines, millionaires, s'mores, divinity, cheesecake and toffee. The class is limited to 35 students and the fee is $8.

Microwave Cooking II, also taught by Ms. Diffie, will meet from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. March 24. The course is a continuation of Microwave Cooking I and offers more detailed information on the microwave oven. Three full meals will be prepared and party snack preparation will be included. Fee for the class is $8.

Further information may be obtained by calling the MC Department of Community Services, 684-7851, extension 147 or 216.

Students named to honor roll

About 30 students were named to the A honor roll for the fourth six-week period at Alamo Junior High School.

Seventh graders include Julie Ballard, Rhonda Brice, Katy Bufler, Traci Dawkins, Michelle Forsman, Staci Hargrave, Stephanie Jenkins, Jacquelyn Jones, Kelly King, John Kramer, Jeffrey Mcanally, Lisa Schwamkrug, Robin Skiles, Ami Smith, Eric Smith and Tanya Woolley.

Eighth graders were Elizabeth Barakat, Rodney Clark, Sherene Cooper, Vanessa Davis, Billi Jo Harder, Tracie Marshall, Kathryn McCasland, Cynthia Porter, Melanie Presley, Melanie Richardson, Brenda Rodriquez and Kristi Shelton.

Lee senior chosen for Who's Who

Sofia Ruiz, of 411 N. Dallas St., was selected for inclusion in the 1983 edition of Who's Who in American High Schools.

The senior at Lee High School is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Soloman Ruiz.

MC offers marine ecology course

A two-week field study course of marine ecology is being offered by Midland College May 14-28.

The credit course includes field observations and identifications of shore and reef animals, surveys of the ecology and geology of the Pacific coast and study of Western desert ecology.

Deadline for registration is April 1, with a $50 non-returnable deposit required that will be applied to the total cost of $225. The fee includes tuition, round-trip transportation by college van, two nights in motels, camping fees, museum and park fees and meals. Students are responsible for own personal expenses.

Stops include points of interest in Tuscon, Ariz., San Diego and Los Angeles, Calif.

Additional information may be obtained from Dr. David Frailey, geology instructor, at 684-7851, extension 161.

MISD highlights physical education

The Midland Independent School District will hold a Physical Education Night from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Monday at Lee High School gymnasium.

MISD students in the fourth through sixth grades and motor development classes from Bowie, Sam Houston and Rusk elementary school will demonstrate a variety of physical education activities. Included will be aerobics, jump roping and square dancing.

The first-time event is being held in conjunction with Physical Education Month in March and will demonstrate to parents and interested citizens the many-faceted MISD physical education program.

PTA awards life memberships

At a recent meeting of the Rusk Elementary School PTA, Principal William Sherman awarded three PTA Life Memberships.

Receiving the honors were Nancy Shaw, Rusk PTA president; Betty Holland, Rusk crossing guard for the past five years; and Naomi Norton, fifth grade teacher at Rusk.

MC students to attend symposium

Three Midland College students were selected to participate in the 14th annual Student Symposium, "Shaping the Presidency: Parties, Personalities, Press," April 7-10, in Washington, D.C.

Joe Carrasco Jr., of 3103 Sentinel; Stephanie Roper, of 2004 W. Indiana; and Bruce Quenzer, of 3330 Providence, will be accompanied by Dr. Jerry Franks, MC government instructor.

The symposium will include visits and panel discussions with either President Reagan or Vice President George Bush, Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, Sen. Charles H. Percy and Gen. John W. Vessey Jr., as well as noted journalists.

Gas Conditioning Course to be held

ODESSA — The University of Texas at Austin's Petroleum Extension Service, located at the Odessa Training Center on the campus of Odessa College, will offer a one-week Gas Conditioning Course beginning April 4.

Classes will meet from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 8 to 11 a.m. Friday. Fee for the course is $250, which includes all books and materials.

The course offers instruction for operating personnel in the minimum work performance expected in the field of gas conditioning. The course should enable an employee to be more effective, efficient and safety-minded and reduce operating costs. Topics covered will include gas characteristics, inlet separator, measurement, natural gas hydrates, natural gas sweetening by absorption, dehydration and sweetening by absorption, dehydration with glycol, instrumentation, gas quality and related instrumentation and safety.

For more information or to register, call the Odessa Training Center at 337-8042.

White won't support state museum project

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says he won't back a state museum to celebrate the Texas Sesquicentennial, even if the project is divorced from Gov. Bill Clements' dream of a state art museum.

The Sesquicentennial Museum Board told legislators the museum should be built, but it should be a science and technology museum that will draw industry to Texas — not a fine arts museum that will have to compete in a crowded, "elitist" market.

"I think we have higher priorities that call upon our scarce tax dollars," Gov. Mark White said Wednesday. "One of those is restoration of our Capitol."

Last week, White struck the proposed $60 million museum from his budget plan, as did the Legislative Budget Board last December. After the Feb. 6 fire at the Capitol, White had proposed turning the whole sesquicentennial into a project "to restore the Capitol's original architectural integrity and beauty."

"I think that would be one of the greatest presents that could be given to the people of Texas for the celebration of the 150th anniversary of our independence," said White.

Two legislators are seeking funding this session for an alternative science and technology museum, but lawmakers have taken no action on either proposal and are not expected to in view of projections of possible tax increases just to cover current programs.

Even the Sesquicentennial Museum Board itself has decided the state does not need nor can afford a state art museum, but in an effort to save itself has suggested a science and technology museum — actually a permanent trade show.

In 1981, Clements told museum planners he wanted the museum to be "a first-class, top-flight facility — the kind of facility the Mellon family would donate a million-dollar art collection to."

But it did not take the museum board long to hear from directors of fine arts museums around the state who informed them that such an eventuality was highly unlikely.

The board's own analysts, the Management Strategy Group, reported last December that running a fine arts museum is not so easy.

"There is a real question whether the state, using public funds and taxpayers' money, should become involved in the bidding process that is sometimes necessary to acquire fine pieces of art," they reported.

White adds to running feud between Texas, Alaska

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says he was only kidding when he slighed a certain northern state that is bigger than Texas, but some irate Alaskans apparently took him seriously.

White said Wednesday he was "delighted" that an Anchorage radio station was running a rather uncomplimentary song dedicated to him, but that it was all a misunderstanding of a compliment he tried to make.

Last month, White told an audience of local government officials in College Station that Alaska was trying to lure Texans to vacation there, but that he did not know "why anyone would want to go to that cold, barren place."

Employees of station KFQD responded with the song, sung to the tune of "The Yellow Rose of Texas," with lyrics, in part:

"He can talk about his oil wells and 'bout the Rio Grande,

"But nothing can compare to our great Alaska land.

"The biggest thing in Texas, that small state way down south,

"The biggest thing to see there is Gov. Mark White's mouth."

White said the Alaskans apparently don't know a compliment when they hear one.

Children excercise classes turns into lucrative franchise business

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

A large parachute in rainbow colors occupies many Gymboree children, ages 1 to 2 1/2, at one time as their mothers flutter the edges. Gymboree exercise classes for children are part of a lucrative and growing franchise business.

More than a half century ago, a two-year survey by the University of Chicago and the United YMCA Schools showed that health was the prime interest of adults — a continuing fact of life that many enterpreneuers are capitalizing on.

Within the last seven years, the birth rate, down sharply after the baby boom of post-World War II years, has begun to inch upward. Many of the mothers were career women, in their mid-30s and relatively affluent.

A current business trend that taps the interest in health, rising birth rate and middle-class parents with discretionary income is the baby gym — the first of which was Gymboree.

Lynda and Keith Farrell became the latest owners of one of the most unusual and potentialy lucrative franchises in America when they opened Gymboree centers here in an Arcadia church building and in the nearby Sierra Madre Community Center in January.

Founded in the San Francisco Bay Area by Joan Barnes, a mother and recreation instructoru10,000 children in classes on the East and West coasts.

It was launched in 1976 with a $6,000 investment for equipment. Last year, on sales of $340,000, the company earned a profit of $23,000, which it reinvested along with $300,000 raised from U.S. Venture Partners of Menlo Park, Calif.

Barnes projects this year's earnings at $400,000 and sales at $1.1 million, derived from franchise fees, royalties and earnings from company-owned centers. Martin Boehm, research analyst for the International Franchise Association based in Washington, D.C., said, "This is a unique business and one that will grow because of the baby boom and the interest in personal health. This is the first step toward applying that to the children's market."

The franchise is unique, Boehm said, because the franchisee can make it a part-time job by opening just one center and because the price per site is $16,000, on the low side for a franchise. He also sees it as a long-range trend rather than a fad.

"People are taking care of themselves more so it doesn't look like a flash in the pan to me," he said.

The program, generaly held in church halls and community buildings and requiring at least one parent to accompany their children — all of which keeps overhead low — involves a 45-minute class once a week for a 12-week session costing $48. Classes are held for three age categories — Babygym for children ages three months to a year, Gymboree for the 1 to 2 1-2-year-olds, and Gymgrad for those ages 2 1-2 to 4. The children spend most of the time with their mothers playing on a variety of equipment designed to develop motor skills. The equipment can be adapted for all three age groups but Gymboree is the most popular.

The company, founded in 1976, turned to franchising in 1979 and last year obtained venture capital to expand. Karen Anderson, vice president for public affairs, said, "Up to last July we never solicicted a franchise and we had 32. Now we have 54 centers with 18 more scheduled to open and we project we will sell another 120 by the end of the year." add

Most of the franchisees were women who had young children of their own. A Gymboree center offered a great deal of flexibility because it only required 15 to 20 hours a week for teaching and administration. If the franchisee wanted a full-time business, she could buy a territory and open several centers, hiring teachers for the other sites.

Now, Anderson said, the trend is toward couples buying a territory as a full-time business. Generally the wife teaches at one or two of the centers and the husband handles the administrative work.

"The franchisees get an intensive week of training and promotional material and we periodically visit them and update training to assure quality," Anderson said.

Last summer Lynda Farrell took her two children, ages 3 years and 16 months, to a Gymboree center in Los Angeles' San Fernando Valley. She was not only impressed with the program, but she and her husband, Keith, had sold some rental property and were looking for a franchise as an investment. So they became the owners of the next Los Angeles County franchise.

The Farrells have 17 classes at the two sites, 12 in the morning and five in the evening for working parents. The maximum number of children enrolled in a class is 20.

The company's brochures describe Gymboree as "a unique movement-play program for children 3 months to 4 years and their parents designed to develop the critical skills needed for future learning. Since children learn through movement and play, it is essential to adequately stimulate these skills and the sensory systems in these formative years."

On the 30 to 40 pieces of play equipment, including climbers, slides, rocky boats (a boat-shaped rocker) and a tunnel, children enjoy such free form play as jumping, sliding, climbing, balancing and hanging by their hands.

Child development specialists seem less than enthusiastic about the centers.

Lucille Wilson, coordinator of the children services department for the Pasadena Unified School District, said she thought the concept was a great idea but she questioned the necessity of parents paying for development of their children's motor skills.

"This type of program is very good for young children because motor skills development is extremely important," Wilson said. "It is also important that the parent learn by observing the child."

Snoring may be symptom of 'sleep apnea'

By The Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES – For decades, people have searched for ways to stop snoring, employing such devices as clothespins, chin straps and harnesses in desperate attempts to silence the obnoxious noise.

Compared with more serious medical problems, snoring may not seem like a particularly dangerous malady. But besides the obvious social stigma, heavy snoring may be a symptom of a more dangerous disorder known as sleep apnea in which victims stop breathing briefly during the night, according to a recent study at Stanford University.

Surgeons at Stanford are reporting success with a new procedure – described by doctors as a "facelift for the throat" – which either stops snoring completely or at least lowers it to acceptable decibel levels. Preliminary findings from a study of 150 men and women who underwent the surgery to curb chronic snoring were presented Monday at the California Medical Association convention here by Dr. Lee Smith, an instructor in head and neck surgery at Stanford.

In all but one of the cases looked at so far, the surgery solved the snoring problem, Smith said, and in half the cases the procedure cured sleep apnea, a condition that can lead to high blood pressure, hallucinations, insomnia, and in rare instances congestive heart failure and death.

Smith explained that heavy snoring is caused by a partial collapse of the throat during sleep. By removing the lining of the throat near the tonsils and part of the soft palate, surgeons tighten up the throat, thus cutting off the "velovibratory noises."

Cautioning that surgeons shouldn't perform the procedure without carefully screening patients – "You can't just whip out part of the throat in every snorer" – Smith nonetheless noted: "I think that if used properly it would help a lot of people."

The volunteers for the Stanford study now being done by Smith and Stanford professors F. Blair Simmons and Christian Guilleminault weren't just run-of-the-mill snorers. Some volunteers could be heard snoring three rooms away from the one in which they slept.

Many of the subjects told researchers how snoring was ruining their lives, leading to divorces, domestic violence, even fights between neighbors. Smith recounted one story: "A man came in who said he was a duck hunter. He said his friends wouldn't let him in the hunt club anymore because he snored so loudly that they couldn't sleep at night so they couldn't wake up early enough in the morning."

Acording to recent studies, between 2 percent and 5 percent of the population snores heavily. Roughly twice as many men snore as women, and the problem gets worse with age. Men aged 50 to 70 are the most likely to be loud snorers.

Meatless sandwiches not always boring

Copley News Service

If you're a brown-bagger who's getting tired of the same old peanut butter or cheese sandwiches day after day, it's time for a change. With a little ingenuity, you can pack your lunch box or bag with something delightfully different every day of the week.

Many non-vegetarians assume that our sandwich repertoire is limited, but this is far from the truth. We do not use bologna or pastrami or many of the ingredients traditionally associated with the sandwich in meat eaters' minds. But we do have the whole range of cheeses, vegetables and nuts to choose from. These can be combined in any number of ways (witness Curried Tofu in Pita Bread), to make sandwiches which are as aesthetically pleasing as they are delicious. Even egg salad can be perked up with a sprinkling of dill weed and some finely chopped celery.

Plain cheese sandwiches benefit greatly from the addition of fresh sprouts. The sprouts give a crunchy texture otherwise lacking and besides, they look pretty.

IF YOU'RE BORED by peanut butter, try addings bits of apple or banana, a combination particularly popular with children.

Don't be afraid to experiment — you might be pleasantly surprised by some serendipitous combination.

MEATLESS CORNISH PASTIES

½ lb. potatoes
½ lb. turnips
½ lb. carrots
½ lb. parsnips
1 clove garlic
2 medium onions, sliced
Oil for frying
Pinch of salt
Pepper to taste
1¼ cup grated cheddar
1 large pinch thyme
½ cup margarine or butter
2 cups whole wheat flour

Scrub well the potatoes, turnips, carrots and parsnips. Cut into egg-sized hunks and boil for about 20 minutes until all are soft. Drain. Meanwhile, crush garlic clove and peel and slice onions and fry in small amount of oil until soft. Add to the other vegetables. Add salt, pepper, thyme and half of the cheese and mash and stir with a fork until mixed well but not pureed. Set aside to cool.

Blend butter or margarine into the flour and mix in remainder of cheese. Mix to a dough with water and divide mixture into four pieces. Shape each piece into a ball and roll out into a circle about 6 inches in diameter. Put two heaping tablespoons of the vegetable mixture across the middle of each circle, leaving 1 inch uncovered at each end. Dampen around the edges of the circle and then bring the two sides together, pinching the pastry well together so that it forms a ridge across the top. Bend the ridge one way and then the other at 1-inch intervals, for strength as well as decoration. Bake for 30 minutes at 400 F. (Do not let them get too brown.)

CURRIED TOFU IN PITA BREAD

2 tbsps. vegetable oil
2 cups sliced mushrooms
1½ cup sliced onions
½ cup thinly sliced carrots
2 cups shredded cabbage
2 cups mashed tofu
6 tbsps. butter or margarine
2 tbsps. whole wheat flour
1 cup water
1 tsp. curry powder
½ tsp. salt
6 whole wheat pita breads (7-inch diameter); each cut in half

Heat oil in large skillet; add mushrooms and saute for 2 minutes. Add onion and carrots, and saute for 2 more minutes. Add cabbage, saute for another 2 minutes and remove from heat. Melt 2½ tablespoons butter or margarine in small skillet. Add flour and saute, stirring, until browned. Mix in curry powder and salt, then add water slowly, stirring constantly. Cook and stir for 1 minute, then mix in tofu and cook for 1 minute more.

In a large bowl, combine tofu-curry mixture with fried vegetable mixture, stirring well. In the large skillet, heat 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Add three pita bread halves and fry for about 2 minutes on each side, or until golden brown, then remove from skillet and brown other three pitas. Let them cool 5 minutes, then stuff with tofu-vegetable mixture. Serve hot or cold.

Folk remedies play role in modern medicine

SAN DIEGO (AP) — If you have rheumatism, migraine headaches or kidney disease, you may be taking drugs that are derived from poke weed, fungus and other plants prescribed by folk doctors 200 years ago, according to Dr. Ned Heindel of Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa.

He told a recent meeting of the American Chemical Society here that approximately one quarter of all prescribed drugs in this country have their roots in folk remedies.

"There are very few medicines today that are actually extracts of plants, but the idea for many of the drugs we use today came from folk manuals describing the use of different herbs and roots for everything from rashes to rheumatism," he said.

Over the years, scientists have learned that there really is something to certain of these remedies. They have been able to make the active ingredients in the plants synthetically and in some cases improve upon them to make them more effective, he said.

For headaches, folk medicine practitioners were likely to prescribe a few good chews on the bark of either willow or birch. Although Heindel does not recommend this practice, he says it does provide some relief because the bark of these plants contains a chemical called salicin that is very similar in structure to aspirin.

But for the more severe migraine headache, folk doctors were apt to prescribe a teaspoon or two of the fungus ergot. According to Heindel, the plant contains a chemical called ergotamine that was, and still is, the best known cure for migraines.

It works by causing dilated blood vessels associated with headaches to constrict. The drug is widely prescribed in this country for migraine and is administered either orally or as an intramuscular injection.

If you have high blood pressure, says Heindel, you may be taking a drug that is actually isolated from a plant called rauwolfia serpentine, that was used for generations by Indians to attain dream or trance states. The active ingredient in the plant, called reserpine, can be made synthetically, but drug companies find it easier to isolate it directly from the plant for use in their high blood pressure medications.

Another remedy popular among Indians and also the Chinese, is garlic. Americans have confined the use of this herb to food preparation, but elsewhere in the world it takes on the more serious task of healing skin problems, ear drum perforations, and treating coronary artery disease. Strange as it may sound, there may be some scientific validity behind this practice, said Heindel.

Children excercise classes turns into lucrative franchise business

A large parachute in rainbow colors occupies many Gymboree children, ages 1 to 2 1/2, at one time as their mothers flutter the edges. Gymboree exercise classes for children are part of a lucrative and growing franchise business.

More than a half century ago, a two-year survey by the University of Chicago and the United YMCA Schools showed that health was the prime interest of adults — a continuing fact of life that many enterpreneuers are capitalizing on.

Within the last seven years, the birth rate, down sharply after the baby boom of post-World War II years, has begun to inch upward. Many of the mothers were career women, in their mid-30s and relatively affluent.

A current business trend that taps the interest in health, rising birth rate and middle-class parents with discretionary income is the baby gym — the first of which was Gymboree.

Lynda and Keith Farrell became the latest owners of one of the most unusual and potentialy lucrative franchises in America when they opened Gymboree centers here in an Arcadia church building and in the nearby Sierra Madre Community Center in January.

Founded in the San Francisco Bay Area by Joan Barnes, a mother and recreation instructoru10,000 children in classes on the East and West coasts.

It was launched in 1976 with a $6,000 investment for equipment. Last year, on sales of $340,000, the company earned a profit of $23,000, which it reinvested along with $300,000 raised from U.S. Venture Partners of Menlo Park, Calif.

Barnes projects this year's earnings at $400,000 and sales at $1.1 million, derived from franchise fees, royalties and earnings from company-owned centers. Martin Boehm, research analyst for the International Franchise Association based in Washington, D.C., said, "This is a unique business and one that will grow because of the baby boom and the interest in personal health. This is the first step toward applying that to the children's market."

The franchise is unique, Boehm said, because the franchisee can make it a part-time job by opening just one center and because the price per site is $16,000, on the low side for a franchise. He also sees it as a long-range trend rather than a fad.

"People are taking care of themselves more so it doesn't look like a flash in the pan to me," he said.

The program, generaly held in church halls and community buildings and requiring at least one parent to accompany their children — all of which keeps overhead low — involves a 45-minute class once a week for a 12-week session costing $48. Classes are held for three age categories — Babygym for children ages three months to a year, Gymboree for the 1 to 2 1-2-year-olds, and Gymgrad for those ages 2 1-2 to 4. The children spend most of the time with their mothers playing on a variety of equipment designed to develop motor skills. The equipment can be adapted for all three age groups but Gymboree is the most popular.

The company, founded in 1976, turned to franchising in 1979 and last year obtained venture capital to expand. Karen Anderson, vice president for public affairs, said, "Up to last July we never solicicted a franchise and we had 32. Now we have 54 centers with 18 more scheduled to open and we project we will sell another 120 by the end of the year." add

Most of the franchisees were women who had young children of their own. A Gymboree center offered a great deal of flexibility because it only required 15 to 20 hours a week for teaching and administration. If the franchisee wanted a full-time business, she could buy a territory and open several centers, hiring teachers for the other sites.

Now, Anderson said, the trend is toward couples buying a territory as a full-time business. Generally the wife teaches at one or two of the centers and the husband handles the administrative work.

"The franchisees get an intensive week of training and promotional material and we periodically visit them and update training to assure quality," Anderson said.

Last summer Lynda Farrell took her two children, ages 3 years and 16 months, to a Gymboree center in Los Angeles' San Fernando Valley. She was not only impressed with the program, but she and her husband, Keith, had sold some rental property and were looking for a franchise as an investment. So they became the owners of the next Los Angeles County franchise.

The Farrells have 17 classes at the two sites, 12 in the morning and five in the evening for working parents. The maximum number of children enrolled in a class is 20.

The company's brochures describe Gymboree as "a unique movement-play program for children 3 months to 4 years and their parents designed to develop the critical skills needed for future learning. Since children learn through movement and play, it is essential to adequately stimulate these skills and the sensory systems in these formative years."

On the 30 to 40 pieces of play equipment, including climbers, slides, rocky boats (a boat-shaped rocker) and a tunnel, children enjoy such free form play as jumping, sliding, climbing, balancing and hanging by their hands.

Child development specialists seem less than enthusiastic about the centers.

Lucille Wilson, coordinator of the children services department for the Pasadena Unified School District, said she thought the concept was a great idea but she questioned the necessity of parents paying for development of their children's motor skills.

"This type of program is very good for young children because motor skills development is extremely important," Wilson said. "It is also important that the parent learn by observing the child."

Plain cheese sandwiches benefit greatly from the addition of fresh sprouts. The sprouts give a crunchy texture otherwise lacking and besides, they look pretty.

IF YOU'RE BORED by peanut butter, try addings bits of apple or banana, a combination particularly popular with children.

Don't be afraid to experiment — you might be pleasantly surprised by some serendipitous combination.

MEATLESS CORNISH PASTIES

½ lb. potatoes
½ lb. turnips
½ lb. carrots
½ lb. parsnips
1 clove garlic
2 medium onions, sliced
Oil for frying
Pinch of salt
Pepper to taste
1¼ cup grated cheddar
1 large pinch thyme
½ cup margarine or butter
2 cups whole wheat flour

Scrub well the potatoes, turnips, carrots and parsnips. Cut into egg-sized hunks and boil for about 20 minutes until all are soft. Drain. Meanwhile, crush garlic clove and peel and slice onions and fry in small amount of oil until soft. Add to the other vegetables. Add salt, pepper, thyme and half of the cheese and mash and stir with a fork until mixed well but not pureed. Set aside to cool.

Blend butter or margarine into the flour and mix in remainder of cheese. Mix to a dough with water and divide mixture into four pieces. Shape each piece into a ball and roll out into a circle about 6 inches in diameter. Put two heaping tablespoons of the vegetable mixture across the middle of each circle, leaving 1 inch uncovered at each end. Dampen around the edges of the circle and then bring the two sides together, pinching the pastry well together so that it forms a ridge across the top. Bend the ridge one way and then the other at 1-inch intervals, for strength as well as decoration. Bake for 30 minutes at 400 F. (Do not let them get too brown.)

CURRIED TOFU IN PITA BREAD

2 tbsps. vegetable oil
2 cups sliced mushrooms
1½ cup sliced onions
½ cup thinly sliced carrots
2 cups shredded cabbage
2 cups mashed tofu
6 tbsps. butter or margarine
2 tbsps. whole wheat flour
1 cup water
1 tsp. curry powder
½ tsp. salt
6 whole wheat pita breads (7-inch diameter); each cut in half

Heat oil in large skillet; add mushrooms and saute for 2 minutes. Add onion and carrots, and saute for 2 more minutes. Add cabbage, saute for another 2 minutes and remove from heat. Melt 2½ tablespoons butter or margarine in small skillet. Add flour and saute, stirring, until browned. Mix in curry powder and salt, then add water slowly, stirring constantly. Cook and stir for 1 minute, then mix in tofu and cook for 1 minute more.

In a large bowl, combine tofu-curry mixture with fried vegetable mixture, stirring well. In the large skillet, heat 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Add three pita bread halves and fry for about 2 minutes on each side, or until golden brown, then remove from skillet and brown other three pitas. Let them cool 5 minutes, then stuff with tofu-vegetable mixture. Serve hot or cold.

Folk remedies play role in modern medicine

SAN DIEGO (AP) — If you have rheumatism, migraine headaches or kidney disease, you may be taking drugs that are derived from poke weed, fungus and other plants prescribed by folk doctors 200 years ago, according to Dr. Ned Heindel of Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa.

He told a recent meeting of the American Chemical Society here that approximately one quarter of all prescribed drugs in this country have their roots in folk remedies.

"There are very few medicines today that are actually extracts of plants, but the idea for many of the drugs we use today came from folk manuals describing the use of different herbs and roots for everything from rashes to rheumatism," he said.

Over the years, scientists have learned that there really is something to certain of these remedies. They have been able to make the active ingredients in the plants synthetically and in some cases improve upon them to make them more effective, he said.

For headaches, folk medicine practitioners were likely to prescribe a few good chews on the bark of either willow or birch. Although Heindel does not recommend this practice, he says it does provide some relief because the bark of these plants contains a chemical called salicin that is very similar in structure to aspirin.

But for the more severe migraine headache, folk doctors were apt to prescribe a teaspoon or two of the fungus ergot. According to Heindel, the plant contains a chemical called ergotamine that was, and still is, the best known cure for migraines.

It works by causing dilated blood vessels associated with headaches to constrict. The drug is widely prescribed in this country for migraine and is administered either orally or as an intramuscular injection.

If you have high blood pressure, says Heindel, you may be taking a drug that is actually isolated from a plant called rauwolfia serpentine, that was used for generations by Indians to attain dream or trance states. The active ingredient in the plant, called reserpine, can be made synthetically, but drug companies find it easier to isolate it directly from the plant for use in their high blood pressure medications.

Another remedy popular among Indians and also the Chinese, is garlic. Americans have confined the use of this herb to food preparation, but elsewhere in the world it takes on the more serious task of healing skin problems, ear drum perforations, and treating coronary artery disease. Strange as it may sound, there may be some scientific validity behind this practice, said Heindel.

Writer's 'spirit guides' lead to best sellers

Copley News Service

Unless she's traveling or has overslept, Ruth Montgomery begins each day with a briefing from Lily and Art, and the group.

Those who have been reading Montgomery's books on psychic phenomena over the past 17 years would know all about Lily, Art et al.

But for the uninitiated, Lily (a man) and the rest of the group — which has included psychic Arthur Ford since his death in 1971 — are Montgomery's spirit guides.

They speak to her through the medium of automatic writing, telling her of life "on the other side" (the spirit world) and of the future of this world and what must be done to prepare for it.

Montgomery, who is a member of the Psychic Register, is a former journalist on political affairs, whose books on psychic phenomena have sold in the tens of thousands in hardcover and in the hundreds of thousands in paperback.

Montgomery, who wrote one of her early books about psychic Jeanne Dixon, has done some predicting of her own over the years, largely in the realm of politics and world events, which had been her specialty as a journalist. (Her predictions are those of her spirit guides, she explains.)

IN 1970 HER "GUIDES" told her that Teddy Kennedy would never be president and in 1973 that Jimmy Carter would be president. In her book, "The World Before," written in 1976, she reported that Teng Hsiao-ping would eventually become the leader of China.

On the other hand, in "Strangers Among Us," published in 1979, she said her guides — who appear to be of a staunchly conservative mold — told her that the Carter presidency would be followed by another Democrat who will pour so much into welfare and health insurance that the United States, heavily burdened by taxes, will, eventually, "face disarray on all sides."

(At that time, her guides assured her that the "fiscally irresponsible Democrat" who would be the next president was neither Carter, Ted Kennedy, Walter Mondale nor Jerry Brown. Of Brown, they said, "He is a stranger on this Earth, and not quite of it. He will gradually fade from the picture and will eventually go into a monastery.")

Then, in 1978, Montgomery's guides led her to another psychic phenomenon — that of the "walk-ins."

These are souls, says Montgomery, that enter the bodies of living people, replacing the original occupants. The original souls leave the bodies in near-death situations, or because of traumatic experiences or even deep depression which has taken away their desire to remain.

THE WALK-IN SOULS are strong, able, creative and idealistic, able to cope with problems too overwhelming for their predecessors, and with a track record in recent lives that has earned them the right to return.

Montgomery explained all about the walk-ins in her 1979 book, "Strangers Among Us." Now, in the newly published "Threshold to Tomorrow," she has told the stories of many of her walk-in friends, including a Solana Beach, Calif., woman, Carol Kimmel, who, Montgomery's guides say, will "become a gentle leader of the New Age people," and a Swedish scientist-inventor, Bjorn Ortenheim, whose body is now host to the soul of Alfred Einstein and who is supposedly using ancient secrets to develop new sources of energy. (The publishers of "Who's Who in Science" haven't caught up with this development, however, and have failed to list Ortenheim's name.)

Kimmel, Montgomery said, experienced the change-over when she was in a deep depression, feeling completely inadequate, and since being taken over has gone into a new field — working for a science research firm. (While Kimmel confirms the information in Montgomery's book, she is not ready to be interviewed about it and cope with publicity, she says.)

THERE'S NOTHING in the least ectoplasmic about the woman relating all this — save, perhaps, a whispy smile. But with her nicely arranged blonde hair and the creamy tailored pantsuit and watermelon blouse with a neat bow at the neck, the smile could be interpreted as the anxious look of a hostess welcoming friends to a little luncheon.

And, indeed, when Montgomery isn't getting information from her spirit guides — a process that takes up only 15 or 20 minutes of her day — or writing about her ever-widening circle of sensitives, walk-ins and other types found in the world of psychics, or participating in seminars, she is likely to be planning a little dinner party or cocktail party in her Washington home.

There, the guests are likely to be friends of her and her husband, Robert Montgomery, a retired corporate engineer. The Montgomerys lead the comfortable life of an upper middle-class retired couple, with enough money to entertain with frequent cocktail parties and small dinner parties at their Connecticut Avenue home.

"Bob's active in bowling, and he likes to spend time keeping tabs on our investments, and watching football on television, while I curl up and read," she said in an interview.

FOR ABOUT SIX years the couple lived away from Washington — in Cuernavaca, Mexico, where they enjoyed being part of the city's American colony, and where her husband belonged to a fancy croquet club, Montgomery said.

AT WIT'S END
Mature motherhood

By ERMA BOMBECK

Mothers are getting older in this country . . . even before they have the baby.

Some recent figures show that while teenagers are having fewer babies, the birthrate for women over 35 is increasing and will probably be up 46 percent during this decade.

I know, it probably sounds like a lot of fun having a baby who will sit around and connect liver spots on Mommy's arms, but in reality, there are a lot of problems older mothers haven't even considered.

For example, just when the baby is outgrowing his need for naps, you'll grow into them. When his teeth start growing in, yours will start coming out.

I've always felt there are two things a woman should never do after the age of 35: stand in a natural light and have a child who is learning how to play the trumpet. The aging process is not helped by a child who is learning how to play the trumpet.

Probably the worst adjustment will be when the babies grow into teenagers. For example, if a mother has a child at the age of 35, her son will begin to drive at age 16, making her 51 years old. Anyone knows this is too late for patience and too early to die. I have seen younger mothers carried comatose, their bodies rigid, their eyes glazed, from the passenger side of the car even before they left the driveway.

Probably the No. 1 complaint of mothers everywhere is exhaustion. Ask yourself how you will feel when you are going to bed when your teenager is going out and getting up when he is coming in.

I had children rather late. I'm not saying they crayoned on my Social Security check or took my electrocardiogram for Show and Tell, but there were times when communication between us was a glacier period apart.

It has thrown the entire traditional timetable off schedule. I will be the oldest grandmother in North America, if indeed I live to become one at all. There is no doubt in my mind I will race my grandchild for the baby food.

In Biblical and in Literary Classic times, mothers were 13 or 14 years old. Why? One can only speculate. The kids whined, "There's nothing to do," until their mother gave them something. They wanted to have children before it interfered with puberty. If they set an example, they could have an empty nest by the time they were 28.

I know. It's a great temptation to have a baby covered by Medicare, but if it were up to me, I'd resist it.

Shortcut quilts easy to make

Copley News Service

Print fabrics provide shortcuts to a wide variety of crafts. It's easy, for example, to make a print fabric look like a pieced-together quilt.

MATERIALS: Scarf or print fabrics; solid-color fabric for pillow back and/or borders; muslin or other fabric for backing; polyester batting; polyester fiberfill for pillow stuffing; sewing supplies.

CUTTING: For approximately 18x18-inch pillow or quilt block: 1. Cut 18x18-inch square from batting and backing. 2. For pillow, also cut one 18x18-inch square from pillow back. 3. For pillow front or quilt block, cut a square of print fabric no larger than 18x18 inches. 4. If your square is smaller than 18x18 inches, cut fabric borders from contrasting fabric as follows:

1. Measure difference between your print square and 18 inches. 2. Divide that figure in half, and add 1 inch for seam allowance. That is the width of your border strips. 3. Cut two 18-inch long border strips for sides. 4. Measure your print square. Cut two border strips to that measurement for top and bottom border.

STITCHING ON BORDER: (Note: If your square is already 18x18 inches, skip this section and go on to quilting directions.) 1. With right sides facing, pin short border strips to top and bottom of print square. Stitch ½ inch seams. Press seams open. 2. With right sides facing, pin long border strips to sides of print square. Stitch ½ inch seams. Press open seams.

QUILTING: 1. With right sides of print square on top, sandwich batting between print square and backing. 2. Baste a large X-shape through all three thicknesses. 3. Outline your print with machine-stitching. 4. If your square has a border, machine-stitch around edges.

PILLOW: 1. With right sides facing, stitch pillow front to pillow back. Leave small opening for turning. 2. Clip corners; trim batting close to seam; turn pillow right side out. 3. Stuff pillow with fiberfill. 4. Sew opening closed with tiny hem stitches.

DEAR ABBY

Cash gifts heartily endorsed

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've written to you three times in my life — so far — and two of my letters have appeared in your column. Not bad! Here goes again.

Re money gifts at weddings: Why not? So many young people live together for a while before they tie the knot and really don't need any more serving pieces, toasters or blenders.

We gave both of our nephews money for wedding gifts. One of them pooled all his cash gifts and used it for something he really needed — a sizable down payment on a car.

I think the "correct" thing to do in every situation is what is sensible and practical for the people involved.

Any gift given with love and consideration for the recipients is "correct" in my book. Who cares what the etiquette books say! — T.J.F. IN AGAWAM, MASS.

DEAR T.J.F.: I agree. But the etiquette books say that cash gifts ARE "correct." What is incorrect is a wedding invitation accompanied by the suggestion that a gift of cash is preferred. In other words, it's OK to GIVE cash, but it's not OK to ASK for it.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are having a knock-down, drag-out fight about a point of etiquette.

Here's the situation: My husband and I were dinner guests at the home of a couple in another city. On returning home the following day, we sent the hostess an exceptionally lovely arrangement of flowers to express our appreciation.

It's been two months, and we've heard nothing from the hostess to indicate that our flowers were received. (Never mind a "thank-you.") My husband maintains that our flowers were a "thank-you" for the dinner, and it's not necessary for her to thank us for having thanked her.

I say the hostess should have at least let us know our flowers were received. Who's right? — PEA PICKER'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: You are. The hostess should have acknowledged the flowers and thanked you for them.

DEAR ABBY: Your column featuring the questionnaire to determine whether you are an alcoholic brought tears to my eyes.

I remember taking that test a year ago at my second A.A. meeting. The results convinced me that I was an alcoholic and had to do something about it.

When I was 17, I found myself drinking Coffee Royals at 8:30 a.m. to face my day. I had been drinking and drugging since I was 12. I was a basket case.

I am 18 now, and I have not had a drink, or drugs of any kind, for nearly a year. Tomorrow will be my first anniversary!

Alcoholics Anonymous has definitely saved my life. I have everything going for me. I came from a life of hell, and today I have a hell of a life!

Thanks for constantly plugging A.A. That column made my day. — BOBBY S.

DEAR BOBBY: No thanks due me. A.A. threw you a lifeline. You caught it. Congratulations.

DEAR ABBY: In your column in the Toronto Sun, someone raised the old chestnut about whether a man should remove his hat in an elevator when there are ladies present.

I thought that was settled once and for all years ago by Emily Post — but I won't swear to it. This is the essence of her reply, though not the exact wording:

"An elevator is a means of transportation, in the same category as a local bus, subway, train or streetcar. The only difference is that an elevator travels vertically, rather than horizontally. A man does not remove his hat in other vehicles, so there is no necessity for him to remove it in an elevator."

You're welcome. — ARTHUR PICKERING, CANADIAN

Ginger Shrimp for special occasions

By The Associated Press

SUPPER FOR TWO Ginger Shrimp & Rice
Bean Sprouts & Snow Peas
Sweet Fried Nuts & Tea

GINGER SHRIMP

True ginger flavor comes through.

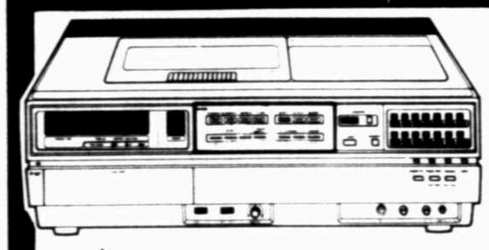

1 pound shrimp (about 17), peeled
1½ tablespoons very finely chopped fresh ginger
2 scallions, finely chopped
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon sugar
2½ tablespoons vegetable oil
3 tablespoons sherry

In a large bowl, mix together shrimp, 1 tablespoon of the ginger, scallions, salt and sugar; let stand for 30 minutes. In a wok or a large skillet, over moderately high heat, heat oil; add shrimp and marinade with the remaining ginger and stir-fry about 2 minutes. Stir in the sherry; cover pan; over low heat, cook just until shrimp are cooked through — about 2 more minutes. Serve at once.

Makes 2 servings.

Busboy files suit after trial

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — A former busboy says it's been hard to earn a living since a trial judge threw out a jury verdict that he had murdered 26 people in a fire at Stouffer's Inn.

But if he wins his $10 million civil suit against the authorities who accused him, Luis Marin's financial worries could be over.

On April 10, the Guatemala-born Marin was convicted on 26 counts of arson and murder in a Dec. 4, 1980 fire at a convention center at Stouffer's Inn in Harrison, N.Y.

Four days later, the anguished judge threw the verdict out and set Marin free, saying, "I have never sent a defendant to prison whose guilt has not been fully established and I never will."

"I love America! They make justice for me!" Marin said when Westchester County Judge Lawrence N. Martin cleared him of setting the fire that killed 26 businessmen.

Prosecutors, however, are pursuing an appeal of Martin's decision.

Carl Vergari, the county district attorney, has called the judge's ruling "the most upsetting experience I've had in 32 years of law enforcement."

"All the evidence clearly indicates that no other person in the world could have set that fire at that time," Vergari said in a recent interview.

Marin, however, insists, "I had nothing to do with that fire."

The 27-year-old Marin is suing Westchester County, county police, the Harrison police department and four local officials for what he says was harassment and violation of his civil rights during the investigation.

Authorities considered Marin the prime arson suspect from the beginning of their investigation. Hotel managers had learned of problems with his immigration status a few days before the blaze and may have angered Marin by telling him he was to lose his job.

Police followed Marin and questioned him repeatedly for four months before finally arresting him, and that has fueled his lawsuit.

It may be some time before the suit comes to trial. Marin's lawyers are waiting to confer with attorneys for Westchester County.

He has a green card giving him the legal right to work in this country, but says he just lost a job as a school janitor because he did not tell employers about the overturned conviction.

Feeding his wife and four children on his $150-a-week factory job is difficult. For the time being, he says he plans to "just pray. And behave."

Prosecutors tracked Marin's movements through the hotel conference center as he was setting up coffee service that morning for executives of Nestle, Arrow Electronics and United Brewers.

Friends meet at queen's fete

LOS ANGELES (AP) — At the recent dinner for Queen Elizabeth II at 20th Century-Fox Studios, two old friends met after several years apart: Fess Parker and Buddy Ebsen.

The two lanky actors were sidekicks in one of early television's most sensational programs, the Davy Crockett series on the Walt Disney show in 1954. Parker played Crockett, the man who created a craze for coonskin hats, and Ebsen was George Russel.

After a happy reunion, Ebsen said, "When I was working with Fess I never had to worry about a double chin. Fess was one actor I always looked up to."

Ebsen is 6-foot-3, but Parker is 6-foot-5.

KATUBA, Zaire — Lounging under parasols, breast-feeding their babies, several hundred women laugh and shout at the actors in the lively tradition of African theater. When the play ends, it's the cast's turn to shout questions at the audience.

The play is "Kwashiorkor," named for the protein-deficiency disease that kills tens of thousands of young Africans every year. The plot teaches mothers that kwashiorkor, which produces bloated bellies, reddish hair and stunted growth, comes from malnutrition, not an infection.

Tribal societies have for centuries employed fireside narratives and other forms of theater to pass on tribal history, morality and beliefs about the origin of man. Now, from Nigeria to Swaziland, Africa is turning to theater to teach basic health care, family planning, conservation and problem solving.

It's been particularly effective in the countryside, where there is no electricity to run movie projectors and television sets.

Accompanied by guitar and antelope-hide drums, the cast of the Mwondo Theater tells the story of "Kwashiorkor" in Swahili. It's not a lecture — the cast dances and sings, the crowd roars with laughter. African audiences like to get involved, and this is no exception.

The play is about a father who meets a prostitute in a bar and gives her his money. He returns home late and, when his wife won't open the door, he beats her. She runs away.

The next day, the father leaves his children with his sister, who has several children of her own and no husband.

"Mother, you know we never have enough. How can you let more people in?" one of the sister's children screams. Her children slap their cousins in the face when they try to eat.

One of the boys dies of malnutrition, and his father and mother accuse each other in his death.

A cast member steps in to say: "If a child does not have essential nutrients, he gets the type of disease the child died of. Also, you parents should not have so many children when you cannot feed them all properly."

He points at the audience and says, "There are women here who have twins but before they (the children) are one year old, (the women) are pregnant again."

The cast then asks the audience who was to blame, and a loud discussion begins.

Mobyem Mikanza, director of the National Theater of Zaire, which operates the Mwondo Theater, says the technique works "because many people are not educated. In the United States and Europe they can read books. Here they can't read.

"But with theater, they can see. They like drama. They like shows. This is why theater is so important. It can teach more than a book," he said.

Story lines are selected after villagers are polled, and often include joblessness, poor sanitation, alcoholism, family planning and the need for cooperation.

Botswana began a theater campaign in 1974 to try to overcome apathy in its remote northern areas. More conventional methods had failed. Zambia's Chikwakwa Traveling Theater has operated since 1971, shifting its emphasis from scripted plays to local issues and improvised dramas.

The theater department at Ahmadu Bello University in the northern Nigerian city of Zaria has been working directly with farmers who develop plays themselves. The final production is viewed as less important than the process of creation, in which the farmers find their own answers to problems.

Cops have trouble dealing with post-shooting trauma

MATTAPAN, Mass. (AP) — Jim Hawkins has nightmares. Nolan LaCroix switched to a desk job. Jim Mulhern feels weak and dreams he's being beaten up.

They are cops — cops who have killed.

None made the horrifying mistake of the California police officer who 12 days ago killed a 5-year-old boy clutching a toy gun.

Each killed a "bad guy." Each did the "right thing." Yet each still suffers, physically and psychologically.

"Everyone's a tough guy," Mulhern says — until he takes a life.

Cops killed 383 criminals in 1981, the FBI says. But it doesn't keep figures on how many additional killings happened by accident, in split seconds.

For each death, there is a police officer and his family trying to live with it. There may be headaches, chest pains and impotence. Flashbacks, paranoia and thoughts of suicide.

In this Boston suburb, these officers gather at a white frame house on the grounds of a hospital. Here, far from police headquarters, Edward C. Donovan runs the International Law Enforcement Stress Association, and the Boston Police Stress Program. Expenses are paid by the Boston police department.

Only about 80 police departments have stress programs and most are new. There is no program in Stanton, Calif., where Anthony Sperl, 24, was described as in shock after killing the 5-year-old. That incident is still being investigated.

"He better have some support," says Donovan. "Lord willing, that man don't eat his gun. It's not uncommon."

Since 1973, several hundred police officers, mostly from the Northeast, have warmed themselves at Donovan's fireplace and looked at a print on the wall, the Norman Rockwell classic that depicts a kindly cop and a little boy.

Donovan, 51, has helped the San Francisco police, the U.S. Secret Service and other agencies set up stress programs. The 26-year Boston police veteran, a recovered alcoholic, uses the peer counseling methods of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Post-shooting trauma is "the worst place you can be as a cop," Donovan says. "We help an officer learn to live with it. He'll never forget it, or get over it." About 80 percent quit their jobs within two years, he says.

Pulling the trigger may make an officer a hero, but many wish it hadn't happened. Marriages crumble, some officers begin drinking heavily and a few turn to crime.

They seem to want to be punished, Donovan says. "We're still raised in a society that says thou shalt not kill."

Nolan LaCroix, a 27-year-old officer in Somervile, Mass., killed a man who was holding a hostage at gunpoint. Although LaCroix was cleared, he still lies in bed many nights, concentrating on his victim's face and saying: "Why did you do this to me?"

Now, more than a year later, he says he's "not as much of a go-getter." At his request, LaCroix has received a desk assignment.

"It's not as easy as it is on TV," he says. "It stays with you for a long, longltime."

Jim Mulhern, 34, killed one of five men who jumped him after he caught them looting a van last year. The tall, soft-spoken father of two sought help from Donovan and a psychiatrist, but recently he's been feeling worse.

"I feel faggoty, very weak," he says. "I dream I'm getting beat up and whipped. Then I wake up at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, scared stiff."

Jim Hawkins, 27, and his veteran partner killed a man who had gone berserk and was shooting up a Boston area neighborhood. The victim was a Vietnam veteran, like Hawkins, with a family.

"A lot of police officers want to get into a shooting. I did. But I hope to God I never have to do it again. It's not a good part of the job," he says.

"I don't have nice dreams anymore."

Bob Devin, 45, an officer in suburban Boston, was shot by a robber and returned fire, killing the man. That was seven years ago.

"I thought the feelings I had were unique," Devin says. "My fellow officers all thought I was as tough as nails. It took a group of guys here to open my eyes."

With Donovan's help, Providence, R.I., launched a stress program in 1978, shortly after the police chief killed himself.

Some departments, including Atlanta and Des Moines, Iowa, refer officers under stress to the staff chaplain or private psychiatrists. Seattle and New York City are among those with in-house psychiatrists.

Like Boston, Tucson, Ariz., has post-shooting trauma teams made up of officers who have been through shooting situations. The Los Angeles Police Protective League trains officers to counsel each other.

Soviet envoy discusses deployment

MOSCOW (AP) — A top Soviet official said today that if the United States and its allies deployed medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe, Moscow would have to set up its own rockets "near American borders" to achieve equality.

It was believed to be the first time any Soviet official was that specific about how the Kremlin could react to NATO plans to begin deploying 572 new Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Europe by the end of the year.

Georgi Arbatov, director of the U.S.A. and Canada Institute at the Soviet Academy of Science, wrote in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda:

"As far as equality (of weaponry) is concerned, in that case for the sake of this equality we would have not only to add to our missiles in Europe, but also to deploy them near American borders."

The New York Times today quotdd the chief of the Soviet General Staff, Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, as saying in an interview that if U.S. missiles in Europe were used against the Soviet Union, Moscow would directly strike the United States.

Ogarkov was quoted as saying "it is not logical to believe we will retaliate only against targets in Europe. Let me tell you this, if some of your experts think this, they are foolish. ... The idea of a nuclear war has never been tested. But by logic, to keep such a war limited will not be possible."

In the propaganda battle that has accompanied Soviet-American talks in Geneva on reducing both long-range and medium-range missiles, the Soviets have said on at least two occasions that the American deployment would force Moscow to put Washington "in an analogous position."

Some Western analysts said that meant the Soviets would install nuclear-tipped rockets in Cuba, but the Soviets were never more specific until the Arbatov article today.

Arbatov, however, never mentioned where near American borders the Soviets would put missiles.

Arbatov also rejected as "a propaganda ploy" indications from Washington and other NATO capitals that the Reagan administration might be ready to seek an interim agreement on missiles deployed in Europe.

Reagan's current position calls for the Soviets to dismantle their more than 600 medium-range missiles aimed at Western Europe, in exchange for which Washington would scrap plans to deploy the new NATO nuclear force.

Reagan has come under pressure to modify his position and agree to a smaller Soviet reduction coupled with a limited American deployment.

But Arbatov claimed that any deployment of new U.S. missiles meant that "the American side would actually undermine the ground for talks on nuclear weapons."

"But if a change is really ripening in Washington, it will, of course, be noticed in Moscow in time," Arbatov added, saying that the Soviets would be "reliable partners in any fair talks and agreements."

Soviets threaten direct strike on U.S. if European missiles used

NEW YORK (AP) — A top Soviet official says that if American medium-range missiles planned for deployment in Europe are used against the Soviet Union, Moscow will directly strike the United States, The New York Times reported today.

Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, chief of the Soviet General Staff, told the Times in an interview, "If the U.S. would use these missiles in Europe against the Soviet Union it is not logical to believe we will retaliate only against targets in Europe.

"Let me tell you, if some of your experts think this, they are foolish," Ogarkov said.

He said that if there were a nuclear confrontation it is not likely it could be limited.

"The idea of nuclear war has never been tested. But by logic, to keep such a war limited will not be possible," Orgarkov said.

Accused spy leaves Moscow, embassy says

MOSCOW (AP) — American diplomat Richard W. Osborne, branded a spy by the KGB secret police last week, has left the Soviet Union, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said today.

It was believed Osborne left Wednesday night on a Lufthansa flight to Frankfurt, but that could not be confirmed.

The embassy provided no details and still has refused to comment on the substance of the KGB charges published last Thursday in the government newspaper Izvestia.

Izvestia said that the KGB detained Osborne "red-handed March 7 while (he was) working with espionage radio equipment."

The newspaper said that a "set of portable intelligence special-purpose apparatus for the transmission of espionage information via the U.S. Marisat communications satellite" was confiscated from Osborne.

Osborne was a first secretary in the U.S. Embassy's economic section.

The last known expulsion of a U.S. diplomat from Moscow came in January 1978 when Donald Kursch, a first secretary, was kicked out in retaliation for the expulsion of a Soviet trade mission official from Washington.

The last Soviet diplomat expelled from the United States was Maj. Gen. Vasili I. Chitov, who left the Soviet Embassy in Washington in February 1982 after reportedly being caught with sensitive U.S. military information.

WPA 'U.S., British tool,' Kremlin claims

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin said today the reason it quit the World Psychiatric Association was that the group had become a tool of U.S. and British interests who for "dishonest propaganda purposes" charged the Soviets used psychiatry to suppress dissidents.

The American and British psychiatric associations and "several others" in the WPA "invented the falsehood that in our country abuses are allegedly sanctioned inside psychiatric institutions and in medical practice with a view to suppressing dissenters," the newspaper Moscow News said.

Denouncing the "discriminatory and undemocratic system of voting" in the World Psychiatric Association, it charged that the United States and other nations "began to impose their decisions on its other members" with "unseemly political aims."

Marat Vartanyan, a member of the Soviet Academy of Medical Sciences, told Moscow News that the World Psychiatric Association had set up a committee to investigate "mythical abuses" of psychiatry in the Soviet Union.

"Why should we allow anyone to interfere in our affairs? It is only natural that we boycotted this illegitimate commmittee," Vartanyan was quoted as saying.

Vartanyan said the "discriminatory voting mechanism" was used at the last world congress of the World Psychiatric Association in Honolulu "where a resolution was rammed through denouncing Soviet psychiatrists for mythical abuses in medical practice."

He said the Soviet Union had done "everything to acquaint the WPA leadership and, through it, world opinion, with the actual state of affairs in Soviet psychiatric practice."

The "insinuations" continued even after Soviet psychiatrists gave the WPA "all the necessary materials and case histories" and invited their foreign colleagues to come to the Soviet Union, Vartanyan told the newspaper.

He said the WPA leadership "allowed itself to be drawn into political problems and has, in fact, been turned into an obedient instrument in the hands of the forces using psychiatry for dishonest propaganda purposes."

It was the first public commentary from Moscow explaining why the 30,000-member Soviet Society of Neuropathologists and Psychiatrists dropped out of the 70-nation body on Feb. 10.

Western observers have interpreted Moscow's withdrawal as a move to pre-empt efforts to suspend or expel the Soviet Union from the organization at a World Psychiatric Association congress this summer.

The withdrawal was announced by Moscow's Serbsky Institute, named by critics of the Soviet psychiatric system as the main clinic where political dissidents detained by the KGB secret police have been diagnosed as mentally ill.

Indiana city's residents recall 'children's crusade'

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — The water and debris are long gone, but the memories remain a year after rising rivers forced 10,000 people from their homes and sparked a "children's crusade" to keep a flood from destroying this northern Indiana city.

After a brutal winter and an early thaw in 1982, the city's three rivers began rising, and by the week of March 14, Main Street looked like a canal and rowboats were the surest means of transportation.

Mayor Winfield Moses Jr. ordered high schools closed so students could help municipal workers and volunteers.

"My gosh, out they marched and stayed not only during school hours but through the night and the next day and refused to leave in dangerous moments," Moses said. "They stacked one million sandbags in a one-week period — 365,000 in a 24-hour period — to replace the Pemberton dike. It was just phenomenal."

The mayor later called the battle to save the Pemberton (Drive) dike on the city's eastside "The Children's Crusade."

"On Wednesday night out on Pemberton dike, the Army Corps of Engineers said it was just not possible to save it. It was sinking. When you touched it, it was like a sponge," he said.

Officials decided to evacuate the sandbaggers and let the area flood rather than risk lives.

"As we talked it over with the kids out there, they just absolutely refused to leave. They said, 'Give us a chance. It's not coming through yet.' They then pumped up the production of sandbags to 30,000 an hour. That hour, that day was the outstanding moment," Moses said.

The mayor plans to mark the flood's anniversary by unveiling a life-sized sculpture this week honoring the city's high school students and other volunteers.

The city of 170,000 mustered thousands of volunteers who stacked sandbags along the soggy dikes. President Reagan and Gov. Robert D. Orr flew in to survey damage that officials later estimated at $51 million. Reagan even hefted a few sandbags himself.

The city has recovered and is focusing on plans for an $8 million convention center and downtown mall instead of keeping alive memories of the flood, Moses said. But for some, a sense of loss remains.

"I have a sense of loss because I had to leave my house, not knowing what I'd be coming back to," said Andrea Davies, a resident of an area called Nebraska, where the flooding was the worst. "It didn't hit me right away. I think I was kind of numb when we first had to leave our home. It wasn't until I could get back and see what all the water had done that it upset me."

Mrs. Davies, 32, whose husband Robert was unemployed at the time, said her house sustained $3,000 in damage.

There are jobs out there, but a move by some senators to block a jobs bill because of an attached amendment dealing with the newly created tax on interest and dividends could make them tougher to find.

Withholding tax still controversial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders are planning another try at rescuing a $5.1 billion jobs program from parliamentary paralysis, but face stiffening resistance from backers of an amendment to repeal the withholding tax on interest and dividends.

Sen. Bob Kasten, R-Wis., author of the controversial repeal amendment, vowed to fight on in his effort, even if it meant seeking other forums — including the possibility of trying to attach his amendment to the carefully crafted Social Security bail-out measure now before the Senate.

Kasten said he would decide later today whether to pursue such a course — a move that could snarl the Social Security legislation as it has the jobs bill.

"It's an idea; it's one of the options," Kasten said in an interview.

A divided Senate verdict on Kasten's measure on Wednesday prolonged the deadlock on the jobs bill at least until Friday, possibly longer.

The Senate rejected by 10 votes a leadership bid to block Kasten's effort. But, by a one-vote margin, the Senate also turned back Kasten's attempt to force a vote on it.

Both motions were procedural ones requiring 60 of the Senate's 100 members to prevail. The vote on the motion by Senate leaders was 50-48, while the tally on Kasten's effort came to 59-39.

Unable to proceed further on the bill, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., postponed action on the measure until Friday, and had the Senate take up the Social Security bill instead.

Community 'workfare' touted by administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's plan to put work back into welfare programs can restore taxpayer confidence in the social service system and recipients' confidence in themselves, administration officials say.

A mandatory "workfare" program would provide communities with millions of dollars worth of services and give thousands of welfare recipients the kind of exposure they need to move off the welfare rolls and into regular paying jobs, the officials said.

"We believe that the community work experience program addresses human needs as well as economic needs," Deputy Assistant Agriculture Secretary John Bode told the Senate Agriculture Committee on Wednesday in arguing the president's case for imposing workfare on able-bodied food stamp recipients.

The president has suggested workfare, tested in voluntary pilot projects recently, be made a requirement in other social programs.

Unemployment demonstrator 'all right' after burning self

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A 37-year-old man who set himself on fire in front of a television news crew says he is recovering "all right" but remains "a little sore."

Cecil Andrews said Wednesday he was "was confused a little bit" when he doused himself with lighter fluid and lit a match to his body on March 4 in order to protest unemployment. But he said he would have done it whether or not the camera crew was there.

The incident raised questions about whether the film crew should have intervened. Ron Simmons, chief photographer for WHMA-TV, said he didn't think Andrews was serious about setting himself on fire until it was too late.

Man admits killing mother

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Maris Karklins, a convicted killer of five who reportedly believed the spirit of Adolf Hitler was in him, has pleaded guilty to murdering his 64-year-old mother.

Kent County Circuit Judge Stuart Hoffius dismissed first-degree murder and felony firearms charges against Karklins in exchange for a guilty plea to second-degree murder in the shooting death of Milda Karlins last July.

Karklins, a 42-year-old former draftsman, entered the plea Wednesday against the advice of his attorney.

Karklins was convicted last month of first-degree murder and sentenced to five life prison terms for slaying a family of five.

Reagan rated negatively

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A California poll has found only 36 percent of those asked think President Reagan is doing a good or excellent job — down from 37 percent a year ago and 64 percent in April 1981.

"The president gets his most negative rating on his handling of unemployment," said pollster Mervin D. Field, who released his results Wednesday. "About two in three, 65 percent, think he is doing a poor job or very poor job, while just 14 percent rate him positively."

Reagan's best rating was on his handling of inflation, where 38 percent said he was doing a good job, but nearly half those polled felt they are worse off now than when he took office.

Engine failure unexplained

SEATTLE (AP) — Officials say they don't know why an engine on a Boeing 727 flown by United Airlines failed just before takeoff, spewing metal debris from a compressor assembly onto a runway.

The 141 people aboard the flight to San Francisco and San Diego on Wednesday were placed on other flights, said United spokesman Joe Hopkins.

It was the second time in a week that an engine has failed on a United plane. On Friday, a DC-8 from San Francisco landed safely in Reno, Nev., after an engine disintegrated over the Sierra Nevada Mountains at 36,000 feet and debris punctured a wing. None of the 185 people aboard was hurt.

O'Neill planning China visit

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., says he will lead a delegation of senior members of Congress to the People's Republican of China later this month.

Adelman reportedly expects failure

BOSTON (AP) — A draft Senate report says that Kenneth Adelman, President Reagan's choice to head the Arms Control and Disarmanent Agency, may try to undercut arms control talks with the Soviet Union, The Boston Globe reported today.

The draft report says Adelman may "ally himself with those in the administration who would establish impossible standards in negotiations with the anticipation of failure," the newspaper said, quoting Senate sources.

The report was produced by the majority on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which by a 9-8 vote advised the Senate to reject the nomination, the newspaper said.

President Reagan has said that he will seek Adelman's confirmation by the full Senate.

The report also says Adelman, 34, lacks the "stature, experience, knowledge and commitment" for the job, according to The Globe.

The report is being circulated among committee Democrats for comment before it is presented to all senators, the newspaper reported.

Oriental rugs and carpets have been produced for centuries and the rugs and carpets produced today are the same in almost every respect as those produced 500 years ago. The best known and most beautiful rugs come from Persia but there are also excellent pieces that come from China, Afghanistan, Turkey, Pakistan, India and Romania. There are other countries in Asia and Aftica who produce hand made rugs, but we do not have enough space here to enumerate all of them. All these rugs are made of wool. There are exceptions such as some of the Persian Qum that are made of pure pure silk.

One may ask why is a hand made oriental rug carpet the most prized and sought after of all floor coverings? The main reasons are:

1). An oriental rug, being entirely hand made, has a guaranteed durability. Even accidental damage can be repaired without decreasing the rug's value. This cannot be said of a machine made rug which, once damaged, loses it's value.

2). The decorative value of an oriental rug in undeniable. It greatly enhances a room and creates an immediate impression of friendly warmth on entering it.

3). Provided it is used with care, the value of an oriental rug increases year by year. It is a safe investment and can be turned into ready cash at any time.

It is sometimes believed that oriental rugs and carpets are very expensive items. This is not so. We have many fine pieces that sell at under $500.00

A Brief summary of our rugs and carpets, and their characteristics is as follows:

Persian: The finest pieces come from the towns such as Isfahan, Qum, Kashan, Tabriz and Kerman. In addition there are the nomadic rugs of coarser weave such as Humadan, Shiraz, Abadeh, Afshan and Belouch. We aslo have Kalims which have no pile, which come in colorful, geometric designs.

Chinese: The thickest pile of all carpets and rugs. They are very luxurious and come in embossed Aubusson, Floral and Peking designs.

Pakistan: Specialises in Bokhara and Afghan designs and in excellent copies of Persian design considerably less expensive than Persian rugs.

Afghan: In well known elephant foot designs in red and gold. Useful for offices and hallway. Other designs are also produced.

India: Mainly heavy pile produced with beautiful pastel on paste backgrounds in Floral, Aubusson or Chinese Peking designs.

Turkish: Made of wool, silk and artificial silk. Some rugs rival those of Persia in quality and design. Reasonably priced.

Romanian: Mainly copies of Persian designs, but we also have large carpets with the Aubusson design made in wool supplied from England. Extremely good value & very low prices.

Fans mourn Godfrey's death of pneumonia, emphysema

NEW YORK (AP) — Fans mourned Arthur Godfrey, the ukelele strummer whose gift of gab made him a radio and television favorite for five decades, and even the singer he once fired on live TV recalled Godfrey as "the greatest salesman in the world."

Godfrey, who liked to call himself the Old Redhead and who was once dubbed "the Huck Finn of radio" for his folksy wit, died Wednesday at age 79 after being hospitalized 13 days for emphysema and pneumonia at Mount Sinai Hospital.

The entertainer will be cremated without any public service, said a spokesman for the William Morris agency, which represented Godfrey.

"I hope — indeed I shall pray — that he will rest in peace," said Julius LaRosa, the singer "discovered" by Godfrey and then fired by him on the air in 1953, shocking the nation.

LaRosa had just finished singing "Manhattan" on the TV show "Arthur Godfrey and Friends," when Godfrey turned to the audience and announced, "This is Julie's swan song." He accused LaRosa of a "lack of humility."

The singer told reporters Wednesday night that he and Godfrey never reconciled, but he credited Godfrey for giving his career a boost and recalled Godfrey as "the greatest salesman in world."

From his signature greeting of "Howa'ya, Howa'ya," to his public battle against lung cancer, Godfrey did everything with his own brash style. He liked to say that you "get as much out of life as you put into it."

"You had nothing to do with your birth, and you can't control the circumstances of your death. But you can do something about living," he told one interviewer.

"He made the personality more important than the talent," recalled another easygoing TV celebrity, Art Linkletter.

At his peak in the 1950s, Godfrey had a Monday-through-Friday daytime show, "Talent Scouts" on Monday night and an hour of "Godfrey and His Friends" on Wednesday nights. His weekly prime-time audience measured 82 million viewers.

In 1959, it was reported that Godfrey's shows brought in $159 million in advertising for CBS.

His "Talent Scouts," with an applause meter that measured audience response to unknown performers, is credited with giving newcomers Pat Boone, Barbara McNair, Vic Damone, Johnny Nash, the McGuire Sisters and Shari Lewis their start.

Godfrey never claimed to be much of a singer himself, but he loved to perform.

He threw himself into his work and into other pursuits as well. He flew his planes around the world, and twice got into trouble for buzzing an airport.

Entertainer Arthur Godfrey rides a tractor on his farm near Leesburg, Va.

Godfrey's career got its start about the time the stock market was plunging the nation into depression in 1929.

Then a Coast Guardsman, Godfrey and some friends were in a Baltimore pub listening to amateurs perform on a local radio station. His friends, who had heard Godfrey's banjo plucking, urged him to audition.

He got a 15-minute spot on the station and was billed as "Red Godfrey, the Warbling Banjoist." The spot was sponsored by a pet shop that sold bird seed. It paid $5.

From there he went to Washington with NBC and then to CBS in 1945, where he became one of the network's biggest assets.

Some sponsors complained about his ad-libs, especially when Godfrey would tear up their scripts and tell the audience "Nuts to that!"

A typical Godfrey aside came one day when he was touting a shampoo supposed to contain milk and eggs. "If your hair is clean you can always use the stuff to make an omelet," he cracked.

His successful lung cancer surgery in 1959 made front-page headlines and his pluckiness during his recovery brought him an outpouring of public affection. He later campaigned to increase public awareness of the disease.

Godfrey retired from regular radio broadcasts in 1972. The secret to his longevity as an entertainer, he said, was in his willingness to meet new challenges.

"If you want to last, you have to grow," he said. "That little screen is merciless and if you aren't constantly more interesting and intriguing, they — the public — will drop you, ruthlessly."

Godfrey was born Aug. 31, 1903, in New York City but was raised across the Hudson River in Hasbrouck Heights, N.J. He was married in 1938 to Mary Bourke, and they had a daughter and two sons.

Reagans attend country gala

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tapping his fingers to Sen. Robert C. Byrd's bluegrass fiddling and laughing at Minnie Pearl's cornball humor, President Reagan sat back and enjoyed country music at its best.

After a 2½-hour, black-tie gala marking the 25th anniversary of the Country Music Association Wednesday night, Reagan mounted the stage of Constitution Hall and thanked the evening's three dozen performers who "serve to remind us that we are never far from our foot-stomping roots."

Reagan drew laughs from the sellout audience when he added, "There was just one thing that was unsettling tonight. Every time they talked about fiddling, I was afraid some congressional committee was going to start messing around with my defense budget."

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, sat across the vast hall from Vice President and Mrs. George Bush in boxes overlooking the show, which was taped by CBS for broadcast as a TV special April 13.

"This is the music of the people, and it's my kind of music today," Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. said from the stage, as he reminisced about the music of his native Tennessee. Reagan obviously agreed.

The president joined the audience in a standing ovation for blind singers Ronnie Milsap and Ray Charles, who performed back-to-back at grand pianos and hugged each other afterward. And he drummed his fingers in time to the "mountain fiddler," as Byrd calls himself.

69 Business Property, Office Warehouse Space for Rent

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

* You mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
* You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
* You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
* You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
* You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
* All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
* Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas; North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of ClayDesta Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.
